PREFACE.

It may appear to some to be a daring innovation to edit an edition of selections from the great Roman poet; but the decision to do this was made after a due consideration of the mode in which Vergil is usually studied in our preparatory schools. Few students close their Vergils with any knowledge of the story of the Aeneid beyond the last line they are directed to read. That there can be any delight in knowing more of, and reading farther in, Vergil's matchless verse is hardly hinted to them. Our colleges vary in the amount required for entrance, but usually it is either the Eclogues and Georgics or six books of the Aeneid,—in either case, less than five thousand lines. To this about a year is devoted in the schools.

A careful selection, comprising about one-half of the acknowledged works of Vergil, has been made for this edition, that the student may get a complete outline of the epic poem and a sufficient amount of pastoral poetry also. Five Eclogues are retained, the poetic portions of the Georgics are given, and a summary of the passages omitted is put in its proper place. The same plan has been followed in the Aeneid. Whatever shows Vergil's splendid powers at their best and whatever is material to the story have been kept, while those parts, as nearly as possible, which Vergil himself said "were put in for the trumpets," have been epitomized in English and put in their proper position. A series of side-notes—hints of the subject of each passage—has been placed on the margin, for the double purpose of avoiding much needless commentary at the foot of the page and of giving to the pupil a suggestion of the meaning of the lines before him. If he can get but a hint of their subject, he can use his limited vocabulary to advantage, and the passage will yield him some enjoyment; but if he has to waste time in groping for the subject, he will be in no mood to enter into the beauties of the poem. Experience has shown the Editor that the pupil will only use the notes as temporary helps and will very seldom study them, and that the teacher is himself really the best comment if he will do his duty. The notes, therefore, have been made very brief, and, it is hoped, quite to the point.

The Editor's grateful thanks are due to his friend the REV. C. S. SARGENT for many valuable suggestions and practical criticisms while reading the proofs with him.

LIFE OF VERGIL.

WE have but the scantiest material left us out of which to construct a sketch of the purest and most lovable of all the Roman poets. Vergil's works became classical almost immediately after their publication. They were recited with applause at the theatre; they were given as models to pupils in the schools; they were commented upon, praised, abused, and defended. The result is that we have a fair text, and a mass of curious and valuable comment containing a good deal of sharp criticism. These have preserved some now untraceable allusions to events which cannot be readily fitted into the framework of facts about his career that are indisputably fixed. We have a slight biographical sketch, very brief and disappointing, once attributed to the grammarian Donatus (A. D. 300), but now assigned to Suetonius (A. D. 100). There are also several fragmentary lives that add nothing practically to our stock of facts.

PUBLIUS VERGILIUS MARO was born October 15, b. c. 70, in the pagus Andes, about twenty-five miles from Mantua. His father was of humble rank, but by his energy and business tact acquired a competency, apparently with some rapidity. He was a servant to a travelling merchant, whose daughter, Magia Polla, he married. He bought a small farm on the Mincio, where Vergil was born. The legends that have gathered around the poet's infancy are worthless tales. His mother's name, Magia, may have suggested the superstition of the Middle Ages that he was a magician. On his father's farm, amid flocks and bees and flowers, the boy grew up. At twelve he was sent to Cremona, which then had a local reputation for excellent schools. There he remained till he was fifteen, when he assumed the toga virilis.^{*} After this he went to Milan, and thence to Rome, where he entered the school of the orator Epidius, who was the preceptor of Marc Antony and of Octavianus. It is very likely that Vergil made their acquaintance at that time. His constitution was weak, and he could not undergo the training required. He soon passed to the classes of the Epicurean philosopher Siro, the friend of Cicero. Vergil had already displayed some fondness for verse-making, and in a collection of short poems that go under his name there is a lively outburst of joy over being freed from the rant of the oratorical hall.

His studies with Epidius trained his ear and developed the fine taste shown in his poems. But his greatest delight was in his philosophical studies.[†] He is said to have studied medicine and mathematics, and he certainly mastered the principles of heathen ritual.[‡] In Siro's school he met Alphenus Varus, Asinius Pollio, Cilnius Maecenas, and

* The toga virilis was assumed with some ceremony before the magistrate, for it gave the lad certain privileges and enrolled him among the citizens. Among other of these privileges, the boy could make a valid will.

Cornelius Gallus. He wrote some epigrams in imitation of Catullus,* and planned a poem on the early Alban kings. It doubtless contained the germ of the later Aeneid. At twenty-four (B. C. 46) he returned from the fierce turmoils of the capital to the quiet of his father's farm. Here he devoted himself to the study of the Greek idyllic poets. In four years he produced some poems, of which a part were retained in the Eclogues. They were handed about for the perusal and approval of his personal friends, among whom later was his old schoolfellow Asinius Pollio, the legatus of the Transpadane department. At this juncture (B. C. 42) Octavius fulfilled his promise, made at the battle of Philippi, of a farm to each soldier of his legions. The lands of Cremona, which had sided with Brutus, were confiscated for this purpose. As they were insufficient, portions of the Mantuan farm-lands were also seized,† among which was the elder Maro's property. The family sought refuge in a cottage belonging to Siro,‡ and Vergil endeavored to recover his farm through the authority of Alphenus Varus, but was driven off, and barely escaped with his life. Finally, he was enabled by his friends Pollio, Varus, and Gallus to appeal personally to Octavius, who restored the lands. The next three years Vergil spent in adding to, revising, and polishing the Eclogues, of which he published the ten we now have. They were probably composed in this order: The Second and Third preceded the Fifth, and probably the Seventh followed it; in the spring of B. C. 41 the First, and in the fall the Ninth, was written; the Sixth, and then the Fourth, in B. C. 40; and in the next year the Eighth, and last of all the Tenth. He appears to have destroyed his other Eelogues. As transcriptions of Italian rural life the Eclogues are not to be compared with the Sicilian pictures in Theocritus nor with the sketches of the Moretum or the Copa; but they are graceful poems on rural subjects most delicately conceived. In poetic diction and in smoothness of versification they are not only an infinite advance over the roughnesses of his predecessors, but remain unsurpassed in Latin poetry. A close study will reveal in them Vergil's numerous experiments in rhythmic effects.

The Eclogues brought fame and a renewal of old friendships to the shy and modest poet. Maecenas persuaded him to undertake a poem upon farming, in the hope that it would aid in reviving the old Italian love for agriculture. He took seven years for this task, doing his work principally in Southern Italy, to which he had removed on account of his health. Much of his time was spent near Naples. Portions of the Georgics can be dated, but it is probable that Vergil constantly revised them up to the date of their final publication. After Augustus returned from the Actian War (B. C. 29), Vergil read the poem before the emperor and Maecenas, who relieved the poet at intervals in the recitation, which tradition says occupied four days. The close of the Fourth Book was filled with grateful praises of Gallus. But when Gallus fell into disfavor and committed suicide, Augustus directed Vergil to substitute another ending, and he replaced the cancelled portion with his fine legend of Aristaeus (b. c. 26). He now planned a poem upon the achievements of his imperial patron, but soon substituted for it the subject of the Aeneid. For this he gathered, arranged, and used with the greatest freedom the legends of the settlement of Italy, modifying and changing them to suit his purposes. The first study for it was written out in prose, and then he versified the several books, not in their proper order, but as suited his mood. His method was to write down a large number of verses, and then to expunge, reduce, revise, and polish.

Internal evidence shows that the First Book was finished by January, b. c. 27. Vergil must have spent the previous year in collecting material. The Eighth preceded the Third; the Second followed it; then came the Fourth. The Ninth was partly written, and then the Fifth was taken up. But in this series the Sixth must be interpolated, for it was recited before Augustus, with the Fourth, about b. c. 22, not long after the death of the young Marcellus. There is no internal note by which to place the other books, but it is supposed that Vergil had just completed the Seventh at the date of his death, b. c. 19.* He said jestingly of some of the less finished passages, using the simile of an orchestra, that "they were put in for the trumpets," and at another time that "they were temporary supports while the pillars were in preparation." His purpose, when the poem was finished as we now have it, was to spend three years in Greece in study, and to finish it with the care he hoped to bestow. But already rumors of its grandeur had gone abroad. Propertius in a short poem had augured happily of its future fame. Augustus had urged again and again to be permitted to hear such portions as the poet had finished. To this Vergil replied, "that if he had any part fit for the imperial ear, Augustus should receive it, but that the work was in such a chaotic state that he himself felt that he must have been mad to undertake it, especially since he now saw what preliminary studies were needed."† Large sections of the poem were finished with the greatest care, as, for instance, the First, Second, Fourth, and Sixth Books, and parts of others, as the episodes of the deaths of Pallas and Lausus in the Tenth. Many minor passages can also be instanced; but there is a very marked number of inconsistencies, and even contradictions, between the incidents in different parts of the work. Some of them may be oversights, such as attributing to Jupiter in the Seventh Book the prophecy of the Harpy Celaeno in the Fourth Book. Others of them show a doubt in Vergil's mind, as he composed the detached parts, which version or detail to adopt. These incongruities he did not live to remove. Probably the knowledge that they were in the texture of the unrevised poem led him when dying to order that the Aeneid should be destroyed. His trained mind and refined taste led him to reject a great deal that we should now, for other than poetical reasons, wish had been preserved. Aeneas was not after the model of a modern hero. He had a good share of common sense, and had already had more than enough of fighting and of adventure before he was wrecked on the African coast.

* This is Ribbeck's order. Nettleship gives as their order III., II., IV., VI., IX., V., leaving the rest undetermined.

† Macrobius, Sat. i., § xxiv.

But he possesses a refined courtesy, and a touch of modern chivalry that brings him very close to us. Aeneas has been sneered at as too "pious," but it is Vergil's own piety and deep faith that are shown us. He is ritually accurate, even to minor details, in every act of worship or of sacrifice. It is this fact that makes him so thoroughly devout. Much of the motive of the poem is not in consonance with our modes of thought, yet in some ideas Vergil is singularly modern.

The Aeneid was never finished as the poet intended. The outline had been completed and parts of the poem had received the utmost polish which he had decided to give them, but a large part needed careful retouching. He now decided to spend three years in Greece studying and correcting his great work. He sailed for Greece in the summer of b. c. 19. At Athens he met the emperor, who persuaded him to return to Italy with him. Just before setting sail he visited Megara under a hot sun, when he was seized with a mortal sickness. He lived only to reach Brundusium, where he died September 21st. He was buried near Naples. His tomb bore this distich, which he is said to have dictated just before his death:

Mantua me genuit, Calabri rapuere, tenet nunc
Parthenope. Cecini pascua, rura, duces.

In person Vergil was tall, but with a rustic carriage. On his swarthy complexion and his awkward, shy manners friends used to make pleasant remarks, which showed under the jest the love they bore to one of the whitest characters Rome ever knew. He was so shy that he seldom visited Rome during the latter part of his life, for passers-by were sure to point him out when he appeared on the street. Once when he entered a theatre the audience rose and paid him the reverence due to the emperor. His weak constitution and his slowness of speech prevented his ever being an orator, but he was a wonderfully attractive reader, especially of his own poems. He enjoyed a fortune of about $450,000 through his own frugality and the generosity of Augustus and other friends. Half of this he left to his half-brother Valerius Proculus, a fourth to Augustus, and a twelfth each to Maecenas, Tucca, and Varius. In the last days of his illness he repeatedly asked for his manuscripts to burn them, and left it as a dying charge to his executors, Varius and Tucca, not to publish anything that had not already appeared. But Augustus ordered this to be disregarded. They were to issue the Aeneid as he left it, save the correction of manifest errors. Even the imperfect lines were left untouched. His great epic was received with much favor by the general readers and lovers of poetry. His innovations in style, in new combinations of words, and in versification had already stirred up a good deal of criticism and opposition, a large part of which was rather ill-natured. But with its numerous defects, which Vergil would have supplied or corrected had he lived, the Aeneid is a noble poem, and well worthy of the rank assigned to it after Homer. Vergil was no servile imitator or plagiarist, but used all the material at hand with a manly independence and appreciation of its true worth. He was no more a plagiarist than was Milton sixteen centuries later. There was the fullest acknowledgment made of his obligations to the Greek poets by the careful polish he bestowed upon his own work.

BUCOLICON ECLOGAE.

ECLOGA I.

TITYRUS.

The TITYRUS was probably the sixth of the Eclogues in date of composition. Its subject, the restoration of his farm by Augustus, is made a delicate thank-offering to the future emperor. The allegory has puzzled many scholars. Tityrus, a slave who buys his liberty, is yet transacting business for his owner, and suddenly we find him the possessor of the farm. Probably the key to the allusions, which needed then no explanation, is lost to us. The earliest writers, like Servius, find no difficulty, nor do they notice any inconsistencies.

The polish given to this Eclogue is exquisite both in the rhythm of the verse and in the beauty of the imagery. Meliboeus was a name probably invented by Vergil; Tityrus he borrowed from Theocritus (III. Id.).

MELIBOEUS—TITYRUS.

Meliboeus envies Tityrus' happy lot.

Mel. TITYRE, tu patulae recubans sub tegmine fagi

Tityrus attributes it to Augustus.

Tit. O Meliboee, deus nobis haec otia fecit.
Namque erit ille mihi semper deus ; illius aram

1. tegmen, “roof-like shade.” V. teg. cf. deck.

2. avenā, “straw” = reed.

4. “We escape from our country!”

Note its pathos, marking the Latin love of country.

6. Deus. The Roman concept of Deity ranged from that of a Supreme Being to the demigod, and so to man. Caesar's name was used in oaths, and an altar was dedicated to him. Vergil feels the extravagance, however, and adds l. 7.

6. otia, “liberties,” cf. Caesar, C. B. L. I. c. 5. mihi. Gr. § 146, R. xvii.

7. illius, “his,” § 84, r. 2 and 5. ipsum, sc. me, § 85, r. 1; arrange, Ille permisit meas bores errare, ut cernis et [me] ipsum ludere quae, etc. Inf. as Acc. § 181, R. xlvi.; § 194, r. 2 (a). quae vellem, § 233, § 234.

Hic inter densas corylos modo namque gemellos,
Spem gregis, ah! silice in nuda conixa reliquit. 15
Saepe malum hoc nobis, si mens non laeva fuisse,
De caelo tactas memini praedicere quercus.
Sed tamen, iste deus qui sit, da, Tityre, nobis.

11. "Indeed I do not envy you: I rather wonder." Note the alliteration of the cognate d and t in the line. magis = potius, rhythmically needed.

12. turbatur. "There is confusion (by the soldiery)." ipse, "I too." ago is contrasted with duco, "I drive the kids; this one I hardly can lead."

14. corylos, f. §24, r. 1. hic, adv. spem gregis, §156, R. xxvi. "She, ah! the hope of the flock, painfully dropped and left twin lambs on the naked rock."

17. memini. "I ought to have noted that the lightning-smitten oaks foretold." memini, here perf. An oak smitten by lightning was a bad omen.

18. iste, §84, 2. "That (wonderful) god." sed tamen, iste deus qui sit, is objective after da, "tell us."

19. Tityrus replies indirectly, "I, fool that I was" (stultus), etc.

20. similem, §146, r. 3.

21. pastores = "we shepherds were wont," etc.

23. noram, for noveram.

24. Note correlative tantum . . . quantum, §91.

26. "What great reason had you?" §146:239.

The purpose of lines 27-42 is a puzzle. It is implied that Tityrus is a farm-slave who has just bought his freedom: how is he the owner of the farm? It may be a bantering reply to Meliboeus, filled with allusions now lost. Vergil was too finished an artist to mar the poetic sequence with a meaningless interpolation.

28. candidior, growing gray. The newly-freed slave had his beard clipped. Note the perf. respezit, next the impf. cadebat, and l. 30, pres. habet; lastly, perf. reliquit.

32. peculi. Peculum was what little money or property a slave could retain with his owner's permission. It means "little flock" (cf. pecus, pecu-nia). When it amounted to enough, the slave could buy his freedom with it.

34. pinguis, rich cheese, cream cheese. Col. vii. 8. ingratae, sc. urbi.

35. non umquam, "seldom." mihi, § 148, R. xix. r. 2.

36. quid, "Why sad, O Amaryllis, you were invoking the gods."

37. cui, "for whose sake." sua, "you suffered its apples to hang on the tree."

39. arbusta. The arbustum was a grove, often of elms, with vines.

42. illum. Vergil throughout this Eclogue refers to Augustus as ille, § 84, r. 5. iuvenem. Augustus was then about twenty-three. quot, "every."

43. fumant: the pres. tense shows that the sacrifices have been already instituted.

44. primus. Pollio's order was disregarded, so primus refers to the permanent restoration of Vergil's farm by Augustus.

46. tua, "these fields will remain ever yours." In a passage of exquisite beauty Meliboeus is made to generously utter the content that Tityrus (i. e. Vergil) felt.

47. Arrange: quamvis lapis nudus que palus, limoso iunco obducat omnia pascua.

Limosoque palus obducat pascua iunco,
 Non insueta gravis tentabunt pabula fetas,
 Nec mala vicini pecoris contagia laudent. 50
 Fortunate senex, hic, inter flumina nota
 Et fontis sacros, frigus captabis opacum !
 Hinc tibi, quae semper vicino ab limite saepes
 Hyblaeis apibus florem depasta salicti,
 Saepe levi somnum suadebit inire susurro ; 55
 Hinc alta sub rupe canet frondator ad auras ;
 Nec tamen interea raucae, tua cura, palumbes,
 Nec gemere aëria cessabit turtur ab ulmo.

Tit. Ante leves ergo pascentur in aethere cervi,

His gratitudo. Et freta destituent nudos in litore pisces, 60
 Ante, pererratis amborum finibus, exsul
 Aut Ararim Parthus bibet, aut Germania Tigrim, Quam nostro illius labatur pectore vultus.

Mel. At nos hinc alii sitientis ibimus Afros ;

Pars Scythiam et rapidum Cretae veniemus Oaxen, 65
 Et penitus toto divisos orbe Britannos.

En umquam patrios longo post tempore finis,
 Pauperis et tuguri congestum caespite culmen,
 Post aliquot, mea regna videns, mirabor aristas ?

Impius haec tam culta novalia miles habebit? 70

53. quae semper, “as ever.” quae refers to depasta. hinc, “here,” hinc, “yonder.”

54. florem, sing. and collective acc., § 155, R. xxv. and r. 2.

58. cessabit, sing., § 126, r. 2. aëriā, abl. with ulmo, § 24, r. 1.

59. ante, “sooner.” And again, l. 61, ante, both balanced by quam, l. 63.

65. Oaxes, a river in Crete.

66. divisos, “separated by a whole world.” This transferring whole peoples was not uncommon in Assyrian, Greek, and Roman history.

67. en, interrogative and interjectional. In l. 71 it is an interjection.

69. post aliquot has given much trouble, and every proposed arrangement is full of objections. But by punctuating differently and making post aliquot mark a pause, so that Meliboeus ends somewhat differently from his first thought, the difficulty disappears. Arrange, En umquam (revisens) patrios finis longo tempore post, et culmen pauperis tuguri congestum caespite, post aliquot aristas, videns mea regna—mirabor? aristas = crops, i. e. years.

70. impius. The rough soldier who has possession is not only barbarus, but by breaking up the inherited family ties is impious.

Barbarus has segetes? En, quo discordia civis
 Produxit miseros! en, quis consevimus agros!
 Insere nunc, Meliboee, piros, pone ordine vitis.
 Ite meae, felix quondam pecus, ite capellae.
 Non ego vos posthac, viridi proiectus in antro, 75
 Dumosa pendere procul de rupe videbo;
 Carmina nulla canam; non, me pascente, capellae,
 Florentem cytisum et salices carpetis amaras.

Tit. Hic tamen hanc mecum poteras requiescere noctem

Fronde super viridi: sunt nobis mitia poma, 80
 Castaneae molles et pressi copia lactis:
 Et iam summa procul villarum culmina fumant,
 Maioresque cadunt altis de montibus umbrae.

72. quīs for quibus. The next line is bitterly sarcastic, and then with a revulsion of feeling Meliboeus apostrophizes his flock. The invitation of Tityrus is a quiet recognition of this changed mood.

ECLOGA IV.

POLLIO.

This famous Eclogue has peculiar interest for us. There are questions connected with it which are now insoluble. It influenced the reception Vergil received at the hands of Christians. It made him most popular in the Middle Ages. It was not impossible (though hardly probable) that he had read Isaiah in the Septuagint version. Or did he put into splendid verse the longing of his day for "the Desire of all nations"? How far did the Sibylline oracles and Etruscan speculations and current legendary lore furnish him with material? Or was it, after all, merely the lovely expression of Vergil's own musings? Again, as to the child. Was it Pollio's, as older critics held, or, as later students have urged, was it Augustus's child? and was the dedication to Pollio only a compliment to a dear friend? These must remain vexed questions. The Eclogue deserves critical study. The finished style, the skilful development of the subject, the allusions to current beliefs of the coming golden age, mingled with the poet's own fancies and hopes, and the lofty tone of the closing passages (l. 48–63), are worthy of Vergil's happiest inspiration. Its date is assigned to B. C. 40.

15. deum, the shortened form for deorum. divisque, abl. of acc. cum is omitted from the force of per in permixtos in the next line, though per only takes the acc. Note the intimate intercourse implied by divisque videbit and videbitur illis.

18. munuscula, “toys,” lovely gifts which the joyous earth will heap around the infant's cradle, the ivy, the baccar, a plant of which a fine salad was prepared, the colocasia, or Nymphaea Nelumbo, an Indian water-plant, together with the laughing acanthus.

22. nec magnos, etc. This passage recalls the similar imagery of Isaiah, ch. xi. 6, 7.

25. amomum, an Asiatic plant from which a costly unguent was made, probably what we know as nard.

27. quae sit virtus is the object of cognoscere. The genitives heroum and parentis limit this clause as well as facta in the preceding clause. The poet traces the disappearance of the vestigia sceleris (l. 13) parallel with the growth of the infant into young childhood.

32. quae refers to vestigia fraudis, and is thrice repeated. Thetis = the sea.

33. telluri infindere sulcos, a poetic inversion for tellurem infindere sulcis.

34. Tiphys was the pilot of the Argo. Vergil's love for the old legends leads him to retain them in the education of the child.

37-41. When the child reaches man's estate then even these earlier needs shall vanish. Compare l. 32, tentare Thetim ratibus, with l. 38,

Nec varios disset mentiri lana colores,

42. mentiri, "falsely to pretend to have," i. e. to be dyed with, for the ram will feed now upon plants whose hues, purple, yellow, golden, will pass into the fleece.

45. sandyx. The plant and not the mineral is here meant.

46. talia saecla. talia refers to and gathers up into itself all the hopes the poet has previously recorded. "O ye ages, bearing such hopes, hasten on!" fusis, "spindles." The Fates, Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos, who hold the thread of every man's life, agree upon the child's happy destiny.

48. aggredere, imperative. Its subject is O cara suboles, etc. Mark the spondee of l. 49 and its rhythmic effect, incrē | mēntūm.

50. aspice. "See the world tottering under its rounded weight." The nutantem includes more than merely physical weight, and is to be interpreted by the laetantur of l. 52. The terrasque, etc. of l. 51 is in opposition to, and descriptive of, mundum. Tractus = expanse.

56. huic. The first huic refers to the nearest noun, Linus; the second huic to Orpheus. The metre requires the second huic instead of the regular illi, § 84, 1, 3, and r. 1.

58. Arrange, Pan etiam, si certet mecum, Arcadia iudice, Pan etiam dicat se victim, Arcadia iudice. Dicat has a future sense, § 207; it is drawn from the preceding si certet.

addressed as if now born and responding to the mother's smile. The very confusion of thought with which Vergil has been charged has given us two very lovely pictures of the blessings of a mother's love.

ECLOGA V.

MENALCAS.

This Eclogue, amoebic in form, was written about 42 B. C. The lament over Daphnis, which is imitated from Theocritus (Idyl I.), is usually interpreted as an allegorical apotheosis of Caesar, and was intended as complimentary to Octavianus, then rapidly gaining the leadership in Rome. It deserves close study, as apparently exhibiting Vergil's experiments in the rhythm of the hexameter and in assonance. The Eclogue naturally falls into two parts: (a) Mopsus' lament over the death of Daphnis (l. 20-44); (b) his apotheosis sung by Menalcas (l. 56-80). Throughout there are constant reminiscences of, rather than direct translations from, Theocritus.

MENALCAS—MOPSUS.

Men. CUR non, Mopse, boni quoniam convenimus

Menalcas challenges Mopsus. Tu calamos inflare levis, ego dicere versus, Hic corylis mixtas inter considimus ulmos?

Mop. Tu maior; tibi me est aequum parere, Menalca,

Sive sub incertas Zephyris motantibus umbras, 5
 Sive antro potius succedimus. Aspice, ut antrum

2. (3). 6. antro, dat. after succedimus, § 143, R. xiv.

4. maior, "you are the elder."

Mop. Quid, si idem certet Phoebum superare canendo?

Men. Incipe, Mopse, prior, si quos aut Phyllidis ignis, 10

Mop. Immo haec, in viridi nuper quae cortice fagi Carmina descripsi et modulans alterna notavi, Experiar. Tu deinde iubeto ut certet Amyntas. 15

Men. Lenta salix quantum pallenti cedit olivae, Puniceis humilis quantum saliunca rosetis, Iudicio nostro tantum tibi cedit Amyntas.

Mop. Sed tu desine plura, puer; successimus antro. Extinctum Nymphae crudeli funere Daphnim 20

10. ignis, “love for Phyllis.” iuria Codri, “invective against Corderus,” § 131, r. 2.

14. alterna notavi, “have marked the changes” from pipe to song.

15. iubeto, “then decide whether Amyntas rivals (me).” Mopsus is jealous; compare lines 8, 9.

16. The outer similarity, but real disparity, between willow and olive, or rose and Celtic nard, is used as a flattering unction to Mopsus’ wounded vanity.

19. desine plura, puer, “cease your jesting, lad.” However, he begins the song on Daphnis’ death, where Thyrsis (in Theocritus, Idyl I. 62) had left it.

23. atque . . . atque, “cries out against both the gods and the cruel stars alike.”

28. loquuntur, “the shaggy mountains and the woods declare.”

32. vitis, etc., “as the vine decorates the tree.” Two dat., § 147, R. xviii. ut with ind., § 215, R. lxiv.

Ut gregibus tauri, segetes ut pinguibus arvis,
Tu decus omne tuis. Postquam te fata tulerunt,
Ipsa Pales agros atque ipse reliquit Apollo. 35
Grandia saepe quibus mandavimus hordea sulcis,
Infelix lolium et steriles nascuntur avenae;
Pro molli viola, pro purpureo narciso,
Carduus et spinis surgit paliurus acutis.
Spargite humum foliis, inducite fontibus umbras, 40
Pastores; mandat fieri sibi talia Daphnis;
Et tumulum facite, et tumulo superaddite carmen:
'Daphnis ego in silvis, hinc usque ad sidera notus,
Formosi pecoris custos, formosior ipse.'

