SATURDAY, September 2d, 1893, at half-past ten in the forenoon, we left Wolfborough on the steamer Lady of the Lake, bound for Centre Harbor. We made our way toward our destination in the face of a strong northeast wind and lowering clouds, and our prediction of a coming storm of two or three days' duration seemed fully justified after a brief consultation with the veteran pilot Lovett, whose long experience rendered him wise in weather matters. We descended from the pilot-house mentally resolving to seek a safe retreat as we made land, and there await clear skies and a more genial atmosphere before we pursued our journey further northward. But scarcely had we taken a turn of the boat before the wind shifted, and, after changing from one quarter to another, settled in the northwest, the clouds broke and rapidly drifted away, and by the time we reached the landing the sun was the unresisted monarch of the mountain and the lake.

Nothing was now in the way of carrying out our original intention to reach upper Sandwich, and the region made classic by Bolles, that night, and, after a dinner at the hotel near by, of which the less said the sooner forgotten, we secured seats in the stage-coach, and soon were travelling rapidly around Red Hill on the road to Moultonborough. Our companions in the coach were two or three substantial citizens of Sandwich returning at the end of the week from "down country" to their homes, and a bibulous individual, whose frequent resort to a well-filled bottle, pressing importunity to share its contents, and occasional witty retort, distracted our attention at times from the glories of the autumnal afternoon that gave an additional charm to the region through which we were passing.

Proceeding over the travelled route to Centre Sandwich, a change was made to a mail wagon, the large coach going no further. In this vehicle we were the only passengers, and the transit to North Sandwich Post Office was quickly made. Here we were to leave the public stage and pursue the remainder of our journey by private conveyance. While waiting for the postmaster (with whom we had negotiated to take us on our way) to sort the mail, a fisherman appeared with a string of brook trout the like of which our Massachusetts eyes had never before seen. Whether he was a genuine disciple of the gentle Izaak, or was influenced by grosser motives, we did not ascertain, but he was of a sufficiently conventional type to give the stereotyped reply, "over there," with a motion of his forefinger that indicated fully a third of the circle of the horizon, in response to our inquiry as to where he obtained such beauties.

As the day waned the chill increased until it became really cold, and we began to experience the effects of one of those sharp changes in the weather so characteristic of New England, but which are especially marked among the mountains. Just at sunset we started on our four-mile drive, behind a fine span that maintained an even pace, up hill and down, to the end. From the top of the high hill a mile or more on our way we saw the full grandeur of the Sandwich Range from Chocorua to the "Dome" stand out in the twilight, the cleft head of old Whiteface right in front being conspicuous, but the depths of the immense basin that intervened between us and its rugged sides were already lost in darkness, through which twinkled the early lamps of the small settlement at its base. We made the descent over the steep and hazardous road, and a few minutes later drew up before the hospitable door of Mr. William McCrillis, the principal resident and owner at the "Intervale." In the sitting room we found a cheerful fire in the open fireplace and a cordial welcome to the circle gathered, which included several who were, like ourselves, strangers and pilgrims. The cheerful warmth and a good supper dissipated the temporary feeling of discomfort incident to our cold ride, but a night's rest was needed to relieve our fatigue after the long and hard journey of the day. Our sleeping apartments were in a small cottage adjacent to the main dwelling, and thither we retired, our demur at lockless doors and the absence of other city safeguards creating some amusement among the members of the family and the other guests.

Sunday morning we awoke in full realization of the poet's expression :

"Through Sandwich notch the west-wind sang Good morrow to the cotter";

but, though the breeze sighed mournfully around the house, and at times assumed a menacing tone, we were out soon after sun-up, enjoying the scene before us. In front the broad green Intervale, level as a floor, stretched to the distance of nearly a mile, abruptly bounded on the north by the Sandwich peaks running nearly from east to west—the unique and ever-changing Chocorua, the lowly Paugus or Toad-back, the commanding heads of Passaconaway (highest of the range) and Whiteface, the massive Sandwich Dome or Black Mountain, with Mount Israel close by—all together made a picture which once seen could never be effaced from memory. The air at first chill, almost frosty, soon had a tonic effect, and we went in to breakfast only to return and remain out of doors the entire day.

Succeeding days until the 13th of September were passed on this highland farm, a period of great benefit and enjoyment, mentally and physically. At an elevation of about eleven hundred feet, the Intervale affords practically all the natural attractions and advantages of the popular mountain resorts without their artificial accompaniments. The land, divided into two or three farmsteads, is held in possession of descendants of the original settlers. The grandfather of William McCrillis came to this place late in the eighteenth century, and here representatives of the family remain to-day, offshoots of that Scotch Presbyterian stock that peopled southern portions of New Hampshire at an earlier period. Full evidence of this is presented in both the fore- and surnames on the stones in the little graveyard on the Intervale, a list of which is here preserved.

