BOA CONSTRICTCR AT LARGE.

A boarding-house in New Orleans recently witnessed a sensation in the escape of a huge boa constrictor which escaped from his cage. The alarm was given by a boy, and when the proprietors reached the room they found the reptile coiled on the bedpost and window, his head elevated fully two feet.— One of the gentlemen proposed catching him alive, and they tried fully half an hour, without success. Until he was troubled he was perfectly quiet, but on the gentleman approaching within a few feet of him, he attempted to crawl behind the canvas which formed the ceiling of the room. A slight tap with a stick brought him down again. His keeper now arrived, and attempted to catch him under a blanket. His many attempts caused the snake to become very angry, and he now repeatedly struck at whatever was presented to him. Finding his captors were getting the better of him, he dropped down in the arch over the window below, from whence he was shoved off on a clothes line stretched over the top of the balcony below, from whence he turned in to a room not so near the top of the house. Another man from the museum arrived, bringing a rope, which was thrown around his neck. But as soon as he felt it he jerked his head out of the noose as quick as thought. Soon, however, he stretched himself nearly his full length on the line, when a running bowline was dropped over his head. As soon as he felt its weight he pulled back, which only tended to tighten the noose more. He soon discovered that he was caught, and being nearly choked to death, offered no resistance, and was safely quartered in secure lodgings.

INFLUENCE OF A MOTHER.

The character of John Quincy Adams was in great part moulded through the influence of his mother. As a mother she was capable, thoughtful, energetic, and conscientious, and her son, when President of the United States, acknowledged himself chiefly indebted to his mother for those qualities, intellectual and moral, which had gained for him the respect and confidence of a nation. Her grandson, Charles Francis Adams, also brings forward her letters, prefaced with a memoir, testifying to the excellencies of her character. He says of the letters of his grandmother, "They are remarkable, because they display the readiness with which she could devote herself to the most opposite duties. She is now a farmer, cultivating the land and discussing the crops; a merchant, reporting prices current and the rates of exchange; a politician, speculating upon the probabilities of peace and war; and a mother, writing the most exalted sentiments to her son."

HOW TO TAKE A WHIPPING.

The New York Herald had for some time violently attacked a certain actress, and one day the lady's husband, himself an actor, came to the office, and called for Bennett, who invited him to take a seat. "The actor replied, "No, sir, I will not take a seat, you have insulted my wife." "Who is your wife?" and on learning the name Bennett said he had never heard of her. "But your dramatic critic has insulted her, and I hold you responsible." Thereupon he took the proprietor from his chair by the throat, rolled him on the floor, kicked him and left. Bennett wrote out a sensation account of the affair, and had placards posted, with headings, "Atrocious Assault"" and in his paper added a little garnish, saying, "We would have forgiven this unmannerly assault had not the wretch the unspeakable meanness to take up a quarter from the table and pocket it." The next evening, when the actor appeared on the stage he was greeted with cries of "Who stole Bennett's quarter?" and whenever he reappeared the same cry greeted him, until he and his wife were driven off the stage and ruined. "That," says Bennett, "was my revenge."

MAINE.

My Native State, I love thee well,
The lofty hill, the shady dell,
The laughing streams, with dimples rare,
Made sweet by drinking mountain air.

I love thy large and moss-bound rocks,
Thy pastures teeming, with white flocks;
Thy trees, which fanned by freshest breeze,
So gracefully incline at ease.

O, would I were a child again,
Could breathe the mountain air the same;
Could sit by yonder streamlet's side,
Ignorant of woes that e'er betide.

Nor should it be considered vain
Because I love this State, called Maine;
'Twas here, my mother gave me birth,
'Tis here she lies 'neath the cold earth.

If I, in distant land do roam—
Should I, with strangers find a home—
Or, whatsoe'er shall be my fate,
May I rest at last in my native State.

A HAIRY SHOPKEEPER.

Upon the banks of the Mississippi, in the state of Tennessee, there once dwelt an old chap by the name of Tom Yades. Tom had been an honest, hard working man all his life, but he had never owned a saddle. As he grew older, his wealth and importance increased, and with it the desire for a hog-skin ; so he one day packed a clean shirt and a hundred dollars into his wallet, stepped upon a steamboat, and away he started down the river to New Orleans, to buy him a saddle. Now this was the first trip Tom had ever made, having lived all his life where he was born, and never heard any other language than that of his mother tongue. In a few days he landed at New Orleans.

Poor Tom little knew what he had to encounter. The Frenchman was there, the Italian was there, the Spaniard was there, some from all parts of the world were crowded upon the levee; and there was Tom, with his eyes stretched and ears open, mystified and bewildered at the strange jargon going on around him; he stood as long as mortal man well could, and at last struck out, with his mind fully prepared to be surprised at nothing he saw, upon his errand of his saddle.

After wandering about the city for some time, he at length found a saddle shop.

Tom, elated, walked in.

The first and only living creature which met his vision was a baboon of the largest species, sitting upon the counter, playing with the girths which hung from the saddle immediately over his head.— Tom very politely addressed him,

"How do you do, sir?"

The baboon grinned and nodded.

"I wish to buy a saddle," says Tom.

The same expression from the baboon. In a louder key from Tom—

"I want to buy a saddle."

A very polite grin from the baboon.

"I will give you twenty dollars for the saddle," says Tom, at the same time handing him a twenty dollar bill.

The animal having seen his master put money into the drawer, took it, and hopping along the counter, made a deposit of Tom's twenty dollar note. He returned, however, immediately to his former position.

"Well, hand us down the pig skin."

Very little notice from the baboon.

"Hang it, why don't you give me my saddle? I have paid you for it, so hand it over or I will take it myself."

An awful chattering from the baboon.

Tom, not intending to be fooled with any longer, reached out to take hold of his property; but no sooner had the poor fellow done so than the nails and teeth of the baboon were driven into his arm. Tom kicked and swore, the baboon bit and screamed, until at last the owner of the shop, a Frenchman with a long moustache, came rushing into the room.

"What you do sare? What do you want in here, you old rascal? By gar, you shall give me satisfaction."

Tom not in the least daunted, but exasperated, ripped out,

"You infernal old hairy mouth! I believe you wish to steal my twenty dollars. I came in here, bought a saddle, and paid the money down for it; and now when I want to be going with it, your son here has refused to let me have it, and kicked up a fuss about it."

Tom, however, got his saddle, and returned next morning in the boat going up the river; but he has been heard to say that it was the last he ever wished to purchase.

Pine apples in Paris are made from turnips, and are said to be delicious. The turnips are saturated with an appropriate syrup, which confectioners know very well how to manufacture, and the French journals say the pine apple "is destined to become a success."

THE BROTHERS.

In 1849, the Nim de Oro gambling saloon in San Francisco was the principal resort of the disbanded soldiers of the California regiments, and also of the soldiers that had been engaged in the Mexican war. Behind one of the largest monte banks in the room sat a man who had won for himself honorable mention, and an officer's commission was given to him for bravery at the storming of Monterey; but preferring the climate of California and its golden prospects to a more northern home, he embarked for that country, and on arriving opened a gambling saloon. Emigrants came in by thousands, and a few nights after his arrival a young man entered the saloon and seated himself at the bank, and staked various sums upon the cards until he had lost nearly all the money that he possessed.

Excited by the play, and maddened with his losses, he accused the dealer of cheating. The dealer replied sharply to the accusation, when the young man struck the dealer a severe blow upon the face. Quick as thought the sharp report of a pistol followed, and the gambler's clothing was covered with the young man's blood; he had shot him through the right breast. The room was cleared of the spectators present, the door closed, and medical attendance called in to aid the wounded man.

The gambler sat moodily over his bank, running the small monte-cards through his fingers, and perhaps thinking of the deed just perpetrated, when the wounded man gave a groan of agony as the doctor's probe reached to the bottom of the wound. The doctor inquired what State he was from, and the wounded man replied, "from Vermont."

The gambler raised his head, for it had been a long time since he had seen a person from the home of his childhood, and Vermont being the name of his native State, the mere mention of the name interested him.

The doctor next inquired the name of the place where his parents resided, if he had any. The wounded man replied,—"Montpelier."

The gambler sprang to his feet, his limbs trembled, and his face was as pale as death, for Montpelier was the home of his youth, and perhaps the wounded man might have been his playmate in childhood. He clung convulsively to the table, and, with the contending emotions of rapid thought, he could scarcely keep upon his feet.

A stimulant was given to the wounded man, and he was momentarily relieved from that weakness the body is so subject to after a severe wound, when the doctor inquired if there was any friend in the city he wished to send for.

"Yes," he replied, "my wife. She is at the City Hotel. Tell Mary to hasten, for I am badly hurt."

A man was sent to bring his wife.

"Doctor," said the gambler, "save that man's life, and there is my bank and $10,000 beside, and you shall have it all."

The doctor felt the pulse of the man, and probed the wound anew. The gambler watched him with great anxiety until the inspection was finished, when the doctor shook his head in token of impossibility. The gambler sat by the side of the wounded man, bathed his head, and staunched the flow of blood from the wound, until the arrival of his wife.— She came, accompanied by a few friends, and as heroic women bear their misfortunes, she bore hers. Not a word of reproach escaped her; words of cheerfulness only came from her lips as tears coursed down her cheeks. To her inquiries as to the chances of her husband's recovery, the doctor assured her there was no hope, that the wound was mortal and that in a few hours the man must die. She sank down upon her knees, and invoked the mercy of a forgiving God upon her dying husband and his murderer.

The gambler knelt at the side of the wounded man, asked his forgiveness for the wrong he had committed, also that of his wife. "This," said he, "is the consequence of disobeying the sacred injunctions of my aged father and mother. I have faced death a thousand times, and still I have escaped; the balls of an enemy have whistled past my ears as thick as hailstones, and the bursting bomb has exploded at my feet. Still I have lived, and for this! High above the red field of battle I have carried my country's ensign, and that won for me a name among men. When not one of my comrades was left to tell of the battle I escaped unscathed. Why was I not killed with the rest? All that was proud and pleasing to man I have had; and if I could recall this last act by living upon carrion, sleeping in a pauper's grave, and renouncing every proud act of my life, I would do it. I was born in the same village with that man; we were born beneath the same roof, and the same mother gave us birth! He must not die; he is my brother!" And the gambler sunk down in a swoon upon the floor.

The wounded man raised himself upon his elbows; his glazed eyes wandered about the room, as if searching for some one.

"Mary," said he, "is my brother William here? I—"

The words choked in his throat, the gurgling blood stopped his utterance, and he sank back a corpse upon his pillow.

The gambler awoke from his swoon, staggered up to the wife, and said,

"Mary, I have nothing to live for now; take this certificate of deposit to our aged father, and tell our parents we are both dead; but oh, do not tell them how we died!"

Before the woman could reply or any one interfere, the report of a pistol sounded again, and the fratricide had ceased to live.

On the hill near Guicon Point were two graves a few years ago, enclosed with a picket fence, and one tombstone at their head, with the simple inscription, "BROTHERS."

JEFF DAVIS IN CANADA.

The manner in which Jeff Davis passes his time in Canada, and the estimation in which he is held by the Canadians, are thus described by a correspondent:

July 18th it was announced in Montreal that ex-President Davis would be at the Theatre Royal to witness the performance for the benefit of the Southern Relief Association. At the close of the first act Jeff, accompanied by his youngest son and three female members of his family, quietly entered and took seats in the dress circle. The theatre was densely crowded with the elite of the city, and no sooner were the Davis party seen than the entire audience rose and cheered him at the top of their voices; then came calls for the Bonnie Blue Flag, Dixie, and other rebel airs. One of the more excitable auditors shouted so as to be heard above the tumult, "We shall live to see the South a nation yet," when there was a fervent amen. Davis rose to his feet and bowed his acknowledgment, when another outburst ensued, and the excitement continued for nearly half an hour before the audience was calmed.

I was fortunate enough to have a seat within a few feet of the American archtraitor, from which I could notice his movements. He wore a suit of plain black, and during the evening dangled a broad brimmed white felt hat on a slender yellow cane. His hair and beard are fast turning white; his face was haggard and careworn, while his entire looks and demeanor showed an old and broken down man. Not even the wild cheering of the crowd moved him to smiles, and it was not until the play drew towards its close that his face showed a pleasurable emotion. He held no conversation, and barely answered questions that were asked him, or took some friend by the hand who chanced to present himself.

At the close of the last piece Mr. Davis and his family left the dress circle and passed out to the carriage in waiting. A large crowd had gathered at the door and gave him three deafening cheers. Just as the carriage was leaving an unknown person, observed only by a few, stepped up and handed Mr. Davis a note, which he carried to his home. Opening it, it was found to contain the single word, written in a bold hand, "Andersonville." This, it is said, went like a dagger to his heart, and for some time his home was the scene of the greatest consternation. The ladies screamed and Mr. Davis himself came near fainting.

The Canadians are unmistakably in a full sympathy with Davis and his followers, as they were before the close of the rebellion. They speak of him as the President, and mourn with the South at its failure to establish a despotism. It was not a mere compliment that they had paid Davis in the theatre, but a free and full expression of sympathy with him and his deluded followers. The friends of Davis have purchased a house for him in one of the most aristocratic streets in the city, near Montreal Mountain, and he contemplates making this his future home.

Had Jeff. Davis been the savior of their country, those friendly Canadians could scarcely have been more demonstrative in their veneration and enthusiasm. Indeed, the toadyish, sycophantic spirit manifested by the leaders was nauseating in the extreme. The Americans who witness these scenes, which are frequently transpiring, can scarcely restrain an expression of their disgust and indignation.

RECOLLECTIONS OF EARLY ANTI-SLAVERY REFORMERS.

BY REV. SAMUEL J. MAY.

Miss Prudence Crandall and the Canterbury School.

Often, during the last thirty, and more often during the last ten years, you must have seen in the newspapers, or heard from speakers in Anti-slavery and Republican meetings, high commendations of the County of Windham in connecticut, as bearing the banner of equal human and political rights far above all the rest of that State. In the great election of last year the people of that county gave a large majority of votes in favor of negro suffrage.

This moral and political elevation of the public sentiment there is undoubtedly owing to the distinct presentation and thorough discussion throughout that region, of the most vital anti-slavery questions in 1833 and 1834, called out by the shameful, cruel persecution of Miss Prudence Crandall, for attempting to establish in Canterbury a boarding school for "colored young ladies and little misses."

I was then living in Brooklyn, the shire town of the county, six miles from the immediate scene of the violent conflict; and so was fully drawn into it. I regret that, in the following account of it, allusion to myself and my acts must so often appear. But as Æneas said to Queen Dido, in telling his story of the Trojan War, so may I say, respecting the contest about the Canterbury school, "All of which I saw, and part of which I was."

In the summer or fall of 1832, I heard that Miss Prudence Crandall, an excellent, well educated Quaker young lady, who had gained considerable reputation as a teacher in the neighboring town of Plainfield, had been induced by a number of ladies and gentlemen of Canterbury to purchase a commodious, large house in their pretty village, and establish her boarding and day school there, that their daughters might receive instruction in several higher branches of education not taught in the public district schools, without being obliged to live far away from their homes.

For a while the school answered the expectations of its patrons, and enjoyed their favor. But early in the following year a trouble arose. It was in this wise. Not far from the village of Canterbury, there lived a worthy colored man named Harris. He was the owner of a good farm, and was otherwise in comfortable circumstances. He had a daughter—Sarah—a bright girl about seventeen years of age. She had passed, with good repute as a scholar, through the school of the district, in which she lived, and was hungering and thirsting for more education. This she desired not only for her own sake, but that she might go forth qualified to be a teacher of the colored people of our country, to whose wrongs and oppression she had become very sensitive. Her father encouraged her, and gladly offered to defray the expense of the advantages she might be able to obtain. Sarah applied for admission into this new Canterbury school. Miss Crandall confessed to me that at first she hesitated and almost refused, lest admitting her might offend the parents of her pupils, several of whom were Colonizationists, but none of them Abolitionists. But Sarah urged her request with no little force of argument and strength of feeling. Then she was a young lady of pleasing appearance and manners, well known to many of Miss C.'s pupils, having been their class-mate in the district school. Moreover she was accounted a virtuous, pious girl, and had been for some time a member of the church of Canterbury. There could not therefore have been a more unexceptionable case. No objection could be made to her admission into the school, excepting only her dark (and not very dark) complexion. Miss Crandall soon saw that she was unexpectedly called to take some part (how important she could not foresee) in the great contest for impartial liberty that was then beginning to agitate violently our nation. She was called to act either in accordance with, or in opposition to the unreasonable, cruel, wicked prejudice against the color of their victims, by which the oppressors of millions in our land were everywhere extenuating, if not justifying their tremendous system of iniquity. She bowed to the claim of humanity and admitted Sarah Harris to her school.

Her pupils, I believe, made no objection. But in a few days the parents of some of them called and remonstrated. Miss Crandall pressed upon their consideration Sarah's eager desire for more knowledge and culture; the good use she intended to make of her acquirements; her excellent character and lady-like deportment; and more than all, that she was an accepted member of the same Christian church to which many of them belonged. Her arguments, her entreaties however were of no avail. Prejudice blinds the eyes, closes the ears, hardens the heart. "Sarah belonged to the proscribed, despised class, and therefore must not be admitted into a private school with their daughters." This was the gist of all they had to say. Reasons were thrown away: appeals to their sense of right, to their compassion for injured fellow beings, made no impression. "They would not have it said, that their daughters went to school with a nigger girl." Miss Crandall was assured that, if she did not dismiss Sarah Harris, her white pupils would be withdrawn from her. She could not make up her mind to comply with such a demand, even to save the institution she had so recently established with such fond hopes, and in which she had invested all her property, and a debt of several hundred dollars more. It was indeed a severe trial; but she was strengthened to bear it. She determined to act right, and leave the event with God. Accordingly she gave notice to her neighbors, and on the 2d day of March advertised in the Liberator, that at the commencement of her next Term, on the first Monday of April, her school would be opened for "young ladies and little misses of color."

Only a few days before, on the 27th of February, I was informed of her generous, disinterested determination; and heard that, in consequence, the whole town was in a flame of indignation, kindled and fanned by the influence of the prominent people of the village, her immediate neighbors and her late patrons. Without delay therefore, although a stranger, I addressed a letter to her, assuring her of my sympathy, and of my readiness to help her all in my power. On the 4th of March her reply came, begging me to come to her so soon as my engagement would permit. Accompanied by my friend, Mr. George W. Benson, I went to Canterbury on the afternoon of the day. On entering the village we were warned that we should be in personal danger if we appeared there as Miss Crandall's friends; and when arrived at her house, we learnt that the excitement against her had become furious. She had been grossly insulted, and threatened with various kinds of violence if she persisted in her purpose: and the most egregious falsehoods had been put in circulating respecting her intentions, the characters of her expected pupils, and of the future supporters of her school. Moreover, we were informed that a town meeting was to be held on the 9th inst. to devise and adopt such measures as "would effectually avert the nuisance, or speedily abate it, if it should be brought into the village."

Though beat upon by such a storm we found Miss C. resolved and tranquil. The effect of her Quaker discipline appeared in every word she spoke, and in every expression of her countenance. But, as she said, it would not do for her to go into the town-meeting, and there was not a man in Canterbury who would dare, if he were disposed, to appear there in her behalf. "Will not you, friend May, be my attorney?" "Certainly, I replied, "come what will." We then agreed that I should explain to the people how unexpectedly she had been led to take the step which had given so much offence; and show them how she could not have consented to the demand made by her former patrons without wounding deeply the feelings of an excellent girl, known to most of them, adding to the mountain load of injuries and insults already heaped upon the colored people of our country. With this arrangement, we left her, to wait the coming of the ominous meeting of the town.

On the 9th of March I repaired again to Miss Crandall's house, accompanied by my faithful friend, Mr. Benson. There, to our surprise and joy, we found Friend Arnold Buffum, a a most worthy man, an able speaker, and then the principal lecturing agent of the New England Anti-Slavery Society. Miss C. gave to each of us a respectful letter of introduction to the moderator of the meeting, in which she requested that we might be heard as her attorneys, and promised to be bound by any agreement we might see fit to make with the citizens of Canterbury. Miss C. concurred with us in the opinion that, as her house was one of the most conspicuous in the village, and not wholly paid for, if her opponents would take it off her hands, repaying what she had given for it; cease from molesting her, and allow her time to procure another house for her school, it would be better that she should move to some more retired part of the town or neighborhood.

Thus commissioned and instructed, Friend Buffum and I proceeded to the town meeting. It was held in the meeting-house, one of the old New England pattern, galleries on three sides, with room above and below for a thousand persons, sitting and standing. We found it nearly filled to its utmost capacity, and not without difficulty we passed to our seats. After the "warning" had been read, a series of resolutions were laid before the meeting, in which were set forth the disgrace and damage that would be brought upon the town if a school for colored girls should be set up there; protesting emphatically against the impending evil, and appointing the civil authority and selectmen a committee to wait upon "the person contemplating the establishment of said school, point out to her the injurious effects, the incalculable evils resulting from such an establishment within this town, and persuade her, if possible, to abandon the project." The mover of the resolutions, Rufus Adams, esq., labored to enforce them by a speech, in which he grossly misrepresented what Miss Crandall had done, her sentiments and purposes; and threw out several mean and low insinuations against the motives of those who were encouraging her enterprise.

As soon as he sat down, the Hon. Andrew T. Judson rose. This gentleman was undoubtedly the chief of Miss C.'s persecutors. He was the great man of the town, a leading politician in the State, much talked of for Governor, and was afterwards appointed Judge of the U. S. District Court. His house on Canterbury Green stood next to Miss Crandall's. The idea of having a school of negro girls so near to him was insupportable. He vented himself in a strain of reckless hostility to his neighbor, her benevolent, self-sacrificing undertaking and its patrons, and declared his determination to thwart the enterprise.

When he had ended his phillippic, Mr. Buffum and I silently presented to the Moderator Miss Crandall's letters, requesting that we might be heard on her behalf. He handed them over to Mr. Judson, who instantly broke forth with greater violence than before; accused us of insulting the town by coming there to interfere with its local concerns. Other gentlemen sprang to their feet in hot displeasure, poured out their tirades upon Miss C. and her accomplices, and with fists doubled in our faces roughly admonished us that if we opened our lips there they would inflict upon us the utmost penalty of the law, if not a more immediate vengeance.

Thus forbidden to speak, we of course sat in silence, and let the waves of invective and abuse dash over us. But we sat thus only until we heard from the Moderator the words, "This meeting is adjourned!" Knowing that now we should violate no law by speaking, I sprang to the seat on which I had been sitting, and cried out, "Men of Canterbury I have a word for you; hear me!" More than half the crowd turned to listen. I went rapidly over my replies to the misstatements that had been made as to the purposes of Miss Crandall and her friends, the characters of her expected pupils, and the spirit in which the enterprise had been conceived and would be carried on. As soon as possible I gave place to Friend Buffum. But he had spoken in his impressive manner hardly five minutes, before the trustees of the church to which the house belonged came in and ordered all out, that the doors might be shut. Here again the hand of the law constrained us. So we obeyed with the rest, and having lingered awhile upon the Green to answer questions and explain to those who were willing "to understand the matter," we departed to our homes, musing in our own hearts, "what would come of this day's uproar."

—A Saratoga correspondent speaks of a young man at one of the hotels there who never felt so much like an aristocrat as when being brushed. He obtained twenty five dollars' worth of new quarters at the sub-treasury, and every time he was brushed he handed one of these forth from his waistcoat pocket. He was brushed everywhere. The waiters watched him, lay in wait for him, quarrelled with each other for possession of him. They never brushed him anywhere but in the small of his back and on the knees of his pantaloons. The result was that in three days those portions of his attire were threadbare. He gave notice at the office of his departure for home. He had just money enough left to pay expenses, and he was brushed to the last; brushed into the cars. The waiters found that they had received $21.25 for brushing that unfortunate man.

THE WEYMOUTH GAZETTE.

THURSDAY, AUG. 3, 1867.

In our last paper it was stated on the authority of the Boston papers, that General B. F. Pratt had been appointed to a position in the Custom House, in place of E. F. E. Thayer, removed. As the article was erroneous in its particulars we give the facts, which have come to our knowledge. Capt. Dennis Cowdry, who was in the Inspectors' Department in the Custom House, and commanded a gun boat during the war, was appointed a store keeper in place of Mr. E. F. E. Thayer, of Braintree, removed. General Pratt was appointed to the office held by Capt. Cowdry, which was made vacant by his appointment as above.

Temperance Science.—State Constable Jos. Porter has been on the track of some of the expressmen between here and Boston, who were suspected of transporting liquor, but his efforts proved unsuccessful till Friday last, when he went into Boston and followed one of them into various places of business. Discovering that packages of liquor were among the expressman's purchases, Mr. Porter then started for Neponset and waylaid this and other teams, seizing two or three kegs and a number of jugs, all of which were delivered to Constable Garey, who deposited them in the liquor depot, corner of Washington and Front streets.

A State Constable in Plymouth co. met with a slight rebuff a few days since in his endeavors to ferret out liquor carriers.—A well known tripe dealer had a number of jugs of vinegar in his wagon, and seeing the officer approaching hastily covered the jugs as though something contraband was contained in them. The constable, unconscious of the joke reined up and inquired of the pedlar what he had in the jugs. The reply was—"None of your business." He then ordered the man to stop, but to this he demurred, and drove rapidly on, followed by the constable, and leading him some three miles in the chase before he gave him an opportunity to discover his mistake.

A committee of ladies having charge of contemplated improvements in the church at South Scituate, after examining the frescoes of several suburban churches around Boston and in this vicinity, have come to the conclusion that the frescoing in the Baptist edifice at Weymouth Landing is superior to any that they have yet seen, and it will probably be adopted as a model for their church.

An alarm of fire on Saturday evening arose from the burning of a small barn in the rear of Stetson's wheelwright shop at the Landing. The fire was speedily subthued by the members of the Amazon company. It is supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

The stable of Caleb Stetson Esq. in East Braintree, was struck by lightning on Thursday last, but was saved from damage by the conductors, which carried off the charge. A horse in the stable bled at the nose freely after the shock, but appeared to have received no serious injury.

At the adjourned parish meeting of the 1st Universalist Society on Monday evening, it was decided to procure a new organ, at an expense of $1500, to be paid for by subscription, and the Committee have contracted with Geo. Stevens & Co. of East Cambridge, for the same.

Base Ball.—A match game was played at Weymouth Landing on Saturday last by the second nine of the Liberty Square Club of South Weymouth and the second nine of the Excelsior Club of Weymouth, resulting in victory for the Liberty Square Club. The following is the score.

Outs and Runs:—Liberty Square,—Shaw, C. 2-7; J. Callanan, P. 2-7; E. Nash, S.S, 3-6; Cushing, 1st B, 3-6; Tirrell, C, F. 3-5; Stetson, 2d B, 4-5; C. Meritt, 3d B, 1-7; J. Merritt, L. F, 4-5; Hawes, R, F, 5-3; total, 27-51.

Umpire, Ezra F. Tirrell of the Mechanic Club; Scorers, J. E. Gardner for Liberty Square, Clifford Nash for Excelsiors.

A match game of base ball was played between the Shamrocks of East Abington and the Wolf Tones of East Weymouth, last Saturday, on the grounds of the Wolf Tones. Score, Wolf Tones 51, Shamrocks 21.

The Mechanics' Club of East Weymouth played a District game of base ball with the Anawon Club of Mansfield, on the grounds of the Chemung Club, Stoughton, Wednesday, July 31. Scores: Anawon, 57; Mechanics 43.

Mechanics Club of East Weymouth went to Taunton and played a match game of ball with the Metacomet Club of Taunton, on Taunton grounds, last Saturday—a District game for the silver ball.

Scores; Mechanics 38, Metacomets 25.

Independence Club, of East Weymouth went to Cohasset Saturday, and played with the Minot Club, of that place. Scores—Minot 35, Independence 25.

At a meeting of the Mount Pleasant Philiopian Cricket Club, on Monday evening last, B. F. Torrey was chosen Captain and John O. Clopy Secretary.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

Of a truth can the people of Weymouth be called church-going. Her two sanctuaries are living witnesses of her recognition of divine truths. In these modern times, our young friends especially are ever on the alert with questions; they must know the source of this, the cause of that, and the scions that issued from certain parent stock—to develop which oftimes would ruffle Job's patience and require the application and endurance of half a century to unearth. Young friends! listen a moment while we tell you about the parent stock of christianity in our smart town. Imagine yourselves at Weymouth Landing; take the road to North Weymouth, pass the lumber wharves, the old homestead of the late Hon. Cotton Tufts,—on about a mile, rise a hill approximate to the homestead of the late Capt. Joseph Loud; in full view of "King Oak Hill;" there is the site of the first church dedicated to God in Weymouth. There behold the parent church of this goodly town. It may have been remodeled and modernized, but there, on that commanding eminence, our pilgrim fathers reared the first christian temple in Weymouth.

Our memory runs back quite a number of years in the progress of religion in town. We remember when only two churches were visible in Weymouth.—Rev. Jacob Norton was pastor at said North Church; he was very orthodox.—We were a pupil when he, as chairman of school committee, urged upon our district school the importance of studying the "Assembly's Catechism." We remember his solemn mein and imposing presence, his high toned Calvinism, his impressive remarks. We remember his startling apostacy to Arminianism, his excommunication, his subsequent advocacy of the doctrine of universal salvation. We remember Rev. Josiah Bent, who succeeded Mr. Norton, and whose stay was brief. More than a quarter of a century has elapsed since Rev. Joshua Emery was installed in charge of this pioneer church, prior to which he supplied the Old South church several sabbaths.

Mr. Emery is a gentleman of rare excellence, in speech off-hand, full, clear articulation—has the happy faculty of tossing out lucid ideas, unincumbered by a double-deck freight of superlatives and expletives; carrying the auditory by scholarly concentration and combination of sentences, aptly applied to his theme. Twenty-five years service in one desk is a noble compliment, when we reflect that a major portion of our churches in [illegible] as long a tenure as our East India merchants would require for a charter voyage, out and back.

We are pleased to learn that our citizens are inaugurating measures to handsomely honor the silver wedding anniversary of Rev. James P. Terry and lady, August 16th, and that they have so far yielded to the general desire as to consent to be "at home." The reverend gentleman and his esteemed partner merit all kindness. Since their sojourn here they have sown charity broadcast, and secured the affections of the community by generous deeds. We trust that the proposed gathering will be a success, and that the recipients may attain to a golden anniversary with South Weymouth as their field of operations.

EAST WEYMOUTH.

Run Away.—As Mr. Balch and lady, of Essex street, and Mrs. Lemuel French, were riding through Broad street on Tuesday afternoon, a nut that held the shaft to the axletree became loose, causing one of them to drop on the horse's heels. The horse ran as far as the tailor's shop of Mr. Merchant, where he was stopped by a number of persons who were standing there, and the occupants of the carriage escaped without injury, though the vehicle was much injured.

Rev. Mr Toles spoke in the Congregational Church last Sabbath in the forenoon and received $172.00 for the Home for Little Wanderers in Boston—$52.00 having been given by Sabbath School to support a child one year at the Home, and the remainder being the result of a collection. The Sabbath School recently gave $20 toward building a Congregational Church in Washington.

Rev. D. W. Waldron will speak to his people in behalf of Free Churches, next Sabbath afternoon.

The silver wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. James Thomas, Jr. of Old Spain, took place last Tuesday evening. The presents were numerous. Mr. T's brothers gave a splendid cake basket, sisters and nieces a handsome picture and frame, other friends gave silver spoons, forks, castors, and many other articles. A pleasant evening was passed in singing by old acquaintances and other entertainments.

Justice's Court.—Before Humphrey J. Geo. Houghton of Braintree plead guilty of an assault on Catherine Thomas, and was sentenced to 30 days imprisonment in the House of Correction, with privilege of leaving town within 24 hours, and not return within the above time.—E. C. Bumpus for complainant, Asa French for deft.

OUR HOUSES OF WORSHIP.

AN ESSAY BY REV. S. E. ROCKWOOD.

Delivered at the Meeting of the Sunday School Association at South Weymouth, July 28, 1867.

SUBJECT:—Are our houses of worship as accessible to the poor as they ought to be? and if not, what changes should be made, in order that this class may have an opportunity to hear the Gospel?

We must admit that our present system of having our houses of worship divided off into pews, and owned by individuals, for their own exclusive use, is a wide departure from primitive usage. The idea of such an appropriation of parts of the temple at Jerusalem would have been deemed a profanation. The same would have been true of the ancient Jewish synagogues, and equally so of the houses or rooms used by the primitive christians as places for public worship. A close inspection of the early town records of this Commonwealth will show that there was nothing of the kind known in the early history of this country.

Take a single illustration. In the records of one of our contiguous towns we read, "At ye town meeting held Nov. 25, 1689, it was voted to raise £300 to erect a meeting house." Again we read, "At ye meeting April 8, 1695, it was voted to raise £5 for seats for general use in ye meeting house." Again, in 1705, it was voted "to raise £20 for the building of permanent seats in the body of the meeting-house, and that Col. — and Esq.— have leave to inclose or build pews for the use of their families, in or near the northwest corner of the house, under the care of the committee appointed to erect the body seats."

The records show that from that time onward, one after another obtained leave and built for themselves pews in the meeting-house. But it should be remembered that a large portion of the house was occupied by or filled with body seats, and these seats were free to all, and were located in the most desirable part of the house, and also the seats in the galleries of the house were free. It was the few who had pews, and these were excluded from the most favorable positions in the house.

In those days the meeting-house was built and sustained by the town, precinct, or parish. The public seats were furnished by the town, and were equally accessible to all the people. Those who had pews were at the expense of building them, after being at their proportionate expense for furnishing seats for the public.

Something like this was well nigh the universal usage in the early days of New England. The poorest man in the community felt that he had as good a right to a good seat in the meeting-house, and was at home there as much as he feels today, that he has a right to an entrance into the town-house and to the ballot-box. Our meeting-houses were then town-houses. The civil law required men to attend public worship. In these circumstances the people were brought generally to hear the gospel, and our meeting-houses were as accessible to the poor, the very poorest of the poor, as they were to the richest man of the community. It was then no additional expense to attend public worship.

But a great change has come over the community. The social element is strong in the English character; I mean, rather, the love of the family. Old England made the family institution prominent.—Our fathers coming to this country were not mere adventurers; they brought their families with them. They came for their sakes more than their own. They loved home; they were seeking better homes for their families. Under such discipline they esteemed their homes higher than any other people on the face of the earth. They loved to worship God not only at the family altar, but to join in public worship with their own families immediately around them.

