Sam Y. Edwards, who presided at the managerial desk of the Associated First National Pictures of Northern California, Inc., since the organization of that corporation, is in New York completing negotiations for a series of box office attractions which he will release in San Francisco territory from his new exchange, to be known as the X. L. Pictures Exchange.

Sam's many friends will wish him well. He will be ready to take care of the exhibitors about July 1. He has fourteen specials with which to start the ball rolling.

Princess Mary Pictures Arrive

Export & Import Film Company has received a print of the motion pictures of the presentation of gifts to Princess Mary prior to the recent wedding ceremony in London. The film is in one reel and shows many of the world's leading figures and their gifts. It is expected it will be of appeal to women everywhere.

Warners to Issue Wild Animal Feature

"A Dangerous Adventure" Will Star Grace Darmond and Carry the Atmosphere of the African Jungles

What is declared to be a novelty sensation in wild animal feature productions, A Dangerous Adventure, featuring Grace Darmond, is announced as the first of seven fall releases by the Warner Brothers. According to Harry M. Warner, the subject is a thriller in the true sense of the word.

"I have never been so enthusiastic about a feature production as I am about A Dangerous Adventure," said Mr. Warner. "In the first place, it contains every known species of wild animal; and thousands of Africans were used in the production. The spectacular scenes in the feature are in my estimation the greatest that have been filmed.

"The biggest theatres throughout the country will find this feature a most unusual offering. It is the kind of attraction that is different in story and presentation, and in this respect it is what motion picture patrons most desire—the kind that will give them a fresh and interesting viewpoint on feature plays.

"One thing the exhibitor playing this feature can depend on—it has been produced in a big way and there is a wonderful element of sensation in the entire feature. It's a big box-office bet."

The feature is declared to reveal thousands of natives and wild beasts. In order to inject a requisite amount of romance, pathos and realism, S. L. Warner, director of the production, virtually converted the entire Warner West Coast studios into an African forest and secured over 1500 wild animals to furnish the action.

Members of the supporting cast include Philo McCullough, Jack Richardson, Robert Agnew and Derelys Purdue. The story and continuity were written by Frances Guihan.

The six other features to be released by the Warner Brothers in the fall include three Harry Rapf productions and three Warner features. The Rapf productions are Rags to Riches, featuring Wesley Barry; Little Heroes of the Street, also featuring Barry, and Brass, Charles G. Norris' novel of marriage and divorce.

The Warner productions being made by S. L. Warner and Jack Warner include The Beautiful and Damned, the novel by F. Scott Fitzgerald dealing with the modern flapper; Little Church Around the Corner, an adaptation of the stage play of the same name, and Main Street, Sinclair Lewis' novel of small town folks.

New Arrow-Wilson Stewart-Kirkham Picture Is Finished

Before Ben Wilson left the Coast to attend the premier presentation of The Innocent Cheat at the Broadway Theatre, he shipped One-Eighth Apache, and it arrived in time to be screened before Mr. Wilson returned to the Coast Thursday.

One-Eighth Apache is from the pen of Peter B. Kyne, and appeared in a magazine prior to being transferred to the screen by Mr. Wilson. It co-stars Roy Stewart and Kathleen Kirkham.

This is the third of the Peter B. Kyne productions to be produced by Mr. Wilson, the others being A Motion to Adjourn and Back to Yellow Jacket. In all three of the productions Mr. Wilson has given the two players excellent supporting casts. The new picture is a big story with strong human interest, in which the author and the director have played strongly upon the human emotions, with the result that they have produced a picture which holds the spectator intensely interested to the last foot of film.

Franklyn E. Backer Sells His New Series to Max Glucksman

Franklyn E. Backer of East Coast Productions has closed with Max Glucksman for handling the rights of the new Backer series, starring J. B. Warner, in the Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay.

Mr. Backer is confident of great results this fall for the remainder of his series of six Westerns and for any other high-class state rights pictures, as Big Stakes, the first of his series, has exceeded his expectations. This picture was sold for the New York territory—a difficult territory for selling Westerns—immediately after the first screening.

The second picture of the Backer series, Crimson Gold, has already been received in New York, and will soon be screened for the trade. Edythe Sterling is Mr. Warner's leading woman in this picture, which is a five-reel Western of a novel type. Other members of the cast are George Burrell, Albert McQuarrie, Jay Morley and George Stanley.

Virginia Pearson Wins and Returns Perfect Back Prize

The unusual distinction of possessing the most perfect backbone in America and to all intents and purposes one of the most beautifully formed backs in the world has been granted to Virginia Pearson, star of Ivan Abramson's Wild Youth, now in course of production. In addition the winning of a thousand-dollar prize came in the form of a surprise to the film actress.

Virginia Pearson, playing in Graphic's "Wild Youth"

The award is made by the National League for the Prevention of Spinal Curvature, with headquarters at Toronto. Coincident with the foregoing is the fact that Miss Pearson has returned the sum of money won, in the name of the motion picture industry, for further aid in the work of the organization which made the award.

"If the return of the money and any ensuing publicity will aid in the smallest way to convince some people that we of the industry have intentions and morals as straight as our backs I will feel satisfied," remarked Miss Pearson in discussing the award made her.

Hold Back C. B. C. Feature Until It Is Formally Approved

Work on the final re-editing and titling of More to Be Pitied Than Scorned, the first of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's series of big feature offerings, is going forward rapidly at the company's New York offices.

The picture was completely finished before being brought East, but under the system of "double editing" which C. B. C. is employing on this feature, the picture must be screened and approved by another editing committee here.

C. B. C. announces there will be no screenings for anyone until the picture is absolutely complete in every detail. "It is a great mistake, and one that many producers make, to screen a picture for anyone before it has been pronounced ready in every detail," said Jack Cohn of C. B. C. in discussing the company's policy. "I don't care how good a picture is, or how slight the changes that are to be made, someone is sure to criticise adversely a picture unless it is pre-viewed in the same manner the public will see it."

Federated to Distribute 24 Ben Wilson Comedies

Ben Wilson has contracted with the Federated Film Exchange of America to produce two series of twelve two-reel comedies. One of these will be known as the "Federated Comedies," and the other brand name has not as yet been decided. Neither Federated nor Mr. Wilson desires at this time to announce the stars who will appear in either series, as Mr. Wilson at the present time is negotiating with several prominent comedians.

These comedies will be released by Federated about Sept. 1.

Together with the Joe Rock two-reel comedies previously announced, this makes three sets of comedies which Federated has now contracted for and it is at present negotiating for another series.

Federated is also perfecting plans to arrange with one or two producers to make a series of features for the fall.

"Torchy's Feud" Completed

Torchy's Feud, the latest in the Torchy series in two reels, has been completed by Johnny Hines at Burr's Glendale studio. With its action and plot centered about a Kentucky mountain feud enhanced by the further complications of a government raid on the moonshine still contested for between the two rival Kentucky clans, Torchy's Feud is reported at the Mastodon offices to be the best two reeler Hines has made in his popular interpretations of the Sewell Ford stories.

No expense has been spared in the construction of every possible effect that would transpose the typical Kentucky mountain locale into the story.

Extend "After Six Days" Engagement

Following the success of After Six Days at Wood's Theatre, Atlantic City, where it opened an engagement on June 17, arrangements have been made for the holding over of this attraction at the big Boardwalk house for an indefinite period. The version of the Old Testament, sponsored by Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, was originally booked for its premiere world showing at Wood's Theatre for a period of two wooks. Due to interest displayed on the part of Atlantic City theatregoers, both residential and hotel patrons, in the picturization of the Bible from Adam and Eve to the Songs of Solomon, it has been found necessary to extend the length of the engagement.

David Starkman, lessee of Wood's Theatre, announced, following the first two days of the run, that the production had smashed all existing records for film attractions in the seaside resort. The picture opened to more than $1,800, followed by gross receipts of a rainy Sunday of $1,400. These figures exceed the gross done for two days by practically every legitimate attraction which has played in Atlantic City this year, with the exception of "Ziegfeld Follies."

It would seem that the picture is in for an extended run. A concentrated publicity and advertising campaign was accorded the premiere showing under the direction of Bert Ennis, director of exploitation for Artclass Pictures Corporation. Large newspaper space was used and particular attention was devoted to interesting the natives of Atlantic City. It is the intention of Weiss Bros., sponsors for the production, to bring After Six Days into New York for a metropolitan opening following its present engagement. The picture will be offered to the biggest state rights exchanges in the country as a showman's proposition. In each key city a presentation, together with a big exploitation campaign, will be accorded the film, after which it will be available to the independent exchangemen as a road show offering. Special stress is laid on the fact that the subject dealt with has been treated in a non-sectarian manner.

Clark-Cornelius to Add Three Features to Production List

Three new productions have been added to the Clark-Cornelius list of releases. These features will be put out on the state rights market on the franchise plan inaugurated by General Manager S. J. Rollo.

The first production of the three is The Snitching Hour, starring Arthur Housman and is a comedy-drama in five reels. This picture is the first of a series with this star.

The two other pictures are of the western type and bear the titles of The Thoroughbred and The Crimson Clue. In both of these productions there are prominent players including Miss Sedgwick and Jack Richardson.

In addition to these the series of The Tales of the Tenements, two reel detective stories written by Ross D. Whytock, is being released. The series will consist of twenty-six and one will be released every two weeks.

Arrangements are now being made for the 1922-23 series of productions for release on the state rights market and will include features and two series with well known players.

The franchise plan originated by Mr. Rollo has met with favor among state right exchanges, according to that official. "We have met the exchangeman half way," said Mr. Rollo, "and have worked out a plan that permits him to have a steady line of pictures on a basis that lets him operate along economical lines."

Harry Rapf left last week for the Warner Brothers west coast studios to begin production of the second Wesley Barry feature, Little Heroes of the Street, which will be directed by William Beaudine. Jack and Sam Warner also left for the coast.

The finished print of the first Barry picture, Rags to Riches, was brought East by Mr. Rapf, and it is reported will be the first of seven productions to be distributed by the Warner Brothers this coming season.

Following the completion of the second Barry attraction Mr. Rapf will film Brass, Charles G. Norris' novel of marriage and divorce. Wallace Worsley has been engaged to direct the feature. Mr. Worsley visited the home of Mr. Norris at Saratoga, Cal., to discuss the salient features of the book. Both productions are expected to be completed for fall release.

Review Board Passes Polo Serial Without Changes

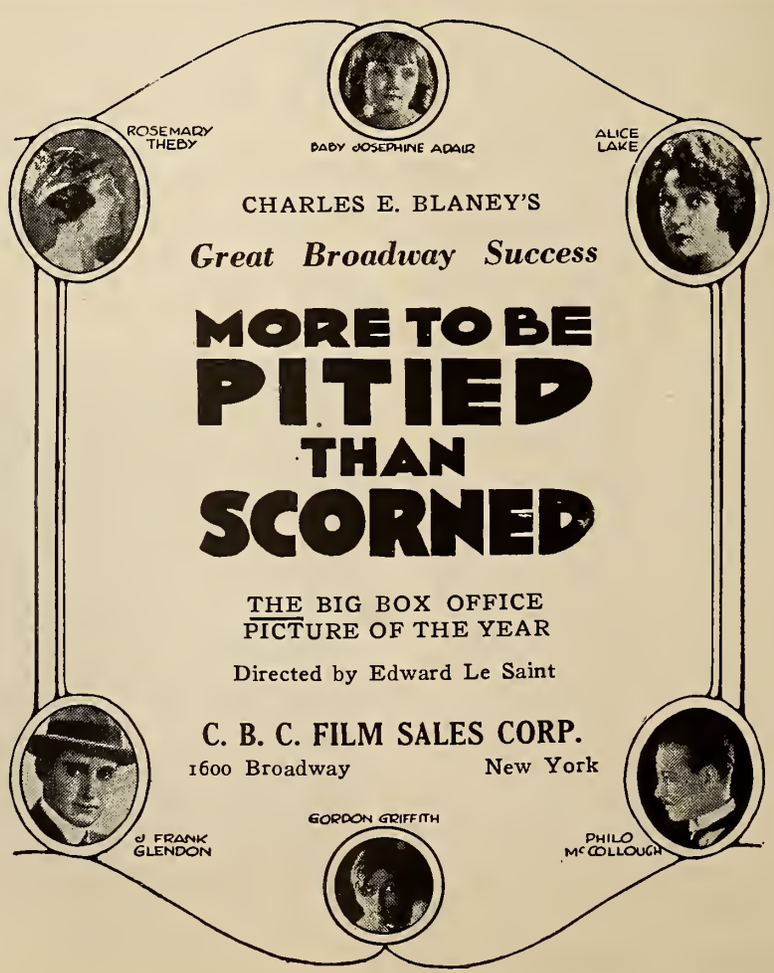
An unusual record is being made in the matter of censoring Cap'n Kidd, Eddie Polo's first independent serial in that, with twelve chapters viewed by the National Board of Review, not a single cut in any episode has been ordered by the committee.

This is especially unusual in view of the type production Cap'n Kidd is, every chapter being full of hard fights, and the National Board being especially strict in its rulings on such incidents in films.

Eddie Polo is known as one of the best "thrill" serial stars on the screen to-day, and one of the most difficult things he and Burton King, the director, achieved in the making of the serial was the handling of the fight scenes in such a manner that there be nothing in them objectionable to the public and still have them thrilling and realistic in every way.

Forms Finance Company

With A. Guy Frumm and C. A. Boyd, treasurer and auditor respectively of the Pacific Film Co., Inc., at its helm, a motion picture finance corporation has been formed at Culver City, Cal. According to the rules and bylaws of the new concern, production of features and comedies will be financed and exploited. The new firm will be known as the Commercial Company and will be operated under a California charter.



Equity Will Get Behind Goodman Film

For Its Fall Release, "What's Wrong with the Women," It Plans Extensive Publicity and Advertising Campaign

Plans are already under way for a publicity and advertising campaign on Equity's big fall release, What's Wrong with the Women, Daniel Carson Goodman's production, which was recently completed at the Biograph studios in New York. Under its present plans Equity Pictures will launch this production on the independent market with one of the biggest campaigns in its industry.

The production is announced as a big special production built upon a theme of large drawing power, and produced on a lavish scale. Mr. Goodman, who is the author as well as the producer of this picture, is noted as a writer of broad human stories, all with a wealth of drama and power. In this production he has taken one of the perplexing problems of society and interpreted it in a gripping and tense fashion.

The cast is most capable and composed of popular players. It includes Wilton Lackaye, Montagu Love, Barbara Castleton, Rod La Rocque, Hedda Hopper, Constance Bennett, Paul McAllister, Huntley Gordon and Julia Swayne Gordon.

Dr. Goodman is one of the youngest and most successful independent producers. After graduating from Washington University and the University of Vienna, Mr. Goodman devoted himself to writing, and among his best known novels are "Hagar Revelly," "Unclothed," "The Taker," and "Travail." A three act drama from his pen, entitled "A Man Among Women," will be produced on Broadway this fall, at the same time when Equity will issue What's Wrong with the Women. He is also the author of many motion pictures.

Fully appreciative of the exploitation possibilities of this picture, Equity will have a complete and wide assortment of material available with its release. The catchy title will be used to every advantage. Another advantage lies in the fact that the title fits the story perfectly.

Equity expects to be able to announce its other releases in a short time and in the meantime will concentrate on the preparation of the exploitation of What's Wrong with the Women, which it confidently expects to be the biggest attraction on the independent market this fall.

Davidson-Kranz, Inc. Opens Distributing Offices in New York

George M. Davidson and Charles Kranz have organized Davidson-Kranz, Inc., with offices in the Loew Building, New York.

Mr. Davidson, who has held responsible executive positions with leading distributing organizations, is particularly adapted to fill the post of works manager, where the primary requisite is the initial cost of a production in comparison with its booking valuation.

Mr. Kranz has acted as city salesman, road salesman, district manager, exchange supervisor, etc., for the General, Mutual, Goldwyn and other film companies, and needs no introduction to the owners of independent exchanges in this country. Also he is known among the heads of theatre chains.

Associated with Mr. Davidson and Mr. Kranz is Bennett J. Brandon, formerly manager of the foreign sales departments of Mutual, and for the past year an independent broker in the foreign rights field. Mr. Brandon will have charge of the foreign sales, and due to his extensive knowledge of foreign matters, plus his experience in domestic sales, will pick such foreign subjects as from time to time the organization will exploit in this market.

Among the subjects which Davidson-Kranz has ready for the market are The Northwood's Vengeance, an Iroquois production, written and directed by Caryl S. Fleming; Two-and-a-Half Musketeers, a burlesque on Dumas' story; No Parents to Guide 'Em, from Brenda's novel, and Love or Money, a love story.

The company states it has made arrangements with producing units that will guarantee a steady supply of material.

THE BLACKBURN PHOTOPLAY CORPORATION

is an organization composed of a body of men who appreciate the standards and ideals of former Postmaster General Will H. Hays for better and more substantial Motion Pictures, and which led to his appointment as Director General of the Motion Picture Industry. Consistent with Mr. Hays' platform the aim of the Blackburn Photoplay Corporation is to produce material for the silver screen (which is now the greatest medium of expression so far as the theatre going public is concerned) which will lend an intellectual stimulus to all who see it as it is picturized. High in quality, beautiful in presentation, rich in romance and adventure of the inspiring and illuminating sort. (Such is the Blackburn Program.)

The Blackburn Photoplay Corporation has started a nation wide campaign for better and cleaner Motion Pictures, they contemplate producing screen material in the form of stories and classics having the touch of the Masters of Literature, free from suggestiveness and the invariable sex-appeal, which the individuals having the moral welfare of the country at heart so vigorously oppose. The pictures produced by Blackburn will be shown in all first class theatres throughout the land.

RETRIBUTION

THE STORY OF LUCRETIA BORGIA

Six Reels of the Most Magnificent Photoplay Ever Produced

(NOW PLAYING THIRD WEEK, PARK THEATRE, N. Y.)

NEWSPAPER and TRADE REVIEWS

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW—
"Retribution" is a stately tale of the Borgias. It is dramatic in the extreme and spectacular as well. It is a stately tragedy; it is dignified, impressive.—G. B.

Grena Bennett—NEW YORK AMERICAN—
"Retribution" is a play of remarkable appeal from both a pictorial and dramatic standpoint.

NEW YORK TIMES—
"Retribution" is an unusually interesting picture. In the gorgeous settings, properties, costumes, manners and customs it shows, it seems to bring the flavor of the Rome of the celebrated Borgias to the screen.

NEW YORK HERALD—
"Retribution" contains some grand acting and scenery. Gorgeous and almost overpowering sets of the Borgias keep the spectators intensely interested.

FILM DAILY—
The production is different from the usual run of pictures and will be welcomed by those interested in historic drama. "Retribution" has a very able cast of actors. The sets are splendid and a world of detail helps build up a Florentine atmosphere.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD—
Exterior shots of "Retribution" embrace photography of astoundingly beautiful scenery. Incidents in which Signor Papa, as the jester, appears hold the attention because of the most excellent performance contributed by that actor.

EVENING JOURNAL—
"Retribution" tells story of Borgias. Magnificent scenes in absorbing drama of their villainies.

EVENING TELEGRAM—
"Retribution" is a real thriller. The cast includes more than 10,000 persons and is highly pleasing as a melodrama.

CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER—
"Retribution" is one of the greatest film achievements. This photoplay dealing with Lucretia Borgia is far away the best. This new picture is one of the most artistic photoplays ever presented in New York. No photoplay that Broadway has seen in years has been better acted. New York has had quite a number of this style of pictures but they are all distinctly inferior to "Retribution."

Karl K. Kitchen, Sunday Edition —NEW YORK WORLD—
"Retribution" is the finest and most artistic photoplay I have seen in years.

Gertrude Chase—MORNING TELEGRAPH—
Spirit of times well depicted in film filled with splendor of renaissance settings.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS—
Remarkable photography. Some of the shots are as nearly perfect as ever screened. As a production it is stupendous.

Seasonable Stunts

Playing Up to the Carnival Influence

In summertime the public thinks of amusement in terms of the outdoor show. How theatre men take advantage of this mental attitude is shown in the stunts on this page. Above is the circus type of ballyhoo, a Far East parade, staged by the Rialto, Jamaica, N. Y., for Vitagraph's "The Sheik's Wife." Below, the outdoor show influence adapted to theatre fronts for the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., right; and on the left the Lyric, Jackson, Tenn., both adapted to "Beyond the Rocks," the Paramount production.

Mailing Lists—How to Use Them

As a First Aid to Bigger Patronage It Is Coming Into Wider Use

I.—What Is a Mailing List?

IN recent years mailing lists have come into the widest use in all kinds of merchandising. They are used to sell anything, from a knocked down dwelling house to a package of toothpicks.

No reason exists why they cannot be put to advantageous use in the motion picture theatre. The theatre is selling amusement—a commodity, a necessity of life, more a necessity now, than ever, and so recognized. The motion picture theatre has become a family proposition, like the washing machine, the player piano and the Tin Lizzie and as those useful articles are sold every day by direct mail most certainly motion pictures can be sold to the public—the grownups and the children.

We say "can be sold"—we mean they are sold by direct mail. Many successful theatres use the mailing system as a part of their general advertising, or exclusively. More and more the theatre man is getting closer to his patrons. His direct contact with the residents of his territory is a vital factor in his success. But he cannot shake hands with each one personally, every time he puts on a new show or every time they come into his theatre.

But through Uncle Sam's now efficient post office he can come into direct contact with his patrons, and with those not yet converted into patrons. He can shake hands with them through the medium of a post card or a letter, or a broadside, herald or circular. He can invite them to come and see his show—personally invite them, if you please. He can send them greetings bearing the real signature of the great stars. He can talk personally about the new improved seats he has installed, his wonderful projection, his ushers and their courtesy, his special features, his music, in fact anything and everything, even his own personality, that will prove of interest to the public.

Direct by mail advertising, or promotion, consists of the use of the mailing system. Anyone with an ounce of intelligence can make up a mailing system and keep it working. It derives its name from the fact that the exhibitor sends his message direct to the consumer of amusement—the theatregoer. Newspaper advertising is indirect and so named because there is no guarantee with newspaper advertising that the advertisement will reach any one, or any set, of persons.

The message used in direct by mail advertising is addressed to a certain person and it is presumed (and experience upholds the presumption) that the person so addressed will receive the message. The average American is glad to receive a letter—even though it be a circular, when properly addressed to him. Uncle Sam guarantees to deliver it to the home or business place of the addressee and nine cases out of ten it does get to the person addressed.

The first requisite to a direct by mail campaign is a mailing list. In later articles we will explain how these lists are made up and how they are kept up to the minute. They should form an important part of every theatre's promotion department. They consist of names and addresses, usually card indexed, so as to be accessible, with telephone numbers and a list of the members of the family.

You will find, upon investigation, that nearly all of your local merchants have mailing lists; that your churches and colleges have them and that all big corporations use them extensively. They are not used indiscriminately, at any old time, but usually in conjunction with some special effort, such as a big newspaper advertising campaign, special weeks and exceptional bargain days.

In recent years in following through big merchandising campaigns extensive users of the mailing system depend upon their newspaper advertising to establish the reputation of their product and use the direct by mail effort to actually consummate sales. The theatre can do this to great advantage.

No doubt your local merchant, who has already made your acquaintance through some exploitation

Exploiting Showmen Here's a Cracker Jack Calendar to File Away

This calendar was gotten up to promote business by mail. It divides human activities into the seasons of the year and it is just the thing to use for mailing systems and newspaper advertising.

JANUARY—Snow, firing up furnace, skating, heavy clothing, clearance sales, starting Christmas savings clubs, dances, fireside parties, falls on the ice.

MARCH—House cleaning, spring clothes, wild winds, new automobiles, baseball training in the south, children playing marbles, rains, bad weather.

APRIL—Spring gardens, house painting, house renovating, lawn mowers, April weather, spring floods, revival of outdoor life, spring building, baseball.

MAY—Annual spring moving, queen of the May, Memorial Day, getting ice for refrigerator, record of furnace for the winter, birds come, insects buzz, new screens for the home, spring flowers, spring fever.

JUNE—Cutting the grass, sprinkling the lawn, early vacations, picnics, outdoor dances, opening up of lake resorts, fishing, aviation, automobiling, motorcycling, boating, swimming, making love and getting married, taking camera pictures, opening up of new real estate additions, band concerts in the parks.

JULY—Independence Day, hot weather, mosquitoes, hammocks, ice cream, vacations, dusty roads, "ice cream clothes," summer time literature, the silly season, Chautauquas.

AUGUST—Annual fruit canning season, final vacations, tennis, golf, motor boats, dog days, sweet corn, cool nights.

SEPTEMBER—Labor Day, football, windup of baseball, winter theatrical season starts, fall marriages as results of summer courtships, fall and winter clothing, roller skating, new house furnishings, new records for player pianos and phonographs.

tie-up, will be glad to show you his direct by mail system and explain its workings. Better yet, go to your telephone company, gas service or bank and ask them to show you how intensively they use direct by mail campaigns.

If the information you get at those sources interests you and you want further light, get in touch with your local stationer and ask him to show you a catalogue of mailing system cards and cases and other paraphernalia, including addressing machines—the latter if you want to go to the direct by mail system in a big way.

A "Keep Posted" List Stunt

If you are looking for help in any one of three ways—to keep crowds moving, to get up a mailing list or put over a show with school children—look over the trio of devices shown here.

The first one, with the time clock stamp on it, was employed by George Schade when he ran Buster Keaton's "The Boat" at the Schade in Sandusky. It is an adaptation of the old trolley transfer. Each person entering the theatre was handed one of these slips with the time stamped on it, then, if the crowds didn't seem inclined to get out and give others a chance, ushers went around with flashlights, inspected the slips and requested the holders who had been in the house two hours to vacate.

The "Penrod" Merit Certificate was born in the fertile brain of Joe Price, manager of the Allen Palace, in Calgary, Alberta, and was productive of one of the best weeks he has had in months. By obtaining the co-operation of the Calgary School Board (first time on record) he got an official tie-up with the entire school system of his city. Official instructions were sent to all teachers to assist Joe in a little enterprise designed to make the children 'tend to their knitting and, incidentally realize "Penrod" was coming to the Palace. He gave a free pass and a Certificate of Merit for one child in each school room who should be adjudged the prize pupil of the week by the teacher. In this way he had more than 10,000 school children talking about the picture a week in advance. Not only did the scheme succeed, but Joe had the school teachers calling him up and thanking him for instituting this stunt because of the stimulating effect it had on the pupils.

Try it out some time.

"Keep Posted" is the lure that Al Gottesman, of the Strand, Shenandoah, Pa., used on the coupon that he started to use last January as a means of getting his people to register with him for advance news on attractions, and at the end of about sixty days he had had 725 returned filled in. When they take the trouble to fill out a blank with name, address and phone number on it, they must want to know about your program.

Three bundles of lath, two three-sheets, a half-dozen one-sheets and some stills were all the materials requisite for this lobby for First National's "Penrod" when it played the Criterion Theatre, Oxford, Ohio. Manager Ed Keene designed and executed the display.

The attractive and effective stand built by Manager Charles E. Sasseen for the Queen Theatre, Galveston, Tex., which has a rather shallow lobby. It is bounded on all sides by display frames suitable for one-sheets. On the right the display for the Paramount offering, "Beyond the Rocks." On the left is shown the way he used the stand to bill Goldwyn's "The Wallflower."

For his display in this florist shop window, Manager M. B. Hustler, T. and D. Theatre, Sacramento, Cal., used only a cut of Norma Talmadge in wedding trousseau and a sign card only six inches deep. The material was enttirely sufficient and produced a striking effect.

Suggests Stunts

Harold F. Wendt, whose continuous and varied exploitation work keeps the Rivoli Theatre well in the limelight of public attention at Defiance, O., offers a suggestion which he found effective recently at a showing of the Quo Vadis production. He wrote letters to all teachers in the city, informing them of the event and enclosed a couple of passes, a stunt which he reports got him big money.

Mr. Wendt also outlines a stock stunt which he states never fails to get him preferred window space. "When no special stunts are arranged," says Mr. Wendt, "put in a big display of autographed photographs of stars. Cover the name but allow the "Sincerely," or whatever inscription precedes the name to show, and offer prizes in passes to those who can name the stars from their photographs or handwriting. The merchant can mix goods with the photos and he will tell you the display is the best attractor he has ever had. A card might state that the photographs were sent to the manager of the theatre. This last bit of hokum helps the house even more and for me won the approval of the fans."

Souvenir Nights

Silver-plated souvenir spoons of the different states are being distributed by Ascher Brothers of Chicago to their feminine patrons at their seventeen Chicago theatres.

The preliminary advertising was done by means of lobby cards, screen trailers and announcements in the various house programs. The plan was started on Decoration Day, May 30. Two admissions are required for each spoon given away. Men and children are excluded from participation.

Big Co-operative Ad

Readers of the Evening Telegram, the only afternoon paper published in New York on Sunday, were astonished to see a full page of co-operative advertising for "The Top of New York" the current bill at the Rivoli Theatre.

A roof garden, a famous restaurant and a steamship line took space. The Clover Gardens in the Grand Central Palace advertised itself as the largest garden and most magnificent ball room in the world,—in fact—the "Top of New York."

New York's introduction to this co-operative newspaper advertising was effected by John C. Flinn of the Paramount Home Office who has charge of the advertising for the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion Theatres.

Thrift Stunt

When My Boy, the First National attraction, showed at the Capitol Theatre, Washington, Pa., the manager inaugurated a thrift campaign with the cooperation of the First National bank. Miniature Jackie Coogan dolls, small savings banks and placards formed the basis for the bank's window display. A campaign advocating that all boys of Jackie Coogan's age should start saving furnished the impetus for the advertising.

Emergency Action

Heat wave period when attendance is at low ebb justifies resorting to diplomacy such as appealing to pride of race, believes Managing Director Edward L. Hyman, who, when last week's sudden stretch of hot weather descended, decided that nothing short of an Irish play would lure Brooklyn home-owners off their verandas despite the fact the Brooklyn Mark Strand has a reputation for being as cool as they make 'em.

Mr. Hyman met the emergency and advertised extensively My Wild Irish Rose, knowing that Brooklyn's population includes many of Irish birth or origin, who would want to see the play adapted from Dion Boucicault's play, The Shaughraun.

He also advertised Irish music to go with it. The orchestra played selections from "Eileen" as an overture and he gave further atmosphere through having the organists play Chauncey Olcott's "My Wild Irish Rose."

This stunt found its way into the columns of the New York dailies. The group of feminine fire fighters, the entire force of the Hillsdale, N. J., woman's fire department, were invited to attend in a body to witness the spectacle of "the burning of Rome," one of the spectacular features of the Fox production, "Nero," during its pre-release run at the Lyric Theatre, New York.

Summer Program

Keeping expenses down to a minimum in hot weather and yet being able to retain feature novelties is being demonstrated at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, where Managing Director Edward L. Hyman is puting on what amounts to motion picture, dance and music acts.

Instead of lightening his bill with the usual soloists and dancers, which have not been absolutely eliminated for the summer period, Mr. Hyman has inaugurated such novelties as "The Bubble Dance—a Music Film." This is a demonstration of the film as a presenting vehicle for dance and music numbers. The garb of the dancer has natural colors while the settings have natural tintings.

Home Talent on Screen

Manager Hutcheons of the Rialto Theatre, Amsterdam, N. Y., called on his most prominent citizen to draw attention to Smilin' Through. The exploitation plan he mapped out was to secure a photographer to snap illustrious fellow townsmen in an unguarded moment. No announcement was made as to who the photographer was or of his purpose; but slides were made of the pictures and they were run in the theatre. An award of five dollars was offered to any individual who was in the theatre at the time his picture was shown. The stunt, properly advertised, excited interest and drew well.

Mr. Hutcheons varied the usual rendition of Smilin' Through by having it sung by a male singer from the roof of the theatre as a ballyhoo for the crowds.

The Hope Theatre, Dallas, Texas, supplants its armored car, used on "Penrod" and "Fools First," with this classy roadster surmounted with posters announcing Richard Barthelmess in First National's "Sonny." The Hope's motor demonstrations are now being looked for in Dallas and the management intends keeping up the stunt as well as the variety thereof.

Puts It Over

Add Ace Berry to the list of advertisement selling exploitation men. The First National representative at Indianapolis sold the advertising manager of the Sullivan Times on the idea of a double truck for Smilin' Through, at the Sherman Theatre, managed by Henry Wilson. The ad man was sold all right; but he didn't have the time to go out and sell the merchants, so the exploitation man did it himself.

With a spectacular front plus 100 window cards, 50 three-sheets and 8 twenty-four-sheets, Manager H. B. Clark, Majestic Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., played United Artists' "Hearts of the Wold" to big houses. Flags of the allied nations were draped over the front of the building and a 24-sheet was posted above the marquee.

This striking fistic display was achieved by Manager J. M. Edgar Hart, Palace, El Paso, Tex., with the cut-out as the chief element. The enlarged cut-out of the star in the front formed an effective frame for the miniature ring set up in the center of the lobby devoted to Paramount's "The World's Champion."

Two miniature homes contrasting a well-to-do dwelling with a neglected cottage formed the keynote of Manager John B. Carroll's lobby display when Paramount's "The Good Provider" played the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C.

Clever Substitution

Because a window display tie-up on Jackie Coogan's clothes had been advertised for the most prominent store in Ottumwa, Iowa, in connection with the showing of My Boy at the Princess Theatre, and because the posters had advertised a showing of the clothes worn by the little star, and the express had been delayed in delivering the suit from Des Moines, where it had been used previously by a First National exploitation man.

The window was used in the meantime with a display of a boy's cap and a man's suit with long trousers. The placard advertising the Jackie Coogan display was left in, but another poster, taking a tip from "100 Hints on Etiquette," asked "What's Wrong With This Lay Out?" To obtain a pass to the theatre it oniy needed the reply that Jackie Coogan never wore long trousers; but only five people got wise to it, while crowds stood outside the window half the day trying to figure it out.

When the real suit arrived the display was put in as it had been originally contemplated, and the puzzle was explained.

Coupon Books

Special coupon books entitling the holder to $4 worth of admissions for $3.50 have proven very successful at all Jensen & VonHerberg theatres in Seattle since the first of the year. The idea was original with Mr. Barry, purchasing agent for the Greater Theatres Co.

Motor Prologue

The mere mention of putting together a Ford car has quite a bit of theatrical value, which accounts for the number of visitors which go to the Ford factories and assembling plants. Manager W. C. McLarin of the Capitol Theatre, Jackson, Mich., pulled an original one when he completely assembled a Ford on his stage as a prologue to Wallace Reid's latest Paramount picture, Across the Continent.

The parts were joined, gasoline put in the tank, and as soon as the engine was started, the picture was flashed on the screen. It made a great hit with the newspapers.

Ford dealers in the town took co-operative newspaper space. A small white roadster, with advertising painted all over it, was sped through the city by an expert driver, the chief of police giving Mr. McLarin and J. D. Howard, Paramount exploiteer, permission to exceed the speed limits.

Gets Local Color

Here is not a bad idea for a small town exhibitor who desires to stimulate the support of his patrons. R. R. Riley, owner of the Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kan., last week had two of the "town children" pose for a set of twenty-five photographs illustrating the poem, That Old Sweetheart of Mine, and made slides of them, coloring them with water color paints. Title slides also were made and parts of the poem reproduced on other slides, which, in all, made quite a hit with the "home folks" and netted a good week's business.

Laborers' Lobby

The lobby front of the Liberty Theatre, New Orleans, took its cue from the settings of a laborer's work shop during the run of Charlie Chaplin's Pay Day. The front of the house was done over to resemble an unfinished but rising wall of brick for the side of a building. Ladders and scaffolding enhanced the effect, while jagged edges left ample room for capacity audiences to enter the theatre.

The same effect was carried out in the presentation which showed the laborers at work on the identical wall reproduced on the stage. The main feature of the prologue was a comedian who did a genuinely funny imitation of the star. In the middle of his act the lights were suddenly switched off and the picture flashed on.

N. Y. Paramount Sales Force in Get-Together

The sales force of the New York District of Famous Players-Lasky held a convention at the Ten Eyck Hotel, Albany, on May 23d, which was attended by S. R. Kent, John Clark, Harry Ballance, Hal Hodes and Henry Salsbury, from the Home Office; Harry Buxbaum, New York District Manager, as well as the three branch managers, Harry Danto, New York Exchange, Allan Moritz, Buffalo Exchange, and N. W. Kempner, Albany Exchange; together with fifty salesmen from the New York, Albany and Buffalo exchanges.

In the evening a banquet was held at the Ten Eyck with Harry Buxbaum as toastmaster, and the speakers of the evening were Messrs. Kent, Ballance, Clark, Hodes, Gledhill, Lee, Burnstine, Freeman, Fater and McCarthy.

This get-together was so successful that in the future it is to be a regular event in the Paramount organization.

Dutkin's Serial Club

A serial club organized by Charlie Dutkin of the Grant Theatre, Philadelphia, has succeeded in getting an enrollment of 1700 kiddies, who have pledged themselves to attend every one of the installments on a serial he is now running. The club has frequent picnics and a uniformed baseball nine. Charlie went so far as to get the general approval of the schools and parents in the vicinity, and the club is one of the biggest of its kind in Philadelphia.

Fables That Got Them

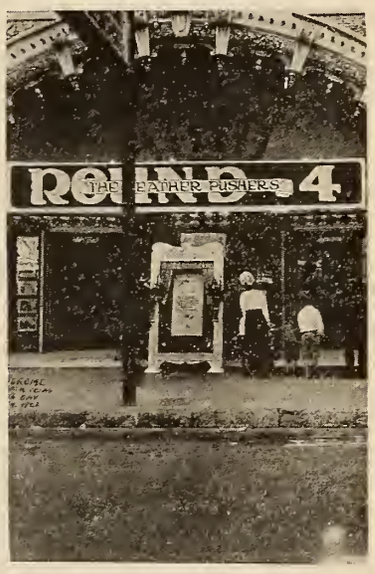
Sioux Falls, Iowa—The Plaza Theatre, Sioux Falls, Iowa, wanted to spring some Siamese folk-lore on the public as a selling angle for Fool's Paradise.

The encyclopedias were singularly destitute of good fairy tales so John Friedl and Harold Horne of the Paramount exploitation staff made up one that would make the Brothers Grimm or Hans Christian Andersen go bury themselves in the Baltic.

They got up the herald shown here with an envelope of salt attached. On the envelope were figures purporting to be Siamese, a fact which no Sioux Faller disputes.

These were mailed to every home in Sioux Falls and got over big. The figures on the Fool's Paradise opening at the Plaza were $300 above the record.

Manager J. M. Edgar Hart, Palace Theatre, El Paso, Texas, capitalized the National Baby Week idea and with the co-operation of the sponsors of the movement. In the lobby he built this white railing to serve as an enclosure for nursery furnishings. A nursery was provided and administered to babies whose mothers wished to check them at the gate while seeing Paramount's "Is Matrimony a Failure?"



Right, the banner used by Manager H. F. Gould, Hippodrome Theatre, Ft. Worth, Tex., for "The Leather Pushers." It is so designed that it can be used every week, the only change being in the number indicating the round. To the left, a lobby evolved by Manager W. T. Brooks, Strand, Knoxville, Tenn., in which he used a 24 sheet posted across the corner of the lobby for the Fox feature, "Thunderclap."

"Molly O" sang from the gilded bars of her cage in the lobby of the Capitol Theatre, Washington, Pa., when the First National attraction played there. Above, below and on all sides of the bird were cards reading 'Molly O Will Steal Your Heart Away."

Signs at the Crossroads

1—Plaza Theatre, New York, displaying First National's "Smilin' Through." This lobby was carried out by Leo Brecher and Milton Chamberlain, of the Plaza, and S. Charles Einfeld. 2—Broadway halts to view scenes from "The Crossroads of New York," in shadow screen shown in illustration. 3—A close view of the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre. 4—"Lessons in Love" played up at the Rialto, Columbus, Ga. 5—100-foot front of the Liberty, Yakima, Wash., devoted to local setting for "Smilin' Through." 6—500 boosters turn out for Rialto, Hamilton, Ohio, tie-up with milk fund drive in connection with First National week. 7—"Hail the Woman" lobby at the Rialto, Macon, Ga.

"Movies" Cost Public the Least

By DAN ROCHE

Paramount Exploiteer—Chicago

MUCH has been said and written by exhibitors and the public in favor of lower admission prices. There is little to be said in favor of lower admissions but much to be said on the other side of this question. After all it is a matter of the psychology of the public mind.

The first motion pictures were shown for five or ten cents admission in small dingy stores. Gradually all this changed and better theatres, better pictures, music, added attractions in the way of feature acts were added until to-day the average motion picture theatre is not only a clean, comfortable, cozy place of entertainment, but the center of community activities as well.

All this has brought in its wake advanced admission because, obviously the more value given the public in the way of entertainment and comfort, the more it costs the exhibitor, hence the more he is compelled to charge his patrons. Can any one imagine the public willing to return to the dingy little theatre, with its flickering picture, wheezy piano; dirty, cold in winter and hot in summer; and showing pictures that would not be tolerated in any first class theatre in the smallest town in the United States to-day. The exhibitors pictures cost him more, his music, lights, help, advertising—in fact, every factor that enters into making his house a success costs him more. How many people are there who would be willing to pay a fancy price for the auto of ten years ago? None.

Now perhaps a few figures might be enlightening. Has the exhibitor or the public ever stopped to compare the relative entertainment value, or amusement value if you wish of the motion picture theatre when set side by side with other forms of entertainment or amusement? In the following table averages have been struck and the figures are in the main correct as showing what is charged in large cities and small towns for different forms of entertainment or amusement.

Obviously, in certain localities prices are higher than in others. In the main, however, the prices are fair average prices for the entire United States. Look over this table carefully and compare the admission prices charged by the theatre in your locality with the prevailing prices charged for the other entertainment or amusement in your locality. This applies to the exhibitor as well as the public. It would be well for every exhibitor to do this also and then he will be fortified with an argument to meet any demand by his patrons for lower prices.

Entertainment or Amusement	Cost per Person per hour
Motion pictures—admission 30 cents including tax, one and one-half hour show—equals	$.20
Dancing—10 cents per couple per dance—12 dances per hour, equals	.60
Bowling—25 cents per person—5 games per hour, equal	1.25
Billiards—40 to 75 cents per hour, average equal	.57
Pool—5 cents per cue per person—12 games per hour, equals	.60
Baseball—lowest admission 50 cents for one and one half hour game, equals	.331/3
Football—lowest admission $1.00 for one hour, equals	1.00

In this table nothing has been said of the circus, the carnival show, the street fair or the amusement parks in the larger cities where a person cannot attend without spending as much in one evening as he would spend for five motion picture shows.

There has been no attempt in this to do any more than strike a fair average. Perhaps in some localities the cost of dancing, bowling, baseball and other forms of amusement are cheaper than given here, but it will probably be found that the admission prices for motion pictures are lower also. In the larger cities the average admission price is 55 cents including tax, but these houses generally give a two hour show, bringing it down to the ridiculously low figure of 25 cents per hour.

Now it would seem that either the public is fooling the exhibitors or the exhibitors are fooling themselves. In either case it behcoves the exhibitor to do some figuring and thinking on his own account and show his patrons that they are getting just what we all claim we are giving and that is the cheapest and best form of entertainment or amusement for the money to be found in your town or any other town.

Don't try to tell your patrons the idea that the producer is charging you so much for your pictures that you have to get "big admission prices," because you are not getting "big admission prices" compared with other amusements as the above will show. Sell your public the idea that it is getting the best and cheapest form of amusement on the market—never admit that your prices are high, rather say they are too low and show the public why they are too low. Once the public realizes how much they are getting for their money compared with other amusements you have won half the battle, because the American public is fair minded and is willing to right a wrong when it is shown where it has committed one.

Contest Tie-up

A lot of pep was put into the advertising for The Bachelor Daddy by the tieup of the Broadway Strand Theatre, Detroit, Mich., and the Detroit Journal. The Journal offered prizes for the best want ads in rhyme submitted during the week.

Phil Gleichman of the Broadway Strand gave a free ticket to the best 25 verses. The contestant was to read the Journal want ads and find one which fired his poetic genius. The rhymes could only be four lines long. The only rule was that the verse must contain the word "want ad."

Telling Your Story With Posters

Ideas and Energies Put Into Displays Pay Well

Selling his public by means of the poster or display type of advertising is one of the most efficient and practicable within the scope of a theatre man's operations. But, like many another of life's old reliables, it is only too often overlooked in the feverish search for "something new," or when resorted to receives only indifferent attention.

The possibilities for original conceit of idea or "something new" in the way of executing a familiar idea on poster advertising are without limit. While it is a fact that the motion picture theatre has developed to a remarkable degree and now is, in the main, employing the poster form with demonstrated effectiveness, it is well for the theatre advertiser to remind himself frequently that the poster merits his most painstaking thought and greatest energy.

To the man seeking the public eye and attention to the entertainment he has to offer, the modern advertising methods have evolved no surer road to achievement of his goal than the tall building, the excavation, the hotel lobby, the store in course of reconstruction, to say nothing of the billboard and the many other locations lying in districts where there is a constant ebb and flow of the people in his community.

But since variety is a recognized spice and stimulant, there must be brought to bear a judicious "mixing up" of both the style of poster used and the location selected for its display. The well-known three-sheet plastered on a well-known billboard which announces the billing for the week at your theatre is a great convenience to your regular patron, who on his way to business of a morning might turn his head in the familiar direction to learn the title and star of your feature for that night.

In this regard, constancy with regard to your poster display is well worth while. But it should be practiced with moderation and not to the exclusion of efforts for new business and patronage of those who have not the habit of theatre-going.

Everybody in your town, the old timer and the overnight drummer, the visiting lady, shopping bent, and the business man who finds himself out of his beaten tracks, is potentially your patron, and since he is necessarily abroad in your town, it is up to you to catch his eye with something that will sell him the idea of visiting your show.

An effort has been made to illustrate on this page a sufficient variety of posters and poster locations to form a basis for constructive thought and ingenuity in devising poster displays. The peculiar angles offered by certain pictures will suggest themselves provided the theatre man fully appreciates the advantages to be derived from intelligent effort in this direction.

It will be helpful, for example, to vary display given with twenty-four sheets by a tasteful arrangement of smaller sized paper to fill out that space customarily employed. Shields of moderate size gotten up with some line to strike the eye of the pedestrian, the motorist or the rail passenger, as exemplified by the Smilin' Through ad illustrated here, are always effective. Taking advantage of a site for a twenty-four sheet that may be offered by some local condition is another thing that should not be overlooked. The effect that may be attained is shown in the photograph of the Orphans of the Storm display. Banners that span the street may be made up and hung up at small cost in money and effort. And then there is the display frame, an excellent article of display, which, properly gotten up, may be placed in hotel lobbies, in front of prominent buildings or any number of advantageous sights procured by a little salesmanship and co-operation.

Mention of the innumerable opportunities presented the average showman, be his house big or little, his location the city of many or the town of few, could be carried on indefinitely, To be specific to a degree is not our purpose here. It is intended that a reminder of the possibilities of the poster be once again brought forth, that its benefits may be enjoyed by the on-the-job exhibitor.

Directing Your Attention Toward the Children

Enthusiasms bulk large in youth's horn of plenty, and it is to youth that the exhibitor might well turn when he seeks to arouse the spirit and mood of his community in favor of his theatre.

Aside from the fact that children are responsible for a high percentage of his box-office returns, the boys and the girls of the town provide the showman a fertile field for his advertising effort. The proved effectiveness of contests of all sorts have given that method a high place among the advertising angles open to the theatre man, and as youths are the most ardent patrons and participants in contests, it is not stretching points to conclude that contests owe their very life to the young.

Again, word-of-mouth publicity is undeniably desirable above all other kinds thereof, and the mouth of an enthusiastic child, it will be recalled, created, in the name of peace and decorum, the admonition, "Children should be seen and not heard."

Get the kids talking about your show and you have a "broadcasting" station singing your praises and those of your show that would bring a blush over the countenance of all the radio apparatus of the country.

Let him initiate a theme-writing contest, an identification contest, an acting contest, or any other competitive scheme and he has to deal with the children. Should a street stunt be used, they are the nucleus of the throng, which, like the snowball, increases its proportions in proportion to its size. They patronize everything from the window display to the show itself.

Of course, the most certain means of attracting a crowd is to offer admissions free. The free show, of course, is free. But for a beginner, it is rather gratifying to have a big turnout when you open your doors. And there is never any doubt when children are the invited guests, while there is frequently grounds for doubt if grown-ups are selected for the honor.

And as a further and more pertinent consideration, it is certain that the youngsters leave nothing undone when it comes to boosting your show once they are given a start such as may be accomplished by a free show, a contest or a street stunt.

The success of young stars has, of course, resulted in a recent flurry all over the country of "kids" stunts. These serve to point out the immeasurable advantages that will accrue to the theatre man who keeps himself and his theatre constantly in the lives and thoughts of the children.

This may be done by resort to costly or inexpensive campaigns, in a spectacular or quiet way. The thing to bear in mind is that it pays dividends and that it will pay you to keep it up with an occasional appeal directly to the children.

The means are at hand in contests that reward the best imitator of a child actor or a comedian with a pass to the show. A suggestion worth trying is that illustrated in the lobby stunt proposed for the Thomas Meighan picture. In this the box-office is covered with wrapping paper and an offer is made to admit free children who bring a cutout head of the star and paste it on the ticket booth, paste being provided in the lobby. This offers an opportunity for a tie-up with the town paper, or the heads may be provided in one of your advance programs, which will insure wide distribution of the program, handbill or herald. Practically all the exploitation angles are applicable to concentrated efforts to arouse the enthusiasm of children, and once started, you can be sure no forced draughts are required to maintain the pace.

Everybody likes good music and most people know what constitutes good music. You can not fool them by near-music. Of course, good music costs money—unless you use the Barton Orchestral Organ. The Barton Organ is built to give the greatest variety of fine music and supplies it at a lower cost than any other instrument. Equally effective with or without an orchestra and built in varying models to fit all sizes of theatres

Once a theatre owner installs a Barton he never installs any other kind, no matter how many theatres he acquires. For Barton owners are Barton boosters —it's that kind of an organ.

Barton music is good the year 'round. NOW is always a good time to install one.

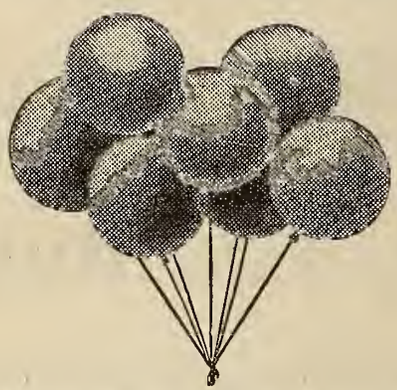
Advertising Balloons

Will Boost Your Business When Everything Else Fails



There has never been an advertising medium devised by the theatre manager that creates the interest, attracts the attention and "gets results" like advertising toy balloons.

They will successfully "put over" any serial comedy or feature picture at about 25% of the cost of any other method you ever used.

You know that the children will go many blocks out of their way to get a free balloon. You get their admission and they carry your advertisement away with them out on the streets, where everyone sees it, into the homes, where you want it.

Many sizes and styles to select from ranging in price from $16.00 to $30.00 per M. Printed with your advertisement.

We also manufacture a beautiful line of "gold and silver" balloons for high-class functions. Souvenirs, cabarets, dinners, receptions and producing companies.

Samples by mail 15c. to pay postage, packing, etc., etc.

Music Stands

Is your stage equipped with modern Type C borderlights? If not you are not getting the full amount of light your money will buy. In addition you are losing money by lamp dipping, breakage, etc.

The Majorlite Borderlight gives three and one-half times the light that the old equipment gives at the same cost for current. It is designed by a theatre lighting engineer, and while it is only nine inches wide it gives a tremendous volume of light. Type C, all clear, lamps are used, 300, 400 or 500 Watts each, depending on the size of the stage. Color slides or frames that slide in grooves are used for color effects.

Type C equipment is the only kind now used in new theatres —most of the better grade have Majorlites. You do not need to wait to build a new house—you can modernize your present one, economically, by installing proper lighting equipment.

Let us talk this over. Write us about your theatre and we will be glad to advise improvements without obligation.

Good Lighting Is a Program Feature

It costs you nothing to talk over your problems with us. Send a sketch, blueprint or detailed information and we will be glad to help you to greatly increase the effectiveness of your lighting.

The profits of your house

THE profits you take out of your house depend upon the highlights you put into your pictures. After all, you have but the one thing to sell—pictures in light. Inferior lighting degrades the best picture in the world to worse than mediocrity; an ordinary good reel, it reduces to a fizzle. The most you give your patrons for their money—what you provide to interest, to amuse, to educate, to thrill—they get through their eyes! And they won't keep coming back to see dark pictures. Poor lighting makes every picture poor, and will work more to keep people out of a theater than any other factor in the industry. The direct road to bright, brilliantly highlighted pictures is—Columbia Projector Carbons.

The value of the picture is in proportion to its lighting

On Direct Current: Columbia Silvertip Combination Carbons present richer color values; and the narrow diameter of the silvertip negative lower permits it to burn to a sharp point, holding the arc steady and also keeping the shadow off the lens and screen.

On Alternating Current: Columbia White Flame A. C. Special Carbons yield a sharp and pure-white light, steady, brilliant, absolutely silent.

Use Columbia Projector Carbons to double the enjoyment of what you are showing and keep the profits of your house up to where they belong.

Columbia Projector Carbons are the most satisfactory source of motion picture light in the world!

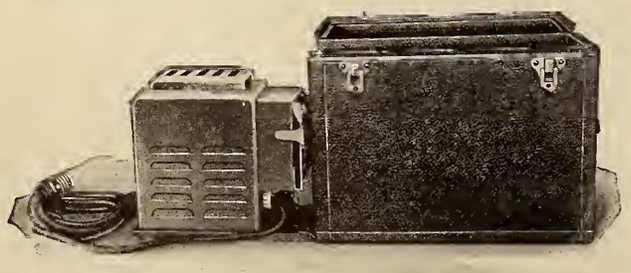
The DeVry is the Pioneer and the Peer of Portable Motion Picture Projectors

The first really portable motion picture projector; successful from the very beginning. Today over seven thousand in daily use all over the world. Used extensively by exhibitors and musical directors for pre-viewing film. Endorsed by thousands of educators, ministers, farm advisors, the Y. M. C. A. and other bodies. A necessity for the modern salesman on the road.

Developed to the highest degree of efficiency through master engineering and superior workmanship. Strictly professional quality projection on the screen. Only one model in two types; covers the needs of the most exacting customer.

The DeVry line is complete. Consists of the DeVry Portable Motion Picture Projector, the DeVry Portable Stereopticon, screens, rewinds. Stereopticon slides in sets for all purposes. Exclusive distributors desired in unassigned territory. Write for particulars.



The DeVry Portable Stereopticon

Weighs but 10 lbs.; no separate parts, no setting up, no adjustments; a clear, bright picture any size up to 12 ft. wide and up to 65 ft. distance. No other stereopticon like it.

Rothacker-Aller Laboratories, Inc.
Hollywood, California

In the long run Rothacker Prints actually cost you less than ordinary prints, for the many savings in our superior product and service soon cancel the slight difference in first cost which distinguishes Rothacker Prints from less beautiful and less durable prints.

The relation of first cost to final economy is the important thing, and to buy ordinary prints, which are priced according to their quality, is to be extravagant.

Our price represents no excessive premium — it represents a screen reflection of all that is beautiful in the negative.

Rothacker Prints may cost a fraction more than ordinary prints, but their screen appearance and service prove that they are worth the slight difference.

The Cremona
Theatre Orchestra-Organ

SOLO features, with pipe-organ and orchestral compositions, are the ultimate in the creation of appropriate musical atmosphere so necessary to the silent drama.

It is easy to visualize the box office possibilities of the Cremona Orchestra-Organ, for it makes possible almost any type of musical program. Its solo features represent a long step in advance of theatre organ development.

Embodying a double roll system which permits playing by an 88 note player roll in conjunction with the organ solo roll with or without an operator, it can render pure solo music including flute, violin, vox humana, xylophone, etc., combinations. Instant changes of rolls are possible.

The Cremona brings constant exploitation possibilities and a permanent reputation to your house, apart from screen offerings. If you would solve your musical problem, investigate the Cremona. There is a type and size for every theatre.

Sub-Titles Are Like A Woman's Reputation

—You can't be too careful of them.

It isn't enough to write titles that are good in themselves, as examples of polished English. The important thing is to find the right title for the right place—the title that belongs—the title that does not say a word too much or too little—the title that gives to the pictorial text a dramatic focus as sharp and clear as the photography itself should be.

Some title writers seem to assume that pictures are made simply to be speedways for their vocabularies. The clouds of words they raise are worse than the dust from the car ahead of you on a country road.

Beware of the title that is a non-conductor.

Every time one happens in a picture, the current to your audience is broken. You'd raise merry blazes if the points on the distributor of your car weren't right. Don't let defective titles cause your pictures to miss fire, when every cylinder should be working.

Let me "do my bit" for your next production.

Consultations at your convenience.

VACANT SEAT INDICATORS!!

—are small camera-like electrical devices used by the ushers for signalling from anywhere in theatre just how many empty seats there are and in exactly what combinations.
—seat 100 people in same time required to seat only 25 in the old manual way.
—eliminate constant walking up and down aisles by ushers thereby conserving energy and increasing efficiency.
—FURNISH REAL GENUINE SUPER-SERVICE HITHERTO UNDREAMED OF.

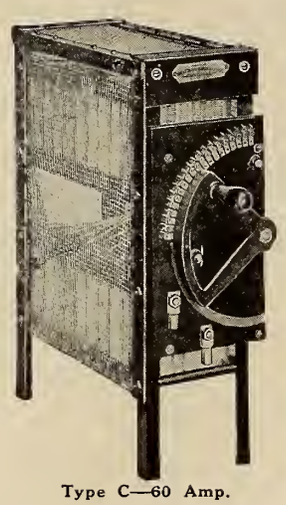
The Leonard Multiple Unit A. C. & D. C. Arc Controller

Consists of a large number of resistance coils connected in parallel thru a multi-point dial switch.

The large number of points gives fine regulation.

The fact that the coils are in multiple instead of series insures continuous operation.



Type C—60 Amp.

Can be used on either A.C. or D.C. and can be furnished for any line voltage.

Have many installations which have been in operation for over 10 years. All the large theatres in Cleveland and many theatres in other cities now equipped and giving excellent results.

Reasonable in price, negligible maintenance.

To Producers and Directors

There is available for your use an organization which can, and will, take from your shoulders every detail other than those which concern actual production.

This organization will arrange for the financing of your production; serve also as your representative with the distributor interested for the approval of contracts and accounting; the exploitation of such productions; in other words, the complete handling of the various details which now concern you unnecessarily.

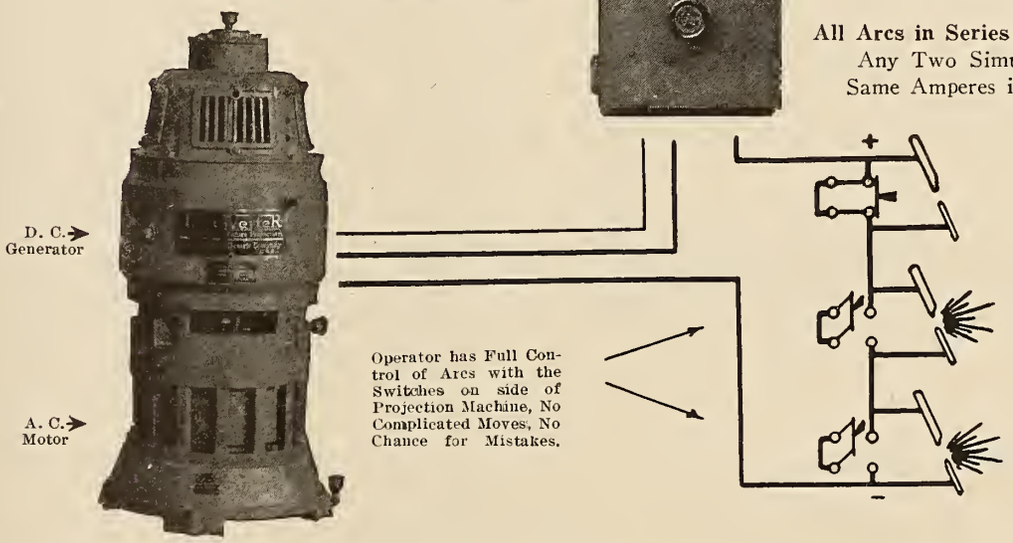
TransVerteR

The Motor Generator That Produces Perfect Arcs

Motor Generating Unit
Ball Bearing Quiet Efficient
Built to Last and give Satisfactory Service.

All Arcs in Series Two or More
Any Two Simultaneously
Same Amperes in Each Arc



TRANSVERTER, the original series arcs AC to DC motor generator, still maintains unchallenged leadership as the best constructed, most efficient theatre set in existence.

It gives the operator perfect arcs, clear, white, steady light that is always under perfect control.

TransVerteR automatically generates only such voltage as is required for the arc (no ballast being used), therefore it gives better results and uses less current than any other device.

TransVerteR will maintain two arcs in series, of equal amperage and light value, thus affording a perfect dissolve and the most artistic projection of pictures.

TransVerteR embodies a host of features that afford quiet, economical operation, the much desired projection results, and all 'round satisfaction.

TransVerteR can be furnished for any power circuit.

Double Arc—A. C. to D. C.
Double Arc Transverters will furnish their full rated capacity of amperes to two arcs simultaneously, permitting dissolving of pictures, heating up or burning in carbons in one lamp while the other machine is in operation.

110, 220 or 440 Volts
60 CYCLES
	Two or Three Phase	Single Phase
DC Amperes	Type	Type
35— 35	D	D-1
50— 50	D	D-1
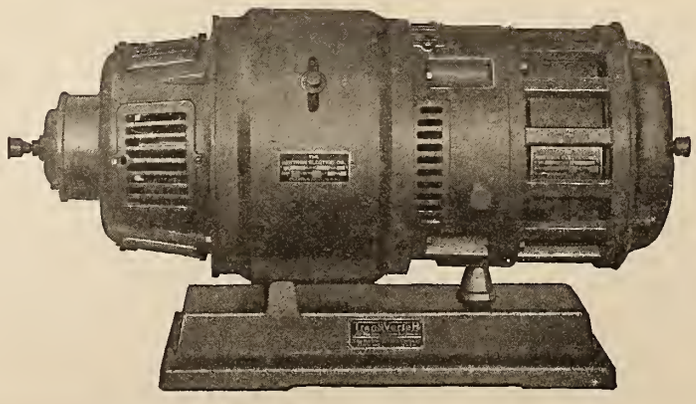
100—100	D	D-1

Horizontal TransVerteRs

The success of TransVerteR has long been established on the vertical machine, which is our standard product. We are in position, however, to furnish horizontal TransVerteRs, as illustrated at the right, having all the current characteristics and advantages of the vertical machine.



Motor Generators for Parallel Arcs

While the series arc TransVerteR is the ideal and most efficient equipment for almost all theatre installations, there are a few theatres that plan to use several arcs and spots simultaneously, using different amperage in the several arcs. To meet the condition where initial cost of equipment is a matter of consideration, we offer a horizontal type constant-voltage Motor Generator set, with adjustable resistors for each of the arcs, which are then handled in parallel.

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

Its consistently fine reproductive values and its long scale, which registers every gradation from highest light to deepest shadow, carry quality through to the screen.

Eastman Film, both regular and tinted base, is identifiable throughout its entire length by the words "Eastman" "Kodak" stenciled in black letters in the transparent film margin.

This illustration of a Linotile floor in the lobby of the Fillmore Theater, San Francisco, California, illustrates the decorative possibilities of Linotile for lobby, aisles, ramps and rest rooms.

An Achievement in Theater Floors

WHERE floors must combine beauty with utility, as in theaters and buildings of similar character, use Linotile. Linotile is a cork composition, resilient to the tread, non-slippery and practically noiseless. It is remarkably resistant to wear and abrasion, and through years of service retains its original elasticity and color.

Linotile is made in tiles of various shapes and sizes and in eleven pleasing colors, thereby affording almost unlimited facilities for making the floor a distinctive decorative feature, adaptable to areas of any size or shape.

A floor, not a floor covering, the unusual qualities of Linotile make it especially suitable for the lobby, aisles, ramps and rest rooms. It can be laid over any smooth base of wood, concrete or metal.

Complete information and detailed specifications are contained in the 44-page book, "Linotile Floors," which will be sent free with a sample on request. The color illustrations strikingly demonstrate the effectiveness of Linotile floors in homes, clubs, public buildings, etc. Write for your copy.

PROJECTION

What inquiries, if any, have you made regarding the improvement of your projection? You certainly cannot afford to neglect this phase of your business.

Sun-Light Arc High Intensity Projection Lamps have proven their value to many of the leading exhibitors. To-day, high intensity is recognized as an absolute necessity.

Kindly fill out the attached card of inquiry and mail to us. Our Mr. Bassett will prepare a special diagram showing in fullest detail the lighting needed to obtain the best possible results in your theatre. You will find that thousands, who do not attend motion picture theatres to-day, will be your customers in the future under this wonderful projection, which eliminates all annoyances to the nerves of the eye, because of the fact that it brings out details with a steady light.

This chart of your illuminating necessities will prove of great value to you.

OFFICE OF

June 23rd, 1922.

Sunlight Arc Company, Inc.,
1600 Broadway,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

Having just passed our second anniversary with the writer as director of presentations at this theatre, we think it only fitting that you should know how much satisfaction the Sunlight Arcs have given us in our projection machines as well as in the spot lights in various parts of the building. They give us the finest service imaginable. Day in and day out they have stood the most severe test known in any theatre in the world and they have come out with colors flying.

I think it only fair that you share in the knowledge that the equipment furnished by you to this theatre is in a good measure responsible for the fine results obtained.

Very sincerely yours,

S. L. Rothafel

NEW YORK CITY

New York, May 29, 1922

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

I am afforded considerable pleasure to recommend the very high-class art and art-title work of Mr. John Slobey and his organization.

Within the past nine months, Mr. Slobey has supplied me with all hand-lettered main, sub-main and sub titles, together with numerous pastel illustrations for such notable successes as—"I ACCUSE", "SCHOOL DAYS", "THE LOVES OF PHARAOH", "THE MISTRESS OF THE WORLD", "WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME", "PARTED CURTAINS", "ASHAMED OF PARENTS" and "JOHN JACKSON, DETECTIVE".

It is verified, and witnessed beyond question, that the writer has never requested nor received any payments or commissions from Mr. Slobey and, furthermore, volunteers this recommendation in appreciation for what he considers the best motion picture title work possible to obtain in New York.

Respectfully,
Roxy Lawlor.

The Capitol Theatre, Detroit, Michigan. Bull Dog Pre-set Switchboard in use.

The Newest Development in Stage Lighting Control

Fast work is necessary in changing scenes, particularly in handling the lighting.

In this new and modern theatre all lighting circuits can be "pre-set" on the Bull Dog Stage Switchboard so that the actual change can be made by moving 1 to 4 master levers. It's a patented Bull Dog feature.

There are other Bull Dog advantages that will interest you—low first cost, low maintenance cost, absolute safety and simplicity of operation. Write for catalog.

Anybody Can Make Claims—

And apologize for the results. Evans Prints have stood the test of time during the past fifteen years and because of that many claim the same high quality Evans has always given, the kind you do not have to apologize for when you show it on the screen.

You can confidently order an Evans Print directly from the laboratory to your screen and feel certain it is right because we take a Personal Interest in every foot of film that passes through our plant.

No matter how fine your negative is, it is difficult to prove its quality unless your positive reflects that quality.

And while your negative is in our plant you know it has the greatest protection because our insurance rate is the lowest of any plant in New York or New Jersey.

Personal Interest Follows Your Picture Through Every Stage

3,000,000 Feet a Week

That is the capacity of our new laboratory recently opened at Flushing, L. I. Some additional facts regarding the new plant are as follows:

Location:	Flushing, L. I. Only 20 minutes from Times Square by our speedy delivery vans.
Equipment:	Latest type automatic developing and printing machines. Tube System, insuring clean prints. No handling of film.
Staff:	Expert technical staff, with lifetime training in motion-picture laboratory work. Many of them graduates of the Gaumont laboratories in Paris and New York.
Negative Insurance:	Lowest rate in New York: 43.8 cents per hundred. Four vaults of modern design conforming fully to fire regulations assure maximum protection.
Raw Stock:	We prefer using only highest grades, but our superior equipment enables us to make good prints from any grade on the market that the producer may wish to use.
Prices:	It is not our policy to cut prices, but our prices will be found to be the lowest, based on quality of stock used and perfection of prints.
Service:	Special cutting, editing and projection rooms are provided for our patrons. Our laboratory and staff are always at their service.
Credit:	To responsible producers we can arrange satisfactory terms of credit.

MOV-EZY

Copyright 1922

THE MOV-EZY Chairs, after exhaustive tests, have received unqualified endorsement of municipal Boards of Health, Fire and Building Departments. No theatre owner, with an eye to better business, should fail to investigate the MOV-EZY, the theatre chair that

MEANS EASE AT THE MOVIES

Greater Convenience and Comfort to Patrons. The MOV-EZY eliminates the necessity of rising to permit late arrivals to take their seats. The chair is easily and noiselessly swung to one side.

Greater Safety in Case of Emergency. Every theatre equipped with MOV-EZY chairs can be emptied in one-third the time of those fitted with ordinary chairs.

Greater Sanitation. Because of their construction, the MOV-EZY chairs enable cleansers to clean both chairs and floor much more quickly and thoroughly, besides permitting a perfect circulation of air.

Greater Beauty. There is no comparison between the interior appearance of theatres equipped with MOV-EZY chairs and those without. MOV-EZY chairs give an air of refinement, comfort and airiness never before attained. Now is the time to investigate and install them.

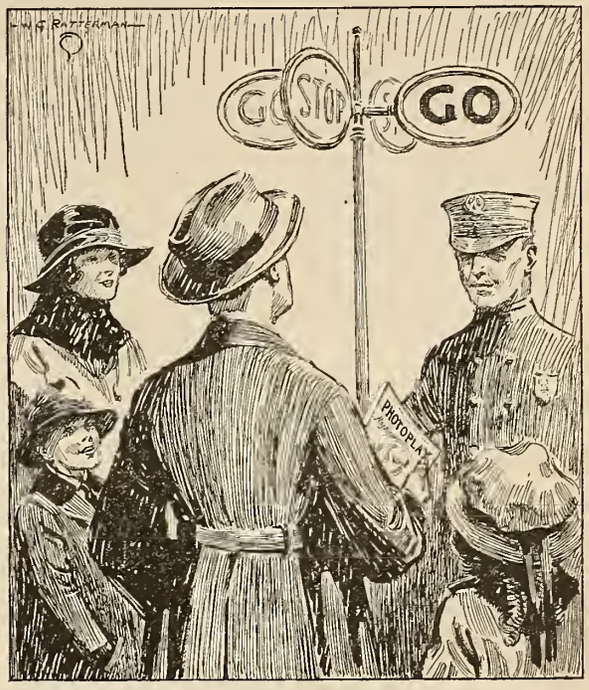
Here is where you get the Public's viewpoint on every picture produced. It will aid you in selecting attractions for your theatre.



PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE tells 2,500,000 people every month what pictures to see and what pictures to avoid.

These people attend motion picture theatres on an average of three times a week. They follow the advice of the PHOTOPLAY reviewers. It is the answer to that question asked every night in countless homes—"I wonder if that picture is worth seeing." The patrons of your theatre read it. They talk to their friends about it.

It is the national guide to pictures.

Every month PHOTOPLAY gives a selection of the six best pictures of the month. Hundreds of newspaper critics follow PHOTOPLAY'S reviews and use them in judging pictures which appear in their local theatres, and at least one hundred newspapers in the United States are using it for the selection of the six best pictures of the month.

PHOTOPLAY gives you the viewpoint of the patrons of your theatre on pictures. These reviews are written by trained reviewers, under the guidance of James R. Quirk, the Editor of PHOTOPLAY. They are judged on the basis of entertainment value. They do not attempt to theorize or to go deeply into the subject of motion picture technique or production.

PHOTOPLAY starts a $50,000 advertising campaign in the Saturday Evening Post, beginning June 15th, directing the American people to study this Review Department as a guide to save their motion picture time and money. Already a great influence, its power is growing every month.

Send this coupon today and receive PHOTOPLAY at the special subscription price of $2.00 a year. The regular subscription price is $2.50. Just fill out this coupon, pin two one-dollar bills to it and send it in.

New National MAZDA Motion Picture Lamp

—Ten Reasons Why You Should Use It

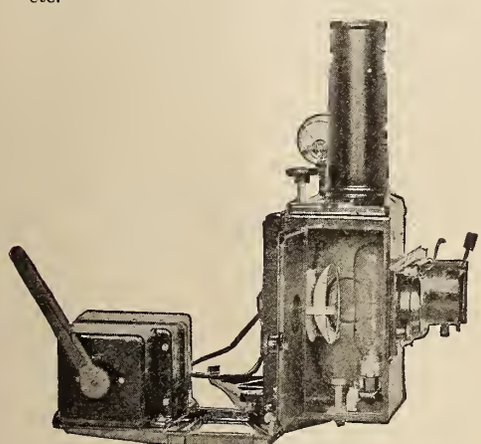
The 900-watt, 30 ampere National MAZDA Motion Picture Lamp. The 600-watt, 20 ampere lamp is similar in construction, and is recommended for very small theatres, churches, lodges, schools, etc.



The G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector for Motion Pictures

The perfection of the new National MAZDA Motion Picture Lamp and the new G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector represents the final design after years of development and tests both in laboratories and in theatres. The Projector consists of a lamp housing, a regulator, and a combined bracket and base. With this equipment the MAZDA Motion Picture Lamp can be adapted to any projection machine made in the United States.

1. Projects a picture of correct tones.
2. Has no annoying flicker—light source is constant.
3. Enables front-seat patrons to really enjoy the picture.
4. Gives off no obnoxious fumes or gases.
5. Requires no adjustment after initial setting.
6. Saves from one-third to two-thirds in current consumption.
7. Projects a better picture than a carbon arc.
8. Has won the endorsement of more than 1000 exhibitor-users.
9. Has a rated life of 100 hours.
10. Sells for only $6.75 list.

The 900-watt National MAZDA Motion Picture lamp is recommended for use with the new G-E Incandescent Lamp Projector in theatres having main floor seating capacities up to 1,000, or picture widths up to 16 feet, or throws not exceeding 120 feet. It gives better results than an alternating current arc, and is the equal of the direct current arc up to 50 amperes.

You, Mr. Theatre Owner, want to increase your attendance and reduce your operating cost—to increase your net profits. The new National MAZDA Motion Picture lamp will enable you to do just that. Write today for more complete information and for recommendations for installation in your theatre.

FREE INSURANCE

You can relieve yourself of worry and obtain free insurance forever. If you intend selling pictures on the screen it must be done right in this age of wise theatre patrons. This requires our services to properly design your booth — electrically, mechanically — and optically. J. E. Robin designed the operating rooms of the Strand Circuit, Capitol, Rialto, Rivoli, Criterion, Sheridan, James, Panama Pacific Exposition 1915, B. F. Keith's, B. S. Moss and for many architects.

Our Service Engineering Charges Are Reasonable

Robin Speed Indicators, the first in the world, are used to synchronize the music and pictures in all leading studios, D. W. Griffith Production, Capitol, Rialto, Rivoli, Strand Circuit, etc.

Radio Will Make Profits

Use a properly designed receiver to give your patrons both audible and visual entertainment. We are manufacturers and distributors of special outfits for the home or theatre use. Permanent or portable. By giving the public what they want—over a million are interested in radio—you will benefit.

READ THESE LETTERS

"IT is a pleasure for me to say that the business done with my Butter-Kist machine exceeded my expectations about 300%. I have been terribly disgusted with myself to think I have been here four years without a machine." Strand Theatre.

"I WANT to tell prospective buyers about the Butter-Kist popcorn and peanut machine. Now I have already bought 5,000 cartons with the 2,500 you sent with the machine, making a total of 7,500 in less than three months, to say nothing of the 5c popcorn sales and peanut sales. Now I am ordering 15,000 more cartons. I broke my record in sales last Friday and Saturday, August 19-20. I took in $48 in two days. That is not bad for a town of 2,000 population." Border Theatre.

"I HAVE had one of these machines for the past three years and would not be without one. I find that even in the dullest times, my net profits on popcorn will be at least $100.00 per month. I consider any moving picture theatre is losing a lot of easy money when not equipped with a Butter-Kist Machine." Brown's Stocking Avenue Theatre.

Read This Letter

"We have been operating a Butter-Kist popcorn machine for some months past, and have no hesitancy in saying that it is a splendid profit producer. Our sales have run as high as $70, and will always average around $30. On August 21st we sold $75.90, on November 11th $73.25 and on February 8th $40.00. We consider the Butter-Kist proposition a very good one, and feel sure that when given a fair chance and proper attention it will prove a profitable investment to most any one, and will fit in with most any line of business."—The New Virginia Theatre.

Read What Other Movie Owners Think of Their Butter-Kist Machines

"WE bought one of your Butter-Kist machines in May, 1920, placing same in the lobby of our Central Theatre. This machine did so well we bought another machine the following August, for the lobby of our Fairview Theatre. Due to the locations of our Butter-Kist machines, the splendid financial condition in 1920 and the proper attention we gave to the selling of the popcorn and peanuts, the net profit exceeded our expectations and the machines more than paid for themselves by the first of January, 1921. We consider the location of our machine ideal." Central Theatre.

"IT has surely been a surprise to me, as I did not expect to do anything during the hot weather, but contrary to my expectations the machine has simply cleaned up all summer. I rather pushed it to the front, placing a pleasing attendant in charge and placing it in an attractive booth, fronting the street, and used a great many of your suggestions on advertising, with the result that you can pick up "Butter-Kist" popcorn bags any place along one mile on main street. Our receipts on the fourth and fifth of July were $275.00 with a carnival in opposition having two other kinds of popcorn machines." The Lyric Theatre.

"I AM sure proud of my Butter-KIST machine. I don't see how any picture show does without them. Up to date I have sold upwards of $50 worth of popcorn and peanuts, and these nice sunshiny days bring more people wanting to buy. I am very thankful that your salesman came by, for I am gradually increasing my sales—in fact, they just can't resist that good Butter-Kist aroma." Electric Theatre.

"IT is needless for me to say what I think of a Butter-Kist Popcorn Machine, as I made my purchase even before I built my theatre. I consider a popcorn machine a great money maker, greatest for the amount invested and the space it takes up. I don't see how any one can make a failure of one, for everybody loves Butter-Kist popcorn and they always have all the money it takes to satisfy their desire. My profits average—week days, $12.00; Saturdays, $25.00. During the one and one-half years that we operated our machine the expense for repairs has been so small it is hardly worth mentioning." REEL Waste

THIS → is the rubber film attacher, which is on the hub. You don't scrap the reel when the hub wears.

NIESS-WANER REEL

Other Big Advantages

UNWINDING PERFECTION—The "let-go" is instantaneous and harmless to film.

PRECISION—The reel is made precise and true and matches the mechanics of projectors.

Here It Is—The Bull Dog!—It Obeys New U. S. Law

Bull Dogs have won the film shipping market and the new Bull Dog, built to follow that new rule, will knock your eye out, really. It's the toughest film case in the world.

We studied every case we could find—and discarded their weaknesses. Now, in the Bull Dog, with their round seamless corners, reinforced like trunks are, with their drawn one-piece cover and bottom, beaded sides, wired edges, Bull Ring lock, new heavy fibre lining, and riveted bottom, we've got the case that carries the film!

Every film shipper who buys a case must buy one built to the specifications. You'll save time, money in damaged films, worn-out cases and bother by ordering NOW a supply of Bull Dogs that will last a lifetime.

And remember, our Nu-Code cases—for those who prefer packing films on edge. They also conform to the new I. C. C. regulation 32 A. Ask about them, if you don't know!

Cost ½ because they last DOUBLE

BULL DOGS are made in 2 to 8 reel capacity only.

The single reel case is our square type "Nu-Code" construction.

— Its a FEDERAL ELECTRIC SIGN

THE big electric display brightening up the beautiful front of the new Tivoli Theatre, located in Chicago, Ill., announcing its magnificent productions to theatre-goers for blocks in each direction, is a "Federal."

No greater recommendation could be made for a product than the fact that it was selected to produce business for the finest moving picture theatre in the world.

There is a Federal Changeable Letter Theatre Sign for every theatre, large or small—it is the effective business producer that pays for itself many times over.

Send coupon today for full information, prices and free sketch showing how your sign will look—no obligation.

C-H Dimmers with Major Pre-Selection Control

Where the Value of Enchanting Lighting Effects Is Recognized

Where the greatest experience in successful theatre operation is corralled,—where the leaders in architectural art are retained—there you will find great care and pride exercised in the planning of the lighting effects.

The magic of shifting color-harmonies responding, as it were, to the motion of the orchestra leader's baton, is of utmost importance in attracting and keeping patronage.

With C-H Dimmers these lighting effects may be extended beyond the footlights—and the hundreds of bulbs which nestle behind cornices and columns, shine within inverted chandeliers, or glow softly through translucent panels,—are controlled at will.

C-H Simplicity Dimmers have been specified by leading architects for a quarter of a century and are in use in large and small theatres the land over.

In remodeling your theatre and in the building of a new one, C-H engineers will be glad to work with you from the inception of your plans.

Booklet D-6 mailed on request

INDIVIDUAL DIMMER PLATES FOR SMALL THEATRES

For the small theatre, where a complete Dimmer bank is not desired, small single Dimmers as shown above are used. The plate shown has capacity for controlling lights aggregating 2640 watts—the equivalent of 66, 40-watt lamp.

The Major System Is Needed

Wherever Theatres Exist!

There is only one real theatre lighting control apparatus in the world that is pre-selective, remote control, extended control, fire proof, fool proof, and capable of infinite variety of lighting effects. It is used by hundreds of theatres all over the country, both large and small, and is thoroughly indorsed by architects, theatre owners and stage electricians.

It occupies less stage space than any other, is simpler and easier to control and gives longer, better service than any other. It is the Major System of Theatre Lighting Control, manufactured and sold by the Frank Adam Electric Co., St. Louis, Mo.

The statement made above does not need proving. It will be verified by any one who is familiar with theatre lighting.

Get your name on the list to receive the new complete catalogue of fine theatre lighting. Ready soon.

Choppers That Chop

The CAILLE SECURITY TICKET CHOPPER actually tears the tickets into shreds, removing all possibility of again smoothing or ironing them out to be used a second time.

The cutting knives and mechanism are so constructed that coins or metal checks will pass right through without injury to machine.

Chopper is also equipped with agitator to force strips of tickets down onto the cutting knives.

In lower compartment, under lock, is large metal box to retain the cuttings.

The choppers are supplied in birch, mahogany or on special request in any other finish desired. Top and feet are of white porcelain enamel. We also manufacture electric ticket choppers and ticket boxes. Be sure that it is a CAILLE.

If your supplier does not handle our chopper, write us.

To dealers—Some very good territory open; do not delay writing us.

Size 45x12x12 inches Weight 100 lbs.

We have been printing tickets since 1873

A Year's Box-Office Reports on Features

ON the succeeding pages will be found a tabulation by pictures and cities of all the reports on first-run showings printed in Exhibitors Trade Review from June, 1921, to June, 1922.

We print each week authoritative reports gathered by our own correspondents in a score of the important first-run centers of the country. Exhibitors who are making the acquaintance of the publication for the first time, by turning to page 483, can see at a glance the form in which these reports appear each week.

The name of the city and the name of the theatre are specifically given in each picture report, as will be noted.

Tabulation of the year's reports has been reduced to as simple form as possible. First, appears the name of the picture. Then follow the names of the cities and the picture ratings, which are as follows:

1—Excellent Business.
2—Good Business.
3—Average Business.
4—Poor Business.

The name of the distributor is placed in parentheses after each picture. The following abbreviations are used:

Affiliated Distributors.....Aff.
Arrow Film Corp.....Arrow
American Releasing Corp.....AR.
Associated Exhibitors .....AE.
Associated First Nat'l Pictures..FN.

More Than Nine Hundred Pictures Are Listed in This Box-Office Report Chart

No trade paper has ever before assembled such a mass of vitally important information in so simple and readable a form.

Every figure on the chart represents an authoritative report obtained by one of our own correspondents from a first-run theatre. The names of the theatres from which these reports are gathered are printed each week in Exhibitors Trade Review.

Fifty-two weeks in the year this publication, in "The Voice of the Box-Office" Department, is giving the industry a distinctive service, unrivaled in the field.

What the exhibitor wants to know, at the earliest possible moment, is the box-office record of the picture in the key city of his territory, if he plays later run. If the picture is still awaiting first run in his town, he wants to know what record it made elsewhere.

Exhibitors Trade Review gives him that information—in either case.

During the coming year, this service will be expanded and made even more valuable than it is now.

How the Latest Releases Are Being Received Throughout the Country

ALLENTOWN, PA.

COLONIAL

"SATURDAY NIGHT," all star (Paramount). Good drawing attraction for summer weather. Made good week's run without much difficulty.

RIALTO

"FIGHTING MAD," William Desmond (Metro). Went good, with popular prices as one element in bringing in the crowds. Tip-top attraction, opinion of most persons who saw it. Attendance steady all through run.

HIPPODROME

"THE WAY OF A MAID," Elaine Hammerstein (Selznick). Star without a failure kept up her triumphant way. Good photography a feature of the picture and and won praise through this element.

STRAND

"PARDON MY FRENCH," Vivian Martin (Goldwyn). Good show, with newly rich angle of plot one that the patrons laughed over. Not necessary to go in for much boosting as show was one that made friends who went out and advised others to be sure to see the picture.

LOTUS

"PEACOCK ALLEY," Mae Murray (Metro). Usual smashing success, with report commendatory in every way. Picture was hailed as being most excellent.

ATLANTA, GA.

HOWARD

"REPORTED MISSING," Owen Moore (Select). During a week of relentless rain, this picture met with great success. Audiences fairly howled with glee.

Presentation. — Overture, Sullivan's "Mikado." Prologue, "A Chinese Episode," had a lovely Chinese setting, and Miss Edith Cone, soprano, together with Mr. George McNulty, tenor, gave a beautiful selection from "East Is West."

Short Subjects.—Howard News and Views (Selznick News).

METROPOLITAN

"TROUBLE," Jackie Coogan (First National). One of the best weeks of the season.

Presentation.—By special arrangement the theatre was opened at 10.30 every morning for the benefit of the children and to the first hundred buying a ticket each morning a large autographed picture of "Jackie" was given. Stunt increased business tremendously.

Short Subjects.—Christie Comedy, "Oh, Promise Me" (Neal Burns); Kinograms.

CRITERION

"THE VERMILION PENCIL," Sessue Hayakawa (R-C), First Half. Only aroused a fair amount of interest, and although backed up with a return engagement of Charles Chaplin, in "Pay Day," business was only moderate.

"MOTHER O' MINE" (First National), Last half—second run. This picture met with better success, and together with "Pay Day," drew fairly good business.

Short Subjects.—Kinograms.

GRAND

(First Half).

"THE SILENT VOW," William Duncan (Vitagraph). Above the average of pictures run at the Grand. Full of action and very pleasing.

Short Subjects.—Star comedy, "Off the Beat," educational release, "High Diving" (Annette Kellermann), and a Fox news reel.

(Last Half).

"BOY CRAZY," Doris May (R-C). A very snappy picture which proved a great success.

Short Subjects.—Goldwyn Graphic, Century comedy, "Three Weeks," Fox news and Mutt and Jeff.

RIALTO

"THE WORLDLY MADONNA," Clara Kimball Young (Bromberg). Local critics proclaim this to be the best of the star's recent pictures. Business was good and would have been better but for heavy rains.

Short Subjects.—First series of six Sport Pictorials.

STRAND

"GODLESS MEN" (Goldwyn). The kind of picture that appeals to the Strand patrons. Plenty of action and big fights. Picture pleased and business was good.

Short Subjects.—Larry Semons "Fall Guy." This was a second run comedy, but it made a tremendous hit.

TUDOR

"WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME" (Warner Bros. Special). (Third run), Monday and Tuesday. Fair.

"THE BLACK BAG," Herbert Rawlinson (Universal). Wednesday and Thursday. Fair.

"THE WAY OF A WOMAN," Norma Talmadge (Kempson)—Reissue. Friday and Saturday. Popular reissues which proved very successful. Business was good.

Short Subjects.—Star comedy and International News.

BETHLEHEM, PA.

LEHIGH ORPHEUM

"MONEY TO BURN," William Russell (Fox). Putting the Sewell Ford label on this feature was good business stunt from box-office standpoint. Picture liked by all and won praise in all quarters.

Second Half

"STRANGE IDOLS," Dustin Farnum (Fox). Fair business, nothing to boast about. No fault of feature, which was up to standard and deserved better attention.

PALACE

"OLD WIVES FOR NEW." Brought in average sized houses. Picture classed as being above the ordinary type and merited better attendance than it won.

Second Half

"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE," John Barrymore (Paramount). Old timer brought on and proved as good a drawing card as some more recent issues. Many people, however, do not like the horrible stuff in pictures, and attendance was not a record-breaker as a result of this hesitant attitude.

LORENZ

'FASCINATION," Mae Murray (Metro). Dancing of star big drawing card and picture's screening was a big triumph, with business gratifyingly heavy.

Second Half

"THE BLACK BAG," Herbert Rawlinson (Universal). Mystery story drew well and was one of the best of its kind shown here for several months. Enjoyed a satisfactory three days' run.

BUFFALO

SHEA'S HIPPODROME

"YELLOW MEN AND GOLD," Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick (Goldwyn). There's a lot of action in this entertaining filmplay and both stars of the film are prime favorites at the Hipp. This, together with better theatre weather, brought business back close to average.

Exploitation.—Newspaper display, playing up some of the thrilling scenes from the picture, lobby and electric display on front of the house. Window cards and billboards.

Short Subjects.—"Toonerville Blues," Toonerville comedy, Hippodrome Review, "Nippon" a Prizma subject, Topics of the Day.

LOEW'S STATE

"BOUGHT AND PAID FOR," Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt (Paramount). Management had the pleasure of seeing most of seats filled at all performances during the week on this one. Audiences commented favorably on the entertaining qualities of the feature.

Exploitation.—Enlarged newspaper ads on the Sunday drama pages and in the daily editions. Billboards, window cards and lobby display.

Short Subjects.—"A Pair of Sixes," comedy; Mutt and Jeff cartoon, Pathe News.

LAFAYETTE SQUARE

"A VIRGIN PARADISE," Pearl White (Fox). Fair. Nothing seems to affect the business at this theatre. No matter what the attraction, good, fair or bad. Many claim it's the organ recitals given by C. Sharp Minor that do it. Feature just suited patrons and business was fine all week.

Exploitation.—Large display space in newspapers, window cards, billboards, electric display on front of house.

Short Subjects.—"Snub" Pollard comedy, Fox News and Courier Local Events.

MARK-STRAND

"THE SLEEP WALKER," Constance Binney (Paramount). Business was just fair during the half week showing of this feature. Constance is not much of a drawing card unless she has a strong vehicle. The last half of the week the management put on James Oliver Curwood's "THE FLOWER OF THE NORTH," which was more suitable for summer entertainment, and the box-office figures were a trifle better.

Exploitation. — Newspapers, window cards, lobby display.

Short Subjects.—Hallroom Boys in "Step on It," Screen Snapshots, Kinograms.

PALACE

"THE BLACK BAG," Herbert Rawlinson (Universal). This feature went over to fair business for a half-week run. A popular star, a good story and a fine musical accompaniment were reasons for attracting a large number of fans.

SHEA'S NORTH PARK

"YELLOW MEN AND GOLD," Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick (Goldwyn). They came from all parts of North Buffalo and the suburbs in autos to see this attraction. You couldn't park within several blocks of the house on opening night. The North Park is enjoying unusually good business for this time of the year.

CHICAGO

STATE-LAKE

"RED-HOT ROMANCE," Basil Sydney-Mae Collins (First National). A new sort of screen comedy that met with favor. Business was very good.

RANDOLPH

"ACROSS THE BORDER," Tom Moore-Betty Compson (Paramount). An adventure tale both interesting and picturesque. Good attendance all week.

CHICAGO

"THE PRIMITIVE LOVER," Constance Talmadge (First National). An amusing comedy drama that kept the theatre well filled at every performance.

ROOSEVELT

"GOLDEN DREAMS," Claire Adams (Hampton). A romantic thriller. Patronage was very satisfactory.

ARYAN GROTTO

"OUR MUTUAL FRIEND," Catherine Reese (Warner). An adaptation wonderfully well done. Presented for the benefit of a Masonic building fund, it is proving to be a great drawing attraction.

CLEVELAND

STATE

"SONNY," Richard Barthelmess (First National). Star is fast becoming a Cleveland favorite, and this vehicle more than pleased the patrons of this theatre during its engagement.

Exploitation.—Advance publicity and street car cards. Playing up star's former film activities.

ALLEN

"WATCH YOUR STEP," Cullen Landis (Goldwyn). Business on this attraction was good, due to the fact that there was a well-balanced program of short subjects shown and the personal appearance of Kitty Gordon and her company.

STILLMAN

"IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE?" All-Star (Paramount). Business good.

Exploitation.—A splendid lobby, together with street car cards, help to build business on this picture.

MALL AND PARK

KANSAS CITY

NEWMAN

"THE BACHELOR DADDY," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). The star is a great favorite here. A big week's business.

Short Subjects.—"Step This Way," Mermaid comedy and Newman News and Views, current events.

LIBERTY

"ARABIAN LOVE," John Gilbert (Fox). A good week's attendance, the title, more than anything else, attracting good crowds.

Short Subjects.—"Cops," Buster Keaton comedy, and Pathe News, current events.

Exploitation.—Usual newspaper, billboard and lobby display, with liberal space allowed for the comedy.

ROYAL

"THE RULING PASSION," George Arliss (United Artists). Hot weather, but a lively attendance for a week's run.

Short Subjects.—"Hokuspokus," comedy and Royal Screen Magazine, current events.

Exploitation.—The fact that the production is from Earl Derr Bigger's story in the Saturday Evening Post was given prominence in newspaper copy. The line, "Just downright clever," also was featured. Also billboard and lobby display space.

TWELFTH STREET

"WAY DOWN EAST," Richard Barthelmess (United Artists). A return engagement, but it went over great for a week.

Current Events.—Screen Magazine.

Exploitation.—The past reputation and splendor of the production was played up in newspaper, billboard and lobby display space.

LOS ANGELES

GRAUMAN'S

"THE WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). The program drew better than any for weeks past. Miss Dalton is a favorite here. The usual weekly advertising was used and a number of news stories carried the picture with full houses all the week in spite of the sudden hot weather.

GRAUMAN'S RIALTO

"BACHELOR DADDY," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). In the second week and holding up very well. The usual amount of advertising was used.

HILLSTREET

"HANDCUFFS AND KISSES," Elaine Hammerstein (Selznick). Proved a very good audience picture and drew very good reviews in the dailies. The advertising of the picture was given half of the daily space over the vaudeville program.

SYMPHONY

"GRANDMA'S BOY," Harold Lloyd (Pathe). In the fifth week and still playing to good houses, although the sudden hot weather has cut in a little on the box-office receipts. One hundred twenty-four-sheets are carried all during the run, with frequent news stories and Lloyd's picture appearing almost daily in one of the five newspapers.

PANTAGES

"EAST LYNNE," Hugo Ballin starring Mabel Ballin (Hodkinson). Very good audience picture. The book is so well known that the title was an especially good drawing card.

Short Subjects.—Hall Room Boys Comedy and "Breaking Into Jail."

TALLY'S

"THE ANGEL OF CROOKED STREET," Alice Calhoun (Vitagraph). The star proved very refreshing and the story excellent. Usual weekly advertising and no exploitation.

Short Subjects.—Fox News, Bali the Unknown (excellent, and very complimentary reviews).

SUPERBA

"THE BLACK BAG," Herbert Rawlinson (Universal). Business very good. The lobby was decorated with black traveling bags and an open safe stood in the center front of the lobby, and the psychology of an open safe on a public street drew a great deal of attention. Usual weekly advertising space was used.

Short Subjects.—International News, Western with Reginald Denny in "Jaws of Steel" and Lee Moran comedy.

MISSION

"MONTE CARLO," all star (Fox). Held over for the sixth week and has played to excellent business all through the run.

MILLER

"THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK," all star cast (First National). The hot weather has hit the picture a little and dampened the overwhelming expectations for the opening, but as the week progresses the receipts are growing and may play a long run as was first expected.

CALIFORNIA

"THE WALLFLOWER," Colleen Moore (Goldwyn). The little star is a decided favorite at the California and the press notices were plentiful and downright good stories. Usual ads and no exploitation used. Business very good.

LOEW STATE

"THE FACE BETWEEN," Bert Lytell (Metro). Very good audience picture and the star played to his usual standard. The regular weekly advertising was used and no exploitation.

Short Subjects.—World happenings in International News; Sport Pictorial, "Beyond the Beaten Trail."

HIPPODROME

CLUNES

"THE LYING TRUTH," all star cast (American Releasing). Very good week's business. The Harold Lloyd comedy brought in most of the people.

Short Subjects. — Kinograms; Lloyd comedy, "Swing Your Partner"; scenic, "The Great Divide," Co-Op.

KINEMA

"FOOLS FIRST," all star cast (First National). Showed fair business. The sudden change to extremely hot weather hit this picture, and what was expected would pull excellent business showed up only fair. The picture received very good reviews and the people that saw it were most enthusiastic.

Short Subjects.—Overture, Topics of the Day, Horton at the Morton playing "Asleep in the Deep" and "In an Old Fashioned Garden," Burr Novelty Review, Roy Smoot singing "Vesti la Guibba" from "Pagliacci," and noon-time recitals for the shoppers and the business people.

MILWAUKEE

ALHAMBRA

"IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE?" All-Star (Paramount). Business first five days, which were comparatively cool, fine.

Exploitation.—Attractive newspaper advertising, lobby display and street car posters.

Short Subjects.—Torchy comedy, Pathe News reels, educational films.

BUTTERFLY

"MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME," Monte Blue (American Releasing). Star criticized by press for his "behavior" in the film. Business fair.

Short Subjects.—Century comedy, Selznick news reels; special Selznick pictures of Venetian Night festivities held in Milwaukee during ad convention week.

GARDEN

"THE CRADLE," Ethel Clayton (Paramount).—Fair business. Mary Jane Irving given special favorable mention by all press representatives.

Short Subjects.—Century comedy, Fox news reels and Educational news reels.

MERRILL

"THE INVISIBLE POWER," House Peters (Goldwyn).—Poor. Picture did not seem to draw even average crowds.

Short Subjects.—Toonerville comedy, International news reels.

SAXE'S RIALTO

"THE LIGHT OF THE DESERT," Shirley Mason (Fox), and "The Golden Gift," Alice Lake (Metro). Good business on this combination.

Short Subjects.—Selznick news reels; pictures of festivities during ad week convention.

SAXE'S STRAND

"THE WOMAN HE MARRIED," Anita Stewart (First National).—Fair business.

Short Subjects.—Mack Sennett comedy, "Gymnasium Gus"; First National Sketchograms and Kinograms.

PHILADELPHIA

ALDINE

"THE SPLENDID LIE," Grace Davidson (De Luxe-State Rights). The widely advertised fact that Miss Davidson was to appear personally was, it is felt, largely responsible in building up a good business for the week.

Short Subjects.—"Hale and Hearty," Snub Pollard (Pathe), Prizma "The City of Heights" (Pathe), "Moongold" (Wid Gunning), and Universal News.

STANLEY

"POLLY OF THE FOLLIES," Constance Talmadge (First National). In the face of a very bad week generally, the picture drew well, as all Talmadge pictures do in Philadelphia, and received a great deal of favorable comment.

Short Subjects. — Martin Johnson's "Jungle Adventures" (American Releasing Corporation), Æsop's Fables, "The Maid and the Millionaire" (Pathe), Fox and Pathe news reels and Topics of the Day.

ARCADIA

"NORTH OF THE RIO GRANDE," Bebe Daniels and Jack Holt (Paramount). Although the Arcadia patrons were not especially carried away with the picture itself, it did a very satisfactory business throughout the week.

Short Subjects.—Century Comedy "You and I" (Universal), Screen Snapshots No. 2 (Pathe) and Pathe News.

REGENT

"KISSES," Alice Lake (Metro). This production flunked terribly and was taken out at the end of three days and replaced by "PEACOCK ALLEY," Mae Murray (Metro), which helped to bolster up business for the week.

Short Subjects.—"Strictly Modern," Snub Pollard (Pathe) and "Philadelphia, the Workshop of the World" (Stanley-made).

CAPITAL

"THE CRIMSON CHALLENGE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). The title rather than star was liberally exploited, and as a result there were very satisfactory box-office receipts. Production made a popular appeal.

Short Subjects.—"Poor Boy," Lloyd Hamilton (Educational), Post Nature Picture, "Night of Many Shadows," Topics of the Day and Kinograms.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

NEW GRAND CENTRAL

"COME ON OVER," Colleen Moore (Goldwyn). The week marked the celebration of the second anniversary of the purchase of the New Grand Central by the Skouras brothers and a big revue was staged to celebrate the event. The stage held a cast of about thirty people. A bit of jazz was introduced in the offering, but most of this type of music was shelved and the revue was found to offer a somewhat better taste of melody than the usual banged-up jazz offerings so often presented. It would be rather hard to judge the drawing power of the picture with this stage presentation on. Nevertheless the local papers gave high praise to the picture and it seemed that the audience found one big laugh after another in it.

Exploitation.—The revue was given almost all the space in the local papers, but the newspapers gave the majority of space to the picture in their reviews.

MISSOURI

"NORTH OF THE RIO GRANDE," Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels (Paramount). Despite the unusual spell of hot weather St. Louis was having during the run of this attraction, business registered good. Matinees were nothing to brag about, but the night attendance was very good.

Short Subjects.—Missouri News, cartoons by Marcus.

WEST END LYRIC AND LYRIC SKYDOME

"THE QUESTION OF HONOR," Anita Stewart (First National). Registered a nice attendance, while the Skydome, located three blocks away and the largest in the city, found business very good each night.

Short Subjects.—Johnny Hines in "Torchy's Frame Up" and a Harold Lloyd revival, "Be My Wife," News and Views.

Exploitation.—Usual newspaper space. That Bebe Daniels was playing opposite Lloyd in the revival was mentioned, which doubtless helped some.

EMPRESS

"THE SHEIK'S WIFE" (Vitagraph). The title doubtless drew the attendance and, probably owing to the extreme hot weather during the run of this picture, business was only fair.

KINGS AND COLUMBIA

"DOUBLING FOR ROMEO," Will Rogers (Goldwyn). Both of these houses also feature vaudeville, but, judging from the manner in which the audience took the picture, it went over bigger than the vaudeville.

SCRANTON, PA.

STRAND

"THE BACHELOR DADDY," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). Eleventh week of mine suspension and naturally conditions are far below normal. Yet even with this handicap the business done with this feature was good.

STATE

"HER SOCIAL VALUE," Katherine McDonald (First National). Good picture but did not pull in the people as it had been hoped, due possibly to industrial conditions.

POLI

"THE GLORIOUS FOOL," Richard Dix and Helen Chadwick (Goldwyn). Picture was a big pulling power, even though mine workers have been idle for almost three months.

WILKES-BARRE, PA.

ORPHEUM

"THE IRON TRAIL" (United Artists). Announcement of feature made picture a good magnet for the crowds for a solid week's run.

SAVOY

"WOMAN'S PLACE," Constance Talmadge (First National). This feature was a duplication of the success that crowned previous showings of earlier Talmadge productions. Attendance kept up nicely and business was better than average.

CAPITOL

"LYING LIPS" Florence Vidor and House Peters (First National). Average business, with vaudeville to help bring in crowds. Safe picture to book for any house.

Illustrated Screen Reports

FOR THE EXHIBITORS BOX-OFFICE

EDITED BY GEORGE T. PARDY

Restless Souls

Released by Vitagraph. Story by Richard Harding Davis. Scenario by Fred Schaeffer and Calder Johnstone. Cameraman, Geo. Robinson. Directed by Robert Ensminger. Length 4080 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

James Parkington, Earle Williams; Lida Parkington, Francelia Billington; Edgar Swetson, Arthur Hoyt; Mrs. Fortescue, Martha Mattox; Uncle Ben, Nick Cogley.

James Parkington, finding that his wife is more absorbed in neo-symbolism and the lecturer than she is in him, decides to fake a suicide and see what will happen. After he carefully plans his death he returns to a boarding house to watch the results. He learns that instead of his wife getting his estate, his aunt is the beneficiary through the failure to locate his will of a later date. He also finds that the lecturer who had been pursuing Mrs. Parkington has transferred his affections to the aunt who has inherited the money and that these two are contriving to get Lida Parkington out of the way now in order that perfect harmony might reign in the household. Parkington goes to the house one night to locate the will that has been lost. He is recognized by his dog and the household is awakened by the barking. Lida realizes her mistake and she and her husband make up again and order the aunt and her new husband out of the house.

Restless Souls has been adapted for the screen from the story of "Playing Dead," by Richard Harding Davis. It possesses only an average appeal possibly because of the fact that numerous other productions of similar construction have preceded it. The ultimate outcome of these fake suicides is so evident that the story is quite often robbed of any suspense that might be intended to register. The picture is pleasingly done, however, and contains some humorous situations that will get the laughs. In places that this theme has not been overworked there is a good chance of satisfying an audience with this picture.

Points of Appeal. — In this day of "isms" a great many people will find that they have suddenly become overwhelmed with some new fad, and have allowed themselves to be carried away with it. In this respect Restless Souls holds a moral. It may serve a good purpose. A bit of enjoyable entertainment has been added by the clever tricks of "Pal," the Boston bull, belonging to the star.

Cast.—Earle Williams, as James Parkington, does some pleasing work. The material furnished him, however, is scanty, but he makes the most of every situation. Francelia Billington plays opposite him and the remainder of the cast give adequate support.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The interiors are good, clear sets. Some nice garden shots have been obtained. Lighting is good throughout the picture and continuity easily followed, although slightly anticipatory. Direction good.

Her Night of Nights

Released by Universal. Story by C. S. Montanye. Scenario by Doris Schroeder. Cameraman, Victor Milner. Directed by Hobart Henley. Length 4550 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Molly May Mahone, Marie Prevost; Jerry Trimble, Edward Hearn; Ted Bradley, Hal Cooley; Myone Madrigal, Betty Francisco; Cyrus Bradley, Charles Arling; Lily Everson, Jane Starr; Gus Wimple, Geo. B. Williams; Pop Mahone, Robert Daly; Mickey Mahone, Richard Daniels.

Molly May was the best model in the establishment of Bradley, Inc. She often dreamed of some day being able to have all of the fine things that she wore for display. Into the office comes Jerry Trimble, fresh from the country, and through Molly May's efforts he is given a position in the shipping department. Molly and Jerry soon fall in love and Jerry later gets a raise in salary by going over to a law firm and working his way up. He is still unable to give the girl all of the fine things that she craves for but she is satisfied to change her views about life and together they plan to buy a little home. Molly accepts a proposition from Ted Bradley to earn a hundred dollars by going with him to a fancy dress ball in order to make his wife jealous. Jerry sees them going in and their love affair almost comes to sudden disaster, but they explain the purpose of it all and Molly gets the money to contribute to the amount necessary to take up the option on the new home.

A romantic drama that will reach a fairly general appeal in almost any class of patronage. Although the story is of the well known "movie" variety, there is a sufficient juggling of the plot to maintain the interest. There is no attempt made to create any thrills or to offer any great suspense, simply the usual bit of semi-sentimentality that always seems to register. Her Night of Nights is a picture that in spite of its triteness affords a fine chance for the star to always be very much in evidence and very likely will succeed in gaining many new admirers for her.

Points of Appeal. — At the beginning of the picture Molly May is a model displaying gowns for Bradley, Inc. True to all expectations she appears each time wearing a different gown, and in each case successfully dazzles the spectators with her grace and charm. The main interest of the story rests chiefly with her ability to carry it through.

Cast.—Marie Prevost in playing the role of Molly May Mahone gives entire satisfaction. Edward Hearn, as Jerry Trimble, is permitted to go to the extreme with his "rube" get-up, but makes an agreeable lover. Hal Cooley, Betty Francisco and Richard Daniels are good in their roles. Lesser support adequate.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—Interiors are pleasing. Lighting occasionally is poorly handled. The director has probably been severely handicapped with his supply of material and the production does not show beyond mediocre qualities.

While Satan Sleeps

Paramount Photoplay in Five Parts. Based on Peter B. Kyne's Novel, "The Parson of Panamint." Scenario by Albert LeVino. Director, Joseph Henabery. Running Time, Fifty-two Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Phil, Jack Holt; Red Barton, Wade Boteler; Sunflower Sadie, Mabel Vau Buren; Salome Deming, Fritzi Brunette; Bud Deming, Will Walling; Chuckawalla Bill, J. P. Lockney; Absolom Randall, Fred Huntly; Bones, Bobbie Mach; Mrs. Bones, Sylvia Ashton; Bishop, Herbert Standing.

Phil Webster, alias "Slick Phil," a minister's son gone wrong, escapes from jail with the aid of his pal, Red Barton. Chuckawalla Bill, elected mayor of Panamint, mining town, decides that a church and clergyman is needed and visits Los Angeles. Phil, disguised as a parson, gets in a barroom brawl; the mayor takes a hand in the squabble and is much impressed by the prowess of the supposed minister. He induces Phil to come to Panamint as minister. Randall, banker and leading churchman, as well as the rest of the congregation, welcome Phil, but Bud Deming, saloon proprietor, and his daughter, Salome, are against him. Phil enters the saloon to rescue the husband of one of his congregation. He fights with Bud and thrashes him soundly. During the combat a shot is fired and Sunflower Sadie, a dance hall girl, is wounded. Sadie begs for the parson and Phil goes to see her. She tells him she knows of his past but makes him promise to go straight in the future. Red Barton arrives, intent on business. He robs the bank, but Phil obtains and replaces the stolen money. Sadie dies, and despite the opposition of Randall, Phil insists on burying her from the church. The bishop of the diocese, having investigated the career of the new Panamint parson, comes to expose him. He arrives with detectives just as Phil makes open confession of his past in the church, declaring that he is resolved to go back to jail and finish his term. The bishop recognizes Phil as his long-lost son and rejoices at his regeneration. Salome, with whom Phil has fallen in love, promises to wait for him. In due course of time he is released and finds her and his father welcoming him outside the prison gates.

A lively melodrama with timely snatches of comedy here and there, While Satan Sleeps registers as excellent entertainment. The fighting parson is a familiar type in pictures, but a crook masquerading in ministerial garb and combining priestly and scrapping qualities is an entirely new departure and in the present instance a pleasing one. Religion is usually a dangerous topic to fool with on the screen, but it is so delicately handled in this feature that the most pious spectator cannot take offense. There is plenty of sentiment of a healthy kind, brisk action and fine photography in evidence and Joseph Henabery has directed the film with unerring good taste and judgment. Viewed from any angle the attraction offers splendid box-office possibilities and the hearty reception it was accorded during an initial showing at the Rivoli Theatre, New Yark, augurs well for future popularity.

Points of Appeal.—An extremely touching scene is the death bed of "Sunflower Sadie," which is "put over" in rarely skilful fashion, without too much "sob stuff." "Slick" Phil's reformation comes about in natural style and that many-sided hero wins sympathy right from the start. His fight with Bud Deming is thoroughly realistic and the mistake is not made of having the man who is defending the right win with absurd ease. On the contrary, the pugilistic parson is badly trimmed at the start and his victory is rather a surprise. The story never drags, the element of suspense being maintained at high pressure throughout and a cheerful climax is attained.

Cast.—Jack Holt fills the role of hero Phil admirably. Both as the gent of fortune and disciple of regeneration, he makes an enduring impression and his performance ranks as one of the best contributions he has made to the silent drama. Mabel Van Buren does excellent character work as "Sunflower Sadie," Fritzie Brunette scores heavily as Salome Deming and Will Walling gives a capable performance in the part of Bud. The support is adequate.

Photography, Lighting and Direction.—The mining town atmosphere is well developed, interiors and exteriors are effectively filmed and good lighting distinguishes the entire production. There is no break in the continuity and fast action prevails.

The Girl in His Room

Released by Vitagraph. Adapted from a Play by J. Raleigh Davies. Scenario by C. Graham Baker and Harry Dittmar. Cameraman, Not Credited. Directed by Edward José. Length 4523 Feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Myra Pendleton, Alice Calhoun; Kirk Waring, Warner Baxter; Paul Duprez, Robert Anderson; Molly Maguire, Faye O'Neill; Elinore Larrimore, Eve Sothern.

Myra Pendleton returns from college to meet her father in a new home that he has purchased for her. She has never seen him before and finds upon reaching the place that he has just been called away. She takes over the managment of the house and shortly afterward Kirk Waring, who had formerly owned the place, returns from Europe. Unaware that his estate has been sold he goes to the house and finds it occupied by this young lady. They meet at a reception and Kirk asks to call. Meanwhile he discovers that the man to whom he has given his power of attorney has sold the place and disappeared. With his finances low he goes to the house to a secret safe to get some bidden bonds. Myra goes in search of her father's secretary and Kirk follows her. They learn that this man is the one who robbed Waring and is also Myra's father. After quite some explaining matters finally are straightened out and Myra and Kirk returned to their home.

A highly imaginary and exaggerated plot forms the background for The Girl in His Room, but it suffices to hold together a story that has some entertainment value, although of limited appeal. The thrills are of a rather quiet nature, but the air of mystery that follows through the story might do to sustain the interest. The general outline of the theme will not come as a surprise to the seasoned movie patrons for the inevitable outcome of the story closely resembles the many others of this style that have preceded this production. If your patrons do not particularly demand things that are different then there is a chance that this one will get over. At best, though, The Girl in His Room is only a mediocre production.

Points of Appeal. — The affection that Myra Pendleton bears for her father, whom she has never seen, may reach a sympathetic appeal through the audience. There is also a bit of comedy that has been added to relieve the stress of the tense moments. The hero in the story will immediately gain favor and the final happy ending with the disclosing of the secret will prove satisfactory.

Cast.—Alice Calhoun, as Myra Pendleton, is not particularly well cast in this picture. However, she does some pleasing work and is ably assisted by Warner Baxter, who does the role of Kirk Waring. Other members of the cast are satisfactory in their roles, although they are all placed at somewhat of a disadvantage by having such limited material to work with.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The photography is clear and all sets are appropriate. The lighting has been accomplished with good results. The continuity of the story is well arranged and questionable details satisfactorily brought out. Direction O. K.

Bluebeard, Jr.

American Releasing Corporation Photoplay in Five Parts. Director, Scott Dunlap. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Nan Beech, Mary Anderson; Tom Beech, Jack Connolly; The Lawyer, George Heruandez; Lucy Page, Laura Ansen; Mrs. Timothy Beech, Lila Leslie.

Nan Beech's husband is a broker of moderate means. When their landlord demands an exorbitant increase in rent they are compelled to move to a smaller and cheaper apartment. In the narrow limits of their new residence they begin quarreling and Tom Beech leaves for business in a bad mood. Arriving at the office he finds awaiting him an Eastern lawyer. The latter is to give him $50,000 left by an uncle, provided that he has settled down and is leading a quiet life. The lawyer insists on seeing his home and wife. In the meantime Nan has gone to stay with a girl friend, having decided to quit Tom. Her husband persuades his wife's best friend to play the part of a "temporary" wife and "borrows" a rich man's home. But Tom's "temporary" wife refuses to play the role. The owner of the borrowed home is absent but his wife returns and finds Tom there. She promises to help him out and they have dinner with the lawyer. The first "temporary" wife arrives on the scene and Tom hides her upstairs. Nan makes her appearance and Tom secretes her also. The lawyer catches sight of the ladies and becomes convinced that Tom is a regular Bluebeard. A number of complications ensue and when the real owner of the house comes in and calls for the police, matters look serious. But everything is finally explained, the Beeches get the $50,000 and settle down to enjoy life together.

Fast action, twisted identities and a mass of amusing complications are the ingredients which Director Scott Dunlap has successfully utilized in the shaping of this clean and merry production. It is good farce comedy, with a gingery plot which curves into all kinds of unexpected situations and keeps the spectators on the keen edge of anticipation as to just what is going to happen next during the energetic efforts of the hero to secure a fortune left him on the condition that he is leading a happy and prosperous marital existence. Also, the story may be said to be timely, as it gets its start on the basis of a couple worried by the demands made upon their bank roll by a peculiarly avaricious brand of landlord, and it goes without saying that the high rent problem is one of particular interest right now all over this "Land of the Free." Bluebeard, Jr. ought to bring excellent box-office results, being light, entertaining stuff that is bound to amuse a majority of movie patrons.

Points of Appeal. — The removal of the Beech family to cramped quarters from a more luxurious home because they cannot stand the new rent raise strikkes a sympathetic note at the beginning of the picture and many a one in the audience will understand how hero and heroine feel when the old tenant refuses to get out at once and Mr. and Mrs. Beech are compelled to seek refuge for the night in a neighboring garage. The fun waxes fast and furious when Nan forsakes her husband in a fit of temper and he commences his wild search for a "temporary wife" to satisfy the suspicious lawyer who holds the bequest of $50,000. Right up to the climax it is hard to figure out just how Tom Beech is going to redeem himself, and the element of suspense is thus developed and maintained to a degree rather unusual in comedy features.

Cast.—Mary Anderson gives a snappy performance in the role of Nan. Her physical charms are undeniable and she appears to possess a keen sense of humor, which enables her to make the most of the many amusing situations in which Tom Beech's genuine wife finds herself placed as a result of a "spat" with hubby. Jack Connolly wins favor in the husband part, George Hernandez scores a hit as the snooping lawyer, and the support is adequate.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The interiors are well filmed, deep sets being utilized with good effect, the exterior shots pleasing and good lighting prevails. The continuity is smooth and the action moves rapidly.

Slim Shoulders

Produced by Tilford Cinema Studios. Distributed by Hodkinson. Scenario by Lawrence McCloskey. Cameraman, George Falsey. Directed by Alan Crosland.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Naomi Warren, Irene Castle; Richard Langden, Rod La Roque; Edward Langden, Anders Randolph; John Clinton Warren, Warren Cook; Count Morranni, Mario Carrilo; Mrs. Warren, Marie Burke.

Naomi Warren promises to marry Edward Langden, to cancel her father's obligations. Prior to the wedding Langden is killed in a motor accident. His estate goes to his nephew. Naomi enlists the services of a crook to open Langden's safe and get the note to save her father. They are discovered by the young nephew and while the crook makes a get-away, Langdeu holds on to the girl. She refuses to disclose her identity and seeking to give her another chance he allows her to go free provided that she reports to him. The following evening she dines with him at his home; the crook enters again and persuades her to put a sleeping potion in his coffee. Langden feigns drowsiness and while his safe is being opened he seizes the burglar unaware and then from the girl learns the reason of her actions. Cupid, however, has stepped in and after the explanation he asks Naomi to marry him.

Slim Shoulders is a society drama possessing the highest entertainment values. It is admirably suited to the requirements of Irene Castle, who does the lead to perfection. The entire production is one of the nearest approaches to thorough satisfaction that an exhibitor in any locality might be able to get hold of. The plot is good, there are thrills and suspense aplenty and a delightful bit of romance supplies the finishing touches and continually holds and builds new interests.

Points of Appeal. — There are numerous channels through which this production will be able to prove its entertainment value. Naturally when one sees the name of this star it is reasonable to expect to get a glimpse at some gorgeous gowns. In Slim Shoulders there are many glimpses that come up to all expectations. Another entertaining and exciting feature of the picture is the motor boat race. The Florida scenes are picturesque and excellent in detail.

Cast.—Irene Castle, as Naomi Warren, gives a performance that not only sustains her reputation of being an exceedingly well-dressed woman, but also as an actress of great charm and ability. Rod La Roque, who does the leading male role, has every qualification of a most acceptable hero. Excellent support has been given by all of the other members of the cast.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The photography is pleasing and fine lighting prevails. There are many fine outdoor shots and all of the interiors have been artistically done. Continuity of the story is even and direction thoroughly satisfactory.

Sherlock Brown

Metro Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Bayard Veiller. Scenario by Leonore Coffee. Director, Bayard Veiller. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

William Brown, Bert Lytell; Barhara Musgrave, Ora Carew; Hilda, Sylvia Breamer; J. J. Wallace, Dewitt Jennings; Frank Morton, Theodore Von Eltz; Chief Bard, Wilton Taylor; General Bostwick, Hardee Kirkland; Henry Stark, George Barnum; Cato, George Kuwa.

William Brown, New York clerk, is a victim of detective fever. For $5 he receives a badge of so-called authority from the Illyria Detective Agency, appointing him as a representative. He feels that he is now a genuine "Sherlock" and accident throws a chance at real sleuthing in his path. A young U. S. Army lieutenant is found lying unconscious in the hallway of a house in Washington, D. C., where a conference of big business men has just taken place, headed by J. J. Wallace. A formula for a deadly secret explosive, Government property, has been stolen from Lieutenant Musgrave. Wallace finds him and promises his aid, then goes to New York. Musgrave is placed under arrest and in hospital. His sister, Barbara, hears him muttering Wallace's name in his delirium. Barhara follows Wallace, who has hidden the formula in a flower pot. She accuses and struggles with him and a book is thrown through the window. Brown is passing, picks up the book and climhs through the window. Wallace pulls a gun and Brown flings the flower pot at him. It breaks and discloses the envelope containing the formula. Barhara seizes it and escapes with Brown. On the street they meet Morton, who undertakes to take her to Chief Bard, Government agent at the Trask Hotel. Wallace instructs Hilda, a girl in his pay, to sidetrack Morton and Barhara and tell them Chief Bard is at an uptown address. Wallace, with Stark, his henchman, wait for their arrival. Numerous complications follow. Brown again secures the envelope hut is tricked out of its possession hy Hilda. After a long chase he succeeds in tracking down the conspirators and regaining the formula and incidentally wins Barhara for his wife.

A happy mixture of comedy and melodrama is offered in the lively plot of this picture. Although the story isn't the sort of thing to be taken seriously, it puts many a decisive thrill across in good style, and whenever the melodramatic atmosphere becomes a bit too thick, a timely flash of humor lightens matters, with the pleasing result that one accepts the film as bully good entertainment, without worrying over its improbabilities. The fact that the action rattles along with machine gun speed is another point in favor of Sherlock Brown, which Bayard Veiller has directed very skilfully through its manifold complications of mirth and man-hunting. There is not a foot of padding in the entire five reels, the interest never slackens, and exhibitors will make no mistake in booking the attraction, which gives every indication of proving a big money-maker.

Points of Appeal. — In the beginning one is moved to laughter by the ambitions of the innocent but unsophisticated hero to become a genuine sleuth, and even when fate throws him into the midst of a real criminal conspiracy, where he vindicates his manhood, the humorous element still persists in his adventures. But the "punch" is not lacking in the numerous thrill situations, nevertheless, and everybody is satisfied when a crashing climax not only reveals the hero as a sure enough "Sherlock," but a successful lover.

Cast.—Bert Lytell's versatile talents as a comedian and exponent of dramatic realism are thoroughly exploited by his clever character work in the role of Brown, a performance which adds fresh lustre to his screen laurels. Ora Carew is a winsome and appealing heroine and Sylvia Breamer fascinating as the adventuress Hilda; De Witt Jennings plays the heavy role of J. J. Wallace admirably and consistent support is furnished by other members of the company.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The camera work throughout is of excellent quality, the lighting effects are faultless; even continuity prevails and the action breezes along at a fast clip.

