KATAYAMA DEFEATED BY COMMUNIST
NAKANISHI, NARAHASHI ALSO FAILS

(Evening Election Sup.)

KYODO

TOKYO, January 24.---Another upset in the Socialist camp occurred in the third electoral district of Kanagawa Prefecture.

Socialist Chairman Tetsu Katayama was defeated by Communist Inosuke Nakanishi by a narrow margin of 277 votes.

The failure of Katayama in the election was ascertained at 6 p.m.

Meanwhile, reports from Fukuoka revealed that Wataru Narahashi, leader of the "middle-of-the-road" group of the Democratic Party, failed to gain his seat in the Lower House.

PURGE OF MATSUMOTO AND NINE OTHERS ANNOUNCED (Afternoon Ed.)

Kyodo

TOKYO, January 24---Purge of Jiichiro Matsumoto, ex-vice-president of the House of Councillors, and nine other persons was announced today by the Attorney General's office.

Matsumoto had been an influential leader of the Yamato National Service Movement Headquarters which was ordered dissolved. The nine others were its leaders.

Despite his connection with the ultra-nationalistic body, Matsumoto was allowed to run in the last general election and hold public office as the only exception to the purge order in the election in April, 1947.

(Afternoon Ed.)

He was disqualified for public office by the Attorney General's office earlier, but the announcement was withheld until today in consideration of its possible impact on the political situation.

The nine others are; Shoichi Shimamoto, Shogetsu Tanaka, Goichi Nakanishi, Haruji Tabara, Shido Nakamura, Sueo Ito, Masao Yamamoto, Takeshi Fukagawa and Rinshi Imoto. Tanaka is an executive member of the Social Democratic Party.

6 DEMOCRATS LEAVE PARTY

KYODO SUNDAY

TOKYO, February 8---Six Lower House members of the Democratic Party yesterday jointly served notice of seceding from their party and issued at the same time a statement that they would join the Liberal-sponsored new party movement.

The leaders of the Democratic Party, however, said that the defection cannot be regarded as formal, pointing out that the notification seems to lack legality.

The six Diet members who signed the joint notice are Katsuichi Nakajima (Yamaguchi Prefecture), Toyokichi Matsui (Gumma), Koichi Aoyagi (Saitama), Tsukasa Okami)Hyogo), Ichiro Matsumoto (Miye) and Mrs. Noriko Narushima (Chiba).

Upon receipt of the notice, the executive officers of the Party met in a conference and decided to contact each of the six Diet members individually to confirm their real intention.

Already, Mrs. Narushima is said to have informed the executive officers that her signing of the notice only meant her support of the merger between the mainstay of the Democrats and that of the Liberals, while both Matsumoto and Nakajima reportedly will withhold their formal attitude until February 11.

The loss of six members will bring the membership of the Democratic Party in the Lower House to 100.

HIRANO'S LOSS BRINGS
L.H. VACANCY TO 20

NOON

KYODO

TOKYO, February 6---With the purge of former Agriculture-Forestry Minister Rikizo Hirano settled yesterday, the former National Farmers union leader disqualified for membership of the Lower House at midnight, January 4.

Chief Cabinet Secretary Suehiro Nishio personally visited Makoto Oike, secretary-general of the Diet at 4:45 in the afternoon, and notified that the Tokyo District Court's action overriding the purge of Hirano was null and void and his complaints against the purge were handed down.

As a result of Hirano's fade-out from the Lower House, the vacancy there rose to 20. The standing numerical strength of each party is as follows:

MEMORANDUM FOR THE CHIEF, GOVERNMENT SECTION

SUBJECT: Democratic-Liberal Party

The third Yoshida Cabinet was formally installed on 16 February 1949. The Democratic-Liberal Party had retained the reins of the government after an election that had probably cost every candidate more than any election in the history of Japan. It is estimated that, on the average, each candidate had spent 2,500,000 yen. At the time of the Diet's dissolution the Democratic-Liberals held 153 seats, but as a result of the general election on 23 January, the Democratic-Liberals returned 143 incumbents to the Diet in addition to 121 new representatives, a total of 264 members. With 264 seats the Democratic-Liberals thus had a clear majority, and most observers predicted a single-party cabinet. When the cabinet was formally installed, a coalition cabinet had been formed, with two Democrats joining the Yoshida Cabinet.

