THE first Chapter will, I believe, appear a sufficient Preface to the ensuing Treatise. But as every Reader has a natural Propensity, or Inclination, to know something of a Writer, to whom they are indebted for an Entertainment of this Kind. To comply with such their Curiosity, and to prove the Author not unacquainted with the Accomplishments requisite in such an Undertaking, I thought fit to give the following brief Account of his Character and Station of Life, at the Time he Composed the following ESSAY. I shall say nothing of him from his Infancy, 'till he arrived at Years of Maturity, but that his Extraction was from an honourable Family of Lynn-Regis, in the County of Norfolk; at which Time, by the Advantage of a liberal Education, having perfected his Studies at the University of Cambridge, he soon discovered a promising Genius, and strong Inclination to the Study of Liberal Arts and Sciences; and being Heir to a considerable Paternal Estate, he had an Opportunity of improving himself, by travelling over most of the politer Parts of Europe. But as no Genius is so Extensive but must be enamour'd with some particular Study, Architecture seemed to be the Mistress of our Author's Affections, and consequently his Travels conduced very much to his Improvement in that particular Science. The Town of Northampton, which was Re-built agreeable to his Plan, and pursuant to his own Direction, is a Testimony sufficient to evince his Masterly Hand in that Noble Science to succeeding Ages. The Place of his Nativity may likewise furnish us with Buildings sufficient to demonstrate the Skill of the deceased Architect. The following Sheets accidentally falling into my Hands, Compassion to the Merit of the Author, and the Entertainment of the Publick, I thought Motives sufficient for its Publication. And all the Merit I can boast, is the restoring so valuable a Manuscript from Oblivion; and if thereby I may deserve the Thanks, or Approbation of the Reader, it will (next to doing the Author Justice) be the greatest Satisfaction to

C H A P. I.

Of the Original of P A I N T I N G in General ; wherein is exhibited some Probabilities and Pretentions to its Invention before the Flood.

O make an Investigation of the First Inventors of this Noble A R T, will prove an Enquiry of no little Difficulty, if we consider how far we shall of Necessity be enforced to make a Re-search, and to look back, even into the First Periods of Time, wherein it will appear obvious enough, how that the far greater Share of the Impressions and Characters of Things and Actions of so long a Date, must of Necessity be now almost eaten out and quite erased, having thus long lain under and been exposed to the devouring and corroding Teeth of Time.
B back,

AND however, though some scatter'd Relicts of Memoirs may happily have escaped this Calamity, and by some Writers been transferred to Posterity. Yet some of them in their Relations (we can't but acknowledge) have been so uncertain and fabulous, others so abrupt and obscure, and most of them either wholly passing by, or discoursing of this ART only in transitu, it can't be expected our Endeavours should proceed to any particular, or absolute Determinations, but only what Probability of Truth may reasonably dispence with.

UPON that Score we hope for Pardon, if in this Chapter we shall not keep so strictly within the Limits of this ART in particular, which we are forced sometime to entrench upon the Confines of some neighbour ARTS, relating to Sculpture and Engraving, and referring to the Invention of Letters, antick Images, Pillars, or Pagan Deities of old; which now the Maturity of these latter Ages has so variously distinguished guished and diversified ; of all which, yet in a general Acceptation, we conceive PAINTING to be comprehensive and of near affinity to, and the introducing of which we can hardly judge any Extravagancy, but rather (as we shall briefly endeavour to make it appear) very applicable and consonent to our Deposition in hand.

FOR Pictura and Sculptura, in the Sence of the Poets, were accounted Twins ; and as that Worthy Author Mr. Evelyn, joyning with them Architectura, declares those Three illustrious and magnificent ARTS so dependent upon each other, that they can no more be separated than the very Graces themselves, who are always represented to us holding Hand in Hand, and mutually regarding one another ; we may reasonably conjecture that they were born together ; or however, that the Emergency, or Rise of the one was not long previous to the Invention of the other.

Idea of Painting.

FOR if we take Pictura in a general Acceptation, and according to the Definition of Vitruvius, viz. Fit Imago ejus quod est seu esse potest : It may be comprehensive of not only Painting but Sculpture, Plastick and Mosaick Work, or any other Counterfeit, or Similitude, of any created, or imaginary Being whatsoever ; and so makes no essential Difference at all between them, but only ratione materiae, which is only in the Mechanick and less noble Part of the ART, they agreeing notwithstanding in the Essentials, the more liberal and refined Accomplishments of it.
B 2 tial.

BUT yet this is not all that de facto, there is such Affinity and Similitude between these Two ARTS; but we may affirm 'tis the Excellency also, and mutual Perfection of each other to be so: For as Elements of Architecure. Sir H. Wotton takes notice out of Pliny, where designing to distinguish, he handsomly interweaves them together to our Purpose, saying, That Picture is best when it standeth off as if it were carved; and Sulpture is best when it appeareth so tender as if it were painted.

AND once more to urge the entire Connection of these Two ARTS together, we dare with Confidence enough affirm, wherever we find a compleat ARTIST in Sulpture, he must also have a competent Talent of Knowledge in PAINTING; and particularly more than meanly skilled in the ART of ready Drawing and Designing, and have a sufficient Knowledge of the Nature and Effect of Light and Shadows, which small Commencements, perhaps, made up the compleat Character of not a few of the antient Heroes, whom
Pliny

Pliny does so studiously, yet not undeservedly celebrate.

HAVING made this necessary Digression to vindicate from Impertinency what we may hereafter introduce concerning Sculpture, Plastick, &c. we shall again reassume our first Purpose, and with that Worthy Author, Mr. Evelyn, before-mentioned, easily consent and determine against that Opinion of Epigenes in Pliny, who deposed, That this ART had its Being from Eternity, because it's not Sence, and would contradict the Invention, unless his Sence be of the Eternity of Days, the divine Protoplastes, God Almighty himself, who taking some of that virgin elementary Earth which himself had first created with his own Hands, he framed the Mould of the first Man, and afterwards most miraculously inspired into him a living Soul.

AND if we take Leave to introduce this, we might also bring in many more Instances of the like Nature, performed by the same Hand of the Almighty Power, all which we must confess to be far surpassing, and above the ultimate Attainments and Disquisitions of any created Being, because performed by a Miracle of the Divine Wisdom, and so set far beyond the Comprehension, or Imitation of Man. However, it may derive much to the Honour of Picture in that God himself, the true Prometheus, vouchsaf'd (as may be said in some Sence) to give the First Example of this ART.

AND whence Gregorius calleth Man an earthen Statue; and Suidas relating to Adam said the same was the first Statue, the Image named by God, after which all the ART of Carving and Painting of Men received her Directions.

AND thus as Adam, the Prototype, was the first moving Statue wrought by God, so Lot's Wife, in her Transformation, was the first fix'd and immoveable one: Which latter Instance seems nearer to favour our Purpose. For as F. Junius out of Aur. Prudentius tells us of the miraculous Preservation of that Figure, that it remained a long time entire and compleat, in her Shape, Comeliness, Attire, Ornaments, and in the very Posture, her Face looking backward, retaining still the unchangeable Monument of her antient Disobedience. So that if we could not produce earlier Proofs of the Invention of this ART, this lasting Statue might serve for a sufficient Ground of Belief, that the first Imitation and Invention of Images might easily be derived from this standing Copy of Lot's Wife.

BUT besides that, this Instance comes not properly into this Chapter, we shall pretermit those and descend and see what we can find amongst Men, and begin with Protoplastor, our Father Adam, whom St. Augustin affirms to be the First Inventor of Letters and Sculpture; and that there were several Books about, bearing his venerable Name, mentioned by Epiphanius, and Thomas Aquinas also, in his Treatise De ente & Essentia, speaks of a Volume of Plants described and decyphered by Adam; all which were supposed to be miraculously found out and preserved by the Great Trismegistus; which we have no Reason to contradict, seeing also we have the Testimony of Suidas, who as Mr. Evelyn takes Notice is peremptory in ascribing as was affirmed both Letters and all other Sciences to Adam, τέτε πάντα εὐρηματα, &c. All which, if they may pass for current Picture, may justly boast of its Pre-eminence above other ARTS in the Honour of its early Invention, deriving thus its Pedigree from the very Infancy of the World.

HOWEVER, to pass by these Conjectures, we need not travel far among the antediluvian Patriarchs before we meet with Enos the Son of Seth, and Grand-Child to the sole Monarch of the World, the Patriarch Adam, who, as learned Rabbins report, seeing that those descended of Cain addicted themselves to Wickedness, which was Idolatry, erring from the Worship of the true God, he desirous to restrain them and guide them again into the true Worship, made use of Symbols and Hieroglyphicks, and by the Figures of Animals, Simples, Brute Beasts, and other visible Things which fall under the Sence, he endeavoured to draw them by Degrees to those Things which were invisible.

WHICH also seems to be implied in what we read in the 4th of Genesis, Then began Men to call upon the Name of the Lord, which Broughton interprets of the Beginning of Idolatry; that Men then began to prophane his Name. Or according to Rabbi Solamo, to apply the Name of God to Stars and Men: Or as the Supplement of Chronicles reporteth, That Enos was the first that framed certain Images to stir up the People to the Reverence and Fear of God, which accords well enough with the Opinion of Trismegistus, cited by Leo Baptista de Alberti, where he deposes Picturam & Sculpturam unâ cum Religione exortam, and gives this Reason, Humanitas enim memor naturâ & Originis suâ Deos ex sui vultus similitudine figuravit; so that whether they were invented first for a Sacred, or Prophane, or Civil Use, we shall not much dispute the Question, while in the mean Time they seem to grant the Assertion itself.

MUCH about the same Time, but upon a more remarkable and signal Occasion, we have an Account out of Josephus Cedrenus, of some other Sculptures engraven on Two mighty Obelisks, erected, as he affirms, upon the Account of a Prophecy delivered to them from Adam, wherein he should foretel of two most direful and universal Destructions; the one by Fire, the other by Water: His Posterity thereupon at Joppa reared two Pillars, one of Brick, the other of Stone; whereon were engraven their sideral and cœlestial Sciences; the latter of which stood Proof against the subverting and devouring Elements, and lasted some Thousand of Years after the general Deluge.

THE like is reported of Zoroaster, (supposed to be Cham) the First Inventer of Magick, engraving the liberal ARTS on Fourteen Columns; Seven whereof affirmed to be of Brass, and the rest of Brick. And what shall we say of all those Oracles and sacred Sentences, inscribed diversorum metallorum laminis, and so left to Posterity, which long after, by Fran. Patricius, were collected together to the Number of 320, or of the antick Monuments, setting forth the renowned Atchievements of the Patriarchs of Old, recorded by Seth and Enoch; of which Tertullian, Suidas and others make honourable honourable mention ; and the Ethiopians boast themselves to be the Possessors of at this Day.

NOTWITHSTANDING all this, if any should yet object against the Probability of this so early Invention of these ARTS, in that the Search and Labour after other more necessary Trades and Handicrafts, building of Tents and Places of Habitation ; improvement of Husbandry, and providing of Necessaries for Man's Life ; that these were abundantly enough to furnish all their Time, and might more than duly employ all their Studies and Endeavours, and so leave no room for the Search of other more curious ARTS: To all which we shall only answer, That we no sooner read of Jabal, the Father of such as dwelt in Tents and have Cattle, but the next Verse brings in Jabal, the Inventor of the Harp and Organ ; and Tubal Cain, (supposed by some to be Vulcan) Instructor of every Artificer in Brass and Iron.

ALL which, we presume, may serve to evince that this ART was not wholly unknown to the Patriarchs of Old ; and altho' we can't absolutely depose that it was revealed to Adam, and from him propagated to his Posterity ; yet we may without any scruple determine that the Antients had some Knowledge of it, and that it emerged to some competent Attainment before the Flood.

C H A P. II.

Of the Commencement of PAINTING immediately after the Flood, and from thence down to the middle Ages; together with some Account of the Hieroglyphicks and Sacred Paintings of the Egyptians.

W H A T Seeds of this A R T were planted before this great Catastrophe, we may presume were not all washed away, some whereof probably might have been transmitted by Noah to the new World, besides one Instance before mentioned we have of Enoch's Pillar, engraven with Imagery, which bore up under this direful Calamity, and stood a Monument to after Ages of the glorious Undertaking of those mighty Men of Old.

H O W E V E R, the fore-named Cham, who himself was a Witness of, and Actor in these great Works above-cited, without doubt, would be instrumental in propagating ing to his Posterity all these glorious ARTS and SCIENCES, in which he had so far attained; which seems to be confirmed in what we find was practised by Ninus, one of his Posterity; who having performed the Funeral of Belus his Father, called also Nimrod, the First King of the Assyrians, to allay the Sorrow of whose Death, and in some measure to restore so great a Loss, caused his Image to be made, and gave Privilege of Sanctuary to all Offenders that resorted to it.

AND also by what we read of Mizra, the Egyptian Pharoah, the Son of Chus, and Grand-Child of Cham, who, as Traditions inform us, reared two mighty Columns, adorned with diverse Figures and Engravings; which Mr. Evelyn has taken Notice of; and because the whole Paragraph falls in with our Purpose, we shall put in his own Words; to offer our Sence in any other Dress, were but to give you it in worse Language.

‘ HE brings in Mercurius Trismegistus, ‘ who as he acquaints us 300 Years after the ‘ Flood, and long before Moses, engraved ‘ his secret and mysterious Things in Stone;
 ‘ as himself reports, reforming what had ‘ been depraved by the wicked Cham; some
 ‘ in Letters, some in Figures and enigma-‘ tical Characters; such happily, as were ‘ those

' those contain'd in the magnificent and
 ' stupendious Obelisks erected by Mizra,
 ' the first Egyptian Pharoah, which being at ' least Four Hundred Years before Moses,
 ' as the most indefatigable Kirker has com' puted, does greatly presage their Anti' quity to have been before that holy Pro' phet. But not to put too much Stress
 ' upon superannuated Tradition, this we are ' sure is of Faith and without Controversy,
 ' that in Moses we have the Tables of Stone
 ' engraven by the Finger of God himself;
 ' where the Commandment is express, even
 ' against the Abuse of this very ART, as ' well as an Instance of the Antiquity of ' Idolatry, attesting that of Sculpture, Thou
 ' shalt not make to thy self any graven Image;
 ' but this, which is the first Writing which
 ' we have Scripture to vouch for, doth yet
 ' pre-suppose Engraving to have been of ' much greater Antiquity; what else were
 ' the Teraphim, what the Penates of Laban,
 ' stolen by Rachael, the Idols of Terah, or the ' Egyptian, &c. but we forbear to expatiate,
 ' only that which is by Ben Syrak, some' where in Ecclesiasticus delivered, That the ' Original of Idolatry was from Images, to ' preserve the Memory of the Dead, as in ' process of Time, by the Flatteries of Great ' Men, it was turned to be an Object of ' Adoration, plainly inferring Graving to ' have been elder than either. C AND

AND to bring up the Rear to the Honour of PAINTING, in Contention with them, both in Point of Priority, we have Epiphanius to vouch us, in his first Book contra Hæreses, where ascribing the first Invention of Images to Thara, the Father of Abraham, he affirms, that before his Days they had not graven Images of Wood, or Metal, but only Pictures of Men; which plain Attestation (if we may credit the Authority, which on the other Hand, we have no Reason to contradict) fully vouches the Antiquity of Pictures in compare both with Idolatry and Sculpture, and seems clearly to carry the Invention of PAINTING still higher than either.

NEITHER can we consent that the Invention of the latter should any ways supersede, or abolish, the Practice of the former; for long after that, and sometime before the Migration of the Israelites through the Wilderness into Canaan, the holy Prophet received an express Command from God himself, for that Nation's idolatrous Abuse of the ART, that they should drive out all the Inhabitants before them; destroy all their Pictures, and all their moulten Images, and quite pluck down all their High Places. Where both ARTS are so distinctly taken Notice of, that we can't but acknowledge they were both particularly known to that Nation, and practis'd among them. 'BUT

' BUT to recover its Esteem again be' yond all Prejudice, however by others abu' sed, as indeed many of the best Things
 ' have been, it was (we know,) imputed for
 ' a spiritual Talent in Bazaliel and Aboliab,
 ' who made Intaglias to adorn the High-
 ' Priests Pectoral ; and God himself vouch-
 ' safed Two Exemplaries ; as we find the Pat' tern of the Tabernacle which Exod. 25. 40.
 ' was discovered and shewn un-
 ' to Moses upon Mount Sinai ; and also we ' read of another Pattern of the Temple of ' Jerusalem, delivered unto Solo-
 ' mon by his Father David, after Chron. 28. 19.
 ' the Prescript God had made with his own ' Hand.