Men. Tale tuum carmen nobis, divine poëta, 45
Quale sopor fessis in gramine, quale, per aestum,
Dulcis aquae saliente sitim restinguere rivo.
Nec calamis solum aequiparas, sed voce magistrum.
Fortunate puer, tu nunc eris alter ab illo.
Nos tamen haec, quocumque modo, tibi nostra vicissim 50
Dicemus, Daphnique tuum tollemus ad astra;
Daphnus ad astra feremus: amavit nos quoque Daphnis.

Mop. An quicquam nobis tali sit munere maius?
Et puer ipse fuit cantari dignus, et ista
Iam pridem Stimicon laudavit carmina nobis. 55

Men. Candidus insuetum miratur limen Olympi,
Sub pedibusque videt nubes et sidera Daphnis.
Ergo alacris silvas et cetera rura voluptas
Panaque pastoresque tenet Dryadasque puellas.
Nec lupus insidias pecori, nec retia cervis 60

41. mandat fieri sibi, "left as a dying injunction to do these rites for him."

42. carmen, "funeral song."

45. tale . . . quale. "Such, thy song, O divine poet, is as rest," etc. See § 91.

48. magistrum, "the (dead) master," i. e. Daphnis.

49. alter ab illo, "next after him."

50. nos tamen. "Yet we will (venture to) sing these our funeral songs in turn after a fashion. We will trace Daphnis' ascent to the stars."

53. munere. "What greater return than this can be made me?"

58. alacris voluptas, "eager joy."

Ulla dolum meditantur; amat bonus otia Daphnis.
 Ipsi laetitia voces ad sidera iactant
 Intonsi montes; ipsae iam carmina rupes,
 Ipsa sonant arbusta: ‘Deus, deus ille, Menalca!’
 Sis bonus o felixque tuis! en quattuor aras: 65
 Ecce duas tibi, Daphni, duas altaria Phoebo.
 Pocula bina novo spumantia lacte quotannis
 Craterasque duos statuam tibi pinguis olivi,
 Et multo in primis hilarans convivia Baccho,
 Ante focum, si frigus erit, si messis, in umbra, 70
 Vina novum fundam calathis Ariusia nectar.
 Cantabunt mihi Damoetas et Lyctius Aegon;
 Saltantis Satyros imitabitur Alphesiboeus.
 Haec tibi semper erunt, et cum sollemnia vota
 Reddemus Nymphis, et cum lustrabimus agros. 75
 Dum iuga montis aper, fluvios dum piscis amabit,
 Dumque thymo pascentur apes, dum rore cicadae,
 Semper honos nomenque tuum laudesque manebunt.
 Ut Baccho Cererique, tibi sic vota quotannis
 Agricolae facient; damnabis tu quoque voti 80
Mop. Quae tibi, quae tali reddam pro carmine dona?
 Nam neque me tantum venientis sibilus austri,

Daphnis shall be worshipped twice each year.

61. otia, “harmony.” Cf. Ecl. I. 6, and Caes. Bel. Civ. I.: note the contrast of joy, and compare these two lines with Ecl. IV.

62. ipsi intonsi montes iactant, cf. montesque feri silvaeque loquuntur, I. 28.

64. Deus, deus ille, Menalca! the climax of the apotheosis.

65. Sis bonus o felixque tuis. “Be blest and happy with thy new companions.” en quattuor aras. Caesar’s birthday fell during the games to Apollo. Arae were raised to heroes, Lares, and demigods; altaria to the gods only. On these only victims were offered, so duas altaria Phoebo, two arae on which we can offer victims (altaria) to Phoebus.

74. haec tibi semper erunt. The lustratio agrorum came in the early spring (ante focum, si frigus erit). There were, too, the Feriae Aestivae, which fell between June 24 and August 1, and were also called F. Mессis (si messis, in umbra).

80. damnabis . . . votis, “shall bind them to these vows.” damno, used in wills to enforce the discharge of a trust. votis, abl. § 136, r. 2.

82. Contrue, Nam neque tantum sibilus venientis austri, nec litora percussa fluctu nec flumina quae decurrunt inter saxosas valles tam iuvant me.

They exchange gifts. Nec percussa iuvant fluctu tam litora, nec quae Saxosas inter decurrunt flumina valles.

Men. Hac te nos fragili donabimus ante cicuta. 85
Haec nos, ‘Formosum Corydon ardebat Alexim,’ Haec eadem docuit, ‘Cuium pecus? an Meliboei?’

Mop. At tu sume pedum, quod, me cum saepe rogaret,
Non tulit Antigenes—et erat tum dignus amari—
Formosum paribus nodis atque aere, Menalca. 90

85. ante, “let me first give the ‘Formosum Corydon’ and ‘Cuium pecus.’”

86. “It taught me the melody for 88. pedum, “shepherd’s crook.”

ECLOGA VII.

MELIBOEUS.

MELIBOEUS tells how he happened once to be present at an amoebic contest between Corydon and Thyrsis, and repeats their verses, awarding the victory to Corydon. There are some personal allusions whose meaning is now lost to us. It was probably written after the first Eclogue, which was sixth in date. The opening lines are the most naturally rustic verses that Vergil has written. Here, too, he seems to be experimenting in rhythm and in vowel assonances. The quatrains of Corydon have a larger proportion of the broad ā; those of Thyrsis use ō and ē. The second singer, the challenger, improvises a quatrain on the same or on a similar theme to that set by his rival. It will be a good exercise for the student to analyze the pairs of quatrains and decide if Meliboeus’ final judgment was correct.

MELIBOEUS.—CORYDON.—THYRSIS.

Meliboeus tells of his adventure.

Mel. FORTE sub arguta consederat ilice Daphnis,
Compulerantque greges Corydon et Thyrsis in unum,
Thyrsis ovis, Corydon distentas lacte capellas,
Ambo florentes aetatibus, Arcades ambo,
Et cantare pares, et respondere parati. 5

1. arguta, “rustling.”

5. respondere, “to improvise” at the other’s challenge.

Huc mihi, dum teneras defendo a frigore myrtos,
Vir gregis ipse caper deerraverat; atque ego Daph-
nim

Aspicio. Ille ubi me contra videt: ‘Ocius,’ inquit, ‘Huc ades, o Meliboee! caper tibi salvus et haedi;
Et, si quid cessare potes, requiesce sub umbra. 10

Hic viridis tenera praetexit arundine ripas
Mincius, eque sacra resonant examina queru.
Quid facerem? neque ego Alcippen, neque Phyllida habebam,

Depulsos a lacte domi quae clauderet agnos; 15
Et certamen erat, Corydon cum Thyrside, magnum.
Posthabui tamen illorum mea seria ludo.

Coepere; alternos Musae meminisse volebant.
Hos Corydon, illos referebat in ordine Thyrsis. 20

6. defendo, “protect” from the frost, marks the time of year.

7. vir gregis, “leader of the flock.”

9. tibi, “your goat is safe, and so are your kids,” § 148, note.

10. quid, “at all.”

11. ipsi, “of their own accord.”

14. Alcippen neque Phyllida. For the Greek acc. see § 248. They were apparently female slaves.

16. et, emphatic, “and here was a great contest, Corydon against Thrysiss.”

18. alternis . . . versibus, “responsive verses” as trials of skill.

19. volebant. “The Muses preferred to recall responsive verses.”

21. Libethrides, Nymphae. Libethrus was a fount on Mount Helicon under the care of the Nymphs, who were sometimes invoked. They were not the Muses of the same mount.

23. si non possumus omnes, imitated (more closely in Ecl. VIII. 63) from Homer, Il. IV. If Corydon is defeated, he will hang his murmuring pipe on the sacred pine.

26. arcades pastores. ilia = heart. Codro, dat., cf. tibi, l. 9.

Ite domum pasti, si quis pudor, ite, iuvenci.

27. "If Codrus, instead of envying, should praise me extravagantly (ultra placitum), then crown my brow with baccar." The baccar was an oily plant of which a perfume was made (nardum rusticum). It was supposed to avert the evil eye or evil tongue. laudārit = laudaverit, perf. subj., § 207, R. lx.

29. parvus Micon, "young Micon." Delia, Diana, goddess of hunting. Apollo and Diana were born on the isle of Delos; hence, Delius, Delian.

30. vivacis. The stag was supposed to be long-lived.

31. si proprium, etc. "If this shall still continue as his own" by your grant. tota stabis, "thou shalt stand full length in marble." suras, § 155, R. xxv.

33. sinum, a deep wine-cup. libum, a cake of milk, oil, honey, and meal offered on the ara.

35. pro tempore, "for this time," temporarily.

36. fetura gregem. "If the lambing shall increase the flock."

37. Nerine, Galatea, daughter of Nereus, the sea-god. Neréis, -idis is the usual form. Nerine, Nerinis (§ 248) occurs only in this line.

41. immo . . . videar, "may I seem." Sardoniis . . . herbis, the "crowfoot" of Sardinia, was so acrid as to twist the mouth of the eater; so a sardonic laugh was bitterly sarcastic.

43. si . . . est. "If this daylight (while away from thee) is not longer than a whole year." si quis pudor, "if you can be ashamed of grazing so long."

47. defendite, “ward off the summer heat.”

50. postes, “pillars.”

52. numerum (ovium), “as the wolf cares for the number of the flock.”

68. cedat tibi, “yields to thee in beauty,” § 142, R. xiii.; § 207, R. ix.

70. ex illo . . . tempore, henceforth. Corydon, Corydon. The repetition is emphatic. est nobis, “is (the singer) for me.”

ECLOGA VIII.

PHARMACEUTRIA.

IT is a free imitation of Idyls I., III., and XI., of Theocritus in its first part, and of Idyl II. in the latter part. It is often called amoebic, but wrongly, for there are only two songs in it. Each of these is divided in stanzas of three, four, or five lines apiece, closing with a refrain, though the arrangement in the second song is irregular. It was composed in honor of Pollio, who was just returning from his campaign against the Illyrian Parthini; possibly Pollio had already received two other poems (l. 11). The model for the structure of the Eclogue is probably the seventh Idyl. The dedication (l. 6–13) has the appearance of being decided upon after the completion of the poem itself.

DAMON.—ALPHESIBOEUS.

The subject. PASTORUM Musam Damonis et Alphesiboei,

6. mihi depends on accipe. From en erit umquam to desinam is parenthetical.

9. en . . . orbem. “Shall it ever be permitted to sound through the whole world your poems, alone worthy of Sophocles’ buskin?” Pollio wrote tragedies as well as shorter poems. Sophocles acted in his own plays, so Vergil makes allusion to this by Sophocleo . . . cothurno—i.e. the actor’s shoe.

17. nascere, "cause to appear," imper. fr. nascor. praeveniens, "heralding." Lucifer, the morning star. See 1. 30, Hesperus, the evening star.

18. dum (ego) deceptus indigno amore
... queror. Damon assumes the part of a betrothed lover whose bride has been given to another.

21. This refrain, modelled upon the line in Theocritus, Id. I. 66, recurs at the beginning of eight stanzas, and closes Damon's song. Maenalus was a mountain in Arcadia.

27. iam, "now." aeroque sequenti,
"in the next generation," § 171, R.
xxxviii.

28. dammae, masc., § 18, exc. 2d.

31. sparge marite nuces. The bridegroom scattered nuts before the young torch-bearers. tibi deserit
Hesperus Oetam, "Hesperus leaves
(by rising over) Oeta for thee"—i. e.
it is time for the wedding procession to set out. It was also a proverb: "You have your wish." Oeta was a mountain in Thessaly.

33. dumque tibi est odio, "while you hate my pipe," etc., § 147, R. xviii.

35. nec quemquam deum curare credis, “nor do you believe that any god,” etc.

38. cum matre, “thy mother.”

41. ut vidi, ut perii! “When I saw thee, then I was lost! then a fatal error,” etc.

43. Construe, Aut Tmaros, aut Rhodope, aut extremi Garamantes edunt illum in duris cotibus, puerum nec nostri generis nec sanguinis.

47. sanguine, abl. of manner, § 167,

3. Medea killed her children out of jealous love for Jason.

49. mater, i. e. Medea. puer, i. e. Amor (l. 43).

55. sit Tityrus Orpheus. In this stanza Damon wishes that all nature be reversed: “Even let Tityrus equal Orpheus in the woods and Arion at sea,” referring to the legend of Arion being saved by the dolphin.

58. omnia vel medium fiat mare, “let all things be (plunged into) mid sea.” vivite, “farewell.”

Deferar ; extremum hoc munus morientis habeto. 60
Desine Maenalios, iam desine, tibia, versus.

Haec Damon ; vos, quae responderit Alphesiboeus,
Dicite, Pierides ; non omnia possumus omnes.

Prepare the magic rites.

Alph. Effer aquam, et molli cinge haec altaria vitta,
Verbenasque adole pinguis et mascula tura, 65
Coniugis ut magicis sanos avertere sacris
Experiar sensus ; nihil hic nisi carmina desunt.
Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daph-
nim.

Power of incantations.

Carmina vel caelo possunt deducere Lunam ;
Carminibus Circe socios mutavit Ulix ; 70
Frigidus in pratis cantando rumpitur anguis.
Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daph-
nim.

First charm.

Terna tibi haec primum triplici diversa colore
Licia circumdo, terque haec altaria circum
Effigiem duco ; numero deus impare gaudet. 75
Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daph-
nim.

Second charm.

Necte tribus nodis ternos, Amarylli, colores ;
Necte, Amarylli, modo, et, ‘Veneris,’ dic, ‘vincula

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daph-
nim.

Third charm.

Limus ut hic durescit, et haec ut cera liquescit 80

60. extremum munus, receive this, my dying gift—i. e. his lament. The poet appeals to the Muses themselves to recite the song of Alphesiboeus, as he was unequal to it—non omnia possumus omnes. The first stanza is a direction to the maid to bring the proper things for the magical rites. molli vitta, “a soft (woollen) fillet.”

65. verbenas pinguis, “oily shrubs.”

66. coniugis, etc. “That by magic charms I may try to inflame the cool senses of my betrothed.” avertere, to avert from his indifference = inflame.

67. nihil, etc., “here naught but the magic verse is wanting.”

68. This refrain is an imitation of Theocritus, Id. II. 17.

70. Ulx, dat., § 141, R. xii.

71. frigidus, etc. “The chilled serpent (even) is burst by magic song.”

73. terna, etc. “Three threads (lia-cia) of triple diverse colored strands I bind about the effigy, and swing it thrice around the altar.”

75. impare, abl., § 162, R. xxix. Even numbers were mortal; uneven, immortal.

Uno eodemque igni, sic nostro Daphnis amore.
Sparge molam, et fragilis incende bitumine laurus.
Daphnis me malus urit, ego hanc in Daphnide laurum.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.

What passion ought to fill Daphnis!

Talis amor Daphnim, qualis, cum fessa iuvencum 85
Per nemora atque altos quaerendo bucula lucos,
Propter aquae rivum viridi procumbit in ulva,
Perdita, nec serae meminit decadere nocti—
Talis amor teneat, nec sit mihi cura mederi.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim. 90

Fourth charm. Has olim exuvias mihi perfidus ille reliquit, Pignora cara sui; quae nunc ego limine in ipso,
Terra, tibi mando; debent haec pignora Daphnim.
Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.

Magic herbs

next used.

Has herbas atque haec Ponto mihi lecta venena 95
Ipse dedit Moeris; nascuntur plurima Ponto.
His ego saepe lupum fieri et se condere silvis
Moerim, saepe animas imis excire sepulcris
Atque satas alio vidi traducere messis.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim. 100

Sixth rite. Fer cineres, Amarylli, foras; rivoque fluenti
Transque caput iace; nec respexeris. His ego Daphnim

83. sparge molam. The handful of meal entered into all sacrifices.

85. talis amor . . . qualis (est) cum, bucula fessa, etc. talis amor (inquam) teneat Daphnim. mederi, dep. inf., “nor will I care to heal it.”

91. exuvias, “vestments” which the faithless Daphnis had left as pledges of his return.

93. debent, “demand Daphnis”—

i.e. he only can redeem them in person.

95. Ponto. Supply ab. Colchis, in Pontus, was famous for its magic herbs.

96. plurima. Supply venena.

99. traducere, inf., “I have seen him ruin growing crops.

101. foras, adv., “forth.” rivoque fluenti, etc., “scatter it over thy head into the running stream.”

Aggrediar.—Nihil ille deos, nil carmina curat.
Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daph-
nim.

Aspice! corripuit tremulis altaria flammis 105
Sponte sua, dum ferre moror, cinis ipse. Bonum sit!
Nescio quid certe est—et Hylas in limine latrat.
Credimus? an, qui amant, ipsi sibi somnia fingunt?
Parcite, ab urbe venit, iam parcite, carmina, Daphnis.

Her joyful triumph.

103. nil carmina curat, she despairs. it? or do lovers cheat themselves
108. credimus, etc. “Can we believe with dreams?”

GEORGICON.

LIBER PRIMUS.

THE subjects of the first book are the farm, the soil, the crops, and the right seasons for the different kinds of farm-work. Near its close he gives a sort of farmer's calendar of lucky and unlucky days and the signs of weather. He touches everything from its poetic side. His precepts are enlivened by sketches of country life—the wife singing at her loom, the peasant driving his laden donkey to market, the rites of blessing the fields, and similar topics. Throughout there is his love of the country, his deep patriotism and religiousness. The first book closes with a fine description of the portents that occurred at the time of Caesar's death, and with a prayer for Augustus.

Bacchus and Ceres,

1. quid faciat. The first four lines are the logical object of canere (l. 5). Arrange, Hinc incipiam canere quid faciat laetas, etc. quo sidere. The signs of the zodiac marked the seasons for the farmer.

3. conveniat, impers. habendo, ger. dat., § 147, R. xviii.; § 184, r. 4, II. Note the distinctions between cura and cultus.

4. parcis, "economical." experiens-tia, the beekeeper's "skill."

6. lumina, the sun, moon, and signs.

Vergil next invokes the Italian god of wine, Liber, and the goddess of corn, Ceres.

7. tellus . . . mutavit, "the earth has exchanged"—i. e. the farmer now sows the corn. Early tribes fed on acorns. Chaon, a son of Priam, migrated to Dodona, famous later for its oracle of Jupiter in its oak grove.

9. Acheloëa. The Achelous' pure fountain was a synonym for cool water. The Greeks and Romans always mingled water with their wine.

and the rustic deities.	Et vos, agrestum praesentia numina, Fauni,	10
	Ferte simul Faunique pedem Dryadesque puellae :

	Numina sola colant, tibi serviat ultima Thule,	30
	Teque sibi generum Tethys emat omnibus undis ;

10. The Fauni were the rustic gods of Italy.

11. Dryadesque puellae, wood-nymphs, Dryads. ferte . . . pedem, "hither with dancing foot."

12. munera, both "gifts" and "offices."

14. cultor nemorum. Aristaeus. tondent, "browse."

17. Pan. The worship of the Arcadian Pan was early transferred to Italy. Mount Lycaeus was near Tegea, in Arcadia.

19. puer. Triptolemus, who learned of Ceres how to plough.

24. tuque, subject of da facilem cursum, etc. (l. 40). quem for de quo.

25. ne, with an (l. 29), and anne (l.

32), § 123, r. 10. ne (whether Augustus shall be taken to Olympus, when Jupiter will crown him) marks a doubt. an (or whether he shall live master of the world) marks the affirmative wish. anne, or later be placed among the stars.

30. numina tua colant, "offer worship for thy protection." numina . . . ultima Thule, the scarcely-known regions of farthest north-western Europe.

31. Tethys. "The sea-goddess shall, with a dowry of all her waves, wed thee, her son-in-law" (to one of her daughters, the Oceanides). emat hints at the coemptio of Roman marriage. undis, abl. of a paid price.

 Nec tibi regnandi veniat tam dira cupido,
 Quamvis Elysios miretur Graecia campos,
 Nec repetita sequi curet Proserpina matrem—
 Da facilem cursum, atque audacibus adnue coeptis, 40
 Ignarosque viae mecum miseratus agrestis,
 Ingredere, et votis iam nunc adsuesce vocari.
 must ever be propitious.

When the frost comes out of the ground, then prepare to plough on fields that have lain fallow for two seasons. Each country has its proper products. Tmolus, India, Calybs, Epirus, Italy, must be farming countries. Let the fields lie out every other year, or else change the crops. Burning off the stubble will do good to barren soil. A rainy solstice and a dry winter make a good crop. The fields should be irrigated by the brooks from the hill-side. (ll. 43-121.)

THE IRON AGE.

Jupiter has forbidden us to live without toil.

He has sent serpents and wild beasts.

Pater ipse colendi
 Haud facilem esse viam voluit, primusque per artem
 Movit agros, curis acuens mortalia corda,
 Nec torpere gravi passus sua regna veterno.
 Ante Iovem nulli subigebant arva coloni; 125
 Ne signare quidem aut partiri limite campum
 Fas erat: in medium quaerebant, ipsaque tellus
 Omnia liberius, nullo poscente, ferebat.
 Ille malum virus serpentibus addidit atris,
 Praedarique lupos iussit, pontumque moveri; 130

36. quidquid eris refers back to tuque, and leads to da facilem.

39. repetita, “though sought (and found), cared not to follow her mother,” preferring the realms below.

122. per artem movit agros, “caused to be tilled properly.”

124. sua regna. Saturn ruled the golden age (Ecl. IV.). Jove ruled the silver age.

41. miseratus mecum agrestes ignaros viae. viae, gen., § 135, R. ix.

42. vocari votis, “to be invoked with vows.”

127. fas, “it was against divine law.” partiri, dep. inf. pred. nom., § 181. in medium quaerebant, “they sought (to use) everything in common.”

Forced inventions.	Mellaque decussit foliis; ignemque removit, Et passim rivis currentia vina repressit: Ut varias usus meditando extunderet artis Paulatim, et sulcis frumenti quaereret herbam; Ut silicis venis abstrusum excuderet ignem. 135

141. funda, "casting-net." lina (n. pl. acc.), "drag-net."

145. venere, perf. 3 pl.

146. urgens egestas, as well as improbis labor, is the subject of vicit.

149. Dodona (cf. Chaoniam, l. 8), the oak grove refused its food (of acorns).

151. esset, subj. imp. of edo, "to devour," § 111, 8.

Directions follow for making the plough and the roller for the threshing-floor, to harden the ground and to keep out mice, moles, and other vermin. If the chestnut is but leafy, your crop will be light; if its branches are heavily laden, you will have a full harvest. Seeds should be soaked before sowing. (ll. 168-203.)

THE CONSTELLATIONS MARK THE TIMES FOR PLOUGHING.

The poet resumes the prognostications of the weather: the moaning of the wind in the mountains or on the sea-shore, and the wheeling sea-birds, warn the sailor to seek the shore and the farmer to keep his herds under shelter. Meteors, floating down, and straws, all portend a change. Thunder-cloud east, west, or north fills the ditches with water. The crane, the swallow, the ant, the crow, give some sign of a coming storm. Even the girls at the loom can tell by the smouldering wick. The sows make up their litter anew, the owl does not hoot, the eagles presage, by their flight, the weather, as do other birds also. LIBER SECUNDUS.

TREES are the theme of this book: their propagation, culture, and improvement, and directions for grafting and budding (ll. 73–82). Trees suited to different climates are enumerated (ll. 109–135). A noble panegyric on Italy follows (ll. 136–176). Different soils are treated of (ll. 177–287). A passage upon spring (ll. 315–345) precedes directions for the culture of the olive and of fruit trees (ll. 420–428). The book closes with a eulogy upon country life. (ll. 458–542.)

THE INVOCATION.

 Floret ager, spumat plenis vindemia labris—
 Huc, pater o Lenaee! veni, nudataque musto
 Tinge novo mecum dereptis crura cothurnis.

The natural production of the tree is either spontaneous or from seed. By cuttings and layers roots will be thrown out from the twigs of some kinds of trees. The farmer should pay much attention to this part of his work. Vergil appeals to Maecenas as his patron. Culture improves trees. Toil is the price to be paid for all improvement. Grafting accomplishes strange results; its methods are described. There are different kinds of the same vine or tree. (ll. 9–108.)

Soils suitable for trees are discoursed of. The soil for the vine. Mantua is praised for its pastures. A fat, loose, moist soil suits the vine to be trained upon the elm. The soil must be carefully prepared, and the field ought to be properly irrigated. The vines must be set in orderly rows, like a legion in battle array. The trenches should not be deep for the vine, but the tree must be well set. (ll. 177-313.)

 Inter, et exciperet caeli indulgentia terras. 345

Always compost well and stir the earth around the stocks, and train their first growths, but after that prune or cut close. Protect them from the young cattle, which hurt the bark by rubbing and by nibbling the twigs. Sacrifice the young kids to Bacchus with due rites of feast and song and victim. The returning year brings returning toil. Clean up the vineyard and loosen the soil. Olive trees need no knife nor culture; they care for themselves. Fruit trees, too, grow readily, as well as other useful plants, such as the willow, the myrtle, the cypress, the pine. (ll. 346–457.)

538. “The golden Saturn led such a life on earth before the reign of the Dictaean king (Jove), before the impious age (gens) feasted on the slaughtered oxen.”

541. spatiis, “in our race,” refers to the numerous topics in the book; the imagery is borrowed from the race-course. aequor, “level ground.”

LIBER TERTIUS.

VERGIL'S theme is the stock of the farm. His directions are practical; but, as he passes from one class to another—from the “armenta” to the “pecudes”—without notice of the change, the details are often confusing. However, he more than repays for the oversight by the digressions upon subjects suggested by the main theme. Three of these have been especially admired: the power of love, in which there is a spirited sketch of a fight between two rival bulls for the leadership of the herd; the description of the nomads of Africa, and the more carefully worked-up companion picture of a Scythian winter; and the account of a terrible murrain in the Norican Alps, with which the third book rather abruptly closes.

THE INVOCATION.

Other themes of song are common. TE quoque, magna Pales, et te memorande, canemus, Pastor ab Amphryso, vos, silvae amnesque Lycae.

2. pastor ab Amphryso. Apollo, for slaying the Cyclops, was condemned to tend Admetus' flocks by the Amphyrysus in Thessaly.

4. vulgata, “are but common themes.”

5. inlaudati, “not to be praised,” really detestable.

11. Aonio vertice. Vergil claims to be the first who successfully brought Greek poetry—“leading captive the Muses from the Aonian Mount”—to Rome.

19. “All Greece, deserting the bank of the Alpheus (Olympia) and the groves of Molorchus (Nemea), will strive either on my race-courses or with the rawhide caestus.”

24. versis frontibus, “with shifted scenery.” Apparently the scaena here was changed by scenery let down in front. intexti, etc., “woven (figures) of Britons (seem to) raise the purple curtain.” On the ancient stage the curtain rose, instead of falling as at present.

Maecenas.