Mr. McCrillis (now deceased) was a man of intelligence and ability, his mind well-stocked with practical information, and we are greatly indebted to him for knowledge gained. Mrs. McCrillis will ever have a warm place in our memories, not only for her possession of those womanly qualities that mark the true lady, but for her genuine and kindly interest in the happiness and welfare of her guests. With the family, which comprised three generations, and the several guests, we passed the time pleasantly, and left the place with real regret.

Of the novel experiences while here, the chief and never-to-be-forgotten one was our ascent of Whiteface, undertaken and achieved on Saturday, the 9th of September, with a party of six, under the leadership of the Rev. Frank S. Adams, of Reading, Massachusetts, (since gathered to the silent majority), who had made the ascent before. The distance from the McCrillis house to the top is four miles by the path, although the buildings when viewed from the Intervale seem to stand right at the base of the mountain. The path, which passes over the west ridge, is rough and steep, and half of the way maintains an exacting angle over ledges with steps breast-high at some places, making the climb difficult, slow, and exhausting to those new to the work. The front of Whiteface from the summit to within a point two-thirds down its surface is hollowed into an immense bowl, the result of a landslide that occurred early in this century, and the cleft at the top gives the appearance of two peaks when seen from certain points. The mountain is in Waterville, just over the line of Sandwich. Its height, as given in the guide-books, is 4007 feet, a little under that of Passaconaway, whose summit seems but a step away. Except the satisfaction of saying that you have been there, the view from the top does not repay the required effort to reach it, compared with what may be had from Chocorua (which we climbed a year later) at less expenditure. But the mountain in itself is a grand study, and is one of the most wonderful features of the Sandwich Range. An acquaintance with one such would furnish to an appreciative mind food for contemplation to last a year; yet we met parties of "climbers" from the cities who were going through the whole system in a week, running up and down the mountains like rats.

Most of our visit at the Intervale was during the day-time passed in the open air. Mornings and evenings we took a singular satisfaction in piling slab-wood (which here was sold at fifty cents a cord) on the open fire in the sitting-room, and seeing it burn, and enjoying its genial influence. Other intervals of time were filled up in exploring the nearby region, in gathering vials of fir balsam from the trees, and in a visit to the sap-orchard for which the McCrillis farm has been for many years famous. The product of the several hundred trees, some of which had been tapped for more than fifty years, according to figures given by the owner, was over ninety thousand pounds of sugar and syrup—enough to return a small fortune in money.

The reading while at the Intervale of Frank Bolles's At the North of Bearcamp Water—with the scenes and characters of which we were destined to become better acquainted the next year—was doubly interesting in the presence of the grand object-lesson of the region he so minutely and vividly describes.

In the work of copying the inscriptions in the burial ground Mr. McCrillis was greatly interested, and to him we are indebted for the genealogical notes concerning the McCrillis and Foss families, and for other information.

We made our homeward journey on Wednesday, the 13th of September, by the route we had come. The only passenger in the coach beside ourselves was a lad from Maine, who was making his way to Chicago, mostly on foot, to visit the Columbian Exposition. He took to the road again at Centre Harbor. We crossed the Lake to the Weirs, and as the train bore us away, our backward glance from the car-window caught the double head of old Whiteface rising above the top of Red Hill.

WHITEFACE INSCRIPTIONS.

Bean.

1. REBECCA, | wife of | Dea. John Bean, | Died | May 22,
1845, Æ. 56.

Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.

Bennett.

2. ABNER BENNETT, | Died Nov. 17, 1871, | Æ. 72 yrs. 3 mos.
26 ds.

We have said farewell to Father,
For the last time clasped his hand;
He has gone to join his loved ones,
In that brighter, happier land.

Heaven retaineth now our treasure,
Earth the lonely casket keeps;
And the sunbeams love to linger,
Where our precious Father sleeps.

3. SARAH P. | wife of Abner Bennett, | Died Aug. 28, 1883,
| Æ. 79 yrs. 7 mos. 6 ds.

One dear friend has drooped and faded,
One sweet voice has fled;
One sweet brow the grave has shaded,
Our dear Mother now is dead.

She has gone to Heaven before us,
See, she turns with outstretched hands;
Pointing to the glorious beauties,
Of that bright eternal land.

MEMORIALS OF MEREDITH.

In 1891 a small edition of a fourteen-page pamphlet entitled MEMORIALS OF MEREDITH, NEW HAMPSHIRE, was published by the compiler of these pages, who was informed by the Librarian of the New Hampshire Historical Society that it was the first separate publication relating to the history of that town. The Inscriptions here printed were copied on the 19th of June, 1892, and it seemed proper to include them in the same covers with the New Durham and Sandwich inscriptions gathered the following year.