' BESIDES all which, we have said
 ' how the Egyptians revered it, as seem' ing to have used it before Letters, or ra' ther their Hieroglyphicks (importing fa' cred Sculpture) where those Elements by ' which they transmitted to Posterity what ' they esteemed most worthy of record ;
 ' and not (as some have imagined) wrap'd
 ' up in those enigmatical Figures, the Se' crets of their ARTS, both Divine and ' Secular : For

*Nondum flumineas Memphis contexere biblos Noverat ; & saxis tantum volucrisq; ferâq;

whence Tacitus calls them Antiquissima monumeta memortia humana impressa Saxis. Such as were also the Horapollinis nota, and all those other venerable Antiquities of this Nature, transposed to Rome out of Egypt, in no less than 42 prodigious Obelisks, of late interpreted by the industrious Kirker, before cited.

BUT it would be too tedious to enumerate the many Instances we could produce of their enigmatical Sculptures engraven on Pillars, Arches, Pyles, Obelisks ; others repositèd in magnificent Pyramids, Sepulchres, Dormitories ; besides innumerable Coloffes, Statues, Idols, Images, and Oracular Deities of Old ; all which do abundantly attest to the venerable Antiquity of this renowned ART.

BUT we shall pass all these by, and take leave to descend a while into their Caves, Hypogæas, or (as they are rend'ed English). Mummies, those sacred Vaults, Conservatories of those as sacred Relicks of their renowned Ancestors of Old, which, according to Mr. Graves, hia.*

Graves, lie hid under the Brow of a continued Hill, situate about Four Miles from Grand Cairo, and adjoining to the famed City Memphis, or Babylon of Old; where among those almost infinite Number of depicted Hieroglyphicks, and mysterious Paintings of their dead Bodies, we hope to find something yet more express and particular to our Purpose; of which therefore we shall endeavour to give some short Account therein, relating to the Periods, both of the Original and utter Abolishment of them.

IT was an Opinion always retained Sacred among the Egyptians, that as long as the Body after Separation, whether by Art, or otherwise, remained entire and uncorrupt, so long they held the Soul was oblig'd to continue with it; but yet, not as a quick'ning and animating Spirit, but only as an Attendant and friendly Guardian to it; hovering still over her divorc'd Nest, thereby shewing some reluctancy thus to leave and be deprived of her former Habitation; but when once the material Form of the Body was dissolv'd, and the whole Mass again dissipated and moulder'd into Dust, then the Soul stood wholly disingaged, and was at Liberty freely to pass into any other Body: Which Opinion of theirs, Pythagoras probably borrowed of them, of his Metempsychosis of Transmigration Souls.

THIS Belief of theirs excited them to that over solicitous Care of preserving sacred and entire the dead Bodies of their Relations; and also in providing them Conditories and Sepulchres, that might be as lasting as their intrusted Relicts, and in which they might remain secure and undisturb'd from the Iniquities of Times and Men. This also prompted, perhaps, the antient Theban Kings to erect those stately Spherical Sepulchres, standing by Siene and Phila, called Tumuli Mercuriales, spoken of by Mr. Graves out of Diodorus; and after the Glory of Thebes was once eclips'd, and the Throne removed to Meraphis, the same Opinions still accompanied, probably incited those Pharoahs there together with their private Ambition and thirst after Glory, to be at so vast Expences in building of Piles, and rearing those Audacia Saxa Pyramidum, as Stattius calls them; and the Egyptians of meaner Rank to spare for no Cost in cutting Hypogreas, those subterranean Dormitories in the Lybian Desarts; all which they designed for Mansions and Habitations for their Bodies after this short Life; and it was in these Reconditories they hoped to live a glorious Memory of Virtue, and to have a mutual Converse with the Gods for an infinite Space.

IF this therefore was their sole Expectation and Happiness they look'd for in another State, then we need not wonder that they were so solicitous in exquisitely adorning their Sepulchres, and so studious in contriving all those Hieroglyphick Paintings and Gildings, with which their Coffins were so curiously beautified and depicted; and as Mr. Graves gives us the Particulars, some with the Figures of Dogs Heads, others with Representations of Anatomies and Dissections of Bodies, before their Embalming, with the Balsam Pots, and other Instruments of Chyrurgery about them: Within, over the Body, were divers Wrappers, spread over with a chalky Salve, upon which Cloaths were commonly portraied the Pictures of those wound up therein, with Colours that will never fade, or decay. Upon the uppermost Covering were Ribbons and Fillets, between which were Hieroglyphicks and Cœlestial Creatures; upon the Breast was a kind of Breast-Plate, made with Folds of Linnen cut Scollopwise, richly painted and gilt; and in the midst of it was the Face of a Woman, with her Arms expanded; on each Side of them, at the Two utmost Ends, was the Head of an Hawk fairly gilt, by which they represented the Divine Nature: Besides these, over their Head, they had commonly portraied the the Image of their tutular God, with several other exotick Characters.

IN all which strange Representations, besides what Ornament and Lustre they added to the Coups, we may conjecture some of them contained the particular Memoirs of the Virtues and noble Actions of the Deceased: In some, perhaps, were wrapped up many sacred Sentences of their Pagan Faith and Theology; and in others, probably, lay hid certain Telefms and magical Incentations, to keep off evil Spirits, and defend them from the Malice and Iniquity of Men.

AND thus we have a short Narrative of the whole Attainment of this ART, with the Occasion and Circumstances of its Advancement among the Egyptians; all which appears to be so plain, that it would be needless to produce Authority; and, we presume, no Man doubts of the Truth of it, that this ART, de facto, was eminently known to them, and for a long Time practised among them.

BUT to assert the Time when it first commenced is a Task of more difficult Enquiry. The first Example we read out of Scripture of this Manner of Burial, we find was practised by Joseph upon his Father Jacob, who commanded his Servants, the Physicians, to embalm him; and after him, upon upon Joseph himself, who both Living and Dying in Egypt, the Text tells us, So Joseph died, being an Hundred and Ten Years Old, and they Embalmed him, and he was put in a Coffin; but now whether the Solemnity was performed in all those Circumstances of their sacred Paintings and Hieroglyphicks before-mentioned we can't possibly assert, unless that ART was known to the great Trismegistus, who lived above Three Hundred Years before Moses, and so consequently some Time before these Patriarchs, from whom they acknowledged to have received all their Mysteries, and sacred Arts and Sciences. That of their enigmatical Engravings, we don't doubt, was practised long before that which the Instance of Mizraim's Two Pillars makes clear: And as to the particular of PAINTING, Pliny in his 35th Book of the first Inventors of it, tells us how the Egyptians boasted that the ART was known and flourished among them for above Six Thousand Years, according to their monst'rous Computation, before it was translated to the Gracians; which we shall neither endeavour to confute, nor calculate the precise Time, or in what Pharoah's Reign their Account might probably fall in with; this only it may serve to evince, viz. the great Antiquity of it, having been long practised among them Time out of Mind.

How-

HOWEVER, though we can't be so positive in asserting the first Practisers of it, the Time and Period of its utter Extirpation among them is obvious enough, as Mr. Ogilby in his Africa has observed, viz. That all the Bodies of the Egyptians that were thus Embalmed, Adorned, and hieroglyphically Characterized, and are found in stone Vaults under Ground, or in Pyramids, were buried there before the Expedition of Cambyfes into Egypt, in the Year of the World Three Thousand Four Hundred and Thirty, as appears in that Cambyfes after his Conquest introducing his own Persian Manners, Rites and Customs, banished, or put to Death, without Mercy, the whole Priesthood of the Nation; whereby this

Mummies            Way of Interring utterly failing 200 Years        was quite laid aside, as appears Old and            from Herodotus; these Priests, above.            says he, only understood those Mysteries, which might not be taught, or communicated to the People in common;
 so that in Effect the whole Science died.

C A A P. III.

The Enquiry after the Attainment of PAINTING continued, referring to the Knowledge and Practice of it in the Time of the Trojans, before their final Overthrow; and also to the Antiquity of the Painting of Shields and other Military Ensigns.

THUS we have taken a Prospect of Egypt, where after many Wand'rings in no less than a double Egyptian Darkness, we have, at length, out of the Ashes of the Dead, and even the very Bowels of the Earth made (we hope) an ample and satisfactory Discovery of the admirable Attainment of the Pencil among them.

NOTWITHSTANDING all which, we dare not affirm the Vulgar had any Discovery of this ART, that sacred Esteem and Reverence, it obtained among them, so strictly forbidding any Communications of it to any popular Enquiries, but lay con-concealed among the Priesthood alone of that Nation, and was wholly employed in the Service of their most sacred religious Mysteries ; 'tis observable not only in this, but in the precedent Instances of other Nations, it has been an Attendant upon their several Religions, and like the Ivy embracing the Oak, as some conjecture it was born with it ; so it has still accompanied, and been a constant Traveller with through all the Stages of Time, and Diversities of Nations.

THE only Probability we have that this ART might possibly be employed in their more civil and secular Concerns. Here in the Practice we find they had of Hieroglyphising their Thoughts, and what they judged most Worthy of Record, whether Divine, or Secular, which ARTS they made use of before the Invention of Letters, before which they had no other Way to transmit to Posterity their several Inventions and Acquisitions ; yet, however, in this Kind, we find very slender Proof of it, particularly relating to PAINTING, and what Francis Junius tells us of those Diadema Regum Egyptiorum which were round beset with the Figures of Asps, wrought with the Needle in diverse Colours, had reference still to their divine Secrets, and contain'd some mystical and sacred Interpretations.

ONLY it may afford us the Consideration of another sort of PAINTING not yet mention'd, call'd Pictura Textilis, Embroidery, or those Needle-work Painting, an Art of very early Invention, wherein the Variety of human Shapes, brute and inanimate Creatures were all exprest in lively Colours; the Glory of which Lucan seems to attribute to the Egyptians, but more probably is of right due to the Phrygians; and for that Reason the Embroiderers were call'd Phrygiones, as Pliny tells us; yet we find this ART was also known and practis'd in other Nations, although probably they might derive it still from them. Such were the Barbilonica Texta among the Chaldeans; Vela Judaica among the Jews; Clanrides Militares among the Acheans and Vestes Attalica, from Attalus King of Pergamus, who to the further Glory of these Works, introduc'd the adorning of them with Gold.

NOT to omit what Homer tells us of those kind of Pictures among the Trojans, although Pliny is positive, and takes it for granted, that during that fatal War, or before, no Man knew what PAINTING was. But then what shall we say to all those costly Works (mentioned by the Poet) wrought in Tapestry by the Trojan Dames, and particularly the Occurences of the then present War between the Greeks and Trojans, with the several Rencounters and other Circumstances, the Commanders all personated in lively Figures; all which was admirably performed by the Hand of the fair Helena herself.

W H A T else was meant by all those Bucklers, Ensigns and Shields, engraven and adorned with such variety of Figures, particularly that of Minerva, beautified with those several Figurations of Fear, Anger, Fame, Wrath, Discord, Contention, and in the midst of all the Portrait of all the terrible Head of Gorgon.

W H A T shall we say of the Shield, also of that famous Græcian Captain Achilles, illustrated with so luxuriant a Variety of Invention, whereon in a glorious Manner was portraied all the heavenly Bodies, Sun, Moon and Stars, Planets, and all other Cœlestial Spheres, the Terraqueous Globe, the Ebbing and Flowing of the Sea, unto all which was added the skillful Practices both of Peace and War. Ulysses we find upon his Shield, had the Representation of a Dolphin and Typhon, breathing out Flames of Fire. The Valiant Agamemnon in the Trojan War bore in his Shield a Lion with this Epigraph, Terror hic est hominum est qui hunc gerit est Agamemnon.

To all which we might yet super-add many more to the same Purpose, but we forbear forbear to expatiate, and shall bring in only one single Instance out of Virgil, which is yet more clear and absolute than all those, where we find Aeneas after his Arrival at Carthage, attending for the Queen in the sumptuous Temple of Juno, where his Eyes and Thoughts were soon taken up upon the Splendors and Beauty of the Place; among which none had such a Share in his Wonder, or surprized him more than those excellent and memorable Paintings, containing the entire History of his Country's fatal Overthrow by the Gracians, with the renowned Actions and Adventures of those noble Captains on either side, at the Sight whereof the Poet tells us,

Constitutit & Lachrymans quis jam locus in- quit Achate,
Quà Regia in terris nostri non plena laboris.

AND how true and lively these were all represented, we may easily judge by that Amazement and compassionate Sorrow they moved in him, which he reflected upon all those Calamities and direful Disasters that so lately besel his native Country and Companions; and of which we find these Pictures gave him so fresh and lively a Sense, that his Eyes with a flood of Tears soon gave abundant Testimony to it.

*Sic ait atq; animum Picturâ possit inani
 Multa Gemens largog; humectat fluminis Vultum.*

And because the whole Passage will give Satisfaction, take it as it's rend'ed English by the incomparable Mr. Sandys,

For as on all the Rarities he gaz'd,
 (The Queen expecting) their Felicities,
 And amulous Arts admiring, he his Eyes
 Now fixt on Iliums fatal Fights thro' all
 The World divulg'd the Gracian General.
 Old Priamus sees, and stern Æacides Cruel to both, struck with such Sights as these.

To Achates said, what Place, what Region
 So distant where our Labours are unknown;

—— Suppress thy Dread.

This said, his Thoughts upon the Picture fed.

His Heart with Sighs, his Eyes with Rivers fraught,

For now he sees how they at Ilium fought.
 Here fled the Greeks, the Trojan Youth pursue;

Bright helm'd Achilles, there the Phrygians flew.

Nor far off Rhesus white Pavilion stood
 By cruel Diomed by Streams of Blood.
 In dead of Night, surpriz'd, who bear away

His Horses to the Gracian Camp, 'ere they

Of Zanthus drank, or of Troy's Pastures fed.
 Here Thoily's disarm'd, and wounded fled;
 Poor Boy, too weak to match Achilles
 Force;

Cast from his Chariot by his frightened
 Horse,

Yet holds his Reins, his Neck and Tref-
 ses trail'd,

On purpl'd Earth his Spear the Dirt engrail'd, &c.

AND 'tis no wonder good Aeneas his Thoughts were so busied about these Objects; yet upon another Score if we may give Credit to what Ovid tells us, That he had a peculiar Genius to that ART, and at the Request of Calypso, after their Overthrow, himself delineated and painted the whole Siege of Troy, with the Circumstances observable in it.

AND if any will yet object and allege, That all these were only Poetical Fictions, and Ornamental Parergees to the main Subject, and probably had no Foundation of Truth in them; as to that in Virgil we can't so easily consent that he should Romance in a Passage so material, and tending nothing to the Honour of his Aeneas, whom his Design was to make the Example of a compleat Captain. But for Homer, all Writers agreeing that he flourished, either during that fatal War, or however, not long after, in point of Possibility, we fear it will prove dubious if we credit that receiv'd Axiom, Nihil est in intellectu quod non fuit prius insensu. Whether the Power of Imagination be able to form an Idea of A R T not yet invented, and so elegantly and amply describe it in all those Circumstances and Requisites attending upon it; which yet at this Time, or at the pitch of Græcian Glory, when this A R T seem'd to be in its highest Ascendant and compleat Lustre, would be found a Task intricate enough to busy, if not to baffle the Pencil of an Apelles himself.

AND as to that Particular, whether they were Embroider'd, Woven, Painted, Engraven, or Emboss'd, 'tis not much material, any of them is enough to evince, altho' not the entire A R T of P A I N T I N G, that yet the Skill and Attainment of ready Drawing and Designing, with many other Accomplishments of it, were sufficiently known to them, and practis'd among them.

