[illegible] and Public Justice to mankind.

FOR THE UNITED STATES

HENRY CLAY,

OF KENTUCKY.

[illegible] of a National Convention.

NEW-ORLEANS:

[illegible]

FRIDAY [illegible] Yesterday a Boat that the steamship Columbia was laying over for repairs, and that she would remain 30 days before going to sea. She is lower than one week, and this boat there is scarcely any business doing. The [illegible] in fine order, and stands in no need of repairs.

☞ There is little that is worth extracting in that compound of superfluous observation and consummate self-conceit, which Capt. Marryat's Diary is principally made up. The following description of a camp meeting is, however, animated, and, for a wonder, correct in the main:

[illegible] I was informed that a camp meeting was to be held about seven miles from Cincinnati. Tired to death with the accounts I had heard of it, I availed myself of this opportunity of decoying for [illegible]. We proceeded about five miles on the high road, and diverged by a cross road until we arrived at a large hill, crowned with a splendid forest free from underwood, the trees being sufficiently apart for the passage of wagons and other vehicles to pass in every direction. The camp was raised on the summit of this hill, in the form of a circle, [illegible] more than an acre and a half was surrounded on the four sides by a row of rough boards, the whole area being covered up with planks, laid about a foot from the ground as seats. At one end, but not in the centre, was a raised stand, which served for the preachers, one of them praying, or rather others set down behind him on the stand. There was a space left in the area by the front of the whole of which was shaded by wagons, which ran up to the height of fifty or sixty feet without throwing out a branch, and to the trees were fixed lamps in every direction. The continuous of service by night. Outside, which may be designated as the church, there were tents pitched in every quarter, their white tents contrasting beautifully with the deep green gloom of the forest. These were the tents of the [illegible] who had come many miles to the meeting, and who remained there from Saturday until it concluded—usually, a period of a week or two. Many of these tents were furnished with every article necessary for cooking, mattresses to sleep upon, &c.; some even had bedsteads and chests of drawers, which I thought in the wagons, in which the tents usually travel. At a further distance all the wagons and other vehicles which brought the people to the meeting, whilst hundreds of horses were tethered under the trees, and plentifully provided with forage. Such were the outlines of a most interesting and beautiful picture, indeed, could so magnificent a temple to be raised as on this lofty hill, crowned with such majestic verdure. Compared with the [illegible] of the forest, the cabins and tents of the [illegible] appear as insignificant and contemptible as I should man himself in the presence of the Deity. Generations of men must have been mowed down by the arrival of these enormous trees to present size of maturity, and at the time of birth their first shoots, probably there were not a whole of this continent, now teeming with millions of men, as are now assembled on [illegible]. I walked about for some time surveying the scene when I returned to the area, and took my seat on a bench. In one quarter the colored [illegible] had collected themselves; their tents appear to be better furnished and better supplied with [illegible] than most of those belonging to the whites. I head into one of the tents, and discovered a [illegible] living on a bed, and singing hymns in a [illegible]. The major portion of them not in the [illegible] cooking the dinners. Fires were burning in every direction—pots boiling, chickens roasting, [illegible] indeed there appeared to be no want of [illegible] comforts.

[illegible] the trumpet sounded, as in days of yore, as a [illegible] that the service was about to recommence, and [illegible] into the area and took my seat. One of the [illegible] rose and gave out a hymn, which was sung by a congregation, amounting to about seven or [illegible] hundred. After the singing of the hymn was [illegible], he commenced an extempore sermon, [illegible] sound doctrine, an I, although Methodism, [illegible] tone, and divested of its bitterness of [illegible], as indeed is generally the case with Methodism in America. I heard nothing which could [illegible] any other sect, or which could be considered [illegible] by the most orthodox, and I began [illegible] other such scenes as had been described [illegible] take place at these meetings. A [illegible] and after about two hours, the congregation was dismissed to their dinners, being first [illegible] the service would recommence at two [illegible] sound of the trumpet. In front of the [illegible] was a space railed off, and strewed with [illegible]. I was told was the penitent seat, and on those who were touched by their conscience [illegible] discourse of the preacher, but, although [illegible] sitting on it, I did not perceive any [illegible] part of the occupants they were attributed [illegible].

[illegible] examined the area. I saw a very large number of ill, probably fifty feet long, [illegible] it was used as a sleeping place [illegible] concluded it was used as a sleeping place [illegible] had not provided themselves with separate [illegible]. About an hour after the service [illegible] many people directing their steps [illegible] followed them. On one side of the [illegible] twenty females, mostly young, squatted [illegible] prayer, on the other a few men, in the [illegible] form, against which were some other [illegible] with their faces covered with their [illegible] in prayer. Gradually the number [illegible] girl after girl dropped down upon the [illegible] side, and men on the other. At last an [illegible] gave out a hymn, which was sung with [illegible] energy; then another knelt down in the centre and commenced a prayer, shutting his eyes, [illegible] at Heaven in the United States [illegible] pray) and raising his hands above his [illegible] another burst out into prayer, and another [illegible] then their voices became all confused together [illegible] I heard the there silvery tones of [illegible] opposition. As the din increased, so did [illegible] handkerchiefs were raised to bright [illegible] were intermingled with prayers and [illegible] hymns, such as "Gordon's Babel; more [illegible] men and women were crying out at the [illegible] of their voices, and trying apparently to [illegible] the others. Every minute the excitation [illegible], some wrung their hands and called to [illegible] tore their hair; boys laid down, crying [illegible] their heads buried in the grass; there [illegible] fits height, one of the preachers commenced [illegible] and stood above the crowd, intending [illegible] to receive into his fold those who had [illegible] would fain return. Another of the [illegible] down by some young men, whose faces [illegible] the convulsion, and to appear to be almost in a [illegible] frenzy, and putting his hands upon them, [illegible] forth an energetic prayer, well calculated to [illegible] upon their overexerted feelings. Groans, groans [illegible], broken into frantic motions, and convulsions [illegible], some fell on the backs and their eyes [illegible], waving their hands with a slow motion, and [illegible] out, "Glory, glory!" I quitted the spot, [illegible] away into the forest, for the sight was [illegible] painful, too melancholy. Its sincerity could not be doubted, but it was the effect of over-excitement [illegible] of other meetings. Could such violence of feeling have been produced had each party retired to contemplate alone? Most surely not. It was a fever created by collision and contact, of the same nature as that which stimulates a mob to deeds of blood and horror.