It is the strong love of home that so nobly characterizes the English people, carried with them into the sanctuary.—There is nothing like this in the German or French character, and more especially in the latter. Their language has no word to express our idea of home. The natural result of this is, we have for our families a little room, or house, in the house of worship, so open that we may feel that we have intercourse with or communion with all around us, and so separate that we feel we are specially near our loved ones. This gives an additional sacredness to the social tie, and fosters the love of home. So the pew has come to be an institution in houses of public worship, in New England more especially, and wherever the New England spirit goes.

This carrying of the family sympathy into the sanctuary, while it has its advantages, is attended with some evils, and these are great. It becomes more difficult to bring the poor, the outcasts of society, those who if they come to the house of God at all must come alone.—For these and similar reasons, public worship in our sanctuaries has well nigh ceased to have any aggressive power for the evangelization of the community at large. It may be well adapted to the religious culture—I may say, the very highest social, moral and religious culture of a people already evangelized. But without something more than this, with the change that has come over us, in the coming in of a large and continually increasing foreign population, we shall have, unless some effectual remedy is devised, a heathen community arise in the immediate vicinity of the house whose spire points to heaven, and where the gospel of salvation is preached.

I have not touched at all upon the expense of these pews. This is a matter worthy of being considered. Seats may be sufficiently cheap in some of our houses, so that they are within the reach of the poorest. But it is not so in all our churches. Many young men and women excuse themselves for not attending public worship because they cannot afford to pay a sum yearly, ranging any where from five to fifty dollars, for a single seat in some pew, among strangers.

What then? Shall we abolish the old family pew? Shall we fill our meeting houses with free seats, equally accessible to all? This has been most thoroughly tried by our Methodist brethren. One of their prominent men in his autobiography, says: "The pew system is inevitably at war with the best interests of the church, for no honorable, high minded man who is poor, and unable to buy or rent a pew, but will feel himself degraded to intrude into a pewed church; and that form of worship adopted in any church which goes to exclude the poor, contravenes the divine law, and prevents the realization of that blessed news that God has provided for the poor. Fifty years ago there was not a member or preacher among the thousands in the M. E. Church that thought of having pewed churches. But since the church has become wealthy this system of pewed churches is fast becoming the order of the day."

But strong as the opposition was to dividing the house of worship into pews, and having them owned by individuals, among our Methodist brethren, who were able to maintain that system, if any Protestant denomination could do it, the Methodist would have his family about him in the house of God, and the question is settled.

Much as we may desire free churches, we shall never have them generally till a way is invented to harmonize in one the continued existence of family pews with free seats. There is an air about our houses of worship that makes them very attractive to us. Their appropriate style of architecture within and without, the simple decorations of the walls, the pulpit, the organ, the family seat! all are pleasant to the christian family. But there is a class that will not come to these attractive, lovely places of worship. What, then, is to be done? "If the mountain will not come to Mahomet, why then, Mahomet must go to the mountain." That is the solution of the whole question.

The first thing to be done is to evangelize all this class; to make them desire to find an access to the house of worship and then we shall easily meet that want. Our churches must live for something beside merely to live. It must be the settled conviction of their members that the church, in its organized capacity, receives the Savior's command to preach the Gospel and disciple all nations. The church is organized to help individuals do this work and to see that it is done. The church must be not merely a peaceful body, but an aggressive body. Let us have order and system; but do not stand more upon form and order than you do upon life and truth.

The gospel must be preached by some body, whether apostolic hands have been laid upon him or not. We hail, therefore, all lay preachers who, with the love of Christ in their hearts and the knowledge of the truth in their heads, can help forward the work. The gospel must be preached in the way and where men will hear it. If they will not hear it in our elegant houses of worship, then beside its being preached here, let it be preached by the members of our churches going into all the families and conversing with the people, and holding neighborhood meetings. Let the church establish mission stations and have them open to all, and let there be preaching wherever the people can be induced to attend.

While everything should be done decently and in order, let us not be afraid of getting out of the ruts. The prophets, while they held on to all that was good in the old, were constantly doing something new. Christ himself was a great innovator. The apostles were accused of turning the world upside down. Edwards, Whitfield and Hopkins were new light men in their day. Do not be afraid of a thing, if it be good, because it is new, nor reject a thing simply because it is old. But see to it that the gospel is carried to and urged upon the people—upon all the people.—If it cannot be done in the best way, according to our theory, let it be done in the next best; at least let it be done in some way, though it be very far from the best. I am not in favor of recommending our churches generally to dispense with one of the two regular services of the Sabbath, and having the Sabbath School take its place. Yet where everything favors—where the superintendent and pastor can work together, the superintendent alive to his work, the pastor performing a service in the school, that may be a very familiar mode of preaching. Such a school may do a mission work, train up multitudes from without, and bring them to be attendants at public worship and liberal supporters of the gospel.

Let there be more preaching at mission stations, or even in our streets, and let gospel truth on the printed page be put into every family; let every member of the church feel that if there be one within the reach of his influence not a true christian; if the gospel has not been carried to him and urged upon him with love, the blood of one soul, at least, rests upon his skirts. Neither the church or the Sabbath School stands between him and that person to take the responsibility from him.

And when all is done—whatever our houses of worship may be—let those who are able, see that in some way the poorest are provided with good pews or seats; let their want be met as promptly as would be the want for bread. It is a shame, if there be one who would attend public worship, and is kept from so doing because he cannot provide for a good seat and no christian provides one for him.

But no one rule can be adopted for all places, except it be that christians should love the Lord's work and do good as they have opportunity. Those who worship in our churches must be courteous to any who may come in from without to worship with them. In many of our churches there is too much of the feeling, this pew is mine, it is for my use. Let us put away all this spirit, and be earnest to work for God. Make all the sacrifices we can, help others all we can, and our houses of worship will be far more accessible to the poor; and the poor, feeling that they are loved and cared for, will desire to find access to these houses of worship; then God will verify his promise, "My name shall be great among the Gentiles, and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering."

NORTH WEYMOUTH.

North Weymouth Social Choir.—The North Weymouth Social Choir, or (as it is sometimes called,) the Old Glee Club, made their annual excursion to the Centre House, Nantasket Beach, on Thursday of last week. The party, with their invited guests, numbered some 140 persons. The day was spent in fishing, bowling, singing, &c. At about 5 P. M. the company sat down to as fine a dinner as any one could wish for, prepared under the direction of Mr. Zenas Loring, of the Centre House.

After dinner speeches were made by several gentlemen, and the following sentiments were also offered, W. W. Barker, Esq. acting as toast-master, in place of F. B. Bates, who to all human appearance was too full for utterance.

1st sentiment, Physicians.—Their work to heal the maladies of the body; a Christ-like work, for our Savior spoke a word and wrought miracles for the healing of the sick, while he flowed out his life's blood for the maladies of the souls of men. Responded to by Dr. Forsaith, of Weymouth Landing.

2. Wit and Music.—They answer the same purpose that a fire does in a damp house, dispersing chills, drying up mould and making all wholesome and cheerful. Response by the Club, singing "Land of our Fathers."

3. Music and Theology.—Twin sisters; the only arts which can soothe the soul, and drive away the influences of evil.—Very ably responded to by Hon. John W. Loud, of Weymouth Landing.

4. Music.—It refines and cultivates the taste, revives pleasant memories and associations, and provides entertainment superior to many of great pretensions. Responded to by the Club singing "God is Love."

5. The Clergy.—They are like locomotives, because we have to look out for them when the bell rings. Responded to by Rev. D. W. Waldron, of East Weymouth.

It may be of interest to the many readers of the Gazette to know something of this time honored institution, and by the kindness of Mr. Cottington Nash, the Secretary, I am permitted to make the following extract from the records:

January 14th, 1839, the following persons met at the store of Messrs. Nash & Bates, for the purpose of forming a glee club, viz.: Wm. O. Nash, Francis B. Bates, George Dyer, Robert B. Raymond, Caleb P. Joy, Daniel P. Nash, and Wm. Harrington.

The above persons formed a Club, and after choosing its officers adjourned to the evening of Jan. 21st, at the Middle St. school-house when Miss Lovina P. Nash and Miss Belinda P. Pratt were admitted as members. The Club continued to meet about once in two weeks, each night new members being added, and is now, as ever, active in its work of promoting the spirit of "harmony" in our community.

Many changes, of course, have occurred in the twenty-eight years of time. Some have left the Club, new members have joined, while others have gone the way of all the earth. Of the latter, I find by the record that the first member which the Club lost by death was Mr. George Dyer, who died in Sept., 1849. Since that time the following have also died: Daniel P. Nash, Stephen W. Dyer, George H. French, Mrs. Anselia Burrell, and Mrs. Ruth Lincoln.

The Social Choir now numbers about 25 members, among whom may be named Wm. O. Nash, Esq., who has been its President since its organization in 1839; F. B. Bates and Cottington Nash, Vice Presidents; Waldo C. French, J. H. French, and others. Dr. E. T. Learned, of Fall River, and Henry Boyd, Esq. of Wareham, are also honorary members of the Choir. Henry Newton, Esq. is also an active member of the choir.

Long may they continue as a Social Choir, making such melody as "can soothe the soul and drive away the influence of evil."

CORNET.

Post Office Removal.—The people of North Weymouth were very agreeably surprised early this week, on learning that their post office had been removed during the night, from its last resting place, to the old place where it had been kept for more than five years, and that John W. Bartlett, Esq., would hereafter receive and deliver mail matter for the people of North Weymouth. The facts are simply these:—On Saturday last Mr. Bartlett, the popular and highly esteemed former postmaster of this place, received a commission from P. M. Gen'l appointing him postmaster in place of Henry Newton, who was appointed last November, and after finishing the business of the day, and closing the store as usual, he went to the office of Mr. Newton and in a short time the property of the United States was removed, and the sign changed from Mr. Newton's shop, to Mr. Bartlett's store. Mr. Bartlett, a Radical Republican, was first appointed in April, 1861, and held the office until November, 1866, when Mr. Newton, a supporter of Johnson's policy, was appointed in his place.

P.

Mr. Newton, as we learn, was active in promoting the change, as other business prevented his due attention to the office business.

BRAINTREE.

The First Baptist Church and Society.—Last Monday night, at an adjourned meeting of the society, the question of the sale of the house and land, for the purpose of rebuilding on another site, came up for discussion, previous to a final decision. The venerable Rev. Mr. Fitts, agent of the Baptist State Convention, was present to offer his counsel and advice in the matter. As the members were not sufficiently agreed upon the plan which has been proposed, Mr. Fitts advised them to call seven men of the Baptist denomination within the vicinity of Boston, men of business talent and of means, who should come out to Braintree, together with a small delegation from the state convention, that they might look over the whole field and see the wants of the society and the different locations proposed, and then judge of the respective merits of each. The society voted almost unanimously to adopt the counsel of Father Fitts. Mr. Fitts also occupied the pulpit last Sabbath. His discourses were plain, practical, full of good counsel and advice. Mr. Fitts is greatly esteemed for his valuable efforts in sustaining and strengthening weak churches, having had long experience in this kind of labor. He has the faculty of understanding the weak points and also the facility needed in strengthening them. Wherever his advice has been followed it has resulted in good, and we trust that it will in this instance.

The land upon which the present house stands was deeded to the Baptist church for the joint use of the church and society, by Shadrach Thayer, the founder or originator of the First Baptist church in Braintree. It was bought of the town by Caleb White and another, as agents for the then contemplated society. There was then so much prejudice against the Baptists that it would have been utterly impossible for them to have procured it, otherwise than through Caleb White as a private agent, he then being an influential man in the town and a man of means. Shadrach Taylor promised to bequeath in his last will and testament a good sum to the society, to relieve it of debt, as it is said and vouched for by many who heard him express this as his desire. It is said further by some of the aged members of the society who were personally acquainted with Mr. Thayer, that a donation was made, as promised in his will, but that this part of the will was not found.—These facts we give as being of interest to those who are not acquainted with the early history of the society and its founders.

RUSTOR.

Gen. Sylvanus Thayer of Braintree has donated $40,000 in cash for the founding of a department of architecture and civil engineering in Dartmouth College.

Dea Joseph Dyer has been appointed Postmaster at South Braintree, in place of Mr. J. T. Bestick, removed.

Mr. Turner Torrey has forwarded the 5th annual report of the National Freedmen's Relief Association of the District of Columbia.

Found at last, a remedy that not only relieves but cures that enemy of mankind, Consumption as well as the myriads of satellites which revolve around it in the shape of Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, &c. The remedy we allude to is DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY, prepared by Seth W. Fowle & Son, Boston.

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY.

In the whole history of medical discoveries NO REMEDY has performed so many or such remarkable cures of the numerous affections of the THROAT, LUNGS and CHEST, as this long-tried and justly celebrated Balsam. So generally acknowledged is the superior excellence of this remedy that but few of the many who have tested its virtues by experience fail to keep it at hand as a speedy and certain cure for sudden attacks of COLD—fully believing that its remedial powers are comprehensive enough to embrace every form or disease, from the slightest cold to the most dangerous system of pulmonary complaint.

UNSOLICITED TESTIMONY.

From Rev. Francis Lobdell, Pastor of the South Congregational Church, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I consider it a duty which I owe to suffering humanity to bear testimony to the virtues of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I have used it, when I have had occasion for any remedy for Coughs, Colds or Sore Throat, for many years, and never in a single instance has it failed to relieve and cure me. I have frequently been very hoarse on Saturday, and looked forward to the delivery of two sermons on the following day, with sad misgivings, but by a liberal use of the Balsam my hoarseness has invariably been removed, and I have preached without difficulty.

I commend it to my brethren in the ministry, and to public speakers generally, as a certain remedy for the bronchial troubles to which we are peculiarly exposed."

Prepared by SETH W. FOWLE & SON, 18 Tremont St., Boston, and for sale by Druggists generally.

For all the Protean forms of Disease originating in SCROFULA, there is nothing can equal the purifying effects of Iodine when administered in a pure state.

DR. H. ANDERS' IODINE WATER

is a pure solution of Iodine dissolved in water, without a solvent, and it is the best remedy for Scrofula and kindred diseases ever discovered.—Circulars free. Sold by Druggists generally.

{L.S.} To Dennis Sullivan, of Hingham, in the County of Plymouth, and to any and all other persons claiming any interest in about one gallon of whiskey in one jug, about six gallons of rum in one keg, and said vessels, which, by virtue of a warrant issued by me, have been seized at the basement of the Post Office Building, in Weymouth, on the twenty-ninth day of June, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, the value of which liquors, with the vessels containing them, does not, in my opinion, exceed twenty dollars.

You are hereby required to appear at my office in Weymouth, at nine o'clock A. M., on the sixth day of August, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, to answer to the complaint against said liquors and the vessels containing them, and for trial, and to show cause, if any you have, why said liquors and the vessels containing them should not be forfeited for being kept for sale by said Dennis Sullivan, in violation of the laws of this Commonwealth.

Witness my hand and seal, at Weymouth, this twenty-ninth day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

MRS. L. W. TUCK'S

SUPPORTER!

Three Supports Combined in One.

A SUPPORTER like this has never before been offered to the public. It can be arranged to

FIT ANY SIZE OR FORM;

is easily adjusted, convenient to wear, causing no heat or irritation, ELASTIC being used instead of steel springs, rendering it

Comfortable and Easy

in any posture the body may assume.

Great care has been taken in arranging the Support for the Uterus. The wearing of the Supporter a part of the time (for no Supporter should be worn constantly) will not only afford temporary relief and stay the progress of the disease, but in most cases of one of the most distressing and discouraging diseases to which woman is subject.

Ladies, this is not merely an advertisement.—One of your own sex has arranged it, after years of suffering and fruitless search to find some support or compress that would bring relief. She advised herself, fully persuaded she could invent a Supporter which would benefit herself; and as she gained strength and went into society, she was constantly meeting those similarly afflicted; and listening to the oft repeated question, "Oh, how I suffer; can't you do something to help me?" after two years more of study and toil, during which time she left no means untexplored to gain knowledge concerning her work, she is prepared to answer the question satisfactorily.

And now let me say to those who are thus afflicted, at the earnest solicitation of friends I propose to devote

TUESDAY AND THURSDAY

of each week to any who may need my services in fitting Supporters or bandages, and will give such advice and make such examinations as they may need, at my residence on

DEPOT STREET, SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

AGRICULTURAL.

Clover as Manure.—It has been justly remarked that the red plant is the foundation of successful farming. The remark will apply to all portions of the country, except it be to the neighborhood of cities where land is worth several hundred dollars per acre, and where stable manure may be obtained in abundance for the growth of garden crops, and other high-priced product. Agricultural chemists, as well as observing farmers, have given it as their opinion that the manure of animals fed on good clover hay, is worth five times as much per load as manure from straw fed animals. Taking it as granting that the estimate is approximately correct, it is obvious that the turning under of a green crop which produces such rich manure, must in itself add greatly to the fertility of the soil. If a ton of green clover is worth five times as much for fertilizing purposes as a ton of common yard manure made by animals fed on straw or timothy hay, and with straw litter largely intermixed, then a good crop of clover might be rated in value about as follows: Two tons of stalks and leaves estimated when converted to dry hay, would be equal to at least four tons of the material; and half this amount in roots would be two tons more—the whole six tons would show a heavy crop of clover to be worth thirty tons of ordinary yard manure.

A SHARP TRADE.

The following story is told of Josh Sears, a shrewd old merchant, who flourished in Boston in past days.

A cargoe of molasses was classified, after being loaded, as sour or sweet, and then sold as they run. Josh would often buy several hundred hogsheads and resell to the small jobbers; he of course always bought them "as they run;" but not till he knew exactly how they did run.

Now every one knew that Josh Sears was a very shrewd buyer, but how he always managed to get the best retailing molasses out of a cargo without getting any sour hogsheads, passed the understanding of importers and buyers, till at last a very shrewd importer, whom we will call G—, had a suspicion that the early prowling propensities of Josh meant something besides exercise to get up an appetite.

A cargo of molasses having arrived to his consignment, he determined to watch. So, taking his position whence he could see unobserved, he waited.—Not long after, a well known individual was seen approaching, bung driver and broomstick in hand, accompanied by two Irishmen. Said individual proceeded to try the molasses, and upon every hogshead that proved satisfactory he placed a small private mark. When he had selected the quantity he wanted, he ordered the man to roll them into a certain position, and then left the wharf before any one was stirring.

As soon as he was out of hearing, G— jumped from his hiding-place with a laugh. "Ah, I have it; Josh, old fellow, you are done now." He immediately procured a large gang of men, shifted the hogsheads, replacing them with others, taking the precaution to put the same private mark on, and leaving a few of the original private inspection at the head of each tier, for Josh to try.

Shortly after returning to the counting room, Josh entered, as expected. "Well, G—, what are you asking for Ellsworth cargo?"

"Twenty-eight cents; do you want to buy?"

"Yes."

"Go look at it now?"

"Yes. Where is it landed?"

This last question was almost too much for G—'s gravity.

"Bartlett's wharf."

Arrived at the wharf, Josh cast a keen look along the hogsheads, and there were his marks all right, but he went through the form of trying several hogsheads at the head of each tier. They proved satisfactory.

"Think it will run about like this, G—?"

"I don't know. There it is. Take it as you find it."

"Well, I'll take these six tiers. Send up as soon as you can, and take off the guages," and Josh putting on his big S in chalk, they both left.

Josh ordered up ten hogsheads as samples, and G— sent good ones. The jobbers came in to inspect, and everything being satisfactory, the balance was sold at a handsome advance. One day he was disturbed by the entrance of Mr. A. with "Look here, Sears, the molasses you sent me is sour."

Mr. W. also entered with "The molasses is not what I bought,—it is sour."

Enter Mr. C. with like complaint.

This was too much; up jumped Josh and rushed to G—'s, saying, "That molasses I bought of you has soured suddenly, or you have sent me what I did not buy. I'd like to have it explained."

"Certainly, Mr. Sears. There is a peculiarity about this Southside molasses. If it is disturbed by rolling the hogsheads before sunrise, it invariably sours, and I have been thinking that perhaps some—"

Josh stopped to hear no more, jammed his hat over his ears, and left without a word.

PIQUANTS.

Didn't Want Curlew for Dinner.

The Salt Lake Vidette says: A wayfarer dropped into the Occidental Hotel, in this place, lately, to get a square meal. Having planted himself in a chair at one of the tables, he was confronted by the waiter with: "What'll you have?"

The hungry one fastened his eyes on the attache le soup, and said:

"What have you got that's good?"

"Oh! we've roast beef, corn beef, roast mutton, boiled mutton, fried ham and boiled curlew!"

"What is curlew?" said the stranger.

"Curlew?—why, curlew is a bird something like a snipe."

"Did it fly?"

"Yes."

"Did it have wings?"

"Yes."

"Then I don't want any curlew in mine; anything that had wings, and could fly, and didn't leave this country, I don't want for dinner!"

We should judge from this incident that Salt Lake City was not an inviting place to tarry in.

Sights In New York.—The New Yorkers are a far-seeing people, and they have queer sights, too, as the following "personal" in the Sunday Mercury will show: "Will the young lady with high gaiters, red flannel drawers, and satin corsets, that passed over Fulton street bridge at two o'clock, Saturday, and kindly noticed the gentleman with opera glass, who stood at foot of steps, please meet him under the bridge, Monday evening, at half-past ten?"

"What is whisky bringing?" inquired a dealer. "Bringing women and children to want," was the appropriate answer.

In an old family bible in Connecticut, the record of a birth is entered in this wise; "Elizabeth Jones, born on the 20th of November, 1785, according to the best of her recollection!"

"Old Dog Tray's Ever Faithful," they say; but the dog who is faithful can never be-Tray.

An earthquake doesn't dispose men to sleep, but it makes the earth yawn.

The Charleston Mercury proposes to call our new Northwestern Territory, Isickles.

Why is a man who marries twice, like a ship? Because he has a second mate.

When is the conductor in a street-car like a tanner? When his hands are full of car-fare (calf-hair)

Mr. Shaw (Josh Billings) has a book "in the straw" as he expresses it. His next lecture is on "Milk." He says in his prospectus: "The price of the "Lektur" $88.10. I might possibly be induced to discount the eighty-eight dollars, but the forty cents I must invariably have."

The following advertisement appeared in an Irish paper: "Whereas John Hall has fraudulently taken away several articles of wearing apparel without my knowledge, this is therefore to inform him that, if he does not forthwith return the same, his name shall be made public!"

A Tailor's apprentice, who seemed to be pained a good deal with the cross-legged attitude, was asked how he liked tailoring, to which he replied, "Very well; but I believe, I shall never be able to stand sitting."

Elastic Lips.—The Home Journal says that "people generally do not know that some ladies wear false lips made of pink india-rubber, which are attached to thin lips in a manner which defies detection and which give, pretty pouting appearance to the mouth. There is a way to test lips which may appear doubtful, but many ladies might object to the operation, unless it were performed by very near relatives."

Hard Climbing.—A man in Orange county, New York, was found, not long since, endeavoring to climb an overshot wheel in a grist mill. He said he was trying to get up stairs to bed, but somehow or other the steps wouldn't stand still.

A man had received a large lot of lobsters, fresh and lively, when a boy stood looking at them, accompanied by his dog. "Suppose you put your dog's tail between the lobster's claws?" said the man. "Agreed," said the boy. The peg was extracted from the claws, and the dog's tail inserted. Away went the dog off home, howling, at the squeeze his tail got from the lobster. "Whistle your dog back, you young scamp," said the man. "Whistle your lobster back," cried the boy, and absquatulated. The boy made a lobster supper that night.

It is stated by some wiseacre that the heart of a man weighs about nine ounces that of a woman about eight. As the age increases, a man's heart grows heavier, and the woman's lighter —some girls lose theirs at sixteen.

A young lady who was taking music lessons, was asked how she could afford it these hard times. "Oh" said she, "I confine myself to the low notes."

A wolf, says Plutarch, peeping into a hut where a company of shepherds were regaling themselves with a joint of mutton, exclaimed, "What a clamor these men would have raised if they had caught me at such a banquet."

A YOUNG LADY returning to her country home, after a sojourn of a few months in the city was hardly recognized by her friends. In place of a coarse, rustic, flushed face, she had a soft ruby complexion of almost marble smoothness, and instead of twenty-three she really appeared but eighteen. Upon inquiry as to the cause of so great a change, she plainly told them that she used the Circassian Balm, and considered it an invaluable acquisition to any lady's toilet. By its use any Lady or Gentleman can improve their personal appearance an hundred fold. It is simple in its combination as Nature herself, is simple, yet unsurpassed in its efficacy in drawing impurities from, also healing, cleansing and beautifying the skin and complexion. By its direct action on the cuticle it draws from it all its impurities, kindly healing the same and leaving the surface as Nature intended it should be, clear, soft, smooth and beautiful. OUR GIRL.

I must write it; if nobody ever reads a line of it, I must, while it is all new and fresh in my mind, write out the history of the last two weeks, and the description of our girl, who made her first appearance in the house two weeks ago last Monday, and I hailed her broad face and stout figure with a most hearty welcome, as I was a young housekeeper, and when I started in my pretty house, with everything new, including our girl, I fancied that clockwork would be nothing compared to the regularity of my proceedings.

It was about nine o'clock when my new girl came; Harry had given her a key, so she entered and came up to my door, with a knock that startled me—a rap loud as a pistol shot, and as abrupt.

"Come in," I cried.

With a sweep the door flew back, and in the space stood my new acquisition—tall, very robust, and very ugly; her thick black hair grew low on her forehead, and her complexion was a uniform red; her features were very large, and her mouth full of (her only beauty,) white, even teeth. Still the face was far from stupid; the mouth, though large, was flexible and expressive, and the big black eyes promised intelligence. But O, how can I describe her ways, as Harry calls them? She stood for an instant perfectly motionless, then swept down in a bow, and really not ungraceful courtesy.

"Madam," she said, in a deep voice, "your most obedient."

"You are ——" I said questioningly.

"Your humble servant."

This was not getting on a bit; so I said. "Are you the girl Mr. Harvey sent from the Intelligence Office?"

"I am that woman," she said, with a flourish of her shawl; "and here is my certificate of merit;" and she took a paper from her pocket. Advancing with a long stop, another step, and stop, until she came near my bedside, she handed me the paper with a low bow, and then stepping back three steps she stood waiting for me to read it, with her hands clasped and drooping, and her head bent as if it were her death warrant.

It was a well written, properly worded note from her former mistress, certifying that she was honest and capable, and I really had no choice but to keep her; so I told her to find her room, lay off her bonnet, and then come to me again. I was half afraid of her. She was not drunk, with those clear black eyes shining so brightly, but her manner savored of insanity. However, I was helpless, and then Harry would come soon, and I could endure to wait.

"Tell me your name," I said, as she came in with a stride and a stop.

"My name is Mary," she said, in a tone so deep that it seemed to come from the very toes of her gaiters.

"Well, Mary, first put the room in order before the doctor comes."

Oh, if words could only picture that scene! Fancy this tall, large, ugly woman, armed with a duster, charging at the furniture as if she were stabbing her mortal enemy to the heart. She stuck the comb into the brush as if she were saying, "Die! traitor," and piled up books as if they were fagots for a funeral flame. She gave the curtains a sweep with her hand as if she were putting back tapestry for a royal procession, and dashed the chairs down in their places like a magnificent bandit spurning a tyrant in his power.

But when she came to the invalid she was gentle, almost caressing in her manner, propping me up comfortably, making the bed at once easy and handsome, and arranging my hair and dress with a perfect perception of my sore condition.—And when she dashed out of the room I forgave the air with which she returned and presented a tray to me, for the sake of its contents. Such delicious tea and toast, and such perfection of poached eggs, were an apology for any eccentricity of manner. I was thinking gratefully of my own comfort, and watching her hang up my clothes in the closet in her own style, when the bell rung. Like lightning she closed the closet door, caught up the tray, and rushed down stairs. From my open door I could hear the following conversation, which I must say rather astonished even me, already prepared for an eccentricity.

Dr. Holbrook was my visitor, and of course his first question was—

"How is Mrs. Harvy this morning?"

In a voice that was the concentrated essence of about one dozen tragedies my extraordinary servant replied,

"What man art thou?"

"Is the woman crazy?" cried the doctor.

"Lay not that flattering unction to your soul!" cried Mary.

"H'm—" said the doctor, musingly; then, in his own cheery, brisk tones, he added, "you are the new servant, I suppose?"

"Sir, I will serve my mistress till chill death shall part us from each other."

"H'm. Well, now, in plain English, go tell her I am here."

"I go, and it is done!" was the reply, and with slow stride and halt I heard her cross the entry.

"Madam, the doctor waits!" she said, standing with one arm out in a grand attitude.

"Let him come up," I said, choking with laughter.

She went down again.

"Sir, from my mistress I have lately come, to bid you welcome and implore you to ascend. She waits within yon chamber for your coming."

Is it to be wondered at that the doctor found his patient in a perfect convulsion of laughter, or that he joined her in her merriment?

"Where did you find that treasure?" he asked.

"Harry sent her from the office."

"Stage-struck, evidently, though where she picked up that fifth-cut actress manner remains to be seen."

The professional part of his visit over, the doctor stayed for a chat. We were warmly discussing the news of the day, when—whew! the door flew open, and in stalked Mary, and announced, with a swing of her arm,

"The butcher, madam!"

I saw the doctor's eyes twinkle, but he began to write in his memorandum book with intense gravely.

"Well, Mary," I said, "he is not waiting?"

"The dinner waits!" she replied—"Shall I prepare the viands as my judgment shall direct, or will your inclination dictate to me?"

"Cook them as you will, but have a good dinner for Mr. Hervey at two o'clock."

"Between the strokes 'twill wait his appetite." And with another sweeping courtesy she left the room, the door, as usual, after her exit, standing wide open. She was as good as her word. Without any orders from me, she took it for granted that Harry would dine up stairs, and set the table out in my room. I was beginning to let my keen sense of the ludicrous triumph over pain and weariness, and I watched her, strangling the laugh till she was down stairs. To see her stab the potatoes and behead the celery, was a perfect treat, and the air of a martyr preparing poison with which she poured out the water, was perfect.—Harry was evidently prepared for fun, for he watched her as keenly as I did.

Not one mouthful would she bring to me, till she had made it as dainty as it could be; mashing my potatoes with the movement of a saint crushing vipers, and buttering my bread in a tragic manner. Yet the moment she brought it to me, all the affectation dropped, and no mother could have been more naturally tender. Evidently, with all her nonsense she was kind-hearted.

It took but one day to disclose that we had secured a perfect treasure. Her cooking was exquisite enough for the palate of an epicure; she was neat to a nicety, and I soon found her punctual and trustworthy. Her attentions to myself were touching in their watchful kindness. Sometimes, when the pain was very severe, and I could only lie suffering and helpless, her large hands would smooth my hair softly, and her voice became almost musical in its low murmurings of "Poor child." Her consciousness of physical superiority to me in my helpless state, roused all the motherly tenderness in her nature, and she lavished it upon me freely.

I often questioned her about her former places; discovered to my utter amazement that she never was in a theatre, never saw or read a play, and was entirely innocent of novel reading.

I had become used to her manner, and no longer feared she was insane, when one evening my gravity gave way utterly, and for the first time I laughed in her face. She had been arranging my bed and self for the night, and was just leaving the room, holding in one hand an empty pitcher, and in the other my wrapper. Suddenly a drunken man in the street called out, with a yell that really was startling, though by no means mysterious. Like a flash, Mary struck an attitude. One foot advanced, her body thrown slightly forward, the pitcher held out and the wrapper waved aloft, she cried out, in a voice of perfect terror,

"Gracious heavings! What hideous screams is those?"

Gravity was gone. I fairly screamed with laughter, and her motionless attitude and her wondering face increased the fun.

"Go down, Mary, or you will kill me!" I gasped at last.

Apparently unconscious of the cause of my merriment, she went slowly from the room waving alternately the pitcher and the wrapper.

Harry at last found out the explanation. She had lived for ten years with a retired actress and actor, who wish to bury the knowledge of their past life, and who never mention the stage. Retaining in private life the attitudes and tones of their old profession, they have made it a kind of sport to burlesque the passions they often imitated, and Mary had unconsciously fallen into the habit of copying their peculiarities. When they left for Europe she found her way into the intelligence office, where Harry secured her.

BASE BALL.

Eureka!

Look at that brace of hands, once soft and pretty, now suffused with the Egyptian blushes. Then look into those optics and tell us tales of sympathy. And look at that Mount Tom on our right cheek bone. Base ball! That is the row.

It came about thus. Secondary employment is too shirksome for the system. The doctor said we needed exercise. Doctor knows. He told us to join Base Ball; we joined. Bought a book of instructions, and for five days studied it wisely if not too well. Then we bought a sugar scoop cap, a red belt, a green shirt, yellow trousers, pumpkin colored shoes, a paper collar and purple necktie, and with a lot of other delegates moved gently to the ground.

There were two nines. These nines were antagonists. The ball is a pretty little drop of softness, the size of a goose egg, and five degrees harder than a brick. There was an umpire. His position is a hard one. He sits on a box and yells "fowl." His duty is severe.

The umpire said "play." It is the most radical play that I know of, this base ball. Sawing cord wood is moonlight rambles beside base ball. So the pitcher sent a ball toward me. It was pretty looking coming, so I let it come. Then he sent another. I hit with the club, and hove it gently upward. Then I started to walk to the first base. The ball lit in the pitcher, or his hands, and somebody said he caught a fly. I went leisurely toward the base. Another man took the bat. I turned to see how he was making it, and a mule kicked me on the cheek. The man said it was the ball. It felt like mule, and I reposed on the grass. The ball went on.

Pretty soon there were two more flies, and three of us flew out. Then the other nine came in, and us nine went out. This was better. Just as I was standing on my dignity in the left field a hot ball, as they called it, came skyrocketing toward me. My captain yelled, "take it!"

I hastened gently forward to where the ball was aiming to descend. I have a good eye to measure distances, and saw at a glance where the little aerolite was to light. I put up my hands. How sweetly the ball descended. Everybody looked; I felt something warm in my eye! "Muffin!" yelled ninety fellows. "Muffin be blowed! It's a cannon ball!" For three days I've had two pounds of raw beef on that eye, and still it paineth!