AND yet not wholly to acquiesce and down the Bucklers whilst we may seem to appear safe under the Protection of so many Shields and Ensigns, which as sure Traditions of antient Authors inform; were not only variously characteriz'd, but also beautified with the Elegancy of Colours;
 all which we can bring in to our Defence, not only from the Practice of the Israelites in the Wilderness, but also from the Examples of so far antienter a Date, that they seem to have manifested this Truth, and looked into the Antediluvian, as well as this latter World; and for Instance, particularly that mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, of Osyris, surnamed Jupiter the Just, and Son to Cham, the cursed Son of Noah; called of the Gentiles, Janus; who being banished from the Tents of Sem and Japhet, to seek some remote Places to settle in. To that Purpose he assembled a mighty Army, in which Expedition, both himself, his Sons, Hercules, Macedon, and Anubis, and others, had painted certain Signatures upon their Shields, Bucklers, and other Weapons: For Example; Osyris bare on his Shield a Scepter Royal, ensigned on the Top with an Eye; Hercules a Lyon Rampant holding a little Axe; Macedon a Wolf, and Anubis a Dog.

AND

AND if these Instances seem not w<sup>o</sup> fully, to enforce the Probability of the Trojans Acquisition of their Knowledge in the Experiment of Colours, from the Examples of former Ages; from whose Copies they might so easily have transcribed this ART, we have the Testimony of Homer himself; yet to add, who, as Pliny takes Notice, has otherwise been sparing enough of Speaking of Pictures and Colours; yet lets us know what great Request that Red Earth, call'd Rubrica, obtain'd among the Trojans, by his ample Commendations of those * Ships that were so admirably adorned and painted therewith.

* Such are call'd
 by Homer
 ΜΙΑΤΟΠΙΔΕΝΟΙ.

NOT to pretermitt what Andrew Favine, in his Theatre of Honour, delivers concerning Noah, who took for his proper Signature, or Device, a Lyon Rampant, in token of his Sovereignty; and also gave to his Sons their several Cognizances and Badges; and not long after, we find the Twelve Children of Israel receiving their distinct Ensigns from their Father Jacob. Of all which, our Author, out of Martinus Borheus, undertakes to give us the several Blazons of the particular Fields and Charges.

AND yet to make the Testimony more ample, after this, in the Migration of the Children

Children of Israel through the WilderNESS into the Land of Canaan, (which Chronologers make to be about Twenty Years before the first Foundation of Troy) we find they received a Command from God himself, that Filii Israelie quisque juxta vexillum suum cum signis secundum domum majorum suorum castra habento; not only implying the Four Standards of Judah, Reuben, Ephraim, and Dan; into which, Twelve Tribes were collected, and had their several Appointments; under all which were depicted and distinguished with several Colours, Signatures and Forms, but also had reference to those more particular Ensigns of each Family, which were born by them in Time of War upon their Shields, Coat-Armours, and other Habiliments; and to this Sence Lyra upon the Place is affirmative; Insigna propria sunt in vestibus & Scutis quibus bellatores tuto se cognoscunt & suos ab adversaries distinguant; and thus from this so antient Practice of Painting their Shields, other Nations might happily become Imitators of them; and amongst them, not improbable, the Old Germans, as we may not altogether insignificantly collect from the Word Scyldery; in High Dutch, Teutonick, signifying PAINTING; which if it be of the same Date with the rest of the Language, which is presumed to be as Old as Babel, no doubt they they had this Practice among them; for both Scyldery and Scylder, a Painter, are Derivatives, and taken from the Word Scylt, a Shield; which is yet retained in that Sence, both among them and the inferior Germans at this Day.

C H A P. IV.

IF we think fit to travel as far as the Indies, we shall find the Kingdom of China to be not only (reported) of that great Antiquity, over which their Kings have successively swayed the Sceptre in Peace, without Conquest, or Invasion, for some Thousands of Years, but also by Advantage of that Peace (the Nurse of Arts) and their peculiar Genius and Constitutions, they have been always great Searchers into, and lucky Inventors of many wonderful Arts and Sciences; and to mention those two (so well known) of Painting and Guns, both which they tell us have been used among them Time out of Mind, which we shall not endeavour to vindicate, but take what is presumed and acknowledged by by all that these ARTS were undoubtedly known to them long before they were ever practised in our European Nations; which if so, there is Place for some Probability from a parallel Collection of the Rise and Progress of ARTS; that many other curious Inventions, and particularly those of Drawing and Painting in several Circumstances appearing more obvious, and easily attainable. I say, we can't but conjecture they had an early Knowledge of them, consequently that they were practised among them long before they appear'd upon the Stage of this Quarter of the World. Neither is it altogether immaterial to think those Arts to be as Old as their Religion itself; and consequently their Nation, which (as reported) has ever entertain'd Paganism and Idolatry, and worshipp'd the Devils in divers Shapes, and have had Images and Pictures of several, both he and she Saints, and their Characters Recorded in long Legands of their several Lives; besides an incomparable Sort of other Idols and Images, with which both their Temples and Sepulchres at the solemn Interment of their Corps were furnished and adorned. The Reason of which might probably be taken from the same Opinion they entertain'd as Mr. Purchas relates with the Egyptians of the Transmigration of Souls, Souls, therefore were they at so great Expences in their Funeral Solemnities, and particularly their Coffins were adorn'd with all the Curiosity that Art could invent, which that it might not be wanting in any Thing, it was their Care and Study in their Life to provide against that Time, when (as Maffens acquaints us) they had this peculiar Custom, after all other Ceremonies performed, to burn upon the Graves of the Deceased many Papers painted with Men, Cattle, and Provision for their Use in the next World.

AND as they fell in with some of the Opinions of the Egyptians, so also were they skill'd in the Practice of some of their Hieroglyphicks, some of which are still extant among their Writings and printed Records, particularly one of great Antiquity at this Day to be seen in the Vatican Library in Rome, made up in various Folds, besides many others in the Hands of the Virtuosi, in all representing Pictures, as some Landskips, Stories, and the like; besides, the Form of their Writings was in a manner of the same Nature, where every Character contained not only Words, but some of them entire Sentences.

NOT to omit what is recorded in the Discoveries of Morocco, and other Parts of the World, where 'tis also affirmed they hieroglyphiz'd their Thoughts, Histories and Inventions to Posterity; not much unlike the Egyptians, tho' in less durable and permanent Matter. The same also Joa. Laeo affirms of the like Attainments, the Acade, and those of Nova Francia: So natural it seems and useful was those ARTS to the least civiliz'd Nations, that we see both Indies meet together to entertain and embrace them; and after the Example of other Nations, have always employ'd them in their most Sacred and Mysterious Subjects.

AND if (as we find) this ART has thus extended it self even unto the utmost Confines, and display'd its Ensigns equally into both the Indies, and remotest Angles of the World, we can't easily presume, in the mean while, the intermediate Climates were wholly ignorant in the like Attainments, but rather on the contrary (the much earlier Plantation of which, allowing a larger Time of maturing and growing up into a Perfection of a more curious Acquisitions,) that they had a more ample and advantageous Discovery of it; and to instance particularly of Greece, a Country of old, famous both for Arts and Arms, the Theatre of all the Gallantry of human Achievements, whereof most of the refined Wits of the World have acted their Parts,

the Center of all Inventions and ingenious Accomplishments; some Instances out of which more especially relating to this ART, we have discoursed in the last Chapter, in reference to the Trojans, which now we shall no further mention, but descend and endeavour more particularly to give some Account of their several Pretences, in what Manner, and by whom this ART was first attained and emerged among them.

AND here we fear we shall find ourselves at a Loss, which we are forced to research into the Accounts of elder Times, and the fabulous and fictitious Relations of the Poets of those Ages, by whose Pens the First and Renowned Artists stand celebrated, where their more confused and divided Determinations seem to have left as great a Dissatisfaction upon the World, as the Obscurity and utter Silence among other Nations.

FOR sometimes we find the Honour of this ART ascribed to Prometheus, who some make to be the Father, others the Son of Deucalion, and (as Lactantius tells us) lived in the Days of Jupiter, when Temples and Idols began to be erected, and were the first that ever made Statues; and to that Sence therefore is interpreted the Fiction of his Cœlestial Flame stolen from Apollo, wherewith he inspired and gave Life to his D 2            Images.

Images. To import no more than that Action, lively Grace and Motion, which by his wonderful Skill he gave to all his Figures, whereby they might not improperly be said to Live, Move and Act. Sometimes we find the Honour devolved upon Dadalus, that famed and renowned Artificer of Old, one of so universal and happy Address, that not only this, but many other strange and wonderful Inventions have been ascribed to him; whence Opera Dadalea became Proverbical and applicable to any rare and extraordinary Curiosities: He flourished before the Days of Homer, and stands recorded by the Poet for his Invention of those strange Automaton, or moving Statues, which (as reported) came to the Battle of themselves.

BUT it would be too tedious to tell you of Narcissus Dygmalion and others; concerning whom, some have endeavour'd to interpret their Fictions in favour of this ART, and would have bestowed the Honour of the Invention upon them; but whatsoever their Pretences may be, this is generally agreed, that the Gracians receiv'd their first Knowledge of it from the Egyptians, and (as reported) by means of the Phenicians, in whose Ships Cadmus sailing into Egypt, brought back with him the Invention of Letters, and all other ARTS, among which we may presume this of PAINTING accompanied, accompanied, an ART that had for a long Time flourished in that Nation; altho' they have not been so Just and Ingenious in their Writings to make any Acknowledgement of it; but rather endeavoured to abscond the Glory of another Nation, to take the Honour of the Invention to themselves.

NEITHER, in the mean Time, were the Phenicians themselves ignorant of it; for as Nat. Comes tells us, speaking of them, Non solum in Numismatis sed etiam in Picturis domesticis & in Navigiis Jumentorum Imagines Antiqui Pingere consueverunt; to which is interpreted the Fiction of the Bull, whereon Europa was conveyed away, it being only the peculiar Signature of that Ship, upon the Prow, or Stern, whereof the Portrait of the Bull probably was depicted.

AMONG all the celebrated Works of the renowned Artists of Old, among other Nations, we meet with Writers have been so silent herein, that we find but Two only upon Record, whose Names are mentioned by Pliny, viz. Philocles an Egyptian, and one Gyges, a Lydian by Birth; when (by a strange coherence) he would make to have lived in Egypt, and there found out the ART, and afterwards to have travel'd into Greece, and there given the first Proof of Painting and Limning among them.

AND thus while they have endeavour'd to conceal the Names, and suffer Oblivion to trample upon the Memory of the first Propogators of this ART among them, thereby the easier to transfer the Lawrel upon their own Heads, we shall find they have as little agreed among themselves, and their divided Interests, has left us as unsatisfied in their several Pretentions, as they have jointly coucurr'd to pass by and leave obscure the first Authors and Communicators of this ART to them. For sometimes they ascribe it to Cleanthes the Corinthian, somewhile to Telephanes the Syconian; and as Theophrastus gives it to Polygnottus the Athenian; and if we give Credit to Aristotle, he tells us of one Pyrchus, or Euchir, that lived long before any of them; was the Nephew of the fam'd Dædalus, and first practis'd this ART in Græce. Pliny in this Difficulty, knowing not what to determine, seems jointly to give the Honour to no less than those, viz. Hygrænon, Dinias and Charmas, who, as he declares, first practis'd the Monocromata, a sort of Pictures made with only one Colour; which Assertion of his (from a Collection, not only of the natural and elemental Simplicity of the Thing itself, but also from the remote Station in the Account of Time, in which he places the Authors themselves: Whom he can't but judge by all Congruity and Consequence, to be of more Antiquity than Bularchus the famous Painter, who lived in the Days of Romulus and Candaules King of Lydia) we can't altogether disallow of.

AND thus while the Gracians stand at odds and divided among themselves, a Neighbour People from then an obscure Corner in Italy, seem to appear and steal away the Honour which they thought, perhaps, no other were concern'd in but themselves; for we find, as Leo. Baptista de Albert, tells us, Fuere quidam Antiquissimi in Italiâ Etrusci, pingendi Arte omnium Peritissimi, that this ART was very antiently practis'd among the Tuscans, who were a People of Old, strangely Superstitious and given to Idolatry; whence their Name Tuscans, from Idol Sacrificing; and to confirm that, Pliny gives us an Account of many strange little Antick Images of their Gods among them, which were afterwards brought to Rome, and known by the Name of Tuscanica. And more particularly a little after in his Thirty First Book, speaking of them both as to the Antiquity and Excellency of some of their Pictures, which were extant in his Time. ' There are to be seen (says ' he) at this Day at Ardea, within the Temples there, many antick Pictures, more Antient than the City of Rome; and I assure

' assure you no Pictures came ever to my ' Sight, which I wonder so much at, in that ' they continue so long fresh, and as if they ' were but newly made ; especially, confi-
 ' dering the Places where they are so rui-
 ' nate, and lying open to the Injury of the ' Weather : In like Manner at Lanuvium
 ' there remain yet two Pictures of the Lady
 ' Atalanta, and Queen Helena, close one by ' another, painted naked, by one and the ' same Hand ; both of them are for Beauty
 ' incomparable, and yet one of them may ' easily be discovered to be a Maiden by her
 ' modest and chaste Countenance ; which ' Pictures, notwithstanding the Ruins of the ' Temple where they stand, are very little
 ' blemished, or defaced.

A D D to this what is analogous, and may be inferred from their earlier Entertainment, and advance in a near allyed
 A R T, viz. and that of Architecture, and more particularly referring to the Five several distinguished Orders of Columns, of all which, the Tuscan is sufficiently known to be the most unpolite, and of the rudest Composure ; and as to any Thing of human Acquirements, as it must be acknowledged, the more plain and imperfect they are, and less removed from a native Simplicity, the nearer they relate to the first and weaker Attempts in that Kind ; so comparatively,

paratively, that this ruder Composure of the Tuscans may be more antient, and of an earlier Invention than any of the other Græcian Orders; and, moreover, that the Doric, Ionick, Corinthian, &c. must be presumed to have followed after, and gradually to have succeeded one another; and as the Knowledge of the ART obtained further, so still refined upon each other, 'till at length it arrived to the perfect Beauty and Elegancy of the Corinthian and Composit.

THUS, at length, we have made a Survey and seen how far the Pretences, as well of other Nations, as the Græcians, will extend and amount to; and now to sum up all, so many have been the Pretenders we shall find that have laid a Claim to this Invention, that we can't promise absolute Satisfaction in this Enquiry; neither can we hope to make any Determinations upon so slender an Account as we are forced to lay down. Therefore, leaving the further Search to any that has a thirst to make a more strict Enquiry; we shall only apply as to the ART it self, in compare with what has been recorded to the Honour of the Great Græcian Poet, that

Seven Cities argu'd in an equal Strife,
For the Honour of Great Homer's Birth and Life.

HERE we find not only particular Cities and Men, but as many Nations also, have equally contended and made their serious Pretentions to the first Invention and Birth-Place of this ART; and have not a little valued themselves upon the Score of being reputed the first Fathers and Propagators of so renowned and extraordinary an ART as this was then not unworthily esteemed.

C H A P.

C A A P. V.

Of the Progress of PAINTING among the Græcians, from its first Infancy, with the several Steps and Gradations by which it obtain'd, and at length arriv'd to its highest Ascendant, in the Time of the renowned Apelles.