Divorce Coupons

Released by Vitagraph. Story by Ethel Watts Munford. Scenario by William B. Courtney. Directed by Webster Campbell. Running Time Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Linda Catherton, Corinne Griffith; Roland Bland, Holmes E. Herbert; Ishtar Lane, Mona Lisa; Teddy Beaudine, Diana Allen; Conrad Fontaine, Cyril Ring; Buddy, Vincent Coleman.

Linda Catherton decides that a wealthy marriage is her only escape from the dull surroundings of the small town. Therefore she sets out to capture a wealthy man, Roland Bland. She cares nothing about him hut accepts his proposal of marriage. She confides her feelings to a girl friend in a letter in which Linda says she will "have divorce coupons on her bonds of matrimony." However, the unexpected happens and Linda becomes as devoted to Roland as he is to her, and he remains constant despite his reputation as "the Universal Correspondent." But then comes the crash. The girl friend's hushand is desirous of separating Roland and Linda and he sends the "divorce coupons" letter to him. The keenly disappointed hushand says he will kill the man who sent the letter. The villain is killed. Roland and Linda each suspect the other, hut it soon develops that another person committed the murder and Linda and Roland are reunited.

With an assurance, responsible hy the way for whatever interest it holds, Divorce Coupons, a new starring vehicle for Corinne Griffith, makes its way through five reels of decidedly obvious and unreal incident. The play engages the eye, thanks to some pretty locations and good looks in the cast, aided by the strange assurance, already mentioned, which shows itself in constant movement of action and scene. But while capahle of tricking the eye, this mere glitter is unahle to make further impression.

Ethel Watts Munford's story is utterly lacking in conviction. The main issue deals with a young woman who falls in love with her husband. But, for a sympathetic character, the author has placed a severe handicap on Linda. With no better excuse than a frivolous desire for "silk stockings and all that goes with them," Linda sets her cap for a man known as the "Universal Correspondent," the while boasting that after a year or so of marriage she can get a divorce. The next important step introduces an impossible episode, which for the sake of a climax to Linda's adventure, tells us that the success of the villain's scheme depends upon an estrangement of Linda and Roland. So "the letter" is mysteriously delivered to the husband, with the conventional results in the form of threats of murder, murder, and then reconciliation.

Points of Appeal. — There are some really pretty scenes in the early portions of the play. These display locations that are filled with the passive and inert charm of the Southern Georgia towns. The star is at all times pleasant to look at, and, despite its obviousness, the action has pace. Corinne Griffith fans, of course, will find the picture satisfying.

Cast.—The cast is adequate, which does not do justice to some members, since few in the play have anything worth while to work with. Mr. Herbert, as the leading man, never suggests the "universal correspondent" sort of person, but there are times when he appears the most resourceful player in the company. There should be a good word for Vincent Coleman, who makes an impression with his role of buddy.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The outdoor scenes are well done. The direction appears to make the best of the material afforded by the scenario.

Press Comments

Tribune.—Is a good picture and we do not know why. It is some time since we have seen so much enthusiasm over a feature picture. Herald.—The most pleasant thing to contemplate in this picture aside from its surprise finish is the way in which something is left to the imagination without being rubbed in. World.—Is not a dull photoplay, yet it is obvious and almost eventless. It succeeds in picturing the theory that there's a little good in the worst of men. Times.—There is one genuine moment in While Satan Sleeps, one realistic flash. The picture as a whole is shamelessly sentimental, not in the matter of lovemaking, though there is a good deal of that, but in its mushy unreality. There is that one stirring moment, however. American.—There are several spirited scenes and one of the best bouts recently shown in a screen play. Telegram.—At the Rivoli Theatre, While Satan Sleeps has made a big hit. Joseph Henabery directed the picture, and there is no question that a great deal of the success of the film is due to his dramatic instinct in handling the script. Globe.—Those assembled for the first showing at the Rivoli Sunday were entertained to such an extent that they broke into applause at the end of the picture with a vigor exceedingly unusual at any season and perhaps without parallel during the heated term. Sun.—It's a ripping good picture. Mail.—If you like this sort of picture you should like While Satan Sleeps.

Press Comments

American.—The play contains all the elements of comedy and drama without any distressing complications. There is an incipient love interest and various hectic East Side views that contribute local color. Herald.—The story starts interestingly enough, with a baby who is put in hock for $5 by a tramp who took her from a needy mother and raised among all the natural advantages of a pawnshop. Telegram.—It is well worth any one's time and money. Journal.—Viola Dana, diminutive, dainty and vivacious is capital as Ruth. The typical scenes of New York's East Side were intensely interesting and amusing. Sun.—Surely something more interesting might have been made out of the theme. It starts absorbingly enough, but half way through its course it becomes just another movie.

Press Comments

American.—Finely staged and admirably acted. Admirers of Oscar Wilde's dramatic art should find it especially interesting. The surrounding program bristles with entertaining numbers. World.—To us the English-acted screen version of Wilde's A Woman of No Importance is, in a way, a success. Herald.—Little of the brilliance of Wilde's dialogue has been preserved in the subtitles, except at a garden scene, while the other captions seem to have come from a close study of Bulwer-Lytton's novels. The picture has one outstanding merit—it brings forward about the loveliest mother seen since mothers began to draw pay on the screen. Telegram.—The film version of the play is every bit as absorbing as the original script. On the whole, the picture is of unusual importance, not only because of the entertainment value in it, but inasmuch as it is a forward step in bringing real classics to the screen. Globe.—There is very little of Oscar Wilde in the photoplay bearing the name of one of his comedies. Sun.—She (Fay Compton) is the most satisfying thing to look upon in a photoplay that at times is a tame Wilde. Journal.—Comes like a tonic to dispel one's pessimism and strengthen one's faith. The entire production is more than out of the ordinary; it is far above the ordinary run of film.

Press Comments

American.—There's as much tragedy in it as comedy—the tragedy of the homely, uneducated, awkward girl compelled to live in a community that offers no way out. It is just a little human interest story very vividly told. Times.—Tellingly life-like—in the beginning. But only in the beginning. Becomes so absurdly far-fetched in its latter part that no treatment, verbal or pictorial can save it. World.—Will do no one any harm. Excepting, perhaps, to cause discomfort to the durges who demand logic and a certain amount of reason for things that transpire in film stories. Herald.—It is the familiar story, simple almost to the point of slenderness, that clothes make the woman, when properly assembled. Tribune.—In thinking it over a revelation has come to us and we wonder how we could ever have doubted Rupert Hughes. He intended The Wall Flower as a travesty on the romantic, Cinderella, mushy type of photodrama, and as such it is wonderfully done. Telegram.—Written in Hughes' most entertaining manner. Journal.—A picture that almost everyone should enjoy. Sun.—Proves once more how the most original and versatile authors, as time goes on, are forced back upon the tried and true.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

The School and the Theatre

By L. W. BOYNTON

THE address made by Mr. Hays before the National Education Association at Boston marks a forward step in the history of the industry.

It signifies that a large group of producers, for the first time, stand ready to provide educational films of an authoritative nature for the schools and colleges of the land. This is an undertaking of great magnitude, no less in scope if not greater than the theatrical field itself.

At the very outset of this program, Mr. Hays makes it very clear that the exhibitor's rights are to be fully protected. The school and the church and the welfare organization are not to be set up as his competitors. The non-theatrical must not clash with the theatrical. The Hays organization, recognizing that the time has come for the motion picture to take its proper place in the educational scheme, grasps the opportunity. But a reading of Mr. Hays' speech will convince anybody that the proposal is to make pictures for class-room use only, and not to attempt for a moment to drive the exhibitor out of business by creating a huge competition against him.

With this declaration firmly established—and it is only another proof of Mr. Hays' remarkable hold on the problems of the industry—let us turn to other vital considerations of the meaning of the Boston speech.

In the first place, it was delivered before the great national organization of the teachers of America, whose influence in their own communities is wielded at the very source of thought and opinion. In dealing with the mind of child and youth, theirs is the power more than any other except perhaps the family and the motion picture itself, which determines thought and action in later life. Such an influence,

The New Day

"The picture frontier has become a business thoroughfare, and the picture pioneer a sober business man. Of its own weight the industry has settled down commercially into a sanity and conservatism like that of the banking world. It has recognized its responsibility and its duty to the public and it will fulfill that responsibility and duty."

—Will H. Hays, in address before National Education Association, Boston, July 6.

brought into daily contact with the motion picture through school-room use, cannot fail to create a sympathetic attitude toward the screen and the makers of pictures—in short, toward the industry itself.

It is little less than a stroke of genius to seek the alliance of the teacher with the industry; to bring him into line in the solution of the problem of the industry's relation to the public; and to convince him that he should co-operate because the industry deserves the fullest co-operation.

The enthusiastic greeting which Mr. Hays received at Boston from five thousand teachers assembled from all parts of the country shows that the appeal for co-operation was well founded and that it won just as did his appeals to the fifty civic organizations and the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

It is a landmark in the mobilization of public opinion in the industry's behalf; and it gains added significance in the fact that the address was made in the State which will be the first in the Union to vote on the question of political censorship.

There is another consideration in which the exhibitor directly and the whole industry only less directly is vitally interested. The use of the motion picture in the school, on the basis outlined above, cannot fail to create a vast amount of good-will toward the picture in the theatre. It is a fact recognized by all branches of the industry that the maximum of motion picture patrons has never been reached. A great body of people in this country either do not go to the picture theatre or they go at long and irregular intervals.

Teaching the child by way of the motion picture will mean, in our belief, creating a vast army of new patrons for the theatre because it will establish the picture not only in the child's mind but advance it greatly in the favor of the adult community.

Get public opinion on your side and your battle is won. And there is no reason why it should not be on the side of the industry. Further than that, it is being won over, by one stroke after another, through the leadership of Mr. Hays, on a basis of sincerity and right that are as appealing to the public as his contagious enthusiasm.

Special to Exhibitors Trade Review.

BOSTON, JULY 6.

WILL H. HAYS, President of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., in an address to-night before five thousand members of the National Education Association, tendered the resources of the producers he represents to the educators for the making of motion pictures for teaching purposes in the schools of the Nation.

"On behalf of our organization," said Mr. Hays, "I offer to your association all of our facilities to aid in your experimentation. There is already a great demand for pedagogic pictures. I propose that we jointly study that demand and that we jointly find ways and means of supplying it. Let a committee be appointed of this association made up of the very best talent within your ranks; let them meet with the great producers of the country and find ways to use our facilities."

To Protect Exhibitor Rights

In making this revolutionary offer, which marks an epoch in education as well as in the history of the industry, Mr. Hays declared with great emphasis that the rights of the exhibitor must be protected in the production, distribution and exhibition of educational films.

"The fact is the exhibitors of the country approve and favor educational films for classroom work," said Mr. Hays. "They have not looked with favor on the semi-educational films that would be shown in church or school without any charge therefor and have objected to the non-theatrical use of the theatrical or amusement film.

"This is natural. The theatre owner pays national and state tax on his theatre, a license fee, an extra insurance premium and other special levies in order to run his business and provide for the essential amusement; and it was obviously unfair to him to create a competition to draw the same audience with or without charge into places which have no such burdens.

"In developing fully the value of educational pictures, which are semi-instructional and semi-entertaining, the fundamental rights of the exhibitor and his value and importance in the situation must always be considered. Our whole program of bettering conditions in the industry cannot possibly proceed without the co-operation of the exhibitor. The exhibitor owns the screen, it is his theatre, and the efforts of the producer and distributor succeed only as the exhibitor co-operates. It is his effort as much as the producers. And while we want to develop as fully as possible the educational film, we must and do recognize, and you must recognize, and the public must understand that the rights of the exhibitor must be protected."

Hays Gets Ovation

Mr. Hays held his great audience spellbound. They went to the meeting at the Boston Opera House more or less of the opinion that the motion picture was a good thing in education, and they left firmly convinced that not only was the picture industry a vitally important factor in the future of education and a power to be reckoned with, but also that censorship would in the words of Mr. Hays "never in the world do what was expected of it."

Mr. Hays was the outstanding attraction in a remarkable list of speakers that included Professor Henry W. Holmes, of the Graduate School of Education, Harvard University; Dean James E. Russell, Teachers College, Columbia University; and President Mary McKimmon, Massachusetts Teachers Federation. The Boston correspondent of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW questioned more than 75 delegates to their convention as to their object in coming and what would be to them the chief interest of the evening. With but three exceptions, the response was invariably "Hays." He was the center of interest before the meeting started, and the lion when the meeting adjourned.

There was no need of questioning at the close of the session. The facts he had told the big audience were on every one's lips. Applause was showered on him at intervals during his speech. They paid much great tribute to Mr. Hays by a rapt attention seldom granted a speaker before a meeting of similar nature.

Mr. Hays carried them with him throughout his talk. His delivery was perfect, his sallies witty, and jibes directed against Massachusetts, the Pilgrim Fathers and Plymouth Rock so cleverly made that despite audible gasps the delegates joined in the resultant laughter. He got under their skins and kept them at such a point of tension that nothing escaped them.

It seemed the general opinion that the peak of his speech was reached when he detailed the plans and aspirations of his association toward better pictures, declaring that to be their ultimate end, and that all could help by refusing to patronize bad pictures. It seemed the climax had been reached when he declared that the demand for censorship in those localities where agitation was in progress would cease as soon as the cause was removed, and that anyway censorship would never do what was expected of it.

When, however, he turned to the chairman, President William B. Owen of the Education Association, and officially tendered the full co-operation and assistance of his association to the furtherance of experimentation and use of the motion picture in education, declaring that the resources of the industry were at the service of education, and asking that a board be appointed to confer with the producers, the climax came. The announcement was greeted with a silence, respectful and profound, that was far more impressive than applause could have been.

An Historic Event

There has been no doubt throughout the sessions of the National Education Association that all delegates realized the day of the motion picture in education was at hand. To-night was but the ratification of the compact, as it were.

Speakers at many sessions and affiliated bodies have spoken of the motion picture in the school. One declared that within the short space of ten years every school in the land, private or public, from primary to college, would have a complete projection outfit and a store of films covering all subjects treated in the curriculum.

The United States Commissioner of Education, John James Tigert, declared that the utmost need existed in the present day for visual instruction in the schools. He urged a better and closer co-operation and co-ordination between the producers and the schools. He stated that the change to the motion picture was coming with wonderful swiftness.

"They all like the 'movies,'" he declared, "but they do not know how to use them to anywhere near the total of their potential value. There are many people who think that the common use of the motion picture in the school would be to turn them into circuses. Their forefathers without doubt said the same thing of blackboards when they were first installed in the classrooms. The motion picture in education is a necessity and, as such, a certainty."

After reviewing the amazing growth of the industry over the space of twenty years and the present movement for higher standards, Mr. Hays said:

Against Censorship

"Now this is not a one-sided matter. We must consider these motion picture problems with that patience and tolerance which results from a recollection of the habits and customs whenever a new thing comes. Every new industry, every new science or art makes mistakes, and is criticised. All of them have had to remedy their faults of early days. The telegraph and telephone were criticised. It was regarded as a sinful act to disseminate the printed word in any form among the humbler people, who were supposed to remain in the niche of life 'in which God placed them.' The bicycle and then the automobile were pronounced 'agencies of the devil.' Riding on railroads was so evil that the use of schoolhouses for even a discussion of the question was prohibited, with proclamations that 'such things as railroads are impossibilities and rank infidelity. If God had designed that His intelligent creatures should travel at the frightful speed of fifteen miles per hour by steam, He would clearly have foretold it through His holy prophets.' (From letter signed by School Board of Lancaster, Ohio, to F. W. Force, of Gilman, in 1826.) Medical men declared bathtubs a menace to health. In 1843, Philadelphia tried to prohibit bathing between November 1st and March 15th, by ordinance, and in 1845 Boston itself made bathing unlawful except when prescribed by a physician; and Virginia taxed bathtubs $30 a year.

"One way for you to help us make good pictures is very easy, and that is by refusing to patronize bad pictures. If one were to start a vegetarian hotel and day by day a large number of guests were to storm into the dining room demanding roast beef cooked rare, this hotel keeper, though the most enthusiastic of vegetarians, would experience substantial difficulty in putting over a bill of fare consisting entirely of asparagus.

"The Motion Picture business objects to political censorship for one great reason—because the Motion Picture business is an American business. Political censorship made Plymouth Rock; political censorship faced the Minute Men at Concord Bridge; political censorship caused the Boston Tea Party. But there is one place and one place only where the evils can be eliminated and the good and great advantages of motion pictures retained, and that is at the point where and when the pictures are made. And it can be done then and there, make no mistake about that. There is no zone of twilight in the matter. Right is right and wrong is wrong and men know right from wrong. The corrections can be made, real evil can and must be kept out, the highest standards of art, taste and morals can be achieved, and it is primarily the duty of the producers to do it.

"In addition to the general educational value of entertainment pictures, we are together concerned, of course, with two additional phases. First the pedagogic picture and then the picture which is semi-educational and semi-entertainment. It must be that the motion picture is a distant contribution to visual instruction. The quick way to the brain is through the eye. Scientific tests which have been made and which are being made and with which you are familiar seem to prove the value of the motion picture in the class room.

"In my opinion there will be series of motion pictures adopted soon by boards of education just as now series of text books are adopted. They must be, of course, scientifically, psychologically and pedagogically sound.

"The producers are interested in this work. They realize its importance and the industry is eager to help. Up to the present time it has not been easy for producers to meet the requirements of the educational field. There are several reasons for this. In the first place, until this time the demand for strictly instructional class room films has been small. Films are costly and unless a single film can be used over and over it cannot be made without great loss. If educational films are to be produced accurately and in sufficient numbers, better methods of distribution must be worked out.

"Again, there has been difficulty in the past because those who produced the films were not trained educators and therefore were not able to produce pedagogically sound films, while at the same time the educators whose advice has been available have too often proved unable to adapt themselves to the peculiar technical demands of screen production. Before great progress can be made there must be some method worked out to bring together the men and women who are versed in the psychology of education with the men and women who are skilled in the methods and mechanics of picture production.

Referring to the protection of exhibitor rights, Mr. Hays declared: "The Exhibitors have very definitely made plain their position on this matter in the resolution passed at the National Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Washington, in which they said that they have no objection to strictly educational and informative films in schools or religious films in churches, but do resent the unfair practice of using theatrical films of solely amusement character in non-theatrical institutions in a way which injures the theatre owner in his effort to properly provide entertainment for the public.

"Perhaps the best evidence that motion pictures have entered the field of education is the fact that several large universities are conducting scientific research into motion picture problems. The best material ever produced in the study of the psychology of reading has come through the motion pictures of the eye, which have been taken by the Department of Education of the University of Chicago. Again, our knowledge of the processes by which children learn to write has been greatly increased through motion pictures of hand movements taken by the same university. Dr. Shepherd of the University of Oklahoma and Wisconsin, Dr. Weber of Columbia University and the University of Kansas, and Dr. McCloskey of Chicago University have all made the rigid scientific inquiries into the effectiveness of motion pictures as a means of class-room instruction to which I have already referred.

"Further evidence that we are on the threshold of great things in the matter of educational films is proved by the fact that thirty-four cities, including New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, Los Angeles and San Francisco, are now using pedagogical films in their class rooms and assembly halls. New York spent approximately $10,000 for this purpose last year, while Los Angeles spent about $25,000. There will be a rapid growth in school appropriations for this purpose, and there are probably about 10,000 projecting machines installed in schools and churches. If methods can be found for easy payments on machines and effective methods for distribution of films, this field will grow with great rapidity.

"The problem which faces all of us is to provide some plan of co-operation which will provide film material for instructional use in schools and colleges, and suitable films for churches and welfare organizations—some plan which will secure the active co-operation of theatre owners and public leaders, and which will safeguard against harmful competition between non-theatrical and theatrical groups. These matters, which are merely incident to the youth and tremendous expansion of the business, can be worked out satisfactorily without question.

Appeals for Co-operation

"It would be my hope that still further immediate progress might be made. The motion picture industry will co-operate with the National Educational Association fully to that end. On behalf of our organization I offer to your association all of our facilities to aid in your experimentation. There is already a great demand for pedagogic pictures. I propose that we jointly study that demand, and that we jointly find ways and means of supplying it. Let a committee be appointed of this association made up of the very best talent within your ranks; let them meet with the great producers of the country and find ways to use our facilities. We ask you to aid us and to let us aid you in the study of the whole problem of the use of the motion picture as a direct pedagogic instrument. Let us together find the means of making pedagogic pictures which are scientifically, psychologically and pedagogically sound. Not only can we take care of the demand which now obtains, but the great demand which is imminent and which will certainly come, must be met. and met by the producers with a supply that measures up to the ideas of the educators of the country.

"It can never be said again, and I think it has been suggested, that the producers do not want to furnish educational pictures. The producers want to serve America. They know that there is no more important and lasting service which they can perform than to aid you in the actual educating of the youth of the country by this new means and make yet more efficient if possible the work which you, the teachers, are doing in the fulfilment of your noblest and most useful of all professions.

"Again, your group as individuals can be of inestimable value in our whole problem. Please help in your communities to get the demand for good pictures reflected in the box office receipts. Join in our efforts with sympathy and appreciation of our problems and with the conviction based on proof which you can acquire that never were men more serious in any effort in this world."

"If Cohen Insists Upon War, War It Will Be," Declares O'Reilly, Answering Latest Attack

A STATEMENT issued by Sydney Cohen to the trade press on July 6, in the name of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, declaring that he would organize district units in the State of New York, brought a scorching reply on July 7 from Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of New York.

Mr. O'Reilly summed up the situation by saying: "If Cohen insists upon war, war it will be."

The Cohen statement was headed: "Statement issued by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America Relative to New York situation." It follows:

Cohen's Statement

"On account of certain officials and others connected with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York, separating themselves from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as a result of some differences of opinion which have existed here for the past few months, theatre owners in different sections of New York State have found it advisable to organize themselves into district units affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"These exhibitors are loyal to the national body and the cause of the organization generally, and are unwilling to be separated in any way. They have, therefore, adopted this method as the most feasible and practical way of continuing their affiliation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"This situation exists in the Buffalo district, in the Rochester territory and in other portions of the State. Arrangements are now under way at the solicitation of Theatre Owners in New York State and vicinity to form a district body in this territory which will be affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. This we believe to be a very practical way to handle the situation here, and affords all theatre owners who desire to be affiliated with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to continue to enjoy the protection and the advantage this national organization gives them.

"We have had very little differences of opinion in the State at large, and in the greater number of instances all, or nearly all, of the exhibitors are members or are joining the district units, and the New York City division will also contain a very large proportion of all exhibitors in this territory. The advantage of a national organization is very manifest to every exhibitor, as in no other way can the great problems now confronting the industry be handled. The efficiency of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in this connection has been amply demonstrated on different occasions. We have built up a great nation-wide organization of theatre owners and we desire to have its advantages extended to every theatre owner in the United States. There are many problems within the industry upon which all exhibitors are agreed and in the adjustment of which all

Georgia Exhibitor Organization Making Great Progress

Willard C. Patterson of Atlanta, one of the best-known exhibitors in the country, was a visitor to New York this week and declared that the Georgia exhibitor organization was making rapid strides.

Mr. Patterson, who is chairman of the board of directors of the Georgia Amusement Protective Association, as the body is known, pointed out that the State was nearly 100 per cent organized and that all the exhibitor elements in the State were co-operating in the work of the organization.

He called special attention to the work of the Better Films Committee of Atlanta and the marked success with which it was operating. The fullest support is being given the committee by exhibitors, and the movement, which is a powerful offset to censorship agitation, is spreading through the South.

Hays Praised by Steffes in Speech to Minnesota Exhibitors

ON his return to Minneapolis from the conference held between exhibitors and producer-distributors in New York, W. A. Steffes, president of the Minnesota M. P. T. O., made a statement at a meeting of the Minnesota exhibitors praising Will H. Hays in very high terms.

The statement, which was printed in "Amusements," read as follows:

"Will H. Hays has done more for the motion picture industry in the last three months than any other man has done for it since its inception.

"The advent of Will H. Hays into the industry is a direct benefit to exhibitors, for they now have someone to deal with direct, realizing that they can secure sympathetic co-operation and justice.

"Frankly, I was not 'sold' on Mr. Hays prior to the New York conferences, but I now am 'sold' on him 100 per cent, and at all times stand ready to extend him any possible co-operation.

"Will Hays is sincere, he is honest and energetic, and he has the interests and welfare of the industry at heart. While at the present time he is handicapped somewhat by a lack of knowledge of the industry and its problems, he is learning rapidly, and is at all times striving to bring order out of chaos, unity out of estrangement.

"Mr. Hays will be a stabilizer in the motion picture industry. He is the industry's shock-absorber, and as such should receive whole-hearted co-operation from every branch of the industry."

Minnesota's questionnaire has been answered satisfactorily, Steffes said, and has been answered in deeds.

will co-operate without regard to any other differences of opinion. These conditions tend to modify resentments and bring theatre owners together."

Mr. O'Reilly's statement follows:

"Cohen Creating Discord"

"Sydney S. Cohen, not satisfied with driving the State of New York out of the National organization, is now attempting, by statements in the trade press and letters to exhibitors throughout the State, in the name of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to create discord in the hope of finally disrupting the State Organization.

"Mr. Cohen's propaganda flies the thickest while the State leaders have, for the past three weeks, been in constant consultation with Mr. Hays and representatives of the Producers and Distributors organization in trying to bring about better business relations and a fair and uniform contract for the protection of their members.

"The State Board of Directors have withdrawn the organization from the National Organization, and have declared that it was not the intention of the State of New York to interfere with any other State organization, or to create any new national organization.

"How long will the other officials of the national organization and other State leaders tolerate Mr. Cohen's actions and propaganda?

"Cohen knows perfectly well that the great majority of the exhibitors in the State are absolutely loyal to their State organization and are desirous of maintaining the harmony that exists in their ranks.

"Mr. Cohen's statement on the New York situation is as truthful as the statement that he has 12,000 theatre owners in his organization.

"If the business arrangements which he is trying to consummate for the distribution of industrial film are being held up by the fact that he can't deliver the State of New York, there may be some reason for this kind of statement, otherwise we must look upon it as a smoke screen to deceive the rest of the country.

Rule or Ruin

"Having found out that he cannot rule the State organization, his one object seems to be to ruin it. He masquerades as a great constructive leader pleading for harmony, but, as a matter of cold fact, his attitude towards his own State proves that he would rather destroy the organization of the State of New York, and leave the exhibitors of the State helpless without the protection of a State organization than to see a thriving State organization in his own State that he could not control.

"New York State is not the only territory that has thrown off Cohen's control.

"To disrupt the States where his leadership has been repudiated is but evidence of his incapacity for his present position. Cohen knows perfectly well that no national organization can become effective without perfect functioning of the State units. When you destroy a State unit you are insidiously destroying all hopes for a great national organization.

"If Cohen insists upon war, war it will be."

Pathe Will Appeal Decision That News Weekly Is Subject to a State Censor

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York, Third Department, has decided against Pathe Exchange, Inc., in the matter of that company against the Motion Picture Commission of New York.

The case was the recent one submitted to the Appellate Division by the Pathe Company and the legal department of the State in order to secure a decision as to whether the commission under the law was authorized to censor news reels. The Pathe Company maintains the censors have no such right. The court passed upon a statement of fact agreed to by both parties.

Lewis Innerarity, secretary of Pathe Exchange, Inc., who has charge of the company's legal matters, said on Thursday that in the absence of a copy of the court's opinion he did not care to comment on the situation. He did add, however, that if the action of the court is as indicated in the newspaper dispatches the Pathe Company will take an appeal.

General Federation of Women's Clubs Pledges Co-operation to Industry in Move for Higher Standards

CO-OPERATION with the industry in the effort now being made to raise the artistic and moral standards of motion pictures was pledged by the General Federation of Women's Clubs at its national convention held at Chautauqua, N. Y., last week.

The pledge of co-operation came as a direct result of the address made by Will H. Hays to the General Federation and is regarded as one of the biggest achievements recorded by Mr. Hays since he entered the industry.

It is significant that the resolution of co-operation, which has passed June 30 at the Chautauqua meeting, does not even mention censorship as a desirable form of regulation. Mr. Hays, in his speech, condemned political censorship and the resolution, because of its marked tone of friendliness toward the industry, may fairly be considered as a complete indorsement of Mr. Hays' remarks.

The resolution, which was presented by Mrs. Woodallen Chapman, Chairman of the Federation's Division of Motion Pictures, and approved by Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker, Chairman of the Division of American Citizenship, reads as follows:

"WHEREAS, One of the greatest powers in the world today for molding the thought-life of the Nation and thus determining its future history is the Motion Picture; and,

"WHEREAS, No single group of individuals can hope to encompass the wisdom essential to the adequate and efficient development and use of this great power in the service of the nation; and,

"WHEREAS, The motion picture industry has formally requested the co-operation of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; and,

"WHEREAS, This is the logical outcome of the movement for raising the standard of motion pictures actively carried on by the General Federation of Women's Clubs during the past eight years;

"THEREFORE, Be it resolved, that the General Federation of Women's Clubs approves the effort now being made by the motion picture industry to raise the moral and artistic standard and develop the educational value of motion pictures and hereby affirms its desire to co-operate in every way consistent with its principles and policies in this work and in using motion pictures more effectively for upbuilding the nation's life; and Be It

"RESOLVED, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs on behalf of the millions of American people who daily contribute to the support of motion pictures, approves the effort of the motion picture industry to stabilize its economic conditions to the end that there may be the certain continuity of the production and exhibition of the highest types of motion pictures; and, be it further

"RESOLVED, That the General Federation of Women's Clubs offers the co-operation of the Federation to the schools and all other recognized educational institutions in giving to the children of the nation visual instruction by means of motion pictures, to the end that the production of truly educational motion pictures, other than those made for advertising purposes, may be encouraged in order to meet the demands of any school."

Supply Dealers Meet Next Week

Gathering in Indianapolis to Usher in New Era for Equipment Men—National Organization to Be Formed for Ironing Out Business Difficulties

By HOWARD McLELLAN

AFTER much hard pioneer work the temporary committee in charge of organizing the Theatre Supply & Equipment Dealers' Association announces that interest in the new association has been aroused all over the country, foreshadowing representative attendance at the first meeting to be held at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, Ind., July 13, 14 and 15.

Landis to Represent Hays

Representatives of supply houses in every big film center will attend. Will H. Hays, head of the producers' association will not attend owing to previous important engagements, but his personal representative, Congressman Fred Landis, of Indiana, will attend the meeting.

Much is to be done at this first meeting. A complete organization will be effected, constitution and by-laws adopted, officers elected and permanent headquarters selected.

Large manufacturers of equipment will send representatives. The cooperation of manufacturers has been invited in the hope that certain difficulties will be ironed out to the satisfaction of the manufacturer and distributor.

Considerable missionary work among the supply houses scattered throughout the country has already been done; in fact, in several of the large centers local organizations of supply dealers have been effected which may affiliate with the national organization. These local organizations have been working successfully although in their infancy, and their success is looked upon as a forerunner of success for the national body.

The supply houses have been without an organization since motion pictures began. Various attempts have been made to organize them but unfortunately nothing ever came of them. When the old National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was created some attention was paid to the supply dealer's problems and a dealer's division was organized. But it never seemed to grasp the real problems, hence small difficulties have grown into large problems which have made the supply business chaotic and which have kept manufacturer and distributor at loggerheads for years.

To Stabilize Supply Business

The present movement, will, it is planned, stabilize the supply business making it possible for them to do business on a standard basis, both with exhibitor and manufacturer. Hardly any opposition to the organization has developed and those manufacturers who are undecided as to how the association will affect their relations to the dealers are only half way uncertain because, as several of their number state, "they first want to see whether the new association will be too radical to deal with efficiently."

The organizers of the association are well-known supply men doing a large volume of business who assert that the organization will be modeled along modern harmonious lines like similar organizations in the automotive and electrical industries.

The purposes of the association as set forth in the call to Indianapolis are:

"After the organization is effected, the following subjects which directly affect our business and are of paramount interest to us at this time, should be discussed:

"1. Credit risks.

"2. Establish if possible a scale of allowances on used equipment.

"3. The question of selling on cash or time basis and whether the consumer should pay the carrying charge on long term paper financing the same as automobile accounts are handled?

"4. After this organization is effected, without a doubt arrangements can be made with a discounting company for handling long term paper which would stimulate our business in general.

"5. The film exchanges have had their organizations and district board of trades and they have worked very effectively.

"6. Endeavor to obtain support of Will H. Hays, who has recently been appointed to better the conditions of the motion picture industry in general. We believe that we supply and equipment men are as much entitled to this support as other branches of the industry.

"7. It may be advisable to include in our membership, dealers and distributors of all motion picture apparatus and supplies, including those who are specializing in the non-theatrical field.

"8. To prevail upon the manufacturers to discontinue the practice of selling direct.

"9. To endeavor to obtain closer co-operation from manufacturers of all equipment and accessories.

"10. Of quoting educational discounts and the elimination of other practices that have worked a hardship on us in the past.

"11. The matter of supporting manufacturers who will give us their undivided support.

"12. One thousand and one other advantages you can think of and have the privilege of expressing yourself at this meeting."

For the Owner or Manager Who Operates His Own Projector

Experts say that 30 per cent of the small theatres cannot employ professional projectionists and that the operation of the machines is in the hands of the owner or manager.

For the owner or manager in that situation a series of articles on the fundamentals of projection are now appearing in the

They are written by an expert projectionist and text-book author, and are designed for the professional projectionists as well as the operator-manager.

Fighting for Screen Freedom in Missouri

Exhibitors Confident Constitutional Convention Will Adopt Measure Placing Motion Picture on Same Basis As Press— Provision Introduced by A. A. Speer, Prominent Banker

SHOULD the Constitutional Convention, now in session at Jefferson City, Mo., adopt a proposal introduced by Delegate A. A. Speer, Missouri would be the only state in the union providing for the screen in the constitution and placing it on the same plane as the press.

Mr. Speer, president of the First National Bank of Jefferson City, and a delegate to the convention, is the father of the proposal to liberate the motion picture industry from the shackles of censorship. Such men as Charles D. Morris, editor and publisher of the St. Joseph "Gazette", are delegates to the convention who have announced themselves as opposed to censorship. There will be opposition, no doubt, but with such a powerful array of leading citizens, who are broad-minded enough to see into the future, it is difficult to predict a defeat for the anti-censorship proposal.

The introduction of the proposal to place the screen on the same basis as the press was no impromptu move on the part of Mr. Speer, one of the most prominent citizens in the state. It was the culmination of much thought.

Tribute to Hays

"I happen to know Will H. Hays personally and have a high regard for his character and business ability," said Mr. Speer. "I feel certain that when he dominates a business there will be little use for censorship of the screen or restriction by law. And it is upon this principle that I stand. I believe that the conduct of the screen or the press, or any other means of publicity, is best controlled by public opinion. I do not believe that motion pictures can be successful unless they cater to the opinion of the best classes of people. Any other method would be suicidal. I take it that the motion picture is in the business for profit. No business can long succeed without the respect of the better class of people. A business that does not respect sound moral standards cannot long be supported by public patronage. That business succeeds best which appeals to the best people.

"The educational standards of this country constantly are being elevated and people are capable of judging for themselves what is proper to be seen. The motion picture news reels have become great agencies for publicity. They present upon the screen the important events in all parts of the world, and present to the public at low cost, actual scenes of news matters. They are a source of information and education, as well as amusement.

"I should like to see the utmost freedom given to this growing institution of education and hope that it may continue to be controlled by men of the highest class, who have for their motive a commendable service of such a character that it will meet the approval of intelligent and refined people. I believe the most successful way in which to secure such an end would be by placing them upon their own responsibility."

Exhibitors Confident

Although no exact date for the consideration of the proposal has been set, it is believed that it will be considered by the convention now assembled within the next week or so.

Kansas City exhibitors feel confident of the adoption of the proposal. In discussing the proposal, Frank L. Newman, owner of the Newman, Royal and Twelfth Street, theatres in Kansas City, said:

"There is no more reason why freedom should be allowed the press than the screen. I went to an editor of a large newspaper the other day and asked him why his paper continued to play up a certain scandal.

" 'Because the public is interested in it and it is news,' he said.

"There you are! The public might be interested in the dramatic part of some screen production, which had been clipped out by the censor, but what good would it do? The exhibitor is powerless to do as the newspaper editor. Not that I mean that exhibitors would show pictures unfit for children to see, if allowed to do so, but they could steer their own ship. If the public didn't like the type of pictures shown by an exhibitor, his business soon would fall off and he would be forced to show what the public wanted most."

ANNOUNCEMENT was made July 1 at Boston by Alfred S. Black that he and his brother, John A., had sold their remaining one-half interest in the Black New England circuit of theatres to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, effective July 3, and that in the severance of their partnership the best of feeling continues.

Mr. Black stated that he had always hoped before he retired from the motion picture business to see 100 per cent co-operation between the various branches of the industry which is so necessary for its success.

"Great improvement has already been shown in cutting 'questionable corners,' and it is only a question of time before such co-operation will be a fact," said he. "I believe that within a reasonable time not only the Exchange manager but the important heads and managers of the exhibiting end of the business will be placed upon a contingent basis as to profits that will, in turn, bring about closer harmony and interest in local communities.

"The exhibitor in the small cities and towns need have no further fear of producer competition provided he is reasonably fair in his own dealings with that branch of the business. Economically, the small exhibitor has many advantages, and in the future the fear that he has entertained will give place to a keen desire for co-operation with the larger interests, especially in the exhibiting field."

When asked as to his future plans, Mr. Black stated that after taking a rest he would remain with the Black New England Theatres temporarily in an advisory capacity. He expects to devote considerable time to his cement, canning and other varied outside interests and, he said, it was also quite likely that he will be interested from time to time in the development of new theatre projects.

Phila. Film Board of Trade Sued

Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger Attacks It As Conspiracy in Restraint of Trade in Equity Suit

FRED G. NIXON-NIRDLINGER, owner of about fifteen picture theatres in Philadelphia, has filed a suit in equity in the Court of Common Pleas in the Quaker City, charging that the Philadelphia Film Board of Trade is a conspiracy in restraint of trade. Thomas M. Love, an associate of Mr. Nirdlinger's, joins him as a plaintiff in the suit.

The following are named as defendants: American Releasing Corporation, Associated First National, De Luxe Film Co., Electric Theatre Supply Co., Famous Players-Lasky, Goldwyn, Hodkinson, Interstate Film Co., Masterpiece Film Attractions, Metro, Pathe, Robertson-Cole, Royal Pictures, Select, Twentieth Century Film Co., Vitagraph, Wid Gunning, Inc., and Associated Exhibitors. The following individuals are named as defendants: Felix Mendelssohn, Gene Marcus, Benjamin Amsterdam, F. B. Willis, Edgar Moss, William Heenan, Oscar Neufeld, Charles Goodman, William E. Smith, Frank W. Gebhart, Jules Levy, Samuel Rosen, Robert Lynch, Charles Henshel, John Flynn, David Segal, Max Milder, John Bethell and C. J. Powell.

The conspiracy charges center about the Ambassador Theatre, Philadelphia, which Messrs. Nirdlinger and Love recently took over. Certain members of the Film Board of Trade informed Mr. Nirdlinger that all bookings made by the former management would have to be carried out under the board's ruling that whenever any theatre in its territory changed hands it would be considered obligatory on the part of the new owners to assume all contracts for pictures made by the previous management.

This ruling was contained in a circular letter to all exhibitors from the Board of Trade which mentions the Hoy Reporting Service as the board's official credit agency. The plaintiffs charge that the letter was sent out for the purpose of effecting "such combinations and conspiracies."

The alleged combinations and conspiracies referred to are set out in the preceding paragraph of the bill as follows:

"That for the purpose of enforcing such regulations (compelling the new management to assume the obligations of the old) the plaintiff is informed, believes and expects to be able to prove upon the trial of the cause and therefore avers that the said members of the said Film Board of Trade agreed among themselves that no assignee or successor of any manager, lessee or owner of such moving picture houses, who declines to assume the obligations heretofore contracted by his predecessor or assignor, should be supplied with moving pictures, or furnished with attractions, and so far as the said members by and through their servants, agents and employees, could control the same, should not be permitted to exhibit moving pictures made, furnished, rented or supplied by any other person, firm, corporation or association not members of such Film Board of Trade of Philadelphia."

When Mr. Nirdlinger refused to assume the bookings and playdates made by the old management of the Ambassador, he charges that film service at half his other theatres was interfered with. Specific charges and instances of alleged restraint are set out in the bill of equity.

Summing up, the plaintiffs charge that they have been, and are still being, "hampered, interfered with, annoyed, persecuted and disturbed" in the operation of the Ambassador. The charge is also made that the Film Board of Trade is seeking "to prevent third parties from contracting with the present management of the said theatre from entering into new contracts in connection therewith or at prices and terms as advantageous as he could otherwise obtain."

The court is asked to issue a temporary and afterwards a permanent injunction to prevent the defendants "from refusing to deal with, lease to, or to sell to" the plaintiffs "moving picture reels, pictures and exhibitions at the same prices and under the same terms and conditions as the same are leased, rented or sold to other persons, firms or corporations engaged in like business for use at the said Ambassador Theatre."

An injunction is also sought to restrain the defendants from "continuing their combination, collusion and agreement to discipline the complainants or to discriminate in the delivery, leasing and renting pictures to the complainants."

A decree is also sought "determining the fact that the said Film Board of Trade is an illegal, unlawful and improper combination in restraint of legitimate trade and imposing illegal, unlawful and arbitrary conditions in and about the transaction of the moving picture business in the territory covered or controlled by the said Film Board of Trade."

Hoy System Condemned in Statement from Evans

The following statement has been issued by John S. Evans, of the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware:

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware, through an appointed committee acting for the entire body of exhibitors have steadfastly refused to consider the application of the Hoy System with its rulings.

"The climax was reached when the Ambassador Theatre, Philadelphia, brought suit against the local Film Club and each one of the members separately, to restrain them from enforcing conditions and have made charges against them in restraint of trade and against the anti-trust laws, and the matter, besides being placed in the lower courts has been called to the attention of the Federal Trade Commission."

Big Drop in Incorporations

Film Concerns Formed in N. Y. State Show Decided Decrease Over Corresponding 1921 Period

A comparison of the number of companies incorporating and embarking in the motion picture business in New York State during the six months just closed, with a like period in 1921, presents some decidely startling figures. Not only have there been 90 less motion picture companies incorporated this year, but the capitalization shows a decrease amounting to $10,577,150.

What is more, not a single month so far this year equals any one of the first six months of 1921. The importance of these comparative figures is rendered even more so through the fact that the state's incorporation bureau has enjoyed a phenomenal business during the six months this year, running nearly a thousan dahead in companies incorporated, over the first six months of 1921. The motion picture business is the only one failing to measure up in the number of companies incorporating with last year's figures.

The following shows the number of companies which were incorporated in New York State and entered the motion picture business during the first six months of 1921 and 1922, the capitalization also being given:

	1921		1922
	Firms	Capitalization	Firms	Capitalization
January ...	50	$3,383,400	31	$953,500
February ...	32	2,710,250	31	562,000
March	42	3,322,000	41	1,712,000

The Other Side of the Music Tax

Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers Sets Forth History and Present Status of Matter, Which Can Only Be Changed by Amendment to Copyright Law

Editor's Note.—In EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, issue of June 24, a story appeared under the heading "Missouri Exhibitors Win Music Tax Case," as follows: "Missouri exhibitors at last have obtained a decision in the much discussed music tax problem. The case against William Parsons, Pershing Theatre, Joplin, Mo., charged with playing the Wabash Blues, has been dismissed, free from any settlement out of court and devoid of complicating circumstances. It developed that the song was played on a mechanical piano, if it was played at all. Mr. Parsons denied the song was played. After a number of conferences with Lawrence E. Goldman, counsel and secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Missouri, Mr. Parsons was prepared to fight to the last ditch when the case was dismissed. This decision, it is believed, will end the burdens of Missouri exhibitors, so far as music tax is concerned."

Subsequent investigation has developed that the story was based upon erroneous information given to our Kansas City correspondent, who acted in entire good faith in the matter. The case was dismissed, upon payment of costs by the defendant, because representations were made to counsel for the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers that Mr. Parsons' theatre was not making any money and that his financial situation would be seriously affected if the suit were pressed.

Thus, there was no decision on the merits of the case. Nothing that happened changes the fact that exhibitors in Missouri and elsewhere must pay the so-called music tax if they use copyrighted music. This is the law of the land, upheld by the United States Supreme Court, and the situation cannot be altered save by amendment of the copyright act. A bill providing such an amendment has been introduced in Congress by Representative Lampert of Wisconsin, and a hearing was supposed to be held upon it just prior to the Washington Convention. It was postponed, and whether any further steps are being taken, or are to be taken, by the M. P. T. O. A. in the matter is unknown at present.

So much confusion exists in the minds of exhibitors with regard to the music tax that EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW asked the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to present their side of the matter fully in our columns. The following article is by E. C. Mills of that organization:

"I SOMETIMES doubt the good faith of any exhibitor who represents to me, or to the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, that he does not understand why he should pay a license fee for the right to publicly perform, for profit, copyrighted musical compositions.

"For nearly eight years the Society has been explaining the matter to exhibitors; by letters direct to them, through advertisements in their trade papers, through conversations with their personal representatives, and last, but by no means least, through decisions of the courts into which exhibitors have been summoned to defend themselves against charges of infringing copyright.

"It would seem that enough had been said, written and spoken by the courts, to the decisions of which wide publicity has always been given, so that there would be no excuse for anyone concerned, not understanding the proposition.

"Then, because I know exhibitors, because I used to be one myself; because I am familiar with the many problems that engage their minds and occupy their time, I think that perhaps they do not, in some cases, actually understand what 'it is all about,' and when this thought comes to me I feel that the least we can do is fully explain the situation once again, for be it known that we want always to do the fair thing, the just and generous thing; we don't want anything that isn't coming to us, we want just the same thing as the exhibitor wants, a 'fair deal.'

Explaining the Tax

"So, once more, I set myself to the task of explaining the so-called 'music tax,' or license fee that is charged by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, of all who publicly perform, for purposes of profit, the copyrighted musical compositions of its members.

"Let me first trace the history of the law which confers the right of copyright in an author, composer, or publisher.

"When the Constitution of the United States was written there was incorporated in it a clause empowering Congress, for the encouragement of authors and inventors, for the development of the arts and sciences, to vest in these people a monopoly in the creations of their brain, for a limited period.

"The wisdom of this Constitutional provision is proven in the position which has been taken by this country with respect to science and useful mechanical inventions, which would have been impossible of development had it not been for patent rights. There would be no motion picture theatre to-day, in all probability, were it not for patent right; nor would there be telephones, electric lights, our present type of newspapers, nor any of the multitude of things to which we have grown accustomed, and which mean so much to our individual and national welfare.

"Under the authorization thus specifically expressed in the Constitution, Congress has from time to time enacted patent and copyright laws. We shall concern ourselves with the copyright acts, as to public performance, for profit, of musical compositions.

"In 1856 the Copyright Act was made to include in the rights conferred upon authors all rights to publicly perform the copyrighted work, if it was a dramatic or a dramatico-musical composition. In 1897 Congress widened the scope of the act, by an amendment, which included the vesting of exclusive public performing rights, for profit, in the author, composer, or copyright proprietor, of all musical compositions.

"These were the voluntary acts of Congress; these laws were written into our statutes to encourage authors and composers to develop and sustain the musical art of the nation, to make it possible for us, in that phase of our life, to rank with any other nation in the world.

Legal Status of the Matter

"Since 1897, or for more than a quarter of a century, authors and composers have possessed the rights which only about eight years ago they started to invoke.

"Legally, then, the status of the matter is that the proprietor of copyright in a musical composition has, under the laws as again and again upheld in the courts, the exclusive right to publicly perform, for profit, the copyrighted work. It is the intention of the law that he shall have this right exclusively, and owning it thus, he has the right to license others to use his property, under such terms and conditions as a consideration for the granting of a license, as he, the copyright proprietor, shall establish.

"Second, let us examine the moral, or ethical, phases of the question. Let us see whether, possessing the rights conferred by law, it is fair and just that the author and composer shall exercise those rights as against the unrestricted public performance, for profit, in motion picture theatres especially, of his copyrighted works.

"Now, please bear in mind that the author, composer and publisher is not looking for sympathy, nor for tribute, nor for any single thing that is not, in strict fairness and equity, coming to him. He wants just the same thing as you want, no more, and certainly no less—his just deserts.

"To become a composer of music possible of commercial use, that is, usable for public entertainment, requires not only years of patient, painstaking study, but as well a capacity to withstand undiscouraged, disappointment after disappointment. For instance, between 1909 and 1919, in a period of ten years, there were more than 900,000 songs copyrighted, or at the rate of 90,000 compositions a year. Of these, less than one composition out of a thousand became a 'hit.'

"The point I seek to make is that in the very beginning a man must have studied much, worked hard, tried again and again, before he develops the technic, the ability, to write tunes that the public cares to hear. God knows, and no one else does, how he lives during the years that precede his recognition, through at last the writing of a successful composition. But let us say he finally 'arrives,' he at last has written a tune that the public likes, that is, a 'hit.'

"Probably the gross profits from that 'hit', as paid to him from all sources, would not make his salary, averaged over the years that have led to its writing, equal that earned by a competent elevator operator.

"But now, in middle life, he has achieved his goal, and recognition is his. He writes more songs; perhaps one out of twenty on the average becomes a 'hit' or a 'near-hit,' but most of them, even with his developed technic and knowledge, are simply 'dogs,' upon which he and his publishers expend much time and money in futile efforts to make commercial successes.

"Now, while he and his fellow writers are enjoying from their compositions the entirely reasonable and modest earnings that we know to-day they average, of what value is his work, and that of his fellows, proving to the world in general, and the theatre in particular.

"Twenty million people in this country go into motion picture theatres every day. That means, in round figures, that one out of every five people that one meets during the course of a day will have gone into a motion picture theatre at some time during the day or night.

Music and the Theatre

"It is demonstrable that these people will not attend motion picture theatres in which there is no music. It is provable that audiences will not pay to view a flittering picture upon a flat screen unless in a measure their minds are diverted by some sort of a musical accompaniment.

"It is equally demonstrable that these audiences demand a certain proportion of 'new music' in their entertainment. It is of the essence of the atmosphere of the theatre that it shall offer the 'latest' in story and song—that it shall constantly provide 'something new,' novelty, features, in short—entertainment.

"So, the new music must come in a fairly steady volume, or in the end all amusement, all public entertainment, will suffer, through transfer of public interest to other activities. Music and song are the very breath of the life of all theatrical entertainment—even the straight drama finds the musical relief between acts a necessity.

"Whence, then, is the supply of this essential element to come? It must come from the men who are able to compose music. How are these men to be kept at the writing of music, by what means shall we assure the continuance of an adequate source of supply? It seems to me that the answer is clear and apparent—by encouraging, in every fair and just way, the authors and composers of music.

"Now all this may seem academic, yet it lies at the heart of our problem. In principle there is no difference between the necessity for encouraging the song writer and the scenario writer. Without scenarios, born in the brains of authors, where would motion pictures be? Without stories, plot and counterplot, without the imagination of the author, what would become of the theatre? It would cease to exist. Are these men, authors and composers, to be expected to live upon their imaginations; to devote their lives to writing the works from which the theatre as a commercial institution may thrive, and themselves subsist upon good will and air?

"Every far-seeing theatrical manager, every foresighted motion picture exhibitor, should be willing and glad to recognize the great contributions of these men to their individual enterprises, and let that recognition take practical form. To assume any other attitude toward them is shortsighted, narrow, unfair and selfish.

"Now let us consider the immediate, practical aspects of the situation as regards the requirement of composers, authors and publishers that motion picture exhibitors shall pay them a license fee in consideration of the right being granted for the public performance of their copyrighted works in movie theatres.

"I am going to do this by answering, one by one, the arguments which the exhibitor usually makes against payment of license fees.

Arguments Answered

"First, he makes the point that he owns a sheet of music, either through having purchased it or by gift, and that owning it, he has a right to do whatever he wants to with it; play it how, where and when he wishes.

"Now let us see. The distinction here is seemingly fine and difficult to make clear, but—the ownership of a sheet of music no more constitutes ownership of the music itself than ownership of a magazine constitutes ownership of the stories it contains.

"The sheet of music is not the music itself; it is the physical, printed marks or notations susceptible of being interpreted by anyone educated in music with an ability to play, into the sounds or melodies which are the musical equivalent of the printed notes and symbols. The sheet of music is simply a record, capable of being translated into sound.

"The owner of the sheet of music has an absolute and unquestioned right to play it himself, or have it played for him, whenever and wherever he wishes; or for his friends, at his home or elsewhere, publicly or privately, without let or hindrance, provided always that it is not played for purposes of profit.

"Just as soon, however, as it is played for purposes of profit, just as soon as the music itself, not the printed sheet, becomes a medium or an element for or in the making of a profit, then a use apart and distinct from that involved in ownership of the physical property, the printed notes themselves, is being made, and the rights of the copyright proprietor are infringed, unless he has granted a license authorizing such performance or rendition for profit.

"Some music is sold with the understanding that the rights of public performance, for profit, are conveyed to the purchaser and included in the purchase price which he pays for the music. Such music may, of course, be publicly performed for profit, without the payment of any additional fees, or without infringement of copyright.

"Any music not so sold, with such an understanding, may not be publicly performed, for profit, without infringement of copyright.

"I hope the foregoing has made clear the point that ownership of the sheet of music, the physical property, does not convey any right to publicly perform, for profit, the musical composition itself.

"I might say at this point that the courts have repeatedly upheld, in this country and abroad, the point made under this head.

"Second, the exhibitor often claims that he does not play the music for purposes of profit. He often says that he plays it merely as an incidental accompaniment to the pictures, that he does not charge admission for the privilege of listening to the music, and that it forms no part of the service for which he receives revenue from his patrons.

"This argument may be quickly disposed of. It costs money to furnish music in any form. If it were not necessary and essential to the entertainment provided, the money necessary to produce it would not be spent; the money is spent, the music is furnished, and there is no question but that it is a part of the service rendered for profit. On this point the Supreme Court of the United States has spoken, unanimously and unqualifiedly.

"Third, the exhibitor often sets up that he does not direct his orchestra, or musicians, as to what they shall play, but leaves it to them or their leader, and that he himself is not responsible, inasmuch as he has not chosen the composition nor had anything to do with it.

"Responsibility cannot be evaded on this point. The proprietor is responsible, actually and legally, for every act of his agents and employees, whether they be independent contractors or not, and the act of the musician or leader becomes his act, for which he must stand responsible.

"On this point there are repeated decisions of the courts, all in absolute accord and uniformly supporting the foregoing conclusion.

"Fourth, it is often contended that the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers is an unlawful combination in restraint of trade, that it operates in violation of the anti-trust laws, and that therefore no exhibitor can be held responsible for refusing to recognize the demands of an unlawful organization.

Court Upholds Society

"As in other cases, this point has been submitted to the courts several times, and the Society has been held to be a strictly lawful organization, operating legally in behalf of its members, and therefore not amenable to being deprived of its rights on this argument.

"Fifth, it is set up that the rates charged for licenses are unfair, unreasonable and extortionate. It is pointed out that if we have the rights claimed, then we could charge any price we saw fit, could, in fact, make the fees prohibitory. Let us discuss the rates now charged first, to see if they are in fact fair, or if they are unfair and unreasonable.

"The rate now in effect, and which has been in effect for the entire life of the Society, for motion picture theatres, is ten cents per seat per annum. That means that a house with a thousand seats pays a fee of $100 per year, or slightly more than 27 cents per day.

"For 27 cents per day it becomes possessed of the right to publicly perform, for profit, the entire catalog of members of the Society. For this trifling sum, about the average price of one single admission a day, it is possible for it to encourage authors, composers and publishers in the writing, development and exploitation of music, than which there is no single factor or element contributing more to the success and prosperity of the theatre." (To be concluded next week)

The News of the Week

Little Bobby Connelly Passes Away

Famous Child Player, the "Sunny Jim" of Many Vitagraph Productions, Dies at Home Following Attack of Bronchitis

Bobby Connelly, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Connelly, who as a child player in Vitagraph productions was known and admired the world over, died at his home in Lynbrook, Long Island, on the evening of July 5. He had been ill for several weeks of acute bronchitis. He was twelve years old last April.

Several years ago Bobby had an attack of illness, and at that time, on the advice of his doctor, he was withdrawn from school and kept outdoors as much as possible. He gained in strength, and to all appearances was restored to health.

Bobby Connelly "In Character" in a Recent Picture

The little player had just completed his work in Wild Youth, a six-part picture produced by Ivan Abramson. Mr. Abramson was so pleased with his remarkable playing that he was planning to star the little fellow in a story on the writing of which he is now engaged. The producer and his player were more than friends, the former entertaining him at his home and in every way possible contributing to his happiness and conserving his strength.

Tefft Johnson, at his offices in the Candler Building, was shocked when told that Bobby had passed away. It was Mr. Johnson under whom Bobby played his first Vitagraph characterization when the child was about four years old. Older photoplaygoers will remember the "Sunny Jim" stories, in which Bobby was the featured player of the many single reels, Mr. Johnson playing the father and Mrs. Johnson "Mother Dear." In all, Mr. Johnson estimated he had directed Bobby in forty pictures.

"Pop" Hart, well known in amusement circles in New York, was hard hit by the news of Bobby's death. Mr. Hart told how he had been godfather to the little fellow, and that when the latter was five years of age he had officiated as godfather to Mr. Hart's infant. On this occasion Mr. Hart said, in spite of a broken arm, Bobby insisted on carrying the infant in his arms during the ceremony.

At the Graphic offices there were many stories told as to the child's native talent for acting. Once he had been informed just what was expected of him, practically no rehearsal was necessary. He grasped a situation with the intelligence of an adult. In his "personal appearances" he bore himself and talked with the assurance of a man and invariably stirred his audiences to enthusiasm. His passing truly will be mourned by a host.

The first week in July will find Rex Ingram, director of The Prisoner of Zenda and earlier big Metro pictures, in the East, according to reports this week from the company's studios in Hollywood.

With him Mr. Ingram will bring the first print of the new photoplay, which will follow his screen version of Anthony Hope's novel. The title of the most recent Ingram production has not as yet been made public, and it may be withheld until the director himself arrives in New York for conference with the officials of the Metro home office.

Before he leaves the Coast Mr. Ingram will have finished entirely his cutting and titling of the unnamed picture, and will prepare at once for production in the East of a photodrama of Victor Hugo's Toilers of the Sea. Studio work on this will be done in New York, and exteriors staged along the Atlantic coast, probably in Maine.

New Doris May Comedy Is Titled "Up and at 'Em"

Up and at 'Em has been selected as the release title of Doris May's new production for release through the Film Booking Offices. This will follow The Understudy, the present release of the Doris May series.

Up and at 'Em is a light comedy drama from the pen of William A. Seiter and Lewis Milestone. Mr. Seiter has directed Miss May in all her past R-C pictures and is also responsible for Up and at 'Em. The scenario is by Eve Unsell.

Nazimova Presents "Salome" to Select New York Audience

Nazimova in "Salome" was seen on the screen of the Town Hall, in New York, recently by members of the National Board of Review and their guests, and by especially invited personages celebrated in the artistic and social world of the city.

The photoplay, following exactly neither the original legend of Salome nor Oscar Wilde's interpretive revision of it, yet admittedly inspired by both, was pronounced, judging from the freely expressed informal comment upon it by members of the audience, to be the most effective picture in which Nazimova has yet appeared.

"Both the star herself, who came East recently for this metropolitan representation of the picture, and her husband and director, Charles Bryant, received congratulations from many of those present," says an announcement. "No small measure of praise was that which singled out the point in which Nazimova's conception of Salome differs radically from the many that have gone before in the accentuation of the spiritual side of this vengeful princess of Judea. And it was upon this point that her eager inquisitors found Nazimova willing to talk."

"To me," she said, "it has always been inconceivable that a historical figure so enduring should have been regarded as without a spiritual side, for the spiritual alone endures. And so, for all that there is no hard and fast data proving that Salome was more than a creature of beauty and fire and hate, she must have been.

"But for that, we should have found no reason for doing Salome. The other thing, the obvious rendition of her story, has been told many times; and it was because, to me it seemed, the real essence of the drama of her life had been overlooked that I found portraying Salome the most engrossing task I have yet undertaken."

Nazimova intends, it is understood, dramatizing the story for the New York stage next season. Plans for this project are, however, tentative.

Paramount Idea Is Endorsed

Los Angeles Mayor and Other Prominent People Commend Stock Company and School Plan

Naturally enough, the announcement of the establishment of Paramount's Stock Company and school was received in Los Angeles, the center of the film industry, with the greatest interest. All of the Los Angeles newspapers gave the story big headlines on their front pages and many of them sought interviews with leading figures in civic and political life.

Mayor George E. Cryer said:

"Better pictures! That's a slogan that has been a slogan for some time. But no one can get anywhere with slogans until some one begins to do something practical. That's what Jesse L. Lasky is doing —something practical. That's the way to get better pictures. It's a big idea, and I congratulate Paramount upon putting it into action."

"The building of character among girls and young women is the goal and purpose of the Young Women's Christian Association. Any influence contributing to this end through the medium of pictures has our hearty endorsement. For this reason I am glad to endorse Paramount's up-to-date school idea, as I believe it will ultimately result in better pictures."

"If there is to be education in any branch of motion pictures for motion picture people, it should come from the inside of the industry rather than from the outside. I congratulate Paramount on the originality of this idea for a school within its studios. The idea will be copied elsewhere. I'm positive of that. May it be put into effect immediately!"

Rev. Neal Dodd, rector of St. Mary of the Angels Church and one of the industry's sincerest friends in Los Angeles, made the following statement:

"The establishment of the Paramount Stock Company and school is a sign that the days of harum-scarum are over in motion pictures. This movement means that the motion picture is going to have an ethical basis, that it will set and conform to high standards."

Here's a Censor Who Thinks Censorship Ineffective

"It is the opinion of my wife, a motion picture censor in Illinois, as well as of myself, that it is doubtful if censorship of the movies will ever be effective."

This is a declaration made by Allen D. Albert, a noted publicist, in the course of an address delivered from a Chautauqua platform at Cedar Point, Ohio, Lake Erie shore summering place, according to information received by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., from one of its correspondents.

Albert, former newspaper editor, is one of the leading moral uplift workers in Illinois and a member of various organizations striving for higher standards of morality.

Conway Tearle to Appear in Two Selznick Specials

Close on the heels of the announcement by Lewis J. Selznick, president of Select Pictures Corporation, that the producing units regularly contributing to the Select output had abandoned the restricted "star" plan and would in the future produce pictures using story, star and production value entirely at the discretion of the producer, comes another announcement that Conway Tearle has been engaged by Selznick Pictures Corporation to appear in two Selznick specials during the coming season. Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, completed arrangements with Mr. Tearle at the New York offices of the company a few days ago and signed him on the dotted line.

Until other members of the casts which will include Mr. Tearle are definitely engaged, President Myron Selznick is withholding information as to the specials in which Mr. Tearle will appear. It is definitely announced, however, that in keeping with the new production policy Mr. Tearle will not be the only star in each cast.

My Dad, a Clifford Smith production, featuring the new R-C star, Johnnie Walker, has been scheduled for early release by the Film Booking Offices of America. This Northwest production will serve to introduce Walker in a new type of role.

Walker is supported by Ruth Clifford in the leading feminine role. The picture was directed by Cliff Smith.

First Scenes Are Under Way for "If Winter Comes"

Dispatches from England received at the New York headquarters of Fox this week state that the company of players appointed for the production of If Winter Comes, are now in Canterbury shooting scenes for the special that will be an adaptation from the A. S. M. Hutchinson novel.

Work was started under the supervision of William Fox and Julius Steger, director general of production of the Eastern studios of the organization. Mr. Fox has been in England for several weeks conferring with the author of the book. Mr. Steger joined Mr. Fox two weeks ago and will proceed with the latter to Rome, to confer with Director J. Gordon Edwards who recently completed Nero and is about to film The Shepherd King, another Fox special for 1922-23.

Harry Millarde, who was selected to direct If Winter Comes, also has been in England for a number of weeks. With Millarde is Percy Marmont, leading man, who will appear in the film.

"Delicious Little Devil" Four Weeks on Broadway

Film circles frankly state their amazement at the record set by The Delicious Little Devil, a Universal-Mae Murray revival, at the Central Theatre. For four weeks it has played at the Broadway house, and has done better business, proportionately, than most of the current film offerings along Broadway.

These facts are vouched for by Andrew J. Cobe, manager of the Central, who originally booked the picture for one week only. He found his business so good he held it over from week to week.

The Delicious Little Devil is unique in that its cast contains two popular screen stars, Mae Murray and Rodolph Valentino. It was made by Robert Z. Leonard, when he was a Universal director.

Jacobs to Produce for Himself

Arthur H. Jacobs, who, for the past year has been the general manager of Preferred Pictures, Inc., the producers of the Katherine MacDonald attractions for Associated First National, has resigned to enter the producing field for himself. Mr. Jacobs' resignation will take effect upon the completion of the production of Rich Men's Wives.

Mr. Jacobs will not be replaced, it being B. P. Schulberg's plan to divide the former's duties among the various members of his staff.

Notable Cast for First National's "East Is West"

As "Ming Toy" in East Is West, a First National picture, Constance Talmadge will be surrounded by a cast which reads like a motion picture blue book. Edward Burns is chief in her support as "Billy Benson." Fred Warren portrays "Lo Saang Kee," the genial Chinaman who upholds the principles of the Occident as well as those of the Orient. In startling contrast to the kindly "Lo Saang Kee" will be the sinister figure of "Hop Toy," as played by Frank Manning. The comedy element is introduced in the character of "Charlie Young," the Chop-Suey King, by Warner Oland, and the juvenile role of "Jimmie Potter" has fallen to Nigel Barrie. "Chang Lee" will be played by Nick Du Ruiz, and a real Chinaman, Jim Wang, will portray the proprietor of the Love Boat. For the minor roles, all the coolies of the San Francisco and the Los Angeles Chinatowns have found easy access to good jobs.

Five thousand feet of bamboo are being used for the sets at the United Studois, Hollywood. The Love Boat has been built by Stephen Goosson, who is also responsible for the Chinese street scenes and other settings.

Paramount Prepares Film Version of "Old Homestead"

Paramount believes that one of the strongest appeals of its production of The Old Homestead will be the homely, human characters.

"The quality of wholesome human interest never has failed to satisfy the public in any form of amusement. The stage plays such as The Old Homestead, Shore Acres, Blue Jeans and Way Down East have retained their popularity through many years," says a Paramount statement.

"The Old Homestead was one of the best of its kind. The rural types, the combination of city and country, and the element of father-love which has been less exploited than mother-love but should prove fully as potent in creating sympathy, are all factors in the old play's ability to hold an audience. The film version has been greatly elaborated and enacted by a cast of artists, directed by James Cruze.

"The settings are unusually fine. The village of Ganzey with forty or more set houses, the great storm which later wrecks the town, the Old Homestead farm with all its appurtenances, the scenes in Macao, China; the New York views, etc., all combine to create a fine background."

A. E. Puts Over Three First Runs in Detroit

Associated Exhibitors features are in demand in Detroit. During the week of June 18, Florence Vidor in The Real Adventure, played John H. Kunsky's Adams Theatre, first run, while the same star in Woman, Wake Up was the attraction at Bert Williams's LaSalle Gardens, second run.

During the week of June 25, When the Devil Drives, with Leah Baird, was the feature at Kunsky's Madison Theatre, first run, and on July 2 Lady Godiva opens a first run week's engagement at the Washington.

Pola Negri Coming Here in August

Pola Negri, Continental screen star, is coming to this counrty next month to make a big special Paramount picture, it was announced this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Mr. Lasky arrived from Europe July 4 on the Majestic, after having spent several weeks visiting authors and film producing centers in England, France, Germany, Spain, Austria, Hungary and Italy.

"Miss Negri is undoubtedly the foremost screen artist of Europe," said Mr. Lasky. "Although her pictures up to this time have been of a historical nature, or have been modern stories made with the limited resources of European producers, her strong personality and magnetism have been apparent to all observers of motion picture acting. Because of this genius she has built up a world-wide following, and when American audiences see her in a powerful story, produced by a capable director, and gowned in the latest Paris creations, they will acclaim her as one of the biggest stars of the American screen.

"When I was in London I was approached by a famous dramatist, whose name I am not at liberty to disclose at this time. He told me he had written a story especially for Pola Negri and would like to have me produce it. I took the script and after reading it I was ready to agree with him that he had written a powerful drama, and, unlike many authors, had at once caught the idea of having an international flavor to his story. When he gave me the script he said he was an admirer of Miss Negri's work and, having met her personally, knew that it fitted her peculiar talents.

"A few weeks later I met Miss Negri myself. Up to then I had seen her only on the screen — wearing historical costumes, or cheap, dowdy dresses which suited the characters she happened to be playing. But when I met her in person I was immediately captivated by her charm, her personality and her smartness, and decided on the spot that, if it were possible. I wanted her to make the picture which my English author had written.

"Through arrangements with the Hamilton Theatrical Corporation, to which she is under contract, we plan to have Miss Negri come to New York next month and make this big, special picture at our Long Island studio. As soon as I arrived in New York I started arrangements for one of our best known directors to produce the picture, and the entire resources of the production department will be put at his command to give this story the settings and costuming which it deserves.

"Miss Negri is the first of a number of well-known European players whom we plan to bring over here in the near future to augment the personnel of the Paramount Stock Company. It is our intention to bring over two leading character players from France, Spain and England respectively and give them places in the stock company, that a more international flavor may be given our pictures."

Another move made by Mr. Lasky to increase the international appeal of American pictures was the establishment of scenario bureaus in London, Paris and Madrid.

Among the authors with whom Mr. Lasky talked was Franz Molnar, author of "Liliom" and "The Devil." whom he met in Budapest. Mr. Molnar is now writing a play for which he also will do a scenario, and both the play and picture will be produced in America in the next few months.

Mr. Lasky will leave for Hollywood in two weeks, where he will supervise the early operations of the newly established Paramount Stock Company School.

Before going he plans to put into effect an ambitious production schedule for the Paramount Studio on Long Island. He intimated that this studio, which was reopened recently after having been closed for several months, will soon be operating at capacity.

Louis B. Mayer Plans Summer and Fall Production

During the coming summer and fall months exhibitors can look forward to a series of attractions from the studios of Louis B. Mayer, one of First National's earliest producers. One Clear Call, his latest John M. Stahl production, is now playing to the key cities, while his last two Anita Stewart pictures, The Woman He Married and Rose O' the Sea, directed by Fred Niblo, are attracting attention everywhere, says the announcement.

"The John M. Stahl Productions have in the past kept pace with the best box office magnets, and according to plans now in effect, Mr. Stahl's future pictures will be staged on an even greater and more elaborate scale than ever before," says the statement.

"Mr. Stahl has just started on the filming of The Dangerous Age with Lewis Stone heading the all-star cast. As is characteristic of other Stahl films, heart interest is the reigning element in this picture, with plenty of action, good, clean comedy and a few melodramatic thrills to keep things traveling in high."

Universal Product for Coming Year

12 Jewels, 45 Universal Attractions, 280 Short Subjects and 6 Serials Promised for the Year

Announcement has just been made from the Universal general offices of the entire fall product of the company, comprising Jewels, Universal attractions, and the large line of short reel subjects which is augmented considerably by special releases this year.

This announcement shows that the Universal year begins on Aug. 21. It also shows that the company is preparing to release during the year 12 Jewel productions, 45 Universal attractions divided into groups of 9, 280 short subjects, and at least six serials. The company feels that its position for this fall is particularly fortunate in that a large part of its product is either entirely finished and in the hands of exchanges, or in process of work at Universal City, where more companies, according to the statistics of the Chamber of Commerce, are at work than in the studios of any other company operating in California.

In view of the inclusion of a portion of August in the new year, Universal has listed Foolish Wives as its August Jewel release. Foolish Wives has already played pre-release bookings at various arrangements with the largest houses in the various territories, and is just now coming into its own as a releasing opportunity for the majority of theatres.

The September Jewel release is The Storm, which has already played a remarkable week at the Capitol Theatre in New York and which opened for a run at the Central on July 2. At the Capitol The Storm, it is said, did the biggest business that any picture ever played to in June. Although this is the September release, prints of The Storm are in all of the exchanges for inspection by exhibitors and in some cases pre-release bookings outside of New York have also been arranged.

The October Jewel release is Human Hearts, also starring House Peters, with a cast which includes George Hackathorne, Mary Philbin, Edith Hallor, Gertrude Claire and Russell Simpson. The picture was directed by King Baggot. Prints of this picture are also in the exchanges for inspection, although its release date is the first of October.

The fourth Jewel picture is Priscilla Dean's Under Two Flags, released in November. This Jewel is completed at Universal City under the direction of Tod Browning, with a cast which includes James Kirkwood, Stuart Holmes, John Davidson and Ethel Grey Terry.

The fifth, or December, release, will bring The Kentucky Derby to the screen. This is the title given to Charles T. Dazey's famous stage melodrama, "The Suburban Handicap." The title was changed to The Kentucky Derby because King Baggot, who directed it, saw an opportunity to cash in on the famous race which was won by Morvich at Churchill Downs this year. The entire company was transported to Louisville and the famous Kentucky track for real Blue Grass State atmosphere. Reginald Denny, Lillian Rich, Kingsley Benedict, Emmett King, Lionel Belmore and Gertrude Olmstead comprise the cast.

The January Jewel will be Booth Tarkington's novel, The Flirt. In it will be featured Eileen Percy, Helen Jerome Eddy, Buddie Messenger, Lydia Knott, Edward Hearn, Harold Goodwin, Nel Craig, Tom Kennedy, George Nichols, Lloyd Whitlock, Bert Roach, Dorothea Wolbert, William Welsh and John Cossar. It is under the direction of Hobart Henley.

Bitter Sweet is the title of the Lon Chaney Jewel which will be released in February. Bitter Sweet is a story of the Chinese underworld of San Francisco, written by William Dudley Pelley. In his support Universal has cast its newest star, Virginia Valli, Jack Mower, William Welsh. Henry Barrows, Harry Dever and John Beck. It is under the direction of Lambert Hillyer.

Priscilla Dean's second Jewel of the year will be released in March under the title of The Flame of Life. This is an adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel, "That Lass O' Lowries." This production was directed by Hobart Henley and the cast includes Robert Ellis, Wallace Beery, Beatrice Burnham and Katherine McGuire.

The Jewels for the next four months have not been definitely assigned as to their release dates, but they include Erich von Stroheim's picture of Viennese life, entitled Merry-Go-Round, a film version of George Barr McCutcheon's "Castle Craneycrow," which will be made in Europe by Edward Laemmle with Harry Myers as star, and under the releasing title of The Prisoner; Jack London's story, "The Abysmal Brute' 'and William Hurlbut's play, "Trimmed in Scarlet" for Priscilla Dean.

Instead of the method of release in force for the last year, Universal will offer this year its Universal attractions in blocks of nine. The first nine of these pictures will be called The Winning Nine, and subsequent blocks will have appropriate designations. In the nine pictures will be included two each of four stars and one attraction with all-star cast. It may happen, as in the Winning Nine, that there will be two of these all-star productions, instead of two star pictures. The Universal attractions will be released one each week, with a total of 45 for the year.

Paramount Adopts Newspaper Form for Press Book

With the issuance of the press sheet on Marion Davies in the Cosmopolitan production, The Young Diana, which is scheduled for release Aug. 7, Paramount has inaugurated a new style in its press books. From now on the book on each production will be of full newspaper size, printed in newspaper style on a heavy grade of news stock.

The usual size of the sheet will be four pages, and in the case of some of the super-specials this will be enlarged to eight. The first page is devoted to general editorial matter on the production, exploitation suggestions, notes from theatre programs, etc. The second contains reproductions of the newspaper ad and publicity mats, the third is given over to the advance stories and reviews for the newspapers, and the fourth carries reproductions and descriptive matter on the posters and other accessories.

By this arrangement the text pages are backed by the reproductions of the advertising material, which is ordered in advance by key number, making it possible to clip editorial matter when the time arrives for its use without cutting into usable material on the other side. The fact that the copy of both advertising and publicity is printed on news stock and in newspaper style is also of considerable assistance to the exhibitor.

Charles Kenmore Ulrich is the editor of the press sheet, Russell Holman designs and writes the copy for the advertising, Vincent Trotta is in charge of the art work, and A. M. Deane is assistant editor, all under the supervision of A. M. Botsford, advertising manager.

Mary Pickford May Place Two New Film Stars

Few stars have given as many actors and actresses opportunities to ascend to screen stardom as has Mary Pickford. The late Harold Lockwood became a star over night as a result of serving as Miss Pickford's leading man in the first filming of Tess of the Storm Country nine years ago, and now in the elaborated new production of this picture for United Artists release, Lloyd Hughes, enacting this same character, bids fair to emerge a full-fledged star in his own right.

"Exceptional" is the rating given Nanook of the North by the National Board of Review. Pathe reports remarkable expressions of appreciation forwarded by exhibitors following the public reception of Explorer Flaherty's screen epic. The following telegram from S. Barrett McCormick, The Allen Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, is quoted:

"We have just closed week's engagement of Nanook of the North and do not want to lose this opportunity of telling you of its splendid success. I have never presented a picture of any nature that pleased so large a percentage of the audience. It is without doubt the most fascinating and entertaining film in years, and lends itself admirably to productive exploitation. Sincere congratulations."

Lloyd Picture Sets New Record

"Grandma's Boy" Enters Eighth Week at Symphony, Los Angeles, Surpassing Mark Made by "Sailor-Made Man"

For the second time within five months, Harold Lloyd has smashed the world's record for the continuous run of a comedy feature. The best previous figure—one which he himself had hung up, was surpassed Sunday, July 2, when the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors attraction, Grandma's Boy, entered the eighth week of its premiere in Dr. Breckwedel's Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles.

The Lloyd comedy, Never Weaken, played the Symphony last year and remained 44 days, setting a new attendance record for that house. Beginning Dec. 31 and continuing until 11 o'clock of the night of Feb. 18, A Sailor-Made Man had a continuous run in the same theatre of 50 days, during which 367 performances were given. This run was terminated only because of a previous booking contract entered into by the Symphony management before the start of this engagement.

"Neither Never Weaken nor A Sailor-Made Man is a feature picture, measured in reels, yet each in turn was the only attraction exploited by the Symphony management during its run there and was the longest offering on the bill," said Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, this week. "In other words, both had the unusual distinction of being accorded feature position, and their quality was of such a high order and Mr. Lloyd's popularity was so great, that, one after the other, they established new attendance records.

"And now Harold Lloyd has smashed another record—his own, again!

"That his greatest triumph to date should attend this particular picture is significant, and especially gratifying because Grandma's Boy marks his first invasion of the field of five part pictures."

First National's New York Exchange Awards Cash Prizes

In addition to a number of other selling aids which are changed from month to month, R. H. Clark, manager of First National's New York exchange, is offering cash prizes of $50 and $25 weekly to the two salesmen who lead the field in sales figures.

The standing of the salesmen is not tabulated on a dial or blackboard as is generally the case in these prize contests, but is carried in an exchange news bulletin issued by Mr. Clark under the title of Dynamo.

The cash prize awards has had the effect of keeping the sales staff in a constant fever of excitement and of stimulating the summer sales to a marked degree.

"No More Program Pictures"—Neilan

Productions Will Be Made and Sold on Individual Basis, Says Producer—Starts Work in Association with Goldwyn

Marshall Neilan arrived in Los Angeles last week following his tour abroad and made his initial announcement concerning the future production and distribution of his product in association with Goldwyn.

"Marshall Neilan productions—as heretofore—will be handled entirely on an individual basis," said Mr. Neilan. "My future product will be sold separately. Each picture will be distributed on its individual merit and each production will be made as a separate unit. I have always contended that every feature should be sold on its own worth and should stand or fall on its own merit, and I plan to adhere to this idea.

"In association with Goldwyn and as a result of this new affiliation recently announced, arrangements have been perfected whereby it is possible for me to get away from the program type of pictures and attempt the bigger things I have desired to do for some time past.

"My entire staff, including all the members of my organization who have been with me several years and who have contributed to the success of Neilan productions, will remain intact."

The title of Neilan's newest First National release known heretofore as Her Man and based on George Pattulo's story in the Saturday Evening Post, has been changed to Minnie. This will be the producer's final picture under the First National contract and will be released in the early fall.

Universal Offers Four Attractions for Mid-Summer

Universal has a list of attractions lined up for mid-summer release. These pictures include four made by stars which have great box office value.

In order of release they are: Trimmed, starring Hoot Gibson, released July 3; The Trouper, starring Gladys Walton, set for release July 17; Afraid to Fight, starring Frank Mayo, to be released July 24, and The Loaded Door, another Hoot Gibson special, set for release Aug. 14.

Trimmed is from a story by Hapsburg Liebe, and was directed by Harry Pollard. Patsy Ruth Miller is leading woman.

The Trouper, starring Gladys Walton, was written and adapted to the screen by A. P. Younger. Harry B. Harris directed it.

Afraid to Fight is from a story by Leet Renick Brown, adapted to the screen by Charles Sarver and directed by William Worthington. Lillian Rich is the leading woman.

The Loaded Door, starring Hoot Gibson was directed by Harry Pollard. It is adapted by George Hively from "The Cherub of Seven Bar," a story by Ralph Cummins. Gertrude Olmstead will be seen in the chief supporting role.

H. M. Berman, Guest of Honor at Farewell Dinner

A farewell dinner was given to Harry M. Berman, retiring general sales manager, by Universal at the Biltmore's Italian Gardens, New York City, Friday, June 30. More than fifty employees and executives of the home office and nearby Universal exchanges were on hand to wish Mr. Berman the best of luck with his new work at Robertson-Cole. E. H. Goldstein, general manager of Universal's home office, served as master of ceremonies and wittily introduced a number of speakers and read a spirited cablegram from Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, who sent his regrets from Europe.

Van and Schenck, appearing as headliners at the Palace this month; Arthur Albro, operatic tenor, the Central Theatre Quartet, and Nodie Williams' jazz band were part of an excellent program secured by George Brown, Universal's advertising manager, who arranged the [illegible] were presented to the guest of honor. Among these were a gold watch suitably inscribed from Mr. Laemmle, a two and one-half karat diamond and platinum ring from the employees, an artistic hand-illuminated testimonial from the Universal exchange managers, and a parchment tribute signed by all the Universal employees.

Among the speakers were: P. D. Cochrane, secretary of Universal; Art A. Schmidt, Universal's new general sales manager; George Levine, new general manager of short products; James V. Bryson, foreign sales manager; Charles Rosenzweig, sales manager of the Big "U" exchange; N. L. Manheim, general service manager; Sigfrid Hartman, attorney for the company; J. V. Ward, manager of physical distribution; Paul Gulick, director of publicity and editor of the Universal Weekly; W. C. Hermann, office manager of the Big "U" exchange; Jules Levy, district manager of the Philadelphia Interstate; Al. Mayer, president of the Photo-Repro; George Uffner, liaison officer; Sam Sedran, purchasing manager; Andrew J. Cobe, manager of the Shubert Central Theatre; Edward F. Murphy, superintendent of Universal's Fort Lee laboratories; Theodore Solomon, projection expert; Richard V. Anderson, sales manager for International News Reels, and F. J. McConnell, Universal's serial manager.

Kenma Corporation Picture Will Be Titled This Week

The Kenma Corporation is looking for a final title for their first production known as Dear Me. It's an adaptation of the stage play of that name.

The production itself is well on the way to completion, and Madge Kennedy, the star; Henry Kolker, the director; Rufus Steele, scenario writer and production manger, and several directors of the Kenma are meeting in special conference late this week to decide the title.

Hobart Busy in Final Work on New George Arliss Picture

All photographic work on The Silent Voice, the new George Arliss picture being produced by Distinctive Productions, Inc., for fall release by United Artists Corporation, has been completed, and Henry M. Hobart is now busily at work assembling, cutting and titling this new Arliss starring vehicle in which Ann Forrest and Effie Shannon play the leading feminine roles.

A. E. Feature Goes Big in Chicago Loop District

The Associated Exhibitors feature When the Devil Drives, with Leah Baird, continues to make a hit in Chicago. It entered the third week of its run at Sig Faller's Bijou Dream Theatre, June 24, and two days later opened an engagement at Jones, Linnick & Schafer's Rose.

Day and date runs for the same feature are so rare in the Loop district, says the announcement, as to be almost unknown, and an agreement permitting it could not be obtained from two big exhibitors except in the case of an attraction which has proved its ability to more than pack a single house.

Added interest is given the picture wherever it is shown by the fact that the story was written by the actress who is featured in the presentation, and most of the reviewers comment favorably upon the work of Leah Baird, the author, as well as that of Leah Baird, the player. In the course of its review after the opening of the week's run in John H. Kunsky's Madison Theatre, the News, of Detroit, said:

"When the Devil Drives is a remarkably good contribution to the film world. Of course the theme is not new, but what else is there to write plays about unless it be men and women? And in the final analysis nothing is more interesting than men and women. The story all goes to show, coming down to brass tacks, that the good little girl could become just as bad as the alleged bad woman."

Tom Boland on Rotating Committee

Oklahoma City First National Franchise Holder in New York for Two Weeks' Period

Tom H. Boland of the Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, and original First National franchise holder, has succeeded John J. McGuirk as a member of the First National Rotating Committee and will serve for two weeks in that capacity. The rotating committee is part of a plan of having original First National franchise holders visit the New York offices of First National and take part in its management.

Mr. Boland came to New York in time to find the First National executive committee in session, with plenty of business on hand.

"From what I have been able to observe here," he said, "it looks as if the motion picture business has some tremendous events in sight." He expressed himself as highly pleased at the manner in which First National business is being handled and said that what struck him particularly about the methods in First National New York offices was "the excellent system, management, and the constant consideration shown for exhibitors in every section of the world."

Mr. Boland has been an exhibitor since the days of the one and two reel features. Born in Toledo, Ohio, he was educated in the University of Notre Dame and was graduated just in time to take part in the Spanish-American war. At the close of that war he went to Texas where he served as a cattle ranger. After working at this for two years he was appointed a United States ranger in Arizona, where he served for two years more.

Twenty years ago he went to Oklahoma and engaged in the wholesale grocery business for six years. He then became a motion picture exhibitor. This was thirteen years ago. Mr. Boland opened the first one thousand seat house in the Southwest, built especially for motion pictures —the Empress Theatre at Oklahoma City.

"In those days," he said, "we had single reelers and two reelers only. Even in those crude times for our wonderful industry, an exhibitor with ordinary good judgment could see the marvelous future in store for motion pictures."

From the Empress, Mr. Boland became interested in several theatres in Oklahoma City and he is now a director of the Midwest Enterprise Corporation.

Live News of the West Coast

BY RENEE BEEMAN

FEW stars have given as many possessors of histrionic talent as many opportunities to reach screen stardom as has Mary Pickford. The late Harold Lockwood became a star over night as the result of serving as Miss Pickford's leading man in the first filming of Tess of the Storm Country, nine years ago, and now Lloyd Hughes bids fair to emerge from the enacting of this same character a full-fledged star in his own right. There is also a strong possibility of Gloria Hope, who is in the same cast, achieving a like stellar purpose. She is playing the important part of Teola Graves opposite Mary's characterization of the heroine, Tessible Skinner.

Among the dozen or more present-day luminaries of the screen who owe their present status to Mary Pickford more than any single element is Wesley (Freckles) Barry, who got his first chance to show what he could do in Daddy Long Legs. John Bowers earned his place in the front ranks as the result of the opportunity Miss Pickford gave him in Hulda from Holland. Marshall Neilan started the most important phase of his career as leading man for Miss Pickford in several of her earlier productions and she recognized his greatest ability to be in the directorial line. Therefore she promoted him to the director's chair, where he successfully presided over the megaphone in the making of three of her pictures and this gave him the prestige which has eventuated itself in his becoming one of the foremost producers.

Harold Lloyd and his company have been working day and night finishing his picture which will follow Grandma's Boy, and temporarily known as Doctor's Orders. This picture will be ready for preview this coming week. This will be Lloyd's first production under his new contract with Pathe, which calls for six pictures. Eric Mayne, John T. Prince and Normand Hammond with Mildred Davis, who rounds out her third year as leading lady for Lloyd, supports the star in this new comedy. Fred Newmeyer is directing. Time is no longer a factor in the making of the Lloyd comedies, this latest release has taken over four months to film.

The Sailor Made Man ran for seven weeks in Los Angeles, Grandma's Boy is having its world premiere at the same theatre, the Symphony of Los Angeles, and the attendance figures at the end of the fifth week were a trifle larger than the figures at the end of the sixth week of Sailor Made Man. The present production bids fair to cut the navy picture by at least three weeks.

After two years absence, Louise Frazenda has returned to the Mack Sennett comedies. She will appear in Bow Wow, shortly to be released by the comedy king. In the cast are little John Henry, Jr., and the wonder dog Teddy.

The camera work has started of Broken Chains at the Goldwyn Studios. After months of preparation, the story which was considered the best out of nearly 30,000 entries in the Chicago Daily News scenario contest, is being translated to the screen under the direction of Allen Holubar, producer of The Heart of Humanity, Man, Woman and Marriage and other pictures. Malcolm McGregor, a handsome newcomer, who is hailed as a find, has the leading male role. Coleen Moore, heroine of several recent Rupert Hughes successes, will enact the wistful child wife, chained to her cabin by the brutal husband, Ernest Tottence, who threatens to out-villian all the bad men of the screen. Claire Windsor will appear as the beautiful society girl, a part for which she is well qualified. James Marcus, veteran comedian, will be the ranch foreman, and Beryl Mercer, London and New York stage favorite, will be the cinematic wife. William Orland, Gerald Prong, Edward Peil and Leo Willis complete the cast.

Peter B. Kyne has been engaged by the Goldwyn company to write the titles for his own stroy, Brothers Under the Skin, recently filmed. The author expresses himself as delighted at the way the production has been handled. It was directed by E. Mason Hopper and has a cast consisting of Pat O'Malley, Helene Chadwick, Norman Beery, Claire Windsor and Mae Busch. Ralp Block is the editor of the production.

The Dangerous Age, the next John M. Stahl production, now being filmed at the Louis B. Mayer Studios, is an original story by Frances Irene Reels, and was adapted to the screen by J. G. Hawks and Bess Meredyth.

Tom Forman has finished editing White Shoulders, the Preferred Pictures Production in which Katherine MacDonald is starred. Katherine's next First National attraction will be Money, Money, Money. This story was written by Larry Lane, novelist and magazine writer. The story will appear serially in a well-known magazine simultaneously with the release of the picture.

Vitagraph is shut down for its summer vacation. Larry Semon has a company working but otherwise all activity is centered in the scenario department.

William Duncan is expected to start casting When Danger Smiles in a few weeks, and Earl Williams will start You Never Knew upon his return from Northern California.

Marion Fairfax, writer of many successful stage plays and famous as a scenarist, has been engaged to write especially for Billie Dove, the nineteen year old New York girl who is making her début as a Metro star in a story titled The Girl in the Gilded Cage.

Paramount productions under way for the current week are Manslaughter, with Thomas Meighan, Leatrice Joy, Lois Wilson and others, will be finished this week under the direction of Cecil B. deMille. This is a Jeanie Macpherson adaptation of the book by Alice Duer Miller.

The Man Who Saw To-morrow, by Perley Poore Sheehan and Frank Condon, will go into production with Thomas Meighan as the star, and work will begun the middle of July under the direction of Alfred Green.

Wallace Reid is busy with The Ghost Breaker, supported by Lila Lee. Alfred Green is directing this feature and has infused much comedy as well as weirdness into the screen. Walter Hiers, as a colored servant, battles ghosts attired in ancient armor.

On the High Seas, directed by Irvin Willat, will finish this week with Dorothy Dalton and Jack Holt. Mary Miles Minter in The Cowboy and the Lady is a story of the West mingling with society.

Home-Made Movies will be the title of the next Ben Turpin two-reel special, being produced at the Mack Sennett studios for First National release. The working title has been The Frozen Trail but has been changed. In the cast are Ben Turpin, Phyllis Haver, Dot Farley, George Cooper and Jim Finlayson.

Sol. Lesser, vice-president of the West Coast Theatres Inc. and producer of the Jackie Coogan Productions, voiced the opinion the other day, that while theatre business in Los Angeles and vicinity was fair, we were undoubtedly experiencing the tail-end of the Eastern slump and that the public were tired of the monotone productions so generally released in the past few months. He announced that only two or three theatres in the West Coast chain would close down for the summer and they were located in the very hot districts, inland.

In view of the fact that Doug Fairbank's newest picture, Douglas Fairbanks, in Robin Hood and Mary's elaborate version of Tess of the Storm Country and Charlie's first special feature for the United Artists, are going to be important photoplays of the coming fall and winter, President Abrams of the United Artists who has recently been in Los Angeles, says his company has thrown all its energies into high gear this early to insure these productions the widest possible latitude.

Among the members of Mr. Abram's party were A. C. Berman, general manager of the Allied Artists Corp., consisting of nine exchanges, and Guy Croswell Smith, in charge of the Sixteenth Continental European offices with headquarters in Paris. Others attending the conference were Max E. Prager, treasurer of the United Artists, C. S. Trowbridge and Paul N. Lazarus, both assistant general sales managers of the company and Maurice G. Cleary, personal representative for Mary and Doug who will remain in Los Angeles.

Director Arthur Rosson is of the belief that four weeks work will finish the picture, the first to be released by Jack through the Allied Corporation.

With Wild Honey, The Flame of Life and Under Two Flags behind her, Priscilla Dean is hoping to surmount each of these in her next production, Live and Love, which will be a Universal-Jewel production.

The Long Chance, a Western which Jack Conway has been assigned to direct for Universal with Ralph Graves, Marjorie Daw, Henry Walthall and others in the cast, has taken the field at the Universal Studios.

Short Subjects and Serials

Mermaids Make Record on Broadway

In the Ordinary Course Five Different Comedies of the One Brand Are Booked in Six Houses on That Thoroughfare

Without any advance campaign or even intention of making it such the week of July 2 is "Mermaid Comedy Week" on New York's Broadway. Educational Film Exchanges is booking five different pictures of the Mermaid Comedy series. One of the five Mermaids plays is in two theatres, making six houses showing pictures from this one brand simultaneously.

Four of the pictures included in this Broadway booking record are Jack White productions. They are Rapid Fire, Spooks, Danger and Step This Way. The fifth picture, Rolling Stones, features Lloyd Hamilton and is one of the last of the Mermaid Comedies which will feature this rapidly climbing comedian, who is now engaged in making the first of a series of six special comedies for Educational under his own name.

Rapid Fire is on the program at the Capitol Theatre, which is also showing another Educational Picture, The One Man Reunion, the latest release of the series of Wilderness Tales by Robert C. Bruce. The Strand Theatre is running Spooks! much of the action in which is laid in a "set" that duplicates the famous old Eden Musee, one of the landmarks of New York City in its time. Danger has been at the Criterion for a week and is held over another week. The Rivoli has Step This Way. Rolling Stones is running at both Loew's State and Loew's New York roof.

It was considered decidedly unusual when a feature comedy made by one of the most famous and popular comedy stars ran in four or five theatres on Broadway at the same time. This new record of five comedies of the same brand playing first run in six houses at the same time has never been approached, it is believed.

The man responsible for four of the five pictures in this record booking, Jack White, is one of the youngest producing directors in the industry. Starting in a minor position at the Sennett studio only a few years ago, his rise in the production field has been fast. He is endowed with a remarkably creative mind when it comes to constructing laughable comedy situations.

White and Lloyd Hamilton formed a partnership more than a year ago to take over the production of the Mermaid Comedies for Educational. They have shared the work on the second year's Mermaids, just completed, White having supervised seven pictures and Hamilton appearing in six others.

In the casts appearing in the four Jack White productions showing on Broadway this week are such funmakers as Lige Conley, Elinor Lynn, winner of the Thomas H. Ince beauty contest several years ago, Otto Fries, Cliff Bowes, Jack Lloyd and others. Conley heads the cast in each of the pictures, and Miss Lynn has the principal feminine role.

"This week's showing for Mermaid Comedies on Broadway," said E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, "seems to me to be another proof of the wisdom of our decision to elaborate on the work of these two unusually talented young men, Jack White and Lloyd Hamilton."

"Starland Revue" Tying Up with Stores and Newsstands

"Bringing the biggest stars in theatredom to the Main Streets of America" is the latest exploitation slogan applied by exhibitors to Starland Revue, the new one-reel feature of the theatrical world put out by Jack Cohn, and released through Film Booking Offices of America, formerly R-C.

Although but two months old, the bookings have extended as far as Los Angeles. Many exhibitors are using tie-ups with book stores and news stands in their town, where theatrical magazines and newspapers are on sale. Slides asking patrons what star they want to see pictured in the Revue are shown on the screen, and as a result the offices of exhibitors are swamped with letters telling about the stage favorites of the fans, and how they want the Revue to show them.

Sport Review Has Several New Films Ready for Release

Several new subjects have been finished for the series of Sport Review single reelers which Jack Eaton is producing for Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation. These novel short length subjects deal with every conceivable branch of sports and outdoor life. Among the releases recently completed are Play the Game, with college spring sports, a complete story of the two-day athletic carnival annually staged at Franklin Field, Philadelphia. The Seven Ages of Fishing is a sporting version of Shakespeare's lines from "As You Like It." Get Your Man is an authentic picture of the training of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, made in co-operation with the police at Ottawa, Quebec, and Regina, Saskatchewan. The completion of this picture will mark the finish of the first twenty-six issues of the Sport Review, all of which will be distributed by Goldwyn.

Will Make Serials in Natural Length

Universal Adopts That Policy for the Coming Year, "The Radio King," Its Second Issue, Comprising Ten Episodes

Although Universal is announcing definitely only two serials for fall, it will undoubtedly release at least six. The reason for this is a conviction on the part of the company, a conviction which has been reached after years of trial of the old policy and a short but perfectly satisfactory trial of the new, that serials like any other moving picture product should be filmed in their natural length, rather than in an arbitrary selling footage. With the pathway blazed for historical and educational serials and a definite and honorable place established for the serial, which in the old-fashioned form was the target of all kinds of criticism and abuse of the industry, the Universal had added a new link in the chain by which it is opening new serial markets and adding new friends. With serials filmed in their natural length, instead of adding padding to bring them up to a certain number of episodes, Universal expects this fall to add very materially to the gratifying response which has already been made to Universal serials by educational bodies, prominent educators and exhibitors throughout the country.

The first serial for fall is In the Days of Buffalo Bill, already completed and in the hands of exchanges. This serial features Art Acord in the fictitious character of a scout who accompanies Buffalo Bill on many of his famous exploits in the most picturesque and exciting time of American history, a period covered between 1860 and 1870.

The second serial is The Radio King, capitalizing the craze for radio which has captured the country during the last three months. Roy Stewart plays the leading role, and in his support are Al Smith, Sidney Bracey, Louise Lorraine, Clark Comstock and Ernest Butterworth, Jr. It is being directed by Robert F. Hill, whose natural enthusiasm for radio has been aided and abetted in every way by the big electrical department at Universal City, where a big broadcasting station has been constructed for his use. The serial is planned for ten episodes.

Each of the other serials, as scheduled, will be run in the length demanded by the story value.

Among the novelties promised among the 280 short subjects for the year are six more of the popular Leather Pushers stories, six special Universal Century Comedies featuring Baby Peggy, a series of Jack London's Fish Patrol stories, a Lumberjack series, and a series of International News novelties called The Mirror.

"Todd of the Times" Is Good Picture

It's a Pathe Re-edited Playlet, and in It Frank Keenan Gives Excellent Character Study of Editor

A regular picture is Todd of the Times, a three-part re-edited Pathe Playlet. It is a regular picture not only because it is a regular story but also because of the manner in which Frank Keenan plays the city editor. Mr. Keenan's work in the role of Todd is a treat; he makes of it a genuine character study.

Todd has grown old in the service of his paper. He is highly competent, knows his business backward, but he is handicapped by a gentleness of manner, a timidity, an absence of pushfulness—so seriously handicapped, in fact, that a suggestion to the owner that Todd be made managing editor brings a quick "You're crazy!"

The subject is a comedy-drama, and the comedy element is present in goodly measure. Chiefly, however, it is the drama that predominates. As a newspaper story it will rank well up with the best that have come to the screen. Plainly it was devised and executed by those who have knowledge of the inside of a newspaper office and incidentally also by those who know how to build an interesting tale.

One of the entertaining angles of the picture is the treatment of the domestic side—of the home life of Todd, wherein the former widow and the present Mrs. Todd rules with an iron hand, reserving any favors for her massive and good-for-nothing son and who, by the way, she has imperiously placed on the payroll of the Times. Of course Todd eventually becomes managing editor of the paper and on the same day in a fit of inspired rage declares himself managing editor of his own household, an assertion accepted without question by the melting and tearful queen of the boarding house.

R-C Studios Busy on Short Subjects for Fall Release

Short subject production at the R-C studios is now well under way, and the Film Booking Offices will be assured of a plentiful supply of comedies well ahead of its release schedule during the coming season. Carter De Haven has already completed the first two of his two-reel domestic comedies and is nearing the completion of his third. With him is Flora De Haven, completing the comedy team which has proved itself so popular on stage and screen. Mal St. Clair is directing.

Gloria Joy has been started on the production of the first of her series which Sherwood MacDonald will direct and which will occupy an important place on the F. B. O. short subject program in the fall. Her young beau is Glen Gordon, and Gordon Sackville and Dixie Lamont complete the cast. This comedy has been given the title of Sweet Thirteen, and shows the fun that fills the life of fourteen-year-old romancers.

The Frank Gerson Pictures Corporation is just as active with the production of Plum Center Comedies, which star the veteran character comedian, Dan Mason. Four of these rustic comedies have been finished and old "Pop Tuttle," Mason's character name in the series, is cutting capers in the fifth.

The release schedule of these short subjects will be announced by the Film Booking Offices in the near future. F. B. O. believes that it will be able to offer the exhibitor a varied high-class short subject program. With these comedies will be the two single-reel subjects, Hy Mayer Travelaughs and Starland Revue, which are now being released.

Pathe Reports That "The Timber Queen" Is Heavily Booked

The most important mid-summer release from the Pathe Exchange will be the new Pathe serial, The Timber Queen, starring Ruth Roland. It has been scheduled for release July 16. The serial, besides being the tenth chapter play in which Ruth Roland has starred for Pathe, is said to surpass all the Pathe star's previous efforts in her particular field of the photoplay, and is further substantiated by twenty-one circuits and many first run houses which have booked the serial after viewing the first few episodes.

The serial sets a fast pace for the player, dealing with the northwestern timberlands, and giving ideal locations for thrills in the rugged country. As a "hot weather" attraction the chapter play should be sure-fire, as besides showing the cool timberlands the action shifts to Alaska, where strenuous moments take place in the snowy areas. Considerable color is provided by settings in picturesque Argentina, and scenes aboard ship also furnish thrilling moments. With all the fast action in the serial it was produced in a manner designed to be censor-proof. The story is from the pen of Val Cleveland, author of "White Eagle," who also has written successful novels. Fred Jackman is responsible for the direction.

The chapter play was produced under the supervision of Hal Roach. Bruce Gordon, a newcomer to the chapter play, is seen opposite Ruth Roland. Val Paul is seen as the leading "heavy," and is assisted in his villainous operations by Leo Willis and Frank Lackteen, both well known in the serial photoplay. Others playing important roles are Bull Montana, Al Ferguson, Otto Fries and Chris Linton.

Two More Christie Comedies Are Practically Completed

When Al Christie, supervising director of Educational - Christie Comedies, returned to Los Angeles a few days ago from his vacation trip to Europe he found camera work practically completed on the first two of the big Christie Comedies on the schedule for 1922-1923, which calls for twenty pictures for Educational instead of twenty-four, which has been the Christie program for the last two years.

The first of these two subjects is Pardon My Glove, a college and prizefight story featuring Bobby Vernon. It was written by W. Scott Darling and filmed under the direction of William Beaudine and Vernon.

In The Son of a Sheik the Christie players are poking a little fun at the desert dramas which have been coming forth in such large numbers, just as they had sport with the melodramas of the frozen North in Cold Feet. Scott Sidney directed and Neal Burns and Viora Daniel have the leading roles.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

"TORCHY'S NUT SUNDAY"—Two-part comedy, released by Educational.—As an investigator within the walls of a sanitarium in an effort to discover why it is not a financial winner and incidentally to exert his influence to make it a better institution Torchy hardly can be described as a success. He more than creates havoc with the discipline of the place; he converts the patients into athletes. The regimen he installs is simple. He merely distributes fresh milk of a cow. But—the cow has been drinking from a bucket that had been put aside by a home brewer. Of course, this is not all of the story. There's a bit of rivalry in love and there are other contributing incidents which go to make up the complete tale. And it's a pretty good one, taken by and large.

PATHE REVIEW NO. 164.—There is a remarkably fine introduction to this number, truly captioned "Photographic Gems." It is a series of cloud studies of the Cape Peninsula, of Southern Africa. "Down to the County Fair" is a Hy Mayer Travelaugh. "The Ladies of the Iron Toes" shows in slow motion how the toe dancers work—and a very interesting chapter it is. "Where Do They Come From" tells the sources of everyday things, such, for instance, as the source of buttons on a man's coat sleeve. The Pathecolor section is devoted to unusual views of the ruins of Athens.

"A SCANDAL IN BOHEMIA"—No. 3 of the Sherlock Holmes Series, released by Educational.—Eille Norwood as Sherlock Holmes again gives us an unusual interpretation of the great detective. The tale is one of the better known of the series, where a king about to marry seeks to recover from an old flame a photograph of two persons—himself and the lady in question. How Holmes goes about getting it away from the actress and how he fails is most interestingly shown—and in an interesting picture.

"THE DUMBBELL"—"Snub" Pollard comedy, released by Pathe.—"Snub" opens up in a rather convincing old man make-up. Before he has gone very far it is revealed he is an actor in a motion picture company and has been offered a job as director. In spite of his promise not to become temperamental, the presence of too many dumbbells gets on his nerves and he proceeds to wreck the set and clean out the place. Good reliable "Snub" stuff.

"THE SLEUTH"—Rolin Comedy, released by Pathe.—A genuine and a bogus Prince from India upset the discipline and the decorum of a hotel. It is a lively farce, with the fun contributed by Paul Parrott, Sunshine Sammy, Mark Jones, Ethel Broadhurst and Gaylord Lloyd.

"SPRING FEVER"—Single reel reissue by Pathe.—Harold Lloyd, "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels come back to us as a trio in a series of humorous situations.

"TEN MINUTES TO LIVE"—Final episode of Pathe serial, "Go-Get-'Em Hutch."—The action is rapid-fire all the way, one of the best chapters of a strong serial.

"THE FABLE OF BREWING TROUBLE"—Pathe release.—Cartoonist Terry with his cat and the mouse will make 'em all laugh. An amusing number.

Arrow's Curwood Story Is Strong

In "God's Country and the Law" Will Tooker, in Role of Bad Citizen, Gives Characterization That Stands Out

William H. Tooker in the role of Jacques Dore very nearly runs away with God's Country and the Law. And this is said in spite of the fact that Mr. Tooker carries the role of a very bad egg—a rum runner and a libertine. For the former and lesser crime—and it is still said to be a crime inside the three-mile limit—there may be many who will be inclined to overlook his infraction of the law as it is understood in the country of which Mr. Curwood was writing. It was the tendency of Jacques Dore to abuse the hospitality of the widely scattered homes of those who live in the Big Woods that turned against him the hand of every ordinarily honest person in the countryside.

The production, which is being distributed by Arrow, was shown at the New York Strand the week of July 2. It will rank as a better than entertaining subject—easily it may be described as one of strength. It possesses genuine drama, given to it by reason not of one but of several well-connected situations that grip; and it has real entertainment value through its pictorial qualities, in the eye for composition displayed in its selection of backgrounds, in its play of lights and shades, its blending of tumbling stream and placid lake, of forest and field. And so far as we recall there is not a flake of snow in the entire subject!

The interest very quickly centers upon five persons and there remains to the end —upon Dore, upon Marie and her husband Andre, played by Gladys Leslie and Fred C. Jones; upon 'Poleon and his daughter Oachi, played by Cesare Gravina and Hope Sutherland.

Miss Leslie enacts her role with a fire and a dash that will appeal to old and young. It's a good quintet.

God's Country and the Law will reflect credit upon its director, Sydney Olcott, and upon its producer, Pine Tree Pictures.

Regal Films Takes Warner Productions for All of Canada

The entire output of the Warner Brothers for the coming season has been purchased by Arthur Cohen and N. J. Nathanson, of the Regal Film, Ltd., Canada, according to Harry M. Warner. This is considered one of the biggest deals ever successfully negotiated by an independent concern, in view of the fact that the productions have not as yet been completed.

Cohen and Nathanson have bought Your Best Friend, the Harry Rapf production starring Vera Gordon, and the seven other features announced by Warner Brothers for fall release. These include A Dangerous Adventure, with Grace Darmond; Rags to Riches, featuring Wesley Barry; Brass, Charles G. Norris' novel of marriage and divorce; Little Heroes of the Street, with Wesley Barry; The Beautiful and Damned, F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel; Little Church Around the Corner, adapted from the stage play of the same name, and Main Street, the novel by Sinclair Lewis.

The Regal Film organization has a chain of exchanges in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, N. B., Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

"Your Best Friend" Breaks One Gordon Record in Boston

Your Best Friend, the Harry Rapf production starring Vera Gordon and distributed by the Warner Brothers, has broken the precedent of the Gordon circuit, Boston. Never before in the history of the circuit has a feature been booked as a second run in a first run house. The Olympia will show the picture, following its run at the Tremont-Temple.

Fully 90 per cent of the country has been sold, according to Harry M. Warner. While many of the exchanges handling the picture have not as yet released the picture, due to the uncertainty of business conditions in their respective territories, the bookings to date are said to reveal that Miss Gordon has enjoyed considerable popularity wherever the feature has been shown.

Harry Smith Brings New Productions from Abroad

Mr. Smith has brought several productions with him, and while in New York will negotiate for the British and Continental rights to a number of American features and two-reel comedies.

"Conditions in England are steadily improving," says Mr. Smith. "We feel the crisis has passed and that the film business is again coming into its own. We look forward to a busy autumn and a new era of prosperity in the industry."

Second European Party of Atlantic Enterprises Sails

The second contingent of the producing staff of Atlantic Enterprises, Inc., sailed July 1 for Europe, where immediate production will be inaugurated on a series of features planned for the American trade.

Heading the party is Walter R. Hall, lately appointed scenario editor of the company, and his wife, a picture and stage star; Jose Fabra, casting director, who will later head a separate producing unit in his native country, Spain, and assistant director, property men and electricians.

Frank Gordon Kirby, director in charge of production, has been on the ground for some time, oiling the ways for a quick launching of the producing unit. The first Atlantic Enterprises, Inc., production is due to arrive in New York Sept. 1, 1922.

Will Nigh Nearly Ready to Shoot on "Notoriety"

Weber and North, for whom Will Nigh will produce for the independent market, announce that it is the intention of the director to extend himself on his coming pictures. He promises those exchangemen who have extended their congratulations on his new contract will, so far as he is able, be convinced that he will continue to "say it with pictures."

The cast for the first picture, Notoriety, practically is ready, and the script is ready to shoot. It is stated the story is a bit different from Mr. Nigh's usual type of production, but that he believes it will catch the interest of all elements.

Schwartz and Don Bartlett Join Atlantic Enterprises

Atlantic Enterprises, Inc., announces this week that Richard A. Schwartz has joined the company in the capacity of general manager.

Don Bartlett has been signed up as production editor. Mr. Bartlett is a former newspaper man. He joined Paramount in 1915 as publicity manager of the New York exchange, was subsequently advertising manager of Triangle, assistant scenario editor of the Triangle Yonkers studio, assistant publicity manager of Vitagraph, for three years production editor of Vitagraph, and assistant production editor of Famous Players-Lasky, severing connections with the latter company upon the closing of the Long Island City studio. For the last year Mr. Bartlett has made a special study of European production.

"Curse of Drink" Nearly Ready

Weber and North state that their six-part feature The Curse of Drink will be ready for showing to the trade within a few days. Answering an inquiry as to the significance of the title it is declared the picture is just "wet" enough to justify the name, which it is believed is a powerful box office phrase and one that will stimulate talk and ticket sale. In the cast are Harry Morey, Edmund Breese, George Fawcett, Marguerite Clayton and Miriam Batista.

Sidney Jay Returns to England

Sidney Jay, the London manager who came to the United States to engage Mae Marsh to star abroad for the Graham Wilcox productions, is back in England. Miss Marsh already has sailed. Just before Mr. Jay's departure he said he looked forward to an adoption by British producers of the policy of engaging one or more American stars for each of their subjects.

"School Days" Put Over Big in Omaha

Sun Theatre Plays to Record Business Following Many Tie-ups with Local Merchants and Also with Local Bank

Outside of one big circuit booking in New York, the Warner Brothers production, Gus Edwards' School Days, starring Wesley Barry, is said to have been booked in over 50 per cent of the theatres in the territory.

A big exploitation campaign was recently put over in Omaha by Harold Horne, of the Supreme Pictures, that city, during and prior to the showing of School Days at the Sun Theatre. Nate Frudenfeld, director of the World Realty chain of theatres, also assisted.

The oustanding feature was the securing of many window displays with the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company. The concern put out a Wesley Barry School Days cookie and furnished a staff of men to help put the picture over. For a street ballyhoo six big trucks were paraded through the main streets of the city—all carrying big signs announcing the attraction.

Tie-ups were also made with local merchants by building special school rooms in windows with desks and school bells and blackboards. Horne and Frudenfeld also landed a tie-up with a local bank whereby the institution offered a free ticket to every child who started a bank account of a dollar or more. It is reported the bank opened up 1200 new accounts.

In addition to these stunts a department store offered a ticket to the show to every youngster who came into its boys' department accompanied by a grown-up. The store advertised the fact in the local dailies, and also decked their windows with the many accessories available with the feature. On the street all the newsboys wore the School Days dunce caps, and for the opening performance free lollypops were given to the children. The special show was put on early in the morning, and it is said the theatre was packed to capacity.

A store window filled with the lollypops were made the basis of a guessing contest, and to every youngster who could guess within fifty of the number of pops in the window was given a free ticket to the theatre. The newspapers carried considerable advertising and publicity material, and altogether the Sun Theatre is said to have played to the biggest business in its history.

Harry Cohn Says in Another Month Things Will Start

The outlook for the coming season is big, and especially so for independents, judging from activities and plans under way at the West Coast production centres, says Harry Cohn, and there is every cause for producers, distributors and exhibitors to look forward to the new season with deepest confidence.

Mr. Cohn, who makes his headquarters in the West, came East two weeks ago to bring the print of C.B.C.'s More To Be Pitied Than Scorned."

Not only has Mr. Cohn made a close study of Coast conditions during the past few months, but on his way East he stopped off at several of the principal cities with a view to sounding out exhibitors and exchange men on the outlook and their wants.

On the Coast, says Mr. Cohn, while several of the studios are not working at present, there is in this no cause for alarm, but rather for congratulation, most of the producers having seen the wisdom of adopting the short-year production plan and outlining their production schedules, both in number of pictures made and in time consumed in making them, to avoid the carrying on of expensive organizations during the summer, warned by the conditions that followed their lack of foresight last year.

For this very reason, and because reawakened activities will come with added zest, for which big plans are under way, the coming season will be a bigger one than ever, and it is his opinion that within four to six weeks all doubt as to the prosperity of the coming season will be definitely done away with.

"After Six Days" Set for Broadway Run During August

Following the conclusion of the successful engagement of After Six Days at Wood's Theatre, Atlantic City, this week, Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation will make arrangements for the presentation of this Biblical spectacle at Asbury Park and Newark, preparatory to bringing the feature into New York some time in August for an extended run at one of the theatres on Broadway.

Extensive preparations are being made for the exploitation of this picture as a big road show attraction. A souvenir program, forty-four pages in size, and printed in rotogravure, is now being compiled, together with what promises to be a most elaborate campaign book. This will be of 100 pages. It will contain many illustrations in three colors and exploitation matter covering the advance advertising of the production as a regular legitimate theatrical offering. The covers will be so arranged that it will be possible to frame them in the lobby of the theatre as a special decoration.

Seattle Exchange Notes

Seattle Arrow Exchange reports bookings so heavy on The Girl from Porcupine that it has become necessary to order extra prints. The Seattle Blue Mouse plays this subject the week of July 8.

Announce Dumas Parody

Davidson-Kranz, Inc., of the Loew Building, New York, announces the coming issue of Two-and-a-Half Musketeers, an L. H. Schlesinger production, a parody in three reels based on the Dumas story. The picture has been cut from five reels and now is in the hands of an expert titler. The distributors promise a novelty for the lovers of broad farce.

Apfel's Company at Work

Cable advices from Holland to Producers Security Corporation state that the American unit starring Evelyn Greeley and Carlyle Blackwell in several features is hard at work on the first production. The company is in charge of Oscar Apfel.

"Arabian Nights" Brought to Screen

"A Thousand and One Nights" Is a Pretentious Subject, Magnificently Staged and Played by Cast of Excellence

Captain Edward Harten Beckert and J. E. Robbins are showing to the trade A Thousand and One Nights, a pretentious Russian subject directed by M. Tourjansky and staged in Nice and within a fifty-mile radius of the ruins of Carthage. It is a tale of the Arabian Nights, or rather a weaving together of three of the tales, and so skillfully are they knitted that only a person familiar with the unexpurgated edition of the work will recognize more than one cohesive story. Its length is 6300 feet. The editing and titling have been done by Mr. Robbins. For the titles he has clung in the main to the text of the book.

The picture is splendidly made. The settings constitute one of the outstanding features. In many instances the backgrounds are of living masonry, masonry that has lived and will continue to live in all human probability for centuries. Massive, stately structures they are, and they match the atmosphere of the tale.

It is said that before M. Tourjansky would proceed with the photographing of the story he spent many months in a close study of American technique, examining picture after picture produced in this country. That his study was worth while will be conceded by those who see his product. The direction and the acting speak for themselves.

Another one of the remarkable factors in the production is the personality of the feminine leading player, Nathalie Kovanko. She is a woman of rare beauty. Russian Pole she may be; she might be American, so far as the classic features indicate. And she lives on the screen the tragic role she portrays. That is of Gul-Y-Hanar, daughter of a ruler, who is captured, thrown into slavery, and rescued by Prince Soleiman. The latter characterization is taken by M. Rimsky, a player of capacity.

The costuming matches the other essentials, in richness and in variety.

The story is of the love, almost at first sight, of Gul-Y-Hanar and Prince Soleiman. The latter, in order to prevent the execution of the girl, asks his father to be permitted to prescribe the punishment, and she is confided to his care. In the many following vicissitudes the Prince fights to remain near Gul-Y-Hanar, eventually restoring her to her father. G. B.

Rialto Production Is Well Made, but Lacks Real Interest

The Broadway for the week of June 25 showed Nine Seconds from Heaven, being distributed by Rialto Productions. The picture is competently played and well staged, but the story will not attract—unless it be for those who find charm in contemplating large sums of money in the hands of a negative personality, one who reaches the wise conclusion the best thing he can do is to die.

The tale is of Ballard, a wealthy young man, surrounded by dozens of servants, who decides he will kill himself and leave his money to a young man who through losses at the gaming table he learns is about to commit suicide. Before Ballard is able to carry out his intention he is interrupted by an incident which leads to a long train of events, the chief of which is the successful effort of Ballard to rescue a young woman he believes to be in the clutches of a bad crowd. Of course, it turns out the friends of the young man have planned all the apparent devilment in order to provide him with an interest in life.

The producer of the picture is not named, but it is said the work was done in Denmark. As stated, the subject is well staged and also well played. The leading character, however, is represented to be such a social parasite, farcically so in fact, that sympathy for him is alienated at the beginning. It is an uphill fight for him from that point to regain the concern of his house.

The surprise twist at the end will help the picture from the exploitation side. This latter angle, too, will be aided by the striking title. Warren A. Newcombe is deserving of credit for the artistic subtitles. G. B.

"Barb' Wire," with Jack Hoxie, Makes a Good "Western"

There is one situation in Barb' Wire, a Sunset Production presented by Anthony J. Xydias, which in itself almost is sufficient to put over the picture. It is a smashing incident, literally and figuratively. Jack Hoxie in the role of Jack Harding is in court under preliminary examination on a charge of murder. The defendant realizes his enemies have so skillfully laid their plans that it will be difficult for him to prove his innocence from inside a prison.

For purposes of identification Harding's favorite horse is standing in the courtroom, fully equipped, and facing a window. His mother, on the witness stand, suddenly flashes a pistol on the entire court. Jack throws a chair at the window, tearing out frame as well as glass. He jumps on the horse, and with a bound the animal is through the aperture. It's all over in a flash, but it certainly is a thriller.

The story is written by William Lester and Marin Sais, and the former plays the heavy role. Jean Porter has the part of Joan Lorne. with whom Harding is in love. Olah Norman scores as the mother of Harding. The five-reel western is directed by Frank Grandon, who has done his work well. The interest is well sustained, and the action is fast. Hoxie has plenty to do in the way of fisticuffs. and those who like that kind of thing will get their fill. G. B.

Bernstein and Syracuse Films Are Sold Abroad

Producers Security Corporation announces a big foreign contract having been consummated this week whereby Cinematographers Harry of Paris secured the rights for The Great Alone and The Isle of Doubt for France, Belgium and Switzerland. The former is Isadore Bernstein's feature starring Monroe Salisbury. The other subject is a Syracuse Motion Pictures Company picture starring Wyndham Standing, supported by George Fawcett and Dorothy Mackaill. Last week Producers placed The Isle of Doubt with Playgoers Pictures Corporation for distribution in the United States and Canada.

Baum Due Home from Abroad

Louis Baum, general manager of Equity Pictures, will arrive in New York on the Olympic on Tuesday, July 11, after a two months' European trip. Mr. Baum's trip combined business with pleasure. The Equity general manager will immediately devote all his efforts to "What's Wrong With the Women?" Daniel Carson Goodman's production, which will be Equity's big fall release on the independent market. This picture has just been cut and edited by Mr. Goodman and was screened for Equity officials this week. It was acclaimed as the biggest production Equity has handled.

Western Pictures Moves Into New Eastern Offices

Owing to the demands of increasing business, Western Pictures Exploitation Company has taken offices in Suite 1211 in the Loew State Building, where its Eastern business will be conducted. The home offices will continue in Los Angeles.

Irving M. Lesser, general manager of the company, will, as formerly, represent the Jackie Coogan Productions and the West Coast Theatres, Inc. The Eastern office staff is unchanged, with Max Roth, office manager, and Harry Rathner as field representative.

Mr. Lesser states that Flesh and Blood, featuring Lon Chaney, will shortly be ready for showing to the trade.

Anthony J. Xydias Reports Eight Sales on Hoxie Series

Anthony J. Xydias, of Sunset Productions, reports that he has made the following territorial sales on a series of eight Jack Hoxie westerns:

Mailing Lists—How to Use Them

A Few Passes and Diplomacy Will Get Lists You Never Dreamed of

II. Where to Obtain Lists

THERE are as many ways of getting mailing lists as there are of putting on a picture. Most of them are inexpensive. Like all other things there is, of course, an expensive way to get what you want, but why go to great expense when the same material is available to you at nominal cost?

The best mailing list is that of the voters in your community. Nowadays women vote so these lists are more complete than ever and besides they give correct addresses, the age of the voter and the business. Usually these lists are obtained from the registrar of voters or the county clerks in small communities.