Then I wanted to go home, but my gentle captain said nay. So I nayed and stayed. Pretty soon it was my strike. "Brick to bat!" yelled the umpire. I went but not all serene as was my wont. The pitcher sent in one hip high. I missed it. He sent in another neck high. It struck me in the gullet. "Fowl," yelled the umpire. He sent in the ball again. This time I took it square and sent it down the right field, through a parlor window, a kerosene lamp, and rip up against the head of an infant who was quietly taking its—nap in its mother's arms. Then I slung the bat and meandered forth to the first base. I heard high words and looked. When I slung the bat I had with it broken th jaw of the umpire and was fined ten cents.

The game went on. I liked it. It is so much fun to run from base to base, just in time to be put out, or to chase a ball three-fourths of a mile down hill, while all the spectators yell "muffin!" "go it!" "home run!" "go round again" or "go round a dozen times!" Base ball is a sweet little game. When it came to my turn to bat again I noticed everybody moved back about ten rods. The new umpire retreated twelve rods. He was timid! The pitcher sent 'em in hot. Hot balls in time of war are good. But I don't like 'em hot for fun. After a while I got a fair clip at it, and you bet it went, cutting the daisies down the right field. A man and his dog sat in the shade of an oak enjoying the game. The ball broke one leg of the dog and landed like a runaway engine in the corporosity of the fat man.

Then I went on a double quick to the field and tried to stop a hot ball. It came toward me from the bat at the rate of nine miles a minute. I put up my hand, the ball went sweetly singing on its way with all the skins from my palms with it.

More raw beef!

That was an eventful chap who first invented base ball. It's such fun. I have played five games, and this is the glowing result:

Twenty-seven dollars paid out for things.

One bunged eye, badly bunged.
One broken little finger.
One bump on the head.
Nineteen lame backs.
A sore jaw.
One thumb dislocated.
Three sprained ankles.
Five swelled legs.
One dislocated shoulder, from trying to throw a ball a thousand yards.
Two hands raw from trying to stop hot balls.
A lump the size of a hornet's nest on my left hip, well back.
A nose sweetly jammed, and five uniforms spoiled from rolling in the dirt at the base.

I have played two weeks, and don't think I like the game. There is not a square inch on, in or under me but aches. I sleep nights dreaming of hot balls, flys, fouls, and descending sky rockets. But I am proud of my proficiency in the game. It's fine exercise—a little easier than being run through a threshing machine.—It's a nice game for a poet or orator,—'twill make one sore beyond all accounts.

I've looked over the scorer's book and find that in two weeks I've broken several bats, made one tally, broken one umpire's jaw, broken ten windows in adjoining houses, hurt a baby, broke the leg of a dog, and mortally injured the breadbasket of a spectator, knocked five other players out of time by slinging my bat, and knocked the waterfall from a lady who was standing twenty rods from the field, a quiet looker on.

I've used up fifteen bottles of arnica liniment, five bottles of lotions, half a raw beef, and am so full of pain that it seems as if my bones were but broken bats, and my legs the limbs of a dead horse chestnut, instead of the once elegant trotters of

Bawlingly thine,
"BRICK" POMFROY.

THE GRANDFATHER.

He's sitting in his easy chair,
Beside the open door;
Old Time has made a record there,
And written on his brow of care
Full eighty years and more.
What child is that? his darling Bess,
Who now before him stands,
And 'gainst his trembling knees would press,
To share the coveted caress
From grandpa's feeble hands.
The child of one who was his child,
The image fair as truth,
Of her who on her manhood smiled
And life of half its cares beguiled,
The partner of his youth.

Again he sees the laughing eyes
That caught his youthful gaze,
The cheeks the painter's art defies,
To equal with his choicest dyes
The smiles that all must praise.
And well she loves the aged sire
Who always takes her part,
Who yields to all her young desire,
And of her prattle will not tire,
Still holding to his heart.
Oh, dear to him, most truly dear,
That little budding rose,
And yet he greets her with a tear—
Her presence makes the past appear,
Its lights and shades disclose.

There is a tie that binds them fast,
A love beyond their ken
Blending the present with the past,
And till life ends their love will last,
Nor will it perish then.
The little orphan knows above
That both her parents dwell,
Yet lively as a petted dove,
Rejoicing in her grandsire's love,
No grief has she to tell.
Yet often from his aged eyes
She wrings the anxious tear,
By telling him that when she dies,
When in the cold,cold grave she lies,
He will be lonely here.

The thought that he would go before,
Comes not into her mind;
How could he leave his Cottage Door,
To seek a far, far distant shore,
And leave his pet behind.
Oh, happy childhood ignorance,
Untroubled with a fear;
Secure in its own innocence,
It sees no cause for self defence,
And dreads no danger near.

RECOLLECTIONS OF EARLY ANTI-SLAVERY REFORMERS.

BY REV. SAMUEL J. MAY.

The Canterbury School.

Before my espousal of Miss Crandall's cause I had had a pleasant acquaintance with Hon. Andrew T. Judson, which almost became a personal friendship. Unwilling perhaps to break our connexion so abruptly, and conscious, no doubt, that he had treated me rudely, not to say abusively, at the town meeting on the 9th, he called to see me two days afterwards. He assured me that he had not become unfriendly to me personally, and regretted that he had used some expressions and applied certain epithets to me in the warmth of his feelings and the excitement of the public indignation of his neighbors and fellow-townsmen, roused as they were to the utmost in opposition to Miss Crandall's project, which he thought I was inconsiderately and unjustly promoting. He went on, enlarging upon the disastrous effects the establishment of "a school for niggar girls" in the center of their village would have upon its desirableness as a place of residence, the value of real estate there, and the general prosperity of the town.

I replied: "If, sir, you had permitted Mr. Buffum and myself to speak at your town meeting, you would have found that we had come there, not in a contentious spirit, but that we were ready, with Miss Crandall's consent, to settle the difficulty with you and your neighbors peaceably. We should have agreed, if you would repay to Miss Crandall what you had advised her to give for her house, and allow her time quietly to find and purchase a suitable house for her school in some more retired part of the town or vicinity, that she should remove to that place."

The honorable gentleman hardly gave me time to finish my sentences, ere he said, with great emphasis:—

"Mr. May, we are not merely opposed to the establishment of that school in Canterbury; we mean there shall not be such a school set up anywhere in our State. The colored people never can rise from their menial condition in our country; they ought not to be permitted to rise here. They are an inferior race of beings, and never can or ought to be recognized as the equals of the whites. Africa is the place for them. I am in favor of the colonization scheme. Let the niggers and their descendants be sent back to their fatherland, and there improve themselves as much as they may, and civilize and Christianize the natives, if they can. I am a Colonizationist. You and your friend Garrison have undertaken what you cannot accomplish. The condition of the colored population of our country can never be essentially improved on this continent. You are fanatical about them. You are violating the Constitution of our Republic, which settled forever the status of the black men in this land. They belong to Africa. Let them be sent back there, or kept as they are here. The sooner you abolitionists abandon your project the better for our country, for the niggers and yourselves." I replied:—

"Mr. Judson, there never will be fewer colored people in this country than there are now. Of the vast majority of them this is their native land as much as it is ours. It will be unjust, inhuman, in us to drive them out, or to make them willing to go by our cruel treatment of them. And if they should all become willing to depart it would not be practicable to transport across the Atlantic Ocean and settle properly on the shore of Africa, from year to year, half so many of them as would be born here in the same time, according to the known rate of their natural increase. No, sir, there will never be fewer colored people in our country then there are this day; and the only question is, whether we will recognize the rights which God gave them as men, and encourage and assist them to become all he has made them capable of being, or whether we will continue wickedly to deny them the privileges we enjoy, condemn them to degradation, enslaved and imbrute them, and so bring upon ourselves the condemnation of the Almighty Impartial Father of all men, and the terrible visitation of the God of the oppressed? I trust, sir, you will ere long come to see that we must accord to these men their rights, or incur justly the loss of our own. Education is one of the primal fundamental rights of all the children of men. Connecticut is the last place where this should be denied. But as, in the providence of God, that right has been denied in a place so near me, I feel that I am summoned to its defence. If you and your neighbors in Canterbury had quietly consented that Sarah Harris, whom you know to be a bright, good girl, should enjoy the privilege she so eagerly sought, this momentous conflict would not have arisen in your village. But as it has arisen there we may as well meet it there as elsewhere."

"That nigger school," he rejoined with great warmth, "shall never be allowed in Canterbury, nor in any town of this State."

"How can you prevent it legally?" I inquired; "how but by Lynch law, violence, which you surely will not countenance?"

"We can expel her pupils from abroad," he replied, "under the provisions of our old pauper and vagrant laws."

"But we will guard against them," I said, "by giving your town ample bonds."

"Then," said he, "we will get a law passed by our Legislature now in session, forbidding the institution of such a school as Miss Crandall proposed in any part of Connecticut."

"It would be an unconstitutional law, and I will contend against it as such to the last," I rejoined. "If you, sir, pursue the course you have now indicated, I will dispute every step you take from the lowest court in Canterbury up to the highest court of the United States."

"You talk big," he cried; "it will cost more than you are aware of to do all that you threaten. Where will you get the means to carry on such a contest in law?"

This defiant question inspired me to say, "Mr. Judson, I had not forseen all that this conversation has opened to my view. True I do not possess the pecuniary ability to do what you have made me promise. I have not consulted any one. But I am sure the lovers of impartial liberty, the friends of humanity in our land, the enemies of slavery, will so justly appreciate the importance of sustaining Miss Crandall in her pious undertaking, that I shall receive from one quarter and another all the funds I may need to withstand your attempt to crush, by legal means, the Canterbury school.

The sequel of my story will show you that I did not misjudge the significance of my case, nor put my confidence in those who were not worthy of it. Mr. Judson left me in high displeasure; and I never met him afterwards but as an opponent.

Undismayed by the opposition of her neighbors and the violence of their threats, Miss Crandall received early in April fifteen or twenty colored young ladies and misses from Philadelphia, New York, Providence and Boston. At once her persecutors commenced operations. All accommodations at the stores in Canterbury were denied her, so that she was obliged to send to neighboring village for her needful supplies. She and her pupils were insulted whenever they appeared in the streets. The doors and door-step of her house were besmeared, and her well was filled with filth. Had it not been for the assistance of her father and another Quaker friend who lived in the town, she might have been compelled to abandon "her castle" for the want of water and food. But she was enabled to "hold out," and Miss Crandall and her little band behaved somewhat like the besieged in the immortal Fort Sumter. The spirit that is in the children of men is unusually roused by persecution. I visited them repeatedly and always found teachers and pupils calm and resolute. They evidently felt that it was given them to maintain one of the fundamental inalienable rights of man.

Before the close of the month an attempt was made to frighten and drive away these innocent girls by a process under the obsolete vagrant law, which provided that the selectmen of any town might warn any person, not an inhabitant of the State, to depart forthwith from said town; demand of him or her one dollar and sixty-seven cents for every week he or she remained in said town after having received such warning; and in case such fine should not be paid, and the person so warned should not have departed before the expiration of ten days after being sentenced, then he or she should be whipped on the naked body not exceeding ten stripes.

A warrant to this effect was actually served upon Eliza Ann Hammond, a fine girl from Providence, aged seventeen years. Although I had protected Miss Crandall's pupils against the operation of this old law, by giving to the treasurer of Canterbury a bond in the sum of $10,000, signed by responsible gentleman of Brooklyn, to save the town from the vagrancy of any of these pupils, I feared they would be intimidated by the actual appearance of the constable, and the imposition of a writ. So, on hearing of the above transaction, I went down to Canterbury to explain the matter if necessary; to assure Miss Hammond that the persecutors would hardly dare proceed to such an extremity, and strengthen her to bear meekly the punishment, if they should in their madness, inflict it, knowing that every blow they should strike her would resound throughout the land, if not over the whole civilized world, and call out an expression of indignation, before which Mr. Judson and his associates would quail. But I found her ready for the emergency, animated by the spirit of a martyr.

Of course this process was abandoned. But another was resorted to, most disgraceful to the State as well as the town. That shall be the subject of my next.

FASHIONS AT THE EXPOSITION

At the Exposition the section of jewels is most dazzling. In the French department the beauty of the materials is surpassed by extreme perfection of the handiwork. Diamonds and precious stones are mounted with the most exquisite art. We notice in particular a branch of lilac, which is a real masterpiece. The flowers and foliage are made of diamonds. This lovely jewel is a brooch. The blossoms tremble and glitter upon their delicate stems, and must be brilliant, indeed, by gaslight.

Another brooch is formed of a butterfly. The body is of gold and turquoise; the delicate wings are of diamonds studded with emeralds.

Another is a humming bird of diamonds and emeralds, and is destined for the Empress Eugenie.

Another, again is a peacock with outspread tail brilliant with sapphires, emeralds, diamonds and rubies.

Fashionable necklaces are made with pendent ornaments all round: the parure of diamonds consists of a bandeau or diadem, ear-rings, necklace, bracelets and brooch. Light mountings, extremely fine and elegant, are those preferred. In a simpler style, cameos are in great favor. They are mounted in pure Grecian style.

Artistic jewels of oxidised silver are much valued, and also jewels in the Byzantine style of enamel, inlaid with small pearls and precious stones, and with very delicate gold mountings.

The most general shape for brooches is that of a small round shield. Gold of several shades of color, inlaid with tiny pearls, makes pretty jewels. But fancies in the Chinese and Turkish style, are fashionable for ear-rings, necklaces and bracelets.

Now that the skirts of our dresses no longer cover our feet, we give more thought to our chaussure. It must correspond to the rest of our toilet.

Demi-high boots are made of gros-grain silk, laced over the instep; the boot is ornamented at the top with a small mousquetaire reverse of red morocco, piped and white. The heel is very high and covered with silk.

Parisians wear slippers of blue satin which are embrodered with white beads, and with rosettes of blue ribbon.

Sandals of rose-colored silk, ornamented with patterns of white guipure, and fastened with pure rose-colored ribbons crossed over the instep, and again several times round the lower part of the leg, and fastened in front with a rosette.

Not far from this elegant collection of chaussures we see latest noureautes in gloves. Fine kid gloves, light blue, green, lilac, rose-colored, gray of shades, flesh color, and buff, with two, three, five or more buttons, and coming quite ud the arm. Gloves embroidered with different patterns in color ed silk. The neatest thing is just the crest or cipher upon the cuff.

THE WEATHER.

We don't propose, even if it is denied, to argue concerning the rain of yesterday afternoon and last evening. We shall take it for granted that it did rain, and decidedly if not overwhelmingly. Whoever knew a southeast wind to blow without having a moist breath? That of yesterday was moist indeed. Did ever the reader stand under the falls of Niagara, and look up to that ponderous avalanche of water? No. Then he or she never saw the rain of yesterday in a two-fold aspect—at the Falls and away from it. The more it poured the more it seemed disposed to. There was no let-up, but all was let-down. Horoscopy was a useless art. Divining was dead to all practical purposes. Nothing could be seen because water in quantities has a provoking opacity. Looking out of windows was like looking at a section of the sea—a clever prospect but not an agreeable one, since seas are out of their place on land. People were caught everywhere and could get nowhere. Doorways, and a great many other ways, were monopolized by an unfortunate and drenched public. Eaves and spouts and roofs and sky were in conspiracy to drown out all that were not in. Women were treated no better than men, and looked tenfold worse.

In place of a coarse, rustic, flushed face, she had a soft ruby complexion of almost marble smoothness, and instead of twenty-three she really appeared but eighteen. Upon inquiry as to the cause of so great a change, she plainly told them that she used the Circassian Balm, and considered it an invaluable acquisition to any lady's toilet. THE WEYMOUTH GAZETTE.

THURSDAY, AUG. 8, 1867.

Boston, August, 1867.

Mr. Editor:—It is a fact no less true than singular, that every one seems to admit without question the correctness of his own position; it is only in relation to the conclusions of others that we come to differ; illustrations in proof are hardly necessary, yet the old saying "all men think all men mortal but themselves," the stories of the eleven obstinate jurymen, and the crazyman who imagined all the world gone mad, will readily occur. You will see at once the point of this, for our villagers, like the people of all villages, are much given to vanity and selfconceit, they cling with the utmost tenacity to the idea that theirs is the foremost village in the country, that everything of theirs is of the very best character, in fact that they are not only the center of the universe, geographically, but that everything good, morally, mentally, and physically, comes from their hearts, brains, and hands, and that everything worth knowing, having, or doing, must of necessity be known, possessed, or done by them; hence many singular ideas find lodgment in their brains, and expressed by the usual methods, through tongue and pen. It crops out on all occasions like the ribs of our granite frame, in their literary and scientific works, in their speeches, at their public gatherings, in their various works of utility and art; it runs through their streets and upon their wharves, peeps out from the doors and windows of their buildings, and one might almost think the very air vocal with its praises, so that wherever we go and whatever we do, the one prominent characteristic stares us in the face. The first, middle and last letter of their alphabet, is "I," and a capital I you may be very sure it is, too. The village includes within its limits, three hills, and has in consequence been called by some strangers "Trimountain", a most ridiculous term, if one will but look at the hills. Between the hills were in former times, some deep gullies, filled with a most charming mixture of mudflats, seagrass, and salt water, giving a healthiness to the atmosphere, and a peculiar pungency to the odours arising therefrom, highly prized by the inhabitants. Latterly those gullies have been partially filled or bridged over, and when built upon, yet retaining the agreeable perfume. The gravel used in this filling has been obtained partly from the hills of the village, and partly from those outside its limits, consequently the beautiful, picturesque appearance of the landscape has been somewhat marred, and the useful has been made to take the place of the ornamental. The highest of these, which has been reduced to nearly half of its original hight, bears the name of Beacon hill. This title, as well as that of the village, is of a very obscure origin, although the most probable supposition is, that it comes from "bee cone,"(easily corrupted into "beecon," or "beacon,") from its resemblance in shape to the old fashioned beehive. Some have thought that formerly it was used as a signal post and thus it obtained its name; this however is hardly worthy of consideration. This hill is in the most central part of the village, and is occupied by some of the finest buildings, public, and private, and is the coveted abode of the aristocracy, familliary called "codfish;" I suppose from the fact that a representative figure of that fish hangs in the principal room of the most prominent public building. It is another of their peculiarities, that they delight in such euphonious and significant names; Copp's hill, the northern promontory, being so called from the grave yard upon it, and not from the name, as popularly supposed, of a former proprietor, is a somewhat smaller elevation, overlooking an arm of the sea, dignified by the name of harbor, and what are ambitiously styled dockyards. Here are also some dwellings and storehouses, but its glory has departed, and it now excites but little interest and the curious traveller passes it by with only a careless inquiry. The remaining hill was once occupied as a fort, into which the legend informs us, they used in other days to gather at night fall, the cattle and fowls to protect them from the rapacity of the neighboring prowlers, who infested with audacious boldness the adjacent territory. The remains of this fort are familiar to some of the immediate ancestors of the present inhabitants, and the name of "Forthill" thus became attached to it. Some of the intervening lands exhibit very interesting specimens of nomenclature, and are as good as a history, such, for instance, as the "Black sea," so called from the mixture of mud and water that held possession of the ground for many years. "Blackstone Street," from the color of the stones that marked its limits, "Canal Street," where boats are said once to have sailed. "Dock square," a plat of ground where the ancients inhabitants gathered their favorite greens. "Washington Street," a corruption of washing stone, where the house keepers used to assemble according to the good old custom, once in the week, to do their family washing. In fact we are continually met with these excentricities wherever we go, but my limits will not permit me to go further in the present direction, and I must leave other peculiarities for some future occasion.

TRUANT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 26, 1867.

Editor Gazette:—As a subscriber to your paper and a former resident of Weymouth, and for the last four years in the late war, now a claim agent for the collection of bounties and widows' claims, I wish to say through your paper, as I have many claims from Weymouth, that it has been decided by the Paymaster General not to pay any more bounties for nearly three months. As I receive many letters from applicants, and it is expensive to answer so many letters, and it would amount to amount to nothing at all, I send this note to quiet many that think we can press their claims through within a few weeks. All claims are attended to in their turn. Any questions connected with the above, I will try to answer any time, through your paper.

Respectfuly yours,
TURNER TORREY.

LIQUOR SEIZURES.—Deputy State Constable Isaac Porter, with assistants made a seizure of thirty gallons of ale at the house of Richard Blanchard, and a quantity of rum and ale at the house of Mary Burns, in Randolph, last Saturday afternoon. He also, the same afternoon, seized a large quantity of ale and lager beer at the house of John Holmes, in Stoughton. [Register.

Constable Isaac Porter made a seizure of the liquor stock of William W. Brooks druggist at Canton, Thursday—amounting to about $200 in value, being 56 gallons of rum, gin and brandy.

A demijohn of bad smelling brandy was smashed by Constable Isaac Porter in front of the post office to-day, the owner having just returned from the city with material for a spree. The object of this summary seizure by Mr. Porter was the prevention of family abuse which was sure to follow had the man carried it home.

East Weymouth, July 30, 1867.

Mr. Editor:—At the town meeting last March, a committee was appointed to examine the town liquor agency,—kept by Mr. Amos S. White. The committee made an examination, and reported to the selectmen that Mr. White kept nothing but pure liquors; upon which they reappointed him agent. Any one wanting a good article in this line will find it for their interest to purchase of the town agent at the landing, as they are sure to get what they call for. Some are so bitterly opposed to a town agency that they send to Boston and purchase it illegally rather than patronize the agency.

East Norfolk Temperance Union.—The next Quarterly Meeting of the East Norfolk Temperance Union, will be held at Rev. S. H. Hayes' Church, South Weymouth, on Tuesday, Aug. 13, at 10 o'clk A.M.

Rev. H. D. Walker of East Abington, will deliver an Essay at 11 o'clock, after which the time will be occupied in the discussion of the great topic of the day interesting the Temperance Public.

No effort will be spared to make this Meeting an interesting one, and it is hoped that every one who can will give the weight of the influence of their presence.

All Temperance Organizations are invited to send delegates. Clergymen receiving this will please give notice to their Congregations.

WILLIAM DYER, Sec'y.

Mr. Editor:—Thinking that a few directions which proved of so much use to me may be of some benefit to those who are beginning to compose, I send them, hoping they may prove beneficial. In writing compositions, how often do we hear expressions like the following, used by the majority of school children just beginning to compose. O, I can't write a composition! Do give me a subject! I can think of nothing to write about! I have almost a mind to say that I will never try to write. But the teacher requires it and how can I escape the task. They seem to have wrong ideas of the subject of writing. They suppose that they must at the commencement write essays; as good, perhaps, as they read in books written by persons of great learning, and which may have cost years of labor and study to produce. Now it is not to be expected that a young person who has but just entered "the broad field of science" will write with facility on every subject. But nearly every one can express his thoughts upon suitable subjects, if he will keep in mind the following.—Do not endeavor to write upon a subject that you cannot understand. Be not too anxious to have a long composition. If you can get all your thoughts into a small space, so much the better. Endeavor to express your thoughts in so clear a manner, that all can understand them. Some seem to think it is better to write so that no one can understand them. But that is not writing as you ought. After finishing your composition, lay it aside, and at some future time carefully review it; you then observe its defects and correct them. These simple directions faithfully observed, will enable almost any one to write agreeably. But to write agreeably is not the only advantage to be derived from composing. The cheif advantage is the dicipline it gives to the mind.

Change.—Among the business changes of the past week is that of E. C. Bumpus, Attorney and Counsellor at Law. He has taken the office of the late E. F. Hall, where he may be found at all hours of the day and evening. Mr. Bumpus has had the benefit of the excellent office of Edward Avery, Esq., and has been with James Humphrey, Esq., since commencing practice in town.

The Globe.—Bound volumes of the Congressional Globe containing the doings of Congress, have been received from Turner Torrey, Esq., of Washington, who has our thanks for the same. In a late number of the Gazette we alluded to Mr. Torrey as a clerk in one of the Departments, which was an error, Mr. T. being one of the Board of officers of the Capitol Police.

Rev. Levi A. Abbott, former pastor of the Baptist church in this town, will occupy the pulpit of that church on Sunday, the 18th inst.

The new Bay State base ball club of East Braintree will play their first match game with the Fleet Foot Club of South Braintree, on Saturday next, on the grounds of the Bay State, near North Braintree depot.

The little waif of humanity found on the door-step of Cyrus Washburn, Esq., of East Weymouth, a few weeks since, died at the almshouse last week. The child was named Susan Night, the patronymic having reference to her abandonment under cover of the shades of evening.

The annual picnic of the Sabbath School connected with the 3d Universalist Society of Weymouth, will be held in South Shore Grove, North Weymouth, on Thursday, Aug. 15th. The public are cordially invited to attend.

KENDALL'S MILLS, Me., July 25, 1867.

Mr. Editor:—I promised in my last to give you some information in regard to the mineral wealth, inhabitants, &c., of Piscataquis county. Taking a due west course from Foxcroft village, and travelling some five miles, you turn to the right and ascend the brow of a hill, where you will find deposited in the clefts of the rocks untold wealth in the form of gold, silver, lead, &c., specimens of which have been examined and found to contain about $12 gold, $60 silver, the balance in lead and several other metals, amounting in all to about $250 per ton of earth. The mine is thought to be so valuable that a company of old miners, from New York, have leased the farm on which it is situated for $500 a year, for five years, and are now tunneling at the base of the hill, supposing vast wealth to be deposited beyond.

About 20 miles in a northerly direction we come to the town of Brownsville, where, it is said, are some of the most extensive iron mines in this country, also a very extensive slate quarry, duly waiting railroad communication to develop them and make the county one of the richest in the state.

Of the inhabitants, one wants to visit and stop a while with them, to fully appreciate their many good qualities,—generous to a fault many of them, given to hospitality, industrious, frugal, and happy, with but few exceptions.

The crop of hay was never so large as it is this season; almost every farmer has enlarged his barn to receive the bountiful crop. I think those who bought hay and paid $15, $20 and $25 per ton in our vicinity, made a poor speculation.

NORTH WEYMOUTH.

A meeting of the voters of the 1st and 2d School Districts, was held on Monday evening, Aug. 5, in the vestry of Rev. Rev. Mr. Rockwood's church, called for the purpose of hearing the report of the committee chosen at the last meeting to confer with the people of East Weymouth and Weymouth Landing in regard to uniting with North Weymouth in the erection of a soldiers' monument, to be located on the hill in the Old Cemetery grounds at North Weymouth. The meeting was called to order by the chairman of the committee, Gen'l Benj. F. Pratt, and after reading the records of the last meeting by the Secretary, Chas. G. Jones, Esq., the report of the committee was submitted, which was substantially as follows:

That they had seen and conversed with many people in those sections of the town, since the last meeting, and urged upon them the importance of uniting in the erection of one monument, instead of three, and that there seemed to be an indifference towards taking any action in the matter; that those who were in favor of the plan proposed by North Weymouth, did not now take interest enough in the matter to request the Selectmen to call a meeting, and that the Selectmen did not feel authorised, or did not wish to call a meeting, unless requested by one or more voters in this section of the town, and the committee came to the conclusion, after trying for two months to induce the people to have meetings called at East Weymouth and Weymouth Landing, to consider the matter, that it would be useless to make any farther efforts to try to induce the people of those sections to unite with North Weymouth in the erection of one monument, as proposed. The report, which was made by the different members of the committee, each relating his own efforts in the matter, was, after some discussion and explanation, accepted, and the committee discharged.

A motion was then made that a committee of five be chosen, with full powers to carry out the plan which was adopted at the last meeting, for the erection of a granite monument to be paid for by the share of the appropriation belonging to North Weymouth, which, after some discussion, was unanimously carried, and Gen'l B. F. Pratt, Henry Newton, Elisha Pratt, Wm. O. Nash, and James Humphrey, Esq., were chosen a committee to contract for and make all arrangements necessary for carrying out the wishes of the people of North Weymouth, as expressed in their vote at the meeting of June 3d, in the erection of a monument, to be paid for by the share of the appropriation of $12,000, voted by the town March 18th, which belongs to the first and second districts, in accordance with the vote of the town. After some further suggestions and remarks by General Pratt, at 10 P. M. it was voted to adjourn.

[We have been requested to copy the portion of the report of the committee at a previous meeting, which referred to the character and location of the proposed monument.

"The committee recommend that a granite monument be erected in honor of our fallen soldiers, and that the names, company and regiment, cause of death, (whether killed, died of wounds or disease) date of death and age, of all the deceased soldiers of the town, be inscribed on the monument, also some suitable motto, or inscription, be placed upon the monument. The most suitable and appropriate place to erect such a monument would be on the highest part of the hill in the old cemetery of North Weymouth, near the road, and on the east side. They consider this place, which is well known to most of the citizens of Weymouth, more appropriate than any other in town, not only from the fact of being a place where a monument can be seen from nearly all parts of the town, but also that the place being made sacred by containing the remains of some of the first settlers of our ancestors for nearly two and a half centuries, would be made still more so by a monument erected to the memory of their descendants who fought and died to save the liberties of the country of which their ancestors established the foundations.

The committee are of opinion that a suitable monument cannot be erected at a cost of less than four or five thousand dollars."

The South Shore Grove.—Is a place of resort on the bank of the river, at North Weymouth. The situation is one of surpassing beauty, and with its facilities for boating and bathing, will in time become the favorite place of recreation for pleasure parties in this vicinity.

The proprietors of the Flax mill at East Braintree have generously made arrangements for an excursion of their employees, to take place next week.

East Weymouth.—There will not be preaching in the Congregational Church next Sabbath, the Pastor having gone to his home in Maine for a few days.

Lightning.—During the thunder storm Wednesday afternoon, the house of Mr Cully was struck by lightning, and damaged to the amount of about $35. The fluid passed down the chimney, and went out through a window, throwing the blinds off without injuring them None of the inmates were at home at the time.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

We have been urged to repeat the essay executed for a respectable journal in Massachusetts during the fall of 1865, and in consideration of dog days and the prevailing fashion of issuing second editions of readable matter, we bow to the command.

In this enterprising town of eight thousand souls there are four villages, each being quite a miniature little city. We will rank them in their order and relative position. By common consent the Landing carries off the palm. Her favored natural location at the head of tide water, where ship building was carried on by our fathers, where the lumber trade has flourished for more than a quarter of a century with amazing success; where coal from the mountains of Pennsylvania is dumped during the autumnal months, to cheer the masses and make winter homes inviting; where a bank for thirty-five years has been managed with discretion, and at this moment is a standing monument of a model monied institution; where a trio of attorneys at law is significant of a good amount of legal research; where the people's savings institution, for more than three decades, has so handsomely vouched for the wisdom of its founders, from its inception to the present—speaks volumes for the honesty and sagacity of the gentlemen who have so creditably invested the funds committed to their charge; where the boot and shoe business is very extensively carried on; where is to be found one of the best hotels in the county, with a veteran landlord, who so well knows that the secret of success is urbanity, cleanly apartments, and an ample table; where, within a stone's throw, are three churches, where the glad news of salvation is so interestingly proclaimed.

We now diverge from general topics, and attempt to individualize upon one who has a well earned business reputation; whose thirty years of dealing in lumber has impressed his pleasant countenance upon the memory of most of the active business men in Norfolk and Plymouth counties; who combines energy with backbone, caution with indefatigability; a gentleman who still looks young, although he has seen fifty winters. We respectfully announce our popular townsman, Maj. Thomas B. Porter.

In stature he is about 5 feet 10 inches, has a vigorous constitution, pleasant features, radiating affability and kindness of heart, with eyes that will knock the starch out of the countenance of a rogue speedy and positive as a barometer will indicate a gathering storm.

When Major Gen. Appleton Howe was acting commander of the first division, Major Porter, we believe, served on his staff as aide de camp. Recently he retired from the firm of Porter, Loud & Co., with, it is said, an ample fortune.

Had the Major graduated from West Point, and confronted the rebellion, no doubt he would have been breveted a Major General, been booked a student in astronomy, or if mathematics had been his speciality, would have solved the problem of the day by calculating the combination of figures necessary to define our national debt.

KEOKUCK.

BRAINTREE.

Public improvements.—We notice that a special town meeting has been called by the selectmen of Braintree to see whether the town will give the selectmen power to repair the drawbridge in East Braintree at an expense of about $7000. We doubt very much the probability of such a vote being passed in a full annual town meeting or at any meeting where the town is very fully represented. Our town has acquired the reputation of being behind hand in most all matters of public utility. Men who spend scores of dollars every year for such abominable luxuries as rum, ale, tobacco, gaming, betting, horse racing and all kindred vices will come "en masse" to our town meetings to vote down everything which will tend to add a dollar or so a year to their taxes. One of the greatest wants of the town is a good library and reading room free to all and in connection with the High School. An opportunity was offered to the people of Braintree to have such an one with a library building worthy of the town, through the proposition of Gen Sylvanus Thayer. We were talking with that gentleman a few days since and from his remarks upon the action of the town we received the impression that if the town had acted promptly and rightly in the matter, a greater benefit to the town would have been received than was apparent in the proposition itself. Whether the $40,000 or any part of it should have gone to this purpose instead of being donated to Dartmouth College, we will not pretend to answer for Mr. Thayer, but thus much he says and with truth that Braintree does not appreciate educational advantages, whereas his gift to Dartmouth will be appreciated. But we will not pass too severe strictures upon the majority of the town allowing that the form of Mr Thayer's proposal was such as to place the town under certain obligations which made the question a knotty one to deal with and hence through the lack of public spirit the project fell to the ground. But in looking over the history of the past 2 or 3 years we find other votes where a great lack of public spirit has been manifested as in the accepting of new roads, repairing of highways, and also the meetings in reference to the projected Soldiers monument. Braintree has heretofore had a history of which she may well be proud, and may she now mar the prestige of her spirit, but while her hills and valleys ring with the melody of her village bell, the hum of business, the rattle of her spindles, the daily sound of her factory whistles and the incessant clatter of the hundreds of hammers driving together the boots and shoes which are worn by the miner of California, the Texas Ranger and by travellers the world over, may she continue to cherish the virtues and patrotism of her ancestor.

RUMOR.

Excursion.—The "Warblers" made an excursion down river on Tuesday.

The annual reunion of the Weymouth High School occurs on Monday evening next, at Town House. As these gatherings are of a very interesting character, there will no doubt be a large attendance.

The Congregational Sabbath School of South Braintree, and Baptist Sabbath School of Randolph made an excursion to Nantasket Beach Thursday. The long array of omnibuses, express wagons, and other vehicles filled with pleasure seekers, which passed through this village, presented an animated appearance.

Excursions from Hingham on the steamers William Harrison and Rose Standish are becoming a matter of daily occurence, and to those who can spare but a few hours at a time from business requirements, these popular boats afford a fine opportunity to recuperate the system exhausted by the enervating heats of summer.

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY.