HOWEVER, (as in the last Chapter is discours'd) was the first Author of this ART, this we know, that nothing Great can be invented and finished at the same Time; and as Arnobius expresses it, the ARTS are not together with our Minds sent forth out of heavenly Places, but all of them are found out here on Earth, and are in process of Time forged soft and fair by a continual Meditation. Our poor and needy Life perceiving some casual Things to fall out prosperously, whilst it doth mistake and try, whilst it doth slip, reform and change; hath out of this same assiduous Reprehension made up small Sciences of ARTS, the which it hath afterwards, wards, by a continual Study, brought to some considerable Degree of Perfection. And therefore Ælian says, so Rude and Imperfect were the first Attempts of this ART, that to avoid the Danger of a Mistake, they were wont constantly to affix to their Works such a clear and discerning Character of distinction, as this is a Horse, an Ox, or a Tree, &c. And what higher Expectations can we derive from a Portrait, or Profile of a Face drawn from the Shadow upon a Wall; or when we find Gyges, whom Pliny sometime calls the first Painter, born in Lydia, which, as he says, was Tuscania, went into Egypt, found out the ART there, and all his Skill arrived only to some competency of Design, probably with a Coal, or some such coarse Material. From which Sort of Picture they advanced not much further, 'till some competent Time after, came Polignotus, the first that painted Encaustice, or by Fire; which was not enameling on Gold, but with hot glowing Irons, to draw, or cast their Design into Wood, or Ivory, and possibly to finish with some slight Shadowing within; for before that, as Carel van Mander, in his Lives of the Painters observes, the First Pictures were only drawn, and consisted of Out-Lines only, and therefore called Linearis Pictura.

THE next Step they advanced was by the Invention of Cleanthes and Thelephanes, who super-added some Finishing within, and filled their Out-Lines with one Colour, which was only a Piece of Red Potsheard, pounded and fine ground; First found out, and, as some affirm, us'd by Callias the Athenian.

AND thence, as in the last Chapter, they were called Monocromata; and to the Assistance of these came Higienontes, Dinias and Charmas, who also made Faces with one Colour only.

EUMAUROS was the First that made Distinction of Sexes, whereby the Form of a Man was discernable from that of a Woman.

AFTER him flourished Cimon of Cleonen, who mightily improved upon these small Attainments; and which they before him, seemed only to crawl along the Shore in small Shallops.

Illi robor & es triplex, Circa pectus erat, &c.

HE was the First bold and daring Man that took Courage to adventure into the Ocean of this ART, that made many remarkable Discoveries of the incognita thereof, and left the Way open and F fairly

fairly obvious to all his Followers ; for he enriched it with such a Variety of Embellishments, that in him first it began to have some Form of itself, and arrive to a competent Perfection ; what in their Paintings was Dead and Stiff, he gave Motion and Life to by his Skill, that he attained to in the Art of Fore-shortenings, turning the Faces of his Figures several Ways, either looking Upward, Backward, or Downward ; and by his Knowledge in the various Motions of the Limbs and Joints, and Muscling of the whole Body, which he was the first that attained and taught, what before either they knew nothing at all of Drapery, or, however, but some very unpleasent, flat and startch'd Way, he rectify'd, and, as Pliny tells us, taught a true and natural sort of Drapery, and the proper Plaiting and Foldings of all sorts of Garments.

UPON those Inventions succeeding Times still improv'd, in which emerg'd particularly Alycon and Polignotus the Thracian ; the latter of which is celebrated for Painting Women in gay and glorious Apparel, with their Coverings and other Attirements of fundry and changeable Colours. It was, we find, of his Invention to paint his Figures with their Mouths open, making them shew their Teeth, and in short represented much Variety of Countenance, far different

different from that rigorous and heavy Look of the Visage aforetime. His Master-piece, or, however, that which had a more especial Character of Remark, was his Table, which afterwards adorn'd the Gallery of Pompey, of a Soldier upon a Scaling-Ladder, with a Target in his Hand, so Artificially, or rather fortunately design'd, that it could not be determin'd whether he was climbing up, or coming down.

THE next of Note that succeeded him, and advanc'd still the Pencil into a higher Reputation was Appollodorus of Athens, and it was his Peculiar only to introduce into his Paintings what was Choice and Rare, and taught to express the Favour and Beauty of any Thing.

AND thus when the Way was laid open by the Discoveries of those that went before, and the ART much cultivated and brought to some Pitch of Maturity, appeared the famous and renowned Zeuxis, to whom Appollodorus publickly yielded the Bays, and acknowledg'd in a Copy of Verses he had stolen the Mystery of the ART from them all entirely to himself, and such Esteem and Value had they for him and his Art, that he was sought out and employed upon all great Occasions, and his Pieces esteemed and sold at an extraordinary nary Value; so that in process of Time he arrived to that Wealth and Estate, that he resolved to work no longer for Money, but frankly made Presents of all his Pieces, saying, that he valued them above Price.

To make a recital of his Works, would be a Thing too tedious, and not proper to this Design: I shall only instance in some of the Chief, as his Penelope, wherein he not only painted the outward Personage and Feature of the Body, but also expressed most lively the inward Affections and Qualities of the Mind. His famous Wrestler, or Champion, in which he pleased himself so well, that he subscribed it with μωμήσται τις μάλλον ἢ μωμήσται.

So extraordinary he was in his ART, that Pliny could easier tell what little Points he was defective in, then recount the many Advantages and Excellencies he was Master of; for in other Respects he was so curious, that when he was to paint a Table for the Agrigentines to adorn the Temple of Juno Licinia, he would have the liberty to see all the Maidens in the City naked, out of which he chose five of the fairest and most exact Feature and Proportion, and from thence to form one incomparable Beauty.

Lib. 35. 9. ch.
 Making his Head and Joints
 somewhat too large.

CONTEMPORARIES with him, were Timanthes, Androcydes and Parrasius; the last of which was so bold as to give an open Challenge to Zeuxis; the Passage of which Rencontre was pleasant, and succeeded to the Honour of both the Antagonists; tho' in point of the Victory in this Tryal, it was yielded to Parrasius by Zeuxis himself, who for the Test of his Skill had brought upon the Stage a Table whereon he had painted Clusters of Grapes so lively, that the Birds of the Air were tempted down, and offered to peck at them. Parrasius only had cunningly, and so artificially painted a Curtain on his Table to cover and secure his Choice Piece of Work underneath that; when Zeuxis saw it, confident on his own Side upon so impartial Judgment, as from the pure Indication of Nature was given, and greedy with Expectation, said to Parrasius, Come on, let us see what you have got behind your Cloath, with an unhappy Offer at the same time to draw the Curtain, saw both his Error, and the Victory lost, for that he had only beguiled the poor Birds, but Parrasius had deceived Zeuxis himself a profess'd Artist.

THE same Zeuxis afterwards made a remarkable Table, whereon he had painted a Boy carrying a Basket of Grapes, which were so lively, that he deceiv'd the Birds a second time, but that return'd upon him with a pretty severe Reflection, for that he had painted the Boy no better, who then would certainly have affrighted and secur'd those Creatures from attempting any Thing upon the Grapes.

As for Parrasius, before-mention'd, as he had the fortune to obtain the Success over Zeuxis; so was also a Man of real Deserts and Accomplishments, for he improv'd the ART in many Points; he was exact in Symetry, and the just Measures and Proportions of the Parts; observed well the various Gestures and Positions of the Countenance; the first that studied the curious couching and laying the Hairs of the Head in order, the lovely Grace and Beauty about the Mouth; he first exactly express'd, and by confession of all Painters that saw his Work, he won the Prize and Praise from all, in concluding the Profiles and Extremities of his Lineaments, which is a very material Point, and a Matter of considerable Difficulty in this ART; for as to the Proportion, Action and Gestures, Colouring and Finishings within, and some other Accomplishments, Things worthy and highly commendable, many before him were Masters of, but to finish, or shadow off the Profile well, to round the Extremities to fall into themselves, as if they shadowed dowed somewhat behind, and yet shew'd that which they seem'd to hide; this so curious and inexplicable a Point, was at that Time a more than ordinary Attainment, and a peculiar Felicity in this renowned Parrasius, and had the Honour of it ascribed to himself alone by Zenocratas and Antigonus, two Writers of this ART about that Age.

THERE are many rare Paintings of his mention'd by Pliny, as the witty Piece, his Dæmon Atheniensium. The common People of Athens, wherein he admirably represented the various and different Natures and Dispositions of a giddy Multitude, as Wrathful, Unjust, Unconstant, and at the same time, Gentle, Exorable and Pitiful; Haughty, Glorious, Proud, and at the same Time Humble, Lowly and Submiss; all which Varieties and Contradictions he reconciled in this one Table. Then his Piece of Archigallus, so admir'd by Tiberius afterwards, who esteem'd it at Sixty Thousand Sester-tiums, and preserv'd it in his own Bed-Chamber, with his boasted Portrait of Hercules, who, as Parrasius would persuade, vouchsafed himself to appear and sit to him while he drew him to the Life in his most exact Proportions and Features.

BUT after all this it seems, he was out-done at last in his Piece of Ajax, and the awarding the Armour of Achilles to Ulysses, by Timantes of Samos, in a Painting of the same Subject, who was a Man of an excellent fine Wit and Invention, and the Author of that famous Piece of Iphigenia, so celebrated and harangu'd by the Orators of those Times, wherein portraying the poor Lady at the Altars Feet, and those about her with mighty dejected and sorrowful Countenances, bewailing the instant Death of this young Princess and her Uncle Mene-laus above the rest, labouring still under a greater Measure of Sorrow and Lamentation; by this Time he had out-done himself, and spent all the Signs and outward Expressions of the heaviest Compunction and Sorrow that his ART could invent; and being yet to Portray her own Father Agamemnon, his Fancy happily suggested to him to represent his Face cover'd with a Veil, as not being able to express so extraordinary a Grief above the rest, as it must needs be conceiv'd he had to see his own Daughter Sacrificed, and guiltless Blood spilt.

A N O T H E R ingenious Example of his Wit, was a small Table of his Cyclops, lying a Sleep, where, to shew in that small Compass, such a Giant-like Bigness, he de-vis'd.

vis'd to introduce a Company of little sporting Satyrs with long Rods, taking the Measure of his Thumb: But to instance no more, this was observable of him, that in his Works there was ever some hidden Thing to be understood, and more to be conceiv'd than was painted; and tho' in his Pictures was shown as much Art as could be, yet his Wit ever went beyond his Art.

ABOUT this Time flourish'd Arestides, whose Excellency lay in expressing the Passions and Affections, and decyphering all the Virtues and Vices, and as particularly appear'd by that Piece of his of the Indulgent Mother, mortally wounded in the Body, and a sucking Infant hanging at the same Time upon her Breast, where, unconcern'd for her own Life, she express'd a wonderful Reluctancy, and strange Strife within her in regard to the Infant, as loath to deny it Food, and unwilling to give it the Breast, for fear of destroying it with her Blood, which mingled with her Milk, issued forth in great abundance. This Table was dear to Alexander, and carried along with him to Pella; his Works were of such esteem; that King Attalus gave a Hundred Talents for one Piece, and Six Thousand Sesterces for another.

THERE were many other Artists excellent in several Masteries, near that Time, of whom we shall give you a more succinct Account; as Pyricus only famous for counterfeiting all base Things, as earthen Pitchers, a Scullery of Rogues together by the Ears, Swine tumbling and wallowing in the Mire, &c. whereupon he was furnamed Rupographus.

DEMON could paint the Genus and Inclination of Men, and Nicomachus was famous for making Wrestlers.

PAUSIAS, who was suppos'd to have some Skill in the way of Fresco, was excellent for the Relief and Raising his Figures, especially in Black and White, that the Beholder thought his Table was really embossed, and in some Places broken and hollow.

EUPHRANOR of Istmus made his Figures large, and of a Colossæan Greatness, and was the first that could represent the State and Majesty of a King.

NICIAS was commended for Portraits of Women, for perspective and foreshortening, and laid a great Share of his Skill and Commendation, in that his Paintings were sufficiently height'ned and deepened; he refused for one single Piece of King Ptolemy Sixty Talents.

SOON after these Times flourished Eupompus Master to Pamphilus, Master to the Great Apelles, who painted many admired Pieces, and whose Fame brought Lysippus over from Syconia to see and learn something of his Skill, who, after some Converse, and among other Questions, asked him what Masters he follow'd, or what Patterns he painted by, he return'd him no present Answer, but carrying him into the Market-place, full of Men, Women and Children, told him, those were the Patterns and Examples he made use of in all his Works; with which Answer Lysippus return'd well satisfied and inform'd: He gain'd such a Love and Authority among them, that of the two Kinds of Pictures Helladicum the Greekish, and Asiaticum, they for his Sake introduc'd a new Division, and parted the Greekish into two, he being by Birth a Syconian, into Ionick, Syconick, and the Attick.

AFTER him succeeded his Scholar Pamphilus of Macedonia, the first that improv'd himself, and the ART, by his Study of good Literature, and especially in Arithmetick and Geometry; without which, he was of Opinion it was impossible to be a perfect and compleat Painter. His Authority so far prevail'd, that by a strict and perpetual Ediſt, the States of Greece ordain'd, that all Gentlemens Gentlemens Sons, and Freeborn, should go to the Painting School, and there be taught First, above all Things, the ART Diagraphice: That no Slave should have that Privilege, or under a Penalty be taught by any the ART, or Mystery of Painting; and that it should be accounted and rang'd in the first Degree of the liberal Sciences. He taught none under a Talant for Ten Years. To whom Melanthus and Apelles himself were Pupils upon those Terms.

AND thus we see when the Countenance of States and Kingdoms by publick Authority of many Edicts and Sanctions, had raised the Reputation of this ART, above all mean, beggarly, or mechanick Constructions or Reprehensions; when the ingenious Artists was not only set above a common Contempt, but remov'd far beyond at ease from any necessitous Compliance, to work for trifling or illiberal Rewards, as would hardly find him Bread, and in such a Condition as would depress the noblest Minds; when Time and Encouragement, and the cherishing Influence of so many worthy Fathers and Favourers had ripen'd this ART, and advanc'd it to a Growth of high Reputation; and lastly, when mutual Emulation, a Thirst of Glory, and long Experience, had labour'd and refined it to a great Degree of Perfection, Est in rebus humanis
quædam

quodam prodire tenus, & definitus crescendi modus, quem Apelles arte sua inclusit. It receiv'd at length its full and final Accomplishment in the Pencil of the Great Apelles, who gave the last Hand to it, and in whom (as History tells us) it was not in its highest Ascendent, both ART and ARTIST being indulg'd in the Bosom of so great † a Monarch and Mecenas, that none after could be able to give a greater Countenance, or Encouragement.

† Alexander
the Great.

C H A P. VI.

Of the highest Degrees of Perfection that the ART of PAINTING attained to in the Days of Apelles, and some others, who were Contemporaries with him.

WE may presume now we are got to the Top of the Hill, if we can give Credit to Pliny, who, speaking of the Growth and Perfection of this ART, referring particularly to Apelles, tells us, as a Preliminary to this Account of him, that he surpass'd all that ever went before, or came after him, Et nemopostea inventus est qui artem ultra provixerit. He was born in 112 Olympiad after the building of Rome 420 Years, and 324 before Christ. Strabo says in Ephesus, and from thence came into Syconia, and there put himself a Pupil to Pamphilus.

AND now upon a Review back of so many several Excellencies and Masteries in this ART, as are above-recited, one would imagine imagine there were no Place left for higher Attainments, and Apelles himself was so ingenuous to own so great a Proficiency therein, as might seem to add Confirmation, while in the Disposition, or Ordinance, he modestly yielded to Amphion; in the Measures, or Proportions, he subscribed to Aschepiodorus; and of Protogenes was wont to say, in all Points he was equal to him, if not above him; but after all, there was yet one Thing wanting in them all, which was instar omnium, or, however, the Beauty and Life of all, which he only ascribed, and was proud in being the sole Master of himself, viz. his Venus by the Greeks, named  $\chi\alpha\pi\iota\sigma$  a certain peculiar Grace, sometimes called the Air of the Picture, resulting from a due Observation and Concurrence of all the essential Points and Rules requisite in a compleat Picture, accompany'd with an unconstrained and unaffected Facility and Freedom of the Pencil, which together produced such a ravishing, a pleasant Harmony, that made their Works seem to be performed by some divine and unspeakable Way of ART; and which (as Fr. Junius expresseth it) is not a Perfection of ART, proceeding meerly from ART, but rather a Perfection proceeding from a consummate ART.

HENCE it was that Apelles admiring the wonderful Pains and Curiosity in each Point in a Picture of Protogenes's Painting, yet took Occasion from thence to reprehend him for it as a Fault quod nescivit maximum tollere de tabula, implying, that a heavy and painful Diligence and Affectation, are destructive of that Comeliness, Beauty and admired Grace, which only a prompt and prosperous Facility proceeding from a sound Judgment of ART, can afford unto us.