The farmer should know the points of the horse and the cow, and of his brood mares and milch cows. A young horse is described, his fire and speed. Ericthonius invented the chariot-race. The centaurs. Epirus noted for its breed. Care of the mares; the handling and breaking of the colt; the training of the war-horse. The power of love in beasts described by a fight between two bulls for the leadership of the herd. Love's universal influence. Vergil turns to the care of sheep and goats, their folds, and their grazing-time. (ll. 49–338.)

Vergil next treats of diseases—the scab and the itch in sheep. Wash, shear, and clip. Anoint with sulphur and oil and litharge, pitch, and other remedies. L I B E R I V .

THE tradition that Vergil's father kept bees on that memorable farm, which cost the poet so much effort to retain, gives additional interest to this book. It may be also an imitation of a lost poem by Aratus on bees. It contains many ideas about them which modern observation shows to have been false, and, chiefly, the strange error in calling the queen bee a king. Two delightful digressions break into the continuity of his theme: the visit he once paid to the gardener Galaesus, near Tarentum, and the description of his skill; the other, the legend of Orpheus and Eurydice, which he has worked up with splendid effect upon lines of his own. It is said that this episode took the place of a panegyric upon his friend the poet-soldier C. Gallus, which, at Augustus' request, was cancelled. Gallus had offended Augustus, and was suspected of treason. He fell into disgrace, and died by his own hand.

A good position for the hives, and flowery meadows free from reptiles, with flowing streamlets, are needful. The hives should be strong and warm, for the bees will seek a protected home. When the bees come forth after the winter cold, see that they swarm rightly. Scatter around odorous plants, and ring bells and pans to make them swarm. (ll. 8-66.)

The kinds of bees and their mode of life. A state under a king, with laws and a polity, they practise frugality, foresight, and industry in storing food; their toil is systematic, regular, and thorough; they yield the utmost obedience to their king and absolute despot, without whom their hive is broken up, and for whom they fight; they are an example to all men. How to take the honey. The act of stinging is fatal to them. Protect them from the lizard, the roach, and the moth. They suffer from various diseases; they remove their dead. Different herbs are useful for them. If the swarm is destroyed, there is a mode of recovering it practised in Egypt and throughout Persia and India. In a carefully closed pen place a two-year-old heifer beaten to death, and then heap the carcass with thyme and twigs of fragrant herbs and seal up the pen. In due time a vast swarm will burst forth.(ll. 149–314.)

to the first Eclogue connects the Georgics with the Bucolics.

P. VERGILI MARONIS

AENEIDOS

LIBER I.

AFTER announcing the subject of his poem, Vergil describes the fleet of Aeneas sailing from Southern Sicily toward Italy. Juno bribes Aeolus, the king of the winds, to shatter the fleet by a sudden storm. Out of fourteen sail only seven ships reach a safe harbor on the African coast. Meantime Venus appeals to Jupiter, who shows her the future of Rome. The next day she, disguised as a huntress, leads Aeneas to Carthage. There he finds that the rest of the fleet is safe, and is received by Dido, who gives a royal banquet in his honor. Venus persuades Cupid to personate Aeneas's young son, Ascanius, and to inflame the queen with a deep love for Aeneas.

The Aeneid opens with four verses, according to some copies, which are not in Vergil's style:

Ille ego, qui quondam, gracili modulatus avena,

Ut quamvis avido parerent arva colono;

Other causes of irritation.

10. pietate, “filial piety,” was the special characteristic of Aeneas.

16. Samo, fem. The double pause of the pointing (;) and the caesura prevent the elision of o before the hic.

17. regnum esse gentibus, “this she watches and cherishes to become the ruling state over nations.”

22. venturum, “was to come.” sic volvere Parcas, “so spun the Fates.”

27. spretae iniuria formae, “the insult to her despised beauty.”

28. rapti Ganymedis honores. Ganymede was stolen by Jupiter, carried to Olympus, and was made cup-bearer to the gods in place of Hebe, Juno’s daughter.

29. accensa, subj. of arcebant, l. 31.

30. reliquias, “the leavings of the Greeks and of the cruel Achilles.” The phrase implies that the Greeks were weary of the massacre at Troy.

33. Note the toil expressed by the spondees.

Juno's soliloquy.

Cum Iuno, aeternum servans sub pectore vulnus,
 Haec secum : ‘ Mene incepto desistere victimam,
 Nec posse Italia Teucrorum avertere regem ?
 Quippe veter fatis. Pallasne exurere classem
 Argivum atque ipsos potuit submergere ponto, 40
 Unius ob noxam et furias Aiacis Oilei ?
 Ipsa, Iovis rapidum iaculata e nubibus ignem,
 Disiecitque rates evertitque aequora ventis ;
 Illum exspirantem transfixo pectore flamas
 Turbine corripuit scopuloque infixit acuto. 45
 Ast ego, quae divom incedo regina Iovisque

Talia flammato secum dea corde volutans, 50
 Nimborum in patriam, loca feta furentibus austris,
 Aeoliam venit. Hic vasto rex Aeolus antro
 Luctantis ventos tempestatesque sonoras
 Imperio premit, ac vinclis et carcere frenat.
 Illi indignantes, magno cum murmure montis, 55
 Circum claustra fremunt ; celsa sedet Aeolus arce
 Sceptra tenens, mollitque animos et temperat iras ;
 Ni faciat, maria ac terras caelumque profundum
 Quippe ferant rapidi secum verrantque per auras.
 Sed pater omnipotens speluncis abdidit atris, 60
 Hoc metuens, molemque et montis insuper altos
 Imposuit, regemque dedit, qui foedere certo
 Et premere et laxas sciret dare iussus habenas.
 Ad quem tum Iuno supplex his vocibus usa est :

37. haec secum. Vergil introduces Juno muttering to herself.

38. Italia. Supply ab, § 173, R. and remark.

40. Argirum, gen. plu., § 24, r. 4.

42. ipsa, “she,” Jove’s daughter, can do these acts. Ast ego (l. 46), “But I, the queen of the gods,” etc.

49. honorem, “the honor” of a sacrifice. The student will observe that it occurs frequently in this sense throughout the Aeneid.

51. patriam, loca, Aeoliam, are in apposition and acc. after in.

61. Both molem and montis altos insuper are used to imply the vast weight needed to confine the winds.

62. foedere certo, “who, directed by a fixed compact, knows both,” etc.

Will not Aeolus smite Aeneas' fleet with a storm?

'Aeole, namque tibi divom pater atque hominum rex' 65

Et mulcere dedit fluctus et tollere vento,
Gens inimica mihi Tyrrhenum navigat aequor,
Ilium in Italiam portans victosque Penatis:
Incute vim ventis submersasque obrue puppis,
Aut age diversos et disice corpora ponto. 70

Sunt mihi bis septem praestanti corpore Nymphae, Quarum quae forma pulcherrima Deiopea,
Conubio iungam stabili propriamque dicabo,
Omnis ut tecum meritis pro talibus annos
Exigat, et pulchra faciat te prole parentem.' 75

Her offer.

Aeolus haec contra: 'Tuus, o regina, quid optes,
Explorare labor; mihi iussa capessere fas est.
Tu mihi, quodcumque hoc regni, tu sceptrum Iovemque
Concilia, tu das epulis accumbere divom,
Nimborumque facis tempestatumque potentem.' 80

The storm.

Haec ubi dicta, cavum conversa cuspide montem
Impulit in latus: ac venti, velut agmine facto,
Qua data porta, ruunt et terras turbine perflant.
Incubueret mari, totumque a sedibus imis
Una Eurusque Notusque ruunt creberque procellis 85
Africus, et vastos volvunt ad litora fluctus.
Insequitur clamorque virum stridorque rudentum.
Eripiunt subito nubes caelumque diemque
Teucrorum ex oculis; ponto nox incubat atra.
Intonuere poli, et crebris micat ignibus aether,
Praesentemque viris intentant omnia mortem. 90

Aeneas.

Extemplo Aeneae solvuntur frigore membra;

72. quarum quae . . . Deiopea. Properly, Deiopea should be in the acc., but is attracted into the case of quae by an old Latin idiom: "Of whom Deiopea (she!) is most lovely in form—(her) will I give in firm wedlock, and declare her thine."

73. Notice that iungo and dico are both used as official and ritual terms.

77. Supply est before explorare. fas implies religious duty and obligation.

81. conversa cuspide, "with the butt of the spear." Aeolus was within the cave. The scanning of this whole passage to l. 123 repays study.

85. ruunt, "rush forth." The second ruunt = obruunt, "the whole sea." The rhythmic effect is heightened by the skilful repetition of que.

Ingemit, et duplicis tendens ad sidera palmas
 Talia voce refert : ‘O terque quaterque beati,
 Quis ante ora patrum Troiae sub moenibus altis 95
 Contigit oppetere ! o Danaum fortissime gentis
 Tydide ! mene Iliacis occumbere campis
 Non potuisse, tuaque animam hanc effundere dextra ?
 Saevus ubi Aeacidae telo iacet Hector, ubi ingens
 Sarpedon, ubi tot Simoës correpta sub undis 100
 Scuta virum galeasque et fortia corpora volvit.’

Talia iactanti stridens Aquilone procella
 Vulum adversa ferit, fluctusque ad sidera tollit.
 Franguntur remi ; tum prora avertit, et undis 104
 Dat latus ; insequitur cumulo praeruptus aquae mons.
 Hi summo in fluctu pendent ; his unda dehiscens
 Terram inter fluctus aperit ; fuit aestus arenis.
 Tris Notus abreptas in saxa latentia torquet—
 Saxa vocant Itali, mediis quae in fluctibus, Aras—
 Dorsum immane mari summo : tris Eurus ab alto 110
 In brevia et syrtis urget, miserabile visu,
 Inliditque vadis atque aggere cingit arenae.

The storm increases.

 Accipiunt inimicum imbrem, rimisque fatiscunt.

95. quis = queis, dat. plu., depends on contigit.

97. mene. Compare I. 37: “Why could not I have fallen . . . and poured out?”

102. Aquilone, “a roaring blast from the south wind.” iactanti, “uttering.”

104. prora avertit, “the bows fall off.”

112. inlidit, “dashes.”

114. ipsius, “of Aeneas himself.”

- Interea magno misceri murmure pontum,
 Neptune rises. Emissamque hiemem sensit Neptunus et imis 125
 Stagna refusa vadis, graviter commotus; et alto
 Prospiciens, summa placidum caput extulit unda.
 Disiectam Aeneae toto videt aequore classem,
 Fluctibus oppressos Troas caerule ruina.
 Nec latuere doli fratrem Iunonis et irae. 130
 Eurum ad se Zephyrumque vocat, dehinc talia fatur:
 ‘Tantane vos generis tenuit fiducia vestri?
 Quells the winds.
 Iam caelum terramque meo sine numine, Venti,
 Miscere, et tantas audetis tollere moles? 134
 Quos ego! Sed motos praestat componere fluctus.
 Post mihi non simili poena commissa luetis.
 Maturate fugam, regique haec dicite vestro:
 Non illi imperium pelagi saevumque tridentem,
 Sed mihi sorte datum. Tenet ille immania saxa,
 Vestras, Eure, domos; illa se iactet in aula 140
 Aeolus, et clauso ventorum carcere regnet.’
 Sic ait, et dicto citius tumida aequora placat,
 The sea-deities relieve the ship. Collectasque fugat nubes solemque reducit.
 Cymothoë simul et Triton adnixus acuto
 Detrudunt navis scopulo; levat ipse tridenti; 145
 Et vastas aperit syrtis, et temperat aequor,
 Atque rotis summas levibus perlabilis undas.
 Ac veluti magno in populo cum saepe coorta est
 Seditio, saevitque animis ignobile vulgus; 149
 Iamque faces et saxa volant, furor arma ministrat;
 Tum, pietate gravem ac meritis si forte virum quem
 Conspexere, silent, arrectisque auribus adstant;

126. stagna refusa, “the still depths were stirred up.” refusa, from re-fundo. The waves, tide, and blasts were poured back and forth, as it were, into the lower quiet depths.

130. latuere, “escape the knowledge of her brother.” doli, “wiles.”

135. quos ego! “whom I—!” Neptune is too angry to find words.

136. post, “next time.”

139. immania saxa, “huge and savage rocks.” immanis = monstrous, both in a physical and in a moral view.

144. adnixus, “aiding;” lit., “striving.”

145. ipse, Neptune himself.

Ille regit dictis animos, et pectora mulcet :
 Sic cunctus pelagi cecidit fragor, aequora postquam

 Egressi optata potiuntur Troes arena,
 Et sale tabentis artus in litore ponunt.

160. obiectu, etc., "by the opposition of its sides." The island acts as a breakwater.

171. subit, "enters" under the overhanging cliffs. Neptune had lifted them out of the quicksands, and Triton had taken them off the reef.

176. nutrimenta, "dry wood." fomite, "in the fuel."

179. frangere saxo, "crush it with the stone." It is usual even now in many places—e. g. in Mexico—to rub the soaked grain into a coarse meal by hand.

Navem in conspectu nullam ; tris litore cervos

186. longum agmen, “straggling herd.” The grazing deer were like a straggling column on the march.

190. vulgus, n. acc. vulgus and turba describe the wayward herd following their leaders.

191. miscet agens telis, “scatters by shooting.” telis = sagittis.

194. partitur is probably used as a deponent—“divides with his own hand”—like cingitur (Bk. II. 511), where Priam girds himself.

206. fas (as in l. 77) means “of divine obligation.”

Meantime Venus complains to Jupiter of Aeneas' hardships compared with those of others, and the delays in fulfilling his destiny. Jupiter unfolds to her the unchangeable decrees regarding Latium, Alba Longa, and Rome, with its future glories, crowned in Augustus. He sends Mercury to warn Dido at Carthage to receive the shipwrecked strangers; while Venus, equipped as a huntress, goes to conduct Aeneas thither and to inform him about Dido's career. She bids him take courage and present himself to Dido, and gives him an auspicious omen. He recognizes his mother as she vanishes. Concealed by a cloud, he, with Achates, makes his way into Carthage, astonished at its rapid building, and to see pictured upon the walls of the temple the tale of the siege. While he is gazing amazed (ll. 223-493),

 Tum foribus divae, media testudine templi,

 Dissimulant, et nube cava speculantur amicti,
 Quae fortuna viris, classem quo litore linquunt,
 Quid veniant; cunctis nam lecti navibus ibant,
 Orantes veniam, et templum clamore petebant.

Ilioneus appeals for protection and relief, and tells of their hardships and toils of the storm and of their dreaded loss. Dido replies kindly, and offers not only aid, but also to take them as subjects, with equal rights. (ll. 519-578.) As she utters the words

“Tros Tyriusque mihi nullo discrimine agetur!”

500. glomerantur, “circling wheel hither and thither.” glomero is chosen with reference to the drill implied in exercet. The globus was a military formation.

503. laeta, “joyous,” in happy, eager, and proud superintendence of the works.

506. subnixa, “resting upon.”

508. sorte, for sortem, the “lot,” was often used by the Romans in determining offices.

515. res incognita may refer to themselves, or to the reception of their comrades, or to Dido’s conduct.

518. lecti, etc., “chosen men from all the ships.”

AENEAS SUDDENLY APPEARS.

His animum arrecti dictis et fortis Achates

 ‘Nate dea, quae nunc animo sententia surgit ?
 Omnia tuta vides, classem sociosque receptos.

 Submersum ; dictis respondent cetera matris.’ 585
 Vix ea fatus erat, cum circumfusa repente
 Scindit se nubes et in aethera purgat apertum.
 Restitit Aeneas claraque in luce refulsit,
 Os umerosque deo similis ; namque ipsa decoram

579. arrecti animum, “encouraged,” for animum, § 155, R. xxv., r. 2.

581. compellat, “urges.”

587. purgat, “disappears.”

591. adflarat, “had breathed upon her son.” honores, “beauty.”

592. manus, “skilful hands.” The old artists often used ivory, gold, silver, and color in their statues.

595. improvisus, “suddenly;” lit., unforeseen.

600. socias, etc., “grantest us to share in your city and your homes—us, the leavings of the Greeks.”

601. non opis est nostrae, “it is not in our resources,” in our power, § 133, R. vii. ubique, though attached to est, belongs to sparsa. quidquid, adverbial, “nor is it at all in the power of the Dardanian race.”

 Notice Vergil's frequent use of lae-
tus. The repeated t in ll. 605–607 is intentional.

608. polus sidera pascet. The sky (polus) was supposed to supply to the stars their fires.

610. quae me cumque vocant terrae. Note the tmesis of quae cumque, "what lands soever summon me."

616. applicat, "drives you back." The storm drove Aeneas southward from Italy.

622. dicione. Supply sub.
 623. casus, fall of the Trojan city.
 627. agite, imperative, "forward."
 632. indicit honorem, "directs a thank-offering," etc. Cf. honorem, l. 49.

Aeneas sends for Ascanius and for some rare gifts. Meanwhile Venus persuades Cupid to aid her by personating Ascanius (whom she takes asleep to Mount Ida) to inspire Dido with a passion for Aeneas. Cupid promptly accedes to the request. (ll. 643–694.)

636. dii = diei, the old genitive form. Vergil left several lines unfinished.

639. ostro, “with royal purple.” ostrum, the shell-fish, put for the color obtained from it.

695. dicto parens, “obeying her word,” § 142, R. xiii.

698. aurēā spondā, abl. of place. sponda, the side of the couch, by which the guest placed himself upon it. aulaeum was the canopy over it.

703. longam penum, “the long array of dishes.” penus = larder. The Penates, as household genii, were worshipped. Compare penus with Penates as keepers of the penus.

710. flagrantis vultus, “the glowing features.”

712. infelix Phoenissa, “the hapless Phoenician.” The intervening parenthetic line between infelix and Phoenissa has a fine effect. devota, “doomed to a coming woe.”

716. falsi, “deceived,” for Cupid personated Iulus.

718. inscia Dido, etc., “unsuspecting Dido! What a mighty god was entering her miserable self!”

723. epulis, dat. after sequitur, or some similar verb to be supplied.

724. statuunt magnos crateras, “set out mighty bowls.”

725. fit strepitus tectis, etc., “the applause rises to the domes, and these echo it through the ample halls.”

727. funalia, “torches” twisted, like ropes, of papyrus, and smeared with resinous gums.

728. poposcit, “calls for a massy patera,” etc. The crater was the bowl out of which the wine was dipped into the saucer-like patera with a cyathus.

730. soliti, “were wont to use.”

731. Iuppiter. He was the god of hospitality, and fixed the rights (jura) between host and guest. fas is divine, and jus human, right; lex is the written right.

The song of Iopas.

Dido's request.

733. velis, "mayst thou will the day to be." volo is used of divine will.

736. libavit in mensam. The rite was sacrificial and not merely festal, and the mensa became properly at the dedication of the palace an

ara. As queen, Dido performed a solemn duty.

740. crinitus Iopas personat, "the long-haired Iopas plays upon his golden lyre." For a somewhat similar festal scene, see Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," canto vi.

LIBER II.

AENEAS, reluctantly complying with Dido's request, recounts the sorrowful tale of the fatal ruse of the wooden horse, and of the portents which decided the Trojans to admit it within the walls. At midnight Hector's ghost rouses him and bids him escape with the sacred Penates he puts into his hands, for the last hour has befallen doomed Troy. Aeneas starts up, and, hearing the clash of swords, seizes his own arms and makes what efforts are possible, with a few comrades, to save the city. He reaches Priam's palace in time to witness the murder of the aged king and the firing of the palace. Venus then opens his eyes to see the gods themselves mingling in the sack. He rushes back to rescue his family. In the escape Creusa is lost. He returns to seek her, and is met by her ghost, which tells him something of the future. He returns to the party without the walls, and they, with a large band of fugitives, find a retreat under Mount Ida till Aeneas can equip a fleet for their transport to another home.

Aeneas begins
the saddest
tale ever told. CONTICUERE omnes, intentique ora tenebant.

Inde toro pater Aeneas sic orsus ab alto :

‘ Infandum, Regina, iubes renovare dolorem,
Troianas ut opes et lamentabile regnum
Eruerint Danai ; quaeque ipse miserrima vidi, 5
Et quorum pars magna fui. Quis talia fando
Myrmidonum Dolopumve aut duri miles Ulix
Temperet a lacrimis ! Et iam nox umida caelo Praecipitat, suadentque cadentia sidera somnos.
Sed si tantus amor casus cognoscere nostros 10
Et breviter Troiae supremum audire laborem, Quamquam animus meminisse horret, luctuque re-fugit,

‘ Fracti bello fatisque repulsi
Ductores Danaum, tot iam labentibus annis,

1. conticuere, “kept perfect silence.” tenebant, imperf. of continued action.

3. infandum, “unutterable pain.” Cf. fando, l. 6.

4. ut, “how,” expressing manner or mode. It takes the indicative.

8. temperet, “restrain himself;” for subj. with quis, § 240, R. lxxxii.

10. tantus amor. Supply sit tibi. cognoscere, the infinitive, is used instead of the usual gerundive, cognoscendi, § 181, rem. 2.

14. ductores, not merely the generals, but the advisers also.

The wooden horse.	Instar montis equum divina Palladis arte Aedificant, sectaque intexunt abiete costas ; Votum pro reditu simulant ; ea fama vagatur. Huc delecta virum sortiti corpora furtim Includunt caeco lateri, penitusque cavernas Ingentis uterumque armato milite complent.	15
The Greeks retreat to Tenedos.	‘Est in conspectu Tenedos, notissima fama Insula, dives opum, Priami dum regna manebant, Nunc tantum sinus et statio male fida carinis. Huc se proiecti deserto in litore condunt. Nos abiisse rati et vento petiisse Mycenae.	20

16. abiete, trisyllable. ie = y.

29. tendebat, "pitched his tents."

17. votum. Supply esse. simulant, "they pretend it."

31. stupet, "is amazed at," intransitive used transitively, § 150, r. 4.

18. Arrange, sortiti corpora delecta virum hue, includunt (ea) caeco lateri.

35. menti, "to whose mind." Supply fuit.

23. statio male fida, "a roadstead unsafe for ships."

36. aut . . . aut mark two classes of suggestions, each containing two propositions. que and et have subordinately the meaning of "or." Note the aut in Laocoön's appeal.

Dona carere dolis Danaum ? sic notus Ulixes ?
 Aut hoc inclusi ligno occultantur Achivi, 45
 Aut haec in nostros fabricata est machina muros,
 Inspectura domos venturaque desuper urbi,
 Aut aliquis latet error ; equo ne credite, Teucri.
 Quidquid id est, timeo Danaos et dona ferentis.”

50. validis viribus, “with mighty force.”

naum, Argolicas, local names, are used for the Greeks.

52. illa. Supply machina.

56. stares maneres, § 201. It is an example of Vergil’s pathos.

54. si fata deum, si mens non laeva fuissest. “If the fates of the gods—ay, if our own mind—had not been infatuated.” Aeneas pauses in the midst of his sentence, as if, despite the Fates, even yet Troy might have survived but for their own infatuation. Note that Mycenas, Dorica, Da-

57. manus, § 155, R. xxv.
 60. hoc ipsum, “this plot,” depends on obtulerat.

64. inludere capto, § 143, R. xiv.

66. omnis—i. e. Danaos. Note the caution expressed by the spondee circum || spexit, l. 68.

Cui neque apud Danaos usquam locus, et super ipsi
Dardanidae infensi poenas cum sanguine poscunt.”
Quo gemitu conversi animi, compressus et omnis
Impetus. Hortamur fari, quo sanguine cretus,
Quidve ferat; memoret, quae sit fiducia capto. 75

Sinon tells a woeful tale of Ulysses's enmity and its effects; and as a human sacrifice is demanded for a safe return, through Ulysses (and Chalchus under his threats) Sinon is selected. He escapes; and now, as he can never return to Argos, he solemnly vows allegiance to Troy, and explains the offering of the wooden horse to Minerva. (ll. 76–198.)

LAOCOÖN'S TERRIBLE FATE FOR THE WARNING HE GAVE.

‘ Hic aliud maius miseris multoque tremendum
Obicitur magis, atque improvida pectora turbat. 200
Laocoön, ductus Neptuno sorte sacerdos,
Sollemnis taurum ingentem mactabat ad aras.
Ecce autem gemini a Tenedo tranquilla per alta—
Horresco referens—immensis orbibus angues
Incumbunt pelago, pariterque ad litora tendunt; 205
Pectora quorum inter fluctus arrecta iubaeque
Sanguineae superant undas, pars cetera pontum
Pone legit sinuatque immensa volumine terga.
Fit sonitus spumante salo; iamque arva tenebant,
Ardentisque oculos suffecti sanguine et igni, 210
Sibila lambebant linguis vibrantibus ora.

74. quo sanguine cretus, § 161, R. xxviii. sit fiducia capto, “what trust he had in giving himself up as a captive,” for Sinon had surrendered himself voluntarily.

75. memoret. The construction is changed, hortamur (ut) memoret, quae

199. hic, “now.” aliud. Supply portentum.

200. turbat, “upsets our heedless minds.”

201. ductus sorte sacerdos Neptuno, “priest for Neptune,” § 146, R. xvii., r. 3.

203. ecce, etc. Aeneas' horror is marked by the distance of angues from gemini.

205. pariter, “side by side.” Virgil's exquisite taste and ear are well shown in this passage by the frequent half-suggested alliterations.

207. pars cetera, “the remainder behind sweeps the sea and pushes in sinuous way their huge backs by its volume”—i. e. the hinder parts guided their crested shoulders.

Diffugimus visu exsangues. Illi agmine certo
 Laocoonta petunt; et primum parva duorum
 Corpora natorum serpens amplexus uterque
 Implicat, et miseros morsu depascitur artus; 215
 Post ipsum, auxilio subeuntem ac tela ferentem,
 Corripiunt, spirisque ligant ingentibus; et iam
 Bis medium amplexi, bis collo squamea circum
 Terga dati, superant capite et cervicibus altis.
 Ille simul manibus tendit divellere nodos, 220
 Perfusus sanie vittas atroque veneno,
 Clamores simul horrendos ad sidera tollit,
 Qualis mugitus, fugit cum saucius aram
 Taurus et incertam excussit cervice securim.
 At gemini lapsu delubra ad summa dracones 225
 Effugiunt saevaeque petunt Tritonidis arcem,
 Sub pedibusque deae clipeique sub orbe teguntur.
 Tum vero tremefacta novus per pectora cunctis
 Insinuat pavor, et scelus expendisse merentem
 Laocoonta ferunt, sacrum qui cuspide robur 230
 Laeserit et tergo sceleratam intorserit hastam.
 Ducendum ad sedes simulacrum orandaque divae
 Numina conclamat.

This terrible omen decides them. The wall is torn down, and the horse is toilfully gotten within the citadel. Four times it stumbled on the gateway. The arms of the concealed Greeks clashed. Cassandra uttered her rejected warnings. The Trojans, exultant and weary, went to rest.(ll. 234-267.) But—

212. exsangues visu, “pale at the sight,” § 186, R. I. B. agmine certo, “in steady course.” Vergil uses military terms throughout.