In the whole history of medical discoveries NO REMEDY has performed so many, or such remarkable cures of the numerous affections of the THROAT, LUNGS and CHEST, as this long tried and justly celebrated Balsam. So generally acknowledged is the superior excellence of this remedy that but few of the many who have tested its virtues by experience fail to keep it at hand as a speedy and certain cure for sudden attacks of COLD—fully believing that its remedial powers are comprehensive enough to embrace every form of disease, from the slightest cold to the most dangerous system of pulmonary complaint.

UNSOLICITED TESTIMONY.

From Rev. Francis Lobdell, Pastor of the South Congregational Church, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I consider it a duty which I owe to suffering humanity to bear testimony to the virtues of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I have used it, when I have had occasion for any remedy for Coughs, Colds or Sore Throat, for many years, and never in a single instance has it failed to relieve and cure me. I have frequently been very hoarse on Saturday, and looked forward to the delivery of two sermons on the following day, with sad misgivings, but by a liberal use of the Balsam my hoarseness has invariably been removed, and I have preached without difficulty.

I commend it to my brethren in the ministry, and to public speakers generally, as a certain remedy for the bronchial troubles to which we are peculiarly exposed."

Prepared by SETH W. FOWLE & SON, 18 Tremont St., Boston, and for sale by Druggists generally.

For all the Protean forms of Disease originating in SCROFULA, there is nothing can equal the purifying effects of Iodine when administered in a pure state.

DR. H. ANDERS' IODINE WATER

is a pure solution of Iodine dissolved in water, without a solvent, and it is the best remedy for Scrofula and kindred diseases ever discovered.—Circulars free. Sold by Druggists generally.

BRADLEY'S

Super Phosphate

TAKE NOTICE.

Those who have been unable to get my PHOSPHATE for Planting, are advised to use it at first hoeing on corn, potatoes, or garden vegetables.

A small handful scattered around the plants at this time, and slightly covered with earth, will show its effects immediately after the first rain.—A change in color of the plants will be noticed at once, and you will be surprised to see the quick start it gives them, and more surprised at the end of the season to see the large increase of crops, and at an earlier date.

TRY IT, and be convinced.

TURNIPS

Should never be raised without using 300 to 400 lb of BRADLEY'S SUPER-PHOSPHATE per acre at the time of sowing the seed. It will double the yield, and double the value, as to quality, for feeding stock.

Note the following from the distinguished English Chemist, Dr. Johnson:—

"The same kind of turnips grown on the same field, one with Phosphate and the other with farm-yard manure presents this striking difference in the proportion of Phosphate contained in the ash of the turnips:—The one grown on Phosphate yielded 30 per cent of Phosphate, while the manure turnip contained only 11 per cent of Phosphate. This could not fail to make an important difference in their relative value for the feeding of stock whose bones are growing, and which require a large amount of Phosphate in their food.

BUCKWHEAT

Where BRADLEYS SUPER-PHOSPHATE has been used in growing Buckwheat, the reports of its effects are even more astonishing than other crop. Two hundred and fifty to three hundred pounds to the acre, harrowed in with the seed, on poor soil, is sufficient to make a heavy crop.—My Agents everywhere are authorized to guarantee it to give satisfaction to all who wish to try it for Buckwheat.

Read the following from the distinguished English Chemist, Dr. Johnson:—

"Of the same kind of turnips grown on the same field, one with Phosphate and the other with farm-yard manure presents this striking difference in the proportion of Phosphate in the two kinds of turnips:—The one grown on Phosphate yielded 30 per cent of Phosphate, while the other turnip contained only 11 per cent of Phosphate. This could not fail to make an important difference in their relative value for the feeding of stock whose bones are growing, and which require a large amount of Phosphate in their food."

BUCKWHEAT

Of BRADLEY'S SUPER-PHOSPHATE has been used in growing Buckwheat, the reports of its use are even more astonishing than other crops. Two hundred and fifty to three hundred pounds to the acre, harrowed in with the seed, on any soil, is sufficient to make a heavy crop.—Dealers everywhere are authorized to guarantee perfect satisfaction to all who wish to try it on Buckwheat.

MRS. L. W. TUCK'S

SUPPORTER!

Three Supports Combined in One.

A SUPPORTER like this has never before been offered to the public. It can be arranged to

FIT ANY SIZE OR FORM;

is easily adjusted, convenient to wear, causing no heat or irritation, ELASTIC being used instead of steel springs, rendering it

Comfortable and Easy

in any posture the body may assume.

Great care has been taken in arranging the Support for the Uterus. The wearing of the Supporter a part of the time (for no Supporter should be worn constantly) will not only afford temporary relief and stay the progress of the disease, but in most cases of one of the most distressing and discouraging diseases to which woman is subject.

Ladies, this is not merely an advertisement.—One of your own sex has arranged it, after years of suffering and fruitless search to find some support or compress that would bring relief. She aroused herself, fully persuaded she could invent a Supporter which would benefit herself; and as she gained strength and went into society, she was constantly meeting those similarly afflicted; and listening to the oft repeated question, "Oh, how I suffer; can't you do something to help me?" after two years more of study and toil, during which time she left no means unemployed to gain knowledge concerning her work, she is prepared to answer the question satisfactorily.

And now let me say to those who are thus afflicted, at the earnest solicitation of friends I propose to devote

TUESDAY AND THURSDAY

of each week to any who may need my services in fitting Supporters or bandages, and will give such advice and make such examinations as they may need, at my residence on

DEPOT STREET, SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

AGRICULTURAL

We have frequently observed a raspberry bush, in the open field, which cattle have pruned to a stub. The next season it is loaded with fruit. If the cattle had not nipped off the tender canes, most of the energies of the plants would have been exhausted in producting new wood in excessive quantities. Let us take the hint to keep raspberry bushes, and the canes of thrifty blackberries, well cut back, so that the plants will not grow themselves to death.

Weeds among strawberry plants should be pulled up, and not cut up with hoes, as the roots of strawberry plants lie near the suface, where a hoe would do incalculable injury to the growing plants.

On most grain farms there is more or less wild mustard, or hedge mustard, and some other kinds of noxious weeds, which dropped most of their seeds in the field when the grain was harvested. As soon as the grain is removed from the field, let the ground be thoroughly harrowed. Then almost every seed will germinate before winter; and autumn plowing will exterminate the young plants. But, if the seed be plowed under, or allowed to remain on the surface of the land, noxious weeds will appear, next season, in countless numbers, and be the means of diminishing the yield of the next crop of grain. Clean culture seldom fails to bring bountiful crops.

See that milch cows, during these sultry days, are not confined in the yard early in the morning, while the dew is on the grass, which is the best time of all the day or night for them to fill themselves. Besides this, see that every animal, from the chicken to the carriage horse, has a supply of pure water, at all times; and let the trough or tub be scrubbed out occasionally. The taste of many fine cows and elegant horses is as delicate as the taste of some fastidious ladies. For this reason a horse or cow should not be required to drink at a fountain, or pool, where the owner would not quench his own thirst.

Young colts, instead of being required to follow the dam all day, should be confined in a wellfenced yard or airy stable and allowed to suck twice or thrice a day. This will be far better for both dam and colt than to keep the colt on a trot these sultry days.

Singular Birth in California.—The most exciting incident that has occurred recently in California is the birth of an extraordinary pair of twins in the city of Sacramento, which, had they lived, would have totally eclipsed the fame of the celebrated Siamese, and made the fortune of their happy parents. The two children were united from the umbilicus to the hips, the face looking toward each other, and the bodies so completely united as to appear but one. The legs and arms were were perfect and of medium size, and indeed above the navel and below the hips the bodies were perfect and well formed. I am told by a medical gentleman who saw them that they presented a piteously curious appearance, and reminded him of the quaint devices we sometimes see in Hindoo idols. Fortunately for themselves, they were born dead, and their parents were Christian enough to have them decently buried, instead of giving them up to be preserved in pickle in some medical curiosity shop, as they were pressed to do by a deputation of scientific men, who rushed to Sacramento on the announcement of the birth.

Scandinavian.—The Scandinavian population of the United States is increasing. There are nearly 50,000 of them in New York, where they have four churches and several beneficial and others societies. In Brooklyn there are 5,000 scandinavians; in Boston, 1,000; in Chicago, 20,000; in St. Louis, 1,000; in San Francises, 2,000; and in different larger cities in the West and Northwest from 1,000 to 2,000. The larger part of the Scandinavians are living in the states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and Kansas, in large Scandinavian settlements. They have over 100 parishes—two-thirds Lutheran, one-third Baptist and Methodist. The whole Scandinavian population in the Union is about a million.

Drunkenness.—What is it that saps the morals of youth, kills the germ of generous ambition, desolates the domestic hearth, renders families fatherless; digs dishonored graves? Drunkenness. What makes a man shunned by the relatives who loved him, contemned by the contemporaries who outstripped him, reviled by the very wretches who betrayed? Drunkenness.—What fills our asylums with lunatics, our ponds and rivers with suicides, our jails with thieves and murderers, our streets with infamy? The same destructive vice. He who by precept, whether oral or written, should succeed in rendering drunkenness detestable, and sobriety an unviolated virtue throughout the land, will confer on all classes of society a boon beyond all price.

Why is a washerwoman like a ship of the line? Because she draws much water.

A down east clergyman says the skunk is a domestic animal, and may be very easily trained. He will doubtless enjoy a monopoly of the business.

PIQUANTS.

"William," said a teacher to one of his pupils, "can you tell me what makes the sun rise in the east?" "Don't know, sir," replied William, "'cept it be that the east makes everything rise."

"Won't you take half of this poor apple?" said a pretty damsel. "No I thank you: I would prefer a better half." Eliza blushed, and referred him to her papa.

Owls Gizzards.—The Stockton Independent relates the following: "An amusing 'sell' is related on a young fellow in the upper country, whose knowledge of the anatomy of feathered bipeds was not the most extensive. He was told that a Chinese doctor at the Bay would give twenty dollars apiece for owls' gizzards. Seeing a snug little sum shining brightly before him, verdant spent a month in trapping fifty owls, when he consigned them one by one to dissection, and found 'nary a gizzard!' His disappointment and black despair can be imagined on discovering that owls have no gizzards."

One day the boys in some southern regiment were grumbling about a change in their position, that had thrown them behind the dirt of other troops, when a very begrimed and dirty fellow passed alone, when Corporal D. cried out, "Here's a fellow won't complain for he fights behind his own dirt." What a happy political illustration have we here; how many are now fighting behind their dirt!"

Drovers vs. Fops.—Dinner was spread in the cabin of that peerless steamer, the "New world," and a splendid company were assembled about the table. Among the passengers thus prepared for gastronomic duty was a little creature of the genus fop. The delicate animal turned his head affectedly aside with—

"Waitah?"

"Sah?"

"Bwing me a pwopellah of a fwemale woostah."

"Yis, sah!"

"And, waitah, tell the steward to wub my plate with a wegetable called onion, which will give a delicious flavaw to my dinnah."

While the refined exquisite was giving his order, a jolly Western drover had listened with open mouth and protruding eyes. When the diminutive creature paused, he brought his fist down upon the table with a force that made every dish bounce, and then thundered out—

"Here! you ace of spades!"

"Yis, sah."

"Bring me a thundering big plate of skunk's gizzards!"

"Sah!"

"And, you old ink pot, tuck a horse blanket under my chin, and rub me down with brickbats while I feed."

The poor dandy showed a pair of straight tails instanter, and the whole table joined in a "tremendous roar."

The right name for Fractional Currency. Fractured Currency.

"How sharp your toe nails is!" said Paddy, when he caught a hornet in his hand.

An ignoramus had been sick, and on recovering, was told by the doctor that he might take a little animal food. "No, sir," said he; "I took your gruel easy enough, but hang me if I can your hay and oats."

An entomologist lately fell in love with a young woman on account of her beetle brows.

They tell of one of the unterrified at Bridgeport, Conn., who was especially eager to see the Presidential party, exclaiming, as he rushed up to the car:

"I don't care shucks about Johnson; it's Parson Nasby that I want to see."

A teacher of vocal music asked an old lady if her grand-son had any ear for music? "Wa'al," said the old woman, "I raly don't know; wont you take the candle and see?"

A young gentleman, or an elderly one, after having paid his addresses to a lady for some time, "popped the question." The gentleman did not wish to frighten the lady, and consequently remained quiet, for some time, when she exclaimed, "scare me again."

A very religious old lady being asked her opinion of the organ of a church, the first time she had ever seen or heard one replied: "It is a pretty box of whistles, but oh! it's an awful way to spend the Sabbath!"

Badly Scared.—The fighting editor of a Mississippi paper tells a good joke on himself. Says he, I went up to a great strapping, two fisted country man, who owed me some money, and seemed in no hurry to liquidate, and persuaded in my own mind, that he wouldn't fight, I told him "pifically" that if he didn't "shell out" instanter, I would wallop him.—The fellow was scared, and probably thought I was "sure enough" going to knock him into the middle of next week. He was awfully scared—too much so even to run away—and so he blazed away, with one of his huge fists, and knocked me down! The trouble was in this affair I scared the fellow too bad! and the lick he struck me was directed by fear—at all events it was fearful blow.

In place of a coarse, ruddy, flushed face, she had a soft ruby complexion of almost marble smoothness, and instead of twenty-three she really appeared but eighteen. Upon inquiry as to the cause of so great a change, she plainly told them that she used the Circassian Balm, and considered it an invaluable acquisition to any lady's toilet. By its use any Lady or Gentleman can improve their personal appearance an hundred fold. It is simple in its combination as Nature herself, is simple. Yet unsurpassed in its efficacy in drawing impurities from, also beading, cleansing and beautifying the skin and complexion. THE DIFFERENCE.

The following lines recently came to a Western paper enclosing a subscription:

One took a paper, and his life
Was happier than a king's;
His children all could read and write,
And talk of men and things.

The other took no paper
While strooling through the wood
A tree fell down upon his crown
And hurt him—as it should.

Had he been reading of the news,
At home, like neighbor Jim,
I'll bet a cent that accident
Would not have happened him.

IN A GRAIN BIN.

A laborer in an elevator in Chicago who had a quarrel with an English countryman of his before he came to America, and who had been followed by his enemy for purposes of revenge, describes an attempt to take his life by thrusting him into the grain funnel, in the following thrilling narrative:

"Drifting hither and thither, working a week in one place, a month in another, I finally brought up as a laborer in an elevator in Chicago. It is not nice work, I must say; to me an elevator always seemed a monster, restless with hungry life, and we poor fellows did nothing but tend to its wants, running up and down stairs through clouds of choking dust, and deafened with the din of rattling machinery—no light job, I can assure you, seeing that an elevator is seven to ten stories high, and big enough to hold the houses of a small village.—The army of banded cups would drink to emptiness a car or a vessel loaded with grain, and carry it up to giddy heights to be tumbled into huge bins.—These bins are forty to sixty feet deep, and funnel-shaped at the bottom, where there is a gate which opens and lets the grain into a spout. If a gate is opened when a bin has six or seven thousand bushels in it, you can judge that there would be a whirlpool that would suck down the strongest man to a horrible death. Wonderful, terrible monsters these elevators, with their humps of houses on their roofs, their awkward spouts, their dismal, dusty chasms of empty bins.

I had been at work about a week in one of the largest of these elevators, when, one afternoon I was sent in company with another laborer, a big whiskered, swearing, ruffian fellow, to tend a bin that was about to be emptied. We were sitting on the edge of the bin, waiting for the grain to run, when my companion, who seemed to be under the influence of liquor, called out,

"Bob, it's a long way down there," pointing into the half-filled bin.

"Twenty feet, perhaps,"

"Twouldn't kill a man, the fall, eh?" moving closer to me.

"No."

"But it's good as water to drown him, if the grain be moving, and the dust and chaff flying?"

"He wouldn't live long, that's sure."

"Then go down there!" he yelled, giving me a blow and a push that hurled me headlong from my seat.

The fall did not hurt me a bit, and I began to crawl toward the rope ladder hanging against the side of the bin, thanking God that the grain hadn't begun to move. But as soon as the ruffian saw what I was after, he went round and pulled up the ladder.

"Let that alone," I shouted, feeling how little hope of escape I had with the ladder out of my reach.

He laughed and flung the ropes over a beam.

"Do you mean to murder me?" I cried.

"No, I'm going to leave you there, Bob. You have fallen in, you see.—That'll be the verdict when they find your body. You'll want your shovel, man, to make the thing look natural.—I'll throw it to you in a minute!"

I felt quite sure that it was so dark in the bin that he could not see me plainly, if at all, and that he would try and hit me with the shovel. I crawled close to the side, and looking up could see him directly above me peering down into the gloom, with the shovel in his outstretched arm, ready to spear at me as if I were a fish. Then followed a stillness which continued for five minutes, during which he stood on guard.

Suddenly I heard a muffled rattle of machinery and felt a strange power pulling at my feet, while my whole body seemed to be sliding down a bottomless pit. In an instant I knew what was happening.

The grain was running.

I madly flung out my arms, and my fingers clutched one of the upright posts. As I drew myself up against the receding torrent, I heard a laugh above me and the words,

"Remember Bessie Tillett, Bob Campbell, and that I loved her whom you stole away from me."

When I looked up the man was gone from my sight. I don't know how I managed to climb that high beam. I think there were nails here and there that helped my feet and hands; for when I was rescued my body was found to be covered from head to foot with gashes and scratches. Any how, slowly and painfully I managed to reach the top and threw my left arm over the edge of the bin, gasping for breath. Then, when I was so near to safety, to life, to hope, I felt a horrible, sickening blow, the arm, battered and broken, lost its grasp, and I fell back into the darkness and horror of the bin. Hardly had I touched the yielding wheat when my shovel was thrown from above and struck within a few inches of my head. Though my arm pained me terribly, I didn't faint. I was helpless. The dust was stifling, the grain was whirling and hissing as it slid toward the vortex, a few feet distant. I heard the murmur of machinery in motion and the rushing sound of the wheat as it passed into the spout. Where I lay the grain had not yet begun to move into the whirlpool, but I knew it would only be a minute or two before I should be tossing and struggling in the stifling mass and then be thrown out, stifled and dead, at the spout.

The dust seemed to circle about me and leave me a little air to gasp. I was going downward, slowly but irresistibly: every grain beneath me was moving and shifting and slowly descending. The circle of the whirlpool had reached me, and was dragging me down to torture and to death. It was horrid agony of soul and body.

I screamed for help, but the dust entered my mouth, nose and eyes, strangled and blinded me. I looked for the shovel. It had disappeared in the depths of the spout.

Maimed, and gasping for breath, I fought against the power that was slowly, but surely, dragging me down. I thrust my arm deep into the wheat and tried to pull myself up. In the dismal, murky light of this hideous den I struggled as but few men ever struggled. I was a giant in my battle for life. I thought no more of my broken arm. I was burning with heat, parched with thirst, blinded and choked with the fine dust, and in my madness I tore my clothes from my body and flung them away, and the grains of wheat scraped my wounds and pierced my naked flesh as I tried to spring forward; but nothing hurt me, not even my arm.

Hard as I struggled, I could not get clean away from the whirlpool. If I leaped forward, or crawled a little way over the treacherous surface, I found, when I stepped, that I was swiftly sliding back to the old place. It seemed as if I struggled in this way for hours, yet I accomplished nothing. Tired and breathless, I looked around, and felt sure that in less than five minutes I should be in the spout and a dead man. My efforts were in vain. There was a certain circle beyond which I could not go. Once the thought came to my mind that to save myself from the horrors of the death before me, I had better open a vein and bleed to death; but I could not find my knife, and had I found it I might not have been able to use it. When hope deserted me a kind of resignation to my fate succeeded, and I closed my eyes wearily, never thinking to open them again.

Gradually my body slid downward.—The noise of the grain rushing through the valve or gate became louder and louder; the stifling dust was thicker and heavier. A thousand unseen, irresistible forces were drawing me to destruction. Suddenly my body fell several feet, I felt the tremendous suction of the whirlpool. The grain crept up my legs; it reached and pressed heavily upon my breast, as if to squeeze the life out of me; it ascended higher and higher, and clasped my throat.

At this moment I felt that there was a strange silence; even in my half unconscious condition I realized a change in my surroundings. The dust began to settle. I realized what had happened.

The valve was closed!

At the very gate death opened to receive me there was an obstacle, and I fainted away with joy. When I became conscious again, I heard a voice crying out.

"Is anybody down there?"

The question was twice repeated before I could answer, and so faint was my voice that I could make no reply but in a husky whisper.

"It's a false alarm, Jim: we are fooling away time by traveling up and down these twenty stories. We can't stop work for such nonsense."

"It's not nonsense," said the one who had first spoken. "You saw, as I, the shovel, hat and coat come through the spout. There's a man to follow, this way or that. Hillo, there!"

It seemed to me as if I had the nightmare, so hard did I try to speak, but I couldn't make a noise. Yet when I heard them going away, leaving me to a horrible death, the thought produced such a yell that I myself was frightened. The men came back.

"I knew he was there," said Jim.—"Are you hurt, man? Of course he is or he would not be there. Where's the ladder? That looks strange—it's hanging over the beam. Give me the rope and lantern."

I saw the light, a blessed star of relief, come slowly down against the wall of the bin. A little later I was raised as tenderly as possible to the top of the bin, and a surgeon soon obtained. He looked at my arm, that was making me cry with pain.

"Mortification; amputation;" was the judgment, and my arm was cut off.

RECOLLECTIONS OF EARLY ANTI-SLAVERY REFORMERS.

BY REV. SAMUEL J. MAY.

Arthur Tappan.

The words and manner of Mr. Judson in the interview I had with him on the 11th of March, of which I gave a pretty full report in your paper of the 30th ult., convinced me that he would do all that could be done by legal and political devices to abolish Miss Crandall's schools. His success in obtaining from the legislature the enactment of the infamous "Black Law" showed too plainly that the majority of the people of the State were on the side of the oppressor. But I felt sure that God and good men would be our helpers in the contest to which we were committed. Assurances of approval and of sympathy came from many, and ere long a proffer of all the pecuniary assistance we could need was made by one who was then himself a host. At that time Mr. Arthur Tappan was one of the wealthiest merchants in the country, and was wont to give to religious and philanthropic objects as much in proportion to his means as any benefactor who has lived in the land, before or since his day. I was not then personally acquainted with him; but he had become deeply interested in the cause of the poor, despised, enslaved millions in our country, and alive to whatever affected them. Much to my surprise, and much more to my joy, a few weeks after the commencement of the contest, and just after the enactment of the Black Law and the imprisonment of Miss Crandall, I received from Mr. Tappan a most cordial letter. He expressed his entire approbation of the position I had taken in defence of Miss Crandall's benevolent enterprise and his high appreciation of the importance of maintaining, in Connecticut especially, the right of colored people not less than of white to any amount of education they might wish to obtain, and the respect and encouragement due to any teacher who would devote himself or herself to their instruction. He added, "This contest in which you have been providentially called to engage will be a serious, perhaps a violent one. It may be prolonged and very expensive. Nevertheless, it ought to be persisted in to the last. I venture to presume, sir, that you cannot well afford what it may cost. You ought not be left, even it you are willing, to bear alone the pecuniary burden. I shall be most happy to give you all the help of this sort that you may need. Consider me your banker. Spare no necessary expense. Command the services of the ablest lawyers. See to it that this great case shall be thoroughly tried, cost what it may. I will cheerfully honor your drafts to enable you to defray that cost." Thus upheld you will not wonder that I was somewhat elated. At Mr. Tappan's suggestion I immediately "retained" the Hon. William W. Ellsworth, the Hon. Calvin Goddard and the Hon. Henry Strong, the three most distinguished members of the Connecticut bar. They all confirmed me in the opinion that the "Black Law" was unconstitutional and would probably be so pronounced if we should carry it up to the United States Court. They moreover instructed me that, as the act for which Miss Crandall was to be tried was denounced as criminal, it would be within the province of the jury of our State court to decide upon the character of the law as well as the conduct of the accused, and that therefore it would be allowable and proper for them to urge the wickedness of the law in bar of Miss C.'s condemnation under it. But before we get to the trials of Miss Crandall under Mr. Judson's law, I have more to tell you about Mr. Arthur Tappan.

He requested me to keep him fully informed of the doings of Miss Crandall's persecutors. And I assure you I had too many evil things to report of them. They insulted and annoyed her and her pupils in every way their malice could devise. The storekeepers, the butchers, and milk-pedlars of the town, all refused to supply their wants, and whenever her father, brother of other relatives, who, happily, lived but a few miles off, were seen coming to bring her and her pupils the necessaries of life, they were insulted and threatened. Her well was defiled with the most offensive filth, and her neighbors refused her and the thirsty ones about her even a cup of cold water,—leaving them to depend for that essential element upon the scanty supplies that could be brought from her father's farm. Nor was this all; the physician of the village refused to minister to any who were sick in Miss C.'s family, and the trustees of the church forbade her to come with any of her pupils into the house of the Lord.

In addition to the insults and annoyances mentioned above, the newspapers of the county and other parts of the State frequently gave currency to the most egregious misrepresentations of the conduct of Miss Crandall and her pupils, and the basest insinuations against her friends and patrons. Yet our corrections and replies were persistently refused a place in their columns. The publisher of one of the county papers, who was personally friendly to me, and whom I had assisted to establish in business, confessed to me that he dared not admit into his paper an article in defence of the Canterbury school. It would be, he said, the destruction of his establishment. Thus situated, we were continually made to feel the great disadvantage at which we were contending with the hosts of our enemies.

In one of my letters to Mr. Tappan, when thus sorely pressed I let fall from my pen, "O that I could only leave home long enough to visit you! For I could tell you in an hour more things that I wish you to know than I could write in a week." A day or two afterwards, about as quickly as he could then get to me after the receipt of my letter, the door of my study was opened and in walked Arthur Tappan. I sprung to my feet, and gave him a pressure of the hand which told him more emphatically than words could have done how overjoyed I was to see him. In his usual quiet manner and undertone, he said, "Your last letter implied that you were in so much trouble, I thought it best to come and see, and consider with you what it will be advisable for us to do." I soon spread before him the circumstances of the case—the peculiar difficulties by which we were beset—the increased and increasing malignity of Miss Crandall's persecutors, provoked, and almost justified in the public opinion, by the false reports that were diligently circulated, and which we had no means of correcting. "Let me go," said he, "and see for myself Miss C. and her school, and learn more of the particulars of the sore trials to which her benevolence and her fortitude seem to be subjected." As soon as possible the horse and chaise were brought to the door, and the good man went to Canterbury. In a few hours he returned. He had been delighted, nay, deeply affected, by the calm determination which Miss Crandall evinced, and the quiet courage with which she had inspired her pupils. He had learned that the treatment to which they were subjected by their neighbors was in some respects worse even than I had represented it to him; and he said in a low, firm tone of voice, which showed how thoroughly in earnest he was, "she must be protected and sustained. The cause of the whole oppressed, despised colored population of our country is to be much affected by the decision of this question."

After some further consultation he rose to his feet and said. "You are almost helpless without the press. You must issue a paper, publish it largely, send it to all the persons whom you know in the county and State, and to all the principal newspapers throughout the country. Many will subscribe for it and contribute otherwise to its support, and I will pay whatever more it may cost." No sooner said than done. We went without delay to the village, where fortunately there was a pretty well furnished printing office that had been lately shut up up for want of patronage. We found the proprietor, examined the premises, satisfied ourselves that there were materials enough to begin with; and Mr. Tappan engaged for my use for a year the office, press, types, and whatever else was necessary to commence at once the publication of a newspaper, to be devoted to the advocacy of all human rights in general, and to the defence of the Canterbury school and its heroic teacher in particular.

We walked back to my house, communing together about the great conflict for liberty to which we were committed, the spirit in which it ought to be conducted on our part, and especially the course to be pursued in the further defence of Miss Crandall. Soon after, the stage-coach came along. Mr. Tappan, after renewed assurances of support, gave me a hearty farewell and stepped on board to return to New York. He left me the proprietor of a printing office, and with ample means to maintain, as far as might be necessary, the defence of the Canterbury school against the unrighteous and unconstitutional law of the State of Connecticut. I need now only add that the trials at law were protracted until August, 1834, and that they, together with the conduct of the newspaper, cost me more than six hundred dollars, all of which amount was most promptly and kindly paid by that true philanthropist—Arthur Tappan.

Canning Fruit.—Like many others, I tried, again and again, to seal fruit cans so as to keep the fruit without moulding upon the top. I was particular in following the printed directions in general use, but found that my cans, when cold, would not be more than two-thirds full, and in a few days a white mould would appear upon the top. I applied to a friend who, I know, canned large quantities for her own use. She showed me fruits over a year old, quite fresh and good, the cans full, and no mould. I at once adopted her plan, which I have since followed with great success. I have no interest in the manufacture of cans, and believe that every one should do his own advertising, but I prefer that kind in which you have only the can, glass cover and rubber to use. Fruit can be kept just as well without, as with sugar; and those sealed up for pies are better without any, as they will retain their flavor far better. Brass kettles should never be used. Tin pans or kettles lined with porcelain, so as to preserve the most flavor of the fruit, are the best. While my fruit is being scalded I put a gill of cold water into each can, and fill up with hot water, putting the covers and rubber also into hot water. The fruit need not be cooked—only heated to a boiling point,—unless in preparing pears and quinces, or some other hard fruits, that may require more cooking, and then only just so that a straw may be passed through, always being careful to have juice enough to cover the fruit. As soon as boiling hot empty a can and fill; then another, or as many as can be attended to. Let the cans stand open until you can comfortably bear the hand upon them. Meanwhile more fruit may be heated. Cut thick writing paper in round pieces the size of the top of each can, and when the contents of the can are cooled, slip a piece over the top of the fruit in each can and at once fill up on top of the paper with boiling juice (saved for that purpose) and put on the covers as soon as filled, according to directions given. I often seal up cherries and tomatoes, only for winter use, in one-gallon stone jars that are small at the top, prepared just the same as for glass. Leave off the covers, seal with melted rosin, adding a little tallow. Try it on a piece of cloth; if too brittle, add more tallow, and vice versa. Cut a paper also for the top of the jar, just so that it will come over the edge, and dip a piece of thick cloth into rosin, only on one side, spread over the jar and tie down; now, with a spoon, dip and spread on the hot rosin, until entirely covered, pressing down the sides with the hands dipped in cold water. When cold, if the jar is air-tight, the cover will be depressed a quarter of an inch or more. But if it be level, then you must seal it over again. Those who can common sour cherries, will find them greatly improved by first draining of all the juice, and then covering them with water—scald and drain off, and cover again for sealing, canning, preserving or drying.—Farm and Fireside.

An Enormous Cannon has been cast at Ruelle for the Paris Exposition. This great piece of ordnance weighs more than 76,000 pounds, and was drawn by 36 powerful horses. It is asserted that a secondary monster gun, upon the same model, is in a very forward state at Ruelle. These cannon are larger than than the guns sent by England to the Exposition.

FROG EATING.

Chicago eats yearly 100,000 pairs of frog's legs; in other words, 100,000 frogs die annually for our good. They enter life as tadpoles, and depart from it fried in crumbs.

The frogs are chiefly supplied to this city by a Mr. Buck, who is a German living about two miles south of Hyde Park. He devotes his whole time to killing frogs, finding that it pays him well. He and his assistants rise early in the morning and go to the sloughs lying southward, carrying with them long sticks. Dressed in high boots and old clothes, they walk through and along the sloughs, looking for frogs. When one is seen, it is struck on the head with a long stick, then the frog dies, and his hind legs are cut off and skinned and put in a basket. To kill them, great care and skill are required, as they are cautious and cunning. As soon as they hear footsteps they will jump from the bank or grass into the water; in a few minutes the queer shaped head will rise just above the suface of the water and peer cautiously around to see who's there. That is the moment for killing it, and it must be done very quickly. Sometimes they are caught out of the water, but not often now-a days.

When, however, the day's hunting has not been very successful, and Mr. Buck has not killed as many as he has orders for, he goes out again at night' He takes with him a lantern, a pole with a piece of red cloth attached to it. The light from the lantern is thrown on the water, and the red piece of cloth on the pole is cast in where it shines. The frogs are attracted by the light, and go to the spot; they see the red cloth, are curious, and bite it. Their teeth become entangled in it and they are drawn out of the water. This is the easiest way of catching the frogs, but it is less practiced because it has to be done in the night time.

When Mr. Buck first began to kill them it was very easy work, for they did not seem to fear him; but that is all over now, and the frogs have lost all their old faith in man. They see that men only seek after them to cut their hind legs, and the cast them aside as they do women, after having won their love. So they are shy of Mr. Buck, and have to be battered on the head before they will come near to him.

Silver Palace Sleeping Cars.—The following is a hasty description of them as they appeared at the N. J. Central R. R. Station yesterday. Imagine a single sleeping car built and fitted up at a cost of $20,000, and then put six together and you have a rough estimate of the total expense. Each car is about 60 feet long, with a hall running the entire length on one side, while the rest of the car is fitted up with state rooms in in a very superb manner. There are five of these state rooms each containing from four to six berths. For instance some have two double berths; others six single, each berth ten feet long and running across the car—not parallel with the sides as in ordinary railroad cars. By this arrangement passengers can sleep as comfortably as if in their quiet homes regardless of the rocking and jarring of the trains—barring accidents, of course. The ceilings of the various parlors are frescoed in the highest style of art, and each room is provided with a toilet and folding table—the latter being quite a novelty in its way. It can be opened out to accommodate six persons or can be folded up so as to pack away in a drawer, where it is stowed under the berths when not in use. Ladies are provided with a separate and neatly arranged wash room at one end of the car, and gentlemen are similarly accommodated at the other. Each room is furnished with large and elegant hanging lamp, and near the door of each, similar ones hang, surmounted by silver-plated dome. The hall, before referred to, is amply supplied with camp chairs for the use of those who desire to look out at the windows. In this progressive age, when nothing is expected to be wonderful, or surprising, it may sound strange to say that the equipage and surroundings of this Silver Palace Excursion car is really surpassing in splendor and comfort anything heretofore known or conceived. These cars were built in the shops of the company at Fort Wanye.

Our Boys and Girls.—The Aug. 10th number of Oliver Optic's magazine, contains two more chapters of "Breaking Away; or, The Fortunes of a Student," an interesting story by the editor. HYDROPHOBIA.