BETWEEN these two great ARTISTS there happened a famous and celebrated Contention, occasioned by the Fame of Protogenes's Works, whom Apelles had then never seen; nor any of his Paintings, and therefore from an Emulation being excited to the further Knowledge and Acquaintance of so worthy a Competiter, took shipping for Rhodes, where coming to his Shop, found only an old Woman at Home, who told him Protogenes was gone into the City, and withal desired to know his Name, that she might acquaint her Master who had asked for him; upon that, Apelles, seeing a large Table in the Shop, took a Pencil in his Hand and drew in a Colour a curious fine and a small Line quite through it, saying to the Woman, tell thy Master that he who drew this Line enquired for him, and so went his Way. Protogenes soon after returning Home, and the old Woman giving him account what had passed, he no sooner took notice of the Curiosity of the Hand, but presently guessed who had been there; and said Apelles is come to Town, for he was confident it was impossible any; but he, could do the like; and upon that, took a Pencil, and, with a different Colour, drew within the same a Line smaller then the Former, bidding the Woman, if the Person came again, to ask for him in his Absence, that she should shew him what he had done; and tell him, that there was the Man that he enquired after; it was not long before Apelles came to the Shop the second Time in search of his Friend, where abashed at first to see himself thus out-done and overcome, took again the Pencil, and with another distinct Colour, drew a third Line within the second, so exquisitely fine and curious, nullum relinquens subtilitati locum, which when Protogenes saw, he confessed he had met with his Match and Master both; and therefore impatient to see the Man, ran to the Haven to find him out and give him a Welcome suitable to his Merit: This Peice was mutually agreed between them to be left thus naked for a Wonder to Posterity, omnium sed artificum precipuo miraculo, it was afterward translated to Rome, and preserved in Cæsar's Palace within the Palatine-Hill, 'till it perished together with the House by Fire.

WE have been more particular in the Relation of this famous Piece, because a large Dispute hangs upon it; and the late Commentator upon our Author, Ludov. Demon-tiosius, seems very much offended at the generally received Acceptation of the Story of this noble Contention; and would not by any Means admit that this Tryal of Skill was about the Subtilty of Lines; for, as he says, with a good Share of Truth in the main, in a coloured Picture, or Painting, there is so little Use of Lines, that the very Appearance of any is justly reproveable; for the Extremities should be lost and confounded in the Shadows, and ought to go off without any Thing of the least Stiffness, or Sharpness of a Line.

NEITHER will he admit it in Drawings, or Designs, with the Coal, or Pen, for that in those the true ARTIST never regarded so much the Fineness, or Course-ness of his Touches; but only how and where they served best to express the proper Shadowing and Raifing of his Draught according to the Life; and brings in for Instance many Drawings of the celebrated Masters of his Time, which he had seen of

Mich. Angelo Bonoroti, Raphael de Urbin, Salviati, Polydore, and the Great Titian's, where his Observation does not take Notice that any have in the least affected the Nicety of curious Lines.

AND therefore this Opinion, in his Sence, being justly enough exploded for these Reasons, in the Explanation of his own Notion, which he labours to convince us in the Truth of, he distinguishes all the Colours in a Picture in reference to the different Modification of the Light upon Bodies, into three Sorts, or rather Degrees, Light, Splendor and Shadow; in the Light the Colour is Deluted, in the Shadow Saturated, and in the Splendor only the Species of the Colour is truly discern'd; this Splendor he calls also the Tone, carrying so near an Analogy with the Sence of it in Musick, where it comprehends the Phthonge, the Intervals, the Place of the Voice, and the Tenor; all which he applies to the Meaning of this Splendor, or Tone in Painting: To these three foregoing Degrees of Colour, he adds a fourth Thing incident, call'd the Harmoge, which is the Commixture, or the curious and insensible Transition of the three Degrees of Colours; and this, in the Opinion of our Author, is the Interpretation of the famous Contest about the Sciffure and Interfection of Lines;

of which, when Apelles had given a Specimen, and Protogenes had seen it, Artem agnovit sed negligentiam Artificis notavit, and therefore took another Pencil, and what was left somewhat too hard and unpleasant in the Union of the Colours, he corrected and made more tender, 'till Apelles again returning by the Interposition of another Colour, gave it such a Finishing, as left no Place for any further Attempt.

THIS seeming strain'd Opinion, Claudius Salmatius controverts again, and endeavours to restore to the literal Sence and Signification of the Words of the Relation, telling us what Pliny affirm'd he had out of the Greek and Latin Commentaries, and out of such Authors as not only writ of PAINTING, but were (some of them) excellent Painters themselves, as Apelles, Melanthius and Protogenes relates to the Story, who writ two Books of the ART of PAINTING, and of Figures, with many others who could not be presumed to give any occasion of Mistake to Pliny; and further, he would establish and set up the Agreeableness and Congruity of the Use of Lines in the best of Paintings, from that sort of Picture peculiarly call'd Linearis Pictura; which not only express'd the Profiles and Circumscriptions of the Figure, but their Practice was also, intus lineas spargere, from the Phrasings sings and constant Use of several Terms of ART; for what else can be employ'd by Lineamenta, the Lineaments of a Face, or Figure, by Apelles's Nulla dies sine linea, which became Proverbial, and as the Poet varies it,

Hor.

Besides this, the Phrase Γεγραμμένον ἔλκειν the Greeks apply to Painters, and γεγράφειν, from whence γεγραμμένη, properly signifying to Paint, γεγραφεῖς Painters, and γεγραμμένη a painted Work; and of Apelles, Venus left unfinish'd at his Death, Quintilian says, Non repertum scilicet qui præscriptas ab Apelle lineas posset absolvere; with some other Arguments and Conclusions drawn from them. But, after all, we have Salmatius's Acknowledgment, he was no Painter himself, and so might be unjustly too severe upon his Adversary, while he was so little acquainted in the Nature of the Subject himself; and 'tis not altogether clear, that all these several Phrasings do so much destroy the Foundation of his Thesis, as they are reconcilable and agreeable to it. For the Lineans Pictura was in the Infancy of Painting, or rather but a Rudiment, or Introduction to it; by which it stept up to a more mature mature Attainment, and so no inforcing Argument could be drawn from thence: And as to those Phrases which he would have countenance the Necessity and Excellency of Lines in Painting, it might be only the Poverty of the Language, that for want of more apt Words, was forc'd to make use of improper, or however, Terms not so full and comprehensive as sometimes the genuin Sence and Nature of the Subject led to; and so consequently neither ought, or could always be understood in a literal Acceptation; and which Advantage our Author has here taken hold on in his Explication of the Riddle and Dispute about Lines. Thus having taken notice of this smart Engagement, with some few Remarks on either Side of the way, being a Stranger to both, shall leave the Controversy fairly to be fought out and determin'd by better Judgments, and return to our proper Place again.

THIS Interview of these two great ARTISTS succeeded with so much Satisfaction, as begot a real and lasting Friendship between them; a Temper too much wanting, and to be wished in the ARTISTS of this our Age; who out of Self-conceit, Jealousy, and a false Emulation, by Endeavours of Detraction, vainly seek to build a Reputation upon the Ruin of one another: Here

Apelles finding and owning a real Desert and Merit in Protogenes, far above the Estimation he had obtain'd among the Rhodians, or Value they had set upon his Works, he bought all the Pieces he had by him finish'd at that time at a very considerable Rate, and gave him Fifty Talents for them, which when the Rhodians understood, and imagining Apelles bought them with design to sell again for his own (by this Gloss and Vernish of Reputation) they were turn'd to Admire, and to have his Person and Paintings in high Esteem and Veneration.

THUS as Apelles would set a just Value on other Mens Works, so he was not forward to over-value his own, and was so far removed from any Conceit of himself, and of that gentile and facetious Humour, that he would take well any Man's just Correction of his Works; upon which depends that common Story of the Shoemaker, who, taking notice of a Picture Apelles had exposed to View, found fault with the Shoe, which Apelles owning, corrected, and set out the next Day; when the Shoemaker came again, and proud that his Admonition had taken Place, took upon him to quarrel with something about the Legs, at which Apelles, somewhat concern'd, stepping from behind the Table, bids him meddle no further than with Shoes; which afterward came came into a Proverb, Ne sutar ultra crepidam.

MANY other diverting Stories, and admirable Paintings of this ARTIST, Pliny gives us a copious Account of, of which, to make a full Rehearsal, must be tedious to the Reader, therefore we shall only select out some choice Instances, and give a brief Account somewhere, and shew how dear this admirable Painter was to the Great Alexander, and what a generous Respect and Complaisance he vouchsafed towards him and his ART; as not to mention the frequent Visits he made to his Shop, and familiar Intercourse held between them; for it seems his Conversation was as charming as his Works, particularly when he receiv'd his Commands to paint the Picture of the Royal Concubine Campaspe all naked, who was not only Choice and Singular above the rest in the King's Affections, but an admirable Beauty also. Here he was presently so captivated, that the unusual management of the Pencil, and some other silent Methods and Circumstances, soon spake that which his Tongue durst not presume to offer; whereupon Alexander perceiving the bent of his Inclinations, immediately gave and surrendered her up wholly and frankly to him, thereby gaining a greater Conquest than that of the World; and tho'

Cesar

Cesar would not endure an Equal, nor Pompey a Superior; this Conqueror could not only suffer a Rival in the best of his Affections, but surrender and lay them at a Painter's Feet: From this Lady, 'tis presum'd by some, he painted his Venus, Emergins Emari, known by the Name of Anadyamene, a most admirable Painting, afterwards convey'd to Rome, and dedicated by Augustus in the Temple of Julius Cesar his Father, enrich'd with an Epigram of Greek Verses, and stands celebrated with this Distick of Ovid,

Si venerem Cois nunquam pinxisset Apelles, Merca sub aequoriis illa lateret aquis.

So many Portraitures of King Alexander, he drew, that our Author thinks it endless to recount; whereof one was holding a Thunderbolt and Light'ning in his Hand, so wonderfully express'd, that both seem'd to stand out from the very Table; and of which Painting himself was wont to say, there were two Alexanders, one invincible by Philip, who was ἀρίωντος, Ἀνόμωντος. the other painted by Apelles, which was ἀμίμωντος, inimitable; Twenty Talents of Gold was his Reward for his single Picture, which soon after was translated to Ephesus, to adorn the Temple of Diana.

Two other Counterfeits of Alexander he drew, the one representing a Warrior, and the other a Conqueror, wherein the King appeared mounted on a triumphant Chariot, with a poor Captive lying Menaced before him at his Feet. These two Tables the Emperour Augustus dedicated and set up in the most conspicuous Place in his Forum, 'till Claudius Caesar thinking it more for the Honour of Augustus to have had his own there, without any regard to the sacred Painting, erased the two Faces of Alexander, and put in that of his Predecessor in his Stead.

THERE was yet another of his conducted by the same Hand, which Alexander could not be prevailed withal to think it so nearly resembled him as the rest; 'till being expos'd to the View at a Window, Bucephalus was brought forth, who, upon Approach, at the first Sight thereof (according as he was practised when his great Master mounted his Back) fell down upon his Knees, demonstrating thereby (to the Surprize of the Spectators, and re-establishment of a higher Reputation to the ARTIST) that it was not only a true Antitype and Copy of the Likeness, but of the Life also.

To range with this, we have a like Instance, wherein he was vindicated by the pure and unbyassed Instinct of rational Creatures,

Creatures, to whom he appealed from the Sentence of some corrupted Judges and Umpires, in a Tryal of Skill between him and some bold Opposers, who had challenged him in the Painting of an Horse, where the Pictures one by one being produced before living Creatures of the same Species, they stood unconcerned 'till Apelles brought forth his Horse, which Valer. Max. rather supposes was a Mare; at the Sight whereof, there was such a general Neighing and Rejoycing, as if they had met with one of their own Species and Society; and which gave a sufficient Confutation and Vindication of the great Excellency of our ARTIST against all his daring Antagonists.

AND thus, as it appears, he painted those Things which others could not attain to. So Pliny tells us he seemed to paint those Things which could not be painted, Cracks of Thunder, Flashes of Fire and Light'ning, Thunderbolts and the like; all which sort of Pictures went under Names almost as hard to speak as they were to paint, Brontes, Astrape, Ceraunnobolos.

IT is reported of him by Appion the Grammarian, quoted by Pliny, that he had that admirable Faculty and Dexterity in drawing Pictures so lively, and near resembling the Persons they were design'd for, that no Manner of Difference, or Deviation could be remark'd; and that a certain Physiognomer, upon a nice Observation thereof, was able to give as direct and positive a Judgment, could as easily from thence decypher the Nature and Inclinations of the Persons, and foretel all future Events and Passages, as well as from the Original itself; but not to comment here, however, this is certain in Painting by the Life, he had that universal Vogue and Pre-eminence, above any in his Time, as made Alexander the Great to avoid the promiscuous Defilements of unskilful Hands, and to deliver the true Image of his Royal Person safe to Posterity, solemnly ordain'd that none should presume to carve his Effieges, save Pyrgotiles, to cast it but Lysippus, not any to paint his Picture but the Great Apelles alone.

Edicto vetuit ne quis se præter Apellem Pingeret, aut alius Lysippo duceret æra, Fortis Alexandri vultum Simulantia.

Hor. Epist. lib. 2. ch. 1.

ANOTHER Excellency and Knack of Ingenuity he was Master of, in an Artificial Concealment of the Defects and Blemishes of Nature, rendering them not so conspicuous and apparent as they really were, and varnishing those Graces and little Beauties ties he found, making them still shew to a better Advantage, and not much unlike the gentile Artizans of this our Age; without doubt, he was a little practised in the ARTS of a Court Flattery, that conducted his Pencil with such an agreeable Air, and kind Insinuation, as more commended his Art and Ingenuity, then destroy'd and took off any Thing from the Likeness, or Resemblance, of the Counterfeit: Relating to this is the Portrait he drew of King Antiochus, who had suffered the Loss of an Eye, and was somewhat blemish'd on that side of his Face, he devised to draw him upon the Profile, and that Part of his Face turned away from the Sight, that thereby what was wanting in the Picture might be imputed rather to the Painter, then to the Person whom he there represented.

HOWEVER gracious this our Painter (as above related) was with Alexander and his Followers, it seems he could never purchase any Favour of Prince Ptolomy, afterwards King of Egypt, and upon whose Coast; during his Reign there, Apelles unfortunately being forc'd by Storm at Sea, landed at Alexandria, where some of the Brethren of the Pencil imagining his Design to settle there, and so become an Eclipse to their Credit, contriv'd with one of the King's Servants, to give him a kind Invitation to the Court from the King's especial Command, whether (ready to embrace so happy an Opportunity of Reconciliation) he immediately resorted; but, contrary to his Expectation, instead of a gracious Smile, he found a severe Countenance in the King, with a sharp Check for daring to approach his Presence, demanding who had sent for him; whereat Apolles, not a little astonished, wholly ignorant of the Person's Name, and not finding him out among any there present, thus put to his Shifts, catch'd up a Cole and began to delineate his Picture upon the Wall, whereat the King immediately took Knowledge of the Person, and by this alone Apelles obtain'd his Acquittance from the Anger of the King, and the Malice of his envious Competitors.

