

Dear Maria,

I thank you for your invitation for the 4th. But it is the best day in the year I should come into the city & besides I should be acting very disrespectfully to my Old Boston Friends to forsake their celebration - If Deane has the slightest wish to hear Garrison let her not to come out on Tuesday for we shall see her with equal pleasure at any other time - It is indeed resuming your old occupations to visit the marketshop. I can seem to realize you are young again pity that some of those who think you neglect your family did not know the fact. Truly we seem to be at Antipode with our relations as well as the record - I thank you for the tour which I will return on Monday don't send me books before you have read them. I return the Cassara and will thank Debra to get you me tomorrow, (if convenient to her) Edge worth's Moral Tales for my young protegee - This afternoon I have been reading to her in Thomas & Pemberton. I will not all summer, give her so much trouble about the books - Mrs Sage's match caused me as much astonishment as the Rev. H. Malcolm's did you - I cannot imagine what brought them together, in religious opinion they must differ, for she had become a warm episcopalian & I should have thought she was one of the Jew who was so much attached to her husband that she would not marry again - I believe there is no end to wondering at matches for they are sometimes perfectly unaccountable - The weather is perfect, while I am revisiting parts of the country as calling on the great man of the village - I have now a very nice, airy chamber to which I moved yesterday, which will be much better for Lizzy & me than the one I had last summer, but our tenure is as uncertain one as a hotel is only till the arrival of a Queen of Clubs when arrival is uncertain - This arrangement I agreed to in the spring, & shall enjoy it for the time being - I wish my notes were more worthy of your pencil but such as they are you are welcome to receive - My love to Caroline - Another adieu here to all - Adieu affe -

The breeze did not come and the wind me to ask pardon for not observing one of your requests - I sent the paper containing the account of L. T. without the necessary injunction of return and when I inquired ~~from~~ it it had had the fate of most papers - destruction

This has led me to be more vigilant of my business in the future I am sure that you will be satisfied to hear to what
