"I confess I was rather disappointed. He was short as a crab, and red as a lobster. With a cheery voice, which bubbled up out of a large blue waistcoat, he begged pardon for keeping me so long at the door, and offered to show me the house and premises at once. His little daughter—for it was she who had first responded to our knocks—was just like him. Thus the promised air of mystery grew suddenly commonplace, and I walked from room to room engaged in vulgar queries about drains and grates. Just when we had gone over the building, and passed into the garden I recognized the door, and said, 'Very well, the place seems likely enough to suit me. I will see the agents when I get back to town, and let you know whether I shall take it or not. Meanwhile, I may as well go back this way; it is the shortest cut to the station. Then, suddenly lifting the fastening of the front gate, I pushed it open, and passed through. No protest followed me; but the man did—carelessly enough—talking still about the gooseberries, which he hoped, if I came, I would repair.

"'Why,' said I, 'is not this the forbidden door?' The driver would not enter here because it was open, and now you walk through as if there were not a ghost in the world.'

"'Life is gone, sir,' replied he, in quite a matter-of-fact way, as if he had been speaking of the postman; 'he passed through three times this morning, and he will be sure for a month.

"'Ah, sir, he won't wait for me,' replied the boy, 'I'll be home by and-by.' When he is it is all over but the shouting for a while. You may go through the gate safe enough as long as you open it yourself; but he can't hear any one to use it when he is about.'

"Well, I replied, 'if I come, I shall keep the key and lock him out, unless he asks to be let in.'

"'Ah, sir, he won't wait for that. I'll be bound. He is sure to come if you do.'

"This was positive and pleasant; so I took my friend, and made my way to the station, determining, as I walked, to tackle this strange visitant if ever I took the place.

"When I did, in six weeks we had packed up all our household stuff, down to the kitchen mustard-pot, and Pickford transferred it to the Grange—leaving a chervonium in my old home with a large perquisite of broken bottles and scraps of bass matting. We found the pulse of life beginning to beat irregularly in our new house. Fires, mostly of deal splinters and straw, would not burn; carpets were constantly being taken up for fastenings and lumps of dislocated bedsteads were waiting for their turn in the hall; the

(Continued on page 270.)

VIEW ON PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE, WASHINGTON, MONDAY, MARCH 4TH, 1861—MR. LINCOLN, ACCOMPANIED BY PRESIDENT BUCHANAN, ON HIS WAY TO THE CAPITOL TO BE INAUGURATED.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE OPEN DOOR.

(Continued from page 268.)

piano choked up the passage, as if it had set out to escape from a scene of discord, and had missed a turn; while the chairs, with their legs sticking up, sat upon each other.

"I found my dog, Phiz, under the dining-room table, making a point at Mr. Death's cat, who, with a tail as big as a muff, was trying to terrify him by ventriloquism. Taking him off to air in the old kennel, I kicked over the cat, incited the porters, lent a judicious hand here and there, until by eventide the neck of the business was broken (besides a few small chattels), and the additional furniture we brought with us fraternized with that of the Grange.

"It was, of course, several days before we had made final dispositions; but ere long the heavy baggage was arranged, the three-deckers were brought to an anchor, and only the gun-boats had to be placed.

"All this while I had heard nothing of the ghost; but when the more solid claims of my new household had been attended to, I asked the gardener whether he had lately paid a visit.

"'He is here now,' was the reply.

"'Where?' I cried.

"'Ah, sir, I can't tell that; but he came in about a quarter of an hour ago. The door is wide open still."

"Popping on my hat, I ran into the garden. The door was half closed, and moving as if some one on the other side held the handle. When I approached it quickly, it was shut to with a slam. I pressed the latch and pushed; it yielded at once, and I passed through. There was no one, but a man walking leisurely away down the lane, about sixty yards off.

(Continued on page 267.)

LE BON TON—THE BEST LADIES' FASHION BOOK in the World. Specimen Copies, with valuable patterns, posted for 33 cents
S. T. TAYLOR & SON, 407 Broadway, New York.

Viele's Hand-Book for Active Service,

FOR THE USE OF

VOLUNTEERS IN THE FIELD.

CONTENTS:

ORGANIZATION OF AN ARMY CORPS.
THE RECRUIT.
THE COMPANY
THE REGIMENT.
THE CAMP
THE MARCH
RATIONS AND MODE OF COOKING THEM
FIELD FORTIFICATION.
ARTILLERY—DIFFERENT KINDS AND USES.
MANUAL FOR MOUNTAIN HOWITZERS.
MANUAL FOR HEAVY ARTILLERY.
AMMUNITION.

"I have read with great satisfaction the advance sheets of the 'Hand-Book for Active Service.' A practical work of this description is greatly needed, and will be prized by the soldiers comprising our Militia throughout the States.'
MARSHALL LEFFERTS, Col. 7th Regt., N. Y.

Sent free by mail on receipt of price
1 vol., Cloth, $1. Will be published in a few days.
B. VAN NOSTRAND, Publisher,
277 No. 192 Broadway, New York.

CANADIAN

General Agency.

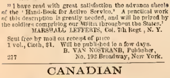
Merchants, Manufacturers, Inventors, Patentees, &c., will find it to their advantage to appoint the undersigned Agent for the sale or introduction of their Goods, Manufactures or Inventions in the Canadas. Arrangements readily entered into on liberal terms, on salary or commission.

E. O. BOUDREAU,
General Agent, 110 German St.,
277-328 Montreal, Canada East.

Love of Strong Drink Cured by

DR. ZELL'S NERVINE POWDERS.

For sale at No. 63 Division St., No. 214 Eighth Av., N. Y., and MRS. HAYES, No. 175 Fulton St., Brooklyn. PRICE ONE DOLLAR. F. C. WELLS & CO., Wholesale Agents, 115 Franklin St., N. Y. 277



MUSICAL BOXES,

Playing 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 16, 24 and 36 Tunes.

M. J. PAILLARD, Importer,
21 Maiden Lane, New York. 277-78

EMPLOYMENT FOR ALL!—HOW TO MAKE MONEY!—SECRETS REVEALED!—Any person sending the Subscriber twenty-five cents in cash or postage stamps, will receive by return mail a book containing more than a hundred MOST VALUABLE SECRETS.
277 H. V. CARRINGTON, Baltimore, Md.

SENT FREE—FOR THE BENEFIT OF NERVOUS SUFFERERS—The Warning Voice, on the self-cure of Debility, Confusion of Ideas, &c. by a FORMER SUFFERER. Containing, also, an Exposure of the Impositions and Deceptions practised by Quacks. Inclosing Stamp, simply address Box 3815, Boston, Mass. Copyright secured. 277-79

PHELANS PATENT BILLIARD TABLES.
MANUFACTORY & WAREROOMS
63, 65, 67 & 69. CROSBY St. NEW YORK

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.—For particulars address, inclosing stamp, DR. H. HIRSHFIELD, Surgeon and Accoucheur, 436 Broadway, New York 274-86

$100,000

IN

FURNITURE,

At a Great Sacrifice,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR.

Owing to the great decline in our Southern wholesale trade, leaving an immense surplus stock on hand, we have concluded to offer the whole

At Retail! At Cost!!

FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS,

At either of our three stores, No. 87 Bowery, No. 462 Pearl Street and No. 141 Bowery.

HUNNEWELL'S UNIVERSAL COUGH REMEDY — HUNNEWELL'S UNIVERSAL COUGH REMEDY. — BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS

This valuable preparation, freed of all the common components, such as Opiates or Expectorants, which not only run down the system, but destroy all chance of cure, will be found on trial to possess the following properties, and to which the most valuable testimonials may be found in the pamphlets.

For Whooping Cough, and as a Soothing Syrup, it meets every want, and by early use will save the largest proportion of ruptures in children which can be traced to Whooping Cough.

In ordinary Coughs and Bronchial Complaints, the forerunners of Consumption, its splendid tonic properties make it not only the most perfect enemy to disease, but builds up and sustains the system against a recurrence of the Complaint. No nursery should be without it, nor should parents fail to get a pamphlet, to be found with all dealers, as the only way to do justice to its value.

HUNNEWELL'S TOLU ANODYNE — HUNNEWELL'S TOLU ANODYNE THE GREAT NEURALGIC REMEDY AND NATURAL OPIATE. — SIGNATURE OF J. L. Hunnewell OVER CORK OF GENUINE ONLY.

This great Neuralgic Remedy and Natural Opiate calls for special attention and interest, being free of Opium or preparations of Opium, or of any but its strictly vegetable and medical properties. For Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Tooth and Earache, Spinal Complaints, Bleeding at Lungs or Stomach, Rose or Hay Fever, Catarrh, and all minor Nervous Complaints.

For Loss of Sleep, Chronic or Nervous Headache, Sick Headache, it has no equal, and to which we offer testimonials from undoubted sources.

For Delirium Tremens it is a sure Remedy.

For Bowel Complaints, including Cholera Morbus, it is splendidly adapted, in not only removing the Pains, but acting as physic, a great contrast with Opium, which not only constipates and drugs the system, but makes the remedy worse than the disease.

From Physicians we ask attention, and on demand Formulas or Trial Bottles will be sent, developing in the Anodyne an Opiate which has long been wanted, and in the Cough Remedy such as rest entirely on one central principle.

From invalids we ask correspondence for Pamphlets or explanation, without "postage stamps."

Prices—Large Cough Remedy,	50 cents per bottle.
Small " "	25	"	"
Tolu Anodyne,	50	"	"

John L. Hunnewell, Proprietor,

CHEMIST AND PHARMACEUTIST,

No. 9 Commercial Wharf, Boston, Mass.

For sale by all usual wholesale and retail dealers in every town and city.

Geo. Hunnewell, 145 Water St.; D. S. Barnes & Co.; Bush, Gale & Robinson; Schieffelin Bros. & Co.; McKesson & Robbins, Conrad Fox, J. Milhau & Sons, Wholesale Agents, New York. 277-80aw

THE ERIE SEWING MACHINE COMPANY want Agents to sell their Fifteen Dollar Sewing Machines. They will give a commission, or wages, at from $20 to $60 per month, and pay all expenses. Full particulars sent free. R. JAMES, General Agent Erie Sewing Machine Company, Milan, Ohio. 276-79

CASSELL'S

Illustrated History of England.

THE TEXT BY J. F. SMITH, UP TO THE REIGN OF EDWARD I., AND FROM THAT PERIOD,

By William Howitt.

In Fortnightly Parts of 60 Pages, price 15 cts.; Monthly Parts of 120 pages, price 30 cts.

The whole will be completed in six volumes, of six hundred and twenty-four pages each. The price of each vol. is Two Dollars, or Twelve Dollars for the whole work.

"A splendid work. It will be an invaluable history."—New York Observer.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 37 Park Row.

A. LANGE,

PICTURE AND LOOKING-GLASS FRAMES

AND

CORNICES FOR ROOMS,

MADE TO ORDER, AND RE-GILDING DONE.

206 William St., cor. Frankfort, New York.

ESTABLISHED 1843.

BOGLE'S CELEBRATED HYPERION FLUID overtops everything as the greatest restorer and best dressing for the Hair in the world. Ye who have been deceived by nostrums, try this and be convinced. It never fails. To be had at

W. BOGLE'S
Hairwork, Perfumery and Toilet Store,
202 Washington St., Boston, and for sale everywhere.

Shaler's Flexible Roller Patent Floor Skates.

The use of these Skates imparts a perfect knowledge of the art of Skating on Ice, as well as furnishing the most pleasing and healthful exercise ever presented to the public. Hundreds of Ladies in this city have become proficient Ice Skaters by the use of them.

The only place for the genuine article is 440 Broadway, N. Y. O. M. VAIL, Sole Agent and Manufacturer.
000

L. DUBERNET & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Passe-Partouts and Fancy Frames,

544 Broadway, between Spring and Prince Sts., New York
Gilt, Ebony, Black Walnut and Oak Frames always on hand.

L. DUBERNET, J. DUBERNET.
000

My Onguent is the only thing in the world that will force the Beard or Moustache to grow on the smooth face in Six Weeks, and will never stain or injure the skin. Sent by mail postage free, to any part of the country. Price $1.
277 R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., N. Y.

Madame Demorest's Quarterly Mirror of Fashions.

GREAT IMPROVEMENTS.—Contains nearly 100 Engravings of new and elegant Designs for the Spring Fashions. Milliners, Dressmakers and Ladies generally will find it more practical, useful and reliable than all the other Fashion Magazines put together, and only five cents. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of six cents yearly, fifteen cents. MME. DEMOREST'S GRAND OPENING OF PATTERNS, No. 473 Broadway. 277

Wanted,

10,000 PEOPLE who are anxious to find out what my new invention is that is so important to Married People. Address, inclosing stamp, DR. EDGAR, 321 Pearl St., New York City. 277

Holloway's Ointment

IS a balsamic remedy, surpassed by none for the cure of Burns, Scalds, Old Sores or Glandular Diseases. It prevents suppuration by expelling the poisonous venom from the wound; and the cicatrice itself disappears as soon as the healing operation is completed. Sold at the manufactory, No. 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists, at 25 cts., 63 cts. and $1 per pot. 277-79

S. R. Walker,

TYPE FOUNDRY

AND PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
17 Dutch St., New York. 277 81

WONDER! WONDER!—Full Instructions how to learn the art of Ventriloquism in a few hours. Sent by mail for 25 cts. Address J. F. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Illinois 277

GREAT BARGAINS

IN

Jewellery.

The Subscriber having been appointed Agent by five of the largest manufacturing Jewellery establishments in this country, having immense stocks on hand which they are determined to reduce at any sacrifice, he is now selling their solid Gold and Gold-Plated Jewellery for the next sixty days at an immense reduction. The Subscriber having been in the Jewellery business here for the past TWENTY-FIVE YEARS, the public can depend on every article being precisely as represented in every respect. The goods are all well made, and will give entire satisfaction to the purchaser.

Mosaic, Lava, Coral, &c., Earrings and Pins, $5 a set; usual price $12.
Jet, Gold Stone, Garnet and Enamel Earrings and Pins, $4 a set; usual price $10.
Turquoise, Carbuncle, Mosaic and Lava Earrings and Pins, $3 a set; usual price $8.
Mosaic, Lava, Carbuncle, Garnet, &c., Earrings and Pins, $2 a set; usual price $6.
Coral, Enamelled, Carbuncle, Lava, &c., Earrings and Pins, $1 a set; usual price $5.
Oval Band Bracelets, $2 each; usual price $5.
Oval Band Bracelets, $1 each; usual price $4.
Richly Engraved and Chased Flat Band Bracelets, $2 each, usual price $6.
Engraved and Chased Flat Band Bracelets, $1 each; usual price $4
Chain Bracelets, $2 each; usual price $5.
Chain Bracelets, $1 each; usual price $4.
Onyx Studs and Sleeve Buttons, $1 a set; usual price $4.
Carbuncle, Enamel and Coral Sleeve Buttons, $1 a set; usual price $4.
Misses' Necklaces, Coral, Garnet, &c., $1 each; usual price $4
Children's Coral Armlets, 50 cents each; usual price $1 50.
Children's Coral Necklaces, 50 cents each; usual price $1 50.
Ladies' Chatelaine Chains and Pins, $2 each; usual price $5.
Gentlemen's Vest Chains, $1 each; usual price $5.
Lockets for Daguerreotypes or Hair, $1 each; usual price $5.
Gentlemen's Seal Rings, $2 each; usual price $6.
Ladies' Rings with Sets, $1 each; usual price $3.
Ladies' Earrings, $2 a pair, usual price $6
Ladies' Earrings, $1 a pair; usual price $4
Ladies' Sleeve Buttons, 50 cents to $1 a set; usual price $1 50 to $3.
Gentlemen's Sleeve Buttons, 50 cents to $1 each; usual price $1 50 to $3
Gentlemen's Studs, 25 cents to $1 a set; usual price $1 to $3.
Real Jet Bracelets, $1 each; usual price $3.
Children's Finger Rings, 25 cents to $1 each; usual price $1 to $3.
Gentlemen's Scarf Pins, 50 cents to $1 50 each; usual price $2 to $4.
Ladies' real Jet Pins, $1 each; usual price $3.
Ladies' real Jet Earrings, $1 a pair; usual price $3.
Also Gold Pens and Pencils, Toothpicks, Watch Keys, Belt Buckles, Chain Pins, Crosses, Steel Belt-Clasps, &c., &c.
Goods sent by mail or express to all parts of the United States and Canada free of cost.

GEORGE C. ALLEN,

Agent for the Manufacturers,

Wholesale and Retail, No. 415 Broadway, one door below Canal St. 277-79

BEAUTIFUL ARTIFICIAL MOUSTACHES—Cannot be designated from natural ones; warranted to fit all; 30 cts. a pair (coin), four pairs $1.
277 Address W. F. HARRIS, St. Louis, Mo.

JUST PUBLISHED,

NO. 34 OF

THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF THE NEW WORLD,

Frank Leslie's

BUDGET OF FUN

For March 15th.

The Great Inauguration Number.

The Comic Cartoon is an unrivalled picture of

GULLIVER ABE OVERRUN BY THE LILLIPUTIAN OFFICE-SEEKERS

of Washington, and faithfully depicts his unhappy position. Greeley is at one ear and Seward at the other, while over him crawl the countless reptiles after the Loaves and Fishes.

GULLIVER ABE IS A GREAT PORTRAIT.

There are also the results of the present state of affairs, showing how the world has become topsy-turvy. Also the wonderful adventures of

THE JUDGE AND THE TURKEY COCK.

The Domestic Rarey;

OR,

THE VANQUISHED HUSBAND,

is likewise exhibited.

THE THEORY OF COERCION; OR, HOW TO SIT UPON BAYONETS, is depicted in the sharpest manner. Also

The Model Husband,

in Six Tableaux.

THE BRITISH SNOB IS SHOWN UP.

Then there is that triumph of ingenuity,

BARNUM'S PRIZE REBUS.

Also

BROTHER BOB'S INFAMOUS BEHAVIOR IN CRINOLINE

Besides numerous other brilliant hits at the Times, Social, Moral, Political, Personal, National and Impertinent.

Besides these there are Sixteen Pages of the best Humorous Writing, among which will be found the Grand Romance of the Finest Girl in Bloomsbury,

in which fashionable young ladies are laid out. The Burlesque Romance of The Comic Demon, by Vanderdecken, the Flying Dutchman. Also a fierce attack upon Filthy Lucre, and last, but not least, Frank Leslie's Address to the Budgetonians, &c.

This unrivalled Comic Periodical is only Six Cents.

Frank Leslie's Publication Office, 19 City Hall Square, New York

Cephalic Pills, CURE Sick Headache, CURE Nervous Headache, CURE All kinds of Headache.

By the use of these Pills the periodic attacks of Nervous or Sick Headache may be prevented; and if taken at the commencement of an attack immediate relief from pain and sickness will be obtained.

They seldom fail in removing the Nausea and Headache to which females are so subject.

They act gently upon the bowels, removing Costiveness.

For Literary Men, Students, Delicate Females, and all persons of sedentary habits they are valuable as a Laxative improving the appetite, giving tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and restoring the natural elasticity and strength of the whole system.

The CEPHALIC PILLS are the result of long investigation and carefully conducted experiments, having been in use many years, during which time they have prevented and relieved a vast amount of pain and suffering from Headache whether originating in the nervous system or from a deranged state of the Stomach.

They are entirely vegetable in their composition, and may be taken at all times with perfect safety without making any change of diet, and the absence of any disagreeable taste renders it easy to administer them to children.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS

The genuine have five signatures of Henry C. Spalding on each Box

Sold by Druggists and all other Dealers in Medicines.

A Box will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

All orders should be addressed to

HENRY C. SPALDING,
48 Cedar St., New York.

THE FOLLOWING INDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS

Will convince all who suffer from

HEADACHE

THAT A SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS WITHIN THEIR REACH.

hese Testimonials were unsolicited by Mr. Spalding, they afford unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

MASONVILLE, CONN., Feb. 5, 1861.

MR. SPALDING—SIR—I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I like them so well that I want you to send me two dollars worth more. Part of these are for the neighbors, to whom I gave a few out of the first box I got from you.

Send the Pills by mail, and oblige

Your ob't Servant, JAMES KENNEDY.

HAVERFORD, PA., Feb. 6, 1861.

MR. SPALDING—SIR—I wish you to send me one more box of your Cephalic Pills. I have received a great deal of benefit from them. Yours respectfully,

MARY ANN STOIKHOUSE.

SPRUCE CREEK, HUNTINGTON CO., PA., Jan. 18, 1861.

H. C. SPALDING—SIR—You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately.

Respectfully yours, JNO. B. SIMONS.

P. S.—I have used one box of your Pills and find them excellent.

BELLE VERNON, OHIO, Jan. 15, 1861.

HENRY C. SPALDING, ESQ.—Please find inclosed twenty-five cents, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best Pills I have ever tried. Direct

A. STOVER, P. M.,
Belle Vernon, Wyandot Co., O.

BEVERLEY, MASS., Dec. 11, 1860.

H. C. SPALDING, ESQ.—I wish for some Circulars or large show bills, to bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before my customers. If you have anything of the kind, please send to me. One of my customers, who is subject to severe Sick Headache (usually lasting two days), was cured of an attack in one hour by your Pills, which I sent her. Respectfully yours,

W. B. WILKES

☞ A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually. ☜

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SAVE THE PIECES

ECONOMY DISPATCH!

☞ "A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE" ☜

As accidents will happen, even in well regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.

Spalding's Prepared Glue

meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point.

"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."

N. B—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cts.

Address HENRY C. SPALDING,
No. 48 Cedar St., New York.

CAUTION.

As certain unprincipled persons are attempting to palm off on the unsuspecting public imitations of my PREPARED GLUE, I would caution all persons to examine before purchasing, and see that the full name,

☞ SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, ☜

is on the outside wrapper all others are swindling counterfeits

VALUABLE BOOKS FREE.

EXTRA INDUCEMENTS FOR SUBSCRIBING

TO THE

NEW YORK WEEKLY,

BEFORE THE FIRST DAY OF APRIL.

The Best Story and Sketch Paper Published in the World.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SEND IN YOUR SUBSCRIPTIONS!!

A SPLENDID PREMIUM BOOK WORTH $2 25 TO EVERY SUBSCRIBER.

GETTERS-UP OF CLUBS, ATTENTION!!!

READ! READ!! READ!!! READ!!!! READ!!!!!

At a heavy expense, and with the view of still further extending the immense circulation of the NEW YORK WEEKLY, the Publishers offer, UNTIL THE FIRST DAY OF APRIL NEXT, the following named and described

MAGNIFICENT PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS,

ALL TO BE NEW NAMES, AND NONE TO BE RESIDENTS OF ANY TOWN WHERE THERE IS A NEWS AGENT.

Each Subscriber will Receive, postage free, either of the following named Works, which he or she may indicate:

THE PICTORIAL FAMILY ENCYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY AND TRAVELS. Comprising Prominent Events in the History of the World; Biographies of Eminent Men, and Interesting Accounts of Distinguished Travellers. By JOHN FROST, LL D. Illustrated with Three Hundred and Sixty Engravings. New York: C. M. SAXTON, BARKER & Co., No. 25 Park Row. 648 large octavo pages.

This work contains a vast fund of interesting and instructive reading, much of which cannot be found elsewhere. It is designed for the use of family circles and school libraries, and comprises a great variety of useful and entertaining matter. Among the historical and biographical notices are many events and characters of remarkable interest which are so little connected with general history as not to have a place in the common works on the subject. The details of hunting and travelling adventures are rich in character and full of thrilling interest. The retail price is $2 25.

INDIAN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES, from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By JOHN FROST, LL.D. With numerous Engravings, from Original Designs, by W. Croome and other Distinguished Artists. New York: C. M. SAXTON, BARKER & Co., No. 25 Park Row. 372 large octavo pages.

This volume not only contains an authentic history of the Indian wars within the territory now under Anglo-Saxon sway, from the time of Ponce de Leon to the late troubles in Texas, New Mexico, and on the Pacific coast, but is full of personal narrative, giving the experience and sufferings of individuals, while, at the same time, faithfully and fully portraying the character, habits and customs of the red men within the vast territory included in this history. It is a work that cannot be read without a quickening of the pulses, and an abiding sense of the hardships and sufferings of those who have bequeathed to us such a beautiful and valuable inheritance. Patriotism has no stronger advocate than this truthful volume, filled with simple, unvarnished tales of danger and daring. It contains a full index, and retails at $2 25.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR; OR, THE HOME BOOK OF HEALTH AND MEDICINE. A Popular Treatise on the Means of Avoiding and Curing Diseases, and of Preserving the Health and Vigor of the Body to the Latest Period. including an account of the Nature and Properties of Remedies, the Treatment of the Diseases of Women and Children, and the Management of Pregnancy and Parturition. By a Physician of Philadelphia. New York; C. M. SAXTON, BARKER & Co, No 25 Park Row. 619 large octavo pages.

This is no quack publication, nor one intended in any way to promote quackery. It is a thoroughly scientific work, free from all barbarous technicalities and scientific jargon, and can be studied with profit by any practising physician. By its aid any person with an ordinary mind may easily acquire a better knowledge of the human system and of the nature of medicines than is possessed by nine-tenths of the M.D.'s licensed to cure and kill with impunity. The recipes are invaluable, because free from Latin terms, which are used by the profession more for concealing their own ignorance than to keep useful knowledge from their patients. "The Family Doctor" is really a philanthropic work, and should be in every intelligent household. $2 25 is the retail price.

BORDER WARS OF THE WEST; Comprising the Frontier Wars of Pennsylvania, Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Tennessee and Wisconsin, and embracing Individual Adventures among the Indians, and Exploits of Boone, Kenton, Clark, Logan, Brady, Poe, Morgan, the Whetzells, and other Border Heroes of the West. By JOHN FROST, LL.D. With numerous Engravings. New York; C. M. SAXTON, BARKER & Co, No. 25 Park Row. 608 large octavo pages.

This is a work which is peculiarly interesting just at this time, when the nation seems on the verge of dissolution. The true patriot will take a melancholy pleasure in reviewing the past, wherein is depicted the trials, acts of heroism and sufferings through which our forefathers were compelled to pass in the early history of our country. The book contains about Two Hundred Engravings illustrative of the stirring events which marked the era of which the work treats, and the traits of character exhibited by the border heroes are spiritedly portrayed. It is a work which possesses an almost magical charm for the true lover of American history

In every instance an Extra Copy of any one of the above Books will be sent to the one who gets up a Club of Five or more; and the following named premiums, postage free, are offered in addition:

To any one who sends us TEN DOLLARS FOR FIVE (bona fide) NEW SUBSCRIBERS, not residents of any Town where there is a News Agent, we will send one copy of either of the above-named works (independent of the Five Copies sent to supply the members of the Club), which retail at $2 25 each.

To any one sending us SIXTEEN DOLLARS FOR EIGHT (bona fide) NEW SUBSCRIBERS, we will send two of the above-named volumes, independent of the Eight Copies for the members of the Club.

To any one forwarding TWENTY DOLLARS FOR TEN (bona fide) NEW SUBSCRIBERS, we will send all three of the magnificent books named above, independent of the Ten Copies for the members of the Club.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY IS DESIGNED AS A

FIRST-CLASS STORY AND SKETCH PAPER,

It containing a succession of

The Best Stories and Sketches ever Published in the United States.

Our friends must be careful to whom they entrust their money for subscriptions, as we, of course, can take no risk. If the money be mailed to us, our obligations shall be strictly kept, but of course we cannot be responsible if subscribers entrust their money to swindlers. Persons sending us letters should be particular to state the Town, County and State; also to name the particular book they may desire.

All letters and communications in relation to the Editorial or Business Departments of the NEW YORK WEEKLY must be addressed to

STREET & SMITH,

Editors and Proprietors, 20 Beekman St., New York.

☞ TO POSTMASTERS.—Will not Postmasters and others of our friends throughout the country, if they cannot use the above to their own advantage, hand it to their wives, daughters, sons, clerks, or some unemployed friend, who would find getting up Clubs for the NEW YORK WEEKLY a lucrative business? With the great attractions offered, the formation of Clubs cannot fail to prove an easy thing

☞ Specimen copies sent free 271 80aw

GREAT CURE.

Dr. Leland's

ANTI-RHEUMATIC BAND

Is the only known remedy for RHEUMATISM, GOUT and NEURALGIA, and a sure cure for all MERCURIAL DISEASES. It is a conveniently arranged Band, containing a compound to be worn around the waist. It reaches the disease through the pores of the Skin, and effects a perfect cure. Moderate cases are cured in a few days, and we are constantly receiving testimonials of its efficacy in aggravated cases of long standing

Price $2, to be had of Druggists generally, or can be sent by mail or express direct from the Principal

Office, 409 Broadway, New York.

G. SMITH & CO, Sole Proprietors.

N. B—Descriptive Circulars SENT FREE Agents wanted everywhere. 266-78

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO THE MARRIED.—Send stamp to D. A. WILLIAMS, Lowell, Mass. 27-77

AGENTS WANTED—In every town and city in the Union, to sell SHERMAN & CO.'S NEW GIFT JEWELLERY ENVELOPES, with from $1 to $10 capital. Our Agents are making from $3 to $10 per day. Our new style of Envelopes are now ready, which, in number of articles and real intrinsic value, surpass anything of the kind ever before offered. Remember in price and quality we defy competition. Call on or address, inclosing stamp for Circular, SHERMAN & CO., 229 Broadway. 276

LIEUTENANT COLBORN;

OR,

The Disinherited.

A new Novel just published by the AUTHOR.

For sale by Dick & Fitzgerald, New York; Rudd & Carleton, New York; T B Peterson & Co, Philadelphia; Crosby, Nichols, Lee & Co, Boston; Bailey & Noyes, Portland, and Booksellers generally. 276-79

TUCKER'S

PARIS BRIDAL

GARNITURES AND VEILS,

Coiffures, Flowers, Feathers and Toilet Surroundings are ever of a pleasing character.

759 Broadway. 274-325

Tiffany & Co.,

LATE

TIFFANY, YOUNG & ELLIS,

Fine Jewellery, Precious Stones, Watches, Silver Ware Bronzes, Clocks, Rich Porcelain Articles of Art and Luxury

No. 550 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

HOUSE IN PARIS, TIFFANY, REED & CO

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every city, town and county in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patent article just invented. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and to persons out of employment it offers great inducements. For full particulars write immediately, and receive our letter by return mail. ROB'T HALL & CO.,

271-83 5½ North St., Baltimore, Md

Bogle's Hair Dye and Wigs

ARE unapproached and unapproachable in their superior merits. Both are perfection. Try the one, see the other, and be convinced

Private Rooms for Dyeing Hair and fitting Wigs at BOGLE'S Hairwork, Perfumery and Toilet Bazaar, No. 202 Washington St., Boston Diagrams to measure the head sent by mail inclose postage stamp for reply. 000

MATRIMONY MADE EASY; OR, HOW TO WIN A LOVER—Containing plain, common-sense directions, showing how all may be suitably married, irrespective of age, sex or position, whether prepossessing or otherwise. This is a new work, and the secret, when acted upon, secures a speedy and happy marriage to either sex. Mailed free for 25 cents, in cash or postage stamps. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia Post Office, Box 2,300.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

PUBLISHED for the benefit and as a warning to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, &c.; supplying the means of Self-Cure. By one who cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. Single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y., by inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope 271-83

FINKLE & LYON'S

SEWING MACHINES.

Our Machines took the highest medal at the Fair the American Institute, with the highest premium for fine Sewing Machine work.

They also took the highest premiums at the New Jersey State Fair, at the Mechanics' Fair, Utica, N. Y., the Franklin Institute, and so generally wherever exhibited.

Late office 503 Broadway.

REMOVED TO 538 BROADWAY. 000

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S

LOTTERIES!

AUTHORIZED BY THE STATES OF

DELAWARE,
MISSOURI
AND
KENTUCKY,

Draw daily, in public, under the superintendence of Sworn Commissioners.

☞ The Managers' Offices are located at Wilmington Delaware, and St. Louis, Missouri.

PRIZES VARY FROM

$2 50 TO $100,000!

TICKETS FROM $2 50 TO $20.

☞ Circulars giving full explanation and the Schemes to be drawn will be sent, free of expense, by addressing

WOOD, EDDY & CO., Wilmington, Delaware,

OO

WOOD, EDDY & CO St. Louis, Missouri.

Dr. Brown's Patent Baby-Tender.

THIS article of Nursery Furniture is different from, superior to, and surpasses the place of everything hitherto used for that purpose. It combines, by simple changes, the following articles, viz.: a cot, comfortable cushion couch, a beautiful baby-stool, a hand-screen, nursery, dining and rocking-chair, a swing, a steady, reliable and pleasurable a play and work stand. In a word, it is a perfect baby-tender, in a peculiarly abundant by a steel spring; it is reckoned to as to require no folding, and is tastefully trimmed in various styles, at prices ranging from $6 to $15. Sent by express everywhere.

It will save in washing, in bringing up one child, more than its cost, and save of the time and attendance of mother and nurse.

It is the child centre freedom of action for body and limb, and gives healthy action of the stomach and bowels promotes and strengthens the natural means and development of the muscles, preserving it from injury or the possibility of danger.

It is compact, strong and durable, and to those having the care of infants or children under three years old it is indispensable.

It is a nursery exercise aids and by our nursery children in use of your baby-Tenders very much aids in their proper physical development, and assists us to compare with the services of one as-silent nurse."—Matron of the Home for the Friendless.

J. S. BROWN & CO., Warerooms No. 682 Broadway, N. Y., between Bond and Bleecker Sts. 070

Send for our Circular

Thorley's Food for Cattle.

FOR Horses, Cows, Sheep and Hogs, the effects produced by its use in a month will exceed all expectation. A Pamphlet mailed free. Agents Wanted. Depot, 21 Broadway, New York. 271-336

Ladd, Webster & Co's
IMPROVED TIGHT-STITCH SEWING MACHINES,
500 Broadway, New York. 006e

Wheeler & Wilson's
SEWING MACHINES
At reduced prices, with Gloss Cloth-Presser, improved Loop-Check, new style Hemmer, Binder, Corder, &c.

OFFICE, No 505 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. 377-Bo

RICH BOOKS.
DO NOT FAIL TO SEND FOR A CATALOGUE.
Books, Cards and Prin's of every Description.
Catalogues sent FREPAID and FREE. Address
W. H. HATHAWAY, Purchasing Agency,
277-Bo 33 Ann St., New York.

Patented November 1st, 1859.

The Measures are
A, the distance
round the Neck.
B to B, the Yoke.
C to C, the Sleeve
round the Body
D to D, distance
under the armpits
E to E, the length
of the Shirt.

BALLOU'S
Patented Improved French Yoke SHIRTS.
Patented November 1st, 1859.
A New Style of Shirt, warranted to Fit.

By sending the above measure, any one can order a perfect fit of our new style of Shirt, and return by Express to any part of the United States, at $18, $15, $12, $9, &c., per dozen. No order forwarded for less than half a dozen Shirts.

Also Importers and Dealers in MENS FURNISHING GOODS.

BALLOU BROTHERS,
639 Broadway, N. Y.
Wholesale Trade supplied on the usual terms

BILLIARD BALLS, Ivory and Patent Compressed Ivory, at reduced prices. Manufactured and for sale by WM. H. WELLING, 419 Pearl St., second floor for Centre.

$100 PER MONTH and all expenses paid! AGENTS WANTED, at the above salary, to introduce a new article, invented according to an Act of Congress, Feb. 7, 1861. State Agencies may be secured by addressing the proprietors, HARRIS & CO., 121 Court St., Boston, Mass. 272-To

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,
FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.

For curing and preventing Baldness.
For removing Scurf and Dandruff.
For beautifying and making the Hair soft and curly.
In fact for only rich and effective compound of the kind in use.
Be sure and get the right article.
Obtained and Druggist.

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,
Price 50 cents per Bottle.
Wholesale Depot, 16 Dey St., New York.
Also,
PROF. L. MILLER'S INSTANTANEOUS LIQUID HAIR DYE
Price 50 cents per box.
Warranted superior to all others.
Try them, and you will acknowledge the fact. 277-69o

THE ELECTRIC TYPOGRAPH OF LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER is done by WILLIAM A. TH., 37 Chatham Square

MISSING MAN.

HENRY T. ROBINSON, of Madrid, St. Lawrence co., N. Y., whose portrait we give this week, has been missing since the 21st day of January; was last seen on that day in the city of New York. He is a married man, but has no family; when he left he was dressed in dark clothes. Any information respecting him or his whereabouts would be thankfully received by his wife, Clara Robinson, Madrid, St. Lawrence co., N. Y., or at this office.

First-Class Prize Medal, Paris Exhibition, 1855.

LAWSON & CO.,
PRINTING INK MANUFACTURERS,
LONDON (ENGLAND) AND NEW YORK.

Furnishers to the principal offices in Central Europe and America, and also to nearly all the Illustrated Papers on this Continent.

New York Depot, 56 Gold St., New York.
277-276o

CONSTITUTION WATER,
THE ONLY KNOWN REMEDY FOR DIABETES,

Brinkton in the News of the Bladder, Inflammation of the Kidneys, and Catarrh of the Bladder, Strangury and Burning, or Painful Urination. Sores in the Bladder, Calculus, Gravel, Brick-dust Deposit, and Mucous or Milky Discharges after Urination.

For sale by all Druggists. Price $1.

WM. H. GREGG & CO., Proprietors.
MORGAN & ALLEN, General Agents,
No. 44 DEY St., New York.
276-To

Smith and Wesson's Seven-Shooter.

J. W. STORRS, Agent,
321 Chambers Street, N. Y.

THIS PISTOL is light, has great force, is sure fire, shoots accurately, can be left loaded any length of time without injury, is not liable to get out of order, is safe to carry. Every Pistol warranted.

CAUTION TO DEALERS.

Be sure and get those stamped "Smith & Wesson, Springfield, Mass.," as none others genuine. All cartridge-revolvers that bear of the branch are infringements. These are warned, and all such infringements will be prosecuted. Persons purchasing have Smith & Wesson's address on each end of the box. 275-336o

Perfumes! Perfumes! Perfumes!
609 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The most delightful and genuine Bouquet and Fancy Perfumes for the general season, comprising the fragrance of the rarest and latest flowers, as well as the most approved Bouquets.

MOUNT VERNON, KISS ME QUICK,
PARFUIT GEM, WASHINGTON NOSEGAY
FRAGRANT JAPONICA, &c., &c.

Also CONCENTRATED FLAVORING EXTRACTS, for Ices, Puddings, &c.

Beware of the numerous spurious imitations of the genuine Kissing Drop, for chapped Skin. CHILDREN RARELY EVER CRY, and, as infallible cure for Corns and Bunions.

To be had, wholesale and retail, at No. 609 Broadway
New York. EUGENE DUPUY,
609 Chemist and Druggist.

Bronchial Affections.

A CLERGYMAN writing from Morristown, Ohio, speaking of the beneficial effects resulting from the use of Brown's Bronchial Troches, says: "Last spring I found my throat very much irritated, bronchial tubes affected, and most Lozenges and Troches came to much a nuisance as to be entirely unfit without benefit; but now (with the assistance of Troches) I have in the past few weeks preached much every sermon."

CHARLES HEIDSIECK
CHAMPAGNE.
This popular Wine, of which the undersigned are SOLE AGENTS FOR NORTH AMERICA,
Received the First Premium at the
BORDEAUX EXPOSITION IN 1859.
The Medal may be seen by the parties on at our office.
000e T. W. BAVALD & BERARD, 100 Pearl St., N. Y

GARDINER'S
Rheumatic and Neuralgia COMPOUND,

A certain, safe and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Sick Headache. It is an internal remedy, driving out and entirely eradicating the disease, requiring no change in diet or exposure, and is the only article ever offered for the cure of these diseases consistent with safety.

Principal Depot, 61 Dey St., Barker, Hess. F. C. WELLS & CO., 118 Fulton St., New York, Wholesale Agents. Sold by Druggists every where 276-To

JOY TO THE WORLD.
Clothes Washed in One Minute by JOHNSON'S UNION WASHING MACHINE.
Patented April 10, 1860.
PRICE $3 TO $10.
A CHILD CAN OPERATE IT. Washes every spot sure and certain, without soaking or boiling. Call and see it in operation at 427 Broadway, New York, and 512 Fulton St., Brooklyn.
J. JOHNSON & CO.,
000 Proprietors.

NOW WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Grover & Baker's
CELEBRATED NOISELESS
Sewing Machines.
No family can afford to be without one.
635 BROADWAY, N. Y.
000o

Only Twenty-five Cents a Bottle.

Superior Old Tom or London Cordial GIN,
Distilled under the immediate superintendence of Dr. Darby, of London, for sale by the Proprietors,
Wholesale Agents: GODFRY & GLADDING,
61 Cortlandt St., N. Y.
For sale by single bottle or case, by Druggists and Grocers everywhere. Also by J. D. Wyman, 455 Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel, N. Y. 000

Beadle's Dime Books.
THE GREAT FRONTIER
AND BORDER STORIES,
By Edward S. Ellis, Esq.
SETH JONES;
Or, The Captive of the Frontier.
HELL-ROOSTER, TRAPPER;
Or, Love in the Far North-West.
THE FRONTIER ANGEL;
A Romance of Kentucky Rangers' Love
Just Published,
NAT TODD;
OR, THE FATE OF THE SIOUX CAPTIVE.
A Romance of unique heartyard interest.—Life, Adventure, Love and Daring Deeds Abound in the Wild or the Far North-West, in the Great Trail.
For sale at all News Depots.
Single copies sent, postpaid, on receipt of Ten Cents.
BEADLE & CO.,
279o General Dime Book Publishers, New York.

AYER'S
Ague Cure,
FOR THE SPEEDY CURE OF
Intermittent Fever, or Fever and Ague, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Headache, or Bilious Headache, and Bilious Fever, indeed for the whole class of Diseases originating in Biliary Derangement, caused by the miasma of miasmatic Countries.

No remedy has ever been called for by the necessities of Ague, so speedily and thoroughly as this. Wherever it is used Ague, and all the fevers it establishes in city, village or fast country that it will eradicate the disease, and with assurance, confided in proof, that no harm can arise from its use in any quantity.

That which prevents from or prevents this disorder must be of immense service in the communities where it prevails. Such is the fact with this remedy. It not only expels the poison which the system has already taken, but shields all the baleful distemper. This Cure is the only sure preventive of Fever and Ague. By the system it so thoroughly renovates the development of the disease it takes on the first approach of the premonitory symptoms. It is not only the best remedy ever yet discovered for the class of complaints, but also the cheapest. Two doses generally are enough for a doubt brings it within the reach of everybody; and in those cases of obstinate character, where long-continued chills have fixed the system in habits of sport and periodicity. A great superiority of this remedy over any other yet known is that it produces no after-sickness or other inconvenience to that it contains no Quinine or Mineral, consequently no produces no deafness or other injurious effects whatever upon the constitution. These cured by it are left as healthy as if they had never had the disease.

Fevers of the Spring are invariably the consequence of the neglected or ineffectual cure of Autumn Fevers. Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Jaundice, Nervousness, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Headache, Blindness, Toothache, Earache, Catarrh, Asthma, Palpitation, Pain in the Side, Affection of the organs, Hysterics, Pain in the Bowels, Colic, Paralysis and Derangement of the Stomach, and all Nervous Affections, which originate in this cause, put as the intermittent type or become periodical. Under the influence of this Cure they disappear, and consequently cease to afflict.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, and sold by all Druggists everywhere. 277

FOR THE TOILET.

Our readers will notice the advertisement of Dr. Benedict, a well-known druggist of Boston, of long established reputation. His Bath Brick is an excellent preparation for the purpose, and has been largely approved. This with the Kathiluo, for allaying irritation of the skin—the famous cosmetic, for the Hair, and a bottle of exquisite perfume, are nearly put up in boxes convenient for home use, and adapted for travellers. Dr. Benedict's reputation as a scientific druggist we in his productions reliable.—N. Y. Advocate and Journal.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of American People,
AND THE EARLY MELANCHOLY DECLINE OF CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH.
Just published by
DR. STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Insomnia and Consumption, the Prevention of the Vital Fluids, the Impurities of the Blood, Loss of Appetite, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

This is a most startling book, and is the result of thirty years' experience of the author in more than ten thousand cases of this class of diseases. It has been written, not from conclusions and philanthropic motives, and appeals to the common sense of every reader. Every man, woman and child should read it. Sent by mail, free of postage, to any address, on receipt of FIFTEEN CENTS. Address, BARRE, and a pamphlet to clear the throats and necks for children. Sent free by mail. Address as above immediately effect.

Feil not to Send and get this Book.
ADDRESS
DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, 222 Fourth Street, corner of 3d Street, Parent and Lungs, No. 99 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y.

The Union Clothes Dryer.
A New Invention—Useful, Cheap and Ornamental.

By which Clothes in large quantities may be dried in a yard, a room, or on the roof of a house. Can be put up and taken down in one minute without disturbing the lawn. When not in use it can be compressed into a small compass and kept in a closet. No family should be without this article.

Agents wanted in all parts of the United States.

The Union Clothes Dryer is pronounced by all unprejudiced persons to be one of the most useful and ornamental inventions of the age.

For sale by J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors,
427 Broadway (near Grand St.), New York, and 512 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dr. Marshall's Headache and Catarrh Snuff
HAS proved itself to many physicians and invalids a remedy known to be the best article yet introduced for curing the Catarrh, Cold in the Head, the Headache, Neuralgia, Sore Throat, Sore Eyes, and all circulations, strengthens the Glands and gives a healthy action to the whole system. For Circulars of the Agencies of the Proprietor, CHARLES BOKEN, is to every dealer. Sold by all Druggists. 27-o4 fair match for his daughter? Rich and influential, as he knew the family to be, could he anywhere find for Lucia a more suitable connection? And besides, after all that had happened, that might happen, would it be politic to marry his daughter to Andrea, and thus renew that feud, which was the very thing most obnoxious to the safety of the republic? He knew the character of the Pepoli well. It was not to be doubted but that one and all would, in such a case, look upon him as a traitor, espouse their young kinsman's cause, and—what might be the result?

GRAND BALL IN HONOR OF THE INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN, IN THE HALL ESPECIALLY ERECTED FOR THE OCCASION ADJOINING THE CITY HALL, WASHINGTON CITY, D. C., ON MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 4, 1861.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 285.

SANTA LUCIA.

(Continued from page 276.)

"Oh, Venice! oh, my child!" he groaned aloud, in the trouble and perplexity of his heart; "would that I could die, and leave ye both in peace."

Fain would Lucia have thrown herself on his bosom and soothed him, as she had been wont of late to do, but now she dared not. She could only cover her face with her hands, and pray for herself and him; had she not added another drop of bitterness to his cup? would Heaven forgive her for her undutifulness? would she ever be allowed to be happy with Emanuel, since even her love for him had been a crime?

Broken-hearted, and without one kind word from her father, she retired to her room. Alas! it was not to sleep. With streaming eyes, and her long dark locks thrown off from her burning temples, she walked to and fro in the moonlight, raising her clasped hands to Heaven in an agony of supplication.

"Oh, God! give me strength. I do not ask for happiness; I only ask for courage to bear my sorrow. I am so weak! Mary, mother, have pity, and intercede for me."

Thus, brokenly, and with low sobs, she raised her voice to God—the brave, struggling voice of a woman who would fain suffer His will and be patient.

When the morning dawned she dressed herself, and sitting down, wrote the following letter:

"Emanuel—You know how well I have loved you; you and God only ever can know. Knowing this, you will not think I am faithless to you, even though I obey my father's wishes, and give my hand to another. Never seek to see me, or to send me a token of thy love or remembrance; it would make me too unhappy, would be harmful to both of us, and I would wish now to fulfil my duty to my husband. All the love of my youth and happiness are yours, yours only, yours ever, my Emanuel; but these are past—and as a maiden who takes the veil, and looks on the faces of her friends for the last time, so do I look now on those bygone days, and after to-day must never, never remember them more. Be strong, oh! my Emanuel—be strong, and live for others, and for your country. I could have borne this better hadst thou been here, and thy home was happier; but even now I can bear it with the help of Heaven. Emanuel, mine whilst I write this, mine no longer when the ink is dry, farewell! My love, my youth, and hope and happiness, farewell!"

As the count passed out from his room in the morning, Lucia met him; and with her large, sad, beautiful eyes raised to his, said,

"Forgive me, father, and give me your blessing. I am ready to obey you in all things, as a loving daughter should; say that I am forgiven."

"We must speak of these things another time," he answered. "I have no time to stop now to listen to your recantations; better had you come to this opinion last night, you would have saved me a great grief."

He would have gone, but she caught his hand imploringly.

"Your forgiveness, your blessing, father, before you go, that I may spend the day in peace."

He pressed his other hand lightly on her head, murmured a short benediction, and passed into the streets.

CHAPTER VI.—SORROW AND JOY.

That day was passed by Lucia in a lethargy of despair. She went about the house like one struck with sudden melancholy madness: now murmuring a few words to herself—now moving a chair or book without any purpose—now covering her face with her hands, and sobbing without tears. Tears were too great a luxury for grief like hers. An English girl, under the circumstances, would have behaved very differently. If she had spirit, and really loved the man, she would have ran off, and trusted to Providence to make it all right with plethoric papa afterwards; but if she had only engaged herself to him, because he happened to propose to her, and she saw no better prospect of settlement in the way, or because she fancied she liked him well enough, the matter would have been taken very much of course, and the trifling regret soon swallowed up in equally trifling pleasures. But in Italy it is otherwise. A woman is either wholly indifferent to morality and the outer world, or she is virtuous as an angel, and true as Heaven. The universal character is less that of mediocre goodness than it is with us; there is more depth of passion—less abiding by the conventionalities of society. It will therefore, perhaps, be difficult to comprehend Lucia's intense devotion to her lover, and passive sacrifice to her father's wishes. But those who can love as she did, religiously, entirely—and those only—seeing clearly where their duty lies, can walk straight to it, ay, even leave behind sweet pastures, cool waters and flowery groves, where nightingales sing, to wander, footsore and heart-weary, over rugged rocks, into the howling wilderness.

Alas! poor Lucia.

Evening came, the soft spring evening of the south, with hazy skies, and gentle breezes from the encircling sea. Lucia shut herself up in her room, and took out Emanuel's portrait.

"Mine to-day," she whispered; "my own, my best, my beautiful, let me bid thee farewell, farewell for ever!"

She held it to her lips, to her bosom, murmuring to herself that fond, forbidden name, prayed over it, kissed it again and again; and then, when she had folded round it a lock of her dark, soft hair, and placed both in the letter, that letter which was to bear such sorrowful tidings to him, relief came, and she wept at last.

"Lucia!"

Was that his spirit calling her? Thrilled, electrified by the sound of a voice that was to her as a voice from the grave, her tears ceased, and the picture fell from her powerless hands.

It was indeed Emanuel; Emanuel changed, emaciated, careworn; but her own Emanuel still. The story of his escape was short. The fortress in which he had been confined had been taken by the Venetians; was still in their hands; and he, with many others, had hastened to the defence of their native city, for the danger threatening Venice was great. Without assistance from France or England, and speedy assistance, there was no hope—no alternative but a siege. Their fortresses could not be held for want of men; and ammunition and arms alike were wanting at home. Of all the late events young Pepoli had heard; and, having hastily embraced his parents, and the Signora Emilia, he rushed to Valletti's Palace.

"Think, my Lucia," he said, "think of the joy I felt in being able to meet you openly, as becomes an honest man. Your father—take me to him; let us know each other? I am impatient to hear him call me his son!"

It was a hard task for Lucia to tell her tale of despair, but she did it unfalteringly.

"We must see each other no more; and think only of our duty, Emanuel," she said, gently; "others have as much to bear—"

"No, by heavens!" cried the young man, with a vehement burst of passion; "it is too much. To think that I should have lived through those wretched months, enduring cold and hunger, and insolent jailors, and such misery! oh, Lucia, it makes me sick at heart to think of it. Nothing to give me a hope or happy thought but your memory, nothing to cheer me, nothing to hope for but that; and now home, friends, country, will be more barren—more cruel than the oppressor's prison. Would that they had never, never been restored to me."

He threw himself before her, and sobbed aloud, with his head upon her knees; and so, with her arms twined around his neck, they wept together till twilight faded, and night came. Then Lucia whispered,

"You must go, Emanuel. Speak to me; call me yours once more, and bid me farewell."

"I cannot—I cannot part from you, Lucia. You love me truly; let us always keep together—"

"Duty—home," she said, entreatingly.

"Do you think it a duty sent from heaven that should part us? Do not the angels love there? and is not our love as deep and pure as theirs? and home, Lucia, have we any home apart? Is any country our country, unless we share it together? For you will always love me. I shall never love you less."

"Oh, go! go! You tempt me too much, Emanuel. Think of the dangers that threaten us all. Is this a time to talk of leaving Venice? Think how much you are needed, how much you may do; for my sake, be brave, and forget everything else except the perils of Venice. I know you are courageous, Emanuel, help us all."

Her words aroused him; she had touched the right chord at last.

"God forgive me," he cried, "Lucia, bless you! We part; but not for long. Whatever comes, never fear, I am near you to protect you and watch over you always."

And so they parted, those warm, young, sorrowful hearts, parted with no hope of meeting again, save as friend meets friend, or brother meets sister. Yet the look of dead calm misery passed away from Lucia's face. She had seen him—he was near her; come what might, that consolation could never be taken from her.

But a consolation was at hand of which she little dreamed. The following day her father called her to him and said,

"Lucia, your underhand engagement to Emanuel Pepoli pained me greatly; but you are a good child, and have showed yourself obedient to my commands. It is, however, more suitable to my wishes and convenient to the interests of the family that, since the young man has returned, the engagement should not be broken off. Therefore, if he wish for my consent, he may have it; and mind, Lucia, if ever you have children of your own who deceive you, treat them as leniently as I have done you."

Poor Lucia! She received her father's coolly expressed policy as if it had been the kindest, most sacrificing affection in the world, weeping for joy upon his breast, and kissing his hands with murmured blessings, as though he had been an angel sent from heaven.

When good news comes to us we love the messenger with all our hearts, and feel a tenderness for him ever after, no matter who he be. We are brimful of curiosity and sympathy for all the world, not liking to see a child cry, or a fly caught in a spider's web. Everything ought to be happy and overjoyed as ourselves.

So it was with Lucia. Her father had bartered and bargained her away to suit his interests as he would have done a horse; ready, at one moment, to see her married, brokenhearted, to a man twice her age that she did not love; at another, to restore her to her lover, because he was the nobler and the richer of the two. Yet she, knowing happily nothing of his motives, only feeling that he had lifted her from the utmost misery to perfect happiness, loved him for ever after with double fondness and undying gratitude.

Of the young lovers' happiness, why need we say much? If their meeting under sorrow had been touching, their meeting under joy was still more so. Love and grief had deepened the tenderness and strength of their characters, and their affection was no longer the ardent love of youth and maiden, but the holy and refined passion of a thoughtful woman and a brave man. Besides, love was no longer the one interest and object in their lives; they had grown less egotistical; less wrapt in their own little world of joy and sorrow, and entered into the duties before them with courageous, unswerving hearts.

And both had duties before them. Duties, and dangers, and trials, which they met unshrinkingly.

CHAPTER VII.—THE SIEGE.

The siege of Venice began. Alas! it was but the old, old story of the weak trampled down by the strong, and the fatal struggles of liberty against oppression. The universal spirit which had stirred the hearts of the Venetians was of the bravest, most heroic, most self-sacrificing; but their enemies were as thousands to their hundreds, and no mere bravery or skill could have saved the devoted city. The nations, who might have helped her, refrained from policy or weakness; and, although all Europe looked on in admiration, not a hand was raised in her cause. Haynau was the general deputed by the Austrians as commander of the besieging forces, and his hateful name inspired the Venetians with the utmost and sternest resolve. His conditions of surrender were unanimously refused, as were also those of Radetzky; and the fortress of Malghera abandoned, all their force and strength was concentrated on Venice. The bombardment was furious, and it seemed as if the lovely city, the Queen of the Adriatic, must fall, and be known no more in history. But in spite of all, in spite of their burning homes and devastated churches, and scanty food, the people were calm and resigned. The noble Manin possessed the confidence of all, and they were content to suffer, if need be, die with him. He was worthy of that confidence.

Count Valletti had rightly said that Lucia might, ere long, need a protector. The harass of mind and over-exertion of body that he had endured of late told quickly on the old man, and he, who so lately had been as erect and active as any man in Venice, now lay on his dying bed, over which hung Lucia and Emanuel, weeping. They were the only mourners, for the times were too terrible to permit of the fulfilment of private duties and the indulgence of family sorrow.

"Alas!" said the dying man, as the sound of the enemy's guns troubled his last moments, "cannot I die in peace? Oh, children! always love your country, and strive for its freedom and happiness. Never bow your head to the oppressor, and if things come to the worst, quit Venice rather than live in dishonor. Quit it, or die. Death or exile. Ah! you are young and love each other; you will choose the latter. Well, you will do wisely; but never forget to offer a mass for my soul. I have been a hard man, and my heart has lately been full of hatred and passion, God forgive me; but I have always loved you, Lucia. Lucia, come closer to me; let me look upon your face once more. Say, have I not always loved you?"

"Oh, yes! oh, yes!" sobbed Lucia on his bosom.

"And, Lucia, wherever you go, take with you your mother's picture. Take it, or bury it in the coffin with me. Ah, Leonora! I was not always kind to thee; but I loved thee till the last. Leonora, forgive! forgive! I come to thee!"

For some minutes he murmured thus to himself, and then, exhausted, sank back in the arms of Emanuel, and died quietly as a tired child would fall asleep.

Old Caterina, in her faithful love for her young mistress, worn out though she was by nursing, took upon herself the last offices for the dead, and that same evening Lucia allowed herself to be taken to Emanuel's home. The proud Count Paul, his somewhat frivolous French wife, his delicate, meek-eyed, little daughter, Maddalena, all received the grief-stricken girl with the utmost affection. Her sorrow, her beauty, her gentle firmness, and, above all, her devotion to their Emanuel, endeared her to them all, and that night she slept sweetly and securely in Maddalena's room, with the child's arms around her, feeling already that, come what might, she had found a home. You may be sure that Signora Emilia had, before this, made acquaintance with her darling's betrothed; but that active and good-hearted lady had her small weaknesses, and one of these was jealousy where her affections were concerned. So proudly and fondly did she love her nephew, that no crowned queen would have been allowed by her to be good enough for him; and though she fully acknowledged Lucia's good qualities, she was never so loving to her as to the little invalid, Maddalena, and occasionally preached to her on the obedience and duty of wife to husband. Ah, Emilia! thy heart is good; but not great enough to understand such a nature as Lucia's.

The day after Count Valletti's funeral, Emanuel drew his betrothed aside, and said,

"Lucia, my duties at the forts, as gunner, have separated me much from you, will separate us still more. Who knows but that my duty may take me from you for ever?"

She looked up imploringly into his face.

"You will not leave me. You will not leave us?" she said.

"You do not understand me, love. I may fall in the defence of Venice. We all stand the same chance, and we must learn to look on death without fear."

"Oh, I do not fear!" she cried passionately; "I have no fear of death; but I would not live alone. I would not live if—if you were to die, Emanuel. Those dreadful cannon—can nothing be done—no honorable terms be made?"

"Hush, Lucia, would you have us disgrace ourselves? No, we must fight to the last."

She had thrown herself, weeping bitterly, on his bosom; but now she stood up before him, and, holding his hands, said gently and resolutely,

"Emanuel, I am not a coward. I feel as an Italian woman must and ought to feel, that our cause is good and right in the sight of Heaven, and worthy of being upheld till not a man is left in Venice to hear the scorn of the conquerors. But, my Emanuel, speaking as a Christian and as a woman only, not remembering the blood in my veins and the name I bear, I cannot but feel it is wrong to struggle when there is no longer any hope; to sacrifice old and young, young men and maidens, mothers and sucking babes, hundreds and thousands of innocent lives, merely out of a proud sense of honor, to defy to the last. Look," she said, raising her hand to the window, from whence might be seen the blackened ruins and crumbling walls of the devastated quarters of Carnareggio and Santa Croix, "think of the destruction and death we are bringing on ourselves—to no purpose."

"Alas, Lucia! to no purpose?" Emanuel said, bitterly. "Is this all the comfort you can give me?"

"No, we are not without hope, and I would not have you despair. Listen, love. I was wrong to say 'to no purpose;' no brave and good work can be useless; and hereafter, many, many years hence, our children's children will be animated by the remembrance of our courageous defence, and will struggle and succeed. I do not believe that Venice will be long enslaved; our spirits are no longer cowered by the voice of a tyrant, but we must wait in patience till our time comes. And if it does not come in our own lifetime, oh, my own! my beloved! let us live in innocence and peace, and try to be content."

She threw her arms around his neck, and added,

"Couldst thou not be happy with me in exile, Emanuel?"

"Aye, I would be happy with thee anywhere. I would kneel down to God now and pray for such happiness; but, beloved, I must not—dare not. Whilst the cry of the people is 'Defiance to the last man! to the last ounce of powder! to the last crumb of bread!' would you have me the first to be hissed at for crying 'Surrender?'"

"Ah, no! no!" she replied, with a shudder; "but the cholera and the famine—and the poor little children. Oh, Emanuel! it makes my heart sick to think how they suffer now; how they must suffer by-and-bye."

"Pray God, we may have relief! Think of our fleet, Lucia; it has already brought us wine, and it may do more; and Lucia, my tender, brave, noble girl, whatever sufferings come, let us share them together. There is no longer time for delay, be my wife, be my wife to-day; to-morrow we must not count as ours."

She answered only by clinging to him more fondly, and that same day, almost at the same hour, they were married—she in her mourning attire, he in his soldier's suit. There was no festival, no strewing of flowers, no breaking of wine cups; but Lucia Valletti became the wife of Emanuel Pepoli amidst the booming sound of guns, the falling of blazing houses, and the silent, stern despair of a brave people.

"My own, henceforth—my own in exile, in life or death, my own for evermore."

And the husband blessed his young wife, looked into her sweet eyes to gather hope, kissed her lips, and returned to his duty.

CHAPTER VIII.—THE END OF THE STRUGGLE.

Cholera in the dwelling-houses; whole families lying dead, and no hands to bury them, no eyes to weep for them; desolated homes and empty churches; flames rising in all parts of the city, from the bombs and bullets of the enemy; no food but vegetables, and a scanty morsel of bread; children weeping for hunger; stern soldiers weeping over their failing store of ammunition; despondency written on the countenances of the best and bravest. Oh, it was a terrible time in Venice! terrible for the strong man, the delicate woman, the helpless babe! terrible for the patriot, the wife, the mother!

But this agony was soon to end. There comes a time when the truly heroic man, who, for a cause which he feels to be true and good in the eyes of God and the world, has long and ardently striven, with brain, and nerve, and blood, at last sees that His will is not with him, and that he must desist, and bear in patience. Such a man will never despair; he knows there is a time appointed on this earth for good as well as for evil, and that, sooner or later, the good cause his heart so loved will prosper. He does not lose faith or religious fervor, but he is content to wait in patience, go to his rest, if Heaven so willed, and trust that another and fitter man will perfect his work. We think a book ought to be written, called "Unsuccessful Heroes." We should then see how much has been done by those that the world never heard of, to whom it never bowed the head, or raised the statue. Alas! the book of successful heroes is full of pitiable weaknesses, humiliating disclosures, ignoble small acts. Would not the history of the unsuccessful ones be a better, purer book, think you? What a lesson of sweet patience under disappointments, of earnest endeavor in the face of adverse circumstances, of meek contentment and humility, such a book would give us! But it would make us proud too—proud over our honor, over our good faith, over our domestic virtues; not proud of them—that would be but abject self-sufficiency, but watchful over them, watchful against ourselves. Oh! why does not somebody write such a book? The career of Manin, the self-devoted and noble Venetian patriot, suggested these thoughts to us. So long as a spark of hope was left, he was as firm as adamant to the cause of freedom; but when there was no longer hope, when he knew that a generous and confiding people must be sacrificed by a continued resistance, then the true soul of the hero shone forth, and he bowed his head to the will of God.

The capitulation, on terms more favorable than could be expected, was signed on the 24th of August, 1848, and on that very day the last morsel of provision was finished in Venice. There were still hearts who would have held out to the last, who would have braved starvation willingly rather than surrender; not a murmur of discontent, however, was heard, such was the popular love and trust in Manin. All those who had borne arms in the defence of the city were ordered to leave it in four days, and many chose voluntary exile, preferring rather the land of the stranger, than a home where freedom was not. But the thought that could alone console them, in looking for the last time on their fair home by the shores of the Adriatic, was this—the last struggle of the Venetians could never be mentioned by the world with dishonor.

CHAPTER IX.—SANTA LUCIA, ADDIO!

A French steamer stood in the port ready to sail; and thither, on the 3rd of October, a sad procession bended their steps. Amongst them were the Count Paul Pepoli, his wife and daughter, Emanuel and the gentle Lucia, with others of the chief families in Venice. The men walked with firm step, and dark, overcast brows; the women pale and trembling, but without tears. Around were gathered a crowd of the poorer class, who followed in deep but undemonstrative grief; they dared not be demonstrative now, for the triumphant Austrian soldiery filled the streets. Did we say the women were pale and trembling? Not all. There was one who walked towards that foreign steamer with lofty head and jaunty step, as though on a festival day, whose eyes were wide open and bright and hard; it was the Signora Emilia. She kept beside Emanuel, saying to him ever and anon short careless speeches, looking on his face and holding one of hands tight in hers. Soon they reached the vessel. Then, when the people saw their brave leaders enter it one by one, a low, wailing sob broke forth. Lucia disengaged her hand from her husband's arms and advanced towards the crowd.

"Dear friends and fellow-citizens," she said, sweetly, "do not weep for us, God will protect us. The Holy Virgin bless you all! Pray for us, for we shall never forget you. Farewell!"

She would have turned away, for her heart was bursting, but a string of women, each leading a child, formed themselves in a circle round her, and falling on their knees, chaunted forth, in the impassioned cadences of the south:

"Not so shalt thou leave us. We have not forgotten who it was that clothed us in the time of our want, that fed us when we were hungry, nursed us when we were sick, ministered to us, comforted our children, blest us all! Thou wert the angel who brought consolation with thee, who forgot thy own wants so long as there was a crying child to need thee; who wert reared in luxury, but were content to share our utmost needs and distresses; who feared not the pestilence that walked in darkness; who came unharmed through pestilence, and famine, and danger, because God and the Virgin were with thee. Santa Lucia—for we know that thou art holy and beloved of heaven—we must bless thee before thou leavest us for ever; our children must bless thee and receive thy blessing. Sister—good, true, brave-hearted woman—sweet sister, angelic comforter, Santa Lucia, we call to God the Father, God the Son, and the Virgin Mary, to bless thee, thy husband, thy children, thy house, and thy name for ever! Forget us not. Sweet sister, Santa Lucia, farewell, farewell!"

And the innocent children, each dressed in humble but clean robes of white, stretched out their little hands with an offering of vine leaves and flowers, and echoed, as their mothers had taught them—

"Sister Lucia, Santa Lucia, the Virgin save thee—Farewell!"

One by one the children were lifted to her heart; each little face was raised to her lips, and fervently though brokenly blessed, then with their offerings in her hands, she was led, or rather carried by her husband into the vessel. Her feelings could no longer be controlled there, and leaning on his shoulder, she wept bitterly.

Another trial awaited her. Emanuel now noticed that the Signora Emilia still lingered on the shore, although the vessel was on the point of sailing. Hastily whispering a few soothing words to his wife, he descended the gangway and seized his aunt's arm, before she was aware of his approach.

"Come," he said, quickly, "there is no time to spare. Wave your hand to them, say adieu, and come with me. Of what use to linger? the pang of parting must come."

She turned round sharply, and confronted him.

"No, nephew Emanuel," she answered in a voice of suppressed emotion; "no, I shall not come with you."

He was too surprised to speak.

"Ah! did you think I should leave Venice? No, no, Emanuel! You are young and have a wife; you can be happy in exile; I could not. I have fought for Venice as well as a woman could, and though she is broken down by fire and wrath, and though her streets swarm with the conqueror's minions, I will not leave her! Do you think I fear them? Not I; and if the time come, I will fight for you all again."

"But you are not safe."

She laughed a little hysterically.

"Safe! Who dares to touch me? And my husband, poor man, is as safe here as anywhere else, for he is harmless as a baby. Yes, my Emanuel, I shall live here till my time comes to die, and if I never see you again, do not let us make ourselves foolish; don't cry, Emanuel, I cannot bear it. Why, if I never see you again, I may do so in heaven, you know; and my Francesco will come and see me sometimes. I shall not be forsaken or miserable. You can do without your old aunt, boy; think of your fair young wife, and cease weeping."

But Emanuel was too overcome now to be easily calmed. The events of the last few days had been borne in stolid self-control. Next to Lucia and Maddalena, perhaps he loved his aunt better than any one else in the world. No wonder the thought of parting with her caused the pent up tears to flow.

She laid her hand caressingly over his dark hair, and added, in a softer key, perhaps the softest she had ever used in her life:

"Thy mother has not loved thee better than I have done, my Emanuel; I should have grieved more perhaps at parting from thee hadst thou wept less. But never be unhappy for thinking of me, and teach thy children to prattle to thee of thy old fond aunt Emilia. It will make me cheerful to hear of your well being. Ah! don't say farewell; kiss me and go; I cannot bear that word."

They parted. The trim, rounded figure in scarlet and blue hastened home, and no one saw anything more of her that day. Emanuel joined his wife, and the two, hand in hand, watched the towers and campanilla of St. Mare fade from their sight, as the steamer sailed out of the Lagune.

Both were calm, though now and then a large tear fell. When, however, nothing could be seen of the beautiful home of their childhood, of their love and happiness, of their love and sorrow and endeavor, Emanuel stretched out his hand towards the horizon from whence it had disappeared, and cried aloud:

"Ah! Venice, we shall see thee no more; no more struggle for thee; no more call thee ours, since we could not keep thee from the thraldom of the despot. Oh, God! it is hard."

"No," Lucia said, with a voice of sweet resignation, "do not say it is hard, Emanuel, it is not so hard for us as for some—some who have been left utterly desolate; we have each other to live for. Cannot we find another home? So long as we are together, any place in the world is home to me."

He bent down and kissed her tranquil, earnest brow.

"Santa Lucia," he whispered, "they called thee rightly so. God make me worthy of thee!"

THE END.

SOLDIERS GUARDING THE BUILDING IN WHICH THE INAUGURATION BALL WAS HELD.

The military precautions which had prevailed during the whole day were continued during the evening and night. A troop of Artillery was detailed to guard the ball building, adjoining the Court House, and the fair ladies glided in the mazy figures of the dance under the protection of the Government troops.

U. S. SOLDIERS ON THE ROOF OF ADAMS'S EXPRESS DURING THE INAUGURATION.

It was deemed expedient by that astute tactician, General Winfield Scott, to take extraordinary precautions on the day of the Inauguration of President Lincoln. United States Soldiers were stationed at all salient points, and even on the tops of houses at prominent places for observation. Our engraving represents a party of soldiers detailed for the roof of Adams's Express Establishment.

FOREIGN NEWS AND GOSSIP.

A rascally police constable in Ireland was recently arrested at Ballincurra, on the double charge of perjury and arson, on which he will be tried at the next assizes. He set a rick of hay and another of straw on fire, arrested two laborers, and charged them home with the act, producing a hat which he swore was left behind by one of them. He then called a woman to support his evidence, when she swore he was the incendiary; that she gave him the hat, and that he committed the act and fabricated the charge to obtain promotion.

A large carp was caught recently in a pond of the chateau of Le Beauviere, near Bethune (Pas de Calais), France; and in the side of its head were two gold rings, on one of which was engraven (the characters, however, having become somewhat illegible) Isure de Blerville, 1704.

The total receipts on the 10,002 miles of railway in Great Britain amounted to $69,000,000, for the half year ending December 31st, 1859. The number of passengers amounted to 82,527,594.

Louis Napoleon has made another venture in real estate. He has bought the Princedom of Monaco, of the Prince of that name. The number of inhabitants is about 7,000. The price paid was 4,000,000 francs.

John Brougham has reappeared at the Haymarket Theatre with great success. He is writing a new comedy, founded on American manners, in which he will contrast the two great branches of Anglo Saxondom. An American editor and politician will appear in it.

After all, the freedom of the French press does not seem to have made much progress under Count de Persigny's liberal edict, for we read in the London Court Journal that the extraordinary measure against the press taken by M. de Persigny has excited great astonishment. The Courrier du Dimanche has not only received a warning, but its editor, M. Gregory Ganesco, is suddenly expelled the country, under the law which allows the Government to send away any foreigner without cause assigned. M. Ganesco is a Wallachian, but he has lived many years in France, speaks French like a native, was associated with French literary men, and is altogether, in heart and habits, a Frenchman. He was the proprietor as well as the editor of the Courrier du Dimanche, and a part proprietor of Figaro. He received but a few hours' notice to leave, and is already on his way out of the country. The measure is to him one of utter ruin. The article incriminated passed unnoticed in Paris, and we are quite at a loss to say what passage or passages M. Persigny considers "insulting to the Government." He gives no reasons.

The inquest on the child murder at Road, England, will not be reopened, the judge having decided against it. It is currently stated, that although there is no doubt of the oldest daughter being the murderer, yet that there is no direct evidence, and that she has repeatedly shown symptoms of insanity. It is also said that her father is a severe and unreasoning man—hence the crime.

In the Divorce Court, before Sir C. Cresswell, a most singular case was argued. A young lady named Bevan, the daughter of a wealthy physician residing near Liverpool, was in the habit of riding from her father's house to town in an omnibus, of which a young man named McMahon was the conductor. This aspiring youth fell in love with the fair damsel, and importuned her to marry him. Strange to add, she agreed, upon condition that he should get the marriage licence in a false name. He did so, and they were privately married. She immediately left her husband, declaring that he must not claim her for two years. The poor fellow went away disconsolate and without his bride. In the course of a short time the lady's parents discovered the secret marriage, and have applied for a divorce on account of the fraud in the name. It is being argued, but no doubt the marriage will be annulled. It is supposed that the young lady is a little touched in the head.

A remarkable case has lately occurred in London. In November last a woman had her throat cut by a man, John Stephenson, who immediately cut his own. He fell dead—but his victim, after two months careful nursing, recovered, and was able to go about her usual business. Early in February she took cold, and died of bronchitis. A Coroner's inquest was held, and the jury, going back to the primary case, found a verdict of wilful murder against John Stephenson, who had been in his grave two months.

FOREIGN FLOATINGS CAUGHT BY THE WAY.

Precautions against Storms on the Coast.—A System worth knowing.—Admiral Fitzroy's observations on coming storms, and the signs to tell them by, were acted up to on Wednesday week, the following notice being given to Aberdeen, Hull, Yarmouth, Dover, Liverpool, Queenstown, Valentia and Galway (besides other places) by telegraph: "Caution.—Gale threatening from south-west and then northward. Show signal drum."

The French Spoils in China.—The principal objects sent from China by General de Montauban, and which are to be exhibited in the salons of the Pavillon Marsan at the Tuileries, consist of arms, such as sabres, halberds and poignards; a complete uniform of the Emperor of China, comprising a helmet, surmounted by a steel point, similar to the Prussian ones, and having a large pearl in the front; a magnificent dagger, about ten inches in length, the hilt of which is covered with diamonds; a rich caparison for a saddle-horse; a baton of command (corresponding to that of a marshal), and ornamented with three large pieces of jasper; the fittings-up of a Chinese temple, with singular-looking divinities and images; coffers, perfume-burners, an organ made by the Christian missionaries, and which bears the arms of Napoleon III., surrounded by Chinese ornaments of the most whimsical description, &c.

Salmon Hatched in London.—Lieutenant Buckland, the naturalist, writes: "Salmon have been hatched within the walls of our smoke-covered, crowded London. When in the shop of Mr. Lloyd some time ago, he showed me some boxes, in which he was about to commence the experiment of hatching salmon; and on Friday last he showed me seven little beauties, literally 'alive and kicking' in their artificial nursery. They are now nearly three weeks old, and are in good health. Their bodies, about half an inch long, are like those of other young fish. This first recorded instance of salmon hatching in a systematic manner in London, has therefore been achieved under considerable difficulty. The apparatus in which they were hatched is exceedingly simple, being a box filled with stones, which is covered over with fine sand; over this a gentle stream of water is perpetually running, and the supply, depth and swiftness of the current can be regulated by an ingenious series of stopcocks, &c."

Jealousy among Birds.—Mr. White, surgeon, Sherborne, writes thus: "The idea that jealousy is confined only to the human race is wrong; the cat, dog, common fowls, and domestic birds of song, especially the latter, are strongly impregnated with that vicious or choleric malady. Last summer I had a pet goldfinch, a sweet warbler. At that period I had taken a fancy to a canary, which I subsequently purchased, in consequence of its remarkably fine notes. I hung the cages of both birds on either side of my parlor window, and, from that very hour, the goldfinch ceased to sing, moped, and remained at the bottom of the cage. Immediately I left off caressing my new purchase (the canary), and approached the goldfinch, and passed my fingers over the wires of his cage it sprang upon its perch, flew into a most furious rage, pecking with all its might at my finger till exhausted, then fell down, giving a low and sorrowful chirp, and died."

The International Rowing Match.—The challenge of Chambers, the celebrated waterman of the Thames, to row Joshua Ward, of Newburg, United States, a right-away scullers' race of five miles, on the river Hudson, for $2,000 a side, has just been accepted by the American champion. The match is to take place within twenty-five days of the signing of the articles, and is to be conducted in accordance with the regulations published by the Thames Regatta Committee, Chambers stipulating to receive $500 by way of expenses, and to be accompanied by Henry Chater as trainer. Should any difficulty arise as to the proposed locality in which the race is to be decided, Chambers agrees to contend with Ward on one of the rivers of France, allowing him £100 for his travelling expenses from America.

A Desperate Fight with a Fox.—As Archibald Thow, servant to Mr. Scott Milton of Balhall, Brechin, was going away to his work, he heard some disturbance about the henroost, and thinking it might be some dog prowling about, he went to see what was the matter. On entering, however, he was suddenly seized by some ferocious animal; but, being quite dark, he was unable to see what it was. In the scuffle the animal got a firm hold of one of his hands. Archie, nothing daunted—having now but one hand to fight with—got him down, and put his knee on the animal's neck to make him relinquish his hold, but of no avail. Mr. Fox still kept his hold (for it was now evident that it was a huge monster of a fox, by the whisking of the brush in his face). Archie having no other weapon of defence commenced kicking him on the head with his feet, and succeeded in kicking out both his eyes, and in wrenching his hand from the iron grasp, striking the teeth through the flesh. There being no time to lose, he instantly caught the fox by the hind legs and dashed his head against a stone several times. Now, thinking he was dead, he laid him down; but Mr. Fox, not to be done yet, seized Archie by the back of the leg, but being much exhausted, he was not able to send his teeth through the top of his boot. The struggle being now over, Archie caught him by the back, swung him over his shoulder, and carried him home as a trophy of victory. The animal is now being stuffed by Mr. Clift, High street, Brechin.

Undue Influence by a Confessor.—An account was given some time ago of an action having been brought before the Civil Tribunal in Paris, by the heirs of an old lady named Verdelot, who died in 1848, to have declared null and void a will by which she left nearly the whole of her fortune, exceeding 100,000 francs—chiefly in railway shares and bonds—to a certain Abbé Bernard; but their suit was rejected. They appealed to the Imperial Court against this decision, on the ground that the priest had exercised undue influence over the old lady to induce her to make the will. They showed that he became acquainted with her in 1848 (at which time he was attached to the church of St. Roch, but from which he was afterwards dismissed), in consequence of her having employed him to say masses for the repose of the soul of her husband, who had died just before; that he afterwards became very intimate with her, and was her confessor; that at length he went to live in the same house that she did, and continued to do so for many years, until she died; that he kept her relatives and friends from her, and would not even allow them to see her in her last illness, &c. The court, after examining the facts adduced, came to the conclusion that the Abbé Bernard had abusively exercised the influence which, as confessor and friend, he had gained over the old lady to cause her to make the will, and accordingly declared it null and void.

Lord Campbell said he himself heard a judge at Stafford thus sentence a prisoner to death for forgery: "And I trust, through the merits and mediation of our blessed Redeemer, you may experience that mercy in another world which a due regard to the credit of the paper currency of the country forbids you to hope for here."

The magistrates of S—— lately appointed several persons to act as guides to the numerous strangers who visit the locality. A new cemetery was in course of formation, and a stranger observing the number of workmen levelling the soil, asked one of the guides as to the intentions of the operations. "They are making a seminary for the dead," was the reply.

The Great Exhibition in London for 1862.—The exhibition of 1862 will be a very grand one—vastly different in all its characteristics to 1851—which broached an idea, and flung out suggestions which have been worked out into principles to rule the doings of next year. The galleries of fine arts will be unparalleled by anything ever seen in the world; but art will not monopolise, for, by a method of arrangement suggesting itself in the last exhibition, a system of classification will be adopted in science, manufactures and the world's products, which shall at once enable the intelligent speculator to realise, appreciate, compare, and draw conclusions as to the merits, uses and possible development of those branches of the world's doings and products.

Significant Change of Opinion in Russia.—A Warsaw letter states: "Public opinion, which is here generally very silent has been recently aroused by a fact which is somewhat important in a local point of view. Colonel Leuchte has been sent to the fortress Zamosk, to be imprisoned several years. He killed, in a fit of passion several of the peasants on a certain property which the State had made him a present of. In the time of the Emperor Nicholas he would only have received a simple reprimand; but the Emperor Alexander views these affairs in a different light. His Majesty ordered the colonel to be brought before a military tribunal, and, the court having shown itself too lenient, he ordered a fresh trial, which ended in a condemnation."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Hon. John Cochrane was serenaded on Saturday evening at his residence by the Dodworth Band. His four years Congressional duties having expired, his constituents took the opportunity of thus complimenting their eloquent friend and representative. Our citizens cannot do better than make him their Mayor.

A diabolical attempt was made between three and four o'clock on Saturday morning to set fire to a five-storied tenement-house, No. 274 East Houston street. But for the fortunate circumstance of one of the lodgers being ill, there is little doubt but that a large sacrifice of life would have been the result. The villainous incendiary had placed a quantity of rags soaked in camphine under the stairs. There was no fire escape to this wretched trap of death. If Mr. Fouché Kennedy would pay a little attention to these matters it would be advisable. Lincoln's life is now safe, and there are no more Southern arms to seize. Let him therefore set Devoe and Sampson on detecting the plots of the landlords to burn up their unhappy tenants.

A correspondent informs us that the Democrats have by no means agreed to nominate Dr. Elder as their candidate as Mayor of Hoboken. An equally respectable, and in some respects more eligible candidate, will be brought forward at the proper time. Johnson, the present incumbent, so Judge Whitley says, is willing to serve another term, and he has filled the chair so worthily that he deserves the compliment. Peter Reynolds, of the Hoboken Standard, will be the new Postmaster. There cannot be a better man. Judge Whitley will be offered the Consulship to Plymouth. Counsellor Lyons will also receive an appointment.

The notorious slave-ship Cora has been again seized by the authorities, on suspicion of being on the start for another slave voyage. Mr. Barnes, cooper, of this city, is the present owner.

The New York Historical Society held their monthly meeting at their rooms in the Second avenue on the 5th. The attendance was large. President Lincoln was elected an honorary member, and a pitcher was exhibited on which was embossed an admirable medallion profile of George Washington, and which was manufactured in the lifetime of our great founder. Dr. Fischoll then read his paper on the "Inquisition in America." It was a very interesting and admirable composition.

Brigadier General Charles Yates, of the Second Brigade, gave the Second of the Twelfth Regiment lectures at Irving Hall on the evening of the 7th, to a very large and attentive audience. It was on the "Science of Arms as connected with Progress and Civilization." The third and concluding lecture will be by Captain Mansfield Lovell on "Heavy Ordnance and Seacoast Defences." These lectures should be more frequent; indeed, every regiment should have them. It would do more to elevate our soldiery than any other practice the officers could adopt.

Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln gave their first Levee at the White House on the 8th of March. It was a complete crush. Conspicuous among the visitors were Judge Douglas and his beautiful wife, who was the acknowledged belle of the evening. Mrs. Lincoln was supported by her sisters and niece, Miss Edwards, a charming person of some nineteen summers. We have said so much about dresses in our account of the Inauguration Ball that we spare our description here, contenting ourselves by declaring that the Presidential ladies were dressed in exquisite taste—so says the Jenkins of the daily press.

Dr. Vermeule, formerly of New York, but who has lately resided at Newmarket, New Jersey, committed suicide on the morning of the 9th instant, throwing himself before the express train as it darted along with lightning speed, on the Central Railroad, near the Newmarket station. His mind had been much disturbed for some months, but none of his friends ever supposed that he had a design on his own life.

The Inquiry into Policeman Williamson's charges against Superintendent Kennedy has ended in their total rebutting. They were too absurd to be probable. Whatever may be our opinion of Mr. Kennedy's seizing the Southern arms, there can be no question he is a most capable and honest head of the police. A little imperiousness is natural to the position.

Shortly before the sailing of the Cahawba for New Orleans on the 11th a serious accident occurred to a Cuban gentleman named Mondiver, who had gone on board to see two friends off. He was standing near a hatchway, and stepped aside to permit a lady to pass, but in doing so fell through the hatchway to the bottom, receiving, it is feared, fatal injuries. The hatchway was covered with a piece of canvas, loosely attached to the sides, but afforded no protection to the unfortunate young Cuban in his fall. This is not the first dangerous accident caused by crinoline.

William H. Russell, one of the parties implicated in the abstraction of the Indian bonds from the Interior Department, was discharged on the 11th from custody by the Criminal Court in Washington, on the ground that, under the law passed by Congress in 1857, he having given testimony before the Investigating Committee, he was exempt from all penalties which might otherwise be visited upon him. The trial of the other parties, however, will soon proceed.

On Sunday night, the 10th March, a number of rowdies called the Belgians were drinking in a lager bier saloon kept by a man named Rinz, at the corner of Broome and Marion streets. Despite the oft-boasted mildness of lager they grew riotous upon it, and the result was a little German philosophy practically translated by the aid of decanters, chairs, tables and other esoterical arguments. Some of the party were all the worse for their discussion. Eventually four of the Belgian boys were lodged in the station-house.

The official returns of the Central Park have been made up. The season just over had twenty-six skating days, that of 1859 had thirty seven days. In 1859 only 482,000 persons visited it; in 1860 1,085,000, more than double those of the last year. The most remarkable feature is the enormous increase in the crinoline. More than three times the number of ladies visited the park in 1860 than in 1859. We are glad to observe that our fair creatures are beginning to appreciate the importance of exercise.

Anson, who has been condemned to be hanged in New Jersey on the 10th April for poisoning his wife, exhibits the most singular indifference to his fate. He persists in declaring his innocence, and lays the death of the unhappy woman upon the ignorance of her doctor. Numerous applications have been made to Sheriff Francis for admission on the day of execution, but that able and efficient officer has very properly declined acceding to any of these requests.

A lad aged thirteen, named Peter McDermott, was killed on Sunday afternoon, the 10th March, at the entrance of Bergen Tunnel. He had been riding on the cowcatcher of the locomotive when he fell off, and, horrible to relate, was immediately crushed. Fortunately his death was instantaneous. Great blame is attributable to the employés of the railroad for suffering him to ride in such a dangerous position. His parents should commence an action against the company.

The Evening Post is very anxious that the locale of the Post Office should not be moved. This is only natural, although so fish. The best spot for the next twenty years is the Park, or Chambers street. Stewart's marble palace extended to Burton's Theatre would be the most convenient. The Dutch Church is decidedly out of the way now, although very central sixty years ago.

An immense mass meeting had been held in San Francisco in favor of the Union. The idea of forming California into a Pacific independent state is indignantly denied. The general feeling is a determination to stick to the Union while there is a plank left.

The Weatherford (Texas) News gives an account of a remarkable case of female heroism. For some time past a band of Indians have been ravaging the border counties of Texas, spreading desolation and striking terror everywhere. Not long since they drew up before the house of Mr. Eubanks, Palo Pinto county, and were preparing for an attack. The yard was enclosed with pickets about six feet high, but there was not a man on the premises, Mrs. Eubanks being alone with her daughter and several little children. Miss Mary Eubanks, the daughter, with unequalled presence of mind for one so young, seized a shot-gun, put on her brother's hat and placed a bench near the picket-log so as to peer over without exposing her body, and then deliberately fired at the party, which stratagem and heroic conduct doubtless saved her own life and the lives of her mother and little brothers and sisters, as the cowardly scamps immediately fled, no doubt believing the house defended by a body of armed men.

Mrs. Cooley, of Middletown, Va., was found murdered in the meat-house of her husband's plantation on the 2d March. Her colored housemaid is under arrest for the crime.

We are glad to see that the boot and shoe trade is becoming brisker. Last week one thousand six hundred and thirty-eight cases were shipped to San Francisco, and fifty to Australia.

The first flag of the Southern Confederacy was prepared by Commodore Ingraham and Lieutenant Colonel Sayre, and hoisted at Montgomery, Alabama, on the 4th March, at the very minute President Lincoln was being inaugurated.

A fair lady of Boston, named Josephine Hilton, has recovered $3,700 damages against a youth named Yancey Chadburne. It appears, that under promise of marriage, he seduced the lady. Hence his grief and loss of money.

The mother of a little boy, named Henry Dean, has just recovered $5,000 from the Sixth Avenue Railroad Company, for the loss of his toes, which were cut off by the cars, he having fallen in getting on, through the carelessness of the driver in not stopping.

California Exports.—We notice that the ship Moonlight, which sailed from San Francisco for Hong Kong, on the 19th February, was laden in part with 140,000 feet of lumber, 60,000 flasks quicksilver, $160,000 in specie, and 400 deceased Chinamen's remains. The Golden Era says: "It is a pity the Chinamen don't all come so, as they are only fit for manure." When will our authors recollect that a nationality is only a parish, and that pride of birth is only another name for Beadledom?

A new ferryboat was launched from the Stevens's yard on the 11th of March. It is the finest of the whole fleet. It is to be called the W. W. Shippen. Why not name it after his admired and excellent wife? The naming of vessels, feminine themselves in grammar, after men, is an absurdity.

We must say the Harbor Police wander out of their duties when they go into the piscatorial line. We advise them to avoid all interference with shad fishing this season, so far as New Jersey is concerned. The shad poles do not interfere at all with navigation, and if a few hard-working, honest Jerseymen can earn a decent living, why should the rum-drinking politicians who live upon black mail object? At all events their opposition should have no avail.

INAUGURATION OF JEFFERSON DAVIS, PRESIDENT OF THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY, AT MONTGOMERY, ALA. THE CAPITAL OF THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY ON MONDAY, FEB. 18, 1861.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist.—See Page 285.

ERLE GOWER:

OR, THE

SECRET MARRIAGE.

By Pierce Egan,

Author of "The Flower of the Flock," "The Snake in the Grass," &c., &c., &c.

CHAPTER XXXV.

"Yes, life has left him—every busy thought,
Each fiery passion, every strong affection,
The sense of outward ill and inward sorrow,
Are fled at once from the pale trunk before me;
And I have given that which spoke and moved,
Thought, acted, suffer'd, as a living man,
To be a ghastly form of bloody clay,
Soon the foul food for reptiles."—Old Play.

Lord Kingswood passed a terrible night alone in his study.

The communication made to him by Pharisee overwhelmed more than it bewildered him. He believed it, even though he tried to consider it but the loose statement of an intoxicated man, who, in the aberrations of drunkenness, confused the details of the story confided to him.

It was humiliating to him to reflect that, although he only too well knew that the woman he had loved—and yet loving, betrayed—had borne him a child, he had never made a single inquiry respecting its sex.

The circumstances connected with the whole transaction were so base, that in the spring of his married life with Lady Kingswood he was only too glad to let them sink into an obscurity so deep that he hoped they could never again be dragged forth to human gaze.

He had, it is true his compunctious visitings. Conscience will make its voice heard, even in the breasts of the hardened; but alas! his passionate fits of remorse—indulged in when quite alone—were less for the sufferings he had made his victim endure than they were for the hazardous position in which his villainy had placed him. This systematic closing of his mind and memory against every incident connected with his cruel guilt deprived him of the opportunity of becoming acquainted with many minor facts which now would have been of importance to him to be in possession of, and he was, consequently, when the events were reproduced, attended with terrible forewarnings of evil to him, tossed upon a sea of doubt and incertitude, which prevented him actually discrediting any tale thrust upon him.

He was, however, tempted to believe the story told him by Pharisee, for the reason that the latter had received it from some old man living in an obscure neighborhood, and who evidently, when Pharisee met him, was engaged in tracking out Horace Vernon, possibly with the view of making money of the information he possessed. He had mentioned facts which one alone who was in possession of the principal events could have disclosed. His object was clearly not to deceive, but either to gratify the feelings of revenge, originating in some wrong inflicted upon him by Vernon, or the greed of gain.

In any case, he could have no motive, such as Vernon had, to trick or cheat the person most deeply interested in his revelations; and the probabilities, therefore were, that he had spoken the truth—that, indeed, the fair, spirit-like creature he had seen with Vernon in the park and in the salon of the Marquis of Chillingham was his daughter. In one particular this possibility created within his breast a sense of relief. If it were so, his son, Cyril, the son of Lady Kingswood, would still be the heir of his house.

Then, to disturb this impression, the marvellous resemblance which the face of Erle bore to his own and to his ancestors presented itself to him. Was that a coincidence? It might be. A strange one, doubtless, but still not impossible. If this girl, now put forward as his child, were not his daughter, her resemblance to the mystic Lady Maud, the ancestor whose doom was interwoven with the destinies of his race, was even a yet more remarkable coincidence.

Weighing one probability against another, his presumption was in favor of the truth of Pharisee's communication.

But what a terrible fact it brought with it!

His son, Cyril, was in love with the maiden, had met her frequently in the Chace, and always alone. He turned cold and faint as he remembered the hunting-lodge. What might have happened at those meetings he shuddered to imagine.

The girl was young and innocent, and his son, he believed, of an honorable nature; but, alas! the girl's innocence might be her very weakness, and his son's error the result of passion, uninfluenced by dishonorable intentions.

He grew frenzied and distracted by the phantoms his disordered mind conjured up, he judged human nature by the standard of his own fallibility, and was appalled at the conclusion he drew.

Irresolute and vacillatory by nature, especially when in the throes of a sharp difficulty, he yet formed two resolves, neither of which, he felt but too bitterly, could be for a moment delayed. The first was to have an interview with his son, Cyril, the second to summon to his presence the man who had disclosed to Pharisee the remarkable secret he had that night revealed.

The hours passed long and tormentingly until the day dawned, and then removing, so far as the toilet would enable him, the traces of his harassing night's thoughts, he sent a messenger to inquire after his son's health, and a request that he would attend him in his study as early as possible.

The servant found Cyril dressed in walking attire, and on the eve of departing from the house. The man delivered his message, dwelling, as instructed, upon the desire Lord Kingswood had to have an interview with him if he had strength to undergo one.

Cyril made no reply, but proceeded immediately to the library, and entering it, perceived his father pacing it with an excited gait.

Lord Kingswood, the instant his eye lighted upon his son, ceased his disturbed walk, and advancing to him, took him by the hand and gazed into his face.

Cyril was wan rather than pale; the agonies of a desperate mental conflict had left saddening traces upon his features, but the expression they bore now was one of sullen despair mingled with an ugly-looking spirit of determination.

"Cyril, you look pale, agitated, ill," observed Lord Kingswood, "and unhappily the events of last night leave me in no doubt as to the cause. As your future happiness seems to be involved in the proper adjustment of what, after all, can be and must be considered as a vexing and painful episode in your youthful life, I have sent for you to talk with you, to reason with you, to show you that the past must be forgotten——"

"Never, my lord," interposed Cyril, almost fiercely.

"Must be!" cried Lord Kingswood, elevating his voice until his tone became vehement. "Listen to me; do not interpose a remark upon any observation of mine until I request you; you will then understand its object and its proper bearing upon the subject we are about to discuss. I am about to deal plainly with you, I hope that you will be frank with me."

Lord Kingswood paused for a minute. Twice or thrice he essayed the commencement of a sentence, but he found himself unable to articulate and he was compelled abruptly to press his hands over his eyes and pace hurriedly up and down the chamber.

Suddenly he halted, and, by an impatient movement, withdrew his hands from before his face.

"It is folly," he exclaimed, with set teeth, "to betray this weakness. It will ruin all. It is necessary that we should both be calm and firm if we would not see the house of Kingswood topple down upon our heads and crush us beneath its ruins. Cyril, you have, in weak submission to the rash impulses of your youth flung your heart at the feet of a young girl, to you unknown and obscure, because her face happens to be fair. In the delirium and intoxication of your senses you have elevated a boy's inconsiderate passion into the higher, more ennobling, purer and enduring emotion of love."

Cyril waved his hand with a furious movement, and with a stern frown, cried,

"No, my lord. Do not deceive yourself by the cunning whisperings of experience falsely so called. Experience should tell you that there is no court on so pure, so free from dishonorable taint, so unselfish, so holy as first love. Experience has taught me this—it has pointed out to me the wide interval between passion and love, and I have recognised it. I have tested my heart, my lord. I have strained it until my heartstrings have almost cracked. I am not deceived—I love!"

"Mad, impetuous, hasty fool!" exclaimed Lord Kingswood, impetuously. "You know not what you say, even as you do not yet know the characteristics of your nature, the strength of your emotions, or the real waywardness of your fancies. You talk of your experience and what it has taught you: bah! Your lesson is yet to come—it has yet to be conned; you may talk of experience and its suggestions, when, like myself, you have verified the fallacy of youthful aspirations, when you have proved that the love you now invest with such heavenly attributes is but ashes in the mouth and bitterness to the spirit. Love, boy! you do not yet dream that it is but another name for canking misery—that he passes through life the happiest man who is never smitten by it; that it is all the golden qualities of a generous nature heaped into a mass and flung into an unfathomable pool, to return to the surface only in hideous shapes, that it is the gift of a soul, to be returned by treachery, perjury, falsity, the blackest, deepest, basest ingratitude."

Cyril looked at him earnestly and in wonder.

To whom did he especially allude in this wholesale condemnation of woman? He knitted his brows, and said, with a strange tone of voice,

"My lord, do you give to me these assertions as the result of your love for my mother?"

Lord Kingswood started. Lady Kingswood certainly was uppermost in his thoughts when he thus denounced the tender passion, but he had no desire to make such a confession, certainly not to her son.

He waved his hand.

"In such remarks it is not my intention to specify any individual," he said hastily; "I speak in general terms of the folly, and, in short, the madness of giving way to the fascination created by a too warm appreciation of female charms. I counsel you only against being misled by promptings which are nothing more than the instinctive impulses of youth—impulses that require to be watched with care, and controlled and guided to a proper direction. Were we all to heedlessly and recklessly give way to the rash inducements of our first impressions, we should but store up for ourselves abundant sources of future misery. Society forms better arrangements, and wisely admits other considerations into the formation of an union between two young persons of opposite sexes than those of liking. Love is not the only requisite to conquer the happiness of married life, there are others which will compensate for the want of love, but without which love itself can find no happiness. In your coming union with Miss Eleanore Cotton——"

"My lord, speak to me no more about that marriage, it can never take place," interposed Cyril, with firmness.

"It must—it shall!" responded Lord Kingswood, with vehemence. "I have said it—I say it again. I have passed my word to Mr. Cotton that his proposition—his princely proposition—should be entertained. My word, Cyril—and you know that I never submit it to be questioned—at any and every sacrifice, if once passed, I keep. You have already paid the young lady attention, she appears to be much attached to you; society has already recognised the engagement between you. To throw her off now would be unjustifiably cruel; it might break her heart, and thus fasten upon you a crime you would never cease to repent to the last moment of your existence."

Cyril turned sharply to him.

"My lord, if I understood you rightly," he said, with bitterness in his tone, "you characterised woman's nature as a bottomless pool, which returned the love thrown into it transformed into figures of treachery, perjury and faithlessness. If any love I might proffer Miss Eleanore Cotton were to be so repaid, a lack of attention to her on my part would hardly become the crime you suggest."

"Cyril," returned Lord Kingswood, with abrupt sternness, "it is not my intention to discuss this question in a spirit of subtle casuistry with you. You are committed to Miss Eleanore, and you must marry her."

"I cannot, my lord," returned Cyril, firmly.

"There are duties pertaining to your position which you must fulfil!" urged Lord Kingswood. "You have been born to rank, to a name, to an elevated position in this kingdom, in the Government of which I now hold a high and important post. There are sacrifices of the heart, of the affections, of the passions, of the dearest inclinations and the tenderest sympathies, which are exacted sternly and unrelentingly by the position which you hold no less than myself. As a Minister of the Crown, the shadow of doubt must never fall upon my pledged word. As a Kingswood, my plighted faith must be held yet more sacred than life itself."

A low, hysteric laugh burst from Cyril's lips, which smote his father's heart with sudden pain as it fell upon his ears.

"I am a Kingswood," he said, with bitter emphasis. "My faith has been plighted with solemn assertions. Am I not, equally with you, to hold it more sacred than fame, rank, life itself?"

Lord Kingswood clenched his hands, and his heart sank within him. For what had Cyril pledged his faith? Not a mere interchange of love sentiment. Surely he had not engaged in a secret marriage. His heart seemed to suddenly cease to beat, his face and lips blanched, and the room reeled round with him. He staggered back a step or two, but by an almost superhuman effort, controlled the paralysing character of his emotion.

"You are a minor," he gasped. "You can enter into no contract, no pledge, no promise, without my assent. Wanting that, it is null and void, worthless. You cannot bind yourself to an alliance opposed to the traditions of your house. Boy, if you are born to the advantages of rank and fortune, they demand of you that you shall properly and nobly sustain the rights and duties they impose upon you."

"Have the heirs to the name always done this!" asked Cyril, bitterly.

"How dare you question their—my honor," exclaimed his father, wrathfully, the more angrily, perhaps, because he felt most acutely that every argument he hurled at his son was a lash for himself.

"I simply ask, have they done this?" persisted Cyril.

"I can have no hesitation in answering in the affirmative," returned his father, feeling, though he spoke emphatically, that he was resorting to a mean evasion.

"My honor, my lord, is surely then as dear to me as to them," replied Cyril. "Youth cannot attend it immunity. That which would be dishonorable in my actions two years hence, must be equally dishonorable now. My integrity cannot be affected by dates; my honesty and truth cannot be intrinsically valuable at some future period and be worth nothing now. If I, being a minor, can break my plighted sacred word solemnly entrusted to one who is as dear and as necessary to my happiness as the vital principle of my life is to my heart, what is to prevent my breaking a faith not pledged or plighted by me with another? If I am bound by your plighted word to Eleanore Cotton, I am no less bound by my own registered vow to another."

"No; not as my son, as my heir, as the representative of the House of Kingswood. You have no power in you nonage to dispose of your hand unless with my sanction," cried his father, with frantic vehemence.

"Then," exclaimed Cyril, with a passionate burst, "farewell name, rank, position, house, all but her. She will love me, cling to me, for what I am when I am with her, not for what I have been or might become. In honor, in truth, in purity, I have loved her. Equally, in innocence and unselfishness, has she placed her heart, her happiness in my trust. Rather than betray it I will do battle with the world, as other self-reliant men have done. With her in my arms—with her loving affection twining round my heart to sustain and cheer me, I can defy the frown of fate as sturdily as I can meet its smiles shed upon her as upon me with joy and felicity."

"Hold!" almost shrieked his father. "Will nothing destroy this infatuation?"

"Nothing," responded Cyril, coldly and firmly.

"It is false," he cried, wildly. "I will—I must annihilate it. Terrible, frightful as the task you have imposed upon me, I must go through with it."

"It is in vain, my lord," interposed Cyril. "I pray you let me depart in peace. We shall never agree on this distressing subject. You cannot change me."

"But I will," exclaimed Lord Kingswood, with fierce energy. "Listen to me, and tremble."

For a moment he buried his hands in his hair, and bowed his head low down. His whole frame became fearfully convulsed, but he struggled with the spasm, and once more turned his uncovered face to his son to speak with him.

Cyril started when he perceived his father's distorted, livid features, and his glaring eyes. He felt then that some tremendous revelation awaited him, and even as his father had bidden him, he trembled.

Lord Kingswood slowly extended towards him his white and quivering hand.

"Cyril," he exclaimed, in hollow, solemn tones, "the Kingswoods are a doomed race—doomed until one of its descendants, by his own superhuman endurance, his unfaltering spirit, his unwavering faith, his unimpeachable honor, his overpowering energy, shall remove the ban resting upon it. I cannot now enter into the whole of the tradition or any part of it but what relates to myself and to you. I am heart-sore and heart-sick. I would willingly be the humblest soldier, keeping dreary watch in the pathless wastes of the barren regions of Siberia, than that empty mockery the Lord Baron of Kingswood. But I am he, and I must fulfil my destiny as thou thine."

He paused for a moment, and then drew a long breath.

"But recently," he continued, "we stood together beneath the walls of the old hunting-tower yet standing in Kingswood Chace; I pointed out to you a window, at which, at certain times, there appeared to a Kingswood a female face of more than mortal beauty. Such have my ancestors seen—such a face I beheld. It is now more than twenty years past, that, alone, my gun upon my arm, I sauntered, somewhat faint and tired with my sport, within the precincts of that tower. I knew it to be inhabited by an old crone, and possibly the inducement of a draught of cool water drew me thither. I paused beneath the walls suddenly, for my eye was arrested by the face of one young, and so entrancingly beautiful that creature of earth she seemed not to be. She regarded me with as much wonder as I did her, and the expression of her face told me that I had made upon her a scarcely less favorable impression than she had upon me, but even while a pleased smile was yet upon her lips, she started and vanished. At the same moment I observed, standing at the door of the lodge, the elf-like crone, Eldra, who dwelt there. She shook her talon-finger at me, and bade me depart, telling me the heir of Kingswood found within those walls his ruin. I smiled at the old creature's gloomy foreboding, and begged a cup of water. She brought it to me and told me that I had better asked her for a cup of poison, and if I valued my happiness or life, and a peaceful deathbed, never to come near those walls until after I had given my hand in marriage. I laughed and went away. But I came again, for that face, with its wondrous beauty, haunted me; it was like a spell upon me—I could not rest within Kingswood's halls—it floated before me in the day, it smiled upon me in my dreams at night. Mark me, Cyril, I had laughed at the words of the crone, because I was betrothed to Lady Kingswood—to your mother. I knew that I should marry her, and that no idle superstition could affect me or that. I went again, I saw that face, I spoke to it; I said—I know not what. I went again and again to breathe most passionate protestations, and to learn that they had not been uttered without their natural effect. Up to this time she had remained at the window, I had stood upon the turf beneath—we had approached each other no nearer. She was ever there when my advancing footstep, almost noiseless as it was, reached her expectant ear, and she vanished at each interview as unexpectedly and abruptly as she had at first, when I was advised by it of the presence of old Eldra. Suddenly the elf-woman disappeared, and after she had gone, and the hunting-lodge was closed and tenantless, I saw that fair and wondrous creature no more within the precincts of the Chace."

Lord Kingswood, whose features had been rigid and his eyes wild, now displayed an expression of terrible humiliation and shame, so that it was painful for Cyril to look upon him. With a hoarse, unsteady voice, he proceeded rapidly:

"I had a school companion, an associate, one whom I made a more intimate companion than I did others. He resided not many miles from Kingswood. He one day told me of a—fondness—an attachment he had formed for a maiden gentle and beautiful, a—a—he—he would insist on reposing his confidence in me. I sought it not, he—he would not rest until he had introduced me to—the—the creature of his choice. I weakly consented. I found myself face to face—hand to hand, boy!—with the Wonder of Kingswood Chace!"

Cyril groaned, and clutched at a bookcase for support, while his father, shrieking rather than speaking, continued:

"Her beauty slew me—stamped out honor, truth, faith, everything. A year of mad delirium ensued, events crowded on me, crushed me, left me bankrupt in all that a true man holds brightest and dearest."

"But her—what of her?" demanded Cyril, with starting eyes and a half-suffocated tone.

With a laugh like that of a maniac, his father cried,

"She was a mother—deserted and abandoned—a mother, and with one child!"

"Thine?" gasped Cyril.

"Mine!" ejaculated his father, in an unearthly tone.

Cyril pressed his hands upon his temples, and turned his ghastly face to his father.

"That child?" he asked, in an almost inarticulate tone.

"You first beheld in Kingswood Chace," cried his father, hoarsely; "that child is she whom you have dared to love—she—the Wonder of Kingswood Chace. She whom you would make your wife is your sister!"

The household was startled by a wild, piercing scream.

And as well by the frantic ringing of the bell of Lord Kingswood's study.

In a few minutes afterwards, affrighted faces were turned upon each other, and horrid whispers reported through the house that Cyril Kingswood was dead.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

The tongues of mocking maidens are as keen
As the razor's edge invisible,
Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen,
Above the sense of sense so sensible
Seemeth their conference; their conceit hath wings
Fleeter than arrows, wind, thought, swifter things.—Shakespeare.

The words which Erle had spoken to Violet during his interview with her were words of solace, of consolation, of joy, for they were words of hope. Her experience of human nature was necessarily of the most limited character. She saw with the eyes of her own genuine, uncontaminated heart, and believed all other beings, even though some were repulsive in her sight, to be as truthful as herself.

Ishmael had, however, impressed upon her that appearances were deceitful, that men were false, treacherous and cruel in their natures; that their bland words, their tender looks, their softest and sweetest words were cloaks thrown cunningly and skilfully over the most astute artifices to conceal the vilest intentions. Even the aged, though yet vigorous, Miss Virgo had cautioned her against the blandishments of that sex of which Cyril was so handsome a type, and she had also insisted that the more attractive they were to the eye, the more cruelly wicked were their natures.

Incredulous at first, she was gradually goaded into the belief that there were grains of truth in these assertions, and this painful awakening received confirmation from Cyril's conduct to her at the Marquis of Chillingham's mansion.

Before this eventful night her grief had not been of a killing character. It had made her wan and sad, but it had left her a hope that she might yet again meet Cyril, and might—she knew not, cared not how—be restored to him, and pass through her future life with him in the same sweet relations as had subsisted between them when they met and wandered together in Kingswood Chace.

When he turned from her, and with averted eyes refused to meet her passionately appealing gaze, that hope forsook her, and nothing was left to her but despair.

Then she formed and entertained but one yearning wish, that of returning to the hunting-lodge in Kingswood Chace, in which she had been reared, and in the vicinity of which she might live over again, in fervid imagination, the period of her loving intimacy in those sequestered places with Cyril Kingswood.

She was, by the very nature of her education in her forest home, tinctured with superstition, and with intuitive belief in the supernatural. She had dwelt many a time and oft for hours on the strange old picture, carefully preserved in the hunting-lodge, representing a noble looking youth in hunting attire; and in the still moonlight, when she had stolen out into the silent and solemn aisles formed by tall tree-stems, she had seen at times a flitting shadow, which she had, in her fantastic imagining, fashioned into the form of the young hunter in the picture, known to her as the bad Baron of Kingswood, with all his wicked history. She had, too, met Erle Gower in the woods at unexpected moments in the day, the eve, the night. He much resembled the picture she had, through some strange fascination, loved to gaze upon from her childhood, and so she believed that he possessed a spirit-nature, with power to roam on earth as a human being at will.

He, therefore, she believed, had of all others the power to liberate her from the distressful thraldom in which she existed in Ishmael's mansion, and to place her in the only haven of rest henceforth she could know while yet remaining upon earth.

Hence the eagerness with which she sought an interview with him, and from a strange clinging, even in spite of what was said to her, to the belief that he was "the Spirit of the Chace;" hence the confidence she placed in what he had urged upon her.

Faith! The word acted like a magic balm upon her sore and wounded spirit. She had never known distrust until Ishmael had thundered it in her affrighted ears. Her innocence of all guile had made her naturally trustful. The shattering of this sweet confidence was a severe shock, but it was a great joy to her to recover it.

Cyril had never changed in his conduct to her since she had first known him until they had met at the Marquis of Chillingham's, and then, as Erle had suggested, he might have been coerced to act as he had done, even as she herself had been coerced to play the strange part she had all her life enacted.

Yes; she found faith re-enter her heart and infuse itself through her frame like a new, life-giving joy. The dull and gloomy atmosphere which had spread above and around her daily life seemed to be lifted, and amid rents in its pall-like covering she could perceive the unalloyed blue or golden sunshine of a heaven of future felicity.

She, with an alacrity she had not displayed since she quitted the Chace, obeyed the request of Ishmael, and proceeded to her chamber to attire herself for an equestrian ramble. She, for the first time, consciously took more than ordinary pains with her appearance, and when she presented herself to Ishmael to accompany him, he, accustomed as he was to her beauty, marvelled at its brilliancy.

There was a flush upon her cheek, an animation glittering in her eye, and a springiness in her step, which startled him too. But that he knew its origin, it would have greatly pleased him; as it was, he was somewhat disturbed.

He knew that in her heart there had settled itself hope.

Hope! thou first fruits of happiness!
Thou gentle dawning of a bright success!
Thou good preparative; without which our joy
Does work too strong, and, whilst it cures, destroy!

She yet hoped that Cyril would be hers. He resolved not to interfere with that hope, if it would work so marked a change in her as it in so brief a time evidently had; but he equally determined not to foster it, or change his sentiments upon the point, or even his manner towards her, so that in the hour of her deep and certain disappointment she should not be able to tax him with cruelty or deception towards her.

Violet was attired as she had been on the occasion when she appeared in the park with Ishmael and Erle Gower, but she had evidently taken more pains with all those minor points and appointments which help to finish and render perfect any costume.

Her delicate form, so beautiful in its proportions, so graceful in its outline, was exhibited to wondrous advantage in her peculiarly exquisite green habit, and her sweet face was rendered even yet more fascinating than it was naturally by the small, handsomely shaped hat which adorned her head. Then she sat her horse with such firmness and elegance that it was impossible not instantly to select her, even from a closely congregated throng, as the peer among them all.

Ishmael constrained Erle to accompany them, as on the previous occasion he had done, and he contrived that, on entering the park, at a period when it was most thronged by the fashionable world, they should preserve much the same order as they had before observed, Violet being slightly in advance of Erle, with Ishmael a short distance from his side.

As before, the appearance of Violet created a remarkable sensation. The strange hue of her riding habit, so unlike that of any other lady equestrian, the singular beauty of her countenance, and the peculiarity of her position in advance of her companions, and apparently not exchanging a word with either, were features which of themselves would have attracted attention; but when these were allied to the fact that, being evidently distinguished, she was still unknown to everybody who knew, or pretended to know everybody, the excitement and the curiosity were greatly heightened.

Noble young and old, duchesses, countesses and other ladies of rank, wondered who could be the extraordinary young creature, who, being unknown, must be nobody, yet excited even more than the notice which would be caused by a somebody. No one could answer the question, and therefore the hubbub and commotion in the endeavor to ascertain each moment increased.

As before, the gentlemen equestrians followed in a cloud. Too well bred to gallop before her to indulge in a prolonged stare at her, they kept in the rear, satisfied at catching a glimpse of her sweet face through their eyeglasses, held by an unpleasant contortion of their features between the eyebrow and one of the facial muscles, and attracting by their swarming even yet more attention to Violet than her remarkable personal appearance would have commanded.

Erle noticed with a haughty displeasure the thronging horses, the wondering faces of their riders turned towards Violet, and the hurrying of masses of pedestrians on the path, who were all impressed with a belief that they were gazing upon an imperial princess of some great northern empire: and he hastily proposed to Ishmael that they should put their horses to a gallop, press forward, and so escape the inconvenient swarming of curious, and, in his eyes, impertinent gazers.

Ishmael quietly raised his hand in a deprecating manner, and replied,

"No, it is my wish that we proceed thus. I seek the public gaze. I wish to attract the notice of these empty-headed babblers. I court the oft-repeated question, 'Who are they?' In the proper hour I will answer them."

Erle said nothing after this, but he chafed at his position, and his contracted brow exhibited his feelings.

While thus moody, he became conscious of a high-spirited steed prancing in very close proximity to his own, and he turned wrathfully towards the intruder.

Bending towards him and holding out her small gauntleted hand, he beheld Beatrice Stanhope.

She was alone, attended only by her groom, who remained behind with those attending on Ishmael's party. They were compelled to be somewhat actively employed in keeping off horsemen from approaching too close, and, under strict orders, resolutely refused to reply to those who, carried away by their curiosity, put a number of direct questions to them.

Had Erle been skilled in interpreting the tablets of the female face, so quick and variable in its multifarious mutations, he would have read in the features of Beatrice Stanhope certain emotions which would rather have astonished him.

There was a fiery glitter in her eye which betrayed irritation, annoyance, half a dozen of those shades of vexation of which the mind feminine has a store so fertile. Her nostrils were slightly inflated, there was a hectic flush upon her cheek, and her pretty, pulpy lip had a curl upon it more of satire than of scorn, and yet so like the symbol of the latter emotion that it needed a practised eye to determine to which of the two it properly belonged.

Her upper lip trembled, too, betraying a little of that excitement she would fain have concealed. There was likewise the smallest exhibition of temper in the firm handling of her impatient steed, whose proud curvetings were repaid by certain undemonstrative but vigorous applications of whipcord, satisfying him at least that the mind of his mistress was not in that equable condition in which, very unfairly, the minds of all pretty creatures are expected to be.

A smile chased from Eric's expressive features the angry gloom which had clouded them as his eyes fell upon Beatrice Stanhope, and he quickly stretched out his hand, caught hers within it and pressed it.

Eric had a grateful disposition. Beatrice had received him with unaffected kindness, and had treated him with courtesy and attention when he was houseless and, as he believed, friendless, his feelings towards her were, therefore, of a very friendly nature. He was not affected by her personal appearance, but he was by those qualifications which he esteemed to be an ornament to any woman.

"I am very glad to see you," he said, in his rich, pleasant voice.

"It is permitted us to doubt," she replied naïvely. "If I had not been reared with a rude and boisterous brother, and therefore half boy myself, I should have missed the present opportunity of opening the vials of my wrath and pouring them upon your head. I have had really to battle my way through a whole squadron of cavalry forming your escort to grasp the chance of saying a word to you."

"I regret you should have had so much difficulty to encounter with the prospect of so poor a reward," he returned.

She raised the handle of her whip and shook it at him, smiling as she did so.

"Why give me the difficulty? I caught your eye as you passed me," she answered.

"Indeed, I did not see you, or I would have reined in my horse and spoken to you instantly," he rejoined.

"Well, I am expected, of course, to believe you. I will, however, execute my mission, and then relieve you of my tedious company as soon as possible," she returned.

"You wrong yourself and me by that observation," he exclaimed, quickly.

"Oh, fie!" she ejaculated, hastily. "Do I not see how fairly you are companioned side by side with one so extremely beautiful? The society of any other individual, especially one of my own sex, can hardly fail to be to you an encroachment, an intrusion and a bore."

"Again you wrong yourself," he answered, a smile playing on his face.

"You are either, sir, a shameless man flirt—or—or that lady is—your sister."

She indicated Violet with the golden knob of her riding-whip rather than pointed at her.

A slight shade of surprise passed over Eric's features at this remark. It was a style of badinage which Beatrice had not indulged in, at least with him, before.

"That lady is not my sister," he replied, a little seriously.

"Not even a cousin?" she asked, with well assumed archness.

"Not even a cousin," he responded, thoughtfully, for it flashed through his mind that, in the uncertainty of his origin, it was a question he could not honestly answer with decision.

Beatrice heard him with an expression of seriousness upon her countenance. She wished this marvellous beauty had been his sister. She would have even been in a degree comforted if she had stood to him in that much-abused and mistrusted degree of relationship—a cousin; but to be connected to him by no tie of affinity was to be allied to him by a bond of love. A spasm went through her frame at the thought. She, like, alas! too many of her sex, the moment her jealousy was excited, could think and talk of nothing but the object of her mistrust, and that, too, in the shape of a severe cross-examination.

"I have seen the face before," she exclaimed, in her eagerness to learn something about Violet, forgetting what was due to her own dignity. "Pray, can you enlighten me where, Mr. Gower?"

He look at her for a moment steadfastly.

"I cannot," he answered.

"Or will not," she rejoined, gazing back at him fixedly, apparently endeavoring to read in his features the truth as she had shaped it.

He elevated his eyebrows with an expression of astonishment, but he only replied by a slight shake of the head.

"You know Lord Kingswood, I think?" she observed, eyeing him attentively, while she conducted her cross-examination with a woman's consummate skill.

Now his eye gleamed and his brow fell. He bowed stiffly affirmatively.

She observed his peculiarity of manner, but refused to heed it, because her question was the stepping-stone to one the elucidation of which she had set her brother Carlton to obtain.

She bent her face slightly round towards his, and rested her eyes upon his face, as she said,

"You then know, of course, Lady Maud St. Clair?"

She uttered the words rapidly, and enunciated them emphatically.

A flush of crimson mounted to his brow, and he bowed lower than before on assent to hide the scarlet hue spread over his face. Beatrice, with an emotion of vexation, perceived it, and tossed up her head, giving way to a slight ebullition of anger, because he, whom she thought so proud and dignified in his bearing, should blush at the mention of a lifeless doll of a girl, though she was titled and well-descended.

But she had not done yet; she had a purpose to accomplish, and she contrived to hide the disturbed emotion the confession she thus extorted from him had occasioned.

That is to say, many a maiden fair who possesses an interest in some well-looking young gentleman invariably converts an acknowledgment from the said youth that he has the pleasure of being acquainted with a pretty girl, known to the said maiden, into a confession that he has been paying court to the pretty girl, or at least flirting with her. Beatrice was of the same complexion as many a maiden fair, and therefore she was morally convinced that any interviews which might have taken place between Eric and Lady Maud could not have passed over with indifference by either or both. She satisfied herself, therefore, that there was much on this head which it would be needful to make herself mistress of.

She decided at once to make, if possible, the acquaintance of Violet, and with this purpose she, lowering her voice to almost a whisper, said,

"You have no doubt observed the singular resemblance there is between the young lady you are attending and Lady Maud?"

Eric gave a slight start, and at once turned his eyes to Violet's face. She was gazing about her with an air of wonder. An expression of expectation was upon her face, but yet she seemed amused and interested in the scene in which she formed so prominent a part. On previous occasions she had been sad and thoughtful, had gazed straight before her without appearing to notice any object within her vision, and the change she now presented was one which could not fail to strike him. Yet it did not strike him with a tithe of the force which the suggestion of her resemblance to Lady Maud did.

It was not that he recognized the resemblance pointed out by Beatrice, but that he was startled by the vivid recurrence to his memory of the portrait of the Lady Maud which had hung in the bedchamber of Kingswood Hall and the statue in the old library.

As he gazed on Violet, they rose up before his eyes as plainly as if he actually beheld them, and a sudden, strange, cold thrill passed through his frame, which caused him involuntarily to shudder.

Another moment and he had recovered his equanimity, for Beatrice, looking on his changing features with surprise, ejaculated,

"You do not answer me, Mr. Gower. Have I helped you to a discovery which has taken your breath away?"

There was something distasteful to him in her observation, but assuming a calm and indifferent air, he replied,

"You have not deprived me of breath by your discovery, Miss Stanhope, because there ought not to be anything surprising in the resemblance, inasmuch as it is common to find individuals alike in feature but unconnected by any tie of relationship."

Beatrice laughed, and said, a little mischievously,

"A true fact, indeed! Don't be cross with me, Mr. Gower, but even your 'fine Roman' countenance is not without its counterpart—you much resemble the Honorable Cyril Kingswood, and papa insists you are wonderfully like Lord Kingswood."

"Your papa is practised in the art of discernment," suddenly observed Ishmael, in a low but distinct tone, addressing Beatrice.

She was for the moment startled, but with a courteous bend to him, because she instantly conceived that he could help her to her desired intimacy with Violet, she rejoined,

"Papa has been for years a diplomatist; it is a part of his study to scrutinize the features of those with whom he comes in contact. So keen indeed is his appreciation of resemblance, that when he first saw Mr. Gower, he was quite overcome, was he not?" she asked, turning to Eric.

Eric bowed, while Ishmael added, drily,

"If you are speaking of Sir Harris Stanhope, I do not doubt it."

Eric turned to him and exclaimed, hastily,

"I beg a thousand pardons, Miss Beatrice Stanhope, daughter of Sir Harris Stanhope—Mr.—Mr.—Mr. Vernon!"

Beatrice laughed as if she enjoyed his confusion.

"There is a pardon I will never grant, Mr. Gower," she cried.

"What is that?" inquired Ishmael, quickly, as he perceived that she was as much in earnest as in jest.

She slightly colored.

"I can have no hesitation in returning you an answer to that question," she said, readily; "I am greatly smitten with the charms of the young lady who rides in advance of you. I should so like to be honored by her acquaintance!"

Ishmael mused a moment, and then he said,

"She does not visit; but there can be no objection to her receiving visits from you. You will find her a child of nature, and but little acquainted with the world's ways."

"The more refreshing will her society prove to me. I yearn for such a companion," returned Beatrice.

Ishmael motioned her to increase her pace so as to come up with Violet, who had gained some little distance upon them, and when they were at her side he briefly explained the purpose with which he had overtaken her. Violet looked upon the face of Beatrice with some surprise, but more earnestness. Beatrice, with an appearance of frankness and warmth, held out her hand. Violet took it and pressed it, but she was still, it seemed, a little perplexed by the incident.

Ishmael introduced her to Beatrice by the name of Violet, and when Beatrice suggested that she had been put in possession of her Christian name only, Ishmael replied, with some emphasis,

"Her name is Violet. She knows no other."

At this instant Sir Harris Stanhope galloped past. He caught his daughter's eye; he rewarded her with an approving smile, and made a significant gesture, which she understood as instructing her to cultivate the acquaintance she was now making, and she at once proceeded to do so by engaging Violet in conversation, and by drawing her wondering attention to the various equipages passing and repassing, gradually commencing to work her conversation round to the Kingswoods, to learn whether she could extract any information from her respecting Lady Maud's knowledge and opinion of Eric Gower. She was the better enabled to do this, as the Marquis of Chillingham, happening to catch sight of Violet, and immediately subsequently Ishmael, rode up to the side of the latter, in order to gratify an intense curiosity and interest created in his breast by the former.

(To be continued.)

HUMOROUS GLEANINGS.

WHY is a lover like a dog?—Because he bows and he wows.

WHEN is Mr. Smith not Mr. Smith?—When he's missed a brown.

FEW young girls are so inconsolable that their hearts can't be kept afloat by a boy.

IT is said that the Tartars invite a man to drink by gently pulling his ear. A good many of our people will "take a pull" without waiting to have their ears pulled.

A SINGLE letter sometimes makes a great difference in the meaning of a word. In the word "correspondent" the omission of an "r" makes all the difference, as some find it to their cost in the Law Courts.

WHEN Sir Thomas Parkes was pleading against Dr. Sacheverell, the doctor said to him,

"I shall pray God to forgive you."

"And while your hand is in," said Sir Thomas, "remember yourself, good doctor."

A PERT young lawyer once boasted to a member of the bar, that he had received two hundred pounds for speaking in a lawsuit; the other replied, "I received double that sum for keeping silent in that case."

AN apprentice lad who had been misbehaving, one day came in for chastisement, during which his master exclaimed,

"How long will you serve the devil?"

The boy replied, "You know best, sir; I believe my indentures will be out in three months."

A COUNTRY couple, newly married, stopped at a hotel at Brighton a few days ago, and the groom called for some wine. When asked what kind he would have, he replied, "We wants that kind of wine where the corks pop out, and the liquor boils up like soapsuds."

A RAGGED little urchin came to a lady's door, asking for old clothes. She brought him a vest and a pair of trousers, which she thought would be a comfortable fit. The young scapegrace took the garments and examined each; then, with a disconsolate look, said, "There ain't no watch-pocket."

A REVEREND sportsman was once boasting of his infallible skill in finding a hare.

"If," said a Quaker, who was present, "I were a hare, I would take my seat in a place where I should be sure of not being disturbed by thee from the first of January to the last of December."

"Why, where would you go?"

"Into thy study."

A YOUNG officer hearing some one celebrating the exploits of a prince who, in two assaults upon a town had killed six men with his own hand. "Bah," said he, "I would have you know that the very mattresses I sleep upon are stuffed with nothing else but the whiskers of those whom I have sent to slumber in the other world!"

GEORGE I., on a journey to Hanover, stopped at a village in Holland, and while the horses were getting ready he asked for two or three eggs, which were brought him, and charged two hundred florins.

"How is this?" said his majesty, "eggs must be very scarce in this place."

"Pardon me," said the host, "eggs are plenty enough, but kings are scarce."

The king smiled, and ordered the money to be paid.

THERE was a story which Sydney Smith seldom failed to repeat when one of his most agreeable neighbors, whose christian name was Ambrose, was announced. "Do you know how they pronounce Ambrose in Yorkshire? They turn it into Amorous. Once, at Foston, I was told that Amorous Phillips was waiting to speak to me in the hall. 'Let him wait,' said I, deceived by this manner of pronunciation, which I heard for the first time, 'but take care and don't let any of the servant girls go near him.'"

SOME years ago a gentleman went into a certain druggist's shop, and when he had selected what he wanted he told the boy in waiting to put the article down to Sir Charles Napier. The boy, who, being a new-comer, knew not Sir Charles, started at the uncouth dress of his customer, and smartly asked,

"How am I to know you are Sir Charles Napier?"

Sir Charles coolly thrust his hand into his trousers, pulled out that part of his shirt marked with his name, and laughingly said to the boy,

There, my lad, will that satisfy you?"

PATRICK O'FLANNEGAN, being in an uncertain state, and not quite able to distinguish at a late hour of the night his own house from his neighbor's in a row of similar ones, decided on making a bold push and trust to luck. Ascending the steps he rang the bell, which was answered by the lady living next to him, and who knew him well.

"Can you t-t-tell me where P-P-Patrick O'Flannegan lives?" said he.

"Why you are Patrick O'Flannegan," said the lady.

"B-b-botheration! I didn't ask you who Patrick O'Flannegan is; I want to know where the old chap lives."

"JULIUS, is you better dis morning?"

"No, I was better yesterday, but ise got ober dat."

"Am dere no hopes ob your discobery?"

"Discobery of what?"

"Your discobery from de convalescence what am fetching you on your back."

"Dat depends, sah, altogeddah on the prognostification which implies do disease; should they continue fatually, do doctor thinks Ise a gone. Should dey not continue fatually, he hopes dis culled individual won't die dis time. But, as I said afore, dat all depends on de prognostics; and till dey come to a head, dere am no telling wedder this pusson will come to a discontinuation or odderwise."

WANTED TO KNOW.—Whether the volume of sound had yet been bound.

AT a recent examination in the primary department of a school, the listeners were "brought down" by the answer of a juvenile, when asked of what use whales were. One little miss replied that they were "good for hooped skirts!"

A MILITARY man met a discharged soldier of his regiment, and asked him how he was getting on.

"Oh," said the man, "I am a relieving officer."

"Well, is that a good place?" inquired the military gentleman.

"Yes, sir," was the answer; "a liberal salary, and very little to do."

A COUNTRY editor, noticing the decease of a wealthy gentleman, observes: "He has died, regretted by a numerous circle of friends, and leaving a widow as disconsolate as any widow need be who has obtained the uncontrolled possession of five thousand per annum. More than twenty young men have sent letters of condolence to her."

A MAN was declaiming on board a steamboat in defence of slavery, and was asked by a philanthropist what he would think of slavery did it sell the husband to Maryland and the wife to Louisiana. "Why, then," said he, "I think best of it. I wish to my heart they'd sell my wife five hundred miles off; I'd be a pro-slavery man for ever!"

A TRAVELLER in the State of Illinois, some years ago, came to a lone log hut on the praries, near Cairo, and there halted. He went into the house of logs. It was a wretched affair, with an empty packing-box for a table, while two or three old chairs and disabled stools graced the reception-room, the dark walls of which were further ornamented by a display of dirty tinware and a broken delf article or two. The woman was crying in one corner, and the man, with tears in his eyes and a pipe in his mouth, sat on a stool, with his dirty arms resting on his knees, and his sorrowful-looking head supported by the palms of his hands. Not a word greeted the interloper.

"Well," he said, "you seem to be in awful trouble here; what's up?"

"Oh, we're most crazed, neighbor," said the woman; "and we ain't got no patience to see folks now."

"That's all right," said the visitor, not much taken aback by this polite rebuff; "but can I be of any service to you in all this trouble?"

"Well, we've lost our gal; our Sal's gone off and left us," said the man, in tones of despair.

"Ah, do you know what induced her to leave you?" remarked the new arrival.

"We can't say, stranger, as how she's so far lost as to be induced; but then she's gone and disgraced us," remarked the afflicted father.

"Yes, neighbor, and not as I should say it as her mother, but there weren't a prettier gal in the West than our Sal; she's gone and brought ruin on us and on her own head now," followed the stricken mother.

"Who has she gone with?" asked the visitor.

"Well, there's the trouble. The gal could have done well, and might have married Martin Kehoe, a capitol shoemaker, who although he's got but one eye, plays the flute in a lively manner, and earns a good living. Then look what a home and what a life she has deserted! She was here surrounded by all the luxury in the country," said the father.

"Yes, who knows what poor Sal will have to eat, drink or wear, now?" groaned the old woman.

"And who is the fellow that has taken her from you to lead her into such misery?" quoth the stranger.

"Why, she's gone off and got married to a critter called an editor, as lives in the village, and the deuce only knows how they are to earn a living!"

IN these days of revival services it is to be expected that a variety of motives may operate in gathering audiences; but surely few would ever dream that the following would find a place among them. We give it as a literal fact:

"Were you at meeting last night, Nelly?"

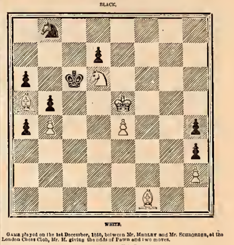
"Ay; I hadna' muckle ado, an' I thocht I micht as weel gang, as it would help to save the can'le!"

A HINT FOR DINERS OUT.—On one occasion Napoleon invited his staff of the Marshals of France to take dinner with him at two o'clock. The marshals were a few moments late. The Emperor, at the moment the clock struck, sat down to dinner alone. He was a quick eater, seldom remaining at the table more than ten minutes. At the end of this time his staff appeared, when he rose to meet them, and said: "Messieurs, it is now past dinner, and we will immediately proceed to business." Wherefore the marshals were obliged to spend the entire afternoon in planning a new campaign on empty stomachs.

CHESS.

PROBLEM No. 287.—By W. C. C., New York. White to play and checkmate in four moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

GAME played on the 1st December, 1860, between Mr. MEDLEY and Mr. SCHROEDER, at the London Chess Club, Mr. M. giving the odds of Pawn and two moves.

(REMOVE BLACK'S K B PAWN.)

WHITE. Mr. S.	BLACK. Mr. M.	WHITE. Mr. S.	BLACK. Mr. M.
1 P to K 4		20 Kt to B 7 (ch)	K to Kt 5
2 P to Q 4	P to Q 3	21 Kt to B 6	Kt tks Kt
3 P to Q B 4	Q Kt to B 3	22 P tks Kt (ch)	K tks P
4 Q Kt to B 3	P to K 4	23 Q to her 3	K to Kt 2
5 P to Q 5	Q Kt to K 2	24 P to Q B 4 (d)	Q P tks P
6 Q B to K Kt 5	K Kt to B 3 (a)	25 Q tks R P (ch)	K to Kt sq
7 B tks Kt	P tks B	26 K B to Kt 5	R tks B (ch)
8 Q to K R 5 (ch)	Kt to Kt 3	27 R tks R	Q 4 to Q B 3
9 Castles	Q to K 2	28 R to Q 8	K B to K B 3 (ch)
10 P to K Kt 3	Q to K B 2	29 K to Kt sq	K B to K sq
11 K Kt to K 5	Q B to Q 5	30 P to Q R 4	Q B to Kt 3
12 P to K B 4	P tks P	31 Q to Q Kt 5	Q B to B sq
13 P tks P	Castles	32 P to Q R 5	B tks Kt
14 K Kt to Q 4	Q to K 2	33 R P tks P (c)	Q R to B sq
15 P to K B 5	Kt to K 4	34 P tks P (ch)	K tks P
16 K Kt to K 6	Q R to K	35 P to K 5	P tks P
17 Q to B 4	R to Q 2	36 Q to B 6 (ch)	K to Kt sq
18 Q Kt to Kt 5 (b)	P to Q R 3	37 R to Kt 2 (ch)	K to B 5
19 Q to K 8 (c)	P to Q Kt 3	38 Q to Kt 6 mate.

(a) We very much prefer Q to Q 2.

(b) The game was opened by White with equal care and judgment, and he has maintained his superiority in force and position.

(c) In order to move the Queen to B 7, should Black capture the Kt.

(d) Finely conceived.

(e) The last series of moves were very well played by White; the sacrifice here was perfectly sound.

OUR BILLIARD COLUMN.

Edited by Michael Phelan.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—All questions sent to Mr. Phelan in reference to the rules of the game of billiards will in future be answered in this column, it would be too much labor to send written answers to so many correspondents.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Boston, March 3, 1861.

M. PHELAN, Esq.—Dear Sir—The Summer Street Club desire to know if a player, in forcing his ball off the table (a carom table) loses points, and is he required to table his ball and where? Four ball carom was the game. Will you be good enough to reply? Please address,

C. E. S.

Ans.—The player forcing his ball off the table forfeits points the same as if, playing on a pocket table, he pockets his ball, viz., three points after touching the red ball or balls only, two points after touching the white, and three points after missing all the balls. The player loses his hand, and retains his ball off the table until it is his turn to play.

Ballston Spa, Saratoga county, March 6, 1861.

M. PHELAN, Esq.—Dear Sir—Is it a legitimate, gentlemanly and proper play to pocket your opponent's ball under any circumstances, even in a carom shot, when you play on the white first?

J. P. S.

Ans.—There is no reason why it should not be "gentlemanly," &c., to pocket your opponent's ball when circumstances require it. The idea that it is not arises from an absurd notion of false chivalry in play. Persons in playing the game have every right to avail themselves of every honorable means of making their game, and we can see nothing dishonorable in holing the white ball. Whether it is wise, however, is another and very different question. It is short sighted play, however; for the player, by holing his opponent's ball, diminishes his chances of counting for the time being. But as no rule forbids it, we cannot see why it should be dishonorable or ungentlemanly, though it is undoubtedly disadvantageous to the player.

H. E. T., Sheboygan, Wis.—In stringing for choice of lead and balls, if the ball you play with falls into a pocket or touches any other ball you lose the choice. You can, however, remove the red balls from the table before stringing if you choose. You are not obliged to lead if you win the choice; you can cause your antagonist to lead if you prefer.

THE WORLD OF BILLIARDS.

THE AMATEUR TOURNAMENT.—As we go to press, the Tournament Bulletin stands as follows:

Around the table	86
Four ball carom game	05
Three ball French game	20
Carom pool	390

M. BERGER.—M. Berger is at present in Havana. His public exhibitions, we understand, are not as successful as he was led to anticipate, but in his private exhibitions he was doing remarkably well.

SYRACUSE IN FOR THE PRIZE.—We have received a letter from Mr. Louis Fox, of Syracuse, in which he informs us that he will be one of the contestants in the great national tournament next June, and will be in New York a week before the opening day. Mr. Fox reports billiards in Syracuse as being in a satisfactory condition. He has kindly sent to his "counterfeit presentment," which will be an addition to our portrait gallery.

FRIENDLY TOURNAMENT IN CANADA.—We have received the following, with a request to insert it, which we cheerfully comply with:

Woodstock, Canada West, March 5th, 1861.

M. PHELAN, Esq.—Dear Sir—Knowing that you take a lively interest in anything pertaining to billiards, no matter in what part of the country it occurs, I take the liberty of sending you an account of a match played between the towns of Woodstock and Ingersoll, in the county of Oxford, for an oyster supper and the championship of the county. As there has always been a rivalry between the two places mentioned in cricket, base ball and now in billiards, they in Ingersoll being the party to challenge, there were to be two games played of 800 each, the first at Ingersoll on Saturday, March 2d, the second on Monday, March 4th (yesterday), in Woodstock. The largest majority in the two games was to decide the victory. There were four players on each side, those from Woodstock were Messrs. Scott, Forbes, Pascoe and Shane; the Ingersoll men being Messrs. Bowers, Doyle, Sharp and Dorman. The arrangement was to play in couples, each two to play 200 points, to be decided by lottery who should play together. The following is a schedule of the games:

Town.	Players.	First Game.	Second Game.	Total.
1st.—Woodstock	Forbes	200	200	400
Ingersoll	Bowers	183	200	383
2d.—Woodstock	Scott	200	200	400
Ingersoll	Doyle	126	177	303
3d.—Woodstock	Shane	200	200	400
Ingersoll	Sharp	112	150	261
4th.—Woodstock	Pascoe	150	166	306
Ingersoll	Dorman	200	138	338

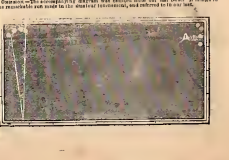
The majority being, first game, 129, second, 91; total, 220, in favor of Woodstock, that town was declared the winner. Yours respectfully,

J. S.

BILLIARDS DOWN EAST.—Messrs. Phelan, Kavanagh and a few friends visited Norwich, Conn., for the purpose of being present at the opening of the Apollo Hall Billiard Room. This establishment has been fitted-up with Phelan's tables, and under the gentlemanly supervision of the proprietor, Mr. Wm. McCune, cannot fail to meet with marked success. Messrs. Phelan and Kavanagh played several games at different periods for the edification of several delegations of the public, who came in such crowds that they could not all be accommodated with standing-room at one time. Each of these gentlemen also played several discount games with amateurs.

BILLIARDS IN THE OLD BAY STATE.—Messrs. Kavanagh and Geary left on Tuesday for Great Barrington, Mass., on invitation to give a public billiard exhibition in that locality. We understand it is the intention of these gentlemen to travel through certain portions of the country for the purpose of giving exhibitions, à la Berger.

OMISSION.—The accompanying diagram was omitted from our last issue. It relates to the remarkable run made in the amateur tournament, and referred to in our last.



KARL SCHURZ, OF WISCONSIN.

THIS celebrated German-American-Republican speaker, a portrait of whom we now lay before our readers, was born at Bonn on the Rhine, in 1828. While studying at the university of his native town he became intimate with Gottfried Kinkel, collaborating with him in many democratic journals. In 1849 he went armed into the Baden rebellion, but suffered defeat with his fellows. He would have been, after the taking of the fort of Rastadt, given up to death as one specially exempt from pardon, and as a deserter, but he not escaped to Switzerland, where he lived in great obscurity during the winter of 1849–'50.

Owing to this reserve he was enabled to quietly leave and carry out his great design—the liberation of Gottfried Kinkel, condemned to life imprisonment in Spandau. For many months Schurz—himself under condemnation of death and in various disguises—persevered until he had effected his aim, and brought Kinkel over Mecklenburg and Schwerin to London. Here he married a highly cultivated, amiable and wealthy girl, and emigrated in 1852 to America. Here he settled first in Watertown, Wisconsin, then in Milwaukee, and gave himself up with zeal to politics, so that he ere long obtained the nomination for Lieutenant-Governor. During the excitement in Massachusetts, affecting so nearly the privileges of emigrants, he went to Boston, where he spoke in Faneuil Hall, and in English.

During the past Presidential campaign Schurz was busily employed in favor of Lincoln, speaking in most of the Eastern States, and especially in Cooper Hall, New York, on September 8th. His probable appointment to a Foreign Mission has been made, as the reader is aware, the subject of violent debate in the Republican party.

TERRIBLE FIRE IN FORTIETH STREET,

Near Broadway—A Whole Family Burned to Death.

WE are heartily sick of chronicling the murders which are occasioned by the wicked indifference of the owners of tenement-houses, and the suicidal carelessness of the tenants. We shall, however, have more to say on this point when Mr. Mackenzie's fire-escape comes before the public. It is seldom that we have to record a more shocking calamity than that which befell an entire family just at the break of day on Thursday, the 7th of March, when a mother and father, and five helpless children were all burnt to death in the midst of a populous neighborhood. The circumstances are hardly these. Shortly after six o'clock, a two story and attic house, No. 102 West Fortieth street, near Broadway, was discovered to be on fire. When first noticed the flames were seen issuing from the back basement and ascending the stairs. Mr. Oakley, who occupied the second floor, and was the lessee of the house, was the first to detect the smoke, and although an alarm was immediately given, it was too late for Mr. Wood and his family to escape. The rest of the occupants managed to make their way through the fire and smoke, although some of them were badly burned in the attempt.

Mr. Wood and family had occupied only for that night, the top attic, and as there was no ladder to the scuttle, the only chance of egress was thus cut off, and the flames rendered every effort to get at them ineffectual. Their servant, who had got up about half an hour previous, managed to make her way through the flames, but she was considerably burnt.

When the fire was extinguished a hearty-looking spectacle presented itself, for within the back attic were the blackened and charred remains of the unhappy family—all thus snatched in a few minutes from life to death. Their names are: Henry Wood, native of England, aged thirty-two; Julia Wood, native of England, aged twenty-five years; William Wood, aged about seven years; Henry Wood, aged about five years; Julia Wood, aged about three years; Isabella and Jenna, twins four months old.

Mr. Wood was an upholsterer, and had only moved into the house on the first of this month. One-half of the basement he occupied for his shop, and had furniture there. The adjoining half of the basement was occupied by Henry Swoets as a barber's shop. The first floor was occupied as a segar store by Mr. Catharine Hovey, and the adjoining part of that floor was occupied by Peter Curran for residence. Two men, named Clark and Gavin, occupied one of the front attic bedrooms. They attempted to escape down-stairs, but the smoke and fire drove them back at the time. Mr. Clark says he heard Mrs. Wood screaming to save her children. He says he was unable to render her any help, and had but just time to save himself by getting out at the garret window. The two upper stories and roof are destroyed.

The World, in an editorial of the 13th March, gives a different account from that commonly received, and reflects upon the reporters for their incorrect version. It says: "An eye-witness of this shocking occurrence, on whose authority we make the present statement, tells us that Henry Wood and his wife, during the early stages of the fire, gained the street unscathed, but entered again into the burning building to save their children. Several firemen, members respectively of No. 1 and No. 18, rushed in with them. Before the former reached the staircase leading to the rooms above the old feud broke out. A wordy squabble caused, terminating in what is denominated, in the technical language adopted by those bodies, 'a plug-muss.' As the high, assumed interesting proportions the combatants were reinforced. Soon the hall-way of the doomed house was choked up with a cursing, brutal hand. Heads were split open with hydrina-wrenches, faces were battered into jelly by heavy fire hats and knobby knuckles. Meanwhile, the flames had besieged the staircase, and the workmen's family above were appealing to their fellows for the succor that came not. What need to tell the sequel? The conscientious reporter has written how, half an hour later, seven charred bodies were found stretched on the floor of that fire-diamantled attic, and we read it, all of us, with a shudder."

KARL SCHURZ, OF WISCONSIN, THE CELEBRATED GERMAN REPUBLICAN ORATOR

We cannot help thinking there is some mistake in this; but at all events, the firemen here charged owe it to their fair fame to have an inquiry.

JOHN JANNEY, ESQ., OF LOUDON,

President of the Virginia State Convention.

WE give this week the portrait of the distinguished Southern gentleman, John Janney, Esq., of Loudon, who was chosen as President of the Virginia State Convention now sitting at Richmond, Va. The wise and moderate counsels of Virginia may be inferred from the results of her election of delegates to the State Convention, and still more positively in the election of Mr. Janney as President of the Convention. He is virtually a Union man, and on the occasion of his election to the honorable position he now occupies, on the first day of the Session at the Capitol in Richmond, Va., he made a speech decidedly Union in its sentiments, but stating emphatically that the Union could not be sustained at the loss of a single right belonging to Virginia.

THE HON. IRA HARRIS,
U. S. Senator for the State of New York.

JUDGE HARRIS, the new Senator for New York, is in his 60th year. He was born in Cortland county. He graduated from Union College in 1824, admitted to practice in 1827, and continued in the successful exercise of his profession at a bar which was famous for the number of its able practitioners, until 1843, without holding any office. He was in that year elected to the State Assembly, re-elected in 1844, and elected to the two Senate in 1846. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention which was assembled in 1846, where his sound judgment and wide legal knowledge left their impress upon the proceedings of that body. One of its acts was the creation of the present Supreme Court, of which Mr. Harris was elected one of the first justices, holding the office for four years. In 1851 he was re-elected to the same bench, and held it for eight years. In 1859, a candidate for the same place, he was defeated by Rufus W. Peckham. Since that time, excepting several months' absence abroad, he has resumed the practice of his profession.

Upon the resignation of Mr. Seward, ceased by his acceptance of a position in Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet, the judge was unanimously chosen to succeed that eminent man, a compliment which he well deserves.

INAUGURATION BALL AT WASHINGTON,
On the 4th of March.

We give in our last number an illustration of the ball portrait of the Inaugural ceremonies, and appropriately conclude the pictorial task by presenting to our readers a most beautiful and graphic sketch of the most interesting portion of the programme, so far as the fair sex are concerned. In point of the youth, beauty, brilliancy, fashion and chivalry every where predominant, no one would have imagined that a cloud was in our national heaven. As the poet says:

"All went merry as a marriage bell."

The ball had been erected expressly for the occasion, and was in close contiguity to the City Hall, Wm. Corcoran Eustis and Counsel Chambers were made to do duty as dressing-rooms for the other useful purposes. It was shaped like a parallelogram and decorated with red and white muslin, while around the walls were numerous shields ornamented with our national arms.

The dancing commenced at about eleven o'clock, at which time, although the Presidential guests had not arrived, it was found no longer possible to keep down the youthful vivacity. The scene at this hour was a most animating one. After a short dance it was rumored that the illustrious couple in whose honor the ball was given had arrived, and the dancing came to a close. At this moment President Lincoln entered, leaning upon the arms of Vice-President Hamlin and Senator Anthony, of Rhode Island. Immediately behind them, to the intense astonishment of all, came Mrs. Lincoln, leaning upon the arm of Senator Cameron, more popularly known as the Little Giant. The gratification was great, for it seemed to predicate that the two ancient enemies had buried the hatchet. With her came Miss Edwards, her niece, a lovely creature. Her dress was in most exquisite taste. As the illustrious party entered the room, the band struck up "Hail Columbia" with great effect. As all balls are more or less alike, we merely give the names of a few of the most distinguished guests.

Conspicuous among the opulents and other guests were seen the French Minister, Baron Stoeckl, the Russian Minister, Sinor Figueira, Colonel Webb, and Messrs. Seward, Cameron and Wilson. President Lincoln seemed, it was thought, weary and worn. Con-picuous here and there was Mr. Hamlin. The brilliant appearance of the hall, the opposite lights, the gay dresses and the scores of hour-ful women were quite sufficient to occupy attention until the supper hour, after which, of course, the dancing became more lively, and bright eyes and bright jewels flashed merrily enough.

Costumes of the Ladies.

Among the ladies present whose "style," personal attractions and costume attracted general attention, Mrs. Lincoln deserves special mention. She was a rich watered silk, an elegant point lace cape, deeply bordered, with cauchias in her hair, and pearl ornaments.

Mrs. Lincoln's sister, Mrs. Kellogg, of Cincinnati, wore a well-made pearl watered silk, with diamonds. Miss Edwards, niece of Illinois, appeared in white silk and cherry-colored double skirt.

Miss Mary Babcock, the young and interesting daughter of the editor of the Post, Baron Pelletelman, was dressed in a rich corded silk, Grecian corsage, with flowers running across from the shoulder to the waist. Her luxuriant hair was in braids entwined with a few delicate flowers; her fruitlessly moulded arms and bust without ornament. This young lady's vivacity, artlessness, and fine flow of spirits won for her hosts of friends and admirers.

Miss Rose Cowan, daughter of Judge Cowan, of New York, was tastefully and elegantly attired in a dress of white silk, with half-mourning trimmings, which set off to advantage her fair face and form. "The loveliest girl in all Washington!" murmured a great Senator, as he passed her, and his words found an echo in countless other manly breasts, Cuban as well as American.

Hon. Mrs. A. H. Rice, wife of the distinguished Representative from Boston, Mass., wore a crimson silk dress, with point lace trimmings and shawl, headdress of white feathers and diamond ornaments. This estimable lady's genial smile, genius and kindly manner, and great conversational abilities rendered her the centre of a large and brilliant circle.

Hon. Mrs. E. G. Squier, wife of our late Minister to Central America, wore a dress of white illusion decollete, pulled sleeves, with six flounces, embroidered with cherry silk; an over-skirt of cherry satin, looped up with clusters of white roses; a pointed waist of same, edged with a quilling of white satin; head-dress, a bandeau of ivy; ornaments, diamonds and opals. This lady's personal attractions, youth and graceful manner, made her the acknowledged belle of the ball, while her sprightly and intellectual conversation, and her knowledge of various languages, placed all who came within her sphere perfectly at their ease. If a dress was also a triumph of taste and elegance.

Mrs. Alexander, of Washington, wore a dove-mauve dress, with lace cape and rich velvet and lace cap.

Miss White, of Washington, wore a dress of great elegance and beauty. It was of white tulle, with flounces innumerable, each flounce being bordered by a narrow strip of black velvet. It was very full, and was set off to great advantage by the distingué bearing of the wearer.

Mrs. Frank Smith, of Boston, wore a dress the charm of which was its extreme and exquisite simplicity. It consisted of white watered satin skirt, robe and train. In style and taste it was the perfection of the modistes' art. The head-dress was both rich and recherché.

Mrs. Edwards, Mrs. Julia B. Baker and Miss Lizzie Edwards were of the White House party.

Mrs. Grimsley wore a very handsome blue watered silk, with a long train, with pearl and turquoise ornaments, and head-dress of white roses.

Mrs. Baker, the accomplished wife of Mr. Baker, of the Springfield Journal, wore a lemon-colored watered silk, with low neck, short sleeves and long train, with point lace cape, a very rich head-dress of cherry-colored verbenas, with gold sprays interming led, and a full set of pearl ornaments.

Mrs. Bergmann, née Macalester, wife of the Belgian minister, was a belle des belles, in white watered silk.

Miss Cameron, one of the fairies of the ball, daughter of the Secretary, wore white silk and diamonds.

Miss Smith, of Philadelphia, was tastefully attired in white tarletan, with black and red trimmings.

Miss Bean, of New York, in white tarletan.

Mrs. Samuel Way, of Boston, and her sister, Miss Curtis of Boston, were among the prominent belles of the evening, bearing between them a Golconda of diamonds, inferior, however, to the four Golcondas of their sparkling eyes.

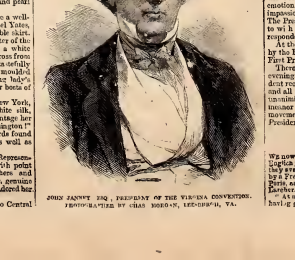
Among other beauties, Miss Alice Green, of Washington, and her sister, Helen, Miss Fanny Seaton, the Misses Payton, Miss Josephine Fenton, Miss Wright, Miss Brewer, Miss Crawford and Miss Whitney deserve something more than the brief mention of their loveliness. The new Administration did not begin at least without the happy augury of improving beauty and of brighteyed smiles.

TERRIBLE FIRE IN A TENEMENT-HOUSE IN FORTIETH STREET, N. Y., AND FRIGHTFUL LOSS OF LIFE.—A MAN AND HIS WIFE AND FIVE CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH, ON THURSDAY MORNING, MARCH. 7.

JOHN JANNEY ESQ., PRESIDENT OF THE VIRGINIA CONVENTION. FROM A PHOTO. BY CHAS. BOSSLER, LEESBURG, VA.

HUMORS OF THE INAUGURATION.

LET no one suppose that Senatorial deliberations at Washington altogether come up to the conventional idea, derived from the magnificent description of Gibbon, of the gravity of the Roman Senate. Probably if the truth were known, and there had been stenographers present to take it, we should hear reminiscences of Seward and Sumner at Superbus Smith, and Cassius Thompson called Propylene Wiggins a liar and coward, and the pro ani exaltation, and loud demand. Even Jefferson Davis cannot keep the galleries. Well, the last night of the last session at Washington was not quite as loud as that, for Senate was as hard as a stump tempoon to the genius of si-cond. But the first day of the New Era



"Why the sodden outcrate of desunciation and threats," exclaimed Fessenden of Maine, "on the shoulders of the sinners! Whence these writhe demonstrations, and what is their cause?"

"It is only a hickey insurrection," interrupted Wigfall of Texas.

"It is time," cold Coundler of Michigan, "that we should know if we has a Government! of which we has not had a whisper this months as they have for the last three, I would abandon the country and join the Canady Confederacy."

"Don't do it," broke in Wigfall, "the poor Indians have suffered too much already from contact with the white man."

"Well, Senator," said a weak Northerner, addressing himself to Cowan, "I must admit that Lincoln has not a leg to stand on here!"

"Humph! But you no doubt you'd like to have his counte-nance."

INAUGURATION OF THE HON. JEFFERSON DAVIS,
President of the Southern Confederacy.

On Monday, the 18th of February, 1861, the Hon. Jefferson Davis, President elect of the new Southern Confederacy, took the oath of office in front of the Capitol, Montgomery, Alabama. The President elect was staying at the Exchange Hotel, and early in the forenoon of the 18th he was waited upon by the delegated authorities, and at twelve o'clock, under a grand salvo of artillery, the procession began to move towards the Capitol in the following order:

Music.
Military Escort.
The President elect, with Vice-President and Chaplain, in open carriage, drawn by six horses.
Congressional Committee on the escort of Inauguration.
Committee on part of the State of Alabama.
Committee from the Executive Council of Montgomery.
Commissioners to this Government from States that form the States of the Confederacy.
Governors of the several States of the Confederacy.
Judges of the Supreme Court of the several States of the Confederacy.
Ministers of the Gospel.
The above in carriages.
Citizens generally, in order.
Music.
The whole under the command of General H. P. Watson, Marshal of the day.

A platform was erected in front of the portico of the Capitol, on which the President elect was joined by his predecessor, by the Vice-President, Members of Congress, the Governor of the State of Alabama, and the several committees. The whole scene unfolding was thronged by a vast and sweeping crowd, who viewed the proceedings with mingled feelings of enthusiasm and awe.

A perfect thunder of cheers, repeated again and again, greeted the President, who acknowledged the recognition with much emotion. The solemn ceremony was commenced by an earnest, impassioned and comprehensive prayer from the Rev. Dr. Manly. The President then read his inaugural address, which was listened to wi h profound attention, and the sentiments of which were responded to with enthusiasm and respect.

At the close of the address, the oath was administered to him by the President of the Congress, Judge Jeffer-on Davis became the First President of the Southern Confederacy.

There were great rejoicings in the city of Montgomery that evening. Cannons were fired, bands were paraded, and the President received visits of respect and congratulation from the citizens and officers at the Exchange and Connell Houses. He remained unanimly prevailed, and the orderly and still enthusiastic demeanor of the people showed how deeply interested in the movement which was consummated by the inauguration of President Davis that day.

FRENCH NOTIONS OF THE ENGLISH.

WE now and then have occasion to laugh at the blunders made by English journalists when writing on America; but we question if they ever rose to as sublime a standard of a recent be h written by a French author on the English. It has lately been published in Paris and is entitled: "London, England and the English," by M. Esquiros. We give two extracts:

"At a dinner party the ladies retire into another room after having partaken very moderately of wine; and while the gentlemen are left to empty bottles of port, madeira, claret and champagne. It is a custom highly among the ladies to empty bottles in company (see Sensibility de Cayenne). To conclude the statement our Yokon queries from a work (every well-bred English lady should have a copy) entitled Le Comme il faut: "Is it considered genteel if you[illegible] to be intoxicated." What there are supposed to be the manners of good society, we may imagine in what terms the author speaks of the reunions at Cremorne and at the Surrey Gardens.

And a few pages further M. Lorcher says: "In England the horrible is liked, the hideous is adored. An Englishman pauses to see his fellow-creatures in danger, in order to experience say emotion. Ants, tigers and reptiles are first imminently, but when it was found that Carter and Van Amburgh escaped unhurt, the excitement was deserted. The young girl who, two years ago, was the presence of a full house at Astley's Theatre obtained a great success. During a while fortnight she was the sole subject of conversation in social circles and at the clubs. Those who had been so fortunate as to witness the extraordinary scene were heartily envied by their less fortunate brethren. To hear the bones of a poor girl crushed by a tiger! what a delicious excitement! I am certain that this is not far distant when that sisterhood, worn out with ennui, will need such representations as are compatible with self-respect. Even now (April, 1861), a society of capitalists is talked of for establishing a circus where men may wrestle with ferocious beasts."

LE BON TON—THE BEST LADIES' FASHION BOOK in the World. Specimen Copies, with best valuable Premium, posted for 12 cents.
S. T. TAYLOR & SON, 807 Broadway, New York.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

Brown's Bronchial Troches.

WHOEVER is troubled with Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness or Sore Throat should use Brown's Bronchial Troches. Singers and public speakers generally, indeed all those who use the voice much, will find them useful. Obstinate Coughs, which yield to no other remedy, readily yield to this. Military officers and soldiers exposed to sudden changes of weather, will find the Troches useful. Those who have used them for Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Asthma, or Consumption, will bear testimony to their efficacy. Indeed, all who have tried them will recommend them. Obtain only "Brown's Bronchial Troches," and do not take any of the worthless imitations which may be offered. Sold by all Druggists throughout the country. Price 25 cents per box.

To Nervous Sufferers.

A NEW Method Applicable, for the arrest of Nervous Debility, Premature Decline, &c. (cure and discharge). Free. Sealed. Give two stamps. DR. BENNET, Box 101, care R. Lockwood, Broadway Post Office, New York City. Country letters must be paid.

Dewee's Prolific Seedling Strawberry.

THIS splendid new variety, said to surpass in productiveness the famous Wilson's Albany, and is quite ranked by some, to new pistillate, which result all everybody who may desire them, viz., on the receipt of 25 cents, by mail, post paid, or 20 for 50 cents. Address, DEWEE'S LIVE FLOWER AND SEED Office, Abe Wilson & Pa-body's Seedlings at $2 per thousand, Delivered Boston, Mass. 278-81

J. W. HIGGS & SON,
Grassland Nurs. & Seed Growers, Lexington, Ky.

WANTED—Agents, to sell packages of Stationery and Jewellery, at prices one-third less than other stationers. Call or send address, stamp inclosed, J. L. BAILEY, 104 Court St., Boston. 278-80

AGENTS WANTED TO SELL YALE'S PRIZE Magic Spool Cotton. Retail price 5 cents per spool. Also, introducing a gift worth from twenty five cents to ten dollars with every new spool sold. Sample and making more money than they ever did selling our celebrated "Yale's Patent Excelsior." Send for circular. The postage stamps and recover one in sample, postage paid, containing instructions and particulars to agents. Address, J. W. YALE, No. 8 Franklin Buildings, Syracuse, N. Y. 278

Purify the Blood.

NOT a few of the worst disorders that afflict mankind arise from the corruption that accumulates in the blood. Of all the diseases that have been made to purge it out, none have ever been so successful as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Extracts or Fluid Extracts, Pills, Ointment and Lozenges, the blood, health the vigor of health into the system, and purges out the humors which make disease. It eliminates the bodily functions of the body and expels the disorders that grow and ramify in its tissues. Its extraordinary cures are not yet widely known, but when they are it will be easier for a sufferer to find a cure for his disease than to find a suffering disease that requires in obstinate remedy. Such a remedy that could be relied on has long been sought for, and now, for the first time, the public can obtain one which they can depend. Our specific does not attack certain organs in search of disease. But the vital elements with which these do the sick that it has virtues surpassing anything else in its power to cure. Hence it cures Scrofula and Scrofulous and Glandular Affections, Ulcers, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, &c., Erysipelas, Blotches, Boils, Pimples, Tumors, &c., as no medicine could that did not purify the blood.

St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Itch or Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, &c., Tetter, Boils, Pimples, while they can be so speedily cured by AYER'S SARSAPARILLA.

Syphilis or Venereal Disease is expelled from the system by the prolonged use of this SARSAPARILLA, and the patient left healthy for life, but never to fall disease.

Female Diseases are caused by disorders in the blood, and are generally cured by this Extract of Sarsaparilla. Price $1 per Bottle or Six Bottles for $5.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, for Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Consumption, and even advanced stages of Pulmonary complaints, is offered to the American people. Price 25 Cents per Box or Five Boxes for $1.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all druggists everywhere.

Muller's Piano Method—In English and German.

REVISED BY JULIUS KNORR.

An elaborate, thorough and unique course of study, embracing the principles of the art of playing the pianoforte. Price, $5. Price of each Part, $2. Complete. Published by OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston. 276

Unequalled for the Splendor

AND MULTIPLICITY OF ITS ILLUSTRATIONS.

CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED FAMILY BIBLE.

Great demand for the First Volume.
Price, postly bound in cloth, lettered, $2 50.
Price, beveled cloth boards, gilt edges, $ 00.
Free by mail, or from Agents, one of whom will be appointed for every unsupplied district throughout the United States.
CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN,
No. 31 Park Row, N. Y.

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MARRIED PEOPLE—For particulars address, inclosing stamp, Dr. MARSHALL, Surgeon and Accoucheur, 458 Broadway, New York. 274-66

$100,000
IN FURNITURE,
At a Great Sacrifice,
BY
DEGRAAF & TAYLOR.

Owing to the great decline in our Southern wholesale trade, leaving an immense surplus stock on hand, we have concluded to offer the whole

At Retail! At Cost!!

FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS.

At either of our three stores, No. 87 Bowery, No. 481 West Street and No. 141 Bowery.

HARD TIMES MADE EASY!!!

GOOD NEWS
FOR THE UNEMPLOYED!!!
ONE THOUSAND CHANCES
To Make Money, One Million Dollars
WORTH OF WATCHES,
Jewellery, and Silver Plated Ware, to be disposed of on an ENTIRELY NEW AND ORIGINAL PLAN.
2,500 AGENTS WANTED.
All persons desirous of securing an AGENCY in this
NEW ENTERPRISE
should send on their names at once, and receive by return of mail
OUR INDUCEMENTS,
which offered a rare chance to make money without risk.
AGENTS' CATALOGUES
are ready, and sent to any address on receipt of a Three Cent Stamp to pay postage. Address,
GEORGE G. EVANS,
439 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.
279-81

CANADIAN
General Agency.

Merchants, Manufacturers, Inventors, Patentees, &c., will find it to their advantage to place their business in the hands of the undersigned, or advertise in their Gazette. Arrangements readily entered into on liberal terms, on application to

E. O. BOUDREAU,
General Agent, 113 Germain St.,
Montreal, Canada East.
277-318

MUSICAL BOXES.
Playing 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 10, 15, 18, 24 and 36 Tunes.
M. J. PAILLARD, Importer,
21 Maiden Lane, New York. 277-78

CENT FREE—FOR THE BENEFIT OF NERVOUS SUFFERERS.—The Warning Voice, on the influence of Debility, Cardiac Stress, &c., by Samuel Sowman. Circulating, free, on Exposure of the Nostrums and Delusions of Quacks. Address, Box 1922, Boston, Mass. Consultation free. 277-79

THE ERIE SEWING MACHINE COMPANY want Agents to sell their Fifteen Dollar Sewing Machine. They will give a commission, or wages, as from $10 to $15 per month, and pay all expenses. Full particulars sent free. E. JAMES, General Agent for Sewing Machine Company, Mian, Ohio. 276-79

JOY TO THE WORLD.
Clothes Washed in One Minute by
JOHNSONS UNION WASHING MACHINE.
Patented April 10, 1860.
PRICE $8 TO $10.
A CHILD CAN OPERATE IT. Washes every sort. Sure and speedy, without cracking of buttons. Will pay agents 100 per cent. Address, New York, and all Fulton St. Brooklyn, N. Y.
E. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors.
000

GREAT BARGAINS
IN Jewellery.

The Subscriber having been appointed Agent for five of the largest manufacturing Jewellery establishments in this country, having immense stocks on hand which they are determined to reduce at any sacrifice, is now offering their said Gold and Gold-Plated Jewellery for the next sixty days at an immense reduction. The Subscriber having been in the Jewellery business here for the past twenty-seven years, the public may rely on every article being precisely as represented in every respect. The goods are all well made, and will give entire satisfaction to the purchaser.

Mosaic, Lava, Coral, &c., Earrings and Pins, $3 a set; small price $2.
Jet, Gold Stone, Garnet and Enamel Earrings and Pins, $4 a set; small price $3.
Turquoise, Carbuncle, Garnet and Lava Earrings and Pins, $5 a set; small price $4.
Mosaic, Lava, Turquoise, Garnet, &c., Earrings and Pins, $2 a set; small price $1.
Coral, Enamelled, Carbuncle, Lava, &c., Earrings and Pins, $3 a set; small price $2.
Gold Band Bracelets, $1 each; small price $1.
Gold Band Bracelets, $1 each; small price $1.
Richly Engraved and Chased Fine Band Bracelets, $1 each; small price $1.
Engraved and Chased Flat Band Bracelets, $1 each; small price $1.
Gem Bracelets, $2 each; small price $1.
Gem Bracelets, $2 each; small price $1.
Onyx Bracelets and Clasps, $2 each; small price $1.
Carbuncle, Garnet and Coral Stone Buttons, $1 a set; small price $1.
Mosaic Necklaces, Coral, Garnet, &c., $1 each; small price $1.
Golden's Coral Armlets, $5 each; small price $2.
Coral Necklaces, $1 each; small price $1.
Golden's Coral Necklaces, 50 cents each; small price $1.00.
Jet Necklaces, $1 each; small price $1.
Gentlemen's Vest Chains, $1 each; small price $1.
Lockets for Engravings or Hair, $1 each; small price $1.
Gentlemen's Seal Rings, $2 each; small price $1.
Ladies' Rings, with Stone Setting, usual price $3.
Ladies' Earrings, $1 a pair; small price $1.
Ladies' Earrings, $2 a pair; small price $1.
Gold Thimbles, Coral Stone, $1 each; small price $1.
$1 00 to $3
Gentlemen's Sleeve Buttons, 50 cents to $1 each; small price $1 50 to $1.
Gentlemen's Studs, 75 cents to $1 a set; small price $1 to $1 50.
Gold Brooches, $ each; small price $3.
Ladies' Vest Chains, 50 cents to $1 each; small price $1 to $2.
Gentlemen's Scarf Pin, 50 cents to $1 50 each; small price $1 to $2.
Gold Scarf Pin, $1 each; small price $1.
Ladies' Jet Set Earrings, $1 a pair; small price $1.
Gold Watch Keys, Gold Seal Keys, Gold Watch Keys, Gold Thimbles, Coral Stone Buttons, Sleeve Buttons, Studs, Brooches, &c., &c., at very low prices.
Jewels sent by mail or express to all parts of the United States and Canada free of cost.

GEORGE C. ALLEN,
Agent for the Manufacturers,
Wholesale and Retail, No. 415 Broadway, cor. Howard, 277-78 over Leslie's.

Shaler's Flexible Roller Patent Floor Skates.

The use of these Rollers secures a perfect knowledgeof the art of Skating on Ice, as well as furnishing the most healthful exercise during the winter, at the most trifling expense. Hundreds of testimonials have become gratifying to the use of them.
The only place for sale is at 448 Broadway, N. Y.
G. M. VAIL, Sole Agent and Manufacturer. 000

Perfumes! Perfumes! Perfumes!
809 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.
The most delightful and permanent Extracts and Perfumes for the present season, comprising the fragrance of the preferred and latest flowers, as well as the most superior Bouquet and Fancy Articles, at
MOUNT VERNON, KISS ME QUICK,
PEAU D'ESPAGNE, LONDON SMOKE,
FRAGRANT JAPONICA, &c., &c.
Also Compounded Flavoring Extracts, for Tea, Puddings, &c.
Patent Bouquets, the most approved fresh for Holiday Gentlemen Avail, for shipped Skin. Cologne Bazaar Cologne Water, and a large assortment of Toilet Articles.
Orders by mail, wholesale and retail, at my Perfumery, No. 809 Broadway, New York.
EUGENE V. ROCK,
Chemist and Druggist.
000

A. LANGE,
PICTURE AND LOOKING-GLASS FRAMES
AND
CORNICES FOR ROOMS,
MADE TO ORDER, AT LOWEST PRICES,
206 William St., cor. Frankfort, New York.

The Union Clothes Dryer.
A New Invention—Useful, Cheap and Portable,
By which Clothes in large quantities may be dried in a yard, a room, or on the roof of a house. Can be put up and taken down in one minute without disturbing the lines. When not in use it can be compressed into a small compass and kept on a closet. No family should be without this saving.
Price $4, $5 and $6.
The Union Clothes Dryer is recommended by all ingenious direct persons to be one of the most useful and labor-saving inventions of the age.
J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors,
457 Broadway (near Grand St.), and 312 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

R. DURRENBERGER & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Passe-Partouts and Fancy Frames,
844 Broadway, between Spring and Prince Sts., New York
Gilt, Glossy, Black Walnut and Oak Frames always on hand. 000

R. DURRENBERGER. J. DURRENBERGER.

S. R. Walker,
TYPE FOUNDER
AND PRINTERS FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
17 Dutch St., New York. 277-89

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED

NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress, in the year 1861, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 278—Vol. XI.] NEW YORK, MARCH 23, 1861. [PRICE 6 CENTS.

Miss Carrie Rona | Miss White, of Washington. | Miss Babcock. | Mrs. Frank Smith, of Boston. | Miss Brown.

Mrs. Colonel Tilton. | Miss Rose Cowle. | Mrs. Stone. | Mrs. Alexander, of Washington. | Mrs. Duke. | Mrs. Rose, of Boston.

INAUGURATION BALL AT WASHINGTON, MARCH 4, 1861.—SOME COUPLES OF DISTINGUISHED LADIES PRESENT ON THAT BRILLIANT OCCASION.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 178.

Barnum's American Museum

HAS the largest and finest Collection of Living Curiosities ever exhibited together, including Bears, Sea Lion, Mammoth Bear Samson, the Swiss Bearded Lady, the Liliputian Queen, Miss Reed; the Aquaria, Living Monster Snakes, Happy Family, with elegant Dramatic Performances daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M., making the Museum at once the best as well as the cheapest place of amusement in the world.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

FRANK LESLIE, Editor and Publisher.

NEW YORK, MARCH 23, 1861.

All Communications, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One Copy	17 weeks	$ 1
One do.	1 year	$ 3
Two do.	1 year	$ 5
Or One Copy	2 years	$ 5
Three Copies	1 year	$ 6
Five do.	1 year (to one address)	$10

And an extra Copy to the person sending a Club of Five. Every additional subscription, $2.

NOTICE TO PHOTOGRAPHERS.

WE shall be much obliged to our photographic friends if they will write in pencil the name and description on the back of each picture, together with their own name and address. This notice is rendered necessary from the fact that so many photographs are sent to us from our friends throughout the country without one word of explanatory matter, they giving us credit for being en rapport with everything that transpires or exists in all parts of the United States. The columns of our paper prove that we are up to the times in almost everything which occurs of public importance throughout the world, still we are not so ubiquitous but that something may occur beyond the circuit of our far-reaching information. To save labor and insure accuracy, descriptions and names (as above indicated) should, in all cases, accompany photographic pictures or sketches.

Foreign News.

England.—Parliament has been singularly quiet—the chief topic of public conversation being the affront offered the Volunteers of England by the omission of any compliment or recognition in the Queen's Speech. It is said at the Reform Club that Palmerston wished a compliment to be paid them, but that he was overruled by Lord John Russell and Sidney Herbert. As Herbert is the Minister of War, Pam subsided. It is also said that the juvenile Premier wishes to get rid of both those "icebergs," one aristocratic and the other "official," and so purposely put them into an unpopular position. Money was easier, but great anxiety was manifested by all classes in our present national crisis. We have little doubt that the Secession movement will kill Exeter Hall Abolitionism in England. Playing with gun cotton is too serious a game. Considerable excitement had been created in London by the discovery of a defalcation of nearly $350,000 in the Commercial Bank of London. The robbery was committed by a clerk named Durden, and his manner was so ingenious and the management of the bank so careless that, but for his being seized with paralysis, it might not have been discovered for years. The effect was such that the bank had resolved to close, and transfer their accounts to the London and Westminster Bank. There had been a severe gale in England, which had done immense damage; nearly fifty vessels had been wrecked and many lives lost. On the land its violence had been terrific, part of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham having fallen before its fury. The beautiful spire of Chichester Cathedral had been likewise so injured by the storm that the next day it fell, or rather subsided into the body of the cathedral, a mass of crumbling ruins. It was two hundred and seventy-one feet high, and had been built about eight centuries. A short debate had taken place in the House of Commons concerning the Charleston authorities giving clearance in their name instead of that of the Federal Government. Lord John Russell had promised to publish the correspondence between the British Consul and the officials of South Carolina.

France.—There is little to note beyond the continued military and naval preparations, which are pronounced by the Paris journalists, under the inspiration of the Emperor, to be merely precautionary, and intended to render peace permanent. A pamphlet by the famous Guerronniere has been published on the Papal question. It reiterates the former tone of the Napoleonic pamphlets, that the Pope must be sustained with a sufficient income as a spiritual Prince, but that it is inexpedient to maintain or restore him as a temporal Sovereign. The chief domestic event is the arrest of Mons. Mires, the great John Sadleir of Paris. It is said that De Morney and Walowski are implicated. De Morney is most probably one of the speculators; but Walowski is too shrewd and ambitious a man to ruin himself for mere money. Power-political is his idol.

Italy.—Admiral Persano had arrived before Messina, and had demanded the surrender of the citadel. It will be remembered that, in accordance with the wishes of the British Admiral, who wanted to spare the effusion of blood, Garibaldi had agreed to leave the citadel in the possession of the royal garrison on condition of an armed neutrality. Now, of course, if the butcher who commands there be wise he will surrender; if he does not he ought to be hanged, since his sanguinary master has run away from Gaeta. A proclamation had been issued by the Italian National Committee, announcing that Victor Emanuel be proclaimed with all due solemnity King of Italy. With regard to Garibaldi's scheme for the liberation of Hungary, it would seem as though there was little chance for its accomplishment, since it was currently reported in the best informed European circles that Austria, Prussia and Russia had severally and jointly agreed to unite their forces to put down any attempt on the part of any power to create an insurrection in either Poland or Hungary. As this would be intervention, France would act, but England would not; her policy, like our own, is non-intervention to a certain point. With France in Syria, and Russia across the Pruth, England would coolly occupy Egypt, and Turkey would be disintegrated—to use Lord Palmerston's cold-blooded expression. We are on the threshold of great events, all opening wider the expanse of Progress. The ex-King of Naples, with his heroic Queen and their suite, including the ambassadors who still remained at his court, arrived in Rome from Gaeta on the 14th of February. They were received by General Goyon and Cardinal Antonelli. In the evening, his Holiness, Pope Pius IX., called on the unfortunate exiles and condoled with them. The King praised his troops for their valiant resistance, but seeing the contest hopeless, he had capitulated to superior forces. He was to leave Rome on the 20th of February for Bavaria.

CONGRESSIONAL MATTERS.

THE new Senate met at one o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, and received from the President the Cabinet nominations, as follows: William H. Seward, of New York, aged sixty, lawyer, Secretary of State. Salmon P. Chase, of Ohio, aged fifty-three, lawyer and editor, Secretary of the Treasury. Simon Cameron, of Pennsylvania, aged sixty-two, printer, editor, financier and politician, Secretary of War. Gideon Welles, of Connecticut, aged fifty-five, editor and politician, Secretary of the Navy. Montgomery Blair, of Alabama, lawyer, Postmaster-General. Caleb B. Smith, of Indiana, lawyer and editor, Secretary of the Interior. Edward Bates, of Missouri, lawyer and politician, Attorney-General. These appointments were confirmed without dissent, except from Senator Mason, and a few others, who objected to Messrs. Blair and Bates as citizens of Slave States, who, he thought, could not sympathise with the Administration. It will be observed that this Cabinet contains no slaveholder—a composition never before known in the history of our Government.

On Friday, Senator Foster, of Connecticut, moved that, as Senator Wigfall, of Texas, had openly declared on the floor of the Senate that he owed no allegiance to the Federal Government, he should be expelled. Senator Mason moved, as an amendment, that as Texas had openly seceded from the Union, that State had no claim to be represented. In consequence of Mr. Wigfall's absence, the motion was postponed till Monday, when

The debate on Mr. Foster's motion was renewed on Tuesday, and several members spoke. It was finally referred to a Judiciary Committee, where no doubt it will remain, as under existing circumstances it would be impossible to get a two third vote against the Senator from Texas.

Shams.

CAN the amiable reader suggest a subject so enormously prolific of illustration, so abundant in example, so poetic, so prosy, so brilliant, dull, broad, long and deep as that of shams?

Philosophers have meditated for ages over the simple word am. How much more fertile in thought it becomes when one adds to it S. H.! For to study am is to believe in the intrinsically real nature of things. But to assume sham as the ultimate upshot of everything perceptible to the senses, is to agree with the wisest sages of the East, who believed that the end of all that has been created is maya, or illusion—that is to say, a sham.

Walk with us up Broadway, friend reader. See those windows labelled, "Take your choice for one dollar!" Behold the jewellery within, the brooches, the lavas, the mosaics. Why is it that people who wouldn't wear any kind of vain adornment contemplate the jewellery with an interest which they wouldn't give to the regalia of England, or to the treasures of the Green Vaults of Dresden? Simply because the excellence of the imitation tickles their fancy, appeals to the delight which everybody takes in producing great effects with little means, and doing a big business with a small capital. They know that twenty-four carat gold and Koh-i-Noor diamonds cannot be given for a dollar, but it is interesting to see that ornaments hardly distinguishable from the costliest can be made.

The American people are very fond of capital imitations, often preferring them to good originals. Nothing is commoner than to see rough cast and mastic imitations of stone put up at nearly the expense of the real article, and when an elaborate plan is followed, at a much greater expense. But the happy complacency with which the proprietor informs everybody of the sham, and points out the fact that it is just as nat'ral as can be, indicates a curious characteristic. It shows that he thinks, as certain men of old did, that the highest aim of art is to cheat the senses! And here, be it observed, that this principle has gained ground to such an extent in this country, that stone is carved, and that profusely, to imitate stucco! There are hundreds of doors and windows in the brown stone quarters of our city whose ornament is derived from the same patterns, art and artists, as the mirrors and picture-frames within. Observe the shallow slab poking itself forwards, full of meretricious rococo design, such as never entered man's head until he began to mock one material with another. This is, indeed, the crowning triumph of Sham over Art, when the real article apes its own imitation. And it speaks well for the education, taste and ingenuity of our millionaires and their builders.

Potichomanie, or the imitation of porcelain in glass, and leather work, whereby wood carving is well copied in a mere plastic material, are also, in a small and cheerful way, indications of the love of shams, which finds a little home, in a diminutive style, even in the guileless and upright souls of "the fair sect." Nay, are there not many little devices of the toilette which give great secret satisfaction, simply because they are deceitful expedients, calculated to produce the impression of greater expense than was really involved. We don't blame you, ladies—bless your hearts, no! It's human nature—it's the natural love of feeling that our ingenuity has triumphed. If you, Miss Van Boventhien, hear that your New York made De Bonneville dress was taken for an imported Victorine-stitched article, doesn't a warm glow of genial triumph thrill your gay and festive heart? Very much so indeed, we imagine. If the hat, which you—being a very ingenious girl—made with your own fair fingers, passes for one of Madame Modiste's best, aren't you really better pleased than if you had the real article? Well, perhaps not; but there are thousands who would be. And of course you never experienced a gush of joy when that dress, revived, resuscitated and rejuveniled, disguised and distinguéed, was made to go twice to a party in the same house of a winter, without being found out.

And we assure you again that we don't blame you. Up to a certain point sham signifies simply the effort to improve that which is naturally rough. A polish is natural to nothing—yet it improves everything. Gold is not refined by Nature. Only beware of stepping over that line which separates Truth from Falsehood. Then shams are no longer shams but lies, and there is an immense difference between the two, although nearly every English writer and essayist from Tom Carlyle downwards uses them as if they were in meaning one and the same.

EDITORIAL GLANCES AT MEN AND THINGS.

The Worst Sign in a man is when he has so debauched his nature as to be incapable of treating a serious subject seriously. A man who will make a pun when his friend is dying, would pick that friend's pocket when he is dead. This is what old Sam Johnson meant when he broke off in the middle of his famous apothegm. The flippant and bantering tone of many of the American journals in the present crisis is not creditable to our character as an earnest people. It would seem that instead of patriots we have only punsters. The Boston Transcript says:

"We have not yet smelt Southern powder, but certainly none of us can deny in view of the theft of United States forts, and the plunder of the United States Mint, that we have felt Southern steal."

The Philadelphia Press also indulges in this vein:

"Somebody suggests that the Southern Republic shall be called after one of its prominent founders, the 'Rhettched Confederacy,' and that the diminutive designation of the new nation shall be 'Cousin Sambo.' For instance, we call on 'John Bull.' He growls, but puts out his left hand to 'Brother Jonathan.' We look up to 'Uncle Sam,' and tell him that Floyd is picking his pockets. Let us, then, 'for short,' call the new born Republic 'Cousin Sambo.' This is both euphonious and suggestive."

And the Louisville Journal tries "its Prentice hand" on so many jokes, that we have no space to enumerate them. This Nero fiddling is enough to bring any republic to a violent end.

During the recent investigation before the Police Commissioners respecting the Kennedy and Williamson affair, several very refreshing incidents happened. When Bowen asked Superintendent Kennedy if he had been a candidate for the Marshalship. Mr. Kennedy said:

"These young men here (pointing to the reporters present) must say something, and they may as well blow away at me as at any other person; that is something (speaking consequentially) that I allow them to do."

Will it be credited that after the Superintendent had so kindly called them "young men," and given them permission to write his sacred name—Allah Bismillah!—one of these young men was so lost to the common instincts of humanity as to say, "We don't ask your permission." What will happen to this young man is too horrible to think of. Beadle Bumble prophesied that Oliver Twist would come to the gallows for asking for more, but hanging is certainly too good a fate for this profane "young man!"

The English Press is beginning to question the propriety of midnight discussions in Parliament. One of the most intelligent of their journals says:

"That men should regularly, for five months, turn day into night, and transact the most important business, after a heavy day's work, when the rest of the world are in their beds, has always seemed unaccountable to reasonable minds. Yet this has been the conduct of the members of the House of Commons for the last fifty years. Absurd as this arrangement appears, it is founded on the instincts of our nature—lawyers, merchants and placemen giving the first and freshest hours to their own affairs, and the stalest and most exhausted to the public, of course, prefer night to day work."

The radical paper in question does not seem to see that, to make the Parliamentary hours like ours or those of France, it would throw the management of public affairs into the hands of the aristocracy and the professed politicians. Merchants have an opportunity after business hours of devoting themselves to Parliamentary duties; as for exhaustion, it is a mere figure of speech. Apropos of British journalism, we clip the following nice little morceau of conceit out of one of the London papers:

"In the opinion of those best qualified to judge, the attitude of England has tended to discourage the Southerners and to incite the Unionists to new exertions. Some of the Northern States have made themselves conspicuous by the vigor of their action. The State of New York is ready to place its military at the service of the Federal Government."

Governor Morgan will be much gratified to know that his placing the military at the service of the Federal Government was in accordance with the attitude of England.

PERSONAL.

W. M. BROWNE, late of the Washington Constitution, has accepted the position of Assistant-Secretary of the Southern Republic.

EUGENE SCRIBE, the great French manufacturer and dealer in the drama, died in Paris on the 18th.

ROBERT LINCOLN, or as he is more popularly called, the Prince of Rails, has returned to Harvard University, to finish his studies. He does not consider the elephant as such "a big thing" after all. Elephants, even those seen in New York, are getting degenerated.

THE editor of the Lynchburg Virginian tells the following story: "A Union man told a Secession friend of his the other day, that he wished to send him an extract from a speech he had, which seemed to fit the existing condition of things better than anything he had seen; and thereupon, without letting him know what it was, read a passage from General Washington's Farewell Address. The Secessionist forthwith interrupted him by saying: 'Hold on, I've heard enough of that stuff; I don't know who made that speech, but it is plain enough that he is a submissionist.'"

GEN CASS has been warmly received by the people of Detroit, on his return home from the seat of government—he having reached that city on Friday of last week. He was met by a large delegation of the most respectable citizens, and speeches were made both by him and the spokesman of the committee. It is alleged that very much more respect was shown him, on account of his resignation of the office of Secretary of State when he found that he could no longer hold it with honor to himself or a prospect of benefit to the Government.

GOVERNOR FLOYD has arrived in Washington to face his accusers.

FRED SEWARD, son of the Secretary of State, has been made Assistant Secretary of State. The Sewards are sailors, they look Sea-wards! Stormy petrels may, however, chase them.

MR. REUBEN TRAVELLER, of Ottawa, Canada, died last week at the age of eighty years. He was present at several of the great naval battles of Nelson, and accompanied Mungo Park in his African exploration. Mr. Traveller was a native of England.

WE are sorry to hear that our friend John Savage, of the Washington States, is likely to receive the mission to the Fejee Islands. Lincoln says that being a Savage he is the very man to deal with savages. As Sydney Smith said to a missionary, "Let us hope he'll disagree with the savages who eat him!" If disagreeing be a qualification, our friend Rosenberg would be the very man for Fejee—he'll disagree with everybody in the whole Cannibal Islands.

MR. JACOB HAM, of the township of Brook, Canada, died last week, aged sixty-three. He was the famous soldier who, under Burgoyne, at the battle of Saratoga, received a ball in the leg; the bullet, after passing through the leg, fell inside the trowsers, and John Ham picked it up again, placed it in his musket and fired it back against his foe.

SOLOMON WILLARD, Esq., of Quincy, Mass., died, aged seventy-seven. He was one of the earliest projectors of Bunker Hill Monument, and contributed largely towards its erection. The original models of the monument are still in his office. In 1826, with the advice and aid of the late Hon. Thomas H. Perkins and others, he designed and surveyed with his own hands, the Quincy Granite Railway, the first ever built in the United States.

IT would seem that we never know what good men we have among us till they are no more. The Sunday Courier contains in its last number the biography of a man of rare energy, intellect and benevolence, the late William A. Turnure. It is pleasant, however, to find this tardy recognition of merit even when it falls on the cold ear of death. Our writers would do well to remember that there is as much affectation in praising the dead, as there is malignity in withholding due encouragement from the living.

NORMAN B. JUDD, of Illinois, has been appointed Minister to Berlin.

PARTON, having taken the lives of Aaron Burr and Andrew Jackson, is now engaged on a similar attempt on Benjamin Franklin. His industry and research are very great. He has also the rare merit of not being afraid of attacking time-honored superstitions. His life of Aaron Burr was an able and a fearless work.

MR. S. W. HOPKINS died a few days since in Richmond, Virginia. He was formerly in Congress, and was Polk's Minister at the Court of Lisbon. He was in his sixty-fifth year. Our old politicians are rapidly dropping off.

THE World, which is a decided semi-Cameron paper, is down upon Lincoln's first appointment, Judd to Prussia, and calls it appointing a three-cornered man to a round hole. This would seem to imply that Sim does not like Judd. By the way, an old friend of the present Secretary of War says that Sim Cameron does not represent Pennsylvania, but Cameronia, which is at once himself and his native country.

WE are truly glad to hear that Mr. Lincoln does not intend to have a party organ in Washington.

THE appointment of Carl Shurz to any diplomatic mission abroad will be resisted by some very influential members of the Republican party as well as some of the Cabinet. Nor is it improbable that the Senate might not confirm him. So able and eloquent a man, however, is sure to be well provided for.

MR. SEWARD has recovered from his severe attack of lumbago. The Express humorously adds: "This was a complaint much in vogue about sixty years ago with our old dowagers, who cured it by carrying pieces of brimstone in their breeches pockets!" This will be news to our grandfathers and grandmothers too.

MAX MARETZEK, the indomitable, and Ada Clare, the irresistible, have arrived in New York from Havana.

PRINCE ALFRED of England is daily expected at Havana, where great preparations have been made to receive him with the same honors as though he were a Spanish Prince.

A REMARKABLE scene occurred in Willard's Hotel on Saturday evening. Two distinguished Senators got unusually tight, and one of them slapped the other's face. A duel was about to take place when the offending Senator apologised, and the two Senators got tight again to make it all right.

THE celebrated Tigers gave their ball at Boston on the 11th. It was a brilliant affair. Governor John Andrew and staff, Colonel Lefferts of the Seventh New York Regiment and a host of distinguished citizens were present.

IN compliance with the request of the Mayor and Common Council of Boston, Senator Crittenden and his charming wife will visit the City of Notions in a few days.

A LIEUTENANT CUMMINGS, who is stationed at Fort Brown, Georgia, has been amusing himself by firing at American vessels with shot and shell. We recommend him to the supervision of President Jeff. Davis.

VELLUTI, the celebrated male soprano, who created such interest in 1825 in London, died at Mira, Venetia, on the 3rd. Rossini and Meyerbeer both composed operas for him.

THE Hon. John Bell is at Nashville, Tennessee.

COLONEL HUYETT is busy at Huntingdon, Pennsylvania, correcting the proof-sheets of his new work.

OUR WEEKLY GOSSIP.

Amateur Managers—The Holy Fossils of Brooklyn.

UNLIKE the frog in the fable who ambitiously emulated the size of the ox, Brooklyn has by a mighty spasmodic effort swelled herself up to the proportions of New York and has not burst, but we think she shows symptoms of collapse. The proposition to build an Opera House received but little favor until some enterprising men without means dug out some rare fossil specimens, embalmed in gold and stuffed with puritanical bigotry, who, on being enrolled, declared themselves in favor of a one-horse institution, half Conventicle and half Opera House, to which they would "come down" liberally. The virtuous and eminently respectable community of the City of Churches broke into a subdued and sectarian smile at this announcement, and the rumor went abroad at once that a Pastor was to be appointed, and that the exercises, vocal and saltatory, were to be opened with prayer.

It was decided at once that theatrical performances should be religiously excluded, on account of the immoral tendency of peanuts and oranges, which always came in and went out with the drama, and for the further reason that the plots of the plays were secular in their character, and did not pay sufficient deference to the privileged classes. One singularly anterior fossil suggested that opera-singing seemed to him to be very much like play-acting; but he was immediately silenced by the remark that if it was like play acting it was all done in a foreign language, and it might be an Ora-to-re for what they knew. This, and the assurance that English Opera should also be excluded, satisfied the venerable mollusk, who subsided into the year 90 B. C.

We think it but common justice to state that the chastity of Brooklyn's peculiar institution, the Academy of Music, has been rigidly maintained. It is true that "Norma," the Virgin Priestess with her respectable family of small children, has been duly represented, and "Lucrezia Borgia," that chaste and pious high-life Duchess, has "warbled her native wood-notes—mild," to the delectation of the elect: but "Traviata," that low born unfortunate, has applied for admission in vain, being immediately referred to the Alms House Commissioners. This Spartan virtue of the Grandmothers of Brooklyn is worthy of all honor, and we chronicle it with tears in our eyes—we do.

It may not be generally known, but it is nevertheless a fact, that the gentlemen Directors were chief cooks, head waiters and bottle washers. If a party wanted seats, Mr. Wholesale Drygoods fussed round till he found them. If a lady wanted a bill Mr. Wholesale Provisions trotted around and fumed and fretted until he found one. A portion of the Directors paraded the front of the house and played ushers to perfection, and saved a little something in the way of salaries. The remaining Directors were omnipotent behind the scenes. Church deacons were selected for this department on account of their superior morality and tried decorum. This was highly necessary, as they had to come into contact with singing women and dancing girls, and had to rise superior to temptation.

But even these venerable patriots were subject to agitating excitements. One night it was discovered that Brignoli had no soap! The news spread among the Directors like wildfire, and general consternation ensued.

Mr. Drygoods exclaimed, "Sig-nor Brig-noli has no soap!"
Mr. Shipping-house said, "Good gracious! No soap!"
Mr. Wholesale Hardware echoed, "No soap!"
Some one in the "flies" said, "Soap."
Mr. Drygoods said decidedly, "The sig-nor must have some soap!"
Mr. Shipping-house said very decidedly, "Must have some soap."
Mr. Wholesale Hardware echoed in thunder, "Some soap!"

A meeting was thereupon convened, and Mr. Wholesale Drygoods was called to the chair.

Mr. Wholesale Hardware introduced his resolution with some patriotic remarks complimentary to Brooklyn generally, and to the unheard-of liberality of the Directors in particular. He said it was his opinion that as hundreds of thousands of dollars had been expended in the erection of this beautiful temple, devoted to religious art and profane opera, it would be the poorest of policy to dim its effulgent glory for the sake of a cent's worth of soap. "It is true," he said, "that soap was not mentioned in the contract; but he thought that men—gentlemen he should have said—who had devoted their lives and fortunes to the ennoblement of their native city, could spare a trifle more for the honor of that city. He therefore moved "that a subscription be taken up then and there to purchase a package of Old Brown Windsor for the use of Sig-nor Brig-no-li, the same not to be removed from the premises."

Mr. Shipping-house seconded the motion, and placed ten cents in the hands of the Chairman.

The motion was carried unanimously, and the full subscription of fifty cents made up at once.

It was afterwards moved that the Chairman personally procure the same, which was also unanimously carried.

We regret to add that when the Chairman returned with the soap Signor Brignoli had borrowed some from Madame Colson, and therefore did not need it. What became of that package of "Old Brown Windsor" has never been ascertained.

We are happy to say that the Drama is still excluded from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, and that Professor Anderson, D. D. M. (Doctor of Divine Magic), has been giving his sacred hocus pocus there, to the great moral refreshment of serious audiences. When Mr. Nixon returns from Havana it is expected that he will give a series of Equestrian Moralities in the sawdust ring, the exercises to be enlivened by a serious clown, stirred up by a ring master who has experienced religion.

The last Mania—How we Carried it Out.

When New Yorkers do "go in," they do "go in" and no mistake. Who would have believed three years ago that in 1860 all New York would be on skates? And not only male New York, but the delicate and charming female element of that locality! Yet so it is; the ladies found that skating was the darling enjoyment of fathers, brothers, husbands and lovers, and they could not afford to let them indulge in that fascinating enjoyment alone, so they plucked up courage, bundled themselves in the warmest and least cumbersome manner, and risked many a fall on the glittering ice, for the sake of sharing our out-door society. We are an imitative people, and when our ladies became aware that it was the fashion in England and Europe for their sex to skate, all scruples vanished, and a wholesome, invigorating and eminently graceful exercise has been added to our winter amusements. For this we do sincerely thank Fashion; it is one of the few things we can record to her credit. Who knows but in two or three years we may hear a fashionable belle boast that she has walked ten miles that day and is not a bit tired! Such changes may come, and then think what a different race of women we shall see!

According to the Central Park statistics, we had but twenty-six days in the ice season of 1860–'61 when skating in that locality was good; but in those twenty-six days nearly one and a half million of people participated in the exhilarating sport. The records show that on one day—February 9th—one hundred and five thousand persons visited the skating pond, and on the 10th over ninety-six thousand! These seem to be incredible numbers, but they are true, and they clearly show how we New Yorkers do rush in when we do rush in.

The dealers in skates are making great preparations for the next winter campaign. They could not meet half of the supply at the beginning of the past season, so they are determined to be better prepared for the future. We heard of one order received by the agent of Stenton & Co., of Sheffield, England, from a large house here, of twenty thousand pairs of skate irons! Such are the proportions to which this one branch of business has arisen through a caprice of fashion.

A Practicable and Certain Fire-Escape at last.

There was a great excitement in Brooklyn on Wednesday evening, the 13th inst., on the occasion of the trial of Mackenzie's Fire-Escape, which had been fixed on the front, underneath the cornice of the Globe Hotel, in Fulton Street. The exhibition was given at night, the front of the hotel being illuminated by the glare of tar barrels. The whole street for several blocks was thronged with people. This fire-escape is a permanent one, to be attached to the front or back of houses. It consists simply of an iron tube, supported by strong brackets, under the eaves of the house. The tube has a narrow opening underneath, running the whole length of the tube. Inside the tube is an iron ball, which revolves on anti-friction rollers, and can be moved along the tube with the rapidity of lightning. An iron strap is attached to the ball, from which depends a tackle and car. One man standing on the sidewalk can raise the car to the upper windows, move it all along the front of the house, and to every window, taking out any one in distress.

On Thursday evening, the parties who worked the car raised it to the upper window, took out two men, deposited them on the sidewalk, ran the car one hundred feet along the front of the house, raised the car again, took out four men and deposited them on the pavement—the time occupied in thus saving six lives at the opposite ends of the building was less than two minutes. This was, beyond a doubt, a wonderful success. The firemen then raised a hose pipe to the top of the building and all along the front, showing that by means of Mackenzie's Fire-Escape, hose pipe can be carried right into rooms on fire, even to the very topmost floor.

The hosts of firemen on the ground declared that if this escape had been on the buildings 56 and 58 Broadway, which were consumed last week, they could have saved fifty thousand dollars worth of goods.

Not a moment should be lost in attaching Mackenzie's Fire Escape to every tenement and public school in the city. No life could be lost in a building to which it is attached. Our great hotels should also use it, for by-and-bye strangers arriving at New York will select that hotel which has some means of saving life in case of fire. The Legislature at Albany should add to the unsafe building law a clause compelling owners of tenement-houses to put up Mackenzie's Fire-Escape at once. Humanity demands the action. It can be put up at one fifth the cost of any other escape, and is immeasurably superior to all. It is so simple that a policeman, private watchman or passer by could, on a sudden alarm of fire, work the escape and afford immediate relief.

Cousins.

We suppose that every one, more or less, has had his share of cousins. We acknowledge this privilege in its broadest sense. We have had cousins that we kissed, and cousins that we quarrelled with and kissed afterwards. Sometimes the kiss came before the quarrel, but we distinctly remember that a kiss was one of the conditions of every meeting. We look upon cousins, female of course, as a special providence for young men. They cure them of mauvaise honte, they initiate them into the "little ways" of women; they are, in short, real life lay figures, under whose direction, by special permission, on the score of near relationship, inexperienced youths practice the delicate and delicious arts of flirting and kissing. We venerate cousins; we bless them for rubbing off the rough edges of our period of adolescence, for turning the gawkey into the men of the world, for revealing enough of their own nature to prepare us against assaults from the outside barbarian maidens, and we solemnly assert that it has been the profoundest pleasure of our lives to help our dear cousins to marry—somebody else.

But the Colonel, a very warm and esteemed friend of ours, has a "cousin," whose gentle and womanly influence over him has extended far beyond the period of his manhood. She is the one authority, standing out in his memory like a beacon on the ocean, in all that is pure, true and beautiful. But, though often quoted, she is never seen, and though often referred to, she is never named, for the Colonel is sly—devilish sly. We own to a little of our mother's nature still remaining, and therefore to the possession of a little quiet curiosity. Spurred on by this womanly failing, regulated, however, by a superior intelligence, we, in all humbleness, make

An Appeal to "Cousin Clara."

I have a friend who is ever recurring
To one gentle being—a cynosure she!
Far above all, with earth's dross in their nature,
A Sybil—a Virtue—ah! who can she be?

Is she not laughingly, lovingly, blue-eyed,
Golden-haired, rosy-lipped, rounded and fair,
A dear dainty armful, whose heavenly missions
To lift up some poor soul from out his despair?

Is she a stately brunette, whose black bright eyes
Look through the soul and consume it the while,
Dark banded hair o'er a forehead imperial,
Flashing a wealth of deep love in her smile?

Is she a sweet, pensive, hazel-eyed beauty,
Low voiced, soft stepped, with touch like a sigh,
Who pains you with tenderness—yielding—exacting,
Straining the chords of your heart till you die?

Is she a strong minded-woman, and learned
In "isms" and "ologies" world without end?
From all such encyclopædical ladies
And all of their kidney, good Lord us defend!

Come, cousin Clara, discard your disguises,
Drop your incognito—throw off the mask,
Which of the portraits I've drawn with rash pencil,
Designing to draw you out, fits you, I ask?

Are you a myth, cousin Clara? do tell me,
Or are you the "Harris" that Mrs. Gamp knew?
I'd ask of the Colonel, but he's so mysterious,
I ask you, cousin Clara, I ask who are you?

I wait for an answer with feverish impatience,
I'm not over curious, as plainly you see.
But lest I should waste to the merest thread paper,
Let the wind from the south waft an answer to me.

Something New to Read.

Rudd & Carleton have commenced to mingle works of a graver character with their light literature and poetic publications. They have just issued the second series of the work, The Great Preparation; or, Redemption Draweth Near. By the Rev. John Cummings, Minister of the Scottish National Church, London. The Great Preparation may be termed a sequel to the preceding work by the same author, "The Great Tribulation." In that work the writer endeavors to prove that the end is drawing nigh, that the prophesies are about to be fulfilled, and that the coming may be counted by days, so few are the years between now and that time. The character of the present work is indicated by its title, the text of all the Lectures bearing upon the solemn injunction, "Be ye therefore ready." Dr. Cummings is earnest, eloquent and sincere, and although we cannot join with him in all his conclusions, we can bear testimony to the broad philanthropy, the boundless charity, and unhesitating faith expressed and indicated in his writings. No one can read these Lectures without deriving from them both comfort and profit.

Rudd & Carleton have also published Fast Day Sermons for 1860-61. These sermons were all preached upon one subject—the state of the country. They present the several views of the several sections of the country upon the subject. Mr. Van Dyke and the Rabbi Raphael recognize Slavery as a natural, if not a divine institution, drawing their illustrations from the Sacred Book. Mr. Beecher and Dr. Bellows maintain with their accustomed eloquence the opposite view, deeming it the crisis of the irrepressible conflict, and the strife between civilization and barbarism. The right and the justice of Secession are asserted and defended by Dr. Palmer of N. O. and Dr. Thornwell of S. C., while Dr. Breckinridge of Ky. is eloquent in the denouncement of all who would break up the happiest and most prosperous Union in the world. Dr. Vinton, of Trinity, denounces the fanatical spirit of the North. Dr. Tayler Lewis of Union College denies that Patriarchal and Jewish slavery is any justification of American slavery. Dr. Dabney of Va., and Dr. Adams of N. Y., take a milder and more Christian view of the present crisis, and their words breathe of peace and conciliation. This is a collection of great and singular interest, embracing as it does, the contrasted views of many of the leading minds of the age. It is a work which in after times will be referred to as exhibiting marked pictures of the violent, social and moral convulsions which agitated our country at the time of its greatest and most momentous peril.

Notes on Sea Coast Defence; consisting of Sea Coast Fortifications, the Fifteen Inch Gun and Casemate Embrasures, by Major J. G. Barnard, U. S. Corps of Engineers. This volume has just been issued by D. Van Nostrand, New York, in a very beautiful style, with numerous diagrams and illustrations. This is a very suggestive work, and will, at this time, attract considerable attention. The importance of sea fortifications is ably stated and sustained by the report of the English Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject. The fifteen inch gun is strongly recommended, and its necessity illustrated by reference to the steel plated vessels which England and France are now rapidly building, and which would be proof against any ordinary artillery. The author's views upon casemate embrasures are thorough and practical. It is a well-timed work, and should command the attention of those in power.

Beadle's Dime Novels. Biographies, &c. The success which has attended this dashing and well conceived speculation is one of the signs of the times. Beadle & Co. have only been established a few months, yet, in that time, they have built up such a vast and important business, that they have established a branch house in London. The idea was to reduce the price of literature to the lowest possible paying point, and to carry out the idea, ten cents was fixed on as the maximum point. For ten cents they sell a novel of 128 pages, neatly and carefully got out. A large number of novels, tales and adventures have already been published in this form, and have met with an immense sale. It seems just to have hit the public's pocket, and by that means has secured an immediate and wonderful success. The publishers, Messrs. Beadle & Co., encouraged by popular approbation, intend to issue, besides the light literature already mentioned, a succession of works of general, varied and useful information, so that their catalogue will soon assume a rapidly increasing importance in the publishing world.

The volumes before us are the lives of "Kit Carson," "Daniel Boone" and the "Dime Family Physician," which is full of useful and reliable information. Beadle & Co. have made a great and decided hit.

A Hotel Well Managed.

The Messrs. Willard, proprietors of the large hotel in Washington bearing their name, deserve great credit for their admirable management in securing the comfort of their guests during Inauguration week, when, although over two thousand persons were accommodated, the most perfect order prevailed. Bells were promptly answered, and the attendance at table was excellent. The house has been recently painted, and the furniture renovated which, in conjunction with the neatness and system which prevails throughout the establishment, reflect infinite credit upon the gentlemanly proprietors.

Things Going on and Coming off.

On Saturday evening, the 16th inst., the New York Philharmonic Society give one of their glorious concerts at the Academy of Music in Fourteenth street. The programme is very fine—Beethoven's "Seventh Symphony" being the pièce de resistance. Our readers will be glad to learn that on this occasion they will have an opportunity of hearing Richard Hoffman play. He is one of those pianists of whose performance we never tire. It would be pleasant to hear him oftener in public.

We understand that it is the intention of a number of our most prominent citizens to give a complimentary entertainment to Madame Anna Bishop, whose popularity in this city is so great and so well deserved. No artist ever came before the American public who so richly merited this favor; as an artist she is admirable not only for her rare accomplishments, but for her conscientious discharge of her duties. We do not believe that she ever disappointed the audience once during her whole career in this city. As a lady, amiable, kind and just; friendly to all, and without envy or guile, she is respected and beloved by all who know her. We sincerely trust that this friendly and appreciative movement will be cordially seconded by the public, and that Madame Bishop will have a thronged and brilliant attendance at her forthcoming complimentary entertainment.

It is rumored that young Bruno Wollenhaupt will give a grand orchestral concert at Irving Hall some time this month. We trust that this rumor will turn out truth, for our readers will then enjoy the performance of one of the most admirable violinists of the age—one whose genius is fresh and untrammelled, and whose executive powers are of the highest order; whose style, taste and finish are worthy of the more mature masters of the violin. Let us hope that we shall hear Bruno Wollenhaupt at last.

DRAMA.

The only dramatic novelty of the past week was the appearance of Miss Jane Coombes at the Winter Garden. This young lady's career as an artist opened most auspiciously, her debut being rendered memorable, not only on account of the great promise of future excellence she then exhibited, but from the fact that Mr. Forrest consented to appear in conjunction with a debutante, and enacted Claude Melnotte to the lady's Pauline. This was some few years ago, and since then the young girl has bloomed into a lovely woman, the trembling debutante into an accomplished artiste. The last time that Miss Coombes acted in New York prior to her present engagement was during the past summer, when she played a highly successful engagement at Wallack's Theatre, winning warm encomiums alike from the public and the press. The great charm of Miss Coombes's performances is the delicate refinement everywhere visible. She never acts for points, but presents an even, quiet, womanly portraiture, which, if it does not startle, is sure to please. In the higher walks of comedy she is one of the best actresses on the American stage, and in drama and tragedy maintains an enviable position. We cordially welcome this lady to the New York boards, and feel convinced that the public will endorse our good opinion of her. Next week we shall speak of her different impersonations in detail.

At Wallack's, Mrs. Cowley's capital comedy, "A Bold Stroke for a Husband," was revived on Monday, for the benefit of the worthy treasurer of this house, Mr. Theodore Moss, and, as a matter of course, drew a fine house. Mr. Moss is an especial favorite with the playgoing public, and his benefits are always of the most substantial description. The remainder of the week was mainly devoted to the benefits of different members of the corps dramatique, and with gratifying results. It is said that a new comedy, by an author not unknown to fame, is in rehearsal at this house, and will be brought forward immediately.

Barnum's Museum.—We cannot do Barnum better justice than by enumerating some of the numerous attractions to be seen every day and evening at his Museum. In addition to his Lilliputian Princess, there are the Aztec Children, the Albinos, and hosts of other natural wonders. There is also a new drama, which crowds the Lecture-room every afternoon and evening. Apropos of Barnum, the solution to that remarkable Rebus, published in Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun, will be given in the next number of that unrivalled comic periodical.

POLITICAL ITEMS.

In the Secession Congress at Montgomery a bill has been reported, providing, in the event of a conflict or the refusal of the United States to recognise the independence of the Confederacy, that the courts of the Confederate States shall have no cognizance of civil cases of citizens of the United States, and that all pending cases shall be dismissed. This bill, if it becomes a law, will debar the legal collection of all debts due to citizens of the Northern States. Virginia and the other Border States are to be "coerced" by a law prohibiting the introduction and sale of negroes from States remaining in the Union.

The first Secession clearance has been heard from on receipt. It was that of the cargo of the brig Ouward, at Ponce, Porto Rico. She bore a full set of custom-house papers from the "Republic of South Carolina," and the authorities, who did not know exactly what to make of it, finally received the cargo and entered it under protest.

Sixty-seven Republican Representatives and twelve Senators voted against a resolution that Congress should never interfere with slavery in the States.

The Atlas says: "The radical Republicans now charge that Seward's extreme Anti-Slavery opinions have been a mere sham and pretence. They assert that for the last fifteen years he has educated them to an extreme point of hostility to the doctrine of property in man, and that he has now abandoned them and struck hands with the most rank conservatism. They ask where were his conservative compromises and conciliatory views towards the South when he was entertaining negroes and Jerry rescuers at his house in Auburn? The simple answer to all this is, that Mr. Seward, like a wise man, has progressed with the times."