BEFORE we leave this eminent Master, we cannot but take notice what Pliny in two several Places, has, with pretty positive Assurance asserted, that in all the stupendious Paintings of this ARTIST above-cited, he made use of but four Colours only, which were, White, Yellow, Red and Black; his White Tripoli of Melos; for Yellows, Okre of Athens; for Reds, red Okre and Synopye of Pontos, and for Black, ordinary Vitrial, or Shoemakers Black. And here we might enter into a large Field of Discourse about the various Completions, Na-

tures and Distinctions of Colours, but shall rather leave that to a more proper Place hereafter, and only make some short Remarks upon this Assertion of our Author, which, to the Reason of any Man, considering how irreconcilable it seems to declare it self to all those wonderful and extraordinary Effects produced thereby, it must appear no less then a clear and manifest Contradiction in itself; or more modestly, some misled, or traditionary Mistake in our Author; for in another Place himself tells us (besides the other Black above-mention'd) Apelles was the first that invented to make Black of Ivory, or the Tooth of an Elephant burnt, which was call'd Elephantinum, and gives us the Particulars of several other Colours, both Natural and Artificial, found out and used among the Greeks, which we are necessarily led to affirm, must be in those Periods, when the ART was in her highest Perfection, and that (with an unanimous Voice and Consent acknowledged) was, I may say, not only in the Time, but in the Pencil of this our Great Apelles. And it is obvious to any, that have any competent Talent in Painting, how impossible it must needs be, such rare and extraordinary Paintings as seems to emulate and challenge Nature herself in all her luxuriant Variety of Composures and Colour, should ever be express'd press'd, or accomplish'd by the slender Assistance, only of those four Species of Colours; and unless they were as comprehensive as the four Elements, out of which they tell us all Things do emerge; such is the Variety of Nature and Luxuriancy in the almost infinitely various Beauties that affect, and are the Object of our Sight, without a better Furniture; such Perfections was utterly unattainable; and altho' we should allow the largest Extent and Latitude, taking them for four Generals, comprehending all that are Neighbouring to, or may be by any Participation, or Composition produced of them; yet it will come short of giving a full Answer to the Objection; for, without Blew, the derivative Colours cannot be made up to furnish and compleat our Painters Palate; and without this, how can it be imagin'd he was able to approach the Beauty of the Heavens in the glorious Representation of the Sky? How could he ever expect to parallel the variegated and unparallel'd Completions of the glorious Gayeties of the Gardens? In Absence of this, the Fields and sprightly Plants must loose their Verdure, and appear only in their Autumnal Dress; and his Venus herself must fall short of what she was, for want of a Tenderness to express the Delicacy of her azured Veins.

B E S I D E S

BESIDES all this, our Author in another Place affirms, such was the Beauty and Brightness of his Colours, that least the Lustre should too much dazzle and offend the Sight, he had one peculiar and extraordinary Invention of a curious (and our Author would have it a black) Varnish, so finely tempered and driven over the whole Work, that it not only took off that Inconvenience, but secured and guarded it from the Injury of Wet and Dirt, or any Filthiness whatsoever.

BUT we shall conclude all that was further remarkable in this our PAINTER, with that last Table of his left unfinished, another Venus Anadiamene, intended for the Inhabitants of the Island of Cosor Lango, in which he designed to exceed his former, and to give the highest Proof and Effort of his Skill and Art, that, perhaps, ever the World had seen, but he was unhappily prevented by an untimely Death, which seemed to envy such Perfection; and none after were ever found that durst attempt, or undertake the Finishing of it, which turned to the Glory of the Workman, and greater Veneration of the Work. Add to this what is observable, and that our ARTIST had in common with all excellent Artificers, whose Pictures, thus left Imperfect, have always been held in a more sacred and higher

higher Estimation than any that had received a compleater Finishing : As to Instance Aristides his Iris, Nychomachus his Tyndarides, Tycomachus his Medea; all which Relicts of Painting carrying along with them that monumental Character in the remaining naked Lineaments, whereof being plainly legible, not only the Beauty and Force of an undisguised Design, but the very Thoughts and Intentions of the departed ARTIST, we are naturally inclin'd, in the Sence of so unhappy a Prevention, to such a Tendernefs and soft Regard that still commends the Work the more, and are thereby extreamly constrained to love and admire both it and the Hand that perished under it.

SOME of the most eminent Contemporaries with Apelles, were the fore-mentioned Protogenes, Asclepiotorus, Nichomachus and Aristides, the famed Theban, who had an Excellency in expressing the Passions and Affections of the Mind, and the very Conceptions and Perturbations of the Soul; and of which we have a singular Instance in that Table of his, representing the Conquest of a Town by Force, wherein was introduced the Portrait of an Infant, by many Windings, endeavouring to recover the Breast of its indulgent Mother, just dying of a mortal Wound received in that Part of the Body wherein the Conjunction of a dying Passion, and living Affection, were both eminently apparent together, with a strange Reluctancy and Concernment ; fearing, when she was Dead, through a mistaken Nourishment, her Babe should suffer any Injury, or destroy itself by sucking of her Blood : This Table was dear to Alexander the Great, translated from Thebes, and carried along with him to adorn his native City Pella.

THE same Aristides painted the Counterfeit of a Battle between the Greeks and Persians ; in which Table he brought in no less than a Hundred Figures ; for every one of which, he was to have by Agreement, of Mnason, the Tyrant, Ten Minas ; he portrayed the Running of Races in Chariots, with Four Wheels, so lively, that a Man would think he saw and could discover them turning about. And as to his Piece of his humble Suppliant, he painted him so naturally, making his Petition, and persuing it so earnestly, that he seem'd to cry with an audible Voice from the Picture : These were some of his admir'd Works, which were in such high Esteem, that King Atalms gave a Hundred Talents for one Piece, and Six Thousand Sesterces for another.

NICHOMACHUS was Son and Apprentice to Aristodemus, whose most considerable Works were his Pluto's ravishing of Proserpine, preserv'd in the Chapel of Minerva, in the Capitol; together with his Portrait of Victory, conducting a Triumphant Chariot into the Heavens: - His Apollo and Diana; his Ulysses, and the monstrous Mermaid Scylla, consecrated in the Temple of Peace; his Excellency lay in a strange prompt Readiness of Invention, and in a wonderful dexterous Swiftnefs and Celerity of Pencil, beyond all others in working and finishing of his Peices.

ASCLEPIODORUS stands celebrated before in the Judgment, and by Concession of Apelles himself for his singular Skill in observing the Symetry and just Proportions; he painted for Mnason, King of Elatean, the Twelve principal Gods, and receiv'd for every one of them Three Hundred Pounds of Silver.

PROTOGENES was a Man that a long time lay under the common Fate of many excellent Artizans; the hard Circumstances of a poor and necessitous Condition; of which also another incident Occasion is ascribed, his exceeding studious, intentive and endless Curiosity in his Works; for which Thing only (as above recited) he stands mark'd with a gentle Reproof

Reproof by Apelles. Little Encouragement, a long Time, it seems he met with, which forced him to the meaner Compliances of painting Ships and Gallies, which they partly collect from this following Instance, when he was afterward thought worthy to appear, and to be employed in painting the Portico leading to the Temple of Minerva; in the most conspicuous Place of the City; where in the Story of the famous Paralus and Hemionis he performed to Admiration, yet he disdained not to remind them of his former Practice and the small Beginnings of his ART, exemplifying it by some Parerga's of little Gallies and long Barks in the several Borders and Freezes of the Structure, which also served as a Foil to set off and commend the Excellency of his present Attainment and Performances.

BUT among all his Works the most famed Table that ever he painted was his Falysus, which so much surprized Apelles, that he confessed it to be the finest in the World, since dedicated in Rome within the Temple of Peace; upon which his Thoughts and Endeavours were so strongly intent, that (as 'tis reported) to avoid the Temptation of too liberal Repast of Wines and choicer

Son of Ceraphus, a famous Hunter, who built a City in the Island of Rhodes, whence he had his Name.
Strabo lib. 14.

Delicacies that were apt any Ways to cloud, or dull the Spirit of his Fancy ; he confined himself all the while to the severe Diet of steeped Lupines only, which contented him for Meat and Drink both ; and to the End that after and long distant Ages might see and admire his Works when others of that Nature were become ruinous and perished, leaving nothing but a Transcript of Tradition to commend them to Posterity, he had that peculiar Invention to add a Term of no less then four Lives to all his Paintings ; for to prevent the Envy of injurious and destructive Time, Pliny tells us, he charged particularly this Picture with four Grounds of Colours, so artificially couched one under another, that when one was decayed a second should succeed, and so on 'till the Last, and every one emerge as fair and beautiful as the first : Besides all this, yet another accidental Excellency there was in this Piece in the Portraiture of a Dog, where it seems both wonderful Art and Fortune met together ; for when he had finished the whole Proportion with great Diligence and extreamly to his own Satisfaction, he was as much troubled and dissatisfied about a much less meterial Circumstance of PAINTING the Froth at his Mouth, altering, amending, adding, taking away, and often wiping out all, and yet yet with no Hopes of any better Success, 'till weary at length, in an extream Anger and Dispair, flinging the Sponge, charged with the Colours he had wiped off, at the unhapy Place that had given him all this Trouble, to a Miracle it seems arose such an unexpected Product, such an unlooked for happy fortuitous Success, that left so natural a Finishing of the Froth as was beyond what all his labouring and diligent Intention could ever attain unto. And after this Example, they tell us Nealce, a Painter, proved the Experiment, with the like Success, in expressing the Froth and Foam from the Mouth of a Horse.

THIS Table of Falyfus and his Dog stood a Ransom and a Security for the whole City of Rhodes, when King Demetrius had a fair Opportunity of storming, and destroying it by Sword and Fire; yet he refused to embrace it, and could not suffer the least Hostility, or any Ravage to be committed, least that adored Mistress of his Affections should suffer any Dishonour, or perish in the promiscuous Confusion of the common Calamity.

DURING all the strict Siege of this Place, Protogenes (as an Archimedes, on the like Occasion, busying himself in his mathematical Schemes in the Sand) was so little concerned, that in a small retiring Place, without the Walls of the City, incircled within the Camp of the Enemy, maugre all the Noise of Armies, Drums and Trumpets, was as studious and close at his Business as under the sereneest Calm of a secure Peace ; which the King wondering at when he understood, sent for him, demanding how he could have that Confidence in the Midst of such apparent Hazard. Readily answered, that he knew Demetrius's Design was only against the Rhodians, and had no Quarrel (he was sure) to good Arts and Sciences ! And the Subject he was upon, and employed in, during this Conjunction, seemed to make good his Assurance in this Assertion to the King ; while in stead of some disastrous and melancholy Composure, as we might reasonably Conjecture, it was a Design of a much contrary Nature, a sporting Satyr playing and diverting himself upon a Pair of Bag-Pipes ; this Piece he himself entitled and gave the Name ἀναπαύουσα. one relaxing, or reposing himself from any Labour, or studious Concernment.
 2 matical

EXTREAMLY pleased it seems the King was with the Deversion and Enjoyment of this our Painter, often frequenting and visiting him at his Cell, hoping a short Time would make him Master of the Place and give him the Enjoyment and Possession of his so sacred and desired Works within the Confinement of the Walls, which he thought of Value and equal Purchase, with all his Toyls of War, and superior to all his other Enjoyments in Peace at Home.

SOME few of his Works more stand recorded by Pliny, and indeed it seems he was no extempore Painter, but whatever Subject he was engaged upon, it was with a previous Study and Caution undertaken, and with exact Diligence and Labour, and a strict Examination gone through and finished; such were his Tlepomenus, King Antigenus, Alexander the Great, and the God Pan, and Phaestion the Mother of Aristotle the famed Philosopher; but this Chapter has been already too prolix, we shall therefore conclude with one remarkable Instance, which may serve for Matter of Conduct, if not of Reproach to this our Age, namely; that he had that strange bent of Inclination and Affection to the ART, that nothing could give him any Satisfaction, but a Disquisition and a Research into the very Bowels and Secrets of it, nor any Thing put an End to his severer Scrutiny that fell short of an absolute and consummate Perfection; the entire Attainment whereof he valued above the certain Oppotunity he had of obtaining a Mass of Wealth and Riches, disregarding any Pyramid of Glory, or Immortality of a Name whose Superstructure was endeavoured upon any weaker Basis, or Foundation.

C H A P. VII.

Of the State of the ART from the foregoing Periods, through the Declension of the Græcian Empire, and its Translation to the Romans; and finally, its Decadence among them.

TH E Quarrels and Contentions of the Successors of Alexander about the Division of the Græcian Monarchy, more than probably had also an influence upon ARTS, and very much discomposed the Tranquility of their Progress; for we find after the old Stock was clean worn out, there sprung up again but a slender Supply, both as to the Number, and to the Excellencies and Perfections of the ART itself.

To Range every Artizan in his due Order of Time (they being so promiscuously handled by Authors) 'tis as little material as possible; however, we shall make some Endeavour, with as near a regard to that as may be, and take leave to begin with Perseus, the Disciple of

Apelles;

Apelles, a Person of an admirable Temper, and of very good Skill, and a singular Industry and Wit, an excellent Tract of the whole ART, which he dedicated to his Master, but in his Practice, it seems, he came not only far short of him, but was inferior to Zeuxis too.

NEXT him we may bring in Nicophanes, whose Paintings Nicophanes. had not only a good Grace, and a polite Touch, but were also accompanied with Force: He was a Man of a ready and lively Air; he applied his Studies particularly to Antiquities, in searching out, and endeavouring to preserve the Memory of any Thing that was Excellent in that Kind; and when he met with any old decay'd Paintings of the antient Masters, he apply'd himself, either to the copying of them, or (with an Endeavour) to restore the Tables themselves, in some measure, to their Original Lustre, and in all what was of his own Design and Invention; his aim was to represent therein both a Loftiness and a Gravety: In general, Pliny gives him this Character, that few were comparable to him in his Time.

ATHENION of Marona, Athenion. Disciple of Glaucion, was a Man of very good Skill, and tho' his Way of Colouring seem'd somewhat dry, and not altogether altogether so agreeable (he not affecting the Gaudery of Colours) yet his Works were throughly Painted, and he maintain'd the full Vigour and Strength of his Lights and Shadows, which, with his unwearied Endeavours, and Re-search after every Thing that was Excellent and Worthy of his Knowledge in the ART, render'd him equal in Esteem with Pausius and Nicias, and had he not unhappily died in his Youth, in the Opinion they had of him, he had become a most excellent and extraordinary Man.

CRECIDÆ S was a good Painter, and render'd himself Crecidas. very Famous, but it was more to be ascrib'd to the haughty Temerity of his Temper, and a rash Attempt, then to the exquisite Perfection of his Work; for being entertain'd by Queen Stratonice, Wife to Antiochus, but not with all the Testimony of that Esteem which he thought his Merits might challenge, he painted a Table wherein he expos'd that Princess in an unseemly Posture and Application with a sordid Fisherman, with whom it was a Jealousy she was sometimes too Conversant; and having publickly set it up in the Haven of Ephesus, took Sanctuary in a Vessel ready to sail, and so escaped, leaving that as the Mark of a Revenge for his conceiv'd Affront.

But

But this had not that Effect upon the Queen as he expected, who utterly slighting the malicious Design of the Man (finding the Painting itself to be so well and curiously handled) rather chose to let it there remain expos'd to the View of all Spectators, than to commit to the Flames a Picture of that Elegancy and Perfection.

PIRRICHUS was one that busied himself about little Pirrichus. Things, and all mean and inferior Subjects, as of Herbs, Flowers, Beasts, Insects, Tradesmens Shops, and other such like, as have no Gust of any noble Idea, for which he was Surnam'd Rhyparographus.

SERAPION, on the other hand, was for Pictures of a Serapion. Colossean Stature, such as their Shops and Stalls, were not big enough to contain; his Excellencies were seen in Painting mighty Tents, Stages, Theaters and Pageants, but for a Face, or the Figure of a Man, or Woman, he durst never attempt to make an Essay. On the other side Dionysius was good for nothing else, Dionysius. and therefore was commonly call'd Anthropographus.