The circumstances that led up to this coalition cabinet is one of interest as it lends insight to possible future political party lineups. In order to analyze the political situation, it is necessary to go back to the second Yoshida Cabinet. Until 7 October 1948, when the Ashida Cabinet fell, the Democratic-Liberal Party had been constantly divided into factions, yet these factional movements within the party had never influenced the general political situation while they were the opposition party. The first appearance of factional dispute appeared with the so-called "Yamazaki Incident". Yamazaki was Secretary-General of the Democratic-Liberal Party, and as such, had attempted to defy the few traditional customs by introducing a new method of collecting party donations. Yamazaki was the protege of Karoku Tsuji, the old Seiyukai and behind-the-scenes wire-puller. Tsuji, however, by this time had been thoroughly discredited through his having been thoroughly exposed by the Illegal Property Transactions Investigation Committee. But Tsuji still maintained his long-standing friendship with Hatoyama; and his dislike for Yoshida continued to increase. He had previously attempted to split the Democratic-Liberal Party by forming the new Liberal Party headed by Koichi Seko. This attempt had failed because of Seko's involvement in the "Seko Army Uniform Scandal". Yoshida well knew that his only competitor for the post of president of the Democratic-Liberal Party was Yamazaki. He had therefore appointed Yamazaki as Secretary-General of the party but in reality centered all policies for the party within his small group of advisors. Among these were his personal secretaries who had served with him in London. He was also surrounded by people such as Jiro Shirasu, who were closely associated during the war with Prince Konoye.

Yoshida has, from his childhood, closely associated with the court circles and as such he enjoyed the confidence of Prince Konoye, Saionji's secretary Harada, and various circles of the nobility. This led to the appointment of Jiro Shirasu as Director-General of the Board of Trade on 1 December 1946. Post-war political parties have been unable to finance their party activities through lump sum donations by the Zaibatsu as in pre-war days. As president of the Democratic-Liberal Party, Yoshida found it essential that he should maintain his living standards and, as such, relied upon his daughter, Mrs. Aso, to supply him with the necessary ready cash. For the purpose of providing financial aid to Yoshida, Mrs. Aso, with her fluent English, placed herself in an indispensable position. Her influence gradually grew mainly on her ability to associate with members of the Occupation. In the formation of the second Yoshida Cabinet she was largely responsible for the appointment of Cabinet Ministers.

During the second Yoshida Cabinet, the Izumiyama Incident had serious repercussions on the factional disputes within the party. Yoshida and his advisors had maneuvered Izumiyama's appointment as Finance Minister. The arrest of Manitsu Tanaka, Parliamentary Vice-Minister, had also hurt one of Yoshida's personal friends, Shidehara, who had personally asked Yoshida as a favor to appoint Tanaka as Parliamentary Vice-Minister to the Attorney General's Office.

Actually, the arrest of Banboku Ono on 16 September had helped the Yoshida group. Strangely enough Yoshida has never been worried about Ono. Ono today has probably one of the largest followings within the Democratic-Liberal Party, but his political ambitions are rather limited. He rather enjoys having a large following which in turn makes donations to him which he can distribute at his own will.

The story was circulated at the time of the formation of the second Yoshida Cabinet in October 1948 that Yoshida had waited for Ono's release from Kosuge Prison before installing the new Cabinet. Although this was construed in some quarters as the remnants of feudalism, within the framework of Yoshida's thinking, it was actually in effect a very smart political move on the part of Yoshida. It is characteristic that Ono would respect Yoshida for this type of action more than any amount of money Yoshida could give Ono.

Prior to the last general election, Yoshida had hoped that the Democratic-Liberal Party would not gain more than 220 seats. He had reasoned that his position as president of the party depended on his ability to disregard the majority party opinion. In the case that a coalition was formed, he believed he could control Ken Inukai. Inukai has had the same type of upbringing as Yoshida, and as such, they are closely related. Although Inukai has been known to the general Japanese public because of his father, he had never inherited a fortune. In post-war Japan, Inukai had maintained his standard of living mainly on the support of Yoshida and Yoshida's friends. In the case Yoshida formed a coalition cabinet with Inukai his control over Inukai would be proportional to the degree of his financial support of Inukai and his party.