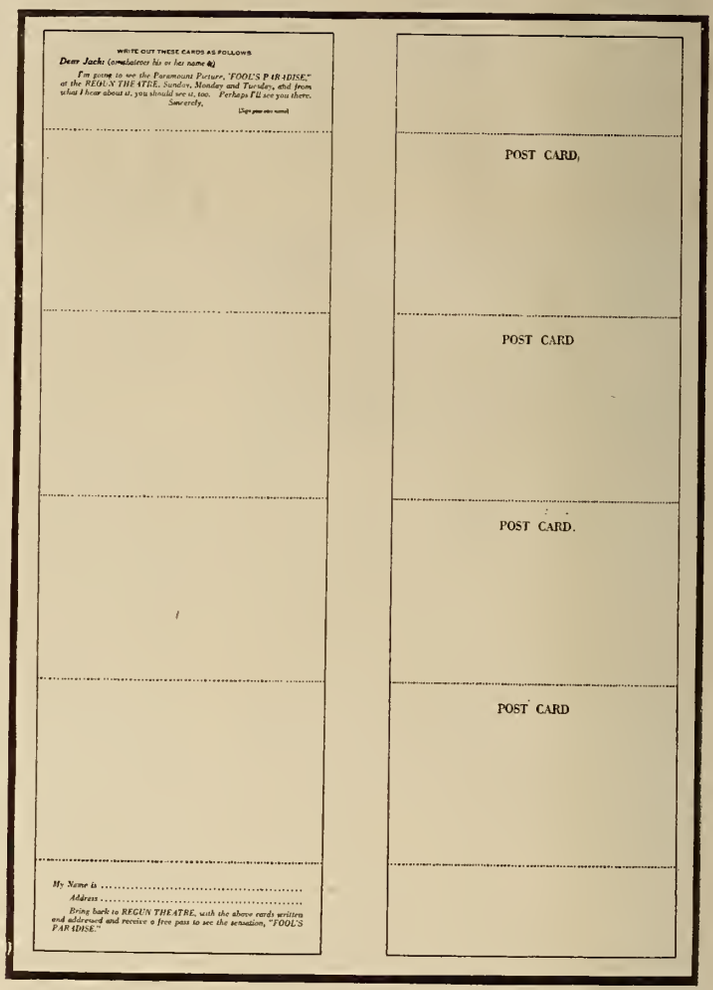
Then there is the telephone book, the city directory, the birth, marriage and other vital statistic records published in the daily or weekly papers. Year books, gotten out by churches, clubs, schools and civic societies are useful, in fact, any publication which contains names and addresses can be used.

The most complete mailing list we have ever seen was gotten up by the use of a few passes and diplomacy. A manager announced on his screen that patrons who sent in a list of ten names and addresses of friends or acquaintances interested in the movies would be given one or more passes. The result of this was the co-operation of every delivery man and boy in the town, every janitor and telephone operator in the city. The delivery men gave the names and addresses of every person they served; the janitors and telephone operators furnished lists of tenants in apartment buildings. In this way those persons not listed in directories or on voters' registers were reached and, it might be added, this class of persons is numerous.

Children may be offered passes to furnish complete lists of the families near them together with information as to whether they attend the movies, and, if so, what kind of pictures they like. Such lists are extremely valuable and if purchased from firms who make a regular business of supplying would cost a good bit.

To keep lists up to date is not a difficult matter, and, as pointed out in another article of this series, every so often mailing matter should be sent out to all lists under a 2-cent stamp so that post office returns may be taken from the list.

There is no end to schemes for getting lists. To cover them all would take up pages of space. The simplest ideas, tried and tested, are given in this article and any human being with a little imagination and active mind and willing co-workers, can enlarge upon the ideas here suggested.



A simple post-card costing $6 advertised "Fool's Paradise" for the Regun Theatre, New York, developed a mailing list, created a lot of talk and brought abundant good-will to the theatre.

A week before the opening it was announced with slides that anyone wishing to see "Fool's Paradise" free should ask the manager. The patron was given a sheet of four post-cards, on each of which he was to write a given message with a name and address on the reverse side. After the cards were filled out, the patron returned them to the theatre and received a free admission for his trouble.

In this way the exhibitor put over a post-card stunt and the public did the work for him. Out of the 2000 cards distributed 1500 came back, which gave him a mailing list of 6000 names.

Are You Following the Series?

Experience has shown that when properly managed the mailing list has unfailingly proved itself one of the most important and profitable adjuncts in the range of advertising enterprise. Known as the "direct method," the mailing system enables the exhibitor to get his message before the prospective patron under the most favorable circumstances, since, unlike the other advertising forms, it is not in competition with other advertising matter as is the case with newspaper displays or posters.

The series of articles, which commenced in the issue of July 8th, now running in EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, will present facts and methods of practical use to the showman who wishes to avail himself of the advertising opportunities offered by the efficient mailing list. In order that the subject may be entirely covered in your considerations, it is essential that all the articles in this series be carefully studied. Thus the subject may be completely gone over and a full understanding of the ways and means for building up and conducting a mailing list accomplished.

Mailing Ads.

A photographic reproduction of the ensemble of Paramount stars appearing in "The Affairs of Anatol," coupled with an announcement of the play dates of the picture, as shown in the upper left corner, proved a business-getting mail ad, when used by the O'Klare Theatre

A weekly program for distribution through the mail used by the Waldorf Theatre, Lynn, Mass., represents an ingenious and inexpensive device. This program, announcing the dates of "Boomerang Bill" and "Three Live Ghosts," folds through the center, the front cover carrying the name of the theatre and the back devoted to coming attractions. The program is made up on mimeograph paper and is executed on the mimeograph machine. The type, hand lettering and sketches are directly on the wax sheet with a stylograph

---

The illustration, right-hand corner of the page, is of a folder or herald such as are made up by firms whose specialty is ready printed matter of this kind for motion picture advertising. These heralds are 4⅝ inches wide and 7 inches deep, and folded once fit the ordinary small envelope. The inside tells the story of the film, and the back page has the imprint of your theatre. The cost of heralds of this type is about $2.75 per thousand.

Showman Beat Epidemic Ban

Feldman, of Stratford, Conn., Was Alive to Public Sentiment and Capitalized

By
FRED E. WALTERS
Paramount Exploiteer—New Haven

It was a wise man who said "Experience is a great teacher." It was also a wise man who said that the lack of initiative did more harm than all the experience put together did good.

That both these remarks are true in their own way is proven by the cycle of events that caused Harry Feldman, manager of the Stratford Theatre, Stratford, Conn., to forget all about his many years of experience as an exhibitor and depend upon his initiative, when he was advised on very short notice that the ban on the closing of theatres due to an epidemic, was about to be lifted. In fact, Harry beat the public health authorities at their own game twice in succession.

Stratford is a community of about 15,000 people, and, of course, when the epidemic broke out a public meeting was held at the town hall to determine the means and ways to protect against the spread of the illness. Feldman, like every good citizen of the community, attended this meeting and when he learned the sentiment of those present, assured the health authorities if they so desired, he would close his playhouse. This he did, twelve hours before requested to do so.

By doing this, he not only won the favor of the authorities but of the community at large as was shown by the result. At the earliest possible moment, at which it could safely be done, he was invited to open his theatre to the public. This happened some three or four days prior to the time expected by him. Mr. Feldman, of course, desiring to take advantage of the opportunity to open, immediately got in touch with the film exchanges and secured The Green Temptation, which he had billed for showing during the period he was closed.

Now arose the question of how to get in touch with the public of his community and his patrons. This is where the initiative came in. Mr. Feldman got in touch with the telephone company and was advised there were 1,300 and some resident telephones in his town.

He arranged with the manager of the local telephone office for the services of four girls. Each girl called up the various subscribers, in a very personal way got either the lady of the house or some member of the family on the phone, told them that the ban had been lifted on the Stratford Theatre, that it was going to open that evening and that they were expected to attend as a sort of celebration; that the health crisis had passed. This last was so replete with suggestion that it sold the idea with a bang.

Mr. Feldman's stunt proved its value by the capacity business during both of the days. It was hard to realize that there had been an epidemic in the community, so great was the patronage.

Wolf Cubs Draw

Coincidence and an ability to take advantage of an opportunity brought success to Manager E. Metzger of the Strand Theatre, Creston, Iowa, during his showing of First National's The Silent Call. The newspapers carried a story about a farmer who had captured five young wolf cubs. Manager Metzger secured their loan for his house during the run of The Silent Call, and then held a special matinee offering passes to boys bringing dogs with some wolf strain in them. More than two hundred youngsters responded, and even water spaniels were led forward with the assertion that they had a wolf strain. The judges were liberal in their decision, as the free advertising given the picture almost doubled normal receipts.

The wolf cubs were used in the lobby of the theatre for display purposes.

Advance Stunt

Although Manager Claude Cady of the Gladmer Theatre, Lansing, Mich., cannot play Nice People before its release, September 4, he has begun an advance campaign in the State Journal.

The newspaper's staff photographer will haunt the streets between now and September 4, "shooting" pedestrians at random. Cuts will be made from these photographs, and one or more will be reproduced each day for a full two months before the showing under the proper caption of "Nice People."

If a reader recognizes himself, all he has to do is to clip the picture and present it at the box-office at the theatre and receive a free ticket. John D. Howard, Paramount exploiteer from Detroit, is handling the stunt.

Electric Sign Display Heralds "The Storm"

Universal Engaged Some of Largest Broadway Electric Signs to Flash New Play

Variety In Capitol's "Nanook" Displays

All Tieup Angles Used to Effect in New York Showing of Eskimo Film

The exploitation campaign for the run of Pathe's Nanook of The North at the Capitol Theatre, New York, did not overlook any opportunities for window displays, chief among which were the "Eskimo Pie" displays at several of the Liggett Drug Stores. A liberal use of black and white scene stills from the film and snow effects, requiring nothing more elaborate than some white cotton batting, made up the drug store displays, as shown in the photographs at the left and the centre. The photograph at the right shows the way Putnam's Book Store in West 45th Street, took advantage of the photoplay to feature their books of the Northland in a window dressed with scene-stills and curios collected by Explorer Flaherty, who produced Nanook of the North.

Theatre-Bank Tieup Stirs Cleveland

Loew's Stillman Distributes Checks in Joint Campaign That Proves Success for Show and Savings Bank

Loew's Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, gave away a little thing like $50,000 to advertise The Good Provider when it played there. But it did not take this out of its bank account. The distribution of funds on a wholesale scale was accomplished through a tie-up of advertising interests of a Cleveland bank company and the theatre.

The Reliance Saving and Loan Company figured that if it could land 15,000 to 25,000 new $10 saving accounts it would realize profitable returns from a $50,000 advertising investment. Through the negotiations of Spencer G. Sladdin, Paramount exploiteer, the theatre was tied up for a co-operative campaign on The Good Provider because of the aptness of the title.

During the week's run every patron was given a check for $1, on the reverse side of which was printed:

This certificate is good for $1.00 extra credit on a new savings account amounting to $10 within thirty days and maintained for one year.

When Sladdin broached the subject to the President of the loan company, the latter recommended $25,000 in credit, but his board of directors became so enthusiastic that they raised the amount to $50,000.

No theatrical advertising ever created a greater stir in Cleveland. The early afternoon and the supper shows usually playing to far below capacity played to nearly full houses. The late afternoon show and the two night performances invariably played to "standees."

Of the fifty thousand checks distributed, it is estimated thirty thousand $10 accounts will result, figuring on the basis of the returns so far. It is impossible to make an exact statement, because the holders of the certificates have until July 1st to open the accounts.

Exploits Without Cost

How to exploit without an appropriation was answered for Manager Hill of the Strand Theatre, Albany, N. Y., during the run of Smilin' Through. The manager was keen for advertising his show, but had no money to spend. The First National exploitation man co-operated in paving the way.

The Chamber of Commerce gave a banquet, at which the guests and speakers included Governor Miller, the Mayor of Albany and Congressman Daniel A. Reed. The slogan, "Let's Go Smilin' Through with the Chamber of Commerce for a Greater and Better Albany."

The Knickerbocker Press offered ten pair of tickets to Smilin' Through for the best slogans for the campaign to include the phrases: "Albany," "Chamber of Commerce" and "Smilin' Through"; and the campaign was supplemented by eight excellent window displays and a double truck in the Times Union.

"Madame X" Campaign

Extensive exploitation was introduced in South America with the release of the Goldwyn drama, Madame X in Buenos Aires by the New York Film Exchange. Through a campaign of newspaper and billboard advertising, the name Madame X and the star of the production, Pauline Frederick, were brought to the attention of the public in Argentine in a forceful manner.

South American film men watched the results of the campaign with particular interest as they have been somewhat skeptical about large expenditures for advertising. In and about Buenos Aires alone, 45,000 posters were placed.

On account of the liberal advertising expenditure the newspapers of Buenos Aires opened their news columns to stories about the picture and photographs of Pauline Frederick.

The success of the campaign was so emphatic that more aggressive exploitation is looked for in the future in South America.

Designs Prize Poster

The $25 prize offered by the Coliseum Theatre management for the best poster on Fools First, was awarded to Frank Titus, a student at the Seattle School of Commercial Art. His subject was the folly of the pursuit of fame, and was so cleverly illustrated that it was chosen from among many excellent entries. The prize winning postal will be used for advertising purposes.

Parading Your Show

Campaigns that were staged for some recent Paramount productions: 1. The Majestic, Augusta, Ga., only accessories were used in this "Beyond the Rocks" display. 2. The Imperial, Jacksonville, Fla., sports a special and especially effective new front for "Beyond the Rocks." 3. A section of the baseball parade gotten up by the Capitol, Hartford, Conn., for "The Bachelor Daddy." The best looking team received a loving cup presented by Thomas Meighan. 4. "Bonnie Brier Bush" window display for the Walkerville Theatre, Walkerville, Ont. 5. Window of the Western Union office at Brockton, Mass., displaying "Beyond the Rocks" for the Strand Theatre. 6. Parade in St. Louis in which a tire company, oil company and motor company tied up with the Missouri Theatre for "Across the Continent." 7. Some of the score of motors tied up with the Plaza showing of "Fool's Paradise"

Business Is Going to School—II

Second Article by Hyman Tells of the Weeds That Hinder the Fertile Garden

By EDWARD L. HYMAN
Managing Director Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre

This is the second of the series by Edward L. Hyman. He tells some managerial truths very apropos of this season of the year. His ideas of summer advertising differ from the usual, as you will see in reading.

The serious losses caused motion picture theatre owners by abnormal summer seasons, comparable in some degree to the sudden and extreme heat wave of the past two weeks, finds managers and owners stunned. Every summer presents similar situations, and yet little has been accomplished of any consequence designed to eliminate or reduce these losses. Every June, July and August furnishes the same predicament—and how negligible has been the corrective action.

Summer losses, figures will show, are among the chief items of waste in the motion picture business. Other commercial organizations have studied such problems and have learned through experience to take effective curative steps. Groups of managers in every state in the Union would no doubt discover pure gold in a thorough research of the summer situation with findings compiled and published for the benefit of the individual exhibitor.

Department stores have studied the seasonal troubles to the point where these vexations are an open book. Even the legitimate theatres have displayed greater progress than the men who control the destinies of the motion picture theatre.

In fact, my own experience in both metropolitan and small cities leads me to the conclusion that managers, producers and distributing organizations need to meet on a common ground to discuss a permanent relief program for hot weather periods.

Many a capable manager has dropped by the wayside because of dissatisfaction caused by a bad summer slump in receipts, and hundreds of owners can vouch for the great annual loss caused by frequent changing of managers. This is another loss which I shall go into later. I am not pleading the cause of the manager who faces the usual summer obstacle and does not breast it.

In many sections the motion picture business is suffering from general debility. Further complications, such as a very poor summer season (and the early hot weather is an ill omen), ought to teach us the lessons of preparation. I cannot offer any standard plan to meet the situation, but I am sure that a group of managers, producers and distributors appointed to study it and report could find means to at least ameliorate summer worries. I have found some myself, because I have tabulated past summer experiences and have figured and thought in December when business was big how I would meet the situation when July and August arrived with their sweltering temperature.

Many managers and owners throw up their hands and assume an attitude that people will not visit a theatre, no matter what the attraction, when the mercury hovers at 85 or 90. This class is nearer right than those who refuse to grasp the situation in its true light, and aggravate the condition by over-advertising in an effort to fool the public into believing that seashore breezes prevail in their theatres.

It is my sincere opinion that more harm is done through playing up the fact that the weather IS warm than would be done if the manager forgot the weather entirely in his advertising.

It has been my experience that every effort made to create an atmosphere of coolness within the theatre and outside pays greater dividends than by putting an idea of heat into a possible patron's mind through advertising. It has been my plan always to take every step to make our theatre comfortable in warm weather, but I never have featured it in my advertising. The psychological effect, it seems to me, is all wrong.

What definite steps can be taken to meet the hot weather period? I humbly offer my suggestions, which are based on personal opinion backed by some experience and considerable study. Here they are:

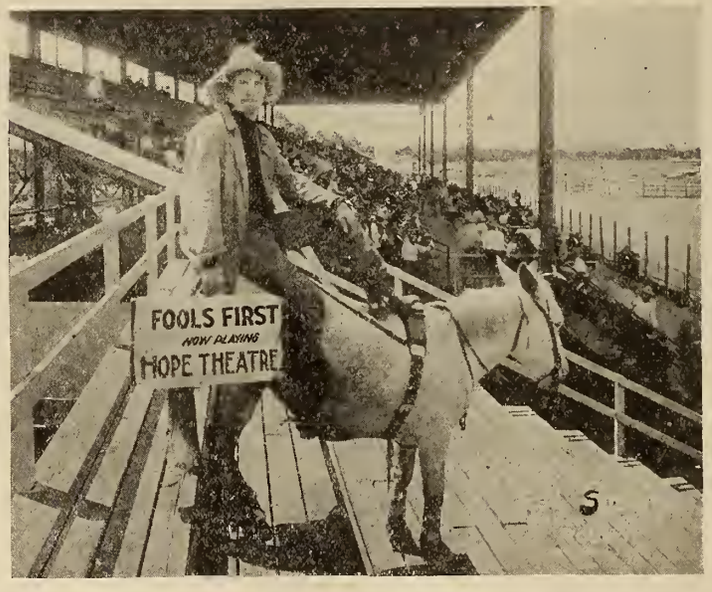
1. Ill-conceived hot weather advertising and exploitation is waste, especially if over-advertising is resorted to in an effort to force business. I believe that all forms of advertising should be kept at a minimum in June, July and August, consequent with good judgment. I do not mean that advertising costs should be drastically slashed. However, I believe that it is just as bad judgment to spend money for "splash" advertising when the odds of temperature are 100 to 1, as it would be to stop advertising entirely. My suggestion is reduction, however, rather than extension. Of course, individual situations must be taken into consideration.

2. Costly, heavily exploited features in extreme hot weather, especially in summer holiday periods, are demonstrations of poor managerial judgment. Medium-priced, worth-while pictures and programs will be just as effective in a 90-degree temperature as the highest priced picture and incidental program purchasable.

3. The conduct and policy of a theatre in winter and fall, and its general institutional popularity, have a real bearing upon the amount of a house's summer business. A theatre that has kept faith with its patronage eight months in the year and has promoted its institutional standing in the community need not worry about being forsaken in hot weather. Let me explain. The Brooklyn Mark Strand is a household word in Brooklyn. When motion picture entertainment of the high type is thought of the Strand is very liable to come to mind. This is due to the fact that the Brooklyn public has been absolutely trained to visit the Strand week after week. Many regular patrons often come into the theatre without knowing what the feature will be. They expect a good show every visit. In other words, the Strand has been given a community standing and this standing pays in hot weather, for patrons know that programs will not be cut down and orchestras reduced to meet warm weather requirements. Those who do go to the theatre in hot weather would naturally select the Strand because they expect and exact their money's worth under all conditions. And a good hot weather bill can be given without splurging and high overhead.

4. The physical aspect of a theatre has a distinct effect on whether or not patrons will return a second or third time in a hot weather wave. A house can be so decorated and administrated in warm weather as to create a maximum of comfort. The Strand eliminates all warm, ruddy lighting in summer. Pale yellows, cool light blues, pinks and canary tints dominate the interior color scheme. The seats are covered with pale colorings in chintzes. Summer plants and flowers are distributed at vantage points both in lobby and interior. In novelties, water and outdoor scenes and effects are given whenever possible and soloists sing light numbers of outdoor motif. All music is light and cheery. All exits are open, whenever possible, and attendants are garbed in cool clothes and are instructed to be extremely polite in warm weather. The men in the orchestra wear Palm Beach suits. In fact, everything is done in the theatre that would be done in the home of a wealthy man to create comfort against warm weather obstacles.

Big cutouts featured the arresting window display contrived by Manager R. R. Russell as an important item in his campaign for the showing of Metro's 'Fascination" at Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, Tenn. Much was added to the colorful effect of the window by the use of oil paintings of the most striking scenes of the play.



The Hope Theatre, Dallas, had a cowboy of more than local fame go out and round up the rodeo of the Southeast Durbar for the showing of "Fools First," the First National attraction.

A boat, designed to suggest in more ways than one the spirit of Buster Keaton's comedy, and mounted above the lobby of the Alamo, Griffin, Ga., was the outstanding feature of Manager A. H. Cobb's lobby for First National's "The Boat." The craft bore the name of the comedian's yacht in the picture and Keaton's face peered over the gunwale.

Swears It's Good Show

Sam Perlin, general manager of the New Strand Theatre, San Francisco, went the "personal affidavit" exploitation one better when he played Tol'able David. He went before a notary public and swore to the statement that this First National attraction was one of the best pictures he had ever seen and that it would give satisfaction.

Then he went the usual run of such stunts one better. He not only had the affidavit reproduced in the newspapers but had printed copies made. Five thousand of these were distributed on the streets and through the mailing list. In a place where a theatre or manager has a steady trade and a strong personal following such a line of exploitation is especially fruitful.

Ties-up with Legion

Pocahontas, Iowa.—When Cecil B. DeMille's Affairs of Anatol played at the Rialto Theatre, the management turned an American Legion dance into an "Anatol Ball" with most profitable results for both.

The ball room was decorated with Anatol paintings and banners and prizes were given to the ladies most resembling the stars in the picture.

The affair was announced in all the surrounding towns, which helped to play up the picture in great fashion. This clever bit of exploitation was one of the reasons for the record-breaking attendance for the Rialto Theatre.

'Phone Company Helps

As far as available records go, Manager Ed. Dewing of the Opera House, Centreville, Md., is the first exhibitor to make the telephone company a regular adjunct to his publicity campaigns. Starting with Penrod he had the operators at the local exchange call up all the subscribers and tell them of the opening of this First National attraction at the Opera House.

Now the operators do this regularly three times a week, acting as advance program and announcers for every change of bill. The only cost to Mr. Dewing is four season passes, one to each of the operators.

Hubby's Day

For once in his life dad or hubby got the best of it. Manager Chas. A. Fuller of the Virginia Theatre, Wheeling, Va., arranged that every husband attending any matinee performance of Is Matrimony a Failure? accompanied by his wife, would be admitted free, although the better half had to shell out.

"This was something like giving away ice in the winter" said Fuller, "because a small percentage of the husbands could knock off work long enough to see the picture. However, it made a big hit with everybody and caused a lot of talk."

Mr. Fuller also offered $35 in gold as prizes to the best essay on the question Is Matrimony a Failure? The contest was executed by the newspaper.

Attractive newspaper ads making known Mr. Fuller's offer were prepared by Leslie Whelan, Paramount Exploiteer from the Washington Exchange.

Stages Parade

The Rialto Theatre, Denver, Col., sold Wally Reid in Across the Continent by means of one of the most spectacular parades Denver has ever seen. Manager A. G. Birch, of the Rialto Theatre, called together the ten Ford dealers in Denver. This tie-up was possible because the Dent car, which is used in the picture, is a flivver. Each dealer pledged himself to provide at least 20 cars, drivers, girls to occupy the car, oil, gas, etc., for a parade. The Rialto Theatre furnished the band, and the Ford people and the theatre went 5-50 on the painting and the banner expenses.

One of the cars in the parade appeared to have been the 57th car that Ford turned out. It carried a big sign reading:

I am Number 57 that Henry made—still running every day.

Directly after this came a new car carrying a banner:

I am Number 6,000,142. I expect to run as long as Number 57.

Heading the parade was a Fordson tractor pulling a trailer carrying the band. Both the tractor and trailer carried banners advertising Across the Continent.

There was also a banner to the effect that Wallace Reid for the first time drives a flivver. Other trucks carried six-sheets.

Ford dealers also allowed the Rialto to post their windows full of paper on the picture. The theatre's share of the stunt, including the band and paper cost, was only $62. The stunt packed the house.

Gifts for Ladies

Two nights each week are designated as "coupon nights," and one night as "gift night." Every lady patron attending an Ascher theatre on coupon night receives a spoon coupon. "If she presents her coupon, together with one adult admission, on the "gift night" indicated on the face of the coupon, she receives her souvenir spoon. This plan enables Ascher Brothers to select suitable nights on which to concentrate the pulling power of the spoon plan.

Monday and Tuesday nights have been chosen as coupon nights, and Friday night has been gift night since the plan went into effect.

The spoons are attractive and useful, and the plan has already justified its cost by the amount of additional business it has created. All coupons are stamped with the date on which they are to be presented, and are not good on any other night.

Stunt Doubles-Up

When the Hagenback-Wallace Circus parade made its annual appearance on the streets of Plattsburg, N. Y., Manager Henry, who was running Smilin' Through at the Clinton Theatre, had his ballyhoo for the picture appear at the beginning and at the end of the parade.

The circus line-up was more than a mile long. The surrey driving the bridal couple for Smilin' Through went in advance of the parade until it had passed the main business center, then doubled back and wound up the procession again. Manager Henry was credited with having two ballyhoos in the line-up.

Scenic Displayed in Capitol Lobby

In recognition of the superior public appeal of the scenic My Country, second of the Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales series, Managing Director S. L. Rothafel of the Capitol, New York, played up the offering in the theatre lobby with the especially attractive display frame reproduced above. The many scenic beauties of the film are indicated in the eight stills displayed around a portrait of Robert C. Bruce. Centered and above the portrait was a personal endorsement bearing Mr. Rothafel's signature. This means of directing attention to the film was reflected in the enthusiastic newspaper reviews and a public response that insured it of a second week at the Capitol. The Educational release is the first single reeler to attain this distinction of an extended engagement at the Capitol.

Contest a Week

Far from being tired of giving one-third of its reading space to a tieup with the Strand Theatre, Cumberland, Md., the Cumberland Daily News ran its third beauty contest in three weeks, this time for Find the Woman.

The picture of Alma Reubens was cut into 15 different pieces and one of them printed in a co-operative ad of some merchant's.

Contestants had to assemble each scrap and paste them together, making the full photograph. All the co-operative ads were arranged in a double truck under the caption "Find the Woman." Prizes

Demands Displays

Manager H. A. Williams, Murray Theatre, Lawton, Okla., has co-operated so wholeheartedly with the retailers in his community to their advantage that when Penrod showed he put tieups in 25 window dispays. The climax came when one merchant kicked because he has not, he claimed, been given as good a line of accessories, stills and cards as his competitor. Williams restored peaceful relations by promising him an enlargement of the hand painted picture of Norma Talmadge, exclusively for his window, when Smilin' Through was shown at the Murray.

Seating Problems—Solving Them—I

Growth of This Important Phase of Theatre Operation Is Astounding

HISTORY OF THE THEATRE

We have to go back to Nature for the beginnings of all things and this is as true of the origin of modern theatres as of everything else.

We find that the first theatres were nothing more than an encircling hillside, offering a convenient vantage place from which to see—which is exactly what theatre means, a place to see—the religious rites of the chorus in the orchestra pit or platform beneath. The stage was nothing more than a raised platform or pulpit for the individual actors to declaim from, and the original "green room" was but a crude tent, or "scene," as the Greeks called it, to the side of this platform.

The Theatre of Dionysus

The theatre seating engineer of those days was more of a quarryman and stone-cutter than construction engineer and architect as to-day. In the famous theatre of Dionysus, underneath the Acropolis in Athens, some rows of seats were carved out of the solid rock of the hillside itself. In fact, he had to be a sculptor as well, for we have some beautiful examples of theatre seats that are marvels of sculptural design.

The Coliseum

The Romans, through their perfecting of the principle of the arch, were able to achieve the amphitheatre effects of the Greek hillside in the very midst of their cities and on level ground, as witness the beautiful amphitheatre unearthed at Pompeii and the magnificent Coliseum in Rome itself. These have been the marvel of architects and engineers of all times.

Modern Theatres

What the principle of the arch accomplished to meet the Roman needs, the wonderful achievements of steel construction have accomplished for us in the theatres of to-day. The old lady in Punch, who in her motor tour around Rome had suddenly come upon the Coliseum and thought it must be the ruins of "some cinema or other," was, after all, not so far off. For our modern theatre, with its balconies and galleries and its seating capacity running into the thousands is quite a direct development from the structures of that day, using modern material and meeting modern needs. While it is a far cry from the hillside theatre of the early Greeks, it is a direct descendant of it.

The Modern Theatre

First of the Series

This is the first article of a series on theatre seating, a problem indeed to the theatre man. This series has been prepared with the cooperation of the Engineering Department of the American Seating Co., Chicago, which has given years of study to the theatre seating problem.

When the Academy was Finally Reseated

"In 1920 the old Academy of Music, Kalamazoo, Mich., was leased by Mr. W. S. Butterfield, completely renovated within, and rechristened the Regent.

"The most important change made was in the reseating of the theatre, replacing the old worn seats with an up-to-date modern equipment of deep curve, upholstered back and seat theatre chairs.

"It is an open secret that the present popularity and financial success of this playhouse is largely due to the comfortable seating with which it is equipped."

—Memorandum from John Eberson, architect, Chicago, Ill.

Two Seating Plans

In plats 1 and 2 are shown diagrams of modern theatre seating plans prepared by the engineering department of the American Seating Company. These plans fit the average sized houses and provide for the full utilization of space, visibility and, as in plat 1, the presence of columns in the theatre. Both plans are in extensive use throughout the country

New Accessories on the Market

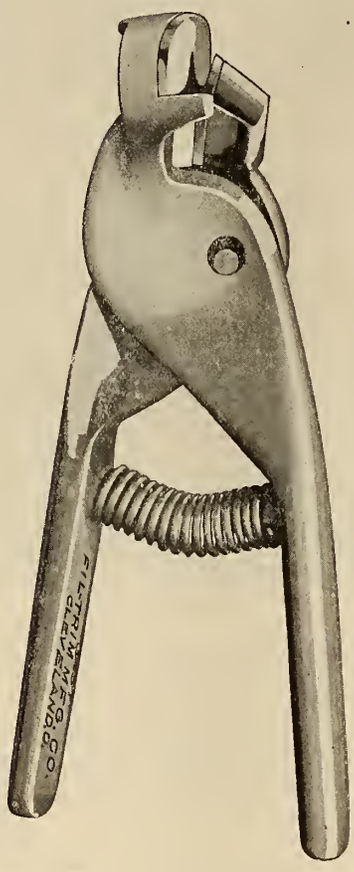
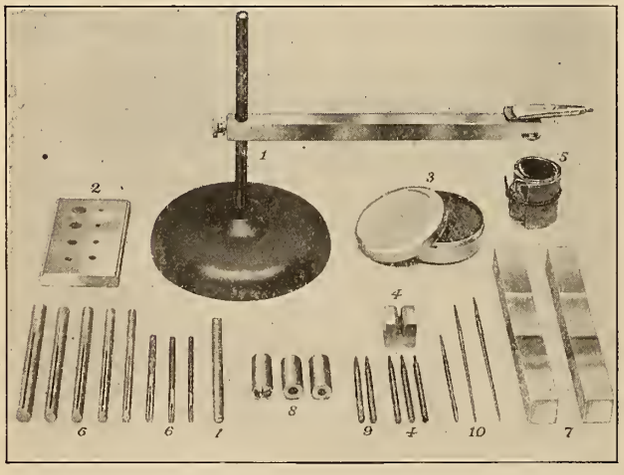
THE film trimming snips shown herewith have come into use in more than 70 per cent of the film exchanges throughout the land and by many operators. Operators are fast accepting them and cameramen and laboratory workers find them useful. They sell for $3 each, are of heavy material, nickel plated and are fiitted with a removable steel blade, which can be sharpened at will. A strong spring makes it unnecessary to pull the snips into place and makes the action automatic as on a ticket punch.

The cut which this device makes on the margin of the film is "V" shaped, with rounded corners, making it possible to do away with patching, temporarily at least.

The device is made by the Fil-Trim Mfg. Co., Fountain Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio, who make other specialties used in this field, including a special film cement.



A Repair Outfit



A neat repair outfit of projectionists has been gotten out by Joseph Lavezzi of Chicago, an old-time projector machinist. As shown in the cut herewith, it contains a sprocket truing outfit a gear removing block, emery, taper pin removing outfit, emery cloth strips, split laps, cam removing parallels, knockout brasses, broken screw removing punches and broaches.

These tools are made by Lavezzi in his own little shop in Chicago and are handled by many supply dealers.

New Orchestra Shade

For a new orchestra light shade, a saving of 66 2/3 per cent in light and an increase in the efficiency of lamps and musician is claimed. It has just appeared on the market. These orchestra shades are the result of a number of years' experimentation in the largest theatres to produce an economical, efficient light projection on music from every angle. They are vertical—not horizontal.

Scientifically designed, they light the music only, thus eliminating all escaping light rays. They are simple, made of two pieces and quickly attached to any music stand. The curved surfaces project every light ray downward, and with this type of shade a 7½-watt lamp does what a 40-watt is required to do under the old method. It is finished in maroon on the outside with the inside white for the purpose of proper cross projection of light. It is claimed this light will give years of service.

The old way with a horizontal shade still used by too many. It leaks too much light

TO READERS AND MANUFACTURERS

Readers interested in the new accessories described on this page are invited to write the Equipment Department for names, addresses and further information on the articles described. We are glad to furnish them.

Manufacturers who have new articles for use in the motion picture industry—any branch of it—are also invited to send photos, cuts or drawings of their new products, also catalogues and full descriptions. When printed literature is sent we should get two copies of each for our reference files and for listings in the ANNUAL THEATRE EQUIPMENT DIRECTORY published by EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.

All Arcs in Series Two or More

Any Two Simultaneously
Same Amperes in Each Arc

Motion picture projection in theatres the country over has greatly improved since the perfection of TransVerteR—the original series arc M-G outfit, which set a new standard for the entire industry.

TransVerteR changes alternating current into direct current which is more suitable for projection arcs. It automatically supplies only such voltage as is needed for the arc, and no wasteful, current consuming ballast is used. It uses less current than any other device, and is therefore more economical to operate.

It is easily adjusted for light and dark portions of film. TransVerteR gives the projectionist perfect arcs, clear-white, steady light that is easily directed and controlled. It makes possible the projection of clear, sharp-lined pictures which patrons appreciate and come again to enjoy.

Write today for TransVerteR Facts. Room for only a few here—but you should know them all.

Questions and Answers

By Wesley Trout

Series One

This is the first of a series of articles by Wesley Trout, well-known projection engineer, whose writings will appear regularly on this page. The series begins with some of the fundamentals of projection.

Wiring the Projection Room

The wireman or projectionist who is called upon to plan and also install a system of wiring will find it necessary to first have a knowledge of the various kinds of wire best suited for the theatre and projection room, and he should be able to make simple calculations in order to determine the proper sizes of wires for the various circuits used.

Most every projectionist knows that wires are generally made cross section. The process of manufacture consists in drawing the material through steel dies, when its properties permit this treatment. Now in case of some substances, as for instance, tin and lead, difficulties arise in the drawing process, and these are therefore "squirted." Metals that are most extensively used for wires are copper and iron. German silver, tin and lead are also employed.

Copper Wire Used Mostly

As most all projectionists know that copper wire is used nearly in all cases of wiring because it combines high electrical conductivity. In conductivity it is only surpassed by silver, but the high cost of the latter course prohibits its use for wiring purposes.

Hard drawn copper wire is ductile, and has a high tensile strength; these properties allow it to be bent anyway and drawn through tubes without any injury.

The pure annealed copper has a specific gravity of 8.89 at 60 degrees Fahr. One cubic inch weighs .32 pound; its melting point is about 2,100 degrees Fahr.

Hard drawn copper has tensile strength of about three times its own weight per a mile length. A number 10 B. & S. gage copper wire, weighing 166 lbs. per mile, will have a breaking strength equal to approximately 3 x 166—498 lbs.

Copper Wire Resistance

Matthiessen's standard for resistance of copper wire is as follows: A hard drawn copper wire one meter long, weighing one gramme, has a resistance of .1469 B. A. unit at 32 degrees Fahr. Relative to conducting power: Silver, 100; hard or un-nealed copper, 99.95; soft or annealed copper, 102.21.

Every degree Fahr., the resistance of copper wire increases .2222 per cent. A piece of copper wire having a resistance of 10 ohms at 32 degrees, would have a resistance of 11.11 ohms at 82 degrees.

About Conductors

Copper is being used more than any other metal for the transmitting of electrical energy, and for the wiring of booths and theatres. Copper conductors should be of the highest commercial conductivity, not less than 97 per cent.

When using conductors up to sizes as large as No. 8 B. & S. gauge single conductors may be used, but when using larger sizes the necessary conductivity should be obtained by using conductors made up of strands of smaller wires. The sizes of these strands will depend upon the size of the conductors and the conditions under which you will use them.

Covered Conductors

For most conditions of service, the projectionist should use wires that are protected with an insulating covering. Wires that are used in interior circuits should have a covering which shall act both as an electrical insulator and as a mechanical protection.

Below are a few of the various forms of covering now in use commercially for electric wires:

1. Rubber;
2. Weather proof;
3. Slow burning;
4. Armored.

C. E. Longacre has retired as manager of the Deal Theatre at Wynnewood, Okla., and is succeeded by T. E. Hale of Wichita Falls, Texas.

C. E. Armstrong and V. C. Randolph have leased the Majestic Theatre at Allen, Okla., from Clint Butler.

Thompson Theatre has opened at Healdton, Okla.

Bill Hyde has bought out F. N. Disney, who owned the Isis Theatre in Miles City, Mont.

E. G. Sourbier, safety director of Indianapolis has just closed negotiations for the control of the Rivoli and Toledo Theatres, Toledo, Ohio. The deal involves $750,000, the amount paid Peter Sun of Toledo, vice-president of the Sun & James Co., and Gus Sun of Springfield, president of the Sun circuit for the stock they owned in the Toledo and Rivoli theatres.

Two changes in ownership of theatres in Kansas City were the Brooklyn Theatre, purchased by J. M. Holmes from G. E. Martin, while John Ritter of the Pastime Theatre, Tipton, Kans., and Joseph Buck purchased the Crystal Theatre at Osborne, Kans. The Novelty at Osborne is closed.

W. R. Perrin, Gouverneur, N. Y., is the new owner of the Gralyn, having bid in the house for $25,000 at an auction sale. The house was opened in January, 1920.

The Ilium Amusement Company of Troy, N. Y., has leased the Griswold Theatre in that city from the F. F. Proctor interests. Benjamin Apple, will be in direct control. The house will be closed during the month of July, when certain alterations will be made.

Announcement has been made by the M. E. Comerford Amusement Co., of Scranton, Pa., operating a chain of over sixty theatres in northeastern Pennsylvania and southern New York, that all indications point to the opening of the new $250,000 Comerford Theatre at Carbondale in early November. L. H. Lemmpert & Sons of Rochester, N. Y. drew the plans.

An addition is being built to the Rex Theatre at Nanticoke, Pa., which will double its seating capacity. It will be ready in the early fall.

Brieg Brothers, of Scranton, Pa., are building a new theatre at Avoca, Pa., eleven miles south of Scranton, for the Comerford chain.

Harry Hersker, of West Hazleton, Pa., owner of the Family Theatre at Hazelton and the Hersker at West Hazelton, will turn the Hersker into a garage April 1, 1923 and build a larger theatre.

In contravention to the rumours that have gained widespread publicity throughout Eastern Pennsylvania, Jules E. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia has denied that his company is to take over the Aldine Theatre, recently erected by the Felt Brothers.

The Peoples' Theatres Co. of New York City, which bought sites at Allentown and Bethlehem, Pa. for new houses, has awarded the contract for the construction to Schaeffer & Ackerman of Allentown.

G. H. Tobias, owner of the Princess Theatre in Corning, N. Y. has purchased the Regent in the same city from Winifred Deuel.

Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is now installing one of the largest Wurlitzer orchestral organs ever built. M. Shea plans to engage a famous organist to play the instrument.

Conducted by NORMAN STUCKEY

Concerning Organ Parts

By Robert Berenttsen

Vice-President Society of Theatre Organists

The present harmonium parts being a particular sore spot to most motion-picture organists, the Society of Theatre Organists has placed the subject at the head of its list for immediate and radical treatment. The society desires to convince all motion-picture organists that as a practical institution it intends to take up all subjects pertaining to their work (excepting wage scales), threshing them out to a satisfactory solution by means of persistent publicity and discussion. It is only by constant agitation and a thorough canvass of the ideas in all sections of the country that an authoritative statement can be made of not only which is the best organ part but which part may be offered at the least expense to the organist, at the same time guaranteeing the music publisher a sufficient sale and an adequate return upon his publication.

After reading this article all organists are most earnestly requested to present this subject to every organist and orchestral leader within his immediate vicinity, requesting them to mail their ideas of the proper solution, together with his own, to the Society of Theatre Organists, 10 East 44th Street, New York.

THE LETTER TO PUBLISHERS

The following letter was mailed to about twenty of the leading music publishers:

"Gentlemen:—The Society of Theatre Organists has voted unanimously to bring to the attention of the music publishers the inadequacy of the present harmonium part sent out with orchestral music. The great number of theatres with large pipe organs creates a greater demand for organ parts than for harmonium parts. The S. T. O. suggests that the easiest solution of the difficulty will be the inclusion of two piano conductor's copies instead of a piano conductor and harmonium part, leaving to the discretion of the motion-picture organist the selection of what is most needed to fill out the combination in his particular theatre.

"This arrangement will incur no added expense to the publisher, but will permit the organist to make use of the copy, either for solo work or in conjunction with any one of the numberless combinations of instruments found in our present-day orchestras.

"The S. T. O. desires in a personal interview to emphasize the imperative necessity of some new arrangement and will send a representative for the purpose of discussion of the above at any time convenient."

Most publishers answered immediately, expressing great interest and a desire to have our representative call. Only one publisher claimed the present harmonium part was intended for motion picture use; one publisher claimed that the members of the Society of Theatre Organists were not in a position to judge because they held positions only in the leading houses and knew nothing about the style of work demanded in the vastly greater number of small houses. We will readily admit that this problem does not affect the organists in our larger theatres, except in a pecuniary sense, as piano conductor parts are always used; but every leading organist has attained his present position after years of experience, constantly changing from one small house to another, and is therefore thoroughly acquainted with the work, and may with his enlarged vision be better able to suggest a solution.

VIEWPOINTS OF THE ORGANIST AND PUBLISHER AND THE POSSIBLE SOLUTION

We will present briefly the organist's viewpoint, then the publisher's, and last the possible solution.

As it is admitted by most publishers and arrangers that the present harmonium part is not intended for motion picture use and as practically no motion-picture organist finds it satisfactory, it is not necessary to say much in proof of the need of a radical change, however briefly.

In most theatres the organist plays the overture together with the orchestra—a complete part will permit him to play wood-wind or brass solos where the orchestral instruments are missing; he may reinforce the string section or carry the harmonies; few small orchestras have a harp, most theatre organs have one, and in forte passages the weight, breadth and power of the organ may, as foundation for the ensemble, give the effect of a large orchestra to a small combination. When the organist plays the picture with the orchestra, the same is true—nearly all harmonuim parts, however, are written with long passages tacit or with a single voice given, leaving the organist no choice or materials from which to select the proper effect in his own particular combination. When a combined fortissimo of orchestra and organ as an accompaniment to a battle or mob scene or any scene of intense emotion is needed, the organist is often confronted with four measures tacit or a solo clarinet passage. In very few harmonium parts can a sustained crescendo or diminuendo be maintained, and the unprepared entrance of brass or wood-wind in the concert organs now in use in our theatres is decidedly more annoying than the same in the orchestra because the organ openings are placed at some distance from the orchestra pit, preventing unity of sound.

There have been harmonium parts printed for music designed only for picture use, such as hurris, agitatos, etc.; these may be definitely thrown into the waste-paper basket, because they cannot be used for the above reasons, and as an immediate necessity the publishers should make some arrangement to replace the missing organ part in music which will be heard only in the picture houses.

The statement is most emphatically made by the publishers and arrangers that with a full organ solo part the natural tendency will be to become overbearing, to spoil the orchestral coloring and to drown the orchestra, yet no part can be made fool-proof, and judgment should be left to the orchestra leader in conjunction with the organist of what is needed to augment the orchestra. The same criticism may be made of the present piano conductor's part, yet no experienced orchestral pianist will endeavor to play all that appears in the music before him. If the organist's present knowledge is not sufficient, we must remember that the motion picture business is very young and that the organist is progressing very rapidly. Judging from the present universal disastisfaction, the necessity for a special consideration of the motion-picture organist's needs is immediate and imperative.

The publisher's claim that an organ part is not necessary must be met. The basis for this assertion is that excepting in the overtures the organist plays together with the orchestra only in isolated cases and usually performs while the orchestra musicians leave the pit. To answer this argument it is necessary for every organist who plays with the orchestra during the picture to make this fact known; however, generally speaking, a large number of the smaller houses do combine the orchestra and organ, and the number is constantly increasing as the possibilities of this combination are becoming better known. Surely the present-day organist who has made this combination his specialty will best be able to prophesy the results during the next five years, judging from the trend of development during the last five years. One prominent publisher has already eliminated the harmonium part from his publications, substituting a piano conductor's part when a harmonium part is called for. We may ask—If the organist does not play with the orchestra, why publish a harmonium part at all in publications designed only for picture purposes? The number of harmoniums used in picture houses is negligible.

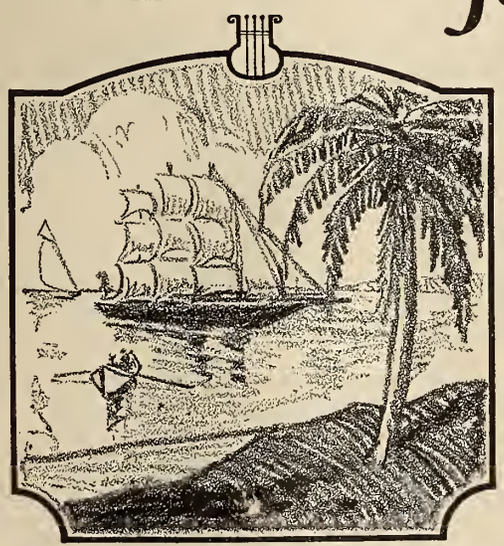
Appealing Music—
The Mark of Good Management



No longer can even the smallest home of silent drama succeed without good music.

The most prosperous house in any community has recognized the pulling power of superior, appropriate musical accompaniments.

The wonderful Cremona Orchestra-Organ contributes the musical background so necessary to put your film across big. South Sea Islands or Labrador settings, travel, comedy, or what-not, there is instantly available just the right music pipe-organ, orchestra or combination, played either by hand, by standard player roll or solo roll to best create that sense of reality that satisfies the lover of pictures.

But best of all—the Cremona is not prohibitive for the smaller house. Write for literature.

Famous Aggregation Covers the World for Pathe News

By CURTIS DUNHAM

So startling are many of the achievements of film news reporters, as reflected in the screened results, that information about these adventurous unknown heroes of the motion picture industry is in constant demand by exhibitors and their patrons everywhere. Who are they? How do they do it? Is it big money that tempts a Pathe News camera-man to go after a close-up of the crater of Vesuvius during an eruption? Or is he a natural born daredevil who finds the prospect of sudden death sufficient recompense for the amazing pictures with which, a few days later, he thrills several million spectators?

Every little while the news reels delight and astonish the public with picture-reports of scenes and events of wide world interest which obviously were filmed under conditions filled with risks and actual peril for the cameraman. The spectator, sitting in his comfortable seat in a well-appointed theatre, senses this fact and is intrigued by it. He sees himself, in his security and comfort, strangely contrasted with the Unknown Hero, mysterious and intrepid, who has provided him with all this pleasure and information, with all these thrills. This is a psychological situation with which every picture exhibitor is familiar. His patrons come to him for a solution of the intriguing mystery—which includes explanations of the incredible swiftness of the News Reel Editors in meeting the news wherever it happens and getting it on the screen.

Thanks to the enterprising "fan" magazine editor, "movie fans" have long since known that the screened perils encountered by stars of realistic features and serial pictures are, in fact, much minimized by careful planning and preparation and rehearsal of the so-called "stunt" scenes, which are further shorn of special hazards by ingenious technical devices. But they know that no protective measures are possible in the case of the Unknown Hero of the camera, whose preparation consists in being on the spot when the real thing happens. Recognition of this wide gap between the activities of the much exploited star and those of the unknown film news reporter is an important factor in the high development of the News Reel and its firm hold on public favor.

But why does the news cameraman continue to be an "unknown" hero? The answer is that both he and his editor are so busy with the job of being everywhere all the time and keeping the screen glowing with what is phenomenal in the big world and its affairs that they have no time in which to talk about themselves, or to enable anyone else to do it. This has been the situation ever since the starting of the first news reel eleven years ago, which has set the pace in that branch of the motion picture industry ever since—Pathe News. Nearly two years ago when Pathe first announced the approaching tenth anniversary of the founding of Pathe News—which was celebrated a year ago this last May—this writer entered upon the task of inducing Editor Emanuel Cohen and his staff of unknown heroes to "loosen up" with some real, live and publicly demanded news about themselves and their methods. Mr. Cohen promised. He kept on promising. He did, in fact, send out a "general alarm" to his cameramen in different parts of the world. But all the time the seductive odor of another news "beat" to be gleaned in some distant corner of the earth caused him to forget all about it.

Emanuel Cohen, who is barely thirty years old and has been chief editor of Pathe News for seven years, is celebrated throughout the industry for the enthusiasm and capacity for quick and shrewd judgment typical of the born news man. He keeps in close personal touch with Pathe News representatives and cameramen in all parts of the world, and exercises the true managing editor faculty of contributing to them his own qualities of vigilance and ability to meet emergencies in this important service to the public. A few months ago the chief editorship of Pathe Review was added to his responsibilities. One result already apparent to exhibitors and their patrons is the attractive new "dress"—as newspaper men call it—of the screen's best known magazine. The new issues of Pathe Review also are distinguished by many attractive novelties, such as further development of the fascinating "slow motion" device so useful in the analysis of all forms of physical action; also the drawing upon camera technique for the perfecting of the new art of screen caricature.

At last, after nearly two years of nagging, Editor Cohen has succeeded in prying loose from the hitherto unknown heroes of his staff the facts about themselves herewith presented. They were the reverse of keen on having their "pictures printed," and had to be prodded considerably in some instances before finally responding with their personal "maps." Such is the modesty of these dauntless geniuses, who delight in rushing upon the screen everybody else who does anything out of the ordinary.

Carl Wheeler Fasold, of the Pathe News camera staff since 1913, probably has "shot" as much "big stuff" for the news reel screen as any man living. He had already made a brilliant record with the "still" camera. In 1911, after cruising a rough sea nights and days, he was the first of his guild to meet the S. S. Carpathia and photograph the survivors of the Titanic disaster. Once started on the subject of his chosen life-work, Fasold warms up after this fashion:

"I soon found myself chasing around the country in company with the most distinguished visitors to our country, reporting their activities for Pathe News. Several times since the signing of the armistice I have crossed the ocean for exclusive news "shots." I have traveled de luxe and under all sorts of hardships. One never knows where he will be sent or when he will return. To-day may find him in a secluded spot in the Blue Ridge Mountains or down among the Everglades, while tomorrow he may be on his way to the frozen North, as I was while chasing the lost balloonists in the wilds of Canada.

How the Latest Releases Are Being Received Throughout the Country

ALBANY

CLINTON SQUARE

"WHY ANNOUNCE YOUR MARRIAGE?" Elaine Hammerstein (Select), and "CHANNING OF THE NORTHWEST," Eugene O'Brien (Select), owner of this house, started this week with double features and played to capacity audiences throughout the tweek at 25 cents top for evening shows. In addition, the house gave a Fox news reel, a Pathe review and a comedy. Will continue with double features as a means of combating hot weather conditions.

LELAND

"A CERTAIN RICH MAN" and "CAMERON OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED." This house will also run double features throughout the summer as a means of attracting crowds despite conditions arising from weather and strikes.

ATLANTA, GA.

HOWARD

"THE BACHELOR DADDY," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). Drew excellent business and was acclaimed by all who saw it the best piece of work star has done.

Presentation.—Overture, Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland" fitted in perfectly to the theme of the "Bachelor Daddy." Enrico Leide directed a spectacular scenic presentation of "Fireflies." The curtain rose on a twilight stage with a chorus of fifty voices, who sang "Glowworm." During the refrain all house and stage lights were turned off, and the spotlight was thrown on a huge iridescent orb swinging above the orchestra, sending out rainbow lights over the house, winning tremendous applause.

Short Subjects.—Howard News and Views, Selznick and Pathe news weeklies.

METROPOLITAN

"THE PRIMITIVE LOVER," Constance Talmadge (First National). Even from the cold-blooded point of view of the box office, the week was decidedly good.

Short Subjects. — Torchy comedy, "Torchy and Orange Blossoms," won enviable mention in local reviews. Two issues of Kinograms and news weeklies.

CRITERION

"THE LYING TRUTH," Marion Fairfax production (American Releasing), Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Well received, business satisfactory.

"THE GREAT ALONE," Monroe Salisbury (American Releasing). Very pleasing. Business good.

Short Subjects. — Educational-Campbell comedy, "Monkey Shines," all week.

RIALTO

"CRIMSON CHALLENGE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). This is not a Western house, but those who saw the picture liked it. Business was about average for the week.

Short Subjects.—International News and Sport Pictorial.

GRAND

"THE STRENGTH OF THE PINES," William Russell (Fox), Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.—Good.

"THE OTHER WOMAN," Jane Novak (Hodkinson), Thursday, Friday and Saturday.—Very pleasing.

Added Attraction.—Personal appearance of Miriam Battista, who delighted hundreds of grown people as well as children, and encores nearly stopped the show.

Short Subjects.—Chester Outing, Star Comedy and Fox News.

TUDOR

"THE CLOUDBURST" (Southern States), Monday nad Tuesday. Due possibly to the heat or that it's a war picture, business was not so good.

"KISSED," Marie Prevost (Universal), Wednesday and Thursday. Played to good business and this actress scored another point in Atlanta.

"BURN 'EM UP BARNES," Johnny Hines (Southern States), Friday and Saturday. Played a return to very good business, bringing the week up to average.

Short Subjects.—International News and Billy Fletcher-Vera Stedman comedy.

STRAND

"VIRGIN PARADISE," Pearl White (Fox). Business was good but nothing extra.

Short Subjects.—Neil Burns in "Movie Mad."

ALLENTOWN, PA.

COLONIAL

"THE GREEN TEMPTATION," Betty Compton (Paramount). Picture went well, considering summer depression and hot weather. Apache, Columbine, Amazon warrior stunts all good to boost, judging by results here.

RIALTO

"ALIAS LADYFINGERS," Bert Lytell (Metro). First-rate crook drama, with star well known and liked in Allentown. Sequence was good run, with attendance better than for some time. Exploitation consisted chiefly of readers and space stuff devoted to criminals made by accident and such teaser details.

STRAND

"THE GRIM COMEDIAN," Jack Holt (Goldwyn). Average business, but through no fault of feature, which was classed as being among the best screened in this city in some time.

SECOND HALF

"BEYOND THE RAINBOW," Harry T. Morey. Fair attendance and not much more. All-star cast, with special mention of Ziegfeld beauties in line-up, chief points on which exploitation dwelt.

BETHLEHEM, PA.

LORENZ

"THE ORDEAL," Agnes Ayres (Paramount). Fair attendance, but picture declared simply great. One of new Paramount issues and was a hit with those who saw it.

SECOND HALF

"THE MAN WHO MARRIED HIS OWN WIFE," Frank Mayo (Universal). That word "intrigued," which Taft herded out of the vernacular and lent a new color to, is best used to explain the success of this picture. The title "intrigued" fans and brought in good-sized houses.

PALACE

"THE NIGHT ROSE," Lon Chaney and Leatrice Joy. Fair business; nothing to boast about.

SECOND HALF

"CURTAIN," Katherine McDonald (First National). Star well enough known to make good business possible, even though picture is not very new. Attendance up to average at most shows, despite summer slump.

LEHIGH ORPHEUM

"THE LONE STAR RANGER," William Farnum (Fox). Drew well among those who fell for suggestion of title, and they were regaled with a dandy yarn of western life. Good booking for houses which play high-class western dramas.

"THE RAGGED HEIRESS," Shirley Mason (Fox). Average interest and attendance was about on same level. Interest was at low ebb.

BOSTON

MODERN

ing value, but audiences were generally good, despite fine weather latter half of the week.

"HEAD OVER HEELS," Mabel Normand (Goldwyn). Another good picture, with another local favorite starring. Very entertaining.

Exploitation.—Cutouts of both Pauline Frederick and Mabel Normand fastened on black ornamental lattices on all sides of square lobby pillars, symmetrical on both sides of box office. An unusually decorative effect. Regular newspaper advertising with specials in all Sunday editions. Window cards, billboards in all subway and elevated stations, and framed stills in advance in lobby.

BEACON

"THE GLORY OF CLEMENTINA," Pauline Frederick (R-C).

"HEAD OVER HEELS," Mabel Normand (Goldwyn). Short subjects also same as the Modern. This house has entirely different patronage from the Modern. It is more of an exclusive house, with regular patronage. No lobby exploitation here, with the exception of framed stills during run and for entire advance week. Newspaper advertising, subway and elevated, and window cards same. Pictures drew here equally well; good audiences all week.

PARK

"SUNSHINE HARBOR," All Star Cast (Playgoers). An average interest picture. Seemed to go well with the audiences.

"SMILING JIM," Dustin Farnum (Fox). A fair action picture, but no more than average. Audiences fair, despite the fact that the house does no newspaper advertising during the summer months.

Exploitation.—Lobby frames of stills during run and week in advance. Automatic still projector in lobby advance week. Billboards in all subway and elevated stations. Window cards.

Short Subjects.—Educational comedy, International News Reel, Movie Chats, and cartoon.

BUFFALO

SHEA'S HIPPODROME

"THE MAN FROM HOME," James Kirkwood (Paramount). Despite warm weather and many outdoor attractions, business held up exceptionally well on this one.

Exploitation.—Attractive hand-drawn ads in Sunday drama pages, electric display on front of house. Fine lobby display. Window cards. Billboards.

Short Subjects.—"The Piper," a Sunshine comedy, Hippodrome Review, Topics of the Day and Pathe hard-colored scenic.

"THE SILENT CALL," All-Star Cast (First National). (Second Half). Put on the last half of the week, this picture pulled good business in spite of unfavorable weather.

Exploitation.—Big police dog, carrying sign reading, " 'Strongheart' the wonder dog, in 'The Silent Call'—Shea's Hippodrome," was led through the downtown streets by man attired in bright uniform. Stunt attracted a lot of attention, because this town does not go in for much street ballyhoo work on pictures.

Short Subjects.—"Special Delivery," an Al St. John comedy, Hippodrome Review, Topics of Day, Scenic.

MARK-STRAND

"ARABIAN LOVE," John Gilbert (Fox) —Evidently folks like this desert stuff, because business held up unusually well for this time of yetar.

Exploitation.—A fine lobby display in which scenes from the play shown in the three sheets cut out and mounted on beaver board dominated. Newspaper advertising. Window cards.

Short Subjects.—Bobby Vernon in "A Hickory Hick," Christie comedy, Kinograms and Screen Snapshots.

LAFAYETTE SQUARE

"TOO MUCH BUSINESS," Tully Marshall and Ethel Grey Terry (Vitagraph). This house enjoyed capacity business all week, partly because of the picture and partly because of the appearance of Eva Tanguay as the vaudeville headliner.

Exploitation.—Big increase in newspaper advertising, large electric display on front of house. Window cards and lobby display.

Short Subjects.—"Snub" Pollard comedy, Fox News and Courier Camera, showing local events.

LOEW'S STATE

"LOVE'S BOOMERANG," Ann Forest and David Powell (Paramount). Business was fair for the week. Warm weather cut into receipts. Picture hardly strong enough to attract at this time of year.

Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising principal feature. Window cards, big electric display on both Main and Mohawk Street entrances.

Short Subjects.—The Hallroom Boys in "The Dentist," Pathe News, Mutt and Jeff cartoon and scenic.

SHEA'S NORTH PARK

"THE MAN FROM HOME," James Kirkwood (Paramount). This attraction went over in fine shape. Receipts are much better than last summer. Auto trade helps greatly.

Exploitation.—This house shares in all the Shea Hippodrome advertising.

Short Subjects.—"The Piper," Sunshine comedy, North Park Review and scenic.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

BROADWAY

"WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME" (State Rights). Three days to fair business.

"SONNY," Richard Barthelmess (First National). Three days to very good business.

IMPERIAL

RANDOLPH

"FOR THE DEFENSE," Ethel Clayton (Paramount). A dramatic presentation that holds the interest. Business held up nicely all week.

ROOSEVELT

"ROSE OF THE SEA," Anita Stewart (First National). A romantic offering that is sure to please. Business was fair.

CHICAGO

"WHILE SATAN SLEEPS," Jack Holt (Paramount). A picture that will appeal to every patron. Despite the capacity of the theatre, it was filled at nearly every performance.

ROSE

"WHEN THE DEVIL DRIVES," Leah Baird (Beck). Too somber for entertainment purposes. Attendance not up to expectations.

CLEVELAND

STATE

"POOR BOY," Lloyd Hamilton (Educational), and "OVER THE BORDER," Betty Compson (Paramount). Good business.

Exploitation.—Advance publicity on the Educational comedy and on the two star picture. The comedy was the big hit of the program and did a lot to bolster up a show that without this feature would have been just fair.

Short Subjects.—News Weekly and Topics of the Day.

ALLEN

"NANOOK OF THE NORTH" (Pathe-Revillon Freres) and "SISTERS," Seena Owen (American Releasing). Good business.

Exploitation.—A splendid advance publicity campaign on the Nanook attraction which created considerable word-of-mouth advertising. The publicity made known just what the patron could expect that the picture contained no plot, no stars, but was a page from the life of the Esquimo.

Short Subjects.—Prizma and News Weekly.

STILLMAN

"MISSING HUSBANDS," Stacia Napierkowska (Metro). Business good.

ALHAMBRA AND MALL

"UP AND GOING," Tom Mix (Fox). Fair business. No advance publicity and very little advertising on this production.

PARK

COLUMBIA, S. C.

LESTER'S RIVOLI

"NOBODY," Jewel Carmen (First National). Only fair business on this. Rather weak.

IMPERIAL

NEWMAN

"FASCINATION," Mae Murray (Metro). Did a good week's business. Mae Murray usually goes over well here.

Current Events.—Newman News and Views.

Exploitation.—Unusually large Sunday newspaper space, featuring the customary feminine figure with a mask and horns on her head. Also lobby display and billboard space, featuring the name of the star.

LIBERTY

"A REAL ADVENTURE," Florence Vidor (Associated Exhibitors). Hot weather failed to stop this one, which played to good crowds for a week's run.

Short Subjects.—"Going Straight" comedy and Pathe News, Current Events.

Exploitation.—The line, "What is a square deal—before marriage it was ideal —after marriage it was an ordeal" was featured in newspaper copy, along with cuts and prominent mention of Mary Pickford in the comedy. Also billboard and lobby display space.

ROYAL

"SONNY," Richard Barthelmess (First National). The star is exceptionally popular here. The picture played to good houses all week.

Short Subjects.—"'Twas Ever Thus," comedy, and Royal Screen Magazine, Current Events.

Exploitation.—Entire billboard, lobby display and newspaper space devoted to featuring the name and pictures of the star.

TWELFTH STREET

"CHASING THE MOON," Tom Mix (Fox). The title, along with the fact that the star has a good following here, served to attract a good week's attendance.

Short Subjects.—"Jaws of Steel," comedy and Screen Magazine, Current Events.

Exploitation.—Cartoon of Tom Mix astride a torpedo with a saddle on it, heading straight for the moon, was featured in newspaper space, while billboard and lobby display space played up the name of the star.

LOS ANGELES

GRAUMAN'S RIALTO

"BACHELOR DADDY," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). In the second week and pulling very good business considering the heat.

LOEW STATE

"THE CRIMSON CHALLENGE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). Pulled about the best business in town for the week. The vaudeville bill was exceptionally good and the feature picture, which was well advertised over the vaudeville bill, was a very good audience picture.

Short Subjects.—Loew's Weekly, Hy Mayer Travelaugh, "Life in Vollendam," Loew State Concert Orchestra.

TALLY'S BROADWAY

"NO DEFENSE," William Duncan (Vitagraph). The picture went over very well, with average advertising and no exploitation.

Short Subjects.—Kinograms, Larry Semon comedy, "Between the Acts."

CLUNE'S BROADWAY

"QUEEN OF THE TURF," Brownie Vernon (R-C). The box office showed very good business with the lobby filled with Lloyd's comedy.

Short Subjects. — Kinograms, solo, "Angel Child," by a well-known singer of Los Angeles, very beautiful scenic, "Arctic Hike."

PANTAGES

"THE GREAT ALONE," Monroe Salisbury (American Releasing). The picture went over very good. The star appeared in person and this was a good drawing-card in the advertising of the picture.

Short Subjects.—The sketch or feature prologue, "The Great Alone," and "Sunshine Sammy" comedy with the vaudeville program.

SUPERBA

"THE SILENT NORTH," Frank Mayo (Universal). Very good business for this time of the season. The usual weekly advertising was used and the lobby was the most attractive one in town.

Short Subjects.—Harry Sweet in "Speed 'Em Up," Tom Santschi in "Seein' Red," vocal solo, "The Sneak," International News.

KINEMA

"THE BARNSTORMER," Charles Ray (First National). Not so good. Ray has rather lost out in the last few stories and the picture public are not so eager to see him. The picture was put out under usual weekly advertising and no exploitation.

MISSION

"A FOOL THERE WAS," Estelle Taylor and Louis Stone (Fox). Doing very good business; the evenings are better than the matinees on account of the heat.

SYMPHONY

"GRANDMA'S BOY," Harold Lloyd (Pathe). In the sixth week and still going strong; the sudden heat has not hurt the attendance to any great degree.

Short Subjects.—Fox News, Pathe Screen Studies, "Yosemite Valley," Good Things of Life.

CALIFORNIA

"GOLDEN DREAMS," All-star cast (Goldwyn). Showed fair business; the usual weekly advertising was used and no exploitation. Received only fair criticisms from the dramatic reviewers.

Short Subjects.—Elinor's Concert for fifteen minutes at each performance, matinee and evening, Goldwyn-Examiner Screen Tests, Captain Lewis' Chinatown Trip.

MILLER

"THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK," All-star cast (Sennett, First National). Only fair business in the second week. It was shown as "Heartbalm" in Los Angeles and it is hard to fool the public.

HILLSTREET

"THE CRADLE BUSTER," Glenn Hunter (American Releasing Corp). Very good audience picture, went over great, and received excellent reviews.

Short Subjects.—Kinograms, Kineto Reviews, comedy, "The Skipper's Policy," with the vaudeville program.

GRAUMAN'S MILLION DOLLAR

"SOUTH OF SUVA," Mary Miles Minter (Paramount) Feature went over good. The usual amount of weekly advertising was used.

Short Subjects.—Grauman's Greater Symphony Orchestra, Urban Movie Chats, Pathe Weekly, Murtagh at the Wurlitzer playing "By the Sapphire Sea" and the Graumans Melody Trio; Graumans World Visions, a novelty number, Brown's Saxaphone Six, and Graumans Bathing Girl Revue.

MILWAUKEE

ALHAMBRA

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). Thomas Meighan will draw a crowd, no matter what the story is, and in this case George Ade's story brought followers of both star and writer. Fine business.

Exploitation.—Extensive newspaper publicity and lobby display. The presence of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, in convention here, increased greatly the business.

Short Subjects.—Two-act comedy, educational films and Pathe news reels.

BUTTERFLY

"WATCH YOUR STEP," Cullen Landis (Goldwyn). Star is increasing his popularity in this district, and the title of the film attracted good business.

Short Subjects.—Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms," Fox news reels and educational films.

GARDEN

"ACROSS THE CONTINENT," Wallace Reid (Paramount).—Fine. Star will always get a good crowd, no matter how hot the weather. Newspaper critics gave special mention to the automobile racing in the film.

Short Subjects.—A Torchy comedy, Fox news reels and educational reel.

MERRILL

"GREATER THAN LOVE," Louise Glaum, the sixth round of the Leather Pushers.—Fair. Business was due more to the presence of the Leather Pushers on the bill than the feature film.

Short Subjects.—Universal international news reels, Tony Sarg's Almanac.

SAXE'S RIALTO

"THERE ARE NO VILLAINS," Viola Dana (Metro). Picture and star praised by local moving picture critics. Business good.

Short Subjects.—"Straight from the Farm," with Al St. John; Selznick news reels and fashion hints.

SAXE'S STRAND

"WIFE AGAINST WIFE," Pauline Starke and "My Lady Friends," Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven. Good combination. Pauline Starke praised by local newspaper critics.

Exploitation.—Lobby display, newspaper advertising, street car and bill board advertising.

Short Subjects.—First National Kinograms and Sketchograms, and Literary Digest Topics of the Day.

NORFOLK, VA.

GRANBY

"BOUGHT AND PAID FOR," Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt (Paramount). A week to big business.

WELLS

"THE SONG OF LIFE" (First National). A week to fair business only.

STRAND

"WILD HONEY," Priscilla Dean (Universal). Only fair business on this one. Rather weak.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

CRITERION

"REPORTED MISSING," Owen Moore (Selznick). This one seemed to appeal to the patrons, and the box office figures were excellent.

Exploitation. — Newspaper advertising, window cards, lobby display.

Short Subjects.—Kinograms, International News.

EMPRESS

"FROM OUT A CLEAR SKY," Henry B. Walthall (John M. Stahl Production). Special advertising, featuring popular star, drew big houses.

"BE MY WIFE," Max Linder (Goldwyn). Picture pleased a big business.

Short Subjects.—Pathe News, Sunshine Comedy.

CAPITOL

"BEAUTY'S WORTH," Marion Davies (Paramount). Drew well all week and enjoyed pleased big business.

Exploitation.—Usual newspaper advertising, window cards and lobby display.

Short Subjects.—Round six, "Leather Pushers," Capitol News.

RIALTO

"THE HOUSE WITHOUT CHILDREN," Special Cast (State Rights). Picture pleased a big business for first half of the week.

Short Subjects.—Fox News, Sunshine Comedy.

NEW FOLLY

"MOLLY O'," Mabel Normand (First National). Picture and business both very good.

Exploitation.—Unusually attractive lobby display, window cards and newspaper advertising.

Short Subjects.—Harold Lloyd in "Beat It."

BROADWAY

"DEAD OR ALIVE," Jack Hoxie (Arrow). Delighted good business.

"TWO WISE WIVES," Special Cast (Paramount). Good picture and business.

PHILADELPHIA

ALDINE

"HIS WIFE'S HUSBAND," Betty Blythe (American Releasing Corp.). Picture did the biggest business the house has done for several months. Title and star were widely exploited, and production was loudly praised on all sides.

Short Subjects.—"Ten Seconds," Lee Moran (Universal), Pathe Review, Universal News, and Travelaughs.

"DON'T DOUBT YOUR WIFE," Leah Baird (Pathe). Production enjoyed fair patronage throughout the week, but the star is not especially well known. Picture was declared worthy of better patronage.

Short Subjects.—Harold Lloyd in "Never Weaken" (Pathe), Starland Review, Universal News and Pathe Review.

STANLEY

"THE WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). Title was capitalized from every possible angle, and, for the season of the year, picture did a smashing business. Was declared one of the best pictures seen in months.

Short Subjects.—Post Nature Picture, "In the Great North" (Educational), Fox and Pathe News Reels, and Mack Sennett Comedy, "Oh, Daddy" (First National).

"SONNY," Richard Barthelmess (First National). Dick is always a tremendous drawing card here, and this picture proved no exception to the rule. The city was covered with 24 sheets, with the star's name paramount. The desired results were obtained.

Short Subjects.—Johnny Hines in "Torchy's Steps" (Educational), Great American Author Series, "Longfellow" (Hodkinson), and Fox and Pathe News Reels.

ARCADIA

"FOR THE DEFENSE," Ethel Clayton (Paramount). Popularity of the stage play was capitalized, with the star as additional attraction, and standing room was the order practically every night, even in the face of very warm weather.

Short Subjects.—Hallroom Boys' Comedy, "Better Late Than Never" (Masterpiece-State Rights), Pathe News, Movie Chats and one-reel special.

"PROPHET'S PARADISE," Eugene O'Brien (Selznick). Star is popular and managed to draw fairly good crowds all week, even in the face of strong counter-attractions in the neighborhood.

Short Subjects.—Bobby Vernon in "Hickory Hick" (Educational) and Urban Movie Chats.

KARLTON

"THE MAN FROM HOME," James Kirkwood and Anna Nillson (Paramount). On the strength of the stage version drew fair houses, but critics were not kind. Made its strongest appeal through its beautiful exteriors.

Short Subjects.—Christie Comedy, "Bucking Broadway" (Educational), Pathe News and Scenic.

PALACE

"THE WORLDLY MADONNA," Clara Kimball Young (State Rights). It was some time since the star had been seen on Market Street, and many admirers boosted up the box office receipts a little above the average summer figures. Production was very satisfactory from entertainment standpoint.

Short Subjects.—Christie Comedy, "Cold Feet" (Educational), American Author Series, "Mark Twain" (Hodkinson), Pathe News, and Topics of the Day.

VICTORIA

"THE NIGHT ROSE," Lon Chaney (Universal). Star has gained not a small following in the city since some of his recent pictures, and crowds flocked in goodly numbers to see this one. Was very well liked.

Short Subjects.—"Straight from the Farm," Al St. John (Fox), Post Nature Picture, "One Man Reunion," Pathe News and "Pathos Weakly and Asap's Fables."

"UP AND GOING," Tom Mix (Fox). Lovers of the Mix type of pictures seem to be plentiful along Market Street, in spite of hot weather, and very good business was reported. Story seemed to make a very impressionistic appeal.

Short Subjects.—Mack Sennett Comedy, "Oh, Daddy" (First National), Scenic, "Lassoing Live Lions."

CAPITAL

"THE VERMILION PENCIL," Sessue Hayakawa (R-C). First Japanese picture to get a first run in Philly for more than a year, but it lived up to its distinction and pulled good patronage all week, especially the last three days. Very well liked.

Short Subjects.—Monty Banks Comedy, "Derby Day," Kinograms, Topics of the Day.

"WATCH HIM STEP," Richard Talmadge (State Rights). First Dick Talmadge picture to ever get a first run here. Was largely revamped by territorial owners, and went over with box office honors to spare. Made a big hit as a snappy, entertaining picture.

Short Subjects.—Hallroom Boys' Comedy, "Better Late Than Never," Prizma, "Cape of Good Hope," and Topics of the Day.

RICHMOND, VA.

COLONIAL

"THE FATAL MARRIAGE," Wallace Reed and Lillian Gish (R-C). This is a reissue and did not hold up well for the three-day run.

"THE MAN UNCONQUERABLE," Jack Holt (Paramount). Very good business on a three-day run.

BIJOU

"BEAUTY'S WORTH," Marion Davies (Paramount). Three days to good business.

"CARDIGAN" (American Releasing Corp). Three days to only fair business. Old-style pictures do not appeal largely.

BROADWAY

"SMILIN' THROUGH," Norma Talmadge (First National). An entire week to capacity business.

SCRANTON, PA.

(Week of June 18)

STRAND

"NORTH OF THE RIO GRANDE," Bebe Daniels (Paramount). Dandy business for run and people liked feature.

MILES

"TILLIE," Mary Miles Minter (Realart-Paramount). Vaudeville built up some business but chief drawing card was feature. Attendance good and film appreciated.

NEW STATE

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM," Lillian and Dorothy Gish (United Artists). Run for first time at popular prices and was excellent attraction. Name of Griffith as director, chief asset in publicity and acted as a good magnet to attract attention. Extensive advertising campaign a feature of exploitation.

WINTER GARDEN

First Half.

"WHITE HANDS," Hobart Bosworth (Gunning). Good business.

Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising, clever lobby of white, large black circles with outstretched white hands, very effective.

Short Subjects.—"Strictly Modern," Snub Pollard Comedy. International News.

PALACE HIP

"TRAILIN'," Tom Mix (Fox). Pleasing to average audiences.

(Week of June 25)

NEW STATE

"DETERMINATION," Gene Burnell. Miss Burnell appeared personally in this theatre and met most of the patrons. Picture itself is of the super type, with some unique elements of plot and presentation which fill it with rich opportunities to exhibitors in normally situated localities to make genuine clean-up.

STRAND

"THE MAN FROM HOME," James Kirkwood and Anna Q. Nilsson (Paramount). Good booking, one that is capable of being expanded into a record-breaker where conditions are as they should be. Even with mine strike, picture drew well and was liked.

POLI

"BY RIGHT OF PURCHASE," Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien (Select). This was a reissue which proved a winner. Was well received and proved a good part of the bill, further boosted by vaudeville.

SEATTLE, WASH.

STRAND

"FIND THE WOMAN," Alma Rubens (Paramount). Patronage well sustained.

Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising, billboards, window cards and lobby trim.

Short Subjects.—"Torchy's Ghost," Burton Holmes Scenic, Kinograms.

LIBERTY

"COPS," Buster Keaton (First National). A riot!

"WATCH YOUR STEP," Cullin Landis (Goldwyn). Excellent. Only all-comedy bill in town; very refreshing; good patronage.

Exploitation.—Usual newspaper advertising, window cards and lobby.

Short Subjects.—Liberty News and Pathe Scenic.

COLISEUM

FIRST HALF

"THE WOMAN HE MARRIED," Anita Stewart (First National). Good business.

Exploitation.—Lobby cards, window cards and newspaper space.

Short Subjects.—"Monkey Shines," Campbell comedy, Pathe News, Kinograms, Topics of the Day.

LAST HALF

"THE EYES OF THE MUMMY," Pola Negri.

Short Subjects.—Christie Comedy, Pathe News, Kinograms.

COLUMBIA

"OUT OF THE SILENT NORTH," Frank Mayo (Universal). Excellent choice for hot weather.

Exploitation.—Very attractive lobby in snow-covered, log-cabin effect; doortender in appropriate costume.

Short Subjects.—Century Comedy, International News.

BLUE MOUSE

"THE BARNSTORMER," Charles Ray (First National). Excellent business. Star popular here.

Exploitation.—Regular newspaper advertising, lobby display.

Short Subjects.—"The Young Painter," Triart production; very fine. News reel.

PALACE HIP

"SEEING IS BELIEVING," Viola Dana (Metro). Well received.

WINTER GARDEN

"THE BAIT," Hope Hampton (Paramount). Good business.

Exploitation.—Regular newspaper space and lobby trim.

Short Subjects.—"Friday the Thirteenth," Pathe Comedy, International News.

WILKES-BARRE, PA.

(Week of June 18)

CAPITOL

"THE FOOLISH MATRONS," Hobart Bosworth (Maurice Tourneur). Business stayed up, even with mine strike in ninth week.

ORPHEUM

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM," Lillian and Dorothy Gish (United Artists). Attendance was up to mark. Same favorable comments heard.

SAVOY

"PEACOCK ALLEY," Mae Murray (Metro). Best attendance in a long time and shows were crowded to doors at almost every screening.

POLI

"FRENCH HEELS," Irene Castle (Hodkinson). Fair interest with average audiences.

(Week of June 27)

SAVOY

"HER SOCIAL VALUE," Katherine McDonald (First National). New picture with American beauty as star did as well as could be expected in town where mines are main industry and idleness the rule since April 1. Average business.

ORPHEUM

"DETERMINATION," Gene Burnell. Ran for whole week with average attendance, which is quite a tribute to its worth, when the fact is taken into consideration that over 50 per cent of the people of this section have not seen a payday since the mines suspended April 1.

CAPITOL

"THE WAY OF A MAID," Elaine Hammerstein (Selznick). Vaudeville and the star without a failure are both claiming the honors for attendance that was just about up to normal or a little less. Business poor because of mine conditions.

POLI

"FREE AIR," Tom Douglas. Attendance as good as can be expected under mine strike conditions. Picture a hit among those who were able to take in production.

WILMINGTON, N. C.

ROYAL

"THE PRODIGAL JUDGE," Maclyn Arbuckle and Jean Page (Vitagraph). Very poor business but a mighty fine picture.

"WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY TO-NIGHT?" (States Rights). Good business on this for a three-day run. Street ballyhoo of old woman looking for wandering boy brought business. Also prologue recitation and vocal solo of song at opening of picture put it over big.

FOR THE EXHIBITORS BOX-OFFICE

EDITED BY GEORGE T. PARDY

The Understudy

F. B. O. Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Ethel Hadden. Scenario by Beatrice Van. Director, William A. Seiter. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Mary Neil, Doris May; Tom Manning, Wallace MacDonald; Grace Lorimer, Christine Mayo; Martha Manning, Otis Harlan; Cathbert Vane, Arthur Hoyt.

Tom Manning's wealthy father objects to the intense interest shown by his son in Grace Lorimer, an actress whose fascinations have proved too much for the youth. Desiring to put an end to the complications which ensue Tom's father sends his son out West and notifies Grace that he is willing to pay any sum in reason if she agrees to give up all claim upon his heir. Grace is unable, for certain reasons, to appear in person to claim the money, although she is perfectly willing to release Tom in exchange for a check. She persuades Mary Neil, a stage-struck girl, to impersonate her and visit the elder Manning. This Mary does and arrives at the Manning home in due course of time. When she appears Tom's father discovers through a photograph that Mary is not the person she represents herself to be. However, he invites her to remain temporarily with the family, and promises that if she proves satisfactory he will consent to her marriage with his son. Tom Manning then makes his appearance. He is struck by Mary's beauty and winning ways and the rest of the family have also become attached to her. Tom, with his father's consent, finally marries Mary before Grace can arrive to create a disturbance and all ends well.

A mildly amusing picture with a plot of extremely light construction. The Understudy may serve to while away an idle hour during the heated term. Having such thin material on hand, Director William Seiter wisely made no attempt to develop it in the least degree seriously. There was nothing to do save pile up the farcical situations at top speed, trusting to the clever work of Doris May and her supporting cast to keep the interest alive, and in this they have to a certain extent succeeded. The story, of course, does not convince, but thanks to quick action and breezy atmosphere, the film is fairly entertaining and from a photographic standpoint artistically pleasing.

Points of Appeal.—There are some whimsical incidents introduced during the heroine's sojourn in the home of her future husband's father, when she impersonates the adventurers and finds herself entangled in an odd net of complications. It is during this period that the feature develops its most humorous angles and a bit of a surprise twist when the youthful lover arrives and helps to carry out the girl's deception. Events progress with commendable rapidity, in fact the speed at which the various personages figuring in the tale work at all stages is rather unusual, but no doubt intentional on the director's part, and a cheerful climax is achieved.

Cast.—Doris May has appeared in stronger roles, but invests the character of Mary Neil with her own peculiar charm and piquant dash. Christine Mayo gives a capital portrayal of the scheming actress and the support is adequate.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The interiors are handsomely filmed, some pretty exterior shots shown and skillful light and shadow effects attained. The continuity is smooth and the action fast throughout.

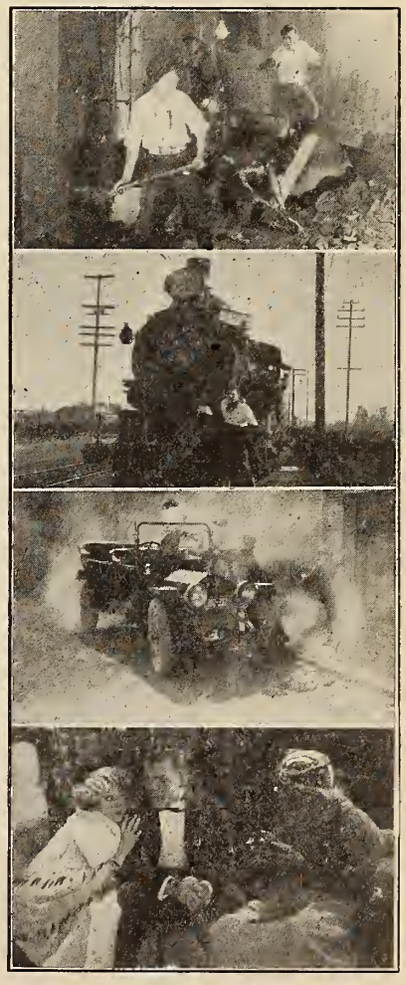
The Fast Mail

Fox Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Lincoln J. Carter. Director, Bernard J. Durning. Cameramen, George Schneiderman and Don Short. Running Time, Fifty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Mary Martin, Eileen Percy; Reed, Adolph Menjou; Walter West, Charles Jones; Lee Martin, James Mason; La Fitte, William Steele; Henry Joyce, Harry Dunkinson.

The plot concerns the love romance of a Southern girl and a young cowpuncher whom she has met while in the West. There is a rival for the girl's affections and as she has a weak brother the villain is enabled to set an intrigue afoot that separates the hero from the girl. This intrigue is most comprehensive in design and while the villain abducts the girl he sets traps for the hero. But the latter is a bard-rider and a straight-shooter. Also he can drive an automobile with the best of them and can make perilous leaps from fast moving express trains into equally fast moving motor cars. So after prodigous effort and countless gestures of the most heroic proportions the cowboy smashes all the evil forces and wins the girl for himself.



The lovers of screen action for its own sake will find a brimming and delectable cup in The Fast Mail, a five reeler in which stunts of the breath-taking order jostle and elbow each other as they crowd their way onto the screen. It is not by any means a frequent occurence for the picture-goer to have presented to him a film containing within the footage of five-reels so many stirring events. It is as though the producers had taken the big thrill generally culminating the action of each episode of the more pretentious of serial plays and worked them into a continuity for five reel exposition. The action hits it up at such a clip and events are so continuously pushing each other aside that one cannot be quite sure, but it seemed to the reviewer that everything the thrillers have ever evolved is to be found in its most potent form in The Fast Mail. Of course, in the face of such a whirlwind of action one motions aside all consideration of story construction and takes things as they come, and in the case of The Fast Mail they come fast enough to hold the spectator to that contract. The result is a show of three-quarters of an hour or more that takes one out of himself entirely and provides sure-fire entertainment.

Cast.—Charles Jones, the erstwhile "Buck," takes all honors in the "acting" line. He goes in for the most strenuous sort of acrobatics and scales the heights of dare-deviltry with colors flying gloriously. Eileen Percy stands the strain of her leading man's pace remarkably well and the other members of the cast all contribute generously to the three-ring effect of this stunt circus.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—There are many noticeably fine examples of photographic ingenuity. The director succeeded in putting punch in all his episodes. Apparently no expense of money or effort was spared to give each melodramatic situation a setting capable of putting it over with the maximum of effect. The horse race, the explosion which demolishes the river boat, the railroad episodes and the countless other features are all realistically spectacular.

Trimmed

Universal Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Hapsburg Liebe. Director, Harry Pollard. Cameraman, Sol Polito. Running Time, Fifty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dale Garland, Hoot Gibson; Alice Millard, Patsy Ruth Miller; John Millard, A. Hollingsworth; Young Bill Young, Fred Kohler; Nebo Slayter, Otto Hoffman, Judge William Dandridge, Dick Lareno; Lem Fyfer, R. Hugh Sutherland.

Dale Garland of Centerville returns from abroad after four years service in the U. S. Army. He is given a great reception by his townsmen. Nebo Slayter, county political boss, and his henchmen decide to run Dale for sheriff against John Millard, the present incumbent, who refuses to accept dictation from them. Dale wins easily and pledges himself to give the citizens an honest deal. Millard's daughter, Alice, returns from an eastern boarding school. She is Dale's childhood sweetheart and he learns from her of Slayter's dishonest schemes. Slayter's ring quarrels with a moonshiner to whom they had been furnishing protection and Young, Slayter's pal, kills him. Alice sees the murder. She tells Dale, who starts after the slayer and arrests him after a terrific fight. Meanwhile the deputies arrest two of the slain man's accomplices, they confess, implicating the entire political ring and Dale jails them all. His honesty wins Alice's love, despite his defeat of her father for sheriff's office.

Another pronounced Hoot Gibson success! There is something doing all the time in Trimmed, not a dull moment in the whole five reels, which offer a lively mixture of melodrama and clean-cut comedy. The picture is well directed, handsomely photographed and ably presented by a thoroughly capable cast of players. It ranks far above the average "Western" type of film, although depending largely for its thrills on skilfully staged combat stuff and the ability of the star to ride a horse in real devil-may-care fashion. But best of all is the fact that Gibson never loses his sense of humor or fails to get in a good laugh where it is needed. The love romance isn't lost sight of, but there is no sacrifice made to the spirit of mock heroics, and take it all in all the feature must be set down as a sure box office winner which exhibitors cannot afford to overlook.

Points of Appeal. — An uncommonly clever touch is the outwitting of Young by the sheriff hero, when the latter clamps his prisoner to a mule with leg irons and Young is carried back to jail by the animal. Dale's return from the war front, and the reception arranged by his townsmen is another situation brimful of fun and the climax is highly satisfactory.

Cast.—Hoot Gibson fills the role of Dale Garland with his usual energy and dramatic ability. His performance is remarkable for its mirthful freshness and magnetic power. Patsy Ruth Miller is a very charming heroine, Fred Kohler a convincing villain and adequate support is rendered the principals by the remainder of the company.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The locations are excellent, there are numerous fine long shots and the Western color is beautifully developed and maintained. The lighting effects are faultless. the continuity unbroken and the action fast from start to finish.

The Dust Flower

Goldwyn Photoplay in Five Parts. Story by Basil King. Continuity by Charles Kenyon. Director, Rowland V. Lee. Cameraman, Max Fabian. Running Time, Fifty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Letty, Helene Chadwick; Rashley Allerton, James Rennie; Steptoe, Claude Gillingwater; Barbara Wallbrock, Mona Kingsley; Judson Flack, Edward Peil, Ott, George Periolat.

Seeking escape from life as a cigarette girl in a low resort whither her stepfather is driving her in order that her increased earnings may keep him well supplied with money, Letty is about to plunge from a bridge into the lake in Central Park when she is seized by Rashley Allerton. Allerton is well supplied with the world's goods but is downcast because his fiancee has just dismissed him with her decision to break the engagement. He listens to the woeful tale of Letty and with the pronouncement that they are both miserable in the extreme he asks Letty to marry him. His return home is a surprise to the servants who are astonished when he introduces Letty as Mrs. Allerton. But next day Allerton repents and as his temperamental fiancee sends for him he proposes that he and Letty have the marriage annulled. Letty of course refuses money and is about to go when the kindly old butler tells her that Allerton needs her. Letty then remains and before long Allerton realizes her worth and that he is in love with the girl he married so impulsively. Letty's step-father then re-enters the story and the situation created thereby determines the girl to give up Allerton and return to the slums. But Allerton learns her whereabouts and rescues her from a cruel beating which the stepfather is about to administer because she failed to work the wealthy man for his money.

The Dust Flower is highly conventional sentimental romance which at times achieves emotional appeal without attempting to leave the well-beaten path of the Cinderella play. The picture has an advantage over most photoplays offering such familiar situations and this is the life with which its characters have been endowed by those who interpret them. There are instances when The Dust Flower really takes hold of the spectator's attention and something like an illusion is approached, but nothing of a very permanent sort comes of the proceedings, which hew close to the line of the familiar and the customary. The story itself seems a quite unwelcome reaction from the contribution which its author made to the screen in Earthbound. The new play is the first Basil King has done for the photoplay since Earthbound, a circumstance which is, possibly, responsible for the disappointment felt when one considers The Dust Flower.

Points of Appeal.—The offering is equipped with all the eyefilling devices developed by directors, cameramen, players and producers and on that account manages to sustain an amount of interest. On the whole it is all material which over and over again has succeeded before the public and evidence is not lacking in everyday occurrences to prove that picture patrons still harbor an affection for this type of entertainment. Therefore it should not fail even though it does not triumph.

Cast.—Helene Chadwick is at her best, which means that her performance lacks little in acting skill and absolutely nothing in personal charm. Claude Gillingwater scores most conspicuously as the butler, James Rennie makes much of his role and George Periolat attracts attention as the cabaret manager. The other members in the main are equal to the tasks put upon them.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The settings are especially attractive and their effectiveness increased by the manner of lighting and photography. Mr. Lee showed fine judgment and skill in his direction of the piece.

The Dictator

Paramount Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Richard Harding Davis. Scenario by Walter Woods. Director, James Cruze. Cameraman, Karl Brown. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

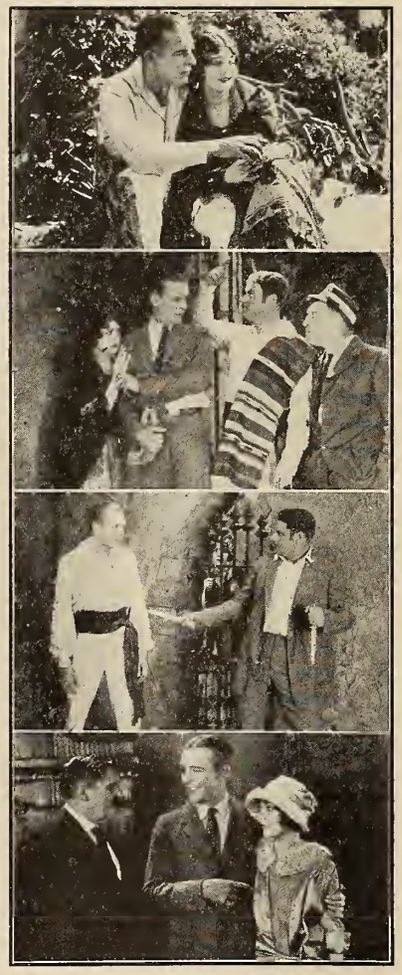
Sam Travers, president of the Pacific Fruit Company, is engaged in shipping arms and ammunition to a South American Republic which is threatened with a revolution. His manager at Porto Banos writes, asking him to locate and detain one Rivas, who is sailing to aid the revolutionists. Travers' son, Brooke, an irresponsible youth, sees Juanita, daughter of Rivas, and stows away on board the steamer on which the girl and her father sail. Biff Dooley, a chauffeur to whom Brooke owes a bill, follows the latter in order to collect his money. Arriving in South America, Brooke and Biff join the revolutionist party, which they aid with the arms shipped by Brooke's father. Juanita is captured by the Government officials and Brooke effects her rescue. After a series of adventures the revolutionists win a complete victory. Old Sam Travers reaches the port to find that Brooke is now Dictator and wed to Juanita, whose father is filling the new President's place.



A merry burlesque melodrama, alive with action and unlimited fun, The Dictator affords bully entertainment. Wallace Reid is always at his best in these rapid-fire comedies and in the present instance, whether engaged in company with his chauffeur companion in stoking furnaces, leaping over walls with goat-like agility, leading a revolutionary army to victory or rescuing his senorita sweetheart from a pursuing villain, acts with an unrestrained joyousness which makes you feel that he is really having a glorious time. The production abounds in numerous farcical situations, every one of which carries a decisive "punch," and hits up an amazing pace which never slackens from beginning to end. It is well directed, handsomely photographed, rich in tropical color, was given a hearty reception when shown recently at The Rivoli Theatre, New York, and has all the earmarks of a winning box office attraction.

Points of Appeal.—One of the most laughable scenes is that in which chauffeur Biff Dooley is led out by a squad of Government soldiers for execution and, being ignorant of Spanish, fancies that they are asking him to become their commander, instead of lining him up as a target against a wall, until his pal Brooke appears and leads a rescuing charge armed with a pickaxe. The sight of the opposing South American armies taking turns in chasing each other all over the lot is intensely amusing, and in fact as the play goes on its humor constantly increases until the diverting climax is reached.

Cast.—Wally Reid has never appeared to better advantage than in the role of the erstwhile indolent Brooke Travers, who develops such resourceful energy when fate steers him in pursuit of a beautiful Spanish senorita and across the opposing currents of a whirlwind revolution. He enters right into the wild spirit of the farce comedy episode, scoring a hit which will long be remembered by his many admirers. Walter Long, as Biff Dooley, shares the honors with Reid, Lila Lee plays the heroine, Juanita, admirably and the work of the supporting cast could not be improved upon.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—There are many beautiful tropical views, with skillful long shots and colorful settings. Even continuity and rapid action distinguish the entire picture.

Belle of Alaska

American Releasing Corporation Photoplay in Five Parts. Authors, J. G. Alexander and Harvey Gates. Director, Chester Bennett. Running Time, Fifty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Ruth Harkin, Jane Novak; Wade Harkin, Noah Beery; Lucky Vail, J. Frank Glendon; Chicago Belle, Florence Carpenter; Dugan, Leslie Bates.

Deserted by her drunken husband at Seattle, Ruth Harkin makes her way to a cheap waterfront restaurant. There she meets Lucky Vail, gambler and dance hall owner, who appoints himself her protector. Followed home at night by Dugan, an underworld character, Ruth shoots him. Fearing prosecution she becomes a stowaway on a ship bound for Alaska. On board she encounters "Chicago" Belle, who is going North to enter one of Vail's dance halls. The ship is wrecked, "Chicago" Belle dies and Ruth assumes her name and reaches the gold camp, sole survivor of the vessel. Later Vail arrives in Alaska and finds Ruth masquerading as "Chicago" Belle. He realizes that he loves her. Wade Harkin, Ruth's husband, makes his appearance, asks for the famous "Chicago" Belle, and recognizes his wife. Vail forces Harkin from the house at the muzzle of his gun. In the street Vail and Harkin engage in a terrific hand-to-hand fight. Just as Vail strikes Harkin a knockout blow, the latter is shot and slain by an onlooker. Vail staggers to Ruth and her baby, for whom he has fought and won.

Patrons who delight in rip-roaring melodrama will find Belle of Alaska a highly spiced picture of many thrills and exciting situations which spins along a groove of swift action with a reckless disregard of probabilities. The long arm of coincidence is ever busy in the plot's development, always intervening at a critical stage in the heroine's colorful career and snatching her out of the very jaws of death. The general effect is that of a serial compressed into a five-reel compass, a critical audience may smile over the film's melodramatic excesses, but there is plenty of suspense, a murder mystery which is well concealed up to the actual moment of its solution and excellent photography. It registers as a good hot weather attraction which does not overtax one's thinking faculties and ought to bring satisfactory box office results in certain localities.

Points of Appeal.—The big fight at the finish between the heroine's recreant husband and her gambler lover is a masterpiece of savage realism, a veritable whirlwind of fisticuffs calculated to thrill the heart of every onlooker who loves a genuine scrap conducted on go-as-you-please rules. The shooting of Wade Harkin and Vail's triumphal return to the woman and child he loves provides a bully climax.

Cast.—Jane Novak is fully equal to the many emotional demands made upon her by the role of Ruth Harkin, and gives a performance remarkable for its force and dramatic polish. J. Frank Glendon shines in the part of gambler "Lucky" Vail and Noah Beery is brutally impressive as the degenerate Wade Harkin. Florence Carpenter wins favor as "Chicago" Belle, the adventuress, and the supporting cast is strong in talent.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The marine views are excellent, the shipwreck scene well filmed and some fine night shots in the gold camp and Nome locations are in evidence. The lighting is adequate, the continuity tolerably smooth and the action buzzes along at a merry rate.

Afraid to Fight

Universal Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Leet R. Brown. Scenario by Charles Sarver. Director, William Wothrington. Cameraman, Arthur Reeves. Running Time, Fifty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Tom Harper, Frank Mayo; Harriet Monroe, Lillian Rich; Sally Harper, Peggy Cartwright; Mrs. Harper, Lydia Knott; Dr. Butler, W. S. McDunnough; Big Jim Brandon, Tom McGuire; Leonard, Harry Mann; Phillip Brand, Wade Boteler; Slick Morrisey, Al Kaufman; Bertie, Roscoe Karns; Fat Boy, Guy Tinney; Johnny Regan, Charles Haefeli; Battling Grogan, Tom Kennedy; Slim Dawson, James Quinn.

While fighting in the U. S. Army overseas, Tom Harper incidentally engaged in boxing and won the heavyweight championship of the American Expeditionary Force. Going into action he was temporarily put out by gas and returned home with a bad lung and a motber and crippled sister to support. Being witness to a gross case of bullying by a big pugilist who picks on a kid for his victim, Tom interferes and beats up the fighter severely. The latter's manager sees the encounter and decides tbat Tom is worth taking under his managerial wing. He discovers that Tom needs three thousand dollars badly to pay for an operation on Sally. Tom is offered a chance to win a championship and at the same time get the money he needs and signs a contract to go away to the mountains for a three months rest. In the meantime he agrees not to get mixed up in any side scraps. Under these hard conditions he submits to various insults and a horse-whipping from a fellow who objects to his attentions to a pretty mountain maid. When bis time is up Tom goes back and wins the championship and later returns to the mountains, where he finds tbe girl he loves awaiting bim.

Quick action and a vast amount of real human interest are the qualities dominating this picture, which ranks as one of the best productions in which Frank Mayo has so far been starred. Masculine patrons will surely pronounce it rattling good entertainment and the chances are that a majority of the feminine contingent will vote in its favor, even if "scrapping" atmosphere holds sway in the story's development. For underlying the strenuous physical action there runs a warm current of sympathy for the returned doughboy hero, handicapped by bad health and willing to take any sort or risk in the endeavor to make life pleasant for his mother and crippled sister. There is just enough of this sentimental balance to even matters up nicely without weakening the plot and taking it on the whole Afraid to Fight may be listed as a clean, wholesome attraction likely to prove a valuable box office asset.

Points of Appeal.—The fistic engagement is extremely realistic, replete with thrills and staged with excellent accuracy of ring detail. Hero Tom Harper's meek submission to the bullying gent during his sojourn in the mountains is an unique situation which wins him the favor of the audience because it is clearly made manifest that in playing a seemingly cowardly part he is actually proving himself a genuine man under the circumstances. The climax comes as a pleasant surprise, when the girl in the case discovers that her lover has been "working under a pull," to put it in sporting parlance.

Cast.—Frank Mayo plays the role of Tom Harper with splendid dash and magnetism. Lillian Rich is a very fascinating heroine. Peggy Cartwright makes a strong sympathetic appeal in the part of Sister Sally and the supporting cast is all that could be desired.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—There are many beautiful exteriors in evidence, the mountain backgrounds being particularly impressive and good lighting prevails. The continuity holds without a single break and the action moves at a speedy clip throughout.

A Self-Made Man

Fox Photoplay in Five Parts. Based on the Story by Geo. Horace Lorimer. Scenario by Monte M. Katterjohn. Director, Roland V. Lee. Cameraman, Dave Ables. Running Time, Fifty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Jack Spurlock, William Russell; Anita Gray, Renee Adore; Aunt Lydia, Mathilde Brundage; Jonas Spurlock, James Gordon; Hugo Bonsall, Richard Tucker; Detective, Harry Gribbon; Kato, Togo Yamamoto.

Jack Spurlock's study of art consists mainly in using his studio as a playground, and one final escapade determines his father to put an end to his allowance. This is also responsible for a break of his engagement to Anita Gray, who is very wealthy. Spurlock the elder is a great Wall Street operator and a plot to take the control of a railroad from him is designed by Hugo Bonsall. Hugo's father induces Spurlock to take a fisbing trip and while on tbe trip Hugo sells and sells and sells the D & G stock. But young Spurlock has overheard some of tbe plans and with money he borrows from Anita, Jack buys and buys and buys, so that the control of tbe D & G passes into bis hands during his father's absence. When Spurlock does return and finds his son bas made good the devoted daddy is elated boundlessly and realizes his ambition of being father to a chap who won his spurs as a financier. Of course, the entire stock trading activities win Anita back to Jack and tbe romance closes witb an embrace.

Abrim with devices of slapstick, farce and melodrama, A Self-Made Man seldom gets far enough in any one direction to move the spectator or attain an impression of lasting quality. The picture swings along at a fast clip, bounding about from slapstick to romance and from farce to melodrama, at times seeming as though the play itself was as anxious to find a comfortable landing place as the spectator is to have it land. William Russell's role is cut to his measure—and perhaps that's the reason why the picture never quite takes hold. Russell can fight, indeed, the screen boasts none more convincing with two fists, foot-work and wallop-dodging than this star. But he does seem very much out of the picture in the role of an irresponsible young art student. In A Self-Made Man the producer has burdened the star too heavily with blithe and lightsome stuff.

Points of Appeal.—Nothing very much happens until Jack Spurling gets a job fighting a champ for a purse of fifty dollars. At this point there is action and the spectator gets a view of one of the best screen battles developed in some time. The ensuing farce complications, in which Jack is forced into the position of a jewel-stealing suspect, are amusing in spots. The climax to all this is repetition of the well-known stock buying and selling stunt, in which clerks rush in and out of doors and everybody runs for the telephone. However, it must be admitted, and it is here admitted cheerfully, that in A Self-Made Man there is a considerable degree of melodramatic punch in this presentation of the situation. In judging the appeal of the picture as a whole one is forced back on the now well established tradition of the screen and say that the especial supporters of the star are the ones who will enjoy themselves at this show.

Cast.—Renee Adoree is a pleasant heroine and the other members of the cast lend rather good support to their principal.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—It is felt that Mr. Lee has gotten about all there is in entertainment from his scenario. The continuity is somewhat jerky and the photography and settings do their full part in giving all the assistance within their power.

Herald—There is a surplus of sweet sentimentality at first, though this is leavened by the momentary presence of the most freckle-faced boy in the movies. Quickness of action cannot quite veil the thinness of suspense, but it makes a good try. American—You can't imagine it. Neither could I, but in The Dust Flower no imagination is necessary. The story transpires on the screen so simply, so sincerely, that you travel along with the tenement girl quite as a matter of course. World—The King photoplay lacks only one little thing, and that is story. The theme of the piece is Cinderellic—the poor little girl who, dressed up, lays the world at her feet. It is not so bad as it is commonplace. Times—If ever a photoplay was made for mental 12-year-olds, The Dust Flower is such a production. It confesses that it is "a Cinderella story," and it makes a preposterous effort to seem sweet and charming. Post—This old tale has a novelty. The fairy godmother is none other than a butler. Sun—Is a much lighter fairy story than one might expect from Basil King, and it contains so much sugar it just misses going to the diabetic stage. Journal—Pretty, sentimental piece, directed and photographed so charmingly that it should absorb the interest of the most cynical. Mail—Judging by the standards that have proved successful in the past, The Dust Flower should be a highly popular picture, and it probably will be. Telegram—Is an absorbing picture. Globe—Last week it was The Wall Flower by Rupert Hughes, and this week The Dust Flower by Basil King. A similarity in tities, however, does not provide ground for comparison.

Times—Although no picture is worth staying away from the Atlantic Ocean for, if you do remain in town this holiday week and find yourself with a free afternoon or evening, you may be glad to know that there's at least an hour's joy in gelatin at the Rivoli. World—This photoplay of an American youth upsetting a Southern revolution is a romp for Wallace Reid. The spic and span settings the Paramount company has used are another source of pleasure to the heat-weary faithful who go to the Rivoli. American—The very short and pithy play was evolved into a very long and unpithy picture, but there were some entertaining episodes and much vim. Herald—The story itself is rapid fire entertainment that begins to explode with merriment toward its close, volleys of musketry on the screen being echoed by volleys of laughter. Tribune—An amusing burlesque on the Latin melodrama. It is a Wallace Reid part—the sort of thing his vast numbers of followers will delight in seeing him do. World—Full of zip and go and gives the star all the chances he wants to be just as romantic as he and the feminine film fans think he looks. Telegram—Is one of the most delightful and colorful pictures in which Mr. Reid has appeared. Globe—It's a long time since Wallace Reid has appeared in anything so consistently amusing. Mail—Good hot weather entertainment, exceedingly well played. Journal—There are sixty laughs to the minute in The Dictator. Sun—Is bound to furnish amusement to anybody. Post—The picture abounds in good entertainment, which will be appreciated these warm days.

Press Comments

World—This is going to please most of the Strand's patrons, because it gives them peeks from time to time into the breeze-swept wilderness of the North and Northwest. While there is no opportunity to grow enthusiastic concerning the story itself, there is little doubt that it is above the average of its class. Herald—Something different has been tried in the Canadian Northwest film line. Curwood has endeavored to psychoanalyze the great woods. Highly interesting effort to blaze a new trail through the Northwest of fiction, but it fails of complete effectiveness because it is as obvious as Jacques's whiskers. Tribune—There is little to say of James Oliver Curwood's pictures, because you either like them or you don't, but there is this to say, you never get stung on them, for you know beforehand what they are going to be like and exactly what you are letting yourself in for. Post—Produced as well as the majority, but not with such an entertaining story, has a cast of sincere actors who, helped along by beautiful scenery, succeed in holding the interest. Sun—Is happy in suggesting the noble sweep of those regions better than most Northwest films. Journal—Is really a nature story of the Canadian Woods, with bits of human interest on the side. Telegram—Not only is there plenty of red-blooded action, stirring scenes, storms, rapids and true mystery of the wilds, but a psychological denouement, a study in fear. World—With the mercury scraping an acquaintance with the 100 mark outside, ANY picture of snow and cool, dark looking places would be acceptable.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

The Theatre Owner and the Public

By L. W. BOYNTON

EVERY individual theatre, every circuit in the country, ought to imitate, on a large scale or small, according to its need and ability, the Crandall public service plan.

Details of the establishment of this new department by the Crandall houses at Washington are printed elsewhere in this issue. They deserve the careful consideration of exhibitors everywhere, because the idea marks a splendid advance toward solving the problem of the industry's relation to the public.

On a local scale, Mr. Crandall is doing what Mr. Hays is carrying forward nationally, and is tackling, in a thoroughly practical way, the big job that confronts all of us.

The creation of a great national wave of friendship toward the motion picture in all its phases was the first task Mr. Hays assigned himself and the success he is achieving already forms an impressive record.

Why should not the exhibitor tie-in his theatre, on some such plan as Mr. Crandall is using, with the Hays movement? There is, it seems to us, no surer way to guarantee the future of the picture house than by intelligent organization of public opinion in its behalf. And success will attend such an effort if the exhibitor recognizes in the fullest degree his responsibility as a public servant—for that is what he most certainly is.

Public service on the part of the picture theatre does not mean merely the holding of meetings at long intervals, when addresses are made and pretentious plans laid out only to be forgotten. It is a job that has to be worked at three hundred and sixty-five days in

Hays-Exhibitor Negotiations Nearing Completion

Completion of the various negotiations between the Hays organization and the three exhibitor groups—the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York; the M.P.T.O. of New York State, Inc.; and the M.P.T.O.A.—is expected shortly.

Several meetings have been held during the past week. Certain clauses of the proposed standard contracts were still under discussion when this issue went to press.

the year. Essentially, so far as the theatre is concerned, the problem is largely a local one, and requires the kind of specialization Mr. Crandall recognizes when he establishes a department and places at its head one of the prominent clubwomen of Washington.

Many theatres, of course, are not in position, financially, to go into such an undertaking. Surely, however, they can adapt the Crandall idea in some measure, if they are not already filling the need in another way.

We are glad to give both space and praise to the Crandall announcement. It is a landmark of progress and another indication that there is a new day in this industry.

The Georgia Better Films Movement

IN the mobilization of public opinion in the industry's behalf, Georgia is one of the real leaders. There is an active Better Films Committee in Atlanta. Its work has attracted, and deserves, national attention. The most influential people of the city have been enlisted in the movement, and the plan is spreading throughout the South.

Last week the Committee gave an exhibition at the State Capitol to the members of the Legislature in furtherance of a bill providing that motion pictures be shown in two of the custodial institutions of the state. The affair was sponsored by Governor Hardwick, one of the best friends the industry has.

This is but one phase of the Georgia plan, which is patterned in some respects on that used by the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays. As a cure for censorship agitation, it has no superiors. It is in line with the best recent developments in the industry, because it seeks to take the public into the industry's confidence, and does actually succeed in doing so.

One of the things we like best about the Georgia plan is that it crystalizes real co-operation among exhibitors on the most vital of all propositions. The industry's representatives on the Better Films Committee are Willard C. Patterson of the Metropolitan Theatre, which is aligned with First National; Turner Jones of the Southern Enterprises, Inc., a Famous Players-Lasky subsidiary; and Miss Anna Eugene Aiken, publisher of the Weekly Film Review, and Atlanta correspondent of Exhibitors Trade Review.

And it should be pointed out also that the Georgia state exhibitor organization, a strongly-organized, independent body, is enlisted in this important work. All the elements in the Georgia picture world are working together at the point of and on the problem of co-operation with the public—which in itself is impressive and worthy of all praise.

The Crandall idea and the Georgia plan are different in method, but the goal is the same. And the goal will most certainly be reached, chiefly because there is a man by the name of Hays in the picture business.

Crandall Theatres Establish Public Service Department; Better Films Movement Gains Headway in South

THE progressiveness that has made the Crandall Theatres in Washington, D. C., and vicinity one of the most successful exhibitor units in the United States reasserted itself this week in the announcement by Harry M. Crandall, owner of the chain and First National regional franchise, of the expansion of his executive organization to include a Public Service and Educational Department, under the directorship of Mrs. J. J. Locher, prominent Washington club woman and for six years chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the District of Columbia Federated Women's Clubs. The permanent establishment of the new department comes only after a year of experimentation during which Mrs. Locher has served the Crandall organization in an advisory capacity and has demonstrated the great good that can be made to result from closer contact with the public.

Harry M. Crandall

Public Confidence an Asset

Mr. Crandall has always been of the belief that an exhibitor's most valuable assets are public confidence and the possession of some means of intimate personal contact with the citizenship that constitutes the theatre's patronage. He has observed that a vast majority of all controversies between the industry and the public have been the result of misunderstanding and misinformation as to both sides. This embraces all the hue and cry about censorship, the need of safeguarding the children's welfare and all of the other questions that have been agitated almost without cessation during recent years. Many months ago Mr. Crandall took steps to bring his organization, both as to personnel and activities, into closer touch with his public, with results that manifested themselves unequivocally at a time when any exhibitor less solidly fortified would have been wiped out of existence.

The Crandall department of Public Service and Education establishes the point of contact and the means of discussion and co-operation between the Crandall interests and the public just as Mr. Hays serves as liaison officer establishing contact among producers, exhibitors and public on a national instead of local basis.

Mrs. Locher approaches her new task well equipped. During the six years that she has served as chairman of the motion picture committee of the District of Columbia Federated Women's Clubs, she has had under her direction as many as fourteen theatres running special performances for children over a period of four consecutive weeks. She also directed the educational matinees for mothers during Baby Week campaigns. While always a strong advocate of better pictures, Mrs. Locher has also always been emphatically opposed to censorship.

The neighborhood motion picture theatre, Mrs. Locher believes, is the logical community center. Church, school and theatre each has its own ethical value in the community life and each is a factor in the making of good citizenship.

Co-operative Spirit

The co-operative spirit essential to the success of the Crandall plan already exists in large measure in the National Capital, but every facility, nevertheless, will be afforded Mrs. Locher to impress upon the city of Washington that the Crandall enterprises are a species of public utility conducted to enlist the counsel, the advice and the support of every citizen with a spark of civic pride. The approach, of necessity, must be through the housewife and the mother for the patronage of the motion pictures in the Capital is something over seventy-five per cent feminine. For this reason studio offices in the Metropolitan Theatre building, which also houses the executive staff of the Crandall organization, have been placed at Mrs. Locher's disposal so equipped as to make easy the entertaining of groups of women at tea for the friendly discussion and analysis of points of common interest.

Among the duties which will devolve upon the Public Service and Educational Department of the Crandall Theatres will be the arrangement of special matinee performances for children. This is an obvious need in all large cities and one which Mrs. Locher was among the first to recognize, although she is cognizant, too, of the fact that child patronage constitutes only about 5 per cent of the gross attendance at the Crandall houses.

An even more important undertaking will be to establish an authentic and reliable Bureau of Information for the enlightenment of the general public, churches, civic organizations and individuals seeking knowledge of some specialized branch of the industry. Pictures will be secured for their various needs, whether for their own private exhibition or to be shown at special performances at some one of the Crandall Theatres.

There will also be a line of activity directed to the more complete Americanization of the patrons of the Crandall theatres. By this is meant an agreeably visualized course of education in the fundamental principles of the Constitution of the United States, the organization, purposes and operation of the Executive, Legislative and Judicial branches of the United States Government and such other matters as might tend to create a better type of citizen.

Yielding to the requests of 1500 or more petitioners, Harry M. Crandall will build a splendid new motion picture theatre on the site of the Knickerbocker, which collapsed last January and caused the death of 97 persons and serious injury to scores of others.

The new theatre will be called the Ambassador. It will be bigger and more beautiful than the Knickerbocker and have a much larger seating capacity. Work of tearing down the ruins of the Knickerbocker and building the Ambassador will begin immediately.

Mr. Crandall's decision to rebuild was announced on July 11 after he had held a conference with a number of prominent Washington men and women who live and own property in the section where the Knickerbocker stood. Speaking for the Columbia Heights Business Men's Association, Francis M. Savage, president, said:

"The Knickerbocker Theatre, as it stands to-day, is an inescapable monument to an occurrence whose hideous memory it keeps constantly green in the minds of all who pass. Surely this is a situation that cannot be permitted to endure. Since no other site seems available and since the preponderance of public opinion in this vicinity has indicated itself to be in favor of another beautiful theatre on the site, would it not be the part of sound judgment and simple equity to advocate the erasure of a grief-stricken memory by the erection of another imposing temple of art to restore that normal mental view that now seems to be destroyed?"

The petitioners stated that since the collapse of the Knickerbocker property values in the neighborhood had decreased from 40 to 60 per cent. They expressed the conviction that the rebuilding of the theatre would restore property values to normal and attract further business to the neighborhood.

In his announcement of his decision to rebuild, Mr. Crandall said:

"I have been neutral on the question of rebuilding until this impressive conference was held and the numerously signed petition was presented, requesting me to re-establish the theatre. This petition convinces me of the overwhelming sentiment in favor of the theatre and I shall immediately begin work on the new project.

"It has been impressed upon me that the building of a new theatre would be a public service to the great neighborhood in which the Knickerbocker stood, both in its financial and psychological effect and I believe it my duty to accept this as the will of the public."

The presentation of the petition to Mr. Crandall constituted not only a personal tribute to him but also emphasized the fact that the people of Washington believe motion picture houses to be good for business —not only in attracting persons to neighborhoods to make purchases, but also materially affecting real estate values.

Hardwick Aids Better Films Plan

Atlanta Committee Holds Showing in State Capitol — Special Legislation Introduced

The first active step toward securing legislation providing for the use of motion pictures in the custodial institutions of Georgia was taken July 5th when at the request of Governor Thomas W. Hardwick the Better Films Committee of Atlanta sponsored a special exhibition of selected films for the General Assembly.

It is the first time in the history of the state that the chief executive has interested himself to such an extent in the potentialities of motion pictures as a triple medium for entertainment, instruction and correction, and it is the first time that any special showing of pictures has been arranged to carry a specific message to the law-makers of the state.

Governor Hardwick is known nationally for his staunch advocacy of the screen. Few men in public life have expressed a finer appreciation of the industry and its place in the nation's upbuilding than Georgia's governor.

So keenly is he conscious of the good which may come from the consistent and intelligent use of motion pictures that he is sponsoring a measure which will this week be introduced in the Georgia Legislature at the request of the Better Films Committee, providing for the use of motion pictures in two institutions of correction in Georgia—the Boys' Training School and the Girls' Training School, both of Milledgeville.

In having the bill drawn the Better Films Committee deemed it wiser to limit its provisions to the two institutions above named since the movement marks a radical departure and must win sympathy by the results of what will really be an experiment for the state.

Arrangements for the special exhibition to the General Assembly were perfected by Willard C. Patterson, of the Metropolitan Theatre, Turner Jones of the Southern Enterprises, and Anna Eugene Aiken, Publisher of the Weekly Film Review, all three of whom are members of the Better Films Committee of Atlanta. Immediately preceding the picture program Miss Aiken as a representative of the industry, and more particularly as an executive member of the Better Films Committee, made a brief explanatory talk covering the object of the exhibition and citing the notable examples of the successful use of motion pictures in the custodial institutions of New York and New Jersey.

The Hall of Representatives in which the exhibition was held, was filled to capacity and a number of guests stood throughout the program.

The particular subject chosen for the introduction of the picture program was Dixie's Mountain Majesty, an exquisitely beautiful scenic which is an actual pictorial record of the forest expedition sponsored by the Atlanta Constitution some two months ago in conjunction with the state highway association and the bureau of re-forestation. The trip through the mountains of North Georgia was made in the interest of having this Federal Reserve Area designated as a Government Recreational Park—and it was because of Georgia's keen interest in this movement that the subject was selected as a particularly fitting one with which to gain the sympathetic interest of the General Assembly. The second picture on the program was a citizenship training film—one of the Americanization series—and the third was one of the Sacred Films series.

Whether the measure which the Better Films Committee is introducing and which the Governor is sponsoring will become a law during this session of the Legislature cannot be foretold, but it is certain that the law-makers of the state have had brought to them a very earnest and concrete message.

Carolina to Adopt Georgia Idea

For the purpose of obtaining full information of the system and working procedure of the Atlanta Better Films Committee with a view to operating the same system in North Carolina to co-operate with various civic and welfare organizations in film selection, a committee composed of A. F. Sams of Winston-Salem, D. M. Bain of Wilmington and E. F. Dardine of Charlotte will go to Atlanta on July 20 to attend the regular monthly meeting of that organization, this committee having been named at the Asheville convention upon the invitation of Anna Eugene Aiken, secretary of the Atlanta committee.

Pathe Will Appeal Censorship Case

Decision in Favor of State Commission Will Be Contested in Higher Court—New York Times and World Among Papers Condemning Political Censorship

PATHE will take an appeal to a higher tribunal from the decision of the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court, which held on July 6 that news reels are subject to censorship.

The case will go to the Court of Appeals of the State and will ultimately, it is believed, find its way to the United States Supreme Court on the ground of constitutionality. That the case would undoubtedly be appealed was made clear by Lewis Innerarity, Pathe secretary and counsel.

The decision rendered at Albany attracted the attention of newspaper editorial writers on many of the great metropolitan dailies and other papers throughout the Empire State.

"Thus the censorship of news begins," remarked the New York Times, "and it is hard to say where it will end."

The New York World declared that the censorship of news is "inherently vicious."

Censorship Board Sustained

The opinion of the court, in which all the judges concurred, was written by Associate Justice Harold J. Hinman. The New York State censorship board is sustained in its contention that film concerns which distribute news weeklies must pay the license fee demanded by the commission and that the weeklies must be subjected to censorship.

After setting forth the agreed statement of facts upon which the case was submitted to the Appellate Division by both sides and reviewing the arguments of counsel, Judge Hinman said in part:

"We cannot say that the moving picture is not a medium of thought, but it is clearly something more than a newspaper, periodical or book, and clearly distinguishable in character. It is a spectacle or show rather than a medium of opinion and the latter quality is a mere incident to the former quality. It creates and purveys a mental atmosphere which is absorbed by the viewer without conscious mental effort. It requires neither literacy nor interpreter to understand it.

"Our public libraries are filled with books not commonly read because the author has not caught the attention of the public, without which the book becomes a dead letter. Our public libraries are filled with books which without the necessary literacy stand uninterpreted and equally dead in the field of thought as an organ of opinion. The newspaper offers no particular attraction to the child, and much that is contained in it that might be harmful to the child is not understood by it for lack of literacy or imagination. But the moving picture attracts the attention so lacking with books or even newspapers, particularly so far as children and the illiterate are concerned, and carries its own interpretation. It needs no other illumination than the bright light behind the film, which moves so rapidly that it reproduces the life of the world as it in fact exists, and as it is portrayed in fiction, the evil as well as the good. Its value as an educator for good is only equaled by its danger as an instructor in evil. 'He who runs may read' the thought purveyance of the moving picture.