CRESICOLUS was one of the Disciples of Apelles, be. Cresicolus. came famous for one Piece above all the rest, wherein he had represented a wanton Story

Story of Jupiter among the Goddeffes in his Night-Coif, groaning and crying out as a Woman in Labour for their helping Hand, who kindly affisted in the Office of a Mid-wife, untill he was safely deliver'd of the God Bacchus. Many other Painters there was about these Times, of whom, besides their Names, we find no great matter of any peculiar Eminence ascrib'd to them; of several of which therefore (in favour of the Reader, to avoid the Prolixity of a tedious Discourse, and yet to pay some Tribute to their Memory) we shall take a transient View as we go along; as Callicles, Callicles, who altogether practis'd in small. Calaces in the same, and also in Calaces, larger Paintings of Perspectives, upon the Ceilings of the Theaters, &c. Antiphilus, by Birth an Egyptian, Antiphilus, of whose Hand several Pieces of Work stand recorded; as that of King Alexander, and Philip his Father, with the Goddeffs Minerva, Prince Bacchus, Hippolitus, afrighted at a monstrous Bull let loose upon him. His Gryllus, being a Fool, or Antick compleatly drest; whence all such Pictures since of that Nature took their Name. Cresidemus was Cresidemus, taken notice of for that Piece of the Siege of Ochalia, wherein the City was taken by Hercules, and put to the Sword, and

- Oristolaus.* and Flame. Oristolaus was the Son of Pausias, and deserv'd a Name among the best of the antient Painters. Mechophanes too was the Disciple of Pausias, and commended for a very good and curious Workman, and only stands reproved for using too much of one particular Colour, call'd Ochre.
- Socrates.* Sil. Socrates is remembered for that excellent Piece of Æsculapius, accompanied with his three Daughters, Hygea, Eglea and Panacea.
- Ludius.* The Workman that painted the Elotas. Temple of Juno at Ardea, deserv'd so well, as they enfranchis'd him free Burgeses of that City, and honour'd him with this Inscription set up in the midst of his Works,

*Dignis digna loca picturis concelebravit,
Regina Junonis Supremi conjugis Templum, Marccus Ludius Elotas Ætolia Oriundus
Quem nunc & post semper eb artem Ardea laudat.*

Artemon. ARTEMON stands celebrated for the Picture of the Story of the Lady Danae, whom, being found floating a drift at Sea by some roving Pyrates, who not daring to attempt their Prize, he admirably represented them gazing gazing on her Beauty with a Wonder and Astonishment; but his yet more extraordinary Piece, was that in the Galleries of Octavia, of Hercules ascending up into Heaven from the Mountain Oeta, where he was receiv'd into the Society of the Gods, with a full and general Approbation.

AFTER these we shall take leave to introduce some of the Romans, whose very Name and Example are sufficient to give a Reputation to the ART, and to show also, that they, as well as the Greeks, had a Respect and honourable Esteem for it; for Quintus Fabius we meet with (whose Family was Quintus Fabius one of the Noblest in Rome, and after had the surname of Pictores) not only with his own Hands painted the Walls of the Temple of Salus, but also subscrib'd thereon Quintus Fabius Pinxit.

POMPONIUS ATTICUS, Pomponius, a Man of singular Wisdom, and so much beloved of Cicero, after he had compos'd a Poem of sundry Devices, beautified the same with Pictures of his own drawing.

MARCUS VALERIUS M. Valerius.
MESSALA, a Noble-Man of Rome, made a large Table of the Story of that Battle in Scicily, wherein himself had defeated the Carthaginians, and K King

King Hiero, and caused it to be set up in the Gallery of the Court of Hostilius.

IN the Days of Cæsar Dictator, flourish'd one Timomachus, a Birantine, and painted for that Emperor a Table of Ajax and Medea, for which he paid him no less than Eighty Talents, and immediately caused them to be hung up in the Temple of Venus Genetrix. His Orestes, and Iphigenia in Tauris, were commended with some other Paintings of his, but were all exceeded by his Gorgons Head upon the Shield of Minerva.

AND now we come to Augustus, from whose Time it was that this ART in Greece began not only to degenerate, but in a manner, to be quite destroy'd; for besides, that Rome now becoming the Seat of a mighty Empire, the People of Greece, equally, with many other Kingdoms, being Vassals, and in subjection to that Power, they were soon dispoyl'd by the succeeding Princes of whatever was rare, or excellent among them; and not only the Paintings of the best Masters they could meet with, but Obelisks, Colosses, and whole Colonies of Statues, were soon transported and carried away, not only as Trophies of their Victories, but to adorn and enoble their own City,

City, now become the great Metropolis of the World.

AND now having these Examples before them to instruct, and the flourishing Estate of the Empire to incite and estimate, we cannot but think their Endeavours and Inventions must be set at Work in Emulation of the same Attainments; but yet by what we meet with in Pliny, and other Authors, we can't find they ever arriv'd to the Perfections of their Noble Fore-runners and Exemplars.

ONE of principal Note that flourish'd in the Reign of Augustus, was Ludius, celebrated for the Invention of Painting Landskips, wherein he succeeded very well, and shew'd a great Variety of Invention in representation of Prospects both by Sea and Land; of Cities, and particularly Structures, and Designs of Architecture; in Views of Forests, Rivers, Plains, Walks, Huntings, Parrades, Grottoes, Fountains, with all the various Forms and Actions of Birds, Beasts and Men, appropriate and accommodate to each particular Circumstance, together with many other incident Occurrences, of which this Subject furnishes with a copious Variety; and of all these, he was the first we meet with that made the Application, and painted upon the Fronts of their publick and private Buildings along the Streets, and upon their Walls, both without Doors and within.

Arellius. ARELLIUS stands commended for a good Painter in the Time of the same Augustus, but it seems he was so extravagantly addicted to Women, that all the Pictures of the Goddeses that came from his Hand, were only the Resemblances and Copies taken from his several Mistresses.

AFTER this, we meet with few, either ARTISTS, or PAINTINGS, only what Pliny takes notice of in the Time of Nero, of a monstrous Picture that he commanded to be drawn of himself upon a Cloth, One Hundred and Twenty Foot high, which was also finished and erected in the Garden of Marius, without any record of the Workman, or Quality of the Work, and was not long after, together with several adjacent Houses, consum'd with Lightning.

FROM hence downward, we find little or no Record of any that Painted in Rome, the Memories as well as the Works of those Times, being wholly lost, and there remaining nothing of Antiquity of that Nature, excepting a poor Fragment of a Frier, which we find brought from the City Adrian, a scrap to be seen in St. Gregories: What is yet left among the Ruins of the Terms of

Titus, and that Freize representing a Maraige which is to be seen in the City of Aldrobrandine.

BUT yet in the ruinous Face of these Relicts which remain visible to this Day in Rome, there appear the Character of an ancient Beauty, and they serve as a sufficient Testimony to evince a very good Attainment of the Pencil, and of an Arrival to an Idea of a Perfection in a Measure comparable to that we find and admire in the ancient Statues of those Times.

AND what afterwards was the Success of this ART we may still rationally collect from a parrallel Progress of the other, which as we find was in its highest Perfection in the Days of Augustus Caligula, Claudius Nero, so from thence down to the Reign of Comodus and Pertinax, it in some Measure degenerated; and from Severus, or however, from the Time of Adrian it greatly decayed; for probably in that Emperor's Reign it might receive some Renascence again, being not only a Patron and Mæcenas of all Arts, but (as some Writers tells) was an excellent Painter himself; and for the other sister Art, that mighty Column 140 Foot high, may bear some Proof, which he erected to the Memory of his Predecessor Trajan; and upon which, under the Colossæan Statue of that Emperor, which crowns

the Pillar he caused to be carved and engraven in Basso relievo all his Victories over the Parthians, Dacians, Germans, &c. Which is this Day to be seen, and stands commended for the Sufficiency and Ability of the Performance in that Art.

BUT after this, and what was before recorded, (as Mr. Evelyn takes notice,) there was scarce any who left either Name, or Work, famous to Posterity: For besides that, the Monarchy was soon broken and disordered; the latter Empire became less curious, rich and magnificent; so as even in the Time of great Constantine itself, Arts began manifestly to degenerate; all which their Coines and Medals successively will serve in a great Measure to confirm, but when afterwards the Goths and Saracens had broken in upon the Roman Empire, and made those horrid Devastations, they were then, in a Manner, utterly lost; as the Reliques which they left in Statuary, Sculpture, Architecture, Letters, and all other good Arts do yet testify.

C H A P.

C H A P. VIII.

Of the Rise and Emergency again of this ART in Italy, until it received its compleat Attainment among them; together with some Intimations of Endeavours in the Period foregoing, and during that long Interval, of its Appearance and Revival again.

THE Condition of Christendom now unhappily labouring under the many Persecutions of the heathen Emperors, and the very Empire itself beginning to be disquieted and miserably infested, not only by the Incursions of the bordering Saracens, but of the remoter Goths and Vandals, we can hardly expect an Art of that tender Constitution, whose Rise and Progress are chiefly owing to a peaceful and flourishing Government, should in this Circumstance of Affairs ever emerge, much less arrive to any Excellency of Attainment.

AFTER some Time it was entertain'd (it seems) with a kind Look from some Part of the Christian World, and that not without Endeavours to give it a Sanction, by the introduction of Holy Relicks, Images and Pictures into their Churches and consecrated Places, in Memory of such Saints and Martyrs as suffer'd for the Sake of the Truth, ascribing to them a certain Veneration, and looking upon them as advantageous Helps and Assistances in their Devotions; and for the Authority of this, they would pretend no less than an Apostolical Institution, and that a positive Canon in the Seventh Council call'd at Antioch, commanded Images of Christ, &c. to be substituted in the room of Heathenish Idols; but there appears so little Foundation for the Truth of this, that the Quære lies upon the Council it self, or, however, upon this Article, whether it was not altogether imaginary, and nothing but a mere Forgery: And what a late Author of the Roman Perswasion would give us for a Reason, for the non-observance of this Injunction in the early and primitive Times, seems more like a plausible Insinuation to ellude, than an Argument of any real Force to support; telling us that one great Obstruction of the Introduction of Pictures and Images into their Churches, was the great Abomination they they had of the Heathen Idols, which were not then wholly abolish'd, or, however, the ill Savour of them not clear out of their Remembrance.

THIS afterwards we find, that when they had obtain'd so far as to bring in and set them up in some particular Places, it prov'd the Rise of a lasting and unhappy Controversy in the Church, being as vigorously oppos'd by the Eastern Greeks, as it was favour'd and embrac'd by those of the West.

THE first Contention concerning them, we find broke out in the Reign of the Emperor Philip Bardanes, about the Year 711, who appear'd so vigorously in opposition to them, that, together with John the Patriarch of Constantinople, he caus'd several to be defac'd and demolish'd; but this was so ill resent'd by Pope Constantine, that he immediately not only Excommunicates, but deprives him of his Sovereignty for Heresy, and would not so much as suffer the Emperor's Picture on his Coin. Soon after this, in the Reign of Leo Isaurus, the Quarrel against Images was again reviv'd and prosecuted with Violence, that upon Pain of Death it was enjoyn'd, whoever had any Pictures, or Images, of our Saviour, the Virgin Mary, or other Saints, should bring them into the Market-Place in Constantinople, where where (together with the rest taken out of the Churches) they were all publickly burnt. And this Fate befel soon after to all the rest, by a strict Command in all his Dominions; and to justify these Proceedings, he summons a Council in the East, who concur with him, and approve and confirm the demolishing of them. But Pope Gregory the Second, not at all relishing these Usages, draws together a Convocation of near a Thousand Bishops and Prelates, wherein he not only confronts and destroys all his Decrees, but thunders out Anathemas and Excommunications against the Emperor, deposes Him, and absolves his Subjects from any Allegiance to him; causes most of the States of Italy and Spain to revolt from him, and bind themselves by Oath to his Obedience; by which all his Interest and Authority in the West was forever after lost; notwithstanding this, Constantine the Fourth his Son, prosecuted the Quarrel with the like Zeal of his Father, and had for his Pains the like Rewards from Pope Paul the First.

ABOUT the Year 780, the Crown devolving upon Constantine the Fifth (being at that time a Child) the Empress Irene, his Mother, took upon her the Management of the whole State, and was so far a Favourer of the Proceedings of the Pope, concerning cerning Images, that immediately the second Nicene Council was call'd, in which the Restitution of Images was intirely confirm'd, the Relicks broken and demolish'd by Leo Isaurus, order'd every where to be restor'd and set up again, by Seven Actions, and Twenty Two Canons. Image-breakers were condemn'd for Hereticks; and for the Interpretation of what sort of Respect they intended should be paid, and what Difference they made between the Image and the Thing which it represents, this Distick (attributed to the Council) will in some measure shew.

Id deus est quod Imago docet sed non deus ipse, Hanc videas sed mente colas, quod cernis in ipsa.

FROM all the foregoing Procedure we may observe this, That when the Constantines and Theodosians, and other Christian Emperors, had taken upon them the Protection of the Church, as well as the Government of the Empire, and the Introduction of Images was once admitted, there was found some Persons that imploy'd their slender Talents in furnishing them with Sculptures and Paintings; but they were such (it seems) as were considerable for nothing, save their being Remarks of the Piety of those Princes; but then after the decadence

decadence of the Roman Empire, Italy fell under such Troubles, and so great Agitations, that the miserable Estate to which it was so often reduc'd, afforded no Time for good ARTS (the only Fruits of Peace)

*Entretien sur
les Vies & sur
les Ouvrages
des plus beni

at all to grow up and arrive to any Maturity. And as Monsieur Philibien, in a pathetic Condolement, for those Times, has it. How great a Loss is that of Ages, during which Rome saw not any Thing but Wars and Disasters, and People most barbarous come from all Quarters of the World to make cruel Invasions upon her Land, overturn the Monuments of her antient Grandure, and put all to the Sword and Flame; when Armies so numerous of the Goths and Vandals, like a Torrent, overflowing, ravage all the Country, and there still remain'd as Seeds of Division, whereof all her Neighbours were the most her Enemies.

WHEN PAINTING receiv'd her second Birth, Italy was still under the same Calamities; for in the Year 1239, Millan itself, with many other Cities in Tuscany, at the Instigation of Pope Gregory the Ninth, were in actual Arms against the Emperor, Fredrick the Second, under a specious Pretext of Liberty, and the Bishops laying aside

aside their Allegiance, seiz'd and possess'd themselves of several other Cities; which Proceedings of theirs so provok'd the Emperor, that, in a short time, he came upon them with two mighty Armies by Sea and Land, giving the Command of the first to his Son Lawrence, whom he had declar'd King of Sardinia; with the other he enter'd himself into Italy, where the Milanese felt the first Effects of his Anger, laying desolate all the Country about; and his Army daily increasing by the Succours of many Neighbouring Princes (jealous of the growing Power of the Pope) he ruin'd all the other Cities that stood in Opposition to him.

GREGORY, thus seeing the Affairs of the Emperor proceed so advantageously, presently serves upon him his Ecclesiastical Censures, Excommunicates and Banishes him out of Italy for an Heretick; but because he well enough saw those sort of Arms alone were not able to hinder his Progress, he has recourse to the Venetians for their Assistance; in which he gave them great Assurances of Victory and Advantages, and intercedes at the same time also with the French King.

THIS was the War between the Pope and the Emperor, that prov'd the Occasion of so much Mischief in Italy; by which, not only many Cities were entirely ruin'd, but those also that escap'd the Sword, or Flame, remain'd, fill'd with so great Discords and Divisions, that the Inhabitants were every Day upon their Guard, and up in Arms ready to Kill and Maffacre one another; and from hence it was those two horrible Faftions took Birth of the Papal Guelfs, and the Imperial Gibellines, which lasted more than Two Hundred and Sixty Years, and were still the further Occasion of greater Perturbations and Miseries in that Country.

BUT not to engage further in the Particular of these Quarrels; 'tis enough to satisfy us in what distracted Condition of Things Italy stood about the Year 1240, when Cimabus came into the World, who being born to establish the ART of PAINTING, before the Disorders and Wars, were banish'd, took his Birth during the Time of the most grand Distractions that ever that Country saw, or was afflicted with.

As he was the first of PAINTERS that brought to Light so illustrious an ART, so, with Reason, we may call him the Master and Father of all those that succeeded him: He himself was of a noble Family of Florence; his Parents supposing him to have a Genius proper for the Sciences, put him him under Masters to learn the first Rudiment ; but it soon appeared his Mind was not so much inclin'd to the Study of Literature, as to the Re-search of ARTS, which plainly discover'd it self by the many Scribbles and Draughts, with which he ever fill'd all his Books ; and, as he advanc'd in Years, finding insensibly more Delight and Facility in Designing, he would take Occasion from his Books, often to steal a Visit to certain Græcian Painters, which some of the Nobility of Florence had sent for to paint the Church of St. Maria Novella.

