No Insurrection.

Christmas has come and gone, New Year has come and gone and nothing like the general and concerted outbreak of the negroes in the South, vaguely apprehended by some timid imaginations, and secretly desired by implacable propagators of discontent and lawlessness among the freedmen, has been experienced. Some of the Radical journals in the North, disappointed no doubt at the comparative quietude of the blacks during the holidays, speak of the matter as though it signified the miscarriage of a Southern scheme, as though the Southern people had an interest in producing dreadful evils for themselves and were bad in failing to realize calamitous prophecy. The New York Tribune, for example, says:

The proposed negro insurrections at various points south did not come off, it appears. In future would it not be well, in the past would it not have been fair, to inquire whether rumors among white men in the same spirit as that which suggested these forebodings? Then we should have had "Expected wipe out in Mississippi." "Alarm" "Alarm" "Alarm"