"The child soon becomes sophisticated, as he attends the school of experience, where current events may be revealed in all their nakedness, where the pictorial drama may illustrate the experiences of mankind, the good and the bad, where character may be shaped most readily, the one way or the other, according to the sentiment conveyed. The actors in the picture become in fact the associates of the child as effectually as though they were their living and breathing companions, so realistic is the picture, so perfectly photographic of real life. Nothing is left to the imagination as with the printed page. The picture creates its own atmosphere so vividly, so atractively that even the child and the illiterate adult may see and learn."

The New York Times editorial follows:

"A court decision now holds that the powers of the State movie censors extend to news reels as well as to those which are more or less hastily regarded as art, and that news photographs which seem indecent or improper to the censors may be excluded. Thus the censorship of news begins, and it is hard to say where it will end.

"The immediate danger, of course, is not great. Few people learn of what has happened from the movie news reels; and it would be rash to say that pictures could be shown in public of everything which may be described in the news. But the wedge usually enters by the thin end. In this particular case, the picture found obscene by our censors represented nothing but some girls in one-piece bathing suits, a spectacle which can be seen at Long Beach any Sunday, and which the average observer does not find in any way exciting. But nobody is qualified for a job as censor unless he is able to see evil where the ordinary mind would never notice it.

"The powers of the movie censors stop with the movies. But it has been held that they may forbid the showing of photographs of things that have happened. Apparently, there is nothing in the decision or the regulations of the commission that might prevent partisan censors from applying their powers to the elimination of news that had a political aspect. And when the next offensive comes for the extension of a moral censorship to printed works this precedent may prove incon-

Pathe Official Issues Statement on News Weekly Decision

THE following signed statement was given to EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW this week by Lewis Innerarity, secretary and counsel of Pathe Exchange, Inc., with reference to the decision in the news weekly case:

"The assumption, without any convincing argument to support it, that the moving picture—either the news reel or the drama—is designed primarily either for the information, education or entertainment of children and illiterates is the unfortunate part of this decision, because any expression of opinion concurred in by the Judges of the Appellate Division of our Supreme Court naturally carries very great weight, and the fact that this great industry has been so classified, even though the argument be unsupportable, is cause for very great regret.

"We do not intend to try this case in the papers, and I therefore shall refrain from making any comment on the decision other than to say that if the fact that 'the motion picture requires neither literacy nor interpreter to understand it' justifies prepublication censorship, then the ambiguity of the printed word is the sole warrant for its unlicensed publication, and we face the proposition that if all people were intelligent, the freedom of the press would be unjustified."

Film Men Speak for a Free Screen

Charles C. Pettijohn and Martin J. Quigley Address Missouri Constitutional Convention and Urge Adoption of Equalizing Amendment

CHARLES C. PETTIJOHN of New York, an assistant of Will H. Hays, and Martin J. Quigley, publisher of Exhibitors Herald, on July 7 addressed the committee on constitutional amendments of the State Constitutional Convention, in session at the Missouri State Capitol in Jefferson City, in support of the proposal to put the screen upon the same basis as the press.

Throughout the hearing the attitude of the committeemen was friendly, very little antagonism being noted. Many pertinent facts regarding censorship in its practical application were brought out as the result of questions asked Messrs. Quigley and Pettijohn. A survey of the convention members developed the existence of a favorable attitude toward the measure under discussion, which had been introduced by A. A. Speer, president of the First National Bank of Jefferson City. Action on the proposal is expected in the near future.

"This Is No Time for Gloom"

"There never was a time in the history of America when we needed more smiles, more love, more sunshine, more ambition, more optimism and contentment in our business life," said Mr. Pettijohn. "That is my creed, and that is the creed of the moving picture industry. This is no time for gloom, tears, pessimism, assassination of character, suspicion, hatred or discontentment. We have no part in that drama at all. We leave this creed for those who do not believe in our sincerity of purpose. Those are the things that are not entitled to freedom in your Bill of Rights, and they are not the things that make a nation of successful and contented people."

Mr. Quigley praised the framers of the new constitution for their "bold, courageous and pioneering effort." He declared he was not urging adoption of the amendment "because of any possible benefit that may accrue to the motion picture industry," but because approval of it would protect the people of Missouri.

Mr. Quigley said public interest demanded motion pictures be kept free from sinister control; because the adoption of the amendment is the fair and equitable thing to do; because it will bring prestige to Missouri; because the same action would have been taken when the original constitution was written had motion pictures existed, and because it is entirely within the spirit of the fundamental American principles of free speech, free press and free pulpit.

Among the questions asked Mr. Quigley was the following:

"It is true, is it not, that most newspapers are institutions and responsible for their wrongs, but there are thousands of moving picture operators in little picture shows throughout the country with no financial standing and a suit against them for violating public morals would not amount to anything?"

Exhibitors Represent Investments

"I do not agree with you, sir," was the response. "The motion picture exhibitors represent sound and substantial investments that are being operated by real business men in various communities, men of importance, character and stability, and they are fully able to sustain any action against them for any possible wrongdoing."

"Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that if we are going to have guarantees of free expression in this day that the screen should be treated the same as the press," said Mr. Speer, who requested the floor for a moment. "I have no doubt that in 1875 if this same condition existed and we had the movie screen then that it would have been so incorporated in the constitution. By implication it does seem to me that the constitution does very nearly cover it when it recites that every person shall be free to write and publish whatever he will. That is the language now of the constitution, and the screen and the news reel seems to me is a publication of the same sort."

"Why do you advocate this proposal?" one of the committeemen asked Mr. Quigley. "We think you have the same right now."

"I would like to answer that if I might by saying that a few years ago," replied the publisher, "proceeding on the belief you expressed, this matter was taken through the courts in one of the Eastern states and finally reached the Supreme Court of the United States, where it was held in effect that in the absence of some specific reference to the motion picture the court held it could not assume that the motion picture was covered by the amendment."

Virginia Exhibitors in Convention

Largely Attended Meeting Held at Ocean View — Stage and Screen Stars Present

NORFOLK, VA., July 13.

The convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia, which opened yesterday at Ocean View, was attended by exhibitors from all parts of Virginia; theatre owners big and small were here as the guests of Jake and Otto Wells, head of the Wells Amusement Company.

A bevy of stage and screen stars and lesser lights formed the most colorful group at the convention. They came from New York Tuesday as the guests of the Wells interests, the party being made up by the Loew offices in New York.

C. C. Pettijohn, assistant to Will Hays, was expected to be present to take part in the various discussions of the exhibitors.

A movie ball was held in the Ocean View Casino Thursday night. This affair was advertised far and wide, and presented a rather distinguished array of guests. The New York party was the center of interest, while theatrical people from all over the State were here.

Representatives of all Norfolk theatres acted on the entertainment committee and all the facilities of the Ocean View resorts were open to the guests.

The party of screen and stage people from New York was made up of the following: Zeena Keefe, Marguerite Marsh, Glenn Hunter, Will Morrisey, Bernard Granville, Violet and Mary Fayne, Rosina Timponi, Betty Mach, Willie Howard, Doraldina, Virginia Pearson, Joe King, Nils Granlund, Frank Saunders.

The business sessions of the convention were brief, the purpose of the meeting being largely to get the Virginia theatrical men together on a basis of better understanding and co-operation, in order that they may work together closer to build up the industry in the State and to combat unfavorable legislation when it may arise.

What Will It Be This Season?

Theatre Problem Is Not Coal or Rail Strike, but What Type Picture Will Make the Hit— Outlook for Coming Season Is Very Good

By Howard McLellan

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 12.

THE "route of ruin," as pessimists, "wise crackers" and hotel lobby showmen call it. begins at Altoona, Pa., runs through Johnstown and Pittsburgh and as far up as Columbus, Ohio.

Each city on the route is a large industrial center. For five years each has suffered from a succession of strikes and price depressions. When the steel workers were not on strike, the coal miners were and when both were happy the railroad men were on the outs.

The average man would think than this never ending chain of industrial boils would make the theatre owner irritable, pessimistic and ready to close shop.

But how do you find the showmen along the route of ruin? Down-and-out, cussing and Bolsheviki?

Not so you can notice it. Perhaps five years of ups and downs have calloused them until a strike, walkout or factory close down is viewed with only as much alarm as one greets a mild case of sunburn.

The fact is that the showman's greatest concern and biggest problem at this moment, along the supposed "route of ruin" is what kind of pictures will take in the big money this coming season. It is generally conceded that the tear gas feature of last season, which made that season a grand succession of Mothers' Days—and not without happy returns at box offices—will not recur this year, but that the opening of the season will see a race for supremacy between the costume play and pure, unadulterated, downright melodrama.

Whichever type of picture gets away first at the barrier at the opening of the season is pretty sure to win the race. The wise showmen have their ears to the ground waiting, as did the wise ones of last season, for the first rumblings of the big money pictures.

"I'd give my right arm to know which type of picture will catch the public," one of the big showmen in Pittsburgh told the writer. "Public tastes change—I suppose that is an old bromide—but it has taken the motion picture man quite a while to realize it and be guided by those changing tastes. One year we laugh at costume plays and the next year we book them and make money. I can recall in the legitimate show business that successful plays ran in circles. One season police plays and political dramas made the money; the next year sexy stuff went into all the theatres, followed by a season of mystery plays with a mixture of high brow stuff. The same is true of this business right now. But our only difficulty is knowing at the time we book what type the public will take to. No one seems able to get up a schedule or guide which would indicate when the public tastes change, and why they change. Producers make a variety of pictures, since they have no better means of divining what the change of taste will favor that we, the exhibitors, have."

Enter the Trade Paper

It happened that the writer came upon the showman who made this statement as he was discussing trade papers with a neighbor exhibitor.

"We were just talking about trade papers," explained the showman. "My friend John here asked me what I do with the trade papers during the summer lull."

"Well, what do you do with them?" inquired the writer.

"Read the advertisements," was the reply. "I read them carefully all through the summer months. They reflect the hopes of the producers and give me a line on what the starters are going to be. In fact, they tell the trend of production and the types that will figure in the coming season. This is the only means I have of coming anywhere near figuring out what type of picture will reign supreme.

"Then, again, the ads tell me how far to go in my booking, and serve as a caution not to load up too heavily on one kind or another. Right now, as an indication of what the ads do for me, my mind is made up as to certain products. For instance, I know who will release forty-one pictures, who will release sixteen, who will put out from forty to sixty pictures and so on. And close study of the ads tell me what the type of each picture will be."

Certainly this is an interesting sidelight which commends itself to the careful consideration of those who wonder from time to time what trade papers are for. And the man who made the statement absolutely controls the booking of eight first run theatres and double that number of smaller houses.

Explaining the Industrial Situation

Another showman told the writer that all through the industrial troubles he refused to cut admission prices because the public did not want them cut.

"You will notice in the industrial belt cities," said this man, "that our young ladies are wearing cotton stockings this year. A year ago they were wearing silk, every hard-working father's daughter. They got the silk idea during the war wage period. Silk never was and never will be the attire for the masses, but the motion picture is the entertainment for the masses and when it came to cutting out the two items the masses went back to the cotton stockings, but stuck to the pictures. This seems a somewhat far fetched illustration, but it is true. The masses don't want cotton stocking grade of picture entertainment, and when you lower your admissions they believe you are cutting down in the quality and they don't want that.

"This explains why we are not so much concerned about industrial conditions, although we are in the industrial centers."

Supply and Equipment Dealers Meet at Indianapolis

Indianapolis, July 13.

The newly organized national association of Theatre Supply and Equipment Dealers began their initial session at the Claypool Hotel here to-day with a large attendance. The convention will continue through Saturday.

Congressman Fred Landis of Indiana is present as the personal representative of Will H. Hays, and will make an address. A complete organization is being effected, constitution and by-laws adopted, officers selected and permanent headquarters chosen.

A complete report of the meeting will appear in next week's issue of Exhibitors Trade Review.

Exhibitor Solves Summer Problem

Herman Lorence, of the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, Issues a Series of Business-Building Letters That Prove to Be Box-Office Magnet—And They Cost Four Cents Each

ANY stunt used by an exhibitor to increase business in the good old summer time is worth telling others about. These are the days when folks don't just come to the theatre. They have to be dragged in in most cases. Herman Lorence, manager of the Bellevue Theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y., with the coming of warm weather, realized that he was in for some hard work if he was to keep box office receipts up to the average. He sat down, did a lot of thinking and then evolved one of the best little series of business builders put out by any house. These box office magnets were multiform letters, written in a terse, interesting non-technical style in which Herman told his patrons why they should make the Bellevue "their theatre."

The letters began several weeks ago and have been issued weekly up to the present time. Each letter sets forth a special feature of the house, such as the courteous treatment, the low prices, the ventilation, the projection, the music, the comfortable seats and the fine programs. The coolness of the house was emphasized in several of the letters.

At one side of the letter Mr. Lorence published his program for the week, giving the attractions, prices and at the bottom some of the coming films. In this way he made his letters also take on the form of a weekly program, killing two birds with one stone. The interesting matter in the letter was widely read and many patrons kept the documents.

So successful has been the stunt that Mr. Lorence says business jumped right up and has been doing so each week. The letters cost about 4 cents each. About 2000 are mailed to residents of the Cataract City.

For the information of other exhibitors we publish some of these business-getting efforts of Mr. Lorence. The first, dealing with the idea of the letters, tells the folks about the Bellevue's slogan. It follows:

The First Letter

"Dear Sir:

"Each week we intend writing you in person as to what the Bellevue Theatre has in store for you in the way of entertainment. We hope to meet you in person shortly in order that we may ascertain your wishes and desires, so that we may eventually make the Bellevue Theatre the first thought in your mind when seeking an evening's diversion.

"You will note that the slogan for the Bellevue Theatre is 'THE THEATRE DOMINANT' and you can rest assured that it will be kept just that.

"If at any time your receive discourteous treatment from any attache of this theatre you will confer a favor by reporting the incident immediately to us and we will see that it is rectified.

"The program, at the side, will give you an idea of the class of entertainment that we are endeavoring to supply you. You will note that the price of admission has been kept within the reach of all and for those who desire a little more exclusiveness we have the mezzanine floor.

"We are in hope that we will have the pleasure of meeting you in the near future and thereby ascertain your wants and supply them.

"Yours for entertainment,
"Bellevue Theatre Corporation,
"H. Lorence,
"Manager."

"P. S.—Any suggestion for the betterment of your comfort or selection of photoplays will be courteously considered."

Here is another letter in the series:

"Dear Sir:

"This is the fifth of a series of letters sent you by the Bellevue Theatre Corporation for the purpose of informing you of the kind of institution that has been built for the purpose of supplying you with clean, wholesome entertainment. The real motif being to make you turn first to the Bellevue Theatre when seeking an evening's diversion.

"The expression has often been heard, as the audience dispersed, 'The seats are the most comfortable I ever sat in.' This is a true thought expressed audibly. The seats are tilted to just the right angle and the backs are four inches further apart than is the custom. This has been done to increase your comfort while here.

"Now that the Summer season is once more here we wish again to call your attention to the perfect ventilating system that we have. The air is changed in its entirety every three to four minutes by powerful blowers and suction fans. This assures you of breathing fresh, cool air and making it a pleasure to witness a show while in comfort in the coolest spot in town.

"The photoplays have been selected with care so that they will present nothing but the pleasant side of life and if they make you leave with the thought that you have been pleasantly entertained, our aim has been accomplished.

"Are you making the Bellevue a Habit? We are in hopes that the name 'Bellevue' and the word 'Entertainment' become synonymous in your mind."

This is the second of our weekly letters to the patrons of the Bellevue Theatre. In our previous letter we went into an explanation of our slogan "THE THEATRE DOMINANT" and the courtesy extended to you here.

The reason for these letters is to impress upon you that when you seek an evening's entertainment the first thought in your mind should be the Bellevue.

An explanation of the lengthe that have been gone to in order that the ventilation be perfect, is next in order. The air in the theatre is changed completely every three minutes, either warm or cool fresh air being pumped into the theatre and the foul air withdrawn by powerful suction fans through the roof.

The drinking fountaine are supplied with distilled ice water, and for the convenience of the patrons writing material and ink can be found in the lounge.

The program at the side should be of especial interest to you as it liste several photoplays that should appeal.

Make the Bellevue a habit and you are assured clean entertainment, perfect ventilation, absolute safety and courteous treatment at a price that is within the reach of all.

Yours for entertainment,

Pledge Co-Operation to Hays

Paramount Players and Directors Send Telegram to M. P. P. D. A. Head

A gathering of motion picture players and directors with Will H. Hays for a frank and full discussion of the industry's problems for the purpose of working out together the most effective plan for the co-operation in establishing and maintaining the highest possible moral and artistic standards in motion picture production is the plan announced in a telegram received in Los Angeles from Mr. Hays by members of the Players' Board of Control of the Paramount Stock Company.

Mr. Hays' telegram came in reply to a wire from the five actors and actresses making up the Players' Board of Control. In their dispatch these players, following their first meeting since the formation of the Paramount Stock Company, pledged their heartiest co-operation in keeping the screen to a high standard of wholesomeness and artistic worth. They also pledged themselves to strive unceasingly to protect "the good name of our profession."

In his reply, Mr. Hays, who is president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, voiced his appreciation of this collective effort on the part of the people who are engaged in the actual work of producting motion pictures, and outlines his plans for a definite beginning of constructive co-operation among all those engaged in the industry.

Mr. Hays also pleads for the "sympathetic co-operation of the public," and adds that he has "an abiding faith that this necessary co-operation and generous help will come from all thinking people."

The following wire, which was sent Mr. Hays by the Players' Board of Control of the Paramount Stock Company, shows the earnest determination of the players themselves to do their part in the motion picture industry's move to "attain and maintain" a higher standard in every phase of its work:

Mr. Will H. Hays, President Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, 532 Fifth Avenue, New York City:

We, the undersigned, representing the members of the Paramount Stock Company, desirous of fostering the ideals and purposes set forth by you as head of the motion picture industry, pledge to you in our first meeting that we shall do everything in our power to further the success of the program which you have laid out "to attain and maintain" the highest plane of achievement for the motion picture. To your efforts in keeping the screen to a standard of wholesomeness and high artistic endeavor consistent with American tradition we also pledge our heartiest co-operation. We pledge you that both in our work and personal conduct, following the code of ethics laid down for members of the Paramount Stock Company, we shall strive unceasingly to protect the good name of our profession. Heretofore such effort has been individual. With the formation of this stock company it has become collective. As a body of men and women working wholeheartedly toward the ideal which you have set, we ask you to give us your assurance of protection against scurrilous attacks. For your encouragement and satisfaction might we have a statement from you setting forth your plan of co-operation with the people who are engaged in the actual work of producing motion pictures, namely, the actresses, actors and directors.

(Signed) Players' Board of Control.

Thomas Meighan, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Roberts, Lois Wilson and Sylvia Ashton.

Following is the wire Mr. Hays sent in reply:

Players Board of Control, Paramount Stock Company, Hollywood, California:

I have your telegram and appreciate it thoroughly. Complete success in this effort is only attainable with the enthusiastic co-operation of authors, actors, directors, producers, distributors, exhibitors and every one engaged in the industry, and also with the sympathetic co-operation of the public. I have an abiding faith that this necessary co-operation and generous help will come from all thinking people who must recognize that our association's purpose, "to establish and maintain the highest possible moral and artistic standards in motion picture production," is an effort for the good of all. I am especially grateful for this collective action on the part of the players and directors, and very soon want to arrange for a frank and full discussion with as many players and directors as possible to work out together the most effective plan of co-operation.

(Signed) Will H. Hays.

Operators' Union Solid Against Wage Reductions

In compliance with a request made by the Wage Scale Committee of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce representing the owners of approximately 700 motion picture houses in Greater New York, close to 500 members of Moving Picture Machine Operators Local 306 met the exhibitors' committee in the Globe Theatre Wednesday morning in open discussion on living costs as a preliminary move in evolving a wage scale for the year beginning Sept. 1, 1922.

Bernard Edelhertz of the theatre owners was introduced to the rank and file of operators by Samuel Kaplan, president of Local 306. Kaplan said it was his hope that the growing spirit of co-operation between the two organizations would be assisted by developments of the meeting and made it clear that anything that might occur at the meeting would in no way be binding upon the operator organization.

Mr. Edelhertz said he welcomed an opportunity to meet the operator body and complimented the personnel of the operator wage scale committee with whom he had recently been in conference. "Let us get closer together in a spirit of thorough understanding," said Edelhertz, in advocating a wage reduction of 10 per cent for the coming year. Rising cost of film rental and decreased patronage were given as the basis for requesting the wage reduction.

A speech on operator living conditions was delivered by Al Polin, member of the Executive Board of Local 306, and numerous other speeches were made by the operators. In all of these unwillingness to accept any reduction whatever was emphatically reiterated, the men contending that costs of living were not sufficiently reduced to permit them to accept a cut in wages.

In connection with the preliminary wage scale skirmish, President Kaplan declared he would do all in his power to avert an operator strike. Among the exhibitors who attended the meeting were: Leo Brecher, William Brandt, Al Harsten, Louis F. Blumenthal and Charles Steiner.

Marcus Loew to Sail for Europe July 18

For the purpose of securing theatres for the premiere showing of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and other Metro productions in both England and France, Marcus Loew, controller of the Loew circuit of theatres and Metro Pictures Corporation, will sail for Europe July 18, on the Mauretania.

Mr. Loew will be met in England by his European representative, Sir William Jury, who will also accompany him to France. Mr. Loew explained the nature of his trip as "strictly business" and also stated that it will be a short one.

He will be accompanied by his son, Arthur Loew, who in all probability will visit many other European countries after leaving his father in France, with the idea in view of determining the European viewpoint of American films.

First National Attractions for New Eastman Theatre

First National Attractions will be shown almost exclusively in the new Conservatory of Music and 3400-seat theatre which has been erected in Rochester by George Eastman, of the Eastman interests. Contracts for the showing of First National Pictures were signed recently when R. H. Clark, of the First National New York Exchange, visited Rochester. Mr. Eastman sent to Robert Lieber, president of First National, the pen he used in signing the First National contracts.

The new Eastman Conservatory of Music and Motion Picture Theatre, built at a cost of $4,500,000, will open Sept. 1. Its policy will be to show two features a week, with the exception of Wednesday evenings, when a musical entertainment will be presented. There will be fifty musicians in the orchestra, with Alexander, the noted organist, playing the huge pipe organ which has been installed.

Hilliard and Miss Shearer in New McCutcheon Picture

Ernest Hilliard and Norma Shearer have been signed to appear as the "heavy" and ingenue lead, respectively, in When the Cows Come Home, the initial production of Effanem Film Company.

This picture will be directed by John McCutcheon, with Shaddy Graham assisting, and Ray Fredjen will be production manager.

Robert Elliott has been cast for the lead, and Gladys Leslie will be the screen sister to Norma Shearer, who plays the ingenue lead.

No announcement has been made regarding a release. The picture will be made in the E. K. Lincoln studios in Grantwood, N. J. Work started Wednesday, July 12.

Scene from the production which will mark the return of Madge Kennedy to the screen, the working title of which is "Dear Me," now being made by Kenma Corporation. Vincent Coleman, playing opposite, is the hardworking young man in front

First National's "Smilin' Through" in Big Demand

Released only a few weeks ago, Smilin' Through has been in demand everywhere and has been a big moneymaker for the exhibitor, according to the distributor, Associated First National. Here are official reports, gathered by First National, as to what the Talmadge picture is doing:

Colorado—Played 2 weeks at America Theatre, Denver.

Idaho—Boise, 7 days.

Iowa—Strand Theatre, Cedar Rapids, played Smilin' Through 10 days; usual run, 5 days. Strand, Waterloo, 10 days; usual run, 5. Palace, Burlington, 5 days; usual run, 3.

Kentucky — Mary Anderson, Louisville, 2 weeks; usual run, 1 week. Kentucky, Louisville, 1 week; usual run, 4 days. Ada Meade, Lexington, 7 days; usual run, 4 days.

Louisiana—Two weeks at Strand, New Orleans; usual run, 7 days.

Minnesota—Strand, St. Paul, second run; Blue Mouse, Minneapolis, second run.

Massachusetts and Rhode Island—Following houses played extended runs, in each case doubling up on their regular number of days: Park, Boston; New Park, Worcester; Park, Taunton; Merrimac Square, Lowell; Olympia, Lynn; Olympia, New Bedford; Rialto, Fall River; Imperial, Pawtucket; Park, Woonsocket.

Missouri—Unusually big business. The manager of the Electric Theatre, Springfield, writes: "Every word you said about the picture was true. Everyone had a word of praise for it and we did a good business. I wish we could get more like it."

Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia—Rivoli, Baltimore, 2 weeks; usual run, 1 week; Metropolitan, Washington, same; Broadway, Richmond, Va., 1½ weeks.

Nebraska—Strand, Omaha, 16 days; usual run, 7 days; Sun Theatre, York.

New York—Remarkably successful run at Strand and other theatres. Brought back to the Strand, Schenectady, for a repeat run, after playing to capacity there for one week.

North Dakota—Exceptional business throughout State. W. C. Clavier, manager State Theatre, Fargo, writes: "Just finished a six-day run and had more favorable comments than any picture yet shown in our theatre. Many came to see it second time."

Ohio—Two weeks at Colonial Theatre, Columbus. First time a picture was shown for that length of time at the Colonial. Two weeks at the Strand, Cincinnati.

Tennessee—Knoxville, Riviera, 6 days; usual run, 3 days. Chattanooga, Tivoli, 7 days; usual run, 4 days.

Texas—Manager A. C. Stalcup of the Connellee, Eastland, says Smilin' Through grossed more money for him than any other picture he has shown during his eight years in the show business. Extended runs played at the Egypt, Fort Worth; Isis, Houston; Grand, Corsicana, Queen, Austin; Strand, Waco.

Utah—American, Salt Lake, 1 week.

Washington — Five days Centralia; usual run, 3 days. Aberdeen, 5 days; usual run, 3 days. Spokane, 1 week Liberty Theatre, Manager Grombacher reporting best business of the year and asking for four-day extension. H. A. Gillespie of the Liberty, Yakima, reports: "Smilin' Through is a real 100 per cent picture. Absolutely the most satisfying picture of the last 12 months."

Canada—Allen Richmond Theatre, Toronto, played it 2 weeks. Played 1 week at Calgary, Edmonton and Regina, usual run in those places, 3 days.

Theda Bara, who is returning to the screen under Selznick auspices

A Correction

In "Exhibitors Trade Review" of July 1 a caption over a page layout of "Out of the Silent North." Universal production, stated that Barbara Bedford was the star of the picture.

This, of course, was in error. "Out of the Silent North" is one of Frank Mayo's starring vehicles and Mr. Mayo should have been credited as the star.

"To Have and Hold" Paramount's Feature Nearing Completion

George Fitzmaurice has practically finished the studio and location work on his production for Paramount, To Have and to Hold, adapted by Ouida Bergere from Mary Johnston's famous novel and the film will soon be ready for the cutting room.

Betty Compson and Bert Lytell are costarred in this picturization of the story which many competent critics have pronounced the greatest romantic novel ever written, and Paramount executives at the Lasky studio are confident that it will prove the most colorful production turned out for the screen in recent years. Moreover, it is thrilling, they say—every inch of it—and will not disappoint the millions of readers who have revelled in the excitement of Miss Johnston's story since first it was published nearly twenty-five years ago.

It is a tale of the early American colonial days, the scenes being laid in the court of King James I, in Jamestown, Va., in the early part of the Seventeenth Century, aboard a man o' war of the period and later aboard a pirate ship.

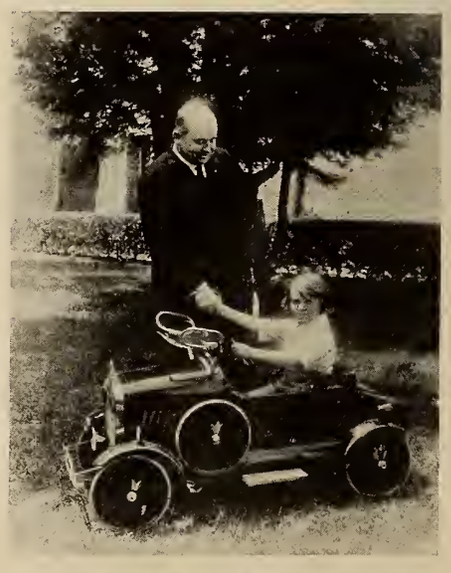
Newest Selznick News Contains Varied Scenes

In Selznick News 1055-6, the most recent issues, Lewis J. Selznick, publisher, feels he has one of the best numbers he has yet compiled.

The return of the entire part of Upper Silesia to Poland by the Inter-Allied Commission, accompanied by most picturesque and impressive ceremonies, is declared to be an exceptionally good news picture.

Another interesting picture is that of the Emperor of the Annamites doing Paris. This member of royalty was sent by his people on a pleasure trip to the French capital.

In addition to these features of the present issue there also appears some views of the old boys of Civil War days telling the present day "rookies" how to perform in war time, Secretary Denby in Japan, and the funeral procession attending the burial of Sir Henry Wilson, England's military martyr.



The big chief greets the little star. J. D. Williams, general manager for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., visits Jackie Coogan at the United Studios, Hollywood

Selznicks Awaiting Arrival of Two West Coast Productions

The home office executives of the Selznick Pictures Corporation are awaiting with interest the arrival of the first two productions made at the West Coast Studios. These are Love Is An Awful Thing, starring Owen Moore, and Under Oath, with Elaine Hammerstein. Having had production so close to them for so long a period, there is some anxiety to ascertain the extent of the truth regarding California's advantage as a production center. Both of these productions have been made in their entirety in California, even to the titling.

Advance information is to the effect that the Owen Moore picture is another hilarious subject. It was directed by Victor Heerman. His efforts in a comedy way were aided by Douglas Carter, the long, lean, lanky gentleman of color who was so prominent in The Poor Simp. Others in the cast are Marjorie Daw and Kathryn Perry, once of the Follies.

In Under Oath the West Coast studios thinks Elaine Hammerstein has a picture which even exceeds in dramatic qualities the successful Evidence.

"Rose o' the Sea," 1st National, Scheduled for July Release

Rose o' the Sea, a Louis B. Mayer production, with Anita Stewart as the star, is scheduled for release during the present month by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. It was directed by Fred Niblo.

Miss Stewart is supported by Rudolph Cameron, Thomas Holding, Margaret Landis, Kate Lester, Hallom Cooley, John P. Lockney and Charles Belcher.

"Bill of Divorcement" Completed

The final scenes for A Bill of Divorcement were shot at the studios of the Ideal Film Company, London, on Tuesday, July 11, according to cable advices received by Reginald Warde yesterday. The conclusion of the picture was marked by an informal buffet luncheon at the studios, with Constance Binney, who is the star of the picture; Fay Compton, the British star who plays the wife in the picture, and Clemence Dane, the author of the play, as hostesses.

John E. Storey Reports Business Revival After Trip

A remarkable revival of business activity throughout states of the Middle West and Northwest is reported by John E. Storey, Pathe General Representative, on his return from a thirty-day tour of the principal centres of that section of the country.

Mr. Storey cited Chicago as particularly illustrative of improved business in anticipation of more than ordinarily abundant harvests, that city being the great distributing centre for the whole region visited —including Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Montana, Wyoming, North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa and Illinois, in all of which states the crop situation is uniformly excellent.

Big Demand for "Grandma's Boy"

Harold Lloyd Feature to Have Early Showings in Pacific Coast Cities and Mountain Resorts

With the time officially set for the national release of the Harold Lloyd Associated Exhibitors feature, produced by Hal Roach, Grandma's Boy, still nearly two months away, leading exhibitors throughout the country are reported clamoring for bookings at the earliest dates possible to secure. Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated, announced this week a long list of engagements entered into for well-known theatres.

Several cities on the Pacific coast and a few in the Rocky Mountain district will have their first view of Grandma's Boy in the next few weeks.

July 9 saw the start of a run of indefinite length in San Francisco. The Golden Gate city is filled with convention visitors this summer and M. L. Markowitz, owner of the Strand, explains his booking of Grandma's Boy in the statement that he considered it a patriotic civic duty to bag the very best attraction obtainable. M. Naify, of the T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, has procured the picture for the Goddard Theatre, Sacramento, for the week of July 16th.

Another interesting summer booking is that made by Calvin Heilig, Portland, Ore., where Grandma's Boy will open July 30 for a run of two weeks or longer.

Turner & Dahnken have fixed the week of July 16 as the date for the picture's run in the T. & D. Theatre, Oakland, and they have booked it for a week's run at the T. & D. in Berkeley a little later on. H. E. Ellison has contracted for engagements in four of his Colorado theatres. The concurrent runs in the Rialto and the Princess theatres, Denver, during the week of August 13, and the Princess, Colorado Springs, the week of August 21, will catch an important part of the Pike's Peak tourist rush, and later—October 12, Columbus Day—Grandma's Boy will open a three days' run at Mr. Ellison's Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Colo.

Max Spiegel rejected the claims offered in behalf of several other features and selected Grandma's Boy as the attraction with which to open his fine new Schenectady Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., some time in September. Balaban & Katz have contracted to show the Lloyd feature first in Chicago, and this run will be at the Roosevelt, as their new Chicago has a one week change policy.

Grandma's Boy is to make its first New York bow at the Mark Strand either September 3 or 10, and the national release will be at approximately the same time. The week of September 3 will see the Lloyd comedy playing, among others, either the Regent or the Piccadilly, Rochester, N. Y., in accordance with a contract signed by the Regorson Corporation, and the Bellevue, at Niagara Falls, of which H. Lorence is manager.

The week of September 10 will be an important one in five of A. F. Brentlinger's Indiana houses, for it is then that they will open their autumn season, and with Grandma's Boy as the feature. On September 10, also, the picture begins a run of two weeks or longer at the Apollo, Indianapolis. For the week of September 10 Nathan Robbins has procured Grandma's Boy for the Avon, Majestic and De Luxe Theatres, Utica, N. Y.

Early October bookings include those of Samuel Harding, for his Liberty, Kansas City, for two weeks or more, beginning the 1st, and Billy Conners for his Luna Lite, Marion, Ind., a week, starting the 8th.

The officials of the Southern Enterprise Association were early active, booking the Lloyd feature for runs throughout the entire S. A. Lynch Circuit.

Marshall Neilan to Produce "The Strangers' Banquet"

Various rumors as to Marshall Neilan's initial production to be staged in accordance with his new arrangement recently consummated with Goldwyn are set at rest by the producer's announcement that work will be started immediately on an adaptation of Donn Byrne's novel—The Strangers' Banquet.

Mr. Neilan purchased the motion picture rights to this book from Harper and Brothers in 1919.

Various deals for the theatrical rights to the story are now pending and it is expected that before many months the subject will make its appearance on New York's Broadway in the form of a highly dramatic play.

Players whose names are of box-office value will be engaged to portray the characters, it is stated, and actual "shooting" will be commenced at the Goldwyn studios within the next ten days.

John C. Brownell Resigns from Universal's Scenario Dept.

John C. Brownell, Eastern Representative of Universal's Scenario Department, has resigned to devote himself to original scenario writing, it has just become known. His resignation becomes effective at the end of this week, after which he is planning a four weeks' cruise aboard his yacht, the Virginia. Brownell has been with Universal for six years.

Loud Acclaim for Pathe's Feature "Nanook of North"

Less than three weeks after the release of Nanook of the North, exhibitors, patrons and reviewers in widely separated sections of the United States were united in pronouncing the Pathe special Eskimo feature among the greatest productions ever screened. Writing in Judge, issue of July 8, Heywood Broun, in a remarkable appreciation of the picture, adapted Horace Greeley's famous advice to read: "Go North, young picture men, Go North!"

Pathe reports that first run bookings of Nanook of the North during the Capitol Theatre premiere week of the picture, up to the first day of the general release, included many of the finest houses in the country—a strikingly high percentage of them making seven-day contracts. The U. B. O. Circuit was among the first to book Nanook for its theatres, with the Gore Brothers Circuit, Los Angeles also in line at the start. First run bookings made within ten days from the release date—June 11—included these representative houses:

New York—Capitol, Broadway; Brookly—Mark Strand; Albany—Strand; Syracuse—Strand; Altoona—Capitol; Newark—Newark; Cleveland—Allen; Dallas—Pallace; Buffalo—Strand; Salt Lake—Pantages; Los Angeles—Kinema; Cincinnati—Walnut; Denver—Colorado; Portland, Ore.—Heilig.

"Grandma's Boy" Enters Ninth Week at Los Angeles

"Grandma's Boy," the new Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors feature, began the ninth week of its run at the Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, Sunday night, July 9.

"Crowd formed long waiting line," Dr. H. E. Breckwedel, the Symphony manager, wired Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated. "Run is positively sensational. End not in sight."

"Grandma's Boy" had smashed the world's record for the continuous run of a comedy feature when it entered its eighth week at Los Angeles, one week before the receipt of the foregoing telegram.

Farewell Dinner Given by Universal's Laboratory Men

A farewell dinner was given to Edwin F. Murphy, retiring superintendent of Universal's laboratory at West Fort Lee, N. J., at Sauter's, Fairview, N. J. More than two hundred employes and executives of the plant, as well as several department heads from the Home Office, were on hand to wish Mr. Murphy a speedy return to health. Normand Sprowl, business manager of the laboratory, served as master-of-ceremonies and introduced the speakers.

Mr. Murphy was the recipient of several tokens, including a magnificent diamond and platinum ring from his employes, and an artistic hand-illuminated framed parchment testimonial from the laboratory workers. Many prominent persons, connected with organizations other than the Universal, attended the dinner and delivered addresses eulogizing the retiring superintendent.

Webster's New Exchanges Will Be Progress Pictures

A. N. Webster of Syracuse, N. Y., as stated last week, has secured from the Arrow Film Corporation the rights to the four James Oliver Curwood productions, produced by Pine Tree Pictures, Inc., for upper New York State, and will form a company to handle these.

Mr. Webster is one of the best known film men of upper New York and has for many years operated in that territory, releasing some of the more important independent productions.

The name of the company that Mr. Webster is organizing will be Progress Pictures Company. He will make his headquarters in Syracuse, with probably branches in Buffalo and Albany.

"Name of the Law" Première Showing at Cohan Theatre

Breaking into a theatre hitherto strange to motion pictures and playing to capacity business from two in the afternoon until eleven in the evening, says an announcement, is the record set by In the Name of the Law, the Emory Johnson production presented by R-C Pictures at its New York première at the George M. Cohan theatre on July 9.

The feature had been introduced to the New York public by an exploitation campaign staged by Nat G. Rothstein.

It is the belief of the Film Booking Offices of America, which will release this picture in the early fall, that this production has already proven its exploitation values. A huge sign was erected in the heart of the theatrical district, at the north end of the Times Building. Banners were stretched across many of the important streets of Manhattan and the Bronx and a variety of street ballyhoos were used.

"Bulldog Drummond" to Be Released by Producers Security

The famous international melodrama Bulldog Drummond, which was such a hit in the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York, all last season, is being filmed, it was announced by the Producers Security Corporation this week. This company will handle the releasing arrangements in America, which as yet have not been determined.

The production is being directed by Oscar Apfel, and the stars Evelyn Greeley and Carlyle Blackwell are cast for the leading roles. The trio left for Holland several weeks ago to film the interiors, and when these are completed they will go to England for the exteriors, as the locale of the story is in that country.

Dr. Rose, Newark Minister, Praises "Ruling Passion"

In a letter to Distinctive Productions, Inc., Dr. Henry R. Rose, the Newark, N. J., clergyman censorship fighter, laid special stress on The Ruling Passion, the current George Arliss screen vehicle, a United Artists Corporation release, calling it the "ideal motion picture."

"If I were asked to name the ideal motion picture," Dr. Rose wrote, "the one which comes nearest to perfection in cleanliness, humor, sentiment, delightful surprises and splendid moral lessons for business men and for youth, I would unhesitatingly select George Arliss in The Ruling Passion.

"It is a picture that captures every lover of good drama and will surely grow in popular demand. If I were an owner of a motion picture house I would feature and advertise The Ruling Passion in such a way that it would become the rage of the town, for it surely would appeal to any community if the people only knew of its delightful and wholesome qualities."

Rockett-Naylor Will Build Illinois Stage on Lincoln Subject

General Manager R. R. Rockett of Rockett - Naylor Productions announces that his company has decided to build a stage at Springfield, Ill., to take care of those interiors of The Life of Abraham Lincoln that cannot be photographed in their original settings. A complete studio equipment will be installed from Los Angeles.

The town of New Salem is in process of restoration by the Lincoln League of Petersburg, and it will be completed in time to be used in the Lincoln picture.

The original intention of the company to handle the picture as a road show has been modified.

Mr. Rockett also announces that the Rockett-Naylor organization has arranged to follow the Lincoln picture with another American historical subject and this is to be followed by other subjects of "world size," to use his expression.

World Markets for American Film

Survey by First National Shows Healthier Financial Condition in Europe and Latin-America

With all its so-called faults, the American motion picture continues to rule the world and its dominance is growing steadily firmer.

This and other interesting facts are revealed in a world survey made by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Through its special agents in England, Continental countries, the Orient, Near East, Australia and Latin-America, First National conducted one of the most searching inquiries into the film market abroad that has been made since the war. Among the highlights of its findsings are:—

The demand for American-made screen subjects is increasing.

Payment for these is more prompt, indicating a very general improvement in the health of the world's finances insofar as the entertainment field is concerned.

Mexico has declared war on film firms handling photoplays which hold its people up to ridicule or tend to brand them as a nation of outlaws. This applies not only to the offending films themselves, but to all films handled by the distributor through whose agency they reach the public. Two large American organizations already have been boycotted under this new Obregon bid for respect of his country.

This Mexican ultimatum comes at a time when film conditions are improving throughout that country.

What is true of Mexico is virtually true of all Latin-America. Conditions are becoming more regular and businesslike in Cuba and South American countries and the only place where there is any real difficulty is Jamaica, because films have to be shipped from New York and it is some times months before the shipper, or owner, gets them back from that Island.

As to Europe, the best reports come from England and Italy. In England there obtains what is known as the "block booking" system, whereby pictures are booked by exhibitor organizations after a "trade" showing, but probably are not presented to the public under eighteen months. This means a long delay in realization of money collections by the American sellers of the picture. The information revealed in the survey indicates that these showings will soon be made possible in about nine or ten months, which will be a very important factor from the financial standpoint. Further owing to increased demand for good American pictures, prices in England are improving.

The investigation in Italy shows that business dealings are becoming easier, collections much better and that more theatres are being turned over to the films; many theatres heretofore devoted to the spoken drama are being transformed into picture houses.

Germany, which was held to make the most threatening gesture toward the American film industry, is eager for American product. But the American distributor is not very keen about such business, owing to the fact that Germany is unable to pay for the product.

Portland, Ore., Suburban Houses Want Booking Circuit

Suburban theatre owners of Portland, Ore., are stirring things up. Nine of them have organized with W. E. Tibbitts, owner of the Highway Theatre, as chairman and director, for the formation of a proposed booking circuit through which they will book all service together, the object being to secure all second run bookings ahead of the downtown houses. The latter have from four to seven changes a week while the suburban men have about three, which would tie a lot of material up in the exchanges, if put through.

The downtown exhibitors naturally expect to continue the same service they have enjoyed in the past, and are not going to submit without a struggle. Representatives from the new booking circuit were expected in Seattle some time during the week.

"Purple Highway" Final Title for Kenma Feature

The Kenma Corporation, organized to star Madge Kennedy on the screen, this week announces its selection of a final title for the first Madge Kennedy special production. It is The Purple Highway. Arrangements have already been made for its screening at a Broadway motion-picture theatre. Henry Kolker, who directed George Arliss in Disraeli, and who only a few months ago returned from Italy after completing the Italian spectacle, Sant' Ilario, is staging the production. In the cast are Monte Blue, Dore Davidson, Pedro De Cordoba, Vincent Coleman, Emily Fitzroy, William H. Tooker, Fuller Mellish, Winifred Harris, Claude Brooks and Charles Kent.

Just as soon as The Purple Highway is finished, Miss Kennedy will start production on Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall.

Arrow to Hold a Conference with Company Chiefs

It is understood that the Arrow Film Corporation is actively engaged in preparing a campaign for the coming season and as a part of this campaign has called a conference of the executives and special representatives, to be held at the home office next week. Special representatives J. S. Jossey and Thomas A. Curran are on their way to the home offices now, Mr. Jossey coming from Chicago and Mr. Curran from Dallas, Texas.

Dr. Shallenberger will hold a series of meetings which will be attended by special representatives, sales manager, advertising manager and salesmen, at which the plans for the Fall season will be outlined and announcement made of the forthcoming attractions.

S. R. Kent on Trip to Coast

S. R. Kent, General Manager of Distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left New York July 6 for Chicago, whence he will go to the Pacific Coast, stopping at several Paramount exchanges on the way. Among the offices to be visited are Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake, San Francisco and Los Angeles. He will be gone until the first or second week in August.

The Paramount Studio entertains a noted foreigner, Baron de Rothschild. In this group are Studio Manager Victor H. Clarke, Paul Iribe, the Baron, Lila Lee and Wallace Reid

Report Heavy Demand for "41"

Paramount Announces Big Bookings for Sept. 3-9—Kent Makes Statement

Paramount reports that in the bookings for Paramount Week, Sept. 3-9, there is a demand from exhibitors of all classes for the pictures recently listed by the company as its first forty-one releases for the new season starting Aug. 6. This demand, according to S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, is of double significance, in that it not only reflects a strong exhibitor interest in the new product, but manifests a full appreciation of the value of Paramount Week as a prestige builder at the outset of the autumn months.

"The interest which our recent announcement of our 'First Forty-one' has aroused throughout the country is truly astonishing," said Mr. Kent. "In years gone by our annual announcement of our production and releasing plans have brought forth letters of approval from great numbers of exhibitors. But this year the messages have come from all quarters in such volume as to be a perfect deluge by comparison with any previous year.

"The reason is, of course, that our announcement of our 'First Forty-One' presents something entirely definite and concrete. We told exhibitors just what we had for them. down to the last detail—titles, the character of the pictures, the authors, directors, stars, scenario writers, casts, exploitation ideas, actual release dates, everything there was to be told. It was a full and frank statement on each one of the productions on the six months' list, a definite promise which they all know, from their past experiences, will be made good."

Harold Lloyd's First Multiple-Reel Comedy for Pathe Nears Completion

According to a report received by Pathe from the Hal Roach Studios, Harold Lloyd has nearly completed a new multiple-reel comedy which bears the working title of Doctor's Orders. This, says Pathe, is the first of the series of six Lloyd features contracted for when the comedian visited New York early in the Winter. It shows Lloyd to be well ahead of his production schedule, for its immediate predecessor, Grandma's Boy, last of the Associated Exhibitors series, will not be released until September for general distribution.

Patterson Presented with Gold Watch by First National

Willard C. Patterson of Atlanta, representing the Sig Samuels interests, First National franchise holders, was presented with a handsome gold watch by the First National organization when Mr. Patterson was in New York recently.

Mr. Patterson was one of the prize winners of the First National exploitation contest, but was unable to make the trip to the Coast with the other "$1-a-Week" men.

R-C to Produce "Uncle Tom's Cabin" for F. B. O. Release

That R-C Pictures will produce Uncle Tom's Cabin as the biggest production in its career was announced by P. A. Powers, managing director of R-C and the Film Booking Offices of America, immediately before he left for California this week on his quarterly visit to the R-C studio. The preliminary arrangements for this special have been completed and production is to start under the personal supervision of Mr. Powers.

The feature will be released by the Film Booking Offices of America. It will be preceded by a big advertising and publicity campaign worthy of such a big production.

In addition to seeing the production well under way, Mr. Powers will confer with producers and supervise production plays at the studios. It is his intention to develop the production plant to a point of efficiency equal to that of the distributing organization.

Metropolitan Puts J. B. Warner Under Three-Year Contract

Since his success in Big Stakes, James B. Warner, the new cowboy star, has been placed under a three year contract with Metropolitan Productions, the output of which is released through East Coast Productions, Inc. Mr. Backer has mapped out a campaign of exploitation which it is believed will put over the player with the public.

Warner is a real Nebraska cowpuncher. He accepted a chance to go on the stage in Denver. He played on the legitimate stage and in vaudeville for two seasons and finally got his first film opportunity in Stingaree, a Kalem serial. He went to France with the Fortieth Division.

All of Warner's stories are adapted from high-class books and magazines, and care has been taken in the selection of leading women to play opposite him. Elinor Fair was chosen for Big Stakes.

The Other Side of the Music Tax

An Article by E. C. Mills, of the Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers

(Concluded from last week)

"Calculating the fee, in respect of the total amount of admissions paid, as shown by official returns of taxes to the Government, shows that less than $1 out of every $1,000 is paid for license fees.

"Yet music, by the admission of exhibitors, constitutes at the minimum 40 per cent of the service rendered by them, and for which they receive the gross amount of their admissions. For 40 per cent of what they furnish to the public and get their money for, realize their profits from, they pay actually less than a hundredth of one per cent. The comparison of value received to price paid is ridiculous. It is unfair—yes, unfair to the composer, author and publisher, in that the fee charged is absurdly proportioned to the service rendered.

"Now it is quite true that if these men can charge 10 cents per seat per year for their license, they can charge $1 or any other sum that they may care to impose. There is no disputing this fact. But for nearly eight years they have kept the rate at 10 cents, fixed and unchanged. When the cost of everything else advanced, their costs advanced just the same; why haven't they raised the rate, possessing as they do the lawful right to make it what they choose? Why haven't they, having the exhibitor at their mercy, gouged him good, as others have from time to time?

"Not because they have lacked courage, nor yet because they have not needed increased revenue—for they have—but because in their original calculations it was felt that if the motion picture theatres recognized their rights, and paid them fairly, honestly and promptly upon this basis, there would then be received from this source of revenue a fair proportion of the total amount they hoped to receive, from all sources, in return for their musical works.

"At the beginning of their organization they felt that the exhibitor would justly recognize their rights, they did not contemplate years of effort, endless legal expense, bitter opposition, to their just demands. They were fooled by an overconfidence in the exhibitor's readiness to give fair and just compensation to them who contribute so much to his welfare and prosperity.

Would Double the Fee

"So, at the beginning the rate was established, and they have felt they should stick to it. And they have stuck to it, in the face of a recommendation that I, personally, recently made, that the fee should be at least doubled, in order to take care of the needless expenses which their opposition occasions, making necessary the retaining of attorneys in many cities throughout the country, and undertaking of great legal expenses, the employment of inspectors to secure evidence of violations, etc. They have stuck to the original rate in the face of rising costs, increasing prices in all other lines—they have done it in a spirit of patient relief that the exhibitor would finally 'see the light' and do the right thing.

"Sixth, the exhibitor often claims that through the playing of the music in his theatre it is popularized—that the sales of the sheet music are thus increased, that, in short, he 'makes' the music for the composer, author and publisher.

"Nothing could be further from the truth. In the first place, as a general proposition, the exhibitor does not play a composition until it is already in demand, and when he does play a tune not already 'made,' rarely does the public know what it is that is being played. If it did, the exploitation value of the movie 'plug' would be inconsequential. Songs are 'made' through a certain definite process, worked out long before motion picture theatres existed, and time proven as the only known system or method that is uniformly successful. But, to be fair, the copyright proprietor recognizes that to some extent the motion picture theatre may help the tune, and he took this into consideration when he fixed the very low rate of 10 cents per seat per annum as the license fee.

"At convention after convention the so-called 'music tax' has been made into a red flag which could be waved by the leaders in the faces of those attending the convention; it has been made the excuse for the raising of funds, it has been made the subject of 'planks' in the 'platforms' of various leaders.

"Resolution after resolution has been fervently and unanimously adopted committing the exhibitors to a boycott of our compositions; to the support of this or that movement designed to supplant our music in their theatres, yet all of these have amounted to precisely nothing, and the prediction is here made that they will amount to exactly no more than that in the future.

"The very leaders who have themselves urged opposition to payment of license fees pay those fees for their own theatres. When they don't we afford them an opportunity to test their opposition in the courts, and the result is uniformly the same—a verdict for us.

"Why do you suppose the courts sustain us? Is it because we control them—is it because we have such a widespread and effective influence that they do not dare to find against us? It is because we are RIGHT, legally and ethically, for if we were not right in fact as well as in law, I am sure that we would not have been so generally sustained.

"We don't control courts, judges, or Congress. Nor have we any desire to. They are our courts and yours; we want justice from them, for ourselves and for you.

"In conclusion, let me state clearly to the patient reader, whom I presume is an exhibitor, just what he can and cannot do on this question, and I can afford to and will tell him the truth, and nothing else, whether anyone else does so or not.

"First, the law protects the right of the composer, author and publisher, and if you want to publicly perform his music in your theatre you must secure a license from him, or you violate the law and lay yourself open to serious penalties.

"Second, if you do not hold a license, don't play any music in the catalog of the Society, or sooner or later an inspector will catch you at it, and you will be faced with a suit.

"Third, boycott the music of the Society if you want to, and by all means do it if you haven't a license. It will make no difference whatever to the Society or its members, as they will popularize their tunes just as successfully without as with your help, and when the demand for them exists you will either play them or suffer the comparison that an intelligent public always makes between the house that is up-to-date and the one that is not.

"Fourth, if you don't like the law, get it changed, but don't violate it. To change it requires that Congress shall enact an amendment. One has been proposed, at the request of exhibitors, and is now in committee. My personal prediction is that a celluloid dog chasing an asbestos cat through the nethermost regions of Hades would have a better chance of catching it than this bill has of ever becoming law. However, if you gentlemen like to 'kid' yourselves along with it, please do so, and we'll do our best to maintain our rights.

"Fifth, please don't threaten us any more—we weary of the old, old story. We will not yield our rights, nor would we expect you to do so were the circumstances reversed.

"In conclusion let us say that we have invited your leaders, individually and collectively, through your trade press, to meet us in conference on this question, without response thus far from them. This does not seem to us as typical of wise leadership, but you will draw your own conclusions.

"Every cent we collect, less the expenses of collection, is paid to our members—composers, authors and publishers. Of course, if your continued opposition makes the expenditure of the Society reach unreasonable proportions, you must expect eventually to assume, to absorb those expenditures.

"We repeat what we have said so often before—that we invite correspondence, are glad to give information, and are trying as hard as we know how to produce music that will, year in and year out, not only make money for us, but for you as well."

Pathe Will Take Appeal in N. Y. Censorship Case

venient. If books are censored, why not magazines? At least one of the books suppressed in recent years on motion of the Vice Society had run through magazine serialization with no objections, so far as the public knows. If it was wicked, it was just as wicked in the magazine. And if magazines, why not newspapers?

"There is some logic in these arguments, and they lead straight to the conclusion that the public should be permitted to read and see only what three political appointees think will be good for it. Our censors in this State are not so bad as most, but persons of tolerance and judgment can rarely be persuaded to become censors, and are still more rarely invited."

The New York World said editorially:

"Censorships of any sort are sufficiently bad, but there is a distinction between censorship of entertainment and censorship of news. The first does little or no good and may do much harm; the second is inherently vicious. Not only the political action of a democracy but its social and moral standards are determined by the citizens thereof on a basis of what they see and hear of the life about them. Unless the theory of a democracy is untenable, no man or board is wise enough to decide what they shall see and hear. They must choose that for themselves as well as they can. It is little enough and far too fragmentary at best, but to censor it is to corrupt opinion at its source."

Live News of the West Coast

BY RENEE BEEMAN

The Metro Studios, Hollywood, are speeding up after a long spell of rest. Rex Ingram is the only director who has been engaged at the studios in some months. The different stars under the Metro banner have been vacationing or making personal appearances over the country, but they are all centered at the home plant again, either hard at work or preparing.

It has been announced that Irvin Willat will direct All the Brothers of Valliant. Clara Kimball Young will start immediately, Enter Madame. Laurette Taylor will arrive in Los Angeles about the first of August to produce at the Metro Studios. The company has scheduled a campaign of activity for the summer that promises to make its establishment one of the busiest in the producing field. The above announcements were given out by W. E. Atkinson, an executive of the company, who arrived in the city from New York to pay a short visit. He declared that the executive committee had decided to distribute individual features on their own merits and not in series as heretofore.

Outside of the Willat, the Clara Kimball Young and the Taylor productions there are of course the features starring Viola Dana and Billie Dove.

Fred Niblo, the director of The Three Musketeers and other successes, is to begin work at the Louis B. Mayer studio shortly on the first of his four pictures for releases through Metro.

Rex Ingram, who has completed his film, temporarily titled Black Orchids, will leave for New York next week, where his next picture will be made.

The early releases of the Metro company will include Broadway Rose, starring May Murray; The Prisoner of Zenda; The Five Dollar Baby, featuring Viola Dana, and Clara Kimball Young in The Hands of Nara.

Camera work on Country Love has begun with Emile Chautard directing, and the cast includes Cullen Landis, Edythe Chapman, Sylvia Ashton, Hardee Kirkland, Mabel Van Buren, Thomas O'Brien, Lincoln Steadman, Gertrude Short, Louise MacIntosh and Noah Beery.

This will be followed by East of Suez, by E. Lloyd Sheldon; The Girl in the Gilded Cage, by Marion Fairfax, and A Temporary Marriage, by Cardiel Hale.

Viola Dana will make five pictures during the coming year, under the direction of Harry Beaumont. Page Tim O'Brien, the first of the series, is nearly completed. Following will come June Madness, by Crossby George; Miss Emmy Lou, by Bernard McConville, and Noise in Newboro, by Edgar Franklin.

Quincy Adams Sawyer, the Sawyer-Lubin special, is under way. Clarence Badger is directing and John Bowers and Barbara LaMarr are the principals in the cast.

Bull Montana will make eight two-reel comedies. He is expected back from Italy about August first, where he is visiting his mother. Hunt Stromberg has taken offices at the Metro Studios and is preparing for the forthcoming Stromberg-Montana productions.

The filming of Peg o' My Heart will start about the tenth of August, with King Vidor directing. Miss Taylor has been delayed in the East on account of poor health.

Upon the completion of The Voice from the Minaret, the First National attraction, starring Norma Talmadge, which Joseph M. Schenck is now filming, Miss Talmadge will be presented in The Garden of Allah, one of the greatest stage successes of the past decade.

Richard Walton Tully has finished many of the interiors for Omar the Tentmaker, and Guy Bates Post and the entire company will leave shortly to film some of the impressive scenes that punctuate the Persian tale.

Phil Goldstone has assembled the cast for his independent release, Deserted at the Altar. Bessie Love, who has just finished playing the ingenue lead in the Fox Special, The Village Blacksmith; Tully Marshall, who has been featured for the past ten years in support of the leading stars of the industry; Eulalie Jensen, remembered for her work with Norma Talmadge in Passion Flower and has just finished with Wesley Barry in From Rags to Riches; Frankie Lee, who rose to fame after his work in The Miracle Man and has recently finished with Sessue Hayakawa in The Swamp; William Scott, who played leads with Gladys Brockwell; Wade Boteler, recently finished in the Universal production, Come Through; Queenie, the canine dog and who will be seen with Jackie Coogan in Trouble.

Deserted at the Altar is now in its seventh week and will be ready for release in the early fall.

Myron Selznick is preparing for two new productions at the United Studios, in the immediate future. George Archainbaud, who has finished Under Oath, will direct one of the new productions, and Victor Heerman, who has completed A Previous Engagement, an Owen Moore production, will direct the other. The casts have not been announced as yet.

Universal has purchased and will release The Exile, an all star picture made by Irving Cummings, was the announcement made by Irving Thalberg, director-general of Universal City. The picture was made by Cummings at Universal with scenes ranging from grand ball rooms to magnificent South Sea Island jungle sets.

Gladys Brockwell plays the feminine lead and Mahlon Hamilton is the leading man, Stuart Holmes, the heavy and Kate Price plays the motherly role.

Doug Fairbanks has about three weeks to go in the filming of Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood. The cutting and titling will be finished by the last of August and the picture will be ready for early release in the fall.

There remains to be shot some of the most difficult episodes in the picture, such as the battle between the forces of Richard Coeur de Lion and Robin Hood's band, and those of Prince John and Guy of Gisbourne, which forms the climax of the picture. Also the final shots in the tournament where Guy of Gisbourne is unhorsed by the Earl of Huntingdon (Robin Hood) are yet to be photographed.

Most of the tournament scenes were shot early in the filming, but it was decided not to take the risky part of the combat until the completion of the picture, because of the danger of accident.

Tully Marshall has been added to the cast of Harry Carey's production, Good Men and True, a story by Eugene Manlove Rhodes, which Mr. Carey is producing at the Robertson-Cole Studios.

Al. Christie has returned to the Christie Studios in Hollywood after a short trip through Europe and the British Isles. He arrived home wearing a thick coat of tan and swears that he saw more of England, Scotland, France, Belgium and Holland during a speedy jaunt than most people do in twice the time. His memory seems to be clogged with famous cathedrals, numerous art museums, motion picture palaces, historical monuments, battlefields and such. He was accompanied by his production manager, H. D. Edwards.

Jackie Coogan, Sr., will go to New York shortly to make distribution arrangements for the Radio Comedies and the Fred Hibbard Comedies, both of which are being made at the United Studios, Hollywood.

Jack Pickford has returned to Los Angeles from New York after an absence of several weeks during which time he filmed events at the Kentucky Derby at Louisville and the Metropolitan Handicap at Long Island, as a part of his picture version of Garrison's Finish, a racing story he will bring to the screen as his first United Artists release. Under the supervision of Elmer Harris, he will make the interiors for this picture in Hollywood, and the later location scenes will be made on the Mojave Desert and at Pasadena and Burlingame, a San Francisco suburb.

Mack Sennett has answered the demand which has been based on thousands of fan letters asking for more pictures with Teddy. the dog. So a new company has been formed under the direction of Fred Jackman, with John O'Hara in the capacity of co-director and John Henry, Jr., Teddy and Pepper, the feline artist will hold fort.

The first of this series of child and animal pictures will be known by the title of Bow-Wow and will be released through the Association First National Pictures.

"Isle of Zorda" Proves S.R.O. at Clune's, Los Angeles

Among current pictures which outstrip in proved box office value the most hopeful anticipations of their distribution, Pathe claims its special feature, The Isle of Zorda. Apropos of exhibitors' statements received, Pathe has received the following telegram from Manager Jay A. Haas of Clune's Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles:

"Played Isle of Zorda two weeks to capacity. Best box office attraction we have had in eight months. A number of patrons came three and four times. Give me more attractions like this and I will exhibit the S. R. O. twelve hours a day."

Frank Zambreno Has Had a Good Year

Chicago Independent Exchangeman, in New York for Selection of Year's Pictures, Sees Bright Outlook

Frank Zambreno of Progress Pictures, of Chicago, has this week closed his annual conference with Dr. Shallenberger of Arrow on the purchase of pictures for his territory of Northern Illinois and Indiana. He has contracted for twenty-two features, twenty-six comedies and one serial. Of the features the titles of seventeen were supplied. While the sum involved in the present transaction is not named, Mr. Zambreno admitted that a year ago his contract with Arrow called for the payment of $261,000 and that this sum was supplemented by a further purchase during the year of $36,000.

Mr. Zambreno, who was found by a TRADE REVIEW man in conference with Dr. Shallenberger on Tuesday, was asked if it was his experience that the exhibitor as a rule was disinclined to concede to an independent picture the same consideration that would be bestowed upon a program subject of equal importance. The Chicagoan said that personally he had not so found that condition, although he was not prepared to say there was not justification for the impression among independent exchangemen.

"You must bear in mind," said Dr. Shallenberger, "that Frank has a faculty of making personal friends of his customers, and they always have confidence in receiving from him the fairest kind of treatment."

Mr. Zambreno smiled. "Well," he said, "I always try to tell my customers the truth. If I tell them a picture is good I honestly believe it is good. Then, again, if an exhibitor has a beautiful house and a clientele that does not display any fondness for 'westerns,' why bother him by trying to sell him a picture of that type, even conceding that it possesses distinct merit and that you feel it would go well anywhere? If I have a picture that I think is good for a certain house, I say so, and I believe the exhibitor has confidence in it."

Importance of Filling Contracts

One of the factors militating against the independent department of the industry, Mr. Zambreno suggested, was the inability of territorial buyers to fulfill their promises to exhibitors by reason of failure on the part of distributors to carry out their original intentions as to quantity of productions. "I have been told," said the exchangeman, "that sometimes an exhibitor in order in advance to insure a supply of 365 pictures will arrange to secure 450. Here's one of the prominent distributors announces a couple of score of pictures, with not only the titles but the names of the players. This is significant."

"Yes," remarked Dr. Shallenberger, "that policy will be the rule eventually."

The conversation turned on the rough twelvemonth that had just passed and the difficulties that had been experienced by exchangemen and exhibitors. "I have heard the statement made in New York," said Mr. Zambreno, "that if all the exchanges were in a position to take up their commitments the distributors would be able to discount their bills and to give the exchanges and the theatres cheaper films. Personally, I have found a wonderful spirit of co-operation in my territory. Where others in some parts of the country have complained of this year having been the worst, I have found it has been one of my best.

"Of course," added Mr. Zambreno, glancing at Dr. Shallenberger, "I am through asking you for reductions and I can speak truthfully.

"The public has been staying away from the theatres for the last year, and there was a reason for it. But they are beginning to come back. The thing is, to get them back more quickly. Staying away, like steady attendance, is a habit. The attraction back to the box office of these stayaways is the exhibitor's big job."

First Run Situation a Thorn

The talk turned on the comparative sums expended by exhibitors in advertising a given picture. The suggestion was made that if an exhibitor paid $50 for his evening's feature, he might expend upon it without hesitation $20 for advertising, whereas if he got a good subject for $25 he might be disinclined to exploit it. The belief was expressed that in the latter instance the expenditure of $20 for advertising might yield a return at the box office in excess of that from the fifty-dollar picture.

The first run situation, Mr. Zambreno conceded, is a thorn in the exchangeman's side. "It is a fact that exchanges have waited so long for an opening that in some instances they have gone broke," said the exchangeman. He told of his success in an experiment in Chicago when he took a picture for its first showing in its territory away from the downtown houses and booked it in three large theatres, one each in the South, the West, and the North Side. He spent money in advertising the production in the city newspapers and the exhibitors contributed a portion of the sum. The newspapers, too, co-operated in the way of reviews and notices.

"I believe the distributors may get the benefit of this form of exploitation, too," said Mr. Zambreno, "if while it is under way the distributing company will continue its advertising in the trade papers. It means the exhibitor is going to find reference to his product through two mediums and the influence cannot fail to be beneficial."

Mr. Zambreno declared his conviction that the coming season is going to be excellent in the picture business, perhaps the greatest. "It will be for me, I am sure," he said. And he has been in it seven years.

In the Northwest

The Devil's Foot, first of the famous Sherlock Holmes stories released by Educational, had its initial showings at the Tacoma Rialto last week, and went over big. The Rialto has booked the series and will show one every other week. Portland is showing the first release this week at the Columbia.

Lou Rosenberg, of Seattle De Luxe, has covered Montana and returns optimistic over the fall prospects for that territory.

L. K. Brin, of Kwality Productions, has just returned to Seattle from New York, where he secured the entire Warner Brothers productions for the coming season for the Pacific Northwest.

I Am the Law opened July 8 at the Seattle Coliseum, and is booking heavily throughout the territory.

"Wild Youth" Now Practically Ready for Trade Showing

Wild Youth, Ivan Abramson's latest contribution to the independent market for early fall release, has been completed and soon will have its first private showing, according to announcement made at the Graphic offices. The picture has been cut and titled, the only remaining work being completion of the art titles. The feature is in six reels and said to be by far the best work under Abramson's production and direction. In addition, it contains a strong cast, including the late "Bobby" Connelly, who died last week; Virginia Pearson, Mary Anderson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Harry T. Morey, Thurston Hall and Joseph Striker.

By strange circumstance, "Bobby" Connelly had completed an important role in the production only by a few days previous to his death, so that his last picture is graphically representative of all the juvenile art for which he was known. The part played by "Bobby" is that of a son of an estranged couple.

The principals in the production paid last honors to "Bobby" on Saturday of last week at his funeral. In addition, numerous Vitagraph Company players and many prominent in film circles were in attendance.

Aubrey M. Kennedy Comes Back with "Madame Sans Gene"

Marking the re-entrance of Aubrey M. Kennedy in the production field, the coming release of Madame Sans Gene is announced. On the stage the drama has been played by Bernhardt, Rejane, Kathryn Kydder and Amelia Bingham. The story is of the love of a little laundress for Napoleon, and it is reported there was lively competition for the motion picture rights.

While several companies are said to be interested in the distribution rights Mr. Kennedy has not decided upon releasing arrangements. Margaret Mayo, famous as the author of Twin Beds and other successes, edited the film and wrote the titles.

"Sure Fire Flint" Chosen for Hines

First of Six Burr Productions Starring Comedian Will Be Directed by Dell Henderson—Many Territories Sold

Announcement comes from the offices of C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, that the first feature production in which Johnny Hines will be starred in his new series is Sure Fire Flint, a magazine story by Gerald C. Duffy. It will be the first of a production program of six subjects for the coming season and will be directed by Dell Henderson, among whose more recent work are The Girl from Porcupine and The Broken Silence. Mr. Henderson will have at his disposal the entire facilities of Burr's Glendale Studio, and it is expected the production will be ready for the state rights market by August 15.

Mr. Burr is negotiating with a prominent actress for the role opposite Mr. Hines. Already chosen for the cast are Edmund Breese, J. Barney Sherry and Effie Shannon, all of the first rank among players. Mr. Burr plans an extensive advertising campaign that will reach key city newspapers as well as the trade press. The producer believes he has a comedy-drama that will stand up with the best of that department issued within the past two years.

The following territories already have been sold on Sure Fire Flint: West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania to Joseph Skirboll of Associated First National Pictures; Ohio to William Skirboll of Skirboll Gold Seal Productions; Northern Illinois to Roy C. Seery; Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas to Abe Blank of Associated First National Pictures; California, Arizona, Nevada and Hawaiian Islands to Louis Hyman; Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah and Southern Idaho to M. A. Klausner of Mountain States Film Attractions; Oregon, Washington. Montana. Northern Idaho and Alaska to Mountain States Film Attractions; Eastern Pennsylvania to Dave Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., and New England to Sam Moscow of Moscow Pictures Corporation, Boston.

Two Exchanges Contract for Entire Warner Product

Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, announced that two deals have been consummated for the entire series of productions being made for the coming season. The two concerns are the Independent Film Corporation, Philadelphia, and the Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto.

"The entire series," said Mr. Warner, "are being sold only to those exchanges capable of properly handling our product. And our dealing with these exchanges will assure exhibitors that they will be given every co-operation in publicity and advertising."

Agnes Egan Cobb to Issue Iroquois Productions

Agnes Egan Cobb, following the opening of her own office, has signed with Iroquois Productions, Inc., of Chatham, N. Y., which intends to make a series of Northwoods stories. These will be directed by Caryl Fleming, who will make six five-reel pictures annually.

The company has purchased sixty acres of land in Chatham and intends to select its locations in and around the Adirondacks. The first picture, Northwoods Vengeance, already is finished. Norma Shearer is featured.

Mrs. Cobb will have branch offices in Yokohama, London, Montreal, Los Angeles, Indianapolis and Chicago.

California Film to Release Twelve Second Nationals

The Second National Pictures Corporation announces that A. Markowitz, doing business as the California Film Distributors at 168 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco, has been granted distribution rights for the twelve photoplays provided for release in the current season. Negotiations are nearing completion for the establishing of a Second National branch exchange in Dallas, for Texas, which, it is said, will practically complete the organization for the distribution of Second National pictures in the United States.

The corporation reports satisfactory hot weather business in showings of The Night Riders, Her Story, and David and Jonathan, the first three releases, and rapid booking of Broken Shadows, an Irish romance of the screen from the popular novel by Charles Garvice.

Harry Cohn Goes Back West to Start New Comedy Series

Having set the summer and fall schedule for the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, Harry Cohn, head of the production forces of that company, returned to the West Coast this week. In addition to the new series of Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies and the Sunrise Comedies, plans have been outlined for another series of comedies, to be made in accordance with ideas outlined by exhibitors and several leading exchange men and territorial buyers.

Harry and Jack Cohn also have outlined plans for at least two new short novelty releases on which definite production will begin shortly.

De Luxe Company Brings Film East

"Night Life in Hollywood" to Reach the Screen First in New York—Distribution Plans Not Yet Formulated

Mrs. A. B. Maescher, president of the De Luxe Film Company, producer of Night Life in Hollywood, has arrived in New York, where she will supervise arrangements for the world premiere of her company's picture. Also in New York is Eugene Evans, general manager of the De Luxe Company.

The company has opened headquarters on the eighth floor of the Hotel Astor, which will be maintained until the picture is thoroughly on its way. Mr. Evans said that in spite of the desire of the Los Angeles motion picture colony that the production first be shown in the western city, it was decided to have the premiere take place in New York, and with that aim in view he is now casting around for a suitable Broadway theatre. With him Mr. Evans brought besides three prints of the six-reel subject also a full supply of lobby display and all kinds of necessary paper.

Asked as to his releasing plans, Mr. Evans said they were not definitely determined and for the present probably would not be. He said it was possible the rights would be disposed of to a distributing organization or that the company itself would distribute the picture throughout the country. The immediate concern was to give the production an adequate initial presentation to the trade and to the public.

The aim of the producers, Mr. Evans said, had been to present Hollywood to the world as it is, not as it has been pictured by a sensational press. J. Frank Glendon has the leading role, that of a small town Arkansan who goes to the picture community to explore the new Babylon, as he conceives it. Some of those appearing in the picture are Wallace Reid and family, Theodore Roberts, Bryant Washburn, Sessue Hayakawa and his home, and William Desmond, as well as a number of children from the players' homes.

Mrs. Maescher is head of the De Luxe Building Company of Los Angeles. She became interested in pictures through erecting the homes of many of the screen players. Mr. Evans also has conducted motion picture drives in Los Angeles and has been connected with many of the benefits given by the players.

Regal of Toronto to Get Warner Animal Feature for Canada

More than three-fourths of the State right buyers in the key cities throughout the country have purchased exclusive territorial rights of Warner Brothers' wild animal feature, A Dangerous Adventure, with Grace Darmond. The Canadian rights have been purchased by Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto, and the latest purchaser in the States is Independent Film Corporation, Philadelphia.

The production is announced as the first of seven to be released by the Warner Brothers in the fall. It is described as a novelty sensation.

"Wild animal feature pictures," said Mr. Warner, "are few and far between, but in all my experience in the film business I have never seen anything more thrilling and sensational than this wild animal picture."

The story deals with the attempted recovery of a long sought treasure chest left in the care of an African native by a scientist and explorer. Grace Darmond, in the role of the daughter of the scientist seeking the treasure, is supported by Jack Richardson, Philo McCullough, Robert Agnew and Derelys Purdue. The story was written by Frances Guihan, and it was directed by Jack and S. L. Warner.

Leslie B. Mace Announces Laugh-O-gram Films Roster

Leslie B. Mace, general sales manager of Laugh-O-gram Films, Inc., producing one-reel cartoons of modernized fairy tales for release every fortnight, announces the personnel of the organization. Walter Disney is the cartoonist. He has been the originator of several comedy strips, among them the Newman Laugh-O-grams shown exclusively in the Newman Theatre, Kansas City. R. C. Ising is assistant to Mr. Disney and will be in charge of the art room.

William "Red" Lyon, who has been cranking cameras for the past twelve years, is in charge of the photographic department. Walter J. Pfeiffer is scenario editor. Mr. Mace states that the company now has one of the most completely equipped cartoon studios in the country.

"One Stormy Orphan" Is Ready

The latest Mirthquake Comedy produced by Eddie Lyons and released by Arrow was received at the home office this week and will be released in the very near future. It is One Stormy Orphan. It stars that diminutive comedian, Bobby Dunn, and once more demonstrates Eddie Lyons' ability as a producer.

Short Subjects and Serials

Pathe Adheres to Fifteen Episodes

General Manager Pearson Says That Is the Length of Serial Most Advantageous for a Proper Presentation

Elmer Pearson, general manager of Pathe, declares the fifteen-episode serial is here to stay—and why. One important consideration alone, says Mr. Pearson, is sufficient to continue fifteen episodes as the standard length of serial productions, and that is the unanimous judgment of exhibitors themselves. This is the length, coupled with the maximum of entertainment quality, that attracts patrons with the greatest certainty and is most advantageous from all angles of presentation, advertising and various forms of exploitation.

"The proof of the fifteen-episode serial is in the bookings," declares Mr. Pearson. "Not of one, or two, or half a dozen scattered examples, but of a steady output of this form of picture covering a period of years. The successful making of a long series of fifteen-episode serials establishes a standard of excellence which can be reached only by the specializing process. Hence, the increasing value of the 'Patheserial' trade-mark as shown by the steady growth of bookings, which, of course, is the reliable index of public approval.

"On this subject Pathe certainly is entitled to speak with authority, having in a period of less than fifteen years made and distributed all over the civilized world a total of more than 30 fifteen-episode serials. This record is of itself sufficient evidence, first, that the subjects chosen were always adequate for development in that or greater length, and, second, that the writers and production forces were always capable and able to sustain the mounting interest and suspense from episode to episode to the denouement.

"The specialists in writing and in production who have combined to bring the fifteen-episode serial up to its present high standard of excellence and popularity know very well that they cannot depend on published fiction for their material. 'Stories' ready made simply do not exist. They have to be created by writers who are familiar in detail with all the essentials entering into this form of picture production. Until these highly trained writers begin to show more signs of exhaustion than they do at present, Patheserials will continue to be issued in fifteen episodes."

Hearty Laughs in "Treasure Bound," Jack White's Next

There are hearty laughs in Treasure Bound, a Jack White Production in two reels, to be released next month by Educational. In theme the comedy is comprehensive, to say the least. It runs like the unfolding of a first-class nightmare. This is not to say there is no thread to the tale, because distinctly there is. The haps and mishaps that befall the leading characters, however, are those of the land of dreams.

The direction is credited to Jack White, Bob Kerr and Del Lord and the photography to William Williams and B. McGill. The players are Lige Conley, Otto Fries, Jack Lloyd, Elinor Lynn and Harry Seymour. And from start to finish there is something doing every minute.

Lige Conley is the apprentice of an inventor who is dabbling in lighter-than-air, non-explosive gas. Also he is an experimental subject, the trial horse of inventive Father. In the latter's miniature dirigible on his way to the treasure ground he makes a stab at shooting ducks—which most thoughtfully fly in at one window and out another of the cabin—and at catching fish.

The white men are assisted by black men and by a lion. The two last-mentioned corners of this triangle seem to be as prolific in funmaking qualities as ever. While there is, as a rule, nothing mirthful about a lion, it's a different story when the black man enters or is pushed upon the scene. Speaking about black men, there's an unnamed person of that color who in this picture sits in a chest and with unsmiling face counts money—to enumerate one of several bits which stamp him as the possessor of genuine comedy talent. G. B.

This "still picture" from "Little Red Riding Hood," the first of the fairy tale series to be issued by Century Comedies, affords striking evidence of the remarkable acting ability of Baby Peggy, one of the most lovable little troupers the screen has known

Pathe to Distribute in Fall Short Westerns by Maloney

The Range Rider Series, a succession of two-reel western features starring Leo D. Maloney, have been accepted for distribution by Pathe. General Manager Elmer Pearson announces the signing of a contract to that effect, releases to be one every two weeks beginning early in the fall.

Pathe declares this new product superior to the successful Santa Fe Mac series, which established Maloney in public favor. The new series are described as clean dramas of effective craftsmanship and pervaded with the quickened inspiration of all outdoors, the rugged, natural settings being remarkable for beauty and perfection of photography.

Pictures of this type and length are known to have gained enormously in popularity through the record made by Tom Santschi in the long series of two-reelers distributed by Pathe. Maloney is a native of California and his career was confined to ranch life until he went to the screen. He appeared in early Pathe short subjects and has played in big western productions of other companies.

Pathe Issues Novelization of "Timber Queen" Serial

Announcement comes from Pathe Exchange, Inc., that the Pathe syndicate department has completed the fictionization of the new Ruth Roland serial, The Timber Queen. It was novelized by Herbert Crooker, who also put other Pathe serials into fiction form. Attractive proof sheets and mats are sent free of charge to newspapers and magazines which are desirous of securing this reading matter for their feature sections.

Between 100 and 200 newspapers take advantage of these novelizations. They are also taken advantage of by the exhibitor as an exploitation aid.

New Players with Moran

During the past week new talent was added to Lee Moran's Century Comedy being directed by Arvid Gillstrom. Besides Ena Gregory and Blanche Payson, its giantess, are included Jack Henderson, Percy Pembroke, Tom Dempsey, Bill Irving and Max Mogi. The tentative title is Not Guilty.

"Perils of the Yukon" Looks Good

Universal's Chapter Play Is Story of Adventure and Love in Alaska in Which William Desmond Is Starred

After viewing four episodes of Perils of the Yukon there is no hesitation on the part of this writer in saying the serial looks strong. William Desmond in the role of Jack Merrill, junior, as well as senior, an Alaskan adventurer, possesses a convincing personality. He has a robust physique and gives the impression of rather enjoying a fight, and, of course, in these non-gunplay days of the screen fistic ability takes on enlarged importance.

What stands out, however, in the four episodes is the sustained interest, the disposition to let the episodes continue running when a single squawk would bring a halt. There is a feeling that George Morgan, the author and scenarist, has built a story that will be worth while.

The principals have been wisely chosen. In the role of Olga, Laura La Plante, who for quite a number of months has been doing excellent all-around work at the Universal studios — in comedies and in short dramas—plays opposite Mr. Desmond. She is wholesome, attractive, the antithesis of "stagey," an every-day sort of girl. Fred Stanton is Ivan Petrof, a Russian adventurer in love with Olga. George A. Williams is Scotty McPherson, a prospector.

Among the high lights in the opening episodes there is one incident that would be notable in any picture. It is a fall of Merrill and Olga down a steep, snow-covered incline, a distance that looks like a couple of hundred yards. It is a thrill. Then there is a sword fight between Merrill and Petrof. Of stand-up-and-knock-downs there are several, not any of which is anyone—any male person, at least—likely to look upon with indifference.

The fifteen-chapter serial is directed by Perry Vekroff and Jay Marchant, with William Lynch at the camera. The period of the opening is 1867, showing, among other historical incidents, the purchase of Alaska from Russia. The action quickly changes to 1899, when the gold rush is on and the country is filling up.

Frank Bacon Puts Lloyd Hamilton at Top in "Poor Boy"

Lloyd Hamilton, who is putting the finishing touches on the first of his new Hamilton Comedies for Educational releases, numbers among the enthusiastic followers of his pictures one of the best known actors on the American stage.

Regarding Hamilton's latest picture, Poor Boy, the final Mermaid Comedy in which Hamilton is to be featured, Frank Bacon, of Lightnin' fame, said in a letter to his son, Lloyd Bacon, who is a scenario writer for the comedian:

"Saw Hamilton in Poor Boy, and it was very funny. He is as clever a man as we have on the screen today. There are many big laughs. I don't think I ever saw a funnier comedy. There is nothing more convincing than hokum done in an artistic way. Hamilton was the essence of art. I am strong for him. Saw the picture in Chicago Sunday in a theatre seating five thousand, and they just screamed. That was some dog. The garter gag, the fish dancing out of the water, taking up the collection, being dragged around the town on a carpet, and the collar stuff, back and forth between you, Hamilton and the dog —really it was delightful. His earnestness and sincerity will put him to the front of the best."

Yosemite Backgrounds for Baby Peggy Comedy

It has been decided that the next Baby Peggy Century Comedy is to be made with the scenery of the Yosemite as a background. The scenes will be taken throughout the whole of July, after which Baby Peggy's next fairy tale will be written for her and most of the scenery built.

The story on which Baby Peggy will work in the Yosemite will center around the adventures of the mounted police, of which the little girl will be a pocket edition.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

THE BRIDE TO BE—Hal Roach Comedy, Released by Pathe.—There is good stuff in this single reel featuring Paul Parrott, assisted by Jobyna Ralston and Eddie Baker. Parrott finds a new way of securing a dress suit when he follows his rival along the street and from the pack on the back of the latter extracts and dons all the elements of a dress suit. He even makes use of the shaving material in the pack, but when he hands the bride a present he has stolen from a pocket of the dress suit trouble starts.

APARTMENT WANTED—Two-part Century Comedy released by Universal.—Lee Moran has the role of the head of a large family who is hard put to it to find a place for them to live. As an alternative to camping out he takes a job as janitor and proceeds to make life a burden to the tenants so he may move out of the cellar. Also he tries scaring the tenants with a ghostly garb and lands in jail. The picture does not contain much mirth for adults.

THE HILLCREST MYSTERY—Pathe Playlet, Three Reels.—A strong story, with Irene Castle in the featured role, supported by Wyndham Standing, Ralph Kellard, J. H. Gilmore and Joe Cuny. The basis of the tale is of the war, in so far as the object of attack is a steel formula for government use and which is sought by a foreign nation, presumably Germany. The story is well told, the direction originally having been that of George Fitzmaurice.

URBAN POPULAR CLASSIC.—Entertainingly shown is the story of the magnet, as recorded by Professor F. P. Smith of London. The tale is told in popular and non-technical style. One of the best examples shown of the power of a magnet is that of laying a card over a magnet, sprinkling iron filings over its surface and then shaking the table or causing the card to vibrate. The subject should be of interest in theatre or school.

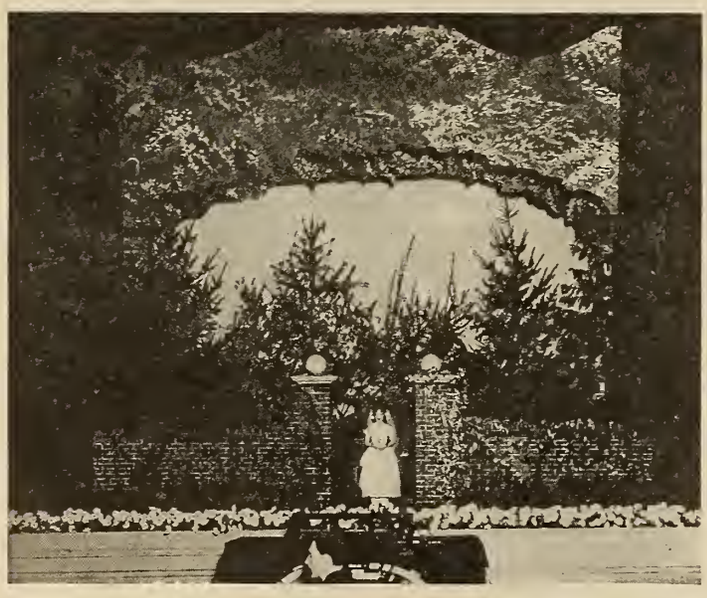
PATHE REVIEW 165.—The best shots in the number are those under the heading of "Tackling Table Mountain," showing men and women climbing the South African hill. Others are "Photographic Gems," showing a brook at many picturesque spots; "The Victory," England's old battleship, and "The Port of One Memory," Pathecolor views of St. Florient, Corsica.

GOING, GOING, GONE—One-reel Reissue, Pathe.—This is the story in which Harold Lloyd and "Snub" Pollard appear as tandem bicycle riders. Bebe Daniels is seen for a bit, and among the other girls in a couple of scenes is Marie Mosquini. The picture will not register as above the average, perhaps a little below it.

BUSY BEES—Rolin Comedy, Released by Pathe.—A camp meeting of negroes and a beehive in action supply plenty of mirth at one of the stages of this single reel. And there are other points at which the comedy is in evidence.

THE FABLE OF THE MISCHIEVOUS CAT — Pathe Fables. — Cartoonist Terry continues to "ring the bell" with his amusing interpretation of the Fables of Æsop.

When he showed First National's "Tol'able David" Manager Thomas G. Coleman of the Strand, Memphis, Tenn., fixed up this lobby arrangement with two simple art panels drawn by a local artist. The sketches were rather ordinary rural scenes conveying the atmosphere of "the southern hills," and in conjunction with the hanners and signs succeeded in making a splurge.



Backed against a setting of English garden walls and arrayed in a costume of the period of 1863, nine-year-old Malvosen Parker, daughter of the owner of the Majestic Theatre, Portland, Ore., sang "Smilin' Through" as a prelude to the First National play starring Norma Talmadge when it showed at that theatre.

Frames cut from cardboard and covered with cretonne are the invention of Miss Davidson, who has charge of publicity and advertising for the Strand, City and Rialto Theatres of Brockton, Mass. These small frames add a colorful and pleasant touch to the display frame of the lohby, and the effect is here emphasized in the arrangement Miss Davidson designed for Paramount's "Beyond the Rocks" at the Strand.

Steals Convention

George Schade, owner and manager of the theatre bearing his name in Sandusky, Ohio, stole a convention and a flock of little toy balloons helped him do it. The Ohio Eagles held their nineteenth annual conclave at Sandusky. Schade had already decorated his theatre in convention style. Then to do things up to the Eagles' taste he bought several thousand balloons, red, white and blue, the Eagles' colors, with In Old Kentucky and Schade Theatre printed on them.

They were given out to every youngster who wanted one—and that included hundreds of patrons who had passed the thirty year mark or more. Before the first day of the convention had passed the visiting delegates knew of the Schade Theatre and recognized it as the standard amusement place of Sandusky.

Then the visiting delegation from Akron, some 800 strong, arrived with 25,000 balloons, also red, white and blue, as their symbol of advertising the home of the rubber industry. But Schade had established his trade mark, with the result that every balloon in the air, including the 25,000 from Akron, was regarded as his.

For four days the Eagles remained in convention. Even after In Old Kentucky had been replaced by Penrod the balloons continued to fly in the air as an advertisement for the Schade Theatre and the First National attraction.

Booms Town Trade

Exploitation that rendered a real service and established good will in a community was rendered by E. R. Coffin, First National's exploitation man for the Omaha territory, in arranging merchant co-operation for the Favorite Theatre.

Retail merchants of Schuyler were worried because summer business seemed to be on the wane. The great buying done by adjacent farmers was an important factor in the city's business life.

The exploitation man arranged to bring more farmers into the city to buy on Saturday mornings by putting on a special free farmers' matinee at the Favorite. He got enough financial support from the merchants to put over the plan and assure Manager Van Heusen of the Favorite that there would be a profit. The merchants were then given blocks of tickets for the special showings and distributed these among their customers.

It built up business for the merchants and credited Manager Van Heusen with doing a good turn.

Old Home Week

During the run of The Man from Home at the Rialto Theatre, Denver, Col., Manager A. G. Birch advertised:

Come to the Rialto and see "The Man from Home" and the Folks from Your Home Town.

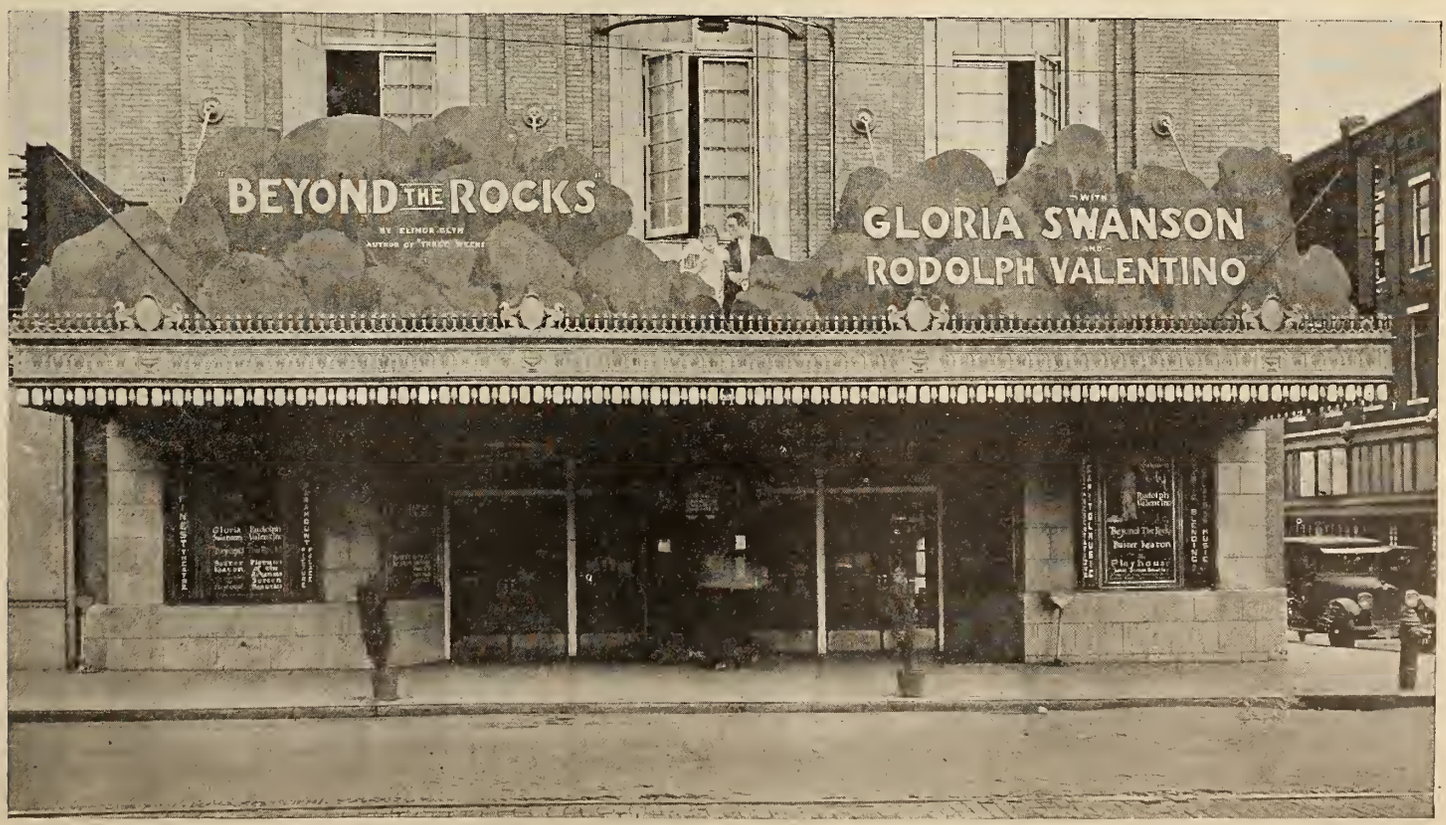
In Denver there are a number of flourishing State societies such as the Kansas Club, the Texas Club, the New York Society of Colorado and the like, where folks get together every now and then to renew old friendships and talk about their home towns. Almost any city of any size has them.

Mr. Birch dug up the presidents and chief members of these societies and gave each a night at the theatre.

Cutting a Figure

Where the Means to Attract Is Found in the Cutout

The space over the theatre entrance may be employed to advantage by a choice use of the cutout. Above is the display for Goldwyn's "Head Over Heels" at Ascher's Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee. A stage built over the entrance enclosed a scene made up of cutout figures. Below, an entrance display of pointed appeal, whether viewed from close-up or at a distance, is this one arranged for Paramount's "Beyond the Rocks," Capitol Theatre, Little Rock, Ark.



Mailing Lists—How to Use Them

The Cost of a Mailing System and the Law on Mailable Matter

III. Cost of a Mailing List

What does it cost to get up and maintain a mailing list that will operate efficiently?

Usually when that question comes to mind one thinks of tons of printed matter, thousands of postage stamps, a roomful of typewriters and half a dozen office boys. And discouragement follows with consequent abandonment of the idea of a mailing list.

The fact is a mailing list and system for maintaining it is as cheap as you want to make it or as expensive as publishing a magazine, if you so desire. We'll talk now of an inexpensive mailing list and if the reader desires to enlarge upon it he may do so.

A card upon which the name, address and other information is kept may be printed, or typewritten in this form:

NAME				REGULAR
ADDRESS				OCCASIONAL
TOWN				AFTERNOON
BIRTHDAY DATE				EVENING
PREFERENCE
PICTURES	WESTERN	SOCIETY	COMEDY	DRAMA
STARS
SPECIAL MUSIC
DAY OR DAYS
NUMBER IN FAMILY

The average size for mailing cards in common use is 5 by 3 inches. Cards of this size are kept by every office supply house. They cost 60 cents per hundred and $4.75 in lots of a thousand including, usually, necessary printing of name and address. This price is almost uniform the country over.

It is an easy matter to typewrite on each card the necessary information you desire and frequently it is advisable to enumerate not only the name of one person but the members of the family, occupations and the type of pictures they are interested in. By keeping track of the occupation often a picture that appeals to certain workers can be advertised to a special mailing list. For instance if you were running a picture in which a stenographer is the heroine or a manager could send out a special post card to the stenographers on his list. This scheme operates all down the line in many occupations.

To keep the cards properly a filing tray 3 11/16 by 5 5/6 inches and 10 inches deep should be on hand. This costs about $3 and accommodates the 5 by 3 inch card. These trays take up little space and are most often kept on top of a desk or shelf where they are handy.

One girl can easily address and mail 500 envelopes or cards in a single day. The cashier, or an usher who knows how to run a typewriter can be used for this purpose without additional cost.

The cards should be kept alive by constant checking. The postoffice department returns all first class mail where the addressee has changed address or has left town, so the dead ones can be kept out of the list. Once every two months your list should be covered with a piece of first-class mail matter so that you will get back the dead ones and thus be able to take them off the list. Otherwise one cent can be used for all matter going out to the list.

The suggestions given here are fundamental. You can enlarge upon them in many ways to suit your pocketbook and local conditions. In addition this series of articles will point out novel ways in which to obtain lists and use them.

What Is the Law on Post Cards?

THE Exploitation Editor has prepared digest of the U. S. Postal Regulations concerning post cards. It should be carefully read and posted up near the mailing list where it will save time, trouble and money.

WHAT CAN BE SENT FOR 1 CENT

Post cards manufactured by private persons, consisting of an unfolded piece of cardboard in quality and weight substantially like the Government postal card, not exceeding in size approximately 3 9/16 by 5 9/16 inches, nor less than approximately 2¾ by 4 inches bearing either written or printed messages, are transmissible without cover in the domestic mails at the postage rate of 1 cent each.

WHAT GOES ON FACE OF CARD

Advertisements and illustrations may appear on the back of the card and on the left half of the face. The right half of the face must be reserved for the address, postage stamps, postmark, etc.

ODD SIZE CARDS

Cards which do not conform to the foregoing conditions are chargeable with postage at the letter rate, if wholly or partly in writing, or at the third-class rate, if entirely in print.

CARDS IN ENVELOPES

Cards mailed under cover of sealed envelopes (transparent or otherwise) are chargeable with postage at the first-class rate; if inclosed in unsealed envelopes, they are subject to postage at the first-class rate if wholly or partly in writing, or the third-class rate if entirely in print—to be prepaid with stamps affixed to the envelope. Stamps affixed to matter inclosed in envelopes are not recognized in payment of postage thereon.

REPLY CARDS

Double or reply post cards each portion of which conforms in size, quality, etc., to the foregoing conditions are subject to 1 cent postage, to be prepaid on the initial portion. The reply half, when detached and mailed, is also subject to 1 cent postage. The postage on the reply half need not be affixed thereto until it is detached from the initial half and mailed for return.

FOLDED CARDS

Folded advertising cards, and other matter entirely in print, arranged with detachable part for use as a post card, are mailable as third-class matter.

SELECT THEATRE

Dear Madam (or Sir):-

The business, or art, of entertaining the public with motion pictures isn't very old. It is true, however, that so many photoplays are made each week that folks who attend motion picture theatres may be forgiven for expressing the conviction that "there is nothing new under the sun" on the motion picture screen.

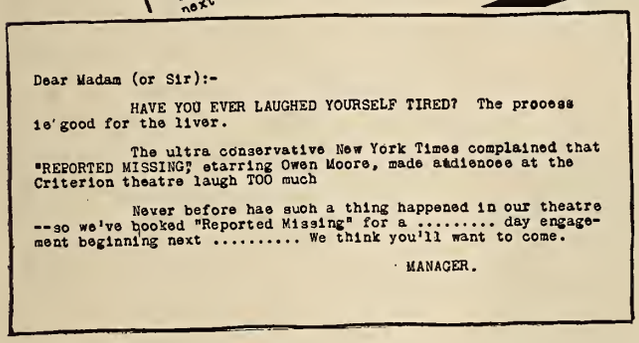
We've booked a special feature for the .....theatre next .....which we are certain will have an unusual appeal for jaded motion picture palates. We'll guarantee that it will strike you as "something new"

The feature is "Reported Missing," a Selznick Picture starring Owen Moore. It is a combination of melodrama and comedy which has been heralded by metropolitan critics as absolutely unique in the world of screen entertainment.

If you're fond of thrills -- if you like to laugh, don't miss "Reported Missing." The engagement is for ..... days, beginning next .....

Sincerely yours,
SELECT THEATRE,
Manager

"Don't Tell Everything"



Dear Madam (or Sir):-

HAVE YOU EVER LAUGHED YOURSELF TIRED? The process is good for the liver.

The ultra conservative New York Times complained that "REPORTED MISSING" starring Owen Moore, made audiences at the Criterion theatre laugh TOO much

Never before has such a thing happened in our theatre --so we've booked "Reported Missing" for a ..... day engagement beginning next ..... We think you'll want to come.

worth of amusement at Arc theater for the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Charlie Chaplin.

The mailing material shown above are selected examples of devices that have proved their own worth and that of the live mailing list. The Selznick offering, "Reported Missing," was sold through the mail with a direct letter appeal. Regular stamped postcards with the title printed in the lower corner inside a printed border, were used to good purpose in a campaign for the Paramount "Don't Tell Everything" film. The "payable in amusement" check was mailed out by the Arc Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., in a drive for "Pay Day," First National's latest Chaplin

Appreciating the value of an active, up-to-date mailing list, the management of the Lyric, Connersville, Ind., proceeded in the direct method shown by reproduction of the card below. A fold-over card was printed and these cards were distributed at the theatre. The upper fold of the card carried a request for patrons to fill out the questionnaire below, calling especial attention to the necessity of filling in the date of the recipient's birthday. The filled-in cards were then delivered or mailed to the theatre. The possession of the date of birthdays enabled the theatre to carry on a steady follow-up campaign of the most effective sort as it permitted the sending of greetings to individuals, which establishes the most cordial relations.

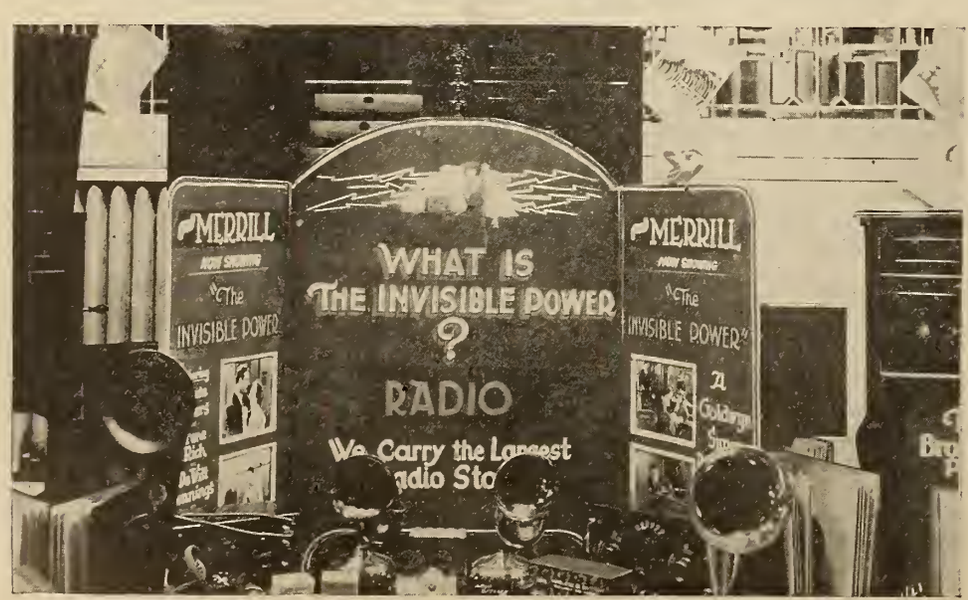
Scenic properties, built up of paper board, and an extensive use of advertising lines were combined by Manager John Stille to make a flashing lobby at the Columbia Theatre, Seattle, Wash., for the run of Vitagraph's "The Prodigal Judge."

Co-operative window that proved an important factor in the campaign for Paramount's "Beyond the Rocks" by Manager DeSales Harrison, Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Ga. The window display is given added timely interest through connection with Mothers' Day, and as the florist featured the narcissus, the picture display was tied up by the statement that the star favored narcissus perfume.

The advantages of a tie-up with radio equipment dealers offered by the title of Goldwyn's "The Invisible Power" were seized upon by Ascher's Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee. Radio receiving sets and a cutout board with scene stills made up the display for this window.



Riesenfeld's Stunt

Hugo Riesenfeld has gone in for exploitation. Following his page of co-operative newspaper advertising for The Top of New York, he staged a quotation contest for While Satan Sleeps, which he played two weeks on Broadway. In his newspaper advertising, Louis Gardy, publicity representative for the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, included a different quotation in each of his ads and offered a pair of tickets to persons correctly identifying them.

For example, on Monday, the following was printed along with the regular announcements:

"The Devil was sick, the devil a monk would be,
The Devil was well, the devil a monk was he."

The number of answers ran into the thousands and replies came from cities as far away as Toronto, Canada, and Richmond, Va. The average correct replies were unusually high, only about 10 per cent of the contestants sending in wrong answers.

The quotation was from Rabelais' Works, Book Four.

Another was—

"Satan now is wiser than of yore,
And tempts by making rich, not making poor."

Which was identified from Alexander Pope's "Moral Essays."

Makes It Thorough

Manager Ross Rogers of the Mission Theatre, Amerillo, Texas, went after Metro's Fascination with thoroughness. He put out plenty of paper in the way of specially painted one sheets, window cards and a few novel displays in the windows of some of the prominent stores around the business district.

So much for the advance work. He next went after something very unusual and got it. Amerillo boasts of a "white way" and Rogers secured permission from the city fathers to enclose the "white way" posts with beaver board painted in similar colors to the art work he was going to use in his lobby display. Small pictures of Mae Murray were used on these beaver board enclosures, and from the top of the posts in front of the theatre, yellow and red streamers were hung across the sidewalk to the center of the lobby. As this extended over the sidewalk, it attracted attention to the display for many blocks in either direction.

He carried out the Spanish atmosphere of the picture by framing a display of flashy posters and cut-outs that brought out the Castilian theme to a fare-you-well. In the center of the lobby was a cut-out of Mae Murray in her dancing costume. While that would attract attention anywhere, it was made still stronger by being flanked by a round piece of beaver board painted to represent a roulette wheel. This wheel was attached to a bicycle sprocket, which was in turn connected to a motor and revolved, causing the different colored background to revolve.

It was a thorough campaign for Fascination, and while it only cost $15.00, it sent receipts up approximately twenty per cent.

Applied "Inside Theatre" Organization

By EDWARD L. HYMAN
Managing Director, Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre

The third article based on a survey made by Mr. Hyman over a period of years to determine whether the motion picture theatre manager could achieve a certainty of patronage plus fair financial return.

HAPHAZARD attention to the physical appearance of a theatre—especially a motion picture theatre doing business every day in the year—subtracts from the hall-mark of quality that every house might be wise in maintaining. The wear-and-tear on a semi-public structure doing business 365 days a year is tremendous, and the amount of care exercised in upkeep not only has its reflection in the financial records at the end of the year—but reveals itself the more prominently in intangibles such as the theatre's general reputation for cleanliness, sanitation, safety, etc.

First impressions are regarded as most indelible, and it is my opinion that this applies most pertinently in the case of the visitor making his or her first visit to a place of amusement. Keeping the physical appearance of a motion picture theatre at par is just as easy as it is to regard this item as secondary or even tertiary. In the end a spick and span theatre is less costly and more valuable, both from a monetary and a patronage-maintaining standpoint.

Constantly applied "inside theatre organization" assures a neat theatre, and artificial efficiency methods are unnecessary.

System is a frayed word and organization is as universally regarded as out of date, yet they are the two principal factors to a well kept theatre. Coupled with common sense and constancy of application I have found that they slice overhead all around.

It is impossible for any one executive to constitute himself as a one-man organization. It is my opinion that the one-man organization is to blame for dirty theatres, poor service and in many cases poor business. There is better degree of result when competent, loyal employees head up certain departments with a close personal supervision by the manager. Especially is this so in the proper maintenance of a house.

Practically every employee of the theatre I supervise is responsible for some specific item of the performance. The responsibility is so definite that "Passing the Buck" is not only impossible, but any attempt is a rarity. The arrangement of the performance is known to the majority of employees. A cue sheet of the show is distributed generally to workers one week in advance, on the Sunday preceding the play date week. One of these cue sheets goes to the publicity department with attached photographs for newspaper use and with appended data concerning the attractions. Thus the publicity department has plenty of time to develop ideas and gain widest distribution through publicity channels.

Other copies go to the musical director, the stage manager, the chief projectionist, the art lobby man, the printer. Each sheet contains information of special value for the department affected. For instance, the cue sheet for the director of the orchestra gives him information in connection with the musical program. It may inform him of the key in which a certain soloist will sing a certain number. It will inform him whether the artist has an orchestration or whether a special one will have to be prepared.

The cue sheet for the stage manager will inform him of the lighting effects and the sets to be used for novelties. The projection chief will be informed on the sheet of the lighting plots. In fact. specific plain directions are given that the minimum of misunderstanding may be brought about.

On Sunday morning, preceding the opening, the entire show is rehearsed. Sometimes it is necessary to deviate from original directions given in the cue sheets and these corrections are made on the spot. The electrician, for example, will mark down the correct lighting effects. On Saturday afternoon all the film is observed. This is the time the topical review is assembled with careful attention to the selection of subjects. Each news subject is timed so that the music will conclude as the scene ends.

In addition to the cue sheet giving the program and presentation details each employee is presented with a time schedule which notes the time of each number on the bill as to hour and minutes. In this way even the girl at the house switchboard is able to tell almost to a minute when the feature will go on, when the show starts and so forth. She is thus able to give such information quickly when patrons call in for such information.

Reverting to organization and system in the cleaning of a house we have ascertained that much waste is eliminated by frequently obtaining a number of estimates for all cleaning materials. Prices fluctuate and it is often the case that a manager may get into the rut of dealing with one firm and paying stationary prices which may have lowered. It is a good plan to obtain new specifications each time that a contract for cleaning materials concludes to gain the benefit of any fall in prices. We get from three to five such bids. A superintendent is responsible for all cleaning details and he is able to give figures on daily cost of cleaning.

The same spirit of organization exists among the floor staff, the ushers and attendants. A chart is kept of the house and every attendant views this chart daily to ascertain to which spot he or she is assigned. Daily inspection of uniforms is made and every usher has a knowledge of exits, waiting rooms, hospital room, etc. Every usher has been ordered to report unusual occurrences. When something against the rules happens the ushers at once notify the management and correction is made. Ushers are trained to always accede to the patron. In fact the patron is regarded as "infallible." When a patron becomes ill first aid is given, a physician called if necessary and the patron escorted home if unattended.

These are elements of organization which tend to make a theatre a community institution, and which make a house known throughout a city. While many of these ideas may not appeal to many executives they have had their degree of success at the Brooklyn Mark Strand and are outlined here for what they are worth.

"Thrift" & "Boost" Campaigns That Scored

Two notable examples of the opportunities for telling exploitation the tieup with a thrift or boost-trade campaigns offers exhibitors are those in which the Liberty Theatre, Yakima, Wash., and the Dawes Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., joined advertising forces with a bank and a Chamber of Commerce respectively.

The stunt of the Dawes Theatre netted First National's Smilin' Through engagement many spectacular publicity stunts, the most effective being a trolley car decorated with banners flashing the slogan "Boost Bridgeport." This ballyhoo was kept on the go during the run of the picture and was paid for by the local merchants' organization.

The title of Charlie Chaplin's most recent First National offering provided the means which Manager Gillespie of the Liberty at Yakima grasped in order to associate his interests with those of the local bank. Newspaper advertising by the bank supplemented the effective display of cutouts in the window of the institution. This stunt illustrates the possibilities for tieups afforded the exhibitor, even the traditionally conservative banks being excellent prospects for an exploitation stunt.

Wins Patronage with "Jazz Night"

Showman Gets the Crowd Out by Staging Local Orchestra Competition

In order to brisk up business during a stretch of hot weather the management of the New Broadway Theatre, Cape Girardeau, Mo., decided to take advantage of a local condition which that town, in common with countless others throughout the country, offered. This consisted of a "Jazz Night" at which the various jazz orchestras of Cape Girardeau were invited to "do their stuff" from the stage of the New Broadway. The recipients of the greatest amount of applause were to be awarded a silver loving cup in token of their demonstrated superiority.

E. M. Berg, assistant manager, who conceived and executed the idea, reports the stunt had great tonic effect on the box office returns. In speaking about it Mr. Berg says: "We booked The Girl With the Jazz Heart from Goldwyn. A good Mack Sennett Comedy filled out the program.

"We advertised 'Jazz Night' with an all jazz program, also that immediately after the picture program we would stage a real jazz contest. All the jazz orchestras in town would compete for a handsome silver cup offered by the theatre. The trophy would be awarded to the orchestra that received the most applause.

"That this stunt was a success is stating it mildly; we more than trebled the average business and every one was pleased. Sometime we will repeat the stunt in some different way. All the thing cost was a little extra advertising and the cup. I am sure that this stunt will work for anyone."

To illustrate the interest aroused by the Jazz Night the following paragraph is reprinted from the Cape Girardeau paper: "Manager Brady of the New Broadway has been told that the Peg Meyer orchestra is going to challenge the Fischer combination for a contest.

Capitalizes Blue Law

Haled into court for showing the seventh day and escaping a sentence only on a promise of reformation, W. K. Richards of the New Royal Theatre, Findlay, Ohio, promptly followed his near escape from the hands of the local blue noses by showing The Seventh Day, with the slogan:

"It's been decided that you can't see The Seventh Day the seventh day, so you'd better come the first day and avoid disappointment."

A lobby that appealed to the populace of Montreal was made up of cutouts arranged to feature a background of seascape for the figure of the First National star for the engagement of "My Boy" at the Midway Theatre. The skillful handling of perspective in the central unit of the display made it appear at a distance not a cutout, but a hand-painted design. The theatre, which has a bi-lingual patronage, emphasized the fact that the titles were written in French and English.

Universal Names New Exploiteers

"Foolish Wives" Exploitation Men Taken Into Permanent Exploitation Organization Reformed on Large Scale Basis

UNIVERSAL this week announces the completion of the exploitation staff which has been in process of formation for some time. The Universal exploitation department is not a new project, but in its present form is really an elaboration of its previous service department, rebuilt in accordance with the ideas and ideals which have been evolved through Universal's extensive experience in that field. The announcement of the new organization was made in the following statement from the Universal home offices in New York:

"If Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., ever needed to sum up his personal policy it could readily be covered in three words: 'Nothing is impossible.'

"It is not surprising, therefore, that when the inevitable 'moving the goods' from the Exchange shelves became an acute problem, Carl Laemmle was ready with the remedy. 'Why not help the exhibitor make a big success of every Universal release he books?' said Mr. Laemmle. Then and there was born the advertising and publicity forces that long antedated the adoption of the term 'Exploitation' and 'Exploitation Department.'

"Chronologically, then Universal was the first producer to use nation-wide, large-space newspaper campaign — in 1915 — subjects, Universal pictures and Universal City. The year following Universal first advertised direct to motion picture patrons through a nation-wide campaign in the Saturday Evening Post.

"The comment in film circles caused by these, then, innovations, was as nothing compared to the 1916 announcement of the placing of a publicity man in each main exchange, thus antedating the general movement by some six years.

"Gradually, as the work and the opportunities developed, a permanent publicity director of high character and wide experience was placed in each main exchange. So thorough has been the training of these men that during the past season they have been entrusted with the direction of such special representatives as were engaged for Foolish Wives—during its triumphant tour of the United States and Canada.

"With its varied program of releases of everything an exhibitor could ask for —from a one-reel comedy, a news weekly, two-reel comedies, novelties, westerns, five-reel one-a-week releases, Jewel features and Super-Jewels, these field men, regardless of their individual experience, found opportunities such as no previous berth had ever given them. The home office publicity, advertising, poster and supply departments were flooded with helpful suggestions. Exhibitors began to take notice and catch the enthusiasm of Universal 'exploiteers.'

"This co-operative movement, under the skillful management of P. D. Cochrane, director of exploitation, grew to such proportions that Mr. Cochrane, who is also secretary of Universal, felt the need of shifting the burden, and to that end selected as exploitation manager Raymond Cavanagh, who is now directing from the home office the work of the field men.

"Since Mr. Cavanagh's appointment and the centralization of effort the field force has received a new impetus. The first effect was the gradual systematization of the routine publicity work in each exchange, to the end that more time could be given to individual exhibitors.

"Exhibitors have always credited Universal press books with setting the highest standard, but with the correlating of the efforts of the entire field force, a wealth of exploitation ideas, suggestions and tried and proven exploitation methods are now setting a new and even higher standard.

The Universal exploitation department personnel is at present as follows:

Home Office, New York. Raymond Cavanagh. exploitation manager, extensive commercial advertising and advertising agency experience—Middle West—Lord & Thomas, Taylor-Critchfield Agencies, Chicago; manager large printing concern, Universal Advertising Department, 1915. Seating Problems—Solving Them—II

STEEL AND CONCRETE THEATRES

The real development of the modern theatre structure, however, has come only within the past fifty years with the rapid development of steel and concrete construction.

Our climatic conditions, differing so completely from those of Greece and Rome, compel us to put our theatres under roof, and because of the importance of the spoken word, we have had to bring our "hillsides" as near the stage as possible, by means of our really very wonderful overhanging balconies and galleries.

It is this quite complex structure of the theatre of to-day that makes the task of the seating engineer as difficult as it is important.

Theatre Seating an Engineering Problem

To the lay mind and even to the practical theatre manager, theatre or opera seats, as they are sometimes called, are merely considered as furniture. But the real test in the production and installation of theatre seating is in the engineering skill and architectural knowledge rather than in the ability solely to produce good furniture. The experience, equipment and skill to manufacture the seating is, in fact, the lesser requirement of the two. Theatre seating is in reality a very highly specialized industry which requires the attention of specialists.

Must Be Based on Architectural Plan

To equip a theatre properly with seating, the manufacturer must first of all be thoroughly conversant with the uses to which the particular building is to be put. Having determined that, a seating diagram or lay-out is made to insure the maximum seating capacity consistent with comfort, safety, facility of entrance and exit, compliance with local or state building requirements, proper site lines, elevations and other mechanical adaptations and adjustments.

The seating must be determined upon the basis of the above things and also in conformance with the general architectural and decorative scheme and further in proportion to the invested capital of the building as a whole.

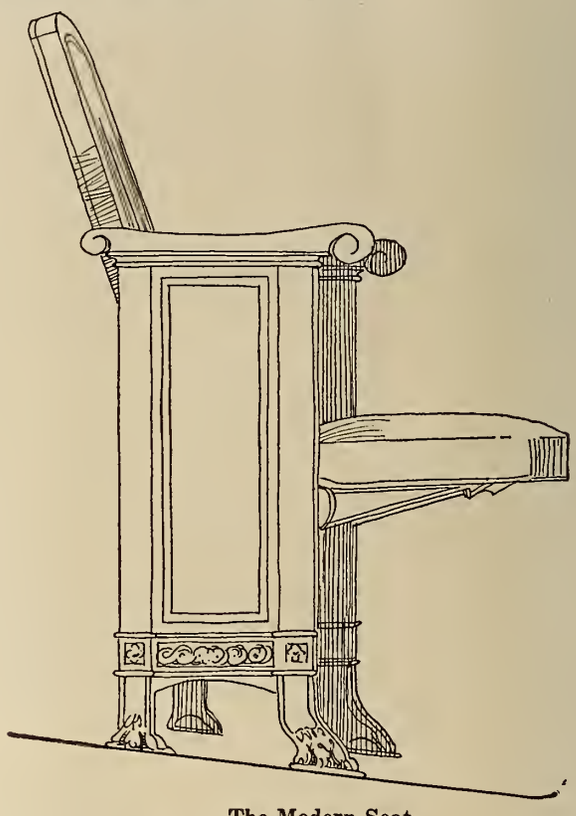
Clear View of Stage From Every Seat Essential

In the second place, every man, woman and child must have direct and open vision to the stage, for that's what he pays the money for at the box office.

The sloping and terracing of the floors and the curvatures of balcony and gallery are, of course, intended to facilitate this. But unless the seats are specially made to meet the requirements of each and every part of the house, these avail but little. For so greatly do theatres vary in plan and design that the seating construction problems that enter here must be solved individually for each theatre, hall or auditorium.

Adapting Seats to Floor Plan

The relative length of chair legs, front and back have to be so adjusted as to conform evenly to the slope of the floor and still keep the chair in its normal position. Then only can the occupant be assured of a natural, easy, comfortable position in sitting, being neither tilted too far forward, nor too far back. His feet and those of the chair should rest very naturally in exactly the same line or plane.



The Modern Seat

Where there are sloping sides toward the center, a two-fold problem presents itself. Not only must the inclination toward the front be right, as explained above, but there must be a mechanical adjustment in the fastening of seats to standards (supports) so that the seats will be perfectly level and parallel with natural floor level and the sitter will not be tilted at an angle—a position bound to be uncomfortable and annoying. A special patented construction of ours makes this adjustment quite simple and easy.

The necessary converging of seats from the outer circumference toward the stage, both on the main floor and in the balconies, offers still another problem to your seating engineer. For not only must there be no loss of chair space and resultant decreased capacity, but the symmetry and the general pleasing and orderly appearance of the house must be preserved.

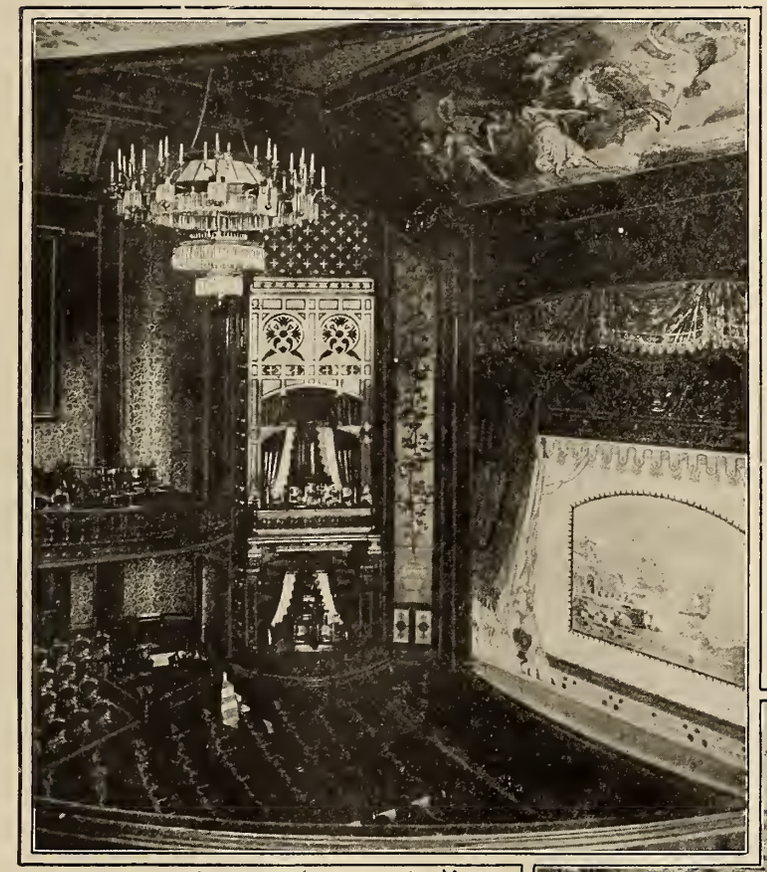
Furthermore there must be no crowding of seats at any point to the discomfort of the theatre patron. A very simple variation in the form of the seat-hinges, an invention of the American Seating Co. engineering department, solve this difficulty efficiently.