Some eight weeks ago Miss Selma Eller, residing at Beck's station on the Peru Railroad, in Hamilton County, some fifteen miles north of Indianapolis was bitten by a rabid dog while she was endeavoring to drive him out of the house. The wound was on the finger, and so very slight that it excited no alarm, although the dog was known to be mad. As usual in cases of hydrophobia, she thought nothing more of the matter untill the morning of Monday the 25th ult., when on going to wash her face, the touch of water "made her shudder," as she described it. The fearful truth flashed on her instantly, but being a lady of great self-command, she simply said to her sister, "I am going to go mad; I can't live," adding that she would, however, "finish spinning the rolls," she was engaged upon. She worked on during the day, with some increase of the horrible symptoms, but nothing visible to others: and the next morning on sitting down to the table she remarked to the family, "You must take that water from the table, or I can't eat anything." She ate but little and got up, saying she would go to work again. She continued through that day as before, but with a decided repugnance to water, of which, she said, "the very sight sent a tingling feeling through her." She also complained that the glistening face of the clock affected her in the same way.

On Wednesday she was too far overcome to work, and while standing on the floor speaking to some of her family, she began grinding her teeth, and directly after fell down in a fit, the foam working out of her mouth, her teeth gnashing, and her body frightfully convulsed. Some of the younger children, who were with her at the time, ran out in great alarm, and the neighbors hurrying in found her on the floor near the fire in the same horrible condition but she bit so furiously at every one who touched her that it was impossible to do anything with her. The fire was removed so that she might not injure herself by it, and she was left lying until the spasm had passed off. She was then placed upon the bed, and Dr. Rooker called in. When he arrived she was again convulsed and senseless, uttering short barking sounds, and snapping at everything that approached her. A bloody froth was constantly issuing from her mouth, which she tried to spit at those around her. He caused her to be tied down in the bed, and proceeded to administer morphine to relieve her agony. In a lucid interval she remonstrated, saying "I must die, I know it, and I want to die in my senses, so don't stupify me with medicine." After another fit, the doctor proposed another dose of morphine, and at last she consented, but added: "You must give it to me with water." But this remedy produced little effect. The awful suggestions of doggish sound and the same frantic efforts to bite. She bit her hands terribly, and bit pieces out of the pillow and bed clothes. Dr. A. G. Ruddle was also called in, but his assistance was as unavailing as that of Dr. Rooker, they determined to try the effect of bromide of pottassium which had been recommended by some European physicians in cases of hydrophobia. Dr. Ruddle happened to have a small quantity with him, it was at once administered, and the treatment steadily kept up till nearly two ounces had been given. The symptoms continued with little or no apparent abatem ent till Sunday when they were consider able less marked. The fits occurred less frequently and with less severity. The unfortunate lady had ceased biting herself, and had sufficient knowledge of her situation to wrap her arms up tightly in the bed clothes, when she felt the spasm coming on, to keep them out of danger. Though very far from being out of danger, the abatement of the symptons has been so decided as to create some hope of her recovery, which if realized, will make this one of the most remarkable cases on record.

The first week of dog-days has given us a fair specimen of dog-day temperature. Sunday and Monday were extremely uncomfortable; especially the latter day, when there was but little air stirring and the atmosphere was charged with vapor. Sunday night was the most oppressive of the season, the mercury standing at 75 deg the following morning. The thermometer rose to 88 deg on Sunday and 86 deg on the day following.

The cholera is increasing in the far West, and now prevails at Forts Gibson, Larned and Dodge, as well as at Fort Harker. Ten deaths have also occurred among the troops guarding the railway line beyond Fort Harker.

THE WEYMOUTH GAZETTE.

THURSDAY, AUG. 15, 1867.

BOSTON, Aug. 12, 1867.

Mr. Editor:—In common with all who endeavor to faithfully serve and instruct the public, I desire first to place myself right on the record; therefore I hasten to correct a few errors that have unaccountably crept into my previous correspondence. In my first, through carelessness of my own, probably, or through an oversight of the printer, possibly, I do not pretend to determine which, I am made to say "Beam-Stone," where I intended to have written "Bean-Stone;" and in my last, where I ought to have written "Bee-cone," my printed copy reads "Bee-come;" somewhat important changes when we come to a full understanding of the matter in hand. There having been, however, no damage done, and the public having been placed upon their guard, I am ready to tell you something about our streets.

I must acknowledge in the first place that there is an irregularity in these, which cannot be satisfactorily explained; a mystery, which, after the most careful research, I have not been able wholly to unravel. To a stranger, there is a slight confusion in the plan of their development, which may lead him into difficulty. This, of course, will be understood by the discerning traveller as a necessary caution, for which he will have occasion to thank me, should he ever visit our village. As I have intimated, there is a little irregularity and confusion in the arrangement of our streets, and it is exceedingly difficult to ascertain upon what principles they were originally laid out, and how it comes about that they are found in their present unsatisfactory condition.

The most plausible theory, as regards the cause, that I have been able, thus far, to discover, is this. In early times, most of the land was unoccupied, and of not sufficient value to produce a claim of ownership, and the village school, in which were gathered the aspiring geniuses among the youthful population, was presided over by a man of most remarkable ability and originality, although by a strange misfortune his name has failed to come down to his grateful countrymen of these later generations. Profoundly skilled in mathematics, and fully impressed with their incalculable importance, his genius suggested a plan, at once bold, original and eminently practical, by which to instil the grand science into the minds of his pupils.

No sooner was the plan suggested than it was put to a severe and practical test. The school-room was immediately deserted, and master and scholars, in the prosecution of their investigations into the lofty regions of geometrical science, produced these wonderful developments which have since subsided into commons, squares, streets, courts, alleys and the like, and are the astonishment and marvel of the present day. There are certainly squares of all conceivable shapes, in some of which the great problem of squaring the circle has been satisfactorily solved, as well as the lesser one of circling the square. There are commons of all known and unknown forms; streets that run in directions that defy attempts at description, forming corners at all imaginable angles, from the right angle to the circle, so acute, some of them, as to possess nothing but a point; others so obtuse as to have neither beginning nor end; and again others, combining, each in itself, every variety; and thus we behold the profound mysteries of science, made simple and clear by practical illustration, and the hitherto unknown art of teaching, carried, at a single bound, to the highest attainable point.

This may not be the true theory which shall satisfactorily explain the difficulty, nevertheless it offers a solution at once reasonable and fair, and in the absence of a better we are bound to accept it.—True, some have suggested the labyrinths of Egypt and Crete as the origin of the idea, but why go so far for an explanation when we can find a better at home? Others again have suggested "cowpaths," in their ignorance and simplicity, forgetting, that although instinct comes before science, yet it is as much inferior to it as the body is inferior to the soul.—There is a strange peculiarity connected with the attempt to traverse these streets, that appears akin to magic, to the uninitiated; and it is this. There are one or two points from which you may start, that seem to have a singularly fascinating tendency, for, after a tiresome and bewildering walk of more or less duration, you suddenly and unexpectedly find yourself at the point of departure. It seems to make but little difference what direction you take, the result is the same, with the only variation of some minutes of time. I have known instances in which a person has made repeated attempts to leave certain points, and failing in each, was obliged at last to give up in despair, and call in the aid of a coach to help him out of his difficulty.—But I see I am at the end of my sheet, and must close. Yours,

TRUANT.

The average of rain which has fallen this week is unprecedently large.

Aug. 8th, 1867.

In the Washington Morning Chronicle we find the following notice of a school established and conducted by a native of Weymouth.

"The Free Evening School, at East Capitol-street Barracks, is now closed for a vacation until October. This school was commenced two years since by Turner Torry, Esq., who has continued its principal teacher, assisted by his daughter and several ladies. The school has been in a flourishing condition during the past winter and spring, its average attendance of scholars being 125, aged from ten to eighty years, who have been instructed in the rudiments of learning.—The exercises on the closing evening of the school was an exhibition, in which the scholars gave evidence that they had profited greatly from the careful tuition of their friends, combined with their own improvement of evening hours. They have acquired the art of reading and memorizing what they read. They recited selected pieces with much grace and precision, and one young lady pupil, gifted with a fine voice, sung two beautiful songs.

Appropriate addresses were made by General O. O. Howard, Rev. Mr. Needham, Mrs. Gritling, and others. The hall was crowded to overflowing, and among those present were Colonel Walker, of Maine; Captain Cutter, of Illinois; Professor Bartlett, and others. All seemed highly entertained, and frequently applauded the efforts of the scholars with enthusiasm. At the conclusion of the examination General Howard presented fifty Bibles and Testaments to the younger members of the school. Mr. Torry has had a lengthy experience as a teacher, and his school is now one of the model evening schools of the city."

Excursions.—The sabbath school of the 1st Universalist Society made an excursion to Nantasket Beach yesterday, and dined at the Beach House.

The employees of the Flax Mills at East Braintree will participate in an excursion to the Beach next Saturday. The proprietors of the Beach House have been notified to prepare six hundred and fifty dinners for the party.

The steam yatch Grace Irving commanded by Capt. Brown, formerly of the Rose Standish, was chartered on Tuesday last by Mr. A. H. Tirrell, of the "Oak Hall" clothing establishment for the conveyance of a party of friends on a water excursion down the river, among the islands in the harbor, and to Minot Ledge Light. The steamer left Tufts wharf at half-past 9 A. M. with about 70 persons on board, proceeded to Hull, and from thence to the fishing ground off the Harding's, where the lines were dropped and also the contents of various stomachs. The roughness of the water occasioned so general discomfort that the anchor was hove up and the boat headed for Minot Light and from thence a fine run was made to Long Island, where the party landed and indulged in a dance at the Cottage. Fish chowder was served on board in the afternoon, after which the steamer bore away for Hingham via Braintree Bay, and returned to Hull, where an hour was spent in rambling through the village. At 7 1-2 o'clock the party gathered on board, and were conveyed home, well pleased with the care of Mr. Tirrell and Capt. Brown to make the excursion one of general enjoyment.

The sloop Escort left the Landing Monday morning last, for an excursion to various ports in the Bay, having on board Messrs. J. Binney, W. T. Burrell, S. H. Smith, and S. F. Whitmarsh, with their ladies. She arrived at Marblehead in the afternoon; sailed for Salem and Beverly next day, and Nahant on Wednesday. At Marblehead the party took tea on board the pilot boat "George Peabody," Capt. Bailey, from Boston, bound out in search of the English steamer. The Escort will return to Weymouth Saturday.

Improvement of the Village Cemetery is now going on under the direction of Samuel Curtis, Esq. A drive way is being laid out, superfluous trees in the grove on the front are being cut down, and other improvements making.

Trot at the Fair Grounds.—By advertisement it will be seen that a trot will come off at the Fair grounds next Saturday afternoon, and the announcement of the new candidate for public favor, (the Narragansett Maid) will no doubt attract a crowd. The mare, it is said has trotted in 2.36, and as Emperor is well known as a formidable rival, the race will be an exciting one.

OLD SPAIN.

A drive through Old Spain at any period of the year is interesting; but during summer and autumn the attraction is marvellously enhanced by the bustle and commotion incident to the marked activity of resident merchants, the solid column enterprise of its citizens, and the exceeding tidy appearance of their dwellings. Providence has showered natural privileges here with no stinted hand;—skirted north and west by the ocean—salt marsh as far as her boundaries extend, rockweed in abundance for the farmer's manure, uplands of amazing fertility, farms which are nowhere surpassed in this region.

By the way, this "reminds us of a story." On a bright October afternoon, upwards of a quarter of a century since, joined by other lads, we left South Weymouth for a social clam chowder at North Weymouth, on the Neck; arrived at low tide, procured our clams by digging, then high up on the beach adjusted our fixings for a stew. Our sappers reported the want of fuel, in order to make the "pot boil." The surroundings were surveyed, dry rails were espied some little distance from our camp. We were detailed to head a squad and reconnoitre the upland fences, advanced some two hundred yards, found very nice dry rails, was some fatigued in wrenching them from posts; returning and in hailing distance of our quarters, a terrific voice in our rear, stentorian as thunder, was heard—"Stop! hallooo! Stop thief, put down my rails!" We cast a furtive glance back, found the "Old Harry" was nearing us rapidly; the figure seemed the great Goliah magnified.—We ordered our squad into "double quick," but our spoils hastened our doom. Hercules was upon our flank and almost simultaneously thick boots played rapidly all around our "shins," threatening our rear. We lost our chowder, and pushed for South Weymouth. To this day those thick boots of Goliah are fresh in our memory. Notwithstanding this we admire Old Spain. Nowhere in the precincts of Weymouth are the people more ambitious, industrious and enterprising than here. No prettier drive can be found in town than on the road leading from Quincy through here to Hingham. The density of population, splendor of private mansions, unique variety of neat, lovely cottages, indicate vast shrewdness in business operations, and a pretty big pile of savings in the hopper. Facts and figures will show that this opulence was attained largely within the last 20 years, by reason of the boot and shoe business, of which the veteran manufacturers, Messrs. James and Lemuel Torrey, are the pioneers.

Prior to A. D. 1853, the people here worshipped at Rev. Mr. Emery's church. Some 14 years since an Orthodox society was formed here, Rev. Calvin Terry, pastor, and a beautiful house of worship erected, ample in dimensions, neat and attractive in all interior arrangements. Although the offshoot of the parent society, in official stature, moral culture, and giant strides in well doing, it will compare favorably with its distinguished progenitor.

Rev. Mr. Rockwood, the pre sac tor, has been in charge some eig cars and was called from the pastorat the Congregational Society in Hanson. In his present field of labor and usefulness, his popularity and success prove the wisdom of placing him in charge, and the propriety of sundering the ties with his little Hanson flock.

Mr. Rockwood, as a pulpit orator, is eloquent, very clear in utterance, keen in elegant, searching sentences. On extra occasions he exhorts with great force and pungency of application, evincing culture and affluence in language by the able marshaling of the tense import of its stringent points. KEOKUCK.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

High School Gathering.—The annual reunion of the alumni of the two High Schools of this town took place at the Town Hall on Monday evening last.—Chas. Q. Tirrell, President of the evening, introduced the exercises of the evening with appropriate remarks, and short addresses were made by Rev. Calvin Terry, A. P. Tinker, of Hartford, Ct., John J. Loud, of this town.

An hour or two was spent in social intercourse, and discussion of the nice refreshments provided for the occasion. The exercises were intermingled with music by the Quincy Band, and singing of hymns composed for the meeting, and at 11 o'clock the company retired to their homes.

The following gentlemen were elected officers for the next reunion, with power to decide on the character and time of the meeting:—President, John C. Terry, A. B.; Vice President, Nathan H. Pratt; Secretary, Charles A. Blanchard; Executive Committee, Israel N. Terry, Edgar P. Nash, Silas Dizer, Jas. F. Thomas.

Temperance and School Pic-Nic.—The announcement was made last week that the quarterly meeting of the East Norfolk Temperance Union would be held in Rev. Mr. Hayes' church last Tuesday. The annual picnic given by the citizens of South Weymouth to the children of the public schools occurring that day, it was decided to unite the two gatherings in a grand temperance picnic at the grove on the borders of Great Pond. The weather was very auspicious for an out-door gathering, and the attendance, in consequence, was quite large. A procession was formed on the green in the Square, under the marshalship of D. S. Murray, Esq. and marched to the grove, the music being furnished by the Weymouth Band. The exercises were opened with prayer by Rev. Mr. Hubbell of Braintree, followed by a welcoming address from the president of the Union, Elias Richards, Esq. Rev. H. D. Walker, of East Abington, then delivered an interesting essay on stimulants, treating principally of the nature of tobacco as a promoter of the appetite for intoxicating drinks. This was followed with addresses from Rev. Mr. Hubbell, Rev. E. Hewitt, and Rev. Mr. Hayes, Melzar Clark, of Hingham, Dea. Levi Paine of Randolph, John S. Fogg, Esq. Rev. Calvin Terry, D. S. Murray, Esq. Dr. Dearing, of Braintree, Rev. Mr. Walker, and Rev. Edwin Thompson of the State Temperance Alliance.

Resolutions commending the action of the last Legislature upon the subject of a license law, and pledging earnest effort in the future for the cause of temperance were unanimously adopted.

At 1 o'clock a bountiful supply of refreshments, which had been prepared and spread by the ladies, was served to the company, and this, together with the music and addresses, rendered the occasion one of pleasure and profit to all.

The next quarterly meeting of the Union will be held at Hingham the last Tuesday in October.

Base Ball.—A match game of ball was played at Colasset on Saturday last by the first nine of the Liberty Square Club of South Weymouth and the first nine of the Minot Club of Colasset. A heavy rain caused the game to be called at the commencement of the sixth inning. The following is the score:

Sudden Death.—Mrs. Charles Stetson, of the Landing died very suddenly today. She was in usual health the day previous and participated in an excursion down the river on Tuesday.

BRAINTREE.

Death of an Aged Citizen.

Brigadier Gen. Samuel Avery died at the residence of his son-in-law, Geo. R. Stetson, in Braintree, on Monday, the 12th inst., at the age of 78 years and 6 months. He was born in Brattleboro, Vt., but during his boyhood removed to Boston. He was an apprentice to Young & Minns, book printers and publishers. In their office he made himself master of the printer's art, and during life felt proud of his ability to do any part of a printer's work. On the breaking out of the war of 1812 he warmly espoused the cause of the General Government, and served during that war as company officer. At the close of the war he became connected with the volunteer militia and held a commission and did duty as an officer in the Massachusetts militia for a period of thirty years, passing through all the grades from Lieutenant to Brigadier General, holding his commission as Brigadier General for about ten years.

After he removed to Marblehead he was entrusted by his fellow townsmen with many positions of trust and honor, being for many consecutive years the accepted moderator of their town meetings, chairman of the board of Selectmen and School Committee, and representing the town in the Legislature.

He is remembered in Essex county as prominent in military and public affairs, and as one of the old school gentlemen who believed it beneath an honest man to strive for place and an honest citizen to refuse to give to the public the benefit of his knowledge, time and ability, whenever he was asked for either.

Rev. Henry Storrs, of Cincinnati, O., will preach in Dr. Storrs' church, next Sunday.

From Canada.—Mr. Joshua Wilkins, the well known dealer in horses at East Braintree, has recently returned from Canada, with a lot of thirteen horses, all in good condition, sound and kind, well broke young animals, of fine action and fast gait. They can be examined at his stable in East Braintree, and those who are in want of good serviceable horses, should give him an immediate call.

The operatives of the flax mills at East Braintree return their thanks through our columns, to Mr. Richard Thackeray, for his kindness in procuring Baker's express team to convey them to their homes on a recent stormy evening. These and other acts of kindness on his part will not soon be forgotten by them.

TURNER'S TIC DOULOREUX OR UNIVERSAL NEURALGIA PILL

Is a safe, certain and speedy cure for Neuralgia and all Nervous Diseases. The severest cases are completely and permanently cured in a very short time. Neuralgia in the face or head is at once banished in a few hours. No form of Nervous Disease withstands its magic influence. It has the unqualified approval of many eminent physicians. It contains nothing injurious to the most delicate system. Sold everywhere. Sent on receipt of $1.00 and two postage stamps.—TURNER & CO., 120 Tremont st., Boston, Mass., Proprietors. 10-13

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY.

In the whole history of medical discoveries NO REMEDY has performed so many for such remarkable cures of the numerous affections of the THROAT, LUNGS and CHEST, as this long tried and justly celebrated Balsam. So generally acknowledged is the superior excellence of this remedy that but few of the many who have tested its virtues by experience fail to keep it at hand as as a speedy and certain cure for sudden attacks of COLD—fully believing that its remedial powers are comprehensive enough to embrace every form of disease, from the slightest cold to the most dangerous system of pulmonary complaint.

UNSOLICITED TESTIMONY.

From Rev. Francis Lobdell, Pastor of the South Congregational Church, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I consider it a duty which I owe to suffering humanity to bear testimony to the virtues of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I have used it, when I have had occasion for any remedy for Coughs, Colds or Sore Throat, for many years, and never in a single instance has it failed to relieve and cure me. I have frequently been very hoarse on Saturday, and looked forward to the delivery of two sermons on the following day, with sad misgivings, but by a liberal use of the Balsam my hoarseness has invariably been removed, and I have preached without difficulty.

I commend it to my brethren in the ministry, and to public speakers generally, as a certain remedy for the bronchial troubles to which we are peculiarly exposed."

Prepared by SETH W. FOWLE & SON, 18 Tremont St., Boston, and for sale by Druggists generally.

BRADLEY'S
Super Phosphate

TAKE NOTICE.

Those who have been unable to get my PHOSPHATE for Planting, are advised to use it at first hoeing on corn, potatoes, or garden vegetables.

A small handful scattered around the plants at this time, and slightly covered with earth, will show its effects immediately after the first rain.—A change in color of the plants will be noticed at once, and you will be surprised to see the quick start it gives them, and more surprised at the end of the season to see the large increase of crops, and at an earlier date.

TRY IT, and be convinced.

TURNIPS

Should never be raised without using 300 to 400 lb of BRADLEY'S SUPER-PHOSPHATE per acre at the time of sowing the seed. It will double the yield, and double the value, as to quality, for feeding stock.

Note the following from the distinguished English Chemist, Dr. Johnson:—

"The same kind of turnips grown on the same field, one with Phosphate and the other with farm-yard manure present this striking difference in the proportion of Phosphate contained in the ash of the turnips:—The one grown on Phosphate yielded 50 per cent of Phosphate, while the manure turnip contained only 11 per cent of Phosphate. This could not fail to make an important difference in their relative value for the feeding of stock whose bones are growing, and which require a large amount of Phosphate in their food.

BUCKWHEAT

Where BRADLEY'S SUPER-PHOSPHATE has been used in growing Buckwheat, the reports of its effects are even more astonishing than other crop. Two hundred and fifty to three hundred pounds to the acre, harrowed in with the seed, on poor soil, is sufficient to make a heavy crop.—My Agents everywhere are authorized to guarantee it to give satisfaction to all who wish to try it for Buckwheat.

MRS. L. W. TUCK'S

SUPPORTER!

Three Supports Combined in One.

A SUPPORTER like this has never before been offered to the public. It can be arranged to

FIT ANY SIZE OR FORM;

is easily adjusted, convenient to wear, causing no heat or irritation, ELASTIC being used instead of steel springs, rendering it

Comfortable and Easy

in any posture the body may assume.

Great care has been taken in arranging the Support for the Uterus. The wearing of the Supporter a part of the time (for no Supporter should be worn constantly) will not only afford temporary relief and stay the progress of the disease, but in most cases of one of the most distressing and discouraging diseases to which woman is subject.

Ladies, this is not merely an advertisement.—One of your own sex has arranged it, after years of suffering and fruitless search to find some support or compress that would bring relief. She aroused herself, fully persuaded she could invent a Supporter which would benefit herself; and as she gained strength and went into society, she was constantly meeting those similarly afflicted; and listening to the oft repeated question, "Oh, how I suffer; can't you do something to help me?" after two years more of study and toil, during which time she left no means unemployed to gain knowledge concerning her work, she is prepared to answer the question satisfactorily.

And now let me say to those who are thus afflicted, at the earnest solicitation of friends I propose to devote

TUESDAY AND THURSDAY

of each week to any who may need my services in fitting Supporters or bandages, and will give such advice and make such examinations as they may need, at my residence on

DEPOT STREET, SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

☞ My prices will be within the reach of all.

AGRICULTURAL.

We have frequently observed a raspberry bush, in the open field, which cattle have pruned to a stub. The next season it is loaded with fruit. If the cattle had not nipped off the tender canes, most of the energies of the plants would have been exhausted in producing new wood in excessive quantities. Let us take the hint to keep raspberry bushes, and the canes of thrifty blackberries, well cut back, so that the plants will not grow themselves to death.

Weeds among strawberry plants should be pulled up, and not cut up with hoes, as the roots of strawberry plants lie near the suface, where a hoe would do incalcuable injury.

Read the Market Reports.—Few farmers realize the value to them of correct market reports; and although ignorance or inattention are not so prevalent now as years ago, yet there are some old fogies left. An instance has recently come to notice illustrating the value and importance of this subject. Hay was sold a few weeks since at St. Albans, Vermont, for $14 per ton. At this price speculators bought largely, pressed and baled, and sent to Boston, where they realized $40 per ton. One farmer sold 100 tons at the former price, yielding him $1,400. If he had been posted in the market reports, he might have shipped his hay thither at an expense of only $4 for pressing and baling and $6 for freight per ton: total expense $1,000; yield $4,000; result $3,000; profits over price actually obtained $1,600. So much lost for the want of a good city paper. Three dollars a year would have saved it.

Be Not Afraid to Plant Trees.—A remarkable instance of tree growth is given in the following letter to the Country Gentleman. Let all who have hesitated now take heart; and, if they do not all live to see the fruits of their own efforts, they have the consolation of knowing they have left a goodly inheritance to their children. "I want to tell my story, which I know to be true and perfectly correct, as all the parties are to me well-known and of unimpeachable veracity. The scene is in Berkshire county, Mass. A boy reaped wheat in a field; that boy grew to be a man, and lived to the ripe old age of 82 years. Before he died, he sat in his chair and saw a neighbor of his one day drawing sawlogs to a mill. This man drew and sawed, and sold 152,000 feet of lumber; and from 3 1-2 acres of the ground upon which the old man when a boy had reaped wheat. The timber was mostly pine, some oak. Keokuk, 1867. Hawk-Eye."

Us Boys.—Bill Ross is a great temperance lecturer and at Rushville, Ill., was preaching to the young on his favorite theme. He said:

"Now, boys, when I ask you a question you musn't be afraid to speak right out, and answer me. When you look around and see all these fine houses, farms and cattle, do you ever think who owns them now? Your fathers own them, do they not?"

"Yes, sir," shouted a hundred voices.

"Well, where will your fathers be in twenty years from now?"

"Dead!" shouted the boys.

"That's right. And who will own the property then?"

"We will."

"Right. Now, tell me—did you ever, in going along the street, notice the drunkards lounging about the saloon doors, waiting for somebody to treat them?"

"Yes, sir; lots of them?"

"Well, where will they be in twenty years from now?"

"Dead!" exclaimed the boys.

"And who will be the drunkards then?"

"Us boys!"

Bill was thunderstruck.

Copper Lighting Rods,—the American Artisan says, are preferable to tin ones. It adds that glass insulators are of no special consequence, and a secure way of fastening the rod to the building is all that is necessary. A building need not be covered all over with rods, with numerous points projecting upward. This is a perfectly useless expense. Two good copper rods, rising above the chimneys of an ordinary dwelling, are a perfect protection, if the ground terminations are properly attended to.

The "Dew Point," as explained by an exchange, is that degree of temperature at which the air deposits its moisture. This point is usually ten degrees below the temperature of the air, varying with the quantity of moisture. To discover the dew point at any time, take two thermometers, one for the air, the other for the water. Fill a tumbler with water at about the temperature of the air, drop a bit of ice in the water, and note its temperature as it cools. Some water will condense on the surface of the glass. The dew point is then marked, and the temperature of the water indicates the degree at which the moisture collects.

The cheapest excursion you may make is into the realms of fancy. No return ticket is required.

PIQUANTS.

An Irishman called on a lady and gentleman, in whose employ he was, for the purpose of geting some tea and tobacco. "I had a dhrame last night, yer honor." "What was it' pat?" "Why I dhramed that your honor made me a present of a plug of tobaccy, and her ladyship there—Heaven bless her?—gave me some tea for the good wife." "Ah? Pat, dreams go by contraries, as you well know." "Faith and they do that?" said Pat, without the least hesitation, "so yer ladyship is to give me the tobaccy and his honor the tay."

Mrs. Partington says Ike has the very same stockings he wore when he was in the Sapheads and Minors regiment, only she had to darn'em a little by putting two feet on to em one season, and two legs the next.

The Spaniards have a proverb, that "Drinking water neither makes a man sick, nor in debt, nor his wife a widow.

If door-plates were not so brazen, many of them would blush for the names they bear.

At a fancy fair bookstall a young gentleman lingered for some time. It was attended by a very handsome young lady. "The charge for your inspection of my wares," "said the fair dealer, "is half-a-crown, sir." "I was admiring your beauty, ma'am, and not that of your goods," replied the gallant. "That is five shillings," responded the lady, with great readiness. He paid—and went. She who composes a cross baby is greater than she who composes books,

To avoid cholera, says the doctor, take care of your diet. In other words mind your peas and q-cumbers.

One evening, when the congregation of one of the up-town churches were leaving the house, it commenced raining. A lady said to the gentleman who accompanied her and her sister, "Why it rains—send and get an umbrella." "Why, my dear," said the gentleman, "you are neither sugar nor salt, and rain will not hurt you." "No," said the lady, "but we are lasses." It is needless to say he sent for an umbrella immediately.

"Fast" Young Men.—The Bible says that the race is not to the swift, and our young men should remember that the race of life is seldom to the "fast."

What's in a name? Everything is in an aim, if you wish to shoot straight.

Swift often coined proverbs to answer his own purposes. When he was one day walking with some friends in the garden of an avaricious old man, who was very particular about his peaches, he suddenly stopped at a fine tree and exclaimed, "It was an old saying of my grandmother's, "Pull a peach when it's in your reach," which he did, and the example was followed by all present.

The Seguin (Texas) Journal keeps a poet, Here are some of his stanzas:

The Lambkin Crops Its Crimson Gem
The Blue Fly Bends Its pensil Stem
The wild Bee murmurs on Its Breast
Right o'er the Sky Larks Nest.

A minister of the Established Church in England asked an itinerant preacher, "How does it happen that you have not more doctors of divinity in your connection?" The reply was, "Because our divinity is never sick."

An American, being asked why he chewed tobacco, replied, "To keep a nasty taste out of my mouth."

A gentleman called on a rich miser, and found him at the table endeavoring to catch a fly. Presently he succeeded in entrapping one, which he immediately put into the sugar-bowl and shut down the cover. The gentleman asked for an explanation of this singular sport. "I'll tell you," replied the miser, a triumphant grin overspreading his countenance as he spoke, "I want to ascertain if the servants steal the sugar."

THE FEMALE TRAPPER.

On the bank of one of those beautiful lakes that abound in Minnesota, lived Mr. Henry Strander.—He had emigrated from Pennsylvania in 1856, and had made a claim on the most beautiful quarter section of land within a circuit of ten miles.

Mr. Strander had three children. Harry, his eldest, Polly, and Jimmie. All the money that the farmer could make by farming in the summer and trapping in the winter, he spent in improving his claim. As the land was not likely to be advertised for sale for some years, he did not think it necessary to make any provision for buying it at once. But Mr. Strander was taken suddenly ill and died, and the burden of paying of the claim and supporting the family came upon Harry, then only seventeen years of age. Not wholly upon Harry, either, for from the time her father died, Polly, who was just fifteen, resolved to share every burden with her brother.

Within a week after her father died, she had taken a hoe and gone into the field by the side of Harry. All through the hot days she did her part, and as winter drew on she practiced with the rifle until she could shoot almost as well as her brother.

But next spring came the commencement of war. I cannot stop to tell you of all the discussions that were held in the Strander's cabin, on the subject of Harry's enlistment. They ended in Polly telling him to go, that she would support the family, and that the land wouldn't come into market right off any way. And, whether right or wrong, Harry enlisted.

That year Polly succeeded in cultivating that portion of land that was broken and fenced, and in such a way as to get a tolerable crop. But during the summer there came the sad news that Harry was wounded, and must lay for a long time in the hospital, and then, perhaps, be discharged on account of his disability to do further service. To add to their distress, came the startling intelligence that the land was brought into the market, and must be preempted before the first of January, or it would be sold.

There was a merchant five miles away by the name of Van Dyke, who bought furs of the settlers, and sold them provisions. An utterly mean man, there was no advantage to be taken that Van Dyke did not take. He was delighted to hear that the land in the neighborhood was to be sold, for he was perfectly satisfied that the widow Strader could not raise the two hundred necessary to purchase her land, and he chuckled as he thought of buying it at the Government sale, and thus getting all of the improvements for nothing.

Polly applied to Mr. Van Dyke for a loan on a mortgage on the land, but was refused. Hoping against hope, she went to work to raise all the money she could, very early in the fall. Leaving her mother and little Jimmie to secure the crops, she commenced to trap. She started out at daylight every morning, and was a picture for a painter as she pushed off her canoe. Her long hair lay on her shoulders; her head was covered with a regular trapper's cap, made of wolf skin, with the wolf's tail hanging down behind.

She had been pretty successful, but at the prices offered by Mr. Van Dyke she had nothing like enough to buy the land. Polly was very high spirited, and she vowed that the merchant should not have a single skin that she captured. In vain he assured her that the price he offered her was the highest that could be paid.

"Mr. Van Dyke," she used to say, "you have not money enough to buy my furs; you are like the Pharisees; you devour widows' houses."

It did not sound very well to hear a girl talk in this way; but Polly's education was a rough one.

At last the news came that Harry was about to start for home. He had been discharged, and was scarcely able to walk; but at any rate it was a comfort to know that he was coming home again. It was now the middle of November, but the sky was clear, and the prairies, seared with the frost, looked like fields of gold beneath the autumn sun.

And every night the prairie fires made the sky glow in every direction. Polly had made a careful account of her resources and said that at least she had enough to buy the forty acres on which the house and the principal part of their improvements were. That was one consolation at least. They would not be without a home, if they did have to lose the meadow and the timber-land that they had prized so highly.

One morning, as she was runing bullets and filling up her powder horn, and hoping that she could get for her furs more than Mr. Van Dyke offered, if she could only get them to Mandato, Mr. Van Dyke came in and offered her a letter, saying:—

"This was in the office for you, and I thought I would bring it along over, as I was coming. Don't want to sell your furs this morning, eh?"

"I am obliged to you, Mr. Van Dyke, for bringing the letter, but you can't have my furs."

"Well, you might let me have that black fox anyhow, as a personal favor. I want to send it to my brother. I've taken a fancy to it. It ain't worth more that five dollars, but I'll give you ten."

Polly had captured a black or silver grey fox a few days before, the only one she had ever seen, for it is rare indeed that such a fox is taken so far south. She had no idea of its value, but ten dollars seemed to her a large price, and she was at first inclined to yield; but remembering that she was dealing with a scoundrel, she said:—

"Mr. Van Dyke, I believe I told you that you couldn't have any of my peltries."

"Well, Miss Strader, you'll be sorry some day that you didn't oblige me," he said, as he left the door.

When she opened the letter all her hopes were dashed. It was from Harry. He was very ill at St. Paul. He begged Polly to come for him, otherwise he thought he should die.

"Well," said Polly, "if we must give up all hopes of buying the farm, or even forty acres, I suppose we'll have to. It will take a good part of what I have to get Harry home, and it will take more than a week to go and come, and New Year isn't far off. Every day is precious. But we must save Harry's life, and the poor fellow will get well if we can get him home."

