PRINTED DAILY, BY F. DELAUP.
St. Peter-Street, between Bourbon & Royal.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1828.

The editor of the Charleston Courier has received Jamaica papers to Aug. 3.

2131 barrels Flour were imported into Kingston, from the 7th to the 23th July.

A great degree of excitement still exists in the West Indies, on the subject of their local interests, as effected by the proceedings of the British Parliament. The arbitrary conduct of the Governor of Antigua, in desolving the Court, while sitting to decide a question relative to certain slaves, caused the immediate resignation of Judge Nugent, whose conduct on the occasion is highly extolled in the Colonial papers. The Hon. Paul Horsford had been subsequently appointed, by the Governor, as Judge of the Court of Vice-Admiralty, in the room of the Hon. Nicholas Nugent, resigned.

It is stated that Lord Combermere, now in the West Indies, has been offered the situation of Governor of the Island of Jamaica.

Factories Burned—The large woollen factory, owned by the Uxbridge (Mass.) Woollen Manufacturing Company, was destroyed by fire on the 28th ult. Loss $18,000, the half of which was insured. On the 29th the woollen factory of Stephen R. Parkhurst & Co. was burned about three o'clock in the morning—no insurance—loss $10,000. Both of these fires are attributed to spontaneous combustion. Spontaneous combustion manufactories will recollect! (N. Y. Advertiser).

An Antagonist for Bonaparte.—An honest Yorkshireman amusing himself by poaching, had his gun taking from him by a justice of the peace. Soon after he was unfortunate enough to be informed against for sedition, in saying he wished Bonaparte would land in Yorkshire. Being brought before the bench of magistrates, of which the aforesaid justice was chairman, he acknowledged the words; "but," said he, "my reason for saying so was, that I thought your worship would take his guns from him!"

On the sign of an inn, bearing the Duke of Athol's arms, upon his Grace's estates in Scotland, are the following words:—"The Duchess leaves the Duke's Arms every morning at five o'clock, for Glasgow," (meaning a coach called the Duchess.) His Grace being informed of this a short time ago, pleasantly remarked—'I assure you it is nearly true, although not for Glasgow, but to such concerns appertain to my happiness; and I sincerely wish many other wives would do the same."

RALEIGH, N. C. Sept. 5.

A very unfortunate affair occurred in this city, on Tuesday last, which eventuated in the death of one individual and will probably be attended with consequences equally fatal to another. A man by the name of William L. Wolf, notorious for the atrocity of his villanies and the depravation of his character, was arrested under the vagrant act, and sentenced to ten days' imprisonment. On opening the outer door of the prison, Wolf ran up stairs, towards the debtors' apartment. The jailor having received orders from the sheriff to confine him in one of the lower rooms, ordered Wolf to come down. He however having found an iron bar at the top of the stairs, refused to descend and avowed his determination to kill any one who attempted to take him. After ineffectual efforts to get him to come down, a man by the name of Miller, a private attached to the recruiting party here, went up, under the supposition that from their intimacy, he could prevail on Wolf to surrender. He however had no sooner ascended the stairs with striking distance, than Wolf fulfilled his threats by knocking him down with the bar. About the time that Miller fell, Colonel Wiatt, the jailor, who was standing at the foot of the steps with a loaded pistol, shot Wolf in the body, he then retreated to the head of the stairs, but gave up the ghost about ten minutes. Wolf lingered of the wound about twenty-four hours and died. A jury of inquest was held over the body, who, after examining the evidence, returned a verdict that the deceased came to his death from being shot by a pistol in the hands of John T. C. Wiatt, jailor, in the discharge of his official duty.

Miller's skull is fractured, and but faint hopes are entertained of his recovery.