NEXT WEEK

How every foot of space is utilized in modern theatre seating plans, based on research by the Engineering Department of the American Seating Co., Chicago.

Rejuvenating Old Age

The Importance of Seats in Making Over the Old Theatre Illustrated by Actual Photographs from One of the Country's Famous Theatres. On the Page Facing Is the Theatre As It Was Reseated



"Views of the Academy of Music, Kalamazoo, Michigan, which enjoyed thirty years of successful operation as one of the leading amusement houses of Michigan. It was a theatre with tradition and cherished memories back of it, famous for its wonderful stage facilities, fine acoustics and site lines.

"In 1917, however, it had to close its doors due to the too keen competition of neighboring theatres of more modern design and equipment. It seemed doomed to fall by the wayside, borne down by neglect and old age."

PROJECTION

PROJECTION ELECTRICITY

Wiring Booth and Theatre

Series Two

By Wesley Trout

Rubber Covered Wires

This class of conductor consists of a tinned copper wire with a heavy rubber covering, protected by an outside braiding of cotton which has been saturated with a preservative compound.

(Q) What are the advantages of rubber insulation?

(A) It is waterproof, flexible, fairly strong, and has very high insulating qualities.

(Q) For what service are rubber covered conductors used?

(A) For interior wiring. Projection room and the theatres.

(Q) Is pure rubber used for this covering?

(A) No. Covering should be made from a compound containing 35 per cent of pure rubber.

Difficult to Place Pure Rubber

It would be difficult to place pure rubber on wire, and moreover a covering made of pure rubber would not be very durable and would very easily deteriorate rapidly, particularly at a temperature of 120 degrees Fahr. Accordingly, is mixed with other materials, such as French chalk, silicate of magnesia, sulphur, red lead, etc.

Weather Proof Conductors

In this class of conductor the wire is protected from the weather by a waterproof covering, consisting usually of braided cotton of two or three thicknesses saturated with a moisture resisting insulating compound.

(Q) Where are weatherproof conductors used?

(A) They are used in places subject to dampness, such as cellars, open sheds, etc.

(Q) What precaution should be taken when using this kind of conductor?

(A) On account of the inflammable character of the covering used, great care should be taken in wiring at points where any considerable number of conductors are brought together.

(Q) Where are weatherproof conductors used and especially adapted?

(A) They are used for outside wiring where moisture is certain and where fireproof quality is not necessary.

(Q) Where should slow burning wires be used?

(A) They should be used in hot dry places, where ordinary insulations would be injured, and also where wires may be bunched, as on the back of a large switchboard.

A slow burning covering is considered good enough when the wires are entirely on insulating supports. Its main object is to prevent the copper conductors coming into contact with each other or anything else.

Permission to use this kind of wire must first be obtained from the local Inspection Department.

New Bardy Projector

We are informed that the new Bardy Optical Projector does not use any shutter, giving 100 per cent light efficiency on the projection screen. It also greatly reduces eye strain and no flicker is perceptible.

The Bardy Projector Company is giving free demonstrations of this latest invention at 729 Seventh Avenue, fifth floor, New York. This projector can be attached to any ordinary outlet. It requires no special wiring. It can be used in schools, hospitals and private homes. Its arrangement is of such character that slow motion of the screen can be so thoroughly visualized that dancing masters can teach the most complicated steps with the use of this projector.

Want Lower Wage Scale

A movement has been launched by Kansas City exhibitors to obtain a lower wage scale for motion picture operators. With hot days looming ahead and amusement parks as competitors, the exhibitors are urging the co-operation of every theatre owner in effort to make the proposed reduction unanimous. It has not been definitely decided yet as to just what wage scale will be proposed.

The following announcement has been made by the committee: "The time has come for the discussion of a new wage scale for motion picture operators. We have every confidence that a marked reduction can be obtained providing the theatre owners will get together and act concertedly. Nothing can be accomplished without the effort of our local exhibitors. We have therefore requested the state association to call a meeting of this district for the thorough discussion of this matter.

"We therefore earnestly request that you attend the luncheon which is being given by our associate, Lawrence E. Goldman, at the Pekin cafe, Friday at 12 o'clock. It is vital to your interest to turn out, as it means a substantial saving of many dollars for the coming year, if we can get together."

THE COMMITTEE,

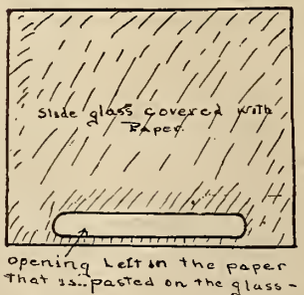
J. W. Watson, Benton Theatre.
L. B. Sonsler, City Centre Theatre.
A. M. Eisner, Circle Theatre.
B. A. Weil, Broadmour Theatre.
G. Goldstein, City Centre Theatre.
A. K. Boussad, World-in-Motion.

Should the proposed reduction be effected, Missouri exhibitors, especially Kansas City theatre owners, will be confronted with a much clearer road to prosperity, as the non-theatrical institution, which only recently was a thorn in the side of Kansas City exhibitors, has dwindled in scope until it now occupies a remote berth with the once troublesome blue laws. Due to co-operation on the part of exchanges and an aggressive campaign staged by the exhibitors, very few churches and schools now are showing pictures in Kansas City, as well as in other surrounding cities.

BRIGHT IDEAS

This Department offers $2 for each practical idea submitted. It may concern any part of the theatre.

Here is an idea that should be of some benefit to the operator. It takes only a few minutes to make. Just get a slide glass and a piece of thick paper and cut an opening in it as in drawing, then paste this paper to the glass and an opening of glass will show; this is where the name of the coming feature is printed. When the slide is complete it is shown at the bottom of the picture while running on the stereopticon of the other machine.



This is only done where you have two machines; and it gives the best result when you flash it on at the bottom of a subtitle. This will surely attract the attention of the audience and will not affect the picture.

Yours truly,
GEO. TUCKER.

Questions and Answers

Pertaining to Projection and Electricity

(Q) What care should the projection machine motor have?

(A) The motor must be kept clean. If the commutator becomes very rough, smooth same down with No. .00 sandpaper moistened with a little machine oil.

(Q) How should new brushes be installed on motors and generators?

(A) When you fit new brushes always sandpaper them down to fit the commutator perfectly by passing to and fro beneath the brushes a strip of sandpaper, having a rough side of the sandpaper toward the brushes.

(Q) When should new brushes be installed on the motors and generators?

(A) Renew the brushes before they become too short, as should the brush holders come in contact with the commutator great damage may be done.

(Q) What causes sparking of the brushes on the commutator?

(A) Sparking at the commutator may be laid to several causes, among them being some of the following: uneven brushes, dirt, high mica, a broken segment in the commutator.

(Q) How is the Simplex intermittent movement adjusted?

(A) Adjustment of the star and cam is made by means of an eccentric bushing and by the use of fork wrench without removing same from the mechanism. Be sure that the star and cam have a little play, not too much, but a little is necessary.

(Q) What kind of a movement does the Simplex have?

(A) The Simplex embodies the "star and cam" movement. The Baird and Motiograph also use this kind of a movement.

(Q) Where are plug fuses used?

(A) Plug fuses are used for protecting the house wiring and circuits carrying very small amperage.

(Q) Where are link fuses used?

(A) Link fuses is the fuse always used in the projection booth, being of the open type it cannot be readily boosted without being seen.

(Q) What is a fuse?

(A) A fuse is a safety device used on your line to protect the circuit.

(Q) Will hard carbons form a good crater?

(A) Carbons that are too hard will not form a proper crater. The arc will keep sputtering and the light will travel around the carbon, thereby losing a large percentage of your light. On the other hand if your carbons are too soft while the crater will easily form, the arc will need continual attention. It will be readily seen that a carbon should not be too soft or too hard, and above all things should be uniform right through. Try several makes out until you secure the best suited for your current.

(Q) What is a step-up transformer?

(A) This form of transformer is used to transform a low voltage current into a high voltage current.

(Q) What is a step-down transformer?

(A) When current is supplied to consumers for lighting purposes, and for the operation of motors, etc., considerations of safety as well as those of suitability, require the delivery of the current at comparatively low pressures ranging from 110 to 220 volts for lamps, and from 100 to 600 volts for electric motors. The transformers used for the electric motion picture arcs is called a step-down transformer.

(Q) What name is given to coil through which current source flows?

(A) This is called the primary winding.

(Q) What is the name given to the coil in which the current is induced?

(A) This is called the secondary winding.

(Q) What is the character of the construction of a three phase transformer?

(A) Three phase transformer is practically similar to that of a single phase, except that it is somewhat of heavier parts and larger core construction.

(Q) If machine motor should stop suddenly, what would be the cause?

(A) A fuse may have burned out somewhere along the line. Use a testing lamp for finding burned out fuses.

Music for the Photoplay

Conducted by NORMAN STUCKEY

Concerning Organ Parts

By Robert Berenttsen

Vice-President Society of Theatre Organists

(Concluded from Last Week)

The publishers claim, also, that not only are all motion-picture organists able to arrange their numbers from the piano conductor's part but also do so in preference to buying organ transcriptions. This statement, if correct, leads us to the conclusion that if the piano conductor's part is sufficient, there is no need of a solo organ part, and as most motion-picture organists will duplicate the library of the orchestra leader in the various theatres where they play, they will become accustomed to dealing with the orchestral department rather than the organ department of any publishing house.

Three Possible Solutions

A thorough discussion of the problem among the members of the society suggested three possible solutions, all of which have been presented by our personal representative to the publishers.

First—An improved two-line harmonium part, completely cued with no measures tacit, to be used both for harmonium and pipe organ playing in conjunction with the orchestra.

Second—A three-line organ solo part, with all orchestral instruments cued, to be sold both for organ recital purposes and together with the orchestrations—this part being a combination of the present piano conductor's part and the well-known solo organ part as used in all organ literature, names of orchestral instruments, however, replacing the more or less useless present method of indicating definite organ stops.

Third—Elimination of the present harmonium part and substitution of a piano conductor's part, with a possible slight reduction in the price of the second piano conductor's part, when purchased with a complete orchestration.

Considering all three arrangements the improved harmonium part is the easiest for the publisher. It may be used both as a harmonium part in the manner the present harmonium part is intended, and also as a motion-picture organ part. It will incur only minor additional expense and no new system of prices will be necessary. The revision of price lists and catalogues is a real item of expense to the publisher that the organist seldom considers. Those publishers who find that the harmonium part cannot be eliminated, who, however, recognize the need of an improved organ part for motion-picture work, but can see no financial return upon an additional organ part, will find this arrangement the immediate, though not the final, solution.

The motion-picture organist's criticism of this arrangement lies in the fact that the present piano conductor's part will be far superior to any two-line harmonium part written, and he will endeavor to secure the first in preference to the latter, whenever circumstances will permit.

The solo organ part is intended for those houses that maintain a circulation for concert organ numbers. All orchestral and organ compositions can be duplicated in this way without the added expense of an organ transcription. The solo organ part should cost no more than the piano conductor's part, both are written on three lines, only the arrangement is different, and in circulation the one part would serve two entirely separate fields of organ playing. According to present indications the solo organ part will be the most artistic, most satisfactory and possibly the final arrangement.

The substitution of a piano conductor's part is already taking place and is usually satisfactory, as any organist worthy of a picture position will be able to arrange his performances from piano parts. The organist feels, however, that the expense saved in paper and work whenever the harmonium part is eliminated should be made to benefit the organist by offering the second piano conductor's part when sold together with an orchestration at a definite reduction.

The organist, however, must be fair—the price of the present piano conductor's part, considering its size, number of pages and the great amount of printing, is often the cheapest single instrumental part in the orchestration.

In closing—to the publisher—the picture business is to-day one of the largest in America. A large percentage of the theatres already have organs adequate to be used as concert instruments, and new organs are constantly being installed, creating a new, rapidly increasing field of organ playing, calling definitely for a new organ part.

To the organist—anything worth while is worth while asking for. Make known to the publishers what you want in unmistakable terms, and he as a sensible business man will publish any part upon which he may be assured a sale.

Music Notes of Interest

A $40,000 Wurlitzer Hope Jones orchestral organ will be installed in the Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo, one of the finest neighborhood houses in the city.

Theodore Hahn, Jr., as director of the orchestra at the Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, offers interesting musical programs to the patrons of this house.

M. Shea is installing one of the largest Wurlitzer organs ever built in Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. The organ and organist will be featured as one of the big attractions of this popular house.

Edward J. Fitzpatrick has been engaged to head the reorganized orchestra at the Strand Theatre, San Francisco. Mr. Fitzpatrick was formerly concert master for Herman Heller.

The Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, features a new Wurlitzer orchestral organ with more than 2,000 pipes. The organ is said to be one of the largest in the country.

A feature at the Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., was the prologue from "Pagliacci," sung by Carle Burch, a local baritone, accompanied by an Ampico reproducing piano.

A New Outlet for the Old Music Masters

The compelling, ennobling effect of classical music is widening its circle. The inspired music masters of old no longer must be confined to the grand opera and concert stage.

Development of the Cremona Orchestra-Organ for the homes of silent drama has brought pipe-organ and orchestra reproductions hitherto unknown. It has enabled exhibitors to furnish the "atmosphere" so essential to putting the picture across big. It has brought refinement and dividend-producing attraction to houses all over the country. There is assurance to every patron of pipe-organ and orchestra offerings, appropriate, gratifying.

The Cremona brings economy as well as versatility. For it plays with operator or without, plays any standard player roll or solo roll. Instant changes are possible. Cue sheets can be precisely followed without effort.

Best of all, there is a Cremona of type and size to best meet the requirements of every house. Write or wire for details.

Famous Aggregation Covers the World for Pathe News

By CURTIS DUNHAM

(Concluded from last week)

"Among the trips that stand out most prominently in my mind was taken during the occupation by United States troops of Vera Cruz, under General Funston. I was in Mexico when President Huerta fled for his life out of Mexico City. I lived with Carranza before he entered Mexico, and was with him when he made his triumphant entry. I recall that there was one day when Mexico had five presidents. I covered the troubles in Ireland during 1920-1921, and you may believe that I had to watch my step every minute. Covering the transatlantic flight from the Azores and Portugal was one instance where I had to travel fast and far for the results achieved—and this reminds me of the fact that I am the first photographer to take a picture from the air. This was on the occasion of the Boston-Harvard meet in September, 1911."

Fasold's talent for adapting himself easily to all sorts of conditions has made him personally known to most of the distinguished visitors to this country in the last ten years. He is the Pathe News Cameraman who accompanied the King of the Belgians on his tour of this country, was with the Prince of Wales in Canada, photographed the arrival of Marshal Joffre and other European celebrities in the great war. He has filmed the ceremonies of all the presidential inaugurations since that of Taft. The burial of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington on Armistice Day was an assignment which he covered brilliantly.

J. T. Baltzell and General Pershing

As for the indomitable L. C. Hutt, who has been scheduled for something rather neat in this symposium, procrastination cannot save him. He is one of the Unknown Heroes whose efforts to remain in obscurity are hereby foiled. It is regrettable that his "map" does not appear among the portraits accompanying this story. So far his modesty prevails, as the writer has not the gift of portraiture from memory.

Hutt is one of Editor Cohen's camera staff who makes an idol of the movie-loving public. He is always getting his mental picture-eye on thrills bigger than Nature and events provide. It was Hutt who, a few months ago, enabled the Pathe News screen to startle people with a panorama air-view of the city of San Francisco as a background for closeups of daring airplane "stunts"—which means that Hutt was right there grinding his camera on another plane. While grinding with his right hand he had to signal his pilot directions with his left. Early in this display of ambidexterity the whizzing propeller sliced off three of Hutt's fingers. Afterward, when he had finished the stunt to his satisfaction and some officious person or persons had carried him to a hospital, Hutt is said to have expressed some annoyance. If L. C. Hutt is in the audience, will he kindly step up on the platform?

Harry D. Harde is another member of the Pathe News camera staff who becomes interesting when prodded into writing about himself and his job. He has served continuously with the organization since 1910.

"I soon discovered," he writes, "that in the life of a news cameraman thrills and dangers are never lacking. Every day of his life he has to be 'Johnny on the job,' rain or shine. I've been up against it many a time, fighting my way through 'cops' and fire lines and the red tape of officials to get a good picture. One of my hardest tasks—one in which it was necessary to risk my life—was when the oil tanks at Hoboken exploded and the army piers burned. It was a man's-size job to get on the scene at all, with flames and explosions on all sides. Having lost my camera crank, I was compelled to use a piece of wire with which to 'grind'—but came out with a whole skin, somewhat scorched, and a fine picture after all.

"The most difficult story I ever covered was of President-Elect Harding. Much to my relief of mind, Emanuel Cohen, Editor of Pathe News, went to Florida with me—it was just after the election. Having decided on a double exposure, we proceeded to 'set the stage' in a hotel room next to that occupied by the President-Elect, and fitted it up with arc lights, spots, velvet and other studio fixtures. Then we rehearsed with the camera and the positions of the doubles, so as not to detain our distinguished subject beyond the limit of time he would give us. The thing to do next was to get Mr. Harding's consent to pose for us. Mr. Cohen stopped my worry on that account by arranging for a few minutes through Secretary Christian.

"I thought of a dozen things that might happen. The camera might 'buckle' and throw the picture out of focus, or the film might be scratched, or the light too bright or too dim, etc., etc. As a matter of fact, one of the arc lights did get too hot and burned our 'fireplace' so badly that it had to be replaced.

"When Mr. Harding reached our room I was ready with the camera and the lights, and 'shot' the scenes in schedule time—but it was the hardest job I've ever tackled. Less than an hour later Mr. Cohen and I were on our way back to New York with the film.

"Three other cameramen and myself went to the Churchill Downs race track to get the story of the Kentucky Derby, which we covered from all angles. I was working the Akeley ultra-speed camera, and was the only one to get 'shots' from the Clubhouse, from which all other cameramen had been barred. This enabled me to obtain scenes of the horse, Morvich, from the beginning of the race to the end."

The news camera work of John Thomas Baltzell has filled Pathe News 'fans' with many different kinds of thrills. Considering that he was not born until 1896, his record is impressive. Beginning his camera news work for Pathe in 1918, his duties saw him in the thick of all the important post-war events, conferences and ceremonies. Baltzell is an accomplished optician, electrician, chemist and engineer. He is the author of the highly practical and reliable volume called, "How to be a Newsfilm Cameraman." Pathe News patrons are now able to identify him with the thrilling films on the following subjects.

First Air Mail Service—1919; upside-down Washington from an airplane; May Day bomb explosion; Dempsey-Carpentier fight; Air-bombing of battleships Alabama and Indiana; West Virginia mine war; Leap for life from an airplane; Roma dirigible disaster; Washington race riots; only scenes ever taken of a President of the U. S. addressing Congress.

Baltzell's use of the airplane in his camera news work did much to popularize the air route for the speedy delivery of negatives at their destination, or in placing them aboard the nearest fast train or steamship. In this way Pathe has secured many notable "beats" on important events pictured for the screen.

Another Pathe News cameraman who is also an airplane expert is C. C. Pritchard, staff cameraman for the Chicago territory. Pritchard learned to fly in 1912. "For four years," he writes, "I flew for exhibitions in the summer seasons, and back to the movie box in winter. In July, 1915, I breathed a mouthful of exhaust gas while 200 feet in the air and dived head-on into the ground. Spent three months in the hospital with my left leg broken in six pieces. When the U. S. went into the war I tried to get into the aviation service as a pilot instructor, but was turned down on account of my left leg being two inches shorter than its mate. I am pleased to state that Editor Cohen has never appeared to think that a short left leg interfered with my flying after news pictures."

"The number of times I have flown for 'stunt' pictures I can't remember," writes John A. Bartone, of the Pathe News camera staff since 1918. "As for climbing for what I'm after, that's my middle name. I have 'shot' from the most dangerous positions on the tallest buildings in this country and elsewhere, and climbed the tallest of towers for elevation shots.

"A newspaper reporter can go out and cover a story and return to his office and write his 'copy' and all is over. But a camera newsman has to figure how to get good 'picture-stories' from every imaginable angle—and that means performing a great variety of athletic stunts on solid ground and in the air. To sum up the whole thing, a cameraman's life is just one risk after another."

Henry de Siena, unknown hero of many a thrilling Pathe News "beat," obliges with the following: "It was at the time of the Black Tom explosion in 1918 that I got my opportunity to go out with a camera 'on my own.' I was projector for Editor Cohen, but I was pretty certain of my ability to 'shoot' news pictures as well as project them, and was eager for an opportunity. It came. One day Mr. Cohen came running into the projection room saying: 'Henry, take a camera and do your best. I have not heard from my other men.' I went—in a hurry.

"It was a hard story and a dangerous one—in the midst of cases of dynamite liable to explode any minute, as others had. But I 'brought home the bacon,' and when Mr. Cohen had looked over my stuff he declared me a full-fledged cameraman, and I have been on the job ever since."

Jake Coolidge, of Waltham, Mass., has photographed news events and travel scenes in all four quarters of the globe. He might be called dean of the film news reporters guild. He is too modest to have any of the details printed.

Charles T. Chapman, now stationed at Chicago, has been a member of the Pathe News staff since 1919. J. R. Johnson, now at Los Angeles, served Pathe News from Chicago two years and from Washington, D. C., one year. In other years he has done distinguished work for the news screen both here and abroad. Will E. Hudson, with headquarters now at Seattle, has been with Pathe News since 1918. Before that he was cameraman to the Harvard Museum Kamchatka Expedition, which ended in partial disaster. With three companions he "mushed" across Alaska from the Arctic Ocean to the "outside," making a distance of 1350 miles—one of the greatest undertakings in the photographic history of the Far North.

Some day, perhaps, when they're not too busy "shooting big stuff" for the News "fans," a small army of these Unknown Heroes of the News camera scattered about Europe, Asia and Africa, will come forward with some details about themselves. And that—as Kipling remarks—will make "another story."

WITH THE MEN BEHIND

A Series of Close-ups of Prominent Studio Cameramen

Charles Von Enger and Lyman Broening, left, filming Bessie Waters in "Kindred of the Dust," released by First National, while Miriam Cooper the star, directs

Hahn in Charge

John G. Hahn has been named assistant general manager of the Rothacker Film Company. His appointment was made by the board of directors. He will be at the helm in Chicago while Watterson R. Rothacker is in Europe this summer. Mr. Hahn was Mr. Rothacker's private secretary fourteen years ago when the latter was western manager of "The Billboard." He was with Universal on the Coast for two years before joining the Rothacker forces in Chicago in 1916.

Cowling Shooting in Northwest

Hereford Tynes Cowling and his $2,700 Akeley camera are in Seattle and vicinity shooting scenery of Mount Rainier, Snoqualmie Falls, the Olympic Peninsula, and other Northwest scenic grandeurs. Mr. Cowling has worked behind a moving picture camera since 1910 and has been with Burton Holmes since 1917. He has visited practically every foreign country taking educational and scenic pictures, and is anticipating one of his biggest thrills in his forthcoming trip in the wilds of Africa, over the trail used by Theodore Roosevelt. He leaves America August 27 and will be in Africa seven months, following which he expects to spend a year in India and other Asiatic countries. In all his travels, he has never met with any accident even so great as a scratch on the thumb.

The Voice of the Box Office

How the Latest Releases Are Being Received Throughout the Country

ALBANY

CLINTON SQUARE

"LOVE'S MASQUERADE," Conway Tearle (Select); "THE FORBIDDEN CITY," Norma Talmadge and Thomas Meighan (Select). Double Features. The two ran the entire week. Did well from box office standpoint, despite car shop strike. Remainder of program made up of comedy and news weekly.

MARK STRAND

"ONE CLEAR CALL," All Star (First National). Ran three days. Did not measure up, however, to expectations, probably due to strike and hot weather.

"THE MAN UNCONQUERABLE," Jack Holt (Paramount). This picture proved better than the one the first three days, Holt being favorite in city. No extra exploitation. Remainder of program Topical Review; "Away, Dull Care," and comedy, "Pure and Simple."

ATLANTA, GA.

HOWARD

"ACROSS THE CONTINENT," Wallace Reid (Paramount). One of the most popular pictures ever played here. Business excellent.

Presentation.—Overture selections from "The Chocolate Soldier." Prologue, "The Carnival of Venice" and "Lights and Shadows."

Short Subjects.—Howard News and Views, Pathe and Selznick News Weekly.

METROPOLITAN

"SISTERS," Seena Owen (American Releasing). Received endorsement of Better Films Committee. From a good opening on Monday, business built up steadily all week and was unusually good. The endorsement of the Better Films Committee which was printed in the Atlanta papers doubtless brought many to the theatre.

Short Subjects. — "The Rag Doll" (Campbell comedy), Kinograms.

CRITERION

FIRST HALF

"MAN'S LAW AND GOD'S," Jack Livingston (American). Played to consistently good business.

SECOND HALF

"TURN TO THE RIGHT," special (Metro). Second run. Business was very good.

Short Subject. — "O Promise Me" (A Neal Burns comedy). Although second run, proved so successful was kept all week.

GRAND

"THE SONG OF THE SOUL," Vivian Martin (Goldwyn)—First half. Did not please its audience and was replaced by the "Blonde Vampire," which was rather entertaining.

"WESTERN SPEED," Charles Jones (Fox). Very popular star, business good.

Short Subjects. — "Should Watchman Sleep?" (Star Comedy). Fox News. "The Messenger" (Vitagraph Comedy). "How to Grow Thin" (Educational). "Speed 'Em Up" (Century Comedy). News, Mutt and Jeff and a Goldwyn Sport Review.

RIALTO

"WILD HONEY," Priscilla Dean (Universal). A trifle too dramatic but held its own to satisfactory business.

Short Subjects.—"International News," "Treasure Hunters" (Grantland Rice Sport Pictorial).

TUDOR

"THE LEECH," Claire Whitney (State Rights). Monday and Tuesday. Favorably received.

"IN SOCIETY," Edith Roberts (State Rights). Wednesday and Thursday. Did good business despite the hot weather.

"THE REDHEAD," Alice Brady (Kempson). Friday and Saturday. A re-issue which proved very successful.

Short Subjects. — International News, Star Comedy and "Spooners," a Vanity comedy.

STRAND

"THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET," special cast (American Releasing). Not suited to Strand and was replaced after the second day by "Rangeland," Neal Hart. Business picked up and continued good during the entire week.

Short Subjects.—"Holy Smoke" (Mermaid Comedy), and the fourth of "The Leather Pushers."

ALLENTOWN, PA.

COLONIAL

"MY BOY," Jackie Coogan (First National). "Great," said fans and picture stayed on screen for whole week's run instead of mid-week split as usual. Star enjoys justly earned popularity. Picture rated as being better than some of previous Coogan offerings and was classed as the best he has produced yet.

Exploitation. — Lettered printing, such as a boy might turn out, together with pictures showing star and some scenes from production. These details were splashed over lobby, in newspapers and on billboards. Made good run and was unqualified success.

RIALTO

"FIND THE WOMAN," Alma Rubens (Paramount). Popular prices feature in successful showing. Well developed and worth seeing. Most of the exploitation was done in the newspapers, where some clever space writing aroused interest in the mystery which the film unfolds to the audience.

STRAND

FIRST HALF

"THE VERMILLION PENCIL," Sessue Hayakawa (F. B. O.). Pulled well and was considered about as good an attraction as one could wish for the length of showing.

SECOND HALF

"TOO MUCH WIFE," Wanda Hawley (Paramount). Fair success with not much known about picture. Feature appreciated as a good entertainment.

BETHLEHEM, PA.

LORENZ

FIRST HALF

"CHIVALROUS CHARLEY," Eugene O'Brien (Selznick). Hot weather cut down attendance to some extent, but picture made an average record. Good interest developed in star who has big following here.

SECOND HALF

"THE WALL FLOWER," Colleen Moore (Goldwyn). Fair sized audiences and average results reported.

LEHIGH ORPHEUM

"REPORTED MISSING," Owen Moore (Selznick). Picture a real knockout. Audiences usually cold-blooded, but they managed to thaw that look off their faces and were able to laugh heartily and often. Picture was one of the best shown here in many months and is safe booking for any exhibitor who is out to make his summer showings a success. Ran for full period of booking with attendance excellent, despite warm weather.

PALACE

FIRST HALF

"GOOD REFERENCES," Constance Talmadge (First National). Fairly satisfactory attendance, with interest kept up by the star's name. Pleased all who saw it.

SECOND HALF

"LOVE'S MASQUERADE," Conway Tearle (Selznick). Audiences about normal, possibly a little below that standard. Star well known and liked and his name was one of the drawing cards that brought out patrons.

PARK

"DISCONTENTED WIVES" (Associated). Well received by full houses throughout the week.

"THE POWER WITHIN," All Star (Associated). A powerful drawing card, and was better liked than the other. Business picked up on both of these and it was a mighty good show.

Exploitation.—No newspaper advertising. Window cards, three sheets in lobby and framed stills. Posters in all elevated and subway stations.

Short Subjects. — Educational Comedy, Movie Chats and International News Reel.

MODERN

"WHEN ROMANCE RIDES," Claire Adams (Goldwyn). A great knockout.

Illustrated Screen Reports

FOR THE EXHIBITORS BOX-OFFICE

EDITED BY GEORGE T. PARDY

The Real Adventure

Associated Exhibitors Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Henry Kitchell Webster. Scenario by Mildred Considine. Director, King Vidor. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Rose Stanton, Florence Vidor; Rodney Aldrich, Clyde Fillmore; John Walbraith; Portia, Liyan McCarthy; Mrs. Stanton, Nellie P. Saunders.

After her marriage to Lawyer Rodney Aldrich, Rose Stanton finds that although kind to her he entirely underestimates her intellect. Anxious to help him in his business she makes a study of legal problems, but her offer of aid is scorned. She determines to show him that she is entitled to consideration otherwise than as a mere domestic mate, and leaves for New York resolved never to rejoin him until she has proved her independence. She obtains a position as chorus girl in a musical comedy, where shortly her ability to design costumes brings her under the approving eye of the management. She makes a distinct hit as a Broadway designer. Made love to by another man she is brought to face the truth that the interest of the opposite sex in what a woman can accomplish is outweighed by the genuine feminine lure. She is about to accept a contract as designer at a big salary when her husband appears. He having realized that he made a mistake in treating Rose as a mere pleasing companion, has come to beg her to forgive and come home to him. Husband and wife are reunited.

There is a good deal of straight human interest in this picture, which accomplishes the difficult film feat of pointing a domestic moral and furnishing very pleasing entertainment into the bargain. The question as to whether many unhappy marriages are not due to the inability of husbands to perceive that brainy wives will not be content to occupy the position of a mere household companion has been asked and answered in the affirmative on the screen frequently, but seldom handled with such clearness of vision and freedom from unnecessary sentimental padding as in the present instance. Director King Vidor and his talented cast of players deserve congratulation on the vivid presentation of a story likely to appeal to all classes of patrons. It is an attraction worthy the consideration of all exhibitors.

Points of Appeal.—The heroine wins and holds the audience's sympathy from the beginning of things. Her adventures in the big city are interesting because they seem perfectly natural and likely to happen to a young woman starting out in life's business battle on her own account. Also, the introduction of incidents back-stage lend a colorful atmosphere to the plot and feminine patrons will no doubt find additional stimulus in the lavish exhibition of numerous gorgeous gowns evolved by the lady costumer. A happy climax gives universal satisfaction.

Cast.—The work of Florence Vidor in the leading role of Rose Stanton is sincere, appealing and entirely free from the curse of overacting. Clyde Fillmore is excellent as the husband whose narrow views as to the limitations of his wife's mentality are finally broadened by her courageous experiment in the outer world, and well balanced support is supplied by other members of the company.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—Both exteriors and interiors are remarkably well filmed, the shots behind the scenes being particularly attractive and the lighting is adequate. The continuity is unbroken and the action fast.

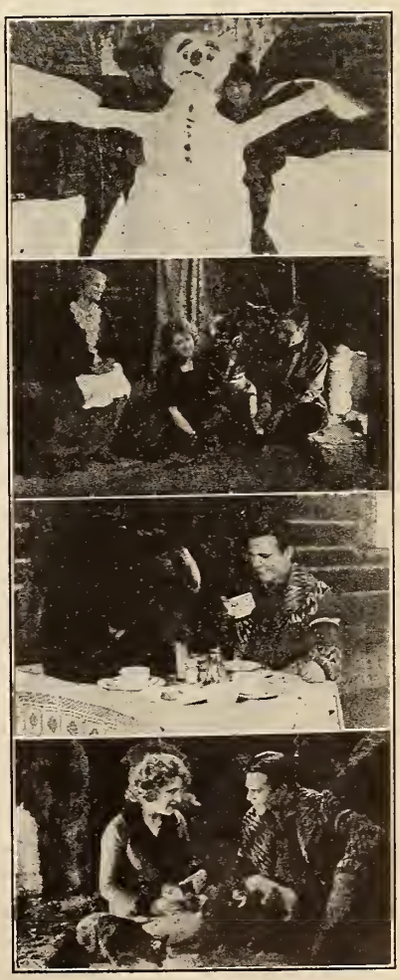
My Dad

Distributed by Film Booking Offices of America. Six Reels. Author, Walter Richard Hall. Scenario by E. Richard Scheyer. Director, Cliff Smith. Cameraman, John H. Thompson. Running Time, Fifty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Tom O'Day, Johnnie Walker; Barry O'Day, Wilbur Highy; Mrs. O'Day, Mary Redmond; Dawn, Ruth Clifford; La Due, Les Bates.

Tom O'Day lived with his father and mother at a trading post in the Canadian Northwest. His father is under the domination of the Factor of the post, a crafty individual who has the father in his power because of a murder the latter is alleged to have committed. Tom is in love with Dawn, stepdaughter of the Factor, and his ardent love-making is interrupted because of the Factor, who covets Dawn and is jealous of Tom. Finally the Factor threatens to expose the father unless he makes Tom cease his attentions to Dawn. But Tom has his suspicions of the Factor and after a successful journey through the big snows gets information which proves that the latter and not Tom's father is guilty of the murder. Thus after a fight with the Factor and his henchmen Tom is free to continue his love-making to Dawn.



To the sweltering town dweller, whose disposition during July days is naturally to be grateful for any little suggestion of coolness, My Dad will bring some welcome scenes of the land of the big snows and therefore has some timely attractions. The locale is probably the only element in this six-reel production that makes a decisive bid for notice. The plot of this love romance is slow-moving and without novelty in treatment of its time-worn situations. The author displayed his hero held firmly in the proverbial struggle between love and duty, but the struggle fails to attain heroic proportions until the climax in which he goes into a hand, fist and foot fight with the man who holds the secret of the mysterious murder of which the hero's father is supposed guilty. The fight is a good, spirited affair and introduces a most effective flash in which a faithful canine of the husky type comes bounding through a window of the cabin and fastens itself at the throat of one of its master's assailants. This scene, lasting but a moment, seems to be the most effective and thrilling of its kind so far revealed on the screen, and it has many predecessors.

Points of Appeal.—The locale, to repeat, is the main attraction. There are some good outdoor effects, with fairly impressive vistas of snow-laden hills and trees. The story proper offers nothing that will give it the power of lasting appeal and can be entered into only by those who give lavishly of their sympathy and interest for romantic characters.

Cast.—Johnny Walker does his best to make Tom O'Day a good-looking, manly chap. Nevertheless Tom, like the other characters of the play, never takes on the semblance of life and reality. Ruth Clifford brings some physical charm to the role of Dawn.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The picture has an adequate production and photography that is entirely satisfactory. The director, among other commendable things, made good use of animals for the "human interest" touches so everlastingly popular. The animal actors include a skunk, a fox, a great, amusing bear and, star of all, a dog.

Excellent work in this picture, with close interest and excitement from first to last. Comments of the audience most wonderful heard in long time.

"THE UNDERSTUDY," Doris May (F. B. O.). A very, very good picture, as good as any since the release of "Twenty-four Hours' Leave." Business here was better than ordinary with these subjects. No mistake on these.

Exploitation.—Regular newspaper ads, with specials on Sunday. Subway and elevated posters. Window cards. Framed stills in lobby advance week and during run. Automatic still projector same. House has regular patronage, exclusive.

BEACON

"WHEN ROMANCE RIDES," Claire Adams (Goldwyn). This was the big picture here and took even better than the Modern. The theatre, from its location, has more variety in its patronage.

"THE UNDERSTUDY," Doris May (F. B. O.). Was also a good audience picture here. Not as much appeal as at the Modern, however.

Exploitation. — Same as the Modern, with a fine lobby set up for the picture. Judge's stand around box office. Race starts chalked up on blackboards and results with favorites thrown on screen. Went big.

CRITERION

FIRST HALF

"TWO KINDS OF WOMEN," Pauline Frederick (F. B. O.). Very strong audience picture. Went big all three days.

"GLEAM O' DAWN," John Gilbert (Fox). Very good. Took well.

Exploitation. — Window cards, subway and elevated posters and usual advance display in lobby.

Short Subjects.—Harold Lloyd reissue, "Velvet Fingers," serial. News reel.

SECOND HALF

"CAPPY RICKS," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). Went very well to good houses.

"DON'T WRITE LETTERS," Gareth Hughes (Metro). This was the hit at this house.

Short Subjects.—Rolin Comedy (Pathe). "Yellow Arms," serial.

SHAWMUT

FIRST HALF

"SHAMS OF SOCIETY," All Star (F. B. O.). Good average picture. Good houses, picking up on previous weeks.

"THE ANGEL OF CROOKED STREET," Alice Calhoun (Vitagraph). A very good picture for neighborhood house. Bill above average.

Exploitation.—Several frames of stills in lobby during run and advance week. Window cards, 1 sheets, elevated and subway posters.

Short Subjects.—"Torchy and Orange Blossoms," Educational Comedy. "Go Get 'Em, Hutch," serial. Topics of the Day.

SECOND HALF

"YELLOW MEN AND GOLD," All Star (Goldwyn). A great picture that went over with a bang.

"THE SLEEP WALKER," Constance Binney (Paramount). Great and she is a favorite. The best program in a long time.

Short Subjects.—"It Was Ever Thus," Educational Comedy, fable, "Avenging Arrow," serial.

BUFFALO

SHEA'S HIPPODROME

"TURN TO THE RIGHT," Alice Terry (Metro). A street car strike and the Fourth of July were contributing factors in cutting into business. The picture was well received by those who did see it.

Exploitation. — The Hippodrome has somewhat curtailed its newspaper space for the summer. A fine display in incandescent bulbs atop the marque, billboards, window cards, etc., completed the publicity campaign.

Short Subject.—"Any Old Port," a Christie comedy, Hippodrome Review, Topics of the Day and Pathe hand-colored scenic.

LOEW'S STATE

"THE CRADLE," Ethel Clayton (Paramount). Considering the street car strike and the holiday, business was very satisfactory.

Exploitation. — Newspaper advertising continues to occupy large space in the Saturday and Sunday papers. Window cards, electric display, lobby frames attractively set and billboards.

Short Subject.—"The Nick of Time Hen," a comedy; "Mutt and Jeff" cartoon and Pathe News.

LAFAYETTE SQUARE

"LOVE'S MASQUERADE," Conway Tearle (Select). House seems to hold up in spite of everything, street car strike, Fourth of July, etc. Business continues excellent. The Tearle picture was enjoyed by the large audiences.

Exploitation.—Large advertising space in newspapers, electric display on front of house, billboards, window cards, lobby display.

Short Subjects.—Christie Comedy, Fox News and Courier Camera, showing local events.

MARK-STRAND

"THE MEN OF ZANZIBAR," William Russell (Fox). Box office receipts held up to the average on this attraction, which is full of action. A good summer feature.

Exploitation. — Newspaper ads, lobby display and window cards.

Short Subjects.—Charlie Chaplin in a revival of "A Dog's Life," "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain," Kinograms.

SHEA'S NORTH PARK

"TURN TO THE RIGHT," Alice Terry (Metro). This first run neighborhood house benefited by the trolley strike. Folks visited this theatre instead of going downtown. Business was good. Unusually large auto trade.

Exploitation. — Newspapers, window cards in neighborhood, lobby attractively decorated.

Short Subjects. — Christie's "Any Old Port," Pathe News, scenic.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

BROADWAY

"GAS, OIL AND WATER," Charles Ray (First National). Three-day run to big business.

IMPERIAL

"THE WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). Three days to fine business.

RANDOLPH

"THE LAST TRAIL," Eva Novak (Fox). An adventure story elaborately screened and capably acted. The favorable weather conditions helped greatly in holding up the attendance records.

ROOSEVELT

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM," Lillian and Dorothy Gish (United Artists). First showing at popular prices of this newest Griffith production brought capacity audiences to every performance all week. Holding it over for a second week.

CHICAGO

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). Delightful entertainment and sure to please every one. Excellent attendance at every performance.

STATE-LAKE

"THE DEUCE OF SPADES," Charles Ray (First National). Ray's popularity helped put the picture over. Business was good all week.

CLEVELAND

STATE

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). Star is a favorite here and can be counted upon to draw good audiences. The feature was an exceptional treat and was well advertised via word of mouth.

Exploitation. — Pictures of this type need very little "ballyhooing"; they attract by the star-author combination.

Short Subjects.—Prizma, Cape of Good Hope and Pathe news.

ALLEN

"BALI, THE UNKNOWN" (Prizma) and "THE GRIM COMEDIAN," Jack Holt (Goldwyn). Management struck "gold" with the offering of "Bali, the Unknown." "Bali" received more and better comment than "The Grim Comedian," which film in itself was a worth-while attraction.

Exploitation. — Newspapers advertisements, with space equally divided between the two attractions.

STILLMAN

"THE WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). Good business. The picture created favorable comment.

Exploitation.—The title of the picture, the star and her support were published by way of advance newspaper copy of an interest arresting nature. Street car cards were used to good advantage.

PARK AND MALL

"NORTH OF THE RIO GRANDE," Jack Holt (Paramount). Fair business. Not much advance publicity or exploitation of this attraction.

Short Subjects.—Chester Conklin in "Safe in the Safe," Topics of the Day and News Weekly.

Always the Woman

Goldwyn Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Perley Poore Sheehan. Director, Richard Rosson. Cameraman, Ernest G. Palmer. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Celia Thaxter, Betty Compson; Boone, Emory Johnson; Mrs. Boone, Doris Pawn; Reginald Stanhope, Gerald Pring; Mahmud, Richard Rosson; Vaudeville Manager, Arthur Delmore; Kelim Pasha, Macey Harlan.

In ancient Egypt a young queen, Neco-Tokris, sacrificed her life and throne for the love of a handsome priest. In modern times an Egyptian mystic, Mahmud, astounds passengers on a steamer sailing for the Orient by declaring that Celia Thaxter, show girl and ship's dancer, is the reincarnation of the dead queen, and that a treasure awaits her in a secret desert tomb. Kelim Pasha, wealthy Egyptian statesman, is aboard and plots to win both girl and treasure. His lackey, Reginald Stanhope, makes love to Celia and gains her trust, but Celia becomes interested in Boone, an American suffering from shell shock. The latter's wife is infatuated with Kelim. An expedition is arranged, and in the desert Kelim's intentions toward Celia are made manifest. She is saved by Boone, but again threatened by Kelim. Mahmud intervenes and promises to reveal the location of the tomb. Arriving in the tomb Mahmud calls down the wrath of the ancient gods upon Kelim, whose sin of betraying the queen has followed him through the centuries. Kelim stumbles into a deep pit, and Mrs. Boone, attempting to rescue him, is dragged to death. Boone and Celia, lovers of an earlier age, are united again.

Skilfully directed and handsomely photographed, Always the Woman registers as an unusually brilliant example of fine screen technique. It is a most pretentious production, apparently filmed with scant regard to expense, and exploits a story of peculiar interest to those for whom the theory of reincarnation holds fascination. There is a possibility that this idea of human passions transferred throughout the ages and maintaining sway in revived personalities may prove a bit weird and too difficult to analyze for many folks of a strictly practical turn of mind. But even these latter will no doubt find pleasing entertainment in witnessing the adventures of the expedition in search of buried treasure, an old but never-failing lure of the silent drama, with its accompanying thrills of desert dangers and the triumph of true love at the close. It is the sort of picture whose gain or wane in popularity must depend largely upon the character of the audience it faces.

Points of Appeal.—The mystic atmosphere is strongly developed but never to such an excess as to interfere with the more modern tone of the narrative. There are plenty of well accentuated melodramatic "punches" and emotional phases which take a powerful hold on the imagination and a crashing climax is achieved.

Cast.—That versatile actress Betty Compson adds fresh lustre to her laurels by her excellent work in the role of heroine Celia Thaxter. In the dancing interlude her physical charms are exploited to the best advantage and she is fully equal to the many demands made upon her emotional ability in the threatening situations which arise after the exploring party enters the vast wastes of the desert. Emory Johnson fills the lover role acceptably, Richard Rosson make an eerie impression as the mystical Mahmud, Macey Harlam scores a decisive hit in the part of the reincarnated villain Kelim Pasha, and the native types are realistically convincing.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—Oriental color of the richest description predominates. There are some rarely beautiful marine bits, the night effects being particularly fine. The desert views abound in marvelous long shots, quaint glimpses of ancient ruins and superb lighting governs the entire film.

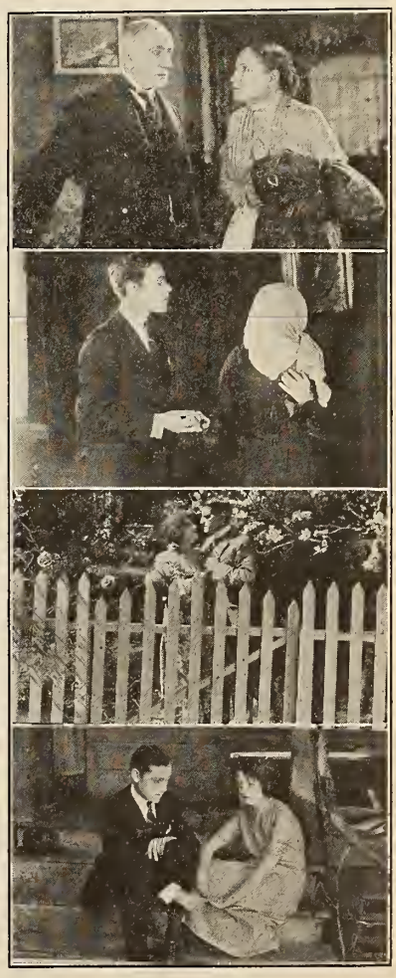
The Veiled Woman

Hodkinson Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Myrtle Reed. Scenario by David Kirkland. Director, Lloyd Ingraham. Running Time, Sixty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Evelina Grey, Marguerite Snow; The Piper, Edward Coxen; The Doctor, Landers Stevens; The Doctor's Son, Ralph McCullough; Araminta Lee, Charlotte Pierce; Aunt Hitty, Lottie Williams.

Evelina Grey, a village beauty, and young Dr. Ralph Dexter are in love. The girl, interested in the scientific experiments of her sweetheart, is present in his laboratory one day when an explosion occurs. Both are badly injured and taken to hospital. The doctor recovers quickly, but is told that Evelina is horribly disfigured. He leaves the village without attempting to see her. When Evelina recovers she wears a veil which entirely conceals her features, and no one is permitted to see her face. Many years pass. Evelina travels abroad with her mother, who finally dies. About the same time she hears that Dr. Ralph Dexter is not living in the village. Alone, Evelina goes back to the old homestead. Aunt Hitty comes to her, bringing her niece, Araminta Lee. From Aunt Hitty Evelina learns that she was misinformed, that Dr. Dexter went away, married and later returned with a baby boy, his wife having died. A wandering piper, Tom Barnaby, comes to the village. He is a kindly soul with a handsome dog, an animal which he saved from vivisection by Dr. Dexter. Barnaby is a general favorite, helps Evelina in her garden, and they become fast friends. Dr. Dexter's son, also a physician, falls in love with Araminta, and they become engaged. His father visits Evelina and begs her to marry him, in atonement for his youthful folly. In response she refuses and lifts the veil, revealing a beautiful face without a mark or scar. He goes home and kills himself. The piper is called away from the village, but tells Evelina he will be back. She tells him they will all be anxiously awaiting him.



Despite its dominant note of pathos and the tragic suicide of one of the main characters just before the finale, The Veiled Woman does not fall into the category of depressing pictures. The plot is powerful, unusual in conception and development, with dramatic moments which strike right home to the mark, there is plenty of human suffering and heart-ache, yet here and there the sun peeps through the clouds, a flash or honest humor lights up the gloom now and then, if one love story ends darkly, another reaches a happy goal and even the wrecked life of the heroine is cheered by the glowing friendship of that kindly character—Piper Tom Barnaby. It is this deft handling of light and shadow that saves the picture from leaving a morbid impression behind and aids in registering it as screen entertainment of the best and highest grade. Players and director have worked in perfect harmony with gratifying results and exhibitors should find this production a valuable treasury aid.

Points of Appeal.—Sympathy goes forth in full and generous measure to the heroine whose lover deserts her when he believes that her beauty is destroyed. And afterwards every movement of the drearily veiled figure suggests an infinite sorrow and unavailing reproach. Wonderfully dramatic is the scene when the lifted veil discloses to the renegade lover the fact of his unforgivable error—for the tranquil, lovely face is unmarred by a single scar. Nor does his suicide cause much of a shock and certainly no regret to the onlooker, rather does one feel that he ought to have made away with himself at an earlier date. Aunt Hitty's comedy stuff is a pleasant relief, the love affair of Araminta Lee and the doctor's son is prettily arranged and the climax, with Piper Tom bidding Evelina a temporary adieu, is delightfully artistic.

Cast.—Marguerite Snow gives a wonderfully appealing performance in the role of Evelina, Lottie Williams proves herself a sterling comedienne as the nosey Aunt Hitty, Landers Stevens scores as the elder Dr. Dexter and the support is faultless.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—There are many fine interiors, some pretty rustic scenes, with skillful long shots, the lighting is adequate, the action moves swiftly and unbroken continuity is maintained.

LESTER'S RIVOLI

"HER MAD BARGAIN," Anita Stewart (First National). Three days to good business.

Short Subjects. — "Bright Eyes," with Ben Turpin, was a really good comedy offering.

IMPERIAL

"REPORTED MISSING," Owen Moore (Select). Three days to big business.

HARTFORD

MAJESTIC

"THE FOURTEENTH LOVER," Viola Dana (Metro), and "DISRAELI," George Arliss (United Artists). Both pictures started off to fair business, but failed to attract the expected trade of the Fourth, due partly to stormy weather. Viola Dana has a large following at Majestic and many favorable comments heard regarding her feature.

Exploitation.—Extra newspaper advertising, unusual lobby display and large window display about city for both pictures.

PRINCESS

"EDEN AND RETURN," Doris May (F. B. O.). Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday. Also "IT CAN BE DONE," Earle Williams (Vitagraph). General slump in business throughout the city felt here, although the double bill did a fair trade. Vitagraph feature seemed to be the general favorite. Extra newspaper advertising and catchy lobby display. Thursday, Friday, Saturday, "SURE FIRE," Hoot Gibson (Universal). Also "RAINBOW," Alice Calhoun (Vitagraph). Former seemed to be the best bet with patronage, which is somewhat of a transient character.

EMPIRE

"TOL'ABLE DAVID," Richard Barthelmess (First National). Also "SQUIRE PHIN," Maclyn Arbuckle (San Antonio Pictures Corp.). Steady rain hurt business first part of week. Gradual comeback, but box office takings not up to par. Balthelmess a great favorite here and critics as well as public generous in their praise of feature. Arbuckle picture a mild hit. Usual newspaper advertising.

NEWMAN

"THE WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). Hot weather had no effect whatever on this one. A good week's business.

Short Subjects.—"Cold Feet," Christie Comedy and Newman News and Views, current events.

Exploitation.—The fact that George Melford, who produced "The Sheik" and other pictures which have gone over strong here, produced this picture was played up in copy of newspaper space. Names of cast given prominent space in lobby display and billboard advertising.

LIBERTY

"THE CUP OF LIFE," Hobart Bosworth (First National). Played to well filled houses for a week's run.

Short Subjects.—"The Leather Pushers," serial, and Pathe News, current events.

Exploitation. — The prominence of the cast played up in newspaper, billboard and lobby display space.

ROYAL

"COME ON OVER," Colleen Moore (Goldwyn). Went over good. Lively business all week, despite unusually hot weather.

Short Subjects. — "The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," serial, and Royal Screen Magazine.

Exploitation.—The line, "The punch of a shillelah, the sweetness of an Irish rose —fun, fresh from the 'ould sod,'" was given liberal space, along with prominent mention of Rupert Hughes, the author. Also billboard and lobby display space.

TWELFTH STREET

"THE BROADWAY PEACOCK," Pearl White (Fox). The star is a Missouri product and has a large following here. A good week's attendance.

Short Subjects.—Current events, Screen Magazine.

Special Number. — "Oh, You Wildcat," Overseas Revue with cast of fifteen.

Exploitation.—The name of Pearl White and the special revue were played up strong in newspaper, billboard and lobby display space.

LOS ANGELES

GRAUMAN'S MILLION DOLLAR THEATRE

"THE DICTATOR," Wallace Reid (Paramount). Showed very good business both afternoon and evening performances. The usual amount of advertising was used and no exploitation other than news stories. Wallie is a strong favorite with many in Los Angeles. An added attraction was Edna Wallace Hopper, the fifty-year-old "flapper."

Short Subjects.—The Grauman Greater Symphony Orchestra; Urban Movie Chats; Pathe Weekly; Henry B. Murtagh at the Wurlitzer, playing "Georgette"; Grauman's World Visions; Edna Wallace Hopper in person; Edna Wallace Hopper in her photoplay "The Girl of Nineteen and the Woman of Sixty"; Atmospheric Prologue to the feature picture.

GRAUMAN'S RIALTO THEATRE

"WHEN SATAN SLEEPS," Jack Holt (Paramount). Received the best reviews of the week but only drew fair business with usual advertising. The heat has much to do with the box office receipts.

Short Subjects —Grauman's Rialto Orchestra; Pathe Weekly; Herbert Burland at the Wurlitzer, giving his impression of Brown's Saxophone Six playing "Allah's Holiday": Grauman's Rialto Swim Easy Bathing Girl Revue.

SYMPHONY THEATRE

"GRANDMA'S BOY," Harold Lloyd (Pathe). In the seventh week and showing better business than the sixth. The management put new 24 sheets on the 100 boards and this proved attractive. The Sunday business was not as good as week days, but the heat does not seem to affect the general run of business.

Short Subjects. — Fox News; Pathe Screen Views, "Yosemite Valley"; "Good Things of Life."

PANTAGE'S THEATRE

"THE GRAY DAWN," All star cast (Hodkinson). Good audience picture. The advertising of the feature was given the space over the vaudeville bill. A volume of the novel was framed in an easel in the lobby, which proved a very simple and effective lobby display. The usual amount of advertising was used.

Short Subjects.—C. L. Chester Comedy, "Birthday Guests and Jungle Beasts."

CLUNE'S BROADWAY THEATRE

"LITTLE EVA ASCENDS," Gareth Hughes (Metro). Very good business; the reviews were fine in all the papers and the picture was universally well received by both afternoon and evening audiences. The usual amount of advertising was used and no exploitation.

Short Subjects. — Screen Snapshots; Kinograms: Harold Lloyd in "Ask Father"; Tommy Price singing "Jeannette."

SUPERBA THEATRE

"ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN," Dorothy Phillips and Rodolph Valentino (Universal). This is an old picture, but showed more business than any booking within the last six months. The matinees were much better than the evenings. The usual amount of weekly advertising was used, with very good lobby display.

Short Subjects. — International News; Solo, "Georgette"; Queenie, the horse wonder, in "Horse Tears."

HILLSTREET THEATRE

"HER OWN MONEY," Ethel Clayton (Paramount). Good audience picture. The usual weekly advertising with the vaudeville bill.

Short Subjects. — Kinograms; Scenic; Comedy, Johnny Hines in "Torchy's Ghost."

MISSION THEATRE

"A FOOL THERE WAS," All star cast (Fox). This picture closed in the second week, and did fair business. It proved a little heavy for "Dog Days." The advertising was increased about half over the average weekly layout.

MILLERS THEATRE

"CROSS ROADS OF NEW YORK," All star (First National). Closing in the third week with only fair business. A great deal of exploitation was used on this feature, and extensive advertising, but the film was shown here as "Heartbalm" and failed dismally and as the fact was advertised by word-of-mouth, it has hurt the picture in spite of the extensive exploitation.

MILWAUKEE

ALHAMBRA

"NORTH OF THE RIO GRANDE," Bebe Daniels and Jack Holt (Paramount). Given splendid newspaper mention. Combination of stars good.

Exploitation.—Lobby display, street car posters and attractive newspaper ads.

Short Subjects. — Christie Comedy, Pathe News Reels, Educational Reels and operatic selections.

BUTTERFLY

"FREE AIR," Marjorie Seaman and Tom Douglas (Hodkinson). Good summer picture. Newspaper approval unanimous.

Short Subjects.—Selznick News Reels, two-reel comedy, "Good Morning, Judge"; Starland Review.

GARDEN

"THE WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). Star very well liked in this town and story a good one for her. Newspaper critics and audiences liked it.

If You Believe It, It's So

Paramount Photoplay in Seven Parts. Author, Perley Poore Sheehan. Scenario by Waldemar Young. Cameraman, Harry Perry. Running Time, Seventy-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Chick Harris, New York pickpocket, steals a wallet containing $1,100 from Ezra Wood, an elderly countryman, in the Grand Central Station. Learning that this money represents the sole savings of the rightful owner and his wife, Martha, Chick returns the wallet. Incidentally a talk with Ezra has such an effect upon him that he resolves to go into the country and try to earn an houest living. In pursuance of this determiuation he starts out as a soap salesman, reaches the village of St. Clair, meets Alvah Morley, niece of an old colonel, at whose house he rooms, and falls in love with her. Tine, a real estate agent, hires Chick to sell insurance for him. Chick, who has assumed his real name of Richard Davies, thrashes a big bartender who throws Alvah's uncle out of a saloon, and becomes universally respected in the village. A former crook associate of the erstwhile Chick's, a confidence man known as Sky Blue, comes to St. Clair in the guise of a lecturer and starts to raise funds for the supposed purpose of building an orphanage. Chick remonstrates, but is told that his past will he exposed if he makes trouble. Sky Blue gets hold of a large amount of money, and believing that Chick will be agreeable to share it, consents to the latter being appointed custodian of the sum. Chick then orders him out of town, daring him to do his worst, and Sky Blue, cowed, departs. Meantime Tine, the real estate agent, embezzles insurance money and tries to throw the blame upon Chick, but the auditor detects the fraud and Tine is arrested. Chick, or Davies, wins Alvah and settles down for a life of usefulness, building the orphanage with the money raised by Sky Blue.

Offering a story simple in construction but of absorbing interest from the first to the final reel, If You Believe It, It's So, is entitled to rank as one of the season's best pictures. The introduction consists of a few significant views contrasting the darker side of city life with the quiet peace of the countryside. Then the action snaps into high speed and quickly the tale of a crook's reformation and successful fight to win the heights of honesty is unfolded upon the screen. There is no false sentimentality, no straining for effect, one situation glides smoothly into another, an undercurrent of bright comedy relieves the serious tension at appropriate occasions and so cleverly have director, scenario writer and players combined their efforts that the spectator is kept on the keen edge of speculation as to just what is going to happen next. The film runs for seventy-five minutes, yet there isn't an inch of superfluous footage in it and exhibitors should find it a box office magnet of extraordinary drawing power.

Points of Appeal. — Few features in the past have developed such power to awaken an audience's deepest sympathies. There is but one scene in which the physical element is utilized as a "thrill" force—that in which Chick Harris whips the big bartender in a scrap of gorgeous excitement, a remarkably well staged affair. For the rest, the appeal is altogether to the softer emotions, the love romance is beautifully handled, without any resort to sloppy sentiment and the climax is sure to please everybody.

Cast.—Thomas Meighan may safely set down his impersonation of Chick Harris as one of the most artistic contributions he has yet made to the world or filmdom. It is a clean-cut performance which touches the heart and never loses its magic from beginning to end. Pauline Starke is wistfully fascinating in the role of heroine Alvah Morley, Theodore Roberts gets some wonderful comedy effects out of the character study of old Sky Blue and better support than that provided by other members of the company could not be desired.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The country scenes are charming, including many wooded views and long shot vistas of green lanes, the lighting is efficient, quick action prevails and there is not a single break in the continuity.

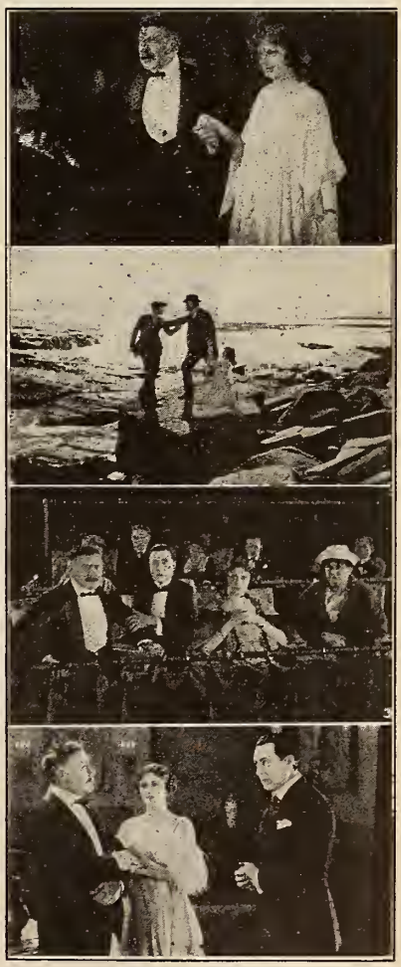
The Unfoldment

Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Photoplay in Six Parts. Scenerio by James Caildwell and Reid Heustis. Director, George Kern. Cameramen, Allen Mohr and Edward Gehler. Running Time, Seventy-two Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Katherine Nevin, Florence Lawrence; Martha Osborne, Barbara Bedford; James Osborne, Charles Frencb; Charles MacLaughlin, William Conklin; Angus, Albert Prisco; Mrs. MacLaughlin, Lydia Knott; Jack Nevin, Raymond Cannon; "Mayor of Avenue A," Murdock MacQuarrie; Ted Peckham, Wade Boteler.

Left in poor circumstances hy their father's death Jack and Katherine Nevin obtain jobs as reporters on James Osborne's newspaper. Charles MacLaughlin is city editor and Osborne's right-hand man. MacLaughlin has no personal friends and is feared by his associates. But he falls in love with Katherine, who accepts an iuvitation from his mother to dine at their home, where she meets his hrother Angus. The latter is a cripple, and, like his hrother, an atheist. Jack Nevin runs across a graft story in which the principal is a man known as "The Mayor of Avenue A," who claims to have been ruined hy a publisher. Nevin is ordered to let the story alone, but is not aware that Osborne is the publisher in question. Nevin begins a romance with Martha Osborne, his boss's danghter. Osborne intervenes, orders Nevin out of the house, abuses Martha, pushes her aside, she falls downstairs and is so badly injured that the doctors declare she will never walk again. The case being considered hopeless, Martha resigns herself to her fate. At a coming election Osborne prepares to hack a candidate with a had record. He and MacLaughlin decide to have a motion picture made, with the candidate as hero, showing the latter up in a good light. To Katherine is assigned the task of writing and producing the picture. This gives her the idea that a film sbould be produced with her friends as the principal characters, portraying their respective faults and virtues. This picture, entitled "The Unfoldment," is finished and exhibited. Osborne sees himself held up as a man whose life is crooked, MacLaughlin appears as a hrute whose will power has destroyed his better nature and Angus as one who is wilfully hlind to God's mercy. Reformed hy the revelation Osborne goes home. "The Mayor of Avenue A" comes to kill him, wben Martha arises from her bed and walks into the room. All present recognize a miracle and are awed. Osborne and his enemy are reconciled, Martha and Jack united, MacLaughlin wins Katherine and Angus kneels beside his mother in prayer.



Judged from an artistic standpoint "The Unfoldment" registers as a high-grade picture, handsomely photographed, well directed and cleverly acted by a thoroughly competent cast. Considered as a straight commercial proposition, its value is lessened by the fact that films with a strong religious atmosphere carry a heavy handicap, because their appeal is necessarily limited to patrons who are disposed to take a very serious view of life and find grave pleasure in discussing problems dealing with the possible reformation of every-day evils. It must, however, be clearly understood that the producers have skilfully steered clear of any creed entanglement, avoiding propaganda in favor of any particular religion and giving offense to none. Also, there is a good deal of human interest developed in the course of the narrative. But it is up to the individual judgment of every exhibitor as to whether or not his patrons will rally to the support of a feature of this type.

Points of Appeal. — As a "picture within a picture" this production strikes a novel note and hints significantly at the power of the screen as a moral and political influence in public life. The heroine wins sympathy from the start and it is suggested that the new-found ability of the crippled Martha to regain the use of her limbs, while accepted as a miracle by several of the characters, is really the effect of an involuntary use of will power, prevailing over the mistaken counsel of her physicians. Both of the love romances wind up cheerily and a happy climax is achieved.

Cast.—Florence Lawrence, a former well known star of Biograph days, returns to the screen in the leading role of Katherine Nevins and gives a sincere, well balanced performance which stamps her as an actress of unusual emotional ability. Barbara Bedford scores as Martha and the support as a whole is deserving of the highest praise.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The exteriors include beautiful marine views and realistic shots of the city slums, the latter contrasting with some admirable rustic color. There are many fine interiors and good lighting prevails. The continuity is smooth and the action moves rapidly.

Exploitation. — Newspaper advertising, street car posters and lobby display.
Short Subjects.—Christie Comedy, Fox News Reels, Education News Reels.

MERRILL

"LOVE NEVER DIES," Lloyd Hughes and Madge Bellamy. Fair business. Stars not very well known in this section, although picture was given favorable mention by press.
Short Subjects. — International News Reels, Tony Sarg's Almanac, Educational News Reels and two-reel Century Comedy.

PALACE

"GAY AND DEVILISH," Doris May (F. B. O.). Picture liked by audiences and given favorable criticisms by local press. Good summer picture.

SAXE'S RIALTO

"THE FACE BETWEEN," Bert Lytell (Metro). Fair business. Picture given the razz by newspaper critics.
Short Subjects.—"The Studio Rube," a two-reel Vitagraph comedy; Selznick News Reels and fashion hints.

SAXE'S STRAND

"SONNY," Richard Barthelmess (First National). Excellent business. Star loved by all who have seen him.
Exploitation.—Lobby display, street car posters and attractive advertising.
Short Subjects.—First National Kinograms and Sketchograms and Topics of the Day.

TOY

"THE SAFETY CURTAIN," Norma Talmadge and Eugene O'Brien (Selznick). An early release given praise by local press.
Short Subjects.—A Snub Pollard comedy and International News Reels.

NORFOLK, VA.

GRANBY

"TURN TO THE RIGHT," All Star (Metro). A whole week to very big business, with the added attraction of Charles Chaplin in "Pay Day."

WELLS

"THE PRIMITIVE LOVER," Constance Talmadge (First National). A week to very good business with strong opposition.

STRAND

"KISSES," Alice Lake (Metro). Very fair business on a three-day run.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

CAPITOL

"ACROSS THE CONTINENT," Wallace Reid (Paramount). Picture enjoyed; pleased big business.
Short Subjects.—St. John comedy, "Ship Ahoy"; Kinograms.

CRITERION

"REPORTED MISSING," Owen Moore (Selznick). Picture fine, as was also the business.

RIALTO

"SCHOOL DAYS," Wesley Barry (Warner Bros.). Although here for the second time, the picture enjoyed splendid business.

EMPRESS

"WATCH YOUR STEP," Cullen Landis (Goldwyn). Picture enjoyed; pleased good business.

RICHMOND, VA.

BIJOU

"A CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT," All Star (Fox). A three-day run only was given this to fair business.
"THE QUEEN OF SHEBA," Betty Blythe (Fox). Three days to big business.

COLONIAL

"KISSES," Alice Lake (Metro). Three days to good business.

BROADWAY

"MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME," All Star (American Releasing). Three days to fair business.

SCRANTON, PA.

STRAND

"ACROSS THE CONTINENT," Wallace Reid (Paramount). Would get a better reception if things were back to normalcy. Mine strike in thirteenth week and three sets of railroad staffs on strike, starting this week. Naturally business was affected. Picture good, one that measures up to Reid standards, interesting and well told.

NEW STATE

"WOMAN'S PLACE," Constance Talmadge (First National). Made some impression with management raising the question as to whether woman should be at home or at the polls. Star popular and that helped. Prevailing business conditions poor.

POLI

"GAY AND DEVILISH," Doris May (F. B. O.). Fair attendance in midst of coal and rail strikes, which have city by throat and which are making their pinch felt in most homes as well as in business places.

REGENT

"THE FIGHTING STREAK," Tom Mix (Fox). Not half bad considering industrial situation in coal and railroad fields. Business almost normal, showing this rough and ready star can drag 'em in, if the people have any spare change to spend on amusement.

SEATTLE, WASH.

STRAND

"THE WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). Patronage well sustained. Good business.
Exploitation. — Billboards, newspaper advertising, window cards, solid lobby trim blue and organge, panel cut-outs, illuminated frames, very attractive.
Short Subjects.—"Cold Feet," Christie Comedy, Kinograms.

LIBERTY

"SONNY," Richard Barthelmess (First National). Attendance excellent. Star popular.
Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising, window cards, billboards and lobby.
Short Subjects.—Liberty News, Pathe scenic, "Light Showers" comedy.

COLISEUM

"THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK," All Star (First National). Excellent business.
Exploitation. — Regular newspaper pace, billboards and window cards, lobby cards.
Short Subjects.—"Days of Old," Snub Pollard comedy, Pathe News, Kinograms, Topics of the Day.

COLUMBIA

"THE BLACK BAG," Herbert Rawlinson (Universal). Better than average patronage.
Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising, lobby trim very effective with black panels and white cut-outs. Man with black bag appearing in business district, with prizes for first to accost him as such. Afterward stationed in lobby.
Short Subjects. — "Some Class" with Brownie, Screen Snapshots, International News.

BLUE MOUSE

"QUEEN OF SHEBA," Betty Blythe (Fox). Popular return, playing to excellent business. Attractive lobby with illuminated frames, good newspaper advertising.

PALACE HIP

"THE SPITFIRE," Texas Guinan, who is also appearing in person with her company of five. "Female Bill Hart" drew heavy crowds.

WINTER GARDEN

"THE SHEIK OF ARABY," H. B. Warner. Put on with attractive prologue. Played to excellent business.
Short Subjects. — International News, Marion Hamilton in artistic dance interpretations.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

NEW GRAND CENTRAL, WEST END LYRIC AND LYRIC SKYDOME

"THE SILENT CALL," All Star (First National). Attendance at both theatres and Skydome, despite very hot weather, registered good during the run of this picture. Local papers praised highly the remarkable dog that takes the principal role and no doubt this helped greatly to draw. Attendance at Skydome seemed to be a bit above the average.
Short Subjects.—News and Views, Topics and Comedy.
Exploitation.—Advance trailers on the screen run on feature. Lots of paper out in advance and all copy carried line, "Sensational run of 18 weeks in Los Angeles."

MISSOURI

"THE WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). Star never fails to draw a nice attendance in this town regardless of heat or any kind of inclement weather. Matinees did not register so good, but the night attendance well made up for the afternoon slack.
Short Subjects. — "Toonerville Trolley Comedy," News and Views.
Exploitation.—Usual newspaper space.

COLUMBIA

"SECOND-HAND ROSE," Gladys Walton (Universal). Vaudeville is found in this house also, but the picture was well liked by the audience and received big laughs on its funny situations.

In the Name of the Law

Emory Johnson Production in Six Parts. Distributed by Film Booking Offices of America. Author, Emilie Johnson. Director, Emory Johnson. Cameraman, Ross Fisher. Running Time, 65 Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Patrick O'Hara, Ralph Lewis; Mrs. O'Hara, Claire McDowell; Mary, Ella Hall; Harry O'Hara, Emory Johnson; Johnnie O'Hara, Johnnie Walker; Mr. Lucas, Richard Morris; Children in the Prologue, Benny Alexander, Josephine Adair, Johnny Thompson and Jean Adair.

The play deals with the home life of a policeman on the San Francisco force. O'Hara and his wife practice the greatest frugality in order to get together sufficient money to buy their own home, but they have always shown reasonable liberality in bringing up their children, two boys and an adopted girl. One of the boys determines to study law against his father's wishes, and when word is received that this boy has been accused of stealing, the entire family strive to raise the money to save him. In her attempt the girl receives money from her employer, a bank president. The other boy, also employed in the bank, believes she has stolen the money, and in an attempt to learn the truth one night is mistaken for a robber and shot at by his own father. The boy recovers, however, and then faces trial, at which he is defended by his brother. The outcome is a justification of the motives of all characters concerned, and the O'Hara family settles down to peaceful and happy home life again. The love romance concerns the boy who works in the bank and the adopted girl.

Humanizing the cop proves a rather effective melodramatic venture as it is done in Emory Johnson's production of In the Name of the Law, which the F. B. O. opened this week at the George M. Cohan Theatre for an indefinite Broadway run. In depicting the policeman of a metropolis as a home-builder and a home-lover the play should strike a responsive note of appeal in the average spectator, to whom the various human interest scenes bring the interesting realization that the blue-coated individual, so austere of aspect when exercising his offices as an arm of the law, is after all a human sort of person when on and off the "beat." Further than that the play offers representations of melodramatic situations which time and many pictures have shown to be provocative of emotional response. From the outset the spectator is aware that the director has allotted the situations more prominence than they deserve by giving them too much "footage." Thus Mr. Johnson has produced a picture that drags in spots but one in which there are many finely done scenes and decidedly appealing moments.

Points of Appeal.—The picture has entertainment value and a breadth of appeal that should insure it a general popularity. In his biggest scenes Ralph Lewis imparts a telling power to the character of the cop and with good support all along the line he assumes leadership in a cast that is almost uniformly good. The father's denunciation of the boy who "wasted his time getting an education" is a fine piece of acting and directorial skill, and of equal effect is the scene in which the officer discovers that the supposed thief he shot is his other boy.

Cast.—Johnny Walker plays his role with great sincerity of purpose and effect and Claire McDowell realizes all the "sobbie" possibilities of the mother role. Emory Johnson, Ella Hall and the juvenile stars also record good performances.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The photographic work is especially good where attempts at soft-focus effects are striven for and with the lighting arrangements achieves good. rich tone for the scenes. The direction shows nice descrimination in all departments save that of movement, the drawn-out scenes being the flaw in the director's work.

Desert Gold

Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner Present Through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation Zane Grey's Drama. Scenario by Fred Myton. Directed by T. Hayes Hunter. Cameramen, Abraham Scholtz and A. L. Todd. Footage, 7014.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dick Gale, E. K. Lincoln; Captain George Thorne, Edward Coxen; The Yaqui, W. Lawson Butt; Mercedes Castenada, Margery Wilson; Nell, Eileen Percy; Jim Belding, William H. Bainbridge; Mrs. Belding, Laura Winston; Rojas, Walter Long; Ladd, Russell Simpson; Lash, Arthur Morrison.

The production of a marriage certificate by Burton changes the determination of Warren to kill him. The two men had met on the desert. Later, just after finding gold, they die in a storm. They leave a message stating that the mine is to be one-half the property of Nell Burton, daughter and granddaughter of the men. At Casitas bandits under Rojas surround Mercedes and her lover, the captain. Through the intervention of Gale they escape. Dick is employed on his ranch by Belding, the foster father of Nell. He falls in love with the girl. Rojas, seeking Mercedes, comes to the ranch, but through a ruse the girl accompanied by several men and her new husband, escapes. Later the party is assailed by the bandits in a rifle battle among the rocks, and the ranchers win. Nell, sought in marriage by Chase, a new neighbor, rejects him, and in revenge is taunted as to her birth. When the ranchers return Gale learns of the remarks of Chase, seeks him out and whips him. Nell, however, in doubt as to her parentage, refuses to marry Gale. The latter with the Yaqui goes prospecting. The Indian leads his companion to the old mine, where are found the combined claim and will of Burton written on the back of his marriage certificate. This ends all controversy as to the legitimacy of Nell. The marriage follows.

For the lover of the real Western picture here is a subject that ought to please 100 per cent. It has all the elements of the orthodox "Western" as we have been taught to recognize it. For rugged desert scenery, mountain as well as plain, you will search your memory a long while before you are likely to excavate a subject that in this respect will match it. To those for whom the desert has a lure Desert Gold will satisfy on the backgrounds alone.

The production, however, will stand firmly on its feet from the dramatic side. The story is chock-ablock with related incident, much of it easily falling within the category of thrilling. If any fault is to be found it is that there is a bit too much of it, that the tale might be shortened a little to advantage.

Points of Appeal. — There are, as stated, the remarkable views of an unusually wild country. There is a strong appeal in the very opening situation, the meeting of the two men at night and the discovery by Burton that his visitor is his father-in-law in search of the man he believed betrayed his daughter. The fight in the inn, where Gale baits Rojas and provides a diversion enabling the captain and his sweetheart to escape, is thrilling. The battle among the rocks at the summit of the mountain, too, is filled with suspense. The capture of Mercedes by Rojas in the cave and the subsequent fight on the cliff between the bandit and the Yaqui also stir notably. These are but a few of a number of situations that stand out.

Cast.—The cast is one that speaks for itself, one the quality of which will be recognized by any exhibitor or picturegoer either, for that matter.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—Mr. Hunter has done his work with his usual fidelity to theme. His backgrounds were an inspiration in themselves, and the photographers have skillfully transferred these to the film. (This picture is not new.)

Herald.—It is a picture that does not always grip the attention, but on the whole it can be recommended to Police Commissioner Enright, who can in turn recommend it to his fellow citizens. Cops, it now appears, have homes and don't spend all their leisure time at the station house. And in this instance it appears to be quite a regular American family, for it has pleasures and sorrows, because, while representative of the law of the land, it is not immune from the law of life. Times.—It often becomes tiresome because of the innumerable and unimportant details which clutter it. It never reaches any real climax, but, instead, rambles and gets nowhere. American.—Really, it is difficult to see why such an absolutely illogical series of events could have been screened as carefully as this particular picture has been screened. Telegram.—More or less of the melodramatic type, yet, withal, clean and wholesome. It is straightforwardly acted, although some of the scenes seem to be just a little too prolonged. This, however, is characteristic of sad scenes in tales of the sort. Sun.—Ralph Lewis has put the police under heavy obligation to him in playing the bluecoat's role for the feature. Globe.—Evidently Mr. Powers and his co-workers set about to produce a picture with the maximum amount of wholesomeness, heartaches and thrills; and it is sufficient to say that success has crowned their efforts. Journal.—Gives the police a square deal. In that respect it is a most unusual motion picture.

World.—Operates on the general lines of a Kansas tornado. Nothing is impossible in it. It sweeps everything before it, lays barren everything over which it passes, travels at the speed its name would imply, and after all is said and done, is of little value to anybody. Times.—The Fast Mail is an honest motion picture. It is a regular old-fashioned smash-'em-up-and-shoot-'em melodrama and doesn't pretend to be anything else. Action? That's it. If there remain any who like the real thing in out-and-out melodrama without pretentious insincerity, The Fast Mail ought to suit them. Herald.—Brushes aside the logical development of a story and just goes after keeping you a-quiver in ding-dong fashion. It succeeds, for it simply explodes with excitement, literally in one episode. Mail.—If there is anything whatsoever in the field of melodrama of the ultra-mellow variety that was overlooked in the screening of this film it has not yet been discovered. It begins with some fast "drammer," speeds up in the second reel and then goes on ever faster and more furious until that time-honored and well-known sub-title is flashed on the screen. Telegram.—So fast does the action move that one has a hard time keeping up with the thrills. It is a melodrama pure and simple, but remarkably well done. There is action of all sorts. Journal.—It's bing, bang, crash! And everybody holds his hat at the Strand this week! The Strand is showing that thriller of thrillers, The Fast Mail.

World.—Is sufficiently mystifying to be successful. It is excellent photography in parts, and Miss Compson has surrounded herself with a generally capable cast. American.—It was not until the last two reels that I slipped into the spirit of the thing and realized what a joyous travesty it was. Not since Ben Turpin's Small Town Idol has there been a picture shown with such a field of mirth. Tribune.—It is a sort of cross between The Sheik, The Undying Flame and The Green Temptation. Herald.—It is undeniably picturesque, and some of the scenes, splendidly photographed, are beautiful, but it just trifles with the theme of reincarnation. And it has some of the misplaced emphasis to be expected when the usual star is allowed to supervise her own production and turn herself loose on close-ups. Journal.—There are many scenes in which Miss Compson's work calls for commendation, notably that in which she entices a wealthy young Englishman on shipboard to become her fiance, but, all in all, the picture is a conglomeration of hackneyed ideas, very much overdone. Sun.—Miss Compson, Emory Johnson and Macey Harlan strive to make the most of their opportunities, but they have too many of them.

Herald.—The picture triumphs over its drawbacks, just as every film is bound to triumph that deals with regeneration and follows the time-honored recipe of putting crooks in the country and Broadway in the byways. Tribune.—The story would be filled with hokum were it not so lightly and humorously done. It isn't life, of course, but it is a motion picture, made by men who know life, and that is something even better. American.—A novel little comedy of country and city, teaching what all of us know—that every crook is at heart virtuous. World.—The opening scenes are so far from truth and probability that the entire yarn loses much of the appeal it otherwise might carry. Mail.—It is a pleasing, delightful story, wonderfully well told. Meighan plays his role with the wholesome appeal and unaffected sincerity that are his screen strongholds. Journal.—Is the sort of picture that is produced with the idea of achieving success by the use of ideas of demonstrated popularity, so it will probably do very nicely, indeed. Globe.—If there was a redeeming feature to the picture it was Theodore Roberts' excellent characterization of an elderly but extremely energetic confidence man. Sun.—No, the picture is not able to make you forget the hot weather, but the rest of the program is excellent. Telegram.—Another film play of a crook's regeneration, but told in different spirit.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

A Vital Necessity

THAT was an interesting observation which one of our staff men came across the other day out in the Middle West. An exhibitor was discussing with a fellow-showman the value of trade papers—particularly in the summer.

"We were just talking about trade papers," explained the showman. "My friend John here asked me what I do with the trade papers during the summer lull."

"Well, what do you do with them?" inquired the staff man.

"Read the advertisements," was the reply. "I read them carefully all through the summer months. They reflect the hopes of the producers and give me a line on what the starters are going to be. In fact, they tell the trend of production and the types that will figure in the coming season. This is the only means I have of coming anywhere near figuring out what type of picture will reign supreme.

"Then, again, the ads tell me how far to go in my booking, and serve as a caution not to load up too heavily on one kind or another."

The importance of the observation is emphasized by the fact that the man who made it absolutely controls the booking of eight first run theatres and double that number of smaller houses.

He was stating, in pointed fashion, a fact which ought to be patent to all the industry, namely, that the trade paper is the only real avenue of trade merchandising for the producer and distributor; and the only authoritative booking guide for the exhibitor. This double service is only one of the many which the trade paper renders, but its importance, especially at this season of the year ought to be stressed.

The point at which all the business activities in the industry

"Confidence and Co-operation" Began as a Happy Phrase: It Has Become a Living Thing in the Industry focus is the picture, its making, its distribution, its exhibition. Obviously, the whole process of getting the picture to the public cannot succeed as it should unless the distributor gives the exhibitor the necessary information upon which to base his booking. An independent medium, which carries this information consistently and authoritatively, thus becomes an imperative necessity to the whole business operation of the industry.

Furthermore, the trade paper has a vital bearing on the vexed problem of play-dates. The information it carries, in the advertising announcements of distributors, as the showman in the Middle West pointed out, not only guides the theatre owner, but serves as a danger signal against overbooking.

A good idea of what the situation would be can be gained in a moment by imagining the industry without trade papers. There would then be no independent source to which the exhibitor could go for the business facts he must have in order to serve the public properly and thus turn back to the producer and distributor the money necessary to continue their operations.

The result would be hopeless confusion. No industry has ever got along without trade papers. Nobody who is clear-headed supposes that this industry could. We will go further and say that the clear-headed among producers, distributors and exhibitors, equally, value the vital service that is rendered by the trade paper fifty-two weeks in the year.

More Signs of Stability

THE new organization of theatre supply dealers and manufacturers of theatre equipment formed in Indianapolis last week is but another sign of the desire to stabilize the industry. Hardly a branch of the business is now left without its organization. The tendency toward organization is a healthy sign.

Looking ahead to a time when the industry's various organizations are functioning one hundred per cent we foresee great benefits. The time will come, and very soon, we believe, when the forces of autocratic reform will mass its quadrennial attack upon the industry.

With every branch of the industry organized and functioning properly, imagine what a united front it would present to those forces which make necessary the continuous battle against autocratic censorship.

That is one thought for our readers to ponder.

As to the future ahead of the new supply dealer's association, it is plain that it has a place in this industry if it serves the industry. Its great field of service is the theatre. It must not be content with merely selling goods. The members must give service to the theatre, and if they fail to do that they will drop into the category of plain middlemen performing only the work of selling, in which case the theatre man will prefer to deal direct.

The theatre, like the press, must suffer no interruption in its service to the public. The supply dealer with his modern service department can eliminate costly interruptions by being at the constant beck and call of his customers. His duty toward his customer does not end with the sale of a projector, motor generator or screen. His duty begins then and there.

The Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America knows it has a definite service to perform and the men in it and back of it appear capable of shouldering the responsibility. This publication would not have aided in organizing the association unless it believed in the business integrity of the large majority of dealers and the necessity for such an organization.

Hays Goes to Los Angeles to "Meet the Folks Who Make the Pictures"

By L. W. BOYNTON

Editor, Exhibitors Trade Review

Chicago, July 20.

WILL H. HAYS, President of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, left Chicago today on the California Limited for Los Angeles, where he will arrive Monday.

In Mr. Hays' own words, he is going to the Coast "to meet the folks who make and direct the pictures." He expects to remain in Los Angeles all of next week and then return direct to New York.

For a considerable period Mr. Hays has been besieged by all branches of the industry in Los Angeles to go to the Coast, and he is assured of a big welcome. According to present plans, he will be the guest of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce at a luncheon or dinner and a number of other affairs have been planned in his honor.

It is expected that a great massmeeting of the whole film colony will be held, at which Mr. Hays will make an address. The trip to the Coast is one of the most important events in the industry since Mr. Hays entered it and is expected to have far-reaching results.

During his stay in Chicago, Mr. Hays conferred informally with several exhibitors, exchange and producer representatives and supply dealers on various problems affecting their interests. Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow, was one of those who joined Mr. Hays here for the Coast trip.

The events connected with the trip to the Coast will be the subject of special articles in Exhibitors Trade Review by Mr. Boynton, who accompanied Mr. Hays to Los Angeles.

Equipment Dealers Organized

Much Needed Association Gets Enthusiastic Start at Indianapolis—Officers Elected and Permanent National Organization Formed — Landis Represents Hays

By HOWARD McLELLAN

INDIANAPOLIS, JULY 15.

HEAT, great gobs of it, pessimistic opinions that organization "could never be effected," were abroad here continuously during the three days' session of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment of America, but, like all other new movements, the enthusiasm of the pioneers and their determination to get somewhere led to a permanent national organization which includes dealers and distributors of motion picture equipment and its manufacturers.

The new association is a part of the general movement toward stabilization in all branches and, if the new association carries out the plans of the pathfinders, benefits heretofore unknown will accrue not only to those having membership but to those who form the support of the dealers—the theatre owners.

On Thursday, the first day of the meeting, plans for organization were unintentionally sidetracked while some twenty delegates in attendance rehearsed the many abuses and difficulties they had encountered and which made necessary some kind of an organization. It reminded an observer of the man who had suffered for years from all kinds of ailments and poured his full tale of woe into every ear that would listen. The dealers needed organization, that's all—needed a get together.

By Thursday evening the determination to organize reached the white heat point and ten dealers sat down to an all-night session and framed the organization. Credit for this belongs to these pioneers: Henry J. Smith of Pittsburgh, Harry A. R. Dutton of Chicago, Joe Hornstein of New York City, George C. Perkins of Montreal and Detroit, Dr. Otto Dieckmann of Cincinnati, Leo F. Dwyer of Cleveland, B. A. Benson of Chicago, C. E. Cornwell of Charlestown, W. Va., H. Lihou, of St. Louis, Barney Pearlman of Chicago, E. E. Oliver of Cleveland, W. H. Swain and B. H. Gumm of Indianapolis, and Harry Bugie, Cincinnati.

These men represented thirty-five equipment stores in all parts of the United States and do about 75 per cent of the equipment business. They formed themselves into a committee on organization and on Friday night had completed the organization, adopting a temporary constitution and by-laws and electing the following officers:

Leo F. Dwyer, president.

Henry Jay Smith, first vice-president.

B. A. Benson, second vice-president.

C. E. Cornwell, third vice-president.

Sid Louis, Minneapolis, fourth vice-president.

Dr. Otto Dieckmann secretary-treasurer.

The above men and Harry K. Lucas of Atlanta, Robert L. Hosmer of Boston and H. G. Mohrbacker of Denver form the Board of directors to whom large powers have been given. The final act of the directors was to select Chicago for the first meeting of the organization on July 15 next year. Special meetings to complete the organization probably will be held before July 15.

Of the manufacturers who sell through supply dealers twelve had representatives present who welcomed the new organization and pledged their companies' support in every way to the organization.

The manufacturers represented were: D. C. Cookingham, Hertner Electric Co.; Jay Kroesen, Edison Lamp Works; W. L. Brandel of Nela Specialties Division, General Electric Co.; J. E. McAuley, Peerless Arc Control; William Peabody, Simplex Ticket Co. and National Electric Ticket Register Co., Major H. A. Bohning, Acme Projector; R. G. Harker, Invincible Vacuum Cleaner Co.; Axel Jacobsson, Jacobsson Screen Co.; Sam Lears, Peter & Volz

Congratulate Trade Review

In his opening address to the delegates to the first meeting of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America in Indianapolis, Leo F. Dwyer, president, spoke of the lone effort of Exhibitors Trade Review in promoting the organization. He spoke of the editorial support given to the organization by this publication; of the work of its field force in arousing interest in the organization and attendance at the meeting and the sending out by this publication of literature to prospective members detailing the purposes of the association.

No other publication in the industry, it was pointed out, had given to the new organization anything like the attention given to it by Exhibitors Trade Review.

The new organization starts with a membership of twenty-five recognized equipment dealers and twelve manufacturers, but letters and telegrams from other dealers and manufacturers, who could not be present, announced their willingness not only to join but to heartily support the new organization. Among those registering their willingness are: Nicholas Power Co., American Theatre Equipment Co., Columbus, Ohio; S. C. Behrend, Movie Supply Co., Chicago; Yale Theatre Supply Co., Kansas City; Becker Theatre Supply Co., Buffalo, N. Not a Discordant Note

Unlike other infant organizations not a discordant note was sounded during the session; not a voice was raised against the formation plan of organization. It was the first opportunity afforded dealers and manufacturers to get together around the table and air their differences and discuss ways and means of settling difficulties. The discussions revealed many hard problems ahead of the organization and many months of hard work.

The presence of manufacturers who were voted in as associate members of the association helped immeasurably in the tedious hours of the first session. Their experience with organization and management of business proved a valuable aid to the dealers. D. C. Cookingham shone out brightly as one of the manufacturers' representatives and in the course of several talks he offered to pay all the expenses incurred in the work of preliminary organization.

The matter of expenses, which is always a troublesome feature in organization, was well taken care of at the closing session when every dealer and manufacturer present paid his dues into the treasury. This association already has a splendid start, financially.

The big feature of the session was the speech made to the delegates on Friday afternoon by former Congressman Frederic Landis of Indiana who attended the meeting at the request of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, Inc., with whom Congressman Landis has been associated for several weeks. Mr. Landis received a warm welcome.

"The motion picture business is fast finding itself," said Mr. Landis. "It has gone through the Klondike stage, the days of early chaos and ruthless competition which always mean anxiety and loss. After a while it becomes a business like banking and manufacturing. This is what is happening in this industry to-day. If the men interested in all branches get together and correct all abuses they will be 100 per cent ahead of the government."

The speaker impressed his hearers with the dangers facing the industry, which will injure the supply dealer as well as other branches if censorship of films takes firm root.

"The time has come for all in this business to pull together for the good of the industry. Most of your difficulties are due to misunderstandings and can be eradicated. Your association must get together in your business on features that are not competitive. And I want to say here that Will Hays has had his success because he deserved it. He succeeded because he has a card index as well as a logical mind. He can look at tangled situations and make them stand up on their hind legs and straighten out. He is an analyst and harmonizer and he's on the square, absolutely. He thinks all the men in this industry can get together and build up the business. The motion picture industry cannot slump if the whole industry presents a united front.

"I am charged by Mr. Hays to say: His good will and Godspeed go out to you. He's interested in every man closely and remotely associated with this industry. He feels he is the servant of all to serve all associated with the industry."

Riegel Makes New Censorship Rules

Credentials and Free Passes to Theatres Issued by Mrs. Snow Revoked—Distributors, Not Exhibitors, Held Primarily Liable for Violation of Board's Orders

ALL inspections of motion picture theatres in Ohio for the purpose of ascertaining whether the censorship law is being complied with will be made direct from the censor board's headquarters in Columbus, according to a letter written by Vernon M. Riegel, Director of Education, to Martin G. Smith, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio.

The free passes to theatres issued by Mrs. Snow have been revoked.

Mr. Smith this week forwarded a copy of the Riegel letter to EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW.

Riegel also informs Mr. Smith that it will be the censor board's policy to prosecute distributors for violation of censorship orders in places where exchanges are located rather than exhibitors.

The letter to Mr. Smith is under date of July 10. It follows:

Riegel's Letter

"I am this day writing a letter, recalling the passes and credentials that were issued by Mrs. Snow to persons for purposes of inspection of motion pictures. You can advise the members of your association that all inspections will be made direct from headquarters, and that no credentials and free passes will be granted to anybody. Our inspectors will pay their way into the shows the same as anybody else.

"I suggest that you inform members of your association that it will be our policy to prosecute distributors for violation of the orders of the Division of Film Censorship and of the statutes in places where there are distributing points rather than exhibitors, although both are equally liable under the law. In all cities and villages where there are no exchanges, the exhibitors will be prosecuted for violations. It is suggested, therefore, that exhibitors require the distributors to guarantee to them that the pictures will come to them in conformity with the orders of the Division of Film Censorship. It is suggested, furthermore, that the exhibitors require the distributors to guarantee to them indemnification for all loss, cost and expense that may result to theatre owners as a result of the failure of distributors to obey the orders of the Division of Film Censorship.

"I am trying to do all I can to protect theatre owners and to relieve us of the necessity of prosecuting them for violations because, as stated above, I do not think they are primarily liable and these suggestions are made for their protection. However, it is entirely too expensive and inexpedient to prosecute distributors in cities where no exchanges are located, when the picture was shown by an exhibitor in some other city possibly at a great distance from the jurisdiction in which the distributing point is.

"I would like to have a letter from you, giving me your opinion as to the value of these suggestions. I think with the proper co-operation of theatre owners along the lines suggested above that inspection will eventually become unnecessary."

Selznick News Reel Is Censored

New York Censors Order Elimination of Police Happening in Chicago — No Appeal Planned

THE Motion Picture Commission of the State of New York has ordered eliminated from Selznick News No. 1058C the main title, subcaptions and related scenes of four bathing girls attired in the standard costume usually associated in the minds of normal human beings with "bathing girls." The reason advanced by Mrs. Marion Burton, the deputy commissioner who viewed and passed on the picture, is that it was indecent.

The main title ordered eliminated was: "Bathing Girls Jailed in Near-Riot Over Their Alleged Scanty Raiment." The sub-caption set forth that "Patrol Wagon and Reserves Called to Convey Resisting Girls to Hoosegow."

The action following is that of four girls, in bathing garb that would attract no attention at numberless resorts, walking along the beach toward the camera; of a woman, probably a policewoman, either measuring the trunk of the costume on one of the girls or else attempting to pull it down; of her arresting the girls; of their walking along the beach under arrest; and of one of the girls resisting a policeman, who has her in his arms, her feet well off the ground and being roughly thrown into a patrol wagon, the other girls being forced in behind her by several policemen and the policewoman.

The arrest was of sufficient importance to be noted in the columns of Chicago newspapers. In fact, the captions employed in the film were practically the same as those appearing in one of the local newspapers.

Mrs. Burton makes the point that the "girls obviously had no intention of going near the water."

Joseph Levenson, secretary of the commission, when asked regarding the action of the commission, said he had not seen the picture and that he would not do so unless an appeal were taken from the decision of the board. He referred to the recent decision of the Appellate Division in Albany and invited the reporter to read it. It may be remarked that the decision declaring the news in a film is censorable where the same subject matter in a newspaper is not subject to prepublication review occupied a prominent place on his desk.

No appeal notice has been filed.

State Board's Censorship Revised by Kansas Towns

An important question in censorship will be decided in Kansas next week by Attorney General Richard Hopkins. Recently several Kansas towns have taken authority upon themselves to supervise the censoring of productions already passed upon by the Kansas State board of censorship.

In many cases, according to M. Van Praag, president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, important parts of film have been cut by the self-instituted censors of the cities, causing no end of grief to the exhibitor, who had purchased the production, already passed upon by the state board, under the presumption that it was immune from any further censoring, as far as Kansas was concerned.

"I have every confidence in the world that Attorney General Hopkins immediately will put a stop to this unfair practice," said Mr. Van Praag.

Form Company to Assist Production

Producers Finance Corporation Organized by Motion Picture Executives for Purpose of Specializing in Loans in the Industry

AN event of real importance in the field of motion picture production especially in the independent department was consummated last week when Producers Finance Corporation awarded to Converse D. Marsh, a broker at 111 Broadway, a contract for the sale of more than $3,000,000 of its capital stock.

Producers Finance Corporation was organized a year ago by Frank R. Wilson, one time newspaper man, formerly associated with the establishment of the Federal Farm Loan system and a one time executive in the Treasury Department in the Liberty Loan campaigns. Mr. Wilson at the close of the war joined the D. W. Griffith organization, and through his activities D. W. Griffith, Inc., was organized and financed.

When this work was completed Mr. Wilson got together several important men in the motion picture field and proposed a plan for the creation of a banking organization to specialize in loans to motion picture producers. It met their approval.

Conclude Year's Experiment

A company was formed under New Jersey laws. The board of directors contains several prominent figures in the industry, including J. E. Brulatour, Arthur S. Friend, D. W. Griffith, P. A. Powers, Oscar A. Price, A. H. T. Banzhaf, Whitman Bennett, J. J. McCarthy and Frank R. Wilson, all of New York City; John B. Cochran, president of the Franklin National Bank of Washington, and A. J. Dalton, a coal operator of West Virginia.

It was determined that before going to the public for a large volume of capital to finance the corporation a year's experiment should be made with a limited capitalization subscribed by directors, organizers and others. The first year has now been concluded. The corporation has made a number of loans to producers with such success, it is announced in a statement of the company, that the profit-making capacity of the corporation has been demonstrated. "According to a recent audit, Producers Finance Corporation has earned in a few months' operation its dividend on the paid-up capital for the entire year," the statement further says, and continues:

"Producers Finance Corporation will solve the long standing difficulty under which the motion picture industry has labored in getting adequate credit at the banks.

Strong Executive Committee

"Producers Finance Corporation, officered by responsible motion picture men who understand motion picture values and who know the credit and integrity of producers and distribution companies, can pass safely on such loans. The finance corporation, then having responsibility, will place its indorsement on these loans and pass them on to the banks. Producers Finance Corporation has established relations with several banks, and its plan of operation meets the approval of those banks which are seeking a larger proportion of motion picture business.

"The Executive Committee of Producers Finance Corporation, which passes upon the loans, consists of Frank R. Wilson, Arthur S. Friend, A. H. T. Banzhaf, J. E. Brulatour and Oscar A. Price. The company has offices at 807 Longacre Building. Mr. Wilson is president of the corporation."

President Wilson was seen at the offices of the company this week. In the course of a conversation Mr. Wilson expressed the conviction that in the beginning the company would be able to make a measurable reduction in the interest rates now paid by producers for banking accommodations, and that these rates could be decreased as the company increased its reserve and gained in experience by actual contact with the varying conditions in the industry.

Will Not Gamble on an Idea

It is not the intention of the company, Mr. Wilson declared, to make loans or to indorse applications for loans that do not have substantial collateral behind them. "It is not our aim to gamble on an idea," he said. "We believe there is a distinct field for a company of this sort. At the present time there are banks which would like to do more motion picture business, but their officers are unaccustomed to estimating values in the industry.

"Many worthy producers are denied accommodations because of the banks' unfamiliarity with motion picture values. The existence of an agency like the Producers Finance Corporation, which can apply expert judgment to a motion picture proposition, means increased opportunity for the worthy producer. Also, this additional agency will be welcomed by the banks because it will supply to them that expert judgment on motion picture values which heretofore they have been unable to apply.

"The successful picture producer, our theory is, ought not to pay a rate for money that is based on the assumption that one out of four productions is going to turn out badly. The good producer ought to get a rate compatible with his strength and security. By having an executive committee like ours we are able to say when a man brings a proposition whether or not it is a good one and salable. With men on the board who know motion picture values we can make a rate conforming to the degree of risk there is in the loan.

Expert Judgment Required

"There is no valid reason why a man who makes nine successes out of ten should not borrow money just as cheaply as does a man who makes soap providing he has collateral to put up for his loans. Of course, the banker finds it much easier to appraise the value of soap than of motion pictures. It takes expert motion picture judgment to pass on these loans. The fact that these men in the motion picture industry have passed on these loans and put their names on the applications gives a banker confidence — and brings money into the industry. We believe we have here a plan that can solve the industry's financial difficulties. So far as we know there has been nothing like it before anywhere in the world.

"Of course, from the nature of the business it is probable the industry always will have to pay a little higher rate of interest than the average. The price of money always depends on safety, availability and knowledge. We give it safety by our indorsement. We are trying to make it available by satisfying the public and the banks that it is safe. And we have the information in our executive committee that will enable us to deal with these loans wisely, I think."

Making the Big Town Theatre Pay

Hyman, of the Brooklyn Strand, Discusses the Subject from Viewpoint of Practical Showman—The Rugged Road to Profit

By EDWARD L. HYMAN,
Managing Director Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre

This article is the first in a series prepared exclusively for EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW by prominent exhibitors who won the advertising prizes given by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., during its anniversary week, Feb. 18 to 25 last. Eight of these exhibitors went to Los Angeles as the guests of First National. Mr. Hyman, the author of this article, not only has helped to make the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre a big success, but is keeping it so.

IT is just as difficult proportionately to run a small town theatre upon a profitable basis in this hazardous period as it is to wean earnings from a metropolitan theatre. With something like 1,000,000 unemployed even now and 6,000,000 out of work about six months ago, it is my belief the exhibitor has had a full test of his business acumen and staying powers. Thus it seems almost like heresy to fling generalities in the exhibitors' face and that is about all one may do when conditions of theatre operation are so diverse and individual situations so different. Might I state one contention with a definite degree of sanguinity? The man who has made a profit in the last six months or year needs no cheap advice. Who knows, he might even resent my suggestions as gross impertinences.

Yet there are a few sharply etched conclusions which I have retrieved out of the bewildering maze of dizzy conditions which have assailed me recently as a manager of a metropolitan theatre seating 3000, and which is situated within a few minutes' ride of the world's most attractive amusement center.

What did I learn, a manager of a house in the near shadow of mighty Manhattan with its scores of motion pictures palaces and numberless other enticing entertainment?

I learned to be humble, to reflect in my theatre the wishes and ideals of my community, to uphold the high traditions which the founders of the Brooklyn Mark Strand, wise and worthy men, had conceived when I was a boy. I learned to value the fellowship of my employees as it is nurtured in a compact organization and the concentration of all our combined effort in one common cause —that of presenting a performance that I, as a manager, am willing to accept the responsibility for without excuse or qualm.

Yet all these are platitudes, ancient as the Hudson palisades, and which might be applied to the affairs of the tiniest theatre.

Specifically, certain fundamentals have lodged in my mind. These are a few of them, stated quickly:

1. Too many large city motion picture theatres lack identity. They are merely one of many places of amusement. The attraction—and not the theatre, or its reputation for quality, control the rise or fall of attendance. A metropolitan theatre that aspires to personality is not lost in the shuffle. The large city theatre that develops over a period of time the institutional idea and keeps on developing it, and in addition presents consistently commendable shows—that theatre may have its dangerous days, but it will rarely call for the use of red ink.

2. To operate a metropolitan house upon a basis of profit it is necessary to g a g e competition which has been on the increase in most large cities. To duplicate the program of a competitor may win a few of his patrons. To outdo and outgeneral him in presentation, novelty, service, quality, is to leave him behind.

3. We are all simple folk, who understand and like only those things which are simple and pleasant. City folk are the same as small town folk except that the city folk live faster, assimilate and demand more of artificial amusement and naturally are somewhat harder to satisfy because of constant exposure to entertainment. They attend the theatre more often, and of course the novelty and surprise element must be more pronounced to satisfy their appetite, for their amusement appetite is a jaded one in a sense. Then to meet this situation it is my course to contrive, to study, to plan programs which are not too much like those which are given them elsewhere and which are much different from those which experience has led them to expect.

4. Pictures, worthy, clean, vitalizing, constitute half the battle on the rugged road to profit. It is the city that creates stars or crazes for certain types of photoplays. It is a wise city manager who adheres to these fluctuations of his people, unless they have objectionable phases. If in business to stay the metropolitan theatre in the end must be as reputable or as dignified as a respected firm of goldsmiths or bootmakers. How many accept a featured film, surrounded with the usual film incidentals and hope to heaven the feature will "get across"?

While I faithfully feel my featured film should be sufficient unto its name when I book it, I am not wholly dependent upon it for the success of my performance. Should the film fail for some unaccountable reason, and different communities have varied reactions, it is my plan to so assemble my bill that there are other numbers which will tend to keep our reputation for quality entertainment above water. How may this stability of quality be accomplished? Through endeavoring to put on musical novelties which are worthy. Through maintaining an orchestra of highest standard. Through specializing in short subjects. Thus if the feature falls down the manager may rely upon his symphony orchestra to repay in part for the failure in that performance.

Perhaps a short subject film may overcome some of the shortcomings of the feature film, for all features cannot be features. They do not make them all that way. There are many other elements to be mixed in this recipe. You know them all—unity and coherence of your working organization, minimum of waste, maximum of efficiency in house administration, proper advertising methods, low overhead. They are legion and all worthwhile. I have only washed the high spots, spots which we sometimes neglect in keeping our eyes close to such problems as film rentals, new subject films, house expenses and the other terrible necessities. But when it is all said a little jingle runs through my mind which goes like this:

"Count that day lost whose low descending sun Finds business done at cost is business done for fun."

T. O. C. C. Formed in Kansas City

Membership on Application Only—Organization to Be Represented in Mayor's Civic Body

In the future the Kansas City Exhibitors' Association will be known as the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City.

Following the meeting of the organization at the Hotel Baltimore last week, one of the several important developments has been an invitation from Mayor Frank Cromwell of Kansas City for a committee from the exhibitors' organization to be represented in the mayor's civic body, composed of various civic groups of the city. The theatre owners will participate in all civic and community campaigns in the future.

Contrary to the past, membership to the new body can be obtained only by application, accompanied by $50. The prospective member must be a member of the M. P. T. O. A., as the city organization is in no way a departure from the national organization. The by-laws require a monthly payment of $5, while a meeting of the board of directors will be held weekly and, if necessary, oftener. Headquarters temporarily will be located at 811 Gloyd building.

The meeting last week was addressed by A. B. Carder, secretary of the National Restaurant Association.

"To have harmony paramount in your organization, you can promote progress in no swifter manner than to meet weekly, the custom which you have adopted," Mr. Carder said. "There is nothing which so quickly will dispel suspicion and doubt that one fellow exhibitor may hold for another than to gather at the same table weekly and discuss matters frankly and openly. Co-operation and harmony always have been and always will be the keynote of success for any organization."

Hoy System Again Under Fire

M. P. T. O. A. National Headquarters Issues Attack —New Form of Arbitration Under Discussion

A STATEMENT attacking the Hoy System, and declaring that the M. P. T. O. A. "are firmly behind" Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger in his suit against the Film Board of Trade of Philadelphia, was issued this week from M. P. T. O. A. National Headquarters in New York.

The statement was accompanied by a letter written by the President of the M. P. T. O. A. which read in part: "It is stated as a matter of fact that all, or nearly all, of the important distributing companies have decided to withdraw from all further participation in the Hoy System and will very shortly be entirely disassociated from it."

A copy of a statement made by Mr. Nirdlinger accompanied the letter and the M. P. T. O. A. attack, in which Mr. Nirdlinger said:

"While an adjournment was made of the injunction proceedings instituted in Common Pleas Court No. 5 by Mr. Love and myself, the action was not dropped but discontinued pending the fulfillment and good faith of the film companies in not discriminating against my theatres in general and against the Ambassador Theatre in particular; that I was not compelled in any manner, shape or form to assume any of the obligations of our predecesssors nor any of the contracts arranged or negotiated by them, a large portion of which were antedated and rushed through after settlement of the property had taken place and which they were endeavoring to force me to play.

"I did agree to play one of the pictures previously contracted for with the distinct understanding that the contract was to be made directly with me and that thereby no precedent was established obligating me in any way. There was no recognition of the Film Board of Trade nor the big stick of the Hoy System."

It is understood that a new method of arbitration to be adopted in the dealings of exchangemen and exhibitors has been under extended discussion between the M. P. T. O. A. and the Hays organization during the negotiations on contracts.

The negotiations of the three exhibitor groups with Mr. Hays are not yet completed, and it is expected the form of arbitration will be agreed upon and made public when the final results of the negotiations are announced.

Jake Wells Re-Elected Head of Virginia M.P.T.O.

Other officers were chosen as follows: Vice-president—E. C. Heins; secretary; Harry Bernstein; executive committee—G. F. Crall, Newport News; W. F. Harris, Petersburg; L. Weinsburg, Lexington, and Messrs. Wells and Bernstein, Richmond. Allegiance to the M. P. T. O. A. was reaffirmed.

That the industry is on the upgrade and that the spirit of co-operation among the producers and distributers is having a salient influence on the business was the opinion of Mr. Wells, gathered, he said, from the opinions of the exhibitors at the convention.

"I believe," he added, "that the future of the business in Virginia is a bright one, in spite of occasional unfavorable laws."

N. Y. Operators' Union Still Firm Against Wage Cut

At the regular semi-monthly meeting of Motion Picture Machine Operators' Local 306 of New York City, held Wednesday morning at Mansion Hall, East Eighth St., and attended by close to 600 operators, the attitude of the men was absolute determination not to accede to the demands of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. This body had offered the operators a 10 per cent reduction in wages for the year commencing Sept. 1.

A motion was offered and passed unanimously whereby the men went on record as willing to pay a self-inflicted assessment of 15 per cent weekly between now and the wage scale agreement to provide additional funds to carry out the policy they have decided upon, namely, to accept no wage reduction. It was pointed out at the meeting that this 15 per cent assessment would work great hardship upon the men but the general attitude at the meeting was to "give until it hurts."

No clamor or disturbance marked the meeting. The body had previously listened to the wage scale committee of the Chamber of Commerce in the Central Theatre and individual operators had expressed inability to conform to the reduced scale. Statements of these men to the effect that living costs made it impossible to accept the cut were confirmed.

The attitude of Local 306 will, it is stated, be communicated to the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce at an early date.

The News of the Week

Seventy From American Releasing

Company's Output for New Season Will Include George Beban's "Sign of the Rose"

American Releasing Corporation, making announcement for the coming year of an annual output of 70 productions reveals the fact that it has captured from competitive distributors George Beban's production The Sign of the Rose. This picture has been presented by Mr. Beban, in conjunction with a company of eight players, in certain of the larger first run theatres of the country to overwhelmingly large business, it is declared.

Simultaneously, American Releasing, through Walter E. Greene, its president, and F. B. Warren, its vice-president, announces its entire sequence in order of release for the first quarter of the 1922-1923 season at the rate of one big picture per week, beginning Sunday, Sept. 10th. An announcement is made in connection therewith of the casts, authors, directors, scenario-writers of each production. The company points out that this represents the largest amount of definitely assured product ever announced for release by any new organization in the history of the industry. American Releasing was formed in late December, 1921, but did not begin actual distribution until the second week of February, 1922.

The productions announced, and their dates of release, are as follows:

Sept. 10—Queen of the Moulin Rouge, Ray C. Smallwood's Pyramid Production of Paul M. Potter's play, featuring Martha Mansfield, Joseph Striker and Henry Harmon. Art direction by Ben Carre. Scenario by Garfield Thompson and Peter Milne. A tremendous melodrama.

Sept. 17—Timothy's Quest. A Dirigo Films, Inc., production of Kate Douglas Wiggins'. Directed by Sidney Olcott. Production manager, Charles M. Seay. Scenario by Catherine Stuart.

Sept. 24—Fools of Fortune. An A. B. Davis production written and titled by W. C. Tuttle and directed by Louis William Chaudet. Star cast includes Marguerite De La Motte, Tully Marshall, Russell Simpson, Frank Brownlee and Jack Dill.

Oct. 1—The Woman He Loved. A J. L. Frothingham production. Directed by Edward Sloman from the story by William V. Mong. All-star cast includes Marguerite De La Motte, William V. Mong and eight other prominent players.

Oct. 8—When the Desert Calls. Ray C. Smallwood-Pyramid production featuring Violet Heming, Sheldon Lewis, Robert Fraser and a big cast. A romance of the desert.

Oct. 15—The Pillagers. A story of the far north with an all-star cast of seven principals. An A. B. Davis production directed by Louis William Chaudet, and edited and titled by W. C. Tuttle, author of Fools of Fortune. Romance and melodrama.

Oct. 22—The House of Solomon. Starring William H. Strauss, supported by Brenda Moore and Nancy Deaver. Directed by Lem F. Kennedy. Produced and presented by Carl Krusada from the story by Val Cleveland.

Oct. 29—Flapper Love. From Eugene Walter's newest play, "The Flapper," which is to be presented this fall on the New York stage. All-star cast includes Faire Binney, Lucy Fox, Florence Billings, Huntley Gordon, Joe Striker, J. Barney Sherry, Julia Swayne Gordon. Directed by George Terwilliger.

Nov. 5—The Other Side. A Hugh Dierker production from the story by Thelma La Nier. Dierker is the man who produced When Dawn Came, a screen production that set the entire country talking. A story of the home with an all-star cast including six names.

Nov. 12—The Deerslayer. Another of James Fenimore Cooper's famous Leatherstocking Tales. Produced at Glacier National Park by Sacramento Pictures Corporation with entire tribes of Crow and Blackfeet Indians.

Nov. 19—Miles Brewster and the Super Sex. A Frank R. Adams production of his own story, personally supervised by the author made known internationally through his stories in Hearst's Cosmopolitan Magazine and the Saturday Evening Post.

Nov. 26—At the Crossroads, starring Seena Owen. This is Harriet Comstock's new domestic novel that is one of the best sellers to-day.

Dec. 3—The Great City. A melodrama of New York's night life—its dance palaces and its bright lights. Produced at the Whitman Bennett Studios under the personal supervision of Whitman Bennett.

41 Features and Specials Are on Vitagraph List

During the 1922-23 season, Vitagraph will release eight 7-reel special productions. There will be twenty-eight feature pictures, starring Corinne Griffith, William Duncan, Earle Williams, Alice Calhoun, Jean Paige. Larry Semon comedies to the number of six, and eight Jimmy Aubrey comedies, will be produced.

Vitagraph will also release five Jess Robbins special comedy productions of six reels each, and 52 Urban Popular Classics, besides a number of independent specials, now in preparation by independent producers.

Group Bookings Are Abandoned by F. B. O.

Following the meeting of Eastern and Southern exchange managers in the Home Office, a second convention in Chicago on July 6th and 7th marked the inauguration of the Film Booking Offices of America, the newly-named Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. This meeting served to introduce three Home Office executives to Mid-West and Western branch managers, J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O.; Harry M. Berman, general manager of distribution, and Nat G. Rothstein, publicity and advertising manager.

When the meeting closed the abandonment of group bookings by the F. B. O. was announced. The company's policy will hereafter be "picture for picture." This distribution plan was announced by Mr. Berman to the Southern and Eastern managers on July 1st and at the Chicago convention the week following.

Edward Sloman Forms His Own Producing Company

Edward "Ted" Sloman, director of many plays for the screen, among which are The Westerners, The Mutiny of the Elsinore, The Ten Dollar Raise, The Other Woman, Pilgrims of the Night, and others, has formed his own producing organization and will start work this week on the filming of a series of dramatic features, which he will personally direct and supervise.

For his initial subject Mr. Sloman has selected Blind Justice, Frank R. Adams' story which ran in serial form in Munsey's Magazine. The cast is expected to be announced shortly.

Edward Sloman

Among those on Director Sloman's staff are Chance Ward, production manager; Sherry Hall, assistant director; Max Dupont, cameraman; Billie Hodges, auditor; Hylda Hollis, scenarist; Al Risley, publicity manager; George Minnig, property man; Neal Jack, electrician, and others.

Production quarters have been established at the Fine Arts studios in Hollywood, Cal., and announcement of the company's plans for distribution is expected to be made shortly, it is stated.

Kennedy Is Representative of Associated Exhibitors

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, has announced the appointment of L. E. Kennedy as associated sales representative in Los Angeles.

Mr. Kennedy enjoys a wide acquaintance with exhibitors, for he was one of them for several years prior to 1915, when he became a Pathe Exchange salesman out of the Los Angeles office. Two years later he was appointed manager of Pathe's Los Angeles branch, which position he resigned to enter the Navy.

After the war Mr. Kennedy was appointed manager of the Fox office in Los Angeles. He was later manager of Vitagraph's Salt Lake City office.

Secretary Davis Praises Paramount

Stock Company School Also Wins Editorial Commendation in Newspapers

Congratulatory messages and editorial comments from newspapers continue to pour into the office of Adolph Zukor, lauding him for the inauguration of the Paramount Stock Company School.

One of the latest messages received is that from Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, who, in a letter to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, said:

"It (the Paramount Stock Company) has a tendency to better the lives of those who are members of the organization. I congratulate Mr. Zukor on it. I also want to congratulate its members for working for such a man as Mr. Zukor. I have had the pleasure of meeting him on several occasions, and he appeals to me as being a man whose chief ambition is to produce good pictures for the American people and do as much good to as many as he can."

The Sioux City Tribune, in its leading editorial of July 5, commends the school highly. After detailing the purposes and operation of the school, it says:

"But the public will perhaps center its attention upon the set of rules which the players have drawn up to govern their conduct. They are ideal, and if a sincere effort is made to obey them the Paramount stars should soon be above the criticism of even the bluest of blue noses."

The Pittsburgh Press, in its editorial on the Stock Company School, says: "That the men behind the movie business—the men whose capital is invested and whose profits are reduced or destroyed by any loss of public interest or favor—are entirely in earnest in talking of movie reform, is indicated in a number of ways. Perhaps the most interesting and significant is the school for film actors and actresses which is being established at Hollywood by one of the largest producing combinations in the country. * * * By means of this educational enterprise the promoters hope to produce better pictures, and the first step they are taking toward the desired end is the production of better, more serious-minded and capable actors. * * * The best wishes of the country attend the Hollywood experiment."

Harold Lloyd's "Grandma's Boy" in 10th Week

The Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors feature, "Grandma's Boy," presented by Hal Roach, entered the tenth week of its run at Dr. H. B. Breckwedel's Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, Sunday, July 16th. This breaks by three weeks the previous world's record for a feature comedy, which Harold Lloyd established with "A Sailor-Made Man."

"Crossroads of N. Y." Wins Praise from Los Angeles Papers

The Crossroads of New York, the Mack Sennett special which is being released by First National, won high praise from the newspaper critics when it was shown at Los Angeles.

"Under the two column heading, "Film is Rich in Satire," the Los Angeles Herald says: "A more entertaining, kickful picture has not come from the Sennett fun factory since the beautiful and subtle Mickey and Molly O! Many of you may enjoy The Crossroads even better than you did the two latter. Clever, howling burlesquerie it all is and the carefully selected cast 'put it over' with nary a miss. The satire is keen as a safety razor blade.

"The Crossroads of New York is a picture you can see more than once and will relish its flavor."

This is what the Los Angeles Express has to say: "Director F. Richard Jones is responsible for a cinema melodrama that is replete with climatic situations and sparkling high comedy relief. Trenchant subtitles materially aid humor of the production."

"That sparkling satire and rollicking burlesque have a very definite place on the screen nobody can deny who has the good luck to see The Crossroads of New York, which opened yesterday at Miller's," says Grace Kingsley in the Los Angeles Times.

Florence Lawrence, motion picture critic of the Los Angeles Examiner, writes: "Whether you look upon the film as a cynical comment upon life itself—or as one directed more pointedly at certain individual cases you must find many occasions for merriment and admit the Sennett supremacy for funning."

A. M. P. A. Enlists in Drive to Aid Jewish Orphanage

The A. M. P. A., representing the advertising and publicity branches of the motion picture industry in the east, has enlisted in the emergency drive for the Israel Orphan Asylum as the result of action taken at the Association's weekly meeting at the Cafe Boulevard, July 12.

In co-operation with the most prominent stars in the east and with other amusement interests represented by the theatrical producers and baseball interests, the picture people will give their co-operation in the drive to raise funds in the emergency that faces the orphanage. The asylum, which has been a shelter for more than 200 Jewish orphans who would otherwise be homeless, was totally destroyed in the Arverne, L. I., fire a short time ago.

Morrie Ryskind, who is representing the orphanage's efforts to raise these funds and who has secured the support of the publicity and advertising men announced that the following screen artists available in the East have promised their co-operation:—Dolores Cassinelli, Marion Davies, "The Blond Vampire," Johnny Hines, Alice Brady, Jack Holt, Hope Hampton, Mabel Ballin, Hugo Ballin, Zena Keefe, David Powell, Pearl White, Betty Blythe, Richard Barthelmess, Pauline Garon, Gwynedd Vernon, and Lucy Fox.

"Grandma's Boy" Wins Praise from Many Exhibitors

W. B. Frank, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, back in New York City after a five weeks' tour of northern and middle western states in the interest of Grandma's Boy, Harold Lloyd's new feature, produced by Hal Roach, declared:

"Exhibitors are welcoming Grandma's Boy with extraordinary enthusiasm because they see in it a great prosperity breeder. Business conditions generally in the territories I visited are still a little below normal, but recently there have been indications pointing to a revival in the autumn. Many big men see in Grandma's Boy just the tonic needed to insure the industry's complete recovery.

"My tour took me as far west as Minneapolis and Des Moines," continued Mr. Frank, "and I screened the picture nineteen times. Among the well known exhibitors who saw it and expressed almost unbounded enthusiasm were Jake Lourie, Park Theatre, Boston; Nathan Robbins, Avon, Utica, N. Y.; James Callahan, Regent, Rochester; Michael Shea, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; S. Barrett McCormick, Allen, Cleveland; Edward Zorn, Temple, Toledo; Max Balaban, of the Balaban & Katz enterprises, Chicago; Andrew Karzas, of the Woodlawn, Chicago's big new South Side house, and Abe Blank, of Des Moines, head of the extensive Blank interests."

