YOUNG LADIES'

FRENCH AND ENGLISH ACADEMY,

GOTHIC MANSION, CHESNUT STREET,

PHILADELPHIA.

THE public is respectfully informed that a branch of an institution conducted in France by a society of ladies, known by the name of "Les Dames de la Retraite," is to be established in this city, for the education of young ladies, on a plan as nearly as possible to that which has inspired so much confidence in France.

The course of instruction will embrace the French and English languages, sacred and profane History, ancient and modern Geography, Mythology, and all the various kinds of fancy and ornamental needle work. The library, which will be always at their service, will contain all the select works necessary to form the taste and improve the judgment.

The discipline of the school will be mild, exact, and uniform. The pupils shall be always under the eye of the superiors, and advantage will be taken of every opportunity to cultivate their minds, and qualify them for refined and polite society.

The food shall be wholesome and various, the dress simple, and every requisite attention paid to the physical wants and comforts of the boarders. The expenses of slight indisposition will be borne by the institution; but in severe sickness, medical attendance, apothecaries' bills, and other necessary or incidental charges, must be met by the parents or guardians.

At the end of every three months, a correct report will be furnished of the health, progress, application, &c. of the children or wards.