215. morsu depascitur artus. depasco, in the active is used of the shepherd, in the passive as here it is used of the cattle. Translate, “(each) feeds upon their wretched limbs.”

216. Arrange, post corripiunt ipsum, subeuntem auxilio ac tela ferentem, que ligant spiris ingentibus et iam amplexi bis medium et dati terga squamea bis circum collo, superant capite et cervicibus altis.

221. vittas, accusative of limitation, § 155.

224. excussit, etc., “has shaken off his neck the ill-aimed axe.”

230. ferunt, etc., “they declare that Laocoön deservedly has paid the penalty.”

232. divae, “the powers of the goddess (Minerva) must be entreated.”

HECTOR'S MANES ROUSES AENEAS.

Hector appears to wake him.

'Tempus erat, quo prima quies mortalibus aegris
Incipit et dono divom gratissima serpit.
In somnis, ecce, ante oculos maestissimus Héctor 270
Visus adesse mihi, largosque effundere fletus,
Raptatus bigis, ut quondam, aterque cruento
Pulvere, perque pedes traiectus lora tumentis.
Hei mihi, qualis erat! quantum mutatus ab illo
Hectore, qui redit exuvias indutus Achilli, 275
Vel Danaum Phrygios iaculatus pupibus ignis!
Squalentem barbam et concretos sanguine crinis
Vulneraque illa gerens, quae circum plurima muros
Accepit patrios. Ultro flens ipse videbar
Compellare virum et maestas expromere voces: 280
“O lux Dardaniae, spes o fidissima Teucrum,
Quae tantae tenuere morae? quibus Hector ab oris
Exspectate venis? ut te post multa tuorum
Funera, post varios hominumque urbisque labores,
Defessi aspicimus! quae causa indigna serenos 285
Foedavit vultus? aut cur haec vulnera cerno?”
Ille nihil, nec me quaerentem vana moratur,
Sed graviter gemitus imo de pectore dicens, “Heu fuge, nate dea, teque his,” ait, “eripe flammis.

Hector bids him escape with the Penates, and

Hostis habet muros; ruit alto a culmine Troia. 290

Magna pererrato statues quae denique ponto.” 295

271. visus, etc., “seemed to approach me.”

273. traiectus, etc., “pierced through his swelled feet as to the thongs.” lora, § 155.

278. gerens, “having.” The accusatives depending on it are barbam, crinis, vulnera.

283. exspectate, voc., “O longed-for Hector!” ut, “how,” with ind., aspicimus.

292. hac, etc., “they would have been defended by this right hand.”

293. sacra, etc., “Troy entrusts to thee her sacred (statues) and her Penates.”

delivers them himself.

The din of the clearly.

From the roof
the flames are seen everywhere.

Panthus the priest brings other sacra, with terrible news.

Sic ait, et manibus vittas Vestamque potentem
Aeternumque adytis effert penetralibus ignem.
‘Diverso interea miscentur moenia luctu,
Et magis atque magis, quamquam secreta parentis
Anchisae domus arboribusque obiecta recessit, 300
Clarescunt sonitus, armorumque ingruit horror.
Excutior somno, et summi fastigia tecti
Ascensu supero, atque arrectis auribus adsto :
In segetem veluti cum flamma furentibus austris
Incidit, aut rapidus montano flumine torrens 305
Sternit agros, sternit sata laeta bouisque labores,
Praecipitisque trahit silvas ; stupet inscius alto
Accipiens sonitum saxi de vertice pastor.
Tum vero manifesta fides, Danaumque patescunt
Insidia. Iam Deiphobi dedit ampla ruinam 310
Vulcano exsuperante domus, iam proximus ardet
Ucalegon ; Sigea igni freta lata reluent.
Exoritur clamorque virum clangorque tubarum.
Arma amens capio ; nec sat rationis in armis ; 314
Sed glomerare manum bello et concurrere in arcem
Cum sociis ardent animi ; furor iraque mentem
Praecipitant, pulchrumque mori succurrit in armis.
‘Ecce autem telis Panthus elapsus Achivum,
Panthus Othryades, arcis Phoebique sacerdos,
Sacra manu victosque deos parvumque nepotem 320

296. Vestam, the goddess of the sacred hearth of the city and of each household ; so her fire was aeternum.

298. diverso luctu, “by wailings from different sides.”

301. horror, “terrifying sound of armed men.”

302. excutior, “I shake off sleep from myself,” a deponent use of the passive.

304. furentibus austris. This is to be joined to flamma, as montano flumine is descriptive of rapidus torrens in next line.

307. inscius. He is so amazed that he cannot perceive whence the sound is.

309. fidus, “our confidence” in Simon ; bitterly sarcastic.

310. dedit, “yielded.”

312. Sigea freta, “the broad Sigean roadstead (freta) gleams with the fire.” igni, § 46, iv., ii.

317. pulchrumque mori succurrit in armis, “it rushed into my mind how glorious to die in arms.”

320. sacra. Panthus’ appearance tells that the citadel is lost.

Ipse trahit, cursuque amens ad limina tendit.
 “Quo res summa loco, Panthu? quam prendimus arcem?”
 Vix ea fatus eram, gemitu cum talia reddit:
 “Venis summa dies et ineluctabile tempus
 Dardaniae. Fuimus Troes, fuit Ilium, et ingens 325
 Gloria Teucrorum; ferus omnia Iuppiter Argos
 Transtulit: incensa Danai dominantur in urbe.
 Arduus armatos mediis in moenibus adstans
 Fundit equus, victorque Sinon incendia miscet
 Insultans. Portis alii bipatentibus adsunt, 330
 Milia quot magnis umquam venere Mycenis;
 Obsedere alii telis angusta viarum
 Oppositi; stat ferri acies mucrone corusco
 Stricta, parata neci; vix primi proelia tentant
 Portarum vigiles, et caeco Marte resistunt.” 335
 Talibus Othryadae dictis et numine divom
 In flamas et in arma feror, quo tristis Erinys,
 Quo fremitus vocat et sublatus ad aethera clamor.
 Addunt se socios Ripheus et maximus armis 339
 Epytus, oblati per lunam, Hypanisque Dymasque, Et lateri agglomerant nostro, iuvenisque Coroe-bus,

 Venerat, insano Cassandrae incensus amore,
 Et gener auxilium Priamo Phrygibusque ferebat,
 Infelix, qui non sponsae praecepta furentis 345
 Audierit.

The Greeks
hold the city.

The gathering fugitives are formed for a rescue.

322. quo summa res loco, “in what quarter is it worst? what citadel do we hold?”

326. ferus, “savage, cruel.” Panthus, in his wild despair, uses a daring epithet.

329. miscet, “scatters.”

330. portis, probably the half-open Scaean gates.

333. acies, etc., “the edge of the sword, with flashing point, is drawn.” Note the antithesis between oppositi and stat stricta.

334. neci, “for slaughter.”

337. feror, “I am carried away,” by the fury of the moment, into the flames and the fight.

345. praecepta, “the biddings of his mad bride.” Cassandra was given by Apollo a gift of prophecy, with the curse of never being believed.

Quos ubi confertos audere in proelia vidi,
 Incipio super his : “ Iuvenes, fortissima frustra

 Una salus victis, nullam sperare salutem.”
 Sic animis iuvenum furor additus. Inde, lupi

The horror of the sack.

They succeed in killing some of the Greeks and alarming the others, for a space, by taking the arms of those they slew. This leads to their discomfiture in the end (ll. 370-401), when—

351. excessere omnes di, “all the gods have abandoned us, their shrines and altars being deserted” by them.

352. succurritis, ye aid a burning city.” succurritis takes up the broken thought of certa sequi.

354. una salus victis, nullam sperare salutem. The subject is the inf. and its acc., § 180, R. xliv.

356. improba rabies, “cruel madness of hunger.”

357. catuli, “whelps.”

364. inertia corpora, “motionless corpses.”

367. quondam, etc., “once and again courage returns to the hearts of even the conquered.” victis is really a genitive, § 148, note.

CROEBUS TRIES TO RESCUE CASSANDRA.

with loss.

402. heu nihil, etc., “alas! let no one trust at all to divine justice when the gods are angry,” referring to the sad lot of Cassandra.

409. densis incurrimus armis, “we rush upon the serried arms.”

413. erepta virginis ira, “wrath over the rescued maiden,” objective genitive, § 131, R. v., r. 2.

417. Vergil imitates his own description of the storm in Bk. I., ll. 85, 86.

420. illi, etc., “even they—if we had routed any—appear also.”

423. ora sono discordantia signant, “they mark the different accents,” for the Greeks and Trojans spoke dialects of one tongue.

Confixi a sociis; nec te tua plurima, Panthu,
Labentem pietas nec Apollinis infula texit. 430

Aeneas is parted from his band, with two companions, and pushes for Priam's palace, where the pillagers are gathering. The defence is stout, but vain; the interior is thrown open to the foe. Pyrrhus, glistening like a huge serpent, with his comrades bursts in to ravish and to plunder. (ll. 431-498.)

AENEAS DESCRIBES THE SCENE.

‘Vidi ipse furentem

‘Ecce autem elapsus Pyrrhi de caede Polites,
Unus natorum Priami, per tela, per hostis
Porticibus longis fugit, et vacua atria lustrat,
Saucius. Illum ardens infesto vulnere Pyrrhus 529
Insequitur, iam iamque manu tenet et premit hasta.
Ut tandem ante oculos evasit et ora parentum,
Concidit, ac multo vitam cum sanguine fudit.
Hic Priamus, quamquam in media iam morte tenetur,
Non tamen abstinuit, nec voci iraeque pepercit: 534
“At tibi pro scelere,” exclamat, “pro talibus ausis,
Di, si qua est caelo pietas, quae talia curet,
Persolvant grates dignas et praemia reddant
Debita, qui nati coram me cernere letum
Fecisti et patrios foedasti funere vultus.
At non ille, satum quo te mentiris, Achilles 540
Talis in hostile fuit Priamo; sed iura fidemque
Supplicis erubuit, corpusque exsangue sepulcro
Reddidit Hectoreum, meque in mea regna remisit.”
Sic fatus senior, telumque imbelle sine ictu

He sees Helen crouching by the altar of Vesta, and wrathfully questions whether he ought to slay the cause of this terror and slaughter. Venus appears, and bids him hurry home, for his family are in great danger. The gods are against the city. Neptune, Juno, Pallas, Jove himself, are present, mingling in the fray, and she opens his eyes to see them. Troy, like a huge ash under the woodman's axe, is tottering to its fall. (ll. 567–633.)

AENEAS, with a fleet of twenty ships, sails to Thrace. There, while founding a city, he is warned by the ghost of Polydorus to abandon it. He sails to Delos, where the oracle gives him directions which Anchises interprets to refer to Crete; but he is forced by ill omens to give up the attempt to build there. The sacred Penates give him the true meaning of the oracle, and he steers at once for Italy. In the remainder of the book he relates his various wanderings and adventures.

The third and fourth years are spent in fruitless wandering. Leaving Aenos, they reach the Cyclades. At Ortygia they find in the king, Anius, an old friend, and they worship Apollo, asking for a sign. A voice bids them seek the Ancient Mother. Anchises decides this to be Crete. After the closing sacrifices they set sail for Crete, where they found a second city; but a plague breaks out, and they resolve to question the oracle again. (ll. 69-146.) But—

The Trojans try to slay them, but they prove invulnerable. Celaeno foretells to Aeneas that he will eventually reach Italy, but will not find the city till he shall in utter hunger have eaten the tables. The Trojans leave the foul isle, and, passing through the Ionian Sea to Actium, celebrate games there in honor of Jove; thence they proceed to the city Buthrotus. (ll. 192–293.)

NEWS OF HELENUS AND ANDROMACHE.

- ‘Hic incredibilis rerum fama occupat auris,
 Priamiden Helenum Graias regnare per urbes, 295
 Coniugio Aeacidae Pyrrhi sceptrisque potum,
 Et patrio Andromachen iterum cessisse marito.

Helenus receives and entertains him.

On the third day, when they leave, Helenus, at Aeneas' request, gives him advice. He will finally reach Italy, but after much wandering. He must first visit Sicily and descend to Hades. The omen which will tell him he has reached Italy will be the finding of a white sow with a litter of thirty pigs. On that spot he is to found a city. Helenus warns him that the Greeks hold the southern shores. He must sail farther on. Above all, he must placate Juno. He must consult the Sibyl, who will tell him more of the future. Loading Aeneas with costly gifts, he dismisses him. (ll. 356–505.)

Aeneas passes between Scylla and Charybdis, and sails by several well-known places in Sicily till he reaches Drepanum, where Anchises dies. Here Aeneas ends his recital. (ll. 684-718.)

LIBER IV.

DIDO, now passionately in love with Aeneas, under the advice of her sister Anna has decided to consent to a marriage with the Trojan hero. Juno and Venus devise the hunt by which to accomplish it. Fame reporting it everywhere, Jupiter sends Mercury to order Aeneas to leave Carthage at once for Italy. Dido discovers the preparations Aeneas is making, and a stormy interview takes place. In despair she determines on suicide, and, under pretext of magical rites by which to be rid of her passion, she erects a pyre. When at daybreak she sees the Trojan fleet sailing out of the harbor, after uttering a fearful prophecy of woe upon Aeneas she slays herself upon the pyre.

 Sic effata sinum lacrimis implevit obortis. 30

Anna's advice. Anna refert : ‘O luce magis dilecta sorori,

Dido, now swept away by her love, offers sacrifices and vows to Ceres, Apollo, and, chiefly, to Juno. Then listlessly she attends to her public duties, exhibits her treasures to Aeneas, or wanders in solitary musings. Venus and Juno now agree that the marriage shall take place, and arrange to make it irrevocable. (ll. 54-128.)

 Haec passim dea foeda virum diffundit in ora. 195
 Protinus ad regem cursus detorquet Iarban,
 Incenditque animum dictis atque aggerat iras.

She tells Jarbas of the rumor.

Iarbas, son of Jove, who had claimed Dido, appeals to Jove, who sends Mercury to warn Aeneas that Italy, not Africa, is his fate. Mercury, equipped for his flight, comes to Aeneas as the latter is superintending some new building. (ll. 198–258.)

MERCURY'S UPBRAIDINGS.

- Ut primum alatis tetigit magalia plantis,
 Aenean fundantem arces ac tecta novantem
 Conspicit. Atque illi stellatus iaspide fulva
 Ensis erat, Tyrioque ardebat murice laena
 Demissa ex umeris, dives quae munera Dido
 Fecerat et tenui telas discreverat auro.
 Continuo invadit : ‘Tu nunc Carthaginis altae 265

Fundamenta locas, pulchramque uxorius urbem
 Exstruis? heu regni rerumque oblite tuarum!
 Ipse deum tibi me claro demittit Olympo
 Regnator, caelum et terras qui numine torquet;

 Quid struis? aut qua spe Libycis teris otia terris?
 Si te nulla movet tantarum gloria rerum,
 Nec super ipse tua moliris laude laborem,
 Ascanium surgentem et spes heredis Iuli

 Debentur.' Tali Cyllenius ore locutus
 Mortalis visus medio sermone reliquit,
 Et procul in tenuem ex oculis evanuit auram.

Aeneas' surprise.

At vero Aeneas aspectu obmutuit amens, 279
 Arrectaeque horrore comae, et vox faucibus haesit.

Aeneas hurries forward his preparations. In her grief Dido accuses her sister of abetting her love, and sends her to plead with Aeneas; but he may not yield. Dido resolves on death, and secretly performs solemn rites. She hears Sichaeus calling her, and she dreams of Aeneas. She madly devises many futile plans. Her final resolve is to die. This outwardly calms her, and she asks her sister to aid in erecting a pyre on which to burn, with magic ceremonies, Aeneas' gifts. (ll. 393-503.)

Dido sees the fleet.

Haec ait, et partis animum versabat in omnis, 630
Invisam quaerens quam primum abrumpere lucem.
Tum breviter Barcen nutricem adfata Sychaei,— Namque suam patria antiqua cinis ater habebat,—
'Annam, cara mihi nutrix huc siste sororem;
Dic corpus properet fluviali spargere lympha, 635
Et pecudes secum et monstrata piacula ducat;
Sic veniat; tuque ipsa pia tege tempora vitta.

Sic ait. Illa gradum studio celerabat anili.
 At trepida, et coeptis immanibus effera Dido,
 Sanguineam volvens aciem, maculisque trementis
 Interfusa genas, et pallida morte futura,
 Interiora domus intrumpit limina, et altos 645
 Conscendit furibunda rogos, ensemque recludit
 Dardanium, non hos quaesitum munus in usus.
 Hic, postquam Iliacas vestes notumque cubile
 Conspergit, paulum lacrimis et mente morata,
 Incubuitque toro, dixitque novissima verba : 650
 ‘Dulces exuviae, dum fata deusque sinebat,
 Accipite hanc animam, meque his exsolvite curis.
 Vixi, et, quem dederat cursum fortuna, peregi ;
 Et nunc magna mei sub terras ibit imago.
 Urbem praeclararam statui ; mea moenia vidi ; 655
 Ulta virum, poenas inimico a fratre recepi ;
 Felix, heu nimium felix, si litora tantum
 Numquam Dardaniae tetigissent nostra carinae !
 Dixit, et, os impressa toro, ‘Moriemur inultae— 659
 Sed moriamur,’ ait. ‘Sic, sic iuvat ire sub umbras.
 Hauriat hunc oculis ignem crudelis ab alto
 Dardanus, et nostrae secum ferat omina mortis.’
 Dixerat ; atque illam media inter talia ferro
 Conlapsam aspiciunt comites, ensemque cruento 664
 Spumantem, sparsaque manus. It clamor ad alta
 Atria ; concussam bacchatur Fama per urbem.
 Lamentis gemituque et femineo ululatu
 Tecta fremunt ; resonat magnis plangoribus aether :
 Non aliter, quam si immissis ruat hostibus omnis 669
 Carthago aut antiqua Tyros, flammaeque furentes
 Culmina perque hominum volvantur perque deorum.
 Audiit exanimis, trepidoque exterrita cursu

Quid primum deserta querar? comitemne sororem
Sprevisti moriens? Eadem me ad fata vocasses;
Idem ambas ferro dolor, atque eadem hora tulisset.

His etiam struxi manibus, patriosque vocavi 680
Voce deos, sic te ut posita crudelis abessem?

Exstinxsti te meque, soror, populumque patresque
Sidonios urbemque tuam. Date, vulnera lymphis
Abluam, et, extremus si quis super halitus errat,

Ore legam.’ Sic fata gradus evaserat altos, 685
Semianimemque sinu germanam amplexa fovebat
Cum gemitu, atque atros siccabat veste cruentes.

Illa, gravis oculos conata attollere, rursus
Deficit; infixum stridit sub pectore vulnus.
Ter sese attollens cubitoque adnixa levavit; 690
Ter revoluta toro est, oculisque errantibus alto

Tum Iuno omnipotens, longum miserata dolorem
Difficilisque obitus, Irim demisit Olympo, 694
Quae luctantem animam nexosque resloveret artus.

Nam quia nec fato, merita nec morte peribat,
Sed misera ante diem, subitoque accensa furore,
Nondum illa flavum Proserpina vertice crinem
Abstulerat, Stygioque caput damnaverat Orco.
Ergo Iris croceis per caelum roscida pennis, 700
Mille trahens varios adverso sole colores,
Devolat, et supra caput adstitit: ‘Hunc ego Diti
Sacrum iussa fero, teque isto corpore solvo.’
Sic ait, et dextra crinem secat: omnis et una Dilapsus calor, atque in ventos vita recessit. 705

689. stridit, “gurgles” with the internal bleeding.

702. ego iussa, fero hunc sacrum, Diti, etc. Juno bade Iris, her hand-maiden, to perform the last office—i. e. to cut off a lock of the hair of a dying person (damnare caput Orco)—which belonged to Proserpine. There was a propriety in this, since Dido was Juno's special care.

LIBER V.

Aeneas, leaving Africa, is driven by a second storm to Sicily. There, with the aid of King Acestes, he celebrates the anniversary of Anchises' death with games. Juno, angry that her plots have failed, sends Iris to tempt the Trojan matrons to fire the ships. This they do, and four are burnt. Anchises, in a vision, directs Aeneas to found a city (Acesta) for the useless members of his band, and to sail with the rest for Latium. Venus persuades Neptune to grant favoring winds, to which he consents on condition that one man shall be given him as a ransom for the safety of the fleet, and Somnus throws Palinurus overboard.

 Praevidit, celerique elapsus corpore cessit; 445

 It clamor caelo, primusque accurrit Acestes,
 Aequaevumque ab humo miserans attollit amicum.
 At non tardatus casu neque territus heros
 Acrior ad pugnam redit, ac vim suscitat ira.
 Tum pudor incendit viris et conscientia virtus, 455
 Praecipitemque Daren ardens agit aequore toto,
 Nunc dextra ingeminans ictus, nunc ille sinistra;
 Nec mora, nec requies: quam multa grandine nimbi
 Culminibus crepitant, sic densis ictibus heros
 Creber utraque manu pulsat versatque Darea. 460
 Tum pater Aeneas procedere longius iras
 Et saevire animis Entellum haud passus acerbis;
 Sed finem imposuit pugnae, fessumque Darea
 Eripuit, mulcens dictis, ac talia fatur:
 ‘Infelix, quae tanta animum dementia cepit? 465
 Non viris alias conversaque numina sentis?
 Cede deo.’ Dixitque et proelia voce diremit.

 Et mihi quae fuerint iuvenali in corpore vires, 475
 Et qua servetis revocatum a morte Daret.’
 Dixit, et adversi contra stetit ora iuvenci,
 Qui donum adstabat pugnae, durosque reducta
 Libravit dextra media inter cornua caestus,

 Persolvo; hic victor caestus artemque repono.’

Entellus kills the bull with a blow of his caestus.

Then follows an archery-match, in which Acestes joins. Mnestheus cuts the string that holds the dove which is the mark. Eurotion, Pandarus' brother, kills it escaping, and Acestes, having no mark now, shoots his arrow with such force that it is set on fire by its flight—a strange omen which they accept as propitious. But Juno sends Iris to incite the women of the expedition to burn the fleet. Iris, in the form of Beroe, who was sick, finds the Trojan matrons gathered on the seaside mourning for Anchises. In an artful speech she excites them in a fury to burn the fleet. The rumor reaches the audience. Ascanius rushes up at full speed. At the sound of his voice the matrons, calmed down, slink away. The fire has too strong a hold to be checked, but at Aeneas' prayer a sudden rain-burst quenches the flames. Aeneas, in despair, almost resolves to settle in Sicily, despite the oracle. Acestes advises him to found a city for those he cannot carry off, and gives him land for that purpose. Anchises appears to him in a dream, and bids him not despair, but with a picked band to seek Italy, and first to visit him in the Elysian Fields, where much will be explained to him. Aeneas marks out the ground for another Ilion (citadel) and another Troy (city) in Sicily, and after the solemn feasts of dedication have been held he prepares to set sail. Meantime Venus pleads with Neptune to spare Aeneas. To this Neptune agrees, only one life must be forfeited. For the rest he promises protection. (ll. 604–826.)

L I B E R VI.

AENEAS seeks the Cumæan Sibyl, who interprets for him the oracular response she has delivered to him from Apollo. Returning to the fleet, he finds that his old trumpeter, Misenus, has died during his absence, and, while preparing for the funeral rites, he finds the golden branch which is to purchase the permission of Proserpine to visit the shade of his father in the Elysian Fields. Under the guidance of the Sibyl he crosses the Styx, and meets in Tartarus the manes of many former friends. Finally he reaches the abode of the blessed, where his father is resting. There Anchises, after much discourse, shows him the future of the empire that is to spring from the city.

Aeneas steers for Cumae. They camp on the shore, while Aeneas seeks the Sibyl in the cave which Daedalus had constructed after his escape from Crete, in fulfilment of his vow. The doors were wrought with scenes in which Daedalus had himself some share. They cannot pause to admire them, but pass at once into the presence of the priestess. (l. 1-41.)

Vipereum crinem vittis innexa cruentis.

In medio ramos annosaque brachia pandit
 Ulmus opaca, ingens, quam sedem Somnia vulgo
 Vana tenere ferunt, foliisque sub omnibus haerent.
 Multaque praeterea variarum monstra ferarum, 285
 Centauri in foribus stabulant Scyllaeque biformes
 Et centumgeminus Briareus ac belua Lernae,
 Horrendum stridens, flammisque armata Chimaera,
 Gorgones Harpyiaeque et forma tricorporis umbrae.

The hero is about to draw his sword, but the priestess checks him, for these are but shadows. They draw near the Styx. He sees the souls of all sorts and conditions of men flock like falling leaves to the dreadful river, of whom Charon takes but the few that were buried, as the priestess explains, together with the souls of unburied heroes. (ll. 290–336.)

PALINURUS' SOUL MEETS HIM.

Ecce gubernator sese Palinurus agebat,
 Qui Libyco nuper cursu, dum sidera servat,

286. Centauri, the fabled half-human, half-horse sons of Ixion and Nephele, monsters who inhabited Thessaly. stabulant is very effective. Scyllae, the plural, implies shadowy shapes like Scylla.

287. Briareus, the hundred-handed son of Caelus and Terra, the guard over the Titans in Orcus. belua Lernae, the hydra serpent that Hercules slew.

288. Chimaera, lion-headed, goat-bodied, dragon-tailed, that wasted

Lycia, and was slain by Bellerophon.

589. Gorgones, the three Gorgon sisters, Stheno, Euryale, and Medusa; Perseus slew Medusa, who was mortal. The three noisome Harpies (III. 211), Celaeno, Ocypete, and Aello, daughters of Earth and Neptune, filthy females, winged and clawed like vultures. The triple-bodied shade was Geryon, the triple-bodied king of Gades, in Spain, whose oxen Hercules drove off after slaying him.

The forms that filled the passage.

Exciderat puppi mediis effusus in undis.
 Hunc ubi vix multa maestum cognovit in umbra, 340
 Sic prior adloquitur : ‘Quis te, Palinure, deorum
 Eripuit nobis, medioque sub aequore mersit ?
 Dic age. Namque mihi, fallax haud ante repertus,
 Hoc uno responso animum delusit Apollo,
 Qui fore te ponto incolumem, finesque canebat 345
 Venturum Ausonios. En haec promissa fides est ?
 Ille autem : ‘Neque te Phoebi cortina fefellit,
 Dux Anchisiade, nec me deus aequore mersit.
 Namque gubernaculum multa vi forte revulsum,
 Cui datus haerebam custos cursusque regebam, 350
 Praecipitans traxi mecum. Maria aspera iuro
 Non ullum pro me tantum cepisse timorem,
 Quam tua ne, spoliata armis, excussa magistro,
 Deficeret tantis navis surgentibus undis.
 Tris Notus hibernas immensa per aequora noctes 355
 Vexit me violentus aqua ; vix lumine quarto
 Prospexi Italiam summa sublimis ab unda.
 Paulatim adnabam terrae; iam tuta tenebam,
 Ni gens crudelis madida cum veste gravatum 359
 Prensantemque uncis manibus capita aspera montis
 Ferro invasisset, praedamque ignara putasset.
 Nunc me fluctus habet, versantque in litore venti.
 Quod te per caeli iucundum lumen et auras,
 Per genitorem oro, per spes surgentis Iuli,
 Eripe me his, invicte, malis. Aut tu mihi terram 365
 Inice, namque potes, portusque require Velinos ;
 Aut tu, si qua via est, si quam tibi diva creatrix

343. namque mihi, etc., “for never had I found Apollo deceive my mind before this one response.” mihi, § 148,

r. 2.