Greenroomers as Universal Guests See "The Storm"

More than three hundred members of the Green Room Club, New York, one of the oldest and best known theatrical organizations in the country, were the guests of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, at the Central Theatre last Wednesday evening where The Storm, written by one of their brother members Langdon McCormick, was shown them as the feature of a "Green Room Club Night" program.

Besides the Universal-Jewel, the presentation included two other examples of McCormick's skill—a color symphony prologue for The Storm and novel mechanical effects which added greatly to the atmosphere of the showing.

Metro Abandons Program Policy

Features Will Be Offered on Own Merits and Not in Series, Atkinson Says

Program pictures are a thing of the past so far as Metro is concerned, W. E. Atkinson, general manager of the company, declared on his arrival in Hollywood from New York for a short visit at the company's studios.

This announcement that the executive committee had decided to distribute individual features on their own merits and not in series was one of the important bits of news included in Metro's plans for the coming season.

Production will be increased at the studios immediately. Another unit will be added to screen All Brothers Were Valiant, a melodrama of the sea written by Ben Amos Williams. Irvin Willat will direct this feature.

Country Love, under the direction of Emile Chautard, has been begun. This is the first of the special stories series which will be made with special casts, headed by Billie Dove. Among those already signed for Country Love are Cullen Landis, Edythe Chapman, Sylvia Ashton, Hardee Kirkland, Mabel Van Buren, Thomas O'Brien, Carl Gerard, Lincoln Steadman, Gertrude Short, Louise MacIntosh, Jack Gardner and Noah Beery.

This picture will be followed by the productions East of Suez by E. Lloyd Sheldon; The Girl in the Gilded Cage, by Marion Fairfax, and A Temporary Marriage, by Cardell Hale.

Production of Quincy Adams Sawyer, the Metro S-L Special, which Clarence Badger is directing, started this week. John Bowers and Barbara La Mar have the leading roles. Within the next ten days Clara Kimball Young will start work on Enter Madame, her second starring picture for Metro.

Fred Niblo will begin soon at the Mayer studios on his first of four pictures for Metro. In accordance with her doctor's orders, Laurette Taylor will not arrive in Hollywood until August first instead of July first as originally planned. Filming of Peg O' My Heart will start August tenth, with King Vidor directing.

Rex Ingram has completed his new production for Metro. It has not yet been titled. The director will leave for New York in about three weeks, to make his next picture in the East.

Bull Montana will make eight two-reel comedies at the Metro studios during the coming year.

Neilan Completes Novel Film Library for Use in Future Productions

Marshall Neilan has just completed a novel motion picture library or "morgue," as they say in newspaper circles, which discloses one of the reasons for his recent tour of Europe.

Among Mr. Neilan's future productions to be made at the Goldwyn studio there are stories calling for various atmospheric scenes in England, France, Germany and Italy. Accompanied by Frank Urson, director, and David Kesson, his chief cinematographer, Mr. Neilan visited all of the foreign locales which will play important parts in his future productions and photographed the desired scenes in conformity with their appearance in his coming pictures.

Animals Have Temperament, Too

The all-animal picture which Herman has just finished for Century cost him nearly eight weeks' time owing to the temperament of the actors, none of them human but all displaying some of the characteristics. There were over fifty animals in this picture of many varieties, and they necessitated rare patience on the part of the director and his cameraman, Blake Wagner. A great deal of night work was necessary and the actors became peevish and started fights if not constantly watched.

Finds Southern Exhibitors Optimistic

J. C. Ragland, of Associated Exhibitors, Declares Customary Summer Conditions Prevailing

Returning to New York from a tour of the South and Southwest, which extended all the way to Texas, J. C. Ragland, secretary of Associated Exhibitors, declared he had found customary summer conditions prevailing, with exhibitors generally showing a spirit of decided optimism.

"The Outlook is best reflected in the fact that I brought back a big carpetbag loaded with contracts for Grandma's Boy," he said.

"In my negotiations I had a novel experience. Every picture man knows that a great many exhibitors, when waited upon by a distributor's representative, are given to telling him how far short the new offering falls of previous pictures by the same star. In not a single instance on this trip did an exhibitor fail, even before the subject of prices arose, to proclaim Grandma's Boy far and away the finest thing Harold Lloyd ever did or Hal Roach ever produced."

Mr. Ragland formed the following conclusions regarding conditions in the South:

"In Washington I found business particularly fine. One of the most important exhibitors in that territory told me he had absolutely no couse for complaint. In Baltimore conditions are slightly below normal but this is partly explained by the presence of a large number of outside amusement places. If the statement of the manager of one of Richmond's largest houses that his theatre has not had a losing week in something like 57 be literally true certainly there is no cause for anxiety in the Virginia city.

"In the Charlotte, Atlanta, Birmingham and Memphis territories I heard neither serious complaints nor expressions of great enthusiasm. General comment was to the effect that business is neither better nor worse than might be expected.

"I arrived in New Orleans in the midst of one of the worst heat spells the city had experienced in a long time, and found business affected also by the recent severe floods. However, the New Orleans territory always recovers more or less rapidly from a setback and I predict that with the coming of cooler weather and the tourist influx business will again hit its former happy stride.

"Dallas territory, too, was suffering from intense heat, but it is gratifying to report the managers of the largest two theatres, the Palace and the Hope, as saying that, season and weather considered, business is quite as good as could be expected.

"In Oklahoma City territory business is moving along on about an even keel for summer, and exhibitors are hopeful for the usual good fall season. My visit to Kansas City was especially satisfactory. Sam Harding, of the Liberty Theatre, was away, unfortunately, but I was so lucky as to meet his brother, David, a capable business man, who knows how to laugh in the face of the usual summer decline instead of crying because winter doesn't last through the year. I had good talks, too, with Frank Newman, of the Newman and Royal Theatres, and was deeply impressed by the splendid business enjoyed by the Newman Theatre, and the dignified, high class way in which the house is conducted.

"In St. Louis the airdromes are doing particularly well and the indoor houses are suffering no more than the customary summer calm. My visit in Louisville was three-fourths personal and only one-fourth business. I could not but see, though, that the lineup of picture attractions was of the very best."

Staulaws Ready to Start "Singed Wings" for Famous

Singed Wings, a story by Katherine Newlin Burt which appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine, will be Penrhyn Stanlaws' Paramount production following Pink Gods, which is now practically completed.

Bebe Daniels will have the leading role, that of a Spanish dancer in the waterfront cafes of San Francisco. Romance, color and heart appeal are proclaimed by Paramount as the story's attribute. The supporting cast is now being chosen.

Amateur Review of "Ruling Passion" Widely Circulated

An amateur critic has come into his own in Colorado, where the Colorado Springs Telegraph received a criticism of George Arliss in The Ruling Passion, released by United Artists, that was deemed so good it was reprinted. The author was F. C. Thoronton, a movie fan and a regular reader of the Telegraph. This is what he wrote, in part:

"All must see this picture, not only for itself but because it is a harbinger of future pictures that will refresh our tired selves and lift the cinema art to heights we never dreamed of."

Not being a regular critic, Mr. Thoronton didn't say where he saw The Ruling Passion, but a letter in the hands of H. N. Martin, general manager of Distinctive Productions, Inc., reveals that the Princess Theatre, Colorado Springs, managed by Pat August, was the house. Mr. August writes:

"There are things in this business that make one want to stand in his lobby and greet his patrons as they pass out. Such a picture is The Ruling Passion and, as I said of Disraeli, it is a production that makes one hold his head a little higher for having shown it."

Nita Naldi Signs Five Year Contract With Famous Players

Nita Naldi, whose work in Blood and Sand, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde and Experience, has stamped her as one of the most vivid personalities on the screen, has just signed a five-year contract as a member of the Paramount Stock Company.

Announcement of the acquisition of Miss vice-president of the Famous Players-Naldi was made by Jesse L. Lasky, first Lasky Corporation, before leaving Saturday for Hollywood. Mr. Lasky arrived home ten days ago from Europe, where he had spent several weeks conferring with famous authors, and his departure for the West Coast followed a fortnight crowded with conferences on future Paramount pictures.

Miss Naldi will go back to the Lasky studio September 1 and, as a member of the Paramount stock company, will play leading parts in a number of productions which Mr. Lasky is now planning.

Reincarnation Party in New Valentino Picture

A reincarnation party, so-called, is one of the episodes in The Young Rajah, the new Paramount picture starring Rodolph Valentino, now being filmed under the direction of Philip Rosen, and plays an important part in that story.

The idea of the party, which was incorporated into the adaptation of the play by Alethea Luce and the novel, Amos Judd, by June Mathis was that every guest should come dressed in the costume and made up in the type of the person or character which he might imagine himself to have been in past ages, according to the reincarnation theory. The function adds a new touch to the masquerade idea.

Variety in type and costume was the predominating note of this sequence in which some hundred and fifty people, each playing a different personality, participated.

"One Clear Call" Wins Newspaper Praise in Many Cities

One Clear Call, the John M. Stahl production which is being released by First National, is doing big business all over the country, according to reports received at the offices of Louis B. Mayer Productions, Inc. Paul Mooney, who is making a tour of First National Exchanges in behalf of One Clear Call, wires: "One Clear Call is greatest box office attraction of the year. In big demand everywhere, and runs are being extended."

Newspaper critics are enthusiastic in their praise of this First National attraction. May Tinee, motion picture critic of the Chicago Tribune, has the following to say:

"If you're able to stand considerable wear and tear on your emotions, One Clear Call is a play to not miss seeing. Just be assured that if you enjoy fine work it is there for your seeing at the Chicago."

"Observer" writes the following in the Chicago Examiner: "We want you to see One Clear Call. You'll say it is the most realistic, absorbing film you've seen."

In Detroit the picture caused as much favorable comment as it did in Chicago. Says the Detroit Free Press, in a lengthy review: "Few pictures shown in recent months will touch the emotions as does One Clear Call, a drama of love, loyalty and sacrifice. It is a story of intense heart interest which will bring tears even to the most blasé, but which elevates and makes one the better for having seen it."

The Detroit Times characterizes One Clear Call as "one of the best of recent productions."

Dorothy Gish Will Play Opposite Richard Barthelmess

Another member of the celebrated Griffith triumvirate of the screen has joined Inspiration Pictures, which announces that Dorothy Gish will play opposite Richard Barthelmess in his fifth starring vehicle, Fury, which will be filmed as soon as The Bondboy, in which Mr. Barthelmess is now appearing, is completed.

This will be Dorothy Gish's first appearance under other than the Griffith management since she entered pictures.

"I look forward with keenest anticipation to resuming associations with Mr. Barthelmess, whose work I admire so greatly," said Miss Gish.

Rates "Nanook of North" Among 12 Best of the Year

While Nanook of the North, Pathe's special feature, is just beginning its first run in the best theatres of the country, newspaper reviewers are putting themselves on record with definite ratings. Among these is James W. Dean, whose reviews are printed in upwards of seven hundred newspapers which use the Newspaper Enterprise Association service.

Mr. Dean rates Nanook of the North among the twelve best films of the year.

Keegan Back with Eggers

Jack Keegan, formerly in the employ of Associated First National and other prominent concerns in the business, including Selznick and Motion Picture News, has returned to the Eggers Engraving Company as a salesman.

Hammerstein and Tearle Co-Stars

Myron Selznick Puts in Production "One Week of Love," Pet Story of "Eddie" Montagne, with George Archainbaud Directing

By wire from Los Angeles, President Myron Selznick, of Selznick Pictures Corporation, has just released the first definite statement which has to do with the production plans which the Selznick company are whipping into shape for the season 1922-23.

Some time ago it was announced that the company had abandoned its policy of years' standing which called for the production and distribution of so-called Star Series pictures and in the future would make nothing but Specials, starring screen artists chosen with regard for their individual fitness for the roles.

The announcement from the Coast is that the first of the Selznick specials has been put into production with Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle who will be jointly starred in the official billing, and Niles Welch, leading man who has supported Miss Hammerstein in some of her most successful star series releases, also playing an important part in the production.

The production has been entitled One Week of Love and is being made from a story by Edward J. Montagne and George Archainbaud with George Archainbaud directing.

One Week of Love is a story on which Edward J. Montagne has been working off and on for a good many years. He has been revising it, smoothing it out, and "playing with it" until he is satisfied that it is possessed of just the qualities which the modern picture going public want for their complete entertainment.

"Eddie" Sturgis, who has assisted in the direction of some of the important pictures recently made by the Selznick company, among them Reported Missing, is helping Mr. Archainbaud on One Week of Love. A number of the Selznick production people have already left Los Angeles for the purpose of arranging for the locations in Southern California and Mexico which will be used in the production of the picture.

Good News Travels Slowly

But bad news seems to have wings. Perhaps it is because of this condition that some people do not know us.

The good news of the Personal Interest we take in the handling of each print has not come to their attention. They are traveling the longest course in reaching us. But in the long run they will insist on "Personal Interest" printing.

Pictorial News Bulletin Is Paramount's Newest Service

The Paramount Pictures News Bulletin is the latest thing in Paramount service evolved by the Publicity department and being put over with the co-operation of the field staff of the Exploitation department. This bulletin consists of an illustrated news feature of timeliness in connection with the release of Paramount pictures.

For instance, in connection with the release of The Dictator, starring Wallace Reid, the bulletin carried a late and exclusive photograph of Lenine, dictator of Soviet Russia, addressing a huge gathering in Petrograd, just before he was taken ill.

These news bulletins are furnished free to exhibitors.

Pearl White Ends Paris Engagement

Back in New York Ready to Start Work on Pathe Serial Which She Says Will Astonish Public and Exhibitors

Pearl White, fresh from her stage triumphs in Paris, returned to America on the Olympic, Wednesday, July 12, to fill her engagement to star in a Patheserial is now in course of production at the George B. Seitz Studios. Miss White was received on the steamship pier by a small army of reporters and a battery of cameras.

"For some time to come," said Miss White in answer to a shower of questions, "I'm all American once more—and glad of it. Paris has been tremendously kind to me. It may look a bit ungrateful, but the fact is that I've come over without a 'Paris fashion' except what I have on. I'm here to work in a new Patheserial that is going to astonish the nation. I ought to know, for I've read the story—and you may remember that I've been over the serial production road several times before. I know the public which supports Patheserials all over the world, and couldn't help getting familiar with the exhibitor angle. So it's no idle jest when I assure both that they're going to be astonished."

Miss White said that she was feeling fit and ready for resumption of her characteristic picture work—meaning powerful dramatic scenes and daring physical "stunts."

The action of the Patheserial again starring Pearl White is said to reveal in an original and powerfully dramatic manner the lights and shadows of the heart of New York.

N. Y. World Credits Pathe News with First Irish War Pictures

The New York "World" of Sunday, July 9, printed a four-column layout of duly credited Pathe News first Irish civil war siege pictures with an accompanying article beginning as follows:

"Due to the foresight of Emanuel Cohen, editor of the Pathe News, the 'World' has been provided with the accompanying photographs. Several days before the crisis developed on June 28 between the Irish Free State forces and the insurgents who were operating from the Four Courts Building in Dublin, Mr. Cohen cabled to his two best cameramen in London, Gordon Lewis and Leslie Wyant, to get to Dublin in a hurry. They arrived just before the insurgents kidnapped Lieut. Gen. 'Ginger' O'Connell, Assistant Chief of Staff of the Free State forces, on June 27, to be held as a hostage in their headquarters in the Four Courts. When the attack on the Four Courts started on June 30, the Pathe cameras were in position cranking the proceedings. The films are being shown to-day."

Film Final Scenes of "Purple Highway," Starring Miss Kennedy

Over at the Times Square Theatre, New York, this week Director Henry Kolker is filming the final scenes of The Purple Highway, with Madge Kennedy and a cast of star players, including Monte Blue, Dore Davidson, Pedro De Cordoba and Vincent Coleman. The full chorus of the big musical show Sue, Dear is being used in these scenes, as The Purple Highway is among other things a story of the stage, and Madge Kennedy as its heroine rises from a slavey in a public house to a Broadway luminary.

It is stated that the production expenses of The Purple Highway approximate a quarter of a million dollars. This is the play developed by Rufus Steele from the Broadway stage success, Dear Me, written by Hale Hamilton and Luther Reed and produced by John Golden.

Carey Picture "The Kick-Back" Booked by Capitol

Harry Carey's first production for release through the Film Booking Offices of America will be the attraction at the Capitol Theatre, New York, beginning Sunday, July 22, marking the first time that Mr. Rothafel has ever booked any of the Carey productions for presentation at his playhouse. The Kick-Back has been selected as the final title of this feature, superseding the working title of "Combat."

The Kick-Back shows Carey in a typical role. The action is laid in Arizona, near the Mexican border and the story calls for rapid and thrilling action. Carey is supported in this picture by Ethel Grey Terry, Henry B. Walthall, Charles J. LeMoyne and Vester Pagg.

This picture, which will be released in the early fall, will be followed by Good Men and True, from the story by Eugene Rhodes, which Carey is now completing at the R-C Studio.

Hatrick in Europe Acquires Material for "The Mirror"

Edgar Hatrick, general manager of the International News, whose service is released through Universal, has returned to New York from Europe, where he went in April to reorganize the news gathering staff of International, as far as the collection of news pictures in Europe and Asia was concerned. Just as his task was completed he was taken ill with typhoid fever and sent to the hospital on May 1.

Mr. Hatrick reports that his work was entirely accomplished before he was taken ill, and that arrangements have been made materially to strengthen the product which International will receive from across the water. Another object of Mr. Hatrick's trip which was successful was the securing of a number of very early negatives of news events for The Mirror, the novelty reel which will be released once a month through Universal.

Moran Will Shift from Small Town to City for Locale

Lee Moran is an adept at making two-reel scenarios of small town comedy. Three of those that he recently helped write and starred in as well are Some Family, the story of a bashful young man.

In Women First, Moran is the proud owner of a small hotel. Business is bad so he tries different methods to bring it in, some more or less shady.

Foolish Lives shows how wives can start trouble between the best of men friends.

Mr. Moran is beginning another series on an entirely different theme, but embodying his own distinctive type of humor. The scenes will be laid in the city, and take off the different types to be found there.

Pathe Product Proves Popular in Australasia

A communication was received by Pathe this week from A. B. Hellmrich, General Manager of Exhibitors Alliance Films Ltd., of Sydney, Australia, commenting on the steady improvement of business abroad and particularly in the amusement field. An exclusive contract was arranged in February of this year whereby the Exhibitors Alliance Films Ltd., arranged to distribute all of Pathe's product in Australasia.

"It will interest you to know," writes General Manager Hellmrich, "that Pathe and Associated Exhibitors productions are now being widely distributed by Exhibitors Alliance Films, Ltd., which is controlled by the Australian Exhibitors. Offices have been opened in all States and the future is most encouraging."

"Cleve" Adams Promoted

D. G. C. (Cleve) Adams, formerly Jewel representative in Universal's Indianapolis Exchange and later manager of the "U" exchange in Cincinnati, has been promoted to the position of personal representative for Art. A. Schmidt, Universal's general manager of exchanges.

Maurice Strauss, formerly short products manager in the "U" Cincinnati exchange, will succeed Adams.

"End of the String of Sausage Pictures Reached"—Neilan

"The end of the string of sausage pictures has been reached," said Marshall Neilan, in a statement this week.

"The trade papers have predicted a big season starting September. Their prophecy is as correct as that made by any human based on a close observation of facts, figures and events now taking place affecting motion picture production.

"Producers on the West Coast have come face to face with the fact that the modus operandi of the sausage industry has nothing in common with the making of successful screen productions.

"The motion picture public wants a change of diet. It cannot stomach the type of picture made along sausage lines. At last, producers have come to realize this. Instead of seeing how fast they can make four pictures, they now see how good they can make one.

"Every large organization announces fewer pictures for the coming season. Every company is making bigger pictures right now. Every producer—or nearly every producer—is now making pictures along lines that must result in better pictures.

"Exhibitors this coming season will see more big attractions than at any similar period in the past. They will also find a marked decrease in the quantity of output.

"One of the fundamental causes for optimism for the new season is the fact that bigger and better screen entertainment is about to be realized. This will do more to put pictures back on the map with the public than any other single factor."

Final Work on Blythe Film

The actual photographing of Betty Blythe in How Women Love at the Whitman Bennett Studio, for presentation under the management of B. B. Productions, Inc., has been completed and the cutting of the picture by Director Kenneth Webb, and the final titling by Dorothy Farnum, are now occupying the attention of the organization.

Carl Laemmle Issues Warning

Tells Exhibitors Not to Book Pictures That Are Not Yet Made—Says Industry Is Getting Still Further Removed from Monopoly

Carl Laemmle is in Europe, but the president of the Universal apparently is taking just as much interest in the industry in this country as though he were here. This warning has been sent to exhibitors in this country: "Don't book pictures that are not yet made."

"The biggest piece of folly any theatre owner can commit in these enlightened days of the moving picture business is to book any picture that is not yet made," says Mr. Laemmle.

Producing pictures is the biggest gamble in the world. Not a soul in any studio knows until a picture is finished and shown whether it is good or not! Pack that into your head. It is the plain, unadorned, inside truth about the business.

"The story may be a whale, the director a crackerjack, the actors splendid—but the whole thing may turn out to be a flivver just the same. The producer has to take that chance, but that is no reason why you should gamble.

"You can play the surest sure-thing business in the world this fall if you do your booking wisely. Not one single element of gamble has to enter into your end of the business. You can play safe, but you can't play safe if you play with fire!

"That exhibitor who books for a whole season, or half a season or a quarter of a season in advance is playing with fire. He is guaranteeing to show pictures which have not even been made. The producer does not know that they will be worth a rap. He hopes they will be good. But you can't afford to live on the other fellow's hopes. Even if they turn out to be as good as the producer hopes they will be, that is no guaranty that something a darned sight better will not come along.

"The exhibition end of this business has settled down to a real business basis. The smart exhibitor will make money without luck, simply by applying to his booking the brains God gave him.

"As far as producing is concerned, this industry is farther removed from monopoly than ever before. It is not at all an uncommon thing nowadays for some unheard-of-company to come trotting along with a corking good picture. When that picture comes into the market you want it, and you ought to keep your booking dates so open that you can get it.

"Don't be mesmerized by any fear that you can't get all the good stuff you need. Don't book up a job lot of unmade or untried pictures just to fill up your booking dates. You can pick and choose from them this season as you never could before.

"I must say for Universal that it stands on the merits of the magnificent pictures it is about to release. If you don't want them after seeing them then it is lucky for you and even for us that you did not book them before seeing them. If this is true of Universal pictures it is true of all pictures. If you book by any other method you're gambling when you don't have to!"

"East Is West" Completed by C. Talmadge

Constance Talmadge's picture, East is West, has been completed at the United Studios under the direction of Sidney Franklin, and Producer Joseph M. Schenck declares the film will prove one of the year's sensations.

The film, which is to be released through Associated First National, is a picturization of the stage play of the same name in which Fay Bainter starred for years. It is said to be the most elaborate and pretentious production which Miss Talmadge has ever appeared in. Ten weeks were consumed in the filming of the adaptation of the play, which was prepared by Frances Marion. Miss Talmadge plays the role of dainty, fragile Ming Toy.

Edward Burns plays opposite Miss Talmadge. Others in the cast are E. A. Warren, Frank Lanning, Warner Oland, Nigel Barrie, Nick De Ruiz and Jim Wang.

What is said to be one of the largest sets ever erected for a motion picture production was the Chinese Love Boat, in which a large part of the action takes place. Another striking set was a street scene in Shanghai.

VITAGRAPH STARS

Live News of the West Coast

BY RENEE BEEMAN

King Baggott has returned from Kentucky where three weeks were spent in filming scenes of the annual race track classic for "The Kentucky Derby."

The Shriek will summon Ben Turpin and Kathryn McGuire to begin immediately with production of the next Mack Sennett-Ben Turpin two-reel comedy special, under the direction of F. Richard Jones.

Jack and the Beanstalk, Century's latest comedy Fairy Tale, has been finished under the direction of Alf Goulding. This is the second Fairy Tale to be made by Century with Baby Peggy as the star. Her first was Little Red Riding Hood.

Baby Peggy is being starred in a series of the best-known Fairy Tales, with Julius Stern personally supervising every detail of the productions.

E. A. Schiller, general representative of Loew State, Inc., is in Los Angeles for a week's stay on business connected with Loew's State Theatre and office building. He has returned from an extended inspection tour through the United States and Canada, during which he visited the principal theatres of the 300 controlled by Marcus Loew.

The theatrical manager is accompanied by Lionel H. Keene, who will be a western representative of Loew's with headquarters in San Francisco. Both expressed the opinion that the theatre business in Los Angeles is in better condition than in any other city in the country that they have visited. This, Mr. Schiller said, is probably due to the fact that Los Angeles is an all-the-year-round resort and is constantly entertaining thousands of tourists.

With a heavy fall schedule of releases looming, things hum merrily at the Hal Roach studios.

The actual shooting on Harold Lloyd's next picture, temporarily titled Doctor's Orders, has been completed. Three previews of the picture have been held and the negative has been approved by Lloyd and is ready to be shipped to New York. This is the first Lloyd picture under the new contract with Pathe, which calls for six releases. Mildred Davis has the lead opposite Lloyd, while the other principals are Eric Mayne, Normand Hammond and John T. Prince. The story was written by Hal Roach, Sam Taylor and Jean Havez, with titles by H. M. "Beanie" Walker. The picture was directed by Fred Newmeyer.

Universal productions now in the making or in preparation are: Another Man's Shoes, a novel by Victor Bridges and will be a vehicle for Herbert Rawlinson. Arthur Statter is adapting it to the screen, the director has not been selected.

Laramie Lad will be the next Edward Gibson vehicle. It is a Ralph Cummins story and appeared in a popular magazine; it is being adapted to the screen by A. P. Younger. Gibson is now busy on Misfit Becomes Chaperone, also a Ralph Graves story. Edna Murphy is the leading woman.

The Girl Who Ran Wild is being filmed with Gladys Walton in the lead, after which she will enact The Lavender Bath Lady, a new story recently purchased, written by Shannon Fife. The continuity is being prepared by George Randolph Chester, who has joined the Universal staff of writers.

Chester and George Hull prepared the Bret Harte classic M'Liss which will also serve Miss Walton and will be directed by Rupert Julian with Vernon Steele for leading man.

The Flirt is nearing completion with Helen Jerome Eddy, Eileen Percy, Edward Hearne, George Nichols, Harold Goodwin, Lloyd Whitlock, Buddy Messenger, Lydia Knott, Nell Craig, William Walsh and numerous other well-known players.

Frank Mayo has begun work on Wolf Law under the direction of Stuart Paton. It is the story of the north country, adapted to the screen by Charles Sarver, who has scenarized most of the Mayo stories. The star will be supported by Nick DeRuiz, Harry Carter, Sylvia Breamer and Herbert Fortier.

The Long Chance, directed by Jack Conway, as a Universal-Jewel all star special has been completed. It is a Peter B. Kyne story of the rugged West in an earlier day when men had to be two-fisted and were equipped with the gambler's instinct to get along. Henry B. Walthall has the character lead and Marjorie Daw the chief feminine rôle. Boyd Irwin, William Bertram, Leonard Clapham and Jack Curtis have the other principal rôles.

The Radio King is in the 15th episode, with Roy Stewart in the lead. The Galloping Kid, an Edward Gibson vehicle, has been shooting on location for the past ten days.

Edward Laemmle is in Europe with Harry Meyers as leading man, Charles Stumar as cameraman and Tenny Wright as assistant, for the making of Ivanhoe in its original locale.

William Desmond, Laura La Plante and twenty players have sojourned in the snow covered mountains of Truckee, Calif., for three-fourths of the time that The Perils of the Yukon, their historical serial has been in production.

Lon Chaney is starring in Bitter Sweet, a William Dudley Pelley story of a crippled underworld king. The elaborate underworld, Chinese cafe set built at Universal, will be destroyed by a caving in, to be caused supposedly by the San Francisco earthquake of 1906. Virginia Valli is the leading woman opposite Chaney and Jack Mower has the second masculine lead.

Work will be started immediately on an adaption of Donn Byrne's popular novel, The Stranger's Banquet, which Marshall Neilan purchased the motion picture rights to shortly after the book was published by Harper and Brothers in 1919.

This production will be the first feature produced by Mr. Neilan under the new Goldwyn contract. The offices have been moved from the Hollywood Studios to the Culver City plant.

Blanche Sweet will return to the screen in Quincy Adams Sawyer, which is to be filmed for Metro by the Sawyer-Lubin organization under the direction of Clarence G. Badger. She will have the leading feminine rôle. Miss Sweet was for many years one of the leading stars of the Biograph company. She retired several years ago on account of illness and it was not until recently when she married Marshall Neilan that she again appeared in the public eye. The cast will present, besides Miss Sweet, Barbara La Marr, John Bowers, Louise Fazenda and Lon Chaney and several other well-known players.

The Grauman Metropolitan Theatre will open in Los Angeles about the middle of September. It is located in the center of the shopping district and is one of the most beautiful buildings in the city.

The exhibitor was questioned the other day concerning the over-seating of the city, for if he gives four shows daily, he will increase the capacity about 16,000.

"To say the town is over-seated," explained Mr. Grauman, "is to overlook the growth that comes with these houses. Thousands of people come from outside towns to see a good show and the large houses, giving fine exhibitions, have increased the population considerably. And before returning home, these thousands leave a vast amount of money with the city's business houses. So it is a natural conclusion that the multiplication of theatres will create its own business.

"Speaking theatrically, the population of Los Angeles, with its contributing territory, is well over a million and the new Grauman Metropolitan Theatre, although much beyond the dreams of many exhibitors, is not beyond the demands of greater Los Angeles."

Following a long and successful career as a director under some of the screen's foremost producers, Edward "Ted" Sloman has completed arrangements for the forming of his own company and will start work at once on the filming of a series of strong dramatic features, according to announcement made this week. For his first picture, Director Sloman has selected Frank R. Adams' popular crook story, Blind Justice, which appeared in Munsey's Magazine.

The cast for the first Sloman picture and the company's plans will be announced shortly. Mr. Sloman expects to release through the state rights field.

Filming has been started by Myron Selznick on a new production which will have as co-stars Elaine Hammerstein and Conway Tearle.

The working title of the production is Blazing Sands and is the work of Edward J. Montagne, author of Evidence, Under Oath and many other Selznick successes. George Archinbaud, who has directed Miss Hammerstein in her most recent productions, will also direct this latest vehicle.

Conway Tearle is coming to the West Coast from New York especially to appear in this production. The casting of these prominent players together in one production is in line with the recently announced policy adopted by Selznick of doing away with individual star pictures and making nothing but big specials with all star casts.

Short Subjects and Serials

Educational Gets Tony Sarg Almanac

During the Coming Year Distributing Organization Will Release Fortnightly Twenty-six Single-Reelers

One of the important additions to the program of short subjects to be distributed by Educational Film Exchanges in the new season soon to begin will be the Tony Sarg Almanac, the single-reel animated picture by this famous artist which has made such a hit on Broadway and in leading first-run houses in the rest of the country.

Educational will release twenty-six pictures in this series in the year of 1922-23, beginning the last week in August.

Mr. Sarg has been known for years as one of the country's leading magazine artists, and has also become famous for his marionettes. The collection, study and making of toys has always been a hobby with him, and it was in the following of this hobby that he got on to the track that led him to the production of one of the most popular series of short motion pictures that have ever been made.

In his study of toys of various nations the artist became interested in the old shadowgraphs of China, which were in vogue centuries ago and which Mr. Sarg considers the first approach to the present day motion picture. The shadowgraphs consisted of silhouette "cut-outs," operated with strings maneuvered in a frame set upon a stage.

From these shadowgraphs Mr. Sarg worked out his method of causing silhouettes to perform the most intricate movements. No strings are used, and the figures are so cleverly jointed that they can be made to move in almost any conceivable manner.

The process is distinctly different from that used in making the ordinary animated cartoon, and with much less time required in the mechanical work it permits greater attention to and elaboration of the story and other details.

"Two Men," with Tom Santschi, Is Strong Western

Harvey Gates has provided a story and a scenario for Tom Santschi which will make an excellent two-part release for Universal. Its title is Two Men, and Robert North Bradbury has directed it.

Mr. Santschi has the role of Jack Mason, a gambler, an honest one, by the way, who raises a child whose mother has been killed in an accident. As the girl grows to womanhood she falls in love with Coles, a man who has been befriended by her foster-father when ranchers accuse the youngster of stealing and attempt to lynch him. Later it develops the man is innocent. The two young folks declare their love, but Coles, seeing that Mason is in love with his ward, tells the girl that he cannot take advantage of him and that he is going away. Mason convinces Coles that the girl is going to have the man she wants. He has to whip him first, but it wins his point.

Percy Pembroke has the role of Coles, and plays it well. Mr. Santschi finds several opportunities for the use of his fists, which means there are some lively scraps. The picture does not depend on these, however, for any particular interest it may have. Its strength lies in its straight drama. G. B.

"Noble Bachelor" in Holmes Series Is Strong Drama

The Noble Bachelor, one of the series of two-part Sherlock Holmes stories which Educational is releasing, easily will rank as one of the best so far shown. It has a mixture of drama and comedy, the former predominating and the latter just sufficient in quantity to operate as a leavening force.

Eille Norwood in the rôle of Sherlock sustains his reputation of capacity for finished work, of portraying the detective in dignified and convincing manner. In the present instance Sherlock has an unusual case—that of a bridegroom deserted just after he had been formally pronounced a husband. At the ceremony the bride discovers husband No. 1, whom she had supposed dead. Her trepidation matches that displayed by the bridegroom when a former flame had denounced the marriage a few moments before. The detective straightens out the tangle to the satisfaction of the four concerned.

It's a pretty story, with a good measure of suspense. G. B.

Reports on "Timber Queen" Indicate Record Bookings

Pathe reports advance bookings of The Timber Queen, with Ruth Roland, released July 16, to have broken the record of any other Patheserial. In the list are many houses in different sections of the country which never before have played a serial. An unusual volume of direct reports from exhibitors, by mail and by telegraph, show enthusiasm for the subject's entertainment and box office value, one of the most recent samples from A. K. Beausad, manager of the World in Motion Theatre, Kansas City, being quoted as follows:

"Just Screened Ruth Roland in Timber Queen, and in my judgment it is one of the best serials that I have ever seen. Wonderful scenery, plenty of action and thrills. It surely ought to be a big box office attraction."

New Hurd Cartoons Will Make 'Em All Sit Up and Wonder

C. C. Burr is bringing a real novelty to the screen, releasing it through Educational. The first of the series of six subjects which will be available within the year is One Ol' Cat, a comedy by Earl Hurd. The announcement on the screen sets forth that the picture shows "for the first time Mr. Hurd's latest discoveries in screen cartooning, by which he secures perfect co-ordination in the movement of drawn figures and living beings."

Really it is more than co-ordination, if by that term is implied the simple action of a drawn figure fading into a living one. Here, for example, a living figure pitches a drawn ball to a drawn figure, the latter in one instance batting it back to him and hitting him on the nose. The single reel is filled with incidents that will be mystifying to those who ordinarily in matters pertaining to the film do not class themselves as laymen.

The picture is one that will stand up in a 3500-seat house as well as one of 250. It is a genuine novelty and filled with real entertainment quality. G. B.

Kinograms Shows Remarkable Views of Target Practice

In the eastern edition of Kinograms No. 2160 under the title In the Pacific—Coast Thrills to Naval Maneuvers there are remarkable views of target practice bringing into play the big guns of the battleship fleet. As a curtain raiser there is an airplane view of a smokescreen thrown out by destroyers in formation—a "rare shot." Then a camera is placed on the stern of the vessel towing the target and turned on the objective, showing the columns of rising water as the shells strike home. The last view is of the same scene taken from an airplane, in pictorial effectiveness eclipsing the high quality of the two preceding views.

Another subject in this same number is of the reproduction by the Marines of Pickett's charge at Gettysburg. While the picture will have deep interest for every one it will have especial concern for those who saw service in the World War—it is unlikely any of the latter can avoid thoughts of what might have been done in 1863 by a lone operator of a perfectly good machine gun of the vintage of 1918.

Pathe Contracts for Three Additional Short Productions

In connection with the closing of contracts for three different types of short feature product, Pathe presents a partial forecast of its forthcoming fall announcement which is expected to reassure exhibitors who are eager to supply their patrons with a greater variety of screen entertainment. These three new contracts make Pathe the distributors of the delightful juvenile "Johnny Jones Comedies," with the boy star supported by Gertrude Messinger; "The Range Rider Series," with Leo D. Maloney in western two-reel dramas, and the beautifully filmed and simply acted pastoral classic, The Song of the Lark.

The last named was written and produced under the supervision of Arthur Maude, and has its inspiration in the famous painting by Jules Breton, depicting a French peasant girl in the harvest field listening to the singing of a lark. The heroine of the picture is that girl striving for the liberty of thought and action which the lark typifies.

"A Trip to Paramountown" Is Novelty

Two Reels Are Packed with Interesting Shots of Persons and Plays and Will Highly Entertain Picture Followers

In A Trip to Paramountown, the Famous Players' company has provided a genuine novelty for the followers of the motion picture. It is a two-reel subject filled with intimate shots inside the Paramount studio in Los Angeles and bringing before the camera the players so familiar to the public and the directors many of whom the world at large knows only by name. The picture was produced by Jerome Beatty of the Famous Players distributing organization and is creditably done. The subject was first shown at the Rivoli, and this week is a part of the program at the Rialto.

The opening shot is a glimpse of the big plant at Long Island City, but all the other scenes are photographed in and around that great establishment in Hollywood which has grown from the blacksmith shop converted to motion picture purposes nine years ago by Jesse Lasky. From an airplane view we get a comprehensive insight into its present size.

The pictures are nearly all in a comedy vein. In one of them we see Dorothy Dalton sitting at a table and in three characterizations simultaneously, a quadruple exposure that will excite more than usual interest, deservedly so, too, for the action is finely timed.

There are some interesting pictures of Betty Compson selected from four of her characters, including The Miracle Man, but the principal attention is paid to To Have and to Hold, being directed by George Fitzmaurice. There are a couple of "trick" pictures showing Wally Reid holding in his hand an automobile in which he is himself seated and of Bebe Daniels extracting Bebe from a phonograph and watching her dance on the instrument. Then there are striking views of Cecil De Mille's spectacular Manslaughter.

The two reels are packed with scenes filled with interest. It is a picture that easily may submerge in attractiveness the average photoplay, one on which an exhibitor may bank heavily, on which he may promise his patrons a real treat, and make good on the promise. G. B.

New York Capitol Omits "Feature" in Week of July 16

The Capitol Theatre of New York during the week of July 16 presented a program which on its motion picture side was headed by Charlie Chaplin in Shoulder Arms. There was no "feature" as such. Other screen material consisted of the Capitol Magazine, containing excerpts from the news weeklies; Record Breakers, Weiss Brothers-Goldwyn's Sport Review release; Nights of Many Shadows, the fifth of the Robert C. Bruce "Wilderness Tales," released by Educational, and the Triart production Hope, directed by Lejaren á Hiller.

Supplementing the foregoing and completing the list of twelve units were the orchestra, presenting "Raymond Overture," Thomas; ballet divertissements, in three parts, including Doris Niles, to the accompaniment of "Anitra's Dance," Grieg; Mlle. Gambarelli, "Glow Worm," Lincke, and Thalia Zanou and Alexander Oumansky, "Georgia Camp Meeting," Mills.

The Russian Singers, comprising twelve male voices, finely gave, without music, folk songs and cathedral numbers. Concertmaster Fradkin of the Capitol Orchestra, after three violin numbers, was roundly encored. Juan Reyes, Chilean pianist, gave the Liszt concerto in E flat, and at the final performance "The Blue Danube." The chief organist also contributed a paraphrase on melodies during the presentation of the comedy.

At the evening performance of the orchestra's number on Monday evening S. L. Rothafel wielded the baton.

The performance as a whole, like its several predecessors since Mr. Rothafel came to the Capitol, was successful. The critics on the newspapers, not overlavish in their praise when dealing with screen matters, seemed agreed on this.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS NO. 5—Released by Pathe.—There are some fine views of Tom Mix doing stunts with his horse, Tony. A host of players are shown at a dance, where they entertain. Jane and Katherine Lee are seen making up. Then the two stage a quarrel and again make up. Others shown in a good number are Seena Owen, Eddie Lyons, Jack White directing a scene in what looks like Rapid Fire, and Theodore Roberts and Roy Stewart spoofing a bunch of bathing girls.

TWENTY-ONE — Three-part re-edited Pathe Playlet.—The picture does not get off strongly. Bryant Washburn plays a dual role, that of a wealthy young man and a lowbrow prizefighter. He accepts the one chance in ten that he can make it convincing and loses. There is one thrill in the story, where the young man of means, having swapped identities with the prizefighter, goes tremblingly into a mill and knocks out his opponent. The thrill comes when the former idler suddenly discovers he is possessed of real strength after all.

SPORT REVIEW—Single reel distributed by Weiss Brothers-Goldwyn.—Record Breakers is the camera portrayal of college championships and makes an unusually interesting subject. It was on at the Capitol during the week of July 16. Editors Grantland Rice and Jack Eaton have shown in normal and in slow motion a number of the most exciting contests. One of the more notable is the beginning in slow motion of the 100-yard dash, where one-fifth of a second advantage at that stage may mean the victory.

SUPPLY AND DEMAND—Released by Pathe.—This is the initial number of the series produced by J. K. McDonald featuring the boy Johnny Jones, aided by another child player, Gertrude Messinger. It is a juvenile comedy, centering on the efforts of some boys to sell mousetraps. The firm name signed to the letter of instructions from the mail order house is strongly reminiscent of that of a concern known internationally. While there are laughs in the picture it will not rate high as comedy for an adult house.

HOPE (Triart Productions).—This single real was inspired by the painting of George F. Watts. It was directed by Lejaren á Hiller. The opening is a representation of the painter and a disheartened model. The former tells the girl of the story behind the picture he intends to paint, and it is this we see revealed on the screen. It is a dramatic recital of a girl whose lover is lost at sea, yet in spite of his being knocked overboard from a burning vessel by a falling mast she has faith he will come back to her. Strangely enough he does. Mary Astor plays the girl and Ralph Faulkner the lover. The picture stirs a bit at the end.

BOSTON — Urban Popular Classic. — Views of the city, both civic and historic, will be found of interest in theatre and school. Good shots of buildings that figured largely in the Revolution alternate with views of the modern "Hub." One of the statements that will attract attention is that two-thirds of the area of the city is filled land.

SYLVAN BOSTON — Urban Popular Classic.—Supplementing the foregoing, showing scenes on Boston Common, a playground for 300 years; of Harvard University, Longfellow Bridge, Bunker Hill Monument, the Back Bay, Fine Arts Museum, Old Granary Burying Ground, Public Gardens, and several views of Lexington and Concord, where the Revolutionary War was started.

TAKE NEXT CAR — One-reel Hal Roach comedy, released by Pathe.—Paul Parrott takes off the tribulations of the driver of a horsecar when fighting the competition of a jitney manipulated by a "strongarm." Jobyna Ralston and Eddie Baker assist in raising the laughs, which probably will flow more freely in those numerous localities where the jitney holds sway.

A SPIRITED AFFAIR—Universal Star Comedy, in one reel.—A rather amusing tale, and one that is likely to have a wide appeal. This may be said with measurable confidence, inasmuch as one of the leading characters is a bootlegger. The tale was written and directed by Reggie Norris and features Roy Atwell.

PATHE REVIEW 166.—One of the best in the number are the scenes in Pathecolor devoted to The Bridal Mart, a medieval ceremony that survives in Greece. Other subjects are Harvest Time in Kaffir Land, The Mask Maker, Tower Bridge of London and Give Away Gags.

THE WORM THAT TURNED—Film Fables, released by Pathe.—With a new main title introduction Cartoonist Terry keeps up his fun. He employs an ark full of animals in demonstrating the truth of "Theory and practice are two different things."

YOU AND ME—Two-part Century Comedy, released by Universal.—The chief characters in this subject are children, and the interest in it will very largely be confined to those of the age of its players.

A GASOLINE WEDDING—Pathe one-reel reissue.—Harold Lloyd, "Snub" Pollard and Bebe Daniels work hard, but it is unlikely the automobile stuff will be quite as hilarious as it was when originally issued.

THE PERILS OF THE YUKON—Episode 5 of Universal serial.—Another strong number and fully up to the mark set by the preceding chapters. There is real suspense running through the two reels.

STATE RIGHTS

ALL THE NEWS OF ACTIVITIES IN THE TERRITORIES

C. B. C.'s Picture Looks Like Winner

"More to Be Pitied Than Scorned" Is Story of Power— Is Directed with Genuine Skill and Splendidly Played

It will be surprising if More to Be Pitied Than Scorned does not prove to be a real box office bet. It has all the earmarks that give it a right so to be considered. The subject, which was produced by Harry Cohn, of Waldorf Productions, Inc., and will be distributed by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, is a melodrama, a Blaney melodrama, one that in its stage form has successfully stood the test of presentation to the public. In its screen interpretation it remains a melodrama, but under the genuinely skillful direction of Edward Le Saint it has been treated as straight drama. With entire confidence in the strength and appeal of his story Mr. Le Saint has been content to play to his orchestra rather than to the gallery.

The cast is compact—five all told—and the interest is centred squarely on these. The story follows a straight track, with no diverging or diverting branches. J. Frank Glendon is Julian Lorraine, a leading man in a theatre and in love with his wife; Alice Lake is Mrs. Lorraine; Rosemary Theby is Josephine Clifford, leading woman at the theatre and in love with Lorraine; Philo McCullough is Vincent Grant, the "heavy" at the theatre and in love with Mrs. Lorraine; Josephine Adair is Ruth, the child of the Lorraines.

The acting in its quality matches and measures up to the opportunities of the players. The tale is of the clash of wills of four strong persons—there are no weak sisters or brothers in the story. To be sure, the husband and wife are caught in the meshes laid by the leading woman and the heavy—they are victims of the reciprocal villainy of the two, each of whom hopes to win one of this happily married couple. And the story stands up—it shows thought in conception. There is a notable if not entire absense of the "convenient coincidence" that marks and mars the construction of so many of the older stage productions.

The interest is steady—cumulative. It is quickly established in the opening scenes—when the stage woman, visiting the dressing room of the leading man and in response to a compliment reveals the fact that she really has been "living the part" and not acting her love scenes. The quickly following call of the heavy on Mrs. Lorraine, his declaration of love and her rejection of him; the return of the husband and the unrecognized escape of Grant; the rage of the husband and his departure with the child plant the story in the mind in the first ten minutes.

Strong situations abound. The denouement properly may be described as "smashing," and in fact it is. It is preceded by the reconciliation of the Lorraines and the discovery by the husband of the manner in which he has been tricked by Josephine on the one hand and by Grant on the other. Lorraine enters upon the stage for the final act of the play, where Grant, his pistol loaded with bullets instead of blanks, awaits him. The prescribed clinch takes place, but the ball intended for Lorraine strikes Josephine and kills her. The two men fight over the stage and in the boxes until Grant is whipped.

Don't miss More to Be Pitied Than Scorned It is a regular picture, of the satisfying kind that will do word of mouth advertising if you give it a chance.

Ben Wilson Starts Work on Federated Comedies

Ben Wilson has wired the New York office of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., that he had started work on the first Federated comedy and that he had an exceptionally good story lined up with a cast including Cecil Spooner, Eddie Barry, Billy Bletcher and Scott Darling. It will probably be of interest to exhibitors east of the Mississippi River to note that Cecil Spooner is to appear in these comedies, as she has for the past fifteen years pleased many audiences while appearing in legitimate attractions.

Believes the Bible Contains the Most Dramatic Material

The demand for pictures of a high moral standard also carrying an interesting dramatic story with a punch inspired Dr. Harwood Huntington, prominent clergyman, to enter the ranks of those who have the interest of the industry at heart and who strive to make pictures that will drive the thoughts of censorship from the mind of even the most narrow minded reformer.

Believing the Bible contains the most dramatic stories ever written, Dr. Huntington set out to place upon the screen an authentic and inspirational photo-dramatization of the Old Testament.

The Rev. Dr. Harwood Huntington

Sacred Films, Inc., of which Dr. Huntington is president, realized the proportions of the task. At this juncture Dr. Edgar J. Banks, archaeologist of world repute, was made technical and research director, and under his supervision twelve complete and separate narratives have been completed and are now being shown in theatres.

Doris Kenyon Plays Opposite Hines in "Sure Fire Flint"

C. C. Burr announces that Doris Kenyon, legitimate and screen star, has been signed to portray the female lead opposite Johnny Hines in Sure Fire Flint, his second feature length production. With the addition of Miss Kenyon, the cast now includes Edmund Breese, J. Barney Sherry, Effie Shannon, Robert Edeson and Charles Gerard.

Best remembered of Miss Kenyon's screen productions, perhaps, is her important role with George Arliss in The Ruling Passion, the United Artists release, which scored so heavily throughout the country.

Miss Kenyon, who was educated at Packer Institute and Columbia University, achieved stardom on the stage in Princess Pat, The Girl in the Limousine and The White Villa. On the screen she has played in productions of Famous Players, Essanay, Pathe, De Luxe Pictures, International and Distinctive Productions. Miss Kenyon has recently completed a year's engagement on the stage as the star of Up the Ladder, which ran continuously for a year on Broadway.

Producers' Security Sells Territory on "Wolf's Fangs"

The Producers Security Corporation announced this week the sale for immediate release of Oscar Apfel's new production, The Wolf's Fangs, to the First National Exchange of New York for the State of New York and Northern New Jersey. It is a drama of the outdoors and is staged in the North Maine woods. Wilfred Lytell is starred.

This production also will be handled by Producers Security Corporation in America.

"School Days" Gets Record

Despite the fact that rainy weather interfered with theatre patronage in the South, the Warner Brothers production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, broke all attendance records during its run at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, according to a telegram received by Harry M. Warner from M. Mitchell.

Midwest Opens in Dallas

The Midwest Distributing Company, with Ralph Morrow as branch manager, has opened an exchange at 1801½ Commerce Street, Dallas.

The new company has taken over the distribution of Peacock productions, and in addition will distribute a line of independent subjects.

Nickle to Issue Hepworth Pictures

Will Distribute in United States and Canada on the State Rights Market Productions of English Studio

News of an important deal to be consummated in the independent field for the coming season has been made public through the announcement by Burr Nickle, president of Burr Nickle Productions, with offices at 827 Story Building, Los Angeles, that his concern had acquired the productions of the Hepworth Picture Plays, Ltd., of London, for distribution in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Nickle has just returned to California after a period of several weeks in the east, during which time he concluded negotiations for the Hepworth pictures with Thomas F. MacMahon of 1400 Broadway, attorney for Hepworth Picture Plays in the United States. Since his arrival on the West Coast he has been busy formulating the policy of his company with reference to the distribution of his new attractions. The pictures will be distributed on a state rights' basis under an arrangement which Mr. Nickle believes is original with him, at least in its present application to conditions in the independent field, and which will enable the state rights' buyer to avail himself of these pictures on a profitable basis.

The first of the new productions will be ready for the market early in August, and it is planned to release the pictures at the rate of two a month. As an initial attraction, The City of Beautiful Nonsense, from the novel of the same name by E. Temple Thurston, will be offered. The other August release will be Sunken Rocks, a Cecil M. Hepworth production with Alma Taylor in the stellar role. Announcement of subsequent releases will be made in the near future.

"An exhaustive survey of the available product in the independent market at the present time convinced me of the superiority of the Hepworth pictures to any others I have seen for artistic merit and entertainment value," said Mr. Nickle in discussing his plans for the coming season. "I am satisfied they will form, as a group, the most attractive proposition that could be wished for by a state rights' buyer who is looking for the 'something different' that is going to count more than ever this fall and winter with theatre managers and theatregoers."

Cecil M. Hepworth, the chief executive and master spirit of Hepworth Picture Plays, Ltd., is perhaps the dean of motion picture producers throughout the world, with more years to his credit as a producer than any man in the United States or Europe. His connections with the world of motion pictures goes back to 1894. He made his first visit to the United States in the fall of 1921, accompanied by his principal star, Alma Taylor, and spent several months in New York and California.

While Mr. Nickle was in New York, he made arrangements with Lesley Mason, of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, to act as eastern representative for Burr Nickle productions in connection with the Hepworth pictures. He expects to return to New York about September 1.

Final Chapter of Eddie Polo Serial Is Now Completed

Word comes from Milton Binhak, of the editing department of the Star Serial Corporation, which controls world rights to Cap'n Kidd, that the fifteenth chapter has been edited, completing the serial.

In Chapter XIV, which has been titled "A Fight in Mid-Air," there is a fight between aeroplanes, with Eddie Polo in one and his pursuers in another close behind him. One of the most dangerous stunts performed in the entire serial takes place in this episode.

"Victory and Happiness," as Chapter XV has been titled, clears up the mystery. Paper and accessories have been completed on these final chapters.

Atlantic to Issue Fortnightly Films Produced Abroad

Frank Gordon Kirby, director in charge of production for Atlantic Enterprises, sends word from Europe to the home office that he has begun work on his first feature. This will be the initial subject of a series designed for distribution on the American state rights market. The stated aims of the company are to create productions that will permit their issue to exchanges and exhibitors without the burden of excessive prices, to build a program with the requirements of the smaller houses especially in view. It is intended to make the pictures fast and turn them over quickly.

By August 1, it is announced, the titles of the first four pictures will have been decided upon, and by September 1 the subjects will be in New York ready for review. Thereafter it is intended to release two features a month.

Goldstone Finishing Production

Phil Goldstone has taken possession of the Horsley Studio in Los Angeles for the exclusive use of his special production, Deserted at the Altar, in addition to space at other studios. It is the biggest spectacle ever filmed by this company, and the work is now in its sixth week and is nearing completion. The cast includes Bessie Love, Tully Marshall, Eulalie Jensen, Wade Boteler, William Scott, Frankie Lee, Barbara Tennant and Queenie the dog.

Iroquois Making Second Feature

Iroquois productions, which will be distributed by Agnes Egan Cobb, is at work on its second feature. It is The One Way Trail, which was written by its director, Caryl S. Fleming. George Proctor wrote the scenario. In the cast are Muriel Kingston, Victor Sutherland, Luis Alberni, Ann Hamilton, Edward F. Roseland and Stanley Walpole. Frank Perugini is cameraman.

Franey Accessories Ready

A complete line of lithographs, lobby cards, slides, press books and other advertising matter for the exploitation of the new series of two-reel comedies featuring Billy Franey is now ready for territory buyers of these fun films, according to word received from Gus Schumacher, general manager of the O'Conor Productions, producers and distributors.

"Innocent Cheat" Goes Over Hard

Weingarten's Parthenon of Brooklyn Adds a Few of Its Own Stunts to Those Tried in Manhattan and Wins Out

Backed up by an intensive exploitation campaign which stirred up a lot of public interest and aided by the word-of-mouth advertising given it by its audiences, The Innocent Cheat, Arrow's photo-drama, is playing this week at Weingarten's Parthenon Theatre, Ridgewood, Brooklyn, to the largest crowds which Weingarten recalls at his house.

The exploitation, which was conceived and executed by Mr. Weingarten and Charles Cohn jointly, was of such a nature as to stir up a deal of interest. Many of the features which aided the showing at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, as well as others which originated with the Brooklyn men, were employed.

The Ridgewood News and the Ridgewood Times co-operated in issuing special editions, each of which bore, superimposed upon the first page, scarehead lettering in red to the effect that the production was to open at the Parthenon on July 11; a veiled woman with a baby carriage upon which was lettered the billing of the production walked the streets distributing throwaways; a great deal more space in the newspapers was used than Mr. Weingarten generally gives to a production; a teaser letter was mailed to a selected list; throwaways were distributed in the theatre. And, as might be expected, capacity audiences ensued.

In conjunction with the baby carriage stunt mentioned, Mr. Cohn was fortunate enough to be able to "break" into the newspapers on the first page through a peculiar combination of circumstances which involved a real live baby, a frenzied mother and the girl who pushed the advertising cart. It seems that a resident of the district, with her baby, was on a shopping tour. She reached home with the wrong carriage. Before the error was rectified there was a vast deal of excitement which was reflected in the local press. All of which proved of vast assistance to Mr. Weingarten and The Innocent Cheat.

J. Charles Davis, 2nd, Made Assistant to President of Arrow

When it was announced last week that a conference had been called at the home office of the Arrow Film Corporation, it was intimated that several important announcements would be forthcoming and the first of these was made public this week by President W. E. Shallenberger. It is of a new department, that of assistant to the president, effective immediately. The office is designed to effect closer relationship between Arrow and its producers, exchanges handling its product, and theatres showing Arrow pictures.

This department will work under the direct supervision of Dr. Shallenberger and will be headed by J. Charles Davis, 2nd, director of advertising and publicity. Mr. Davis has had a varied experience in the motion picture industry and for the past year has spent most of his time in the field. He will retain supervision of the advertising and publicity department, and it is stated it is planned to enlarge this department so that every Arrow salesman on the road will have at his service the assistance of a capable exploitation man to help him put over pictures in co-operation with the exchange handling them.

As announced some time ago, Arrow looks forward to the coming year's being the greatest in its history. A greater number of features and short subjects than ever before will be released by Arrow and several big specials will be distributed.

Mrs. A. B. Maescher, president De Luxe Film, releasing "Night Life in Hollywood"

Engage Five Scenarists for Warner Productions

Five well-known scenario writers on the west coast have been engaged by S. L. Warner and Harry Rapf to adapt the series of Warner Brothers pictures. By an arrangement with Famous Players, Olga Prinztlau will adapt F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel, The Beautiful and Damned. Monte Katterjohn will translate into screen terms the Charles G. Norris' novel, Brass.

Julian Josephson has been engaged to adapt Sinclair Lewis' novel, Main Street. The continuity for Edmund Goulding's story, Little Heroes of the Street, featuring Wesley Barry, has been written by Isabel Johnston and Mildred Considine.

Ben Amsterdam and Sam Grand Buy "Hallroom Boys"

Sales on the new series of 1922-23 series of Hallroom Boys Comedies started off this week with the disposing of the new series of twenty-six based on the adventures of Percy and Ferdie Hallroom to two territorial buyers.

The first was to Ben Amsterdam, head of Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, and the second to Sam Grand, head of the Federated Film Exchange of New England.

Masterpiece will handle the series in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, and Federated of New England will have them in the six New England States.

"This marks the fourth year's series of these Hallroom Boys Comedies," said Producer Jack Cohn, and as state rights buyers have done so well with them heretofore we decided to continue this channel of distribution."

"The Country Flapper" Ready

Dorothy Gish in The Country Flapper is reported ready for independent distributors. Producers Security originally planned to release the feature in the fall, but the demand is so great it is to be issued immediately.

Miss Gish's supporting cast is headed by Glenn Hunter, the new screen favorite. Others are Mildred Marsh, Tommy Douglas, the Hackett Brothers and Catherine Collins.

A new song Fox Trot titled "The Country Flapper" will be exploited with the picture.

Pacific to Release Novelty

John J. Hayes, president of Pacific Film Company, Inc., announces that his firm will release, beginning August 1, the first of a series of twelve one-reel novelty films of a semi-educational nature, comedy forming the chief entertainment value. The "actors" and "actresses" used in portraying the various roles are the tiny dwellers of the meadows—grasshoppers, beetles, lady-bugs and chiggers. Elmer Dyer and Frank Givvens are the producers.

Alice Lake and J. Frank Glendon in "More to Be Pitied Than Scorned" (C. B. C.)

Brandt and Cohn Stay Independent

Say That Despite Offers from Program Organizations Their Six Features Will Go to States Rights Market

It is reported this week that despite tempting offers, Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn, who comprise the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, will adhere to their determination to remain independent for the season 1922-23.

This means that the series of six box-office features which this company announced a few weeks ago will be released on the open market to states rights buyers.

Since word first filtered out of the filming of More to Be Pitied Than Scorned and the five features which follow, C. B. C. has been the recipient of several offers from national organizations to take over the features. The C. B. C. officials were in a quandary because territorial buyers throughout the country have been in steady communication with Brandt and Cohn urging distribution through independent channels, using as their arguments the fact that the C. B. C. features were too big to go Independent and would fit into various programs to the greatest benefit for all concerned.

"Our determination to state right this series, which comprises, we are confident, six of the biggest real box-office features of the year, in the face of the flattering and tempting offers we have had to let them go over on program organizations, is the expression of our confidence in the independent field and what it can and must stand for," said Joe Brandt this week. "We have always stood for the independents because we believed in the future of that field—and that it can be the biggest branch of the industry.

"Exhibitors have been complaining that they can't get a consistent number of box-office attractions through the independents. They can. Let them look over the field and they will see that some of the biggest productions announced for the coming year are independent productions. All we need is a fair break to stimulate fair competition and to bring about a better condition all through for the industry."

Making Progress on "Bulldog Drummond" in Hollandia Studio

Cable advices to Producers Security Corporation from Holland state Bulldog Drummond production is progressing finely. The interiors are being made in the Hollandia Studios, and as soon as completed the company will move to England to secure the exteriors.

The direction of the picture is in the hands of Oscar Apfel, American producer, and Evelyn Greeley and Carlyle Blackwell are co-starring.

On the stage the play is one of the big successes of Broadway and played to capacity business in the Knickerbocker Theatre all last season. It reigned in London for two whole seasons, and is slated to open in Chicago for a season commencing Labor Day under the banner of A. R. Erlanger.

Producers Security Corporation will handle the releasing arrangements in America.

Equity to Capitalize Title of Goodman Production

Taking every advantage of the catchy title What's Wrong with the Women, Equity Pictures will launch Daniel Carson Goodman's production on the State rights market by bringing the title to the attention of many of the prominent men and women in the country, who will be asked to give their opinion as to what, if anything, really is wrong with the fair sex of the present day.

At no time, believes Equity, could this title be as compelling in interest as at the present moment. In securing the opinion of men and women high in the political, social, literary and dramatic worlds, Equity is confident it will awaken a most lively and interesting discussion.

"The Speed King" for Talmadge

Pacific Film Reports Sales

The Criterion Film Exchange, 130 West Forty-sixth Street, New York, has purchased the entire output of the Pacific Film Company, Inc., consisting of three features and the "Uneducational Comedies," a new series of animated pictures. The Criterion territory consists of New York and New Jersey.

The Pierce Film Company of New Orleans has purchased the Louisiana territory of the Folly Comedies, according to word received from John J. Hayes, president of Pacific. George Ovey is the star.

Attractions Distributing Will Release Glyn Picture

In a statement printed in this journal in its issue of July 8 it was stated that "arrangements (by Rialto Productions) have been made with the Al Lichtman Corporation for the distribution of the second purchase, The Man and the Moment, by Elinor Glynn." The statement came to us in the usual course from the office of Rialto Productions.

A letter from the Al Lichtman Corporation states that the picture really was purchased by the Attractions Distributing Corporation, and that the last named company will release the production later.

Second Review Is Ready

The second issue of the Federated Screen Review is now ready for release, and contains a galaxy of stars who are being featured in several productions and also includes scenes of several productions in course of construction at studios. Will Rogers heads the list, in a scene from Sleepy Hollow.

Monty Banks for Federated

Ben Wilson has informed the New York office of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Iinc., that the star selected by him to appear in one of his series of comedies is Monty Banks, who previously appeared in two series of successful comedies for Federated. Bruce Mitchell is directing the first picture.

Southwest Told About "Foolish Wives"

Long Distance Interview Makes Big Hit with the Newspapers of Southwest

Left: Evening News newsboys, San Antonio, Tex., distributing special "Foolish Wives" rotogravure section, which along with the long distance interview with Von Stroheim was the feature for the day. Center: Alarm clock tie-up for the Empire Theatre showing of Universal's "Foolish Wives" in San Antonio. Right: Cut-outs featured the display arranged for the attraction at the Hippodrome, York, Pa.

An unusual exploitation stunt afforded Foolish Wives first page publicity in four of Texas' largest metropolitain newspapers. Marc Lachmann of the Universal home office exploitation staff, planned and executed this stunt for the Southern Enterprises chain of Texas theatres.

The newspapers successfully booked for the stunt were the San Antonio Evening News, Fort Worth Record, Houston Chronicle and Galveston Tribune for the Empire, San Antonio; Palace, Fort Worth; Queen, Houston, and Queen, Galveston, engagements respectively.

The idea; a personal interview from the editorial rooms of these newspapers with Erich von Stroheim, author, star and director of "Foolish Wives," over the long distance telephone to Universal Studios in Universal City, Cal.

The interviewers assigned were four noted feature writers. They were Mary Carter of the San Antonio Evening News, J. Mobel Clark of the Fort Worth Record, William Seel of the Galveston Tribune and Paul E. Wakefield of the Houston Chronicle.

The newspapers, aside from handling the interview, devoted free display advertising space in their daily issue for one week in advance of the interview itself with illustrations and cuts of Stroheim and Foolish Wives. A special story regarding the interview was also used to create enthusiasm for the event and in two cases eight column banners across the bottom of the page were used. A special tack display card was planted on all news-stands, hotel lobbies, and cigar stores. Carrier wagons played the stunt up in real circulation instigator fashion, and display in front of the newspaper offices marked it as an unusual event. By a special attachment a magnovox arrangement enabled crowds to hear the interview.

J. Mabel Clark, who interviewed Von Stroheim over long distance from San Antonio, Tex., to Los Angeles

The Southwestern telephone company co-operated with Lachmann and in addition purchased half page advertisements in the newspapers.

Proof of the enthusiasm of the stunt is found in its announcement that Foolish Wives is still playing successful engagements in other theatres of the Southern Enterprises chain.

Entertains Local Club

Manager De Sales Harrison of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., put over a good one for his house when he had two of his kid ushers stage a boxing match for the benefit of the Advertising Club.

This organization, consisting of some of the most influential citizens, meets once a week for luncheon.

Mailing Lists—How to Use Them

There Are Certain Seasons in the Year When You Can Catch Their Special Interest

IV—Hitting Their Weak Spots

Everyone you have ever known has a hobby. Human beings all have weak spots in their make up, even the staid old grouches. If you know their weak spots you can get their attention and, in direct-by-mail efforts, getting the interest right off the bat counts most.

The advertising manager of a middle western concern which does an immense amount of direct-mail advertising is thoroughly convinced that timeliness in this advertising matter is one of the essentials for making it bring home the money. So, as the concern sends out some form of direct mail literature each week during the entire year, this advertising manager prepared the calendar on which, under the name of each month he has listed some of the things to remember in trying to make the mail matter for that month as timely as possible.

This calendar gives the advertising manager a firm foundation upon which to build each month. It prevents him, too, from running things during one month which were more properly suited to the preceding month and it thus is a great help in keeping the advertising matter strictly up to the minute.

The calendar was published with the first article of this series.

We'll start with July, a very warm month when business lulls. The calendar suggests: Independence Day (July 4); hot weather, mosquitoes, hammocks, ice cream, vacations, dusty roads, ice cream clothes, summer time literature, the silly season and Chautauquas.

A few days before Independence Day we might send out a card like this:

Fellow Citizen:

Congratulations on the birth of our great country. We feel so good about it that the older our country gets the more we think about this great day. Consequently we will show ——— at the ——— Theatre during the week of July 4, and it is a stirring, red blooded American drama.

Patriotically yours,
John Grossmith,
Liberty Theatre.

Mosquitoes, which are quite plentiful in many of the American cities, can be played up (and down) in this fashion:

Ouch! That Bite Itches

The mosquitos are around, but you can bet ten yards of mosquito netting that they are not at the Comfort Theatre. Here's one place you can escape them.

And this week we are running ———, a high class comedy drama, that will make you forget what bites you may have received.

Come early and go home pleased—not bitten.
Comfort Theatre.

Dusty roads present a wonderful opportunity to get a laugh and business. It is suggested that this post card be used on out-of-town visitors, those from the countryside who have to travel dusty roads to get to town:

The Dusty Road That Has An Ending

After the long drive, when you're tired, your mouth is filled with dust and your spirits dusty, just drop into the Liberty Theatre and you'll soon

FORGET THE DUST.

P. S.—We've got a whopper of a refreshing picture this week.

Skip now to August, another warm month. The calendar specifies this month's activities as follows: Annual fruit canning season, final vacations, tennis, golf, motor boats, dog days, sweet corn, cool nights.

Take the fruit canners, mostly women, and their children who have to pare and pit the peaches, stone the cherries, etc., etc. Here's one way to appeal to them:

After Canning All Day in the Hot Kitchen

put on your street clothes and come on down to the Rialto, for there's a cracking good show there, ———, with ripping comedy that'll make you forget the kitchen, the sticky fingers, the burned sugar and the cracked jars.

YES, BRING THE CHILDREN TOO.

The ideas are endless. Every month has one or two features that you can play on with suitable catch lines. Preserve the calendar we printed. Stick it in your mailing list file, and consult it well in advance so that what you send out will reach folks at the proper time.

Voters' Lists

Using the voters' registration list as a mailing list, a new bit of exploitation, was introduced by the management of the Bijou Theatre, Jamestown, N. Y., during a recent engagement.

The city elections were near at hand, so to more than five thousand potential patrons of the Bijou two cards were sent through the mails. One bore the following message: "Voters of Jamestown. I am a candidate for the title of 'the greatest mother in motion pictures.' After selecting your candidates at the Republican Primaries on Saturday you will be free to vote for an independent candidate. Ballots will be received Sunday at the opening of the photoplay 'Over the Hill' at the Bijou Theatre. Polls open from 1 to 11 p. m. Sincerely yours, Mary Carr." The other was in the form of a ballot.

Playing to Community Pride

APPEALING to community pride affords another method of getting personal contact direct by mail. Here is the manner in which Ray Erne of the Rialto, Charlotte, Mich., told his mailing list about the big things he had up his sleeve. He printed this screed on a post card:

Through new booking arrangements just completed, I have been offered the opportunity of giving to the theatregoers of Charlotte and Eaton County a series of pictures comprising the very best obtainable on the present market, but at a rental price far above that usually paid for pictures in a town of this size. This arrangement also enables me to play them in most cases either before or immediately after their runs in Lansing, Battle Creek, Grand Rapids and Jackson, whereas the usual method is to allow them to become six months or a year old before playing in a small town, due to the high rental cost when they are new. Allow me to list for you a few of the best that I have in mind:

"Saturday Night."

"Mother o' Mine."

"Sowing the Wind"

"A Man's Home," with Harry T. Morey, Charlotte's own star.

"The Four Horsemen" at popular prices, not two and three dollars a seat.

Mabel Normand in Mack Sennett's "Molly O," said to be even better than "Mickey."

H. O. Davis' "The Silent Call," with Strongheart, the "dog that is all but human."

Chas. (Chic) Sale in "His Nibs" in which this versatile actor plays seven different characters.

Doug. Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers" at prices within your reach.

IT'S UP TO YOU

April shall be "better pictures month" if you say so. I contend that the people of Eaton County have just as much right to see motion pictures when they are brand new as have the people of any of the larger cities, and they shall, providing they want to. Here's my proposition:

On March 30-31 and April 1 I have booked Cecil B. DeMille's "Fool's Paradise," his very latest, biggest and best picture, a picture that was not run in any theatre outside of New York and Philadelphia before March 11, and then only in the very largest. This picture is brand new, it's bigger than a circus, and was shown to the people of New York at $1.50 and $2.00 a seat, packing the theatre at every show through an extended run. If you assure me, through your patronage on these three days, that you want the very best, I will book every one of the above-named along with some other good ones that I have in mind, for the month of April, and will continue to do so as long as your interest and patronage warrant it, and I'm going to present them, not at ten and twenty cents, as that would be financial suicide, but at prices where anyone can afford to attend.

Again I say, "It's Up to You."

Yours for Entertainment,

W. RAY ERNE,
Manager, The Rialto Theatre.

A Teaser Stunt

By a systematic mailing campaign that covered seven days, Manager Herbert Johnson of the Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., brought his patrons to "The Seventh Day." Taking advantage of the theme of the story, which revolves around a country boy's idealization of a sophisticated city girl, the manager used teaser ads along the following order:

First Day—"Our hero is made captain of a sailing schooner."

Second Day—"Our hero gets his first glimpse of the 'dream woman.'"

Third Day—"Our heroine tries a dangerous flirtation."

Fourth Day—"Our hero falls desperately in love."

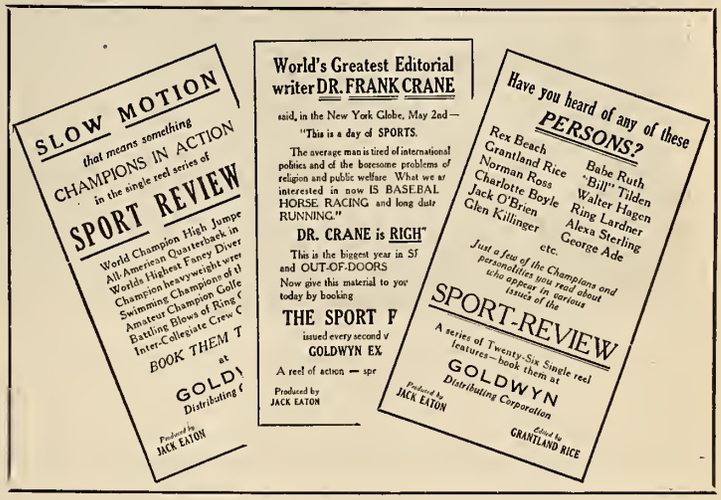
Fifth Day—"The disdainful heroine brings the hero back to earth."

Sixth Day—"Our hero in the depths of despair."

Seventh Day—"How does it end? Our hero, Richard Barthelmess, will act his story at the Luna next week."

Short Subject Mailers

Herewith are reproduced three ordinary one cent postcards which were used by various theatres to attract attention to the short subjects on the program. The catch lines on each card are neat and attention arresting. One speaks of slow motion which is still a mystery to the public. The others quote Dr. Frank Crane, a New York publicist, and the play upon a set of prominent names.



Housewives' Mailing List

WHEN I. Schwartz, for five years manager of the Grand Theatre, Chester, Pa., accepted a similar position with the Fifty-sixth Street Theatre, Philadelphia, he discovered that there existed a mailing list of 100.

With Eli Orowitz, the Paramount exploiteer, he succeeded in getting in touch with the registration commissioners, and as a result a list of 3900 women residing in the vicinity of the theatre was obtained. These women were all listed as housekeepers. Another list of men only was also obtained for future purposes.

Instead of the regular manager's theatre circular, the following hand-written letter signed by Mrs. I. Schwartz went out to each one of the 3900 women:

DEAR FRIEND:

The other day I accompanied my husband and attended a private presentation of a Paramount picture that I enjoyed immensely. It appealed to me very much because in it I saw a screen impersonation of the best dressed woman in New York. And I know you will like it as much, so I am calling your attention to the fact that Gloria Swanson's greatest picture achievement, Her Husband's Trademark, will be shown at the Fifty-sixth Street Theatre, next Wednesday and Thursday.

In this huge screen epic Miss Swanson wears many of the very latest creations. The production is a veritable fashion show. The styles are so unique that even the Parisienne modistes will hang their heads in shame. As the wife of a man who, mad to possess millions, uses his attractive wife as an outward indication of wealth he did not possess, believing in the strange creed that the show of money will attract money, Miss Swanson arises to the very peak of her glorious career. That this is a Paramount picture is a guarantee of its excellence.

What a wonderful picture for a matinee party! Societies and clubs in many Western cities have formed special parties that they might attend this production in a body. And so, thinking the idea might appeal to you or the organization you may be affiliated with, I am asking you to bring this matter before them at the next meeting, or to your friends, at once.

As this picture is causing nothing short of a sensation in every city in which it is playing, I urge that you notify my husband at the earliest possible moment just which day your party wishes to attend. The number of seats you desire will be reserved in the section of the theatre you may choose.

Thanking you, I am,

Very truly yours,

(Signed) MRS. I. SCHWARTZ.

The Hope Theatre, Dallas, Tex., exploited First National's "One Clear Call" with a ballyhoo made up of five white-capped klansmen who went abroad ahead of the Hope's turret-shaped advertising auto. The cavalcade was led by a trumpeter and the others flourished banners, making clear their status as heralds of the theatre and the photoplay.

Exploiteer Covers N. J. Convention

First National Man Gives Sweeping Demonstration of Exploitation

A First National exploitation man made a brave effort to dominate the New Jersey M. P. T. O. A. convention and incidentally gave a few splendid ideas on exploitation.

When the convention delegates assembled at Lake Hopatcong they were greeted at the cross road leading to their destination by plastered strips along the road bed reading: "This way to M. P. T. O. A. convention. Courtesy First National Pictures." These were also used on trees, fences and huge stones along the road.

"Get Under Cover. A First National Franchise Will Protect You While You Sleep" greeted every delegate as he entered his room. Bed spreads of pressed paper had been put on each bed in the hotel, a hint for theaters catering to tourist or transient trade.

Two hundred whistles were distributed at the big banquet bearing the sign: "Watch the clock and at exactly 7:00 p. m. Wednesday, while at the banquet blow 'One Clear Call' on this whistle."

Each lady entering the ballroom was given a Masquerader masque, further exploitation for the First National attraction starring Guy Bates Post. George Schade of Sandusky, O., has already done some advance campaigning among his patrons along this line on The Masquerader, but this is the first instance outside of Sandusky where the masque has come into general use to exploit this attraction.

Banners and copies of Franchise were part of the general exploitation scheme.

The decorations around the lobby hall provided an interesting precedent for some exhibitor to follow. They were a display entitled: "The Motion Pictures Ten Years' Ago and To-day." One side of the panel had stills from oldtime productions like Runaway June and The Goddess. The other half contained stills from the latest pictures of Norma Talmadge, Smilin' Through; Richard Barthelmess in Sonny; Constance Talmadge in The Primitive Lover; Jackie Coogan in My Boy; Hope Hampton in Star Dust and Marshall Neilan's Fools First.

The final touch came in the convention excursion of the lake. The exploitation man accidentally-on-purpose missed the two convention boats. With a specially chartered launch he caught up with them, stopped at each and distributed an autographed photograph of Jackie Coogan to every lady in the party.

The ideas promulgated at this convention are, for the most part, adaptable to local exhibitors. Exhibitors manifested an almost unanimous interest in this sweeping demonstration of the efficacy of exploitation.

Invites Arrest

Going on the theory that the best way to get things done according to one's ideas is to do the job oneself, David Schaefer, general manager of Rossasys Theatrical Enterprises of Brooklyn, N. Y., played the role of author, director and star of a stunt which proved a publicity and money getter for the Manor Theatre, Woodhaven, L. I., when the Vitagraph special The Shiek's Wife was run.

Schaefer's main purpose was to get the Manor Theatre and The Shiek's Wife before the public, so, garbed in the costume of an Arabian Shiek and mounted on a spirited steed, he galloped through the streets of Jamaica and Woodhaven with flying banners announcing the title, date and name of the theatre. The anticipated resulted when Schaefer was arrested for racing and masquerading.

In court Schaefer stated that he was on his way to a photographer's and entered a plea of not guilty to the charge of violation of Section 887 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which defines disguising one's face as a crime. Adjournment was obtained. Also there was obtained a considerable amount of notice in the newspapers, which along with the other publicity consequent upon Schaefer's adventure, enabled the Manor to register at the box office despite a run of especially hot weather.

Local Appeal

An exemplification of first class newspaper advertising was shown by Manager H. C. Fourton of the Gandy Theatre, Norfolk, Va., when he played Paramount's Forever recently.

Harry Brey Bleising, a well-known local business man, saw the picture the first day of its run. Mr. Fourton waylaid his patron after the show and asked him what he thought of the entertainment. Mr. Bleising had no words to express his appreciation. So Mr. Fourton asked him to put his opinion in writing.

This Mr. Bleising did in a strong letter of indorsement, which Mr. Fourton published as a newspaper ad. The town people responded to this local appeal and the reaction was so apparent the following day that Mr. Fourton kept it up for the rest of the run.

Lobby of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., when Manager Frank J. Miller advertised "Fool's Paradise" by turning it into a sort of trip around the world. A 24-sheet mounted above the entrance added to the effect.

F. B. O. Stunts Rouse New York

Extensive Drive on "In the Name of the Law" for Broadway Engagement

In the Name of the Law, which will be released through the Film Booking Offices of America in the fall, was ushered into its pre-season run at the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York, with an extensive exploitation campaign. The entire drive was the work of Nat G. Rothstein, advertising and publicity director of F. B. O. and his staff.

For a week before the showing all passers-by in the Times Square district were told of the coming attraction by means of a huge sign which was erected just north of the Times Building in Times Square. One side of this sign announced the picture's opening at the Cohan Theatre and the other carried the eye-catching line, "Wanted—500 burglars, dips and yeggmen—to see In the Name of the Law and learn what happens to crooks who think they are smarter than the New York Police."

Permission was obtained for the stringing of banners in places which have not carried advertising since the Liberty Loan drives. One banner alone on the Brooklyn side of the Queensborough bridge, caught the attention of thousands of motorists.

One of the many street stunts consisted of a large touring car manned by a camerman, an actor dressed as a policeman, and a girl. The auto carried a sign reading "Scenes being re-taken for In the Name of the Law."

A big direct mail campaign was carried on. Thirty-one thousand letters were mailed to individuals in the Metropolitan district. A letter reached every O'Hara family (the name of the family in the photoplay) and various trade professions were circularized. Special nights at the Cohan Theatre have been designated "lawyers' night," "doctors' night," and so forth.

On the day preceding the opening, four auto buses, filled with lusty-voiced newsboys, awoke New York to the fact that In the Name of the Law was soon to be presented at the Cohan Theatre. These youngsters each carried a bundle of "The Midnight Star," a miniature newspaper which was printed by the F. B. O.

"The Enquiry Reporter" was used to good advantage. Two young men, with a band on their arm explaining their mission, patrolled Broadway, acting as walking and talking twenty-four sheets.

Placards were displayed in more than five hundred shop windows. Tie-ups were arranged with the Beck-Hazzard Shoe Company and the Remington Typewriter Company, the latter tie-up being effective nationally. In all of these window cards the pictorial theme—the policeman with raised hand—was used throughout. In addition one hundred and twenty-five commercial trucks carried mounted three sheets on the sides. This poster advertising, started a week before the opening of the picture, will be continued throughout the entire run.

Newspaper advertising was used extensively in all New York papers. There will be, before the close of the run, 246 different ads. All of these will be designed as "Eye-stoppers" being topped with such headings as "Ford cars at $23.50" or "7 Room Apartments at $7.50 per Month."

Every advertising and exploitation stunt used during this New York run may be duplicated in any city or town. They will all be compiled and completely described and illustrated in the press book which the F. B. O. will issue.

Uses Want Ad Column

Manager Elwood M. Simons of the New Family Theatre, Adrian, Mich., created quite a stir when he inserted a want ad in the Adrian Daily Telegram, outlining the plot of his picture and ending it with a declaration: Find the Woman!

In view of the co-operative advertising secured by the theatre, the Telegram made a mystery story out of it and featured it in their news columns.

Gentlemen:

We desire to invite your attention to clipping herewith, taken from your paper, issue July 8th:

Coupon Books

Special coupon books entitling the holder to $4 worth of admissions for $3.50 have proven very successful at all Jensen & VonHerberg theatres in Seattle since the first of the year. The idea was original with Mr. Barry, purchasing agent for the Greater Theatres Co.

We must dispute the above for the reason that this theatre has successfully been using coupon books for the past six years. With all due respect to Mr. Barry, who may not have known that coupon books were being used, we feel, in justice to the theatres which have been using these books for the past six years, that you make the correction asked for. Yours very truly,

MILLER THEATRES,
(Signed) Carl F. Miller,
Prop. and Mgr. Miller Theatres,
Fremont, Ohio

"Fools First" in National Tie-up

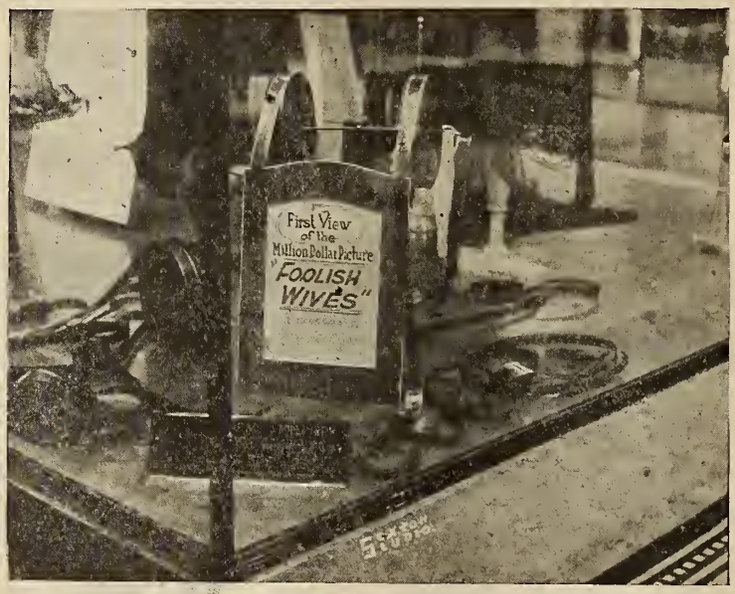
A national tie-up with the People's Home Journal is bringing business to the box office for exhibitors playing First National's Fools First. In the cast of this Marshall Neilan production is Helen Lynch who recently won newspaper space by announcing her intention of seeking a new name.

The People's Home Journal sponsored Miss Lynch's quest and offered $100 to the person submitting the most suitable name for Miss Lynch's film career. There were no limitations and if two people submit the same name that is finally selected the full amount will be paid to each.

Many exhibitors have tied up with this reward by displaying placards on it, in conjunction with news agents for the magazine, to increase interest in their showing of Fools First.

Front of the Rialto, Columbus, Ga., for the run of Metro's "Fascination." Blue lights were used to get an effect of coolness in the outside illumination which threw the cutouts into prominence. Inside the lobby the lights were white. This display was arranged by Major I. C. Holloway, manager of the Rialto.

The biggest thing about W. A. Doster's exploitation of Universal's "Foolish Wives" at the Strand, Montgomery, Ala., was this "million dollar window." Partially unwound reels of film were displayed in a prominent window. Uniformed guards stood watch over the precious film, a stunt which not only attracted many passersby, but was written up in the newspapers.



Six gowned knights on horseback paraded Broadway and covered the greater part of the city in an effective ballyhoo arranged by Managing Director Joe Plunkett of the Strand as an important phase of a campaign for First National's "One Clear Call." There were some rumors that masked riders might be objectionable, so Plunkett overcame that obstacle by eliminating the mask without loss to the effect of the parade.

Swimming Contest

The Boy Scouts of Valparaiso, Ind., tied up by Manager J. Shauer of the Premier Theatre for a Gloria Swanson swimming contest which put the Premier Theatre and the picture Beyond the Rocks on the front page of the newspaper.

William E. Danziger, Paramount exploiteer of Chicago sold this yarn to the newspaper:

During the filming of Beyond the Rocks Miss Swanson, despite the fact that she was once a Mack Sennett Bathing Girl, almost drowned. "For the first time in my life," says Danziger for Miss Swanson, "I realized how silly it is for a person not to know how to swim."

The Boy Scout commissioner got out his best swimmers. The newspapers played it up and at least 300 people went out to Sheridan Beach to root for their favorites.

In addition, Mr. Shauer and Danziger paid a little bootblack a couple of dollars to go through the downtown streets shining shoes free of charge. The youngster was instructed to talk up the theatre and the picture while he was operating on the "dogs."

Uses Simple Display

The simple, inexpensive theatre front display is often very distinctive and attractive. The manager of the Casino theatre, Spokane, Wash., proved this when he decorated his lobby for the showing of Goldwyn's Theodora.

Six baskets of flowers were hung from the top of the entrance arch, at a distance of about five feet from each other. On each side of the marble ticket booth were placed frames with five Theodora stills on each. That was all that was attempted in the way of decoration, but it gave the lobby a very attractive appearance and was in strong contrast to previous displays.

The title of the spectacle was run in large cut-out red letters clear across the width of the entrance on the arch, while on a sign running the width of the theatre, above the arch, appeared the words, in white letters, "Now playing, Goldwyn's sensation, 'Theodora'."

Concentrates on Lobby

Robert Sternberg, manager of Gordon's Scollay Square Olympia, Boston, Mass., is resourceful to say the least. Situated as he is at the edge of Boston's north end district, and very near the West end, a large part of the audience comes from the foreign population. He is also beset by 15c shows, shooting galleries and the like.

Nothing daunted, he built himself a church and steeple for the run of Paramount's Is Matrimony a Failure, that completely eclipsed his box office. That, however, is not the story. The steeple held a large and golden wedding bell, while below and out of sight was a chime gong hit by an electric trip hammer. It brought the crowds and it was kept going all day until after the last run was well under way in the evening. The Scollay Square has a very high arch, extending well over two stories, but the spire of the steeple reached to the upper row of lights on the face of the arch.

Works Radio Stunt

A new epoch in motion picture exploitation has arrived! The expected era of personal contact between stars and their audiences was ushered in by the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, during the run of the First National attraction Trouble, starring Jackie Coogan.

The stunt had been planned well in advance. A long distance call from Hollywood to the Circle Theatre had been expedited several days beforehand with the officials of the telephone company. The local radio broadcasting station agreed to co-operate and loaned its amplifiers and expert operators for the proper transmission of the message to the theatre's patrons.

When the moment arrived the audience that crowded the Circle Theatre forgot all about its own troubles and became a single unit listening to Jackie Coogan as the young star told them of his fishing expedition, stated that he had caught an 18 inch bass but that his father had caught more fish, said he had just acquired a new dog and hoped that they all liked his new picture.

The special stunt had been advertised in advance so that every one in Indianapolis knew of it. The cost of the exploitation was limited to the charge for the long distance telephone call. The special notice was included in the regular advertising done by the theatre.

Puzzle Ads

CANTON, OHIO.—The Valentine Theatre got good value out of a full page of co-operative ads by mixing the letters in the firms' names so they were unintelligible. Tickets were offered to persons able to rearrange the letters to spell the name of the firm.

A clew to the identity of the merchant was furnished by printing the slogan beside each jumble of letters.

For instance:

MOC AEHTNC TLSDEIBOLO NO—The Automobile We Sell Has Been One of the Most Popular for 24 Years.

The answer to this was "The Canton Oldsmobile Co."

Paramount Dept. Now 3 Years Old

Exploitation Means Salvation of Small Exhibitor, Says Manager Claude Saunders on Third Birthday of Paramount Department

"Paramount welcomes the advent of new exploitation forces in the field," said Claude Saunders, director of exploitation for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, upon the third birthday of his department.

"We look upon the establishments of exploitation staffs by several other producers with extreme gratification. It means that justification of the idea that Paramount had when it pioneered in motion picture exploitation.

Claude Saunders

"We have never held that exploitation was something for one company only. It is bigger than Paramount, bigger than any of us. It is an idea of utmost importance to the industry for it means the salvation of the small exhibitor.

"Paramount's idea was to send a trained showman to these small-rental fellows and help them get the entire amusement-going public. If that public wasn't large enough, the exploiter's mission was to create brand new patrons.

"While we have done good work it has been impossible to more than scratch the surface. So, instead of resenting the duplication of the work hitherto unique to Paramount, we cheer every time any of our competitors announce an exploitation staff. It means more than the fact that Paramount's idea is vindicated. It means twice—three times as many exhibitors will practice sound showmanship and that means the improvement of the financial condition of the entire industry. For what is motion pictures without these little fellows? They are the bulk of our business."

The Division of Exploitation was established July 10, 1919, when Mr. Saunders and eight assistants went into the field to put over The Miracle Man. Exhibitors received them with such enthusiasm that the force was doubled and it has now expanded to the point where each Paramount exchange has its exploiteer. The Division of Exploitation also creates all of the Paramount posters and lobby accessories.

Walter P. Lindlar, assistant director, has charge of the constructive and creative work of the department. He edits and relays exploitation suggestions to the men in the field, and devises a number of the stunts himself. He is also the author of the Paramount lobby suggestions which are embodied in sketches frequently reproduced in the trade papers.

The most noteworthy achievement of the third year of the department was the star-identification contests for The Affairs of Anatol run in tie-ups with newspapers throughout New England. John P. McConville, exploiteer at Boston, secured 62,832 lines of free publicity in 33 towns. Such small communities as Bangor, Me., Pawtucket, R. I., and Haverhill, Mass., are types of towns benefited.

Standardized campaigns on The Sheik, Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford, Fool's Paradise, Moran of the Lady Letty, and others worked as well in Portland, Ore., as in Portland, Me.

The campaign of the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, for Pathe's "Nanook of the North," included an attractive bit of pageantry in the form of a float displaying a scene of the Northland, illustrated below. The effect of the Kinema drive is demonstrated by the line forming to the left for one of the performances of "Nanook."

Film Stunt Stirs All Louisville

"Crossroads of New York" Put Over With Startling Effect by Manager George A. Sine

Filming a scene for the "Crossroads of Louisville" at one of the city's bu siest street corners shown at the left, and on the right the "troupe" which made the film that was to display home talent on the screen. The group shows George A. Sine; Mildred Anderson, local comedienne; Cameraman William Stout and Al Sobler, First National exploitation representative. In the insert is Manager George A. Sine, who carried out the stunt that recorded an exploitation triumph for First National's "The Crossroads of New York."

THREE hundred and twenty inches of news space free! A street ballyhoo that was seen by thousands in a city where all ballyhoos are strictly taboo! An event of greater local interest than anything that has happened in the Blue Grass region for months!

This was the record established on the unique film exploitation stunt for The Crossroads of New York at the Mary Anderson Theatre, that took place on the main streets of Louisville, Ky. To Manager George A. Sine, daring showman of the Mary Anderson goes the full credit for the quick foresight and brilliant execution.

The exploitation started with the quest to find Louisville's best comedian and was pushed through the aid of the Courier-Journal. The paper played the stunt up in sensational manner; a real scenario was prepared, eight hundred feet of film was ordered and received by the Mary Anderson Theatre and the staff correspondent of the International News Service offered his services in return for the publicity he would get.

Approximately three hundred prospective screen comedians responded to the lure of attracting themselves to Mack Sennett. A brief rehearsal was given the three leading characters. Members of the University of Louisville Players' Club completed the cast.

In accordance with announcement, the first scene was made at the intersection of Broadway and Fourth Street. By the time the camerman dug his tripod into the asphalt the intersection was jammed with spectators waiting to see home talent perform. Signs on The Crossroads of New York tied up the stunt with the picture at the Mary Anderson.

Traffic was completely tied up, and the police department sent a special squad of men to clear a way for the taking of this picture in a city where street stunts were strictly forbidden!

For the next three days the filming continued, always in crowded places where many people could see The Crossroads of New York banner. The spectators, although they did not know it at first, were taken in the picture for "atmosphere."

They were advised of it by the newspaper advertisement and story telling of their "screen appearance" and asking them if they could identify themselves when the picture was shown at the Mary Anderson.

The theatre played to a crowded house during the hottest June day and continued to do record business throughout the run of The Crossroads of New York. Manager Sine established a record, the cost of which was only 800 feet of raw film, and the services of a few property men and aids around the scenes where the picture was shot. In all the cost was $160.

By combining a large cutout of Thomas Meighan with a real cradle, loaned by a local furniture dealer, Manager John B. Carroll of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., produced a life-like effect that spelled success for his lobby for the run of Paramount's "The Bachelor Daddy." This nursery scene was set against a background of purple velvet drapings. The props were furnished without further cost to the management that cards of acknowledgment displayed in the lobby.

Gets the Bachelors

Manager Robert Sparks played up The Bachelor Daddy to the bachelors and indeed to all the men of Wichita Falls, Texas, by a bachelor's matinee and a bachelor's questionnaire.

For a week in advance of the showing, he gave each man entering the theater, a questionnaire on which were printed these questions with blank space for answers: "What is a Pacifier?", "What is the average age at which babies start teething", "When should swaddling clothes be worn?", "At what age should a baby change from long clothes to short?", "How long should a baby cry before going to sleep?", "What is the best food for a baby between the ages of 0 and 1 year?". "If you were forced to adopt five babies what would you do first?" These were headed "Bachelor Daddy's Questionnaire. On the care and upkeep of a baby."

They were printed on a neat gray card which could be slipped into the pocket and cost only the price of printing.

Fairbanks Displays

Something new in advance publicity and exploitation has been inaugurated by United Artists Corp., in connection with Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood. The advance public interest in Fairbanks' spectacular medieval story for fall release has been capitalized in co-operation with the foremost department stores of the country.

The theme of the tie-up is archery. It so happens that the hero of the forthcoming film is tradition's champion wizard with the bow and arrow. The scene photographs from Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood, therefore, were used as the atmosphere for window displays featuring archery goods.

The Fifth Avenue window of Lord & Taylor, New York City, proved to be the pioneer in this stunt. The window was dressed with a life-size wax figure of a girl in sport togs engaged at archery, with a large target, and a fine display of archery accessories. The scene stills were used in the foreground of the window. The Filene store in Boston followed during the week of June 26 with a display made up on a similar motif but on a somewhat different arrangement. Several other large stores have applications with United Artists for an archery tie-up.

Clubs in With Milkman

The five robust youngsters who make such a hit with Tommy Meighan in The Bachelor Daddy suggested "milk exploitation" when the picture played the Palace Theatre, Mason City, Iowa. Accordingly Hermanson Brothers' dairy was approached on co-operative advertising. This company covers the town like a blanket, distributing milk in nearly every home.

Two days before the opening, hangers were attached to the necks of every milk, cream and buttermilk bottle delivered. The text tied up with the picture in this fashion: "The Bachelor Daddy wouldn't have been able to handle his five kids so well if he didn't have Hermanson's milk."

Mr. Hermanson, also, has a mailing list, and a mailing list that doesn't leave out three people in town. A letter was sent tieing up with the picture to every person.

The speed, action and thrills of the Fox production, "The Fast Mail," supplied the best possible display material and was utilized to the limit of those possibilities at the Strand. Water colors reproducing scenes from the play were grouped in the lobby and produced a display, the attraction value of which is illustrated in above photograph.

Instead of using cutouts and display frames in the lobby of the Imperial, Asheville, N. C., to advertise United Artists' "The Ruling Passion," Manager John B. Carroll placed three large figures above the marquise, which he illuminated with electric spots. He also tied up with the gasoline filling stations for some poster advertising.

J. L. McCurdy of the Standard, Cleveland, O., evolved a neat publicity stunt for Universal's "Step On It" when he arranged with the local manager of a scale company for the use of one of the machines, which he placed in front of the theatre. He wired Hoot Gibson for his exact weight and then offered passes to the show to all persons whose poundage corresponded with that of the star.

Seating Problems—Solving Them—III

There Are Secrets About Utilizing Space You Never Thought About

DOWN TO FINE POINTS

The placing of the chairs in rows and the arrangement of the aisles, to make ingress and egress as easy, speedy and safe as possible and to conform in every way with the building and fire ordinance of each community, is another important point requiring the most careful thought and planning. Oftentimes, too, a very simple re-arrangement makes possible an appreciable increase in house capacity, and if not actual increased numerical capacity, actual increased box office capacity by transforming otherwise less desirable and less valuable seats to a higher grade of valuation and desirability.

Increased Profits From Scientific Seating

Increases of from 10 per cent to 20 per cent in box office gross value are not uncommon through expert and careful replanning and rearrangement of seating. Every theatre manager appreciates the increased profits to be realized even on a small increase in the gross capacity of his house. When multiplied by the total number of performances in the year, it amounts to a considerable sum.

Comfort, Strength, Beauty—Three Essentials of Theatre Seating

With the larger engineering problems of seat arrangement and placing solved, comes the consideration of the seat itself. The importance of this feature is well emphasized by that great authority on the theatre and theatre management, Robert Grau, in his work, "The Stage in the Twentieth Century."

America Leads in Luxurious Theatre Seating

In this he says, "The designing and building of opera chairs as exemplified in the seating of our finer metropolitan playhouses has developed into a truly scientific and decorative art. A distinctive feature of the magnificence of furnishings of the modern motion picture houses is the luxuriousness of the seating.

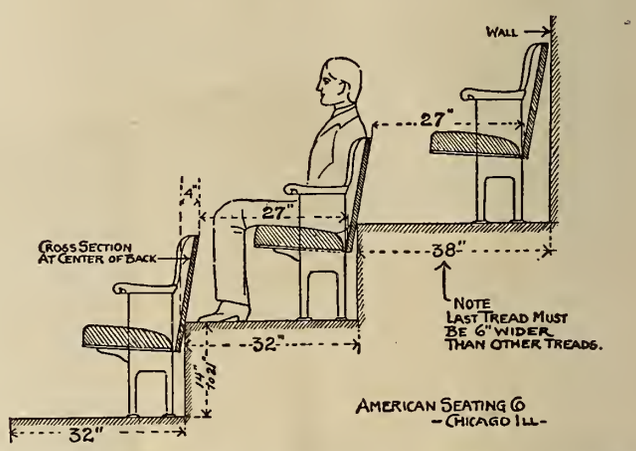
"At least as important as these artistic features, however, is the consideration of comfort. To enable a large audience to rest at ease during the length of the play is of vital importance. In the design and construction of the opera chair, this is a point that should demand paramount attention, and the principle applies both to the more elegant upholstered chair and the simpler type, with built-up wood back and seat, such as is commonly used in the smaller houses, moving picture theatres, and the galleries of our metropolitan opera houses."

Comfort a Paramount Consideration

Next to a clear vision to the stage, the patron's first consideration is his own personal bodily comfort.

Roominess, our patent mattress spring seats, smooth, well upholstered backs, correctly placed side arms, smoothly operating and noiseless seat-hinges, a perfectly level placing with relation to the floor, serviceable racks, anchorage firm and unshakeable, no loose parts to annoy, no sharp out-jutting points to catch and tear the clothing, all these are elements of comfort that are pre-eminently provided for in modern grade theatre chairs.

It is significant of the pre-eminence for solid comfort and luxurious ease, which modern chairs have achieved, that one of the very largest theatre circuits, owning and operating theatres all over the entire country, which makes the comfort of its patrons its first and last consideration at all times, has for over fifteen years used opera chairs with mattress-spring seat, roller-bearing hinges and other distinctive features, standard equipment in all its theatres throughout the land.



This drawing illustrates proper length of treads in relationship to chairs thereto in balconies and the necessity for last tread being wider than others. This point is very frequently overlooked

Strength and Durability

But, if comfort is the patron's first consideration and so has its direct bearing on box office receipts, and the house's popularity and success, of equal importance to the theatre manager are the built-in qualities of the chair itself, the strength and durability of its materials and the scientific and painstaking skill with which it has been constructed. Strength, stability, durability must all be there as surety of a long, uninterrupted span of usefulness, and as proof against costly delays and loss from breakdowns and repairs. A broken seat brings in nothing at the box office, means additional expense besides, and is a decided annoyance to your patrons. To withstand successfully years of constant use, especially in the moving picture and vaudeville theatres of the day, theatre seats must be scientifically constructed of the very best materials procurable and must be strong and fool proof in every detailed part.

Rigid Inspection at Every Step

Not only should every individual part of each chair be rigidly inspected by department examiners, but a final scrutiny of the completed piece catches even the slightest imperfection. As proof of the rigidness of this final test, from 5 per cent to 8 per cent of the pieces examined are either held for some minor correction not even noticeable to the layman's eye or are rejected entirely.

Modern Theatre Seats

On this page is a collection of theatre seats taken from several prominent theatres to illustrate the trend in this branch of theatre equipment.

The old wooden chair that squeaked and broke has disappeared and in its stead has come a seat which has not only strength but fine appearance. It will be noted also that large theatres are monogramming their seats believing that this item of comfort is well worth advertising.

Slow Burning Weatherproof Wires

Covering of this type of wire is a combination of the Underwriter's and weatherproof insulations. This fireproof coating comprises a little more than half of the total covering. When the fireproof coating is placed on the outside, the wire is then called "slow" burning weatherproof wire.

(Q) Explain how does the slow burning weatherproof wires compare with weatherproof wire?

(A) It is much less inflammable and less subject to softening due to heat.

(Q) Where should slow burning wire be used?

(A) It should be used in places where wires are to be exposed and where moisture resisting quality is desired, also be placed where at the same time it is desirable to avoid an excess of inflammable covering.

(Q) For what services is slow burning weatherproof wire used?

(A) It is not adapted to outside work.

Safe Capacity of Copper Wires

All wires will heat when a current of electricity passes through them. The greater the amount of current or the smaller the wire, the greater will be the heating effect. The large wires are heated comparatively more than small wires which is because the latter have a relatively greater radiating surface.

The temperature of a copper wire increases approximately as the suare of the current, and inversely as the cube of the diameter of the wire.

From these considerations it must be clear to the projectionist that it is very important not to overload conductors in order to secure efficient working, and to avoid risk of fire on inside installations.

The Board of Underwriters specifies that the carrying capacity of a wire is safe when the wire will easily conduct a certain current without becoming painfully hot.

Circular Mils

Unit of measurement in measuring the cross sectional area of wires is the circular mil; it is the area of a circle one mil (.001 in.) in diameter.

The area of a wire in circular mils is equal to the square of the diameter in mils.

The Square Mils

For the measuring conductors of square or rectangular cross section, such as bus bars used on switch boards, copper ribbon, etc., the square mil is used. A square mil is the area of a square whose sides are one mil (.001 in. long) and is equal to .001 x .001=.000001 square inch.

Mil Foot

This unit is used as a basis for computing the resistance of any given wire. A mil foot means a volume one mil in diameter and one foot long.

Resistance of a wire of commercially pure copper one mil in diameter and one foot long is taken as the standard in calculating the resistance of copper wires, and has been found to be equal to 10.79 ohms at 75 degrees Fahr.

Calculation is made according to the following rule:

The resistance of a copper wire is equal to its length in feet, multiplied by the resistance of one mil foot (10.79 ohms) and divided by the number of circular mils, or the square of its diameter.

The transverse area of a copper conductor is found by multiplying the resistance of a mil foot (10.79) by its length in feet and dividing the result by its resistance in ohms.

Means "Ease at the Movies"

Special Movie Invitation

WE invite every motion picture theatre owner who appreciates the comfort of his patrons to inspect the MOV-EZY chair—the chair that means "Ease at the Movies." It's the only real advance made in theatre seating in the last fifty years.

A patented device enables the occupant to swing the MOV-EZY from side to side enabling late arrivals to pass. No more interrupted pictures, nor stumbling in the dark.

We want you to actually sit in this chair, to settle back in its comfortable depths, flanked by individual arm rests. Then you'll realize what an important part the MOV-EZY plays in the enjoyment of the show.

We want you as a theatre owner to see for yourself the latest thing in picture enjoyment. Stop in at your earliest convenience, or write for details.

Building Notes

The Star Theatre in Lockport, N. Y., now under new management, has installed two Powers' machines. Frank Davidson, of the Buffalo office of the Independent Movie Supply Company, installed the projectors.

The Palmer Amusement Company, Boston, will shortly begin work on one of the largest picture theatres in the suburban districts of New England. The house will rise on a 24,000 foot lot purchased by the company in the Egleston Square district at 2026 Columbus Avenue, Roxbury, a suburb of Boston. The building, which is expected to be opened in the early winter, will have a modern, fireproof theatre in the rear, seating 2000, six retail stores facing on Columbus Avenue, most of which are already spoken for, and a large public hall on the second floor front, to be used principally for dancing.

Harry Ascher, of Ascher Brothers, has just assumed direct personal management of the West Englewood Theatre at 63d Street and Marshfield Avenue, the largest house in the Ascher Circuit. Dave Rice has been transferred to the Rosewood, a North Side house.

Tom O'Neil has ordered specially designed lighting fixtures and electric sign for his new Lark Theatre, now under construction in McMinville, Ore. The Lark will seat 700, and will be equipped with Simplex machines, mazda stereopticon, Hertner transverter, carpets and drapes.

Portland is to have another new suburban house in the Sellwood district which will be called the Sellwood Theatre. Stark and Hochnadel are the owners. Seating capacity will be 650. The enterprise will cost $40,000.

The Black chain of New England Theatres has just acquired the New Magnet Theatre at Barre, Vermont. It already controls the two other theatres in the City, the New Park and the Opera House. The Magnet Theatre, a modern house, containing about 900 seats, was recently built by local interests.

Manager Bruce Fowler of the Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo, announces that his ibg neighborhood theatre, will install a $40,000 Wurlitzer orchestral organ late this summer, when the house will close for several weeks to permit installation. When the organ is installed, it is proposed to do away with the orchestra.

You Can Watch Your Attendance Figures Increase

The box office never fails to reflect the appeal of high-class, appropriate music. The Cremona Orchestra-Organ has proved this as almost no other theatre organ.

A representative attendance "curve" before and after the installation of a Cremona Orchestra-Organ is shown. Note how attendance increased right in July, after the organ was installed.

The Cremona is unsurpassed as a hand-played organ. In addition it provides appropriate, perfectly-toned orchestra numbers. A double roll system permits playing with any standard player roll or solo roll. A varied appropriate program is assured with or without an operator, and your musical overhead is minimum.

Cameraman's Department

Speaking of Buying Cameras

By Len H. Roos, of Nature Classics

Now that the last mechanic's bill has been paid, now that I have everything on the box with the exception of a darkroom with running water, I believe I can write with authority and without contradiction on the great indoor sport of cameramen—the purchasing of a new camera.

Understand me, I do not claim to be the one and only disciple of "the kodak with a handle" who has braved all the dangers of the modern camera store with its wily clerks. Doubtless, many have approached their dens with the idea that they knew what they wanted. I hereby go on record of making the bet that few have come out of the place in the same frame of mind. Another thing, few are in any state of good nerves to write about it afterward.

It was in Hollywood (that city noted for the much-talked-of bathing girl and scandal) that I was seized with the mania for a new camera. It happened like this. I went on the new job one sunny (?) Monday morning, and the first thing the director asked was, "Using a YELL & HOWL?" I said, "No." All he said was "Get one." I had been warned about this, so I had taken the precaution to arrange to rent one. I did. I rented that camera for several weeks at 50 berries a week. Then one Sunday I got to figuring and the result was the start of what anyone who has been through the thing will call a nerve-racking, death-defying feat. I had decided to purchase a new camera for myself.

"You might sell that hack you've got out there"

Accordingly, the first day I got back from location early I went into Los Angeles and called on a well-known camera store there. Now, bear in mind, brother cameramen, I went in that store thinking I knew what I wanted. In fact, I knew I knew what I wanted. I did not. I walked up to the counter and asked for the gentleman in charge of the motion picture cameras. I said, "gentleman." I erred. That man was a salesman. I'm here to state I believe that he could sell fans to Esquimos. I said in a firm voice, "I would like to look at a Passe camera." He looked a me very coldly over the counter. "You ain't thinking of buying one, are you?" I admitted I was kind a' leaning that way, when he said: "Well, there's no harm looking at 'em, but take my advise, brother, don't buy one of 'em." I said, "Why?" "Commere, I'll show you," said he.

We entered a little room where the cameras were kep, and I saw a nice "Passe" all set up. I said, "Now, what's wrong with a box like this?" Right here is where he started in to show me. "Magazines are loose, see." He went into a wrestling match with that camera, Marquis of Queensbury rules, catch-as-catch-can. On the third fall he came up with a magazine in his hand. "See?" he said. "A magazine as loose as that would probably leak light." I said, "But, listen, mister, I want a camera to make pictures with, I'm not looking for a sparring partner." "Well," he said, "they'll loosen up in time." I admitted I wouldn't be surprised if a person was to battle with 'em every day like he did. "Now," he said, "I want to show you this little Debris." "Wouldn't have one for a gift," said I. "Anyway, if you want to wrestle with one why don't you pick one your own size." "Aw, now listen," he explodes. "This is really the swellest thing on the market; look how it's made." He opened it up and showed me the "works," but I wasn't much impressed. "I've heard they froze up in cold weather," I told him. "Bunk," said he, "all bunk! I had this camera up in TRUCKEE, where it gets as much as 20 below freezing, and she worked just as easy as she does right here in Los Angeles." "Listen, mister," I says. "You're not talking about cold at all; where I come from, up in Canada, it's so cold the boys put WORCESTERSHIRE sauce on their oatmeal in the morning." This kind of floored him for a minute, so I went back to look at the "Passe." "How much is this outfit, anyway," I asked. "Well," he said, "she lists at six hundred and eighty seeds without the war tax. Of course, that's without magazines, tripod or lenses." I said, "I don't want to get a price on a bunch of parts, what I want to know is your best price on the outfit." "Just a minute," he said, "and I'll figure it up." He was still figuring after I had looked at everything in the place, and as there was nothing else to do I thought I might help him a little with his arithmetic. "You'd do well to get an adding machine," I told him, after he had ran out of paper and started to add a column of figures on the white celluloid of a magazine. "Well," he said, "I guess you had better drop in to-morrow, I haven't all the figures right here handy on the whole thing, but I can give you the price of the Debris outfit, because it's mine and I want to get it off my hands." Aha, I was beginning to see the light. "I'll see you to-morrow." I intended to call on him later, after he had sold his own camera. I figured there might possibly be chance of buying what I wanted if he had nothing of his own to sell.

The next day at lunch the G. M. asked me to drive his car up to his garage and get a tire fixed. His garage was right near the "YELL & HOWL" service station, so I roared up in front of the door and pulled up. "How much does a brand new 'YELL & HOWL' outfit cost, I asked. "You want a whole outfit?" this bird says, rubbing his hands. "Sure," I said. "I've got as much as fifteen hundred beans cash to blow on an outfit." His face fell. "You can't buy a YELL & HOWL for no fifteen hundred shekels," he says. "Why, that would just buy the bare box without magazines or anything." All at once he spotted the car standing outside. Now, I want to tell you this was no ordinary car I was driving. She was a special body job on a Cadillac 8 chassis. "You might sell that hack you got out there," he says, "and raise a little sugar that way." "Yeah," I said. "I could sell the boat all right and probably get a nice little piece of change out of it, but if I did I wouldn't need any camera where I'd be when the boss found out about it." "So long" was all he said.

"It will never be confused with Mary Garden perfume"

A couple of days later a friend of mine, who was shooting on the L. K. O. lot, asked me to take a walk with him at lunch time over to Santa Monica Boulevard to the Snitchell Camera Co.'s shops. We went in to take a look at the new "Snitchell," but they had it all apart, changing the design, so we couldn't tell just what it would be like. The chap there informed us, though, that the cameras were ordered for a year ahead, so I thereupon lost all interest. In the shop I noticed a "Debris" all set up and I asked his man about it. "That belongs to a director at the U. lot," he said. "He used to be a cameraman and bought it in France when he was over there, and now he wants to sell it because he's a director now and hasn't got any use for a camera." "Or cameramen, either," said my friend to himself. I took a good look at the box and I had to admit that it was fixed up pretty nice. I caught myself making notes of some of the "improvements." "You're not thinking of buying one of those, are you," asked my friend. "No chance," I said, "but this Iris arrangement is certainly pretty slick." "Yeah," he says "She's a neat little kodak, all right, but she'll freeze up tighter than a Razzberry when she gets in the cold." "Let's go," I said, "I've heard that before."

I will not worry you with details of my many visits to different camera stores. Suffice to say that within a month I had a big supply of catalogs, price-lists, hints to camera owners, hints to prospective camera owners, and hints to men who would like to be camera owners. And all this time I was paying out 50 bones a week in rental on that "YELL & HOWL." Now, I knew that this studio job was a temporary thing as I am a scenic man, and I was pretty sure that I would be "back in the mountings" shortly. I began to see myself trying to tell a Swiss guide that a black box answering the description of a "Passe" studio model only weighed 20 pounds or thereabouts. Its size would be against it. Besides, I could not figure a way to load it on a pack horse without taking off the magazines. To take them off every time would be quite a waste of film, and I knew I would have grief enough with the "swindle-sheets" without getting into a jam about wasting stock. Right at this point I began to take an active interest in the "Debris" outfit. I again made a pilgrimage to L. A. and looked in on my friend, the wrestler, and told him that I had sinned and was willing to be converted. I got his best price and left, finding that I could get the outfit cheaper in the East. I never could understand all the noise of the press on the present freight rates. Now I know and I'm with 'em to the last ditch.

It wasn't long until I was called East, and while there I did the DEED. I walked into a store that sells "Debris" and said right quick, "Got any 'Debris' outfits in stock?" "Yes," the pirate behind the counter replied. "Well, wrap one up, I'm a real live cash customer," and so I bought it.

There isn't much more to tell except that I have just returned from a trip in the mountains and used the camera in 34 below zero weather and didn't have a bit of trouble. To brother cameramen, who are the proud fathers, pardon, owners of "Debris" outfits, I would suggest that they lubricate them with "NYE" watch oil. This is a porpoise oil and is not affected by cold. You will note on opening the bottle that it will never be confused with any of Mary Garden's famous toilet preparations (advt.) as far as the odor goes, but it is a good oil just the same.

A Series of Closeups of Prominent Studio Cameramen

Byron C. Haskins, who shoots for Allen Holubar, is a westerner, a college man and an artist. He last worked on First National's "Hurricane's Gal" with Dorothy Dalton

Bi-Monthly Release

Archie A. Jacobson having just completed photographing educational pictures for M. W. Palmer, of the Famous Players Studios, Long Island, has been engaged as camera-man for the Federated Screen Review. This reel is being produced by Lester Soman and A. D. V. Storey. Storey will edit this bi-monthly release.

New Rothacker Offices

On his last trip East Watterson R. Rothacker opened the new Rothacker New York headquarters at 543 Fifth Avenue. While in that city he held several conferences with engineers regarding the New York link to the Rothacker laboratory chain, which he wants to see in operation as soon as possible. A. P. Miller, of the Chicago technical staff, is still in New York in connection with the new plant.

STRAND

"THE SHEIK'S WIFE," Special Production (Vitagraph).

Exploitation: Attractive lobby helped to bring considerable business.

Short Subjects: "Torchy's Millions."

BOSTON

MODERN

"ALWAYS THE WOMAN," Betty Compson (Goldwyn). Good business. Well liked on the whole.

"THE SERENADE," George Walsh (First National). A very, very good attraction, and sure fire. Show as a whole very good and audiences, that averaged better than usual, well satisfied.

Exploitation.—Fair publicity in newspapers, with the regular ads and specials in all Sundays. Three by six posters in all subway and elevated stations. Window cards. Advance sheets and framed stills in lobby advance week, and frames during run. Three automatic still projectors in lobby, advance week and during run.

Short Subjects.—"Torchy Steps Out," Educational Comedy, well liked. International News Reel, Topics of the Day.

BEACON

"ALWAYS THE WOMAN," Betty Compson (Goldwyn). Better liked here. "THE SERENADE," George Walsh (First National). Same pull as at the Modern, which has a more regular and exclusive patronage. This theatre from its location, gets greater variety in audiences, the conclusion being that both pictures would pull anywhere.

Exploitation.—Same with exception of no still projectors in lobby.

Short Subjects.—Same.

PARK

"HILLS OF MISSING MEN," Helen Holmes and J. C. McGowan (Associated). "WHEN THE DEVIL DRIVES," Leah Baird (Associated). Went great with all audiences, which were better on the whole. Show as a whole very satisfactory.

Exploitation.—No newspaper advertising during the summer period. Framed stills in lobby during run and advance week. Posters in all subway and elevated stations. Window cards. Special lobby posters to show up and down street.

Short Subjects.—"A Penny Reward," Educational (Campbell) Comedy. International News Reel, Movie Chats.

CRITERION

FIRST HALF

"A VIRGIN'S SACRIFICE," Corinne Griffith (Vitagraph). Quite a good drawing card. Well liked.

"FOOTLIGHTS," Elsie Ferguson (Famous Players). Went over big.

Exploitation.—Window cards, advance lobby display. Posters in suburban elevated and subway stations. Special lobby stretchers during the run.

Short Subjects.—"A Pair of Kings," Larry Semon Comedy (Vitagraph). Harold Lloyd reissue. "Velvet Fingers," serial. Show took very well.

SECOND HALF

"HATE," Alice Lake (Metro). A great picture that went better than any in a long time. Great appeal. Strong story.

"PARDON MY NERVE," Buck Jones (Fox). Well liked.

Exploitation.—Same.

Short Subjects.—Rollin Comedy reissue. "The Yellow Arm" serial, went fairly well.

BUFFALO

SHEA'S HIPPODROME

"THE RULING PASSION," George Arliss (United Artists). Despite street car strike, business was satisfactory. Highly praised by newspapers. The audiences liked the production after several weeks of lighter entertainment.

Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising, lobby display, billboards and window cards.

Short Subjects.—"Oh Daddy," a Mack Sennett comedy, Hippodrome Review, Topics of the Day.

"THE DUST FLOWER," Helene Chadwick (Goldwyn), Second Half. The box office recorded fair figures. The street car strike was partly to blame. The star, however, is a prime favorite at the Hippodrome and this fact saved the house from a bad slump.

LOEW'S STATE

"ACROSS THE CONTINENT," Wallace Reid (Paramount). Was the means of drawing very good business during the entire week. Everyone praised the picture.

Exploitation.—Large display advertising in the newspapers, fine electric signs atop marquee, window cards, billboards.

Short Subjects.—"A Hero at Zero," a Monty Banks comedy, Pathe News, Mutt and Jeff cartoon and scenic subjects.

LAFAYETTE SQUARE

"THE LAST TRAIL," Special Cast. Fair business.

Exploitation.—Newspapers, big electric display on front of house, lobby display, window cards.

Short Subjects.—Burlingame travelogue, "Snub" Pollard comedy. Fox News and Courier Camera, showing local events.

MARK-STRAND

"ROUGH SHOD," Charles Jones (Fox). Strand audiences like western stuff, so this one pleased the fair-sized houses during first half of week, with the trolley strike making inroads on box office.

Exploitation.—Advertising in newspapers, lobby display and window cards.

Short Subjects.—Revival of Harold Lloyd in "Be My Wife," a Pat Sullivan cartoon, "Felix in Love," and Kinograms.

"GAY AND DEVILISH," Doris May (Film Booking Offices). Staged a comeback the second half of the week at the Strand and recorded good business.

Short Subjects.—Irving Cummings in "Rope's End," added for good measure.

PALACE

"THE MAN UNDER COVER," Herbert Rawlinson (Universal). Kept box office receipts up to average, but the strike hurt business. Rawlinson popular with patrons and picture pleased those who saw it.

Exploitation.—Lobby display of unusual attractiveness and window cards.

Short Subjects.—"Horse Tears" (Universal) and International News.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

BROADWAY

"DOMESTIC RELATIONS." Katherine MacDonald (First National). Three days to very good business.

"MAN TO MAN," Harry Carey (Universal). A real box office attraction where they like Westerns.

IMPERIAL

"BRIDE'S PLAY," Marion Davies (Paramount). Fair business.

CHICAGO

RANDOLPH

"THE MAN UNCONQUERABLE," Jack Holt (Paramount). An adventure story that sustains the interest. Business was good.

CHICAGO

"HURRICANE'S GAL," Dorothy Phillips (First National). A romantic tale replete with action. Excellent patronage all week.

PASTIME

"THE DUST FLOWER," Helen Chadwick (Goldwyn). Delightfully entertaining and well presented. Played to satisfactory audiences.

CASINO

"TRIMMED," Hoot Gibson (Universal). An enjoyable presentation that seemed to please. Business held up nicely all week.

CLEVELAND

STILLMAN

"FOOTFALLS," Tyrone Power (Fox). Fair business.

Exploitation.—Advance newspaper advertising coupled with street car cards and an attractive lobby, assisted materially.

Short Subjects. — Christie-Educational comedy "Mile a Minute Mary."

STATE

"THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK," Popular Cast (Sennett-First National). Good business.

Exploitation.—Advance newspaper advertising and street car cards. A lobby display of a local art school was featured in conjunction with the picture. Local vocalist and Singing Orchestra were also featured.

ALLEN

"MR. BARNES OF NEW YORK," Tom Moore (Goldwyn). Fair business.

No exploitation.

Short Subjects.—Larry Semon in a "Pair of Kings."