The population of the seven States that have now seceded amount to about 5,000,000, viz.:

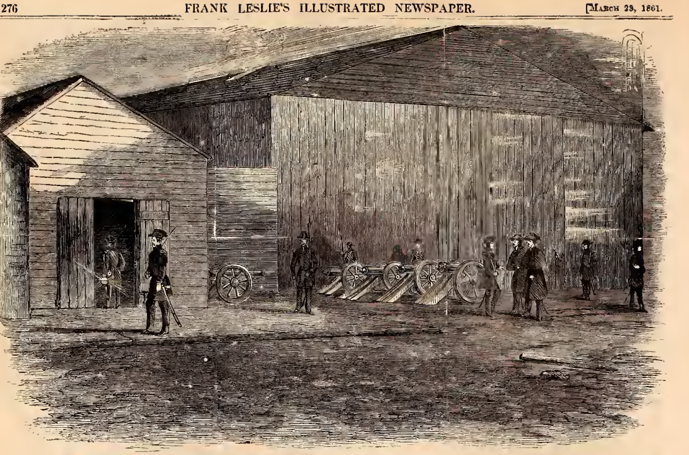
South Carolina	715,371
Georgia	1,082,736
Florida	145,685
Alabama	955,917
Louisiana	666,431
Mississippi	686,058
Texas	600,956
Total	5,053,154

The Virginia State Convention proposes that the border States should hold a conference at Frankfort, Kentucky, on the 27th May; while the Missouri Convention proposes that it should be held at Nashville, Tennessee, on the 15th April.

The Montgomery Congress have adopted a permanent Constitution for the Southern Confederacy, the provisions of which it has been thought best, at present, to keep somewhat secret. It provides a six years' term for the President, and all executive officers below the Cabinet Ministers to hold office during good behavior. Cabinet officers are allowed to hold seats in Congress while acting in the Cabinet. The slave-trade is prohibited. An act has been passed authorising the issue of $1,000,000 in treasury notes, also an appropriation bill for current expenses.

President Lincoln has appointed T. C. Littlejohn, Speaker of the New York State Assembly, as Consul to Liverpool; W. H. Vesey, Consul to Aix la Chapelle. Mr. Cassius Clay is to be our Minister to Spain; Mr. Tom Corwin to Mexico.

Gov. Brown, of Georgia, has released the bark Adjuster, of this port, one of the vessels seized as reprisals for the Georgia arms and ammunition held by the police authorities of this city, in consequence of the representation of the British Consul that her cargo belongs to subjects of Queen Victoria. This release establishes the novel precedent of a New York vessel claiming and receiving British protection in American waters. The release of the Adjuster also shows that an American vessel, with a cargo owned by British subjects, is held to be under British protection, and that a seizure of the vessel, though the cargo may be formally released, is a seizure of both, and justifies the application for the release of the vessel and cargo as an unit.



UNITED STATES SOLDIERS GUARDING THE EXTERIOR OF THE BALL-ROOM DURING THE INAUGURATION BALL, ON THE EVENING OF MARCH 4, 1861.—SEE PAGE 279

SANTA LUCIA—A VENETIAN TALE.

By M. Botham Edwards

Author of "An Artist's Tale," "Now or Never," &c., &c.

ARGUMENT OF CHAPTERS I., II., III., IV.

The reader will recal that our tale opened in the stormy days of Venice in 1848, and with the influence exercised on the growing revolution by the brave Emilia Ruta. We spoke of the love which her nephew Emanuel—also a conspirator—bore for Lucia Valletti, the daughter of an hereditary enemy of his family, and of his suggestion to his aunt Emilia that Venice could not be free until these feuds were suppressed. We described a meeting of the lovers, the arrest of Emanuel for his political disaffection, the reconciliation of the Pepoli and Valletti families, and the announcement made to Lucia by her father that he had found for her a gallant husband. Such was the disposition of our dramatis personæ when we left.

CHAPTER V.—VIVA LA REPUBLICA DE VENEZIE!

The tidings of the French Revolution, as might be expected, occasioned great excitement amongst the people. "Revolution in Austria—Constitution at Vienna," this was the match that lighted the mighty mass of fuel, which was destined to blaze so brightly in the eyes of all the world. Over these matters we must pass briefly. It is sufficient to say that Manin and the other prisoners were released by the alarmed governor; frays happened between the soldiery and the citizens; the latter got possession of the arsenal and Manin was placed at the head of affairs; finally the tricolored Italian flag was planted in the Place of St. Mark, and the old cry of freedom arose from the multitude, Viva la Republica de Venezie!

Venice was free! A delirium of happiness filled every heart. A radiant future of prosperity and freedom dawned on those warm southern natures, tears of joy were shed like rain, old and young embraced each other; the former days of Venetian greatness were recalled by song and story; the days of Venetian greatness to come were traced out in burning words of poetry—such poetry as the love of one's country and the dreams of freedom can inspire.

As to the Signora Emilia, if her life had once been a constant bustle and excitement, it was now doubly so. Every day was a succession of appointments, interviews, commissions and transactions, in which she bore no inconsiderable part. Her spirits, which had been somewhat depressed since Emanuel's arrest, now revived, and though she still wept for him in short, passionate intervals of loneliness, and forgot him never, she was too occupied to give way to grief. Besides, she was not a woman who is easily broken down by sorrow. Her temperament was too sanguine, her spirits too volatile for despair. So she went her way with her usual jaunty swing, coaxed money out of her timid, parsimonious husband, for the needs of the republic, rated her female friends, till, for very shame, they followed her example, and sold their bijouterie for the same purpose; persuaded the young men to enlist, poured out her wine in inspiriting banquets to the patriots—in fact, what did she not do? What cannot a woman and a republican find time to do in the day?

And Lucia—what would she do but pray and hope? Aloof from all participation in the exciting and active changes around her, yet feeling so deep and pure an interest in all, it was very hard to be condemned to such useless activity. For of late she had learned to be ambitious for the sake of her country and to feel, not the mere sympathy of a love-sick girl but the ardent aspirations of a high-minded Italian woman. Indeed, she was no longer the timid, childlike being she had hitherto been. The events and the sorrow of the last few weeks had changed her more than mere love and happiness ever could have done. She was no longer content to shrink within herself, and trustingly take her opinions second-hand from others. The courage and heroism around her made her also courageous—heroic also, but at present both were latent. She longed for some scope for this new strength within her; she felt how good it must be to serve others and give up private interests and private pleasures for the benefit of the people; and she passionately desired for a small share in the glorious work, a humble waif of the universal labor.

The first flash of triumph over, the Venetians saw clearly that it was a time for action rather than for ovations. Deep, concentrated thought settled on the brows of all the chiefs in the city. No amusements took place, no theatres were open, no private festivals were held. One grave interest bound all—the public affairs. And arduous, indeed, was the work before the patriots—hopeless to any whose hearts were not full of firm courage and love of country.

One evening that Count Valletti returned home later than usual, and pale and haggard—for tidings had just arrived of the disastrous defeat of Charles Albert, an event which so darkened the future prospects of the liberated city—he called his daughter to him, and said:

"My child, I would fain speak to thee on a weighty matter. Listen, Lucia, there will be terrible days here before long. We have no longer any allies, or any hope of success, save by our own strength and endurance. The time is not far off when the enemy's guns will fire on our city by day and by night; who will then be safe from a ball? And I am old, Lucia, old, and the readier to fall away if things come to the worst; for hunger——"

"Oh! father," cried Lucia, with a shudder.

"Hunger and disease may come," he continued, without heeding her interruption, "and then the old and the babes go first; and worse may come——"

He caught her to his breast with a terrible intensity of emotion.

"My child—my pretty one—the Holy Virgin save thee."

For some moments he sobbed aloud, whilst Lucia, who had never before seen him moved to such love and tenderness, hung around him, kissing his hands and lips, and soothing him with expressions of endearment. Soon he calmed, and taking her hands in his, said gravely:

"No, Lucia, if I go I shall not leave thee unprotected. Alas dear one, thy wedding should have had a fairer time; but we must wait for the festival, Lucia," he smiled bitterly, and added, "That must come afterwards: it is sufficient for my peace that I leave thee sheltered by an arm as strong as mine has been. Andrea Uziolli has long loved thee; no more honorable man is to be found in Venice; to-morrow he is willing to make thee his wife."

Very pale, very calm, Lucia stood before him with clasped hands and bowed head.

"Father," she said, gently but firmly, "do not force me to marry Uziolli, to perjure myself. I have given my love and promise to another; he, too, an honorable man in Venice."

The count started to his feet, white and rigid.

"A pretty confession, truly! Is it you who speak, Lucia; you, so fair and innocent to look at—my daughter—have you been deceiving me—you—the child of my heart? Good Heavens!"

He staggered to a chair, like an aged man.

"Forgive me," cried Lucia, with a burst of tears; "do not be angry with me now, father; I have repented of my fault bitterly—atoned for it by the sorrow it has caused me."

The count was not a man of refined susceptibilities. So long as Lucia could be brought to meet Uziolli as her husband, he was willing to ignore the former love.

"And to-morrow thou wilt wed Uziolli, and show by thy prompt obedience how true thy repentance has been. Child, I forgive thee."

"Oh! no, no; listen, dearest father, you mistake me. I have no love to give another; surely thou wilt not force on me such hard obedience. Emanuel Pepoli is my betrothed husband, an honorable man, a friend, an ally of our house. Now, wouldst thou have me be faithless to him?"

The count rose, and paced the room in a state of sullen indecision. His daughter's confession had at first irritated—stunned him; for though harsh and unloving outwardly, he held her dearer than anything else in the world; and her first opposition to his wishes was a great vexation. The mention of Pepoli was another shock. At first his impulse was that of unmitigated anger—such anger, only in less degree, as he would have felt six months ago—but on calmer consideration, the fact appeared in less startling colors. After all, was not a Pepoli a

(Continued on page 278)

UNITED STATES SOLDIERS ON THE ROOF OF ADAMS'S EXPRESS DURING THE INAUGURATION, WASHINGTON, MARCH 4, 1861.—SEE PAGE 279.

Cephalic Pills,

CURE

Sick Headache,

CURE

Nervous Headache,

CURE

All kinds of

Headache.

By the use of these Pills the periodic attacks of Nervous or Sick Headache may be prevented; and if taken at the commencement of an attack immediate relief from pain and sickness will be obtained.

They seldom fail in removing the Nausea and Headache to which females are so subject.

They act gently upon the bowels, removing Costiveness.

For Literary Men, Students, Delicate Females, and all persons of sedentary habits they are valuable as a Laxative improving the appetite, giving tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and restoring the natural elasticity and strength of the whole system.

The CEPHALIC PILLS are the result of long investigation and carefully conducted experiments, having been in use many years, during which time they have prevented and relieved a vast amount of pain and suffering from Headache whether originating in the nervous system or from a deranged state of the Stomach.

They are entirely vegetable in their composition, and may be taken at all times with perfect safety without making any change of diet, and the absence of any disagreeable taste renders it easy to administer them to children.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS

The genuine have five signatures of Henry C. Spalding on each Box

Sold by Druggists and all other Dealers in Medicines.

A Box will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

all orders should be addressed to

HENRY C. SPALDING,

48 Cedar St., New York.

THE FOLLOWING INDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS

Will convince all who suffer from

HEADACHE

THAT A SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS WITHIN THEIR REACH.

These Testimonials were unsolicited by Mr. Spalding, they afford unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

MASONVILLE, CONN, Feb. 5, 1861.

MR. SPALDING— SIR—I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I like them so well that I want you to send me two dollars worth more Part of these are for the neighbors, to whom I gave a few out of the first box I got from you.

Send the Pills by mail, and oblige

Your ob't Servant, JAMES KENNEDY.

HAVERFORD, PA, Feb. 6, 1861.

MR. SPALDING—SIR—I wish you to send me one more box of your Cephalic Pills I have received a great deal of benefit from them. Yours respectfully,

MARY ANN STOIKHOUSE.

SPRUCE CREEK, HUNTINGTON CO, PA., Jan. 18, 1861.

H. C. SPALDING—SIR—You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately.

Respectfully yours, JNO. B. SIMONS

P. S.—I have used one box of your Pills and find them excellent.

BELLE VERNON, OHIO, Jan. 15, 1861.

HENRY C. SPALDING, ESQ.—Please find inclosed twenty-five cents, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best Pills I have ever tried. Direct

A. STOVER, P. M.,

Belle Vernon, Wyandot Co., O.

BEVERLEY, MASS., Dec. 11, 1860.

H. C. SPALDING, ESQ.—I wish for some Circulars or large show bills, to bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before my customers. If you have anything of the kind, please send to me. One of my customers, who is subject to severe Sick Headache (usually lasting two days), was cured of an attack in one hour by your Pills, which I sent her. Respectfully yours,

W. B. WILKES

☞ A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually. ☜

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SAVE THE PIECES

ECONOMY DISPATCH!

☞ "A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE." ☜

As accidents will happen, even in well regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.

Spalding's Prepared Glue

meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point.

"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."

N. B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cts.

Address HENRY C. SPALDING,

No. 48 Cedar St., New York.

CAUTION.

As certain unprincipled persons are attempting to palm off on the unsuspecting public imitations of my PREPARED GLUE, I would caution all persons to examine before purchasing, and see that the full name,

☞ SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, ☜

is on the outside wrapper all others are swindling counterfeits

VALUABLE BOOKS FREE.

EXTRA INDUCEMENTS FOR SUBSCRIBING

TO THE

NEW YORK WEEKLY,

BEFORE THE FIRST DAY OF APRIL.

The Best Story and Sketch Paper Published in the World.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SEND IN YOUR SUBSCRIPTIONS!!

A SPLENDID PREMIUM BOOK WORTH $2 25 TO EVERY SUBSCRIBER,

GETTERS-UP OF CLUBS, ATTENTION!!!

READ! READ!! READ!!! READ!!!! READ!!!!!

At a heavy expense, and with the view of still further extending the immense circulation of the NEW YORK WEEKLY, the Publishers offer, UNTIL THE FIRST DAY OF APRIL NEXT, the following named and described

MAGNIFICENT PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS,

ALL TO BE NEW NAMES, AND NONE TO BE RESIDENTS OF ANY TOWN WHERE THERE IS A NEWS AGENT.

Each Subscriber will Receive, postage free, either of the following named Works, which he or she may indicate:

THE PICTORIAL FAMILY ENCYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY AND TRAVELS. Comprising Prominent Events in the History of the World; Biographies of Eminent Men, and Interesting Accounts of Distinguished Travellers. By JOHN FROST, LL D. Illustrated with Three Hundred and Sixty Engravings. New York: C. M. SAXTON, BARKER & Co., No 25 Park Row. 648 large octavo pages.

This work contains a vast fund of interesting and instructive reading, much of which cannot be found elsewhere. It is designed for the use of family circles and school libraries, and comprises a great variety of useful and entertaining matter. Among the historical and biographical notices are many events and characters of remarkable interest which are so little connected with general history as not to have a place in the common works on the subject. The details of hunting and travelling adventures are rich in character and full of thrilling interest. The retail price is $2 25.

INDIAN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES, from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By JOHN FROST, LL.D. With numerous Engravings, from Original Designs, by W. Croome and other Distinguished Artists. New York: C. M. SAXTON, BARKER & Co., No. 25 Park Row. 372 large octavo pages.

This volume not only contains an authentic history of the Indian wars within the territory now under Anglo-Saxon sway, from the time of Ponce de Leon to the late troubles in Texas, New Mexico, and on the Pacific coast, but is full of personal narrative, giving the experience and sufferings of individuals, while, at the same time, faithfully and fully portraying the character, habits and customs of the red men within the vast territory included in this history. It is a work that cannot be read without a quickening of the pulses, and an abiding sense of the hardships and sufferings of those who have bequeathed to us such a beautiful and valuable inheritance. Patriotism has no stronger advocate than this truthful volume, filled with simple, unvarnished tales of danger and daring. It contains a full index, and retails at $2 25.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR; OR, THE HOME BOOK OF HEALTH AND MEDICINE A Popular Treatise on the Means of Avoiding and Curing Diseases, and of Preserving the Health and Vigor of the Body to the Latest Period. Including an account of the Nature and Properties of Remedies, the Treatment of the Diseases of Women and Children, and the Management of Pregnancy and Parturition. By a Physician of Philadelphia. New York, C. M. SAXTON, BARKER & Co, No. 25 Park Row 619 large octavo pages.

This is no quack publication, nor one intended in any way to promote quackery. It is a thoroughly scientific work, free from all barbarous technicalities and scientific jargon, and can be studied with profit by any practising physician. By its aid any person with an ordinary mind may easily acquire a better knowledge of the human system and of the nature of medicines than is possessed by nine-tenths of the M.D.'s licensed to cure and kill with impunity. The recipes are invaluable, because free from Latin terms, which are used by the profession more for concealing their own ignorance than to keep useful knowledge from their patients. "The Family Doctor" is really a philanthropic work, and should be in every intelligent household. $2 25 is the retail price.

BORDER WARS OF THE WEST; Comprising the Frontier Wars of Pennsylvania, Virginia, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Tennessee and Wisconsin, and embracing Individual Adventures among the Indians, and Exploits of Boone, Kenton, Clark, Logan, Brady, Poe, Morgan, the Whetzells, and other Border Heroes of the West. By JOHN FROST, LL.D. With numerous Engravings. New York; C. M. SAXTON, BARKER & Co., No. 25 Park Row. 608 large octavo pages.

This is a work which is peculiarly interesting just at this time, when the nation seems on the verge of dissolution. The true patriot will take a melancholy pleasure in reviewing the past, wherein is depicted the trials, acts of heroism and sufferings through which our forefathers were compelled to pass in the early history of our country. The book contains about Two Hundred Engravings illustrative of the stirring events which marked the era of which the work treats, and the traits of character exhibited by the border heroes are spiritedly portrayed. It is a work which possesses an almost magical charm for the true lover of American history

In every instance an Extra Copy of any one of the above Books will be sent to the one who gets up a Club of Five or more; and the following named premiums, postage free, are offered in addition:

To any one who sends us TEN DOLLARS FOR FIVE (bona fide) NEW SUBSCRIBERS, not residents of any Town where there is a News Agent, we will send one copy of either of the above-named works (independent of the Five Copies sent to supply the members of the Club), which retail at $2 25 each.

To any one sending us SIXTEEN DOLLARS FOR EIGHT (bona fide) NEW SUBSCRIBERS, we will send two of the above-named volumes, independent of the Eight Copies for the members of the Club.

To any one forwarding TWENTY DOLLARS FOR TEN (bona fide) NEW SUBSCRIBERS, we will send all three of the magnificent books named above, independent of the Ten Copies for the members of the Club.

THE NEW YORK WEEKLY IS DESIGNED AS A

FIRST-CLASS STORY AND SKETCH PAPER,

It containing a succession of

The Best Stories and Sketches ever Published in the United States.

Our friends must be careful to whom they entrust their money for subscriptions, as we, of course, can take no risk. If the money be mailed to us, our obligations shall be strictly kept, but of course we cannot be responsible if subscribers entrust their money to swindlers. Persons sending us letters should be particular to state the Town, County and State; also to name the particular book they may desire.

All letters and communications in relation to the Editorial or Business Departments of the NEW YORK WEEKLY must be addressed to

STREET & SMITH,

Editors and Proprietors, 20 Beekman St., New York.

☞ TO POSTMASTERS.—Will not Postmasters and others of our friends throughout the country, if they cannot use the above to their own advantage, hand it to their wives, daughters, sons, clerks, or some unemployed friend, who would find getting up Clubs for the NEW YORK WEEKLY a lucrative business. With the great attractions offered, the formation of Clubs cannot fail to prove an easy thing

☞ Specimen copies sent free 274-80aw

GREAT CURE.

Dr. Leland's

ANTI-RHEUMATIC BAND

Is the only known remedy for RHEUMATISM, GOUT and NEURALGIA, and a sure cure for all MERCURIAL DISEASES. It is a conveniently arranged Band, containing a compound to be worn around the waist. It reaches the disease through the pores of the Skin, and effects a perfect cure. Moderate cases are cured in a few days, and we are constantly receiving testimonials of its efficacy in aggravated cases of long standing.

Price $2, to be had of Druggists generally, or can be sent by mail or express direct from the Principal.

Office, 409 Broadway, New York.

G. SMITH & CO., Sole Proprietors.

N. B.—Descriptive Circulars SENT FREE. Agents wanted everywhere. 266-78

VENTRILOQUISM.—Full instructions how to acquire this art in a few hours, sent to any address for three cents.

278 J. F. JAGGERS, Calhoun, Ill.

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

PUBLISHED for the benefit and as a warning to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, &c.; supplying the means of Self-Cure. By one who cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. Single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y., by inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope 271-83

FINKLE & LYON'S

SEWING MACHINES,

Our Machines took the highest medal at the Fair of the American Institute, with the highest premium for fine Sewing Machine work.

They also took the highest premiums at the New Jersey State Fair, at the Mechanics' Fair, Utica, N. Y., the Franklin Institute, and so generally wherever exhibited.

Late office 503 Broadway.

REMOVED TO 538 BROADWAY. 000

TUCKER'S

PARIS BRIDAL

GARNITURES AND VEILS,

Coiffures, Flowers, Feathers and Toilet Surroundings are ever of a pleasing character.

759 Broadway. 274-325

Tiffany & Co.,

LATE

TIFFANY, YOUNG & ELLIS,

Fine Jewellery, Precious Stones, Watches, Silver Ware Bronzes, Clocks, Rich Porcelain Articles of Art and Luxury No. 550 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

HOUSE IN PARIS, TIFFANY, REED & CO.

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every city, town and county in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patent article just invented. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and to persons out of employment it offers great inducements. For full particulars write immediately, and receive our letter by return mail. ROBT HALL & CO.,

271-83 [illegible] St., Baltimore, Md

MATRIMONY MADE EASY; OR, HOW TO WIN A LOVER—Containing plain, common-sense directions, showing how all may be suitably married, irrespective of age, sex or position, whether prepossessing or otherwise. This is a new work, and the secret, when acted upon, secures a speedy and happy marriage to either sex. Mailed free for 25 cents, in cash or postage stamps. Address T. WILLIAM & CO, Publishers, Philadelphia Post Office, box 2,300. 278

AGENTS WANTED—In every town and city in the Union, to sell SHERMAN & CO.'S NEW GIFT JEWELLERY ENVELOPES, with from $1 to $10 capital. Our Agents are making from $3 to $10 per day. Our new style of Envelopes are now ready, which, in number of articles and real intrinsic value, surpass anything of the kind ever before offered. Remember in price and quality we defy competition. Call on or address, inclosing stamp for Circular, SHERMAN & CO., 229 Broadway. 276

LIEUTENANT COLBORN;

OR,

The Disinherited.

A new Novel just published by the AUTHOR.

For sale by Dick & Fitzgerald, New York; Rudd & Carleton, New York; T B Peterson & Co, Philadelphia; Crosby, Nichols, Lee & Co., Boston; Bailey & Noyes, Portland, and Booksellers generally. 276-79

Bogle's Hair Dye and Wigs

ARE unapproached and unapproachable in their superior merits. Both are perfection. Try the one, see the other, and be convinced.

Private Rooms for Dyeing Hair and fitting Wigs at BOGLE'S Hairwork, Perfumery and Toilet Bazaar, No. 202 Washington St., Boston. Diagrams to measure the head sent by mail. Inclose postage stamp for reply. 000

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S

LOTTERIES!

AUTHORIZED BY THE STATES OF

DELAWARE,

MISSOURI

AND

KENTUCKY,

Draw daily, in public, under the superintendence of Sworn Commissioners.

☞ The Managers' Offices are located at Wilmington Delaware, and St. Louis, Missouri.

PRIZES VARY FROM

$2 50 TO $100,000!

TICKETS FROM $2 50 TO $20.

☞ Circulars giving full explanation and the Schemes to be drawn will be sent, free of expense, by addressing

WOOD, EDDY & CO., Wilmington, Delaware,

OR

WOOD, EDDY & CO. St. Louis, Missouri.

Dr. Brown's Patent Baby-Tender.

THIS article of Nursery Furniture is different from anything ever offered to the public, and is perfect for the purpose. It combines, by simple changes, which may be instantly made, A NICE COMFORTABLE NURSING COUCH, A DOUBLE OR SINGLE BABY JUMP for children of different heights, SECURE HIGH CHAIR, SEWING, A STUDY, CRADLE AND BEDSIDE CHAIR, A TABLE AND WORK STAND. It is so constructed from the ceiling, or a graceful stationary leg at the corner; is cushioned so as to render it perfectly safe, and is very attractive in appearance, it prices ranging from $5 to $25. Sold by express to all parts of the country.

It will save its weight in washing, in bruises, and doctor's bills more than its cost, and much of the time and attention of mother and nurse.

It gives the child entire freedom of arm or leg body and limbs, insures a healthy action of the stomach and bowels promotes and strengthens the natural motion and develop ment of the muscles, preserving it from spine and the possibility of danger.

It is compact, strong and durable, and no time merely the carry infants or children under three years old it is indispensable.

N. B.—The exercise obtained by our nursery children in the use of your Baby Tender, very much aids in their proper physical development, and contributes to its pleasure with the exercise of an innate desire.—Mother of the Home for the Friendless.

J. S. BROWN & CO., Warerooms No. 652 Broadway, N. Y., between Bond and Bleecker Sts.

Send for our Circular 1016

AT REDUCED PRICES.

With Glass Cloth Presser, Improved Loop Check, New Style Hemmer, Braider, Corder, &c.

Office, 505 Broadway, New York.

"The Machine under the 'LOCK-STITCH,' and make lighter, on account of elasticity, permanence, beauty and general desirableness of the stitching when done, each the wide range of its application."—Report of American Institute, New York. 273-6

JEWELLERY! JEWELLERY!!

THE DOLLAR STORE is now engaged in the ONE DOLLAR NOVELTY and Jewellery Exchange Business. For parties, or others with Diamonds, C. F. GUERIN, Manufacturing Jeweller, 292 Broadway, New York.

2780

Madame Demorest's Quarterly Mirror of Fashions.

GREAT IMPROVEMENTS.—Contains nearly 300 Engravings of new and elegant Designs for the Spring Fashions. Bulwers, Breadwinners, and generally will find a more practical, useful and reliable form all the other Fashion Magazines and Papers, and only five cents. Sent, postage on receipt of six cents. Address MME. DEMOREST, 473 Broadway. GRAND OPENING OF PATTERNS, No. 473 Broadway. 277

BILLIARD BALLS, Ivory and Patent Composition pressed Ivory, all sizes, Manufactured and for sale by WM. M. WELLING, 416 Broome St. Send for a Circular. 276-86

$100 PER MONTH and all expenses paid.—AGENTS WANTED, at the above salary, to introduce a new article, covered necessary to every family. Address, with stamp, for particulars, which will be entered by addressing the proprietors, MADISON & CO., 124 Court St., Boston, Mass. 276-1-6

The Early Physical Degeneracy

OF

American People,

AND THE EARLY MELANCHOLY DECLINE OF CHILD-HOOD AND YOUTH.

Just published by

DR. STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject the cause of Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, Loss of Memory, Languor of the Vital Powers, Impaired Nutrition, Complete Failure of Digestive, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Also—a most interesting Book, and in the spirit of these years' experience as the author in more than one thousand cases of these lines of suffer ailments. In these startling times of revolutions and philanthropic movements, and upright principles, this book is a boon to the afflicted, and it is cheerfully recommended to receive the speedy HUMANITARIAN BASIS, and is rightly to cause the suffering and the unfortunate. Send for a copy and obtain Dr. Stone's valuable.

Call not to Send and get this Book

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 80 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y.

BURNETT'S ARTICLES.

The terms will be found to read the advertisement of Kingston's Preparations, to be found in medical counsel. Their reputation has extended everywhere, and they give to the public full confidence. The Cocoaine needs only to be tried, to be pronounced a superb hair dressing. The other preparations for the complexion, teeth and handkerchief are excellents for their intelligence and delicacy of perfume.—Home-ful (Ia.) Southern Argus.

HON. IRA HARRIS, U. S. SENATOR FOR THE STATE OF NEW YORK, IN PLACE OF HON. WM. SEWARD, RESIGNED.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY S. F. THOMPSON, ALBANY.—SEE PAGE 285

Thorley's Food for Cattle.

FOR Horses, Cows, Sheep and Hogs, the effects produced in one month will exceed all expectations. A Pamphlet mailed free. Agents Wanted. Depot, 21 Broadway, New York 274-6-o

RICH BOOKS.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEND FOR A CATALOGUE. Books, Cards and Prints of every Description. Catalogues sent POST PAID on receipt of STAMP. Address W. M. HATHAWAY, Publishing Agency, 577-78o 23 and 24, New York.

Patented November 1st, 1859.

The measure are
A, the distance
round the Neck.
B to B, the Yoke.
C to C, the Sleeve
D to D, distance
around the Body
under the armpits
E to E, the length
of the Shirt.

BALLOU'S

Patented Improved French Yoke

SHIRTS.

Patented November 1st, 1859.

A New Style of Shirt, warranted to Fit.

By reading the above, any man can send us the measurements of one of our new style of Shirt, and secure by return mail a perfect fit. Or we can forward for him one half a dozen Shirts.

Also Importers and Dealers in MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

BALLOU BROTHERS,

490 Broadway, N. Y.

Wholesale Trade supplied on the usual terms

$50 PER MONTH and Expenses paid. Address for terms J. W. ELLIS & CO., Boston, Mass.

CONSTITUTION WATER,

THE ONLY KNOWN REMEDY FOR DIABETES.

Solution in the Stone of the Bladder, Inflammation of the Kidneys, and Catarrh of the Bladder, Irritation and Strangury, Painful Urination, Stone in the Bladder, Calculus Gravel, Bricksdust Deposit, and Mucous or Milky Deposition after Gonorrhœa.

For sale by all Druggists Price $1

WM. H. GRIGG & CO., Proprietors,

MORGAN & ALLEN, General Agents, No. 42 Dey St., New York.

276-7o

CHARLES HEIDSIECK

CHAMPAGNE.

The popular Wine, of which the undersigned are SOLE AGENTS FOR NORTH AMERICA,

Received the First Premium at the

REDDITCH EXPOSITION IN 1859

The World renowned by the Connoisseurs as one of the Choicest Wines of France.

F. W. DAVIES & SEDARD, 104 Fourth St., N. Y.

First-Class Prize Medal, Paris Exhibition, 1855.

LAWSON & CO.,

PRINTING INK MANUFACTURERS,

LONDON (ENGLAND) AND NEW YORK.

Furnishers to the principal offices in Central Europe and America, and also to nearly all the Illustrated Papers in both Continents.

New York Depot, 56 Gold St., New York.

417-418o

GARDNER'S

Rheumatic and Neuralgia

COMPOUND,

A certain, safe and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Sick Headache. It is an internal remedy drawing its out entirely overlooking the disease, removing the cause in debility or weakness, and may be taken by children and persons of the most delicate constitutions with perfect safety.

Principal Depot, 67 & 69 S. Second, Mem. P. C. WHELEN & CO., 110 Fulton St., New York, Wholesale Agents. Sold by Druggists everywhere 273-87o

Smith and Wesson's Seven-Shooter.

J. W. STORRS, Agent.

321 Chambers Street, N. Y.

THIS pistol is light, but great power, is sure fire, shoots accurately, can be left loaded any length of time without injury. Is not liable to get out of order, is safe to carry. Every Pistol warranted.

CAUTION TO DEALERS.

Beware and all dealers are cautioned against Smith & Wesson, Spring Field, Mass., Patent, unless genuine. All counterfeits previously had been sold, the makers are responsible. Letters received, and all such infringements will be prosecuted. Be aware of all pistols that have Smith & Wesson's Patent on each end of the barrel.

HORSE POWDERS. DEPOT FOR S. G. WELLINGTON'S celebrated Powders for Horses, 419 Broome street, New York. Price Fifty Cents per box of one dozen doses.

FAIRBANKS'

STANDARD SCALES!!

ADAPTED TO EVERY BRANCH OF BUSINESS where a correct and durable Scale is required.

Send for an Illustrated and Descriptive Circular.

FAIRBANKS & CO.,

2780 389 Broadway, New York.

Lead, Webster & Co.'s

IMPROVED LOCK-STITCH SEWING MACHINE,

695 Broadway, New York. 1060

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,

OR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.

For restoring and preventing Baldness.

For removing Scurf and Dandruff.

For beautifying and nursing the Hair and Skin only.

In fact this is the safe and effective compound of the kind in the world.

Be sure and ask for the right article.

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,

Price 25 cents per bottle.

Wholesale Depot, 54 Ann St., New York.

Also,

PROF. L. MILLER'S INSTANTANEOUS LIQUID HAIR DYE.

Price 50 cents per box.

Warrants it superior to all others.

Try them, and you will acknowledge the fact. 277-82o

NOW WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Grover & Baker's

CELEBRATED NOISELESS

Sewing Machines.

No family can afford to be without one.

695 BROADWAY, N. Y.

1060

Only Twenty-five Cents a Bottle.

Superior Old Tom or London Cordial

GIN,

Distilled under the immediate superintendence of Dr. Ricord, of London, for medical and private use.

Warehouse, 120 Nassau St., cor. of Ann.

For sale by single bottle or case, by Druggists and Grocers everywhere. Also by J. S. FARNHAM, 665 Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel. N. Y. 1060

Dr. Marshall's Headache and Catarrh Snuff

HAS proved itself to many physicians and to innumerable sufferers to be the best article yet discovered for relieving the Headache, Nervous Neuralgia and all Catarrhal affections. It purges out all obstructions, strengthens the Glands and gives a healthy action to the parts affected. A facsimile of the signature of the Proprietor, CHARLES BOYER, is on every bottle, sold by all Druggists. 272-84

THE WATER-CURE JOURNAL.

If you are sick and want to get well, read the Water-Cure Journal.

If you are well and want to keep well, read the Water-Cure Journal.

If you would know the true science of Human Life, read the Water-Cure Journal.

If you would learn the hygienic effects of Drugs, Read the Water-Cure Journal.

If you would understand the medicine of Health, Read the Water-Cure Journal.

If you desire to Reform in anything, also read the Water-Cure Journal.

This periodical is the only one in the world in which the people a knowledge of the true, or Hygienic system of the Healing Art—published monthly, at the low price of Fifty Cents per Year, or five copies for $2, or five copies for $5. Specimens sent free, by addressing FOWLER & WELLS, 308 Broadway, New York. 275

ESTABLISHED 1835.

BOYER'S CELEBRATED HYPERION FLUID over the overplus of the physical energy and best dressing for the Hair in the world. Its wide fame has been deserved by nothing. Try it and be convinced. A prize full. To be had of

BOYER,

Barber, Perfumer, 246 Pearl and 202 Washington St., Boston, 486 for sale everywhere.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress, in the year 1861, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York

No. 279—Vol. XI.] NEW YORK, MARCH 30, 1861. [PRICE 6 CENTS.

MURDER OF MR. OGDEN YORKE,

Of New York, by Mexican Bandits, between Mexico and Vera Cruz.

THE last arrival from Vera Cruz brings us the sad intelligence of the murder of an American citizen by Mexican bandits. We give the fact in the words of an eye-witness of the dreadful tragedy. President Lincoln ought to hold the Mexicans to a strict account for these outrages:

"We left the city of Mexico the morning of the 3d inst., and Puebla on the 4th. On the afternoon of the latter day, when about twelve miles from Perote, near the hacienda San Antonio, we were suddenly attacked by a party of five robbers on horseback, in the dress of Mexican soldiers. They stopped the diligence and ordered us all to get out. Our party then consisted of Mr. Ogden Yorke, Mr. Sepen, Colonel Christo, Mr. Hetrich, wife and four children, and a Mexican gentleman from Jalapa.

"Mr. Yorke was seated near the door of the diligence and was the first to get out. As he did so, we repeated him to put his revolver in his pocket. He did so. But at the moment he opened the door one of the robbers struck him over the head with a sword. Mr. Yorke then drew his revolver and fired, but missed. He was more fortunate the second time, the shot took effect, and one of the robbers fell dead. He had now, however, expended all his shot, and was left helpless in the hands of the highwaymen, who fell upon him and cut him to pieces in the most frightful manner.

"Then they turned upon the other passengers, all of whom were brutally treated. Colonel Christo received a shot in his neck and a sabre cut on his head. Attempts were made even upon the lives of the women and children. They finally left us, however, but not until they had taken from us all we had, and compelled us to prostrate ourselves, with our faces to the earth, on the wet sand, where we spent an hour in dreadful anxiety.

"The body of Mr. Yorke we took with us in the diligence to Perote, where it was delivered over to the authorities. It was then put in a coffin and deposited in the church, to await the disposition of his relatives, a portion of whom have been the last year with him in Mexico."

FLOATING BATTERY AT CHARLESTON,

Intended to Assist in the Reduction of Fort Sumpter.

In a previous number we gave a description of the plan upon which this formidable floating battery is constructed. Our present illustration of the battery, completed and ready for action, will render that description perfectly intelligible to all. The front, which will be presented to the fort, is twenty-five feet broad, and is built of Southern pine timber, filled in with rough palmetto logs. The front slopes inward from the top, and the roof, which is heavily eased with iron, supposed to be shot and shell proof, slopes to its outer edge. This serves to effectually shield the men who are to work the guns. Behind this comes an open space, which, it is understood, will be filled with water, and will readily extinguish the forces of such stray shells as may fall within its limits. Then comes the receptacle for the shot and the second hatchway, which leads to the powder magazine, which is sunk far below the surface. Further back is a deep platform extending the whole width of the battery, and projecting far over the body of the battery. This platform is loaded with sandbags, and serves a double purpose; first, it is a balance to the heavy sea guns in the battery, of which there are four; second, it completely protects the floating hospital, which is anchored underneath it. It certainly is a well-conceived structure, formidable in its strength and in its means of attack, and for the further reason that it can be towed into position to play upon the weakest points of Fort Sumpter. Our artist has sketched it with great minuteness and fidelity.

The Hospital attached to the Floating Battery in Charleston Harbor.

The floating hospital which is to be attached to the floating battery, intended to act against Fort Sumpter, is a one-story building, the interior of which is fitted up with cots, and contains all that is requisite for a military hospital. It is securely attached to the stern of the battery, and is completely sheltered from all harm by the projecting platform which covers it, and which is rendered impenetrable to shot and shells by the sandbags heaped upon it. Dr. De Vega, who has undertaken the charge of the hospital, and will accompany it when it departs on its mission, is a physician of eminence in Charleston, and was in Sebastopol during the memorable siege by the French and British armies. The present aspect of affairs renders it probable that this great battery will not be called into action; let us trust, at

THE RESIDENCE ATTACKED BY BANDITS BETWEEN MEXICO AND VERA CRUZ, ON THE EVENING OF THE 5TH OF MARCH—MR. OGDEN YORKE BRUTALLY MURDERED, AND THE OTHER PASSENGERS WOUNDED AND MALTREATED.—FROM A SKETCH BY ONE OF THE TRAVELLERS.

Barnum's American Museum

HAS the largest and finest Collection of Living Curiosities ever exhibited together, including Bears, Sea Lions, Mammoth Boar Sow-ete, the Swiss Bearded Lady, the Lilliputian Queen, Miss Beet; the Sciopus, Living Monster Snakes, Happy Family, with eleven Aquarias for Reptiles and Fish; 14 Stages of Living Wax Figures, with Revenge at one o'clock as well as the cheapest place of amusement in the world.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

FRANK LESLIE, Editor and Publisher.

NEW YORK, MARCH 30, 1861.

ALL Communications, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One Copy	13 weeks	$1
One do.	1 year	$4
Two do.	1 year	$7
Up One Copy	2 years	$7
Four do.	1 year	$12
Four do.	2 years (in one address)	$20

And an extra Copy to the person sending a Club of Five. Every additional subscription, $3.

NOTICE TO PHOTOGRAPHERS.

We shall be much obliged to our photographic friends if they will write their name and address distinctly on the back of each picture, together with their own name and address. This notice is rendered necessary from the fact that we receive many pictures sent to us from all parts throughout the country without any word complimentary matter, they giving us credit for being an expert with everything that transpires or exists in all parts of the United States. The columns of our paper prove that we are up to the times in almost everything which exists of public importance throughout the world, still we are not so ubiquitous but that something may occur beyond the circuit of our far-reaching intelligence. In order to avoid mistakes, a description and name in the manner we have indicated should, in all cases, accompany photographic pictures or sketches.

Foreign News.

England.—Ministers have been beaten in a division on the Income Tax, when an amendment moved by Sir Richard Bethell, one of the Heads of Bar, was carried against Mr. Gladstone, the Chancellor of the Exchequer. It declared that the income resulting from inter-ought to have nondiscrimination since other property than that arising from Realized has been Gladstone by me. Bethell is a leader in Russian bullies, and a very superior man of the genteel stamp. Gladstone is the Vulcan of statesmanship, utterly without pantom—is has a cool brain, but no heart. Lord John Russell made matters by the opposition. Derby voting in the majority of the Peers, and Lord Lansdowne by taking the Emperor's quarrel with the Papist clergy still more hard a proof pandering to Radical. In a word, the party-spirited Lord Derby will not much longer allow him to remain a Syria, as the Indian Empire is a very delicate one in that respect. Lord John is not the man to resign, as he would house, even by Ashmall's instinct, that France in Syria would be a better friend to England than Russia—a move for which Gladstone has not the statesmanship one of these days.

France.—The chief subject of interest is the quarrel between the Emperor and his clergy. A new party since that his domestic peace has been roused by the religious questions who manage these things, and the Count Jarnac, Lay Emperor's wife to be found to the Pope in an autograph letter on her boss's wickedness, which led to a pilgrimage to St. Kentish Abbey, in more convinced, decided part of Scotia. Mr. Gladstone's amendment carried Free Fire, made a remarkable speech in the French Senate lately, in which he warned his hearers that the temporal power of the Pope, and declared himself in favor of the English Alliance and the Unity of Italy. The tone of the whole speech was remarkable, and he ugly in manner, but powerful in matter to the Emperor himself. In other respects France is perfectly quiet. Military and naval preparations are going on with great activity.

Austria.—We have in another part attended to the remarkable step taken by the Emperor of Austria by granting a Constitution to his subjects. This is the age of surprises, but the most unexpected of all surprises would be to see or the most startling. The Constitution is founded on that of England, and has two Houses, whereof one is to consist of Hereditary Peers. Let us hope it has not come too late.

Prussia.—There is little to report since our last. The Prussians are at once the most conceited, arrogant and aristocratic of Governments, and seem engaged that they have but little head in Constitutional Government, taken out of their hands by the recent exile of the Emperor Francis Joseph. We are afraid the under impression the present King entertains to the effect that alliance will be a great share and consequent disadvantage to him. Should, however, the Austrian Government work successfully it will necessarily be corresponding duly softly on his part, which will place him more in accordance with the spirit of modern progress.

The East.—There is nothing of a special import from the East; but the continued correspondence which reaches us point to the probable—almost certainty—that the Sultan will be soon forced to grant a Constitution to his people. It treaty obligations, if the English do not—as they generally do—serve us the trouble by anticipating our action.

CONGRESSIONAL MATTERS.

In the Senate, on the 18th, Mr. Douglas offered a resolution calling on the Secretary of War or any officer under him to the information as to the number of men it is necessary to occupy the same, and what force will be necessary for the purpose. Mr. Masons Virginia and Mason Virginia moved the reference of the resolution. Fessenden offered a resolution instructing the Secretary of the Senate to strike from the roll of the Senate the names of Senators from Seceded States as have declared their intention to withdraw from the Senate. Mr. Hale opposed, and others objected to the consideration of the subject, and the resolution lies over.

On the 19th, Mr. Mason offered a resolution calling upon the President for information as to the number of troops that have been ordered to Texas, and how to be withdrawn, for what purpose they are maintained there, and who and for how it is to be maintained. Mr. Douglas opposed the resolution, and Mr. Douglas's resolution, calling upon the Secretary of War for information in relation to the forts, arsenals, navy yards, and military stations within the Seceded States, whether the Administration intend to reacquire them to possession of the Government, and if not, what disposition is to be made of them, was taken up. The resolution calls for a detailed exposition of the policy of the Administration with respect to the Seceded States. Mr. Douglas, in advocating his resolution, said that the policy of the Administration being unknown, he desired to receive the apprehensions of the country by obtaining a reply to his resolution, which he thought would give satisfactory information. Mr. Douglas cited different settling of the Union. He argued that the President has no power to call on the masses of the people to arm to coerce a State to settle its accounts with Uncle Sam. To carry on a war with the Southern Republic would require an army of two hundred thousand men, and the annual expense would be three hundred millions of dollars. In conclusion, he advocated such amendments to the Constitution as would hold the border States in the Union, and thus secure a reunion of all the States. Mr. Wilson said the Administration would make known its policy through a conference in which it had confidence. The debate was continued at considerable length, and finally degenerated into an undignified personal quarrel between Messrs. Douglas and Fessenden.

On Monday, the 18th, Mr. Breckinridge made his maiden speech since his vacation of the Vice-Presidential chair. He addressed himself to Mr. Lincoln's inaugural mount war, and that without a great and blunder-ing mistake. In his interpretation the difficulty, the severance of the Union would be inevitable. He professed strong Union sentiments. It was in vain and dignified action

An Imperial Surprise.

We question if Louis Napoleon's famous coup d'état of the 23 of December astonished the public so much as Francis Joseph's coup d'état of the 26th of February, the particulars of which have come by the Arabia. One abolished liberty in France—the other has established a Constitutional Government in the Austrian Empire. It is idle to remind us that twelve years ago a Constitution was given to Austria by the present Emperor's grandfather—and taken away. Twelve years have almost entirely changed the aspect of Europe. The world has moved faster than ever it did before, and Austria has shared and diffused, with Russia moving forward, and France with her threatening arm, ready to unite or forbear, as the opportunity may offer, the most boasted of tyrants would not dare to recall the recent edict of the Emperor of Austria, which has given a Constitutional Government to the Empire. It converts at one stroke a military despotism into a Constitutional Monarchy, with institutions parliamentary and aristocratic. It has evidently been established on the British model, and is scarcely less liberal. The main features are these: There is to be a House of Peers, comprising the Princes of the blood, the higher Clergy, and the great Magnates, in addition to these Houses, the Emperor has the right of appointing a certain number of peers for life, as a reward for services, or to assist the administration.

The Lower House, which answers to the British House of Commons, will consist of 343 members, elected by the Provincial Legislatures, on much the same plan as our United States Senators. The Legislatures which have the power of creating the Lower House are to be chosen by the people of the various Provinces, on a basis of suffrage very similar to that of England. This Parliament is to have the supreme control of finance, taxation and the national debt. The members are also guaranteed freedom of speech and immunity from arrest—precisely the same as in the British Parliament.

It is scarcely possible to overrate the fresh and vigorous vitality this will throw into the rapidly decaying frame of the Austrian Empire, should it be able to overcome that incongruity of elements which has hitherto rendered all her attempts at reform abortive.

New Vehicles Wanted.

It is a good rule in political economy that the supply is regulated, by the demand, but it has its exceptions when we demand for it what cannot be supplied. Such is the case with the fast line has been for many years a very decided request for some new means of treative power and of transit in our cities, which no one has yet supplied. We may look at Broadway. Any person ment, except that now in use, speedily wears out, and yet it is a torment to the poor horses, which slip and tumble over it in wet weather, and which is dear and jolting, and so intolerable. Passenger railroads can only partially alleviate the difficulty; the truth is, that some entirely new means of carrying passengers must be invented.

Hopes were at one time entertained that the "dunnup," a very small locomotive, of about four horse power, could be used with advantage in the streets of our cities. We are informed that the experiment is again being tried in Philadelphia. Steamcarriage power has for a long time been in use in Cincinnati, and has been pronounced a decided improvement upon horses. The Wizard principle of propelling cars by means of a machine in which the motive power is small upright boiler, and which can be manned in the car itself, is said to be highly lauded. Canals, for instance, are excessively to the reader that the very ingenious toys, once so costly and now so cheap and common in which a watch-spring is the motive power of a vehicle might possibly be executed on the size of life scale? That several attempts, from very early times, to construct such automatic carriages have failed, is no reason why success should not be considered as the principle has been exhausted. The great difficulty, as many urge, is that the rough condition of most streets and roads impedes the free action of wheels, and that a smooth surface is shall be doubled, and the number of country vehicles proportionally increased? But it borne in mind that the inventor who finds out a means of obviating, in any moderate degree, this vast annoyance will have the means of accumulating an immense fortune.

EDITORIAL CLANCES AT MEN AND THINGS.

Rather Good.—A Sunday paper, which takes a paternal to ask for a "Sunday Journal," and which, in addition to a column entitled "Notes," draws an shocking picture of Church if entering London over Blackfriars Bridge, and which, in addition to the "Notes" and the "Sunday Journal," has also a column entitled "Answers to Correspondents," is not a paper which we should like to see in the hands of our children, or in the hands of any one who is anxious to preserve the reverence of the Sunday.

The following appears in the New York World of the 18th. It occurs in an article upon the Constitution of the Southern Confederacy, a synopsis of which important document appears in another column of our paper:

"By the 40th which allows heads of departments a seat and the right to speak in either House of Congress (if that body shall by one specific) is essentially different from the usage of the English Government, which is by one joint resemblance, inasmuch as there heads of departments cannot but the Secretary of State and Secretary of the Treasury are the Premier Ministers of the United States."

This is just the reverse; the Minister, on bend of any special department, whether treasury, foreign, home, &c., of the English Government, is compelled to have a seat in Parliament. If, however, he is a member of the Lower House which he specialist, he resigns his seat, and reappears to his constituents. If they reject him, some member of a Government borough resigns, and he is elected in his stead.

Penitentiaries.—Now we are in it. Now the country is exactly in the midst of its great quadrennial washing day; suds flying, water spattering, nine housewives mean blue bodies—big enough boys, and all concerned in all sorts of a glorious stir. Now, are all those who have incurred guilt of their sovereign to be allowed in the bosom of water while some, in their force enthusiasm, are washing away in public, while most better by the have been shielded in the most odorous privacy. Now, in short, to drop highly figurative, we have a question brought a clamor of which the Anti-Wide-Awake are making out for soap bottles in which to make up for their by-gone sins.

Let us in this busy time split our ears in favor of a small but deserving class of our fellow-citizens, who are about to submit themselves for greater in proportion to what they get than those of any other body of individuals. We refer to the boys in the penitentiaries in the city in bank. The boys are as "women" in this country—American ladies. No one, we presume will deny that these boys are entitled to a fresh green garment. Now is therefore the fashion to assist that poor officer are filled with peculiar grace by indoor, especially since the introduction of a new and convenient article of dress, the Jersey shirt. A neatly written note in lady's handwriting some time ago, says that a boy in the city was very lethal, and giving him a few cents in reference, and that the name of the honorable Senator beneath. He had evidently been thoroughly washed himself in order to worship for many years, and was no stranger to the young widow herself. After a moment's reflection he carefully removed the name of the Senator in question, and made the following touchy indictment upon the paper: 'I go for Mamie.' Many was, of course expected, but a very pleasant surprise to the fair one, as the result proved.

It is impossible not to admire our friend of the Prince. Mr. Lincoln's choice of George P. Marsh to represent the American Reign in Sardinia is thus spoken of by the Boston Journal:

"The selection of Mr. Marsh for Italy we deeply deplore. He is a gentleman and a scholar."

Ah! why will Old Abe appoint men who are gentlemen and scholars? It is too bad.—Mr. Lincoln ought to appoint a carpenter! although it is difficult to know on what principle any man can deplore another being a scholar and a gentleman.

PERSONAL.

WHEN the troubles in Italy are settled, it is said that Count Cavour is going to be married to an English lady. The intimate is that his own will begin when the Italian is free.

W. D. TAYLOR, who has just resigned the appointment of Postmaster, has been by every Democrat in Washington. He is a gentleman. It is a pity he demands especial commendation.

MR. WARNER, late Assistant Assistant cashier of the New York Post Office, in place of Mr. Vroom, who has been made Consul to Aix in Chapelle.

CAPT. LEONARD, of the Zouave Battalion attached to take his trial for larceny, escaped last week from the custody of a keeper, who was appointed to assist him in preparing his defence. He was out on bail at the time, pleaded guilty and in a police thereupon to be sentenced to six months to be even

MR. W. H. RUSSELL, the far-famed correspondent of the London Times, arrived at the Astor House on Saturday last. He has come, as he tells us, specially to report the leading journal of the world the condition of the American Republic.

HE CANNOT, he says, do justice to the subject and remain in New York. He, New Mexico, in spread to the United States. He has fifty or fifty cases, two hundred and fifty letters of introduction, and a thousand friends.

MADAME ANNA BISHOP gave a concert at Providence last week with great success.

MR. EDWARD EVERETT is about to deliver a lecture in Brooklyn. Strange to say, it is not on Washington—but Armenia.

THE U. S. ARMY, which, by reason of the increasing time since, and required, on a charge of carrying to turn the Rock Island Railroad Company arrested for Washington. He is attended by Mr. Rock Island Railroad Company arrested for Washington. He is attended by Mr. Rock Island Railroad Company arrested for Washington. He is attended by Mr.

OUR WEEKLY GOSSIP.

The National Academy of Design.

On Tuesday evening, the 19th instant, there was a gathering of literary men, artists and connoisseurs at the rooms of the National Academy of Design in Tenth street. The occasion was the opening of the exhibition, for private inspection of the pictures, previous to the appointed day of throwing the doors open to the public, viz., the 20th inst. When we arrived there were hardly a dozen persons present, and we enjoyed the quiet luxury of walking round the rooms without being obliged to elbow our way through a gaping crowd. We were in momentary dread, however, of the rustle of crinoline and the ominous buzz of the prittle-prattle of the brightest and best of creation. But they did not come, and we began to think that something must have happened. Our fears, however, were relieved on learning that the invitation was a male tea-fight (without the tea), and that the houris were to be banished for this night only from the Paradise of Art. We confess that we were glad, because we desired to look at the pictures, and how could we do so with undiverted attention—as the gallant Stone said—when distracted and attracted by a hundred pairs of beautiful and talking eyes? Freed from all anxiety on this score, we proceeded leisurely to enjoy the results of the artists' labors.

We saw at a glance that there were fewer pictures on the walls than were there last year, caused, we suppose, by the fact that many were not aware of the alteration of the time of opening the exhibition. We know several artists whose works, intended for the Academy, remain unfinished on their easels, although quite near completion. They knew not of the change of time, and suffered no little disappointment in consequence.

We saw that the exhibition was rich in landscapes, many of them bold and striking in character, and eminently beautiful in conception and execution; and recognized the handling of those whose works have been the crowning glory of the exhibition for years past.

Before completing our first round we asked an old friend, one who ranks second to none in his art, if Church had anything there? "Church," he said, "not being able to come himself, has sent his card."

We fully comprehended the wit of the remark when we saw the small but striking picture vouchsafed by Church to the Academy this year.

In marine views the exhibition is also very strong, many of the coast scenes being remarkable for their original treatment and peculiar atmospheric effects. The genre subjects are numerous and striking, and at least five or six of the figure pictures are finely treated both as to conception and execution. Portraits do abound, egregiously; the few of them admirable, the many veritable pot-boilers indeed. The majority of them no true artist would hang up in his studio. Are they good enough, then, to be paraded before the public as specimens of American art? It is true they are specimens, but then they are very bad specimens, and should have been withheld from the public eye. Who desires to see a chalky, soulless face on each side of a beautiful landscape? They serve as skeletons at the feast, to warn us that everything is not beautiful by any means, and that some flesh at least is dust—chalk dust and brick dust at that.

Our first inspection convinced us that the exhibition retained most of its strong and attractive points, and that, taking it throughout, it was up to its average excellence, and fully entitled to the liberal patronage of the public. We recognized upon the walls the beautiful creations of Cignoux, Lentze, Howland, Hunt, Stone, Gifford, McEntee, E. White, Hows, Tait, Wust, Haas, Brevoort, Darley, Boughton, E. Johnson, Hubner, Huntington, Beard, Bellows, Thomson, Durand, Zimmerman, Cafferty, Bierstade, Richards, Ingham, Church and many others known to fame; besides two works by Page, which have at least one worshipper, and the further merit of being the best-abused productions in the exhibition.

A generous collation, and much pleasant artistic gossip, with interchange of sentiment, wound up a very agreeable and instructive evening.

Brotherly Love.

We are too busy in this country to love our brothers over much. We acknowledge a sort of distant relationship, and if they stand in our way, either in politics, love or business, we arrive at a dim idea that they belong to the family and ought to get out of the way. There is one man, however, who seems to have leisure to attend to these trivial domestic arrangements. He is, as will be seen, a poet, and consequently an idler; and may be forgiven for entertaining a romantic affection, and inditing

Lines to My Brother.

There lies within my drunken cup
 One little drop of sparkling wine,
So here I lift the treasure up
 And drink to thee, good brother mine.
Wherever thou this moment be—
 Whatever dreamy thought is thine—
I let my spirit come to thee
 Enthroned upon this drop of wine.

The half rejected glass to-night
 Hath touched my worldly serving lip,
To many a pledge, as false as light,
 That galled my heart to even sip.
But when to thee this single drop
 Comes trickling from the trembling bowl,
It bids my very pulses stop
 And pledge thee, brother, from my soul.

Concert of the New York Philharmonic Society.

We have one standing recollection of these concerts, which is that we have never been able to get a seat at any of them during two or three seasons. Either everybody else goes too early or we go too late; but from whatever cause, such is the fact. We should remember that the early comer getteth the seat—and keeps it. There was an immense audience, which filled every seat in three tiers of boxes and the parquette, and still left hundreds standing, ourselves among the last.

Beethoven's "Seventh Symphony" was most admirably performed. Bergmann, the conductor, is, to our thinking, generally too cold and too precise; but on this occasion he displayed the higher attributes of his position, and interpreted the composition with a fidelity to its character and sentiment which was worthy of all praise, and displayed the thorough and appreciative musician. He was ably seconded by the orchestra, its performance seeming to be the outward expression of the will of the conductor. The fine shadings, the broad lights, the delicacy, precision and brilliancy requisite to the perfect rendering of this great composition have rarely, if ever, been so prominently displayed in any performance of the Philharmonic orchestra. It was something to remember with pleasure and with pride, and was cordially and warmly appreciated by the audience.

Richard Hoffman's performance of Mozart's "Piano Concerto" has placed him in a position in his art which we never expected to see him attain. We always knew that he had every requisite to enable him to claim a first-class position, but we doubted his ambition to strive for it, especially while engaged in the laborious duties of teaching, which is of all things in the world the best calculated to take ambition clean out of the heart. But he goes through the fire unharmed, preserving untouched that fine poetic feeling, that freshness of sentiment, that conscientious art-principle which are the attributes of the truly classic artist. There are but few men in this country who would have dared to venture upon a piano concerto by Mozart, so antiquated is it in style, so simple in form, and so utterly devoid of those miraculous tours de force which are the glory and the strength of the modern pianoforte school. To gain attention and to win success in such a piece demands nothing short of perfection in execution, nor less than an absolute identification with the intent, the passion and the mind of the composer. Richard Hoffmann fulfilled these conditions, arrested the attention of the whole audience from the first note to the last by presenting the beautiful creation of Mozart in its perfect integrity, and, as we believe, its author imagined it and executed it. We have rarely heard anything more exquisite than this performance. In delicacy, precision, sentiment and refinement it is hardly possible to imagine anything more perfect. Hoffman's technique is superb, and its perfect equality could hardly have been exhibited to greater advantage than in this concerto, for the passages are so constructed that the least roughness or slovenliness could at once be detected. As it was, Hoffman achieved a triumph; the andante was encored though not repeated, and he was unanimously recalled at its close.

We were too tired to stay any longer, but we understand that his performance in the second part was equally admirable; that Mr. Mollenhauer played his violin concerto very finely, and the orchestral pieces were performed in a manner fully up to the excellence of the preceding sinfonia.

William V. Wallace's New Opera.

We record, with unfeigned delight, the fact of the triumphant success of Wallace's new opera, "The Amber Witch," which was produced at Her Majesty's Theatre, London, on the 28th of February. The house was crowded to suffocation, and the enthusiasm was unbounded. The encores were numerous; the singers were repeatedly called before the curtain, the composer, author and conductor sharing that honor after every act. Great as was the success of "Lurline" last year, "The Amber Witch" of this season promises to achieve a longer and more brilliant run. The critics are unanimous in praise of the music; they find it exquisitely melodious, richly and elaborately harmonized, and instrumented with wonderful imagination and brilliancy. It is acknowledged to be his greatest work, one which places him side by side with the greatest operatic writers of the world. Patient and earnest, Wallace has worked up to his destiny, and has achieved a position in his art from whence he sees no one above him. We rejoice most heartily, and congratulate Wallace sincerely upon the happy result of his arduous labors, the news of which will be hailed with delight by a vast circle of friends, who have waited anxiously for the assurance of this success which they anticipated.

It is, however, very tantalizing to know that the world of London can enjoy this beautiful opera—most of which was designed and composed here—while we are denied even the hope of that desired privilege. We are debarred from hearing any of the fine English operas which have been written in the past few years—the two last operas by Balfe, Macfarren's "Robin Hood," Edward Loder's "Night Dancers," and lastly, Wallace's "Lurline" and "The Amber Witch." We are denied all this, because fashion sets its face against hearing music with words which the majority can understand. The language must be unintelligible to be fashionable, and English opera is therefore tabooed. The time is not far distant when the language of the country will assert its supremacy, and as in London now, the English opera in this country will supersede—or at all events—stand upon equal terms with the Italian opera.

We understand that four cities in Germany have engaged with the composer for the production of both his operas, "Lurline" and "The Amber Witch."

An Uneasy Spirit.

Byronic misery was fashionable for many years, but it went out with turn-over shirt collars, and can hardly be expected to revive under the present cut-throat fashion. Our correspondent, however, disclaims all poetic misery; he is in earnest, and tells a real sorrow in eloquent language. Remorse breathes in the lines which he dedicates to

The Forsaken.—By Benjamin Blood.

"O weird Remorse!"

Her brows were two golden arches
 That stood on an ivory pier,
Upholding a marble temple—
 And I was worshipped there.
Soft clouds that reeked with sunshine
 Rolled over the fairy dome,
But the waves that rolled under the arches
 Were gray with an ashen gloom:
For I left her—for rout and revel—
 Her worth I had never known,
And her eyes caught the hue of the twilight,
 Where she sang, for sad pastime, alone.

Long, long in the faded muslin,
 Her eyelids gray with dust,
With my ring on her nerveless finger
 Still keeping its holy trust,
She hath lain in the dusky silence
 Where Time's dim wings are furled,
Save when with one sweep they enkindle
 The dream of a better world.

Alone in the summer evenings
 I gaze, while the nightwind blows,
Toward the grave where my innocent sleeper
 Has long since forgotten her woes:
Oh, God! for that morning in heaven,
 Whose light in her beautiful eyes
Shall tell me I am forgiven
 For all her miseries!

Robert Stoepel's Cantata "Hiawatha" in England.

This beautiful work, which was written in this country, and performed in Boston and New York with marked success, was produced at the Royal English Opera House, London, on the 11th of February. The criticisms upon it in this country were elaborate and highly eulogistic, but no more so than the great merits of the composition deserved. It was produced in splendid style in London, Alfred Mellon directing it, and having under his control a magnificent orchestra, a numerous chorus and competent principals, Miss Matilda Heron reciting the connecting portions of the poem. It was an undoubted success. The Morning Chronicle, after elaborately describing the work and awarding it the warmest and most positive praise, thus winds up its article:

"Not to enter into further particulars at present, we may assert that the music throughout is unquestionably that of a thoughtful and earnest musician, and that there is more real merit, more genuine inspiration, in short, in the 'Song of Hiawatha,' than many operas that have filled the ears of the public for many seasons, and made fortunes for public publishers.

"Miss Matilda Heron read the exquisite verses of the poet with infinite tenderness and expression. Bating a slight lack of power, and a peculiarity of pronunciation in certain vowels, which she shares in common with Miss Cushman and other American actresses, she is certainly one of the best elocutionists we have heard from the other side of the Atlantic."

Books to be had for almost Nothing.

The failure of Messrs. Derby & Jackson, the publishers, has been justly regarded as a calamity affecting the literature of our country, so many were the works by our most eminent authors issued by them. Of late years they have been distinguished by the elegance and excellence of their illustrated and library editions. The public is, however, we observe, benefiting by them, since their splendid stock, including rich exemplars of British and foreign classics, Stoddard's "Lives of the Poets," Goodrich's "Court of Napoleon," &c., are now selling for less than half-price. No such sacrifice has ever occurred in the history of American bookselling.

Testimonial to Madame Anna Bishop.

The arrangements for this well-deserved compliment are rapidly progressing. A committee of many of our most influential citizens are taking the liveliest interest in the matter, and we expect that the testimonial will be very substantial as well as flattering.

DRAMA.

There has been nothing new in the theatrical world during the last week. Laura Keene still travels with her "Seven Sisters," and Wallack promises a new comedy, which Madame Rumor assigns to the pen of the brilliant critic of the Herald. Forrest reigns at Niblo's, and continues his most remarkable campaign of unalloyed victory. Seldom has there been so successful a season for our managers as the present.

Barnum's Museum.—This great institution of our Republic is maintaining its union of amusement and popularity without any seceders. Day by day, and night by night, enthusiastic crowds visit it to see the Swiss Bearded Lady and the Lilliputian Queen; but the chief attraction is Herr Driesbach, whose wonderful Grizzly Bears are more wonderful than anything ever seen before. Dancing bears, singing bears and cinnamon bears are there, and above all the great bear Samson. The new drama, "Glinnelli; or, The Children of the Zincali," still maintains its popularity. Barnum has hit the right path; he gives the greatest diversity for the smallest amount—and above all, it is at once select and popular.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS.

The following Ministers and Consuls have been appointed by the Lincoln Administration:

England—Minister Plenipotentiary, Charles F. Adams, $17,500; Secretary of Legation, T. Bigelow Lawrence, $2,625; Assistant Secretary of Legation, John Adams, $1,500.

France—Minister Plenipotentiary, William L. Dayton, $17,500; Secretary of Legation, W. B. Fry, $2,625.

Prussia—Minister Plenipotentiary, N. P. Judd, $12,000; Secretary of Legation, H. Kreisman, $1,800.

Sardinia—Minister Resident, George P. Marsh, $7,500.

Turkey—Minister Resident, James Watson Webb, $7,500

Austria—Minister Plenipotentiary, Anson Burlingame, $12,000.

Sweden and Norway—Minister Resident, Jacob T. Haldermon, $7,500.

Denmark—Minister Resident, Bradford R. Wood, $7,500.

Brazil—Minister Plenipotentiary, Thomas B. Nelson, $12,000.

Belgium—Minister Resident, Henry S. Sanford, $7,500.

Portugal—Minister Resident, Carl Schurz, $7,500

Spain—Minister Plenipotentiary, Cassius M. Clay, $12 000; Secretary of Legation, Green Clay, $1,500.

Guatemala—Minister Resident, Elisha C. Crosby, $7,500.

Pontifical States—Minister Resident, Rufus King, $7,500.

Consuls.—London, Freeman H. Morse, $7,500; Bordeaux, C. Davisson $2,000; Liverpool, De Witt C. Littlejohn, $7,500; Havre, James O. Putnam $6,000; Aix la Chapelle, Wm. H. Vesey, $2,500; Frankfort-on-the-Maine Rufus Hosmer, $3,000; Alexandria, Egypt, W. S. Thayer, $3,000

Commissioner.—Sandwich Islands, Thomas J. Dyer, $7,500.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

On Saturday evening, Mr. Henry Aucker, of Juniata county, Pa., was beaten to death in his own house by two robbers. They entered, and after a little conversation, one of them demanded of Mr. Aucker his money, and presented a pistol. He then retreated to a back room, and while he was in the act of taking down his rifle the villains fired at him, wounding him in the left arm. They then rushed upon him and struck him a number of heavy blows on the head, causing his death in a few hours. A little niece and a housekeeper, upon hearing the noise, raised an alarm, and the ruffians left the house without attempting to plunder it.

Of the origin of camp-meetings, the New York Evangelist says: "The first camp meeting held in America was in Kentucky. Two preachers, one a Presbyterian and the other a Methodist, met in a village on the Sabbath where there was but one church. The Presbyterian officiated in the forenoon, and the Methodist in the afternoon. The interest upon the subject was so great that they continued the meetings for a day or two at the house. The attendance soon became so large that they adjourned to the woods, and continued the meeting for a week. And this is the origin of the modern camp-meeting."

Ex-Mayor Tiemann presided at a meeting held at the New York Chamber of Commerce, on Wednesday, for the purpose of aiding the passage of an act to establish a Pawners' Bank in New York, similar to the Pawner's Bank of Boston. A bill to establish such a bank, under the name of the Loaner's Bank, is now before the New York Assembly, and will undoubtedly pass. A committee was appointed to carry out the views of the meeting.

Ann Trainor, who was so seriously injured in the Orange street fire, Brooklyn, died at the hospital on the 16th. There were evidences of improvement the evening previous, but during the night she failed rapidly, and breathed her last about nine o'clock the following day. Coroner Horton held an inquest upon the body. The verdict of the jury was that she died from congestion of the lungs, caused by inhaling smoke. The funeral took place yesterday from her father's residence. A large concourse followed the body to its last resting-place. The room-mate of the deceased, Miss Susan Ann Wilson, it will be remembered, was killed by jumping out of the fifth storey window. The engineer of the hoop-skirt factory, Mr. Geo Albrecht, who was arrested on suspicion of causing the fire, was discharged by the coroner, there being nothing whatever upon which such a charge could be based. It was a most cruel and needless arrest, there not being the slightest shade of suspicion against him. It seems very clear until we have Mackenzie's Fire-Escape fitted upon every tenement-house there can be no security for life.

On Friday, the 14th, a flag was presented to Colonel Corcoran from the Irishmen in California, as a compliment to that gallant officer for having set an example of military discipline to his adopted country, by disobeying the orders of his commander, on a mere matter of courtesy to a foreign guest. This is very encouraging to American institutions.

Rhode Island has two full tickets in the field for her State election, which takes place on Wednesday, April 3. The rival candidates are as follows:

Governor—James Y. Smith, Republican; William Sprague, Conservative.

Lieutenant-Governor—S. H. Green, Republican; Samuel G. Arnold, Conservative.

Attorney-General—Sullivan Ballou, Republican; Walter S. Burges, Conservative.

Secretary of State—J. R. Bartlett, Republican; J. R. Bartlett, Conservative.

Treasurer—Samuel A. Parker, Republican; Samuel A. Parker, Conservative.

Congress, First District—Chris. Robinson, Republican; George H. Browne, Conservative.

Congress, Second District—W. D. Brayton, Republican; W. W. Hoppin, Conservative.

Leutze, the artist, has just finished a picture called a "View in Venice," which is considered his masterpiece. Charles Elliott has also just completed a portrait of Mrs. Colonel Harper, which is beyond all praise. It is the repose of life.

Horace Sanburn, of Mendon, Vt., a young man whose marriage, about a year since, with a daughter of Leverett Wilkins, of the same town, was celebrated with considerable pomp, about two weeks since eloped with the wife of Wm. Jakins, of Rutland, with the intention, it is said, of flying to California. Mr. Jakins followed in pursuit of the guilty pair. In New York the runaway couple eluded all the vigilance of the police, and no doubt succeeded in making their escape to California by the steamer which sailed last week. Mrs. Jakins had been married but about four years. She is a daughter of Amos Pike, of Rutland, and comes from a respectable family. The elopement occasions the most intense excitement and grief among the friends of both families.

On Friday, the 15th, Captain Lovell, whose exploits in artillery practice we illustrated last year, gave the third lecture to the Twelfth Regiment at Irving Hall. It would seem as though the Anglo-Saxon race delighted in painting the horrors and the ease of a foreign invasion. Everybody here laughs at the shaking fit or ague John Bull has every generation, when they button up their pockets and double their fists at an imaginary French invasion; but we are just as bad, for Captain Lovell in his lecture alluded to the rapidity with which British artillerymen handled the large guns, firing eleven shots in less than seven minutes, and said that in the present condition of affairs here it would take the men at least twenty minutes to prepare a large gun for use, and in the meantime a fleet might come up the harbor, destroy the city, and sail out again. In the event of a war with any foreign power, New York would be the first place at which the enemy would direct their attention; and it would be useless to look to the General Government for assistance. In the course of his remarks he suggested a system of volunteer artillery which would not consume one-half the time required for infantry practice, and would prove of great benefit in case of war.

Mr. Mulligan, better known under the familiar title of Billy, has been granted a new trial, and released in $5,000 bail.

The Court of Pardons met on the 18th at Trenton, and refused to commute Abson's sentence to imprisonment for life. New Jersey and New York both rush into extremes. One has a passion for hanging a criminal, right or wrong, while the other plays with one as a cat with a mouse, by trying him over and over again. A careful study of the evidence against Abson leaves a very strong doubt in our mind as to his active guilt, although there can be no doubt he was a brutal husband. Still, the gallows is irrevocable, and in the face of the judicial murder of the negro Cyphus in Baltimore, we think a respite ought to have been granted, more especially as a memorial, signed by many eminent men, was presented to the judges to that effect.

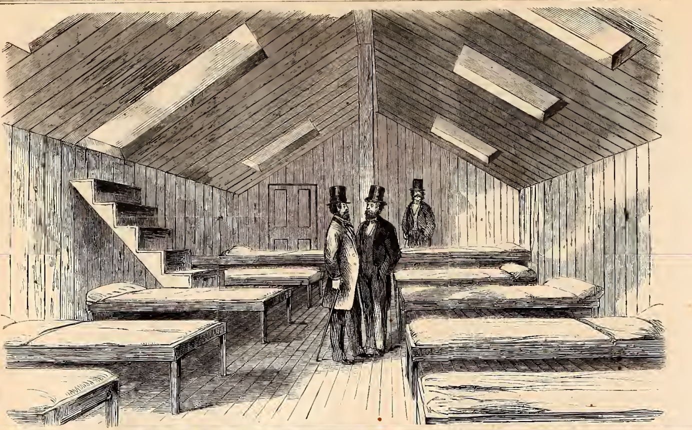
Alderman Greene, of Brooklyn, is in trouble. He is, we believe, a friend of the swill milk fraternity. It appears that he signed a bill for street cleaning for his friend Murtagh, for work which was not performed. This is denied, but even if true, how our Gotham City Fathers must laugh in their sleeves. Who would be an Alderman in the City of Churches if thus subjected to such petty annoyances?

We are sorry to see that the bootmakers of Stoughton, Mass., are about to have a strike again. That of Lynn last year was altogether detrimental to their general interests. Trade has laws which these isolated efforts cannot effect; like water, they will find their level.

Never has St. Patrick been more generally celebrated than on the 18th, for Sunday being the 17th, it was necessarily postponed. It had long been a subject of discussion and shillalegh whether St. Patrick, who was a Scotchman by the way, was born on the 8th or the 9th. The matter being left to a wise priest, he settled the dispute by adding the different dates together and making them the 17th, which is certainly the whole truth. On Monday last the day was fine, and the Irish regiments and the Irish societies turned out in grand style, and the entire air smelt of that accent which Scott pronounced "fine," and which Burke, Wellington, Goldsmith, Napier, Faraday, Canning, Castlereagh, Palmerston, Meagher, Doheny, and their countrymen have indulged in from time immemorial. In the evening the St. Patrick Society gave a dinner at the Astor House, at which J. T. Brady, the most eloquent and able of our counsellors, spoke with a force worthy of Grattan. Russell, of the London Thunderer, was there, and responded to the toast of "The Press." It is very gratifying to see our adopted citizens feel so much at home in the land of liberty.

There was rather an urgent time on Monday at the Board of Aldermen, in which Alderman Genet had Alderman Dayton arrested for contempt. The special offence was a speech on the Hackley street cleaning. We must confess that rain and wind ought to share with Hackley. They have hitherto done the work.

Sudden deaths are alarmingly common. Not a day passes but we have to chronicle the frail tenure on which we hold life. Mr. Charles Hayne, the Ferry-master of Hamilton Ferry, Brooklyn, dropped dead as he was tying his cravat in his residence at Gowanus. He had promised to take his wife to a ball, and had rather hurried in going home to his house. He was a Mason of long standing.



INTERIOR OF THE HOSPITAL ATTACHED TO THE FLOATING BATTERY IN CHARLESTON HARBOR, S. C.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST NOW IN CHARLESTON.—SEE PAGE 289.

THE FLAG ADOPTED BY THE NEW SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY.

THE subject of a national flag was a matter of grave and serious consideration in the Congress of the new Confederacy. Many very beautiful designs were sent in by patriotic Southern ladies, but the Committee, while accepting the suggestions with thanks, finally decided upon the flag which we publish to-day. On presenting their design for the acceptance of the Provisional Congress, the Chairman explained it in the following words:

"A flag should be simple, readily made, and above all, capable of being made up in bunting; it should be different from the flag of any other country, place or people; it should be significant; it should be readily distinguishable at a distance; the colors should be well contrasted and durable, and lastly, and not the least important point, it should be effective and handsome. The committee humbly think that the flag which they submit combines these requisites. It is very easy to make. It is entirely different from any national flag. The three colors of which it is composed—red white and blue—are the true republican colors. In heraldry they are emblematic of the three great virtues—of valor, purity and truth. Naval men assure us that it can be recognised at a great distance. The colors contrast admirably, and are lasting. In effect and appearance it must speak for itself. Your Committee, therefore, recommend that the flag of the Confederate States of America shall consist of a red field, with a white space extending horizontally through the centre, and equal in width to one-third the width of the flag, the red spaces, above and below, to be of the same width as the white; the union blue extending down through the white space, and stopping at the lower red space; in the centre of the union a circle of white stars corresponding in number with the States in the Confederacy."

SECTION OF THE FLOATING BATTERY, CHARLESTON HARBOR. SEE PAGE 289.

PIUS IX. has just received as a present a splendid diamond necklace, the property of a French lady recently deceased, and a quantity of what a well-known London ball-giver used to call "articles of bigotry and virtue;" also a present from a lady of Osimo.

THE DOOM OF "WHITE-LADIES:"

OR,

MOTHER AND SON.

CHAPTER I.

"QUICK, quick! Here, sir, for mercy's sake, if you can swim! Here's a drowning man, and not a soul to help!"

This startling cry came to me, through the mists of a November afternoon, across the Iffley meadows, where I was walking. A half minute's run to the river, the sight of a cockle shell boat overturned, and some dark object rising to the surface, then a plunge, a grasp, a mighty trial of my utmost strength. The man who had called out leaned over the brink and relieved me of that dead weight, I leaped out on the bank, and—a human life was saved!

I saw the poor fellow between blankets at the nearest cottage, and having waited till the surgeon from Oxford could report that his patient was quite out of danger and rapidly coming round, hurried back to my rooms at Exeter. Then—for I was too late for Hall, and in my excited state could not have touched anything to eat—I got into my dressing-gown and slippers, boiled my kettle, made a coffee-pot full of strong coffee, and took my pipe, meditating, while I smoked, on the strange revulsion of feeling wrought in me by this afternoon's adventure. In order to make this intelligible to my readers, they must allow me to say something of myself and my circumstances.

I was the eldest of a large family in Cornwall, and now keeping my fourth Oxford term. I knew and felt painfully—I dare say more than those who made them—all the sacrifices it cost to send me to college; my father's port cashiered after dinner, my mother's faded silks, the hundred family economies, and, worse than all beside, little Agatha, my favorite sister, threatened with a spinal complaint, and lying patient and smiling on an inclined plane. I knew, though they tried to keep it from me, the real reason why the child was not taken up to London at once for the best advice. Well; there was a scholarship in the college, the value sixty-five pounds a year, to be competed for. I had no great talent or brilliancy, but I could work hard, and I had worked honestly for this great help. Everybody told me I was sure to get it, and I came to think so myself. To cut the story short, after four days of harassing examination, that morning found me a disappointed man. The prize fell to a man of another college, whose work was so far superior to my own that I had not even the common consolation of laying the blame of defeat on the heads of the examiners. A slight, puny-looking fellow was my successful rival, a perfect contrast to myself; and in the first smart of my disappointment I had weighed my thews and sinews against his brain. The first stroke in our college eight-oar, the fleetest runner on the cricket-ground, how heartily I had that afternoon despised the distractions which I had hitherto been so proud of. I was worthless—good for nothing at Oxford; better be off to the backwoods at once, where my animal qualities might stand me in some stead. Actually my mind was half made up to emigrate to Canada, when that cry for help had rung in my ears.

Now, what a change had passed over me! As I came in, hurrying through the quadrangle, I had met our just-elected scholar in his bran-new scholar's gown. I did not envy him one bit; I even held my head higher as I passed him. My animal qualities and their owner were on the best terms possible. With my strength, with this right arm, I had saved a life—a human life! I repeated it over and over again to myself—my heart was light within me—I felt the civic crown upon my brow.

"It was better for that man to-day," I said, half aloud, "that I could run like a greyhound and swim like an otter, than if I had been able to write the best Greek verses or the neatest bit of Latin ever sent up in an examination. I wish I could do that too, though," I thought, with a sigh for my lost scholarship, as I got out my desk to write to my mother. But I sat still, with the blank paper before me. My mind having once laid hold of a pleasant train of thought, held it with a tenacious grasp; it would take me back, in spite of myself, to the half-drowned man. I felt a natural curiosity to find out who he was, and something about him. His name I had already learned from the address on a letter taken out of his pocket—"Henry Marsden, Esq., Ch. Ch. Coll., Oxford, England, viâ Marseilles." This address was in a lady's hand, and the letter bore an Indian postmark. I got down my calendar, and found "Henry Marsden, Ch. Ch.," in the matriculation list of the present term. "Marsden, Marsden!" where had I seen that name before? "I have it now!" I exclaimed, as I ferreted among some Calcutta newspapers sent over by an old school-chum of mine out there; "here's the name over and over again—Sir John Marsden—he seems quite the hero of the paper. Ay! knighted, I see, for important services; here again." I went on, marking down the columns with my pipe. "Sir John and Lady Marsden! Then his father and mother are in India; that accounts for the lady's handwriting on that Indian letter." I jumped to these hasty conclusions as a young man would be apt to do, and for once these hasty conclusions were right. So here I knew a good deal already about this man, while I pleased myself to think that I had saved his life in a strict incognito. None of the people about the cottage knew me; for my part I should mention the accident to nobody in Oxford. I was glad to think that Mr. Marsden would never find me out, if he should have a wish to do so. As I watched the smoke-spirals of my pipe, I dwelt upon this thought with intense satisfaction. I imagined all sorts of fine things I should say to myself when I saw him at St. Mary's, or he passed me as a stranger in the street. This feeling was, no doubt, mainly attributable to my very shy and nervous temperament.

Next morning I had come down considerably from my heroics, and was trying hard to make some sense out of one of those crabbed passages in Aristotle, which one might fancy he had written with the malicious purpose of addling the brains of Oxford men, when a tap came at my door. Directly afterwards my river-side acquaintance of the previous afternoon entered—a low, ill-looking fellow enough in broad daylight. My new friend had evidently been very drunk over night, indeed he was scarcely sober now; and as he had told his story, no doubt, to several different people that morning, and got a glass of something from each in return, he brought with him into my room a strong flavor of that peculiar compound called in the gin-shops, "all nations."

"Beg parding, sir," he began in a thick voice, bringing his forefinger quickly down from his forehead, that he might lay both hands on the table to steady his legs; "beg parding, sir, but you're Mr Arnott—leastways it's writ up above your door."

"Yes, I was Mr. Arnott, and particularly busy that morning." I saw that my visitor was in a highly loquacious state.

"Then, sir, I've got a bit of paper 'ere for you," replied the man, taking from his hat a crumpled note, which bore every token of having travelled up and down a good deal in that vehicle. "Why, sir, you slipped away like a heel yesterday, and Mr. Marsden wor fritting as soon as he came to hisself, and knew what had happened, to know where you was. That was more nor me nor anybody else could tell him, for no one knowed you. So he says to me, when we'd got him back and all comfortable in his rooms, he says, like a gem'man as he is, 'Now, Jenkins, I owe you a good deal; but mind, not a penny more nor this 'alf soverink to drink my 'elth with shall you have till you've found out the gem'man as jumped into the river.' 'Leave that to me, sir,' says I; 'he's a college gent, I'm pretty sure; anyhow, I'll find him.' And so, Mr. Arnott, 'ere I am."

Mr. Jenkins made a long pause, looking as if he had a benevolent

THE NATIONAL FLAG OF THE NEW SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY, ADOPTED BY THE CONGRESS NOW SITTING AT MONTGOMERY, ALA.

THE NEW BATTERIES ERECTED ON MORRIS ISLAND FOR THE DEFENCE OF CHARLESTON HARBOR AND THE REDUCTION OF FORT SUMPTER.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist now in Charleston, S. C.—See Page 296.

THE DOOR OF "WHITE-LADIES."

(Continued from page 283.)

desire to drink my "ith" like wine; but seeing no chance offorded him of putting it into execution, he made his bow and departed.

I spurred the noble, which ran as follows: "Excuse me, but I can't write in a formal style to the man who saved my life yesterday. I don't realize till I have seen you; and I say, will not control over me I must, in spite of the doctor's orders, put myself in a cab and find you out. Pray call on me. I am dying to speak to thee, if I pay doc's like thanks."

I think few one could have refused to obey this summons. I was thrown on my cap and gown, and went to Ch. Ch. directly. My name reached—I call his at once, because everybody knows it—the keenest ears into each of the ears, the long, silent pressure of whose hand between his hand—as he forced her into a chair—and was lying on a sofa, looking pale indeed, but not much the worse for his adventure.

Briefly I put him off with a few words, and he began to question. "Well! there is one who will thank you for better than I could hope to do: and I believe that my life is as much—if not more—to her than it is myself."

As he spoke, he directed my attention to a picture which stood up against the wall in an open packing-case. I looked first at it, and then back again to him; for no one can look at a photograph of a friendship between him and the original. The portrait was that of a remarkably handsome woman in the prime of life, and the face, if not forty, certainly not older—her sex was perhaps half her age. Mother and son were wholly alike. They had the same features, complexion, the same dark hair and eyes; the most marked difference between them lay in this, that the black eyebrows of the portrait joined. This gave a certain severe air to the face, belied, however, by those tender and generous lips. Afterwards, when I got to know her, I found her sure and the living face so well, I recognized in both the stamp of unusual force of character and unusual generosity of heart. The latter characteristics were kept down in the young man's countenance by a rare fruit, unprocured expression of a sweet and gentle mind. The portrait by its revealing sentiment, most perfectly rendered by an artist of great merit, the Lord Mayor's wife, and I continued to look, she sat to him; all her thousand loving thoughts of the son, to whom she would not see this moment of danger, were centered in the sense, the longings for his return; the whole world which lies in a mother's heart, her love and her life, were in those eyes. The same expression of these feelings centred on one subject made the fervor, the perfume, the light of the face, which was to me the very grace of a Madonna.

Marden by watching me as I looked at his mother's portrait; he was evidently pleased to see the impression it made on me. "It has been a long time coming," he said, "but I remembered it when back; and it only came by last mail, and got here last night. Good Governor! he has been in a terrible state about me, and I am sure still might have taken cost to them!"

We conversed in the friendliest in true Oxford fashion, with a pipe together, and made out mutual confidences over it. I found Marden's family circumstances, his connections, and prospects. He had received fellow as I had always been with everybody, I could yet talk to him about it if I had been so minded. He told me that everything; described the dear old home down in Cornwall; told me how his father had been a clergyman there, and had died when he was but a boy; how his mother had devoted herself entirely to him and his sister, he said, and only one brother, four years younger than himself; and how he had been sent to Eton when quite young, was about ten years old. In consequence of a sad accident on board ship, his father had been obliged to leave the service, and came under the care of a clergyman family in Devonshire. Marsden himself had passed an interesting and successful school career, and he was now come up to the University. He career had been long planned out for him, as he was only a younger son, destined to go then proceed at once to India, where a subaltern post, under his father, would be provided for him. He had, of course, no money of his parents, but did not seem otherwise to anticipate his Indian life. "I love hard study and application," he said, "and should like it, I think I have any ambition at all."

He had a love of English, glowing at the portrait, and thinking that if this were the case, there must be one great point of contrast between Lady Marden and her son.

"No," he repeated, following the direction of my eye, "I have no ambition at all! I suppose I should have, if I were under other circumstances. I shall go out without any misgivings when the time arrives. My mother has been—and is—my world, as my father's success; she will be the secret of mine."

We both felt, I am sure, a moment's solid day but put a new interest in our lives. A friendship in heart and soul but sprung up between us, for such a rapid as we had been to each other in the course; yet through all the years that have passed over our heads since, not one has fallen, not one has been forgotten. It was in the root of our brotherhood lie in this, that I had rendered this man a service which he felt could never be repaid. Besides this, there was some bond between our natures which, under whatever circumstances we might have met, made us instinctively friendly. It was a human lifetime, between those who are still young, such a firm yet sudden confidence may be given, as it was between us.

Marsden had said that his mother would thank me, and so indeed she did. I have her letter still, on which, as on the portrait and the smiles, my own mother shed tears when she read it. And that man must have been a stone who could not have done so. Such a letter, accompanying gift as generously as it was given; it was the bounty of a mistress. And Lady Marden's gift was not a mere present. It was the whole sense of my message to her son's friend in those long letters I wrote to him, so indefatigably, during the first year of his absence, translated into terms for them. You might find the whole volume of the writer's life bound up in the single sentence in which her gratitude finds utterance: it fits her with one single aim—that her hopes for her son might be realized, and the hopes of his future gratified. Marsden's own letters indicate faithfully the whole emotion for his future career. She sent over to him, from time to time, a printed card with the name of a new regiment, the means of averting their: laid before him details, prospectuses, and all with that tender care for his interests, that anxious desire to bring to bear on a subject to which the whole of its resources are devoted. Her gratitude and her vivacity of mind, which I think she brought many passages from that correspondence to my mind! But I am only giving the history of a friendship, and perhaps the most might have thought their writer only lived to write, with such charms and vividness as they grow into that letter, the whole interest and incidents of her everyday life. The happiest turns of thought, every treasure of the heart and brain which she had will convey, were lavished on her correspondent. And, that underlying all there was a deep current of the tenderest feeling for me, I could not doubt, on such a perfume of the highest, most noble sentiment, and you will understand that Marsden and I were friends indeed. Even as a young man back from night which might shame the kiss of such a brother. I was not surprised, when I came to know him, that his memory should be as vivid to her son, his affection as intense, as if had left her but a few days before. Time and space are the laws of absence, through the changes by which the child grows up

"Mother, Marsden's back!" and the secret to keep her own as when he lieped at her knee.

to be continued.

CHAPTER II.

I had hardly kept faith with my readers, and with myself, in the matter of punctuality, if I had not been "afixed to my story. As a man of business, I am sure, I should be. My landlady was the same of an old school, and, the capacity at which she had served Mr. Marsden, It was at White-ladies that I had been introduced to her. "How that he was with his mother and sister, at their house, lying still at Ramsgate, "ree months of his absence, and a. The

Dear mother! no wonder she should think a man could not see that flower of her flock without peril to his heart. I watched her going off with my candle as she used to do when I was a child in pinafores. Then I lay awake some time, thinking of Harry, for her words had brought him to my mind. It took me back to the Vicarage at Watfield. A host of words and actions, mere trifles in themselves, and hardly noticed at the time, rose up to me with clear significance. I had had an idea from the first, that with all the vulgar cunning of her nature, the vicar's wife was trying to bring on an engagement between Marsden and her daughter. Shame! a thousand shames, I say, to the woman who can, as she did, make an innocent young girl a party to unworthy tricks and contrivances of all sorts. As for Rose, I acquitted her from my heart; she was simply happy to dance with Harry; so glad to sit beside him, to walk with him always in our long rambles. Like a light through the darkness came my memory of her glance of shy delight when Mrs. Amyott had proposed that Harry should teach her Italian—"such an advantage to the dear child it would be," she said—the eager tremor with which she poured all the savings of her little purse into my hand, and asked me to procure the necessary books for her new study. And Marsden? I hardly knew what to think of him. This was just the one subject which had been avoided between us; we had never said one word about Rose Amyott to each other: not one word in praise of her refinement, her beauty, her exquisite grace. Sometimes I had thought him attracted, sometimes repelled. I remember, one day in particular, when Marsden had behaved like a man who yields, right or wrong, to a fascination too strong to be resisted. Then on a sudden—was it because he caught Mrs. Amyott's triumphant eye?—he became sullen and gloomy. The next time we were at Watfield he began by a marked coldness towards Rose; then, seeing her droop like her namesake flower in a frost, his manner became tender—certainly too tender if he meant nothing by it. Was there a struggle going on in his heart? How would it end? I wondered. Then, Harry's mother—would she ever consent to such a marriage? She might, perhaps, be brought to pass over its worldly disadvantages; but would she ever accept Mrs. Amyott's daughter as a wife to her son? I felt sure that Lady Marsden was just the woman to have a royal memory for the qualities and peculiarities of any person she had ever known. I felt equally sure that she must remember her former schoolfellow with an antipathy close bordering on disgust. If she could see Rose; if she only knew her! But all that she would never know of Rose just lay in this: that she was Mrs. Amyott's daughter. Pshaw! why tangle a web that might never be woven? Even if Marsden really had a liking for Rose, he would see other girls, and most likely forget her. I could not even say that he cared for her at all. No! I could not say it; but——

And so I fell asleep.

For more than a year after that "long vacation" Harry did not go down at all to White-ladies.

"I must keep away—I cannot trust myself," he said, half to me, half to himself, one day as he stood looking at Lady Marsden's portrait. He said no more; it was quite enough to show me all his heart. He did not go into Dorsetshire till a despatch arrived to say that Mr. Paulet had been seized with paralysis, and that if he wished to see his grandfather alive he must start at once. This took place I remember at the end of the Lent term, just before the men went down for the holidays.

(To be continued.)

THE NEW BATTERIES AT CUMMINGS' POINT, MORRIS ISLAND, CHARLESTON HARBOR.

The harbor of Charleston is literally swarming with fortifications, rendering it almost impregnable to any force that could be sent against it by the North. The new battery, which we illustrate to-day, is situated on Cummings' Point, Morris Island. This battery is put down as No. 4, and is considered to be the most effective of all the batteries recently erected. It is on the northern extremity of the island, the landing-place, and commands the channels of the harbor and the gateway of Fort Sumpter. It is mounted with heavy columbiads, and has besides several mortars. The distance from Cummings' Point to Fort Sumpter is barely one thousands yards, or little over half a mile.

Our view represents the Stevens' Battery, which is covered by several layers of railroad iron, placed at an angle, so that shot or shell would glance off if they struck it. Also the Columbia Battery, which is composed of palmetto logs, together with a distant view of the Star of the West battery, and soldiers encamped, all upon Morris Island. It will be seen by our Artist's sketch that the utmost activity prevailed on the island; that the Charlestonians were not losing a moment in their anxiety to render their harbor impregnable, and the reduction of Fort Sumpter by siege or by starvation a matter of positive certainty.

FOREIGN NEWS AND GOSSIP.

Robert Browning, having rewritten Sordello, is about to republish it. We may say as Byron did of Coleridge's pamphlet of Lay Sermons,

"And Coleridge has explained all to the nation—
I wish he would explain his explanation."

Sordello is the poem which led Jerrold to cry out "that he must be an idiot, since he could not comprehend what so true a poet as Browning had written!" and Leigh Hunt declared that the printers must have "pied" the matter, leaving the final syllables which rhymed all safe and sound. Despite these jeers, Sordello has magnificent passages of the incomprehensible far above the common intellect of men, who wish to read as they run.

The immorality of English high-life is becoming more and more noteworthy. A Major Yelverton, who distinguished himself by his gallantry in the Crimea, was undergoing the pillory of a public prosecution from one of his wives. The result is uncertain, as the lady being a Catholic was married according to that church only.

A railroad tunnel had fallen in near Sheffield, and buried seven men. One only was extricated alive, the others being horribly mutilated.

Blanchard Jerrold has assumed the editorship of the Welcome Guest, and will commence by a serial called "The Ways of Life—Its Ups, Downs and Final Resting Place."

The Fejee Islands are to be annexed to England, Dr. Seaman having reported favorably to the project.

The new iron-plated war vessel called the Black Prince was launched at Glasgow on the 28th Feb. The names of the next two vessels of a similar class are very suggestive, since they are to be called the Cressy and the Poictiers.

Mrs. Hall is about to commence a magazine for the ladies. It is to be called the St. James Magazine.

Charles Astor Bristed has contributed a paper to Macmillan's Magazine on American College Life, which has very much exercised the critical epicenes of London. They cannot realise the freedom with which we note down our neighbors' vices and virtues.

The English Lords number four hundred and twenty-seven temporal, and thirty spiritual. Three of the former, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Cambridge and the Duke of Cumberland (King of Hanover), are of the blood royal. The spiritual lords are twenty-six English and four Irish prelates. The temporal lords include a prince, a prince-consort, twenty-seven dukes, thirty-five marquises, one hundred and seventy earls, thirty-one viscounts, and one hundred and sixty two barons.

Mr. George Scharf has created some sensation in art circles in England by the publication of a letter, in which he declares, and even attempts to prove, that the Titian paintings recently destroyed at the burning of Blenheim Palace were not originals, but worthless copies. Some influential English journals coincide with Scharf's opinion, and mention this as proof of the little reliance to be placed upon the originality of the so-called "old masters."

The Duke of Sutherland, whose death had been erroneously announced, really did die on the 27th Feb., at his magnificent seat at Trentham. A London radical paper profanely expresses its "utter astonishment that so great a man should be so foolish as leave half a million a year and a handsome wife behind him." Did the editor wish the Duke to send them before him? Millionaire Dukes, like penniless paupers, meet with little sympathy! Extremes meet—and kill!

Mr. Charles Reade, an author, brought an action against the proprietor of the Grecian Saloon for infringing his copyright, by producing a dramatic version of his "Never too Late to Mend." Mr. Justice Williams delivered judgment for the defendant, pronouncing that the public representation of a piece upon the stage was not a publication within the meaning of the statute of Anne, which gives the author of a book the copyright in his book. His lordship, with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Willes, also declared that copyright in published works existed only by statute. As this question has lately excited great interest among literary men, it is not improbable that means may be taken to obtain a still more authoritative decision. Mr. Charles Dickens and Mr. Wilkie Collins succeeded in compelling Mr. Lane, of the Britannia Theatre, to withdraw a dramatic version of the "Message from the Sea," by threat of legal proceedings. If, however, the decision of Justices Williams and Willes is to hold good, they had no power to do so.

HUMOROUS GLEANINGS.

A hunter bags his game. A flirt sacks hers.

Of what use is it that a woman can prate about Bacon, if she cannot cook pork?

Which is the queen of roses in the gardens? The rose of the watering pot, for it rains over all the others.

"Have I not, my son, given you every advantage?" "Oh, yes, but I couldn't think of taking advantage of you, father."

It is not so unpleasant to a poor young woman to wait upon the gentlemen, as it is to a proud old maid to be waiting for them.

A great poet says that "the mountains stand fixed for ever." We know, however, that it is no uncommon thing for them to slope.

There are two classes of disappointed lovers—those who are disappointed before marriage, and the more unhappy ones who are disappointed after it.

Dr. Franklin says that "every little fragment of the day should be saved." Oh, yes, the moment the day breaks, set yourself at once to save the pieces.

Sweet Kate was heard one day to sigh. "With beauty lost, I'd wish to die." "Oh, no," said Tom, with humor quaint, "not wish to dye, but merely paint."

Mrs. Partington expresses her apprehension that the people of the gold regions will bleed to death, as papers are constantly announcing the opening of another vein.

Jack Bannister, passing by a house which had been almost consumed by fire, inquired whose it was. Being told it was a hatter's, "Ah," said he, "then the loss will be felt!"

There is a story of a Scottish minister who took unto himself a helpmate so sharply and angularly and irregularly outlined by nature, that a brother minister remarked thereupon that, for his part, he would as soon have married a sackful of pattens!

"What do you call this?" said Jones tapping his dinner lightly with his fork.

"Call it," snarled the landlord, "what do you call it?"

"Well, really," said Jones, "I don't know; it hasn't quite enough hair in it for plaster, but there's a leetle too much in it for hash."

A couple were recently married at Hartford, the happy man being a German, who cannot speak an English word, while the blushing bride is an Irish girl, to whom the German tongue is Greek. Their courting must have been done by signs, and the scolding cannot hurt the feelings of either party at present.

At a banquet, when solving enigmas was one of the diversions, Alexander said to one of his courtiers, "What is that which did not come last year, and will not come next year?" A distressed officer, starting up, said, "It certainly must be our arrears of pay." The king was so diverted, that he commanded him to be paid up, and also increased his pay.

Painstaking Governess.—"Now, my dear Tommy, do try and remember. A quadruped is an animal with four legs, as a horse; a biped has only two. A man is a biped." Tommy (who likes to put funny questions to his governess), "But if a man has only one leg, what do call him?" Tommy is sent out to play, and told not to ask so many questions.

In one of the States they passed an act that no dog should go at large without a muzzle, and a man was brought up for infringing the statute. In defence he alleged that his dog had a muzzle. "How is that?" quoth the justice. "Oh!" said the defendant, "the Act says nothing of where the muzzle should be placed, and as I thought the animal would like the fresh air, I put the muzzle on his tail."

A married lady, alluding in conversation to the one hundred and forty-eighth Psalm, observed, that while "young men and maidens, old men and children," were expressly mentioned, not a word was said about married women. An old clergyman, whom she was addressing, assured her they had not been omitted, and that she would find them included in one of the preceding verses, under the description of vapors and storms

A facetious gentleman travelling in the country, on arriving at a roadside inn in the evening, was met by the ostler, whom he thus addressed: "Boy, extricate that quadruped from the vehicle, stabulate him, devote him an adequate supply of nutritious aliment; and when the Aurora of morn shall again illumine the oriental horizon, I will reward you with a pecuniary compensation for your amiable hospitality." The boy, not understanding a word, ran into the house, saying, "Master, here's a Frenchman wants to see you."

Some gentlemen cruising on a part of the Irish coast, observing that about the same hour every day a boat, containing two men and a woman, landed its passengers on the shore, and after a short time returned with them, inquired the reason. "My man," said he, "what makes you come here every day? Is it that you like it?" "Oh, your honor, not at all; but, your honor, the wife and me's going soon to Australy, and so we're just practising the say-sickness, that we may be used to it when we start." "Well, and do you find yourself improving?" "Ah, sure, your honor, the wife's sick every day, but she's getting on purtily, anyhow!"

Domestic Cannibals.—Back-biters.

A Question that has never been answered yet.—"Where's the Police?"

Why is a bad shot like an amusing fellow? Because he is the boy to keep the game alive.

"I wish that boy belonged to me," said old Roger.

"What would you do with him?"

"I'd p-p-'point his funeral for d-day after to-morrow, and I'd s-s-see that he was ready."

"Madam," said a snarling son of Æsculapius, "if women were admitted to Paradise, their tongues would make it a purgatory."

"And some physicians, if allowed to practise there," retorted the lady, "would soon make it a desert."

A lady officer, if she wished to give the word "halt" to her troops, would do it somewhat in this wise: "You soldiers, all of you, now mind, I order you, as soon as I have finished speaking, to stand still, every one of you, on the spot where you may happen to be; don't you hear me? halt, I say, all of you!"

A traveller, overtaking an old minister, whose nag was much fatigued, quizzed the old gentleman upon his "turn-out." "A nice horse, yours, doctor! very valuable beast that! But what makes him wag his tail so, doctor?"

"Why, as you have asked me, I will tell you. It is for the same reason that your tongue wags so—a sort of natural weakness."

The Rev. Dr. M—— was reputed for the suavity of his manners and his especial politeness towards the fair sex. Handing a dish of honey to a lady at a party in his house, he said, in his wonted manner:

"Do take a little honey, Miss ——; 'tis so sweet, so like yourself."

A Mr. Mudie, handing the butter-dish to the host, exclaimed, "Do take a little butter, doctor; 'tis so like yourself."

A Scotchwoman at kirk who fancied the preacher was reading his sermon—a practice abhorrent to the faithful—was told by her neighbor:

"He canna be a reader, for he's blind."

"I'm glad to hear it," rejoined the orthodox old wife; "I wish they were a' blin'!"

It was her way of seeing a secure means for the orthodox practice of the old rule of the kirk with regard to extemporaneous preaching.

A French gentleman reproached his son for carrying a gold watch in a very careless and exposed manner, but the young gentleman persisted in the practice, in spite of parental admonition. In a crowd at the theatre, one evening, the old gentleman asked his son to tell him what o'clock it was, and the young man was distressed and mortified to find his watch had been stolen.

"Never mind," said his father, smiling, "I took it myself, to show you how easily you could be robbed—here it is!"

He put his hand in his fob to restore it; but lo, and behold, it was gone! Some thief more adroit than himself had appropriated the property.

It is the practice among waggish printers, when a "green 'un" enters the office, to play jokes on him by sending him on an errand to a neighboring office for something that he would not find, and he returns with some strange article or other, thinking that, in printer's phrase, he has got what he was sent for. A joke of this kind was recently perpetrated in a neighboring town. A boy who was rather "verdant" went to learn the printing business, and one of the journeymen, loving sport, sent him one day with a dish to a certain editor, to borrow "a gill of editorial." The editor, understanding the game, returned a picture of a donkey. The first one finding himself rather "come over," set his wits to work to think how he should be even with the other. At last he called the lad and told him to go and tell the editor that "it was editorial which he wanted, and not the editor!"

The late Professor D——, prior to his appointment to his chair, was rector of an Academy in Forfarshire. He was particularly reserved in his intercourse with the fair sex; but in prospect of obtaining a professorship, he ventured to make proposals to a lady. They were walking together, and the important question was put without preliminary sentiment or note of warning. Of course the lady replied by a gentle "No!" The subject was immediately dropped; but the parties soon met again.

"Do you remember," at length said the lady, "a question which you put to me when we last met?"

The professor said that he remembered.

"And do you remember my answer, Mr. D——?"

"Oh, yes," said the professor.

"Well, Mr. D——," proceeded the lady, "I have been led, on consideration, to change my mind."

"And so have I," drily responded the professor. He maintained his bachelorhood to the close.

A gentleman had five daughters, all of whom he brought up to become useful and respectable characters in life. These daughters married one after another, with the consent of their father. The first married a gentleman by the name of Poor, the second a Mr. Little, the third a Mr. Short, a fourth a Mr. Brown, the fifth a Mr. Hogg. At the wedding of the latter her sisters with their husbands were there, and the old gentleman said to the guests: "I have taken pains to educate my daughters, that they might act well their part in life; and, from their advantages and improvements, I fondly hoped that they would do honor to my family. I find that all my pains, care and expectations have turned out nothing but a Poor, Little, Short, Brown, Hogg!"

FOREIGN FLOATINGS CAUGHT BY THE WAY.

A French Mass.—After mass, the general summoned all the Arab chiefs, and he had with him a vast following of all the aghas, marabouts, khalifats and sheiks of the Eastern Sahara. A grand Moslem service was performed, at the conclusion of which General Desvaux, in full uniform, entered the mosque, and, mounting the pulpit, made a long harangue in Arabic. We did not hear the text, but the subject of his lay sermon was to point out the blessings of French rule and equal justice. "Who now fears for his head? Who now dreads a razzia on his camels? Who now quails before a more powerful neighbor? Who now dreads a stronger tribe? All is peace and security. Return thanks, therefore, to God and the Prophet, for the blessings which France has brought you, and which you dreamt not of before, and pray that they may be eternal," and much more in the style of Rabshakeh. Such a sermon and such an oration from the seat of the Tolba, was something new in Moslem ears, although it was followed by loud applause, possibly by command, but as to the facts, probably the general was right.

At the last reception at the Spanish Court, the Duke of Tetuan was robbed of a valuable diamond-mounted stick, and another grandee has complained of the loss of his fur coat, which had been taken by mistake by some sagacious senator, who repudiates even the charity of St. Martin, by declining to share the cloak. Another great scandal is caused by one of the Court ladies. She had a little liaison with a banker. She represented to him that the Queen was sorely in want of some ready-money for a secret purpose. The banker was, of course, ready to do business with such a customer. He advanced 2,000 piastres, and increased his loan to 10,000 piastres, for which he received his bills signed by the Queen. But time rolled along, and no money was forthcoming, so at last the banker wrote to his royal debtor. The Queen was amazed. She sent for the civil governor, who arrested the banker and his paramour. The latter confessed that she had forged the bills for her own purposes, and she was accordingly detained, but the poor dupe was liberated.

The British Press.—From the "Newspaper Press Directory of Great Britain and Ireland" we learn that there are now published in the United Kingdom 1,102 newspapers, distributed as follows: England, 791; Wales, 28; Scotland, 138; Ireland, 132; British Isles, 13. Of these there are 39 daily papers published in England, 8 ditto Scotland, 12 ditto Ireland, 2 ditto British Isles. On reference to preceding editions of this useful directory we find the following interesting facts, viz., that in 1821 there were published in the United Kingdom 267 journals; in 1831, 295; in 1841, 472; in 1851, 563; but in 1861 there are now established and circulated 1,102 papers, showing that an extraordinary impulse has been given to every description of newspaper enterprise. The magazines now in course of publication, including the quarterly reviews, number 481, of which 207 are of a decidedly religious character. Among these the Church of England has its special organs; and the Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Baptists, Independents, and other Christian communities are fully represented in this branch of literature.

The house at Frankfort-on-the-Rhine in which Goethe was born is still pointed out to the stranger. It is a large, triangular-faced building, constructed in an original style. Over the door is the coat of arms of Goethe's father, the suggestive poetical device of three lyres and a marble slab, circled with a fresh wreath of flowers, and with the words: "In this house was born Johann Wolfgang Goethe." In the same city is to be seen a curious, slate-colored, half-a-dozen-sided building, in which the great reformer, Martin Luther, once resided. Beneath a window is his bust, and the inscription in Latin: "In quietness and confidence shall be found strength."

Danish Reasons why the Cuckoo Builds no Nest.—When in early springtime the voice of the cuckoo is first heard in the woods every village girl kisses her hand and asks the question, "Cuckoo, Cuckoo, when shall I be married?" and the old folks, borne down with age and rheumatism, inquire, "Cuckoo! when shall I be released from this world's cares?" The bird, in answer, continues singing "Cuckoo!" as many times as years will elapse before the object of their desires will come to pass. But as some old people live to an advanced age, and many girls die old maids, the poor bird has so much to do in answering the questions put to her that the building season goes by; she has no time to make her nest, but lays her eggs in that of the hedge sparrow.

Birds' Sense of Danger.—This power of judging of actual danger, and the free and easy boldness which results from it, are by no means uncommon. Many birds seem to have a most correct notion of a gun's range, and, whilst scrupulously careful to keep beyond it, confine their care to this caution, though the most obvious resource would be to fly quite away out of sight and hearing, which they do not choose to do. And they sometimes appear to make even an ostentatious use of their power, fairly putting their wit and cleverness in antagonism to that of men, for the benefit of their fellows. I lately read an account, by a naturalist in Brazil, of an expedition be made to one of the islands of the Amazon, to shoot spoonbills, ibises, and other of the magnificent grallatorial birds, which were most abundant there. His design was completely baffled, however, by a wretched little sandpiper that preceded him, continually uttering its telltale cry, which at once aroused all the birds within hearing. Throughout the day did this individual bird continue its self-imposed duty of sentinel to others, effectually preventing the approach of the fowler to the game, and yet managing to keep out of the reach of his gun.—P. H. Gosse.

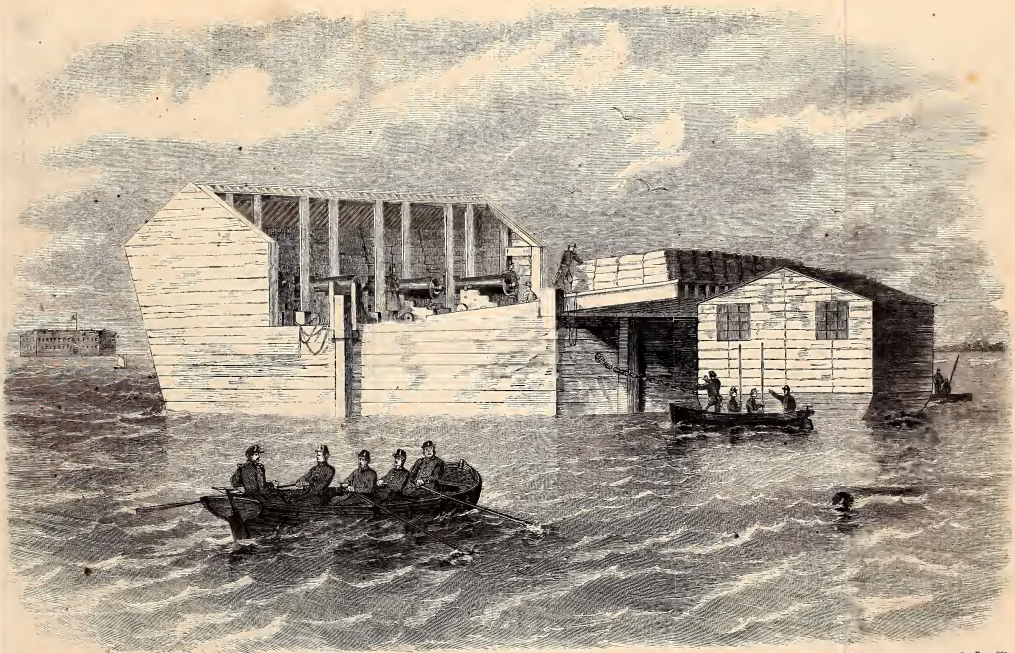
An Adventure—A Yankee in a Strange Place.—He (Dr. Wolff) then proceeded onward to Goorjrat, a considerable town, which also belonged to Rundjud Singh. He arrived there late at night, and was brought to the palace of the Governor, who had expected him; when, to his great surprise, he heard some one singing "Yankee Doodle," with all the American snuffle. It was his Excellency the Governor himself. He was a fine tall gentleman, dressed in European clothing, and with an Indian hookah in his mouth. Wolff asked him how he came to know "Yankee Doodle?" He answered, in nasal tones, "I am a free citizen of the United States of North America, from the State of Pennsylvania, city of Philadelphia. I am the son of a Quaker. My name is Josiah Harlan;" and as this man's history was rather romantic, Wolff gave it at once. He had, in his early life, studied surgery, but he went as supercargo in a ship to Canton, in China. And then he returned again to America, where he had intended to marry a lady, to whom he was engaged, but she had played him false. He then went to India and came to Calcutta, whence Lord Amherst, at that time Governor-General of India, sent him as assistant surgeon with the British army to the Burmese empire. Afterwards he quitted the British army, and tried to make himself King of Affghanistan; but, although he actually took a fortress, he was defeated at last by a force sent against him by Rundjud Singh, who made him a prisoner. Rundjud Singh, seeing his talents, said to him, "I will make you Governor of Goorjrat, and give you 2,000 rupees a month (equal to £300). If you behave well I will increase your salary; if not, I will cut your nose off." So Wolff found him, and his nose being entire was evidence that he had behaved very well.

Bouligny, the New Orleans Union member of Congress, when in the senior class at Transylvania University, Lexington, Kentucky, in April, 1824, was selected to make a speech of congratulation, in French, to Lafayette. The eloquent oration so carried away the hero that he threw his arms around the young orator and held him in a long embrace.

Parson Brownlow endorses Lincoln's Inaugural Address. He declares it conservative and farsighted, and says: "Had it been delivered by Jackson, Polk or Breckinridge, even the cotton States would have declared it to be the height of political perfection. And we unhesitatingly affirm, that if Lincoln's inaugural is a true indication of the character of his coming Administration, all good and true men may congratulate themselves upon his election to the Presidency." We opine that the fire-eating furies and the wooden nutmeg abstractions will be after Pious Brownlow very soon.

It is always pleasant to find politicians human. There is too great a disposition in the unthinking public mind to picture General Morris sitting dressed in full military uniform, peeling hand grenades as though they were oranges, and singing "Woodman, Spare that Tree." Queen Victoria does not always sit on a throne writing Acts of Parliament and bullying Prince Albert for being a Dutchman, nor does Abe Lincoln spend twenty-four hours per diem in splitting his own rails and other people's sides with his Western jokes. We assure the public that politicians have insane intervals of gratitude, which has just been made manifest by Mr. Seward appointing Charles A. Stetson, Esq., of the Astor House, to a lucrative office under the Federal Government.

Breckinridge's speech in the Senate, on the 18th of March, was, in many respects, a very remarkable one. It was at once calm, argumentative and predictive. The gist of it was that President Lincoln's Inaugural, stript of its finesse and ambiguity, meant war. We ought, perhaps, to have said that Abe Lincoln, like Wilkins Micawber, is waiting for something to turn up!



THE FLOATING BATTERY AT CHARLESTON, S. C., INTENDED TO ASSIST IN THE CAPTURE OF FORT SUMPTER, WITH DR. DE VEGA'S HOSPITAL ATTACHED.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST NOW IN CHARLESTON.—SEE PAGE 289.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND HIS CABINET IN COUNCIL AT THE WHITE HOUSE—MEMBERS DEMONSTRATING TO THE PRESIDENT THE IMPORTANCE OF THE EVACUATION OF FORT SUMPTER.—See Page 298.

THE COUNCIL CHAMBER OF THE WHITE HOUSE,

Where the President and Cabinet Deliberate.

The room in which great events happen, or are conceived, has always had a strong hold upon the imagination of mankind. The small low-browed room in Stratford-on-Avon where Shakespeare was born is a striking proof of this veneration of the human heart for the Chambers of History, as Browning aptly terms them.

We give in our present number an accurate sketch of the room in which for many years the Cabinets of the grandest of all Republics has held its deliberations, and where at the present time the destinies of the New World are being discussed. Our picture is so graphic and truthful that description is almost unnecessary, since the artist has done at a glance what the author requires time to accomplish. Truly says Kirke White:

> The poet dreams—the vision flies,
> And fading fast the image dies;
> But ah! the painter's magic force
> Arrests the fleeting phantom's course—
> It breathes—it lives—it fires the brain,
> And the dead past lives once again.

In order to give a lifelike and national interest to our illustration, we have placed the Cabinet Ministers in the seats occupied by them, and recapitulate their names:

Secretary of State—Hon. W. H. Seward, of New York; the Hon. Salmon P. Chase, who occupies the responsible position of the Treasury; Hon. Gideon Welles, of the Navy; Hon. Simon Cameron, Secretary of War; Hon. Caleb B. Smith, Secretary of the Interior; Hon. E. Bates, Attorney-General; Hon. M. Blair, Postmaster-General.

Whatever may be the public opinion of their polities, there can be no doubt of their integrity and ability.

ERLE GOWER:

OR, THE

SECRET MARRIAGE.

By Pierce Egan.

Author of "The Flower of the Flock," "The Snake in the Grass," &c., &c., &c.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

> Then from those cavernous eyes
> Pale flashes seem to rise,
> As when the Northern skies
> Gleam in December;
> And, like the water's flow,
> Under December's snow,
> Came a dull voice of woe
> From the heart's chamber.—The Skeleton in Armor.

During the commotion reigning in the mansion of Lord Kingswood, when Cyril, smitten by his father's terrible revelation respecting the closeness of the blood-tie existing between him and Violet, fell lifeless upon the floor of the library, there lay extended upon a bed within that house a man prostrate in body, but mentally excited to a state of frenzy.

Whatever might have been the potion palmed upon him by old Pengreep as brandy and water, Pharisee firmly believed it to be poison, the deadly effects of which he had barely rescued himself from by taking a powerful antidote.

What the old man's motive could be in making this attempt at murder he could not divine, and he found it a futile task to endeavor to think. His head was racked with pain, and his brain was confused and wandering. He found it impossible to fix his mind upon any one subject. He tried to recollect what had passed between him and Pengreep, but he had clinging to his memory but one topic, and that was comprised in the communication he had made to Lord Kingswood. What else he had imparted to him he could not remember: he could only hope that he had made no revelations respecting himself of a compromising character.

The consideration which most disturbed him was, however, what had transpired between himself and Lord Kingswood. He had a wild, hazy recollection of the interview; he remembered that he had been helplessly intoxicated in his lordship's presence, that he had, in order to excuse his filthy condition, sputtered out the secret disclosed to him by Pengreep, and which now he saw it would have been most important to keep until a more fitting moment, at least for his own advantage.

He reproached himself a thousand times for having been tricked into even tasting the ardent spirits which Pengreep had so cunningly introduced, and of which he had partaken only, as he had admitted to Lord Kingswood, with the object of inducing the old man to drink too, and so let out matters of importance, under the influence of drink, which, in his sober moments, he would have kept close.

Drinking was one of Pharisee's secret vices; he had a constant craving for brandy, but he never indulged this appetite unless alone at night, within his own room, and when he did give way to it, he invariably, before he laid himself down to sleep, swallowed a potion which acted as antidote to its ill-effects.

Thus, not only Lord Kingswood never saw him in a state approaching even inebriation, but none of his fellow-servants, not excepting the butler, who had condescendingly invited him several times to give his opinion of some of my lord's choicest wines, carefully selected by him from the stock for his own private drinking or to regale some particular friend who might pay him a visit in town or country. Pharisee, in fact, had the character of being a teetotaller, though, in reality, when he did yield to the promptings of the vice, he drank to excess.

He was quite conscious that Lord Kingswood would be petrified at seeing him in the condition in which he presented himself to him, and he was consequently aware that it would do more to weaken his lordship's faith in him than anything which had yet happened. It was an abrupt and startling piece of evidence, proving to his lordship that he had been deceived in one point of the man's character, that so far from abstaining from all kinds of spirituous liquors, he could, no matter what the motive, indulge to excess at any moment. It was a lapse which might be looked over, glozed over, pardoned, but forgiveness would not restore confidence, and Pharisee felt that he must, by this one unintentional act, have lowered himself many degrees in Lord Kingswood's estimation.

He hated his lordship with such bitter intensity that this event would not have disturbed him if it had not tended to weaken Lord Kingswood's belief in his trustworthiness, and, therefore, the influence which it was Pharisee's constant endeavor to maintain and wield over him.

In his long-cherished, most wicked design, he counted upon his lordship's faith in his steadiness, integrity and fidelity, as a material element in the success he hoped to achieve; whatever, therefore, operated upon his lordship's mind so as to weaken that faith, weakened also the prospects of his ultimate triumph. It was in vain that he endeavored to recall all that passed in the library the previous night. He dimly remembered disclosing Pengreep's story respecting Lord Kingswood's child being the Wonder of Kingswood Chace, but he could not remember whether he had mixed up with his statements aught concerning Lady Kingswood and the Marquis of Chillingham.

At best his own knowledge on the point went no farther than the note he had purloined from Lady Kingswood's desk and his own dark surmises. He was, however, sufficiently satisfied that an intrigue had been commenced by the marquis, and that Lady Kingswood, through her own unhappy organization, would probably become a victim to the designs laid to ensnare her; but had he, in his mad intoxication, revealed this frightful information to Lord Kingswood? He became faint and cold at the bare thought. He could not recollect when or how he had parted with Lord Kingswood. He vaguely remembered his own prostration and Lord Kingswood's rage; that he had been seized by him and violently shaken; but he could remember no further.

Unable to rise from absolute illness, he awaited the appearance of one of the footmen to summon him to his lordship's presence, but no one came. He remained for some hours, but still without the dreary stillness of his apartment being broken in upon. At length, unable to endure the torture of suspense, he crawled from his bed and rang his bell. It was not until he had a dozen times repeated his summons that a servant attended to it, and when at length a man appeared, it was only to furnish him with an incoherent statement to the effect that Mr. Cyril was in a fit, and dead, or dying, or in some equally dreadful condition; that Lord Kingswood had quitted the mansion in a state of frenzy; that Lady Kingswood and Lady Maud were with Mr. Cyril, attended by physicians, trying to restore him; and, in short, that the whole house was in a state of confusion and disorder; no one—not even the most inquisitive of the female servants—being able to afford a clue to the cause.

The man having thus delivered himself, disappeared as abruptly as he had appeared, leaving Pharisee more bewildered, perplexed and distracted at his situation than ever.

What was worse, he found himself powerless to quit his bed. The effect of the drug administered to him by Pengreep was of so exhaustive a character that he felt himself entirely deprived of strength, and this physical prostration was so materially increased by the mental excitement he was laboring under, that he eventually fainted away.

It was in the dead of the night when he recovered from his insensibility. He was still miserably weak and strengthless. The faint rays of a lamp enabled him dimly to see the objects in his room, and served to tell him that, during, as he supposed, his long slumber, some one had visited him, and left a lamp burning for him when he should awake.

The burning fever which had seized him in the morning, and the maddening headache which had almost driven him mad, were gone, but with them also what had remained of his memory.

He gazed around him, and wondered how and why he was there. Conscious of his position, and that something of a horrible kind had happened, he yet could not recollect what. His mind seemed to have gone blind. He felt like one who had gone to sleep with the faculty of seeing, and had awakened without his eyesight. He was in the position of one who, having made himself master of a poem, finds, when desirous of reciting it, that his memory at that moment refuses to render up a word.

And while aghast at this discovery he was seized by a horrified impression that there was some dusky phantom in a corner of the room, awaiting a moment favorable to reveal itself to him.

He was convinced that his eye, in one of its restless movements, had suddenly caught sight of a tall figure standing motionless in the most shadowy portion of the apartment; but, naturally superstitious and cowardly, he dared not look again in that direction.

With a convulsive shudder he buried his face in the pillow, and at the same moment he was thrilled to the marrow of his bones by a voice which spoke in a whisper, and which he did not recognise.

"Hist! Pharisee," it murmured. "Quick; attire yourself, and descend with noiseless steps to the picture-gallery; one awaits you there who must confer with you. Lose not——"

A faint cry of alarm checked further speech, and almost immediately he heard a slow, measured footstep approaching along the corridor, the door of his own apartment. It stopped for a moment at the threshold; then he had the door flung open, and some one approached his bedside.

A cold hand was laid upon his shoulder, and he shouted with fright—a fright not diminished when, upraising his terrified eyes, he beheld, standing at his bedside, Lord Kingswood, with pale and haggard face and bloodshot eyes. His aspect was stern and fierce, and he said, in a commanding, harsh tone,

"Quit your bed and attend me; no lying excuse of illness will save you. Arise, or I will drag you from your bed! I cannot sleep, I cannot rest, I cannot endure this torture longer; I will dare and defy the worst. Arise, wretch! quickly, if you would not drive me to some deed of desperation fatal to yourself."

So accustomed was Pharisee to obey his lordship's commands, that, faint and weak as he was, he complied, though he with difficulty attired himself, and was unable to stand without clutching some object, by the aid of which he supported himself. It was not until he was in Lord Kingswood's study, to which, following his lordship, he staggered he knew not how, that his ghastly, livid, pinched features, and hollow, glaring eyes, attracted the attention of his lordship to his condition. Coldly, and without a word, he motioned to a decanter of wine which stood upon a silver tray on a small table at hand, and Pharisee, conscious of its virtue to one in his exhausted condition, filled himself a glass—not without difficulty—and drank it off. His lordship watched him in silence, and waited for a minute or so to observe the effect it had upon him. Presently he bade him drink another, and then be seated. Pharisee obeyed, and sinking into a chair, pressed both hands upon his brow, for the wine had a rapid and violent effect upon him. It gave to him a degree of false strength, and after he had conquered some little difficulty of breathing, he removed his hands, and looked Lord Kingswood in the face with more firmness and a clearer comprehension of his position than before. Lord Kingswood quickly noted the change the wine had wrought in his valet, and bending his piercing, glittering, haughty eyes upon him, he said, in an austere tone,

"Yesternight you brought to me a strange, wild, apparently incomprehensible story. You remember it, no doubt, with all its distasteful accessories?"

Pharisee bowed in silence, but in tremor. He could not remember one incident that had happened the previous night. Respecting it his mind was a blank, though, strange to say, what had immediately passed was retained by his memory, even to the impression that some being had been in his room, and had addressed him immediately prior to Lord Kingswood's arrival. In fact, this strange conceit, or fact, as it might be, was unpleasantly uppermost in his thoughts, and it was difficult to divest himself of the belief that the same dusky, spectral figure he had caught a glimpse of in the gloom of his chamber was hovering about him at this moment, lurking in some of the shadows or behind some of the pillars or projections in the apartment, ready to spring upon him the moment he might be alone. Lord Kingswood, satisfied with his silent acknowledgment, proceeded:

"It would be idle were I to attempt to deny that there is a shadow of truth in the old man's story, improbable as it may appear. I confess I have been startled by it, but its grievous effects have not ended there, nor are they likely, unless they are arrested in their progress. I see that I must have aid. You have fished and ferreted out this accursed tale; you have mixed yourself up with Mr. Gower's presence at Kingswood Hall; you saw the evident trouble it gave me and my wish to be relieved from such an incubus, and you promised to exert yourself to gratify my wish and effect his removal. His departure was accomplished by his own impetuous nature, and not by your contrivance, but he is still near me, to distract, to ruin, to destroy me. Pharisee, I must be rid of him; you have embarked in this matter, you must go on with it—you cannot halt now any more than I can. You have expressed and wished me to believe that your devotion to my service has no limit; I will prove it. But it is well that you should know the peril of your position. I hold your life in my hands, you must be my creature, my tool, my slave in all matters connected with this frightful complication. If you play me false, no earthly power shall rescue you from a fate I have designed for you. I have thought over events throughout the long night and the longer day, and I must be set free or fall. You must be my instrument, you shall help me to triumph, or you shall perish with me."

Pharisee heard him in silence, and a swarm of thoughts rushed through his brain, not of the past—relative to the events of the night he had passed with Pengreep—but of possibilities which should enable him to appear in the eyes of Lord Kingswood the mere creature of his will, but in reality the slow but sure architect of the schemes he had already planned. He glanced at Lord Kingswood's face, and saw that he was regarding him with a stern and savage expression, which for the moment made his heart sink within him, and he said, quickly, in a faint voice,

"I have hitherto been humbly devoted to your lordship, I am anxious to continue so during the time I may have the honor to serve your lordship, and whatever task your lordship may command me to perform I will endeavor, to the utmost of my poor ability, to execute. If I should, however, fail, from no lack of exertion——"

"You must not fail without well considering the price it entails," interrupted Lord Kingswood, sharply. "Failure will be destruction to me, and I will not suffer you to remain behind to yet more deeply blast my memory by your revelations of the service in which I have employed you."

"My lord, you alarm me!" exclaimed Pharisee, with a terror as much real as affected. "If I comprehend your position aright, you have [illegible] to fear beyond the exposure of an everyday story—a liaison with a young——"

"Peace, man! pollute not her memory by breathing indefinitely even a reflection upon her with your lips," interposed Lord Kingswood, with an impetuous burst of passion.

Then he rose up and paced the room, beating his brow with his clenched fist, exclaiming,

"God! this it is to have been unfaithful to myself—to my own honor."

Pharisee was stung by the implied scorn, but beyond a sudden grating of his teeth, which was neither audible nor perceptible to Lord Kingswood, he betrayed no sign that he heeded the taunt. He only said,

"My lord, in justice to myself, I must claim to be put in possession of some facts. I must know the ground upon which I am to work if I am to win a successful issue. I do not expect your lordship to be minute in your revelations to me, but I do expect your lordship to put me into possession of such facts that I may direct clearly my course, and, despite all difficulties in my path, wrest a triumph for you."

Lord Kingswood mused for a few minutes. It was evident a fierce struggle was taking place between his pride and the necessity of revealing to Pharisee sufficient of that history which had made Horace Vernon his bitter enemy. At length he confronted the valet, and said, in a husky voice, with rapid utterance,

"I was young, wild, when betrothed to Lady Kingswood, headstrong and untrammelled by control. Chance threw me into the society of a lady, young and beautiful, betrothed to another—he, that stern, pallid man you observed riding by the side of Mr. Gower in the park. A ceremony took place between us——"

"A marriage?" interposed Pharisee, in an eager tone.

Lord Kingswood's brow fell.

"No; it was a delusion, a sham," he replied, hastily. "A child was born. I parted from both. I heard afterwards that both were dead, and years passed, leaving this assertion uncontradicted. Lo! upon a certain day, this man—this Vernon—appears, with Gower at his elbow. 'It is your son,' he said, and left him—a festor in my peace, a canker in my domestic happiness, a withering blight upon my roof-tree. He, having brought him a grave into startling, damning life this boy, refuses to tell me whether she yet lives or not. In this maddening anxiety, you, like another foul spirit of evil, appear, and say to me that this boy is not my child, but that I shall find her in—O! distraction—the Wonder of Kingswood Chace!"

Pharisee uttered a sharp cry, as if his brain had been pierced by a point of steel.

A vision flashed before his eyes. A tall, thin, ancient man stood before him, with uplifted hands, grinned like a demon, while he howled in his ears the very words which Lord Kingswood had just spoken with such bitter emphasis.

Another instant, and it was gone again, and the incident was once more buried in his brain, to be exhumed he knew not when.

Lord Kingswood regarded him with gloomy surprise.

"Why that exclamation?" he said. "You brought me that story, accompanied by such particulars that it is impossible for me not to acknowledge that it borders on the truth. But, on the other hand, there is Gower, who bears so strong a resemblance to the Kingswoods, if not my son, who is he? Again, the mother, does she live yet? I must know—I must know. I will not live on thus. You must return to the man who drugged you—yet not befooled you—he must be bought, his knowledge of the facts extracted from him at any cost, and then prompt action. Mark me, Pharisee, I wish to return to the condition I occupied a few months since, before yon wretched boy was thrust upon me. He must be got rid of. I fear him—I fear him! A girl's claim upon me might be compounded, but there is ruin in his. Let him disappear—you understand—and I will do battle with all the rest. We are alone—it is the dead hour of the night—no living eye beholds us. I do not ask you to obey me—I command you at the peril of your own life to do this I have directed you to do, and if you hesitate, bungle, or fail, though it cost me the gibbet, as the last ignominy which can be thrust upon me on earth, I will crush your miserable life out of you as I would that of a worm—with my heel!"

The hand of Lord Kingswood was upon his neck, and his eye, with a fiery glare, was turned on his as he forced the last words through his teeth, so that Pharisee trembled with a fear that, half-frenzied, he would even now inflict upon him the fate he menaced. But Lord Kingswood released him, and said,

"Go, I shall see you again when you have extorted or purchased from the old person you have named every word of the secret he possesses; or, not succeeding in inducing him to be communicative to you, arrange an interview with him for me, and I will compel him to disgorge all he knows. To assist you I will for the present dispense with your attendance upon me, so that you may devote all your energies to the task imposed upon you by your own seeking. Before many days—nay, before many hours—the information I imperatively require must be mine. Go! You know the service required of you and the penalty attached to default. Go!"

Lord Kingswood waved his hand to the door of the study with an imperious gesture, and Pharisee, with his accustomed servile bow, glided to it without a word. Indeed, he was too overwhelmed to offer a remark. He was conscious that he had intruded himself into this private and painful business, and that he could offer no objection to the position in the matter which Lord Kingswood had assigned him. At present his brain was in a whirl, but he trusted to a few hours rest and self attention to reduce the chaotic seething to order, and to turn what now seemed menacing and adverse to him to his own advantage.

He closed Lord Kingswood's door, and as he moved away from it a soft hand—a woman's hand—clutched his wrist.

A cry escaped him. A voice instantly whispered in his ear—

"Not a sound for your life; follow me to the picture-gallery."

Conquering in some degree his perturbation, he obeyed the injunction. He was accustomed to obey—the hour of his resistance had not yet come. He marvelled who it was who had thus seized him. Some one of the household, no doubt—but who? As he could not remember what had fallen from him at his drunken interview with Lord Kingswood, as he could not recollect even how he got into Lord Kingswood's study from Pengreep's dreary-looking apartment, it floated across his mind that he had in some way committed himself; and here was another, besides Lord Kingswood, prepared, in the dead of night, to acquaint him with his sin of commission, and to exact tribute for it under a menace. He followed the dusky form before him, which he could but indistinctly see, and entered the picture-gallery, the figure not pausing until it reached a projection formed by two Corinthian pillars acting as a support to one portion of the superbly decorated roof. It glided behind them, and awaited Pharisee, who, filled with wonder and dread, followed close behind. From beneath the massive cloak which completely enveloped it the figure drew forth a small hand-lamp, and throwing back the hood which concealed its head, revealed to Pharisee's undisguised astonishment the features of Lady Kingswood.

He was about to utter an exclamation, when she raised her finger and whispered,

"Be cautious! Listen to me. You are playing me false, man——"

"I swear, Lady Kingswood——" interposed Pharisee, clasping his hands and addressing her.

"Silence!" she exclaimed, emphatically, though her voice was not raised above a murmur; "I sought you upon my return with Mr. Cyril from the Marquis of Chillingham's. I found you prostrated by drinking, rambling in your speech about a daughter you had discovered Lord Kingswood to possess. I was prevented questioning you, not alone by the illness of my son, which distressed me, but by the return of Lord Kingswood, with whom you had a long and exciting interview. That I know because Lord Kingswood took no rest; further, I know that in the morning he had an interview with Mr. Cyril, the result of which was at first thought to have killed him, but has since proved to have been a shock which deprived him of his senses only for a time. I cannot ask Cyril a question, he is too ill. I cannot command myself to ask of Lord Kingswood an explanation, for I should know and feel that he was not revealing to me the truth—it would be natural that he should not. As I cannot exist in this desponding state of mental agony, my mind oppressed by horrible conjectures of injury, I am compelled, having no other sources from whence to derive information or to approach the truth, to descend to this most humiliating course."

For a moment the proud woman pressed her hand over her eyes, while Pharisee started at her last words as though a serpent had stung him.

"The humiliation, haughty being, is yet to come," he thought.

Removing with a sudden dash her hand from her eyes, she knitted her brows and compressed her lips, showing that her desire to become mistress of Lord Kingswood's laisity to herself mastered every other consideration.

"Reveal to me what you last night disclosed to Lord Kingswood—what this night has transpired between you!" she exclaimed.

"Lady Kingswood," he murmured, in a tone which jarred offensively on her ears, "you know my extreme devotion to you. No created member of your sex but yourself ever raised up in my breast emotions which urge me to become to you the veriest slave. Your wish, your word, your look—is my law. Yet pardon me, though there is much to reveal to you, it is yet too early. I am about at once to proceed to make certain discoveries which, as soon as they are mine, shall be yours. If your ladyship would only therefore condescend to wait——"

"I cannot, I will not wait!" she exclaimed, passionately. "Villain, if you torture me more by this mode of concealment, I will drag you back by the throat to Lord Kingswood, and, confronting you, compel you to disclose to me what has transpired between you."

"On my knees I implore you to have prudence," exclaimed Pharisee, horrified beyond measure at the excitement she betrayed, and the loudness of the tone in which she spoke.

She glared down upon him sternly, even fiercely.

"I will be trifled with no longer!" she cried, excitedly. "I cannot bear this frightful incertitude. I can be calm under a knowledge of my wrong. I shall know the worst, and can then determine my revenge, but this state of unsatisfied suspicion drives me to frenzy. I want to but know that I am wronged, the atrocious details you can leave to another time. Speak."

In an instant Pharisee detected the power she was about to place in his hands. He knew by her aspect, as by her words, how greatly she would value the information he could give her, and he resolved that he would himself estimate it at a high price, and he determined to make the most of his advantage.

"Lady Kingswood," he responded, in a crafty, insinuating tone, "for myself I would not care though you tore open my breast and wrenched out my heart, so that yours was the hand that performed the deed. I will tell you all I know, but pray consider——"

"I have considered!" she cried, impatiently. "Proceed."

"I am, my lady, betraying Lord Kingswood's dearest secret," he rejoined; "I am exposing myself to a fearful penalty for my treachery to him——"

"But I have told you you shall be rewarded beyond your utmost hopes for your faithfulness to me," she interrupted, with a vexed manner. "Let me have no more of this sickening hesitation. I have told you, man, I cannot bear it."

"Well, then, my lady, as my devotion for you will lead me to any self-sacrifice, even to death itself," he returned, in the same fawning, soft, pleading tone which was so distasteful to her as to make her secretly shudder: "I will tell you all that you will for the present require to know. I will hereafter furnish you with the proofs; but until you have them, I pray you will be as silent as the grave upon my communication, especially to Lord Kingswood."

"I will," she answered, laconically, but firmly.

"Lady Kingswood," rejoined Pharisee, speaking quickly, but in a frightful whisper, "while Lord Kingswood was wooing your ladyship he met with a young and beautiful creature—there was a marriage—and a child."

"Almighty Heaven, support me!" gasped Lady Kingswood, and staggering, would have fallen, but Pharisee sprang to his feet, and caught her in his arms.

In his arms, alone, and in the dead hour of the night.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

> Not oft to smile descended he,
> And when he doth 'tis sad to see
> That he but mocks at misery.
> How that pale lip will curl and quiver!
> Then fix once more as if for ever;
> As if his sorrow or disdain
> Forbade him ever smile again.
> Well were it so—such ghastly mirth
> From joyaunce ne'er derived its birth.
> But sadder still it were to trace
> What once were feelings in that face.
> Time hath not yet the features fix'd,
> But brighter traits with evil mix'd.
> * * * * *
> A noble soul and lineage high:
> Alas, though both bestowed in vain,
> Which grief could change.—The Giaour.

Beatrice Stanhope inherited from her father a certain amount of skill in finesse, and she exercised it in the conversation into which she at once entered with Violet on being introduced to her. She had a double object to effect. She was anxious to ascertain for her father what relationship existed between Erle Gower and Lord Kingswood; and for her own part, she was exceedingly inquisitive to know who and what he really was.

She was desirous, too, to learn more about Violet. She was surprised and perplexed by her introduction. She had been taught to believe that there was much virtue in a name, notwithstanding the Immortal Bard's startling query, and she did not quite like her present young and fair companion being presented to her only under a Christian name. Still there was a bearing so distinguished in both Erle and his companion, and such an unexceptionable elegance in Violet's manner as well as appearance, that she could not doubt their true position, and though once or twice the mystery attached to both crossed her with an unpleasant jar on those impressions to which she had been schooled, she suffered the more genuine feelings to prevail.

She found herself foiled in her efforts to extract from Violet the remotest clue to the information she sought, and was at once amused and interested by the amazed look which the sweet face and gentle eyes of Violet expressed when she put to her a question, constructed so as to yield her something towards what she desired to glean.

She was charmed, too, by the strange melody of her voice, as by the attractive simplicity of her observations, rarely offered, it is true, but so naïve and unaffected, that, accustomed as Beatrice was to the society of the young and fair of the high order, they were quite refreshing.

Ishmael, though riding and conversing with the Marquis of Chillingham, watched them closely, as he minutely observed Beatrice and Erle in their recent colloquy. As his deep-hued, thoughtful eye rested on the face of Violet, and it noted the brightening of her features and the faint tinge of crimson upon her hitherto pallid cheek, his lip curled.

"The taint of Eve is ineradicable," he muttered. "Woman's sorrow is as transient as her love. In her youth her heart is, when it should be unswerving in its integrity, as invariable as a spring sky, now showers, now sunshine—tears and smiles. Bending one moment beneath a seeming killing grief, and while the dewdrops yet quiver and glisten upon the cheek, a burst of sunshine lights up the countenance, and all is beaming joy once more. Is it the curse upon the sex that it should be thus fickle—that it should be like the purple-hued plant, enchanting to the eye, but a bitter and a fatal poison to the lip? This child of nature, an hour since all wan and sorrowful, revives under the gleaming of many eyes and the light prattle of a new found friend. Such is the nature of them all. I have been a fool. I looked for a diamond, and believed I had found it. I tested it by the flame of pure love, and it became ashes."

The Marquis of Chillingham, like Beatrice, endeavored to ascertain in what relation one so young and singularly beautiful as Violet stood to his old college friend, Horace Vernon, but for certain private reasons of his own, likewise in order to gratify the morbid but not unnatural curiosity of Lady Kingswood with regard to Eric, he was desirous of worming out the real history of the latter.

What emotions the unusual beauty of Violet raised in the marquis's breast he alone knew. Occasionally, when certain that he was not observed, his eye glanced over rather than examined her features, but with his usual imperturbability, the effect they had upon him he by no sign betrayed.

"I must carve out an hour, Vernon," he said, when he found that Ishmael met the few suggestions he proffered respecting Violet with coldly evasive answers, "to renew some of those pleasant scenes and happy hours we have passed together in the very brightest period of our youth. I have not forgotten those events, most dear to my recollections, any more than I have the inestimable obligations I have been and still am—for they can never be repaid—under to you. I should like once more to recall them with you to prove that, amid all the changeful scenes of my life, the bitternesses, the toils, the embroilments, and the many cares of years of political strife, they have flourished green and blooming where you would hardly suppose I had the smallest space for the purely sentimental—the poetry of human nature."

A sardonic smile for a moment lighted up the pale features of Ishmael.

"I would not recall those scenes, those events," he said, in a tone of acerbity. "I have no green spots in my memory now."

"Nay," objected the marquis, "I will not hear you say so. I have no very elevated notion of human nature, I promise you. I have had sufficient insight with the spoils of office in my gift, to sicken at the bare thought of sincerity, truthfulness and nobility of soul. Yet I have, perhaps, by the force of contrast a more vivid recollection of some past circumstances which glow the brighter, grow the greener, because of the scorn I feel for a very significant portion of my own kind. You may have been deceived, betrayed—like too many of us, have reaped the basest ingratitude for the golden grains of generous service sown by you; but Horace, man, the times and scenes I speak of are pure and unblighted still, and may well be looked back to with a keener appreciation of their worth, a more joyful recognition of their blossoming, for they are imperishable flowers blooming upon an otherwise barren soil."

"More like the ignis fatuus gleaming over a slewing morass," rejoined Ishmael. "Intangible, treacherous lures. I tell you, Chillingham, they are withered twigs, they are perished flowers, nothing but dead leaves, to prove to us what fools we have been. Green spots of the memory! they are grave mounds to mark where our brightest aspirations, our purest purposes, our unsullied and unsullying resolves and our generous designs are buried. Let us not revive the past, I pray you; to me it would be a progress from an ice-region into an atmosphere of flame."

"I must see you, misanthrope though you be," rejoined the Marquis of Chillingham. "You were not always a Timon, and I do not believe you are now, or I should not see you thus exercising a careful guardianship over two young people who are favored with a carriage—a mien—certainly unusually distinguished."

"You are welcome to your surmise, my lord marquis," returned Ishmael, coldly.

"Tut, tut, tut, Horace, you protest a little too much, I fear. Do as I do. I make the world my slave—I do not suffer myself to be the world's slave," rejoined the marquis. "I expect nothing, and I obtain a very satisfactory return. Come, Vernon, admit, if even disappointed in your hopes, you have yet a very full return in the loving companionship of these two charming people."

"Even in this supposition, my lord marquis, you err," responded Ishmael, with a scornful smile. "I have been a benefactor to both; the one shrinks from me with fear, the other regards me with a haughty, defiant spirit, instinctively believes me to be an enemy, and displays the most fiery impatience at my attempted control."

"The maiden shrinks from you because you ever stand before her like the grim giant of the Hartz Mountains, and the other, because you direct and command like a feudal lord rather than a tender father," rejoined the marquis.

There was a silence for a minute. The brow of Ishmael fell, but it was evident, from a slight changing expression of his features, that the observation of the marquis had somewhat moved him.

Presently the marquis, bending towards him, whispered,

"I can take a liberty with you, Horace: that would be a tolerated question from me which would be unpardonable insolence from another. Tell me if you will—I admit that I am very anxious to know how you came to be in possession of—of——"

He hesitated.

"Of what, my lord?" asked Ishmael, with some surprise on his features.

"THE FAMILY SECRET OF LORD KINGSWOOD," added the marquis emphatically.

The dark eyes of Ishmael gleamed, a smile moved his lips, even though his teeth were closed firmly together. Conscious, however, that the marquis's eyes were on his face, he composed his features to a calm, rigid expression.

"What may that secret be, my lord?" he asked.

"Absurd in you to put that question to me, Horace," rejoined the marquis.

"Wherefore, my Lord of Chillingham?" interrogated Ishmael.

"Why, you have him here, immediately before us, riding with the young ladies, Stanhope's daughter and your fair incognita," responded the marquis, pointing to Eric.

Ishmael raised his eyes to those of the marquis.

"How knew you that he was a secret of Lord Kingswood's?" he inquired, a little hastily.

"Kingswood told me so himself," replied the marquis.

"Ha! When?" rejoined Ishmael, eagerly.

"Oh, at Kingswood Hall," answered the marquis, readily. "My opportunities with you have been so few that I have not been able to put a question to you. I met Mr —Mr —Gower—I think Lady Kiegswood called him—at Kingswood's seat, whence he takes his title. The youth excited a great deal of notice, and in fact executed a dashing feat of horsemanship in the rescue of young Lady St. Clair. Oh, I assure you he is by no means unknown personally to me. I was amazed to meet him at my house the other night, and equally astonished to find him in your custody instead of that of Lord Kingswood. There seems a great deal of mystery, and there was, I know, a vast deal of uneasiness about him at Kingswood Hall. I am usually unaffected by these sort of things, but I must admit, in this matter, I am curious. The young man is wonderfully like Kingswood too. Like enough to be his son. Yet I have known Kiegswood since his marriage, and I am sure he cannot be his son——"

"Indeed!" ejaculated Ishmael, with emphasis.

"That is by marriage," hastily subjoined the marquis, "because he was not married before he wedded the present Lady Kingswood."

"Indeed!" again exclaimed Ishmael.

The marquis stared at him.

"By Heaven, Vernon, what do you insinuate?" he cried.

"Nothing," responded Ishmael, coldly.

"Nay, it appears to me that you do," persisted the marquis. "There can be no doubt about the extraordinary resemblance between yonder boy and Kingswood. You, I believe, know why. Would you have me credit that he is the offspring of a marriage prior to that with Lady Kingswood, and that she, the proud, haughty daughter of the——"

"Believe, my lord marquis, whatever may be congenial to your experience, your suspicions, or the wildest flights of your fancy," interposed Ishmael. "I bid you infer, surmise, believe nothing."

"But you know and can give me the information if you feel a disposition to reveal it to me," urged Lord Chillingham. "I have a peculiar and an urgent reason for becoming acquainted with his parentage, and you would add to those inestimable favors of which I have already spoken if you would even give me a clue to the facts, and leave the rest to me."

A smile curled the lip of Ishmael—a cold, scornful smile.

"Though your manner is chilling and reserved, my lord marquis, your imagination is fertile," he answered; "exercise it, it may help you to the truth. Yon boy is Lord Kingswood's family secret; so let him remain for the present. A day will come, not far distant, when that secret will be proclaimed in a manner which will set at rest for ever all doubts or speculations; until that hour your lordship must excuse my reticence upon the subject."

There was a firm determination in the tone of Ishmael, that admitted of no further remark; and the marquis having utterly failed in his object, shortly after pleaded official business, and galloped away—not, however, until he had fastened his eyes with an earnest, scrutinising gaze upon Violet's wondrously beautiful face.

A face and form which still attracted crowds of admiring followers, and extorted the never-ending query, "Who is she?" which no one appeared to be able to answer.

The ride was, after the departure of the Marquis of Chillingham, brought to a termination. Beatrice, who had been joined by her brother Carlton, took her leave of Violet with a profession of tenderness and friendliness which seemed to cause the latter some wonder; while Carlton, who had not had an opportunity of speaking two words to Violet, though he was prepared to have rattled off a thousand, did not disguise that it was a source of vexation to him to part thus abruptly with one who appeared to have turned the heads of scores of young, flashing fellows like himself, and would his if he had not fancied that it was already more than half-turned by Lady Maud St. Clair.

The same strange, savage smile rested on the features of Ishmael, while he watched the separation, as had moved them when he spake of Eric to the Marquis of Chillingham. And that night as he sat alone with Eric, who was apparently deeply engaged in reading, but in reality thinking of the old library at Kiegswood, and how he could contrive to revisit it, he said to him:

"You were the guest of Sir Harris Stanhope's son. It would be well that you invite him here; and as his sister already has formed an acquaintance with Violet, and would not be a companion for her lonely hours of whom I should disapprove, include her in the invitation. You may add that, in your desire to respond to his kind reception of you on your arrival in London, in a similar spirit you will, on their first visit here, receive them as old and valued friends, without other guests to interfere with the attention you are desirous of paying to them."

Eric looked upon these instructions with some quiet, inward marvel. They did not square with the rigid seclusion in which himself and Violet had been as yet kept by Ishmael in the large and costly mansion in which they now dwelt, but he had nothing to offer in the way of objection, so he at once complied with the request.

In fact, he was rather glad of repaying the obligation he was under to Carlton, and he liked the society of Beatrice. She was always engaging in her manner, and she yielded a deference to his opinion, and, in fact, to him in all things a complaisance which is especially agreeable and flattering to the male sex in general, when offered by a handsome girl, and was to Eric in particular.

The invitation was despatched, accepted, and a quiet but pleasant evening was passed. Beatrice played and sang brilliantly, and Violet sat gazing earnestly at her fingers as they swept over the keys of the piano, and listening to her unweariedly, the more patiently and pleasedly because Beatrice, feeling in a sentimental mood, sang some plaintive love-ballads with touching earnestness and excellent taste.

Carlton was rather perplexed by the conduct of Violet. He was certainly greatly attracted and fascinated by her face, he was susceptible to the charms of exquisitely-formed features, and as he gazed on the countenance of Violet, so instinct with innocent sweetness, he found himself forgetting Lady Maud and growing gradually enraptured; but though he exerted himself to create a sensation, he found that he did not accomplish a successful result.

Violet listened to his rattle and his laughing badinage with the air of one who did not comprehend the language in which he spoke, and in truth rather shrank from him, which a little amazed him. He, however, only redoubled his attention, in order to maintain a character he believed himself to possess, that of being rather a favorite with the fair—that is, pretty sex.

Ishmael was present during the whole of the evening, but both Violet and Eric were surprised to find him play a part to Beatrice and Carlton which was new to them. Nothing transpired during the evening to mar the equanimity which prevailed, and they all parted, apparently mutually gratified.

Sir Harris Stanhope, who yet hung back from the arranged interview between himself and Lord Kingswood, was quite elated at the opportunity thus thrown in his way, as it were, of obtaining the information he wished. He never expected to make anything important of Carlton. He was too thoughtless and heedless ever to make a diplomatist. He invariably spoke before he thought, yet he occasionally profited from this very foible; because, by Carlton's frankness, he sometimes elicited facts which he desired to become master of, and Carlton readily revealed them when questioned.

Beatrice, on the contrary, he could place more reliance upon. He knew she seldom spoke without thinking, and without asking or troubling himself to ascertain what plan she adopted to secure intelligence he was anxious to possess, he generally received it from her when he instructed her to obtain it. He, therefore, finding himself yet unfurnished with the details of Eric Gower's history, no sooner learned from Beatrice that herself and Carlton had been pressed to visit Violet and Eric again—pressed by Vernon himself—strangely enough deluded himself with a fancy that Vernon had forgotten him, and he therefore commanded rather than urged them to accept the invitation, and to repeat their visits, if only in the shape of calls again and again.

Beatrice wanted no urging, nor for that matter, did Carlton, for he was piqued by Violet's manner towards him—not that she was cold, but that she was indifferent. He could make no impression upon her. He knew, he felt, that he might as well have been absent as present, so far as any influence his society created in her mind was concerned. Therefore, true to the perverseness of human nature, he, when in her society, redoubled his attentions to her.

They met again and again. Ishmael was careful they should not be joined by other companions at present. That was an arrangement to be carried out hereafter.

One night, as they all four sat together, he, in a retired part of the room, apparently reading a book, attentively watched them. Violet, in deep thought, was seated by Carlton's side, he pouring low, earnest sentences into her ears, not one word of which she heard. Eric, too, was abstracted, so profoundly wrapped in meditation, indeed, he was wholly unconscious that Beatrice had called his attention to an exquisitely executed drawing which represented a youth and maiden standing upon a balcony together, gazing at the moon, even as they had once stood together, when he developed his knowledge of astronomy, instead of talking sentiment, as she thought he ought to have done. Perceiving that his attention had been carried away by some—she knew not how deep—memories, she suffered her dark, earnest eyes to rest with an intent gaze upon his young, handsome, noble features.

It was at this juncture that Ishmael said to himself, with the old, savage, relentless smile,

"Thus shall it be. Stanhope played the villain to her and to me. Through his infernal, heartless agencies, both these instruments of my insatiable vengeance have had their young lives embittered and their happiness possibly blighted. Yon girl is heart-stricken by the attractions of Eric. I see that her soul already is transferred to him; she loves him with all the deep and fiery passion of such a nature as hers. If woman's heart can break for disappointment in love, hers shall, for she shall never have him, even though Eric has more than hinted that he loves her. And for this cub of Stanhope's, why, aye, let him plunge himself the whole depth of his future happiness—as I have done—in an absorbing love. He may, he will, he must, for Violet's is a beauty which would enslave a nobler nature—one less susceptible to woman's fascination than his. They shall both have latitude until they are utterly enmeshed—then away with the objects of their passion; they shall meet no more. Let them droop, pine, wither through their despairing unhappiness. I will wreak my vengeance upon the paltry caitiff, their father—Sir Harris Stanhope—who aided, from the worst of motives, to wreck my peace on earth for ever!"

(To be continued.)

HARRIS'S PATENT SIFTING MACHINE.

EVERY contrivance which tends to lessen manual labor and promote economy and cleanliness is a boon bestowed upon society. The smallest inventions are by no means the least useful; on the contrary, they, as a general thing, reach and benefit a large class in every community. Among the smaller social inventions may be classed "Harris's Patent Sifting Machine." It is of the utmost simplicity, and is not at all liable to get out of order. Its construction will be readily perceived by examining our illustration. When that which is to be sifted is placed in the upper sieve, the lid is closed down so that not a particle of dust can escape. By turning the outside crank, the sieve is put into rapid motion, and its contents are quickly and most thoroughly sifted.

It is not only invaluable in every household, but in many trades its use is now becoming general. For instance it is constantly used by druggists, chemists, confectioners, bakers, agricultural stores, spice and coffee grinders, tobacco and snuff manufacturers, marbleworks, ironfounders, typefounders, manufactories, hotels, &c., &c. The testimonials to the merit of Harris's Sifting Machine are numerous and most flattering. Among those who use it—and their name is legion—we may mention Rushton & Clark, A. B. & D. Sands, J. C. Ayer, Preston & Merrill, James R. Chilton, Bowers & Whiteman, John Taylor, W. H. Weller, Ruggles, Nourse & Mason, C. W. Randolph, Fessenden & Whitemore, E. E. Dyer & Co., E. Treadwell & Sons, John Anderson & Co., Lorillard, Lilienthal, C. Brewer & Son, N. Sherwood, Steam Marble Works, John Baird & Co., Allaire Works, R. Hoe & Co., Fulton Iron Foundry, Miles Greenwood, Richard Norris & Son, S. H. Rawson & Co., Morgan Works, James Connor & Sons, Colonel Samuel Colt, Sharpe's Rifles, Girard House, Astor, Metropolitan, Tremont, Eutaw, and a host of other business places and hotels quite impossible to mention.

The immense patronage it has received and continues to receive is the most convincing proof of its great and practical utility. It is manufactured by the inventor, Samuel Harris, in Springfield, Massachusetts, where all orders will be supplied. The agents in New York are Stevens, Brothers & Co., 222 Pearl street.

A FRIEND was staying with a Welsh parson, and heard him preach in the afternoon.

"By Jove," said he, "there was good in your sermon. I didn't think you—ahem!"

"It would be odd if there was not," said the preacher, "it was one of Bishop Butler's."

"Bishop Butler's, was it? Well, now, you surprise me. I have read Dr. Butler's sermons, and I did not recognise it."

"Oh," says the other, "you don't know how I manage. I have two services—one in Welsh, one in English. Well, I translate his sermons into Welsh, to begin with, and thus I am safe; my Welsh flock don't read Butler. Then I take my Welsh and translate it into English, and after that the old boy himself would not know them again."

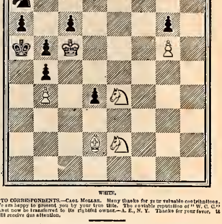
REMEDY FOR DIPHTHERIA.—Dr. Benedict, of New Orleans, who has used the following recipe for a year in the treatment of diphtheria, has never lost a case: "Gargle or wash the inside of the throat frequently with a teaspoonful of tincture of black cohosh diluted with a little water. Commence using it on the first symptoms of soreness or inflammation. It does not burn or cauterize, but soothes and relieves the irritation. Do not swallow, as it would nauseate. Continue the use once in two hours until relieved. The tincture can be had at any drug store."

CHESS.

All communications for the Chess Department should be addressed to T. Frère, Chess Editor, Home Life Insurance Co., 16 Wall St., N. Y.

PROBLEM NO. 288.—By CARL MOLLER (W. C. C.), New York.
White to play and checkmate in four moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—CARL MOLLER. Many thanks for your valuable contributions. We are happy to present you by your true title. The enviable reputation of "W. C. C." must now be transferred to its rightful owner.—A. E., N. Y. Thanks for your favor, it will receive due attention.

One of the match games played between Messrs. KOLISCH and MEDLEY.

WHITE. Mr. K.	BLACK. Mr. M.	WHITE. Mr. K.	BLACK. Mr. M.
1 P to K 4	P to K 4	14 Kt to K 4	B to K 2
2 Kt to K B 3	Kt to Q B 3	15 P tks P	B tks P
3 P to Q B 3	P to Q 4 (a)	16 P to K B 3	B to Q (d)
4 Q to R 4 (b)	B to Q 2 (c)	17 Castles Q's R	B tks Kt
5 P tks P	Kt to Q 5	18 Q P tks B	R to Q 3
6 Q to Q	Kt tks Kt (ch)	19 R to Q 3	Kt to K 2
7 Q tks Kt	K B to Q 3	20 K R to Q	K R to Kt
8 B to B 4	K B to B 4	21 P to K Kt 3	R to Kt 4
9 P to Q 3	Q to K 2	22 B tks P	R to B 3
10 B to K Kt 3	P to Q B 3	23 R tks R	R tks R
11 Kt to Q 2	P to K B 3	24 B to Q 5	P to Kt 3
12 B tks Kt	Q tks B	25 B to B 6, and wins.
13 Q tks Q	P tks Q

(a) The only correct defence here is Kt to K B 3.
(b) The best counter move.
(c) A bad move, which unnecessarily sacrifices a Pawn.
(d) This game was so badly opened by Black, that it was lost in effect from the beginning White having now a Pawn plus, and a safe position.

OUR BILLIARD COLUMN.

Edited by Michael Phelan.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—All questions sent to Mr. Phelan in reference to the rules of the game of billiards will in future be answered in this column. It would be too much labor to send written answers to so many correspondents.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

E. E. A., Milan, Erie county, O.—It does count against him.

P. D., Burlington, N. J.—No.

THE WORLD OF BILLIARDS.

HISTORICAL ROMANCE AND REALITY OF BILLIARDS.—In an interesting article on French billiards, prepared expressly for the Billiard Cue, by a distinguished amateur, who has devoted much of his leisure to the science and history of billiards, we find the following real romance of billiard history: "France has produced many distinguished professors of billiards, and some of her most celebrated men have been great proficients in the game. Louis XIV., the Grand Monarque, 'whose glance produced poets,' was an inveterate and enthusiastic billiard player, and the game was, consequently, the favorite pastime of his court. M. de Chamillart, Louis's Minister of Finance, owed his first recognition by the great Louis to his admirable skill at billiards. Chamillart was a Parisian lawyer of great talents and incorruptible integrity. The only recreation which he allowed himself from his arduous studies and labors was an occasional hour's play with a brother lawyer and friend on a table which he had purchased and placed in a room in his house. By daily practice he insensibly reached a wonderful degree of proficiency. A nobleman of the court having accidentally seen him play spoke of him to the King, who was then full of billiard-ardor, and especially desirous of 'taking down' some of his courtiers who were rather too proud of their game. A court carriage was sent for Chamillart, and he played with the King against two of the noblemen who thought themselves 'some on billiards.' Their pride was taken down by Chamillart, to the intense delight of the King, who immediately presented him with a thousand louis, promising to double the sum if Chamillart could effect a carom when the three balls were placed in a straight line, which the lawyer did, and pocketed his money. Apartments were prepared for him in the royal residence, and the King was to be seen frequently walking through the gardens, leaning on his friend Chamillart, and consulting him on state affairs, for he discovered that Chamillart possessed the science of government as well as the science of billiards. The billiard-player had also other qualities, rare among Louis's courtiers—he was temperate, virtuous and honest, and hesitated not to tell the King the truth on all matters in which he was consulted. The King subsequently appointed him Minister of Finance, a post which he filled with scrupulous integrity and marked ability, economising everywhere and reducing the state debt. In his post of power he did not forget his old billiard-playing friend and brother lawyer, but had him appointed to a judgeship, and the friendship between them was still more strongly cemented by the marriage of the judge's son to Chamillart's daughter, the former receiving a title and commission in the army from the King, and his bride a generous dowry from the same royal source."

BILLIARDS IN MICHIGAN.—The billiard amateurs of Batavia and Leroy had a trial of strength, lately, at the latter town, which resulted in the triumph of the Leroy gentlemen. The parties are to have another trial very soon, when the Batavians hope to win.

THE AMATEUR TOURNAMENT AT PHELAN'S.—The interest created by this affair continues to increase, and in consideration of that fact, the donors of the prize-table have concluded to offer one more elaborate and valuable, the one originally intended for the prize being a $500, but that now offered being worth $700. It is richly inlaid, and artistically finished in every detail. The bulletin of runs in the various games, up to the 18th March, stood thus:

Around the table	86
Four ball carom	95
Three ball French	20
Carom pool	838

The table is now on exhibition at the rooms, and gentlemen have the satisfaction of seeing what they are "running" after.

A YOUNG aspirant for billiard honors, Mr. Goldthwaite, of Troy, N. Y., had an opportunity of measuring his progress on Friday afternoon at Phelan's Rooms. Mr. Phelan played some discount games with the youthful Trojan, the latter winning three out of seven; the former, four. Mr. G. is a promising young player, and, after a few years' more practice, may be able to compete with some of our best players.

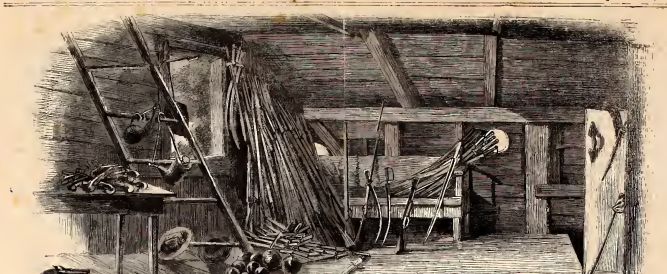
M. BERGER.—This distinguished artist still remains in New Orleans, giving public and private exhibitions and lessons to students of the game. His great talents are evidently appreciated in the most flattering quarters, as we learn that, at a private exhibition, given at the private mansion of Mr. Richard Hill, he was presented with a gold-mounted cue, valued at $500, and subscribed for by the ladies.

We were rather astounded by an announcement in some of our cotemporaries, purporting to be an extract from one M. Berger's programmes, stating that that gentleman would "jump in a hat, on the bands, and will fall on the billiard and carom. He will go through a paper circle and carom on the table." The sudden change of the great French artist's exhibitions to performances a la Hanlon, a talent which we were unaware that he possessed, we confess, rather staggered us. We have heard of Barnum's India-Rubber Man putting himself in a wine-box, but how M. Berger, even if he were India-rubber, could get himself into any sort of a hat that entered into the mind of man to conceive, far less to manufacture, we could not conceive. The idea of his getting on the hat-bands was still more staggering. But M. Berger's falling on the table frightened us both for his own safety and that of the table; for if M. Berger performed that feat very often, he would give a wonderful impetus to the manufacture of billiard-tables. Our amazement was cured, however, by the reflection that it was the French-English of some friend, whose zeal, not being according to knowledge, made M. Berger himself do these deeds instead of the balls, over which he possesses such a magical control. We doubt that he could fulfil the conditions of the programme himself, for he is no light weight, but we know that he can make the balls do it or anything else he likes to make them do.

A POPULAR IDEA.—The idea of admitting the general public at so much a head to witness the great professional tournament, announced to take place in June next, meets with great favor among all classes of our citizens who take an interest in billiards. We have conversed on the subject with numbers of amateurs, who expressed their satisfaction and that of all their friends at this arrangement, and declared they would guarantee that the excess of the proceeds, after paying expenses of hall, &c., would not only be sufficient to cover all the travelling and personal expenses of the players, but insure a handsome surplus to be disposed of as the players themselves may decide.

MESSRS. KAVANAGH AND GEARY'S EXHIBITION TOUR.—These gentlemen commence the exhibition tour, which we announced their intention of making in our last, in Brooklyn on Friday evening, at Montague Hall, on which occasion Mr. Phelan will be present and assist. A report of the proceedings will be published in our next.

Eleven shot, made by J. Vermeulen Detroit Mich.



THE HOUSE OF NICHOLAS VEEDER, IN SCHOTA, OPPOSITE SCHENECTADY, N. Y. WHICH HE HAS OCCUPIED FOR OVER SEVENTY YEARS.

NICHOLAS VEEDER, ONE OF THE REVOLUTIONARY HEROES.

Now in His Hundredth Year.

In a late number we gave the portrait and house of old Ralph Farnham, whose recent decease is fresh in the public mind. We have now to introduce pictorially to our readers another of that fast-old race, Nicholas Veeder, whose history is scarcely less interesting than that of old Ralph.

Nicholas Veeder was born at a place then known as the Hook, but what is now called Rensselin, New York State, on the Mohawk River, opposite Schenectady. He commenced his military career as a militia man in 1776, under Captain Van Guisling, in Colonel Wemple's regiment, and was personally engaged in the battle of Beaver Dam, when the American forces were attacked by the Tories. He was then present at the capture of Butler, the famous Indian chief.

In 1777 his regiment was ordered to join the army under General Gates, then encamped at Half Moon Sprouts, Saratoga county, but while they were on their march they heard of General Burgoyne's surrender, and they fell in with a large number of his army as prisoners of war, then en route for Albany.

In his next service to his country was at Caughnawaghe and Canajoharie, when the Tories, aided by a large body of Indians, attempted to burn those places.

When the war was over he settled in the very building he now occupies, and which is situated in Scioto, opposite Schenectady. This house was built in 1745, and was a kind of stockade fort. The wall is formed of stone, and the upper portion of wood. We have given an exact picture of this remarkable building, which remains with very little alteration as it was a century ago. The upper portion, or loft, which we also illustrate, has been converted by this fine old soldier into a kind of armory, and contains many interesting relics of the revolutionary struggle, such as village-made swords, army sabres, blunderbusses, muskets, &c. There is also a most curious old powder horn.

He married soon after his settlement here, but his wife has been dead many years. Two sons alone survive of his family.

His portrait is from a photograph by Mr. Shaw, of Schenectady, and was taken last June.

He enjoys excellent health, and, like all old soldiers, is fond of talking over the great and stirring events in which he was an actor.

He was born in December, 1761, and is consequently in his hundredth year.

NICHOLAS VEEDER, A SOLDIER OF THE REVOLUTION, NOW IN HIS HUNDREDTH YEAR. PHOTOGRAPHED BY SHAW, SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

VIEW IN CINCINNATI, OHIO

Fourth Street, east of Vine Street.

FOURTH street has long been the fashionable thoroughfare of Cincinnati, but it is not more than five years since the magnificent buildings represented in our engraving were erected. The business part of the street before that date was east of Walnut, the Post-office being on the corner of Sycamore, but with the removal of the Post-office to its present site on the corner of Vine street, and the erection of these elegant structures, the most fashionable and successful business houses fixed their location in this vicinity. The corner building, opposite the Post-office (of which we introduce a partial view), is occupied in the two lower stories by that prince of tailors, T. W. Sparge, the only man in the West who approaches New York clothiers in extent of his business and elegance of his workmanship. Mr. Sprague came to Cincinnati in 1850, without capital, and by his untiring industry, affable manners and foresight has achieved a most brilliant success. His ready-made clothing is manufactured by N. Perry & Co., at Newark, N. J., the custom work in Cincinnati. The manufacturing firm, who are partners of Sprague, possess every facility for for extensive and diversified operations, and import their own French and English cloth, and with their present experience are constantly in the lead in fashion and material. This establishment may be considered one of the lions of the city, and proves certainly a great blessing to those who arrive in the Queen City a little outré in the exterior symbols of the gentleman.

The upper part of this magnificent building is occupied by the Queen City Commercial College. Founded in February, 1860, with Richard Nelson, J. M. Walters and A. Milner, men of fame and experience in mercantile education, practical business and penmanship, at the head of the faculty, it was enabled to enlist such men as Miles Greenwood, Gen. Cleary, Rev. Dr. Wise, Dr. Vattier and Judge Fildes as Directors, and found its way at once into public favor and confidence. A Board of Examiners, consisting of twelve gentlemen, members of leading mercantile and manufacturing houses, has the exclusive power of awarding the diploma of the College. Our visit of inspection to the large, well-lighted and well-filled rooms of this institution, gave us an increased appreciation of the wealth, intelligence and influence of the Great West. The students in this College, though mostly from the Queen City, number amongst them young men from the Southern and Western States, even including Texas, California and the Canadas. The capability of the Professors and thoroughness of instruction have made the present and insure the future success of the College.

The next large building is the well-known Pike's Opera House, the largest and most elegant theatre in the West. Until now the success of the opera has not been adequate to the capital invested; but the rapidly increasing wealth and taste of Cincinnatus cannot fail to uphold the enterprise and encourage its liberal originator to further efforts. On the first of the month, before the first story of this palace, we find Wheeler & Wilson's Sewing Machine Company represented by William Sumner & Co., who have fitted up an establishment which outstrips in size and elegance any sewing machine sales-room in the world—six hundred yards of carpet being required to cover the floor of the room. William Sumner & Co. having the sole right to supply the territory from Pittsburg to St. Louis, have sub-agencies in all the principal towns of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky. Of all the machines made by Wheeler & Wilson last year, one-sixth were sold by the Cincinnati agency; and, in order to save the expense of freights, it became necessary to have the bonnet parts of the machines manufactured in Cincinnati, and they have now a large factory in full operation.

In one year Wheeler & Wilson sold twenty one thousand three hundred and five machines, being double the sales of any other company; and, as the economy of their use is becoming daily more known, the demand is increasing. All honor to the man who invented the sewing machine, and to those who, with unprecedented energy, make his invention attainable to all classes of society and in every part of the world.

Next door, occupying a store room of equal size, with the addition of a basement under the whole, we find the most elegant and complete book-store in the West, owned by Messrs. Rickey, Mallory & Co. Besides a complete assortment of standard medical and law books, their shelves contain all the requirements for private libraries and for the extensive Western trade. The collection of paintings, formerly belonging to the Western Art Union, together with their stock of rare and expensive illustrated works, give a great attraction to this establishment and make it a favorite rendezvous for artists and literary gentlemen. Messrs. Rickey, Mallory & Co. are very popular in the West, and supply an immense territory; their retail department is furnished in exquisite taste, and is altogether the finest establishment of the kind in the West.

In the same square with the fashionable clothier, the gentleman will be able to procure another requisite of his toilet at J. Deter's, who is the great authority in his line; and if he cannot find all that is fashionable, fanciful and comfortable in the boot and shoe line at this establishment, there will be

[EXTERIOR VIEW OF THE HOUSE NOW OCCUPIED BY NICHOLAS VEEDER.]

Cephalic Pills,
CURE Sick Headache,
CURE Nervous Headache,
CURE All kinds of Headache.

By the use of these Pills the periodic attacks of Nervous or Sick Headache may be prevented; and if taken at the commencement of an attack immediate relief from pain and sickness will be obtained.

They seldom fail in removing the Nausea and Headache to which females are so subject.

They act gently upon the bowels, removing Costiveness.

For Literary Men, Students, Delicate Females, and all persons of sedentary habits they are valuable as a Laxative improving the appetite, giving tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and restoring the natural elasticity and strength of the whole system.

The CEPHALIC PILLS are the result of long investigation and carefully conducted experiments, having been in use many years, during which time they have prevented and relieved vast amount of pain and suffering from Headache whether originating in the nervous system or from a deranged state of the Stomach.

They are entirely vegetable in their composition, and may be taken at all times with perfect safety without making any change of diet, and the absence of any disagreeable taste renders it easy to administer them to children.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS

The genuine have five signatures of Henry C. Spalding on each Box

Sold by Druggists and all other Dealers in Medicines.

A Box will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

all orders should be addressed to

HENRY C. SPALDING,
48 Cedar St., New York.

THE FOLLOWING INDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS

Will convince all who suffer from

HEADACHE

THAT A SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS WITHIN THEIR REACH.

hese Testimonials were unsolicited by Mr. Spalding, they afford unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

MASONVILLE, CONN., Feb. 5, 1861.

MR. SPALDING—SIR—I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I like them so well that I want you to send me two dollars worth more. Part of these are for the neighbors, to whom I gave a few out of the first box I got from you.

Send the Pills by mail, and oblige

Your ob't Servant, JAMES KENNEDY.

HAVERFORD, PA., Feb. 6, 1861.

MR. SPALDING—SIR—I wish you to send me one more box of your Cephalic Pills. I have received a great deal of benefit from them. Yours respectfully,

MARY ANN STOIKHOUSE.

SPRUCE CREEK, HUNTINGTON CO., PA., Jan. 18, 1861.

H. C. SPALDING—SIR—You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately

Respectfully yours, JNO. B. SIMONS.

P. S.—I have used one box of your Pills and find them excellent.

BELLE VERNON, OHIO, Jan. 15, 1861.

HENRY C. SPALDING, ESQ.—Please find inclosed twenty-five cents, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best Pills I have ever tried. Direct

A. STOVER, P. M.,
Belle Vernon, Wyandot Co., O.

BEVERLEY, MASS., Dec. 11, 1860.

H. C. SPALDING, ESQ.—I wish for some Circulars or large show bills, to bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before my customers. If you have anything of the kind, please send to me. One of my customers, who is subject to severe Sick Headache (usually lasting two days), was cured of an attack in one hour by your Pills, which I sent her. Respectfully yours,

W. B. WILKES

☞ A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually. ☜

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SAVE THE PIECES

ECONOMY DISPATCH!

☞ "A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE." ☜

As accidents will happen, even in well regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.

Spalding's Prepared Glue

meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point.

"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."

N. B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cts.

Address HENRY C. SPALDING,
No. 48 Cedar St., New York.

CAUTION.

As certain unprincipled persons are attempting to palm off on the unsuspecting public imitations of my PREPARED GLUE, I would caution all persons to examine before purchasing, and see that the full name,

☞ SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, ☜

is on the outside wrapper all others are swindling counterfeits

FURNITURE! FURNITURE!!

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

NO. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Christie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade, for Time or Cash. Their Stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

JENNY LIND AND EXTENSION POST BEDSTEADS,

Five feet wide, especially for the Southern Trade.

☞ Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented. 270-84

HUNNEWELL'S UNIVERSAL COUGH REMEDY — HUNNEWELL'S UNIVERSAL COUGH REMEDY. — BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS

This valuable preparation, freed of all the common components, such as Opiates or Expectorants, which not only run down the system, but destroy all chance of cure, will be found on trial to possess the following properties, and to which the most valuable testimonials may be found in the pamphlets.

For Whooping Cough, and as a Soothing Syrup, it meets every want, and by early use will save the largest proportion of ruptures in children which can be traced to Whooping Cough.

In ordinary Coughs and Bronchial Complaints, the forerunners of Consumption, its splendid tonic properties make it not only the most perfect enemy to disease, but builds up and sustains the system against a recurrence of the Complaint. No nursery should be without it, nor should parents fail to get a pamphlet, to be found with all dealers, as the only way to do justice to its value.

HUNNEWELL'S TOLU ANODYNE — HUNNEWELL'S TOLU ANODYNE THE GREAT NEURALGIC REMEDY AND NATURAL OPIATE. — SIGNATURE OF J. L. Hunnewell OVER CORK OF GENUINE ONLY.

This great Neuralgic Remedy and Natural Opiate calls for special attention and interest, being free of Opium or preparations of Opium, or of any but its strictly vegetable and medical properties. For Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Tooth and Earache, Spinal Complaints, Bleeding at Lungs or Stomach, Rose or Hay Fever, Catarrh, and all minor Nervous Complaints.

For Loss of Sleep, Chronic or Nervous Headache, Sick Headache, it has no equal, and to which we offer testimonials from undoubted sources.

For Delirium Tremens it is a sure Remedy.

For Bowel Complaints, including Cholera Morbus, it is splendidly adapted, in not only removing the Pains, but acting as physic, a great contrast with Opium, which not only constipates and drugs the system, but makes the remedy worse than the disease.

From Physicians we ask attention, and on demand Formulas or Trial Bottles will be sent, developing in the Anodyne an Opiate which has long been wanted, and in the Cough Remedy such as rest entirely on one central principle.

From invalids we ask correspondence for Pamphlets or explanation, without "postage stamps."

Prices—Large Cough Remedy, 50 cents per bottle.
Small " " 25 " "
Tolu Anodyne, 50 " "

John L. Hunnewell, Proprietor,

CHEMIST AND PHARMACEUTIST,

No. 9 Commercial Wharf, Boston, Mass.

For sale by all usual wholesale and retail dealers in every town and city.

Geo. Hunnewell, 145 Water St; D. S. Barnes & Co.; Bush, Gale & Robinson; Schieffelin Bros. & Co.; McKesson & Robbins, Conrad Fox, J. Milhau & Sons, Wholesale Agents, New York. 277-89aw

Tiffany & Co.,

LATE

TIFFANY, YOUNG & ELLIS,

Fine Jewellery, Precious Stones, Watches, Silver Ware, Bronzes, Clocks, Rich Porcelain Articles of Art and Luxury.
No. 550 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.
HOUSE IN PARIS, TIFFANY, REED & CO.

The Early Physical Degeneracy

OF

American People,

AND THE EARLY MELANCHOLY DECLINE OF CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH.

Just published by

DR. STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes for Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

This is a most thrilling book, and is the result of thirty years' experience of the author in more than ten thousand cases of this class of direful maladies. It has been written from conscientious and philanthropic motives, and appeals most pathetically to Parents, Guardians and to Youth, for it details timely aid to restore the already SHATTERED BARK, and a rudder to clear the shoals and rocks for childhood. Send two red stamps and obtain this masterly effort.

Fail not to Send and get this Book.

ADDRESS

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y.

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.—For particulars address, inclosing stamp, DR. H. HIRSHFIELD, Surgeon and Accoucheur, 438 Broadway, New York. 274-86

ESTABLISHED 1843.

BOGLE'S CELEBRATED HYPERION FLUID over tops everything as the greatest restorer and best dressing for the Hair in the world. Ye who have been deceived by nostrums, try this and be convinced. It never fails. To be had at

W. BOGLE'S

Hairwork, Perfumery and Toilet Store,
202 Washington St., Boston, and for sale everywhere.

Dr. Marshall's Headache and Catarrh Snuff

HAS proved itself to many physicians and innumerable sufferers to be the best article yet known for curing the Catarrh, Cold in the Head, the Headache, and all Catarrhal affections. It purges out all obstructions, strengthens the Glands and gives a healthy action to the parts affected. A facsimile of the signature of the Proprietor, CHARLES BOWEN, is on every bottle.

Sold by all Druggists. 272-84

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

PUBLISHED for the benefit and as a warning to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, &c.; supplying the means of Self-Cure. By one who cured himself, after being put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. Single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Esq., Bedford, Kings County, N. Y., by inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope. 271-83

TUCKER'S

PARIS BRIDAL

GARNITURES AND VEILS,

Coiffures, Flowers, Feathers and Toilet Surroundings are ever of a pleasing character.

759 Broadway. 274-325

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every city, town and county in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patent article just invented. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and to persons out of employment it offers great inducements. For full particulars write immediately, and receive our letter by return mail.

ROBT. HALL & CO.,
271-83 5½ North St., Baltimore, Md

MATRIMONY MADE EASY; OR, HOW TO WIN A LOVER.—Containing plain, common-sense directions, showing how all may be suitably married, irrespective of age, sex or position, whether prepossessing or otherwise. This is a new work, and the secret, when acted upon, secures a speedy and happy marriage to either sex. Mailed free for 25 cents, in cash or postage stamps. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia Post Office, box 2,300.

AGENTS WANTED.—In every town and city in the Union, to sell SHERMAN & CO.'S NEW GIFT JEWELLERY ENVELOPES, with from $1 to $10 capital. Our Agents are making from $3 to $10 per day. Our new style of Envelopes are now ready, which, in number of articles and real intrinsic value, surpass anything of the kind ever before offered. Remember in price and quality we defy competition. Call on or address, inclosing stamp for Circular, SHERMAN & CO., 229 Broadway. 276

LIEUTENANT COLBORN;

OR,

The Disinherited.

A new Novel just published by the AUTHOR.

For sale by Dick & Fitzgerald, New York; Rudd & Carleton, New York; T. B. Peterson & Co., Philadelphia; Crosby, Nichols, Lee & Co., Boston; Bailey & Noyes, Portland, and Booksellers generally. 276-79

Bogle's Hair Dye and Wigs

ARE unapproached and unapproachable in their superior merits. Both are perfection. Try the one, see the other, and be convinced.

Private Rooms for Dyeing Hair and fitting Wigs at BOGLE'S Hairwork, Perfumery and Toilet Bazaar, No. 202 Washington St., Boston. Diagrams to measure the head sent by mail. Inclose postage stamp for reply. 000

CANADIAN

General Agency.

Merchants, Manufacturers, Inventors, Patentees, &c., will find it to their advantage to appoint the undersigned Agent for the sale or introduction of their Goods, Manufactures or inventions in the Canadas. Arrangements readily entered into on liberal terms, on salary or commission.

E. O. BOUDREAU,

General Agent, 110 German St.,
277-328 Montreal, Canada East.

THE TIMES IMPROVING.

A Better Feeling.

STOCK GOING UP!

FOR

Frank Leslie's

BUDGET OF FUN

IS OUT!

A FORT WHICH EVERYBODY CAN TAKE.

Only a Sixpence for 't.

Ha! Ha! Ha!

HO!

Why is it the Humorous Paper of the County and of the Hemisphere?

'Couse it's a WEST JESTER.

IMMENSE PICTURE OF OLD AUNT ABE FEEDING THE HUNGRY BOYS.

Louis Napoleon Shown Up!
Mr. Nubkins Shown Up!
Seventh Regiment Shown Up!
Old Abe Shewn Up!
Old Buck Shewn Up!
The Irrepress' Nigger Shewn Up!
The Tribune Correspondent Shewn Up
Abe in the White House Shown Up!
Young Bobolinkum Shewn Up!
Office Hunters Shown Up!
The Happy Family Shown Up!
Snipes Shown Up!
Seven Aces in a Pack Shown Up!
Spring Bonnets Shown Up!
Old Maids Shewn Up!
Household Troubles Shewn Up!
Mozart Hall Shewn Up!
Fashionable Belles Shewn Up!
Everybody and everything Shewn Up
AND DONE FOR!

Superb Engravings!

ROARING FUN!

Glorious! Glowing! Golden!

"A BIG THING ON ICE!"

OR ANYTHING ELSE.

SLASHING POETRY.
GASHING EDITORIALS.
DASHING ESSAYS.
SMASHING CONUNDRUMS.
FLASHING ANECDOTES.
CRASHING COMICALITIES.
LASHING COMMENTARIES.

ABOVE PAR A GREAT WAYS IN EVERY-THING!

Buy the Budget!

OLD ABE READS IT!
OLD BUCK READS IT!
DOUGLAS READS IT!
JEFF. DAVIS READS IT!
THE AMERICAN PUBLIC READ IT!

THIS UNRIVALLED PAPER

For April First

IS OUT!

Price Only Six Cents!

A Miracle of Cheapness.
A Marvel of Excellence.
A Wonder of Wit.

BUY IT!

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AND GYMNASIUM YONKERS, N. Y.

Winter Session commenced on the 1st day of Nov

TERMS:

Board and Tuition.........$150 per Session.

For Circulars and particular information, apply to
M. N. WISEWELL, Principal.

Yonkers, 1860 000

THE READERS OF

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper

Desiring to purchase any article in New York, no matter how trifling or costly, can have their orders promptly and faithfully fulfilled by addressing

JAMES W. FORTUNE,
Care of Frank Leslie, Esq.,
19 City Hall Square, N. Y.

In all cases the necessary funds should be inclosed in the communication.

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S

LOTTERIES!

AUTHORIZED BY THE STATES OF

DELAWARE,
MISSOURI
AND
KENTUCKY,

Draw daily, in public, under the superintendence of Sworn Commissioners.

☞ The Managers' Offices are located at Wilmington Delaware, and St. Louis, Missouri.

PRIZES VARY FROM

$2 50 TO $100,000!

TICKETS FROM $2 50 TO $20.

☞ Circulars giving full explanation and the Schemes to be drawn will be sent, free of expense, by addressing

WOOD, EDDY & CO., Wilmington, Delaware,

OR

WOOD, EDDY & CO. St. L , Mis

FAIRBANKS'

STANDARD SCALES!!

ADAPTED TO EVERY BRANCH OF BUSINESS where a correct and durable Scale is required.

Send for an Illustrated and Descriptive Circular.

FAIRBANKS & CO.,
189 Broadway, New York.

An Important Discovery!!

FOR THE CURE OF

CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS AND COLDS.

JUST PUBLISHED—A Pamphlet, giving an account of the discovery of the Mimosa Arabica, by a Missionary, while traveling in Africa.

Published for the benefit of those suffering from Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs and Colds. This Pamphlet will be sent free to all who may desire it. Address or apply to LEWIS, GILMORE & CO.,
2?7o No. 64 Liberty St., New York.

Exquisite Photograph of Major Anderson,

TAKEN at Fort Sumpter, Feb. 6, 1861. Price 25 cents. A remittance in postage stamps will bring the Portrait by return mail.

E. ANTHONY, No 501 Broadway,
Importer and Manufacturer of Photographic Materials.
Every American patriot will prize this Picture.
Also, Photographs of Gen. Scott, Colfaxian, Buchanan, Lincoln, Seward, Breckinridge and all other eminent Americans, at same price. Catalogues sent on receipt of stamp. 270

AT REDUCED PRICES

With Glass Cloth Presser, Improved Long-Stitch, New Style Hemmer, Binder, Corder, &c.

Office, 505 Broadway, New York.

"The Machine makes the 'LOCK-STITCH,' and ranks highest on account of elasticity, permanence, beauty and general desirableness of the stitching when done, and the wide range of its application."—Report of American Institute, New York. 2?5 80o

GARDINER'S
Rheumatic and Neuralgia
COMPOUND,

A certain, safe and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Salt Rheum. It is no internal remedy, driving out and entirely eradicating the disease, requiring no change in diet or business, and may be taken by children and persons of the most delicate constitution with perfect safety.

Depot, 87 Liberty St., Boston. Sold by Druggists. F. C. WELLS & CO., 138 Franklin St., New York, Wholesale Agents. Sold by Druggists everywhere

Sold by J. MILHAN & SON, 183 Broadway. 274-87o

Smith and Wesson's Seven-Shooter.

J. W. STORRS, Agent.

131 Chambers Street, N. Y.

THIS PISTOL is light, has great force, is sure fire, shoots accurately, can be loaded in any length of time without injury, is cool, liable to get out of order, is safe to carry. Every Pistol warranted.

CAUTION TO DEALERS.

Be sure and get the Genuine stamped "Smith & Wesson, Springfield, Mass.," as no others genuine. All such imitations and that bear of the breech are infringements. Pubs are cautioned that I shall prosecute infringements will be commenced. Be sure the cartridges have Smith & Wesson's patent-ball seals end of the box 270-301o

HORSE POWDERS. DEPOT FOR S. G. WELLINGS Condition Powders for Horses, 416 Broome street, New York. Price 25c Only 25c—or of one dozen doze 272 90o

CONSTITUTION WATER,

THE ONLY KNOWN REMEDY FOR DIABETES,

urination in the Neck of the Bladder, Inflammation of the Kidneys, and Debility of the Bladder, Changing and Burning, or Painful Urination. Stone in the Bladder, Calculus, Gravel, Brick-dust Deposit, and Mucous or Milky Discharges after Urinating

For sale by all Druggists. Price $1.

WM. H. GREGG & CO., Proprietors.
HURLEY & ALLEN, General Agents,
No. 44 Cliff St., New York
276-79

BUCHANAN AT HOME—A DECIDED NOVELTY.

CUTTER—What-what-what-what-what you think, eh? More' George Sanders done gone got crazy lunatic, fo' certs shure. He's went and sent you a telemegram, Sah, and paid postage on it himself, eh!!!

First-Class Prize Medal, Paris Exhibition, 1855.

LAWSON & CO.,

PRINTING INK MANUFACTURERS,

LEITH (ENGLAND) AND NEW YORK.

Furnishers to the principal offices in Central Europe and America, and also to nearly all the Illustrated Papers on both Continents.

New York Depot, 66 Gold St., New York.
271 210o

Thorley's Food for Cattle.

FOR Horses, Cows, Sheep and Hogs, the effects produced in one month will exceed all expectations. A Pamphlet mailed free. Agents Wanted. Depot, 41 Broadway, New York. 271-80o

CHARLES HEIDSIECK
CHAMPAGNE.

This popular Wine, of which the undersigned are SOLE AGENTS FOR NORTH AMERICA,
Received the First Premium at the
BORDEAUX EXPOSITION IN 1859.
The Medal awarded by the judges can be seen at our office.
2?30 T. W. BAYARD & SERARD, 109 Pearl St., N. Y

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.

For curing and preventing Baldness.
For removing Scurf and Dandruff.
For beautifying and making the hair soft and curly.
In fact the only safe and effective compound of the kind in use.
Be sure and get the right article

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator.

Price 25 cents per bottle.

Wholesale Depot, 46 Dey St., New York.

Also,

PROF. L. MILLER'S INSTANTANEOUS LIQUID HAIR DYE

Price 50 cents per box.

Warranted superior to all others.

Try them, and you will acknowledge the fact. 277-82o

NOW WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Grover & Baker's

CELEBRATED NOISELESS

Sewing Machines.

No family can afford to be without one.

495 BROADWAY, N. Y.

000o

Patented November 1st, 1859.

The measures are

A, the distance round the Neck.

B to B, the Yoke.

C to C, the Sleeve.

D to D, distance around the Body under the armpits

E to E, the length of the Shirt.

F.Y.S.

BALLOU'S
Patented Improved French Yoke SHIRTS.

Patented November 1st, 1859.

A New Style of Shirt, warranted to Fit.

By sending the above measures per mail we can guarantee a perfect fit of our new style of Shirt, and return by Express to any part of the United States, at $12, $13, $14, $15, &c., per dozen. No order forwarded for less than half a dozen Shirts.

Also Importers and Dealers in MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS

BALLOU BROTHERS,
409 Broadway, N. Y.

Wholesale Trade supplied on the usual terms.

MARSH'S PATENT SITTING MACHINE.—SEE PAGE 299.

Dr. Brown's Patent Baby-Tender.

Here for the Privation.

THIS article of Nursery Furniture is different from, superior to, and supplies the place of, all other contrivances used for that purpose. It is compact, cheap and durable, and to those having the care of infants or children under three years old it is indispensable.

N. B.—The concentrated aids used by our nursery children in spite of your baby-Tenders very much aids in their proper physical development, and enables us to dispense with observation of sure personal injury.—Makers of the Tender.

J. S. BROWN & CO., Warerooms No. 662 Broadway, N. Y., between Bond and Bleecker Sts.
Send for our Circular. 000o

BILLIARD BALLS, Ivory and Patent Compressed Ivory, at reduced prices. Manufactured and for sale by W. M. WELLING, 424 Avenue B. Send for a Circular. 270-83o

Lodd, Webster & Co's
IMPROVED TWO-THREAD SEWING MACHINES,
600 Broadway, New York. 000o

$50 PER MONTH and Expenses paid. Address for terms. J. W. HARRIS & CO., Boston, Mass.

Only Twenty-five Cents a Bottle.

Superior Old Tom or London Gordon

GIN,

Bottled under the immediate superintendence of Dr. Dixon, of London, for Medicinal purposes.

Wholesale Agents, GREENE & GLADDING,
61 Cortlandt & 59 Dey St., N. Y.

For sale by all respectable single bottle or case dealers in fine wines everywhere. Also by J. B. DIXON, 169 Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel, N. Y. 000

CHEAPEST HOUSE IN AMERICA—To purchase Jewellery, manufactured expressly for the Jewellery Exchange business, and to supply the Oss trade, Agents, Pedlers and every other person who will find it profitable to handle Jewellery of us, send to FOSTER, WINSLOW & CO., 3 Tremont Row, 258 Broadway, Room 3. 270-82o

JOY TO THE WORLD.

Clothe Washed in One Minute by JOHNSON'S UNION WASHING MACHINE.

Patented April 10, 1860.

PRICE $8 TO $10.

A CHILD CAN OPERATE IT. Washes every spot. Sure and certain, without soaking or boiling, and does it in 5 minutes. GET JOHNSON'S, 427 Broadway, New York, and 214 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

J. JOHNSON & CO.,
Proprietors.

Shaler's Flexible Roller Patent Floe Skates.

The use of these Skates imparts a perfect knowledge of the art of Skating, as well as forming the most pleasing and healthful exercise ever presented to the public. Hundreds of pairs of the Floe Skates have been pronounced Ice Skaters by the use of them

The only place where genuine article is 440 Broadway, N. Y. C. H. VAIL, Sole Agent and Manufacturer. 2?3

Unequaled for the Splendor

AND MULTIPLICITY OF ITS ILLUSTRATIONS.

CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED FAMILY BIBLE.

Great demand for the First Volume. Now Ready, Printed in Large Type, and Illustrated by 240 Engravings, Bevelled boards, 784 pages, $ 00.

Free by mail, or from Agents, one of whom will be appointed for every unrepresented district throughout the Union.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN,
No. 37 Park Row, N. Y

SURNETT'S COCOAINE.

No man is more sceptical of new cure-alls than I. Occasionally, however, I am agreeably disappointed. A few months ago I was troubled with a very disagreeable dandruff, which became permanently so. A friend who boarded with me strongly recommended Surnett's Cocoaine for the growth of the hair, remarking, "It will make it grow whether it will or no." I used it about nine weeks, and can now boast of a luxuriant crop of hair, having cut it several times.—Ed. Philadelphia N. E. Non Liter.

S. R. Walker,
TYPE FOUNDRY
AND PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
17 Dutch St., New York. 277 80

THE ELECTROTYPING OF FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER is done by WILLIAM DENYSE, 183 William St., New York.

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED

NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1861, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 280—Vol. XI.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1861. [Price 6 Cents.

A GREAT VICTORY WON!

Our Triumph Come at Last.

Our Battle with Swill Milk Corruption Fought Out at Albany.

SWILL MILK ABOLISHED BY LAW.

THE FIGHT WAS OURS.

The Victory is for the People.

THREE years ago, entirely unassisted, we commenced our exposure of the infamous Swill Milk traffic, which had grown shameless by tolerance, and assumed gigantic proportions. It spread its poisonous influence everywhere, and the fearful weekly lists of mortality proved how well its deadly properties capped the life of both the young and the old.

We met the subject face to face; we presented into the strongholds of the filthy traffic; we presented things as they were; we did not aim at pictures but at facts; we did not conceal the horrible details, though we ourselves sickened at their sight, for we had a great end to achieve, a vast public good to accomplish. We brought the graphic powers of the pencil and the pen to our aid, and in one day moved New York and the whole community was one of the loudest pestilence which was raging in their midst.

Our course at once attracted to us the wealthy firms who counted their hundreds of thousands or coiners made by the unholy Swill Milk traffic, and the hosts of hangers-on to the trade, whose independent votes wielded unbounded influence. The city authorities, too, who cannot see guilt if it inhabits splendid mansions, took part with our antagonists, and acted rather as counsels for the defendants than as officers delegated by the people to conserve their rights.

THE HON. MRS. PERKINS.—SEE PAGE 306

We persevered against this powerful combined opposition; we sent our artists everywhere; we engaged an army of detectives, and personally supervised their action; we employed chemists to analyse the poisonous trash; lawyers to defend the actions brought against us; and week after week, while under the ban of unscrupulous clothiers and threats of personal violence even unto death, we published our labors to the public, and proved triumphantly the terrible developments and the serious accusations we had made.

Without any aid from any source, we incurred all this enormous expense, amounting to many thousands of dollars, in a great public cause; we incurred it all, and endured all the obloquy and misrepresentation heaped upon us, for we knew that we suffered in the great cause of humanity, and that public opinion would eventually support and sustain us. This confidence has been justified by the end.

Our efforts at that time resulted in thoroughly arousing the people to a knowledge of the facts; and the pressure of public opinion, although it did not abolish the traffic of Swill Milk, caused it to be surrounded by such conditions of cleanliness as to ameliorate the evil in some degree. Further than this nothing more could be accomplished against the powerful private and official opposition.

But the ball which we had set rolling did not rest. In our columns, from time to time, we have revived the subject, by publishing the scientific researches and analysis of the poisonous article by eminent medical authorities, and our efforts have finally resulted in the passage of a Bill in the Senate at Albany to Prevent the Adulteration of Milk and ABOLISHING THE SALE OF SWILL MILK.

LOSS OF THE YACHT MARY KINGSBARD, OF NEW YORK, ON THE FLORIDA COAST, NEAR JUPITER LIGHTHOUSE, ON THE 16TH OF MARCH, 1861—TERRIBLE SUFFERING OF THE CREW, MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN.—FROM A SKETCH BY A PASSENGER ON THE STEAMSHIP CAHAWBA, WHICH RESCUED THE SHIPWRECKED PEOPLE.—SEE PAGE 307.

We give all honor to the Senators for the honest and manly course they have taken, and especially to the Senator from New York, who was the mover of the Bill, and we are satisfied that our unselfish efforts in the cause of the people and humanity have rescued the community from that great social evil which has for years decimated our population by thousands.

Our work is accomplished—the Swill Milk trade is dead.

Barnum's American Museum

HAS the largest and finest Collection of Living Curiosities ever exhibited together, including Bears, Sea Lion, Mammoth Bear Samson, the Swiss Bearded Lady, the Lilliputian Queen, Miss Reed; the Aquaria, Living Monster Snakes, Happy Family, with elegant Dramatic Performances daily at 3 and 7½ o'clock P. M., making the Museum at once the best as well as the cheapest place of amusement in the world.

IRVING HALL,

IRVING PLACE AND FIFTEENTH STREET,
Opposite to the
ACADEMY OF MUSIC,
FOR BALLS, CONCERTS, LECTURES, FESTIVALS, FAIRS, &c., &c., &c.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

FRANK LESLIE, Editor and Publisher.

NEW YORK, APRIL 6, 1861.

ALL Communications, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One Copy	17 weeks	$ 1
One do.	1 year	$ 3
Two do.	1 year	$ 5
Or One Copy	2 years	$ 5
Three Copies	1 year	$ 8
Five do.	1 year (to one address)	$10

And an extra Copy to the person sending a Club of Five. Every additional subscription, $2.

Foreign News.

England.—There are no prominent topics before the public now of a domestic nature. Reform has been postponed on the plea that there is no popular demand for it. The principal object of general interest is the present crisis of American affairs. The injudicious attempt of the Tariff men to wound British and French manufactures through the Morrill Tariff has materially strengthened the Southern Confederacy in the eyes of the two leading nations of Europe, and done much to facilitate the recognition of the new nation. The chief journals of Europe consider it as a smart operation, more worthy of thimbleriggers than statesmen. The unpopularity of Gladstone seems to throw the halo of insecurity around the Palmerston Administration, which nothing but the Austrian tendencies of Derby could keep from becoming practical. Even this may be rendered palatable, since the recent conversion of Francis Joseph to Constitutional Government seems to have rendered that once abhorrent personage more endurable in English eyes. The great legal excitement of the hour has been the Yelverton trial, which has resulted in placing the gallant major in the position of a bigamist, when he flattered himself he was only a seducer. Seldom has popular odium ran so strongly against a man as it has against this unblushing roué. In our present paper will be found a portrait of the heroine of this most remarkable drama.

France.—The public interest still centres upon Mirès, whose arrest for his enormous frauds, or rather financial speculations, has already been noticed. A strict investigation into his affairs is now going on, and the Government declares the course of justice shall not be swayed by any personal considerations. It is said that France intends to withdraw her troops from Rome, and leave the Pope merely a spiritual existence. The Conference on Syrian affairs has not yet determined on extending the French occupation of that miserable land. It is said that France and Russia hold together, but are opposed by England, Austria and Prussia. Turkey is also opposed to a continuance of the French occupation. The chances are that the term will be extended to the 1st of May. The war between the Emperor and many of his bishops still rages. The public, however, takes side with Louis Napoleon, as do the enlightened of all classes in every nation.

Denmark.—The question between this Government and Prussia on the Holstein-Schleswig question will most probably be settled without any difficulty, most certainly without bloodshed, as France, England and Russia have addressed a remonstrance to Denmark couched in almost identical language.

Poland.—The burial of the unhappy men who were shot down by the Russian troops on the anniversary of the battle of Grochow took place without a renewal of any disturbances. Prince Gortschakoff has presented a petition to the Emperor relating to the affair, which is expected to meet the exigencies of the case. It is, however, another instance of the instability of all systems not based upon the people.

Austria.—The publication of the recent constitution granted by Francis Joseph has not been so well received by the Hungarians as was expected. It will, nevertheless, disarm much hostile feeling, and, if honestly carried out, may yet arrest the ruin that was so rapidly gathering around the Austrian Empire. Still, the question of Venetia remains to be settled in the course of a few years, and it must be met.

Italy.—The siege of Messina has commenced, and its fall may be looked for every day. The King of Naples remains in Rome, but, some papers assert, he is making preparations to leave for Bavaria very soon. Private letters represent the condition of the Pope as being of a most despondent character. Still, he will not listen to the good advice of the Emperor Louis Napoleon.

Turkey.—Next to the Pope, the Sultan is, undoubtedly, the sickest man in Europe. His principal Ministers are now engaged in a quarrel on financial matters, which are in a most helpless state. The bankruptcy of Mirès seems to have been the last feather to that camel's back. There is a strange rumor afloat in Paris and London that John Sadleir and Jacob Mirès are one and the same man. It is, of course, a canard.

Mexico.—The Tennessee brings us the important news that M. Saligny, the French Minister, had recognised the Liberal Government. Juarez is now acknowledged by the United States, England and France. General Zamora, Governor of the State of Vera Cruz, is dead. He was one of the best of the Mexican authorities. The brigands still rule between Mexico and Vera Cruz, and Capt. Oldham, of the British war steamer Valorous had been badly wounded while on his way from the City of Mexico to Vera Cruz. The weightiest task the new Government has to perform is to put down these banditti.

CONGRESSIONAL MATTERS.

ONE of the most remarkable, painful and yet significant facts of the time is the utter indifference of the public towards Congress. At the present time the Senate is sitting, and able men discuss the present crisis, but few seem to pay any attention to its deliberations.

On the 22d of March Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, finished a very elaborate speech on Senator Douglas's resolution of inquiry relative to the forts and other public property in the seceded States. This argument was in favor of the recognition of the new Confederacy, and the formation of a treaty with its Government—otherwise, in his opinion, a conflict is inevitable. He was followed by Mr. Howe, of Wisconsin, the new Senator from that State, who argued against the passage of Mr. Douglas's resolution, on the ground that it would be improper, in the present condition of the country, to make such information public.

On the 23d Mr. Hamlin announced his intention of being absent from his post for the rest of the session, and Mr. Foote, of Vermont, was made Chairman in his stead. John Sherman, of Ohio, of Helper celebrity, took his seat as Senator.

On the 24th Mr. Powell moved for copies of the correspondence between Major Anderson and the War Office since the commencement of the troubles. The weary debate upon Douglas's resolution was then resumed, and trailed like a wounded snake its slow length along.

On the 25th the Douglas debate was resumed, and continued mainly by Douglas and Breckinridge, who earnestly demanded to learn from the President what his policy was. It seems to us very clear that Douglas knows the real intentions of the President to be peace and good will to the American people, but he wishes the President to inform the public of the fact himself. At Willard's, the other night, a bet of a thousand dollars was made that in less than three months Chase and Blair would give place to Douglas and Johnson, of Tennessee, in the Cabinet. Finally the Little Giant's resolution was laid on the table by a vote of 23 to 11. Mr. Breckinridge and Mr. Clingman then offered resolutions to the effect that the Senate recommend the withdrawal of the Federal troops from the limits of the Confederate States. They were laid over for future consideration, and the Senate devoted itself to the only occupation it appears to have appetite for—the confirmation of Lincoln's appointments.

In the Senate, on the 27th, a message was received from the President declining to communicate the despatches received from Major Anderson, the commander at Fort Sumpter, as their publication would at this time be inexpedient. A long debate then ensued upon the question of taking up Senator Breckinridge's resolution advising the withdrawal of the Federal troops from the seceded States. Upon taking the question the vote stood 19 to 10. As there was not a quorum, the subject was dropped, and the Senate went into executive session, and in the course of a couple of hours confirmed a large number of appointments.

The North and the South.

THE public opinion of America seems to have impressed the two Governments with the necessity of a caution strangely at variance with the violent counsels so prevalent two months since. The leaders of both extremes have been made aware that the odium of a great people would fall on those who precipitated a conflict, the first shot of which would sound like the deathknell of liberty.

The public sentiment has dictated the evacuation of Forts Sumpter and Pickens, both of which events are now merely questions of time. Although no special announcement has been made, it seems certain that before the end of next week Major Anderson will have retired from Fort Sumpter, which will, of course, be immediately occupied by the Secessionists. The exact method has not been made known, but it is to be hoped that neither party will do anything to leave a sting behind. As matters now stand, the occupation of a stronghold in the midst of a seceded State is more of a provocation than a necessity or a precaution, and we think Mr. Lincoln has done wisely in withdrawing from so untenable and profitless a position.

The Yelverton Case.

ONCE in a decade English society is overwhelmed with an overpowering case of scandalous immorality. Once in a decade the flood of indecency and treachery bursts the narrow barriers of criminal gazettes and private gossip, and flows over the great dykes of the "respectable press." Then Morality preaches loudly, and Immorality picks up dainty scraps, and people of steady habits are startled to learn what unquenchable and terrible fires glow, and what lava-torrents heave under the cold outer-crust of the world which we term Behavior. As it was in the beginning, and probably will be until the enigma of Evil is solved.

The last great case of this kind is still fresh before us in that of Major Yelverton and Miss Theresa Longworth. To use a reporter's phrase, "the high standing of the parties implicated gives it unwonted interest;" but it acquires a much higher to the cultivated observer, from the remarkable phases of character developed, and from its being, in all probability, the event which will lead directly to the abrogation of an obsolete and scandalous marriage law in England, which declares a marriage of Protestants by a Catholic priest null and void! Briefly, the Honorable Major Yelverton, a dashing military man of the world, heir apparent to the Viscounty of Avonmore, casually made the acquaintance, on the deck of a steamboat crossing from Folkestone to Boulogne, of Miss Theresa Longworth. The lady in question has been sainted by a portion of the press, but was evidently a finished woman of the world—a girl, who was, as described by the London Saturday Review, a miracle:

> As to Theresa Longworth, we are not careful to say all that we think. Happily for society, we trust that the mould in which her character has been formed was broken after the first cast. Here we have the facts of a woman's life, and they are incontestable; but except in a "scrofulous French novel," they have, we hope, never before existed. Even now we almost refuse credence to the existence of such a person. She seems to have had parents, but all that we know about her father is only the wicked and unnatural parent of fiction, which meets us in the stereotyped form of an atheist's deathbed. A girl born, we don't exactly know how, and bred in a convent, left to her own devices, flying mysteriously about Europe and Asia, without any visible ties or restraints; apparently not troubled or blessed with the necessities of family or income; educated in France and Italy, and with a cosmopolitan acquaintance with all people and languages; driving cardinals to despair, and surrounded by an entourage of lovers whom she attracts by her charms and awes by her virtues; prodigiously clever, prodigiously accomplished, romantic, enthusiastic, versatile, devout, religious and charitable; a Sœur de Charité under the most picturesque circumstances, Eloise at once and Sophia, a Chantal and a Sappho, mixed up with the most famous battles and stirring events of history, burning, and at the same time prudent; with wonderful powers both of self-sacrifice and self-restraint; chaste, yet always on the very verge of sin; with the sternest appreciation of character, and yet with the most passionate and abundant disregard of proprieties; scornful of the whole world's opinion, yet proud, self-contained and haughty in a certain sort of barren self-respect.

The wonderful "characterization" of the extract apologises for its length. This young lady made the acquaintance of the major in the manner stated, and passed the night on deck, the lady wrapped in a part of the major's plaid, "conversing on animal magnetism and odylic force." Twelve months later, the lady being then in Italy, began from a casual business letter a correspondence with the gentleman, which eventually drew her to the East, to act as nurse in the hospital of Galata, while he was serving—and gallantly—in the Crimea. Here he proposed a secret marriage, which she declined. In 1857 they met again in Edinburgh, where he proposed the easy Scotch marriage, and finally read aloud to her the marriage service, declaring that that ceremony made them one, mutual consent constituting marriage in Scotland. Finally she consented to be married by the Roman Catholic service, which was done by the Rev. Mr. Mooney, parish priest at Rosstrevor, Ireland. Here the honorable major believed that he had caught the lady, even as Tittlebat Titmouse sought to "do" his friend by giving him a note of hand on unstamped paper; for there is a wretched old law declaring such marriage void, and he congratulated himself on having thus cheated her. After this followed short-lived bliss, correspondence, separation, and the bigamy of Major Yelverton by going through the ceremony of marriage with the widow of the celebrated Professor Edward Forbes, of Edinburgh.