Incentive Poetic.—This extraordinary man is destined to fill a large space in the history of the present age. He is the son of Mehemet Ali, the pacha of Egypt, and inherits the talent as well as ambition of his father. When the Mahometan faith was threatened by the Wahbees, seven or eight years ago, Ibrahim at the head of an irregular force, pretended into Arabia, defeated the formidable array of rebels with great slaughter, and carried their princes captives to Cairo. Since then, he has paid great attention to the introduction of European discipline and civilization into his times, and has done much towards improving the character of the Egyptian army. He is one of all Syria, which he now governs, as the representative of his father—and that country will probably become the theatre of a sanguinary struggle between the armies of the sultan and the troops of Mehemet Ali and Ibrahim. He has probably an army of nearly 100,000 men under his command—and his troops have the greatest confidence in his courage and military skill. A writer in an English periodical, not long ago, sums up his character in the following words:

"He is without doubt a man of remarkable talents. His mind is alike subtle and energetic. He is totally free from prejudice, adopts your ideas with silent rapidity, and his acts demonstrate his military genius. His ambition is unbounded—his admiration of European institutions and civilization, great; but he avoids with dexterity, shocking the feelings and prejudices of the Moslem."

If Ibrahim should succeed in defeating the armies of the sultan, a fatal blow will be given to the Ottoman power in Europe.—Mer. Jour.

Language of the United Kingdom.—It is worthy of remark, that there is no civilized country in Europe in which not only so many different dialects prevail, but so many different languages, as in Great Britain. Yorkshire has a peculiar dialect; Lancashire, Northumberland, Cumberland, rage, theirs. The peasant of Worcestershire understands not him of Wiltshire; and still less can he of the latter country hold any intelligible communication with the cockney. In the isle of Cambridge, if you talk good English to a laboring man or small farmer, they touch their hats, tug forelock, and passing on in evident reluctance to continue the conversation, avow themselves to be "no scholars." In Scotland the dialects, and especially the lowrings, are as various as in England. Your native of Aberdeen understands not him of Glasgow; and your Paisley humbug, learned in politics, and canting of the loom, gapes, stares, and looks unutterable astonishment, when he is addressed by a man of Tweeddale. The Irish are more uniform in their dialect than they speak English; the thing chiefly remarkable in them being the accent. All this is notorious, but not so much as the fact that we have in the two islands demonstrated Great Britain and Ireland, five distinct languages cut up into so many dialects that it would be endless to enumerate them. There is the English language, properly so called; the Scotch language, and there are the Gaelic, the Welsh, and the Irish languages.—Edinburgh Scotsman.

The Sovereignty of Europe.—An amusing letter, written by Jefferson, to a friend of his, formerly governor of New Hampshire, relates to the Europ an monarchs, his friends and acquaintance, and speaks pretty freely of them in the following passage about Louis XIV. was a fool, of my own knowledge, and in despite of the answers made for him at his tal. The king of Spain was a fool, of Naples the same. They passed their time in hunting, and despatched two couriers a week, one thousand miles, to let each other know what game they had killed the preceding days. The king of Sardinia was a fool. All three were Bourbons. The queen of Portugal, a Braganza, was an idiot by nature. And so was the king of Denmark. Their sons as regents, exercised the powers of government. The king of Prussia, successor to the great Frederick, was a mere hog in body as well as mind. Gustavus of Sweden, and Joseph of Austria, were really crazy, and George of England, you know, was in a straight waistcoat. There remained, then, none but old Catherine, who had been too lately picked up to have lost her common sense. In this state Buonaparte found Europe, and it was this state of the others which lost it with scarce a struggle. These animals had become without mind and powerless, and so will every hereditary monarch be after a few generations. Alexander, the grandson of Catherine, is yet an exception. He is able to hold his own. But he is only of the third generation. His reign can not yet worn out. "And so endeth the Book of Kings, from all of which the Lord deliver us."

DIED—Yesterday morning, Mr James Taylor, [illegible] aged about 23 years.

[illegible] he deceased was a native of England, whence he emigrated at an early age with his parents to Montreal, in Canada, where he was raised and educated. He was equally distinguished for skill in his profession and for kindness and manliness of disposition.

His remains were attended to their last abode by his typographical brethren, and a large concourse of acquaintances and friends.

We beg the editors of the Montreal papers to copy the above.

Yesterday afternoon, at 5 o'clock, after a lingering illness, which terminated in the prevailing epidemic, Mr. Ronald Hall, of Memphis, Tennessee. His friends are requested to attend his funeral this morning, at 10 o'clock. Carriages will be in waiting at the St. Charles Hotel.

☞ LANDING from ship Chester from Liverpool, 10 Aug, not last, with the steamer Empress, I found on board a yellow woman, of about 35 years of age, having free jejers. She stated she was raised in Cincinnati, but after questioning her, I found that she knows nothing about that city. Suspecting that she is not really free, I have caused her to be lodged in jail at St. Louis. The said yellow woman has lost one of her upper front teeth, is small size, and not very bright.