As a result of the election, the Democratic-Liberals returned with 264 seats. Yoshida's arrogance first led him to believe that it was possible for him to form a single-party cabinet disregarding the opinions of the 121 newly elected Democratic-Liberal members. He therefore announced that a single-party cabinet would be formed. He was confident that the cabinet posts could be distributed to those closest to his inner circle. He had, therefore, contemplated appointing people such as his son-in-law Aso as Commerce & Industry Minister, Oya as Finance Minister, Masuda as Labor Minister, and Sato, Chief Cabinet Secretary. It wasn't until the first meeting of the Democratic-Liberal Diet members that an open break came between Yoshida and the discontented factions within the Democratic-Liberal Party. It was at this meeting that Yoshida for the first time realized how vulnerable his position was in the party. The situation was that Yoshida's inner circle was resented by all groups including his own group of ex-bureaucrats. The ex-bureaucrats were highly disliked by the rest of the factions. The impossibility of giving Ono a post of cabinet minister made it possible for his following to join the Yamazaki-Hoshijima group. Yoshida therefore decided to strengthen his position by forming a coalition with the Democratic Party. He never took into consideration the fact that the Democratic Party might split, and, even if the Democrats did split he could use it for political capital.

But this move further irritated the malcontents within the Democratic-Liberal Party. It irritated the bureaucratic group to a certain extent, but the bureaucratic group were willing to avoid any further dispute with any faction, and therefore, remained neutral. The non-bureaucrats which are composed of professional politicians and 152 company directors, have long disliked the bureaucrats. They have contended all along that although the purge hit the political circles, it never once touched the bureaucrats. As an example, they pointed out that all members influential in the munitions industry, are today re-located in the Economic Stabilization Board and Commerce & Industry Ministry. Their first move, therefore, was to demand the ouster of Sato as Chief Cabinet Secretary. The ouster of Sato represented not only a revolt against the bureaucratic members in the Diet but against Shinske Kishi, ex-Home Minister and Class A war criminal, who since his release as a war criminal is rumored to have returned to active duty and is closely associated with Satomi, Sakomizu, and Kuhara.

When considering ministerial posts, the Finance Minister, Commerce & Industry Minister, and the Agriculture & Forestry Minister positions are considered the most essential from the standpoint of influence, monetary value, and policy. If it had been possible, Yoshida would have appointed all three of these positions but finding it impossible, conceded the Agriculture & Forestry Ministry to Kotaro Mori. Mori is an underling of Shigemasa, reputed to be the boss of the Agriculture & Forestry Ministry, although he is presently awaiting trial for involvement in the Showa Denko case. Mori has been elected to the House of Representatives for the fifth time and has been an advisor to the Democratic-Liberal Party, but he is not one that will follow Yoshida and is not considered a bureaucrat.

Ikeda, an ex-Finance Ministry employee and previously head of the Taxation Bureau is a product of the bureaucracy and as such takes his orders from Eisaku Sato.

It was at this point that a compromise was absolutely essential on the Commerce & Industry Minister. Previously, Oya, a Democratic-Liberal member of the House of Councillors and president of the Teikoku Rayon Company, had held this post. He was definitely a member of the malcontents and closely associated with the Yamazaki faction, but with financial independence he had never committed himself to any faction. To fill this post, however, Yoshida brought in the Democratic Party.

Heitaro Inagaki is a member of the Democratic Party and president of the Yokohama Rubber Company. To the malcontents he was acceptable on two counts: first, he did not fall within the orbit of Yoshida's clique, and secondly, he was not an ex-bureaucrat. If Inagaki left the Democratic Party and joined the Democratic-Liberal Party, they felt there was a good possibility that he would join the malcontents.

Masabumi Suzuki, Labor Minister, is an executive of the publishing company and a former Asahi Newspapar man. He is a good friend of Masuda but does not actually belong to the bureaucratic group.

Ichiro Honda, State Minister Without Portfolio was put in charge of all paper allocation. He has long been in politics as a member of the Tokyo City Assembly. He is closer to Ono and Hoshijima than to Yoshida.