Mrs. Yelverton's prosecution of her husband to gain her rights, her success, and the enthusiastic congratulations offered her by the Dublin people, are still fresh in mind. She was declared to be his lawful wife, while upon his head descended a weight of obloquy and odium such as few men are destined to hear. He is to be degraded from the army, tried for bigamy, and otherwise disgraced.

It may interest our readers to know that the portrait of the lady which we give is a good likeness. Her manner is described as extremely fascinating. "Her countenance is oval, with a delicately pointed chin; the general expression is that of great firmness, calm, resolute, persevering, dignified power—confidence in repose. Her glance penetrates, while it charms as with a spell." Her voice is described as "singularly musical, while her hands are remarkably small and graceful in their habitual poses." Such is Mrs. Yelverton, the ambitious and at length sorrowfully successful woman, who at present occupies such a prominent position before the whole world.

EDITORIAL GLANCES AT MEN AND THINGS.

In Gay's famous "Beggar's Opera" there are two ladies, Polly and Lucy, who indulge in a very famous squabbling duet. The modern Polly and Lucy are the rival editors of the Tribune and Times, and their Macheath is Lincoln. Every now and then they indulge in a little passage of arms, the last being as to whether the Tribune ever had a real live resident correspondent at Charleston. The Times says the Charleston letters are written in the latitude of Printing-House Square. The Tribune thus disposes of the matter:

> "In fact, for some time past we have had three, but now we have only two, one of them having, after a rather protracted residence, suddenly found a Northern climate more congenial. He will probably be in town within a few days, when it will give us pleasure to introduce him to our incredulous neighbor, who may like to examine his hotel bills and any other documents."

This is unanswerable. In order to prove the presence of two men at Charleston, examine the hotel bills of another person who will be in New York in a few days. This is equal to Euclid's Fifth Proposition, quod est demonstrandum.

A Daily Contemporary actually brings Elizabeth Barrett Browning into the field as a Republican partisan, and as a proof of her intimate acquaintance with the present subject in dispute, gives this passage of a private letter lately received from her:

> "At this point, the anxiety on American affairs can take its full share of thought. My partiality for frenzies is not so absorbing, believe me, as to exclude very painful considerations on the dissolution of your great Union. But my serious fear has been, and is, not for the dissolution of the body but the death of the soul—not of a rupture of States and civil war, but of reconciliation and peace at the expense of a deadly compromise of principle. Nothing will destroy the Republic but what corrupts its conscience and disturbs its fame—for the stain upon the honor must come off upon the flag. If, on the other hand, the North stands fast on the moral ground, no glory will be like your glory; your frontiers may diminish, but your essential greatness will increase; your foes may be of your own household, but your friends must be among all just and righteous men, whether in the body or out of the body. You are 'compassed about by a great cloud of witnesses,' and can afford to risk anything, except conscience."

Her politics are as unintelligible as her verses. It is, however, derogatory to American journalism to consider the jargon of a dreamer as of any authority in such a grave matter as our national politics.

The Amount of Sarcasm wasted by our journalists upon each other every year would set up the European press for a century. The Herald, in announcing the heroic valor, and disregard of the dimes, shown by the wooden nutmeg State, in voting five thousand men and twenty thousand dollars to conquer the South, says: "It is a pity they did not show equal alacrity against England in 1812!" It is rather unreasonable to make a man responsible for his grandfather.

Caleb Smith, whose portrait, as one of the Lincoln Cabinet, we give in the present issue of our paper, appears to be what is emphatically called "a bird." A story is going round the clubs of Washington to this effect. Old Abe promised the Chief Clerkship of the Agricultural Bureau to his friend, Isaac Newton, of Pa. He told Caleb to put his name down, and advised Isaac to that effect. Caleb wished to give his particular friend Holmes—Sweet Holmes of the song—that pleasant and profitable berth, and in the list forgot all about Newton. The President signed the programme as drawn out by Caleb, and sent it to the Senate, who confirmed all the appointments. Abe is, therefore, obliged to submit, but it is said he will never sign another paper of Caleb's, without reading it very carefully first.

OUR WEEKLY GOSSIP.

The New York Academy of Design.

There is something very agreeable in lounging through a Gallery of Paintings, with no other intent than that of amusing oneself. The privilege so enjoyed is unalloyed, because one need not look at anything that is not pleasant, and the sense of critical responsibility knows you not. Not so with us. We are obliged to combine pleasure with business, and take as much notice of the bad pictures as of the good. We were compelled, for instance, to look again and again at that swollen monstrosity painted by WILLIAM PAGE, and called the "Infant Bacchus." It is catalogued No. 117, and is for sale. We mention this fact in justice to the artist who has the good taste not to wish to keep it himself. If we were to judge by this picture, the "Infant Bacchus" was the great original of the wine skin. It has no anatomy; it is simply a grossly distended skin, which, if pricked, would collapse into flatness. Therefore, cut off those bulbous excrescences called legs, and your wine skin is perfect. The fat boy is lying on about an acre of leopard skin, which has no more texture than the painted calico which makes sham hunters out of supernumeraries at the theatre. The washy background is in imitation of a bad old master; and the rich coloring and the dainty manipulation amount to nothing, because they do not counterfeit nature. No artist, however great his name and fame, whether that fame be meretricious or real, can afford to send to a public gallery so poor a picture.

Nos. 40 and 43 are two admirable charcoal landscapes, by F. RONDELL. The trees are touched in with charming freedom and grace, the details carefully made out, and a sentiment which speaks of a keen appreciation of nature pervades the whole. The title of 43, which is the best picture, is, "Lost in the Woods." The other is, "Evening on the Adirondack."

No. 48 is an ambitious figure subject executed in crayon by J. W. EHNINGER, N. A. The design is good; the subordinate figures well drawn and full of action, but the principal figures are every way unsatisfactory. The subject is, "The Raising of Jairus's Daughter." The figure of the Saviour lacks dignity, the face is exceedingly common-place and every way devoid of majesty and intellect. The mother and daughter are weak in expression and most wretchedly drawn, the mother most especially so. As the principal group is not equal to the subject, being deficient in dignity and drawing, the picture must be considered a failure.

No. 31, "Vegetables and Fruit," by J. W. HILL, A. A most exquisite piece of painting. The melon, corn and onion are positive realities in color, form and texture. The composition was calculated for a rich effect in color, which the artist has obtained most successfully. It is one of the gems of the exhibition.

There are several fine portraits in the first gallery. No. 151 is a portrait of Mrs. Hunt by her husband, WILLIAM M. HUNT. It is a quaint idea to present the back of the head to the observer and call it a portrait, but it is a capital way to prevent strangers becoming familiar with one's wife's features. Enough of the face, however, is shown to excite curiosity. The idea is well managed and is admirably painted; the flesh tints pure and the hair natural to a marvel. There are some faces, we know, that would bear painting this way with even more of the back of the head and less of the features visible. No. 157, also by WILLIAM M. HUNT, is a portrait of W. S. Thayer. It is boldly and strikingly painted, but it is so roughly handled that it has the appearance of being unfinished. It is said to be an excellent likeness, the character, the individuality having been well preserved. The head is drawn with great freedom and the features finely modelled. It is certainly a literal transcript from nature, and owes nothing to the sentiment of the artist.

No. 73 is a portrait of a lady, Mrs. Charles Gilbert, we believe, by JULIUS GOLLMAN. This is a clever and most characteristic portrait

We like the artist's treatment of the subject, for it is out of the common run of the stereotyped position—it is free and unaffected. It is an admirable likeness, flattered in no one respect; indeed, faithful as it is to nature, the artist has failed to catch the spirituelle expression of the smile and the speaking animation of the mouth. With these exceptions, which are of course dependent upon circumstances, the portrait is faultless. As a work of art it has great merits; the coloring is good, the arrangement ingenious and the ensemble most pleasing. The shadow thrown by the hand is a touch of original thought indicative of fine sentiment in the artist.

But the great picture of the season, the crowning glory of this exhibition, is No. 225, "A Twilight in the Catskills," by S. R. Gifford, N. A. It is a bold stroke for the honor of nature, which few artists but Gifford would dare to attempt. Only men of his stature in art, and gifted with like sentiment, expression and power, are able to portray nature in her strongest effects without either weakly failing in the attempt, or, overleaping the sublime, plunging headlong into the ridiculous. We constantly see atmospheric effects so marked in their character as seemingly to be impossible to reproduce by any of the resources of art. The impossible, however, exists only in inferior natures; nothing is impossible to genius which, in art, is the offspring of patient and earnest devotion to the study of nature in all her moods and varieties.

But to the consideration of Gifford's picture. The foreground represents the verge of a mountain range, over which a brawling rivulet is dashing away from the looker-on. Although we cannot see the abyss beneath, we know that it is there by the wonderful atmosphere which gives at once a sense of depth and distance. Beyond is a beautiful valley, through which a stream is running to the base of the mountain in the foreground, and over which the mists of twilight are resting. The valley rises in exquisite forms up to a chain of mountains which bound our view of the horizon. The sun has set behind these mountains, and the bright light of his trail rises all along and above them, until it enters an overhanging mass of vapor covering all the rest of the sky, which it renders darkly luminous with crimson and gold. The reflected light upon the mists in the valley, bringing out the forms dimly and brightening the waters even to the stream in the foreground, produces an effect which, for truthfulness to nature and exquisite artistic management and manipulation, we have rarely seen equalled.

The brilliant, the gorgeous effect of light is really marvellous—far exceeding, in our estimation, its kindred effect in Church's "Twilight in the Wilderness." Taking it altogether as a bold and truthful transcript of nature and as a work of art, it is one of the most remarkable pictures of the day, and will add a sudden and substantial lustre to a name which is already of brilliant repute in the world of art.

No. 453, "A Summer's Morning on the Massachusetts Coast, near Beverly," is by J. F. Kensett, N.A. Here are few materials for a picture — two rocks, water and a mist — but how magically the master's hand moulds them to a perfect whole, and invests them with interest and beauty. The very rocks do not seem to be impersonal, but are sentient portions of the surrounding scene. Through the warm mist which envelopes the distance the morning sun seems to permeate. It is so real that, as we gaze, we should not be surprised to see the veil of mist disappear, and the sun shine out in all its majesty. It is a picture full of beauties; it is, as they say, "a delicious bit"—and one of Kensett's most successful efforts.

No. 341, "Fowls," is by P. L. Couturier, and a most charming bit of nature it is. The birds are spiritedly drawn and admirably colored. It is a characteristic sketch, animated and full of action, and all the details are carefully and successfully painted. It is small in size but large in value.

No. 457, "Down by the Sea," is a fine picture by A. D. Shattuck. It is a coast view, the surf is beating heavily on the shore and the scene is full of motion. It is a fine study for water, the forms being drawn with great freedom and singular fidelity to nature. They are waves in quick motion, and have all the action of reality. Mr. Shattuck has, however, sacrificed the reality in some degree by the excessive brightness of the light in the nearest breakers, which is not warranted by the clouded sky. But it is a fine picture nevertheless.

Old Father Heinrich.

A paragraph appeared in one of the daily papers stating that Old Father Heinrich, who had just returned from a lengthened tour in Europe, made under every degree of privation, for the purpose of producing some of his orchestral works in his native city, Pesth, in Hungary, was in a state of extreme distress, and calling upon the musical profession to come forward to his assistance. A day or two later the proprietors of Irving Hall generously tendered its free use for any entertainment the profession might get up for his benefit. So far there has been no response to the appeal. Will no one move in the matter? Are all so selfishly absorbed in their own affairs that they cannot give a moiety of their time to cheer and render easy the declining years of that venerable and self-sacrificing musical enthusiast? It is true he belongs to a past generation, and the many who knew him years ago are no longer with us; but there are few who have not heard of Father Heinrich, even though his memory may seem as a tradition of the past. Who is Father Heinrich? Listen, and we will tell you.

A long way back in this century, some forty years, there was a merchant famous alike for his integrity and his success. His dealings were large, but he found time to indulge in his passion for music. Commerce and Art worked well together, until one day the crash commercial came and the merchant was ruined. He gave up everything to his creditors and abandoned trade for ever. He came to America, and absorbed in his musical passion, which had now taken immoveable hold upon him, he started off for Kentucky, at that time almost a wilderness. He built himself a log-cabin, his fiddle his sole companion, and for years picked up a scanty means of existence, he hardly knows how now, sustained in his privations by dreams of mighty works in music which he would produce in the future.

After many years he returned to this city, where, in an unfurnished attic, he wrote his Sinfonias and Cantatas, gaining means to support life by giving a few lessons. He then went to London and played in an orchestra, still writing—still writing. Finding it impossible to produce his works there, he returned to New York, only to commence the same unaided struggle again. He was getting old, and the hope came upon him that if he could only reach his native city, Pesth, his countrymen would give his works a fair trial. Friends came forward and assisted him; he started, and after many privations and struggles finally reached Pesth. The object of his life was then accomplished: he heard his darling compositions finely performed, and, proud in his achievements, bore his honors meekly. But he could not rest away from the land of his adoption, and he returned to New York, rich in spirit but poor in purse.

This is Anthony Philip Heinrich, a life-time devotee to music, who now needs the sympathy of all who love the art. Let not this sympathy be withheld.

The English Quarterlies.

Our quarterly enjoyment is strictly periodical, or we might say our periodical enjoyment is strictly quarterly, or we might otherwise say that the great literary enjoyment which visits us periodically is in the shape of the English Quarterly Reviews, the receipt of which from Leonard Scott & Co. we hereby duly acknowledge. The Westminster contains very interesting articles on "Ancient Danish Ballads," "Alcohol," "Canada," "The Italian Question," "Bible Infallibility," "American Slavery," "Dante and his English Translators," and "Contemporary Literature," which contains, among other things, a most cordial and eulogistic notice of "Motley's History of the Netherlands." The Edinburgh Review is rich with articles of interest, prominent among which are "Japan and the Japanese," "The Victoria Bridge," "Political Ballads of England and Scotland," "Ocean Telegraphy," and a brilliant review of "Motley's History of the United Netherlands." The London Quarterly devotes twenty pages to a review of Motley's book, awarding it almost unqualified praise and admiration. It has, besides, powerful articles on "Canada and the North-West," "Italy," "Iron Manufacture," "The Dogs of History and Romance," "The Welsh and their Literature," besides other able articles. The North British Review opens with an able article upon "India Convalescent," which reviews the whole question of the past and present of the British supremacy in India; also "Shelley and his Recent Biographers," "Lord Dundonald," "Modern Necromancy," "The Political Press—French, English and German," "Home Ballads and Poems," &c.

There is enough solid reading in these four Quarterlies to last a busy man three months, and we need hardly say that the articles are not only varied but thorough and exhaustive of their subjects. It is well for our readers to know that these four Quarterlies and Blackwood's Magazine can be obtained at their New York publishers, L. Scott, Edward Walker & Roberts, at the yearly charge of only ten dollars. In a literary point of view, it is hardly possible to invest ten dollars to greater advantage than in subscribing for the whole.

Do Ri ht!

It is a noble nature which, out of the sorrows and the trials of life, evolves that sentence which comprises all Christian philosophy—Do Right! It proves that sorrow has chastened the spirit, and that trial has brought the soul out bright through all the darkness. The lines which Carrie Calderwood has sent us breathe a sentiment which is full of truth and beauty:

Over the Grave.—By Carrie Calderwood.

Ah! here it is they made her grave
When I was sailing on the wave.
When looking on the sea so blue,
A dark bird close beside me flew:
"Ill omen!" then the sailors cried.
They tell me at that hour she died.

And forth I went in search of fame,
In foreign lands I won a name.
Yes! mine the meed, they call me great,
But I return, alas! too late.
Too late! too late! she sleepeth here,
And now my life is cold and drear.

Oh, when one blessing is attained,
One boon we've fondly sought is gained,
Some other star that lit our way
Hath wandered from our path for aye
Youth's golden hopes are better far
Than all of glory's honors are!

Now I recall thy words to-night,
Thy parting words to me, "Do right!"
Oh, thou in Heaven, my lost Adel,
Those parting words I've heeded well,
For they have never lost their power
In dark temptation's trying hour.

And high shall be my manhood's aim,
Nor will I longer work for fame;
But to the world my life shall be
All that it might have been to thee—
My words and fortune both shall bless
The weary children of distress.

Yes! since I seek my bride too late,
To all mankind I dedicate
The earnest efforts of my soul,
Moved by the magical control
Of those blessed words that summer's night,
Those parting words to me, "Do right!"

A New York Musical Conservatory in Geneseo, N. Y.

The residents of the metropolis have ample opportunities for studying the beautiful art of singing. With such teachers as Signor Bassini, Mrs. Edward Loder and others, there is no lack of means of thorough instruction. But the want of some central establishment in the State, where ladies from various sections of the country could meet and practise the art under competent instructors has long been felt. Peripatetic "Professore" (!) of Psalmody, called by the irreverent Psalm-smiters, hold conventions from time to time, where they do not teach singing and do sell barbarous collections of tune books by the gross; but their successful career of humbug is almost played out, and the time has ripened for a better order of things.

The better order of things is to be inaugurated by Signor Bassini, who is probably the most thorough and successful teacher of singing this side of the Atlantic. He is the most skilful former of the voice that has ever resided among us, having made the nature, character and power of the vocal organs his special study. Ninety-nine out of a hundred of all the teachers literally know nothing of the construction of the voice. They take the voices as they come, and when they have finished with them the inequalities still remain. The formation of the voice, preparing it for the highest degree of cultivation, is Signor Bassini's specialty; he has made it a lifetime study, and has brought the science to perfection. His published "School for Singing" is an admirable exposition of his system, which, if carefully studied and conscientiously persisted in, cannot fail to perfect the voice, to preserve its purity and to render it capable of great exertion without fatigue or deterioration.

The proposed Conservatorio or Normal Academy of Music will hold its meetings at Geneseo, New York, during the months of July and August. Two sessions have already been held there, and the citizens of that place were so interested in its success that they have erected a building capable of accommodating two hundred students, with a fine concert hall which will seat six hundred people. The place is healthy and the surroundings delightful. The term will commence on the 3d of July next, and besides students from all parts of the State, who have already made application, a large number of ladies and gentlemen of this city have secured board in Geneseo, for the purpose of enjoying the pure air of the country and the instruction of Bassini, thus combining pleasure with profit. Messrs. T. E. Perkins and T. J. Cook will assist Signor Bassini, having long studied his system with him; and Mr. J. N. Pychowski, a most thorough artist, will superintend the piano department and lecture to academic classes. There will be a gay and brilliant time at Geneseo during the coming months of July and August.

A New Tragedy by a New Yorker.

"Marriages are Not Made in Heaven" is the somewhat quaintly curious name of a new tragedy which has recently made a hit in Philadelphia. The author is Mr. Rosenberg, of this city, and the actress for whom the play was written was Mrs. Waller. It was warmly complimented by the leading daily papers of Philadelphia, and pronounced a thorough success: while it was as warmly pitched into by all the weekly ones without any exception. Indeed, we recommend the three-quarters of a column close type and all abuse of the Philadelphia Sunday Despatch to the attention of our own critics, as exhibiting the kindly affection existing on the part of the City of Brotherly Love to New York talent. Seriously, however, we congratulate the author on having shown that he was worth so much, so lengthy and such unjust criticism, and trust that before long we shall have a chance of witnessing its performance in this city. Mrs. Waller will make it her strong piece in New Orleans, where she is now performing.

Mason & Thomas's Classical Soiree.

These staunch upholders of the classical in art gave one of their excellent concerts on Tuesday evening, the 26th inst., which was largely attended. The programme consisted of a Quartette by Mozart, No. 6; a Sonata, by Beethoven, Op. 27; Grand Sonata for piano and violin, by Raff; and Mendelssohn's Quintette in B flat, major. The performance was fully equal in excellence to the previous efforts of the gentlemen engaged. The Sonata by Raff, which was played by Mason and Thomas, as well as could be expected considering the composition, which is a wonderful piece of tortuous, discordant incomprehensibility. It sounds as though it was composed by a deaf man and written by a blind man. It sounded as though Mr. Raff was striving all in his power to dodge a concord—he wriggles and squirms, approaches very close, but darts off again in erratic contortions, and only alights upon a common chord when "time's up" and he has to stop. Judging by this single specimen, Mr. Raff's is the most elaborately unpleasant music that we have listened to in years.

Mr. Mason played upon one of Steinway & Sons' grand pianos. It had a noble tone, and its rich and ample power filled the hall in every part.

Concert of Mr. J. M. V. Busch.

Mr. Busch announced a grand concert at Irving Hall for Tuesday, the 26th inst., with orchestra and chorus, but on the night of performance the orchestra was not forthcoming, so the entire first part had to be omitted, and his "Stabat Mater Dolorosa" had to be performed with piano accompaniment alone. This was a disappointing commencement, and there was little in the after performance to put us in good humor. The solos and the choruses were wretchedly sung; the performers did not know their music and were hesitating and uncertain throughout, and their exceeding inaccuracy was rendered more unbearable by the absence of anything like style or method in their singing. Under circumstances so disadvantageous how is it possible to form an accurate opinion as to the merits of the composition? The little that was rendered intelligibly impressed us with the belief that Mr. Busch was a good musician, that he possesses a happy vein of melody, a large sense of dramatic effect, an excellent method of voicing, fair constructive powers and a fine feeling for harmony. We were more struck by the general harmony of the composition than by any novelty or originality in the ideas. The work needs some pruning, especially the codas.

Mr. Borge did wonders in keeping the stray and innocent (of music) sheep in order. He kept them as near up to the mark as possible, and in his laudable efforts he was mainly assisted by one of Steinway & Sons' noble grand pianos. It supported the chorus like an orchestra, and its admirable qualities were the theme of general admiration. We hope to have an opportunity of hearing Mr. Busch's work to greater advantage.

Madame Anna Bishop's Complimentary Entertainment.

This long talked-of compliment to that admirable artist, Madame Bishop, is to take place, positively, at the Academy of Music, on Thursday evening, the 11th of April. The friends and patrons of the occasion have made up their minds to hear Madame Bishop in her most celebrated characters. They have suggested "Norma" and an act from the "Bohemian Girl," the music of which Madame Bishop renders so exquisitely. It will be a sort of gala occasion, and there will be a great turn-out of the best people in the city, for the names attached to the call are among the most prominent of our citizens.

LOSS OF THE YACHT MARY KINGSLAND, OF NEW YORK, ON THE FLORIDA COAST, Near Jupiter Lighthouse—Terrible Suffering of the Crew—Inhumanity of the Lighthouse Keeper—And final Rescue by the Steamship Cahawba.

A novel dramatic enterprise, conceived with spirit and judgment, nearly came to a melancholy termination on the Florida coast, on the 16th inst. It seems that two brothers, Christopher C. and Danforth L. Scott, with their families, started from New York, in October last, in the yacht Mary Kingsland, bound down the Southern coast, to touch at the various seaports for the purpose of giving dramatic performances. They owned the yacht, which was a fine staunch vessel, and the party consisted of Christopher C. Scott and two daughters, aged fourteen and fifteen years, Danforth L. Scott, his wife and two children, aged six and ten years, all of New York. They had accomplished the greater portion of their voyage under favorable circumstances, and had met with fair success. Their last stopping place was St. Augustine, Fla., from whence they started, on the 1st of March, en route for Key West.

An account of the fearful accident which befell them is thus graphically described in a letter from a passenger on board the steamship Cahawba, who was an eye-witness to the rescue of the distressed family by the gallant first officer of that vessel, J. B. Baker, and a picked crew:

"About nine o'clock on the morning of the 16th our look-out discovered a yacht on the beach, high and dry, with a signal of distress flying. Captain Smith at once stood in for the wreck, approaching as near as prudence would warrant, and ordered his best surf boat, under the command of first officer J. B. Baker, to attempt the rescue of the unfortunate men, women and children, now clearly seen from the steamer. With intense anxiety we watched the heroic Baker and his trusty boat's crew as they dashed among the breakers, now tossed into the air, and now sinking beneath the angry sea foam. Quickly the beach is gained, and the noble surf-boat measures her length upon it. The family are gathered, and the wife and mother, with her two children and two nieces, are placed in the boat. And now the deep anxiety of the ship's company becomes intense as the boat, with its precious freight, again dares the frightful breakers. The captain, with spyglass in hand, was watching every movement of the little craft, now darting upward, like a thing of life, and now dropping below the line of vision; it seemed as though we could hear the beating of every anxious heart about us, until the captain exclaimed in triumph, "She's safe! she's safe!"

"Again the trial of another peril came, and again the brave Baker triumphed over the angry breakers, and the husbands and fathers were with their rescued families on board the Cahawba.

"On the morning of March 5, about five o'clock, a heavy north-east gale broke upon the little craft, and, despite their best exertions, they found themselves doomed to be driven on the Florida coast.

"Yielding to the fury of the tempest, they headed for the beach, and, nerved to superhuman efforts, met the awful crash of the beach and surging billows; and, bruised and exhausted reached the inhospitable shore.

"Daylight soon revealed the surrounding desolation. A rude tent, formed from their topsail, was their only shelter from the storm. After three days of suffering, the two brothers started for Jupiter lighthouse, distant eighteen miles, leaving their families to the tender mercies of the bears and panthers, which nightly prowled about their tent.

"Their appeal for aid for their suffering families failed to move the inhuman lightkeeper. They could obtain not even a biscuit. With empty hands and heavy hearts they returned to their suffering families, to hope for rescue only from some friendly sail, or to meet starvation's bitter end. To the north was the inhuman individual who cared not for their sufferings, to the west the impenetrable swamps, and on the south, distant about one hundred and ten miles, another Government station and lighthouse, where, if reached, they might or might not procure relief. Ten days and nights of fearful suffering and forebodings came and went, and no passing sail saw or heeded their flag of distress. During this time the party subsisted mainly on the tops of the palmetto trees which grew around them. On the eleventh day of their trials, Captain Smith came, saw and rescued. The kind welcome and untiring attentions of Captain Smith and the officers and passengers of the Cahawba soon made the rescued party comparatively happy, although all their earthly possessions were left behind them on the beach. A generous contribution among the officers and passengers attested their full sympathy with the suffering and destitute strangers.

"Two things accomplished and the writer will be content; the scorn and derision of all good men of the inhuman conduct, and the dismissal from Government employ of the inhuman keeper of Jupiter light, and the just commendation of the noble and generous impulses of Captain Smith."

Chloroform is becoming quite an agent in robbing the unsuspecting. On the 22d, as Captain Wright was taking his siesta after dinner on board his vessel, the Ashby, lying at pier No. 2, a couple of rogues stole into his cabin and having applied to his nostrils a handkerchief steeped in chloroform, they rifled his desk, pockets, &c. They were, however, seen by a vigilant darkey, who, when they had departed, awakened the sleeping captain. The men were found in a vessel adjoining, in the very act of dividing the spoil. The chloroform applied to them was the police.

Last week a woman died in Philadelphia, who, some years ago, when the cholera ran riot in that city, and struck terror to the stoutest heart, became as celebrated as Florence Nightingale for her brilliant humanity and courage. But of late years she had taken to rum, and on Wednesday, the 20th of March, she was found insensible in an open lot at Philadelphia, from exposure, destitution and rum. She died a few hours afterwards. Her name was Margaret Harman, and her age fifty.

The Rev. Mr. Kalloch, whose passion for a whiskey skin and a pretty piece of calico exposed him to some ungenerous remarks some five years ago, has been invited to preach in Laight Street Baptist Church. He is an eloquent and able man, and an opportunity ought to be given him to abjure his besetting sins.

HUNTING THE CHAMOIS IN THE TYROL.

THE hotel of Achen, at the foot of the lake of the same name, is the rendezvous of the chamois hunters. There, after their toil and peril on the mountains, they hold festival, glad to celebrate by joyous libations the pleasures of meeting again safe and sound. They forget their fatigues in discoursing of the dangers to which they have been exposed, and of the expedients to which they have resorted to defeat the marvellous instinct of the chamois.

The hunting of the chamois is attended with much danger and requires great skill. First of all, the color of the animal renders it exceedingly difficult to see him. Then his agility is extraordinary; his elastic feet can plant themselves on the very smallest points of the rock and he can clear an enormous distance at a single bound. His scent is of marvellous subtlety, being able to discover the hunter at the distance of a league if the wind is favorable; in the contrary case, he can be approached to within forty paces. The chamois can remain several days without drinking, and when a troop of twenty-five or thirty, targed by thirst, draws near to a torrent, experienced sentinels warn them of the slightest danger by a particular cry; the troop immediately disappears, and the hunter has thereby lost the fruit of the longest and most terrible exertions. Spite of this proverbial caution, some of the chamois venture to approach the cheese dairies when the snow drives them from the lofty peaks. A chamois which was swimming across the lake of Achen was once caught by a vigorous young girl who was rowing a boat.

The costume of the hunters in Tyrol is exceedingly picturesque. A felt hat, green or black, adorned with heriboeck plumes and a chamois tuft, a short vest, breeches which do not descend below the knee, in order that the leg may have its whole liberty, coarse strong shoes, duly armed with steel, form the equipment of the Tyrolese hunter. His gun is slung to his back, and he carries in his hands a stick with an iron pike at the end. This stick is indispensable to him for climbing rocks, and for descending gulfs which he is often obliged to cut out for himself. A bag on his back carries the chamois which he has shot. The old hunters disdain this convenience, and simply carry the chamois on their shoulders after having tied its feet. If the roads are very rough, and if rains and the mists have made them slippery, the hunters only take the skin and the horns of the animal. In the month of October the great hunts take place. Numerous beaters drive the game to the point where the hunters are in ambush. One shudders when seeing these bold men climbing the most formidable precipices, hanging over the most frightful abysses, to force the chamois toward the ambush. Often the male chamois turns against the beaters, and in the struggle which ensues both are hurled to destruction.

CHAMOIS HUNTING IN THE TYROL.

OFFICE-SEEKERS IN WASHINGTON.—SCENE OUTSIDE THE ROOM IN THE WHITE HOUSE WHERE THE PRESIDENT HOLDS HIS CABINET MEETINGS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST IN WASHINGTON.—SEE PAGE 310.

OFFICE-SEEKERS IN WASHINGTON.

Scene Outside the Room in the White House where the President Holds his Cabinet Meetings.

Office-seeking has become, of late years, quite a science in this great Republic, and, as an illustration of the manners of the present time, our artist in Washington has given a graphic sketch of the "mob of gentlemen" which generally gathers around the door of the room in the Executive Mansion where Mr. Lincoln holds his Cabinet meetings. When one of the Secretaries comes out from the "Sacred Presence" he is eagerly seized upon by some one who has the good fortune to know him, and is compelled to undergo the purgatory of a series of introductions almost fabulous in extent. The unhappy Minister escapes from his tormentors with the vague idea that he has been captured by a crowd of Smiths, Browns, Joneses and Robinsons. Indeed, he sometimes feels more like the fag-end of a mob himself. The enormous amount of intellect, labor, time and patriotism wasted by office-seekers always puts us in mind of poor Nym's adventure of the fiddle-case, as narrated by that veracious historian, Shakespeare, who deposes that the aforesaid Nym stole a fiddle-case, carried it half a score of leagues, and then, to save himself from being hanged as a thief, sold it for a penny! If our office-seekers would bestow on some reputable calling the energy and toil they waste in securing a spoonful of Government pap, they would die happier and wealthier men.

THE DOOM OF "WHITE-LADIES;"

OR,

MOTHER AND SON.

CHAPTER III.

Easter fell early that year, and it was a remarkably cold season; when the colleges met for the May term there was hardly a promise of spring. The April twilight was falling chill and gray, like a twilight in November, when I came off my long journey, and stumbled up the staircase in a half-frozen state. Sadly comfortless did my little den at Exeter look, after the home I had left that morning. My scout was on his knees before the fire, pretending it burned badly; the truth was, he had only just lighted it. Mr. Marsden had been, he said, about an hour since, and left a note for me on the table; it was only a few lines in pencil:

"I am just come back, and thought you would have been up before me; pray come to my rooms as soon as you do return, for I am sure yours won't be warm to-night. I am now going to make up a rousing fire, and brew some hot punch for you."

I had dined at Taunton; so, leaving the scout to get my things in order, I went at once. The warm room, fragrant with the grateful beverage, and my friend's warm welcome, seemed to take me back home again; he thrust me into an easy chair beside the blazing fire.

"Why, you look half starved with cold, Arthur; I gave that idle rascal of a scout a regular blowing up when I went to your rooms. He had let out the fire, and the place felt like an ice-house.

"Now, Arthur," he said, when we were fairly settled, "you must tell me your news first; I have an idea, that when I once begin, you mayn't get a chance of telling it at all."

"Story? God bless you! I have none to tell. I have been home, and back again at Oxford; that is my whole history. Now for yours, Harry; you look to me as if you had a whole budget."

"I shall tell you the bad news first," Marsden began, with a trouble in his voice. "Indeed, my news from India is so bad, that my mother writes for me to go out."

"Go to India!" I exclaimed. "Was anything very serious the matter?"

"Not exactly to India, but the Cape; my father has been there some time for his health; he does not seem to recover, and my mother is uneasy about him. I wish to Heaven that they had come home last year, as they talked of doing; but he thought himself sure of a baronetcy if he kept at his post, and principally on my account he has stayed on. Why should he? I'm sure I don't want a title." Marsden gave a great poke at the fire. "My highest ambition is to take orders, and settle down in a quiet country living."

"Take orders!—a quiet country living!"—how had his views become so changed? I could guess; ah! I could guess.

He did not keep me in suspense. The next minute, laying his hand on mine, and with a strange joyfulness in his face, which spoke before his words, he cried, "Oh, Arthur, wish me joy—I am the happiest of men."

I wished him joy from my heart. I told him how I guessed long since that it would come some day. And then we sat by the firelight, I listening as he talked about her, and went over all the story of his love. And as I listened I saw how this love, which had taken root almost in childhood, had laid hold on every fibre of the heart. How, kept down, held back, concealed, it had in secret grown from strength to strength, till, overleaping every barrier, trampling all beside beneath its feet, it stood confessed, the great monopolizer, the master of the man. Among all the forms of the chief passion of our human life, this wears the crown for strength and constancy. Not less delightful than to speak of Rose herself, it seemed to be to him to unfold all his plans, to talk of his future life with her. I could but smile, knowing that openhearted, openhanded nature of him so well, to hear him say how if he had but Rose he should want so little besides. His present allowance was five hundred a year; and if Sir John would buy him a living of about that value, when he had taken orders, this, Harry said, was all he should think of asking. Mr. Paulet had left him £500: that would furnish the house. Oh, yes! Mrs. Amyott had calculated it would not only furnish the house, but pay all the expenses of the wedding trip into Switzerland.

"But why should you alter your plans?" I inquired. "Why not take your degree, then marry, and take your wife out to India?"

He shook his head. "No, that would never do; Rose could not stand the climate; her mother and the family doctor both say the same, and it is not the climate alone," he added, thoughtfully. "You know how often we have talked over Indian matters together: you see how careful my mother has been to keep me acquainted with all that is going forward. You can see that my father is almost a king, but like a king on the uneasiest throne imaginable. Every day brings its own difficulty, its own peril. Do you know one day last term they were talking in hall about Lord A.'s huntsman? He had lost his voice through a cold, and ventured out to the dogs one night without his whip; the poor fellow was dragged down, and torn to pieces in a moment. I declare, Arthur, that story made me tremble all over. It seemed such a horrible image of what might happen to my father." He got up, and walked up and down the room. "Sir John is a cool, clear-headed man enough," he went on, as he came back to his chair; "but he says himself a great deal of his wonderful success is owing to his wife. My mother was born for the life; she is equal to any emergency; a danger which would benumb the faculties of most women only serves to quicken hers. Power is her element: she loves authority for its own sake, and has, I think, all the qualities of a ruler. "But Rose, my little Rose," his voice melted into fondness as he spoke the name; "it would never suit her to queen it out there."

Having got back to this theme, the lover dwelt upon it again—it seemed to be exhaustless. But somehow, as I listened to him, I could not help thinking of Lady Marsden. Had her son, engrossed as he was with his passion, no thought, no pity, for the bitter disappointment in store for the mother, who had toiled through all those years with dauntless patience, energy and courage to make straight paths for the feet that should never walk in them? "Oh, this blind love," I thought, "which seals our eyes to every feeling but his own!"

Half consciously I glanced at the portrait; it was so changed in the shifting firelight, that it startled me. Where was the love, the grace, the tenderness? That red glare lent defiance to the eye and bent the brows in an angry frown, while on the lower part of the face strong shadows deepened into a gloom of pride and resolute will. Good Heavens! what a weird likeness it wore to that old Holbein at White-ladies!

"But Arthur," cried Marsden, breaking off in the middle of a sentence, "I must have a light brought here directly, I want to show you something. Here, Robert, light my lamp!" he shouted at the door. When the order had been obeyed, the curtains drawn and the scout had vanished again, Harry produced a morocco case, which contained an exquisite miniature of Rose.

"Is it not like her?" he asked. "I had it taken on purpose to send over to my mother; now I shall show it her myself when I tell her of our engagement."

He took it from my hand, and stood a few minutes gazing fondly at it under the light of the lamp. "Oh Arnott, she can but love her!" he exclaimed. Again I looked from him to Lady Marsden's portrait. The brilliant light had completely restored its wonted expression, the eyes looked down with all their deep maternal tenderness on her son, on the sunny curls, and face so lovely in its guileless youth, of the miniature he held in his hand. Surely the omen was good—I accepted it for my friend.

Sir John's illness hardly cast a shadow on the joy of Marsden's welcome at the Cape. At that time, and, indeed, all through his stay, the treacherous malady granted a respite, which, as so often happens, was hailed as a revoke of the sentence. Perhaps this month was the happiest of Lady Marsden's whole life; her husband's seeming recovery dispelled a terror by which she had lately been haunted, that at her instance he had sacrificed himself to secure his son's interest. The son, for whose presence she had yearned with the longings of her deep and passionate nature, was with her at last; the child she had sent away had come back to her a man, handsome, distinguished in person, highly endowed and cultivated in mind. He surpassed her hopes, he gratified her affection, her pride, her ambition—all the ruling powers of her character at once. This was a pause, a rest, a haven in that life overladen with action and great cares. She talked very little to Harry about his future prospects; her quick eye failed to observe his frequent distractions; she gave herself up, body and mind, to the calm enjoyment of every day as it went by—her life flowed on in a delightful dream. Watching the amendment in Sir John's health, happy in her knowledge that her son was by her side, her heart was tranquil as the sky above her, soft as the gentle air of the Madeira of the Southern hemisphere. Never, one might think, could any mother have been in a happier mood to receive such news as Harry had to give her. Then why did an inexplicable reserve hold him back? why did he let pass day after day, and the secret, which always seemed on his lips, still untold? This was just the question which he asked himself every night, as every morning he said that this should be the day. As he said to himself, he did not often see his mother alone; she was much taken up by her cares for the invalid, and he felt he could not make his confidences before his father. But he did not say to himself that he shrank from confronting Lady Marsden, that he felt his tidings would fall like a thunderbolt in the serene air. Once, indeed, he tried hard to break ground by talking of the family at Watfield vicarage, but not a shade of interest did his hearer show, hardly as much as if he had described the individuals in a flock of sheep, and very soon, indeed, she cut him short, by saying,

"Well, we will dismiss these people, Harry. I had such a very disagreeable impression of Mrs. Amyott in her young days, that if I had known that she was no other than Hetty Vance, I should have begged your uncle Marsden to find some other home for Edward. I can see from her letters she is just the same as ever, indeed she was the sort of person that neither time nor circumstances can improve; but I dare say she makes a good kind nurse for Edward, poor fellow! and as long as he is comfortable we must waive our dislikes."

"How shall I tell her; how shall I tell her?" groaned Harry to himself. But the affair concerned Rose, her mother had nothing to do with it, he comforted himself.

He did tell his secret at last. On the morning of the day before that fixed for his departure, he went into his mother's dressing-room. He had asked for this interview, and found her waiting to receive him, her heart so full of love, her eyes bright in her pride and joy. Some shade of a sweet coquetry enters into the love of every woman, and thus Lady Marsden had this morning made her toilet with more than her usual care, she wished that her son should take away with him an imposing memory of his mother. Perhaps she had never, in the pride of her youthful beauty, found any tribute paid to it so delicious as she did now that pause of his at the door, that unconscious homage to her commanding person, her stately presence, her imperial air. She gave him a place on the sofa beside her; she knew beforehand, so she thought, all that he came to say. He wished, no doubt, to propose that, on account of his father's delicate state of health, he should proceed with them to India, and enter at once on his duties under Sir John. During the night she had busied herself with this scheme, and after looking at it in every point of view, had reluctantly decided not to keep her darling with her. The separation, she reasoned with herself, would not be for long; there were still some arrangements to be made before he entered upon his new duties; it was better he should begin his career with the prestige of an Oxford degree. But all through the early hours, while she was writing and sorting out papers she wished him to take back with him, the thought had been sweet to her that this plan had originated with her son. And now she prepared herself to listen while he should unfold it, with a mingled feeling of pleasure and regret.

A few words—the first sentence undeceived her. As he went on, a wintry storm raged in her heart—it passed into her face. She turned quickly round upon him. But looking into his countenance, she read her own resolution, her own force of character, her own unchanging will; she seemed to see her own nature divided against itself, her inmost powers in battle array against each other. For the first time in all her life this woman felt powerless, baffled, dismayed. Where her foot had stood so firm, a sudden chasm yawned; a rock had risen across her path, before which she lay prostrate and paralyzed. She was struck into a silence, which could find no words.

The man whose heart is overflowing with love is slow to interpret an opposite emotion. Marsden put the miniature into his mother's hand, and having once begun the subject, found it easy enough to pursue; he was only too glad that she should give him a patient hearing; he felt grateful; it was more than he had expected. He told her the story of his love from its first beginning; he described Rose with intense enthusiasm; he spoke with all the eloquence, the energy, the persuasion of a lover; and Lady Marsden, bending low her face over the picture, heard his words as the call of winds, the sound of dropping waters come to a man wholly taken up with one absorbing thought. She was listening indeed, but to that voice which cried within. "As you would sacrifice everything for him, so will he for her; he will give up wealth, ambition—he will give you up, for her sake."

Nor voice nor sound did she utter till Marsden had finished all he could find to say, and appeared to wait her reply. Then she laid the portrait down with one glance upon it, a glance which comprehended all the fierceness of a burning jealousy—all the bitterness of a deep and settled hate. She rose, and said,

"Henry!"—she was not aware that she used the less familiar name—"I have listened to you: listen to me; I shall not have quite so much to say. It seems that woman has a daughter like herself; between them they have managed to entrap you."

Well might her son's blood boil as she spoke. Never, surely, had any other words held half the contempt of these, which fell so coldly, so quietly from her lips. "Mother!" he cried, starting up.

She motioned him back with her hand; "Nay, let me finish. I shall not lend myself to the triumph of these people. Your choice must lie between that family and your own—between me and her. For, remember, from the hour you take that girl for your wife, you cease to be my son." And without another word she left the room.

Poor Marsden! he could easily have met opposition, reproaches, but for this sentence, this cold decree, he was utterly unprepared. Unjust, cruel; so in the anguish of his spirit he judged his mother—a haughty nature, where pride had uprooted tenderness. As for Lady Marsden, no one knew the secrets of her solitude that day—no human ear took in that exceeding bitter cry over her shivered hopes. She met Sir John and her son at dinner with a serene brow and her own most gracious smile; she busied herself with affectionate solicitude over sundry preparations for his comfort during the voyage. Harry could hardly realize to himself the scene of the morning; it seemed like a frightful nightmare. "She will relent, I know she will relent," he thought, as he went to talk the matter over with his father.

But he found Lady Marsden had been beforehand with him here. Sir John lay back in his easy chair, a good-natured, hard-headed man, on whose shoulders many a heavy burden had sat lightly enough; he was by no means given to sentiment, and just now his whole mind was bent on a speedy recovery, and return to his duties. Sir John cut Harry short at once, by saying:

"My dear boy, I must not excite myself about any folly of this sort. I leave the matter entirely in your mother's hand. Take her opinion—I don't mind telling you, that any time when I have not done so, I have found myself in the wrong. You must promise us one thing—that you won't be drawn into marriage before a year at least; that will give you plenty of time to see the absurdity of the whole affair. Why you will be in and out of love a dozen times before then! And now just read me those letters while I take my coffee. We must keep a tighter hand over those native rascals, I can see that—a tighter hand;" and the invalid's poor worn fingers seemed to clutch at some invisible pair of reins.

Something, Marsden could not say what, in that shadowy action, in those wasted hands struck him so to the heart that he could enter no protest against the careless way in which his father spoke of his love. He gave the required promise, read the letters and wrote others, at Sir John's dictation. Next day he sailed with the portfolio of papers Lady Marsden had prepared, put away among his luggage with her own hand. There was truce between the mother and the son.

CHAPTER IV.

Six months after Harry had left, Sir John and Lady Marsden were still staying at the Cape. Sir John was always "better—much better," he said: a little more rest—only week or a fortnight longer—and he should be quite well enough to return to India. And thus the time passed on. But a day came at last on which the invalid acknowledged himself rather worse. A letter had arrived that morning from his son, in which Marsden announced that he had obtained his degree, and stated his reasons for declining to go out to India at full length. He said it was his intention to take orders as soon as possible, and concluded by an entreaty that his father would purchase a living for him, and sanction his marriage at the end of the year of probation. This letter kindled the smouldering flame of Lady Marsden's displeasure, stung as she was to the quick that her son should set her at nought by this appeal to his father's authority. She chose to consider it as a sort of defiance. Sir John, moved by Harry's respectful tone and evident earnestness, had been quite disposed to take his part; but his wife swept away every plea with a fierce energy, and the discussion ended, as most discussions between that married pair had done, by her husband adopting her view of the subject.

But in the noon of the southern night he called her to his bedside. "Helen," he said, with a sick man's wistful gaze into her face, "Helen, your father disapproved our marriage; but we have had a happy life together? Why not let the boy be happy in his way as we have been in ours?"

"No!" was the instant answer, "No! this fancy of Harry's is quite another thing. He has fallen into a snare set by cunning persons. We must help him out of it—we must not let him destroy his prospects and make shipwreck of his whole life. They shall not gain their ends."

Sir John sighed wearily. "Well, I leave it to you. No doubt your judgment is right. You will find everything put completely in your power. Now kiss me, Helen, before I go to sleep."

The voice struck on the ear of his wife as changed and feeble, perhaps because she herself had spoken with such unfaltering decision. She bent over her husband, kissed him, smoothed down his pillow, and he slept, his hand in hers. In that sleep he passed away.

The first shock of her widowhood past, I believe Lady Marsden felt much satisfaction in the knowledge that her husband's last words were literally true. By his will, made during the early years of their marriage, she was left the uncontrolled mistress of his large fortune; and both her children were entirely dependent on her. It seemed very strange that, after Harry had grown up to man's estate, Sir John should have made no change in the disposal of his property. Still, the constant pressure of public affairs on him, his long separation from his son, and his unbounded confidence in his wife, all taken into consideration, we must allow that many more unaccountable wills are proved at Doctors' Commons. A short time—only a few months—earlier, Lady Marsden would have looked upon herself simply as a steward for Harry, and would gladly have given up everything to him; now, she addressed herself to battle with something like a thrill of joy at finding a new power, a fresh weapon put into her hands. This tone pervaded her letter written to Marsden from India, whither she had proceeded from the Cape to arrange her affairs, prior to her final return to England. She offered a sort of compromise; he might take the life he preferred; if he chose to give up India and his brilliant prospects there, he was free to do so. The liberal allowance his father had made him would be continued; and whenever he should settle in the world by making a marriage worthy of himself, he would find her disposed to act most generously towards him (this was underlined). With regard to any low marriage, she went on to say he knew her mind already, and might know it would always be the same.

On the widow's return to England, the first step she took was the removal of poor Edward from the vicarage. She made the change ostensibly that he might be placed under the care of a London physician on account of his health, then rapidly failing—indeed, he died a few months afterwards—but I have no doubt her real reason was, that she might not be brought in any way into contact with the Amyotts, and, perhaps that Harry might not have an excuse for going down to Watfield. By this time Marsden had taken orders and got a curacy in London. His parish lay too far from the West End for him to make his home with his mother, but he was often at her house, and a looker-on might have supposed that all the old affection existed between them. In reality, a wall of separation had been built up. For, if a common interest can draw even enemies together, what tie or sympathy will not give way between two persons, where the aim and hope of one is to destroy the aim and hope of the other? At the end of two years matters came to a crisis. Mr. Amyott had died rather suddenly, leaving his family in very straitened circumstances, and Lady Marsden took this occasion to write to his widow. Her letter said plainly enough that it was quite vain to hope she should ever be brought to consent to a fulfilment of her son's engagement; that, from the day he married Miss Amyott, his allowance would cease, and he would have nothing more to expect, either during his mother's lifetime or at her death. More than this, she actually offered Mrs. Amyott a comfortable annuity on the sole condition that the marriage should be broken off at once.

This letter had all the effect on the vicar's widow its writer had calculated. Bitterly disappointed in her own marriage, she knew quite enough of her former schoolfellow to feel sure that she was more than likely to keep her word. Mrs. Amyott thought it best to say nothing of the proposed annuity, but she discovered, all on a sudden, that it was a most shocking thing for Marsden to disobey his mother's wishes. So, after this engagement, which she herself had tried to bring on in every way, had lasted three years, she coolly forbade him the house. But Rose was by no means disposed to play the part of a docile daughter. If her lover were willing to give her up, she said, then she was prepared to release him from his engagement; but if not, why, she was as ready to share his poverty as she would have done his fortune. And Marsden? Rose was dearer to him than ever. Give her up! He would give up life itself first. Now, they knew the worst, he argued. In spite of all, his mother loved him; once married, and all opposition vain, he felt sure she would be reconciled. Looking at Rose, he thought, indeed, that a heart much harder than his mother's must melt in that gentle presence. So pleaded the lover; and so effectually did he plead, that, in spite of all Mrs. Amyott's hysterics and reproaches, the quiet wedding took place in less than a year after the vicar's death. This imprudent young couple began the world with more than the ordinary capital of love between them, and, for worldly possessions, a curacy of a hundred and fifty a-year, with a house, and just one thousand pounds, half this being Mr. Paulett's legacy, the rest Marsden had contrived to save.

The only notice Lady Marsden took of her son's marriage was to discontinue his allowance, give up her house in town and go on the Continent. There she spent nearly six years, during which time, as she moved from place to place and gave Harry no clue to her address, all communication between them was effectually cut off. At the end of this period she suddenly returned to England, in the late autumn, and took up her abode at White-ladies. She thus became my parishioner, for I had been presented to the living of Hartford, a small preferment which I could hold with my Oxford fellowship, about two years before.

Lady Marsden's advent, the tasteful and modern furniture which arrived from London, the general brightening-up of the old house, caused a stir and thrill throughout our little village which did not subside till some time after the mistress of White-ladies had settled down into a quiet, but by no means an entirely secluded life. She drove out daily, received and paid visits among the few families of the neighborhood, and led the ordinary life of a lady in the country. As to me, as the hard-worked London correspondent, sent to keep his wife and three children pith the small income on which he had married, he seemed to have dropped idle one of Lady Macadam's memory, that of her acquaintance and the villagers' Mrs. Martin, my housekeeper, who had been in Mr. Pride's service, spoke of him sometimes; and old Christian would ask me now and then if I had had "news lately of Master Harry?" but, with these exceptions, I never heard his name mentioned. One might have thought that among the poor of this quiet hamlet some memory of the boy, the ragged, dirty, and, light-hearted young man, who had always a smile, a kind word, and a penny for the poorest woman he met, but it is not every little village of country town or village like the great world, in its ingratitude and forgetfulness, that has a long memory. The pool "is locked in with bars of sand" as brackish as the sea itself.

Lady Marsden never gave me to understand that she would like she recognized in me the Arthur Arnott who had been her son's college friend; but she received me with the courtesy due to a clergyman of the parish; and during the winter months I was regularly invited to dine at Whitelands. Here, and here alone, I had been glad to refuse her hospitalities. I could not sit at the well spread table kindly, while the thought of the poverty-stricken home leaving the pained contrast of my friend's home present to my mind. The boys and the servants waited on us, and the dinners at Whitelands reminded me of a certain treasured silver teapot, in whose plain and solid case I had first seen the delicate tea and fine loaves; and I could not see my lady, in her soft and sweeping silks, the black lace veil, the jewelled fingers, the powdered hair, the light relief afforded her sombre costume by the dainty lace falling over it here and there, and wonder—I could not help it—if such fine hose herself, in that homely dress, renewed less often every year. Still, looking at my lady's face, and hearing her kind, low voice, no implacable resentment had cast upon her son's life—no one, not even Mrs. Martin herself, knew as well as I that he was dead. I could yet thank God that he was happier, richer in his poverty than she in her idleness. For, leading a life of duty, he had learned a lesson that she was not alone in her solitude, that two housemates were hers—sorrow and pain. Sorrow for her son, and pain in the food because worms eat it her lips; they watched by her cosmetics and sleep fled where they kept vigil.

(To be continued.)

THE CABINET OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

In the last number of our Illustrated Paper we gave a spirited sketch of Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet deliberating upon the present important subject. We now, in the same connection, present to the portraits of the seven distinguished men who control the public destinies at this time of great national difficulty. Together they collectively they are equal to the crisis the future will decide: but from the experience of their past individual lives we have a hopeful presage of moderation and energy, and they can all eminently men of the people even in our Republic.

HON. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

We have in our paper of January 7, 1860, given so full a biography of this eminent statesman, that a very brief notice is all that is necessary on the present occasion. He was born in Florida county, New York, on the 16th of May, 1801, he was educated at Union College, New York, and was admitted to the practice of the Arts in 1826, and the succeeding year established himself in Auburn, in the profession of the law. In 1830 he was elected a member of the State of New York, and in 1834 was elected a candidate for Governor of his native State. He was, however, defeated by Mr. Marcy, through the Anti-Masonic excitement. State of Franklin Pierce. In 1830 Mr. Seward was again run for Governor against the same distinguished opponent, and was unphanly defeated. In 1849 he was chosen by the Legislature to United States Senator for six years, and was re-elected in 1855 for a similar term, at the end of which he declined a renomination. He was a prominent candidate for the Presidential nomination, but was defeated in the natural object of his ambition by Republican journalist. His abilities and influence being, however, indispensable to the Republican party, he was put forward as the most necessity pieced at the head of Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet. Critics cism as sure as well known as Mr. Seward is perfectly unnecessary, and we refer only in candor to the opinion of the audience that his cautious policy will lead to a peaceful settlement of our present unhappy dispute with the Southern portion of the Republic.

HON. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury.

Governor Chase, as he is popularly called, was born in 1808, and educated in Washington, Ohio, by his uncle Bishop Chase, a name dear to the Episcopalian people of the West as the founder and the Presidency of Cincinnati College, young Chase accompanied his venerable relative, and studied with great assiduity and success. He then removed to the city of Cincinnati, in Ohio, himself, and entered himself at Dartmouth College, Hanover, where he took his degree in 1826. We next find him settled down in Washington under the well-known William Wirt, then Attorney-General of the United States. Here he studied closely for the bar, and next year returned to Cincinnati, where he opened a law office. In 1830 he was born a member of the United States Senate, and has twice enjoyed the distinction of being elected Governor of Ohio.

HON. SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War.

This eminent and successful Pennsylvanian was born in Lancaster county, in the early part of 1797. When he was quite a boy his father died, leaving the family almost entirely poor in their own fortune. In 1816 he settled at Harrisburg and became a printer in the office of Mr. Peasley. Here he displayed energy and correct deportment made him many friends, and laid the foundation of his future fortune. After working at the printing trade for Peacock's office he went to Washington City, and was employed as compositor on one of the journals. In 1820 he was appointed Adjutant-General, and in 1822 was Quartermaster-General, and one of the Visitors of West Point—a compliment only bestowed upon the most distinguished officers of the army. Since that time he has been principally engaged in the railway and banking operations of the latter State, of which he is considered the most efficient one with which he looks after his own interest, he has never lost character for honor and integrity. He was elected Senator for Pennsylvania in 1856, and on the formation of the Lincoln Cabinet was chosen to fill the responsible position of War Minister.

Hon. Caleb B. Smith, Secretary of the Interior.

Caleb B. Smith was born in Boston, Massachusetts, April 16, 1808, and emigrated with his parents to Ohio in 1814. They received his education at the Cincinnati College and Miami Union, adopting the profession of the law on leaving the latter. In 1832 he established and edited a Whig journal called the Indiana Sentinel. In 1840 he was elected a member of the Legislature, re-elected in 1844, 1850 and 1851—in the latter year he was elected as Speaker. In 1847 and 1848 he was a member of the Board of Fund Commissioners, and was a member of the House of Representatives from 1843 to 1850. Till his nomination as member of the Cabinet, he practised his profession in Cincinnati.

Hon. Gideon Welles, Postmaster-General.

Mr. Welles was born in Connecticut, and has been for forty years a prominent politician. He was originally a Democrat, but of late years he wheeled into the Republican ranks. He was made Postmaster of Hartford by Mr. Van Buren, but resigned the office in 1841. Under Polk's Administration he held an appointment in the Navy Department, and distinguished himself by his application and integrity. When the Repeal of the Missouri Compromise became a Democratic measure he left his party, and the breach became still wider during the Kansas and Nebraska discussions. In 1850 he was sent as a delegate to the Chicago Convention, and formed one of the Committee to Springfield, to announce to Mr. Lincoln his nomination.

Hon. Edward Bates, Attorney-General.

This eminent statesman is a native of Virginia, born born in Goochland, about thirty miles from Richmond, in September, 1793. His father having a large family and a very small estate, the future Cabinet Minister had to pick up his education in a desultory manner. In 1814 he went to St. Louis, and commenced the study of the law in the office of Rufus Easton. In 1817 he was called to the bar, and by slow degrees acquired an excellent practice. In 1820 he was elected a member of the Legislature. He is, however, a man of talent, integrity and application.

DRAMA.

Wallack's Theatre.—The most interesting dramatic event of the week was the production at this house, on Wednesday evening, of a new comedy translated from the French by Mr. Lester Wallack, and called by the same. The title of this piece is "Rewards," and we cordially congratulate both author and audience that the former has not the bravery to discard at once all claim to originality, seeing that the piece is unconnected as a sequel to anything else extant. This is, indeed, refreshing in these days of wholesale and unblushing appropriation. The piece is, in fact, entirely new in all respects, a clear and good one; the cast is full, but working out with great ease and fluet, and the dialogue sparkles throughout with gems of the first water. It is literally impossible to do justice to the acting of the principal performers—bestowed upon this comedy by our duty entrepreneurs, that we should have to express our praise in terms of the most unbounded eulogy. The audience, during several of the scenes, being literally convulsed with laughter. Mr. Lester Wallack, Mr. Brougham, Mr. Fisher, Mr. Walcot, Mr. Blake, with the minor parts, were all admirably sustained, and Miss Rose Egerton, respectively in Mrs. Hoey and Mr. Lester Wallack, hardly so well as we have a right to expect of them. Miss Rose Egerton, however, in the part of Madame Lisieur entirely too heavy, and Mr. Young dressed and acted in a manner that would have rendered the performance ridiculous in the eyes of a critical Yorkshire.

The piece, however, the very exquisite acting of Mr. Hoey and Mr. Lester Wallack must make a success, and we have no doubt that it will be played this week. Mr. Brougham's farce, called "Love and Marriage," is also very amusing.

Miss Keene has added to the apparently exhaustless attractions of "The Seven Sisters," by introducing a new dancers, Mlle. Bolero. She is both pretty and clever.

Barnum's.—The manager of this establishment can only redeem what he says—that he while away an hour or two very pleasantly at his museum. The performances are of the most miscellaneous character. The Wizard of the North, and Aunt Sidney, dramatic performances are given in those who admire the Wizard, while the Aquarium, the Happy Family, and the Wax Figures will interest. Barnum's Amusement Museum is an institution that great with the growth of New York, and is the Elephant of America.

PERSONAL.

HON. T. CORWIN, our newly appointed Minister to Mexico, has appointed his son to his Secretary of Legation.

HON. CARMEN M. CLAY, Minister to Spain, has given the Secretaryship of the Legation to his son, who has left for Madrid to fill the honorable trust and of such ability.

HON. STEPHEN WILLIAMS died at Stonington on the 23d March, after a very brief illness.

HON. G. W. FENIMORE, Member of Congress for Pennsylvania, died at Scranton on the 24th March.

The Rebels say that Major Anderson has destroyed that should any resistance be offered to the vessel sent by President Lincoln to take his troops away, he would blow up the fort. This is a mistake. Major Anderson has no powder to blow up the fort, and he got rid of the inconvenient here.

The Charleston Courier of March 25th announces the arrival there of Mr. Forsyth, late Minister to Washington, says that, before he left the Capital, Mr. Seward desired him to say to the Southern people that there was no danger of a collision between the forces, and nothing to prevent for an amicable arrangement of the affairs of the country.

The Commissioners of the Southern Confederacy, Messrs. Yulee and Rost, are to embark in a day or two for London. They are specially charged to organize a recognition of the Southern Confederacy by the British Court, and also to make arrangements for the regular employment of the Great Eastern.

FORBES, the well-known Scotch correspondent of the London Times, has write genuine bulletin on the topics of the day.

The Rebels have appointed a Minister to the Italian Parliament, a busy in writing a national song for the Italians.

The Charleston Courier of March 25th says that a man that city last Sunday, by which Senor Secin and her husband, Huntington, undertook to direct the Rev. Mr. Bacon's congregation, and succeeded in getting a good paper to his discredit. Mrs. Secin was very anxious to assist in the job, but was requested, Huntington informed her, to keep herself quiet. Mrs. Secin replied that "she was not going to see the minister color down and beg him by insulting his congregation," and left the church. Mr. Bacon, however, the minister preached his sermon, and the collection was taken up.

It is said that Mr. Adams, our Minister to England, objects to Mr. Wilson, editor of the London Times, being received.

HON. W. L. LAMAR has been promoted with a superb team of bays by Messrs. Ferguson, Bros., of Kentucky. They were for second from Cincinnati to W. L. Y. last week.

DR. HENDERSON, late Professor of Theology at the University of Aberdeen, paper at Edinburgh, and an act personal friend of Sir Walter Scott, died recently. He was upwards of eighty years of age.

Since there seems to be a difficulty in suiting Mr. Sothern with a mission, why not make him our Consul to Naples? He is a gentleman to whom the post of diplomatic propriety of that noble people would dare to hang him!

Are the American Consuls abolished? We ask for information. We had Shakespeare, Locke, Bacon, Milton, Goethe, Franklin, Napoleon and Burns Consuls.

MR. CARRER, the proprietor of the famous piece of resort at West Point, Cozzens' Hotel, has leased the Fifth Avenue Hotel and refitting the hotel in Alabama, have both retained their appointments, and will leave West Point immediately for Washington. The latter young gentleman is a son of Commander Raphael Semmes, who resigned from the navy about a month ago. There are now no cadets at West Point from the Southern States.

Gideon C. Granger is now in Montgomery, Alabama. Although Mr. Granger is a native of Connecticut, he has been of a Jailbird for a decade. He has left it is supposed to accept the Consulate to Liverpool under the Southern Confederacy. Let him, however, look out for the Habeas Corpus.

It is said that a party of capitalists are about commencing a factory at Gleneden, Saratoga county, for the manufacture of Bibles, to be sold to the Southern Brothers and sisters at a reduced price. Governor H. Hayes's name is said to be one of those most prominent in the movement.

M. Mocquard, is the John Sothern of the House of Commons. So says Fisher of Sunbury.

FOREIGN NEWS AND GOSSIP.

There is a murderous principle in human nature, which ever and anon comes out in such exhibitions as Sunday rope-dancing and feats of that description, including the building of tenement-houses. An English paper contains a thrilling account of the narrow escape one of these rope-dancers had on the 3d March, at the Rock Gardens, North Cliff, Scarborough. That place of resort was, on the afternoon of the day mentioned, crowded with visitors, attracted to the company by a Madame Saqui, a dancing rope-walker. The performance on Saturday afternoon was announced to be commenced by the lady in a balloon up to rise at a considerable incline, from the garden to the top of the saloon. This she accomplished most satisfactorily, she returned down the wire about one-third of the way, when the balloon exploded, and the feat of which was bursting to make her remarkable. While in the position the wind blew the balloon to the left, and the lady, in order to keep it from coming in contact with the wire, let go with her right hand. Her left arm was entangled in the machinery, screaming and fainting among the crowd cannot be described. In the course of a few minutes the lady was released from her perilous position. She was then lowered, and she was drawn to the side of the cliff and returned. Her left arm was broken in two places, and she was greatly injured.

A STRANGLING accident occurred lately in London. Mr. Vanzitter's house-keeper, Mrs. Wallis, had charge of the establishment in the absence of the master. The drawing room was blown out of the window, and, falling on the stone area, she was killed instantly. The explosion took place on Thursday. The gas-fitters had been employed to make some proper musical attendance for her.

DURING the sentence of the Rev. Mr. Dodd, the head of the public establishment in Cleveland that a prisoner was committed to take his trial upon three charges, one of them an embezzlement of £12,000. The prisoner was a man of great wealth, and was a clergyman. His wife, a Miss Hoffman, was a beautiful distance of detention till he had, famous-like, brought down the entire establishment. Correspondence every thing was in his name. He was the owner of the hunting and house property, which passion, however, seems to have been the only one he indulged in. He was sent to jail in default of bail.

It will be remembered that while the Duke of Newcastle was here attending the funeral of Prince Albert, the daughter of the Duke, the Lady Victoria Pelham-Clinton, and Lady Yarmouth, made in her father's displeasure. This young lady is the heiress of the Duke of Newcastle. Then Lady Yarmouth is the daughter of Lord Dudley Stuart, and her mother was Lady Clementina Fitzroy, married to Viscount Jocelyn, Earl Roseberry, and a leading Whig.

A TWENTY GUINEAS is progressing on a certain room (47) of the ANNE House, which we think must give our friend Charley Sinson considerable uneasiness. The Duke of Wellington, on the inspection of the room, left a barber account.—Writes which till now was never considered as finished. It is a bill for shaving, hair-cutting, and powdering, and is dated 1806. The barber who made the charges was well known in his day, and was very fond of his duties. Surely this is an inquiry into the occupation of the spirits while the mortal remains of the Duke of Wellington were lying in state, and while the fetes in the investigation. The first is that when a witness named Austin and Mr. Sinson, one of the counsel for the Magistrate, put a question to him, as the conclusion that Austin was "grossly intoxicated." The next is the joke, which was immediately taken up by the audience, and which was received with great applause.

Mr. Austin—the gentleman owes me eighteen dollars now, and I should like to have it before I leave the country.

Mr. Hope—Mr. Austin owes me eight dollars. (Increased laughter.)

Mr. Austin—I am perfectly sober now, and always am by 9 o'clock. (Renewed laughter.)

Now, why an eight dollar joke should provoke more laughter than an eighteen dollar one is a question which we shall send an artist and special correspondent to Albany to find out.

New Jersey has at last regained her position in society. Last week she bid for entertaining Abe Lincoln for three hours, when on his way from New York to Harrisburg, was realized. It was for the moderate sum of $1,000,000, or $300 an hour, or $50 a minute, with $5 to treat Corcoran with drinks. If Abe Lincoln, the Old Man of the Mountain, or the Sphynx of Jacques Cartier, in New York, the kid would have amounted in upwards of seven millions of dollars! The change is about $6,000, and is limited.

On Tuesday, the 26th, a fire broke out between eight and nine o'clock in the morning, in the Bank of Montreal, at Albany in Canada West, and was not extinguished with any loss or life. It originated in the drying apparatus. The damage is about $6,000, and is insured.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Hon. Simon Cameron, Secretary of War
Hon. S. P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury.—Photographed by J. F. Ryder, of Cleveland, O

Hon. Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy
Hon. W. H. Seward, secretary of State.
Hon. Montgomery Blair, Postmaster-General

Hon. Caleb B. Smith, Secretary of the Interior
Hon. Edward Bates, Attorney-General

THE MEMBERS OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S CABINET.—From Photographs by Brady.—See Page 311.

ERLE GOWER;

OR, THE

SECRET MARRIAGE.

By Pierce Egan,

Author of "The Flower of the Flock," "The Snake in the Grass," &c., &c. &c.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

His epochs
Are made in gems, bright angel, for then set
The jewels of his life, his loves upon his head,
As in a waged encounter from hence
Take the white aspect of his days, the rest
Of enemies that fell back to gone as him.
He knits the locks of his unbraided years,
And calls upon the bosom of the air.—Shakespeare.

FRANCINE remained a moment only with Lady Kingswood ere she came in his arms.

Her immunity from the humiliation of his touch rested alone in his sacred wisdom and exhaustion from the rescue she made so bad suffered. From about last wan of strength, he was compelled to rest her inanimate form against the base of the nearest tree, from beneath which they could see results for her exertions upon her restoration to consciousness.

It was in this moment, when the hour and frontline passion he entertained for his misguided woman might have been supposed to have exhibited itself in some of the wild extravagance, that a shroud so ego. Pierce, whose brain was yet unsettled and confused, and could be concentrated on every point only by a severe mental strain, as filled with a sorrow dread of the sudden appearance of Lord Kingswood, as the sudden and unexpected appearances of such a discovery as he would then make, he had a most wholesome fear.

But he, in such a situation, been endowed with the possession of all his faculties, as in opposite to the contrary, he would have, unseen, against what would have tempted him; his hand in power, weak and wandering in mind. He thought alone of he hazard of the situation and the necessity of procuring an interview which could be prolonged only at the imminent risk of being broken by some one from whom, of all the world, concealment alone should be concealed. He had to remember, he dared not leave the spot in quest of any, and could not, for he had many things, pressing to her to be the gurgings of Lady Kingswood, and straining his powers of hearing to catch the sound of an approaching footstep.

Lady Kingswood was gifted with strong passions, and endowed with singular strength, but they were impressions of the moment. The fainting fit which she would have been a brilliant example of the position in human society which it is possible for a woman to occupy. She, in the first place, assumed a state of unworthy, feeble promptness of an ear-saving footman, and her energies were not to be called upon in the slightest degree for her own preservation.

There was no fear of her discovery. Pierce knew that, and was conscious that when she heard Francine's communication as a fact that her husband—Sir Lord Kingswood—had wronged her—that the passion of her life subdued hours in the strength, shivering, trembling, shaking her, by thrusting her with such violence, energy into the bosom of her husband, to be with and with.

Some such blow as she had expected for years. She had been hustling for a while even to the moment when she directed to have seeking—and not cause to search, and it had come now with a terrific force, which, for the moment, rendered all her faculties benumbed.

A previous marriage, with a child born, herself disgraced, and her son a illegitimate child, was a discovery which would have overwhelmed any one with yet more powerful mental apprehension than she possessed. Death, real, or death in life, was the fate which she knew, being, as she considered, what she was inexperienced.

When, with ghastly visage and panting breath, recovered from her absolute swoon, she turned her eyes, by the light of the moon, on the face of her husband, he was terrified by its expression.

An ailment she had suffered from a small hand-lamp-bride to the counterpane a ghastly character, but there was something terse and determined in her look, and in the tone of her hoarse voice, which he had never heard before.

As she clutched him once more by the wrist, he saw her white teeth grating together with rage, and her eyes seemed to start from their sockets. Her purple veins trebled at once and bloody on her lips, terribly exhibiting the intensity of her emotion.

"Pierce," she exclaimed, hoarsely, "the dirt is cast; I will be revenged! Murder, murder, and never forgiveness! Oh, Pierce, Pierce, you have been a parallel, and though Lord Kingswood had his thousand hearts, I would rend, tear them to pieces!"

"For mercy sake, my lady, be calm, be composed, be yourself, I implore you, mercy sake, my lady, be calm, be composed, be yourself, I implore you, mercy sake, my lady, be calm, be composed, be yourself, I implore you,

DARING ROBBERY AT THE NEW YORK EXCHANGE BANK—APPEARANCE OF THE CARPET CELLAR, NO. 191 GREENWICH STREET, WITH THE HOLE IN THE WALL BY WHICH THE BURGLARS ENTERED THE BANK—MANNER IN WHICH THE BURGLARS ARE SUPPOSED TO HAVE WORKED—ON THE LEFT IS THE SPOT WHERE THEY DEPOSITED THE EXCAVATED DIRT AND RUBBISH.—SEE PAGE 315.

famous to humanity in Paris. He had not even a "de" before his name, and papa was determined upon a title to lift the great house of B—— into a position in life. The young man had never spoken to papa—he would as soon have thought of jumping up to the top of the July Column, therefore papa could not see any impropriety in his constant attendance on mademoiselle, and more frequently than any one else taking the favored position at her side. The evening we allude to there was a large assemblage of guests at the table. Two the papa had fixed his mind upon for his daughter to marry, not both at once, but if one wouldn't the other might propose. Relatives and friends were in great abundance at the long and well-filled banqueting table, but somehow, the young gentlemen we allude to had got again the favorite post by the side of the heiress, though papa remembered he had arranged all this very differently. In the midst of this sumptuous banquet the winter took effect in Paris like it did once or twice in London, and left the company in the dark, for the gas went out in the chandeliers, and the proprietor of the establishment nearly swore, but quite made up his mind that he would never have gas again in the house, and be a patron of the more aristocratic thing, wax. Wax was brought quickly by the servants, and darkness was over. There was a great deal of giggling and joking at the contretemps, and a good many hits of badinage were fired off; but a practical joker turned the fire at once, and, in a loud voice, drew the attention of the host and all present to the daughter and the young gentleman by her side. All eyes were at once turned, and there, behold, the union was complete—from the tip of the young gentleman's long moustache to the tip of the young lady's curl, the nearest to her lip, there was a fine thread of a macaroni-like substance. A roar of laughter followed, for it was as clear as daylight, as gaslight, or lovelight, that there had been a kiss in the dark, and that a very good feeling existed between the two. The affair was too éclatant to pass over; the joke never ceased at that table, and, though the father at first was angry and inclined to be perverse, either the joke, or the wine, or his good heart, caused him to relent, and to give that greatest blessing to expectant lovers, a father's consent.

BURGLAR ENTERING FROM EXCAVATION INTO THE VAULT.

The Origin of Steeplechasing.—It may be not generally known that the now popular sport of steeplechasing had its origin on the Wolds of Lincolnshire, and that the first race of the kind was got up between two members of the Brocklesby Hunt—Field Nicholson, Esq., and T. Brooks, Esq.—the latter of whom is still alive, and in the enjoyment of hale and hearty health. The two gentlemen in the year 1819 matched their favorite horses for an across country race—from Beelsby Church to that of Little Coates, the distance being about six miles. The race came off, but on which side the victory was I cannot remember. The race, however, caused much excitement in the neighborhood, and led to general hunting, or "steepleracing."

The rifled guns have been lately tried in Berlin against four and a half inch iron plates used in the construction of cuirassed ships, and, as the Prussians state, with the greatest success. At a distance of a thousand paces the balls went through the plates as if there were no resistance, while at three thousand five hundred paces the effect was quite formidable enough to forbid the approach of vessels within such range. The experiment has a practical bearing at the present time, inasmuch as the proof has been furnished by it of the possibility of occupying the island of Fühnen despite the attacks of the Danish navy. It is also anticipated that the blockading of German ports will be much hampered, the same cause being necessitated to give such a wide berth to the batteries as to require a larger force than ordinarily lies at their disposal. The result of the target shooting is said to have produced a lively sensation upon the French Ambassador who attended the practice. There are, at present, many officers and privates from all the various states of the Confederacy staying in Berlin for instruction in the use of the new weapon, which are being manufactured by Prussia for the Southern Government. The Prussian rifle is a breech-loader, and subject to certain modifications is said to be superior in point of range and practical worth to any other in existence. Where the greatest care is required in the construction, the number of those turned out from the various manufactories does not as yet exceed six or seven hundred—a small amount when it is considered that many are required for the field artillery, the federal fortresses, the navy, the gendarmerie, the gunboats, and other purposes of offence and defence.

THE BURGLARS PRIVATE OFFICE, FORMED OF CARPET ROLLS, FITTED WITH STOVES, COOKING UTENSILS, DEMIJOHNS, &C.—ENTRANCE CONCEALED BY CARPETS.

FACTS ABOUT COAL.

The Houston Iron Works, in New Jersey, consume annually more coal than the county town of Morris. The village mill of Trenton consumes more than the city, with its 15,000 inhabitants, and the Montrose Works more than the county of Baltimore. All the world, in fact, is burning coal, and is, therefore, interested in knowing whether she is likely to be supplied. Some years ago, in the early history of Pennsylvania Coal Mining, a report gained currency in Philadelphia that the workmen at Mauch Chunk had reached the bottom of the mine. They mistook the thickness of the vein for its extent. Panic seized on the Lehigh Company's stockholders, and the shock fell twenty years, as well they might, if the coal had actually run out. But coal veins, however thick, are not on an average only from ten to sixty feet in thickness; those in England rarely exceed a depth of a few feet. Yet England mines 70,000,000 tons annually, and the best geologists estimate the quantity that may yet be got at 146,000,000,000 tons. The British coal fields cover an area of 8,400 square miles; but those of the continent cover 196,000 square miles, in addition to which new fields of great extent are being constantly discovered. England feels no alarm at any prospect of her coal fields not holding out, and this country ought to be equally confident of her inexhaustible supply. The quantity mined in England has actually quadrupled within the last few years, but in this country, from 1839 to 1849 it doubled itself every five years, and it continues to grow at a far more rapid rate than it does in England. The whole annual consumption of the world is estimated at 100,000,000 tons, and we see that this vast quantity is constantly increasing. At the present consumption of this figure, the Pennsylvania coal fields alone would honor the draft for 1,000 years. Even when all the great Appalachian field would meet the demand for 1,000 years, the rate of use would be too annually, and the productive coal fields of North America alone would be able to supply the world for 2,000 years. It is a most curious feature in the great coal deposits, that Providence has located the most abundant ones in the coldest countries, where fuel is most required. Even Spitzbergen is reported to have coal, but not prove, however, that coal does not exist abundantly in Central America, or in Central and Northern Asia, and discoveries in these future explorations will uncover deposits in those countries equal to the supposed wants of future ages. But geology has determined the great fact that the coal mines of the United States will be certain to hold out.

Throat Affections.

FROM REV. A. BOWLEY, A. M., PRESIDENT ATHENS COLLEGE, TENNESSEE: I have received much benefit from the use of BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES, before and after preaching, as they prevent hoarseness, to which I am liable, and relieve the throat when sore from extra use. I can recommend them as advantage to me. Several clergymen of my acquaintance, to whom I have given the Troches, have been benefited by them.

Downer's Prolific Seedling Strawberry.

THIS splendid new variety, ready in June, is a productiveness the famous Wilson's Albany, and is quality very far superior, and is entirely free from each of everybody who may desire them, viz: On the receipt of One Dollar we will send, by return mail, a purchaser's hand. 25 LIVE PLANTS by mail, under 5,000 miles, and 50 for 5,000 miles and upwards. Also, by mail, delivered in Boston, Mass., a quart of Seedlings.

J. W. DOWNER & SON,
Cohasset, Norfolk Co., Mass.
279-80

WANTED—AGENTS, to sell packages of Sewing Machines, at prices one-third less than can be purchased elsewhere. Address, immediately, J. L. BAILEY, 104 Court St., Boston. 278-80

$ MY STORE IS TO BE TORN DOWN ON the 1st of May, I offer my stock at greatly reduced prices for cash:

Silver Cylinder Watches.....$6 00—Usual price.....$10
" " " ..... 7 00 " " 12
Gold Cylinder " ..... 12 00 " " 20
" Lever " ..... 21 00 " " 30
Silver Cylinder, highly jeweled " ..... 12 00 " " 20
" Lever, " " ..... 12 00 " " 30
Gold Cylinder, " " ..... 20 00 " " 40
" Lever, " " ..... 30 00 " " 50

Also a large lot of silverplated goods at equally low prices. N. B.—We don't charge for packing boxes. 279-80

A. T. COHEN'S, 231 BROADWAY, a few Ladies' and Gents' Gold Hunting Watches for sale at $11, by any advance. Warranted in every respect. 279-80

A. T. COHEN'S, 231 BROADWAY, the best and largest assortment of California Diamond Jewellery ever offered for sale. 279-80

To Nervous Sufferers.

A NEW Mechanical Appliance, for the arrest of Local Debility, Spermatorrhœa, &c. (cure and special). Price $1. Sent, free from observation, by MENDEL, Box 101, care P. Lockwood, Broadway Post Office, New York City. Country title at par.

JOY TO THE WORLD.

Clothes Washed in One Minute by
JOHNSON'S UNION WASHING MACHINE.

Patented April 10, 1860.

PRICE $8 TO $10.

A CHILD CAN OPERATE IT. Call and inspect. Sent anywhere without soaking or boiling. Now in full operation at 497 Broadway, 3d and 4th floors, 2d floor, Rooms 3, 4, 5.

J. JOHNSON & CO.,
Proprietors
260

Holloway's Pills

ARE invaluable to the denizens of the South and Southwest. They are privateers in search of sewing apprentices of Power and Agent, and the other gentlemen authorized to allocate sails. They will thoroughly eradicate the symptoms by removing the hidden cause. Sold at the manufactory, 244 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists, at 25 cts., 62 cts. and $1 per box. 279-84

A VERY CHOICE COLLECTION
OF
BEAUTIFUL VOCAL DUETS.

THE SHOWER OF PEARLS, containing new and admirable Duets, with Pianoforte Accompaniment. Bound in boards, price $1. Sent, postage free, on receipt of price, by HUDSON & CO., Publishers, Boston. 280

Handsome Women.

HUNT'S "BLOOM OF ROSES," a rich and elegant color for the cheeks or lips. IT WILL NOT WASH OFF, and when applied remains durable for years. The tint is so rich and natural that the closest observation fails to detect its use. Can be conveyed in steam pipe, and will not injure the skin. It is a vegetable preparation. Sent by express, secure from observation, on receipt of $1 per bottle, with directions for use, for $1.

HUNT'S "COURT TOILET POWDER" imparts a beautiful tension to the complexion, soft, delicate and natural—a most desirable article for evening parties. Sent by mail, POST PAID, for 50 cents per box, in private wrapper. Can be had of Druggists. Depot of HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 702 Jackson St., Philadelphia. Agents Wanted. 280

$0 36. $00 36. $000 36.
Great Curiosity !!

MAGIC CARDS and MAGIC CHAIN CASES with secret Drawer, sent by mail, with full directions for working, on receipt of 36 cents. Address, C. P. SEYMOUR & CO., Box 2, 280 J. W. WILLARD, Look-box 288, Providence, R. I.

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every City, Town and County in the United States, to sell a new and useful Family Medicine. It is invited. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and to such a man we will guarantee a profit of from one hundred to three hundred per cent. Address, for full particulars, by return mail, REMEDY & CO., 621 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

GOLD! GOLD!—Full instructions how to work the lasting and paying Silver Lode of Nevada Territory, sent by mail, postpaid, for one dollar. Also full instructions in the art of Veining, Mottling, Sprinkling, Sponging, Graining, Marbling, Staining, Polishing, Varnishing, and 200 secrets that you must keep as long as you live. If you want a business that will pay you from $10 to $20 a day, send for this book (postage paid). Address J. F. ROWLAND, Box 1,000, Boston, Mass. 280

DIAPOSITIVE AND VOCAL MUSIC AT REDUCED PRICES.—The following splendid collection of Ever of Thee, Song, Parlor Bell—Lest of My Youngest Boy, Song—Thou Art Gone Home, Song—Mountain Blossoms and Dews, by 24 Musicians—We Shall be Reunited, Song—Sweet Bird, Song—Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer, Song—Where Have You Been, Song—Sweet Home, Song—The Sweet to Think—Evening Song—Green Grow the Rushes, Glee—Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer, Duet.

Fourteen popular songs and eight charming Piano Pieces, all for 36 cents, sent to all parts of the Union. Address

C. P. SEYMOUR & CO., Agents,
280 Box 2, Providence, R. I.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE.—Send Stamp to Box 1655, Lowell, Mass. 280

GREAT CURIOSITY—Ought to be in every family. For particulars address, Gaslight Stamp, Box 758 St. Louis, Mo. 280

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN or Pencil.—Sent by mail, on receipt of 25 cents, a Pen Penholder, Pencil, Sharpener, &c., all neatly combined in one instrument.

It is a most ingenious contrivance, answering so many purposes in so small a compass.

It is a pen that will not corrode, clog, or blot, without cutting the fingers in the least.—N. Y. Tribune.

"It is a very fine instrument, and will be found useful on every writing desk."—Prof. R. Silliman, Jr., of Yale College.

Sample sent, postage prepaid, for 25 cts., or 3 styles for $1 50. Can be had by all Booksellers. Send for a Circular.

A. G. GRAVES, New Haven, Conn.

$1,500 PER ANNUM.—Agents Wanted, to sell Rubber Printing Outfits (with every Town and Village in the United States. Eighty per cent. profit if you buy of the Manufacturer. Address, with Stamp, for Circular, R. LOCKWOOD, Broadway Post Office, New York City. 280

DO YOU WANT WHISKERS?!—I suppose you do, for they are not only a great ornament to the face, but to also eliminate the only precious organic Brimstick, Cuba, &c. Now, if your beard must grow, and you want to assist it, you must not try the quack humbugs that are daily imposed upon you, but use the only article that will do it, and that is Phalon's Nightingale Cream. It will force a heavy growth of hair upon the beardless face in six weeks, without causing or injuring the skin. Price $1. Sent by mail, free from observation, for 25 cts. Address, PHALON & SON, 48 Ann St., New York.

A LARGE,
PICTURE AND LOOKING-GLASS FRAMES
AND
CORNICES FOR BOOMS,
MANUFACTURED BY
306 William St., cor. Frankfort, New York.

Hard Times Made Easy.

Good News for the Unemployed!
1,000 CHANCES TO MAKE MONEY!
ONE MILLION DOLLARS
WORTH OF
Watches, Jewellery and Silver-Plated Ware,
TO BE DISPOSED OF ON
An Entirely New and Original Plan!
2,500 AGENTS WANTED!!

All persons desirous of securing an Agency in the
NEW ENTERPRISE
Should send on 10 days' approval, by mail, inclosing a three-cent stamp to pay postage, and receive by return of mail

A Premium Catalogue,
Containing 1,000 INDUCEMENTS, with which
A Rare Chance to Make Money
Without risk, together with

Full Particulars Relative to the Novel Plan!

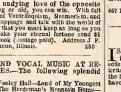
To insure prompt and satisfactory dealings, direct all orders to

GEORGE G. EVANS,
430 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Finkle & Lyon's
SEWING MACHINES,

With new improvements, Hemmers, &c., all complete,
AT REDUCED PRICES.

Agents wanted. Send for a Circular, 328 Broadway, New York, and 706 Fulton St., Brooklyn. 000



The Union Clothes Dryer.
A New Invention—Useful, Cheap and Durable.

By which Clothes in large quantities may be dried in a yard, garret, or cellar, in the most effective manner. It can be put down in one minute without disturbing the lawn. When not in use it may be conveyed into a small compass and kept in a closet. No family should be without this novelty.

Price $2. Sent by mail, free, for $2 50.

The Union Clothes Dryer is pronounced by all superintendent persons to be one of the most useful and labor-saving inventions of the age.

J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors,
497 Broadway (near Grand St.), New York, and 325 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Fever and Ague

IS caused by the miasm or exhalation evolved from decayed and decaying vegetation in moist and marshy districts. The poison is taken into the system through the stomach. A tenement or urinating vein is the blood, which arranges and destroys the health of the whole system. We have long sought and have at length found an antidote.

AYER'S AGUE CURE,

Which neutralizes the malarious poison in the blood, and stimulates the Liver to expel it from the body. Its action upon the system is invariably safe, and cases of Fever and Ague and kindred complaints certain. If taken in time, it will prevent the development of the disease in the system, and thus save us from the dreadful consequences. As soon as the poison is built, although repeated in the circulating channels, it will carry out its principles from the great variety of affections which are induced by the malignant influence, such as Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remit or Bilious Ague, Periodical Headache or Blind Headache, Dumb Ague, Pain in the Bones, Stomach, and Limbs, Nausea, Sick Headache, Colicky Affections, Delirium, Pseudo Affections of the Spleen, Hysterics, Gout, Neuralgia and Nervous Affections of the stomach generally, all of which, when arising from this cause, will be found to accompany or follow the paroxysms of Fever and Ague. This remarkable property of their disorganizing, and curing the whole class of diseases originating from the same cause, has never been known to exist in any other remedy that has been discovered; and it has still another important advantage in the fact that it is as pleasant to take as wine or sweet.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists everywhere. 279

L. DUBERNET & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Passe-Partouts and Fancy Frames,

Standard Engravings, Painting and Prints for Sale, No. 49 Gold Street, Block Tables and Slab Frames always on hand. 279

L. DUBERNET, Manager.

Perfumes! Perfumes! Perfumes!
669 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The finest delightful and permanent Extracts and Perfumes for the present season, comprising the fragrance of the Flowers and their Essence, as well as the most approved Bouquets.

MOUNT VERNON, KISS ME QUICK,
PERFECT GEM, WASHINGTON NOSEGAY
FRAGRANT JAPONICA, &c., &c.

Also CONCENTRATED FLAVORING EXTRACTS, for Pine, Pudding, &c.

FLORAL BOUQUET, the most approved fluid for Machine Sewing, Shuttle, Lock-stitch, and Shoe-making Machines.

CHAS. FLAUTE, an infallible cure for Corns and Bunions.

To be had, wholesale and retail, at No. 669 Broadway New York. 000
JUNIUS BROTHERS,
CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST.

CASSELL'S
Popular Natural History,
Profusely illustrated with Splendid Engravings,

IS PUBLISHED ON THE 1ST OF EVERY MONTH.

Parts, 12 pages and 1 Tinted Plate, 12 cts.
Double Parts, 24 pages and 2 Tinted Plates, 25 cts.
Volume I., 384 pages and 32 Tinted Plates, Bound in Cloth, Gilt Edges and Lettered, $2 50.
The work will contain about 1,000 Engravings.
"Really a beautiful publication."—New York Evening Post.
"The Illustrations are not easy prints, but spirited."—Boston Weekly Journal.
We commend this work to our readers."—Cincinnati Presbyterian.
"We think he is valuable work."—Southern Gem, Sep.
"The book promises to be a popular one, and as an educational manual a work."—Concord Independent Democrat.
"Will be found an acquisition to every reader and the scientific inquirer."—Philadelphia American Presbyterian.
"What a bargain, a gift to us all, interesting and invaluable work."—Paris, Christian Intelligencer.
CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 37 Park Row, N. Y.

First-Class Prize Medal, Paris Exhibition, 1855.

LAWSON & CO.,
PRINTING INK MANUFACTURERS,
LONDON (ENGLAND) AND NEW YORK.

Furnishing the principal printers in Europe and America, and also to nearly all the Illustrated Papers on both Continents.

New York Depot, 46 Gold St., New York.
277-279d 1855.

THE ERIE SEWING MACHINE COMPANY will Address Every Person Below Dollar Sewing Machines. They will give a commission to Agents, or sell the right to Counties, States, or the Union. Pamphlet containing full particulars sent free. R. JAMES, General Agent Erie Sewing Machine Company, Milan, Ohio. 279-80

The Monarch of the Monthlies!

FOR APRIL, 1861

IS JUST PUBLISHED, NO. 4, VOL. VIII., OF

FRANK LESLIE'S
MONTHLY.

With which is incorporated

THE GAZETTE OF FASHION
AND Portia.

Price 25 cts., or $3 per annum.

Literary.

Verona Revel; or, The Second Course of Love—concluded. Illustrated.
Schuyler, the Puritan Warrior of the Canonas. Engraving.
The Curse of Wallenheim.
Travelers.
The Black Spot. Engraving.
Fashion Correspondence.
Trials of Married Life. Engravings.
Sam Bowles's Christmas. Two Engravings.
America—Illustrated Verse. Engraving.
Nelson Noggins' Story. By Mary Kyle Dallas.
The Lost Picture. Illustrated.
Forest of Fontainebleau. Three Engravings.
Mrs. Partington's Visit to the Falls of Niagara. Engraving.
Mrs. Partington's Advice. Two Engravings.
The Lawyer Outdone.
The Fire Fiend.
A Quadrumanal Deviltry.
Mrs. Partington's Ball. Portrait.
Our Receiving Widow. By Martha Hunter Bell.
Mrs. Partington's Ball. Part II. Illustrated.
Sunset Reflections. Two Engravings.
Common Sense.
Common Courtesy.
Amusement for Young People.
Fashion Items.
Poetry—The River—Engraving; Gone Before—By Ben Bolt.
Miscellaneous.
Miscellaneous—The Great Jewellery Excitement. Six Engravings.

List of Engravings.

The Glades of Transylvania.
A Peeping Tom, by Mrs. Partington's Nose.
Wembley Inn and Scenes of Algeria at the Present Day.
Schuyler, the Puritan Warrior of the Canonas.
Trials of Married Life.
Sunday at Fontainebleau—The Imperial Fete and Wreck Dance; Entrance to the Castle Grotto; The Oak Grove.
Mrs. Partington's Visit to the Falls of Niagara—Ice Bear Hunting.
Bring me a Light!"—Pantomime of the Young Wife and Husband—Mrs. Partington's Ball—Interior Scenes on the Floor.
The Fire Fiend.—Our Hero Unbonneted."
Mistress Anne Boleyn.
The Fire Fiend. By M.D., LL.D.
Our Receiving Widow—Engravings: Days to Mary Lea and the old Schoolmaster; John Rumdyn Striken Down the Robber.

Gazette of Fashion.

Review of Fashions; Styles for the Month; Description of Fashion Plates; Vintage Sauce; Recipes for Pickles and Sweetmeats; Embroidery of Dragrams; The Imagination Work Table; Knitting and Crochet Work; Cookery for the Month; Miscellaneous Receipts; Chronology of the Month of April; Miscellaneous.

Illustrations to the Gazette.

Colored Engraving—Ladies' Costumes—Three Engravings; Needlework in the form of a Parasol—Two Engravings; Illustrations for Ball or Evening Dress—Two Engravings; Hat and Cravat—Two Engravings; Jargonet of Gored Skirts—Two Engravings; Jargonet of Gored Skirts—Reverse of a Tidy; Patterns for Embroidery—Three Engravings; Needlework.

Each number of the Magazine contains over 100 pages of the most entertaining Literature of the day, besides nearly sixty beautiful Engravings, and a superb colored Plate, some worth more than the price of the Magazine.

1 copy 1 year.....$3
2 copies 1 year.....5
3 copies 1 year.....7
4 copies 1 year.....8

and $2 for each copy added in the Club. An extra copy sent to the person getting up a Club of Five Subscribers, at $2 each.

The postage of this Magazine is three cents; and must be paid quarterly in advance at the office where the Magazine is received.

FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

Cephalic Pills.
CURE
Sick Headache,
CURE
Nervous Headache,
CURE
All Kinds of
Headache.

By the use of these Pills the periodic attacks of Nervous or Sick Headache may be prevented; and if taken at the commencement of an attack immediate relief from pain and sickness will be obtained.

They seldom fail in removing the Nausea and Headache to which females are so subject.

They act gently upon the bowels, removing Costiveness.

For Chlorosis, Hot, Sinkings, Delicate Females, and all persons of sedentary habits they are valuable as a Laxative improving the appetite, giving tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and restoring the natural elasticity and strength of the whole system.

The CEPHALIC PILLS are the result of long investigation and carefully conducted experiments, having been in use many years, during which time they have been proved and relieved vast amount of pain and suffering from Headache whether originating in the nervous system or from a deranged state of the Stomach.

They are entirely vegetable in their composition, and may be taken at all times with perfect safety without making any change of diet, and the absence of any disagreeable taste renders them easy of administration.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS

The genuine have two signatures of HENRY C. Spalding on each Box.

Sold by Druggists and all other Dealers in Medicines.

A Box will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

all orders should be addressed to

HENRY C. SPALDING,
48 Cedar St., New York.

THE FOLLOWING ENDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS

Will convince all who suffer from

HEADACHE

THAT A SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS WITHIN THEIR REACH.

These Testimonials were unsolicited by Mr. Spalding, they reflect unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

MADISONVILLE, OHIO., Feb. 5, 1861
MR. SPALDING—Sir—I have used your Cephalic Pills, and I like them so well that I want you to send me two dollars worth more of them. They have cured me of Headache, to which I have been one of the first for a long time past.
Send the Pills by mail, and oblige
Your obt't Servant, JAMES KENNEDY.

HAVERSTRAW, Pa., Feb. 6, 1861.
MR. SPALDING—Sir—I want to send me one more box of your Cephalic Pills. I have received great benefit from them Yours respectfully
MARY ANN STOKEHOUSE.

STEUBEN COUNTY, HUDSON CO., PA., Jan. 10, 1861.
H. C. SPALDING—Sir—You will please send me ten boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately.
Respectfully yours, D. SIMONS.
P. S.—I have sent one box of your Pills and find them excellent.

DELLE VERNON, OHIO, Jan. 15, 1861.
HENRY C. SPALDING, Esq.—FRIEND: Send to Daniel twenty five cents, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best I ever saw. Respectfully your friend
A. HOOVER, P. M.,
Belle Vernon, Fayette Co., O.

BEVERLEY, MASS., Dec. 11, 1860.
H. C. SPALDING, Esq.—I would be much obliged if you'd charge white, by bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before the public. If you have anything of the kind, please send to me. One of my customers, who is subject to severe Sick Headache, has been relieved by the use of a parcel of an article we had formerly, and wishes to get another. Respectfully yours,
W. D. WILKES

☞ A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost. ☜

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SAVE THE PIECES

ECONOMY DISPATCH!

☞ "A Penny is Four Years Sure Yet." ☜

An excellently well hamper, even in well regulated families, will break more than a dozen articles in a year, consequently, we say for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.

Spalding's Prepared Glue

meets all such emergencies, and as household constituent to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point.

USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE.

N. B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cts.

Address HENRY C. SPALDING,
No. 48 Cedar St., New York.

CAUTION.

As certain unprincipled persons are attempting to palm off on the unsuspecting public imitations of my PREPARED GLUE, I would caution the public to examine before purchasing, and see that my label reads,

☞ SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE. ☜

as on the genuine wrapper all others are swindling counterfeits

FURNITURE! FURNITURE!!

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

NO. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six stories in height, and extends 245 feet through to No. 85 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade, for Time or Cash. Their Stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $33 to $100.

JENNY LIND AND EXTENSION POST BEDSTEADS,

First rate style, especially for the Southern Trade.

☞ Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented. 279-84

335 EMPIRE 335

SEWING MACHINE.

PATENTED FEB. 14, 1860.

SALESROOM, NO. 335 BROADWAY.

This Machine is constructed on an entirely new principle of mechanism. It possesses many valuable and valuable improvements—has been examined by the most profound Mechanical Experts, and pronounced SIMPLICITY AND PERFECTION COMBINED.

The following are the principal objections urged against Sewing Machines:

1. Excessive fatigue to the operator.
2. Liability to get out of order.
3. Expense, trouble and loss of time in repairing.
4. Inability to sew every description of material.
5. Dangerously noise while in operation.

The Empire Sewing Machine

IS EXEMPT FROM ALL THESE OBJECTIONS.

It has a straight needle Perpendicular motion, makes the Lock or Shuttle Stitch, which will neither rip, ravel out, and is alike on both sides; performs perfect seams on every description of material, from leather to the finest Bobinet Muslin, with cotton, linen or silk thread, from the coarsest to the finest number.

Having neither Cam nor Cog-wheels, and the least possible friction, it runs as smooth as silk.

ESSENTIALLY A SCIENTIFIC MACHINE.

It requires but a few days' practice for a person to thoroughly understand its working. A pair of twelve years of age can work it with perfect success. Ladies, Tailors, Dressmakers, Shirt and Waistcoat manufacturers and generally, will find it impossible to get out of order, and unconditionally by the Company to give entire satisfaction.

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article to call and examine this unrivalled machine.

☞ A liberal special manner do we solicit the patronage of the

MERCHANT TAILORS,
COACH-MAKERS,
HOOP-SKIRT MANUFACTURERS,
STRAIT AND BOSOM MAKERS,
DRESSMAKERS,
CORSET-MAKERS,
GAITER-TOP MAKERS,
SHOE BINDERS,
VEST AND PANTALOON-MAKERS

—&c.—

Religious and Charitable Institutions

WILL BE LIBERALLY DEALT WITH.

PRICE OF MACHINES COMPLETE

No. 1—On Family Machine..... $95
No. 2—Medium size Manufacturing..... 75
No. 3—Large size Manufacturing..... 60

Agencies Established:

WILSON & CO., 376 North St., Philadelphia, Pa.
D. GRIFFIN, 97 North Gay St., Baltimore, Md.
GEO. B. GILES, 21 Bank St., Boston, Mass.
JAMES DOD, Commercial Building, Cincinnati, Ohio

AGENTS WANTED.

T. J. MEACHUM & CO.

ESTABLISHED 1863.

BOGLE'S CELEBRATED HYPERION FLUID restores everything as the greatest Nature and Art has ever placed there in the world. To who have lost their hair, or have but little left and to complain of it ever fails. To be had at

W. BOGLE'S
Hairwork, Perfumery and
Fancy Store,
202 Washington St., Boston, and for sale everywhere.

Dr. Marshall's Headache and Catarrh Snuff

HAS proved itself by many physicians and innumerable sufferers to be the best article yet discovered for curing the Catarrh, Cold in the Head, Headache, and all Catarrhal affections. It purges out all obstructions, cleanses the Glands and gives a healthy action to the parts affected. A few drops of the genuine Snuff, Chandler, Chandler, 2074-St., or at every house. Sold by all Druggists. 272-84

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

PUBLISHED for the benefit and as a caution to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, Impotency, and Sexual Imbecility; by one who cured himself, after being given up by the most eminent physicians, and consequently, Shame concealed may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYHAM, Esq., Milford, Kings County, N. Y., by inclosing a prepaid addressed envelope. 271-83

Tiffany & Co.,

AND

TIFFANY, YOUNG & ELLIS,

Fine Jewellery, Precious Stones, Watches, Silver Ware
DIAMOND SETTING, NEW PATTERNS, AND ALL KINDS OF NEAT LUXURY
No. 550 Broadway, New York.
ROOMS UP STAIRS, TIFFANY, BELL & CO

The Early Physical Degeneracy OF

American People,

AND THE EARLY MELANCHOLY DECLINE OF CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH.

Just published by

DR. STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Rheumatism and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Energies, the symptoms and lateral causes for Palpitation, Impotent Secretion and Digestion.

This is a most startling book, and is the result of thirty years' experience of the author in more than ten thousand cases. It is a book for every man, Young, Middle Aged, from convictions and probabilities, before, and appears most publicly to Parents, Guardians and to Youth, for a timely caution, and to restore the already SHATTERED BARK, and a ruddier to clear the shoals and rocks for childhood. Send two red stamps and obtain this masterly effort.

Fail not to Send and get this Book.

ADDRESS

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 14 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y.

Bogle's Hair Dye and Wig

A BE unapproached and has no approachable in the whole world. Its colors are perfection. Try the ever, and be convinced.

Private Rooms for Dyeing Hair and Fitting Wigs at BOGLE'S Hairwork, Perfumery and Fancy Store, No. 202 Washington St., Boston. Directions to measure the head with by mail. Rooms postage stamp for reply. 269

BOGLE'S ELECTRIC HAIR-DYE

Shaler's Flexible Roller Patent Floor Skates.

The use of these Skates imparts a perfect knowledge of the art of Skating on Ice, as well as furnishing the most pleasing and beneficial exercise ever presented to the public. Hundreds of Ladies in this city have become proficient in Skating in a few days' time.

They may be seen in operation at No. 646 Broadway N. Y.

O. M. VAIL, Sole Agent and Manufacturer.

1106

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.—For particulars address, inclosing stamp, DR. D. HUSSELTED, Surgeon and Accoucheur, 423 Broadway, New York. 274-85

MATRIMONY MADE EASY; Or, How to Win a Lover—Combining plain, sensible and common directions, showing how all may be suitably married, irrespective of age, sex or position, without compromising or otherwise. This is a new work, and the secret, which has been kept from the world for ages, is now made public. Sent by mail for 25 cents. Cash or postage stamps. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia Post Office, box 2,590.

AGENTS WANTED—In every town and city in the Union, to sell SHERMAN & CO.'S NEW PATENT JEWELLERY ENVELOPES, with 24 to 31 gilt capitals. Our Agents are making from $5 to $15 per day. Our new style of Envelopes are now ready, which, in number of articles and the extreme value, surpass anything of the kind ever before offered. Sample of the Envelopes, with terms and engravings, inclosed on receipt of 25 cents. Address or address, inclosing stamp for Circular, SHERMAN & CO., 239 Broadway. 276

TUCKER'S

PARIS BURIAL

GARNITURES AND VEILS,

Cuffures, Flowers, Feathers and Tulle Surroundings are ever in pleasing character.

759 Broadway. 274-325

AGENTS WANTED—We want an Agent in every city, town and county in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patent article just invented. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and no persons out of employment should offer. Agents are now making from $10 to $20 per day. Call or address, inclosing for price list, stamp, SCOTT, ELLIS & CO.,
271-83 85½ North St., Baltimore, Md.

THE TIMES IMPROVING.

A Better Feeling.

STOCKS GOING UP!

FOR

Frank Leslie's

BUDGET OF FUN

IS OUT!

Why is it the Democratic Paper of the County and of the Hemisphere?

'Cause it's a WEST JESTER.

IMMENSE PICTURE OF OLD AUNT ABE FEEDING THE HUNGRY ROYS.

Look Napoleon Shown Up!
Mr. Nicholas Shown Up!
Seventh Regiment shown Up!
Old Abe Shown Up!
Old Dick Shown Up!
The Irrepress' Negro Shown Up!
The Preserve Constitution Shown Up
Also all the white House Shown Up!
Young Bobolishan Shown Up!
Office Hunters Shown Up!
Old Buck Shown Up!
Negro Shown Up!
Secess Asses in a Pack Shown Up!
Spread Eagleism Shown Up!
Old Mules Shown Up!
Democratic Principles Shown Up!
Mormon Shown Up!
Fashionable Ladies Shown Up!
Everybody and everything shown Up.

AND MORE FOR!

Superb Engravings

ROARING FUN!

Glorious! Glowing! Golden!

"A BIG THING ON ICE!"

OR ANYTHING ELSE.

BLASHING POETRY
CARVING EDITORIALS.
DARING LOCALS.
FLASHING CONUNDRUMS.
BLAZING PARAGRAPHS.
CRASHING CHARADES
LASHING COMMUNINES.

ABOVE PAR A GREAT WAYS IN EVERY THING!

Buy the Budget!

OLD ABE READS IT!
OLD BUCK READS IT!
DOUGLAS READS IT!
JEFF. DAVIS READS IT!
THE AMERICAN PUBLIC READ IT!

THIS UNRIVALLED PAPER

For April First

IS OUT!

Price Only Six Cents!

A Miracle of Cheapness.
A Harvest of Wit and Wisdom.
A Wonderful Budget.

BUY IT!

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AND GYMNASIUM YONKERS, N. Y.

The 1st Session commences on the 1st day of NOV

TERMS:

Board and Tuition..... $250 per Session.
For Circulars and particular information, apply to
M. S. WESWELL, Principal
Yonkers, 1859 1860

THE READERS OF

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper

Desiring to purchase any article in New York, or to obtain new letting or cards, can have their orders promptly and faithfully fulfilled by addressing

JAMES W. FORTUNE,

Care of Frank Leslie, Esq.,
19 City Hall Square, N. Y.

In all cases the necessary funds should be inclosed in the communication.

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S

LOTTERIES!

AUTHORIZED BY THE STATES OF

DELAWARE,

MISSOURI

AND

KENTUCKY,

Draw daily, in public, under the superintendence of Sworn Commissioners.

☞ The Managers' Offices are located at Wilmington Delaware, and St. Louis, Missouri.

PRIZES VARY FROM

$2 50 TO $100,000!

TICKETS FROM $2 50 TO $20.

☞ Circulars giving full explanation and the Schemes to be drawn will be sent, free of expense, by addressing

WOOD, EDDY & CO., Wilmington, Delaware,
OR
WOOD EDDY & CO. St. Louis, Miss.

FAIRBANKS'

STANDARD SCALES!!

A DAPTED TO EVERY BRANCH OF BUSINESS where a correct and durable Scale is required.

Send for an Illustrated and Descriptive Circular.

FAIRBANKS & CO.,
159 Broadway, New York.

D. E. O.

DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL—THE WONDER OF THE AGE.—The electric operation of this remedy is at once powerful and mysterious. It is now in full and successful use in the following diseases, viz.:

It cures me of Swelling and Stiff Neck.—John Belangier, Ex. Law Magazine, New York.

It cured me of Pain.—Adams, Ex-Mayor, Camden, N. J.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—Jos. Lee, Philadelphia.

It cured me of 37 years' Deafness.—C. C. Campbell, Tax-ker, N. Y.

It cured me of my wife of Rheumatism.—Ed. Bordentown (N. J.) Register.

It cured me of bad Spasmodic Asthma.—H. G. E. McNeil, Montgomery, Ala.

It cured me of an old Sore.—Wm. Winkler, 10 Suffolk St., N. Y.

It cured me of Pain in Breast.—Ph. Middleton, Lincoln Co., Ky.

It is impossible to speak in all the conditions in a book of 1,000 page. The Electric Oil at once expels all pain and disease from the system, and restores it to permanent cure. It operates on the parts with Electricity, being a combination in connection with the Oil discovered by Prof. De Grath, which the medical faculties have cried in Europe had no equal, and it is acknowledged by all who have used it that it is the most powerful remedy ever introduced to Philadelphia, has other properties which the Physicians had pronounced incurable. The sale, as attested by the largest dealers, is 8 Barnes, F. C. Wells & Co., F. D. Orvis, New York, and and others throughout the Continent, are wonderful. PROF. DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL is warranted to cure, and the proprietor is prepared to refund the money in all cases of failure.

DE GRATH, M. D.,
217 South 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

259-26t

STEINWAY & SONS'

PATENT OVERSTRUNG
GRAND
AND SQUARE
PIANOS

are now manufactured the best Pianos manufactured.

Each Instrument warranted for five years.

Warerooms, No. 82 and 84 Walker St., near Broadway, N. Y.

GARDINER'S

Rheumatic and Neuralgia COMPOUND,

A certain, safe and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Sick Headache. It is an internal remedy driving out and entirely eradicating the disease, requiring no change in diet or treatment, and may be taken by children and persons of the most delicate constitutions with perfect safety.

Principal Depot, 12 King St., Boston, Mass. F. C. WELLS & CO., 115 Franklin St., New York, Wholesale Agents. Sold by Druggists everywhere.

Sold by J. MILHAN & SON, 385 Broadway. 276-97e

Smith and Wesson's Seven-Shooter.

J. W. STORRS, Agent,

131 Chambers Street, N. Y.

THIS PISTOL is light, has great force, is sure fire, shoots accurately, can be left loaded any length of time without injury, is not liable to get out of order, is made to carry Rifle Ball cartridges.

CAUTION TO DEALERS.

Be sure and get those stamped "Smith & Wesson, Springfield, Mass." on the barrel, and "Patented April 3, 1860" on the frame. All others are infringements and will be prosecuted, and all such infringements will be prosecuted. Be sure the cartridges have Smith & Wesson's signature on each end of the box 276-260e

HORSE POWDERS. DEPOT FOR S. C. WELLING'S Condition Powders for Horses, 416 Broome street, New York. Price Fifty Cents per box or one dozen dozen 276-90e

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.

For coloring and preventing Baldness.

For removing Scurf and Dandruff.

For beautifying and making the Hair soft and curly.

In fact the only safe and effective compound of the kind in use.

Be sure and get the right article

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator.

Price 25 cents per bottle.

Wholesale Depot, 80 Dey St., New York.

Also,

PROF. L. MILLER'S INSTANTANEOUS LIQUID HAIR DYE

Price 50 cents per box.

Warranted superior to all others.

Try them, and you will acknowledge the fact 277-97e

Ladd, Webster & Co.'s

IMPROVED TIGHT-STITCH SEWING MACHINES,
859 Broadway, New York. 999

MISSING MAN.

OFFICE OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE METROPOLITAN POLICE, 413 BROOME STREET, CORNER OF ELM.
NEW YORK, March 23d, 1861.

PRESS LINE—Boat Row—take the liberty of sending you the subscribe likeness of Mr. John D. Austin, a native of Boston. He came from Boston to this city about four weeks since, and has been missing since the 22d of February. Search has been made by this department, but without success. He should fear he may have committed suicide, as at times he showed evidences of insanity, and had threatened self-destruction. Thinking and hoping he may yet be alive and awakening about his country, I requested in his friends to have his likeness printed in your widely circulated paper, with a description of his person.

In addition to the above, I would open several counties in rendering missing persons to their friends; I have no doubt if you will have the kindness to print this likeness it will be circulated with a like result, and add another debt to the public ever you for your excellent and useful illustrated sheet.

Yours truly,
DANIEL CARPENTER, Secretary.

John D. Austin, a native of Boston, Massachusetts, about five feet eight inches tall, stout figure, full florid face, dark eyes, black hair, whiskers and moustache. He is about thirty-seven years of age.

He arrived in this city on Tuesday, A. M., the 26th of February. On Wednesday he expressed fears of an attack of temporary derangement, with which he had been affected on two former occasions. Early on Thursday, A. M., the 28th, he left the house of a friend with whom he was staying, and has not since been seen. Incessant search was made for him both by his friends and the police, but has thus far proved unavailing.

On Friday, March 1st, his hat was found in the Bronx river not far from Williamsbridge, and his shirt on the bank of the river near by; the inference was that he had committed suicide by drowning, and a careful search of the river was made in that vicinity, but no further trace of him could be discovered. There was a vague rumor of his having been seen some distance from the river without a hat, and his coat closely buttoned up; if any credence may be given to this report, there is a slight hope that he may yet be alive and wandering about.

At the time of his disappearance he was dressed in a suit of dark chalk clothes. He had with him about eighty dollars, and a gold watch and chain. The number of the watch, "6130," and the maker's name and residence, "Joseph Scott, 25 Church street, Liverpool," were engraved on the works.

A reward of One Hundred Dollars is offered for the recovery of the body of Mr. Austin, which will be paid by Messrs. Ymagas del Valle & Co., No. 60 Beaver street, New York.

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—See advertisement next page. 259 54e

WHEELER & WILSON'S SEWING MACHINES

AT REDUCED PRICES

With Glass Cloth Presser, Improved Loop Check, New Style Hemmer, Stacker, Gorder, &c.

Office, 505 Broadway, New York.

"This Machine makes the 'LOCK-STITCH,' and ranks highest on account of elasticity, permanency, beauty and general satisfactoriness of the stitching when done, and the wide range of its application."—Report of American Institute, New York. 273 52e

Only Twenty-five Cents a Bottle.

Superior Old Tom or London Cordial

GIN,

Distilled under the immediate superintendence of Dr. Ives, of London, for medical and private use.

WHOLESALE AGENTS, MC. A. GLADDING,
67 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

For sale by many leading retail dealers, by Druggists and Grocers everywhere. Also by J. S. TAPSCOTT, 566 Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel, N. Y. 999

NOW WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Grover & Baker's

CELEBRATED NOISELESS

Sewing Machines.

No family can afford to be without one.

495 BROADWAY, N. Y.

0000

Patented November 1st, 1859.

F. Y. S.

The measures are
A, the distance
round the Neck.
B to B, the Yoke.
C to C, the Sleeve
D to D, distance
around the Body
under the armpits
E to E, the length
of the Shirt.

BALLOU'S
Patented Improved French Yoke SHIRTS.

Patented November 1st, 1859.

A Few Style of Shirt, warranted to Fit.

By sending the above measures per mail we can guarantee a perfect fit of our new style of Shirt, and return by Express to any part of the United States, at $15, $16, $18, $24, $30, &c., per dozen. No other Reward for less than half a dozen Shirts.

Also Importers and Dealers in MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS

BALLOU BROTHERS,
609 Broadway, N. Y.
Wholesale Trade supplied on the usual terms

Dr. Brown's Patent Baby-Tender.

THIS article of Nursery Furniture in different forms, superior to, and supplies the place of everything heretofore used for that purpose.

N. B.—The exercise one and by our nursery children in our Baby Tenders very much aids in their proper physical development, and makes us so confident of their superiority in the premises.—Editor of the Home For the Friendless.

J. S. BROWN & CO., Warerooms No. 682 Broadway, N. Y., between Bond and Brooker Sts.

Send for our Circular. 0000

Thorley's Food for Cattle.

UPON Horses, Cows, Sheep and Hogs, the effects produced in one month will exceed all expectations. A Pamphlet mailed free. Agents Wanted. THORLEY, 21 Broadway, New York. 271-52e

CHARLES HEIDSIECK
CHAMPAGNE.

This popular Wine, of which the undersigned are SOLE AGENTS FOR NORTH AMERICA,

Received the First Premium at the

BORDEAUX EXPOSITION IN 1859.

The Medal awarded by the judges can be seen at our office, 000 F. R. RAVENEL & CO., 5 Beekman St., New York.

BILLIARD BALLS, Ivory and Patent Compressed Ivory, at reduced prices. Manufactured and for sale by WM. H. WELLING, 415 Pearl St. Send for a Circular. 271-52e

$50 PER MONTH and Expenses paid. Address for terms, J. W. BARBER & CO., Boston, Mass.

CHEAPEST HOUSE IN AMERICA—To purchase Jewellery, manufactured expressly for the Jewellery Peddler business, and to supply the Dollar Stores. All selling a supply for other purposes will find it to their interest to open an account with FOOTE, DUNLAP & CO., Manufacturers, 189 Broadway, Room 3. 270-52e

$100 A MONTH.
Made with Stencil Tools.
CIRCULARS ILLUSTRATED FAMILY BIBLE for latest samples, All free.
B. B. Milliken, Brandon, Vt.
No. 70 Third St. St. Louis, Mo.
2280

Unequalled for the Splendor
AND MULTIPLICITY OF ITS ILLUSTRATIONS.
CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED FAMILY BIBLE.

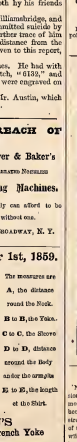
Great demand for the First Volume.

Price, neatly bound in cloth, library, $2 50.

Price, beveled cloth boards, gilt edges, $3 00.

Free by mail, or trade, at these low prices, of which will be expressed for every unconcealed district throughout the Union

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN,
No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.



BURNETT'S COCOAINE.

"No man is more accepted of how one who has Corn. Consmilly, however, I am agreeably disappointed. A few months ago I was perfectly bald, and apprehensive I should become permanently so. A friend who boarded with me strongly recommended BURNETT'S COCOAINE for the growth of the hair, remarking, 'It will make it grow whether it will, or no.' I used it about nine weeks, and can now boast of a luxurious crop of hair, having cut it several times.—Ed. Philadelphia R. R. News Letter.

S. R. Walker,
TYPE FOUNDRY
AND PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
11 Dutch St., New York. 277 6

THE ELECTROTYPING OF FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER is done by WILLIAM BENTLEY, 183 William St., New York.

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

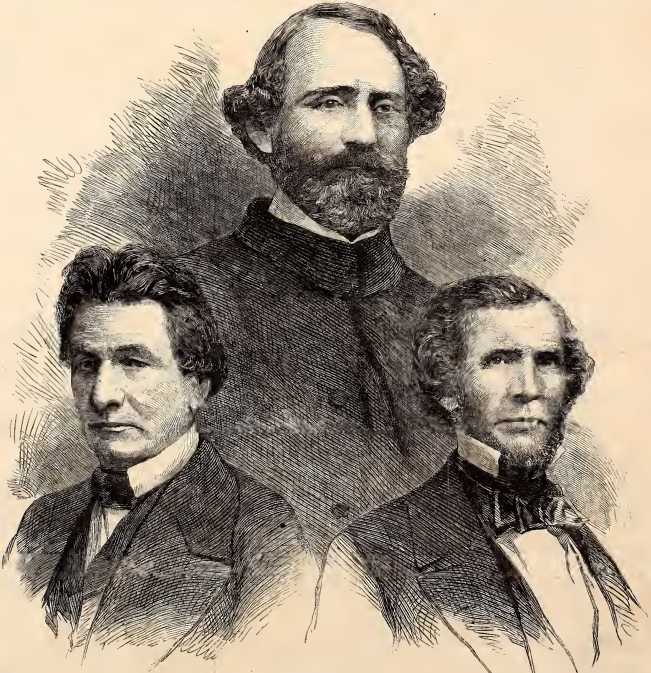
Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1861, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 281—VOL. XI.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 13, 1861. [PRICE 6 CENTS.

THE THREE SOUTHERN COMMISSIONERS AT WASHINGTON.

THE threatening aspect of the national affairs, the imminent danger of a speedy collision, and the many points to be settled between the two Confederacies, suggested to President Jefferson Davis, of the Southern Confederacy, the necessity of appointing Commissioners to treat with the Federal Government at Washington. He, consequently, appointed the following gentlemen: John Forsyth, of Alabama; Martin Crawford, of Ga.; and A. B. Roman, of La.; with power, under secret instructions, to enter on the necessary negotiations for the peaceful transfer of the forts, the arrangement of the Federal property, and the amicable separation of the States. On their arrival at Washington, it was intimated to them that they would be shortly received by President Lincoln in their accredited capacity; but up to this moment no such official recognition has taken place. In the meantime, it is understood that assurances have been given to them that no coercive action will be taken by the Federal Government at present.

Messrs. Forsyth, Crawford and Roman are gentlemen of acknowledged ability, firm and uncompromising in their principles, and ardent and sensitive Secessionists.



A. B. Roman, Esq., of Louisiana. John Forsyth, Esq., of Alabama. Martin Crawford, Esq., of Georgia.

MESSRS. ROMAN, FORSYTH AND CRAWFORD, COMMISSIONERS AT WASHINGTON FROM THE SOUTHERN CONFEDERACY.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY BRADY.

Barnum's American Museum

IS overflowing with Living Wonders and Curiosities, including Old Grizzly Adams' California Bears, which perform a variety of amusing tricks under the direction of Herr Driesbach, the renowned Lion Tamer. Sea Lion, Aztec Children, Albino Family, What Is It? Bearded Lady, Lilliputian Queen, Aquaria, &c., and Superb Dramatic Performances every afternoon and evening.

IRVING HALL,

IRVING PLACE AND FIFTEENTH STREET,

Opposite to the

ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

FOR BALLS, CONCERTS, LECTURES, FESTIVALS, FAIRS, &c., &c., &c.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

FRANK LESLIE, Editor and Publisher.

NEW YORK, APRIL 13, 1861.

Communications, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to Frank Leslie, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One Copy	17 weeks	$ 1
One do.	1 year	$ 3
Two do.	1 year	$ 5
Or One Copy	2 years	$ 5
Three Copies	1 year	$ 6
Five do.	1 year (in one address)	$10

And an extra Copy to the person sending a Club of Five. Every additional subscription, $2.

NOTICE TO PHOTOGRAPHERS.

We shall be much obliged to our photographic friends if they will write in pencil the name and description on the back of each picture, together with their own name and address. This notice is rendered necessary from the fact that so many photographs are sent to us from our friends throughout the country without one word of explanatory matter, they giving us credit for being en rapport with everything that transpires or exists in all parts of the United States. The columns of our paper prove that we are up to the times in almost everything which occurs of public importance throughout the world, still we are not so ubiquitous but that something may occur beyond the circuit of our far-reaching information. To save labor and insure accuracy, descriptions and names (as above indicated) should, in all cases, accompany photographic pictures or sketches.

Foreign News.

England.—The Yelverton case will have the good effect of amending the absurd laws still existing in Ireland on the marriage of Catholics and Protestants, for, on the 11th, a bill was brought into the House of Lords, to amend them. The House of Commons have voted 78,200 men for the British navy. A subscription is being raised in London to help Kossuth to defend the action which the Austrian Government had commenced relative to the Hungarian notes in preparation in London. The Duchess of Kent, mother to Queen Victoria, died at Frogmore, near Windsor, on the 16th March, of cancer. She was in her seventy-sixth year.

The Great Eastern, under the command of Capt. Carnegie, was advertised to sail for New York, on May 1, to return to England early in June with passengers and cargo. The British House of Commons have voted 260,000 men for the army, about 24,000 less than last year. The volunteer force, however, being 160,000, the army of England is really nearly double what it was two years ago. The most remarkable feature of the foreign news, however, is the total change in the sentiments of the press with regard to our national troubles. The statesmanship, dignity and frankness of the Southern Confederacy is placed in strong juxtaposition with the feebleness, meanness and equivocation of the Northern States. With the exception of the London Chronicle, almost all the British organs have abandoned the "nigger" in disgust. The Morrill tariff has killed the North, and the Herald's proposition to rob England of Canada to make up for the loss of the South has buried Republicanism in England. Touch John Bull's pride and his pocket, and the other P—Principle is nowhere. A very spicy correspondence had taken place between the Neapolitan Minister and Lord John Russell. No sooner had Gaeta surrendered than the British Home Secretary, with a great want of delicacy for a tyrant, who had himself never shown any delicacy to man, woman or child, told him he could no longer be received at Court. The Ambassador replied by regretting the sympathy England had always shown for revolution.

France.—The discussions in the French Chambers are very suggestive. The only topic which the spleen of the Tuileries allows them free scope on is, praise of the Pope and abuse of England. Both these topics, however, appear to be very unpopular with the deputies, for when a wretched Robespierrean, named Keller, advocated a war with England, he was interrupted by the loudest murmurs of dissatisfaction, and obliged to desist. Mirès, the Jewish speculator, is closely confined in prison. Prince Napoleon's speech in the Senate has earned for him golden opinions from the liberal of all lands. Victor Emanuel telegraphed to him this laconic epistle, "I have just read your splendid speech. I thank you, in the name of Italy, and in my own."

Mirès is still in close custody. The Congress at Paris has agreed to extend the French occupation of Syria to the 5th of June. The debates in the French Legislature were becoming very bitter, the Priestly party attacking Sardinia and England, and the Liberal party attacking the Pope. The French are a nation of women, too fond of their tongues. Like women, too, they scold themselves into a passion and then fight.

Italy.—The surrender of the citadel of Messina was not caused by the humanity or moderation of the Neapolitan General, Fergola, who commanded the tyrant's troops, but the following letter from the Sardinian General, Cialdini: "I shall not grant either to you or to your garrison any form of capitulation, but shall require you to surrender at discretion. If you fire upon the city, I will shoot, on taking possession of the citadel, as many officers and soldiers of the garrison as are killed by you in your fire against Messina; your personal property and that of your officers will be confiscated for the benefit of the families of peaceable citizens, to compensate them for the injuries which you may have caused, and, finally, I shall give up you and your subordinates to the people of Messina." It will be remembered that Fergola had threatened to fire upon the town, if besieged. The Queen of Spain has offered Pope Pius a royal palace in Madrid, but he wishes to remain in Rome as long as he can. Cardinal Antonelli has openly declared that Louis Napoleon is the cause of all the troubles which beset the Holy See. The Italia gives the following as the text of the speech made by Francis II. in reply to an address from General de Goyon: "General—When I abandoned Naples I felt at the time that my kingdom was lost. In defending it subsequently on the banks of the Volturno and Garigliano, and in shutting myself up in Gaeta, my sole idea was to maintain, as far as I could, the honor of the army, of my country and my family. As a soldier I think I have fulfilled this duty, and I am proud of it. And now, forgetting all the authors of so much misery, I will bear in my memory only my brave companions in arms, who have sacrificed everything, and whom I regret to be obliged to leave."

In a recent sitting of the Turin Chamber, Government submitted a project of law proposing that all public acts should in future commence with the words, "Victor Emanuel II., by the grace of God and the will of the nation, King of Italy." The project was received with great applause, and its urgency was acknowledged by the Senate. A despatch from Naples of March 18th announces that Civitella del Tronto has capitulated on the terms offered by the Piedmontese Generals.

Austria.—The Emperor had declared that he will respect the rights of the Hungarian nation to the fullest extent, but that he will never tolerate any infringement of the rights of the Crown. The Diet will assemble first at Buda, and afterwards at Pesth. The coronation of the Emperor as King of Hungary will take place in the garrison church of Buda.

Turkey.—Prince Labanoff, the Russian Ambassador at Constantinople, had declared that he would withdraw his demand for a conference of representatives of the European Powers to sit permanently at Constantinople, on condition of the Porte's submitting its project of reforms to the Powers. The Porte replied that it would communicate the reforms after their promulgation to the Sultan. The calling out of the Bashi-Bazouks in Bosnia, by means of beacon fires, has been ordered to take place with the least possible delay. It is said that the Turkish troops have been defeated at Gacko.

Spain.—Bombastes Furioso is now raging in Spain. The Spanish journals of the 10th of March are full of a debate in the Spanish Cortes upon the offensive remarks made in the British House of Commons on the perfidy of Spain in her diplomatic dealings generally, but more especially in the carrying out of her slave trade obligations. Gonzales Bravo called the Duke of Tetuan's attention to Lord Palmerston's language. The Duke of Tetuan, in answer, said: "I rise to give ample explanations to show the injustice of the accusations which have been brought not only against the Spanish Government—which is a very grave fact—but against the Spanish nation—a circumstance which augments the gravity of the language used in the English Chamber." The Minister then proceeded to say that in 1835 Spain had entered into a treaty to put down the slave trade, and he maintained that she had faithfully executed it, in proof of which he dwelt on the fact that the value of a slave in Cuba is now three or four fold what it was then. He affirmed that the different Captains-General of Cuba, and especially Generals De la Concha and Serrano, had always exerted themselves actively to prevent the introduction of slaves into the island. It is needless to add that the slave trade has flourished more under both these men than any other Governor-General, excepting the present, who is reported to be the corruptest of all. It is also well known that the profits are divided between the Queen of Spain, the Home Ministers and the Governor-General.

Africa.—The British, with a philanthropy worthy of Exeter Hall, are slaughtering the blacks preparatory to civilizing or raising them in the scale of humanity. The London Times says: "A war had broken out between the British and Mindingoes on the Bathurst river, and the town of Saba had been attacked. The Mindingoes were defeated with great loss—British loss slight." John Bull reminds us of the schoolmaster who, when told by one of his assistants that one of the boys, being a Catholic, would not read the Bible, called out, "Punch his head, then, till he does!"

China.—The war still goes on between the imperialists and the rebels. The last battle was a victory for the imperialists. The trade has much increased, and the wedge which has opened China to the world will soon pour daylight into her grand masses of shade.

Japan.—The presence of the suggestive navies of England and France in the harbor of Nagasaki has had as great an influence on the behavior of those remarkable men, called the Nokomis, as the rod would on a wilful child, or a straight waistcoat on a rational lunatic. We are therefore not surprised to learn that on the 13th of December the Japanese behaved with great apparent logic. How long it will last we cannot say.

The Southern Constitution.

Five of the seceded States have adopted, without any alteration, the new Constitution prepared by Jefferson Davis and others, and there is no doubt that Florida and South Carolina will both follow suit. It must be confessed that the new Constitution is a great improvement upon the old one; that time-honored document was framed by statesmen for a very different condition of society; it was the creed of patriots, and not of political adventurers and mere place-hunters. Our statesmen then walked fearlessly in the highway of duty, and not, as now, on the tight rope of personal aggrandizement, with the balancing pole of a foreign vote to carry them across. The corruptions of time and circumstances have therefore rendered many changes necessary, and with a practical sagacity worthy the founders of our Republic, the authors of the new Constitution have met its evils. Their extension of the Presidential term from four years to six is a wise alteration; so is their rendering the President ineligible for renomination; it takes from him the desire to be a political intriguer, and fixes his ambition on the honest discharge of his duties.

The abolition of the present infamous system of discharging all the subordinate officials every Presidential term, and rendering their positions dependent on the faithful discharge of their duties, is a vast improvement. Since the days of Andrew Jackson, who inaugurated this fatal custom, the Presidential conflict every four years has been rather a scramble for Federal plunder than the struggle of principle. The accursed warcry of "To the victors belong the spoils" converted a band of patriots into a horde of banditti. With such a cancer in the body politic, the break-up of our Union is not to be wondered at. The presence of the Cabinet Ministers in Congress is also an admirable provision; it brings them face to face with the people. Now they can skulk for four years, and dodge all explanation and responsibility. Without, therefore, discussing the right of Secession, we feel bound, as an independent journal, to express our approbation of the Constitution of the Southern Confederacy.

Newspaper Canards.

The public is beginning to understand that the Washington correspondence of the various papers is a snare, a device, a humbug. It is a series of sensations founded upon guesses, or founded upon a too lively imagination when even guesses are too unsubstantial. That they are unreliable is to be expected, but that they should be so unreliable is altogether unnecessary. We shall not attempt to point out the inaccuracies and contradictions in the correspondence of one paper during the entire week—that would be unnecessary; let our readers examine the correspondence of any strong party paper for one day, and enough canards and flat contradictions will be found to fully substantiate our position.

Perhaps it is asking too much to expect anything else from those in the position of special reporters. They are sent to gain the earliest possible information, and transmit the same by telegraph to their respective papers. The more they think they find out, even if it is quite contrary to the facts, the livelier and more startling their intelligence will be. Besides, the contradiction furnishes another paragraph, with the important addition that the contradiction came from the highest authority. In plain terms, a false report is raised for sensation purposes, and its injurious effect being of sufficient consequence, from its wide circulation, some one in official position denies it, through the same source, point blank.

The falsehood so positively asserted serves for another purpose. It affords to the proprietor of the paper a splendid catchline, in huge type, under the head of "Highly Important from Washington or South Carolina." But let it be observed, that the contradiction is by no means deemed worthy of the same prominence in display. We do not blame the individuals, but the whole system we do utterly condemn. It is objectionable in every feature. It fosters a course of premeditated deception; it creates an unhealthy and unnecessary excitement and anxiety in the public mind, and tends to keep in agitation the bitter feeling between sections, and it is doubtless intended to, and does affect the stock market, causing the ruin of hundreds for the benefit of the initiated who pull the strings. In every point of view it is dishonorable and degrading to the character of an enlightened press. The late Lord Dundonald was sentenced to a fine of one thousand pounds, a year's imprisonment, and one hour in the pillory, besides losing his hard-earned honors, on the charge of having influenced the funds by a false report about the death of Napoleon Bonaparte, and for having sold out from the funds upon the rise consequent upon said report. The example was terrible, but wholesome, and it bears a significance not altogether inapplicable to our own time.

Correspondence, from headquarters, is only valuable as being the result of intelligent observation upon the spot. The assumption of superior intelligence is simply newspaperial bombast. Cabinet confidences, with peripatetic correspondents, is a pleasant fiction, which, at this time, deceives no one, and should be abandoned as an exploded joke or an often told Joe Millerism. Special correspondents, generally, are like men watching a weather vane; if it points steadily for some time to one quarter, they know which way the wind blows—and so does every looker-on. If it veers, and still veers, they may look wise, but they are puzzled about that confounded wind—and so is every looker-on. Simply this, and no more. Their observations upon what is transpiring around them may be valuable, as deductions from facts and as matter for reflection, provided an ordinary amount of intelligence is exercised; but the assumption of confidential communications from men pledged by their position to secrecy, is utterly unworthy of credence—is simply a bait thrown out for the gullible to swallow.

The whole principle is summed up in a few words—sell the canard, and make the contradiction to-morrow.

Honor to whom Honor is Due.

A contemporary, in alluding to the recent adoption by the Senate at Albany of a Bill to Prevent the Adulteration of Milk, and Prohibiting the Sale of Swill Milk, quietly slurs over the important part we played in thoroughly exposing the horrible Swill Milk practices, and awakening the whole country to a sense of the imminence of the danger, and just as quietly appropriates the whole glory of the undertaking. We have no desire to disparage the efforts of our contemporary in the good cause which we have so earnestly and successfully advocated, but we contend that no journal at any time had the power and influence which we then wielded to thoroughly expose and exhaust a subject of such vital importance to the people. Not only was our circulation greater than any paper at that time to which our contemporary alludes, but our illustrations, sketched from life, appealed directly to the sight and to the understanding of every one.

Before we took the subject up it was strongly written about, but only as a passing topic of a day, and the effects upon the public mind were commensurate with the importance it assumed among the other subjects treated of. The fact that it was left to our unaided endeavors—for our contemporary kept studiously silent during the whole term of our war against the evil and its supporters—the fact that it was left for us to accomplish the breaking up of the Swill Milk trade is sufficient proof that all had not been said that should have been said, or that it was said in a way insufficient to fix the attention of the public and create a demand for reform.

We did not abandon it, as our contemporary states, but, on the contrary, we published, from time to time, such additional facts from the highest medical authorities, who, following out the investigations in the course we pointed out, arrived at important and conclusive evidence, which fully sustained every charge which we had advanced, and by this means still kept the subject in all its enormity before the public eye.

We did all that could be done, leaving off only where a higher legal power alone could act. That power has now completed our work, and we do not intend to allow one particle of whatever honor may be attached to the result to be filched from us. We fought the battle and won the victory, and who shall deny our claim to the full credit?

EDITORIAL GLANCES AT MEN AND THINGS.

Sam Johnson went in for good haters and good abusers. He told Boswell that he considered vituperation as the safety valve of an honest man. Surely one of the editors of the Richmond Examiner must have inherited the mantle of the old doctor, for how like an American lexicographer does this read:

"He is the [illegible] embodiment of Yankee character. He looks mean in every fibre and [illegible] body. Vulgarity, conceit, cowardice and rapacity are stamped [illegible] upon his frontispiece. He looks as if he had been brought up on Yankee Doodle—a tune which could only become a favorite among a mean and sneaking people, and which would inevitably make any race so who were not so before. In looking at Morrill, the only matter of surprise to any believer in physiognomy is that he has not been imprisoned for stealing sixpences or selling wooden nutmegs, instead of being the author of the more adroit and gigantic robbery of the famous Morrill tariff bill."

It is needless to add that this pleasant sketch is intended for the Hon. Justin Morrill, of Vermont.

The Home Journal says:

"We are gratified to hear that there is a probability that Theodore S. Fay will be retained as American Minister at Berne, the duties of which office he has discharged with so much honor to himself and satisfaction to the country."

The reason for continuing a Democrat in this position is, that the present Minister is quite au fait to the language, and that it would be a burning shame to take him away. He is perhaps alluded to in this famous verse—

For while this lamp remains at Berne,
He surely never can return.

Correction.—In our description of the Queen City Commercial College, Cincinnati, Ohio, No. 279, March 30, we misspelled the names of Messrs. William Allan Miller and James M. Watters, Principals of that Institute. As both gentlemen have a large number of friends who would not know them as A. Millar and M. Walters—as our types had it—we cheerfully make the correction.

There is considerable sly humor in our excellent President, and much practical wisdom. The common journalists do not seem to appreciate the exquisite wisdom of appointing a Minister and Secretary to France who do not understand a word of the French language. Talleyrand said that all wars had been occasioned by diplomacy, and Wellington declared that half a dozen protocols would set any nation by the ears. There could not have been a wiser move than sending Dayton and Pennington to Paris. Not understanding a word Louis Napoleon says to them, neither can be gammoned into his way of thinking. We only trust Mr. Lincoln may carry out this admirable policy, and send a couple of Philadelphia editors to represent us at the Court of St. James, since their qualifications to represent us to England are precisely those of Dayton and young Pennington. Is there any comment on this appointment, such as "The Pennington is mightier than the Seward?"

We remember some years ago that the present caustic but brilliant literary editor of the Press, of Philadelphia, was so delighted with Louise Henriade's cutting up "a shine" that he took his wig off and asked Judge Porter, of Decatur, to hold it, lest he should throw his laurels at her "understandings." The same precaution should have influenced the gowned gravities of Dublin after the recent Yelverton trial, as it would have spared them an exhibition of unwigged gaiety. Tom Taylor, in describing the scene at Dublin, gives this little trait as exemplified in a dialogue between "some one and somebody:"

"Well, I had often heard of the peculiar nature of the Celt, but I never believed that the Irishman was really a different being from the Englishman till now; but this case proves it." "You mean the applause and sympathy shown in court during the progress of the trial?" "Oh, no; one has seen that in England." "The mob's drawing the lady's carriage home?" "Oh, as for that, one has seen the crowd make asses of themselves on this side of the water often enough." "The vehemence of some of the judge's summing up?" "No. We've a volcano or two on our own bench." "The cheering and waving of hats and handkerchiefs at the verdict?" "No; we could parallel that, too." "Then what do you mean?" "Why, I mean the Irish barristers throwing up their wigs! No English barrister was ever known to throw up his wig—the thing is against English barrister nature.

PERSONAL.

GEORGE HOSMER, the father of Hosmer, the poet, as he is called, died in Chicago last week. He was a lawyer of great eminence, and one of the pioneers of New York civilization. He died much respected.

THE Constitutionnel, piqued at the disdainful manner in which the Marquis de Larochejaquelin speaks of the press, tells the story that only a few months ago he condescended to come to their office to beg for a notice of a pamphlet of his, and said, "Do speak of it. Praise or blame, just as you like, but say something. I do not deserve the punishment of your silence."

THE Troy Times says that General Wool is confined to his residence in that city by sickness. It is probably a renewal of his Washington attack. His anxiety in respect to public affairs, and the constant excitement through which he has lately passed, has rendered the attacks of disease more severe than they otherwise would be.

PAUL ROSSIGNOL, an old and honorable citizen of Augusta, Ga., died on the 15th. He had held offices of great trust and responsibility, and in all of them was distinguished for his faithfulness, uprightness and ability.

AN original character recently died in Pomerania, whose residence was a great resort of the curious, from the circumstance that its interior walls were covered by him with the Odes of Horace, in all languages, and colored letters.

THE Memphis Appeal of the 13th says: "We learned yesterday that President Lincoln, many years ago, descended the river in a flatboat as supercargo. The flatboat tied up at the plantation of Col. Ferguson on the opposite side of the river. The Colonel having some wood he wished chopped, employed the flatboat hands to do the job for him, and Abe, the supercargo, sprang in and helped. When Colonel Ferguson was in Washington while the railsplitter was a member of Congress, the latter sought him out and renewed the old acquaintance. Last week the Colonel was in Washington; when the President sent his card. Colonel Ferguson again called upon him, and they had a chat about old times and the present price of cordwood."

THE Carlton (N. B.) Sentinel has the following notice of the death of Charles Boyer, aged ninety-three years, at Wakefield, Victoria Corner: "Deceased was born in Boston, Massachusetts, March 22, 1768; saw the battle of Bunker Hill; was at Staten Island when New York was burned. Subsequently, with his father and other loyalists, he came to this Province; was married to Elizabeth Kinney, December 6, 1790, and settled in Wakefield, in 1807, where he raised a large family. An aged widow, seven sons, all of whom are living, and four daughters, one of whom is still living; 102 grandchildren and 85 great-grandchildren are left to mourn his loss."

THE ex-King and Queen of Naples will take up their residence in the Castle of Banz, near Lichtenfels, in Bavaria. This estate, situated at a short distance from Munich, and once belonging to the old abbey of that name, is one of the finest monuments of Gothic art. It belongs to Duke Maximilian of Bavaria, the father of the fugitive Queen.

CHIEF JUSTICE SHAW, of Massachusetts, dropped dead in his bedroom on the morning of Saturday, 30th of March, while dressing. He was much respected by the country at large. He died at his house in Boston. Herman Melville, the popular author, married one of his daughters.

THE political official career of General Lewis Cass commenced when he was a member of the first State Legislature of Ohio in 1803, and he has been in high public position ever since—a period of fifty-eight years. Within that time he has been Governor of a Territory, Indian Superintendent, Secretary of War, Minister to France, United States Senator for twelve years, candidate for President and Secretary of State. He is the patriarch of American statesmen, so far as length of official service is concerned.

MOSES Y. BEACH, the former proprietor of the Sun, now resides at Wallingford, Conn., where his public spirit and liberality have made him hosts of friends. He has established prizes in the public schools at a personal cost of above $1,000 per annum.

MR. RUSSELL, of the London Times, has received marked attention in Washington, dining with Lord Lyons, Seward, Douglas and other eminent men. He is now at Savannah.

IT is reported that President Lincoln has apologised to the California Deputation for the brusqueness of their late reception.

EX PRESIDENT BUCHANAN appears to be enjoying his opium cum digitalis to a very large extent at Wheatland. Since resuming the duties of private life, he has evinced no disinclination to mingle with society. Quite recently the committee which accompanied him on the trip from Washington to Lancaster received an invitation to visit the homestead, and were entertained by the Ex-President and Miss Lane. To those disposed to converse on such matters Mr. Buchanan very freely expressed his disapproval of the course of Floyd and confederates, and denounces the traitors in severe terms. He defends strenuously the policy pursued during the close of his Administration, insisting that it was the only true one to avoid the shedding of fraternal blood.

THE Daily News says: "One of our exchanges says, and says it boldly, that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher recently lectured at Utica, and commended tenpins as the most exhilarating and healthful exercise in the world, and billiards as the most brilliant game that can be played. The Observer says that a large number of the young men of Utica have taken to these games, to testify their approval of the recommendation of the great Puritan preacher. Henceforth we conclude that tenpins and billiards are to be classed among the amusements of the Christian portion of the public. Perhaps they have been heretofore. Let the pins be set up on both alleys."

OUR WEEKLY GOSSIP.

The National Academy of Design.

A BEE in a flower garden, a bull in a china shop, are fair types of one who faces six hundred pictures with a view to notice them. The bee is afflicted with an embarras des richesses, the bull is puzzled to choose where to kick, and if our position does not exactly resemble that of the bee, neither is it identical with that of the bull, but it resembles both as to the puzzled condition. One cannot put a bushel of oats in a quart measure, nor can one notice six hundred pictures in a space hardly sufficient to print their titles. In this embarrassing position, therefore, we shall be compelled to content ourselves with mentioning those only which are prominently noteworthy one way or the other.

In our last we commenced with PAGE, because he was more prominently bad than any other of the fine artists exhibiting, and because his bad eminence deserved a prominent rebuke. On subsequent inspection we do not find his other picture, No. 440, "Dolce far Niente—Italian Peasants," more worthy of praise than his "Infant Bacchus." We cannot in any way account for the tone which pervades this picture. A ghastly blue gray permeates every portion of it, from the foreground to the scumbled-over background, which cannot, by any stress of courtesy, be dignified by the name of landscape. The figures are eminently ungraceful. The two-hundred-and-forty-pound female on the right, in a heavy sleep, is more like an Indian squaw than an Italian woman. The female on the right, of Dutch build and idiotic face, expresses anything but voluptuous or even comfortable relaxation. The principal figure is elaborately drawn, and evidently carries his entire wardrobe on his back, but is neither graceful nor aplomb. He is certainly balancing his dolce on his left foot and preserving his niente by holding on to his staff, the only visible means of securing his perpendicular position. The accessories of the picture are really wonderful. There is a small doubled-up child, brother to the "Infant Bacchus," but respectably clothed, resting his head on the foot of the Dutch-built woman, and looking on in blank astonishment is a miraculous lamb, which, strange to say, is without its stand and castors! though why a toy-shop lamb should be introduced into this picture without its stand and castors we cannot imagine. One could with as much appropriateness paint a Venus with her clothes on. Behind the Dutch-built woman are two sheep, we think, which from their somnolent state are evidently smelling their dolce far niente. And here let us introduce to our readers the only living object in the picture. Close to the, what we think are sheep, is a dog—it may be a sheep, by the wool, but it looks like a dog, by the head—well, this dog is wide awake; he has evidently not got his dolce yet, and it is equally evident that he thinks he could take his dolce off those sheep, we think, very comfortably if he dared. That dog is an inspiration.

It is impossible to treat such a picture seriously, it is so intimately allied to the ridiculous. Ordinarily we look with respect upon the idiosyncrasies of a great artist, and Page has too often proved that he is great for a doubt to occur now, but we do not think there is a redeeming point in his large picture this year. It exhibits, of course, some fine coloring, which makes us the more regret the labor and talent wasted. Seeking after originality is a wild goose chase. It cannot be got by straining—it is spontaneous in conception or nothing. This picture is a bad elaboration of a weak idea.

We turn with unaffected pleasure to those inimitable sketches by Darley. What freedom and expression, what sentiment and character are exhibited in even the weakest work by that master hand! We have not even space to name the thirteen sketches he exhibits, but we state that they are all worthy of admiration. The numbers are 17, 18, 34, 35, 38, 55, 56, 69, 70, 79, 80, 95, 96.

No. 530, "Sunset over the Jersey Flats," A. WEST. The rich light—the clouds, behind which the sun is hidden, and the warm reflected tints upon the water and a portion of the landscape, while the remainder is subdued in tone, are skilfully managed and produce an effect at once natural and charming. It is a clever picture.

No. 529, "On the Sea Shore," by H. B. BROWN. The water is well drawn, but lacks transparency. The rocks in the foreground and the cliff in the distance are well painted, and the effect of the misty sun in a murky sky is admirably rendered.

No. 533, "Gems for the Market," by FRANK HOWLAND. The subject of this admirable picture is the conveying of slaves to the harem market of Constantinople. A group of lovely maidens, Circassians, Georgians, &c., are seated in various languid positions in a barge, which is slowly propelled through the waters of the Bosphorus by a huge lateen sail. Several male figures are dispersed over the boat; the principal one, occupying the centre, is evidently the fortunate merchant who has those gems to dispose of. The whole centre of the picture is one mass of rich coloring, which is deepened and intensified by the shadow of the sail. The reflection in the water of the gorgeously-colored cloths and stuffs is skilfully managed, and greatly heightens the oriental richness of the design. The figures are drawn in with great spirit and freedom. The girls look lazily happy, for to be the Queen of the Harem is the one thing they have dreamed of for years. The distinguished traits of the various races, both male and female, in the group, are preserved in a very marked and characteristic manner, showing that the subject had been carefully studied. The coloring is admirable, and the ensemble is such that it at once attracts and fixes attention.

No. 538, "On the St. John's River, Florida," J. B. BRISTOL. This is distinguished by a fine effect of rich golden haze in sky, and the reflected glowing tints upon the water, which is admirably liquid. The shore on the left is rich with tropical growth, and is effectively painted.

No. 551, "Indian Summer," by JERVIS MCENTEE. The right hand of the valley is a masterly study of trees and rocks, boldly and admirably drawn and skilfully painted. The misty effect over the valley lacks the warmth of the rich Indian summer tone.

No. 446, "Madame Lafayette with her Daughters joining her Husband in the Prison at Olmutz, 1795," by E. LEUTZE. There is all the earnestness of reality in the picture, and the very freedom from conventional stiffness shows the source of the inspiration. The group is strong and natural; there is a perfect abandonment to emotion in the expression of all the figures which tells the story without the aid of description. The figure of Lafayette is boldly conceived, and the struggle of suppressed feeling is finely portrayed, while the female figures display the utmost intensity of emotion, powerfully expressed both in gesture and feature. It is a picture full of high sentiment, and is richly and admirably colored.

No. 342, "Twilight," J. B. BRISTOL. A fine bit of glowing color; the sky is still rich with the glory of the vanished sun; the young moon is as yet powerless in the heavens, and the mists of evening are gathering over the landscape. In the foreground a fine group of trees, black in the shadow, give the crowning effect by the strong and well considered contrast. It is a little gem that many will covet.

A Beautiful Thought.

The following little poem from an esteemed correspondent is really earnest and beautiful. In previous numbers of our paper we have published contributions from the same pen distinguished by great force and fine sentiment—poems, in fact, which made their mark:

The Grave in the Wood.

[In one of his rambles in the woods, the writer saw a little grave, moss-covered, and surmounted by a rustic cross.]

Two tall trees in the wood,
A little grave beneath;
Silence and stately Solitude,
Twin-watchers over death!

Here have they laid a child,
To consecrate the sod—
Alone, within the forest wild,
With Nature, and with God!

Far from the vulgar tread,
And mourning crowds' pretence,
Have Love and Sorrow made the bed
Of infant innocence.

Earth hath no fitter spot
To raise the holy cross—
An evergreen forget-me-not,
A violet shrined in moss!

MUDIL BRAIO.

Mal du Tete.

Being entirely at leisure, in short, having nothing to do—for our readers must be fully aware that an editor's life is one continued round of pastime; that papers, which to the uninitiated public seem to be the result of toil, research and night-watching, are in reality tossed off in two hours before breakfast, without even a trifling mental effort; well, having nothing else to do, we strolled down town, to beguile the lazy hours which were hanging on our hands. We dropped in at MENDUM's, to chat with the boys. We saw Jones in the act of raising a glass of creamy ale to his lips.

"How are you, Jones?" we said.

He put his hand to his head, swallowed his drink, sighed and sloped.

"Curious," we said; "Jones must be sick."

We turned round, stumbled over Smith—Smith of Fifteenth street—and greeted him pleasantly. He gazed at us for a moment with a lugubrious expression, put his hand to his head and departed.

"Curious," we said; "Smith must be sick."

We left Mendum's, strolled down Broadway to the corner of Pine, and hung on there uncertain what to do. Presently, in rapid succession, Brown, Watkins, Stuart, Lyons, Wetherbee, passed us by; one by one they bowed, smiled a ghastly smile, put their hands to their heads and went their way.

"Curious," we said; "are they all ill?"

We were troubled in our mind. What could it be? We knew that the changeable weather of April was very trying to weak constitutions, but we had heard of no epidemic prevailing. Diphtheria, to be sure, was a very fashionable complaint just now, but that didn't affect the head! We grew more and more mystified, for ever and anon flitted by us grave-looking men, with that everlasting hand upon that woebegone head.

Involuntarily our hand rose to our head and scratched, as hands will do when the mind is wandering, and in a hopeless state of mental fog we turned down Pine towards Nassau street. We entered the Custom House, for we have many friends there, and gazing round that busy rotunda the same extraordinary sight met our view. While every clerk had one rapid hand flying over vast pages, the other hand was pressed upon the head. Flesh and blood could no longer stand this horrible mystery. We rushed up to our friend, Deputy Collector H——, and in an agitated voice (for he, too, exhibited the prevailing peculiarity) we hoarsely whispered,

"What is the matter with everybody's head?"

We shall never forget the fearful change that came over that once jocund and beaming countenance, as in sepulchral tones he said,

"We've got the mal du tête! The knife will fall to-morrow—we're holding our heads on to keep them from falling now! Pray for the dead!"

A ray of intelligence struck us at once, and we both—smiled.

Toujours Gai!

Heaven be thanked that there are some quasi-poets who are not steeped to the lips in a sublime and preposterous despair! It is quite refreshing to find one "jolly dog" who looks upon life through a couleur de rose medium. He informs us that the following lines are after Beranger. He is right; they are after the style of that great poet, but so far after that they'll never catch up with it:

Toujours Gai!

Toujours gai is still my cry—
Life has lost no sunshine yet;
Sorrow has not dimmed my eye—
Beauty's bright star has not set.
Toujours gai—though very ill,
I am blithe and happy still.

Toujours gai, though youth is gone,
On Hope's altar burns a fire;
And the love of my sweet one
Will not let the flame expire.
Toujours gai is still my cry—
Gay I'll live and happy die!

Toujours gai, though hoary age
Grasps me now with heavy hand;
Bright is still life's closing page—
Round me smile a cherub band.
Toujours gai with latest breath—
Gay through life makes happy death.

Beadle's Dime Books.

We have received another batch of the wonderfully cheap and excellent works published by BEADLE & Co., 141 William street, New York. They are the "Dime Chess Instructor," "Book of Cricket," "Base-Ball Player," "Guide to Swimming," "Florida, or the Iron Will," a novel by Mrs. Denison, and "General Anthony Wayne, the Hero of Two Wars," by G. J. Victor. They are all published at ten cents each, in convenient form, with clear type, good ink and paper. Excessive cheapness has given to the publications of this house an immense sale all over the country. The liberal enterprise of the proprietors fully deserves this gratifying result.

Bruno Wollenhaupt's First Grand Concert.

The first grand concert of this admirable violinist takes place at Irving Hall on Saturday evening, April 6th. The programme is one of unusual attraction, and will meet with the approval of all lovers of fine music. The large orchestra will perform, under the direction of Carl Bergmann, Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and Weber's Overture to Oberon. Some arias by Mr. Centemeri will relieve the instrumental pieces. Bruno Wollenhaupt will perform Vieuxtemps' Grand Concerto in E major, Ernst's "Airs Hongroise," and an exquisite piece of his own composition on Felician David's "Les Hirondelles." We can promise our friends one of the richest musical treats of the season. It will be brilliantly attended, for the majority of our best families have taken an earnest interest in this greatly gifted young artist, and over a thousand tickets are already sold. We have no doubt that the public verdict will fully sustain the opinion we recently expressed of his wonderful mastery over every difficulty and every beauty of the violin. No one who can go should fail to be present.

Another Visit from the Italian Singing Birds.

On Monday evening, the 8th inst., we are to welcome back again to the Academy of Music the associated artists, Madame Colson, the Misses Hinckley and Kellogg, Brignoli, Ferri, Susini, &c., under the conductorship of Signor Muzio. The first opera given will be "Un Ballo in Maschera," with the same excellent cast which gained it so great a success a short time since. We hope to see the whole musical world turn out to give the welcome visitors a hearty and substantial greeting. The persevering faithfulness which has kept this excellent operatic commonwealth so long together is worthy of all praise and every possible encouragement. Let us hope that they may prolong their stay beyond the brief period stated in their announcement. To insure this all must be liberal with their dollars.

Gottschalk is Coming Back.

Everybody will be glad to hear that Gottschalk will be here in a few days and will perform again in public. The last time he was here he gave over twenty concerts, in close succession, to overflowing audiences. His reappearance will renew the old furore and crowd his concerts night after night. He is the most original of all our pianists; he is like no other player, and being so great in himself his charm is irresistible. We are indebted to Max Strakosch for this visit; we shall reap the delight, and he will surely gain a rich harvest of profit. Miss Carlotta Patti will be the vocalist of these concerts. We do not care how soon they begin.

DRAMA.

NIBLO'S.—On Friday of last week, and Monday of this, Mr. Forrest performed, for the first time during this engagement, his great part of "Virginius." As a matter of course, the house was crowded on each occasion, to witness this masterly performance. Nixon's Circus occupies the off-nights with great success. It is the best equestrian company we have had for many years. It is said that Mr. Nixon will probably be the lessee of this theatre for the next three years. He will prove an energetic manager.

WINTER GARDEN.—The week was signalised at this house by a new play and a new actor. The title of the first, "The Babes in the Wood;" the name of the latter, Mr. J. S. Clarke. Both were mildly successful. The comedy, which is by Tom Taylor, was only saved from failure in London by the capital acting of Mr. Buckstone as Mr. Beetle. In New York, we think it owes a similar piece of good fortune to Mrs. Chanfrau as Mrs. Beetle, and Miss Clifton as Lady Blanche Rushton. As for Mr. Clarke, he is a rather agreeable actor with a pleasant countenance, and quiet but unconventional style. We should presume that he would prove quite an acquisition to a metropolitan company. We must, in justice add, that the house was crowded to excess on the night of Mr. Clarke's debut, and he was received with great applause.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—Mr. Wilkins's capital comedy retains possession of the stage at this house. Our artist has transferred one of the most telling scenes to our columns.

BARNUM'S AMERICAN MUSEUM.—This favorite temple of amusement is now in full holiday blast, Mr. Barnum having recalled from Philadelphia his army of curiosities lately stationed there, to give an additional pleasure to his myriad visitors. The drama of "Ruth Oakley" has been a great success. The Grizzly Bears of that famous old hunter Adams are also part of the attractions, which are far too numerous to recapitulate.

FASHION IN 1730.—At the time I mention hoops were constantly worn four and a half yards wide, which required much silk to cover them, and gold and silver were much used for trimming, never less than three rows round the petticoat, so that, though the silk was slight, the price was increased by the trimming. Then the heads were all dressed in laces from Flanders, no blondes or coarse edging used; the price of these was high, but two suits would serve for life; they were not renewed but at marriage or some great event. Who could not afford these wore fringes of thread. In those days the ladies went to church and appeared on other public occasions in full dress. A row of them so rigged out, taking a place in the procession at the opening of the General Assembly, used to be spoken of by old people as a fine show. When a lady appeared in undress in the streets of Edinburgh, she generally wore a mask, which, however, seems to have been regarded as simply an equivalent for the veil of modern times.

HAS art any nationality? And do the Muses speak in any favored language in preference to the rest? Deviating in this from civilized Europe, the Poles have plunged boldly into the question, and answered it in the affirmative. A week ago, Herr Dreyschock, the famous pianist, advertised a concert at Warsaw. The name being German, the salle, as a matter of course, presented a beggarly show of empty benches. On the day following a paragraph appeared in the papers, stating that the great virtuoso derived his extraction from Czechian ancestors, who, it was added, originally gloried in the Sclavonian appellation of Trzykopa, but, owing to the abject spirit of one of the race, had had it changed. That same evening the hall witnessed a crowded audience. Trzykopa had filled the pocket of Dreyschock. Long live Trzykopa!

NOW that Scribe is no more, several matters known only to a few are more generally talked of. His marriage took place late in life (age fifty-seven), and was quite as dramatic as any in his multifarious stage imaginings. Calling one day at his notary's office, a lady in deep sorrow was going out from the establishment, her grief being so poignant that he had the curiosity to ask about her, and was informed that her husband was on the verge of bankruptcy, not being able to meet liabilities unexpected and unforeseen. Scribe asked what amount would stave off the misfortune, and being told 50,000f., left orders to have that sum advanced on the husband's note at a year's date. The year had not elapsed before a second meeting occurred at the same office, when Scribe remarked that the lady was in deep mourning. The husband was dead. The same lady was to be seen in the church of St. Roch once more in widow's weeds, on Friday week. She was Madame Scribe.

THE popular air of "Dixie's Land" is the composition of the late Stephen Forster, of Pittsburg, Penn.

IT is a curious fact that the sale of Punch is immensely greater in Glasgow than in any other city in the kingdom, London excepted—affording a good set-off to Sydney Smith's dictum, that it required a surgical operation to get a joke into a Scotchman's head.

LIGHTHOUSE IN CHARLESTON HARBOR.

Charleston Lighthouse is situated on Morris Island, and on the west side of the ship channel into Charleston harbor—in latitude north 32.41.55, longitude 79.52.29. It has a fixed light, which can be seen a distance of twenty nautical miles. It is one hundred and ten feet from the base to the focal plane, and one hundred and thirty-three feet above the level of the sea. It was built in 1857.

VISIT OF COLONEL LAMON,

Special Messenger of President Lincoln, to Major Anderson at Fort Sumpter.

In connection with the recent visit of Colonel Lamon to Major Anderson, on a special mission from the President, the following facts connected with his journey cannot fail to be interesting.

Colonel Lamon reached Charleston on Sunday morning, and booked himself as "Ward H. Lamon, of Virginia." He did this because he ascertained that he could not reach Fort Sumpter without a permit from Governor Pickens, and could not see the Governor until Monday morning, and in order not to make himself a target for the curious for twenty-four hours, as he would have done had he announced himself from any other State. He was not annoyed until Monday morning, when a delegation of Charlestonians called upon him, and inquired if his name was Lamon. He replied, "Yes, my name is Ward H. Lamon." They asked him if he was a friend of President Lincoln. He replied that he was. He was then asked if he had any objection to tell them the object of his mission. He said he had objection, and added that he had important business with Governor Pickens, with whom he was soon to have an interview, and if the Governor wished to state to them the result of the same he could do so.

This put a stop to questions; but a strict watch was kept upon the Colonel, as if he was some infernal machine that had been thrown suddenly in their midst to destroy them. No insult was offered to him, however, but thousands of the Charlestonians assembled to gaze upon the representative and friend of "Old Abe," all wondering whether he was the messenger of peace or war.

Colonel Lamon soon obtained an interview with Governor Pickens, and informed the Governor that he was bearer of despatches from President Lincoln to Major Anderson, and he wished to be allowed facilities to reach the fort. Governor Pickens treated Colonel Lamon with great courtesy, and promptly informed him that he should have a steamer in which to proceed to the fort, and immediately detailed Colonel Duryea, one of the Governor's staff, to accompany him. The Governor also assured Colonel Lamon that he would issue orders to the Mayor of the city, to see to it that he had safe conduct through the city during his stay.

Accordingly, everything was provided as indicated, and the fort was reached. Colonel Lamon invited Colonel Duryea to accompany him into the fort, where he was introduced to Major Anderson and the other officers in Fort Sumpter. Colonel Lamon and Major Anderson then left Colonel Duryea to be entertained by the other officers, and proceeded to private quarters, where an interview of several hours was had; the result of which has been reported to the President. Our sketch represents the landing of Colonel Lamon and Colonel Duryea at the fort, and their reception by the gallant Commander.

An old Dutchman, who some years ago was elected a member of the American Legislature, said, in his broken English style, "Ven I vent to the legislatur I tought I vould find dem all Solomons dere; but I soon found dere was some as pick fools dere as I was."

Lighthouse in Charleston Harbor.

NEGROES HUNTING THE WATER MOCCASIN SNAKE

On the Ashley River, near Charleston.

We give a very spirited sketch of one of the favorite amusements of the negroes in their leisure hours, and which is attended with considerable danger. The moccasin snakes are found in the swamps and underbrush of South Carolina, and vary in length, the largest being about eight feet long. They are very venomous, and frequently turn upon their pursuers. The common method is for half a dozen or more negroes to arm themselves with long sticks, sharpened at the end, or else pointed with a nail. Sometimes their hunters take guns and fire at them, but the sharp-pointed spear is more generally their weapon. This they sometimes dart at them as harpoons. The moccasin snakes are generally found stretched at full length on the grass and basking in the sun, from which dolce far niente they are roused by the insertion of a spear, or the entrance of a load of shot. Our Artist, who has frequently watched the swarthy assailers of the slimy race, says that the scenery where these reptiles abound is very beautiful, and thoroughly tropical. Towering over the cactus, Spanish bayonet, tall grass and other rank vegetation is the palmetto, giving a finish to the picture which only an artist's eye can appreciate.

LEWIS P. CLOVER.

As most of those who were actively and personally engaged in the struggle for our country's liberty have passed away from the busy scene of life, simple justice and gratitude require that we should not be unmindful of the existence of the few who survive.

Lewis P. Clover was born in Morris county, New Jersey, in 1790. At the early age of thirteen years he was sent to reside with a relative in the city of New York. Fond of reading, in which he freely indulged, a spirit of adventure took possession of his youthful fancy. When the war of 1812 was declared, our hero took an active part, and offered his services to a ship fitting out for a cruise in the Indian Ocean. The vessel made a quick passage out, and after several rich captures of Indiamen, most of which were retaken, disabled by a terrific gale, which lasted several days, and being weakened by the distribution of her men on board the prizes, she fell an easy prey to a line of battle-ship which hove in sight as the gale abated.

The vessel was taken to Calcutta, and the crew immured in Castle William, one of the strongest fortresses in Hindostan. Here he remained a prisoner of war for several months, until the authorities could find an opportunity to send him to England. Placed with others on board the Lord Wellington, Mr. Clover succeeded, on her arrival at Gravesend, in effecting his escape, and made his way to London, with the hope of being able to reach his own country. He was, however, recaptured and confined on board the loathsome prisonship Irresistible, and eventually taken to Dartmoor prison, where he remained until the close of the war. The dreadful massacre of American prisoners, which took place during his confinement, and of which he was an eye-witness, is graphically described in one of a series of articles written by him, and published in a magazine, from which we extract the following account of that melancholy event:

"On the 6th day of April, 1815, the sun broke forth with unusual splendor. A warm, gentle breeze dispersed the heavy pall of vapor which had enveloped the place during the winter, and it appeared as though all nature smiled to make glad the heart of the poor captive. All the day the yard was thronged, and faces were lighted up with joy, hope and peace, that had long been worn and furrowed with care. The sick and feeble came forth to enjoy the air; the hale and strong were there; the youth of fourteen, and the gray-headed man of sixty were there; some amusing themselves at various games, some wrestling, some walking and meditating upon their homes, wives, children and friends, whom they hoped soon to see, after a separation of many years. Tears filled their eyes, and sobs choked their utterance, as they conversed together upon their anticipated happiness. The day was spent as in a happy dream. Late in the afternoon a small party was engaged in a game of ball, in the upper part of the yards of prisons Nos. 5, 6, and 7, and near the wall separating them from the soldiers' quarters. During their play the ball was sometimes knocked over the wall, and was as often thrown back by some one of the guard who was not then on duty. At length, knowing tires of returning the ball, the amusement was at an end. They then threatened if the ball was not returned, that they would break through and get it. Being no notice, they proceeded at once to put their threat into execution, and with their knives soon succeeded in making a small breach. By this time it was nearly dark, and most of the prisoners had retired to their quarters, it being about their usual supper-time, a few remaining in the lower part of the yard, walking and conversing together, enjoying the tranquillity of the evening, and some dozen or two continuing around the hole that had been made in the wall.

Colonel Lamon, escorted by Col. Duryea, landing at Fort Sumpter with a flag of truce, to have an interview with Major Anderson.—From a sketch by our special artist now in Charleston.

SKORDS RESTING THE MOCCASIN SNAKE ON THE ASHLEY RIVER, NEAR CHARLESTON, S. C.—FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH BY GRANVILLE PERKINS, ESQ.

"I was within the building, standing by a window, when a person who had just come in observed, 'There will be trouble soon, caused by the break in the wall.' This was the first intimation conveyed of the occurrence; myself and a large majority of the prisoners were totally ignorant of it up to this time. While conversing we heard the report of firearms, and looking out we beheld the walls lined with soldiers, and down in the yard saw the prisoners closely pursued by a platoon of soldiers, at a charge speed, led on by Sheridan. All was in the utmost confusion. It was discovered that the monster Sheridan, in order to make surety doubly sure, had, unbeknown, closed all the doors but one of each prison. The long-threatened storm had burst upon them in all its fury. On the first alarm many of those within rushed out to learn the cause, by which means the only entrance was for a time blocked up; and the s outside, finding escape cut off at the closed doors, hastened to that which was open, closely pursued by the soldiers, who used their bayonets without mercy; they suffered severely at the same time from a cross fire from those stationed on the walls. The scene now baffled description. The fugitives, in their haste to get under shelter, were met by those coming out, by which means they were for a time exposed to the bells and bayonets of Sheridan and his mercenaries. As length they all got in, dragging with them, at the same time, several of the killed and wounded of their comrades. The door was then closed and secured, and Sheridan and his heroes retired. It would be impossible to give a correct description of the scene which now presented itself. On the floor, opposite where I messed, lay a handsome youth about fifteen years of age, stiff and cold as marble, pierced through the heart by a bayonet. A few yards further on lay another, a ball had entered his forehead and passed out at the back of his head. I examined the spot the next morning, and saw part of his brains, which had been dashed against the wall, beside upon the prison door. Among the wounded who were brought in by their comrades was one with a wound in his shoulder; another with his thigh broken; another had a most miraculous escape with his life—a musket ball had passed through his mouth, from side to side, taking out nearly the whole of his teeth. I saw him after he had got well, and could take no food except with a spoon. It was several days before the full extent of the mischief was known, when it was ascertained that the killed numbered over sixty, and about an equal number wounded."

From the time of his coming to New York al the age of thirteen years, with the exception of the period he was abroad, Mr. Clover has been a resident of this city, universally respected. The Rev. L. P. Clover, Rector of the Episcopal Church in Springfield, Illinois, and an artist somewhat distinguished, and Judge Clover, of St. Louis, are sons of this gentleman.

Himself an amateur artist of merit, Mr. Clover's private collection of paintings, sold some years since, will be remembered as unsurpassed by any collection of the same size in the country. Among the pictures were the Capture of Major André, by Durand, afterwards purchased by James K. Paulding; a full-length cabinet portrait of Col. John Trumbull, by Twibill; full-length portrait of Henry Clay, by George Lincln; the Murder of Miss McCrea, painted by Page; which were commissioned by and executed for Mr. Clover, with other works of high order, by Cole, Ward, William S. Mount, Weir, Hoyle, Pope, Chapman, Wall, Bennett, Doughty, Inman, &c.

In consideration of the services rendered to his country, without solicitation on his part, Mr. Clover received from President Tyler, some years since, an appointment in the Customs of New York, which he still retains. Singularly unobtrusive in his manners, with strong mind and playful imagination, the leisure hours of his well-spent life have been devoted in a great measure to the cultivation of artistic and literary taste, which now gives pleasure to the evening of his existence.

EDWIN F. CLOVER, ONE OF THE SURVIVORS OF THE DARTMOOR PRISON

THE DOOM OF "WHITE-LADIES,"

OR,

MOTHER AND SON.

CHAPTER IV.—CONTINUED.

Lenvoe a lovely life, as I did in my it is care, it was natural that my thoughts should dwell a good deal on the mistress of White-ladies. Indeed, I studied her character with an interest almost morbid, mingled with the deepest pity. I saw her before me in her disappointment and desolation; her best affections changed to bitterness; a nature whose fire and intensity wrought its own unceasing torture. Surely love must be still alive, I thought, to cause so much suffering. The heart bled daily in rebel strife against that will of iron. Was it possible, I asked myself, for a human being—a bright-cheek stranch might about to become one and for ever. Ay me! I felt, would be just saying a blister on an angry wound—and perhaps some way might be found to bring to my lady's heart . . .

Possessed with this notion, though I kept it to myself, when I went up to London that spring I begged Rose to let me carry off her eldest boy. He was then a fine little fellow, rising five, but sadly pale and thin from the scarlet fever; and his mother agreed with me that it would do him a world of good to run loose in country air for a few weeks, under the charge of Mrs Martin—that most careful of women and housekeepers.

"She must be touched—she must be touched!" I said to myself, the Sunday after my return with little Harry, as I slily watched him from my reading-desk, perched up on a hassock by Mrs Martin's side. There the child stood, his little face pressing close to her gown, his eyes fixed on her face, and looking, according to his fancy, like a fairy queen. Her cap, with its long lappets, and fancy complexity caught by decorations of curved mother-of-pearl combs and griffins' claws.

That evening, as, sitting in my study, I saw Christina coming across the field—I knew by my heart beat all the quicker. I sat there expecting him to burst in upon me with important tidings of the good thing that my lady had sent for her grandson. My quick fancy pictured the reconciliation; the fatted calf killed at White-ladies, though, Heaven knows, my poor Harry had been no prodigal; then, new gaily dressed, bright and blooming again; the joyous fuses of children, and their pastering feet about the dim old house. "Ay, the people here will want to ring the bells, no doubt; and so they shall," I caught myself saying, half aloud. But why did Christina stay so long? In my impatience I rose, and opened the study-door. Just then Sally Martin's voice, raised in indignation, came from the kitchen across the little brick-paved hall.

"You don't mean," she was saying—"you don't mean that my lady hasn't sent so much as a word about him; and he her own flesh and blood; pretty dear! What hard hearts your fine quality folk must have! She never looked twice at him at church; nor took a bit of notice, a more than if he had been one of the Sunday-school kids!"

"My lady did see him, though," Christina returned; "she hasn't touched a bit of dinner, and looks like a ghost this afternoon; just sent me down whatever a letter comes from Master Harry, for all she sends them back without so much as breaking the seal. It isn't my lady's fault; mind that, Mrs Martin; it's all that wicked house. What I say to this. Let them as don't believe in ghosties bide at White-ladies one winter."

Here Christina's voice stopped to a low growl, in which "rattling chains"—"rustlings"—something white in the avenue"—were the only words to be distinguished. At last it rose again:

"Now I must be going, Mrs Martin. I couldn't help just coming down to have a look at Master Harry's boy—God bless him! So, Master Harry, you no more think of leaving us than my constestation."

Away went the old man, and with him all my hopes and fancies. I think Mrs. Martin was wroth at the slight put upon her nursling here, I accordingly waged war against the new school, and yet, finding there was no sugar enough in her cup to sweeten the bitter draught, I say sharply enough to her left, I got out of the village. "Mayn't you believe all Master Christina's stories. Folks that go down of evenings to the Rural Grotto, as he does, are liable to see strange sights when they come back. I've been of all times and hours at the side-door, and never saw anything but there was a-than myself."

One more attempt I made to reach Lady Mareden's heart. And let those despise the effort who cannot understand all it cost me. I actually preached a sermon at the children o White-ladies. Not a sermon upon the duty of forgiveness: there was not a sentence in it, for I weighed them all carefully, that she should say was levelled at her. But taking for my text that beautiful promise of Jehovah to his people, "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you," I found occasion to dwell upon the wonderful tenderness which God has implanted in the mother's heart; a tenderness as pure as, one day, as lasting. He chose this among all human feelings on the best interpreter of His unfathomable love. Unfathomable to us, I mean. Thus I fashioned my discourse; and wove in here and there, like a golden thread, some one of the expressions of my old letters; but so that she could recognize them, but that they might come to her like a perfume from the former happy times.

More than twenty years have passed since I preached that sermon, but the whole scene comes before me now as vivid as a memory of yesterday. I see the little whitewashed church, its door wide open, the sunshine lying on the graves outside. The summer air: a hushed voice from the sea came to me in the pulpit. I feel that shiver run all down my spine as I give out the text; my face is burning; my hands are damp and cold. I look at my congregation, men and women; the singers in the gallery through a mist—they seem a long way off, and show like figures in a dream. Only straight before my eyes, though I never once turn them that way, is one clear sharp photograph—the great pew with its single inmate. I see that tall figure in its perpetual mourning; the white hair a strange contrast to those raven eyebrows. The face so full of pride, with the weary yearning look upon it I have come to know so well; those eyes which burn, but have no tears, seem to pierce through me while I speak. I hear the beating of my heart; the tremor in my voice as I preach my sermon. But as I went on there fell upon me a strong sudden consciousness, like a flash of light, of the place where I stood—of Him whose minister I was. The vision between me and my people vanished; I saw them listening with a fixed attention far beyond their wont. And, somehow, seeing this, I preached no longer; I forgot my carefully-written discourse; I spoke to them out of my own heart; I felt my words go straight to theirs. The strong pure Saxon—simple images taken from their simple daily life—came ready to my lips that day. The carved pew might never have been in the church at all, so completely had I forgotten it, when, towards the end of my sermon, chancing to look that way, I caught Lady Marsden's eye, where she sat unmoved, cold, and still as those effigies of her ancestors lying in the chancel. At this sight a sudden chill struck back upon my heart, my voice faltered, the words froze upon my lips; I felt that I must give the blessing abruptly, and thus end at once.

A weary, dejected man sat in the parson's study next morning. To tell the truth, the Rev. Arthur Arnott was on the worst terms possible with himself. How could I ever have fancied that a few poor words of mine could reach a malady so deeply rooted? My folly had been as presumptuous as that of those old surgeons who muttered spells over a cancer. Why had I gone out of my way to no purpose? I asked myself. I was there to teach the people of Hartford their duty as I best could. Why had I not preached against smuggling and drunkenness—the two great temptations of my coast parishioners? Why had I not? Ah! even then the answer was on the threshold of my door. Mrs. Martin burst in without knocking, that stolid face of hers alive with some great news.

"Oh! sir" cried the woman, "you'll be so glad to hear it; for all my sister Lee swore last autumn that poor Jane should never see her face again, she's got a horse and cart this morning, and gone off to seek her; and she says she'll bring her back without one hard word. She will have it that the morning's sermon yesterday was for her: to be sure there wasn't anything about forgiving Jane in it; but for all that she told me she felt, while she was sitting in church, that if she had a lap of gold she would give it freely only to see Jane, and to be the mother to her that she always was."

I rejoiced with my housekeeper. I was quite willing, too, that the village should think my sermon intended to teach Widow Lee her duty towards her daughter, a pretty, careless young thing, who had been led astray while in service at Exeter. Oh! ye who sow in tears, leave to the all-wise husbandman where and how the harvest shall be reaped!

CHAPTER V.

During the September of that year a very great event came off in our family—nothing short of a double wedding: my twin sisters, Agatha and Margaret, took it into their heads to be married on the same day. Fancy, if you can, the trial to a nervous clergyman. I declare my first sermon preached before the bishop was a trifle compared to it. The two brides, "twin cherries on one stalk," so exactly alike that their own mother could hardly tell one from the other, were to be dressed just the same—veils, wreaths, and all. In vain did I protest and expostulate; I even went so far as to declare I would not perform the ceremony; I felt as if it would be impossible to go through the service without making some dreadful mistake. My father took my part, but the women-folk of the family thought they had a right to rule on such occasions, and held their ground. I was coaxed into submission at last, and gave in upon my mother's promise to tie a blue ribbon on Agatha's left wrist before she went to church. Had it not been for some such precaution, I believe, to this day, that the wrong bridegroom would have been married to the wrong bride. This great trial fairly over, and no disastrous mistake made, I had a happy, happy time of it at home. It came to an end all too soon, for the friend who had taken my duty for me being unexpectedly called away after the first week, I could only take a clergyman's fortnight—that is to say, from the Monday to the Saturday week.

No doubt it is a dreadful thing that a clergyman should own to wanting a longer holiday, and that he by no means enjoyed the prospects of going back to his parish a week earlier than he had fixed; but, put a hundred black coats upon human nature instead of one, and you shall find it very much the same through them all. Mine rebelled sorely at the change from the sunny home-atmosphere to my gray lonely life at Hartford. Moreover—why should I keep back any secrets?—there was a certain far-away cousin of ours staying at my father's house. She came down from her home among the Yorkshire moors, to be one of the bridesmaids, and so I saw her for the first time. A bonny girl was Lucy Stratton. She had caught, and carried about with her all the freshness and bloom of her native heather at sunrise. When I add that Lucy Stratton had been for many years the Lucy Arnott of my fireside—the placens uxor, who loves, honors, and does not obey—my readers will not think it strange that I was vexed to find my holiday cut short.

It was no use grumbling; return I must; so Saturday evening saw me back at the parsonage. I sat by the fire, watching my housekeeper bring in my single cup-and-saucer, with all the preparations for tea on the same scale, and went into a fit of disgust. Could any living creature, who was not a wild animal, enjoy a solitary meal?

"Anybody been, Martin?"

I put the question as people do when they say to themselves, while they ask it, "Of course not: who ever comes here?"

"No one in particular, sir," was the reply. "You see everybody knowed you was away. Bet Scarf has been begging as usual—that woman must think we're made, at the parsonage, of shillings and old clothes and bits of broken victuals; and yesterday Nan Frost came, crying like mad. That idle big boy of hers has gone and 'listed for a soldier. All the better, I told her: it'll be a good thing for him, and a good riddance for Hartford."

Here Mrs. Martin rattled my tea-things as if they had been a service for a dozen people. She knew I had a sneaking kindness for the bold half-gipsy boy, who was, indeed, an Ishmael in his native village. My housekeeper was right; he had done the best possible thing for himself and every one concerned for him. So I had occasion to think only the other day, when Sergeant Frost came to see me—a bronzed, fine-looking man, proud to show his Crimean medals, proud to fight his battles o'er again by my study fire.

Martin went on: "My sister Lee, sir, is a joyful woman. Jane was sent for to White-ladies last week, and she's pleased my lady so well that she's to go with her into foreign parts. Poor Jane will be quite set up in the world again when she comes back. It's quite true, sir, what folks was saying before you went away; that my lady is going abroad somewhere, and Christian and his wife are to keep the house. Dear! that reminds me, Christian has been twice up here to-day, to know if you were back."

"Christian! Was there anything the matter at White-ladies?"

Not as I could rightly make out, sir. He said my lady was well; but he spoke short and gruff, and had a down-hearted look with him. Bless me!" she set the loaf down—"there, he is coming across the fields again. Your tea is quite ready, sir, and the bit o' meat nice and hot. Shall Christian send in his message, or wait till you ring to have the things taken away?"

"By no means; I would see him at once."

The old man came in. I asked him to sit down; but he stood at the door, twirling his hat round with his fingers. He seemed to want to say something without well knowing how to begin; so, by way of an opening, I asked,

"Well, Christian, has Lady Marsden sent you with a message?"

He shook his head.

"No, sir; she doesn't guess that I'm here to-night." He drew nearer, and lowered his voice to a whisper: I couldn't rest without coming. Oh, sir! my lady's going quite away—I don't know exact where, but a long way—quite to the other end of the world; and my mind misgives me somehow, that she never means to come back any more. She's had one of them lawyer-folks down from London, and he took away with him a heap of papers in a box. I know one thing; that the house is to be shut up, and me and my wife are to keep it as long as we live. I should have written myself to Master Harry, but I didn't know rightly where a letter might find him. You'll do it best, sir, now you're come back. He must come down here, and try to get a sight of my lady. I'm afraid she won't see him; but, Mr. Arnott, something tells me it's his last chance, and he must try it. My lady goes away on Saturday, this day week; so there's no time to lose."

Christian had spoken with broken voice and glistening eyes. I felt mine grow moist, as now I saw him fairly sobbing behind his blue cotton handkerchief.

"Do you think——?" I began, but I stopped short; I did not like to question the old servant.

He caught at my meaning.

"No sir," he replied, solemnly; "my lady has no more forgot Master Harry than she forgot him when he was a babe on her knee. It's my belief he's mostly in her thoughts, and will be to her death. Ay, Mr. Arnott, it's easy for folks to think why doesn't she forget and forgive all, but it's just the family nature—they can't do it. I lived with her father; he was the same—never would hear a word about my lady, nor give an answer to any of her letters; but, for all that, he kept the bits of playthings she had when she was a little girl; and I believe many's the tear he dropped over them. Why, when he lay dying, her name was the last words on his lips. And there's my lady—my heart aches for her, to think how lonesome and miserable she is. When she hasn't company she'll sit all day alone in the turret chamber, and has her bed in the room across the landing, so she's quite cut away from the whole house; she won't even have her maid sleep near her. Sometimes when I wake up at night I have thought, maybe my lady is ill, and not a soul within call. Then I can't rest till I've crept down, and across the hall, to the foot of the staircase; and many's the time I've heard her walking up and down, moaning and crying like. Oh, sir! I often think I would not have all she carries in her heart in mine, to own all her money and grandeur, though the people down the village do say my lady's next to the queen, and might go about all day long with a gold crown on her head if she liked."

I was a great deal too much touched by what Christian had said, to smile at his simplicity. I thought he was going now; but, instead, he came up close to the table, and spread out upon it before me a greasy, worn five-pound note.

Then hurrying back to the door, he stood with his hand on the latch ready for escape if I should attempt to force it back upon him.

"When you write to Master Harry to come, please put that in, sir. I've reckoned it will cost him as much as that, and my mind misgives me that he'll have nothing but the journey for his pains."

"But, Christian——" I took up the money.

"No, indeed, sir," he interrupted, in answer to my gesture, "I can't take it back again. Say you've given it to him yourself—anything; or, Mr. Arnott, would you mind saying it was from a friend you couldn't name; and that at any time if he wants money bad, there's more where that came from. Nay, it'll all be his some day, what little there is of it. I know folks say I'm a skin flint; but if I scrape and save, it's all for Master Harry. Only just enough to keep my old woman from the parish—please God to take me first—and he shall have all beside; nay, he may have it now any day if he likes."

The old man stood erect; a light came into his face and eyes as he told the one pleasant secret of his life. I looked at him with amazement while he spoke. This man I had held so cheaply—mean, grasping, selfish, not over-sober, not over-honest; I saw him transformed before me into a hero of loyal devotion. Thank God for all the hidden good He has put into our human nature!

As Christian had said, there was no time to be lost. Our country post had gone for that day, but I wrote the first thing next morning, and Harry reached my house on Wednesday. Let me spare my readers all the vain attempts he made to see his mother. She was inexorable—visit, letter, message were equally refused. Towards the evening of the next day he was so completely prostrate, both in mind and body, that I persuaded him to lie down. He did so under my promise that I would go to White-ladies myself, see Lady Marsden, if this were possible, and bring a message of some sort from her to him. So I set forth on my errand with a heavy heart, pondering all my way across the fields what sort of an appeal I should make.

Christian met me at the door.

"Oh, sir! it's no manner of use," he said, sorrowfully; "but as my lady hasn't said any thing about not letting you in, you'd best come up straight after me."

In obedience to this suggestion, I followed the old man close up the staircase. He opened a door, announced me, and I stood at once in Lady Marsden's presence. Partly, perhaps, that I had come in out of the western sunshine, the apartment struck me at that instant with a gloom and chill; partly, too, that my eye was not prepared for the contrast between the elegant furniture of the reception rooms, and that of this favorite sitting-room. Here every object—the black oak panelling; the heavy crimson hangings, dim with age; the old-fashioned furniture, so square and formal in design; the worn Turkey carpet; the faded needlework on the chairs, showed one and all like details of some picture painted in the darkest tones. Bright flowers, music, perfume—all that brings light and ornament into life, would, had they been there at all, have seemed strangely out of place; but in this room everything was in keeping, as perfect as it was melancholy. Even its sole ornament, the group of heavy-headed dahlias on the table, only served, with its sombre colors, to add another point of gloom. Every object which the eye took in seemed as if it could tell its own story of the mourning, and the weary pacing to and fro; and even now that restless grief had its interpreter, where, through the casement by which my lady was sitting, there came the wailing of the sea—those old dreary whispers among the elms.

She half rose on my entrance, and motioned me to the chair which Christian had set; then turning her eyes again to the black shadows gathering over the sea, on which her gaze had been fixed, she seemed to wait my errand. That she knew why I was there I felt certain, so I spoke without preface or preamble. What I said I do not remember now; certainly not half of all I had intended to urge as I came along. I spoke briefly and faithfully to her. I dwelt upon her son's unextinguished affection, and, finally, I conjured her, by the love she had borne him once, at least, to return him some message. Always looking over the sea, her gaze lost in those heavy shadows, Lady Marsden spoke when I ceased speaking. She did not appear to reply to me: I thought she was only repeating some lesson she had gone over day after day to herself.

"His choice was free," she said. "It lay between his mother and that girl, who sought him for her own advantage. He chose her and rejected me: what amends can he make now if he would? Can he break off his marriage? can he put back into my life one hope he has taken out of it? No! it is past—his way and mine lie far apart: let it be so to the end."

How could I answer these unjust words? While I was thinking she turned suddenly upon me—a cold, hard gray in her face, like the gray of a rock; a stillness about her mouth and eyes which I never saw on any other living face—the stillness of an agony which had overpast the whirlwind and the storm.

"Go back," she spoke, in a clear resolute voice—"go back and tell your friend"—she would not even say "my son"—"all that I have done. I have made my will, and the boy who was down here in the spring is my heir: and tell him, mind, that the child does not come into the property till he shall be thirty years of age. Say that I am returning to the Cape. I have nothing in England; there, at least, is my husband's grave. My punishment is just: I let him sacrifice his life—and for what?"

Her voice seemed to choke, but she spoke again: "Let him remember, when he is poor and wants, that his suffering is light to all he has brought on me. Have I not hungered and thirsted all those years? have I not——"

Her voice did not quaver nor break; it ceased at once, passed into the awful stillness of her face: the lips closed, white and rigid over the sentence just begun, like lips that shall never speak again. She rose abruptly, went into the room opposite, and locked herself in.

I remained standing where she had left me, as a man might do before whom had arisen a vision out of Florentine's Inferno. There was a terror in the sight of this mother, as inexorable to herself as to her son, of this nature whose light had become darkness, and how great was that darkness! Out of such a presence I could carry back no hope. Reconciliation seemed utterly impossible. Those two divided lives must run on each to its grave, and never meet—"Never! never!" I cried, bitterly—"Never! never!" the dreary whispers caught it up: "never! never!" echoed that wailing sea.

With my lady's face still before me, and her words ringing in my ears, I went down the staircase, and re-entered the hall.

What man, even more preoccupied than I was, but would have been spell bound by that marvelous play of light? Through some crimson panes in the western window a band of blood-red sunshine clove the hall in twain, and fell in fierce concentrated splendor upon the Holbein over the chimney piece. The dim armorials of the shield, its motto—only the one word, "Inébranlable"—shone out as distinct as if only painted yesterday. That was no picture: it was Ralph Verdan himself, who, starting from the wall mantled in blood and flame, appeared to defy the intruder, his right hand grasping his battle-axe, a cruel scorn upon his features. While I stood gazing the sun dropped down behind a cliff; the figure faded back into its frame; dark shadows swept across the hall. The house was silent as a grave. Afterwards I could remember how I had been half-conscious of an oppression in the air, a close, vapory odor, a sense of brooding heat. I was surprised to find, as I hurried from it, that the evening had become so chill.

I fain would have kept back Lady Marsden's cruel words from her son, but he would have them every one. Struck to the very soul by this last blow, he wrung my hand.

"Arthur! Arthur! I have not deserved it of her!" he said. He groaned aloud. "She is going, and I shall never see her face again. Oh, Arthur! to-night I could wish you had not saved me from the river!"

Poor Harry! I strove to give him comfort, though I could give no hope. We sat together hour after hour, for neither of us could have slept, and I thought it kindness not to leave him to himself. We talked of his wife, his children, his parish; touched a hundred topics, but dwelt on none. Nay, we went back to our old college-days; laughed over time-honored Oxford jokes; fought the bygone battles of the cricket-ground and boat-race; yet, let me try to cheat him of his suffering as I would, Marsden came back always to that one thought, "Going, and I shall never see her face again!" And thus the night wore on.

But listen! hark! We started to our feet. What cry has aroused the sleeping village? what mean those confused sounds, like the voice of some great terror; murmur, and din of shrieks, and going to and fro of hasty feet, whose tremor echoes that cry of "Fire! fire!"

Both springing to the window at once, we tore aside the curtains, flung the shutters back, and, merciful heavens! what a sight we saw. There, where the old house had frowned in the sunset, there rose masses of heavy smoke, of red and turbulent flame!

How we reached White-ladies I know not to this day; I only remember that Christian met us. The old man looked in Marsden's face; his glance a dreadful answer to the question we dared not ask.

"Six miles from the engine," he sobbed. "My lady! oh, my lady!" And with this he seemed as if he would throw himself into the flames, but the people held him back.

How, or how long the destroyer had broken loose, no one could ever tell. Unwatched, unsuspected, it had smoldered, and crept from beam to beam, till reaching some point where its fiery tongues came forth and lapped the air, it had burst out all at once into quenchless, resistless fury. One moment I looked up at the turret chamber. I turned sick, my eyes swam, my brain reeled, as I saw the white figure clinging to the window. Well might the fiery element exult over its one chosen victim, for what could rob it now of its prey? Was not all hope barred out by those narrow casements—escape forbidden by that gulf fast swallowing up the stairs—a gulf where roared and raged the flame?

I heard Marsden's voice—a hollow, soundless murmur, such as might come from a man trying to speak under a sudden deathblow; but the crowd caught it up: "Quick! quick! there is a staircase in the turret."

A dozen of us rushed forward; we knew the attempt was perilous, the effort vain; but was it not better than standing idly by, in sight of that great horror? Even women and children, eager with this feeling, pressed on, to be rudely pushed aside. The turret stood as if it had centuries still to stand, clasped by its ivies of a hundred years. To pluck these up, tear them away like fragile weeds, was but a minute's work, and so we came upon the door—a little, low, strong door; iron-bound and clamped into the solid masonry. It creaked, it shook to blows smote as those strong right hands had never smote before; but will it never give way? or too late, too late? A cry from the crowd comes to us; have they seen the death-glare light up those windows? Our sinews crack, our muscles strain, the sweat of agony is on every man's brow. O God of mercy! more help, more strength! Shock after shock from that living battering ram—the turret seems to reel before us—the door is beaten in.

And she whom we sought to rescue—she knew not our desperate efforts—she had no thought for herself, her peril, not even for her God. One moment, by the glare of her funeral fires, that face, so haggard, white and wan, had risen; and as men at the foot of the guillotine have taken note of the merest trifles, so then her eye remarked the threadbare coat, took in all the stamp which narrow means and narrow cares set upon a man. The years of poverty and suffering passed before her, and she, his mother, who had loved him—ay, loved him still beyond all words—it was she who had robbed him of his right and kept him from his inheritance. Like a thunderbolt fell the thought that the wrong she had done would not perish with her that night—when she lay a few calcined fragments, then that instrument of her lost revenge must take life and power. Full well she knew there was no flaw to make it worthless, that it was guarded with all formalities, made stringent by every jealous care. Would to God only that this cruel will were in her hand, that, casting it in the flames, she might follow gladly. But no, it was gone from her, utterly beyond her power: it could no more be revoked than a wrong done to the dead, or a curse from dying lips. The agony of that consciousness was too much: her hand unloosed its grasp, she sank down from the window to the floor, while we were groping up the staircase. We burst open the door in the wainscot easily; the smoke rolled out, the fires roared their loud welcome to the air as it rushed in. Marsden sprang forward alone: there was a pause: it seemed as if every heart among the bystanders stood still through those few moments of suspense. Neither cheer nor shout greeted him as he re-appeared with that figure in his arms—only one deep breath drawn by all as the breath of one man—a common sigh—almost a groan of unutterable relief. The crowd fell back; he bore her through them all, a little way apart. She had not fainted, as we thought at first. Opening her eyes, she fixed them on his face.

"Mother! my mother!"

"Oh, my son! my son!"

And at that cry—that Eureka of the heart, with crash, with uproar, and with utter ruin, the roof of the ancient house fell in!

THE END.

It is such a novelty to hear of any royal person being under any alarm on account of their spiritual welfare, that we are happy to record a bright exception in the case of the Empress Eugenie, who, it appears, is in a state of perpetual alarm as to where she will go to. Her mind is tottering. At one moment she is for setting out on a pilgrimage in the Holy Land, at another she is absorbed in all the mysteries of spirit rapping; then the Emperor finds her in a state of nervous affection, as if life were an absolute burden to her. The priests have told her that Providence has assigned to her a grand rôle. It was for this that she was rescued in that terrible hour of agony when it became a question whether the Cæsarian operation must not be performed, and it is for this she lives at the present hour. But the poor soul is fairly bewildered with all that is told her; and while she loves the Emperor and her little child with her whole strength, she is in doubt whether she ought not to desert both—throne and all—for the sake of the sacred Vicar of Christ.

The murders committed by the Russian authorities at Warsaw on the occasion of the anniversary of the battle of Grochow have deeply roused and irritated the Polish heart, and caused so much apprehension at St. Petersburg that General Zobalkoff, who ordered the firing, has been brought before a Court Martial; and Trefew, the Police Minister, has been dismissed. A thorough investigation into all the circumstances has been promised, and in the meantime men of the highest rank are busily engaged in preparing a memorial to the Emperor urging numerous reforms, and the recognition of nationality. The year 1861 will be one of peaceful reforms in Europe. The tyrants are cowed.

A Paris surgeon has lately performed a most remarkable operation on a soldier who was shot in the Crimea. The ball entered his brain, where it had been ever since till Dr. Lambali extracted it some short time since. The man is rapidly recovering.

Sir Charles Fellowes has bequeathed to the British Museum the watch formerly belonging to John Milton. There is considerable doubt whether the watch is the real Simon Pure.

Victor Hugo, having completed his great romance of "Les Misérables," demands £12,000 for the six volumes. Solar, the publisher of La Presse, offers £3,000 for the right to publish the work in the feuilleton form; another publisher offers £3,000 for the absolute property of the volumes, but the poet resists both inducements.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A man named Lewis Snowden, an engineer on the Bellefontaine and Indiana Railroad, was married on the 23d. A few minutes after the ceremony was performed a dispatch was received stating that Snowden was already married, having a wife and three children living in Pittsburg. The newly-made wife demanded that the matter be cleared up, and she and Snowden started for Pittsburg for that purpose, but before reaching that city he left the train and has not since been heard of. The injured woman continued to the end of the journey, and found all true as reported to her by telegraph.

Several young ladies, and young men in female apparel, residing in the neighborhood of Livermore, Westmoreland county, Pennsylvania, were recently taken before a magistrate, upon the complaint of a young man residing in the town, who alleged that the defendants, while returning from a prayer meeting, threw him down, and having daubed him with tar, applied feathers. The young ladies stated that he had made use of offensive language concerning them. The matter was arranged by the payment of a small fine and costs.

The Milwaukee Sentinel relates that the pastor in one of the churches in that city recently became aware that a young man of his congregation was forming bad habits. Meeting the stray lamb one night in the streets with some dissolute companions, the reverend gentleman attempted to dissuade him from going further, but the rowdies in company objected, and one of them struck the parson. The fellow had reckoned without his host. In a moment the clergyman had thrown off his coat and "sailed in." A very brief space of time sufficed for him to "wax blazes" out of the crowd, and having accomplished the feat, he quietly resumed his coat, and with it his equanimity. He was not molested further, we presume. Whether he rescued the object of his anxiety from the possession of the party is not stated.

The Pittsburg Post of the 28th March exposes one of the most diabolical plots ever concocted to throw an Express train from the track of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad, for the purpose of robbing the mails. It was discovered that divisions of the gang existed at Loudonville, Lakeville, Massillon, Mansfield, Bucyrus, Upper Sandusky, Crestline, Galion, Columbus, Cleveland, &c., and that they were bold and reckless men, fit for any crime. Also, that the parties suspected of the murder of Mr. Whitney, a respectable citizen of Loudonville, Ohio, who was brutally killed and robbed about four years ago, and of assaulting a brakeman on the railroad, were connected with the association. One of the principal conspirators and directors lives at Loudonville, and has manufactured large quantities of counterfeit money, by which means he has supplied his associates with funds. While the detectives were engaged in this investigation, and were waiting to get the conspirators fairly in the clutches of the law, the officers of the road were notified by the Postmaster of Pittsburg of the contents of a letter intended for a member of the gang, but by accident addressed to the Postmaster.

At Hartford, Connecticut, on the 28th, a most difficult operation was performed by Drs. Beresford and Ellsworth. It was the removal of a tumor from the neck of a young lady, in doing which it was necessary to sever the jugular vein, and tie the ends while the operation was progressing. This most difficult and perilous feat was accomplished without injury to the patient, and there is every prospect of her perfect restoration to health.

On the 30th, a very daring attempt was made to steal a mail bag from the Chamber street station of the Erie Railroad. Fortunately the eye of a detective saw the thief and arrested him on the spot.

The Springfield Republican says George W. Smith, a tea and coffee merchant in New Haven, married a worthy young lady a short time ago, whom he has since abandoned, and run away to California with a woman of doubtful morals. We would respectfully ask where the doubt comes in.

The purchase of the Adriatic by the Galway Steamship Company has put the Cunard Company on their mettle. They have resolved to sell the Arabia and Niagara, and build two boats of greater size and speed.

The Aberdeen Conservative, a paper published in the northern part of Mississippi, says: "We attended the Sheriff's sale and were perfectly astonished to see such a sacrifice of property. One gentleman actually purchased one hundred and sixty odd acres of land for forty dollars, another bought a half interest in a brick law office for fifty dollars; a one hundred and twenty-five dollar buggy was sold for thirty dollars, and other property sold equally low."

The body of the Hon. J. Sheridan Hogan, a Member of the Canadian Parliament, whose portrait, as a missing man, was published in our paper of the 28th July, 1860, was found in the River Don, in Canada, on the 30th of March.

Ulysses Harrison was, on the 25th March, convicted in St. Louis of the murder of a man named John Massey, during a drunken brawl in a house of ill-fame in that city. As there were extenuating circumstances of provocation, he was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment.

The unterrified Democrats of Hoboken met at Hortung's City Hotel on Monday night, and nominated the following candidates on their side. For Mayor, John R. Johnson, renominated; City Treasurer, William Shepherd; City Clerk, William R. Harrison. Third Ward Nominations—Councilman, George Wilhelm, renominated. Justice of the Peace, Frederick W. Bohnstedt, renominated. Constable, Charles L. Meredith, renominated. Mr. Johnson is the Hoboken Land Improvement Company's protégé, but there is no chance of his being elected if the other party put up a good man against him, as Mr. Johnson is unpopular with our German citizens.

An unknown man was found on the 1st lying on the lower road to Bull's Ferry, shot through the head and a pistol lying by his side. He is about five feet eight inches high, well built, high forehead and light complexion, dark auburn hair. He was dressed in a brown sack overcoat, black cloth frock coat, black cloth vest, mixed cashmere pants, fine linen shirt, woollen undershirt, checked necktie, soft hat and fine boots. A memorandum book was found on his person, in which he writes, in German, that he shot himself, "not for want of money but being tired of life, and gives his respects to his brother and sister."

The Toronto Globe gets very excited over the flight of a Canadian Postmaster, named Davidson, of Berlin, who, having robbed the Post Office of about $10,000, set sail to England. This is surely running into the British Lion's mouth.

A Mrs. Stackpole, of Brooklyn, died last week from the bursting of a Kerosene oil lamp. It has been discovered that the corner grocery men who sell these fluids are in the habit of adulterating Kerosene oil with camphene and burning fluid, thus, for the sake of a few cents, wilfully endangering the lives of their unwary customers. An example ought to be made of the man who sold the Kerosene oil to Mrs. Stickpole.

Alderman Green, who was charged with corruption, has been tried, but the jury was unable to agree—eight being for conviction and four against.

The danger of violent exercise and excitement combined had a very painful illustration on Friday, the 22d, when a young man, clerk in the Brooklyn Post Office, while enjoying a game of snowballing, fell dead from the exertion. He was a nephew of Mayor Powell, of Brooklyn, and only in his nineteenth year. Post mortem examination discovered that he had ruptured a blood vessel of the heart.

A few weeks since two sportsmen, firing simultaneously, killed sixty-seven wild geese at one shot (four barrels) at Montauk, Conn. Since then, more than fifty persons have been there to get the same shot, and went away with "nary geese."

Libel will soon need a new statute to define what it really is, since we read that the captain of the ship Adelaide Bell has sued the proprietors and editors of the New Orleans Crescent for $50,000 damages, on account of certain reports in regard to what was alleged to be a Black Republican flag, which was unfurled from the masthead of that vessel.

Four runaway negroes belonging to citizens of Florida went to Fort Pickens recently, and demanded the protection of Lieutenant Slemmer. That officer promptly returned them to their rightful owners.

In the town of Concord, Mass., according to the recent census returns, there are annually manufactured 100,000 pails and 75,000 tubs, worth $94,000; 2,900 gross of pencils, worth $4,000; 2,000 packs of gold leaf, worth $14,000.

Hon. W. G. Dix, formerly of the United States Legation at Quito, South America, delivered a lecture on Spanish American Revolutions, on Monday evening, the 25th March, at Clinton Hall. It was numerously attended, and well received. Mr. Dix spoke of South America as a fitting place for the exercise of American curiosity, energy and perseverance, and ended with a glowing description, partly in verse, of the diversities of climate and productions, and the natural wealth and splendor of the Ecuador.

Prince Alfred, the sailor son of Victoria, has arrived at Bermuda. He is expected to arrive in Havana about the beginning of April. It is not settled when he will be in Halifax. He will not touch at any port of the United States, either North or South.

Captain Lovell gave his last lecture to the Twelfth Regiment to the largest audience of the season. It was on Seacoast Defences.

A writer in the Historical Magazine for the current month gives the early—perhaps the earliest—authentic notice of the land in England, from which the grandest name in American history is derived. In the first volume of "The Chronicon Monasterii de Abingdon," published in illustration of mediæval British history, under the direction of the Master of the Rolls, by the British Government, at page 337 we find a grant of land from King Edgar, the Anglo-Saxon King, to "Athelund Washingatune." The document bears date A.D. 965, about nine centuries ago.

Congressman Van Wyck, who was recently assaulted in Washington, has suffered many narrow escapes during his lifetime. When a boy, residing in Bloomsburg, he fell into a well head foremost, and was only miraculously saved. While riding on the Hudson River Railroad, a few years since, he, with other passengers, was precipitated into the North River. Two years ago, while riding on horseback during a severe shower, he and his horse were struck senseless by an electric shock.

E. K. Collins, the famous steamboat man, has struck an oil vein, so says the News, near Hammondville. Its yield is prodigious.

The Judges of the British House of Lords have decided that a clergyman has no right to solemnize his own marriage. This is tantamount to saying that a doctor has no right to take his own physic.

Mr. Thomas Francis Meagher delivered, at Irving Hall, on the 3d of April, his lecture on Terence McManus, one of the Irish patriots. It was well attended, and much applauded. Mr. Meagher is an eloquent orator, but he too frequently spoils his finest points by exaggeration.

HUMOROUS GLEANINGS.

What kind of cradle would be the most uncomfortable for a baby to lie in?—Scratch cradle.

Jones cannot fathom how it can be true that those ladies acquire the best carriage who don't ride in one.

The poet who tried to render a piece of poor prose into rhyme did all he could to "make what was bad—verse."

"I would have you know, sir, that my name is Frances, and not Frank."
"Ah, yes, miss, but you know I have the franking privilege."

A teacher of vocal music asked an old lady if her grandson had any ear for music. "Wa'al," said the old woman, "I really don't know. Won't you take the candle and see?"

A man died of apoplexy the other day. The next day the coroner held an inquest, when the following verdict was returned: "Died from a visitation of one beefsteak, eight cold potatoes and fried sausages."

A temperance lecturer in Devonshire, a short time since, finished his discourse thus: "And finally, my hearers, why should any of you drink ardent spirits? My son Tom has got as good cider as any in the county, at sixpence a quart."

It being hinted to a barrister, who was wearying the court with a long and dull argument, that he ought to bring it to a close, he angrily replied,
"I will speak as long as I please!"
"You have spoken longer than you please already," said his antagonist.

We lately picked up the following memoranda, which we saw dropped by a young lady attired in an elegant velvet talma, an exquisite Honiton collar, a white hat and plume, and a painfully brilliant silk dress, with exaggerated flounces: "I must get a Vail, Sarcknet, Gluvs, Broun Hoss, Laise, Shynimezet, Kalone."

When Lamartine was in the ascendant, at the early part of the Revolution of 1848 his merits were being discussed at a club of artists and authors. "Ah!" said a clever young author, "he and I row in the same boat." Douglas Jerrold, who was present, turned round, and said, "But not with the same sculls!"

A young country editor, was very desirous of gaining the good graces of the new vicar, and in describing his first entrance into church, wrote thus: "He is a most venerable sample of antiquity." But to his astonishment, and the amazement of all the inhabitants, it came out next morning in types, "He is a most miserable sample of iniquity."

The Rev. Robert Hall, disgusted by the egotism and conceit of a preacher, who, with a mixture of self-complacency and impudence, challenged his admiration of a sermon, was provoked to say,
"Yes, there was one very fine passage of your discourse, sir."
"I am rejoiced to hear you say so—which was it?"
"Why, sir, it was the passage from the pulpit to the vestry!"

An anxious mother in Scotland was taking leave of her son on his departure for England, and giving him all good advice. "My dear Sandy, my ain bairn, gang south, and get a' the siller ye can from the Southerns—tak everything ye can; but, the English are a brave boxin' people, an' take care o' them, Sandy; never fight a bald man, for ye canna catch him by the hair."

"How," said Mr. A. to a friend who wished to convey a matter of importance to a lady without communicating directly with her, "how can you be certain of her reading the letter, seeing you have directed it to her husband?"
"That I have managed without the possibility of a failure," was the answer, "she will open it to a certainty, for I have put the word 'private' in the corner."

Newspaper people are proverbially temperate as well as virtuous. We believe one of the craft did get "tightly slight" a few days ago, and the following is a sample of his paper next day: "Yesterday morning at four o'clock p.m., a small man, named Jones, or Brown, or Smith, with a pistol in the hole of his trowsers, committed arsenic by swallowing a dose of suicide. The verdict of the inquest returned a jury that the deceased came to the facts in accordance with his death. He leaves a child and six small wives to lament the end of his untimely loss."

An amusing incident occurred at the close of the Edinburgh review. A major was about to refresh himself when, in the act of raising the potion to his martial lips, he, evidently becoming aware of the confused position of some of the companies, called out in stentorian tones, "—— Battalion, attention!" and, immediately thereafter, when all eyes were turned upon him awaiting his commands, conveyed the liquid to its destination. The effect may be easily imagined; ill-suppressed laughter ran along the lines, and even the gallant major could not refrain from a smile at the amusing contretemps.

A good story is told of Lord Bath. He owed a tradesman £800, and would never pay him; the man determined to persecute him till he did, and one morning followed him to Lord Winchelsea's, and sent up word that he wanted to speak with him. Lord Bath came down, and said, "Fellow, what do you want with me?" "My money!" said the man, as loud as ever he could bawl, before all the servants. He bade him come the next morning, and then would not see him. The next Sunday the man followed him to church, and got into the next seat; he leaned over and said, "My money—give me my money!" The sermon was on avarice, and the text, "Cursed are they who heap up riches." The man groaned out, "Oh, my Lord!" and pointed to my Lord Bath. In short, he persisted so much, and drew the eyes of all the congregation, that Lord Bath went out and paid him.

A census-taker found a woman who gave her own age as twenty-eight years, and that of her oldest son as twenty-three!

"Why, Hans, you have the most feminine cast of countenance I ever have seen."
"Oh, yah," replied Hans, "I know de reason for dat—mine moder was a voomans."

A minister being threatened with deprivation, said to some of his flock that if he were "deprived" it would cost a hundred men their lives. On being asked what he meant by such a threat, he explained that if he lost his benefice he should set up as a doctor, and if so he had no doubt he should be the death of at least a hundred patients.