NEWMAN

"THE MAN FROM HOME," James Kirkwood (Paramount) and "CARMEN," Wallace Reid (Paramount). The double feature idea went over great. Large attendance all week, despite keen amusement park competition.

Current Events: Newman News and Views.

LIBERTY

"THE WALL FLOWER," Colleen Moore and Richard Dix (Goldwyn)—This one proved a good "hot weather" card. A good week's attendance.

Short Subjects: "Bright Eyes" comedy, and Pathe News, current events.

ROYAL

"THE PRIMITIVE LOVER," Constance Talmadge (First National). The star is always certain to draw here. A lively business for a week's run.

Short Subjects: Hal Roach comedy and Royal Screen Magazine, current events.

Exploitation: The line, "She was hungry for love, but her husband's appetite never got beyond the cookbook," was featured in newspaper space, along with the word, "WOW," in bold face lettering at the top of the ad. Also billboard and lobby display space.

TWELFTH STREET

"STRANGE IDOLS," Dustin Farnum (Fox). A good week's business. The special number helped, although the feature was a strong drawing factor.

Special Number: "Oh, You Wildcat," novelty with cast of fifteen, and Screen Magazine, current events.

LOS ANGELES

SYMPHONY

"GRANDMA'S BOY," Harold Lloyd (Pathe). In the eighth week and going strong.

Short Subjects.—Fox News; Screen Snaps, "Yosemite Valley"; Good Things of Life.

PANTAGES

"THE VERMILION PENCIL," Sessue Hayakawa (R. C.). Very good audience picture. The audiences were well pleased. The feature picture received most of the weekly advertising space in the dailies. No exploitation.

KINEMA

"NANOOK OF THE NORTH" (Pathe). Special cast. The feature was a special drawing card because it was so out of the ordinary. Advertising doubled in dailies.

Short Subjects.—Overture; Scenic Beautiful; Topics of the Day; Kinema; Pictorial Review; Sherwoods Singing Orchestra.

RIALTO

"WHEN SATAN SLEEPS," Jack Holt (Paramount). Fair business, better than the first week's business. The heat is partly responsible. The reviews have been splendid.

Exploitation.—Usual weekly advertising.

Short Subjects.—Grauman's Rialto Orchestra; Pathe Weekly; Herbert Burland at the Wurlitzer.

TALLY'S BROADWAY

"SCIENCE OR GOD" (Mission Film Co.) Running for one week and pulling very good business. The title is so startling that it has drawn forth much publicity in the way of news stories.

Exploitation. — The daily advertising was increased three times the ordinary weekly space, and 45 twenty-four sheets; 100 three sheeets and 1000 cards were used.

CALIFORNIA

"ALWAYS THE WOMAN," Betty Compson (Goldwyn). Very good business. The star is popular and the title proved good.

Exploitation.—A week's advance advertising in large print with the previous week's bill. Increased advertising space in the dailies.

Short Subjects.—Carli D. Elinor conducting a fifteen minute concert twice daily; Goldwyn-Examiner Screen Contest; California Topical Review and Magazine; Topics of the Day; A Magnificent Presentation of Overture 1812.

MISSION

"THE STORM" (Universal). All star cast. With the usual weekly newspaper advertising, and 50-24 sheets on the boards, the feature is pulling very good business, with added attendance daily. The management expects a four-week run.

GRAUMAN'S MILLION DOLLAR

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). Went over big with usualy weekly advertising and news stories. The picture will be held over for a second week, a most unusual proceeding.

Short Subjects.—Grauman's Symphony Orchestra; Pathe Review; Urban Movie Chats; Henry B. Murtagh at the Wurlitzer; Grauman World Visions; 20 Minutes at Gloria Swanson's Home; A Stupendous presentation with 15 Stars in Person on the Stage.

LOEW STATE

"GAY AND DEVILISH," Doris May (R. C.). Very good audience picture. The star has a certain following here for her clean pictures.

Exploitation.—The Loew management put on a "Flapper Week."

Short Subjects.—The whole program was selected for the entertainment of the flapper.

CLUNES BROADWAY

"WHEN THE DEVIL DRIVES," Leah Baird. Did fair business. The title was attractive to many and the news stories were good.

Exploitation.—The usual amount of advertising was used.

Short Subjects. — Harold Lloyd in "Nothing But Trouble" was an added attraction on the weekly bill.

HILLSTREET

"THE REFEREE," Conway Tearle (Selznick). Very good audience picture. The usual weekly advertising was used and the picture given prominent space with the vaudeville bill.

MILWAUKEE

ALHAMBRA

"BEAUTY'S WORTH," with Marion Davies and Forrest Stanley (Cosmopolitan Production). Excellent business. Cool weather of the week favorable. Newspaper criticisms also helped.

Exploitation: Lobby display, attractive newspaper and billboard advertisements.

Short Subjects: "Circus Days" short comedy, Pathe News reel, industrial films, piano recital.

BUTTERFLY

"HIS WIFE'S HUSBAND," with Betty Blythe (B. B. Production). Fair business.

Short Subjects: Comedy "Friday the 13th"; Screen Snapshots, Selznick news reels and special orchestra program.

GARDEN

"OVER THE BORDER," with Tom Moore and Betty Compson (Paramount). Good business. Tom Moore a favorite and Miss Compson will liked.

Short Subjects: "Rapid Fire" a Century comedy, Fox news reel, industrial and educational reels.

MERRILL

"THE CRIMSON CHALLENGE," with Dorothy Dalton and John Bowers (Paramount). Good business. Miss Dalton always proves a good business getter.

Short Subjects: Tony Sarg's Almanac, International News reels, Goldwyn Sport reels and Century comedy.

SAXE'S RIALTO

"SEEING IS BELIEVING," with Viola Dana (Metro). Good business. Viola Dana has many admirers in Milwaukee.

Exploitation: Lobby display street car posters and attractive newspaper advertising.

Short Subjects: Two act Sunshine comedy, Selznick News reel and Fashion Hints

SAXE'S STRAND

"THE INFIDEL," with Katherine McDonald (First National). Excellent business.

Short Subjects: "His Wife's Relations" with Busters Keaton (First National). Newspaper critics agreed almost unanimously that it is good.

Short Subjects: First National Kinograms and Sketchograms and Topics of the Day.

PALACE

"BOBBED HAIR," with Wanda Hawley (Reelart). Good business.

PHILADELPHIA

STANLEY

"OVER THE BORDER," Betty Compson and Tom Moore (Paramount). The fact that it was a double star bill was widely exploited. Good business resulted despite sweltering weather.

Short Subjects: "Felix in Love," Krazy Kat cartoon (Masterpiece—State Rights) Special one reel, "How to Make a Radio for Sixty Cents" (De Luxe—State Rights) Topics of the Day, Fox and Pathe News Reels and Prizma, "The Victory Parade" (Masterpiece).

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN," Thomas Meighan (Paramount); "NANOOK OF THE NORTH" (Pathe). Very satisfactory business throughout the week. Well liked.

Short Subjects: Pathe and Fox News Reels and Topics of the Day.

ALDINE

"THE REAL ADVENTURE," Florence Vidor (Pathe). Picture played to splendid business all week after a very intensive advertising campaign.

Short Subjects: Century Comedy, "Some Class" (Universal), Screenland Review (Film Booking Offices), Universal News and Pathe Review.

"THE POWER WITHIN" (Pathe). Scenario was written by clergyman in fashionable suburban church, and house manager through a clever tie-up with societies and church bodies did a record-breaking business.

Short Subjects: "The Leather Pushers" (Universal), Hymeyers Travelaughs and Pathe and Universal News.

ARCADIA

"FRENCH HEELS," Irene Castle (Hodkinson). Brought out big audiences for the Arcadia throughout the engagement.

Short Subjects: Hallroom Boy Comedy, "No Money to Guide Them" (Masterpiece—State Rights), Pathe News and Urban Movie Chats No. 21 (Hodkinson).

"RECKLESS YOUTH," Elaine Hammerstein (Select). Played to exceptional business and was well praised.

Short Subjects: Monty Banks Comedy, "Sailing Along" (Masterpiece — State Rights), Pathe News and Urban Movie Chats No. 23 (Hodkinson).

KARLTON

"THE ORDEAL" Agnes Ayres (Paramount). Picture was advertised as society drama with lavish display of feminine finery, and as a result the audiences for the most part were made up of women. Very good summer business.

Short Subjects: Al. St. John Comedy, "The Village Sheik" (Fox), Post Nature Picture, "Winter's Tale" (Educational) and Pathe News.

"WHEN ROMANCE RIDES," Claire Adams (Goldwyn). Exploited as a story with a horse racing atmosphere and drew very good houses all week. It made a strong appeal to the fashionable Chestnut Street audiences and was liberally praised.

Short Subjects: Funnyface Comedy, "All Balled Up" (B & B—State Rights), two reel special "A Trip to Paramount Town" (Paramount) and Pathe News.

CAPITAL

"SEEING IS BELIEVING," Viola Dana (Metro). Viola has a large following among the lower Market Street audiences, and was accorded good patronage throughout the week.

Short Subjects: Hallroom Boys Comedy, "Better Late Than Never" (Masterpiece—State Rights), Kinograms, Topics of the Day, Prizma, "The Desert Spring Song" (Masterpiece—State Rights).

VICTORIA

"YELLOW MEN AND GOLD," Helen Chadwick (Goldwyn). An elaborate lobby display of Chinese pirate scenes and new electrical effects in the front of the house brought in the crowds in the face of very warm weather. Picture was well liked from every angle.

Short Subjects: "Toonerville Trolley Comedy," "The Toonerville Blues" (Educational), Pathe News, Urban Movie Chats No. 22 (Hodkinson).

REGENT

"THE HEART SPECIALIST," Mary Miles Minter (Paramount). Drew fair houses. Seemed to be rather an off week in the neighborhood, but production won approval of patrons and press.

Short Subjects: "Won at $5,000," Harold Lloyd special on reel (Pathe), Krazy Kat cartoon, "Felix All at Sea" (Masterpiece—State Rights).

"THE DEVIL'S PAWN," Pola Negri (Paramount). This production drew well and was exceptionally well liked.

Short Subjects: Fox Sunshine Comedy, "The Wise Duck" and Pathe News.

SEATTLE, WASH.

COLISEUM

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN" Tom Meighan (Paramount). Star has good following here.

Exploitation. — Billboards, newspaper, window cards and lobby.

Short Subjects.—Bill and Bob Scenic, "The Canadian Lynx," Topics of the Day, Pathe News, Kinograms.

BLUE MOUSE

"A CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT," Harry C. Myers (Fox). Big popular demand return engagement, patronage excellent. First time at popular prices.

Exploitation. — Newspaper advertising, billboards and lobby.

Short Subjects.—Fox News and orchestra in special numbers.

LIBERTY

"YELLOW MEN AND GOLD," Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick (Goldwyn) and "A Pair of Kings," Larry Semon comedy. Big double header program for July 4th week proved popular.

Exploitation. — Newspaper advertising, billboards, window cards and lobby.

Short Subjects.—Liberty News, Sunset-Burrud Scenic.

COLUMBIA

FIRST HALF

Exploitation. — Newspaper advertising and lobby.

Short Subjects—International news, comedy.

LAST HALF

"STEP ON IT," Hoot Gibson (Universal). Star popular here since personal appearance.

Exploitation.—Lobby trim and newspaper advertising.

Short subjects. — International News and July 4th local parade pictures, "Hello, Mars." Century Comedy, Dewey Washington singing "Georgia, I Love You."

STRAND

"OVER THE BORDER," Betty Compson (Paramount). Good business. Attractive log-cabin-snow trimmed lobby cooling during hot weather.

Exploitation.—Regular newspaper space, window cards and bill boards.

Short Subjects.—"A Rag Doll Romance," Kinograms, Scenic.

PALACE HIP

"SHACKLES OF GOLD," Wm. Farnum (Fox). House may return to split-week program in August. Children's admissions reduced to ten cents proving popular.

WINTER GARDEN

FIRST HALF

"BLUEBEARD, JR.," Mary Anderson.

Exploitation. — Newspaper advertising and lobby.

Short Subjects.—"Many Happy Returns," Pathe Comedy, International.

LAST HALF

"GOOD AND EVIL," Lucy Dorane (B. F. Warren).

WILKES-BARRE, PA.

SAVOY

"ALL FOR A WOMAN," Emil Jannings. Would be a great moneymaker in some place where people had the money to pay. Business done was ordinary but those who saw film said it was great and merited all the praise given to it. But the miners were out and had no pay day since April 1.

ORPHEUM

"THE DEVIL'S PAWN," Pola Negri (Paramount). Average business. Mine strike hit business and car men's walk out had its effect on trade.

Trooper O'Neil

Fox Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, George Goodchild. Scenario, William K. Howard. Director, C. R. Wallace and Scott Dunlap. Cameraman, Lucien Andriot. Running Time, Fifty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Trooper O'Neil, Charles Jones; Marie, Beatrice Burnham; Pierre, Francis McDonald; Black Flood, Claude Payton; Rodd, Sidney Jordan; Paul, Jack Rollens; Jules Lestrange, Karl Forms.

Trooper O'Neil is sent out to bring down the murderer of Jacoh Dell, found dead in his cahin in the woods. O'Neil takes a rookie with him and the veteran trooper goes ahout dressed as a trapper. The clue to the murderer is found in a bullet of unusual caliber and a deduction that the person who killed Dell was shot in the right side before the victim fell. O'Neil meets a girl named Marie Lestrange, and there is an immediate infatuation. Before long O'Neil discovers that Marie's younger sister had been betrayed by Dell and bad died. He therefore plans a ruse wherehy he can enter the Lestrange cabin and there discovers tbe revolver that fired the fatal shot at Dell. The trooper is then certain that either Marie's brother or Pierre, suitor of the dead girl, is guilty and he instructs the rookie to examine both and arrest the one who bears a wound in the right side. While this is going on O'Neil has another meeting with Marie and they tell each other of their love. Suddenly O'Neil becomes aware that Marie was engaged in the murder for sbe complains of a wound in her right side. The trooper is torn hetween love and duty but finally with a courageous effort places Marie uuder arrest. Pierre attempts to rescue Marie and in the chase that ensues he falls over a cliff and is mortally injured. Then Pierre confesses that Marie weut to warn Dell and thus bad heen shot but that she was innocent of the killing. This, of course, brings about the happy ending.

Trooper O'Neil reveals not less than three stirring melodramatic situations and one of the most earnest and thorough-going troopers of the Northwestern Mounted that has ever appeared on the screen. Which is sufficient to justify it as good entertainment. The trooper as seen in the person of Charles Jones is convincingly and sincerely all that popular conception might expect of one of those famed heroes who always "get their man." In the love interludes, which, by the way, have been overstressed, Jones is equally sincere, but not half so convincing. But how he does recover his balance and sweeping abandon when the story permits him to go out after some fleeing or fighting bad man! The entire picture loses somewhat through the great familiarity of the setting. Had this romance come earlier in the day of many photoplays dealing with those whose motto and practice is "get your man," perhaps it might be a far more impressive picture. For the plot shows some rather good invention and construction, while the acting and production have some merit.

Points of Appeal.—The story combines in fairly generous proportions the elements of mystery, love and heroic physical action and therefore seems well equipped to hold the interest of the audiences whose tastes incline toward this type of melodrama. The fight between the trooper and Black Flood is a thriller and another good situation arrives when this man suddenly appears at St. Nazaire and is about to expose the trooper, whose success depends upon his maintaining of his disguise as a trapper.

Cast.—Beatrice Burnham is at times a too sophisticated girl of the woods, but much can be forgiven an actress who so realizes all her powers of attraction. Sidney Jordan as the rookie and Claude Payton as the bad man are next in prominence. The balance of the cast is good.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—Photography is good and the settings show good judgment in selection. The direction also merits praise.

Up in the Air About Mary

Associated Exhibitors Photoplay in Five Parts. Story and Scenario by William Watson. Director, William Watson. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Mary, Louise Lorraine; Joe, Joe Moore; Mary's Mother, Laura La Vernie; Algernon Emtihead, Robert Anderson.

When Mary's mother chooses Algernon Emtihead as a fittiug husband for her daughter the latter rebels. Her mother is anxious to advance socially, and as Algernon has the entree to select circles, he presents himself as a very desirable future son-in-law to the older lady's eyes. But Mary refuses to be fascinated by social values if they are only to be had by sacrificing berself to sucb a brainless person as the despised Algernon. The wedding day is set, hut when it arrives Mary is missing. She runs away and finds refuge on the farm of a friend. There she meets Joe, who fulfills in every way ber idea of what a lover ougbt to be. Joe on bis part is attracted by the girl. Mary's mother discovers her refuge and recaptures the truant. With Mary she goes to a seaside resort, but Joe, in order not to lose sight of his lady love, accompanies the party in the disguise of a chauffeur. The rejected suitor hits on the idea of exhihiting himself to Mary in the light of a hero and frames up a fake rescue. He is successful in the attempt, but Joe spoils his plans by abducting Mary in an aeroplane. It develops that Joe is really a millionaire, whereupon Mary's mother declares herself satisfied with her daughter's choice and all ends well for the lovers.

A light and breezy comedy which provides fairly good entertainment for sultry weather. The situations are purely farcical and there is nothing much to the plot, but the action buzzes along merrily, there are plenty of pretty girls in evidence, the photography is attractive and the picture on the whole amusing. Considering the flimsy texture of the story, for the authorship of which Director William Watson is also responsible, the latter has done remarkably well in keeping alive its interest and preserving the continuity through a quick succession of rather "jumpy" scenes, which are, however, connected up with no small degree of skill.

Points of Appeal.—Nobody will feel disposed to quarrel with the heroine on account of her dislike to the peculiarly "sappy" suitor whom her mother favors and she detests with equal fervor. So when Mary runs away the sympathies of the audience are altogether with her and remain during her subsequent adventures by the sea waves. The fake rescue staged by the rejected lover is a laughable episode, and the kidnapping of Mary by the man she loves via aeroplane route is a distinctly modern touch in elopements which adds zest to the proceedings. As the abductor finally reveals himself as a millionaire, in addition to his other pleasing qualities, everybody is satisfied.

Cast.—Louise Lorraine is piquant and saucily fascinating in the role of Mary, which she plays with vivacious energy. Her physical charms are undeniable and her comedy is unrestrained and delightfully natural. Joe Moore is a thoroughly likeable hero, Robert Anderson furnishes a capital character sketch of the vacant-minded Algernon, and Laura La Vernie wins favor as the socially amibtious mamma.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The camera work throughout is highly artistic. There are many pretty rustic shots and a variety of marine views which are restful to the eye and particularly attractive to spectators wilting under the hot weather pressure. The lighting is adequate and there is no hitch in the action, which moves rapidly from start to finish.

A Fool There Was

Fox Photoplay in Six Parts. Adapted from Porter Emerson Browne's Stage Play. Suggested by Rudyard Kipling's Poem, "The Vampire." Director, Emmett J. Flynn. Running Time, Seventy-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Gilda Fontaine, Estelle Taylor; John Schuyler, Lewis Stone; Mrs. Schuyler, Irene Rich; Muriel Schuyler, Muriel Dana; Nell Winthrop, Marjorie Daw; Tom Morgan, Mahlon Hamilton; Avery Parmelee, Wallace MacDonald; Boggs, William V. Mong; Parks, Harry Lonsdale.

Gilda Fontaine, a dancer and woman of ill-repute, has wrecked the lives of several men. Her latest victim is Avery Parmelee, young, wealthy and member of a Wall Street firm, who shoots and kills himself on board the vessel on which she embarks for England just before the steamer leaves New York. John Schuyler, who has repeatedly hut in vain warned Parmelee against Gilda, is assigned by the firm to proceed to Russia on business. He is married and has two children. En route on the same ship with Gilda, he sees her dance at an entertainment and becomes infatuated with her. Gilda goes to Lake Como, in Italy, where she has another lover. Schuyler neglects his business affairs, cancels his Russian trip and joins Gilda abroad, visiting Venice in her company. His firm requests his resignation. Mrs. Schuyler's sister, Muriel, engaged to Tom Morgan, receives a letter from a friend abroad exposing John Schuyler's intrigue with Gilda. Despite her fiancee's remonstrances she reveals the truth to Mrs. Schuyler, who already suspects that all is not well with her husband. Schuyler returns to New York, hut lives apart from his wife. He is still infatuated with Gilda, who meanwhile has netted another lover with whom she is living up the Hudson, still keeping her hold on Schuyler. Tom Morgan persuades Mrs. Schuyler that it is her duty to forgive and try to reclaim her husband. He visits Schuyler, who is drinking heavily and racked by remorse, yet consumed with passion for his temptress. A talk with Morgan steadies him and he resolves to brace up. He is strengthened by a visit from his wife and baby girl. After they leave Gilda arrives, embraces him and he again yields to her wiles. Morgan appears and denounces the pair. After his departure Schuyler experiences another change of heart and tries to strangle Gilda on the staircase. She throws him off, he falls heavily, striking his head against the stone steps and is killed. Gilda bends over her victim, satisfies herself that he is dead and leaves the house.

Depicting the infatuation of an elderly married man for a gilded prostitute, first staging the suicide of one of her numerous lovers and finishing with the death of the sottish cad at the hands of his temptress, the film reeks with unwholesome suggestiveness. There is no actual sexual filth in evidence, Director Emmett J. Flynn having avoided all cruder manifestations of physical infidelity. But the theme is none the less rotten and disgusting; the only sound spots are the scenes showing the happy home life of John Schuyler with his young wife and children, and these only serve by contrast to accentuate the so-called hero's base duplicity. Immoral art is occasionally rendered attractive to people of morbid taste by virtue of clever conception and development. But the crowning sin of A Fool There Was is its aggravating stupidity, as exemplified in a plot hopelessly inane, unconvincing and lacking in interest. Exhibitors valuing clean family patronage will do well to steer clear of this production, which abounds in handsome, artistically designed sets and beautiful photography, but falls lamentably short of accepted standards for normal screen entertainment.

Points of Appeal.—Sympathy is extended to John Schuyler's unfortunate wife and kiddies, but an attempt to prove that it is a woman's duty to forgive brazen infidelity for the sake of her young ones and a happy past fails signally. The tragic climax comes as a fitting close to the illogical, unhealthy trend of the yarn and is a relief—in the sense that all is over.

Cast.—Lewis Stone fills the disagreeable role of Schuyler with his usual dramatic ability, but is powerless to make it convincing. Estelle Taylor invests the part of the scarlet woman with sinister grace and beauty, Irene Rich is wistfully appealing as the wife and the children are charming.

Film Booking Offices of America Photoplay in Five Parts. Scenario and Story by J. G. Alexander. Director, Chester Bennett. Cameraman, Jack MacKenzie. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Joan Cameron lives in the Saskatchewan country with her father and sister Esther. Both girls are awed hy the father, a sour Scotchman. Cameron arranges a trip to the McKenzie River with Paul Bisson, whom he wishes Joan to marry. Joan is averse to Bisson. In the woods she witnesses a struggle hetween Barry O'Neill, a Northwest mounted officer and a prisoner. Joan intervenes just as the prisoner is about to fell Barry with his gun. Barry overcomes and shackles his man. His gratitude to Joan turns into love, which is returned. Joan's great friend is Jerry-Jo, a half-hreed, who frequently comes between her and her father's wrath. Esther elopes with Jules Perrault, a worthless trapper. Later she returns with a hahy, deserted hy Perrault. Cameron comes hack from his trip. Joan shields her sister hy declaring that the child is hers. Barry O'Neill arrives with a warrant for Esther on the charge of having killed Perrault. Joan and Jerry-Jo flee in a hoat down the river with the hahy. Barry sees Esther, who passes herself off for Joan. Barry in pursuance of his duty follows the trail of the supposed Esther. He finds Joan in a shack, where they have taken refuge, and takes her in his arms. Bisson arrives, shoots and kills Jerry-Jo and the latter's dog avenges his master's death by choking Bisson. The hahy dies as a result of the wild journey through a forest fire. Barry delivers his prisoner at headquarters. He is informed that Esther is exonerated for shooting Perrault, as she did so to save her hahy from maltreatment and he has recovered. Old Cameron and Esther come in. He now realizes what Joan really was to him, and father and daughter are reconciled. Barry O'Neill wins Joan.

The entertainment values of this picture are very much above the average and it is sure to please that large class of patrons who delight in drama dealing with adventures by stream and forest in the great Northwest. The love interest is well developed and maintained, the plot logical and convincing despite its many melodramatic phases, all of which are skilfully handled and never pressed to the limits of absurdity. Also, the element of suspense holds sway throughout the entire five reels, thanks to clever direction and exceedingly fine acting on the part of the whole cast. Judged from any angle, the film is an exceptionally high class production, likely to win favor with young and old and bring the desirable dollars into the box-office.

Points of Appeal.—The heroine's loyalty to her sister, even to the extent of risking life, reputation and her lover's affection for the sake of the unfortunate Esther, gains the audience's sympathy. The flight of the fugitives through the forest fire and their escape is a thrilling episode and an extremely satisfactory climax is attained.

Cast. — Jane Novak's portrayal of Joan Cameron is remarkable for its passionate strength and emotional appeal. Edward Hearn is a dashing, lovable sort of chap in the role of Barry O'Neill, the Northwest mounted officer; Alfred Allen, as Duncan Cameron, is the beau ideal of a self-centered, dour old Scotchman, and Charlotte Pierce gives a capable performance in the part of the hapless Esther. The support is excellent.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The outdoor views are replete with beauty, the long shots being particularly fine; the lighting is perfect, the continuity unbroken and fast action prevails all through the feature.

Smudge

First National Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, Rob Wagner. Director, Charles Ray. Cameraman, George Rizard. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Stephen Stanton, Charles Ray; John Stanton, Charles K. French; Mrs. Clement, Florence Oberle; Marie Clement, Ora Carew; Purdy, J. P. Lockney; Mrs. Purdy, Blanche Rose; McGuire, Lloyd Bacon; Regan, Ralph McCollough.

The use of clouds of smoke from "smudge" pots to save the orange crops from frost in southern California is strenuously objected to by the citizens of the little town of Citrona, as it spoils their clothes. Stephen Stanton, just out of college, falls heir to his father's newspaper, The Citizen, which has heretofore upheld the reformers who fought against the use of smudge. Stephen is expected to pursue his father's tactics. But Stephen becomes interested in Mrs. Clement and her pretty daughter, Marie, leaders in the reform movement. He learns that his father's theories were wrong and changes the paper's editorial policy. His father threatens to ruin him and plots with orange growers and the editor of an opposition paper to offset Stephen's work. Stephen and Marie are perfecting an anti-frost apparatus that will not smudge. They are kidnapped and carried to an abandoned house, to be held until after the election that will decide the issue. Stephen escapes with Marie. He steals an automobile and speeds back. To prove his case about smudge he lights fires along the road which blind the pursuers temporarily. Arriving in Citrona he gets out an issue of his paper that wins the election. Citrona goes anti-smudge on the strength of the invention, which will protect the crop against frost, and Stephen and Marie are united.

While not registering quite up to the high-water mark of Charles Ray's best pictures, this comedy drama affords fair entertainment. The plot possesses the merit of originality, as far as founding its theme upon an invention to protect the orange crops of California from frost is concerned, something entirely new to the screen. At first sight there doesn't appear to be anything very exciting about this idea, but the strenuous efforts of star and supporting cast, with an election contest and newspaper fight thrown in for good measure, develops it into a story of tolerable interest. The film's chief fault is found in unnecessary insistence upon minor details, not of any particular importance to the shaping of the narrative and presumably inserted in order to stretch the somewhat scanty literary material over a desired five-reel compass. Where Charles Ray's name is a powerful drawing magnet the film will probably prove a good box-office asset, in other sections it should rank as an average attraction.

Points of Appeal.—The virile personality of the star imparts a lot of ginger to the action, he manages to knock sparks of sure-fire humor out of various comedy situations which would seem dull if exploited by a less talented actor, and his agility and athletic prowess are demonstrated to the full in the "thrill" scenes which flash across the screen during the escape of hero and heroine from their abductors. A conventional but pleasing climax is attained.

Cast.—Charles Ray plays the part of Stephen Stanton with all his usual snap and smiling gaiety. Ora Carew is a charming heroine and capable support is rendered by other members of the cast.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—There are many beautiful exteriors, filmed in sunny California in the localities where the action is supposed to occur, skillful long shots abound and the lighting is effective. The continuity holds together well and the action moves smoothly.

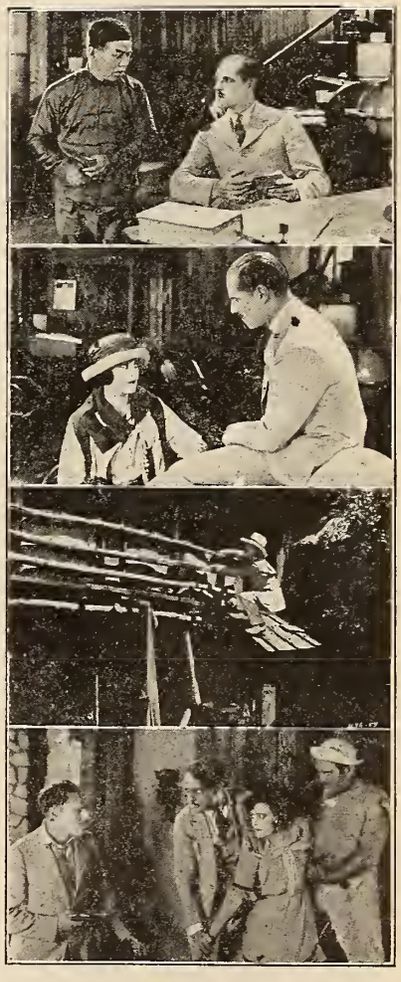
The Man Unconquerable

Paramount Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Hamilton Smith. Scenario by Julien Josephson. Director, Joseph Henabery. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Robert Kendall, Jack Holt; Rita Rinaldo, Sylvia Braemer; Nilsson, Clarence Burton; Duenna, Anu Schaeffer; Perrier, Jeau De Briac; Governor of Bintang, Willard Lewis; Rinaldo, Edwin Steveus.

Robert Kendall, a young New Yorker, goes to the Island of Bintang in the South Pacific, where he has fallen heir to a pearl fishery formerly run by his uncle, Silas Ladd. A neighboring fishery is owned by Senor Rinaldo, who has a pretty daughter named Rita. Kendall makes the latter's acquaintance and they are mutually attracted. Kendall finds that Nilsson, the foreman of his fishing crew, is a ferocious brute who is in the habit of poaching upon Rinaldo's preserves. Kendall and Nilsson clash, and the former thrashes the latter after a vicious combat. Nilsson schemes with Perrier, friend of Rinaldo and a suitor for Rita's hand, to get away with some valuable rose pearls stolen by Nilsson from Rinaldo. Nilsson enters Rinaldo's employ in furtherance of his plot, and takes his crew to poach on Kendall's waters. Kendall follows and sinks Nilsson's vessel with a machine gun fired from a motor launch. Rinaldo recovers his stolen pearls and shows them to Kendall, with whom he has become friendly after the young man explains why he sank the boat. That night Rinaldo is murdered in bed and the pearls are stolen. Suspicion falls upon Kendall. He trails down Nilsson, Perrier and a "fence," to whom they are selling the pearls abstracted from Rinaldo's apartment. In the fight which ensues Kendall kills a couple of the thieves. Nilsson is secured and his guilt established as Rinaldo's assassin. Kendall wins Rita.



This picture swings into action right from the start. The hero is barely introduced before he is hurled into a net of conspiracy, out of which he is obliged to fight his way with fists, machine gun and Colt revolvers on various occasions, paying court to a pretty Spanish senorita in the few intervals of peace allowed him. He wins out in the end, of course, but not until enough excitement has been dished out to meet the demands of the most rabid admirers of melodrama. Not the least of the film's good qualities is the fact that it gets out of the beaten track of South Sea features, with their time - worn plots dealing with the degradation of some hapless white chap, a beachcomber for choice, in the lax atmosphere of the Pacific isles, whose regeneration is accomplished by the heroine, and so on. The Man Unconquerable never strikes an easy gait, it scores one timely punch after another, incessantly crowding the speed limit and holding its interest straight to the finish.

Points of Appeal.—The fight between the hero and his bullying fishing gang captain is a gorgeously spectacular scrap, which registers like the real thing, for the victor has no easy time of it winning. Another unusual scene is that in which Kendall outwits the pearl thieves by calmly sinking their craft with a machine gun operated from the bow of a motor launch. The plot is not difficult to follow, despite the clever complications of the robbery and subsequent murder mystery, the love interest is neatly developed and the climax satisfactory.

Cast.—The role of Robert Kendall is the kind of part in which Jack Holt shines supreme. His athletic prowess comes in handy and he rounds the melodramatic corners with a sort of natural ease and seeming indifference to probable consequences that has something peculiarly attractive about it. Sylvia Breamer is a fascinating heroine, Edwin Stevens a fine specimen of the courteous, dignified old Don, her father, and Clarence Burton's work in the role of Nilsson leaves nothing to be desired.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The marine views are beautiful, there are many fine long shots, the lighting is perfect, continuity unbroken, and the action never slackens.

Human Hearts

Universal Photoplay in Six Parts. Adapted from the Stage Play by Hal Reid. Scenario by Lucien Hubbard. Director, King Baggot. Cameraman, Victor Milner and Otto Dyar. Running Time, Sixty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Tom Logan, House Peters; Paul Logan, Russell Simpson; Ma Logan, Gertrude Claire; Jimmy Logan, George Hackathorne; Old Mose, George West; Carolina, Lucretia Harris; Barbara Kaye, Edith Hallor; Benton, Ramsey Wallace; Ruth, Mary Philbin; Seth Bascom, H. S. Karr; Ran Schreiber, Snitz Edwards.

Tom Logan and his father run a blacksmith shop in the South. Tom is content with his lot and quite unaware that under the farmland where the shop is located there are rich beds of coal. Barbara Kaye comes seeking for Tom Logan. She and a former accomplice in the "pen" know of the treasure that lies concealed in the Logan lands and intend to get possession. Barbara plans to secure title to the land by marrying Tom, who suspects nothing, although his wise old father warns him against Barbara. Tom marries Barbara and a baby is born to them. The coming of motherhood works a change for the better in Barbara's nature. But old Logan, indignant over what he deems his son's folly, makes a will disinheriting him. This action and the monotony of life on the farm hardens Barbara's heart again and she gives way to outbursts of temper. Her prison lover comes to tempt her. She elopes with him taking baby with her, after Tom's father has been killed by her lover. Tom is accused of the murder and assumes the blame to shield his wife. After serving several years Barbara, ill-treated by her lover, tells the truth about the crime and Tom is released. He visits his wife to reclaim the child and saves her from the fury of his rival. In the fight which ensues Barbara is shot while trying to shield Tom. Husband and wife are reconciled and Barbara recovers.

In bygone days the good old stage melodrama Human Hearts achieved countrywide popularity and there seems every reason to believe that the film version will prove a huge success from a box office viewpoint. It is an extremely well-made picture, beautifully photographed, well directed and cleverly acted by a talented cast. The strength of the feature does not lie in physical action and exciting situations; its interest is developed strictly along sentimental lines, dealing as it does with the self-sacrifice of the hero as evinced by his loyalty to a wife who proves faithless; there are many fine character sketches introduced, each of a type calculated to hold one's attention by sheer artistry in execution; there are various sidelights thrown on the course of events, but the main thread of the story is kept intact and easy to follow. Considered from every angle Human Hearts looms up as a very desirable investment for the exhibitor.

Points of Appeal.—From the outset the sympathy of the audience goes out generously to the much-abused hero, and is intensified as he battles bravely against the undeserved misfortunes which befall him. And despite Barbara's betrayal of her honest husband, the impression remains that she isn't such a bad sort, after all, but rather a victim of untoward circumstances, so that her final regeneration and reconciliation with Tom Logan provides a pleasing climax.

Cast.—House Peters carrier off the principal dramatic honors by a splendidly earnest and technically flawless portrayal of Tom Logan. The role is one that could easily be spoiled by over-acting, but Mr. Peters never strikes a false note during a performance whose excellence should win him many new admirers. Russell Simpson is the severe, unbending old father to the life; Edith Hallor scores heavily in the difficult part of Barbara, displaying remarkable versatility in depicting that creature of ungovernable emotions and changing moods. Gertrude Claire is wistfully appealing as the blind mother.

The Trouper

Universal Photoplay in Five Parts. Author, A. P. Younger. Director, Harry B. Harris. Cameraman, Earl Ellis. Running Time, Fifty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Mamie Judd, Gladys Walton; Herman Jenks, Jack Perrin; Frank Kramer, Thomas Holding; Irene LaRue, Kathleen O'Connor; Neal Selden, Roscoe Karns; Warren Selden, Tom D. Guise; Mrs. Selden, Florence D. Lee; Mary Lee, Mary Philbin; Minnie Brown, Mary True.

Mamie Judd was the slavery for the troupe of barnstormers which picked out only the most obscure towns for the display of its doubtful talents and tattered productions, with her only ray of happiness consisting of the joy of being near Herman Jenks, heavy man and serious seeker after the heights of stardom on Broadway. But Mamie gets her chance after all the trials and tribulations. For the hated manager of the show and the leading lady start a scheme to swindle a local youth of his inheritance and then Mamie steps in and proves herself a true heroine. Without her evidence, overheard while unobserved by the manager, young Neal Selden might have gone to jail for the robbery of his father's bank and to eternity for the murder of the watchman. The plan was to have Selden while drunk go and take the money from the vault but Selden got too drunk and the manager took matters into his own hand. The discovery of Selden's keys pointed to the youth as the guilty one and the manager and leading lady were already aboard a train away from the town when Mamie threw all regard for personal safety aside and aided justice in taking its proper course. Mamie received severe injuries from her fall from the moving train but she made rapid recovery amid the luxurious surroundings of Banker Selden's home.

Gladys Walton has a fairly sympathetic role and a play made up of simple, straightforward fiction to serve as a setting for her type of screen personation in The Trouper. Equipped thus she succeeds in achieving a performance that is moderately interesting throughout and quite stirring when it reaches a climax that the author and director have held back too long. The picture pretends to nothing more than pleasant amusement. There are bits of pathos painted in with broad, unsubtle strokes. But with such a play there is no occasion for comment that might be intended or construed for something serious or searching. The Trouper must be passed along for just what it is—a simple, unpretentious yarn which, in its own passive way, affords about an hour of leisurely amusement.

Points of Appeal.—There is no questioning the efficacy of a slavey character such as this play revolves about. She is cute and sweet forever and then beyond that. The story goes along smoothly enough to suit anybody's idea of continuity and develops—slowly and with reiteration of incident, it is true—its climax according to the proven standards of photoplay construction. The characters in each case are as real and as artificial as required to make the story successful in its chosen way.

Cast.—Miss Walton's performance is satisfying all the way through. The members of her supporting cast, and especially her leading man, Jack Perrin, all perform creditably.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The photography and the settings serve their purposes well. The director might have supplied the manager and the leading lady with more material in the way of business so that their cuffing and shaking of Mamie had more variety and was less boring, but aside from that he has made a good job of it.

Times—Many of its scenes are a delight to the eye. One looks at them and lets them go reluctantly. They are so simply, so truthfully, so sensitively staged and photographed. Charles Chaplin's Shoulder Arms reissued for a new swing around the theatrical circle, apparently, and primed to refresh the popular memory of it as one of the best things Chaplin has ever done. World—The dainty living picture, Hope, posed by Doris Niles and a list of ballet selections, were especially attractive. Herald—Shoulder Arms seems funnier than ever. Then there is Hope, the third of the Triart productions based on noted masterpieces, which seem to improve on further acquaintance. This one is as tastefully put together by Lejaren A. Hiller, and as simply appealing as any of its predecessors, which virtually amounts to a cast iron guarantee. Sun—The Capitol seems determined this week to satisfy the taste of the whole family and to appeal to popular likings as well as placate the critics. (Shoulder Arms.) Among the funniest pictures of that funny character, Charlie Chaplin. In addition there is Hope, a Triart production of delicacy and discrimination. Globe—You will find a visit to the Capitol this week well worth taking. The bill is a varied one and uniformly good. There is always a little doubt attached to "Request Programs." The name smacks of cold storage and requests not your own. But this offering of Mr. Rothafel's makes you eat your doubt, or however it should be put.

Press Comments

World—This Paramount film is worth seeing. It is bound to hold the interest of the Jack Holt admirers, and, we think, gives the actor a better opportunity for displaying his acting ability than did its predecessor. Times.—They've used most of the honored melodramatic devices to keep The Man Unconquerable going for five or six reels. Tribune—Is a nice picture which tells of a nice young man who goes to an island to inherit a pearl fishery and falls in love with a nice girl and marries her. American—The Man Unconquerable at least seems to invade new regions, and several of its pictures are decidedly interesting. Journal—The scene is refreshingly novel, and the plot, which develops from the theft of a handful of rare pearls, is very well worked out. Action is supplied in half a dozen fist fights, in which Holt makes an excellent impression. Sun—The picture is well worth seeing. Only the authors needn't expect to fool the patrons into thinking that the picture is fearfully original by laying the action in the South Seas. We know all the character by sight. Globe.—The story, taken as a whole, was not of the sort which affords much opportunity for real dramatic moments, and that is probably why the fight scenes stand out so prominently. It was, however, produced in a most picturesque manner and skilfully directed. Mail—When the scene of a motion picture play is laid in the South Seas one naturally looks for romance with a capital "R," and the film fans will not be disappointed in this respect in The Man Unconquerable.

Press Comments

Herald—The new version seems to have been all dressed up in silks and satins—to have received a new lick of paint. It is more discreet than the first production and the baneful young woman seems to be operating with one eye open for the censors. World—Is remarkably well acted and directed picture. Estelle Taylor, who plays the title role of the picture version of Kipling's "The Vampire," acts the difficult part in the proper vein and she is good looking. Tribune — Miss Taylor seems so palpably miscast that it spoiled the picture for us. The photography is splendid in this new picture and the lighting is perfect, also we like the way the camera man takes scenes from a long distance, giving the idea of vast space. Sun—Might be called "A Vampire There Was," with the accent on the past tense. For unless all signs fail, the siren can't come back any more than the average prize fighter can. Journal—Re-enter the vamp in the original model! If you are one of those who are thrilled by sirens, you'll find A Fool There Was much to your liking. Mail—Miss Taylor made a thoroughly mechanical vampire. Her face is pretty enough and evidently she put her faith in that. So it is difficult for the audience to look on while John Schuyler is making a fool of himself and regard him with any sympathy.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

"Something Different"

THE coming season, which is now but a few weeks away, bids fair to bring forward an unusual number of productions as well as a number of unusual productions. Of an actual shortage of pictures, in quantity, there is no danger, so far as we are able to discern the situation. All the indications are that there will be plenty.

We believe, too, that the wise producer has come to a pretty accurate realization that the public won't have anything but the best. The "shopping" habit is a fixture—and the chief thing the public "shops" for is "something different".

The making of pictures which hit the bull's-eye is one of the most difficult jobs in the world. A composite photograph of the public mind—if such a thing could be made—would not reveal "what the public wants", because after all the public doesn't know what it wants until after it sees it.

One thing is certain, however: this country is made up of thousands of communities, big, little and middlesized, and they are capable of fairly accurate classification. Some of these communities want what might be called Woolworth pictures and some of them want the gorgeous kind. Neither wants pictures that are not good. But the classification should not stand in the way of the value of the product.

There is a lot of room in the industry yet for specialization in production, and specialization in exploitation, both being designed to meet the needs of audiences whose likes and dislikes have been analyzed. This analysis is going mercilessly along three hundred and sixty-five days in the year at the theatre box-office itself. But is it being studied carefully enough by the picture-makers?

One of the commonest criticisms of pictures today is "they're all alike." Of course, that is not wholly true. But a large section of the public seems to think it is with the result that they stay away from the theatre.

The "something different" the public is looking for may not be an expensively made film at all. Whether it is or it isn't, "the something different" comes about when the producer makes a picture of absolute individual merit, designed to reach a certain type of audience, in most cases, because it is only the very extraordinary picture, of which there are probably half a dozen each year, that carry universal appeal.

The same specialization that creates the successful picture should be applied to its exploitation. Every picture is an individual problem. It ought to be handled in that way by the exhibitor. Just as certainly the exploitation material by which the exhibitor can handle the picture individually ought to be supplied him, as far as possible, by the distributor.

The theatre that is "different" and the picture that is "different" cannot fail. There is a marked tendency toward specialization in production and exhibition now. There will be more. For along that road lies the commercial success of the whole industry.

Censorship Folly

ONE of the follies of legalized censorship of motion pictures is brought vividly to mind by the situation in Kansas, which has had a state board for a number of years. You might suppose, offhand, that the board's rulings would never be questioned—if censorship were what its advocates claim it is.

But what happened in Kansas? Was the reform element satisfied with a state board? Not at all. Several municipal welfare boards actually revised its rulings. After the state board got through its work, the self-constituted censors in various towns set up a censorship within a censorship.

Last week, they were overriden by the Attorney-General of the State who held that they were without authority, and that the edicts of the Kansas State Board of Review were supreme and final.

All of which goes to show the folly of the argument for Federal Censorship. The states which already have censorship would not surrender it, nor could they be made to do so. The Kansas municipalities can be. But the great lesson to be drawn is this: Censorship breeds more censorship.

In the Spirit of the Contract

THE announcement that film contracts already signed for the 1922-23 season will be carried out in the spirit of the new standard clauses, now under negotiation, is of great importance.

It means that it is the recorded purpose of the distributors in the Hays organization to make the new uniform contract, whose formal adoption is only a matter of time, operate in spirit over the contracts being signed every day. And it clears up the obvious difficulty that might be met in delayed bookings because the exhibitor might object to the old contracts as they stand.

The letter of Mr. Hays to the three exhibitor groups, which we print elsewhere in this issue, is another landmark of progress in the industry. It shows that consistent and thoughtful effort is being used to solve the knottiest of all the problems in the business—the dealings between theatre and exchange in the matter of pictures themselves.

Encouraging Independent Production

SPECIAL attention should be called to one of the most important developments of Mr. Hays' trip to Los Angeles, which is notable in many ways.

The development to which we refer is the announcement that Mr. Hays is definitely encouraging independent producers. In line with his purpose of serving the common interest of all the industry —of being "a partner in service" as he happily characterized it in one of his Los Angeles addresses—he is counseling with the independent producer and aiding the latter in fulfilling a vital function in the industry.

Turn to page 693 and read the statement by Dr. Shallenberger, with the editorial comment alongside. Plainly, the new day in the industry is in the full vigor of its dawn.

Hays, Given Great Ovation in Los Angeles, Declares Team Work Will Solve Industry's Problems

By L. W. Boynton, Editor Exhibitors Trade Review

LOS ANGELES, July 26.

"CONFIDENCE and Co-operation" came into its own in the film colony this week, when Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, made his first official visit to the capital of picture production.

From the time Mr. Hays and his party stepped off the train the ovation was continuous. It reached a climax at a dinner given to-night at the Hotel Ambassador, where Mr. Hays made a notable address in which he declared that the motion picture "can do three great things and it will do these three things as no other instrument that I know of can do them:

"In the first place, it can and will fill a necessity: the necessity for entertainment.

"In the second place, it can and will instruct, which is indeed a precious power.

"In the third place, the motion picture can do more, I believe, than any other existing agency to unite the peoples of the world, to bring understanding not only between man and man, but between nation and nation, than which no greater thing can be done."

Makes Tour of Studios

Proceeding from the Chamber of Commerce on Monday morning, where he was welcomed officially on behalf of the city by Mayor Cryer, Mr. Hays, accompanied by Captain John D. Fredericks, president of the Chamber of Commerce, and notables of the film industry, started his tour of the various studios. There was a procession of twelve cars, carrying among others, the members of the reception committee, which included Frank A. Garbutt, Jesse L. Lasky, Abraham Lehr, Irving Thalberg, Hal Roach, Thomas H. Ince, Charles Christie, Joseph W. Engel, Joseph M. Schenck and W. J. Reynolds.

The Famous Players, Universal, Goldwyn, Roy Stewart and Hal Roach studios were visited. Mr. Hays delivered a short speech at each and was enthusiastically received by all the film folk.

At noon he was the guest of the Chamber of Commerce at a luncheon. The room was crowded to the doors and the General made a great hit with the members of the industry and the prominent business men in attendance. Monday afternoon, Tuesday and Wednesday were spent in inspecting every studio, large and small, and watching pictures in the making at the Fox, Christie, Warner, Metro and United plants.

Mr. Hays was intensely interested in the work of all the players and on Tuesday lunched with a thousand people of the films in the heart of Hollywood.

Need for "Team Work"

In his various speeches, particularly those before the Chamber of Commerce and at the Ambassador dinner, Mr. Hays defined very clearly his attitude toward his great task, and added to his platform of "Confidence and Co-operation" the great need for "Team Work."

He made it very clear also that he was at work for the welfare of all the industry, and not merely for the organization which he heads:

"I am not suggesting an alibi for the motion picture business, for the motion picture business is going through on the highway which leads to better pictures. I am only emphasizing that this is not a one-man job, nor the job of one group. It is the multitude's job, and in doing it there is work for all."

The keynote of service to the industry and to civilization was again struck by Mr. Hays at the Ambassador dinner. Jesse L. Lasky presided and Rupert Hughes was the toastmaster. After Mayor Cryer had made a strong declaration against censorship and pledged the city's support to the industry, Mr. Hays, when introduced, took up the message of service.

"I am not the dictator or czar of this industry," he affirmed with great emphasis. "I am merely a partner for service."

Stressing his high resolve to do everything in his power to raise the standard of pictures, he declared this could only be done through help from all the workers.

Turning to the question of censorship, Mr. Hays pointed out that the press had gone through a six-hundred-year fight for free speech.

"Pictures are just leaving the pioneer stage. I am going through with the fight for a free screen," he declared, and there was a great demonstration.

Problems Being Solved

On the subject of "Confidence and Co-operation," he reiterated that all the problems would be solved thereby. He declared that the confidence of the industry in itself—co-operation between producer, distributor and exhibitor—was being completed rapidly.

"I have no doubt about the outcome of the situation," he added. "I will go back to New York with the absolute knowledge and conviction that every member of the industry here is doing everything in his power every day to attain and maintain the highest artistic and moral standards.

"From now on I will work not only for the association which we have organized, but for the common interest of all those engaged in the industry which includes the independent producer.

"It is simply a matter of humble team work and with this to coalesce the industry we will get the confidence and co-operation of the great public whose servant we are."

Other significant points in Mr. Hays' speeches follow:

"The people of this country, of course, are against censorship fundamentally—against censorship of press, against censorship of pulpit and against censorship of pictures. But just as certainly, my friends, is this country against wrong-doing—and the demand for censorship will fail when the reason for the de-

Film Contracts Already Made Will Be Observed in Spirit of New Uniform Contract, Now Under Negotiation

FILM contracts already made for 1922-1923 product will be carried out in the spirit of the new form of government, now under negotiation between the Hays organization and the three exhibitor groups—the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York, the M.P.T.O. of New York State, and the M.P.T.O.A.

Record of this important fact, which had already been stated by Mr. Hays in conversation with the exhibitor negotiators, was made by the General in a letter he addressed on July 14 to Charles L. O'Reilly, President of the New York State organization; Sydney S. Cohen, President of the M.P.T.O.A., and Bernard Edelhertz, of the T.O.C.C.

The letter follows:

"Pending the negotiations which, as you know, are progressing favorably, it would seem that the understanding should be that in the event of the adoption of standard clauses for a uniform contract, contracts already taken for 1922-1923 product—should be carried out in the spirit of the new form of agreement. I think this is our understanding, but I want to make it clear that it is and will be our purpose. Such an understanding eliminates any difficulties which are incident to the unavoidable delay in connection with the working out of the details of our negotiations.

"As above suggested, and with which you are familiar, these negotiations are progressing favorably and I am hopeful of a large fulfillment. While the attorneys are at work on these matters I am going to take the opportunity to go to California for a few days to fill some engagements made some time ago. This absence, however, will not in any way delay the negotiations, and upon my return I am hopeful that the details will have been brought to a point where we can quickly conclude the matter.

"With very kindest regards, and best wishes always, I am

"Sincerely yours,

(Signed) "WILL H. HAYS."

mand is removed. As we move toward the consummation of the objects of our associations, just in like degree will recede all demands for censorship.

Against Censorship

"I am against political censorship, of course, because political censorship will not do what is hoped for it in the last analysis. Now and then some one might ask: 'If the motion picture producers really mean to make better pictures, why do they object to political censorship? The chief answer to this question was written when human nature was formed, at least that part of human nature which is doing business under the Stars and Stripes, and that answer consists chiefly of one word—Liberty.

"The motion picture business objects to political censorship for one great reason—because the motion picture business is an American business. Political censorship drove the Pilgrims to Plymouth Rock, political censorship faced the minute men at Concord Bridge, political censorship caused the Boston Tea Party.

"I am going to give all I have to this cause. It commands the sympathetic help and co-operation of you and every well wisher of better things in this nation, and I know full well that help will come just as fast as you are acquainted with our purposes and we prove our deserts.

"So certainly is this a matter of the immediate concern of every one that I earnestly ask and hope to receive the advice and co-operation of the public.

"While asking for your aid and co-operation I would like to ask, too, that you judge us by our actual performances rather than by any promises we may make. We are building this industry for years to come—for generations to come, and though our progress may perhaps be slow at the beginning, the results, we are confident, will be permanent and certain.

"The producers want to serve America. They know there is no more important and lasting service which they can perform than to aid in the actual educating of the youth of this country by this means. Do not forget that as we serve the leisure hours of the masses with right diversions, so do we rivet the girders of society.

"I believe that it is the greatest industry in the world to-day, because it has more opportunities for accomplishment than any other industry in the world.

"I promise you that this agency for the distribution of information and thought, this agency for the amusement of the millions and for the evitable inculcation of standards in taste, in art and conduct—I promise that it shall endeavor honestly and earnestly to measure up to its great responsibilities.

"The fact is, of course, that there is ahead the greatest era of expansion and prosperity the world has ever seen. The only question has been when was it going to start. Well, in spite of all the winds that are blowing, in spite of all the strikes, it has started. I have had and have full appreciation of the period of hard times coming; we have been in a period of soft times going. Prosperity is right ahead of us and it is time to go out and meet it. I cry continually for the common sense of courage, confidence and co-operation. Let us lay bricks—not throw them."

The program for Mr. Hays' visit, so far as outlined when this telegram was filed, includes a monster mass meeting on Saturday at the athletic bowl in Hollywood.

Double Censorship Ended in Kansas

Attorney General Rules City Welfare Boards Cannot Ban Pictures Passed by State Body— Holds Latter Is Sole Legal Authority on Films

SELF-INSTITUTED censorship boards in Kansas came to an abrupt and inglorious end last week. During the past several months the welfare boards of several Kansas towns have taken it upon their own authority to censor films which already have received the approval of the Kansas State Board of Review, cutting out many important sections of the pictures and working a general hardship upon exhibitors and producers.

M. Van Praag, president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, requested an opinion on the matter from Attorney General Richard J. Hopkins. The opinion:

Attorney General's Opinion

"Dear Mr. Van Praag:

"I am in receipt of your communication of the 15th inst., asking for our opinion relative to the powers of the censor board superseding the right of local welfare boards to establish their own censorship.

"The above mentioned matter was submitted to us in question by Mr. John Stutz, editor of Kansas Municipalities, of Lawrence, Kan. I quote his question and our answers thereto:

"Question: Does a city welfare board appointed under authority of section 995, General Statutes of Kansas, 1915, have power to censor films passed on by the State Board of Censors? That is, may it prohibit certain kinds of pictures from being shown in the city although they have been passed on by the State Board of Censors?

"Answer: The legislature of this state in 1917 created a board of censorship of motion pictures. This board is composed of three members who shall be resident citizens of Kansas, and well qualified by education and experience to act as censors.

"The duty of this board, among others, is to place upon each film or reel which has been approved by the board their mark of approval, which shall read as follows: 'Approved by the Kansas State Board of Review.'

"This board also has the supervision of all folders and advertising matter and posters accompanying the various pictures approved by them.

"The law further provides that no other approval stamp shall be permitted on any pictures to be displayed in Kansas other than that of the Board. These rules are clear and convincing in that they state that the Kansas State Board of Review is the sole and exclusive determiners of all motion pictures to be exhibited in the State of Kansas.

"I am therefore of the opinion that the city welfare boards cannot prohibit motion pictures being shown in their respective cities. To permit the various local welfare boards to censor and prohibit certain kinds of pictures in their respective cities, would materially demoralize the motion picture business within our state, and ultimately result in no regulation whatever.

"Very respectfully yours,
"Richard J. Hopkins,
"Attorney-General."

Exhibitors Support Hopkins

Attorney General Hopkins, who is in the race for nomination as justice of the supreme court of Kansas, will receive the support of Kansas exhibitors, it is stated. In fact, his campaign on the screen is being supervised by M. Van Praag, president of the M. P. T. O. of Kansas, and Richard Liggett, vice-president of the Kansas organization.

On July 30 Mr. Hopkins and C. B. Griffith, in the field for nomination as attorney general of Kansas, will make two-minute speeches in all Kansas City, Kan., theatres. At the last meeting of Legislature in Kansas, reformers attempted to obtain the passage of a bill which would prohibit standing room in a theatre and require any person less than 16 years old to be accompanied by a guardian. Another attempt to obtain passage of this proposed bill, which was defeated last time, will be made by the reformers at the meeting of the Legislature in August, it is believed. However, from the present outlook, according to exhibitors who are familiar with the present conditions, the reformers have little chance of success.

Georgia Now Faces Censorship Fight

Industry Also Mobilizes Against Proposed Five Per Cent Tax on Theatre Receipts

THE motion picture industry of Georgia got into action this week when two adverse measures appeared almost simultaneously in the Legislature. Representative Collins of Cherokee, introduced a measure calling for state censorship of pictures, and for posters, banners and all other advertising matter used in connection therewith. The measure implies a tax of fifty cents per reel for every original print of film exhibited in the state, and twenty-five cents a reel for every duplicate. Moreover, the bill makes it necessary for the exhibitor to secure from the proposed Board of Censors a separate license or permit for the exhibition of every individual film played in his theatre.

The other measure which awakened an avalanche of opposition was the clause in the luxury tax bill providing for the imposition of a tax of 5 per cent on the gross receipts of every theatre. Ninety per cent of the theatres in the state are operating at a loss, with twelve separate taxes already burdening them almost beyond endurance, it is declared.

The twelve separate taxes which are levied upon the theatres at the present time include: War tax admissions, federal seating tax, income tax, capital stock tax, county and city ad valorem taxes, state occupational tax, state franchise tax, county license tax, city license tax, music tax. No other industry in the United States pays as many, or as large a percentage in taxes.

Already the individual Georgia theatre pays from 11.5 per cent to 50 per cent of its gross income in taxes, and in the year 1921 the motion picture industry of the state as a whole paid 14.3 per cent of its gross income in taxes.

The Georgia Amusement Protective Association, which is almost 100 per cent strong, is in close touch with exhibitors throughout the state, urging co-operation in a direct movement to reach the lawmakers.

Making Box Office Pay in Town of 10,000

How a "Lemon" Was Turned Into a Paying Proposition by Right Methods—Making the Picture Theatre a Real Community Center

By BEN DAVIS
Colonia Theatre, Norwich, N. Y.

The accompanying article is the second of a series being prepared by the exhibitors who won the Advertising Contest conducted by First National during its Anniversary Week. Eight of the winners went to Los Angeles as the guests of First National. EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW is presenting these articles exclusively. The writer of each article adapts his subjects to conditions confronted in a city or town of the size of that in which he is conducting a theatre.

MAKING money in a town of 10,000! Can this be done TO-DAY under existing conditions—and particularly when there is competition?

The writer, prior to becoming an exhibitor, was in a very large exchange, doing the work which is commonly called Exploitation. It was his duty to "put over" pictures for exhibitors and make business surveys of his territory.

It seemed that the exhibitors in towns of from 8000 to 10,000 were hardest hit—and most particularly where there was competition. "The goose that laid the golden eggs" had fled with the signing of the armistice.

Analysis convinced the writer that all cases were not beyond hope; in fact, few were hopeless cases. When remedies were suggested they were looked upon as "wild dreams" and my friends, exhibitors, said that not until the writer became an exhibitor would he understand the impossibility of putting into effect the remedies suggested.

From Exploitation Man to Exhibitor

Fate was to have it that the writer should cease exploiting pictures—for a time—and become an exhibitor—and in a town of a little over 8000—and where there was competition. And to add "sweetening," this theatre was one which had come under the writer's special notice, when he offered assistance to the prior owner—which offers were totally ignored. Fate was indeed "kind."

The Colonia Theatre, Norwich, N. Y., has a seating capacity of 1200; the then opposition, the Strand, has a seating capacity of 900, making a total of 2100 seats in a town a little better than 8000.

Ben Davis

On the face of that statement it will be admited that the town is over-seated and there is no room for two theatres. Making money was an impossibility—so the former owner thought—and unburdened his juicy "lemon."

And now to it to "put over" the "white elephant"—not as an exploitation man but as an exhibitor.

Strict attention to detail showed how to get the most product and help for the money spent. This essential looked after and attended to, the house proper came in for its share of retouching. The lighting was changed, the lobby fixed in "big city" style and the front given a new dress.

This was followed by letters to the public, using a mailing list, explaining the value of a first-class theatre in the community and what the theatre stands for.

These letters were backed up by deeds, anticipating community needs, launching the movements and making the Colonia the centre of activity. It virtually became the community centre.

At no time were extravagant promises made which could not be kept. The public was always taken into confidence and the public responded.

"Courtesy, Cleanliness, Comfort" was the slogan of the theatre and the public soon recognized it. "Best Attractions Always" was driven home and the public learned this to be the truth.

The opposition, prior to the taking over of the Colonia, had the bulk of the patronage and did not think the Colonia could be put over. The methods of advertising and exploitation were apparent evidence that this could not be. Not until the opposition's box office receipts showed a very appreciable constant decrease, did the fight begin.

Up till then admission prices were the same in both theatres. When the opposition began to splurge in advertising and mailing list, the Colonia began prologuing, and increased admission prices, going on the theory that the Colonia had an opposition but no competition.

Business improved and added features were put on the bill. The townspeople know the Colonia as a town institution. The "juicy lemon" became a ripe plum and seven months after the taking over of the Colonia the Strand, the opposition, was annexed.

Making money in a town of 10,000 proved possible in spite of conditions, local and general. Institutional building and proper merchandising did it. Immediate so-called losses are but a business man's investment for the future, to come back later ten-fold in profits.

The small town wants the big town show AT HOME and it is good business to give it. This is the way to make them stay at home and patronize the theatre.

Similar "lemons" were taken over and were made to pay, using the same methods. It is always to be remembered that the theatre is more than a private business. It is part of the community and should function as a community centre.

Miracles? NO!! None have happened for two thousand years. Just business and showmanship combined.

For M. P. T. O. A. Music Department

Work Proceeding on Plan Made at Washington Convention, Says National Headquarters

PLANS are going forward for the establishment of a music department by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, according to a statement issued by national headquarters of that organization this week.

The proposition, which was presented to the Washington Convention by the national president, calls for the issuing of music to theatre owners "free from all tax license, or levy." Conferences have been held recently with representatives of publishers and composers "for the purpose of putting this new department on a firm and effective basis," the statement said.

It continued: "We have been giving attention to the matter of relieving the theatre owners from unfair exactions of representatives of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers. A large number of test cases have been brought in the courts and will be up for decision soon. We propose to have further test cases brought in different parts of the country.

"After months of hard work we succeeded in having introduced into Congress an amendment to the Copyright Law. Same was introduced by Congressman Lampert of Wisconsin and several hearings were set on the bill. These were postponed, however, owing to the serious illness of Congressman Lampert. A final hearing was arranged for May 5 and the entire National Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, with the counsel of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, came to Washington for this meeting, but the hearing was postponed on receipt of a letter from the Chairman of the Patents Committee of the House to the effect, that most of the members of his committee were absent from Washington at the time but that a new date would be set for the hearing. Congress adjourned in the interim, and we are now arranging a definite date for this hearing when they reconvene, at which time we will present to this committee the facts gathered from our members throughout the country establishing our rights in this matter.

"We propose, through the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to establish what might be termed a clearing house for musical compositions. We will invite all composers in the nation to use our national organization as a means of getting their compositions to the public. We can guarantee them an outlet which will be nation-wide in character. We will establish a music department in connection with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. We can arrange with the music stores to sell these compositions. We can advertise the compositions in our theatres, giving them the widest publicity and bring these musical selections to the personal attention in demonstrated form of millions of people daily."

California Convention in August

Session Will Be Held at San Francisco — Exhibitors Organize Exchange

THE Northern California Division of the M. P. T. O. A., of which C. C. Griffin of Oakland is president, will hold its annual convention in San Francisco, Aug. 15, at the Palace Hotel.

A record attendance is expected. The program calls for business sessions closing with a banquet on the last day. The Governor and other officials have been invited to be the chief speakers.

Announcement was made recently by Thomas D. Van Osten, general manager of the organization, of the appointment of Frank R. Devlin of Berkeley as general advisor. Mr. Devlin, a prominent attorney, has been a Federal district attorney and head of the state railroad commission. He will have charge of the organization's work in connection with public relations.

The committee in charge of the convention, of which Mr. Griffin is a member, has as its chairman P. J. Hanlon. The other members are: Alan King, Mr. Van Osten, Sam Gordon and Robert McNeil.

Wide attention was attracted this week by the announcement of the formation of the Western States Film Exchange, Inc., of which prominent exhibitors in the Northern California unit are incorporators. Besides President Griffin, the other incorporators are: Alan King, P. J. Hanlon, R. A. Hazel and Mrs. F. E. Smith.

The concern is capitalized at $20,000, and it is stated about fifty exhibitors have subscribed for stock. There will be two exchanges, one in San Francisco and the other in Los Angeles.

Penn. Exhibitors Will Hold Convention in Fall

At a recent meeting of the board of managers of the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, it was decided to hold the annual convention of that body in Harrisburg in conjunction with the M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania in the fall when the Legislature is in session.

An outing, however, will be held in Atlantic City, August 20 and 21 in conjunction with a business meeting of the board of managers.

Censorship and Taxation Fight Looms in Georgia

Commenting on the situation, Miss Anna Eugene Aiken says in the Weekly Film Review:

"The censorship menace we have had with us for a long while; it makes its appearance in some new form each season. Two years ago its proponents waged a mighty battle against which the industry rallied but a small and ineffective defense. Had the measure come out on the floor for a vote it is almost certain that it would have passed. Fortunately for the industry, that session ended before the measure was brought out of the committee.

"Happily for the motion picture industry of Georgia, we have won many staunch friends to our cause since then. Two years ago the Atlanta Woman's Club was asking for censorship; the General Federation of Clubs had endorsed censorship, and the State Federation followed suit. When the bill came up for a hearing before a joint committee of the house and senate, practically every woman's organization and many religious and semi-religious organizations in the state appeared to speak in its behalf.

"Today the industry of Georgia has no stronger supporters than those same women's organizations. The Atlanta Woman's Club has rescinded its endorsement of censorship; they have unqualifiedly accepted the principle of selection rather than censorship; sentiment has so changed in the State Federation of Clubs that the leaders will, at the next general meeting, offer a resolution rescinding that organization's approval of the principle of censorship.

"This Is a Handy Thing to Have Around," Greeting Sent with Complimentary Copies of Directory Number

ASSOCIATED SCREEN NEWS started a drive for new business and used the Theatre Equipment Directory Number of Exhibitors Trade Review as an auxiliary salesman. The idea is a brand new one and of course we think it's a good one.

Believing that the Directory Number is a useful reference to have around Associated Screen News ordered a big bunch of copies, had a triangle black and white paster printed and affixed it to the upper left hand corner of the front cover. The little red string which will be found in every copy of the Directory Number was untied and re-inserted through the black and white paster. The paster bore this message:

"This is a handy thing to have around—Have another copy on us. The Associated Screen News, Inc., 120 W. 41st St., New York. By the way, if you are interested in good prints at reasonable prices read our "ad" on page 423. You can reach us by telephone at Bryant 1939." The copies were then sent to every live prospect for film printing business.

Court Defines Elaborator's Rights

Judge Knox, in Suit of Curwood Against Affiliated, Says There Is Obligation to Give Expression to Main Action

A decision of large interest to authors and motion picture producers was last week handed down in the United States Court for the Southern District of New York when Judge Knox, in discussing just what is acquired when one secures the rights to elaborate upon a story, declared there is an obligation to retain and give appropriate expression to the theme, thought and main action of that which was originally written.

The interpretation was included in a partial decision of the suit of James Oliver Curwood against Affiliated Distributors and others over the motion picture I Am the Law. Two phases of the controversy were reserved for further consideration.

Mr. Curwood charged that two situations in the picture infringed upon The Valley of Silent Men and The River's End and that the subject as it went to the public had little or no resemblance to "Poetic Justice of Uko San," the story purchased by the defendants from Curwood.

The defendants denied the charge of plagiarism and asserted the only purpose in buying the story in question was to obtain the use of the author's name; that such purpose was understood by Curwood, and that the picture having been artistically produced the plaintiff was in no position to object.

"I take it that while scenery, action and characters may be added to an original story, and even supplant subordinate portions thereof," said Judge Knox in commenting on what is acquired when one procures the rights to elaborate upon an original story, "there is an obligation upon the elaborator to retain and give appropriate expression to the theme, thought and main action of that which was originally written. The unqualified grant of this right is, I should say, fraught with danger to a writer of standing, particularly when he inserts no provision for his approval of such elaboration as may be made.

"Nevertheless, elaboration of a story means something other than that the same should be discarded and its title and authorship applied to a wholly dissimilar tale."

"I will protect him [Curwood] by injunction against the present use of the name of 'The Poetic Justice of Uko San,' and his authorship thereof," said the judge in conclusion, "in connection with the picture entitled I Am the Law. The question of damages sought by plaintiff against the defendants, together with his allegation that the picture I Am the Law infringes upon the copyright of River's End, is reserved for further consideration."

Control of Lynch Exchanges Reverts to Famous Players

Famous Players on September 1 will assume physical control of the five exchanges now being operated by the Southern Enterprises of Atlanta. The exchanges are situated in Atlanta, Charlotte, N. C.; Dallas, Oklahoma City and New Orleans.

As it was explained at the offices of Famous Players, the Southern Enterprises, under a contract with the Famous Players and as a matter of convenience to the latter organization, operated the exchanges for a definite period. The period expires September 1.

When inquiry was made as to whether the expiration of the contract referred to would have any bearing upon the operation of the Lynch theatres in the South, the reply was made that it would not.

The News of the Week

Flaherty Plans Another Arctic Film

Producer of "Nanook" Expects to Return North Next Spring to Film New Eskimo Photoplay

"Go after a thing hard enough and you usually get it." The statement explains one of the most interesting of motion picture accomplishments. It was made (and let us hasten to explain parenthetically that no trace of rhetorical intonation or oratorical gesture accompanied the expression) by Robert J. Flaherty, author, producer, photographer and editor of Nanook of the North.

Mr. Flaherty is in New York, wears a Panama with the ease and grace of one accustomed to a life-time of uninterrupted association with that type of headgear peculiar to a climate of withering rays and oppressive humidity, and, despite both, applies himself to the strenuous pursuits of "movie magneting."

In the course of an interview with a representative of EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, it developed that the screen is to have another Arctic drama should Mr. Flaherty's present intentions reach fruition. For he is going back beyond the Arctic Circle for more photoplay material. The time set for the projected departure is the spring of 1923.

In view of the enthusiastic reception the public has given Nanook of the North this is news of moment and interest to the exhibitor and public alike.

It was a remark about the absence of static in the photography of Nanook of the North that elicited the quotation which begins this story. "How was it avoided?" "Oh!" said the producer of Nanook with a shrug that eloquently told that this man regarded obstacles as something not to be discussed, but overcome, "if you go . . ." but you know the rest.

"The Eskimo is constantly on the verge of starvation," said Mr. Flaherty in speaking of the people he chose as subjects for dramatic expression on the screen. And starvation is the most common cause of death among those people. Their life is one long hard struggle against the awful death of famine and the heroism with which they meet their grim trial is a thrilling and inspiring gesture of human achievement.

"That is the theme I strove to develop in Nanook of the North. To do so, as you may already know," he continued, "it was necessary for purposes of dramatic effectiveness, to assemble the family from the tribe headed by Nanook. The son of the picture is in reality Nanook's grandson and Nyla was recruited from the igloo of a younger man than Nanook. The selection was made following considerations of appearance as to type and photographic effect."

Thus it will be seen that the effectiveness of Mr. Flaherty's first photoplay is no mere accident. He cast his play with the precision and deliberation of casting directors of the leading studios, drawing upon his studies and experiments in portraiture carried on before Nanook of the North was even an idea.

New York Operators Wage Scale Dispute Is Still Unsettled

The wage scale dispute between the members of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce and Moving Picture Machine Operators Local 306 of New York has undergone no material change in the last week.

As was printed in our last issue, the Chamber of Commerce has asked the operators to accept a reduction over the present scale of 10 per cent, effective at the expiration of the present agreement on September 1. The operators have declined to accept the proposal.

A 5 per cent reduction was accepted by the operators last summer.

The wage scale committee of the operators met a committee of the Chamber of Commerce July 24 to submit the findings of the membership of the union, as already outlined. Chairman Bernard Edelhertz of the exhibitors in closing the meeting said he would convey to the Chamber of Commerce at its meeting on the following day the decision of the operators. At the Tuesday meeting of the Chamber the question was referred to the Board of Directors for consideration at a meeting to be held July 27, to be followed by a general meeting the next day.

Schade Praises "Orphans of the Storm"

"'Orphans of the Storm' is just closing a five-day run," said George J. Schade, of the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, concerning this D. W. Griffith production for United Artists release, "and it was a very agreeable surprise to me. It is the first picture that broke even for me this summer, and I consider that I made money by playing it."

"Co-operation, Not Censorship Is Need of M. P. Industry"

"What the motion picture industry" needs is co-operation and not regulation.

So says Norma Talmadge, First National star, when questioned as to her views on censorship.

"'Emotion is the key-note of life.' This thought came to me one day while I was looking over letters from people who felt impelled to write and say how much this or that picture meant to them. Mothers, fathers, sons and daughters, have felt this urge to tell the motion picture star how her or his work in pictures has changed their lives and affairs.

"Just one touch of nature makes the whole world kin, we have been told. Who can measure the energy of emtions?

"The enemies of the motion picture industry never give this phase of the subject a single thought. 'This star or that director has been accused of such and so, therefore, let us condemn the screen,' seems to be their philosophy.

"'There is one scene in a certain picture that does not appeal to my rooted ideas on the subject and that proves the movies are a bad influence,' they shout.

"Were it possible," Miss Talmadge continued, "to harness every heart with a meter and count the heart beats that mark the flashing of some pictures on the screen, and extract from those beats the inspirations, courage, regrets and the thousand and one shades of emotion that go to make up our inner lives, what a wonderful story would be unfolded!

"Let us not throw a wet blanket on genuine feeling—even if we have to disappoint maligners of the motion picture."

Judge Lindsey Praises Paramount

President of National Y. W. C. A. Board Also Commends Stock Company Plan

More evidence of the recognition, on the part of many of the foremost people of the country who are interested in preserving and strengthening the moral fibre of the nation, that the formation of the Paramount Stock Company and School is a great forward step toward the realization of their ideals, is contained in two letters recently received.

One of the letters, addressed personally to Jesse L. Lasky, is from Ben B. Lindsey, famous judge of Denver's juvenile court. The other is from Mrs. Robert E. Speer, president of the National Board of the Y. W. C. A.

Judge Lindsey's letter follows:

"My dear Mr. Lasky:—

"You know how interested I am in the various angles of the moving picture business—especially the human angle—and I want to congratulate you upon the Paramount Stock Company and School prospectus, copy of which you have been good enough to furnish me.

"A quarter of a century in a Court dealing mostly with humans has taught me many things. One is that people are only children grown up; like children, they always need school training and understanding. Every great business should conduct a school for its workers. I am delighted to know that that is exactly what you are now doing, and that, too, in so complete, magnificent and original a fashion that I am sure it will justly earn for the Paramount Company and the people working with you the cordial support and enthusiasm of a public already enthusiastic over the big, fine, splendid things that Paramount is doing.

"As you know, I have little patience with the clamor from certain quarters against the so-called evil of moving pictures. The good really so far outweighs the evil that emphasis placed upon it in some quarters is far from just. Nevertheless, there is, of course, room for important and new steps towards perfection in every art. Surely no finer thing in that direction could be done than what you are doing for the human side of this business by stimulating, educating, energizing and inspiring the human beings in it, to whose fine qualities we all owe so much in the way of happiness, entertainment and instruction.

"I am sure that this latest effort of Paramount will add new favor to that you have already so well earned from the great public that you serve in this, one of the greatest enterprises that has yet appeared in our civilization. Sincerely yours, (Signed) BEN B. LINDSEY."

In her letter Mrs. Speer said:

"I have looked with great interest at your pamphlet explaining the school of the Paramount Company. You will be interested in the following action taken by our convention of 2000 young women held at Hot Springs, Arkansas, April 20-27, 1922:

"'Realizing the influence and the educational value of the motion picture in our country today, it was

'Resolved, That the Young Women's Christian Associations of the United States of America in Convention assembled wish to commend those producers and actors who are in their lives and in their work portraying the ideals for which we stand, and that we also urge that only those films which truly picture American ideals and life shall be sent to other countries.'

"The Young Women's Christian Association is deeply interested in all that makes for a true development of fine standards both in art and character of the great motion picture industry, and these purposes undoubtedly will be greatly forwarded by the establishment of the Paramount School and the adherents to the excellent standards and regulations defined in the pamphlet.

"Yours sincerely,

(Signed) EMMA BAILEY SPEER."

Priscilla Dean in New York to Film Scenes at Coney

Priscilla Dean, Universal's foremost star, now is in New York for the first time in six years. She is not on vacation, but is busy with Tod Browning, her director, taking scenes at Coney Island for her new Universal-Jewel production, Lady Raffles.

On Sunday Miss Dean and her party, which included Browning, as well as Ray Griffith, her leading man, and Mrs. Morgan, her traveling companion, were escorted to the Central Theatre, where Marc Lachmann, Universal exploiteer, had planted a Priscilla Dean Night during the evening's showing of The Storm.

After a day of shopping, Miss Dean went to work in earnest Monday night at the Eden Musee, Coney Island. This Musee is the nearest approach to the famous London Musee, Mme. Tussaud's Wax Works, in the United States. Important sequences of the action of Lady Raffles take place in a wax works, and it was thought better to take the actual Eden Musee than to reproduce the museum at Universal City at a prohibitive cost.

It is expected that the Universal company will be working at the Coney Island amusement place every night for a week or more. Each night she will be host to a number of newspaper and other writers.

Scenes of Diamond Cutting Factory for Paramount Film

In Penrhyn Stanlaws' Paramount production, "Pink Gods," with Bebe Daniels, James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson and Raymond Hatton, there will be a glimpse of one of the Van Dam diamond-cutting factories in Amsterdam, Holland, the largest in that country.

Through arrangements made by Albert A. Kaufman, Paramount's European production manager, permission was received to film the factory scenes, and a cameraman was sent by Mr. Kaufman to Amsterdam to take these scenes as well as exteriors on the city streets.

Max Linder Assembling Cast for Allied Comedy in France

Cable advices from Paris announce that Max Linder is assembling a company of something like a hundred French players to support him in a comedy which he is arranging to film in France. It is estimated that it will require a year to make it.

Thus it seems certain that Max Linder is going to do something more than burlesque Douglas Fairbanks as he did in his latest comedy, "The Three Must-Get-Theres," now being released by Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation.

Fairbanks May Stop Acting

Considering Becoming Producer Exclusively— May Make "Virginian" with Another in Star Role

After completing his forthcoming photoplay, "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood," which is scheduled for early fall release by United Artists, Douglas Fairbanks may lay aside his grease paint for a time and specialize as a picture producer exclusively.

Mr. Fairbanks let this be known recently when he was asked what picture he would do after the release of the current offering which is now rapidly nearing completion at the Pickford-Fairbanks studio in Hollywood where work has been going on since early last April.

"Asking me what I will do next after the showing of the new picture, said Mr. Fairbanks, "is a good deal like asking an aviator what he would do next after being forced to land in the middle of the Sahara Desert because he was out of gasoline. The answer is, 'Maybe, but I don't know for sure.'

"I did think of playing 'The Virginian' next, but upon advice of counsel, better known as Mary Pickford, I am about to change my mind, and produce the picture with some other star in the feature role. You see, it's a question as to whether people will accept me as The Virginian, that slow-moving, soft-speaking, easy-going hero of the plains that Owen Wister made all America love. Temperamentally, I am just the opposite of the Virginian. I always move to a swift tempo, and if I do play the Virginian I respect him so much that I will play him exactly as the author created him—slow, easy-going, never-hurrying, big-hearted—a he sort of fellow whose every motion was a rolling gesture of grace. And that's not the kind of person the public expects me to depict on the screen. And I'm no iconoclast; either I play Owen Wister's Virginian, or I play no Virginian at all."

If Mr. Fairbanks should decide to produce "The Virginian" and supervise the direction with some one else in the title role, he will take his company to the Jackson Hole country, and make this picture on the Virginian's home "stamping ground."

Cinema Code Book Will Be Issued on September 15th

A Cinema Code Book, containing approximately 500 pages coded from approximately 2800 words which constitute the vernacular of the motion picture industry, combined with an International directory of producers, distributors, artists, accessory manufacturers and dealers, is scheduled for publication September 15, according to a statement this week from Messrs. Cormier & McCosker, of 1600 Broadway, who are special representatives of The American Code Company, publishers of the volume.

Courtland Smith, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., has written an endorsement of the Cinema Code, describing it as "a valuable economic assistance to International correspondence" and adding that "proper conduct of the growing import and export branches of the business seems to demand such a book which warrants the support of the industry." The new code will be used by the Hays organization in coding and decoding foreign cable messages.

For many years the necessity of such a specially prepared code for use in the motion picture industry has been evident. Producers and others have faced mounting cable charges as the development of the foreign market progressed. Meanwhile existing codes provided no special terms or phrases employed in the business. By use of the new code the cost of an average message, replete with picture terms, is reduced to between one and three dollars.

The new code was compiled for the American Code Company by Richard Poillon. His practical motion picture experience both in this country and abroad over a period of years, combined with recognized pre-eminence as a code book compiler, peculiarly fitted him for the work, it is pointed out.

The work of compilation was done in collaboration with managers of foreign departments of the various producing companies and required close to two years to complete. Included in the directory will be a list of importers and exporters, territorial divisions, banks and steamship lines, together with money values and measurements.

Rosensweig Joins F. B. O. to Manage New York Branch

Charles Rosensweig, for several years manager of the New York Exchange of Universal, took office this week as manager of the New York branch of the Film Booking Offices of America. Mr. Rosensweig succeeds Charles R. Rogers, who has resigned from the F. B. O., effective early in August.

The new Metropolitan manager of the Film Booking Offices comes to his new position with a thorough knowledge of the New York territory. His acquaintance in the exhibitor field is extensive.

"Grandma's Boy" Finishes Eleventh Week in Los Angeles

The world's premier run of the Harold Lloyd-Associated Exhibitors comedy feature, "Grandma's Boy," produced by Hal Roach, ends its eleventh week at Dr. H. B. Breckwedel's Symphony Theatre, Los Angeles, Saturday, July 31st. This surpasses by four weeks the world's record for the continuous run of a comedy feature—a record of seven weeks, which also was set by Harold Lloyd and in the same theatre, with "A Sailor-Made Man," his last previous offering, as the attraction.

The end is not in sight, according to advices received from the West Coast by Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors. "Up to July 21st," said Mr. Kane in a statement made just after receiving a telegram from Hal Roach, who presents all of the Lloyd features, "the total attendance at the Symphony since the start of 'Grandma's Boy' was 232,000. The information sent me is to the effect that the daily crowds continue undiminished, so that Dr. Breckwedel feels he would not be justified even now in attempting to fix a date for the close of the run."

Niagara Falls Theatre Gets Premiere of "Light in Dark"

The first public screening of the new Hope Hampton Production, The Light in the Dark, will be given on August 26 at the New Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, New York, and The Light in the Dark will be its first attraction.

Miss Hampton will make a personal appearance.

First Runs for "In Name of Law"

Pre-Release Showings in Several Cities Are Announced for F.B.O. Special

The Film Booking Offices of America this week announced that In the Name of the Law has been booked for immediate runs in some of the most representative houses in this country. The picture is now completing the third week of its run at the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York.

The film is opening on July 30 at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles. The F.B.O. Home Office has supplied the Los Angeles theatre with a complete campaign. July 30 will also see opening of the picture at Phil Gleichman's Broadway Strand in Detroit for an indefinite run. Al Boasberg, exploitation expert attached to the home office, is now in Detroit, where he will collaborate with Mr. Gleichman in staging an exploitation campaign. This is in line with the Film Booking Office policy of extending every possible aid to exhibitors in the way of exploitation and advertising.

In the Name of the Law will also have an early first run in Atlantic City, and Charlie Giegerich has returned to the F. B. O. fold as special publicist and will aid the run of this picture in the Philadelphia territory.

Frank Leonard, home office exploitation man, has been dispatched to the Chicago territory, where an early first run of the picture is expected.

At the Cohan Theatre the picture is entering into its fourth week. The exploitation campaign is continuing without abatement, several new street stunts having been added, and three sheet cut-outs having been placed in such spots as the Grand Central Terminal, through which thousands of commuters pass daily. This marks the first time motion picture advertising has been displayed in the big railroad terminal.

Ten Lane Comedies for Fall

Ten comedies of two reels each, starring Lupino Lane, the British film comedian who is making his début on the American screen under the Fox banner, are being re-edited and retitled for the American market under the direction of Reginald Warde. They will be ready for early fall release, but no method of distribution has been determined.

England's Queen Sees Pathe Films at Special Show

Queen Mary of England recently viewed and was delighted with several issues of the Pathe Review which were shown at the Pathe Offices in London. The Pathe slow-motion novelties seemed to appeal to Her Majesty particularly, as well as the hand-colored Pathe colorscenics. A letter from Pathe Freres Cinema, Ltd., in London states:

"You will be interested to know we gave a special royal command show the other day to Her Majesty the Queen in this building, and Her Majesty was much amused with Kiss Me, Henry, the Pathe Review subject."

The subject referred to was a slow-motion novelty, showing first in natural speed the hasty farewell kiss of a long-married couple when the husband is about to board a train for the city. Then, in the slow-motion, the kiss is shown interpreted by the same couple when they were first married.

Alec Lorimore Dead

Alec. Lorimore of Flushing, L. I., and Sydney, Australia, died on July 19 after a prolonged illness.

Mr. Lorimore was a conspicuous figure in the American and Australian film industry for many years.

The funeral services were held at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

Neilan Signing Players for First Goldwyn Special

Negotiations have been closed by Marshall Neilan with a number of artists for his initial production under the Goldwyn alliance, The Strangers' Banquet, an adaptation of Donn Byrne's novel.

For the leading feminine role Mr. Neilan has selected Claire Windsor, whose recent work in Neilan's Fools First attracted attention. Miss Windsor recently signed a long term contract with Goldwyn and as a result of the Neilan-Goldwyn alliance, her services are now available for future pictures by this director-producer.

Other players engaged are Rockcliffe Fellows, who appeared in Neilan's Bits of Life; Thomas Holding, who has for years appeared opposite Pauline Frederick as well as in many other screen and stage vehicles; Claude Gillingwater, whose last work for Neilan was in Fools First; Nigel Barrie, who has just concluded his work with Constance Talmadge in East Is West and Stuart Holmes, screen villain.

Neilan is at present negotiating with a number of other players.

Frank Urson, who was associated with Mr. Neilan in the direction of Fools First and Minnie, taken from Frank Patullo's, Her Man, will collaborate in a similar manner in the picturization of the Byrne novel.

Portland's Rivoli Puts Over Campaign on Warner Film

A publicity and exploitation campaign that tied up the most prominent merchants in Portland, Ore., was successfully put over by the management of the Rivoli Theatre, during the run of Warner Brothers' Your Best Friend, a Harry Rapf production featuring Vera Gordon.

In addition to considerable newspaper publicity, a double page spread tieing up the title of the picture with local shops was run for several days in the Portland Telegram. The co-operative tie-ups were made with banks, music shops, doctors, hotels, laundries, and other merchants, including a hot weather advertisement by a trolley corporation.

The Theatre Inter-Insurance Exchange

What It Is and Does—

THE PLAN	The Theatre Inter-Insurance Exchange writes only theatre insurance. It operates on the Reciprocal plan, whereby the amount remaining from each year's premiums, after losses and expenses are paid, is returned to the policyholders instead of going to the stockholders of the company under the ordinary insurance plan.
THE SAVING	Each policyholder has saved 40% of his premium deposit, and this in view of the fact that the same initial rates are charged as are required by other companies.
SECURITY	Only a safe amount of insurance on any risk is carried net, all amounts above this being covered by a reinsurance contract with London Lloyds, the strongest and best reinsurers in the world.
SERVICE	In addition to the actual saving in cost the Exchange furnishes an inspection service and assistance on fire prevention methods and equipment that is of real value to the exhibitor.

Write for information or a personal call and inspection.

Independents' Appeal Unsentimental

Quality Only Concerns Exhibitors, Who Seek the Best Wherever They Can Find It, Declares Arthur Friend

"Once again, with the opening of a new theatre season, the independent motion picture exhibitor—and that means practically every exhibitor—is asked to answer the question, 'Shall the independent producer be permitted to exist?'" Arthur S. Friend of Distinctive Productions pointed out this week.

"Instead of making this a business-like question, it has generally reached the exhibitor in the form of a purely sentimental appeal.

"Distinctive Productions, as an independent producer, flatly declines to make any appeal for its product on sentimental grounds. If the independent exhibitor does not realize the inter-dependence of the independent exhibitor upon the independent producer, Distinctive has no especial means of impressing that upon him.

"Speaking for Distinctive, I pass up the appeal based on sentiment because it is not sound. It has been made regularly each season in the past but it has not been backed by good product. So naturally and properly the exhibitor placed no reliance on such an appeal.

"I have never had any doubt, as a close observer of this condition, that the response of the exhibitor who values his business existence, to a campaign of independent producers backed by real product, would have been most complete and immediate.

"I personally know a score of leading exhibitors who boldly kept dates open for independent pictures, because they believed it was their plain duty to keep independent production alive.

"A similar spirit of boldness on the part of the independent producer—expressed in great pictures made without regard to expenditure—would have established the independent producer permanently and firmly, and gained the independent exhibitor a new sense of security in the conduct of his own business.

"But the errors of the past are—in the past. The producer timidity of the last few years is over. On all sides independent producers are scouring the market for the best plays, the best players, the finest production talent. In a dozen instances the independent producer has outbid the program producer for rights to valuable material. As just one lone independent producer, I have not hesitated to place the world's foremost actor in independent productions and to spend a small fortune on every one of these productions. Whereas last year I found very few independent producers committing themselves to expenditure on such a scale, this year I find that I am far from being an exception—that 'everybody's doing it' and that my expensive Arliss product will go out upon the fall market in company with numerous other equally meritorious and lavish independent pictures.

"The coming amusement season is, therefore, the exhibitor's one big chance. He can build an independent producing establishment that will stand him in good stead for all time. For the first time in his business history, he can safely 'hold his dates open' on other than sentimental grounds. The independent producer comes to the independent exhibitor for 'time' not with an appeal to the heart, but with pictures that are their own best argument for careful consideration.

"The season, 1922-23, will be a memorable one—the first wherein the independent motion picture producer demanded his just share of business on a strictly competitive and strictly quality basis."

James Cruze Finishes "The Old Homestead" for Paramount

James Cruze has brought his production of The Old Homestead to a close and the film is now in the hands of the editors at the Lasky studio.

Theodore Roberts is seen as Uncle Joshua Whitcomb and he is supported by George Fawcett, T. Roy Barnes, Harrison Ford and Fritzi Ridgeway. Perley Poore Sheehan and Frank Woods adapted the play and the continuity is by Julien Josephson. Walter Woods, who supervised the production, will have much to do with the final editing.

Diana Allen Entertains Kiddies and "Shoots 'Em"

Diana Allen, who is working with Arthur Housman in a five-reel comedy at the West Forty-fourth Street Studio, provided a movie treat to the members of the Kiddie Klub of the New York Evening World at their annual day at Starlight Amusement Park, East 177th Street, New York, on July 26.

Miss Allen, with cameraman and staff, showed the Kiddies how motion pictures are made and she directed the photographing of the Kiddie Klub ballet in which forty clever dancers presented the rose petal dance for Federated Screen Review No. 4, released by Federated Film Exchanges of America and edited and produced by A. D. V. Storey.

Sacred Films Announces New York Offices in Fall

Ernest Van Pelt, field director of Sacred Films, Inc., who for some time has been in New York on business connected with his company, left for Burbank, Cal., the company headquarters, last Sunday. Mr. Van Pelt intended to stop over in Cleveland and Chicago. Since leaving the west coast he has been engaged in doing missionary work for his company's product among exhibitors and exchangemen and reports it is going well. Following a conference in Burbank on plans for the coming season, Mr. Van Pelt, accompanied by Larry Weingarten, manager of sales and exploitation, will come to New York to open offices in which future distribution will be handled.

The seventh monthly release of the twelve single reels planned is scheduled for showing at the New York Capitol early in August.

National Laugh Day Wins Favor

Arthur S. Kane's Suggestion Gains Approval from Many Prominent People Throughout Country

A few days ago Arthur S. Kane sent letters to a number of distinguished persons, including the President, some United States Senators, a few governors, editors, clergymen, humorists, men in many walks, suggesting the observance of a national laugh day as "a plan for making practical use of our one superb spiritual gift our national sense of humor."

From George B. Christian, secretary to President Harding, has come a letter expressing enthusiasm over the "very interesting suggestion," and promising that it will receive the personal attention of the President as soon as he can be relieved of some of the pressing public matters now engrossing his attention.

Henry J. Allen, Governor of Kansas, offers to issue a proclamation calling upon all the people of his state to chuckle with the president of Associated Exhibitors on a given day and date.

Will H. Hays, writing to Mr. Kane, expressed gratification that the idea for national laugh day came from a picture executive. "I agree absolutely with you in the importance of a sense of humor, and ability to look on the bright side of life, to the people of this country," he said, "and also agree that the motion picture industry has flourished so successfully on account of the appeal to this trait in the American public. I think there is a great deal of importance in your idea."

Robert E. Sherwood, of Life, also paid tribute to the industry's contribution to the joy of living. He wrote: "Your remarks about the national sense of humor are absolutely true. The American people have no use for self-conscious humor. They demand spontaneity. That is the chief reason why your own Harold Lloyd is so incredibly popular."

Dr. Frank Crane, whose philosophical editorials, read daily by millions, are themselves breeders of good humor, wrote: "Thank you for your letter and its very excellent suggestion. It is not safe with me, as I am likely to steal it at any moment."

William Allen White, who, like Mr. Kane himself, followed John Taylor's counsel to "Laugh and be fat," chuckled from Emporia, Kan.: "I won't be the one to tell you not to do it," and Irvin S. Cobb sent a characteristic note of indorsement.

Jay E. House, the "On Second Thought" columnist of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, wrote an extended favorable comment on the idea.

The Topeka Capital, one of Senator Arthur Capper's newspapers, considers the idea excellent but pleads that this country share its mirth with others.

New York Salesmen Hold Annual Outing at Bear Mountain

The Motion Picture Salesmen of New York City held their annual outing at Bear Mountain, July 21. A large party boarded a steamer at 132d Street and at 2 o'clock arrived at the mountain. There was a goodly sprinkling of exhibitors and managers in the gathering, many of them accompanied by their families.

Among those attending were Henry Siegel, manager of Select; William Raynor, manager of Pathe; Manager Faber of the Model Exchange; M. T. Foley, Screen Theatre; Mr. Margolies, Strand Theatre, Paterson; Aaron Schusterman of the Rivoli and Empire, New Brunswick; Ben Leo, Washington Theatre; Mr. Sutkin, Eagle Theatre, and Mr. Ginsberg, King Theatre.

Ralph Lewis in "In the Name of the Law," an Emory Johnson production, released through F. B. O.

Athletic contests were held during the afternoon, concluding with a baseball game between exhibitors and salesmen. The salesmen won the silver cup offered for the latter event, the score being 12 to 8. Louis Weinberg, of Select, won the fat men's race. On the return trip Maxie Felterman of Pathe was awarded the prize in the dancing contest.

The next "party" of the salesmen will be held at the Hotel Commodore on the evening of November 4.

The officers of the organization are: President, L. Lawrence Baren; first vice-president, Jesse Levine; second vice-president, Benj. Rappaport; treasurer, Louis Weinberg; secretary, Sam Shapin; financial secretary, E. C. Bullwinkle and sergeant-at-arms, Wm. Osborne.

Extensive Plans Made for Filming "Voice from Minaret"

That there has been no curtailment of expenditures in the production of motion pictures is attested to by the announcement made in Los Angeles that Joseph M. Schenck will spend close to $600,000 in the filming of Norma Talmadge's latest vehicle, The Voice From the Minaret, for release through First National.

The spending of this large sum of money to film the Robert Hichens story will not be done with any foolish idea that mere prodigality of expenditure means quality or popularity, Mr. Schenck states, but is to be spent because the public is willing to pay more for what is done handsomely.

Mr. Schenck has engaged Frank Lloyd to direct the production. The scenarioizing of the story is in the hands of Frances Marion. Stephen Goosson is designing all the sets on the stages at the United Studios, where the film will be made.

Three stages will be utilized for the sets representing Bombay, Damascus and London. A spired mosque will be built. A polyglot club in Bombay will show a scene of Oriental grandeur, while London will be represented by the reproduction of a ducal estate. Two location trips, in which some fifteen hundred people will be utilized, also will be taken. Playing opposite Miss Talmadge will be Eugene O'Brien.

"Nanook" Held Over for Second Week at Kinema, L. A.

Nanook of the North was given such an enthusiastic popular reception at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, that the management booked the Pathe feature for a second week. In the meantime, McElliott, writing in the New York Illustrated News rates the picture among the ten best released during the month of June.

In Photoplay Magazine Miss Delight Evans, Associate Editor, brings forward this point of view: "Nanook of the North caused more audible comment than any picture I have ever seen on the screen."

Edward L. Hyman, Managing Director of the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, is quoted in the following letter received by Pathe: "Nanook of the North, in point of timeliness, entertainment and sure-fire box office value, I consider the most striking feature novelty issued this year."

"It is the most unique picture we have ever played," writes I. H. Ruben, of the Ruben-Finkelstein Circuit. "It is pleasing in every respect and making a host of friends, and is more than satisfactory from a box office angle. You made me increase my first contract four times before you finally accepted. You should have made me increase it four times more, as the picture is worth it."

Two Territories Are Sold by C. B. C. on Hallroom Comedies

New York territory was sold this week on the new series of Hallroom Boys Comedies. Bobby North, head of the Apollo Exchange, New York, completed arrangements with C. B. C. Film Sales whereby he takes over the new series of twenty-six for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

Another sale made this week was to Pete Oletsky for the Federated Film Exchange, Baltimore, who secured rights to Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia. Mr. Oletsky had the last series of these comedies in his territory.

Three Weeks on Broadway for New Cosmopolitan Films

Cosmopolitan Productions will inaugurate the Fall season with three consecutive weeks at Broadway picture theatres. On August 27 at the Rivoli Theatre will occur the first screening of The Young Diana, a picturization of Marie Corelli's romance. Marion Davies is the star of this production. The week of September 3 this picture will be the feature at the Rialto Theatre.

The week of September 10 the Rialto will have The Valley of Silent Men, Cosmopolitan's picturization of James Oliver Curwood's romance of the Canadian Rockies. Alma Rubens is featured.

Morante Finishes Series

Morante Productions, Inc., of Long Beach, California, has finished a series of eight Northwest Mounted Police features which it was making for Clarke-Cornelius of New York, and has started production on the first of a new series starring Clara Horton.

Assistant Directors to Stage Revel

The Assistant Directors Association of New York will hold a midsummer nights studio revel at the Willat Studio, Fort Lee, on August 10. Among the invited guests will be Mae Murray, Virginia Pearson, Johnnie Hines, Sheldon Lewis, Richard Barthelmess, Lois Meredith, Buster Collier, Lionel Barrymore, Hope Hampton, Monte Blue and Richard Travers.

A goodly number of stage players and vaudeville artists are expected, among them the Courtney sisters, James J. Corbett, Billy Van, De Haven and Nice, George Jessel, Jack Wilson & Co., Andrew Mack, Tom Lewis, Herbert Corthell and Louis Wolheim.

What State Rights Men Are Doing in Northwest

G. H. Christoffers, well known in the industry throughout the Northwest and recently special representative for Arrow Film Corporation out of the Seattle office, was married on July 4 to Miss Ida Wanda Thompson of Portland. Miss Thompson has been connected with the staff of the Jensen & Von Herberg Theatre Corporation in Portland. Mr. Christoffers has accepted a position with the Portland Pathe, and will make his home in that city.

* * *

The Reliance Distributing Corporation has remodeled its Seattle office, installing a number of improvements.

* * *

When Al Lichtman was in Seattle recently he signed a three year contract with Al Rosenberg, manager of De Luxe Feature Film Co., to distribute his product throughout Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho. Seventy-two dramas figure in the deal.

* * *

"Felix" cartoons, by Pat Sullivan, will be distributed through Greater Features, Inc., in the eight states of the Pacific Northwest. There are twelve pictures in the first series, and the first picture has been received in the Seattle office.. Manager Sheffield also announces the arrival of the third George Larkin feature, Barriers of Folly.

* * *

Seattle radio fans flocked to John Hamrick's Blue Mouse recently to learn "How to Make a Radio For Sixty Cents." The picture shows Franklin Steinko, winner of first prize at the National Radio Convention, making the outfit that cost a trifle less than sixty cents. This single-reeler has just been purchased for the Northwest by Greater Features, Inc.

L. K. Brin, president of Kwality Film Corporation, with home office in Seattle, motored to Portland recently for the opening of Your Best Friend, starring Vera Gordon, at Bus Metzger's Rivoli Theatre. It was reminiscent of old times to watch the line-up during the opening days. Mr. Metzger got behind the picture with a special lobby handsomely decorated and featuring photographs of the star, and tied up with many of the merchants in town. He was rewarded with business that made a holdover imperative.

Mr. Brin has some clever novelties and teasers that come with this feaure, and bookings are heavy in the Pacific Northwest. The picture opened July 15 at the Seattle Strand Theatre. A pre-view was arranged at the Liberty Theatre, to which all the rabbis and ministers in town were invited.

Howells Company Preparing for Big Campaign in Fall

The Howells Sales Company is now prepared to wage an aggressive campaign without interruption in the national distribution of state rights attractions. Announcement has been made of the release of Vendetta and Intrigue, two productions in which Pola Negri appears. The Howells organization has re-edited and titled two other productions for state rights distribution commencing next month.

The first production, temporarily titled Her Royal Love, will be ready for release the end of August, and an unusual end of advertising matter and advertising novelties is being prepared as exhibitor exploitation helps.

The second production, which will be released immediately after, is Sold for a Million, a modern drama of man's greed and woman's loyalty.

The Howells Company announces that it has also for distribution this Fall two other productions of seven reels each, one of which at least will be sent out as a road show.

It is expected that before September 1 the company will have in its vaults the twelve negatives of productions to be released, one a month, commencing September, 1922.

Live News of the West Coast

BY RENEE BEEMAN

WHEN Edward Sloman formed his own producing company with his own capital, he announced that he would have only the best cast obtainable for his picture.

The following have been selected by Director Sloman for the principal roles in Blind Justice, his first independent production; Milton Sills, Pat O'Malley, Alec Francis, Charles Clarey, Jack Mower, Eric Mayne, Walter Long and Carmel Myers.

Blind Justice is now in its first stages of production at Fine Arts Studios in Hollywood, and will be ready for distribution in September.

Toilers of the Sea is merely postponed and has not been permanently eliminated from the Rex Ingram schedule. The director will leave for New York within the next two weeks where he will make his next picture. The story will probably have the atmosphere of the sea but will be lighter in theme than his general line of productions.

The Prisoner of Zenda will be released this fall, with a special score that has been arranged by Louis F. Gottschalk, who made the synchronization for D. W. Griffith's feature Broken Blossoms.

Mr. Ingram will take with him, on his Eastern trip, members of his organization which include the players Ramon Samaniegos, Malcolm MacGregor, Alice Terry, (Mrs. Ingram) and others.

Bryant Washburn is the latest acquisition of the Metro organization. He is to appear opposite Viola Dana in June Madness, her next starring vehicle. Mr. Washburn will be seen as the leader of a Jazz orchestra, who is eventually smitten by the charm of the vivacious little dancer, which part Miss Dana will play in the story.

Cullen Landis will support Billie Dove in Country Love for Metro. He has finished his role in Page Tim O'Brien with Viola Dana.

A Previous Engagement, the Owen Moore production for Selznick, has been changed to Love Is An Awful Thing. The cutting of the picture is nearing completion under the guidance of Harold McCord.

The cast of Enter Madame, starring Clara Kimball Young, has been announced; the following well-known names are on the list: Elliott Dexter, Louise Dresser, Lionel Belmore, George Kuwa, Mme. Marstini, Arthur Rankin, Mary Jane Sanderson, Wedgewood Nowell and Orra Deveraux.

Many scenes of this picture are laid in Italy and elaborate settings are being built, including the exterior of the Teatro Della Scala.

Mme. Nazimova and Charles Bryant, the Russian star's husband and director, returned to their Hollywood residence yesterday, after an extended stay in New York.

Discussing Salome, Mr. Bryant said, "Plans concerning the release date and manner are proceeding most satisfactorily and would have been settled before we left New York if we had not felt it advisable, since the picture will not be released until October, to make a careful study of the situation and decide distribution matters only after determining in which direction lay the greatest possibilities of exploitation.

"There is a possibility that between the production of Salome and the next Nazimova picture (the story has already been selected), Mme. Nazimova may make a stage appearance. She feels she has a drama available and suitable, and if pending arrangements are completed she will return to New York in the next few weeks to begin preliminaries to a return.

"But I will not desert the screen for the stage, nor the stage for the screen," she said, "there is too much in common between them, and the deciding factor will be in which medium I can find the most appropriate vehicle."

The Shepherdess and the Chimney-Sweep will be the next picture made by the Mission Film Corp. This is to be the screen dramatization of Hans Christian Andersen's fairy story. The Mission Film Corp., of which Clarence Gilbert is president, was responsible for the filming of Science—Or God, which has just closed three successful weeks at the Tally Theatre, Los Angeles.

E. A. Schiller, general representative of the Loew State Theatres, Inc., briefly outlined the change of policy in the Los Angeles Loew State Theatre and the San Francisco Loew's Warfield Theatre, in the announcement: "We plan to make the Los Angeles Loew State Theatre the home of de luxe photoplays exclusively, presented under the most artistic conditions and accompanied by a greatly augmented orchestra, the equal of any in the West."

Mr. Schiller further stated that Loew's State would become a feature photoplay house exclusively and Manager Nat Holt would be succeeded by E. C. Bostick of Milwaukee as manager. Bostick was the former manager for the Saxe circuit of the theatres in that city and Chicago.

The change of policy at Loew's State is incidental to a deal involving $7,000,000, by which Marcus Loew has purchased the interests of Ackerman and Harris, west coast theatrical owners in the Los Angeles house and the new Loew's Warfield in San Francisco.

The deal not only involves the transfer of the theatres, but also two large office buildings. Marcus Loew is now sole owner of both enterprises.

Schiller is accompanied on his visit to Los Angeles by L. H. Keene, west coast representative for Loew's Inc.

Word from the Western office of the Century Film Corp., to the effect that Abe Stern has left Liverpool bound for New York, after a three weeks trip throughout England, France, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland and Italy. The trip was taken in the interests of the Century Comedies. Mr. Stern was accompanied by Casting Director Bert Sternback.

East Is West, Constance Talmadge's latest starring vehicle for First National release, has been completed and the cutting and titling of the spectacular oriental love story will be accomplished under the direction of Sidney Franklin.

Thomas H. Ince has returned to his Culver City, Cal., studios after an absence of over five months. He declared that the most important of all factors having to do with the continued success of the screen was new story material for pictures, stories with sufficient interest and basic theme to hold the attention of the American and European audiences.

"After five months in New York during which I came in contact with most of the leaders of every branch of the industry and having every opportunity to study every phase of the picture screen away from my studios, I am convinced that pictures, particularly the splendid American productions of the finished type, are just coming into their greatest day," said Mr. Ince.

"Perhaps the efficient distribution of pictures has not kept pace with picture making. If so, however, this should not be surprising as what other great world industry ever solved its problems in a few brief years?

"I think the next few months will see many big distribution problems solved. I have several special productions just entering the final stages of editing and while all the distributing details in connection with them have not been definitely settled, I know that they will be efficiently distributed. This is but one indication of my great faith in the coming motion picture year.

"I intend to devote more attention than ever to the story foundation for it has been my observation that the picture-going millions have never been indifferent toward a good screen story. This will be the busiest production season ever had at my studios; in fact it will be the busiest year of my 13 years as a producer."

The Murfin-Trimble production, Brawn of the North, featuring the dog, Strongheart, is being edited and titled and will be ready for Associated First National distribution in the near future.

To Manslaughter, Cecil B. DeMille's recently completed Paramount Picture, goes the distinction of being the first motion picture to be out and titled by radio.

Following the completion of the actual filming work on this production, the producer retired to his mountain ranch. Before the radio's advent, this mountain fastness was beyond the reach of either telegraph or telephone. Mr. DeMille recently installed a complete radio outfit there, the duplicate of a set already in existence at the Lasky studio.

Cecil B. DeMille productions are invariably cut under the actual supervision of the producer and are titled in the same way. In the past this has required his constant presence at the studio.

Thanks to the radio Mr. DeMille was enabled to enjoy a much-needed vacation and yet keep in constant touch with the work at the studio. Jeanie Macpherson, who prepared the screen adaptation of Manslaughter from Alice Duer Miller's novel of the same name, is responsible for the subtitles. She continued at her desk referring all finished titles to Mr. DeMille for approval by radio.

Similarly, the producer was enabled to issue instructions to Ann Bauchens to whom the monumental task of assembling the picture was intrusted. All doubtful points in both of these important departments of the production were placed before Mr. DeMille with dispatch.

It was only necessary to employ this system during the first week of the cutting and titling work.

Shallenberger Appeals to Independents to Join Him in Support of Will Hays

ONE of the first results of the visit of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America to Los Angeles, which he reached July 23, is the declaration by Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, of his conviction beyond the shadow of a doubt that Mr. Hays is working for the good of the entire industry and not for any special branch of it, and his appeal to every independent producer, distributor and exhibitor to join him in supporting Mr. Hays and his policies.

The far-reaching significance of Dr. Shallenberger's message will not be underestimated by any one associated with the independent division of the industry. As Mr. Boynton points out in his comment on the doctor's declaration, "another milestone has been passed toward the goal of confidence and co-operation." Here are the two messages:

By W. E. Shallenberger
President of Arrow Film Corporation

Los Angeles, July 24, 1922.

IT was with great pleasure that I met Will H. Hays en route to Los Angeles and had the opportunity of discussing motion pictures and the work which he is doing for the industry. Before this accidental meeting with Mr. Hays I had very little conception of the real work he was doing, and as an independent distributor I had the general impression that our interests were not being given much consideration.

I am now convinced beyond a question of a doubt that Will H. Hays is working for the good of the entire industry and not for any special branch of it, and the big thing that impressed me was his interest in the general welfare of the public. His policy stands for all that is good in this great industry regardless of whom it concerns.

The Arrow Film Corporation and myself intend to support Mr. Hays in every way possible, and I hope every independent producer, distributor and exhibitor will do the same.

W. E. SHALLENBERGER.

By L. W. Boynton
Editor Exhibitors Trade Review

Los Angeles, July 24, 1922.

WHEN a pioneer in the independent field of the integrity and vision of W. E. Shallenberger comes out squarely and unequivocally for the Hays program you may stake your last dollar on the fact that another milestone has been passed toward the goal of confidence and co-operation.

To the independent exhibitor, producer and distributor this should be a message not to be forgotten, for no one realizes more than does Mr. Hays that independence must be encouraged and fostered.

This great industry cannot thrive and prosper without unfettered independent effort. In the State Rights field let us have no more bickering and petty practices. Come right down to brass tacks, and come to an honest realization that success can no longer be achieved without a liberal supply of brains plus a lot of hard work plus faith and confidence in this business.

Make and distribute good independent pictures and you need have no fear but that the exhibitor and the public will support your efforts. Go to it and more power to you.

L. W. BOYNTON.

"The Worldly Madonna" Has Quality

Equity Production Starring Clara Kimball Young Is a Story of Power, Is Well Made and Also Finely Played

Even though ordinarily you may abominate a picture that contains a dual role, you are pretty sure to like Equity's The Worldly Madonna, not because it carries such a handicap but in spite of it. For this story, by Sada Cowan, has genuine appeal in its latter half, of a quality that brings the picture within the category of worth-while productions.

Clara Kimball Young is seen as Janet Trevor, of the Convent of Saint Anne, and as Lucy, twin sister of Janet, a dancer in the Cubist Café. In the opening of the story the interest centres upon the latter, but as trouble descends upon Lucy she turns in her distress to Janet, who, against her judgment and especially her inclination, changes places with her worldly sister, even going to a cell pending trial for assault with a pistol, until the atmosphere has been cleared and it has been established that while Lucy has been worldly she has not been so very wicked. Director Harry Garson has discreetly treated the many scenes in which Janet is the dominating figure, taking every care to avoid offense. While Janet is a woman, she is always a nun and always striving for the happiness of the sister whose inclinations run so strongly counter to her own. To the more experienced in worldly ways the treatment of this phase of the story will have marked interest.

The cast is small—and strong. William P. Carleton is John McBride, a regular attendant at the Cubist Café and in love with Lucy. Richard Tucker is Alan Graves, proprietor of the café and also in love with Lucy. George Hackathorn is Ramez, the deformed clown of the café, a humble worshipper at the shrine of Lucy, who unhesitatingly shoots to protect her when he sees her imposed upon by a narcotic vending waiter. The story turns upon the two sisters and the three men.

There are several scenes of real power. Among these is the appearance of Janet at the café, following her imprisonment. In discreet garb the woman of the convent appears before the blasé gathering, everyone expectantly awaiting a sensational dance around the room by the former favorite. Instead Janet stands on the stage and with deep feeling sings "Mother o' Mine," to the amazement at first of her hearers, to their great emotional reaction as the song proceeds. This scene alone will lift the production into one worth notice.

Another striking situation is that where just before the appearance of Janet on the stage Ramez comes to call her and discovers it is not Lucy, taxes Janet with the fact and then, out of his ardent friendship for the former, agrees to help the sister. There are several other sequences where the action digs into the feelings.

Throughout its 5200 feet the picture is well made and finely played. G. B.

Will Nigh Starts Shooting on His Drama "Notoriety"

Will Nigh this week got off to a flying start on his first society drama, Notoriety, when he assigned parts to the cast and began shooting his first scenes.

Maurine Powers, who sprang into the limelight with Why Girls Leave Home, is the ingenue. Mary Alden fills the maternal role. Rod La Rocque, J. Barney Sherry and George Hackathorn complete the list of headliners.

The theme is modern and popular. It is designed to appeal to all classes. The settings are lavish where necessary. The same staff of assistants, cameramen and art directors that Nigh has used on Why Girls Leave Home and School Days has been engaged for the present picture, which, with three more to follow during the season, will be state-righted by Weber & North.

Marie Prevost Is Signed to Play for Warner Brothers

The Warner Brothers' West Coast Studios are humming with activity, and according to report several prominent screen players and a well-known director have been engaged.

Marie Prevost has been signed for three pictures. She will play a leading role in the second Wesley Barry picture, Little Heroes of the Street, under the direction of William Beaudine. Following this Miss Prevost will be featured in The Beautiful and Damned, F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel dealing with the modern flapper and directed by E. Mason Hopper, after which she will be seen in the Rapf production of Brass, to be directed by Wallace Worsley.

Other screen players engaged for the Barry feature include Jack Mulhall, Wilfred Lucas, Aggie Herron and Al Walling.

For Little Heroes of the Street Ernest Belcher, sponsor of the American ballet, has been procured to stage an elaborate and unique "Follies" dance. Mr. Belcher promises a dance fantasie that has never before been equaled on the screen.

"Wildness of Youth" Chosen as Title of Graphic Subject

Wild Youth, the working title under which Ivan Abramson, president of the Graphic Film Corporation, completed his latest state rights feature at the Talmadge studios, has received its final caption under which it will find distribution in September. It will be Wildness of Youth. The other title had been used.

Work on an elaborate press book has been started by the Weshner-Davidson Agency. Mary Anderson, who portrays the role of wild youth in the picture, will aid the agency in constructing a representative campaign book.

Edeson in "Sure-Fire Flint"

C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., producing Sure-Fire Flint, Johnny Hines' second feature production, announced this week that Robert Edeson had been engaged to enact an important role in this six-reel comedy-drama.

Lessers Form Distributing Company

Principal Pictures Corporation Also Will Produce, Its Initial Subject Featuring Dorothy Phillips in Glyn Story

Culminating a deal which has been pending for some weeks final papers have been signed whereby Principal Pictures Corporation, a producing and distributing organization, with home offices in Los Angeles, comes into existence. Officers of the concern, which expects to transact an annual business of over three million dollars a year, are Sol Lesser, president; Irving Lesser, vice-president and eastern manager, and Mike Rosenberg, secretary, treasurer and western manager.

The company will operate as an independent concern and will make twelve pictures a year, the first of which will be an original story by Elinor Glyn. This is temporarily entitled The World's a Stage, and will go into production at the United Studios immediately with Mr. Lesser supervising.

The story was adapted to the screen by Colin Campbell, who will direct the filming.

By arrangement with First National and Allen Holubar, Dorothy Phillips will head the cast for Miss Glyn's initial story for the organization.

Others in the initial picture are Bruce McRae, Kenneth Harlan, Otis Harlan and Jack McDonald. The author will appear in several scenes in the production, that part of the film having been shot while she was visiting Los Angeles a few months ago.

The concern will produce and distribute other specials—all the works of noted authors—but the officers are not ready as yet to go into particulars other than that they will sponsor some of the best screen entertainments available through independent channels.

Books "Country Flapper" for Capitol

Big Broadway House to Show Independent Production Starring Dorothy Gish During the Week of July 30

Dorothy Gish's latest starring vehicle, The Country Flapper, her own production, is to open in the Capitol Theatre, New York, on Sunday, July 30. This is the world's premier showing of this feature. The production was directed by F. Richard Jones, director of Mickey, Molly O' and The Cross Roads of New York.

Miss Gish's supporting cast is headed by Glenn Hunter, the new screen star. Others in the picture are Tommy Douglas, Mildred Marsh, Alfred and Raymond Hackett and Harlan Knight. The subject is a comedy drama. Because of the universally discussed flapper subject Miss Gish was prompted to produce the picture and typify the real American Girl. It is being offered in the independent market by Producers Security Corporation.

A new song fox trot titled The Country Flapper has been published by G. Ricordi & Co., music publishers, and is to be used in connection with the picture. It was written by E. O. Van Pelt and Jessie Winnie, and is declared to be a distinct novelty. The melody may be used as the theme of the picture.

Joe Brandt Goes Hunting for Facts

Swings Around the Circle to Discover if Exhibitors Want Melodramas with Titles That Roar or Just Gurgle

Owing to the apparently wide diversion of opinion with regard to the kind of features that should be made for the Fall and the titles to put on them, and also the widespread discussions as to the kind of short subjects that should be manufactured, Joe Brandt left this week for a complete swing around the circle of every key city in the United States.

During the past months a great many exhibitors have felt that they wanted melodramas. Some of them have thought they ought to have melodramas with melodramatic titles, while others felt they should be melodramas with straight titles.

Some felt they needed cartoon novelties, others slapstick comedies, and others again wanted situation comedies. Some were strong for single reel comedies and others wanted them in two reels. Some were clamoring for outdoor Northwest features.

With so much dissension over what is wanted and what is not, Mr. Brandt thought it best to leave on a trip to find out just what exactly is needed.

His itinerary includes a prolonged stay at Los Angeles, where he will put into effect on the production of C. B. C.'s output for the year the result of his observations en route.

Warners to Launch Broadside Drive on Seven Productions

A broadside campaign which will involve billboards, national magazines, newspapers and the motion picture trade journals will shortly be launched by the publicity department of Warner Brothers for the series of seven productions announced for Fall release.

For each subject an unusual number of novelties have been devised. In addition to the novelties, attractive and attention-arresting cut-outs will also be available for exhibitors. The cut-outs and novelties are original in conception and are said especially to lend themselves for exploitation purposes. The press sheets for each picture will consists of eight pages of newspaper size, and these will contain cut of the beaten track suggestions on how to put over the Warner attractions.

Organize Second National Exchange in the Southwest

Under the firm name of A. and R. Film Exchange, a branch organization for the distribution of Second National Pictures Corporation releases has been established at 1810 Commerce Street, Dallas. The territory assigned to the new center of distribution consists of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. The branch will be conducted as a partnership enterprise by Jack Adams, a banker in Dallas, who recently became attracted by the prospects of progress in the film industry, and J. C. Rutherford, for some time associated with successful motion picture enterprises.

Alexander to Issue Pacific Film

John Hayes, president of the Pacific Film Company, and Julius Singer, general representative, have arranged to have the Alexander Film Corporation distribute all their product. The first four subjects are The Able Minded Lady, The Fatal 30, The Forest King and The Girl from Rocky Point. Mr. Singer will make his headquarters at the offices of the Alexander Film Corporation.

"Babes in Toyland" to Open in August in Atlantic City

Victor Herbert's condensed version of Babes in Toyland, which has been under production by Francis A. Mangan during the summer, is scheduled to open at the Garden Pier Theatre in Atlantic City for the week commencing Sunday, August 27. Elaborate preparations are being made for this first exhibition. The orchestra is to be augmented to thirty-two pieces. An elaborate exploitation campaign will be carried on, covering the entire United States and Canada.

The subject is a rearrangement and is especially adapted for exhibition in motion picture theatres.. Miss Bessie Wynn will again be seen in the characterization of Tom Tom, the role which made her famous as the Dresden Doll.

Another Arrow on Broadway

The Broken Silence, newest of the Arrow-Curwood series, opened at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre, New York, on Monday, July 24. This is the third Arrow production to reach the Great White Way within the past few weeks.

Three weeks ago God's Country and the Law was shown at Moe Mark's Strand Theatre. The following week The Innocent Cheat played at the Broadway.

Atlantic Receives Word of Progress on First Features

Atlantic Enterprises reports receipt of word from abroad that No. 1 producing unit has completed its exteriors on its first subject and that it began work on the interiors July 24. It is expected the completed picture will be in New York by September 1, and that the finished result of the efforts of No. 2 unit will be in New York on the heels of the first.

Upon arrival the productions will be edited and titled by Don Bartlett. They will be shown to buyers in conjunction with the first of the series of fourteen two-reel detective stories which Atlantic will distribute.

It is planned to release two five-part and two two-part subjects each month.

Export and Import to Renew Drive on "Jungle Goddess"

Export and Import has announced that his company has started its Fall campaign on the Selig's fifteen episode wild animal serial, The Jungle Goddess, of which it controls the world rights.

As the serial was completed too late to be available for release except in those territories where Summer does not affect business, the extensive publicity drive with which the serial was back was curtailed so that it could be renewed in the Fall.

The Jungle Goddess will have the advantage of the most far-reaching publicity campaign ever accorded an independent serial, according to Louis Auerbach.