347. cortina, “the tripod”—i.e. the oracle; lit., the round dish.

348. deus, any god.

351. maria aspera iuro, “I swear by the rough seas.”

353. armis = helm.

344. navis. Note the participles agreeing with navis, spoliata and excussa.

355. Notus violentus aqua, “the strong south wind with buffeting wave.”

361. ignara, “barbarous,” ignorant of common humanity.

365. terram inice, “bury me.”

Ostendit—neque enim, credo, sine numine divom
 Flumina tanta paras Stygiamque innare paludem—
 Da dextram misero, et tecum me tolle per undas, 370
 Sedibus ut saltem placidis in morte quiescam.’
 Talia fatus erat, coepit cum talia vates :
 Unde haec, o Palinure, tibi tam dira cupido ?
 ‘ Tu Stygias inhumatus aquas amnemque severum
 Eumenidum aspicies, ripamve iniussus adibis ? 375
 Desine fata deum flecti sperare precando.
 Sed cape dicta memor, duri solacia casus.
 Nam tua finitimi, longe lateque per urbes
 Prodigii acti caelestibus, ossa piabunt,
 Et statuent tumulum, et tumulo sollemnia mit-tent, 380
 Aeternumque locus Palinuri nomen habebit.’
 His dictis curae emotae, pulsusque parumper
 Corde dolor tristi ; gaudet cognomine terra.

Charon hesitates to take them over, inquiring who they are, for other living men had crossed over to commit deeds of violence. The priestess reassures him, and exhibits the golden branch. Cerberus begins to bark, but she throws him a sop, and they twain pass within the abode of infant souls and of those who had unjustly died. Minos sits there to judge. There too are women noted for their sorrows or their crimes (ll. 384-449).

DIDO'S SOUL PASSES BEFORE AENEAS.

Inter quas Phoenissa recens a vulnere Dido 450
 Errabat silva in magna ; quam Troïus heros
 Ut primum iuxta stetit agnovitque per umbram
 Obscuram—qualem primo qui surgere mense
 Aut videt, aut vidisse putat per nubila Lunam—

374. tu ! inhumatus ! etc., “you ! yet unburied ! . . . dare to approach unbidden.” The unburied dead could not approach even the banks of the Styx.

377. cape dicta memor, “remember these words.”

378. Arrange, piabunt tua ossa, “pay all sacred rites to.”

453. qualem qui, etc., “when one sees, or thinks he has seen, the moon arise through clouds.”

His protests.

Demisit lacrimas, dulcique adfatus amore est: 455
 ‘Infelix Dido, verus mihi nuntius ergo
 Venerat extinctam, ferroque extrema secutam?
 Funeris heu tibi causa fui? Per sidera iuro,
 Per superos et si qua fides tellure sub ima est,
 Invitus, regina, tua de litore cessi. 460

Sed me iussa deum, quae nunc has ire per umbras,
 Per loca senta situ cogunt noctemque profundam,
 Imperiis egere suis; nec credere quivi
 Hunc tantum tibi me discessu ferre dolorem.
 Siste gradum, teque aspectu ne subtrahe nostro. 465
 Quem fugis? extremum fato, quod te adloquor, hoc est.’

Talibus Aeneas ardentem et torva tuentem
 Lenibat dictis animum, lacrimasque ciebat.

Her scorn.

Illa solo fixos oculos aversa tenebat,
 Nec magis incepto vultum sermone movetur, 470
 Quam si dura silex aut stet Marpesia cautes.
 Tandem corripuit sese, atque inimica refugit
 In nemus umbriferum, coniunx ubi pristinus illi
 Respondet curis aequatque Sychaeus amorem.
 Nec minus Aeneas, casu concussus iniquo, 475
 Prosequitur lacrimans longe, et miseratur euntem.

He meets the souls of many of his former companions-in-arms, who pause to speak with him, but shrink back when the shades of the Greek heroes appear. He sees his loved Deiphobus, who tells him of his death at the sack of the city through Helen. Fiery Tartarus and Phlegethon are seen. The Fury Tisiphone sits by them. Aeneas would visit them, but the priestess tells him it is not permitted. There are the Titans, the Aloidæ, Salmoneus, Tityon, Ixion, and Pirithous, the Lapithæ, and hapless Theseus in punishment for their sins. They now are near (ll. 477-636)

457. extrema, “death.”

 ‘Dicite, felices animae, tuque, optime vates,

 Atque hic responsum paucis ita reddidit heros:
 ‘Nulli certa domus; lucis habitamus opacis,

Aeneas asks the meaning of what he sees there in that blessed valley, and Anchises propounds a metaphysical theory of nature and of the principle of life, and of the career of souls in the under-world, and of metempsychosis (ll. 700–755). He then points out to Aeneas

THE FUTURE KINGS AND HEROES OF ALBA AND OF ROME.

‘Nunc age, Dardaniam prolem quae deinde sequatur

826. illae animae. Anchises points out the souls of Pompey and Caesar.

si (l. 829) = when.

830. aggeribus Alpinis. Caesar drew his legions from their Alpine stations and from Monaco, while Pompey mustered his forces in the East. Pompey married Caesar's daughter, Tullia, to whom he was deeply attached.

Hae tibi erunt artes; pacisque imponere morem,

- Sic pater Anchises, atque haec mirantibus addit:
'Aspice, ut insignis spoliis Marcellus opimis 855
Ingreditur, victorque viros supereminet omnis!
Hic rem Romanam, magno turbante tumultu,
Sistet eques, sternet Poenos Gallumque rebellem,

Atque hic Aeneas; una namque ire videbat 860
Egregium forma iuvenem et fulgentibus armis—

843. parvoque potentem, "mighty in his poverty." The history of these great men should be read in full by the student. It is too long for a note.

846. unus qui nobis. This famous line was one of many which Vergil borrowed from Ennius, the old Roman poet.

847. excident alii refers to the Greeks. Macaulay has finely rendered this line in his ballad of the Prophecy of Capys.

853. parcere subiectis sums up the characteristics of Roman statesmanship.

859. When Vergil recited this passage before Octavia, Marcellus' mother, she presented him with 10,000 sestertia a line for ll. 863-885, nearly $9000.

Sed frons laeta parum, et deiecto lumina vultu :

Filius, anne aliquis magna de stirpe nepotum ? 864
Quis strepitus circa comitum ! quantum instar in ipso !
Sed nox atra caput tristi circumvolat umbra.’
- Tum pater Anchises, lacrimis ingressus obortis :
‘O nate, ingentem luctum ne quaere tuorum ;
Ostendent terris hunc tantum fata, neque ultra
Esse sinent. Nimium vobis Romana propago 870
Visa potens, Superi, propria haec si dona fuissent.
Quantos ille virum magnam Mavortis ad urbem
Campus aget gemitus ! vel quae, Tiberine, videbis
Funera, cum tumulum praeterlabere recentem !
Nec puer Iliaca quisquam de gente Latinos 875
In tantum spe tollet avos, nec Romula quondam Ullo se tantum tellus iactabit alumno.

sage of early death. Vergil skilfully joins the youth with the elder hero.

LIBER VII.

AENEAS, leaving Caieta, lands upon the Laurentine territory. Vergil pauses to sketch the history of the Latin tribes who occupy it. The omen foretold by the Harpy Celaeno is fulfilled by the Trojans, eating the cakes on which, in place of dishes, they put what food they had hastily cooked upon their landing. By this Aeneas knows that his voyaging is ended. He sends an embassy to King Latinus, which is honorably received. Latinus gives him land on which to build a city, and offers his daughter Lavinia in marriage. But Juno sends the Fury Alecto to rouse her mother Amata and her lover Turnus to resist the proposed alliance. The irritation passes all bounds, when the accidental killing of a pet fawn by a Trojan brings on an affray with fatal consequences. King Latinus shrinks from declaring war, and Juno herself throws open the gates of the temple of Janus.

AENEAS'S NURSE, CAIETA, IS BURIED.

TU quoque litoribus nostris, Aeneïa nutrix,
Aeternam moriens famam, Caieta, dedisti ;
Et nunc servat honos sedem tuus, ossaque nomen

At pius exsequiis Aeneas rite solutis, 5

Vergil here relates the mythical history of Latium up to the time of Aeneas' arrival. Latinus, the son of Faunus and the Laurentian nymph Marica, was a descendant of Saturn. He had but one child, Lavinia, much sought after by many wooers, chiefly by Turnus. But the omen of a swarm of bees settling upon a sacred laurel which grew by the Laral altar, was interpreted to mean that she must marry a foreigner. A second omen—she was wrapped in the sacred flame when by her father at the altar—portended war. Latinus consults the oracle of Faunus, which repeats the warning to seek an alien bridegroom. (ll. 37–106.)

AENEAS LANDS.

In their hasty repast

Aeneas primique duces et pulcher Iulus
 Corpora sub ramis deponunt arboris altae,
 Instituuntque dapes, et adorea liba per herbam
 Subiciunt epulis—sic Iuppiter ille monebat— 110
 Et Cereale solum pomis agrestibus augent.
 Consumptis hic forte aliis, ut vertere morsus
 Exiguam in Cererem penuria adegit edendi,
 Et violare manu malisque audacibus orbem
 Fatalis crusti, patulis nec parcere quadris: 115
 ‘Heus, etiam mensas consumimus!’ inquit Iulus;
 Nec plura adulens. Ea vox audita laborum
 Prima tulit finem, primamque loquentis ab ore
 Eripuit pater, ac stupefactus numine pressit.
 Continuo, ‘Salve fatis mihi debita tellus, 120
 Vosque,’ ait, ‘o fidi Troiae salvete Penates:
 Hic domus, haec patria est. Genitor mihi talia namque,
 Nunc repeto, Anchises fatorum arcana reliquit:
 Cum te, nate, fames ignota ad litora vectum
 Accisis coget dapibus consumere mensas, 125
 Tum sperare domos defessus ibique memento
 Prima locare manu molirique aggere tecta.
 Haec erat illa fames; haec nos suprema manebat, the Trojans fulfil the prophecy of Celaeno.

110. monebat, “had prophesied” through Celaeno, the Harpy, III., 256, though Aeneas did not see that he was fulfilling the prophecy.

111. solum means a foundation or support: “so they heaped fruit upon the wheaten (cake, solum) support.”

113. penuria edendi, “scanty supply of food.”

114. malis, “jaws.” The liba which was used as a solum was round, but was marked off in quarters, quadris patulis.

117. nec plura adulens, “nor jesting any further”—i. e. Iulus uttered a passing jest.

119. stupefactus numine pressit, “astonished at the fulfilled prophecy, spake out thus.”

124. vectum belongs to te.

Aeneas takes possession of the soil.

His sacrifices.

On the next morning they explore the place. Aeneas marks out a city, and finds Latinus' capital not far off. Latinus receives a deputation from the strangers, and considers favorably Ilioneus' address, who, proffering alliance, says the fulfilment of a fate brings his master hither, and then lays at Latinus' feet rare gifts. (ll. 146–248.)

266. tyranni, etc., “part of the treaty (pacis) must be that I will have taken the right hand of the king”—i. e. will pledge by joining hands. Note that tetigisse takes its time from erit, § 195. tyranni is rightly used, for Aeneas was an intruder, which was the Greek idea of a tyrant, who might be an admirable ruler.

277. ostro pictisque tapetis, “with purple, and embroidered housings.”

278. monilia, “trappings,” not necklaces, its usual meaning.

282. daedala Circe, etc., “whom crafty Circe obtained from spurious breed, having stolen them from her father (Apollo) by a substituted mare.”

294. num. The following lines well show its use.

297. numina. Compare her similar complaint, I. 49. The first six books tell of her efforts to keep Aeneas from Italy; the last six, her struggle to destroy him in Italy.

299. quin, etc., in fact, “I, hating them, have dared to follow them, driven from their native land, and to oppose the fugitives myself upon every sea.”

304. Mars destroyed the hated Lapithae at the wedding-feast of Hippodamia, by means of the Centaurs. Oeneus, king of Calydon, forgot to honor Diana when sacrificing to all the gods.

Allecto in the guise of Calybe, a priestess of Juno, rouses Turnus. His reply is cool and wary. She throws off her mask and flings a lighted torch at him, whose flame passes into his soul. His whole temper is changed. He summons his militia to arms. Allecto next passes into the Trojan camp. She tempts Ascanius, while hunting, to slay a tame fawn that was floating on a stream. The wounded pet seeks its home to die. On this Allecto rouses the peasantry. The party rescuing Ascanius cause a skirmish, in which the young Almo and the old herdsman Galaesus are killed. Allecto offers to do more mischief, but Juno is content, so she returns to Cocytus. The sight of the slain rouses all the Rutuli, despite Latinus' forebodings and attempts to allay their fury. The irrevocable step is taken. (ll. 406-600.)

Next is given the roll-call of the allies that Turnus summoned against the intruder: Mezentius, the “contemptor Divum,” and his well-loved son Lausus; Aventinus of Heraclid stock; the Tiburtine brothers, Catillus and Coras; Caeculus of Praeneste; Messapus, the “equum domitor.” These led the Aequian, Faliscan, Ciminian, and Fescennian troops (ll. 641–705). LIBER VIII.

TURNUS sends to Diomedes for aid against Aeneas. Aeneas goes himself to Evander, king of Pallanteum, who receives him hospitably and furnishes him with four hundred cavalry under his gallant son, Pallas. Aeneas also secures aid from Agylla, a Tyrrhene city that had expelled its king, Me-zentius, for his cruelty. Meanwhile, Venus persuades Vulcan to forge for Aeneas a suit of armor which rivals in splendid workmanship that which he had forged for Achilles.

5. coniurat, “all Latium forms a common conspiracy.” The muster of these forces is given in Bk. VII.

8. vastant cultoribus agros. vastant shows how complete the levy was.

12. fatis regem, “he says that he is demanded by the Fates (to be) a king,” emphatic assertion.

13. edoceat belongs to qui in l. 10.

25. laquearia, “the panelled ceiling.” sub auras, “upward.” The comparison is a fine one.

27. alituum, poetic form for alitum.

32. senior Tiberinus. The river-god was usually represented as old and wearing horns.

41. concessere deum. Vergil left this verse half finished, probably for revision, but its rhythmic effect is peculiar: cōn cēss | ērē dē | ūm.

54. Pallantēum. The line is spondaic.

55. ducunt, stronger than gerunt.
58. subvectus, “going up the stream.” The word is technically accurate.

Hic mihi magna domus, celsis caput urbibus, exit.' 65

Dixit, deinde laeu Fluvius se condidit alto,
Ima petens; nox Aenean somnusque reliquit.
Surgit, et, aetherii spectans orientia Solis
Lumina, rite cavis undam de flumine palmis
Sustinet, ac talis effundit ad aethera voces: 70
'Nymphae, Laurentes Nymphae, genus amnibus

74. quo te cumque. te by tmesis divides quo cumque, throwing part of its force on lacus: "what lake soever, with whatever fount."

102. Arcas, the Arcadian king, § 248. honorem, “sacrifice.” Cf. I. 49.

104. una, adv.

105. pauper senatus, a suggested contrast to the immense wealth of the Roman senate.

110. audax, “spirited,” gallant, well expressing Pallas’ character.

114. qui genus, § 88, r. 1. qui, adj. (adv.?), is used to cover all co-ordinate questions.

135. cretus, § 161, R. xxviii.

141. idem Atlas. He repeats, and insists upon Atlas as their common ancestor.

144. pepigi = feci. me, me. Aeneas earnestly pleads that he has come himself to ask for aid.

Insequitur ; nos si pellant, nihil afore credunt,
 Quin omnem Hesperiam penitus sua sub iuga mittant,
 Et mare quod supra, teneant, quodque adluit infra.
 Accipe daque fidem. Sunt nobis fortia bello 150
 Pectora, sunt animi et rebus spectata iuventus.
 Dixerat Aeneas. Ille os oculosque loquentis
 Iamdudum et totum lustrabat lumine corpus.
 Tum sic pauca refert : ‘ Ut te, fortissime Teucrum, Evander's
welcome. Accipio agnoscoque libens ! ut verba parentis 155
 Et vocem Anchisae magni vultumque recordor !
 Nam memini Hesionae visentem regna sororis

 Protinus Arcadiae gelidos invisere finis.
 Tum mihi prima genas vestibat flore iuventa ; 160
 Mirabarque duces Teucros, mirabar et ipsum
 Laomedontiaden ; sed cunctis altior ibat
 Anchises. Mihi mens iuvenali ardebat amore
 Compellare virum, et dextrae coniungere dextram ;
 Accessi, et cupidus Phenei sub moenia duxi. 165
 Ille mihi insignem pharetram Lyciasque sagittas
 Discedens chlamydemque auro dedit intertextam,
 Frenaque bina, meus quae nunc habet, aurea, Pallas.
 Ergo et, quam petitis, iuncta est mihi foedere dextra,

 Annua, quae differre nefas, celebrate faventes
 Nobiscum, et iam nunc sociorum adsuescite mensis.’

The interrupted feast is resumed with the new guests. At its close Evander explains that it is in honor of Hercules slaying Cacus, and,

149. mare quod supra, quod infra, both the Adriatic and the Tyrrhenic seas.

151. spectata rebus, sc. bellicis, “trained in war.”

156. For recordor and memini, with accusative for genitive, see § 135 (b), remark.

169. quam, the right hand, “which you seek.” Evander at once grants the requested alliance, and he courteously invites Aeneas to the sacrificial feast.

173. quae differre nefas, “to defer which were impiety.”

 Dona ferunt, cumulantque oneratis lancibus aras.
 Tum Salii ad cantus incensa altaria circum 285
 Populeis adsunt evincti tempora ramis,
 Hic iuvenum chorus, ille senum ; qui carmine laudes
 Herculeas et facta ferunt : ut prima novercae
 Monstra manu geminosque premens eliserit anguis ;
 Ut bello egregias idem disiecerit urbes, 290
 Troiamque Oechaliamque ; ut duros mille labores,
 Rege sub Eurystheo fatis Iunonis iniquae
 Pertulerit. ‘Tu nubigenas, invicte, bimembris,
 Hylaeumque Pholumque, manu, tu Cresia mactas
 Prodigia et vastum Nemeae sub rupe leonem. 295
 Te Stygii tremuere lacus, te ianitor Orci
 Ossa super recubans antro semesa cruento ;
 Nec te ullae facies, non terruit ipse Typhoeus,
 Arduus arma tenens ; non te rationis egentem
 Lernaeus turba capitum circumstetit anguis. 300
 Salve, vera Iovis proles, decus addite divis,
 Et nos et tua dexter adi pede sacra secundo.’

Hymn to Hercules.

283. mensae secundae, dat., “to the sacred tables.” secundae=propitious, sacred. Cf. I. 302.

284. lancibus, “with heaped-up platters.” The distinction between the ara for fruits and the altaria for victims is more clearly kept here than elsewhere. Cf. Ecl. I., 43; Aen. IV., 453.

288. novercae, Juno, because she attempted to destroy the infant Hercules by sending the two serpents, prima monstra.

293. nubigenas bimembris. The Centaurs, the children of Ixion and a cloud. Hercules slew Hylaeus and Pholus.

294. Cresia = Cretan, from a Greek form, Cres. It was the fire-breathing bull. mactas, “art slaying.” Note the vivid action of the present tense.

301. addite, voc.

302. dexter, also vocative. dexter adi, “be propitious.”

Venus persuades her husband, Vulcan, to forge armor for her son. He sets to work the Cyclops, who were busy forging Jove's thunderbolts in their forges under the Lipari Islands. Evander and his guest have a confidential conversation early upon the morning following Aeneas' arrival. He explains his political difficulties and the revolt of the Etrurians against the tyrannies of Mezentius. They had offered the government to Evander, but now, as Pallas is too young, Aeneas ought to become their leader. As Aeneas is in doubt, a sudden roll of thunder in the clear sky and a long echoing trumpet-blast tell him that he is bidden from Olympus itself to take this leadership. Again they sacrifice to Hercules, and with this pact Evander raises his troops in aid of the Trojans. He parts with his gallant son with many forebodings from the wrath of Mezentius, and with a pathetic prayer to the gods to spare him. (ll. 369–584.)

LIBER IX.

WHILE Aeneas is absent upon the embassy, Turnus with his Rutuli attacks his camp and tries to burn the ships. These, at the prayer of Cybele, are transformed by Jupiter into sea-nymphs. At night Turnus sets a watch to prevent a sally by the Trojans. Nisus and Euryalus volunteer to carry word of their danger to Aeneas. After leaving the camp they stop to kill the sleeping Latins as they are passing by their bivouac. The delay is fatal; they are captured and slain. On the next morning Turnus fiercely attacks the camp. He succeeds in getting within the gates, but, being alone, is forced to retreat.

ATQUE, ea diversa penitus dum parte geruntur,
 Iris tells Turnus that Aeneas is absent. Irim de caelo misit Saturnia Iuno Audacem ad Turnum. Luco tum forte parentis Pilumnus Turnus sacrata valle sedebat.
 Ad quem sic roseo Thaumantias ore locuta est : 5
 ‘Turne, quod optanti divom promittere nemo
 Auderet, volvenda dies, en, attulit ultro.
 Aeneas, urbe et sociis et classe relictus,
 Sceptra Palatini sedemque petit Euandri.
 Nec satis : extremas Corythi penetravit ad urbes, 10
 Lydorumque manum collectos armat agrestis.
 Quid dubitas? nunc tempus equos, nunc poscere currus.
 Rumpe moras omnis et turbata arripe castra.’
 Dixit, et in caelum paribus se sustulit alis,
 Ingentemque fuga secuit sub nubibus arcum. 15
 Agnovit iuvenis, duplicitisque ad sidera palmas
 Sustulit, ac tali fugientem est voce secutus :
 ‘Iri, decus caeli, quis te mihi nubibus actam
 Detulit in terras? unde haec tam clara repente
 Tempestas? medium video discedere caelum, 20
 Palantisque polo stellas. Sequor omina tanta, Quisquis in arma vocas.’ Et sic effatus ad undam burn the ships.

Turnus is about to apply the torch, when Cybele beseeches her son, Jupiter, to aid her in saving them, for they are built of pine sacred to her. Jupiter responds, "Could there be a greater request than that perishable ships should become imperishable? Let them become sea-nymphs." So they glide, transformed, into the wave at Cybele's bidding. All the chiefs but Turnus are alarmed. He boldly defies the Trojans, and will meet any fate to hold his own, confident in the justice of his quarrel. Let them gain what allies they may, he will attack the next morning, and bids the chiefs prepare. (ll. 77-167.)

The troops come to the camp and find the havoc Nisus and Euryalus have made. Fixing their heads on spears, they exhibit them before the walls. Euryalus' mother hears the sad tidings, and, dropping her spindle, she rushes to the wall, where she sees the horrid sight. With touching words she mourns her loss and prays for death. The attack begins in fierce earnest, with missiles of all sorts. Mezentius and Messapus command in one part. Turnus leads the main assault upon the tower, which he succeeds in firing. In its fall it destroys several men. Of those outside, Turnus slays Lycus; Helenor dies fighting in a crowd. Men fall fast on either side. Ascanius slays the shouting Numanus with a well-aimed arrow, for which Apollo applauds him, and, under the guise of the ancient armor-bearer Butes, tells him so. The assault and defence are carried on with energy on either side (ll. 450–671), till inquit.

Quos alios muros, quae iam ultra moenia habetis?

 Sufficere; aëriam caelo nam Iuppiter Irim
 Demisit, germanae haud mollia iussa ferentem,
 Ni Turnus cedat Teucrorum moenibus altis. 805
 Ergo nec clipeo iuvenis subsistere tantum
 Nec dextra valet: innectis sic undique telis
 Obruitur. Strepit adsiduo cava tempora circum

JUPITER exhorts the gods in council to harmony, but Venus and Juno, in bitter speeches, defend each her hero. Jupiter finally forbids any interference: Aeneas and Turnus must fulfil their destined fate. The Rutuli again attack the Roman camp. Aeneas, as he is returning with a flotilla of boats, is met and warned by the nymphs of the danger to his forces. He hastens on the landing, and is bravely opposed by the Rutuli. Pallas is slain and spoiled of his armor by Turnus. Aeneas avenges his death on many Rutuli. Ascanius succeeds in joining his father, and Juno, fearing for Turnus, draws him out of the battle in pursuit of a phantom image of Aeneas. Mezentius, in Turnus’ place, restores the fight, but in his valorous onset is wounded by Aeneas. His retreat is covered by his son Lausus, whom Aeneas kills. Mezentius returns to avenge his son, and is himself slain by the hero.

PANDITUR interea domus omnipotentis Olympi,

Jupiter summons a council of the gods.

Sidereum in sedem, terras unde arduus omnis
 Castraque Dardanidum aspectat populosque Latinos.

 Tum certare odiis, tum res rapuisse licebit.
 Nunc sinite; et placitum laeti componite foedus.’ 15
 Iuppiter haec paucis; at non Venus aurea contra Pauca refert:
 ‘O Pater, o hominum rerumque aeterna potestas!
 Namque aliud quid sit, quod iam implorare queamus?

9. contra vetitum, “against my prohibition,” supine. aut hos, aut hos, “either side.”

23. proelia is the subject of miscent.

26. obsidione, “will you never let them be relieved of a siege?”

29. Tydides, “and Diomedes, from Aetolian Arpi, again attacks the Trojans.” Diomedes’ father was of Aetolia. restant, “await her.” Diomedes wounded Venus at Troy.

30. demoror, “I thy daughter await the attack of mortal weapons.”

32. luant peccata, “let them pay for their sins.”

Jupiter's sentence.

The battle rages around the gates; the losses to the Trojans are irreparable, for they have none to replace the fallen. Aeneas, knowing what foes beleaguer his new city, hurries all night down stream with his little fleet. The transformed nymphs meet him and tell him of their change, and urge him to speed to the rescue. Aeneas does so, and as his fleet draws near the place of landing they prepare to meet (ll. 118-275)—

102. solo, “earth trembled in its depths.”

107. secat, “what hope either (hero) may carve out for himself.”

108. fuat = sit, from an old fuo; hence fui, etc.

110. monitisque sinistris, by mistaken warning (of Cassandra). Cf. l. 68.