Thieves Outwitted.—An evening or two ago, five or six young men, who were walking on the battery, agreed for their own diversion in particular and for the punishment and terror of rogues in general, to set a trap for such of the light-fingered gentry as might be seeking either to snuff a breeze or to raise one on that delightful promenade. Two of the party, armed with canes, concealed themselves behind the trees while the remaining three threw themselves upon the grass, covered their faces with their handkerchiefs, and very soon, were apparently fast locked in the arms of Morpheus. But a short time elapsed, when three suspicious looking fellows came along, who after reconnoitring the ground and satisfying themselves from the loud snoring of the seeming sleepers that there could be no mistake, advanced cautiously and removed the handkerchiefs one by one. Scarcely had the third handkerchief left the face of the third recumbent, when the three sleepers simultaneously awoke, and assisted by their brothers in ambush, made a short fierce attack upon the depredators. The lost spoil was regained, the freebooters were dreadfully pummelled and the victors received the warm thanks of a watchman, for having relieved him of a troublesome charge.

A tooth has been found in Gerry, Chatauque County, which is said to measure in circumference across the top. It is believed to have belonged to a mammoth.

Police Court. Donald M'Donald—107 years of age.—This walking record of the past—this memento of ages gone by—this descendant of the land of "cakes and kail"—this speaking chronicler of the events of the past century's youth, with the map of memory shining brightly in his brain—this eye-witness of the passage of human lives, as they bubble onward on the stream of time—this lone pine which has survived the decay of the forest, green at his birth, was brought before the Court this morning for being a common drunkard!

Where now are the companions of his youth? those young locks which clung around the hopes of his boyish days? his companions in arms? the Highland heroes of Fontenoy, with whom he fought against their mouldered bones—of the grave:—darkness and silence engross their story. The folly of life, the nothingness of Time in comparison with the magnitude of Eternity, the frailty and nothingness of earthly ambition, the dignity of man, all are illustrated and exemplified in the person of Donald M'Donald, at his age, before the bar of the Police Court on the charge of drunkenness!

The eye of wonder gazes upon him as he seemingly steps forth from the recesses of an age which is known only by history; on him alone rests the correction of many errors which have crept into its pages. What he has witnessed he describes distinctly, even as far as it relates to persons, places, time and circumstances, and unless they are now embodied as they fall from his lips, error has come to us. Donald was sent to the House of Correction, whence probably he will be removed to the House of Industry, and his remaining days made comfortable.—He accompanied the officer with almost as erect a person as that of the officer himself. Since last released from the House of Correction he has been a traveller, and can walk 20 miles per diem, though upwards of 40 years older than the venerable Judge who sentenced him.

A Deficience of Evidence.—A son of Galen, who was very angry when any joke was passed on physicians, once defended himself from raillery by saying, "I defy any person whom I ever attended, to accuse me of ignorance or neglect."—"That you may do safely," replied the wag, "for you know, doctor, dead men tell no tales."

Thomas Denman, Esq. an eminent lawyer, and common serjeant of London, lately pronounced in that capital a very able inaugural discourse, on the opening of a literary and scientific institution. The following passage of the National Gazette, does credit to his intelligence:—

"Two peculiar circumstances occur to my mind as happy auguries of the gradually increasing grandeur of English literature.—The first is our community of language with the United States. Our own colonies, however distant and extensive, seem but to echo back our voice; but the inheritance of our language by the great North American commonwealth, an independent, a powerful, and a rival nation; the attachment to our habits of thinking and speaking, on the part of one of the most civilized countries, if civilization depends on the diffusion of knowledge and the protection of equal laws; the identity of education between our souls, and the multiplying millions of those boundless regions; the filial, but formidable competition with which the mother has awakened the admiration and stimulate the energies of her parent; all these things hold forth the auspicious promise of stability to the literature common to both countries, as well as of peace, liberty, and happiness, to the old world and the new."

GOOD ADVICE.

Hear, and learn to be silent.
Be silent, and learn to understand.
Understand, and learn to remember.
Remember, and learn to not speak hastily.
All that you see, judge not.
All that you hear, believe not.
All that you know, tell not.
All that you can do, do not—(except what is good.)
By praying, you lose not.
By giving alms, you impoverish not.
By being unjust, you flourish not.
By lying, you profit not.
By profane swearing, you get disgrace.
Wealth lost, some lost.
Health lost, much lost.
Virtue lost, more lost.
Soul lost, all lost.

Whenever you speak any thing, think well, and look narrowly what you speak; where you speak; when you speak; of whom you speak; and to whom you speak, lest you bring yourself into great trouble.