Goodman Production to Be Equity's Big Attraction for Fall

Declared to be an independent attraction of box office strength, What's Wrong With the Women, Daniel Carson Goodman's production is announced as the fall attraction of Equity pictures. Louis Baum, general manager of Equity, recently arrived home from a business tour of Europe, which he cut short in order personally to supervise the sale and releasing arrangements of this special.

Mr. Goodman is said to have made no attempt to spread propaganda for or against feminism, but has simply tried to draw a true picture of the modern woman of the big city, whose craving for amusement and its consequent extravagance brings worry and despondency to husband and father. Around this theme is woven a drama of two typical American families.

Vogel Buys Foreign Rights in Two Johnny Hines Films

All foreign rights on the second Johnny Hines feature, Sure-Fire Flint, and the one to follow, name yet undetermined, have been purchased by William M. Vogel, 126 West Forty-sixth Street, New York City, it was announced this week at the Affiliated Distributors' offices.

Mr. Vogel bought the sole foreign rights to these Hines features despite the fact that Sure-Fire Flint has not yet been completed and that production on the third Hines six-reeler will not be forthcoming until late in the Fall.

Eddie Lyons Visits "the Big Town"

Genial Comedian Says Things at West Coast Are Moving Fast and That Every One Is Looking for a Banner Year

Eddie Lyons, producer of comedies for Arrow release and screen comedian for a whole lot of years, is in New York giving the critical once-over to the efforts of his contemporaries of the stage. No need to come all that distance for the screen stuff, declared the player-producer, as Los Angeles is pretty well fixed in that department of the theatre. Incidentally he brought with him a print of My Hero! the two-part Lyons Comedy for release in September. He intends to remain for a fortnight, a goodly portion of his daytime being devoted to business conferences.

My Hero! by the way, is the final number of a series of twelve specials. Besides his activities in the Lyons Comedies, the producer is engaged also in supervising the fourteen Mirthquake Comedies featuring Bobby Dunn, which means that each month he has to send to New York a little better than two full-fledged double-reelers.

Mr. Lyons, whose pictures are made at the Ben Wilson studios in Los Angeles, was seen at the Arrow offices on Tuesday. "What are the independents doing?" he countered in response to a question. "Well, the way it looks to me, they are doing more than are the national companies. Of course, there are two or three exceptions, but I mean in the main. Things are picking up fast, though, in both departments.

"One of the best indications that this is a fact is in the lessening number of players who are seeking engagement. Six or seven months ago you could get practically anyone at any time. But in casting my last picture, I experienced difficulty in obtaining players I knew and wanted. And practically everyone seems to be optimistic that the coming twelvemonth will be a banner year in production.

"The method of production in comedy studios has changed very much, even in the last year. Where once you could depend upon a light comedy situation to sustain itself, now it is considered necessary to adorn it with 'gags,' to give your house a chance to laugh at the titles. As an illustration, on the two comedies we are making we have three men working steadily on the 'gag' end alone. Yes, it is true there is a tendency to overstrain, with the result that the expected laugh is nullified or minimized. The 'gag' must be terse, spontaneous, natural."

Mr. Lyons paid his respects to Harold Lloyd and commended that comedian's patience and persistence in polishing and refining his comedies before permitting them to go into general distribution. The visitor declared he knew of six previews under regulation exhibition conditions given Grandma's Boy in Los Angeles. "It's all set now, though," said Mr. Lyons, "and you may bet it's good. He's got it absolutely where he wants it."

The comedian's first screen work was at the Biograph in 1910 in a 500-foot chase picture opposite Mabel Normand, directed by Mack Sennett. Then he went to the Imp company at its Fifty-eighth street studio. When the Universal was organized he went to the old Nestor studio in Hollywood, the first in that suburb, with Al Christie. With Universal he remained over nine years.

The writer, with Mr. Lyons and Ray Johnston and J. Charles Davis, 2d, of Arrow, had a peek at My Hero! and found it full of fun. It is a story of burglars of the imaginary sort and a goat—a very material sort. The latter will put over one or two surprises unless you watch him very sharply, and perhaps even then. Also shown was Hands Up! the Mirthquake release for July 1, and it's good, as a whole lot of exhibitors can testify.

Columbia Handling Territory

Due to an oversight, it was announced that Sure-Fire Flint had been sold to Joe Skirboll, of Associated First National of Pittsburgh, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The correct version of the sale is that the picture had been purchased by Joe Skirboll for James H. Alexander and J. E. Davis, of the Columbia Film Service, Inc., of Pittsburgh, for the same territories.

Film Sales Corporation has announced for state rights distribution started off with the disposal of the entire six to De Luxe Film Company of Philadelphia. Immediately following word that C. B. C. would adhere to its Independent policy and State Right these features, the sale with De Luxe was completed.

Tony Luchese of De Luxe has declared More To Be Pitied Than Scorned one of the best Independent pictures he has ever seen and told Joe Brandt that if this is a forerunner of the six features they should prove the biggest thing ever done in the independent field. A real campaign is to be launched in the territory to put them over.

Joe Brandt and Jack and Harry Cohn have been in receipt of a steady stream of congratulations and inquiries commending their decision to State Right. The five other subjects in the group are Only a Shopgirl, The Lure of Broadway, Pal o' Mine, Forgive and Forget and Temptation.

Deals covering a large percentage of the territory are already pending and it is believed will be closed soon.

Charles O. Seessel Supervising Sets of "Sure-Fire Flint"

With the announcement last week of the completed cast for the second Johnny Hines feature, Sure-Fire Flint, production on which is on full swing at the Glendale Studios, C. C. Burr also announced that Charles Osborn Seessel has been engaged as general supervisor of production set being made for this feature. Many pictures made within the last two years bear evidence of his skill in the construction of difficult and beautiful sets.

Mr. Seessel is now working on a set of mammoth proportions for Sure-Fire Flint, similar in scope and size to the great art museum in The Devil and the throne ball in Disraeli, The particular problem involved and its practicality is the culmination of three years of experimentation.

Franklyn E. Backer Closing Territory on J. B. Warner Series

Franklyn E. Backer, president of East Coast Productions, Inc., announces increased activity in the state rights field. The advance guard of the early fall out-of-town buyers have been frequent visitors at the Backer offices in the Times Building recently, and it is believed within a few weeks he will be able to announce the closing of 100 per cent territory for the new James B. Warner series of six Westerns, the first two of which are Big Stakes and Flaming Hearts. The star has been put under contract for an additional series as soon as the four remaining of the present block have been completed.

"Snub" Pollard Quits One-Reelers

Already Comedian Has Started Work on Series of Six Two-Part Feature Comedies to Be Issued Each Month

As it was with his former comedy partner, Harold Lloyd, so it now is with Harry "Snub" Pollard. Pathe, which releases all of the Hal Roach comedy products, announces that Pollard has been elevated to stardom in a series of two-reelers now being made at the Hal Roach Studios for Pathe distribution. The first series of six Pollard comedies will be released one every four weeks, beginning sometime in September. They are directed by Charles Parrott, with Marie Mosquini playing opposite the star comedian and with "Sunshine Sammy" and other Hal Roach comedy favorites in the supporting cast.

Pathe believes that this announcement will be of unusual interest to exhibitors, owing to the constant and wide distribution of the one-reelers featuring Pollard. It is declared that these comedies have been shown in more houses than any other one-reelers ever produced—in fact, that there is not a picture theatre in the United States which has not, at one time or another, shown one or more examples of them. Their popularity with patrons was hardly exceeded even by the original showings of the scores of one-reelers featuring Lloyd and Pollard together, naturally emphasized, however, by the amazing avidity of their acceptance as reissued during the past year in many of the same houses featuring the Lloyd multiple-reel comedies.

Since Lloyd advanced into his celebrated two-reelers, and more recently into his still longer comedy form, Pathe points to the fact that the popular vogue for Pollard as a comedy hero has steadily increased, not only in this country but abroad. Up to the time of Pollard's start as star of the new two-reel series, his list of one-reelers had grown to considerably more than one hundred, and are characterized by almost uniform excellence and box office value. Many newspaper and magazine reviewers have declared their discovery in Pollard of practically inexhaustible comedy resources, several broadly hinting that "Snub" was unmistakable "star timber." It is said that Producer Hal Roach has long been of the same opinion, and merely delayed action until Pollard could be advanced out of "Hal Roach Comedies" without serious detriment to that highly popular and profitable output.

Educational Ready to Shoot in 1922-3 with 125 Subjects

Educational Pictures is set on its program for 1922-3. Its list of releases comprises fifty-one two-reelers and sixty-four single reels, exclusive of Kinograms. The two-part subjects, as already announced, are 20 Christie comedies, 6 Lloyd Hamilton comedies, 13 Mermaid comedies produced by Jack White and 12 Sherlock Holmes dramas featuring Eille Norwood.

The single-reel subjects comprise 10 of Robert C. Bruce's Wilderness Tales, 24 issues of Tony Sarg's Almanac, 6 Earl Hurd cartoons and 24 numbers of what for want of a better characterization are referred to as rough and tumble comedies. The latter will be produced by a special unit now being organized which will have the active co-operation in selection of stories, directors and casts of Jack White.

Into the score of Christie subjects is being injected all the energy that formerly was divided between the 24 two-part comedies and a number of single-reelers. The first of the series is ready. It is entitled The Son of a Sheik and features Neal Burns and Viora Daniel. As may be supposed, it pokes more or less gentle fun at the many "Sheik" subjects which recently have been released.

The company is having prepared a booklet descriptive of the coming year's releases which will be sent to all exhibitors and to the photoplay editors of the newspapers. It will be carefully printed on good stock, although it will not court attention by reason of lavishness. It will be ready for distribution shortly after August 1.

Forms Three Units to Make One-Reel Universal Comedies

Universal has reorganized its comedy producing department and has established a three-unit schedule which will rotate in turning out high-class one-reel comedies, it is announced at 1600 Broadway.

The new brand of Universal one-reelers will be known as Universal Comedies. Heretofore the only one-reel comedy product put out by Universal has been the series of Star Comedies, which will be discontinued September 4 next, when the Universal Comedies will be released, one a week.

The three new comedy units include a Neely Edwards company, a company featuring Lewis Sargent, a boy comedian and a third company featuring Charles Moline and his group of comedy-trained bulls.

Neely Edwards has created a popular and highly successful comedy character in Nervy Ned. Lewis Sargent, remembered as the boy who played Huck Finn and who has also created other outstanding boy roles, has been engaged by Universal for a series of "messenger boy" comedies. Charles Moline, with his trained bulls, now is making a series of comedy bullfight pictures for the Universal Comedy schedule.

"The Radio King" Completed at the Universal Studios

The Radio King has been finished at Universal City. This serial of science upon which the best efforts of Roy Stewart, the star of a strong supporting cast, and of the director and author, Robert F. Hill and Robert Dillon, have been expended for eighteen weeks, has gone into editorial hands. The picture embodies all the newest facts about the development of radio. Louise Lorraine has portrayed the feminine lead opposite Stewart.

The cast included Sidney Bracy, Albert J. Smith, Ernest Butterworth, Jr., Marion Faducha, Joseph North, Ray Taylor, Clark Comstock, Helen Brunneau, D. J. Mitsoras, "Slim" Whitaker, and Fontaine LaRue.

More "Leather Pushers" Are Coming

Second Series of Six Two-Reelers Featuring Reginald Denny Now Under Way at Universal's West Coast Studio

The new series of two-reelers from H. C. Witwer's famous prize ring stories, The Leather Pushers, will be even better than the first six of the series, it is promised by Harry Pollard, who is directing Reginald Denny in the role of Kid Roberts, the "millionaire boxer," at Universal City.

Pollard made the original six releases, with Reginald Denny in the starring role. These short features made such a hit that Pollard was engaged as a regular Universal director and Denny as a regular Universal star. Then, when box office reports continued to pile in, echoing from all parts of the country the huge success of The Leather Pushers, Universal made arrangements with the author, H. C. Witwer, for more of the same.

The new series will be unique in having many of the same players as the first six, although the original two-reelers were made in the East.

The most popular of these players is Hayden Stevenson, who played the role of Kid Roberts' manager. Stevenson is said to have one of the most engaging screen personalities for those who know the sporting man as he is—living for the minute, unworrying and happy.

Since making the first subjects Pollard has made several five-reel features for Universal.

Pollard has lined up many of the first raters of the West Coast to co-operate with him in the making of the new Leather Pushers. Reginald Denny is expected to square off against many figures popular in San Francisco and Los Angeles pugilistic circles.

Educational Branch Increases Normal Business a Fourth

In its issue of June 3 last Short Subjects, "a weekly magazine of pep," published by Educational Pictures for exclusive circulation among those connected with the concern, President E. W. Hammons addressed the members of his organization on the subject of "Wilted Collar Selling."

In his talk the Educational's president alluded to the tendency in summer to apply brakes and permit business to slow down. He pointed out that the present season, however, was going to be notable for the number of men who would not only roll up their sleeves to meet the rise in the thermometer, but who also would get right down to brass tacks in the matter of hustling for business. He advised his associates to clear decks, to wipe from the books any paper business that might be there, and then get out and bring in everything remaining.

Mr. Hammons urged that every one go so hard after business that at the end of the season behind every name could be written in truth "A Wilted Collar Salesman."

It is announced at the executive offices of Educational that in response to the impetus which has been gaining in force the New York exchange of the company for the week of July 16 booked cash business to a point that marked a 25 per cent increase over that of normal periods.

The New York exchange also reports first-run bookings for the final week of July of Torchy's Ghost at the Rivoli; a Campbell Comedy, A Penny Reward, at the Criterion, Manhattan; the same comedy at the Brantford in Newark as a part of a short subject program which also includes Selig-Rorke's White Mouse, and at the Brooklyn Strand one of Bruce's "Wilderness Tales," One-Man Reunion.

The point is made at the Educational offices that there seems to be business for those who have goods to sell and go out determined to find customers.

REVIEWS OF CURRENT SHORT SUBJECTS

THE SONG OF THE LARK—Pathe.—A two-reel dramatic subject, its theme was taken from the inspiration of Franz Schubert's music and Jules Breton's painting. The screen story was written by Arthur Maude and the picture was directed by Mr. Maude and J. C. Haydon. It aims to visualize a girl whose soul awakens to freedom as she hears the music of the lark on the wing. Undoubtedly the picture would be warmly received in a gathering of clubwomen. What it may do in the average theatre very likely will be something different. There are pretty scenes, artistically conceived and photographed, but there is an absence of the drama that stirs the emotions. There is a feeling the story is on the screen too long. The titles have received considerable attention, simulating raised bronze letters, but the sins of omission and commission in punctuation offset their good appearance.

FELIX IN THE SWIM.—Pat Sullivan's cartoon efforts caused much amusement at the Strand last week, where Felix the Cat performed a number of new stunts in his own inimitable way. The trick played by Felix on mother, out in the yard washing clothes, was one of the best. In order to provide a substitute for the boy he wanted to go swimming with him but who was tied to his piano practice, Felix took advantage of a standing offer on the part of a mouse whose life he had saved. The little animal and his three brothers mounted the keys of the instrument and played so well that not only mother but even the clothes on the line fell into step. And had a goat not been hungry, the boy would not have had to wait for darkness and go home in a barrel.

THE HOUR OF DOOM — Two-part Western, Released by Universal. — Tom Santschi in a not over-strong story appears as a falsely accused man condemned to die. The night preceding his execution he is released by the sheriff's daughter, in order that he may capture the men he believes to be guilty, promising to return in any event. He gets the facts he goes after, but the men are arrested on another charge and confess the murder. The story does not convince. Mr. Santschi's work, as always, is just what is expected of this experienced player. The roles of the sheriff and those of the other players also are well portrayed.

GO GET YOUR MAN—Fourth Episode of "The Timber Queen," Released by Pathe.—The opening of the chapter shows Ruth hurrying to the scene of the execution to save the life of her defender, forcing along in front of her the man alleged to have been murdered. Following the rescue and after a period of peace, the lumber pirates seize the defender, take him to a cabin and make him prisoner. Ruth, riding again to rescue him, crosses a canyon on a pulley and rope, the latter breaking. The number holds up well.

HELLO, MARS — Century Two-reel Comedy, Released by Universal.—The fun in this subject is rather attenuated. The featured players are Johnny Fox and Harry Sweet, in the order of their billing. The latter has conception of comedy. He has especial capacity as an interpreter of a boob. There is fun in him, he is likable. In the present instance in a subject on which thought and money were expended he is handicapped by the boy who is cast with him, whose chief if not sole title to consideration are swiftly moving, gum-chewing jaws and an unvarying silly grin.

THE STONE AGE — Hal Roach Comedy, Released by Pathe.—"Snub" Pollard swings a wicked club on Marie Mosquini, who has the role of a cave maiden. "Snub" drives a wagon drawn by something resembling a hippo, but it gets over the ground and looks pretty good. Also it is so influenced by Marie's music it "dances." While "Snub" is pretty rough in his courting, which seems to conform to the Stone Age tradition, nevertheless he provides a good comedy, one that will make fun.

THE GREAT ADVENTURE — Three-part Pathe Playlet.—Bessie Love is the featured player in this re-edited subject and has the role of a country girl who comes to the city to get work in the chorus. Miss Love makes the most of her opportunities. She is supported by Flora Finch, Chester Barnet, Donald Hall and Florence Short. The action is lively and the interest well sustained.

PERILS OF THE YUKON—Chapter 6, "The Menace of Death," Universal Serial. —The episode stands up well in a serial that has strong numbers. One of the best shots in it is of a snow-covered mountainside with two men battling on its crest. In fact, the number has value from its scenic side alone. There is a steady development of the story.

THE CITY SLICKERS—One-reel Comedy Reissued by Pathe.—Harold Lloyd is brought in to show a country hotel keeper how to make his establishment up to date in every respect. "Snub" is promated until he becomes first, second and third cook all at once. Bebe Daniels is very much among those present. It's well up with the average.

PATHE REVIEW 167. — Among the subjects treated are the dancing Samoans, life among the barges on the Hudson River, the trapper plant of South America and, in Pathecolor, a number of interesting views of the Crystal Hills of Yellowstone Park.

THE FABLE OF THE BOASTFUL CAT.—Cartoonist Terry in his coming Pathe Fable release builds up a pretty good cartoon, even if it is not 100 per cent on his usual rating. The theme this week is "It is never wise to be too boastful."

UNFERMENTED BRICKS—Single Reel Universal Comedy.—Neely Edwards and Bert Roach make an excellent pair of tramps of the shabby genteel variety. The picture is not hilariously funny, but it has laughs.

Mailing Lists—Reaching the Farmer

The Mail Will Often Get Him When Newspaper Advertising and Billboards Fail

V. Reaching the Farmer

The Gem Theatre, Snyder, Okla., has hit upon the idea of bringing the farmers to its Saturday shows. We've always believed the farmers were well worth going after and, what is more, the farmer is one of the best customers that great mail order firms reach. He is educated to direct-by-mail solicitation. Look at the mail order catalogues he has on hand; watch him read the sales letters that reach him.

The point is, however, what is the best way to reach him and what is the best season. In the spring he is preparing for his busiest season, the summer. In the fall he is in a spending mood, willing to take the family to an entertainment. In the winter he hibernates and if the weather is fair and the roads good he also enjoys some recreation.

It seems to us (and we were brought up on the old farm) that during vacation seasons in the summer an intensive mail effort to reach the farmer would result in filling some of the seats left vacant by regular patrons who are on vacation.

In the case of the Gem in Snyder Saturdays are set aside for special shows that will please the farmer. Special programs are arranged.

A good mailing list of farmers can be obtained, as previously pointed out from the registered voters' lists found on file in one of the county offices. Then there is the telephone book and the Farmers' Union organization and granges and also regular prepared lists furnished by list dealers who are found in all the big cities.

Now as to some mail stunts that can be used to reach them. We will suppose that the crops are in and the farmer is watching carefully every blade of grass that appears. To hit him between the eyes we suggest this post card:

Watched Kettles Never Boil

Now that your planting is done don't spend all your time watching for the first sprouts to appear. Don't get to worrying about the crops.

A little recreation now and then, even in your busy season, is the finest thing in the world.

Come to town on Saturday and see our big special show. And bring the family.

RIVOLI THEATRE.

And for the fall we suggest a special seasonable appeal. Have an artist draw a picture of a hay barn bulging with hay (or buy it from one of the companies that have ready made cuts of this kind on hand) and send out the following:

The hay is in the barn,
The grain is in the sack,
Now for a little pleasure,
Of movies I'll taste a smack.

Yes, now that the crops are in, take the family and spend a night of joy at the Odeon Theatre. There's a big show this week, specially appealing to farmers.

ODEON THEATRE.

If you've booked a picture that you believe has a special appeal to farmers in it get up a special musical program that will appeal to them and send out this kind of a postal:

Farmers' Day at the Gem

Every farm owner in this community will rejoice over the big special photoplay ————, now playing.

On ———— our entire house will be turned over to the farm owners. A special program which includes a comedy, a film showing modern farm methods and special music that will please you has been arranged specially for our farming community.

Bring the family and enjoy yourselves.

GEM THEATRE.

For the winter season cards like this can be sent out or, better yet, send a list of the big pictures you have booked:

Don't Be a Squirrel This Winter

Get out and enjoy yourself and keep the family happy by attending the Ideal Theatre whenever you can. Here are some of the big pictures that will make winter pass pleasantly that have been booked:

(Give list of pictures you have booked)

You'll never regret it.

IDEAL THEATRE.

Birthday Idea

Roy L. Smart, of the Southern Enterprises, Anniston, Ala., obtained the services of eight young women of good approach from the Business Women's Club and spent a week in training them before he sent them out. Then he zoned Anniston and Oxford, a suburb, and gave one section to each of his agents. They were provided with questionnaires and with a book of 366 dated pages.

The birthday pass idea was the approach, and the names of all who formed a family were entered in the book on the proper page. Then the questionnaire was filled in. This material, when collated, gave a general mailing list, mailing lists by stars, and supplied information as to why some persons did not attend showings of pictures. These last were sent passes immediately, with a persuasive letter. The others were sent passes good upon their birthdays.

At the same time the girls were trained in a "spiel" for the fact that the Noble Theatre showed Paramount pictures and the cream of other programs, for the kiddies matinees on Saturday mornings, and for the new biblical pictures, the first of which was to be shown the following week.

Mail Wedding Invitations

THE mailing list stunt here described will fit with almost any comedy or drama on the screen because there's most always a wedding or an engagement ending the romance of the couples in the picture.

The Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, reasoned rightly that an unexpected announcement of a betrothal would just about prove a bombshell at the breakfast table if opened with the morning mail.

So with the aid of Wayland Taylor, Paramount exploiteer, the following announcement was sent to 7500 families:

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Binswanger announce the engagement of their daughter
Pearl to
Mr. Max Teitelbaum
Ready to see their friends
Sunday, May seventh and all the week following at the home of
"The Good Provider"
Imperial Theatre, 1077 Market Street

Walking down the aforementioned Market Street, Taylor saw a little sidewalk booth where a man was printing calling cards and invitations on a little hand-press with type almost exactly like the letters usually found on the expensive engraved invitations. He got the entire batch printed for $7.

Kid Printing

Getting a laugh out of his circular postcard was an exploitation medium that brought all the fans to see "My Boy" at the Garden Theatre, Davenport, Iowa. The postcard used a stock cut of Jackie Coogan and copy drawn up in crude kid printing. It read: "The picture producer told me confidentshly that I'm the star, but my maw kolects my salary every week. 's a mystery to me. Jackie Coogan."

City Directory

Manager Herb Johnson, in exploiting "The Lotus Eater" at the Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., for three days resorted to the old reliable City Directory and circular letters in putting the picture across. From the Directory he obtained the names of the active business men of the city. Then he prepared circular letters addressed to "The Tired Business Man."

Try a Mailing System Stunt

J. S. Gillespie, Rialto Theatre, Kingsport, Tenn., writes a letter hitting us about the right time. He says:

"What is your biggest problem today? you ask. It suggests to us that you might have some printed matter on special advertising stunts such as cash prizes, etc., and the best manner of putting them over. If you have anything of the kind would be glad to have you furnish us with copies of the same."

The best stunts one can use will be found in the Exploitation Department. We do not think that a book of set rules on exploitation or set stunts will always turns the necessary trick, but we do know that as pictures change, and the public mood changes, the stunts that work and make money are printed in our Exploitation Department. They are fresh and up-to-the-minute and meet the changing conditions.

It might be well for Mr. Gillespie and other readers who are confronted with his problem to follow closely the series on mailing systems which begins in this issue and continues until this important phase of theatre operation is fully covered.

We'd also like to hear from successful users of mailing systems.

A Mystery Mailer

The split postcard is not a new idea nor is it too old to use. Its novelty is startling. The cut here shown represents a mailing card which Arrow prepared for use with The Innocent Cheat.

When one receives the card just the bare scene, a brunette of large stature looking scornfully at a man, is showing, but the card is cut at the woman's neck (the jagged neck of the lady represents the cut on the card). The lower part from the lady's neck downward is then folded down and the beholder sees the same woman's face, but she holds a baby in her arms and a fond husband is holding her hand. Then the story is told in bold type. It is what is termed a puzzle postcard.

Pathe's "Nanook of the North" displayed in the lobby of Ruben and Finklestein's Capitol Theatre, St. Paul.

The Newark Star Eagle's puzzle game, in conjunction with Famous Players-Lasky and the Newark Theatre. The newspaper artist made drawings of Wallace Reid, Rodolph Valentino, Thomas Meighan, Jack Holt, Gloria Swanson, Betty Compson, and Agnes Ayres. These were blocked off and cut up, then rearranged to form an interesting puzzle. Fifteen thousand replies were said to have been received.

Elks Play Daddy

Although the Mason City, Iowa, lodge of the B. P. O. E. got the credit for it, the Palace Theatre was host to 500 children at a special performance of The Bachelor Daddy.

Manager Ralph Erickson and John J. Friedl, Paramount exploiteer, negotiated a tie-up whereby each Elk volunteered to play "Bachelor Daddy" to five kids.

A local ice-cream factory furnished eats to the party free. The factory considered it the best advertising in the world, for when you get a solid group like the Elks feeling kindly toward your product, the sales are going to climb.

One of the best reactions was the front page story of the Globe Gazette and Daily Times, in which both The Bachelor Daddy, Paramount, and the Palace Theater were mentioned. This paper, with the tripartite name, has the reputation of being the hardest boiled daily in Iowa.

Laugh Stunt

When George Schade, owner and manager of the Sandusky Theatre bearing his name, played Pay Day, the patrons in front of the theatre were amazed by the robust, merry individual who emerged from the theatre and laughed himself sick over the memory of the picture he had just seen. There was no escaping that implication, for he looked back inside the doorway repeatedly.

From the patrons inside it was gleaned that he had practically convulsed the show with his irrepressible laughter. From the very first flicker the film caught his fancy, and his uproarious torrents of mirth flooded the house.

It's always easier to break into laughter when someone else starts the convulsion, isn't it?

That's what Schade thought, so he planted this man Pietschman in the theatre as a professional laugh drawer. Pietschman holds the record for the biggest, most continuous and natural guffaw in the State of Ohio.

Gives Them a Thrill

Sometime sleep walkers do funny things and some times they do dangerous things, so Manager Ollie Brownlee capitalized this latter trait in advertising The Sleep Walker in the Palace Theatre at Muskogee, Oklahoma.

He had a man wearing a wig and dressed in a woman's nightie carry a candle and walk along the top edge of a six-story building across the street from the Palace. A spot light, borrowed from an electrical shop, was placed on the sidewalk in front of the theatre and played upon the figure strolling so unconcernedly like Harold Lloyd in some of his wild stunts. It was the most excitement Muskogee has had in a long time.

A strong rope was fastened around the man's waist and concealed beneath the nightgown. He couldn't have fallen if he had tried.

A good-looking bed was borrowed from a furniture company, made up ready for occupancy and placed in the lobby. It was placarded "Waiting for the Sleep Walker to return."

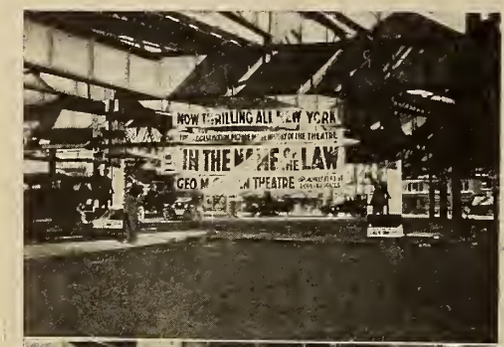
For summertime appeal the Rivoli Theatre, Columbia, S. C., selected this make-up for the showing of First National's "One Arabian Night." A 24-sheet of Pola Negri surmounted the marquise and the front of the house was done over with a cardboard scenic drop carrying a setting that suggested the Nile; elliptical moon, mosques, palm trees, desert and all.

Blare and Fanfare

Designing the Stunt to Make Them Look and Listen

Brass Banding the show, literally and figuratively is the mark of showmanship —it always has been—and the street stunt is one of the mainstays thereof. Above is a circus idea used by Pantages' Theatre, Minneapolis, and the Tower, St. Paul, for Paramount's "Fool's Paradise." Boys dressed as clowns traveled on Pogo-sticks behind a brass band. Below: The Astoria Theatre, Astoria, L. I., sent out a Herald, in Victorian costume, mounted on a Ford liberally bannered for First National's "Smilin' Through."

Telling N. Y. About "In the Name of the Law"



Just how completely the F. B. O. told all New York about In the Name of the Law, may be judged by this group of photographs.

The campaign included among other things, four bus-loads of newsies who distributed a special newspaper issued by R-C; a banner, visible for a quarter of a mile, at the Long Island end of the Queensboro Bridge; "Inquiry Reporters" who asked questions about In the Name of the Law; a sign, twenty feet by thirty, at Forty-third Street and Broadway; and a scene-taking stunt.

Edges in on Town's Best Story

Bernard J. Satz Links Up His Theatre with Famous Alligator of Dismal Swamp

Appropriating to the advantage of his own theatre an event branded by the Boston Post as "the season's best hot weather story," is the neat accomplishment which goes to the credit of Bernard J. Satz, manager of the Casino Theatre, Ware, Mass.

The story in question told of an alligator that roamed the precincts of Dismal Swamp near Ware. The ferocious creature had been seen repeatedly by people living in the vicinity of the town and these alligator allegations had come from so many and so reliable sources that Boston papers and the news publications of surrounding towns recorded daily the latest reports concerning the monster of Dismal Swamp.

Just when the story reached the peak of its popular interest there came a dramatic climax. Ware awoke one morning to find that the much discussed alligator was a reality. For there it was disporting in a bath tub in the lobby of the Casino Theatre.

The news of the capture was speeded to Boston and the other towns and Ware received a visitation of a host of newspaper men.

The investigators discovered that Satz had a brother in Florida. And further, that the day previous to the capture of the Dismal Swamp alligator, a crate, just about the size necessary to hold a creature of the proportions of the one in the bath tub at the Casino, had arrived in town.

The scribes were not positive in their statements but the Boston Post told all the details and stated that a confession was all that was necessary to prove that the solution of the alligator capture was in the fact that Ware now had two of the brutes, one in the lobby of the Casino Theatre and the other at large in Dismal Swamp.

"With an alligator for a bodyguard, Bernard Satz, motion picture man, stands forth to-day as one of the country's best showmen. He's a born press agent," says the two-column article in the Post.

The stunt proved itself one of the finest publicity mediums a showman could desire, for it directed the attention of the whole town to the theatre managed by Mr. Satz.

Discuss Clothes

Concord, N. H.—An essay contest on "What the Women Will Wear" has been started throughout the entire Black Circuit to advertise the Paramount-Cosmopolitan picture Beauty's Worth, starring Marion Davies.

A Marion Davies doll secured by the exhibitor at reasonable price from Cosmopolitan is the prize. The stunt has been put into effect by John P. McConville, Paramount exploiteer, Lee Rhodenizger and Percy Maxon, of the Black publicity staff. The three exploitation men came into Concord and tied up with the Patriot, the town's leading newspaper, which sponsored the contest. Nearly 100 essays were received.

Manager Charles J. Keane of the Brighton Beach Baths and the Rocking Chair Movies, New York, entertained the bathers and exploited Paramount's "Find the Woman" with this stunt. Five dolls were buried about one foot in the sand and signs placed within a few feet of them. The signs notified the bathers that all those who "found the woman" could have a pass to the performance by presenting the doll at the box office.

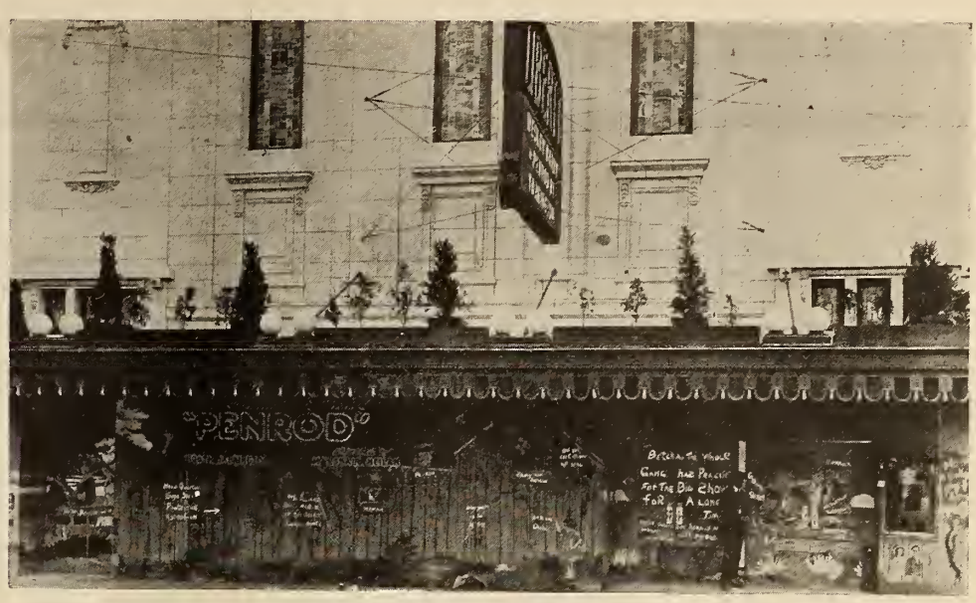
Builds His Own Sign

"Owners of small theatres whose financial means are limited need not feel bad when the theatre across the street installs a large changeable letter sign," says Harold F. Wendt, Manager of the Rivoli, Defiance, Ohio. "Roll Your Own" continues the energetic H. F.

"I couldn't see paying several hundred dollars for such a sign and still wanted one. In fact, I needed one to attract people from across the street and down the block.

"At a total cost of slightly less than five dollars I constructed one that will stack up with the best of them. It was made of wood and shaped like a box with the front side open. The inside was lined with asbestos and wired with a series of lamps. Grooves carry pieces of ordinary window glass measuring six by twelve, which were gone over with white-lead and stippled before dry so that a fine imitation of frosted glass resulted. The letters were then stenciled in and the background painted out with two coats of black paint.

"My sign carries two banks of twelve letters each. It's a pippin and attracts no little attention."



H. A. Gillespie, manager of the Liberty, Yakima, Wash., for the run of First National's "Penrod" used this special front, representing the board fence and sideboard house that formed the meeting grounds of the American Boys' Protective Association in the story. The campaign included free passes to kids who displayed the best signs for the "Penrod" opening at the Liberty.

Bride's Play

Manager J. B. Robertson turned the run of Bride's Play into a social event when he played it at the Palace Theater, Fort Smith, Ark. He issued 2000 invitations to the wedding of Miss Marion Davies and Sir Fergus Cassidy, Palace Theatre, Thursday and Friday.

In the lobby he had a huge white wedding cake, and right above it a large white wedding bell to which were fastened streamers of lilies of the valley.

In the street was a ballyhoo consisting of an old one-horse hack, on which was fastened a sign, "Just Married," and another, "Flappers rush in where widows fear to tread."

A prominent jeweler used a clever little church scene in his window display, with small dolls representing the bride, groom, and minister. Cards announced the significance of the display.

Cutouts were used to good advantage at the Majestic, Portland, Ore., for lobby display purposes in connection with Universal's "The Trap" and Baby Peggy in 'The Little Rascal." A head cutout from a 24-sheet made up the lobby stand and smaller figures pasted on cards used to decorate the display frame bills.

Various Angles Used

A newspaper teaser campaign as to who, what and where Sonny was, an essay contest on "The Best White Lie You Ever Told," a special matinee for Gold Star mothers arranged by Margaret Seddon, and a Mother and Son matinee, these are some of the exploitation features connected with the run of Sonny, Richard Barthelmess' latest First National picture at the Hope Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

Perhaps the most-talked-of stunt was the out-of-town mailing card, supplied patrons whose mothers lived away from Dallas. These were furnished in the foyer of the theatre with seven prominent club women acting as hostesses for the Mothers' thought drive. The post card was an invitation to the Mother to visit the Hope and see "Sonny" as the guest of the theatre. All the writer had to do was address and sign it and it was mailed by the house, the management figuring it was worth while to extend the courtesies to any mothers who would give the time and effort to make the trip to Dallas to see this picture. There was a lively response and untold publicity to this stunt.

The Savoy, San Francisco, effected a tie up with a Shriners' Convention, playing up the Oriental atmosphere of Pathe's "Isle of Zorda" in a lobby carrying many "Welcomes" and "Greetings" to the assembled Nobles. The picture was selected as the official photoplay of the convention and the Savoy management played up every angle that presented itself.

Advertising the Picture Theatre

By EDWARD L. HYMAN
Managing Director, Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre

Facts and Figures Assembled for the Benefit of Those Who Desire to Attain a Definite Degree of Certainty of Result As It Relates to Exploitation and Advertising.

WHILE advertising and its child—exploitation— is the display window of the motion picture theatre and is the one major force that may always be relied upon for increased attendance, if used judiciously, there is considerable "guess" involved and an immense amount of waste effort and cost that may be cut to the bone through a careful study of the individual theatre.

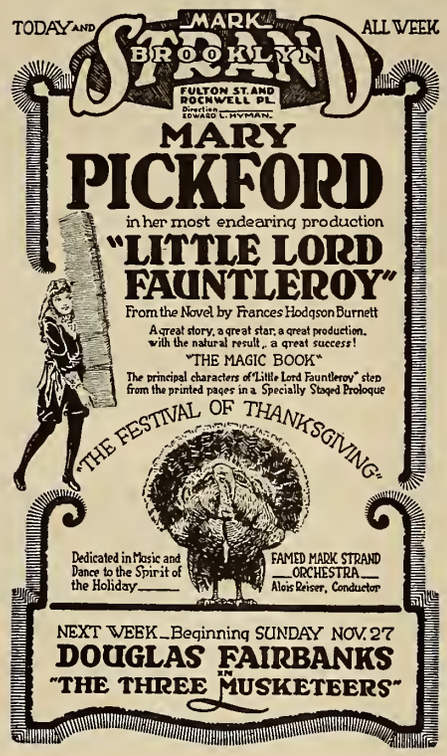
Advertising opens up a big gap for leakage in overhead if the policy employed is not based upon a more or less practical and scientific study of the specific problem. I will treat it generally pointing out a few of the mistakes that may be made easily.

The only type of theatre advertising that is successful is the advertising that fills seats. We will call it "box office" advertising.

It is my experience that advertising serves two ends. It serves as a show case for display of the theatre's wares. It also serves to create the psychological effect of building up the institutional idea, to make the theatre itself a greater force in the community. I mean that the advertising should be so gaged that the name and policy of the theatre will be continually exploited so that patrons will think of your theatre when they think of motion picture entertainment. I am convinced that hundreds of patrons of the Brooklyn Mark Strand do not come to the Strand only when certain stars are on the bill. I believe that many attend because the Strand as a reputable value-giving institution has been established in their confidence.

Advertising in newspapers, on sign boards, in house programs, in the lobby, all may be made to serve to build up this public confidence which is more powerful than the magnetism that any one individual star or play may possess. While we all are more or less at the mercy of our attractions when it comes to a good week or a poor one, no theatre need be the slave of its attractions, if a reputation has been established for a consistently good show. What I am trying to show, is, that all the boosting in the world won't have lasting value if the goods are shoddy.

Establishment of good will and the making of friends through giving value, service and courtesy, is a form of advertisement that many may neglect. I regard this type of advertising as second to newspaper advertising. Every time we send a patron satisfied from the theatre, or have done him a kindness or shown him a special little attention, we are making our own advertising because the mouth-to-mouth advertising he gives us will be extremely valuable. All such advertising costs is effort.



I have always urged dignity in theatre advertising of every form, altho I concede that this is regulated somewhat by the nature of community the theatre draws upon for its patronage. Dignified ads always command more attention than "circusy" flamboyant ads. I believe that theatre ads may be breezy and compelling without relinquishing dignity. In my mind the Knox ad always makes me think of good hats, the Huyler ad of reliable candy, and I want my theatre ads to cause the same though in the mind's eye of he who reads them.

Speaking specifically of a standard programe of advertising, I can merely outline for you the policy we follow at the Strand. While smaller theatres could not apply it they will be able to utilize it in miniature.

Of course newspaper advertising is regarded as our chief publicity asset. Hand-lettered simple forceful display ads in varying spaces are used in the local daily and Sunday newspapers. The text is as brief as possible with just enough illustration to stimulate the telling of the advertising story. We plan to make these ads as different as possible, so that they will stand out from the other ads on the page. Each ad carries the same Strand trademark so that those looking for the Strand ad will recognize it easily.

Special display advertising is regulated by the importance of attractions or events. The ads are made to express the atmosphere of holidays, seasons, patriotic ideas and other elements which lend to originality and warmth of interest.

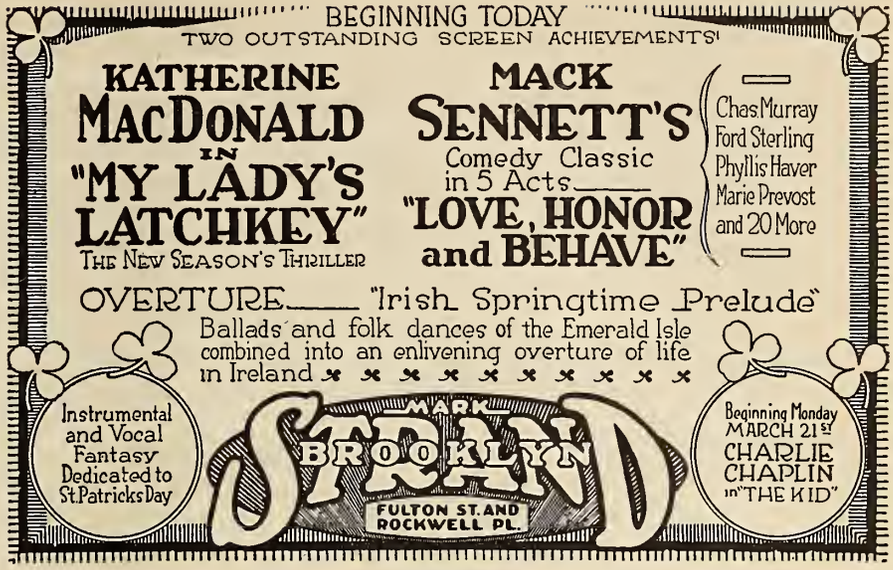
I also regard the reading notice invaluable and always strive to have our publicity department infuse news into the stories. If a story contains a high element of news value it is worth publishing and the editors will use them even if they do eminate from a commercial institution. The illustrated sections of newspapers are splendid avenues of publicity, especially the rotogravures, and every rotogravure editor is pleased to obtain artistic photographs which will dress up his section.

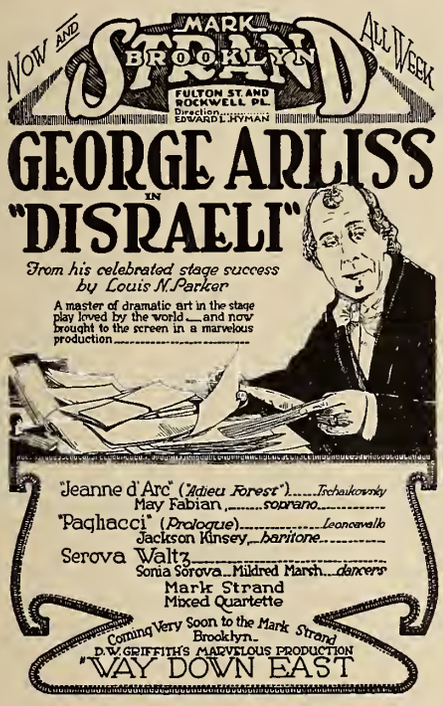
We have always made Strand music and novelties one of our advertising bulwarks. By boosting these parts of our program along with the motion picture bill we are always impressing upon the patron that he or she will always find a good bill of musical numbers and novelties in addition to the regular program. That is one reason why the Strand orchestra has been "plugged" so consistently.

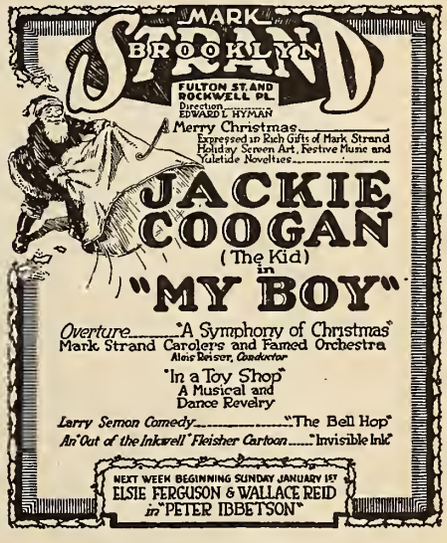
Illuminated 24-sheet boards visible for blocks and placed at advantageous locations where traffic is the greatest, have more than proved their value. We insist upon the choice locations and check up weekly. We would rather have none at all than poor locations.

I know of no better form of advertising than that of the dashboard cards on the front of street cars. However, in some cities and towns this is not obtainable. I rank it as a money-making advertising investment.

Dignity without that severe formality which often masquerades as dignity, is Mr. Hyman's aim in the design of his newspaper ads, and the contention that these displays "may be breezy and compelling without relinquishing dignity" is shown in practical demonstration in the examples of his copy reproduced here.



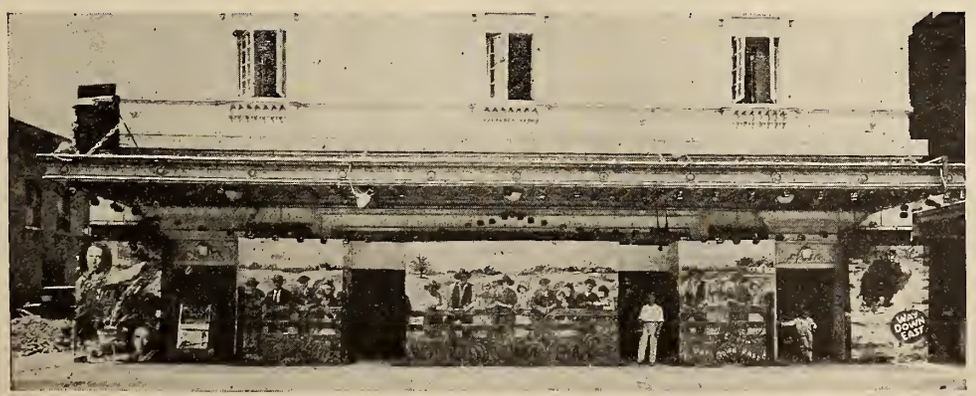




For inside theatre advertising we use film trailers instead of slides. Where this is not possible I would advise black-and-white slides. They are my preference over colored slides.

Another form of advertising coming attractions is the lobby stands and the electric signs over the marquis, etc. I do not believe in cluttering up lobbies, but always insist upon artistic frames and paper. We are able to use art work and oils for our lobby but where this may not be had it is possible to get good looking paper. This paper can be cut out and mounted. With a certain amount of "touching up" and "lettering around" splendid lobby illustrations may be created. This sort of exploitation is vital to every production and no picture is too big to make good use of it.

I never have favored the balyhoo type of advertising. However, it has its followers who swear by it. In my next article I shall endeavor to give a few ideas on exploitation and stunts publicity.



The half a million Saenger theatre at Monroe, La., made a bold and striking display of its entertainment fare when United Artists' "Way Down East" played there. Manager R. J. Manning extended the front of the house and pasted up 24-sheets in such fashion that the entrances served as magic portals through which patrons might enter into the rural atmosphere of the play immediately they left the street walk.

Bird of Wisdom Lobby

Manager Charles Sasseen of the Queen Theatre, Galveston, Texas, gave the Galvestonians a new wrinkle in the way of lobby fronts for Glass Houses. He had a large owl made especially for this picture (out of paper) and mounting it on a six sheet frame of beaver board, placed it in the center of the lobby.

The eyes of the owl were illuminated and arranged with a flasher so as to blink, and held in its beak the following message, "A wise bird once said 'People who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones.' But it didn't say 'People who live in amusement houses shouldn't throw fun—and that's what Viola Dana will do to you in the picture." The stunt onlv cost about five dollars.

Bob Lynch of the Metro Exchange in Philadelphia ballyhooed the streets of Quakertown for the Arrow serial, "Nan of the North" with a car so thoroughly saturated with atmosphere and titles of the picture that it would take expert testimony to prove it a Ford.

This idea is used at the Belmont Theatre, Belmont and Tremont Avenues, New York City, to dress up banners suspended from the marquise. On each end of the banner a cutout from one-sheets is pasted, the front and back being identical.

Front of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, dressed up for the engagement of the Selznick attraction, "Reported Missing." The life preservers hung on the outside columns served as frames for scenes of airplanes and motor boats, and a shadow box, showing a motor boat and plane race was used in the foyer. The arrangement was designed by Manager DeSales.

Entertains Mothers

Manager H. H. Johnson of the Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., played upon the appeal to mothers of veterans in his presentation of Sonny, but did so in a way that was distinctive from any of the other reports that have come to hand on this picture. He had ushers stationed at the entrances who asked every woman entering: "Are you the mother of an overseas veteran?"

Women answering in the affirmative were given a red carnation for identification. From the stage Mr. Johnson announced that at the conclusion of the performance a reception would be held for these mothers and their families. Patriotic melodies were rendered during a brief intermission and the curtain was raised on a stage decorated with flage and a huge punch bowl and service set in the center. The reception lived up to the best social traditions of Lafayette.

Buried Treasure

Five thousand bathing people at the Brighton Beach Baths near New York one Saturday were sold on the Paramount Picture Find the Woman, playing at the Rocking Chair Movies, by the buried treasure stunt conducted on the beach. Five dolls were buried about one foot in the sand and signs placed within a few feet of them.

These read:

"Find the Woman" who is buried within a few feet of this sand and when you do, present her at the box office of the Rocking Chair Movies and receive a free pass to see the Paramount picture "Find the Woman."

Manager Charles J. Keane of the Brighton Beach Baths and the Rocking Chair Movies figured that bathers are always looking for entertainment and so went in for the stunt which was sure to arouse the interest of everybody down at the beach.

The Rocking Chair Movies are unique in the history of the moving picture industry. They are owned and operated by the Brighton Beach Baths. The theatre boasts of the most magnificent decorations in the world for the stage is no more nor less than the Atlantic Ocean, and the ceiling the great Empyrean. Two thousand rocking chairs have been placed upon the beach. At one end a magnificent screen has been built. The other end has a projection booth large enough to accommodate three machines. There is a band stand where twenty-two musicians render appropriate scores, as an accompaniment.

New Song Tie-up

"Burning Sands" is the title of a new song and fox trot just published.

The song will be used in the exploitation of the forthcoming Paramount picture, Burning Sands. Records of the song will soon be issued by the leading record firms, and it promises to be one of the biggest dance number hits of the year.

Tie-ups are now being arranged through the co-operation of the music publishers and the Paramount exploitation staff and the song will be "plugged" in every town where the picture is booked.

The Nerve Center of the Theatre

DID you ever stop to think how dependent the modern motion picture theatre is upon its lighting controls?

A few years ago the average motion picture theatre had just two switches. Both were placed in the operator's booth, one controlled the electricity to the machine and the other the house lights. The house lights were either on or off. When the operator finished running a picture he slammed in the switch and, bing! the house lights were on like the bursting of a star shell.

Courtesy Mutual Electric & Machine Co.

The New Capitol Theatre, Detroit, is a large modern house with intricate lighting systems, easy control of which is made possible by the pre-set stage switchboard. Engineers say the lighting control in this theatre is a marvel

But that sort of thing doesn't do to-day. The house lights must be split into innumerable circuits, controlling the auditorium, lobby, box office, outside signs, etc. The lighting effects used in the modern motion picture theatre are often more intricate than those of the drama theatre and usually cover a wider range. We must have different circuits for blues, reds, ambers and whites, for proscenium arches, borders and foots. We must have dimmers and combinations of control that will give us daylight effects, moonlights, sunsets, sunlights, etc.

In the old days the operator controlled the only two switches that were needed when the Nickelodeon operated in an abandoned store. To-day, the electrical controls are operated by an experienced electrician who is an artist in the blending of colors.

Undoubtedly much of the credit for the advance in stage lighting can be given to the switchboard manufacturers. It is only by the constant striving for simplicity of operation by these manufacturers that it has been made possible for one electrician to achieve the effects we see on our stages.

The New Capitol Theatre in Detroit has a "Bull Dog" pre-set stage switchboard representing one of the latest developments in stage and auditorium control. The manufacturer says of this installation:

"It is a marvel of simplicity and operation. It is possible to set up the lighting effects of several scenes in advance without disturbing the scene in action. The small space required for this switchboard enables the operator to stand in one position and have absolute control of all the lighting effects of the stage and auditorium, which lighting effects he can change immediately from one scene to the next at the operation of only a few levers.

"This is accomplished by the rugged, ingenious, ratchet arrangement. This doesn't mean, of course, that the board is always operated in that manner. There are many times when an individual bank of lights must be thrown in circuit without disturbing the other lights. In fact this switchboard is so flexible in its operation that any desired lighting effect can be attained with the operation of one, two, three or four levers all within arm's length of one electrician."

The New Capitol Theatre at Detroit deserves a place with the finest motion picture theatres in the country and it would pay any motion picture man visiting Detroit to see this theatre and investigate its lighting controls.

How the Old Studebaker Was Changed

Above, the old seats; below the new.

From the Architect's Note Book

"The improvements in the Studebaker Theatre cost approximately $100,000.

"The remodeled house was reopened November 1, 1917. It took five weeks of actual work to complete the alterations during which time the house was not earning any revenue.

"In order to make the changes in this short time, three months of preparation were necessary. During this period the drawings were made, contracts let, material assembled, so that when once the premises were taken possession of, progress was rapid, in accordance with the organized plan of execution.

"Changes included the entire remodeling of the interior of the house, new stalls throughout, a revamping of sight lines and pitch to auditorium floor so that every seat became a good one with perfect vision, and a complete electrical installation both in the audience room and back of stage.

"New mattress spring seats were installed throughout. In conjunction with the American Seating Company's Theatre Engineering Department, 75 seats, before almost useless, were made available at a greatly increased scale, and 45 entirely new seats were added, without crowding, or sacrifice of comfort. It was a remarkably satisfactory job of reseating.

"The entire cost of the improvement was paid for by the additional rental over a period of three years after the house was reopened, this over and above the original earnings.

"Whereas it had been difficult to take care of large attractions before the house was remodeled, the Studebaker Theatre now competes with the new theatres only recently opened, both in its earning capacity and in the quality of the plays produced there."

PROJECTION

Spherical and Chromatic Aberration

Means of Correcting These Defects

Conducted by Wesley Trout

Spherical Aberration

By this is meant the unequal bending of the light rays in the different zones of a projection lens and the condensers. The rays passing through the outer zones of a spherical lens are proportionally more bent than those which pass nearer the axis. It results from this that the border rays cross the axis considerably nearer the lens than the central rays, hence, with parallel rays, instead of the one focus, there are then many foci drawn out in a line.

Except with a symmetrical, double convex lens the amount of spherical aberration depends upon which face of the lens receives the incident light, and whether the incident light is parallel, diverging or converging.

Now with plano-convex lenses, the spherical aberration with parallel incident light is less when the parallel light is incident on the convex face than when the lens is turned so that the light is incident upon the plane face.

Now to overcome this aberration, a concave lens is combined with a convex lens, and so proportioned that too great converging effect of the outer zone of the convex lens is just counterbalanced by the diverging effect of the concave lens in its various zones. A perfectly corrected, or aplanatic combination brings all the parallel rays to one focus.

Chromatic Aberration

By this is meant the separation of the images produced by different wave lengths of which the white light is composed.

Usually an objective for projection is corrected both for spherical and chromatic aberration, so that the image is correct in every way. This is accomplished by the combining a concave and convex lenses of the right form and composition. Sometimes also, as with apochromatic, microscope objectives, a natural mineral—fluorite—is introduced to make a more perfect correction than could be accomplished by use of artificial glass.

Questions and Answers

Pertaining to Projection and Electricity

A Few Important Hints

Be sure and store your carbons in a cool and dry place to secure the best results.

If you want to secure a good light be sure that your carbon lamp jaws are bright and clean and that your carbons make good contact in their holders.

Resistance of projection carbons decreases with an increase of temperature.

Be sure and examine the arc lamphouse leads each week and see that they make good electrical contact.

Projectionists having trouble with their condensers breaking should see that they don't fit too tight in their holders and that no cold drafts strike them. Be sure and never accept any condenser that has any color in same.

It pays to always have a spare belt on hand in case the one you are using breaks. This means that you should have one take-up and one motor-drive belt on hand at all times.

Be sure and never use any oil on your arc lamp. Use a good grade of graphite.

The resistance of most all metals increases with an increase of temperature.

Keep all oil off the friction discs.

Position of Projection Machine

The projection machine should be located so that its optic axis is perpendicular to the projection screen or the pictures will be badly distorted.

The projection room should be always large enough so that the machine or machines can be operated without any hinderance or loss of time from the lack of sufficient space. The projection room should be built so that it will have plenty of ventilation for the projectionist. Film boxes should be so placed that they can be easily reached. The room should be provided with incandescent lamps and extension cords to use while working around the machines doing repairing. All openings in the projection room should be provided with shutters that will close automatically in case of a fire. Each machine should be accessible from all sides.

The projection room is to be at all times kept like a battleship in time of war, with all decks cleared for action, nothing there which is not actually required. Should be kept clean at all times.

Projection in Denver

The writer on a recent visit to Denver, Col., found very good projection at most all the theatres. The Odgen Theatre had very pleasing screen results. Brother George Thomas was in charge of the projection at this theatre. For many years he served as business manager of local 230. The new Colorado Theatre secured wonderful screen results with late type projection equipment. All the theatres are doing a very pleasing business this summer. Local 230 reports a very pleasant season with most all the brothers employed. "Bud" Graham is in charge of the projection at the Empress Theatre. He is securing very good results with two late type Simplex Projectors.

Projection Lenses

Refraction

By refraction is meant the change in the direction of a ray of light in passing from one transparent medium into another.

The amount of this bending will depend upon two conditions:

1. The greater the angle of incidence of light, that is, the farther from the perpendicular or normal that the light strikes the surface, the greater will be the bending on entering the second medium.

2. The bending also depends upon the difference of density of the two transparent media. If the difference is great, the refraction will be great, and if the difference of density is small, the refraction will be proportionally small.

A Lens

By making one or two bounding surfaces of a transparent body curved, rays of light traversing the body are made to converge or diverge. Any transparent body having one or both of its opposite faces curved is called a lens. The curved surfaces are usually segments of spheres, as a spherical surface can be ground and polished more accurately than can any other.

The Principal Axis

The straight line passing through the centers of the two spheres of which the surfaces of a lens are segments is called the principal axis. Remember that this axis is perpendicular to both surfaces of the lens.

The Principal Focal Length

Principal focus or focal point of a projection lens system like a condenser or a projection objective, is the point on the principal axis where rays of light parallel with the principal axis before entering the projection lens combination, cross the principal axis after leaving the lens or objective. It is sometimes called the burning point by some projectionists.

New Music Roll Exchange

One of the greatest difficulties encountered by the exhibitors of the smaller towns is the music problem. Many of them have been in a quandary as to how they can provide a musical program for their theatres and how they can provide a suitable musical accompaniment while the picture program is being shown on their screens.

The New York Music Roll Exchange, operating at Columbus Circle, New York City, declares that they have solved this difficult problem for the showmen.

Nearly every exhibitor or proprietor of a theatre in a small town has a player piano that he depends on for his musical program. His difficulty is securing new and up-to-date music rolls, and not to have his theatre piled up with old, out-of-date ones. The New York Music Roll Exchange has inaugurated a plan whereby all the latest music roll hits can be rented from them, and not only that, but rolls that are in good condition can be exchanged for other rolls which their patrons have not heard. And the expense incurred by the exhibitor in securing an up-to-date musical program for his theatre amounts to a very small amount.

This plan has been tried out and proven to be extremely successful by the same company operating in San Francisco under the name of the Premier Music Company. Exhibitors on the West Coast were quick to realize the benefits of the unusual service and because of this, the New York Music Roll Exchange opened its headquarters in the East, to bring their unlimited service to the Eastern and Middle West showman.

Music Every Musician Should Know

"L'Arlesienne" Suite—Bizet

Georges Bizet (France, 1838-1875), the composer of "Carmen," and Alphonse Daudet, the French author, were commissioned to write a melodrama—that is, a play with incidental music. "L'Arlesienne" ("The Woman of Arles") was the result.

It is the story of a prosperous rustic enthralled by a fascinating but unscrupulous woman. Unable to break the siren's spell, the man commits suicide on the eve of his marriage to an innocent, charming girl.

Bizet's music has been brought together by the composer into an orchestral suite. The "Prelude" of the suite was the prelude to the drama. The "Minuetto" was the intermezzo between Acts II and III. The "Adagietto" (little adagio or slow movement) occurred during the reunion of two aged lovers who had remained faithful to their love through the years. The "Carillon" was the prelude to Act IV, which opens with the wedding preparations. Carillon was originally quadrillon—a chime of four bells.

Funeral March of a Marionette-Gounod

Gounod's piece is one of the best examples of humor, as the drollery comes from the clever humor put into the music itself. Even without titles and sub-titles, this march would be noticeably comic. In playing this number, the musician should make a strong contrast between legato and staccato. Let the music have a steady rhythm, and a little touch of Bohemian jollity. The end must die away very softly.

Using Large Organ in Small House

The Orpheum Theatre at Oshkosh, Wisconsin, shown here, is owned by Saxe Brothers, who also own theatres at Milwaukee, Kenosha and Marinette. The Orpheum is one of the most popular theatres of its size in Wisconsin, and very few of its thousand seats are ever empty during a performance.

The Orpheum shows pictures only, with special accompaniments played by John Dowling on a Barton Orchestral three manual, twenty-five stop organ, installed in organ room on stage. The Orpheum organ is exceptionally large for a theatre of this size and is a big factor in the success of the house. Organ specialties and song slides bring out the wonderful melody of the Barton Organ and are a great attraction. Saxe Brothers have equipped all of their theatres with Bartons.

The Barton Three-Manual Organ and its Player, in the Orpheum, Oshkosh

The Constant Appeal of Appropriate Music

The musical demands of lovers of the silent drama have become positive. The house where superior, varied music is found is the house of popularity.

For various reasons your features may not always be a success, but add the unfailing musical "atmosphere" of the Cremona Orchestra-Organ and the line at the box office becomes dependable.

No theatre organ orchestra has been developed to better meet the requirements. It is unsurpassed as a hand-played organ. It renders, besides, orchestrations selected or set to the film offering.

A double roll system permits playing by either solo roll or any standard player roll. It may be played with or without an operator. But best of all, the Cremona is not prohibitive in price to the smaller house.

Write for the whole Cremona story.

Building Notes

Iola, Kan., soon will have one of the most modern motion picture theatres in the state. E. V. Hyning of Iola has contracted with Ira D. Kelly of the same city for a ten-year lease on a structure to be erected by the latter. The new house will have a seating capacity of about 800.

The Victoria, Tamaqua, Pa., instead of running continuous performances, will give two in the afternoon and two at night.

Allentown business men have threatened a tax-paying strike because the new Peoples Theatre on North Seventh Street plans to occupy all the land on its site. This will make the front jut out past other business places. The Council has been notified if this is allowed the other business interests won't pay taxes. The Council has ruled that a man dare do with his land what he wishes as long as there is no menace to public health or safety in the project.

The Majestic, Catasauqua, Pa., is in the hands of the decorators this month. In addition, new ventilating apparatus is to be installed. The plans call for completion before the summer is far advanced, and a special drive on the coolness of the place is contemplated to win summer business.

Because of the mine strike hitting business, the Lyric Theatre at Minersville is running shows only three days a week.

Architect Benjamin R. Stephens of Tamaqua, Pa., has just finished the plans for the new Family Theatre at Mahanoy City. The playhouse takes the place of the old Family, owned by John Hersker. It will seat 1700 persons, with a stage big enough for road shows. Work will be started at once and the first performance will be on Thanksgiving Day.

Associated Theatres, Inc., is the name of the new company formed to operate a chain of houses in western New York. Officers of the organization are: Harold P. Dygert, president and general manager; William J. MacFarlane, mayor of Canandaigua, vice-president and assistant manager; Harold L. Brainerd, M. J. Taylor, Lester H. Hoffman, Messrs. Dygert and MacFarlane, board of directors. The company now controls the Rialto, East Rochester; Rivoli, Fairport; Opera House, Granite; Crescent, Newark; Playhouse and Liberty, Canandaigua. It is understood that an option has been obtained on the Park Theatre in Bath, N. Y.

A. C. Hayman, president of the Cataract Theatre Corporation of Niagara Falls, N. Y., has erected a novel electric sign on the boulevard leading from Buffalo to Niagara Falls which includes the name of the Cataract Theatre in large electric bulbs and a cataract falling over the name, also in incandescent lights.

This shutter index is made of aluminum 1¾ in. by 2½ in. and is made to match the name plate as closely as possible. It is mounted on the camera under the name plate, in the same way the plate is put on. It will save a great deal of time in figuring exposure and will be found accurate. Any stamp and stencil store will gladly put other customers' work aside for a day or two and make this for you for about a dollar. Illustration No. 1 shows the plate mounted on the camera and also shows brass escutcheon pins in the door to mark a closed shutter. Illustration No. 2 shows the sunshade and the method of mounting, also the slotted bars on the front of the Irid to hold a 3-in. filter. Illustration No. 3 shows a device to lock the camera in center on the tripod. If you own a DeBrie tripod you probably often find it necessary to turn the camera around in order to tilt down. By putting this spring bolt on the tripod and inserting two brass plugs in the proper place in the bottom of the camera, your camera will always snap into center when you turn it around. Stand over your mechanic with a club when having this work done.

Fig. 1

Illustration No. 4 shows Bakelite pressure plate, with bars. Take out the regular pressure plate and attempt to explain to mechanic just what you want done. After he tells you for the third time that "it can't be done," offer to do it yourself, and then stand beside him with club as advised in Fig. 3. He will probably want to give up the job after he has chipped two or three, but keep him at it until all the tools on the miller are dull. When you get it finished you will have a pressure plate that will reduce the chances of static and will not throw any "back reflection." When it is finished and fitted take it to a dentist and have it polished.

Illustration No. 5 is an alleged photograph of the best focusing card I have ever seen. Hunt up a piece of heavy cardboard and cut it so that it will fit the case lying on top of the camera. Cover this with black velvet and sew tape on one side and lace on the other. If you are not handy with a needle, bring it out here and I will have my girl sew it for you. Cameramen are cautioned that when they approach the young lady in the store for the lace they will be questioned as to what they want it for. Don't try to explain. Tell her you want it for your sister's ———; tell her you want it for your sister and you don't know what she wants it for.

And now I can almost hear some brother saying, "All this dope may be all right, but what about stopping that leak?" I stopped mine as explained below. Your's may require different methods.

Put a NEW rubber washer on the shutter, change the knob inside. Take the rubber out of a lead pencil, bore a small hole through the center and force focussing rod through it and jamb rubber up to tube where rod comes through. Cut a piece of surgeon's rubber sheeting (or thin felt), and after making a slit down the center fit it under the metal that holds focus scale bar. And if you are working in a cold country don't forget that Nye watch oil.

Tony Gaudio, A. S. C., is filming "East Is West," the new J. W. Schenck production starring Constance Talmadge. Production began May 16, and will continue until July. In the picture Mr. Gaudio will shoot a lot of unusual Chinese atmosphere.

Gammage and His Frog

E. R. Gammage, Fox News man of Westlake, La., has a pet bull frog that has attracted much attention. The frog is shown in the illustration. Gammage has trained this bull to smoke and cut capers on the screen and so successful was his frog's first appearance on celluloid that Gammage is training fleas and contemplates taking 500 feet of a snipe bagging party, a stunt ever popular down Louisiana way. To train frogs right Gammage says:

"You must first get their confidence and after you've gotten all of that you must make them understand. After that it's easy. The first hundred years are spent in gaining their confidence. Try it, boys; try it."

ALBANY

CLINTON SQUARE

"RECKLESS YOUTH," Elaine Hammerstein. "SHADOWS OF THE SEA," Conway Tearle (Selznick). These two features ran the entire week without extra exploitation and packed the house in spite of hot weather and a strike.

Short Subjects.—Buster Keaton in "Neighbors."

Double features to be continued throughout summer in fighting hot weather depression.

MARK STRAND

"FOR THE DEFENSE," Ethel Clayton (Paramount). First three days. Fair business. No extra exploitation. "SONNY," Richard Barthelmess, last three days. Good business.

Short Subjects.—Topical Review; scenic "The New and Unknown Switzerland" and "Toonerville" comedy.

ALLENTOWN, PA.

COLONIAL

"A QUESTION OF HONOR," Anita Stewart (First National). Average business.

Exploitation.—Played up well with lobby stills and plenty of newspaper space. Mats used in advertising to large extent. Might have made better run if weather conditions had been bad but outdoors things were simply ideal and a picture had to be pretty good to pack 'em in.

HIPPODROME

"SHADOWS OF THE SEA," Conway Tearle (Selznick). Average business. Parks and river bathing and picnics holding the spotlight to the detriment of the indoor playhouses.

Exploitation.—Not much effort spent on boosting the feature which made its bow on its own merits.

STRAND

"REPORTED MISSING," Owen Moore (Goldwyn). Great business. Good enough to last for whole week's run in this playhouse.

ASHEVILLE, N. C.

IMPERIAL

"ACROSS THE BORDER," Betty Compson (Paramount). Three days to very effective business. A very novel lobby display of a Far North scene, with fir trees and shack snow covered, attracted the crowds.

"THE WOMAN WHO WALKED ALONE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). Three-day run to very good business.

STRAND

"IS MATRIMONY A FAILURE?" All Star (Paramount). Only fair business on this one.

BETHLEHEM, PA.

LORENZ

"THE WORLDLY MADONNA," Clara Kimball Young. Good business. Pleased all who saw it.

SECOND HALF

"ACROSS THE CONTINENT," Wallace Reid (Paramount). Did good business considering ideal summer weather with open air parks in full blast.

PALACE

"THE CRIMSON CHALLENGE," Dorothy Dalton (Paramount). Fair business.

SECOND HALF

"RECKLESS YOUTH," Elaine Hammerstein (Selznick). Drew average sized audiences, meeting summer records.

LEHIGH ORPHEUM

"THE STRENGTH OF THE PINES," William Russell. Business fair. Russell always a good attraction but there was a falling off. Because there is too much on the go here in summer for the resident population and the summer brings suspension of the several colleges and prep schools whose students are liberal patrons of the theatres.

BOSTON

SHAWMUT

FIRST HALF

"EXPERIENCE," Richard Barthelmess (Famous Players). Went fairly well.

"WHEN EAST COMES WEST," Franklin Farnum (Pioneer). A very good picture that called forth a lot of enthusiasm. No mistake for a neighborhood house.

Exploitation.—Big lobby spread in cool colors during run and for advance week. Window cards and posters in elevated and subway stations.

Short Subjects.—"A Pair of Queens," Larry Semon Comedy, and "Go Get 'Em Hutch," Pathe serial. Very good drawing show on the whole.

SECOND HALF

"A VIRGIN'S PARADISE," Pearl White (Fox Special).

"THE HEART SPECIALIST," Mary Miles Minter (Realart). Was well liked throughout run.

Exploitation.—Same.

Short Subjects.—"Fair Enough," Educational Comedy. Fable. "The Avenging Arrow," serial.

BUFFALO

SHEA'S HIPPODROME

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). Tom Meighan may always be depended upon to put over most any picture at the Hipp. The trolley strike continues to hurt business. The warm weather is another contributing factor in smaller box office receipts.

Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising, lobby display, window cards, billboards.

Short Subjects.—"Safe in the Safe," a Sunshine comedy, Courier Camera and Hippodrome Review.

"BEAUTY'S WORTH," Marion Davies (Paramount). This picture attracted very satisfactory business for this time of year.

LOEW'S STATE

"THE HEART SPECIALIST," Mary Miles Minter (Paramount-Realart). Business fair. Women like Mary and this fact bolstered up the matinee receipts.

Exploitation.—Lobby and marque electric displays, window cards and billboards.

Short Subjects.—"The Accuser," an Educational comedy, Mutt and Jeff cartoon, and Pathe News.

LAFAYETTE SQUARE

"DETERMINATION," Special Cast (U. S. Picture Corp.). In spite of warm weather, trolley strike, etc., they continue to fill up the large auditorium every night. C. Sharpe-Minor, the organist, is one of the big causes of this.

Exploitation.—Enlarged ads in newspapers, window cards, big electric display on front of building.

Short Subjects.—"Snub" Pollard comedy, Burlingame adventure picture, Courier Camera, showing local events, and Fox News.

MARK-STRAND

"THE FATAL MARRIAGE," Lillian Gish and Wallace Reid (Film Booking Offices). This revival went over to satisfactory business. D. W. Griffith and the two stars were played up big in the ads and this turned the trick.

Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising, lobby display and window cards.

Short Subjects.—"Torchy a la Carte," comedy; "Rex Beach Week End," a Sport Pictorial, and Kinograms.

"THE ISLE OF ZORDA," Special Cast (Pathe). (Second Half). Expecting something different, Strand-goers were not disappointed in this one. Business was good.

PALACE

"THE DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL," Mae Murray (Universal). Attracted fair business for a week run.

SHEA'S NORTH PARK

"THE LEADING CITIZEN," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). Good. Business continues satisfactory at this first run neighborhood theater. The trolley strike is helping the community houses.

"THE RULING PASSION," George Arliss (United Artists). With the trolley strike keeping most folks home, the neighborhood houses benefited and this theatre did very fine business. A large auto trade was noted.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

IMPERIAL

"THE GOOD PROVIDER" (Paramount). Very good business on a three-day run.

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN" (Paramount). Fair business for three days.

BROADWAY

"A VIRGIN PARADISE," Pearl White (Fox). Three days to fair business.

"THE ROUGH DIAMOND," Tom Mix (Fox). Three days to fair business.

CHICAGO

CHICAGO

"THE STORM," House Peters (Universal). Played to full houses the entire week.

CASTLE

"A WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE," Fay Compton (Selznick). Business was very good.

ROSE

"FOR BIG STAKES," Tom Mix (Fox). Mix is a big favorite with the patrons of this theatre and business was exceptionally good. Holding it over for a second week.

RANDOLPH

"ALWAYS THE WOMAN," Betty Compson (Goldwyn). Business was fair.

STATE-LAKE

"THE UNDERSTUDY," Doris May (Robertson-Cole). Crowded houses all week.

CLEVELAND

STILLMAN

"THE MAN FROM HOME," James Kirkwood (Paramount). Business good.

Exploitation.—An attractive lobby display of photos and lithos, street car cards and newspaper ads were used for a full week before the engagement and the picture lived up to all the nice things said about it in the papers.

Short Subjects.—Johnny Hines in "Torchy Steps Out" was the comedy featured.

ALLEN

"STARDUST," Hope Hampton (First National). Business good.

Short Subjects.—"How to Grow Thin" and a news weekly.

STATE

"ONE CLEAR CALL," Milton Sills, Henry Walthall and Claire Windsor (First National). Business fair.

Exploitation.—An attractive lobby, street car cards and advance newspaper advertising were used on this picture.

Short Subjects.—A Christie comedy, "Spooks," News Weekly and a prologue, "The Old Swimmin' Hole."

PARK AND MALL

"FOR THE DEFENSE," Ethel Clayton (Paramount). This picture played three days at these theatres to fair business.

Short Subjects.—"Gymnasium Jim," a Sennett comedy.

Exploitation.—Due to two changes a week at these theatres, not much by way of exploitation is effected.

"THE INFIDEL," Katherine Macdonald (First National).

"DON'T WRITE LETTERS," Gareth Hughes (Metro). Fair business on this double feature program.

COLUMBIA, S. C.

LESTER'S RIVOLI

"KISSES," Alice Lake (Metro). Very good business. Belmont Vocal Quartette as an extra attraction.

IDEAL

"THROUGH A LOOKING GLASS," May McAvoy (Paramount). Two days to fair business.

HARTFORD

PRINCESS

"GOD'S CRUCIBLE" (Hodkinson). In spite of terriffic and oppressive heat of first four days, this picture drew fairly well. Patrons expressed themselves pleased with it.

Short Subjects.—"Playing with Fire," Gladys Walton (Universal), was used as short subject.

Exploitation.—Ordinary newspaper advertising with extra space in Sunday paper.

STRAND

"DESTINY'S ISLE" (American Releasing Corporation), with William P. S. Earle. Also "OTHER WOMAN'S CLOTHES," May McAvoy (Paramount). Business very fair, although many are away at the seashore.

"NANOOK OF THE NORTH," Eskimo cast (second half) (Pathe). This proved a great hot weather attraction. Everybody seemed to like it and the title as well as picture itself helped audiences to forget the heat.

EMPIRE

"BING BANG BOOM," David Butler (Western Pictures Exploitation Co.). Old General Humidity played opposition to this feature, but audiences enjoyed the picture.

Short Subjects. — Larry Semon in "Passing the Buck" helped.

"THE OATH," Miriam Cooper (second half) (First National). Business just fair.

Short Subjects.—Jack Hoxie in "Sparks of Flint (Arrow). Hoxie always hits the bullseye here. "Torchy Takes a Chance" (Educational) used for comedy and registered.

INDIANAPOLIS

OHIO

"THE NIGHT ROSE," Lon Chaney (Goldwyn), and Charles Chaplin in "SHOULDER ARMS" (First National). Business opened better than the average for the last few weeks. Program pleased.

CIRCLE

"A QUESTION OF HONOR," Anita Stewart (First National), and "GOING STRAIGHT," one of Mary Pickford's early classics (Universal). Pleased the usual audiences.

APOLLO

"THE ORDEAL," Agnes Ayres (Paramount). Played to comfortably filled houses.

Short Subject.—"Monkey Shines."

COLONIAL

"THE SEA LION," Hobart Bosworth (First National). Pleased large hot weather audiences.

Short Subjects.—Snub Pollard comedy.

NEWMAN

"ONE CLEAR CALL," special cast (First National). A mighty hot week, but this one held its own and played to good houses.

Current Events.—Newman News and Views.

Exploitation.—The line, "A drama you don't just watch—you actually live through each moment," was played up big in newspaper copy. Also billboard and lobby display, featuring members of the cast.

LIBERTY

"YELLOW MEN AND GOLD," special cast (Goldwyn). The title alone helped attract a good week's attendance. Patrons liked the picture.

Short Subjects.—"The Non-Skid Kid," comedy, Pathe News, current events, and "Nanook of the North."

Exploitation.—Scene of palm trees and sailing boats, with an Oriental background featured in Sunday newspaper space. Also lobby display and billboard space.

ROYAL

"STAR DUST," Hope Hampton (First National). The exploitation aided in drawing good crowds all week.

Short Subjects.—"A Pair of Kings," Larry Semon comedy, and Royal Screen Magazine, current events.

Exploitation. — Photographs of Hope Hampton were given away free to all patrons who signed a coupon at the box office, thus providing an excellent mailing list. The fact that the picture is from Fannie Hurst's novel was played up in billboard and lobby display.

TWELFTH STREET

"THE MAN UNCONQUERABLE," Jack Holt (Paramount). This one drew well for a week's run.

Short Subjects.—"Two Men," drama; Toonerville Trolley Comedy and Screen Magazine, current events.

Exploitation.—Photographs and name of Jack Holt played up in newspaper, billboard and lobby display space.

LOS ANGELES

GRAUMAN'S RIALTO

"NICE PEOPLE" (Paramount). All star In the second week doing capacity business in spite of the heat.

Exploitation.—The average amount of advertising was used and a number of exploitation stunts.

Short Subjects.—Pathe Weekly, Burland at the Wurlitzer playing, "Georgette," "Three O'clock in the Morning" and "Dancing Fool," accompanied by three singers. Novelty act, Atmospheric Prologue.

GRAUMAN'S MILLION DOLLAR

"OUR LEADING CITIZEN," Thomas Meighan (Paramount). In the second week the feature drew a big house. All four daily shows during the week were crowded.

Exploitation.—Usual advertising.

Short Subjects.— Grauman's Greater Symphony Orchestra, Urban Movie Chat, Pathe Weekly, Murtagh at the Wurlitzer playing his own number, "The Memory Test," Grauman's World Visions, 20 Minutes in Gloria Swanson's home with song and dance.

SYMPHONY

"GRANDMA'S BOY," Harold Lloyd. (Pathe). In the ninth week and going strong. The end is not in sight by a long way.

Exploitation.—The house has used 100 24 sheets on the boards, changing the paper at the end of the fifth week. The newspaper advertising runs 12 inches in the four dailies with 40 inches in the Saturday and Sunday papers. There has not been any exploitation during the run.

HIPPODROME

"LIVING LIES," Edmund Lowe. All star release. business good. Five inch insert in the dailies, 1000 tack cards with feature advertised over the vaudeville bill, in all weekly advertising. No billboards.

"SHOULD A WIFE WORK?" Edith Stockton. All star. Proved very good drawing card. The critics gave it good reviews.

Exploitation.—Average advertising.

HILLSTREET

"RECEIVED PAYMENT," Corinne Griffith (Vitagraph). Pleased and was fair drawing card. No exploitation.

LOEW STATE

"SHACKLES OF GOLD," William Farnum (Fox). The feature drew very good, the star is a great favorite and always receives the best criticisms from the dramatic reviewers.

Exploitation. — The picture received most of the daily advertising space over the vaudeville bill.

CALIFORNIA

"THE ORDEAL," Agnes Ayres and Conrad Nagel (Paramount). Good business; the evenings were better than the matinees.

Short Subjects.—Bruce Scenic, "My Country," Goldwyn-Examiner Screen Test, Aesops Fables, "Crimes in a Big City," California Topical Review and Magazine, Topics of the Day.

KINEMA

"NANOOK OF THE NORTH" (Pathe). In the second week, did excellent business. All the town was talking about the wonderful picture.

Exploitation. — The daily advertising was doubled and 50 extra 24 sheets were used on the boards. The feature received very favorable reviews and excellent news stories.

Short Subjects.—Overture, Novelty, a Prizma Musical Novelty, Horton at the Morton, Mermaid-Jack White Comedy, "Rapid Fire," Kinema Pictorial Review, a Surprise Film Jewel.

MISSION

"THE STORM," all star cast (Universal). In the second week and getting its share of business. The heat has hurt the attendance some.

Exploitation. — 50 24 sheets, 2000 2 sheets and $1,800 spent in advertising space in the dailies the first week, with $1,100 the second week of the run.

SUPERBA

"HER NIGHT OF NIGHTS," Marie Prevost (Universal). The matinees were good but the evenings fell off some.

Exploitation.— The daily advertising was increased and the lobby of the theatre was the most attractive in town. The heat has been very intense this week and hundreds are going to the seashore instead of the theatres.

Short Subjects.—Reg. Denny in "Plain Grit," International News, Brownie in "Live Wires."

TALLY'S BROADWAY

"SCIENCE OF GOD." (Pre-release by the producer, Clarence H. Gildert). Ran three weeks to excellent business.

Exploitation.—12 inches in the dailies with 30 inches in the Saturday and Sunday papers. 50 24 sheets were used on the boards.

MILWAUKEE

ALHAMBRA

"THE MAN UNCONQUERABLE," with Jack Holt and Sylvia Breamer (Paramount). Business fine. Weather favorable and star good box office attraction.

Short Subjects.—Christie comedy featuring Dorothy Devore; Literary Digest Topics of the Day; Pathe news reels and Industrial reels.

BUTTERFLY

"THE GRAY DAWN," with Claire Adams. Fair business. Newspaper critics favorable.

Short Subjects.—Just Neighbors, a release with Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and Snub Pollard; Selznick news reels.

GARDEN

"THE BEAUTY SHOP," with Raymond Hitchcock, Louise Fazenda, Fairbanks Twins and others (Paramount). Excellent business. Audience and newspaper critics favorably impressed.

Exploitation.—Exceptional amount of advertising in newspapers, street car posters and lobby.

Short Subjects.—Christie comedy featuring Neal Burns and Vera Steadman; Fox news reels and Industrial news reels.

MERRILL

"MR. BARNES OF NEW YORK," with Tom Moore and Naomi Childers (Goldwyn). Good business. Mr. Moore popular in Milwaukee.

Short Subjects.—Tony Sarg almanac, International news reels and Goldwyn sport news.

SAXE'S RIALTO

"ALL FOR A WOMAN" (First National) and "QUEENIE," with Shirley Mason (Fox). Good business. Combination a good one.

Short Subjects.—Selznick news reels and fashion hints.

NORFOLK, VA.

GRANBY

"THE BEAUTY SHOP," Marion Davies (Paramount). Fair business for three days.

"BACK PAY," (Paramount). Fair business for three day run.

WELLS

"FOR THE DEFENSE," Ethel Clayton (Paramount). A week to good business.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

EMPRESS

"THE CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK," Kathryn McGuire and George O'Hara (First National). The title proved attractive, and the business was good for an entire week.

Short Subjects: Pathe News, Sunshine Comedy.

CRITERION

"MISSING HUSBANDS," Special Cast (Metro). All pleased that saw it. Nice crowds and all came out well pleased.

Short Subjects: Fox Comedy, Furman & Osmith, vaudeville act.

"KISSES," Alice Lake (Metro). The picture enjoyed good business.

Exploitation: Usual newspaper advertising, window cards and lobby display.

RIALTO

"THE SILENT VOW," Edith Johnson and William Duncan (Vitagraph). This picture pleased. Good business.

Short Subjects: Mack Sennett's "Hard Knocks and Love Taps."

"HICKVILLE TO BROADWAY," Eileen Percy (Fox). Plenty of good comments on this one. Patrons well pleased.

BROADWAY

"FRENCH HEELS," Irene Castle (Hodkinson). Not only pleased but got the business.

"FIGHTING BACK," William Desmond (Enterprise Dist. Corp.). Everyone was pleased with this.

NEW FOLLY

"MAN-WOMAN-MARRIAGE," Dorothy Phillips (First National). Rainy weather did not prevent large crowds from attending.

Short Subjects: Harold Lloyd in "Next Isle Over."

RICHMOND, VA.

BLUEBIRD

"OUT OF THE SILENT NORTH," Frank Mayo (Universal). Did good business.

Exploitation: Used large newspaper space.

BROADWAY

"PENROD," Wesley Barry (First National). An entire week to good business.

BIJOU

"OTHER WOMEN'S CLOTHES," (Hodkinson). Three days to good business.

Short Subjects: Buster Keaton in "My Wife's Relations," helped to get them in.

"FREE AIR," (Hodkinson). Three days to good business.

Short Subjects: Larry Semon in "A Pair of Kings" as an extra attraction.

COLONIAL

"THE MAN UNCONQUERABLE," Jack Holt (Paramount). Three days to fair business.

"A STAGE ROMANCE," William Farnum (Fox). Good for a three day run here and business very satisfactory.

SCRANTON, PA.

"THE GRIM COMEDIAN," Jack Holt (Goldwyn). With mines idle now for fourteenth week, business was cut some but this film proved good. Would have cleaned up under normal conditions. Picture was boomed as main billing of week and was responsible for lots of favorable comment.

STRAND

"THE BRIDE'S PLAY," Marion Davies (Cosmopolitan-Paramount). Great business. Coal miners, many of Irish descent and with most people not of that nationality succumbing to the appeal of a picture with the Cosmopolitan label.

Exploitation.—Novelty of play was one thing that exploitation dwelt upon. Advertising went in for wedding adages and customs but there were no street ballyhoos.

NEW STATE

"TWO MINUTES TO GO," Charles Ray (First National). Average business. People liked picture but with the thermometer vamping the 90 mark patrons were more interested in lawn tennis, golf and baseball.

SEATTLE, WASH.

LIBERTY

"MAN UNCONQUERABLE" (First half), Jack Holt (Paramount). Business good.

Exploitation.—Regular newspaper, billboard and lobby display, window cards.

Short Subjects.—"A Penny Reward," Campbell comedy, Pathe scenic, Liberty News.

"FOR THE DEFENSE" (last half), Ethel Clayton (Paramount). Average audiences.

Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising, window cards and lobby.

Short Subjects.—"Kiss and Make Up," Christie comedy, Liberty News, Scenic.

BLUE MOUSE

"THE GIRL FROM PORCUPINE," Faire Binney (Arrow). Average patronage.

Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising, lobby display.

Short Subjects.—"Safe in a Safe" comedy, Fox News.

COLUMBIA

"THE DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL," Mae Murray (Universal). Splendid; patronage heavy.

Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising, billboards and attractive lobby display.

Short Subjects.—"20 Minutes to Go," Lee Moran comedy, International News, special attraction, "The Mirror," photographic review of past historical events since advent of moving pictures, with special musical setting.

STRAND

"MISSING HUSBANDS" (first half), (Metro). Parisian cast. Business good.

Exploitation.—Regular newspaper space, window cards and lobby attractive in foreign effects and illuminated frames.

Short Subjects.—"O Promise Me," Christie comedy, Kinograms, "Combating the Elements."

"BEAUTY'S WORTH" (last half), Marion Davies (Paramount). Went well.

Exploitation.—Newspaper, lobby and window cards.

Short Subjects.—"One Stormy Night," Christie comedy, Scenic, Kinograms.

WINTER GARDEN

"MAN'S LAW AND GOD'S," Jack Livingston (American Releasing). Business excellent.

Exploitation.—Newspaper advertising and lobby trim.

Short Subjects.—"The Man Haters," Pathe comedy, International News, Four Melody Maids in popular selections.

"A PASTEBOARD CROWN" (last half) (Pathe). International News, Universal Star Comedy.

PALACE HIP

"POVERTY OF RICHES," Louise Lovely, Richard Dix (Goldwyn). Business excellent.

"THE SIMPLE LIFE," Larry Semon (Vitagraph). Both pictures well received.

WILKES-BARRE, PA.

SAVOY

"POLLY OF THE FOLLIES," Constance Talmadge (First National). Excellent attraction, appealing in every sense to the lover of a good picture, but little use in trying to make a killing in a town where the mine strike has made pay day a memory for thirteen weeks and where the railroaders have just walked out. Naturally business was just about average or a little less.

"THE CONQUERING POWER," Alice Terry and Rodolph Valentino (Metro). Good run for whole booking and much of this due to combination of stars and director's prestige. Picture went across on own momentum.

POLI

"BOY CRAZY," Doris May (F. B. O.). Vaudeville helped to put this over. No one knew much about film attraction and it did not seem to be featured in the publicity.

ORPHEUM

"THE MAN UNCONQUERABLE," Jack Holt (Paramount). Good offering, calculated to bring in big crowds. Orpheum did as well as can be expected in these bitter days of industrial strife on railroads and at mines.

"ORPHANS OF THE STORM," Lillian and Dorothy Gish (United Artists). First time in this section at popular prices. Made hit and did cleanup business.

CAPITOL

"A SMALL TOWN IDOL," Ben Turpin (First National). Comedy as main film attraction was happy thought. Booking was good idea, for the public picked this film for generous patronage and those who had the cash took in show.

WILMINGTON, N. C.

ROYAL

"WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME," (States Rights). Poor business on a three day run.

GRAND

"SMILIN' THROUGH," Norma Talmadge (First National). Three days to fair business.

FOR THE EXHIBITORS BOX-OFFICE

EDITED BY GEORGE T. PARDY

Destiny's Isle

American Releasing Corporation Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Margery Land May. Director, Wm. P. S. Earle. Cameraman, Wm. S. Adams. Running Time, Sixty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Lola Whitaker, Virginia Lee; Tom Proctor, Ward Crane; Florence Martin, Florence Billings; Arthur Randall, Arthur Housman; Judge Richard Proctor, George Fawcett; Lazus, Wm. Davidson; Dr. Whitaker, Mario Majeroni; Mrs. Pierpont, Ida Darling; Mr. Ripp, Albert Roccardi; Mammy, Pauline Dempsey.

Tom Proctor, in love with Florence Martin, his uncle's ward, sees his rival, Arthur Randall, embrace her and disappears. Florence and her guardian, Judge Proctor, are informed a few weeks later by a beach comber that Tom is in a girl's company on a lonely island, where he drifted with his motor boat after being disabled in a storm. They find him there with Lola Whitaker. The latter has nursed him to recovery when a wound on his forehead, received during the storm, had been dressed by her father, a doctor. The physician is absent on duty on another island. To allay unjust suspicions Tom declares that he has married Lola, and the two return to the mainland with the others. Florence, in a fit of jealousy, slips a diamond brooch belonging to one of her guardian's guests into Tom's pocket. When the loss is discovered all present are searched and the brooch discovered in Tom's possession. Lola seeks to shield him by announcing that she stole the jewel, and leaves the house with everybody, including Tom, believing her guilty. But Randall, fearful of losing Florence, suddenly betrays the fact that she "planted" the brooch on Tom. The latter immediately goes after Lola, whom he persuades to wed him in earnest.

Although its plot seems rather impossible in spots, Destiny's Isle, with the aid of fast action and a wealth of beautiful photography, registers as an attractive picture which holds its interest fairly well and provides pleasing entertainment. The picture's strongest lure lies in the struggle for the hero's affections between Lola, the island girl, and her rival, Florence Martin, one of fortune's spoiled pets. The average movie fan always favors the weaker side in an amorous contest of this kind, and so it follows that heroine Lola's fight against heavy odds and final triumph are hailed with much satisfaction by the audience. From an artistic standpoint the film leaves nothing to be desired and a remarkably spectacular effect is achieved by the thunderstorm scene, when Tom Proctor's motor boat is struck by lightning.

Points of Appeal.—The long arm of coincidence is frequently in evidence, as when the airplane appears suddenly in time to put a stop to the fight on the cliffs, but the thrills are for the most part "put over" in commendable fashion; there is some timely comedy relief, and the heroine's self-sacrifice in assuming her lover's supposed guilt wins sympathy.

Cast.—Virginia Lee is a sweet and pretty heroine. Ward Crane plays the role of Tom Proctor with considerable dash and animation, George Fawcett gives an especially fine performance in the character of Judge Proctor, Florence Billings is attractive as Virginia's rival, and the work of the supporting cast is adequate.

Married People

Hugo Ballin Photoplay in Five Parts. Distributed by W. W. Hodkinson. Author, Nell Marie Dace. Scenario by Hugo Ballin and George S. Hellman. Director, Hugo Ballin. Cameraman, James R. Diamond. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Dorothy is one kind of girl before marriage and another after she becomes the wife of a man who chose her mostly because she liked simple things and was not extravagant. But soon after Robert Cluer increases his income Dorothy elects to live in luxury and spends money carelessly and her time in frivolity. This of course is a big disappointment to Robert, this and the fact that Dorothy does not like children. Robert is neglected for a fop who poses as a lord and seeks to have Dorothy elope with him as part of a scheme to rob her husband. But the villain fails through the happening of the unexpected. His henchman takes a little boy to the Cluer home and sends him in at an open window with instructions to unlock the front door. Dorothy hears the boy and, taking a revolver, fires in the darkness with the result that the boy is wounded. Dorothy is brought to a realization of the error of her ways through this tragedy, and after nursing the boy back to health adopts him and is thus reunited with her husband.

In Married People Hugo Ballin presents a play dealing with a marriage that turns out happily, but only after Fate has taken a hand to defeat the dire purposes of a would-be-thief and a misguided young wife. The play concerns itself with incident that is fundamentally undramatic and presents its episodes in a loose and disorderly fashion.

Points of Appeal.—The scenes concerning the waif, a minor line of action devised merely for purposes of a climax, are by far the most interesting and touching in the play and the role of the boy is played with such genuine appeal by Bobby Clarke that these scenes are bound to move the spectator. The most effective situation is the one in which the wife shoots the boy and in the presentation of the scene Mr. Ballin's direction soars high above any of his other directorial efforts in this piece. The director and the boy actor have here combined forces to contrive a scene of dramatic effectiveness.

Cast.—Mabel Ballin, the star of the play, invests her characterization with good looks and Percy Marmont makes sincere efforts as the leading man, but neither has any worth while opportunities. Dick Lee gives an outstanding performance as one of the crooks and Bobby Clarke, of course, shines forth brilliantly as the boy.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The mechanical end of the production was expertly handled, the settings being interesting and the photography clear-cut and colorful.

The Married Flapper

Universal Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Bernard Hyman. Scenario by Doris Schroeder. Director, Stuart Paton. Cameraman, Jackson J. Rose. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Pamela Billings, Marie Prevost; Bill Billings, Kenneth Harlan; Glenn Kingdom Philo McCullough; Oliver Holbrook, Frank Kingsley; Carolyn Carter, Lucille Rickson; Gwen Barker, Kathleen O'Connor; Muriel Vane, Hazel Keener; John Holbrook, Tom McGuire; Robert Mills, Burton Wilson; "Wild Ben" Clark, Wm. Quinn; Mrs. Brewer, Lydia Titus; Aunt Libby, Martha Mattox.

Pamela Billings lives up to every dollar of her husband's income. Both are devotees of fast autos and both drive racing cars. During a trip which "Bill" has made across the country to witness a classic of the motor course Pamela indulges in a flirtation with a wealthy idler, Glenn Kingdom. Bill objects to this flirtation which Pam carries on rather openly and at the same time harmlessly, but witbal he is confident of his wife. His confidence proves well placed when he loses all his money. Bill offers Pamela a divorce, but she tells him she will stick it out with him. After a discouraging search about for something to do Bill finally lands a position as salesman with an automobile concern, and prepares to drive the special car of the company in a forthcoming race. But just before the race Bill is injured and, with circumstances pointing to Pamela's continued interest in Kingdom, he is determined to leave Pamela. When the young wife learns that Bill is injured she tricks him in a clever manner and drives the car herself. The race is won, and the prize of $25,000 goes to put Bill and Pamela back in the luxury of their former years.

If The Married Flapper has any authority as analysis of the much talked of Flapper, then it must be set down as propaganda. For there can be but one verdict after a view of this Universal play starring Marie Prevost and that is "may the ranks of the flapper grow and prosper until all femininity is encompassed thereby." Besides making out a case for the flapper the picture affords a thoroughly satisfactory hour of entertainment. The characters are so human—that is, as human as characters in melodramatic comedy can be—and the various situations played in such truthful mood that this reviewer sat and hoped against the inevitable, which was discernible early in the proceedings. But the hope availed nothing; and Pamela drove the racing car in the big track event, the winning of which was to restore her husband's depleted bank account. This instance is not the only one in which The Married Flapper dips down into the ordinary in melodrama, but all these things notwithstanding the picture is nice, clean, stimulating entertainment.

Points of Appeal.—All the characters are interesting and sympathy is captured at the outset for the married couple which carries the play. The race scene shows speed that is dizzy enough to live up to climax requirements and throughout there are pleasant scenes and episodes.

Cast.—Marie Prevost is altogether charming and effective as Pamela and she will make more friends among the picturegoers by this performance. Kenneth Harlan plays his role splendidly. Philo McCullough overacts when he gets the chance but manages to give a good performance in spite of that. The others are well cast.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The settings are good and so too is the photoplay. Mr. Paton's direction seems worthy of the highest praise.

Hurricane's Gal

First National Photoplay in Seven Parts. Author, Harvey Gates. Director, Allen Holubar. Cameramen, Bryn Haskell and W. McCann. Running Time, Eighty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Lola, Dorothy Phillips; Steele O'Connor, Robert Ellis; Chris Borg, Wallace Beery; Captain Danny, James O. Barrows; Phyllis Fairfield, Gertrude Astor; Sing, William Fang; Lieutenant Grant, Jack Donovan.

Lola, daughter of a Pacific smuggler, inherits, along with her father's independence and love of roaming, the Tahiti Belle. She meets a stowaway, Steele O'Connor, a man of gentlemanly type, in whom she becomes deeply interested. But when the Tahiti Belle enters San Francisco harbor she is boarded by revenue officers who, at a signal from Steele, prepare to seize the ship as a smuggler. In the fight which ensues Lola escapes and the steamer is blown up. Lola finds refuge in a gambling den, also a bequest from her father. She decides upon vengeance upon Steele for his treachery, but in an interview with him be explains his creed of duty and Lola leaves him. That night she kidnaps Phyllis, her rival in Steele's affections, and sails away with her, intending to study the girl and learn how to be a real lady. The Government sends a destroyer and airplane in search of Phyllis. Lola suddenly realizes that she has done wrong and determines to take her prisoner back home. She also rescues Phyllis from the advances of one of the crew, and is in turn overpowered by Chris Borg, the mate, who has induced the crew to mutiny. Steele is first to sight Lola's ship. His plane is shot down, but he gets aboard just as the destroyer arrives and opens fire. Steele rescues Lola, Borg is shot and killed, Phyllis restored to the man she really loves, Lieutenant Grant, in command of the destroyer. Steele and Lola are united.

A picture that is sure to win well deserved popularity among the myriad admirers of melodramatic "punch" and sizzling action. Hurricane's Gal is as fine an example of excellent photography, skillful direction and all-around good acting as the most captious critic could desire, not the sort of film that is likely to gain approval from the highbrow element, for it deals the "rough stuff" out unsparingly, but a certain hit so far as the majority of movie fans is concerned. Director Allen Holubar has succeeded in getting the real ocean charm into his production, the deep scenes are wonderfully beautiful, the storm a miracle of realism, there are thrills innumerable, the suspense never slackens and taking it all around the feature may be set down as one that no exhibitor will make a mistake in booking.

Points of Appeal.—You may or may not believe that a woman ever existed who was capable of manhandling a husky crew as does the heroine of the Tahiti Belle. But that is entirely outside of the mark; the main fact is that the picture provides plenty of excitement, a bully love story and mad whirl of events that capture the spectator's attention and carries it along triumphantly to the climax. There are fights galore, winding up with a mutiny aboard Lola's fleeing schooner, a U. S. destroyer and hydroplane coming gallantly to the rescue of the imperilled girls, also a storm at sea that actually seems to register the salt sting of the crashing waves.

Cast.—That sterling screen favorite, Dorothy Phillips, is a fascinating figure as the slightly rowdyish, swaggering Lola, whose masculine views of life suffer a decided change after she falls under the influence of her lover, Steele O'Connor, so aptly portrayed by Robert Ellis. Lola is a delightful creation, a rare beauty and extremely natural. Wallace Beery has one of those tough, semi-brutal roles in which he shows to such tremendous advantage—that of the big Swede mate, Chris Borg; James O. Barrows presents a polished, magnetic character sketch of old Captain Danny, Gertrude Astor fills the part of Phyllis Fairfield acceptably and well balanced support is provided.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The ocean views are exquisite. The action is speedy throughout.

The Ladder Jinx

Vitagraph Photoplay in Six Parts. Author, Edgar Franklin. Scenario by David Kirkland. Director, Jesse Robbins. Running Time, Sixty-five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Arthur Barnes, Edward Horton; Peter Stalton, Tully Marshall; Thomas Gridley, Otis Harlan; Cheynne Harry, Ernest Shields; James Wilbur, Wilbur Higby; Richard Twing, Colin Kenny; Sam, Max Asher; Helen Wilbur, Margaret Landis.

Peter Stalton, retiring as cashier from the Second National Bank, is anxious that his nephew, Richard Twing, should succeed him. However, the directors appoint Arthur Barnes, a teller engaged to Helen Wilbur, daughter of the president. Helen is very superstitious as to jinxes, and warns her lover that he must never walk under a ladder. Having already done so that day she compels him to promise that he will walk under it in an opposite direction. He finds a ladder, puts it against Stalton's house and is immediately accused of trying to commit a burglary. Chasing a supposed crook he ruins his clothes, and when he calls on Helen is dismissed in disgrace by her and her father. Passing the bank he sees two men carrying off money bags, just as President Wilbur, with Helen, arrives in his auto in obedience to the summons of the bank burglar alarm. Arthur pushes Wilbur aside and jumps in the machine to pursue the thieves. Helen accompanies him. They are both arrested by policemen and taken to court. There Arthur is accused of robbing Stalton's house and breaking into the bank. He is cleared by the arrival of Sam, the bank's colored janitor, who gives evidence that Richard Twing is the real culprit. Arthur is freed and, despite the jinx, finds happiness with Helen.

Few persons are free from certain little superstitions regarding minor happenings in everyday life and this picture, with its playful digs at believers in bad and good luck omens, has therefore the advantage of exploiting a theme which is likely to impress young and old alike. The plot is largely a series of farcical episodes, but so well knit together that the story flows along smoothly to the end. An absurd story, of course, but a decidedly merry one, not to be taken seriously at any stage and a regular riot of fun, guaranteed to charm away the blues and keep an audience on the broad grin from beginning to end. The Ladder Jinx schedules as very good summer entertainment, the sort of thing one can enjoy without thinking too hard, amusing and likely to prove an excellent box office asset.

Points of Appeal.—From the moment that the luckless hero steps into the Great Jinx shadow by walking under a ladder his tribulations commence and one misfortune follows another until he lands in court charged with various dire offenses against the law. The complications are cleverly worked out, there is no letup in the action, which tears along at top speed throughout, the love interest is skilfully developed and the climax is as odd and comical as all that has gone before.

Cast.—Edward Horton is kept as busy as the proverbial bee in the hero role, buzzing out of one embarrassing situation into another, and gives a performance which stamps him as a comedian of considerable talent. Helen Wilbur is prettily portrayed by Margaret Landis, Tully Marshall scores a hit as the grouchy old Peter Stalton and well balanced support is accorded the principals by the remainder of the company.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—Exteriors and interiors are capitally filmed, deep sets are employed with good effect and the lighting is adequate. The continuity holds together well and the action moves swiftly.

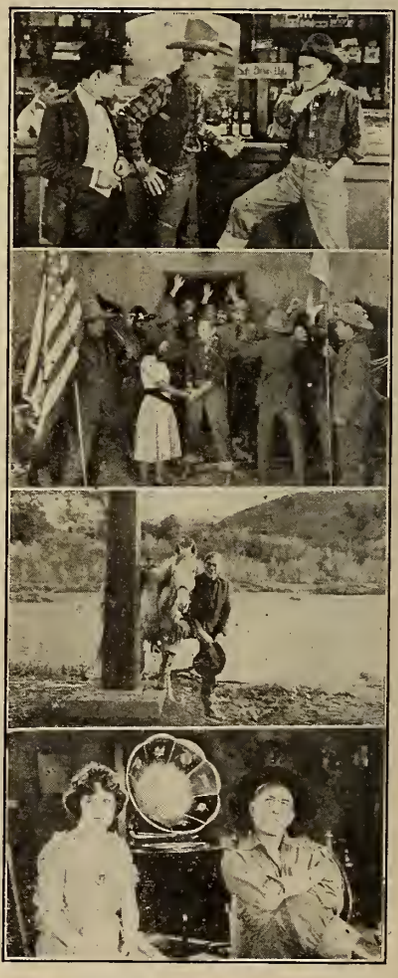
The Kick-Back

P. A. Powers Production in Six Parts. Distributed by F. B. O. Author, Harry Carey. Scenario by George Edwardes-Hall. Director, Val Paul. Running Time, Sixty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

White Horse Harry, Harry Carey; Aaron Price, Henry B. Walthall; Chalk Eye, Charles J. LeMoyne; Phil Harris, Vester Pegg; Ramon Pinellos, Jim O'Neill; Conchita Pinellos, Mignonne; Nellie, Etbel Grey Terry.

"White Horse" Harry refuses to sell his claim, covering a very desirable tract of land near the border, to Aaron Price, cattleman and sharper. This causes enmity between the two, and Price induces Harry to take the job of driving a lot of horses across the border from Mexico, giving him cleverly forged permits. As a result Harry is taken into custody by the Mexican border officials and put into jail. He is held there so long that his homestead claim is forfeit and Price drives his cattle onto the tract and enters his claim. When Harry finally escapes and makes his way back into the United States he immediately sets out to settle accounts with Price and his henchmen. But they frame him again and he is once more put into jail. Price influences his followers against Harry, and they break into the jail and are about to hang him for murder when the Texas rangers, summoned by a girl whom Harry befriended, gallop up and set him free.



Harry Carey adheres strictly to type in his newest photoplay effort The Kick-Back. It's a "Western," so thoroughly orthodox as to plot, development and characterization that no speculative course is permitted the reviewer. There is nothing to do but put it down as "sure fire" wherever that style of film is popular. Mr. Carey wrote his own scenario. In assuming the role of scenarist Mr. Carey unbuckles his spurs and settles back securely in the saddle of tradition. There is wisdom in the course, and if the frontiers of screen melodrama remain not only unchanged but unapproached there is for Mr. Carey, the producers, as well as the exhibitors the comforting knowledge that they have a sure thing—tried, tested and proved. The public has often thrilled to and applauded the situations which make up The Kick-Back with such evident relish that there is no anxiety about giving them more of the same dish.

Points of Appeal.—The scenes have all the fine sweep and stirring realism that picturesque settings and skilfull photography can accomplish. There is love interest to flavor the melodramatic dash resulting from a hot contest between a sympathetic hero and dire villains; in a word, there are all things which go to make up a congenial environment for the star.

Cast.—Mr. Carey plays in the mood which has brought him his present popularity. In the support Henry B. Walthall is prominent in a role that affords him little real opportunity. The balance of the cast gives a good account.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The photography is entirely good and the direction capable in every respect.

Borderland

Paramount Photoplay in Seven Parts. Author, Beulah Marie Dix. Director, Paul Powell. Cameraman, Harry Perry. Running Time, Eighty-Five Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Edith Wayne, pretty and wealthy, thinks she is neglected by her busy husband and turns for consolation to his cousin, Clyde Meredith. She agrees to meet Meredith at Becket Point, the old family home, from where she intends to elope with him. Watching Edith is Dora Becket, spirit of one of Edith's ancestor's, who is trying to warn her of her folly. Dora finally gets a message to Edith through an old servant who tells her Dora's story. Dora was married to a harsh old man. They had one child, Totty, and a dog, Bose. On the point of fleeing with Captain Vincent on his ship near Becket's Point, Dora saw fire break out in the house. Trying to return to save her child, Totty, she jumped overboard and was swept away by the tide. At the end of the servant's story Edith wildly rushes to the private school, where her little boy Jimty is staying, arriving just in time to rescue him from the gymnasium roof, where he has climped in his sleep. Dora is told by the Angel of Heaven that she has now won the right to see her little girl Totty. Edith, her better self awakened, lives only for her husband and boy.

A picture altogether out of the ordinary rut, beautifully photographed, well directed and presented by a thoroughly capable cast, Borderland touches the high-water mark of artistic achievement. But it is to be feared that, appealing as it does to the few rather than to the many, the film will not attain commercial success. The mystical atmosphere, the wanderings of the lost souls in outer space, the restless spirits seeking peace through atonement for ill deeds committed in earthly life—all so colorfully expressed—are yet things likely to bore rather than interest the average practical citizen who seeks entertainment and relaxation from the screen. Also, it must be remembered that people for the most part find scant satisfaction in turning their thoughts toward death in any form, even if a shadowy existence on another plane be offered as a solace.

Points of Appeal.—The double story of Edith's near elopement and that of her ill-fated ancestor, Dora Becket, is skilfully handled and both are easy to follow, despite the inevitable breaks in either narrative. There are many finely drawn sympathetic episodes and a plenitude of clever character sketches, with a bit of comedy relief introduced by the jovial dancing party of Irish servants.

Cast.—Agnes Ayres, in the triple role of Dora, the Spirit and Edith Wayne, registers as an accomplished and versatile emotional actress; indeed, her performance may be set down as the best contribution she has so far made to the screen. Other excellent characterizations are those of Ruby Lafayette as Eileen, the aged housekeeper; Sylvia Ashton as Mrs. Conlon, and Dale Fuller as Elly. Milton Sills fills the part of James Wayne with his usual polished grace, the four-footed actor, Pal, is a dog of rare intelligence, and capital support is rendered by others in the company.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The spirit land views are uncannily beautiful, splendid lighting effects being attained, camera trick work of extraordinary skill is constantly in evidence, and there are many handsome interiors. The continuity is well preserved and the action moves smoothly.

Above All Law

Hamilton Photoplay in Seven Parts. Released by Paramount. Director, Joe May. Running Time, Eighty Minutes.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Prince Ayan, Conrad Veidt; Princess Savitri, Erma Morini; Robert Allen, Paul Richter; Myrra, Nyda de Putti; Ramigami, Berhard Goetze; Carl Langland, Olaf Fonss; Laura Valmy, Mia May.

Discovering that Robert Allen, an Englishman, is making love to his wife, Prince Ayan of India decides to build a tomb and place her in it alive. He sends to England for Carl Langland, great European architect, who comes, followed by his sweetheart, Laura Valmy. Ayan sends Allen away on a mission from which he is not intended to return. Langland refuses to build the tomb and is made prisoner by the prince. Laura comes searching for her fiancee and wanders into a tiger den, from which she is rescued by the Yogi, Ramigami. She finds Langland a leper in the leper city. Ayan promises that he will be cured if Laura consents to become his wife. She agrees, but is released from her promise by Ayan, who orders the Yogi to cure Langland. The latter and Laura plan to escape and take the princess with them. Allen is lured into the tiger den and slain. Laura, Langland and the princess flee to the mountains, pursued by the prince. At a swaying bridge over a ravine Langland and the princess pass to safety, Laura cutting the ropes when they are safely across. The prince and his men arrive, and Ayan begs Langland to give him back his wife, but the princess leaps into the ravine and is killed. Laura and Langland are united and the architect constructs the tomb, at the shrine of which the prince worships.

Memories of The Mistress of the World serial, are revived by this picture. There is the same atmosphere of magic, bizarre sets, secret passages, hairbreadth escapes, etc., with profuse Oriental coloring and some remarkable trick photography. As regards the plot, it is a rambling sort of thing that noboby will feel disposed to take seriously. The feature is really a kind of serial crammed into a seven reel compass. It will probably afford much amusement to juvenile patrons but by no possible stretch of the imagination can it be classed as satisfactory entertainment for critical adult audiences. The original title, The Mysteries of India, has been changed to Above All Law.

Points of Appeal.—The Yogi person whose supernatural powers work such dire havoc in the course of startling events is responsible mainly for keeping things stirred up and conserving the picture's interest. There is action in plenty, of a fast and furious brand, a gang of supposedly bloodthirsty tigers make matters fairly lively for invaders of their den and Laura, the heavyweight heroine, puts over a big thrill stunt when she cuts down a rope bridge in order to save her fiancee and the princess from their pursuers.

Cast.—Mia May plays the Laura role with commendable dash and energy, Conrad Veidt is kept busy in the role of Prince Ayan, hunting the objects of his vengeance, ordering and countermanding sentences; Erma Morini, as the princess Savitri, and Carl Langland, as the hero architect, give satisfactory performances and the Indian types register well.

Photography, Lighting, Direction.—The camera trick stunts are uncommonly clever, there is an abundance of fine Oriental scenery and good lighting prevails. The episodic nature of the story renders the continuity rather ragged, but the action moves at a speedy clip.

FIRST RUNS ON BROADWAY

Their Presentation and Press Comments by Various New York Dailies

Week of July 23

CRITERION

OVERTURE—"Serenade" (R. Drigo).
SCENIC—Bare Feet and Fur Feet (Paramount).
FEATURE—Forget Me Not (Metro).
MUSICAL NUMBER—"Moment Musical" (Schubert).
COMEDY—Penny Reward (Educational).

Press Comments

Times—There is one genuinely poignant moment in Forget Me Not. Also at the Criterion is that delightful Post Nature picture, Bare Feet and Fur Feet. American—Never for one single moment maudlin, never at any time sinking to the depths of bathos, never suggesting that certain sops to mere popularity were deftly introduced with malice aforethought, the picture held the attention engrossingly from start to finish. Herald—Atmosphere of sweet reasonableness is maintained through the picture. Mail—Unaffected simplicity, wholesomeness, sincerity, those qualities which in the motion picture world are rarer than a day in June, are found in abundance in Forget Me Not. Journal—There had been no lavish expenditure of funds for gigantic scenes, hence the order to eliminate all reference to lavishness. Then, to the surprise of everyone concerned the public discovers that the story is one they like.

RIALTO

OVERTURE—Selection from "Rigoletto" (Verdi).
RIESENFELD'S CLASSICAL JAZZ.
RIALTO MAGAZINE.
DANCE FILM—"Danse Macabre."
BARITONE SOLO—"The Temple Bells" (Amy Woodforde-Finden).
FEATURE—The Mysteries of India (Paramount).
ORGAN RECITAL.
CARTOON—What a Difference a Little Hair Will Make (Marcus).

Press Comments

Herald—The scenery does the heaviest work in putting the picture over. And at times it is so gorgeous that it suggests Luna Park. American—Here's another German film, vibrant with adventure, saturated with Oriental mystery. The production is lavish. Mail—It is this open faced acceptance of the supernatural in the Orient that partly redeems The Mysteries of India and transforms an absurd story into a film that is frequently interesting, despite its too great length. Telegram—It is an elaborate pictorial presentation of the ever present conflict between Eastern and Western civilization. A second unusual film at the Rialto is Adolph Bolm's pictorial synchronization to Saint-Saëns' famous composition, "Danse Macabre." Globe—It concerns one of those Oxford-trained Rajahs who have a lot of rough stuff concealed beneath their highly polished exteriors. Journal—Strong meat for summer consumption, but it is a fine film of its class. If thrillers are to your liking, you should enjoy it. For sheer beauty, the Rialto has shown nothing this season to surpass the supplementary film, Danse Macabre.

RIVOLI

OVERTURE—"First Movement Concerto in D Minor" (Rubinstein).
RIVOLI PICTORIAL.
SOPRANO - MEZZO SOPRANO DUET — "Mother" (Romberg).
FEATURE—Agnes Ayres in Borderland (Paramount).
INTERLUDE—"California." (A special paraphrase of the popular melody by Cliff Friend and Con Conrad.
COMEDY—Torchy's Ghost (Educational).
ORGAN RECITAL.

Press Comments

Times—There is photographic charm to Borderland, and yet it is in part due to its photography that the picture seems illogical. American—For simplicity of theme, for originality in development, for flawless presentation it comes close to classic. Tribune—One of the most interesting pictures of the year, at least to us. World—Not only because Borderland gets away from the customary hocus pocus of motion picture stuff do we say go and see it, but also because it is, in our judgment, a rare example of cinema play making. Journal—It isn't the star, though that star is Agnes Ayres, that makes Borderland so good a picture and it isn't the support, though Milton Sills is leading man, nor the splendid photography. It's the story and the direction. Globe—Some of the best photography of the current season helps materially in making the picture interesting. At times it grips the heart and most certainly does carry home the point it intends to make. Telegram—Filled with many dramatic situations and rich imaginations, and before the pretty climax is reached the audience was given thrills and chills.

STRAND

OVERTURE—Selections from "Robin Hood" (De-Koven).
SHORT FEATURE—The Land of the Red Man (Prizma) with orchestra and vocal accompaniment: (a) "By the Waters of Minnetonka"; (b) "Pale Moon."
STRAND TOPICAL REVIEW.
PROLOGUE.
FEATURE—Dorothy Phillips in Hurricane's Gal (First National).
COMEDY CARTOON—"Mutt and Jeff" in Court Plastered (Fox).
ORGAN RECITAL.

Press Comments

World—This is a right interesting sea picture. Herald—Pictorially it is a very stirring photoplay. American—It's what one might call a bigger, finer melodrama—bigger pearls and finer fights. Sun—The photography for these briskly moving events is exceptionally good and on the whole the picture is much better than Allen Holubar's production Man—Woman—Marriage. Journal—Swiftly moving drama, that elusive quality in motion pictures, is the chief characteristic. Heretofore we have been accustomed to seeing either drama without action or action lacking in drama. The two elements have now been united in Hurricane's Gal, and the result is a consummate effort that entertains immeasurably.

CAPITOL

Unit No. 1. OVERTURE—Selections from "Faust."
Unit No. 2. CAPITOL MAGAZINE.
Unit No. 3. BALLET NUMBER—"Minuet" (Paderewski).
Unit No. 4. SHORT FEATURE—Abraham and Lot. Seventh episode of Bible Series.
Unit No. 5. DUET—"At Dawning" (Cadman).
Unit No. 6. FEATURE—Harry Carey in The Kick-Back (F. B. O.).
Unit No. 7. MUSICAL NUMBER—Selections from "The Fortune Teller" (Herbert).
Unit No. 8. HY MAYER TRAVELAUGH—Such Is Life Near London (F. B. O.).

Press Comments

Tribune—If you like Western pictures and if you like the star only half as much as we do you will like this picture. Herald—It's a typical Western tale—you spot that as soon as the waitress, played pensively by Miss Ethel Grey Terry, is called "a desert flower." Mail—Harry Carey, known in the picture as "White Horse" Harry; Henry B. Walthall, who plays the part of the villain; Aaron Price and others in the cast furnish a rattling good entertainment. Telegram—Tells a thrilling tale of life in Arizona and on the Mexican border. There is adventure and swift moving action, one of the scenes picturing a hand to hand combat in the centre of the Rio Grande. Journal—Ranks among the most thrilling productions made by Harry Carey. There is adventure and swift-moving action a-plenty.

Published Weekly from Knickerbocker Bldg., Broadway and Forty-second St., New York City, by EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW, INC. Subscription, $2.00 a Year. Entered as second-class matter, December 1, 1916, at the post office at New York, N. Y., under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Pictures that reach the heart "go over" on their musical accompaniments—

YOU will recall the success of "The Birth of a Nation," "Way Down East," "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," and "Over the Hill."

Without the specially prepared musical score, can you imagine the depreciation in the value of these great picture masterpieces?

The organ that can grip the emotions cannot be discussed in terms of dollars—by numbers of stops or quantity of pipes an exhibitor's money will buy.

Patrons will stand for nearly everything but poor music if the programs are good. Bear in mind, therefore, the fact that the greatest picture houses in the country installed WURLITZER UNIT ORGANS in preference to all others.

There is a type of Wurlitzer Music for all sizes of Theatres. Send this Coupon today for full particulars.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

Team Work

ACROSS the continent comes the story of Mr. Hays' visit to the Coast; the ovation he received there from the film colony; the newspaper support that rallied to his inspiring program; and the great public demonstrations that reached their climax in a mass meeting of thirty thousand people.

No event in the history of the industry can quite be compared to that recorded at Los Angeles during the days July 24-29. There has never been anything like it. In the effect on the public mind; in the effect on the people who make the pictures; and in the creation of new energy and new hope for the industry, from top to bottom, it stands alone.

YET great as the achievement is, its full significance will not be brought into play unless everybody in the business understands clearly, and acts upon, the new message Mr. Hays spoke there.

To Confidence and Co-operation he added two other words, which follow naturally as a result: Team Work.

"I am not suggesting an alibi for the motion picture business, for the motion picture business is going through on the highway which leads to better pictures," he said in one of his addresses. "I am only emphasizing that this is not a one-man job nor the job of one group. It is the multitude's job, and in doing it there is work for all."

And then this: "I am not the dictator or czar of this industry. I am merely a partner for service."

AGAIN and again, during his visit to the Coast, he brought forward the thought that the job could not be done unless all the workers helped. That means Team Work. An irresistible appeal, this, it seems to us. A platform and a program upon which all branches of the industry without loss of their own identity can unite, must unite, and, we believe, will unite in action, more and more, as occasions arise.