111. exorsa (exordior), “their own undertaking must bring to each toil and success.”

113. Stygii per flumina, Jupiter's most solemn oath.

117. caelicolae. The gods escort him to the portals, as the senators the consul.

TURNUS, WHO CONTESTS THEIR LANDING.

The fierce strife.

The Arcadian cavalry, unaccustomed to infantry fighting, begin to give way, when Pallas rallies them with brave words and shows them how to fight. As a shepherd burning a field sees the flames sweeping as he wishes, so Pallas gladly sees his troops charge home. Lausus rushes forward to Aeneas hears of Pallas' death, and, remembering Pallas' cordial welcome, wishes to avenge him. He captures four brothers to serve as sacrifices at the funeral rites, and then slays all he can reach while he is searching for Turnus, among them the two brothers Liger and Lucagus. Juno is summoned by Jupiter to keep out of the fray. She pleads that now at least Turnus be kept out of danger. She lures him from the battle to pursue a phantom shape of Aeneas into a ship, and then she bears him to his own city, maddened with disappointment and ready to commit suicide. But Mezentius keeps the Rutulians up to the fight by doing many deeds of valor and pushing the Trojans very hard (ll. 510-754) till

L I B E R X I .

AENEAS raises a trophy in honor of his victory. He sends, with all marks of sorrow, the body of the noble Pallas to King Evander. A truce is agreed upon between the Trojans and the Latins for the burial of their dead. The embassy to Diomedes returns unsuccessful, and a sharp debate follows between Venulus, the chief ambassador, and Turnus. Latinus has already proposed terms of peace to Aeneas. But Aeneas, doubtful of their value, determines to surprise Laurentum. Turnus skilfully plans a counter-ambuscade, but the course of the fight is in another direction. Camilla leads her Volscian cavalry in a brilliant attack, and is shot by Arruns. Disheartened by this loss, the Rutuli give way, and Aeneas advances to storm the city. Turnus hurries back from his ambuscade, but night delays the coming battle.

The Latins ask for a truce to bury their dead, and Aeneas makes a conciliatory address, to which Drances replies, throwing the blame on Turnus. Rumor brings to Evander the sad news of his son's fall. The sorrowing king receives the body with embraces, tears, and mournful words. On the morrow the fullest funeral ceremonies are celebrated. Meantime the messengers bring to Latinus Diomedes' reply. Venulus reports the king's dissuasive words: “At what a cost the heroes won Troy!” He had himself even wounded a goddess: was it worth the price? Peace is far better with a foreordained hero. Latinus speaks to the same effect. He will cede to the Trojans a tract in his realm, or will furnish them a fleet to take them to other shores. Drances too speaks in like strain, and appeals to Turnus to withdraw, but his last words appear so sarcastic that (ll. 100-375) ●

389. imus, “let us march against them.”

394. cum stirpe, “root and branch,” for the stirps—Evander—was now childless, since Pallas was dead.

399. cane, talia capiti Dardanio, “chant such a song.”

402. contra premere, “or on the other hand to depreciate,” etc.

403. Turnus turns from Drances to the senate with a taunt to them, and accuses Drances of lying and plotting as well as of cowardice.

 Devovi. “Solum Aeneas vocat.” Et vocet oro;
 Nec Drances potius, sive est haec ira deorum,
 Morte luat, sive est virtus et gloria, tollat.’

Meanwhile the Trojans are preparing for an assault upon the city. The alarm is given. Turnus himself arranges the defence. Camilla volunteers to attack the advancing forces, and Turnus shows her his plan to attack the Trojan rear, and orders the troops into position. (ll. 445–531.)

DIANA'S LAMENT OVER CAMILLA'S DOOM.

Camilla's parentage.

Velocem interea superis in sedibus Opim,
 Unam ex virginibus sociis sacraque caterva,
 Compellabat et has tristis Latonia voces
 Ore dabat: ‘Graditur bellum ad crudele Camilla, 535
 O virgo, et nostris nequ quam cingitur armis,
 Cara mihi ante alias. Neque enim novus iste Diana
 Venit amor, subitaque animum dulcedine movit.
 Pulsus ob invidiam regno virisque superbias
 Priverno antiqua Metabus cum excederet urbe, 540
 Infantem fugiens media inter proelia belli
 Sustulit exsilio comitem, matrisque vocavit
 Nomine Casmillae, mutata parte, Camillam.
 Ipse sinu pae se portans iuga longa petebat 544
 Solorum nemorum; tela undique saeva premebant,

436. exosa, hating. “Victory has not so hated these hands that she flees.”

440. ille = Aeneas, subject of praestet and of induat.

443. “Let not Drances, if it be the wrath of the gods, suffer; nor, if it be glory and manhood, let him win it.”

539. invidiam, jealousy.

542. exsilio, dat. for gen., a Greek construction.

543. Casmillus, -a, a Pelasgic word which the Etruscans preserved, meaning a child whose parents were both alive, and who was selected to serve in sacred rites.

Metabus'

 Tardatur, caroque oneri timet. Omnia secum 550
 Versanti subito vix haec sententia sedit:
 Telum immane, manu valida quod forte gerebat
 Bellator, solidum nodis et robore cocto,
 Huic natam, libro et silvestri subere clausam, 554
 Implicat, atque habilem mediae circumligat hastae;
 Quam dextra ingenti librans ita ad aethera fatur:
 “Alma, tibi hanc, nemorum cultrix, Latonia virgo,
 Ipse pater famulam voveo; tua prima per auras
 Tela tenens supplex hostem fugit. Accipe, testor,
 Diva tuam, quae nunc dubiis committitur auris.” 560
 Dixit, et adducto contortum hostile lacerto
 Immittit: sonuere undae; rapidum super amnem
 Infelix fugit in iaculo stridente Camilla.
 At Metabus, magna propius iam urgente caterva,
 Dat sese fluvio, atque hastam cum virgine victor 565
 Gramineo donum Triviae de caespite vellit.
 Non illum tectis ullae, non moenibus urbes

551. Arrange, subito haec sententia vix sedit versanti omnia secum. vix marks the scanty time given him to carry out the plan.

554. huic, to this. libro et silvestri subere, “in the bark of the wild cork.”

561. adducto lacerto describes the sudden swing of his arm drawn back to make the cast. Cf. V. 141.

566. donum Triviae, the votive offering to Diana. Trivia. Diana was often invoked by howlings (IV. 609) at a point where three paths met; hence this name.

569. Arrange, et exegit aerum pastorum solis montibus.

573. primis plantis well describes the first firm pressure of the feet of the tottering infant.

 Multae illam frustra Tyrrhena per oppida matres
 Optavere nurum; sola contenta Diana
 Aeternum telorum et virginitatis amorem
 Intemerata colit. Velle haud correpta fuisse
 Militia tali, conata laccessere Teucros: 585
 Cara mihi comitumque foret nunc una mearum.

her slayer.
 Verum age, quandoquidem fatis urgetur acerbis,
 Labere, Nympha, polo, finisque invise Latinos,
 Tristis ubi infausto committitur omine pugna. 589
 Haec cape, et ultricem pharetra deprome sagittam:
 Hac, quicumque sacrum violarit vulnere corpus,
 Tros Italusve, mihi pariter det sanguine poenas.
 Post ego nube cava miserandae corpus et arma
 Inspoliata feram tumulo, patriaeque reponam.
 Dixit; at illa levis caeli delapsa per auras 595
 Insonuit, nigro circumdata turbine corpus.

The Volscians meet the Trojans with a fierce onset, and Camilla in the wild delight of battle charges hither and thither with her virgin body-guard, slaying many noble Trojans and Etruscans. Tarchon, strengthened by Jupiter, rallies the wavering Etruscans, and, like an eagle or a dragon, swoops down upon the struggling Venulus. (ll. 597-758.) In the midst of the fray Chloreus the priest.

Camilla, attracted by his gleaming harness, pursues him.

Arruns' empty prayer.

763. lustrat vestigia, “follows her footsteps.”

767. improbus, “evil-minded.” Note its emphatic place as the dactyl at the close of the verse.

771. in plumam, “like feathers.”

773. cornu is simply “bow.” arcus with aureus to describe it is the right word.

775. cassida, for cassis, 1st decl., “helmet.”

776. fulvo auro, “with a yellow golden clasp.”

777. pictus acu tunicas, etc., the pass. part. with the accusative of limitation, “embroidered as to his tunics,” etc.

781. caeca, to show her eagerness.

782. ardebat per agmen, “she rushed through the ranks.”

783. tempore capto, “seizing the opportunity.”

786. pineus ardor acervo, “for whom the flaming pine is fed from the heap” of wood.

Pascitur, et medium freti pietate per ignem
 Cultores multa premissus vestigia pruna,
 Da, Pater, hoc nostris aboleri dedecus armis,
 Omnipotens. Non exuvias pulsaeve tropaeum 790
 Virginis, aut spolia ulla peto; mihi cetera laudem
 Facta ferent; haec dira meo dum vulnere pestis
 Pulsa cadat, patrias remeabo inglorius urbes.
 Audiit et voti Phoebus succedere partem
 Mente dedit, partem volucris dispersit in auras: 795
 Sterneret ut subita turbatam morte Camillam,
 Adnuit oranti; reducem ut patria alta videret,
 Non dedit; inque notos vocem vertere procellae.
 Ergo, ubi missa manu sonitum dedit hasta per auras,
 Converte animos acris oculosque tulere 800
 Cuncti ad reginam Volsci. Nihil ipsa nec aurae
 Nec sonitus memor aut venientis ab aethere teli,
 Hasta sub exsertam donec perlata papillam
 Haesit, virgineumque alte bibt acta cruem. 804
 Concurrunt trepidae comites, dominamque ruentem
 Suscipiunt. Fugit ante omnis exterritus Arruns,
 Laetitia mixtoque metu, nec iam amplius hastae
 Credere, nec telis occurrere virginis audet.
 Ac velut ille, prius quam tela inimica sequantur,
 Continuo in montis sese avius abdidit altos 810
 Occiso pastore lupus magnove iuvenco,
 Conscius audacis facti, caudamque remulcens
 Subiecit pavitantem utero, silvasque petivit:
 Haud secus ex oculis se turbidus abstulit Arruns,
 Contentusque fuga mediis se immiscuit armis. 815
 Illa manu moriens telum trahit; ossa sed inter

Camilla falls.

Arruns flees.

788. multā prunā. Part of their worship was to walk mid live coals.

793. remeabo. Probably Arruns had been banished, and now seeks to be restored because of this act, asking for no honors, so inglorius.

795. dedit mente, “consented.”

798. in notos, “the winds,” from Notus, the south wind.

800. Volsci is the subject.

804. haesit, “pierced and clung to.”

806. Arruns flees in dread, lest he may not return home safely, now that the deed is done.

Ferreus ad costas alto stat vulnere mucro.
 Labitur exsanguis; labuntur frigida leto
 Lumina; purpureus quondam color ora reliquit.
 Tum sic exspirans Accam, ex aequalibus unam, 820
 Adloquitur; fida ante alias quae sola Camillae, Quicum partiri curas; atque haec ita fatur:
 'Hactenus, Acca soror, potui; nunc vulnus acerbum
 Conficit, et tenebris nigrescunt omnia circum.
 Effuge et haec Turno mandata novissima perfer: 825
 Succedat pugnae Troianosque arceat urbe.
 Iamque vale.' Simul his dictis linquebat habenas,
 Ad terram non sponte fluens. Tum frigida toto
 Paulatim exsolvit se corpore, lentaque colla
 Et captum leto posuit caput, arma relinquens, 830
 Vitaque cum gemitu fugit indignata sub umbras.
 Tum vero immensus surgens ferit aurea clamor
 Sidera; deiecta crudescit pugna Camilla;
 Incurrunt densi simul omnis copia Teucrum
 Tyrrhenique duces Euandrique Arcades alae. 835

Camilla's last message to Turnus.

Arruns escapes, indeed, from the field, but is slain in the mountains by Opis. (ll. 836-867.)

THE TROJANS NOW ASSAULT THE WALLS.

Prima fugit, domina amissa, levis ala Camillae;
 Turbati fugiunt Rutuli, fugit acer Atinas,
 Disiectique duces desolatique manipli 870
 Tuta petunt, et equis aversi ad moenia tendunt.
 Nec quisquam instantis Teucros letumque ferentis
 Sustentare valet telis, aut sistere contra;
 Sed laxos referunt umeris languentibus arcus, Quadrupedumque putrem cursu quatit ungula cam-
 pum. 875
 Volvitur ad muros caligine turbidus atra

822. quicum partiri curas. Supply solebat. quicum, old abl. form.

875. quadrupedumque. Vergil had which he has borrowed from En-already used this well-known line, nius.

Pulvis, et e speculis percussae pectora matres
 Femineum clamorem ad caeli sidera tollunt.
 Qui cursu portas primi intrupere patentis,
 Hos inimica super mixto premit agmine turba; 880
 Nec miseram effugient mortem, sed limine in ipso,
 Moenibus in patriis atque inter tuta domorum
 Confixi exspirant animas. Pars claudere portas;
 Nec sociis aperire viam, nec moenibus audent
 Accipere orantis; oriturque miserrima caedes 885
 Defendantum armis aditus, inque arma ruentum.
 Exclusi, ante oculos lacrimantumque ora parentum,
 Pars in praecipitis fossas urgente ruina
 Volvitur, immissis pars caeca et concita frenis
 Arietat in portas et duros obice postis. 890
 Ipsae de muris summo certamine matres—
 Monstrat amor verus patriae—ut videre Camillam,
 Tela manu trepidae iaciunt, ac robore duro
 Stipitibus ferrum sudibusque imitantur obustis
 Praecipites, primaeque mori pro moenibus ardent. 895

Turnus, astounded by the news,

seeks Aeneas.

Interea Turnum in silvis saevissimus implet
 Nuntius, et iuveni ingentem fert Acca tumultum:
 Deletas Volscorum acies, cecidisse Camillam,
 Ingruere infenos hostis, et Marte secundo
 Omnia corripuisse, metum iam ad moenia ferri. 900
 Ille furens—et saeva Iovis sic numina poscunt—
 Deserit obsessos collis, nemora aspera linquit.
 Vix e conspectu exierat campumque tenebat
 Cum pater Aeneas, saltus ingressus apertos,
 Exsuperatque iugum silvae evadit opaca. 905
 Sic ambo ad muros rapidi totoque feruntur

877. e speculis, “from their watch-towers”—i. e. on the walls.

882. inter tuta domorum, “within the protection of their homes.” tuta, neuter acc., § 128, r. 6.

888. in praecipitis fossas, “in the deep (steep-sided) moat.”

890. arietat, “batters.”

892. ut videre Camillam, “as they had seen Camilla do,” perf. for plup.

896. implet, “fills” Turnus with the terrible news.

901. et saeva. This line explains why Turnus was drawn from his ambush.

Agmine, nec longis inter se passibus absunt :
 Ac simul Aeneas fumantis pulvere campos
 Prospexit longe Laurentiaque agmina vidit,
 Et saevum Aenean agnovit Turnus in armis 910
 Adventumque pedum flatusque audivit equorum.
 Continuoque ineant pugnas et proelia tentent,
 Ni roseus fessos iam gurgite Phoebus Hibero
 Tingat equos noctemque die labente reducat.
 Considunt castris ante urbem et moenia vallant. 915

911. flatusque, “the snorting of the steeds.”

LIBER XII.

THE Latins, now twice defeated, remember that Turnus had offered to challenge Aeneas to single combat. Turnus yields to the general desire. The challenge is eagerly accepted by Aeneas. But in the midst of the ceremonies of arranging for the truce and for the terms of the combat, Juno incites the augur Tolumnus to shoot an arrow into a knot of Trojan youths. It brings on an affray in which Aeneas is wounded. Turnus pushes the Trojans sorely, when Aeneas, healed by the intervention of Venus, reappears. Turnus is driven off the ground by his sister Juturna, who impersonates his charioteer. Queen Amata, despairing of rescue for the city, commits suicide. Turnus, now undeceived, returns to the field, and encounters Aeneas, who slays him.

TURNUS PROPOSES A TRUCE AND THE DUEL.

TURNUS ut infractos adverso Marte Latinos
 Defecisse videt, sua nunc promissa reposci,
 Se signari oculis, ultiro implacabilis ardet,
 Attollitque animos. Poenorū qualis in arvis,
 Saucius ille gravi venantum vulnere pectus, 5
 Tum demum movet arma leo, gaudetque comantis
 Excutiens cervice toros, fixumque latronis
 Impavidus frangit telum, et fremit ore cruento :

Like a wounded lion, Turnus prepares for the combat.

1. adverso Marte, for two battles had already been lost.

2. reposci, “now his pledges were demanded back of him.”

Haud secus accenso glisceit violentia Turno.
 Tum sic adfatur regem, atque ita turbidus infit: 10
 ‘Nulla mora in Turno; nihil est, quod dicta retractent
 Ignavi Aeneadae, nec, quae pepigere, recusent.
 Congredior. Fer sacra, pater, et concipe foedus.
 Aut hac Dardanium dextra sub Tartara mittam,
 Desertorem Asiae—sedeant spectentque Latini— 15
 Et solus ferro crimen commune refellam;
 Aut habeat victos, cedat Lavinia coniunx.’

Olli sedato respondit corde Latinus:
 ‘O praestans animi iuvenis, quantum ipse feroci
 Virtute exsuperas, tanto me impensius aequum est 20
 Consulere, atque omnis metuentem expendere casus.
 Sunt tibi regna patris Dauni, sunt oppida capta Multa manu; nec non aurumque animusque Latino
 est.

Sunt aliae innuptae Latio et Laurentibus agris, 24
 Nec genus indecores. Sine me haec haud mollia fatu Sublatis aperire dolis; simul hoc animo hauri:
 Me natam nulli veterum sociare procorum
 Fas erat, idque omnes divique hominesque caneabant.
 Victus amore tui, cognato sanguine victus,
 Coniugis et maestae lacrimis, vincla omnia rupi: 30
 Promissam eripui genero; arma impia sumpsi.
 Ex illo qui me casus, quae, Turne, sequantur
 Bella, vides, quantos primus patiare labores.
 Bis magna victi pugna vix urbe tuemur
 Spes Italas; recalent nostro Thybrina fluenta 35

He offers to fight.

Latinus tries to dissuade him from the duel in order to effect peace.

10. turbidus. It well describes Turnus's manner—rude through haste, X. 648.

11. nihil est, quod, etc., “it is nothing that the cowardly Trojans take back their words.”

14. mittam. Notice the subjunctives (§ 189, r. 1) throughout the sentence.

19. ipse, “you.” Emphatic. Cf. ille, l. 5.

25. nec genus indecores, “nor unfit (for you) by birth.” genus, accusative of limitation. sine, imperative.

27. veterum procorum, “of her former suitors.”

30. vincla omnia rupi, “I have broken all bonds” of good faith and religion. Cf. fas, l. 28.

33. primus (tu) patiare quantos labores, “you first and foremost,” etc.

Sanguine adhuc, campique ingentes ossibus albent.
 Quo referor totiens? quae mentem insania mutat?
 Si Turno extincto socios sum adscire paratus,
 Cur non incolumi potius certamina tollo?
 Quid consanguinei Rutuli; quid cetera dicet 40
 Italia, ad mortem si te—Fors dicta refutet!—
 Prodiderim, natam et conubia nostra petentem?
 Respice res bello varias; miserere parentis
 Longaevi, quem nunc maestum patria Ardea longe
 Dividit.' Haudquaquam dictis violentia Turni 45
 Flectitur; exsuperat magis, aegrescitque medendo.
 Ut primum fari potuit, sic institit ore:
 'Quam pro me curam geris, hanc precor, optime,
 pro me

Turnus demands the combat.

Deponas, letumque sinas pro laude pacisci.
 Et nos tela, pater, ferrumque haud debile dextra 50
 Spargimus; et nostro sequitur de vulnere sanguis.
 Longe illi dea mater erit, quae nube fugacem
 Feminea tegat, et vanis sese occulat umbris.'

At regina, nova pugnae conterrita sorte,
 Flebat, et ardentem generum moritura tenebat: 55
 'Turne, per has ego te lacrimas, per si quis Amatae
 Tangit honos animum—spes tu nunc una, senectae
 Tu requies miserae; decus imperiumque Latini
 Te penes; in te omnis domus inclinata recumbit—
 Unum oro: desiste manum committere Teucris. 60
 Qui te cumque manent isto certamine casus,
 Et me, Turne, manent; simul haec invisa relinquam

Amata's pleadings.

37. quo referor totiens? "Why do I draw back so often" from the peace I advise?

39. incolumi refers to Turno.

41. Fors dicta refutet. This was something more than a mere wish; it was intended to avert ill results from the words to be said.

43. res bello varias, "the various risks in war," §162, R. miserere takes the genitive, §138 (d).

49. pacisci, "that I exchange death for glory." Supply me.

53. feminea. There is a sneer at Venus, who covered Aeneas with a cloud to save him from Diomedes, and sese refers to the wound she received from the Greek hero.

58. decus, "the dignity." Cf. decus, "a noble gift," l. 83.

Lavinia, present, blushes.

Lumina, nec generum Aenean captiva videobo.'

Accepit vocem lacrimis Lavinia matris

Flagrantis perfusa genas, cui plurimus ignem 65

Subiecit rubor, et calefacta per ora cucurrit.

Indum sanguineo veluti violaverit ostro

Si quis ebur, aut mixta rubent ubi lilia multa

Alba rosa: talis virgo dabat ore colores.

Illum turbat amor, figitque in virgine vultus. 70

Ardet in arma magis, paucisque adfatur Amatam:

‘Ne, quaeſo, ne me lacrimis, neve omine tanto

Prosequere in duri certamina Martis euntem,

Turnus replies, and sends his challenge. O mater; neque enim Turno mora libera mortis.

Nuntius haec, Idmon, Phrygio mea dicta tyranno 75

Haud placitura refer: “Cum primum crastina caelo

Non Teucros agat in Rutulos; Teucrum arma qui-escant,

Et Rutuli: nostro dirimamus sanguine bellum;

Illo quaeratur coniunx Lavinia campo.”’ 80

Haec ubi dicta dedit, rapidusque in tecta recessit,

Poscit equos, gaudetque tuens ante ora frementis,

Pilumno quos ipsa decus dedit Orithyia,

Turnus arms. Qui candore nives anteirent, cursibus auras

Fecerat et Stygia carentem tinixerat unda.

68. Arrange, ubi lilia alba mixta ru- bent. Multa rosā, ablative of agent.

It is the only place where Lavinia is personally brought to our notice, and she is very prettily sketched.

75. nuntius Idmon, “do thou herald Idmon.” Turnus calls Aeneas a tyrant.

84. anteirent, “surpassed,” belongs to both clauses in the line.

85. properi aurigae, “the bustling grooms.” lacesunt, “slap their echoing cheats.”

88. aptat habendo ensem, “arranges for ready grasping,” § 184, II. (a).

The challenge is accepted joyfully, and terms are proposed by Aeneas. On the next morning the ceremonies for the truce—the lustral water and fire, and the sacred verbena—are brought between the armies. Mnestheus, Asilas, and Messapus mark out the neutral ground. Juno warns Juturna of her brother's mortal danger, and hints that she will protect her in any effort to save him. (ll. 107-160.)

The Rutuli and Turnus both see that he is no match for Aeneas; but Juturna, acting on Juno's hint, passes in disguise through the army, and suggests the unfairness of the terms and that the forfeit is too heavy. The Latins are aroused, and are in the mood to break the truce. (ll. 216–243.)

Aeneas issues from the gates, and his very presence strikes terror into the Rutuli. With Antheus and Mnestheus he inflicts heavy loss on them. Turnus seeks Aeneas, but is driven away by Juturna to another part of the fight, where he too performs great feats. Each hero is seeking the other. Aeneas is preparing to attack the city Laurentum. All is in confusion and consternation. Aeneas protests that the blame of the attack does not rest with him, and the assault is begun. Within there is no plan, no leadership. Amata, thinking her nephew slain, hangs herself. Lavinia and Latinus are distracted with grief. Turnus meantime is pursuing a few scattered Trojans, when he hears the shouts and noise in the direction of the city. Turnus recognizes his sister in his chariooteer. He sees suddenly the whole purpose, from the breaking of the truce to Juturna's last loving deception. Saces brings news of the assault. Turnus is needed at the city. In utter grief, seeing a tower on fire, he breaks away from his sister, and rushes to send to Aeneas a renewal of the challenge. (ll. 441–683.)

 Sanguine terra madet, striduntque hastilibus aurae;
 Significatque manu, et magno simul incipit ore:

 Concurrunt clipeis; ingens fragor aethera complet.
 Iuppiter ipse duas aequato examine lances 725
 Sustinet, et fata imponit diversa duorum,
 Quem damnet labor, et quo vergat pondere letum.
 Emicat hic, impune putans, et corpore toto
 Alte sublatum consurgit Turnus in ensem,
 Et ferit. Exclamat Troës trepidique Latini, 730
 Arrectaeque amborum acies. At perfidus ensis
 Frangitur, in medioque ardenter deserit ictu,
 Ni fuga subsidio subeat. Fugit ocior Euro,
 Ut capulum ignotum dextramque aspexit inermem.
 Fama est, praecipitem, cum prima in proelia iunctos
 Conscendebat equos, patrio mucrone relicto, 736
 Dum trepidat, ferrum aurigae rapuisse Metisci;
 Idque diu, dum terga dabant palantia Teucri,
 Suffecit; postquam arma dei ad Vulcania ventum est,
 Mortalis mucro, glacies ceu futilis, ictu 740
 Dissiluit; fulva resplendet fragmen arena.
 Ergo amens diversa fuga petit aequora Turnus,
 Et nunc huc, inde huc incertos implicat orbis,
 Undique enim Teucri densa inclusere corona, 744
 Atque hinc vasta palus, hinc ardua moenia cingunt.
 Nec minus Aeneas, quamquam tardata sagitta
 Interdum genua impediunt, cursumque recusant,
 Insequitur, trepidique pedem pede fervidus urget:

 Praemia, sed Turni de vita et sanguine certant. 765
 Forte sacer Fauno foliis oleaster amaris
 Hic steterat, nautis olim venerabile lignum,
 Servati ex undis ubi figere dona solebant
 Laurenti divo et votas suspendere vestes ;
 Sed stirpem Teucri nullo discrimine sacrum 770
 Sustulerant, puro ut possent concurrere campo.
 Hic hasta Aeneae stabat ; huc impetus illam
 Detulerat, fixam et lenta radice tenebat.
 Incubuit voluitque manu convellere ferrum

 Quos contra Aeneadae bello fecere profanos.’
 Dixit, opemque dei non cassa in vota vocavit. 780

862. subitam. Note the adj. instead of the adv. subito, agreeing with figuram.

864. importuna, “unceasing.”

865. in hanc faciem versa, “changed to this shape the ominous bird,” etc.

866. everberat denotes the repeated act.