Kikuichiro Yamaguchi was appointed Minister Without Portfolio. He has always been considered an opportunist and being financially independent, has switched from time to time to the Yamazaki group and to various other factions. Being an old-time politician, he has a good possibility of taking over many of Ono's followers. He was included in the cabinet purely as a compromise to prevent a split within the party, namely, the Yoshida-Bureaucrats versus the Yamazaki-Hoshijima line.

Shunkichi Ueda, Attorney General. Although Ueda is a graduate of Tokyo Law University, he has spent most of his time as a bureaucrat. Lacking financial support, Ueda has held various positions since Yoshida first became president of the Democratic-Liberal Party. During the war it was Ueda who worked very closely with the Konoye group and as such, had helped Yoshida when Yoshida was in prison. His appointment as Attorney General was purely based on Yoshida's personal feelings. He is a political nonenity, and as such, will never play a part in party politics but will always be a loyal servant of Yoshida.

Shinzo Oya, was appointed Transportation Minister. As former president of the Imperial Rayon Company, he is closer to the Ono-Hoshijima faction.

Saeki Ozawa, Communications Minister. As a former Tokyo Municipal Assemblyman, a former Tokyo Metropolitan Assemblyman, and graduate of Nippon University, he is far removed from the bureaucratic group and is considered definitely an Ono man.

Joji Hayashi, Deputy Prime Minister (concurrently Welfare Minister), is a distant relative of Yoshida hailing from Tosa, Shikoku, and is a long-time follower of Ichiro Hatoyama. As such, he is definitely a Yoshida man.

Senzo Higai, Minister Without Portfolio. Former Speaker in House of Representatives, a graduate of Kyoto University, has been elected for the third time; although obligated in many ways to Yoshida, he is considered as one of the malcontents.

Sotaro Takase, Education Minister. Takase was a candidate from the Green Breeze Society of the House of Councillors, and as such, was appointed Education Minister which is today considered one of the least desirable posts.

Kaneshichi Masuda. Masuda is definitely a Yoshida man. Graduate of Tokyo University. He was a bureaucrat from 1925; former governor of Hokkaido and has always enjoyed the confidence of Yoshida because of his alleged sly and vicious characteristics.

Kozaemon Kimura, appointed State Minister Without Portfolio. Member of Democratic Party. Kimura has helped support Inukai and is considered "Minister Happy". It is rumoured that so long as he can be appointed minister, regardless of the party, he is willing to donate money.

Takayoshi Aoki, Director Economic Stabilization Board. He is considered rather progressive. Although liked by Yoshida, he is also liked by most factions.

The net result of these ministerial appointments is that the tide within the Democratic-Liberal Party gradually changed. Yoshida, if he is to retain his position as president of the party can only do so through "smart" political maneuvering. It is essential for him that he discredit any individual who may possibly be able to gather a large enough following and thus compete for his position. The only bare possibility of the emergence of such a competitor rests with Yamazaki. Therefore, Yoshida has refused to talk to Yamazaki.

For the time being, the bureaucrats are more concerned with entrenching themselves in the party hierarchy than to attain posts in which they might be discredited. Various attempts have been made to build up Hoshijima as a leader, but Hoshijima reportedly lacks intelligence, foresight and personality to rally young politicians. It is not at all inconceivable that within not too long a period there will be a re-shuffle of the Cabinet, and at such a time, Yoshida will further lose his power to control the party. There is a further possibility that the split within the Democratic Party may find the members of the Inukai faction joining the Democratic-Liberal Party.

The key figure in this contingency will be Banboku Ono. If today Ono wanted to change his allegiance to the Democratic Party, he could take with him over 100 Democratic-Liberal seats. Yet, through Ono's loyalty to Hatoyama, this is very unlikely. If Yoshida is not able to protect Ono from being found guilty in the courts, this crisis may well come to a head. It is, therefore, very conceivable that members of the bureaucratic group very much concerned with the split in the party had exerted all possible pressure on the courts to exonerate Matsuoka Matsuhei for it would be impossible to find Ono or Shigemasa guilty if Matsuoka's activities are not construed as political activity and violation of Imperial Ordinance 101. Deep consideration must be given to the fact that the Matsuzaka (ex-Justice Minister in the Tojo Cabinet) group and Shono faction of the Supreme Court are still very influential within court circles, and that promotions of the judges are still passed upon by such cliques.

M. Matsukata