And so without regarding her mother's warning that there was a storm brewing, she started out in her canoe to go down the lake to get a team, with which to go for her brother Harry. Her own was an ox team, and to go in the stage was costly, and besides, Harry couldn't stand the day and night ride in the stage, for the distance was a hundred and forty miles. She hired a team for a trip to St. Paul. She could not get it till the following Monday, and so wrote a letter to Harry, telling him that she was coming, and then started to paddle around the shore and look at her traps. When she got to a place which she and Harry had called Rocky Harbor, on the opposite side of the lake, she found a dead deer, partly eaten by wolves, and knowing that the wolves would return after dark, she sat several traps for them. Then she hastened back to her canoe, for it was now late, and there could be no doubt but that the November storms, with which the winter always begins, were now at hand.

But before she could set her foot into the canoe the storm came, and in an instant the air was so filled with snow that an object twenty feet away was invisible. It took but a moment for Polly to appreciate her situation. To paddle across the lake in such a storm was out of the question. The wind was coming up, and it would be alike impossible to coast around the shore. Besides it was a great distance, and ice would begin to form before she could get half way. There were no families living on that side of the lake. Her only course was to stay where she was. Her spirit sunk for a moment, but she brushed away the tears that came up from a desolate heart, and set about making the best of it. She found a large log in a ravine. Dragging her canoe from the water, she laid it up-side down, parallel with the log, about three feet away from it. She then cut brush and laid across them, to form a roof. Creeping under this shelter she was soon buried beneath two feet of snow, and so felt sure of not freezing. There is no better protection from cold than the snow.

It was a lonely place. She could hear her heart beat. But when the wolves began to gather for their midnight repast, and when they set up their frightful howls, she could feel the hair rise up on her head. She would have been brave enough could she have fought with the wolves, but to lie there and listen to their unearthly yellings, not knowing how soon the hungry pack could find her, was more than she could endure. And then she thought of poor Harry, and of the land sale, and she wished for the skins of the wild beasts that were so near her. For, though the wolf skin is of little or no value for the ordinary purposes to which furs are applied, it is in considerable demand for lap robes. And remembering that she was on the leeward side of the wolves, she dug away the snow at one end of the burrow, and looked out. Then growing bolder, she crept out to a clump of little bushes near by through which she could plainly see them. For by this time it had ceased snowing, and the moon was shining, though the wind still blew. She levelled her gun at them two or three times before she could get courage enough to fire. At the first shot she killed one, and the pack scattered a little, but the smell of the fresh blood of the dead wolf brought them back again. Several times she fired with like success. But one of the wolves in moving round caught sight of her. When a wolf sees any living object, he immediately endeavors to get to the leeward of it, in order to tell by the scent what it is. A wolf depends on his nose in such matters, and not at all upon his eyes. This one, when he caught sight of Polly, commenced to make a circle, in order to get where his nose would inform him what kind of an animal she was. Crowding the ball down quickly, she fired just in time to keep the wolf from finding her out, and calling the rest of the pack with his howl. The wolf rolled over in the snow.

Another came near running right upon her, but she fired in time to save herself. But this last fright alarmed her so that she did not dare fire again, till she had climbed a tree. From this point she kept up a fire on them till daylight, when they left. As the result of the night's work, Polly found that she had killed nineteen wolves, and frozen one of her fingers nearly off. Two of the wolves had been torn by the others, but there were seventeen tolerably good skins.

Before she dare undertake to skin them, she found it necessary to have a fire to keep her hands from freezing. By whittling thin bass-wood shavings from her canoe paddle, and taking cotton from her clothing, she was able to start a fire by striking a percussion cap in the midst of a bunch of cotton, with a little powder scattered through it. It took her till noon to take the skins from the wolves, and by the middle of the afternoon the severe cold had frozen the lake in its narrowest part, so that she ventured to cross it. In order to take her wolf skins across, she was obliged to make a little sledge of the crotch of a small tree. Of course there had been great distress at home on account of her absence, and great was the joy at her return.

A day or two later she put her furs on a sled and started for St. Paul. When she got to Mankato, she took a load of wheat for St. Paul, getting a good price for hauling it. When she arrived in the city her first care was to find Harry and cheer him up, which she did most effectually. He said her merry laugh was better than all the tonics in the drug stores. She told Harry that if she could get a load back, she thought her furs would be sufficient to pay for forty acres, and the other one hundred and twenty they would have to let "Old Van Dyke,"—as she called him—have.

"And so you've turned teamster, have you, little woodchuck?" said Harry, raising himself up in bed.

"Anything to save you and the old home, Harry."

That day she sold her furs. What was her surprise to find that the rare and silver black fox was worth, not ten dollars, but sixty-five! For the average of black or silver grey skins is fifty dollars, and hers was an uncommon fine one. And, too, the extraordinary demand for minks had carried them up three times the price offered by Van Dyke, and even her muskrats were worth twice what he had offered, and she was well paid for her wolf skins. And to this, Harry's back pay, that he had just received, was added, and there was more than enough to enter the whole claim.

When Polly got home she did not tell any of her neighbors that she had stopped at the land office at St. Paul on her way back and entered the claim. And Van Dyke, who did not know that she had taken a load both ways, nor how many furs she had, came over to see Harry, who was now able to walk about.

"Mr. Strader," said he, "I suppose you will be able to pre-empt forty acres of this, and I mean to pre-empt the other three forties. Your sister has been a little saucy, but I want to oblige you, and if you'll let me buy in this forty with the house on it, I don't mind paying you a little something to start you on a new claim."

"I couldn't make any such arrangement, sir," said Harry.

"Why?" said Van Dyke.

Because my sister, whom you tried to swindle, entered the whole claim on her way back from St. Paul. And now, sir, there is the door."

And the crest-fallen "land-shark" left in haste.

NORWICH, CT., Aug. 10, 1867.

Having leisure I write you from here. Norwich is a city of 15,000 inhabitants, situated at the head of navigation on the Thames. In former years they were largely engaged in West India trade; now that is about all run out. There are numbers of wealthy families here, the result of that trade. The principal business now is manufacturing of cotton, wool and paper. Wooden types are made by Mr. Page. I have been through his establishment. It was pleasing to see the machines cut so quick. They finish them by hand. They are putting up a large stove foundery. Norwich has a list of 206 graduates of Colleges, 154 of them from Yale. 22 Representatives to Congress, from 5 states; 2 Governors, 2 Chief Justices and 5 United States Senators. Norwich may well be proud of the number of distinguished men she has raised, and the influence they have and are exerting through the country; but she would like to forget Arnold. Though Norwich delights to honor her worthy native born, she is ever desirous of lending a helping hand to her adopted citizens. I have in mind our townsman, George Pratt, Esq. He came here without friends, studied law with John T. Wait, one of the first lawyers of the state. By close attention to business, and the carrying out the principles his lamented father taught, he has made himself a name and wealth. He ranks high among the legal profession. If our young men wish to succeed, but feel discouraged, let them learn his history. Almost every day I walk from the city to Bean Hill and back, 6 miles. It is the most healthy exercise, certainly the cheapest; should be the most fashionable. They have fine side walks all the way, well shaded. I find much pleasure in viewing what people take so much trouble to show on the way. Here they consider the sidewalk part of the public way; with us this has been ignored till lately. Strangers have remarked of our making them walk in the middle of the street. We have neglected shade trees, which are such an ornament and comfort. Bean Hill is noted for the best baked beans. Some years since, when the famine was in Ireland, Elihu Barrett, the learned blacksmith, wrote a letter from England, which was published in a Worcester paper in which he enquired for a receipt from Bean Hill to bake beans. A few days since I read in a paper of a man from Michigan, who was passing through Ohio, came to a small public house on Saturday night, where they had baked beans which he thought looked as they did in Norwich. He asked when they had heard from Norwich and the old lady said her daughter Jane had a letter last week.

Last Sunday forenoon went to Dr. Bond's church, set in the gallery in a chair. Will give some description of them, as they are new to me. They are getting very fashionable here. The Methodist church are putting them in. They put in two rows of cane seat arm chairs, one row one step higher than the other. The friend I sat with had two chairs, for which he paid 20 dollars a year. They are most comfortable seats. The slips (pews) are not owned as with us. The houses are built by the church or society, and the pews let every year, which is the better plan. They devote the afternoon to the sabbath school.

In the evening went to the Baptist church, heard an excellent discourse from John 3: 16.

I wish to say a word about Norwich Free Academy. Some of the wealthy citizens endowed it by the gift of $100,000. Ex-Gov. Buckingham was one of the most prominent. They have one of the finest edifices, any where seen, on a lot of some eight acres. Have visited the school a number of times. It stands very high. Mr. Smith, the principal, has been at the head of the school ever since its organization, some ten years. Connecticut has been behind Massachusetts in school facilities; now they take a high rank. Other states have looked to Massachusetts for a model. Do not know but some are surpassing her now. We shall have to look out; instead of being teachers we may have to take the pupil's place. During the past year I have visited many schools in the Western States, including Pennsylvania. They have some of our best teachers.

A short time since, having leisure at Harrisburg, Pa., I visited the Girl's High School. This school is taught by Miss Abby Y. Woodward, who has friends at Weymouth, where she is now, I think, on her annual visit. She has taught the school since its organization. If I remember, it was an experiment, supported by private enterprise. It has been so successful that now it is a model school. I could but notice the thoroughness with which everything was performed. The least mispronunciation of a word was not passed. They could not slip through her hands parrot like.

I have visited the Indian burying ground here, at the part called the Falls. There is a high rock here where it is said the Mohegans drove another tribe off into the river. In 1842 the ladies of Norwich erected a granite monument to the memory of Uncas. The settlers promised Uncas the graveyard should be kept sacred. It has not been violated. The Indians sold the whites ten square miles of land here for £70. I have a copy of the deed before me. The tribe now numbers 120. They have divine services regular at their chapel at Mohegan, also a Sunday school. I have passed though their village; think they are in a prospering condition, under the fostering care of the state.

On Warveeus hill in this town, a man by the name of Stafford discovered, some twenty-five years ago, what he believed to be a valuable mine of gold and other metals. He has been at work at it when he could get the means. Run out quite a farm, then worked to get money to spend there. They have a company formed now. Think they put the stock at $200,000. Two years since I visited the mine. They have got out a good many rocks. Mr. S. gave me a piece; he said it had a large per cent. of gold. Then they had a steam engine to pump out the water; was expecting a crusher soon, when they would bring out its treasures. I understand now some who have been to Colorado have taken hold of it.

NATHAN PRATT.

HYMN

Written for the occasion, and sung at the annual Reunion of the Weymouth High School, Aug. 12, 1867.

From our homes along the hillsides,
From the valleys green and bright,
From life's daily cares and duties,
And its scenes of calm delight,
Come we to the old dear pathways
Where our youthful feet once strayed;
Where sweet memories, thickly thronging,
People all the classic shade.

Joyfully we greet each other,
While the sympathizing tear
Tells that precious ones are missing
From the circle gathered here.
Yet no vain regret or sadness
Shall o'ercloud the moments fleet,
Or restrain the buoyant gladness
Meet for our reunion sweet.

Just a few short hours of pleasure—
Hours we would prolong in vain—
Then with hearts refreshed and grateful,
Turn we to our homes again.
God—our fathers' God—go with us;
His rich grace to all be given;
May he guide our faltering footsteps
Till, at last, we meet in Heaven.

HOME.

BY MRS TURNER TORREY.

Where do the kindly feelings dwell,
If not within the humble cot
Where love and joy each passion quell,
Each heart contented with its lot.

Where parents, children, all unite,
And join in harmony and love;
Ah, yes, it is a happy spot—
On such our Father smiles above.

Far dearer than the palace home,
Where vanity and pomp preside;
O, give to me a humbler dome,
And let dear friends be at my side.

Thrice happy home above the skies,
For thee my soul in rapture longs;
There shall I find far dearer ties,
And join in everlasting songs.

Quantrell not Dead.—Quantrell, the arch-fiend of the Lawrence massacre, was supposed to have died in Texas shortly after the war, of consumption, but the following from the Lawrence State Journal, of the 7th, gives a different impression: "Andy Hammond, an old resident of this city, and lately military marshal in Texas, has returned. He gives the most definite and accurate accounts of the whereabout of Quantrell that we have yet heard. He says that he is doing a commission business in Mexico, just across the Rio Grande, under the name of Larned Anderson. His next officer of rank in the Quantrell massacre is also in Mexico. Marshal Hammond wrote to Governor Crawford for a requisition upon the Governor of Texas to procure Quantrell, the intention being to decoy him into Texas and then secure him upon a requisition. The post commander also wrote Governor Crawford, but no answer was ever received."

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.

Travellers over the various lines of railroads are hardly aware of the additional security against accident afforded by the operation of the electric telegraph lines which now comprise one of the most important features in the management of railways. Through this rapid means of communication with the different stations the arrival and departure of each train is noted, and any delay promptly made known, thus insuring the safety of passengers in approaching trains against collisions. President Perkins, of the South Shore 'Railroad,' who has made telegraphing a subject of personal investigation and research, and who has become a skillful operator, says that he should rather run a single track line of railway with a telegraph than to manage a double track line without this important auxiliary. As we have before stated, a new line of telegraph has recently been erected on the South Shore road, and a wire extended to the residence of the President, some two miles from the station in Cohasset. In a late visit to that place we were entertained by Mr. Perkins with a clear account of the modus operandi of the system, in which he has become an adept; and we are indebted to him for some novel ideas in the application of the signals to every-day life without the accompaniment of the telegraph instrument, which ideas are fully conveyed to our readers in a paper written by Rev. Edward E. Hale, of Boston, which "reduces all the complex machinery of Cadmus and the rest of the writing-masters to characters as simple as can be made by a dot, a space, and a line, variously combined. Thus, the marks - — designate the letter A. The marks — - - - designate the letter B.—All the other letters are designated in as simple a manner." Mr. Hale continues:

"Now I am stripping myself of one of the private comforts of my life, (but what will one not do for mankind?) when I explain that this simple alphabet need not be confined to electric signals. Long and short make it all,—and wherever long and short can be combined, be it in marks, sounds, sneezes, fainting-fits, canes, or children, ideas can be conveyed by this arrangement of the long and short together. Only last night I was talking scandal with Mrs. Wilberforce at a summer party at the Hammersmith's. To my amazement, my wife, who scarcely can play "The Fisher's Hornpipe," interrupted us by asking Mrs. Wilberforce if she could give her the idea of an air in "The Butcher of Turin." Mrs. Wilberforce had never heard that opera,—indeed, had never heard of it. My angel-wife was surprised,—stood thrumming at the piano,—wondered she could not catch this very odd bit of discordant accord at all,—but checked herself in her effort, as soon as I observed that her long-notes and short notes, in their tum-tee, tee,—tee-tee, tee-tum tum, meant, "He's her brother." The conversation on her side turned from "The Butcher of Turin," and I had just time, on the hint given me by my wife, to pass a grateful eulogium on the distinguished statesman whom Mrs. Wilberforce, with all a sister's care, had rocked in his baby cradle,—whom, but for my wife's long and short notes, I should have clumsily abused among the other statesmen of the day.

You will see in an instant, awakening reader, that it is not the business simply of "operators" in telegraphic dens to know this Morse alphabet, but your business, and that of every man and woman. If our school-committees understood the times, it would be taught, even before phonography or physiology, at school.

As I write these words, the bell of the South Congregational strikes dong, dong, dong—— dong, dong, dong,——dong, dong, dong. Nobody has unlocked the church-door. The old tin-sign, 'In case of fire, the key will be found at the opposite house,' has long since been taken down, and made into the nose of a waterpot. Yet there is no Goody-Two-Shoes locked in. No! But, thanks to Dr. Channing's Fire-Alarm, the bell is informing the South End that there is a fire in District Dong-dong-dong,—that is to say, District No. 3. Before I have explained to you so far, the 'Eagle' engine, with a good deal of noise, has passed the house on its way to that fated district. An immense improvement this on the old system, when the engines radiated from their houses in every possible direction, and the fire was extinguished by the few machines whose lines of quest happened to cross each other at the particular place where the child had been building cob-houses out of lucifer-matches in a paper-warehouse.

I have suggested the propriety of introducing this alphabet into the primary schools. I need not say I have taught it to my own children, and have been gratified to see how rapidly it made head against the more complex alphabet in the grammar schools. Of course it does; an alphabet of two characters matched against one of twenty-six,—or of forty-odd, as the very odd one of the phonotypists employs! On the Franklin-medal day I went to the Johnson School examination. One of the committee asked a nice girl what was the capital of Brazil. The child looked tired and pale and for an instant hesitated. But before she had time to commit herself, all answering was rendered impossible by an awful turn of whooping-cough which one of my own sons was seized with,—who had gone to the examination with me.—Hawm, hem hem;—hem hem hem;—hem;—hawm, hem hem;—hem hem hem;—hem, hem,—barked the poor child, who was at the opposite extreme of the school-room. The spectators and committee looked to see him fall dead with a broken blood-vessel. I confess that I felt no alarm, after I observed that some of his gasps were long and some very staccato; nor did pretty little Mabel Warren. She recovered her color, and as soon as silence was in the least restored, answered, 'Rio is the capital of Brazil.'

If, however, the reader is distressed because these illustrations do not seem to belong to the big bow-bow strain of human life, let him consider the arrangement of the Morse alphabet applied to a steam-whistle, which is often heard five miles. It needs only long and short again. 'Stop Comet,' for instance, when you send it down the railroad line by the wire, is expressed thus:

- - - — - - - - - - -

Very good message, if Comet happens to be at the telegraph station when it comes. But what if Comet has gone by? If, however, you have the wit to sound your long and short on an engine-whistle, thus, Sere sere, sere; sereeeee; sere sere; sere sere sere sere; sere sere — sere, sere sere, sereeeee sereeeee; sere; sereeeee;—why, then the whole neighborhood, for five miles round, will know that Comet must stop, if only they understand spoken language,—and, among others, the engineman of Comet will understand it; and Comet will not run into that wreck of worlds which gives the order, with his nucleus of hot iron and his tail of five hundred tons of coal.

The long and short of it is, that whoever can mark distinctions of time can use this alphabet of long-and-short. The illimitable range of this alphabet, however, is not half disclosed when this has been said. Most articulate language addresses itself to one sense, or at most to two, sight and sound. But the dot-and-line alphabet is not restricted to two senses, but makes itself intelligible to all.—Its message, of course, is heard as well as read. Any good operator understands the sounds of its ticks upon the flowing strip of paper, as well as when he sees it. As he lies in his cot at midnight, he will expound the passing message without striking a light to see it. But this is only what may be said of any written language. You can read this article to your wife, or she can read it, as she prefers; that is, she chooses whether it shall address her eye or her ear. But the long-and-short alphabet of Morse and his imitators despises such narrow range. It addresses whichever of the five senses the listener chooses.

This fact is illustrated by a curious set of anecdotes, of that despatch which in one night announced General Taylor's death to this whole land. My friend Langenzunge had been promised by the General himself, an office. He was returning from Washington over the railroad, on a freight train, when he heard of the President's danger. Langenzunge loved Old Rough and Ready, and felt badly about his own office, too. But his extempore train chose to stop at a forsaken shanty-village on the Potomac, for four mortal hours, at midnight. What does he do but climb a telegraph post, cut a wire, and apply the two ends to his tongue, to taste, at the fatal moment, the words, 'Died at half past ten.' Poor Langenzunge! he hardly had nerve to solder the wire again. Cogs told me that they had just fitted up the stations with Bain's chemical revolving disc.—This disc is charged with a salt of potash, which, when the electric spark passes through it, is changed to Prussian blue. Your despatch is noiselessly written in dark-blue dots and lines. Just as the disc started on that fatal despatch, and Cogs bent over it to read, his spirit-lamp blew up. While they were fumbling for matches, Cogs' sister, a blind girl, who had learned Bain's alphabet from Dr. Howe, at South Boston, bent over the chemical paper, and smelt out the prussiate of potash, as it formed itself in lines and dots to tell the sad story."

THE WEYMOUTH GAZETTE.

THURSDAY, AUG. 22, 1867.

BOSTON, Aug. 19, 1867.

Dear Gazette:— There are some interesting facts connected with the plan and construction of our city, which have given rise to curious scientific theories. You will recollect my previous statement that our citizens have become accustomed to call their village the "Hub of the Universe," the point of the axle upon which the world turns, and adduce in evidence the peculiarities I have stated.

By what other theory can you account for the general converging of the streets to a given point,' and the almost universal attraction that draws everybody to that common centre? The position is too evident, (in their view,) to need demonstration. They are willing to risk its truth upon its own merits, and therefore content themselves with the simple statement of fact. They are somewhat of a positive people, and easily take offence if their doings or sayings are called in question.

They assume for themselves, as before intimated, a large share of the wit and learning of the community, and are inclined to ignore anything of that nature pretending to originate from any other locality. They are a very little given to a narrow and illiberal policy, inasmuch as they do not willingly accord merit to any outside of their own circle; and are rather inclined to magnify themselves and the things belonging to them. This is no doubt very well for them, as it acts in the nature of a stimulant, exciting them to the performance of acts to sustain their self imposed reputation, which would otherwise remain undone; and since no one is injured thereby, others humoring their weakness, they may be allowed to have their own way.

It may be interesting, perhaps, to glance at the architectural tastes and peculiarities exhibited in the dwellings and public buildings of various kinds; and in this respect we find their eccentricities just as marked as in the other particulars we have noticed. We find the same diversity of style, material and form, the same independence of idea and action, which characterizes them in other respects. Hence we find buildings of every variety of form and size, from the circle to the square, and from the immense warehouse, covering acres, to the shanty of hardly perceptible dimensions. We find buildings of granite, marble, freestone, sandstone, gravel, brick, wood and iron, and not content with this variety, they form conglomerates by mingling two or more of these materials in the same structure, thus forming a mosaic hard to be equalled.

Stores, dwellings, factories, stables, churches, and every other style of buildings, are thrown together in the most indescribable confusion. We have hardware, dry-goods, groceries, leather, markets, banks, and offices, mingled in such a manner as to indicate an imperative necessity that they must be all in the immediate vicinity of each other; and every one seems to be afraid that he shall have something, or do something like somebody else, and thus subject himself to the charge of imitation, a thing to be condemned in the highest degree.

Public buildings, too, are scattered with an apparently indiscriminate hand, broadcast over the place, without regard to convenience, taste, or propriety. But it is impossible in my narrow limits to give a full description of the many public buildings that adorn the village, and for the present this must suffice.

TRUANT.

Fire District.—At a meeting of the Weymouth and Braintree Fire District, last Monday evening, Elias Richards was chosen Moderator.

Voted, to sell the Amazon after receiving the new engine, giving four weeks public notice; the engine to be sold with her present suction and old leading hose.

Voted, That the Chief Engineer, by advice and consent of the Prudential Committee, purchase not exceeding 300 feet of new leading hose.

Voted, to raise $1000, in addition to the amount already voted at previous meeting, to pay the debts of the Dist.

Voted, that the Treasurer be instructed to borrow money to pay the debts of the District.

Voted, that the new Engine be stored in the present engine house.

Voted, That the Prudential Committee sell the Amazon.

Voted, That the present board of Assessors abate all old taxes that should be abated.

Geological Curiosity.—In front of the store of Mr. B. F. Shaw, at East Weymouth, is a rock which is said by geologists to have no parallel in the country. The rock, which is of a granitic character, has been split by a line of black stone, evidently thrown up by volcanic action, and forced through the imprisoning granite.

Messrs. Geo. H. Cuningham and Geo. Field have furnished us with the California and Western papers. We are also indebted to Mr. J. Gove for New Brunswick and Southern papers.

Interior Department, Pension Office, Washington, D. C., Aug. 13, 1867.

Turner Torrey:

Applications for increase pension under the acts of June 6th, and July 25th, 1866, are receiving the special attention of the pension office, and it is confidently expected that those filed prior to the 1st inst. will be disposed of on the 1st of September proximo. It will be better for claimants to wait even till the 1st of October, than to call for their original certificates; but if claimants prefer, the certificates will be returned to them on written application to the Commissioner, in cases not likely to be adjudicated as early as the 1st of October next.

By order JOSEPH BRETT, Commissioner.

Rev. Mr. Terry's Silver Wedding.

Mr. Editor:—You will doubtless have a detailed account of this brilliant affair. Twenty-five years at the head of a christian household, daily, cheerfully, faithfully discharging the duties of this noblest of all earthly positions, is an event that deserves to be celebrated, to be honored; and those who know Rev. Mr. Terry and his most excellent lady, will feel that all the honors of that evening, in word and deed, were well bestowed and richly merited.

But Mr. T.'s parishioners and friends deserve also to be commended for the hearty interest they have taken in this event. For near twenty years they have dwelt among them as the pastor's family, and as such they have never ceased to receive the attentions of a thoughtful people, who have been ever ready to sympathize with them, to stand by them, to bestow upon them many kind remembrances, tokens of the friendly regard of a loving and trusting people. When he entered upon his ministry, near twenty years since, they provided a commodious house, a home for the minister's family, which their own diligent hands and refined taste have adorned, and it has thus become a corner stone to the stability of the society, and a testimony of their kindness to their pastor. During his ministry they have also erected a costly and beautiful house of worship, and more recently have put into it a large and excellent organ. All this is an honor to the people. During the war one of his parishioners, and not a member of his church, put into his hands $50, for the special purpose of enabling him to go to Washington and see for himself some of the preparations, and visit some of the scenes of conflict. Many a kindly token has found its way into his family, many a book into his library; and though, perhaps, this parish is not the wealthiest in town, this very year they have added $400 to his salary. These things deserve to be mentioned, and when it has sometimes been proposed to unite the two parishes, they have felt that they must retain their minister; and it should in justice be added, especially his wife.

It is not strange, then, that these parishioners, and others out of the parish, were led to do the honors of the recent occasion. And what a testimony to the pastor that he is loved and appreciated! How it will lift off from him burdens that otherwise might weigh heavily. How it will inspire a cheerful heart in his intercourse with the people. How it will give vigor to his brain, life and beauty to his thoughts, and a loving earnestness to his labors, as the minister of a devoted people; and may it be more than all this to the model wife of the pastor, presiding over this cheerful christian home, and going about on her errands of mercy to the people. H.

SILVER WEDDING IN SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

The friends of Rev. J. P. Terry and wife assembled at his residence on last Friday evening, for the purpose of celebrating the Twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding day. There were some two hundred and fifty present, and if it it had not been for the storm there would have been a great many more. The first part of the evening was spent in singing, social greetings, and examining the presents, of which there was a bountiful supply, amounting in value from eight hundred to one thousand dollars.

The exercises were opened by Col. J. L. Bates with some remarks, after which he introduced Dr. Howe, who was followed by Rev. Calvin Terry and Elbridge Torry, Esq.

Rev. Mr. Walker of Abington then delivered the following poem.

TO REV. J. P. TERRY AND WIFE AT THEIR SILVER WEDDING, AUG. 16TH, 1867.

Who say that Time is "edax rerum,"
Weakening and wasting all things here!
Sad here'ies! would we could see them
Here, in this Five and Twentieth year!

That was a quiet, gladsome wedding
In ancient Lyme so long ago;
But Weymouth sees it "silver," shedding
A softer, fairer, richer glow.

What though the locks then dark are sprinkled,
They're sprinkled with a "silver" sheen;
What though Time's plow the brow has wrinkled,
Though fresh tresses from each furrow gleam.

She who was then a fair, slight maiden,
Matron and mother stands to-day;
He, then a stripling, now comes laden
With rich sheaves gathered in his way.

Neither has, in the other's seeming,
Lost aught by Time's corroding sway;
She is more fair to him, more beaming
Than when she spoke that blessed "yea."

Ah, little then he knew his treasure!
The patience, wisdom, kindness, strength!
The love unselfish, seeking pleasure
In others' weal, he's learned at length.

And He to Her is more than ever
The beau-ideal of a man;
Time deepens, broadens, strengthens, never
Makes manhood less,—it never can.

Friends looked then on a fair, young couple;
We see the more than tested pair,
These boys, these men, so tall and supple,
Sons soon to bring the daughters fair!

If Amherst has been Alma Mater
To many such as here we meet,
What full ranks in the future wait her
Of children she may proudly greet!

And with a chastened, solemn gladness,
Thought turns to daughters passed away
To Christ's own school, where earthly sadness
Ne'er dims the bright eternal Day.

O friends, God's smile has been around you,
And bless and praise Him well we may;
Better the hour that now has found you
Than was that long past Wedding Day.

For trembling Hope, you've glad Fruition;
These rounding years, fulfilled their aim;
Here life appears no mocking vision,
Time flitted by, toil spent in vain.

To building youth you were not holden,
To ripening years your life has run;
And may you have a Wedding Golden!
More rich, more full the years to come.

If trials come, Faith gilds the morrow,
E'en shines through tears for loved ones gone,
To paint, though by the mists of sorrow,
God's rainbow on earth's darkest storm.

Therefore to-night, with joy o'erflowing,
We come, your people, kindred, friends;
The love we feel but faintly showing,
Weak aid, the tongue or hand now lends.

Yet still such gifts how worth receiving!
The "true ring" in them all is found!
For, "coinage" of the heart's achieving,
Affection's treasures here abound.

E'en though in apostolic,
Not "silver" gifts, but what they find
Some bring, (perhaps a verse Bucolic,)
'Tis "silver" from a "willing mind."

H. D. WALKER.

East Abington, Aug. 16, 1867.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Walker; a hymn was then sung, after which they retired to the dining hall in companies of thirty-five or forty at a time, where was found a bountiful supply of good things for the inner man; then came singing and a social good time all round. The company then returned to their homes well pleased, and wishing the couple twenty-five years more of as happy life as they have just passed, when we hope to meet for the celebration of their Golden Wedding.

The children of the congregation met on Saturday afternoon at the parsonage, by invitation of their pastor and wife, where they spent an hour or two in examining the presents and regaling themselves with ice cream and wedding cake; and if pleasant faces are an indication of a good time they must have had one.

EAST WEYMOUTH.

Silver Wedding.—The twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Raymond was celebrated on Monday evening, Aug. 12th, when a large number of their friends and aquaintance gathered at their residence to mark the occasion with social greetings and valuable presents. Mr. and Mrs. Raymond are both members of the North Weymouth Social Choir, whose history we recorded a week or two since, and Mr. R. is leader of the choir of Rev. Mr. Waldron's church, and second leader of the Weymouth Brass Band.

By the cheerful manner in which Mr. Raymond discharged the duties of these positions, he has made troops of friends, a large number of whom assembled at his residence on the above named evening, to testify their respect for him and his amiable partner in life. They brought with them numerous gifts, beautiful and useful, valued at over $100. The three societies were present in large numbers; the whole party, including relatives and friends numbered about one hundred. The presents made were one dozen silver handled knives, by the choir of Rev. Mr. Waldron's church; a silver ice pitcher and plate, by the Band; a cake basket and dozen forks, by the Social Choir; a cake basket, by M. C. Dizer & Co.; and quite a number of pieces of silver ware, consisting of spoons, large and small goblets, butter knife, beside many other articles, by relatives and friends. The exercises consisted principally of music by the Band and singing. The music was excellent. Addresses were made on the occasion, which met suitable responses from Mr. Raymond. The company were treated to a plentiful supply of wedding cake, and departed hoping that Mr. and Mrs. Raymond might live to celebrate their Golden Wedding.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

For the edification and amusement of our youthful readers we now volunteer a tale, touching scenes of the past generation. Some 45 years since a young physician came to South Weymouth to fill the gap caused by the death of the lamented Dr. James Torrey. The population was then sparse, the practice involved no inconsiderable amount of labor, the field but little assurance of lucrative remuneration. In those days the doctor had no stylish sulky or chaise; he mounted his horse, and with saddle-bags containing medicine and professional instruments, cantered round to the abodes of the sick and distressed, (we had no apothecary then,) charging only 25 to 50 cents a visit. His frank manner and pleasant countenance seemed to impart a charm to those in affliction; the poor received the same watchful attention at his professional hands as the rich. A rap at his well known east window, at midnight, if peradventure in snow-storm, would insure prompt action, whether the messenger represented abject poverty or material comfort. This horseback doctor had no path of roses, and very slow pay. As a citizen he entered largely into the varied systems of progress; was popular by reason of energy of character and well directed effort; soon was elected upon the school board; immediately instituted measures to secure a higher standard of educational training and culture in our district schools; became chairman of the board, and for twenty years held the prominent post. Under his administration, candidates for teaching well understood that the searching test, under examination, was aptitude to impart knowledge, capacity to govern, combined with proficiency in the common and higher branches, and staunch moral character; no family pet, or "silver spoon" student, being exempt from the inexorable rule. Whereupon the district schools evinced marked progress, as the celat attendant upon subsequent annual exhibitions unmistakably attested, by good discipline, thoroughness in recitation, and scholarly deportment.

All the great questions agitating the public mind during the last two score years, have engaged the Doctor's attention, and invariably have his talents and influence been given to the broadest attainment of human liberty; to succor the oppressed, to elevate the masses. With pleasure we now introduce our distinguished and honored townsman, Major General Appleton Howe.

The General has seen much of public life; been twice elected to our State senate; in military capacity been captain of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, of Boston, surgeon, adjutant, and colonel of regiment, general of brigade, and for many years major general of First Division Mass. militia. Trained to activity and athletic exercise, and possessing a vigorous constitution, we behold the learned veteran, having the signet of more than 70 winters upon his brow, with nerves unshaken, intellect unclouded, step firm, and body erect.

General Howe was born at Hopkinton, in this State; graduated at Harvard University. If the General has an ample competency he richly merits every dollar of his savings, for during forty years of active practice here, no man amongst us has labored more diligently, performed such varied amount of drudgery, and enjoyed as little leisure as the subject of this notice.

KEOKUCK.

Two steers belonging to Alvah Raymond, Jr., escaped to the woods last Friday, and a number of citizens turned out to recapture them. One of the animals was shot on Sunday, and the other was killed on Tuesday, after being fired at several times.

The trot on the Fair Grounds last Saturday was very slimly attended.—There was but one trot, between Emperor and Narragansett Maid, resulting in the victory of Emperor in three straight heats—time 2.48, 2.44 1-2, 2.45.

A match game was played at South Weymouth on Saturday last, by the first nine of the Liberty Square Club, and the first nine of the Bowery Club, on the ground of the former. The following is the score.