Old Lord Elphinstone was asleep at church while the minister, a very addle-headed preacher, was holding forth. At length the parson stopped and cried,
"Waukin, my Lord Elphinstone."
A grunt, and then "I'm no sleepin', minister."
"But ye are sleepin'—I wager ye dinna ken what I said last."
"Ye said, waukin, my Lord Elphinstone."
"Ay, ay, but I wager ye dinna ken what I said last afore that."
"I wager ye dinna ken yersel'."

Not long since a native of the Fejee Islands presented himself to a missionary and humbly begged to receive the rite of baptism.
"But," objected the priest, "you are a polygamist—you have several wives."
"Only two."
"That is one too many."
"Good; I will get rid of one of them."
"Keep the one that you have lived the longest with."
"No, I prefer the other, she is younger."
"As you please."
Eight days afterwards the converted savage returned to the priest, with his face radiant with innocent joy.
"Now, father," said he, "you can baptise me."
"You have only one wife now?"
"Only one, on my word."
And he pointed to quite a pleasant-looking young woman who accompanied him.
"And what has become of the other?" asked the priest.
"Oh, I ate her!"

Witnesses are often exceedingly stupid, but we don't know whether this witness ought to be called stupid or not. He was before Baron Martin. It was desired to get from him an exact account of a certain conversation, with the "says I" and "says he;" but the counsel could not make him comprehend the form in which he was wanted to make his statement. So the court took him in hand.
"Now, my man, tell us exactly what passed."
"Yes, my lord certainly. I said that I would not have the pig."
"Well, what was his answer?"
"He said that he had been keeping the pig for me, and that he——"
"No, no; he did not say that—he could not have said it. He spoke in the first person."
"No, I was the first person that spoke, my lord."
"I mean this—don't bring in the third person—repeat his exact words."
"There was no third person, my lord, only him and me."
"Look here, my good fellow, he did not say he had been keeping the pig, he said, 'I have been keeping it.'"
"I assure you, my lord, there was no mention of your lordship's name at all. We are on two different stories, my lord. There was no third person; and if anything had been said about your lordship I must have heard it."
So the court had to give it up, though the witness was only too ready to tell all he knew.

How women do admire their weddings—not their own merely, but anybody's! How they throng the churches, "just to see the ceremony!" Then what animated descriptions of the whole affair! what glowing accounts of what the bride "had on!" What criticisms of the bridesmaids! In short, what an immense amount of simper, and giggle, and prattle—all because two inoffensive people are going, in a legal and orderly way, to set up housekeeping! Funny, isn't it?

Weber was one day invited to a dinner party by a well-known London music publisher who had reaped a little profit by the publication of his Oberon, and whose residence and establishment were on the most splendid scale. On entering the gorgeously furnished drawing-room, our modest German opened his eyes to their fullest extent, and, looking round, sighed softly, at the same time saying to himself, "Ah! I perceive it is better to sell than to write music."

The man "who couldn't stand it any longer," has taken a seat, and now feels quite comfortable.

OUR BILLIARD COLUMN.

Edited by Michael Phelan.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Reuben, Muscatine, Ia.—The statement is correct.

C., Wilmington, Del.—Foul.

E. G. T., St. Louis.—We have mailed full particulars to your address.

THE WORLD OF BILLIARDS.

Billiards in Cincinnati.—We have received a welcome letter from old our friend, Phil Tieman—Phil's missives are always welcome—on friendly topics, matters in general and billiards in particular. Mr. Tieman has assumed the sole proprietorship of the National and International Saloons in Cincinnati. It is needless to say that we wish our friend double success under his double responsibility; and where a generous and kindly disposition are united to undisputed talent, as in Mr. Tieman's case, success is not a difficult achievement. We are glad to learn from Mr. T. that billiards rain "very lively" in the Queen City of the West. Mr. Seereiter, of Detroit, made a second visit to Cincinnati during the past two weeks, though he only remained one day. He played four discount games in Mr. Tieman's saloon with a leading amateur of Cincinnati; two games were won by Mr. Seereiter, and two by his amateur opponent. Mr. Seereiter made a run of 188 points, caroms, on the red balls, and his opponent the very respectable run of 146 points on the red and white balls making 18 more caroms than the Detroiter, and had the balls been the two reds in his case he would have scored 219 points.

Mr. Tieman has put up a gold watch and chain as a prize for the best run made by an amateur in his establishment. Notwithstanding the increased demand on Mr. Tieman's time and attention, consequent on his having two establishments under his charge, he writes us that he hopes to be able to tear himself from home for a week or two, in order to assist in the coming tournament. There is little doubt that if Mr. Tieman does not carry off all the honors on the occasion, he will take his share, and give his opponents some trouble in getting theirs. Our cotemporary, Wilkes's Spirit, in a late article on billiards in Cincinnati, pays a high and well-deserved compliment to Mr. Tieman, in the course of which the writer says:

"When he (Mr. T.) comes again in the great tournament in June, let him but be in thorough battle trim, and the boldest lance will beware of him as the fearfullest adversary in the field. The Cincinnatians firmly believe that he has no superior among the players of America, and he will doubtless feel it to be a higher duty to respond to this proud confidence by the most careful preparation, rather than to yield to the blandishments of friendship before Capua is taken. Should he prove successful in this great coming expedition, he will have another claim upon his city for helping to honorably advertise her name, and she will have the gratifying consciousness of knowing that, in addition to having, in Phil Tieman, one of the best fellows alive, she has produced the champion billiard player of our Western World. Such men as Phelan, and Tieman, and Seereiter, and Murphy become largely and substantially identified with the reputation of their respective cities, and no city is so great, or so well fixed in her position, as to afford to be indifferent to the manner in which her champions uphold her name in those honorable contests which attract the imagination of mankind. So look out, friend Tieman! and be watchful, Cincinnati, of the tournament in June!"

Mr. Frank Parker, late of Milwaukee, a player of talent, and well known to the billiard public of the West, has transferred his field of operations to Cincinnati.

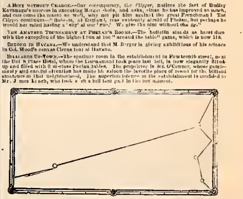
Billiard Exhibitions in Boston.—The series of billiard exhibitions given by Messrs. Kavanagh and Geary commenced on Thursday evening last, at Moran's Billiard Rooms, Bowdoin square. The opening exhibition was well attended by the lovers of the game. The entertainments commenced with a French carom game, which was well contested. A four ball carom game of 500 points was won by Mr. Kavanagh, who, in the course of the play, made runs of 81, 81 and 124. Mr. Kavanagh wound up the evening's performances by giving his excellent imitations of Berger's masse and other inelastic strokes. The abilities of Mr. Phelan were added to the attractions on Friday evening. Messrs. Phelan and Kavanagh commenced proceedings by an American four ball carom game, which was won by Mr. Kavanagh, whose highest run in the game was 67; Mr. Phelan's highest count being 109. The next game was the French carom, which was close and very interesting, and was won eventually by Mr. Phelan. The Boston papers speak very highly of the quality of play exhibited on this occasion. The third exhibition, on Saturday evening, was commenced by a French carom game of 50 points, which Mr. Kavanagh won by 2 points. This was followed by a four ball carom game of 300 points, between the same gentlemen, which was won by Mr. Phelan by 65 points. Kavanagh's best run was 93; Phelan's, 53. The entertainments were wound up by a game of 150 points between Mr. Kavanagh and a leading amateur of Boston, and a display of Mr. Kavanagh's Berger shots. On Monday evening an exhibition was given in Providence, in which Mr. Phelan assisted. After this exhibition Messrs. Kavanagh and Geary were to return to Boston, where they were to give some more exhibitions of their skill in public and before some of the clubs. After concluding in Boston, Messrs. Kavanagh and Geary start for Albany and Troy, and then pursue their Western tour.

A Hint without Charge.—Our cotemporary, the Clipper, notices the fact of Dudley Kavanagh's success in executing Berger shots, and asks, since he has improved so much, and can come the masse so well, why not pit him against the great Frenchman? The Clipper continues—"Roberts, of England, was evidently afraid of Phelan, but perhaps he would not mind having a 'shy' at our 'cue.' We give the hint without charge."

The Amateur Tournament at Phelan's Rooms.—The bulletin stands as heretofore with the exception of the highest run at the "around the table" game, which is now 118.

Berger in Havana.—We understand that M. Berger is giving exhibitions of his science in Col. Wood's canvas Circus tent at Havana.

Billiards Up-Town.—The spacious room in the establishment in Fourteenth street, next the Union Place Hotel, where the tournament took place last fall, is now elegantly fitted up and filled with 8 first-class Phelan tables. The proprietor is Mr. O'Connor, whose gentlemanly and careful attention has made his saloon the favorite place of resort for the billiard amateurs of that neighborhood. The superintendence of the establishment is confided to Mr. James Leach, who took a [illegible] in the last national.



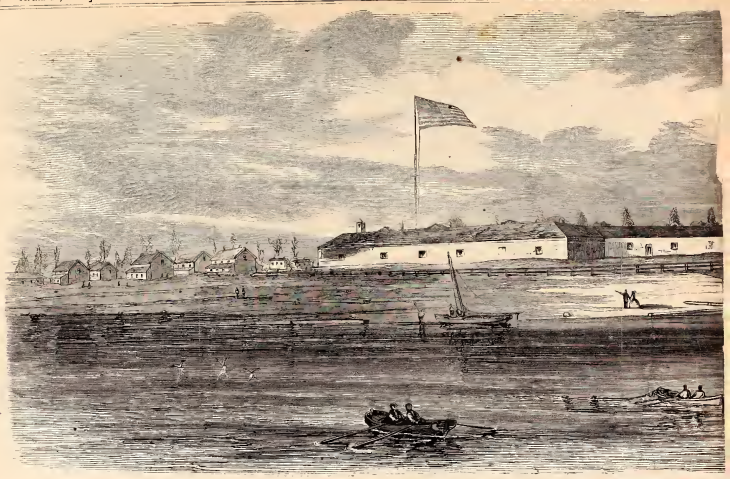
Eleven Shot, made by R. H. D., Detroit, Mich.

Great Improvement in Making Sugar.—L'Opinion Nationale of Paris, under the heading, "A Revolution in the Manufacture of Sugar," announces a discovery by M. Rousseau, which, it says, will more than double the yield from a given quantity of cane. The process is exceedingly simple, and the editor says that he has repeated it with complete success in the laboratory, and sees no reason why it should not succeed as well on a large scale. It is known that saccharine juice, as obtained from plants, alters rapidly in the air, because it contains albuminous matters which become brown or black by the action of oxygen. M. Rousseau removes the albuminous matters by heating the juice with about three one-thousandths of its weight of crude pulverized plaster. As soon as the liquid arrives at boiling heat, a thick scum forms on the surface, and by decantation, a perfectly clear liquid is obtained. This liquid, left in the air, would become as black as ink; but by mixing with it six to eight per cent. of its weight of hydrated peroxyd of iron all the alterable organic matters are removed in a few seconds. It will then remain for an indefinite time without color, and it is only necessary to boil it down to obtain crystallized sugar.

After the important discoveries made during the last few years in warlike weapons one would have thought that the genius of destruction had exhausted its inventive power. It is said that the Giovanni-Franci mortar-cannon, which the Moniteur de l'Armée designates an extraordinary weapon of war, is one of those productions which, from its originality, is expected to surpass all others. This cannon is of open work throughout its entire length, a mortar forming its breech. To load, the mortar is separated from the cannon by sliding on a thick iron shaft adhering to the cannon. Whenever it is detached for the purpose of loading it becomes a mortar, and can then be used either to throw a shell or to be again attached to the cannon. The cannon, being of open work, cannot be heated, and there is nothing to check the rapidity of firing. But what is said to be one of its most important qualities is its facility of transport as cannon of the largest calibre can be taken to pieces. We have merely alluded to this discovery as one important enough not to be passed over in silence. The French War Office has appointed a commission, composed of artillery and engineer officers, to examine the gun and make a report on it.

The Power of Hearty Laughter.—The following incident comes to us thoroughly authenticated, although we are not at liberty to publish any names: A short time since two individuals in this city were lying in one room, very sick—one with brain fever, and the other with an aggravated case of mumps. They were so low that watchers were needed every night, and it was thought doubtful if the one sick of the fever would recover. A gentleman was engaged to watch one night, his duty being to wake the nurse whenever it became necessary to administer medicine. In the course of the night both watcher and nurse fell asleep. The man with the mumps lay watching the clock, and saw that it was time to give the fever patient his potion. He was unable to speak loud, or to move any portion of his body except his arms, but seizing a pillow he managed to strike the watcher in the face with it. Thus suddenly awakened, the watcher sprung from his seat, falling to the floor, and awakening both the nurse and the fever patient. The incident struck both the sick men as very ludicrous, and they laughed heartily at it for some fifteen or twenty minutes. When the doctor came in the morning he found both his patients vastly improved—said he had never known so sudden a turn for the better—and they are now both out, well. Who says laughing is not the best of medicines?

Antiquity of Hoops.—There is a curious little song, dating back to 1601, entitled, "Oh, Mother, a Hoop," in which the value of hoop-skirts is set forth by a fair damsel in terms that would delight a modern belle. In 1728 we find hoop-skirts and negro girls, and other "chattels," advertised for sale in the same shop.



FORT MONROE, VIRGINIA, AS SEEN FROM THE JAME

FORT MONROE, VIRGINIA.

THIS remarkable fort is situated on the north point of the mouth of James River, and is about one mile from Fort Calhoun, on the Rip-raps; thus these two posts command the entrance to the river. Fort Monroe is one of the largest and strongest military posts in the Republic. The walls are more than a mile in circuit, very thick, and very high, surrounded by a moat, which is from sixty to one hundred feet wide, with eight feet of water, drawbridge and outer batteries. It mounts some three hundred heavy guns, has mortars for throwing shells, and is provided with furnaces for making the shot red-hot. The range is about three miles. The walls enclose about seventy-five acres. The parade ground is in the centre, and all round it are the barracks. Being well planted with trees, it is a pleasant shady place in summer. Outside the moat is a fine walk, with a view of the sea.

In this fort is the famous fifteen inch gun designed by Major Hoffman, U.S.A., which is supposed to be the largest piece of ordnance ever cast whole.

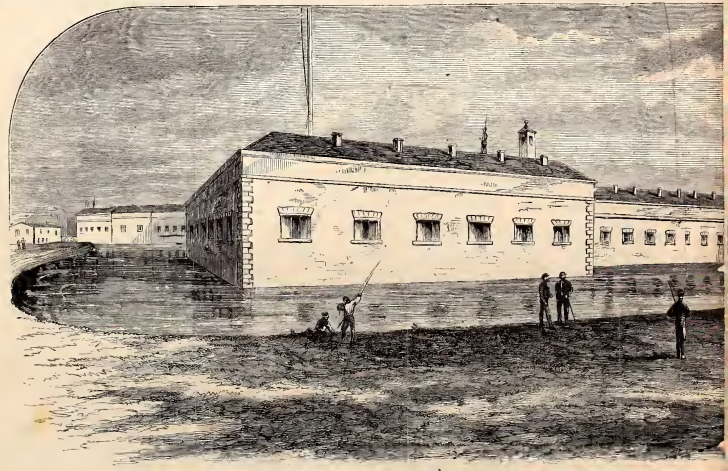
The fort is in the possession of the United States Government, and is strongly gar risoned by the United States troops.

Old Point Comfort is a favorite spot for pleasure-seekers in summer, and is im mediately contiguous to the fort.

THE GREAT GUN AT FORT MONROE,

Formerly called "The Floyd Gun."

THE Great Gun which we engrave to-day is undoubtedly the largest piece



FORT MONROE, VIRGINIA—VIEW FROM THE BANK OI

RIVER.—FROM A PAINTING BY J. E. SHEELS, OF WASHINGTON, D.C.

rdnance in the world, and is as wonderful in its propulsive powers as it is in its echanical construction. It was cast on the 18th of January, 1860, at the foundry f Knapp, Rudd & Co., of Pittsburg, Pa. This famous cannon, designed by Major ahman, of the U.S.A., was cast upon the hollow principle, and has proved an entire success. Its weight, independent of carriage, is forty-nine thousand one hundred pounds, or over twenty-four tons. The bore is fifteen inches in diameter, and twelve feet and a half long. It has two feet of solid metal at the breech, making the extreme length fourteen and a half feet. The outside diameter at the breech is four feet. It will project a ball weighing four hundred and twenty pounds a distance of between four and five miles with singular accuracy and tremendous effect.

The gun now at Fort Monroe is mounted upon an iron centre-pintle carriage, the top carriage of which recoils upon the rails of the lower one, and permits, by a notched cut in the middle of the gun, an elevation of twenty-eight and a half degrees. The rails of the lower carriage being inclined, the gun runs forward of itself from the position of recoil into battery, on rollers attached to an eccentric axis, easily brought to bear by two men with handspikes. Notwithstanding its great weight, it was easily manipulated by a firing party consisting of a sergeant with six men.

When fired horizontally, or nearly so, the time of loading and running into battery was, in one case, one minute ten seconds; in another, one minute fifty-two seconds.

When fired at its maximum elevation of twenty-eight degrees thirty-five seconds, the time of loading, including depressing, sponging, loading, elevating again, and running into battery, varied from three minutes ten seconds to four minutes.

THE MOAT OR DITCH.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

The shell is attached to an oaken sabot. In loading, it is seized by nippers, the points of which enter small holes in opposite extremities, of a diameter of the spherical surface. Four men with a handspike passed through a ring (of the nippers) and standing on a platform, about four feet below the muzzle, easily raise it. When opposite the muzzle, another man turns it on the axis of suspension, so as to introduce the sabot into the bore. It is then easily rammed home.

By experiments made for determining the initial velocity, the average was one thousand three hundred and twenty-eight feet per second, with forty pounds of large grained powder, and one thousand two hundred and eighty-two feet per second, with fifty pounds of perforated cake powder.

The ranges, with maximum elevation of twenty-eight degrees thirty-five minutes, shells of three hundred and thirty-four pounds and fifty pounds of Rodman's perforated cake powder, were as follows: five thousand two hundred and ninety-eight, four thousand nine hundred and fifty, five thousand three hundred and seventy-five yards.

With forty pounds of large grain powder they were five thousand four hundred and thirty-five, five thousand and sixty-two, five thousand seven hundred and thirty yards, and the time of flight about twenty-seven seconds.

With ten degrees elevation and forty pounds large grain powder, they were two thousand seven hundred, two thousand nine hundred, two thousand seven hundred and fifty-four, two thousand seven hundred and sixty yards.

These ranges do not exhibit any decided advantage of those obtained from the ten-inch gun up to ten degrees elevation. Beyond that elevation the gain is considerable, and may be estimated at about six hundred yards for the elevation of twenty-eight degrees thirty-five minutes. With thirty-nine degrees elevation and a charge of forty pounds of large grained powder, it is probable a range considerably beyond four miles might be attained. Indeed, the conviction appeared to be general among the officers who witnessed the firings, that the gun could, if necessary, bear much heavier charges, though, for all ordinary uses, it is doubtless best to keep them down to somewhat less than the above.

ERLE GOWER:

OR, THE

SECRET MARRIAGE.

By Pierce Egan.

Author of "The Flower of the Flock," "The Snake in the Grass," &c., &c., &c.

CHAPTER XLI.

O sovereign power of love! O grief! O balm!
All records saving thine come cool and calm,
And shadowy, through the mist of past years;
For others, good or bad, hatred or tears
Have become indolent; but touching thine,
One sigh doth echo, one poor sob doth pine,
One kiss brings honey-dew from buried days.—John Keats.

Ishmael's discernment did not deceive him—Beatrice Stanhope loved Erle Gower.

There was natively much romance in her composition, but she had been early schooled to render implicit obedience to the "proprieties" of life by a preceptress selected with thoughtful care by her father. This woman, indeed, for a lengthened period, occupied the place of her mother, who had died while she was very young, and Sir Harris Stanhope had reposed such confidence in her, had treated her with such tender courtesy, had declared himself so enchanted with her management of his daughter's education, had so often declared himself grateful beyond any possibility of an equivalent, that the matron believed it not impossible that she should, one radiant day, become a baronet's lady, or, at worst, the recipient of a very handsome gratuity in addition to an annuity for life.

She awoke from this dream at the very instant she had decided that her hour of triumph and reward had arrived.

She informed Sir Harris Stanhope, one evening after dinner, with an affected coyness of manner, that she considered the education of his daughter was at length completed. She adopted this course with the design of drawing him out.

She succeeded.

His bland, stereotyped, pleasant smile instantly vanished from his face, he bowed stiffly to her, and at once coldly dismissed her from his service, at the same time informing her that his private secretary would settle with her all questions of salary.

For the moment the woman stood petrified, and ere she could utter an observation Sir Harris quitted the apartment, leaving her standing speechless and alone.

At length she found her tongue. She clenched her fists, and scalding tears of bitter disappointment forced their way through her eyelids.

"I have formed her into a creature without a heart!" she almost screeched after him. "Oh, when most you need her sympathy and tenderness, may she convert you into stone by her coldness and unfeeling indifference!"

The woman was wrong in her assertion. She had not fashioned Beatrice into a creature without a heart. She had done her best towards it, and Sir Harris had earnestly seconded her efforts. But Beatrice had a heart, and with it a will. Her will had permitted her to adopt the lessons poured hourly into her ears when it suited her inclination to do so, and to decline them when her heart secretly—remember, secretly—rebelled against their propositions. If Beatrice had possessed less self-will, and had hated her governess less, that individual's teachings, aided by her father's worldly counsels, might have accomplished the intended result; as it was, they fell short of their mark. Nevertheless, the attrition of those perpetually propounded precepts upon her mind was of a somewhat positive character, and established a difference between feeling and thought. Her emotions were not unfrequently in direct hostility with her convictions, and she was herself at times surprised by the width of the interval between them.

But her emotions were her own, and her convictions those of her monitress and her father.

She had been very carefully tutored, and constantly reminded that it was an essential thing to temper love with discretion, that it was imperative first to select a husband from men of birth and fortune, and after the preliminaries were settled—indeed, after the wedding-knot was tied—then to commence the duty of loving him. Her preceptress had pointed out to her the folly—to say nothing of the impropriety—of bestowing love upon a man who might, perhaps, at the last moment be prevented by circumstances becoming her husband; on the other hand, she enlarged upon the prudence as well as the propriety of caring nothing for the individual to whom she might be engaged until she had absolutely secured him. It gave her the opportunity of "behaving so well." It enabled her to part with indifference with the creature to whom she might be betrothed, should the match be broken off, and to transfer with elegant decorum her untouched affections to another, or to several others in succession, as occasion might warrant, until the desired husband was absolutely made fast by the bonds of matrimony.

Beatrice thought this reasoning incontrovertible, more because her father endorsed it than because her preceptress advanced it. But when she came practically to apply it, she found a difficulty in making it assimilate with her natural feelings.

Her father, at an early date, had pointed out Cyril Kingswood as her probable future husband, that is, as the son-in-law he most desired to secure. He did not conceal from her that there were difficulties in the way, but he explained to her how, by skilful management, those difficulties might be surmounted. Cyril Kingswood was a light-hearted, high-spirited youth, partaking sufficiently of his father's nature not to be insensible to beauty. He was a bird rather easy than otherwise to be trapped by a pretty decoy; and Beatrice was instructed by her father in the arts necessary to wile him—not that she needed much tuition that way, few women do—but Sir Harris Stanhope left nothing to chance, and he laid down a plan for her to pursue, under which he hoped to achieve his wish.

Beatrice was not averse to try her arts upon Cyril. Of all the marriageable youths she had seen she preferred him. He was handsomer, sprightlier and more winning in his manner than any of them, and she consequently found her inclination was as much affected by his person as her interests by his hand.

Whenever opportunity occurred she endeavored to engross his attentions, and as he cared for no one female more than another out of Kingswood Chace, she very frequently succeeded. This course of conduct led her brother Carlton to term Cyril her pet, and to rally her, apparently so unimpressible to the court of others, upon her rather marked suavity to Cyril.

When she first heard of Erle Gower from her brother, she pitied the "poor young person" so situated, and she fancied she was haunted by his story because her brother so frequently recurred to it. When she first saw him she almost fainted, because, recognising his features without remembering whose they resembled, she at once imagined that she had dreamed of him, and that, by his sudden, extraordinary and wholly unexpected appearance, he would influence her destiny.

Almost immediately after he was located in the house of her father commenced the battle between her former convictions and the genuine instincts and impulses of her nature.

Unacquainted with the real standing of Erle in society, he was, under her convictions, a person to be patronised condescendingly at times if it suited a purpose, haughtily at others, but always patronised. What other treatment had a poor, unknown, friendless scholar the right to expect from one of her condition? None other would he have received but for the existence of an unsubdued emotion—a yet unbarriered undercurrent.

While she strove to regard him with an "exceedingly proper" indifference, his clear, expansive brow, his bright eye ever kindling at his own glowing thoughts or the animated language or noble actions of others, his handsome, clearly defined features, and the dignified expression which ennobled them, compelled her to a consciousness that there were feelings welling up within her heart which defied her convictions with all the worldly lessons they embraced.

She laughed their suggestions to scorn, but they returned, whenever Erle suddenly appeared before her, with a force which terrified her. The first impression that he was linked with, and would have, if not control over, at least influence on her destiny, gradually became strengthened, and then she began to wonder whether he was a proper object to make an eligible match.

Here she encountered a serious difficulty, and she found the strength of her convictions sorely tried. She discovered that she liked Erle for himself alone, and that no condition in life, elevated or humble, could rule or govern the tender interest he had awakened.

To her, tutored as she had been, this was an astounding discovery. It was an exceedingly awkward consciousness, which assured her she had met with one whom she could not, under any circumstances, part from with indifference, or find a successor who could ever hold the same place in her heart.

It consequently became immediately to her an important question to ascertain who he was, whether he was one her father would accept as her husband, or whether he was wealthy enough or likely to be able to support her in the style of living to which she had been at least accustomed, whether her father accepted him or not. For though we are loth to say it, her father's consent weighed less with her than the prospect of being reduced to a humbler sphere.

At present he was surrounded by a mystery she was unable to penetrate, or even base a surmise upon; indeed, reflection appeared only to bewilder her. His strange resemblance to Cyril and Lord Kingswood, her father's anxiety about him, his singular connection with the cold, stern, sad-looking man, Vernon, and the beautiful, spirit-like girl, Violet, all perplexed, confused and confounded her.

She had been taught by her father to believe that wherever mystery existed there was something evil, or at least of a suspicious tendency behind it. Her mind, however, obstinately refused to think ill of Erle. Alas! for her, it thought only too well of him and too much, for his image, after a time, made her brain its abiding-place.

Thus she passed through the first phases of love, struggling against it, reluctant to believe that she had advanced beyond that emotion which halts at preference, secretly dreading that she was deceiving herself, and yet fancying that she could make but few of the sacrifices which a true love would never shrink from, weeping with vexation when at times alone because she was conscious of the supreme power he possessed over her heart, yet dwelling with delighted pleasure on the memory of his looks, his words, his mien.

As if to withdraw from her all loophole of escape from this undesirable passion, her father's nervous anxiety to get at Erle's history, the subtle designs of Ishmael, backed by her own strong inclinations, gradually narrowed the intervals which kept her and Erle apart; and she was thrown thus more frequently than ever into his society, thrown enough to perceive that, as yet, she had failed to make any impression of a tender kind upon his heart.

It is easier for a woman to discover that a man does not love her than that he does. Men simulate affection cleverly, but they can never hide from a woman's eyes an actual indifference. Beatrice was piqued, and forgetting the lessons of caution and prudence she had received, determined rashly to compel Erle to fall in love with her.

She deceived herself with the conceit that he had no preformed attachment. She remembered that he had evinced some slight confusion at the mention of Lady Maud, but she gazed proudly in her mirror, and believed that, if she willed it, she could compete triumphantly with the proudest beauty in the land.

And so she resolved to bring to her feet the proud reticent being whom she loved, loth as she was to admit it even to her conscience, which with her, as with others, submits to no reserve.

She, with her brother Carlton, were frequent in their visits to Erle and Violet. Ishmael would not permit the latter to return those of Beatrice, although he offered no objection to any calls Erle chose to make at Sir Harris Stanhope's, because it squared with his policy. He knew that the knight would only become more perplexed and worried respecting Erle's parentage, and, with all his astuteness, would be able to obtain nothing from him helping to a solution to his carking conjectures.

Beatrice, in commencing her attack upon Erle's heart, quickly found that it could not be carried simply by assault, but that it must be besieged with more than ordinary skill, and that it would stand a somewhat prolonged siege.

Coquetry, she speedily perceived, had no effect upon him, although he seemed pleased when she appeared in high spirits and rallied him with vivacity. She, therefore, without appearing to do anything of the kind, set herself to work to inform herself of his habits of thought and action, the real tone and bent of his mind—what pleased him, and what he held in repugnance.

How quickly a woman who loves can acquaint herself with all the peculiarities favorable and unfavorable of the beloved object. Beatrice, gifted with all the penetration and acute discernment of her sex, speedily pierced through Erle's mailclad reserve, and made herself mistress of his true nature.

And when she had won her information, her cheek burned, her heart swelled, her brain seemed to glow, for she found him as high-minded, noble, true-hearted a gentleman as any of whom she had ever read, while, as such, he surpassed all she, in her brief life, had ever known.

If he had only had a vice, a weakness, a foible to reduce him to the level of others, she felt that it would have afforded her a consolation if, winning him, want of means or position compelled her to resign him, or if she did not win him, to part with him; but there was not one small point in his character which she could discover that would permit her at any time to separate from him without regret the very bitterest and the most poignant.

She read with him, conversed with him, yielded up her mind to his, made him feel that she did this less in acknowledgment of the superiority of his acquirements than in confession of another influence he had obtained over her which it was for him to determine.

Her hand trembled when it touched his. Her bosom heaved and fell when he addressed her. She sought his eyes with a dreamy expression in her own, and let her eyelids fall in seeming confusion when his clear, bright orb rested on her own.

And still in vain.

He was gentle to her, courteous, attentive. He smiled when he met her, and he pressed her hand when they parted. If in society, he preferred evidently her conversation to that of others, and when alone, excepting some occasional fits of abstraction he was equally amiable and agreeable to her.

But there was no undercurrent; he was too equal in his conduct to her. There was a want—the want a woman feels so keenly if it is not supplied. A look, a touch, was all that was needed; one look alone would have supplied all that she was thirsting to know, but neither that look nor the touch, nor yet a word, came from him to enable her to murmur even to herself, "Io triumphe," or even to solace her under her disturbing doubts.

The consequences entailed by her endeavors to bring Erle to her feet were moodiness, irritability, fits of inordinate vivacity, or prostrating depression, excited liveliness in society, and passionate, sobbing fits, when quite alone locked within her chamber. But she persisted, for she had plunged willingly into a stream with the pride of a swimmer who possesses a lofty consciousness that he can control the waters and advance or retreat at pleasure, and she found herself in the grip of a powerful current, borne resistlessly and impetuously onward.

Narrowly observant of Erle's conduct to herself, she was not less regardful of his behavior to others, and was inexpressibly perplexed by his manner to Violet as by that of Violet to him.

She knew, she felt that Erle did not love Violet, yet anything more tender or affectionate than his demeanor to her it was scarcely possible to conceive. She tried to fathom the secret impulse which impelled him thus to act to his home companion, but she was baffled. That there was a hidden motive she was sure; what it was the sharpest exercise of her natural penetration did not enable her to discover.

The thoughtful tenderness, the gentle and assiduous kindness which Erle displayed to Violet was fully reciprocated by her. Beatrice was enabled to see this, and was at the same time gratified to find that, with all the affection Violet evinced, there was identified with it no love, as Beatrice understood that passion—yet no lovers could have appeared more affectionately disposed towards each other than this strange pair.

There was, however, embodied in Violet's attachment to Erle a species of reverential respect which sorely puzzled Beatrice, although she was compelled to confess to herself that there was a peculiar dignity and a proud reserve in Erle's character, which, though by no means offensive, still forbade familiarity and seemed rather to demand worship than to promise reciprocity.

A woman having once conceived an affection for one of the opposite sex clings to it with obstinate tenacity. She may know the attachment to be hopeless. She may, unhappily, be convinced that it is wrong, sinful, degrading to others as well as herself, but she will not—perhaps because she cannot—surrender it. She may outwardly appear to stifle it. She may inwardly argue, reason, strive with herself, but she continues to love, and unless circumstances be favorable, will continue, even though she involves herself in ruin, and those who ought to be dearest to her in grief and shame.

Beatrice seemed to feel that her growing attachment to Erle would not reach a happy realization of its aspirations, that it would, indeed, prove hopeless. That was a presentiment, an intuitive presumption, founded on no real basis, in fact, she entertained a self-flattering belief that she could win the heart of any man upon whom she chose to exercise her fascinations with the intention of making him captive to her charms; still, with respect to Erle, desirous as she was of enslaving him, she could not keep down an unpleasant conviction that his hand and heart were destined for another.

It would have been better, on making this discovery, to have withdrawn herself from his society, to have held communion with her heart, and to have given up all thoughts of him at once. But no, true to her woman's nature, she could not resist the influence he had obtained over her; it was so pleasing, so delicious, so fascinating, that she shut her ears to the counsels of prudence, her eyes to consequences, and with the conviction that she was guilty of weakness and folly, she threw herself more than ever into his society, going so far as she could dare to go, giving him every opportunity of learning the conquest he had made.

In doing this she knew that she acted dangerously for herself, as she was quite conscious, that if Erle discovered her secret—so transparently hidden from him, though carefully concealed, as she imagined, from every other eye—he would take the initiative in sundering the intimacy existing between them if she had not succeeded in touching his heart. But she found herself incapable of controlling the impulses of her passion for him.

One thing she fancied, and that was, if he had not already surrendered his love, he might be drawn into an attachment, and by her. So she resolved to discover what was the real state of his affections, as that knowledge, when obtained, would enable her to shape her future course with better probability of success.

Up to this time she had been unable to extract from Erle or even Violet, by any hastily-dropped word, by innuendo, by, in short, any remark accidentally or designedly uttered, the least clue to their origin. Ishmael was by no means a man to attack with direct questions, or with hints or insinuations. The consequence was, that Sir Harris Stanhope, who had delayed his visit to Lord Kingswood on the subject of their conversation at the Marquis of Chillingham's day after day, with the hope of previously acquiring information which would direct him what ground to take, communicated with angry sharpness to his daughter his vexation at her failure.

Setting his teeth together, he hissed, rather than spoke, as he thus one morning addressed her:

"The air pervading Mr. Vernon's mansion must have weakened your intellect, deadened your faculties, rendered you more effete than a Turkish harem doll. You must change your tactics. Beatrice, you must entice Mr. Gower here, receive him alone; you need not fear being overlooked or interruption. A woman knows how to enthral a man if she will. I need not instruct you what to do, the wiles of your sex admit of no instruction, because they are natural to all, they only require an uncontrolled sphere of action, and that you shall have. Mark me, suggestions are not realizations, promises are not performances. In a state of transition between expectation and fulfilment, you can extort anything you wish from the lips of a man, and promises were made to be broken. 'At lovers' perjuries Jove laughs.' You understand me——"

"Sir, this outrage——" interposed Beatrice, with burning cheeks and glittering eyes.

"Silence, Beatrice. You are not a fool!" he cried, sharply, "else my tuition, and that of the best of preceptresses, has been thrown away. Let me not have to repeat this conversation, or you may find it take a yet more unpalatable form."

Having made these execrable observations, he bowed with studied politeness to her, and with a bland smile on his unpleasantly-set features, he quitted her presence.

She hurried to her room, and with blushing, burning face, wept scalding tears, but withal could not forego a desire to follow out the instructions of her father, and to receive Erle alone, in an apartment in which she knew they would not be intruded upon, so that, irrespective of her father's wishes, she might obtain some definite clue to her own fate.

It so fell out that, early on the following day, Erle called at the mansion in Hyde Park gardens just as Sir Harris Stanhope was about to leave it. By his directions, Erle, who had come in quest of Carlton, was ushered into an apartment, and in a few minutes afterwards Beatrice appeared before him. Her cheeks were flushed, but her lips were pale, and by the rapid heaving of her breast it was easy to see that she was laboring under some strong excitement.

Erle addressed her with his usual frankness, and held out his hand, in which she placed hers, cold as marble. He pressed it, and she rose her large, lustrous eyes, and looked into his with an expression it would have been impossible for him to mistake if his heart had not been pre-engaged.

He inquired for Carlton as he conducted her to a seat, and was informed that he was absent, but was expected shortly to return.

"The interest, if not too trying to your patience, you will, perhaps, kindly fill up by a little conversation with me. I want to talk with you, Mr. Gower," she said, in a low tone, and speaking with evident difficulty.

He put down his hat and gloves.

"Miss Stanhope," he said, "you are fond of depreciating your own attractions. I am sure it cannot be with the unnecessary purpose of extorting compliments, always trembling on one's lips when you appear. You know the pleasure I feel in your society, and yet you talk of trying my patience by passing with you an interval which cannot fail to prove agreeable to me."

"Perhaps to me," murmured Beatrice, her breathing being yet short and thick.

"If I thought it would not be," he returned, quickly, "you should not have occasion to accuse me of trying your patience by remaining here."

She looked up to him with a somewhat startled aspect.

"Why," she said, trying to smile, "do you flatter yourself that your society should prove agreeable to me?"

"I judge by the past, and perhaps some faint idea of your nature. You have ever received me with distinguished kindness, for which I am deeply grateful and I believe, from my inmost soul, that unless my presence was acceptable to you, that you would, while being kind and affable, have established a distinction so wide from your present behavior to me that I must have recognised," he replied, in a full, rich tone of voice.

"I thank you, Mr. Gower," she replied, in a scarcely audible voice, "I am sincere; oh! believe me, I am sincere, and of all the world, the most to you."

He raised her hand, which she extended towards him, to his lips.

"A friendship, such as yours is indeed, to one like myself, an inestimable possession!" he exclaimed, with some earnestness.

Friendship! how she hated that word!

She turned her head coyly towards him, and said, as she affected a smile, though her lips perceptibly trembled as they curled—

"I think there is something very cold in that word friendship."

He opened his eyes.

"It is chief among the social virtues," he returned, with some little ardor, "I prize it, Miss Stanhope, beyond almost all others—of course there are exceptions. In my early life, isolated as it was, it was to me a lode star, to which my one earthly hope was directed. Of all the emotions human nature is capable of possessing, it is the truest, sincerest, most faithful, most loyal, as it is the most enduring."

"You have—omitted—forgotten, perhaps—love!" faltered Beatrice, looking down at her small feet, as it peeped from beneath her dress.

"Love is an emotion of another kind," responded Erle, thoughtfully, "though when they are co-existent, they cannot fail to be productive of a happiness no cares or trials can allay."

"Yet surely love is the higher emotion," she observed, gazing suddenly and steadfastly at him.

"Highest, dearest, brightest, best of all," he exclaimed, his eyes kindling with a sudden enthusiasm; and then, with some confusion of manner, he added, with a smile, "the poet tells us that 'friendship is love—without his wings!'"

"Aye, without his wings!" she repeated, musingly, then added, "poets are fond of painting love as inconstant. Why should it not be as constant and enduring as friendship? I believe it is."

"And I!" exclaimed Erle, emphatically.

"In fact," observed Beatrice, in a low tone, and with her heart beating tumultuously at the same time, "I suspect that between—that between two persons of opposite sexes—a youth and maiden, that friendship is—is love—and the wings have nothing to do with it."

He, as that last remark caught his ears, saw in his mental vision the form of Lady Maud, even as she looked when they made the discovery of the form their friendship had taken, and he rose up and said, with his heart full—

"Indeed—indeed, Beatrice, it is!"

And she rose up too, blinded with tears and emotion, and tottering towards him, threw herself upon his neck, murmuring—

"Oh, Erle, dear Erle, it is love, not friendship, which exists——"

She could not conclude the words, and sank insensible in his arms. Utterly bewildered and overwhelmed, he stood for an instant motionless, then he bore her inanimate form gently towards a couch, and laying it gently upon it, rang the bell violently.

A servant appeared, and he said, in rapid accents—

"Miss Stanhope's maid instantly. Miss Stanhope has been seized with a sudden faintness. I will send a medical attendant."

With that he seized his hat, and rushed out of the house.

CHAPTER XLII.

Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a milder form,
I'll woo you like a soldier at arm's end;
And love you 'gainst the nature of love.—Shakespeare.

For an instant Lord Kingswood was disconcerted by the abrupt entrance of Philip Avon into the chamber in which he was conversing with Lady Maud. He was not quite certain that he had not overheard his concluding words. He greeted him with a silky smile, and said, as he pointed to Lady Maud,

"I have somewhat roughly prepared Lady Maud for your rather unexpected arrival. Her ladyship is a little disturbed—I should say, rather agitated by your sudden appearance—and a little disorder of the mind in one so foolishly nervous can hardly surprise you. Indeed, when we remember the terrible circumstances which nearly cost you your life, her emotion is simply natural; you will, therefore, overlook any shortcomings which may appear during your reception, and attribute the deficiency to the right cause. I have thought it best to acquaint Lady Maud with the object of your visit, and my pledged word to your father, Sir Walter. I have, I think, smoothed the way for both of you, and it will enable you to shorten the duration of the present interview, which no doubt will prove in some respects a trial to both. I will leave you together, assured that Lady Maud, knowing my wishes, will respect them. On the termination of your interview you will, perhaps, Mr. Avon, rejoin me in my library?"

Philip Avon bowed his head coldly, and Lord Kingswood, with a sidelong, uneasy glance at Lady Maud, quitted the room.

Although Lady Maud was in a half-fainting condition from horror, fright and sickening dismay at the communication Lord Kingswood had made to her, she yet had true and noble blood in her veins, and that unpurchaseable high-breeding which enabled her to assume a dignified and even haughty carriage, though she could barely keep herself from swooning.

Pale as marble, cold as a pillar of ice, with erect mien, and a haughty expression upon her exquisitely-chiselled features, she awaited in motionless calmness what he had to say.

For at least a minute, he, too, stood immovable and in silence, with his large, unearthly-looking eyes resting upon her fair, beautiful, and aristocratic face.

As he slowly traced her delicately-formed features, a deep and passionate sigh burst from his lips, for they seemed to him, even in their wanness, more exquisitely lovely than he had ever yet beheld them.

But they seemed, too, in their immobility, to indicate that for him they would never become animated or radiant, that the downcast eye would never flash with joy at his coming, or beam with tenderness at his presence, that the slightly-compressed lip would never curl in a glad smile of welcome or of love for him. That the fair face upon which he gazed with passionate admiration would never glow with animation at his fervent words, or with delight at the deep and earnest offerings of his heart. This emotion of despairing hopelessness wrested a bitter sigh from his proud and turbulent breast, and this sigh caused Lady Maud to turn her eyes upon him.

She could not but be shocked by the change he had undergone.

His frame, naturally powerful, with well knit limbs, had always indicated considerable physical strength without betraying bulkiness. Now it was wasted, spare—unpleasantly gaunt. His face was thin even to fleshlessness; his cheek-bones and massive jaw-bones were disagreeably prominent; his eyes were deeply set in their sockets, from whence they burnt brilliant and fiercely; his complexion, which, previous to his encounter with Eric, had been a rich nut-brown, was now a horrible, pale, sallow tint, like that of one who had been for twenty years incarcerated in a dungeon.

As he stood erect, grim and ghastly, glaring upon her, a fearful shudder, like a spasmodic convulsion, went through her frame, and if whiteness could be added to the hue of alabaster, her face became yet a shade paler.

Her emotion, however, was but momentary; with that power of controlling the outward aspect which most women possess in the presence of a man for whom they entertain a deeply rooted distaste, she remained firm and even majestic in her deportment.

One glance at his face and figure had sufficed her: her previous repugnance was now changed into a deadly aversion.

To become the wife of this man was a doom in which none clinging to the House of Kingswood could afford a parallel. Death, as an alternative, was a leap into Paradise from horror; and thus she felt even while the words of Lord Kingswood were yet ringing in her ears.

We seem instinctively to know when we create a favorable impression or a feeling of dislike, and Philip Avon, from the first, knew that he had only succeeded in inspiring Lady Maud with aversion. Now, more than ever, he perceived how wide was the gulf which separated them, but what might have been passing in his mind he studiously concealed from her. He affected an attitude of melancholy, adopting the tone and manner of one who has a heavy grief weighing upon his heart, as though he hoped to win from her commiseration and sympathy what he could not hope to obtain from her love.

"Lady Maud!" he exclaimed, in a hollow voice, on finding that she awaited his speech "an interval has passed since last we met of heavy moment to me. I will not shock or vex your ears with a history of the events which made me a victim to acts of the most cowardly villainy, acts which the miraculous interposition of Providence alone prevented being attended with a fatal termination. They relate only to myself and another. I have suffered, and the task of avengement is before me. Perhaps I am not wholly without blame in the matter. My natural impetuosity of temperament, allied to a nature that feels deeply, that loves as it hates, with passionate ardor and inflexible endurance, may have served to precipitate a crime which I have but too sound reasons to suspect would have been perpetrated at no very distant period. However, let it pass you; Lady Maud can only be distressed by any reference to it, and it is my most anxious wish to spare you, so far as it lies within my power, distress of any kind."

His furtive glance enabled him to tell, by the compression of her lips and the inflation of her nostrils, that his words had not been without their effect upon her.

No, indeed they had not: she felt bitterly the implied calumny upon Eric, which he had with such effrontery uttered, but she restrained the words which rushed to her lips in his defence, and only despised the calumniator the more.

Philip Avon, finding her silent, continued:

"I think, Lady Maud," he said, in the same quiet and somewhat humble tone, "it is due to your innocent and ingenuous nature to be plain and candid with you. It is my belief that misconceptions, and, in truth, much mischief, arises if questions of moment are left to be understood rather than expressed. We cannot actually know what is really intended by implication, but we have no excuse for misinterpretation when the plainest and most unequivocal language is adopted; it is, therefore, my purpose to be frank in my speech, and to utter my sentiments without the slightest disguise. You will not, at least, Lady Maud, be offended at me for adopting such a course."

Still silent, pale, immoveable, with downcast eyes, Lady Maud stood; and neither by sign or word, gave him to understand that she assented or dissented from his proposition.

His eyes glittered, and his teeth grated, as he awaited a remark; but it did not come, and he continued to speak:

"Lady Maud," he said, drawing a deep breath, "though known to you for years, our intimacy is of comparatively recent date; nevertheless, from the first hour of introduction to you, transformed from a mere child into what you now are, I have loved you; I can hardly say fondly and tenderly—the words do not suit my nature—but I have loved you wildly, madly, passionately. It is no puny affection this love; it is not adoration, for that, in my eyes, is self-abasement; but it is, as I feel it, a delirium, a frenzy, an intoxication, but with this distinction—that it is not an insane delusion, a wild chimera, or a temporary infatuation, from which I am likely to awake cured of such folly. I love you as a man should love a woman, boldly and bravely; as one who should sit on his right hand and move with him proudly through life as he moves; dear to him as his life-blood, or his honor, as, in some sense, she is the mistress of it; he being, in her eyes, all in all, he her monarch, her world, her god. Thus, Lady Maud, do I love you, thus have I loved you. I could not permit a nameless dependent, a creature without origin or place, to dare to raise his eyes where mine rested. I could not, would not suffer even the familiarities of relationship to play and dandle with the object on which my heart was set. Hence I have been, perhaps, hasty, violent and rude, where I only intended to protect my honor and my love, and to raise her to a pinnacle where she might be admired but not approached. If you, Lady Maud, will recall circumstances which have passed, you will discover, if the fact has not forced itself upon you already, that it is to this spirit I have acted. I, therefore, presumed that you could not discommend proceedings taken avowedly in your honor, and to maintain inviolate the exalted position you are entitled to command."

Lady Maud unconsciously felt her self-possession gradually returning. No one likes to hear the thing he loves, however mean, depreciated; certainly no one blessed with a particle of a generous spirit submits quietly to hear the being he honors as well as loves spoken of in contemptible terms. Especially is this true of woman. Especially was it true of Lady Maud when Eric Gower was thus derogatorily mentioned.

She turned her eyes coldly upon him, and with a distant hauteur, and in a voice fainter than she wished it to be, she said to him,

"You have presumed too much, Mr. Avon. I do not recognize any right you possess to defend my position, even if attacked. I am wholly unconscious of its having been attacked in any fashion displeasing to me."

"There you err, Lady Maud," instantly returned Philip Avon. "I love you—that would give me a title to defend your fame and your station from being tainted by contact with the unworthy. But I have yet another and a stronger right to interfere, a right which is, in fact, wholly independent of your recognition, a right by which I stand here now to address you."

"I comprehend you, sir," responded Lady Maud; "you allude to the promise made to Sir Walter Avon by Lord Kingswood. Let me add, however, that promise is worth little without my acquiescence."

"Worth everything, worth all," rejoined Philip, quickly. "Lady Maud, I first knew that I loved you by finding myself jealous of the attentions paid to you by others. I at once spoke to my father, Sir Walter, upon the subject of a marriage with you. I found in him, to my surprise, a bitter opponent to my views. He is fierce, obstinate, passionate, far more so even than myself. You perceive, Lady Maud, that I am candid in my admissions, and when I expressed my determination to make you my bride, his rage became incontrollable. I laughed it to scorn, and after a severe struggle for the mastery, I brought him to reason. Understand me, Lady Maud, his opposition was based upon some monstrous superstition, which furnishes a terrible doom for him who marries a Kingswood, particularly one of the female branch. If making you mine brought perdition upon me, I would, knowing it, still wed you—and I will."

Lady Maud shrank back a step at this terrible confirmation of Lord Kingswood's assertion, but with rare courage she recovered herself almost instantaneously, and bravely held on.

"Actuated by these feelings I sought Lord Kingswood," continued Philip, and to him I broached the subject. He expressed no objection, and referred me to you. Such a reference I felt to be idle, because I believed your fancy to be limed, but not by me. So I suffered for the time your coyness to prevail, because there was a serpent in my path whose poisonous sting I had resolved to cut out, and should, but that he basely and treacherously took an advantage of me, and——"

"It is so!" exclaimed Lady Maud, excitedly. "I know him to be as incapable of a dastardly act as I am sure you are incapable of coping with him on fair and honorable terms."

Philip's face changed from its unearthly, sallow hue to a yet more awful, livid tint.

"Your ladyship is quick at solving allegories," he said, savagely. "I spoke of a serpent. You readily understood to whom I alluded."

"You alluded, Mr. Avon, to one upon whom, by your own admission, you intended to inflict some deadly injury—to one who had the courage to face you and the skill to defeat you, even upon your own terms," she returned, betraying yet further excitement.

He bowed stiffly.

"I will not contradict you, Lady Maud," he said, displaying his teeth in a spiteful, sardonic smile; "nor will I discuss the matter with you; it would be a needless waste of your time and mine. His triumph, such as it is, will be a shortlived one, and you, anon, will either be won to look down with shame upon the weakness which beguiled from you a thought upon him, or be enabled to mourn in silence and in secret—mark me, in secret, Lady Maud—that the creature is a thing of the past. But pardon me, all this is digressive and foreign to what I wish to say to you. Returning to the point which immediately affects us both, I felt, after what had happened in Kingswood Chace, that a simple reference to you, deeply and unjustly prejudiced as you have been against me, was worse than useless to enable me to prosecute my suit with success. I therefore instructed my father, Sir Walter Avon, to wait upon Lord Kingswood, and to extort from him—if he could obtain it no other way—his consent to bestow your hand upon me. I knew that, according to the terms of his guardianship, Lord Kingswood possessed unlimited control over your hand and your fortune; and if I once obtained his unequivocal pledge that you should be mine it would be irrevocable. I have obtained it, and I am here to present myself to you as your future husband."

"Never!" burst from the lips of Lady Maud

"One moment, if you please," interposed Philip, raising his hand. "It is not necessary to ask your consent; you must obey—you will."

"I will perish rather," exclaimed Lady Maud, firmly.

"Still, you will obey Lord Kingswood's mandate, and become mine," persisted Philip Avon. "I will tell you why. My father, Sir Walter, holds in his hand the fame, name, all that is dear to Lord Kingswood. Persist in your refusal to wed me, and nothing shall save him, Lady Kingswood, and your toy boy cousin, Cyril, from utter destruction."

"Impossible!" ejaculated Lady Maud, astounded at this extraordinary announcement.

"Nevertheless it is true," rejoined Philip Avon. "It is an easily-uttered threat, and might be spoken by me to terrify you, without being founded in truth; but it is truth. Sir Walter was well acquainted with the late Lord Kingswood, who perished by his own hand."

"A calumny," ejaculated Lady Maud, feeling cold and faint at this recurrence to the history of the Kingswoods. "The late Lord Kingswood was found dead at the foot of the old hunting-tower in the Chace, murdered by some undiscovered ruffian."

"Undiscovered until doomsday," responded Philip, with a sneer. "His hand committed the crime, or that of—— No matter now. My father knew the present Lord Kingswood in his boyhood intimately, and there are periods in men's lives, Lady Maud, when they place themselves utterly in the power of another. Lord Kingswood has done this, and upon you rests his immunity from ruin. In good time I will prove this to you, and you will not then withhold your hand from me. I love you for your beauty, Lady Maud; but there are qualities of your mind which it would be impossible not to admire, because they display a romantic absence of selfishness. I have the greatest faith in your readiness to sacrifice yourself to save the Kingswood family from a frightful fate."

He paused for a moment to watch the effect his words were having upon her. He could see that they were working upon her brain and heart as if they were slowly murdering her; but he saw, too, that he should triumph, and that she would sacrifice herself to save Lord Kingswood and his family from the fate he foreshadowed for them should she refuse him.

He noticed how deadly was the pallor which overspread her features, and he feared that she would swoon. He did not wish this; he therefore added, rapidly:

"But of this anon, Lady Maud. I do not wish to pain, distress, or terrify you. I only seek to impress upon you that mine you must and shall be, and having proved that, turn to gentler matters. I wish to woo you, Lady Maud, gallantly as well as boldly—tenderly, if that will better suit your taste. I know that your opinion of me has been clouded by the mist of prejudice. I am anxious to prove to you that I am not so repulsive as you deem me, perhaps as I have been painted. To do this successfully, I must have a fair and clear field. I must come and go at will, and I must be listened to when I speak. I will make pretty speeches enough to you to sicken you of them. I will bring you presents the richest wealth can purchase, or fancy design, down even to a poor bouquet of worthless flowers. I will ride with you, walk with you, kneel to you—be a very Romeo if that will pleasure you—do all that I may to make you love me, and if I do not with all this trouble, most patiently exercised, succeed, still shall you be mine."

Again he paused as if to let her make some observation in reply, but she spoke not. Her eye was fixed on vacancy. She stood like a marble statue, but with her mind actively brooding upon a wild, chaotic confusion of horrors.

Philip Avon frowned, and subjoined,

"My health is not yet sufficiently restored to permit me to remain in London, and I therefore return immediately to Hawkesbury. The clear field I demand in which to woo you must be Kingswood Hall. Thither you must return at once; there I will woo you, win you if I can, conquer you under all circumstances. I take my leave of you, Lady Maud, until then. You will remember what I have said, especially my menace concerning Lord Kingswood. We shall meet again, and soon, at Kingswood Hall. Then do I expect to see your brow lighter, your eye grow brighter, the bloom return to your cheeks, and your happiest smiles bestowed upon Philip Avon, your future husband."

With these words, bowing haughtily, smiling triumphantly, he stalked out of the apartment; while Lady Maud sank upon her knees, raised her clasped hands to Heaven, and exclaimed,

"O my God! in you alone can I put my trust! Aid me, aid me now!"

(To be continued.)

POWDER USED IN THE FIFTEEN-INCH GUN.

The powder used in the fifteen-inch gun is known as "Large Grained," and as "Rodman's Perforated Cake Powder." The former differs from common powder only in the size of the grains, which are six-tenths of an inch cube, and the degree of pressure to which it is subjected in its manufacture. The latter is prepared in solid compressed cakes, subject to a pressure in the making equal to that they will be subjected to in the gun, and perforated with holes to permit access to the flames. They are the improvements and inventions of Major Rodman.

FOREIGN FLOATINGS CAUGHT BY THE WAY.

Bad Pays among the Etrurians.—"If any one amongst the Etrurians," says a Greek author, "contracted a debt, and then declined paying, he was, for the purpose of being exposed to infamy, followed about the streets by boys shaking an empty purse, as they hallooed and shouted at his heels."

Is the gift of a policy of assurance in articulo mortis a gift good in law? The question has been raised on a trial in the Court of Queen's Bench. One John Amiss was about to be married to a Miss Floyd, with whom he had been living. She died on the day fixed for her wedding, but before her death she presented her intended husband with two watches, some jewels and a policy of assurance for £1,000. The relatives of the woman brought an action to recover the property. It was shown that they were really given to John Amiss, but the counsel for the plaintiff objected that a policy of assurance had never been passed as a donatio in articulo mortis, and Justice Blackburn reserved this curious point.

Canvassing for Votes.—The late Sir H. Smith, long M.P. for Colchester, was one of the Tories of the old school, and among the advocates of Reform his resolute opposition to a change had given him a reputation for folly and obstinacy which was not borne out by his real character. On one occasion he was canvassing, in the presence of numerous friends, and on asking a heavy-looking farmer for his vote, the man replied, "I'd vote for ye, Sir Henry, as usual, only you're such a fool." "Fool, am I?" retorted Sir Henry, "I'm the very man to represent you." This diamond shaft of wit went to the farmer's heart, and with a loud guffaw he promised his vote. [Very good, but here's its equal: When the present Earl of Glasgow, then Lord Kelburne, stood successfully for Ayrshire, on Tory principles, and before Free Trade times, he canvassed the county on horseback, which was no great toil to him, as he had hunted the county for many years, and was accustomed to long hours in the saddle. Turning into a farmyard in the north of Ayrshire, he encountered a decided Rad. Lord Kelburne was alighting, and had barely touched the ground, when the hard headed constituent shouted, "Ye needna speer me to vote—I'd rather vote for the devil!" "The devil, would you!" said his lordship, gazing at him and replacing his foot in the stirrup; then, turning round in the saddle as he moved off, he said with a quiet smile, "If your friend, however, shouldn't come to the poll, I suppose I may calculate upon you?"

Russia is understood to urge on England the despatch of an efficient British force to co-operate with the French in keeping the peace round Lebanon. The Invalide Russe openly accuses Downing street of caring more for Epsom races than such an event as Syrian massacres.

The celebrated composer, Maestro Verdi, has taken his seat in the Italian Parliament, as member for Borgo San Domino.

The Two Miss Smiths—Proposing to the Wrong Lady.—Miss Smith—yes, let that be the name, as it is of a lady belonging to a great family we are writing—thought an officer, handsome, and of ample fortune, of a capital county family, had looked approvingly at her, almost affectionately, and sure Miss Smith had had more than one eye on the captain, and she looked in vain for the moment when he should declare the passion which she was convinced burned within him. The moment came at last—the volcano burst into flame. One morning she received a letter, beginning, "My dear Miss Smith," and couched in unmistakable language. It was brought by a servant in livery, who waited for an answer. She selected the neatest sheet of pink paper, poured forth a modest yet delighted assent, and gave it to the messenger with her hand. Then she awaited the captain. She waited that day and the next. He came not. She refused exercise, and remained at home a third day. He came not. A week passed and he came not. A fortnight, and he came not. At last she ventured to write, and she received an answer:

"My dear Miss Smith—It is all the fault of James; he took the letter to the wrong house. Deeply as I regard and respect you, I must not conceal from you that my letter was intended for the daughter of Colonel Smith; and I am sure that you, who in your note assured me that my happiness was your soul's desire, will be glad to hear that it is at last secured. I am yours, very sincerely, ————"

A Novel Ruse.—During the past trout-fishing season two lovers of the rod from the neighborhood of Greenock went northwards on a piscatorial ramble. In their peregrinations they reached a well-preserved stream, which ran past a baronial castle, and being determined to share in its riches, they agreed, in case of detection, to feign that they were deaf and dumb. Scarcely had they thrown a fly into the river, however, when down came the keeper. Approaching the man furthest down the stream, he roughly asked what leave he had? Our Walton was too hard of hearing and intent on his fly to answer, but a rough shake by the collar awakened him to the consciousness of passing events. After staring at the keeper with assumed wonder, he laid down his rod, and began talking on his fingers in a manner that would have puzzled the inventor of the science, so far removed was it from the reality. The keeper gave him up, and proceeded to his friend up the stream, who immediately replied in chirology to the rough inquiry regarding leave, and the keeper fell back aghast and discomfited, no doubt thinking that a deaf and dumb asylum had broken loose. At this moment the angler below hooked a large fish, and in his ecstasy shouted, "Lord, Tam, here's a big ane!" Great was the keeper's surprise at hearing the dumb thus suddenly restored to speech but when it subsided, instead of dragging the impostors to justice, he, with an appreciation of a practical joke seldom found among his brethren, told the poachers that it was the best trick he had ever heard of, and that they might fish the river as far as they pleased, provided they kept out of sight of "the big hoose."

One of the Smith Family Who Thought He Could not be Outdone.—Smith was a man who never permitted himself to be outdone—he could do whatever anybody else could. Smith met Brown in a bath room and Brown, knowing the other's peculiar conceit, said that he (Brown) could endure a hotter bath than any living man. Thereat Smith fired up, and a bet was made. Two baths were prepared with only six inches of cold water in each. Separated by a cloth partition, each got in and let on the water at the word, the wager being who could stay in the longer with the hot water running. Smith drew up his feet as far as possible from the boiling stream, while Brown pulled out the plug in the bottom of the tub. After about half a minute, quoth Smith,

"How is it Brown; pretty warm?"

"Yes," says the other, "it's getting very hot, but I can hold out a minute yet."

"So can I," answered Smith. "Lightning! it's awful!"

Fifteen seconds, equal to half an hour by Smith's imaginary watch.

"I say once more, how is it now?"

"The thermometer is nearly up to the boiling point—oh! how excruciating!" answered the one who was lying in the empty tub, while the hot water passed out of the escape pipe.

By this time Smith was twisting about like a boiled lobster, and called again

"I s—a—y over there—how's it now?"

"Hot as a furnace," replied Brown; "but—whew!—I can hold out another minute."

"The deuce you can!" shrieked the now boiling Smith, who rolled out and ran through the partition, expecting to find the other quite cooked.

"You rascal, why didn't you put the plug in?"

"Why, I didn't agree to it," said the imperturbable jester, "why didn't you leave yours out?"

Solid ink is being sold for use in ordinary pencil cases instead of leads. It does not admit of blots, and appears to be fully as indelible as the ink fluid.

Cigars are to be subjected to an increased taxation in Paris, it being considered desirable to arrest the heavy consumption of tobacco, which is pronounced to have deteriorated the population of Paris, and, combined with the abuse of absinthe, to have introduced all kinds of diseases dependent on debility amongst the young men of the middle classes.

We hear from Paris that the Nice and Italian ladies are enthusiastic for war, and have resolved to get up an army corps of 5,000 ladies. The idea is a good one, for the Austrians will never have the heart to risk the Italian women when they are determined on conquest. Who is to be the general is not decided. But he must be a fastidious man, and not of the Napier race, who thought a towel, a bit of soap and a shirt enough for the wants of a warrior! Fancy the baggage for crinoline alone of 5,000—dare we say baggages?

Scribe has left no less than fifteen dramatic works in his writing desk, in various degrees of completion.

CHESS.

The following position by the distinguished musician and problematist, R. Willmers, of Vienna, has gained the prize at a Problem Tournament in connection with the Berlin Schachzeitung. It is a production of pre-eminent merit, and has baffled even the sagacity of our very best connoisseurs. In presenting it to our readers, we particularly call their attention to its great ingenuity. We shall withhold the solution for a month, in order that they may have time to solve it.—Era.

PROBLEM No. 289.—By Herr Rudolph Willmers, of Vienna. White to play and checkmate in four moves.

BLACK.

WHITE.

Carl Moeller, New York. Many thanks for the "counterfeit." It is received with very great pleasure.

MATCH BETWEEN HORWITZ AND STANLEY.

We present our readers with one of the games played in the interesting contest between the above gentlemen. It has been kindly placed at our disposal by an esteemed Manchester correspondent.—Era.

WHITE. Mr. B. H.	BLACK. Mr. C. H. S.	WHITE. Mr. B. H.	BLACK. Mr. C. H. S.
1 P to K 4	P to K 3	20 P to Q Kt 3 (g)	Kt tks Kt's P
2 P to K B 4	P to Q 4	21 Q R to Q Kt	Kt to Q 5
3 P to K 5	P to Q B 4	22 Q to Q 2	Q R to Q B (?)
4 Kt to K B 3	P to Q 5	23 Q R to Q Kt 2	Kt tks B (ch)
5 P to Q B 3 (a)	P to Q 6 (b)	24 Q tks Kt	B tks P
6 Q to Kt 4 (ch)	Kt to Q B 3	25 Q to K Kt 4	B tks R
7 Q to Q B 3	B to Q 2	26 Q tks K P (ch)	K to B
8 Q tks Q P (c)	K Kt to K 2	27 Kt to K Kt 5	B tks Kt (ch)
9 Q to Q B 3	Q Kt to B 3	28 K tks B	R to B 2
10 K B to K 2	K Kt to Q 4	29 B tks K (k)	Q to Q 4
11 P to Q 3	K B to K 3	30 Q to Q B 2	Q R to K
12 Castles	Q B to B	31 Q to Q 2	R tks B P (l)
13 P to Q R 3 (d)	Castles	32 Q tks R	R to K 8 (ch)
14 P to Q B 4	K Kt to Q Kt 5	33 K to B 2	R to B 8 (ch)
15 Q Kt to B 3	P to K B 3	34 K to Kt 3	R tks Q
16 K P tks P	B tks P	35 B tks R	Q to Q 6 (ch)
17 Q Kt to K 4	K B to Q 5 (ch)	36 K to Kt 4 (best)	P to R 4 (ch)
18 Kt tks B (e)	Kt tks Kt (f)	37 K tks P	Q to B 4 (ch)
19 Q to Q	B to Q R 5	38 B interposes	B to K 5 (ch)

Mr. Horwitz resigns.

(a) B to Q B 4 was here the correct move.
(b) The premature advance of this Pawn was, no doubt, done with the object of sacrificing it, and thereby retarding the development of White's forces, but we believe that the step was a hazardous one to be ventured in a match game.
(c) To have taken the Pawn with Bishop would have been bad play.
(d) In order to be enabled to play P to Q B 4 afterwards.
(e) Badly played, and may be said to be the cause of White's future embarrassment.
(f) Black has now obtained a very superior position.
(g) This was forced, because had White moved the Queen the loss of the exchange must have immediately followed.
(h) The last series of moves was played with great ability, by which an additional advantage is gained sufficient to render victory a certainty.
(i) Q to K R 3 would decidedly have been preferable.
(k) It is obvious that taking the Queen would cost mate on the move.
(l) Very well played.

Consultation Game played between Count Koucheleff, Mr. T. H. Hampton and Mr. Lowenthal, against Captain Kennedy and Herr Kolisch.

WHITE. Capt. K. and Ally.	BLACK. Count K. and Allies.	WHITE. Capt. K. and Ally.	BLACK. Count K. and Allies.
1 P to K 4	P to K 4	16 P tks Kt	P to Q B 3
2 Kt to K B 3	Kt to K B 3	17 Kt to Q 4	Q to Q 4
3 Kt tks P	P to Q 3	18 Q tks Q	P tks Q
4 Kt to K B 3	Kt tks P	19 Q R to Q sq	Q R to Q sq (d)
5 P to Q 4	P to Q 4	20 R to Q 3	R to Q 2
6 B to Q 3	B to K 2 (a)	21 K R to Q sq	K R to Q sq
7 Castles	Castles	22 Kt to B 5 (e)	B to B 4
8 P to Q B 4	B to K 3 (b)	23 Kt to Q 6	P to B 3
9 B to K B 4	Kt to Q B 3	24 Kt to K 4 (f)	B to K 2
10 Q to K 2	Kt to B 3 (c)	25 P to K 6	R to B 2
11 B to K 5	P tks P	26 R tks P	R tks R
12 B tks P	Kt to Q 4	27 R tks R	R to Q B 7
13 Kt to Q B 3	Kt tks Kt	28 B to Q 7	R tks K P
14 P tks Kt	B tks B	29 Kt to Kt 3	B to B 4
15 Q tks B	Kt tks B

And the game was, by mutual consent, given up as a drawn battle.

(a) A move suggested by Count Koucheleff; it is much better than B to Q 3.
(b) The only correct defence; it was first adopted by Morphy.
(c) Rendering White's attack perfectly harmless.
(d) Q R to Q B sq would, perhaps, have been better play.
(e) From this point the game is highly interesting and instructive, and is conducted by the White allies with remarkable ability.
(f) Very finely played.

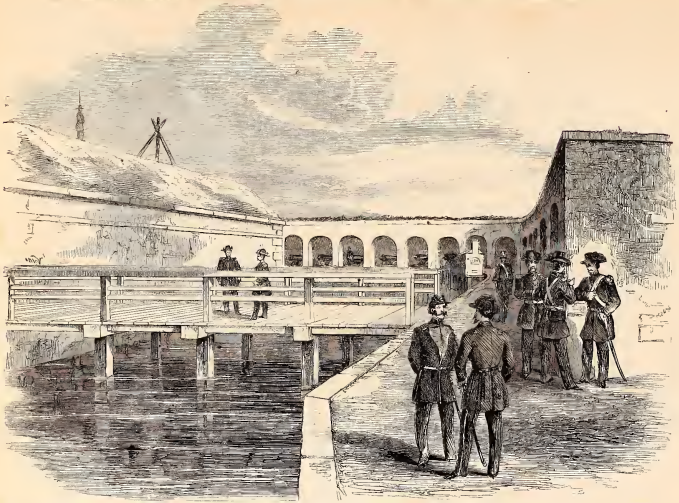
SOLUTIONS TO PROBLEMS.

Problem No. 284.—Q to her 5 (ch); K tks Q; Kt to Q 8; anything; Kt mates. Variations.

Problem No. 285.—Kt to Q 5; K tks Kt; Kt to Kt 4; P moves; Kt to B 2; P tks Kt; P mates.

Problem No. 287.—B to K 2; P moves; B to B 3; P moves; K to B 6; K tks Kt or P Q's (ch); mates.

Problem No. 288.—B to K sq; P moves; Kt to Q 2; P tks Kt; Kt to B 4; P tks Kt; P mates.



FORT MONROE, VIRGINIA—THE WATER BATTERY, SHOWING THE FURNACE FOR HEATING SHOT, AND THE ESPLANADE USED BY THE LADIES OF THE GARRISON AS A PROMENADE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 328.

SCENE FROM THE NEW COMEDY OF "HENRIETTE."

Those who have seen Mr. Wilkins's charming comedy of "Henriette," as performed at Wallack's Theatre, will recognize at once the truthful character of the representation furnished by our artist of one of the final scenes. This is one of the most telling scenes in the play, and is caused by the unfortunate "billet-doux"—upon the adventures of which the plot turns—falling into the hands of the absurdly jealous Mons. Latour. As will be perceived, the consternation is universal; but the wit of Emile Lefebre does not desert him even in this predicament, and before Mons. Latour can fully comprehend the purport of the "billet," he relieves him of it, manages to put an entirely foreign construction upon its contents, and then deliberately burns it in the candle; thus putting an end at once to its travels, the discord caused thereby, and the play itself. The characters represented in the tableau we have selected for illustration are Henriette (Mrs. Hoey); Madame Latour (Mrs. Sloan); Madame Solenge (Mrs. Walcot); Lefebre (Mr. Lester Wallack); Latour (Mr. Young); and Blossiere the Naturalist (Mr. Norton). As will be perceived, the adjuncts of scenery, furniture, costumes, &c., are all that the most fastidious could require. Of course all citizens who are interested have seen, or will see, the original; but we can assure our country friends who are debarred that pleasure, that our Artist furnishes them with a lifelike counterpart of the most telling scene of this truly elegant comedy.

MEMOIR OF THE REV. VINCENT PHILIP MEYER-HOFFER.

The Rev. Vincent Philip Meyerhoffer, whose portrait appears on page 329, was born at Raab, in the Kingdom of Hungary, in the year 1764, on the 22d of January. His parents were both Roman Catholics, and his father was for upwards of thirty years a Senator in his native place. During his early years every attention seems to have been paid to his education, but having the misfortune to lose his father when only eleven years of age, his mother, who seems to have treated him during his whole life with marked unkindness, apprenticed him to a grocer in the city of Pesth. Here he spent five years, during which period he was treated with unkindness by his master, and abused by his fellow-apprentices. His mother never came near him, or even wrote to him. At last he was determined to alter his circumstances, as his apprenticeship was at an end. Upon stating this determination to his master he was arrested and locked up in the common jail amongst the worst of characters and common felons. One of his uncles coming to see him was exceedingly distressed at finding him in such a condition, and went immediately to the Mayor, who was highly indignant at the illegal proceeding of his master, and ordered his instant release. As soon as released he started for Baja, where he believed he should find his uncle. Being unable to do so, and utterly penniless, he apprenticed himself to a baker, and after a variety of adventures was recognized by one of his old preceptors, who reinstated him in the schools at Golocs. Here he remained two years and then made his way to Bats, in Sclavonia, where he entered as a novice in the Franciscan Convent. At the age of twenty-one he took the vows of the Franciscan order. At twenty-three he was ordained as a Roman Catholic priest by the Bishop of Alba Julia. From this time to 1811 he acted as curate in Neoplanta and Priglavitza Szentwany. Disgusted with the immoral conduct of the rector, he applied for and obtained the appointment of garrison chaplain at the fortress of Peterwardein, and shortly afterwards was appointed regimental chaplain to the Austrian Regiment No. 60, commanded by Count Ignatz Cyuley, Ban of Croatia. This regiment comprised a portion of the troops sent by Austria to aid Napoleon in his Russian campaign. Mr. Meyerhoffer was therefore a participator in all the horrors of that disastrous retreat. Shortly afterwards the same regiment formed part of the allied army sent by Austria against Napoleon. They were encamped at Dippoldiswalde, having retreated from Dresden, when Napoleon attacked them by night and captured five regiments. Mr. Meyerhoffer was taken prisoner whilst he was attending to the wounded. He was taken before Napoleon, who said that he "did not want priests for prisoners," and ordered his passport; but the Governor of Dresden detained him with the other officers as prisoner of war. From Dresden he was sent to Mayence. When there, being very much impressed by a dream warning him that he would soon be sent to the interior of France, he made his escape to Oppenheim, where he was secreted by the rector in the belfry of a church. The Mayor of Oppenheim dying of agitation and alarm, Mr. Meyerhoffer was elected Mayor of the town, and discharged the duties of that office until the arrival of the Russian General Benigron. He then set out for Chalons, but met his own regiment on the road, by whom he was received with open arms, the more so as they were under the apprehension that he had been slain at Dippoldiswalde. With them he again joined the main body of the allies, and was present at the investment and capitulation of Paris. His regiment also formed part of the escort that guarded Napoleon to the coast, whence he was taken to the island of Elba. Mr. Meyerhoffer used often to entertain his friends by the history of his personal adventures during the wars of Napoleon, and always took pleasure in relating many anecdotes known but little beyond the localities in which they happened. He was intimate with all the great Generals of the allied army, especially with Field Marshals Schwartzenberg and Wredin.

THE GREAT FIFTEEN INCH GUN, DESIGNED BY MAJOR ROGMAN, U.S.A., AND NOW IN FORT MONROE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 328.

SCENE FROM E. P. WILKINS'S HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL COMEDY OF "HENRIETTE," NOW PERFORMING AT WALLACK'S THEATRE.

LARGE GRAINED POWDER USED IN RODMAN'S FIFTEEN-INCH GUN. —SEE PAGE 331.

During Napoleon's imprisonment at Elba he marched with his regiment to Italy, where he visited Turin, Milan, Pavia and many other cities interesting from both ancient and recent events. After the battle of Waterloo, and the conclusion of peace, he was presented, as an acknowledgment of his merits, with the Parish of Klingenmunster, near Landau, in Bavaria; here he remained two years, but being disgusted with the corrupt practices of his church, and afraid of losing his life if he changed his religion in a Roman Catholic country, he resolved to emigrate to the United States. For this purpose he wrote to the Bishop of Philadelphia, and having received an invitation to come, set sail from Amsterdam in the ship Elizabeth, during the summer of 1819. Shortly after his arrival here he was appointed Missionary at Canewago, where there were a great many Germans.

Here differences arose between him and the Jesuits, with whose conduct he was greatly disgusted, and especially so with that of two of their number, a French priest named Lekue, and the Vicar-General De Barth. The Jesuits did all they could to induce him to join their order, but he had seen too much of their practices in Eurnpo to be easily duped. When they found he was proof against their cunning, they began to persecute him, but the churchwardens and congregation, who loved and esteemed him, took his part. Then the priest Lekue attempted to poison him, but Mr. Meyerhoffer fortunately detected the attempt and escaped. This decided him, and he left the Church of Rome in company with another priest who was, like himself, a Franciscan friar. This priest—Mr. Huber—opened a drug store in company with Mr. Meyerhoffer, at Little York, Pennsylvania. He then determined to get married, being convinced of the unlawfulness of the monastic vow. After a short acquaintance with Mrs. Meyerhoffer, who was a widow, they were married by Mr. Miller, a Moravian clergyman. "Now," he says, "I studied the Bible for two years to find out which church I would select, and I concluded to enter amongst the German Reformed Brothers in Pennsylvania." There he took the degree of M. A., in Alleghany College. From thence he came to Buffalo, and attended four congregations inside and outside the city. Here he became acquainted with the Episcopal clergyman upon whose advice he wrote to the Bishop of Qachec, requesting to be admitted into the Church of England. Having passed a favorable examination at Toronto, Canada West (then Little York), he was appointed as Missionary to the Townships of Vaughan and Markham, where he performed church service alternately in English and German. Upon the breaking out of the rebellion in 1837, Mr. Meyerhoffer made himself so obnoxious to the Reformers, that they nailed up his church and placed a sentry with orders to shoot him if he came near the door. When the Orangemen heard this, they came in a body and drove away the guard, opened the church, and told the rebels that if they placed another sentry there he should be hung upon the nearest tree. Mr. Meyerhoffer served twenty years in Markham, during which time he succeeded in building, by subscription, three churches, two in Markham and one in Vaughan.

On the 1st of January, 1850, he was superannuated on a pension of seventy-three pounds per annum, and he then removed to Toronto, where he occasionally assisted the city clergymen. In 1851 he went to Whitby, where he resided for two years; and from thence went to Perrytown, near Port Hope, where he built another church and opened a congregation by the permission of the Bishop. In 1854 he returned to Whitby, having been obliged through illness and the advice of his medical attendants to give up his congregation in Perrytown. Here he resided until the time of his death, living comparatively retired, but preaching and performing church service when circumstances required. Altogether he was fifty-one years a clergyman; for twelve years a Roman Catholic priest, nine years a preacher before the German Reformed Brethren, and thirty years a minister of the Church of England.

He was a man of simple manners, temperate habits, strictly honest and conscientious, and very zealous in the discharge of his ministerial duties. His bearing and manners were courteous and affable in the extreme, and he was noted for acts of kindness and hospitality. In his public and private life he was an exemplary Christian, discharging his duties to God and man with fidelity.

Mr. Meyerhoffer was highly educated, writing and speaking

THE LATE REV. VINCENT PHILIP MEYERHOFFER, PASTOR OF VAUGHAN AND MARKHAM, CANADA.

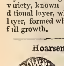
Greek, Latin, German, French, and the Sclavonian dialect, with as much ease and fluency as his native Hungarian. He was a Royal Arch Mason, and for some time Grand Chaplain of the Order in Canada. He was also an Orangeman, of which body he was for many years also Grand Chaplain. Surviving Mr. Meyerhoffer are his widow, two sons and four daughters; all the children are of age, the daughters married, and the sons earning their own living. He left also one surviving sister, who still resides in her native city of Raab. Six weeks before his death, which took place on the 15th of January, 1859, he complained of weakness, and told his friends that his time for this world was not long. He expressed great satisfaction in the idea of his earthly troubles being almost over. Up to the time of his last moments he never expressed a doubt or fear as to the future, but glided away in perfect tranquillity almost imperceptibly, and apparently without pain. A short time before his death he called some of his Masonic brethren to him, and expressed a wish to be buried as a Mason, and also that his brother Orangemen would attend his funeral. This was accordingly done, and the Whitby papers of the day speak of his funeral as the largest and most imposing that had ever been seen in the town of Whitby.

He left behind him a manuscript containing the history of his own life and the scenes through which he passed during his career as a military chaplain in the wars of Napoleon. His account of the retreat from Moscow, and of the battles of Leipsic, Jena, Culm, Dresden and many others is interesting in the extreme. This manuscript is in the press, and will shortly be published for the benefit of his widow.

HORRIBLE DEATH OF AN ENGLISH GENTLEMAN BY A BEAR.—The following extraordinary story has appeared, dated Berne, March 5th: "An English gentleman, Captain L——, of the British army, met his death here last night in a most dreadful manner. Captain L——, after supping with some friends, took a walk through the city in company with three other Englishmen. As the bearpit lay in their way, the party went for pastime to look at the bears. This pit was separated into two compartments, in one of which was a he-bear, and in the other the female and several cubs. While bending over the railings, watching the animals, Captain L—— overbalanced himself, and fell over into that part of the pit in which the old bear was confined, breaking his arm in the fall. One hour elapsed before any assistance was obtained and brought to the spot. Efforts were then made to extricate the unfortunate man from his perilous position by means of hoisting him up with ropes. It is remarkable that up to this time the old bear, although the most savage of the family, and therefore placed in a separate compartment, had not attempted to injure the young man. But this state of things was not to last long. At the moment when he was being hoisted out of the pit and had reached half-way up, the bear became savage and tore him down into the pit again. A horrible struggle then ensued, which after nearly half an hour's duration resulted in Captain L——'s being killed by the ferocious beast. One of the party of Englishmen would have jumped into the pit to his friend's aid had he not been forcibly restrained by the bystanders. Great indignation is expressed by the inhabitants of Berne that no aid came from the quarter whence it ought to have been rendered, even at the risk of life. A sentinel was posted at about thirty paces from the pit, and I understood that a searching investigation has been instituted into this man's conduct."

CAMEOS, AND HOW THEY ARE CUT.—Rome is now the chief city of the art of cameo cutting, two kinds of which are produced; those cut in hard stone, and those cut in shell. The stones most valuable for this purpose are the oriental onyx and the sardonyx, provided they have at least two different colors in parallel layers. The value of the stone is greatly increased for this purpose, if it has four or five different colored parallel layers, if the layers are so thin as to assist in making the device of the cameo. For example, a specimen of stone which has four parallel layers may be used for a cameo of Minerva, where the ground would be dark gray, the face light, the bust and helmet black, and the crest over the helmet brown or gray. All such cameos are wrought by a lapidary's lathe, with pointed instruments of steel, and by means of diamond dust. Shell cameos are cut from large shells found on the African and Brazilian coasts, and generally show two layers, one white and the other either pale coffee color or deep reddish orange. The subject is cut with small steel chisels out of the white portion of the shell. Shells adapted for cameo cutting are dense, thick, and consist usually of three layers of differently colored shell material. In one variety of these shells, each layer is composed of very many thin plates, that is, laminated, the laminæ being perpendicular to the plane of the main layer, and each laminæ consisting of a series of elongated prismatic cells, adherent to their long sides. The laminæ of the outer and inner layers are parallel to the lines of growth, while those of the middle layer are at right angles to them. In another variety, known as the cowries, there is an additional layer, which is a duplicate of the nacerous layer, formed when the animal has attained its full growth.

Hoarseness and Sore Throat.



THIS unpleasant and painful result of "catching cold," or unusual exertion of the vocal organs, may at any time be removed by allowing one or two of BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES, or Cough Lozenges, to dissolve slowly in the mouth. Hence Singers and Public Speakers will find them of peculiar advantage.

"We have found them of great service in allaying Bronchial Irritation, and in subduing Hoarseness produced by Colds."—Rev. Daniel Wise, late Editor of Zion's Herald.

EMPLOYMENT!—Now ready, a complete Price Current, offering WATCHES AND JEWELLERY at an IMMENSE REDUCTION! No advance payment required on goods. Address at once,
281-83 HUBBARD BROS., Providence, R. I.

CASSELL'S
Popular Natural History,
Profusely Illustrated with Splendid Engravings,

IS PUBLISHED ON THE 1ST OF EVERY MONTH.

Parts, 32 pages and 1 Tinted Plate, 15 cts.
Double Parts, 64 pages and 2 Tinted Plates, 30 cts.
Sections, 128 pages and 4 Tinted Plates, 60 cts.
Volumes, 384 pages and 12 Tinted Plates, Embossed Cloth, Gilt Sides and Lettered, $2 50.
The work will comprise four Volumes.

"Really a beautiful publication."—New York U. S. Jour.
"The engravings are not only profuse, but exquisite."—Detroit (Mich) Farmer.
"We commend this work to our readers."—Cincinnati Presbyterian.
"This will be a valuable work."—Sandusky Com. Reg.
"Too high praise cannot be awarded for bringing out so excellent and beautiful a work."—Concord Independent Dem.
"Calculated to amuse the reader and aid the scientific inquirer."—Phila. American Presbyterian.
"When complete, it will be an interesting and invaluable work."—Phila. Christian Instructor.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 37 Park Row, N. Y.

6.000 AGENTS WANTED—To sell six NEW INVENTIONS—two very recent, and of great value to families; all pay great profits to Agents. Send four stamps and get 80 pages particulars.
281-86 EPHRAIM BROWN, Lowell, Mass.

$80 PER MONTH.—Agents Wanted in every Town. It is no patent medicine or book agency, but something new and of real value. For particulars address, with Stamp, J. S. PARDEE, Binghamton, Broome Co., N. Y. 281-82

Jewellery! Jewellery!

SEND to the Fountain Head. Address, inclosing stamp, C. P. GIRTON, 208 Broadway, Manufacturing Jeweller, for full particulars. A full assortment of Envelope Jewellery and Goods for the One Dollar Stores.
281

★ NERVOUS DEBILITY or Spermatorrhœa—how CURED. Beware of all persons copying after my notices and Circular as "former sufferers," "victims," &c. They neither know how nor care to cure you. Before commencing ANY treatment send your address to Box 176, Charlestown, Mass. 281-83

Bogle's Hair Dye and Wigs

ARE unapproached and unapproachable in their superior merits. Both are perfection. Try the one, see the other, and be convinced.

Private Rooms for Dyeing Hair and fitting Wigs at BOGLE'S Hairwork, Perfumery and Toilet Bazaar, No. 202 Washington St., Boston. Diagrams to measure the head sent by mail. Inclose postage stamp for reply. 000

TUCKER'S
PARIS BRIDAL
GARNITURES AND VEILS,
Coiffures, Flowers, Feathers and Toilet Surroundings are ever of a pleasing character.
759 Broadway. 274-325

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every city, town and county in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patent article just invented. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and to persons out of employment it offers great inducements. For full particulars write immediately, and receive our letter by return mail. ROBT. HALL & CO.,
271-83 5½ North St., Baltimore, Md.

Tiffany & Co.,
LATE
TIFFANY, YOUNG & ELLIS,
Fine Jewellery, Precious Stones, Watches, Silver ware Bronzes, Clocks, Rich Porcelain Articles of Art and Luxury.
No. 550 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.
HOUSE IN PARIS, TIFFANY, REED & CO.

Handsome Women.

HUNT'S "BLOOM OF ROSES" a rich and elegant color for the cheeks or lips. IT WILL NOT WASH OR RUB OFF, and when once applied remains durable for years. The tint is so rich and natural that the closest scrutiny fails to detect its use. Can be removed by lemon juice, and will not injure the skin. This is a new preparation, used by the celebrated Court Beauties of London and Paris. Mailed free, in bottles, with directions for use, for $1.

HUNT'S "COURT TOILET POWDER" imparts a dazzling whiteness to the complexion, soft, delicate and natural—is unlike anything else used for this purpose, and WILL NOT RUB OFF. Mailed free for 60 cts in postage stamps. Can be obtained only of HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 707 Sansom st., Philadelphia. Agents Wanted. 281

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every City, Town and County in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patented article just invented. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and to persons out of employment it offers great inducements. For full particulars write immediately and receive our letter by return mail. SHABOLDT & CO., 434 Walnut St.,
280-92 Philadelphia, Pa.

PIANOFORTE AND VOCAL MUSIC AT REDUCED PRICES.—The following splendid collection for 50 cents:

Ever of Thee, Song, Fooley Hall—Land of My Youngest and Holiest Feelings—The Herdsman's Mountain Home—Silence and Tears, by E. Massett—Who Shall be Fairest—Scenes of Home—Hurrah for the Bonnets of Blue—Dear Mary, Wake from Slumber—Rovers, Rulers of the Sea—Oh, 'Tis Sweet to Think—Evening Song—Green Grow the Rushes, Oh—Dear Voices of Home—Simon the Cellarer.

Fourteen popular songs and eight charming Piano Pieces, all for 50 cents, sent to all parts of the Union. Address C. B. SEYMOUR & CO., Agents,
281 No. 458 Broadway, New York.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE.—Send Stamp to Box 1059, Lowell, Mass.
280-83

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY Onguent will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post free, to any address, on receipt of an order.
281 R. G. GRAHAM, 109 Nassau Street, New York.

Hard Times Made Easy.

Good News for the Unemployed!
1,000 CHANCES TO MAKE MONEY!
ONE MILLION DOLLARS
WORTH OF
Watches, Jewellery and Silver-Plated Ware,
TO BE DISPOSED OF ON
An Entirely New and Original Plan!
2,500 AGENTS WANTED!!

All persons desirous of securing an Agency in this
NEW ENTERPRISE
Should send on their names at once, inclosing a three-cent stamp to pay postage, and receive by return of mail
A Premium Catalogue,
Containing OUR INDUCEMENTS, which afford
A Rare Chance to Make Money
Without risk, together with
Full Particulars Relative to this Novel Plan!
To insure prompt and satisfactory dealings, direct all orders to
GEORGE G. EVANS,
430 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Finkle & Lyon's
SEWING MACHINES,
With new improvements, Hemmers, &c., all complete,
AT REDUCED PRICES.
Agents wanted. Send for a Circular, 538 Broadway, New York, and 156 Fulton St., Brooklyn. 000

Fever and Ague

IS caused by the miasm or exhalation evolved from decayed and decaying vegetation in moist soils. When absorbed into the circulation it becomes an irritating virus in the blood, which deranges and destroys the health of the whole system. We have long sought and have at length found an antidote.

AYER'S AGUE CURE,

Which neutralizes this malarious poison in the blood, and stimulates the Liver to expel it from the body. Its action upon the system is invariably sure, and its cure of Fever and Ague and kindred complaints certain. If taken in season it expels the virus from the system as it is absorbed, and thus keeps those who use the CURE free from its attacks, keeps the system in health, although exposed to the disease. Consequently it not only cures but protects from the great variety of affections which are induced by this malignant influence, such as Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb or Masked Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, Bilious Fevers, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Blindness, Toothache, Earache, Catarrh, Asthma, Palpitations, Painful Affections of the Spleen, Hysterics, Colic, Paralysis and Painful Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, all of which, when arising from this cause, will be found to assume more or less the intermittent type. This AGUE CURE removes the cause of these derangements, and cures the disease.

This it accomplishes by stimulating the excretories to expel the virus from the system, and these organs by degrees become habituated to do this their office of their own accord. Hence arises what we term acclimation. Time may accomplish the same end, but often life is not long enough, or is sacrificed in the attempt, while this AGUE CURE does it at once, and with safety. The extensive use of this in all varieties of diseases has shown it to be a surer as well as safer remedy for the whole class of diseases which are caused by the miasmatic infection than any other which has been discovered; and it has still another important advantage to the public, which is that it is cheap as well as good.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists everywhere. 81

L. DUBERNET & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Passe-Partouts and Fancy Frames,
544 Broadway, between Spring and Prince Sts., New York
Gilt, Ebony, Black Walnut and Oak Frames always on hand.
L. DUBERNET, J. DUBERNET.
000

Perfumes! Perfumes! Perfumes!
609 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The most delightful and genuine liquid and dry Perfumes for the present season, comprising the fragrance of the earliest and latest flowers, as well as the most approved Bouquets.

MOUNT VERNON, KISS ME QUICK,
PERFECT GEM, WASHINGTON NOSEGAY
FRAGRANT JAPONICA, &c., &c.

Also CONCENTRATED FLAVORING EXTRACTS, for Pies, Puddings, &c.
FRENCH BISCOTINE, the most approved food for Infants
GLYCERINE JELLY, for chapped Skin. CHILBLAINS BALSAM
SWISS CORN PLASTER, an infallible cure for Corns and Bunions.
To be had, wholesale and retail, at No. 609 Broadway New York. EUGENE DUPUY,
000 Chemist and Druggist.

PHELAN'S PATENT BILLIARD TABLES.
MANUFACTORY & WAREROOMS
63.65.67.69. CROSBY ST NEW YORK.

The Union Clothes Dryer.
A New Invention—Useful, Cheap and Portable,

By which Clothes in large quantities may be dried in a yard, a room, or on the top of a house. Can be put up and taken down in one minute without detaching the lines. When not in use it can be compressed into a small compass and kept in a closet. No family should be without this novelty.

Price $2, $3 and $4.

THE UNION CLOTHES DRYER is pronounced by all unprejudiced persons to be one of the most useful and labor-saving inventions of the age.
J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors,
457 Broadway (near Grand St.), New York, and 512 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—SHAVER'S PATENT ERASER AND BURNISHER, PENCIL SHARPENER, &c., all neatly combined in one small, tasteful form.

"It is a most ingenious contrivance, answering so many purposes entirely."—Independent.
"It gives a neatly finished point to the lead, without soiling the fingers in the least."—N. Y. Tribune.
"It is a very nice contrivance, and will be found useful on every writing desk."—Prof. B. Silliman, Jr., of Yale College.

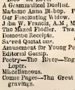
Sample sent, postage paid, for 75 cts., or 3 styles for $1 50. For sale by all Stationers. Send for a Circular.
280-84 A. G. SHAVER, New Haven, Conn.

A. LANGE,
PICTURE AND LOOKING-GLASS
FRAMES
AND
CORNICES FOR ROOMS,
MADE TO ORDER, AND RE-GILDING DONE.
206 William St., cor. Frankfort, New York.

To Nervous Sufferers.

A NEW Mechanical Appliance, for the arrest of Local Debility, Spermatorrhœa &c. (sure and effectual.) Price $1. Mailed, free from notice, by DR BENNETT, Box 101, care B. Lockwood, Broadway Post Office, New York City. Country bills at par.

ESTABLISHED 1843.



BOGLE'S CELEBRATED HYPERION FLUID overtops everything as the greatest restorer and best dressing for the Hair in the world. Ye who have been deceived by nostrums, try this and be convinced. It never fails. To be had at
W. BOGLE'S
Hairwork, Perfumery and Toilet Store,
202 Washington St., Boston, and for sale everywhere.

The Monarch of the Monthlies!
FOR APRIL, 1861

JUST PUBLISHED, NO. 4, VOL. VIII., OF
FRANK LESLIE'S
MONTHLY,
With which is incorporated
THE GAZETTE OF FASHION
Price 25 cts., or $3 per annum.

Literary.

Verona Brent; or, The Wayward Course of Love—continued.
Schamyl, the Prophet Warrior of the Caucasus. Engraving
The Curse of Wulfhelmberg.
Proverbs.
The Black Spot. Engraving.
Gems of Thought.
Tombs of Numidian Kings. Engraving.
Sam Bentley's Christmas. Two Engravings.
America a Hundred Years Ago.
Nelson Noggins' Story. By Mary Kyle Dallas.
A Chapter of Diamonds.
Forest of Fontainebleau. Three Engravings.
Hunting in the Province of New Brunswick. Engraving
"Bring me a Light!" Two Engravings.
The Lawyer Outdone.
"Died" for Love.
A Grammatical Duellist.
Madame Anna Bishop. Portrait.
Our Fascinating Widow. By Martha Haines Butt.
John W. Francis, A.M., M.D., LL.D. Portrait.
The Mazed Fiddler. Two Engravings.
Domestic Receipts.
Sacred Quotations.
Amusement for Young People.
Editorial Gossip.
Poetry—The River—Engraving; Gone Before—By Ben Loper.
Miscellaneous.
Comic Pages—The Great Jewellery Excitement. Six Engravings.

List of Engravings.

The Gipsies of Transylvania.
A French Inn in the Olden Time.
Wealthy Jew and Jewess of Algeria of the Present Day.
Schamyl, the Prophet Warrior of the Caucasus.
The Black Spot.
Tombs of Numidian Kings.
Moorish Women in Algeria.
Sam Bentley's Christmas—Henry overhearing the Factory Hands Talking about Susan; Miss Bentley and the London Children.
Forest of Fontainebleau—The Imperial Fort and Watch Tower; Entrance to the Oath Grotto; The Oath Grotto.
Hunting in the Province of New Brunswick—The Bear Hunt.
"Bring me a Light!"—Phantoms of the Young Wife and her Mother-in-Law; The Ghost-Seer Senseless on the Floor.
The River—"One More Unfortunate."
Madame Anna Bishop.
John W. Francis, A.M., M.D., LL.D.
The Mazed Fiddler—Willy Basset Plays to Mary Lee and the old Schoolmaster; John Hamlyn Strikes Down the Fiddler.

Gazette of Fashion.

Review of Fashions; Styles for the Month; Description of Colored Plate; Things Seen and Talked About; Spring Openings; Explanation of Diagrams; The Inauguration Ball; Answers to Correspondents—Paris Fashions; Items; General Description of Needlework; Chronology of the Month of April; Miscellaneous.

Illustrations to the Gazette.

Colored Frontispiece; Netted Sontag—Three Engravings; Needlecase in the form of a Parasol—Two Engravings; Inauguration Ball at Washington—Superb Costumes Worn on that Occasion—Two Engravings; Diagrams of Gored Dress—Two Engravings; Shaw Work—Two Engravings, Section of a Tidy; Patterns for Embroidery—Three Engravings; Paris Fashions.

Each number of the Magazine contains over 100 pages of the most entertaining Literature of the day, besides nearly sixty beautiful Engravings, and a superb colored Plate alone worth more than the price of the Magazine.

1 copy 1 year	$3
2 copies 1 year	5
1 copy 2 years	5
3 copies 1 year	6

and $2 for each copy added to the Club. An extra copy sent to the person getting up a Club of Five Subscribers, 1 year for $10.

The postage of this Magazine is three cents and must be paid three months in advance at the office where the Magazine is received.

FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

Cephalic Pills
Sick Headache, CURE
Nervous Headache, CURE
All kinds of Headache.

By the use of these Pills the periodic attacks of Nervous or Sick Headache may be prevented; and if taken at the commencement of an attack immediate relief from pain and sickness will be obtained.

They seldom fail in removing the Nausea and Headache to which females are subject.

They act gently upon the bowels, removing Costiveness.

For a correct Men, Students, Delicate Females, and all persons of sedentary habits they are valuable as a laxative, improving the appetite, giving tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and restoring the natural elasticity and strength of the whole system.

The CEPHALIC PILLS are the result of long investigation and carefully conducted experiments, having been in use many years, during which time they have prevented and relieved a vast amount of pain and suffering from Headache whether originating in the nervous system or from a deranged state of the Stomach.

They are entirely vegetable in their composition, and may be taken at all times, even when specially ordered making any change in diet, and the absence of any disagreeable taste renders them particularly acceptable to children.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS!

The genuine have five signatures of Henry C. Spalding on each Box

Sold by Druggists and all other Dealers in Medicine.

A Box will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

all orders should be addressed to

HENRY C. SPALDING,
48 Cedar St., New York.

THE FOLLOWING INDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS

Will convince all who suffer from

HEADACHE

THAT A SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS WITHIN THEIR REACH.

The Testimonials were unsolicited by Mr. Spalding, they afford unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

HANOVERTON, OHIO, Feb. 3, 1864.

MR. SPALDING:—Sir:—I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I like them so well that I will not be without them while they are worth more than all those are for the neighbors, to whom I gave a box. I have been a sufferer for years, and tried the Pills in my need, and relief.

Yours truly,
JAMES KENNEDY.

HAVERSTOW, PA., Feb. 4, 1864.

MR. SPALDING—Sir—I wish to send you a testimonial in favor of your Cephalic Pills. I have received a great deal of benefit from them. Your respectfully,
A. SHOUP.

SPRING CREEK, HUNTINGDON CO., PA., Jan. 18, 1864.

H. C. SPALDING—Sir:—You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills, Send them immediately.
Respectfully yours, IND. B. SIMONS
P. S.—I have tried a box of your Pills, and find them excellent.

SILVER VERNON, OHIO, Jan. 17, 1864.

HENRY C. SPALDING, ESQ.—Please find inclosed twenty-five cents, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best Pills I have ever tried. Yours truly,
LEVI VERNON.

LAKE VERNON, Wyandot Co., O

MANSFIELD, MASS., Dec. 21, 1863.

H. C. SPALDING, ESQ.—I wish to write Customers or Inquirers when Mills is away, that they have not personally taken my medicines. If have nothing of the kind I mean until in Jan. Then I shall probably call, and in the meantime Dr. Bradshaw (recently better two days), and myself can attend to all that may call. Respectfully yours,
W. B. WILKES

☞ A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost. Keep it by you.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE.

SAVE THE PIECES

ECONOMY

☞ A TRIFLE IN TIME SAVES MUCH.

In accordance with hope is, even in well-regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Accidents.

Spalding's Prepared Glue

meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point.

"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."

N. B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cts.
Address HENRY C. SPALDING,
No. 48 Cedar st., New York.

CAUTION.

As certain unprincipled persons are attempting to palm off upon the unsuspecting public an imitation of our PREPARED GLUE, I would caution the public against purchasing any but those with our signature on the bottle.

☞ SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, 25c.
For sale by Grocers and Druggists. All stores are invited to call and see it.

FURNITURE! FURNITURE!!

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

NO. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six stories in height, and extends 245 feet through to No. 45 Christie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade, for Time or Cash. Their Stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, MOSS and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $32 to $150.

JENNY LIND AND EXTENSION PORT BEDSTEADS,

Five feet wide, especially for the Southern Trade

☞ Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented. 179-84

HUNNEWELL'S UNIVERSAL REMEDY. HUNNEWELL'S COUGH REMEDY. HUNNEWELL'S REWARD OF MERIT REMEDY. HUNNEWELL'S SOLD EVERYWHERE REMEDY. HUNNEWELL'S GENUINE REMEDY. HUNNEWELL'S CONSUMPTION REMEDY.

This valuable preparation, freed of all the common components, such as Opiates or Expectorants, which not only can check the action, but destroy all chance of cure, will be found on trial to possess the following properties, and to which the most remarkable results can be traced in the following cases:

It is a Prompt Cough, and as a Soothing Syrup, it meets every want, and for every case will soon the most inveterate of Coughs in children which can be traced to Whooping Cough.

In ordinary Coughs and Bronchial Complaints, the increasingness of Consumption, in epidemic form, it operates under a control not the most perfect enemy to disease, but builds up and invigorates the system, and in Consumption, in the first and second stages, no medicine can be offered, nor should it be sold in all cases, to be found with all diseases, is the only way to do justice to them.

HUNNEWELL'S UNIVERSAL REMEDY. HUNNEWELL'S COUGH REMEDY. HUNNEWELL'S REWARD OF MERIT REMEDY. HUNNEWELL'S SOLD EVERYWHERE REMEDY. HUNNEWELL'S GENUINE REMEDY. HUNNEWELL'S CONSUMPTION REMEDY.

The great Alterative, Tonic, and Natural Opiate is to be found in no other remedy, being free of Opiates or Combinations of them, or of any deleterious or poisonous or medical properties. For Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Chronic and Nervous Diseases, Debility, Loss of Appetite, Stomach, Bowel or Liver Complaints, and all minor complaints, it is unequaled.

The Loss of Sight, Chronic or Nervous Headache, Sick Headache, Dizziness, Sleeplessness, in which it will be found from prolonged exposure.

For Female Diseases it is a sure Remedy.

The Special Complaints, including Chronic Weakness, it is splendidly adapted, in not only removing the Pains, but adding to physical energy and strength, which, while not only consequent and change the system, but makes the body more vigorous and healthy.

Price—Universal Remedy, 50 cents per bottle.
Cough Remedy, 25 cents per bottle.
Reward of Merit Remedy, 50 cents per bottle.
Sold Everywhere, 50 cents per bottle.
Genuine Remedy, 50 cents per bottle.
Consumption Remedy, 50 cents per bottle.

Prices—Large Cough Remedy, 50 cents per bottle.
Small " " 25 " "
Trial Size, 10 " "

From invalids we ask correspondence for Pamphlets or Circulars, which will be sent free.

Address J. H. HUNNEWELL,
CHEMIST AND PHARMACEUTIST,
No. 9 Commercial Wharf, Boston, Mass.

For sale by all leading wholesale and retail druggists in every town and city.

Agents—Benson & Hall, Water St.; B. S. Barnes & Co., Buffalo; Gay & Robinson; Rochester; Dana & Co., McKesson & Robbins, 91 and 93, Fulton st., Jones, Wakeman Agents, New York. 377-81w

Unequalled for the Splendor

AND MULTIPLICITY OF ITS ILLUSTRATIONS.

CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED FAMILY BIBLE

Great inducements are now held out to Subscribers.

Price, in Parts, each containing Seven Engravings, 15 cts.
Price, complete in Volumes, Cloth, Gilt Edges, $ 60.

Free by mail or wood Agents, one of whom will be appointed for one or more localities throughout the United States.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN,
13 Park Row, N. Y.

Only Twenty-five Cents a Bottle.

Superior Old Tom or London Cordial

GIN,

that for and over the immediate a is manufactured Dr. Dixon, 10 Barclay, for medicinal and price use.

HENRY C. SPALDING,
48 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

For sale by single bottle or case, by all Druggists throughout the country. Also by J. S. FARRELL, 168 Broadway; agents the Metropolitan Hotel, N. Y. 000

$100 A MONTH

Made with Stencil Tools.

CHEAPEST & BEST. Send for Circulars, samples, &c. All from J. B. Millikin, Brandon, Vt., or No. 70 Third St. St. Louis, Mo.

411 6t

335 EMPIRE 335

SEWING MACHINE.

PATENTED FEB. 14, 1860.

SALESROOM, NO. 335 BROADWAY.

This Machine is constructed on an entirely new principle of mechanism. It possesses many rare and valuable improvements—has been examined by the most profound experts, and pronounced to be SIMPLICITY AND PERFECTION COMBINED.

It accomplishes the principal objections urged against other Machines.

1. Excessive fatigue to the operator.
2. Liability to get out of order.
3. Expense, trouble and loss of time in repairing.
4. Necessity for every description of material.
5. Inexpressible noise while in operation.

The Empire Sewing Machine

IS EXEMPT FROM ALL THESE OBJECTIONS.

It has a straight needle, perpendicular motion, unlike the Lock-stitch Machine, which will neither bear the same, and must be taken on both sides; performs perfect seaming on every description of material, from a feather to the finest Nainsook muslin, with cotton, linen or silk thread, from the coarsest to the finest numbers.

Having neither Cam nor Cog wheels, and the least possible friction, it runs remarkably light, and is

EMPHATICALLY A NOISELESS MACHINE.

It requires very little care, and has power to drive it that any other Machine in market. A girl of twelve years of age can work it without the slightest injury to health.

The strength and evenness, combined with elasticity of the stitch, renders it the most desirable of all Machines for seaming by the Corporate or glove maker manufacturer.

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a reliable article to call and examine the EMPIRE SEWING MACHINE.

Call for a more special manner as we solicit the patronage of

MERCHANT TAILORS,
COAST-MAKERS,
HOOP-SKIRT MANUFACTURERS,
SHIRT AND LINEN MAKERS,
BRUSH MAKERS,
CORSET-MAKERS,
GAITER-STITCHERS,
HOSE MAKERS,
VEST AND PANTALOON-MAKERS

AND

Religious and Charitable Institutions

WILL BE LIBERALLY DEALT WITH.

PRICE OF MACHINES COMPLETE

No. 1—Family Machine..... $50
No. 2—Small size Manufacturing..... 65
No. 3—Large size Manufacturing..... 80

Agencies Established:

WILSON & CO., 1126 South Ninth st., Philadelphia, Pa.
D. GRIFFIN, 15 North Gay st., Baltimore, Md.
JOHN B. HOOD, 22 Water St., Troy, N. Y.
JAMES TOD, Commercial Building, Cincinnati, Ohio

AGENTS WANTED.

000 T. J. MCALLISTER & CO.

Dr. Brown's Patent Baby-Tender.

THIS article of Nursery Furniture is different from, superior to, and supplies the place of everything hitherto here used for that purpose.

N. B.—The exercise sets and by our nursery children in use of your Baby-Tenders very much in the development of their muscular system, and tending to dispose such themselves of our darkened rooms.—Nurses of

Home for the Friendless
Office of Baby-Tender Co., Warren-ons No. 602 Broadway, N. Y. between Bond and Houston sts. 000
Send for our Circular.

S. R. Walker,
TYPE FOUNDRY
AND PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
12 Beekman St., New York. 377 3t

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.—For particulars address, inclosing stamp, DR. A. HUSSEMAN, Surgeon and Accoucheur 16 Broadway, New York. 274 6t

MATRIMONY MADE EASY; Or, How to Win a Lover.—Containing plain, common sense directions for Ladies and Gentlemen, in all matters pertaining to love and courtship; also, rules for choosing a wife or husband by the hair, nails, and the cards, when to marry, courtship, etc., etc., and many curious secrets. Mailed for 10 cents. Address T. WILTAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia Pa Office, box 2,500.

AGENTS WANTED—In every town and city; the Union, to sell SHERMAN & CO'S NEW CITY JEWELLERY ENVELOPES, with from 31 to 126 cards of Jewelry in each envelope, selling from $10 to $100 per dozen sets of Envelopes are now ready, which, in addition to the usual method of selling by the envelope, the wind bear before offered. Sample Envelopes, containing Jewelry, 25 cents each, by mail, postpaid. Address SHERMAN & CO., 170 Broadway.

Dr. Marshall's Headache and Catarrh Snuff

HAS proved itself to many physicians and in the miserable sufferers to be the best article yet known for curing the Catarrh, Cold in the Head, Headache, and all Catarrhal affections. It purges out all disorderliness, strengthens the Glands and gives a healthy clean to the parts affected. A formula of the inventor, the Proprietor, CHARLES BO—EN, is on every bottle. Sold by all Druggists. 374 6t

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

PUBLISHED for the benefit and as a warning to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, and the Errors of Youth. Sent free by mail in a sealed envelope, free of charge. Address, enclosing two stamps, Dr. NICHOLS, No. 2 Howard st., Albany, N. Y., or by the Author, in person, at his Special Retreat.

The greatest number in which

OLD AGE THANKS HIS FOREIGN VOTERS

Is likely to be spent, and the Nationalities are largely represented in the Republican Party.

Old Bohrman's Horror at receiving a Lucrative Foreign Appointment is no admirable illustration of his manifold patriotism.

Inevitably jogging trick of Swallowing his Sword is another of the Delights of

BUT THE GRAND CARTOON
BUT THE GRAND CARTOON
BUT THE GRAND CARTOON
BUT THE GRAND CARTOON

In the Budget's suggestion of

HOW HE SHOULD GIVE UP FORT SUMPTER.
HOW HE SHOULD GIVE UP FORT SUMPTER.
HOW HE SHOULD GIVE UP FORT SUMPTER.
HOW HE SHOULD GIVE UP FORT SUMPTER.
HOW HE SHOULD GIVE UP FORT SUMPTER.
HOW HE SHOULD GIVE UP FORT SUMPTER.

Our space will not allow us to dwell on all the Splendid Cartoons in this number. We must therefore only call attention to a few, such as

THE ELEVATED TOBACCONIST'S SIGN,

THE RABBITS OF CINCINNATI,

THE HAPPY FAMILY OF PIGS, &c.

In the pressure number Frank Leslie has introduced a Page for the BOYS—MARBLES.

Fine First-Class Rebuses,

And an amusing Series of Sports upon the Dollar Jewellery Humbug.

Comprising the Amazing Romance of the Finest Girl, The Budget, Dollar-pox Romances, Budget Stores, Poems, Essays, Humorous Tales, and solid reading for those who are fonder of information than a laugh. In a word,

Frank Leslie's Budget of Fun

Is unequalled for its Wit, Wisdom, Satire and Illustration. Published at

FRANK LESLIE'S PUBLICATION OFFICE,
537 Pearl st., New York.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AND GYMNASIUM
YONKERS, N. Y.

Winter Session commenced on the 1st day of Nov

TERMS:

Board and Tuition ..... $150 per Session.
For Circulars and particular information, apply to Yonkers, 1864 M. S. WESTWELL, Principal 000

THE READERS OF

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper

Desiring to purchase any article in New York, no matter how trifling or costly, can have their orders promptly and artfully fulfilled by addressing

JAMES W. FORBES,
Care of Frank Leslie, Esq.,
19 Gay Hall Square, N. Y.

In all cases the necessary funds should be inclosed in the communication.

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S

LOTTERIES

Authorized by the States of

DELAWARE,
MISSOURI
AND
KENTUCKY,

Draw daily, in public, under the superintendence of Sworn Commissioners.

The Managers' Offices are located at Wilmington Delaware, and St. Louis, Missouri.

PRIZES VARY FROM

$2 50 TO $100,000!

TICKETS FROM $2 50 TO $20.

☞ Circulars giving full explanations and the schemes in its terms will be sent, free of expense, by addressing

WOOD, EDDY & CO., Wilmington, Delaware,
OR
WOOD, EDDY & CO., St. Louis, Mo.

FAIRBANKS'

STANDARD SCALES!!

ADAPTED TO EVERY BRANCH OF BUSINESS where a correct and durable Scale is required.

Send for an Illustrated and Descriptive Circular.

FAIRBANKS & CO.,
399 Broadway, New York.

D. E. O.

DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL—THE WONDER OF THE AGE.—The electric operation of this accessory to all beautiful complexions is now being the praise of every lady.

It cures me of Swollen and Stiff Neck.—John Lancaster, Ex. Law Magazine, New York.

It cured me of Piles.—J. Sutton, Ex-Mayor, Camden, N. J.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—An. Ex. Philadelphia.

It cures me of 10 years standing.—C. D. Campbell, Tonkers, N. Y.

It cured my wife of Rheumatism.—An Swedenborg (N. Y.) Minister.

It cured me of bad Spraised Ankle.—H. G. B. Moses, Montgomery, Ala.

It cures me of an old Sore.—Wm. Maddox, 10 Suffolk St., N. Y.

It cured me of Pain in Breast.—Wm Middleton, Lincoln Co.

It is impossible to publish all the certificates in a book of 1,000 pages. The dictum: Oil in the ears will pain and discase from the system, and makes a permanent cure. To operate on the parts with Electricity, being a companion in connection with the Oil discovered by Prof. De Grath, which the medical faculty here and in Europe have endeavored to accomplish without success for centuries past, and which is now offered to the public for the first time, and other cures which the Physicians all pronounced incurable. The sales, as attested by the largest dealers, D. S. Barnes, F. C. Wells & Co., B. Davis, New York, and and others, throughout this Continent, are wonderful. PROF. DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL is warranted to cure, and my Agents are instructed to refund the money in all cases of failure. 9 ly

DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL—Is warranted to cure. 21 South 6th St., Philadelphia, Pa. 248-950

HORSE POWDERS. DEPOT FOR S. G. WELLING'S Condition Powders for Horses, 424 Broome street, New York. Price Fifty Cents per box or one dozen boxes. 219 7to

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.

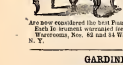
For curing and preventing Baldness,
For removing Scurf and Dandruff,
For beautifying and making the Hair soft and glossy,
In fact the only safe and effective compound of the kind in use.
It cures and yet the right article.

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator.

Price 50 cents per bottle.
Wholesale Depot, 24 Dey St., New York.
Also,
PROF. L. MILLER'S INSTANTANEOUS LIQUID DYE. PRICE 50 cents per box.
Warranted superior in all colors.
Try them, and you will acknowledge the fact. 271-83t

Ladd, Webster & Co's
IMPROVED TIGHT STITCH SEWING MACHINES,
292 Broadway, New York. 9009

STEINWAY & SONS'



PATENT OVERSTRUNG GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS

Are now considered the best Pianos manufactured.
Both Instruments warranted for five years.
Warerooms, No. 82 and 84 Walker St., near Broadway, N. Y. 9009

GARDINER'S
Rheumatic and Neuralgia
COMPOUND,

A certain, safe and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Sick Headache. It is an internal remedy, driving out and entirely eradicating the disease, requiring no outward application whatever, and may be taken by children and persons of the most delicate constitution with perfect safety.

Principal Depot, 67 Liberty St., New York. J. C. WELLS & CO., 120 Franklin St., New York, Wholesale Agents. Sold by Druggists everywhere. 9009

Sold by J. SULLAN & SON, 193 Broadway. 219 81e

Smith and Wesson's Seven-Shooter.

J. W. STOKES, Agent,

241 Chatham Street, N. Y.

THIS PISTOL is light, has great force, is safe for, shoots accurately, can be left loaded any length of time without injury, is not liable to get out of order, is safe to carry. Every Pistol warranted.

CAUTION TO DEALERS.

Be sure and get these stamped "Smith & Wesson, Springfield, Mass." and avoid worthless imitations. All other pretended Seven-Shooters are infringements. Sales are coming rapidly. Dealers will find it to their interest to call and see the cartridges have smith & Wesson's name stamped on each of the box. 270 260e

HUMILIATING.

OLD GENT (meeting his Dutch grocer mounted as a Colonel of Dragoons)—"Look here, Schultze, where why the devil didn't you send me my patriotic fire yesterday?" (N. B.—The Colonel collapses.)

CHARLES HEIDSIECK
CHAMPAGNE.

This popular Wine, of which the undersigned are SOLE AGENTS FOR NORTH AMERICA,
Received the First Premium at the
BORDEAUX EXPOSITION IN 1859.
The Medal awarded by the judges can be seen at our office.
Jobn. T. W. BUTLER & BELKNAP, 199 Pearl St., N. Y.

$50 PER MONTH and Expenses paid. Address for terms. J. W. ELLIS & CO., Boston, Mass. 270-82t

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

THE Advertiser having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having endured several years of the severest form of Lung Affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, A TIMA, BRONCHITIS, &c.

The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted; and he hopes every sufferer will try it, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing. Parties wishing the prescription will please address

REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings County, N. Y.
283-90e

The Early Physical Degeneracy
OF
American People,
AND THE EARLY BELANCHOLY DECLINE OF CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH
Just published by
DR. STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Haemorrhage and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the symptoms and hidden causes are Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Here is a most thrilling book, and is the result of thirty years' experience of the author in more than ten thousand cases of the class of diseases treated of in this work, and from circumstances and phisiological analysis, and appeals most publicly to Parents, Guardians and to Youth, for a middle timely and an exposure of the many SHAMMING DARK, and a caution to clear the abuse and recks for confidence. Sent free to all enclosing a three cent postage stamp to defray expense.

Fail not to Send and get this Book.

ADDRESS

DR. ANDREW STONE,
Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 26 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y.

JOY TO THE WORLD.

Clothes Washed in One Minute by
JOHNSON'S UNION WASHING MACHINE.
Patented April 10, 1860.

PRICE $8 TO $10.

A CHILD CAN OPERATE IT. Washes every sort. Runs and cleans clothes soaking or boiling. Call and see it in operation at 417 Broadway, or send for a circular. Agents wanted. Address,

J. JOHNSON & CO.,
Proprietors
604

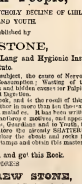
VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—See advertisement next page. 219 81e

AT REDUCED PRICES
With Glass-Cloth Presser, Improved Lock-Stitch, New Style Hemmer, Under Feeder, &c.

Office, 505 Broadway, New York.

The Machine* makes the "LOCK-STITCH," odd numbers alike on both sides, and is equally well adapted to every variety of stitching, embroidering, hemming, and every general thickness or size of the stitching when done, and the entire range of its application.—Report of American Institute, New York. 219 80e

Patented November 1st, 1859.



The Measure are
A, the distance
round the Neck.
B to B, the Yoke.
C to C, the Sleeve
D to D, distance
around the Body
under the armpits
E to E, the length
of the Shirt.

BALLOU'S
Patented Improved French Yoke
SHIRTS.
Patented November 1st, 1859.
A New Style of Shirt, warranted to Fit.

By sending the above measure per mail we can guarantee a perfect fit of our new style of Shirt, and return by Express to our part of the United States, at $9, $10, $11, $12, &c., per dozen. No order forwarded for less than half a dozen Shirts.

Also Importers and Dealers in MENS' FURNISHING GOODS

BALLOU BROTHERS,
409 Broadway, N. Y.
Wholesale Trade supplied on the usual terms

Thorley's Food for Cattle.

FOR Horses, Cows, Sheep and Hogs, the effects produced in one month will exceed all expectations. A Pamphlet mailed free. Agents Wanted. Depot, 51 Broadway, New York.

BILLIARD BALLS. Ivory and Patent Compressed Ivory, at reduced prices. Manufactured and for sale by WM. H. WELLING, 424 Broome St. 219-85e

Incomparable in Excellence."

Beadle's Dime
AMERICAN LIBRARY.

Issued in New York and London.

Ready, April 1st, a New Story

By MRS. M. A. DENISON.

FLORIDA; or, The Iron Will.

A Story of To-day.

Beyond question one of the most powerful and beautiful Romances ever penned by Mrs. Denison.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR:

CHIP, the Cave-Child;

A Romance of the Wife of Pompeii.

AND

The Prisoner of La Vintresse

Or, The Fortress of a Crime Heroes. Each 128 pp. complete, price 10 cts.

DIME BIOGRAPHICAL LIBRARY.

Just Issued, The Life and Services of Major Gen. Anthony Wayne,

("Mad Anthony.")

The Revolutionary Patriot and Indian Conqueror.

No. 1. GARIBALDI; The Washington of Italy.
No. 2. DANIEL BOONE; The Hunter of Kentucky.
No. 3. KIT CARSON; The Rocky Mountain Scout and Guide.

Hand-Books for Housekeepers.

Beadle's Dime Cook Book.
Beadle's Dime Recipe Book.
Beadle's Dime Family Physician
Beadle's Dime Book on Etiquette.
Beadle's Dime Dressmaker and Milliner's Guide.

Dime Books for Schools.

Beadle's Dime Spelling Book. Part 1.
Beadle's Dime Dialogues. Nos. 1 and 2.
Beadle's Dime Debater.
Beadle's Dime Letter Writer.

Music and Song.

Beadle's Dime Melodeon (Words and Words).
Beadle's Dime Military Fife Book.
Beadle's Dime Song Books. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 7.

Games and Amusements.

Beadle's Dime Base Ball Player.
Beadle's Dime Guide to Croquet.
Beadle's Dime Guide to Swimming.
Beadle's Dime Chess Instructor.

Ten Cents each. For sale by all News Dealers, Book sellers, and Country Merchants generally. Single copies sent postpaid on receipt of Ten Cents. Liberal discount to Agents. Address

BEADLE & COMPANY,
No. 141 William St., New York.
or No. 121 William St., New York,
London, 44 Paternoster Row. 281e

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE—NEW INVENTION.—Address, Inclosing Stamp, DR. PARKS, No. 4 Ann St., New York City. 276t

NOW WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Grover & Baker's
CELEBRATED NOISELESS
Sewing Machines.

No family can afford to be without one.

495 BROADWAY, N. Y.
9009

A Splendid Chance to Make Money!

Persons desirous of engaging in the

JEWELLERY AND PERFUMERY BUSINESS

Will find it greatly to their advantage, before purchasing elsewhere, to call or send to the

CHEAPEST HOUSE IN AMERICA,

where their orders will be promptly and carefully attended to. FOWLE, WINGATE & CO., Manufacturing Jewellers, 1860 No. 208 Broadway, New York.

A Pair of Real Novelties,
AND ONE WITHOUT A MATE.

THE "PATENT TIP ENVELOPE" AND "PATENT STILETTO" TIP. Patent applied for. Patented Jan. 25, 1861. A new Pen every day. A perfect "Stiletto" Pen lasting Years.

THE "LACE EDGE" TIP. (Copyright Secured). 1000 H & BROOKES, Sole Manufacturers, No. 30 Wooster St. N. Y. N. B.—Sole call to Wholesale Jobbers only. Retail Merchants can order our goods of any Jobber. 281 4e

Shaler's Flexible Roller Patent Floor Skates.

Beware of Counterfeits.

The use of these Skates imparts a perfect knowledge of the art of skating in a few hours, and the most timid person can skate with safety and ease pursuant to the position. Hundreds of ladies in this city have become proficient in the science by the use of them.

The only place for the same article is 440 Broadway, N. Y. O. M. VAIL, Sole Agent and Manufacturer. 100

THE ELECTROTYPING OF FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER is done by WILLIAM DENYER, 105 William St., New York

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1861, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York

No. 282—Vol. XI.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 20, 1861. [Price 6 Cents.

FIRING ON THE SCHOONER SHANNON, From the Battery on Morris Island, Charleston Harbor, S. C.

Our Artist in Charleston has sent us sketches of two exciting episodes in the present unfortunate epic of national trouble. We cannot do better than give them in the words of an eye-witness:

"The city was startled late in the afternoon of the 3d by firing from Morris Island. It was supposed at first to be mere practice shots; but those who had the best glasses could see that a schooner was the object, and what that schooner meant and where she came from, and what she wanted in this harbor, remained a mystery until late yesterday afternoon. I enlisted a Charleston pilot in my service, and finally he brought me the following. It seems that about four P. M. a schooner was seen beating up the channel. She had no pilot aboard, as was evident from the fact that she failed to give the usual signal to the guard boat. As she still kept on her way, apparently shaping her course for Fort Sumpter, she was fired into by the Fort Morris battery, they sending a shot across her bows. Still she kept on, but throwing to the breeze the Stars and Stripes. When she came abreast of the Mortar battery they sent some very heavy shot, not pointed at her hull, but which nevertheless hit her. As she still persisted, they sent a shell which burst close to her rudder. My informant said in his rough, sailor parlance, that he was quite near at the time and called out to the captain, 'Why in h—ll don't you heave to?' The captain of the schooner was evidently bewildered, and didn't know what to do. When the shell was fired he hove to in desperate haste.

FIRING AT THE SCHOONER SHANNON, LADEN WITH RIE, FROM THE BATTERY ON MORRIS ISLAND, CHARLESTON HARBOR, S. C., APRIL 3, 1861.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST NOW ON MORRIS ISLAND.

BOAT FROM FORT SUMTER ARRIVING AT SUMMONS' POINT WITH A FLAG OF TRUCE, CONVEYING CAPT. SYMMUR AND LIEUT. SNOWD, TO ASK PERMISSION TO RUN DOWN TO THE SCHOONER SHANNON, TO ASCERTAIN IF ANY DAMAGE HAD BEEN DONE BY THE FIRING FROM MORRIS ISLAND, APRIL 3, 1861.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST NOW ON MORRIS ISLAND.

"Major Anderson, who had been carefully scanning the whole thing with his glass, immediately sent the fort boat, and detailed Captain Seymour and Lieutenant Snyder to row over at once to Morris Island, to ask an explanation of the firing, and to obtain permission to visit the schooner. This was granted, and they immediately went on board. After tarrying awhile they returned to the fort, and the schooner put at once to sea. It has been blowing a gale for several days, and on Wednesday evening the entire bay was white with foam. To this may be ascribed the fact that although a coast steamer was sent in pursuit of the unknown vessel, she returned at midnight, stating that she was unable to find her. The fact of the visit of the officers from Fort Sumpter has led all Charleston to believe that the schooner had provisions and men for the fort, and that she was the avant courrier of a fleet on the way, and that the raising of the United States flag was well understood by Major Anderson. As I know that she had a cargo of ice on board, I look upon this surmise as amounting to nothing, but the Charlestonians persist in thinking that there was something immense intended, which they happily upset. The Captain of the Shannon evidently thought that ice was in demand here, notwithstanding the two dollars duty per ton. He certainly did his best to come in, but I fancy he will not care to repeat the experiment."

Barnum's American Museum

Is overflowing with Living Wonders and Curiosities, including Old Grizzly Adams' California Bears, which perform a variety of amusing tricks under the direction of Herr Driesbach, the renowned Lion Tamer. Sea Lion, Aztec Children, Albino Family, What Is It? Bearded Lady, Lilliputian Queen, Aquaria, &c., and Superb Dramatic Performances every afternoon and evening.

IRVING HALL,

IRVING PLACE AND FIFTEENTH STREET,

Opposite to the

ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

FOR BALLS, CONCERTS, LECTURES, FESTIVALS, FAIRS, &c., &c., &c.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

FRANK LESLIE, Editor and Publisher.

NEW YORK, APRIL 20, 1861.

Communications, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to Frank Leslie, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One Copy	17 weeks	$1
One do.	1 year	$3
Two do.	1 year	$5
Or One Copy	2 years	$5
Three Copies	1 year	$6
Five do.	1 year (to one address)	$10

And an extra Copy to the person sending a Club of Five. Every additional subscription, $2.

NOTICE TO PHOTOGRAPHERS.

We shall be much obliged to our photographic friends if they will write in pencil the name and description on the back of each picture, together with their own name and address. This notice is rendered necessary from the fact that so many photographs are sent to us from our friends throughout the country without one word of explanatory matter, they giving us credit for being en rapport with everything that transpires or exists in all parts of the United States. The columns of our paper prove that we are up to the times in almost everything which occurs of public importance throughout the world, still we are not so ubiquitous but that something may occur beyond the circuit of our far-reaching information. To save labor and insure accuracy, descriptions and names (as above indicated) should, in all cases, accompany photographic pictures or sketches.

Foreign News.

England.—Lord Palmerston, having appointed himself Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, necessarily resigned his seat in Parliament, and appealed to the electors of Tiverton, who, of course, re-elected the old Premier. He made a speech on the occasion, in which he said, in allusion to our present fratricidal strife: "Of this I am sure, every man who hears me, every British heart will feel that it is our cordial wish that whatever may be the ultimate result of the differences now prevailing, that result may be brought about by amicable adjustments, and that the world may be saved from the afflicting spectacle of seeing brothers arming against brothers, and parents against children, and of seeing that state of social happiness which has hitherto been the admiration of mankind defaced by disputes, and a country which has been the scene of peace and industry polluted by the effusion of blood." Would that our politicians, now blind with bigotry, could see with the calm eye of a spectator the drama they are enacting. The Paris Patrie has an angry editorial on the presence of the Prince of Orleans at the funeral of the Duchess of Kent. It forgets that her brother married one of the daughters of Louis Philippe.

France.—The Council of State has condemned the Bishop of Poictiers to be formally reprimanded for his sermon, in which he compared the Emperor to Pontius Pilate. It ought to be borne in mind, that many have considered the Roman Governor as an ill-used man, and that all he wanted was moral firmness. It must be confessed that Louis Napoleon cannot be said to resemble, in that grand essential, Pontius in the least. War preparations still continue with unabated vigor, and there is little doubt of an impending struggle between Austria and Italy, in which France will have to play a decided part. The French papers are very quiet on our American troubles. The Morrill tariff has very much changed the opinion of Germany, France and England on the Slavery question. There is such a thing as paying too much for a nigger, as well as a whistle. The health of the Empress is improved, and her spirits are so much better, that the Court Journal says "she giggles, an accomplishment which the Emperor by no means admires." It is said that she has read Mr. Lincoln's Inaugural, which she much applauds—certainly a great encouragement to the Abolition philosophers and Fourierite declaimers. Several French editors on an excursion to Venice were very roughly treated, and finally expelled in a most ignominious manner. What makes this the more remarkable is, that their passports were visé by the Austrian Embassy in Paris. The warlike aspect of Europe had depressed the Bourse very much.

Italy.—Austria was concentrating large bodies of troops at various parts in Venetia, and the common talk of the officers was an approaching campaign with Sardinia. Hungary was, however, by no means satisfied with the reform, and Garibaldi, it is rumored, had called a conference of his old associates at Brescia, to deliberate on the best plan of commencing the war. The Pontifical gendarmes at Canino, near Viterbo, are said to have treacherously attacked the citizens, three of whom were killed. The indignation was general, and the people were signing addresses to Napoleon, praying him to protect the city. The Italian Chamber of Deputies on the 29th adjourned until April 24, on which day Signor Massari will bring forward an interpellation in reference to the affairs of Naples. Count Cavour had made a speech, in which he declared that Rome must be the capital of Italy.

Austria.—The German papers announce that the Count of Rechberg, Prime Minister of Austria, had sent his son to London on a special mission to know how far England would back Austria in the event of her being forced into a war by the aggressive nature of French policy. Lord Palmerston said that with Hungary dissatisfied, and Venetia requiring so many men to hold it, he did not consider Austria capable of performing her old part in the politics of Europe.

Havana.—It is certain now that St. Domingo is to be annexed to Spain, President Santana having formally transferred the Dominican Republic to the Spanish Queen. A large Spanish force was on the point of sailing for St. Domingo to complete the transfer. The Commissioners from President Jefferson Davis had arrived in Havana, on their way to England and France. They had been cordially received by the British Consul there.

Turkey.—It is said that the Sultan has declined to submit his intended reforms to the Great Powers, and that they have declared he shall. The sick man of Turkey is in articulo mortis, and his decease should be accelerated, as an act of benevolence.

China.—Lord Elgin is on his way to England; but it is said that the Mandarins of Foo-Chow have altogether ignored the late Treaty, and consequently another campaign may after all be necessary to re-convince the barbarian Chinese.

Japan.—The murder of Mr. Heusken, the Secretary of the American Legation at Jeddo, has caused great consternation, and the English, French and Dutch Ministers had left the capital, which is the headquarters of fanatical hatred of foreigners, and gone to Yokohama. Mr. Harris had, however, remained at his post. We are glad to find that Tommy, the ladies' pet while in America, has not been put to death, but is alive, and making theological remarks about Mr. Heusken's going to Heaven. At least, so says the pious World.

Our Artist in Charleston, S. C.

For over three months our Special Artist has been stationed in Charleston, S. C., occasionally varying his location to Columbia and to Montgomery, the capital of the Southern Confederacy. By this means we have been enabled to furnish to our readers vivid and reliable sketches of the important events which have transpired in those localities. No other Illustrated Paper has been permitted to enjoy the same privilege, and our illustrations, therefore, are the only ones to be relied upon.

We tender our warmest thanks to the authorities of those cities for the courtesies they have shown to our Special Artist, and for the privileges they have accorded him in his connection with our Illustrated Newspaper. He is now on Morris Island, in Charleston Harbor, by special permission of the authorities, and in the best possible position for observing and sketching all that publicly transpires in the coming great drama of our country's history.

Aspect of Affairs.

The past week has been one of great excitement and gloom, for every one feels that the question of Peace or War depends upon the chance of a minute. The President and his Cabinet, after a temporising policy of above a month, appear to have determined upon a coercive policy, or in other words they have resolved to reinforce Forts Sumpter and Pickens. For this purpose a fleet of war vessels and transports has been organized, and by this time is on its way to the seat of action. In consequence of the vessels having sailed with sealed orders it is impossible to designate their precise destination, although everything points to Charleston and other Southern ports. We give a list of the vessels despatched during the week:

Coatzacoalcos	1,500
Fashion	500
Atlantic	2,845
Baltic	2,885
Illinois	2,123
Ocean Queen	2,802
Yankee	400
Uncle Ben	300
Empire City	1,050
Star of the West	1,500
Total	16,505

In another part of our paper we have illustrated the departure of the Atlantic from the Collins dock in Canal street.

The Demoralization of Office.

The present condition of public affairs is, in many respects, a painful one. At a time when all true men are gazing with the profoundest sorrow on the melancholy spectacle of a great Republic torn to pieces by intemperate politicians, we have the additional humiliation of seeing the men who aspire to the manning of the noble craft, rushing on board, not to save the vessel, but to plunder it. Their conduct is more that of pirates and wreckers than that of Americans and patriots. Nor are the President and his Cabinet blameless in the matter. A precious month has been lost in the weighing whether Hiram Barney or Simeon Draper shall have this or that position, and in gathering around them a pack of the most ravenous wolves that ever pursued a Siberian droskie.

We have before alluded to that atrocious custom of changing, with a few exceptions, the entire personnel of the Government on the advent of a new President, a system founded upon the bandit cry of—"To the victors belong the spoils!" Thus an honorable pursuit becomes akin to that of the gambler or the partisan, and a horde of unprincipled place-hunters are fastened upon the community, at once to rule and rob. Nor must we omit from this disgusting picture of political depravity the demoralizing effects this miserable system has upon the officials themselves. It eradicates the last spark of manhood. Truth and honor are sacrificed to the Molochs of rum and gold, and the Hard-Shell Democrat of eight years' standing has as sudden a conversion on his road to the Jericho of Salt River as did the Apostle of old. It is wonderful to see what an effect the approach of the guillotine has upon the impenitent heretics of the Custom House and the Post Office. They are ready to forswear their old religion, and embrace the new faith, to save their official lives; but the Black Fiend having extorted from their fears the sacrifice of their integrity, they are ruthlessly slaughtered, perishing thus both politically and morally.

If anything could more fully exhibit the debasing power of the present system, it is to be found in the fact that nearly one-half of the present Government employés declare they have been Abe Lincolnites all their lives, without, of course, knowing it themselves, or anybody else. Nor can any other course be expected from men trained as they have been. They may have commenced their career of politician as honest and industrious men, they may have shrunk from grogshops with as holy a horror as Father Mathew or Horace Greeley; but once in the fatal current, they are imperceptibly drawn into the vortex of rowdyism and corruption. It is a statistical fact, that every office, however small in power or profit, makes at least twenty politicians, thus at one blow converting twenty industrious citizens into as many men who are content to gamble their future life on the chance of a four years' prize. Talk of the demoralising influence of the lottery, what is it to that of politics? Surely never has the old legend of a man selling his soul to Satan, for the possession of a short-lived paradise, had a more complete illustration, than in this fatal pursuit of office, which is not alone destructive to the men themselves, but subversive of the Republic, by erecting an army of Janizaries who are compelled to follow blindly the dictates of unprincipled leaders, whose supreme law is their own aggrandisement. Whatever may be the result of the present unhappy struggle between the two parties which now divide the country, and which has been chiefly caused by the very evil we are considering, let us hope that it will result in those amendments to the Constitution which the altered state of society imperatively demands.

EDITORIAL GLANCES AT MEN AND THINGS.

The Palmetto Flag says that William L. Yancey has received from the fair hands of his numerous lady friends in Montgomery a splendid gold mounted cane and a bouquet of rare flowers, in token of their appreciation of the untiring zeal and self-sacrificing labor which have distinguished his patriotism in behalf of Southern independence and domestic peace and quiet. The Philadelphia Press adds that when the admirers of certain politicians present their idols with a cane, it is a delicate hint to walk off.

The Levees daily held at the Custom House by the Emperor Barney are very suggestive of the immense surplus patriotism now in the market. Considering the troubled state of the nation, this is very creditable to them. When we find so many men anxious to throw themselves into such positions of danger as clerks in the Custom House and Post Office, and for the small sum of a thousand a year, no man need despair of the Republic. Let us suggest to Mr. Barney the propriety of forming a regiment out of the applicants for official honors and emoluments.

Ex-Governor Rodman Price has not shown his usual prudence in his letter advising New Jersey to join the Southern Confederacy. Such a position would resemble the ass between two bundles of hay, neither of which he could touch. Between the two stools she would come to the ground. It is a great pity that the letter in question was not washed out of his cabin window with the rest of his California vouchers. We recommend General Wright to review the ex-Governor's letter.

Kossuth and the Emperor of Austria are at war in the English courts of law about the manufacture of Hungarian bonds by order of Louis Kossuth. The defence is that the Emperor of Austria is not de jure King of Hungary. It is a strange spectacle to see an Emperor and his rebellious subject thus meet as equals in an English court of justice; but it would, indeed, be truly ludicrous were the verdict to justify Kossuth, since it would be tantamount to declaring Francis Joseph of Hapsburg an usurper.

The Inhabitants of St. Paul, Minnesota, have a very quiet way of doing business—it is purely intellectual. They don't tar and feather, but they pass resolutions much more effective. The last object of their sarcasm is the Rev. Mr. Fisk, who, in a sermon, declared Ossawattomie Brown to be a second Jesus Christ; whereupon, some of the principal inhabitants of St. Paul met and passed the following resolution, which they handed to him, and had another copy framed and put up in their City Hall:

"Whereas, the Rev. Mr. Fisk, of St. Paul, has declared from the pulpit 'that John Brown was a second Jesus Christ,' therefore,

"Resolved, That Mr. Fisk has made himself a second Balaam's ass; provided, however, nothing herein contained is intended to slander the original ass by intimating that Mr. Fisk is his lineal descendant."

We await with considerable interest Fisk's next bray in reply.

OUR WEEKLY GOSSIP.

National Academy of Design.

We should judge, from the number of people present whenever we visit the Academy of Design, that the receipts must be highly satisfactory. Considerable interest is evidenced by the public, and it would require but little exertion to make it one of our most popular institutions. We have not reviewed the pictures in any order of succession, but have commented upon those which most particularly attracted our attention, and continue in the same vein.

No. 194, "A Lake in the Highlands," J. R. Gifford. This picture is a blaze of sunlight, which throws a golden glare over every object—the sky, the water, which is liquid light, and the gorgeously tinted foliage—the very shadows in the water float in gold, and the glory of light embraces all. Still there is nothing positively glaring, for a wonderful atmosphere softens and harmonizes the whole. Altogether, it is a fascinating picture, and one of Mr. Gifford's happiest efforts.

No. 199, "A Reminiscence—Trenton Falls," Thomas Hicks. This little picture contains a masterly and beautiful moonlight effect. But there all praise must end, for the mass of chalky matter, supposed to represent the falls, is utterly unlike water under any aspect.

No. 338, "Shower at Sunset," A. D. Shattuck. This is a striking picture, exhibiting a strong but not uncommon natural effect. The sky is heavily clouded over the whole right of the picture, throwing a shadowy gloom over the landscape. Towards the centre the clouds are breaking under the influence of the setting sun, and in this strong break of light, which is reflected, with magical effect, on portions of water and foliage, the falling of a shower of rain is distinctly traced. Mr. Shattuck is a close observer of nature, and his facile pencil transfers her varied moods to the canvas with an accuracy which simulates reality, and strikes the observer with its truth at a glance.

No. 389, "Autumn," J. R. Brevoort. A group of trees, with a mass of undergrowth and bush foliage, dyed with the gorgeous tints of autumn, with a glimpse of a landscape beyond, form the subject of this picture. The group is admirably drawn, and skilfully and effectively painted. It has all the richness of autumnal tints without exaggeration or extravagance.

No. 429, "Hyde's Hotel, Sudbury, Vt.," A. H. Wenzler. This is a new style of advertising, and we wish to know how much the Directors of the Academy of Design charge for a "square"—say three feet—of their exhibition walls. This is not the only advertising picture there. A tariff of advertising prices should be published, from the diminutive cabinet to the largest size, and we feel sure that the funds of the Academy would reap a great revenue from this new business—the advertising community is very enterprising. Mr. Wenzler's picture is good enough for a month's free board.

No. 435, "Recollections of Capri," A. Bierstadt. The "Grotto of Nymphs," a remarkable stalactite cave in the Island of Capri, at the south entrance of the Bay of Naples, is the subject of this very clever picture. We are in the heart of the cave, and surrounded by a strange gloom. Far in the distance is seen the pale light which marks the entrance, while in one of the fissures on the left the strong red glare of a fire is visible. The contrasts afforded by these opposing lights, blending with the general tone of the cave, make up a rich and effective bit of coloring.

No. 426, "Mrs. Hasbrouck," D. Huntington, N.A. This is a fine portrait in all its details. The face is well drawn, the flesh tone rich, the shadows clear, the millinery excellently painted, and the general management natural and attractive.

No. 423, "The Highlands, from Shrewsbury River," J. F. Kensett. A large number who view this picture will remember the precise spot, and many will doubtless have seen the very effect so ably represented. A bold bluff stands prominently out into the water, throwing a dense and heavy mass of shade. The water beyond is studded with small craft and floating seadrift. The whole is admirably painted, and the atmosphere is so positive that the eye wanders into the depths of the far distance as though it were limitless. It is a charming picture, one of those transcripts of nature which Kensett excels in.

No 494, "Pools by the Shore," Wm. Hart. This happy effect of Mr. Hart's pencil represents a level landscape, trending to the sea in the distance. The foreground is broken, cool pools of water running in landward, and on the right are heavy masses of rock finely drawn and painted. It is a work of high merit.

No. 374, "The Culprit," by Eastman Johnson, A. This is an inimitable touch of real life. The culprit is evidently a very bad boy indeed. Placed in a corner, on a high stool, he still scowls defiance upon his fate. Correction has evidently brought no contrition to his mind, for both face and figure are expressive of the most dogged obstinacy and non-repentance. It is carefully painted, and the thought is so faithfully portrayed that the story is told at a glance. It is a little gem, unpretentious, but revealing a master hand. It is worthy of Hunt.

No. 467, "A Lady," by W. Oliver Stone, N A. This is a charming portrait. The subject is handled with delicacy and sentiment. The intelligent face is skilfully painted, and the expression caught with admirable fidelity. The drapery is graceful, its transparent texture happily rendered, and the position easy and natural. A more subdued tone would have greatly added to the value of the work. Still it is a portrait worthy of note.

No. 133, "Strolling Players in a Snow Squall," by R. Zimmerman. This is a picture full of character, containing points of marked excellence. The huge wagon, drawn by two veritable Rozinantes, faithfully represents the Noah's Ark of the strollers. The crowded group, huddled together for protection, and promiscuously mixed up with scenery, drums, properties, and all the tawdry trumpery properly belonging to an itinerant acting company, is full of action, and is skilfully and spiritedly drawn. The two strollers by the side of the wagon and the dog, probably an actor, too, look footsore and shivering; and the men have that hat-on-one-side, coat-buttoned-up-to-the-chin, jaunty, shabby-genteel air peculiar to the class, and unmistakable when met with. The snow flurry is cleverly managed, and the leaden tone peculiar to such an incident imparts a feeling of extreme desolation. The ensemble presents a real life scene, which is striking for its fidelity, admirable for the naturalness of its sentiment, and for its clever and spirited execution.

A Reply from "Cousin Clara."

They may talk about music moving rocks and stones, and of its power over savage beasts, but give us a delicately pointed poem, with flattering possibilities and a dash of sincerity, and in power over the sentiments of woman it throws music far away into the shade. We felt sure that if Cousin Clara was a real flesh and blood woman, and not an unsatisfactory and intangible myth, that our "Appeal" would challenge a reply. Our presentiment has been justified; Cousin Clara has answered, and in a very graceful, charming and genial manner. She is evidently a genuine daughter of the South, and accepts our Northern courtesy with a frankness which is at once truthful and charming. Our readers will perceive that she has adopted Frank Leslie, and after saying many flattering things, places him among that pleasantly privileged class her "cousins"—an honor which he fully and deeply appreciates.

But Cousin Clara, with exquisite cunning, or rather, innocent diplomacy, has evaded our question, and although her handwriting proves that she is not a "myth" but a "shy little birdie," her veritable identity is not revealed. The suggestion, however, in the last verse of her charming poetical reply we shall duly bear in mind, and advise the Colonel, or rather Cousin Harry, to be on his guard when he next visits New York, for we shall assuredly hunt up some "Robertson's" and do our best to pump him. But read what Cousin Clara says:

Nashville, Tenn., March 23, 1861,
– Saturday Night.

Dear Mr. Gossip—As I was busy this evening, preparing to attend one of our delightful concerts (for you must know we are a music-loving people in our city), my little Mercury came in with quite an armful of mail matter, and as he threw it on the table I caught sight of your paper, and to use a Southern phrase, pounced upon it like a "hawk upon a chicken," whilst all the girls were exclaiming, "Now, coz, you'll not be ready!" "Only one peep, darlings," I cried, "just to see if Cousin Harry has anything in it!" When, lo and behold! there was your beautiful and flattering "Appeal to Cousin Clara," as large as life, staring me right in the face. I was so astonished for a moment or two I couldn't believe my eyes. What? I in Frank Leslie's, it could not be, it must be some other Clara! But no, there it was, and no mistake, and who but that dear, good, kind Cousin Harry the cause of it, too, for I know he must have said something very nice about me to induce you to compliment a stranger in such a pretty way. Now, didn't he, dear Mr. Leslie? the sly, teasing fellow, and not to give me the least hint about it either.

Well, notwithstanding all the girls could say, I read it over and over, inhaling at the same time the delicious fragrance of a magnificent bouquet of hyacinths, and I could think of nothing more appropriate than a reply suggested by their delicate aroma, mingling with the spicy breath of many other sweet floral beauties, sending up their pure incense-offering on the soft spring breeze to the bright starry heavens, shining so lovingly down on us, as we wended our way to the Concert Hall.

I enjoyed the fine music very much, but all the time the rich harmony was floating around me I was thinking of you, and what I should say to you about my plain little self that you would not laugh at. Now, you must not do that, Cousin Frank (you see I have adopted you already), for I do love cousins—some, of course, in particular; but don't let Cousin Harry see this, for the saucy fellow would be putting on airs directly, and he is vain enough now of all the petting he gets here in the sweet sunny South, I can tell you; I really believe he has bewitched us all here anyhow—everything and everybody loves him and pets him till he is nearly ruined. Why, even the very Fairies themselves are taken on with him; yes, even the Queen herself, and I'm getting "green-eyed" about it, too, and if he don't mind—well, I won't say what terrible thing I might have done, but now I've got a new cousin, so let him look out, that's all.

But, as I was just going to tell you, after I came home I could not rest until I had scribbled off the enclosed lines, as a reply to your pretty "Appeal;" they are not much, but will serve to show you, by the promptness with which I have complied with your request, that I at least appreciate the delicate compliment you have paid me in thus inquiring who I am.

But now I am so weary, I cannot say anything further that will in the least interest you, unless I add, what every one already knows, that Frank Leslie is a decided favorite throughout the length, breadth and depth of the entire South, and we look for his arrival every week with far more anxiety than we do for the proceedings of all Lincoln's Cabinet, for we don't believe it contains either a Solon or a Solomon, to redeem it from the d—downfall of the simple.

Wishing you a kind good-night, success and happiness,

I am truly,
Your Petite Cousine,
Clara.

"Cousin Clara's" Reply to Frank Leslie's "Appeal."

Wind of the Sunny South, hyacinth-laden,
Waft on your balmy wings buoyant and free,
To the cold frigid North—from our rosy-hued Aiden,
A message to gallant Frank Leslie from me.

Tell him, I am not a strong-minded woman,
Nor yet a brunette with a dark flashing eye;
But a pale, little, pensive, hazel-eyed creature,
That can love—if I'm loved again, yes, love till I die.

But tell him alas! I'm no golden-haired beauty,
Tho' a wealth of dark ringlets o'ershadows my brow;
Nor am I a myth, but a nice little armful,
Weighing exactly—one hundred pounds now.

And whisper, sweet zephyr, I am low-voiced, gentle,
Sensitive, loving, fond of innocent mirth;
Yet, a shy little birdie—ever singing and soaring,
Whose delicate foot rarely touches the earth.

Living in dream-land with music and flowers,
Building cloud-palaces up the blue sky,
Roving with angels amid the sweet bowers,
Where friends that I love never leave me or die.

Where the Heavens are glowing with rainbow-hued arches,
Star-jewell'd blossoms, and clear purling streams,
That flow thro' the forests in musical murmurs,
Soothing the soul into mystical dreams.

But haste, gentle breeze, so soft, spicy-pinions,
Press thy warm lip to the cold Northern snows,
Till they melt, as should hearts, in those icy dominions,
And the laurel entwine with our sweet Southern rose.

And now, Cousin Frank, if more you'd be knowing
About such a lone little birdie as I,
Just ask Cousin Hal, when "old Robertson's" flowing,
And I think that he'll tell—with a "drop in his eye."

Reorganization of the Management of the Academy of Music.

"The king never dies"—so says that ancient fiction perpetuating without a moment's lapse the dynasties of the Old World. "Ullman never dies," say the veracious chroniclers who hang round the fashionable locality of Fourteenth street, in expectation of the scraps which fall to their share. Ullman, yesterday crushed up, beaten out, used up and utterly demolished, to-day is on his legs again, plotting, planning, scheming and contriving, master of the position and fully prepared for another campaign. Ullman is like that celebrated snake often scotched but never killed.

When he suddenly and peremptorily closed his operatic season a few months since, it was supposed that his connection with the management of the Academy had ceased for a long period, if not for ever. Indeed, Ullman himself rather favored the impression that he had withdrawn from public life for two or three years at least. The pressure upon the ex-manager was, however, too great for him to withstand, for the Directors of the Academy unanimously voted him the lease of the building, over very flattering offers made to them from other sources. Such a vote was highly complimentary to the intelligence and integrity of Ullman, and proved the entire confidence placed in his abilities. We understand that his lease is based upon terms of extraordinary liberality, rendering it possible, with a good company and ordinary success, to carry out a season to a successful end, and leaving a profit to the management. Under such an arrangement the affairs of the Academy cannot but prosper, and for the first time we may entertain the hope that Italian opera will assume the position of an established fact.

Among other rumors, it is stated that Ullman has entered into a treaty, offensive and defensive, with Max Maretzek, thus uniting the interests of the two great rivals; also, that arrangements have been consummated with Marty of Havana, which will insure extraordinary brilliancy and variety to the operatic campaigns of next season. We look upon this as very good news, and we have no doubt, if the arrangements are carried out in good faith, that the results will be highly satisfactory to all concerned.

Woodworth's Collected Poems.

The collected poems of the author of the "Old Oaken Bucket" will meet with a welcome all over the country, for it is not too much to say that that one poem has made every section of the United States familiar with the name of Woodworth. Its gentle sentiment, the holy home affection which breathes in every line, and the pleasant versification, have rendered the "Old Oaken Bucket" universally popular. The two volumes before us, which have been brought out in beautiful style, blue covers and gold leaves, by Charles Scribner, Grand street, New York, contain a vast number of most charming lyrics on a variety of subjects, together with pungent humorous sketches in the way of medleys and burlesques. The poems are grave and gay, pastoral and sentimental, patriotic and descriptive, and in all is found the evidence of a pure and gentle nature, and a refined and contemplative mind. Our readers will find in these volumes many favorite and valued poems, the authorship of which they were ignorant, from the fact that the popularity of the poet caused his fugitive pieces to be reprinted all over the country, and in most cases the author's name was omitted. We can recommend these attractive volumes very cordially to our readers.

The Household Journal.

We have received the first volume of this clever weekly periodical, bound in elegant style. Its contents are of the most varied character, and are well calculated to obtain a large circulation. It is ably and judiciously edited.

We have also received from the same publishers, Alexander Harthill & Co., the Household Musical Album, a very handsome volume, containing over twenty pieces of music, both vocal and instrumental, beautifully printed on excellent paper. It is a very cheap publication, the separate pieces of music costing hardly four cents each. The price of the volume is one dollar.

Bruno Wollenhaupt's First Grand Concert.

Bruno Wollenhaupt's concert on Saturday evening, the 6th inst., at Irving Hall, was one of the most brilliant and interesting of the season, not only in the contents of its programme, but the execution of the same. The hall was not crowded, although over a thousand people were present, but the audience was fashionable and highly critical, comprising our very best musical amateurs and professors.

The opening piece was Weber's magnificent overture to "Oberon," and we do not award any too much praise when we say we never heard it so finely performed in New York as on this occasion. Every point was brought out with remarkable precision, its exquisite shadings delicately executed, and its grand masses of sound rendered unusually impressive by the just contrasts so rigidly observed. Let Carl Bergmann and the orchestra share the praise which rightly belongs to both.

The second number was Vieuxtemps' magnificent Concerto in E major, with orchestral accompaniments, which introduced Mr. Bruno Wollenhaupt to the public. He was received most enthusiastically; indeed, the welcome was so warm that it seemed to overpower the young artist and to rather unsteady his nerves. He did not quite recover his composure until he had been playing some little time, but as he warmed to his work he regained his steadiness of nerve and was soon absorbed in the grand work which he was interpreting. It was no slight task for one so young to stand up before an audience familiar with the composition through the performance of its author, Vieuxtemps, who is probably the greatest violinist in his peculiar school in the world, and who had the additional advantage of interpreting his own creation. This was no slight task, and to stand the test of comparison was either to fail or to place himself side by side with that great master. Bruno Wollenhaupt was equal to the emergency, and if we missed the cool confidence of the experienced artist, Vieuxtemps, we found the same marvellously perfect technique, with the added charm of fervor and enthusiasm. The vast difficulties of this Concerto were mastered with a fluent ease as surprising as satisfactory; so little apparent was the effort that the uninitiated must have been unconscious how great was the technical achievement they were listening to so delightedly; while those who knew rendered just homage to that genius which had so early mastered an art which is a lifetime study. The mere execution of this great Concerto is not the only praise due to Bruno Wollenhaupt. His broad and grand conception of its character, his refined, intelligent and sympathetic interpretation of its sentiment and design, and his passion and feeling, which gave a life to the whole, are points of artistic excellence which call for special remark and unqualified praise. Clearness, rapidity and brilliancy of execution, purity and breadth of tone, and a certainty in stopping, which does not admit of a shade of variation from the true pitch, are among the distinguishing beauties of Bruno Wollenhaupt's school. His cantabile playing has never been excelled in smoothness, purity and sympathetic tenderness.

For three quarters of an hour he held his audience in rapt admiration by the charm of his playing. After every pause the applause burst forth, and at the close the enthusiasm was unbounded, and did not subside until the young artist re-appeared and acknowledged again the generous and cordial approbation.

His second piece, "Airs Hongroise," by Ernst, quaint and peculiar in its character, and abounding in the most crabbed difficulties, was executed with the like perfection, and drew forth the same enthusiasm and another recall.

But, to our mind, the interpretation was not as successful as that of the previous piece. Ernst has written himself in this, and music was studied less than personal idiosyncrasy. Its interpretation demanded a peculiar and marked mannerism, and a certain degree of charlatanrie or trickery, which could be justified by the idea of the composition, and would not seem a strained rendering by the composer, who would be naturally imbued with the peculiar characteristics of his own quaint creation. These characteristics are of almost impossible attainments by another, for they were rather momentary impulses than written thoughts, and yet without them, the idea seems incomplete, and the spirituelle or weird charm is wanting.

The third piece was an introduction and variation, composed by himself upon the charming Tema, "Les Hirondelles," by Felicien David. In this composition, Bruno Wollenhaupt has revealed some of the best points of his own style. The introduction is thoughtful, graceful and tender, and well constructed in reference to the following Tema. The variations are elegant, ingenious and brilliant, and well calculated to display his perfect and admirable mastery over every difficulty of the instrument, affording, at the same time, a medium for the exhibition of that passionate tenderness and earnest feeling which are the crowning beauties of his performance, and prove how dominant in his nature is his reverence for the esthetic in art. This piece, both in itself and in its execution, was a grand success, and at its close the applause was so enthusiastic that the artist, after bowing his thanks a second time, was compelled to acknowledge the demonstration by playing again, selecting for the encore a very pleasant and difficult arrangement of his own, of "Home, Sweet Home."

It is with sincere pleasure that we chronicle the unqualified success of Bruno Wollenhaupt. He has grown up among us from mere childhood; his genius has developed here, and the honor due to a great talent is reflected back upon our city. Let us foster it, and prove that we are capable of appreciating the highest excellence in executive art, without waiting for European endorsement which has hitherto been the guide to admiration of both our public and our critics.

Mr. Centemeri sang an Italian and a French Aria with much taste and effect. He has a fine voice, and sings with expression and judgment. Mr. Herman A. Wollenhaupt accompanied his brother in the three last pieces most admirably. It is rare to find a first-rate pianist so entirely ignore his own eminence in his desire to give effect to the performance of another. One of Steinway's superb grand pianos supplied the place of the orchestra in those pieces, and filled the large hall with its ample volume of tone.

This admirable concert concluded with Beethoven's Sinfonia No. 2. It was performed with admirable precision and effect; indeed, we have rarely heard it so finely rendered. Bergmann seemed to enter with his whole heart into the spirit and the sentiment of the composition, and his orchestra obeyed every indication of his mind. The symphony was warmly applauded—nearly all the audience remaining until its close.

We understand that Mr. Bruno Wollenhaupt will shortly give another concert.

The Italian Opera.

The associated artists commenced a brief season at the Academy on Monday, the 8th inst. "Un Ballo in Maschera" was the first opera given, and was performed admirably. On Wednesday, the 10th, the "Jewess" was given, Madame Colson appearing for the first time as the Jewess. She achieved a great success. Miss Hinckley as the Princess was also excellent. On Friday evening, Miss Kellogg appeared as Linda, in "Linda di Chamounix," and sustained the excellent impression made by her previous appearance. "Un Ballo" was repeated at the matinée. The company has met with a success altogether unexpected at this time of trouble, when "wars and rumors of wars" pervade the whole country. It is but justice to state that the enterprise of the management and the excellence of the company fully deserve the most liberal patronage of the public. They leave New York next week for Philadelphia.

Concert Performance of Wallace's Opera of Lurline.

The enterprising and flourishing Mendelssohn Society of this city gave a concert-room performance of Wallace's beautiful and successful opera of "Lurline," at the City Assembly Rooms, on the 6th inst. Great care was taken in its production, particularly with the choral department, but the principal performers were by no means equal to the tasks allotted them. In the absence of a theatrical rendering of this work, we should be thankful for a performance which conveys some idea of its grandeur and beauty. Great praise is due to Mr. Morgan and Mr. Berge, for their untiring exertions in bringing "Lurline" before the public.

Madame Bishop's Complimentary Benefit.

This interesting musical affair will positively come off at the Academy of Music, on Friday evening, the 19th inst. She will be ably assisted, and from the interest exhibited in musical circles, we believe that the Academy will be fully and fashionably attended. Madame Bishop deserves a substantial compliment, for no artist has been more faithful in her duties, or more deservedly popular.

Gottschalk's Concerts.

We understand that Gottschalk's delightful Concerts will commence about the 17th of the present month. We expect a great excitement about that time.

HOLLAND LODGE, NO. 8—COMPLIMENT TO R. W. JOHN J. CRANE.

Holland Lodge, No. 8, on Tuesday evening last, paid a well-deserved tribute to their late Master, Dr. John J. Crane, who we trust will hereafter serve the Fraternity in a wider sphere of usefulness.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

To the W. M. and Brethren of Holland Lodge, No. 8.

The Committee appointed at a Special Communication held on the 30th of March, 1861, "to present resolutions at the next regular Communication expressive of the sentiments of this Lodge towards its late Master, R. W. J. J. Crane, and of its appreciation of his services as Master thereof, and as a member of the Masonic Fraternity,"

Respectfully Report,

That your Committee, with unfeigned pleasure, discharged the agreeable duty confided to it by presenting the following resolutions:

Resolved, That during the seven years of R. W. Brother Crane's Mastership of this Lodge, he has ever proved himself its firm supporter and steadfast friend; and that it gladly avails itself of this occasion to acknowledge that to his counsels, exertions and unswerving fidelity it is chiefly indebted for its present prosperity and position.

Resolved, That the declination of our late Master to accept a renomination at the last December election was received by this Lodge with sincere regret; but that—while deeply sensible of the loss which it sustained in being deprived of a presiding officer so eminently qualified, and possessing so fully the confidence and personal attachment of the members—they could not fail to recognize, in the reasons which he assigned for declining, the sound judgment, disinterestedness and solicitude for the welfare of the Lodge which have characterized his course as its chief officer.

Resolved, That the great ability displayed by our late Master in performing the work; his regular attendance at our Communications; his uniform firmness, with moderation, in exercising the high prerogatives of his office—"ruling his Brethren with love rather than force, cultivating a spirit of conciliation among them; subduing, by mildness and urbanity, the irritations which too often arise in debate; seeking rather to establish the correctness of his judgment by the persuasions of reason than by the force of authority," his faithful care for the important interests of the Lodge and of the institution, and his eminent, moral, intellectual and social qualities have won for him the admiration, esteem and affection of the members of this Lodge.

Resolved, That the devotion of our late Master to the best interests of the Fraternity at large, his zeal in the performance of his Masonic duties, and his efficient services in the advancement of the objects of the institution, have distinguished him as one of the most valuable of its members, and rendered him worthy of its highest honors.

Resolved, That the Master of this Lodge be, and he hereby is, empowered to procure a suitable Testimonial, to be presented to R. W. Brother J. J. Crane, together with a copy of these resolutions.

JOTHAM POST,
CHAS. A. RAPALLO, } Special Committee.
CHARLES D. MEAD,

The Master of Holland Lodge, W. Joseph N. Balestier, addressed Brother Crane in the warmest and most flattering terms, and especially urged that the Fraternity should be allowed to avail themselves of the services of Brother Crane in a more exalted position. The worthy recipient of this ovation replied in a few eloquent and feeling remarks, and all the Brethren present joined in demonstrations of affectionate respect.

The elections for municipal officers in the cities of Hudson, Hoboken and Jersey City passed over very quietly. Edward T. Carpenter was elected Mayor of Hudson City, Mr. Van Voorst for Jersey City and John R Johnson for Hoboken. They are all good men. At the last minute John Kennelly was substituted for Harrison, who was on the ticket for City Clerk, and elected without any trouble. Dr. Elder was re-elected Superintendent of the Public Schools, a position where he has given great satisfaction. It is well known that had he chosen he could have been nominated for Mayor.

Mr. John S. Allen has been appointed Postmaster of Williamsburg, L. I. It is worth $2,000 a year.

THE DAHLGREN HOWITZER.

During the Mexican war the want of a suitable armament for boat service was severely felt, for on the vast sea coast of an enemy's country, that enemy having no navy, there was not much for our ships to do, but in shallow water or on the land. For these operations boats of light draught were needed, and with them guns combining the greatest possible power with the least possible weight. This happy combination has been achieved by Captain J. A. Dahlgren in his ship or boat howitzer, which is now generally adopted in the American navy.

After the Mexican war, Captain Dahlgren, being in charge of the ordnance duty at the Washington Navy Yard, proposed to the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance a system of armament for boats. His plan was approved of, and in 1849 he furnished howitzers to the United States ship John Adams, then fitting out for the coast of Africa. The Dahlgren howitzers are of three classes, viz: the twenty-four pounder, weighing about one thousand three hundred pounds, adapted for the launch of a seventy-four gun ship; the twelve-pounder, weighing seven hundred and fifty pounds, designed for a frigate's launch; and the twelve-pounder, weighing four hundred and thirty pounds, adapted for the launch of a sloop of war. In their design the utmost simplicity of figure has been chosen, and all ornament avoided. Around the charge the bronze is distributed in the form of a cylinder, extending sufficiently in front of the seat of the projectile, thence to the muzzle it is continued as a truncated cone. The breechplate is a portion of a sphere. The bore is terminated by a conical chamber, which affords the greatest facility for rapid loading, without incurring the least chance of the charge being detained when sent home by the rammer. The howitzer is mounted by a loop similar to that of a carronade. The elevation is performed by a screw passing through the cascabel knob, worked by a light disc attached just below the thread of the screw. Its edge is coarsely milled, so as to afford a firm touch to the hands. The lock is a plain hammer, perforated at the head, so as to permit free egress to the blast from the vent. A round tangent sight is made to move in a perforation drilled in the rear of the base ring. The projectiles used in howitzers are shells and canister, to which is now added shrapnels.

When it is necessary to land men and howitzers for operation on shore, the guns are attached to light but strong carriages, such as are shown in our illustration. The field carriage is of wrought iron, of the lightest possible weight. The trail has a small wheel or runner, to ease it over any obstacle. Its entire weight does not exceed five hundred pounds. The parts of the carriage are fastened together by screwnuts, and can be taken apart and put together with the greatest rapidity.

These Dahlgren howitzers can be readily manœuvred by the ordinary launches' crews, and may now be deemed a most effective and efficient arm of the naval service.

Captain John A. Dahlgren was born in Pennsylvania. He entered the service on the 1st of February, 1826, and his present commission bears the date of 1855. He is at present retained on special ordnance duty.

THE DAHLGREN BOAT HOWITZER GUN, DESIGNED BY CAPT. DAHLGREN, AND NOW IN GENERAL USE IN THE AMERICAN NAVY.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL PETER G. T. BEAUREGARD,

Commandant of the Forts and Troops at Charleston, S. C.

The present Commandant of the forts and troops in Charleston, South Carolina, Brigadier-General Peter G. T. Beauregard, was appointed by the Southern Congress to that important post the latter end of February, and entered upon the duties of his commission on the 4th of March. He is a native of Louisiana, and was, until recent events induced him to resign his commission, high in the corps of engineers of the United States Army.

General Beauregard was esteemed highly, not only as a man, but as an able engineer, and as a masterly strategist and tactician. He has seen considerable service, and was promoted for his gallant conduct and the ability he displayed during the Mexican war. His appointment as Commandant at Charleston has given immense satisfaction to the Confederacy, and has inspired the troops in and around Charleston with renewed spirit. Since his arrival the works of offence and defence have been prosecuted with extraordinary activity, and reliable authorities pronounce Charleston, in its present state, almost impregnable.

General Beauregard is brother-in-law to ex-Senator Slidell, of Louisiana.

M. DU CHAILLU,

African Traveller.

At a meeting of the members of the Royal Institution and their friends (including a large number of distinguished persons) expressly assembled for the purpose (Sir Roderick I. Murchison in the chair), M. Du Chaillu gave an account of his travels in the interior of Western Africa, comprising an extent of about four hundred miles, from 2 deg. N. to 2 deg. S. He started from the mouth of the Gaboon River, and made five distinct journeys into the interior, in the course of three years (1855-9), during which he studied the physical features of the country and the manners of the inhabitants. Amid the beautiful tropical vegetation dwell ferocious beasts and no less fierce human beings. The further inward he went the more intelligent he found the people. The cloth woven of grass was finer, and their pottery and weapons of war better made. Some are cannibals of the very worst kind. Natural death they do not appear to believe in. When they see it drawing near, they kill the sick and aged; and when a person dies, another, to whom they attribute the cause of death, must be killed. No persons but kings and others of high rank are buried; the corpses are eaten, human flesh being sold in the shambles. Among one tribe, M. Du Chaillu was honored as a king and worshipped as a spirit. The people believed that the cloth, &c., he gave them were made by him in the night, and that his clock and musical box were devils. M. Du Chaillu gave also a particular account of the gorilla apes, which, in some parts of their structure, approach nearer to men than any other animal. He had met many in the forest regions on the banks of the Mani River and between the Gaboon and Cape Lopez. The strongly-marked features and large, deep sunken eyeballs, especially in the males, give them an appearance of the most intense ferocity. The traveller's description of his first encounter with this monster, before whom all the beasts fly, was very remarkable. It occurred in the midst of a gloomy forest. The monster came on slowly to the attack, beating his huge brawny chest, displaying his enormously strong teeth, and uttering a terrific roar. "Now," said the traveller to himself, "if you wish to see your friends again you will take good aim." He did so, and the monster fell. Afterwards he killed twenty gorillas. One of his companions unfortunately missed his aim, and was torn to pieces by a gorilla, who even crushed his gun with his powerful tusks. The gorilla is untameable, M. Du Chaillu having tried in vain to domesticate a young one. The gorilla does not, as has been said, erect a shelter for itself. At night the female ascends a tree and the male rests below. These animals resemble men in living in some way in the family state. Their scanty means of support (they being vegetarians, living mostly on berries) will ever prevent their being very numerous. In the stomach of a very aged one, whose teeth were worn out, nothing was found but leaves. Several specimens of the gorilla, and drawings and maps illustrated M. Du Chaillu's most interesting narrative. His book, now in the press, will be anxiously looked for.

CAPT. JOHN A. DAHLGREN, INVENTOR OF THE DAHLGREN GUN.

The Law of Evidence.—Hon. Randall Bunt, an eminent lawyer of Louisiana, has introduced into the Legislature of that State an act removing the common law disability as witnesses of parties previously convicted of crime, or interested in the issue before any court. Husbands and wives of the parties are also rendered competent and compellable witnesses to testify on behalf of any party to the suit or other proceedings. Neither husbands or wives can, however, be required to give evidence for or against each other in any criminal proceeding. Neither husband or wife are rendered competent or compellable by the act to disclose any communication made by one to the other during marriage.

The French Mode of Grafting.—The French are practising a new method of grafting, a knowledge of which may prove valuable to American horticulturists, inasmuch as it can be performed at any season of the year, when the sound matured buds can be had, whether the sap is in a flowing state or not. It is performed by removing a small piece of bark and wood, leaving a smooth and flat surface, to which a similar piece containing the bud, which is to form the future tree, is fitted, which is sealed over immediately with collodion. This forms a strong impervious cuticle, which secures a free circulation of the sap on the approach of warm weather, and a perfect union of the parts.

THE IRON SAFE;

OR,

THE DOUBLE MURDER.

Those of my readers who are familiar with the old thoroughfares and old world squares of ancient London, well know that there is a legal precinct called Barnard's Inn. It is one of those old, mean-looky, dingy-looking castle-like homes that look as if placed under some social ban, and only supposed to exist as a contrast to brighter and more cheerful scenes.

These places are the deep shadows of great cities, which serve to throw up the more prominent lights with greater brilliancy.

This Barnard's Inn (who was Barnard? Alas! even local history seems silent regarding the name of the founder of this place) has become a mere mysterious lounging and wandering-ground, with look and feel like the internal economy of some Arabian Castella, Holborn with Peter lane. As to name and locality, it is strictly legal. That is to say, it is the chief resort of lawyers—quirks, attorney.

The houses are old, dark, dingy and depressing. They might be likened to some good old patrician old spider's web, stretched out in the dingy, dark corners with cursory filé—likely; and which web, as aforesaid, had borne the brunt of so many winters, that it had thickened and blackened into something wonderfully dull and dusty.

In one of the holes and corners, then, of the legal web dwelt the firm of Merks & Gaddo, solicitors.

They were old men, both Merks and Gaddo; but Gaddo was one of those old men who, after a certain period, get young again in activity, in restlessness and in some strange idea that they have the world all before them, and that they have only to make the best of it for a time in order to enjoy years and years of luxury and felicity.

Gaddo wanted to do that with some one else's money, for the very efficient and particular reason that he had none of his own.

Merks, the senior partner, was rapidly sinking into the vale of years; he was what may be called a "genteel weather." That is to say, there was a time when he had resided in a more fashionable place than Barnard's Inn, and where he had had good clients, who were well worth having—gentlemen with estates and rents; but Merks had met with reverses, and had decayed and declined down to Barnard's Inn and a partnership with Gaddo.

The basis of their partnership was the restitution by Merks of one lucrative agency.

There was a gentleman—a baronet, named Sir Winton Wells—who was the owner of several manors, and who derived some considerable income from "royalties," as they are called, from mines; that is to say, the share of the profits of the mine which the owner of the soil in which it is excavated reserves to himself to the shape of a rent from the adventurers who seek the mineral wealth of the land.

Then Sir Winton Wells had shares and rents from other sources, and he had some foreign property somewhere in a district of Spain; and, in short, Sir Winton Wells was an investors thousands a year, which the baronet's income came to, had to be collected from complicated sources.

The agency for this estate, then, and the collection of the rents, royalties, dividends, &c., was retained by old Merks, to the lasting, merit of his once prosperous and respectable business.

And as he went into partnership with Gaddo, in Barnard's Inn.

And, from the moment that he did so, Gaddo wanted the Winton Wells agency, as it was familiarly called in the office, for himself, and probably something more than the mere agency.

It was on a very sweet spring morning, when the bright sunshine almost made its way down the narrow opening from Holborn, into Barnard's Inn, that a somewhat heavy and antiquated coach stopped at that entrance.

From this coach there alighted an old gentleman with remarkably white hair.

The gentleman descended a young gentleman with a very handsome countenance, and particularly fine and sparkling spirit and intelligence—and so, indeed, did the old gentleman with the white hair—he towards the carriage, and they both said at once, "Dear May, we won't be long."

Then a young lady, with such a charming, piquant countenance, that if she had but once gone into Barnard's Inn the sunshine of her presence would have lingered there for years, and it would scarcely ever have looked so gloomy again, looked out of the old coach, and, with a smile, that was the very rose of sweet face at once, replied, "I will not be impatient, dear papa and Mr. Ross you, my darling!" said the old man.

Yes!" said the young gentleman; "and he said that you" in such a peculiar manner, that the young lady surely understood that he meant to say "Bless you, my darling!" and that he might understand it specifically from no more proper moment.

There, now!" cried the young lady, "you foolish Frank! You needn't look over the window.

Frank Wells—for that was the name of this vivacious-looking young gentleman—looked back, and then giving his arm to the old gentleman with the white hair, he escorted him along the narrow, dark entrance to Barnard's Inn.

Now, this old gentleman with the white hair was no other than Sir Winton Wells, the baronet, and the father of the young lady, the decayed solicitor, and the heats of the partnership with Gaddo.

The young gentleman with the fine eyes was his nephew, Frank Wells, the only son of the baronet's brother, and an orphan.

The young lady with the sweet sunny countenance was May Livesington, and the niece of the baronet, being the only child of his only sister, who was also an orphan.

In fit, then, to be wondered at that May had a high appreciation of the fine eyes of Frank, and that Frank thought that in all the world there was no one to compare with his dear cousin May!

The old baronet loved them both as though they had been dear children of his own; and it was no secret to any one, who chose to come at the fact, that they were his heirs, and that he looked forward to their union and their happiness as the solace and delight of his old age.

GENERAL P. G. T. BEAUREGARD, COMMANDANT OF THE FORTS AND TROOPS IN CHARLESTON, S. C.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY QUINBY, CHARLESTON.

"Frank, my dear boy," said Sir Winton Wells, as they made their way towards the dingy chamber in the gloomy line, occupied by Merks and Gaddo—"Frank, my dear boy, I have one May gets more beautiful and more dear every day."

"I am sure she does, sir!"

"Ah, I thought I was right. She is the dearest, best—"

"Most beautiful!" added Frank.

"Gentlest!" said the old man.

"Affectionate!" added Frank.

"Kind, good—"

"Angel—"

"Yes, yes, Frank! Angel, God knows she has been to me, since the very day that she and her set foot in old Winton Manor. God bless her!"

"Amen to that prayer, uncle!" said Frank.

"She is seventeen years and nine months and two weeks old, Frank."

"And four days," added Frank.

"Ah, yes, and when she is eighteen I hope to see you and her happy—very happy, Frank!"

"Dear uncle, I sometimes wonder," said Frank—and as he spoke Gaddo was positively servile in the attention he paid to the baronet.

Merks was quiet, and much more gentlemanlike.

The one clerk that the firm kept, and who was supposed to be some connection of Gaddo, although he denied it entirely, took up his station at the keyhole of the private room.

This clerk was named Dunby. He was about eighteen years of age, and was tall and slim. The other clerks in Barnard's Inn would have it that he came from the workhouse, and that for the first week he had appeared in leather smalls, and a pepper and salt colored coat, with "No. 14" on a leaden badge sewed to the breast of it.

But be this as it may, Dunby was now attired in a suit of the most faded and shabby black that was ever seen on mortal form.

It was evident, though, that Dunby was of a speculative turn of mind, or he would not have listened at the keyhole of the door of the private room of the firm.

"Yes, yes," said Sir Winton Wells, "I have come to consult you about business matters that you can handle best."

Mr. Merks exhibited one hand over the other in a feeble sort of way. Gaddo threw himself back in a theatrical attitude, and looking, as he cried,

"I am sure, my dear sir, the best, the very best attention we can give to your affairs is but a poor return for the confidence you are so good as to place in me. Hem! A confidence, you will most certainly is not misplaced. Hem!"

"The 'Welsh Fortune Mining Company,'" added Sir Winton Wells, "who have been paying me a considerable royalty on that mine for some years, now write to me, to offer me twenty-eight thousand pounds for my entire interest in the mine."

Gaddo gave a slight start.

Merks looked quite pluséd.

"My own impression," added the old baronet, "is to effect the arrangement, which I think a good one for them as well as for me; otherwise I certainly should not accede to it."

"Hem!" said Mr. Gaddo. "How charming it is, in these greedy, selfish times, to find any one so full of what shall I say?—generosity. I assure you, Sir Winton, that it is entirely upon such principles as you have now annotated that we conduct our business."

"I am glad to hear it."

Mr. Merks now made clear figures on a piece of paper, and then he said,

"Well, Sir Winton, I am of opinion that this side of your right in the mine will be decidedly advantageous."

"Then it can be done at once. They will receive a note from me which will put them into communication with you at once; and as they are ready with the money, why the matter can be settled without further delay."

The baronet rose now to go, and so did young Frank Wells; but Mr. Gaddy, in a most insinuating tone, said,

"Perhaps, my dear sir, if you were to write the necessary note accepting the proposal now it might save some time."

"Very well, I will."

The old baronet wrote a brief note to the secretary of the mine, stating that he accepted the offer of twenty-eight thousand pounds, and left the matters in the hands of his solicitors, Messrs. Merks and Gaddo, to settle and conclude.

"Hem!" said Gaddo. "How, young gentleman, if you will be so good as be the witness."

"The what!" said Frank, to whom these words were addressed.

"The witness to your uncle's signature, if you please."

Frank hesitated.

"Surely!" said Sir Winton Wells, "no witness is wanted to my signature to a letter."

"Certainly not," said Merks.

"Yes, yes," cried Gaddo, jumping the pen over his head—"yes, my dear sir—and you, my dear Merks—I assure you, by the recent Act, entitled 'An Act to Amend an Amended Act, entitled An Act—'"

"Well, well," said Frank, "I will if you think proper, uncle."

"Why, Mr. Gaddo says it is necessary."

"Oh, quite! quite! The Act—"

Frank had such a horror of hearing anything further about the Act to amend the Act, that he at once signed the letter as a witness to his uncle's signature.

Mr. Merks had a puzzled, confounded look upon his face; and when the baronet and his nephew had gone, and stepped into the coach, where that dear good May was waiting for him, and driven away, he said, "Gaddo, I really cannot make out what you could that young man's signature to the letter for. Surely, my opinion was wanted."

"Yes, yes; I read the Act so."

"What Act?"

"Oh, the Act upon the subject of contracts, you know, Merks. We cannot be too particular about such matters now-a-days."

"Very true."

"Hem! Mr. Merks, would it be convenient to you, say to-morrow evening, to come here at an hour and look over some papers which have been promised me in an old cause, now in the Rolls Court?"

"Oh, yes; surely, surely!"

"About nine o'clock?"

"To be sure—to be sure. I will make the necessary arrangements. Good morning, to-morrow evening. That will be Thursday."

"Yes, Thursday."

"Dear me, Mr. Gaddo, what is the matter?"

Dunby had had his ear to the door, and he thus which he usually left the chamber had come; but he chanced to look in the face of his partner, and there he saw such an expression as he had never seen before. It was perfectly horrible!

"The matter! the matter? Oh, nothing! I—that is—at the moment, I did not feel quite well, but it is all right now—all right now. To-morrow evening, at nine o'clock. Good day! Good day!"

Mr. Merks very much wondering what was the matter with his partner, left the chambers, and Gaddo, the moment he heard his step at the keyhole of the private room again, but Gaddo was rather a proficient in such things, had become a client, and he had listened at keyhole, so he fully expected Dunby to do so.

Shaking about the room as if with no very definite purpose, Gaddo armed himself with a long ruler, and then as he passed the door, he suddenly flung it open, and dealt Danby, before he could get away, such a terrific crack on the head, that certainly had it not been of more than ordinary thickness, it must have been broken there and then.

"That will teach you to be prying and listening," said Gadds, with a ferocious look.

He then took his hat, and left the room and the chambers.

Danby howled and swore, but he had no other resources, and, rubbing his head violently, he was compelled to put up with the blow he had received, as one incident in his pursuit of knowledge which could not be avoided.

In order, now, that my readers may comprehend the nature of the "case" to which I have been enabled, from subsequent information, to append this little introduction, I must produce a letter that was received by a firm of stockbrokers in the city, on the afternoon of Thursday:

"Gentlemen:—Will you kindly drop a note into the 'To be called for' box, at the General Post Office, informing me whether I, as a minor, for I am not yet quite twenty-one years of age, can invest money—say about twenty-eight thousand pounds, so as to receive the proceeds of it, and have control over it while I may be abroad. I am, gentlemen, yours obediently, Frank Wells."

This letter was not answered by the respectable firm to which it was addressed, but they kept it, as was their custom to do with all letters on business.

On the Thursday evening that Mr. Gadds had appointed to meet his partner, Merks, to look over some papers, Mr. Merks made his way from his private house in Plumtree street, Holborn, to the chambers in the Inn.

His family, consisting of a wife and a daughter, who was a person of middle age, waited in vain for his return. He never crossed in life the threshold of his home again.

It was early on the Friday morning then, that both the wife and daughter of Merks went to Barnard's Inn, and saw Mr. Gadds.

"Good heaven!" he said, when they were shown into his private room. "What has happened?"

"Alas, sir, we want to know what has happened," said the daughter, "for my father has never come home since he left us, about twenty minutes before nine yesterday morning!"

"Never—come—home?" gasped Gadds.

The two tearful and terrified females shook their heads.

"Good gracious! I was afraid, when I saw you both, that something sorrowful had happened to my old friend and partner. He left here at a quarter past ten precisely, but he seemed sad in his manner, I thought."

The wife and daughter burst into tears, and sobbed to a good extent in the old chambers; and then Gadds advised them to apply to the constabulary, and away they went.

What else could they do?

"Danby," cried Mr. Gadds, "copy this letter and send it off at once by the twopenny post."

"Yes, sir."

The letter was as follows:

"Barnard's Inn.

"Sir—Most respectfully I beg to inform you that I have seen the man of business of the Wheal Fortune Mining Company, and all will be ready on Saturday at twelve o'clock, when the parties will attend here to sign and pay over the amount for purchase of your right in aforesaid mine. Your kind attendance will be esteemed a favor by Sir, your most obedient servant,

"Samson Gadds,

"For Merks & Gadds, Solicitors.

"Sir Winton Wells, Bart."

It is Saturday morning, it wants about ten minutes to twelve o'clock, and once again there stands the old family coach which we have seen on the same spot once before.

Again the old gentleman with remarkably white hair gets out of it.

Again alights the young gentleman with the fine eyes, and again you may see the fair, sweet face of May Leesington at the window of the vehicle.

"My dear child," said the old baronet, "I am afraid I shall keep you waiting a long time."

How terribly true those words were!

"Oh, don't mind me, dear uncle," said May; "I have brought a book with me, and I am not at all cold."

"God bless you, dear."

There was something in the tone in which the old baronet pronounced those words that made May look after him and her handsome cousin with some anxiety of expression, which she could not define to herself.

She called to her uncle just as he was about to enter the narrow archway that leads to Barnard's Inn; and it was very strange that before he could possibly have heard what she said, or that she said anything he turned and came back to the coach.

"Dear," he said, "I don't know why, but something has induced me to come back to you, and say good-bye!"

"Oh, no, no! Uncle, uncle!"

"Well, my child, I don't believe in what are called presentiments, and all that kind of thing, but I never like to disregard powerful and sudden impulses. Bless you, then, again, my dear May!"

The young girl burst into tears, and detaining her uncle's hand for a moment, she pressed it to her lips.

"Frank! Frank!" she said, "I want to speak to you."

"What is it, dear."

Frank bent down his head to the coach window.

"Take care of our dear uncle."

"Oh, trust me, May, for that," replied the young man. "What harm can come to him?"

"None—none with you."

"Come, Frank," said the baronet, "it has struck twelve o'clock. Come now!"

In a few moments they were in the chambers of Messrs. Merks & Gadds.

Mr. Gadds was alone with a gentlemanly-looking man in black and his clerk. This was the man of business of the Wheal Fortune Mine, and upon being introduced to Sir Winton Wells, he said,

"Sir, the deed is all ready, and has been approved by your solicitor. Upon your signature to it, I have here a cheque for twenty-eight thousand pounds to pay over to you."

"Very well, sir. Where is Mr. Merks, Mr. Gadds?"

"Really, Sir Winton, I don't know. He has not been to the office since Thursday night."

"Indeed!"

"No, Sir Winton. I begin, and so do his family, to think that some accident must have happened to him."

The baronet looked shocked and distressed. But he had come on business, and he was taking up other people's time; so the deed was signed, and the cheque for the twenty-eight thousand pounds was handed to Sir Winton Wells.

"Shall I pay it into Coutts's for you, Sir Winton?" asked Mr. Gadds.

"No, thank you. I am going there on other business, and can pay it in at the same time."

"Well," said the man of business of the Wheal Fortune Mining Company, as he rose and took his hat from a side table, "I wonder this old inn is not pulled down. The drainage must be very deficient, for there is at times a most intolerable odor in your chambers, Mr. Gadds."

Gadds's countenance turned perfectly yellow, and for a moment or two he could not speak a word. Then he gave a strange, hideous sort of laugh, and the man of business of the Wheal Fortune Mining Company seemed glad to get away, and to take his deed with him.

Gadds then turned to Sir Winton Wells and said, in as composed tones as he could, "My dear sir, I have some few other communications to make to you about Mr. Merks, if you will spare me a few minutes."

"Oh, yes, yes, certainly! Frank, go to the carriage and stay with May."

"Yes, uncle."

There was no one in the outer office, and Frank had to let himself out. He found May in tears—why or wherefore she did not know; but he strove to comfort her, and said she was getting a foolish girl; and then May laughed, and half an hour passed easily away.

Sir Winton Wells did not come.

Then Frank began to get uneasy.

"I will go back and see for him," he said. "What can possibly detain him?"

Frank ran from the coach into Barnard's Inn, and tapped at the chamber door of Merks and Gadds.

The door was opened by Danby, the clerk.

"Is my uncle here?"

"Don't know, sir—but I will ask Mr. Gadds."

"Do—do!"

It seemed a horrible formality, the slow knocking of the clerk against the door of the private room of "the firm."

"Come in!" said a voice from inside.

"Mr. Frank Wells, sir."

"Show him in."

Frank darted into the room.

Mr. Gadds was seated at his own particular table, with a pen in his mouth, and a large deed open before him. He looked up at Frank with that pre-occupied, vacant sort of expression, which a man who is interrupted in some important business may wear to one who intrudes upon him.

"Sir, my uncle——" said Frank.

"Eh?"

"Sir Winton."

Frank's eyes were cast hurriedly around the room. No one was there but Mr. Gadds.

"Sir, where is my uncle?"

"Oh, he left here some time ago. I should say he has been gone"—Mr. Gadds placed a strange and marked emphasis on the word "gone"—"I should say he has been gone about half an hour."

"Half an hour!"

"Yes, just about."

"But—but he has not come to the carriage. We—that is, I and my cousin—have been waiting for him for full that time."

Mr. Gadds looked calmly in the excited face of the young man, and still kept the pen in his mouth. No doubt it helped him to keep his features composed.

"Not come to the carriage?" he said.

"No."

"Perhaps the business at the bottom of Water lane has detained him."

"The what?"

"The call he had to make at the bottom of Water lane, by Blackfriars. He said he was going there, and no doubt left the inn by the Fetter lane gate."

"Impossible!"

"Ah!"

Mr. Gadds began to read the deed again.

"Sir," cried Frank, "which is the way to Water lane? I will go there. I will go and look for my uncle."

"First turning to left—first to right. Then ask your way, after you get over Fleet street."

Frank dashed out of the chambers, and, with a most undefined notion of what he was about to do, ran all the way into Fleet street, and then found his way to Water lane. In fact, he was absent from May and the carriage, doing no good at all, for full half an hour longer.

During that time a figure, wrapped in a great coat, had come out, at a quick pace, from the Holborn entrance to Barnard's Inn, and had jumped into a hackney-coach, which was on the stand close at hand.

"Bank!" said this man. "Double fare, if you are quick!"

The coachman made the best of his way, and the vehicle drew up at the Bank of England.

Then the muffled-up man who was in the coach beckoned to one of the ticket-porters who are always thereabout, and handed to him a cheque.

"My name is Wells," he said. "Get me notes for that."

"Yes, sir."

The transaction did not take long in carrying out, and Mr. Gadds, for it was he, got possession of notes for the twenty-eight thousand pounds. The next step was to go to the bullion office and change them for gold, which he took away in bags, giving the name of John Smith to the cashier.

Mr. Gadds then drove to an obscure house in St. George's Fields, and opened the door with a key he had in his pocket. He was in that house, to which he removed the gold, about a quarter of an hour. Then he came out and ordered that he should be driven to Holborn Bridge.

He had been absent from the chambers about one hour and a half.

When he reached the entrance to Barnard's Inn from Holborn, the coach of Sir Winton Wells was gone.

Danby was catching flies in the outer office.

"Anybody here?" said Gadds.

"No."

Bang! came a knock at that moment at the outer door, which Gadds had only just closed behind him.

Gadds turned pale. Then he peeped through the letter-box, and turned paler still. The man who had executed that bang at the door was an unmistakable Bow street officer.

Gadds turned still paler, and then he took hold of Danby by the collar, and whispered to him,

"You saw Frank Wells go out of these chambers, arm-in-arm with his uncle, about half-past twelve or a quarter to one."

"No, I didn't."

"Yes, you did!"

Mr Gadds placed about ten guineas in the palm of Danby's right hand.

"Now, you did?"

"Of course I did!"

Bang! came the knock at the door again. It was a business-like bang; not at all impatient.

"Open the door, and show him in."

Mr. Gadds retreated to his private room; he put the pen across his mouth, and opened the deed.

"Mr. Brand!" announced Danby.

"Eh? Brand—eh? Well, sir?"

"Your name is Gadds?"

"It is."

"Pray, sir, at what time did Sir Winton Wells leave these chambers this morning?"

"Sir Winton Wells? Oh, to be sure he was here! Danby!"

"Yes, sir."

The clerk popped his head into the room.

"At what time did Sir Winton Wells leave?"

"About twenty minutes to one, sir, along with Mr. Frank Wells."

"No!" said Brand.

"Eh?"

"There is no occasion to conceal that I am a police officer. Application has been made to the sitting magistrate at Bow street, about the disappearance of Sir Winton Wells. A Mr. Frank Wells and Miss May Lessington made the application, and nothing was said about Mr. Frank Wells going out with the old gentleman."

Mr. Gadds put on an odd, inquiring look, and shook his head.

"Then you know nothing further about it?" added the officer.

"Nothing; but that there was some slight dispute between the uncle and nephew."

"Ah! what was that?"

"Let me see! Oh, yes! Was it not, Danby, that the young gentleman wanted to take the cheque, and the old gentleman would not let him!"

"Yes, sir; that was it."

"You will swear to that?" asked Brand.

"O, dear, yes!"

"Then the case assumes a very different complexion. Good-day, sir. You will hear more of it."

In about an hour from that time Mr. Gadds was politely sent for to Bow street; and when there, he found that Frank Wells was charged with the murder of his uncle, Sir Winton Wells.

Mr. Gadds took Danby with him, and on the road he said to Danby, "I never left the chambers after Sir Winton Wells came at twelve o'clock till now."

"Yes, you did," said Danby.

"No, I didn't!" added Mr. Gadds, as he placed now quite a handful of gold in the ready open palm of the clerk.

"No more you didn't!" said Danby.

The case against poor Frank was just this:

He had, according to the testimony of Mr. Gadds, and Danby, left the chambers in Barnard's Inn with his uncle at a quarter to one, and then came back some time after, pretending to ask for him.

The baronet was missing. Where was he? That was the question.

Frank indignantly denied that he had seen his uncle after he had left him to have some private conversation with Mr. Gadds about Mr. Merks.

Mr. Gadds totally denied that he ever asked for, or wanted, such private conversation; and at all events, so far as the evidence went, it appeared to the magistrate that Frank Wells was the last person in the company of Sir Winton, so he remanded him for a week.

At the end of that week there was a great crowd and commotion in Bow street, and the evidence against Frank was much more conclusive than before.

The stockbroker's firm in the city, owing to the publicity that had been given to the case in the newspapers, produced the letter which they had received, signed Frank Wells, and which we have already given in extenso

The ticket porter at the Bank of England, as people will often do, from a sort of wish to get the popularity of supplying a link of evidence, swore that to the best of his belief the person who had brought the cheque for twenty-eight thousand pounds to be cashed was like the prisoner.

At the bullion office, all recollection of what sort of person had taken gold for notes to that amount had passed away.

The magistrate gravely asked Frank if he had anything to say why he should not be committed for trial?

"I am innocent," he said. "God knows it, although man may never know it. Would I have come here at once to put the police in motion upon the subject if I had been guilty?"

"Artifices of that sort, I am sorry to say," said the magistrate, "are common enough. The body of the murdered baronet has not been found. It is not for me to throw out suggestions, but I should point to the river Thames as the probable depository of it. At all events, my duty is quite clear before me, which is to commit the prisoner for trial."

I was but young at the bar then, but I was retained for the defence; and, owing to the indisposition of my leader, a good deal of the burden of the case was cast upon me.

It was Mr. Best, afterwards one of the ornaments of the bench, who conducted the case for the Crown, which prosecuted, and his statement of facts was terribly damaging to Frank Wells.

"My lord, and gentlemen of the jury," he said, "the evidence as against this young man lies in a narrow compass, but it is terribly conclusive. Some days before the 2d of May, the respectable firm of Adkins & Brown, stockbrokers, received this letter. (Here the letter was read.) On the 2d of May the prisoner at the bar accompanied his uncle, Sir Winton Wells, to his solicitors, Messrs. Merks & Gadds, in Barnard's Inn. There a cheque for twenty-eight thousand pounds was paid to Sir Winton Wells, and the prisoner at the bar had a dispute with his uncle, because there and then he wished to take possession of it. They then left together; but Miss May Lessington, who was in the carriage at the Holborn entrance to the inn, did not see them come out that way. The prisoner, however, came alone after a time, and then, with a consummate art that makes one shudder at human depravity, he pretended to be anxious about his uncle, and said he would go to the chambers of Messrs. Merks & Gadds, affecting to see if he was there. But Mr. Gadds will depose that he did not come at all. Then, it appears, he was absent from the carriage for nearly another hour. Where was he, gentlemen of the jury? Why, changing the cheque for the twenty-eight thousand pounds in the city—that cheque which he must have taken from his uncle, dead or alive."

The first witness was the stockbroker, who had received the letter in the city. He produced that letter, and several people swore to it being in the writing, particularly the signature, of the prisoner.

Then Mr. Gadds gave his evidence. He deposed to the pretended facts known to the reader; and I rose, I must confess, somewhat hopelessly, to cross-examine him.

"Who was present when you say that the prisoner wanted to get the cheque?"

"I was."

"Any one else?"

"Yes; my clerk, Danby."

I saw that Gadds glanced round the court to see if Danby was there, and I cried out,

"My lord, will your lordship order the witness Danby out of court?"

"He is out of court," said an officer.

"Now, sir, did you not tell Sir Winton Wells that you had something of a private nature to say to him; upon which, did he not send his nephew away to the carriage?"

"Certainly not!"

"Did not the prisoner at the bar come back in half an hour, and ask for his uncle?"

"Certainly not."

"Did you not yourself hire a hackney carriage at the stand in Holborn at about a quarter to one o'clock?"

"Oh, dear, no!"

"Very well; we will see about all that."

The next witness for the prosecution was Danby, and he confirmed Gadds in all particulars but that of the dispute about the cheque, and the counsel for the prosecution avoided that question to him; but I put it as to whether he was present or not, and he said "No."

"Well," cried Gadds, "I have made a slight error—that is all."

I called for the defence a man named Hammerton, who said that he was in Holborn at the time in question, and saw Mr. Gadds come out in a great-coat and hire a hackney-coach.

This man was so badgered by the counsel for the prosecution, that they got him to say he only thought it was Mr. Gadds.

Then a very strange occurrence took place.

At the solicitors' table in the court Gadds was sitting, and everybody saw that his clerk, Danby, kept pushing a bit of paper before him, and thrusting a pen into his hand, which Gadds as often would not take.

"What is all that?" said the judge.

"Nothing—it is nothing!" cried Gadds, and he crumpled up the piece of paper.

"Bring me that paper," added the judge.

It was wrested from Gadds, and proved to be a blank cheque in favor of Charles Danby, Esq., for twenty thousand pounds.

"What is the meaning of this?" said the judge.

"Nothing, my lord," said Gadds; "only a—that is, a little joke."

Danby looked sullen.

"A strange joke," said the judge. Pray what do you mean by it, Danby?"

"Business, my lord—private business. That is all."

The judge had handed me the cheque, and it was by a sudden impulse I cried out,

"The cheque offers twenty thousand pounds to any one who can produce evidence that will clear Frank Wells of the crime imputed to him."

"I, too, offer it! I will pay it!" screamed May Lessington. "I am sole heir to my poor uncle's estates, and I will pay the sum cheerfully!"

Gadds looked like death; and amid a deep stillness from all in court, he said to Danby;

"I will sign it."

"Too late!"

"No! heaven, no!"

"I take your offer, Miss Lessington," said Danby—"if my lord judge will hold me harmless."

It was rather jesuitical of the judge to say as he did,

"All persons are held harmless who give evidence."

Danby grasped at the words in a moment, and in the midst of one of those breathless silences which so rarely come over crowds of people, he spoke:

"There is in the private room of Mr. Gadds a large, old, long-disused iron safe."

Gadds uttered a scream as if he had been shot.

"In that iron safe," added Danby, "are two dead men."

Gadds fell to the floor in a swoon.

"One of those dead men is Mr. Merks; the other is Sir Winton Wells."

Poor May Lessington shrieked aloud.

"My uncle! Oh, heaven! my poor, dear, fond uncle! to come to such a death!"

"Give me my money," said Danby, "and let me go."

"Officers," said the judge, who was deeply affected, "go to Barnard's Inn, and ascertain the truth of this dreadful story."

The truth was ascertained. The double murder had been committed, and the decomposing remains of Gadds's two victims were found as had been stated.

"Charles Danby," said the judge, looking at his notes for his Christian name, "it is my duty to commit you for trial as participating in the guilt of Samson Gadds. You were privy to the murder, and therefore are in law a joint criminal."

"But, my lord, you said—you promised that I should be held harmless while giving my evidence."

"And so you were. No one harmed you. Remove the prisoner."

Danby uttered screams of rage.

Of course Frank Wells was at once acquitted, and equally, of course, at the next assizes, Mr. Gadds was tried, convicted and hanged.

Danby was transported as participating in the crime by his concealment of it, and for perjury at the trial of Frank Wells. As a convicted criminal, all his effects and property reverted to the Crown; and as the Crown never asked May Lessington for the twenty thousand pounds, she had not to pay the amount as a reward for Danby's villainy.

Chastened by sadness for the death of one so dear to them as their uncle, Sir Winton Wells, May and Frank lived long and happily as man and wife in the old Manor House of Winton.

DRAMA.

Mr. Forrest's illness, from which, we are happy to say, he is rapidly recovering, has left the Circus Company in undisturbed possession of Niblo's Theatre. The performances are endless in variety, and have given great satisfaction to the admirers of this species of amusement.

At the Winter Garden Mr. Clarke has made quite a remarkable success. He is an actor who grows nightly in favor with his audience, his quiet and subdued style rendering it necessary for one to become thoroughly accustomed to it before they can appreciate its excellence. The "Babes in the Wood" has been played throughout the week to very fair houses. We trust that some metropolitan manager will be liberal enough to induce Mr. Clarke to take up his abode among us.

Wallack's.—"Henriette" increases nightly in popularity, and is coining money for Mr. Wallack. It is pleasant to see so many familiar faces among the audience, and mark with what delight they watch the fluctuating fortunes of the characters of this admirable comedy.

Laura Keene's.—Concerning this establishment we have only the old story to relate—"The Seven Sisters" and crowded houses. It is much to be regretted that, with such admirable stage management as characterises this theatre, there should be such a lack of courtesy observable in the conduct of affairs before the scenes. We would gently intimate to the officials having charge of the box office that rudeness and incivility, though they may pass current during a period of unexampled success, are certain at some future time to return "to plague the inventor." Politeness is said to cost nothing; but from the small share possessed by the individual alluded to, we should judge it to be rare as the phoenix, costly as the best diamond from Golconda.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

In our last number we called attention to the dangerous fluid now selling as kerosene oil. The Boston Journal gives another and fatal instance of the evil results of mixing this oil with camphene and burning fluid. Kerosene oil of itself is comparatively harmless, but when adulterated is as explosive as gunpowder. On the 3d of April, as Mr. French was trimming his lamp, it burst into a perfect mass of flame, and burnt him so severely that his life is despaired of.

Murders are becoming frightfully common. On Saturday, a Deputy-Sheriff, named McManus, went into a saloon, No. 36 Bowery, very much intoxicated, and wagered a friend who accompanied him that he could blow out the gas at the other end with a pistol shot. Upon his friend very foolishly doubting his ability to do it, the drunken ruffian drew a revolver and fired at the gas jet in question. He unfortunately missed the mark and struck a man, who was taking his supper at a table near. The ball had entered the poor man's skull, and he will most probably die. Although there could have been no malice in the matter, the author of such an outrage, whether he was drunk or sober, ought to be either hanged or else shut up in a lunatic asylum for life.

On Monday another homicidal affair occurred at a saloon, No. 31 Baxter street. It appears that a party of young Irishmen went into Morillo's saloon and commenced playing billiards. A dispute arose between Murillo and the men, in the course of which the former drew his knife and stabbed a man named Regan in the abdomen. Murillo and his brothers were arrested. The wounded man was taken to the hospital, and faint hopes are entertained of his recovery.

Chambers street was the scene of a shooting affray last Tuesday, between a couple of silly lads, which may possibly end in a very calamitous manner. It seems that Caleb Baistridge and Thomas McQuade, both fell in love with the same lady, no doubt caused by the scarcity of the female gender. They were unfortunately both employed in Bruce's type foundry, and from words came to blows. After two hard knock down fights, they agreed to have a third, and adjourned to that quiet and secluded spot, Chambers street, to settle the difficulty. While they were preparing for the fray, Baistridge drew a revolver from his pocket, and shot his antagonist, who fell to the pavement mortally wounded. He was carried to the hospital, where the slugs were extracted. The cowardly assassin is in custody.

An amusing scene occurred last week in the Supreme Judicial Court at Augusta, Me. A witness was summoned to testify in an arson case, brought from Hallowell, who refused either by oath or affirmation to render his testimony, assigning as a reason that he was a spiritualist, and could only act from impressional promptings. Judge Rice informed him that his excuse was entirely inadmissible, inasmuch as that, if one and another was excused upon such grounds, anarchy and confusion would ensue, and the rights and property of men would be at the mercy of any one who might set up such an absurd plea for not giving his evidence. He persisted, however, that as there were lying as well as truthful spirits, he was fearful they might make him violate his oath. The judge told him that the court also was moved by certain impressions, which he might find much more inconvenient to evade than that of the lying spirits. Whereupon he ordered the sheriff to take the witness to prison during the pleasure of the court. It took, however, only about twenty minutes' solitary reflection between four granite walls, whose egress was barred by a massive iron door, to enable him to obtain some sort of plenary indulgence, exempting him from his spiritual impressions, and allowing him to give his testimony in the case.

There is no question that Mr. Hogan, whose portrait we published last September, has been murdered. The Toronto papers announce that nineteen arrests have been made. A woman who was concerned in it has informed the authorities that he was first murdered, then robbed, and afterwards the body was thrown into the river with a heavy weight attached to it. It is most remarkable that the body was not eaten entirely up by the fishes—but murder will out.

The Boston Bee has been mulcted in $2,500 damages for a libel. It appears that the profane editor made fun of a man named George Jones, calling himself the Count Johannes. We do not see why George Jones may not call himself anything he pleases. The Boston Bee will not fail to remember the count's sting!

The total defeat of the Swill Milk trade has drawn from a Sunday paper the following unkind allusion to Alderman Reed: "Where's Alderman Reed, whose official report insisted that Swill Milk was so nutritious? Will he stand this Albanic impugnment of his judgment? And where are all the Herodian babe-slaughterers that, at such a crisis in the milky-way of legislation, they should be silent? Let cows rejoice! They, too, will have a tale to tell (as well as swing), now about the kind of extremities they have long had to endure in their stable performances." We think that Alderman Reed has suffered enough. Everybody knows that his eyesight has been disturbed ever since he indulged in so much Swill Milk.

The Sunday Times circulates an amusing canard that Hiram Barney is a spiritualist, and adds that Abraham Lincoln is one of the same kind. Another paper says that their notion of our new Collector is confused between Barney Williams and Hiram Anderson, and that they are so mixed up that it cannot tell whether he is a roll of carpet or an Irish farce. Let us settle the question. Hiram Barney, the present Collector of Customs, is a very able and respectable man, the head of a legal firm in New York, and he has been for many years the private lawyer of Mr. Lincoln, who has thus had the best evidence of knowing his integrity and capacity.

An equestrian club has been organized by the ladies of the city of Washington, D. C., whose hour of meeting for daily exercise is half-past six A. M. The attendant cavaliers are disgusted at the necessity thus laid upon them for early rising. Why do not the ladies of New York organize a club, especially as riding in the Central Park is to be the fashionable amusement of the season?

Stephen van Rensselaer, son of the Patroon of Albany, committed suicide on Tuesday morning, at a drinking saloon in Broadway. It appears that he went into the restaurant, and, after sitting down as though lost in thought, he emptied a phial of laudanum into a glass, and drank it off. Despite the efforts of medical men he died about three hours afterwards. He was in his thirty-fourth year, and had for some years led a very dissipated life.

Mr. Barney gives audience to the aspirants for public office every day from three to five. His levee is remarkably well attended. He has already about five hogsheads of testimonials. It is said that he will not make any appointments for a month.

Some ungodly Abolitionists last week got up an amalgamation ball, in which the women were to be white and their partners black. The police very properly prevented the abomination. The nigger is fast becoming the nuisance of the day.

The Shipping Gazette gives the following curious coincidence: "Our attention has been directed by Messrs. J. and N. Smith & Co. to the striking similarity between the histories of the ships John H. Elliott and Roger A. Heirn, which may be of interest to our readers. The ships were both built in this city by the same builder (one in 1856 and the other in 1857), are both of the same model and size—1,075 tons. They both loaded for Liverpool, sailed the same day, arrived at their destination the same day, loaded at Liverpool, and sailed thence the same day, met at Sandy Hook, and arrived up to this city the same day." This is not so strange as one that occurred some fifteen years ago. A ship called the Peter Procter sailed for Bombay, and was never heard of. It was supposed she had foundered at sea. Six years afterwards the owner had another vessel built, which he named after the lost vessel. She sailed for Manilla, where she found the long missing vessel. It had been taken by pirates, and sold to a Dutch merchant.

A Mrs. Locke made, on the 16th, a singular application to the Supreme Court. It was the delivery of her husband up to her, the aforesaid grown-up man being, she said, secreted by his father. Much laughter was created by the application, the cause for which we cannot see. It was stated by the bereaved fair one that the father disapproved of the marriage, and had resolved to send his son to California, to get him out of the way of the wife.

HUMOROUS GLEANINGS.

Of what nation are all stocking-menders?—Darn-nation.

Which is the best way of retaining a woman's affections?—By not returning them.

Men who endeavor to look fiercely by cultivating profuse whiskers, must be hair em-scarem fellows.

A solar eclipse reminds us of Jack's last thrashing by his father; it is a hiding of the son (sun).

A little boy being asked, "What is the chief end of man?" answered, "The end what's got the head on."

A Yankee having been convicted of murdering his father and mother prayed the court to have mercy on him, on the ground that he was "a poor orphan."

Some tasteful individual remarks that the best lipsalve in creation is a kiss. The remedy should, however, be used with the greatest care, as it is apt to bring on an affection of the heart.

A pedagogue was about to flog a pupil for having said he was a fool, when the boy cried out, "Oh, don't! don't! I won't call you so any more! I'll never say what I think again in all the days of my life."

"Doctor," said a man to Abernethy, "my daughter had a fit, and continued for half an hour without sense or knowledge."

"Oh," replied the doctor, "never mind that; many people continue so all their lives."

"What dogs are those?" inquired a gentleman of a lad who was drawing a couple of terriers along.

"I dinna ken, sir," replied the boy; "they com' wi' the railway, and they ate the direction, and dinna ken where to gang."

A San Francisco merchant takes a white cur, and with stencil-plate and black ink fixes his business card upon each side of the dog, and sends him forth, a locomotive advertisement—a dogerrotype of the fast people of a fast country.

"Now, Paddy," said a dandy to an Irish laborer, "tell me the biggest lie you ever told in your life, and I will treat you to a whisky punch."

"And be me soul," retorted Pat, "then I say, yer honor is a perfect gentleman."

A Scottish student, supposed to be deficient in judgment, was asked by a professor, in the course of his examination, how he would discover a fool?

"By the questions he would ask," was the prompt and highly suggestive reply.

A gentleman, whose house was repairing, went one day to see how the job was getting on, and observing a number of nails lying about, said to the carpenter employed on the work, "Why don't you take care of these nails? they'll certainly be lost."

"No," replied the carpenter, "you'll find them in the bill."

"Well, John, I'm going down home," said one young man to another, who came from the same town; "what shall I tell your folks?"

"Oh, nothing," said the other; "only if they say anything about whiskers, just tell them I've got some!"

In an advertisement by a railway company of some uncalled-for goods, the letter L has, by an accident, dropped from the word lawful, and it reads now, "People to whom these packages are directed are requested to come forward and pay the awful charges on the same."