873. durae mihi, “to me so ill fated.” qua arte moror tibi lucem—i. e. save thy life.

883. O quae, etc., “would that the deeps of earth would yawn for me, and let me, a goddess, descend to the lowest shades !”

Tantum effata, caput glauco contexit amictu, 885
 Multa gemens, et se fluvio dea condidit alto.

Aeneas instat contra telumque coruscat,
 Ingens, arboreum, et saevo sic pectore fatur:
 'Quae nunc deinde mora est? aut quid iam, Turne, retractas?

Non cursu, saevis certandum est comminus armis. 890
 Verte omnis tete in facies, et contrahe, quidquid
 Sive animis sive arte vales; opta ardua pennis
 Astra sequi, clausumque cava te condere terra.'

Ille caput quassans: 'Non me tua fervida terrent
 Dicta, ferox; di me terrent et Iuppiter hostis.' 895
 Nec plura effatus, saxum circumspicit ingens,

Saxum antiquum, ingens, campo quod forte iacebat,
 Limes agro positus, litem ut discerneret arvis;
 Vix illud lecti bis sex cervice subirent,
 Qualia nunc hominum producit corpora tellus; 900
 Ille manu raptum trepida torquebat in hostem,
 Altior insurgens et cursu concitus heros.

Sed neque currentem se nec cognoscit euntem,
 Tollentemve manu saxumque immane moventem;
 Genua labant, gelidus concrevit frigore sanguis. 905
 Tum lapis ipse viri, vacuum per inane volutus,
 Nec spatium evasit totum, neque pertulit ictum.

Ac velut in somnis, oculos ubi languida pressit
 Nocte quies, neququam avidos extendere cursus
 Velle videmur, et in mediis conatibus aegri 910
 Succidimus; non lingua valet, non corpore notae
 Sufficient vires, nec vox aut verba sequuntur:

Sic Turno, quacumque viam virtute petivit,
 Successum dea dira negat. Tum pectore sensus
 Vertuntur varii; Rutulos aspectat et urbem, 915
 Cunctaturque metu, telumque instare tremescit;
 Nec, quo se eripiat, nec, qua vi tendat in hostem,
 Nec currus usquam videt aurigamve sororem.

Aeneas shouts to Turnus.

His reply.

Turnus hurls
a huge stone,

but the Dira has shaken his strength:

the stone falls short.

He is bewil-

920. sortitus fortunam, “watching for his opportunity.”

921. murali tormento—i. e. the balista for battering walls.

923. turbinis instar, the image of a whirlwind—i. e. like a whirlwind.

935. et me (virum) seu, “alive, but, if thou wilt, not yet a corpse despoiled of life.”

944. inimicum insigne, “the fatal ornament.” Cf. X. 503, sq.

Vitaque cum gemitu fugit indignata sub umbras.

The motive of the epic is accomplished with the death of Turnus. Aeneas meets with no further serious obstacle. He marries Lavinia and founds the city Lavinium, but is harassed by the neighboring tribes. After a severe fight with one of them (legends say), he went down to the riverbank to wash the blood from his armor, and was never seen afterward.

(it is short, but is lengthened by the arsis.)
53. Stánt ét iúnípěr | i || ét | cástaně | áe hír | sútæ.
(i is in arsis, and so long, and is also not elided before et because of the caesural pause. ae is in arsis, and not elided before h of hirsutae. The line is spondaic.)

ECLOGUE VIII.

41. Út víd' út pěrř | i || út | mě málüs ábstülit ērrör.
(The i is in arsis, and therefore long. It is not elided before ut, as is the i in vidi, as the caesural pause prevents it.)

LINE

44. Aūt Tmārōs aūt Rhōdōp | ē || aūt | ēxtrēmī Gārāmāntēs.
 (The e is the long Greek η. The caesural pause also prevents an elision.)
55. Cērtēnt ēt cēnēs ūlūlaē sīt Tītērūs | Ὀρφεύς.
 (Compare Ecl. IV. l. 55.)
81. Un' ēō | dēmq' īgnī sīc nōstrō Dāphnīs ūmōrē.

GLOSSARY OF PROPER NAMES.

Acestes. The son of the Sicilian river-god Crinibus and a Trojan woman, Aegesta. Therefore he was a kinsman of Aeneas, whom he entertained at his different visits to Sicily and whom he aided in celebrating the funeral games in honor of Anchises. Aeneas named the city he founded Acesta (later Segesta) after him. (Vid. Bk. I. 195; Bk. V., passim.)

Acheron. One of the rivers of Hades.

Achilles. The famous hero of the Greeks in the expedition against Troy. His mother Thetis dipped him into the Styx, which made him invulnerable except in the heel by which she held him. Agamemnon had wronged him in claiming the captive Briseis, and in anger he withdrew from any active share in the siege till Hector killed his intimate friend Patroclus, when he returned to avenge him. He slew Hector in single combat, and dragged the corpse attached to his chariot three days around the walls of Troy. Later he was shot in the heel by Paris (Aen. VI.).

Actium. The promontory in Epirus off which was fought the naval battle between Marc Antony and Octavius for the mastery of the Roman empire. It was won by Octavius. (See Vergil's brilliant description of the fight, Aen. VIII. 671, sq.)

Adrastus. King of Argos, son of Talaus, and father-in-law of Polynices, who attacked his brother Eteocles in Thebes. Of the seven chiefs, he alone escaped from the slaughter, and returned home more like a fugitive than a king (Aen. VI. 480).

Aeacides. The descendants of Eacus—i. e. Achilles and his son Pyrrhus, and (much later) Perseus, the king of Macedon.

Aegeon. See Briareus.

Aeneas. The hero of the Aeneid; was the son of Anchises and the goddess Venus. Homer makes him a wise and noble prince. He escaped from the sacking of Troy, and after many wanderings, which are described in the Aeneid, he landed in Italy at the mouth of the Tiber, and founded Lavinium.

Aeolus. The king of the winds, the son of Hippotes; received his realm from Jupiter. He yielded to Juno's authority, rather than to her bribes, when he sent forth the storm that drove Aeneas upon the African coast.

Agamemnon. The son of Clisthenes; was trained by his grandfather, Atreus. He was one of the unsuccessful suitors of Helen, and in the Trojan war was made commander-in-chief. When the fleet was detained at Aulis he offered in sacrifice his daughter Iphigenia to obtain a favorable wind. This act, together with her love for Aegistheus, led his wife Clytemnestra to murder him in the bath before the banquet upon his return from Troy. He was arrogant and overbearing, as evidenced by his conduct toward Achilles.

Ajax. The son of Oileus, one of the leading Greek warriors at the siege of Troy. At the sacking of the city he seized and violated Cassandra in the temple of Pallas, for which the goddess punished him (Aen. I. 41; II. 414). He must be distinguished from the Telamonian Ajax, who became insane when he was defeated by Ulysses in the contest for the arms of Achilles, and committed suicide.

Allecto. One of the three Furies. Her sisters were Tisiphone and Meagaea. They were the daughters of Acheron and Nox. She was the one sent by Juno to infuriate the queen Amata (Aen. VII. 324).

Aloidae. They were Otus and Ephialtes, the sons of Iphimedia, wife of Aloeus, by Neptune. Gigantic and immensely strong, they assaulted heaven when only nine years old, and were shot by Apollo (Aen. VI. 582).

Alpheus. A river in the Peloponnesus. The river-god fell in love with the nymph Arethusa. To save her, Diana changed her to a fountain, and put her in Ortygia near Sicily. But Alpheus pursued her under the sea, and rose up into the fountain, mingling his water in it.

Amata. The wife of King Latinus and the aunt of Turnus, whose claims to the hand of Lavinia, her daughter, she eagerly urged. Juno sent the Fury Allecto to excite her still further against Aeneas (Aen. VII. 341 sq.). When all hope was lost and Aeneas was attacking the walls of Laurentum, in utter despair she hung herself.

Amazons. A fabled race of female warriors who were said to live on the river Thermodon. Herodotus gives a circumstantial account of them. They were conquered by Hercules, who gave their queen, Hypolyta, to Theseus. Another queen, Penthesilea, the daughter of Mars, led her troops to aid Priam. After displaying great bravery, she was slain by Achilles (Aen. I. 490; XI. 660).

Anchises. A son of Capys, a grandson of Assariens, the founder of the Dardanian line. Anchises was second cousin to King Priam. Venus fell in love with him and bore to him Aeneas. Because he spoke of it, Jupiter smote him by lightning, and he lived, maimed and feeble, to share a part of the wanderings of his famous son. He was skilled in augury. He died on the voyage to Italy, and was buried with all honors on Mount Eryx in Sicily. Aeneas instituted funeral games in his memory (Aen. II. 634; III. 710; V.).

Androgeus. The son of Minos and Pasiphaë. He was victor at the Panathenaic games at Athens, and in envy Aegeus had him assassinated. Minos then forced the Athenians to pay a yearly tribute of seven girls and seven youths to be cast to the Minotaur (Aen. VI. 20).

Andromache. Daughter of King Eëtion of Thebes in Cilicia, and wife of Hector, to whom she bore Astyanax. After Hector's death and the fall of Troy she fell to the lot of Pyrrhus, Achilles' son, who carried her to Epirus. Then, after the murder of Pyrrhus, she married Helenus of Troy (Aen. III. 294).

Antonius. Among the famous men of the future history of Rome, Anchises shows Æneas Marc Antony, the lieutenant of Julius Cæsar, the triumvir, and the victim of Cleopatra's wiles.

Apollo. The sun-god. He was the son of Jupiter and Latona, and was born on the then floating island of Delos. To him were assigned Prophecy, Poetry, Archery, Music, Medicine. In the Trojan war he sided with the Trojans. Aeneas sought his oracle at Cumæ, where the Sibyl gave him favorable answers. Again, at Buthrotum he had a temple, and another at Actium, but the most frequently consulted oracle was at Delphi. He had many titles, among which were Delius, Locrius, Lycius, Smintheus. He accidentally killed Hyacinthus, whom he loved tenderly. For killing the Cyclops, who forged the bolts with which Jupiter slew Phaëton (or, according to others, Aesculapius), he was sentenced to feed the flocks of King Admetus on the river Amphrysus, from which he also was named Nomius.

Argus. The hundred-eyed watcher over Io, by order of Juno. Jupiter sent Mercury, who lulled him to sleep with music, and then slew him. Juno placed his eyes in the tail of the peacock, which was sacred to her.

Ariadne. The daughter of Minos of Crete. She gave Theseus a ball of thread by which to return safely out of the Labyrinth after encountering the Minotaur at the bottom of its recesses. She fled with Theseus, but was abandoned by him at the island of Naxos, when she wedded Bacchus. The crown he gave her was placed among the stars.

Ascanius. The son of Aeneas and Creusa. He is also called Iulus, in compliment to the Julian gens. He appears to have been a mere boy when he was personated by Cupid at the feast Dido gave Aeneas. Later on he rides forth a graceful lad at the funeral games at his grandfather's grave, and he bravely takes his share in the defence of the camp and city Aeneas founds on the bank of the Tiber. After Aeneas' mysterious disappearance, according to Jupiter's prophecy to Venus, he reigned thirty years in place of his father, but whether at Lavinium, and eight years longer at Alba Longa, or only thirty years in the two places, is not certain.

Assaricus. The Dardan line of princes is thus given by mythologists: Dardanus, a son of Jupiter by Electa, gave his kingdom to Erichthonius, who was succeeded by Tros, and this last by Assaricus and Ilus. From Ilus descended Laomedon and his son Priam. From Assaricus sprang Capys, the father of Anchises.

Astyanax. The only son of Hector; was killed at the sack of Troy.

Atlas. The king of Mauritania, the father of the Pleiades; is said to have been skilled in the knowledge of the stars. One of his daughters, Maia, was the mother of Mercury, who was the father of Evander. But Dardanus was the son of her sister Electra. Aeneas insists upon this kinship when he is seeking the alliance of Evander. Atlas refused to harbor Perseus when he was returning from killing the Medusa, and was turned by him into a stone by displaying the Gorgon's head (Aen. VIII. 134).

Augustus. The title Octavius assumed after he became emperor. He was the grand-nephew of the great Julius Caesar. After Caesar's assassination, he, a mere lad of nineteen, began to play a most astute and unscrupulous game, temporizing, waiting, bribing, and trying all instruments by which to win power, till at last, with Lepidus and Antony, he was able to meet and defeat the republican leaders at Philippi. Lepidus was soon after relegated to private life, and seven years later, after the defeat of Antony at Actium and his suicide, Octavius became the master of the Roman empire, and was given the title Augustus by the Senate, b. c. 37.

Aurora. The daughter of Hyperion, and goddess of the Dawn. She married Tithonus, to whom she bore Memnon and Emathion, and for whom she obtained immortality (but forgot to ask for youth also) from Jupiter.

Ausonia. This was an ancient name of Italy, from the Ausones, who inhabited the southern part of the peninsula.

Aventinus. A son of Hercules and Rhea, according to Vergil, who gave his name to the largest of the seven hills upon which Rome was afterward built.

Avernus. A lake in Campania, between Cumae and Puteoli, which was one of the gates of Hades. Its name is from the Greek (a ornis), meaning that it was so pestilential that no bird could fly across it and live.

B.

Bacchus. The son of Jupiter and Semele. He was the god of the grape. Many adventures were attributed to him, and he was represented as crowned with vine-leaves, carrying the thyrsus, and drawn by lions and tigers. He found Ariadne at Naxos and married her. He inspired his votaries with a frenzy, and his worship was filled with wild orgies. The female worshippers were called Bacchantes and Maenades. (Cf. Aen. VII. 389, sq.) He had various titles, as Liber Lyaeus and Lenaeus. The festival of the Liberalia was his. The Thiasus was a choric dance sacred to him.

Bellona. The daughter of Phorcys and Ceto, and the bride and companion of Mars.

Briareus. The gigantic hundred-handed son of Neptune; was given the name of Aegeon by the gods.

Brutus. The famous L. Junius Brutus, who aided to expel the Tarquins.

Buthrotum. The city (opposite Corcyra) where Aeneas found Helenus and Andromache. There was an important temple to Apollo here.

C.

Cacus. A son of Vulcan, who lived on Mount Aventinus, robbing and wasting the neighborhood till Hercules slew him for having stolen some of the oxen he was driving to Greece, which he had taken from the Spanish king Geryon (Aen. VIII. l. 184).

Caeculus. Another son of Vulcan (Aen. VII. 678, sq.), the founder of Praeneste; could not obtain inhabitants for his city till, to prove his descent, Vulcan surrounded the doubting multitude with a bright flame. He was slain by Aeneas.

Calydon. Oeneus, king of Calydon, omitted to invite Diana to his harvest feast. In anger she sent a wild boar to lay waste his lands. His son Meleager gathered a band of young heroes to kill it. The war between the Curetes and the Aetolians, in which Calydon was nearly destroyed, resulted from the quarrels over the hide of the boar.

Cassandra. Daughter of Priam and Hecuba. Apollo gave her, at her request, the gift of prophecy, but, as she did not fulfil the terms of the compact, he also ordained that her predictions should not be believed. She was married to Coroebus, who was slain in trying to rescue her from the grasp of the Oilean Ajax at the fall of Troy. She was given to Agamemnon and carried to Mycenae. Clytemnestra had her killed when Agamemnon was murdered.

Castor. Tyndarus' son, and twin-brother of Pollux, the immortal son of Jupiter. When Castor was slain, Pollux obtained from Jove that he should share his immortality with his beloved brother, but on condition that on the alternate day that Castor was in heaven Pollux should take his place in Hades (Aen. VI. 121, sq.).

Catilina. The famous conspirator, who was foiled by the watchfulness of Cicero. He left the city after the exposure of the plot by Cicero, and was killed fighting desperately against the army sent to take him, B. C. 63.

Centaurs. A fabled race of animals, the upper half human, the lower half horse, who inhabited Mount Pelion. The most renowned were Nessus, the tutor of Achilles, who was shot by Hercules for offering violence to his wife Deianira, and Bianor, who was killed by Theseus. They were much broken in the affray with the Lapithae at the marriage feast of Pirithous and Hippodamia; and later on were wholly exterminated.

Cerberus. The three-headed watch-dog at the gate of Hades.

Ceres. The daughter of Jupiter and Ops, and the mother of Proserpina. She was also called Demeter. The story of her search for her daughter, whom Pluto had carried off to Hades, and of her teaching those who aided her the arts of agriculture, is one of the most pleasing of the old mythology.

Charon. The ferryman who carried over the Styx those souls which had the right to cross. Those who had not been buried and those who could not pay the fee of an obolus were refused. Living persons could cross if they bore the mystic golden bough they were to offer to Proserpina.

Circe. Daughter of the Sun. She was mistress of all sorcery, and changed all who landed upon her island into swine. Ulysses alone refused her magic cup.

Cleopatra. Daughter of the last Ptolemy of Egypt, who, with her brother, was to share the throne of Egypt, but when he conspired against Caesar the dictator gave the throne to Cleopatra, with whom he was much in love. She became the mistress of Marc Antony, who divorced Octavia, the sister of Augustus, for her sake. In the war that followed this act, Cleopatra, with her sixty ships, deserted Antony at the naval battle of Actium. After Antony's suicide, fearing that she would be led in the triumph at Rome, she procured some asps, which she allowed to bite her.

Cybele. She was also called Rhea and Ops. She was the wife of Saturn, and the mother of Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto. Her worship was celebrated principally in Phrygia. She was represented as crowned with turrets and drawn by lions.

Cyclops. The one-eyed sons of Neptune. They were a gigantic, lawless race, who worked at their forges under Mount Aetna and the Lipari Islands under the direction of Vulcan. They forged the thunder-bolts for Jove. Ulysses escaped from the cave of Polyphemus, according to the well-known story, by blinding him after making him drunk (Aen. III. 568, sq.).

Daedalus. A famous Athenian artisan. His nephew Perdix invented the saw. In envy Daedalus killed him, and fled to Crete. Here Minos employed him to build the Labyrinth, but for the aid he lent Queen Pasiphaë, Minos shut him up, together with his son Icarus, in a tower, from which they escaped by making for themselves wax wings. Icarus, rising too high, had his wings melted by the sun's heat, and fell into the sea and was drowned. Daedalus escaped to Sicily, and thence went to Cumae in Italy, where he built the temple of Apollo.

Danae. The mother of Perseus by Jupiter. Her father Acrisius threw her with her child into a chest which he cast into the sea. According to the Italian legend, she was washed ashore on the Apulian coast, when Pilumnus, the king, married her. She became the mother of Daunus, the father of Turnus (Aen. VII. 410).

Danai. A subname of the Argives, but usually transferred by Vergil to the whole of the Greek tribes. Danaus was the brother of Aegyptus, and finally settled in Argos.

Deiphobus. One of the bravest of Hector's brothers, and after Hector's death one of Troy's chief defenders. When Paris was killed he married Helen, who, when Troy fell, betrayed him to Menelaus, who slew him and mutilated the corpse (Aen. VI. 494).

Diana. The daughter of Jupiter and Latona, born on the floating island of Delos. Her twin-brother, Apollo, was the sun-god, while she was the goddess of the moon. She was a huntress, and is pictured in art surrounded by her attendant nymphs. She had various offices and bore several names—Diana when on earth, Luna in heaven, and Hecate in the lower regions. She was sometimes confounded with Proserpina. As Hecate she was worshipped at places where three ways met. She was called Lucina, as presiding over childbirth (an office also assigned to Juno); Delia, from the isle of her birth; and Cynthia, from a mountain on that island.

Dido. The daughter of Belus, and queen of Carthage. Her unhappy history is traced at length in the first four books of the Aeneid. The Dido of tradition, however, lived much later than the date assigned to the visit of Aeneas.

Diomedes. King of Aetolia, son of Tydeus and Deiphyle, daughter of Adrastus, king of Argos, was one of the wisest Greek leaders before Troy, and second to Achilles in prowess. In one battle he drove Mars howling from the field; in another he wounded Venus in the hand. With Ulysses he went into the camp of Rhesus, slew him, and stole his horses, and with the same hero he entered Troy and carried off the Palladium. Venus punished him by the misconduct of his wife Aegiale, who drove him from his throne. He escaped across the sea to Apulia, where, through the generosity of Daunus, he founded Argyripa. When Turnus sent an embassy asking his aid against Aeneas, he declined.

Discordia. The goddess from whose evil influence sprang so many woes; was the daughter of Nox, and the sister of Nemesis and of the Fates. She threw the fatal apple upon the board at the marriage of Peleus and Thetis. She is represented as present with torn vesture at the battle of Actium.

Electra. A daughter of Atlas, and one of the Pleiades; she became the mother of Dardanus, the founder of the Dardan dynasty of Troy.

Elysium. Hades was divided into Tartarus, Erebus, and the Elysian Fields.

Enceladus. A giant who was cast by Jupiter under Aetna. The earthquakes and eruptions are caused by his restless struggles.

Erebus. Is both a deity, the son of Chaos, and also the lowest place of Hades.

Eriphyle. A sister of Adrastus, and wife of Amphiaraus. Amphiaraus, fearing the fatal result, refused to go with Adrastus to the siege of Thebes with Polynices against his brother Eteocles. Polynices succeeded in bribing Eriphyle by giving her the famous necklace of Harmonia. She persuaded her husband to go, but he directed his son to slay her if he heard of his father's death. Alcmaeon obeyed it, and Eriphyle perished through her weakness.

Eryx. A famous boxer, son of Venus and Butes, who challenged Hercules to box with him. Hercules killed him.

Eumenides. These were the three Furies, Allecto, Tisiphone, and Megaera, but were represented under this name rather as avenging evil deeds than as evil themselves.

Eurystheus. The half-brother of Hercules. By the stratagem of Juno he was given control over his heroic brother, and used this power in a capricious and cruel way. By it he forced Hercules to perform his twelve labors.

F.

Fabii. A noble and warlike gens of ancient Rome. The Fabii claimed Hercules as their ancestor. They were nearly exterminated by the Veians at the river Cremera, but one young lad, too young to be under arms, and so absent, being left. The most famous of the gens was Q. Fabius Maximus the Cunctator, who checked Hannibal's triumphant career.

Fabricius. Vergil alludes (Aen. VI. 844) to the great C. Fabricius, who was twice consul, and who obtained two triumphs, the first over the Etruscans, the second over the Samnites. Pyrrhus tried to bribe him, when he replied that Rome had no gold, but was mistress over those who did hold it.

Faunus. One of the old Italian rustic deities. He had the power of prophecy. He was the son of Picus and the father of Latinus, according to the legend Vergil follows. From him came the name for the lesser rural deities, the Fauni, invoked in the first book of the Georgics—the Dii Indigetes of Latium.

Feronia. A goddess worshipped by the Latins and Sabines with the peculiar rite that her priests should walk unharmed over burning coals. She was one of the Dii Indigetes. Probably this rite was also in the worship of Apollo, especially on Mount Soracte, where both received worship.

Furiae. This title includes the Eumenides, generally identified with the three Furies and the Dirae and the Erinnyses. There is under them the idea of a divine scourging power that avenges moral wrong; and this probably has led to the confusion of the several names.

G.

Galatea. A Sicilian sea-nymph, daughter of Nereus and Doris, who was loved by the Cyclops Polyphemus, who killed her lover Acis. She pined away, and was changed into a river.

Ganymede. A son of Tros and Callirrhoe. His exquisite beauty attracted the notice of Jupiter, who, coming down in the form of an eagle, carried him up to heaven, and made him his cup-bearer in place of Juno's daughter Hebe (Aen. I. 28).

Geryon. The son of Chrysaor and Callirrhoe, who was from the loins up but one man, but below had three bodies. He was king of the Spanish island of Erythea, where he owned some notable oxen. Eurystheus sent Hercules to obtain these. Hercules was attacked by Geryon, whom he slew, and drove off the oxen. Cacus, as he passed through Italy, stole some of them, but they were recovered by the hero.

Gorgones. The three sisters, Stheno, Euryale, and Medusa (who alone of the three was mortal), were the daughters of Phorcys and Ceto. They had the power to turn all who looked upon them to stone. Perseus killed Medusa and gave her head to Minerva, who had aided him in the deed.

H.

Harpiae. These were three horrid creatures, Aëllo, Ocypete, and Celaeno. With faces of women and bodies of birds, foul, polluting, they were used by Juno to punish Phineus for his credulous trust in his second wife, by haunting and defiling his table. He was nearly starved, when the Argonauts arrived, and Zetes and Calais chased them to the Strophades. When Aeneas landed on this island, they flew down and polluted the food, but were driven off. They had the gift of prophecy, and Celaeno foretold that Aeneas and his comrades would be forced to eat their tables when they reached Italy.

Hecate. The one of the three names of Diana which denoted her connection with the lower world. The rites belonging to this power were performed at a spot where three roads met, and with howlings.

Hector. The noble son of Priam, and Troy's greatest chieftain. He married Andromache, who bore him Astyanax. After Achilles in wrath withdrew his aid from the Greeks, Hector was victorious. He slew Patroclus, and spoiled him of Achilles' armor. This brought back Achilles to the war. In the combat which followed he killed Hector, and then dragged the body down to the Greek camp. The next day he dragged it three times round the tomb of Patroclus. Priam, under the escort of Mercury, came at midnight to his tent and ransomed the corpse, which was buried with loving honors.

Hecuba. The wife of Priam, and daughter of Cisseus of Thrace. She was the mother of nineteen of Priam's children. When Paris was born she dreamed that she had brought a blazing torch into the world. Hector, Deiphobus, and Helenus were her sons. She fell to Ulysses as his booty at the sack of Troy.

Helen. The lovely but ill-starred daughter of Leda, the wife of Tyndarus, and Jupiter. Her beauty even as an infant brought her harm, for Theseus carried her off. When so many princes sought her hand, Tyndarus made them take an oath that, after she married the suitor she chose, should any difficulty occur, they would rescue and defend her. She chose Menelaus, who took her to Sparta. When she was carried off by Paris the rejected suitors very reluctantly kept their pledge. Her beauty was so great that even Priam was unwilling to give her up. After Paris was killed she was given to Deiphobus, whom she betrayed to Menelaus on the night of the sack. Menelaus forgave her, and took her with him back to Greece. Their opinion that all this was inevitable and ordained by the gods made the Greeks very lenient to her.

Helenus. The only son of Priam who survived the sacking of Troy. He was a skilful soothsayer. He became the prize of Pyrrhus, who trusted him with a large share in the government. He succeeded Pyrrhus and married Andromache. Aeneas found him reigning in Epirus when he visited Buthrotum (Aen. III. 295).