It will be unnecessary to commend the concert and levee announced in another column to our readers, as all will be interested in aiding the association for whose benefit the entertainment is given. A good library is a great public benefit, and the public in meeting this call for aid with a general response, will confer a lasting benefit upon the present as well as rising generation.

BRAINTREE.

Biographical.—Gen. Sylvanus Thayer, son of Nathaniel and Dorcas Thayer, was born in Braintree June 9th, 1785, and never married. In his early years he resided with his uncle, Azariah Faxon, in Washington, N. H. He taught school at the age of seventeen; graduated at Dartmouth College in 1807, when he delivered the valedictory oration. Before leaving college he had an appointment as cadet at West Point, where he became Second Lieutenant of Infantry in the autumn of 1807, and Second Lieutenant of Engineers Feb. 22, 1808; First Lieut. July 1, 1815; Capt. of Engineers Oct. 13, 1813. He was Chief Engineer of the Northern army, under the command of Maj. Gen. Dearborn, in the campaign of 1812, also of the right division of the same army under command of Maj. Gen. Hampton, to whom he was aide-de-camp in the campaign of 1813; and of the forces under command of Brigadier Gen. Moses Porter, in the defence of Norfolk, Va., in 1814. For distinguished and meritorious services at Norfolk he was promoted to the rank of Major by brevet Feb. 20, 1815.

In May, 1815, Major Thayer was sent, in company with Col. Wm. McRee, also of the corps of engineers, to examine the French fortifications and to study more thoroughly the science of war as practiced in the army of Napoleon. They arrived in the British channel two days after the battle of Waterloo; they therefore changed their purpose, and studied the science as perfected by Wellington, the conqueror of the "modern Cæsar."—He enjoyed the greatest facilities in Paris of perfecting a military education.

After his return he became (July 28th, 1817,) Superintendent of the U. S. Military Academy at West Point. He found the Academy in a low state, imperfectly organized, and without any superior advantages of acquirement. By his diligence, zeal, and force of character, he raised the institution to a degree of excellence which will bear a favorable comparison with the Polytechnic School formed under Napoleon's own master guidance. "To his labors and influence the country owes, in no stinted measure, not only the high state of improvement which has ever since characterized West Point, but the advanced state of the military profession in our land. The great discipline and military skill manifested in the Mexican war was mostly due to him. The success of the departments of military and civil engineering, as applied not only to harbor defences, but the survey of our coasts and harbors and the construction of our canals and railways, may be traced to the course of mathematical training introduced into West Point by him." RUMOR.

Mr. Gardner Penniman, whose golden wedding was noticed in last week's Gazette, is one of a family of thirteen, all of whom have lived to maturity, and all enjoyed the blessedness of the married state. The family remained unbroken until within about three years. The late Ezra Penniman, deceased, an honored, useful citizen and efficient business man, was one of the brothers. The Golden Wedding of last Monday but one was a pleasant gathering and family reunion. The usual exchanges of mutual affection and joy were passed and valuable presents presented, among which was a pair of gold bowed spectacles given to Mr. Gardner Penniman.

Accident.—On Sunday night a horse took fright in South Braintree, and ran with a carriage in which were Mr. Melvin Thayer, Jr. and Mr. Austin Thayer, son of Rufus Thayer, of So. Braintree. The carriage was precipitated against the platform of White's store at the Corner. Both gentlemen were thrown out. Melvin Thayer was stunned by the fall. Austin Thayer's arm was broken and his forehead deeply gashed perpendicularly through the centre. The young men were riding for pleasure. RUMOR.

The excursion of the Flax Mill operatives to Nantasket Beach last Saturday, was a stirring affair. Nine large express teams were filled with pleasure-seekers, and as the long array passed through the streets, headed by the Quincy Band, they attracted general attention.

Base Ball.—Score of match game of Base Ball played between the second nine of the Excelsior B. B. C. of Weymouth, and the second nine of the Mechanic B. B. C. of East Weymouth, Aug. 17th, on the Mechanics ground.

Drowned.—Eugene Murphy, of East Braintree, was drowned on Tuesday last while bathing in the river near Stetson's coal wharf. The body was recovered about 9 o'clock in the evening, after the tide had ebbed. He was about 28 years of age. We learn that this is the third member of the family who has come to an untimely end while under the influence of liquor—two being drowned, and another burned to death.

The Episcopal interest in this town have purchased the Tilden house, on Front street, for the purpose of erecting a church edifice.

Business Notices.

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY.

In the whole history of medical discoveries NO REMEDY has performed so many or such remarkable cures of the numerous affections of the THROAT, LUNGS and CHEST, as this long tried and justly celebrated Balsam. So generally acknowledged is the superior excellence of this remedy that but few of the many who have tested its virtues by experience fail to keep it at hand as a speedy and certain cure for sudden attacks of Cold—fully believing that its remedial powers are comprehensive enough to embrace every form of disease, from the slightest cold to the most dangerous system of pulmonary complaint.

UNSOLICITED TESTIMONY.

From Rev. Francis Lobdell, Pastor of the South Congregational Church, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I consider it a duty which I owe to suffering humanity to bear testimony to the virtues of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I have used it, when I have had occasion for any remedy for Coughs, Colds or Sore Throat, for many years, and never in a single instance has it failed to relieve and cure me. I have frequently been very hoarse on Saturday, and looked forward to the delivery of two sermons on the following day, with sad misgivings, but by a liberal use of the Balsam my hoarseness has invariably been removed, and I have preached without difficulty.

I commend it to my brethren in the ministry, and to public speakers generally, as a certain remedy for the bronchial troubles to which we are peculiarly exposed."

Prepared by SETH W. FOWLE & SON, 18 Tremont St., Boston, and for sale by Druggists generally.

BRADLEY'S

Super Phosphate

TAKE NOTICE.

Those who have been unable to get my PHOSPHATE for Planting, are advised to use it at first hoeing on corn, potatoes, or garden vegetables.

A small handful scattered around the plants at this time, and slightly covered with earth, will show its effects immediately after the first rain.—A change in color of the plants will be noticed at once, and you will be surprised to see the quick start it gives them, and more surprised at the end of the season to see the large increase of crops, and at an earlier date.

TRY IT, and be convinced.

TURNIPS

Should never be raised without using 300 to 400 lb of BRADLEY'S SUPER-PHOSPHATE per acre at the time of sowing the seed. It will double the yield, and double the value, as to quality, for feeding stock.

Note the following from the distinguished English Chemist, Dr. Johnson:—

"The same kind of turnips grown on the same field, one with Phosphate and the other with farm-yard manure presents this striking difference in the proportion of Phosphate contained in the ash of the turnips;—The one grown on Phosphate yielded 30 per cent of Phosphate, while the manure turnip contained only 11 per cent of Phosphate. This could not fail to make an important difference in their relative value for the feeding of stock whose bones are growing, and which require a large amount of Phosphate in their food.

BUCKWHEAT

Where BRADLEY'S SUPER PHOSPHATE has been used in growing Buckwheat, the reports of its effects are even more astonishing than other crop. Two hundred and fifty to three hundred pounds to the acre, harrowed in with the seed, on poor soil, is sufficient to make a heavy crop.—My Agents everywhere are authorized to guarantee it to give satisfaction to all who wish to try it for Buckwheat.

Three Supports Combined in One.

in any posture the body may assume.

Great care has been taken in arranging the Support for the Uterus. The wearing of the Supporter a part of the time (or no Supporter should be worn constantly) will not only afford temporary relief and stay the progress of the disease, but in most cases of one of the most distressing and discouraging diseases to which woman is subject.

Ladies, this is not merely an advertisement.—One of your own sex has arranged it, after years of suffering and fruitless search to find some support or compress that would bring relief. She at used herself, fully persuaded she could in ... a Supporter which would benefit herself; and as she gained strength and went into society, she was constantly meeting those similarly afflicted; and listening to the oft repeated question, "Oh, how I suffer; can't you do something to help me?" after two years more of study and toil, during which time she left no means unemployed to gain knowledge concerning her work, she is prepared to answer the question satisfactorily.

And now let me say to those who are thus afflicted, at the earnest solicitation of friends I propose to devote

TUESDAY AND THURSDAY

of each week to any who may need my services in fitting Supporters or bandages, and will give such advice and make such examinations as they may need, at my residence on

AGRICULTURAL.

Comparatively little butter is now made in the Orange county region, once so celebrated. The milk is sold annually on contract at so much a gallon, taken at the farm house, so that the farmer has no trouble. It is found that the profit is larger than in making butter or cheese. The milk trains that run to New York are immense affairs. They gather milk within a radius of a hundred miles. The train that conveys the milk is composed of coaches made expressly for the purpose, sweet as a dairy, ventilated, and kept cool with ice. Few farmers make cheese. Manufactories for this article are increasing in the agricultural portions of the State, and milk that is too far to be brought to the city is sent to these great factories, where cheese is made by the wholesale. An immense cheese trade is carried on with Europe. The best "Devonshire cheese" is made in this country, and American cheese is very popular across the water. Nearly all the steamships carry large quantities of this material to England.

The crop returns received at the Department of Agriculture are reported to be unparalleled by any previous returns since the establishment of the statistical division. While exaggerated statements have been made in influential papers of the failure of the wheat crop last year, it is gratifying to know that we shall have a surplus to make good the deficiency.

The Rural New Yorker says of fast horses, "A well-to-do farmer of our acquaintance had the misfortune to rear a really fine and fast horse. The action of the animal gave him great delight, and nothing would do but an exhibition of him among the professionals. He put up his money and won. This gave a higher flight to his ambition and induced a bolder operation. Success again rewarded his venture. He neglected his farm, imperceptibly acquired habits to which he had before been a stranger, and spurred on by past success and the machinations of the crafty, whose aim it was to fleece the green and unwary, placed his farm in jeopardy for the purpose of raising money to stake on the result of a race in which his pet horse was to contend for the prize and the mastery. The professionals had now got the over-confident farmer in the precise position desired, and the result was what they intended it should be, the defeat of the farmer's horse and the ruin of his owner. The animal changed hands and so did the farm. It was all downhill with the farmer after this. His family was broken up and dispersed, while he, reckless and maddened by disappointment and remorse, found a premature grave.

A grindstone should not be exposed to the weather, as it not only injures the woodwork, but the sun's rays harden the stone so much as, in time, to render it useless. Neither should it stand in the water in which it runs, as the part remaining in the water softens so much that it wears unequally, and this is said to be a very common cause of grindstones becoming "out of true."

Roughs in Brazil.—A Para letter describes the adventures of a gang of New York roughs who went to Brazil to obtain the bounty of $500 in gold, offered for volunteers in the war against Paraguay. They were a fearfully hard lot, composed mainly of the pickpockets, shoulder-hitters, and wharf rats who were getting too hard even for the New York policemen. On the passage they were constantly fighting, and it was only by placing some of the leaders in irons that they were kept from rising on the officers and crew of the steamer. At St. Thomas, where the Brazilian mail steamships stop for 12 hours, they got ashore and went in to take the town, but came very near being taken themselves by the negresses among the coal-heavers there, who did not relish the indignities offered them by these brutes, and pelted them with lumps of coal till they were glad to leave.

On reaching their destination they at once began their usual recreations of robbing grocers, bakers, liquor dealers, but were brought up with a round turn by the police, who shot several of them, and turned the rest over to the military. The rogues were old hands at bounty jumping, but Brazilian military surveillance is a little too rigid for that, and they found their only resource was to take their $500 apiece in gold and watch for a chance to desert. They tormented their commander almost out of his life by their disorderly behavior, and as they could not be induced to affiliate with their Brazilian comrades, were formed into a battalion by themselves, and placed in charge of a fort, where it was believed their viciousness would lead them to hold out to the last in case of an attack. The subsequent military career of the desperadoes was what might have been expected of such rascals; the fort was invested by the Paraguayans, and with the imperial gold still jingling in their pockets, they turned the guns on the Brazilians, and went over to the enemy in a body.

A lady must think she has something valuable in her head, if we may judge from the number of locks she keeps on her back hair.

PIQUANTS.

Nasby has written his "biography," in which he says, "Uv my childhood I knew but little. My father wuz a leadin man in the humble speer in which he moved, holding at different times the various offices in the town up to constable, the successive steps bein road supervisor and pound master. He wuz elected constable, and mite probably hev gone higher but for an accident that occurred to him the first month. He collected a judgment for $18, and the money wuz paid to him. The good man was a talented collector, but wuz singerly careless in payin over wat he collected. Ez showin the pekoolier bent uv genius uv the old man, I repeet a conver-ashen I wunst heerd. A man who had an account to collect wuz consultin one who knowd my father well, ez to the safety uv puttin a claim into his hands.

"Is he a good collecter?" askt the man.

"Splendid," sed the naber.

"Is he a man uv responsibility?" sed the man.

"Sir," sed the naber, "he hez the ability, but you'll find when yoo try to git yoor money out uv his hands that he lacks the response."

Cood ther hev bin a more techin triboot?

He wuz like all men uv genius, unbalanced. His ability wuz all on one side. The grovelin plaintiff, who didn't admire sich erratic flites, raised a rackshen about the paltry sum, and my father emigrated.

An old gentleman was sitting on the brink of a river, fishing most patiently.—Suddenly a vicious little dog stole up behind him, and gave him a spiteful snap through his pantaloons. "Whew!" exclaimed the old fisherman, "I've got a bite at last."

A man named Walker went to a tailor to be measured for a pair of pantaloons, and gave directions to have them made large and full. When he came for them they stuck tight to his legs, and on remonstrating with the tailor that they were to be full, the latter coolly observed, "I think they are full enough; if they was any fuller they would split!"

An exchange says when ladies vote candidates will always be elected by handsome majorities.

A schoolmistress taking down the ages and names of her pupils, asked one little fellow his father's name, to which he replied, "O, you needn't take down his name; he's too old to go to school to a woman," was the innocent reply.

A spendthrift lying in bed saw a man enter his room cautiously, and attempt to pick the lock of his writing desk. The rogue was not a little disconcerted at hearing a loud laugh from the occupant of the apartment, whom he supposed asleep, and asked him the reason. "I am laughing," said the spendthrift, "to think what pains you are taking, and what risk you run, in hope of finding money by night in a desk where the owner can never find any by day."

Two fellows were disputing about their respective claims to distinction on the score of ancestry, when a third stepped in and said, "I rather think my ancestors made more noise in the world than those of either of you; my father was a drummer and my mother cried oysters."

The inhabitants of a village near by have been so swindled by beggars that a resident says if a person really in want should appear, it would afford ample occasion for a public demonstration."

A Pittsburg paper says that the possession of a nose is a misfortune in that city. The abominable odors are numerous, emphatic, and all-pervading.

A veritable story is told of a bright little girl, who, attending Sunday School for the first time, was asked, "Who went into the lion's den?" The little one appearing puzzled and not answering, the teacher commenced spelling, to awaken the child's memory. "D-a-n," I can tell now," exclaimed she, all smiles, "It was Dan Rice!"

A man in Hartford, Conn. advertised recently that on the receipt of a certain sum he would by return mail instruct any applicant how to make a fortune. His directions were, "Peddle cigars, half Havana and half home-made, as I did, and if that fails, advertise as I do that you will instruct others how to make a fortune—and pocket the proceeds."

A New York paper informs us that a Vermont railroad has declared a dividend.

In Warsaw, N. Y., resides Deacon M., a straightforward, honest old man, who is much afraid of hurting any one's feelings, and in alluding to the plainness of the way of truth, he once said, "It is so plain that the wayfaring man, though—a—little below the average, cannot err therein!"

Jones was writing of the whole souled liberality of a gentleman whose house he visited, when a friend asked if he was kicked out of doors.

Why is a retired oculist like an internal revenue officer? Because he is an ex-eyes-man.

"How often do you knead bread?" was asked of a housekeeper. "How often? why, I might say we need it continually," was the reply.

A YOUNG LADY returning to her country home, after a sojourn of a few months in the city, was hardly recognized by her friends. In place of a coarse, rustic, flushed face, she had a soft ruby complexion of almost marble smoothness, and instead of twenty-three she really appeared but eighteen. Upon inquiry as to the cause of so great a change, she plainly told them that she used the Circassian Balm, and considered it an invaluable acquisition to any lady's toilet. By its use any Lady or Gentleman can improve their personal appearance an hundred fold. It is simple in its combination as Nature herself, is simple, yet unsurpassed in its efficacy in drawing impurities from, also healing, cleansing and beautifying the skin and complexion. By its direct action on the cuticle it draws from it all its impurities, kindly healing the same and leaving the surface as Nature intended it should be, clear, soft, smooth and beautiful. PRAYING FOR RAIN.

We heard a dozen men complain,
When Wednesday it began to rain,
Just as before when it was dry,
They mourned a drought with many a sigh,
And seemed most strangely to forget
That water generally is wet;
If all men's prayers were heard together,
The world would have the queerest weather.

'My mill stands still! Oh, Lord, give rain!
'My grain is down! Oh Lord, refrain!'
'My corn is parched!' Ah! Becca's bonnet,' Don't let a drop of water on it;'
'Oh, not today, our washing's out;'
'Roll up, ye clouds; I go for trout.'
'The hen's come off—the chicks are drowned,'
'Oh, let it pour! my boat's aground!'

So, 'mid the murmur of the world,
The clouds like banners are unfurled;
The rain descends, the bow is bent,
The sky smiles clear, God's azure tent;
Sweet spring and robins sing together
And rain or shine, 'tis pleasant;
The sower's hopeful seed is flung,
And harvest songs are always sung.

MILO.

THE PROMISE THAT WAS KEPT.

One evening four German Students at the university were enjoying themselves in an upper room of a little hotel. They had four instruments, and were employing themselves in making music, after the hard labors of the day. There was a pause in their music; but no sooner had they ceased playing, than they heard an old man playing a violin beneath their window, in the street. They went to the window and looked out, watching him until he ceased playing. One of them threw out a little piece of money, and said to him, laughing: "Here poor Peter, this is all we have for you now; come again some other time."

"Yes" said another, come again in a year from now."

"Then we will give you a little house, for a present," said the third.

"Yes, in the middl of a garden," said the fourth.

The old man was struck with wonder at such a promise. His long white hair shone brightly in the light of the lanterns which hung out at a neighboring restaurant. He looked up to the window, and said, after a moment's reflection, "Young people, are you in earnest in what you say to me? I hope you are not making light of an old man."

"Indeed, we are in earnest, " replied Ernest, with excited voice; and his three companions called upon God to witness their seriousness.

"Farewell, then," replied the old man; "I take my leave of you. One year from to-day, at this same hour, expect me to come and play a tune beneath this window. Farewell; may the Almighty One, whose name you have called upon, bless you in your kindness."

The old man went off, after invoking this blessing upon them. The students closed the window, took their instruments again in their hands, and, after having played three or four lively tunes, seemed to forget all that had occurred. Ernest said to them, however, after the space of about half an hour, "You seem to be very quiet; I cannot be, for I have made a promise that I would give something which I have not got."

"What promise?"asked one of his light-hearted companions.

"The promise of a house and a garden."

A loud laugh was the response that he met with; and the students separated.

They met again on the following evening, and during their interview, Ernest called to mind the promise of the night before. They made light of him, and told him he was foolish to pay any more attention to it. Then said he, "I don't see where you consciences are, if you can make a promise and break your word."

"How can we fulfil any promise of that kind?" said Christopher. "Our parents are all poor, and have more than they can do to send us to the university. How then can they help us to buy a house and garden for a foolish old man? Good night, comrades, I wish you as pleasant a sleep as I shall have."

But this kind of argument did not affect Ernest much, for he could not help thinking that he was compelled to keep his bargain. He was the poorest one of the group, for his mother was a plain widow, and she made her living by washing. The promise he made, deeply affected him, and he left the university for a week, so that he might go home and tell his mother the pledge that he made to the old musician. After he had told her she replied: "Keep it, my son, keep it if it cost you your life."

"That is what I will try to do, mother; and I hope I shall have your prayers."

Ernest returned to the university, and told his friends that they must seriously think of buying the old man a house and garden. He went to a neighboring village one day, and found that he could get a neat little house and garden for two thousand guldens. That was a large sum for these poor students to think of paying; but through the influence of Earnest, the other three gradualy became convinced that it was their duty to keep their promise. The four resolved that in one year from the time the pledge was made the old man should have his house and garden, if it was in their power to get it for him.

They must leave the university—a sad proceeding for them. They came to the conclusion to go through the country, and give little concerts; for really this appeared to them to be the only way possible to gain money. Even by pursuing this course, there appeared to be a poor prospect of getting a large sum. Still they resolved to do their best. They closed their books, put their instruments in little bags, and set out, on foot, to give concerts in the villages through which they might pass. Ernest, before leaving, exacted a promise of the man who owned the house and lot which he had looked at, that he would not sell it under six months, and that if he would promise to take it at the end of that time, he might have it, though the money need not be paid under the year. Week after week passed by; and the students slowly proceeded on their way. Their expenses were not heavy, but their income was certainly very small too. Nine months and a half passed by, and still they had but little above seven hundred guldens. It was a great question with them how the remaining thirteen hundred could be raised. They were spending one day at a country town; and a nobleman, living in a large castle a few miles distant, was seeking musicians, to attend the wedding of his daughter, who was to be married in three or four days. Fortunately enough for the students, the nobleman employed them for the occasion. The marriage ceremonies took place, and by and by it was time for the music to begin. The students had trained themselves very carefully for that evening and their selections were certainly of a very high order. During the course of their festivities, it was noticed that the nobleman became very sad. His face wore a melancholy appearance, and those who stood nearest to him saw him weeping. What could have caused him to be melancholy at such a time as this? One of the pieces that those musicians had played, was his mother's favorite melody. She had often sung it to him, many yeas ago, and he had not heard it since untill the students playing it. It was enough to make him sorrowful; and it drew those students to his heart, in such a way that he could not express his feelings. They had recalled to his memory a piece of music which he had never been able to find in any music store, and which it was now worth a fortune for him to hear.

I must now make my story short. The nobleman kept the four 'students in his castle two weeks; became acquainted with him very fully, and learned their object in leaving the university to give concerts. He supplied them with three thousand guldens; and told them he would pay their expenses at the university for four years, and that they might have the privilege of making drafts on him at any time.

Their fortune was better than they had reason to expect. Ernest had already written to the owner of the house and garden, that he might expect them to take it; so that it was now engaged.

The students returned to the university,and reached there just a few weeks before the end of the year, when the house must be ready for the owner. On the evening of the day when the old man promised to appear, he stood below the window in the bright moonlight, playing his old violin. He was true to his word; and expected the promise to be kept. The young men went down to invite him up, and told him all that they had done. They showed him the deed for his place, and gave it to him. On the following day, he formally took possession of it; and they supplied it with furniture and groceries for house-keeping.

The young men felt that they were amply repaid for their faithfulness to their word, by the gratitude and joy of the old man. But they were not only repaid in feelings; they were more than repaid even in money.

Fourteen years after that time, that place came into their possession; for that old man had died and bequeathed it to them in his will. That part of the town rose suddenly in value. Many things contributed to its increased value, which I will not now enumerate. It is enough to say, that seventeen years from the time the four students gave the deed of that house and garden to the old musician, the same property which hed cost two thousand guldens, was worth eighty thousand. The students, therefore, were not merely repaid in heart but in money They had kept their word; and the memory of being faithful to their word, even to the poor old man who had no power to compel them to be true to it, was a pleasant memory, as long as they lived.—From the German.

SHALL I SEE MY CHILD AGAIN.

By Mrs. Turner Torrey.

O, shall I see my child again,
When life,s dark journey,s o,er?
And shall I clasp her in my arms,
To part with her no more?

And shall I hear her childish voice,
Saying, "O, mother dear,
Weep not, but ever more rejoice;
There is no parting here."

But all is peace and happiness,
A Savior's smiles we see;
Who once did little children bless,
Saying, let them come to me."

O, yes, I'll see my child again,
When life,s dark journey's o'er;
And I shall clasp her in my arms,
To part with her no more.

FUN WITH THE F's.

A famous Fish-factor found himself father of five flirting females—Fernanda, Fanny, Florence, Francesca, and Fenella. The first four were flat featured, ill-favored, flippant, fretful, forbidding-faced, freckled frumps, foolish, and flaunting. Fenella was a fine-featured, fresh, fleet-footed fairy, frank, free and full of fun. The fisher failed, and was forced by fickle fortune to forego footmen, forfeit his forefather's field and reputation, and find a forlorn farmhouse in a forsaken forest. The four fretful females, fond of figuring at feast in feathers and fashionable finery, fumed fearfully at their fugitive father, forsaken by fulsome, flattering, fortune-hunters, who followed them when they first flourished. Fenella fondled her father, flavored their food, forgot her flattering followers, and frolicked in frieze with flounces. The father, finding himself forced to forage in foreign parts for a forage in parts for a fortune, faund that he could not afford a farthing to his fond fondlings. The first four were fain to foster their frivolity with fine frills and fanes fit to finish their father's finances. Fenella, fearful of flooring him, formed a fancy, for a full, fresh flower. Fate favored the fish factor for a few days, when he fell in with a fog, his faithful filly's footsteps faltered, and food failed. He found himself in front of a fortified fortress. Finding it forsaken, and feeling himself feeble and forlorn with fasting, he fed on the fish, flesh, and fowl, fricassed and fried, and when full, fell flat on the floor. In the forenoon, feeling fresh, he forthwith flew to the fruitless fields, and, not forgeting Fenella, he filched a fair flower, when a foul, frightful, fiendish figure flashed forth.

"Felonious fellow, fingering my flowers, I'll finish you! Go, say farewell to your fine, felicitous family, and face me in a fortnight!"

The faint-hearted Fisher fumed and faltered, and was fast in his flight.—His five daughters flew to fall at his feet, and fervently to facilitate him. Frantically and fluently he unfolded his fate. Fenella,—forthwith fortified by filial fondness, followed her father's footsteps,—flung her faultless form at the feet of the frightful figure, who forgave her father; and fell flat on his face, for he had fervently fallen in a fiery fit of love for fair Fenella. He feasted her till, fascinated by his faithfulness, she forget the ferocity of his face, form, and features, and frankly and fondly fixed Friday, fifth day of February, for the affair to come off.

Dying of Thirst—The Sydney Herald states that in Australia there is one spot where people have been dying of thirst. It is said that in the Lachlan back country bodies and skeletons of persons who have perished from want of water are being continually found. It is also related that one man offered a pound note for half a pint of water. And having got it and swallowed it, offered £20 for a full pint, so great was his thirst. This may be an exaggeration but the story is generally believed. The tract of country alluded to is the only portion of the colony where the rain hás not fallen in large quantities.

A devout lady who attends the church of St. Roche, Paris, has been in the habit of giving half a franc to an old man who sits at the door to recieve alms. The other day, when she proffered the usual sum, he said, "I beg your pardon, madam; during the Exhibition it is a franc."

AN ENCOUNTER WITH BLACK SNAKES.

The Boonsboro Odd Fellow relates the following adventure of Professor J. Mitchell, of that town, on South Mountain:

Professor J. Mitchell, the celebrated "South Mountain Wizard," while out gunning last Friday, had a most thrilling adventure with a den of black snakes, known as "racers,"from which he narrowly escaped with his life. As is his habit, the Professor had taken his favorite carbine and gone into the mountain after squirrels. The best part of the forenoon had been spent in beating through the bush and over the rocks, without meeting with any adventure, and but ordinary success in procuring game, &c. Suddenly, however, he came to a ledge of rocks about a mile from the South Mountain House. Stopping a moment to take a survey of the surroundings, he saw a large black snake stretched out on a rock sunning himself. He at once took up a couple of stones and threw one at his snakeship, but unfortunately missed him. This aroused the snake, and in an instant he uncoiled himself, and stood with his head erect, as if indignant at this intrusion—and at the same time gave a loud, shrill hiss, or rather a whistle. The Professor delivered his second stone with such precision as to mortally wound his enemy. No sooner, however, had he thrown the stone, when he heard a fearful rustling among the brush to his left, and another whistle louder and shriller than the first. Turning his eyes in the direction from whence came the noise, he saw a monstrous black snake (a racer) coming directly toward him, with his head erected about five feet from the ground, and his distended jaws as if bent on fight. The Professor (who is an acknowledged crack shot) immediately raised his carbine, fired, and had the proud satisfaction of seeing the monster snake roll over in the agonies of death, having split his head open with the ball. This proved but the commencement of the battle; for before the Professsor had time to congratulate himself upon his success in vanquishing two of his foes, a third one, measuring about eleven feet in length and thick in proportion, had approached to within a few feet of him—his head erect—hissing, and darting his tongue out in a manner to appal the stoutest heart. To retreat was out of the question; a fight was the only alternative, and quick as thought he levelled his carbine at the snake's head, but, unfortunately, missed it, at the same time dropping it (his carbine) upon the ground. With the rapidity of lightning the black snake attacked the Professor, and commenced winding his slimy coils around his legs and body tighter and tighter at every coil of his loathsome form, until the Professor was unable move a foot. His efforts to extricate himself from the "coils of death"—as they seemed to him —were unavailing, for with every effort the folds tightened, and the work of respiration became difficult. Death and the snake stared him in the face, and made the cold chills of horror and agony creep over his body! It was a fearful moment—a moment of the most intense horror and agony, that made the flesh creep, the blood chill, and the hair literally to stand on end like quills upon a fretful porcupine!" Nothing but his great presence of mind saved him from strangulation and a loathsome death. Recollecting that his hunting-knife hung by his side, he seized it, and, with his nerves braced by despair, drew it across the body of the snake, severing it at a stroke. The coils relaxed, the snake dropped dead at his feet, and the Professor was on his feet again. By this time he heard a great rustling in the bushes and the bark crackling in every direction, accompanied by loud, shrill, angry hisses and whistling, as if the whole surrounding woods were filled with snakes.

Deeming discretion the better part of valor, he hastily grabbed up his carbine, girthed his hunting-knife, and beat a precipitate retreat. The Professor was pursued by the black snakes for some distance, but, being in a hurry, he had no time to look back and count the numbers. He says had they come one at a time he would not have retreated, but to attack him by companies, brigades, and divisions, was enough to frighten any man.

We have endeavored to give the facts as narrated by the Professor himself. Mr. Mitchell is well known in this community, and we have no reason to believe the facts have been aggravated. We have since been informed that this species of snakes is very plenty in the mountains, and have frequently been known to attack persons who intrude in their dens.

A YOUNG LADY FALLS THROUGH A BUGGY.

One of those annoying, yet ludicrous accidents, occurred on Sunday, not over a thousand miles from this city. A dry goods clerk had an engagement to take his lady love out buggy-riding. Early in the morning he appeared before her father's door with one of those spider-like vehicles which are probably constructed with a view of ascertaining how light a buggy can be made, and at the same time be serviceable. The lady is sixteen, beautiful, and just a little bit of what may be termed "fast." She is full of life, fun and frolic, and is decidedly embonpoint, weighing about one hundred and forty-five pounds. As the young gentleman drove up, his lady love was standing on the top step at the front door with her venerable father, who had his gold specs elevated on his forehead, in orker to get a distant view of his future son-in-law.

Adonis jumped out of the buggy preparatory to assisting the young lady in, but she suddenly took one of those strange freaks to which the dear sex are all liable. The buggy was standing about four feet from the steps, and considerably below the step upon which the young lady stood. She probably wanted to convince her lover that she was not clumsy if she was fat, and thought this would be a good time to show her agility. Be that as it may, she gave a jump and landed in the center of the buggy. If she had stopped there all would have been well; but, alas! the thin boards of the bottom of the buggy, unable to stand the pressure, gave way, and the young lady continued her descent. There was a piercing scream, a plunging horse with a young man holding to him, a bundle of muslin in the buggy, and two little gaiter boots pointing to the ground under it. Paterfamilias rushed the the rescue, and detached the horse from the buggy. He then got up on one side, the young man on the other, and they attempted to raise the young lady up. "O, stop! stop! you are killing me!" she cried.

The boards had broken in the center, and the long sharp splinters extended downwards, and when they attempted to raise the young lady out of her predicament, these sharp splinters would catch in her le——pshaw! Did you ever see a wire mouse-trap? If not, go and get one, stick your fingers through the entrance tunnel and try to pull it out. You will then understand the sad fix that our young lady was in on Sunday morning. The old man contemplated the situation in a moment. He told the young man to get down and break the splinters off. Young lady screamed, "O, don't," and young men wouldn't. At this stage of the proceeding a practical neighbor came up with a hatchet, and the young lady was soon extricated from her unpleasant situation, and disappeared behind the door. We don't know whether the young lady sustained any serious injury, or not, and we are not going to ask any questions of that young man.

RED CHEEKS & BLUE NOSES.

Tradition is to the effect that Nova Scotia noses are cerulean or azure in tint. But, if we may credit a correspondent of the Independent, this condition is compensated for by their rosy cheeks. Canadian children are thus described:

I arrived at one of the village churches, and while I was waiting for the sexton, a door opened, and out poured the Sunday school, whose services had just closed. On they came, dividing in the centre, and falling to the right and left about me, thirty or forty boys and girls, between the age of seven and fifteen. I looked at them in astonishment. They all had fair skins, red cheeks and clear eyes; they were all broad-shouldered, strait and sturdy; the young ones were more than sturdy—they were fat, from the ankles up. But perhaps the most noticeable thing of all was the quiet, sturdy, unharrassed expression which their faces wore—a look which is the greatest charm of a child's face, but rarely seen in children over two or three years old. Boys of eleven and twelve were there, with shoulders broader than the average of our boys at sixteen, and yet with the pure, childlike look on their faces. Girls of ten or eleven were there who looked almost like women—that is, like ideal women—simply because they looked so calm and undisturbed. The Saxon coloring prevailed; three-fourths of the eyes were blue, with hair of that pale ash brown, which the French call blonde cendree. Out of them all there was but one child who looked sickly. He had evidently met with some accident, and was lame. Afterwards, as the congregation assembled, I watched the fathers and mothers of these children. They too, were broad-shouldered,tall and strait, especially the women. Even old women are strait, like the negroes one sees at the South, walking with burden on their head.

Climate undoubtedly has something to do with this. The air is moist, and the mercury rarely rises above 80 deg. or falls below 10 deg. Also the comparative quiet of their lives help to make them so beautiful and strong. But the most significant fact to my mind is that until the past year there have been in Nova Scotia no public schools, comparatively few private ones; and in these there is no severe pressure brought to bear on the pupils. The private schools have been expensive, consequently it has been very unusual for children to be sent to school before they were eight or nine years of age; and I could not find a person who had ever known a child's being sent to school under seven! The school sessions are on the old plan of six hours per day, from nine till twelve, and from one till four; but no such thing as learning lessons out of school has been allowed.