Theodore Hook once dined with Hatchett at his delightful villa of Belle Vue, famous for its culinary completeness. "Ah, my dear fellow," said his host, deprecatingly, "I am sorry to say that you'll not get to-day such a dinner as our friend Tom Moore gave us."

"Certainly not," replied Hook; "from a Hatchett one can expect nothing but a chop."

Dr. Alexander Webster, a Scottish divine, was a five-bottle man, accustomed to spend half the night in convivial company. Of him is the anecdote told that, as he was reeling homeward in the dawn of a summer morning, a friend asked him what his congregation would think if they saw him thus; to which he replied, "They would not believe their own eyes."

A young lawyer, who had long paid his court to a lady without much advancing his suit, accused her one day of being "insensible to the power of love."

"It does not follow," she archly replied, "that I am so, because I am not to be won by the power of attorney."

"Forgive me," replied the suitor; "but you should remember that all the votaries of Cupid are solicitors."

Horne Tooke's advice to a young friend desirous of venturing upon matrimony was, "Look carefully around among the whole circle of your friends, and choose the nicest girl you can find. Make sure that her fortune is good, her connections unexceptionable, and her personal qualities entirely to your liking. When the happy day arrives, and the bridal party are on their way to the altar, mount the swiftest horse you can procure, and ride off in an opposite direction."

At a small town in the Western States, where Jenny Lind and Barnum had stopped to rest, the latter told the folks that if they would raise fifteen hundred dollars he would let them hear Jenny sing. The proposition was agreed to, and a large barn was procured. As Jenny was singing the "Bird Song," a tall fellow, who seemed to think he had been "sorter" taken in three dollars' worth, exclaimed, on Jenny's repeating the words, "I know not, I know not why I am singing," "The darnation ye don't! Well, I can tell ye; ye are singing for fifteen hundred dollars—three dollars a topknot all round; and there's no use of telling folks ye don't know why ye are singing. I guess dan's corn will find out."

MATRIMONIAL.

One more unfortunate, lonely and troubled,
Rashly importunate, went and got doubled.

How to Meet a Bankrupt.—Take a note of him.

The Skeleton in Every Married Man's House.—His wife's skirt.

Question for Actors.—Can a man be said to work when he plays, or to be a sound man when he is continually in pieces?

"A Legal Tender."—A decided contradiction in terms; for we must say within our experience we never yet knew anything "legal" that was ever "tender."

Three boys at school were found out last half in a practical joke, and they all changed color—Brown turned white, White looked Black, and Green turned crimson.

"I do wish I could be cured of lying in bed so late in the morning," said a lazy husband, lounging upon his pillow.

"Well, I will try the water-cure," said his wife, pouring a pitcherful on him.

A paper giving an account of Toulouse, in France, says: "It is a large town, containing sixty thousand inhabitants built entirely of brick!" This is equalled only by a known description of Albany, which runs thus: "Albany is a city of eight thousand houses, and twenty-five thousand inhabitants, with most of their gable ends to the street!"

"Tom, a word with you."

"Be quick, then, I'm in a hurry."

"What did you give your sick horse t'other day?"

"A pint of turpentine."

John hurries home, and administers the same dose to a favorite charger, which, strange to say, drops off defunct in half an hour. His opinion of Tom's veterinary ability is somewhat staggered. He meets him next day.

"Well, Tom."

"Well, John, what is it?"

"I gave my horse a pint of turpentine, and it killed him as dead as Julius Cæsar."

"So it did mine."

An Irishman of the better class, who thought he must conform to the fashionable mania in paying a visit to the Falls of Niagara, arrived at the Falls, and taking a look at the surrounding wonders, addressed himself to a gentleman with,

"And is this Niagara Falls?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"And what is there here to make such a bother about?" asked Pat.

"Why," said the gentleman, "do you not see that mighty river, the deep abyss, the great sheet of water pouring down?"

Pat looked at the water, and replied hesitatingly, "An' what's to hinder it?"

The other day, one of those hat-renovators who perambulate country districts in search of employment, called at the counter of one of the principal grocers of Galashiels, and demanded "'alf a gill."

"Have you a bottle?" asked the grocer.

"Noa," replied the hatter.

"Then you can't get it here; we don't sell it to be consumed on the premises."

"I'll just drink it at the door," said the renovator.

After some demur the "leem" was placed before him, and very soon went the way where, doubtless, many had gone before. Plunging his hands into his pockets, and assuming a rueful look, the fellow declared he had lost all his money.

"What's to be done?" inquired the broker.

"Why, I don't see as how you can do ought else but send for a policeman!" said Yorkie, with a knowing smile, as he made his exit from the premises.

In Mr. S. C. Hall's lecture on the authors of the age, an amusing anecdote—àpropos of Wordsworth's fondness for talking about himself—comes out. Wordsworth and Haydon, the painter, had been dining together in London, and both, rather elevated with wine, were walking along the street, when a young gentleman seeing that they were somewhat unsteady upon their feet, offered his assistance; and so, leaning upon his arm, the two great men were conducted to a coachstand. Turning to the young gentleman, Wordsworth said,

"Sir, you have been courteous to a stranger, I will now tell you who I am. I am the poet Wordsworth."

"And I," said Haydon, "am Benjamin Robert Haydon, the historic painter."

The young man, who had hitherto been so attentive, dropped their arms immediately, and indignant at what he believed to be a hoax, exclaimed,

"You are a pair of lying drunken vagabonds!" and left them in the middle of the street.

FOREIGN FLOATINGS CAUGHT BY THE WAY.

A collecting mania is sometimes profitable, when it is persistently and ably cultivated; that of collecting autographs has not been the worst paying, except upon bills of exchange. A collection of hats of all ages and countries recently fetched a great price; and another of impressions of seals has, we perceive, fetched fifteen hundred pounds—at the rate of nearly two shillings a seal. A Russian, of the name of M. Krylor, has bought them for Prince Gortschakoff, and it is said a Scotch Duke recently offered near a thousand pounds for the collection. They are mostly foreign seals, and it seems that our neighbors have most imagination in exterior matters. Upon one of the 12th of February, 1827, a Cupid places it finger on its lips, and gives the sly advice to the Post Office and to Sir James, "The police will find nothing within." The same authorities are likewise warned in an elegant way on another seal. The box of Pandora is opened, with the remark, "Curiosity ruined the world." This bears date 1828. The year 1821 seems to have been one in which the Post Office police were busy, as we find on a seal, "Prompt and discreet—more than the post is."

Really one sees that this childish whim of seal-collecting may have its value in painting the morals and manners of a day. What is there too insignificant to do so? it may be asked. We find the fact verified on an enormous seal of the Post Office of Berlin, 24th June, 1824, which has been attached to a suspected letter; the seal bears the words, "Opened by Authority." On a seal dated 10th July, 1844, we find the words, "Not to be Grahamed," which alludes to the well-known time when Mr. T. Duncombe's letters were "opened by authority," and for which he took the Administration to task right warmly. Balzac's seal has on it, "Raison m'oblige;" Dumas', "Tout passe, tout lasse, tout casse;" Victor Hugo's, "Faire et taire;" Alfred de Musset's, "Depuis lors," alludes in a mysterious date, perhaps an epoch in his life. Soulie's seal is "Nec S orte, nec M orte," which is "Nec sorte nec morte;" Souvestre's, "Espoir et crainte;" Adolphe Adam's, "J'espère et je crains;" Nourrit, "Chut, chut, chut;" Hérold's, "Rien de beau sans hasard." Thus we see the seals, in the instances of the literary men, have some tendency to show the character of the writers; but in the seals of great families and important historic personages with which this collection abounds, the fact is still more remarkably truthful.

We said manias are profitable; sometimes the reverse, however, is the case; for we hear that a ladylike person, dressed in the very height of fashion, with a crinoline like a diving-bell, was walking in one of the galleries of the Panoramas at Paris, when she seized a M. Sarcez suddenly by the ear, which she would not release, although force was used. The police arrived, and restored order and the ear of M. Sarcez. She was conducted before the police, and of course burst into tears, producing a splendid pocket-handkerchief to heighten the effect.

"How is it you were guilty of such a breach of manners and of the law?"

"Monsieur le Commissaire," replied the lady, in a lisping voice, "I have a mania."

"A mania! Madame has escaped from an asylum."

"Oh, no! monsieur, I shall say a penchant."

"A penchant!"

"Yes," replied the lady, in the style of voice of Charles Mathews' French lady in "He would be an Actor." "I have a penchant for crabs. Je suis dans une situation interressante, and, ma foi! at the moment I mistook the ears of M. Sarcez, which are very large, and which were very red with the cold—vraiment! I thought they were crabs!"

It is needless to say that the poor lady was a little gone in the upper storey, and was handed over to her friends, who were much afflicted by the event.

The Viennese banker, Baron Sias, is about to bestow his daughter, with a princely dowry, on the son of Ypsilanti, the Greek patriot, who first raised the standard of revolt against Turkish tyranny, and who was as single-minded and reckless of self as Garibaldi himself.

A good many jokes circulate at the expense of Désaugiers, who would be a dramatist. A trifle of his was being performed the other night for the first time; of a sudden there was a voice raised; he listened, it hissed. Désaugiers was in the coulisse talking to the manager, and, with admirable presence of mind, appeared to misunderstand the unpleasant sound. "Ah ça!" cried Desaugiers, "qu'est-ce qu'on a donc ajouté dans ma pièce?"

The Emperor of Russia has conferred on Francis II. and his Queen the military order of St. George. Prince Paskiewitsch will be the bearer of the insignia of the order.

There is an old Irish Act of Parliament—one of the most iniquitous of the penal statutes against Roman Catholics—immoral in all respects as well as unjust, which says: "After the 1st of May, 1746, every marriage celebrated by a Popish priest, between a Papist and any person who hath been, or who hath professed himself or herself to be a Protestant at any time within twelve months of such celebration of marriage, or between two Protestants, shall be null and void to all intents and purposes, without any process, judgment or sentence of the law whatsoever."

Drama in Real Life.—On Tuesday evening, as M. P——, an army contractor was walking on the Boulevards, Paris, he perceived his son with a young woman, very plainly dressed, but of modest and respectable appearance, hanging on his arm. He advanced towards the couple, and asked his son in an angry tone how he dared to keep company with a workwoman.

"Father," replied the young man, "I intend to marry mademoiselle, and if I have not hitherto spoken to you of my project it is because——"

"Because, sir, you know well that I would never consent to such an act of folly."

"I do know that, father, and therefore it is that I have waited for my majority. I am of age this day; I have obtained the consent of this young person's parents, and we are to be married very soon."

"And I, sir," cried the father, choking with rage, "I shall be under the necessity of addressing you a respectful summons" (sommation respectueuse—a formality indispensable in France in the case of a marriage by any person, however old, without consent of parents). "I will convert all my property into money, and you shall never have a penny."

"I prefer happiness to riches," was the reply.

The exasperated father raised his cane to strike his son, but suddenly his hand dropped, and he staggered and fell into the arms of one of the crowd which the noise of the discussion had collected. He was a corpulent man, of a sanguine temperament, and his anger had killed him!

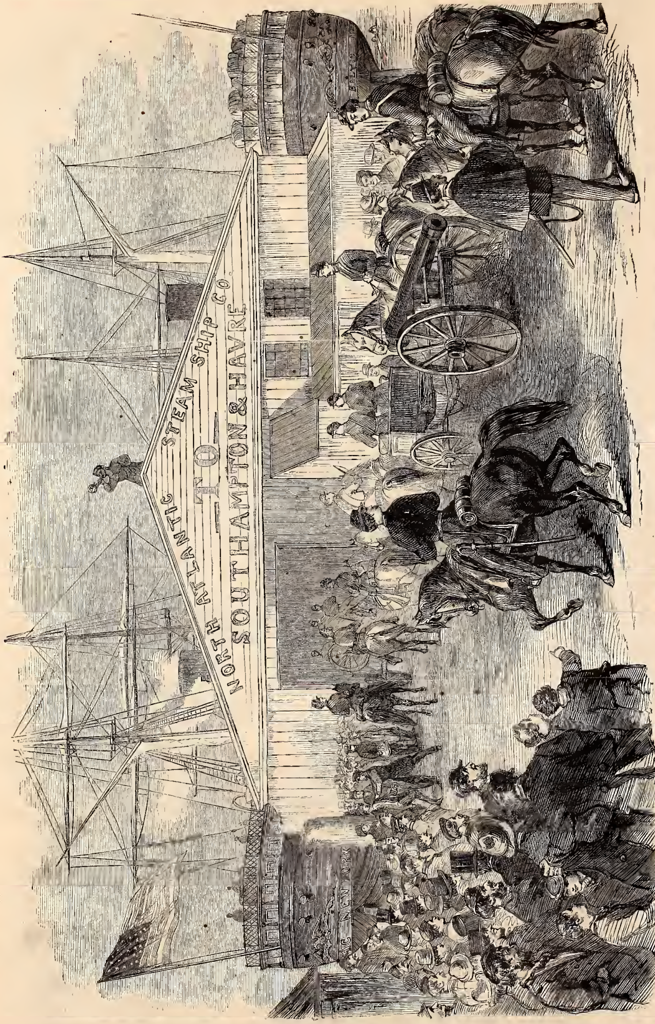
A letter from Rome says: "Cardinal Antonelli has just learned a singular piece of news—that he is accused by Mirès of having received 1,000,000 francs. As this is an infamous calumny, the Cardinal is furious, and will, it is said, insist on having an investigation made to order to demonstrate that he has not received anything."

A curious occurrence is reported from Cracow. The Bank of Poland, it is said, had in its keeping Russian bonds belonging to the Government, which it did not consider itself bound to pay in specie. The Government demanded the amount in cash, and being met with a refusal the bank was surrounded by soldiers, who entered the premises and helped themselves to the amount required out of the metallic reserve. This is a somewhat novel feature in the history of government transactions with banking institutions.

The trireme, or galley, which has been built by order of the Emperor of the French, was launched on Saturday last at Clichy, in presence of his Majesty, Prince Napoleon, and a number of officers, assisted by the whole of the inhabitants of the place, and of the village of Asnières, on the opposite bank of the river. The galley is upon a grand scale, being about one hundred feet long by from twelve to fifteen feet wide. It draws but little water, and the deck is about ten feet above the float-line. The prow is fitted with a bronze rostre, or beak, with three branches, intended to pierce and sink the enemy's vessels; and the poop is raised at a considerable height from the deck. Each side of the vessel is pierced for three rows of oars, twenty-two in a row, or one hundred and thirty-two in all. There is but one mast, and that carries a lateen sail. The galley is painted a deep purple, and ornamented with garlands, eagles, a cornice and balustrade in bronze. A number of sailors are on board, and one hundred and twenty more are coming from Cherbourg. When they arrive the vessel is to take her place off St. Cloud, and there go through her manœuvres. A Roman galley, manned by one hundred and fifty live seamen, will be a grand sight for the holiday people this summer.

The First English Banker.—Mr. Francis Child was the first English banker. He was wealthy, and commenced business soon after the Restoration. He had been apprenticed to William Wheeler, a goldsmith, whose place of business was on the site of the banking-house. He became rich by marrying his master's daughter. His bank grew popular, as it deserved; and, after two centuries, maintains its high position. When we cross the threshold of this Plutonian temple, a small share of fancy will transport us to the merry times of the jolly Cavaliers and their witty King; the shade of Nell Gwynne may be haunting the counter with a money order from her Royal admirer; and Buckingham may be flaunting in silks or velvets in that great back office. Charles II. was a bold borrower, and often paid twenty and even thirty per cent. for pecuniary accommodation.

Mr. Horace Mayhew, in his new work on Jutland, tells the following story: "An English manufacturer, settled somewhere in Zealand, amused himself by changing the eggs laid by a stork, who annually built her nest on his house, for those of an owl. In due course of time the eggs were hatched, and he was startled one morning by a tremendous row going on in the nest of the parent storks. The male, in a violent state of excitement, flew round and round his nest; the female chattered away, protecting her nestling under her wings; it was quite evident that the stork was not satisfied with the produce of his helpmate; there was something louche about the whole affair; he would not recognise the offspring. After a violent dispute the male flew away, and shortly returned, accompanied by two other storks, birds of consequence and dignity. They sat themselves down on the roof, and listened to the pros and cons of the matter. Mrs. Stork was compelled to rise and exhibit her children. 'Can they be mine?' exclaimed the stork. 'Happen what may, I will never recognise them.' On her side Mrs. Stork protested and fluttered, and vowed it was all witchcraft—never had stork possessed so faithful a wife before. Alas! alas! how seldom the gentle sex meets with justice in this world when judged by man, or, in this case, by stork kind. The judges looked wondrous wise, consulted, and then of a sudden, without pronouncing sentence, regardless of the shrieks for mercy, fell on the injured Mrs. Stork, and pecked her to death with their long sharp beaks. As for the young owls, they would not defile their bills by touching them, so they kicked them out of the nest, and they were killed in the tumble. The father stork, broken-hearted, quitted his abode, and never again returned to his former building-place.



MOVEMENT OF TROOPS FOR THE SOUTH—THEIR ARRIVAL—SCENE OUTSIDE OF COLLINS' DOCK, AT THE FOOT OF CANAL STREET, NEW YORK, APRIL 6, 1861.—See Page 349

THE WAR MOVEMENT—EXCITING SCENES ON COLINS' DOCK, NEW YORK DURING THE SHIPPING OF MUNITIONS OF WAR, STORES, &c., ON THE STEAMSHIPS ATLANTIC, BALTIC AND ILLINOIS.—SEE PAGE 349.

ERLE GOWER;

OR, THE

SECRET MARRIAGE.

By Pierce Egan,

Author of "The Flower of the Flock," "The Snake in the Grass," &c., &c., &c.

CHAPTER XLIII.

That while he spoke each cursèd cannon thund'ring his fame,
Three chances it still to pelt, each carry and destroy.
While more'n his borrowed visage, and seeing it
His then confederate lurking,
For heavily which from each dangerous foil
Had not his cloak been long and wide.
Which post assigned, he undertook alone
Partner of fraud; and was the first
That practised falsehood under saintly show.
Deep malice to conceal couch'd with revenge.—Milton.

HIS PROSPECT, now spread to the comfortable view which we have already sketched, did it, without, to somebody that it appeared as if he had accomplished it by supernatural agency, and by the performance of some wonderful feat, or a prize gained in the most honoured money lender.

Florence felt impressed with at least as being brought to suddenly and so unexpectedly face to face with him; and being naturally of a superstitious turn of—play of the imaginations which was heightened by his occasional residences at the Continent, and by the sensual, and not unfrequently a direct but true philosophic warker, keeping watch over the secret receptacles for important documents belonging to Mr Pengrove, but appeared to stop him and his friend when first from carrying out their pilfering intentions.

He shut his eyes, felt his head spinning round, while a roaring ringing filled his ears, and he was oppressed with painful sickness of breathing.

His partner in the perpetual debt—the unnamed partner, who generously disposed Albertina—was no less for the moment enervated with fright than Florence. But though astonished to the extreme, he was the more vexed, as he was the first to recover himself.

She rose up, and rather hastily for her, ordered spitefully to get Pengrove's room.

"Pengrove," she exclaimed, in a hasty voice, "it was a fool's trick!"

"Fool!" he echoed, in a tone expressing, and yet by no means lack of her sympathy.

"Yes, a fool's trick!" she repeated.

He rejoined more low, and in a tone indicative of a want in us.

"What were you doing at my door?" he exhibited in her ear.

"Listening, you fool!" she replied, in a low voice, but angrily.

"Nothing," she cried, angrily, "nothing! Oh, you fool—you confusion and—you know—you are not to be trusted!"

"What were you doing at my door?" he repeated, in a forcible tone lives of several of Her Majesty's large subjects in danger, and to deprive Prince Napoleon and Pianciani a few months of the pleasure of each other's society at Chiselhurst.

Here the cab-driver was dismissed, and then Pangrove said abruptly to Lady Chiselhurst—

"Give to me the card which was to obtain you admission to the marquis's presence."

"Card! Certainly not," returned Pauline: "I must Lady Kingsweode's own face, which I merely placed in your hands to look at, and without which it would be utterly useless for me to seek an interview with the marquis."

"I will see him for you," replied Pangrove; "I understand still more this matter, no doubt better than you do. Give me that."

"I do not," exclaimed Pauline, furiously.

"Then I will not," said Pangrove.

"How I said Pangrove. The cab now arrived. Give me the card, or accept the alternative. While you are trying to use me as a tool, you will give you up to justice, you know. Yes, I will produce Lady Kingsweode's real face, and prove how all you have done with the scissors. I don't care for the penalty. It is not my business to commence with the police, but I have further objections to my plan, and I put my friend into another service, where I can more conveniently help him. Give me the card, for great advantage which is using at your own risk."

Pauline groaned. He was mocked, jeered, shocked; he might not help himself, and he gave up the point. Pangrove, satisfied, did not quibble, but in undertone—

"Await me here. You shall know all that passes between myself and Lord Chiselhurst, and that will give you all the power you will require in the case of my failure."

He hurried to the mansion, and was admitted, and in another minute Pauline saw him disappear within the door, which he had in close his knuckles in the cold, and to await the result of a mission which was to prove either a triumph or a subsequent a part.

In the meanwhile, as Florence passed up and down the cold square, Pangrove made his way into the upper hall of Chiltington House, and waiting for the first servant who appeared, he asked, in a tone expressing extreme bad with the card, affecting an air of mystery and delay.

This proved and pompered fellow took the card, and examined it in such a cold eyeglass, and, Lucy with delicate reverence with some surprise for Pangrove quite satisfied with an inspection which seemed mighty to assure Pangrove, by nature—

"Follow me."

Pangrove immediately perceived that Lady Kingsweode's messenger had been ignorant, and consequently unprepared with any warning that he perhaps should receive, because he was rather afraid there would be no one or two impediments thrown in his way. He congratulated himself upon his precaution, but with he, a stranger, would have found it difficult to overcome.

He was conducted through a magnificent corridor, and, at length, one being reached, the servant said, inscrutably—

"Wait here."

He pointed to a seat. Pangrove sat down, and the servant then disappeared through a door which was opened, and which only enabled, when the servant reappeared, and motioned Pangrove to enter. He complied, and was then ushered through a short passage into a comparatively small apartment, furnished as a study, but also with every luxury which could be desired for ease, indolence or comfort. Seated in an armchair, leisurely perusing some written document, was the Marquis of Chiltington. He did not look up at the man upon whom Pangrove entered, nor appear to have the slightest sense of his arrival, and the servant—

"Pangrove, my lord."

Without attending to the announcement, Pangrove retired, and Pangrove was left alone with the lord, Lucy Kingsweode.

The marquis continued to peruse the paper without heeding Pangrove's presence, and the latter, with a countenance expressing nothing but respect for the marquis, remained motionless, only however, his eyes, taking notes through the spectacles of everything in the room.

Not a sound, save the ticking of the clock, broke the silence of the apartment. Pangrove, with his eyes on the clock, and Pangrove absolutely started when the marquis, suddenly laying the paper he had been reading upon the table, said, in a low, cold tone—

"Once my way."

Pangrove stood before him, and the cold, blue eyes of the marquis settled on his face. They fringed for a moment, and then, as if satisfied, he resumed their occasional glassy immobility.

"Well, sir, what is your business?" he said, holding the one Pauline had supplied to him.

Pangrove bowed.

"You have a communication for me?" he asked.

"I have, my lord marquis," he replied, and produced Lady Kingsweode's letter, or rather Pauline's forgery of it.

The marquis took it from him, and opened it with deliberate calmness.

He perused it apparently without any sign of surprise or of any excitement whatever. He only put off his monocle, as though to contemplate some remark he found in the letter, and then, after a few lines, he put it on again, and continued his perusal to the end. Pangrove, all the while—

Who intimated you with this message?" he asked.

Pangrove hesitated for a moment, and was about to make his answer, when the marquis, with—

"Why do you pause?" asked the marquis, with a settled gaze upon him.

"My mission is a confidential one," observed Pangrove.

"Sorry," rejoined the marquis, with a slight contemptuous smile. Hence I can, who confidential, and with a confidential one."

"Quite so," replied Pangrove, cautiously.

"Clearly so," replied the marquis. "What lady?"

Pangrove looked about him, and, dropping his voice to a whisper, said—

"Lady Kingsweode."

"That will do," he resumed, adding, as if soliloquizing, "my son might have need it the combination was more complex."

Again a silence ensued, and the ticking of the timepiece was alone heard. Pangrove was the first to break it, saying—

"I am to wait for my lordship's decision?"

"My," returned Pangrove.

"No" echoed the marquis, abruptly. "How came her ladyship to entrust you with this note?"

"Her ladyship knew me to be trustworthy," responded Pangrove.

"At a third price," observed the marquis, with a cold sneer.

"Her ladyship knew me to be a gentleman," replied Pangrove, with smile.

"How? implied the marquis, with a look of contempt, "a gentleman with an obscure scale of prices?"

"A great gentleman, my lord marquis, but it does as an action that every man has his price," returned Pangrove.

The marquis looked at him for a moment, but made no comment upon his observation. After a pause, he inquired—

"You have known Lady Kingsweode long?"

"Some years," replied Pangrove, with a slight hesitation, and he recalls from the marquis's Lady Kingsweode to Lord Kingsweode, indeed, I have known her birthday a great many years."

"Indeed?" resumed the marquis, very calmly: "so long. Um! By the way, you are not a married man, I suppose, and have no encumbrances of any means to you. Pray, what are they?"

"Your lordship must excuse my returning no answer to that question," replied Pangrove.

"Indeed?" responded the marquis, with a faint sneer: "a purchase you, you know. These fellows are so extraordinarily sensitive to their own dignity—at least, I have an impression that I am rejected—that there are no such things clearing to the Chiltington family. Pray, sir, what is the price of a man refused to fulfil a confidential position. I have, I think, a proper sense of your unconfidential position, but, indeed, excuse if I intrude, what is the price of two questions I should like to put to you, and if you can honour them at all, I can assure you that, in the event of satisfaction, your reward shall be considerably handsome."

Pangrove heard very low in reply.

The marquis continued, coldly—

"You assert that you for many years have been acquainted with the Kingsweode of Kingsweode, and you know—"

And with the insolence of their house, my lord marquis," added Pangrove, quickly.

"Then you know their secrets?"

"I have nothing for their traditions," he said. "I want to know as much as I can learn respecting a certain lady who was formerly governess in the Kingsweode Hall, and disappeared so mysteriously. He is here, I believe, with equal mystery returned to England, and with a child not of mine."

The marquis paused.

"Lucy Kingsweode, of Huntingford Chase, Gloucester, and Eaton-square, London," continued Pangrove, "is the person to whom I refer, and the one you seek to discover—Mr. Eric Gowan."

"The very person," said the marquis; "that is the name he assumes."

"The name he assumes, my lord marquis (I repeated Pangrove).

Again the marquis paused, and looked at Pangrove keenly. He felt an intolerable time to the man, but he could not deny to himself that he was in the power of the marquis, and that he must submit to his coarse, and he still then he would be free to act. Mr. Gowan," said the marquis, "is the person you seek, and I am willing to give you information respecting him, and the manner in which he came by his present name, and the reason why he is now in England, provided you will undertake to accomplish a certain object for me."

"Your lordship's interest in the matter is sufficient to command my services," replied Pangrove.

"Indeed!" resumed the marquis, very calmly: "so long. Um! By the way, you are not a married man, I suppose, and have no encumbrances of any means to you. Pray, what are they?"

"Your lordship must excuse my returning no answer to that question," replied Pangrove.

"Indeed?" responded the marquis, with a faint sneer: "a purchase you, you know. These fellows are so extraordinarily sensitive to their own dignity—at least, I have an impression that I am rejected—that there are no such things clearing to the Chiltington family. Pray, sir, what is the price of a man refused to fulfil a confidential position. I have, I think, a proper sense of your unconfidential position, but, indeed, excuse if I intrude, what is the price of two questions I should like to put to you, and if you can honour them at all, I can assure you that, in the event of satisfaction, your reward shall be considerably handsome."

Pangrove heard very low in reply.

The marquis continued, coldly—

"You assert that you for many years have been acquainted with the Kingsweode of Kingsweode, and you know—"

And with the insolence of their house, my lord marquis," added Pangrove, quickly.

"Then you know their secrets?"

"I have nothing for their traditions," he said. "I want to know as much as I can learn respecting a certain lady who was formerly governess in the Kingsweode Hall, and disappeared so mysteriously. He is here, I believe, with equal mystery returned to England, and with a child not of mine."

The marquis paused.

"Lucy Kingsweode, of Huntingford Chase, Gloucester, and Eaton-square, London," continued Pangrove, "is the person to whom I refer, and the one you seek to discover—Mr. Eric Gowan."

"The very person," said the marquis; "that is the name he assumes."

"The name he assumes, my lord marquis (I repeated Pangrove).

Again the marquis paused, and looked at Pangrove keenly. He felt an intolerable time to the man, but he could not deny to himself that he was in the power of the marquis, and that he must submit to his coarse, and he still then he would be free to act. Mr. Gowan," said the marquis, "is the person you seek, and I am willing to give you information respecting him, and the manner in which he came by his present name, and the reason why he is now in England, provided you will undertake to accomplish a certain object for me."

"Your lordship's interest in the matter is sufficient to command my services," replied Pangrove.

"I have discovered all for you to do," said the marquis, in the same cold tone.

"Precisely," proclaimed the marquis, "and you are my instrument to do the work. Now, sir, I am a man who, in a very handsome sum for certain objects. I shall make use of that intermediate for purposes personal to myself. I shall not communicate to any person breathing from what person or in what manner I have obtained possession of the strange history. It will be enough that I know it, and that I am in a position to prove my statements. You, my friend, are to be an instrument in my hands, and I am to be your employer, but what you have collected, leaving upon you a power to use for your own private profit, and the money shall be yours."

Old Pangrove's only offensive, his jealousies stifled, he had a singular in the case, and the money-bag dangled before his eyes; but with the vision of a sum before floating the knuckles amid a golden shower of sovereigns, he perceived a difficulty, and, pointing to the letter, he said, in a tone of respect, but of calmness, which, as soon as it developed itself amid the tones of gentleness, bewildered the marquis, and made a deep impression upon his forehead—

"I have received, my lord marquis, no instructions from Lady Kingsweode as to the course I should pursue."

"I have no pursuit with me, but I can furnish them at a minute time, but I shall be able without them to prove to you that I am an impostor. Your lordship has mentioned a friend of mine, Baron Rembelle."

"You mentioned the name," observed the marquis, coldly.

"Well, my lord marquis, the baron, my friend, and companion, in consequence of his having undertaken a delicate mission for Turin that period to me. Verona saved your lord-ship's life on the Thames and in the burning-field, and your lordship's life—property."

"I understand you," interposed the marquis, quickly, though haughtily "What do you wish me to do with regard to the baron?"

"Simply to prove to your lordship that I am acquainted with circumstances which no one but myself and the baron could possibly be capable of giving information upon, and which, as such has been entrusted with documents as substantiate my statements."

The marquis paused, thinked and thoughtful for a few minutes. He took up Lady Kingsweode's letter and reperused it. Then he laid it down some and said—

"You know the history of the boy called Gowan; give it me briefly. There shall be no interruption from me."

Pangrove bowed, and began his narrative in a low, hesitating tone, but as it proceeded he became more confident, more bold, and, warming from up, there was no hesitation in his manner.

He gained round him, and bent towards the Marquis of Chiltington.

He told the marquis of the birth of the child of Lucy and Lord Kingsweode, and in the rightful heir to the estate and title.

The marquis listened to him, but displayed excitement.

"Now, my lord marquis," he said, "I am ready to say he had hitherto spoken.

"It is true, my lord," answered Pangrove, calmly, his face turning blue, as he handed that on entry, pale face was concerned by his son, and that the child was not the offspring of Lucy Gowan. He compared the letter with the notes within his breastpocket urged him on, for they mentioned of more in the letter.

"Proceed," said the marquis, coldly, and Pangrove bowed in reply.

"Your friend Mr. Vernon, poor soul, fell in love with a young and beautiful governess, and married her. Her name was Lucy Gowan, and her husband, a gentleman of her, and fell with her—married her."

"Indeed!" said the marquis, and Pangrove continued the narrative, with exactness.

He married her, my lord. Sir Harris Bumboo knows that," repeated Pangrove.

"Sir?" muttered the marquis, and then waving his hand, he said, "proceed."

A child was born," continued Pangrove, "and subsequently sister. The mother died, and the child was left to the care of her husband, who, upon the death of Lord Kingsweode and himself, married the present Lady Chiltington, the child Lord Kingsweode and himself, married the present Lady Chiltington, the child Lord Kingsweode was abroad, and the child was left to the care of Mr. Vernon, and was placed by him in the hands of Lady Chiltington, who took her weight. Your lordship knows nearly all that has subsequently occurred."

"Nearly all," repeated the marquis, coldly.

"There is truth in this," he muttered. "But he proved, and took up Lady Kingsweode's letter, and read it through to the end. Then he turned to Pangrove.

At what hour, and when, were you to deliver my answer to the note to Lady Kingsweode?" he said, abruptly.

"At two hours past noon, my lord marquis," replied Pangrove.

"Then you must return at that hour, bringing it must you?" he suggested.

"I will take my answer thither to her myself. You must confine to admit me, and to announce me to her ladyship. I will come disguised, and will bear no objection. Your reward shall be great.

The marquis, without waiting for Pangrove's reply and peremptory nod, and Pangrove, borne down by his manner, retired.

He was no sooner gone than the marquis sent for all the servants' evidence, and I will adopt it.

(To be continued.)

PERSONAL.

EX MAYOR THOMAS was elected Mayor of Chicago on Monday forenoon, and very much injured.

The fashionable suite of the Free Press, Detroit, who lately received the compliment of a crediting from Susan Bates, is on the high road to another of the same kind. Mr. Bates, it is said, has presented the editor with a fine cow, for very free with in his estimate.

Mr. Buchanan has the popular negro delicacy, dish of congestion of the brain and lungs, which he has eaten every day for the last three years. He has also a fine hen, and Mr. Buchanan has also a fine hen, and Mr. Buchanan has also a fine hen, and Mr. Buchanan

SCENE FROM TOM TAYLOR'S CELEBRATED COMEDY "THE BABES IN THE WOOD," RECENTLY PERFORMED WITH GREAT SUCCESS AT THE WINTER GARDEN, NEW YORK.

JOHN S. CLARKE,

Now Performing at the Winter Garden,

Was born in the city of Baltimore, in 1833. At an early age he evinced a predilection for the stage, and was, with our distinguished young tragedian, Edwin Booth, the "bend and front" of a little band of juvenile Thespians—the two lads enacting opposite parts in tragedy, which Clarke conceived at the time to be his particular forte.

By the earnest desire of his mother (his only surviving parent), young Clarke entered a lawyer's office, for the purpose of preparing himself for the legal profession; but preferring Shakespeare and the drama to musty parchments and the acts of the Revised Statutes, he determined to adopt the stage as a profession. Having obtained an engagement at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, he made his first appearance on the 7th of March, 1851, as Frank Hardy, in the comedy of "Paul Pry." He subsequently, in 1852, joined the company at the Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, then in its palmy days, where he remained until 1856, when he again returned to Baltimore, as first low comedian of the Front Street Theatre. The complimentary benefit which was given to him in the fall of 1854 will be remembered by those who had the good fortune to be present as one of the greatest ovations ever awarded to native talent in the country. In August, 1856, he became a member of the Arch Street Theatre, Philadelphia, where he has been ever since, as the leading comedian, and for the last three years as joint manager with Mr. Wheatley. His occasional "starring" visits to the Southern cities are always greatly successful. In the profession, and by all out of it who enjoy his acquaintance, he is esteemed highly for qualities that render manhood doubly attractive when combined with those of the artist. As an indication of his present extreme popularity in Philadelphia, it may be stated that at his last benefit the throng was so great that the stage was partly given up to spectators.

We have in his comedy the first grand essential. This is efficient, spontaneous, natural humor. For this quality it is impossible to substitute the graces and clever forms and modes that education brings. It is this bounteous gift that runs the artist into dangers. Criticism mistakes simple excess of humor for extravagance, as Dickens is always reminded by those most sensible of his vivid nature, that he puts life under a magnifier, and travesties its incidents and emotions. We know no comedian who is so thoroughly appreciative of the ludicrous as the subject of this notice. His fun is like a perennial fountain, clear, and sparkling and gushing. It refreshes all alike. We have seen old and care-tried men, youths without a care, the educated and refined, and the rough and unlettered, given up literally to its strength and stir. We have repeatedly seen "old stagers" overcome by the fun of a single look, or tone, or attitude, and interrupted in their labors for an unregretted space. Sympathy is the signet of genius—sympathy, or that subtle, close communion with universal nature which, for the sake of distinguishing it from acquired knowledge of the human character, we call intuition. Without this delicate sense, no deep impression can be made by the public performer, whether religious or secular. Mr. Clarke's power with an audience is wonderful, magnetic, because he has its pulse in his hand, and its heart beating close to his own.

We are all the time seeing how Art is measuring and controlling the gift of humor with which Mr. Clarke has been endowed.

All of his delineations are suggestive of intelligent effort to realize the best functions of the stage. In the fresh parts he has played within the past twelvemonth, there has been as little exaggeration as the stage will allow. (It clearly will not allow any precise and unvarying method, since nature is mysteriously various.)

Versatility distinguishes this comedian eminently. In his brief practice of his profession he has covered a wide range. We have seen him as "Toodles," the embodiment of the grotesque and low comical; as "Bob Acres," the half-cowed bragger; as "Farmer Ashfield," the type of the pathetic domestic man; as "Bob Tyke" the nom of fierce passions and cordial good sympathies; as "Tilly Slowboy," the awkward, honest creature; as "Major De Boots," the familiar type of eccentric ardor unsustained by vital forces. In all these characters, and many more as widely contrasted, we think Mr. Clarke has shown the conception of a general artist, and a power of expression which no living comedian possesses in the same degree.

MR. J. S. CLARKE, THE CELEBRATED COMEDIAN, NOW PERFORMING AT THE WINTER GARDEN, N. Y., IN HIS GREAT CHARACTER OF "TOODLES."

SCENE IN THE NEW COMEDY OF "THE BABES IN THE WOOD,"

As Performed at the Winter Garden.

It is all very well, as far as it goes, to write notices of new plays, but one good picture of some striking scene does more towards giving a just idea of the spirit of a play, especially if that play be a comedy, than a whole column of written description. For this reason we present our patrons with an admirable drawing from the highly successful comedy now being acted at the Winter Garden, called "The Babes in the Wood." Our artist has chosen the moment when Sir Frank Rushton (Mr. Barton Hill), overcome with rage at the insulting demands of Todd, the moneylender (Mr. Johnson), orders Beetle (Mr. Clarke), to eject him, Todd, from the room, an order which Mr. Beetle, who has long been a victim of the aforesaid Todd, obeys with alacrity. This is one of the most amusing situations in the play, and as will be seen by reference to our engraving, is made the most of by the artists, eliciting each night peal after peal of laughter and applause.

A MARYLAND belle lately young lady removed her teeth after marriage. On hearing this, a bachelor wickedly observed that it was no uncommon thing for people's eyes to be opened by matrimony.

THE WAR MOVEMENT—UNLOADING OF ADAMS'S MAMMOTH EXPRESS WAGON, CONTAINING MUNITIONS OF WAR FOR THE SHIPS CHARTERED BY THE GOVERNMENT AT COLLINS' DOCK, FOOT OF CANAL ST., N. Y.

THE WAR EXCITEMENT.

Departure of the Steamships Atlantic, Baltic and Illinois.

On Saturday last the neighborhood of Canal street was the scene of a commotion unknown to the oldest inhabitant, for three of our largest and swiftest ships, the Atlantic, Baltic and Illinois, were taking in, at the Collins' dock, troops and munitions of war, not to be employed against a foreign foe, but against the citizens of the Seceded States; for although their precise destination was unknown, yet the fact of their being employed against the Secessionists was admitted. A greater scene of confusion we have never beheld; scattered in little groups were men anxiously discussing the probable destination of the troops, and how far the President was justified in resorting to coercion. There were all shades of opinion, from the rabid Abolitionist to the ardent Secessionist, and it is somewhat wonderful that so much angry argument should not have led to physical demonstration, but with the exception of a few strong expletives, the whole passed off without fighting. One thing was very remarkable, and that was the number of persons who knew precisely what Abe Lincoln's intentions were, and who must have read the secret instructions which were not to be opened till thirty miles at sea! On the other side them were men who knew to a nicety what Jefferson Davis meant to do, and who prognosticated that in a month Washington would be in the hands of Ben McCullough, and New York a free and independent republic, with either Fernando Wood or Sim Draper at its head. The only drawback upon the value of the intelligence given by these gentlemen was, that of the five hundred who knew all about all things they all so differed, that there was no knowing which to believe.

The Steamer Atlantic.

It is needless to inform the reader that this vessel is one of the far-famed Collins' line, and that she is one of our crack vessels. In order to accommodate the horses that were to be transported in her, about eighty stalls had been erected, completely filling up the fore part of the vessel. Every measure had been taken to secure the comfort and safety of these animals.

The sleeping accommodation for the soldiers was most certainly not in proportion to their superior necessities, for they were little better than the horse stalls. Rough boards, carelessly nailed together, were the hoistends on which the men were to stretch their warlike lengths, and as each of these bunks were intended for six men, they will have little chance of turning when once in. As one of the gallant fellows said, "We shall go out of the ship like figs out of a drum, with the impress of his neighbor upon every man's side." The stores are stowed away in the fore part of the hold.

The Troops.

A portion of the troops arrived at Canal street about eleven o'clock on Saturday morning, and of course attracted great curiosity. Innumerable were the foolish questions put to them. The company that arrived was Company A, Second Regiment, United States Flying Artillery, Captain Burry, numbering sixty men. Owing to the crowded state of the dock, and the fact that the stalls were not ready for the reception of the horses, the men were obliged to remain in the street for two or three hours, after which time they were permitted to go upon the dock. They had with them four guns; two of them being brass six-pounders, and the other two brass bowitzers, of twelve pounds calibre.

The men were all fine-looking fellows, and looked as if a slight brush with an enemy would not affect their spirits in the least. They were totally indifferent as to where they were going, and laughed and joked at the prospect before them as if it was an excursion of pleasure. It was said that the horses belonging to the artillery were very valuable animals and highly trained, and that that was the reason of their being taken such extra care of. Company M, of the Second Artillery, commanded by Major Hunt, accompanied the others. They had no horses, being obliged to leave them behind when they left Texas. They will be freshly supplied at whatever point they may land. The balance of the soldiers were taken on board from a steaming later in the day. There were some companies from the Second and Third Regiments, in all about seven. Companies H, Captain Brooks, and C, Captain Allen, of the Second Regiment Light Infantry, are also on board. A company of sappers and miners, from West Point, and a few persons belonging to the Ordnance Department, under the charge of Lieutenant Balch, complete the whole. The total number of men is about five hundred.

The Embarkation

Of the troops and armament was conducted in the usual military style. Some curiosity was manifested as to how so many horses (seventy-eight) were to be got on board, as the steamer was lying several feet from the dock, but the presence of two strongly built stalls soon explained that. The horse was quietly placed in one of the stalls, and almost before he had time to know where he was the steam hoisting apparatus had placed him with his companions on board the ship. The time employed in putting all the animals in their quarters was incredibly short, only a few minutes being given to each. The guns and their heavy carriages were stowed away carefully, and the baggage next received the proper attention.

At five o'clock the steamer Illinois, Maby arrived with soldiers, who were very soon transferred to the Atlantic, and soon after the noble ship steamed into the river, where she dropped anchor for the night.

Among other scenes of interest was the unloading of Adams's mammoth wagon, and which attracted the attention of the crowd. The next sensation was the arrival of the United States troops with troops and ammunition. Our Artist has given a graphic sketch of both these exciting events.

On Sunday morning the Baltic seemed to be safe at her wharf for two or three more days, while steam was up in the Illinois, and she was thought to be ready for a start at any moment. Yet the Baltic was off first, starting at forty-five minutes past five o'clock on Monday evening, while the Illinois did not get away till long after night had set in. About one hundred soldiers went by the Baltic, and in cargo she took eight thousand bags of oats and an immense quantity of general forage, which seemed intended for the horses in Texas; but there were also a great number of wheelbarrows, picks, spades and similar implements, suited for throwing up of earthworks, &c.

THE WAR MOVEMENT—UNITED STATES LIGHTER CONVEYING TROOPS AND STORES TO THE STEAMER BALTIC, LYING AT COLLINS' DOCK, CANAL STREET, NEW YORK.

The Illinois has been roughly refitted for the accommodation of troops, besides being absolutely crammed with miscellaneous material in bulk and packages. She went over the bar with a draft of more than twenty feet. Some of the soldiers under orders to sail in her were grumbling at the idea of being cribbed and cabined in the spare room between decks. She could handsomely accommodate four hundred, and take near a thousand tons of freight as well.

Perhaps our military readers will find a clue to the intended purpose of the expedition, of which the Illinois forms part, when we mention she carries a formidable assortment of rockets, bengola lights and similar pyrotechnic signals.

On account of the length of time which it occupied to finish loading the Illinois, it was deemed best to receive the troops from Fort Hamilton before the steamer started, and thus evade the delay of stopping at that place. The steamtug Cataline was consequently dispatched to carry them.

It is stated that the following is the number of troops shipped in these three vessels: Steamer Atlantic, three hundred and fifty-eight; steamer Illinois, one hundred; steamer Baltic, four hundred; total, eight hundred and fifty-eight men.

ANOTHER ROYAL ROMANCE OF LOVE AND BIGAMY.

The celebrated Father Prout, who is the Paris correspondent of the London Globe, gives the following pleasant little record of royal rascality:

"The Faubourg St. Germain was in high glee at the posthumous trial of the late King Jerome for bigamy, the prospect of bastardising Clotilda's husband, and the discredit of Bonapartism in general, when lo! the greatest blow dealt yet at Legitimacy has been delivered on this occasion. It is Henry Cinq that turns out a bastard, and it is the Duchess de Berri whose marriage turns out a sham. A matter hitherto lurking in the darkest obscurity has incidentally been forced into the broad daylight, and it now appears that the Duc de Berri, on quitting the Armée de Condé at Coblentz, had hardly settled down in England when he was smitten with the charms of a highly respectable girl, a Miss Brown, whom he proposed for and married according to the laws of England, and also at the Roman Catholic Chapel in London (three years after the date of Jerome's marriage at Baltimore, with Bessy Paterson), and during his whole residence in England (ten years) lived with this lady as his lawful wife, to the knowledge of Louis Dixhuit and the whole family. His wife was not dead in 1816, though in that year the restored King of France caused him to commit bigamy and espouse the late Bomba's sister Caroline, the issue of which unlawful connection is the present 'legitimate' pretender to the French throne. When the Duc de Berri was stabbed at the opera-house here, I have a perfect recollection of two ladies being admitted to soothe his dying moments, and the talk at the time was all about the Duchess being so tolerant in the case; but it was his real wife and her daughter, it seems, whom he insisted on seeing before he died. They were amply provided for, and are possibly still living."

Marriage Statistics in Massachusetts.—There were eleven thousand four hundred and seventy-five marriages in Massachusetts in 1859, a decrease of six hundred and fifty-four from the average of the five previous years. Sixty-two persons were married—thirty-one marriages—on every day of the year, on the average. There are more weddings in Oct., Nov., and Dec. than in other months. Less widows and widowers than usual were married a second time last year, ninety-one out of one hundred of the women married were brides for the first time, and eighty-four out of one hundred of the men had not been married before. Ninety-six out of one hundred bachelors selected maids, and only four per cent. chose brides who had been brides before. Sixty-six out of one hundred widowers selected maids, and thirty-four married widows. Of the maids, eighty-nine in one hundred were united to bachelors, and eleven in one hundred were wedlocked with widowers. Of the widows forty-two in one hundred were chosen by bachelors, and six hundred and two, fifty-eight in one hundred, became the wives of those who had been husbands before. Of the ten widows under twenty years of age, nine married bachelors—of the eighty-six widows between the ages of twenty and twenty-five, no less than seventy-four married bachelors. The marriage tables include one man aged thirty-one married to a girl only twelve years of age; one man of thirty-five to a girl thirteen; one of fifty-eight to a girl of seventeen; one of fifty-three (fifth marriage) to a maid of nineteen; a bachelor under fifty to a maid over seventy; a widower over seventy to a widow under twenty-five years old. One hundred and ninety-five boys married before they were twenty-one years of age—five of whom were only sixteen years old, eight of seventeen, and thirty-nine of eighteen years. Four hundred and seventy girls were married before they were eighteen years old, one of whom was only twelve years, four of thirteen, four of fourteen, forty-seven of fifteen, one hundred and twenty-nine of sixteen, and two hundred and eighty-five of seventeen years.

For all THROAT and LUNG COMPLAINTS, including WHOOPING COUGH, and every complaint the forerunner of, and even actual CONSUMPTION.

HUNNEWELL'S UNIVERSAL COUGH REMEDY

This valuable preparation, freed of all the common components, such as Opiates or Expectorants, which not only run down the system, but destroy all chance of cure, will be found on trial to possess the following properties, and to which the most valuable testimonials may be found in the pamphlets:

For Whooping Cough, and as a Soothing Syrup, it meets every want, and by early use will save the largest proportion of rup u es in children which can be traced to Whooping Cough.

In ordinary Coughs and Bronchial Complaints, the forerunners of Consumption, its splendid tonic properties make it not only the most perfect enemy to disease, but builds up and sustains the system against a recurrence of the complaint. No nursery should be without it, nor should parents fail to get a pamphlet, to be found with all dealers, as the only way to do justice to its value.

HUNNEWELL'S TOLU ANODYNE

The great NEURALGIC REMEDY and NATURAL OPIATE, adapted to every species of Nervous Complaints, Nervous and Chronic Headache, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Tooth and Earache, Loss of Sleep and Bowel Complaints.

This great Neuralgic Remedy and Natural Opiate calls for special attention and interest, being free of Opium, or preparations of Opium, or of any but its strictly vegetable and medical properties. For Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Tooth and Earache, Spinal Complaints, Bleeding at Lungs or Stomach, Rose or Hay Fever, Catarrh, and all minor Nervous Complaints.

For Loss of Sleep, Chronic or Nervous Headache, Sick Headache, it has no equal, and to which we offer testimonials from undoubted sources.

For Delirium Tremens it is a Sure Remedy.

For Bowel Complaints, including Cholera Morbus, it is splendidly adapted, in not only removing the pains, but acting as physic, a great contrast with Opium, which not only constipates and drugs the system, but makes the remedy worse than the disease.

From Physicians we ask attention, and on demand Formulas or Trial Bottles will be sent, developing in the Anodyne an Opiate which has long been wanted, and in the Cough Remedy such as rest entirely on one central principle.

From Invalids we ask correspondence for Pamphlets or explanations, without "postage stamps."

Price—Large Cough Remedy, 50 cents per bottle.
Small " " 25 " "
Tolu Anodyne, 50 " "

JOHN L. HUNNEWELL, Proprietor,
Chemist and Pharmaceutist,
No. 9 Commercial Wharf, Boston, Mass.

For sale by all usual wholesale and retail Dealers in every town and city.

George Hunnewell, 145 Water street; D. S. Barnes & Co., Byrch, Gale & Robinson, Schieffelin Bros. & Co., McKesson & Robbins, Conrad Fox, John Milhen & Sons, Wholesale Agents, New York.

EMPLOYMENT!—Now ready, a complete Price-Current, offering Watches and Jewellery at an immense reduction! No advance payment required on goods. Address at once,
281-83 HUBBARD BROS., Providence, R. I.

CASSELL'S
Popular Natural History,
Profusely Illustrated with Splendid Engravings,
Is Published on the 1st of every Month.

Parts, 32 pages and 1 Tinted Plate, 15 cts.
Double Parts, 64 pages and 2 Tinted Plates, 30 cts.
Sections, 128 pages and 4 Tinted Plates, 60 cts.
Volumes, 384 pages and 12 Tinted Plates, Embossed Cloth, Gilt Sides and Lettered, $2 50.
The work will comprise four Volumes.

"Really a beautiful publication."—New York U. S. Jour.
"The engravings are not only profuse, but exquisite."—Detroit (Mich) Farmer.
"We commend this work to our readers."—Cincinnati Presbyterian.
"This will be a valuable work."—Sandusky Com. Reg.
"Too high praise cannot be awarded for bringing out so excellent and beautiful a work."—Concord Independent Dem
"Calculated to amuse the reader and aid the scientific inquirer."—Phila American Presbyterian
"When complete, it will be an interesting and invaluable work."—Phila. Christian Instructor.
CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 37 Park Row, N. Y.

6,000 AGENTS WANTED—To sell six NEW INVENTIONS—two very recent, and of great value to families; all pay great profits to Agents. Send four stamps and get 80 pages particulars.
281-86 EPHRAIM BROWN, Lowell, Mass.

$80 PER MONTH.—Agents Wanted in every Town. It is no patent medicine or book agency, but something new and of real value. For particulars address, with Stamp, J. S. PARDEE, Binghamton, Broome Co., N. Y. 281-82

Handsome Women.

HUNT'S "BLOOM OF ROSES," a rich and elegant color for the cheeks or lips. IT WILL NOT WASH OR RUB OFF, and when once applied remains durable for years. The tint is so rich and natural that the closest scrutiny fails to detect its use. Can be removed by lemon juice, and will not injure the skin. This is a new preparation, used by the celebrated Court Beauties of London and Paris. Mailed free, in bottles, with directions for use, for $1.

HUNT'S "COURT TOILET POWDER" imparts a dazzling whiteness to the complexion, soft, delicate and natural—is unlike anything else used for this purpose, and WILL NOT RUB OFF. Mailed free for 50 cts. in postage stamps. Can be obtained only of HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 707 Sansom St., Philadelphia. Agents Wanted. 281

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every City, Town and County in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patented article just invented. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and to persons out of employment it offers great inducements. For full particulars write immediately and receive our letter by return mail. SEABOLDT & CO., 432 Walnut St., 280-92 Philadelphia, Pa.

PIANOFORTE AND VOCAL MUSIC AT REDUCED PRICES.—The following splendid collection for 50 cents:—

Ever of Thee, Song, Fooley Hall—Land of My Youngest and Holiest Feelings—The Herdsman's Mountain Home—Silence and Tears, by St. Massett—Who Shall be Fairest—Scenes of Home—Hurrah for the Bonnets of Blue—Dear Mary, Wake from Slumber—Rovers, Rulers of the Sea—Oh, 'Tis Sweet to Think—Evening Song—Green Grow the Rushes, Oh—Dear Voices of Home—Simon the Cellarer.

Fourteen popular Songs and eight charming Piano Pieces, all for 50 cents, sent to all parts of the Union. Address
51 C. B. SEYMOUR & CO., Agents, No. 458 Broadway, New York.

NERVOUS DEBILITY or Spermatorrhea—how CURED. Beware of all persons copying after my notices and Circular as "former sufferers," "victims," &c. They neither know how nor care to cure you. Before commencing ANY treatment send your address to Box 176, Charlestown, Mass. 281-83

Bogle's Hair Dye and Wigs

BOGLE'S ELECTRIC HAIR-DYE

ARE unapproached and unapproachable in their superior merits. Both are perfection. Try the one, see the other, and be convinced.

Private Rooms for Dyeing Hair and fitting Wigs at BOGLE'S Hairwork, Perfumery and Toilet Bazaar, No. 202 Washington St., Boston. Diagrams to measure the head sent by mail. Inclose postage stamp for reply. 000

TUCKER'S
PARIS BRIDAL
GARNITURES AND VEILS,
Coiffures, Flowers, Feathers and Toilet Surroundings are ever of a pleasing character.
759 Broadway. 274-325

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every city, town and county in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patent article just invented. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and to persons out of employment it offers great inducements. For full particulars write immediately, and receive our letter by return mail. ROBT. HALL & CO.,
271-83 5½ North St., Baltimore, Md

Tiffany & Co.,
LATE
TIFFANY, YOUNG & ELLIS,
Fine Jewellery, Precious Stones, Watches, Silver Ware Bronzes, Clocks, Rich Porcelain Articles of Art and Luxury
No. 550 Broadway, New York.
House in Paris, TIFFANY, REED & CO

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE.—Send Stamp to Box 1059, Lowell, Mass.
280-85

Finkle & Lyon's
SEWING MACHINES,
With new Improvements, Hemmers, &c., all complete,
AT REDUCED PRICES.
Agents wanted. Send for a Circular, 538 Broadway, New York, and 156 Fulton St., Brooklyn. 000

Fever and Ague

IS caused by the miasm or exhalation evolved from decayed and decaying vegetation in moist soils. When absorbed into the circulation it becomes an irritating virus in the blood, which deranges and destroys the health of the whole system. We have long sought and have at length found an antidote.

AYER'S AGUE CURE,

Which neutralizes this malarious poison in the blood, and stimulates the Liver to expel it from the body. Its action upon the system is invariably sure, and its cure of Fever and Ague and kindred complaints certain. If taken in season it expels the virus from the system so it is absorbed, and thus keeps those who use the Cure free from its attacks, keeps the system in health, although exposed to the disease. Consequently it not only cures but protects from the great variety of affections which are induced by this malignant influence, such as Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb or Masked Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, Bilious Fevers, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Blindness, Toothache, Earache, Catarrh, Asthma, Palpitations, Painful Affections of the Spleen, Hysterics, Colic, Paralysis and Painful Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, all of which, when arising from this cause, will be found to assume more or less the intermittent type. This Ague Cure removes the cause of these derangements, and cures the disease.

This it accomplishes by stimulating the excretories to expel the virus from the system, and these organs by degrees become habituated to do this their office of their own accord. Hence arises what we term acclimation. Time may accomplish the same end, but often life is not long enough, or is sacrificed in the attempt, while this Ague Cure does it at once, and with safety. The extensive use of this in all varieties of diseases has shown it to be a surer as well as safer remedy for the whole class of diseases which are caused by the miasmatic infection than any other which has been discovered; and it has still another important advantage to the public, which is that it is cheap as well as good.

Prepared by DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists everywhere. 81

L. DUBERNET & CO.,
Manufacturers of
Passe-Partouts and Fancy Frames,
544 Broadway, between Spring and Prince Sts., New York
Gilt, Ebony, Black Walnut and Oak Frames always on hand.
L. DUBERNET, J. DUBERNET.
000

Perfumes! Perfumes! Perfumes!
609 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The most delightful and genuine liquid and dry Perfumes for the present season, comprising the fragrance of the earliest and latest flowers, as well as the most approved Bouquets.

MOUNT VERNON, KISS ME QUICK,
PERFECT GEM, WASHINGTON NOSEGAY
FRAGRANT JAPONICA, &c., &c.

Also Concentrated Flavoring Extracts, for Pies, Puddings, &c.

French Biscotine, the most approved food for Infants. Glycerine Jelly, for chapped Skin. Chilblains Balsam Swiss Corn Plaster, an infallible cure for Corns and Bunions.

To be had, wholesale and retail, at No. 609 Broadway New York. EUGENE DUPUY,
000 Chemist and Druggist.

The Union Clothes Dryer.
A New Invention—Useful, Cheap and Portable,

By which Clothes in large quantities may be dried in a yard, a room, or on the top of a house. Can be put up and taken down in one minute without detaching the lines. When not in use it can be compressed into a small compass and kept in a closet. No family should be without this novelty.

Price $2, $3 and $4.

The Union Clothes Dryer is pronounced by all unprejudiced persons to be one of the most useful and labor-saving inventions of the age.
J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors,
457 Broadway (near Grand St.), New York, and 212 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—Shaver's Patent Eraser and Burnisher, Pencil Sharpener, &c., all neatly combined in one small, tasteful form.

"It is a most ingenious contrivance, answering so many purposes entirely."—Independent.
"It gives a neatly finished point to the lead, without soiling the fingers in the least."—N. Y. Tribune.
"It is a very nice contrivance, and will be found useful on every writing desk."—Prof. B. Silliman, Jr., of Yale College.

Sample sent, postage paid, for 75 cts., or 3 styles for $1 50. For sale by all Stationers. Send for a Circular.
280-84 A. G. SHAVER, New Haven, Conn.

A. LANGE,
PICTURE AND LOOKING-GLASS FRAMES
AND
CORNICES FOR ROOMS,
MADE TO ORDER, AND RE-GILDING DONE.
206 William St., cor. Frankfort, New York.

PHELAN'S PATENT BILLIARD TABLES.
MANUFACTORY & WAREROOMS
63, 65, 67 & 69, CROSBY ST. NEW YORK.

ESTABLISHED 1843.

BOGLE'S CELEBRATED HYPERION FLUID overtops everything as the greatest restorer and best dressing for the Hair in the world. Ye who have been deceived by nostrums, try this and be convinced. It never fails. To be had at
W. BOGLE'S
Hairwork, Perfumery and Oil Store,
202 Washington St., Boston, and for sale everywhere.

The Monarch of the Monthlies!

FOR APRIL, 1861.

JUST PUBLISHED, NO. 4, VOL. VIII., OF
FRANK LESLIE'S
MONTHLY,
With which is incorporated
THE GAZETTE OF FASHION.
Price 25 cts., or $3 per annum.

Literary.

Verona Brent; or, The Wayward Course of Love—continued.
Schamyl, the Prophet Warrior of the Caucasus. Engraving
The Curse of Wulfbeimberg.
Proverbs.
The Black Spot. Engraving.
Gems of Thought.
Tombs of Numidian Kings. Engraving.
Sam Bentley's Christmas. Two Engravings.
America a Hundred Years Ago.
Nelson Noggins' Story. By Mary Kyle Dallas.
A Chapter of Diamonds.
Forest of Fontainebleau. Three Engravings.
Hunting in the Province of New Brunswick. Engraving
"Bring me a Light!" Two Engravings.
The Lawyer Outdone.
"Died" for Love.
A Grammatical Duelist.
Madame Anna Bishop. Portrait.
Our Fascinating Widow. By Martha Haines Butt.
John W. Francis, A.M., M.D., LL.D. Portrait.
The Mazed Fiddler. Two Engravings.
Domestic Receipts.
Sacred Quotations.
Amusement for Young People.
Editorial Gossip.
Poetry—The River—Engraving; Gone Before—By Ben Lapar.
Miscellaneous.
Comic Pages—The Great Jewellery Excitement. Six Engravings.

List of Engravings.

The Gipsies of Transylvania.
A French Inn in the Olden Time.
Wealthy Jew and Jewess of Algeria of the Present Day.
Schamyl, the Prophet Warrior of the Caucasus.
The Black Spot.
Tombs of Numidian Kings.
Moorish Women in Algeria.
Sam Bentley's Christmas—Henry overhearing the Factory Hands Talking about Susan; Miss Bentley and the Lanlon Children.
Forest of Fontainebleau—The Imperial Fort and Watch Tower; Entrance to the Oath Grotto; The Oath Grotto.
Hunting in the Province of New Brunswick—The Bear Hunt.
"Bring me a Light!"—Phantoms of the Young Wife and her Mother-in-Law; The Ghost-Seer Senseless on the Floor.
The River—"One More Unfortunate."
Madame Anna Bishop.
John W. Francis, A.M., M.D., LL.D.
The Mazed Fiddler—Willy Basset Plays to Mary Lee and the old Schoolmaster; John Hamlyn Strikes Down the Fiddler.

Gazette of Fashion.

Review of Fashions; Styles for the Month; Description of Colored Plate; Things Seen and Talked About; Spring Openings; Explanation of Diagrams; The Inauguration Ball; Answers to Correspondents—Paris Fashions; Items; General Description of Needlework; Chronology of the Month of April; Miscellaneous.

Illustrations to the Gazette.

Colored Frontispiece; Netted Sontag—Three Engravings; Needlecase in the form of a Parasol—Two Engravings; Inauguration Ball at Washington—Superb Costumes Worn on that Occasion—Two Engravings; Diagrams of Gored Dress—Two Engravings; Straw Work—Two Engravings; Section of a Tidy; Patterns for Embroidery—Three Engravings; Paris Fashions.

Each number of the Magazine contains over 100 pages of the most entertaining Literature of the day, besides nearly sixty beautiful Engravings, and a superb colored Plate alone worth more than the price of the Magazine.

1 copy 1 year	$3
2 copies 1 year	5
1 copy 2 years	5
3 copies 1 year	6

and $2 for each copy added to the Club. An extra copy sent to the person getting up a Club of Five Subscribers, 1 year for $10

The postage of this Magazine is three cents and must be paid three months in advance at the office where the Magazine is received.

FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

The Great Comic Paper of America.

A NEW NUMBER

FOR THE 1ST OF MAY.

Being No. 37 of

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN.

This number is one of the very best ever issued, being full of Hits at the Times.

You're Also Taking his Pill is full of point, and shows what may come to pass Nurse Seward is an immense caricature.

THE GRAND CANTOON IN
THE GRAND CANTOON IS
THE GRAND CANTOON IS

THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,
THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,
THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,
THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,
THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,
THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,

And his reply to the Sister Undertakers of Europe.

Our Illustrations of the National Academy of Design.

Nor are the the Fine Arts forgotten, for there is an entire page of Illustrations of the most celebrated Pictures now hanging at the Academy of Design. These have been got up regardless of expense, and are made the Pictures than are the originals themselves.

Original Burlesk of Page's "Infant Bacchus"

CORRECTED SKETCH OF PAGE'S LARGE PICTURE, "DOUCE FAR NIENTE."

Windsor Castle as Never Seen by Whitley.

REVISED PORTRAIT OF GEN. JACKSON.

Great Study of Marine Petatoes, by Hart.

A MAGNIFICENT FRAME WITH LITTLE PIGS, BY WATERMAN.

Together with

Extraordinary Portraits of Individuals, Animals and Things.

There is besides a portion of the Wealth of Humorous Illustrations

Touching everything, and

SOMETHING ELSE BESIDES.

GREAT CHAPTER ON

Purchasing Dogs of Pure Breed.

THIRTEEN ILLUSTRATIONS.

First Steps towards the Purchase.
Arrival of the Intelligence.
He is admired—particularly his Bunky Tail and Tan Spots.
He is Weighed and found not Wanting.
After his first Bath, branch after Bunky Tail and Spots.
Cradest Increase in Size.
Second Week.
Third Week.
Fourth Week.
Here he was Treated in the First Place.
How in the Lost.
His present Occupation.
The future Sore of the true King Charles Breed.

LADIES LOOK OUT!

DOG FANCIERS BEWARE!

The Pages of Literary Matter

ARE SUBLIME

AND

RIDICULOUS.

The Gravest Man must Laugh!

The Funny Man Die of Envy!

Every Publication should buy the BUDGET OF FUN.

PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.

Every Artist should buy the BUDGET OF FUN.

PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.

Every Youth,
Every Adult,
Every Lady

Will buy the BUDGET OF FUN.

PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.

All the People in America buy the BUDGET OF FUN.

PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.

The BUDGET OF FUN for the 1st of May, published by

FRANK LESLIE,
19 City Hall Square.

FURNITURE ! FURNITURE ! !

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

NO. 67 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

The establishment is six stories in height, and contains 242 feet through to No. 69 Christie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade, for Time or Cash. Their Stock contains, in part, of

ROSEWOOD PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT Chairs, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $150.

JENNY LIND AND EXTENSION POST BEDSTEADS,

Five Sizes, especially for the Southern Trade

☞ Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented. 279-84

DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL,

FOR the quick cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Sprinting, Skin Diseases, Stiffness and Pains in Limbs, Joints, Toes, Bones, Sprains, Old Sores, Wounds, &c., &c. They cannot exist when it is applied.

It cured me of Swollen and Stiff Neck in one night.—John Livingston, 84, Lane Magazine, New York.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—Wesley Comden, N. J.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—C. C. Cromwell, Yonkers, N. Y.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—Ed. Sandenstrom, 71 Ann Street, Rochester.

It cured me of an old Sore.—Wm. Malden, New York.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—B. B. Smith, Morris, Ct.

It would be impossible to enumerate the cures effected in a back of 1,000 pages. DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL cures on the principle of Nature, and is the only remedy that will do so. Price 25 cts., 50 cts. and $1 per bottle. Sold by all Druggists and Country Merchants in the United States and Canadas.

Principal Depot, 218 South Eighth St., Philadelphia, Pa.

100 DE GRATH, M. D.

PIMPLES REMOVED FROM THE FACE in three days by my Pimple Remover (10 years established). Price $1, sent free of postage to any address. J. A. RANDALL, 289 Canal St., N. Y. 282

THE GREATEST HUMBUG of the age, and at the same time the greatest article to make money on ever introduced. Call to-morrow 25 cents, and settle for $1. Requires but from $2 to $3 capital. Sells everywhere all night, and requires no advertising. A sample, with full directions for making, sent, post free, for $1, address, in all cases each enclosed, 282-84 L. S. FRAY & CO., Stoneham, Me.

First Piano Book for Children.

THE CHILD'S FIRST MUSIC BOOK.—An Introduction to the Art of Playing the Piano Forte. By J. T. Crawch. A new and improved edition of this popular and well-known work, containing seven hundred and easy exercises by, with sheet and pleasing Music, carefully arranged, and the whole on the progressive system, commencing with the easiest of the kind, by the publishers, DITSON & CO., Boston. 282

The Fearfully Physical Degeneracy

OF

American People,

AND THE FAIRLY WELL-NIGH FAIRLY DECLINE OF CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH

Just published by

DR. STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the causes of Nervous Debility, Hermaism and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the suppression and Morbid Changes of Menstruation, Impaired, Sickness and Digestion.

How to avoid Diseases, and in the result of thirty years' experience of the Author, how to Cure them when they are not beyond the reach of medical art. It has been written for the benefit of the philanthropic student, and agonized mental sufferers by Parents, Guardians and in Youth, for it details clearly the causes of the already HEARTFELT BANE, and a guide to clear the clouds and recks by Disease. Sent free and sealed on receipt of a quarterly effort.

Full not to Send and get this Book.

ADDRESS

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 10 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y.

JOY TO THE WORLD.

Clothes Washed in Five Minute by

JOHNSON'S UNION WASHING MACHINE.

Patented April 10, 1860.

PRICE $8 TO $10.

A CHILD CAN OPERATE IT. Saves money, rest, time and comfort, without injury to the clothes. Call and see it in operation at 376 North 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa., or address J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors

Unequalled for the Splendor

AND MULTIPLICITY OF ITS ILLUSTRATIONS.

CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED FAMILY BIBLE.

Great demand for the First Volume.

Price, neatly bound in cloth, inferred, $7 50.
Price, bevelled cloth boards, gilt edges, $ 00.
Free by mail, or from agents, one of whom will be appointed for every unoccupied district throughout the United States.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN,
No. 31 Park Row, N. Y.

Only Twenty-five Cents a Bottle.

Superior Old Tom or London Cordial

GIN,

Distilled under the immediate superintendence of Dr. Dixon, of Baltimore, Medalist and prizeman at the Great Exhibition, London, 1851, and Chemist to the Board of Health, Baltimore.

Manufactured by the Proprietors,
WILLIAM GOSNELL & CO.,
67 Cornhill St., N. Y.

For sale by all respectable Druggists and Grocers everywhere. Also by J. S. FARMILOE, 566 Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel, N. Y. 280

$100 A MONTH

Made with Stencil Tools. CHEAPEST & BEST. Send for latest samples, All prices. D. L. Milliken, Brandon, Vermont, No. 70 Third St., St. Louis, Mo. 281 82

335 EMPIRE 335

SEWING MACHINE.

PATENTED FEB. 14, 1860.

SALESROOM, No. 335 BROADWAY.

This Machine is constructed on entirely new principles of mechanism. It possesses many rare and valuable improvements, not to be found in any other machine, experts, and pronounced to be SIMPLICITY AND PERFECTION COMBINED.

The following are the principal objections urged against Sewing Machines:

1. Excessive labour in the operator.
2. Liability of the thread to break.
3. Rapidity, breakage and loss of time in repairing.
4. Incapacity to sew every description of material
5. Dangerously near which to operate.

The Empire Sewing Machine

IS EXEMPT FROM ALL THESE OBJECTIONS.

It has a simple needle, perpendicular motion, makes the lock stitch alike on both sides, and will sew as well on a sack as on a silk. We solicit a perfect test as to every description of material, from Leather to the finest Muslins. Needles, with cotton, linen or silk Thread, from the country to the finest number.

Having entire Call for Cash terms, and the least possible friction, it runs as smooth as glass, and is

THE MOST QUIET SEWING MACHINE.

It requires every one every less power to drive it than any other Machine in market. A pin of twelve years of age can work it steadily, without fatigue or injury to health.

Its strength and thoroughness surpasses all description. Render it almost impossible to get out of order, and is warranted by the Company in five entire satisfaction.

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article to call and examine the Machine in operation.

Also in a more especial manner do we solicit the patron age of

MERCHANT TAILORS,
COACH MAKERS,
HOOP-SKIRT MANUFACTURERS,
SHOE AND BOOM MAKERS,
DRESSMAKERS,
CORSET-MAKERS,
GAITER-FITERS,
BOOK-BINDERS
VEST AND PANTALOON-MAKERS

Religious and Charitable Institutions

WILL BE LIBERALLY DEALT WITH.

PRICE OF MACHINES COMPLETE

No. 1.—For Family Machine.....$90
No. 2.—For Medium Manufacturing..... 65
No. 3.—Large size Manufacturing..... 60

Agents Established:

WILSON & CO., 376 North Ninth St., Philadelphia, Pa.
H. DRIVER, 10 North Gay St., Baltimore, Md.
JOHN B. HOSE, 252 River St., Troy, N. Y.
JAMES TOD, Commercial Building, Cincinnati, Ohio

AGENTS WANTED.

000 T. J. HEARDMER & CO.

S. R. Walker,

TYPE FOUNDRY

AND PRINTERS, FURNISHING WAREHOUSE.

17 Dutch St., New York. 277 99

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.—For particulars address, including stamp, Dr. CLIFFORD, Bryant and Stratton's, 512 Broadway, New York. 276-81

FAIRBANKS'

STANDARD SCALES!!

ADAPTED TO EVERY BRANCH OF BUSINESS where a correct and durable Scale is required.

Send for an Illustrated and Descriptive Circular.

FAIRBANKS & CO.,
189 Broadway, New York.

Dr. Marshall's Headache and Catarrh Snuff

HAS proved itself to many physicians and in-numerable sufferers to be the best article yet known for curing the Catarrh, Cold in the Head, the Headache, Nervous Affections, Sore Throat, Sore Eyes, Hoarseness, Consumption, the thumb that gives a healing action to the parts affected. A facsimile of the signature of the Proprietor, CHARLES MARSHALL, is on every box. Sold by all Druggists. 272-84

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

PUBLISHED for the benefit and as a warning to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, &c.; together the means of Self-Cure. By one who cured himself after having been put to great expense through medical imposition and quackery. Single copies may be had of the author, NATHANIEL MAYFAIR, Box 1,922, Boston, Mass County, Ss. To pay for mailing a 3 cent postage stamp must be enclosed. 272-82

$1,500 PER ANNUM—Agents Wanted, local or travelling, in every Town and County in the United States. In this per cent. profit is realized. For particulars enclose red stamp to Nov. 101, Box D, Lockwood, Brooklyn Post Office, New York City. 282

To Nervous Sufferers.

A NEW Medical Appliance for the arrest of Local Debility, Spermatorrhœa, &c. Sent on receipt of stamp. Dr. Mellen, Box 1,922, Boston, Mass. Dr. HUNSETT, Box 153, cure R. Lockwood, Broadway Post Office, New York City. 282

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY Organunt will force them to grow heavily in 20 days, six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without Caustic or Stain. Will be sent to any part by mail, post free, on any address for $1. Address 282 GRAHAM, 109 Nassau St., New York.

MATRIMONY MADE EASY; OR, How to WIN A LOVER.—Containing plain, common-sense directions, showing how any person, of either sex, may become the object of affection, whether married or single, their age, personal appearance, &c. Any one can, by following the directions contained in this little work, and she rejects, when we will refund the money. Mailed free for 25 cents, in stamps or silver coin. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia Post Office, box 2,009.

AGENTS WANTED—In every town and city in the Union, to sell SHERMAN & CO'S NEW GIFT ENTERPRISES, which from $1 to $10 each. Can clear from $5 to $10 per day. Call or send for new style of Envelopes are now ready, which, in number of articles and real estate value, surpass anything of the kind ever before offered. Remember in price and quality we defy competition. Call on or address, inclosing stamp for Circular, SHERMAN & CO., 323 Broadway.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AND GYMNASIUM FOR YONKERS, N. Y.

Winter Session commenced on the 1st day of Nov

TERMS:

Board and Tuition.....$150 per Session.
For Circulars and particular information, apply to
M. N. WISEWELL, Principal
Yonkers, 1860 000

THE READERS OF

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper

Desiring to purchase any article in New York, no matter how trifling or costly, can have their orders promptly and faithfully fulfilled by addressing

JAMES W. FOSTER,

Box 2,222, Post Office,
19 City Hall Square, N. Y.

In all cases the necessary funds should be inclosed in the communication.

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S

LOTTERIES!

AUTHORIZED BY THE STATES OF

DELAWARE,

MISSOURI

AND

KENTUCKY.

Draw daily, in public, under the superintendence of Sworn Commissioners.

☞ The Managers' Offices are located at Wilmington Delaware, and St. Louis, Missouri.

PRIZES VARY FROM

$2 50 TO $100,000!

TICKETS FROM $3 50 TO $40.

☞ Circulars giving full explanations and the Scheme to be drawn, will be sent, free of expense, by addressing

WOOD, EDDY & CO., Wilmington, Delaware,
or
WOOD, EDDY & CO. St. Louis Mo.

Cephalic Pills.
CURE
Sick Headache,
CURE
Nervous Headache,
CURE
All kinds of
Headache.

By the use of these Pills the periodic attacks of Nervous or Sick Headache may be prevented; and if taken at the commencement of an attack immediate relief from pain and sickness will be obtained.

They seldom fail in removing the Nausea and Headache to which females are so subject.

They act really upon the bowels, removing Costiveness.

For Literary Men, Students, Delicate Females, and all persons of sedentary habits they are valuable as a Laxative, improving the appetite, giving tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and restoring the natural elasticity and strength of the whole system.

The CEPHALIC PILLS are the result of long investigation and carefully conducted experiments, having been in use many years, during which time they have been constantly and relieved vast amount of pain and suffering from Headache whether originating in the nervous system or from a deranged state of the stomach.

They are entirely vegetable in their composition, and may be taken at all times with perfect safety without making any change of diet, and the absence of any disagreeable taste renders it easy to administer them to children.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS

The genuine have five signatures of Henry C. Spalding on each Box

Sold by Druggists and all other Dealers in Medicines.

A Box will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

all orders should be addressed to

HENRY C. SPALDING,
48 Cedar St., New York.

THE FOLLOWING INDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS

Will convince all who suffer from

HEADACHE

THAT A SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS WITHIN THEIR REACH.

These Testimonials were unsolicited by Mr. Spalding, they afford unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

HACKENSACK, CORN., Feb. 5, 1861.

MR. SPALDING—SIR—I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I like them so well that I want you to send me two dollars worth by mail. Part of the pills are for the neighbors, to whom I gave a few out of the last box I got from you.

Send the Pills by return mail.

Yours truly, JAMES KENNEDY.

HAVERSTRAW, PA., Feb. 6, 1861.

MR. SPALDING—SIR—I wish you to send me one more box of your Cephalic Pills. I have received great benefit already from them. Yours respectfully, MARY ANN STONEHOUSE.

SOUTH CAIRO, HUNTINGDON CO., PA., Jan. 31, 1861.

H. C. SPALDING—DEAR SIR—You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately.

Respectfully yours, J. SIMONS.

P. S.—I have used one box of your Pills and find them excellent.

BELLE VERNON, CONN., Jan. 15, 1861.

HENRY C. SPALDING, ESQ.—DEAR SIR—I have used your Cephalic Pills, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best I have ever used. Send by return mail.

A. SNYDER, P. M.,
Belle Vernon, Westmoreland Co., O.

BOYLSTON, MASS., Dec. 31, 1859.

H. C. SPALDING, ESQ.—SIR—Please send me by express three large phew bills, to bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before my customers. If you have anything of the kind, please send to me. One of my customers, who is subject to severe Sick Headaches, informs me that he has been cured of an attack in one hour by your Pills, which I sent him. Respectfully yours, W. B. WILDES

☞ A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually. ☜

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SAVE THE PIECES

ECONOMY DISPATCH!

☞ "A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE." ☜

An accident will happen, even in well regulated families, it is easy accidents to have some kind of a convenient way for repairing furniture, toys, crockery, &c.

Spalding's Prepared Glue

meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It always ready, and up to the sticking point.

"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."

N. B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cts.

Address HENRY C. SPALDING,
No. 48 Cedar St., New York.

CAUTION.

As certain unprincipled persons are attempting to palm off on the unsuspecting public imitations of my PREPARED GLUE, I would caution the community against them purchasing, and see that the blue name is on the outside wrapper all others are swindling counterfeits.

☞ SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, ☜

THE WAR TRUTHFULLY TO JONATHAN NICKLEBYE, BOOK-KEEPER.

Jonathan Nicklebye, forty years book-keeper to Pickthing, Pendens & Co., having read of the wrongs of the North in the N. Y. Tribune, in the enthusiasm of the moment determines to volunteer on board the Dahlia. He shoulders his old volunteer musket and runs to bear himself away from the lessons of his family. The horse of his family, however, refuses to "go to war," and poor Nicklebye, after an ineffectual struggle against the base affections, forcibly expressed, concludes to let Government fight its own battles, quoting from memory the assurance that the "Pen is mightier than the Sword," and consequently that the quillDriver is better than the soldier.

CHARLES. HEIDSIECK
CHAMPAGNE.

The popular Wine, of which the undersigned are SOLE AGENTS FOR NORTH AMERICA,
Received the First Premium at the
BORDEAUX EXPOSITION IN 1859.

The Medal awarded by the judges can be seen on our office.
Geo. T. W. RAYARD & RICARD, 100 Pearl St., N. Y.

$50 PER MONTH and Expenses paid. Address for terms. J. W. HARRIS & CO., 279-87o Boston, Mass.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

THE Advertiser having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe Lung Affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c.

The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing. Parties wishing the prescription will please address

REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
281-6o Williamsburg, Kings County, N. Y.

A Splendid Chance to Make Money!

Persons desirous of engaging in the

JEWELLERY ENVELOPE AND DOLLAR JEWELLERY BUSINESS

Will find it greatly to their advantage, before purchasing jewellery elsewhere, to call or send to the

Cheapest House in America,

where dollar orders will be promptly and carefully attended to. FOOTE, WINGATE & CO., Manufacturing Jewellers, No. 208 Broadway, New York.
282o

RICH BOOKS.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEND FOR A CATALOGUE.

Books, Cards and Prints of every Description.

Children's toys PURCHASED and FREE. Address
C. M. BATHWAY, Purchasing Agency,
293-94o 208 Broadway, New York.

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN ON PENCIL.—See advertisement next page.
282-84o

WHEELER & WILSON'S
SEWING MACHINES

AT REDUCED PRICES
With Glass-Cloth Presser, Improved Loop-Check, New Style Hemmer, Under-Feed, &c.

Office, 505 Broadway, New York.

"This Machine makes the 'LOCK-STITCH,' and ranks highest on account of simplicity, permanency, beauty and adaptation of the stitch to the wide range of work, and the wide range of its application."—Report of American Institute, New York. 242-54o

HORSE POWDERS. DEPOT FOR S. G. WELLING'S Condition Powders for Horses, 418 Broome street, New York. Free Fifty Cents per box of one dozen doses 278-90o

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.

For curing and preventing Bald ness.
For removing Scurf and Dandruff.
For beautifying and making the Hair curl in ringlets.
It has the only safe and effectual compound of the kind in use.
Be sure and get the right article.
006

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator.
Price 50 cents per bottle.
Wholesale Depot, 80 Dey Street, New York.
294

PROF. L. MILLER'S INSTANTANEOUS LIQUID HAIR DYE
Price 50 cents per box.
Warranted superior to all others.
Try them, and you will acknowledge the fact. 271-85o

Ladd, Webster & Co's
IMPROVED NOISELESS SEWING MACHINES,
509 Broadway, New York. 000o

STEINWAY & SONS'

PATENT OVERSTRUNG GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS

Are now considered the best Pianos manufactured in North America, warranted for five years.
Warerooms, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker St., near Broadway, N. Y. 000o

GARDINER'S
Rheumatic and Neuralgia
COMPOUND,

A certain, safe and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Sick Headache. It is an internal remedy, driving out and entirely eradicating the disease, requiring no change in diet or business, and may be taken by children and persons of the most delicate constitution with perfect safety.

Principal Depot, 87 Ridge St., Boston, Mass. P. O. WELLS & CO., 48 Cedar St., New York. Wholesale Agents. Sold by Druggists everywhere.
Sold by J. MURRAY & SON, 183 Broadway. 271-97o

Smith and Wesson's Seven-Shooter.

J. W. STORRS, Agent.
181 Chambers Street, N. Y.

THIS PISTOL is light, has great force, is sure fire, shoots accurately, can be left loaded any length of time without injury, is not liable to get out of order, is safe to carry. Every Pistol warranted.

CAUTION TO DEALERS.

Be sure and get those stamped "Smith & Wesson, Springfield, Mass." None others genuine. All counterfeits produced that look of the breech are infringements. Pains are taken to detect, and all such infringements will be prosecuted. Be sure the cartridges have Smith & Wesson's name on each end of the box. 270-107o

A NEW STORY
By Mrs. Ann S. Stephens.

Be gins Dime Novels, No. 21.

"BIL CHASE;
OR, HE VALLEY RANCHE.
A TALE OF CALIFORNIA LIFE.

For sale at all News Depots. Complete, in one Ten Cent Book.

282o Address BEADLE & COMPANY, New York.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE—NEW INVENTION.—Address, inclosing Stamp, DR. PARSON, No. 5 ANN St., New York City. 291o

NOW WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Grover & Baker's
CELEBRATED NOISELESS
Sewing Machines.

Simply can afford to be without one.

495 BROADWAY, N. Y.
000o

Dr. Brown's Patent Baby-Fender.

Home for the Friendless.

A. J. BROWN & CO., Warerooms No. 612 Broadway, N. Y., between Bleecker and Houston Sts. Send for circular. 000

Patented November 1st, 1859.

The measures are

A, the distance round the Neck.

B is B, the Yoke.

C is C, the Sleeve

D is D, distance around the Body under the armpits

E to E, the length of the Shirt.

BALLOU'S
Patented Improved French Yoke
SHIRTS.
Patented November 1st, 1859.

A New Style of Shirt, warranted to Fit.

By sending the above measures per mail we can guarantee a perfect fit. Shirts sent to any part of the country by Express to any part of the United States, $12, $13, $14, $15, &c., per dozen. No order forwarded for less than half a dozen Shirts.

Also Importers and Dealers in MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS

BALLOU BROTHERS,
609 Broadway, N. Y.
Wholesale Trade supplied on the usual terms

Thorley's Food for Cattle.

FOR Horses, Cows, Sheep and Hogs, the effects produced in one month will exceed all expectations. A Pamphlet mailed free. Agents Wanted. Depot, 21 Broadway, New York. 271-85o

BILLIARD BALLS, Ivory and Patent Composition, at reduced prices. Manufactured and for sale by WM. M. WELLING, 44 Nassau St. Send for a Circular. 278-85o

Colds.

Are now aware of the importance of checking a Cough or "Common Cold" in its first stage; that which in the beginning would yield to mild remedy, if neglected, soon attacks the Lungs, and Consumption, Bronchitis, Incurable Throat Diseases, commencing. Obtain only Brown's Bronchial Troches, which contain only simple Pulmonary Irritation.

Shaler's Flexible Roller Patent Floor Skates.

Beware of Counterfeits.

The use of these Skates imparts a perfect knowledge of the art of skating on ice, as well as furnishing the most pleasing and healthful exercise ever presented to the public. Hundreds of rinks in this city have become produced by the use of these Skates.

For sale only at the factory, 646 Broadway, N. Y., and by C. M. Will, Sole Agent and Manufacturer. 000

THE ILLUSTRATING OF FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER is done by WILLIAM BENTON, No. 10 William St., New York

Second Edition.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1861, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 283—Vol. XI.] NEW YORK, SATURDAY, APRIL 27, 1861. [Price 6 Cents.

IMPORTANT NOTICE!

To Officers and others Attached to the Armies of the Federal and the Confederate States.

I shall be happy to receive from Officers and others attached to either Army, sketches of important events and striking incidents which may occur during the impending struggle which seems to threaten the country. For such sketches, forwarded promptly, I will pay liberally.

My corps of Artists is unequalled in the country, and correspondents can depend upon their sketches, however rough, being produced in the finest style of art.

Any gentleman connected with either Army who will forward us a small sketch, as a specimen of his ability as a draughtsman, will receive, gratuitously, "Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper," for the coming year.

Sketches of unusual interest will be most liberally paid for.

Special attention is requested to this notice.

FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square.

The Only Reliable War Illustrations.

The Illustrations of the Secession troubles in the South, in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, are the only authentic and reliable sketches which have appeared. Four months since we dispatched a special Artist to Charleston, who has resided there ever since, visiting Columbia and Montgomery on occasions of importance, and furnishing us spirited and reliable sketches from all those points. During the past few weeks he has been on Morris Island, and was present there during the bombardment of Fort Sumpter.

Two weeks ago we despatched another special Artist to Charleston, who was present in that city during the whole of the fight.

Some of the results of our liberal enterprise will be found in the superb illustrations in our present issue. They are graphic and accurate, and are in advance of all other publications.

For several months we have had a special Artist stationed at Washington, who has kept our readers au courant with all the important events transpiring there.

It is by such enterprise that we distance all competitors, and sustain the proud position awarded us universally as the only Illustrated Newspaper in America.

The most convincing proof of the reliability and accuracy of our illustrations is, that ours is the only Illustrated Paper which is allowed to circulate freely in the South, and an additional proof is, that it stands a critical examination in those places where the scenes we illustrate occurred.

In the struggle which is fast approaching we shall retain our supremacy, for we have perfected arrangements which will secure us copious sketches from reliable sources in advance of all other papers.

EXCITEMENT ON THE BATTERY AT CHARLESTON, S. C., DURING THE BOMBARDMENT OF FORT SUMPTER.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 285.

Barnum's American Museum

IS overflowing with Living Wonders, including Old Grizzly Adams! A California Bear, which performs a variety of amusing tricks; Jessie Lee, Arctic Queen, Albino Family, What is It? Bearded Lady, Egyptian Queen, and expert Rope-Dancers, Gymnasts, Pantomimists and everything else.

IRVING HALL,

FIFTH PLACE AND FIFTEENTH STREET,

Opposite to the

ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

FOR BALLS, CONCERTS, LECTURES, FESTIVALS, FAIRS, &c., &c.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

FRANK LESLIE, Editor and Publisher.

NEW YORK, APRIL 27, 1861.

Communications, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to Frank Leslie, 19 Ann Street, New York.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One Copy	1 week	$ 1
One do.	1 month	$ 4
One do.	3 months	$ 12
Or One Copy	1 year	$ 52
Three Copies	1 year	$ 140
Five do.	1 year (and one extra copy)	$ 250

And an extra Copy to the person sending a Club of Five. Every additional subscription, $5.

NOTICE TO PHOTOGRAPHERS.

We shall be much obliged to our photographic friends if they will write in pencil the name and description on the back of each picture, together with their own name and address. This would be a great convenience from the fact that as many photographs are sent to us from our friends throughout the country without any such memorandum, that we frequently have to write them an request with everything that transpires or occurs in all parts of the United States. Our correspondents never grow tired of writing to us for news about everything which occurs of public importance throughout the world, still we are not so ubiquitous that we can personally attend to the circuit of our far-reaching information. To save labor and insure accuracy, descriptions and names (as above indicated) should, in all cases, accompany photographic pictures or sketches.

Foreign News.

England.—The British Ministry have recognized the King of Italy, being the first of the Great Powers to show its approval of the Revolution. Lord Elgin had reached Calcutta, and was proceeding to have operations begun in the Gold-Coast of India. The Volunteer Review and sham fight was held on Easter Monday, and was a very successful affair.

France.—Trade is very dull. A messenger had arrived in Paris with a petition to Prince Napoleon, praying him to accept the throne when vacant by politeness, to assume the throne of Naples. The prompt action of Lord Palmerston in acknowledging Victor Emanuel as King of Italy is supposed to have been instigated by the knowledge of this intrigue.

Austria.—The Vienna Military Gazette says the Emperor has ordered that all the soldiers belonging to districts where cholera has appeared, shall be put in quarantine at the end of June, may at once go on furlough. The Prince Vicegerent of Hungary has said a good natured joke in which the recent proceedings of Count Cavour have rendered their resignation a still more delicate matter. He said that Garibaldian ideas were in a more inventive. The insurgents in the Herzegovina have been repulsed by the Turkish troops. The King is in the midst of a number of the Minister have tendered their resignation is still in circulation, but it is not stated whether it has been accepted. A correspondent of the Pesth Post says the opening of the Diet will most probably take place on Saturday next. The Archduke Charles Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, died on the 2d April 24. The Vienna Ministry will remain in office.

Italy.—Garibaldi had an interview with Prince Pierre Bonaparte on the 3d of April. He has also expressed that he will not require their services in a fortnight. It is currently rumored that war will ensue with Austria in a short time.

Poland.—The conversion of the Jews into Christians have not reached the people. The warning of mourning has become more general, and a much greater number of people appear in the funeral costume. The Jesuits are said to have the secrecy for modernism. The consecration of military continues. Diamond citizens, being duly authorized, entered the streets. Two or three hour disguises are again acting as a Provisional Municipality. Another distinguished man Count Zamoyski, on the occasion of his being received in audience by Prince Gortschakoff, addressed him in a speech, of which the following is a summary: "the country" said Zamoyski, "will accept the reforms with gratitude, but at the present moment these are but nominal. The country depended upon their being carried into execution." Prince Gortschakoff replied: "It was no secret to me upon the Emperor to accept anything; but in placing the Government in the hands of Count Wielopolski."

Turkey.—Sir Henry Bulwer has presented a project of financial reform to the Porte, advising the publication of the Budget, retrenchment in its expenditure, consolidation of the public debt, and the sale of government land. The rep. The reforms has been well received by the Divan. Troops have been landed on the coast between Scutari and Smyrna. The Austrian Consul-general upwards of 200 Bosnian volunteers, provided with Wallachian passports, have embarked for Montenegro. Ismail Pasha has been appointed Governor of Naples.

New Granada.—There is no doubt that General Mosquera has triumphed over President Ospina, after two battles, the last of which, it is said, lasted ninety-two days. The civil war may, therefore, be considered at an end.

Venezuela.—New York Correspondence has been received to the 21st of March. Congress had elected General Paez arbitrator, and been appointed to the chief command of the army, and the opera had commenced. The chief singers were Madame Ortolani, Marini, Bosio and Salvatori.

St. Domingo.—It was our judge from the intelligence just received from St. Domingo, the remarkable fertility of the Spanish portion of the island is easily done as the public has imagined. The British and French colonies have produced sugarcane magnificently, and the Spanish colonies have not. This, however, we have seen Jamaica and Paris, it is impossible to name the real statement of Lord Brougham and Mr. Cobden. It is not hardly to be supposed that Spain would venture on such an act without the consent of three rivers in Europe. It may be easy to see how far they can proceed in upon the Americ an Eagle is her present bad winged condition.

The Coming Conflict.

In reply to the declaration of war made by the Southern Confederacy upon the Federal Government in its bombardment of Fort Sumpter, while in possession of the Federal troops, the President of the United States has issued the following important proclamation:

By the President of the United States:

A Proclamation.

Whereas, the laws of the United States have been for some time past and now are opposed, and the execution thereof obstructed, in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, and Texas, by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, or by the powers vested in the marshals by law:

Now, therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, in virtue of the power in me vested by the Constitution and the laws, have thought it to call forth, and hereby do call forth, the militia of the several States of the Union, to the aggregate number of 75,000, in order to cause said combinations, and to cause the laws to be duly executed. The details for this object will be immediately communicated to the several authorities, through the War Department.

I appeal to all loyal citizens to favor, facilitate and aid this effort to maintain the honor, the integrity and the existence of our National Union and the perpetuity of our popular Government, and to redress wrongs already long enough endured.

I deem it proper to say that the first service assigned to the forces hereby called forth will probably be to repossess the forts, places and property which have been seized from the Union, and in every event the utmost care will be observed, consistent with this object, to avoid any devastation, any disturbance of, or interference with property, or any disturbance of peaceful citizens in any part of the country. And I hereby command the persons composing the combinations aforesaid to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within twenty days from this date.

Deeming that the present condition of public affairs presents an extraordinary occasion, I do, hereby, convene the two Houses of the Congress of the United States. Senators and Representatives are therefore commanded to assemble at their respective chambers, at twelve o'clock noon, on Thursday, the fourth day of July next, then and there to consider and determine such measures as in their wisdom the public safety and interest may seem to demand.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, this fourth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, and of the independence of the United States the eighty-fifth.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

The Secretary of War, in accordance with the President's proclamation, has issued a call for seventy-four regiments, to be apportioned among the States in the following manner:

Maine, 1; New Hampshire, 1; Massachusetts, 2; Connecticut, 1; New Jersey, 1; Pennsylvania, 8; Indiana, 6; Illinois, 6; Minnesota, 1; Kentucky, 4; Vermont, 1; Rhode Island, 1; New York, 17; Ohio, 13; Tennessee, 2; Michigan, 3; Wisconsin, 2; Missouri, 4; California, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Kansas and Oregon have not yet been called upon, nor will they be probably required.

The States of New York has responded promptly. The Legislature has authorized the arming and equipping of 30,000 men. It has also appropriated $3,000,000 to carry on the war spirit seems to be thoroughly roused, and offers of immense sums of money and vast numbers of recruits pour in from all quarters. A few days will probably suffice to decide the fate of the country. In the present neutral States, when the strength of the contending parties will be defined.

A terrible and imminent danger overhangs our great and beloved country, and we look around in vain in the hope of finding some powerful solution of the difficulties which surround us. God forbid that such a question should be left to the sword's point and the rout of the cannon!

An Ominous Year.

The year 1861 seems destined to a terrible distinction in the annals of the world, for wherever the eye may rest the upheaving of society are seen. The heaved civilization of the age is centered in the United States, consequently the great cure of our statesmen seems to be quick palliatives. The stimulant of a hideous glory—War, or the analogue of superstition seem to be much their remedy for social evils.

The revolutionary processes of England are of so slow a nature that we cannot reasonably predicate what she is tending to. It would, however, seem as though the inclined plane of her constitutional institutions rendered her changes as gradual as the movements of nature. She submitted into the progress of the age. Nevertheless, even England is menaced with the sword of Damocles—French invasion; and although there is no doubt that the British Lion is not to be trifled with, we could and in their finding graves where they sought only plunder, yet, with that cold-blooded caution which characterizes the Saxon, they would not risk the chance of a victory to gaining it at the expense of a devestation.

Thus, England herself has a very uneasy bed, and even now she must have golden dream to grasp uneasy bed, and even now she must have golden dream to grasp uneasy bed, and even as usual, has the restless search of a beauty ill at ease in repetition and constantly changing her position. Even Italy and the Luxembourg—and her national spirit is kept alive by the antagonism she receives from the united Austrian Empire.

Even now unhappy is the condition of Austria. Despoiled of her provinces of Lombardy and deprived of her allies in Italy, she, like England, has her restless spirits ever ready to upset of Venetia and Hungary. Slowly are those silent fields pressing out her life, but she has not the wisdom to speak that one word—Constitution, for in that word would be the full force of Lord Palmerston's words, that, while Hungary is discontented, and her right hand employed in keeping Venetia pinned to the earth, Austria could not do the work England required of an ally who was to be the counterpoise to France.

Now has Russia a brighter horoscope. Poland, in an extreme stage of distress, has been goaded into insurrection, and the cruel massacres has spoken out, in her indignant grief, words which have provoked a reply from Prince Gortschakoff so subtle and diplomatic that it is difficult for us to construe us that the recent confranchisement of the serfs is not the dictate of a great principle, but simply the strategy of the Russian Czar. Indeed, Alexander of Russia must therefore consider himself as a doomed man, without he change his course; for, like all men of his class, he will not only fall between the two stools, but be crushed by them. He has tampered with the truth, and having put his hand to the plough, he has looked back.

Nor has Italy a more bright and peace upon her birthday landscape. Garibaldi, that glorious comet, is now recpeeping and throwing his lurid light over the enslaved portion of Venetia. It is hard to say anything doubtingly of so great, so good, so unselfish a man; but our purest men, in their non-calculation of human exigencies, make the greatest errors, and we should not be strictly astonished if we live to know that the impatience of a great patriot has been as fatal to his country as the treacherous bayonet of a Cavaignac.

Turkey, old, decrepid and sick, is now lying on its deathbier, and all the medals administered by England will never galvanize it beyond a few expiring spasms. It is a thing of the past, and it now encumbers the earth. Let it totter to its Asian grave, and never more trouble Europe. What the Indians are in America, the Turks are in Europe. They are wandering tribes. The Abdul-Medjids rest with the Pontiacs and the Tecumsehs. Public opinion, and not fire-water and opium, has killed them. We have not yet seen the last scene of the game in Syria, Asia, but there the Old is passing away! Thus, in whatever aspect the world is viewed, it is one of terrible foreboding. The great heart of humanity seems throbbing, and the brain of society has cast loose its usual habits of thought. Interest seems to be the only link to bind man to man, and nation to nation. Principle and patriotism have been trampled down by wickedness and by politicians, and to slumber in the human hearts feeling, or rather is torpidity, akin to that which uttered, "After me the deluge;" but we know well that the reaction will come, and out of this lethargy, mental, moral and social, and this disturbance will rise, even as a glorious golden noon out of storm and darkness, an era which will be termed the golden day of the world.

EDITORIAL GLANCES AT MEN AND THINGS.

The Hideous Falsehoods daily promulgated by the sheets when have secreted for the last few months, have, in the present crisis, a sinister reckless, that no line contradicts another. The matter they are made of must be to brass. Their circulation depends on the public, which, as a body, is sooner or perhaps educated that it opens its mouth and shuts its eyes, and swallows all that is offered to it. In addition to manifold absurdities, this graph-liner indulges in such emphatic nothings, that common sense lies in a state of torpor, and the very air of the day is charged with poison. Every speech and telegram on these who appeared in the daily papers of Saturday. "A Proclamation to the Secessionists" was published, and what has been the result from Fort Sumpter?" "Not at all," was the President's reply. And again, "The President will not recognize the Confederacy." "Not at all," is the answer. Here are statements—they should only deal in fact. The electric fluid is so charged with lies that it is now used as a power in lying.

Notwithstanding the Melancholy state of our public affairs, the parties journals are as full of party warfare as ever. Some editors say that we had better say something "smart," but, generally speaking, their composition is smothered by wit or humor. The Albany Knickerbocker of the present month is a fair specimen of the dullness of the old fogyism.

"If Mr. Lincoln blames in these circumstance, they will undertake to share the White House with him, and if he succeeds in making that an odd Democratic affair, believe it is the small-pox twice. He would take even this, but scarce for take it."

Considering that the old Knickerbocker constitutes about one-fifth of the Republican party it is quite unnecessary to say that they take their politics as the pig herd. Those republicans for the pennies on a dead man's eyes are somewhat ridiculous.

The Daily Papers have sustained duty this Hours. Heighvoice has been in a state of excitement. The Daily News, with more than its usual wit, says: "We wish they would put a new master in it."

G. W. P. Custis, in his "Recollections of Washington," given a copy of a curious document, the original of which is in his hand, between Washington and Philip Ratnin, his partner. After the usual clauses, it provides that the said Barnes "will at all times and in every way demean himself as an honest factor, except on terms hereinafter mentioned." After enumerating the clothing, &c., to be found by Washington, it says he is to be allowed "five pounds of tobacco, with which he may be drank four days and four nights. Also one gallon of rum, brandy or whiskey, with sugar and other liquors sufficient to make a bowl of grog at dinner at noon." We can easily comprehend what each rebel soldier in the Confederate States army would say at such a proposition, and bet the inference is that Washington, being an eminently practical man, saw the impossibility of getting a man to work for such pay, and therefore did not vault, and so made a compromise, which should retain him in the rank of national beings. But the Confederate States army has taken its position before Barnes into the realms of rum altogether. Six days' intoxication is not two per cent., and is very moderate compared to many of our modern rebels.

PERSONAL.

MISS PEABODY, one of the most brilliant writers of our age and country, about to marry a young lawyer. She is one substitute for the dull routine of the old-fashioned wedding.

JOSEPH TRENTO, Brotherhood the Master of Journalism, and founder of the Boston Courier, died in Boston on the 19th April, in his 70th year. He was also lost tutor writer.

LOUIS THIERRY and Mr. Gladstone, Chancellor of the Exchequer, have lately published a volume of translations from the Latin and Greek poets. They are highly spoken of.

M. GUIZOT, GENERAL THIERRY, is now commander of the Federal forces in the city of Washington. He is a man of considerable military talent, as well as other warm personal friends in this city, by whom he name is a guarantee that the flag of the Union will be upheld in the city of Washington. Mr. Secretary Seward, General Thierry comes of revolutionary stock, and his father is Vice-President of the United States. He was born in the year 1791, in the city of New York, and was educated at Columbia College, of which institution he is a graduate. He entered the United States army as a Second Lieutenant of Foot Militia, when the commander, Major Mellon, was killed in the battle of Lundy's Lane, on the 25th July, 1814. He was stationed at Washington, where he is now enabled to render his country important service in the hour of her need, by the command of the Militia of the District of Columbia.

G. A. Simonds, of Buffalo, has resigned his position as General of the Thirty-third Regiment, New York State Militia. The General does not feel very well in himself of his county, and is thereby inhibited from holding any other office.

THOMAS BARNES, the celebrated editor of Magdalen, is recovering from typhus-fever.

DRAMATIC Reunions are becoming the common. Not long ago, Jordan, of the Cathedral Garden, and Boyle, the magician, had a passage of arms in a saloon in the Bowery, and on Saturday night last Kirby were to have had a meeting. Gentlemen of the sock and buskin, hone down your exuberance.

THE KING OF SWEDEN has conferred the Commandership of the Sword being Count to Baron, Count of Turin, and Count of Florence.

THE KING OF PRUSSIA, on the occasion of his brother, has accepted the position of trustees of the Milwaukee Female College. She is well qualified for that responsible post.

MR. JOHN GILBERT, a most talented and notable member of the Bryant's Minstrels, has been engaged for the season at Wallack's. Mr. Gilbert, in New York. He was formerly connected with Burbridge's Minstrels.

THE NEW YORK Herald says that Mr. Johnson, who was President of the Chinese Convention, and subsequently Ambassador, made negotiations with Yeh, the Governor of Canton, whose residence the mayor of Boston, and of progress of his Majesty's fleet under Admiral Seymour. Mr. Johnson is a native of Boston, and head of this one of Daniel Webster and delights in talk with the many persons to be met with in the Boston Athenæum. Mr. Johnson is a man of letters, and the cause of allowing many impressions the appetite of literary appreciation for years and years, and he will not be disappointed in the result. Mr. Johnson is a native of the Athenæum is now nearly crowded to the doors with the literary men of Boston.

THE NEW YORK Herald says that on the 19th April, the first Centennial anniversary occurs. It opened the history in 1812.

JOSEPH A. DEVOE, of Boston bookseller fame, has become one of General Beauregard's staff.

At the palace of Sesenmuhlen, in Sweden, there is a portrait of a peasant which is represented, on an occasion of emergency, to have drawn an elbow with important decoration the inexcusable distance of eight hundred English miles in forty-eight hours. The occasion was when Napoleon I. was in full retreat into the first dropped down in a state of exhaustion. The peasant, who was a courier, was sent off with the news of the 1809, in order as to be in time to prepare for the reception of the King. The distance, which three days' relief to fight shadow, the first performed three thousand and two hundred miles in the same time. Napoleon, at the rate of twenty miles an hour, the second did the same distance in three minutes, and the third in eleven minutes twenty-six seconds.

THE BEGINNING OF CIVIL WAR.

The Bombardment of Fort Sumpter by the Forces of the Southern Confederate States.

DEFENCE BY MAJOR ANDERSON.

SEVEN BATTERIES CONCENTRATE THEIR FIRES ON FORT SUMPTER.

THE FORT SEVERAL TIMES ON FIRE.

Surrender of Fort Sumpter after Forty Hours Bombardment.

Little did we think, when we issued our last paper, that a bloody and fratricidal war was so close upon us. We felt then that the danger was imminent; but we trusted that the forbearance which had hitherto characterized the movements of both parties would still prevail—that the attitude of strength which both parties assumed would have engendered a mutual respect and a wholesome dread of a resort to arms, which must necessarily lead to a fearful, protracted, bitter and bloody struggle, the end of which would either be still disunion or a forced submission, which would, ultimately, prove as disastrous. We were rudely awakened from this pleasant dream of security on Friday evening, by rumors that the forts of the Confederate States had opened their fire upon Fort Sumpter, and were being replied to vigorously by Major Anderson. The report ran through the city like wildfire. Not more swiftly did the electric fluid flash the message over the lines than did the news fly through the length and breadth of the city. On Saturday morning the city was in a state of the wildest agitation. By many the news was utterly discredited as it reached us through a means which was entirely in the control of the Confederated authorities; but the majority felt a solemn conviction that, although some of the details might be exaggerated, the leading points were founded on facts, and that the most terrible of all calamities—civil war—was at last commenced in earnest.

The Cause of the Commencement of Hostilities.

From the moment that the telegraph made the Government of the Confederate States aware that ships of war and provision ships had sailed from New York under sealed orders, the preparations for defence and attack in Charleston harbor were carried on with extraordinary activity. The sentiments of the officials and the public became at once marvellously warlike. All seemed to have arrived at the solemn determination not to permit reinforcements and supplies to be thrown into Fort Sumpter, while supported by the presence of Federal ships of war. It was believed that if unarmed vessels approached with provisions only they would be permitted to pass the cannon-bristling forts unchallenged and unmolested. It was this general belief which rendered the public mind utterly unprepared for the astounding news which was suddenly to precipitate the entire community into astonishment and dismay.

The immediate cause of the commencement of hostilities will be found in the following correspondence:

GENERAL BEAUREGARD TO THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Charleston, April 8, 1861.

L. P. Walker, Secretary of War:

An authorized messenger from President Lincoln just informed Governor Pickens and myself that provisions will be sent to Fort Sumpter peaceably, or otherwise by force.

P. G. T. BEAUREGARD.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR TO GENERAL BEAUREGARD.

Montgomery, April 10, 1861.

Gen. P. G. T. Beauregard, Charleston:

If you have no doubt of the authorized character of the agent who communicated to you the intention of the Washington Government to supply Fort Sumpter by force, you will at once demand its evacuation; and if this is refused proceed in such manner as you may determine to reduce it. Answer.

L. P. WALKER, Secretary of War.

GENERAL BEAUREGARD TO THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Charleston, April 10, 1861.

L. P. Walker, Secretary of War:

The demand will be made to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

P. G. T. BEAUREGARD.

GENERAL BEAUREGARD TO THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Charleston, April 11, 1861.

L. P. Walker, Secretary of War:

Major Anderson replies,

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication demanding the evacuation of this fort, and to say in reply thereto that it is a demand with which I regret that my sense of honor and my obligations to my Government prevent my compliance."

He adds:

"Probably I will await the first shot, and if you do not batter us to pieces we will be starved out in a few days."

Answer.

P. G. T. BEAUREGARD.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR TO GENERAL BEAUREGARD.

Montgomery, April 11, 1861.

Gen. P. G. T. Beauregard, Charleston:

We do not desire needlessly to bombard Fort Sumpter if Major Anderson will state the time at which, as indicated by him, he will evacuate, and agree that, in the meantime, he will not use his guns against us, unless ours should be employed against Fort Sumpter.

You are thus to avoid the effusion of blood. If this or its equivalent be refused, reduce the fort as your judgment decides to be the most practicable.

L. P. WALKER, Secretary of War.

GENERAL BEAUREGARD TO THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Charleston, April 12, 1861.

L. P. Walker, Secretary of War:

He would not consent. I write to-day.

P. G. T. BEAUREGARD.

Growing Excitement Among the People.

While this correspondence was going on the excitement in the city of Charleston was intense.

Hundreds of persons were waiting for hours on the wharves and other points of observation, to see the beginning of the conflict, among them a great number of ladies. The people were out on the housetops watching with feverish interest for the first signal of attack. Every train brought throngs of citizens and soldiers to town. Twenty-two car loads came from Columbia on the night of the 10th. A call was made for three hundred mounted volunteers, as an extra patrol in the city. Over one thousand responded. The Sixteenth regiment was ordered on duty. This embraces all the militia of Charleston not already in the army. Major Anderson is said to have fired a signal gun during the morning, for what object has not transpired. He was busy all day strengthening his position. The movements at Fort Sumpter are plainly visible with a glass. The State has thoroughly prepared for the event. The supply of ammunition and artillery is adequate to any emergency. The confidence in its ability to do all that is attempted is unlimited. Fire signals were burning in the harbor.

Senators Wigfall, Chesnut, Ex-Governor Manning, of South Carolina, Hon. W. P. Miles, ex-Member of Congress, and Pryor, of Virginia, are on the staff of General Beauregard.

Business was suspended. The Citadel Cadets were guarding the battery with heavy cannon. Thousands were waiting to see the attack commenced. One thousand mounted men and two thousand patrols, heavily armed, were guarding the city.

The Night Before the Siege.

On the 11th it was generally known in the city that a formal demand to surrender Fort Sumpter would be made by Gen. Beauregard of Major Anderson; and as might be expected the city became alive with excitement. It was a season of terrible and feverish anxiety, which beggars all powers of description. The streets were thronged. Agitated thousands crowded the Battery; the windows and the housetops were alive with people, and even the church-towers displayed their anxious crowds. Every eye was fixed upon the silent, threatening forts, and "Will he surrender?" "When will the firing begin if he does not?" were questions asked thousands of times and again and again repeated.

The Morning of the Fight—Extraordinary Excitement of the People—Thousands of Ladies on the Battery.

That day passed, but the crowd did not diminish nor the anxieties cease. It became known that the demand to surrender had been made to Major Anderson and refused, and that the fort would be positively bombarded within a few hours. Hundreds of people never sought their beds that night, actuated by a restless desire to see the commencement of a foray which would in all probability be prolonged and deadly. With the first boom of the gun thousands rushed from their beds to the harbor front, and all day every available place was thronged by ladies and gentlemen viewing the solemn spectacle through their glasses. Most of these have relatives in the several fortifications, and many a tearful eye attested the anxious affections of the mother, wife and sister, but not a murmur came from a single individual.

Commencement of the Bombardment.

At twenty minutes past four on Friday morning, April the 13th, the bombardment commenced by guns from Fort Moultrie. To these Major Anderson replied with three of his barbette guns, after which the batteries on Mount Pleasant, Cummings' Point, and the Floating Battery opened a brisk fire of shot and shell.

Major Anderson did not reply, except at long intervals, until between seven and eight o'clock, when he brought into action the two tiers of guns looking towards Fort Moultrie and Stevens' iron battery. His fire was principally directed against Fort Moultrie, Stevens' and the Floating batteries and Fort Johnson. Only five of the nineteen opposing batteries were opened upon Fort Sumpter, the others being held in reserve to operate against any naval force that might come to the assistance of Major Anderson. During the whole of the day the bombardment was kept up without cessation on both sides.

Some fifteen or eighteen shots from Fort Sumpter struck the Floating Battery, but made not the slightest impression upon its iron-cased sides. The Stevens' Battery was eminently successful, and did terrible execution on Fort Sumpter.

From the regular and unintermitting firing from Fort Sumpter, it was thought that it must have been secretly reinforced. If not, the service was wonderful under the circumstances, and the labor of the short-handed garrison must have been tremendous. The most devoted loyalty to their flag must have animated that handful of brave hearts thus hopelessly battling against such overwhelming odds. Such Spartan-like devotion won admiration even from their determined assailants. Two rainstorms occurred during the day, but caused no interruption to the siege; but at 7 P.M. it poured down so heavily that hostilities were suspended until 11 P.M.; from that time during the whole night bombs were sent into Fort Sumpter from all the batteries, making about two a minute. The scene was magnificent beyond description, and thousands who had been watching the action all day returned when the batteries resumed their fire at 11 P.M., and remained until morning.

The first shot was fired from Fort Johnson, on Morris Island, by Captain James, and the second by Lieutenant U. H. Gibbs. The first shot from Stevens' Battery was fired by the venerable Edmund Ruffin, of Virginia.

The damage done to Fort Sumpter by the day's bombardment was thought to be very severe. The rifled cannon literally tore the solid brickwork into fragments. It is estimated that from twelve to eighteen hundred balls and shells were fired during the day. Over one hundred shells took effect inside the fort.

THE SECOND DAY'S SIEGE.

During the night of the 12th the guns in Fort Sumpter were silent. The garrison were laboriously engaged in repairing damages and in protecting the barbette guns not already disabled. At seven A.M. on the 13th, Major Anderson again replied to the vicious attacks which assailed him on every side. For two hours his great guns flashed and boomed incessantly. But another enemy had found him out, even in the heart of his own stronghold. A dense smoke, which soon enveloped the whole fort, showed that it was on fire within. The red-hot shot from Fort Moultrie had ignited the officers' quarters, and the flames raged fiercely. But even in this terrible position, the firing was not discontinued, only slackened. The little garrison must have worked with superhuman vigor in repelling an enemy from without and subduing a fiercer one within. By noon the whole roof of the fort was on fire and all the buildings, and to add to the fearful emergency of the garrison, several heavy explosions of magazines and shells took place. A raft was hastily constructed and laden with many men, who passed up buckets of water to their comrades in the fort, in a vain attempt to extinguish the flames. During this time the Federal flag was displayed half-mast as a signal of distress. Still no help came from the ships, which were plainly visible in the offing. The beleaguered men must have bitterly felt the seemingly cold-hearted indifference of their friends thus calmly viewing their certain destruction.

Gallantry of the Besiegers.

Still the iron hail poured out remorselessly and incessantly from the Confederate batteries. The work of destruction was carried on with extraordinary skill and perseverance. Every shot and every shell told with fearful effect upon the doomed fortress. The Southern soldiers, officers and men, vied with each other in enthusiasm and daring. After every discharge, they leaped upon the ramparts to watch the effect of their missiles, then jumped back again, shouting triumphantly. They seemed perfectly reckless of their lives, and showed a gallantry and daring courage that could not be excelled.

During the morning, the flagstaff of Fort Sumpter was carried away, but shortly after the Federal flag was seen floating from a pole, soon, however to be replaced by a flag of truce, and, later, by the flag of the Confederate States of the South.

Raising of the Flag of Truce.

After struggling against circumstances the most terrible and calamitous, Major Anderson felt the necessity of raising a flag of truce. It must have cost the gallant soldier a bitter and severe pang before he came to the determination to yield that which he had so nobly striven to retain.

After the flagstaff of Anderson was shot away, Colonel Wigfall, aide to General Beauregard, at his commander's request, went to Sumpter with a white flag to offer assistance in extinguishing the flames. He approached the burning fortress from Morris Island, and while the firing was raging on all sides, effected a landing at Sumpter. He approached a porthole, and was met by Major Anderson. The commander of Fort Sumpter said he had just displayed a white flag, but the firing from the Carolina batteries was kept up, nevertheless.

Hauling Down the Flag of the United States.

Colonel Wigfall replied that Major Anderson must haul down the American flag; that no parley would be granted. Surrender or fight was the word. Major Anderson then hauled down his flag, and displayed only that of truce.

All firing instantly ceased, and two others of General Beauregard's staff, Ex-Senator Chesnut and Ex-Governor Manning, came over in a boat and stipulated with the Major that his surrender should be unconditional for the present, subject to the terms of General Beauregard.

Major Anderson was allowed to remain, with his men, in actual possession of the fort, while Messrs. Chesnut and Manning came over to the city, accompanied by a member of the Palmetto Guards, bearing the colors of his company. These were met at the pier by hundreds of citizens, and as they marched up the street to the General's quarters the crowd swelled to thousands. Shouts rent the air, and the wildest joy was manifested on account of the welcome tidings.

A Boat Comes from the Fleet Outside.

After the surrender, a boat, with an officer and ten men, was sent from one of the four ships in the offing to General Simons, commanding on Morris Island, with a request that a merchant ship or one of the vessels of the United States be allowed to enter and take off the Commander and garrison of Fort Sumpter.

General Simons replied that if no hostilities were attempted during the night, and no effort was made to reinforce or retake Fort Sumpter, he would give an answer at nine o'clock on Sunday morning.

Major Anderson's Reasons for Surrendering the Fort.

Major Anderson stated that he surrendered his sword to General Beauregard, as the representative of the Confederate Government. General Beauregard said he would not receive it from so brave a man. He says Major Anderson made a staunch fight, and elevated himself in the estimation of every true Carolinian.

Major Anderson surrendered because his quarters and barracks were destroyed, and he had no hope of reinforcements. The fleet lay idly by during the thirty hours of the bombardment, and either could not or would not help him; besides, his men were prostrate from over-exertion.

There were but five of them hurt—four badly, and one, it is thought, mortally—but the rest were worn out. The flames have destroyed everything. Both officers and soldiers were obliged to lay on their faces in the casemates to prevent suffocation.

After the fort was turned over to the Confederate Government, Major Anderson became the guest of General Beauregard until the time when he and his command left Charleston in the steamer Baltic for New York. The time fixed for their departure was Monday night, at eleven o'clock.

The most extraordinary feature of this remarkable siege is, that during forty hours of severe bombardment, replied to vigorously during a whole day and part of the next night by Fort Sumpter, not a single life was lost; and so far as we can learn, no man on either side was seriously wounded. It will for ever be a matter of astonishment how two or three thousand shots and shells, almost all of which reached their destination, should fall thus harmlessly as regards life. Stone and brick walls were battered, guns dismounted, embankments pierced, but of the thousands of men who fearlessly hazarded their lives on that occasion, not one was injured. Though vigorously contested, it was the most bloodless battle on record. It is a source of sincere congratulation to every true patriot that no kindred blood was shed, and the prayer is earnest in every section of the country that Providence will aid man's wisdom in averting that dreaded calamity.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eagan, who was stabbed by an Italian, named Murillo, died at the hospital on the 11th. Murillo and his brothers are in custody, as likewise is a rowdy, Denais Shay, who commenced the fight. These drinking saloons are rapidly becoming now manufactories of murder. It ought to be mentioned that the murdered man attacked Murillo first, instigated by Shay.

The birthday of Henry Clay was celebrated by a banquet at the St. Denis Hotel on the 12th, a day now ever to be cursed by all Americans, as inaugurating civil war. Flags were displayed during the day from the public buildings of New York. It was the eighty-fourth anniversary of our departed statesman's birth.

A most respectable lady, the wife of Mr. Porter, 46 Hamilton avenue, Brooklyn, committed suicide at her house, on the 12th, in consequence of malignant reports current among the scandal-mongers of that city. This love of tittle-tattle is the curse of suburban towns, and flourishes in Hoboken with remarkable vigor. There was an old law which rendered female maligners liable to the ducking-stool and the penance of the white sheet in the parish church. A few examples of this kind would benefit the community very much.

A pugilistic auctioneer, whose name is Zeno Burnham, has been sentenced to fifteen days' imprisonment and a fine of $50, for assaulting a gentleman and insulting a lady. Auctioneers may knock down the goods they sell, but not their purchasers. As it is, Burnham is an instance of "going—going—gone" to prison.

The Tribune is very easily humbugged, and its readers are equally susceptible of the soft impeachment. The Boston Journal states that the W. H. Turner, whose wrongs at the hands of the South some time ago constituted a brilliant feature in the Tribune's issue of the day, is an impostor, who goes about hoaxing fanatic editors with imaginary sufferings.

The Chicago papers are very jubilant at what they term retributive justice. It appears that a colored man, named Hayes, has made himself very conspicuous by his activity and success in ferreting out fugitive slaves. The praise he received for these acts called the attention of his master to him, who discovered that he (Hayes), the great planter's sleuth-hound, was himself a fugitive slave. A requisition was sent on for him, and he has been delivered up to his master.

A gentleman, named Coppis, who resides at 71 Horatio street, and who is in the habit of meeting with remarkable adventures, reported to the police that last Thursday, about ten o'clock in the evening, as he was walking in Greenwich street, he was suddenly knocked down and stunned by some party unknown and that when he came to his senses he was swimming about in the North River! He swam on shore, and finding his money and watch safe, he concludes very wisely that he had not been robbed. About a month ago he was thrown down an area and much bruised. Mr. Coppis ought not to venture out after dusk.

Professor Anderson, the necromancer, was arrested in Troy on Thursday, on the false charge, preferred by a barber of that city, of having violated a young girl who came to his room. The whole affair proved a gross calumny, and the professor was so outraged in his feelings that he administered a well-merited flogging to the author of his woes. Merchants and their clerks cannot be too careful in suffering these girls to come into their premises, as they are generally tutored by wicked parents and others to every species of crime and extortion.

One day last week there was a very disgraceful scene in Albany. Mr. Schaffer, the District Attorney of Albany county, threatened to cowhide Mr. Buckbee, a Member of the Assembly, for voting against the expulsion of Mr. Gibbons. It appears that Mr. Schaffer had been in pursuit of the ardent, and the ardent had overcome him. It is said that he actually went to the hotel where Buckbee was staying, for the express purpose of personally chastising a member for exercising his legislative prerogative.

The Mississippi Intelligencer proclaims Rarey a humbug, and that Offutt is the real Simon Pure. It adds: "We have seen Denton Offutt take a pair of three-years-old fillies, that had never had harness placed on their backs, and drive them up and down our streets within ten minutes after he first saw them. We have also seen him take a horse that for seven years would suffer no one to approach him, and in less than an hour the horse followed his every motion like a dog."

A very pretty little comedy of errors is recorded by one of the northern papers. A young man, a farmer of Rensselaer county, who has a sweetheart residing in Albany, went to the city, to visit her, a few evenings ago. He hitched his horse to a post in the street, several blocks distant, and, as the hours sped away, and the animal was uncared for and unclaimed, a benevolent lady, in front of whose house it was hitched, called a policeman, and had the horse taken to a stable. When the lover at last bid his Dulcinea good night and looked for his team, it was of course missing. He supposed it to have been stolen, and telegraphed to Troy and other places, requesting that any one driving such a team might be arrested. Subsequently, inquiring at the police-station at Albany, he got track of the property, recovered it by making proper explanations, and drove homewards rejoicing. But at Troy the telegraph subjected him to another annoyance, for he was arrested as a horse-thief, upon his own description of the team, and could not escape from the cells of a prison except by sending for friends to come in from his rural home and identify him. He threatens to sue the lady whose sympathy for the horse led to the original difficulty.

A niece of John Hancock has presented to the President a share-ticket, issued by the British Province of Massachusetts, dated 1765, for the building of Faneuil Hall, Boston. It is signed by John Hancock, and endorsed by Abraham Lincoln, the great grandfather of the present occupant of the White House.

As a gratifying proof that personal merit, even when modest and unobtrusive, sometimes meets its reward, even in politics, we may mention that John Kennedy, who was put on the Democratic ticket at the last minute, in place of W. H. Harrison, was elected without the cost of a dollar. Kennedy is the expressman of Hoboken, and is competent as well as civil and honest.

A terrible tragedy occurred last week at Amelia, a little town near Cincinnati. A sign painter, named Grigsby, having become jealous of his wife, a young and beautiful woman, he separated from her, and took from her their only child, a fine boy of four years. On the day of the fatal deed she had managed to regain her child, and was about taking it with her to her home when her husband arrived. He drew a revolver, fired at his wife, whom he mortally wounded, and then blew his own brains out.

One hundred and four Musquakee Indians have renounced their savage habits and settled at Tama county, Iowa, on farms.

George West, of Columbia, Mo., a few days ago shot a wild turkey, which weighed, when dressed, twenty-two and a half pounds. His "beard" was over ten inches long.

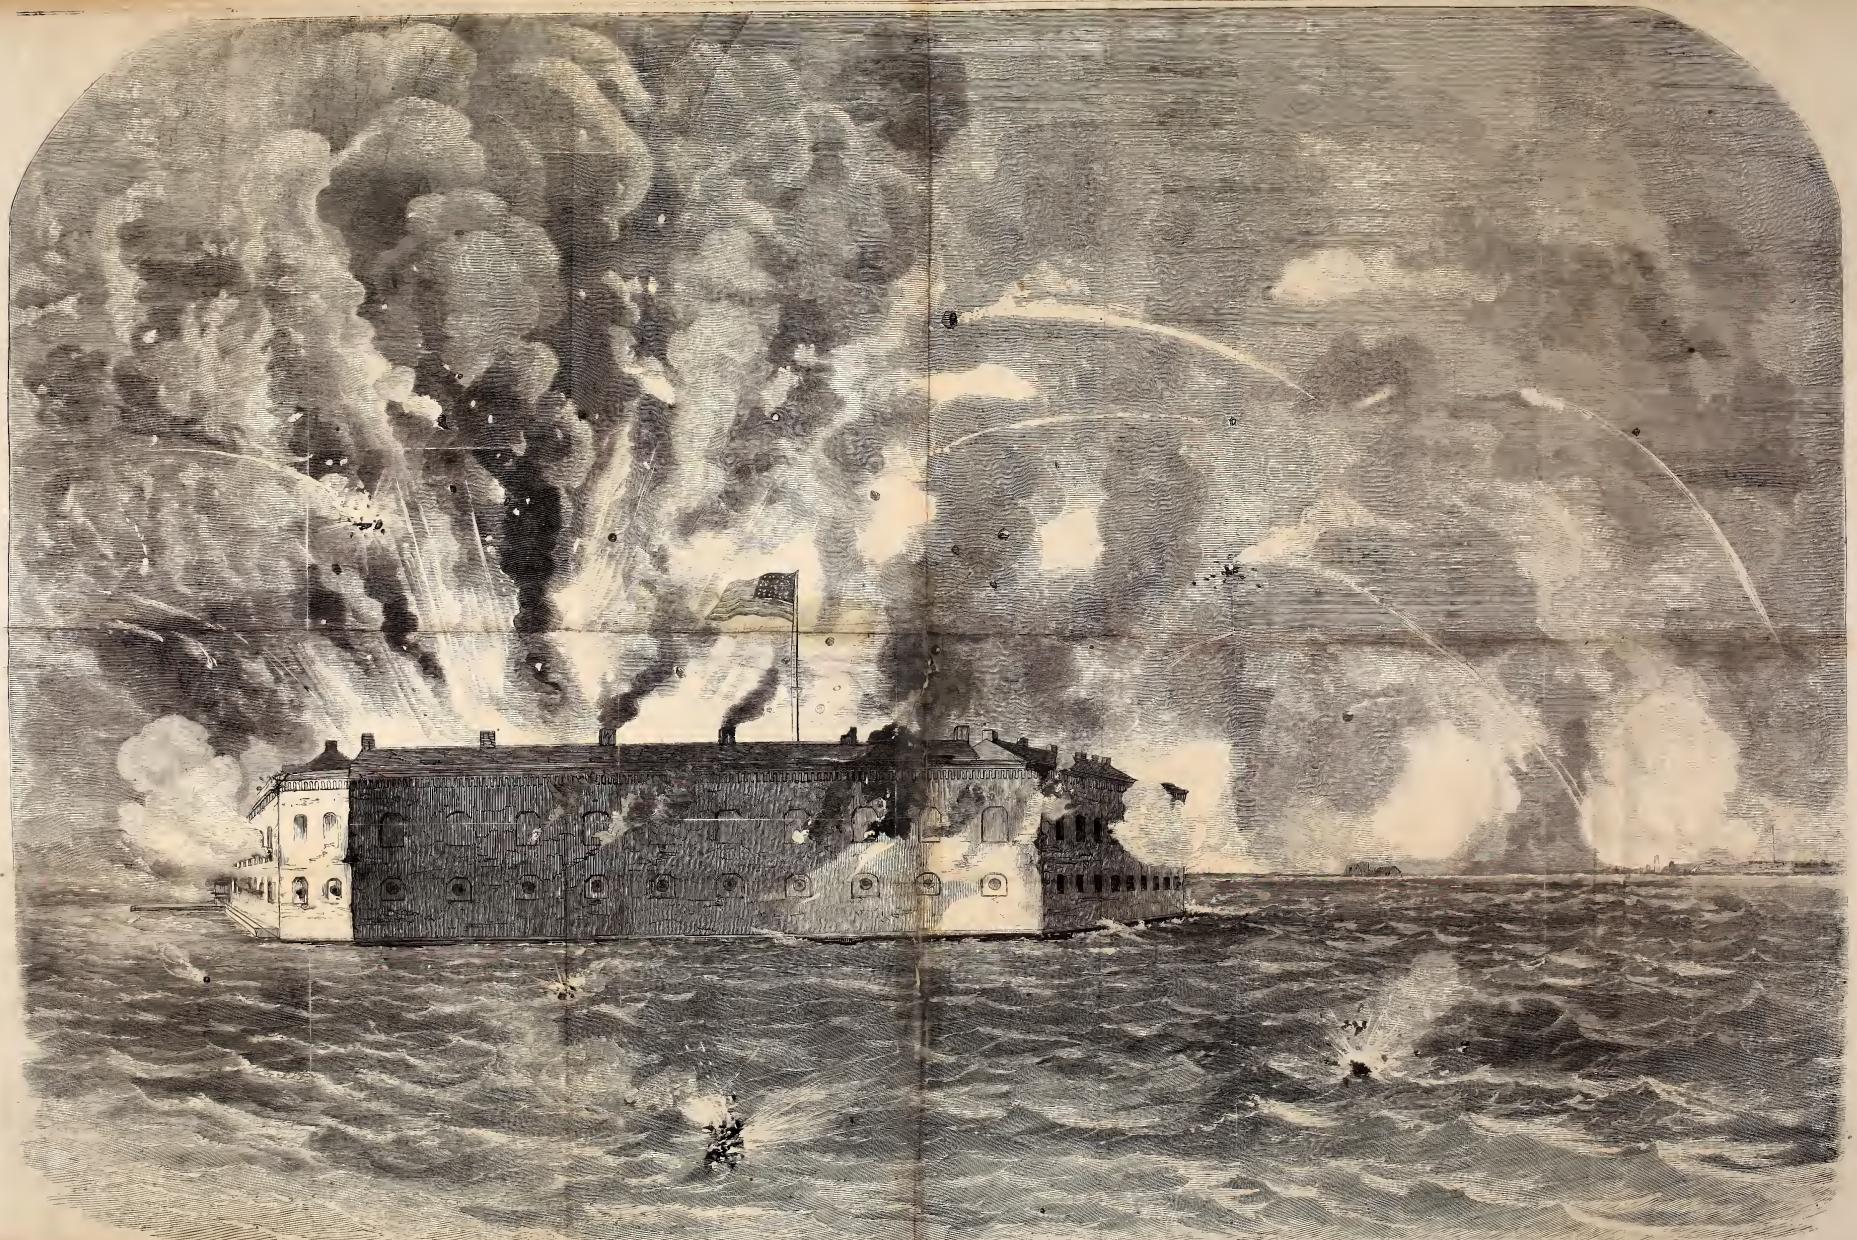
The mails recently burned near Pittsburg contained, it is said, over one thousand applications from office-seekers. "It's an ill-wind that blows nobody any good!"

One Communion Sunday, an old Kentucky soldier who had fought under General Jackson at New Orleans, and knew well what manner of man he had been, attended the Hermitage church, and saw the aged warrior kneel reverently before the altar. He was transfixed with astonishment. After the service was over, he was observed to be unusually silent and thoughtful, and upon being questioned related what he had seen. He concluded his narrative thus:

"When I saw the man who had fought armies, parties, cabinets, and never fought without conquering, get down on his knees in that church, I said to myself, 'Well, when General Jackson kneels, I tell you, boys, I think it's about time for me to knock under.'"

Four weeks after he joined the church, and lived and died an exemplary member.

The ex-Queen of Naples showed so much courage and sang froid at Gaeta, under such trying and critical circumstances, that the German Princesses, it is said, proud of the conduct of their countrywoman, have resolved to offer her Majesty a crown of laurels. Each Princess will give a leaf, on which the donor's name will be written. The crown is to be of gold, and is making by the Paris Court jeweller.



The Bombardment of Fort Sumpter, Charleston Harbor, the 12th and 13th of April, 1861.—This Picture was taken by our Special Artist, shortly before the Surrender of Major Anderson, when the Officers' Quarters were on Fire.—See Page 355.

LUCILLE DE VERNET;

A TALE OF WOMAN'S HATE.

CHAPTER I.

In the year 1814, the one preceding that of the battle of Waterloo, when Napoleon Bonaparte raised all countries to arms, a group was assembled in a handsome and commodious saloon in one of the old castles situate on the delightful and far-famed banks of the beautiful Rhine.

A fair girl of great beauty stood in one of the large bay-windows, looking with careless and unheeding eye on the depth of waters beneath her, as she smiled brightly, and half feelingly, half coquettishly favored the earnest pleadings of a handsome young man for one of the golden curls that played carelessly and wantonly, as the breeze from the river wafted them around her rosy cheeks and white chiselled shoulders.

The young man might have been about to join his regiment when he asked for such boon; for his dress and air pronounced him a soldier, as did his dark eye, raven hair, elegant moustache and imperial bespeak him a southron.

The flowers of eighteen springs had budded and bloomed beneath the maiden's feet, for her path had been all roses, without a single thorn to impede her progress. The youth might have numbered twenty-four summers.

A lady about seven-and-twenty, in the close deeply shading cap and the sombre dress which tells of widowhood, sat with her feet resting on the fender, apparently engaged with the page before her, but in reality listening attentively and anxiously to as much of the conversation as she could catch of the occupants of the high gothic window. She was the young officer's sister: he was all stern nature had left her to cling to; his hopes, his wishes were her own; she knew he loved the charming and much sought-for Ella, but he was poor, nothing but a French soldier of fortune, and with but few pretensions to rank, and she feared amid the glittering offers showered upon her, her brother's true love might be overlooked. But there was another to complete the group; it was a lady who had passed the meridian of life, and to look upon her now, we could well judge how lovely she must have been at Ella's age.

The figure was tall and elegantly formed, the slight bend from the waist tending rather to increase than diminish its symmetry; the contour of her face was still perfect, and though Time had traced with his finger a few lines on her broad open forehead, and threaded many white hairs among the bands resting on her pale cheeks, their original color still predominated; and if grief had dimmed the lustre of her hazel eyes, neither old nor young could look on her without veneration. This lady was the Baroness von Waldenburg, the possessor of the old castle on the banks of the Rhine. She had also suspended her knitting to gaze upon the youthful pair. She heard not distinctly a word that either uttered; but the change of expression that crossed her speaking countenance told that memory was bringing back with all its force scenes which had passed, that time and change had mellowed till their intensity had faded, but which never could be forgotten; a cold tremor slightly shook her frame, and clasping her hands, she appeared to be silently and reverently asking strength to bear the new trial that was opening upon her.

Henri de Vernet had obtained his long petitioned for pledge, the golden curl from the Grecian-moulded head of Ella, and she, to conceal the blush his thanks and protestations of everlasting love which the gift had called forth, was bending over a book she had taken from a table, busily employing herself in rapidly turning over its leaves. While doing so, a folded paper fell to the ground. Henri caught it up hastily, declaring it to be a billet-doux. Ella, to free herself from the imputation, and to ease her lover's uneasiness, which, spite of his raillery, betrayed itself, desired him to open it. He quickly availed himself of the permission, when some lines, evidently written under the effects of a wounded mind, met his eager eye; they were addressed to the planet Venus, shining as the evening star, and signed "Una." Henri read them aloud.

He pronounced the signature "Una" in a loud key as he ended; it was the first word that had distinctly caught the ear of the baroness. It gave a quick revulsion to her thoughts; and rising precipitately, with a saddened, anxious countenance, held out her hand for the lines, exclaiming, "Give, oh, give them to me! Is it possible that this relic of my Una remains to be treasured up by me?"

The young man respectfully presented them. The baroness caught them eagerly, as eagerly perused them, then lowly articulated, "Sweet Una, these lines were traced by thy wasted fingers when thy cup was full of bitterness; but thy longing heart had its desire. Thou art a blest resident of the abode thou didst covet whilst on earth, and to which thou wert akin."

As the baroness raised her eyes reverently to the star just rising in the horizon, she pressed the paper to her lips, then placed it in her bosom, as a newly-discovered and prized treasure, and again sunk into the ample armchair she had vacated, memory responding to the feelings which agitated the frame of this usually serene and always pious woman.

Ella covered her face with her hands, that her tears might fall unseen; then moving towards the baroness, knelt at her feet, and throwing her arms around her, said, "Dearest aunt, pardon me for taking this troubled moment to ask a long-coveted request; but when you are calm and happy, I have neither will nor power to break in upon your serenity. Una!—how often has the name been breathed to me by my nurse in my days of childhood, with injunctions not to mention it before you! She was not my mother, I know, for my mother's name was Hilda; nay, was she not my aunt, and Una and Hilda the two dear sisters whose early fate caused you such unbounded sorrow? You once promised, when I was old enough to understand and to know that life and care were analogous, to make me acquainted with the incidents of your youthful days. Do I ask too much by begging to know them now? I do not demand it from idle curiosity, but in the feeble hope of lightening your grief by making me a participator in it; for surely one so near and dear to you as your Ella should share your sorrows, as you take care she ever shall your joys."

The baroness pressed her hands on the head of the kneeling girl. The tears standing in her eyes were chased by larger drops from those portals, and fell rapidly over the thick curls reposing in her lap. A minute they flowed unchecked, then with a strong effort she dried them sufficiently to answer.

"My child," said the baroness, "I have forborne to tell you why I sometimes weep in private, because I would not willingly cast a gloom over the sunny hours of youth with the recital of the woes of those unknown to you, but so linked to me by ties the tenderest. But you ask to share my sorrows, Ella? They have ceased to be sorrows; for time and my Heavenly Father have so calmed them, that it is only when deep memories are awakened that I find they cannot be wholly subdued till I sleep," said she, pointing to a small churchyard in the precincts of the castle, "beside the dear inmates of yon mausoleum."

"Dearest aunt, nourish not such sombre thoughts," said Ella, entwining her arms still closer round her; "think of my loneliness; if deprived of you, life would indeed then be a blank."

The baroness smiled, as her eye met the half-reproachful glance of De Vernet; but there was reproach, amounting to severity, in her voice when she replied, "Ella, you are unjust to Nature and yourself to exclaim thus; and because one blessing may be taken from you to close your heart against the many yet remaining to you. Why shudder to speak of the grave? Is it not the refuge of thousands, and the resting place of all? I have seen father, mother, sisters and lover, all pass to their last tenement; yet I am here, a blessed, a happy being; for in my chastening my support was in religion. I called it to my aid in the hour of trial, and it came, a sweet solace to save my mind from the wreck of its reason; it whispered to my heart that, though robbed of my earthly gifts, there was still a heavenly Paradise to anchor my hope upon, and by doing what was just and kind to my fellow mortals peace and comfort would crown my efforts. I have tried to obey the monitor, and, thanks to a bounteous Father, I am enabled to look with calmness on the past though the cup I drank from was filled to the very brim with bitterness; and," continued the baroness, changing her grave, monitory tone to one of liveliness, and kissing Ella's cheek, "where will Henri's hopes rest if all your affection is placed on an old woman? He is young, brave and true, and, if I mistake not his character most sadly, well worthy your love and faith, and to him I trust my Ella, certain that in him she will ever find a friend and protector."

"Ever, ever!" repeated the youth, fervently; and encouraged by the smile which shone through Ella's tears, he ventured to steal an arm round her waist, and raise her from her kneeling position.

"But your story, dearest aunt," urged the young girl, as she yielded to her lover's gentle violence.

"My love, it is too long and too sad to relate to you now," replied the baroness; "but in my many lonely hours I have solaced myself with committing the events of the past to paper, and some day you shall see the narrative; if not during my life, when I am no longer here to feel regret or hopes on earth."

Ella's tears were again ready to flow, but the entrance of servants with lights and supper prevented further discussion, and soon after the little party separated for the night.

CHAPTER II.

The busy clatter of feet, the laughing faces, the merry sound of laughter, the white bows decorating hats and bosoms, the knots of graceful girls in high flowing dresses, and, above all, one more beautiful than the rest, with a myrtle wreath on her brow, plainly showed that Hymen had once more lighted his torch beneath the turreted roof of Waldenburg; yes, Ella had exchanged vows with the young and handsome De Vernet.

It was a clear open day in October, the autumnal morning sun showered its warmth and brightness on the happy group assembled to celebrate it; and all was so gay, so cheering within and without its old walls, that the hitherto saddened face of its mistress lightened of its gloom, and shone with its habitual serene expression, while giving her sincere and heartfelt congratulations to those of the more lively and voluble throng composing the marriage train.

But the wedding-baked meats were scarcely cold, the waltzers' feet barely recovered from their long exercise, when a hasty summons to De Vernet to join his regiment on immediate service threw a damp over the festivities. The merry laugh was hushed, and gay words gave place to sounds of regret and commiseration; one by one the gay throng disappeared, delicacy telling them their presence was unwelcome to the inmates of the castle now sorrow had superseded the lively paraphernalia of the bridal; all, indeed, seemed changed. The old domestics—who had seen so many changes, all dismal ones, after a marriage festival had been prepared—shook their heads, and whispered to each other that fresh griefs were about falling on their venerated mistress, and some went so far as to hint that Mademoiselle Ella, with all her beauty and good humor, would ere long rest beside her mother beneath the tall black cypress.

The morning of De Vernet's departure, Ella, the petted child of a doting household, who was now experiencing her first trouble, hung round his neck, unable to conceal a single particle of the sorrow called forth. It was in vain that Madame de Walstein and the baroness breathed the hope and comfort to her they dared scarcely believe themselves. At every word she clung if possible more pertinaciously to him, exclaiming, "Henri, cannot I accompany you?"

"My Ella!" he exclaimed, trying to smile as he raised her head from his shoulder, to look once more into her tearful eyes, "this emotion is unbecoming a soldier's wife. I expect to fight a hundred battles yet, and if you send me from you with such sad anticipations of the future, you will unman me before my first is achieved. Come, cheer up, dearest; one smile before we part, as a forerunner that I return victorious," and taking a small knot of ribbon from her hair, he placed it in his helmet. "This," said he, "shall lead me on to glory; when I look at it I shall remember our parting, and know that the prayers of my wife are raised to Heaven for my safety on the battle-field."

Another kiss, an hysterical sob from Ella and Madame Walstein, and the soldier was on his war charger galloping fast from them, his helmet drawn low over his eyes, to conceal even from himself the emotion which neither the soldier nor the man could subdue without a struggle.

For a time Ella was inconsolable, but De Vernet's lively spirited letters, which none knew better how to pen than a Frenchman, filled with hopes of returning to her crowned with victorious laurels, had soon the effect of restoring her to herself, and with returning tranquillity came the happy feeling that she was still with her beloved aunt, whom she must have parted from had De Vernet not been called so imperatively away; and she sometimes found intruding thought whispering, "Dear as De Vernet is to me, it would be easier, were I assured of his safety, to separate from him than aunt Ulrica, who has been everything to me since I became an orphan."

We trust some excuses may be framed for these ideas, which tended but little towards the promised happiness of the husband, considering the youth and almost idolatrous affection she had for the baroness. She was also a very young wife, and separated so soon after marriage from the man her fate was united to, before the romance of courtship had settled into the steady trust of matrimony, perhaps some allowance may be offered if, in after life, her own home appeared but secondary to her, when compared with the one her childhood and youth had ever considered an elysium.

And the baroness, what were her feelings? Why, as one who had received a reprieve. Ella was again wholly hers; for months she would be so. And though she prayed fervently for De Vernet's safe return, she felt a thrill of joy at the idea it would not be speedy.

* * * * * * *

But a year had passed since De Vernet quitted Waldenburg. October, bright and frosty, had ushered in the winter, and set his seal on the few summer blossoms which had languished till he approached. The young soldier was again beneath the roof of the baroness; he sat with one arm round the waist of Ella, the other, with his sword, had been left on the plains of Waterloo, where the best blood of England and France had mingled through the overweening ambition of one man. His eyes alternately wandered from the blooming face of his wife to a small piece of humanity swathed in lace and cambric, slumbering on her knee, undetermined on which to bestow the palm of loveliness, both in his idea being matchless specimens of it. His thoughts for a brief space were turned by the entrance of a servant with a packet. He broke the seal, and scanned the contents.

"From the Duke d'Angoulême," said he. "He informs me His Majesty, as an equivalent for the loss of my arm, has bestowed on me a permanent post at the military depot in the south of France, whither he wishes me to proceed by the end of the month."

"By the end of the month!" responded Ella, starting so violently that the sleeping babe on her knee nearly fell to the ground. "How?—Impossible to accept it on so short a notice!"

"Not at all short, Ella. We have full three weeks before us, a long notice to a military man, who is expected to be always ready. It will be pleasant occupation to you to prepare for the journey."

"Pleasant occupation," she returned, sighing, "to prepare for the first time in my life to separate myself from my more than mother! Henry, refuse this appointment, and make Waldenburg our home; it is the only one I can ever acknowledge or be happy in."

The young man fixed his eyes on the fair face raised appealingly to his, with a sternness unusual to them.

"What?" said he. "Become a dependent on the relatives of my wife! Ella, you have yet to learn my free, unshackled spirit."

"No, no," she returned softly. "I know it all; but to leave my aunt so prematurely will break her heart. I am reluctant to leave her, but will follow you wheresoever you wish me."

"Then by the twenty-fifth be ready to accompany me, if you can give up the splendor you have been accustomed to, to live within the limits of your own and my small income. If you cannot do so willingly, I will go to my appointment alone; and in the solitary home I must make for myself, endeavor to forget the fond promises of the honeymoon."

"Oh, no! I am yours wholly!" she cried, all her good feelings predominating at the moment, and laying the infant on a couch, she threw herself into his arms, and sobbed violently.

Henri de Vernet, whose heart was formed of the warmest feelings of human nature and who loved her with all its warmth, pressed her to his bosom, and with a gentle admonition to her not to sin again on such a subject, sealed his pardon on her lips.

But there was occasional gloom on his brow. The remaining three weeks of their sojourn at the castle, Ella was frequently in tears, the least allusion to his appointment caused a tremor of the frame and an anxious glance at the baroness, who with her usual good sense, by a kind rebuke and a hope that they should soon meet again, tried to restore serenity between them; but in spite of all, De Vernet could not hide from himself that he stood but secondary in the heart, where he had hoped to have possessed the crowning place, and that Ella, though beautiful, gentle and endowed with many virtues, was not formed to make him happy. On his child then he fixed his hopes: may they be realised!

CHAPTER III.

In a small but elegant cottage, in one of the most beautiful vine crowned valleys in the south of fertile France, is situated the home of De Vernet and little Lucille. The child was now seven years old, and as wild as any chamois-goat that ever scampered over the mountains. Ella was seldom to be seen in the bosom of her family; other misfortunes had assailed the baroness; through a lawsuit she had lost a great portion of her income, and Madame Walstein, who had consented to become her companion on Ella's marriage, had made a second choice, and resided in a distant province. Ella's visits to Germany, which had been long and frequent before this, were now extended to great lengths, which necessarily engendered a coldness between the husband and wife, and after much vain remonstrance on both sides, and some skirmishing, it was eventually settled that Waldenburg should henceforth be her abode, on condition that her child should be left solely to De Vernet's charge.

This last condition for a long while made the mother hesitate; but De Vernet was determined on the point. She could visit the child when she liked, but he would not part from her a single day. After many tears and upbraidings at his cruelty, old habit conquered even the affections of the mother, and with a determination to see them often, she quitted her husband's house, with a heart filled with grief certainly, but which was soon softened on being reinstated in her old home, and in ministering to the cares of the being she was devoted to.

After a lapse of three years, during which time Madame de Vernet had made many excursions to the cottage and numerous handsome presents had arrived for both father and child from the inmates of Waldenburg, De Vernet began to think that the hitherto neglected education of Lucille must be attended to. Accordingly a young lady, the daughter of a brother officer who had fallen at Waterloo, was fixed on as governess; not that she was highly accomplished, but because she was useful, youthful and amiable, and well fitted to become the companion as well as instructress of the little girl, who, hitherto left almost wholly to her own guidance, was only what nature had made her, beautiful and impetuous, and with more of good sense and decision of character than could have been expected in one who had never bent to control, or scarcely known a mother's care.

Madeline le Noir, then lovely sixteen, and just from boarding-school, at first found her task an arduous one. Lucille would neither listen to her nor her father, when books or anything appertaining to school industry were mentioned; with a flying kiss on the bronzed cheek of her father, and a roguish, mischievous glance at Mademoiselle le Noir, she would jerk the book to the extreme end of the room, and dashing through the open window, bound to the hills she had so long been used to traverse alone and unchecked, and with wild fruit her only food, remain among them till the dews of evening and the sinking sun told her she was free till the following day from the slavery of learning.

But those wanderings continued only a short time. Madeline's good humor and gay disposition won her by degrees to her wishes, and after a few months it was only by occasional starts that Lucille betook herself to her favorite hills. She began to feel the value of a companion, and a taste for the books Madeline read to her, and would blush painfully when she took up the book the subject of which had so delighted her, to find it was only with the greatest difficulty that she could read a sentence from it. Conscience whispered to her she was a tall dunce, of ten years old; it had the effect, and Madeline's cares as a governess were lightened.

It had been one of those close, hot days which in southern atmospheres precede a night of storm and ravage. Evening was closing in, and the dark, hanging clouds told of the heavy thunder lurking beneath them, murkily waiting their opportunity to shed their destruction on all within their limits. De Vernet walked backwards and forwards from the house to the garden, his eyes anxiously fixed on the hills surrounding the valley. This had been one of the days when Lucille, tired of the schoolroom, had in the morning dashed off to her old and best loved haunts, and he feared lest in her thoughtlessness and search for the flowers, with which she always returned laden, the lurid sky should have been unnoticed by her.

A vivid flash of lightning startled Madeline to her feet and De Vernet to the garden gate. "I can bear this suspense no longer," he cried, "but must haste in search of her. If exposed to the threatened storm she will be killed. Madeline, your eyes are younger and clearer than mine—cannot you discover any vestige of her among the hills, which from the lowness of those portentous clouds are now become scarcely visible?"

"I cannot see her," said Madeline. "But hark! I hear a light but distant footfall." And bounding to De Vernet's side, as one her flash of lightning nearly blinded her, added, as she recovered herself, "Oh, now I see her. She has descended the hill, and is flying up the valley. Wait, monsieur. By going after her you will but retard her flight. Open the gate. She will be here before the storm has reached any height to injure her."

Another minute, and Lucille, panting for breath, stood beside them. De Vernet turned angrily from her as she ran towards him. "This is beyond endurance!" he cried. "If you again leave the house without permission, I will send you to Germany and your mother."

"Father," she cried, timidly following him, and shaking the rain-drops from her bright curls, "you have been alarmed for me because I have had to face a few black clouds and lightning flashes. You forget I am a rough village damsel, used to the changes of weather, which never in the least affect me; but I promise you willingly never to go to the hills again without permission, if you will only forgive me," and she coaxed herself into his willing arms. "You will not send me to mamma and that hateful Germany?"

De Vernet smiled, without answering. He had similar ideas of Germany to his child, disliking the country because one who claimed it as a birthplace had in a degree made him bankrupt in his happiness.

"But the beacon, papa," cried the little Lucille, starting from her father's bosom, where she had buried her head to shut out the roaring of the storm, "you have forgotten to place the light in the door-porch. Let us put it there immediately, that it may guide some poor traveller to seek our shelter from this merciless night. Oh, how the rain patters against the glass! it will surely break it; and the lightning—its vividness pierces through the light of the candles! Oh, how I wish, if any poor creatures are exposed to it, they may be able to descry our tiny light, and seek our hospitality!"

De Vernet had scarcely responded to the little girl's wish when the rumbling of a vehicle was heard through the pauses of the thunder, and as it approached the dwelling a loud halloa proclaimed that their beacon, insignificant as it was, had been conspicuous through the darkness.

Lucille clapped her hands with the joy childhood ever experiences at giving relief where it is needed, while De Vernet hastened to the door just as a travelling carriage with four horses dashed boldly up to it, and a voice from the box demanded in a hasty tone, "How far to the nearest inn, monsieur?"

"Two miles, and a steep acclivity to ascend," was the reply; "but if the travellers choose to rest here till the storm subsides, they are welcome."

"Oh, yes, yes!" cried a female voice from the interior of the vehicle. "Let us stop here, Jules, if monsieur will give us shelter a few hours, for I am nearly lifeless with alarm, and I verily believe blind from the continued light flashing in my eyes for the last half hour."

Before this speech was half ended the first speaker had descended, and assisted by a servant had opened the carriage door, when a lady, followed by a girl about fourteen, hastened into the house, and approaching the blazing wood fire on the hearth that had been expressly kindled for the accommodation of some drenched wanderer and seating herself in an easy chair without thought on other objects, seemed determined to make herself as comfortable as the accommodation would admit of; while her daughter, a tall, pale girl, stood patiently by her side, timidly glancing her large dark eyes round the small but comfortable room.

In a few minutes De Vernet entered with a fine young man of eighteen, who had remained with him while he gave orders to his own servants about the disposal of the horses and the attendants of his guests. Madame turned, and bowing blandly to him, said to her son,

"Jules, you must be wet. Monsieur will permit you to change your garments, and make yourself at home as I have done. Have you presented monsieur our cards?"

"I hold them," returned De Vernet. "I have the honor to see Madame d'Almaina and her son the young count, the inmates of my humble roof, and trust they will avail themselves of its shelter, at least for the night."

"Willingly," she returned, with the freedom of a woman of fashion, "and a thousand thanks for your offer, for my nerves are in [illegible] tered by the dangers the storm threatened that I do not think it possible I could venture forth again, if only bread and water were to be my portion here; but I hope we do not break in upon your bachelor habits, for I see no ladies here. Pardon, monsieur, for the intrusion."

Before De Vernet could answer, Emile's large eyes had discovered Lucille and Madeline in the corner they had resorted to on the entrance of Madame d'Almaine, and she exclaimed in a half whisper, "Mamma, that beautiful little girl in the corner is monsieur's daughter, I am certain. I wish she would come and speak to us."

"Come forth my dear," cried the countess, urbanely. "Pray do not let us benighted travellers scare you from your own fireside."

Lucille, half alarmed at the easy nonchalance of the countess, came forward, but glided close to her father as if unwilling to come in very close contact with the strangers, as madame opened her eyes wide and the young men, who was shaking the wet from his travelling cap, desisted, and looking into her face, exclaimed admiringly, "Quite a little angel, mother. If you had her at Paris you would transform her into one of your lions."

"Yes, she is pretty," returned the countess; "but how is it she has dark blue eyes and golden hair? They do not belong to our country, monsieur."

"She inherits them from her mother," said De Vernet, "who is a German, and I know not but what my little girl should claim the same country, for she first saw light there."

"No, papa," cried Lucille, pleadingly, "you are French, and my name belongs to France. Pray, then, say I am a French girl, and let mamma have all Germany to herself, for she loves it so well that she forsakes us for it."

An expression of curiosity was on the countenances of De Vernet's guests, but they were too polite to hint their thoughts, as a cloud at the remembrance of the bright days of his honeymoon crossed De Vernet's brow, brought there by the innocent remark of his child, who, all but forsaken by her mother, had thus early formed her prejudice.

He arose and rang for supper, when the conversation became as animated as the storm, which still continued to rage with violence, permitted.

CHAPTER IV.

The morning sun glanced merrily on De Vernet's breakfast table: but little trace was left of the last night's storm beyond the beaten down grain and trailing vines that, heavily laden with their ripe fruit, lay scattered and broken by the merciless weight of the storm-fraught rain drops.

As the meal ended, Madame d'Almaine, looking from the window, exclaimed, "You are delightfully situated here, Monsieur de Vernet; but I suppose it does not wholly prevent you from mixing in the world. When you visit Paris I hope you will make the Hotel d'Almaine your home during your stay."

"You are kind, madame," said De Vernet, shaking his head, "but when I go to Paris it is on business. I am a mere bird of passage, scarcely stopping for rest or refreshment, so anxious am I to return to my duties and my child."

"Ah!" said madame, "you must spare me your little girl, then. She is beautiful, and will want polish. Let me have her to bring up with my Emile, they will learn together, have the best masters, and with the aptitude so apparent in her expression and manner, we shall make her quite a paragon. Do not say no, monsieur; think of the advantage a fashionable and elegant education will be to the child, and give me a trifling opportunity of showing my gratitude for your hospitality, and reasonable plea for again being your guest."

"Your last plea is indeed an inducement, madame, and could anything move me to part with Lucille, it would be the happiness of seeing you in my humble home again; but I cannot separate myself from her; the education I can give her here will be sufficient for her walk through life, which, I trust, for her own happiness, may not exceed mediocrity. But, madame, if you wish to return any favor you may have found here, leave your daughter with us a few weeks, the children seem to have formed a friendship for each other, and I think I may promise you that we will transplant a few of our valley roses to her cheeks before you see her again."

Emile approached the countess, and said softly and timidly, "Do, mamma, allow me to remain; I should so prefer it, to going to Marseilles, where there will be nothing but parties, and none to converse with of my own age, and Lucille is so merry and healthful. She has promised to take me to the heights, and with the soft breezes of the valley blowing on my cheeks, by the time you return they will be plump and blooming as her own. Allow me to remain, mamma."

"What vanity!" returned her mother, "to suppose that in anything you can resemble Lucille! To punish you for your conceit I shall take you with me, mademoiselle."

Lucille, who had been looking pleadingly, her bright eyes earnestly fixed on the face of the countess, her red lips half open, ready to give utterance to her pleasure and gratitude at having Emile left with them, at this cold speech ran to her father, and hid her face on his shoulder to hide her rising tears; while Emile, with her head drooped on her hands, allowed a sob of disappointment to escape her. The young count, who possessed, perhaps, more influence with with the countess than any other person, saw the disappointment of the children, and the slight indignation on the countenance of De Vernet.

"Dear mother," he exclaimed, "leave Emile here till we return. She is but a drooping plant, and the marriage festivities we are going to celebrate at Marseilles will be attended with such late hours, and such a continual round of gaiety, that it is quite certain she will suffer from them; while by leaving her here a few weeks under the hospitable superintendence of Monsieur De Vernet, and his madcap little daughter, she will become quite a Hebe."

"Well," returned the countess, "if you imagine the exertion will be too much for her, and monsieur will take charge of her, she may remain till we return; for of all things I abominate anything resembling illness in the abode of festivity;" and she glanced half-angrily at her daughter.

This somewhat ungenerous permission was received with pleasure by De Vernet, and unrestrained delight by the girl, and each ran to D'Almaine as the promoter of it. Emile flung herself into his arms, while little Lucille impulsively kissed the hand round his sister's waist; then, ashamed of her temerity, with a brighter sparkle in her eyes from the blush brought into her cheeks by her feelings, said falteringly, "Pardon, monsieur, I forgot at the moment that Emile's brother was only papa's guest; I so wished I was his sister."

"He shall be your brother, too," he returned, animatedly, "if you will give him your love and friendship," and drawing her towards him, he pressed her with Emile in his arms, alternately kissing the cheek of either.

And thus, through a thunderstorm, was a friendship cemented between two families, so opposite in position and manners and disposition, which in after years was to wring the hearts of one with sorrow, and give a check to the pride and expectations of the other.

For several successive years Emile made her annual visit to the valley; it was her greatest pleasure; for being of a quiet, social nature, preferring solitude and its calm to the fashionable career of her mother and brother, she was little cared for or thought of by the first: while the latter, being young, rich and handsome, was so followed and caressed, that he had but little time to give to a sister he really loved, and whom he seldom saw except at a soirée of the countess's, Emile only mixing with the gay throng when compelled in courtesy to her mother, and being affianced to the Duke de Grammont, a young nobleman whose weak intellect had led him deep into fashionable vices, she was permitted, not having to look out for a husband, to follow in a degree her own inclinations.

Emile had never been accompanied in these visits by either her mother or brother; the circumstances which led them to De Vernet would probably have been obliterated from their memories by pursuits more suited to them, but for Emile's anxious appeal every autumn to be allowed to pass a few weeks with Lucille.

"How does Lucille look now she is growing a young woman?" inquired the countess on one of these occasions, after having coldly given her consent. "Is she as pretty as her childhood promised?"

"Infinitely more so, mamma," was the reply. "I wish you would take a trip to the valley to see this beautiful wood-nymph, for I fear Monsieur de Vernet will never lose sight of her long enough for you to see her in Paris."

"Oh, I have no desire to have her here," said the countess. "We have too many fine women in Paris for her to be thought much of here."

"She is awkward, of course," said D'Almaine, looking from the newspaper he was scanning over; "a mere country girl, with plump rosy cheeks, and a figure, from the buttermilk and vegetables she consumes, very sufficiently developed, and devoid of grace and symmetry."

"Yes, she is a country girl, with plump rosy cheeks, Jules, and a figure," returned his sister, "but I will say no more on that subject for mamma already shows evident signs of disgust at the idea of a creature, born and educated so far from the capital, and barely sufferable of course. You must see and judge for yourself."

"Ah!" he returned, yawning, "take a trip with you and spend a week with our old host; it would be but polite and grateful after his kind attentions that merciless night. When do you go, Emile?"

"Next week, if mamma can spare me."

"Spare you!" ejaculated the countess, "for the benefit you are to me for ever; but Jules, I do not exactly approve of your going, with your face and figure you may make an impression on the girl's fancy, and I do not particularly desire that you should make Monsieur De Vernet's fireside quite lonely by robbing him of his choice piece of rusticity."

The brother and sister exchanged glances at this not very maternal speech, neither deeming it worth a reply. They retired to a window and conversed in a low tone; Emile's voice and manner were earnest; but the count's, as usual, was careless and indifferent, and when they separated he avowed his intention to accompany her.

The Count d'Almaine, at twenty-five, was what is generally termed a gay man of fashion; his handsome person had led him deep into the mazes of gallantry, he had found his conquests so easy that his good faith in woman had been weakened, and although he would sometimes almost wantonly pursue an object, yet none admired virtue when he proved it more warmly than himself. He was open and generous, although, like his mother, and it was almost the only point he resembled her in, he had a large portion of family pride, which, in returning, often led him into error; he possessed a large share of good sense, but his thoughtlessness often perverted it; had he been brought up in any other school than that of a proud indulgent mother, who, from infancy, had flattered his faults without cultivating his virtues, Count d'Almaine would have shone a bright ornament to his country and mankind; as it was, he was too indifferent about fame, and so much devoted to what are termed the pleasures of life, that he aimed at little beyond them.

Into the path of this dangerous being, such a compound of good and bad qualities, handsome, insinuating, generous and thoughtless, was the innocent Lucille about to be thrown; not that he came to De Vernet's with any design—no, he was above that, his motive in making the visit was a wish for change, tinctured with friendship for the past. When he thought of Lucille, if he ever did think of her, which, to do him justice, was only when his sister named her, it was as a beautiful child, he was too idle on such a point for his idea to wander further.

CHAPTER V.

Madeline le Noir had won the affections of a young and thriving farmer, whose means of provision were not wholly dependent on his lands. He was the near neighbor of De Vernet, and owing to the young man's worth, a friendship had sprung up between them, likely to increase as Madeline, the orphan child of his early friend, was to find her future home and protection near him. The marriage-day was fixed, and full of spirits and bright anticipations Madeline and Lucille, as they sat at a worktable giving the finishing touches to a white robe of transparent texture, talked freely over the merits of the handsome and worthy Jacques Batiste, the devoted servant of the former.

"This will be very becoming, Madeline," exclaimed Lucille, abruptly breaking off the praises of Jacques, and holding the robe graced with its white satin rosettes before Madeline. "You will look more charming than ever, and irresistible in the eyes of your lover when it is worn."

Madeline gave a furtive but satisfied glance at the mirror, which reflected her petite person, then hastily dashing the dress aside, cried, running to the window, "Hark! do you not hear the approach of a carriage? Can it be Emile already here?"

"Yes, yes, it must be Emile! I can see her handkerchief waving from the window!" was the answer, "and I see a second person in the carriage—I hope it is not the fashionable and haughty countess."

"It is a gentleman, and I verily think the young count," said Madeline; "he has done me the honor of coming to my wedding. Lucille, beware of your little head, for one wedding is certain to engender another; and poor Monsieur de Vernet will have to regret the loss of both his housekeepers, if you do not take due caution."

The last part of this sally was scarcely heard by Lucille; she had bounded to the garden gate as the carriage stopped there. D'Almaine jumped from it to hand out his sister, but in a moment the girls were in each other's arms, regardless of all near them; and not till her father called her to bestow some slight attention to the brother, not lavish all on the sister, did Lucille, who had forgotten he was near, turn, with heightened color, to welcome him. She was going to give him her hand, with the freedom of girlish acquaintance; but abashed by his ardent and unmistakable gaze of admiration, slightly curtseyed, and again drew near Emile to hide the confusion which she felt must make her appear such a mere country girl in the opinion of Emile's fashionable brother.

"I had better take up my residence at the inn, monsieur," said the count; "for, being an unexpected visitor, my presence might interfere with the arrangements of the ladies on the eve of a wedding. Is it distant?"

"Too distant for you to attempt to locate there, monsieur," replied De Vernet; "our cottage, though small, is amply large to accommodate you; and I will answer for your being a desirable acquisition to the ladies. Come forward, Madeline and Lucille, and tell the count he is welcome; and, if nothing else offers, that one or both of your apartments are at his disposal."

"Have I your permission, Mademoiselle de Vernet," said D'Almaine, turning gaily to Lucille, "or must I, like a summer swallow, seek another resting-place?"

"My father's wishes are law," she answered, laughing.

"Then I am welcome," said he, "though unexpected."

"Oh, monsieur, do not be so fastidious," said Lucille. "Believe yourself ever welcome as our guest and Emile's brother."

"Thanks," he returned. "Under those titles I will endeavor to make myself agreeable, that should I, by the charms of yourself and surrounding objects, be hereafter drawn here, I may deserve the place in your estimation Emile's brother will be so anxious to attain."

Madeline and De Vernet had withdrawn to consult about the disposal of the count's servant, Emile had run into the garden to enjoy its sweets, and Lucille was alone with D'Almaine; confused at the discovery, and fearing he might deem it uncourteous to leave him alone, she tossed some flowers from a vase and began hastily to re-arrange them.

"These are beautiful blossoms," he exclaimed, drawing near her; "but I see none among them half so fresh and blooming as yourself."

"Oh! spare me," she interrupted, gaily; "recollect, monsieur, I am but a rustic, and quite unaccustomed to courtly compliments; pray reserve them for the Parisian ladies, they know better how to appreciate them than I do; nature and ingenuousness will be easier for me to understand."

"It is in the latter language I address you," said the count. "You are as far above compliment as you are above the Parisian dames; for if they boast a rich bloom on their cheeks, art placed it there; and their elegant and courtly manners too often cover a heart false as their complexions; but you, mademoiselle——"

"I cannot stay to listen to a libel on woman," she cried, laughing, and withdrawing the hand he had taken. "See, yonder is my father; he shall read you a lecture on the subject, for he asserts all women are deserving of confidence, while man deserves it—— See, Emile is observing us, and, by the disconcerted air you bear, she will imagine our first interview has been stained by a disagreement. Let us join her."

With that light easy gaiety which is known only to early youth, and which sits so beautifully upon it, Lucille, with a gossamer step, was soon by Emile's side, and putting her arm round her waist, whirled her several times round the lawn in the graceful waltz.

D'Almaine followed her with admiring eyes, and for some time after the girls had disappeared among the lofty trees that skirted the dwelling, he continued to stand in a kind of pleased bewilderment; it seemed to him so like a dream, that the little girl he had held in his arms six years ago should, to his fancy, at once have expanded into a woman, and one so charming, that every sense appeared absorbed in the strange, unaccountable, though pleasurable sensations she had raised. He had seen her but for a few minutes, yet his whole thought was upon her. "What does it mean?" he asked himself. "I have heard of love; can this be it?" He laughed at the idea that one so redoubtable as he had proved himself in its mazes should be so easily caught by the rustic charms of a mere village girl, "who, I suppose," he said, still musing, "has never been ten miles beyond her cottage home, and whose vistas and education, without doubt, are limited to the extent of her travels."

Before the count retired to rest, the rustic Lucille had discovered to him, without the slightest premeditation on her part, besides a fine voice that had been skilfully cultivated, a fund of good sense, and a strength of character in one so young, that surprised and created a degree of respect in his mind, which a few hours earlier he would have deemed it ridiculous to suppose any woman, much less a girl of sixteen, could have commanded.

The marriage of the handsome and kind-hearted Jacques Batiste to the pretty and amiable Madeline le Noir had been solemnized, and she was duly and happily installed in her new home, which was so near De Vernet's, a field only separating the abodes, that her absence was scarcely felt by the inmates of the cottage. This near vicinity gave Lucille so many opportunities of running to the farm, and D'Almaine as many excuses to accompany her, and so much lingering about to admire the distant hills as the setting sun gleamed upon them with his golden magnificence, that although the distance might have been traversed in a few minutes, hours were often taken to accomplish it. Emile often accompanied them, but her presence seldom interfered with the deep tale of love D'Almaine poured into the ear of Lucille—a tale which had truth and generosity for its foundation, but which the known pride of his mother, who had nourished, almost with her existence, the high views she had planned for him, sometimes almost made him wish to crush ere it had taken too deep a root to be eradicated.

But love was never yet to be played with, the lighter it is treated the more potent its power. In his endeavor to smother the flame Lucille had engendered in his bosom, the spark burnt more vividly, and before a month had passed in their daily, hourly interviews with each other, he was compelled to own that his life and best feelings were bound up in her—to win her became his first hope, that of losing her, despair.

D'Almaine was involved in a maze of difficulties; his love was honorable, but to combat his mother's prejudice against want of fortune and birth inferior to his own, he knew would be impossible; and for De Vernet, with his open noble nature, to give his daughter to him with any impediment to her being openly and unhesitatingly acknowledged by his family, he knew would be equally so. What had he then to trust to the fulfilment of his wishes but Lucille, whose affections he was too well initiated in woman's heart to doubt.

"Lucille," he cried, one evening, as they were returning from Batiste's farm, "Lucille," and he pressed closely to his side the arm linked in his, "I love you with sincerity. Tell me, with the candor of your nature, if I dare hope a return to it—if I may some day call you my own?"

Lucille, startled by his vehemence, attempted to withdraw her hand, but he held it more firmly.

"Not till I have your answer," he continued; "not till you make me happy, or crush my presumptuous wishes, shall you have your liberty. I repeat, Lucille, I love you; say, is it too much for me to expect an answering affection?"

Lucille's eyelashes had rested on her glowing cheeks as he spoke, but she raised them, and her eyes met his.

"Jules, you know your power," she answered. "If your love is such as my father will listen to, if it is visionary and cannot be trusted, let your first confession be the last; and though I may be the sufferer, I will not complain."

"You are cold, Lucille," said the count. "Is it to check my love ... from duty to your father that you say he must be the judge? I ... sigh for your heart. At once say it is mine, or send me from you crushed and wretched."

"Cold!" she said in a low tone, and her head sunk on his shoulder. "You call me cold when I admit your power. Do you doubt me, Jules, because I have spoken too openly? You love me not if you would have me say more."

He drew her again close to him, and now his voice trembled.

"Lucille, you love me," said he. "Will you prove to me your love is sufficient to make a sacrifice for me?"

"Yes," she answered, in a firm tone, "if the sacrifice is not incompatible with honor."

"It is not," he answered, proudly. "Perish every idea of dishonor! But—but——" and again his voice had a slight falter in its tones, "I would propose to you, as the only method to reconcile my mother to our marriage, that it should be conducted privately; that is, that she should know nothing of it till it is too late for her to throw in the way of its accomplishment the obstacles, which, from my knowledge of her, I am certain she would."

Lucille, by a sudden start, freed herself from his arms.

"Monsieur D'Almaine," she said, "I cannot listen to you longer—you have said too much already. Your mother is proud; she will not admit Lucille de Vernet into her family because her father boasts not of a title. Assure yourself that neither she nor her father will consent to enter it in a manner derogatory to their own dignity."

He could not see it, for she had proudly turned her face from him, but he felt that the proud blood of France insulted was staining her cheeks. He wished to lull it to slumber, to reinstate himself in the good opinion he had fallen from, but she repulsed him, and with quick steps reached the house. De Vernet sat in the porch as she passed, and he noticed her agitation.

"You walk too long and too late," he said. "Lucille, you are becoming as great a truant as in the days of your childhood, and will make Emile and the count your counterparts."

"I believe it is the case, father," she returned, hurriedly, "and I am suffering from it; my head aches so violently that I must retire. Excuse me to Emile and her brother."

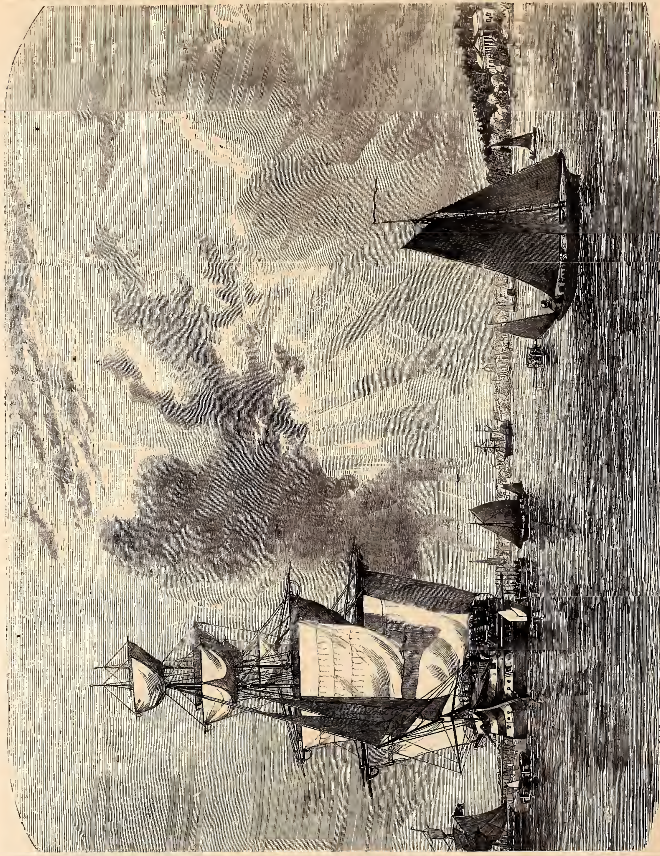
Without attending to her father's admonition, Lucille ran up stairs, and, throwing herself on the bed, shed the first bitter tears of her life, which even the gratification of having acted rightly had not power to soften. She heard D'Almaine and Emile walking beneath her window; they talked low and earnestly, and her heart swelled with offended pride. Pride is no match for love, and Lucille, a novice in life's mysteries, had to prove its truth; pride at that moment whispered, her resolution could not waver. Had her bosom possessed no other monitor, what heart-breakings would have been saved her—what wanderings, what insult! Even now she might have presided as the beloved mistress over a happy home.

(To be continued.)

A Queer People.—Chambers's Journal, discussing a recent book of missionary travels in Africa, thus alludes to one of the tribes which are found in that terra incognita: "But the strangest of all are the stories told of the Dokos, who live among the moist, warm bamboo woods to the south of Kaffa and Susa. Only four feet high, of a dark olive color, savage and naked, they have neither household temples, neither fire nor human food. They live only on ants, mice and serpents, diversified by a few roots and fruits; they let their nails grow long, like talons, the better to dig for ants, and the more easily to tear in pieces their favorite snakes. They do not marry, but live indiscriminative lives of animals, multiplying very rapidly, and with very little maternal instinct. The mother nurses her child only for a short time, accustoming it to eat ants and serpents as soon as possible; and when it can help itself it wanders away whom it will, and the mother thinks no more about it. The Dokos are invaluable as slaves, and are taken in large numbers. The slave-hunters hold up bright colored clothes as soon as they come to the moist, warm bamboo woods where these human monkeys live, and the poor Dokos cannot resist the attraction offered by such superior people. They crowd round them, and are taken in thousands. In slavery they are docile, attached, obedient, with few wants and excellent health. They have only one fault—a love of ants, mice and serpents, and a habit of speaking to Yer with their heads on the ground and their heels in the air. Yer is their idea of a superior power, to whom they talk in this comical nature when they are dispirited or angry, or tired of ants and snakes, and longing for unknown food. The Dokos seem to come nearest of all people yet discovered to that terrible cousin of humanity, the ape."

The Bostonians are improving the present opportunity. One day last week a colored barber, named Anderson, took his seat in the jury-box. He is the first nigger ever placed in that position. Barnum ought to put up the What Is It? to succeed John Andrews as Governor of Massachusetts. It must be confessed that the modern Athenians are not quite equal to the ancient ones for their knowledge of the beautiful.

SCENE ON THE FLOATING BATTERY IN CHARLESTON HARBOR, S. C., DURING THE BOMBARDMENT OF FORT SUMTER.—FROM A SKETCH BY AN OFFICER.—SEE PAGE 356.



CITY AND HARBOR OF NORFOLK, VIRGINIA, THE GREAT NAVAL DEPOT OF THE UNITED STATES.—SIX U. S. WAR VESSELS ARE NOW AT THE NAVY YARD—THE ENTRANCE TO THE HARBOR OBSTRUCTED BY THE AUTHORITIES—COM. PRENDERGAST THREATENS TO LEVEL THE CITIES OF NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH IF THE OBSTRUCTIONS WERE NOT REMOVED.

SECOND EDITION.

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM NORFOLK, VIRGINIA.

It is rumored that the entrance to the harbor of Norfolk, the great Naval Station of the United States, has been blocked up by the sinking of small boats in the channel. This intelligence is probable, since the Secession of Virginia is certain, and is of very significant importance, as it may have vital bearing upon the supremacy of the Federal Government upon the ocean. At the present moment there are at the Navy Yard, Norfolk, six vessels of war, the Merrimac, Germantown, Bainbridge, United States, Pennsylvania and Potomac, two or three of which powerful ships are now ready for sea. President Lincoln fully appreciates the extraordinary importance of these vessels and also of the naval stores, &c., contained in the Navy Yard, and a profound anxiety in relation to them. No success could give more aid and comfort to the Government of the Southern Confederacy than the capture at once of the vessels and the Navy Yard. So far, much confidence is expressed in the fidelity of the officer in command at the Yard, and also in his ability, with the means in his possession, to successfully defend it until assistance can be sent to him.

A later report states, that up to the 18th all was in statu quo at Norfolk, and it was further stated that when Captain Pendegrast ascertained that the channel was obstructed he placed his ships broadwise to Norfolk and Portsmouth, and demanded the obstructions in the river to be removed, else he would level both places. It is added that the citizens complied with the demand. Further news is looked for with great anxiety.

The city of Norfolk is situated on the right or north bank of Elizabeth River, eight miles from Hampton Roads, thirty-two miles from the sea. Next to Richmond, Norfolk is the most populous city of Virginia. It has more foreign commerce than any other place in the State, and, together with Gosport, is the most important naval station in the Union. The harbor is large, safe and easily accessible, admitting vessels of the largest class directly up to its wharves.

A Spanish Lieutenant turned Highwayman.—An instance of highway robbery occurred in Havana one evening in February last. A lieutenant of the regular army presented his pistol to the breast of a Frenchman, at about eleven o'clock at night, and demanded his watch and money or his life. The watch and money (some $40) were given, and the Frenchman fled, dodged around a corner and hid. Presently the robber passed along, but was stealthily followed by his watchful victim into the Tacon Theatre, where a squad of soldiers were called upon to arrest a lieutenant, who proved to be their own "superior officer." Efforts were made to shield him, but the booty being found on his person he was sent to prison, the next day tried by a Court Martial, and summarily shot.

Extraordinary Relation by Marriage.—Not long since a man in Sauk county, Wisconsin, married for his second wife his own stepmother, who singular enough, was a sister to his wife. The lady is, therefore, not only stepmother and aunt to her husband's children, but also their grandmother, while the husband is stepfather to his stepsister. Her issue by his marriage will not only be own cousins to their stepbrother, but uncles and aunts also, and the lady herself being grandmother to her children and nephews, may be regarded as mother to herself and child to herself, and, therefore, her own grandmother.

The Guarantee Fund for the International Exhibition has received signatures to the amount of £248,000. Almost all the continental countries, and America have put in claims for much larger space than they had in 1851.

ERLE GOWER:

OR, THE

SECRET MARRIAGE.

By Pierce Egan.

Author of "The Flower of the Flock," "The Snake in the Grass," &c., &c., &c.

CHAPTER XLV.

Our fame is in men's breath, our lives upon
Less than their breath; our durance upon days,
Our days on seasons; our whole being on
Something which is not us! So we are slaves,
The greatest as the meanest—nothing rests
Upon our will; the will itself no less
Depends upon a straw than on a storm;
And when we think we lead, we are most led.—Byron.

Old Pengreep quitted the mansion of the Marquis of Chillingham with sensations which did not harmonise with the sweet applaudings of a clear, unstained conscience. Though the night was cold, he was smoking hot, and he continued to feel a scorching, parching, dry heat pervade his frame, and scalding blood prick, shoot and tingle in his veins, as the immediate past, glaring in his eyes like a fiery finger-post, pointed out the exceedingly dangerous consequences likely to prove the end of the path he was now pursuing.

As a rule, rogues practising roguery don't turn back. They are not blind to the rascality of their proceedings, nor to the odium which attaches to them, nor, indeed, are they insensible to the penalty which they incur if discovered in the commission of their misdeeds. Old Pengreep, as certain vaticinations presented themselves to his active brain, experienced some nervous twitchings of the nose and mouth, but then these forebodings were only prophetic presages which might not come true, while the actual cash he had receive was a fact which did not admit of the possibility of a doubt respecting its realization. Then, too, it was something to have a marquis who was a Minister to the Crown for a patron, because, in the event of being urged to the very brink of grief by services done to his advantage, if the minister could not advance a protecting hand, who could?

Such impressions crowded into the mind of the old man, as he shuffled across the courtyard before the Chillingham mansion, prepared to meet his co-partner in knavery. He hugged the pocket containing the crisp bank-notes to his bosom, and chuckled to think what a clever fellow he was, and to what a masterly style he had obtained the whip-hand of Pharisee.

He saw keenly enough that he was drawing the teeth and nails, and exhausting the blood of Pharisee's designs; but for that he cared nothing, any more than he suffered compunction at the possibly fatal consequences to Lady Kingswood which might follow the introduction to her in the dead hour of night, in a dark, silent and lonely apartment, of the man who had the most infamous designs against her honor.

He had two objects in view; the one to gratify the promptings of a malicious spite, which he ennobled by terming it revenge, and the other to add to an already ample store which he could not enjoy on this side of the grave, and for the mode of its accumulation he stood a first-class chance of being terribly punished on the other. But this latter consideration, as with all men of his class, was an element which did not enter into his calculation. Present success and present fancied benefit were the points which governed him, and he brushed away, as most of us do, disagreeable shadows of future retribution for present faults or follies. He caught sight of Pharisee's form gliding backwards and forwards in the misty street, and once more he chuckled, this time not alone because he had outwitted him, but that he should have, in order to carry out the commands rather than the wishes of the Marquis of Chillingham, to again cheat, cajole or force him to act precisely as he directed.

He underrated Pharisee. It is not wise to underrate either friend or foe. He did not know what thoughts chased each other through Pharisee's brain while he waited in the street, nor imagine what schemes of retaliation were resolved by the chilled, chagrined valet. The latter knew himself to be out-manœuvred, and while fretted by the circumstance, naturally directed his mind to the discovery of a certain and speedy mode of turning the tables. By the time old Pengreep returned to him he had constructed a plan likely to be successful, but he was careful not to be too hasty in commencing operations, because it was of such a nature that failure would be fatal to himself.

He appeared, when Pengreep rejoined him, to be resigned to the position into which he had been thrust by the old man, and asked meekly of him what had been the result of his interview with the Marquis of Chillingham.

Old Pengreep answered him evasively, but Pharisee was not so to be put off.

"I have to meet Lady Kingswood in the picture-gallery," he said, urgently. "It is I who must be ready to answer every question my lady may put to me; how the marquis looked, what he said, whether he was excited or indifferent, what he proposed to do, what he is likely to do. I must, in fact, be prepared with a thousand answers to as many questions."

"Pshal!" returned Pengreep. "You take me for an inexperienced goose. I know the peculiarities of these proud and haughty dames better than you do. Lady Kingswood would ask you for a note from the marquis and that will be all. If she receives it she will instantly disappear, and you will neither hear nor see her again until she needs your services. I know the creatures well. I have had them at my knees to induce me to relax a demand or relent from enforcing harsh measures, but when their turn was served not a word or a look was left for me."

"If Lady Kingswood receives a note from the marquis!" repeated Pharisee, with surprise in his tone. "Of course she will receive it. That of necessity you must resign to my keeping; Lady Kingswood will not see you."

"I am not so sure of that," returned Pengreep, in a short, sharp tone.

"I am," replied Pharisee, promptly. "Her ladyship considers it sufficiently humiliating to have to consult with and engage my services in this affair. To know that you were mixed up with it would drive her frantic."

"Lady Kingswood, like many another of her sex, should not deviate from the straight path of honor and morality; she would then not subject herself to mortification and humiliation," returned old Pengreep, with a sanctimonious drawl.

"Her ladyship has had bitter cause," rejoined Pharisee, instantly.

"Cause—what cause?" asked Pengreep, affecting surprise.

"What cause!" echoed Pharisee. "Why, who should know better than you the circumstances of Lord Kingswood's unfaithfulness to her?"

"His errors or his crimes cannot justify her in the commission of similar acts," responded Pengreep, turning up his eyes. "His guilt cannot possibly afford an excuse for her; on the contrary, it ought to be a monument of warning to her—a mirror in which she may see the enormity of his offence, and thus preserve her own purity. Women are fools to themselves when they adopt the argument of retaliation; for what is considered to be in a man a venial sin, in a woman becomes shamefully criminal."

Pharisee regarded old Pengreep with unaffected astonishment.

"I never took you for a saint," he exclaimed.

"Oh, I can preach," rejoined the old man, with his eyes still upraised.

"Aye, but the practice?" returned Pharisee.

"That is a matter which concerns myself alone," old Pengreep answered, sharply.

"See, we are close to Kingswood House," suddenly exclaimed Pharisee. "Give to me the marquis's note."

"I cannot," returned old Pengreep.

Pharisee's face became purple with rage.

"Give me the letter," he growled. "I have been yielding and compliant as yet to you, but there is a limit beyond which I will not go, and you cannot make me. I can and will risk the worst consequences rather. Give me the note."

"I repeat I cannot," answered Pengreep, coolly.

"Why not?" interrogated Pharisee, angrily.

"For the simple reason that he has not entrusted me with one," rejoined the old man.

Pharisee uttered an exclamation of surprise. Then he said,

"What message?"

"Neither did he entrust me with a message," observed Pengreep, with provoking calmness.

"If I did not know the contents of her note to him, your answers might deceive me; but as I am acquainted with every word she penned to him, your assertion will not do for me," rejoined Pharisee, with excitement. "My lady asked for a reply, and an answer the marquis would be sure to send."

"I did not say he would not," remarked Pengreep.

"You have told me that you had neither note nor message," said Pharisee.

"And I have told you facts," responded Pengreep; "but I did not say that neither one nor the other would be sent."

"Sent!" echoed Pharisee. "Sent, impossible! Sent! When? How?"

"By messenger, at one hour after midnight," returned Pengreep, speaking with slow distinctness. "The messenger will be at the servants' entrance at one o'clock; he must be privately admitted and secreted until Lady Kingswood's appointed hour arrives, then he will see and converse with her alone."

"Madness!" cried Pharisee. "Horrible frenzy! Such arrangement would be the destruction of every one concerned."

Old Pengreep stopped abruptly.

"You had better yourself return to the Marquis of Chillingham and tell him that you object to the whole proceeding, and therefore it cannot and shall not be carried out," he said, with a cutting sneer.

Pharisee stamped with his foot.

"You have no idea of the frightful risk I shall incur," he exclaimed vehemently, "and Lady Kingswood as well. It is impossible."

"It will be done, nevertheless," said Pengreep. "I have arranged it all, and when I undertake such arrangements as these, I always contrive that they shall be faithfully fulfilled."

"You—you! What can you have to do with this part of the affair?" exclaimed Pharisee, bitterly. "It is I who will have to run the hazard and to pay the penalty of discovery."

"I beg your pardon," rejoined Pengreep, "I shall have much to do with it. You will provide me with the key of the servants' entrance. I shall admit the messenger. I shall secrete him and be prepared to conduct his departure. You may rest yourself contented with respect to your share of any personal risk. The marquis's messenger once safely housed, nothing further will be required of you but to keep close within your private apartment until the whole affair is over."

Pharisee gazed at him perfectly bewildered.

"I will be no party to any such arrangement," at length he cried. "You have made it—complete it the best way you can. As for myself, I wash my hands of it altogether."

"It is not so very late," mused Pengreep. "I had, perhaps, better ring at the hall door and request to see Lady Kingswood; I can, then, if I am refused an audience, send her in a note explaining the share I have had in the transaction, and inform her that you——"

"You will drive me mad," cried Pharisee, interrupting him. "You know that any such step as you suggest would produce frightful consequences. You had better retire, and I will call upon you to-morrow. I will endeavor to carry out your arrangements. I will receive the messenger——"

"We are at the door," interrupted Pengreep. "Shall I inquire whether Lady Kingswood——"

"Hush! hush, you frantic old man," whispered Pharisee, placing his hand over his mouth. "You do not know who may hear you. I assent to all—follow me."

Pharisee went, with stealthy step, to the servants' entrance, closely followed by Pengreep, who examined every spot with the closest scrutiny, counted steps both descending and ascending, observed the direction in which the passages and corridors ran, everything, in fact, right and left, where a glimmer of light aided him to see. He noted all down in his memory, and took such mental notes as would enable him to find his way from Pharisee's room to the street again, even if the whole establishment were to be plunged in intense darkness.

It happened that the servants were at supper in the servants' hall, the butler taking his evening meal and his grog in the housekeeper's room with the portly lady, who indulged in a glass or so of wine after her supper, and tasted frequently the butler's "nightcap," merely to please that very dignified personage.

No one was moving about, and Pharisee contrived to smuggle old Pengreep up to his room without any one having perceived him; but though he had him safely locked in his chamber with himself, he felt very ill at ease; for, after the experience he already possessed, he felt that he was not safe for a minute from a visit from either Lord or Lady Kingswood. In fact, it was at first difficult to divest himself of an impression that one or other of them was concealed in some dark, shadowed corner of the room.

The room, however, was unoccupied, save by himself and old Pengreep. But the old man immediately commenced to give him much anxiety and trouble, for he hunted and pried into every corner, and at everything within the apartment. If drawers and trunks had not been locked he would have pulled them open, or lifted up lids, without the slightest regard to propriety, or to the fact that he had no possible right to investigate their contents.

At length Pharisee prevailed upon him to be seated, and he tried to elicit from him a connected version of what had transpired between him and the Marquis of Chillingham, but could not succeed in drawing anything like a coherent relation from him.

He, however, obtained instead a series of grimaces, which at first surprised, then alarmed, and ultimately horrified him. The old man grinned and gibbered; now elongated his face, and then compressed his features until they looked squat and most forbidding. At times he sat bolt upright, grim and gaunt as a spectre; then he crouched in his chair with his knees huddled to his chin. Now he suddenly flung his arms erect, or threw them straight out; then he would coil them about his neck tightly, as if he intended to strangle himself; and anon let them drop to his side as if he was powerless and exhausted.

All the while he stared awfully at Pharisee, and uttered a quantity of strange, incoherent nothings, until the latter, believing that he had suddenly gone stark mad, became almost beside himself with fear.

Mephistopheles, or the Gnome-King himself, could hardly have played more fantastic antics; and the superstitious mind of the valet tempted him to believe that his guest was, if not the last, certainly the first.

While anxiously trying to think of a plan of escape from this terrible situation, the deep-toned bell of the neighboring church tolled the solemn hour of midnight.

The last beat was followed by a dead silence between the two for at least five minutes.

Then old Pengreep rose slowly up, and strode with noiseless step to Pharisee, and clutching his wrist, said in a whisper, which sounded frightful in his ears—

"The key!"

So affrighted was Pharisee that he absolutely gasped for breath.

Pengreep shook him.

"It is below," he muttered.

"We must have it. Come!" hissed Pengreep.

Half-fainting with terror, Pharisee took his light, unlocked the door, and on tiptoe proceeded to descend the stairs, closely followed by old Pengreep.

The former knew where the key was kept, and he went to the place where it was hanging and obtained it.

Old Pengreep, with glittering eyes, snatched it out of his hand, and immediately, to Pharisee's horror, made trial of it. Satisfying himself that it was the right key, he motioned to Pharisee to lead the way back.

After they had mounted the first flight of stairs, he whispered in Pharisee's ear,

"The picture-gallery; show it to me."

Pharisee knew remonstrance to be useless, and conducted him to it. Pengreep, having made himself master of the passages leading to it, nodded his head complacently, and pointed upwards.

Once more they entered Pharisee's room, and the door was again locked on the inside.

The old man, seating himself opposite Pharisee, resumed his antics, only this time he drew a white handkerchief from his pocket and twisted it into different shapes, flourishing it to and fro, and going through various manœuvres, until he had contrived to get, unseen, a small bottle from his pocket, with the contents of which he saturated the handkerchief.

Suddenly he leaped up, seized Pharisee by the throat with one hand, and pressed with the other the handkerchief over his mouth and nose.

For a minute or so Pharisee struggled violently, then he became motionless, as if dead.

Old Pengreep, when he found resistance to his diabolical act cease, withdrew the handkerchief, stuffed it into his pocket, and, taking up the lifeless form of the valet, he laid it upon the bed.

Then he sat near it, and watched it until the clock struck one.

Within two or three minutes after this he stood at the servants' entrance, where, shrouded in a cloak, stood a tall figure, immoveable.

"Chillingham," whispered old Pengreep.

"Chillingham!" repeated the stranger, in a tone equally low.

"Follow me!" murmured Pengreep.

The figure entered, the door was noiselessly closed, and together they ascended, with soundless step, to the picture-gallery.

Without a word, old Pengreep pointed out the projection formed by the Corinthian pillars, and the muffled stranger sank down behind them. Old Pengreep apparently glided from the gallery, and left it once more to deep, intense darkness and silence.

The church clock struck two.

The next instant a faint, glimmering light appeared at the extreme end of the gallery, and advanced rapidly towards the centre. It disclosed the white, anxious, half-distracted features of a woman. With wild eyes she gazed right and left, and then she muttered,

"He has not come."

It was Lady Kingswood.

She glided to the projection formed by the Corinthian pillars.

She uttered a sudden scream of horror, but in an instant it was stifled by the stranger, who caught her in his arms, and passed a portion of his cloak over her mouth. At the same time he whispered in her ear,

"Be silent, for your life! Fear not. It is I—Chillingham."

She struggled and tore herself from his arms, and another low wail of terror burst from her lips.

He unfolded his cloak and revealed himself to her. She saw, by the feeble rays of the lamp she had brought with her, that it was the Marquis of Chillingham who stood before her.

She wrung her hands.

"This is terrible, indeed," she murmured. "Why—why have you been guilty of this worse than madness?"

"Listen," he said, bending over her. "I received your note. I possess the information you seek. I know its importance and the necessity for its secrecy. I know, also, your intense anxiety to become mistress of it. I would not commit it to paper—therefore am I here."

She pressed her hands over her eyes, and shuddered. Then from before her blanched face she withdrew them, and said, in a low tone,

"Go on; I am prepared to hear."

"Kingswood is a villain," returned Chillingham. "The boy you saw at Kingswood Hall is Kingswood's son—born while his vows, his oaths, were breathed in your ears, and his kisses were pressing on your lips. That boy—the offspring of a marriage—thrusts you, nobly born, loftily bred, into a state of ignominy, and hurls your son, whom you love so much, out of the heirship to the House of Kingswood?"

A groan of unutterable anguish burst from the broken heart of the agonised woman.

"Oh, heaven! oh, shame! oh, death! can this indeed—indeed be true?" she ejaculated.

"It is true. You shall have the proofs," he replied, with rapid accents. "You remember Vernon, of Huntingford—years, years back?"

"I remember him," murmured Lady Kingswood, with difficulty forcing the words between her parched lips.

"He formed a passionate attachment to a young and beautiful girl, intending to make her his wife. Kingswood, at the time your fond and loving suitor, saw her, seduced her away from Vernon, married her, and then, wearying of her, returned to you, to lavish upon you the caresses which he had to spare from the woman he had left."

Lady Kingswood pressed her clenched hands upon her temples.

"Oh, my God!" she exclaimed, "this is maddening."

"The proofs of all I have stated will, within a few hours, be within my hands. I will show them to you."

"I shall suffocate!" she exclaimed, staggering, as if about to fall.

He caught her in his arms, and, for a moment, she availed herself of their support, but only for a moment, for she suddenly and hastily disengaged herself from his embrace.

"What will you do?" he whispered in her ear. "You will not remain with Kingswood?" he added.

"Oh, no—no—no," she exclaimed, with a terrible shudder. "Not another day will I pass beneath his hated roof."

"Not another hour," he urged. "He has wronged, outraged you, insulted you beyond all possibility of atonement. Leave him. Revenge is your right—retaliation your weapon. Plunge into his heart the same shaft with which he has so basely wounded yours. Yours is not a spirit to sit tamely beneath your wrongs, to be content with weeping away your injuries. No, scorn him, spurn him, wring his proud heart with the same humiliation with which he has bruised, though not crushed yours. Fly, and at once."

"Oh, Chillingham, your words, your suggestions, are terrible!" she exclaimed, with a distracting air.

"They are just," he exclaimed, with eager emphasis. "You must despise, loathe this man. Fly at once! Why delay? I have a vehicle at a short distance from the house, prepared to convey us to a place where discovery—until you, for the purpose of vengeance, may wish it—is impossible."

"Oh, no, no, no!" she responded, shuddering, and weeping bitterly.

"Why hesitate?" he urged. "Remember, I loved you before Kingswood; remember, for your sake, I have remained unmarried, hoping against hope that some day you might be mine. Come with me, dearest; I, at least, will not wrong you. I will love, worship you; make you happier by far than it is possible you can ever be elsewhere. Come—come."

"I dare not. Oh, in the name of mercy, do not tempt me," she sobbed.

He saw the conflict which was going on within her breast, but he saw, too, that she would yield, and he redoubled his entreaties.

"What," he said, in sarcastic tones, "will you be made the finger-point for fools? be scoffed at as the lady of the meek soul, who had not the spirit—being scandalously wronged—to conquer a tremendous revenge when it was within her grasp? Shall he triumph over you? Shall the woman for whom he quitted your side triumph over you? Shall her son thrust out yours from the rank to which he is justly entitled, and you bow your head meekly, and say, 'Be it as thou wilt; you shall triumph, and I will bow my face in the dust?' Have you no soul? Have you lost the proud, the great, the noble spirit you once possessed? Has your nature changed with your wrongs? You must avenge yourself! I offer you the means. Come now, or remain here a creature lost to your own sense of injury, an object of pity to all, and of derisive scorn to Kingswood himself."

"Never, Chillingham. It shall be as you counsel. The die is cast!" she exclaimed, flinging up her head with passionate fervor. "I will go—Ha!—Oh, eternal Heaven!—Almighty Powers!—Look there!—there!—behold!"

With a low, hoarse gasp of intense horror, half cowering to the earth, trembling like an aspen, she pointed to a female figure, clad in white, standing motionless within a few feet of them, bearing in her hand a lamp, and her face turned towards them.

It was Lady Maud, with her eyes wide open, lustreless, sightless.

She was in a state of somnambulism.

Her young and lovely face was pale and sad, but unmarked by any other expression save one of angelic purity and sweetness.

She suddenly, though slowly, turned round, and walked at a gentle pace to the side of the room, and stretched forth her hand as if in search of a book resting upon a library shelf. An expression of disappointment stole over her face.

"It is not there!" she murmured. "They took it away when he left."

Then she slowly directed her steps to the door by which she had entered.

The Marquis of Chillingham had yet the wrist of Lady Kingswood clasped in his hand. She suddenly wrenched it from him, and tottered, swayed, staggered after Lady Maud.

"Maud—pure angel," she gasped, in suffocating tones; "take me with you, or I am lost. Maud—Maud—take me with you—my child—Maud." Her words were scarcely articulate, and her motions so feeble that it seemed as though she would fall senseless upon the floor of the gallery.

She clutched at the flowing drapery of the yet sleeping girl, and reeled with trembling steps still after her.

The Marquis of Chillingham was about to pursue her, when he felt himself seized by the arm.

He turned with a start, and beheld old Pengreep at his elbow.

"My lord, in another instant the whole household will be alarmed. You must fly. Follow me, or you will be discovered here," exclaimed the old man in a hoarse whisper.

With an anathema on his lips, the marquis, seeing at a glance his critical position, turned, and with a hasty step followed old Pengreep from the picture-gallery.

A piercing scream caught their ears as they made, with light step, their swift way to the servants' entrance, Pengreep guiding the marquis with unfailing correctness. They quickened their flight at the sound, and paused not until they were both without in the dark night.

The marquis hastily glanced his eyes upwards at the mansion, and observed lights flashing to and fro in the windows.

He caught Pengreep by the arm.

"Write to me, and quickly," he said, in a low tone, "I will reply, appointing an interview."

The next moment he released the old man from his grip, and hurried to the carriage which was awaiting him and a companion who did not accompany him.

CHAPTER XLVI.

O that torment should not be confin'd
To the body's wounds and sores,
With maladies innumerable
In heart, head, breast and reins;
But must some secret passage find
To the inmost mind,
There exercise all his fierce accidents,
And on her purest spirits prey.—Milton.

Lord Kingswood devoted himself with so much ardor to his ministerial duties that his colleagues congratulated the Cabinet, the party and the country upon the acquisition of so zealous a coadjutor. The truth, however, was, as may readily be supposed, that his mind was distracted by the horrors of his domestic position; and he was not only rejoiced at the opportunity afforded him to escape from his own house, but from his own thoughts as well.

He greedily accepted all the business of his department during the day, and worked at it as well, aided by his private secretary, far into the night. He found a certain relief in this labor, but thoughts and fears would still intrude, and the anticipation of a day of disclosure—the hour of vengeance—a frightful explosion, which, if delayed, would ultimately occur—haunted him like a pursuing spirit.

At the very moment when the Marquis of Chillingham was urging Lady Kingswood to fly with him, Lord Kingswood was seated alone in his study. Upon his table, before his eyes—which were gazing on them with intense and melancholy earnestness—lay a fair ringlet and a bunch of decayed flowers.

What were the unutterable thoughts which crowded through his fevered brain, as his burning, bloodshot eyes rested on these withered emblems of other days?

It is needless to say they may be imagined, and their force measured by the heavy, agonised groan which burst from his lips and shook his frame. He raised the curl and the dead flowers with his trembling fingers, and pressed them to his lips; then dashed the tears from his eyes with his clenched fist.

"This is frenzy," he exclaimed, with set teeth. "The past cannot be recalled. Let it go. I must be inflexible—steel—ice. I must dare my destiny, and defy it."

At this instant a loud, wild scream rang through the house, disturbing the dead silence which had previously reigned.

He started, snatched up a lamp, and made his way to the spot whence the sound appeared to proceed.

He reached the corridor leading to the apartments of Lady Kingswood and his own, and to his astonishment he beheld Lady Kingswood kneeling, supporting the senseless form of Lady Maud and a maid servant in her night-dress with a shawl thrown round her, bending over them, holding a light.

"Lady Kingswood, what is the meaning of this strange scene?" he exclaimed in a loud, angry voice.

At the sound of his voice Lady Kingswood started as if stricken fiercely by a lash. She let the body of Lady Maud glide to the ground, and she rose up to confront Lord Kingswood.

Her white face, her flashing eyes, the combined agony, hate, passion, anguish expressed by her features, horrified as well as amazed him.

She flung back her half dishevelled hair, and her burning lips parted, displaying her white teeth interlocked.

"Heartless perjurer!" she hissed through them; "cruel, treacherous villain! speak not to me—look not on me—come not near me—or I may have to call on Heaven to pardon me for an act which my bursting heart now prompts me to commit. Away! we meet no more! but the bitterest curse an outraged iniquitously wronged woman can hurl upon her betrayer as a legacy to drag him down to perdition, such a curse—curse—withering curse—do I fling on you. Away! go! you have made me mad! Do not force me to an iniquity yet deeper and blacker than your own!"

As she concluded, white, frothy foam bubbling upon her pale blue lips, she bent suddenly over the yet inanimate form of Lady Maud, and with almost superhuman strength, raised her up in her arms, and bore her into an apartment, closing the door behind her with a loud crash.

Lord Kingswood stood petrified and speechless, his heart stilled and resting like a globe of stone within his breast.

The pale-faced, affrighted maid stood shivering, still holding the light, ashamed to remain, sparsely clad as she was, yet not liking to go and leave Lord Kingswood alone and without explanation.

At length, with a sudden gasp, he exclaimed:

"Girl! can you explain the meaning of this strange scene? Speak! Do I dream, or has some sudden madness possessed Lady Kingswood and Lady Maud?"

"If—if—if you please, my lord," replied the girl, with chattering teeth, "I don't know what it all means. I—I was in my bed, laying awake, because I couldn't go to sleep, and I don't know why I couldn't go to sleep, but I couldn't get a wink, when I all of a sudden heard footsteps coming along the corridor. I know nobody had any business to be moving about in the corridor at this time of night, and if there was anybody, they couldn't be after any good, I was sure of that. So I jumped out of bed and slipped a shawl over my shoulders, and as it happened my light was burning, because——"

"Never mind the reason. Go on," interposed Lord Kingswood, impetuously.

"Well, my lord, I opened my door quietly, and I saw a white spectre coming along, with a lamp in its hand, and being awfully scared, I shrieked, and then—then—and then——"

"What?" cried Lord Kingswood, fiercely, as she hesitated.

"Then I saw that it was Lady Maud, my lord," continued the girl, afraid that, by her confession, she was getting herself into trouble. She, however, adhered to the truth, because, perhaps, she could not at that moment frame any extenuating excuses. "And I saw, my lord, that she was walking in her sleep, and that my lady was following her, holding her dress, and then, my lord, my screams awoke her, and she screamed, too, and sank down in a faint, my lord—and that's all, if you please, my lord."

At this moment a bell was rung in Lady Kingswood's apartment with great violence, and the girl starting, said, hastily,

"If you please, my lord, that is my lady's bell, my lord. Will your lordship please to excuse me?" And without saying another word, she ran away into Lady Kingswood's apartment.

Lord Kingswood, with a gloomy brow, turned and retraced his steps to his study.

As he paced up and down the apartment the words of Lady Kingswood rang like doom-bells in his ears. Every one was imprinted with painful distinctness upon his brain, and repeated itself there again and again, until it ached with agony.

Then her look, wild, distraught, intensely vindictive, what did it mean? He believed that she could only be governed by suspicion, and yet her excitement was terrible. His own information, after a certain point, was limited—what, therefore, could she know!

For an instant a thought that Pharisee might be treacherous intruded itself, but then he discarded it as impossible.

He racked his brain to no purpose in order to account for Lady Kingswood's expressions of fierce animosity and hate.

He was compelled at length to conclude that Ishmael, hovering above him like an ill-omened bird of prey, was gradually narrowing his circles of flight, until the final moment when he would swoop down and crush him.

Did he intend to sunder each tie before he struck his fatal blow? It appeared so. Lord Kingswood remembered that he was at this moment at terrible issue with his wife, his son Cyril and Lady Maud.

Strange! As this conviction fastened itself upon him a feeling of desperation and defiance gradually took possession of his breast—against one and all he felt a spirit of resistance arise. Especially did this determination address itself against Cyril and Maud. He rigidly resolved that they should each wed the individuals chosen for them, and that no appeals, pleadings, or arguments, however passionately urged, should move him from this fixed decision. He felt like a stag at bay. Woe to the first foe that attempted to fasten upon him with the intention of pulling him down!

As this new impression seized upon his vacillating nature, a gloomy, resolute expression settled on his brow, and he retired to rest, deciding that he would in his turn be sought instead of seeking.

(To be continued.)

CHARLESTON HARBOR, S. C.

Its Fortifications—Fort Sumpter—Fort Moultrie—Fort Pinckney—Morris Island—Point Stono—Floating Battery, &c.

INTRODUCTION.—Although we have in our previous numbers given a very accurate and elaborate description of the various forts and batteries in Charleston harbor, to accompany the illustrations we have from time to time given to the public, the unhappy events which have within the last few days precipitated a conflict between the Federal troops and the Secessionists render a brief sketch of Charleston and its defences desirable, that, at the risk of a little repetition, our readers may thoroughly understand the illustrations we shall present to the public.

The Harbor.

If the reader will refer to our map of Charleston harbor, published in our number for January 5, he will perceive that after crossing the bar the main entrance is divided by Fort Sumpter, founded upon an artificial island, while on the right hand is Sullivan's Island, on the left Morris Island, while beyond Fort Sumpter, midway to the city of Charleston, is Castle Pinckney. A vessel thus going to Fort Sumpter would have to run the gauntlet of a double fire, which, if well directed, could not fail to sink any craft, excepting such vessels as the Warrior of England, and La Gloire of France, both of which are steel-clad ships especially made for such desperate operations.

