rolled to the very skies as the [illegible] of the American system—of the bank [illegible] ment—of the Indians—in sh [illegible] thing which they have so long insisted upon [illegible] to the maioenance of the union, [illegible] the honor of the republic, as well as the [illegible] the constitution—these men were impu [illegible] because "the end," was deemed [illegible] justifiable!

The leading principles [illegible] national republicans pledged themselves before the world, were equally flourished, and shared the common fate of [illegible] the other obstacles that were supposed to stand in the way of effecting the downfall of the administration. They were willing to commit internal improvements to the tender mercies of Virginia politicians; and their obstreperous outcry against Jackson, for alleged proscription for opinions sake, was suddenly varied so as to chime in harmonious chorus with the anti-masons, the most fanatic band of persecutors that has disgraced the age in which we live!

Never before, in American politics, has such a flagrant disregard of the means to accomplish any particular end, been exhibited. Every thing like consistency, honor, justice, has been trampled upon—openly, avowedly, exultingly trampled upon. They have strewn their track thickly with their own victims—offered up in voluntary sacrifice to that idolest of all maxims, "the end sanctifies the means." Oh! where is the practical illustration to end? Since all their efforts to defeat the re-election of Andrew Jackson have proved unavailing, why not invoke the poniard of the national republican Brutus? Let but an overheated zealot of their party—one unskilled in spitting hatred against—carry out to its legitimate conclusion, the principles upon which they have acted, and Ravaillac or a Guillotwood, will have accomplished a blow what all their arts and sacrifices could not accomplish!

The Clayists are exulting, again, on the reception of the intelligence from Kentucky, received by the steamboat Tuckaman from Louisville, which, according to the last onal republican oracles, purports that the Clay ticket wants 450 votes in 46 counties, being all that had been heard from [illegible] no room to doubt, just now—the Chattanooga will be down again directly. She brought the good news before—she will bring it again.

Ohio has given her electoral votes to Jackson by a majority of less than 10,000 votes.

The Argus asserts that if the representatives from this state in the national legislature, should resign, they would triumphantly be re-elected. Perhaps that journal will recommend one of them to try the experiment. Mr. White is the most popular; let the Argus advise him to resign, or admit that he no longer represents the sentiments of his constituents.

The Cincinnati Intelligencer, a central paper, assures its readers that no expectation of a defeat of the Jackson Van Buren ticket in this state, can be relied on. The breach caused by the nomination of Judge Barbour for Vice President is fast healing, and his friends are becoming willing to waive the claims of vice president to the electoral colleges.

Foreign opinions.—We subject the following extract from a Havana paper, as an offset to some of the savage and abusive [illegible] upon America, and American manners and institutions, to which we have been subjected by the people of Captain Hall and Mrs. Trollope. We find it first quoted in the Boston Gazette. We are particularly moved to the publication, as the author, who is the editor of the Havana paper, seems to have a very just idea of the rapid improvement and flourishing condition of our own city. He speaks like a man of sense, who knows some thing of what he is treating of, which is more than can be conscientiously alleged of some of our transatlantic tourists in America.

Translated from the Diario de la Habana.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