BIOGRA-BLOWEBISMS.

Our local Plutarchs are reaping a goodly harvest in their biographical line. Every man who has gone out of the even tenor of this life, enough to eat an extra pudding upon an extraordinary occasion, is served up to the palate of his neighbors upon a platter reeking with extravagancies, and adorned with ridiculous platitudes. If he, upon some great occasion, happened by chance to have his name called as juror, and if while sitting in the jury-box, with his noble mind trained to do justice, while some poor devil gyrates before him upon a plea of not guilty as to the theft of a setting hen, instanter our biographers seize upon this as a salient point in this man's life, and swelling his bag-pipe of history, squeaks out this refrain, "Behold Tom Bussy; see the working of his noble mind! how much like Jove upon Mount Olympus he looks! Dominus rerum indeed! The country is safe while such as he stands at the jury helm, etc. etc."

No man's history ever should be written until it becomes a public necessity so to do; that is, until he has, by the force of his many and varied services, won the attention and admiration of his people. Then they begin to ask themselves how all of his great developments were brought about, what manner of life was his, etc. Now the biographer should step in and attempt to transcribe for the study of the people the brilliant periods of this man. They ask it, knowing that the feeble memory of man runs but a little way and a record of this man's life will be worthy of preservation. But every Jack Sprat cannot be written and sung, and any attempt to set him up into the dignity of type will be only a wasted column of print, a useless job for the printer. The people will not read it, and if they do it is but to ridicule the poor viciimized subject, and to apply the fit titles to the lilliput biographer.

Again, what modest man wants to be bolstered up upon a thousand high-stepping adjectives? To see some little incident he has been interested in transformed into a gigantic undertaking to satisfy the wants of the gigantic eulogy? He must feel conscious that it is all exaggerated nonsense and trash, and that he is but running a muck at ridicule.—Some men's lives shine with all the virtues in their neighbors' mind. Little acts of goodness, kindness, charity, often repeated, give them the affection of their community. But transfer these small matters into the grim rigidness of print, and their very smallness will be painfully apparent, while their real effect on their community is lost, in the pompous expletives of the inflated writer.

The preambil was ambled inter adopshun lively.—not a vote agin it. Artikil 1 korsed some diskusshun. Awl konsidered "Peopul's Liker League" a sound and kleer titul; but sum thot "Lisuns," or "Liberti" shud be sub-titooted fur "Liker." Howsumever, 'twas votid, 3 to 1, to hold on to the "Liker"!

The titul uv Pure Liker Lovers gin rise to still more dispute. There's allurs an Acorn in the kamp uv goodnis, and we found we'd got wun in ourn,—a feller from Quarrelville, who objectid to the wurd "Pure," sain Poor wud be a much moar fitin adjective, whether kunsidered as applied to the Liker, or to the Luvers uv it; while, at the saim time, it wudn't millitate agin the idee that we loved "Pure" liker when we kud git it, which warn't very often, so to speke. We just giu him to understand 'twas too solum a time to be playin onto words in that wa, and sent the title whizin over his hed bi a large majoriti.

The pledge tuk like wildfire, or firewater. The Offisir article was passed without a dissenun vote, or voice. Ditto everything relatin to the dooties uv offisirs. The manner of admisshun at the door, bi the Worthi Head Scenter, was pertikerly kummended as a sweepin stroak uv genius. No spies kud kreep into our League with a smuggled or stolen pass-wurd. If tha didn't emit the right odor tha kudn't kum in, not tha.

Artikil 5, Sec. 1, parsed unobjectid to. Seckshuns 2 and 4, providin a pint uv Medfurd-initiashun fluid, free, to each member, was karrid en masse, mid shouts uv applaws. Mi friend J. splaned on this novel featur in our konstitooshun, sumwhat, bi sain our idee was to get rid uv dreemy theorisirs what never did anithing, and secure fur membars only practical men, each uv whom shud be able to carry his pint, or vice verser, hav his pint carry him, wich wud be all the same at eleeshun, under the sagashus leedership uv the offisirs uv our Leegue.

Seeshun 5—the origanal members shal be inishiatid—wus votid in with cheers that made the welkin ring. Seeshun 6—No woman shall be allowed to jine this League—met with hearty approval. A gentleman present from Debauch Slough sed "that the influence of woman ever since her creation had had a demoralisin effect upon man, tho he wus bi natur and practic, everi wa, her, hic, hic, hic, spew, spew—spewferior. There had bin mutch fine talk about the spewferioriti uv her intooitions, but tha led her into a scrape the fust thing, when, if she had watid fur the slower, but truer, instincts uv Adum's kleerer head, he wud have made the entire fruit uv the tree into sider—agin drinking whitch there wus no kummandmint. He shud vote for that seeshun as ardentli as he loved whiskee, or the improvemint uv his moral natur."

The remainin artikils were votid in without remark, and the eleeshun uv offisirs kummensed. Mi friend j was elected C. W. T. (Chief Worthy Toper,) and congratulatid hisself in his usual boose-id stile. Wun uv the principal liker deelers uv Bostun wus chosun W. T. (Worthy Treasurer,) and he assured the League that the gamblin tools pertainin to his offis wud be forthcummin, forthwith. Yure humble servant was electid W. S. (Worthy Secretary) bi a younanimus vote. What tendid to make it younanimus more than anithing else, xcept mi votin fur miself, wus the remembrans uv the sad fact that the recurds uv similur meetins, in days gon bi, had bin utterli lost by means uv the secretari enterin so deepli into the spirit uv the sevcrul occashuns (or it into him,) as not to be abil to distinguish the wine-glass on the desk frum the inkstand, and invariabli dippin his pen in the former. The result wus that the recurds were too spirit-ed to be discerned with the nakid I, and nobuddy kud remember what had bin dun xcept that the meetins had also been spiritid. Pur kontra, I wus knone to be a mejum whitch the spirits kud never git entire kontrole on, and probabli kud tell a wine-glass from an inkstand under the most xcitin circumstansis. So I wus electid younanimus, as befour sed. Of koarse I was kalled on fur a speech; so I rose and opened mi mouth as follers:—"Gentlemen uv the People's Liker League,—no tung kan xpress my appresiashun uv the honor you hav dun me, and uv the fitness uv yure chose. Hi as I have bin befour in mi own estimashun, and in yourn, you will bear me witness I hav never bin so hi as I am to-nite. You hav not onli elected me secretari, but hav also gin me the honorary titul uv worthi. And I kan assure you that the offisirs uv this League, as thus far elected, are no exceptshun to the general rule that them as gits an ollis most sadli needs its honurs.

Beloved bro. Pure Liker Lovers, all; in vu uv the honor U have confird down upon me, it will be mi pleasyur to kall upon U, on the morro, at yure several homes, and drink your seperit health, respectivly, (here I was interrupted by a bust uv tumultuous applaws, and it was full 5 minits befour I kud finish,) and I shall xpect U to furnish the helth-givin fluid. This last sentence, tho as eloquent as the precedin one, died awa amid a stillness and chillness equal to that succedin a thunder tempest in the latter end of September. I understood it: poor fellers! State kunstabils had dun thare cruel work, and it wus no longir as in days gon bi, when each man sot under his own keg or barrel bung, and had enuf and to spare. Mi speach bein dun, balloun fur Worthy Head Scenter commenct. The fust vote, as deklared, stood thus:—Whole number uv votes 500; scaterin 500; each man, not xceptin me and J and the principal liker deelers, havin a vote apeace. The plesunt dooties uv the ollis made it so desirable, that the vote was likeli to stand so all nite, till a Doctir who was present sed that in so large a gatherin thare must be sum who were physikally disqualified bi catarr or snuff, or sum uther disese, and if the meetin wud take a reces he'd see who wus compos smellus.—So we recessed, and he drank a glass uv gin and went round, and finalli reportid 100 non compos smellus. So we voted agin, and a German larger beer barrel on two legs wus elected, he havin 102 votes, and the rest bein scaterin, as befour. He wus a reglar demikrat, and understood elec-huns. He had follered the Doctir round and bot up the smellless wuns at 85 apiece. I seed how the thing wus goin and sold him mi vote fur a ten spot, and he votid fur himself, which made a 102.

Cries fur "initiashun" now kum up frum all parts uv the hall; but the prinsipal liker deelers set it kudn't possibli be furnisht befour a week from to-nite. So, in the langwidge uv the immortal Shakspeare, we each retired to "Wrap the draperi uv his couch about him,

And lie down to pleasant dreems."

PLAIN SPOKEN ISAAC,

NORTH WEYMOUTH.

Mr. Editor:—As one whom fortune favored with the sight, a memoir of the late review at Camp Lincoln, Hull, may not be perhaps out of place, as the temple of Janus is closed and "grim visaged war hath smoothed his wrinkled front," and Bellona is busy at the distaff. The duties of your station as purveyor to the public mind (which fortunately requires no stimulants) have deprived you of the sight I have seen—and lest you should "burst into ignorance" I will narrate the events and describe the lions. The first in station and fame was Gen. B. F. Butler. He resembled more an ancient Spartan than a modern Gaul. He had something of Marcellus, but more of Fabius. In short, Mr. Editor, his appearance was favorable to his reputation—he had the stern plainness that befits the soldier of the republic.

The crowd attracted to the field had not all the usual elements of a crowd. There was beauty and but little booty, wealth and not much want—rank and no rags—and never was there a crowd so clear of bush-whackers, cloak-twitchers, bloats, bucks and bloods. It is certain that, in no other situation does New England character shows to such disadvantage as at a review. But this one was conducted with great order and quietness. The military were in excellent order; the troops marched and drilled exceedingly graceful and warlike, and their appearance in other and better points was martial.

And those who had responded to their country's call and stood in marches and camp, between the wicked rebellion and their country, in roads and fields that the pen could never describe, and visited Camp Lincoln in this late review, could but ponder in sadness to hear those drum and bugle calls, that dismal and hollow rumble of artillery wheels they once had followed with steady tramp through the forests and swamps of the South.

EAST WEYMOUTH.

A Surprise.—Friday evening last, at East Weymouth, Mechanic Temple of Honor met for the first time in the new hall in the building formerly owned by N. C. Rogers, and lately sold to Chas. Humphrey, on the corner of High St.—The hall has been handsomely furnished for the business of the Temple, is spacious and well adapted to meet the growing wants of this institution, which owes its success to those staunch temperance men who only a few months ago numbered but fifteen, all told.

The Lodge were highly gratified with the appearance of their hall, which had been fitted up at a cost of about $300, and were none the less pleased at the sudden irruption of a body of ladies who were admitted within the guarded portal as bearers of a beautiful silk flag which they had brought for presentation to the Temple. The party, numbering about 40, took possession of the hall about 9 1-2 o'clock, and after order was restored Miss Josie Pratt presented the flag with the accompanying remarks.

Worthy Chief Templar, and members of Mechanic Temple of Honor:

We come with cheerful greetings to encourage your hearts and strengthen your hands in the holy cause of temperance. Intemperance is a great evil; rum kills more than the sword. More than sixty thousand of our fellow mortals, annually, in this fair land, are swept from life into a drunkard's grave and a miserable eternity, while the broken heart of the widow and the wail of orphans call for redress against this terrible tide of ruin. To arrest this great curse you are banded together and have pledged to each other your sacred honor. You have reason for encouragement; the success of the past guarantees bright hopes for the future.

The two greatest evils that ever cursed our land are slavery and rum. The former, after the agitation of half a century and the fortunes of four years of terrible war, in which many of our loved ones were slain on the field of battle, is forever blotted from our national escutcheon.

The war against intemperance has already begun. Though the struggle will not involve so much bloodshed it will be stubborn and relentless. The strong fortifications of the rum power, like those of Vicksburg, Charleston and Richmond, will never surrender. They must be captured. The issue will not be doubtful. Do well your part and all is gain. King Alcohol will find his last ditch equally infamous as that found by the President of the Confederacy. Then will the two greatest evils of our land be destroyed, and we shall be free indeed.

We come to-night to present you with this banner, the emblem of our country, inscribed on which is the name and number of your Lodge. Receive it as an humble testimonial of the esteem in which your Order is held by the ladies in East Weymouth, ever bearing in mind its tenets, which are Truth, Love, Purity and Fidelity.

At the conclusion of the address the Worthy Chief made an appropriate reply, followed by Mr. Joseph Sherman, who extended to the ladies the sincere gratitude of the members and a vote of thanks from the Temple for their beautiful present,—beautiful, not only because it is our national banner, not only on account of its emblems, not only on account of its worth, but because it is the gift of the ladies. And, (continued Mr. S.,) I cannot express the gratitude I feel toward you for the interest you have manifested in this Temple thus far, and just so long as you continue to do so, you may always expect to find your husbands and associates what all men should be, temperance men. Ladies, you are exerting a powerful influence in this cause, and I believe if the ladies of this country would form a society with an obligation that they would never, under any circumstances, marry a man that used intoxicating liquors, the result would be that the generation which is to come would not see one cargo of liquor imported into this country. Mr. S. closed with a vivid picture of the woes which intemperance brings upon families and communities, and was followed by Mr. Cottington Nash, a faithful veteran in the temperance cause, who made some very entertaining remarks. Rev. Mr. Morrison, being unexpectedly called upon, addressed the ladies substantially as follows:

Ladies of East Weymouth, we welcome you to our hall. Your words of encouragement are truly gratifying to us. We are happy to know that the ladies of our commonwealth have always been ready to lend their co-operation and sympathy to any and all organizations having for their end the overthrow of the rum traffic. In this they are right. To-night you have come to present Mechanics' Lodge of the Temple of Honor this beautiful flag, the emblem of our country, dear to every woman of the Colonies in the early struggle for independence; dear to every loyal woman during the recent four years of fearful conflict; shown to be dear by the oft repeated sacrifices she has been willing to make to maintain its respect and establish its authority. To her this flag is an emblem of progress; under its folds the people may advance in culture, in improvements, and in every virtue. It shall yet be made terrible to the traffickers in rum.

The time for moral suasion alone, on the rum question, is past. For more than fifty years this power has been used against this traffic, but with little success. The strong arm of law is now needed; prohibition by law alone meets the demand. In this interest we shall bear aloft this banner, trusting in God and sound temperance principles for the success of our cause. Ladies, we thank you for your presence, and for your valuable gift to our Lodge.

The banner bears the motto of the Temple, "Truth, Love, Purity, Fidelity," tastefully inscribed on its folds. The cost of the flag and staff was about $75.

The ladies also spread a bountiful collation in the hall, the tables being elegantly adorned with fresh flowers arranged by Mrs. S. Canterbury, to whom the community are indebted for many favors of a like nature.

As an additional present, Mr. Joseph Sherman has furnished the Lodge with a time-piece.

SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

We propose a cranberry story. All children seem partial to those nice tarts mothers so well know how to make palatable and inviting. Cranberries are a delicious luxury in the sick chamber; when all other food is rejected by the invalid, a portion of cranberry sauce seems to strike the right spot. In the first generation the families of South Weymouth usually hauled in a few bushels of cranberries, and the old fashioned election in May gave evidence that the stock was not exhausted. At this stage, possibly, Young America will exclaim, "What the deuce are you driving at?"—A funny episode, of course. Well, we are going up to Weymouth Great Pond to fix upon a central position—the banks thereof making the semi-circle of the field of operations, to wit.

Some 42 years since there was quite an expanse of cranberry meadows on the eastern, southern and western shores of Great Pond; the vines were fruitful,—then owners were farmers and large landholders—prominent among whom was an esteemed citizen, Eliphalet Loud, Esq. Prior to this era the custom prevailed to pick cranberries at halves. In harvest time it was not unusual to see children representing 25 to 50 families, scattered along the meadows from morn till night, filling their measures, the landlord being on hand to secure his toll. Some wise Solons raised the question of "vested rights" in these prolific cranberry beds. Legal title was logically ventilated in the workshop, grocery store, &c. Preponderance of public opinion culminated in adjudicating that Great Pond belonged to the town, and high water mark the dividing line between the abuttors on the upland; hence, cranberries being on meadow flowed by Great Pond, was public property.

Under cover of this somewhat "Berlin decree," a youthful army of occupation commenced picking where they pleased and bagging all their game. To this presumptuous innovation a demurrer was filed by Eliphalet Loud, Esq. in person. Again the squatter troop of juveniles appeared with basket and bag; then followed a "warning," (as the French emperor has it.) Again the dauntless urchins appeared in column on the covered meadow, whereupon the towering and portly figure of Squire Loud became visible; his manner and step indicating a purpose to clear the field. Upon his near approach most of the little radicals receded somewhat hurriedly; one little chap, hardly of ten summers, stood his ground, when ordered by the "Squire" to disperse, grasped his bag of cranberries, wouldn't budge an inch. Thereupon Esquire Loud procured a suit of trespass, returnable at Court Common Pleas, Dedham, and arrested this bit of a lad to answer to the grave charge.

The precept was served by a sheriff personally on the infant. The act created sensation; the father trembled on account of the magnitude of the impending action. The lad arrested was one John W. Thomas, who, if we mistake not, is now Sheriff of the County of Norfolk. A town meeting was called, a committee of five was chosen, of which the late Col. Levi Bates was chairman, who were empowered to assume the alleged trespass, authorise picking of cranberries by personally shielding and protecting such citizens as were inclined to gather the contested cranberries, and litigation ensued in due course of law.—At last the town was defaulted; the Supreme Judicial Court deciding that upland abuttors' boundaries extended to low water mark, and Esquire Loud was triumphant.

KEOKUCK.

The Concert and Levee given by the Mutual Library Association of South Weymouth, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, was pecuniarily successful, and afforded an entertainment every way worthy of public patronage. The "Old Folks" performance was very spirited, and the characters well sustained, and the singing admired by all. The pews of the church were floored for the occasion.

We learn that the Union Congregegational Sabbath School, which had not assembled for several weeks on account of the closing of the Church, resumed its sessions on Sunday last at Binney's Hall. Although notice of the meeting was not given till late in the week, 112 members were present, and the work was renewed with a zeal and spirit which betokens permanence. The use of the Hall and the Musical Instrument, is kindly granted by the Sons of Temperance. The Library will be open for distribution of books next Sabbath and the School will commence as formerly, 1.15 P. M.

The Weymouth (Eng.) Guardian says of this town, "Dorset people seem to have christened the township, for we find "South Weymouth" "North Weymouth," "East Weymouth." An Essex man apparently had a hand in naming an adjoining place, "Braintree".

Interesting Law Case.—At the probate court held at Abington on Monday of this week the most interesting as well as complex case on trial was that of Caleb Cushing and Wm Fearing, both of Hingham. The defendant appeared to answer to a citation to acknowledge a deed purporting to have been given by Wm Fearing to one Pyam Cushing, deceased, and witnessed by one Robert Cushing also deceased. The defendant by advice of his counsel acknowledged his signature and plead "not his free act and deed". The defendants counsel also set up "consideration void", and various other pleas in proof of "fraud".

Plaintiff's counsel objected to evidence of fraud, claiming that acknowledgement of signature was the only question within jurisdiction of probate court, evidence allowed by judge Wood. The next point raised by plaintiff's counsel was that the defendant could not testify in reference to non-signing of subscribing witness deceased; evidence allowed, subject to further consideration. The circumstances which attended the giving of this deed were these. About the year 1848 Mr. Pyam Cushing agreed to build a small barn for the defendant and take his pay in standing wood, heavy cedar and oak wood. One evening, as the defendant happened to call at the house of Pyam Cushing, Mr Cushing produced a document which he said was a permit to cut wood from the defendants five acre lot until he got pay from it for the barn. It was between sunset and dark, and the defendant, Mr Fearing, signed the paper which it was too dark to read, supposing it was all right, as Mr Cushing was his father in law, whom he had confidence in. After he had cut a large quanity of wood, (nearly all of the lot) Mr Fearing asked him if he had got his pay. He said he had. Mr. Fearing did not ask for the document which he had signed, supposing it worthless. Since the father in law deceased, the son, Caleb Cushing, brought the pretended permit and lo it was a substantial warrante deed, sealed and witnessed. These facts and the various pleas for and against were heard by the judge, who said he would take two weeks to consider the case and consult authorities, after which he would give a decision. Percy Simmons of Hanover counsel for Plaintiff, N. Austin Langley for Defendant.

The Defendants counsel has secured his client against loss of the estate in case decision is rendered against him, by selling the afore-said five acre lot to a bona fide purchaser without notice of the incumbrance and for valid consideration, ($300) according to the provision of the common law that the deed first acknowledge and recorded holds the land.

Excursion.—The Musical Club, accompanied by a few invited guests, made an excursion down the river on board the yacht Mary Ellen, Capt. Lane, Monday last. The party landed at Nut Island and spent the day in a delightful manner,—croquet, ball playing, and target shooting forming the principal features of amusement, with a good Clam Chowder, got up by Capt. Lane.

This club made an excursion once before, and a notice appeared in the Gazette of the "Warblers" going down the River. This was thought to have occurred unbeknown to you, as the name "warblers" was an emanation from the store of Willis & Worster, not very flattering to the ladies and gentleman comprising the Club. Another costly dwelling is being erected on Front street, by Mr. Erastus Nash, to cost about $30,000. The architectural character of the building will assimilate somewhat with the residence of Mr. Winslow Blanchard, at South Weymouth.

Loss of a valuable Horse.—On Wednesday of last week, one of Baker's express teams, while standing at the scales at the Flax Mill, was overturned by the horses starting in the absence of the driver, and the load fell on one of the animals, injuring him so severely that it was found necessary to kill him.

Over exertion, either of body or mind, produces debility and disease. The usual remedy is to take some stimulant, the effect of which is the same as giving a tired horse the whip instead of oats. The true way is to fortify the system with a permanent tonic like the Peruvian Syrup, (a protoxide of iron,) which gives strength and vigor to the whole system.

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY.

In the whole history of medical discoveries no REMEDY has performed so many or such remarkable cures of the numerous affections of the THROAT, LUNGS and CHEST, as this long tried and justly celebrated Balsam. So generally acknowledged is the superior excellence of this remedy that but few of the many who have tested its virtues by experience fail to keep it at hand as a speedy and certain cure for sudden attacks of COLD—fully believing that its remedial powers are comprehensive enough to embrace every form of disease, from the slightest cold to the most dangerous system of pulmonary complaint.

UNSOLICITED TESTIMONY.

From Rev. Francis Lobdell, Pastor of the South Congregational Church, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I consider it a duty which I owe to suffering humanity to bear testimony to the virtues of Dr Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I have used it, when I have had occasion for any remedy for Coughs, Colds or Sore Throat, for many years, and never in a single instance has it failed to relieve and cure me. I have frequently been very hoarse on Saturday, and looked forward to the delivery of two sermons on the following day, with sad misgivings, but by a liberal use of the Balsam my hoarseness has invariably been removed, and I have preached without difficulty.

I commend it to my brethren in the ministry, and to public speakers generally, as a certain remedy for the bronchial troubles to which we are peculiarly exposed."

Prepared by SETH W. FOWLE & SON, 18 Tremont St., Boston, and for sale by Druggists generally.

Another costly dwelling is being erected on Front street, by Mr. Erastus Nash, to cost about $30,000. The architectural character of the building will assimilate somewhat with the residence of Mr. Winslow Blanchard, at South Weymouth.

Loss of a valuable Horse.—On Wednesday of last week, one of Baker's express teams, while standing at the scales at the Flax Mill, was overturned by the horses starting in the absence of the driver, and the load fell on one of the animals, injuring him so severely that it was found necessary to kill him.

Over exertion, either of body or mind, produces debility and disease. The usual remedy is to take some stimulant, the effect of which is the same as giving a tired horse the whip instead of oats. The true way is to fortify the system with a permanent tonic like the Peruvian Syrup, (a protoxide of iron,) which gives strength and vigor to the whole system.

MRS. L. W. TUCK'S

Three Supports Combined in One.

A SUPPORTER like this has never before been offered to the public. It can be arranged to

FIT ANY SIZE OR FORM;

is easily adjusted, convenient to wear, causing no heat or irritation, ELASTIC being used instead of steel springs, rendering it

Comfortable and Easy

in any posture the body may assume.

Great care has been taken in arranging the Support for the Uterus. The wearing of the Supporter a part of the time (for no Supporter should be worn constantly) will not only afford temporary relief and stay the progress of the disease, but in most cases of one of the most distressing and discouraging diseases to which woman is subject.

Ladies, this is not merely an advertisement.—One of your own sex has arranged it, after years of suffering and fruitless search to find some support or compress that would bring relief. She aroused herself, fully persuaded she could invent a Supporter which would benefit herself; and as she gained strength and went into society, she was constantly meeting those similarly afflicted: and listening to the oft repeated question, "Oh, how I suffer; can't you do something to help me?" after two years more of study and toil, during which time she left no means unemployed to gain knowledge concerning her work, she is prepared to answer the question satisfactorily.

And now let me say to those who are thus afflicted, at the earnest solicitation of friends I propose to devote

TUESDAY AND THURSDAY

of each week to any who may need my services in fitting Supporters or bandages, and will give such advice and make such examinations as they may need, at my residence on

DEPOT STREET, SOUTH WEYMOUTH.

AGRICULTURAL.

It is said that rats may be expelled by placing mullein leaves in their holes.

To keep setting hens from being infested with vermin, put a few tobacco leaves in their nest.

The American Agriculturist has an account of a swarm of bees which, with the little bush on which they lighted, weighed only a quarter of a pound.

From experiments carefully conducted it appears that the thickest cream does not always yield the most butter.

The Gardener's Monthly says that grape vines grow much better over a twiggy branch, stuck in for support, than over a straight stick or fine trellis.

In England, milk which produced twelve per cent. of cream in the country, produced only eight per cent. after having been shaken up by transportation to market.

According to a table said to have been prepared by Prof. Lewes, of England, the value of a ton of manure made by cattle fed on cotton seed cake is $27 86; on Indian corn $6 65; potatoes $1 50; common turnips only 86 cents!

Mr. Bement says that out of ten nests in his poultry house, three are especially popular with the hens; one of them is a cold corner on the ground, the second in a window exposed to light and heat, and the third situated in a dark place in an iron pot. He does not understand the principal on which they choose.

Well-fed and healthy cattle have a natural remedy or preventative of lice in the oil that exudes from their skins, and when lice make their appearance on cattle, it is evidence of a want of care and cleanliness in their keeping. Half a gill of spirits of camphor rubbed in with the hand is recommended by C. P. Vining, in the New York Tribune, for their removal.

A Southern Illinois correspondent of the New York Tribune, says he has grown strawberries ten years, and knows less about them now than he thought he knew when he began. He has planted them in hills and kept the ground scrupulously clean, and had them do poorly; again he has gathered some of his best crops from beds little cared for, indeed overrun with weeds. The point of his remarks being the importance of mulch and moisture to the perfection of the strawberry.

Murderous Outlaw.—A California paper gives a rather hard-to-believe story of the depth of the snow on the Sierra Nevada mountains in February and March, by describing the visit of a merchant named Adams from the valley to the mining town of Meadow Lake, on the top of the mountains.

He procured a pair of snow shoes, and took the tracks of some who had gone over the day before. After some hours of hard travel he arrived where the town should be, and not a house was visible. While he was looking around, a man suddenly came up out of the snow, like a mermaid out of the sea. Adams asked the man if he could tell him where the town of Meadow Lake was, not knowing as yet whether the object before him was a man or a spirit.

"Why," said the fellow, "you are right on the piazza."

Adams asked him if he could show him where the store of Adams & Johnson was.

"Oh, yes, come along."

A few shoves on a pair of snow shoes soon brought them to a round hole which led to the store. There were stairs in the snow like a spiral way, twisting several times around the hole in making the descent. Finally he arrived at the bottom, and was astonished to find his friends there, happy and gay, and ready to vouch for the country being one of the richest ever discovered. From the store they traveled over the town through tunnels.

A correspondent from Jasper, Tennessee, writes that during Bragg's retreat from Middle Tennessee, two rebel soldiers stopped at the house of Mr K., and one of them proposed a trade for a very fine horse, but thought that a large white spot on the horse's forehead lessened his value somewhat.

"Why so?"

"Because," said the soldier, "the Yankees can see it a great way off."

"Never mind that," said his companion; "father God is always toward the Yankees."

Pumice Stone.—Pumice stone, common as it is, is really a remarkable thing. Every piece of pumice stone once existed as lava in the depths of a volcano. But it not alone makes its appearance from the volcano, but also from the bottom of the sea. There are submarine volcanoes venting their fiery anger at such vast depths under the ocean, that their effects do not reach the surface. The pumice which they discharge being lighter than water, rises to the surface and soon obtain it. It has been seen floating over a space of three hundred miles on the sea, at a great distance from land or any known volcano.

The Methodists have 51 weekly publications in the country.

PIQUANTS.

Doctor Abernethy.—Doctor Abernethy rarely met his match; on one occasion he fairly owned that he had. He was sent for by an innkeeper, who had a quarrel with his wife who had scarred his face with her nails so that the poor man was bleeding and much disfigured. Abernethy considered this an opportuny not to be lost for admonishing the offender and said:

"Madam, are you not ashamed of yourself to treat your husband thus—the husband, who is the head of all—your head, madam, in fact"

"Well, doctor," fiercely returned the virago, "and may I not scrach my own head?"

Upon this, her friend adviser, after giving directions for the benefit of the patient, turned on his heel and owned himself beaten for once.

An old fellow who had been through the mill, describes Winter sports as "sleighing, skating, coughing, sneezing, blowing your nose, flourishing your handkerchief, buying lozenges, overshoes, and swallowing cough candy, not to speak of cayenne peppgr, hot whisky punches, horse blankets in the day time, and old stockings around your throat at night."

As a fop was riding a very fine horse in the Park, a young and pretty lady was very evidently admiring the animal, when he stopped, and impudently asked, "Are you admiring me, miss?" No was the ready reply: "I was admiring the horse, not the donkey."

—A ferryman, whilst plying over a river which was only slightly agitated, was asked by a timid lady in his boat, whether any persons were ever lost in that river. "Oh, no" said he, "we always find 'em again the next day."

A father said to his wife, when his dissipated boy had come home: Wife, kill the prodigal, the calf's returned!"

Proud characters love those to whom they do a service.

An Irishman's friend having fallen into a slough, the Irishman called loudly for assistance. The latter, who was busily engaged in cutting a log, and wished to procrastinate, inquired: How deep is the gentleman in? "Up to his ankles." Then there is plenty of time." No there's not," rejoined the first; "I forget to tell you he's in head first."

An old Irish officer, after a battle, ordered the dead and dying to be buried pell-mell. Being told that some were alive and might be saved: "O, bedad," said he, "if you were to pay any attention to what they say, not one of them would allow that he was dead."

The following is an epitaph written by a school-master, in an inland town in Connecticut, on the death of a favorite child which fell into the water of a saw mill dam, and was drowned:—

Just below a Ca Mil dam
A Child was drown'd Slain,
Black water white head
The Child was Kilt stun dead.

The neighbors came down to the water
All for to see what was the matter
They and their parents wept and groaned
For their first born child was drowned.

—A youngster perusing a chapter of Genesis, turned to his mother and inquired if people in those days used to do sums on the ground. He had been reading the passage: "And the sons of men multiplied on the face of the earth."

An English lady at the Court of Vienna, with whom an Imperial Highness" danced three times on the same evening, flattered by his attention, frankly expressed her gratification at compliment. "I did not intend it as a compliment," was the answer. "Then" said the lady, "your Highness must be fond of dancing." "I detest dancing," was the unsatisfactory response. What, then, may I ask, can be your imperial Highness' motive for dancing? "Madame," was the exalted personages curt reply, "my medical attendant advises me to perspire."

An Amusing Incident. One day last week a passenger in the cars for a suburban town, upon leaving the train, neglected to take a suspicious looking package that was lying under the seat, and which impregnated the air with a very strong odor of bad whiskey. A young man saw the package, made a raid and ascertained that it was a bottle of whiskey. Supposing the window to be open, he seized the bottle and threw it forward. It was glass, and as it afterwards appeared, the sash was down at the time. The contents were copiously sprinkled over a young couple seated near the window, one of whom failed to see the joke, judgeing from the epithets he applied to the self-appointed agent of the Constabulary. Subsequently, to add to the excitement, the conductor put in a claim for damages to the car, and after a brief discussion, it was settled to the satisfaction of the whiskey destroyer, if not to that of the railroad official.

—An auctioneer's clerk being directed by his employer to insert in an advertisment a Fresco by Raphael, wrote "A Fresh Cow by Raffle."

—What burns to keep a secret? Sealing wax.

AMERICAN ORGANS.

The American Organs are the only real Reed Organs now before the Public. The only Organ having a Reverberating Sound Box or Wind Chest—which has the same important part to perform as the Sounding Board has in the Piano Forte; to give body and resonance of tone; and without which the Organ becomes merely a Melodeon in an organ case. The American Organs not only have the Wind Case or Sound Box, but have the large Organ Bellows, giving power and great Steadiness of tone. These with their extreme fine voicing of the Reeds and perfecting of the tone, make them the most perfect Organ known. These great improvements and superiority of tone and workmanship of the American Organs place them in the front rank as the best, and command a higher price than any other reed instrument. A careful examination of them, in comparison with others, will quickly show their superiority. New Illustrated THE AMERICAN ORGAN, Or Organist's Parlor Companion," Mailed free, on receipt of $2.00. This beautiful Purple Black, free flowing Ink, challenges competition for distinctness in writing and richness of color, quickness in drying, and other important qualities. It is without sediment, flows freely, but does not drop from the pen like other fluid inks. Its handsome color invariably attracts attention; if exposed to the air for a few days it becomes a fine Copying Ink for Law or Mercantile purposes. It cannot be removed by acids. Unlike other Inks this will not corrode the pen, and is adapted equally for quill or steel use.

The Congress Record Ink has been thoroughly tested for the past three years, and is now being rapidly introduced into Banks, Insurance Offices, Commercial Colleges, &c.

A YOUNG LADY returning to her country home, after a sojourn of a few months in the city was hardly recognised by her friends. In place of a coarse, rustic, flushed face, she had a soft ruby complexion of almost marble smoothness, and instead of a country dress she nearly appeared but a dandess. Upon inquiry as to the cause of so great a change, she gaily told them that she used the Circassian Balm, and considered it an invaluable acquisition to any lady's toilet. By its use any Lady or Gentleman can improve their personal appearance an hundred fold. It is unique in its combination as Nature herself, be simple, yet unsurpassed in its efficacy in drawing impurities from the pores, tones, heals, cleansing and beautifying the skin and complexion.