Fort Sumpter.

This now famous fortification is a modern truncated pentagonal fort, built upon an artificial island, three miles and three-eighths of a mile from the city of Charleston. The walls are of solid brick and concrete masonry, built close to the edge of the water. They are sixty feet high, and from eight to twelve feet thick. They are pierced for three tiers of guns on the north, east and west sides. Its weakest point is on the south. It is designed for one hundred and forty pieces of ordnance. Two tiers of the guns are under bombproof casemates, the upper tier is open, or en barbette. There are, however, now only seventy-five guns in position. Of these eleven are Paixhan guns, nine of which command Fort Moultrie, the other two point towards Castle Pinckney. The range of the guns does not exceed three miles, so that Charleston is safe from bombardment. The war garrison is six hundred men, but there were only one hundred and nine men in all under Major Anderson's command.

Fort Moultrie

Is distant from Sumpter one and a half miles. It is nothing more than a large water battery. Its armament is eleven heavy guns and several mortars. The walls are of brick, and present a solid mass of about thirteen feet. It is now commanded by Major Ripley, formerly of the United States Army.

The Iron Floating Battery.

This famous work has been so lately described and illustrated in our paper, that we shall merely now add that it has been moored between Sullivan's Island and Fort Sumpter. It mounts four guns of heavy calibre, and requires sixty men to work it. It commanded the barbette guns of Major Anderson.

Cummings' Point Iron Battery.

This is the nearest point of land to Fort Sumpter, being only one thousand one hundred and fifty yards distant. The iron battery here erected is made of railroad iron. The roof slants towards the ground, so that shots will glance over it as they strike at an obtuse angle. The columbiads with which this battery is equipped bear upon the south side of Sumpter.

Fort Johnson.

These are batteries protected by sand works, and are armed with mortar and siege guns. They are one mile and a fourth of a mile from Fort Sumpter.

Castle Pinckney.

This fort is situated on the southern extremity of Shute's Folly Island, between Hog Island and Charleston city. It is about three miles from Sumpter, and is the north-west. It has two rows of guns, the lower bombproof casemates, the upper en barbette. The height of the rampart is twenty, and the width thirty-two feet. The armament is twenty-five guns.

Morris Island.

These batteries have been thrown up during the last few weeks, and command the entrance of Charleston harbor. They are made of palmetto logs, and are fully manned.

The Distances.

			MILES.
Fort Sumpter is from Charleston			3⅜
Fort Moultrie	"	Fort Sumpter	1½
Cummings' Point	"	"	⅝
Fort Jackson	"	"	1¼
Castle Pinckney	"	"	2⅝

Stono Point.

This is on Morris Island, and faces the sea. It consequently commands the entrance to the harbor. There are about nine feet of water at low tide at Stono Point. It would be here that the troops would land to storm the Morris Island batteries.

SEAMEN GOING THROUGH ARTILLERY PRACTICE

With the Dahlgren Boat Howitzer.

IN our last issue we gave a full description of the nature and character of the naval guns invented by Captain Dahlgren, called the Boat Howitzer. They are so constructed, in regard to lightness, that they are easily managed in a ship's launch, can be quickly landed, and can be drawn with speed and facility, and served with rapidity and effect by the ordinary crew of the launch. The sailors are made perfect in the use of this important arm of warfare by constant practice on the shore, where they are drilled in appropriate artillery practice until they become adepts in all the movements, from the moment of disembarking to the issuing of the command to fire.

FOREIGN FLOATINGS CAUGHT BY THE WAY.

A LATE English traveller among the tribes of wandering Turcomans, on the plains of Tarsus and the mountains of Syria, states that the art of dyeing brilliant colors is held in very high estimation among the females of the tribes. Every marriageable girl must have first worked a carpet of more than ordinary beauty, colored with the choicest dyes, as a treasure for her marriage festival.

WHEN Mirès arrived at Mazas prison he was shown into a room very bare of furniture. Looking round, as if missing something which he expected to see in the place, he said to the turnkey, "But where is the Mobilier?"

ERSKINE AND HENRIETTA.—At a dinner-party Erskine was seated near Miss Henrietta ——, commonly called Miss Hennie ——, who had been celebrated for her beauty, but was then somewhat past the meridian of life. "They say you are a great man for making puns," said Miss Hennie to the wit; "could you make a pun on me?" "Ah, Hennie," was the cruel rejoinder, "ye are no chicken!"

MRS. PIOZZI says Lord H. Poulett wrote to a gentleman to send him over two monkeys, but the word being written too, and all the characters of one height, it appeared like "100." What was poor Lord Harry Poulett's dismay, when a letter came to hand with the news that he would receive fifty monkeys by such a ship, and fifty more by the next conveyance, making up a hundred, according to his Lordship's commands!

ANCIENT IRISH GARMENT.—In 1824 a male body, completely clad in woollen antique garments, was found in a bog near Sligo, six feet below the surface; and so perfect was the body when first discovered, that a magistrate was called upon to hold an inquest on it. The garments, also, were in such complete preservation, that a photograph was made of a person clad in this antique suit, with the exception of the shoes, which were too small for an adult of our day. The costume of this ancient Irish gentleman is exceedingly picturesque, consisting of trews of a plaid pattern, made wide above, like Turkish trousers, but fitting close to the leg and ankle; over them was a tunic of soft cloth, most elaborately gored and gussetted, showing high perfection in the tailoring art. The skirt of the tunic, which extends to the knee, is set on full, and measures eight feet in circumference at the bottom. The sleeves are tight, and open to the elbow, like an Albanian jacket; and over all was thrown the immemorial Irish mantle, so invariably worn—so indispensable a portion of Irish costume—that it passed into a proverb among our neighbors, the Welsh, "like an Irishman for the cloak." This graceful garment, as found upon the hero of the bog, and now visible in our Museum, is composed of brown, soft cloth, made straight on the upper edge, which is nine feet long, but cut nearly into the segment of a circle on the lower. The form resembles closely that worn by the Calabrian peasant at this day. These cloaks were often of great value; Kings were paid tribute of them. They were made of various colors, each color being a symbol to denote the rank of the wearer. The number of colors also, in a dress, had a significant value, and was regulated by law. Thus, one color only was allowed to slaves; two for soldiers; three for goodly heroes or young Lords; six for the learned men; and seven was the regal number for Kings and Queens.—Dublin University Magazine.

AN anecdote of the late Count Tascher de la Pagerie now circulates through the salons of Paris. It is said that in one of the great German battles he was, from the effects of a ball passing close to him, thrown down as one paralysed. The action at an end, as the wounded were being carried from the field and the dead interred, the soldiers, thinking that he was among the latter, threw him into a hole which they were filling up, when his aide-de-camp, who had been very uneasy about him, arrived. His attachment to Count Tascher de la Pagerie was so great that he could not bear the idea of his death. He tore away with his hands the clay that covered the supposed corpse, whom the damp of the earth had begun to reanimate, and thus saved from death one who had escaped unhurt to the hottest parts of the battle.

A DISTINGUISHED personage of the period (Lord Radnor) had a great fondness for letting the blood (at the point of an amicable lancet—not a hostile sword) of his friends. But his Lordship, far from accepting a fee, was willing to remunerate those who had the courage to submit to his surgical care. Lord Chesterfield, wanting an additional vote, for a coming division in the House of Peers, called on Lord Radnor, and, after a little introductory conversation, complained of a distressing headache. "You ought to lose blood, then," said Lord Radnor. "Gad—do you indeed think so? Then, my dear Lord, do add to the service of your advice by performing the operation. I know you are a most skilful surgeon." Delighted at the compliment, Lord Radnor, in a trice, pulled out his lancet-case and opened a vein in his friend's arm. "By-the-bye," asked the patient, as his arm was being adroitly bound up, "do you go down to the house to-day?" "I had not intended going," answered the noble operator, "not being sufficiently informed on the question which is to be debated; but you, that have considered it, which side will you vote on?" In reply, Lord Chesterfield unfolded his view of the case; and Lord Radnor was so delighted with the reasoning of the man who had held his surgical powers in such high estimation, that he forthwith promised to support the wily Earl's side of the division. "I have shed my blood for the good of my country," said Lord Chesterfield that evening to a party of friends, who, on hearing this story, were convulsed with laughter.

As musical snuff-boxes of Switzerland play airs that are copyright, the singular idea has been come to, to prohibit them unless the authors' rights are paid.

ABD-EL-KADER has been made a brother Mason.

THE death of the well-known sculptor, Rietschel, took place on the eve of the day when he was to have exhibited his last work—a car, with four horses, destined for Brunswick, and the models of the statues of Luther and of Wickliffe, for the monument of the Reformation at Worms.

A NUMBER of young Hungarians have just sent to M. H. Berlioz a silver crown of exquisite workmanship, bearing on a shield the arms of the town of Gyor (in German Raab), and these Hungarian words, "Berlioz Hectornak a Giori ifjussak (to Hector Berlioz, the young men of Gyor). This present was accompanied by a letter, also in Hungarian, which thanks him for the honor he has done the Hungarian nation by his new setting of Rakoczy's March.

AT one of the theatres in a certain city a dog forms part of the dramatis personæ of a piece now acting; and this fact has been made use of as the basis of a clever puff. We are told that an Englishman was passing along a certain street when a large dog flew at him, seized him by the leg, and tore his pantaloons in such a manner as to reduce him to the condition of a Highlander. The person thus denationalized appealed to the magistrates of the locality, and the brute's master was summoned. The latter could not account for the misconduct of the animal, who was so docile that he was lent every evening to Mr. ———, of the Theatre Royal, &c., &c. The Englishman accepted payment for the mischief, and the affair dropped.

THE SHORTEST BIOGRAPHY EXTANT.—Here is a model which is rare and little known—perhaps the briefest personal memoir ever written. They are the "Memoirs of Count Coptopchin," written in ten minutes. We subjoin a few paragraphs, each of which constitutes a "chapter."

"My Birth. On the 12th day of March, 1765, I emerged from darkness into the light of day. I was measured, I was weighed, I was baptized. I was born without knowing wherefore, and my parents thanked Heaven, without knowing it.

"My Education. I was taught all sort of things, and learned all sorts of languages. By dint of impudence and quackery I sometimes passed for a savant. My head has become a library of odd volumes, of which I keep the key.

"My Sufferings. I was tormented by masters; by women; by ambition; by self-love; by useless regrets, and by remembrances.

"Memorable Epochs. At the age of thirty, I gave up dancing: at forty, my endeavors to please the fair sex; at fifty, my regard of public opinion; at sixty, the trouble of thinking; and I have now become a true sage, or egotist—which is the same thing.

"Respectable Principles. I have never meddled in any marriages or scandal. I have never recommended a cook or a physician; and consequently have never attempted the life of any one.

"My Dislikes. I have a dislike to sots and fops, and to intriguing women, who make a game of virtue; a disgust of affectation; pity for made-up men and painted women; an aversion to rats, liquors, metaphysics and rhubarb; and a terror of justices and wild beasts.

"Analysis of my Life. I await death without fear and without impatience. My life has been a bad melodrama on a grand stage, where I have played the hero, the tyrant, the lover, the nobleman, but never the valet.

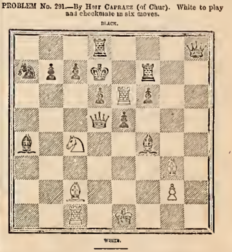
"My Epitaph. Here lies, in hope of repose, an old deceased man, with a worn-out spirit, an exhausted heart, and a used-up body. Ladies and gentlemen, pass on!"

A FOX HUNT IN LONDON.—A scene which excited a considerable amount of curiosity was witnessed a few weeks since in the vicinity of Shoreditch. Between seven and eight o'clock a fine fox, with a splendid brush, was discovered roaming about the churchyard of St. Luke's, Old street. The news of Reynard's visit to the metropolis soon spread, and the love of hunting being a characteristic of Cockneydom, the churchyard was speedily invaded by a large number of men and boys, who, armed with sticks and whips, commenced an exciting chase amongst the tombstones. The fox, however, soon distanced his pursuers, cleared the railings of the churchyard, and bolted down Mitchell street, Brick lane and Pear street, showing its tail to the motley crowd, who kept up the "run," and getting into Goswell street, managed to effect a safe retreat.

CHESS.

PROBLEM No. 291.—By Herr CAPRAEZ (of Chur). White to play and checkmate in six moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

MANCHESTER TOURNAMENT.

In this Tournament Mr. PINDAR has been successful against Mr. KIPPING. In the match pending between Wood and Francis, the winner will have to play Horwitz, and the successful player of these two is to be pitted against Pindar. Mr. Kipping does not appear to have exhibited his usual fine play.

WHITE. Mr. K.	BLACK. Mr. P.	WHITE. Mr. K.	BLACK. Mr. P.
1 P to K 4	P to K 4	27 P tks P	R tks P
2 K Kt to B 3	Q Kt to B 3	28 Q Kt to B 2	Q R to B 5 (e)
3 B to Q B 4	B to Q B 4	29 P to Q Kt 3	Q R to Q B sq
4 P to Q B 3	Kt to K B 3	30 Q Kt to K 3	B to K 3
5 P to Q 4	P tks P	31 R tks R	R tks R
6 P tks P (a)	B to Kt 5 (ch)	32 P to K Kt 4	B to K Kt sq
7 B to Q 2	Kt tks K P	33 K to K 2	P to K R 4
8 B tks B	Kt tks B	34 Q Kt to B 5 (ch)	K to Q 2
9 B tks K B P (ch)	K tks B	35 P tks P	B to K Kt 4
10 Q to Q Kt 3 (ch)	P to Q 4	36 P to K R 3	R to R 4 (ch)
11 Kt to K 5 (ch)	K to B 3	37 K to Kt 2	R to Kt 4 (ch)
12 Q tks Kt	P to Q B 4	38 K to B 3	R to R 4 (ch)
13 Q to R 4	Q to K sq	39 K to Kt 4	R tks P
14 Q to Q sq	P tks P	40 K to B 4	R tks Kt
15 P to K R 4 (b)	B to K 3	41 Kt tks B	R to R 7
16 Q tks P	K to K 2	42 P to Q R 3	Kt to Q B 4
17 Castles	P to K Kt 3	43 R to R sq	R to B 7 (ch)
18 Kt to Q B 3	Q R to B sq	44 K to Kt 3	K to K 3
19 Q R to B sq	P to Q R 3	45 Kt to K 3	Kt tks Kt P
20 K Kt to B 3 (c)	P to K R 3	46 R tks P	R to Q R 7
21 K Kt to R 4	B to K Kt sq	47 R to Q 6 (ch)	K tks P
22 Q to K 5	Q to Q sq	48 Kt to R 4 (ch)	K to K 5
23 P to K R 3 (d)	Q to Q 3	49 R to Q Kt 6	Kt to B 4
24 Kt to K B 2	P to K Kt 4	50 Kt to Q 6 (ch)	K to Q 4
25 K Kt to Q 4	Q tks Q	51 Kt tks P	Kt tks Kt
26 P tks Q	P to K Kt 3	Drawn.

(a) P to K 5 is here recommended as best.

(b) Played with Mr. Kipping's usual vigor and spirit, he has already obtained a fine game.

(c) It appears to us that Q to Q Kt 6 instead of the move in the text would not only have maintained the attack, but would have considerably improved White's position.

(d) Why not P to B 5?

(e) A lost move.

THE deciding Game in the Tournament between Mr. PINDAR and Mr. KIPPING.

WHITE. Mr. P.	BLACK. Mr. K.	WHITE. Mr. P.	BLACK. Mr. K.
1 P to Q B 4	P to K 4	11 Q to Q Kt 6	Castles
2 P to K 3	Q Kt to B 3	12 Kt to Q Kt 5	Kt to Q B 3
3 P to Q 4	P tks P	13 Kt tks Kt	P tks Kt
4 P tks P	P to Q 4	14 Kt tks P (ch)	K to Q 2
5 K Kt to B 3	B to K 3	15 Castles	B to Kt 2
6 P to Q B 5	P to K Kt 3	16 Kt tks P at B 3	K tks Kt
7 B to Q Kt 5	B to Q 2	17 Q to R 4 (ch)	K to Kt 2
8 Q Kt to B 3	Q Kt to K 2	18 P to B 6 (ch)	K to Kt 3
9 B tks B (ch)	Q tks B	19 B to Q 2
10 K Kt to K 5	Q to K B 4	Mr. Kipping resigns.—Era.

HUMOROUS GLEANINGS.

WHY is life the riddle of riddles? Because we must all give it up.

SWINE are held by many in high esteem as food, but their hind parts are all gammon.

"You give me quite a turn," as the thief remarked when he was put upon the treadmill.

A CRUSTY old bachelor says the talk of women is usually about the men. Even their laugh is but "he! he!"

MANY a man thinks it is virtue that keeps him from turning a rascal, when, in reality, it is only a full stomach. One should be careful, and not mistake pudding for principle.

ON hearing a clergyman remark that "the world was full of change," Mrs. Partington said she could hardly bring her mind to believe it, so little found its way to her pocket.

"WHOSE pigs are those, my lad?"
"Whoy, they belong to that there big sow."
"No; I mean, who is their master?"
"Whoy," again answered the lad, "that little 'un—he's a rare'un to fight!"

"I AM very much troubled, madam, with cold feet and hands," said a fop.
"I should suppose, sir," was the reply, "that a young gentleman who had so many mittens given him by the ladies might at least keep his hands warm."

A BLIND man, led by a dog, while wandering in the streets of Paris, had his dog seized by some one passing. Instantly opening his eyes, he gave chase, overtook the thief and cudgelled him severely, after which he reclosed his eyes and fell to groping again!

A TEACHER had been explaining to his class the points of the compass. All were drawn up in front towards the north.
"Now, what is before you, John?"
"The north, sir."
"What is behind you, Tom?"
"My coat-tail, sir," said he, trying at the same time to get a glimpse of it.

A NEPHEW of Mr. Bagges, in explaining the mysteries of a tea-kettle, describes the benefits of the application of steam to useful purposes.
"For all of which," remarked Mr. Bagges, "we have principally to thank—what was his name?"
"Watt was his name, I believe, uncle," replied the boy.

AN ignorant Dutchman, passing a number of railroad tracks in the course of a day's journey, and never having seen any before, was nonplussed to account for their use. At length, after examining one of them for about twenty-five minutes, and scratching his head, he ejaculated "Tey musht pe iron clamps, to keep der ertquakes from preaking up der rood."

THE celebrated Judge Paine, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, was induced by a friend to go to an assembly to see a noted beauty, who was to grace the meeting with her presence. When he arrived there, on being asked how he liked her appearance,
"Fudge!" exclaimed the cynic. "Do you call her handsome? She has no more expression than a bowl of milk!"

"NAPOLEON ALEXIS DOBBS, come up here and say your lesson. What makes boys grow?"
"It is the rain, sir."
"Why do not men grow?"
"Because they carry umbrellas, which keep off the rain."
"What makes a young man and woman fall in love?"
"Because one of 'em has a heart of steel and t'other a heart of flint, and when they come together they strike fire, and that is love."
"That's right, my boy; now go and plague the girls."

AT West Hartlepool, the other day, when a milk-boy called upon one of his customers, the good dame, believing his commodity to be, like human nature, of a mixed character, said to him,
"How much water does your mistress think proper to put in two quarts of milk?"
"I'm sure," replied the rogue, "I don't know; neither does she, for she just splashes it in. Come up!" he cried to his steed, and with a whistle drove unconcernedly on, the old lady looking after him in mute astonishment.

PARSON GREEN, an American preacher, in the habit sometimes of drawing upon a box of sermons bequeathed him by his father, who was also a minister, upon one occasion got hold of a sermon, by mistake, which the old gentleman had once preached to the State Prison convicts. It opened well, and the congregation were becoming deeply interested, when all at once the parson surprised them with the information that "had it not been for the clemency of the Governor, every one of them would have been hung long ago."

"WHATEVER made you marry that dowdy?" said a mother to her son.
"Because you always told me to pick a wife like my mother," was the dutiful reply.

EATING BOILED OYSTERS BY THE PECK.—The editor of the Cleveland Herald writes to his private friend Washington, as follows: "Did you ever eat a boiled oyster? We have discovered a new institution in Washington. A friend asked us to follow whither he should lead. Entering a low shed-like building, pervaded by a 8-dollar smell, and penetrating the inner recesses, where twenty men were opening oysters, passed down into an apartment where two boilers or cauldrons were set in furnaces, our friend ordered some boiled oysters. The response was the query, and "a peck" was the reply. We stared, but stood by with considerable curiosity, and only two small men as fodder, the cauldron of forty more quart baskets, placed under a force pump and thoroughly washed; then the basket and oysters went into the cauldron full of boiling water and remained five minutes. Plates, meanwhile, were heated, and the peck of oysters deposited on the bench; butter placed in the hot plates, with salt and pepper, and the feasting commenced. This was an easy task, as each shell had opened. The oysters were opened faster than we could eat them, but we finished not until the peck of shells were scraped into the trough. The bill was twenty-five cents. A boiled oyster is very much like a broiled one in delicacy of flavor."

HORSFORD'S SECRETARIES IN STATE.—The Discussion publishes a horrible instance of the distressing influence of fanaticism and ignorance among the Spanish population of the island of St. Domingo, neighborhood of Cuba, district of Castellon, province of Valencia, one some years back, was attacked with typhoid fever, and, as is usual, which, returned regularly at intervals of a month. His wife and three children did not escape the malignant relieve him, but in vain. At last, a pretended sorcerer was applied to, and he made the sick man believe that the man was possessed by a devil, and that he would never get well so long as the fiend remained. Accordingly, a few nights back, she and her three daughters, who shared her bed, stocked the room with bushels of fuel, was in bed asleep, and did not leave off until he was not only dead, but burnt to a perfect cinder. The next morning the woman went to the parish priest, and related that she and her children had killed the demon who had so long afflicted her husband. The woman, the daughters and the sorcerer were arrested. The latter stated that the people was so great against the latter that it was with difficulty they were prevented from killing him."

Just Published,

Under Royal Seal, by Letters Patent, in cloth.....$1 00
Modern Hand Book of Archery, 50 cuts.....75
Illustrated Archery Song Book, with Music.....50
Hutton's Gymnastic and Calisthenic, half morocco.....4 00
Andersen's Exercises of Field Artillery, 12 plates.....1 00
Barnard's Manual of Duties with 15 Back Cuts.....1 00
Wilcox's Rifle and Light Infantry.....1 00
Gardner's Elementary of the Army, 24 outline plates.....1 00
Lyon, Ed. (early) Military Instructions, 12 plates.....1 00
Lieut. Kelton's New Manual of Sword and Sabre Exercise, 24 cuts.....
Any of the above Books sent free by mail on receipt of the price.
A large stock of the best American, English and French Military Books on hand.
BERGER & WILKENS,
Publisher, 313 Broadway.
263

Steam Weekly between New York and Liverpool,

LANDING AND EMBARKING AT QUEENSTOWN (IRELAND).

The Liverpool, New York and Philadelphia Steamship Company intend despatching their full-powered Clyde built Iron Steamships as follows:

BY EUROPA, SATURDAY, APRIL 20.
BY ARABIA, SATURDAY, MAY 11.
CITY OF WASHINGTON, SATURDAY, MAY 4,
and every Saturday, at noon, from Pier 44 North River.

RATES OF PASSAGE:

First Cabin.....$75 00 | Steerage.....$30 00
" to Londonderry.....75 00 | Steerage Return Tickets.....60 00
Steerage Return Tickets, good for 12 months.....$60 00
Passengers booked through to Paris, Havre, Hamburg, Bremen, Rotterdam, Antwerp, &c., at moderate rates.
Passengers embarking or leaving and their friends can buy tickets here at the following rates, to New York: From Liverpool or Queenstown: first Cabin, $75, $85 and $100. Steerage, $30. Return Tickets, $60. From Glasgow: $80.
Children under twelve years of age, half price.
Servants accompanying passengers. They are built in Watertight Iron Compartments, and have Patent Fire Alarm Valves on board.
For further information apply in Liverpool to WILLIAM INMAN, Agent, 22 Water St.; in Glasgow to WM. P. SMAN, 6 St. Enoch square; in Queenstown to JAMES MURPHY, 104 W. & CO.; in London to THOMAS BAGLEY, 61 Lombard street; in Paris to JAMES BROWN, 8 Place de la Bourse; in Philadelphia to JAMES A. HEALY, 109 Walnut st., or at the Company's Office.
253 JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 15 Broadway, N. Y.

Shaler's Flexible Roller Patent Floor Skates.

The use of these Skates imparts a perfect knowledge of the art of Skating on ice, as well as furnishing the most pleasant and healthful exercise ever recreated by the public. Directors of Ladies in this city have become proficient in Skaters by the use of these.
We only place for the present article at 405 Broadway N. Y.
C. M. VAIL, Sole Agent and Manufacturer.
266

THE ILLUSTRATED BOOK OF FRANK LESLIE'S PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE WAR FOR THE UNION.
Will be ready in the month of May.

Hard Times Made Easy.

Good News for the Unemployed!
1,000 CHANCES TO MAKE MONEY!
ONE MILLION DOLLARS
WORTH OF
Watches, Jewellery and Silver-Plated Ware,
TO BE DISPOSED OF ON
An Entirely New and Original Plan!
2,500 Agents Wanted!!
All persons desirous of securing an Agency in this
NEW ENTERPRISE
Should send on their address, and inclose for a three-cent stamp to pay postage, and receive by return of mail
A Premium Catalogue,
Containing over 100 Articles, with a Description of
A Rare Chance to Make Money
Without risk, together with
Full Particulars Relative to this Novel Plan!
To insure prompt and satisfactory dealings, direct all letters to
GEORGE G. EVANS,
439 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

$75 PER MONTH, clear of expenses, is made by energetic men with our $10 Specialty. Address, with stamp, SHAW & CLARK, Buffalo, N. Y.
Box 1044, Cincinnati, Ohio.
2259

To Singers.
HOARSENESS.—A music teacher in the Southern part of Illinois, suffered from Hoarseness, Sore Throat, and Cough Examine: "Having tried almost every experiment for Hoarseness without much benefit, I seemed cured by the use of one bot. I am highly pleased with them."

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

EVILMINDED persons have attempted to cast ill upon the public a spurious article! Take the counterfeit to the Bank-note, "Holloway, New York and London," within in every box of the book of directions around the pots. Sold in Cincinnati, Ohio, No. 99 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all Druggists, at 25 cts., 63 cts. and $1 per box or pot.
253

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches?

MY Cogswell will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without injury to the skin. It has been used by thousands with perfect success. Sent by mail, free, for $1. Address
C. G. GRAHAM, 160 Nassau St., New York.

MATHMONY MADE EASY; Or, How to Win a Lover.—Containing plain, common-sense directions for both sexes, with rules for telling character by the features, and the secrets, when to marry, and when not to marry, and why thousands are unhappy in the married state. Mailed free for 25 cents. In cash or postage stamps. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia Post Office, box 2,765.

NERVOUS DEBILITY or Spermatorrhœa —Self-CURED. Sufferer of all parents (especially of or any nature and Circular no dishonest reference.) "Science." Hay, either sex, how one can to cure you. Before obtaining ANY treatment send your address to Box 119, Charlestown, Mass.
261 3

Bogle's Hair Dye and Wigs

ARE unapproached and unapproachable, and their superior merits, for the last twenty years, are universal.

BOGLE'S ELECTRIC HAIR-DYE

Private Rooms for Dyeing Hair and Sitting Wigs at 202 Broadway, Between Barclay and Vesey Streets, 3d Door from the Astor House.
Send for circular. Inclose postage for same. 200

TUCKER'S

PARIS BRIDAL
GARNITURES AND VEILS
Coiffures, Flowers, Feathers and Toilet Appendages are ever of a pleasing character.
169 Broadway. 234-255

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every city, town and county in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patent article just introduced. It requires a signal of from ten to fifty dollars to employment in either great inducements. For full particulars write immediately, and receive our letter by return mail.
ROBT. MACKAY & CO.,
434 North 3d., Baltimore, Md.
271 63

Tiffany & Co.,
LATE
TIFFANY, YOUNG & ELLIS,
Fine Jewellery, Precious Stones, Watches, Silver Ware
Bronzes, Clocks, Rich Porcelain Articles of Art and Luxury
No. 550 Broadway, New York.
Store of Tiffany, Young & Ellis, Paris.
2267

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE.—Send Stamp to Box 1659, Lowell, Mass.
260 52

Finkle & Lyon's
SEWING MACHINES,
With new Improvements, Hemmers, &c., all complete,
AT REDUCED PRICES.
Agents wanted. Send for a Circular. 628 Broadway, N. Y.
260

All the Important Discovery of the Age.
A SURE, CHEAP AND EASY REMEDY TO MAKE A UNIVERSAL WANT.
FRANK G. JOHNSON'S PATENT
POWDERED COAL TAR,
FOR EXTERMINATING INSECTS AND VERMIN OF FLESH AND GARDEN.
The Insect-tribe possess a vast destruction of most agricultural productions throughout the world, rendering a general precaution very important, and it is generally known that Coal tar in very extensive to Insects and Vermin, both in a healthy nature, and also in the form of a powder, which is very easily applied, and it is impossible to make more than a limited application.
The Powdered Coal Tar now introduced is completely POWDER COAL TAR OF ITS STRONG NATURE, rendering it perfectly clean to handle, and an eternally applicable form that cannot exhort to the full extent plied.
The conclusion with which this article is recommended is based upon the results of the use a thousands and thousands of persons in every part of the United States, proving of superior of needs and wants in less every description of very nature.
It has not only the advantage of being so cheaply fitted that everybody can obtain it to use liberally, introducing but it is also prepared, in whatever dry, that renders it perfectly clean.
Price, in tents, 1 pound each, 50 cts.; 3 pounds each, $1; 5 pounds each, $1. In kegs, 25 pounds each, $4; 100 pounds each, $15.
Respectfully Yours Wanted in every county in the United States that directly ascertained), to supply the demand. The Powder will be sent to any part of the country to which there is no regular, from one with sufficient a rent of prepaid to the Agent, Wholesale Dealer, or Consumer, and not put for further cost on application. Address
JOHN G. WILLS,
Corner Park Row and Broadway 21, N. Y.

Lamb, Webster & Co's
IMPROVED LOCK-STITCH SEWING MACHINES,
No. 343 Broadway, New York. 260a

JEWELLERY! JEWELLERY!!
HEADQUARTERS for all those engaged in the ONE DOLLAR STORES and Jewellery Peddlers. Send for our price-list. Address, with Stamp,
C. P. CURTIS, Manufacturing Jeweller,
262 Broadway, New York.

6,000 AGENTS WANTED—To sell six new articles in every household—very recent, and of great value to families; all pay great profits to dealers. Send four stamps and get 12 samples and circulars.
284 3m EPHRAIM BROWN, Lowell, Mass.

E. DUBERNET & CO.,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Passe-Partouts and Fancy Frames,
244 Broadway, between Spring and Prince Sts., New York
427 Gth, Emery, Black Walnut and Oak Frames always on hand. 268

1. DUBERNET. 2. DUBERNET.

The Union Clothes Dryer.
A New Invention—Useful, Cheap and Portable,
By which Clothes in large quantities may be dried in a yard, a room, or on the roof of a house. Can be put up and taken down in a minute without obtaining the help of a mechanic. It is so simple to be commenced into a small compass and kept in a closet. Its many should be without this article.
Price $2, $3 and $4.
The Union Clothes Dryer is recommended by all unprejudiced persons to be one of the most useful and labor-saving inventions of the age.
J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors,
457 Broadway (near Grand St.), New York, and 357 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

335 EMPIRE 335
SEWING MACHINE.
PATENTED FEB. 14, 1860.
SALESROOM, No. 335 BROADWAY.
This Machine is constructed on an entirely new principle of Mechanism. It possesses many new and valuable improvements—the best combination of the most perfected principles ever discovered to be SIMPLICITY and PERFECTION COMBINED.
The following are the principal objections urged against Machines heretofore made.
1. Excessive friction in the operator.
2. Inability to get out of order.
3. Expense, trouble and time required in repairing.
4. Complexity and liability to derangement of material.
5. Inapplicable to some wish to operate.

The Empire Sewing Machine
IS EXEMPT FROM ALL THESE OBJECTIONS.
It has a straight needle, perpendicular motion, makes the Lock-Stitch alike on both sides, which will neither rip or ravel and is alike on both sides; performs perfect sewing on all kinds of fabrics, from the finest Muslin to the coarsest Sail Cloth; is a strong, firm, durable Machine, not liable to get out of order, and the least possible friction, runs as smooth as glass, and is

EMPHATICALLY A NOISELESS MACHINE.

It requires very little power to drive it than any other Machine in market. A girl of twelve years of age can work it steadily, without fatigue or injury to health. Its strength and workmanship guarantee of construction render it almost impossible to get out of order, and is recommended by the Company to give entire satisfaction.
We respectfully invite persons who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article to call and examine the Machine before purchasing.
Any one a more especial manner do we solicit the patronage of
MERCHANT TAILORS,
CLOAK MAKERS,
HOOP-SKIRT MANUFACTURERS,
SHIRT AND BOSOM MAKERS,
DRESSMAKERS,
CORSET MAKERS,
GAITER-TISTERS,
SHOE BINDERS,
VEST AND PANTALOON MAKERS
and
Religious and Charitable Institutions
WILL BE LIBERALLY DEALT WITH.
PRICE OF MACHINES COMPLETE
No. 1—For Family Machine.....$60
No. 2—For Tailoring Machine.....65
No. 3—Large size Machine.....85
Agencies Established:
WILSON & CO., 136 North Ninth St., Philadelphia, Pa.
G. CHILDS, 12 North Gay St., Baltimore, Md.
JOHN R. BUSH, 282 River St., Troy, N. Y.
JAMES TODD, Commercial Building, Cincinnati, Ohio
AGENTS WANTED.
270 T. J. MACKINTOSH & CO.

The Great Comic Paper of America.

A NEW NUMBER

FOR THE 1ST OF MAY.

Being No. 37 of

FRANK LESLIE'S
BUDGET OF FUN.

This number is one of the very best ever issued, being full of Hits at the Times.

Uncle Abe Taking his Pill is full of point, and shows what may come to pass. Nancy Secord is an immense caricature.

THE GRAND CANYON IS
THE GRAND CANYON IS
THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,
THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,
THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,
THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,
THE SICK MAN OF AMERICA,

And his reply to the three Undertakers of Europe.

Our Illustrations of the National Academy of Design.

Nor are the the Fine Arts forgotten, for there is an entire page of illustrations of the most celebrated Pictures now hanging at the Academy of Design. There have been put up regardless of expense, and are more like the Pictures than are the originals themselves.

Original Sketch of Page's "Infant Bacchus"

CORRECTED SKETCH OF PAGE'S LARGE PICTURE, "DOLCE FAR NIENTE."

Windsor Castle as Never Seen by Whiting.

REVISED PORTRAIT OF GEN. JACKSON.

Great Study of Marino Pateser, by Hart.

A MAGNIFICENT FRAME WITH LITTLE PIGS,
BY WAYTHMAN.

Together with

Extraordinary Portraits of Individuals, Animals and Things.

There is besides a perfect

Wealth of Humorous Illustrations

Touching everything, and

SOMETHING ELSE BESIDES.

GREAT CHAPTER ON
Purchasing Dogs of Pure Breed.
THIRTEEN ILLUSTRATIONS.

First Scene towards the Purchase.
Arrival at the Dog Fancier's Store.
He is admired—particularly his Bushy Tail and Tan Spots.
He is Weighed and found not Wanting.
After his Bath He is—Scotch after Bushy Tail and Spots.
Gradual Increase in Size.
Second Week.
Third Week.
Fourth Week.
How he was Treated in the First Place.
How in the Last.
His present Appearance.
The future Size of the true King Charles Breed.

LADIES LOOK OUT!

DOG FANCIERS BEWARE!

The Pages of Literary Matter

ARE SPARKLING

AND

RIDICULOUS.

The Gravest Man must Laugh!

The Funny Man Die of Envy!

Every Politician should buy the BUDGET OF FUN.

Every Artist should buy the BUDGET OF FUN.

Every Youth,
Every Adult,
Every Lady,

Will buy the BUDGET OF FUN.

All the People in America buy the BUDGET OF FUN.

PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.
PRICE SIX CENTS.

The BUDGET OF FUN for the 1st of May, published by

FRANK LESLIE,
12 City Hall Square.

Cephalic Pills.
Sick Headache, CURE
Nervous Headache, CURE
All kinds of Headache.

By the use of these Pills the periodic attacks of Nervous or Sick Headache may be prevented; and if taken at the commencement of an attack, immediate relief from pain and sickness will be obtained.

They seldom fail in relieving the Nausea and Headache to which females are so subject.

They act easily upon the bowels, removing Costiveness.

For Literary Men, Students, Delicate Females, and all persons of sedentary habits they are valuable as a Laxative, improving the appetite, giving tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and restoring the natural elasticity and strength of the whole system.

The CEPHALIC PILLS are the result of long investigation and carefully conducted experiments, having been in use many years, during which time they have received and relieved vast amount of pain and suffering from Headache whether originating in the nervous system or from a deranged state of the Stomach.

They are entirely vegetable in their composition, and may be taken at all times with perfect safety without making any change in diet, and the slightest cold or exposure after taking them is any admonisher them to shelter.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS

The genuine have five signatures of Henry C. Spalding on each Box.

Sold by Druggists and all other Dealers in Medicines.

A Box will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the

PRICE, 25 CENTS,

all orders should be addressed to

HENRY C. SPALDING,

48 East 8th. St., New York.

THE FOLLOWING INDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS

Will convince all who suffer from

HEADACHE

THAT A SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS WITHIN THEIR REACH.

These Extraordinary were unsolicited by Mr. Spalding, they aspeak unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly valuable discovery.

HARTSDALE, CONN., Feb. 5, 1861.

MR. SPALDING:—Sir—I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I do them so well that I want you to send me two dollars worth more. Part of them are for the neighbors, to whom I gave a few and found it to be very good.

Send the Pills by mail, and oblige

Yours truly, JAMES ESNENBURG.

HARTSDALE, PA., Feb. 6, 1861.

MR. SPALDING—Sir—I wish to send to you for a dozen more of your Cephalic Pills. I have received a great deal of benefit from them. Yours respectfully,

MARY ANN STODDICOE.

STRONG CORNER, Pennsylvania Co., Pa., July 16, 1861.

H. C. SPALDING—Sir—You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately.

Respectfully yours, JOS. H. SIMONS

P. S.—I have used one box of your Pills and find them excellent.

BRIDE VERNON, CONN., Jan. 18, 1861.

HENRY C. SPALDING, ESQ.—Please find inclosed twenty-five cents, for which you will remember send me a dozen Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best Pills I have ever tried.

Yours, &c., A. SMITH, JR.

Jacob Vernon, Wyandot Co., O

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Feb. 12, 1861.

H. C. SPALDING, ESQ.—Send for some Circulars or large show bills, to have your Cephalic Pills more extensively known before my customers. If you have anything of the kind, please send to me. One box of your Pills, which I sent to a person this Morning, has already given entire satisfaction. Respectfully yours, W. B. WILKES

$5 A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will serve ten times its cost annually. Try it.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SAVE THE PIECES.

ECONOMY DISPATCH

$5^ "A Stitch in Time Saves Nine."

As accidents will happen, even in well regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.

Spalding's Prepared Glue

meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. In a few words—Read, and try the following point.

" USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."

N. B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cts.

Address HENRY C. SPALDING,

No. 48 Cedar St., New York.

CAUTION.

An certain unprincipled persons are attempting to palm off on the unsuspecting public imitations of my PREPARED GLUE, I would caution purchasers to examine both before buying, and take none but

$5^ SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, "48 & 50 the outside wrapper all others are swindling concerns. wrote

FURNITURE! FURNITURE!!

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY B. P. DEGRAAF),

NO. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six stories in height, and extends 262 feet through to No. 65 Chrystie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade, for Time or Cash. Their Stock contains, in part, of

ROSEWOOD PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $20 to $100.

JENNY LIND AND EXTENSION POST BEDSTEADS,

Five feet wide, especially for the Southern Trade

^ Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented. 379-84

NOW WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Grover & Baker's

CELEBRATED NOISELESS

Sewing Machines.

No family can afford to be without one.

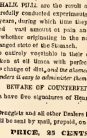
495 BROADWAY, N. Y.

4000

Dr. Brown's Patent Baby-Tender.



Hope for the Friendless.

THIS article of Nursery Furniture is different from, superior to, and supplies the place of everything heretofore used for that purpose.

N. B.—The exercise this and her nursery children in the use of your Baby Tenders very much strengthens their limbs, and is a safeguard against all accidents. Exposure with the services of one unclothed would be avoided by the

J. S. BROWN & SON, Worcester No. 653 Broadway, N. Y., between Bond and Bleecker Sts. 4000

Send for circulars.

DR GRAFH'S ELECTRIC OIL

FOR the quick cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Swellings, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, Stiffness and Pains in Limbs, Fevers, Fever Sores, Sore Throat, Piles, Tetter, &c., &c. They cannot exist when it is applied.

It cured me of Swellings and Skin Neck in one night.—Jan Adolphus, Editor Newspaper, New York.

It cured me of Fever and Sores.—Rev. Moses Condon, N. J.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—Rev. Mr. Hoffman, Brooklyn.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—C. Chappell, Yonkers, N. Y.

It cured my wife of Rheumatism.—Ed. Bordentown (N. J.) Register.

It cured me of an old Sore.—Wm. Mudder, New York.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—R. D. Smith, Morris, Ill.

It would be impossible to publish all the certificates in a book of this size. Call at the Office, 87 Bowery, and see the cure with your own eyes, and receive a pamphlet containing them. Sent to any address on receipt of price, 50 cents, 87 Bowery, New York. 4000

DR GRAFH, M. D.

JOY TO THE WORLD.

Clothes Washed in One Minute by

JOHNSON'S PATENT WASHING MACHINE.

Patented April 10, 1860.

1500.

PRICE $3 TO $10.

A CURD CAN OPE-RATE IT. Machines sent to any part of the country upon receipt of money. Call and see it in operation at 42 Chatham-way, New York, and 312 Fulton St., Brooklyn.

A. JOHNSON & CO.,

Proprietors.

602

CASSELL'S

Illustrated History of England.

THE WORK BY J. F. SMITH, UP TO THE REIGN OF EDWARD I., AND FROM THAT PERIOD,

By William Howitt.

In Fortnightly Parts of 64 Pages, price 10 cts.; Monthly Parts of 256 pages, price 50 cts.

The whole will be completed in six volumes, of six Monthly and twenty-four parts each. The price of each volume, to New Orleans, or Twelve Dollars for the whole work.

"A splendid work. It will be an invaluable History."—New York Observer.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 37 Park Row.

THE GREATEST BANBURY of the age, and at the same time the greatest article to make money on ever invented. It costs $4 to make 25 cents, and sells for $1. Requires less than $2 to fit capital. Sells every where at sight, and to every one. Agents, a single one, with the directions for making, sent, post free, for $1. Address, in all cases, each inclosed,

J. R. FRAY & CO., Stoughton, Mo.

S. R. Walker,

TYPE FOUNDRY

AND PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,

17 Beekman St., New York. 377 99

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.—For particulars address, inclosing 25cts., DR. J. HUBBELD, Surgeon and Accoucheur, 464 Broadway, New York. 374-86

The Early Physical Degeneracy

OF

American People

AND THE EARLY MELANCHOLY DECLINE OF CHILD-HOOD AND YOUTH

Just published by

DR. STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Rheumatism and Consumption; Wasting of the Flesh, Pain, Dyspepsia and Kidney Diseases and Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

Nervous Debility, Pain and Decay are the result of thirty years' experience of the author, and is more than ten thousand cases of the class of disease he describes. It has been written from a conviction and philanthropic motive, and answers most pointedly to Patents, Guardians and to Youth, for whose benefit it will be mainly issued. SHATTUCK & BABB, sole agents, will place the thanks and rocks for the publication, and will soon have ample and obtain the money thereof.

Fall not to Send and get this Book.

ADDRESS

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No 10 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y. 379-84

Handsome Women.

HOWE'S "BLOOM OF ROSES" is rich and delicate for the elastic cooling. IT WILL RUB OUT IN HUE OF, and when once applied remains durable for years. It has in it no lead mineral and the closest scrutiny fails to detect its use. Can be removed by washing. Sent by mail upon the receipt of $1. This is a new preparation, used by the celebrated Court Beauties of London, Paris and Vienna. Address, with directions, HOWE, 181 Fulton St., N. Y. 379-84

DR. HOWE'S "CURE TOILET POWDER" imparts a dazzling beauty to the complexion, rub, cellular and subcutaneous tissue, the surprising clear and for purpose, and WILL NOT RUB OFF. Mailed free for 50 cts. in postage stamps. To be obtained only of HOWE & CO., Perfumers, 707 Garrison Place, Philadelphia. Agents Wanted. 380-92 Philadelphia, Pa.

PIANOFORTES AND VOCAL MUSIC AT REDUCED PRICES.—The following splendid collection for 50 cents:

Heart of Hearts, Song. Parlor Roll—Last of My Vanquest. Best Schottisch. Song. The Herdsman's Mountain Retreat. Beautiful Polka. Song. Hazel-dell. Song. Shall we Forget—Dance of Fairies—Sketch for the Bosom of a Friend. Song. Wallz from Stamboo—Rovers, Rulers of the Sea—Song. The Grove in Night—Evening Prayer—Song. Sweet Mother, Oh—Fair Valeet of Music—Home Sweet Home.

Persons sending for these and other pieces of Music, for all for 50 cents, were to all parts of the United States. Address C. Lefebvre & Co., 37 Park Row, New York. 71 No. 481 Broadway, New York.

Only Twenty-five Cents a Bottle.

Superior Old Tom or London Cordial

GIN,

Bottled under the immediate supervision of Dr. Dixon, of London, for medicinal and private use.

WHOLESALE AGENT, HENRY S. GLADDING,

62 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

For sale by staple bottle or case, by Druggists and Grocers everywhere. Also by J. B. Jackson, 585 Broadway, New York; Pennsylvania Hotel, N. Y.

Perfumes! Perfumes! Perfumes!

000 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The most delightful and genuine liquid and dry Perfumes for the personal means, comprising the fragrant and perfect and latest flowers, as well as the most approved Bouquets.

MOZART VERBENA, KISS ME QUICK,
PERFECT LOVE, WASHINGTON MORNING
FRAGRANT JAPONICA, &c., &c.

Also Concentrated Flavoring Extracts, for Pine, Pudding, &c.

Jockey Incense, the most approved food for female Complexion, Skin, for chapped Hands. Camphor Ratafia Toilet Cakes, in Medicine cure for Corns and Bunions.

To be had, wholesale and retail, at No. 000 Broadway New York. 379-84

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL—SHAFER'S PATENT RULERS AND RULINGS, Thick Boards, &c., all neatly contained in one small, handy pocket.

"It is a most ingenious contrivance, answering in many purposes admirably."—Independent.

It gives a neatly finished ruling to the head, without rubbing. Shafer is the best."—N. Y. Tribune.

"It is a most ingenious contrivance, and will be in demand on every writing desk."—Prof. Wm. Stillman, Jr., of Yale College.

Samples sent, postage paid, for 75 cts., or to teachers at 50. For sale by all Stationers. Send for a Circular.

379-84 A. G. SHAFER, New Haven, Conn.

A. LANGE,

PICTURE AND LOOKING-GLASS

FRAMES

AND

CORNICES FOR ROOMS.

MADE TO ORDER, AND RE-GILDING DONE.

206 William St, cor. Frankfort, New York.

MANUFACTORY & WAREROOMS
65367 CROSBY ST. NEW YORK

ESTABLISHED 1843.

BOGLE'S CELEBRATED HYPERION FLUID restores everything to the original color and beauty of the hair in the world. Its wise have proclaimed it by universal, by this and be convinced. It never Fails. To be had at

W. BOGLE'S

Hairwork, Perfumery and Fancy Store,

202 Washington St., Boston, and for sale everywhere.

EMPLOYMENT.—Now ready, a complete Price List of Goods for Agents, Peddlers and Others, forwarded at an hour's notice. No advance payment required on goods. Address at once, 381-85 BUSHARD BROS., Providence, R. I.

Dr. Marshall's Headache and Catarrh Snuff

HAS proved itself to many physicians and hundreds sufferers to be the best article yet introduced. Nervous Debility, Colds in the Head, the Headache, and all Catarrhal affections. It purges out all obstructions, removes pain and gives a healthy action to the parts affected. A Sprinkle of the ingredients in the Nostrils RELIEVES IN A FEW MINUTES. Sold by all Druggists. 379-84

The Confessions and Experience of an Invalid.

PUBLISHED for the benefit and as a warning to young men who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay &c., together with the means of Cure. By one who cured himself, after being put to great expense through the medium of medical humbugs, and now sent free of charge, in a sealed envelope. Address, DAVID Bedford, Kings County, N. Y., by inclosing a postpaid addressed envelope. 371-83

To Nervous Sufferers.

A NEW Medicated Appliance, for the arrest of Local Debility, Spermatorrhœa, &c (sure and speedy cure). Dr. Mosse, late of Paris, may be consulted, for 1861, care R. Rockwood, Broadway Post Office, New York. Pamphlets, 25 cents.

AGENTS WANTED—In every town and city in the Union, to sell SHERMAN & CO'S NEW GIFT JEWELLERY ENVELOPES, with from $1 to $50 cash in. Our Agents are making from $5 to $10 per day. Our new style of Envelopes are now ready, which, in combination with our former valuable gifts, surpass anything of the kind ever before offered. Remember in price and quality we defy competition. Call or address, inclosing stamp for Circular, SHERMAN & CO., 329 Broadway.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AND GYMNASIUM

FOR YOUNG MEN.

Winter Session commenced on the 1st day of Nov

TERMS:

Board and Tuition.....$150 per Session.

For Circulars and particular information, apply to

PROFESSOR WILLIAM WOOD, Principal

Yonkers, 1861. 368

THE READERS OF

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper

Desiring to purchase any article in New York, no matter how trifling or costly, can have their orders promptly and faithfully fulfilled by addressing

JAMES W. FORTUNE,

Care of Frank Leslie, Esq.,

19 City Hall Square, N. Y.

In all cases the necessary funds should be inclosed in a communication.

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S

LOTTERIES!

AUTHORIZED BY THE STATES OF

DELAWARE,

MISSOURI

AND

KENTUCKY

Draw daily, in public, under the superintendence of Sworn Commissioners.

PRIZES VARY FROM

$2 50 TO $100,000!

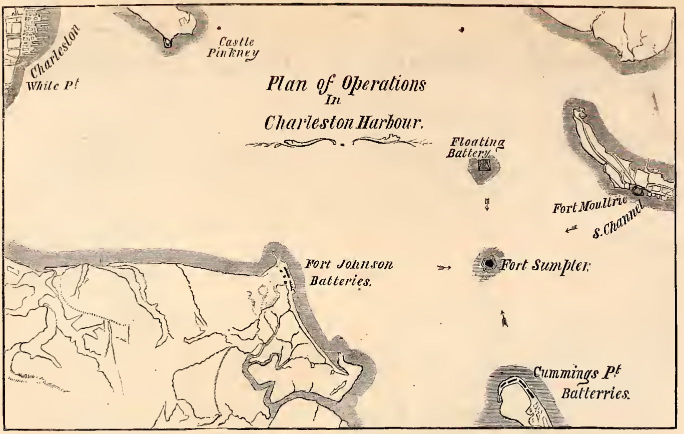
TICKETS FROM $2 50 TO $30.

^ Circulars giving full explanation and the Schemes to be drawn will be sent, free of expense, by addressing

WOOD, EDDY & CO., Washington, D. C.,

OR

WOOD, EDDY & CO St Louis Mo.



PLAN OF THE SIEGE OPERATIONS IN CHARLESTON HARBOR, SHOWING THE POSITION OF FORT SUMPTER IN RELATION TO THE ATTACKING BATTERIES.—SEE PAGE 368.

BOOKS! BOOKS!! BOOKS!!!

A GIFT with every BOOK of the value of One Dollar and upwards is presented at the time of sale

THE GIFTS vary in value from Fifty Cents up to One Hundred Dollars, and are impartially distributed among purchasers.

D. W. Evans & Co.,

Pioneer Gift Book Store,

077 Broadway, New York,

Have especial satisfaction in calling the attention of the Public to their immense and varied Stock of Books, which is now larger than ever. They would also remark that they have made VERY LARGE ADDITIONS TO THEIR PREVIOUSLY LARGE ASSORTMENT OF GIFTS, and are thus enabled to offer Greater Inducements than Ever!

We have always on hand all the NEW BOOKS, directly they are published, which we invariably sell at the Publishers' regular price. The gift is literally a GIFT, and is not paid for by the purchaser in any way whatever, except in so far as the recipient of the gift is the means of advertising us and our business. Gifts worth $500, at the lowest wholesale prices, are impartially distributed with every $1,000 worth of Books sold.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION is requested to our Catalogue, which contains a most valuable collection of standard publications in

EVERY DEPARTMENT OF LITERATURE, including the standard works of French, German, Spanish and Italian authors; School and College Text-Books, Scientific Works, Law and Medical Books. A fine assortment of JUVENILE WORKS—Games, Sports, &c.; Humorous Works, containing no end of fun; all the Standard Poets, in plain and elegant bindings, all sizes and styles; Travels and Adventures, a very large collection.

BIBLES, PRAYER-BOOKS AND HYMN-BOOKS, from the plainest to the most elegant styles, in velvet, antique, &c. The largest collection of works of Fiction (by all the great authors) to be found in the United States.

THE GIFTS CONSIST OF GOLD AND SILVER WATCHES, Silver-Plated Ware, costly sets of Cameos, Mosaic, Florentine, Coral, Garnet, Turquoise and Lava Jewellery, Gold Lockets, Gold Pencils, Gold Pens, Portmonnaies, and a thousand varieties of useful and elegant articles.

OUR 72 PAGE CATALOGUE will be mailed to any address on application. Send for it, for if you don't wish to order anything, you will find it a very valuable Book for reference, as it contains all the desirable Books in print, AND WILL COST YOU NOTHING.

D. W. EVANS & CO.,
Publishers and Gift Booksellers,
677 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

CHARLES HEIDSIECK CHAMPAGNE.

This popular Wine, of which the undersigned are SOLE AGENTS FOR NORTH AMERICA, Received the First Premium at the

BORDEAUX EXPOSITION IN 1859.

The Medal awarded by the judges can be seen at our office.
000o T. W. BAYAUD & BERARD, 100 Pearl St., N. Y

$50 PER MONTH and Expenses paid. Address for terms. J. W. HARRIS & CO., Boston, Mass.
278 870

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

THE Advertiser having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe LUNG AFFECTION, and that dread disease, CONSUMPTION, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a

SURE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c

The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted; and he hopes every sufferer may try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing. Parties wishing the prescription will please address

REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
281-90o Williamsburg, Kings County, N. Y.

A Splendid Chance to Make Money!

Persons desirous of engaging in the

JEWELLERY ENVELOPE AND DOLLAR JEWELLERY BUSINESS

Will find it greatly to their advantage, before purchasing Jewellery elsewhere, to call or send to the

Cheapest House in America,

where their orders will be promptly and carefully attended to. FOOTE, WYNGATE & CO, Manufacturing Jewellers, 282o No. 208 Broadway, New York.

RICH BOOKS.

DO NOT FAIL TO SEND FOR A CATALOGUE.

Books, Cards and Prints of every Description.

Catalogues sent POSTPAID and FREE. Address
W M. HATHAWAY, Purchasing Agency,
282-83o 23 Ann St., New York.

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—See advertisement next page.
280 84o

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.

For curing and preventing Baldness.
For removing Scurf and Dandruff.
For beautifying and making the Hair soft and curly.
In fact the only safe and effective compound of the kind in use.
Be sure and get the right article

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator.
Price 25 cents per bottle.
Wholesale Depot, 56 Dey St., New York.
Also,
PROF. L. MILLER'S INSTANTANEOUS LIQUID HAIR DYE
Price 50 cents per box.
Warranted superior to all others.
Try them, and you will acknowledge the fact. 277-39o

A Pair of Real Novelties,

AND ONE WITHOUT A MATE.

THE "PAPER" TIE Patent applied for. "A new Tie every day."
THE "RELIEF" TIE, Patented Jan. 29, 1861 A perfect "Relief" from tying Bows,
THE "LACE EDGE" TIE (exquisitely beautiful). SMITH & BROUWER, Sole Manufacturers, No 36 Warren St. N. Y
N. B.—We sell to WHOLESALE JOBBERS ONLY. Country Merchants can order our goods of ANY JOBBER. 283o

BOOK ON PORTABLE ENGINES.—"Practical Instructions for the Portable Engine, enabling every one to be his own Engineer; by a Graduate of the Military Academy, and former Member of the United States Corps of Engineers." A large Illustrated Pamphlet, sent by mail to any part of the country, price 25 cents, by the WASHINGTON IRON WORKS, Newburg, N. Y.
"The above establishment manufactures Portable Engines of all sizes, having the latest and most valuable patented improvements, and being an excellent combination of known devices for the production of a compact, efficient and cheap Portable Engine."—Scientific American. 283-86o

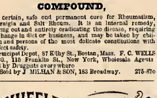
STEINWAY & SONS'

PATENT OVERSTRUNG GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS

Are now considered the best Pianos manufactured
Each Instrument warranted for five years.
Warerooms, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker St., near Broadway, N. Y. 000o

GARDINER'S Rheumatic and Neuralgia COMPOUND,

A certain, safe and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Salt Rheum. It is an internal remedy, driving out and entirely eradicating the disease, requiring no change in diet or business, and may be taken by children and persons of the most delicate constitutions with perfect safety.
Principal Depot, 87 Kilby St., Boston, Mass. F. C. WELLS & CO., 115 Franklin St., New York, Wholesale Agents
Sold by Druggists everywhere
Sold by J MILHAN & SON, 183 Broadway. 275-87o



AT REDUCED PRICES
With Glass-Cloth Presser, Improved Loop-Check, New Style Hemmer, Binder, Corder, &c.

Office, 505 Broadway, New York.

"This Machine makes the 'LOCK-STITCH,' and ranks highest on account of elasticity, permanence, beauty and general desirableness of the stitching when done, and the wide range of its application."—Report of American Institute, New York 281-84o

Patented November 1st, 1859.

The measures are A, the distance round the Neck. B to B, the Yoke. C to C, the Sleeve D to D, distance around the Body under the armpits E to E, the length of the Shirt.

BALLOU'S Patented Improved French Yoke SHIRTS.

Patented November 1st, 1859.

A New Style of Shirt, warranted to Fit.

By sending the above measures per mail we can guarantee a perfect fit of our new style of Shirt, and return by Express to any part of the United States, at $12, $15, $18, $24, &c., &c., per dozen. No order forwarded for less than half a dozen Shirts.
Also Importers and Dealers in MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS

BALLOU BROTHERS,
409 Broadway, N. Y.
Wholesale Trade supplied on the usual terms

Thorley's Food for Cattle.

FOR Horses, Cows, Sheep and Hogs, the effects produced in one month will exceed all expectation. A Pamphlet mailed free. Agents Wanted. Depot, 21 Broadway, New York 271-83o

BILLIARD BALLS, Ivory and Patent Compressed Ivory, at reduced prices. Manufactured and for sale by WM. M. WELLING, 416 Broome St Send for a Circular. 273-85o

Smith and Wesson's Seven-Shooter.

J. W. STORRS, Agent,
121 Chambers Street, N. Y.

THIS PISTOL is light, has great force, is sure fire, shoots accurately, can be left loaded any length of time without injury, is not liable to get out of order, is safe to carry. Every Pistol warranted.

CAUTION TO DEALERS.

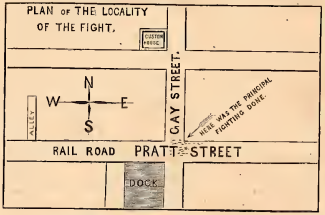
Be sure and get those stamped "Smith & Wesson, Springfield, Mass.," none others genuine. All cartridge revolvers that load at the breech are infringements. Suits are commenced, and all such infringements will be prosecuted. Be sure the cartridges have Smith & Wesson's signature on each end of the box 276-301o

HORSE POWDERS. DEPOT FOR S. G. WELLING'S Condition Powders for Horses, 416 Broome street, New York. Price Fifty Cents per box of one dozen doses 278-90o

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED

NEWSPAPER
Entered according to the Act of Congress, in the year 1861, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York

No. 284—Vol. XI.] NEW YORK, APRIL 30, 1861. [Price 6 Cents.



PLAN OF THE LOCALITY WHERE THE PRINCIPAL FIGHTING TOOK PLACE BETWEEN THE MASSACHUSETTS REGIMENT AND THE PEOPLE OF BALTIMORE, APRIL 19, 1861.

CARRYING AWAY THE DEAD AND WOUNDED AFTER THE FIGHT BETWEEN THE MASSACHUSETTS REGIMENT AND THE PEOPLE OF BALTIMORE.

THE SIXTH REGIMENT OF MASSACHUSETTS TROOPS FIRING UPON THE PEOPLE AT THE RESSINGTON DEPOT, BALTIMORE, WHILE TAKING THE CARS FOR WASHINGTON, D. C.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST. SEE PAGE 270.

Barnum's American Museum

IS overflowing with Living Wonders, including Old Grizzly Adams' California Bears, which perform a variety of amusing tricks, Sea Lion, Aztec Children, Albino Family, What Is It? Bearded Lady, Liliputian Queen, and Superb Dramatic Performances every afternoon and evening.

IRVING HALL,

IRVING PLACE AND FIFTEENTH STREET,
Opposite to the
ACADEMY OF MUSIC,
FOR BALLS, CONCERTS, LECTURES, FESTIVALS, FAIRS, &c., &c., &c.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

FRANK LESLIE, Editor and Publisher.

NEW YORK, APRIL 30, 1861.

Communications, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One Copy	17 weeks	$ 1
One do.	1 year	$ 3
Two do	1 year	$ 5
Or One Copy	2 years	$ 5
Three Copies	1 year	$ 6
Five do.	1 year (to one address)	$10

And an extra Copy to the person sending a Club of Five. Every additional subscription, $2.

NOTICE TO PHOTOGRAPHERS.

We shall be much obliged to our photographic friends if they will write in pencil the name and description on the back of each picture, together with their own name and address. This notice is rendered necessary from the fact that so many photographs are sent to us from our friends throughout the country without one word of explanatory matter, they giving us credit for being en rapport with everything that transpires or exists in all parts of the United States. The columns of our paper prove that we are up to the times in almost everything which occurs of public importance throughout the world, still we are not so ubiquitous but that something may occur beyond the circuit of our far reaching information. To save labor and insure accuracy, descriptions and names (as above indicated) should, in all cases, accompany photographic pictures or sketches.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

To Officers and others Attached to the Armies of the Federal and the Confederate States.

I shall be happy to receive from Officers and others attached to either Army, sketches of important events and striking incidents which may occur during the impending struggle which seems to threaten the country. For such sketches, forwarded promptly, I will pay liberally.

My corps of Artists is unequalled in the country, and correspondents can depend upon their sketches, however rough, being produced in the finest style of art.

Any gentleman connected with either Army who will forward us a small sketch, as a specimen of his ability as a draughtsman, will receive, gratuitously, "Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper," for the coming year.

Sketches of unusual interest will be most liberally paid for.

Special attention is requested to this notice.

FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square.

EDITORIAL GLANCES AT MEN AND THINGS.

A Southern Paper says that a county of Chicasaw, Miss., has a regularly officered and drilled company of young ladies, who have pledged themselves, in the event that the men are called into service, to protect their homes and families during their absence, and see that the farms are properly cultivated, and full crops raised not only for the support of the county, but of the army of Mississippi. The Day Book suggests that these Chicasaw beauties should be sent against the Seventh Regiment of New York, since the well-known gallantry of this favorite corps would naturally induce them to present arms to it. Another paper—which even these troubled times cannot tutor into seriousness—inclines to the belief that they would be better employed in raising and drilling Infantry. At all events, this regiment of the Misses of Mississippi would be invaluable in a Nursery of soldiers. These episodes resemble the silver lining of that terrible cloud now passing over us, but still they are hardly subjects for humor.

In Times like these levity is misplaced, but who can refuse to laugh at such Roman Tribune literature as this? It is, of course, in an article upon the great subject of the day:

"Would Leonidas have given up Sumpter? No, by Hercules! Fabius Maximus Cunctator delayed, but with arms in his hands, his whole force on foot, and his position clearly defined."

THE MONSTER MEETING IN UNION SQUARE!

Two Hundred Thousand People Come Out at the Call.

THE VOICE OF NEW YORK FOR THE UNION!

The Government to be Supported at All Risks!

NEVER has the great heart of our beloved Republic beat with so full and deep a pulse as it did on the 20th of April, for on that day the citizens of the Metropolis of the United States were called upon to show their fealty to a Constitution, which was inaugurated in a seven years' baptism of heroic suffering unparalleled in the History of Man, and nobly did that great heart beat—nobly and grandly did the millions respond as one man to the challenge. From daybreak the countenance of our citizens had a seriousness quite unusual, and the silent and continuous closing of the stores, the spontaneous tramp of thousands to one given spot, and the multitudinous display of the National Flag, gave evidence that for once the nation was aroused to a sense of its responsibility and peril. Man, woman and child seemed alike stirred by one instinct. Sectional differences were swallowed up in one grand maelstrom—Patriotism. Long before the hour named for the commencement of the proceedings, which was three o'clock, thousands were pouring from every thoroughfare to the one grand centre, Union Square, and at that time there would not have been less than a hundred and fifty thousand men assembled in Union Square and its adjacencies to give their support to the Constitution.

Long before this hour Major Anderson had been escorted to the Everett House, where he was received by the General Committee, and soon after the gallant defender of Fort Sumpter, accompanied by the Committee, made his appearance on the principal stand, where he was greeted with the utmost enthusiasm. The business of the meeting commenced with a short address by the Rev. Mr. Spring of the Old Brick Church, which he closed by an appropriate prayer, the whole mighty mass responding Amen.

When this ceremony was completed the President, Hon. John A. Dix, on taking the chair alluded to the honor conferred to him, and made a short but effective speech, urging the support of the Union. Mr. McMurdo then read the resolutions pledging the meeting to sustain the Government, and urging the appointment of a Committee of Twenty-five Citizens to represent the city in the collection of funds, and the transaction of business in aid of the Government.

The Hon. D. A. Dickenson then came forward, and made a stirring appeal to the patriotism of the State. This noble old Democrat was received with a hearty welcome.

Senator Baker, of Oregon, next addressed the meeting in a speech of similar sentiments, and was followed by the Hon. R. J. Walker. A patriotic letter was then read from Archbishop Hughes, strong in its attachment to the Union.

The Hon. Fernando Wood also made one of his emphatic speeches, which was much applauded.

The meeting was then addressed by Gov. Hunt, Mr. Evarts, Cabel Lyon, Hiram Ketchum, Gov. Hamilton Fish, John Cochrane, Mr. Raymond of the Times, Mr. O'Gorman, Mr. Havemeyer, Royal Phelps, Senator Spinola, W. J. Fuller and others.

Their speeches all breathed one sentiment, and showed a deep seated attachment to the Republic, which drew forth long and loud responses of applause.

Among the gratifying circumstances attending this grand demonstration, we may mention that not a single act of disorder occurred in this vast multitude—a convincing proof that a people can govern themselves.

ARRIVAL OF MAJOR ANDERSON AND HIS COMMAND IN NEW YORK.

THE arrival of Major Anderson and his gallant command on Thursday, the 18th, aroused the generous enthusiasm of our people, and large crowds were waiting at the foot of Canal street and at the Battery in the expectation that he would land at one of those places. The Baltic, which brought the garrison of Fort Sumpter from Charleston, arrived off Sandy Hook at twelve M. The Bavaria, from Hamburg, preceded the Baltic by a few moments, and this steamer, as well as all the craft in the bay and the houses along the shore, were decked with flags in honor of Major Anderson's arrival.

As the steamer came slowly up the harbor, her black hull relieved against the bright waters, she was saluted by guns from the forts, from the shore, and by the ringing of bells and waving of flags, which were returned by the Baltic waving her ensign and firing her cannon.

As soon as it was ascertained beyond a doubt that

Major Anderson was on Board, the excitement became intense. The Major, dressed in uniform, wrapped in his military overcoat, and looking careworn and fatigued, stood upon the wheel-house and returned the salutations of the people. The men who fought at Sumpter were distinguished by being in the full uniform of the United States, and were drawn up on the quarterdeck.

The little steam ferryboat belonging to Governor's Island soon came alongside the Baltic and received Major Anderson and his party. As she steamed up the bay the greatest enthusiasm was exhibited, and the landing at the Battery was a noble and well deserved ovation. Major Anderson and his officers stepped at once into carriages and drove to the Brevoort House. Here another ovation awaited him. Thousands had collected round the hotel and in the neighborhood to get a glimpse of the hero of the day and for all time. In answer to their shouts he bowed frequently, and seemed deeply gratified that the people, at least, appreciated his devotion, loyalty and courage. He seemed, however, careworn and fatigued, and speedily retired.

One instance of his popularity touched him deeply. He had scarcely got into the hotel, when the boys from Ward School No. 35, to the number of about five hundred, assembled on the sidewalks in front of the hotel and commenced cheering for the Union and Major Anderson. The gallant Major was induced to show himself to the youngsters, and upon his appearance at the door of the hotel a deafening cheer arose from the boys, and also from a large number of persons assembled in the vicinity of the hotel.

If a justification of Major Anderson's conduct were needed, it will be found in his simple, clear, straightforward dispatch to the Government, which we give below.

MAJOR ANDERSON'S DESPATCH TO THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

STEAMSHIP BALTIC, OFF SANDY HOOK, April 18, 1861.

The Hon. S. CAMERON, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

SIR—Having defended Fort Sumpter for thirty-four hours, until the quarters were entirely burned, the main gates destroyed by fire, the gorge wall seriously injured, the magazine surrounded by flames, and its door closed from the effects of the heat, four barrels and three cartridges of powder only being available, and no provisions but pork remaining, I accepted terms of evacuation offered by General Beauregard, being the same offered by him on the 11th inst., prior to the commencement of hostilities, and marched out of the fort Sunday afternoon, the 14th inst., with colors flying and drums beating, bringing away company and private property, and saluting my flag with fifty guns.

ROBERT ANDERSON, Major, First Artillery.

The State of the Nation.

As sorrowful historians of what is passing around us, we briefly glance at the present aspect of affairs. Comments upon so great a calamity are useless, and almost impertinent, and we therefor confine ourselves to the facts.

While the North seems determined to support the Unity of the Republic, the South are equally earnest in their determination to protect what they consider their State Rights, and until a calmer spirit prevails in both parties we fear it is hopeless to expect a satisfactory settlement of the question now at issue.

At Montgomery, the Governmental seat of the Confederated States, great activity prevails to put themselves into an imposing attitude. The Southern journals proclaim that their entire loan of fifteen millions has been taken; and in reply to President Lincoln's demand for seventy-five thousand troops, Jefferson Davis had issued a requisition for double that number. He has also published a Proclamation authorizing Privateering, a step which is calculated to bring him in collision with both France and England.

In New Orleans the same excitement reigns, and it is currently reported that several privateers are being got ready. Into New Orleans the Star of the West has been taken as a prize—having been captured by the Secessionists. She had on board a quantity of provisions belonging to the Federal Government.

Charleston remains in the same excited state, and has above ten thousand men in arms all ready for action. General Beauregard has gone to Pensacola, so it is reported, to take command of the Southern army, which, it is said, was about to attempt the reduction of Fort Pickens. The telegraphic wires being under the control of the South, there have been no communications for some days.

The latest events in this great movement of the age are the secession of Virginia and the equivocal attitude of Maryland, a State hitherto supposed to be strong for the Union. The recent attack upon the Sixth Regiment of Massachusetts, and the destruction of the bridges, by which railroad communication with the North is suspended, undoubtedly implies that the Union men have lost the control of the State. The Federal Government has taken possession of the Baltimore Railroad, and Secretary Cameron has threatened to bombard Baltimore if the bridges were not restored.

In Washington the greatest suspense exists, for its contiguity to Virginia renders it liable at any time to an attack from the Secessionists. General Scott has now concentrated around the capital nearly ten thousand reliable men, and before a week has elapsed three times that number will be gathered there.

Pennsylvania has taken up the war spirit with great alacrity, and Philadelphia, like New York, more resembles a camp than a commercial city. Everywhere is heard the tramp of armed men.

Of New York it is useless to speak, since a full account of its feeling will be found in another column. It is supposed that at the present minute there are sixty thousand men in arms preparing to defend the Union.

The Northern States of Massachusetts, Maine, Vermont, Rhode Island and Connecticut are equally alert, all animated by the one great feeling of attachment to the Union.

THE WAR FEELING IN THE NORTH.

CONNECTICUT, NORWICH, April 18, 1861.—Gov. Buckingham has issued a proclamation calling one more regiment. $14,000 were subscribed to-day for the families of volunteer companies.

MAINE, PORTLAND, April 18, 1861.—Our city banks to-day voted a loan of $250,000 to the State for war purposes.

PENNSYLVANIA, PITTSBURGH, April 18, 1881.—An intense war feeling prevails here. Business is almost entirely suspended. Immense crowds fill the prominent streets and the Union flag is flying everywhere. The volunteer companies are all filled and they are departing eastward. Liberal subscriptions are being made for the comfort of the volunteers and the support of their families. Recruiting is still going on, although there is more than enough for the regiments of the State and Federal requirements. The Committee of Public Safety held a meeting to-day and organized.

ILLINOIS, CHICAGO, April 18, 1861.—The banks of this city to-day tendered Gov. Yates $500,000, asked for as a loan for extraordinary expenses. The war feeling grows more intense. Up to this morning 2,000 men had signed the muster roll. This is double the number that will be alloted to this city. The Zouave Regiment is nearly full. A movement is on foot to uniform them and equip them by private subscription. A wealthy citizen heads the list with $1,000. $6,000 were subscribed for the support of volunteers until taken charge of by the State.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., April 18, 1861.—Tenders of companies are pouring into the Adjutant-General's office. None are put down as received who are not reported as full. Forty-nine companies have already been accepted. Tenders have been made for many more. All the railroad lines in the State have volunteered to carry the accepted companies to the place of rendezvous free of charge.

OHIO, CLEVELAND, April 18, 1861.—Ten thousand people turned out to-day as an escort to the Cleveland Greys, who have left for the rendezvous at Columbus. The enthusiasm is intense.

WISCONSIN, MILWAUKEE, April 18, 1861.—There is a strong competition among the moneyed men for the $200,000 loan asked by the State. The Juneau Bank, a Democratic institution, offers to take the whole amount at par.

NEW JERSEY, TRENTON, April 18, 1861.—The Trenton Bank and the Mechanic's Bank have each tendered to Gov. Olden the loan of $25,000 to aid in raising the four regiments of soldiers for the war. The Directors of the Mechanic's Bank each subscribed $100 to aid the families of those who volunteer in this city.

HOBOKEN.—Mr. Edward A. Stevens has offered to continue the salaries of all persons in his employ who shall enlist to serve the country.

PATRIOTIC OFFER FROM NEW JERSEY.—Mr. James Warren, proprietor of the Strawberry Farms, a summer resort, five miles from the Shrewsbury Depot, New Jersey, offers the gratuitous use of one-third of all his buildings for the use of the families of those who shall hereafter volunteer, and are called away in the service of their country.

MASSACHUSETTS, NEW BEDFORD, April 18, 1861.—The City Council to-night appropriated $5,000 for the benefit of the families of the New Bedford City Guard, attached to the Third Regiment, which left in the S. R. Spaulding. The Council also appropriated $10,000 for the organization of a coast guard for the defence of the city.

BOSTON, April 18, 1861.—Mr. William Gray has just given the Government $10,000 to aid the families of the soldiers. The Merrimac River Bank of Manchester, N. H., offers the State $40,000 for military purposes, and the Portsmouth Bank $20,000. Enlisting is going on rapidly in the Granite State. A meeting of the bank officers, representing all the Boston banks, was held here this morning, when a resolution was adopted to loan the State of Massachusetts ten per cent on their entire capital for the defence of the Government. The capital of the Boston banks amounts to $38,500,000.

BOSTON, April 19.—The Stars and Stripes to-day were thrown to the breeze from the top of Bunker Hill Monument.

VERMONT, ST. JOHNSBURY, April 19.—Governor Fairbanks has been tendered a loan of $50,000 by some of our Banks, for military purposes.

NEW YORK, POUGHKEEPSIE, April 18, 1861.—At a large and enthusiastic meeting held here over eighty volunteers were enrolled. The list will be enlarged.

TROY, April 18, 1861.—The Common Council this evening appropriated $10,000 for the support and relief of the families of the soldiers who volunteer to go to Washington. A large meeting of citizens was also held, and a similar sum was pledged to be raised by subscription.

ROCHESTER, April 18, 1861.—The Common Council this afternoon appropriated $125,000 for the support of the families of the volunteers and $5,000 to the Mayor for secret service.

PATRIOTIC ACTION OF THE WESTERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.—The following despatch was received in this city. It explains itself:

"BUFFALO, April 19, 1861.

"Everett Clapp, Cashier, No. 1 Coenties Slip, New York.

"Give $500 to assist in the rapid movement of troops from your city in aid of the United States Government. We have given $500 here, besides tendering free passages to Michigan regiments of volunteers from Detroit to Buffalo. When the future calls, as it will, we will respond again.

"JOHN ALLEN, JR.,
"President of the Western Transportation Company."

WAR EXCITEMENT IN NEW YORK CITY.

THE GERMANS READY FOR THE FIGHT.—Mr. Lichtenhein, who is actively engaged in collecting a corps of expert artillerists (naturalized citizens of German birth), informs us that there are two German regiments all ready, waiting for arms, and ready to move.

PATRIOTISM AT THE CUSTOM HOUSE.—Collector Barney has granted leave of absence (which continues their salaries) to several Custom House clerks who belong to the regiments which left the city last Sunday.

A REGIMENT OF CAVALRY.—Numerous gentlemen of this city are desirous of forming a regiment of cavalry, and are only waiting for some one capable of taking the lead in such a movement to come forward. They are ready to furnish their own horses, and supply horses for those who wish to enlist, but are unable to furnish themselves. One gentleman at the New York Hotel last night offered to give ten horses for such a regiment. Persons wishing to consult with reference to the subject can call upon Mr. G. W. Richardson, of the firm of Wood & Richardson, 21 Maiden Lane.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The subscription at the Chamber of Commerce, last Saturday afternoon, for the benefit of the city regiments called into service, amounted to $22,458. The largest subscription was $3,000, and the smallest $100.

PATRIOTIC ACTION OF THE BROADWAY BANK.—The directors of the Broadway Bank met last Saturday morning, and unanimously voted to tender to the government of this State $250,000 for military purposes.

THE CALIFORNIANS IN NEW YORK.—Measures are being taken by the Californians now in this city to call a meeting for the purpose of organizing a cavalry company of one hundred men. Each man to equip himself throughout. They will tender their services to General Scott at once. Due notice will be given through the papers.

APPEAL TO THE SONS OF NEW ENGLAND.—The following call has been issued: "Sons of New England! Remember April 19, 1775, and April 19, 1861. Those wishing to join a company composed of New Englanders to be attached to one of the New York regiments, can sign the roll at the office of the New York Evening Post and at the law office of Henry D. Tyler, 7 Wall street.

PATRIOTIC CLERGYMAN AND A PATRIOTIC WIFE.—Rev. T. W. Conway, a Baptist clergyman of this city, having been asked by a prominent military man whether he would accompany a regiment of volunteers as chaplain, replied that "he was ready as a soldier of the Cross to perform the functions of his vocation with any company who desired them, and that no service would be more cheerfully rendered than that which would tend to promote the righteous cause in which our Government is now engaged." When it was reported to his wife that there was a probability of his accompanying the Seventy-ninth Regiment Scotch Highlanders, she remarked, "If he is needed and would not go, I would not own him."

TROOPS FREE ON HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD.—The President of the Hudson River Railroad Company informed Simeon Draper, who at once communicated the fact to Governor Morgan, that his company were ready to convey troops from Albany or Troy to this city free of all charge. The country will appreciate this act of patriotism.

THE Common Council of the City of Brooklyn has appropriated $75,000 for the families of her volunteers. The city of New York has appropriated $75,000 for the same purpose; but that amount is a mere nucleus of a sum which will from private resources alone very soon exceed a million.

A FRENCH COMPANY—GARDE MURAT.—The following call has been issued by M. Le Gendre:

> "Aux armes, citoyens!
> Par la voix du canon d'alarmes,
> L'Union appelle ses enfants!"

Authorizé par le gouvernement, le soussigné forme en ce moment une compagnie qui doit porter le nom de "Garde Murat," et faire partie d'un regiment de cavalerie, qui va bientôt se mettre en campagne. Il s'adresse aux Français de New York, a ceux surtout qui ont combattu sous le glorieux drapeau tricolore. Venez, braves soldats! Et vous, hommes de resolution, vous tous qui aimez votre patrie adoptive aussi bien que la mère patrie, venez vous enroller! Venez maintenir l'Union Americaine et prouver que la valeur Française ne s'amollit pas dans ces climats! P. NARCISSE LE GENDRE,
Fifth Ward Hotel, West Broadway, au coin de Franklin.

THE WAR FEELING IN THE SOUTH.

THE secession of Virginia has added fuel to the fire, and the enthusiasm of the South is all ablaze. The excitement is wild. Railway trains are loaded with soldiers, arms and ammunition. Northerners are hastening home. The belief seems very general that Colonel Ben McCulloch is even now on his way to surprise and capture Washington. There is also a strong belief that there is a powerful disunion party in the North, which will by its action paralyse all the aggressive operations of the Federal Government.

The harbor of Mobile is being put into a state of thorough defence and made ready for any emergency.

The force at Pensacola under General Bragg is assuming a strong and threatening appearance, and additional volunteers are pouring in every day to swell the number. The struggle at Pensacola, when it once begins, will be long and bloody. Fort Pickens, it is said, has been reinforced, and has now eight hundred men within its walls and plenty of provisions. Several vessels of war are also in the harbor ready to lend assistance to the defence. The troops under General Bragg are full of enthusiasm, and are eager to be led on to the attack.

It is confidently expected that North Carolina will immediately secede from the Union. Six twenty-pounders from Charleston for Fort Macon have reached Wilmington. Troops are pouring into that and other forts; the military spirit predominates over every other sentiment. Not only vast supplies of men are springing up everywhere, but the sinews of war—money, is flowing in freely. It is stated that at Montgomery, Alabama, the demand for the loan of the Confederate States was so great that President Davis has determined to offer the whole $15,000,000. The amount subscribed already exceeds $15,000,000. The books were closed, and the smaller sums have preference over the larger ones.

In Augusta, Georgia, a Rhode Islander, and an old citizen of that place, issued an order to uniform and equip, at his own expense, a company of eighty volunteers for the war. The company has been organised and will be ready to march in ten days.

On Wednesday, 17th inst., shortly before the steamer Yorktown was to have sailed for New York, Governor Letcher ordered Company F., Captain Cary, of the First Regiment of Volunteers, to take possession of that vessel, for the purpose of taking troops down to Norfolk. About four P.M. a trumpeter went down Main street calling the citizens to arms, and shortly afterward men, with muskets and whatever other equipments they could get hold of, were rushing down town toward Rockets, the lower part of the city. An hour afterward nearly all returned, a squad of men having been placed on guard to detain the steamer. She was to have sailed on Thursday morning with troops for Norfolk.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.

THREE regiments left the city of New York on Sunday, the 21st, for Washington, in the Baltic, Marion and Columbia. These regiments are the Seventy-first, Col. Vosburg; Sixth, regiment, Col. J. C. Pinckney, and the Twelfth regiment, Col. Daniel Butterfield. On the 23d, the Eighth regiment, Col. George Lyons, will leave New York; also, the Sixty-ninth regiment, Col. Corcoran. On Wednesday, the 24th, the Ninth regiment will depart from our city, making in all, nearly five thousand men.

Fire Department Zouaves.

A requisition, signed by the Chief of the Fire Department of New York, John Decker, calling for volunteers to form a Fire Zouave Regiment, to be commanded by Col. Ellsworth, brought out within two days twelve hundred recruits, and so great an enthusiasm is expressed, that the formation of a second Fire regiment will be immediately proceeded with. The first regiment of these gallant fellows is now drilling in Fort Hamilton, awaiting the orders of the Government.

Wilson Zouaves.

Col. Wilson has raised, within a few days, a regiment numbering about two thousand men, of that class denominated the "Roughs"—men fit for any military emergency.

The Naval Brigade.

This Brigade will be under the command of Lieut. Bartlett. Four hundred men enrolled themselves in less than two days, and it is expected the entire regiment will be completed by the 23d.

Foreign Residents.

WE hear in all directions of companies being organized by this class of our citizens, consisting of English, Italian, French, Germans, &c. As very many of these men have earned considerable distinction in the recent European wars, it is expected they will be ready at a very early period.

Lightning Zouaves.

This regiment, under the command of Col. Hawkins—who distinguished himself in Mexico—now numbers nearly five hundred men. They hold nightly drills at their armory, corner of Fourth and Thompson streets, and are composed of young men, and all the field officers have seen active service in Mexico. The Lightning Zouaves had the distinguished honor of escorting the gallant Seventh on their way to Washington. Their soldierly appearance, activity and precision called forth the unanimous approbation of the military men present.

THE Seventh Regiment are to be quartered in splendid barracks at Washington—the Capitol itself. The old House of Representatives is to be fitted up expressly for their accommodation.

PERSONAL.

EDWARD EVERETT has come out in favor of the Union.

THE juries in Cincinnati seem to be very severe in their verdicts upon violent ladies. Mrs. Mary Ann Levett was lately fined $10,000 for throwing vitriol upon a lady's dress and person. It was proved that the vitriol went upon the lady's face, and considerably damaged her beauty.

JUDGE NAAR, of the True American, a Trenton paper, was called upon by a lively gathering of people, who demanded that he should hoist the Stars and Stripes. The Judge came forward, and made so humorous a speech that the mob dispersed, forgetting what they came about. Since Orpheus led the trees to a dance there has been nothing like it.

LIEUTENANT HENRY, of the Ninth Regiment, resigned his commission on the ground that, being a South Carolinian, he would not fight against his native State.

THE papers—that is to say, the greenest of them—are very severe upon a young man who writes verses under the nom de plume of Owen Meredith. He is a son of Bulwer, the novelist. The great crime charged against him is that, instead of being Owen Meredith, he is owing George Sand, for his "Lucille" is stolen verbatim et literatim (without the tag of rhyme) from Madame Dudevant's "Lavinia," a novel published some twenty years ago.

CHARLES DICKENS, alias "Boz," has got into another squabble with an old friend. It appears when he was in difficulties he gave a bond to a merchant for £500, to be paid out of his "American Notes." The interest has never been paid, and the principal has never been applied for; but the death of the elder brother, who lent the money, threw the note into the executors' hands, and the creator of Cheeryble Brothers says he paid the note twelve years ago. The case will come before a legal tribunal, and it is more than probable that Mrs. Dickens will be subpœnaed to prove that five years ago her husband, now separated from her, acknowledged to her that the note had not been paid. We understand that by a recent law a wife's testimony can be received against her husband. If so, it is an error, and an attack upon that solemn fiction that "the twain are one flesh." How would the conflicting evidence of Chang and Eng, the Siamese Twins, be received?

THE Prince Imperial walked into the Emperor's study one fine morning, attired in his corporal's dress. As the rule is sacred that the boy should only obtain admission on great and state occasions, the Emperor, somewhat startled, raised his head from his desk and said, not sharply—for in his private habits he appears to be the most gentle of men—but in rather a surprised tone, "Well, Corporal, and what do you want in such a hurry?" "A regiment," answered the urchin, without the smallest hesitation. "A regiment? hallo! and what for?" returned his Majesty, highly amused. "To go and fight for my godfather, the Pope, to be sure." The Emperor was annoyed, and, what is more, showed his annoyance. He turned to the Aide-de-Camp angrily: "What folly is this? who taught the child this absurd demand?" The Aide-de-Camp hesitatingly denied any participation in the guilt, but confessed to that of the Empress, who had been preparing the scene for many days past.

ON Major Anderson's arrival at the Brevoort House, he was met at the door by Mr. Clark, the proprietor. While he was shaking hands with a few gentlemen in the hall, his daughter Abba, a beautiful girl of fifteen, ran down the staircase. Seeing her, Major Anderson ran forward, met her midway upon the flight, and in a moment the soldier's daughter was clasped in her father's arms. He then ascended to the apartments of Mrs. Anderson, where a most affecting scene of reunion occurred.

MR. DAWSON takes possession of the Albany Post Office on Thursday. Mr. Williams, formerly of the Utica Herald, takes the editorial chair of the Evening Journal, lately held by Mr. F. W. Seward. Mr. Weed will, as heretofore, have his eye and heart on the Journal.

GENERAL SWIFT, who was lately appointed Postmaster for Geneva, by the President, has declined it on account of his years and infirmities.

CASSIUS M. CLAY, who was lately appointed Minister to Russia, has postponed his departure for the present, in order to command a volunteer regiment in Washington, for the protection of the public. Among the privates in this regiment are General Nye, Senator Wilmot, Hobart Ward, Silas B. Dutcher, Hon. M. Ferry and Woodruff of Connecticut, and other influential citizens.

OUR WEEKLY GOSSIP.

National Academy of Design.

No. 108, "Ladies at Piano," A. LAWRIE. We can have but little respect for the judgment of a Committee who would accept such a picture for the purpose of exhibiting it. It lacks every element of a good picture. Neither in coloring, drawing nor sentiment is it fit to be hung on the walls of the Academy. The figures are affected and unnatural, and they are just fitted to play upon a piano which cannot exceed in compass two octaves and a half. It is really poor trash, and so we pass it by.

No. 21, "Sketches from Life," ARTHUR LUMLEY. Sketches dashed in with a free hand, well drawn, spirited and full of character, Mr. Lumley gives evidence of decided ability.

No. 22, "Scene from Midsummer Night's Dream," ALFRED FREDERICKS. This young artist has evidently taken Gilbert for his model. He has studied him lovingly, and has acquired his manner so closely as to lay him open in some degree to a charge of imitation. The same quaintness of treatment, the same breadth of character and humor can be traced in this picture, but it is by no means a servile imitation. The scene is where the elfish spirit Puck plays his pranks upon the clownish players. He is deluding them through bog and brake by the light of the Will-o'-the-Wisp, which gleams from an inverted lily in his hands. This effect is achieved with great success. The figure of Puck is wildly elfish in its character, and is sketched with infinite spirit. The other figures are all broadly humorous and quaintly conceived. The artist has caught the Shakespearean spirit of the scene, displaying a vivid imagination, and for a water color drawing it is not only singularly striking, but its strength of effect is quite remarkable.

No. 123, "Sunset in the English Channel," M. F. H. DE HAAS. This picture is particularly admirable for the tone which pervades it. The sunset is strong in color, but without warmth, a characteristic which will be recognized as peculiar to the climate of England. The ships are carefully and boldly drawn, and the cold glare upon the waves is skilfully managed. The water, finely painted, is full of motion, and there is life and action in the scene, which is a rare merit. It is one of the few good marines in this year's exhibition.

No. 147, "The Farmyard," W. HEPBURN. The noticeable points in this picture are its poor coloring, and fowls which might be anything else but for their mere form, and a very brazen milkmaid leaning in most familiar manner against an exceedingly dissipated-looking cow.

No. 154, "Noonday Fog," JAMES A. SUYDAM. A well conceived and well executed effect. The fog is visibly creeping over and obscuring the features of the landscape. Its gradations from the slightest film to the completest obscuration are managed with marked ability.

No. 418, "Breaking Away," JOHN A. HOWS. In this picture we have a new phase of Mr. Hows' really fine talent. We find in all he does a high-toned feeling for art, a sentiment which springs from an ardent love for and an earnest study of Nature in her solitudes, and an imagination which is at once graceful, fanciful and picturesque. In his landscapes, even when devoid of the presence of animal life, there is an indescribable sentiment, as though some loving eye was gazing on and drinking their rich, voluptuous beauty—as though such exquisite harmony of form and color could not exist without the presence of human love and sympathy.

The title of the picture, "Breaking Away," indicates its principal effect. A fog has shrouded the water, but the rays of the rising sun are gradually dissipating its strength, and it is breaking away in the east and slowly lifting from the surface of the water, revealing the distant headland. This portion of the picture is handled with the touch of a master. The casual observer might pass it by because it is devoid of marked contrasts, but the critical observer will recognize and appreciate its admirable fidelity to nature. The life in the picture is represented by a duck on the wing, which is so admirably drawn, especially in the foreshortening of the near wing, and painted that one might well suppose Mr. Hows had made aquatic birds his special study. A second duck floating quietly on the water in the midst of the lily pads is equally well painted. The huge tree stump in the immediate foreground is certainly unsightly, however true it may be in nature. As a whole, however, it is one of the few remarkable pictures in the exhibition, and will justly add to the growing reputation of Mr. John A. Hows.

A Sybarite Philosopher.

Taking the world easy is generally popular with those who have nothing to do and find it too much trouble to do even that, and he whose rest was disturbed by a crumpled roseleaf on his couch is, to this day, the type of a class who prefer their dolce far niente (not Page's), to the great business of life. They are fortunate if they can attain it and be content, but the if bears a strong significance, and we doubt if our correspondent, who advocates it in verse, can give a satisfactory reply to that ominous if:

"Sursum Corda."

> How quick the human heart is!
> How quick our smiles and tears!
> But the gods, so high and heavy,
> Scarce wink in a thousand years.
>
> How fly the wheels of business!
> The axles hiss and burn,
> But the earth is scarcely moving—
> She takes all day to turn.
>
> Fear not the gods, O soul!
> The end o' the world is pleasure,
> Go—like a planet—sun thyself
> In green, immortal leisure.

BENJAMIN BLOOD.

The late Dr. Francis.

"Speak well of the dead," is an old and honored maxim, but in the case of the good and great man who has but recently passed away from us no such maxim was necessary as a warning to the thoughtless. He was universally beloved, and his name was a praise upon every tongue.

Dr. Augustus K. Gardner, himself an eminent and highly respected physician, very recently delivered an eulogy upon Dr. Francis before the New York Medico-Chirurgical College, which is as creditable to his heart as to his literary reputation. It should be widely circulated, for the more the world knows of its good and great men, the better it will be for its onward progress. We should like to quote the whole of the eulogy, but must content ourselves with one eloquent extract from his introductory remarks. Dr. Gardner said:

"The speaker of to-day for years gazed from afar upon the rugged lineaments of this hoar apostle of medicine; later was warmed into new life by the radiant sunshine ever playing around his genial front, daily feeling ever-renewed evidences of that interior warmth which melted the thin outhanging ice-crusts, producing beauty, and life, and joy in his path. He has seen the interior man, noted the inexhaustible stores of native and acquired intellectual wealth, the kind heart, the generous hand. He must fail in attempting to portray them. If he can but catch the, alas! already vanished picture of one side of this huge polygonal, and daguerreotype it for your observation, he will be content; leaving to those of more extended grasp to seize the whole man, and instead of the simple picture which is now to be presented to you, shall carve out a colossal statue, wanting but the Promethean spark, to be the very form and figure of him whose like we shall never look upon again."

A Child's Prayer.

Hunting among our old papers we came across the following charming poem by one who is known to be a true poet, a kind and chivalrous gentleman, and a facile and elegant writer. His imagination is delicate and fervent, and his imagery glowing and appropriate. Listen to

The Child's Prayer.

> WATCH me when the morning meek
> Smiles above the mountain peak,
> And along the vale unroll'd
> Lies the misty sea of gold;
> While on every leaf appears
> Silver drops of angel tears.
>
> Watch me when the sun is high
> In the blue and boundless sky;
> While the whispering winds that pass
> Roll the emerald waves of grass;
> And the billow on the lakes
> In a thousand sparkles breaks.
>
> Watch me when within the West
> Daylight's star has sunk to rest,
> And the crimson cloud doth leave
> Roses on the wings of Eve,
> While the restless gossamer
> Ceases in its sleep to stir.
>
> Watch me when the moon at night
> Comes with all her children bright,
> And with solemn march doth stray
> Slowly down the Milky Way:
> When all is gloom and silence deep,
> Be Thou near to guard my sleep

WILLIAM W. FOSDICK.

Testimonial to Madame Anna Bishop.

The proposed testimonial to this charming and talented artist took place at the Academy of Music on Friday evening. The date was unfortunate, as the Seventh Regiment departed the same afternoon, and the combined excitement of war and politics seemed to exclude all idea of amusements. There was quite a large number of people present, and we observed many of our wealthiest families present. We understand that a great many tickets were disposed of—some hundreds more than came in—so we trust that the pecuniary success came up to the wishes and intentions of her friends. Madame Bishop appeared in the scene from "Tancredi," as Arline in the "Bohemian Girl," and in Wallace's fine patriotic song, "The Flag of Our Union," which was received with the utmost enthusiasm.

New York Philharmonic Society.

The last concert of the season was given at the Academy of Music on Saturday evening, the 20th inst. The chief features were a Symphony, by Mozart, which was finely played, and was delightful to hear, and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night." The soloists were Miss Brainard, vocalist, and Mr. Saar, pianist. Mr. Eisfeld conducted the concert with his usual skill and judgment. The audience was very large and very fashionable, and judging by the general attendance, the season must have proved a pecuniary success.

DRAMA.

THE war excitement has had the effect of very materially decreasing the attendance at the various theatres. Add to this the distressing weather since the beginning of the week, and it will be seen that managers have not had a great deal of "aid and comfort" from the public during the past few evenings.

We are happy to be able to announce Mr. Forrest's complete recovery from his indisposition, and consequent reappearance at NIBLO'S in his great rôle of "Virginius," on Monday evening last, to a well filled house; and on Wednesday an immense audience, in spite of outside excitements, gathered to witness his impersonation of "Metamora," a part he had not previously acted for seven years. It is, perhaps, needless to add that his performance of the Indian Chief is now, as ever, perfect. The tragedy of "Metamora" is about as atrociously bad as anything in the shape of a play can well be; but Mr. Forrest's impersonation of the hero shines out from the dreary chaos brightly and gloriously.

At the WINTER GARDEN Mr. Edwin Booth has returned to the boards, and attracts large audiences—his admirers growing, if possible, more enthusiastic than ever in his praise. He has acted during the week Shylock, Othello and Hamlet, with marked success.

"Henriette" is still played at WALLACK'S, and the "Seven Sisters" is a matter of course at LAURA KEENE'S.

ON Friday afternoon, the 20th, the members of Engine Company No. 38 removed their machine to Fulton street, in order to pay honor to the Seventh Regiment as it passed down Broadway. An ex-member, named James Marrifield, stood on one of the springs, and cried out, as the regiment passed, "Under this flag I've lived and expect to die," when he fell to the ground and the wheels passed over his head. He was removed to the Hospital, where he soon afterward died. Deceased was highly respected by all his comrades.

EVACUATION AND BURNING OF THE U. S. ARSENAL AND SHOPS AT HARPER'S FERRY, ON THE NIGHT OF THE 18th OF APRIL, BY LIEUTENANT JONES, AND HIS COMMAND, BY ORDER OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT—APPROACH OF THE VIRGINIAN FORCES.—See Page 378.

THE "ELITE" REGIMENT OF MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS LEAVING JERSEY CITY R. R. DEPOT, TO DEFEND THE CAPITOL, AT WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 18th, 1861.—See Page 376.

LUCILLE DE VERNET:

A TALE OF

WOMAN'S HATE.

CHAPTER VI.

When Emile came into the room she walked tiptoe round the bed, but Lucille, feeling disinclined to talk, pretended to be asleep, and Emile, after leaning over her with the wish to disturb her but without effect, was soon undressed and by her side. After lying restless some time, she slid her arm under the head of her companion.

"Lucille," she said, gently, "do you really sleep, or are you quiet to deceive me?"

"Not asleep, Emile," she replied; "but I cannot talk. Leave me to my thoughts."

"Are they so pleasing, then?" said Emile. "Say if they are of Jules, of my brother. Ah, your eyelashes are wet with tears!" and she turned her face towards herself. "Jules has told me all, Lucille; he is unhappy as yourself; and why should this be? After all, there was nothing base and dishonorable in his proposal; and I, as your friend, as your sister, have come with a heart brim full of affection and best wishes for your happiness, to add my entreaties to his, that you will listen to his ardent love. Nay, do not turn from me, for you must hear what I will tell you. After all, dear Lucille, a private marriage is not such a very formidable affair. It is a thousand times better than sacrificing the happiness of two loving hearts; for if my mother's consent is waited for, then will you never be united to Jules; for, like most persons of weak mind, she is obdurate where there is a loophole to creep out at; but when things are irremediably settled, she submits with the best grace in the world, and is kind and often generous; and she has her best regards so exclusively fixed on Jules that her forgiveness will easily be obtained."

"If her forgiveness would be so readily gained, why not try for consent?" said Lucille. "My father will never stand at the altar and give me to the son against the mother's wish."

"Your father, dearest," said Emile; "you do not fear his anger, I am sure. He is so kind and lenient, so sensible and just, that——"

"That is why I cannot deceive him," interrupted Lucille. "He would forgive me, I know, for the act, but I could not forgive myself. Emile, your reasoning is bad. Leave me, I entreat, to my own reflections."

Turning abruptly away, Lucille remained quiet to all Emile's eloquence; though much she spoke found reciprocal sentiments in her own reasonings, and though she said, with a gush of tears, which almost denied the assertion, "I am firm in my resolution not to deceive my father, and shall rejoice, oh, how heartily, when D'Almaine and Emile depart, that I may be myself again." But there was a chill at her heart, a trembling through her frame, as a presentiment rested on her mind that happiness would not so easily be regained, that a blight was upon it, that would cause the blessings she had hitherto delighted in to wither in the sunlight of her youth. Yes, Lucille at once had launched upon the world; she already tasted its bitterness; for the first time she wished to think unmolested, to dive into the depth of her own heart, that she might look into others. The charm of childhood had vanished—she was a woman depending on her own responsibilities, with thoughts and hopes she felt too sacred to trust to any but her own keeping.

The next morning Lucille met D'Almaine with an effort at coldness; but his silence, and the troubled expression of his countenance when their eyes met, which by some accident was often, tended before the meal was ended to soften the coldness of one, and to subdue greatly the troubled look of the other; but for several days she studiously avoided being alone with him.

This restraint on her words and actions was ended by the announcement of D'Almaine that the Chambers having met, he should be expected in a few days to be seen there, the unsettled state of France calling every member to his seat, which would necessitate him fixing an early time to leave them. Though his speech was directed to De Vernet, he cast a furtive glance at Lucille. She was pale, and the work she was engaged on fell heedlessly to the floor; satisfied with the emotion evidently caused by his statement, he drew near her.

"Lucille," he said, "you will not let me depart as you would a stranger, with a careless adieu, and 'I hope soon to meet again.' You will, after our happy friendship, devote one short leisure hour to me."

"When do you go?" she asked, without looking at him, though she felt his breath floating over her hair.

"I think, if Emile is in readiness, to be on the road to Paris by sunrise to-morrow."

"To-morrow!" she responded, with a start, and in a voice evidently intended to be cold, but which was slightly quivering; "you are precipitate in your movements, monsieur."

"Can you wonder at it when you are so changed, when you take every opportunity to avoid me, and for three days have only returned cold monosyllables to the ardent words I have addressed to you?"

"I have been guided by my feelings," she replied. "I was insulted by your proposal. You wished me to forget my duty as a daughter, and my delicacy as a woman."

"Lucille, you do not know the strength of my love for you, or you would pardon and accede to those wishes, which alone can insure our happiness. Do not turn from me. If you refuse my love, it is not too much to ask for your friendship—to know I possess that, slight as the return is. To my own sentiments it will be a consolation to me in our everlasting separation."

"Everlasting!" she cried, faintly, her cheeks and lips paling. "Why everlasting? As friends we can meet, as friends respect and regard each other. It is the pale we should not have stepped over, with the impediments to our union before us."

"Friendship is your warmest sentiment, Lucille, or you could not talk so coldly. You reason. When did love ever reason? When shield itself under the cloak of duty and affection? Never!"

"You asked for my friendship, monsieur; let it satisfy you; it is as much, under present circumstances, as we should desire. You call me cold; leave me with that idea, and school your own heart by it to think yourself the only sufferer. It will reduce your high-wrought feeling to a level with mine, will bring you to the reason you condemn in me, and will force you to forgetfulness of the few weeks passed in the seclusion of our vine-crowned valley with Lucille de Vernet."

She could no longer conceal her feelings, but burst into passionate tears. Her assumed coldness had vanished, and rushing into the gardens she threw herself on a seat in the most retired part, and sobbed with all the vehemence of a young and troubled heart.

D'Almaine followed with the step and air of a conqueror, subdued by the tenderer feelings of a lover. He slackened his quick footsteps a few paces from her, regarding her with mingled sensations. Her youth, her beauty, and her duty to her father told him to quit ere he plunged her into new troubles; but his love triumphed over these better feelings, and drawing towards her before she was aware of his presence, he slid his arm round her waist. She would have burst from the bond that held her had he permitted it; but the time, the opportunity, her softened feelings, were too promising to allow them not to take advantage of their value.

He pleaded eloquently, and his arguments overpowered the good sense which had hitherto overruled them. Two hours after they returned to the house; she leant on his arm, pale and with teardrops still on her eyelashes, while his step was firm, and there was an openness and joyousness in his manner which told of the triumphant hopes of love.

CHAPTER VII.

"Lucille, come, do you never intend awaking this bright sunny morning? Do rise from your couch, laggard, if only to listen to the trilling of the lark, and see the bright globules sparkling on the purple grapes!" exclaimed Emile, springing from the bed, and leaning over Lucille with an agitated countenance, although she had forced a smile on it.

Lucille moved not, neither did she speak; her face was hidden in the pillow, and by the slight convulsion of her frame it was evident she was indulging in tears, that were wavering her in her promise of the preceding evening.

"Come," continued Emile, pleadingly, and throwing open the window while speaking. "Come, Lucille, do not sully this bright, auspicious morning by this ill-timed shower of tears. And see, Jules is galloping over the hills. He has already returned from Marseilles, and has arranged all with the Abbé Brennon."

At this announcement, Lucille started up in bed. "So soon!" she cried in terror. "Emile, assist me, I have changed—tell your brother so. I will not see the abbé."

"Oh, but you must," said Emile. "All is settled. Be not a child to let trifles scare you from a good and just purpose. Arise, and let the morning breeze chase away those ill-timed tears, and the bright sun warm that chilled little heart of yours."

As Emile spoke, the bright sun disappeared behind a lurking cloud, and gave the room, that had been lighted up by its beams, a cold, cheerless aspect. Lucille looked around and shuddered.

"Where is the brightness now?" she said. "Gone, to warn me of my fate! Emile, does it not speak plainly that Heaven approves not of this marriage, silent and secret?"

"This is weakness unworthy of a child, Lucille. When did Heaven ever disapprove of a virtuous union? Leave your bed and be yourself; there never was a bride yet that rose on her bridal morn wholly uncontaminated by an undefined fear. And behold, the sun, your oracle, has again burst forth with all its splendor. Come, dearest, haste, Jules, is calling from beneath. Let a smile dispel that gloom upon your brow, think only of the happy days to come; give all dark prophetic thoughts to the wind, and let me, as your bridesmaid, preside at your adorning for the altar."

Emile's cheerful tones in a degree dissipated the nervous timidity of Lucille. She arose and commenced dressing in silence, but as she was throwing a dark silk dress over her, Emile arrested her.

"Not that, not that," she said, "it looks as gloomy as your own prophetic mind, and will infect Jules with it, if his own pleasurable sensations do not overpower it, with its own sombre color. This light airy white dress must be the one, and though no satin bows adorn it, and no wreath of orange blossom rests among your sunken curls, you will be a bride no man need be ashamed to acknowledge."

Lucille smiled faintly as her eyes furtively rested on the reflected figure in her mirror.

"I am ready now," she said, laying her hand on the handle of the door. "I leave this room for the last time as wholly and solely my father's; when I return to it I shall belong to another. Will that one guard me with the care and tenderness of the one whose loving authority I am throwing off." She pressed her hands silently on her heart, then added, as she suppressed a long breath, "I must prove it."

"You are late this morning, girls!" cried De Vernet, smilingly, observing their white dresses. "The count has been fidgetty this half hour for his breakfast, while you have been gaily decking yourselves. Really, were it not for your pale faces and rather gloomy looks, I should think you were going to some village wedding. But this parting seems to affect you all more than it should do, when at most it will be but for a few months, and you can receive letters from each other every day if you are not too idle to write them."

"Yes," said D'Almaine, quickly, fearing Lucille's emotion would give rise to suspicion. "They think by far too much of it, and to divert their thoughts, I have ordered my carriage in half an hour to take them a drive. Three or four hours passed in the open air this glorious morning will bring back the color to their cheeks and the brightness to their eyes, and give them courage to say 'Adieu!' with firmness to-morrow. Come, Emile, if you preside, give us our coffee. I have been up and out since six, and the hands of my watch now point to nine. Have mercy on me, and be quick with the coffee."

Emile had taken Lucille's place at the breakfast-table, believing she possessed the most firmness, but her hand trembled as she handed the cup to De Vernet. She felt criminal before him, as if she was joining in a plot against him, and answered confusedly his questions, and the announcement of the carriage was a welcome relief to her.

Lucille started up, affrighted at the sound, declaring she felt too ill to go out, and clinging nervously to her father.

"Nonsense?" he cried. "What is it causes this strange irritability of manner, child, so wholly unlike yourself! You and Emile were talking all night instead of sleeping, and want of rest has made you nervous; the air will chase it away. Here, Monsieur D'Almaine, I place her under your care; you will not, I am sure, take her further than her strength will allow. Perhaps it would be as well to reduce your three hours' drive to half its dimensions."

D'Almaine took her from her father's arms, pressed her hands, and whispered a few low tender words in her ear; then, throwing a shawl over her shoulders, led her to the vehicle, and placing her and Emile into it, jumped in himself, and waving his hand to De Vernet, drove off.

The carriage proceeded at rather a quick rate through the town of Marseilles and a mile and a half beyond it, when it branched off into a narrow road, and had proceeded near a mile in this direction, when D'Almaine, looking from the window, exclaimed, in a tone of vexation,

"Good heavens! there is Batiste! What can have brought his ill-timed presence so near us? Just, too, as we were about alighting —for we must leave the carriage here, that the servants may merely think we are going to morning service. What shall we do, Lucille? admit him to our confidence? For see, the church is in sight."

"Yes, yes," she returned; "tell him. Batiste is our faithful friend. It will be a great relief to me to have some one near when you are gone that knows all about it."

D'Almaine descended from the carriage without speaking, though evidently ruffled, and spoke to Batiste, who listened without interrupting him to the end, when he exclaimed,

"I do not like these private weddings, they often lead to unhappy results. Lucille has acted unwisely to deceive her father; but I suppose it is too late to offer opposition now, monsieur."

"It is," replied D'Almaine; "for the priest now waits to perform the ceremony. Be friendly, Monsieur Batiste, and keep this affair secret a few months until I have broken it to my mother, and all will be well. And be not harsh, I entreat you, towards Lucille, who already suffers much from the restraint upon her open nature, which for the present is unavoidable. You will enter into this plan, monsieur?"

"You say the priest waits," said Batiste, disconsolately; "then my interference would be useless. Before I could inform her father, the deed would be done; I must necessarily become a party to it. Here is my hand, monsieur. I hope I am offering it to one who will not be the means of breaking a father's heart."

"You are giving it to an honest man, monsieur," was the answer, in a proud tone. "I will return to you immediately."

Batiste looked musingly after him.

"I believe you, Monsieur D'Almaine," he said. "You have a soul to do what is right; but you want energy, have too much pride and are guided by your lady mother, who is one of the old nobility, and thinks all beneath her own rank only worth trampling on. Poor Lucille! you have found it easier to gain the son's heart. The mother's favor will not shine so readily on you. I am sorry my walk was taken this way this morning. But here they come, the bride pale, and trembling as an aspen's leaf. Ah! so was Madeline on her marriage morning; that is not always a bad omen."

He walked the other side of Lucille to the church. She looked furtively at him, but neither spoke.

On entering the church, the priest—already there with his book open at the altar, waiting their presence—increased her tremor. She clung to Jules's arm.

"Courage!" he whispered, leading her forward. "What is there to fear or condemn here? A few words will make us one."

They now stood at the altar. The ceremony commenced. As it proceeded her firmness returned, and she received the benediction of the holy man, and the congratulations of Emile and Batiste on its conclusion with a calm and grateful heart. Indeed, the worst seemed to have passed; she had been wavering the last twenty-four hours between right and wrong, praying the scale to be turned in favor of the former. She had now trust in her hopes that all was for the best, and the arm she had clung to almost helplessly on entering the chapel, she leant on, on departing from it, with the trusting devotedness of her nature.

The following day the carriage, which had been waiting long at the cottage door of De Vernet—some trifling omission or afterthought keeping the travellers from it—was ordered by D'Almaine to proceed to the orange grove on the skirts of the valley, there to wait till they joined it, every moment being valuable to him while he continued near his bride, who had promised to accompany them to it.

As they approached the grove, now in full blossom and sending forth its sweet odor, D'Almaine plucked one of its white feathering branches, and placing it in Lucille's hair, said with a smile, "It shall not be said that my bride wore not the orange wreath on her brow, the marriage emblem of her country. It is an uncostly and trifling gift, love; but it is my first wedded one. And long after its withering petals have fallen and mixed with its native earth, you will remember the time and place when and where I bestowed it."

"I will," she said, smiling through her tears, and releasing the flowers from her head, slid them into her bosom. "I shall consider them a holy gift, bestowed at our first parting, I will watch and tend them till we meet again."

"Which will be ere many weeks," he replied. "Adieu! we must now separate, or the sun will set, and the heavy dews fall on your uncovered head before you can reach home."

Emile had said her last good-bye, and was in the carriage; Lucille threw herself into Jules's arms. "Farewell!" she cried, in a broken voice. "Do not be long in returning; think of the bitterness of concealment, and pity me."

He threw his cloak round her, and hurried her towards the vehicle.

"Go with me," he whispered, "you are mine, legally mine; why should we separate? Go with me to Paris; there I will acknowledge you my wife, spite of the world, spite of my mother."

She struggled to free herself, but she was already on the steps of the carriage; there was now no wavering about her; desperate with the force of her feelings she broke from him, and her voice was firm.

"Leave me, Jules," she cried, "this is an outbreak of selfishness I did not anticipate. You would have me add cruelty to disobedience, have me forsake my father without a word, or even a look to soften the act. Go! you have yet to learn the heart of the woman you have given your name to, if you believe her capable of ingratitude."

Humbled by her manner, more striking in one so young, he stood a moment regarding her, when drawing her towards him, he pressed a long kiss on her lips.

"Pardon me!" he cried. "My love had hurried me on to what I might hereafter have regretted, had not your discretion—so superior to my own, young as you are—prevented it. Adieu! I cannot trust myself longer with you, I see your worth, and will love and venerate it."

He entered the carriage hurriedly, threw himself in a corner of it, and it was soon in rapid motion, leaving Lucille standing there like one paralysed. Events had flitted away so rapidly that, but for the bitterness of her feelings, she could have fancied herself in a dream. Her eyes were still fixed on the retreating vehicle. Emile's handkerchief was waving from it; she watched it till it became smaller, smaller, till it became a mere speck, then a clump of trees hid it entirely from her, and she turned from the direction, this warm, genial evening, cold, heartsick.

She entered the grove and sat down on a low branch which had been allowed to jet out and grow unmolested from its parent tree. At the moment a gust of wind disturbed the calm quiet of the grove, blossoms unnumbered showered round her white and feathery as snowflakes. She started up, shaking them from her.

"Is it mockery," she cried, "or do they speak of the future? I am covered with these beautiful leaves, emblematical of innocence and unity. Ah, look, look!" she continued, in a suppressed tone, "they are already withered; they cover me like a winding-sheet, cling to me, follow me!" she added, as they still fell upon her, though she beat them from her, and retreated from the grove.

She ran several yards, assailed by a superstitious dread, till the smoke from the cottage chimney, rising blue and majestic, seemed to mingle with the clouds to assure her of her safety. She stopped to recover breath that her father might not suspect her agitated feelings. He met her at the door.

"I was just coming in pursuit of you," he said smiling, "for you have protracted your parting to such a length that I was doubtful whether Emile and her brother, out of true love of your presence, had not really succeeded in using some art to spirit you away."

The thought of how near she had been hurried from him gave her languid face a paler hue; he observed it, and added, "Thank Heaven they are off, Lucille! You will now be my own again. I shall have some enjoyment of your society, and the roses, I hope, which the last few days have died on your cheek will revive again. To-night you are sadly pale, as white as the orange blossoms clinging to your hair."

"Are they still there?" she exclaimed, her old, superstitious dread returning, and raising her hand to her head, she brushed them irritably away. They scattered about the table, she looked searchingly at them.

"Look, father," she cried, "they are all dead, their perfume gone! When before did the orange blossom wither as it fell? Is it because they have fallen on me that I see them thus?"

De Vernet laughed. "It is emblematic of old maidism!" he cried, "my Lucille will never be taken from me."

"It speaks then of blighted hopes," she said, speaking between her teeth.

"Heaven forbid!" said her father.

He had spoken lightly before, now an uneasy pang was at his heart, and he took her in his arms.

"Dispel this silly superstition," he continued, "for my happiness and ideas are so bound up in you, my child, that to see you thus prematurely old and thoughtfully reflective, unmans me."

"You shall see me all smiles after to-night," she said; "I will sleep away the gloom which parting with Emile, whom I love very dearly, has occasioned. The morning shall make me your own Lucille again."

CHAPTER VIII.

Lucille was right. With the morning came brighter hopes; it also brought a letter from Emile, with one enclosed from D'Almaine, full of kind and tender expressions, just such as her own warm heart responded to. She wondered how such superstitious dread could have found entrance for a moment there; and her answer to him was cheerful and hopeful, and had it not been for her secret, the thought of which engendered sensations weighty and momentous, because her father was not allowed to share it, she would have had but one regret, that of being absent from her husband.

Several months passed, and D'Almaine was a regular correspondent. At length his letters spoke of his coming to the valley. Lucille's heart beat hurriedly against its barriers as she read the welcome words. "He is coming," she thought, "to ease me of this torturing suspense, to give me courage to look my father in the face, with the innocence and confidence he merits." Her spirits rose with the thought, and though the bloom on her cheeks came and went, her voice was more cheerful, and her tread lighter than it had been since she became a wife.

Two days later D'Almaine's well-known step was on the gravelled path of the cottage garden. Lucille rose from her seat to meet him; but before she reached the door, he had sprung in at the window which opened on the little terrace, and she was in his arms. She had no words for him, though her heart was full of them, and could only answer his impassioned ones, by clinging to his neck, and weeping on his shoulder. How she blessed the chance that had taken her father from the house, and prevented him witnessing this interview; for she soon understood he had not come to claim and bear her home, but to impress upon her the necessity of keeping their marriage unknown to the world a few months longer.

"And from my father also?" said Lucille. "Surely I may tell him? Oh, you know what it is Jules, for a child to be always with a parent, and a secret hovering on her tongue that must not reach his ears."

"Would it avail anything in our cause with my mother?" returned D'Almaine. "No, she would condemn your father as an accessory, and refuse on those terms to receive you. We must proceed slowly, Lucille; but not the less surely on that account. You must go to Paris, that my mother may learn to love you. You will not, I hope, refuse me this, if your father consents to part from you a few weeks."

She was silent. What could she say? She was in his power; she had voluntarily forged her bonds, and, come weal, come woe, must submit to those results.

With this resolve, she schooled her face to cheerfulness, and kept a stern control over her troubled feelings. D'Almaine made no further remark during his stay with her, on their relative situations, and happy on one point, that of having him near her, the few days he remained flew on feathery pinions, and with all their disadvantages were numbered among those free from care in her wedded life.

De Vernet, who had suspected an attachment between them, was not surprised on his return home to find the count there; and though a few drops yet lingered on the eyelashes of his daughter, he thought they were tears brought there by pleasure, and greeted him with his usual urbanity; not an idea for a single moment crossing his mind that his Lucille, so richly endowed by Nature, could be objected to in an alliance with nobility because in fortune she might be a disproportionate match, and D'Almaine, glad while he remained there to be thought the accepted lover of Lucille, as it lulled other suspicions, and gave him an opportunity of being always near her, spoke openly with De Vernet of the approaching period when he should transplant his cottage blossom to his own Parisian home, and the ancient halls of his ancestors.

The morning of D'Alamire's departure Lucille invited to the small round table in the parlor, and having served up the last where Jules had ordained her unwilling consent to their union, was indulging freely in the chocolate it had given them to drink, when they were interrupted by the rustling of the underwood near her. She look up—Rubbra was before her.

"Pardon my intrusion, madame," he said, escping towards her, "but a secret always stir heavily on the mind of Jacques Rubbra. The count, I hope, has given permission for he being divulged?"

"No," she replied, somewhat faint, "there is necessity for no such consideration. A few months, perhaps only weeks; I cannot state, Monsieur Rubbra, the exact time, but no necessity can exist for what this reserve will soon pass away."

"I am glad to hear it," he said. "It does not seem like an honest man when he is before M. de Vernet with the knowledge of a secret concealed from that gentleman—a knowledge so suddenly kept from him, I trust you permit me to say, madame, prevents the count following, if necessary, my advice."

"I cannot see how," she replied; "but there is no need to be alarmed, I feel convinced, on justice and honor; therefore you will excuse me from the further longer, and you will also excuse my saying by a premature disclosure which may say the concerted plans of Monsieur D'Alamire, Monsieur Rubbra, and myself, for our future welfare."

"Heaven forbid I should add to your discomfort," said Rubbra; "for I have seen plainly that you have never been yourself since—since the morning you received the packet of letters from Paris. We do not like unnecessary delays, but hope it is all right with the count, that he retains his accustomed spirits and good health. Adieu, I do not look so pale and woe-begone. I think and hope with you it is all right—but adieu, my duties call me away, and I will not again intrude in the casket. If it is ragged we know its termination, and therefore no surprise about it. Thank you, madame, for your kind ever. Three sigh. We will both of us look on the sunny side of objects; and whatever you may think of me, I trust you will believe that Jacques Rubbra will ever stand foremost yours, and your father's friend, friend."

"I know it, I know it!" she uttered, stifling her emotion. "But what have I to fear? They not yet in possession of truth or lies. No, no; I am only unhappy because there is broken faith between my father and myself."

"Ah, it was wilful," he rushed with a sigh. "From such a father, who had nothing to fear! Have you not the packet of letters he restrained imposed on me and tell him all?"

"Not yet, not yet!" she returned hurriedly. "A higher duty than that to my father stays over me. Rubbra, I will submit to it—it will not be for long. Before D'Alamire leaves for the army, which and in a few weeks will release you from the silence that weighs so heavily on you."

I wish it, madame," said Rubbra; "not for myself alone, but for you, who, in efforts and concern for others, forget that you are motherless, and you permit me to speak. But believe and confide in me, madame, I have only your welfare at heart."

Thank you, Rubbra," she kept reply; but he had moved away her while speaking, for words fell on the air, and were lost before they could reach him.

A few weeks after, a letter addressed to De Vernet from Madame D'Alamire, from Paris, not unlike in character, for the absence of the cottage. Its contents were merely the following:

"Madame D'Alamire's sincere friendship and esteem for De Vernet, and entreats him to spare his daughter a few weeks to see the wonders of Paris in the approved season of spring, which would be lost when of her. Madame D'Alamire will send a confidential female attendant to guide her during the absence of the mother of her daughter, who are desirous for her society, will meet her the second stage from the city. Madame D'Alamire hopes that the count has recovered from the family circle of Madame D'Alamire to Monsieur and Mademoiselle De Vernet, with respect to the count, who is named when her visitor may be expected."

There was also a letter from Emile, as an enclosure from Jules to Lucille. D'Alamire's contained but the following few words:—

"Dearest Lucy—Come to Paris. Stay no longer than you will—you shall have much to say. My mother is still in ignorance of our alliance; but she will soon see with us, and leave you, my love, to take ample opportunity of revealing. Yours, devotedly,

"JULES."

Lucille read and re-read this short epistle, with half angry feelings against the writer, that he should wish her to appear before his mother as, "love," and made and character the impression which from her nature he revolted at the duplicity of the proceeding, and her first impulse was to write to him with the whole truth at once.

De Vernet would not listen to Lucille's request. He had some time fish slumped, for the Pets of the season were not to his taste, nor her attractive, as of the fleeting color which seldom more than one day in the year. Lucille's entreaties were of no avail, and the count was greatly tired, "he could not endure the fatigue, and the energy day was fixed for the departure. With a heavy heart she left the cottage, and was received at the barrier of Paris by the maternally person sent by Madame D'Alamire followed, who one, "why she had served thirty years, dotes, and the person of the, and had been with the family when conveyed in diverting her attention. A day when they arrived at the palace of meeting mentioned by the [illegible] found a joyful acclamation; and the cordial welcome of the hostess, [illegible] Lucille's heart, she looked from the window, [illegible] the coach door was opened hastily, and before she was aware, [illegible] it, she was in the latter's arms; D'Alamire took her from these, and almost tore her into the hotel, where, confused by the crowd, she could only feel herself in the affection.

"We will dine here," said D'Alamire, "and at least have a few hours' uninterrupted pleasure and conversation before you are introduced to my mother, who has a large circle assembled of a party, is longing to show you to the world she lives in, and the only one she knows."

Lucille readily assented, glad of any excuse to postpone a meeting with a person who, from the earnest tone of her children, was neither amiable nor conciliating.

(To be continued.)

DESTRUCTION OF THE HARPER'S FERRY ARSENAL BY THE FEDERAL TROOPS.

On Thursday, the 18th of April, this first-rate Arsenal was destroyed by command of the United States Government. The fact of the secession of Virginia it was evident that an attempt would be made to seize the military stores there, and the officer in Federal troops who held it rendered any attempt to hold it perfectly impossible. This because of the more powerful position, the sentiments of Colonel Robinson, the late superintendent, were well known to the strength in favor of Secession; indeed, he had already demanded the surrender of the arsenal, which refused by Federal Government.

Lieutenant Jones and a small company not exceeding fifty men were in possession, and hearing that a body of Virginians numbering six hundred men were approaching from the Shenandoah ford, for the purpose of seizing the Arsenal, he immediately gave orders to prepare for its destruction, so that they should only receive the ruins. For that purpose, the machines, caused piles of powder to be put into a quantity of straw in all the buildings, and they quietly awaited the hostile approach. A picket guard he had despatched to watch should bring. It soon returned with the news that the Virginians were advancing, and in a minute the garrison set fire to the outhouses, carpenter's shop and the adjacent buildings. The gallant band, with Lieutenant Jones at their head, then commenced their retreat from the conflagration. The citizens of Harper's Ferry, who were evidently in league with the advancing party, were thrown into consternation, and pursued the Federal troops, firing on them as they retreated. They were, however, soon joined by the Maryland Hagerstown, having marched all night. Missing the railroad train at Hagerstown, they took possession of some stage coaches, and arrived the next morning at Chambersburg, where they were hospitably entertained by the citizens, who loudly applauded their conduct.

Lieutenant Jones is a son of the late Adjutant-General Jones, U. S. A. He says as the Federal troops marched across the Potomac bridge, at Harper's Ferry, the people rushed into the Arsenal. He believes that large numbers perished by the explosion. Repeated explosions occurred, and he saw a light burning in the buildings for many miles.

THE MASSACHUSETTS 7TH. TROOPS EN ROUTE FOR WASHINGTON.

New York was a scene of unexampled excitement on Thursday, the 18th of April, when the 7th Regiment of Massachusetts Militia arrived in our city, on their way to defend the Capital of the Union. The regiment, which was commanded by Col. Gil the Commander of the Lafayette regiment, marched up to the New Haven depot, Twenty-seventh street, but owing to some delay in the arrival of the cars they were kept there for some hours. They consequently marched back to their Armory. About half-past five in the morning the cars came bearing the gallant Bay State regiment. By this time an immense throng had collected, who gave the troops a most hearty greeting. The have fellows then left the cars, marched down Twenty-seventh street to Fifth avenue, down to Broadway, through Vesey street, and down to the Metropolitan Hotel, where four companies took breakfast. Another detachment went to the St. Nicholas, and the remainder proceeded to the Astor House. The streets were lined with a dense crowd, which cheered them vociferously.

At half-past eleven o'clock the battalions trom the Metropolitan and the St. Nicholas took up their line of march for the Jersey City Ferry, and on arriving at the Astor House were joined by their comrades, and the whole regiment marched to the foot of the Battery steps, Broadway, in the following order, who greeted all the way with uninterrupted cheers. They were transported across the North River in the steamers Jersey City and Hoboken, and met at the dock by Mayor Van Vorst, of Jersey City, Chief of Police Dayton, and Marshal Murray, and a numerous crowd of Jersey men and women, who gave them a welcome not less warm than that they had received in this city. Eighteen cars were ready for the regiment, which left the depot as soon as they were all on board, after a few minutes past one o'clock the train started on its journey. The regiment is handsomely uniformed, the regiment of militia has never visited this city. The following is a list of the companies, with their officers, number of men in each, and where from:

	FIELD AND STAFF.
Company C, of Stoneham, Capt. John H. Dyke		70
Company A, of Middleton, Capt. J. A. Lowell		67
Company B, of Lynn, Capt. J. P. Hall		67
Company C, of Lowell, Mechanic Phalanx, Capt. Albert S. Polhemus		67
Company D, of Newburyport, Capt. John Pickering		66
Company E, of Acton, Capt. Daniel Tuttill		66
Company H, of Boston, Capt. J. H. Ladd		66
Company F, of Lawrence, Capt. P. F. Chadbourne		63
Company D, of Lynn Gwynn Zouaves, Capt. E. S. Clark		93
Company G, of Worcester, Light Infantry, Capt. R. W. Pratt		93
Company C, of Boston, First Regiment, Capt. H. S. Simpson		67
Total		738

In addition, there are members who have either previously left or are yet to arrive, the full complement of the regiment being one hundred more. Each man has a knapsack, about eight ounces, and took supper at the Continental and Girard. Their reception in Philadelphia was equally enthusiastic with that of New York.

ATTACK UPON THE SIXTH REGIMENT OF Massachusetts Volunteers by the People of Baltimore.

At noon on the 19th instant the city was startled by a telegram stating that the Baltimoreans had disputed the passage of the Massachusetts troops through that city, resulting in a considerable loss of life. Such a report naturally caused great excitement in the commercial world, and crowds filled the direct avenue to Washington, and much delay must necessarily ensue before the arrival of the troops. The arrival of the news was speedily arrived, and the details of the short sharp fight in the streets we give below. It was supposed that the Philadelphia troops would be compelled to cut their way to fight their way through Baltimore, but the burning of the railroad bridges prevented this necessity. The troops had arrived in safety, probably hundreds of reliable lives.

The following particular column, described the operation from New York and the arrived in Philadelphia of the Sixth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers. We will take up their march from the time they arrived in Baltimore.

The Fight in the Streets of Baltimore.

The Massachusetts regiment occupied eleven cars, and arrived safely and in excellent spirits at Baltimore. There was no demonstration made upon their arrival, and the cars were permitted to leave the depot in Pratt street without delay. The cars proceeded quickly through the streets of Baltimore on their way to the depot, at the other side of the town, and the fears expressed by some of the passengers that an attack would be made were somewhat allayed. But they had not proceeded more than a couple of squares before a shower of paving stones and brick bats were attached to each car were scarcely able to push their way through.

At this point the mob began hooting and yelling frightfully, and loud threats were uttered against the military. The troops, however, maintained their composure, and answering themselves nor replying to the insults so plentifully heaped upon them. Suddenly a shower of paving stones was thrown from the windows, commenced throwing stones, brickbats and other missiles, and eventually broke up the procession and halting them in a perfect shower against the cars, smashing the windows and severely wounding many of the troops. At last, the first car was succeeded in reaching the depot and departed for Washington.

The remaining two cars of the train, containing about one hundred men, were cut off from the main body, and the men found themselves surrounded by a howling mob of over eight thousand. These isolated cars were immediately attacked, and several of the soldiers in the rear platform smashed from them. At this moment news came that the Philadelphia Volunteers had arrived, and the report excited the mob to a fearful degree.

The Massachusetts men, finding the cars untenable, alighted and formed a solid square, advancing with fixed bayonets upon the mob, who eventually broke up the crowds and allowed the mob—now swelled to the number of at least ten thousand—to pass through the streets. The rest of the journey was safely obtained from firing upon their assailants.

The mob now commenced throwing a perfect shower of missiles, occasionally varied by a random shot from a revolver or one of the muskets taken from the soldiers. The poor fellows suffered severely from the immense quantity of stones, quoits, brickbats, paving-stones, &c., the shots fired also wounding several. When two of the soldiers had been killed, and the wounded had been conveyed to the centre of the column, the troops as last, exasperated and maddened by the treatment they had received, commenced returning the fire singly, killing several, and wounding a large number of the rioters, but at no one time did a single person fall in the Valley. Our informant is positive upon this point.

The volunteers, after a protracted and severe struggle, at last succeeded in reaching the depot, bearing with them to triumph their killed and wounded, and immediately embarked. The cars were then driven rapidly by our informant, who says that the calm courage and heroic bearing of the troops spoke volumes for the character of Massachusetts, who, when marching under a fire of the most embarrassing description, and opposed by an overwhelming force, displayed coolness in accomplishing their purpose, and effected a passage through crowded streets a distance of over a mile—a feat not easily accomplished by a body of less than one hundred men when opposed to such terrific odds.

Foreign News.

England.—Owing to the Easter Holidays there is nothing of any Parliamentary interest to record, and as the exercise of diplomacy generally seem out of the question, the Continent, also, is more than usually dull for the season of the day. A great change seems to have taken place in English sentiment towards America, since the news of the Lord Palmerston's declaration it would be an outrage to the civilization of the world to recognize a Government which was based upon slavery; and when rumbled that one of the earliest acts of the Congress at Montgomery was to abolish the African Slave Trade for ever, the journey Premier said that he considered that as a guru wind to complete England and France.

France—War seems to be in the ascendant. The Moniteur have been represented to the Emperor as a grand conquest, and that is considered an sure evidence of an approaching campaign. The assumption between Louis Napoleon and the Austrian Government is that the Mediterranean cannot be common, and it is said that the Empress is so much under the influence of that extreme party that she is anxious to see the descent in the Austrian pair. There is also a rumor that a pamphlet by the irrepressible Le Gueronniere is about to appear, in which he will declare that the future conduct will be stated that in this will appear a solution of the Italian difficulty. It is regretted that Austria will give no pledge to the establishment of a constitutional equivalent out of the proceeds of the Sub Mon. There are certain provinces now forcibly under the Austrian rule which the constitution desires as a more efficient barrier to French than the new to, while England might be induced to give her support to the scheme by the whole of Egypt; France to have Syria for her share. How far England, who has hitherto refused a paltry Savoy to the Emperor, will be induced to give up Egypt to him is a question which only time will solve, until such a policy remains to be seen. It is very clear that, if the Syrian, she must fear nothing from Syria being a dependency of France.

Italy—Everything remains the same. Garibaldi is in the field, and has daily interviews with Victor Emmanuel, the Sardinian Minister. The Emperor becomes more and more cleaner, and, from his past conclusions and his present actions, it is not difficult to foretell what his future conduct will be. There communications against Austria, however, may be merely meant as negotiations to bring that Government to terms by the suppression of France, as shadowed forth in the pamphlet we have already mentioned. A recent certain that Count Cavour has received very private and friendly intimation at Vienna, have had many interviews upon the vexata questio of the day.

Havana.—Nothing new from this island. The great topic there is the occupation of San Domingo, and the enthusiasm with which the Government of war steamers and transports with troops, fuel artillery, military stores and ammunition. The Captain General Alcoy has proclaimed his visit to consequence of the death of the Duchess of Kent.

OUR BILLIARD COLUMN

Edited by Michael Phelan.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—All matters sent to Mr. Phelan for insertion in the rules of the game, or any other matter connected with billiards, should be addressed to him at his head-quarters, 805 Broadway, New York.

Mr. Hopkins of Bernardsville Bridge, Somerset of Billiard Matches, at Hotel of Interest connected with billiards, addressed to the Editor of this column, will be thankfully received and published.

THE WORLD OF BILLIARDS.

In Cincinnati.—All matters sent to Mr. Phelan for insertion in the rules of the game, or any other matter connected with billiards, should be addressed to him at his head-quarters, 805 Broadway, New York.

Mr. Hopkins of Bernardsville Bridge, Somerset of Billiard Matches, at Hotel of Interest connected with billiards, addressed to the Editor of this column, will be thankfully received and published.

Tenny Sweet Opening.—We again extend the opening given in No. 331, and invite players to send us their games with the opening moves. Mr. Sweet will be happy to receive them.

1. K. to K. B. 4th (a) 2. Q. to K. R. 5th (b) 3. Q. to K. B. 5th (ch) 4. Q. to K. 5th (ch) 5. Q. to K. B. 5th (ch) 6. Q. to K. 5th (ch) 7. Q. to K. B. 5th (ch) 8. Q. to K. 5th (ch)

THE SIXTH REGIMENT OF THE MASSACHUSETTS VOLUNTEERS FIRING INTO THE PEOPLE IN PRATT STREET, WH

HILE ATTEMPTING TO PASS THROUGH BALTIMORE, EN ROUTE FOR WASHINGTON, APRIL 19, 1861.—See Page 375.

ERLE GOWER:

OR, THE

SECRET MARRIAGE.

By Pierce Egan,

Author of "The Flower of the Flock," "The Snake in the Grass," &c., &c., &c.

CHAPTER XLVI.—Continued.

For some time Lady Kingswood had persistently refused to see him alone. Her conversation with him had been of the most compulsory nature, engaged in only in the presence of others and in reply to direct questions. He had tried several times to break through this most vexatious line of conduct which she had adopted, but without success, and now, after the proceedings of this night, and the language she had used to him in the presence of a menial, he determined that, if she wished to have an interview with him, she should send such request to him.

He made no inquiries respecting her or Lady Maud on the following day, but at the end of the week, by Pharisee, he learnt that Lady Kingswood, Lady Maud and Cyril had departed from the mansion for Brighton, under the advice of an eminent physician who had been called in to attend Lady Maud in a sudden attack of illness.

Lord Kingswood bit his lip, turned white, recalled Lady Kingswood's words and curse, drew a deep breath, but he made no reply.

Pharisee made no comment. He looked haggard and ill at ease. He had suddenly appeared before Lord Kingswood the evening after the incident in the picture-gallery, and informed his lordship that he had been unable to obtain an interview with old Pengreep, and should be in no position for some time to come to obtain any further information respecting Erle or his companion, the Wonder of Kingswood Chase.

In the frame of mind in which Lord Kingswood then happened to be the communication did not affect him—he merely waved his hand, and said it mattered not. So Pharisee quietly fell into the resumption of his old duties again.

A physiognomist would, however, after a perusal of his features, have declared that there was some deadly purpose lurking in that man's mind.

In the mansion of Horace Vernon, scarcely more than a stone's throw from Lord Kingswood's residence, there were events occurring which were hardly of a less stirring nature, to one being at least.

Erle, after the extraordinary confession which had so unexpectedly fallen from the lips of Beatrice Stanhope, felt like one who had been suddenly aroused out of a trance only to be hurried into a region of wild, chaotic confusion.

He sent, as he had promised, a medical gentleman to attend Beatrice—a circumstance which, as she quickly recovered, and found Erle had departed abruptly, was singularly annoying to her—and he hurried home, sought his own chamber, and there, in a state of bewilderment, went over the whole scene which he had just enacted with Beatrice.

He questioned himself closely as to the manner in which he had acted to her so as to create the passion of love within her breast, and after a searching examination, he felt sure that she had wholly misconceived his actions, words and looks. The regard he entertained for her was purely one of friendship, and could never be anything else; and he saw in a moment that he must not even indulge in this sentiment, so far as it was likely to bring them into each other's society again, as by such a step he would only be increasing the evil it was his duty at once to stop.

But how to stop it! He shrank from writing to her; he was a novice in affairs of the heart, he only knew that he himself loved, and that words of any kind addressed to him, telling him that his love was and must be hopeless, would pierce his breast with the bitterest and most poignant grief; and how could he indite words to her every one of which would be like an arrow in her heart!

Still, to meet her and be silent on what had transpired would be wholly impossible. If he kept her in ignorance as to the real state of his feelings towards her, and acted as kindly to her as heretofore, he would only be fostering and encouraging the attachment which she had so unexpectedly confessed. To behave coldly and indifferently he could not, and to inform her that he was sorry that she should have fallen in love with him, as he could not return it, was a piece of cruelty to the performance of which he did not feel equal. There was but one plan, and that was to endeavor, as far as possible, to avoid her presence, without appearing to do so intentionally, to absent himself from home when she was expected to visit Violet, and to carefully keep away from receptions and places in which they were likely to come in contact.

Such an absence, apparently accidental, but persisted in, would no doubt be understood by her, and would induce her to turn her thoughts elsewhere. She had many admirers—that Erle knew—and in their adulations and ardent attentions he hoped that she would forget that he had ever existed.

Having decided upon this course, he proceeded to put it into execution, and consequently was absent much from home, and from those places, indeed, at which Ishmael especially requested him to appear.

Ishmael at length noticed this, and likewise that Beatrice Stanhope no longer visited them. She had been so constant in coming to see Violet, that her absence was conspicuous, not that Violet made any remark about it, for she seemed to have some cherished subject of thought which rendered her more cheerful than she had hitherto been, especially when alone. She was not averse to Beatrice's society, because she loved to hear her, being an accomplished musician, play upon the pianoforte. Those performances were lessons to her even yet more valuable than those she continued to receive from an exceedingly clever mistress, and as she had conceived a passionate fondness for music, the society of any one who could minister to it was pleasing.

Beatrice had devoted so much of her conversation to Erle when he was with them, that she could hardly be a companion whom Violet would miss; therefore, her continued absence elicited no remark from her; while the continued presence of Carlton, though contrasting strongly with the sudden withdrawal of Beatrice, was equally subject to no observation. In fact, it was a relief to Violet when Carlton sat by her side and talked to her; it enabled her to think without attracting the attention of those in company.

Ishmael's sagacity led him to divine the cause of the conduct of both Erle and Beatrice; and one day, in the presence of Erle, he said to Carlton Stanhope:

"We miss your sister, Mr. Stanhope. Are her engagements so suddenly numerous that she cannot spare us one poor hour or so?"

"She is not well," returned Carlton, immediately.

Erle felt his heart beat violently, and bent his head over a book.

"I regret to hear it," returned Ishmael, with a furtive glance at Erle, whose face he perceived to be suddenly flushed with crimson. "Nothing serious, I hope."

"No," returned Carlton. "Our medical man says it is purely an attack of the nervous system."

"Indeed! In what way does it develop itself?" interrogated Ishmael, still steadfastly watching Erle's face, which he perceived deepened in color each moment.

"Well, in a species of depression of spirits, lowness, tears and general debility," returned Carlton. "The doctor terms it, I think, hypochondriasis."

"Ill and sad," observed Violet, in a tone of concern, and thoughtfully, too. "Shall I not go to her, and try to alleviate her grief if possible? Perhaps it is not possible," she added musingly.

"Thank you for your gentle consideration," exclaimed Carlton, "but she insists on being alone. The medical attendant advises change of air, and I believe she goes out of town in the morning."

No one present asked where.

Erle rose up and walked to the window. Then he strode towards the door. Ishmael stopped him.

"Do not leave us just yet. I wish to speak with you presently."

Erle threw himself into a seat, and took up the book at which he had been looking.

Ishmael glanced at Violet, and speaking with emphasis, said to Carlton,

"I do not think that I should attach any serious importance to such an attack as that which appears to have seized your sister. Young ladies are apt to take strange fancies into their brain, and they treat them like flowers—try to nourish them with moisture. A girl without a secret sorrow or flood of tears indulged in, in privacy, would be a kind of nondescript. Fortunately, perhaps, they contrive not to kill their plants with too much moisture, for I have noticed that after a time the storm clouds dissipate, the sun shines out as bright as before, and the spirits become lighter and gayer than ever."

Violet looked up at him, even smiled, but she shook her head.

"I never knew Beatrice do this sort of thing before," exclaimed Carlton, thoughtfully. "She has always had a very continuous flow of spirits, and rather a strong mind. I can't think what can have occasioned such an extraordinary change in her."

"I can," thought Ishmael. "My plot so far works well."

"I think," continued Carlton, "that you, Mr. Vernon, take the correct view of the matter, and that Beatrice will soon be the same as she always has been."

"I hope so," exclaimed Erle with animation.

A smile curled Ishmael's lip.

"Does he love her?" he thought. "I think not. If he does, he must break with it, if he break his heart too."

"There has been a great deal of illness lately," observed Carlton. "There has been rather over much of it at the Kingswoods."

"Ha! is that so?" exclaimed Ishmael, sharply. "Who is ill in that family?"

"It would be difficult to say who is not," returned Carlton. "Lord Kingswood looks like a spectre; my father says that it is with fagging so hard at the work of the department he presides over. At all events, it is in every one's mouth that he looks haggard and harried quite as much from some secret source of unhappiness as from over application to the duties of his office. It is rumored, indeed, that Lord and Lady Kingswood do not live very happily together."

A grim smile settled on Ishmael's features.

"Lady Kingswood is very ill. She does not keep her chamber, but I am told she, too, looks very anxious and unhappy," continued Carlton, "and she is said to have become somewhat strange in her manner. Cyril Kingswood, too, is very ill."

Violet turned eagerly to him.

"Ill!" she exclaimed eagerly. At the same moment her eye caught that of Ishmael. She saw that it gleamed like a living coal. She sank back in her chair in silence.

"Yes," proceeded Carlton, "he is ill and so, I am sorry to say, is Lady Maud St. Clair."

Erle felt as though he could have leaped out of his seat, but having seen the silent passage between Ishmael and Violet, when the name of Cyril Kingswood was mentioned, he remained as still and kept his features as impassible as if they were carved in marble.

"The family," added Carlton, after a short pause, "have quitted London for Brighton."

"All!" interrogated Ishmael.

"All," replied Carlton, "that is to say, Lady Kingswood, Lady Maud and Cyril: Lord Kingswood follows immediately."

Shortly after this conversation ceased Carlton Stanhope took his leave.

A brief silence ensued. Erle broke it. Addressing Ishmael, he said,

"You expressed a wish to speak with me, sir. I attend you."

"It was nothing, nothing," answered Ishmael, leaning his head upon his hand reflectively. "I intended to say that we shall leave London for Brighton to-morrow."

Violet pressed her hands together, and breathed inaudibly—

"Amen!"

Erle, too, compressed his hands in each other, and murmured—

"Amen!"

CHAPTER LXVII.

She comes! how lovely are her smiles,
The ever-glorious Morn!
Up from old Ocean and his isles,
Her rosy chariot borne
By the winged steeds of Light,
Spurning for the shades of Night,
While Darkness gathers round her head
Her heavy wings which late lay spread
Wide o'er the sleeping world,
She quits her throne; she flies away—
She flings up her usurped way—
To shame and exile hurled.—Philip James Bailey.

Her eyes' unfathomed brightness!
The flowing gold of her hair!
He folded his hands in homage,
And murmured a lover's prayer.

She gave him a look of pity,
A gentle look of pain,
And quickly as he had seen her
She passed from his sight again.
William Cullen Bryant.

Although Ishmael had named an early hour the following day for the departure of Violet, Erle and himself from London to Brighton, it was not until late in the afternoon that all his arrangements were completed. The five o'clock express was the train he selected, and in but little more than an hour beyond that time a carriage received them at the Brighton terminus, and proceeded at a dashing pace down the Queen's road and West street, took its way along the King's road, and ultimately halted at a magnificent mansion in Brunswick terrace. A thick haze arising from the sea prevented the occupants of the carriage from seeing anything save the brilliant lights in shop-windows dimmed by the fog, or the glimmering lamps, placed few and far between on the edge of the footway.

Still adhering to the regulation Ishmael had established, each dined in their apartment alone, and retired to rest without again meeting that night.

Violet, absorbed in the delightful probability of again seeing Cyril Kingswood, took but little heed of her new surroundings, and though she had never seen the sea, she felt indifferent to her close proximity to it, and did not once draw the window-blind aside to attempt to get a view of it, even though she had heard Ishmael, as they drew near to the house at which they had alighted, speak of it, and had observed him point out its direction.

One new and strange thing she became conscious of, but not until she had retired to rest, and that was a peculiar, mournful, rushing sound, repeated and subsiding at regular intervals. It reminded her of her forest-home, when the wind soughing through the trees, preparatory to a storm, swept through boughs, branches and tree tops, swaying and stirring the leaves, compelling them to chant a low, monotonous swelling, complaining, moaning strain, soothing and pleasing to those accustomed to such wild, plaintive music, but depressing and even terrifying when heard, during a temporary sojourn in lone country places, by others who have lived in busy and populated towns, where such sounds are seldom or never heard.

In the ear of Violet the surge and break of the sea upon the shore, the long roll of the descending shingle as it followed the retreating wave, to be again cast up, although she knew not what occasioned them, were sounds inexpressibly grateful. Again, in her mental vision, she sat in her leafy home with Cyril by her side, again she listened to his tender sentiments, so soft and so musically-breathed in her willing ear, as he gazed upon her with his fond eyes, not less loving and ardent in their expression than her own.

And so she was by this tender, murmuring, complaining music wooed to sleep, thinking of Cyril as she sank into slumber, and living over the past with him in her happy, happy dreams.

The sunlight awakened her, the gradually-brightening beams penetrating through her window-blinds filled her apartment with their golden rays, and seemed to bring with them a freshness and animation to her spirits.

She arose and attired herself. She threw open her casement, and started back with a cry of astonishment and delight. What a sight met her gaze!

The wind had changed from the east to the south, and the haze had all disappeared. Before her was an expanse of ocean, bounded only by the sky, on the right by the spur of land upon which the town of Worthing stands, on the left by tall cliffs. The sea was as calm as a lake and as blue. Upon its still surface rested a few fishing-boats at anchor, rising and falling gently, as though they were reposing upon the breast of a prostrate sleeping giant, and their motion was created by the gradual coming and going of his breath.

Immediately beneath her eyes was a broad, well-kept roadway, and beyond that, stretching down to the beach, a green slope also well kept, and from its proximity to the shingled shore, especially pleasant and attractive to the eye.

A few pedestrians were slowly pacing to and fro, and some fishermen were stretching their arms and hesitating whether they would lean against the rails before them on their bent arms or with their backs.

Although yet early in the morning, and early, too, in the spring, some bathing-machines were standing in the sea, midwheel in depth, and some singular looking objects in yellow oilskin caps and dark-blue dresses, strikingly denuded of crinoline, were, with ropes about their waists, bobbing up and down in the quiet water, something after the style of dancing dervishes.

The air seemed so fresh, the sky so clear and bright, a fleecy, lazy cloud only here and there mottling the wide expanse of the blue heaven; the hum of increasing traffic, the plaintive beat of the sea as it ran up the shore broke in a thin line of white foam, receded only to return and repeat its chafing—the whole scene, in fact, was so new, so strange, so brilliant and so attractive, that Violet, quite enchanted, stood at her window gazing eagerly in all directions, until her attendant summoned her to the less romantic but not less essential to health and comfort prospect of a well-furnished breakfast table.

Violet had no eyes, no appetite for her morning meal; she thought only of the novel and beautiful scene she had beheld, and of the probability that she should again see Cyril in this fair place.

It was with no little pleasure that she, at a later period of the morning, complied with Ishmael's request to accompany himself and Erle in a walk upon the esplanade. At his desire, she enveloped her features in a thick veil, as this would enable her—although he did not explain to her his object in wishing her to do this—to observe and notice the persons whom she met, and other objects worthy of interest, without herself attracting attention of a character likely to confuse and embarrass her.

The hour approached noon, and the walks and the beach itself, at a certain part, were thronged with visitors. Though not what is termed the Brighton season, there was, nevertheless, a large concourse of promenaders, most of them evidently persons of good station, and, not a mean proportion, individuals of distinction.

As they wended their way slowly along, accosted every few steps by pestering, if polite, boatmen, who, with fingers raised to their temples, desired to know if they would "Like to have a sail dis marn'?" declaring it was a "fine marn' for a sail," although there was scarcely a breath of wind stirring and not a ripple on the sea, Violet regarded with some surprise the costume adopted generally by the crowds of young and handsome ladies, who passed her at a somewhat brisk and martial step and fro. The small hats perched upon the tops of their heads, originally affected by the Spanish contrabandista, displayed more openly even than the little bonnets which had at one time been the fashion the charming faces which the fair owners certainly betrayed no intention of concealing. The figures, petite and graceful, were in some instances set off to advantage by tightly-fitting mantles, or were hidden under capes, fashioned like those occasionally worn by the sterner sex. The skirts of the dresses were unusually amplified, and caught up, in most instances, sufficiently high to exhibit an under garment of the most brilliant colors, as well as ankles encased in startling-hued hose, abruptly terminated by the smallest, most beautifully-shaped and the "dearest" Balmoral boots in the world.

Violet, in her innocence, charmed with the beauty of these young, dashingly-attired ladies, believed them to be natives of some other clime; yet she thought that they could hardly be foreigners, for their glances, though but glances, were directed upon the many elegantly-dressed gentlemen as they passed, and those of the gentlemen upon them, pretty much in the fashion of a mutual and not unfavorable recognition. Some of the gentlemen, too, wore hats similar to those adopted by the young ladies and she thought them odd and silly; but still every one seemed to pass them without particular notice, so she assumed that it was "native to the custom," and though possibly very outré, still quite proper to the place she was then in.

In the roadway there were singers dressed in the costume of the Swiss cantons, warbling airs from favorite operas, while in other parts there were German bands making morn hideous by their detestable uproar. In a quiet spot was to be seen a being with a sallow face, to which water had long been a myth, on which struggled black, ragged moustaches, and whose head was amply furnished with long, greasy, black hair, apparently ill of a song by a favorite composer. And further on, a body of nigger minstrels might be heard going through a vocal performance, accompanied by banjo, tamborine and bones, with as much rapidity as if they expected the immediate approach of a policeman to put an end to their exhibition, before they could have time to collect their reward from a smiling but not very liberal crowd of spectators of the humble class.

An instrumental concert of a different kind was taking place upon the beach in front of the Bedford Hotel. A respectable body of musicians, styled the Town Band, here executed with skill, precision and an excellence scarcely to be expected under the circumstances, overtures, pieces, polkas, waltzes and other music. And here a very large assemblage of the principal visitors congregated, some seated on chairs, others on benches, and not a few perched upon the steps of bathing-machines, of which at this part there is a large number extending in one long line.

Ishmael paused here to enable Violet to see a phase of life entirely new to her. Interspersed with ladies and gentlemen were children, attended by nursemaids, actively employed in grubbing holes in the sand and shingle, or gazing with admiration upon a one-armed man, whose head was garnished with a crimson cap having a tassel ornament at the end dropping down to his shoulder. This individual sold cakes, gingerbread nuts and brandy-balls, and required to be favored by any of his small but longing auditors, with a solution of the problem, "that if one of the nuts would warm either or any of them for a week, what would a pound do?" Mixed up with this motley group might be seen bathing-women, with bonnets upon their heads of an ancient shape and blue flannel dresses on their bodies of narrow dimensions, curtailed proportions, and inelegant fashion, standing, arms akimbo, talking to a kind of hybrid seamen, who sat or lolled about with folded arms, pipe in mouth, firm in the belief that work was not intended for them or expected of them, and that there is but one paradise, which is beer, and tobacco is its prophet.

The sounds of music, the thronging of individuals, restless in their movements as the sea itself, the passing to and fro of long strings of young ladies, yet under the martinet rule of the schoolmistress, and longing to be emancipated from it, the whirlings by of equestrians, male and female, the rolling of carriages, phaetons, flys and other vehicles, the bright, clear atmosphere, the wide, wide sea, deepening each moment in color, all combined to bewilder and confuse Violet, but, at the same time, to amuse, interest and delight her.

Ishmael watched her closely. He could see the glitter of her eye through the veil, and the heightening of the color on her cheek; and he could also tell, by her eager examination of the different objects the scene presented, together with the elasticity of her step, that she was deeply interested and excited by what she beheld.

He bent his head low down to her, and said,

"The sight pleases you, Violet?"

"Oh, very greatly, indeed," she returned, with vivacity.

"There are hundreds such scenes which await your inspection," he replied, with some emphasis; "and now you will better understand that the broken heart does know a resuscitation—it doth not perish for ever."

He felt her start and shudder as he breathed these words into her ear. He saw her head droop, but she made him no reply.

He could scarcely have expected an answer, yet he felt something vexed that she did not reply. He almost fancied himself premature in the supposition that change of scene, and intercourse with the world, would make her forget; and yet she was evidently impressionable. Others, as fair and gentle as her, had been carried away from the memory of the old by the soft words and softer smiles of newer friends, and why should she remain unchangeable, when so many of her sex were as mutable as that vast ocean upon which he then gazed?

He was disturbed by her continued silence, and by the fact that, on conducting her to the Chain-pier, upon which were gathered but a few persons, the interest she had exhibited in everything she saw previously seemed to have faded away, and that his observations and remarks were poured into a dull and indifferent ear.

Erle, during the whole of their walk, had appeared, perhaps, as interested as Violet in a scene as novel and attractive to him as to her; but his attention had been evidently divided by an expectation of meeting Lady Maud during their stroll; and even up to their almost solitary promenade on the pier, he did not diminish his active inspection of every one approaching or passing him; still, however, to be disappointed.

Had he been vain and conceited of his personal appearance—had he any thought for other than Lady Maud—he would have been flattered by the attention he excited. Black eyes, blue eyes, hazel and brown eyes, all feminine orbs looked up into his face as they passed him, and flashed the brighter on beholding a countenance so handsome; but the deliberate stare, the fluttering eyelid, the coy glance or the sly look, passed unheeded by him—they were not Lady Maud's eyes, and so he cared not how sweet, how bright, or how blue, they were; they wanted the charm of belonging to her he loved more deeply and more passionately the more her presence was denied to him.

One circuit of the pier, and Ishmael led the way off it. He, too, seemed disappointed that he had not encountered some one whom he had evidently expected to meet, and he returned with them in silence, and with a knitted brow to their residence.

On reaching the door, he said, looking at his watch,

"I have ordered horses. They will be here in an hour. You had better take luncheon. I will return to the drawing-room at the time I have mentioned, and accompany you in your ride."

He left them as he concluded, and ascended to his chamber, while they, according to custom, parted, each seeking their own rooms, to take their meals alone.

When Violet returned to the drawing-room, dressed for the equestrian trip, she saw Erle standing by the window, gazing thoughtfully upon the sea with a dejected expression on his features.

She stole up to him, and tapped him lightly on the shoulder. He started and turned round to her. There was a sudden, haughty, fierce expression in his eyes, but it changed when he perceived Violet.

"You are sad," she exclaimed.

A sigh involuntarily escaped him.

"I am anxious, troubled, perplexed, Violet," he exclaimed. "I have several matters to disturb me, and each hour they grow more and more insupportable. There appears to me but one course"—he lowered his voice as he proceeded—"and that is, to fly from this bondage. It galls me beyond my powers of expression to describe. I know not who I am—I have only a few horrible surmises—I know not for what fate I am reserved. I know only that at present I am a creature, a tool, an instrument in the hands of Ishmael for some dire purpose, and this is a state of being I am resolved to end. I will remain only until I have fulfilled the object of my visit, and then no more shall be heard of me until my name shall be uttered in honor, and my presence, instead of being the subject for finger-pointing and wonder, shall be welcomed with pride and satisfaction."

Violet looked at him with an expression of terror on her face.

"You will not, Erle, leave me alone with Ishmael?" she said.

"He will befriend and protect you as he has hitherto done," he responded, taking her hand.

She drooped her head.

"He hath vowed that I shall never, never wed Cyril," she murmured, in a sorrowful tone. "He will keep his vow so long as I am wholly and entirely in his power. You bade me have faith—you bade me hope—you pointed out to me how, linked together in isolation as we are, you would remain by my side, you would work a pathway out of the entangled mystery which surrounds us, and lift me with you into the sunshine of happiness. I have had faith in your words, in your promises, in the future, because you bade me; but if I am now to be left by you alone with Ishmael, there is hope for me no longer. I may abandon all, and pray only for the hour to come which will release me from life."

"Do not believe, Violet, though I leave you, I shall desert you or forget you," he responded, in a kind and soothing voice. "Reviewing the past, from the first hour I set foot in Kingswood Hall until now, I am only each day more confirmed in the belief that the destinies of both of us are interwoven with those of the Kingswood family. I cannot divine how, but that it is so I am sure. I shall not, I suspect, be able to unravel this complicated matter by remaining with Ishmael, to act like one taking part in a pageant. I must adopt another course, and I have framed a plan which may be successful. It may be disadvantageous to me; be it so—I shall dare it. But I will not quit you for ever without some bold effort for your happiness. I have decided upon this, and I may not have an opportunity of speaking to you again. Before, therefore, I quit the subject, there are two matters I wish strongly to impress upon you—remember and act upon them. The first is, that you bear an extraordinary resemblance to a portrait of a lady of the race of Kingswood hanging in an old apartment of Kingswood Hall; and, likewise, to a statue of that lady standing in the antique library. Your face, there seen, I have beheld also vividly in—in——"—he passed his hands with a sudden movement over his temples—"in dreams it may be—day-dreams, visions; but still your face, bright and clear as I see it now——"

"As I have seen yours in that picture which hangs in the old hunting-tower at Kingswood Chase," she exclaimed, with a startled, excited manner; "and at night in the forest depths, in the cold, grey moonbeams—and in—my dreams and visions, too," she added, in a tone which made him thrill.

"So shall it prove that we are both of the race of Kingswood," he returned, in almost a solemn tone.

"No—no—this cannot be," she cried, hastily. "No, no, Cyril Kingswood cannot be allied by blood to me—only—only, Erle, by love."

"We must prove that," he said, musingly. "There is a mystery which awes me as I contemplate it, but I will fathom it. And therefore do I secondly impress upon you to feel no surprise, concern, or betray any feeling if suddenly you miss me from our daily communion. Ishmael will not speak of it to you; be silent to him respecting it, and let him think as he may, although it seems harsh for me to say this. I would be grateful to him if I could, but he should satisfy me that what he has done for me has been for my benefit, and not alone to gratify the promptings of an uncompromising revenge."

The last words had hardly left his lips when Ishmael made his appearance in the room. He motioned to them, without speaking, to follow him, and they obeyed in silence.

Their own horses were at the door attended by two grooms.

A crowd quickly assembled to see them mount, and many and loud were the exclamations of admiration from a very humble audience at Violet's beauty. Her attire was nearly the same as that in which she appeared in Hyde Park, and it attracted as much attention here as it had done there.

As they rode slowly along, many gentlemen on horseback, meeting them, turned and followed in the rear, until, as on former occasions, there was quite a cavalcade formed.

A carriage approached them slowly: it was open, and contained two ladies. An exclamation from Ishmael drew the attention of both Erle and Violet to its inmates.

"Lady Kingswood!" he cried. "By heavens! how changed!"

Erle looked into the carriage, and there beheld Lady Kingswood and Lady Maud seated side by side. The face of Lady Kingswood was thin, haggard and strongly marked, and there was a strange wildness in her eye as she turned it rapidly right and left. Her wandering glances were suddenly arrested by Erle's face, and she uttered a hasty exclamation, half rose up, and then fell back almost senseless in her seat.

One glance of surprise at her, and then Erle's eyes fastened upon the face of Lady Maud,

Her eyes kindled as they met his, her pale cheek flushed, a faint smile curled her lip, and then her face became as white as death again.

A moment, and they were gone—a moment, and all the faces vivid in his eyes an instant previously had disappeared.

Even so unto the eyes of Violet, for she caught sight of Cyril Kingswood, who was on horseback, absorbed in thought, and did not see her. She would have attracted his attention, but she knew not how, and before even she could make a gesture which might have the effect of making him turn his eyes upon her, Ishmael rode slightly in advance of her, then dropped to her side, and Cyril was gone, unknowing how near he had once more been to her.

During the ride they met no more, although both Erle and Violet so much wished to have again encountered them. A glance of recognition alone would have made Violet happy, but it was not to be, and they returned home to dinner with their wishes ungratified.

Violet, however, hoped that she might yet have the happiness of seeing Cyril once again, even though she should be unable to interchange a word with him. Her sitting-room window looked out into the esplanade and roadway, and as soon as she was alone she watched at it, but watched in vain, until deep night set in, and she could no longer recognise one form from another.

But soon after dawn she was again at her window watching—watching with an intensity of hopefulness that he would appear. It would be such joy to her to see him, and his eyes might fall once again on her face, and beam as radiantly upon her as they had of old, and even if they did this she could wait in patience and resignation for the time to come when they should meet to be no more parted on earth.

And even while such pleasing, hopeful, tender thoughts were passing through her brain, she saw Cyril before her eyes, standing on the pathway, gazing seaward, motionless and abstracted.

She did not think.

She caught up her walking attire, donned it hastily, and within a minute she stood by his side.

"Cyril," she murmured.

He turned, and his astonished eyes fell upon her white, excited face.

"Violet!" he exclaimed, with a wild, passionate cry.

He seized her hands and pressed them to his lips.

Then a cry of agony burst from him. He flung her hands down.

"No—no—no," he exclaimed, with a terrible shudder, "no, it must not be—it cannot be. I dare not see you more. No, we part for ever! Oh, horror! Oh, death! for ever and ever!"

Tossing his hands madly up, he darted from the spot, leaving Violet standing paralysed.

A shadow came before her—a voice sounded in her ears—

"Thus I have told you."

But she seemed to know, feel, hear nothing. All power of thought, sight, volition seemed to have left her, and she was borne back to her chamber, inanimate and unconscious, by Ishmael.

(To be continued.)

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Mr. Jocelyn has presented to the Central Park a magnificent live eagle, which was captured in Northern New York, in the act of carrying off a goose. Becoming entangled in some brushwood and being attacked by a dog, the bird threw himself upon his back, and with talons, beak and wings, made a most gallant resistance, until he was finally rescued by a party of American citizens. Let us hope this will prove a happy omen in the present struggle.

The frequency of stabbing cases in drinking saloons renders some Legislative action necessary to control these murder manufactories. We have had five of these affrays in ten days. Joseph Justa, the Italian, who was stabbed on Wednesday evening, the 17th, in Baxter street, by another Italian, sixty-three years of age, named Joseph George, died, on the 19th, in the New York Hospital. The parties, it appears, quarrelled at the house No. 19 Baxter street, and proceeded to the sidewalk for a fight. Here Justa hurled a brickbat at George, who retaliated by stabbing him twice with a large dagger, once in the hand, and then in the breast. The latter wound, which was deep, proved fatal. George, who was arrested at the time, is still in prison, and awaits the result of a coroner's inquest, which will be held to-day. The police report both as having been bad men, and state that they have served several terms in State Prison.

Mr. Nottbeck, the Russian Consul-General, was killed, on Thursday morning, by being thrown from his horse, near Forty-ninth street and Broadway. He was with his wife, on horseback, in the Central Park about nine o'clock, when his animal took fright and ran off towards Bloomingdale. On reaching Forty-ninth street he was thrown on his head, and when taken up was quite dead.

A Mr. J. C. Heenan has been tried for stealing a small quantity of snuff. Much merriment was occasioned in court on account of the similarity of name to our great champion. We are happy to add, for the honor of the name, that the snufftaker was acquitted.

We cannot tell whether it is a ruse to keep our streets dirty for another month or not, but Mr. Hackley, the contractor to clean them, has been sent to jail for fifty days, for refusing to answer a question. It is so suggestive that we quote the proceedings: "What did you do with the $16,000 which you received from Thomas Hope on the 11th of February for the purposes of the street-cleaning contract?" To which the witness answered, "In the absence of counsel, unprepared as I am, my answer might furnish a link in the chain, or lead to some evidence that would criminate me in some way." The question was again repeated in open court, and as the witness still refused to answer, Recorder Hoffman adjudged him guilty of contempt and ordered his commitment to the County Jail for thirty days.

The frequency of suicide among married women, occasioned by domestic difficulties, is becoming quite a noticeable feature in our Bills of Mortality. Four married women last week poisoned themselves on that account. Coroner Schirmer held an inquest on Friday at No. 260 East Houston-street, upon the body of Anna Loeffler, a German woman, 23 years of age, who poisoned herself by taking oil of bitter almonds. She had lived unhappily with her husband for some time, and yesterday morning some words passed between them, when he accused her of being false to her marriage vows. She immediately repaired to another room and drank the poison, then called to her husband to know if she should take the life of her child also. He ran to the room and took the babe away, after which he called a physician, but the poison was too rapid in its effects, and she was a corpse in fifteen minutes. A verdict was rendered in accordance with the facts.

A terrible catastrophe happened at the Buchanan Wells, near Erie, N. Y., in the oil regions, where the gas from a spouting well took fire and exploded, killing seven men. Among them was Mr. Rouse, an ex-member of the Legislature. The Buchanan Farm, on which over one hundred wells are yielding oil, is now in flames, as all the wells are now on fire. The loss in oil, derricks, &c., is immense.

The Boston Transcript of the 16th says: "On Tuesday morning, as a mother with her child, a boy about three years of age, was crossing the P. S. and P. railroad bridge at Portland, the little fellow became unruly and refused to proceed. In the efforts of the mother to compel him to go along, she lost her footing on the bridge and fell into the water, drawing the child with her. An alarm was given by a person who witnessed the affair, and the workmen in the Kerosene works hastened to the rescue. The mother was saved, but the child was drowned."

At Chicago, the other day, three ladies called to take tea at a boarding-house, bringing with them their three babies, all very much alike. While the mothers were at tea, the unsuspecting innocents were left lying upon a bed, and a couple of waggish young men of the house improved the occasion to slip in and change the clothing of the babies. When the mothers departed for their respective abodes at night, they selected their peculiar babies by the clothing, and great was the trouble which ensued, and it is not settled, for two of the mothers cannot be certain that they have got the right babies yet, and are troubled with tormenting doubts. The young men should not have done this.

On the afternoon of the 19th, Barney McLaughlin, a pedlar, went into Kreppel's lagerbier saloon for the purpose of selling some sand, when he was ordered by Kreppel out of the place, but as he was rather dilatory in doing so, he drew a revolver and discharged two shots at him. The balls both took effect in the face of McLaughlin, one passing through his cheek, the other lodging in the cheek. Sergeant Jourdan of the Sixth Ward promptly arrested Kreppel, and he was locked up by Justice Kelly for examination. He disclaims any intention to shoot the young man, and states that it was merely in sport that he pointed the pistol at him; McLaughlin, however, is positive that he fired intentionally. The occurrence was witnessed by several persons, whose testimony will be taken. McLaughlin was taken to the New York Hospital, and his injuries are not considered to be of a dangerous character.

Collector Barney has declined to grant any clearances to ports of the Seceded States. This is, of course, inevitable upon the President's proclamation of blockade.

It is very generally believed that the French and English Ambassadors at Washington have assured Mr. Seward that President Lincoln has the best wishes of their respective Governments.

A ROMANCE ABOUT A RUSSIAN PRINCE AND A BEAUTIFUL GIPSY GIRL.

A very youthful scion of the Imperial family being one day last summer on an escapade from the Imperial palace, had engaged to join a party of youthful comrades on the island of ——, in order to see the midnight meeting of gipsies, which annually takes place after the popular fair which is held on the island, the frequentation of which is strictly forbidden to the youth of both sexes. The young adventurer, although strictly disguised as a gamin of St. Petersburgh, ventured forth with much trepidation, and, by the time he had crossed the river, had grown so nervous at beholding the dreaded figure of his tutor, who had come over to the island, led thither by the same motive as that which influenced his pupil, that the latter immediately withdrew from the glories of the festival—from the sausage-frying and cucumber distribution, from the cabbage-soup and tempting kavass, from the whirligigs and skittles, and all the other edifying games, to the very depths of the pine wood which adorns the back of the island, and, at a moment like this, becomes entirely deserted.

The young prince walked in among the solitary paths of the wood for a long time without meeting a soul, and, feeling weary, threw himself down upon the grass beside one of the little running streams with which the island is intersected in every direction. He had not lain long in this position, when he was aroused from the reverie into which the hour and the silence and the solitude had plunged him, by the most heavenly voice he had ever heard, although he had been permitted to frequent the opera during the whole of last winter, and had listened to Bosio, Alboni and even Mario without the smallest emotion. The hour of his fate was come; for, on rising to ascertain whence these angelic sounds proceeded, he came suddenly upon the figure of the angelic being who had uttered them. The companions of his Imperial Highness are rude enough to say that the angel in question was rather—the least in the world—in need of a dip into the little stream by which she was seated, singing a wild strain to her little uncouth imitation of a guitar, in order to bring out the beauties which lay hid behind the mask, which much travel and the great heat of the journey had placed upon her exquisite features. But in this case, so far from being blind, the little imp, Cupid, enabled the prince's eye to penetrate beneath this crust to the miraculous beauties which lay beneath, and in an instant his heart, and soul, and mind, and, indeed, his whole being, were full to the brim of love! No more study, no more obedience, nor Euclid, nor grammar, nor geometry for him! All such useless pursuits were to be thrown at once to the winds, and his whole life was henceforth to be devoted to the one end sole serious object worth living for, that of following to the end of the world this exquisitely beautiful, though half-naked maiden belonging to the gipsy tribe which had bivouacked in the pine wood of the island. Nor was the young prince over hasty in his avowal of this wise and noble resolution; for, when the father of the girl came back from the fair laden with sausages and rotten cabbage for the savory evening meal, he found the handsome, aristocratic-looking young stranger seated cosily side by side with his child, and entertaining her imagination with a lively description of the pearls and diamonds, the gold and silver with which his mother and his aunts were accustomed to adorn themselves, and which should most assuredly be shared by her, if she would only consent to let him accompany her over the universe.

The father was, however, fortunately of a prudent disposition. He beheld at once the folly of encouraging any wild freak of the kind, and perceiving, by instinct, that the youth must belong to some great family of the city, resolved to make a virtue of necessity, and assist in restoring the lad to reason. This resolution was soon accomplished. The comrades of the prince, terrified beyond expression at his disappearance, had sought out the tutor and confessed to him. The island had been searched, and the young delinquent soon found and given up, with the most unfeeling cruelty, by the gipsy father, and a few hours saw the Imperial adventurer snugly lodged in his own study, looking out upon the Neva, in one of the finest of the Imperial residences of St. Petersburg. Quiet was outwardly restored, but the tumult of the young heart was no more to be quieted. Love had taught the young prince a lesson of wisdom, however. He owned his feelings to no one, but on the first opportunity he again broke loose from all control, and was absent for three days, being found and restored by the merest accident. The frequent repetition of the same event, in spite of all the watching, has induced the Grand Duke, his father, to consent to his travelling for a while. And the young gipsy girl, who has been taken under the especial patronage of the Imperial family, after having been admitted to the public dancing school of St. Petersburg, is about to make her debut in Paris. They say that her talent as a dancer is nought, and that, having lost her voice entirely, the angelic strains of the pine wood have grown hoarse and unbearable, so that the first hope entertained by the Grand Duchess, her especial patroness, of her becoming a singer has been disappointed. But while no expectation is entertained of her becoming celebrated as a dancer, yet so remarkable is her beauty, that her fame has already filled the coulisses of the opera, and the greatest curiosity is experienced concerning her. Count Orloff, the most respected judge of female beauty in the fashionable world, declares her to be perfection, but is strongly against her appearance so early as in May, according to the engagement entered into by the manager of the opera. In Paris, although beauty may be certainly a great element of success, it is not all—some degree of talent is necessary.

Meanwhile, what may be the ultimate intention of the Imperial family with regard to this miracle of loveliness, still remains a secret. The Russians declare that no sooner will she have made her debut than a Russian nobleman will fall so desperately in love with her that he will lay his name and fortune at her feet, and that he will immediately afterwards carry her far away to his castle in Bessarabia, where she will remain, while the young prince travels everywhere but in that direction. The name of the nobleman is already current among the Russian society of Paris, the exact amount of his debts known, and the figure of the Grand Duke's generosity ascertained to a fraction. For it is thus, without noise or scandal, rendering all parties content and offending none, that these things are managed in Russia.

EXTRAORDINARY SELF-SACRIFICE BY A CHINESE WIDOW.

A Hong-Kong paper contains the following account by an eyewitness of a voluntary sacrifice of life by a disconsolate widow:

"A few days since I met a Chinese procession passing through the foreign settlement, escorting a young female in scarlet and gold, in a richly decorated chair, the object of which I found was to invite the public to come and see her hang herself, a step she had resolved to take in consequence of the death of her husband, by which she had been left a childless widow. Both being orphans, this event had severed her dearest earthly ties, and she hoped by this sacrifice to secure to herself eternal happiness, and a meeting with her husband in the next world. I repaired on the day appointed to the indicated spot. We had scarcely arrived when the same procession was seen advancing from the joss-house of the widow's native village towards a scaffold and gallows erected in an adjacent field, and surrounded by hundreds of natives of both sexes. The female portion, attired in their gayest holiday costume, were very numerous. The procession having reached the foot of the scaffold, the lady was assisted to ascend by her male attendant, and, after having welcomed the crowd, partook with some female relations of a repast prepared for her at a table on the scaffold, which she appeared to appreciate extremely. A child in arms was then placed upon the table, which she caressed and adorned with a necklace which she had worn herself; she then took an ornamental basket containing rice, herbs and flowers, and, whilst scattering them amongst the crowd, delivered a short address thanking them for their attendance, and upholding the motive which urged her to the step she was about to take.

"This done, a salute of three bombards announced the arrival of the time for the performance of the last act of her existence, when a delay was occasioned by the discovery of the absence of a reluctant brother, pending whose arrival let me describe the means of extermination.

"The gallows was formed by an upright timber on each side of the scaffold supporting a stout bamboo, from the centre of which was suspended a loop of red cord, with a small wooden ring embracing both parts of it, which was covered by a red silk handkerchief, the whole being surmounted by an awning. The missing brother having been induced to appear, the widow now proceeded to mount on a chair placed under the noose, and, to ascertain its fitness for her reception, deliberately placed her head in it; then, withdrawing her head, she waved a final adieu to the admiring spectators and committed herself to its embraces for the last time, throwing the red handkerchief over her head. Her supports were now about to be withdrawn, when she was reminded by several voices from the crowd that she had omitted to draw down the ring which should tighten the cord round her neck. Smiling an acknowledgment of the reminder, she adjusted the ring, and, motioning away her supports, was left hanging in mid air—a suicide. With extraordinary self-possession she now placed her hands together before her, and continued to perform the manual chin-chins until the convulsions of strangulation separated them, and she was dead.

"The body was left hanging about half an hour, and then taken down by her male attendants, one of whom immediately took possession of the halter, and was about to sever it, for the purpose of appropriating a portion, when a struggle ensued. This is the third instance of suicide of this sort within as many weeks. The authorities are quite unable to prevent it, and a monument is invariably erected to the memory of the devoted widow."

HUMOROUS GLEANINGS.

You never hear one woman invite another woman out to dinner, any more than you ever hear one man ask another to come and take tea with him. No! it would seem that women's hearts melted and softened over the tea-cup, and that men's souls flew open to each other with the table-cloth. Who is there to explain it? It takes several knives and forks to dig into a man's secret nature, whereas the simple key of the tea-caddy will unlock a woman's breast at any time.

The following unique valentine was received by a lady:

"soft is the doun on the bujterfle's wing
It is soft and meak
soft is the voys that my tru luv does sing
But softer yet is her crimson cheek"

The following is the lady's reply:

"Soft is tators all smash'd up,
As soft as smash can be;
But softer yet is the silly swain
Who wrote that verse to me."

To get a duck for dinner. Jump into the river.

Man is an animal, so is a hog. It is a bad rule that won't work both ways; therefore, man is a hog.

Jonathan: "Hallo, neighbor, what be yo gwoyn tew dew with that air keowbide?"

'Zeik.: "Whoy, I've got a tarnation cretur of a boiey what forgets to go to skule, and I want to jog his mem'ry."

A youngster from the country was walking along, and upon seeing a lawyer's office, walked in and inquired,

"What do you keep to sell here?"

"Blockheads," replied the lawyer.

"Pretty good business," said the chap; "I see you've got only one left."

A good anecdote is related of a well-known vagabond, who was brought before a magistrate as a common vagrant. Having suddenly harpooned a good idea, he pulled from a capacious pocket of his tattered coat a loaf of bread and half of a dried codfish, and holding them up with a triumphant look and gesture to the magistrate, exclaimed, "You don't ketch him that way! I'm no vagrant. An't them visible means o' support, I should like to know?"

"John," said a quaker to a young friend, "I hear that thou art going to be married."

"Yes," replied John, "I am."

"Well," replied the man of drab, "I have one little piece of advice to give thee, and that is, never to marry a woman worth more than thou art. When I married my wife I was worth just fifty shillings and she was worth sixty-two; and whenever any difference has occurred between us since, she has always thrown the odd shillings in my face."

A woman putting your room to rights—just after you have been arranging everything to your satisfaction, and elaborately assorting your papers with such methodical care that you could put your finger upon each separate one in the dark—that is what I call chaos. Men are not more awkward in handling women's babies than women are in fingering men's papers. The mischief, and damage, and endless annoyance of spirit, and thorough disturbance of temper for the rest of the day that are engendered by the latter practice, surpasses all belief.

Speaking of errors of the press, Mr. Pycroft relates, in his "Ways and Words of Men of Letters," a conversation he had with a printer.

"Really," said the printer, "gentlemen should not place such unlimited confidence in the eyesight of our hard-worked and half-blind reader of proofs; for I am ashamed to say that we utterly ruined one poet through a ludicrous misprint."

"Indeed! and what was the unhappy line?"

"Why, sir, the poet intended to say,

'See the pale martyr in a sheet of fire;'

instead of which we made him say,

'See the pale martyr with his shirt on fire.'

Of course the reviewers made the most of a blunder so entertaining to their readers, and the poor gentleman was never heard of more in the field of literature."

How they must shudder, they who are wont to order jugged hare in the Paris restaurants, when they read the subjoined:

An elderly married female, of the name of Piot, and a well dressed man appeared, three days ago, before the Tribunal of Correctional Police of Lyons, and the former, with tears, said,

"I complain of this man for having made a civet of Juliette!"

"Juliette! What do you mean?" asked the President.

"My cat, my poor cat, sir! This person, who is a friend of my husband's, came to see us on Christmas Eve, and Juliette having jumped on his knees, he said, 'Madame, she is a beautiful Angora, and so fat that she would make an excellent civet.' 'Ah, yes,' cried my husband, 'and her skin would form an excellent muff for my wife.' Some time after we sat down to supper, and the man insisted on offering us a civet, which was very good. But when, after supper, I sought for my cat, she could not be found, and after a while I discovered that this man secretly killed, skinned and cooked her, and that she, in fact, formed the savoury dish of which we had partaken. I was horrified at such an abominable act, and—and I——"

Here the woman burst into a new flood of tears which prevented her continuing her narrative. The defendant, who seemed rather ashamed of his position, admitted that, in connivance with the woman's husband, he had killed the cat and served it up for supper, but he protested that he had only done so as a joke. The President told him that to kill domestic animals belonging to other persons is an offence in law, and fined him thirty francs.

What female namesake of the poet Dante is very musical? Ann Dante.

"Custom invariably lessens admiration." "Not invariably," says our publisher.

Among the curiosities in a late Dublin paper, are "Lines on the death of an unborn infant."

The man who minds his own business was in Littleton the other day, but left immediately, he felt so lonesome.

Many persons admire the lightning. It is very grand and very beautiful, but we were never personally struck by it.

The red, white and blue—the red cheeks, the white teeth and blue eyes of a lovely girl, are as good a flag as a young soldier in the battle of life need fight for.

An Arkansas traveller says that he knew a young fellow down South who was so fond of a young woman that he rubbed off his nose kissing her shadow on the wall.

The man that cooked "the cold charities of the world" has entered into a contract with an extensive restaurant to furnish fried icicles and hot soup made of Norwegian snow.

Gentlest of Her Sex—"What did you say was the principle of the stereoscope?"

Alfred—"Why, it makes two people into one."

Best and brightest (innocently)—"What a delightful invention!"

Two gentlemen were lately examining the breast of a plough on a stall in a market-place. "I'll bet you a guinea," said one, "you don't know what this is for."

"Done!" said the other; "it is for sale."

An editor out west prints all his marvellous accounts of murders, elopements and robberies on India rubber paper, so that his readers may be able to stretch these stories to any length that pleases them.

It is related of an elderly dandy, who was more noted for running in debt than for paying his trade men, that he always made an exception in favor of his wigmaker, that he might be enabled to say that he wore his "own hair."

A poet was once walking with Talleyrand in the street, and at the same time reciting some of his own verses. Talleyrand perceived, at a short distance, a man yawning, and pointing him out to his friend, said: "Not so loud—he hears you."

An alderman was heard the other day getting off the following specimen of what may be called "corporation" logic: "All human things are hollow; I'm a human thing, therefore I'm hollow. It is contemptible to be hollow, therefore I'll stuff myself as full as I'm able."

At a late military dinner in Baltimore one of the visitors proposed a toast, "May the man who has lost one eye in the service of his country never see distress with the other;" but the person whose duty it was to read the toast, by omitting the word "distress" completely changed the sentiment and caused much merriment by the blunder.

"My love," said Sharpwitz to his wife, "why is a Laplander like like an umbrella-maker? D'ye give it up?"

"'Cause he derives his support from the reindeer."

"Try another," said he, as he threw himself on the sofa on Saturday night. "Why is is your tired husband like an umbrella?"

"Because he protects me from the elements, my love."

"Not a bit of it, darling, but because he is used up."

Two physicians (Dr. A. and Dr. B.) met, when the following took place in presence of a crowd of "listeners." Dr. A., thinking a little exercise and fresh air preferable to physic, had taken one of his patients to ride that morning, which was seen by Dr. B., who addressed Dr. A. in this wise:

"Well, doctor, I saw you taking one of your patients to ride."

"Exactly," said Dr. A.

"Well," said Dr. B., "a thing I never do, is to take my patients out to ride."

"I know it," said Dr. A.; "the undertaker does it for you."

A Moving Speech.—A pious brother, before an American Association, a few years since made the following speech: "I would urge upon you, brethren, the taking of the Western Recorder." Turning to the delegation from a church in Tennessee, "And you, brethren, ought to take it too, as the interests of the Church in Kentucky and Tennessee are very closely allied, and will become much more so upon the completion of the Danville and McMinville Railroad, which I pray may not be long, as I have about fifteen thousand dollars involved in that enterprise?"

THE NIGHT GUARD OF BOATS ON CHARLESTON BAR DURING THE FIRST NIGHT OF THE BOMBARDMENT OF FORT SUMTER, TO PREVENT REINFORCEMENTS BEING SENT TO MAJOR ANDERSON, APRIL 12TH, 1861.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR ARTIST ON MORRIS ISLAND

GUARD BOATS IN CHARLESTON HARBOR

On the Night of the 12th of April, intended to intercept Reinforcements for Major Anderson.

GENERAL BEAUREGARD proved himself an able commander, and showed that, besides thoroughly understanding the strategy of war, he possessed caution and prudence. The object of the bombardment was to reduce the fort before assistance could arrive, as should the expected reinforcements reach their destination, the defiance of the position might be both protracted and bloody. To defeat the proposed reinforcement therefore was the one object of General Beauregard, and the vigor and perseverance of the first day's siege gave evidence of his determination to carry out his plan if possible.

When night closed in his vigilance did not slacken. The expected assistance could only arrive by boats, and although the glare from the shells which were poured into Fort Sumpter lit up the murky sky continually, the darkness was such that boats might slip past unseen. To prevent this manœuvre a small fleet of boats cruised about the harbor all the night. The effect was picturesque and beautiful, as the boats rising and falling with the motion of the waves caused the flashing torches held by the men to dance in weird motion.

DEPARTURE OF THE SEVENTH REGIMENT FOR WASHINGTON.

From the moment that it was known that the pet regiment of New York, the gallant Seventh, was to be the first body of our citizen soldiers to enter upon the campaign at the requisition of the President, the excitement among the people was intense. The gallantry, the loyalty and the liberality of this regiment have endeared it to the people, and it seemed as though every family in the city was having a dear friend. It comprises, in truth, the flower of our citizens; members of the wealthiest of our families, and men who control tens of thousands of dollars are found in its ranks. Put it is not wealth or aristocratic pretension which have won for the Seventh the ardent sympathy of our people; it is the gallant, dashing, soldierly spirit, the promptitude in emergencies, and the devotion to duty, which has ever characterized it, which have placed it where it stands so high in the love and in the estimation of our citizens.

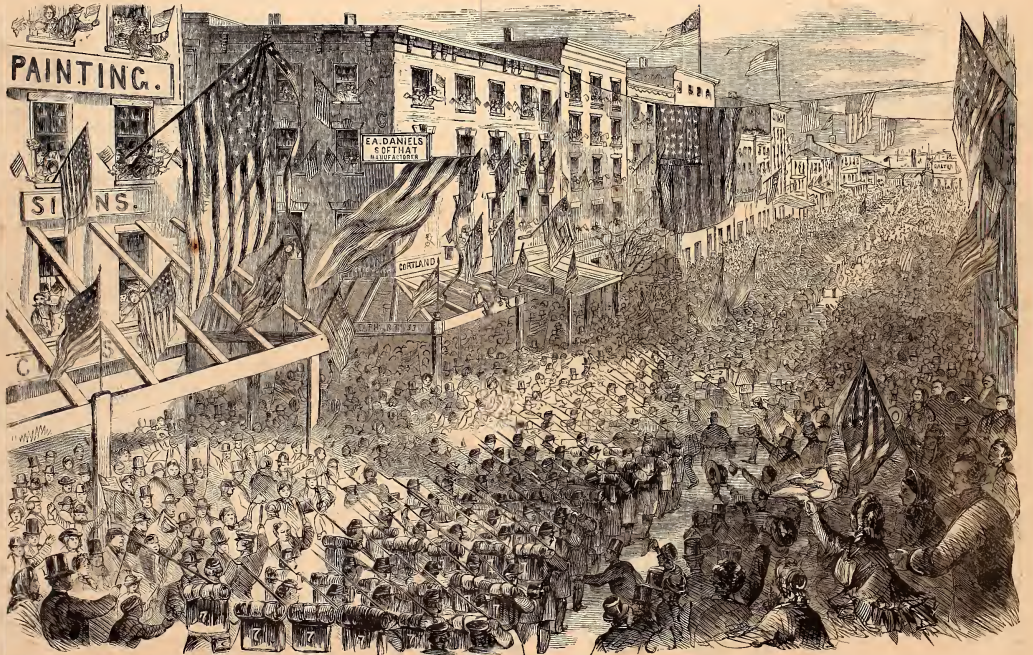
Red, on the morning of Friday, the 19th, the day appointed for the departure of the regiment, there was an extraordinary excitement in the city. Windows along the whole line of march were taken possession of, and groups of people accumulated on the stoops of houses and at the corners of every street. By three o'clock in the afternoon Broadway was densely crowded from Fourth street down to Wall street, and from Cortlandt street to the ferry the regiment had to force its way almost in single file, so dense was the mass of people assembled.

The regiment formed in Lafayette place, which was also filled to its uttermost capacity, every window and balcony being crowded with ladies waving handkerchiefs, scarfs and flags. As company after company moved on defiance cheers arose, continuing until the last file had turned into Broadway, when a rush was made to catch another look at the gallant fellows. But the new comers had little chance, for a solid mass of living bodies intervened. The march down Broadway was the most triumphant ovation we ever beheld. The familiar greetings of friends, the waving of hats, handkerchiefs and flags from the crowd, the door-stoops, the windows, the roofs, and the shouts long, loud and protracted, made up a scene of enthusiasm and excitement rarely or never witnessed before.

At Bull, Block & Co.'s Major Anderson had a full view of the procession. He took a stand just behind the beautiful sight erected over the entrance to the building. When some one cried, "That's Anderson," there arose a shout which the revilers of his honorable fame ought to have heard. All eyes were bent upon him, and each throat seemed to vie with all others in cheering for the hero of Fort Sumpter. It was a moment of triumph for the gallant Major, and when, in response, he raised his military cap and bowed, the shout was renewed again and again. As the Seventh approached the Park, where at least ten thousand people were jammed together, their reception beggars description, so wild and demonstrative was the enthusiasm. Steadily onward they marched, looking neither to the right nor to the left until they arrived at Cortlandt street, when their progress became difficult. During a temporary halt at that place a venerable man with snow-white hair rushed in front of the staff and cried out, his whole frame quivering with excitement, "God bless you, boys! God bless you, boys! Do your duty—fight for your flag! Bring them all back, Colonel, every one of them! They won't let me shake hands with you, but God bless you, boys!"

This little incident produced an intense sensation, and "God bless you, boys!" was caught up by ten thousand lips. At last they reached the ferry, and as they left the wharf cheer after cheer burst forth in tones of thunder, while the chorus of old Trinity pealed forth "Yankee Doodle."

Continued on page 382.



THE SEVENTH REGIMENT OF NEW YORK VOLUNTEERS, NINE HUNDRED AND NINETY-ONE STRONG, PASSING DOWN CORTLANDT STREET, ON THEIR WAY TO THE PHILADELPHIA RAILROAD, EN ROUTE FOR THE CAPITOL. WASHINGTON, APRIL 19TH, 1861.

DEPARTURE OF THE SEVENTH REGIMENT FOR WASHINGTON.

Continued from page 380.

Their reception in New Jersey and all along the line of route was equal in enthusinsm, if not in numbers. The following shows the strength of the Regiment and its officers:

Commissioned Staff Officers				11
Field Officers				2
Non-commissioned Staff Officers				8
Total Staff				21
	Men.	Officers.	Sergeants.
Artillery Corps	54	2	5
Total				61
	Men.	Officers.	Sergeants.
Engineer Corps	25	2	2
Total				29
Band 40 Drum Corps 12				Total 52
	Men.	Officers.	Sergeants.	Total.
First Company	63	5	4	72
Second do	100	8	5	108
Third do	70	3	5	78
Fourth do	8t	5	5	82
Fifth do	54	3	4	01
Sixth do	80	5	5	90
Seventh do	60	1	5	00
Eighth do	78	3	5	86
Recruits in fatigue dress				175
Total, as per Adjutant's report before leaving Jersey City				991
Estimated number afterwards added to the same				49
Grand Total				1,031

THE KING AND THE SEIDLITZ POWDERS.—On the first consignment of Seidlitz powders in the capital of Delhi, the monarch became deeply interested in the accounts of the refreshing-box. A box was brought to the King in full Court, and the interpreter explained to his Majesty how it should be used. Into a goblet he put the twelve blue papers; and having added water the King drank it off. This was the alkali, and the royal countenance expressed no signs of satisfaction. It was then explained that in the combination of the two powders lay the luxury, and the twelve white powders were quickly dissolved, and as eagerly swallowed by his Majesty, with a shriek that will be remembered while Delhi is numbered among the kingdoms. The monarch rose, staggered, exploded, and in his full agonies screamed, "Hold me down!" then rushing from the throne fell prostrate on the floor. There he lay during the long-continued effervescence of the compound spirting like ten thousand pennyworths of imperial pop, and believing himself in the agonies of death—a melancholy and humiliating proof that kings are mortal.

THE Pope, according to annual custom, which has prevailed since the time of Urban V. in 1366, went on Sunday last to bless the golden rose, which is presented to a female sovereign. It is believed that this year the Holy Father will offer the rose to the Queen of Naples.

AN attempt was made to get up a cheer for the Pope as he entered St. Peter's this week, but it proved a dead failure. The Royal family of Naples were present at the ceremony, and received an especial benediction from the Pope as he passed them.

THE Pope, at the Consistory held on the 18th inst. at Rome, is said to have admitted the newly appointed French bishops.

ADVICES from Naples announce that the sale by auction of the property of the late Prince of Syracuse is to take place immediately, beginning with the objects of art. The Chioja Palace and its beautiful garden were to be put up at 200,000 ducats (4f. 25c. each), and his villa at Sorrento at 100,000 ducats.

HIS Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has become a life member of the Cambrian Institute, of which Prince L. L. Bonaparte is President; and has subscribed twenty pounds to the funds of the Society.

THE news from St. Petersburg is startling. There had been fears of an insurrection in the capital. The troops had passed the night under arms, and the Palace had been strictly guarded.

Steam Weekly between New York and Liverpool,

LANDING AND EMBARKING PASSENGERS AT QUEENSTOWN (IRELAND).

The Liverpool, New York and Philadelphia Steamship Company intend despatching their full-powered Clyde built Iron Steamships as follows:

GLASGOW, SATURDAY, APRIL 27.
CITY OF WASHINGTON, SATURDAY, MAY 4,
VIGO, SATURDAY, MAY 11.

And every Saturday, at noon, from Pier 44 North River.

RATES OF PASSAGE:

First Cabin	$75 00	Steerage	$30 00
" " to London	80 00	" to London	33 00

Steerage Return Tickets, good for Six Months.... 60 00

Passengers forwarded to Paris, Havre, Hamburg, Bremen, Rotterdam, Antwerp, &c., at reduced through fares.

☞ Persons wishing to bring out their friends can buy tickets here at the following rates, to New York: From Liverpool or Queenstown; First Cabin, $75, $85 and $105. Steerage from Liverpool, $40. From Queenstown, $30.

These Steamers have superior accommodations for passengers, and carry experienced Surgeons. They are built in Water-tight Iron Sections, and have Patent Fire Annihilators on board.

For further information apply in Liverpool to WILLIAM INMAN, Agent, 22 Water St.; in Glasgow to WM INMAN, 5 St. Enoch square; in Queenstown to C. & W. D. SEYMOUR & CO.; in London to EIVES & MACEY, 61 King William St.; in Paris to JULES DECOUE, 5 Place de la Bourse; in Philadelphia to JOHN G. DALE, 19 Walnut St., or at the Company's Offices.

000 JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 15 Broadway, N. Y.

To Nervous Sufferers.

A NEW Mechanical Appliance for the arrest of Local Debility, Spermatorrhea, &c (sure and effectual.) Price $1. Mailed, free on notice, by DR. BENNETT, Box 101, care B. Lockwood, Broadway Post Office, New York City. Country bills at par.

Hard Times Made Easy.

Good News for the Unemployed!

1,000 CHANCES TO MAKE MONEY!

ONE MILLION DOLLARS

WORTH OF

Watches, Jewellery and Silver-Plated Ware,

TO BE DISPOSED OF ON

An Entirely New and Original Plan!

2,500 Agents Wanted!!

All persons desirous of securing an Agency in this

NEW ENTERPRISE

Should send on their names at once, inclosing a three-cent stamp to pay postage, and receive by return of mail

A Premium Catalogue,

Containing our INDUCEMENTS, which afford

A Rare Chance to Make Money

Without risk, together with

Full Particulars Relative to this Novel Plan!

To insure prompt and satisfactory dealings, direct all orders to

GEORGE G. EVANS,

439 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

$75 PER MONTH, clear of expenses, is made by energetic men with our $10 Engraved Stencil Tools. Send for our Circular, which fully explains the business. WM. BARNARD & CO., 283-5 Box 1014, Cincinnati, Ohio.

ENGLISH PORTABLE TENT,

Patented February, 1857.

The many advantages this useful and really beautiful Tent possesses over the ordinary article, for whatever purposes used, is at once seen by any casual observer.

First—Its extreme Lightness, Portability and Durability.

Second—It is proof against Fire or any other element.

Third—Its capability of Accommodation.

Can be carried by a single person, or can be conveyed easily in a buggy. For Fishing or Gunning Parties they will prove invaluable. Can be put up in ten minutes, and removed in the same time.

For Gentlemen's Lawns or Gardens, their peculiar elegance, neatness and utility will at once recommend them.

For Base Ball, Cricket Clubs, or Military Companies, they are unsurpassed, as occupying but a fourth the usual space of a tent for twelve or fourteen persons.

Price, complete, $50. Sole Agent for Inventor and Patentee, GEO. RAPHAEL, No. 105 William St.

N. B.—Also on hand a few Oblong Square Tents, capable of holding 50 to 100 persons, made for the Crimea; cost originally $135; will be sold for $55. 284

Just Published,

VIELE'S HAND-BOOK FOR ACTIVE SERVICE, 2d edition	$1 00
RODGERS' HAND-BOOK OF ARTILLERY, 2d edition	75
GIBBONS' ARTILLERISTS' MANUAL, half morocco	5 00
BENTON'S ORDNANCE AND GUNNERY, half morocco	5 00
ANDERSON'S EVOLUTIONS OF FIELD BATTERIES, 2d edition	1 00
BARNARD'S SEACOAST DEFENCE WITH 15 INCH GUN	1 50
WILCOX'S RIFLE AND RIFLE PRACTICE	1 75
GARDNER'S DICTIONARY OF THE ARMY, 2d edition	3 00

LIEUT. KENTON'S NEW MANUAL OF THE BAYONET, in press.
LIEUT. COL. SCOTT'S MILITARY DICTIONARY, in press.
LIEUT. KELTON'S NEW MANUAL OF SWORD AND SABRE EXERCISE, in press.

Any of the above Books sent free by mail on receipt of the price.

A large stock of the best American, English and French Military Books on hand. D. VAN NOSTRAND, 284 Publisher, 192 Broadway.

GENERAL SCOTT AND MAJOR ANDERSON,

OIL COLOR PORTRAITS.

The Subscriber has just issued Portraits of General Scott and Major Anderson, printed in twelve oil colors, by the same process as the celebrated picture of Mount Vernon.

Price for both portraits, postpaid, 50 cts.

Agents wanted in every county. J. H. BYRAM,
284-96 112 South Third St., Philadelphia.

MR. SAM COWELL

WILL BE "AT HOME," IN HIS

Popular Drawing-Room Concerts

AT

The Boudoir Pantheon,

659 Broadway,

On and after Monday evening next, April 22d.

Admission 25 cents. Reserved Seats, 50 cents. 284

ABCDEFG.—123456.—METALLIC LETTERS and Figures to put on patterns.

ROMAN STYLE.

Size, inch	3-16	1-4	7-16	6-16
Price	3c.	3c.	4c.	3o.
Size	3-8	1-2	5-8	3-4
Price	3c.	4c.	4c.	5c.
Size	1	1 1-4	1 1-2	2
Price	6c.	7c.	8c.	10c.

GOTHIC STYLE.

Size, inch .... 1-4 Price .... 3c.

ROMAN STYLE BRANDING IRONS.

Size, inch	3-8	1-2	5-8	3-4
Price	4c.	4c.	5c.	6c.

N. B.—These are the sizes on the face of the letters. Orders solicited. The Letters can be sent to all parts of the Union, either by mail or express. We weigh all packages, and send them by the cheapest conveyance. Terms cash. Manufactured by COWING & CO., Seneca Falls, N. Y. 284

Tiffany & Co.,

LATE

TIFFANY, YOUNG & ELLIS,

Fine Jewellery, Precious Stones, Watches, Silver Ware Bronzes, Clocks, Rich Porcelain Articles of Art and Luxury No. 550 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. HOUSE IN PARIS, TIFFANY, REED & CO

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—SHAVER'S PATENT ERASER AND BURNISHER, PENCIL SHARPENER, &c., all neatly combined in one small, tasteful form

"It is a most ingenious contrivance, answering so many purposes entirely."—Independent.

"It gives a neatly finished point to the lead, without soiling the fingers in the least."—N. Y. Tribune.

"It is a very nice contrivance, and will be found useful on every writing desk."—Prof. B. Silliman, Jr., of Yale College.

Sample sent, postage paid, for 75 cts., or 3 styles for $1 50. For sale by all Stationers. Send for a Circular.
280-84 A. G. SHAVER, New Haven, Conn.

A. LANGE,

PICTURE AND LOOKING-GLASS FRAMES

AND

CORNICES FOR ROOMS,

MADE TO ORDER, AND RE-GILDING DONE.

206 William St., cor. Frankfort, New York.

PHELAN'S PATENT BILLIARD TABLES.
MANUFACTORY & WAREROOMS
63, 65, 67 & 69, CROSBY ST. NEW YORK.

To Singers.

HOARSENESS.—A music teacher in the "Southern Female College," Athens, Tenn., says of BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES, or Cough Lozenges: "Having tried almost every expectorant for Hoarseness without much benefit, I seemed cured by the use of one box. I am highly pleased with them."

MATRIMONY MADE EASY; OR, HOW TO WIN A LOVER—Containing plain, common-sense directions, showing how all may be suitably married, irrespective of age, sex or position, whether prepossessing or otherwise. This is a new work, and the secret, when acted upon, secures a speedy and happy marriage to either sex. Mailed free for 25 cents, in cash or postage stamps. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia Post Office, box 2,300.

Bogle's Hair Dye and Wigs

BOGLE'S ELECTRIC HAIR-DYE

ARE unapproachedand unapproachable in their superior merits. Both are perfection. Try the one, see the other, and be convinced.

Private Rooms for Dyeing Hair and fitting Wigs at BOGLE'S Hairwork, Perfumery and Toilet Bazaar, No. 202 Washington St., Boston. Diagrams to measure the head sent by mail. Inclose postage stamp for reply. 000

TUCKER'S

PARIS BRIDAL

GARNITURES AND VEILS,

Coiffures, Flowers, Feathers and Toilet Surroundings are ever of a pleasing character.

759 Broadway. 274-325

Finkle & Lyon's SEWING MACHINES,

With new improvements, Hemmers, &c., all complete,

AT REDUCED PRICES.

Agents wanted. Send for a Circular, 538 Broadway, New York, and 150 Fulton St., Brooklyn 000

6,000 AGENTS WANTED—To sell SIX NEW INVENTIONS—two very recent, and of great value to families; all pay great profits to Agents. Send four stamps and get 80 pages particulars.
281-86 EPHRAIM BROWN, Lowell, Mass.

L. DUBERNET & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Passe-Partouts and Fancy Frames,

544 Broadway, between Spring and Prince Sts., New York

☞ Gilt, Ebony, Black Walnut and Oak Frames always on hand.

L. DUBERNET, J DUBERNET.
000

Handsome Women.

HUNT'S "BLOOM OF ROSES," a rich and elegant color for the cheeks or lips. IT WILL NOT WASH OR RUB OFF, and when once applied remains durable for years. The tint is so rich and natural that the closest scrutiny fails to detect its use. Can be removed by lemon juice, and will not injure the skin. This is a new preparation, used by the celebrated Court Beauties of London and Paris. Mailed free, in bottles, with directions for use, for $1.

HUNT'S "COURT TOILET POWDER" imparts a dazzling whiteness to the complexion, soft, delicate and natural—is unlike anything else used for this purpose, and WILL NOT RUB OFF. Mailed free for 50 cts. in postage stamps. Can be obtained only of HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 707 Sansom St., Philadelphia. Agents Wanted. 251

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every City, Town and County in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patented article just invented. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and to persons out of employment it offers great inducements. For full particulars write immediately and receive our letter by return mail. SEABOLDT & CO., 432 Walnut St.,
280-92 Philadelphia, Pa.

Dr. Marshall's Headache and Catarrh Snuff

HAS proved itself to many physicians and innumerable sufferers to be the best article yet known for curing the Catarrh, Cold in the Head, the Headache, and all Catarrhal affections. It purges out all obstructions, strengthens the Glands and gives a healthy action to the parts affected. A facsimile of the signature of the Proprietor, CHARLES BOWEN, is on every bottle. ☞Sold by all Druggists. 272-84

ANOTHER GREAT NUMBER

OF THE

Comic Paper of America.

NO 38 OF

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN

BUDGET OF FUN
BUDGET OF FUN
BUDGET OF FUN

IS THIS DAY PUBLISHED.
IS THIS DAY PUBLISHED.
IS THIS DAY PUBLISHED.
IS THIS DAY PUBLISHED.
IS THIS DAY PUBLISHED.

IT CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING GRAND CARTOONS:
IT CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING GRAND CARTOONS:
IT CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING GRAND CARTOONS:

THE ONLY WAY IN WHICH FORT SUMPTER COULD HAVE BEEN REVICTUALLED.

THE ONLY WAY IN WHICH FORT SUMPTER COULD HAVE BEEN REVICTUALLED.

THE ONLY WAY IN WHICH FORT SUMPTER COULD HAVE BEEN REVICTUALLED.

THE OLD WOMAN IN TROUBLE.
THE OLD WOMAN IN TROUBLE.
THE OLD WOMAN IN TROUBLE.

These treat in a humorous manner the last events of the day.

The Illustrations of the Pictures in the National Academy of Design are also continued, with Criticisms by the most accomplished Art Critic of the age. Among those reviewed and illustrated are Gifford's great picture of Twilight in the Catskills.

Heade's South Beach at Newport.

Stearn's Chance Customer.

Bellows's Homeward Through the Stream, besides others of equal paint and beauty.

The Chronic Misery of the Month, House-Hunting, is also exhibited in Six Sketches, where the enormities of Curiosity are admirably represented.

Besides numerous other Pictures of unequalled brilliancy.

In addition to these Comic Engravings the Literature is of a high and varied cast.

The humorous romance of The Finest Girl in Bloomsbury is brought to a close, and a new and thrilling Romance commenced called

THE SPECTRE OF TAPPINGTON.
THE SPECTRE OF TAPPINGTON.
THE SPECTRE OF TAPPINGTON.
THE SPECTRE OF TAPPINGTON.

There is also a great quantity of Comic Literature of every description. Among others,

An Amusing Adventure with Garibaldi—illustrated.

The Ladies' Maid; or, The Artist's Mishap.

Our Funny Column.

Budget Chowder.

Also a Prize Nautical Romance called the PIOUS POLLY.

Besides an immense fund of Anecdote, Story, Bon Mot &c.

PRICE SIX CENTS.

Published by

FRANK LESLIE,

19 City Hall Square.

THE READERS OF

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper

Desiring to purchase any article in New York, no matter how trifling or costly, can have their orders promptly and faithfully fulfilled by addressing

JAMES W. FORTUNE,
Care of Frank Leslie, Esq.,
19 City Hall Square, N. Y.

In all cases the necessary funds should be inclosed in the communication.

Unequalled for the Splendor

AND MULTIPLICITY OF ITS ILLUSTRATIONS.

CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED FAMILY BIBLE.

Great demand for the First Volume.
Price, neatly bound in cloth, lettered, $2 50.
Price, beveled cloth boards, gilt edges, $ 00.
Free by mail, or from Agents, one of whom will be appointed for every unoccupied district throughout the Union
CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN,
No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.

Cephalic Pills, CURE Sick Headache, CURE Nervous Headache, CURE All kinds of Headache.

By the use of these Pills the periodic attacks of Nervous or Sick Headache may be prevented; and if taken at the commencement of an attack immediate relief from pain and sickness will be obtained.

They seldom fail in removing the Nausea and Headache to which females are so subject.

They act gently upon the bowels, removing Costiveness.

For Literary Men, Students, Delicate Females, and all persons of sedentary habits they are valuable as a Laxative improving the appetite, giving tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and restoring the natural elasticity and strength of the whole system.

The CEPHALIC PILLS are the result of long investigation and carefully conducted experiments, having been in use many years, during which time they have prevented and relieved vast amount of pain and suffering from Headache whether originating in the nervous system or from a deranged state of the Stomach.

They are entirely vegetable in their composition, and may be taken at all times with perfect safety without making any change of diet, and the absence of any disagreeable taste renders it easy to administer them to children.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS

The genuine have five signatures of Henry C. Spalding on each Box

Sold by Druggists and all other Dealers in Medicines.

A Box will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

All orders should be addressed to

HENRY C. SPALDING,
48 Cedar St., New York.

THE FOLLOWING INDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS

Will convince all who suffer from

HEADACHE

THAT A SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS WITHIN THEIR REACH.

These Testimonials were unsolicited by Mr. Spalding, they afford unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

MASONVILLE, CONN., Feb. 5, 1861.

MR. SPALDING—SIR—I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I like them so well that I want you to send me two dollars worth more. Part of these are for the neighbors, to whom I gave a few out of the first box I got from you.
Send the Pills by mail, and oblige
Your ob't Servant, JAMES KENNEDY.

HAVERFORD, PA., Feb. 6, 1861.

MR. SPALDING—SIR—I wish you to send me one more box of your Cephalic Pills. I have received a great deal of benefit from them. Yours respectfully,
MARY ANN STOIKHOUSE.

SPRUCE CREEK, HUNTINGDON CO., PA., Jan 18, 1861.

H. C. SPALDING—SIR—You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately.
Respectfully yours, JNO. B. SIMONS.
P. S.—I have used one box of your Pills and find them excellent.

BELLE VERNON, OHIO, Jan. 15, 1861.

HENRY C. SPALDING, ESQ.—Please find inclosed twenty-five cents, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best Pills I have ever tried. Direct
A. STOVER, P. M.,
Belle Vernon, Wyandot Co., O.

BEVERLEY, MASS., Dec. 11, 1860.

H. C. SPALDING, ESQ.—I wish for some Circulars or large show bills, to bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before my customers. If you have anything of the kind, please send to me. One of my customers, who is subject to severe Sick Headache (usually lasting two days), was cured of an attack in one hour by your Pills, which I sent her.
Respectfully yours,
W. B. WILKES

A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SAVE THE PIECES

ECONOMY DISPATCH

"A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE."

