A recent letter received from Troy has given me the glad intelligence of a number of earnest followers of our Savior Jesus Christ who have grown out of the revival in that city soon after the adjournment of our Convention among them. There are many of us here to day who were in attendance upon the Convention at Troy last year. We hope for a like blessing here, and for which we have prayed so often, and for which we hope that all here are praying.

Let us each feel that the whole meeting rests upon our endeavors, and it is the duty of each of us to stand up for Christ.

The singing of the 1st Hymn was then concluded.

The President read a portion of the Word, as contained in the first Epistle General of John, commencing with the seventh verse "Dearly beloved, I write no new commandment unto you," &c.

Breathe thy peace on all therein," &c.

A CHINESE FABLE.—The Rev. Canon Stow all relates the following discourse by a Chinese tailor with reference to the relative merits of Confucianism, Buddhism and Christianity:

A man had fallen into a deep, dark pit, and lay in the filthy bottom, groaning and utterly unable to move. Confucius, walking by, approached the edge of the pit, and said, "Poor fellow, I am sorry for you, why were you such a fool as to get in there? Let me give you a piece of my mind when you come out, and get in again." I can't get out," groaned the man.

Buddhist priest next came by, and said, "Poor fellow, I am very much pained to see you there. I think if you could scramble up two-thirds of the way, or even half, I could reach you and lift you up the rest. But the man in the pit was entirely helpless and unable to rise.

Next the Savior came by, and hearing his cries, went to the very brink of the pit, stretched down and laid hold of the poor man, brought him up, and said, "Go, and sin no more."

CARLYLE UPON COLERIDGE.—The following, besides being a most admirable specimen of Carlyle's peculiar style, conveys a vivid idea of the conversational powers of Coleridge:

I still recollect his "object and subject," terms of continual recurrence in the Kantean province, and how he sung and snuffed them into "omnipect and summ-ni-ject" with a kind of solemn shave or quiver as he strolled hither and thither among his hearers, sometimes sitting as a passive bucket and be pumped into, whether you consent of not, can, in the long run, be exhilarating to no creature, how eloquent soever the flood of utterance that is descending. But if it be without a confused, unintelligible flood of utterance, threatening land inundations of thought and drowning the world and you!

I have heard Coleridge talk with eager, unusual energy two stricken hours, his face radiant and noble, and containing no meaning whatsoever to any individual of his hearers, certain of whom, I, for one, still kept eagerly listening in hope, the most bad long before been given up, and formed (if the rooms were large enough) secondary humming groups of their own. He began anywhere, you put some question, made some suggestive observation, he rolled off his waving thin, or decidedly setting out towards answer of it, he would accumulate formidable apparatus, logical swim bladders, transcendental life preservers, and other preliminary and vehiculatory gear, for setting out, perhaps he did at last get under way but was solicited, turned aside by the glance of some radiant new game on this hand or that, into new courses, and ever into new, and before long into all the universe, where it was uncertain what game you would catch, or whether any.

The Paris correspondent of the Boston Traveller writes that the Museum of the Louvre has received a valuable present, consisting of five pieces of earthenware, known among amateurs as "Pieces of Henry II's service," and which are attributed to Ascanio, the favorite pupil of Benvenuto Cellini. To give some idea of the value of these fragile witnesses of the state of art at the zenith of Renaissance, it may be stated that, notwithstanding patient hunting of amateurs and old curiosity dealers, only thirty of these rare pieces have yet been discovered. The Museum of the Louvre has had in its possession hitherto only two of them. The Cluny Museum, in Paris, which has so many Renaissance objects of art, and especially is the way of earthenware, possesses only one cup of this precious service. The Ceramic Museum of the Sevres manufactory has but one whole piece and one fragment. The earthenware of Henry II was unknown five-and-twenty years ago, and they have constantly risen in price ever since their discovery. At the Rattier sale, which took place in Paris in 1859, one cup and three small saucebiers (one of which was cracked) fetched 38,220f. at public auction, and Baron de Rothschild gave 30,000f. for a small ewer. The five pieces given to the Louvre are estimated at 119,000f.

INAUGURATION OF THE CLAY MONUMENT.

AT a regular meeting of this Association, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It is the intention of the civic authorities and of the people of this city to do honor to the memory of Henry Clay, a native of Ashland, HENRY CLAY by erecting his statue in a public place.

AND WHEREAS, it is fitting that this should be on the approaching anniversary of the birth of the great statesman, patriot and Christian, and

WHEREAS, it would be a lasting monument to the boldest and purest of its patriots—whose all people admire and reverence for its spotless integrity of heart, and the wisdom and justice of his head, as shown throughout half a century's important labor in his country's service—whom Louisianians must especially revere, for the peaceful work he was doing at Ghent, while Jackson was defending them and their homes from murder and pillage by the last desperate marauders of that most impious war, which Clay opposed, and whom in short is due the homage of every man high or low, rich or poor, who prizes purity of heart, exalted intellect, and nobility of soul, the three qualities which a private man can bring to greatness.

AND WHEREAS, it is fitting that those who were born upon the soil of Louisiana, and those who have always lived there, should, in Louisiana, take a part in this important ceremony to be performed—

Be it Resolved, That the officers and members of the Benevolent Association of the Sons of Louisiana do assemble at their hall on the morning of the 12th of April next, in order to attend, in a body, the ceremony of erecting the Statue of HENRY CLAY in Canal street.

Resolved further, That as the occasion will, from its rare and important nature, call for the fullest possible demonstrations of public honor, this Association will turn out in full force, on that day.

In conformity with the above resolution, the members of this Association are requested to meet at their Hall, corner of Gravier and Bolivar Fields streets, Third District, on Thursday, April 12th, at 9 o'clock, A. M.