One of the features which distinguishes this nation from all those of the old world in all periods of their history, is the rapid growth of the principal cities, and the considerable increase of the population in almost every district in passe-ring through the Western States, and observing the industry which is every where manifested, the traveller imagines he is treading upon enchanted ground, and that a sacred Roman power has suddenly transformed the desert into cultivated fields and flourishing towns peopled with happy and industrious inhabitants, who feel the authority of their government only in the benefit which they receive. In its [illegible] from Albany, to Niagara every object shows how much intelligence can do for man. Along the banks of the Erie, the Wabash, the Mi[illegible] villages, hamlets, and innumerable activities are constantly seen, with a po[illegible] which is continually increasing, a well organized government, and all the social and mercantile relations established upon solid bases, and [illegible] the most established upon solid bases, and united with the most perfect harmony in the progress of civilization. Thirty years ago in this vast extent was hardly any trace of society to be seen. Within this [illegible] the population of Philadelphia has tripled; New [illegible] four times, and in some five times greater than before.— The last mentioned city offers an example of [illegible] rity which has no parallel in history. At the commencement of the revolution, it was a village of 5000 souls; at the close of the war there were 8000, and now it is the third city in the union. On the ground which Baltimore now occupies, there was in 1729, one farm house. [illegible] was a wilderness. During the colonial government [illegible] growth was slow.
It is manifest that its admirable situation takes the general depot for all the commerce of [illegible] to which ought to be added the active spirit of its inhabitants. It is not strange, [illegible] by so many circumstances, that [illegible] tions should be multiplied; for the best [illegible] hools of [illegible] [illegible] societies of Baltimore, [illegible] more the most civilized countries in Eur[illegible] has been found, which [illegible] pronounced by Mr Hall [illegible] are [illegible] words

A recent number of the Globe published at Washington, contains an official copy of a new act of the British Parliament, [illegible] the laws relating to the [illegible] of G.
Britain. This law has lately been communicated by Mr.
Van [illegible] Affairs of our government. It relates principally [illegible] of collecting the revenue, and preventing smuggling in the Kingdom of Great Britain. It contains also, a new table of duties for 1832, on many articles, such as drugs, paints, chemicals, &c. The duties, says the New York Evening Post, on hemp undressed, and on all other vegetable substances applicable to the same uses, is fixed by it, at one penny the hundred weight. Unwrought steel from British possessions, pays a duty of one shilling per ton. The duty of 3½d the square yard, on printed linen and cottons, or linen mixed with cotton, is repealed. The export duty of ½ per cent. on [illegible] machines, is repealed as respects coin. The 18th section contains a provision for the encouragement of shipping; allowing warehoused goods to be shipped as stores in certain ships, without entry or payment of duty, the ships being over seventy tons, and the voyage longer than forty days. The duty on the export of cordage and spun yarn is also repealed; as is also the duty upon the importation into the British American possessions, of drugs, gums, raisins, dry wood, or cabinetmaker's wood, tortoise shell, hemp, flax, and tow. The re-exportation of British coal, in British ships from the colonies, is placed on the same footing, as the exportation from Great Britain direct. The acts of British colonial legislatures discriminating between colonial vessels and British built, are repealed, except as to coasters.

AUTUMNAL LEAVES.

The beauty of the North American forests in the decay state of their foliage has often been remarked and admired; and it is said to be peculiar to the season of this region. It is now at this period at its height; and it struck me in a short ramble the other day, that it exceed all [illegible] before witnessed. Let a spectator place himself on an eminence hard by a forest of [illegible] trees, and attentively view the scene, and he must admit that it is one of surpassing beauty and richness. The north western environs of this town afford the best situation for observations of this kind.

This beauty of the forest, although a dying one like the dolphin which is said to throw out the most beautiful hues in its expiring moments, we believe is greatly overlooked by most people. The colors are not of that glaring and gaudy show which immediately arrest the attention of every one; but the eye once engaged and fixed upon the scene, a most rich, mellow, variegated picture, is presented, and one that swells and softens the beauty and [illegible] the longer the eye rests upon it. There may be seen all the hues of the rainbow, the rich scarlet of the maple, the golden yellow of the beech, the crimson of the oak, the unchanged and living green of the pine, and every intervening shade.

It may be considered an old topic, and a solemn pan-[illegible] out of place; but to us, and we believe, to most men, there is an irresistible appeal to the feelings in this language of nature in her dying moments; these "leaves scripture" speaks in tones that cannot not be heeded. The changing seasons have been often and beautifully held up as an emblem of man's life; and the similitude is striking and thrilling. It is not mawkish sentimentality, but the pure feeling and language of nature. Well hath the poet sung:

"Behold, fond man! see here thy pictured life."