Hercules. The famous son of Jupiter and Alcmena, was made subservient to Eurystheus by a trick of the jealous Juno. He showed great courage even in infancy, strangling two serpents which were sent by Juno to destroy him. Eurystheus, too, ordered him to accomplish the most difficult tasks he could invent. They were twelve in number: First, he killed the Nemean lion; secondly, the Lernean hydra; thirdly, he captured alive and brought to Mycenae the golden stag; next, he captured alive the Erymanthian boar. His fifth task was to clean the stables of King Augeas, and after that to destroy the Stymphalian birds. His seventh labor was to bring alive the Cretan bull to Mycenae, and the eighth was to take from King Diomedes his mares. As his ninth work he took the golden girdle from the Amazon queen Hippolyte. He was sent then to kill Geryon and to bring to Sparta his oxen. The eleventh task was to get the golden apples of the Hesperides, which were guarded by a dragon. His twelfth labor was to drag up from Hades the dog Cerberus. Besides, he took the part of the gods in the war of the giants; he killed the Centaurs, Hylaeus, Nessus, and Pholus; he rescued Theseus from Hades, brought Alcestes thence back to Admetus, and slew Cacus. Finally, he was destroyed by the jealousy of his young bride, who gave him a shirt which Nessus, when dying, had dipped in his own blood and bidden her give to Hercules. It burnt so into his bones that he ordered a funeral pyre to be prepared for him, and from the flaming pile Jupiter took him up to heaven. He was worshipped as a demigod. He was really a Greek hero, but was early adopted into Latin worship.

Herilus. A son of the goddess Feronia, who had three lives, and had to be thrice mortally wounded before he could be killed.

Hermione. The daughter of Menelaus and Helen. She had been betrothed to Orestes, but Menelaus, not knowing this, gave her to Pyrrhus on his return from the Trojan war. Orestes assassinated Pyrrhus in the temple of Delphi.

Hesione. Priam's sister, who was exposed to a sea-monster, but rescued by Hercules and given to Telamon, king of Salamis (Aen. VIII. 157, sq.).

Hippolytus. Son of Theseus and the queen of the Amazons, Hippolyte. Afterward his step-mother, Phaedra, accused him falsely to Theseus. He was banished, and as he was driving by the sea-shore, Neptune, at the prayer of Theseus, sent a sea-monster, which frightened his horses, who dashed him lifeless out of his chariot. He was, however, restored to life by Aesculapius, and was taken by Diana to Italy, where he was deified under the name of Virbius.

I.

Iapyx. The physician who attended upon Aeneas. Apollo gave him skill in augury, which he exchanged for a knowledge of healing herbs and of medicine. He was a master in music and in archery.

Iarbas. A son of Jupiter, and king of Gaetulia. He sold to the Phoenicians the land upon which they built Carthage. He was one of the suitors of Dido, and was so confident of success that he was crazed by her union with Aeneas. At his prayer Jupiter sent Mercury to order Aeneas to depart for Italy.

Idomeneus. The king of Crete; was the most skilful archer among the Greek chieftains at Troy. As he was returning he vowed to Neptune, in return for a fair voyage, to sacrifice the first living thing he met. This was his own son. For this act his subjects drove him away, and he went to Italy, where he founded the town of Sallentia.

Inachus. The founder of the kingdom of Argos; was the son of Tethys and Oceanus. He is often called a river-god, as he gave his name to a river.

Io. The daughter of Inachus, and mistress of Jupiter; was turned into a heifer to protect her from Juno's wrath. Juno begged the heifer of Jupiter, and placed Argus to watch her. After Mercury killed Argus, Juno sent a gadfly, which chased her into Egypt. There Jupiter restored her to human form, and married her to Osiris. She was worshipped under the name of Iris.

Ixion. King of the Lapithae, and a guest of the gods; insulted Juno at an Olympian feast. He was sentenced to be bound by brazen chains to a fiery, swift-revolving wheel.

J.

Janus. The blameless king of Italy, entertained Saturn after he was driven out of heaven by his sons. Janus was deified, and was made the god of gates. His temple gates at Rome always stood open so long as the Romans were at war anywhere. He was represented with two faces (Aen. VII. 607, sq.).

Juno. Was the wife of her brother Jupiter and queen of heaven. When Paris gave the golden apple to Venus, her wrath against Troy knew no bounds. She did not scruple to use all means to gain her purposes. She persecuted Aeneas up to the combat with Turnus. Her offices were various. She had a noble temple at Argos, a second at Carthage, and later a fine one at Rome.

Jupiter. Son of Saturn; became the king of gods and men, and was himself bound only by the Fates. He was favorably inclined to the Trojans, and restrained Juno's purpose to destroy Aeneas.

Juturna. The sister of Turnus; received from Jupiter immortality, and was changed into a river-nymph. She passionately loved her brother, whom she sought to save from Aeneas' sword, till Jupiter warned her, through the Fury Allecto, that her efforts were useless.

Laocoön. The hapless priest of Apollo; was the son of Priam and Hecuba. He warned the Trojans not to take the wooden horse within their walls. For this, as he was sacrificing to Neptune, Minerva sent two huge serpents from the sea, which destroyed him and his two sons.

Latona. Was the mother of Apollo and Diana by Jupiter. She was concealed upon the floating island of Delos till her children were born.

Lavinia. The daughter of Latinus, for whom Aeneas and Turnus fought the final combat (Aen. XII.). After Aeneas' disappearance she fled to the forests, fearing the jealousy of her step-son Ascanius. There she bore a son, who was called Aeneas Silvius and reigned in Alba Longa after Ascanius' death.

Luperci. The priests of the god Lupercus. They were the most ancient order of the Latin priests, dating from Evander. At first they were divided into two ranks; afterward a third was added in honor of Julius Caesar.

Lycurgus. A king of Thrace who attempted to prevent the introduction of Bacchic rites into his kingdom. For this Bacchus smote him with madness, and he slew his own son Dryas. The crime brought a famine on his realm till it was atoned for by his subjects exposing him to the wild beasts on Mount Pangaeus by order of the oracle.

M.

Machaon. The chief physician of the Greek army before Troy. He was one of the warriors concealed in the wooden horse.

Maia. The mother of Mercury by Jupiter, and one of the Pleiades.

Manlius. Marcus Manlius saved the capital when it was nearly surprised by the Gauls. For this he received the surname of Capitolinus.

Manto. A daughter of the prophet Tiresias; was the wife of Tiberinus, king of Alba, and the mother of Oenus, who built Mantua.

Marcellus. I. The victor over the Gauls, the captor of Syracuse, and the gallant opponent of Hannibal; fell in a skirmish near Capua (Aen. VI. 856). II. The son of Octavia, Augustus' sister, and the most popular of the imperial family; died when only eighteen. In his honor Vergil composed the beautiful passage Aen. VI. 860-885.

Mars. The son of Juno; was the Roman god of war. He was also, before he was confused with the Greek Arēs, the god of virile growth and manliness, and so was connected with agriculture.

Menelaus. The king of Sparta; was the successful suitor for the hand of Helen. When Paris betrayed the rights of his host by carrying off Helen, Menelaus summoned the other suitors to aid him. During the siege he showed royal qualities as a warrior and a chieftain. He forgave Helen the wrong she had committed, and with her, after years of wandering, at last returned to Sparta.

Mettus Fuffetius. The dictator of Alba; was restive under the compact which he had made with Tullus Hostilius, conditioned upon the result of the duel of the Horatii and Curiatii. He tried to evade it by an act of treachery. Hostilius seized him, and, binding him to two four-horse chariots, had them driven asunder, and the unfortunate Mettus was torn in two (Aen. VIII. 642).

Minerva. The Greek name for this goddess was Pallas. She was the patroness of liberal studies and of the art of war. She, with Juno, sided against the Trojans. She was the counsellor of Ulysses, both during the siege and upon his long wanderings homeward.

Minos. The just king of Crete. He made Crete politically important. For his equity, at his death he was made, with Eacus and Rhadamanthus, the judge of souls. He built the Labyrinth, in which he put the Minotaur, the horrid offspring of Pasiphae, half man, half bull, who fed on human flesh.

N.

Neoptolemus. The other name of the son of Achilles, Pyrrhus.

Neptunus. Received from Jupiter, his brother, the realm of the seas. With Apollo he built the walls of Troy for King Laomedon. He was persuaded by Venus to accept Palinurus as a sacrifice in place of the fleet of Aeneas on his last voyage to Italy.

Nereus. The sea-god, father of the Nereides. His name is a synonym for the sea itself.

Nisus. The king of Megara, who was murdered by his daughter Scylla on account of her love for Minos. She cut from her father's head the golden lock on the preservation of which his life depended. His death gave the town to Minos, who, however, punished Scylla by dragging her after the stern of his galley till she was drowned. Nisus was turned into the sea-eagle, and Scylla into a lark.

O.

Orestes. He avenged his father Agamemnon's murder by slaying Clytemnestra and her paramour Aegisthus. For this the Eumenides tortured him even to insanity, till he was purged of the guilt of his mother's blood at Athens. He returned to Mycenae and took his father's throne.

Orion. A famous gigantic hunter who was placed among the stars after his death. The rising and the setting of the constellation occur at the rainy seasons.

P.

Palaemon, who, before he was turned into a sea-god, was called Melicerta, was, with his mother Ino, the protecting deity of the sailor.

Palamedes. King of Euboea; was one of the most sagacious men of his age. He invented the game of chess, was no mean astronomer, and also added some letters to the Greek alphabet. He detected the feigned madness of Ulysses, who wished to avoid going to Troy. Ulysses began to plough the sea-sand and to sow salt; but when Palamedes laid his infant son Telemachus before him, he drove his team aside from the straight furrow. Later on, Ulysses had him executed on a false accusation in revenge.

Palici. Two Sicilian deities, sons of Jupiter and Thalia, who were highly reverenced in Sicily. By their oracle they directed the Sicilians, in a threatened famine, to make the proper propitiatory sacrifices. Their altar was an inviolable asylum for fugitive slaves.

Pan. The Greek god of shepherds, whose worship was early introduced into Italy.

Parcae. The three Fates who spun the destiny of each man's life. Clotho held the distaff, Lachesis spun the thread, and Atropos cut it off.

Paris. His name in Homer is Alexander. He was the son of Priam and Hecuba, who dreamed that she would bear a firebrand. Priam had the infant exposed upon Mount Ida. He was found and brought up by some shepherds. In early youth he showed much prowess in breaking up some bands of robbers. He married the nymph Oenone. The three goddesses Juno, Minerva, and Venus, who claimed the golden apple that the uninvited goddess of Discord had thrown upon the table at the marriage-feast of Peleus and Thetis, were directed by the oracle to lay their several claims to it before Paris, who gave it to Venus as the most beautiful. Soon after this Cassandra revealed his birth, and he returned to Troy. Venus sent him to Sparta, when, in the absence of Menelaus, who had received him hospitably, he carried off Helen. In the war that followed he exhibited but little of his early courage, except as a skilful archer. He shot the fatal arrow that wounded Achilles in the heel, and was himself shot by Philoctetes not long afterward.

Parthenopaeus. The son of Atalanta, and one of the seven leaders against Thebes.

Penthesilea. The queen of the Amazons, who aided Priam in the last year of the siege. She was slain by Achilles after she had made a sharp onslaught upon the Greeks.

Pentheus. Like Lycurgus, he objected to the introduction of the Bacchic rites into his Theban kingdom. For this Bacchus inspired his mother and aunts with such madness that they, in one of their wild orgies, tore him to pieces.

Phaedra. The wife of Theseus; was so smitten by remorse after she had effected the death of her stepson Hippolytus that she hung herself.

Phaethon. He besought his father Apollo to intrust to him the driving of the sun-chariot for one day. Apollo consented with great reluctance. Phaethon's unskilful driving nearly set fire to the earth. He was thrown headlong from the chariot by a thunderbolt from Jupiter.

Philoctetes. King of Meliboea, who was connected with the expedition against Troy. A wound in his foot which he had received from Hercules was so offensive that he was put ashore on Lemnos; but as he possessed the bow of Hercules, without which Troy could not be taken, Ulysses and Pyrrhus were sent to persuade him to rejoin them. He refused, but Hercules appeared to him and directed him to go to Troy. Machaon cured him of his wound, and Troy soon after was taken. He migrated to Italy, and founded the city of Petilia in Bruttium.

Phineus. King of Salmydessus in Thrace, on the false accusation of his second wife treated his older children with great cruelty. For this he was blinded by the gods, and his table polluted by the Harpies till the Argonauts visited his kingdom, when the two sons of Boreas, Zetes and Calais, drove them off to the Strophades isles.

Phlegyas. The violent-tempered king of Orchomenus in Boeotia; dared to plunder the temple at Delphi. For this Jupiter slew his people and doomed him to the lowest depth of Tartarus.

Phoenix. Of the royal family of Argos; was tutor to Achilles, with whom he went to Troy. He had been exiled from Argos, and was made king of the Dolopians by Peleus, the father of Achilles.

Picus. He was noted for his extreme beauty, which attracted the passion of the sorceress Circe. As he resisted her wiles, one day, while hunting, she turned him, as he was clad in his brilliant hunting-suit, into a woodpecker. As Picus had been a skilful augur, the woodpecker was highly valued as a favorable omen in auguries by birds.

Pirithous. The king of the Lapithae; persuaded his intimate friend Theseus to go to Hades with him to carry off Proserpina. Pluto threw Pirithous to the dog Cerberus, and bound Theseus.

Pluto. The third son of Saturn; received the under-world of the dead as his realm. He carried off Proserpina, the daughter of Ceres, as she was plucking flowers in a Sicilian meadow, to be his queen in Hades.

Pollux. Was the immortal son of Jupiter, while his twin-brother, Castor, was the mortal son of Tyndarus by Leda. He was, therefore, Helen's half-brother. He was famed as a boxer. When his mortal brother, Castor, was killed, Pollux obtained permission from Jupiter to share his immortality with Castor; but he was to take Castor's place in Hades on each alternate day, while Castor took his place in heaven.

Porsenna. The noble Etruscan king who endeavored to restore the banished Tarquin to Rome. His name is connected with those of Mutius Scaevola, Horatius Cocles, Cloelia, and other noted Romans.

Procris. The wife of Cephalus; was extremely jealous of her husband. She watched him once from a thicket while he was resting from a hunt, and he, mistaking the rustling she made for that of some game, accidentally shot her.

Proserpina. Daughter of Ceres (or Demeter) and Jupiter; was carried off by Pluto to share with him the kingdom of the dead. Ceres' search for her daughter is one of the most beautiful fables of Greek mythology. Proserpina preferred to remain with her husband.

Pygmalion. Was the brother of Dido. He killed her husband Sychaeus, that he might gain Sychaeus' treasures; but Dido succeeded in deceiving him and escaping with the treasures he coveted to the African coast, where she founded Carthage.

Pyrrhus. The son of Achilles and Deidamia, daughter of Lycomedes, king of Scyros. After Achilles' death he was brought to Troy, as the oracle had declared that one of his family must be present to insure the success of the Greek arms. He was cruel and savage in his temper. It was said that he was the only one of the party that entered the wooden horse who went in willingly. Andromache was assigned to him from the captive Trojan women. When he wedded Hermione, who was betrothed to Orestes, the latter assassinated him in the temple at Delphi. Pyrrhus was also sur-named Neoptolemus.

Q.

Quirites. One of the titles of the Roman people. It probably means "spearmen."

R.

Rhadamanthus. He was after death appointed, with his brother Minos, one of the three judges of souls as they entered Hades. He was the son of Jupiter and Europa.

Romulus, the immediate founder of Rome, and his twin-brother Remus, were the sons of Mars and Ilia or Rhea, daughter of Numitor, king of Alba. The story of their birth and preservation by the she-wolf, their early life as shepherd-lads, and the discovery of their true parentage; how they killed their grand-uncle Amulius, who had dispossessed their grandfather; how they founded Rome, and why Romulus was provoked to kill his brother Remus; and of Romulus' successful government of his city and of his disappearance in a storm after a reign of forty years—all this is too long to be recited here.

Salii. An ancient priesthood which guarded the sacred shield of Mars. They are represented by Vergil as offering the sacrifices and worship of Hercules. Numa later made them priests of Mars.

Salmoneus. King of Salmonia in Elis. He wished for divine honors, and pretended to be able to thunder and lighten. Jupiter struck him with lightning for his impious conduct.

Sarpedon. Son of Jupiter and Laodamia, daughter of Bellerophon. He was fated to be slain, and Jupiter could not avert the doom, but at his death (at the hands of Patroclus) the sky dropped tears.

Saturnus. Son of Coelus and Terra, and the father of Jupiter, Neptune, and Pluto by Ops (or Cybele); was dethroned by Jupiter and driven to Italy, where he was received by Janus, the king of Latium, whose people he taught agriculture. The Golden Age is called Saturnian. (Vide Ecl. IV. 6.)

Scipiadae. The two famous Scipios, the elder the conqueror of Hannibal, the younger the destroyer of Carthage.

Scylla. The daughter of Phorcæs; was changed by Circe into a horrid monster. To the waist she retained her human form, but below she was girt with barking sea-dogs, who, with their long necks, were able to snatch a man from the deck of each galley that sailed by the sea-cavern where she dwelt (Aen. III. 420, sq.).

Sibylla. The Sibyls were women who were held to be prophetesses. They were ten in number: the Delphic, Erythrean, Cumæan, Samian, Cumarian, Hellenistic, Libyan, Persian, Phrygian, and Tiburtine. The last Sibyl was the Cumæan, who was endowed with as many years as there were grains in a handful of sand she held when she asked for the gift. She lived thirteen hundred years, and then faded into a mere voice. Three Sibylline books were preserved in Rome from the time of Tarquin (see Roman history for the story) till the Capitol was burnt in the time of Sulla. Augustus had a new collection made by special commissioners, and this was placed under the pediment of the temple of Apollo (Aen. V. 735; VI. 10, 69, etc.).

Styx. The river which flowed nine times round Hades; it was held so sacred that if any one of the gods swore by it and broke his oath he was deprived of his divine privileges and of the right to feast at Olympus for ten years (Aen. VI. 134).

Sychaeus. Dido's husband, whom Pygmalion, her brother, had assassinated while sacrificing, that he might obtain Sychaeus' gold (Aen. I. 342).

Tarquin. Originally the family was Corinthian, and settled in Etruria, where it received the patronymic Tarquin. Tarquinius Priscus migrated to Rome during the reign of Ancus Martius. Upon Martius' death, Tarquin succeeded in securing the throne for himself. Tarquinius Superbus was expelled from Rome both for his arrogance and for the violence offered by his son Sextus to Lucretia Collatina (Aen. VI. 817).

Tellus. The goddess of earth, who presided at the marriages of the gods. Vergil introduces her as presiding with Juno at the hurried nuptials of Aeneas and Dido (Aen. VI. 166).

Teucer (I.). The ancient Trojan king from whom the Trojans were also called Teucri.

Teucer (II.). The half-brother of Ajax, and one of the heroes of the Trojan war. When Ajax failed in having the arms of Achilles awarded to him, Teucer did not resent his brother's wrongs. For this his father, Telamon, king of Salamis, banished him, and he migrated to Sicily, where he founded the city Salamis (Aen. I. 619).

Theseus. The son of Aegeus, king of Athens, and Aethra. He performed many famous exploits. Of these, the feats to which Vergil makes reference are, his penetrating into the depths of the Labyrinth to slay the Minotaur, and his descent into Hades with his comrade Pirithous to help him carry off Proserpina (Aen. VI. 392, 618).

Tithonus. Was chosen by Aurora as her husband for his great beauty. At her request Jupiter gave him immortality, but Aurora forgot to have youth added to it, and in time Tithonus became withered and decrepit. In pity Aurora changed him to a grasshopper (Aen. IV. 585).

Typhoeus. The gigantic son of Terra, whom she bore to avenge her earlier gigantic brood whom Jupiter had destroyed. After a fierce struggle, Jupiter overthrew him and cast Sicily upon him. Other legends say he overwhelmed him in the Serbonian Bog.

U.

Ulysses. The wise son of Laertes; was one of the rejected suitors of Helen. When he was summoned to the Trojan war he feigned to be mad, but was detected and forced to go. Under the special guidance of Minerva he displayed great sagacity in council, and was a brave and skilful leader. He returned home after ten years of wandering. The story of his adventures and of his killing the suitors who were persecuting his faithful wife, Penelope, is told in the Odyssey. He was killed by his son Telegonus, whom Circe bore to him. Telegonus landed on Ithaca to discover himself to his father, but was mistaken for a pirate, and in the struggle that ensued killed his father (Aen. II. 7, 90; III. 588).

V.

Venilia. The mother of Turnus, and the sister of Queen Amata. She was, according to Servius, a nymph.

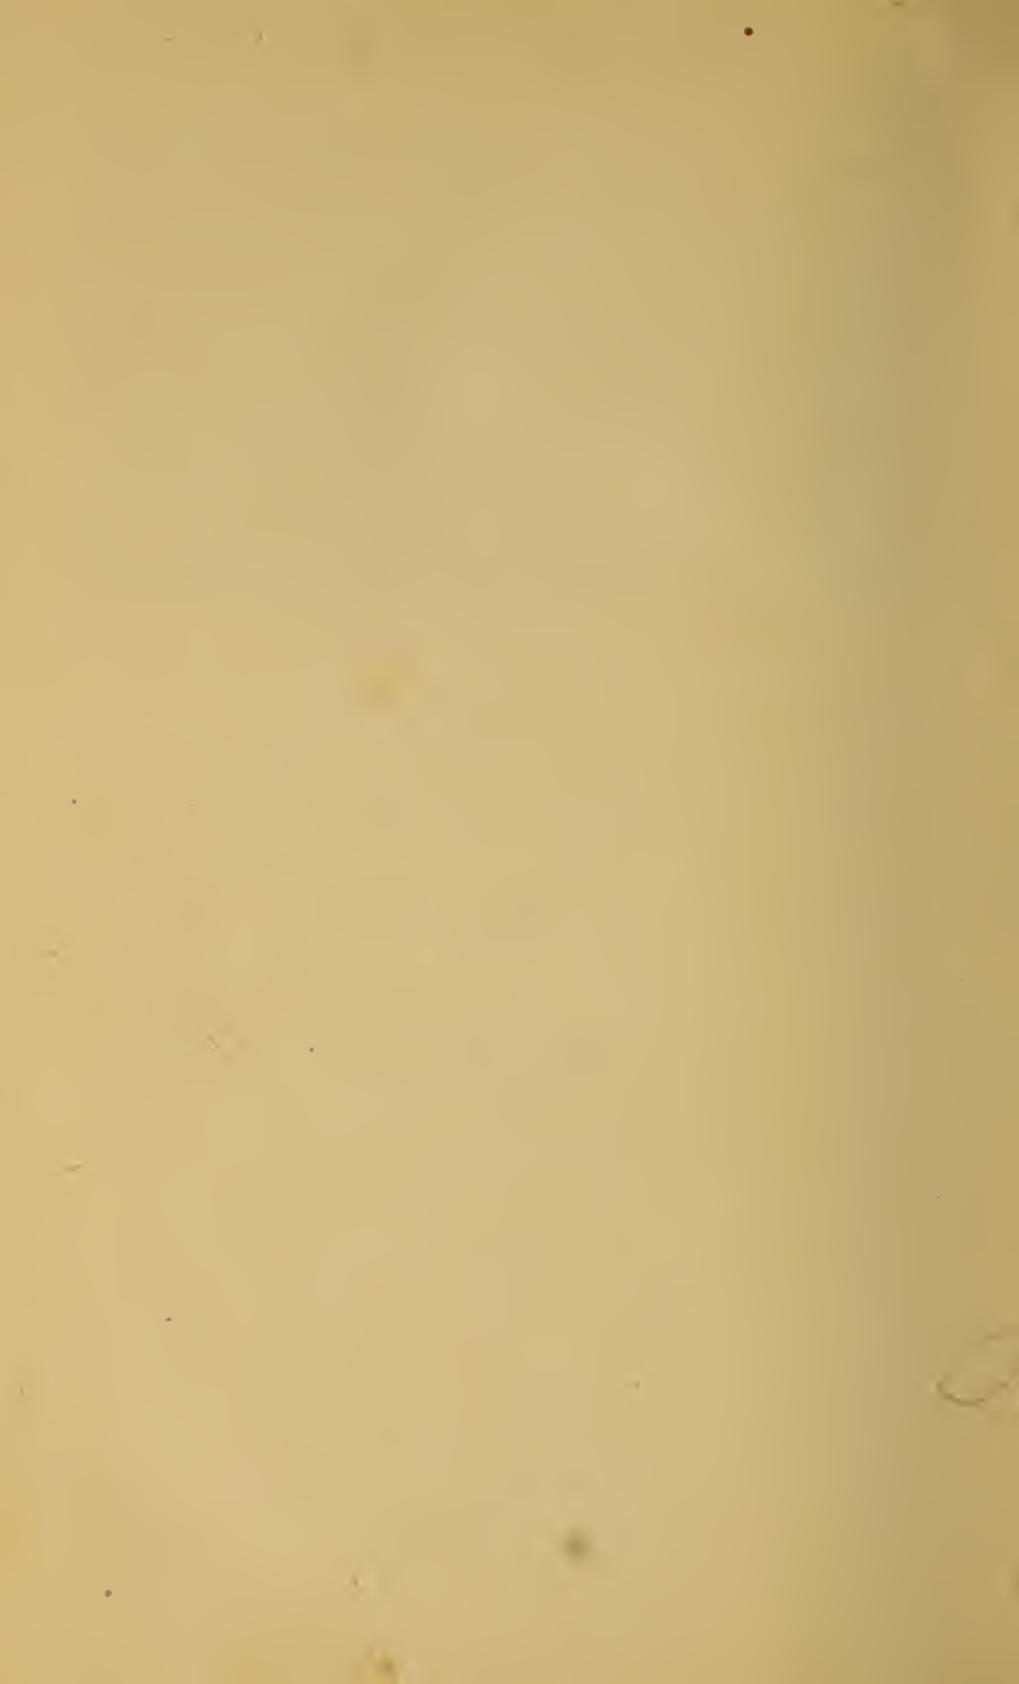

Venus. The goddess of beauty, the wife of Vulcan, and the mother of Aeneas by Anchises; was the daughter of Jupiter and Dione. She was called Aphrodite, as born of sea-foam. Her most frequent titles were Cytherean, Paphian, Idalian, and Cyprian, from the several places in which her worship was chiefly celebrated.

Vesta. The goddess of the sacred fire. The name meant a hearth. Vesta was the presiding deity over the hearth of the family and over the hearth of the city, where the sacred fire was always kept burning, for it symbolized the life and safety of the city. She was served by twelve virgins, who so long as they were in her service were to be pure. After a certain length of service they could withdraw and marry; but it was death, by being buried alive in a vault with a loaf of bread and a pitcher of water, for any one of the virgins to lose her purity while she was a priestess.

Vulcan. The god of fire; was the son of Juno. He was a master in all metal work. In his workshop under the Lipari Islands he forged several remarkable pieces of mechanism in metal, and the arms of Achilles for Thetis and those of Aeneas for his wife Venus (Aen. VIII. 370). He was lame, for Jupiter once in anger threw him out of heaven, and he fell upon the isle of Lemnos and fractured his thigh. His assistants were the Cyclops.