As accidents will happen, even in well regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.

Spalding's Prepared Glue

meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point

"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."

N. B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cts. Address HENRY C. SPALDING, No. 48 Cedar St., New York.

CAUTION.

As certain unprincipled persons are attempting to palm off on the unsuspecting public imitations of my PREPARED GLUE, I would caution all persons to examine before purchasing, and see that the full name,

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE,

is on the outside wrapper all others are swindling counterfeits.

FURNITURE! FURNITURE!!

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

BY

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR,

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

NO. 87 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six storeys in height, and extends 242 feet through to No. 65 Christie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade, for Time or Cash. Their Stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT work, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in Sets, from $22 to $100.

JENNY LIND AND EXTENSION POST BEDSTEADS,

Five feet wide, especially for the Southern Trade.

Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented. 279-84

FAIRBANKS'

STANDARD SCALES!!

ADAPTED TO EVERY BRANCH OF BUSINESS where a correct and durable Scale is required.

Send for an Illustrated and Descriptive Circular.
FAIRBANKS & CO.,
189 Broadway, New York.

CASSELL'S

Popular Natural History,

Profusely Illustrated with Splendid Engravings,

IS PUBLISHED ON THE 1ST OF EVERY MONTH.

Parts, 32 pages and 1 Tinted Plate, 15 cts.
Double Parts, 64 pages and 2 Tinted Plates, 30 cts.
Sections, 128 pages and 4 Tinted Plates, 60 cts.
Volumes, 384 pages and 12 Tinted Plates, Embossed Cloth, Gilt Sides and Lettered, $2 50.
The work will comprise four Volumes.

"Really a beautiful publication."—New York U. S. Jour.
"The engravings are not only profuse, but exquisite."—Detroit (Mich) Farmer.
"We commend this work to our readers."—Cincinnati Presbyterian.
"This will be a valuable work."—Sandusky Com. Reg.
"Too high praise cannot be awarded for bringing out so excellent and beautiful a work."—Concord Independent Dem.
"Calculated to amuse the reader and aid the scientific inquirer."—Phila. American Presbyterian.
"When complete, it will be an interesting and invaluable work."—Phila. Christian Instructor.
CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 37 Park Row, N. Y.

DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL,

FOR the quick cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Swellings, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, Stiffness and Pains in Limbs, Felons, Piles, Burns, Sprains, Old Sores, Tetter, &c., &c. They CANNOT exist when it is applied.

It cured me of Swollen and Stiff Neck in one night.—John Livingston, Ed. Law Magazine, New York.
It cured me of Piles.—C. Sexton, Ex-Mayor, Camden, N. J.
It cured me of Rheumatism.—Jas. Lee, Philadelphia.
It cured me of Deafness.—G. C. Campbell, Yonkers, N. Y.
It cured my wife of Rheumatism.—Ed. Bordentown (N. J.) Register.
It cured me of an old Sore.—Wm. Maddox, New York.
It cured me of Rheumatism.—B. B. Smith, Macon, Ga.
It would be impossible to publish all the certificates in a book of 1,000 pages. DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL acts on the parts with Electricity, and at once expels all pain and disease from the system, and makes a permanent cure.
Price 25 cts., 50 cts. and $1 per bottle. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers throughout the United States and Canadas.
Principal Depot, 217 South Eighth St., Philadelphia, Pa.
000 C. DE GRATH, M. D.

THE GREATEST HUMBUG of the age, and at the same time the greatest article to make money on ever invented. It costs to make but 28 cents, and sells for $1. Requires but from $2 to $3 capital. Sells everywhere at sight, and requires no advertising. A sample, with full directions for making, sent, post free, for $1. Address, in all cases cash inclosed, 282-84 L. S. PRAY & CO., Stoneham, Mo.

S. R. Walker,

TYPE FOUNDRY

AND PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
17 Dutch St., New York. 277 89

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.—For particulars address, inclosing stamp, DR. H. HIRSHFELD, Surgeon and Accoucheur, 438 Broadway, New York 274-86

AGENTS WANTED—In every town and city in the Union, to sell SHERMAN & CO.'S NEW GIFT JEWELLERY ENVELOPES, with from $1 to $10 capital. Our Agents are making from $3 to $10 per day. Our new style of Envelopes are now ready, which, in number of articles and real intrinsic value, surpass anything of the kind ever before offered. Remember in price and quality we defy competition. Call on or address, inclosing stamp for Circular, SHERMAN & CO., 229 Broadway.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AND GYMNASIUM YONKERS, N. Y.

Winter Session commenced on the 1st day of Nov

TERMS:

Board and Tuition...... ...$150 per Session

For Circulars and particular information, apply to M. N. WISEWELL, Principal

Yonkers, 1860 000

---

335 EMPIRE 335

SEWING MACHINE.

PATENTED FEB. 14, 1860.

SALESROOM, NO. 335 BROADWAY.

This Machine is constructed on an entirely new principle of mechanics. It possesses many rare and valuable IMPROVEMENTS—has been examined by the most profound experts, and pronounced to be SIMPLICITY AND PERFECTION COMBINED.

The following are the principal objections urged against Sewing Machines:

1. Excessive fatigue to the operator.
2. Liability to get out of order.
3. Expense, trouble and loss of time in repairing.
4. Incapacity to sew every description of material
5. Disagreeable noise while in operation.

The Empire Sewing Machine

IS EXEMPT FROM ALL THESE OBJECTIONS.

It has a straight needle, perpendicular motion, makes the LOCK or SHUTTLE STITCH, which will neither RIP nor RAVEL, and is alike on both sides; performs perfect sewing on every description of material, from Leather to the finest Nansook Muslin, with cotton, linen or silk thread, from the coarsest to the finest number.

Having neither CAM nor COG-WHEEL, and the least possible friction, it runs as smooth AS GLASS, and is

EMPHATICALLY A NOISELESS MACHINE.

It requires FIFTY PER CENT less power to drive it than any other Machine in market. A girl of twelve years of age can work it steadily, without fatigue or injury to health.

Its strength and WONDERFUL SIMPLICITY of construction render it almost impossible to get out of order, and is GUARANTEED by the Company to give entire satisfaction.

We respectfully invite all those who may desire to supply themselves with a superior article to call and examine this UNRIVALLED MACHINE.

But in a more especial manner do we solicit the patronage of

MERCHANT TAILORS,
COACH-MAKERS,
HOOP-SKIRT MANUFACTURERS,
SHIRT AND BOSOM MAKERS,
DRESSMAKERS,
CORSET-MAKERS,
GAITER-FITTERS,
SHOE-BINDERS,
VEST AND PANTALOON-MAKERS

Religious and Charitable Institutions
WILL BE LIBERALLY DEALT WITH.

PRICE OF MACHINES COMPLETE

No. 1.—Or Family Machine.............$50
No. 2.—Small size Manufacturing......... 65
No. 3.—Large size Manufacturing 80

Agencies Established:

WILSON & CO., 136 North Ninth St., Philadelphia, Pa.
D. GRIFFIN, 13 North Gay St., Baltimore, Md.
JOHN B. BUSS, 282 River St., Troy, N. Y.
JAMES TOD, Commercial Buildings, Cincinnati, Ohio

AGENTS WANTED.

000 T. J. MCARTHUR & CO

The Early Physical Degeneracy

OF

American People,

AND THE EARLY MELANCHOLY DECLINE OF CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH

Just published by

DR. STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marasmus and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, the mysterious and hidden causes for Palpitation, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

This is a most thrilling book, and is the result of thirty years' experience of the author in more than ten thousand cases of this class of direful maladies. It has been written from conscientious and philanthropic motives, and appeals most pathetically to Parents, Guardians and to Youth, for it details timely aid to restore the already SHATTERED BARK, and a rudder to clear the shoals and rocks for childhood. Send two red stamps and obtain this masterly effort

Fail not to Send and get this Book.

ADDRESS

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 96 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y.

PIANOFORTE AND VOCAL MUSIC AT REDUCED PRICES.—The following splendid collection for 50 cents:

Ever of Thee, Song, Fooley Hall—Land of My Youngest and Holiest Feelings—The Herdsman's Mountain Home—Silence and Tears, by St. Massett—Who Shall be Fairest—Scenes of Home—Hurrah for the Bonnets of Blue—Dear Mary, Wake from Slumber—Rovers, Rulers of the Sea—Oh, 'Tis Sweet to Think—Evening Song—Green Grows the Rushes, Oh—Dear Voices of Home—Simon the Cellarer.

Fourteen popular Songs and eight charming Piano Pieces, all for 50 cents, sent to all parts of the Union. Address C. B. SEYMOUR & CO., Agents,
51 No. 458 Broadway, New York.

The Monarch of the Monthlies!

FOR MAY, 1861.

JUST PUBLISHED, NO. 5, VOL. VIII., OF

FRANK LESLIE'S

MONTHLY,

With which is incorporated

THE GAZETTE OF FASHION.

Price 25 cts., or $3 per annum.

Literary.

Verona Brent; or, The Wayward Course of Love—continued.
Morbid Nervousness.
Snakes in Australia.
An Amusing Adventure in Italy. Engraving.
New Raft for Mortars. Engraving.
A True Ghost Story.
The Mother-Eagle and the Peasant-Boy.
Botanical Gardens at St Pierre, Martinique. Engraving.
The Pastor's Visit. Engraving.
A Financial Difficulty.
Praise your Wife.
Win All or Lose All. Engraving.
Oxygen.
Great Japanese Salamander. Engraving.
The Black Deed and the Black Bird.
My Guardian.
Marriage in the Kirchgarten-Thal, near Friburg in Brisgau. Engraving.
George Fox, the Founder of Quakerism.
Want of Tact.
The Boboli Gardens, Florence. Engraving.
Samuel Lowgood's Revenge.
Marriage Engagements.
The Presentiment
Entrance to the Tuileries Gardens. Engraving.
Town and Fortress of Gibraltar. Engraving.
All is not Gold that Glitters.
Notes on Circumstantial Evidence.
Garibaldi and the Children at Palermo. Engraving.
City of Nice. Engraving.
Locusts.
Love Lies Bleeding. Engraving.
Invitation to Dinner.
Cotton; Mode of Manufacture in the East. Twenty-three Engravings.
Solitude of the Desert.
Story of the Three Wonderful Companions. Engraving.
Spider Fights.
A Surgeon's Advice to Mothers—Measles.
Lord Mayor's Kitchen, London.
Vegetables.
Amusement for Young People.
Poetry—A Life Story; My Lamp; The Legend of Our Lady of the Sea.
Miscellaneous.
Comic Page—Miss Flirt in Search of a Husband. Six Engravings.

List of Engravings.

A Life Story.
The Corpse at the Door of the Wineshop.
The Mortar Raft.
Botanical Gardens, St. Pierre, Martinique.
The Priest's Visit.
Thistleton Avows his Love.
Japanese Salamander.
Marriage in the Kirchgarten-Thal.
The Boboli Gardens, Florence.
Entrance to the Tuileries Gardens.
View of Gibraltar.
Scene in Naples on the Arrival of Garibaldi.
View of the City of Nice.
The Victim of Love.
Cotton Manufacture in Hindostan—Cotton Carder, The Bow, Yarn Winding and Warping, Beaming, Cotton Roller, Twisting the Thread, Drawing, Loom Weaving, Spinning, Washing, The Shuttle, Steaming, Arranging the Displaced Threads, Beetling the Muslins, Folding, Packing, Wire-drawing, Wiredrawer's Bench, Wiredrawing Apparatus, Flattening the Wire, Winding the Wire.
Comic Page.

Gazette of Fashion.

What Should be Worn and what Should Not; Review of Fashions; Styles for the Month; Things Seen and Talked About; Description of Fashions; Description of Colored Plate; Madame Demorest's Patent Tucker and Quilter; Cashmere Shawls; Mourning Costume; Novelties in Trimming; Gored Dresses; Lingerie; Answers to Correspondents; Notice to Lady Subscribers; What time is It? Miscellaneous.

Illustrations to the Gazette.

Colored Fashion Plate; Parasol; New Sash or Scarf; Travelling Dress; Evening Toilette; Hungarian Coiffure; New Mourning Collar; Ball Dress; Two Aprons; Russian Chemisette; Dinner Dress for a Young Lady; Girl's Dress; Head-Dress; Zouave Chemisette; Enamelled Collar and Necktie; Demorest's Prize Medal Skirt; Demorest's Patent Tucker and Quilter; Gored Robe de Chambre; Esmeralda Girdle; Two Bonnets; Coiffure and Head-Dress.

Each number of the Magazine contains over 100 pages of the most entertaining Literature of the day, besides nearly sixty beautiful Engravings, and a superb colored Plate alone worth more than the price of the Magazine.

1 copy 1 year..............................$3
2 copies 1 year.............................. 5
1 copy 2 years.............................. 5
3 copies 1 year.............................. 6

and $2 for each copy added to the Club. An extra copy sent to the person getting up a Club of Five Subscribers, 1 year for $10

The postage of this Magazine is three cents, and must be paid three months in advance at the office where the Magazine is received.

FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE.—Send Stamp to Box 1059, Lowell, Mass. 280-85

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S

LOTTERIES!

AUTHORIZED BY THE STATES OF

DELAWARE,
MISSOURI
AND
KENTUCKY

Draw daily, in public, under the superintendence of Sworn Commissioners.

The Managers' Offices are located at Wilmington Delaware, and St. Louis, Missouri.

PRIZES VARY FROM

$2 50 TO $100,000!

TICKETS FROM $2 50 TO $20.

Circulars giving full explanation and the Schemes to be drawn will be sent, free of expense, by addressing

WOOD, EDDY & CO., Wilmington, Delaware,

OR

WOOD, EDDY & CO. St Louis Miss.

Dr. Brown's Patent Baby-Tender.

THIS article of Nursery Furniture is different from, superior to, and supplies the place of everything heretofore used for that purpose.

N. B.—The extreme sales set by our nursery children in one of your Baby-Tenders very much wide in their proper physical development, and confirm us to discuss with the services of our assistant nurse.—Extract of the

Home for the Friendless

J. C. BROWN & CO., Worcester, Mass. 632 Broadway, N. Y., between Bond and Houston Sts. 000

Send for our Circular.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE.—New Invention.—Address, inclosing Stamp, Dr. FABIEN, No. 4 Ann St., New York City. 234b

THE GREAT WHOLESALE

CASH JEWELLERY HOUSE

OF NEW YORK.

C. P. GIRTON,

MANUFACTURING JEWELLER,

208 Broadway.

All kinds of Goods for the Jewellery Envelope Business. 274

BRITISH COMMERCIAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, London and America, established in 1859.

This Company is well known in both hemispheres, and its stability is undoubted.

Its rates charged for crossing the Atlantic. Half of the premiums may remain on loan.

Policies issued payable in gold.

Last bonus was 80 per cent.

GEORGE M. KEWLEY, Manager,
No. 61 Wall St.

234-91

Thorley's Food for Cattle.

FOR Horses, Cows, Sheep and Hogs, the effects are produced in one month will exceed all expectations. A Pamphlet mailed free. Agents Wanted. Depot, 21 Broadway, New York. 181c LIFE OR DEATH.—The subscribers take pleasure in announcing that they are now prepared to sell (not by them or with it, a copy of an important little work by the late Dr. Brampton, entitled "The Jewish Medical Confidant," published for the benefit and as a warning to young men and persons who suffer from Nervous Debility, Premature Decay, &c., &c., supplying the means of self-cure. The reader is irresistibly led to compose a useful life with an ignoble death.

Reader, here is a treasure, but send your address for a copy of this little work. Address the Publishers,

DR. JOHN B. DIBBLE & CO.,
64 and 66 John St., New York.

234 40o

JOY TO THE WORLD.

Clothes Washed in One Minute by JOHNSON'S UNION WASHING MACHINE.

Patented April 20, 1860.

PRICE $8 TO $10.

A CHILD CAN OPERATE IT. Washes every cloth, from and cotton, without soaking or boiling, in one to five minutes by the operation of ONE Brush-way. New York, and 342 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors.

000

CASSELL'S

Illustrated History of England.

THE TEXT BY J. F. SMITH, UP TO THE REIGN OF EDWARD 1., AND FROM THAT PERIOD,

By William Howitt.

In Fortnightly Parts of 64 Pages, price 25 Cents; Monthly Parts of 128 pages, price 50 cts.

The work will be completed in six volumes, of six hundred and twenty-four pages each. The price of each volume is Two Dollars, or Twelve Dollars for the whole work.

"A splendid work. It will be an invaluable history."—New York Observer.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 37 Park Row.

NOW WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Grover & Baker's

CELEBRATED NOISELESS

Sewing Machines,

No family can afford to be without one.

625 Broadway, N. Y.

000o

Only Twenty-five Cents a Bottle.

Superior Old Tom or London Cordial

GIN,

Distilled under the immediate superintendence of Dr. Dicus of London, for medicinal and family use.

Wholesale Agents, GEDDES & GRAHAM,
62 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

For sale by staple bottle or case, by Druggists and Grocers everywhere. Also by J. S. Pabasse, 307 Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel, N. Y. 000

THE UNITED STATES TROOPS RESCUING TO EXTINGUISH THE FIRES IN FORT SUMTER, DURING THE SIEGE BY THE TROOPS OF THE CONFEDERATE STATES.—SEE PAGE 379

Shaler's Flexible Roller Patent Floor Skates.

Beware of Counterfeits.

The use of these Skates imparts a perfect knowledge of the art of Skating on Ice, as well as furnishing the most pleasing and healthful exercise ever presented to the public. Hundreds of Ladies in the city have become proficient for Seasons by the use of them.

The only place for the genuine article is 616 Broadway N.Y. 000 O. H. VAIL, Sole Agent and Manufacturer.

WHEELER & WILSON'S SEWING MACHINES

AT REDUCED PRICES

With Glass-Cloth Presser, improved Loop-Check, New Style Hemmer, Corder, &c.

Office, 505 Broadway, New York.

"The Machine makes the 'LOCK-STITCH,' and is the lightest on account of durability, permanence, beauty and general desirableness of the stitching when done, and the wide range of its application."—Report of American Institute, New York 162 ffw

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,

OR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.

For curing and preventing Bald ness.

For removing Scurf and Dandruff.

For beautifying and making the Hair soft and curly

In fact for every sick and effective component of the skin or hair.

In short, and get the right article.

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator.

Price 75 cents per bottle.

Wholesale Depot, 81 Dey St., New York.

Also,

PROF. L. MILLER'S INSTANTANEOUS LIQUID HAIR DYE Price 50 cents per box.

Warranted superior to all others.

Try them, and you will acknowledge the fact. 377-68t

Perfumes! Perfumes! Perfumes!

600 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The most recherché and genuine Imported dry Perfumes for the handkerchief, in fancy glass stoppered bottles of the finest cut and most elegant designs, as well as the most approved Bouquets.

MUGUET VERNON, ESS. MS QUOIE.
PERFECT GEM, WASHINGTON NOSEGAY.
FRAGRANT JAPONICA, &c., &c.

Also Concentrated Flavoring Extracts, for Pies, Puddings, &c.

Patent Bouvier, the most approved food for Infants

Hygienic Jelly, for chapped Skin. Cherubim Bloom from "Cook Plastic, an infallible cure for Corns and Bunions.

To be had, Wholesale and Retail, of the Proprietors, New York. EUGENE DUFFY,
Chemist and Druggist.

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—See advertisement next page. 236 000

CHARLES HEIDSIECK

CHAMPAGNE.

This popular Wine, of which the undersigned are SOLE AGENTS FOR NORTH AMERICA, Received the First Premium at the

BORDEAUX EXPOSITION IN 1855.

The Trade are respectfully informed that the above Wine is now in store and for sale at our office.

000 T. W. BAYARD & BERARD, 109 Pearl St., N. Y.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

THE Advertiser having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy after suffering several years with a severe Lung Affection, and that dread disease, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure, and who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription (free of charge), with directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find

THE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c

The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and he hopes every reader will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing. Parties wishing the prescription will please address

REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings County, N. Y.

281-90o

STEINWAY & SONS'

PATENT OVERSTRUNG GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS

Are now considered the best Pianos manufactured from the experience derived for five years.

Warerooms, Nos. 83 and 86 Walker St., near Broadway, N. Y. 000o

BOOK ON PORTABLE ENGINES.—"Practical Instructions for the Portable Engine, enabling any one to be his own Engineer; by a Machinist of the Military Academy, and formerly Member of the United States Engineer Corps." Sent by mail, free of postage, on receipt by mail or express of 25 cents. Address the WASHINGTON IRON WORKS, Newburgh, N. Y.

"The above establishment manufactures Portable Engines of all sizes, having the latest and most valuable recent improvements, and being a excellent combination of known devices for the production of a compact, efficient and cheap Portable Engine."—Scientific American. 280 40o

The Union Clothes Dryer.

A New Invention—Useful, Cheap and Portable,

By which Clothes in large quantities may be dried in a yard, a room, or on the top of a house. Can be put square about from one place to another without disturbing the lines. When not in use it can be compressed into a small compass and kept in a closet. So handy should be without this article.

Price $2, $3 and $4.

The Union Clothes Dryer is pronounced by all unprejudiced persons to be one of the most useful and labor-saving inventions of the age.

J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors,
467 Broadway (near Grand St.), New York, and 342 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ladd, Webster & Co's

IMPROVED SUPERIOR SEWING MACHINES,
800 Broadway, New York. 000o

ESTABLISHED 1833.

BOGLE'S CELEBRATED SUPERIOR FLUID over-powers all other preparations for the restoration, recovery and hair dressing for the Hair in all Climates. To who have been deceived by nostrums, try this and be convinced. It never fails. To be had at

W. BOGLE'S
Hairwork, Perfumery and cologne Store,
262 Washington St., Boston, and for sale everywhere.

THE ELECTROTYPING OF FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER is done by WILLIAM DEVINE, 185 William St., New York

Patented November 1st, 1859.

The measures are

A, the distance round the Neck.

B to B, the Yoke

C to C, the Sleeve

D to D, distance around the Body under the armpits

E to E, the length of the Shirt.

BALLOU'S

Patented Improved French Yoke SHIRTS.

Patented November 1st, 1859.

A New Style of Shirt, warranted to Fit.

By sending the above measures per mail we can guarantee a perfect fit of our new style of Shirts, and return by express to any part of the United States, at $17, $18, $19, $24 $6, $7, per half dozen. No order forwarded for less than half a dozen Shirts.

Also Importers and Dealers in MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

BALLOU BROTHERS,
409 Broadway, N. Y.

Wholesale Trade supplied on the most liberal terms

BILLIARD BALLS, Ivory and Patent Composition Ivory, at reduced prices. Beauties turned and for sale by WM. H. WELLSO, 416 Broome St New York for a Circular. 271-87o

GARDINER'S

Rheumatic and Neuralgia

COMPOUND.

A certain, safe, and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Sick Headache. It is an internal remedy, driving out and entirely eradicating the disease, requiring no change in diet or business, and may be taken by children and persons of the most delicate constitution in any season and climate.

Prepared only by Gardiner, 82 Kilby St., Boston, Mass. F. C. WELLS & CO., 112 Franklin St., New York, Wholesale Agents. Sold by Druggists everywhere.

Sold by J. MILLER & SON, 183 Broadway. 273-87o

$50 PER MONTH and Expenses paid. Address for terms. J. W. ELLIS & CO., Boston, Mass. 278-87o

Smith and Wesson's Seven-Shooter.

J. W. STORER, Agent,

121 Chambers Street, N. Y.

THIS PISTOL is light, has great force, is easy to fire, shoots accurately, can be left loaded any length of time without injury, is not liable to get out of order, is safe to carry. Every Pistol warranted.

CAUTION TO DEALERS.

Be sure and get those stamped "Smith & Wesson, Springfield, Mass." Some others resemble. All cartridges others than lead at the breech are infringements. Balls to correspond with the chambers. Such infringements will be prosecuted. None of the cartridges have Smith & Wesson's elevators on each end of the ball. 276-90o

HORSE POWDERS. DEPOT FOR S. G. WELLS'S CONDITION POWDERS for Horses, 416 Broome street, New York. Price fifty Cents per box of three doses. 276 90o

FRANK LESLIE'S
ILLUSTRATED
NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress, in the year 1861, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 285—Vol. XI.] NEW YORK, MAY 4, 1861. [Price 6 Cents.

Special Notice

Volunteers who are about leaving with their regiments, and who can sketch, are requested to call upon FRANK LESLIE, at his Office, No. 19 City Hall Square, without delay.

Officers in the Army and Navy are solicited to forward to FRANK LESLIE's address any sketches of public interest relating to the war, which will be liberally paid for.

THE NEW YORK ZOUAVES RECRUITING.

The dashing exploits of the famous French Zouaves, and the report made to the United States Government by the Military Commission, sent to Europe during the Crimean War, attracted the emulative attention of all the light infantry tacticians of America. Instinctively a military people, our young men were fascinated with the stories of the agile, impulsive, effective and somewhat dramatic movements of "The Zouaves," and the tour of the Chicago Zouaves but added zest to a desire which inspired most of the young military aspirants. This feeling found a prompt exhibition in the chief cities in the formation of companies in imitation. When Colonel Ellsworth's corps visited New York last summer the excitement about light infantry tactics arose to fever pitch. Although strict in discipline, still the movements gave a sufficiently free-and-easy margin to the usual military drill, which was especially attractive.

Immediately a number of Zouave companies were organized, one of which, taking their name from the State, appointed Colonel R. C. Hawkins as drill-officer, no regular commander having been appointed. Since the war excitement broke out the company has been recruiting and extending itself into a regiment, at the head of which it has placed its brave and efficient drill-master.

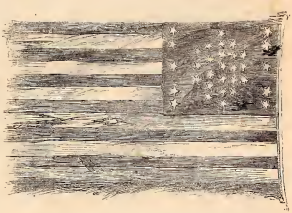
Our artist has given a spirited glimpse of the recruiting process, which has everywhere commanded the cheers of the populace and attracted a large body of athletic men to the ranks, which now number eight hundred gallant fellows, who are desirous of emulating in the service of the Stars and Stripes the glory of their French prototypes. They are nearly of one height and all under thirty years of age. Some of the principal officers are men fully capable of leading them to renown.

The Colonel, R. C. Hawkins, is an ex-officer of the Mexican War. The Lieutenant-Colonel, George C. Betts, is a son of United States Commissioner Betts, of the Southern District of New York, and has also participated in the glories of the army in Mexico. The Major, E. A. Kimball, likewise, has had experience of grim war against a foreign foe and was brevetted for gallant services in the last war. He was formerly Captain in the Ninth Infantry, and was the dashing soldier who, at the Storming of Chapultepec, it is said, hauled down the Mexican flag and hoisted the inspiring Stars and Stripes over that fortress. Adjutant Evans also distinguished himself as an officer of the Ohio Volunteers in Mexico, and the Quartermaster, W. H. Elliott, has seen active service.

With these men at their head, the New York Zouaves cannot fail to be an efficient adjunct to the military now rushing to the support of the national flag.

The commands, which were temporarily and inadequately stationed at Castle Garden, have been garrisoned in the armories over the Centre Market.

The regiment undergoes a most rigid drilling, and will be on the march in a few days.



THE FLAG OF FORT SUMPTER, AS IT APPEARED AFTER THE BOMBARDMENT.

THE FLAG OF FORT SUMPTER.

The disastrous measures taken to reduce Fort Sumpter have already thrilled the whole country. Love of the Stars and Stripes is a distinguishing feeling with the people; as a reverence for the national flag typifies and thrills the people of every nation even where they are not so blessed with freedom and happiness as the American. The disaster to the flag is the secret of the great uprising of the North, and the perforations made in it are felt by men of all parties as a national calamity, as, in fact, wounds personally inflicted on every individual. Our artist has given a fac-simile of the flag after the bombardment.

RECRUITING FOR THE NEW YORK ZOUAVES, COLONEL R. C. HAWKINS.

Barnum's American Museum

Is overflowing with Living Wonders, including Old Grizzly Adams' California Bears, which perform a variety of amusing tricks, Nero Lion, Asiatic Children, Albino Family, White Indian Boy, Educated Lamb, and Superb Dramatic Performances every afternoon and evening.

IRVING HALL,

IRVING PLACE AND FIFTEENTH STREET,

Opposite to the

ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

FOR BALLS, CONCERTS, LECTURES, FESTIVALS, FAIRS, &c., &c., &c.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

FRANK LESLIE, Editor and Publisher.

NEW YORK, MAY 4, 1861.

Communications, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One Copy	13 weeks	$1
One do.	1 year	$4
Two do.	1 year	$7
Or One Copy	2 years	$8
Three Do.	1 year	$10

Free to the Getter-up (in addition) of a Club of Ten and an extra Copy to the person sending a Club of Five. Every additional subscription, $2.

NOTICE TO PHOTOGRAPHERS.

We shall be under obligation to our photographic friends if they will write in pencil the name and description on the back of each picture, together with their own name and address. This notice is made necessary from the fact that so many photographs are sent to us from our friends throughout the country without any word of explanation as to whom they are intended for, and as regards with everything which occurs or public importance throughout the world, still we are not so ubiquitous as that knowledge would be of any use in the event of the forwarding intimation. So save labor and insure accuracy, descriptions and names (as above indicated) should, in all cases, accompany photographic pictures or sketches.

To Correspondents.

MR. NORMAN, of Montreal, will please accept our thanks for stereoscopic pictures of the late Innundation in that city, which our numerous War pictures have crowded out.

Foreign News.

England.—Parliament has resumed its sittings, but little of importance has been debated beyond the Budget, which Gladstone introduced on the 16th. The Volunteer Review on Easter Monday seem to have attracted the usual attention. Regard as much as our military gathering here. The Southern cause, which before seemed to find favor on account of the miserable North-by-Ill Bill, has evidently gained ground, and the sympathy of the people is almost unanimous with the Union party. There had been some interchange of diplomatic notes between the English and French Governments relative to the Italian war, but trouble was anticipated between them on that topic. The building of special ships of war is continued with unabated activity.

A writ of execution has been issued against the Great Eastern, at the suit of Sam Rusell, for embezzlement of his funds.

The Budget has given the conservatives of the British Parliament an opportunity to express their opinions of Gladstone's policy, in the House of Commons, and debated. The opposition denounced it generally, but proposed no amendments.

France.—Active preparations for the war of surpassing magnitude were going on, and a war was considered imminent. Some considered with England, others with Austria or Germany. The attitude of Russia, and the fact of her invading kind of striking her resources mainly to keep up with the enormous military preparations of Louis Napoleon, were also matters of doubt. Rumors threatened on Turkey but not yet supported. Russia had declined joining France in any offensive movements, but the presence of a squadron from France had soon regard the Polish disturbances.

Austria.—General hostilities had not yet evolved a better feeling between the two, and made a warlike aspects. Everything seemed to a collision between the Austrians and Piedmontese. Heavy reinforced commenced, although the Emperor had evinced them towards the Austrian cause of the age in action. Italy, which a great part has called the cause of a people. The Empress of Austria was expected back in the course of the month, and the Emperor was on the point of starting for Moldavia to take her to Vienna.

Italy.—Victor Emanuel has been recognized as King of Italy by Russia and Sweden. Preparations for a campaign were progressing. Garibaldi was in Naples, and had made a visit to Victor Emanuel. Count Cavour's treatment of the Austrians. It was reported he was planning an attack on Austria, but nothing certain was known of his designs, some saying he meditated a diversion in Hungary, while others said Venice.

Germany.—Both the French and English papers declare that France, England and Russia are agreed upon the settlement of the Schleswig-Holstein difficulty, unsuspected there can be little fear of a rupture between Denmark and Prussia and Austria. Prussia is displaying a conciliatory spirit, and the better understanding exists between the courts of Berlin and Vienna.

Russia.—Active emancipation of the serfs was progressing fast, as far as imperial proclamations can do it. It is to date from 1st March, 1863. The delay is to give time to arrange certain matters between the nobles and the serfs, touching the land, &c. The nobles are by no means friendly to the measure, and hostile is anticipated.

Spain.—The state of the opinion of that Peninsula had resolved Europe. The London Times had commented the act, and the Spanish ministers had declared in answer the country's honor and dignity, and that the government didn't protest.

Japan.—The report of affairs in those islands is of a very interesting character. The British Consul, Mr. Alcock, had written a very severe letter to the Japanese Government, and the Ambassadors of England and France were expected to leave Japan for London. There was no security for the life of any foreigner in the dominions, being encouraged by the conduct of the authorities. Before the assassination, the Secretary of Mr. Harris, the American minister, had been murdered, and the Japanese government were forced to pay $10,000 for, and left Jeddo and gone to a respect where there were foreign ships of war to protect them.

China.—It was rumored that Ho-Kwi-Tse, the brutal Tartar General who had the British and English prisoners put to death, has himself been beheaded for suffering the barbarians under Kiqu and Gros to take Pekin.

India.—The mutinous and of many regiments of native troops had been of most horrible character. The details are appalling. It would seem as though it is the three were an unholy retribution.

THE STATE OF THE NATION.

THE Capital of the country is now undoubtedly safe from any force that the South can bring against it.

No act of positive hostility, no personal rencontre has occurred since our last issue, but every step taken now on either side hurries us on faster and faster to the opening of the second act of this great national tragedy.

For some days after the attack by the Secessionists upon the South Regiment of Massachusetts, as described in our issue of the telegraphic communication altogether ceased south of Philadelphia, so that we had to depend upon private hand for our information, and wait for the mail, which reached us by a very roundabout way, to fill out the details.

The actual state of things in Baltimore at that time is thus graphically described by one who was the guiltless of a thousand dangers:

Mayor Allegeyer, of Buffalo, who has been spending some months in Baltimore, where his relatives reside, has arrived in this city. He was left Baltimore on a canal boat. He professes who observed a canal boat there on the 19th of April, which was filled with Secessionists, who had been engaged in the position of sheriff at some distance from this place. The canal boat people still promise to unite with them in operations against the South, the Government and the Union. Mayor Allegeyer says that the Secessionists in many of the houses furnished with shutters, in which loopholes are cut, for the purpose of firing upon the troops. They have also secret means to operate through the city. Mr. Allegeyer, who had just risen from a sick bed, was ejected from the train at Baltimore, and was compelled to walk through the city as he left, his endeavors, by silence and keeping, to prevent a word of escape from him, since, he says, no doubt, to shoot him on the spot, had he attended them a protest. He says, on his arrival here in the city, every store having been emptied of arms for the mob. A prominent citizen who was known as a Union man was compelled to leave the city in a short notice, leaving with him a family of eight children. It is believed that no Northern man's life will be worth an hour's purchase who remains in Baltimore at the war.

The Governor of Maryland proposed to leave the disputed passage of troops that Gen. Scott should be allowed to pass to Washington. The absurdity of such a proposition was clearly exposed and completely decided in a very characteristic letter from Secretary Seward.

Many interviews and much correspondence occurred between the President and the Governor of Maryland and the Mayor of Baltimore, in reference to the passage of troops through the territory of the State, and the Secretary of War, and the Mayor of Baltimore and making the head point of debarkation at Annapolis. To the latter proposition from Baltimore the President is said to have used the following language:

"Now, gentlemen, go home and tell your people that if they will not attack us, we will not attack them; but if they do attack us, we will return it, and that severely. Those troops must come to Washington." Governor Hicks replied: "Then, sir, I will not undertake to answer for the consequences." The right of way for the troops through Maryland is thus formally acknowledged.

"The Senate has adopted an address to the people of Maryland, stating that the Legislature will meet on the 4th of September, but if they believe the people desire it, they will give them an opportunity of declaring for them, their houses being unsafe.

It is reported, on the highest authority, that Governor Letcher has notified the President that he intends to keep the soil of Virginia inviolate, and that force will be allowed to pass it, to reach Washington or to form for offensive purposes against the Federal Government. He has not declared war, but it will not be long in any way effect the carrying out of the measures decided upon by the President, Cabinet, Congress and people of the Government. It is known that the people of Virginia are full of the war excitement, and that volunteers are coming in independently and without organization.

To remedy this embarrassing state of things, the following Proclamation has been issued:

By the Governor of Virginia.

Whereas, volunteers are simultaneously tendering their services, in person, from all parts of the State, to the Executive, under the call of the President, made to-day's Former Proclamation, and are repairing to Richmond, without provision for their support, and without authority of law, and the Executive desires to have it understood that he has no power to receive them into the service of the State; therefore, this Proclamation is to explain all assurance not now authorized, and to request that volunteers will not report themselves, but hold themselves simply in readiness for service, until ordered by competent authority.

GOV'R LETCHER.

By the Governor:

JOHN ROBERTSON,

This indicates very plainly that the Government of Virginia, at least, is not thoroughly prepared for warlike demonstrations. It is the general belief that Governor Letcher has come out from fear-footed for the Union. Governor Burton issued a Proclamation on the 20th ult., calling out troops to defend the State.

We have left the Capital and the seat of the South; but from what we can gather the war feeling is very strong in all the States, and the people are ready to rush to the battle-field. There can be but little doubt, however, that a very mistaken idea has prevailed at the South, that Northern sympathy, that friends and sympathizers with their cause are predominant at the North, and that their presence help will, when the time for the test of arms comes, be given to the cause of the Union, and that every city and town is pouring out its armed men at the call of the President, will be a surprise to them. The Government has the entire South, and will cause many to pause before encountering the overwhelming force that will be quickly brought against that Jefferson Davis has left Montgomery, and is marching with a body of men on Washington, and that Gen. Bill Scott has resigned, will be encountered. If this is so, we can hardly understand how Governor Letcher can maintain his strict neutrality while the Confederate troops are passing to positions.

The President has at length issued a Proclamation ordering the blockade of the Southern ports:

PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT.

Blockade of the Ports of North Carolina and Virginia.

By the President of the United States of America.

Whereas, the laws of the United States have been duly opposed, and the execution thereof obstructed in the States of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana and Texas, where combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings or by the powers vested in the marshals by law have obstructed the execution of the laws, and have rendered it impracticable to enforce them in those States by the powers vested in the marshals by law.

Now, therefore, I have thought fit to declare that the laws of the United States to be enforced.

Given under my hand, at the City of Washington, this 19th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, and of the independence of the United States the eighty-fifth.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

In addition to the tens of thousands of volunteers troops which stand ready at the call of the President, we understand that the Government has determined to raise the regular army to twenty-five thousand rank and file, and the navy from seven thousand up to twenty-five thousand.

The capital wears all the appearance of a camp; it is literally running over with soldiers, but the arrangements of General Scott will afford barracks for ten thousand more troops, which are now on their way to Washington quarters. On the concentration of these forces active measures will undoubtedly be commenced, and the Government will be prepared to carry out the programme laid down in the President's Inaugural.

The Secessionists have undoubtedly received two terribly severe shocks; the first in the destruction of the arsenal of Norfolk and other munitions of war, at Harper's Ferry, by Lieutenant Jones. It is more than probable that they contemplated a sudden descent upon Washington, expecting to get the necessary arms at Harper's Ferry. Its destruction doubtless overthrew their cunningly arranged plans, and thus they missed the opportunity of making the first grand coup of the campaign. The foresight of the Government deprived the Secessionists of this advantage, and our glorious Capital is so well guarded as to defy any force that the Secessionists can bring against it now.

The second and equally terrible check was the destruction of the dockyard, the steamship, and all its stores, by the firing of the drydock, and the scuttling and burning of the ships-of-war in the harbor. The fleet was the darling hope of the Southern cause; its destruction was necessary to ensure the blockade of their ports, and possibly of giving New York, Boston and Philadelphia a taste of the pleasures of a blockade. The first step has now been taken in the sea, and will not be raised again save with Northern help.

THE TROOPS IN THE FIELD.

The Providence Journal of Friday says:—The following records of the movements of troops will be interesting to many. We vouch for its accuracy in the main, though sometimes differ respecting the number of troops at Washington and in the vicinity. Ed. F. L. I. N.

TROOPS IN WASHINGTON OR MOVING TOWARDS IT.

Troops in Washington Monday, a. m., from Quartermaster's return file	6,200
7th Regiment, New York, under Lieut.-Col. Lefferts	1,200
8th Regiment, Governor's Island, New York	1,000
71st Regiment, New York, under Gen. A. S. Taylor	1,000
8th Regiment, Baltimore, under Col. Kane, in Baltimore	300
5th Battalion, Massachusetts, under Maj. R. Ayres	500
1st Regiment, Rhode Island, under Col. Burnside, in Cantonsville	1,000
2nd Regiment, New York, under Col. Ia. Slight	1,000
12th Regiment, Massachusetts, under Col. Wardrop	1,000
6th Regiment, Massachusetts, under Col. Jones	1,000
25th Regiment, Albany, under Col. de Peyster	1,000
69th Regiment, New York, under Col. Corcoran	1,000
3d Regiment, Massachusetts, now in Washington	1,000
4th Regiment, Massachusetts, now at Washington	1,000
Pennsylvania troops in Perrysville, 23d, 24th, 25th	2,500
Pennsylvania troops in Philadelphia	2,000
Rhode Island troops, in Pawtuxet Cove	500
1st Regiment, Massachusetts, now in Washington	370
2d Regiment, Massachusetts, now in Washington	1,000
3d Dragoons, Rhode Island troops in Hamilton	60
Rhode Island Artillery, Battery A, in Hamilton, April 21st	50
Rhode Island Marine Artillery, 2 guns, 50 horses, at Hamilton	150
1st Regiment, Massachusetts, in session at Montgomery, Ala	1,000
Sherman's Battery	100
Total	28,430

IN ROUTE FOR WASHINGTON.

8th Regiment, New York	1,000
Third Pennsylvania, Col. Frazer	1,000
Fifth Regiment, New York	1,000
New York Zouaves	1,000
Twenty-eighth Regiment, New York	1,000
First Regiment, New York	1,000
First Regiment, Brooklyn	1,000
Fifth Regiment, Brooklyn	1,000
Illinois troops now at Cairo	1,000
Massachusetts troops, Gov. Horton	1,000
Regiment from Fort Leavenworth, Lieut. Arnold	1,000
Ohio troops at Columbus	2,000
Nine Companies and Veterans	1,000
Total	15,000

In all under orders and awaiting orders, 54,000.

MAJOR ANDERSON AT THE CITY HALL, NEW YORK.

MAJOR ANDERSON, on the 25th, was the guest he was well at the city, and the City Hall was the scene of the display, when even his opponents love to glorify, must have been highly gratified at the reception that was given to him. He arrived in the Governor's Room he was welcomed by Mayor Wood, in a very appropriate speech, to which he replied with was a cold snuff-box, which his honor presented as its owner." The Major made a fitting response, and the citizens were then admitted to shake the hand of the hero. The Major was then taken to greet the hero of Sumpter was a blind pat, the sustenance of a pleasant volume of poems entitled "Leaves from a Life," which was presented him with a gold pencil-case and pen. Among the most distinguished of the visitors were Governor Morgan and General Scott. The latter was formerly Major Anderson's superior officer. As he grasped General Dix's hand the Major said, "It is a pleasure to me to meet you, sir, as my commander—my first captain." The two soldiers looked as though they both felt the same sentiment. Major Anderson and Lieut. Hunter then received Major to Columbia College, where he assisted to raise the Stars and Stripes.

The Government and Major Anderson.

It is with feelere pleasure that we publish the following communication from the Secretary of War to Major Anderson. It is a full recognition of his honorable conduct and of the undaunted gallantry of himself and his command:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, Thursday, April 25, 1861.

"MAJOR ROBERT ANDERSON, late Commander-officer of Fort Sumpter:

SIR,—Your report of the evacuation of Fort Sumpter, and the honors accompanying it, and through the same, has been received and read with great satisfaction by the President and myself, the appreciation of the Government of your conduct, and the gallantry of the officers and men under your command, and thank the thanks of the Government for the same.

"I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"SIMON CAMERON, Secretary of War."

PERSONAL.

We hear that Judge Bernard of the Supreme Court has resigned, or will resign, his office. Judge Bernard is a Democrat, and the appointment of Judge Sandford, one of the Chief-Justice appointees, to be commanded by Senator Bauer of Oregon. The appointment is likely to be.

GENERAL WORTH, the well-known army officer, has started for the war. He commands the Second Regiment of Florida.

MRS. BOTTA, the well-known and respected Miss Lynch, has a pleasant party at her residence, No. 13 Washington Square, on Thursday evening last week.

MRS. HOFFMAN, Professor Rosa, made some very appropriate remarks at the meeting on Monday.

MISS TAZEL, editor of the Baltimore Patriot, died in Baltimore on the 14th, of typhoid fever.

GENERAL JAMES M. LEGG, formerly known as "Jim Legg," the Keene Sentinel says, has been appointed Brigadier General of the State, and consequently two years under that General Pomeroy. Jim is a smart fellow, and will make one year under that General Pomeroy. At the end of that time he returned to Keene, and will be ready for another term of two years, and another year under Gen. Pomeroy. At the battle of Bunker Hill, General Legg distinguished himself by stopping the retreat of the militia, and leading them back to the attack. In the same way we elected Lieutenant-Governor, and subsequently to Congress from his district. He was defeated for Governor by Governor Haile.

MRS. JOSEPHINE C. EDGARTON, a young girl of Philadelphia, ten years of age, has been appointed Postmistress at Small Hale in that township by the last township election in following the Union.

GENERAL SCOTT, a distinguished Canadian patriot, in Providence, Rhode Island, has tendered to General Sprague's regiment.

MR. HERVEY, senior editor of the Hartford Press, has joined the First Connecticut regiment.

GENERAL NORTON says: "It would appear from numerous observations made by military writers, that officers are not having drills, according to the rules of their grade, in the following order; viz, the most finished first; then the Artillery; then the Infantry; then the Cavalry; and lastly, the Light Infantry.

MR. J. B. ROSSER, Editor of the Richmond Enquirer, has been appointed Brigadier General of the Virginia forces, and will be forwarded to General Beauregard, at Charleston, on the 16th of April, 1861.

LIEUTENANT MAURY, of the National Observatory at Washington, ordered by the appeared on the 19th, and has not been heard of since. Captain Scott has been placed in command of the Observatory.

The venerable Dr. Usher Parsons, whose portrait we published in No. 251, has tendered his services to accompany the Second regiment of Rhode Island as surgeon. He was Commodore Perry's surgeon at the battle of Lake Erie.

Lady Franklin and her niece, Miss Cracroft, sailed on the 24th for Honolulu, to proceed to Australia and thence to India, on her way to England.

Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts, has received the following letter:

Newburyport, April 19.

Governor Andrew—Dear Sir—I am fifteen years old, five feet and six inches high, weigh one hundred and forty-five pounds, and they won't let me enlist, because they say I am not old enough. I think that I am old enough to whip a Secessionist; at any rate, I should like to try; but I don't see as there is any chance for me yet, so I shall have to keep cool and let my hair grow, I suppose. I wish your excellency would send an order to E. F. Stone to let me enlist. Please send an answer quickly, and oblige, Yours truly, G. H.

C. J. Ingersoll has invited all the Ex-Presidents to a conference on the present state of the Union. We hardly think that such men as Pierce, Fillmore, Tyler, Van Buren and Buchanan are the men to meet so great a difficulty as that which now threatens us.

By the steamer on Saturday many notabilities went to Europe. General Miramon, the butcher bandit of Mexico, and his wife took passage for Europe. Of our Ministers, there were Marsh, for Turin; Dayton, for Paris; and his Secretary of Legation, Pennington, a son of Senator Pennington.

Major Anderson is still at the Brevoort House, awaiting orders from Washington. He visited Mr. Powell's studio last week to see that artist's picture of "Perry's Victory on Lake Erie."

Mr. Anson Burlingame sailed in the Fulton on Saturday, the 27th, for Europe. He is appointed Minister to Austria.

THE OATH OF FEALTY.

The oath of fealty to the United States Government was administered to the Seventh Regiment of New York on the 27th ult. Not one man refused the obligation. It is a solemn compact, and we are not surprised that the Secessionist in heart hesitates and then refuses to take it. The oath of fealty is as follows:

Washington, D. C., April —, 1861.

"I, ——, at this present time in the United States service as —— ——, do solemnly swear that I will support, protect and defend the Constitution and Government of the United States against all enemies, whether domestic or foreign, and that I will bear true faith and loyalty to the same, as established by the Constitution and laws; and further, that I do this with a full determination and pledge, without any mental reservation or evasion, to perform in good faith all the duties which may be legally required of me, so help my God.

"County of Washington, (a)

"District of Columbia, ss.

"Sworn and subscribed to before me, this —— day of April, 1861.

"—— ——, J. P."

RATES OF PAY OF THE MILITIA WHILE IN SERVICE.

Many are anxious to know what is the precise amount of pay to which the various grades of militia are entitled. We subjoin a corrected statement:

	Per month.
Colonel	$218 00
Lieutenant Colonel	194 00
Major	175 00
Captain	118 50
First Lieutenant	108 50
Second Lieutenant	103 50
Brevet Second Lieutenant	103 50
First, or Orderly Sergeant	29 00
Other Sergeants	27 00
Corporals	22 00
Privates	20 00
Musicians	21 00

The men are armed and equipped by the Government. The officers are required to provide their own uniforms.

The War Excitement in the City.

Oberon's wand could hardly have worked a more wonderful transformation than the lowering of the American flag at Fort Sumpter has worked upon the people of New York and upon the entire populations of the North, East and West. The moderate supporters of the Government became fast adherents—the hesitating became assured—the wavering firm—the indifferent were roused to action—party lost its distinctions—all lesser and greater considerations were merged in the one grand overpowering sentiment—devotion to the Union! The question no longer is, Are you a Republican or are you a Democrat? but are you for the Union, for its integrity as a nation, and for the undiminished glory of our national flag, the Stars and Stripes, which floated over the infancy of our country, has sheltered its manhood, and has been acknowledged and respected as the emblem of a great and free people in every port and in every ocean of the civilized globe? The heart that is cold to the proud and glorious associations inevitably connected with our "Star Spangled Banner" is unworthy the name of American, is the cry of every man in the North.

The spirit of the people has been stirred to its lowest depths. From the highest to the lowest, including the middle well-to-do classes, who are generally passively indifferent, there is a deep and abiding feeling of a great wrong to be righted, and a grave and earnest determination to right that wrong at whatever cost—at whatever sacrifice of money or life. No one shrinks from the responsibility. The mother kisses her best beloved and blesses him, but turns aside to weep as he proudly passes into the ranks; the sister clings about his neck with mingled grief and pride; the young wife steels her heart, and the betrothed holds back the sob; and all say, "Your country first, and as God wills next." The young go forth full of hope and eager for the cause—the excitement of change, the glory of achieving a happy peace leading them pleasantly onward and lightening fatigue, privation and danger. Weary and aching hearts are left behind, and voids are made in happy homes, which, perchance, though God forbid! may never be filled again; but not a mother or sister or wife would recall the beloved one from the righteous army of our country—all would blush at a weakness which would sully their pure patriotism and cast a doubt upon the cause.

The coming war has completely absorbed all other topics; it is the talk of the drawing-rooms, the hotels, the stores, private and public offices; in the Exchange, the Custom House, on the sidewalk, and everywhere. Every rumor is telegraphed by busy tongues through the whole city almost as soon as it appears on the bulletin, and every action of the Government is discussed with a freedom and a fervor altogether unparalleled. Even little shavers who can hardly find their way home alone have their opinion of the war, Jeff. Davis, Major Anderson and the Flag of our Union. But the interest in the war is not confined to idle talk and women's gossip; on the contrary, every one is anxious to do something to forward the patriotic efforts of the Government, and of the thousands of noble men who have volunteered in the service of their country. We could fill pages with instances of noble self-sacrifice and devotion to the cause which the citizens of New York alone have exhibited. All thought of personal interest seems swallowed up in the one great absorbing sentiment—the preservation of the Union. Merchants, manufacturers and institutions vie with each other in unbounded patriotism and generosity. Not only do they grant permission to any of their employés to swell the volunteer ranks, but they hold their situations open for them until their return, pay their salaries in full during their absence, and where necessary, support their families. We know of one extraordinary instance where the proprietors of a large iron manufactory gave a bonus of twenty dollars to any of their men who would volunteer, reserved their situations and salaries, and pledged themselves to support the families of those who fell in the war. The magnitude of the excitement may be judged by such actions as these. Ladies' societies for making clothes for the soldiers, and lint, bandages, &c., for the wounded, and also for forming nurse corps for hospital service, are in active operation all over the country. Almost every church has its circle of active hands engaged in charitable and patriotic works.

Money literally floods in, in aid of the Government. The following list of appropriations shows the temper of the people, and is altogether independent of gifts of arms, clothing and unlimited private donations:

Albany, N Y	$46,000	Milwaukee, Wis	$31,000
Auburn, N Y	4,000	Marblehead, Mass	5,000
Abington, Mass	5,000	Malden, Mass	2,000
Boston, Mass	100,000	Madison, Ind	6,000
Brooklyn, N Y	75,000	Mount Holly, N J	3,000
Bridgeport, Conn	31,000	Morristown, N J	3,000
Burlington, Vt	3,000	New York State	5,000,000
Bath, Maine	10,000	New York City	2,155,000
Batavia, N Y	4,000	Newark, N J	125,000
Buffalo, N Y	110,000	New Haven, Conn	30,000
Burlington, N J	4,000	Norwich, Conn	13,000
Bordentown, N J	3,000	New London, Conn	10,000
Bradford, Vt	2,000	New Brunswick, N J	2,000
Bridgeton, N J	1,000	Needham, Mass	3,000
Bedford, Mass	2,000	Newtown, Mass	3,000
Bennington, Vt	10,000	North Andover, Mass	3,000
Barre, Mass	2,000	Noblesville, Ind	10,000
Braintree, Mass	2,000	Ohio State	1,000,000
Bedford, N Y	1,000	Oswego, N Y	12,000
Brunswick, Maine	1,000	Ottawa, Ill	12,000
Binghamton, N Y	10,000	Pennsylvania State	500,000
Cincinnati, Ohio	280,000	Philadelphia	330,000
Charlestown, Mass	18,000	Plymouth, Mass	2,000
Circleville, Ohio	2,000	Poughkeepsie, N Y	10,000
Chicago, Ill	20,000	Piqua, Ohio	20,000
Clinton, Ill	5,000	Paterson, N J	10,000
Cohasset, Mass	1,000	Quincy, Mass	10,000
Clinton, N Y	1,000	Rhode Island State	500,000
Camden and Amboy Railroad Co.	10,000	Rochester	66,000
Concord, Mass	4,000	Rockland, Me	10,000
Detroit, Mich	50,000	Salem, Mass	15,000
Dunkirk, N Y	20,000	Stowe, Mass	2,000
Dover, N H	10,000	Schenectady, N Y	2,000
Elizabeth, N J	11,000	Seneca Falls, N Y	3,000
Elkhart, Ind	3,000	Stockbridge, Mass	3,000
Erie, Penn	7,000	Sycamore, Ill	4,000
Evansville, Ind	15,000	St Albans, Vt	10,000
Fall River, Mass	10,000	Sag Harbor, N Y	3,000
Fleming, N J	5,000	Saratoga Springs, N Y	2,000
Fond du Lac, Wis	4,000	Southboro, Mass	2,000
Gloucester, Ind	10,000	Troy, N Y	48,000
Greensburg, Ind	2,000	Toledo, Ohio	5,000
Glen's Falls, N Y	10,000	Taunton, Mass	40,000
Hudson, N Y	4,000	Utica, N Y	12,000
Hamilton, Ohio	1,000	Upper Sandusky, Ohio	5,000
Hoboken, N J	2,000	Vermont State	500,000
Hornellsville, N Y	1,000	Wisconsin State	225,000
Hartford, Conn	64,000	Weymouth, Mass	6,000
Iowa, State	10,000	Wilmington, Ohio	3,000
Indianapolis, Ind	5,000	Waynesville, Ohio	2,000
Ipswich, Mass	4,000	Waltham, Mass	6,000
Jersey City, N J	32,000	West Cambridge, Mass	10,000
Janesville, Wis	6,000	Woodstock, Vt	1,000
Kenton, Ohio	2,000	Watertown, N Y	6,000
Keene, N H	10,000	Warsaw, N Y	3,000
Lynn, Mass	10,000	Watertown, Mass	2,000
Lockport, N Y	2,000	Waterford, N Y	6,000
Lawrence, Mass	5,000	Westboro, Mass	3,000
Lowell, Mass	6,000	West Troy, N Y	6,000
London, Ohio	1,000	Woburn, Mass	5,000
Maine State	1,300,000	Xenia, Ohio	14,000
Mich. various places	50,000	Zanesville, Ohio	3,000
		Total	$11,230,000

Besides this enormous amount, hundreds of thousands of dollars have been donated by private friends of the various city and State regiments, either in aid of the families left behind, or to render more perfect the equipment of the troops. Mr. T. Dehon, the treasurer of the Union Defence Club, has received, within a few days, nearly two hundred thousand dollars in individual subscriptions.

The City of New York wanted a loan of a million of dollars, and Mr. Comptroller Haws spent one hour among the banks on Saturday, the 27th ult., and the following was the result:

Bank of Commerce, by J. A. Stevens, President	$100,000
New York Exchange Bank, by S. Van Duzer, President	10,000
Mechanics' Bank, by S. Knapp, President	25,000
National Bank, by James Gallatin, President	25,000
Merchants' Bank, by A. E. Silliman, President	25,000
Manhattan Bank, by J. M. Morrison, President	25,000
Bank of the Republic, by R. H. Lowry, Cashier	00,000
Phœnix Bank, by P. M. Bryson, Cashier	25,000
Bank of New York, by A. P. Halsey, President	50,000
Bank of North America, by J. Seymour, President	20,000
Bank of America, by J. Punnett, President	50,000
Bank of the State of New York, by R. Withers, President	25,000
Shoe and Leather Bank, by A. V. Stout, President	25,000
Total	$465,000

From this brief review of the state of feeling in this city and elsewhere, it will be perceived that both in pecuniary means and military resources the North is fully equal to any emergency.

Union Defence Committee.

One of the beneficial results of the grand gathering in Union Square on Saturday, the 20th April, was the appointment of a Committee, which may be really called that of Public Safety. The following list will show how nobly the merchants and wealthy men of New York have come forward in the Republic's hour of peril to aid her with their counsel and money. It will be seen to comprise our most illustrious men:

The Mayor and Comptroller of the city, and the President of each Board of the Common Council were also added to the Committee.

Mr. Dehon was appointed Treasurer of the Committee.

The Committee met at eight o'clock on Monday evening, at the house of Gen. Dix, and the Committee on Organization reported the following standing Committees:

A Committee of Finance—Messrs. Russell, Dehon, Low, Taylor and Boorman.

A Committee of Collections and Subscriptions—Messrs. Stewart, Havemeyer, Marshall, Williams, McCurdy and Phelps.

An Executive Committee—Messrs. Draper, Wadsworth, Grinnell, Bell, Sloan, Wetmore, Astor, Richards, Blatchford and Dodge.

A Committee of Correspondence and Publication—Mr. Fish, Mr. Evarts, Mr. Pierrepont, Mr. Brady, Mr. Cisco.

The Garibaldi Guards.

The Italian, Hungarian and French residents in New York are forming a regiment to be called the Garibaldi Guards. Most of them have seen service.

The British Volunteers.

This regiment is in rapid progress. The Colonel has not yet been chosen, as John Bull, with his usual business-like caution, delays its choice for a short time to get some general officer who has been in the service of England.

The Kerrigan Union Rangers.

This regiment is now full, and was last week mustered into service. George Law provided each member with two six barrelled revolvers, and gives the regiment the use of a building corner of Bowery and Spring street.

A Fighting Regiment.

The New York Empire City regiment, under command of Colonel Andrew Sheehan, is now enrolling volunteers at No. 15 West Houston street. Among the members are Billy Mulligan, Jim Hughes, George Middleton, champion wrestler of America, Louis Borrel, Ira Coles, Robert C. Kehoe, W. P. Hallet, Benjamin Wells, John Woods, Wm. Smith, John Williams, Lewis Conover, Michael Mark, Captain Daniel Aldrich, Major Welding, John Franklin, and all are fighting men. There will be two companies of riflemen equipped from this regiment, if possible.

The Advance Zouave Guards of Colonel Duryea.

This dashing body of men departed on the 24th for Fort Schuyler. Colonel Duryea addressed them in a short but excellent address. They then formed in usual Zouave style, four abreast, and marched down Canal street. They will remain in Fort Schuyler for a short time to complete their numbers and to perfect the drill of their recruits. They are a noble body of men. Lieutenant-Colonel Warren was for many years military instructor of West Point, of which he is a graduate.

THE MARCH OF THE SEVENTH REGIMENT

Of New York to Washington.

This crack regiment having safely arrived at its destination, an account of its perils by flood and field will be interesting to our readers. It is a simple narrative, as told by one of its members.

"We arrived," he says, "on Monday afternoon at Annapolis, after a very unpleasant passage of two days from Philadelphia, having been sadly crowded for room and deficient in food. The boys, however, laughed at their troubles, their only anxiety being to get at work.

"Immediately on landing we camped on the beach in front of the Naval Academy, and having stacked arms and made all necessary arrangements, set guard, and the regiment strolled into the inclosed grounds of the Academy, where we threw ourselves upon the grass and had a good rest after our fatigue. We expected to lay there all night, but about six o'clock we were invited to take up our quarters in the Academy, which we gladly accepted, and passed a quiet night's rest. On Tuesday Colonel Lefferts made every effort to get off, but finding it impossible, ordered a dress parade and drill for the morning. It was given in the presence of thousands who cheered us heartily, and the army officers paid us the highest compliments.

"On Tuesday evening an incident occurred which showed how prompt the regiment was to respond to any call. About nine o'clock the lights of the Baltic as she came up the bay were sighted, followed soon by those of the fleet, and they were hailed with joy, for apprehensions of an assault had been entertained for several days. Soon after the lights were discovered, a thick haze settled down on the horizon, concealing the lights, and the impression was at once conveyed that they had been put out purposely with some evil designs. This was confirmed almost immediately by a signal displayed from the Constitution, denoting 'danger,' which had been sent up by mistake. The cry was at once 'turn out,' and the 'call' was beaten. In seven minutes from the first tap of the drum, the line of the regiment was formed, howitzers manned, and the regiment reported for duty. The same must be said of the corps of acting midshipmen, who in the same time were formed on the same ground with their howitzer. The regiment for this was most highly and deservedly praised. As this mistake on board the ship was soon discovered by the lifting of the haze, the troops were dismissed and returned to their quarters.

"During Tuesday, Colonel Lefferts had made the necessary arrangements for moving his column forward, and at five o'clock on Wednesday morning two companies, who had been detailed as skirmishers, started with orders to report any obstructions by a certain fixed time, and if no report was received, the column would move at the expiration of that time. Accordingly, at eight o'clock, no word having been received from the advanced guard, the column was put in motion, following the railroad track. It should be mentioned here that this advanced guard took with them two small baggage cars, which the men dragged by ropes; and to understand the nature of their work, a few words as to the construction of the road. It runs through a deep cut nearly all the way to the first bridge, which tends to exclude the air, and affords no shelter from the rays of the sun. The track is laid on sleepers raised from the ground, which is a sandy clay soil, and it is easy to understand how difficult it must be to march under such circumstances.

"The Seventh, however, started off in good order, and in high spirits, the rear being brought up by the officers' wagons. Baggage-wagons and ambulance and the locomotive, with three cars, were to follow soon afterwards. After marching about four miles, the sun began to pour down in the gorge of the road with terrible power, the day being the hottest this part of the season. The Colonel commanding, seeing that the men were likely to suffer very much if compelled to carry their knapsacks, ordered a halt, and gave the order to 'unsling,' which was gladly complied with. The knapsacks were piled alongside the road, and a guard placed over them, with directions to have them brought forward by the locomotive. This done, the column was again pushed forward. During the next two or three miles the heat was more intensified, and many were compelled to throw themselves on the bank of the road and obtain a few minutes' rest. This done, they would push forward with renewed vigor and join the main column. In some cases, those most exhausted were put in the baggage wagons, and, resting there, would resume the line of march. After walking nine miles and a half, our informant was struck down, as if dead, by a coup de soleil, and was carried to the roadside, where his companions paid him every attention; and by the time the cars came up, he was sufficiently restored to be put into them, and although they were filled with half-exhausted stragglers, they cheerfully made room so that he could lie down. In about half an hour the whole column was reached, and it was discovered that the cause of their stoppage was the breaking of a bridge which crossed a small stream, and it would be impossible to advance until that was repaired, which was already in course of progress by a portion of the Massachusetts Regiment, which had been sent on, on Tuesday, to examine the state of the road. The regiment was, therefore, halted and encamped for the night, and until such time as the bridge should be repaired, while the cars were sent back to give information of the condition of things and to carry the disabled, one of whom was our informant, the other member of the advance guard, who accidentally shot himself in the knee, causing a wound which, though slight, disabled him from walking. Throughout the entire line of the road, as far as travelled, not only was no opposition offered, but not a single white man was seen, and only a few negro huts. At four o'clock, on Wednesday P.M., when the cars left, all had recovered their spirits, and were anxious to get at their rations, which consists of a biscuit and raw pork or beef—each man carrying water in his canteen.

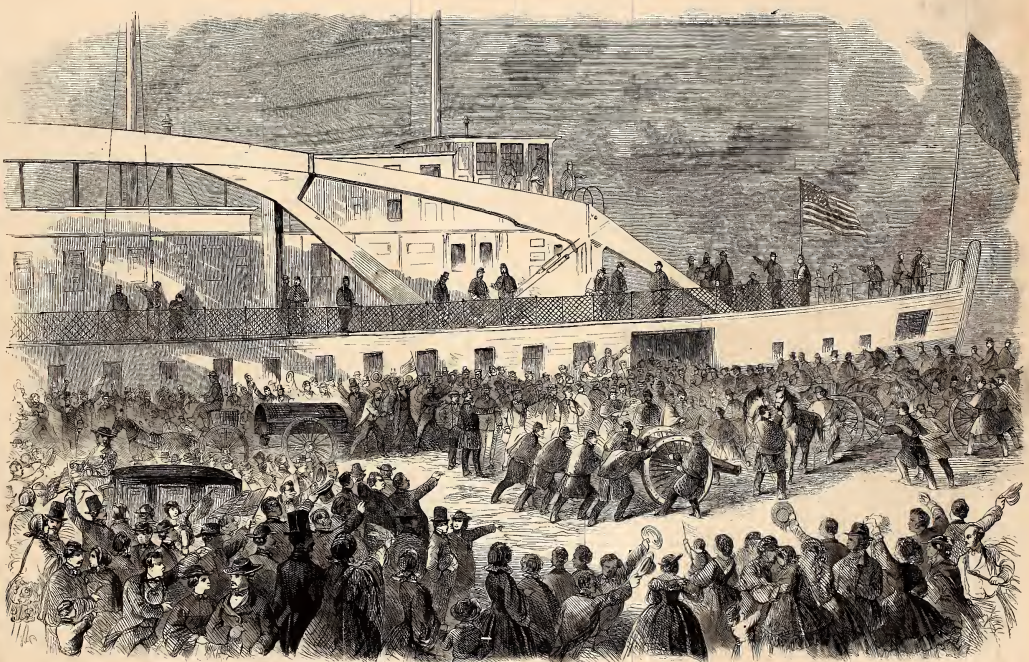
"As to the road and bridge a few interesting facts were gathered. On Monday, General B. F. Butler, Commander-in-Chief of the Massachusetts troops, went with a body of his stalwart men, who are Nantucket, Lynn and Boston boys, to the storehouse of the railroad company, and asked to see what was inside. The keeper replied 'Nothing,' but the General persisted in his curiosity, and the man replied that he had not the keys, and did not know where they were. 'Boys,' said the General, turning to his men, 'do you think you could raise those gates?' 'We guess we can.' 'Let me see you try.' They tried, and in a few minutes free access was had to the building, where they found a small locomotive. 'Does anybody here know anything about this machine?' 'I helped build it, and know every portion of her,' said one of his men. 'See if she is fit for service;' and after a brief examination it was reported that she required a few slight repairs. 'Go to work and make them,' and in the course of a few hours she was fired up, and duly reported to the General, who ordered an examination of the road. It was found in a sad condition, but was repaired so far as their limited stock of tools and spikes would allow, and without proceeding as far as the bridge, they returned with the locomotive and their report, and it was then turned over to Colonel Lefferts for service on Wednesday. The Massachusetts troops undertook the repairs of the bridge and track, they being familiar with such work, and would not allow the Seventh to lay their hands to any work, 'for,' they said, 'you are not used to this kind of work, and we are. You can do the open-field fighting, and we will do the hard work, and when it comes to a rough-and-tumble fight you will find us there.'

"The warmest friendship has sprung up between these two regiments from the moment they met, and it was cemented by a little incident which was narrated to our reporter by an eye-witness. Some of the Massachusetts troops were passing a squad of the Seventh, who were seated by the roadside eating their rations of biscuit, and of course they stopped to speak to each other; and in the course of conversation one of the Massachusetts boys chanced to remark that they hadn't had their rations yet. Instantly every one of the Seventh sprang to his feet, and although each man had only one biscuit, that was halved with their friends, as well as their salt pork; and it was gladly accepted, for they had been out all day without a mouthful to eat or drink. It was not long before this

(Continued on page 390.)

GENERAL VIEW OF CHARLESTON HARBOR DURING THE BOMBARDMENT OF FORT S

INTERIOR OF FORT SUMPTER AFTER THE EVACUATION OF THE FEDERAL TROOPS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR ARTIST, MR. EUGENE BENNY, WHO VISITED THE FORT IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE BOMBARDMENT.



THE RHODE ISLAND REGIMENT LEAVING PROVIDENCE, R. I.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist, Mr. Lumley.—See Page 391.

THE MARCH OF THE SEVENTH REGIMENT.

(Continued from page 387.)

incident became known in the Massachusetts regiment, and from that time forward the Seventh have almost been worshipped. Not a man in the Massachusetts regiment but would go through fire and water to serve the Seventh. Of the twenty who came home in the Baltic, eighteen were invalided at Annapolis by reason of sickness or physical inability to perform the arduous duties required of them. The other two were McSpies, sunstruck, and D. V. Portley, of the Second, accidentally shot in the leg. The telegraph has, before this was written, informed our readers that the bridge had been repaired, and communication opened to the Junction."

DEPARTURE OF TROOPS FROM NEW YORK CITY FOR THE SOUTH.

The Seventy-first Regiment.

NEVER within the memory of man have two such exciting weeks passed over our city as those which have just ended. The city has resembled more a Campus Martis than a commercial city, and the serious countenances of every one we met gave assurance that a great crisis had arrived, which the nation would meet unflinchingly. In our last paper we chronicled the departure of troops up to last Sunday, the 21st, on which day, for the first time since the Revolution, the Sunday was devoted to the dispatch of troops by sea and land for the seat of war.

Instead of the usual quiet of the Sabbath, the streets were thronged with crowds of anxious persons, waiting to give their God-speed to the brave fellows who, at the call of duty, left the comforts and ties of home to prove their devotion to the flag of their country.

Through streets all ablaze with flags, lined with enthusiastic citizens and thunderous with cheers and vivas, the Seventy-first, Twelfth and Sixth Regiments of the New York State Militia marched to the transports which were to convey them to Washington as expeditiously as possible. Vessels laded with United States troops started at the same time with apparently the same destination. Every militia regiment turned out with overflowing ranks, and hundreds of recruits were obliged to be refused.

On Sunday morning, at half-past six, the men of the Seventy-first Regiment began to assemble at their armory, and continued to do so till half-past nine, the hour appointed for their departure. At that hour the drums sounded, and the companies began to form to start for the rendezvous in Bond street. Broadway greeted them with hearty cheers as they passed.

At last the procession started, and, with occasional stoppages, marched to Pier No. 4, North River, through Broadway, Cortlandt and West streets. The crowd above Canal street was immense. People choked every window, and piled upon the stoops, balconies and roofs of the houses, which flashed with a bright foliage of flags. At every corner engines were stationed loaded with men and bells ringing. The ladies waved their handkerchiefs and flags till the whole street seemed in a flutter.

From St. Paul's and Trinity the national flag was displayed. The embarkation of the soldiers upon the E. R. Cuyler was well effected, and at three o'clock the gallant Seventy-first started for the war. The regiment numbered nearly 1,000 men, and the recruits about 700. It is under the command of Col. Vosburgh.

The Sixth Regiment.

About six o'clock the members of this excellent regiment began to muster at their headquarters, in Centre Market, and at nine o'clock they were all assembled. They then started on their march, and seldom has a finer sight been seen than presented itself when they entered Broadway. The street seemed one living mass of sympathising and admiring friends. The display in Canal street was fully equal to that in Broadway, when the regiment turned into this less important city artery. And at the foot of Canal street the crowd assembled to witness the embarkation of the military was the greatest, probably, that were ever packed into the same space on the Island of Manhattan. Many were the scenes that occurred here. Solemnly and patriotically interesting they were. Men rushed forward to grasp the hands of their departing sons and brothers, and the most touching of all tears—a soldier's—were shed in many instances. Ladies tried in vain to even catch a glimpse of their husbands, fathers, brothers or beaux, but were only rewarded by the glimmering of bristling and terrible steel. Some would occasionally remark, "These are dreadful times," "Our poor country," "How few of these will return," &c., while others, whose reflection took a different turn, would exclaim, "Don't bring back that flag with one star dimmed! Take the clouds from our stars and let them light us again!" Now and then the movements and motley aspect of the raw recruits would create a laugh, which was always followed by a cheer, or a cheer which was always followed by a laugh and such an exclamation as "They'll know the use of a musket before they come back!" Some of the regiment were armed with revolvers, and some had the sword bayonet. Frequently did the crowd exclaim "Remember Sumpter!" "Remember Baltimore!" &c., and thus went the gallant Sixth, with Col. Pinckney at their head, to defend the Union.

The Twelfth Regiment.

The general orders provided that the regimental line should be formed on Union square, at nine o'clock on Sunday morning, previous to their departure for Washington. At seven o'clock the different companies composing the regiment began to assemble at their armories, some at their headquarters in Broadway, some at the Mercer House and some at Jefferson Market. At each of these places the scene presented was one of activity and bustle, increasing every moment, until one company after another marched away to join the rest of the regiment. The regular members were mostly prepared at the shortest notice for the journey. Some of the recruits had made their arrangements on the previous evening, but Sunday morning found many still unprepared, and the additional arms from the State did not arrive until midnight, so that some delay was occasioned in the departure on that account.

The Twelfth had eight companies in all, some new ones having been organised during the last few days. Each company numbers about a hundred men, besides which there was a corps of light artillery, composed of forty men, with howitzers; twenty one drummers in Zouave costume, a band of twenty-five pieces, together with the field staff and line and non-commissioned officers. The regular members of the regiment wore their usual uniform and felt hats, with fatigue caps slung, and many were provided with revolvers in addition to their muskets. The volunteers also wore felt hats and were furnished with blankets. New uniforms are now being manufactured for the regiment, and will be forwarded from this city after the troops shall have arrived at Washington. This new uniform is styled the Chasseur d'Afrique, is something like the Zouave costume, and will also be provided for the volunteers, as well as for the regular members of the regiment.

It was nearly eleven o'clock before the first company which had arrived had taken up its position on the west side, where the regimental line was formed, and before this a company of the Lightning Zouaves, under the command of Capt. Graham, had arrived, and were much admired for their soldierly appearance and admirable training. These were the same who escorted the Seventh to Jersey City, and they now tendered a similar compliment to the noble Twelfth. It is needless to say that as the companies came upon the ground they were greeted with true American heartiness. At one o'clock the line was formed, the band struck up a patriotic air, and, with the Old Guard, under the command of Mr. Vultee, and the New York Zouaves, the regiment proceeded to Canal street, to embark on board the Baltic. Col. Butterfield rode at their head on a splendid charger. It was not till five o'clock, however, that the Baltic got under weigh, which she did amidst the most enthusiastic cheers of the people.

The Sixty-ninth Regiment.

An immense turnout of our Irish citizens on Tuesday showed to the brave Sixty-ninth that they were regarded as the representative corps of the Green Isle. Never has the female element of New York been more plentiful, and their cheerful faces (now and then dimmed with the passing cloud of a thought that the noble stalwart fellows, now marching to the inspiring national airs of their old land and their adopted one, might return no more), gave grace and beauty to the scene.

At nine o'clock the regiment marched from their armory in Prince street to Great Jones street, which was their starting place. The troops looked well, and in excellent spirits. At a quarter past three the order to fall in was given, and the regiment moved on, escorted by several fire companies and civic societies. Colonel Corcoran marched at the head of his gallant fellows, one and all of whom looked true soldiers.

As the Sixty-ninth were marching down Broadway they halted in front of the Astor House, and while there the heart of one of the recruits, a fine-looking fellow, was besieged by the lamentations of his wife and children, who were on the sidewalk. The poor fellow could not stand it, and rushed from the ranks. His companions were disarming him in the street, when an elderly and very respectable-looking gentleman stepped out of the crowd of spectators, seized the abandoned musket and offered to take the vacant place. The offer, so prompt and impulsive on the part of the old man, elicited cheers from the crowd, but it was not accepted, doubtless on account of the age of him who made the patriotic proffer.

On resuming the march the procession passed down Broadway to Cortlandt street, where they were most heartily received by the merchants and clerks in the neighborhood. All along West street the enthusiasm of the people was the same, and as the regiment passed on board the James Adger, at pier No. 4, the scene of excitement and confusion beggared description. Some delay was experienced in embarking the men in consequence of the jam, but by half-past five o'clock the troops were fairly stowed away, and preparations were made for starting.

The Eighth Regiment.

This gallant body of men left in the Alabama and Montgomery on the 23d, amid the cheers of the public and the tears of their relatives. They numbered 1,001 men. They assembled at their armory over Centre Market at one o'clock, but were detained several hours for equipments. Our space will not allow of a more extended account.

The Thirteenth Regiment.

The Thirteenth Regiment finally embarked for the seat of war on the 23d, amid the most intense enthusiasm of the people of Brooklyn. Long before eight o'clock the vicinity of the armory was thronged with thousands, anxious to show their attachment to the good cause. After the necessary details were arranged the companies marched out, and formed in line on Cranberry street. This was at three o'clock. As the gallant fellows marched along the band struck up "The Girl I Left Behind Me." The troops were then embarked on board the Marion, which was anchored in the North River. Colonel Abel Smith leads these brave men.

Ellsworth Zouaves.

The Fire Zouaves, under command of Colonel Ellsworth, mustering over eleven hundred strong, embarked on board the Baltic on Monday, amid a most enthusiastic ovation. Chosen from so popular a corps as the Firemen of New York, they could not fail to arouse public sympathy to a large extent. As it was generally known that three separate stand of colors would be presented to them—one at their barracks, another by Mrs. Astor, and the third at the Astor House by Mr. C. Stetson—an immense crowd attended every movement of this gallant regiment. The first flag was presented by Mr. Wickham, on behalf of the Fire Department and Common Council, which Colonel Ellsworth acknowledged in a soldierlike speech. The Hon. J. A. Dix then, on behalf of Mrs. Augusta Astor, presented them with another stand of colors, with a very handsome letter from the fair donor. The regiment then marched through Bond street, Bowery, Chatham street, to the Astor House, where Mr. C. Stetson presented them with a third flag, in the name of the ladies of the House. After a short soldier's response from the Colonel, the regiment with their noble escort marched to Canal street, where they embarked on board the Baltic. They were then drawn up, and addressed by Hon. Cassius M. Clay in a characteristic speech. The Baltic then steamed down the river on her way to Annapolis. The regiment were escorted by over 6,000 of the firemen of New York.

The Marine Artillery of Rhode Island.

The martial spirit of Rhode Island and its devotion to the Union are shown to the world in its prompt reply to the President's call for troops and its lavish gifts of money to aid the cause. One full regiment is already at Washington, besides the troop of artillery whose embarkation we illustrate this week. The people of Rhode Island greeted the troops with the warmest enthusiasm, and the passage of the various companies through the State was a series of ovations. The inhabitants of Providence welcomed the soldiers with the most hearty demonstrations, and thousands assembled to honor their departure and to give them a parting cheer as the steamer Empire City bore them on their way to New York.

The Rhode Island Marine Artillery number 130 men, with 110 horses and eight pieces of heavy artillery. The following is a list of the officers: Commanding officer, Colonel Tomkins; Lieutenant-Colonel, George C. Harkness; Captain, Benjamin F. Remington; Lieutenant, A. M. Tower; Lieutenant, Henry B. Brastow; Surgeon, Nathaniel Millar. This company is now in Washington.

WAR NEWS IN THE NORTH, EAST AND WEST.

ILLINOIS FOR THE UNION.—"Excitement high. All Illinois will turn out to a man if necessary to put down the rebellion. A large company went through here on the Illinois Central Railroad with cannon, muskets, &c. Two companies went to Springfield from near here to get armed and equipped. We are for the Union, not one Secessionist in Illinois. There was a call on this State for four thousand men, and there is already twenty thousand offered, and if necessary they can furnish fifty thousand without the least trouble. Hurrah for the red, white and blue!"

ENCAMPMENT AT ALTON.—In view of events at St. Louis, a regiment was sent from Springfield to occupy Alton.

A bill for a loan of $3 000,000 for war purposes, and another to send 10,000 men into camp to answer the next call of the Government, are before the Legislature. Both bills will probably pass.

MICHIGAN, ADRIAN.—At a special meeting of the Common Council, $2,500 were appropriated to equip and outfit volunteers enlisting. The amount was previously raised by private subscriptions for the same purpose.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, CONCORD.—Our City Council has appropriated $10,000 to aid the volunteers from this city.

At Great Falls the churches were closed, and a mass religious meeting was held in Market square.

The Granite State Guard is under orders for the war. Each member has been presented with a revolver, bowie-knife and blanket. The citizens have subscribed over $10,000 in aid of volunteers.

PENNSYLVANIA, PHILADELPHIA.—The war fever, strong for the Union, is very high here, and the Secessionists do not have a friend who has the daring to avow himself. A great disposition is evinced to march upon Baltimore, and force a passage through, but the authorities defer to the Government at Washington. Like our own city, Philadelphia more resembles a camp than a town. Everywhere is heard the measured tramp of armed men and the roll of the drum. The Stars and Stripes floats everywhere.

There was a requisition at the General Government on the 28th ultimo, through the Postmaster, for twenty-one more regiments, twenty of infantry and one of cavalry. This makes the total of Pennsylvania thirty-eight regiments, a total of 29,500 men. Applications for filling all this contingent are already filed in the Adjutant-General's office, some from regiments, which leaves a chance for Philadelphians. The Governor will also recommend in his message the requiring of 10,000 men to be brought out, encamped, drilled and armed, beyond the present requisition of the general Government, in order to form a reserve, to be marched anywhere required, to fill up the losses occasioned by battle or disease. Thus, Pennsylvania will have 40,000 altogether in the field.

KENTUCKY.—Last week Governor Magoffin asked the banks for a loan of four per cent. upon their capital for State purposes. The bank Presidents, after consulting together, offered to let him have the money on condition that it was to be used in putting the State into a position of armed neutrality. It is doubtful whether the Legislature will meet in May, and it is said that Kentucky will send members to the extra Session called by President Lincoln to meet in Washington on the 4th of July.

NEW YORK, ALBANY.—In connection with the departure of the Twenty-fifth Regiment from Albany, there are many noble traits which show that merchants on such occasions can be very unbusinesslike. Some days ago one of the Twenty-fifth purchased from Messrs. Monteath & Co. a bill of goods amounting to $684. The call upon his regiment was made at an early hour on Thursday. His first business was to go to the firm, saying, "I am ordered to fight for my country; the goods you sold me last Wednesday have been delivered at my store. I must leave Albany to go fight my country's battles. I may return, or I may not. You will please send to my place of business and get the goods, as yet untouched." The noble reply was, "Go, save your country. If you return and are able to pay, well and good; if not, the firm of Monteath & Badgley will have no claims against you!" Another evidence of the proper spirit is that of the action of Messrs. A. McClure & Co., towards John Niblock. Being suddenly ordered away, he went to the firm and said, "I am going to fight for my country; my wife will conduct my business in my absence; will you extend the same accommodation to her that you have to me?" The ready reply was, "Most certainly; anything that your lady wants from this establishment she can have on credit until the end of the war. If you return, the obligation to us will be transferred to you. Should you fall, we shall have no claim against your widow. Further, we agree, in case of a necessity, to provide for your family during your absence!" It is such "God bless you" greetings, and "we will take care of those left behind," that has made light the heart of many an one that would otherwise have been laden with despondency. All honor to the glorious merchants!

PATRIOTIC MATTERS.—A matronly lady, accompanied by her son, a fine youth of about nineteen years, entered a gun store on Broadway, on Saturday, and purchased a full outfit for him. Selecting the best weapons and other articles for a soldier's use, that could be found in the store, she paid the bill, remarking, with evident emotion, "This, my son, is all that I can do. I have given you up to serve your country, and may God go with you—it is all a mother can do." The incident attracted considerable attention, and tearful eyes followed this patriotic mother and her son, as they departed from the place.

GENEROUS AID FROM CITIZENS.—Dr. Norval, Surgeon of the Seventy-ninth regiment, has received from Messrs. Ward, Cross & Co., wholesale druggists, No. 130 William street, the sum of $1,300; also, $100 from Brodie's cloak and mantilla store, Canal street, and $100 each from Mr. Brown, tailor, No. 130 Bleecker street, and Mr. McLean, No 39 Park place. These sums are intended for aid to the gallant Scotchmen who march to the preservation of the Union.

The late Commander-in-Chief of the United States Mediterranean Squadron, Captain D. N. Ingraham, who is now in command of the Pensacola Navy Yard, has with him his son, Henry Laurens Ingraham, Captain of the Marine corps; and another son, Midshipman John H. Ingraham, who has just been detached from here and ordered to report to Commodore Rousseau, at New Orleans, for active service.

Seventy-one thousand volunteers have offered their services to Governor Dennison, of Ohio, to fill the thirteen regiments required.

From Annapolis we learn that the steamers Monticello, Coatzacoalcos and others are in the harbor. Fortifications commanding the railroad and country some two miles from Annapolis were thrown up. Annapolis was made a military department. It was reported that if any troops advanced from Richmond towards the capital Western troops would invade Virginia.

A WOMAN TO BE HONORED.—It will be remembered that Lieut. Abner Smead, of the First Artillery, was sent, a few weeks since, by Lieut. Slemmer, to Washington, to apprise the Government of the absolute necessity of supplies and reinforcements at Fort Pickens. Forgetful of all obligations of honor and duty, Lieut. Smead took Montgomery in his way northward, and having submitted his despatches to the perusal of the rebel authorities, proceeded to Washington, whither the news of his treason having anticipated him, he was not shot, as he deserved to be, but simply struck from the roll of the army. The wife and children of Lieut. Smead, with the families of several officers on duty in the South, were at Fortress Monroe. The lieutenant hastened from Washington to obtain his family and remove them southward, but his movements were not so rapid but that his crime had been reported before him. When, therefore, he presented himself at the fort, he was refused admission, the officer on duty declining "to admit a traitor" within a Federal post; the only favor conceded being that he might have an interview with Mrs. Smead without the walls. That interview the unhappy miscreant is not likely to forget. Attended by a few female friends, one of whom furnished the account which we give of the scene, the lady met her husband, and, in terms of scorching eloquence, reproached him with his shame.

"Go home with you!" she exclaimed. "Never! Our paths in this world are hereafter separate. I disown you. A coward and traitor—you are no husband of mine. Henceforth you are to me as if dead. As long as I live I shall wear mourning and be as a widow; and rest assured I shall educate our children to execrate and despise your memory as that of a recreant and traitor!"

Turning with these words, the noble and patriotic woman re-entered the fort, and gave way to her very natural feelings. We may add that Mrs. Smead is, like her discarded husband, a native of Georgia, and that while the latter went Southward to obtain the reward of his treason, the former, with her children, has come North, passing through this city on Tuesday, and is now at Morristown, N. J.

EDWARD EVERETT ON THE UNION.—At a patriotic meeting in Chelsea, Mass., on Saturday, a flag was raised, when Edward Everett said: "We set up this standard, not as a matter of display, but as an expression indicative that in the mighty struggle which has been forced upon us, we are of one heart and one mind; that the Government of the country must be sustained. All former differences of opinion are swept away. We forget that we have ever been partisans; we remember only that we are Americans." The volunteer movement throughout the State is general.

THE WAR NEWS FROM THE SOUTH.

VIRGINIA.—Advices from Richmond are very interesting. Governor Letcher has seized all light-draft vessels and steamers for privateering purposes. The regular liners Yorktown and Jamestown are now being fitted with privateering armaments, and are to be manned very fully. The privateering enlistment is very active, and, no doubt, by a week hence thirty vessels will be sent out from Richmond alone. When these steamers were seized, our flag was hauled down and the Secession flag hoisted and saluted.

There are between 4,000 and 5,000 troops in Richmond, of whom 2,000 are South Carolinians. All are eager for Washington, which they expect to have in a week. The surrender of Fort Sumpter intoxicates them, and they feel as though they were omnipotent. Troops are being daily sent to Harper's Ferry and Alexandria. Their belief is that there are but 5 000 troops at Washington, that Maryland has blocked future transportation, and that demoralization exists at the North. If Washington is attacked it will be by bombardment.

General Thomas J. Green, of North Carolina, was serenaded at Richmond on the 25th inst. He said he came to offer 30,000 men from North Carolina, fully armed, equipped and provisioned for the defence of the South.

On Thursday last ex-Secretary Floyd had a conference with Governor Letcher on the course best to pursue in the present emergency. Mr. Floyd has raised a brigade of 1,500 men in south-western Virginia, who are armed and equipped. Hundreds of troops from Petersburg, South Carolina and Georgia are daily coming northward on railroads in Virginia.

It would seem from the admissions made by several Richmond papers that Governor Letcher has made a conditional Treaty with Jefferson Davis, which will link the fortunes of the Old Dominion with the Confederate States, and place her army, for offensive or defensive purposes, under the immediate control of the Southern Confederacy, even should the popular vote, which is appointed for the 23d of May, be against Secession.

GEORGIA, SAVANNAH.—There is no business doing, war being the only thought. Land batteries are being thrown up at Tybee, the Secessionists evidently expecting an attack from the sea. All that can leave are flying as though for their lives.

Commissions for privateers are being prepared, and will be issued at the first convening of the Southern Congress on the 29th instant. It is confidently known that no less than three vessels are prepared, and now waiting in the port of Savannah for letters of marque and reprisal, which they will receive in a few days. Their bonds, &c., are now ready to be handed in. Northern shipping on this coast must now be on the alert, as skilful men are waiting to take command of these pirate cruisers, among whose crews will be found many rebel Yankees. Never did excitement so rage in Savannah. Recruits are fast pouring in from every county in the State, ready, as they say, to sacrifice their lives for a united and independent South. For three days before our departure companies were preparing for a quick exit to join their brother rebels in the Border States. The Union men are completely overawed; and, to every appearance, all seem to stand up as one man, while one sentiment pervades the entire South—"Down with the Lincoln Government, and death to all those who shall attempt in any way to support it."

WARLIKE PREPARATIONS AT SAVANNAH.—The Savannah newspapers state that the Governor has filled the requisition of the Confederate Government for one thousand volunteers, and they are now arriving at the rate of two companies per day. At the forts and barracks near the city are six hundred regulars, as vigorous and effective men as are to be found anywhere, and besides these about fifteen hundred volunteers belonging to the various city companies, all under thorough drill. Of ordnance there has been received a large supply of the heaviest and most effective character, all of which is now being placed in position. Five thousand additional troops could be concentrated at Savannah on a notice of twenty-four hours.

SOUTH CAROLINA, CHARLESTON.—The State authorities have seized the Nashville, and the Florida had a narrow escape. She, however, cleverly managed to get out, and arrived in New York on the 23d. The steamer Isabel had been converted into a vessel of war. The news of the attack on the Massachusetts regiment was hailed with great rejoicings. It arrived there in a very exaggerated shape. All trade is suspended, and the utmost apprehension as to the future reigns in every breast. The leading Secessionists are highly dissatisfied at the comparatively little influence South Carolina has in the Confederated Government.

CHALLENGE TO THE SOLDIERS OF MASSACHUSETTS.

From the Boston Traveller, April 27th.

The following document was received at this office by mail, this morning. The envelope bore the postmark of Charleston, S. C., and we therefore have no doubt that it is genuine:

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 10, 1861.

To the Editors of the Boston Traveller:

GENTLEMEN: On behalf of the South Carolina Volunteers, I am deputed to request Gov. Andrew, of Massachusetts, through you, that the military contingent of your State be sent to South Carolina. In making this request, I assure you I but express the wish of every man, woman and child in our State. We number about ten thousand men, well armed and accoutred, and anxious for a fight, and cordially invite any number from your section to give us a meeting. Do not, however, send them in the fleet that appeared off Charleston harbor during the bombardment of Fort Sumpter, for fear their timidity will interfere with their landing. Send all Massachusetts men—none from Pennsylvania, for the regiment of that State funked at Cerro Gordo; nor from New York, for at Churubusco (although they claimed and received the right from the Palmetto regiment), at the first fire the gallant New Yorkers fell back, and hid behind a barn; nor from Indiana—for at Palo Alto the nimble regiment from that State fled in inglorious confusion. Send your Sumners, your Wilsons, your Burlingames, and a host of similar notables, and we pledge our honors, our lives, and all that we hold sacred, that none others but the Palmetto boys shall interfere with them. We want them exclusively for our own use.

This request is made in good faith, and on signifying your acceptance of our offer, every arrangement will be made to give you a safe passport to our shores.

ON BEHALF OF THE S. C. VOLUNTEERS.

MARYLAND, BALTIMORE.—The state of affairs in this unhappy city is very gloomy. It is entirely under mob law, and no one's life or property is secure. All are forced to declare Secession opinions, and everything foreshadows a reign of terror. Provisions are not allowed to be sold to the Government, so that Washington is in a very unpleasant position. The energy of our citizens will soon, however, put these matters right. There had been an interview between Mayor Brown, of Baltimore, and President Lincoln on the state of affairs, and as to the passage of troops through that city. The common report was that the President had promised not to send any troops through the city, but it was not credited. Governor Hicks had written a letter to the President, in which he actually proposed to appoint Lord Lyons, the British Ambassador, as mediator. Mr. Seward had replied, indignantly declining to leave our domestic affairs to the intervention of any foreign power—and certainly not to a European monarchy.

It would seem as though the second sober thought of the multitude had produced a reaction in favor of the Union, for Governor Hicks has issued a proclamation in which everything is left to the people. There is no doubt that the full report of the feeling in New York, as well as the other Northern States, has had a strong effect upon the masses. The distorted reports of certain papers which have now been terrified into Unionism have greatly led the South into their present position, and it is very probable, when the real state of the case is made manifest, many who are now Secessionists will perceive their error, and retrace their steps. The fact that every Northern State has nearly doubled its quota of troops and offered unlimited funds to the Government, cannot fail to have a very marked effect upon the most warlike of the fire-eaters.

A Union meeting had been held in East Baltimore. Nearly 2,000 persons were assembled. Great enthusiasm was expressed for the Union, and resolutions to that effect were passed.

The Legislature of Maryland assembled at Frederick on the 29th, and resolved by a vote of 15 to 53 not to call a Convention. This is equivalent to deciding against Secession.

FLORIDA—FORT PICKENS SAFE.—We find the following in the Warrington correspondence of the Charleston Mercury, April 20th: "Another war steamer, 'a leviathan of the deep,' arrived on the night of the 16th. Her name is said to be the Atlantic. The fleet now numbers seven vessels. There is no blockade yet, but no vessels can be chartered in Mobile or New Orleans for this port. The owners will not take the risk except for an enormous premium. There are now between six and seven thousand troops here. We shall have a long siege here, probably of six months duration. The enemy have the advantage of us. They have more guns, and the advantage of position. They have command of the sea, and can reinforce and supply themselves without hindrance. We are in a barren country, without railroad or water communication. It will be very laborious and expensive to feed the army thus circumstanced." This is the language of despair.

MISSOURI.—There is a great division of opinion in this State. Several of the leading journals express their disapproval of Mr. Lincoln's coercing the South, while all blame the attack on Fort Sumpter. There is a great fear that the South, having forced the issue thus upon the North, slavery will disappear in the struggle, and many of the planters be totally ruined. Several influential men recommend an armed neutrality, while others go in for bargaining with the Government that if Missouri remains true to the Union the peculiar institution shall be protected and preserved.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Judge Betts has called the Grand Jury together to take steps for the prevention of treason. He stated in an able charge what treason consisted in and that it required two witnesses, or a man's own confession to convict. We copy the most important sentence in his address: "It is most probable that complaints will be laid before you under this branch and definition of the crime. Within it will be included acts of building, manning or any way fitting out or victualling vessels to aid the hostilities of our enemies; sending provisions, arms or other supplies to them, raising funds or obtaining credit for their service, indeed, every traitorous purpose, manifested by acts, committed in this district by persons owing allegiance to the country, will be acts of treason. It is not necessary that the accused should have raised or created war by his own acts, he levies war by acting with those who have set it on foot, or by seizing or holding forts, or like acts of hostile aggression. The kindred crime of misprision of treason is this. If any person owing allegiance to the Government has knowledge of acts of treason committed by others within the jurisdiction of the Court, and does not make it known to the President of the United States, or one of the Judges of the United States, or the Governor of the State, or a judge or magistrate thereof, he becomes guilty of misprision of treason, and subject to seven years' imprisonment and a fine of $1,000 for the offence, and it is the duty of the Grand Jury to present for trial therefor such offender, whatever may be their individual connection or relationship with the offender."

The Croton Department received information on Wednesday morning, the 24th, that various persons in sympathy with the South had concocted a scheme to make a break in the Croton Aqueduct, with a view to deprive the city of water. The Department immediately took measures to protect the Aqueduct; and notified the Division Inspectors to use all vigilance for the safety of the work.

The Ladies of Jersey City held a meeting on the 24th, at the Metropolitan Hall, to make arrangements for the preparations of lint, bandages and other necessaries. Mrs. Van Voorst, the Mayor's wife, presided. A similar meeting is in course of organization in Hoboken.

Dr. Sabo was committed last week by Com. Betts, charged with treason, in attempting to enlist sailors for the navy of the Secessionists. Dr. Sabo was informed against by a printer, who had been employed to print off forms of enlistment similar to those used in the United States service, but he was honorably acquitted. Another man named Daniel Fish, a dealer in firearms, was also taken into custody and committed to the Tombs, charged with supplying the Southern States with arms.

A sailor, named Peter Herman, died on the 24th in the New York Hospital, from injuries received on the 17th ult., on board the ship Jeremiah Thompson, then lying in the stream. Coroner Jackman held an inquest in the case, when it appeared that while deceased and John Stanley, third mate of the vessel, were aloft, he in some way offended Stanley, who threw him backward to the deck, causing him to receive injuries which proved fatal. A verdict to this effect was rendered by the jury, and a warrant for the arrest of Stanley was issued, but he is believed to have left the city. The brutality which petty officers treat the sailors with is perfectly atrocious. Not a week passes but we have to chronicle a murder by one of these sea monsters.

A most amusing blunder was made at Stony Brook, L. I., on Thursday, the 25th April. A schooner, built by Davy Hayes, was then and there to be launched. Now this schooner belongs to seven owners, all rabid abolitionists. Her name was to be the Luna, perhaps in compliment to the Luna-tics. The captain, upon whom was conferred the honor of naming the vessel, concluded to present her with a set of colors. He therefore ordered a large and handsome flag of his own designing, with a crescent in the upper corner and seven stars in a circle, one star for each owner; the flag was kept out of sight until a few minutes before the launch, when to the consternation of all up went the Secession flag, innocently, of course, on the part of the captain; the furore created may better be imagined than described. An explanation was demanded and given, and the flag condemned to be destroyed and the Stars and Stripes substituted.

Lieutenant Jenifer, a Marylander by birth, deserted from Carlisle Barracks on the 21st. He was captured in York county and brought to Carlisle.

The Wilmington (Md.) State Journal says that the Northern and Western sections are strongly in favor of the Union. It is even regaining its ascendancy in Baltimore, as evidenced by the reappearance of the Stars and Stripes over many of the houses in that city.

The enlistment of volunteers in Missouri has progressed rapidly during the last two days, and there [illegible] now about 2,500 men in the arsenal grounds, at St. Louis, subject to the order[illegible] of the Secretary of War. It is thought that the entire four regiments asked [illegible]for by the President will be raised in a single county, notwithstanding the re[illegible]fusal of Governor Jackson to comply with the requisition. A company of one hundred Germans, from St. Genevieve, has offered its services. F. P. Blair has been elected and accepted the Colonelcy of the First Regiment.

The Cleveland Herald, of the 20th, give[illegible] an account of an infamous attempt to destroy a railroad train, with volunteers on board. Fortunately the train against which this dastardly outrage was aimed had passed about twenty minutes before by another route. One man only was killed by the bridge falling. The accident occurred west of Steubenville.

Mr. Parker was arrested last week, at Harrisburg, charged with uttering treason at Pittsburg a few days previous. He proved himself to be a good Union man and was released. These attacks upon the rights of free speech should be discountenanced.

Lieutenant Brown, of the Niagara, just arrived from Japan, having expressed Secession sentiments, was arrested at Boston on the 25th of April, by an order from Governor Andrews. Despite the strong Union sentiment of the Bostonians, this extreme measure is much condemned. District-Attorney Woodbury had refused to take any steps in the matter, whereupon the ultraists applied to the Governor, who granted the warrant. As a set off to this, the State authorities of Virginia arrested General Harney on his way from Wheeling to Washington.

Ex-Governor Houston spoke at Galveston on Friday, emphatically denying that he had communicated with the Federal Government. He also denied that he claimed to be still the Governor of Texas. He said he had retired to private life, and would never leave it except for the defence of his country.

It is stated that there are at the Springfield Armory ninety thousand stand of efficient arms, and that there are in the neighborhood, also in possession of the Government, not less than ten thousand in addition to those in immediate demand. Thus we have within one day's railroad transportation arms for one hundred thousand men. Floyd, with all his fine administrative talent as a robber, did not leave the North wholly defenceless.

A company of Secessionists, one hundred and thirteen strong, left Cynthiana, Ky., on Monday, to join the Confederate army. When the train reached Frankfort they were ordered to display their flag, which they did by extending a Secession flag from the car windows. Stones were thrown at it, when the Lieutenant fired into the crowd. The cars were immediately attacked by the citizens, and paving stones rained in on them promiscuously. They finally got away with but little injury. Great excitement prevailed, and threats were made to tear up the track. The citizens declare that no more Secession troops shall pass through that place.

The Philadelphia police seized on the 22d a box containing two splendid uniforms, with accoutrements complete. It was discovered by a bill in the case that these were intended for Jeff. Davis and Beauregard.

As a proof of how little the South knows of what is going on in the North, the Mobile Weekly Advertiser contains a letter from a lady, dated New York, stating that five steamers had sailed from New York with two thousand five hundred men, to retake Fort Pickens. Of course the letter must have been manufactured for the occasion.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher preached last Sunday in Plymouth Church on the war. He was for vigorous measures, and recommended that the troops should march through Baltimore. He was, however, for a compromise, but it was to be a fair one, and not all on one side. It was to make the North as independent in the South, as the South was in the North. A man should be as free of speech in Charleston as he was in New York. At times the applause was very great.

RETURN OF THE NIAGARA FROM JAPAN—HER ARRIVAL IN BOSTON.

The Niagara, which sailed last year from New York to convey home the Japanese Embassy, has returned, and is now in Boston. Her officers, not having had any communication with the United States since she sailed, were utterly paralyzed to find that they came back to a divided country, and to take sides in a civil war. It was a touching sight to see so many of those gallant old salts so overwhelmed by the calamity as to shed tears. They sailed from New York on the 30th of June, arrived at Porto Grande, St. Vincent's, on the 17th of July, arrived at Loando, Africa, on August 14th, and dropped anchor at Jeddo November 10th.

"Husband," said an exasperated wife, "I can't express my detestation of your conduct."

"Well, dear, I'm very glad you can't," was the cool reply.

DESTRUCTION OF GOSPORT NAVY YARD AND U. S. WAR SHIPS BY FEDERAL OFFICERS.

During several days rumors were rife in New York that the city of Norfolk was in flames, supposed to have been caused by the defence of the Navy Yard. Many doubts were cast upon these rumors and with justice, but that something serious was transpiring in that quarter was generally believed. On Tuesday, the 23d, reliable information was received by the arrival of the steam-tug Yankee, direct from Norfolk. The news is most important, nothing less than that the Federal officers have utterly destroyed the Navy Yard with all its stores and ammunitions, blown up the Dry Dock and burned and scuttled all the United States war ships in the harbor, with the exception of the Cumberland, which was safely removed. The manner of destruction was as follows:

The Yankee lay at the Navy Yard until Friday, the 19th, when the Virginia Custom House officers came over in a tug and demanded the surrender of the Yankee. Commodore McAuley, who was in command of the Navy Yard, refused to comply with this demand, saying that if they attempted to take her from the yard he would sink them where they lay. The Cumberland immediately beat to quarters, and brought her eleven-inch pivot gun which was charged with shell to bear upon their tug, and they deemed it advisable to leave forthwith.

On Saturday evening, at nine o'clock, the Pawnee arrived from Washington with two hundred volunteers and one hundred marines, besides her own crew, and at once the officers and crew of the Pawnee and Cumberland went to the Navy Yard and spiked and disabled the guns and threw the shot and small arms into the river. At ten o'clock, the marines, who had been quartered in the barracks, fired them, and came on board the Pawnee. This movement was premature, for it was the intention to fire all the buildings simultaneously. A party of officers, meantime, were going through the buildings and ships, distributing waste and turpentine, and laying a train so as to blow up the Dry Dock. They were engaged in this work until two o'clock, when the train was fired. At three o'clock, the Yankee, to the Captain of which, Charles Germain, much credit is due, came along and took the Cumberland in tow, the Pawnee taking the lead. All the vessels beat to quarters, the guns were manned, and everything was in readiness to carry out the threat of Commodore McAuley, that if a gun was fired from either shore he would level both Portsmouth and Norfolk. At this time the scene was indescribably magnificent, all the buildings being in a blaze, and explosions here and there scattering the cinders in all directions.

The Government vessels had been scuttled in the afternoon before the Pawnee arrived, to prevent their being seized by the Secessionists, who had been in arms in both Norfolk and Portsmouth, under the command of Gen. Taliaferro. Their number is estimated at some one thousand four hundred men. The scuttling was done between twelve and two o'clock on Saturday. Lest this mode of destruction should not be complete, however, trains were laid on them and the vessels were fired with the buildings.

The following are the names of the vessels which were destroyed: Pennsylvania, 74 gun-ship; steam-frigate Merrimac, 44 guns; sloop-of-war Germantown, 22 guns; sloop Plymouth, 22 guns; frigate Raritan, 45 guns; frigate Columbia, 44 guns; Delaware, 74 gun-ship, Columbus, 74 gun-ship; United States, in ordinary; brig Dolphin, 8 guns, and the powder boat.

Of these the Merrimac, Plymouth and Germantown were ready for sea, but the Pawnee made her appearance at the yard too late to save them. The Merrimac, in fact, had had steam on only a few hours previously.

The Yankee, as we have already said, left the yard with the Cumberland in tow, about three o'clock. The fleet proceeded down the river until nine o'clock, when it came to anchor within a mile of the point where wrecks were known to have been sunk for the purpose of obstructing the navigation. Boats were sent out to take soundings in order to ascertain whether some other passage than the regular channel could not be found. All efforts proved unsuccessful, so the fleet raised anchor and forced their way directly through the wrecks. The Cumberland caught one of the sunken vessels and carried it along with her, and apprehensions were at first entertained that she might be carried on to Sewell's Point, where it was supposed that the rebels had erected batteries. Meantime the Keystone State came up from Washington with marines, and by her help and that of the Yankee the Cumberland was towed into deep water and the wreck was disentangled. She then went up under the protection of the guns of Fort Monroe and came to anchor. While the vessels lay there, four men, who had been employed in the Navy Yard, succeeding in making their way down the river, and reported that they left everything in flames, and the smoke and flames could easily be seen from the Cumberland. The rebels, too, they reported were fearful of attempting to arrest the flames, because they apprehended that a train was laid to blow up the buildings.

The Yankee left on Tuesday morning for New York. She reports that the Pawnee and Keystone State had got the crew of the Pennsylvania, and the marines who occupied the barracks, on board, to carry them to Washington. Both left for the Capital at nine o'clock, where they probably arrived early this morning.

Our informant states that the value of the property destroyed was estimated at $50,000,000.

EXCITING SCENE AT TAMMANY HALL ON THE 24TH APRIL.

The Wilson Zouaves Taking the Oath of Fidelity to the Flag, and Swearing "To Go through Baltimore or Die!"

We illustrate to-day one of the most extraordinary scenes ever witnessed in our city. About seven o'clock on the evening of the 24th, the "Union Battalion of Zouaves," Colonel William Wilson, held a formal muster and roll-call at their headquarters in Tammany Hall. There were eight hundred and sixty-one men of the battalion present. The occasion was made strikingly impressive by the extraordinary proceedings which were had. The men were ranged around the hall three deep, with Colonel Wilson and the other officers in the centre of the room. The men had all clad themselves in the gray shirts and pants which had been provided for their uniform, which is completed by a common brown felt hat, brogans and leather belt. They carry a short knife, about seven inches in length, between a sort of bowie-knife and butcher-knife in shape. Many also have revolvers, of which it is intended that each shall be armed with one or two, as well as a slung shot and Minie rifle. All the men being ranged against the walls, Colonel Wilson, with a drawn sabre in one hand and the American flag in the other, stood forth, uncovered, and addressed his men amidst deafening cheers.

After a short adjuration to the flag, for which he declared his devotion, he called upon all to kneel and swear with him. Waving the banner and flourishing his sabre, he knelt on one knee. All present knelt with him and repeated the oath which he put to them to support the flag, and never flinch from its path through blood or death. He said he would lead them through Baltimore, and they would march through it or die, at which they all arose with a tremendous yell, flung up their hats and brandished their glittering knives amidst prolonged and frantic cheers. He then denounced death to the Baltimore traitor Secessionists and Plug Uglies, and said they would leave a monument of their bones in the streets of Baltimore. Amid yells of "Death to the Plug Uglies!" he illustrated with his sword how they should hew their way, and said, though he should be the first man slain, he had but one thing to ask, which was—that each of his followers should secure his man and avenge his blood. That they should do this, he again called upon them to swear, and marching round the hall, holding up the flag and the sword, and accompanied by two officers, the one on his right bearing a banner inscribed:

"THE UNION BATTALION OF ZOUAVES.

DEATH TO SECESSIONISTS!"

The other officer on his left holding up, in both hands, a bowie-knife and revolver. Wilson shouted to them to swear, and they responded with shouts of "Blood! blood! blood!" "We swear," &c.

The band then struck in with the "Star Spangled Banner," which they all sang in chorus, as well as also "Dixie's Land," altered to read, with a few variations,

"I wish I was in Baltimore, Away," &c.

The following is a laughable blunder, made by a shorthand writer in taking the evidence given before a parliamentary committee: A highly respectable witness was asked, "Is your father a partner in the Low Moor Works?" and he gave an answer in the affirmative. He must however, have been slightly annoyed in reading the report of the evidence to find the question and answer permanently recorded in the following form: "Is your father a pauper in the Low Moor Workhouse?" "Yes."

FOREIGN FLOATINGS CAUGHT BY THE WAY.

Turkish Baths.—In the public establishments which are now spreading throughout the three kingdoms, but especially in Ireland, the plan of the old Roman bath is more strictly followed. There is the Tepidarium, the Sudatarium (heated to a temperature of 120), and the Caldarium, in which the heat is exalted to 160 degrees. Next to this is the Lavitarium, in which the washing and shampooing process is carried on. There are such institutions already established in the Edgeware Road, in Charlotte street, Pimlico, in Golden square, and other parts of London; and such is the growing rage for these baths, that a company has been started, with a capital of $500,000, for the erection of a series of public Roman baths worthy of that great city. There is nothing new under the sun. The Turkish bath, which Mr. Urquhart has introduced to the West, is a reminiscence of the old Roman bath of the Lower Empire.

A very curious-looking craft made her appearance in the Seine the other morning—an egg-shaped mass, with one end rather sharp. It appeared about forty feet long, and stood some ten feet out of the water, was painted white, and had no funnel. This quiet-looking article turned out to be a model gun boat, built of wrought-iron and steel, and a formidable and apparently invulnerable boat it seemed.

Lord Oxford used to relate that a dispute once arose in his presence, in the way of raillery, between the late Earl Temple and the first Lord Lyttleton, on the comparative antiquity of their families. Lord Lyttleton concluded that the name of Grenville was originally Green Field, Earl Temple insisted that it was derived from Grand Ville. "Well, then," said Lord Lyttleton, "if you will have it so, my family may boast of the higher antiquity, for Little Towns were certainly made before Great Cities, but if you will be content with the more humble derivation, I will give up the point, for Green Fields were certainly more ancient than either."

Clutterbuck's story of the old lady (his aunt) is excellent. Being very nervous, she told Sir Walter Farquhar she thought Bath would do her good. "It's very odd," said Sir Walter, "but that's the very thing I was going to recommend to you. I will write the particulars of your case to a very clever man there, in whose hands you will be well taken care of." The old lady, furnished with the letter, set off, and on arriving at Newbury, feeling, as usual, very nervous, she said to her confidant, "Long as Sir Walter has attended me he has never explained to me what ails me. I have a great mind to open his letter, and see what he has stated of my case to the Bath physician." In vain her friend represented to her the breach of confidence this would be. She opened the letter, and read, "Dear Davis—Keep the old lady three weeks, and send her back again."

When Voltaire was on his deathbed many visitors called, all of whom were denied entrance to his chamber. Amongst them was a Rev. M. Chapeau, who came to offer the consolations of the church. When his name was announced by the servant, Voltaire said, "I came into the world bareheaded, and I shall leave it without a chapeau!"

An Extraordinary Medical Case in France.—A M. Feuillet was travelling in a steamboat at the time when an explosion took place. M. Feuillet was transfixed by an iron spit seven feet long. The spit went in at the abdomen and passed out at the back, so that there was three feet of the spit in front and three feet of the spit behind. M. Feuillet was conveyed to the nearest hotel. His position required all the resources of art. A surgeon was accordingly sent for, who, on arriving, felt the patient's pulse, and asked him where he was suffering?

"In the abdomen," replied the wounded man.

"Indeed! How did it happen to you?"

The patient thereupon detailed the sad incident of his being transfixed. The surgeon shook his head, and resumed

"Are they subject to this accident, sir, in your family?"

"No," replied the patient, "not that I know. My father and mother are very old people, and have never been spitted. So with regard to my brothers and sisters and my uncles and aunts."

"Very well, sir. I require that information in order to give a correct prognosis. You experience, I suppose, considerable difficulty in lying on your back?"

"Yes, sir, it is, indeed, impossible."

"It is not any easier for you to lie on your stomach?"

"I experience precisely the same difficulty."

"It must, therefore, be much easier for you to lie on your side?"

"That is the only position I can lie in."

"That will suffice, sir. It only remains to determine upon the treatment. Here the indications are very precise: either we can leave the spit, but then you will most likely die of inflammation, or we can extract it, but then it is not probable that you will survive the operation. Science, sir, has its limits, your fate is in your own hands; you must decide for either one treatment or the other."

The writer does not give the patient's decision. Perhaps, like the doctor, he would not decide, and so died to give the finish to the joke.

John Lund, late Grenadier Guards, died lately. He held the appointment for many years as Headsman at the Tower of London, whose duty was to decapitate all State Criminals. This sinecure is in the gift of the Constable, but, most likely, the situation will be abolished, as in the case of the Gentleman Yeoman Porter on the death of Mr. Murray. The last State execution took place in 1746, at the time of the Scotch Rebellion. The salary is £80 per annum, with an excellent house. Mr. Lund was only seen at the Tower when the half-yearly muster took place, and had his position on the right of the Warden, with a large bright hatchet on his shoulder.

An example of the strange working of the conscription law was given at the drawing of conscripts at Issoire, in the Puy de Dôme. The confusion arose from the name of Marie being common to both sexes in France. A girl named Marie was inscribed on the register twenty years since as a male, and a summons was served on her to draw for the conscription. Her mother attended for her, and though she gave irrefutable proofs that the Marie summoned was a female and not a male, the municipal officer declared that he was bound by the law, and that the mother must draw for her daughter. The mother put her hand into the urn, and fortunately drew a high number, which put an end to any further difficulty.

An endeavor is being made to get up a war between England and France—a battle of billiards, between Roberts, the English Wellington, and Berger, the French Napoleon of the game. This would be better than "beggar my neighbor."

The Good Old Times.—Thomas Spencer, Earl of Gloucester, was possessed of, at one time, 59 lordships, 2,600 sheep, 1,000 oxen, 1,200 cows, with their calves; 40 mares and colts, 100 draught horses, 2,000 hogs, 3,000 bullocks. In his larder, 40 tuns of wine, 600 carcases of bacon, 80 carcases of Martinmas beef, 10 tuns of cider. This "Old English Gentleman" married Constance, daughter of Edmund of Langley, Duke of York, son of Edward III.

M. Barthélemy, of the theatre at Nancy, has invented a stage that can be raised or lowered and moved in various ways by machinery. He can lift it to the height of about eight feet, or incline it in various directions without breaking its continuity. The whole stage, with four hundred people standing upon it, can be raised, by seven men, several feet in five or six minutes; and there is a plentiful provision of traps made to open entirely or partially, or turn on their own axis.

At the meeting of the Committee appointed to advise Her Majesty's Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1862, as to the period of art to be represented at the forthcoming Exhibition, the following resolutions were passed:

"1. That the Exhibition ought not to be confined to the works of living artists.

"2. That the object of the proposed Exhibition being to illustrate the progress and present condition of modern art, it be left to each country to decide under what arrangements, and within what limits, that object can, in its own case, be attained, regard being had to the amount of space that can be devoted to its productions.

"3. That as regards British art, the above object will be fully attained by confining the Exhibition to the works of artists living at any period within the century preceding the Exhibition, i.e., subsequent to the year 1762."

Two German chemists, working together in their laboratory at Heidelberg, have analysed the body of the sun! Fabulous as it may seem, this is literally true. They arrived at the result of their analysis solely by close examination of the rays of light. By this means it is ascertained, in a manner quite convincing to those who have witnessed the experiments, that the body of the sun contains large portions of iron and other metals and earths common on this globe of ours.

A remarkable discovery has been made in Germany by a physiologist—the exact cause of sea sickness, a problem which has hitherto always puzzled the medical faculty. The up and down tension of the muscles on a particular valve of the stomach while an animal is under chloroform is now shown in lectures to bring on sickness in such animals at once. The same occurs in a rough sea when a vessel heaves up and down. Some remedies, chiefly to steady the muscles, such as a particular form of bandage to be worn at sea, a combination of champagne and other remedies to drink, have been referred to as stopping sea-sickness in an instant.

The other day His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was taking a walk between Cambridge and Madingley, when, a shower of rain coming on, he solicited shelter in one of the cottages by the roadside. The good woman of the house very courteously dusted a chair with her apron and requested the prince to take a seat, which he did, and entered into a comfortable chat with the hostess on the weather and various kindred topics. As the rain made no signs of leaving off, the prince requested the loan of an umbrella, and the old lady, who, of course, was in ignorance of the name and rank of her guest, at once conveyed the intelligence that she possessed two umbrellas, a silk one and a cotton one. The silk one she made it a rule never to lend, but if the gentleman did not mind the cotton one, he was welcome to that, he need not trouble himself to send it all the way from Cambridge, but if he would leave it at a certain stall in the market on Saturday, it would do just as well. The prince accepted the offer, and, regardless of the "Sairey Gamp" appearance of the shelter, made his way beneath its shade to Madingley. In the afternoon the umbrella was sent back by one of the servants, with an intimation that "His Royal Highness" was much obliged for the favor, and requesting the lender's acceptance of a gold medallion, containing his royal mother's portrait. Ever since then the old lady has been unceasing in self-reproaches that she did not lend the prince the "silk un."

A Frenchman has discovered a new green dye, which he extracts from the buckthorn, and which is said to equal the celebrated Chinese green. He has been awarded the prize of 6,000 francs offered by the Lyons Chamber of Commerce.

BURNING AND SCUTTLING OF THE U. S. SHIPS, AND DESTRUCTION OF THE GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS AT NORFOLK, VA., BY THE SCENE ON HIS RETURN FROM C

ORDER OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT, APRIL 21st, 1861.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist, Mr. Eugene Benson, who witnessed ARLESTON.—See Page 391.

LUCILLE DE VERNET;

A TALE OF WOMAN'S HATE.

CHAPTER IX.

At half-past nine o'clock the same evening, with reluctant, trembling steps, which all the assurances of her husband had not power to allay, Lucille was ascending the noble staircase of the Hotel d'Almaine. The servant who preceded them threw open the doors of the salon; but as they were about to enter, Emile stopped, and taking Lucille's arm, said, "Not there; let us go to my mother's room first, she has expected us some hours, and will feel herself slighted if we settle down here and allow her to come to us. You must not think her wanting in politeness, Lucille, that she is not here to receive you; we must remember she expected us to dinner, and is now, I know, dressing for a party at the Tuileries, and her attention is too much engrossed by that duty to bestow a thought on us."

Before Emile had concluded, they were standing before the dressing-room of the countess, at which Emile had knocked. In a few moments the door was opened by a lady's maid, so handsomely and tastefully dressed that Lucille started, thinking she stood before Madame d'Almaine; but Emile entered, and going to the upper end of the room, said to a lady who sat before a large cheval glass, "Mamma, here is Mademoiselle de Vernet."

Lucille had followed Emile to the centre of the apartment, where she stood, struck with the light and splendor by which she was surrounded, dazzling for a moment to a girl who had never, since her infancy till now, been ten miles from home; and though that home had the charm of every comfort around it, yet having no female but herself to preside over it, it was wholly free from the wealth and luxuries amid which she now stood.

Folding doors separated this spacious apartment from the sleeping-room; its lofty ceiling was decorated with fresco paintings, the soft velvet carpet rose elastic from her tread; curtains of rich damask threw a glare of grandeur over the elaborately carved furniture, picked out with burnished gold, and polished to the highest degree; several handsome paintings of the great masters seemed bursting life-like from the paper on the walls; on the large dressing-table, trimmed with broad richly patterned Mechlin lace, burnt four wax candles in high massive silver candlesticks, and on the broad pure white mantelpiece girandoles, with heavy pendants, glittered bright as crystal drops in the sun, as their lights fell upon the cut glass and reflected a hundredfold the rich draperies of the immense windows.

Madame was just putting the last touch to her complexion, nor did she turn to the sound of her daughter's voice until she had completed it, when she arose deliberately, still glancing towards her glass.

Lucille, whose quick eye still wandered over the exquisite taste displayed in the arrangement of the most trifling decoration of this elegant apartment, turned quickly from them to the countess, an object as striking as anything she had gazed on.

Madame d'Almaine was forty-five, but appeared at least ten years younger; she was tall and elegantly formed, and the gossamer dress floating like a transparent cloud around her increased the lightness of her figure; a zone of diamonds encircled her waist, and the same costly gems glistened on her round white arms; her dark hair, unsilvered by a single streak, was dressed classically, but three white feathers, fastened by a band of jewels, drooped gracefully on her well shaped but more exposed shoulders than Fame licensed. Thus she was before the astonished Lucille, whose memory retained not the least remembrance of her person.

"Mademoiselle de Vernet," she exclaimed, as if Emile had but just pronounced the name, "you have come at last, have you; may I ask what detained you on your journey?" And without waiting an answer, taking her hands kissed both cheeks, adding, "Pray, disencumber yourself of that unmercifully large bonnet and most ungraceful scarf, that I may judge of the change six years have made in your person."

Lucille threw aside her bonnet, but was reluctant to part with her scarf, till madame drew it aside, when it fell to the ground.

"Oh, she is very pretty, Emile," said the countess, "perfectly beautiful when she blushes. Not at all like a country girl, but for her figure, which is rather, oh, yes, certainly, rather too developed. You require modernising, child; to-morrow we will set about the work. Adele," she said, calling to a young and handsome girl, "be it your duty to attend to Mademoiselle de Vernet; conduct her to the suite of rooms prepared for her, and see that she wants nothing."

Lucille, who had been on tenterhooks, trembling and blushing, prepared to attend this order with alacrity.

"Stop!" added madame, "not so fast, mademoiselle. Let me judge by your gait whether I shall have occasion to send for a training master before you appear in public. Ah, you want ease, but you are tired. I shall expect you to breakfast at twelve to-morrow in my room. Adieu, good-night."

This time Lucille made her escape, and preceded by Adele and Emile, reached the rooms prepared for her.

"This is your boudoir," said Emile, carelessly, and taking the light from Adele, threw its beams over a large handsomely furnished room; "that to the left, your sleeping-room; and this," throwing open a conservatory door, "where you are to gather your bouquets."

Lucille looked on delighted. Flowers of the choicest description were arranged with skill and taste, and several small birds, with folded wings, their heads confidingly buried beneath their thick plumage, reposed peaceably on the tender twigs of oleander and myrtle.

"Oh, this is beautiful!" she exclaimed, softly. "Like home, surrounded by birds and flowers."

"It is home," whispered Emile, "your rightful home, and one you will soon reign in. Come, now, to your chamber."

Lucille stepped lightly after Emile into a light airy room. The walls were covered with a pale pink paper chequered with silver. Mirrors jutted out from each corner, with lighted candles in their heavy cut glass chandeliers. A French bedstead with silver cornices, and richly embroidered white muslin curtains, lined with pink silk, hung in ample folds and spread gracefully over the flowers of the soft Axminster carpet; the window curtains and toilet draperies were the same, looped up with silver bands. A piled-up wood fire blazed cheerfully, throwing its light over the pink hangings, causing it to illumine with the rich glow of health the faces of the two girls, who sat with their feet on the broad bright fender in deep converse.

"These rooms are exquisitely graceful," said Lucille, at a break in their conversation; and looking round, she added, "but I care not for such grandeur. I should have preferred sharing your bed, Emile."

"Not a word about it, Lucille, it is my mother's wish, and I must say she has done you great honor, for these rooms were fitted up by my grandfather before the Revolution for the dauphiness, who a short time was under the charge of my grandmother."

"The dauphiness!" said Lucille, "the only one of the ill-fated family who escaped! Poor Henriette! I shall press the same pillow you did before your misfortunes!" and she shuddered at the recollection of what her father had told her of the horrors of Paris during the brief reign of the monster Robespierre.

"Yes," continued Emile, "the rooms have been closed many years, and my mother considers she has done you a great honor by having them reopened and fresh garnished for your reception."

"Then they escaped the desolation of the revolution?" said Lucille.

"Yes," replied Emile. "It was well known that my grandfather (though he did not openly avow it), abhorred the system which crushed the people till they rose en masse. He emigrated, till Napoleon, who so well understood the French character, was chosen by the people, when, like some others of his countrymen, he returned, and swore allegiance to him."

"He was," returned Lucille, smiling, "what is termed a courtier in the true sense of the word, and I should say it was worthy some little intrigue—the preservation of this noble mansion. But, Emile," she continued, "though surrounded by all the advantages of birth and wealth, there is a sadness about your manner and expression that surprises me. The cares of life cannot possibly have reached one so young and of such high position."

Emile suppressed a sigh, and looking round the room, drew nearer her companion, and in a low, hurried voice said, "What have wealth and position to do with happiness? I would give worlds, if I possessed them, to be a cottage girl, free and unshackled. It is because I cannot break my bonds that I am miserable. You know I am contracted to the Duke de Paleron, a man with just sufficient love in his nature to prefer his dinner to his horses, and with no more sense and morality than what prevents him falling into the lowest depths of vice. Yet, to this man, with my mother's sanction, am I doomed to live a lifetime, forced to become his wife, though assured the day after I shall be deserted for another." She paused a moment, then added in a stifled tone, "And worse, even worse than this, Lucille. I love another. Yes, the cousin of the duke, Charles de Bleville—a poor soldier, with little more than his pay to subsist on—has exchanged vows with me. I have willingly and fearlessly created these new bonds, which those of my mother's forging must irremediably snap to atoms."

She covered her face with her hands, and Lucille, who felt she ought, however unavailing, to say something, returned, "Emile, have courage; throw yourself on your mother's affection and the duke's honor. Surely, from one or both, you may expect some hope."

"The affection of my mother—the honor of the duke!" said Emile, bitterly. "They are qualities unknown to both. No, no; I have nothing to hope from either but to submit, or——"

A knock at the chamber-door startled the speaker to her feet. She brushed the tears from her eyes, and hastily catching up her light, retreated from the apartment.

It was Adele, whom Lucille speedily dismissed, and undressed with a heavier heart than she had when she entered the mansion, because she was the depositary of another's sorrows; but it was long after her head rested on the cambric and lace that adorned her elastic pillow—a pillow once pressed by the cheek of a royal daughter of France—before she slept.

CHAPTER X.

Lucille, chaperoned by the countess, became the star of fashion. Of course she had many admirers, and strange as it may appear, not one among them pursued her with such persevering energy as did the weak and engaged Duke de Paleron. Perhaps, being an engaged man might have been the cause that he was not so decidedly answered and warned of the uselessness of his assiduities; for though his compliments were fulsome, and his attentions irksome, they kept off those of others from whom she thought it might be more difficult to free herself, and stranger, both the countess and D'Almaine, possessed with the same idea, saw without observation his too apparent devotion to her.

The Count D'Almaine, though possessing some sterling qualities, was still the thoughtless pleasure-seeking man of fashion; thinking more of present happiness than the consequences of it in the future. He had Lucille with him in his own house, and if he thought, he never dwelt upon her unacknowledged claims; he was happy, and was surprised if a sigh escaped her, or if a tear started to her eye, at the peculiarity and unpleasantness of the position she was placed in.

One day, as Lucille was sitting in the salon, D'Almaine entered rather abruptly, and drawing near her, said, "Lucille, do not be surprised or alarmed. I shall not be long absent from you, but I am going to England. There, do not look so seriously dismayed; it will be but for a few days, ten at most, when I shall return and run off with you to the valley, and from thence to the Chateau de Noi in Normandy, my favorite residence."

Without noticing the latter part of his speech, she said, faintly, "To England! What can take you there, Jules? Pray let me go home before you leave Paris."

"Go home," said he. "Are you not at home, where you must remain till I come back? I confess it is rather ill-timed this hasty journey; but Lord Livesey, an old and valued English friend, has just come into possession of his estates, and having consulted my taste about the improvement of the family mansion, I have recommended an imitation of the Chateau de Noi, which is unrivalled in its architecture."

"And will ten days suffice, business and journey included?" said Lucille. "No, no, I fear not; and I have a presentiment, Jules, that when you return I shall be many miles distant from the proud home in which you leave me. I beseech you, give a few serious moments to consideration, and the disagreeables I am exposed to will come with vividness before you, Jules. I am an impostor in the home you have given me; I pass for what I am not—a free, unshackled maiden, when I am an unhappy wife, sighing for the rights which are withheld from me."

"Rights that shall be instantly acknowledged," he returned, pressing her to him, "when I return. I would willingly do it now, but it would be unwise and inexpedient, at the moment I am quitting you, to leave you to the upbraidings of my mother, who is ever violent when taken by surprise, and her censures and criminations would make the home, where I am desirous you should continue a short time longer, unendurable to one of your gentle spirit. And, Lucille," he added, "you must consider that on the announcement of our marriage my mother would instantly quit this residence, so loved and venerated by her, to give place to you its rightful mistress; this would give asperity to her feelings; the regard and high opinion she bears you would perish in her offended pride, and would cause an irreparable breach between her and myself."

"Lead me to my father," murmured Lucille, "let me take him to my confidence; let him know I am your wife, for I sigh, amid all this grandeur," and she looked furtively round on the magnificent furniture of the saloon, "to be taken to his heart, a penitent for the wrong I have done him in so long concealing from him a secret, in which my life and hopes of happiness are centred."

"You shall go, dearest," said D'Almaine; "we will go together as soon as I return. Let this assurance satisfy you and clear your brow. I ask your forbearance ten days longer—only ten days, Lucille; think how quickly they will pass, quick as a cloud passing over the bright sun, if you will only dwell upon them with the light heart of seventeen summers, and as the beloved and prized wife of Jules D'Almaine."

She threw herself into his arms, saying, as she brushed the tears from her eyes,

"I will do this, ah, and much more, if you desire it from me; but for your own honor as well as mine, you will not forget that the blight of suspicion may taint the fairest reputations when candor is forbidden."

"You shall never be exposed to it," he said, fervently. "And now, Lucille, let us speak of other matters. I have told you, and I intend it, to fly with you to the valley directly I come from England. Have, therefore, everything in readiness against my return. Here is my cheque book; I have put my signature to several of the pages; fill them up to the amount you may require, and give all necessary orders, that nothing may delay our departure."

Lucille was still in his arms when the doors of the salon opened, and the Countess D'Almaine entered. She looked like one transfixed, till Lucille, on the shutting of the door, looked up, then, like a frightened bird fearful of leaving its nest, clung closer to the arm of D'Almaine. A slight confusion crossed his countenance, but he was soon himself again, and to his mother's satirical remark of "This is indeed unexpected, Mademoiselle de Vernet," he answered, carelessly, "Be not surprised, madame; this is but the prelude to other wonders."

"I do not understand you, sir," was the haughty reply. "Mademoiselle de Vernet is under my protection, and, I believe, too chaste to permit unbecoming freedom from my son."

"Unbecoming freedom!" exclaimed D'Almaine. "Beware, madame, lest you tarnish the fame of an innocent woman, and by it degrade your own high reputation. I shall forbear saying more on this subject at present, than that Lucille de Vernet is one my heart has selected to share with me life's cares and joys. I am going to England; when I come home you shall know more. In the meantime, if you value the love and respect of your son, you will guard Lucille with the same kind care you have hitherto done. I ask this from you, mother, in the spirit of affectionate regard that has ever existed between us, and I leave her with you in the perfect confidence that you will not violate it."

He took the trembling hand of Lucille, and led her to his mother, but the countess turned haughtily away.

"Mother, she is your guest," he added; "you will not trample on the rights of hospitality—she is a sacred trust from Monsieur de Vernet and myself. You will guard her religiously until we again meet. Adieu! Heaven bless you both. Lucille, I leave you in perfect trust that our meeting will be happier than our parting."

He embraced them both; then in one embrace he kissed the cheek of his mother and the lips of Lucille, and hastened to the travelling-carriage in the court-yard, with Lord Livesey already in it.

Madame D'Almaine and Lucille both mechanically sprang to the window. D'Almaine kissed his hand to them, but neither responded to his farewell, the one prevented by sorrow at the parting, the other from anger at the avowal.

As the massive gates closed upon the carriage Lucille turned from the window, when her eyes met Madame D'Almaine's, but she withdrew them shudderingly; for, in that one short glance she saw, unversed as she was in the feelings of the heart, anger, dislike and malice. She hastened to her room, and, with her hands pressed to her throbbing temples, thought over with bitterness the occurrences of the last few months.

Two days later, Emile and Lucille were sitting in the boudoir of the latter, when a card of the Duke de Paleron's, with a request in pencil beneath the name to see Lucille, was delivered to her by the servant. Her first impulse was to refuse the request, but Emile anxiously desired her to see him.

"He admires you," said Emile, tremblingly. "If he offers you his hand will it not be some excuse for me to break the contract which now binds me to him? See him, dear Lucille; no harm can possibly come to you from the interview, while it may in some way benefit me."

"Then remain here," said Lucille. "I feel reluctant to be left quite at the mercy of that man in the position I am placed."

"That would mar all," said Emile. "He could not speak freely in my presence, if, as I suspect, he comes a traitor to his contract. But see, I will step into the conservatory, where, unthought of by him, I can overhear the conversation."

"Admit the Duke de Paleron," said Lucille to the servant, who waited in the ante-room.

As the duke entered, Emile passed into the conservatory, the door of which she left open; and, with a strange paleness overspreading her face, she knelt, with her hands tightly clasped, apparently awaiting her doom.

The duke's manner was slightly constrained as Lucille pointed to the chair the servant had placed for him, saying,

"Be seated, monsieur, and pray say to what I am to attribute this unexpected honor?"

"To my love," he replied, vehemently, attempting to take her hand. "Mademoiselle, from the moment I first beheld you, you must have seen the devoted regard I have entertained for you. No longer able to bear it, I have come to lay my heart and fortune at your feet."

"This is singular language," returned Lucille, coldly, and drawing herself farther from him, "from the Duke de Paleron, an engaged man. Has he forgotten the contract subsisting between Mademoiselle D'Almaine and himself—a contract which renders his attentions to another woman an insult to both? I need not preface with any apology my determination not to listen to you while that document exists, and my wish also that this interview may be put a speedy termination to. Monsieur, I wish you good morning."

"Stay," he said, holding her dress, as she was quitting the room, "stay, mademoiselle, and hear what I have come to tell you. I dislike Mademoiselle D'Almaine as infinitely as I admire you. The contract was created by our parents; she forfeits all her fortune if she rebels against it, I but a moiety of mine, which I freely give to her. Here is the hated paper," he added, taking one from his pocket. "Say you are mine, and I'll give its atoms to the wind."

Lucille trembled violently. She wished to free Emile, but how could she do this without involving her own truth? She heard a step in the corridor, and profited by it.

"Be quick, monsieur!" she cried, hurriedly; "that is the countess's foot. At once let me know your determination. That bond must be destroyed before I can answer you. The countess is already here!"

"This is my determination!" he said, tearing the contract. "Thus perish all that binds me to Emile D'Almaine! Say, does this satisfy you? have I your answer to my hopes?"

The last words still sounded through the rooms as Madame D'Almaine entered. A moment her hand lingered on the handle of the door, and her wrathful eyes wandered from the duke to Lucille, who stood firmly before her, though her cheeks were flushed and a smile lighted up her eyes.

"What means this?" said the countess, contemptuously, after a brief pause. "What am I to infer, Mademoiselle de Vernet, by finding you alone with Monsieur de Paleron in your own apartments, after the familiarity I so recently witnessed between you and my son? Am I to conclude from it that any gentleman who may presume to enter your boudoir is not only no intruder, but welcome to you?"

"You are to infer, madame, what you please from the duke's visit," replied Lucille; "for unless he explains the purport, I shall not, from considering both that and himself too insignificant to need an explanation from me."

"What unparalleled insolence, to taunt me in my own house!" exclaimed the countess. "Monsieur, what does it mean? On my daughter's account, I insist on an explanation; she, as well as myself, is insulted by this visit, and I appeal to you to clear up the mystery."

Her eye at the moment caught the torn contract on the carpet, she caught it up eagerly. At a glance all was explained. This weak young man, infatuated by the beauty of Lucille, had, to obtain her, destroyed the document which secured his title and large estates to her family. For a moment she was silent, overpowered with rage, but when speech came to her, she loaded both Lucille and the duke with the most bitter invectives.

Lucille, secure in her innocence, retired to a distant corner of the room, while the duke, coolly shrugging his shoulders, endeavored to beat a retreat. But the countess stood before the door, crying,

"Am I not to be enlightened on this scene?"

"What can I say, madame?" returned the duke, rendered desperate by his situation. "Surely the paper in your hand explains all; I have torn the contract which bound me to your daughter, because I prefer another. She is welcome to the fortune I shall lose by it. What else can I say to satisfy you, unless that I love Mademoiselle de Vernet, and am willing and anxious to make her my wife?"

"Your wife!" said the countess, scornfully. Then, curbing her feelings, she said, with assumed calmness, to Lucille, "And you, mademoiselle, what answer do you return to the duke's offer?"

"That I am engaged," replied Lucille, proudly; "but were I free my answer would be rejection of his offer. The duke possesses neither honor nor feeling, or he would have consulted with Emile before proposing to me; he has callously trifled with the feelings of the woman he was affianced to, and I despise him for his want of honor and generosity."

"She refuses," said Madame D'Almaine, hastily turning from Lucille to the duke, who stood petrified with astonishment at Lucille's coolness, and who never for a moment suspected he could be refused. "She rejects you, monsieur," she continued, "without leaving you a spark of hope. Emile is ignorant of all this. The contract is merely torn across; let things remain as they were before this ridiculous interview. If you are willing, there is nothing to prevent it. A few stitches will make the document whole again. Mademoiselle," she added, turning to Lucille, "your silence is all that is necessary on this subject."

"But not mine, mamma!" cried Emile, springing from the conservatory, and snatching the paper from her mother's hand, tore it into small pieces before the countess was fairly aware of her presence. "There!" she continued, exultingly. "I have completed what the Duke de Paleron commenced. Monsieur, I thank you for this act—it has given me new life. How beautiful to feel free!" she exclaimed, springing lightly from the ground. "Oh! I am a little bird escaped from the gilded wires that kept it in bondage! Nature has fresh charms for me, the breeze fans my cheek lighter and cooler, and the sun shines as bright and clear upon me as it did before I knew what captivity meant. Oh, freedom, freedom, how beautiful thou art!" and throwing open the window, with heightened color and brightened eyes, she looked complacently on the paved court-yard beneath.

"This is too much!" exclaimed the countess, approaching Emile, and shaking her with all the vehemence of passion. "Your boasted freedom shall be of short duration. That girl, that low-born soldier's daughter, is the cause of this; and if I have power she shall feel my vengeance. Yes," she continued, her eyes flashing on Lucille, "you shall not escape me. You have ruined my daughter's fortunes, and like a serpent have crept into my son's heart. But his mother has power to crush you—oh, even as I crush these useless atoms beneath my feet," she cried, trampling on the fragments of the contract, "so will I crush the creature who has stepped between me and my views! Duke, follow me."

"I will," he replied, glad of any excuse to quit the house he had so short a time before entered with all the warmth and expectation his pusillanimous nature was capable of.

Lucille and Emile sank tremblingly into each other's arms as the door closed on the countess and the duke. Lucille was the first to speak.

"What dreadful threats!" she cried, in a quivering tone. "Have I done anything to deserve them, Emile? Why am I not with my father? I shall not be safe till under his quiet roof. I think I will quit this hateful house directly. I am not, cannot be safe while it shelters me."

"Do not say so, Lucille," returned Emile. "Mamma is ailment, but not wicked. Besides, a word from Louis would send her from it. He has on right here; yes, and you alone, are mistress. If my mother proceeds to greater lengths, she must know the position you occupy in relation to her."

"Oh, the house is hateful to me!" exclaimed Lucille. "I will never enter it as his mistress. What happiness it would be to me to leave it, now and for ever. This is only the fourth day of Jules's absence, and it is another week must pass before we meet. Oh, I can never endure the purgatory of remaining here so long. I will write and request his permission to accompany him to Nice."

"Even he certainly a dreadful idea, dear girl," said Emile; "but six days will fleet away like a dream. Try and compose yourself to calm on the outside, and his return. And, above all, make some necessary purchases to make, while you are among you several days. We shall only meet mamma at dinner time, so I will be together to show you my discretionary; and before she has time to think of her threat, if she has not already forgotten it, you will be safe in your husband's arms, where naught can harm you."

Lucille tried to think so; but with a heavy heart she sat down to write to Jules, to beg him not to postpone his return beyond the promised time.

CHAPTER XI.

As Emile and Lucille were about to descend to the dining-room, a few hours after the departure of the Duke de Paleron and the tearing of the agreement which bound Jules to him, a message came from Madame D'Almaine, that Mademoiselle de Vernet's dinner would be served in her boudoir, as she was a headache which her dinner might be rean up nice, which was granted by her mother, who felt little inclined for the present to meet either her daughter or her guest, and she, highly gratified by the arrangement, spent the remainder of the evening in conference with the Marquis, quite undisturbed.

The following day Lucille noticed the unusual debilities of Adele, who had already breakfast and placed near her on her first coming to the mansion. Remembering the evening she spent in her room, and the one cried in the terrace which Jules had given her, heinding the next morning to get them explained.

Emile was in her own suite, but on this day enjoyed a visit from Cesarie, Charles de Rieville, the duke's cousin, being to meet at a ball, and the dinner party at the mansion between Lucille and Adele entered on some trifling mission, and standing before the d- it a glance now and ere gained the attention of Lucille and Madame D'Almaine. After something about the room a few moments, she sat upon a sofa. A few minutes after, Emile, who was standing near the vestibule, the door was flashed open, and the countess, with flushed cheeks and flaming eyes, stood before the group.

"I am glad that I have proofs of your guilt!" she exclaimed, in a loud tone, and advancing to the sofa on which Adele sat, she seized her pinioned from my son's study, and you are the guilty one who have converted it to your own purpose."

"This is cruel, unwomanly!" cried Lucille, starting to her feet, in a vain effort to reach the book. "Oh, my dear Adele, what is in the cheque-book of the Count D'Almaine but myself. I therefore beg, my, I implore you to look be returned to me."

"You insist!" cried the countess. "Dare you use such language to me—to me who have been a mother to you? Adele, I ask you to tell me that you have a right to the property of the Count D'Almaine? You must be made to repeat this assertion before me, that I may go instantly for a police officer. When under his strict charge, unobservedly, your cousin and husband will be at liberty."

Lucille walked silently and proudly to the extreme end of the apartment, as the countess revealed to the astonished Adele's mother. Estimate to fetch an officer. As Adele was leaving the room, Emile, who had been in the secret of the countess's intentions, for a moment incapable of action, sprang towards the waiting-woman.

"Stop!" she cried, in a quiet but determined tone. "The police no officer of justice here, neither shall any enter, unless by force."

"Do you hear, Adele?" exclaimed the countess, turning towards her. "Do you, Emile D'Aimeine, or a convent may bring repentance to your mother, and a new set of principles to your sister, which I will not suffer to be almost destroyed by her."

Defy you, mamma," said Emile, "unless forbid you should give me cause for such a step. But conduct to which, under your protection, is both cruel and base. I only ask you, mamma, to go, and, if possible, be silent."

"I disclaim all protection of her," said the countess. "Do I not hold this evidence of her guilt in my hand? Do I not know that though Jules himself were here to pardon her, I would not."

"Was he [illegible] here now would not," said Emile, boldly," said Emile. "And you, mother, when you know all, will regret this vile language, and the cruelty displayed to Lucille."

At this rebuke a fresh burst of passion broke from the countess's lips, and she ordered Adele to go for the police officer herself. Emile interposed, and laying her hand on her mother's arm, said, softly:

"Mother, desist from this. If you persist in it, it will bring disgrace upon us all, more especially upon Lucille, who is innocent as she—she is the wife of Jules."

The countess uttered a harp, quick cry, as if pierced by a shot. "His wife!" she cried; "it is false! I will not believe it!" Say his mistress, implying that his wife, and I am his mother!"

Emile bent her eyes with a calmed expression on her parent. "I speak the truth, dear mother," she replied. "Jules has made her his wife, and I am sure she deserves from you, that you may not feel the weight of your wrath to earn what he has suffered from the cruelty of either."

The countess bowed her head on her hands a moment; it was but a moment, and when she raised it the demon passion was still in her eyes.

"It is false, utterly false!" she cried. "She is an impostor," she continued, to Adele and Lucille, looking from one to the other, "and is the emblem of the serpent, "and shall not remain another night beneath the roof of a mansion where I am mistress. Go, girl, child of guilt. Prepare, Mademoiselle de Vernet, to leave here immediately. This house is mine, and I will not have it."

"Not so right, madame," said Lucille, timidly, glancing towards the window as she spoke, as if she feared the storm without. "This is as much mine as yours, and I will not leave it. It is true that I am a stranger in it, but I have a claim to it that no law can set aside, and no power or helplessness can for from it. I am the wife of Jules's legitimate, and to-morrow, oh, how joyfully, I shall return to my father."

"Of course you will remain here," said Emile, "at least for you forth! As the wife of Jules you are mistress of the house and household. His mother has no right to drive you from it, and reason to your right of remaining here."

"Only to-night, Mademoiselle," "For the wealth of the world I would not continue here beyond it; but to go forth a stranger in the night is fearful, and I will not do it."

The countess looked coldly upon her. "Send for a conveyance," she said audibly to Adele; "I will not stay in the house another night. But last night at the Hotel D'Aimaine; so prepare, mademoiselle, for your departure at 7 o'clock, and remember that I will not be liable for the last time on the threshold."

"Mother, mother," said Emile, you will repent this cruelty. Have you no thought when Monsieur de Vernet shrieked to from the violence of the enemies, and Lucille, with her child, was obliged to crush us; and now you would send his child, his only, his cherished child, out to face them, with the darkness around her, and the wild sea clinging to her? Mother, you will not—you cannot do this cruel act!"

"Shutter is easily procurable in Paris," said the countess, determinedly: "I can also procure the driver of a cab who will take me persons; and," she added in a low tone, feeling almost ashamed of such a deception, "I will be ready to the child of Jules, for which would be surely opened to her."

"Dear Lucille, this is indeed a place for purity like yours," cried Emile, as the countess, quitting her self-imposed task, left the room. "Mother, excited as she is, cannot be entirely able to exert herself, or she would not, I think, shall leave you at home. Remember Formakes by those who should be foremost among your protectors. I will go with you, but leave you till I place you near the fond heart of your father. Come, dearest, have courage; though all is dread and dark before you at this moment, remember every cloud has its silver lining."

The countess turned disdainfully from them as they hurriedly threw their cloaks and shawls round themselves.

"Go, mademoiselle," she said to Adele, haughtily. "You have called me this evening—blame yourself for what may follow!"

At this moment a sudden amusement broke on the countenance of Emile, unnoticed, supported Lucille down the broad oak stairs. They were both in the vehicle, shrieking where to direct it, when Emile's maid tapped at the window. "Take this card, mademoiselle," she said, hurriedly—"it is the address of my mother. She is poor and homely, but friendly and kind-hearted, and will make you comfortable at least for the night."

"Thanks—thanks, dear, kind Rosalie!" was reiterated by the two forlorn girls, as mercilessly sent forth by a proud, ambitious woman.

Emile glanced at the card, then pulled the checkstring, and ordered the driver to set them down in the Rue d'Artois; another quarter of an hour they had reached an old-fashioned mansion, let by the proprietor in apartments, where Madame Mora, the mother of Rosalie, lived on the third floor. A bell summoned her to the door, and Emile, apologising for the intrusion at so much an hour, explained their situation, and they were ushered into a clean but ill-furnished, comfortable room. Rosalie was in it, and an air of cooperative comfort spread itself around them.

(To be continued.)

THE BOMBARDMENT OF FORT SUMPTER.

We present to our readers this week, three engravings descriptive of the bombardment of Fort Sumpter, and the condition of that fort after Major Anderson's evacuation with colors flying, drums beating and a warning salute to the flag. These sketches have peculiar interest, from the fact that they were taken on the spot, the one at the time of the bombardment, the others immediately afterwards. The sketch of the fight shows all the betwixt were in active operation positions. The second sketches of the interior of Fort Sumpter after the bombardment exhibit how complete a wreck the fire of the batteries had made of that place, and of the havoc made it was. These sketches are worthy of a careful examination.

HUMOROUS CLEANINGS.

"Were, then, no cause cold beef," said a chilness husband, when, for the first time in his life, he discovered that he was more hungry than thirsty.

"Why, my dear," replied his wife, "I thought you liked cold meat."

"Yes, cold pork, then."

"No such article."

"Well, then, fresh pork, some potatoes."

"Not a potato left."

"Then for heaven's sake, get some bread, then."

"The bread is all gone, too."

"Well, then, give me a knife and fork, and let me go through the motions."

There are many anecdotes of Sir M'Seller, the Rightmaker, who cost was his only deficiency of any kind, and that was his memory. He had time was not a hasty, ready-going fellow (never in his misses, he is now no more) in two partnering with the Right Honorable Sir Jacob Astley, regarding the 4th. The stranger said it was a game impossible—he could give the cherpy in the best of the game, and yet win by 4 points. Sir Jacob replied:

"I do, sir, that, if you will allow me to deal the second!"

"No, not a bit of it," said the stranger, hastily.

"Well, then," said Sir Jacob, "I am ready to bet a pony, sensible stranger, I'll win ye. There's three hundred and sixty four days in the London hackney carriage season, and I'll bet you a pony to a sovereign you cannot name me one, true!" We mean mak'ing in the Highlands when the sun shines, and you cannot name one."

The following lines on Bonniebell, who, once a "bonnie" in Rowland's, went to India and returned to Paris, are from the pen of Thomas Hood:

"When bonnie Bell rules over Rowland's crew,
Nothing will be found amiss;
And Rowland's re-served, Yah! Bah!
Will be Rowland's for an Ice.
He properly spurns the base compound,
And gives the genuine article.

A Dane without Thomas—A woman without milk.

"I will take your advice," said a man to a physician this year. Of course. Everything is provided.

An avid proof of life does a young lady derive herself to entice her? When she begins at sigh for (suphor) a lover.

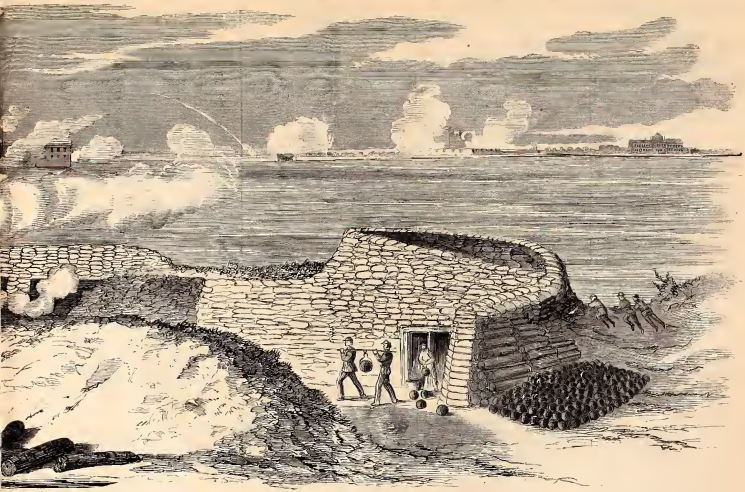
There are some people who assert that they have seen a brave drive, a bold rider, a fine shot, a good fisher, a fast runner, and a wise writer!

Woman that we could do with quit children as we are privileged to do with puppy-dogs, what a comfortable world this would be!

A curious doctor, on calling upon a gentleman who had been some time ailing, found him in bed, and asked him how he was. "Much troubled," said the latter considering the medicine which he's prepared for the sick man; he was no much accustomed to it, that it had no effect upon him. "Then I am sorry for you after her, wouldn't I be happier when I catched her than when I was rejected after her?"

Were the "Comic Annual" first come out, the author contented a copy to the Duke of Wellington, who, after reading it, wrote a letter to Hood, in which he could furnish him with items thus for a dust of which kinds. Hood seemed to be much pleased with the letter, and wrote to the duke to say that he would be glad to see him. "Come to-morrow morning, by a thorough-bred Pointer," "Annual Parliament, a fine for Stock Commons." "Annual Parliament, a fine for Stock Commons." "Annual Parliament, a fine for Stock Commons."

EXTRAORDINARY SCENE IN TAMMANY HALL COL. WM. WILSON'S ZOUAVES SWEARING TO BE TRUE TO THE STARS AND STRIPES AND TO GO THROUGH BALTIMORE OR DIE.—SEE PAGE 391.



IPTER.—Taken from Morris Island by an Eye-witness, Mr. William Waud, Our Special Artist.—See Page 395.

Interior of Fort Sumpter after the evacuation of the Federal troops. [illegible] by our Artist, Mr. Sydney Dickson, who visited the Fort immediately after the bombardment.

DESTRUCTION OF THE GUNPOWDER CREEK BRIDGE.

IMMEDIATELY after the riot in the streets of Baltimore, the mob determined that no more soldiers should reach Baltimore by the railroads at all events. Large crowds left the city, bent upon the destruction of the railroad bridges and they did their work effectively. They waited until a train arrived at the bridge at Canton, when a pistol fired at the engineer signaled the master to a stop. The passengers were made to get out, the crowd thronged into the cars and the engineer was compelled to take them to Gunpowder Bridge, where, while some took charge of the cars, others stopped the work of burning the bridge. It was fired in several places, and the destruction was very complete. On the way back they fired several other bridges, and completely destroyed the possibility of any railroad communication.

VOLUNTEERS IN EARNEST SPEAKING A TOLE-GARE.—When the Fifth Kent County Volunteers were marching through Greenwich, one evening last month, they were stopped by the toll-collector of Deptford Creek Bridge, who refused to allow them to pass without paying toll, as ordinary passengers. After some remonstrance by the commanding officer, which was unavailing, the latter consented to pay; but another difficulty was then raised by the collector objecting to allow the corps to go through in military order, but insisting upon their doing so singly, through the narrow wicket for foot passengers, although there is no "at-tide." They were unanimously of opinion by the commanding officer, and after some altercation he threatened to force a passage if the collector continued obdurate. However, seeing that the captain could say had any effect, and he at length gave the word of command, "Quick march," when, upon which the advance guard charged the gate, and forced it open in force. The whole corps followed, and after them about one-half of the mob, which by that time numbered from 600 to 800 persons, rushed them by pell-mell. The latter were delighted beyond measure at the scene, which was both novel and exciting, and which they testified their approval by cries of "Go it, Captain," "Capital," "Well done," &c. When the charge" was made the collector tried to stop the progress of the mob, but was being overpowered he struck at the Captain, and knocked his body off. The collector was in return, and was pulled down by the Lieutenant-Major of the corps, and the hand marched right over him, the foot soldiers in manner touching on him. He was dragged on to the pathway by some of the bystanders, and on passing the latter he followed the Captain, upbraiding him roundly the while, until they met two policemen, who were requested by the collector to take the Captain into custody, but they refused to do so.

The hill appropriated to the Capitol and grounds at the State of Indiana passed both Houses on the 29th April. Indiana's quarters—six regiments—are now fully equipped, and for a short time, it is understood, will march soon. Six more regiments will be mustered into the service of the State.

COL. LEE, of Arlington, son-in-law of the late General Washington Parke Custis, who has joined the Secessionists, has sold his property to the State of Virginia. The old mansion on the hill heights upon the south side of the Potomac commanding Washington. But the Star Spangled Banner has been shred of Virginia, for it has had skilful officers examining these heights and marking off grounds for fortification.

GUTTOSO and Wittredge have shouldered the knapsack and gun to join the jolly Seventh. Fitzhugh O'Brien has joined the 69th regiment, and F. C. Adams has joined the cavalry corps forming at Jones's Hotel. Other swells has become nightier than the pen just now.

Steam Weekly between New York and Liverpool,

LANDING AND EMBARKING PASSENGERS AT QUEENSTOWN (IRELAND).

The Liverpool, New York and Philadelphia Steamship Company intend dispatching their full-powered Clyde built Iron Steamships as follows:

CITY OF WASHINGTON, SATURDAY, MAY 4.
CITY OF MANCHESTER, SATURDAY, MAY 11.
CITY OF BALTIMORE, SATURDAY, MAY 18,
And every Saturday, at Noon, from Pier 47 North River.

RATES OF PASSAGE:

First Cabin.....$100 | Steerage.....$30
" to London 60 00 | " to London.....35 00
Steerage Return Tickets, good for six months.....60 00
Passengers forwarded to Paris, Havre, Hamburg, Bremen, Rotterdam, Antwerp, &c., at moderate rates.
Steerage Persons to take to bring out their friends on low terms. Apply to the Company's Office, No. 15 Water street, Liverpool; or Company's Office, No. 69 Walnut street, Philadelphia; or to JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 15 Broadway, N. Y.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

CANNOT be spoken of too highly. We have used them and received great benefit from them. They are recommended to us by those who have used them physicians. By their use, many of you are suffering from any of the complaints for which they are recommended.
—Concord Standard.

To Nervous Sufferers.

A NEW Medicinal Appliance, for the arrest of Loss of Debility, Spermatorrhœa, &c. (sure and speedy.) Pamphlet, Price 25 cents. Address DR. BENNETT, Box 101, care B. Lockwood, Broadway Post Office, New York City. Country Sales at par.

A Notorious Fact.

Splendid Silver-Plated Ice Pitchers.....$5 00
Ivory Handle Table Knives.....6 00
" Carving Knives.....2 75
Silver-Plated Table Spoons.....2 75
Teaspoons.....87
Every description of House-furnishing Goods at immense reduction in prices, at E. B. HASKINS', Cooper Institute, No. 17 Third-class Goods. Point for a Gallonpoor Dog.

75,000 VOLENTEERS WANTED

BY "UNCLE ABE,"

To help his restless order among his belligerent Nephews!

500,000 Men, Women and Children Wanted,

By GEORGE G. EVANS, to aid him in protecting the claims of his NEW ENTERPRISE to the People.

GLORIUS NEWS for those who are fighting the enemy, POVERTY.

Thousands of Chances to Make Money!

ONE MILLION DOLLARS

WORTH OF

Watches, Jewellery and Silver-Plated Ware,

TO BE DISPOSED OF ON

An Entirely New and Original Plan!

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE

All persons desirous of securing an Agency in the

NEW ENTERPRISE

Should send on their names at once, inclosing a three-cent stamp to pay postage, and receive by return of mail

A Premium Catalogue,

Containing full INFORMATION, and a list of the articles to be distributed.

A Rare Chance to Make Money

Without risk, together with

Full Particulars Relative to this Novel Plan!

To insure prompt and satisfactory dealings, direct all letters to

GEORGE G. EVANS,
439 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches!

MY Cosguest will force them to grow heavily in FIVE WEEKS (under the most ordinary circumstances) without their being the least injury to the skin. Price $1—sent by mail, post-paid, to any address, on receipt of price.
R. G. GRAHAM, 169 Nassau St., New York.

Drum and Fife Books.

MODERN SCHOOL FOR THE DRUM; containing Instructions and Music for Beginners. Price 50 cents.

THE ARMY AND NAVY MASTER; containing Instructions, Marches, Quicksteps, Service Calls, Signals, &c. 50 cents.

WINNER'S PRACTICAL GUIDE FOR THE FIFE; being a complete Knowledge of the use of the Fife without a teacher, to which are added a number of Marches, &c. Price, 50 cts. Mailed, postpaid, on receipt of price. Published by LEE & WALKER, Boston.

Summer Fashions! Summer Fashions!

SPLENDID IMPROVEMENTS IN MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS. Summer Costumes, Paper Patterns, &c. Mme. Demorest's Emporium of Fashion, Paper Patterns, &c. Sent by first mail, postpaid, on receipt of 25 cents. Address MME. DEMOREST, 473 Broadway, New York. Persons in want of Agencies may apply together. Do not fail to send for a copy.
MME. DEMOREST, 473 Broadway.

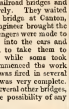
American Flags.

The GLORIOUS OLD STARS AND STRIPES, printed both sides, on firm Jaconet, 24 inches long, 18 wide, $1 50 per dozen, or 10 cents for 3/4. Flags 30 inches long, 25 do. each, or 22 per dozen; 75 cents for $20. Sent in Express only. Flags prepared to supply 30,000 per day. Orders from the country for wholesale trade to-day. JUDSON & CO., 212 Broadway.

$75 PER MONTH, clear of expenses, is made by anyone who will engage with the Universal Steam Tool. Send for our Circular, which fully explains the business. WM. HANNAH & CO.,
Box 1084, Cincinnati, Ohio.

ENGLISH PORTABLE TENT,

Patented February, 1857.



The many advantages this useful and ready Shelter possesses above the ordinary article, or whatever is now in use, must recommend it to every one.

First—Its extreme Lightness, Portability and Simplicity.

Second—It is proof against Fire and other accidents.

Third—Its capability of Accommodation.

Can be carried by a single person, and is a most thrilling book, and in the result of Quiry years' experiences of the author is more than ten thousand dollars, and a matter to clear the abuses and rocks for Individuals. Send two red stamps and state the monetary effect

Full not to Send and get this Book.

ADDRESS

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs, No. 96 FIFTH AVENUE.

MR. SAM COWELL

WILL BE "AT HOME." HIS

Popular Drawing-Room Concerts

AT

The Bandit Pantheon,

699 Broadway,

On and after Monday evening, May 4, 1857.
Admission 12 cents. Reserved Seats, 50 cents.

TUCKER'S

PARIS BRIDAL

GARNITURES AND VEILS,

Coiffures, Flowers, Feathers and Toilet Surroundings are ever of a pleasing character.

736 Broadway 274-325

Finkle & Lyon's

SEWING MACHINES,

With new improvements, Reverse, &c., all complete,

AT REDUCED PRICES.

Agents wanted. Send for a Circular, 505 Broadway, New York, and 180 Fulton St., Brooklyn. 660

MATRIMONY MADE EASY; Or, How to Win a Lady—Containing plain, common sense directions, showing how all may be suitably married, with hints to the bashful, timid and diffident, and instructions for addressing the fair sex, and how to conduct the whole affair in a sensible, correct, and happy manner, in either sex. Mailed free 25 cents. In cover, postage stamps. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia Post Office, box 2,336.

Bogle's Hair Dye and Wigs

ARE unapproachedand unapproachable in their respective merits. Both are perfection. Try the one, and you will use no other. Sold by

BOGLE'S ELECTRIC HAIR-DYE

Private Rooms for Dyeing and Cutting Hair. Wigs at BOGLE Hairwork, Perfumery and Toilet Depot, No. 202 Washington St., Boston. Directions to imitate the best sent by mail. Hotels postage stamp for reply. 660

THELAN'S PATENT BILLIARD TABLES.

MANUFACTORY WAREROOMS
65 & 67 & 69 CROSBY ST. NEW YORK.

BRONCHIAL TROCHES

To Singers.

HOARSENESS.—A music teacher in the Methodist Female College," Athens, Texas, says of Hawkins' Bronchial Troches, "Allaying tickl ish cough and hoarseness for instantly without much benefit, I recommend them by the use of one box. I am highly pleased with them."

L. DUBERNET & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Passe-Partouts and Fancy Frames,

644 Broadway, between Spring and Prince Sts., New York. 82 Gilt, Rosy, Black Walnut and Oak Frames always on hand. 274-325 L. DUBERNET. J. DUBERNET.

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—SHAVER'S PATENT ERASER AND PENCIL SHARPENER, &c., all neatly contained in one small, neutral form.

It is a most simple contrivance, answering to many purposes entirely.—Independent.

It gives a neatly finished point to the lead, without soiling the fingers in the least.—N. Y. Tribune.

It is a handy little article, and will be found useful in every writing desk.—Prov. Journal, Jr., of Fine Colleges.

Sample sent, postage paid, for 75 cts., or 3 styles for $1 50. For sale by all Stationers. Send for a Circular.

A. G. SHAVER, New Haven, Conn. 280-34

A CANGE,

PICTURE AND LOOKING-GLASS FRAMES

AND

CORNICES FOR BOOMS,

MADE TO ORDER, AND RE-GILDING DONE.

208 William St., cor. Frankfort, New York.

The Early Physical Degeneracy

OF

American People,

AND THE EARLY MELANCHOLY DECLINE OF CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH

Just published by

DR. STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Marriages and Consumption; Wasting of the Energies by the agreements and Abuses of the Reproductive, Impaired Nutrition and Digestion.

It is a most thrilling book, and in the result of Quiry years' experiences of the author is more than ten thousand dollars, and a matter to clear the abuses and rocks for Individuals. Send two red stamps and state the monetary effect

Full not to Send and get this Book.

ADDRESS

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Physician for Diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs, No. 96 FIFTH AVENUE.

Important Announcement.

Will be Published on Friday, May 3d.

NO. 39 OF

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN,

BUDGET OF FUN,

BUDGET OF FUN,

THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.
THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.
THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.
THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.
THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.
THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.

Full of Pictures and Humor.

SIXTEEN PAGES OF COMIC LITERATURE,
SIXTEEN PAGES OF COMIC LITERATURE,
SIXTEEN PAGES OF COMIC LITERATURE,
AND
full of Comic Cartoons and Humorous Cartoon scenes.

The grand Cartoon is

JEFF. DAVIS TRYING IT ON,"
JEFF. DAVIS TRYING IT ON,
JEFF. DAVIS TRYING IT ON,
JEFF. DAVIS TRYING IT ON,

To See how he Looks in a Crown.
To See how he Looks in a Crown.
To See how he Looks in a Crown.
To See how he Looks in a Crown.
To See how he Looks in a Crown.
To See how he Looks in a Crown.

Dedicated to

COL. HAWKINS,

OF

THE LIGHTNING ZOUAVES,
THE LIGHTNING ZOUAVES,
THE LIGHTNING ZOUAVES,
AND

COL. ELLSWORTH,

OF

THE FIRE ZOUAVES.
THE FIRE ZOUAVES.
THE FIRE ZOUAVES.

How the Lightning Zouaves Fought at Battery. Also the particular ex Numeur Dayton finds himself in when he gets to Beadles Amusements under Engravings full of Political and Social point.

There are also three Grand Romances,

THE SPECTRE OF WEPPINGTON,
THE WENTWORTHS OF ALLBRIGHTON,
And a Burlesque Illustrated Romantic Novel (to be continued) called

THE BANDIT BARBER OF WEEHAWKEN.

Also the great

UNION SONG,

BY H. O. WATSON.

Price only Six Cents.

Published by

FRANK LESLIE,

10 City Hall Square, New York.

THE READERS OF

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper

Desiring to purchase any article in New York, no matter what the description may be, need no other orders promptly and faithfully fulfilled by addressing

JAMES W. FORTUNE,

Care of Frank Leslie, Esq.,
10 City Hall Square, N. Y.

In all cases the pecuniary funds should be inclosed in the communication.

Unequaled for the Splendor

AND

MULTIPLICITY OF ITS ILLUSTRATIONS

CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED FAMILY BIBLE

Great demand for this New Work.

Price, neatly bound in cloth, colored, $2 50.
Price, handsomely bound in morocco, $3 50.

In all cases the pecuniary funds should be inclosed in the communication. Agents wanted throughout the country for every town. CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN,
No. 27 Park Row, N. Y

Just Published,

THIRTY HARD NUTS TO ADVERTISERS, 50 cents.....$1 00
HISTORY HAND-BOOK OF ADVERTISING, 50 cents..... 1 00
GENERAL ADVERTISERS' MANUAL, half BOUND..... 1 00
NEWSPAPER ORDINANCES AND OPINIONS, half BOUND..... 1 00
ADVERTISER'S STENOTYPE OF FINAL RECKONER, 25 cents. 1 00
ADVERTISER'S SHORTEST METHOD WITH BOOK KEEPING..... 1 00
WEBSTER'S RULE AND RATE PRACTICE..... 1 75
GERMAN-ENGLISH AND ENGLISH-GERMAN DICTIONARY..... 1 75
LIEUT. COOPER'S NEW MANUAL OF THE BROADSWORD..... 1 00
LIEUT. COOPER'S MANUAL INFANTRY, in press.
LIEUT. COOPER'S NEW MANUAL OF SWORD AND BAYONET EXERCISE, in press.

Any of the above Books sent free by mail on receipt of the price.

A large stock of the best American, English and French Military Books on hand. Catalogues sent free by mail.
274 Publisher, 161 Broadway.

Cephalic Pills,
CURE
Sick Headache,
CURE
Nervous Headache,
CURE
All kinds of
Headache.

By the use of these Pills the periodic attacks of Nervous or Sick Headache may be prevented; and if taken at the commencement of an attack immediate relief from pain and sickness will be obtained.

They seldom fail in relieving the Nausea and Headache to which females are so subject.

They act gently upon the bowels, removing Costiveness.

For illustrations, testimonials, and pamphlets, address, "Dr. Spalding, 46 Cedar St., New York."

THE FOLLOWING INDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS

Will convince all who suffer from

HEADACHE

THAT A SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS WITHIN THEIR REACH.

These Testimonials were constituted by Mr. Spalding, they afford unquestionable proof of the efficacy of His truly valuable discovery.

SOMERVILLE, Conn., Feb. 3, 1851.

MR. SPALDING:—Mr. Hart sent your Cephalic Pills, and I like them well and find I have you to thank now for having worth more. Part of them are for the neighbors, to whom I have a few sent of the kind I got from you.

Send the Pills by mail, and oblige Your friend and Servant, JAMES KENNEDY.

HAVERSTRAW, Pa., Feb. 6, 1851.

MR. SPALDING:—Sir—I have used a great deal of your Cephalic Pills. I have received a great deal of benefit on them. Yours respectfully,

MARY ANN STOCKHOUSE.

SPRING CREEK, HUNTINGDON Co., Pa., Jan. 19, 1851.

H. C. SPALDING:—Sir—Please send me a box to obtain your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately per mail. Respectfully yours, IRO. B. SIMONS.

P. S.—I have used one box of your Pills and find them excellent.

BRICK TAVERN, DON, Jan. 15, 1851.

HENRY C. SPALDING, Esq.—Dear Sir—Inclosed herewith you carry, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best I have ever tried. Direct A. SCOVIL, P. M.

Bells Verners, Wyandot Co., O.

TIVERTON, MASS., Dec. 11, 1850.

H. C. SPALDING, Esq.—Dear Sir—Please send me a dozen more bills, as bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before my customers. I have been out of them for a time, but please send to me. One of my customers says two dollars' worth more than he has ever paid for your Pills, which I sent him. Respectfully yours, W. B. WILKES

N. B. A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times the cost. SPALDING'S.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SAVE THE PIECES DISPATCH

ECONOMY

N. B. A STORE IS THE SAME NAME.—"GO."

As a household word it is now used in splendid families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Crockery, &c.

Spalding's Prepared Glue

stands all with emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point

USE GLUE IN EVERY EMERGENCY.

N. B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cts.

Address HENRY C. SPALDING,
No. 46 Cedar St., New York.

CAUTION.

As certain unprincipled persons are attempting to palm off on the unsuspecting public imitations of my PREPARED GLUE, I would caution the public against them in purchasing, and see that the label reads

"N. B. SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE, "and the fac simile wrapper all others are swindling counterfeits

FURNITURE ! FURNITURE ! !

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL,

AT

DEGRAAF & TAYLOR

(FORMERLY H. P. DEGRAAF),

NO. 97 BOWERY, NEW YORK.

This establishment is six stories in height, and extends 341 feet through to No. 63 Christie Street—making it one of the largest Furniture Houses in the United States.

They are prepared to offer great inducements to the Wholesale Trade, for Time or Cash. Their Stock consists, in part, of

ROSEWOOD PARLOR AND CHAMBER FURNITURE;

Mahogany and Walnut Parlor and Chamber Furniture;

Also, CANE and WOOD SEAT WORK, all qualities; HAIR, HUSK and SPRING MATTRESSES, a large stock; ENAMELLED CHAMBER FURNITURE, in sets, from $32 to $100.

JENNY LIND AND EXTENSION POP-IT BEDSTEADS.

Five feet wide, especially for the Southern Trade.

☞ Their facilities for manufacturing defy competition. All work guaranteed as represented. 279-84

"ESTABLISHED 1843.

BOGLE'S CELEBRATED HYPERION FLUID over-comes the effects of bad Pens, Bad Ink, and bad Writing. Its use in the world. To wise here it has been received by Government. Try this and be convinced. It never fails. Take heed to

W. BOGLE'S

Sherwell, Perfumery and co-
Store,
222 Washington St., Boston, 1850
for sale everywhere.

Perfumes! Perfumes! Perfumes!

600 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The most delightful and genuine liquid and dry Perfumes for the handkerchief, comprising the fragrance of the earliest and latest flowers, as well as the most approved Bouquets.

MOUNT VERNON, KISS ME QUICK,
PERFECT GEM, or WASHINGTON BOUQUET,
FRAGRANT JAPONICA, &c., &c.

Also Cosmetics, Pomatums, Essences, for Toys, Pulverized Orris Root, &c.

FLORIO BOUQUET, the most approved feet for Infants

SUPERIOR TOILET SOAPS, Shaving Soaps, Glycerine Soaps from Cows Placenta, an infallible cure for Corns and Bunions.

To be had, wholesale and retail, at No. 600 Broadway New York. MARIE DUPUY.

300 Chemist and Druggist.

The Union Clothes Dryer.

A New Invention—Useful, Cheap and Durable.

By which Clothes in large quantities may be dried in a short, a room, or on the yard or lawn. One line up and down done in one minute without detaching the lines. When not it can be detached with a small compass, and hung up in a closet. No family should be without this article.

Price $5 and $6.

THE UNION CLOTHES DRYER is pronounced by all unprejudiced persons to be one of the most useful and labor-saving inventions of the age.

J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors,
427 Broadway (near Grand St.), New York, and 342 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

☞ 1-tf

DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL,

Will the quickest cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sore Throat, Inflammation, Skin Diseases, Stiffness of the Joints, Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Tetter, &c., &c. They cannot exist when it is applied.

It cures sea or landsick and Sick Neck in one night.—John Bunyan, 23 Lee Hospital, New York.

It cured me of Pain.—C. Onion, No. Mayor, Camden, N. J.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—Rev. Mr. Hamilton, N. J.

It cured me of Deafness.—C. D. Caldwell, Trenton, N. J.

It cured me of Lumbago.—Rev. Mr. Beardsley, (M. P.) Lumbago.

It cured me of an old Sore.—Wm. Maddox, New York

It cured me of Rheumatism.—J. D. Smith, Phila.

It would be impossible to publish all the certificates in a book of 100 pages. DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL is sold in the parts with Electricity, and at once expels all pain and inflammation. Price 25 cts. per bottle. Sold by druggists. Price 25 cts., 50 cts., $1 per bottle. Sold by druggists and Dealers throughout the United States and Canada.

Principal Depot, 197 South Eighth St., Philadelphia, Pa.

100 C. DE GRATH, M. D.

S. B. Walker,

TYPE FOUNDRY

AND PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,

12 Dutch St., New York. 277 tf

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AND GYMNASIUM YONKERS, N. Y.

Winter Session commences on the 1st day of Nov

TERMS:

Board and Tuition..... $150 per Session.

For Circulars and further information apply to

M. N. WHITWELL, Principal.

Yonkers, 1866 300

CASSELL'S

Popular Natural History,

Profusely Illustrated with Splendid Engravings.

IS PUBLISHED BY THE 1st OF EVERY MONTH.

Parts, 24 pages and 1 Tinted Plate, 18c. per Part.
Volumes, 48 pages and 2 Tinted Plates, 35 cts.
Sections, 192 pages and 8 Tinted Plates, 60 cts.
Numbers, 192 pages and 12 Tinted Plates, Embossed Cloth, Gilt Sides and Lettered, $2.50.

The work will complete five Volumes.

"Really a beautiful publication."—New York Tr. & Sun.

"The engravings are not only pictures, but exquisite."—Detroit (Mich.) Farmer.

"We have examined this work in our readers."—Cincinnati Presbyterian.

"The will be a valuable work."—Kentucky Cou. Jou.

"The publishers seem to be arranged for bringing out an excellent and beautiful a work."—General Independent Dem

"Calculated to afford much pleasure to the scientific inquirer."—Philad. American Presbyterian.

"The work is one of great interest and invaluable worth."—Cincinnati Christian Herald.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 37 Park Row, N. Y.

The volcanic propensities, freed of all the common complaints, such as Measles or Rheumatism, and the like, and run down the system, but the positive absence of cure, will be found to be the following properties, and to which the most valuable testimonials are found in the pamphlets.

For Whooping Cough, and as a Soothing Syrup, it meets every want, and by early use will save the largest proportion of expense in children which can be incurred in Whooping Cough.

For Bronchial Coughs and Bronchial Complaints, the formation of consumption, is speedily found powerless when it can only the most perfect energy to disease, but builds up and sustains the system against a recurrence of the Complaint. No nursery should be without it, nor should persons fail to gain possession, to be found with all dealers, as the only way to do justice to its value.

This great Neuralgic Remedy and Natural Opiate calls for special testimonials and interest, being free of Opium or prepared out of Opium, or of any but its purely vegetable properties. For Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Nervous Headache, Spasms, Spinal Complaints, Bleeding at Lungs or Stomach, Pain in Any Form, Cancers, and all internal Nervous Complaints.

For Loss of Sleep, Chronic or Nervous Headache, Sick Headache, Pain in the Spinal, and as which we also find remedy from undoubted sources.

For Neuralgia, Cancers it is a true Remedy.

For Nervousness, including Nervous Cholera Morbus, it is speedy and effectual, removing the Pains, but gradually and gently, and contrast with Opium, which only only constipates and drugs the system, but makes the Nervous Complaint worse.

From Physicians we ask attention, and on demand will furnish the testimonials we have, declaring it to be Anodyne as Opium which has long been wanted, and in its place we can speak as not entirely as one can speak of Opium.

From invalids we ask correspondence for Pamphlets or Testimonials, which will be furnished free.

Prices—Large Cough Remedy, 50 cents per bottle.
Small " 25 "
Soothing Syrup, 50 "

John H. Runnewell, Proprietor,
CHEMIST AND PHARMACEUTIST,

No. 9 Commercial Wharf, Boston, Mass.

For sale by all leading wholesale and retail druggists in the United States.

Also, Runnewell's Universal Couch Remedy, Bell, Bark, Gum & Rosinous; Scheidlin Brau. & Co.; McKesson & Robbins; Seabury, Conard Fox, J. Milnor & Sons, Wholesale Agents, New York. 277 49tf

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.—For particulars address, including stamp, Dr. Wilson, Box 1,000, Augusta and Associates, 428 Broadway, New York. 270 4tf

DIANOFORTE AND VOCAL MUSIC AT REDUCED PRICES.—The following splendid collection for 60 cents:

Home, Sweet Home; Rocky Hill—Lord of My Youngest and Holiest Feelings—Air, Harmony and Accompaniment for the Piano-forte, Masonic—She Shall be Entertained—Sweet Spirit Hear My Prayer—Hunting Song—Cheerful Duty, Wake from Summer—Sweet, Balmy of the Sea—Oh, Sing to Me—Hunting Song—Sweet Innocence Grow—The Birdies, Oh—Dear Voices of Home—Grieve the Coldest.

Forwarded free by mail on receipt of price. Catalogues of all 60 cents, sent on all applications.

PETERSON & CO., Agents,
No. 418 Broadway, New York.

Handsome Women.

WHAT IS "BLOOM OF ROSES?" a rich and elegant color for the cheeks or lips. It WILL NOT WASH OFF, and when once applied remains durable for years. The tint is so rich and natural that the closest scrutiny cannot detect it. Can be inserted in a letter, paid, and will not injure the skin. This is a new article, and the only one ever offered to the public which is not injurious. Sealed box, in bottles, with directions, for $1.

BLOOM OF ROSES POWDER imparts a darling whiteness to the complexion, soft, delicate and unrivaled, unlike anything ever used for the purpose, and WILL NOT RUB OFF. Mailed free for 50 cts. in postage stamps. Can be inserted in a letter. Address Dr. Perkins, 751 Hudson St., Philadelphia. Agents Wanted.

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every City, Town and County in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patented article just invented. It supersedes all others. Will sell to every person and company. A rare chance. Immediate application necessary. Address, for particulars, STANDLY & CO., 162 Widow St., Philadelphia, Pa. 283-93

6,000 AGENTS WANTED—To sell the NEW PATENT FAMILY KNITTING MACHINE. Agents can make from $5 to $10 per day. Every family will buy one. Address SECOR & CO., Hartford, Conn. 281-96

The Monarch of the Monthlies!

FOR MAY, 1861.

JUST PUBLISHED, NO. 5, VOL. VIII, OF

FRANK LESLIE'S

MONTHLY,

With which is incorporated

THE GAZETTE OF FASHION.

Price 25 cts., or $3 per annum.

Literary.

Verona Brent; or, The Wayward Course of Love—continued.
Ancient Nervousness.
Stories in Australia.
An Amusing adventure in Italy. Engraving
How Bad Boys Get Sorters. Engraving.
A True Ghost Story.
The Holiday Night and the Present-Boy.
Beautiful Garden at St. Pierre, Martinique. Engraving.
The Patient Widow.
A Female Monarch.
Wit and Humor.
Wax Ad Lace Mill. Engraving.
Oxygen.
Grim Japanese Salamander. Engraving.
The Black Dead and the Black Bird.
My Sketch.
Marriage in the Kinchgarten Trade, near Fribourg in Belgium. Engraving.
Dwight Bar, the Founder of Quinlapgow.
Wast of Bait.
The Devil Gardens, Florence. Engraving.
Samuel Longyard's Revenge.
Marriage Engagements.
The Frenchmen.
Beautiful Scene in Palermo Gardens. Engraving.
Wax Model Gardens of Gibraltar. Engraving.
All in bad child that Glitters.
Notes on Entertainments for Evidence.
Garibaldi and the Children at Palermo. Engraving.
City of Fashion.
Locusts.
Wax Bee Hunting. Engraving.
Invisible Rose.
Cotton; Mode of Manufacture in the East. Twenty-three Engravings.
Solitude of the Desert.
Wax by the Sea. Wonderful Companions. Engraving
Spider Fiend.
Wax Lady Adorns to Mothers—Maxims.
Lord Mayor's Kitchen, London.
Vegetables.
Amusements for Young People.
Poetry.—A late Story; My Lamp, The Legend of Our Lady of Good Help.
Fashion.
Fresh Dogs.—Skin Fire in Search of a Husband. Six Engravings.

List of Engravings.

A Late Story.
The Corner at the Door of the Wineshop.
The Mother Bath.
Beautiful Gardens, St. Pierre, Martinique.
The Priest's Visit.
Wax Ad Lace Mill. Engraving.
Grim Japanese Salamander.
Marriage in the Kinchgarten-Trad.
Wax Bee Hunting. Engraving.
Entrance to the Tuileries Gardens.
Wax Ad Lace.
Scene in Naples on the Arrival of Garibaldi.
Wax Ad Lace Mill.
Cotton Manufacture.
Cotton Manufacture in Bindestan—Cotton Carder, The Bow, Twin Wheel and Warping, Reeling, Cotton Beater, Twisting the Thread, Dressing, Loom Weaving, Spinning, Warping, Dyeing, Bleaching, Arranging the Implement, Threads, Beating the Woof, Folding, Packing, Wire-Drawing, Cotton Press, Weaving Apparatus, Fastening the Wire, Winding the Wire, Weaving.
Cotton Gin.

Gazette of Fashion.

What Should be Worn.—Dress must Should Not, Review of Fashions; Styles for the Month; Unique Seen and Talked About; Description of Costumes; Description of Colors; Madame Demorest's Patent Tucker and Quiller; Lacharee Sleeve; Novelties in Trimming; Gored Dresses; Lingerie; Answers to Correspondents; Notice to Subscribers; What Dress is It? Miss Harriet's Dress.

Illustrations to the Gazette.

Colored Fashion Plate; Bayard; Two Back or Scarf; Travelling Dress; Evening Toilette; Hungarian Coiffure; Bonnet and Trimmings; Evening Dress Aprons; Bonnet Ornaments; Bonnet Dress for a Young Lady; Quite Dress; Half Dress; Dinner Costume; Embroidered Garter and Needle; Demorest's Prize Model Skirt; Bonnet and Trimmings; Bonnet Dress; Bonnet Ornaments; Emeralds Guide; Two Bonnets; Collars and Bands.

Each number of this Magazine contains over 100 pages of the most valuable information of the day, besides nearly sixty beautiful Engravings. It is the only colored Fashion Plate which takes the prize of the Magazine.

1 copy 1 year	$3
2 copies 1 year	5
3 copies 1 year	7
4 copies 1 year	8

and for each copy above four, $2. Clubs may be formed at any post-office in the country, and the person getting up a Club of Five Subscribers, 1 year for $10.

The postage of this Magazine is three cents; and must be paid three months in advance at the office where the Magazine is received.

FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE.—Send Stamp to Box 1959, Lowell, Mass. 284-6t

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S

LOTTERIES!

AUTHORIZED BY THE STATES OF

MISSOURI

AND

KENTUCKY,

Draw daily, in public, under the supervision of one of Seven Commissioners.

☞ The Managers' Offices are located at Covington Kentucky, and St. Louis, Missouri.

PRIZES VARY FROM

$2 50 TO $100,000!

TICKETS FROM $2 50 TO $30.

☞ Circulars giving full explanation and the Schemes to be drawn will be sent, free of charge, to all addressing

WOOD, EDDY & CO., Covington, Kentucky.
or,
WOOD, EDDY & CO., St. Louis, Missouri.

BURNING OF THE GUNPOWDER CREEK RAILROAD BRIDGE, ON THE PHILADELPHIA AND BALTIMORE RAILROAD, BY THE MARYLAND SECESSIONISTS.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 398.

The Planting Season for Trees having Arrived,

PARSONS & CO.

invite the attention of those about planting to their large collection at

Flushing, near New York.

Their FRUIT TREES and PLANTS are of vigorous growth and the best quality, and can be selected at low rates

Evergreen and Deciduous Trees

they cultivate in great variety and of handsome form.

They deliver Goods at Fulton Market Wharf free, and invite purchasers to visit their grounds or to select from the different Catalogues, which can be obtained from H. E. LANE, No. 42 Park Row, where orders may be left. 285o

THE GREAT WHOLESALE CASH JEWELLERY HOUSE

OF NEW YORK.

C. P. GIRTON

MANUFACTURING JEWELLER,

208 Broadway.

All kinds of Goods for the Jewellery Envelope Business, including all "Union Emblems." 290o

LIFE OR DEATH.—The subscribers take pleasure in announcing that they are now prepared to mail (free) to those who wish it, a copy of an important little work by the late Dr. Brandreth, entitled "The Jacob Bell's Medical Guidelines," published for the benefit, and as a safeguard to young men and persons who suffer from NERVOUSNESS, PREMATURE DECAY, &c., &c., supplying the means of self-cure. The reader is irresistibly led to compare a useful life with an ignoble death.

Reader, lose not a moment, but send your address for a copy of this little work. Address the Publishers,

DR. JOHN B. GODEN & CO.,
64 and 66 John St., New York.

284-85o

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

THE Advertiser having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe Lung Affection, and that dread disease, CONSUMPTION, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted; and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing. Parties wishing the prescription will please address

REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
Williamsburg, Kings County, N. Y.

283-90o

Dr. Brown's Patent Baby-Tender.

Hosts for the Invalidities.

THIS article of Nursery Furniture is different from, superior to, and will supply the place of everything heretofore used for that purpose.

N. B.—The attention of each and every Mother, Nurse, and Guardian of Young Babies is called to this, as the proper physical development, and comfort of the child depends with the exercise of our equitable nurse"—Mothers of the

J. F. BROWN & CO.,
Warerooms No. 697 Broadway, N. Y., between Houston and Bleecker Sts.
Send for our Circular. 90o

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE.—NEW INVENTION.—Address, including Stamp, DR. FRANCIS, No. 1 Astor Pl., New York City. 286o

$50 PER MONTH and Expenses paid. Address at once for terms. J. W. HARRIS & CO., Boston, Mass. 282-87o

BILLIARD BALLS, Ivory and Patent Composition, of the finest quality, at reduced prices. Manufactured and for sale by WM. H. WILLING, 434 Broadway. Billiard Cloth of the best quality. 288o

Shaler's Flexible Roller Patent Floor Skates.

Beware of Counterfeits.

THE ONLY PERFECT SKATE in use. The Inventor has the Patent Rights on it.

The use of these Skates imparts a perfect knowledge of the art of Skating on Ice, as well as furnishing the most pleasing and healthful exercise ever presented to the public. Hundreds of Ladies in the city have become proficient for Skaters by the use of them.

The only place for the genuine article is 466 Broadway N. Y. G. M. VAIL, Sole Agent and Manufacturer. 290o

JOY TO THE WORLD.

Clothes Washed in One Minute by JOHNSON'S UNION WASHING MACHINE.

Patented April 10, 1860.

PRICE $6 TO $10.

A GOLD CAN OFFER IS Washes every spot. Sure and certain, perfect washing on the perfect washing on the Call and see it in operation at 343 Broadway, New York, and 312 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors. 303

CASSELL'S

Illustrated History of England.

THE TENTH BY J. F. SMITH, ED TO THE REIGN OF EDWARD I., AND FROM THAT PERIOD,

By William Howitt.

In Fortnightly Parts of 64 Pages, price 15 cts.; Monthly Parts of 128 pages, price 30 cts.

The whole will be completed in six volumes, of six hundred pages each, forming the cheapest, the best, and the only New Edition of the Work published in this country.

"A splendid work. It will be an invaluable History."—New York Observer.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 31 Park Row.

NOW WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Grover & Baker's

CELEBRATED NOISELESS

Sewing Machines,

No family can afford to be without one.

495 BROADWAY, N.Y.

600o

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—See advertisement next page. 288 & 9o

GARDNER'S

Rheumatic and Neuralgia COMPOUND,

A certain, safe and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Sick Headache. It is an internal remedy, giving out at once entirely eradicating the disease, requiring no change in diet or business, and may be taken by children and persons of the most delicate constitutions with perfect safety.

Prepared from 82 Nassau St., Boston, Mass., by C. WELLS & CO., and for sale by New York, Wholesale Agents, 283-87o

Prof. L. Miner's Hair Invigorator,

—OR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.

Securing and preventing Baldness

For removing Scurf and Dandruff.

For beautifying and making the Hair soft and curly.

To restore it to Bald and effected spots, composed of the hair in the form of

Be sure and get the right article

Prof. L. Miner's Hair Invigorator,

Wholesale Depot, 50 Dey St., New York.

Also,

PROF. L. MINER'S INSTANTANEOUS LIQUID HAIR DYE

Price 50 cents per bottle.

Warranted superior to all others. 287-89o

For Sale by Druggists, and you will acknowledge the fact.

WHEELER & WILSON'S SEWING MACHINES

AT REDUCED PRICES

With Glass Cloth Presser, Improved Loop-Check, New Style Hemmer, Feller, Tucker, &c.

Office, 505 Broadway, New York.

"This Machine makes the 'LOCK-STITCH' and ranks highest on account of elasticity, permanency, beauty and general desirableness of the stitching when done, and the great range of its application."—Report of American Institute, New York. 284 8o

Smith and Wesson's Seven-Shooter.

J. W. STOKES, Agent,

191 Chambers Street, N. Y.

THIS PISTOL is light, has great force, is sure fire, shoots accurately, can be left loaded any length of time without fear of injury, and is out of order, is safe to carry. Every Pistol warranted.

CAUTION TO DEALERS.

Be sure and get there named "Smith & Wesson, Spring field, Mass." as no others genuine. All cartridges previous to last heat of the brown are unfit for use. Pistols are guaranteed, and all such infringements will be prosecuted. I have the cartridges here Smith & Wesson's chronograph with and of the best

HORSE POWDERS. DEPOT FOR R. G. WELLING'S Condition Powders for Horses, 416 Seventh street, New York. Free Tilly Swift, 416 and 418 Seventh street. 287-89o

CHARLES HEIDSIECK CHAMPAGNE.

This popular Wine, of which the undersigned are

SOLE AGENTS FOR NORTH AMERICA,

Received the Prize Premium at the

BORDEAUX EXPOSITION IN 1859.

The Medal awarded by the Judges can be seen at our office. 600 T. W. DAVAUD & BERARD, 100 Front St., N. Y

Patented November 1st, 1859.

The measures are

A, the distance round the Neck.

B to B, the Yoke.

C to C, the Sleeve

D to D, distance round the Body under the armpits

E to E, the length of the Shirt.

BALLOU'S

Patented Improved French Yoke SHIRTS.

Patented November 1st, 1859.

A New Style of Shirt, warranted to Fit.

By sending the above measure per mail we can guarantee a perfect fit of our new style of Shirt, which we offer to ready-made at $12, $15, $16, $24, $30, $36, and $42 per dozen. Or under measure at $18, $20, $24, $30, $36, and $42 per dozen. Or order measure for less than half dozen Shirts.

Also Importers and Dealers in MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

BALLOU BROTHERS,

409 Broadway, N. Y.

Wholesale Trade supplied on the usual terms

STEINWAY & SONS'

PATENT OVERSTRUNG GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS

Are now considered the best Piano manufactured

Each Instrument warranted for five years.

Warerooms, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker St., near Broadway, N. Y. 900o

BOOK ON PORTABLE ENGINES.—"Practical instructions for the Portable Engine, enabling every one to be his own Engineer; by a Graduate of the Stevens Academy, and former Member of the United States Corps of Engineers." A large Illustrated Pamphlet, sent by mail to any part of the country, price 25 cents, by the Publishers, FOWLER AND WELLS, New York.

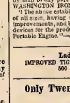
This is the only established manufacturer Portable Engines of any size, having the latest and most valuable patented improvements, and being a complete combination of known devices for the production of a compact, efficient and cheap Portable Engine.—Scientific American. 283-85o

Ladd, Webster & Co's

IMPROVED PORTABLE SEWING MACHINES.

800 Broadway, New York. 900o

Only Twenty-five Cents a Bottle.



Superior Old Tom or London Cordial

GIN,

Distilled under the immediate superintendence of Dr. Evans de Lacaze, for medical and private use.

Wholesale Agents, CHEANE & GLADDING,

42 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

For sale by single bottle or case, by Druggists and Grocers everywhere. Also by J. F. FARRELL, 555 Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel, N. Y. 900

THE ELECTROTYPING OF FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER is done by WILLIAM BENTON, 181 William St., New York

FRANK LESLIE'S

ILLUSTRATED

NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1861, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York

No. 286—Vol. XI.] NEW YORK, MAY 11, 1861. [Price 6 Cents.

REINFORCEMENT OF FORT PICKENS IN PENSACOLA HARBOR BY FEDERAL SHIPS-OF-WAR.

For several weeks we were constantly receiving "positive" information that Fort Pickens had been reinforced and revictualled, but all such reports proved to be mere newspaper canards. Like the cry of "wolf," the report of "reinforcements" became a bugbear. At last, however, we received sketches and letters from the scene of action, and the official report proclaimed the fact that Fort Pickens had been reinforced. The manner of effecting this important movement will be explained in the following communication and the official report:

The great question that has been agitating the public and the press for weeks has at last been solved—Fort Pickens has been reinforced. As it may be interesting to your readers to know how it was accomplished so successfully, I will give you a description. Rumors were prevalent for several days that the fort was to be attacked. It was thought advisable to put the troops we had on board, which we brought out from Old Point Comfort last January, Captain Vodges' company of Artillery and the Marines of the squadron into the fort; so on Friday, the 19th, a steamer of despatches arrived from Washington. What his orders were of course we know not, but on that night, as soon as it was dark, which was about eight o'clock, all the marines from the Sabine and St. Louis came on board. We got up anchor and stood in for the beach, getting as close in as the water would allow. We came to anchor, got out the boats, put Captain Vodges' company in them, and at eleven o'clock they started for the beach, under the command of Lieut. Smith, of our ship, a brave, fearless and daring officer. They were to land on the beach, outside of the harbor, and in case of attack they were to send up signal rockets, when we were to go to their assistance. You may best judge of the excitement and the anxious hearts on board. We watched the beach with eager eyes; but as time rolled on and no signals were seen, we began to breathe easier, and at two A.M. the boats were hoisted up. The surf was very heavy, and it would have been hazard his to land. He found the beach too rough, so went inside of the harbor, and under the guns of Forts McRae and Barrancas, accomplished his mission, without being seen or heard. Having done this so nicely, we concluded to try it again; we sent the troops in the same manner, the Wyandotte towing the boats in. At daylight we could see the boats just showing off from the beach. They landed in the same spot; they returned safely to the ship, when we up anchor and joined the fleet, highly pleased with our result. We have accomplished what we were sent here for—to reinforce Fort Pickens. Threats had been made that if we attempted it oceans of blood would be shed, but the Brooklyn neither fears nor cares for their threats, and will teach all traitors and rebels, when the time comes, that the flag she carries at her gaff, the Stars and Stripes, cannot be trampled upon with impunity; and God help the poor wretches that stand in front of her terrific battery, manned by determined men, who love their country and their country's flag!

FATHER MOONEY CELEBRATING MASS BEFORE THE SIXTY-NINTH REGIMENT OF N. Y. VOLUNTEERS ON BOARD THE STEAMER BURNS THE VOYAGE FROM NEW YORK TO ANNAPOLIS (SEE PAGE 413)

Navy Yard Foundry. Stores for Mooring Vessels. Sand-hills and Beach of Santa Rosa Island.

LANDING REINFORCEMENTS ON SANTA ROSA ISLAND IN PENSACOLA HARBOR, FOR FORT PICKENS—SWIMMING HORSES TO LAND.—FROM A SKETCH BY AN OFFICER OF THE EXPEDITION.

This sketch represents the Brooklyn as she lay that night close to the shore, Lieut. Smith's boats returning, and the steamer Wyandotte towing the boats in.

We are now landing the troops brought out by the Atlantic right under their eyes without molestation. The enemy numbers about 6 000, and are erecting batteries all along the beach.

The other sketch represents the fleet as it lays. The famous sandbag battery, at the foot of the lighthouse, Forts McRae, Pickens, Barrancas. At the lighthouse battery there are some six heavy guns. Fort McRae is now abandoned, but the Secession flag still floats there. Pickens is bristling with guns, and army officers say that with the present forces they can hold it against the whole South. Word has passed that the mailbag is closing, so I must close. You will hear from me again. Yours, &c.,

AN OFFICER ON THE BROOKLYN.

(Continued on page 408.)

Barnum's American Museum

IS overflowing with Living Wonders, including Old Grizzly Adams' California Bears, which perform a variety of amusing tricks, Sea Lion, Aztec Children, Albino Family, What Is It? Bearded Lady, Lilliputian Queen, and Superb Dramatic Performances every afternoon and evening.

IRVING HALL,

IRVING PLACE AND FIFTEENTH STREET,

Opposite to the

ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

FOR BALLS, CONCERTS, LECTURES, FESTIVALS, FAIRS, &c., &c., &c.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

FRANK LESLIE, Editor and Publisher.

NEW YORK, MAY 11, 1861.

All Communications, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One Copy	17 weeks	$ 1
One do.	1 year	$ 3
Two do.	1 year	$ 5
Or One Copy	2 years	$ 5
Three Copies	1 year	$ 6
Five do.	1 year (to one address)	$10

And an extra Copy to the person sending a Club of Five. Every additional subscription, $2.

NOTICE TO PHOTOGRAPHERS.

We shall be much obliged to our photographic friends if they will write in pencil the name and description on the back of each picture, together with their own name and address. This notice is rendered necessary from the fact that so many photographs are sent to us from our friends throughout the country without one word of explanatory matter, they giving us credit for being en rapport with everything that transpires or exists in all parts of the United States. The columns of our paper prove that we are up to the times in almost everything which occurs of public importance throughout the world, still we are not so ubiquitous but that something may occur beyond the circuit of our far-reaching information. To save labor and insure accuracy, descriptions and names (as above indicated) should, in all cases, accompany photographic pictures or sketches.

Special Notice

VOLUNTEERS who are about leaving with their regiments, and who can sketch, are requested to call upon FRANK LESLIE, at his Office, No. 19 City Hall Square, without delay.

Officers in the Army and Navy are solicited to forward to FRANK LESLIE's address any sketches of public interest relating to the war, which will be liberally paid for.

Foreign News.

England.—There is very little of interest in the last papers. The Duke of Cambridge had been lectured by the press for some disparaging remarks on the discipline of the volunteers made by him at a public dinner; and General Scarlett, an officer of reputation and considerable military experience, had contradicted him on the spot, and spoken very favorably of the late exhibitions at Wimbledon and Brighton. Col. Berkeley's annual motion for vote by ballot had been rejected in the House of Commons, by 274 to 153 This is rather an inauspicious time to introduce American Institutions into England. Rumors were afloat that the Queen was in a state of great mental prostration, owing to her mother's death. A prospectus had been issued of a company called the "Liverpool and New Orleans Steam Navigation Company," with the object of establishing direct steam communication between Liverpool and New Orleans. The capital is fixed at £200,000, with power to increase, and many influential men are engaged in the enterprise. It is also announced, by advertisement, that a Company had been formed in Liverpool for establishing direct communication between that port and Charleston. The first steamer of the line is expected to be dispatched from Liverpool about the middle of July. The Independence Belge has a rumor which is probably a canard It is that Cardinal Wiseman is to succeed Pio Nino, under the title of Pope Decimo, and that the Papacy will be removed from Rome to London.

France.—Military preparations still continue, but their object is as much a matter of conjecture as ever. It is very clear that a great alteration has taken place in the relations between Russia and France, chiefly caused by the insurrections and riots in Warsaw and other parts of Poland. The Russian Government assert that the doctrine of Nationality, so constantly iterated by the French Emperor, is calculated to disturb every throne in Europe, and it is undoubtedly right. The slaughter of the Poles by the Russians has profoundly affected the French masses, and the Prefects of almost every district in France have notified the Minister of the Interior of the fact. Louis Napoleon, through the columns of the Moniteur, thus delicately informs the Czar of the fact: "The late events at Warsaw have been unanimously commented upon by the French press, with the traditional sympathy which the cause of Poland has always excited in the West of Europe; but these expressions of interest would ill serve the Polish cause if they had the effect of misleading the public opinion, by allowing it to be supposed that the Emperor of the French encourages hopes which he could not satisfy." The Pays states that orders have been received at Toulon to complete the fitting out of the fleet destined to bring back the French troops from Syria. If this be true, one great cause of quarrel between France and England will be abolished.

Italy.—The Independence Belge of the 21st definitely states that the negotiations between Louis Napoleon and Victor Emanuel for throwing open Rome to the Italians are rapidly coming to a favorable conclusion. The Pope has again declared he will not leave Rome until compelled by force. Garibaldi has had a conference with his old companions in arms, who have persuaded him to accept Count Cavour's more prudent policy as the wisest course to pursue. It is also said that he is reconciled to the great Sardinian Premier.

Spain.—A great change has come over the spirit of this nation. Conquest seems to have breathed a new life into her old frame. The most singular thing in this is the evident favor the resuscitation meets with from England. The only point of difference about Hayti will be the Slavery question! It is difficult to see how Spain can reconcile the free and slave negro question!

South America.—One of the most terrible earthquakes for many years occurred on the 20th March, at Mendoza, resulting in a loss of life of from ten to fifteen thousand persons. It happened about eight o'clock in the evening, [illegible] when [illegible] of the population were in the churches. The vibration lasted only six seconds, but in that time the once flourishing city of Mendoza was a heap of ruins and mangled bodies. It is rumored that the cities of San Juan and San Luis have shared a similar fate, but there is no certainty in the report—which we trust is unfounded. Mendoza is in the Argentine Republic, and was the seat of considerable trade.

Japan.—It is said that the Japanese authorities, alarmed at the prospect of trouble when the Anglo-French fleet arrives, have invited the Foreign Ministers to return to Jeddo.

The State of the Nation.

SINCE our last issue the mighty movement which has roused into terrible activity thirty millions of people has progressed with fearful determination and steadiness of purpose on both sides. Undoubted evidence is given in every step taken by the Government at Washington, that the positions assumed and the intentions shadowed out in President Lincoln's inaugural address will be fully carried out, both to the letter and in the spirit. Preparations on a scale of extraordinary magnitude are carried on with sleepless activity, and every movement shows that a plan of operation has been decided upon which will embrace all the strong points in the Southern country, extending an armed cordon round the active Secession States, and effectively occupying and holding in check those States which are doubtful or hesitating. The mental grasp of a great tactician is evident to the most careless observer, and a stern determination to keep the United States a united whole is perceptible in the mighty concentrating march of the vast armies of the North.

A very significant fact becomes more markedly apparent every day. While the whole North, East and West are as a unit upon the great question before the people, such is by no means the case in the Southern States. In Western Virginia the Union sentiment is almost universal; in Maryland the Secessionists are strong and active, but are certainly in the minority; in Kentucky, Missouri and Tennessee the Union element is speaking out loudly and firmly. Such a state of things is ominous for the South, for it is thus placed between the double danger of invasion from a powerful force from without and internal warfare and divided interests within.

An official report reached Washington last week of the complete and full reinforcement of Fort Pickens by the Federal ships-of-war. Fort Pickens may now be considered safe from any force which can be brought to bear against it by the Southern authorities. Forts Monroe and McHenry have also been fully reinforced, and are now in a state of perfect defence, and may, in the present aspect of affairs, be deemed impregnable. The great strategic point of Cairo, which commands the upper Mississippi and the Ohio Rivers, has been taken possession of by the Federal troops, who have fortified it and now hold it. The position is such that a small force can successfully hold it against a much larger body of men. But in a day or two it will be occupied by a force so large as to defy all attempts to attack it.

In view of the vast and extraordinary military operations now being put into action, the President has issued the following proclamation:

PROCLAMATION OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

WASHINGTON, May 3, 1861.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Whereas, existing exigencies demand immediate and adequate measures for the protection of the national Constitution and the preservation of the national Union by the suppression of the insurrectionary combinations now existing in several States for opposing the laws of the Union and obstructing the execution thereof, to which end a military force in addition to that called forth by my Proclamation of the fifteenth day of April in the present year, appears to be indispensably necessary; now therefore I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States and Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy thereof, and of the militia of the several States when called into actual service, do hereby call into the service of the United States forty-two thousand and thirty-four volunteers, to serve for a period of three years unless sooner discharged, and to be mustered into service as infantry and cavalry. The proportions of each arm and the details of enrolment and organization will be made through the Department of War; and I also direct that the regular army of the United States be increased by the addition of eight regiments of infantry, one regiment of cavalry and one regiment of artillery, making altogether a maximum aggregate increase of twenty-two thousand seven hundred and fourteen, officers and enlisted men, the details of which increase will also be made known through the Department of War; and I further direct the enlistment for not less than one nor more than three years of eighteen thousand seamen, in addition to the present force, for the naval service of the United States. The details of the enlistment and organization will be made known through the Department of the Navy. The call for volunteers, hereby made, and the direction for the increase of the regular army, and for the enlistment of seamen hereby given, together with the plan of organization adopted for the volunteers and for the regular forces hereby authorized, will be submitted to Congress as soon as assembled. In the meantime I earnestly invoke the co-operation of all good citizens in the measures hereby adopted for the effectual suppression of unlawful violence, for the impartial enforcement of constitutional laws, and for the speediest possible restoration of peace and order, and, with those, of happiness and prosperity throughout the country.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this third day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-fifth.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

By the President.

WILLIAM H. SEWARD, Secretary of State.

The entire volunteer force thus called into service by the two Proclamations of the President amounts to one hundred and seventeen thousand and thirty-four men. The regular army is also increased from eighteen thousand to forty thousand seven hundred and fourteen men. The Government will thus be able to throw an army of one hundred thousand men into the field for active operations, while at the same time it will have at command a reserve of over fifty-seven thousand men, to be employed in the defence of Washington or in garrison duty.

This second call has been responded to with extraordinary alacrity; indeed, the formation of volunteer regiments has been so rapid that the State militia, which has been ordered out, has in several instances been disbanded, as their term of duty is legally but very brief, while the volunteer regiments are organized to serve for three years.

It is not to be supposed that the South is resting idly secure while these threatening and mighty preparations are advancing with such rapidity in the North. The Southern papers are full of the martial doings of the people. The war spirit is said to be thoroughly aroused, and military organizations are forming in every section of the country; arms of the first class are said to be abundant, together with ammunition sufficient for all purposes. One sentiment is said to animate the entire Confederate States, which resolves itself to a determination to defend the position they have assumed at all hazards and to the bitter end. They deem their position greatly strengthened by the action of the Governor of Virginia and his advisers, a compact having been concluded which places the military force of Virginia at the disposition of General Davis immediately, which is virtual secession from and positive aggression against the United States, while the question of Secession has yet to be submitted to the vote of the people. Much expectation also rested upon the action of Maryland, based in some manner upon the riotous proceedings in Baltimore and the attempt of the Legislature to usurp dictatorial powers which would have thrown the State into the arms of the Secessionists. But Maryland is lost to the Southern cause, for the Legislature failed in its action, the Federal troops possess military control of Maryland, and the Union party is manifesting itself in every section.

The exigencies of the case induced Jefferson Davis to convene an extra session of the Confederate Congress, which met at Montgomery on the 29th of April, Howell Cobb presiding. The following is a digest of the Message from Jefferson Davis, which was presented for its consideration, and was afterwards discussed in secret session:

CONGRESS met at noon.

President Davis's Message announced the ratification of the permanent Constitution of the Confederate States, and that it only remains for an election to be held for the designation of officers to administer the Government.

It says the declaration of war made against this Confederation by Abraham Lincoln rendered it necessary to convene Congress to devise means to replenish the treasury and for the defence of the country.

The President then reviews the relations heretofore existing between the States, and the events which have resulted in the present warfare. Referring to the result of the mission of the Commissioners to Washington, he says the crooked paths of diplomacy can scarcely furnish an example so wanting in courtesy, candor and directness as was the course of the United States Government toward the Commissioners. The President incidentally refers to the prudent caution observed by the fleet off Charleston during the bombardment of Fort Sumpter, and pays a high compliment to the Carolinians for their forbearance before and heroism, daring and magnanimity after the bombardment.

Commissioners have been sent to England, France, Prussia and Belgium, to ask our recognition as a member of the family of nations, and make treaties of amity and commerce.

He recommends the appointment of other diplomatic agents. He says the Confederacy, through Mr. Stephens, has concluded a convention with Virginia, by which Virginia has united her powers and fortunes with us. He has satisfactory assurances that other Southern States will soon strike their fortunes with ours.

He says the most of the Executive Departments are in successful operation. The Postmaster-General can soon be ready to assume the direction of postal affairs.

In conclusion, he congratulates the Confederacy on the patriotic devotion exhibited by the people of the Confederacy; men of high official and social position and wealth are serving in the volunteer ranks. The railway companies propose liberal rates for transportation of the mails, and to receive in compensation the bonds of the Confederacy.