AND here (before we proceed any further in the Life of this PAINTER) we may take an occasion on Enquiry into the State of the ART, and the Quality of those ARTISTS, that came from Greece, both having, in our Discourse, been suppos'd and look'd upon for a long Time, as lost and abolish'd among them ; and to this it may be answer'd, 'tis true, they were the Successors of the famous Greek PAINTERS ; but with the like Difference between the Persons, as we find between the then deplorable Estate of the Country, and the flourishing Condition thereof in the Time of Zeuxis and Apelles ; these latter PAINTERS being only the miserable Remains of those great Men. In the mean time (as if there had been a Fatality in the Thing, that Italy could not be posfessed of this 'ART, but by Means of the Greeks) they were the Men that introduc'd it a second Time, and who, from the Year 1013, in Florence, and several other Places, wrought several Pieces of PAINTING and Mosaick Work; but after so raw and rude a Gust, that their degeneracy herein would persuade us they were but a bastard Of-spring, and their deform'd Designs, fill'd up with such a disagreeing Mixture of Colours, would make us think the ART, become now Old, began to dote, and return again to its Cradle; however, such was the Ignorance of those Times, that they wanted not Admirers, and they were of Use for Examples to the Italians afterwards to learn by, and to advance the ART upon those poor Rudiments.

BUT to return again to our Subject, the Parents of Cimabus, we find indulging him in his peculiar Inclination, together with the Acquaintance he had gotten with those PAINTERS, he soon attain'd their Manner of Design, and Mixture of Colours, which, however rude and imperfect, by his Application, receiv'd a considerable Polish and Advance; and tho' it was not by his Hand that PAINTING acquired that Perfection it afterwards attained to, yet it is to him we owe the Glory of its Recovery from its mighty Decadence; for the Manner of Address in all his Works, appear'd so extraordinary, in Comparison of what the Ages foregoing could produce, that having painted a Madona for the Church of St. Maria de Novella, the whole People of Florence accompanied it in a solemn pompous Procession, with the Noise of Trumpets, and other musical Instruments, from his House to the Place designed for its Reception.

ABOUT this Time Charles of Anjou, Crown'd King of Scicily and Ferusalem, by the Pope, and coming soon after to Florence, the Magistrates thought they could not, in a more suitable Respect Regale him, then by offering a Sight of Cimabus's Works, and particularly that Table he had then under Hand, which being painted in a Place out of the City, he had chosen purely for his more Retirement from any Noise and Disturbance, and no Body had yet seen it, such Multitudes follow'd the King, as not only left the City almost destitute, but gave Occasion of such Joy to the People of the Suburbs, at the Sight of so numerous a Train, that for ever after they nam'd the Place Il borgo Allegri.

MANY other Pieces he painted, which were bought up at extraordinary Rates, and disposed of in several Places of France and Italy. Some Pictures he painted by the Life, which, till that Time, had not been seen among them; and we may ascribe to himself the Invention of PAINTING in Fresco, which he practis'd upon the Fronts of several Houses in Florence; some whereof Carel Van Mander mentions, remaining to be seen in his Time, but much decay'd and perish'd: He dy'd Anno 1300, in the Sixtieth Year of his Age, and had for his Epitaph this following Distick.

Credidit ut Cimabus Picturæ Castra tenere, Sic tenuit; verum nunc tenet Astra Poli.

ABOUT this Time the Italians were again beholden to the Greeks in the Communication of another Sort of Picture call'd Mosaick Work; of which, not having as yet had occasion to take notice, we shall here interpose with some brief Account thereof. To the Latins it was known by the Name of Mosaicum, or Muserum Opus; and by the Greeks ἰσοβιλία, or ἰσοδομητὴ παρὰ τὸ μωσαϊόν, a concinnitate & elegantia. It is, indeed, an ART, we may look upon, as in some Sense, subordinate to PAINTING, with an Emulation to imitate it in all the Variety of Design, Figures, Colours, Lights, and shades, but with Materials, not only of a wonderful Beauty, but of a much more permanent and enduring Nature, such as Shells, Gold, Glass, Pebbles, Ivory, and Pieces

Pieces of variegated Marbles, which, with a mighty Industry and Curiosity, were all Cut, Form'd, Tinctur'd Anneal'd, Enamel'd, Gilt, Glaz'd, or Burnish'd, and, by a wonderful Application, fitted to compose the Figures of Birds, Beasts, Flowers and Men; and, in short, to represent almost any Thing that PAINTING itself could pretend to; and of this for Instance among many others, that might be produc'd, St. Mark's Church at Venice, particularly remains to this Day as a glorious Example. But who were the first Inventors, or whether it was constantly practis'd down to the Period above-mention'd, we meet with no clear Account in Authors; and Pliny tells us, that the Lib. 36. ch 25. Sort of Pavements call'd Tessilata, or Vermiculata, had their Original in Greece, or an ART much labour'd after the way of Picture, and that this soon after received some alteration by the Superinduction of another Sort called Lithostrota; but both the Terms and Description do not seem much to distinguish them, for he tells us the famous Workman in this Kind was one Sofus, who, at Pergamius, Sofus. wrought a very rich Pavement in the common Hall, wherein, with divers little colour'd Stones, he had counterfeited the Scraps of broken meat and Bones flung about, about, as if carelessly left, or neglected to be swept away; from whence this Place was call'd Asaroton Oecon, or the unswept House: Besides this Humour, he introduc'd upon the Floor several Pidgeons, suppos'd to be invited thither by the many scatter'd Crumbs; among which was a Dove drinking (reported) of wonderful Art, wherein also the Reflection of her Head and Body upon the Water was admirably represented.

AMONG the Romans the same Pliny tells us this Sort of Work was brought into Practice in the Time of Claudius and Nero; where, speaking of the Esteem that PAINTING had obtain'd before this new Invention sprung up, he tells us how much it was honour'd by Kings and whole States, and that only those were thought Enobl'd and Imortaliz'd whom PAINTERS vouchsafed to commend by their Workmanship to Posterity; but now the Marble and Porphyry had blemish'd its Lustre, and the gilded Walls and polished Works of Marble, engraven and set after the Manner of inlaid Work, and marquetry of divers Pieces, resembling Men, Beasts, Flowers, &c. had so much taken their Eyes, and got the universal Vogue, that PAINTING seem'd but a Handmaid to this upstart Mistress.

FALLING

FALLING down from these Periods, we meet with little or no mention of the Practice of this ART, 'till we come to the Time of Cimabuis again, where we find Andrea Taffi, a Florantine, in Emulation of him, made some endeavours in that ART; but, after some time being at Venice, where Appollonius, a Gracian, was working in St. Mark's Church in Mosaick, he became so pleas'd with that Way for the permanency and durableness of the Materials, that, for the future, he applied himself wholly to it; and having in a short Time contracted a Friendship with Appollonius, he prevails with him to go to Florence, where he obtain'd of him the Secret of ennealing the several Tinctures, and enameling the little Pieces of Stone and Glass together, with the proper Temper of the Cements to conjoin and fix them. These two afterwards travell'd together, and perform'd several Pieces of Work in Rome, Florence, and Pisa, which were not a little admir'd of that Age, being the best Productions hitherto of that kind. Taffi died Aged 81, Anno 1294.

AND now we find the Examples of these ARTISTS, with the great Encouragement and Careffes they met with, had so universally inspired the Florantines, with a Love

Love and a Desire after the Attainment of these A R T S, that we presently encounter a whole Throng of Followers, that emerge almost at the same Time; among some of Gaddo Gaddi. the Principal we shall take notice of Gaddo Gaddi, who was an intimate Friend of Cimabus, and practis'd his Way, but was especially Excellent in Mosaick Work, which he wrought with a better Judgment than any before him, and won thereby so considerable a Fame, that he was sent for soon after to Rome, Anno 1308, the Year after the Fire, and burning of the Church of St. John Laterane, and the Palace of Pope Clement the Fifth; whence (after having given sufficient Proofs of his Skill, and been well rewarded for it) he return'd back into Tuscany, where he died Anno 1312.

Margaritone. M A R G A R I T O N E, born at Arezzo, having render'd himself considerable, was imploy'd by Pope Urban the Fourth, to paint several Tables in the Church of St. Peter's in Rome; and afterwards upon the Occasion of Gregory the Tenth (in his Return from Lions) coming to Arezzo, where he died and was buried. The Aretines chose this PAINTER to conduct the Building of his Tomb in the great Church, upon which he set the Statue of the Pope in Marble, and embellish'd several Tables

Tables of PAINTING in the Chapel where it stood: He was the first that devised the laying Gold, and burnishing it upon Bole Armoniack, and to make a Ground of a sort of Size for Picture Tables that should never decay. Thus after having perform'd several PAINTINGS (which were all according to the Greekish Manner) a many Pieces in Fresco, or in wet Lime, and all with a great and singular Industry; he died Aged 77, and had bestowed on him this Epitaph,

Hic jacet ille bonus pictura Margaritonus Cui requiem dominus tradat ubiq; pius.

BUT he, of all the PAINTERS, worthy of the highest Reputation, after the Death of Cimabus, was his Disciple Giotto, born at Vespignano, a Village Fourteen Italian Miles from Florence, the Son of an Husbandman, and by his Father set to keep Sheep; in which Employment Cimabus first met with him, and found him, at the same time, exerting the Ideas of his native Fancy, and drawing the Picture of one of his Sheep upon the Sand, or a Tile-Shed, with a Coal, or some such course Material, upon which he conceiv'd such an Opinion of the natural Inclination of the young Lad, that he immediately apply'd himself to his Father for his Consent to take take him along with him to his House, and instruct him in the Rudiments of the ART; wherein, after a short Time, he became so mighty a Proficient, that he not only equalled, but surpassed his Master, quitting that rude Manner of Practice of the Greeks, and Cimabus, and other PAINTERS before that Time; and was the first that introduc'd a modern ART and true way of painting Portraits by the Life; which, except what Cimabus attempted in that Kind, was a Thing they were unacquainted with for many Ages before; and not only in this Particular, but in the whole ART he gave early Presages of his future Attainments; which afterward receiving a due Accomplishment, he became Famous for his excellent Skill in expressing the Affections, and all Manner of Gesture, so happily representing every Thing with such an identity and peculiar Conformity to the Original Idea, that he was said to be the true Scholar of Nature.

FOR a little Illustration of this Character, we shall give you a Specimen of something of his Hand done at Acesi, a City of Umbria, in the Cloysters of St. Francis, where the Body of that Saint lies buried; there, among other rare Things of his Invention, is to be seen a Monk kneeling before the Portrait of Obedience, who puteth a Yoak about his Neck, he holding up both his Hands to Heaven, and She laying her Fore-finger upon her Mouth, casteth her Eyes toward the Picture of our Saviour, from whose Side is shown flowing a full Stream of Blood ; on her other Hand stand Wisdom and Humility, denoting where Obedience is, they are always in Attendance, and assisting in the Performance of every good Work : On the other side is a History, wherein is represented Chastity standing upon a strong and high Rock, as not to be won, or moved by the Power of Kings, tho' they seem to offer Crowns, Scepters and Palms : By her is placed Penance, with all the Severity of her Discipline, driving away the amorous Cupids ; and at her Feet lies Purity, expressed by a Child washing it self in a christal Stream. Not far from these standeth Poverty barefoot, treading upon Thorns, an angry Cur barking at her, and Children contemning and abusing her ; this Poverty you see there married to St. Francis, by our Saviour joyning their Hands. In another Place you meet with the same St. Francis again in a Posture of Prayer, wherein such strange Devotion and inward Affection is expressed in his Countenance, that it detaineth the Beholder with a singular Admiration.

AFTER having finished those, and many others with the like Applause; and returning towards Florence, he wrought in Distemper Six Histories, representing the Patience of Job, wherein were many excellent Figures; among others, the Postures and Countenances of the Messengers bringing the sorrowful News unto him, were not to be mended, and, indeed, every Thing else therein met with such a great and deserved Applause, that the Fame thereof presently ran through all Italy; in so much, that Pope Benedict the Eleventh, designing the Decoration of St. Peter's Church, by the Hand of some excellent Master, sent a Gentleman, with express Order, to go to Florence to inform himself concerning Giotto, and the Quality of his Work, of which he had already heard such Fame; who, taking his Journey by Siena, still enquiring, as he went, for the best Masters, took a Draught of something from every one of them, to carry back to the Pope, to choose which he best approv'd of; at length, coming to Florence in a Morning betime, he went to the Shop of Giotto, desiring, as he had of others, to give him some Specimen of his Painting to shew his Holiness: Now Giotto, being of a merry Humour, presently took a Sheet of Paper, and, in a seeming careless Manner, his Elbow fix'd to his Side, with with a Pencil, describes such an exact Circle, as with a pair of Compasses could not be drawn truer, which, with a Smile, delivering to the Courtier, said, There is my Draught; but he imagining himself abus'd, said, Is this all? To which Giotto reply'd, It is all, and more than enough, and bid him put it among the rest, and he did not question but it would distinguish it self accordingly; which when the Pope, with others of Judgment, saw it, and heard the Manner how carelessly he did it, he admir'd, and gave it the Pre eminence above all the rest; this afterward was so much taken notice of and admir'd, that it became a Proverb in Italy, As round as Giotto's Circle.

UPON this, being sent for to Rome, he painted there many excellent Pieces, and received from the Pope many Honours and liberal Rewards; among others, he made a Madona on a Wall, which, afterwards being to be pull'd down, they were so curious of this Painting, that, with great Care and Labour, it was cut out square, cramped and fasten'd together with Irons, and translated into some other Place. In the Portico of St. Peter's he shew'd his Talent in Mosaick Work, representing St. Peter, and some other of the Apostles, in a Ship, which was in danger of drowning, where their Actions and Gestures were expressed full of Fear, with other suitable Behaviours of Fishermen in such Extreamity. He wrought at Avignon for Pope Clement the Fifth, where, and in many other Places in France, having left many celebrated Works, he returned home, Anno 1316, replenished with Honour and Gifts. After which, he was imployed by Robert King of Naples, for whom there, in the Cloyster of the Church of St. Clare, he made many Histories of the Old and New Testament, with the whole History of the Revelations; wherein, 'tis said, his Invention was admirable, receiving some considerable Improvement by the Converse and Assistance of his ingenious Friend Dantes the Poet.

THE King was not only pleas'd with the Excellency of his Pencil, but also with his Wit and facetious Society, which occasion'd to afford him frequent Visits, and to sit with him some Hours together while he was at Work.

AMONG some of his witty Jest, once the King said to him, I will make thee foremost Man of my Court: I believe it, quoth Giotto, and that I think is the Reason why I am laid in the Porter's Lodge at your Court Gate. Another time the King said to him, If I was as you, Giotto, the Weather is so exceeding hot, I would leave off Painting for a while: To which Giotto reply'd, Sir, if I was as you, I would indeed do so. Another Time being at work in the great Hall, the King merrily requested him to paint him out his Kingdom; upon which he presently went to work, and drew the Picture of an Ass with a Saddle on his Back, and smelling at another new Saddle that lay before him at his Feet, as if he had a mind to that rather than the other on his Back, and upon each Saddle a Crown and a Septer: The King demanding what he meant thereby, Giotto reply'd, Such is your Kingdom and Subjects, desiring new Lords daily.

IN his Return to Florence, he made very many rare Pieces by the Way, invented many excellent Models for Building, besides several other Works in Sculpture, Plaistick, &c. the City of Florence not only nobly Rewarded him, but gave him and his Posterity a Pension of an Hundred Crowns a Year, which was a Sum not inconsiderable at that Time.

HE died, generally lamented, in the Year 1336, being Sixty Years Old, and leaving many Disciples behind him; he was buried at Florence, and had this following Epitaph bestowed on him by Angelus Politianus:

*Ille ego sum per quam pictura extincta revixit,
Cui quam recta manus tam fuit & facilis,
Natura deerat nostræ quod defuit arti.*

*Plus licuit nulli pingere ne & melius ;
Miraris * Turris egregiam sacro ære sonantem,
Hæc quoque de modulo crevit ad astra meo ;
Denique sum Fottus, quid opus fuit ille referre, Hoc nomen longi carminis instar erit.*