He says a people thus united and resolved cannot fail of final success. Our cause is just and holy, and we protest solemnly in the face of mankind that we desire peace at any sacrifice save that of honor and independence. We seek no conquest, no aggrandizement, no concession from the free States. All we ask is to be let alone—that none shall attempt our subjugation by arms. This we will and must resist to the direst extremity.

The moment this pretension is abandoned the sword will drop from our grasp, and we shall be ready to enter into treaties of amity and commerce mutually beneficial. So long as this pretension is maintained, with a firm reliance on that Divine power which covers with His protection the just cause, we will continue to struggle for our inherent right to freedom, independence and self-government.

There is much in this message which is false as to facts, but it is earnest in defence of the position of the Cotton States, and presents many points for the serious consideration of the people, among which not the least is the question of funds—the most important material in the successful issue of modern warfare.

Governor Letcher, of Virginia, has come out openly at last. The approach of the masses of Federal troops has compelled him, however unwillingly, to define his position, which he does in the following Proclamation:

The Sovereignty of the Commonwealth of Virginia having been denied, her territorial rights assailed, her soil threatened with invasion by the authorities at Washington, and every artifice employed which could inflame the people of the Northern States and misrepresent our purposes and wishes, it becomes the solemn duty of every citizen of this State to prepare for the impending conflict.

Those misrepresentations have been carried to such an extent that foreigners and naturalized citizens, who but a few years ago, were denounced by the North and deprived of essential rights, have now been induced to enlist into regiments for purpose of invading this State, which then vindicated those rights and effectually resisted encroachments which threatened their destruction.

Against such a policy and against a force which the Government at Washington, relying upon its numerical strength, is now rapidly concentrating, it becomes the State of Virginia to prepare proper safeguards.

To this end and for these purposes, and with a determination to repel invasion, I, John Letcher, Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, by authority of the Convention, do hereby authorize the Commanding-General of the military forces of this State, to call out, and to cause to be mustered into the service of Virginia, from time to time, as the public exigency may require, such additional number of volunteers as he may deem necessary.

To facilitate this call, the annexed schedule will indicate the place of rendezvous at which the companies called for will assemble upon receiving orders for service.

Given under my hand, as Governor, and under the seal of the Commonwealth, at Richmond, this third day of May, 1861, and in the eighty-fifth year of the Commonwealth.

JOHN LETCHER.

It will thus be seen that the Government of Virginia is now in armed opposition to the Federal Government, and any movement, strategical or otherwise, of the Federal troops will be met as an act of warlike aggression. This position assumed by the authorities of Virginia is unfortunate, as it is manifestly taken without the authority of the people, who have not yet voted upon the question of Secession, and it is doubly unfortunate inasmuch as it entails all the horrors and distresses of the battle-field upon the soil of Virginia. She is thus made the breakwater which shields for a time the Secession States from the army of the Federal Government.

The Governor of North Carolina has also issued a warlike Message, and calls upon the people for support. The Governor takes decided ground against the right of coercion against a sovereign State. He says it was expressly voted down in the Convention that formed the Constitution, and can never be submitted to. He recommends the raising of ten regiments to serve during the war, and the call of a State Convention at the earliest possible day, to enable North Carolina to join the Southern Confederacy. He says Lincoln is an usurper, and has seized the sword without authority of law, and for this reason, as a matter of self-defence, he authorized the seizure of the military posts in that State.

The authorities of nearly all the Border States are eager and earnest for a Union, offensive and defensive, with the Southern Confederacy; but the voice of the people has yet to be heard, and the encouraging presence of a vast Federal force will, it is supposed, enable the Union feeling to manifest itself unawed by the display of the armed local forces so well calculated to suppress all manifestation of sentiments contrary to the will of the State Governments.

In the first Proclamation of the President, in which a requisition was made for seventy-five thousand troops, twenty days were allowed for the armed combinations of the South to disperse and go to their homes. The time of grace expired on Sunday last, the 5th day of May, and henceforward all men in the South found with arms in their hands are to be looked upon legally as conspiring against the Government, and treated accordingly. The Federal forces are to be advanced upon Virginia at once. Alexandria and Harper's Ferry will be taken possession of forthwith. General Butler, whose skill, activity and intelligence are highly commended, has taken possession of the Relay House, eight miles from Baltimore, and is strongly fortifying the position. It is a strategic point either for Baltimore or Harper's Ferry; the latter, it is stated, is strengthened by batteries in the rocks, which will render its recapture a task of no little difficulty. Ben McCollough is said to be there with a strong force.

Ground has already been broken as a commencement to the thorough fortification of the Arlington Heights, which will be strongly occupied.

The blockade of the entire Southern coast will be completed before the close of the present week. It will be thorough and effective, the naval force being all sufficient.

The three Commissioners from Baltimore sent to consult with the President have returned, and presented their report to the Legislature. Their names are Otho Scott, Robert M. McLane and W. J. Ross, all prominent politicians. At a caucus in the evening of the 6th inst. it was addressed by Hon. R. M. McLane (one of the Commissioners), in a very long and strong Secession speech. He said he was convinced, since the President had openly avowed his intention of subjugating the Southern States, that it was the duty of Governor Hicks to fulfil his obligations to the State and oppose Mr. Lincoln's policy.

The latest news from Washington is of considerable importance; it shows that Virginia is thoroughly aroused and her troops already moving to the border. It is confidently reported that General Ruggles has taken up his quarters at Fredericksburg, and is to take a position in front of Washington and in connection with Brigadier-General Cooke, commanding at Harper's Ferry, thus to cover and defend the Potomac border against invasion from the North. It is now plainly apparent that any advance movement of the Federal troops will precipitate a collision, and war from that moment will be actively inaugurated.

MAJOR ANDERSON IN WASHINGTON.

Major Anderson, having rested a few days in New York, left for Washington last week and arrived there on the 4th instant. He at once reported himself to General Scott, and called upon the President and Secretary Cameron, who received him with the most flattering cordiality, and complimented him highly upon his defence of Fort Sumpter. The President expressed his willingness to grant a generous leave of absence to Major Anderson if he desired it, at the same time in a measure urging it upon him as a duty to enable him to recover his health. He further remarked that should some extraordinary military exigency occur, he should look with confidence upon the well-known judgment, tried devotion and military experience of Major Anderson. It is currently reported in military circles that Major Anderson will be raised to the position of Brigadier-General.

THREATS TO BURN NEW YORK.

Last week rumors were rife of various attempts to damage New York and murder New Yorkers. It was said that endeavors had been made to effect a break in the Croton dam, that the support of the bridges of the Harlem Railroad had been tampered with, and to crown our promised feast of horrors New York was to be burned over our heads. Information of these threatened disasters reached the Superintendent of the Police, and Mr. Kennedy immediately instituted inquiries, the result of which, it is said, is that the greatest vigilance is recommended, as amidst this great smoke the fire could be distinctly traced. The Croton dam and the whole line of the works, including the reservoirs, are closely and jealously watched; the restless spirit of vigilance is aroused and will not be allowed to slumber until peace has been restored to the country. The following is the letter received by Mr. Kennedy about the burning of New York city:

L[illegible]ville, Ky., A[illegible] 30, 1861.

Sir—I have travelled four hundred miles to be able safely to mail this letter. A thoroughly organized plot is now in progress of execution to burn New York, Philadelphia and Boston. A portion of the men assigned to your city are already in your midst, and others are on their way. I know what I say to be true. I dare not tell you how I know, for that would lead to my inevitable detection, the consequences of which you can readily guess.

The intention is to fire the three cities simultaneously, in as many places as possible, and at the same hour of the night. This is to be done the night before the attack on Washington.

  has the direction of the whole plot. One hundred and twenty-five men have been assigned to your city and Brooklyn, and eighty to each of the others. This is not a movement of the Government, though known to Davis. At first he discouraged it, but since Lincoln's proclamation he has withdrawn his opposition. The men entrusted with the execution of the plot all belong to the "Inner Temple of the Knights of the Golden Circle."

The plan has been maturing for two months, but did not include New York until within a week or ten days. The men assigned in Boston and Philadelphia have been at their posts for a week, but the determination to include New York has caused a delay, and now the time will depend upon how soon Davis is ready to attack Washington. I have told you, not all that I know, but all that I can with safety to myself. The chances are you will disregard the warning, but I feel that I have at least discharged my duty. * * * * I am not your friend; I am one of the most unrelenting of your enemies; but I am an open, and, I hope, an honorable foe. I expect to fight you to the death, but not with lucifer matches and camphene. Do not do the people of the South the injustice to believe that one out of ten among them would for a moment sanction this hell-begotten scheme. It is foreign to their nature.

More Artists for the War.—Shumway went with the Seventh, and Whittredge, Gifford, David Johnson and James Hart have buckled on the knapsack and are doing the State some service. On Thursday the National Academy suddenly closed their exhibition, the galleries having been given up to a military company, newly organized, and in which several artists and lovers of art are enlisted. This stirring up of men, whose ordinary pursuits are so peaceful and delightful, is one of the clearest proofs of the deep, absorbing nature of the patriotic passion.

PERSONAL.

Benjamin T. Onderdonk, Bishop of New York, died on the 28th at his residence, in Twenty-seventh street, New York. He was in his seventy-second year. He entered Columbia College in 1805, graduated in 1809, and took orders in 1811. In 1813 he married Miss Moscrop, who survives him. In 1830 he was made Bishop of New York. In 1844 some of his enemies charged him with laxity of conduct, which led to a protracted trial. It was his consolation to know that none of his friends credited the allegation, although the inquiry led to the Bishop's retirement from public life. His career since then has been eminently Christian. He died of water on the brain. Despite all his enemies have said, he was a good and gentle man—his only fault being a geniality of manner, which bad men associate with vice.

Ex-Lieut.-Governor Heber Pond, of Connecticut, died at Milford, lately, at a very advanced age. He was graduated at Yale in 1802, was elected High Sheriff of the county in 1819, and held it for a long series of years. He was elected Lieutenant-Governor of the State in 1850, and twice re-elected, with an interval of one year in 1851. During the latter part of 1853, after Governor Seymour's appointment in Russia, he was acting Governor.

James M. Chambers, proprietor of the Philadelphia Bulletin, has been appointed Navy Agent for that city.

Col. Van Buren has resigned his position in the Ninth Regiment, and Capt. Dodge, of Bedloe's Island, reigns in his stead.

C. F. Adams, our Minister to England, Cassius M. Clay, Minister to Russia, and Jacob Haldiman, Minister to Sweden, all sailed in the Niagara, on the 1st of May.

Mr. Nathaniel Niles has given $2,000 towards a monument in the Central Park, on which is to be inscribed the names of those who may fall in the present war for the Independence of the Union. The first care, however, is for the living, and as many thousands have left our city whose families are thus deprived, by the patriotism of their protectors, of their daily food, we think the living should be first cared for. The dead can wait for their glory—the living cannot for their food.

A Musical Prodigy.—There is now in this city a lad of eleven years of age who is a musical prodigy. His performance of Thalberg's arrangements of the "Stranieri," "Home, Sweet Home," and "Le Désir d'Amer," was listened to with unfeigned pleasure. His hands are exceedingly small, but they master the keys apparently without effort, executing the most intricate and rapid passages with neatness and brilliancy. His expression is astonishingly correct and tasteful, giving life and exquisite meaning to his touch. He is the son of Mr Pape, of Mobile, and is altogether the most agreeable prodigy we have ever seen, as he is entirely free from the affectation and nervousness which so often accompany precocious talent. Owing to his family's ample fortune, he makes no professional use of his genius; he has, however, been heard in numerous private musical circles in the city, and always listened to with wonder and delight.

E G P Wilkins, the well-known and respected art critic of the New York Herald and Leader, died at his house in Amity street, on Sunday, in his thirty-first year. He was born in Boston. As a dramatist he was very successful, his late play being "Henriette," recently produced at Wallack's Theatre.

General Harney has written a letter to his friend Colonel Polion, of St. Louis, in which he declares his attachment to the Union. He warns the Missourians that if they secede they are ruined financially, socially and politically. He entreats them to remain true to the Federal Government.

WAR FEELING IN THE EAST NORTH AND WEST.

WISCONSIN.—The Madison Patriot of the 24th April says: "M. M. Samuel, of the Indian Fur Depot at St. Croix, Polk county, writes to Governor Randall that he has at his command five hundred braves of the Chippewa tribe, and he offers his own and their services in the conflict with the South. He has lived among the Chippewas for twenty years, and wishes to serve in the cause of the Union against treason. He has made the same offer to the President of the United States."

MINNESOTA.—The very warmest Union spirit reigns here. If there are no companies forming in the immediate vicinity, the farmers go to St. Paul's to enrol themselves. The Pioneer Guard of St. Paul's is quite full, and the overplus—thousands—have arranged to form themselves into other regiments.

A Veteran in the Field.—Ex-Governor Gorman is to head a regiment from this State. He was and is a Democrat, an ex M. C. He is the Major Gorman of the Indiana Volunteers who brought on the action at Buena Vista—afterward joined General Scott, and was engaged in most of the Valley of Mexico.

IOWA.—Business is at a stand in all the towns, and the military feeling is predominant. Cedar Falls has raised a regiment, and Dubuque is doing its best to accomplish the same. The members are all giants in form and in soul.

NEW JERSEY.—Too much praise cannot be given to Gen. Hatfield, for his energy in dispatching troops to Washington. The ladies of Hoboken, in order to testify their admiration of his patriotism, are preparing a stand of colors for his Brigade. Mrs. Edwin A. Stevens, Mrs. Hatfield, and other ladies, are prominent in this tribute to valor and duty. Mrs. General Hatfield will present the flag. At Rahway, Camden, Monmouth, Long Branch—indeed, everywhere, the utmost enthusiasm is manifested. New Jersey has already her three regiments en route. This completes her quota, but another regiment is ready for action if required. The New Jersey troops have arrived in Washington. Their admirable equipments and their fine soldierly qualities are the theme of general comment and praise. It is rumored that they will be put in active service immediately.

PENNSYLVANIA.—A man named Griver was arrested in Philadelphia, on the 1st of May, charged with being one of the Secessionists that took possession of Fort Pulaski, in January last. He says he was one of a company ordered by the Government to occupy the Fort, to prevent its falling into the hands of an irresponsible mob. He is now in prison, awaiting further evidence. He is a Philadelphian by birth, and came to see his family.

ILLINOIS.—If we can judge from the feeling rampant in Chicago, war to the knife will be waged against the Secessionists of the South by this State. The war feeling is intense. One hundred thousand dollars have been raised by private hand, and half a million has been offered by the State. Chicago has raised ten thousand men, and the State will turn out seventy-five thousand men.

On the 25th of April, Governor Yates of Illinois sent a special message to the State Legislature, ordering the seizure of Cairo, Alexander county, in consequence of orders received from the War Department, Washington. It appears that a number of Secessionists had conspired to seize Cairo, in order to control the Southern portion of the Central Illinois Railroad. The seizure was made with great secrecy and success.

The camp at Cairo is in a tolerably good condition to resist the rumored attack by Gen. Pillow. A letter from the camp to the Cincinnati Gazette, dated April 23d, says: "There are now here fully 3,000 men, and 500 more along the line of the road, extending sixty miles from Cairo. We have ten pieces of brass artillery, six and twelve pounders, which are being placed in batteries at proper points on both rivers, fully commanding the Ohio and Mississippi. They are mostly encamped at the point below the St. Charles' Hotel, and are all in good health and spirits, and in excellent discipline. They are commanded by Col Prentiss, of Quincy, an able officer, who was in the Mexican war. The people of the adjoining counties of Missouri and Kentucky are highly indignant at the occupation of Cairo, but it is not probable that they will make any attempt to molest us. We have all sorts of rumors of Southern troops coming from Memphis and other points, but no one here believes them. Cairo could now hold out against a force of 10,000 men, and is absolutely impregnable while the river is high, overflowing the land in Kentucky and Missouri. Our people feel safe, and do not apprehend any invasion."

Gen. Pillow, Gen. Ely and other prominent officers of the Confederate army, with a large number of Mississippi, Arkansas and Tennessee troops, are at Memphis, and heavy guns are arriving there daily. Col. Prentiss, commanding officer at this point, has just received the following dispatch from three of the most prominent citizens of Cincinnati: "General Pillow has several steamers ready at Memphis. He meditates an immediate attack on Cairo." Col Prentiss replied: "Let him come. We will learn to dig his ditch on the right side. I am ready."

MASSACHUSETTS, Boston.—Never within the memory of man, has the public mind been more stirred than it was on the 1st of May, when it was announced that the remains of the three soldiers who were murdered by the Baltimore mob, during the passage through that inhospitable city of the Sixth regiment, had arrived in the five o'clock train under charge of private Wright. Governor Andrew and Staff, the Executive Council, with the divisionary corps of Cadets as an escort, were present to receive the bodies. The coffins were covered with national flags, as were the hearses which bore them to Stone chapel, under which they were deposited to await final and more public obsequies. On the route to the chapel the band played dirges, and the rapidly gathered crowds uncovered as the procession moved past.

Boston, May 4.—Governor Andrew has called a special session of the Legislature to convene on the 14th inst. The funeral of Corporal Needham took place at Lawrence, to-day. After private services at the residence of the deceased, the remains were removed to the City Hall, escorted by a large civic and military procession. Flags were displayed at half-mast, and many private and public buildings were draped in mourning. The bodies of Whitney and Ladd will be removed to Lowell on Monday, their relatives declining a public funeral in Boston, which was tendered to them by Governor Andrew. The Lowell city authorities will take charge of their obsequies. An election to Congress, to fill the vacancy caused by the appointment of Charles Francis Adams as Minister to London, will be ordered for June 11. Mr. Adams has published a farewell address to his constituents. Orders have been issued from headquarters for the formation of four new regiments of infantry, to be numbered the Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth and Fourteenth. Colonel Fletcher Webster's regiment will proceed to Fort Warren next Monday.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, Portsmouth, May 4.—Five companies of State troops are here, quartered in the barracks of Camp Constitution. General Stark is in command. Augustus Jenks, Collector of the port, known as a sympathizer, was waited on to-day by a large crowd and compelled to hoist the American flag.

MAINE, Augusta, May 4.—For the State loan of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, six hundred thousand have been offered. The bids varied from par to four cent. premium.

OHIO, Cleveland, May 4.—Governor Curtin, of Pennsylvania; Gov. Dennison, of Ohio; Governor Randall, of Wisconsin, Governor Blair, of Michigan, Governor Morton, of Indiana, and ex-Governor Koerner, of Illinois, were in conference here last night. Their proceedings are not known. They were serenaded last night, and made speeches to the people.

MARYLAND, Perryville, May 2.—Fort McHenry was reinforced yesterday by sixty United States soldiers of the Fourth Artillery. The steamboat John S. Shriver, in charge of Lieutenant Whitmore, landed the men yesterday afternoon, between five and six o'clock. Four men had provisions wore al o[illegible] ni bed. The garrison of the fort now comprises between five and six hundred men, with ample provisions for eight months.

NEW YORK, Rochester, May 4.—Two additional full companies left the city this afternoon for Elmira, escorted to the depot by an immense crowd. Twelve companies in all have now gone.

Utica, May 4.—Two full companies of Colonel Christian's regiment left this city for Elmira to-day under command of Captains Smith and Wetmore.

Ithaca, May 3.—The 1st company of Ithaca Volunteers, about one hundred strong, left for New York this evening, amid the huzzas of 5,000 people. The 2d company is organized, and awaiting orders. $10,000 has been subscribed to the soldiers' families.

Elmira, May 3.—These are stirring times here. The arrival of troops gives quite a military appearance to the place. Gen. Vanvalkenburg and Assistant Quartermaster-General Walker having all they can possibly do to provide for the large number of troops arriving. There are now 1,848 troops quartered at this rendezvous, 400 of whom arrived to-day. The Onondaga Regiment, and a company from Waterloo, arrived last night. Two companies from Utica, and one each from Bath, Dansville and Cuba, arrived to-day. The Canesaraugus, Captain Stephen, of Dansville, have just arrived. They will be temporarily quartered in the Central Baptist Church. The Rev. Thomas K. Beecher has tendered the use of his church also. Nine companies from Rochester, now in Canandaigua, are expected in the morning. The officers of the various companies unite in stating that these men, without a notable exception, are well satisfied with their quarters and fare. The health of the troops is excellent, and the men are in the best spirits, expressing anxiety to be ordered to the seat of war as soon as possible.

Buffalo, May 3.—Four companies of volunteers left this afternoon for the rendezvous at Elmira. They were escorted to the depot by the Home Guard. Major Millard Fillmore, Ex-President, commanding in person. The Home Guard is composed of retired commissioned officers of the State Militia, and is being thoroughly drilled by Major Fillmore. About one hundred and fifty members are already enrolled.

Half a Million for Arms.—The Journal of Commerce learns upon authority which places the statement beyond a doubt, that an agent of the New York State Government left this city by the last English steamer, with five hundred thousand dollars for the purchase of arms and munitions of war. The funds are a part of the $3,000,000 appropriated by the last Legislature for war purposes. It is the intention of the State Military Board to obtain the best varieties of arms, of all sizes, that money can procure.

CONNECTICUT, Hartford, May 3.—The Legislature unanimously passed this morning a bill appropriating $2,000,000 for the organization and equipment of a volunteer militia, and to provide for the public defence. The bill provides for ten regiments of volunteers, and for the payment of $10 per month to each man in addition to the regular pay.

Patriotism.—Col. Hazard, the powder manufacturer and late Democrat candidate for Lieut.-Governor of Connecticut, writes to Gov. Buckingham lamenting the war, but in favor of sustaining the Government, the Constitution and the Union, and enclosing $500 for the benefit of Connecticut volunteers ($500 having been previously given), making $1,000 in all contributed by the Company of which Col Hazard is President, for the cause.

INDIANA, Indianapolis, May 4.—The Legislature has authorised the Governor to call six regiments for immediate service for one year for the defence of the State. The troops under this call will be in camp by Tuesday next.

WAR FEELING IN THE SOUTH.

TEXAS.—The Galveston Civilian says, that the Mexicans are already at work on the frontiers, the little town of Roma on the river above Brownsville having been pillaged and burnt. Brownsville has been threatened. Fort Bliss, El Paso, has been surrendered by Colonel Reeve to Colonel Magoffin, the State Commissioner. The San Antonio Herald learns from Messrs. J. G. Booth and B F. Dye, just from Fort Ewell, that some fifty Mexicans attacked Redmond's Ranch about the 12th instant, and demanded the keys to the buildings containing Government property and property belonging to the country. These Mexicans are residents of this State, but it is well known that they are backed by others in Mexico. They declare that they no longer respect Texas laws or Texas Government. The feeling in this State is entirely for Secession.

The Texas Episcopal Convention has been in session at Austin for some days, Bishop Gregg presiding. From the Gazette we learn that it has been decided to send a delegation to Montgomery, Ala., in July next, to meet with delegations from the several dioceses of the seceded States, "and to decide whether or not this venerable and influential religious body shall secede from the Northern Church." This is the first Episcopal State Convention held in the Seceded States in reference to this subject.

MISSOURI.—The St. Louis Democrat is sound in the backbone. It records with true patriotism that the St. Louis Arsenal has been reinforced. On the 22d April, seven hundred stalwart Missourians enlisted under Lincoln's proclamation. The Arsenal may now be considered as safe. From St. Joseph we learn that on the 20th of April a meeting of Secessionists was held at that place and a Secession flag was hoisted. Judge Hoggins made a speech full of hatred to the Union. On the 20th of April the United States Arsenal in Liberty, Clay county, was seized and garrisoned by one hundred Missourians. It contained thirteen hundred stand of arms, and about a dozen pieces of artillery, all of which was expected to be distributed in Clay and the adjoining counties, to be used in stopping the passage of the Federal troops which are expected here in a few days from above. The Secession feeling is increasing throughout the State during the past week. The Union men are at present very quiet, as many of them have been badly assaulted. That there are some here may be judged from the fact that the Secession flag was removed the same night, but another was put in its place, and an additional one on the Market-house. That Governor Jackson is a Secessionist no man can doubt, since he has terrified the Directors of the Banks into letting him have the money intended for the payment of the State dividends.

Lexington.—The Union men attempted to hold a meeting here on the 2d of May, but it was broken up by the Secessionists, who hoisted the Southern Confederacy flag over the Court House.

DELAWARE, Wilmington.—Governor Burton has issued his proclamation, directing those volunteer companies of the State desirous of being mustered into the service of the United States, in pursuance of the call of the President of the United States, to rendezvous at the city of Wilmington at the earliest possible day, where they will be met and mustered into the service of the United States, by an officer of the army.

The Wilmington Commonwealth of May 4th says: "The call, so far, has been promptly responded to, and we have no doubt but that in the course of next week we will be able to report the first regiment of Delaware Infantry ready, willing and anxious to uphold and defend the glorious Stars and Stripes."

Wilmington, May 3.—The Governor's proclamation mustering the volunteers of the State, has given a new impetus to the war movement here. Three companies were sworn in yesterday. The Governor has made a requisition for one thousand rifles. Eight or nine hundred rifles and muskets are now in Wilmington, which, when added to the one thousand called for, will place the State in a condition of defence. Knights of the Golden Circle are plentiful here, but are keeping very quiet. A Union meeting will be held in Georgetown, in the Secession end of the State, on Tuesday. The Governor's proclamation was not signed by the Secretary of State, suggesting suspicions regarding the loyalty of the latter officer.

LOUISIANA.—Review of Four Thousand Troops in New Orleans.—The New Orleans Picayune of the 30th has an enthusiastic account of a grand review there, and remarks: "New Orleans presented one of the grandest military spectacles that ever enlivened our streets since the grand review at the old Place d'Armes in 1815, by General Jackson. The review took place on Canal street, extending the whole length from Old Levee to beyond Rampart street. It is estimated that at least four thousand troops were drawn up in line. They consisted of General Tradeau's brigade, composed of the Orleans Battalion of Artillery, the Chasseurs à-Pied, the Orleans Guard Battalion, the Esplanade Guards, the Louisiana Cadets, Garibaldi Rifles, German Turners, and a number of new companies in full force, besides four companies of cavalry. The Second Division was composed of General Tracy's brigade, resting on Canal, from St Charles to Rampart, consisting of the Washington Artillery Battalion, the Continental Guards, Louisiana Grays, Chalmette Guards, Calhoun Guards, Sarsfield Rifles, De Soto Rifles, Delta Rifles, Southern Cadets, Bienville Guards, Bienville Rifles, a company from Algiers, one from Carrollton, and four companies of cavalry. These companies make a most brilliant and dashing show; and indeed the whole line of troops with their gay uniforms, glistening bayonets and colors flying, presented one of the grandest military pageantries ever witnessed in New Orleans. The Orleans and Washington Battalions made the largest turnout, and were the most brilliant portion of this grand cortége. Each battalion had ten brass pieces in the ranks, and each piece was attended by a detachment of twelve men, the rest of the battalions acting as infantry. The troops were reviewed by Governor Moore, accompanied by Major General Lewis, Brigadier-Generals Labuzan and Trudeau, and a number of staff officers."

An Example to be Followed by the North.—The New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company have rendered the use of the road to carry the troops and munitions of war for the Confederate States free of all expense.

Blockading the Mississippi.—The Pointe-à-la-Hache (La.) Rice Planter of the 27th of April says: "We hear that Colonel Hebert intend to place at the English Turn two batteries of large ordnance, one on each side of the river for the defence of the Mississippi. Besides the two batteries of large ordnance which will be built at the English Turn, it is understood here that another one will be erected on the farm of Mr. Luc Bobard, at Jesuits' Bend, for the defence of the river.

(Continued on page 406.)

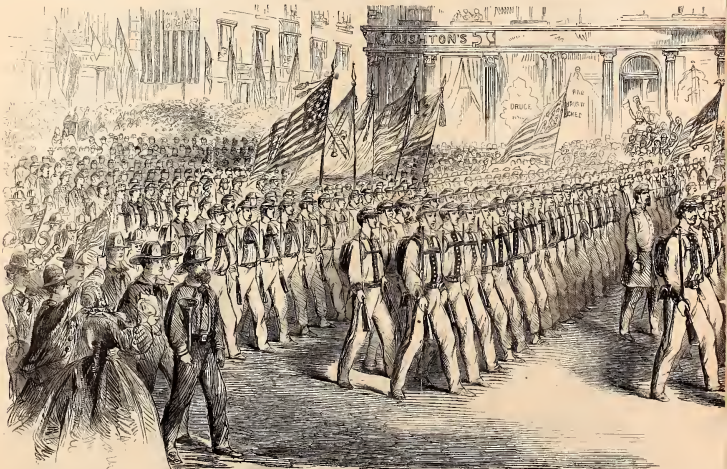
UNITED STATES FLEET OFF THE HARBOR OF PENSACOLA.

LANDIN[G] OF THE SEVENTH REGIMENT AT THE NAVY YARD ANNAPOLIS, MD.

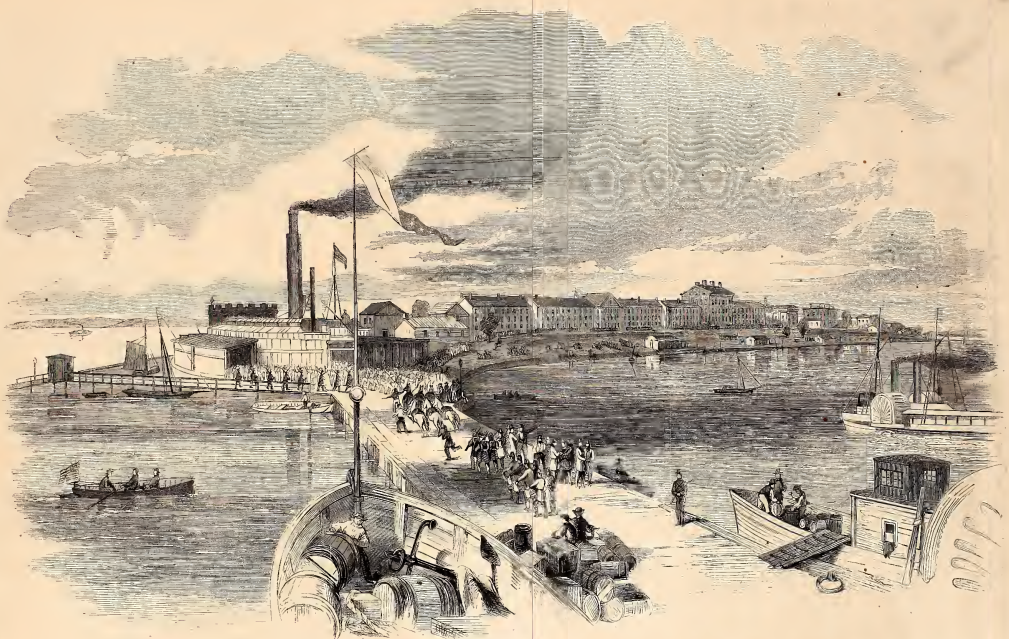
THE diffic[ulties] which occurred in Baltimore, resulting in the death of several Massachusetts soldiers at the hands of an irresponsible mob, determined the Federal Government to receive its reinforcements for Washington by the way of Annapolis. The first regiments which landed at that place found much opposition; but the Seventh of New York and the Eighth of Massachusetts soon arranged matters, and taking possession of the Naval School, with the wharves and buildings attached, kept the river communication open for the regiments to follow. The Seventh of New York and the Eighth of Massachusetts bodies then to open the way to Washington, for the rails had been taken up, the engines damaged, the bridges broken, and every possible obstruction thrown in the way of an advance upon Washington. They had to go to work to repair all this, and they did so with such good wi and such earnestness that difficulties melted before their united and energeti efforts.

Annapolis was the seat of the Government of Maryland until the Fed ral troop took possession of it; but the Legislature has since held its sessions at Frederick burg.

The position of the Federal troops is well fortified, and a large body of men i constantly there; the railway is guarded along the whole line to the Junction, an



DEPARTURE OF COL. ELLSWORTH'S ZOUAVES FROM NEW YORK, ESCORTED BY THE FIRE DEPARTMENT—TH



LANDING OF THE SEVENTH REGIMENT AT THE WHARF OF THE NAVAL ACADEMY, AT ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND.—From a Sketch by our Special Artist in Annapolis.

WAR FEELING IN THE SOUTH.

(Continued from page 403.)

SEIZURE OF STEAMSHIPS.—The steamships W. G. Hewes, Texas and Tennessee, registered as belonging to New York, and late of Morgan's Texas line, were taken possession of on the 20th of April, by the authority of Governor Moore. These vessels have now on board a detachment of Continental Guards, and of the Washington Artillery.

Two associations of ladies of New Orleans were formed May 3, for aiding and equipping volunteers, and for making lint and bandages, and nursing the sick and wounded. The meetings were very large and enthusiastic. The ladies' military fair yielded nearly thirteen thousand dollars. Volunteers are still pouring in. The whole South is fully aroused and arming at every point. The steamer Arizona has arrived from Brazos, with a quarter of a million in specie.

TENNESSEE.—MEMPHIS FORTIFIED.—Memphis has been armed by the Governor of Louisiana with guns that his State seized from the General Government. The Memphis Appeal acknowledges the reception of a number of thirty-two pound guns, three thousand Mississippi rifles, and five hundred thousand cartridges, all for the use of the city. The thirty-two pound guns are designed probably to effectually close the navigation of the Mississippi.

MESSAGE FROM GEN. PILLOW.—Gen. Pillow, who is a clever gentleman in the private relations of life, and a very companionable man, sent the Knoxville Whig recently a message which is explained in the following reply:

"Knoxville, April 22, 1861.

"Gen. Gideon J. Pillow—I have just received your message through Mr. Sale, requesting me to serve as chaplain to your brigade in the Southern army; and in the spirit of kindness in which this request is made, but in all candor, I return for an answer, that when I shall have made up my mind to go to hell, I will cut my throat and go direct, and not travel round by way of the Southern Confederacy.

I am, &c.,

"W. G. BROWNLOW."

ALABAMA.—A Southern Railroad Convention met at Montgomery on the 27th April, and agreed to take Confederate State bonds in payment of their charges for the transportation of troops and the mails if it should be found necessary. The Convention called in a body upon President Davis, who expressed himself much gratified at the interview. All the Southern railroads will be governed entirely in their action by the necessities of the country.

MISSISSIPPI.—MORE NEGROES IN THE FIELD.—We are informed that Mr. G. C. Hale, of Autauga county, tendered to Governor Moore the services of a company of negroes. He agrees to command them himself, and guarantees that they will do effective service.

ARKANSAS.—SEIZURE OF UNITED STATES SUPPLIES.—The Memphis Evening Argus of the 25th instant, says: "Arkansas is moving and with great rapidity. We are informed by Captain Dick Love, that on the 22d inst., General Thomas Jones, under instructions received from Governor Rector, seized at Napoleon, a large quantity of Government military supplies, consisting of one hundred and forty thousand ball cartridges, one hundred Maynard rifles, two hundred cavalry saddles, and five hundred sabres, which were in possession of Messrs. Johnson & Peay. These will very materially aid the Southern cause."

KENTUCKY, LOUISVILLE, May 3.—Governor Magoffin has issued a proclamation ordering an election in Kentucky for Representatives to Congress on the 20th June. The Common Council appropriated $200,000 for arming the city, subject to ratification by the citizens.

FLORIDA.—MORE TROOPS WANTED AT PENSACOLA.—A letter in a Charleston paper from Montgomery, says it was rumored there that Gen. Bragg has asked for 2,000 additional men to guard the city of Pensacola. It is feared that an effort may be made to land men there to attack General Bragg's force in the rear. The movements of the Flying artillery now on Santa Rosa Island indicate this.

The correspondent of the Nashville (Tenn.) Gazette, writing from Warrenton, on April 25, talks very warlike. He says that May 6 is the day fixed by the Confederates for making the assault. A paragraph which we find in the New Orleans Picayune, of April 29, however, would seem to indicate that a retrograde movement has been commenced, despite Bragg's call for 2,000 more men. Letters received on that day announce the departure from Pensacola for Virginia of the Orleans Cadets, Captain Charles Dreux; the Louisiana Guards, Major Todd, and the Chasseurs à Pied, Captain St. Paul. These companies expect to meet at Grand Junction the other corps from this city.

The Picayune of the same date notices the departure for Richmond of five companies of Louisiana volunteers.

VIRGINIA, WHEELING, May 4.—There was an immense county Union meeting held here to-day. Hon. Frank Pierpoint, of Mason county, and George M Porter, of Hancock, late a member of the Convention, addressed the people in able speeches, urging resistance to the Secession ordinance, and favoring a division of the State. Resolutions were adopted, approving of the action of the merchants in refusing to pay taxes to the authorities at Richmond; denunciatory of the Secession ordinance; declaring adhesion to the Stars and Stripes, and in favor of the appointment of thirty-four delegates from the counties of Western Virginia to a Convention to be called on the 13th of May.

A large meeting was also held yesterday in Clarksburg, Harrison county, at which the proceedings were of a similar character.

Reports of meetings in the Intelligencer represent that there is a general sentiment of opposition to the Secession ordinance throughout the Western counties.

MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS IN THE STATE AND CITY OF NEW YORK.

The Westchester Chasseurs.

This fine body of men, under Colonel Lansing, are rapidly training and will soon be ready for action. They number above eight hundred men. They hail from Morrisania, Yonkers, Tarrytown, Port Chester and White Plains.

Several companies of these gallant volunteers are now in our city. They are mostly from Port Chester, and are of the true soldier build. The officers are Nelson D. Bartram, Captain; John Vickers, Lieutenant, and James Taylor, Ensign. A number of the members being married men, the citizens of Port Chester have raised a large fund for the support of their families till they return.

The Pathfinder League.

A meeting has been held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel to organise a regiment under this title.

The New York British Volunteers.

A few days will see this regiment fully equipped and ready for service.

The Polish Legion.

Colonel Julien Allan is rapidly organising a body of men. Their uniform will be very picturesque.

Duryea's Advance Guard Zouaves.

This regiment is nearly complete, and will drill at Fort Schuyler.

Manhattan Gas Regiment.

The employés of this company are forming themselves into a corp for duty. An application has already been made to Albany for aid towards this object.

The Seventh Regiment Steuben Volunteers.

This regiment is altogether composed of Germans, and is officered by men who have seen much European service. They are stationed at Landmann's, Third avenue, Sixty-sixth street. They drill very regularly, and are only awaiting their arms from Albany.

The Hungarian Legion.

Colonel Ashboth is now forming a regiment of Hungarians for the service of the Republic. Many of the intended officers are soldiers of acknowledged merit, and almost all of the men have seen active service in the Hungarian or Italian campaign.

The Union Rangers.

This regiment, raised by the Hon. J. Korrigan, was inspected on Tuesday. It was in a high state of discipline.

The Excelsior Regiment.

The headquarters are at the City Assembly Rooms, Broadway; there are nearly seven hundred men. It is under the command of Colonel D. E. Sickles.

Empire City Regiment.

This fine body of men, Andrew Sheehan, Colonel, now numbers nearly nine hundred men. Their officers have all seen service, and are competent men. Their uniform is precisely like that of the United States army. They were addressed last week by Daniel E. Sickles, Elijah Ward and other well-known Democrats.

Home Guard.

This regiment, which is altogether distinct from the George Law, Astor House Guard movement, is now nearly complete. No man under forty-five is eligible. Colonel Ward is acting commandant, and Major Baker drill-master. General Dix will appoint the officers, who will be all professional men.

The United Turner Rifles.

This regiment, under Colonel Seigle, is composed entirely of German Turners, and numbers seven hundred and eighty men. They were inspected by Major Hubbell, and passed to a man. The movements of the regiment in drill were as perfect as might have been expected of much older soldiers. It is said that many of the members served in the German Revolution, and can handle a rifle with skill and precision.

The Naval Brigade.

This valuable corps under the lead of Colonel Bartlett has been accepted by the State, and will soon be ready for action. The headquarters are in Franklin square, Pearl street. They will drill on Staten Island.

THE ZOUAVES.

No nation in the world has so keen a sense of fitness as the American. Instinctively and theoretically it is the most adaptive and practical in the world. The English, on the other hand, are the most accumulative and persistent. Our nature is to catch first at everything—the English nature is to look twice at a bait and keep it. The inventions we have caught and thrown away have proved the salvation of England. One of the latest instances of this peculiarity is the Zouave excitement now being turned to so admirable an account in our present war. The public had heard of them in the Algerine war, and their relentless deeds had half obscured their heroic daring; but the aroma of blood is strong in the human heart, and the vermillion haze of glory, like the veil of Mokanna, obscures the horror of the countenance of war. Consequently the baking of some hundreds of Arab men, women and children by those monsters Bugeaud and Pelissier was overpowered by the thunders of victory, and the prismatic colors of all that was discordant and terrible in human nature became confused and blended into one blaze of patriotism.

The great European fame of the Zouaves commenced in the Crimean war, when their exploits were so multifarious as to demand almost a Dumas to describe them. To be concise, we may say they ranged from the storming of the Malakoff to the rifling of a henroost. So far as the United States are concerned, the first great impulse given to this peculiarly attractive arrangement was the visit made last year by Colonel Ellsworth, of the Chicago Zouaves, to this city. The keen instinct of New York recognized their value, and at once set to work. The result has been the finest body of soldiers in the world; for it is an undoubted military fact that never before has the philosophy of physique been so admirably and scientifically brought into play as during the last ten months.

Hawkins's Lightning Zouaves.

Soon after the advent of Ellsworth, Captain Parisen commenced drilling a few young men, and from this nucleus of some forty members the present most efficient regiment under command of Colonel Hawkins has been formed. It is composed of the flower of the young men of New Jersey and New York. Captain Parisen's company numbers eighty young men of Hoboken, and represents the élite of that picturesque city.

Colonel Wilson's Zouaves.

In our last paper we gave a spirited sketch of that emphatic scene in Tammany Hall when the members of this regiment swore fidelity to the Union flag. They are now drilling on Staten Island, and will carry the war into the Africa of Jeff. Davis to a terrible extent.

McChesney's National Zouaves.

This regiment is rapidly filling up. The members have been inspected by Captain Cogswell and Dr. Mott, who pronounce them a fine body of men. Most of the officers have seen active service "in the tented field."

The Fire Zouaves.

This noble body of men arrived in Washington on Wednesday, where they became the lions of the place. It is a matter of great astonishment that so well drilled and fine a body of men should have been gathered together at so short a time. A few of the members who were guilty of insubordination have been expelled the regiment.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.

The Twenty-eighth Regiment.

This gallant regiment, which has been detained for more than a week for arms, went, on the 30th, on board the propeller Star of the South, for the seat of war. At an early hour the men were mustered at their headquarters, in the arsenal, and the preparations for marching commenced. Each man was provided with necessary rations for the journey, and about eleven o'clock the men took leave of their relatives and friends. The line being formed, the regiment, preceded by Moyer's brass band, marched down Myrtle avenue to Fulton street, and down Fulton street to the ferry, where they were taken on board the ferryboat Nassau, and landed on the New York side. The populace displayed considerable enthusiasm on their route, and the volunteers of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Regiments assembled and cheered them in true soldierly fashion. After crossing to New York, they marched up Fulton street to Broadway, up Broadway to Canal street, up Canal street to Hudson, down Hudson to North Moore street, and thence to Pier No. 36, when they embarked on board the propeller. The regiment numbered nearly 600 men. About 200 recruits remain, and will be sent on in charge of Captain Clyne as soon as they are properly equipped.

Ulster Guards—Twentieth Regiment.

This regiment arrived some days ago and were assigned quarters in the Park. They were forwarded to Washington on the 7th.

Occupation of the Relay House.

On Sunday, the 5th of May, the Fifty-second regiment of New York and the Eighth regiment of Mass., took possession of Relay House, about nine miles from Baltimore—also of the telegraph wires, planted eight howitzers on the viaduct, and invested the entire neighborhood. They encamped on the grounds of W. Talbott, on the west side of the Patapsco. This point is the junction of the Baltimore and Ohio road, and the Washington branch, and gives full command of the road to and from the West. The telegraph connection with Harper's Ferry is now cut off.

WAR PROCLAMATIONS.

GOVERNOR OLDEN, of New Jersey, has issued a proclamation warning the citizens of lending aid and counsel to the enemy. It is strongly Union.

GOVERNOR YATES, of Illinois, is also out in one of equally stirring patriotism.

GOVERNOR MORTON, of Indiana, has likewise issued a proclamation denouncing the rebellion.

GOVERNOR RANDALL, of Wisconsin, is equally determined, by the tone of his proclamation, to stand by the Stars and Stripes.

GOVERNOR LETCHER, of Virginia has issued a proclamation (already alluded to by us), placing the militia of Virginia at the disposal of the Confederate States.

GOVERNOR ELLIS, of North Carolina, has also issued a proclamation denouncing President Lincoln.

GOVERNOR JACKSON, of Missouri, has issued a message to the Legislature, now sitting in St. Louis, in which, while advising neutrality, he openly condemns President Lincoln's actions as likely to lead to despotism, and proclaims his sympathy with the Secessionists. He advises placing the State in a position of defence.

GOVERNOR HARRIS, of Tennessee, has issued a very warlike Message, dated Nashville, 25th April, in which he denounces the President for his conduct in commencing the war. He has ordered the State militia to be placed on a war footing.

RELIGIOUS WAR NEWS.

The Rev. Mr. Smith, Chaplain of the Twelfth Regiment, and who accompanied that gallant body of men to Annapolis, has just returned. He preached a very stirring sermon at the church corner of Broadway and Thirty-fourth street, which derived additional interest from the details he very naturally introduced of their recent march to the seat of war. Among other interesting remarks, Mr. Smith said: "The inevitable consequences of the war would be to remove the stain of Slavery from the flag of our country—that stain which the world had so long pointed at would be cleansed away, and the country would hold a more glorious position in the future than it had held in the past." This will be no doubt the ultimate result.

From several of his interesting anecdotes we select one as being not generally known: "A certain colonel, who had been much indebted to the king for favors and benefits, deemed it his best policy to stimulate a devotion to the Parliamentaries, but in doing so, he looked but for a position in which he hoped he would not come in contact with the adherents of the king, so that, in the event of the royal cause triumphing, he would meet with no condemnation. Thus wavering between loyalty and disloyalty, imagining himself secure in any event, he obtained from Cromwell the command of the Isle of Wight, but to this very island did the unfortunate king fly, hoping protection from the man who thus most unexpectedly found himself compelled to take side against the king. There was no safety for the waverer in the distant island, and there was no safety for any man now in neutrality. All must declare themselves. There was no half way. It was Union or Disunion."

On the same day the Rev. Mr. Conway, Chaplain to the New York Zouaves, commanded by Colonel Hawkins, delivered an eloquent sermon to that regiment. After the usual prefaratory remarks, he touched their hearts by this home allusion: "As a minister of the glorious Gospel he had enlisted with them as their Chaplain, and as one of them he urged them to come freely to him for advice and consolation. He would be with them in the camp and on the battle field, in sickness and in health, and he would be their counsellor and friend on every occasion."

THE FOREIGN PRESS ON THE WAR.

THE London Times ascribes much of the present unhappy state of our politics to there being no expansionary organ in Congress. It brings as a proof the striking fact that both Douglas and Breckinridge differed in their interpretation of President Lincoln's inaugural. It also brings the instance of England and the United States as a proof of the evil results of a treaty after fighting, when the same might be attained before. It also severely condemns both the Morrill and the Montgomery tariffs.

THE London News has an article on Jefferson Davis's Government, in which he is stigmatised as a repudiator and the founder of a system based upon human slavery. It is very certain that the popular feeling of England is dead against the Secessionists.

THE London Telegraph says that there is a great difference between England recognising a rebellion and a revolution. It considers the Southern Confederacy as a mere confederacy to perpetuate Slavery, and, consequently, as an outrage upon human nature. It instances, as a proof of its position, that while England acknowledged the Republic of France in 1848 and Victor Emanuel in 1861, it did not recognize Kossuth's Government of Hungary. It, therefore, opines that England will not receive the Southern Commissioners, Yancey, Rost and Mann, until President Lincoln recognizes the Confederate States as a separate nation. Altogether Secessionism is at a terrible discount in England and France. Indeed, the tone of those countries is decidedly hostile.

FRANCE AND SECESSION.—The Government has published the letter from Mr Faulkner, while our Minister at Paris, detailing his interview with M. Thouvenel, the French Minister for Foreign Affairs. The latter, after alluding to the caution which generally, if not invariably, marked the recognitions of France, bringing forward as an instance the fact of the Kingdom of Italy not being then recognized, said nothing should be done hastily; that at the present there was not the least intention of receiving the agents of the Southern Confederacy. He, however, added that it had been the policy of the Western Powers to acknowledge a de facto Government when it was securely established. He also said that he hoped force would not be used, as he thought it would only embitter the conflict, and ultimately widen the breach. Mr. Faulkner, in the course of his despatch to Mr. Seward, pretty conclusively reveals his own strong Secession sentiments. Mr Seward's letter to Mr. W. H. Dayton, our present Minister to France, emphatically instructs him to assure the French Government that under no circumstances will Mr. Lincoln consent to a dissolution of the Union. He also instructs Mr Dayton to inform M. Thouvenel that the Cabinet are unanimous in this determination, and that Mr. Lincoln is in full accord with them.

INCIDENTS OF THE WAR.

REV. MR. WISE—a son of ex-Governor Wise, of Virginia—who is stationed over an Episcopal church in West Philadelphia, on Saturday week stepped into a barber's to get shaved. While the process was advancing he said, "One Virginian is worth three Northerners," and hoped the latter would be whipped. At this the master of the razor strop took offence, and instantly ejected the reverend gentleman into the street half shaved—one half of his face yet lathered, and he in his shirtsleeves. A member of his church, passing by, got a carriage and took him home, and begged him to keep still. He did not preach the next day, and during the night was packed off.

THE Cincinnati Gazette gives the following: "The clerk of one of the steamers which came up the river yesterday, reports being hailed from the shore at Leavenworth, Indiana, to land and take on a couple of passengers for Cincinnati. While at the landing the clerk informs us that a company of volunteer women, armed with rifles, marched down from the Commons where they had been drilling, and fired a salute. They seemed to handle the arms with ease, and presented a very creditable appearance."

Massachusetts and New York.

HEADQUARTERS COMMANDERS OF COMPANIES,
Eighth Regiment M. V. M., Washington, April 29, 1861.

To Colonel LEFFERTS, the officers and members of the New York Seventh Regiment:

At a meeting of the Eighth Massachusetts Regiment, held this morning, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Whereas, the trials and the fortunes of war have brought us into close intimacy and companionship with the New York Seventh Regiment (National Guard), therefore,

Resolved, That we feel it a duty owing not only to them, but to our own hearts, to express, so far as may be in our power, our grateful obligations to them for their many favors.

Resolved, That we deeply appreciate the hearty welcome extended to us on landing at Annapolis, and their kind attentions after the fatigues of transportation and a hazardous though successful service.

Resolved, That they have done all in their power to lessen the just feelings of dissatisfaction which have prevailed throughout the regiment by sharing with us their rations and their little conveniences, and by ever being the first to offer assistance.

Resolved, That especially are our thanks due to the noble Seventh, for the generous entertainment furnished to our men on the afternoon of Saturday, April 27, when we were really in need—an entertainment so spontaneous, so bounteous, so heartily appreciative of our condition, that no words can do it justice or do justice to our gratitude.

Resolved, That in one other and very especial particular does that generosity and benevolence touch our hearts. We refer to the voluntary subscription raised among them for the benefit of one of our officers, accidentally wounded.

Resolved, That the term of aspersion so often used in connection with the volunteer militia, "holiday soldiery," has been, in all the conduct of the regiment to which we are so much indebted, triumphantly refuted, and that it will hereafter be worthy of the highest fame—fame that will ever attach to the name of the "generous, gallant, glorious Seventh."

Resolved, That wherever the Seventh may go we would go, wherever they lodge we would lodge, and if ever their colors go down before the hosts of the enemy, the Eighth of Massachusetts would be the first to avenge their fall with the heart's blood of every man.

KNOTT V. MARTIN, Chairman.

GEORGE T. NEWHALL, Secretary.

BALLOON SERVICE.—Two balloons have been sent to Washington by order of Governor Sprague, of Rhode Island. They are in charge of an experienced aerial voyager, and will be used, when necessary, under the orders of General Scott.

A NOVEL BATTERY.—The Philadelphia Ledger states that the determination to reconstruct the bridges on the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad, destroyed by a mob from Baltimore, has led to the construction of a railroad battery by the Federal Government, at the locomotive works of Baldwin & Co., in that city. One of the long platform baggage cars has been fixed with sides and top of thick sheet iron, the sides having portholes and loopholes for musketry. A turn-table has been arranged, on which a rifled cannon is to be placed. The carriage for the gun is so constructed that it can be fired at any angle, and from any one of the portholes in the sides or end of the car. In place of shot or shell for the cannon, pieces of iron punched from locomotive boilers will be used as loads. This car is to be placed in front of a locomotive, and with fifty men inside, armed with Minie rifles, and seamen to work the cannon, there are but few more terrible instruments of destruction.

SECEDED ON HIS OWN ACCOUNT.—The Wheeling Intelligencer gives a narrative of a journey on foot through the interior of Virginia, in which we find an instance of Secession carried to its extreme. The old fellow evidently thought his right to secede as good as that of the State. "The traveller, a Mr. Coleman, of Wheeling, after leaving Williamsville, one morning, left the main road, and taking a byroad through the mountains, got lost, and wandered about till nearly night, when, by stripping his clothes off and wading a river, he finally came into the road again not more than three miles from where he had set out in the morning. To make up for this unfortunate delay he walked till about ten o'clock that night, when he came upon a lonely cabin in the mountains. He called out, and an old man with a rifle in his hand came to the door and asked who was there. He answered, 'A friend.' The old man then came out to the fence by the roadside and asked what he wanted. Mr. C. told him who he was, and that he was weary and hungry, and asked for a night's lodgings. The old man took him into the cabin, remarking, 'Tis well for you that you told me who you was when I asked you who's there, for I don't allow any one to pass here by night or by day without giving an account of themselves. If you had not told me you was a friend as soon as you did, I should have shot you with that rifle.' The old fellow said he had no 'larning,' he couldn't read nor write, and he didn't know what was going on in the country, but he knew there was war, and that this was his rule, and nobody passed his cabin without submitting to it."

GENERAL HOUSTON ALMOST DROWNED.—The Galveston (Texas) Civilian of April 25 says: "We understand that a sailboat, in which General Houston and Colonel Morgan were proceeding from the residence of the latter to San Jacinto, last Monday, capsized in thirty feet of water, and both these gentlemen were in danger of drowning. General Houston has very imperfect use of an arm and leg, and Colonel Morgan is totally blind. Mr. Kos Morgan happened to be just behind them, in another boat, just at the time of the accident, and when he came over the spot both were under water. General Houston rose near the boat and was seized by his crippled arm with so much earnestness that he asked to be let go. Colonel Morgan's first expression on getting his head above water was that they could not drown him in any way they could fix it. He was once before capsized, and, though old and blind, held on to the bottom of the boat while the other two persons were washed off and drowned."

FIDELITY AND COURAGE.—One New York policeman is to be the recipient of a beautiful gold lever watch—Peter Hart, we mean, the man who could not fight because Governor Pickens had made him promise not to, but who could, nevertheless, reap a glory that South Carolina used to be proud of, by raising anew the flag of his country when worse than foemen's hands had felled it. The watch may be seen at the store of Tiffany & Co., the inscription reading as follows: "The Officers of Fort Sumpter to Peter Hart. A tribute to fidelity and courage. April 12th and 13th, 1861. Major Robert Anderson, 1st Artillery; Assistant-Surgeon S. W. Crawford, Medical Department; Captain A. Doubleday, 1st Artillery; Captain T. Seymour, ditto; Lieut. J. C. Davis, ditto; Lieut. N. J. Hall, ditto; Captain J. G. Forster, Engineers; Lieut. G. W. Snyder, ditto; Lieut. R. K. Meade, ditto.

A CORRESPONDENCE, of which the following is the substance, is said to have passed between Governor Hicks, of Maryland, and Governor Sprague, of Rhode Island, on Friday or Saturday a week ago, by telegraph:

Gov. Hicks to Gov. Sprague—"I understand you are about to proceed to Washington with the Rhode Island Regiment. I advise you not to take them through Baltimore, and thus save trouble."

Gov. Sprague to Gov. Hicks—"The Rhode Island Regiment are going to fight, and it matters not whether they fight in Baltimore or Washington."

AT Pittsburg a quarrel ensued on the 30th April between Capt. Rogers, of the steamer Diadem, and an emigrant runner, about a trifling pecuniary matter, during which Rogers drew a knife but did not use it. Soon after Rogers met his opponent, Vandergrift, and, drawing a pistol, shot the latter dead. He is in custody.

LUCILLE DE VERNET:
A TALE OF
WOMAN'S HATE.

CHAPTER XI.—CONTINUED.

But Lucille was ill, feverish, with a throbbing headache; and after she was in bed, Emile, full of love and care, watched anxiously by her side. Her sleep was fitful; and when she raised her head from the pillow, and opened her large eyes, they glistened with such unnatural brightness that Emile trembled for her reason, and prayed fervently that strength might be given her to reach the valley.

Towards morning Emile, worn out by fatigue and anxiety, threw a shawl over her, and creeping quietly beneath the coverlid, fearing to awake her companion, who had again dozed off, after a time watching her uneasy slumber, fell herself into a deep heavy sleep. She had slept near two hours when heavy footsteps and loud voices beneath caused her to start wildly from her uneasy sleep. She sat up in the bed and listened, and Lucille, whom it had also awoke, with her flushed cheeks and hair hanging wildly about her, sat up beside her.

"What can that mean?" said Emile, attempting calmness, "can it concern us? Hark!" she continued, "that is my mother's voice. She has come to take me from you; but fear not. She shall not separate us till you are safe at home."

Springing from the bed, Emile barricaded the door with the only table and chair the room afforded, but she had scarcely done it when the door was tried. "Who is it," said she, "that wishes to enter this apartment before we summon them?"

"It is I," said the Countess D'Almaine, "your mother, who insists on the door being instantly opened. I have a communication to make to you."

"What is it, mamma?" demanded Emile. "Pray do not be violent, for Lucille is ill, very ill, and we have both passed a wretched and sleepless night. But I care not for myself, I only think of Lucille, who is ill, and requires medical attendance."

"Admit me," returned the countess, impatiently, "and without delay, or the people who are with me shall force the door."

"Open it, Emile," said Lucille faintly, "it is your mother, she has no right to sue in vain; besides, we are helpless; a strong hand would demolish your fortification in a moment."

"She has come to separate us," said Emile, "and I am powerless. Lucille, can you bear up against the storm without me? Ill as you are, what will become of you?"

"Break this door!" cried the passionate voice of the countess, and instantly the slight barricade gave way to admit the countess, two nuns and a priest.

The countess glanced towards the bed and half started at the wild expression in the eyes of Lucille; but not allowing herself time to think, she said to the nuns, pointing to Emile,

"That is my daughter, Emile D'Almaine. I place her under the care of your superior till you again hear from me. Emile, you may as well submit with a good grace, or I shall give these ladies directions to carry you to my carriage, which waits in the courtyard."

Emile knew her mother's resolution. The nuns were two quiet-looking women, but were under the control of their superior, and she had nothing to hope from them; she had nothing left but to make another appeal to her mother in behalf of Lucille.

"I am willing," she said, "to go wherever you may wish to place me, mother; but give me a day, only a few hours, to see Lucille attended to, only to see if it is possible for her to undertake the journey, to see her placed safely in the diligence which will convey her to within a few miles of her father's house. You will grant me this one request, mother, and then send me to the convent directly after. I will not utter a single complaint, or a word of resistance. Mother, you will grant this one, this little request?"

"You are strangely interested, mademoiselle, in the proceedings of a stranger," said the countess. "Mademoiselle de Vernet can help herself; she is willing, no doubt, and quite able to do so."

"A stranger!" said Emile, with a sudden burst of feeling. "She is my sister, the beloved wife of my only brother, and your son, mother. Think of Jules's anguish if he knew she was lying in this wretched apartment, crushed in mind and body, forsaken by us both; you will not leave her thus helpless."

"Well," said the countess, a slight compunctious feeling for a moment subduing her angry ones, "she shall have medical attendance and be carefully nursed by the woman who resides here, till she is able to go to her father. Will that satisfy you? But you must instantly quit her and content yourself for a time in the convent of St. Ursula; that is my command; and if you persist in further opposition to it these holy people will have recourse to force. Here is your shawl and bonnet; haste, for I have not yet breakfasted."

Emile knew farther appeal or resistance would be vain; she looked deprecatingly on her mother, the nuns and the rubicund priest, who had testified his impatience by throwing her shawl over her, which she had indignantly dashed to the ground.

"I must leave you, dearest," she cried, taking Lucille in her arms; "they force me from you; but do not despair. In a few days Jules will be here, and he shall know all the cruelty that has been levelled at you. Adieu! Heaven protect you!"

"Do not think of me, Emile," returned Lucille. "I shall soon require no care. Adieu! I am faint, and cannot speak more."

Again the shawl was thrown over Emile, and she was hurried from the room. There was a loud tumult in the apartment below, the countess's voice rose high; then, as it became distant, it sank into a murmur; then all was silent but the carriage-wheels rattling over the stones of the courtyard.

Lucille's aching head fell languidly on the pillow; for the first time in her life she was alone.

CHAPTER XII.

In a short time after the party had left, Rosalie's mother came to Lucille's bedside. She was a gentle, kindly woman, and truly, without knowing why she was thus thrown on her own resources, commiserated the young helpless creature before her.

"You are ill, mademoiselle," she said, leaning over her, and touching her hot temples. "I have done as mademoiselle desired,—sent for a doctor, who will be here by nine o'clock; but what shall I give you in the intermediate time? I have tea and coffee; which shall I bring you?"

"Neither," replied Lucille; "but a glass of cold water would cool my hot mouth, and might perhaps relieve me. What time is it?"

"Past seven, mademoiselle."

"At what hour does the diligence start for Marseilles?"

"At eight o'clock precisely."

"At eight o'clock?" said Lucille, starting wildly up in bed. "Where from?"

"The Rue des Chantons, a quarter of an hour's walk from hence."

With fresh energy Lucille sprang from the bed, then tottered and sank upon it again.

"Assist me to dress," she said in a faint voice, "for I must leave Paris by that diligence; I must go home while I am able. I must go to my father to die."

"How? Impossible, my dear lady," said the kind woman. "You have not strength to walk across the room. How can you ever reach the Rue des Chantons?"

"I must, I will try," said Lucille. "Dear madame, help me to dress."

The good woman, seeing her earnestness, assisted her to dress, thinking her strength would be exhausted with the operation. She was more surprised then when she said,

"Now, madame, will you lead me to the Rue des Chantons? I must go away by the diligence."

She took her purse out; it was but scantily supplied. Throwing the contents on the bed, she took enough for her fare, and, giving the rest to the woman, said,

"It is all I have, but the Count D'Almaine, or Emile, some other time will reward you for your care of me. Now, madame, I am able to undertake this walk. Will you accompany me, for I must go to my father."

Her voice was so faint and sad, yet so earnest, that it was irresistible. The good woman led her forth; it was a long and toilsome journey to one in her situation, but perseverance and determination accomplished it. The driver was just stepping into his boots as they arrived. There was a vacant place; she was assisted into it, weak and tottering, and sank exhausted into a corner.

"Adieu!" she murmured to the woman, who pressed her hand with warmth and pity. "Adieu! my heart is full, but I have no tears, they are dried up with the burning heat that is consuming me."

The driver cracked his whip, the heavy unwieldy vehicle rumbled with a thundering sound and unpleasant movement through the streets of Paris, unheeded by Lucille, who had sank with closed eyes and labored breathing against the side of it.

Her fellow-passengers looked at her with wonder; they spoke to her, but she heard them not, her only consciousness seemed when the coach stopped, when she would raise her head hurriedly and ask if they were at Marseilles.

When they inquired if she would not take refreshment, she answered, languidly, "Yes, a glass of cold water; my tongue is hard and dry, and my mouth parched."

Twilight was just drawing in, when one of her fellow-travellers pronounced, in an audible voice,

"Marseilles! we are just entering; in another half hour we shall be at our journey's end."

Lucille raised herself from the half recumbent position she had sunk into and made an effort to look through the window, but the heavy mist that had been falling through the day had so obscured the glass that all that was discernable was the half glimmer of the numerous lamps, not yet lighted long enough to shed their full splendor down upon the gloomy thoroughfare.

Half an hour after the unwieldy vehicle stopped, its heavy rumbling was superseded by the din of many voices, her fellow-passengers had alighted, and Lucille, with a look of recognition at the well known sign dangling from the inn door, with slow and feeble steps followed their example. The hostess, bustling and anxious, greeted her with a curtsey, and "Walk in, madame."

"Can I have a conveyance?" asked Lucille, in a quiet, tremulous tone.

"Yes, in an hour madame can be accommodated," replied the hostess. "The gentleman yonder has engaged our only chaise for the Villa d'Eau; it will soon return. Walk in; madame is cold from this miserable weather. A good fire blazes in the ante-room; it will warm you through by the time the chaise returns."

"I cannot wait," said Lucille. "The distance is but a mile. I will walk."

She turned away into the well-known road leading to her father's house. The mist, which had fallen slow and murkily from sunrise, as day declined swelled into torrents, and came down more like water-spouts than rain. Exhausted and in pain, Lucille was unable to proceed fast; her mantle soon clung a heavy weight around her, her thin silk shoes, the only pair she had left the Hotel D'Almaine with, before she had gone one hundred paces were saturated with the clayey moisture clinging to them, yet she kept on, at each moment summoning all her energies lest they should fail her at the last hour.

The orange grove was in sight. Oh, how welcome was its foliage to her sinking heart. She entered it, as it cut a corner from the road. Though earlier in the season than when she had entered it last year with Jules, it was in full blossom. She sank from fatigue on the same jutting root she had done then. The flowers, heavy with the raindrops, nearly encompassed her with their moisture. She looked up, and pressed them cold and drooping to her brow.

"I beat you from me," she said, "last year, fearing you clung to me like a winding-sheet; but now, how willingly would I clasp your death-hued blossoms, could they shield me from the misery I am enduring! What am I wishing?" she continued, with a sudden start. "To die away from my father? May Heaven give me strength to reach him—only to reach him—it is all I ask!"

She arose. This short appeal to the power she reverenced gave her courage. She was soon at the edge of the grove. As she stepped from it her feet sank deep in a muddy pool, in extricating herself her shoes were left behind, but she heeded it not—scarcely knew it—as she tottered forward. She saw a light, glimmering, indeed, but sufficient to point out to her, though the darkness had become dense, that she was near the haven of her hopes. A few minutes and her hand was on the garden gate, her feet on the gravel path. She stood before the window, a cheerful fire lighted up the apartment, each well-known object was before her. Her father sat on one side of it, on the other, Madeline. They were in earnest converse. She moved to the door, touched the handle—her power was gone. She sank against it, repeating, "Father, father!"

Quick is the heart of a parent, ready the ear, or could De Vernet have heard that low feeble voice calling on him? He was at the spot before the cadence had ceased to sound, had opened the door to receive into his arms his half insensible child. He bore her into the parlor, tore wildly off her wet garments, crying, in scarcely audible voice,

"Madeline, what has brought her here alone, exposed to the inclemency of the night, ill and suffering, when we believed her so many miles from us?"

At once a light seemed to break in upon him.

"My child is degraded!" he said, glancing at her and speaking vehemently. "Who has done this? Speak! Who has degraded—who has done what will bring my gray hairs with sorrow to their last resting-place?"

"Father, oh, father," said Lucille, in a faint, broken voice, "not that! I have abused your confidence; I am helpless, abused, ill, perhaps dying—but not guilty."

"Bless you, Lucille, for those two last words. I can brave all, even your death, if you die innocent," and he clasped her, care, travelworn, almost inanimate, to his aching heart.

Madeline, whose tears had fallen fast on the hand pressed tightly in her own, exclaimed,

"Batiste will tell you, monsieur; he knows much. But assist me to take her to her room, every moment these wet garments cling to her is risking her life, and while I am placing her in bed send for medical aid."

Assisted by the servant, the active affectionate Madeline soon had Lucille in bed, who was no longer conscious of suffering, but raving in delirium; while her distracted father, like a troubled spirit, wandered from room to room, now listening to the ravings of his child, then hearkening to the wailings of Madeline as she leant over her.

"She is on the bed of her childhood," she cried, "her bridal bed. Ah! will it also be her bed of death? Merciful Heaven! what will become of her father?"

"I will die with her!" exclaimed De Vernet, in a tone almost as wild as his raving child's. "And her mother—where is she? Miles away; unconscious that the last fleeting moment fading for ever may make her childless. Ella, why did you desert us? Had your child been guided by a mother's hand, would this have happened?"

He drew his desk hurriedly towards him, and with an unsteady hand and eyes nearly blinded from emotion, penned the following lines:

"Ella—Your child is dying—dying from want of care; far had you been near to possess her confidence this would not have occurred. She is privately married, and, I imagine, heartlessly forsaken; but I know nothing but from her ravings. I am wretched—heartsick. Ella, you are the cause! If my child die, may God forgive you—I cannot!

H. De Vernet."

CHAPTER XIII.

In a sumptuously though anciently furnished dressing-room in the castle of Waldenburg stood before a large dressing-glass the still fair and graceful Madame de Vernet. It was a golden morning; and not only were the green glades and snowy blossoms tinted by its bright hues, but it glanced upon the regular features, gave deeper radiance to the golden hair, and sparkled in the blue eyes of the beautiful figure reflected by the mirror. She was preparing for a pic-nic, and revelling in the idea of pleasure that glorious sunshine would induce to the harmony of the party, and was just clasping her waist with a large jewelled brooch, which glittered and shaded into many hues the different colors it reflected. A small Brussels lace mantilla lined with peach-blossom satin covered her graceful shoulders; while her maid stood beside her holding in her hand a white transparent bonnet, plumed with the elegant feather of the marabou.

"How beautiful madame looks to-day!" said her lady's maid. "Madame is an evergreen. Ten years I have been at the castle; and though so many things are changed, there is none in madame."

Ella looked indifferently, but as she took the bonnet a satisfied smile slightly parted her lips, and the sun furtively glanced on her small, white, regular teeth. At the moment she thought only of her beauty.

A knock sounded on the oaken door. The maid answered it, and returned with a letter, which she laid carelessly on the dressing-table. Ella glanced towards it, and caught it up eagerly. She knew the writing, though it was thick and blotted. It was months since she had received intelligence from the valley. Her heart bounded to her mouth. The mother and the wife had power over its pulsations—more powerfully than even she herself was aware of. She broke the seal and read the contents. As she finished, a sharp, quick cry, as if a shot had pierced her, burst from her. The plumed bonnet fell from her hand to the ground; and as she staggered to a chair, was trodden on and crushed.

"The bijou of a bonnet!" cried the maid, catching it up, more mindful of it than the disorder of her mistress. "What will madame do? It will be impossible to wear it."

The words were unheard. Ella sat a few moments gazing on vacancy, then starting up, rushed from the room. Another instant, and she was standing pale and shivering before the baroness, the letter in her hand.

The baroness was little changed. Eighteen years had but whitened the soft hands resting on her forehead. She was pale, calm and collected as usual.

"What ails you, Ella?" she demanded. "Whence is that letter from?"

"From De Vernet. Read it," she replied, in a husky tone.

The baroness glanced over it, and said, "What do you intend doing?"

"Fly to them immediately, was the reply. "Death is hovering, he sometimes lingers before he points his darts. I may yet see my child living. Oh, Aunt Ulrica, I am a guilty thing; dare I hope so much from heaven?"

"Hope everything, dear Ella. Depart directly, and leave the rest to Providence."

She rang the bell while speaking, and on the servant appearing, ordered the carriage to be brought round as soon as possible.

"Now to your room, dear child," she said, commiseratingly, "and change your dress. I will give orders for a few necessaries to be packed. Gertrude will go with you, and you must neither sleep nor rest, but in the carriage, till you reach the valley."

"Sleep and rest!" said Ella. "Shall I ever have either again?"

"Do not despair," said her aunt, "it is a reproach to me; I have done wrong in keeping you so long from those who are nearer, and should be dearer than I am. I will pray fervently for you. Adieu, my child, trust in God. He must and will support you through this trial."

The carriage was announced, the two unhappy women embraced in silence, and separated.

Three days after the carriage stopped before the home of De Vernet; the worn wife and mother glanced fearfully towards the windows of the house. The blinds were closely drawn, and the dusky twilight sat heavily on them. Stillness was around the neglected house; the cat, scared by the noise of the postilion's heavy boots on the gravel path, hastily scampered to a high tree for safety; the dog sat moodily in the door porch, and only growled as the large brass-knobbed whip sounded on the door.

The sound struck like an icebolt on Madame de Vernet's heart. "All is over!" she said, in an inaudible voice. "I have come to the house of death!" But her strained eyes were fixed on the door; it opened, she saw her husband in the background. "Let me in! let me in!" she cried, and bursting open the door, she ran into the house, and the husband and wife stood face to face.

De Vernet looked full into the sad pale face; he had never seen it before but flushed with the hue of health and loveliness. For the first time there was real sympathy between them, but he said coldly, "You here, Ella—come as a visitor to the house you have so long deserted?"

"Reproach me not," she said, humbly; "pity me, Henri, for I am only suffering what I merit; but Lucille—my child!—oh, do not say I have come too late! In mercy, say she lives!"

"Yet lives," said De Vernet; "but her danger is the same."

She rushed to his arms, crying, "One part of my prayer is heard; grant, my husband, the other part. Forgive me for my want of care; take me to your heart again, there to remain for ever; for if you will it so, nothing shall part us more in life."

De Vernet's eyes softened; the wife of his youth lay subdued on his bosom. Her embrace was responded to; they were reunited till death should once more part them.

* * * * * * * *

It was the tenth day of Lucille's return to the valley. The blinds were down, the curtains drawn closely, that not a gleam of that bright noonday May sun might penetrate the darkened apartment. She slept the first time calmly. Madeline Batiste sat on one side the bed, the anxious mother on the other; all was silent as the grave, when there was a movement of the bedclothes, a hand was stretched out, and a low voice said, "Where am I?"

Madeline was leaning over the invalid directly. An exclamation of joy was on her tongue, but she restrained it as she waved Madame de Vernet aside, and answered calmly, "Where are you, dear Lucille? Why, in your own dear little bed, and Madeline, your friend, bending over you."

She looked wildly round a moment, then asked, "How came I hither—at home, with my father? Where is he, that I do not see him?"

"He is walking," replied Madeline; "Jacques and he are settling something at the farm; but, Lucille, dearest, I have something to introduce you to—something so small, so beautiful, so loveable. Oh! how dear it will be to you, as it already is to us!" She raised a roll of flannel from the foot of the bed, slowly opening it as she spoke. "Look," she added, in a tremulous tone, her eyes filling with tears of affection, "Did you ever behold anything before half so lovely?"

Lucille directed her eyes towards the flannel, and uttered a murmuring cry. It was an infant, and her yearning heart told her she was its mother.

"There!" said Madeline, kissing the downy cheek of the babe, and placing it near Lucille, "rest for the first time on the arm of your mother, that her slumber may be soft and refreshing as your own."

"And Jules?" inquired the young mother in a suppressed tone. "Does he know he is a father? Have his lips pressed its forehead?"

"There has not been time to even think of him yet, dearest," replied Madeline; "but now you are better, we will write; but no more talking, you must sleep; turn to your child. Oh, how tranquilly you will sleep with that slumbering near your heart! Happy Lucille, to possess such a treasure!"

So thought Lucille, as she turned and drew her babe closer towards her; she smiled and murmured a few low words, and again slept. When she awoke a fair form was bending over her; she closed her eyes again, then opened them more widely, exclaiming doubtfully, "Mamma, can it be mamma, or do I dream?"

"No, no, it is I," said her mother, bending her face till her pale lips touched her daughter's, "your mother, Lucille, your unkind, neglectful mother! Can you pardon her?"

"Pardon you, dear mother?" said Lucille, whose arms were immediately round her neck; "what have I to pardon?—you, who have come like an angel of mercy to bring peace to my father's wounded spirit. Oh, mother, how sweet to have you near me! Now I am a parent myself, the link between us seems more tightly knit. What new-born sensations are springing up in my heart! Mother!" she added, in a low soft tone, "that has a thrilling sound."

So thought Madame de Vernet, as she showered kisses on the lips that had murmured it for the first time in reference to herself.

Lucille progressed slowly, but surely, towards convalescence; there was but one drawback on her peace. She saw her father and mother sitting beside the same hearth, firmly re-united; she had their forgiveness for the past, but her repeated letters to D'Almaine remained unnoticed. She had written also to Emile; there was silence there. What did it mean? That she was forgotten or deserted? The blood rushed like a torrent through her heart at the thought, though with an effort she fought against it to accuse the countess as the cause.

(To be continued.)

The inquest upon the body of R. Gattie, found in the water near the Elysian Fields, who had been shot and stabbed, was continued on the 31 May, before Coroner Bohnstedt, at Hoboken. Gustavus Ferrez, Superintendent of the Rondout Machine Works, testifies that deceased had been in his employ the past six months as a draughtsman. He left Rondout on the 21st April for New York, with the intention of joining a German military company for the war. Deceased was a sober and industrious man. John Fletcher, a clerk, residing at No. 27 Bayard street, New York, identified Gattie, and was with him on Saturday last. Deceased expressed a desire to visit various places, and since he had been missing he has ascertained that he had visited a disreputable house on two occasions. The inquest was adjourned indefinitely, and the matter will be placed in the hands of detectives. Upon further examination, it has been ascertained that the ball, which entered the heart, did not pass through any of the clothing. There was also a blackened spot around the wound, caused by the close proximity of the pistol. Dr. Elder is of opinion that the man could not have committed the deed himself. His coat, vest and shirt were found buttoned. The supposition is that he had been murdered in New York and the body afterwards thrown into the river.

RELIEF OF FORT PICKENS, BY THE UNITED STATES FLEET. MARCH 28,

REINFORCEMENT OF FORT PICKENS.

(Continued from page 402.)

The Purser's Report of the Voyage.

The steamship Atlantic, A. G. Gray commander, left New York on Sunday, April 7, under sealed orders from the Government. At eight A.M. discharged pilot, and at ten A.M. shaped her course in compliance with orders. On Monday, the 8th, at four P.M., the wind suddenly shifted and blew fresh from south-east, and so continued until midnight, when it increased to a heavy gale. In order to save the horses, the ship was hove-to, with her head to south-east. After the gale had abated, we proceeded on our course for Key West, having laid-to for thirty-six hours.

HORSES SLUNG INTO THE SEA TO BE TOWED ASHORE AT SANTA ROSA ISLAND.

We arrived and dropped anchor in the outer roads at Key West, three miles from Fort Taylor, at two P.M. on Saturday, the 13th, when one of our boats was sent to Fort Taylor, conveying Colonel Brown and his staff, who had prolonged interviews with the United States officers, both military and civil. At seven P.M. commenced receiving additional troops, ordnance, ordnance stores, shells, &c., &c., which were placed on a lighter and towed out to the Atlantic by the United States steamer Crusader, Captain Craven. This labor was continued, without cessation, until four A.M. of Sunday, the 14th,

THE BODIES OF THE VOLUNTEERS OF THE SIXTH MASSACHUSETTS REGIMENT WHO WERE KILLED IN THE

FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL

1861.—SKETCHED FROM THE WHEEL-HOUSE OF THE ATLANTIC BY AN OFFICER OF THE EXPEDITION.

and at six A.M. we weighed anchor and steered for Tortugas, where we anchored close to Fort Jefferson at two P.M. same day. At this point we took on board more officers, troops, laborers, lumberers, gun-carriages, materials, &c.; and at nine P.M. were under way for (Continued on page 410.)

RIOT AT BALTIMORE, MD., BORNE IN SOLEMN PROCESSION PAST THE BOSTON COMMON TO THE STATE HOUSE. ABBOT IN BOSTON.—See Page 410.

THE EIGHTH MASSACHUSETTS REGIMENT REPAIRING BRIDGE ON THEIR ROUTE FROM ANNAPOLIS TO WASHINGTON.—PAGE 410.

FRANK PERRY, ONE OF THE EIGHTH MASSACHUSETTS REGIMENT, DIVING FOR A MISSING NAIL ON THE ROAD FROM ANNAPOLIS TO WASHINGTON.—PAGE 410.

OLD BARN AT THE JUNCTION, USED AS BARRACKS BY THE SEVENTH N.Y. REGT., AFTER A FATIGUING MARCH OF TWENTY MILES.—P. 410.

REINFORCEMENT OF FORT PICKENS.

(Continued from page 408.)

final destination, which was now known only to Colonel Brown and Captain Meigs of the army, and to Captain Gray of the Atlantic. During that night and the next day great curiosity was manifested, and though the ship's course seemed to indicate Fort Pickens, yet it was not until the evening of Monday, the 15th, that the secret was disclosed and the reinforcement of Fort Pickens openly announced. Up to this time all was conjecture, but now the countenances of all on board beamed with the knowledge of an approaching event.

Activity and preparation took the place of supineness and uncertainty, and the fact that Fort Pickens could and should be reinforced was settled that night.

On Tuesday, the 16th, at half past six o'clock P.M., we anchored off Santa Rosa Island (Fort Pickens being on its western extremity), four miles from the shore, close by the frigate Sabine, the flagship of the squadron, Com. Adams. After communicating with the commander and the naval captains present, we took in tow the boats of the fleet, some twenty in number, and after dark weighed anchor and stood in shore, all lights being extinguished, and came to anchor within a mile of Fort Pickens, and in direct range of the guns of Fort McRae and the water batteries, and three fourths of a mile from the beach, in four fathoms of water. At a quarter past nine the first boat pushed off for the beach, with Colonel Brown and Captain Meigs, who were the first to meet and surprise the intrepid Slemmer and his command. During the embarkation of the troops in the boats, the signal from Fort Pickens for an apprehended attack was made by the sending up of rockets. This signal was repeated, and hastened the operations. Captain Vodges and other officers in the fort were astonished at the rapidity of the reinforcement. Before midnight the majority of officers and soldiers were safely in the fort, and although a heavy surf was running during the night, no accident of any kind occurred.

This successful landing took place three days after the bombardment and surrender of Fort Sumpter—a fact well-known on the mainland, but not known at Fort Pickens nor by the forces afloat.

Early in the morning of the 17th, the remaining troops were landed, excepting the artillerymen of Captain Barry's company, who remained to land with their horses. At eight A.M. we again weighed anchor, and stood to the eastward and anchored about three and a half miles from Fort Pickens and half a mile from the beach. This point was selected as the best place for landing the horses. This difficult work was commenced in the afternoon, continued during the night and finished on the morning of the 18th.

The United States steam frigate Powhatan, commanded by Captain David D. Porter, arrived on the afternoon of the 17th, and after communicating with the flagship, took position just ahead of us in order to cover the future landing. In this movement she was followed by the Brooklyn, Captain Poor, which anchored under our stern. The Wyandotte was cruising about, the Sabine, St. Louis and Supply being outside, about three miles distant. The boats of all the ships of the squadron were actively engaged in landing troops and stores, &c., from the night of the 16th until the morning of the 23d. The Illinois, with reinforcements, arrived at midnight on Friday, the 19th, and her troops were landed the next morning.

Seven of the horses were lost; four died on the passage, one was drowned alongside, one had his neck broken in the surf, and one died from exhaustion on reaching the shore. The forage and light artillery were landed simultaneously with the horses. On the 18th, the landing of the general cargo of heavy and light ordnance, ammunition, provisions, &c., was fairly commenced, and continued, with but partial interruption, until the forenoon of Tuesday, 23d, when she was finally discharged, to the great gratification of all concerned.

The position of the Powhatan and Brooklyn was such that their guns could sweep Santa Rosa Island and prevent a landing from the main land, and at the same time shielded the hull of the Atlantic. At no time was our steam allowed to go down, so that in case of attack or gale, or any emergency, we were ready to go off shore. On Monday Colonel Brown, the commander of the United States forces in Florida, gave to Captain Gray, in Fort Pickens, the necessary certificate and orders and despatches for Key West. On Tuesday, Captain Meigs, the indefatigable engineer of the expedition, came on board, and at noon we were passing through the fleet, saluting and sainted, on our way to Key West for coal. We arrived at Key West at six A.M. of the 25th, making the run in forty-two hours. We were here disappointed in procuring coal, as Mr. Tifft, the only private owner of coal, refused to sell coal to this or any other steamer employed by the Government, he being, of course, a Secessionist. As the Mohawk and Crusader were ahead of us to coal at the Government wharf, and to have waited would have caused great delay, we weighed anchor, and at eleven A.M. passed Sand Key light, and at sundown passed Moro Castle and into Havana harbor, making the run in seven and a quarter hours.

Having completed coaling at a quarter to twelve A.M., Saturday, 27th, we got under way, and at twenty minutes past noon we passed the Moro and shaped our course for New York, and after a pleasant passage, arrived off Sandy Hook on Wednesday morning, making the run in three days and eighteen hours and a half.

DEPARTURE OF ELLSWORTH'S FIRE ZOUAVES.

In our last number we gave a description of the departure of this fine regiment for the seat of war, and have consequently little to add. We now present a faithful picture of them as they appeared on their march from the Astor House to the wharf at Canal street, where they embarked. Their departure was the more imposing as they were accompanied by the entire Fire Department of New York. We refer to another column for their present position.

THE MASSACHUSETTS TROOPS REPAIRING A

Railroad Bridge on their March to Washington.

About sunset they reached the remains of the bridge near Millersville, twenty feet high and sixteen feet long, which had been burned, and the engineer corps of the regiment, assisted by the Massachusetts men, who had done good service throughout the day in repairing the track, rebuilt the bridge and relaid the rails, so that after a heavy shower, which wet the men through, they were enabled to proceed. After nightfall the march continued, through swamps and mist, out of which chill blasts came. Company 6 had been ordered to roll up its overcoats, and had only blankets. Occasional rails had to be replaced. The baggage cars were still to be pushed on by men who had no sleep for twenty-four hours, and who had experienced unusual heat and unusual chilliness by turns for twenty hours.

FRANK PIERCE, OF LYNN, DIVING AFTER A MISSING RAIL.

Our Artist has illustrated a most singular incident in the march of the Massachusetts Eighth Regiment from Annapolis to Washington. Coming upon a break in the railway track, they discovered one of the rails to be missing. Under these debilitating circumstances "a Massachusetts man rose to the emergency. With eyes sharpened by use he surveyed the ground, considered probabilities and weighed chances. Then, with an instinct as unerring as that of an Indian who reads in the turning of a leaf the passage of a foe, he made his way to a deep stream, at some distance, examined its banks, and stripped. Three times he plunged to the bottom, and the third time brought up the missing rail." The name of this sagacious and heroic soldier is Frank Pierce, of Lynn.

THE SEVENTH REGIMENT CONVERTING AN OLD

Barn into a Temporary Barracks.

An old writer has likened a campaign to a picnic quickened by a sense of danger, and certainly, if we may judge from the avidity with which the youth of our State enter into the present struggle, there can be no question that Burton was right in his metaphor. It would seem as though the very strangeness of the hardship were something to enhance it, and turn discomfort into a luxury.

Our Artist, who accompanied the Seventh Regiment on their march from Annapolis to Washington, has sent us a graphic sketch of the manner in which the soldiers made an old barn into a barracks, and he dwells upon the eager cheerfulness with which every man went to work, and the complacent pride with which they regarded their handiwork when it was done. This old barn is situated at the Junction of the Railroad.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DEAD RETURNED FROM BALTIMORE.

Solemn and Impressive Ceremonies.

The 1st of May witnessed a solemn scene. The bodies of the Massachusetts men who died at Baltimore were returned to the State from which they had so recently departed. Information was received at noon that their bodies were on their way to Boston, and instant preparations were made for their proper reception. The Independent Cadets were ordered out to do escort duty, and the call was promptly answered. At four o'clock they left their armory, under command of Major Baldwin, and marched to the depot of the Western Railroad.

The news of the expected arrival was announced in the Journal Postscript and spread quickly, and a large concourse of citizens collected around the depot anxiously awaiting the arrival of the train. Governor Andrew, accompanied by two of his aids, and Adjutant-General Schouler, with other gentlemen belonging to different departments of the State Government, came in hacks to take the bodies into the charge of the State.

The train entered the depot at seven minutes of five, and the bodies, three in number, laid in metallic coffins, and then enclosed in pine boxes, were taken from the cars. They came in the care of Merrill S. Wright, a private of the Richardson Light Infantry of Lowell, who was detailed by Colonel Jones of the Sixth Regiment for that purpose. He left Washington Monday, arriving at Baltimore the same evening, and received the bodies from City Marshal Kane, in whose charge they were. No objection was made by any of the authorities of the city, and he left there the next morning and came directly to Boston. Mr. Wright did not see the bodies, as the coffins have not been opened since they were put in, and could say nothing concerning the truth of the statement that they had been mutilated.

The names of these three soldiers are Sumner H. Needham, Addison O. Whitney and Luther C. Ladd.

The bodies were placed upon biers which had been prepared, and each being covered by an American flag, they were borne into the street, where the Cadets had formed in line and presented arms while the band played "Pleyel's Hymn," and all the spectators stood reverentially with uncovered heads. The clouds which had before darkened the heavens broke suddenly away, and the sun looked down brightly upon the scene where thousands of citizens had gathered with sorrowful hearts to receive the bodies of the martyrs from Massachusetts who fell in the cause of government and law. Hearses were in attendance, in which the coffins were placed, and surrounded by the Cadets, they moved slowly from the depot. The Governor and the gentlemen who accompanied him, with Mr. Wright, who had the bodies in charge, followed in carriages. The military marched with arms reversed, and the band played solemn dirges as the funeral cortege passed along the streets, which were crowded with people, all preserving a religious silence. The procession passed through Washington street to West, and thence up Tremont to the State House, over the same spot as that on which they stood but two weeks ago and received the banner in defence of which they had fought so bravely. No halt was made until, marching down Beacon street, they reached King's Chapel at the corner of School and Tremont street, in the vault of which the remains were deposited, with the same ceremonies which had characterized their reception at the depot.

GREAT MEETING OF THE LADIES OF NEW YORK

In the Cooper Institute.

Some poet has said that woman never looks so lovely as when she is in tears. We consider her much lovelier when she is anxious to wipe away the tears from the eyes of the suffering. At all events, never did the fair of our great city appear more bewitching than they did on the evening of Monday, the 29th ult., when nearly three thousand of the belles of society met together to deliberate on measures for the consolation and comfort of the gallant men who are about to risk their lives for our great Republic. The meeting was held in the great room of the Cooper Institute, and long before the hour appointed every seat was occupied.

Vice-President Hamlin took the chair, and explained the intention the ladies had in forming the present organization, which they intended calling the "Central Relief Association." It was to aid the wounded and sick in the coming war. The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Rev. Dr. Bellows, Surgeon Crawford, who was one of the heroes of Fort Sumpter, Rev. Dr. Bethune, Rev. Dr. Hitchcock, Dr. Mott, Dr. Stephens, Dr. Wood and several other gentlemen equally prominent. A Board of twenty-four managers was then chosen, and plans adopted to centralise and direct their efforts. The Executive Committee met the next day at the Committee-room, Dr. Valentine Mott acting as chairman. A letter was then read from Dr. Newell, speaking of another association which had been formed by Mrs. L. M Andrews. Mrs. Blackwell then read a statement of what a nurse's qualifications ought to consist, and the meeting adjourned. Our Artist has given an exact picture of this most remarkable gathering of the flowers of New York on the 29th of April. Let us pray that, although ready to nurse and solace the wounded, there may be no occasion for their benevolent patriotism.

ERLE GOWER;

OR, THE

SECRET MARRIAGE.

By Pierce Egan.

Author of "The Flower of the Flock," "The Snake in the Grass," &c., &c., &c.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Dark grow the windows,
And quenched is the fire,
Sound fades into silence,
All footsteps retire.

No voice in the chambers,
No sound in the hall!
Sleep and oblivion
Reign over all!

* * * *

Darker and darker
The black shadows fall;
Sleep and oblivion
Reign over all.—Longfellow.

More than a week passed away, and Violet kept her chamber. Accustomed in some degree to such absences, and to Ishmael's silence respecting them and her, Erle made no remark. He, in fact, was glad to be as little in the house, or with Ishmael, as possible.

He paced the promenade in the morning, he rode along the drive in the afternoon. Some days he galloped his horse over the downs upon the Dyke-road, or took a canter through the beautiful avenue in Lord Chichester's park, leading from the Lewes to the Ditchling-road, at other times he directed his horse by the upper road to Shoreham; or, changing his route, pursued the way to Rottingdean, but without success. He hoped again to meet Lady Maud—he did not meet her.

One day, when the drive along the King's-road was unusually full, Ishmael accompanied him in his ride, and kept him, evidently with an object, at a slow pace, where the equestrians and the carriages were thickest. As they proceeded gently onwards, Erle perceived that, as usual, he was the object of some attention, and the eloquent blood rushed violently into his face as a young and dashing lady, regarding him through an eyeglass, said, in a voice loud enough for him to hear,

"Amazingly like Lord Kingswood—ridiculously like; more like his lordship than his own son, the Honorable Cyril Kingswood. Pray tell me, my lord marquis—I know you to have been on intimate terms with the Kingswoods for the whole of your natural life—is this remarkable young person a relation of his lordship's? He must be."

Erle was, with Ishmael, compelled to remain quiet in the rear of a carriage, some vehicles immediately in front being blocked up by one of those pests which trouble this road—a coal cart. The remarks which caught his ear were painfully offensive to him, and finding that he was the object upon which several glasses were levelled, he would gladly have leaped his horse over one of the obstructions if there had been room so that he could have escaped.

However, his haughty, defiant, indignant look did not damage him in the estimation of those who observed him, for it was clear, by his noble carriage and his elegant form, that if a handsome person and an exalted mien conferred nobility, he might have been the son of a duke.

He did not hear the reply made, but he saw that it was the Marquis of Chillingham who had been thus addressed, and who had answered the inquisitive lady in an under tone.

Another minute and he was free. He was about to gallop away at a mettlesome pace, when Ishmael sharply checked him, and then the Marquis of Chillingham joined them.

"I heard that you were here, Vernon," exclaimed the latter, in his old, quiet tone.

"Indeed!" responded Ishmael, as coldly. "Who could have told you?"

"Sir Harry Wilton," responded the marquis. "You knew Harvey Wilton, who was at Trinity with us? It is a son of his—immense estates—and has fallen desperately in love with your pretty young protegée."

The brow of Ishmael lowered, more, however, in thought than in anger.

"Talks of nothing else, and has been boring me amazingly to introduce him to you," continued the marquis. "He is in London just now, but he will be down here again in a day or two."

"I shall be in London shortly. We will reserve the honor until then," replied Ishmael.

"As you please," rejoined the marquis. "By the way, Vernon, I cannot help remarking—you know I hate rudeness, and I am anxious not to appear guilty of it to you of all men—but I cannot help remarking how great is the resemblance of your young companion to Lord Kingswood. It is the common talk, and it appears to be desperately offensive to his lordship. Some one mentioned it to him at a Cabinet Council the other day, just as we had broken up, and he positively made a virulent and coarse reply to him. By Jove, here he comes! I will draw his attention. Ho, Kingswood!" he cried, loudly, as Lord Kingswood appeared, riding at a canter, with his hat deeply set over his brows.

The nobleman looked up and exhibited as great a change in his face even as Lady Kingswood had. Pale, strongly marked, his features were drawn down and looked sharp and pinched, betraying great mental suffering.

His eyes first encountered the glittering, savage glare of Ishmael's fiery orbs, and then they fell on the pale, excited face of Erle. A cry, almost a wail, burst from his lips; he struck his spurs into the sides of his steed and flew past them like the wind!

The lip of the Marquis of Chillingham curled, and there was a grim, savage smile on his features too.

"Kingswood has much changed," he observed, thoughtfully. "He has altered ever since your young friend by your side—your secret as well that of Kingswood's—appeared first at Kingswood Hall. Why, Vernon, have you made yourself, Lord Kingswood, and this youth the subject of discourse in every salon? By the bye, I must not omit that bright young beauty who occasionally accompanies you in your equestrian airings; she, too, attracts much attention."

"Indeed," answered Ishmael, with his sardonic smile. "Have I done this?"

"In truth have you," replied the marquis. "The cause no one can get at."

"I have told you they shall," rejoined Ishmael, with emphasis. "The time is approaching. The world wonders; its wonder shall be set at rest."

"Nine days will do it without your explanation," remarked the marquis, drily.

"Lady Kingswood, too, is greatly changed in her personal appearance," suddenly observed Ishmael. "The haughty beauty appears to have subsided into a pale, haggard woman. Do you know why, Chillingham?" he inquired, with a sudden and startling emphasis.

The face of the marquis became a trifle paler, and his eyelids fluttered.

"I—I—suppose," he commenced, with the slightest possible stammer, "that the troubles which affect the mind of Lord Kingswood disturb her ladyship's. I cannot possibly know of any other reason, and I am not quite sure that I care."

"Her ladyship is here," observed Ishmael.

"Was here," returned the marquis, with a silent laugh. "They have grown into the oddest family. I have learnt by inquiry that her ladyship, Lady Maud St. Clair, and Cyril Kingswood came here together. They were to remain here some time, I understood, on account of the delicate state of Lady Maud's health, but young hopeful suddenly, and without a word to any one, departed for London, and Lady Kingswood, with about as much reason, fled after him, carrying off poor Lady Maud with her. I saw Lady Kingswood the day she left, but I could not get an opportunity to get up to speak to her."

"Did she see you?" asked Ishmael, fixing his glittering eyes upon him.

This was a question the marquis evidently did not like, but he answered, calmly:

"Yes, oh, yes! We were divided by some carriages, and when I would have joined her party, her carriage had driven away."

Ishmael made no comment on this. The marquis, however, looked at him furtively, and wondered what was his motive for putting that question. That he had a motive he did not doubt, but he was strangely and uneasily puzzled to think what it could be.

At this moment his quick eye caught sight of Sir Harris Stanhope and Beatrice. Carlton was on horseback riding by their side. Carlton at the same time caught sight of Erle; he called to his father to draw up to the side of the road, and he rode up to Erle, looking at the same time sharply for Violet.

"Sir Harris Stanhope, by all that is fortunate!" exclaimed the Marquis of Chillingham. "I want to have a little chat with him. Do you know him, Vernon?"

Ishmael grated his teeth together audibly. The marquis heard the sound, and with surprise observed on Ishmael's countenance an expression of intense and malignant hatred.

"I cannot speak to him," he cried, and putting spurs to his horse, he galloped off. The marquis was surprised into following him, and Erle was left alone with Carlton, who would insist upon his approaching the carriage in which Beatrice sat.

He saw that she was pale and sad; he saw her deep dark eyes fastened upon his face, perusing its expression with deep earnestness, but withal she possessed greater self-control than he did. He was hot and cold by turns, he chafed at his position, and said he knew not what—something of sorrow that she had been ill; something of hope that the occasion of her illness would pass away to no more return; that when again they met she would have recovered from her transient weakness, and that, with its pain, it would be quite forgotten.

There was, she fancied, a grave earnest look in his eyes, a firmness in his tone, and a steadfastness in his manner which was intended to shut out all hope; but Beatrice knew or believed that she knew, men were weak and women were skilful, and she had a conceit that, though now she had been checked, she was not yet checkmated.

Carlton spoke of Violet, and Sir Harris inquired after Vernon, but Erle found himself unable to submit to his position, and he contrived that his horse should so curvet, turn, prance and become so restless, that it was an excuse to raise his hat and gallop in the direction Ishmael and the Marquis of Chillingham had taken.

Not that he joined them—no! on the contrary, he avoided them, turned his horse up a street at hand, and after proceeding a short distance, he alighted and gave his horse to his groom.

He retraced his steps to the residence in Brunswick-terrace and retired to his own room.

Late on the following day Ishmael inquired for him, and the servant handed the following note:

"Grateful for all that you have hitherto done for me, I take the future upon myself. You decline to place confidence in me—you decline to reveal to me what it is plain I ought to be put in possession of—you seek to make me a blind instrument to work out an atonement which, by your assertion, is due as much to me as you. I refuse to become that instrument. I may be a willing one when I know all; until then I will take my own path. We shall meet again, that is certain, but under what circumstances will depend on you. There is a tie, I feel it and know it, which binds me to Violet. I will, so far as I can, watch over her. I may not conquer happiness for her, but I can try—and I will. Remember, great as may be your wrongs and mine, O Ishmael! the day must come when we shall both stand before the same tremendous tribunal, each a king for mercy. Think of this when you note the pale face and wasting form of her whose happiness, more even than her life, you hold in your hand.

"Him whom you have named ERLE GOWER."

When Ishmael read the contents of this note he became faint. Then he crushed it in his hands, and an exclamation of rage burst from his lips. Then he summoned Violet to his presence. She came, pale, silent and sad, more like a spectre than the young, fair, blooming girl she had been but a few short months back. He spoke to her gently and tenderly, and he bade her prepare for their immediate return to London.

She cast her melancholy eyes round the apartment to catch the sympathising face of Erle, but she saw him not. She remembered what he had told her, and she knew that he had departed from them even as he had intimated to her. An expression of utter desolation settled on her face. She, however, uttered not a word, but meekly obeyed Ishmael's directions. A pang smote his breast as he watched her move slowly away, and when she had left the room he struck his breast with his clenched fists and he groaned.

"Have I not yet made sacrifices enough?" he exclaimed, in a tone of pain. "Must I tramp my way to my just revenge over the broken hearts of those dearest to me! I have suffered long—unjustly suffered. Must my hour of triumph come when my heart is bleeding at every pore! I would place those two creatures upon a pinnacle of greatness. It is their due—it is their right—and it shall be theirs; but must I, O Heaven, slaughter their happiness to accomplish it!"

He grazed his hands over his eyes, and bowed his head low. Anon he threw up his hands away, and held his head erect.

"I'll be the gentleman," he said, with a harsh, stern voice. "I must march ahead. He reserve the second. I'll sacrifice the work of years—"

But again that remorseful feeling—that fresh and uneasy sensation in a cheek, Eric Gower said in Kingswood Close.

Knowing his family to be in London, he expected to see Kingswood Hall plunged in darkness, but there were lights in many of the windows, and he was to be warning in and out of various drawing-rooms, and he wondered why it should be. There was something, however, strange about the building, and he felt a sudden feeling that impacted more of an anxious character would soon supervene him.

He paused on among the shadows of the old trees, until he reached a window beneath which he knew the library to be, and, as he approached, he paused, for ever.

The window was broken, and a few poisonous words burst from his lips.

The window was broken, and all those other words were gone.

"Back as my hopes!" he muttered. "Do it so, but they cannot keep me, dear Maud, from partaking, from loving you. Ah! I will not be denied!" and by my side, from partaking again those lines which seemed on from my heart he sworn, and gained it in a strain of fine fallacy, my eyes. Then, in spite of my stern hostility, to this. Tears came at will beneath the power rose—it may be that I was not myself, but I felt that I was a prisoner, and that I was not my own master, and I was not. Ah, how like a dream it seems to me that my noble thing, thereby, bound through the window, and I was in the library!

I paused on the ceiling, then the whole of the old room, until he reached a window beneath which he knew the library to be. He had no plan, no fixed purpose, he ever.

The window was broken, and a few poisonous words burst from his lips.

"Back as my hopes!" he muttered. "Do it so, but they cannot keep me, dear Maud, from partaking, from loving you. Ah! I will not be denied!" and by my side, from partaking again those lines which seemed on from my heart he sworn, and gained it in a strain of fine fallacy, my eyes. Then, in spite of my stern hostility, to this. Tears came at will beneath the power rose—it may be that I was not myself, but I felt that I was a prisoner, and that I was not my own master, and I was not. Ah, how like a dream it seems to me that my noble thing, thereby, bound through the window, and I was in the library!

With a sense of satisfaction he hurried towards it, and there lay stretched, indeed, motionless, the body of a man.

He bent over it in silence, and failed to decipher his features.

He was dressed in a suit of dark clothes, and his face was veiled the moon-beams in a manner which he could not distinguish.

A bound at once darkness, for in the shadow of the wood, hurried deeply.

The man, as if conscious of a presence, leaped to his feet, and confronted Eric, who stood firm and erect, as he rose up.

"Who are you?"

He knew the tones in an instant, but he could scarcely believe that he heard them aright. The mysterious visitor was Eric, and he stood before him, looked white and startled. He remained still and spoke not.

The robbers covered, upon the moment and muttered:

"Speak, speak, I say!"

Among the Chaos,
Among the Chaos,
A very large number of people were present,
Whom moulder at an hour!"

As he repeated the last line he noticed with curiosity to utter it, but when he had delivered it, he gave a growl rather than a yell, and fled towards the lapping ledge.

He made a third until he had disappeared, and delivered Matilda flying blind never under heard. Eric recognised no doubt in the fact that he was engaged in something glittering at his hand.

It was a pistol, and a double-barrelled sledge hard-knife. Something else was, however, yet to be done. He had to see Maud, and he must see her at once. He pistol and a small sum of cash. That Police Hall and other villainous hotel on hand for all that night, that he had frightened away the man of whom he served. He, however, took possession of the weapon and rapped on the rudest small house in the room.

Then he retraced his steps to the Hall, and remained quietly within the shadow of the trees, watching the window of the library, and the man who had said those strange words. Not for any of the stories of the robbery, for he purposely refused, he tried the door, and found the key-pistol was in the lock. He turned it in the key.

He entered, and closed it behind him, and was at once shrouded in intense darkness, but he had previously provided with a candle, and a box of matches for lighting it. As soon as he had done this he occupied with light upon the inner door, and he found that it was locked. He turned the key, and opened it, and experienced no difficulty in doing so, and he passed into the hall beyond.

It had evidently not been tenanted since he had quitted it, and it looked very drear and desolate. Still, he was not to be daunted by such a circumstance, and he laced the hall. He started, for the—going and fell—recommenced—made room upon him. He—looked—and—it was—a—man—with—a—pistol—in—his—hand. He was that singular, mysterious stranger at the fortunes which seemed to have had the most singular combination of circumstances connected with this.

A cold, sweeping shudder crept at the moment through his veins. It might have been fancy, but it seemed to him as if the man had been standing behind the chamber. He drew a deep breath.

"I have come down to see for my uncle," he murmured, "or I shall fail to accomplish it. I am not to keep me."

He was seized with a sudden delirium, for its eyes caught sight of the portrait, and his heart seemed to stand still as he gazed upon the features inside.

He closed his eyelids and breathed heavily: he reopened them, and once more gazed on it, for still it, but the face was gloomy and pale, like all the paint tops, and he muttered, "It is only a picture, after all," and he turned away against the apartment.

He was about to open the door, when he high back chairs of that kind, and there, with his head resting on his hand, sat the man who he had so passed not to open the door. In the corner of the room, placed hastily through the corridor, and opened the door, and found himself in the long, dark passage library.

He was prepared for the status of "Lady Maud, and he gazed at it for at least a minute, and then he saw more the "Lord Maud's artillery brandy.

He sighed, and leaned his head upon his hand, and remained where the chair, just as he had left it, and waited, and heard on the origin at the hall door.

He drew a sigh, and emerged to the door, drew his head pierced it, and where, her vessel, and the sound of the door, and the sound of the door, and opened it with the very place.

He stood in the open door.

His heart rose at the sight and softly and shortly spread. Thoroughfare, approaching him with a quiet step, a female, bearing a lamp in her hand, but it was not lighted.

He stood riveted to the spot, his blood rushing back to his heart.

As she drew near to the door, he saw that it was Maud, dressed precisely as when last she had parted him in the library.

Every nerve in his body trembled, and he could not speak.

Every nerve in his body trembled, and he could not speak.

She moved on, but he stood, still motionless, and heard on the steps at her feet he heard where the book had rested.

It is not here," she said, and then turned towards the desk where he was standing.

Her face was very like. It seemed to him that she perceived him. Yet she, with unmoved, feeling of horror, he perceived her eyelashes were rigid and fixed.

Was she withdrawn?

"Sir down, Eric. We will read this sweet story together again,"

And she sat down.

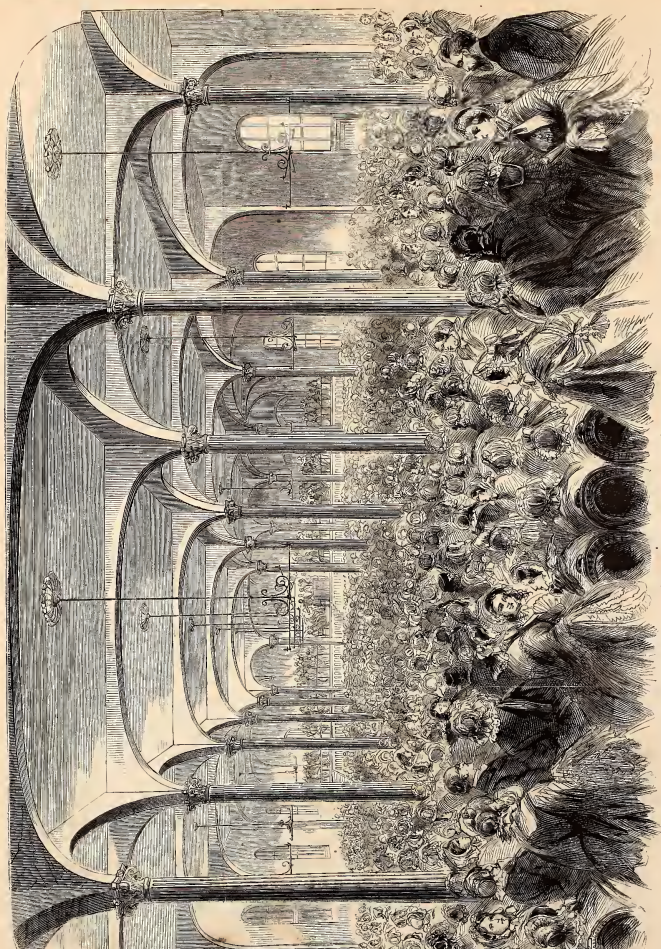
And he sat down by her side, stone, as that dark sacred library, in silence, in wonder and in terror!

(To be continued.)

Lord Nelson's Sentence Chair.—The first Black Squad, Welch & Brothers, Cannon Street Road, Edge St Cross, Bristol for Philadelphia, was executed at Bristol Gaol on Tuesday morning last. The chair in which he sat for the last time has passed into the possession of one of the warders of the gaol. Admiral Horatio Nelson once took a seat on board, and one of the deserters was his adopted son, William Nelson. The chair is a plain wooden one, and is well known as an operative instrument, and the capable of the help, and there was broken by the falling of the body. It is said that the chair is to be sold by the valuable interest, property and wardrobe of his gaol Sessions' chair. The material used consisted of Mr. Nelson's Sessions' chair.

On Saturday night week, an entrance, named Roberts, entered Dobbs's house, in Bridge Street, Dublin, and stole a quantity of wearing apparel. He was detected in the act by Mrs. Dobbs, endeavored to quit him, but without effect, and eventually ejected him. Roberts, on being put out, threatened to shoot the woman, and, having procured a pistol, he returned to Mrs. Dobbs's house, and, entering a very numerous crowd. He was immediately arrested and locked up in the police-station, and Mr. Jackson, Crime and Robbers were called in to assist Wilson, after which he was removed to his residence. No. 285 Seventh Street, where he was arrested by Sergeant Justice Kelly and committed to the Station. He has hitherto made good his criminal character.

At Mr. Chenery House, on Thursday last, a young man made his way to Parliament, but unlucky he made some indiscreet remarks of a strong character and in his excitement he was overheard by a gentleman who was standing near him. Mr. Chenery, Mr. Chenery, Mr. Chenery,



GREAT MEETING OF THE LADIES OF NEW YORK AT THE COOPER INSTITUTE, ON MONDAY, APRIL 29, 1861, TO ORGANIZE A SOCIETY TO BE CALLED "WOMAN'S CENTRAL ASSOCIATION OF RELIEF," TO MAKE CLOTHES, LINT BANDAGES, AND TO FURNISH NURSES FOR THE SOLDIERS OF THE NORTHERN ARMY.—See Page 410.

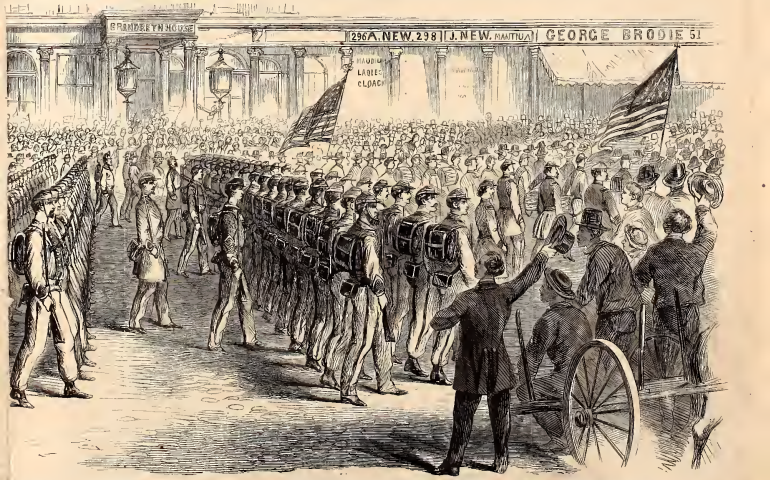
FROM A SKETCH BY AN ENGINEER OFFICER OF THE BROOKLYN.—SEE PAGE 401.

the highway to Washington is freed from obstruction. Troops are constantly arriving at Annapolis, the people are on the best possible terms with them, and their advent infuses new life into the little city.

PERFORMING MASS ON BOARD THE STEAMSHIP JAMES ADGER

To the Sixty-ninth Regiment of New York State Militia.

HE Sixty-ninth Regiment left New York on the 23d ult., on board the steamship James Adger, bound for Annapolis. We gave a vivid account of the excitement created by their departure, to witness which half the city turned out. Their voyage to Annapolis was anything but pleasant. There were not sleeping accommodations for more than one-third of the soldiers, the others sleeping anywhere—on deck, in the companion ways, or the cabin floors, in short, wherever they could drop down. There was plenty of food, but the cooking arrangements were altogether inadequate to the emergency. The voyage was a hard one every way. But the gallant soldiers kept up their spirits, and were much cheered by the constant kindness of the officers and the friendly and hopeful counsel of their Chaplain, Father Mooney, who performed for them the office of the solemn Mass. The men listened to it with profound attention, and the situation and the surrounding circumstances rendered the scene deeply and singularly impressive.



REGIMENT AND ESCORT PASSING THE CORNER OF BROADWAY AND CANAL STREET, APRIL 20, 1861.—SEE PAGE 410.

SECESSIONISTS PREVENTING THE FARMERS FROM TAKING THEIR PRODUCE TO WASHINGTON.

One special Artist at Washington, while taking a quiet survey of the Long Bridge which leads to Alexandria, unceremoniously approached the Secession troops stationed at the Virginia end of the bridge. With his glass he observed their operations while sunchcking a farmer in his wagon, and with a view to prevent any provisions reaching Washington from Virginia. Taking advantage of his position our Artist made a splendid sketch of the incident, which we present to our readers in our issue of to-day.

THE BALTIMORE STEAM GUN.

A GENTLEMAN direct from Baltimore, and who has seen the steam gun (about which so much nonsense has been said) operate, has furnished us with the following description of the gun:

It is on four wheels; the boiler is like that of an ordinary steam fire engine, the cylinder, vertical upright. There is but one barrel, which is of steel, on a pivot, and otherwise is like an ordinary musket barrel. It is fed or loaded through a hopper entering the breech directly over the pivot. The barrel has a rotary motion, and performs the circumference, by machinery attached, at the rate of about ten times, hundred times a minute. The balls are let into the barrel through a valve at will, and every time the barrel comes to a steam fire engine. The range is ascertained from above and below, and is likely to be quite accurate. The gun is also capable of being elevated or depressed by means of a screw and worm-wheel. It is fired or loaded through a hopper entering the barrel directly over the pivot. The barrel has a rotary motion, and performs the circumference, by machinery attached, at the rate of about ten times, hundred times a minute. The balls are let into the barrel through a valve at will, and every time the barrel comes round to a certain point, another valve, self-operated, lets out a ball, which is propelled solely by the velocity of the steam in the barrel.

It will discharge a 4 to-ounce ball three hundred times a minute. Its range is ascertained up and down, but the balls are liable to hit wide of the mark on one side or the other. The gun, which resembles inside of a drum, made of boiler iron, between five and six feet in circumference, with an opening at which balls are discharged. Its range is not over one hundred yards at best, and the gun can be swerved so as to discharge in any direction. The whole thing weighs six thousand seven hundred pounds, and is about the size of a steam fire engine. It is the opinion of our informant that the gun does not warrant the expectations of the inventor, and that it is not likely to be of much service.

DAMAGE TO FORT MOULTRIE. — The latest Charleston papers contain detailed accounts of the damage done by Fort Sumpter to Fort Moultrie and surrounding property. The Courier says:

"The raking fire from Fort Sumpter upon Fort Moultrie is very terribly destructive, and when viewed in connection with the fact that no lives was lost, is the most extraordinary one ever recorded in history. As you enter, the eye falls upon the battered walls of the citadel, with openings in some places large enough for windows.

"In other places may be seen the hanging splinters of the rafters, large pieces of which seemingly about to fall, while the holes in the roof throw a clear light over the scene of destruction, while the floor is literally covered with iron, which, if it could be gathered together, would be an almost impossible task to count the number of balls which have been fired at the fortress. All of the officers' quarters were battered with seven, eight, or ten balls, which penetrated the whole length of the building. The western wall on the upper balcony was entirely shot away. The barracks were almost entirely destroyed. The furnace for heating hot shot was struck four times. Each of the embrasures or States received three shots, and the Palmetto flag four. The merlons of sand-bags, &c., remain undisturbed.

"On the outside walls we counted over one hundred shot holes. Others were engaged in cleaning away fallen bricks, &c. It will be necessary to pull down the old wall and build new. Many of the beds and bedding in the officers' quarters and the men's barracks were cut and torn into splinters and threads. Had it not been for the bomb-proof shelter the loss of life would no doubt have been appalling. One shell entered the brick wall of Major Ripley's bedroom, ran down the wall and passed on the floor, and completely over the head of the bed. Our limited time prevented us from visiting the battery to the north of Fort Moultrie."

A SCIENTIFIC INVENTION.—THE ROTARY PORTABLE SAW.—Nothing is unfashionable, nowadays, but invented a new kind of fortress, which works upon a plan that will astonish all the world. The new machine is in the shape of a small tower, surrounded by a gallery, and regularly pierced for cannon, the motive power which regulates its movements being steam. It is to be zoned in a curious of iron plates, and so managed that on the first point of vulnerability the part of an enemy the tower begins to revolve with a rapidity which renders it inexorable. Its form is calculated from the pitching off of any of its defenders by the truest rifle becomes a matter of infinite difficulty. It can be propelled like any conveyance moved by steam apparatus from place to place, with equal speed. It is more likely to sell within spikes, which, when once in existence, would annihilate all who might approach it.

THE HUNDRED BARBER AND HIS CASTE.—A Bombay paper makes an amusing statement in connection with Sir Jamsetjee's return to that country, from his recent visit to England. On his departure to England the Parsee brought back a Hindoo barber with him. On their arrival at Bombay the barber was ousted from his caste, on account of his having travelled into the country of the Mlechcers or barbarians. The barber supplicated for readmission into his caste, and it was said would be allowed to do so should contribute a fine of 100 rupees to the caste fund, and give a dinner party to 400 people, to entitle him to be readmitted into his caste.

75,000 VOLUNTEERS WANTED

BY "UNCLE ABE,"

To help him restore order among his belligerent Nephews !

500,000 Men, Women and Children Wanted,

BY GEORGE E. EVANS, to aid him in promoting the claims of his New Enterprise on the people of GLORIOUS NEWS for those who are fighting the enemy PUTNEY, Vt.

Thousands of Chances to Make Money !

ONE MILLION DOLLARS

WORTH OF

Watches, Jewellery and Silver-Plated Ware,

TO BE DISPOSED OF ON

An Entirely New and Original Plan !

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE

All persons desirous of employment as Agents will address

NEW ENTERPRISE

Should send on their names at once, inclosing a three-cent stamp to pay postage, and receive by return mail

A Premium Catalogue,

Containing our INDUCEMENTS, which afford

A Rare Chance to Make Money

TO THE ENERGETIC AGENT.

Full Particulars Relative to this Novel Plan !

To insure prompt and satisfactory dealings, direct all orders to

GEORGE G. EVANS,

430 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

000

First-Class Prize Medal, Paris Exhibition, 1855.

LAWSON & CO.,

PRINTING INK MANUFACTURERS,

LONDON (ENGLAND) AND NEW YORK.

Furnishers to the Trade and Publishers of Illustrated Journals and Almanacs, and also to nearly all the Illustrated Newspapers on both Continents.

New York Depot, 26 Gold St., New York.

$1,500 PER ANNUM—Agents Wanted, Local or Travelling, in every Town and County in the United States, to sell an article on which eighty per cent. profit is realized. For particulars please call at or address No 291, B. LOCKWOOD, Bowery Post Office, New York. 000

New Muse Book for the Young.

"THE NIGHTINGALE."

A COLLECTION of Songs, Choruses and Hymns, designed for Juvenile Classes, Public Schools and Private Families. By the author of "The Muse's Lyre." Of this work we will remind the publishers have issued over 100,000 copies, and it is now in use in the largest Schools in the United States, as well as in many in which only 50 cents. Sent, postpaid, RICHARD & CO., Publishers, Boston. 000

Do You Want Luxuriant Whiskers or Moustaches ?

MY Cogneut will force them to grow heavily in six weeks (upon the smoothest face) without stain or injury to the skin. Sent by mail, post paid, free, to any address on receipt of $1 00.

G. GRAHAM, 167 Nassau St., New York.

Summer Fashions ! Summer Fashions !

SPLENDID IMPROVEMENTS IN MME. DEMOREST'S MIRROR OF FASHIONS. Summer Number now ready. Sold everywhere. Contains nearly 200 Illustrations. Only 25 cents. Mailed free on receipt of six cents. More useful and practical information for Ladies than any other publication. Both sent together. Do not fail to send for a copy.

Address MME. DEMOREST, 473 Broadway.

Holloway's Pills.

DO you suffer from lowness of spirits, and a painful tendency to look on the dark side of things ? Try a few doses of this invigorating remedy; and observe how speedily it will change the current of your sensations. Its searching and salutary properties are among the leading causes. Sold in the United States by all Druggists, at 25 cents per box, and 50 cents per pot.

AGENTS WANTED.—To sell a Union Song for the People, and the Flag of Free Stripes and beautifully printed in Colors. The only authorized Union Song. Sells rapidly. Address

H. C. WATSON, Publisher, Elmira, N. Y.

SIXTEEN THOUSAND NOW READY.—A Union Song for the People, with the Flag from Fort Sumpter beautifully Printed in Colors. Price Five Cents, by mail, and wholesale by J. W. FORSYTHE, 12 Ann Street, New York.

$75 PER MONTH, clear of expenses, is guaranteed to make by energetic men with our $10 Specialty. Send for circular. Address SPECIALTY, Box 3,000, Cincinnati, Ohio.

GENERAL SCOTT

AND

MAJOR ANDERSON,

ON COLOR PORTRAITS.

The undersigned, Publishers of Professional Portraits of General Scott and Major Anderson, printed in leather oil colors, by the process known as the Chromo-Lithograph of Messrs. Wevers. Prices for both portraits, postpaid, $6 00.

Agents wanted in every county.

A. B. STRAN,

28446 122 South Third st., Philadelphia.

TUCKER'S

PATES BRIDAL

GARNITURES AND VEILS,

Chiffons, Flowers, Feathers and Point Dentelles of all kinds, at the lowest prices.

760 Broadway. 214-259

Steam Weekly between New York and Liverpool,

LANDING AND EMBARKING PASSENGERS AT QUEENSTOWN (IRELAND).

The Liverpool, New York and Philadelphia Steamship Company intend dispatching their full-powered Clyde built Iron Steamships as follows:

CITY OF WASHINGTON, SATURDAY, MAY 4,
CITY OF MANCHESTER, SATURDAY, MAY 11,
CITY OF BALTIMORE, SATURDAY, MAY 18,

And every Saturday, at noon, from Pier 44 North River.

RATES OF PASSAGE

First Cabin.....$75 00 | Steerage.....$30 00
to London 80 00 | to London 35 00
Steerage Return Tickets, to London, $60 00
Passengers also booked to Paris, Havre, Hamburg, Bremen, Amsterdam, Antwerp, &c., at reduced through fares.

For Freight or Passage, which will be taken on very low terms, apply at the Company's Office, No. 69 Wall street, corner of William.

The Company's Steamers have superior accommodations for passengers, and every description of Freight. Insurance by persons visiting the Steamers before sailing, and have Policies Free Across Water at Lowest Rates.

For further information apply in Liverpool to WILLIAM INMAN, Agent, 22 Water St.; in Glasgow to W. D. MACKAY & Co., 10 Exchange Place; in Queenstown to W. H. MACEY, 61 King William street; in Paris to JULES DUCHOS, 2 Place de la Bourse; in Philadelphia to JOHN G. DALE, 19 Walnut St., and at the Company's Office, 69 Wall street.

000 JOHN G. DALE, Agent, 19 Broadway, N. Y.

The Early Physical Degeneracy of AMERICAN PEOPLE,

AND THE EARLY MELANCHOLY DECLINE OF CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH,

Just published by

DR. STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute.

A Treatise on the above subject, the cause of Nervous Debility, Rheumatism and Consumption; Wasting of the Vital Fluids, Nervousness and Sexual Weakness, Impotence, Imposed Nostrums and Empirics, &c.

Full set to Send and get this Book.

ADDRESS

DR. ANDREW STONE,

Physician to the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, and Person as he is Dentist of the Heart, Throat and Lungs, No. 66 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y.

A Notorious Fact.

Splendid Silver-Plated Ice Pitchers.....$6 00
Silver-Plated Cake Baskets.....4 00
Silver-Plated Butters.....2 00
Silver-Plated Table Spoons.....2 75
Forks.....2 75

Every description of House furnishing Goods at immense reductions from cost. E. D. BABCOCK, Depot Factories, N. Y. First-class Goods. Send for a Catalogue Free. 216-18

To Public Speakers.

BRONCHITIS. BRONCHITIS.

IN a letter from Rev. J. H. Burr, Allentown, Pa., speaking of Brown's Bronchial Troches, or Cough Lozenges, he says: "I have been using them for some time, and they seem to have done me much good. I was frequently troubled from public speaking, or an over-exertion of the vocal organs, and I find they relieve me very successfully as a palliative, enhanced to many others, this morning, through my instrumentality in the ministry to whom I have recommended them seem to have been benefited by their use."

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR MARRIED PEOPLE.—For particulars address, including stamp, DR. CHARLTON, Surgeon and Accoucheur, 158 Bronxway, New York. 276-80

ENGLISH PORTABLE TENT,

Patented February, 1857.

The many advantages this useful and really beautiful Tent possesses over the ordinary article, for which every purpose it is applicable, are fully set forth in the following extracts from testimonials:

Extreme Lightness, Durability and Excellence.

Second—It is proof against Fire or any other element.

Third—Its capability of Accommodation.

Can be carried by a single person, or can be packed readily in a box, for Fishing or Gunning Parties.

Fourth—It can be put up or set down and removed in a few minutes.

Fifth—For Camps or Gardens, their peculiar adaptation and utility will at once commend them.

For Sun Sun, Cricket Cases, or Military campaigns, they are unequalled, and in excepting but a mere trifle, are equal to a tent for variety in fourteen positions.

Manufactured by the Inventor and Patentee, WM. RAPELJE, No. 104 Wallace St., Brooklyn.

N.B.—Also on hand a few Canvas Square Tents, capable of seating 10 or 12 persons, made for the Crimea; cost originally $125; will be sold for $35. 281

Finkle & Lyon's

SEWING MACHINES,

With new tin, reversible, Hemmers, &c., all complete, AT REDUCED PRICES.

Agents wanted. Send for a Circular, 628 Broadway, New York, and also Fulton St., Brooklyn. 000

MATRIMONY MADE EASY: On, How to Write a Love-Letter.—Containing plain, commonsense directions, showing how all may become proficients in the art of pen-craft, whether preliminary to courtship or a new wife, but the secret, how to select words, express a speedy and happy marriage without loss. Neatly put up in cloth. In case of mailing, 25 cents. Address T. WILLIAM & CO., Publishers, Philadelphia Post Office, box 2,000.

THE LAND PATENT BILLIARD TABLES.

MANUFACTORY AND WAREROOMS 563 & 565 BROOME, CROSBY & NEW YORK.

Important Announcement.

Will be Published on Friday, May 3d.

NO. 39 OF

FRANK LESLIE'S

BUDGET OF FUN,

BUDGET OF FUN,

BUDGET OF FUN,

THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.
THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.
THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.
THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.
THE GREAT COMIC PAPER OF AMERICA.

Full of Pictures and Humor.

SIXTEEN PAGES OF COMIC LITERATURE,
SIXTEEN PAGES OF COMIC LITERATURE,
SIXTEEN PAGES OF COMIC LITERATURE,

And full of Comic Cartoons and Humorous Carics Tures.

The grand Cartoon is

JEFF. DAVIS TRYING IT ON,
JEFF. DAVIS TRYING IT ON,
JEFF. DAVIS TRYING IT ON,
JEFF. DAVIS TRYING IT ON,

To See how he Looks in a Crown.
To See how he Looks in a Crown.
To See how he Looks in a Crown.
To See how he Looks in a Crown.
To See how he Looks in a Crown.
To See how he Looks in a Crown.

Dedicated to

COL. HAWKINS,

OF

THE LIGHTNING ZOUAVES,
THE LIGHTNING ZOUAVES,
THE LIGHTNING ZOUAVES,

AND

COL. ELLSWORTH,

OF

THE FIRE ZOUAVES.
THE FIRE ZOUAVES.
THE FIRE ZOUAVES.

How the Ellsworth Fire Zouaves Storm a Battery.

Also the particular fix Minister Dayton finds himself in when he gets to Paris.

Besides numerous other Engravings full of Position and Social point.

There are also three Grand Romances.

THE SPECTRE OF TAPPINGTON.
THE WENTWORTHS OF ALLBRIGHTON,
And a Burlesque illustrated Romantic Novel (to be continued)

ENTITLED

THE BANDIT BARBER OF WEEHAWKEN.

Also the great

UNION SONG,

BY H. C. WATSON.

Price only Six Cents.

Published by

FRANK LESLIE,

10 City Hall Square, New York.

THE READERS OF

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper

Desiring to purchase any article in New York, no matter how flating or costly, can have their orders promptly and faithfully fulfilled by addressing

JAMES W. FORSYTHE,

Care of Frank Leslie, Esq.,

10 City Hall Square, N. Y.

in all cases the necessary funds should be inclosed in the communications.

Unequalled for the Splendor

AND MULTIPLICITY OF ITS ILLUSTRATIONS.

CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED FAMILY BIBLE.

Great demand for the First Volume.

Price, strongly bound in leather, $3 50.

Price, handsomely bound in morocco, gilt edges, $5 00.

For the small sum of one dollar, part of which will be repaid in premiums for every subscription forwarded with the money.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN,

No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.

Just Published,

VOYAGE DANS DIVERSES PARTIES DE L'AFRIQUE, 24 edition.....$1 00
CASSELL'S HAND BOOK OF ARITHMETIC, 2d edition..... 75
CASSELL'S INTELLIGENT MANUAL, 3rd edition..... 1 00
PETTER'S GERMANISMS AND GERMANICISMS, 2nd edition..... 2 00
ANDERSON'S EXERCISES OF FIRE ARTILLERY, 3rd edition.. 1 00
BERNARD'S MANUAL OF JAPANESE WITH 15 HAND KEYS..... 1 75
WEBSTER'S REPORTS AND ARGUMENTS..... 3 00
CASSELL'S COURSE OF THE ARMY, 1st edition..... 1 00
CASSELL'S LETTERS ON THE NEW MANUAL OF THE RIFLEMEN, 1 vol. 1 00
LIEUT. COL. SMITH'S MILITARY DICTIONARY, in the press.
LIEUT. KNOLLYS'S NEW MANUAL OF EXERCISE AND RIFLE EXERCISE, in the press.

Any of the above Books sent free by mail on receipt of the price.

A large assortment of the best standard English and French Books on hand.

D. VAN NOSTRAND,

Publisher, 192 Broadway.

Cephalic Pills,
CURE
Sick Headache,
CURE
Nervous Headache,
CURE
All kinds of
Headache.

By the use of these Pills the periodic attacks of Nervous or Sick Headache may be prevented; and if taken at the commencement of an attack immediate relief from pain and sickness will be obtained.

They seldom fail in removing the Nausea and Headache to which females are so subject.

They act gently upon the bowels, removing Costiveness.

For Literary Men, Students, Delicate Females, and all persons of sedentary habits they are valuable as a Laxative improving the appetite, giving tone and vigor to the digestive organs, and restoring the natural elasticity and strength of the whole system.

The CEPHALIC PILLS are the result of long investigation and carefully conducted experiments, having been in use many years, during which time they have prevented and relieved a vast amount of pain and suffering from Headache whether originating in the nervous system or from a deranged state of the Stomach.

They are entirely vegetable in their composition, and may be taken at all times with perfect safety without making any change of diet, and the absence of any disagreeable taste renders it easy to administer them to children.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS

The genuine have five signatures of Henry C. Spalding on each Box

Sold by Druggists and all other Dealers in Medicines.

A Box will be sent by mail, prepaid, on receipt of the

PRICE, 25 CENTS.

All orders should be addressed to

HENRY C. SPALDING,
48 Cedar St., New York.

THE FOLLOWING INDORSEMENTS OF

SPALDING'S

CEPHALIC PILLS

Will convince all who suffer from

HEADACHE

THAT A SPEEDY AND SURE CURE IS WITHIN THEIR REACH.

These Testimonials were unsolicited by Mr. Spalding, they afford unquestionable proof of the efficacy of this truly scientific discovery.

MASONVILLE, CONN., Feb. 5, 1861.
MR. SPALDING—SIR—I have tried your Cephalic Pills, and I like them so well that I want you to send me two dollars worth more. Part of these are for the neighbors, to whom I gave a few out of the first box I got from you.
Send the Pills by mail, and oblige
Your ob't Servant, JAMES KENNEDY.

HAVERFORD, PA., Feb. 6, 1861.
MR. SPALDING—SIR—I wish you to send me one more box of your Cephalic Pills. I have received a great deal of benefit from them. Yours respectfully,
MARY ANN STOIKHOUSE.

SPRUCE CREEK, HUNTINGTON Co., PA., Jan. 18, 1861.
H. C. SPALDING—SIR—You will please send me two boxes of your Cephalic Pills. Send them immediately.
Respectfully yours, JNO. B. SIMONS.
P. S.—I have used one box of your Pills and find them excellent.

BELLE VERNON, OHIO, Jan. 15, 1861.
HENRY C. SPALDING, Esq.—Please find inclosed twenty-five cents, for which send me another box of your Cephalic Pills. They are truly the best Pills I have ever tried. Direct
A. STOVER, P. M.,
Belle Vernon, Wyandot Co., O.

BEVERLEY, MASS., Dec. 11, 1860.
H. C. SPALDING, Esq.—I wish for some Circulars or large show bills, to bring your Cephalic Pills more particularly before my customers. If you have anything of the kind, please send to me. One of my customers, who is subject to severe Sick Headache (usually lasting two days), was cured of an attack in one hour by your Pills, which I sent her. Respectfully yours,
W. B. WILKES

A single bottle of SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE will save ten times its cost annually.

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE!

SAVE THE PIECES
ECONOMY DISPATCH
"A STITCH IN TIME SAVES NINE"

As accidents will happen, even in well regulated families, it is very desirable to have some cheap and convenient way for repairing Furniture, Toys, Crockery, &c.

Spalding's Prepared Glue

meets all such emergencies, and no household can afford to be without it. It is always ready, and up to the sticking point.

"USEFUL IN EVERY HOUSE."

N. B.—A Brush accompanies each Bottle. Price 25 cts.
Address HENRY C. SPALDING,
No. 48 Cedar St., New York.

CAUTION.

As certain unprincipled persons are attempting to palm off on the unsuspecting public imitations of my PREPARED GLUE, I would caution all persons to examine before purchasing, and see that the full name,

SPALDING'S PREPARED GLUE,

is on the outside wrapper; all others are swindling counterfeits.

Important to Invalids.

YOU are respectfully informed hereby that DR. POTTS has removed his office from Newark city to 55 CHATHAM STREET, NEW YORK.

(Extract). "Dr. Potts has never been excelled in curing
DYSPEPSIA AND LIVER COMPLAINTS,
SCROFULA AND PILES, CONSUMPTION,
and all Diseases of the Blood."—Newark Daily Advertiser.

Dr. Potts' Medicines are purely vegetable, and they embrace SPECIFICS for every disease. They have made the most ASTOUNDING CURES.

Professor Rittenhouse, of the Trenton Academy, says:
"Dr. Potts has been signally successful in the treatment of the MOST VIRULENT AND FATAL DISEASES to which our race is subject."

S. L. Macley, Esq., of 140 Broad St., Newark City, says:
"For three years I was at times much afflicted with DYSPEPSIA, LIVER, HEART AND LUNG COMPLAINT.
I had a distressing Cough, and was in a rapid decline. Dr. Potts positively cured me in less than two years."

Mrs. Barry, of 76 New St., Newark:
"I was a great sufferer for many years from
DYSPEPSIA, GRAVEL AND NERVE COMPLAINTS.
Dr. Potts saved my life, I believe. I commend the sick of my sex to Dr. Potts. He is eminently successful in curing all complaints peculiar to my sex."

Joseph Reed, Esq., of 66 State St., Newark, says:
"I was in rapid decline from
INCIPIENT CONSUMPTION AND LIVER COMPLAINT.
Dr. Potts restored me to sound health."

Please send for Circular, and see other certificates.

Invalids at any distance can be successfully treated at their homes. State the particulars.

Dr. Potts will give his personal attention to the sick in any part of the city of New York and its surroundings.

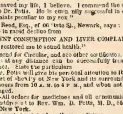
Office hours from 10 A. M. to 4 P. M., and when not otherwise engaged.

N. B.—All orders for medicines and all communications must be addressed to Rev. Wm. D. Potts, M. D., 55 Chatham St., New York.

Agents wanted to introduce these medicines. 286

Shaler's Flexible Roller Patent Floor Skates.

Beware of Counterfeits.



THE GENUINE SKATE has "Patented Feb. 24, 1860," marked on it.

The use of these Skates imparts a perfect knowledge of the art of Skating on Ice, as well as furnishing the most pleasing and healthful exercise ever presented to the public. Hundreds of Ladies in this city have become proficient Ice Skaters by the use of them.

The only place for the genuine article is 440 Broadway N. Y. O. M. VAIL, Sole Agent and Manufacturer.
000

Only Twenty-five Cents a Bottle.

Superior Old Tom or London Cordial

GIN,

Distilled under the immediate superintendence of Dr. Dixon of London, for medical and private use.

Wholesale Agents, GREENE & GLADDING,
02 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

For sale by single bottle or case, by Druggists and Grocers everywhere. Also by J. S. PARMELEE, 585 Broadway, opposite the Metropolitan Hotel, N. Y. 000

THE GREAT WHOLESALE

CASH JEWELLERY HOUSE

OF NEW YORK.

C. P. GIRTON

MANUFACTURING JEWELLER,

208 Broadway.

All kinds of Goods for the Jewellery Envelope Business, including all "UNION EMBLEMS." 2·50

Perfumes! Perfumes! Perfumes!

609 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The most delightful and genuine liquid and dry Perfumes for the present season, comprising the fragrance of the earliest and latest flowers, as well as the most approved Bouquets.

MOUNT VERNON, KISS ME QUICK,
PERFECT GEM, WASHINGTON NOSEGAY
FRAGRANT JAPONICA, &c., &c.

Also CONCENTRATED FLAVORING EXTRACTS, for Pies, Puddings, &c.

FRENCH BISCOTINE, the most approved food for Infants.

GLYCERINE JELLY, for chapped Skin. CHILBLAINS BALSAM. SWISS CORN PLASTER, an infallible cure for Corns and Bunions.

To be had, wholesale and retail, at No. 609 Broadway New York. EUGENE DUPUY,
000 Chemist and Druggist.

The Union Clothes Dryer.

A New Invention—Useful, Cheap and Portable,

By which Clothes in large quantities may be dried in a yard, a room, or on the top of a house. Can be put up and taken down in one minute without detaching the lines. When not in use it can be compressed into a small compass and kept in a closet. No family should be without this novelty.

Price $2, $3 and $4.

The UNION CLOTHES DRYER is pronounced by all unprejudiced persons to be one of the most useful and labor-saving inventions of the age.

J. JOHNSON & CO., Proprietors,
457 Broadway (near Grand St.), New York, and 312 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL,

FOR the quick cure of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Swellings, Eruptions, Skin Diseases, Stiffness and Pains in Limbs, Felons, Piles, Burns, Sprains, Old Sores, Tetter, &c., &c. They CANNOT exist when it is applied.

It cured me of Swollen and Stiff Neck in one night.—John Livingston, Ed. Law Magazine, New York.

It cured me of Piles.—C. Sexton, Ex-Mayor, Camden, N. J.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—Jos. Lee, Philadelphia.

It cured me of Deafness.—G. C. Campbell, Yonkers, N. Y.

It cured my wife of Rheumatism.—Ed. Bordentown (N. J.) Register.

It cured me of an old Sore.—Wm. Maddox, New York.

It cured me of Rheumatism.—B. B. Smith, Macon, Ga.

It would be impossible to publish all the certificates in a book of 1,000 pages. DE GRATH'S ELECTRIC OIL acts on the parts with Electricity, and at once expels all pain and disease from the system, and makes a permanent cure.

Price 25 cts., 50 cts. and $1 per bottle. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers throughout the United States and Canadas.

Principal Depot, 217 South Eighth St., Philadelphia, Pa.
000 C. DE GRATH, M. D.

S. R. Walker,

TYPE FOUNDRY
AND PRINTERS' FURNISHING WAREHOUSE,
17 Dutch St., New York. 277 89

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AND GYMNASIUM YONKERS, N. Y.

Winter Session commenced on the 1st day of Nov.

TERMS:

Board and Tuition.........$150 per Session.

For Circulars and particular information, apply to
M. N. WISEWELL, Principal.
Yonkers, 1860 000

CASSELL'S

Popular Natural History,

Profusely Illustrated with Splendid Engravings,

IS PUBLISHED ON THE 1ST OF EVERY MONTH.

Parts, 32 pages and 1 Tinted Plate, 15 cts.
Double Parts, 64 pages and 2 Tinted Plates, 30 cts.
Sections, 128 pages and 4 Tinted Plates, 60 cts.
Volumes, 384 pages and 12 Tinted Plates, Embossed Cloth, Gilt Sides and Lettered, $2 50.

The work will comprise four Volumes.

"Really a beautiful publication."—New York U. S. Jour.

"The engravings are not only profuse, but exquisite."—Detroit (Mich.) Farmer.

"We commend this work to our readers."—Cincinnati Presbyterian.

"This will be a valuable work."—Sandusky Com. Reg.

"Too high praise cannot be awarded for bringing out so excellent and beautiful a work."—Concord Independent Dem.

"Calculated to amuse the reader and aid the scientific inquirer."—Phila. American Presbyterian.

"When complete, it will be an interesting and invaluable work."—Phila. Christian Instructor.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 37 Park Row, N. Y.

PIANOFORTE AND VOCAL MUSIC AT REDUCED PRICES.—The following splendid collection for 50 cents:

Ever of Thee, Song, Fooley Hall—Land of My Youngest and Holiest Feelings—The Herdsman's Mountain Home—Silence and Tears, by J. Massett—Who Shall be Fairest—Scenes of Home—Hurrah for the Bonnets of Blue—Dear Mary, Wake from Slumber—Rovers, Rulers of the Sea—Oh, 'Tis Sweet to Think—Evening Song—Green Grow the Rushes, Oh—Dear Voices of Home—Simon the Cellarer.

Fourteen popular Songs and eight charming Piano Pieces, all for 50 cents, sent to all parts of the Union. Address
G. D. SEYMOUR & CO., Agents,
61 No. 458 Broadway, New York.

Handsome Women.

HUNT'S "BLOOM OF ROSES," a rich and elegant color for the cheeks or lips. IT WILL NOT WASH OR RUB OFF, and when once applied remains durable for years. The tint is so rich and natural that the closest scrutiny fails to detect its use. Can be removed by lemon juice, and will not injure the skin. This is a new preparation, used by the celebrated Court Beauties of London and Paris. Mailed free, in bottles, with directions for use, for $1.

HUNT'S "COURT TOILET POWDER" imparts a dazzling whiteness to the complexion, soft, delicate and natural—is unlike anything else used for this purpose, and WILL NOT RUB OFF. Mailed free for 50 cts. in postage stamps. Can be obtained only of HUNT & CO., Perfumers, 707 Sansom St., Philadelphia. Agents Wanted.

AGENTS WANTED.—We want an Agent in every City, Town and County in the United States and Canada, to sell a new patented article just invented. It requires a capital of from $1 to $5, and to persons out of employment it offers great inducements. For full particulars write immediately and receive our letter by return mail. S. ABOLDF & CO., 432 Walnut St.,
280-92 Philadelphia, Pa.

6,000 AGENTS WANTED—To sell six NEW INVENTIONS—two very recent, and of great value to families; all pay great profits to Agents. Send four stamps and get 80 pages particulars.
281-86 EPHRAIM BROWN, Lowell, Mass.

L. DUBERNET & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Passe-Partouts and Fancy Frames,

644 Broadway, between Spring and Prince Sts., New York.

Gilt, Ebony, Black Walnut and Oak Frames always on hand.

L. DUBERNET, J. DUBERNET.
000

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—SHAVER'S PATENT ERASER AND BURNISHER, PENCIL SHARPENER, &c., all neatly combined in one small, tasteful form.

"It is a most ingenious contrivance, answering so many purposes entirely."—Independent.

"It gives a neatly finished point to the lead, without soiling the fingers in the least."—N. Y. Tribune.

"It is a very nice contrivance, and will be found useful on every writing desk."—Prof. B. Silliman, Jr., of Yale College.

Sample sent, postage paid, for 75 cts., or 3 styles for $1 50. For sale by all Stationers. Send for a Circular.
280-84 A. G. SHAVER, New Haven, Conn.

A. LANGE,

PICTURE AND LOOKING-GLASS FRAMES

AND

CORNICES FOR ROOMS,

MADE TO ORDER, AND RE-GILDING DONE.

206 William St., cor. Frankfort, New York.

The Monarch of the Monthlies!

FOR MAY, 1861.

JUST PUBLISHED, NO. 5, VOL. VIII, OF

FRANK LESLIE'S

MONTHLY,

With which is incorporated

THE GAZETTE OF FASHION.

Price 25 cts., or $3 per annum.

Literary.

Verona Brent; or, The Wayward Course of Love—continued.
Morbid Nervousness.
Snakes in Australia.
An Amusing Adventure in Italy. Engraving.
New Raft for Mortars. Engraving.
A True Ghost Story.
The Mother-Eagle and the Peasant-Boy.
Botanical Gardens at St. Pierre, Martinique. Engraving.
The Pastor's Visit. Engraving.
A Financial Difficulty.
Praise your Wife.
Win All or Lose All. Engraving.
Oxygen.
Great Japanese Salamander. Engraving.
The Black Deed and the Black Bird.
My Guardian.
Marriage in the Kirchgarten-Thal, near Friburg in Brisgau. Engraving.
George Fox, the Founder of Quakerism.
Want of Tact.
The Boboli Gardens, Florence. Engraving.
Samuel Lowgood's Revenge.
Marriage Engagements.
The Presentiment.
Entrance to the Tuileries Gardens. Engraving.
Town and Fortress of Gibraltar. Engraving.
All is not Gold that Glitters.
Notes on Circumstantial Evidence.
Garibaldi and the Children at Palermo. Engraving.
City of Nice. Engraving.
Locusts.
Love Lies Bleeding. Engraving.
Invitation to Dinner.
Cotton; Mode of Manufacture in the East. Twenty-three Engravings.
Solitude of the Desert.
Story of the Three Wonderful Companions. Engraving.
Spider Fights.
A Surgeon's Advice to Mothers—Measles.
Lord Mayor's Kitchen, London.
Vegetables.
Amusement for Young People.
Poetry—A Life Story; My Lamp; The Legend of Our Lady of the Sea.
Miscellaneous.
Comic Page—Miss Flirt in Search of a Husband. Six Engravings.

List of Engravings.

A Life Story.
The Corpse at the Door of the Wineshop.
The Mortar Raft.
Botanical Gardens, St. Pierre, Martinique.
The Priest's Visit.
Thistleton Avows his Love.
Japanese Salamander.
Marriage in the Kirchgarten-Thal.
The Boboli Gardens, Florence.
Entrance to the Tuileries Gardens.
View of Gibraltar.
Scene in Naples on the Arrival of Garibaldi.
View of the City of Nice.
The Victim of Love.
Cotton Manufacture in Hindostan—Cotton Carder, The Bow, Yarn Winding and Warping, Beaming, Cotton Roller, Twisting the Thread, Drawing, Loom Weaving, Spinning, Washing, The Shuttle, Steaming, Arranging the Displaced Threads, Beetling the Muslins, Folding, Packing, Wire-drawing, Wiredrawer's Bench, Wiredrawing Apparatus, Flattening the Wire, Winding the Wire.
Comic Page.

Gazette of Fashion.

What Should be Worn and what Should Not; Review of Fashions; Styles for the Month; Things Seen and Talked About; Description of Fashions; Description of Colored Plate; Madame Demorest's Patent Tucker and Quilter; Cashmere Shawls; Novelties in Trimming; Gored Dresses; Lingerie; Answers to Correspondents; Notice to Lady Subscribers; What Time is It? Miscellaneous.

Illustrations to the Gazette.

Colored Fashion Plate; Parasol; New Sash or Scarf; Travelling Dress; Evening Toilette; Hungarian Coiffure; New Mourning Collar; Ball Dress; Two Aprons; Russian Chemisette; Dinner Dress for a Young Lady; Girl's Dress; Head-Dress; Zouave Chemisette; Enamelled Collar and Necktie; Demorest's Prize Medal Skirt; Demorest's Patent Tucker and Quilter; Gored Robe de Chambre; Esmeralda Girdle; Two Bonnets; Coiffure and Head-Dress.

Each number of the Magazine contains over 100 pages of the most entertaining Literature of the day, besides nearly sixty beautiful Engravings, and a superb colored Plate alone worth more than the price of the Magazine.

1 copy 1 year	$3
2 copies 1 year	5
1 copy 2 years	5
3 copies 1 year	6

and $2 for each copy added to the Club. An extra copy sent to the person getting up a Club of Five Subscribers, 1 year for $10.

The postage of this Magazine is three cents and must be paid three months in advance at the office where the Magazine is received.

FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO MARRIED PEOPLE.—Send Stamp to Box 1059, Lowell, Mass.
280-85

WOOD, EDDY & CO.'S

LOTTERIES!

AUTHORIZED BY THE STATES OF

MISSOURI

AND

KENTUCKY,

Draw daily, in public, under the superintendence of Sworn Commissioners.

The Managers' Offices are located at Covington, Kentucky, and St. Louis, Missouri.

PRIZES VARY FROM

$2 50 TO $100,000!

TICKETS FROM $2 50 TO $20.

Circulars giving full explanation and the Schemes to be drawn will be sent, free of expense, by addressing

WOOD, EDDY & CO., Covington, Kentucky,

OR

WOOD, EDDY & CO., St. Louis, Missouri.

SECESSION SOLDIERS PREVENTING VIRGINIAN FARMERS TAKING SUPPLIES OVER THE LONG BRIDGE TO WASHINGTON.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST. SEE PAGE 414.

The Planting Season for Trees having Arrived,

PARSONS & CO.

Invite the attention of those about planting to their large collection at

Flushing, near New York.

Their FRUIT TREES and PLANTS are of vigorous growth and the best quality, and can be afforded at low rates

Evergreen and Deciduous Trees

they cultivate in great variety and of handsome form.

They deliver Goods at Fulton Market Wharf free, and invite purchasers to visit their grounds or to select from the different Catalogues, which can be obtained from H. B. LANE, No. 42 Park Row, where orders may be left. 2860

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

THE Advertiser having been restored to health in a few weeks by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe LUNG AFFECTION, and that dread disease, CONSUMPTION, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a SURE CURE FOR CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c. The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted; and he hopes every sufferer may try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing. Parties wishing the prescription will please address

REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
281-900 Williamsburg, Kings County, N. Y.

Dr. Brown's Patent Baby-Tender.

THIS article of Nursery Furniture is different from, superior to, and supplies the place of everything heretofore used for that purpose.

N. B.—"The exercise obtained by our nursery children in one of your Baby-Tenders very much aids in their proper physical development, and enables us to dispense with the services of one assistant nurse."—Matron of the Home for the Friendless.

J. S. BROWN & CO., Warerooms No 175 Grand street near Broadway, N. Y., between Bond and Bleecker Sts.
Send for our Circular. 000

NOW WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Grover & Baker's

CELEBRATED NOISELESS

Sewing Machines,

No family can afford to be without one.

495 BROADWAY, N. Y.

0000

VALUABLE TO ALL WHO USE THE PEN OR PENCIL.—See advertisement next page.
280

JOY TO THE WORLD.

Clothes Washed in One Minute by

JOHNSON'S UNION WASHING MACHINE.

Patented April 10, 1860.

PRICE $8 TO $10.

A CHILD CAN OPERATE IT. Washes every spot. Sure and certain, without soaking or boiling. Call and see it in operation at 457 Broadway, New York, and 312 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

J. JOHNSON & CO.,
000 Proprietors.

CASSELL'S

Illustrated History of England.

THE TEXT BY J. F. SMITH, UP TO THE REIGN OF EDWARD I., AND FROM THAT PERIOD,

By William Howitt.

In Fortnightly Parts of 60 Pages, price 15 cts.; Monthly Parts of 120 pages, price 30 cts.

The whole will be completed in six volumes, of six hundred and twenty-four pages each. The price of each vol. is Two Dollars, or Twelve Dollars for the whole work.

"A splendid work. It will be an invaluable history."—New York Observer.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN, 37 Park Row.

Prof. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR.

For curing and preventing Baldness.

For removing Scurf and Dandruff.

For beautifying and making the Hair soft and curly

In fact the only safe and effective compound of the kind in use.

Be sure and get the right article

PROF. L. Miller's Hair Invigorator.

Price 25 cents per bottle.
Wholesale Depot, 56 Dey St., New York.
Also,
PROF. L. MILLER'S INSTANTANEOUS LIQUID HAIR DYE
Price 50 cents per box.
Warranted superior to all others.
Try them, and you will acknowledge the fact. 277 800

GARDINER'S

Rheumatic and Neuralgia

COMPOUND,

A certain, safe and permanent cure for Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Salt Rheum. It is an internal remedy driving out and entirely eradicating the disease, requiring no change in diet or business, and may be taken by children and persons of the most delicate constitutions with perfect safety.

Principal Depot, 87 Kilby St., Boston, Mass. F. C. WELLS & CO., 115 Franklin St., New York, Wholesale Agents. Sold by Druggists everywhere

Sold by J. MILHAN & SON, 183 Broadway. 275-870

$50 PER MONTH and Expenses paid. Address for terms. J. W. HARRIS & CO Boston, Mass.
275-870

AT REDUCED PRICES

With Glass-Cloth Presser, Improved Loop-Check, New Style Hemmer, Binder, Corder, &c.

Office, 505 Broadway, New York.

"This Machine makes the 'LOCK-STITCH,' and ranks highest on account of elasticity, permanence, beauty and general desirableness of the stitching when done, and the wide range of its application."—Report of American Institute, New York 281 870

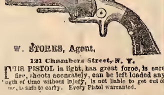
To Young Men.

THE victims of youthful indiscretion and all persons in delicate health will find a friendly adviser in THE INVALID'S MEDICAL CONFIDANT, just published and mailed free from the office of
DR. JOHN B. OGDEN & CO., 64 and 66 John St., N. Y.
860

BOOK ON PORTABLE ENGINES.—"Practical Instructions for the Portable Engine, enabling every one to be his own Engineer; by a Graduate of the Military Academy, and former Member of the United States Corps of Engineers." A large illustrated Pamphlet, sent by mail to any part of the country, price 25 cents, by the WASHINGTON IRON WORKS, Newburg, N. Y.

"The above establishment manufactures Portable Engines of all sizes, having the latest and most valuable patented improvements, and being an excellent combination of known devices for the production of a compact, efficient and cheap Portable Engine."—Scientific American. 283 860

Smith and Wesson's Seven-Shooter.



W. STORRS, Agent,

121 Chambers Street, N. Y.

THIS PISTOL is light, has great force, is sure fire, shoots accurately, can be left loaded any length of time without injury, is not liable to get out of order, is safe to carry. Every Pistol warranted.

CAUTION TO DEALERS.

Be sure and get those stamped "Smith & Wesson, Springfield, Mass.," none others genuine. All cartridge revolvers that load at the breech are infringements. Suits are commenced, and all such infringements will be prosecuted. Be sure the cartridges have Smith & Wesson's signature on each end of the box 276-3010

HORSE POWDERS DEPOT FOR S. G. WELLING'S Condition Powders for Horses, 416 Broome street, New York. Price Fifty Cents per box of one dozen doses 278-900

Patented November 1st, 1859.

The measures are
A, the distance round the Neck.
B to B, the Yoke
C to C, the Sleeve
D to D, distance around the Body under the armpits
E to E, the length of the Shirt.

BALLOU'S

Patented Improved French Yoke

SHIRTS.

Patented November 1st, 1859.

A New Style of Shirt, warranted to Fit.

By sending the above measures per mail we can guarantee a perfect fit of our new style of Shirt, and return by Express to any part of the United States, at $12, $15, $18, $24, &c., &c., per dozen. No order forwarded for less than half a dozen Shirts.

Also Importers and Dealers in MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS

BALLOU BROTHERS,

409 Broadway, N. Y.

Wholesale Trade supplied on the usual terms

STEINWAY & SONS'

PATENT OVERSTRUNG GRAND AND SQUARE PIANOS

Are now considered the best Pianos manufactured. Each Instrument warranted for five years.

Warerooms, Nos. 82 and 84 Walker St., near Broadway, N. Y. 0000

CHARLES HEIDSIECK

CHAMPAGNE.

This popular Wine, of which the undersigned are SOLE AGENTS FOR NORTH AMERICA, Received the First Premium at the

BORDEAUX EXPOSITION IN 1859.

The Medal awarded by the judges can be seen at our office.
0000 T. W. BAYAUD & BERARD, 100 Pearl St., N. Y.

Ladd, Webster & Co.'s
IMPROVED TIGHT-STITCH SEWING MACHINES,
500 Broadway, New York 0000

THE ELECTROTYPING OF FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER is done by WILLIAM DENYSE, 183 William St., New York

FRANK LESLIE'S

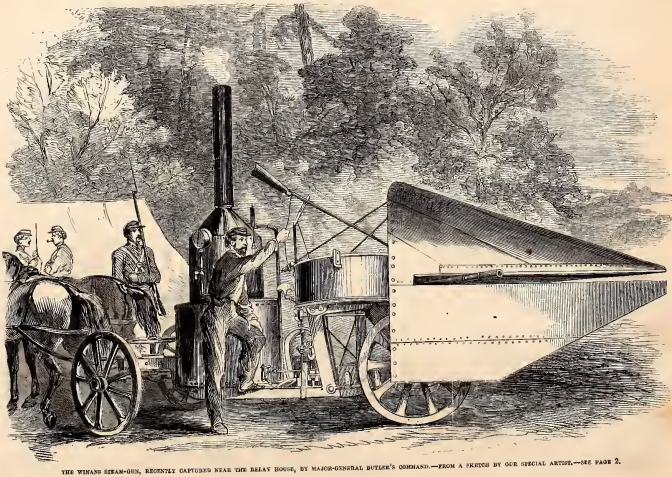
ILLUSTRATED

NEWSPAPER

Entered according to the Act of Congress in the year 1861, by FRANK LESLIE, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

No. 267.—Vol. XII.] NEW YORK, MAY 18, 1861. [Price 6 Cents.

THE NEW JERSEY TROOPS CROSSING THE CHESAPEAKE BAY, IN SIXTEEN PROPELLERS, ON THEIR WAY TO WASHINGTON.—FROM A SKETCH BY AN OFFICER OF THE EXPEDITION.—SEE PAGE 5.



THE WINANS STEAM-GUN, RECENTLY CAPTURED NEAR THE RELAY HOUSE, BY MAJOR-GENERAL BUTLER'S COMMAND.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE PAGE 2.

THE WINAN'S STEAM GUN, LATELY CAPTURED ON ITS WAY TO HARPER'S FERRY.

For the last twenty years it has been a favorite idea to bring steam to bear upon gunnery, and in 1844 Mr. Perkins, of London, had an immense deal of money, time and labor, introduced his famous steam- on to the public. It was not a success. Nine years ago Captain Isaac Winan built one, and the most portentous of which is the famous gun invented by Mr. Dickerson, but unsatisfactorily described by the public press. Through the courtesy of Mr. Ross Winans, Our Artist has given an exact sketch of this famous engine of war, which has lately been captured by the Federal troops. It was on its way to Harper's Ferry. Its capture is thus described:

"On Friday afternoon, the 10th inst., a party consisting of Captain Smith's company of the Sixth Massachusetts Regiment, and a company of Eighth New York, and a detachment of the Boston Flying Artillery, under Lieutenant Mortimer, the whole under the command of Major Ward, U. S. A., were sent out to find the steam-gun, which it was rumored had been sent eastward from Baltimore. The gun was found, and the train took the party to Relay House, forwarded to Harper's Ferry. A special train took the party to Ellicott's Mills, about one hundred miles further on they found the gun in the charge of three men, but otherwise unguarded. They took possession of the gun and four tanks harnessed to it, and brought it back to the city, and thence to the Ho ley with their trophy. The prisoners, one of whom is Mr. Dickenson, the inventor, have been sent to Annapolis."

Barnum's American Museum

Is overflowing with Living Wonders, including Old Grizzly Adams' California Bears, a variety of the most curious of dumb-ing stricks, the Albino Lady, Albino Family, What Is It? Beautiful Aquariums, Curiosities, and superb Dramatic Performances afternoon and evening.

MADAME ANNA BISHOP'S CHAMBER CONCERTS.—At the Mercantile Library Institute No. 6 Broadway. Open every evening. Admission 25 cents.

Invented for a new species of archery.

Price 1 cent each. Address, M. A. SCUDDER. Does even a half of the rascals Cheat in sight precisely. Admission 25 cents. Reserved Seats, 50 cents.

IRVING HALL,

IRVING PLACE AND FIFTEENTH STREET,

Opposite to the

ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

FOR BALLS, CONCERTS, LECTURES, FAIRS, &c., &c., &c.

FRANK LESLIE'S ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

FRANK LESLIE, Editor and Publisher.

NEW YORK, MAY 18, 1861.

All Communications, Subscriptions, &c., must be addressed to FRANK LESLIE, 19 City Hall Square, New York.

TERMS FOR THIS PAPER.

One Copy	17 weeks	$ 1
"	1 year	3
Two do.	1 year	5
Four do.	1 year	10
Three do.	1 year	15
Five do.	1 year (to one address)	20

And an extra Copy to the person sending a Club of Five. Every addresser is responsible.

NOTICE TO PHOTOGRAPHERS.

We shall be much obliged to our photographic friends if they will write in small the name and residence on the back of each picture, together with their own name and address. This notice is rendered necessary from the fact that we are frequently at a loss to find out the name of the photographer from whom we have received some of our engraving material, they giving us credit for better engravings than circumstances of our own will allow us to produce. We request with everything that constitutes our claim to the name of artist, that the names of our patrons be written out in full, and not in the form of initials, as we have frequently found it troublesome to decipher the scrawl, and often impossible to find out the name of the photographer from whom we have received the picture.

Foreign News.

England.—The great topic of the day in England is the present unhappy state of affairs in the United States. Another address has been presented to the Queen on the subject, which is expected by the leading journals of England. Our readers will perceive some of the sorts of language which is used in this address, and agree with us that in order to argue that our whole continent is resolving to the ultima ratio, instead of appealing to reason and justice, is simply ridiculous. Of course, if the Queen receives such a record solemnly before her court as their residence and magnificent habitation worthy of Jupiter himself, it is not to be supposed that she will not also receive with equal consideration that President Lincoln's hordes of the slaughter pens have still come to the conclusion that they will not acknowledge the independence of the least of the family of fifteen of mankind by the southern Confederacy, the Government had sent out a fleet to blockade the ports of the South, and that the fleet will continue to carry the authority of the Parliamentary Minister, by moving an answer from the House of Lords to the address which was presented to the Queen. The arrangements for the grand Industrial Exhibition in London, in 1862, are so far completed, and a portion of the building is now in course of erection. Worth Fair. Prince Napoleon has been appointed Chief Colonial officer at the French Exposition for 1862, as a compensation. Mr. Gregory, member for Galway, has prepared the motion in the House of Commons, calling upon the Ministers to recognize the Southern Confederacy.

France.—It is asserted in South Lancashire that the total of the French troops that have been sent to the Pope since the commencement of the war is sixty and a-half thousand, and that 2,000 French troops, with 500 Dutch, and 600 Belgian troops have joined the Papal army. The Constitutionnel publishes an announcement, which in its course could not but look as when the horizon is overcast. Mr. Gregory has given notice of a motion in the House of Commons, calling upon the Ministers to explain the position they occupy with regard to the Southern Confederacy. The Paris Bourse was last week in a state of great excitement. The Emperor Napoleon has addressed a letter to the Minister of Public Instruction, in which he says that the Government has determined to establish a Council of Education, to which the Academy of Sciences, Belles Lettres, and Fine Arts, will send each a member. The Council will be presided over by the Minister of Public Instruction, and will meet once a month. The Emperor Napoleon has addressed a letter to the Minister of Public Instruction, in which he says that the Government has determined to establish a Council of Education, to which the Academy of Sciences, Belles Lettres, and Fine Arts, will send each a member. The Council will be presided over by the Minister of Public Instruction, and will meet once a month.

Spain.—Since the civil wars, the soldiers of Spain, are culminating to a catastrophe, for the last several months, of a party of Spain to see that a Spanish army is to be sent to Mexico. The Spanish Government is to be represented by the attitude of the insurgent party, which seems to have had concealed in their possession a number of Spanish arms and ammunition. They then compromise in the confusion. It is said that the insurgents are related to the British despatch boat Express. If so, they are not to be considered as "pirates."

The State of the Nation.

In the present feverish state of the public mind, in which strong excitements are looked for daily, events may progress but slowly. But the one grand fact the seat of war there is a feeling that long before this the Federal Government, which is supposed to take the initiative in the present hostilities, would have advanced its forces and sought a collision with the Secession troops. They see regiments after regiments leaving their wharves for the South, and they see the Federal troops attending their arrival. This impatience is natural, but the sentiment which springs from it is subject towards the Government. When we consider the vast preparations for war the Federal Government was a few weeks since, and contrast its feeble state then with its present immense power, both offensive and defensive, and consider the difficulties which it has occupied and undertaken, the most captious caviller will acknowledge that vast results have been obtained, even if a battle has not been fought and won.

It would seem that the South, though rapidly gathering together large bodies of men, are equally behind hand in aggressive movements with the Federal Government. Almost all the Southern papers are filled with the details of an enthusiastic uprising of the people, but there is no one springing up in every section of the South. Still the necessity of thorough organization is felt to be a paramount object by both the North and the South, and the former are rapidly completing and maintaining their strength at various strategical points. The war will come still too soon wherever it does come, but precipitate action will be found to be the worst policy in the present case.

Since our last issue the President has issued a Proclamation, setting forth that insurrection exists in the State of Florida, by which the lives, property, and peace of the citizens are much endangered, and it is deemed proper that all needful measures should be taken for the protection of such citizens and all officers of the United States in the discharge of their duties. The President directs the Commander of the Forces of the United States on the Florida coast to permit no person to exercise any office or authority upon any island, post, or Key, in the Keyages and Santa Rosa, which may be inconsistent with the laws and constitution of the United States, authorizing him, at the same time, if he shall find it necessary, to suspend the writ of habeas corpus, and to remove from the vicinity of the United States fortresses all dangerous or suspected persons.

It is believed that the issuing of this Edict Proclamation the Commander of Fort Pickens will commence offensive operations against the Secession troops under General Bragg, now occupying Pensacola and the Navy Yard. It is reported that General Bragg, having erected powerful and commanding batteries, and having six or seven thousand men in position, will immediately commence the evacuation of Fort Pickens. A circular has also been issued from the Twenty Department, addressed to the Collectors, Surveyors, and Naval Officers, the Customs on the Northern and North-Western waters of the United States, to the following effect:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, May 20, 1861.

On the 19th of April, 1861, the President of the United States, by Proclamation, declared the ports of South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Texas, and Virginia, blockaded, and on the same month, by another Proclamation, declared the ports of North Carolina and the Chesapeake blockaded, which Proclamation the Department has received reliable information has been duly enforced. The Navy Department has also informed this Department that vessels of the following-named ports have those States in open insurrection against the constitutional authority of the United States, viz.: Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, and New Orleans, to receive careful examination to be guide of the manifests of all vessels arriving at or leaving your port. You will also make careful examination of all vessels arriving at or leaving your port, and to compare the same with the entry on board, and if any such merchandise be found on board not specified in the manifest before mentioned, or any such articles be found to constitute part of the cargo of any vessel, you will cause the same to be seized, to prevent the departure of the vessel, and to arrest the person in your custody until the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury can be had for the proceedings according to law. You will also make a careful examination of all the passengers arriving at or leaving your port, and of the railroad cars, and other vehicles arriving at or leaving your port, for the purpose of preventing the departure from the United States of any person who you have good reason to believe is for any purpose under insurrection or treason; and you will cause the arrest of any such person. You will also cause all persons found having such destination, you will seize and detain such persons, and report the circumstances for consideration or instruction.

In carrying out these instructions, you will bear in mind that all persons of patriotic sense and devotion to the Union, however they may have been misled, who have voluntarily engaged in or given aid or comfort to the present Southern Rebellion, and then all persons who have been engaged in the Rebellion, and who have returned to their allegiance to the United States, and have taken the oath of allegiance, with the in case of the second section of the third article of the Constitution of the United States, and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, and endeavor to prevent the prohibited shipments, and to detect and punish those who may violate the same, you will report to this department from time to time your action under these instructions.

I am, very respectfully,

SALMON P. CHASE, Secretary of Treasury.

Acting upon this official circular, the Mississippi and the Ohio Rivers will be effectually blockaded, and all supplies of provisions and munitions of war will be prevented reaching the Seceded States.

The Federal troops are in full possession of Cairo, which they have strongly fortified and held by a large military force, which will be further increased by several thousands of troops. Cairo being at the junction of the Ohio with the Mississippi River effectually commands both, and by its natural position and its strongfire for itself, almost impregnable. It is reported that General Pillow is at Memphis with a large force, and is gathering together a steamboat flotilla to attack Cairo, but it is thought that the guns of Cairo will sweep any such flotilla from the face of the waters. It is also reported that a force has attempted to take the place will be made, in order to break up the blockade, which would be, if not broken, disastrous in its effects upon the South. The Federal troops in the west commerce of Missouri will seriously affect the trade of the West, but said without interest are necessarily swallowed up by the more important events of the East.

Southern Defiance at Privateering.

It commences by stating that, as the President of the United States had rejected all overtures for a peaceful solution of the disagreement between the two Governments, and had called for seventy-five thousand men to coerce the South, he had accepted the alternative. He also announces that he has made an alliance, offensive and defensive, with Virginia. He also informs the Southern States that the following States had refuse to resign their allegiance to the Federal Union, viz.: Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee, North Carolina, Maryland, Kentucky and most probably Delaware; also the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico. He then proceeds to declare war against us. He therefore resolves to use the whole force, naval and military, against the aforesaid Lincoln and the United States.

Davis then offers letters of marque to any who wish to become privateers to apply to him for letters of marque, declaring two responsible sureties for the due fulfillment of the conditions. The most remarkable section is this:

Sec. 10. That a bounty shall be paid by the Confederate States of 20 for each person on board any armed ship or vessel belonging to the United States, or the commander of any such property, which shall be burnt, sunk or destroyed by any vessel commissioned in the Confederate States, and be of equal force to the one entitled to the bounty as in other cases of prize money—the proofs to be adduced and the distribution to be made as the President shall direct. A like bounty shall be paid for each and every person on board any captured and brought into port, and delivered to an agent authorized to receive them, by any public vessel of the Confederate States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to or on account of the officers, seamen, marines, and crew of any private armed vessels commissioned as aforesaid, or their agent, the bounties above provided.

Another section provides that the captain of the privateer shall keep an exact journal of all his prizes, number of the guns and men found on board.

The Legislature of Tennessee has pursued the same course as that of Virginia. It has appointed the 8th of June for an Election, when the people will vote upon the Ordinance. This is to be submitted to the vote of the people; meanwhile, the Legislature has placed all the troops of Tennessee at the disposal and under the control of the President of the Confederate Government. The vote of the people under such circumstances is, of course, a mere absurdity, for the course of events will inevitably involve the State in an open conflict with the Federal Government before the appointed date, from the consequences of which no vote can possibly extricate it. Tennessee, therefore, must be considered as already out of the Union.

The Legislature of Tennessee has pursued the same course as that of Virginia. It has appointed the 8th of June for an Election, when the people will vote upon the Ordinance. This is to be submitted to the vote of the people; meanwhile, the Legislature has placed all the troops of Tennessee at the disposal and under the control of the President of the Confederate Government. The vote of the people under such circumstances is, of course, a mere absurdity, for the course of events will inevitably involve the State in an open conflict with the Federal Government before the appointed date, from the consequences of which no vote can possibly extricate it. Tennessee, therefore, must be considered as already out of the Union.

At event of great importance occurred on the 10th instant in St. Louis, Missouri. The Secession army had been formed at which the city under the command of General Frost. This was deemed by the Union men so dangerous and illegal, and on the 10th they surrounded the camp in St. Louis Game Court, to the number of five or six thousand, under the command of Captain Lyon, surrounded the camp and summoned General Frost to surrender, which he did, and the troops surrendered against his many times outnumbered the men under his command. The arms were surrendered, and the whole force was made prisoners of war, and marched into the city. On the next morning they were released on the following terms: The officers were liberated on their parole of honor, and the men took an oath not to bear arms against the United States during the years' war.

An account of the terrible riots which subsequently occurred in the streets of St. Louis, at ended with much loss of life, will be found in another column.

In consequence of the Virginia troops stationed at Harper's Ferry crossing over into Maryland, Governor Hicks addressed a letter to President Lincoln complaining of the outrages committed by his troops. Governor Letcher replied, regretting the conduct of the troops, and informing Hicks that he had written to Colonel Jackson, commanding at Harper's Ferry, to inquire into the facts, and to prevent their recurrence.

There has been a very guarded correspondence between Governor Butler and Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts. When Governor Andrew heard that General Butler had volunteered to take command of the troops in Maryland, he addressed him, expressing his surprise and displeasure at giving aid and comfort to an enemy, so far as to put down what ought to have been a peaceful insurrection. General Butler in short, replied that the people did not wish to assist in the perpetuation of Slavery. The General's reply is prudent and ingenious. He declined Mary-land's request to be made a free and uniform like willingness to put down all mobs, whether black or white.

The question of passing Federal troops through Baltimore has been settled. Once again Captain Sherman's battery passed through Baltimore last week, and was enthusiastically received. The citizens turned out in force, and lined the principal streets, with no line nor sound of disapprobation. The States and Stripes were thrown out along the route, and the soldiers responded with hearty demonstrations. Captain Sherman's battery now place with three guns in advance and three in the rear, while the infantry marched, with closed ranks, in the centre, and with a file on each side of the street, to keep it clear. They carried their muskets loaded, with bayonets fixed. The saw no Secession flag nor heard a word of offence. Vast crowds lined the road. Bonfires were built along the entire route from Baltimore to Washington. They were thrown across on the road—most of the men in bright cars, with the doors closed and locked, to prevent accident. Some of them had nothing to eat for twenty-four hours, but all were in good spirits. The Pennsylvanian volunteers now number one thousand six hundred.

Since then, General Butler has marched a body of troops into the city and taken possession of Federal Hill, a high point of ground on the south side of the harbor, directly overlooking the city, and one mile west of Fort McHenry. The presence of the troops was hailed with every demonstration of thorough satisfaction. General Butler issued a Proclamation on the 14th inst., which was circulated through the city by extras, and created much excitement. Its tone is eminently pacific. It forbids any aid in arms or provisions to the Secessionists, and announces the determination to seize and confiscate all such articles. He invites manufacturers and merchants to furnish stores, munitions, &c., to the United States Government, which is prepared to receive them. All military organizations are to report to General Butler, that the loyal may be recognised and the disloyal suppressed. The municipal authorities will not be interfered with, but will be assisted in preserving order and restoring quiet, so that the business of the great city may be resumed with vigor.

Baltimore may thus be said to be virtually occupied, but in a friendly spirit, which will give strength and confidence to the loyal men throughout the city and State.

On Monday, the 13th May, a Convention met at Wheeling, in the north-west of Virginia, which was attended by the delegates of forty-five counties, and representing a population of three hundred and fifty thousand whites and five thousand slaves. The leading orator was Mr. Carlisle, who, while he advocated the due maintenance of State rights, declared strongly against Seceding from the Union. Rather than break away from the Union, he advocated an immediate separation from eastern Virginia. General Jackson was for delaying action till after the 23d May, when the voice of the people was to be heard on the question, but against this Mr. Carlisle protested, and General Jackson subsequently withdrew his motion. These independent counties equal about two-fifths of the entire State, and are bounded on the east by the Allegheny Mountains, on the west by Ohio and Kentucky, on the south by North Carolina and Tennessee, and on the north by Pennsylvania. The formation of this portion of Virginia into a separate State will place Harper's Ferry in a very unprotected state, and compel the evacuation of the Secession troops now gathered at that place.

After a long and earnest debate the Convention adjourned on the 15th, to meet on the 11th June, appointing Committee of Nine, with Mr. Carlisle as Chairman, fully empowered to act should any emergency arise requiring immediate action. It is considered that the appointment of Mr. Carlisle as Chairman, is a guarantee that Eastern Virginia will adhere to the Union.

It is reported, on Major Anderson's authority, that the Hon. John C. Breckinridge has agreed to take a command under him in the Kentucky Brigade.

PERSONAL.

Commodore Stockton rides about Philadelphia in his coupe, with flags on each side of the driver's seat made of satin, with gold stars.

Cornelius Bracey, a soldier of the Revolutionary War, and one of the participants in the battle of Bennington, died at Bennington on the 31st inst., at the advanced age of ninety-seven years.

John Haff, a veteran of the war of 1812, died suddenly last week, at his residence, No. 265 East Fourteenth street. He was sixty-five years of age, and a native of New Jersey. Verdict, "Death from disease of the heart."

Mr. John Savage is now on a visit in New York. The Home Journal says the [illegible] comedy of "Under the Rose" has been accepted by a well-known manager, and that he will open his new theatre with it. Mr. Savage is a brilliant writer and a fine poet; he has also much dramatic construction, which is more necessary to the success of a play than the biggest poetical genius. He is the author also of his "Sybil."

It seems now to be a point of honor with high officials to keep the balance due to the State as a grateful recollection of their public services. The Daily News says that Major Rhett, of South Carolina, Paymaster in the Army, has absconded from the Federal Government, leaving an unadjusted account of $10,000. It [illegible] Fowler did the same thing, and it is said that George N. Sanders deducted $17,000 for extra service.

The Hon. S. A. Douglas has published a letter, in which he declares that Secession is [illegible] heresy, and that the rights of the South have never been [illegible]. This does not agree with the speeches he made on his Presidential campaign.

The grandfathers of President Jeff Davis and Abe Lincoln were both born in Rockingham county, Virginia.

General Lee, [illegible] at the head of the Virginia troops, is the son of the celebrated "Light Horse Harry" of the Revolution.

Mr. Herman Beffelt, one of the most experienced and sagacious of our educationists, has completed a most ingenious [illegible], in which he has enlisted the aid of pictures to induce the young to study the science of numbers. Mr. Beffelt is one of our best practical teachers.

Mrs. Lincoln, wife of the President, accompanied by Mrs. G[illegible]sby, is now in New York, under the hospitable charge of the Lelands of the Metropolitan. On Sunday she attended Mr. Ward Beecher's church in Brooklyn, where her presence created marked attention and comment.

Colonel Anderson, after receiving a magnificent ovation in Philadelphia on his way to New York, is now resting for a few days at the Brevoort House. He will then leave for his command in Kentucky.

Madame Anna [illegible]'s chamber concerts at the Stuyvesant Institute, 659 Broadway, are becoming very popular. The charming artiste is a universal favorite, and thousands delight to hear her in the beautiful ballads of the old countries and in the fine scenes of the modern opera. She is assisted by very excellent artists, and the programme are very interesting. The chamber concerts take place every evening, and we recommend our friends to go, for they will be highly gratified.

We have received through Ross & Tousey the first part of a monthly publication issued by William Carter & Brother, called "Tales of the Day, Original and Selected." This number is very interesting, containing five splendid stories of a high character both in interest and literary merit. The work will doubtless meet with a large monthly sale.

We have also received from King & Baird, of Philadelphia, Baxter's Volunteer's Manual, containing full instructions for the recruit in the schools of the soldier and squad, with very numerous illustrations. It is said that during the past week over forty thousand copies of this work has been sold. This fact speaks very conclusively of its merits.

To Adams' Express Company we have to tender our very best thanks for very many favors received. The sketches from our Special Artists in various sections of the country, which are to us of the highest importance, have reached us through Adams' Express in advance of all other means of conveyance. We therefore thank Adams & Co. for favors received and for favors to come.

The summer is coming on, and to those who are seeking a residence in the country we cordially recommend the Lafayette House, Bergen, N. J. It is most beautifully located, with the healthful and flowing tide of the Kill-von-kull rushing by, right in front of the house, bearing a thousand vessels on its bosom, and forming a panorama of beauty which can hardly be equalled and cannot be excelled. The proprietor, Mr. [illegible], is one of the most efficient and obliging of landlords, and his popularity is attested by a register which already shows a very large number of guests who have taken rooms in advance of the opening of the house, which takes place on the 1st of June. The Lafayette House is only thirty-five minutes by steamboat from New York. The drive along the beautiful bay of New York is a most delightful one, and can be accomplished in less than an hour. It is a house worth visiting and worth staying at.

UNION DEFENCE RELIEF COMMITTEE.

The central office at the Cooper Institute, for the relief of the families of soldiers, continues to present a busy and interesting scene. Wives of volunteer soldiers are continually submitting orders from the volunteer committees of their respective wards for money. Each wife receives three dollars a week, and one dollar for the oldest child, and fifty cents for each additional child.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.

The Excelsior Brigade of New York—General Daniel E. Sickles.—This splendid organization is rapidly progressing towards completion. Its force is designed to consist of four and perhaps five full regiments. It was offered to the Government for the whole term of the war, and has been unconditionally accepted. The men have been selected from the thousands offering with great care, with regard to their height and their fine physical condition, and will form one of the very finest brigades in the service. It will also be splendidly officered, great circumspection having been observed in the choice of candidates for the various responsible positions. Those already selected are gentlemen in their social position, and able and efficient officers in knowledge and experience.

In the beginning of the organization, General Sickles had to assume many heavy pecuniary responsibilities to insure the comfort and well-being of his men, but affairs go on more smoothly now, and the citizens and the authorities take a most earnest interest in what they believe will be the crack brigade of New York city. General Sickles, personally, is immensely popular with his regiments, and that popularity is shared in a large degree by his many excellent and efficient officers.

The estimation in which the brigade is held in Washington may be inferred from the following:

"The Secretary of War announced on Tuesday, the 14th, to the President that General Sickles offered his brigade—five thousand strong—direct to the Government for the whole term of the war, fully armed and equipped and ready for any service.' 'It must be accepted immediately,' said the President. 'I have accepted it,' said the Secretary. 'You have done well,' said the President. High expectations are entertained of this brigade."

Quartermaster's Department.—This department has been removed from the Division Armory, and is now located at No. 51 Walker street, where the stores are also kept. All persons having business with Acting Assistant Quartermaster General C. A. Arthur, will hereafter apply at this place. Regimental Quartermasters will file their requisitions for rations to Colonel Shepherd, on the evening of the day preceding the one for which the rations are required. Applications for quarters must be made to Colonel Van Doren.

The following regiments have been reported at the volunteer department, Colonel Yates commanding, as having been mustered into service:

Colonel McChesney, New York Zouaves, Sandy Hook.
Union Volunteer Zouaves, Colonel Wilson, Quarantine.
Camp Anderson, Battery Second Regiment, Colonel Tompkins, N. Y. S. M.
First Regiment National Guard, Quarantine.
Chasseurs-à-Pied, Colonel Lansing, 73 Broadway.
Naval Brigade, Colonel Bartlett, Quarantine.
New York Volunteers, Colonel Pratt, three companies, A, B, C, at Park Barracks, balance at 360 Pearl street.
Excelsior Brigade, Colonel Sickles, three companies, A, B, C, at Park Barracks, balance at 444 Broadway. Jackson Regiment and probably British Volunteers form part of this brigade.
Scott Life Guard, First Regiment, Colonel Hinton, Central Park Arsenal.
Scott Life Guard, Colonel Ward, Second Regiment, two hundred at Division Armory, balance at Centre Market drill-rooms.
Constitution Guard, Colonel Cocks, Lieutenant-Colonel Olmstead, two companies 249 William street, balance at Elm Park.
California Regiment, Colonel Baker, three companies, Captains Rowe, Chalmers and Hubbs at the Park Barracks, balance at 534 Broadway.
First German Rifles, Colonel Blenker, Palace Garden. United German Turner Rifles, Colonel [illegible], Palace Garden. Steuben Battalion, Colonel Bendix, at Landmann's, Forty-second street.
Sappers and Miners, Colonel J. McLeod Murphy, will be quartered at Bellevue Garden, Eighth street and East River.
Advance Guard, Colonel Duryea, Fort Schuyler.
Empire City Regiment, Colonel Sheehan, Broadway, near Houston.
Garibaldi Guard, Broadway, near Houston.
Montezuma Regiment, Colonel Browne, corner of Broadway and Park Place.
Kerrigan Volunteers, Colonel Kerrigan, Old Bowery Theatre.
German Regiment, Colonel Steinwehr, Jones's Wood.
Seventy-ninth Rifles, Colonel McCune, Eagle drill rooms, Delancy street.

Departure of the Seventh Regiment Reserve.—The transport steamer Matanzas left this port on the 10th for Washington, with provisions and a reserve of sixty men of the Seventh Regiment as escort. The transport steamer Vulcan also sailed the same date with provisions for the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

The First Regiment of Vermont Light Infantry arrived in New York on Friday, and took their departure next day, in the Alabama, for Fort Monroe. They numbered nearly 800 men, and are one of the finest bodies of men we have seen. Their average height is five feet ten, and many of them considerably exceed six feet. They are most of them bachelors, and men of good education, and decidedly religious tendency. They were very much gratified with their reception in New York, and departed full of life and courage. Colonel Phelps, their commander, is considered as much in a paternal light as that of a leader, and takes great pride and interest in their welfare and comfort. He would not allow one of his men to embark on board the steamer till he had satisfied himself by actual inspection that there was ample room for their accommodation.

Colonel Hawkins' Zouaves are now encamped upon Riker's Island.

THE GREAT EASTERN.

This marine monster has paid us another visit. She sailed from Milford Haven at half-past eight on the evening of May 1st, and arrived at Sandy Hook on the morning of the 11th, after a passage of nine days, twenty three hours and twenty-two minutes. Her performance on this second trip has been much more satisfactory than her first, everything working admirably. The first four days were very pleasantly passed, the weather being so fair that the usual precautions for securing the crockery, &c., on the table were even dispensed with, and the Times correspondent says there was no more motion than what is usual in a Hudson River ferry boat. On the 5th, however, a change came over the sea, and a violent tempest tried the mettle of the metal monster. It came out of the ordeal triumphantly. Her speed is thus given:

	Miles.
To Thursday noon, 2d inst	211
To Friday noon, 3d inst	305
To Saturday noon, 4th inst	340
To Sunday noon, 5th inst	338
To Monday noon, 6th inst	314
To Tuesday noon, 7th inst	224
To Wednesday noon, 8th inst	220
To Thursday noon, 9th inst	348
To Friday noon, 10th inst	288
To Saturday noon, 11th inst	344

She is now commanded by Captain Thompson, a gentleman well known in our city, and is anchored opposite Hoboken.

INCIDENTS AND ANECDOTES OF THE WAR.

The Newburyport Herald says: We have before us a letter from Mr. Edwin T. Spofford, in a Lawrence company, in the Sixth Regiment. He was in the Baltimore fight, and marched next to Needham, who was killed, falling wounded by his side. Mr. Spofford is a young man of truthful and Christian character, and he thus writes: "The man who shot him fell dead by my rifle. I felt bad at first when I saw what I had done; but it soon passed off, and as I had done my duty, and was not the aggressor, I was soon able to fire again and again."

A serious difficulty had occurred near Baton Rouge, where a minister, having expressed some sentiments of Union desires in a prayer, was compelled to vacate the pulpit and stand trial before a Vigilance Committee composed of tough customers, who decided that he must publicly apologise for the offence or be dealt with summarily. He was not inclined to obey, and only at the intercession of his wife was allowed twenty-four hours to settle his business and leave the place.

Death of one of the Seventh Regiment.—A deplorable accident occurred at Camp Cameron on the 9th, resulting in the death of Larry Keyes, of the Seventh Regiment of New York. The deceased stepped to pick something up near a place where a number of guns had been stacked, and as he was in the act of rising the stack was accidentally struck and one gun exploded, the load taking effect in his body, killing him almost instantly. Col. Lefferts caused the remains to be placed in a metallic case for transmission to New York. He next duly dispatched [illegible] an officer to personally communicate intelligence of the sad event to the relatives of Mr. Keyes. Mr. Keyes was a salesman in the store of Pearce & Co., of Franklin street. He was in his twenty-seventh year, and much respected. He was married only two days before he left New York.

Annapolis, May 10.—About midnight, a squad of some fifty mounted insurgents fired on the picquet guard at Camp Butler, across the Severn. The guard returned the fire, and about twenty shots were exchanged. The garrison regretted that the marauders did not dismount and give an account of themselves. Similar squads are roving about. Their acts are disavowed by the citizens. The eyes of Colonel Smith is upon them. A sentinel in the yard was stabbed by a person in citizen's dress.

A fatal accident occurred last week at the Brooklyn Armory. A member of the Twenty-eighth Regiment was sitting on the window-sill in the third story; having had but little rest the night previous, he fell asleep and tumbled down upon the sidewalk. The force of the fall was so great that he was literally dashed to pieces. The body was taken to the Dispensary, where an inquest was held by Coroner Horton. The name of the deceased is supposed to be Daniel Kane, a member of Company C. He was about five feet seven inches in height, dark hair and dark complexion, one joint missing from the [illegible] finger of the right hand. A badge on his coat bore the words, "[illegible] the Union." The body was taken to the dead-house for recognition. A verdict of accidental death was rendered.

A number of Quakers are among the Rhode Island troops. The Meeting deals very tenderly with the fighting Friends; they are obliged to say, when they come back, that they are "sorry," and it is [illegible] that they [illegible]; and are not required to specify what they are sorry for, whether for the tough beef or for the breach of discipline.

How much Lead it takes to Kill a Soldier.—There has been obtained certain statistics at the Crimea and other places, of the amount of metal employed, and the number of the killed and wounded. The result was that it has been ascertained with mathematical certainty, that one hundred and seventy pounds of lead were shot away to every man that was killed.

Ellsworth's Zouaves at the Capital.—A correspondent says: We saw one of the Zouaves, a mere boy, swing from the cornice in the interior of the new dome, on a rope, and let himself down to the floor of the rotunda—a distance of nearly one hundred feet—with apparent ease, and in an incredibly short space of time, checking his speed as he touched the floor, to "light" easy. It did not seem to be a novel act to the others, as they noticed it no more than any ordinary occurrence. We saw one of the b'hoys, with hose in hand, in the open space below the building, on the west side, with a hose-pipe in his hand and a full head of Potomac water on, washing the pavement, and he seemed to enjoy the accustomed sport hugely, making the water fly at a great rate and occasionally "squirting" on his comrades. The most of them are of Herculean proportions, with massive shoulders and chests, and will be effective soldiers, no doubt.

The New York Fire Zouaves seem to afford considerable annoyance and amusement to the Washingtonians, if we are to credit the newspaper correspondents. It would seem as though some of the inhabitants, who before these brave men have gone to protect, are surprised to find that they have not the polished manners of the Fifth avenue. Considering the haste in which Colonel Ellsworth gathered his regiment together, it is perfectly marvellous that out of thirteen hundred men so reckless as those our Firemen is composed of, so few were disorderly. Among some of their pranks may be named those of going into a fashionable bootmaker's in Washington, and after covering their feet with patent leathers, leaving their old ones behind to be mended, and considerately telling the proprietor to send to the bill to Old Abe, and he would make it all right. One different description was the forcible seizure of a wandering pig, which was captured by some stray Zouaves, who cut its throat, and converted it into the National diet, adding be it honestly paid for. When the owner of the unfortunate porker complained, one of them said, "The pig had no business walking about the street like a gentleman." Another Zouave pushed his comrade through a costly window, for which the Colonel had to disburse thirty-five dollars. In excuse for many of these slight military excesses, it ought to be remembered that the tradespeople of many of the places through which these gallant men passed took advantage of their necessities to swindle them in a most outrageous rate, charging them fifteen cents a piece for eggs, twenty-five cents for a five cent pie, twenty cents for a cigar not worth two cents, and everything else at a similar rate. Such pillagers do not deserve one drop of blood being shed in their defence. Generally speaking, the practical jokes of the military are of a harmless character. One of the Seventh pinned a Secession cockade to the shoulder of one of the Twelfth, and enjoyed the sensation amazingly.

A volunteer in Boston, on being asked by the inspecting surgeon if he thought he could stand the hardships in the service, replied, "I should think that a fellow who carried a lantern, seven dozen nights last fall in Bell and Everett processions, and got to his work next morning without going to bed, ought to be able to stand any common kind of service."

Masterly Inactivity.—At the late session of the Wyoming (N. Y.) Conference, the following substitute was offered and passed, instead of a resolution to adopt the report of last year on Slavery: "Whereas, Divine Providence has taken the work of emancipation into His own hands; therefore, Resolved, That we stand still and see the salvation of God."

Mr. Sparrowgrass's Resolution.—Mr. Sparrowgrass recently joined the "Home Guard" at Yonkers, New York, and said in a speech that "it is understood that the Home Guard is not to go to the wars, and not to leave Yonkers except in case of invasion." This is as good as the old story of the "Bungtown Riflemen," an Ohio military company, whose bylaws consisted of two sections, namely: Article First, This company shall be known as the Bungtown Riflemen: Article Second, In case of war this company shall immediately disband!"

"Don't let the Enemy get the Start of You"—Rev. Mr. Beattie, of the Bethel, of Cleveland, Ohio, presented a revolver to one of the soldiers of the Seventh Regiment before his departure, with the following injunction: "If you get in a tight place and have to use it, ask God's blessing if you have time, but be sure and not let your enemy get the start of you. You can say amen after you shoot."

A Steady Diet.—One of the Missouri volunteers writes from the camp of his regiment to a friend in St. Louis: "Pilot bread and bacon are very good for a limited number of meals, say two hundred, but as a steady diet cause indigestion."

We learn from the Atlanta Intelligencer that Mr. Todd, of Missouri, a brother of Mrs. Lincoln, passed through Atlanta on the 24th of April, on his way home to raise volunteers for the Confederate army. He made a short speech to the citizens, having been introduced by Colonel B. C. Yancey, in which he gave it as his opinion that Missouri would secede in twenty days and join the Confederate States, and that she would not only protect her own borders from the Abolitionists, but would send 10,000 volunteers into the field to aid her Southern sisters.

[illegible] County, Indiana, which last fall contained 1,007 voters, has sent 1,100 volunteers to the war. One father and two sons enlisted, leaving a farm of [illegible] in charge of two boys, aged fourteen and sixteen respectively, and two daughters, graduates of [illegible] Female College. The latter are now engaged, with their brothers, in planting corn, and intend spending the summer in working the land.

WAR NEWS IN THE NORTH, EAST AND WEST.

NEW JERSEY, Trenton, May 10.—Both Houses of the Legislature adjourned sine die at six o'clock to-day. The laws [illegible] a loan of $2,000,000 and a state tax of $100,000 to raise four new regiments, to procure arms, artillery and munitions of war, to pay the families of volunteers $6 and to volunteers without families $4 a month extra, to authorize the cities of Trenton, Newark, Camden, New Brunswick, Jersey City and Bordentown to borrow money to aid the volunteers [illegible], together with other bills to provide for the State and the war. The Government is now enrolling volunteers for three years, and seven or eight fine companies are now quartered in this city. Volunteers have offered for the war in large numbers, and no difficulty will be found in raising all the troops now needed.

MICHIGAN, Detroit.—The military and volunteer relief bills have passed both branches of the Legislature by a unanimous vote. The former provides for ten regiments to be enrolled as directed by the Governor, and transferable at the President's order into the Federal service. The latter provides for raising funds by a committee for the relief of the families of volunteers. The war loan bill providing for $1,000,000 by the issue of bonds running twenty-five years, drawing seven per cent. interest, was also passed unanimously.

MASSACHUSETTS, Boston, May 8.—The report that three or four additional Massachusetts regiments would be accepted has been received here with great favor by the large military force in the city and forts, who were getting impatient of delay. The first Boston regiment, composed mainly of well drilled and thoroughly equipped city companies, tendered its services among the very first. The Eleventh, Thirteenth and Fourteenth regiments mainly quartered in the harbor forts are full and making progress in drill. The new flying artillery company, under Major Cobb, will be in effective fighting condition in a few days.

OHIO—The West in Arms.—Adjutant-General Carrington, of Ohio, has issued an order for the organization of a gigantic army of Reserve in Ohio. The enrolled militia of that State number 400,000 men, and the retired force, still capable of doing duty, numbers 200,000. General Carrington's order enrolls these five hundred thousand men into a home army. This immense army is to be divided into five corps, of which the first, of one hundred thousand men, will be organized immediately and held subject to transfer into the active army of operation.

PENNSYLVANIA, Harrisburg.—Troops from New York city will hereafter pass through this place, arriving by the East Jersey road, and going to Baltimore over the Northern Central. They can reach Washington cheaper and quicker than by the Annapolis route. Fifteen regiments of Pennsylvania troops have received uniforms. Application has been made by private parties of the Eastern States to Governor Curtin to permit bodies of armed free blacks to pass through Pennsylvania. They met with unconditional refusal, and great satisfaction is expressed here at the Governor's decision. These applications were to rouse the slaves of the Southern States to rebellion.

ILLINOIS, Cairo.—The Chicago Tribune narrates a very interesting meeting between Colonel Tilghman, commander of the Kentucky militia, and Colonel Prentiss of Illinois, commander of the Federal troops now encamped in Camp Defiance, Cairo. It occurred on May 6th, and may be summed up in a short space. Colonel Tilghman, who paid the visit, said that he did so in order to arrive at a more perfect understanding with Colonel Prentiss, and to assure him that a report which had appeared in the Louisville Journal to the effect that an attack would be made on Cairo without the consent and co-operation of Colonel Tilghman, was an entire fabrication. He expressed the utmost devotion to the Union. Colonel Prentiss, in reply, said that he knew preparations were being made in Tennessee to attack the camp at Cairo, and that he was ready to give the Secessionists a warm reception. He also candidly told the Commander of the Kentucky forces that his State had not done its duty, and that although he hoped the principal citizens were sound at heart, yet the mob and many politicians were decidedly disaffected. The conversation then turned upon the constitutional right of the Government to blockade the Ohio and Mississippi, which Colonel Prentiss maintained it had, but which Colonel Tilghman denied. The conference closed by Colonel Prentiss promising to return the visit when he had completed all his military arrangements.

(Continued on page [illegible].)

CAMP HARRISON, SIX MILES FROM CINCINNATI, OHIO, ON THE LINE OF THE HAMILTON ANI

CAMP HARRISON, CINCINNATI.

THE overwhelming enthusiasm which has animated the whole West in this the greatest emergency of our national life is now a matter of record. Ohio alone has indicated five hundred thousand men as being at the service of the Government, one hundred thousand of which are now under requisition. We give in our present issue a sketch of Camp Harrison, which has been organized in the grounds used for the United States Fair, on the line of the Hamilton and Dayton Railroad, six miles from Cincinnati. Camp Harrison has been formed for some time, indeed it was one of the earliest responses to the call of the President. Our Artist has sketched Camp Harrison with all its departments in operat

munse pla department and the in on, and, o
in the we Union to sons are a

TROOPS
THE F WASHI

THERE ar gratifying munity ga who come the dange and we ear into the every reg erried in Federal C against al
Our Artis of the wel ninth by t ton, and v and chival citizens to vinced tha welcome labors and Thus ever grim reali rmiling ou
the weary

FUNER
OF A. O.
Ladd,
Boiletti

THE fifth o in Lowell obsequies members
Massachus were kille
Baltimore rendered i uncholy b which de insignias o universal,
as it were
At half grant, nes ornament s Richardson
eeded to mains to o'clock G
the Lowe corted by Cadets fro
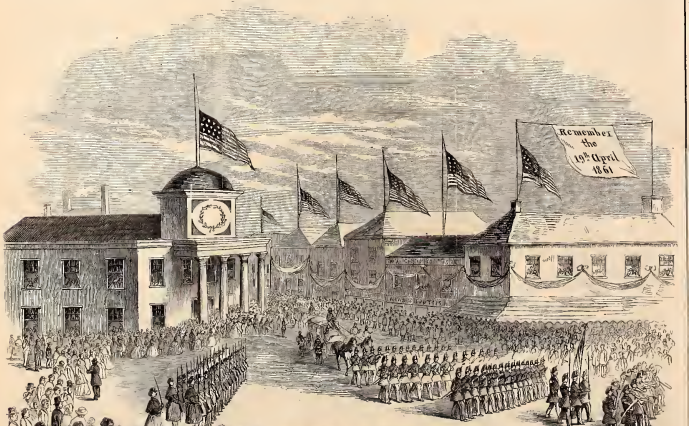
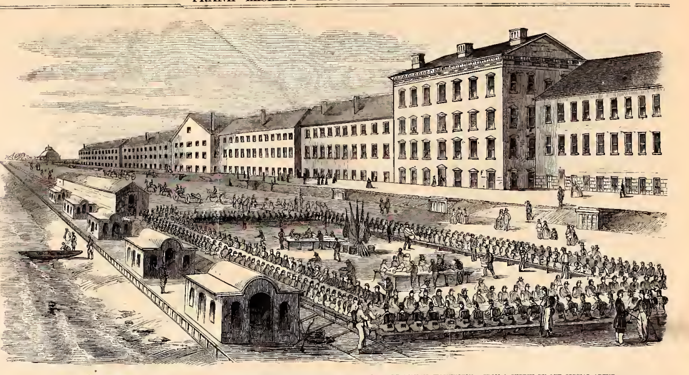
Stone Ch
School and



THE FUNERAL CORTEGE, AT LOWELL, OF THE MASSACHUSETTS SOLDIERS KILLED AT BALTIMORE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST



FEEDING THE ELLSWORTH ZOUAVES IN FRONT OF THE NAVAL ACADEMY, ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND, ON THEIR WAY TO WASHINGTON.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST

FEEDING TROOPS IN FRONT OF THE NAVAL ACADEMY, ANNAPOLIS, MD.

Among the dull routine of a soldier's life there is nothing, after the first flush of novelty has passed away, to which he looks with more interest than to the Commissariat. As lovers cannot live on sighs and kisses, neither can warriors fight upon glory, and all history proves that "the kitchen is one half the camp." Our Artist has sent us a sketch of the New York Zouaves taking their dinner in front of the Academy at Annapolis, and we can realise the gusto with which these gallant fellows enjoyed their rations—an appetite quickened by a good conscience and hard drilling. May they eat ten thousand dinners, and may their appetites never be less, and the larder always full!

BRIGADIER-GENERAL BENJAMIN F. BUTLER,

Of Massachusetts.

General Butler was born in Lowell, Massachusetts, where he now resides, and is about forty-five years of age. In stature he is about five feet nine inches; his head, which is finely shaped, somewhat bowed between his shoulders. He has a well-knit frame, a powerful physique, and an iron will and constitution. His complexion is dark, and his eye intelligent, keen and black, while his lips, chin and brow are clearly cut, and show his firmness and decision of character. General Butler is a profound lawyer, an eloquent orator and a brave soldier. The courtly civilian and the true soldier are most admirably united in him. He is a firm friend and a generous opponent, for the reason that he cautiously forms his opinions of men and measures, and when once formed he never swerves from them. And although he has always maintained all the rights of the South as a National Democrat, having acted as chairman of the Baltimore Convention, run as the Breckinridge candidate for Governor of Massachusetts against Governor Andrew, and has always strenuously opposed all the fanatics and isms of his State; still, when the alarm was sounded that the Union was in danger, and Massachusetts was ready to shed her best blood to sustain the Constitution, he was the first to rush to the rescue in leading her troops to the defence of the Capitol, and he has proved himself the most valuable man there. He is eminently the man for the occasion — a true representative man of American patriotism. He has heretofore led an active and useful life as a civilian, and now he has entered upon a new field of usefulness to his whole country, which cannot be too highly appreciated. It now remains for the future pages of the history of our country's second crisis to pay the just tribute to the patriotism, abilities and virtues of General Butler.

NEW JERSEY REGIMENTS CROSSING CHESAPEAKE BAY

In Sixteen Propellers on their Way to Washington.

We are indebted to an officer of one of the gallant Jersey regiments for a most interesting sketch of the passage of the New Jersey contingent of troops for the defence of the Federal Capital, and we have great pleasure in publishing the very interesting letter which accompanied his sketch. It must be very gratifying to the New Jerseyites to know that their militia were considered as fully equal to the best of any other State. Great credit is due to Brigadier-General Hatfield for his energy in forwarding them to the seat of war. The following letter so fully describes their passage that we have merely to refer our readers to it:

Washington, D. C., May 6, 1861.

Editor Frank Leslie's—Dear Sir: Enclosed you will please find a rough sketch of the transports descending Chesapeake Bay on the afternoon of May 4th, which took the New Jersey contingent from the rendezvous at Trenton.

We left Trenton on the afternoon of Friday at half-past two o'clock, in the midst of a cold drizzling rain, and embarked on board the sixteen transports provided for our accommodation, and which contained Colonel Baker's staff and the following companies, comprising Headquarters of the Second Regiment N. J. M.: B Company, Captain E. C. Hopper; G Company, Captain Ramsey; H Company, Captain Babcock, with his gallant Zouaves; K Company, Captain W. B. Dunning, editor of the Jersey City Courier.

We passed down the canals and rendezvoused at Bordentown, N. J. Here an accident of a very melancholy character occurred on board the Cadwallader, by the accidental discharge of a pistol in the hands of James W. Wiswall, which took effect in the breast of his comrade Hugh McNichol, both of Company G, the ball passing through the right lung about two inches below the nipple. On the report of the accident being made known, our ever ready Surgeon Quidor and his aids immediately were on hand, and extracted the ball from the patient's back, who was then taken ashore and comfortable quarters provided for him by Colonel Baker and the Surgeon, and placed under the care of Dr. Jameson.

Nothing of any importance took place until passing St. George's, this side of Chesapeake City, four men were handed over by the officer in command, wearing the uniform of volunteers. After some time on board rumors were spread that their sentiments were not all right. Colonel Baker called forthwith a meeting of the Board of Officers; the four were separately examined and disarmed; but on reaching Chesapeake City and making the proper inquiries, it was ascertained they were sent back to headquarters (two of them) for the non-performance of duty, when the Colonel let them go ashore, censuring the officer at St. George's for sheer neglect in not forwarding the specific charges, &c.

We passed still rapidly along, and when crossing Chesapeake Bay the scene was magnificent; the iceboat Philadelphia had four heavy pieces of ordnance on board, and discharged several rounds of shot, which went bounding over the surface of the water. It was laughable to see a few Secession flags come down, and the speedy unfurling of the glorious Stars and Stripes. Schooners and other sailing vessels dipped their ensigns, and everything in sight told well the respect shown to our flag. There were several steamboats with pleasure parties who crossed and recrossed, and accompanied us on our way. We came to anchor off Annapolis about eleven o'clock on Saturday night, May 4th, disembarked by regiments on Sunday in the fore and afternoon, after hours of drill, and an extra supply of ball cartridge and caps. Four companies of the Second Regiment—D, Captain Lilliendahl; E, Van Boskirk; I, Van Vooris, and K, Dunning—were detailed for guard mounting at five P. M.; and at seven P. M. six companies of the Second Regiment, Colonel Baker, staff, colors and drum corps left Annapolis, preceded by the First Regiment, for Washington at ten o'clock; all were seated (close on thirteen hundred men) in the cars. All along the line is guarded; the fires in front of the camps light the way, the tents dot the line along, and the volunteer, faithful to his duty, walks his post with an air that some of our Wall street bankers might envy. And still more wonderful, I write this from the desk which once the traitor Jefferson Davis occupied; but I am wandering from my details. We arrived at Washington this morning at one o'clock, and after many hours marching through the city, under a heavy and cold rainstorm, we were temporarily quartered where lately the organ of Mr. Buchanan's Administration issued its foolish stuff and nonsense—the paper Constitution I mean. However, twenty-two thousand bayonets now surround the capital.

MAJOR-GENERAL B. F. BUTLER, U. S. A., OF MASSACHUSETTS, NOW IN COMMAND OF THE FEDERAL TROOPS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ANNAPOLIS, MD.—PHOTOGRAPHED BY SILSBEE, CASE & CO.

A NEW ENGINE OF WAR—RAIL-ROAD BATTERY.

A very wonderful, singular and no doubt destructive engine of war, in the shape of an iron car, is now in the Baltimore depot. It was built at the locomotive works of Matthew Baldwin & Sons, at Philadelphia, and has but just been completed, after two weeks spent in building. No one outside the establishment in the city knew anything about it until it was removed to the Baltimore depot. It is built (except the body and truck) of the best half-inch boiler iron, and is proof against the best rifles at any distance. It is sixty-five feet long by nine in width. The sides are bored for rifle holes to the number of fifty, each man to be provided with the celebrated Minie rifle. At one end is a twenty-four-pounder cannon, which moves on a pivot, with a gun carriage complete. The cannon can be raised and lowered at will, and six experienced gunners will take charge of it. At the end of the car opposite the mouth of the cannon, and also on each side of the car, the iron is cut into doors about two feet square with levers attached on the inside, so that they can be raised and lowered at pleasure. When used, the cannon will be loaded with grape, canister and chain shot. A company of sixty men can be accommodated in the car. The roof and doors are the same as the sides, except that the roof is the centre, for about four feet, is raised and supported by strong iron bars, leaving an opening all around of about a foot in width, to admit the air and allow the smoke from the discharged rifles and cannon to escape. The doors have iron bars upon them, making their strength double.

A number of shots from a first rate rifle were fired at the sides of the car at a distance of twelve yards, by Mr. William H. Taggart, one of the company's officers employed in the depot, but the balls fell jagged, broken and harmless to the ground, and on examining the inside of the car not the slightest mark could be seen. The car is intended to be pushed ahead of a locomotive. It was built for the purpose of assisting the workmen in rebuilding the bridges with security between Havre de Grace and Baltimore. At night it will be used as a berth and guard car for the men building the bridges.

WAR FEELING IN THE NORTH, EAST AND WEST.

(Continued from page 3.)

An order of Governor Yates, of Illinois, issued on the 6th instant, directs the immediate organization of ten regiments in that State. The uniform is to consist of a blue or army round jacket, and pants of United States army pattern, and army fatigue cap.

MAINE.—Governor Morrill had a long interview with the President a few days ago, and subsequently with Secretary Cameron. He is very anxious that Maine shall be permitted to do her part in maintaining the supremacy of the Government. The people of that State cannot be kept at home. They are anxious and eager to be permitted to join their brethren at once, and there is a strong probability of additional regiments being accepted from that State.

MISSOURI, ST. LOUIS.—On May 10th General Frost with his brigade of 800 men, encamped at Camp Jackson on the western outskirts of the city, surrendered unconditionally to Captain Lyon, commander of the United States forces of the city. Captain Lyon, at the head of 6,000 United States troops, having entirely surrounded him, summoned General Frost to surrender unconditionally, to which the Secessionists had to submit. After the surrender is [illegible] the officers and troops, providing they would take an oath not to take up arms against the Government of the United States, which they declined. Just before the troops left for the city, and while the State forces were drawn up between the two lines of volunteers, several rocks were thrown at the volunteers and a few pistol shots fired by excited parties in the surrounding crowd, which was composed of a large number of citizens, including many women. One shot took effect in the leg of Captain Blandowski, and as he fell he gave word to fire, which was obeyed by some two or three companies, resulting in the death of upwards of twenty persons, including two women and several children, and badly wounding several others.

