That I might not be one of those INGRATES, whom all Men of Sense and Reason may with Justice condemn; I have taken this Occasion of making some small Acknowledgment for the many great and continued Favours I have received from you, by presenting to your Patronage this little Treatise of the Noble Cornaro, concerning the Means of attaining to a Long and Healthful Life.

LONG Life is one of the greatest Blessings, that we Mortals can enjoy ; it being what all Men naturally desire and wish for. Nay when Men are come to the longest date, they desire yet to live a little longer. But however Health is that which sweetens all our other Enjoyments, without which the Longest Life would be no more than a living Death, and render us burdensome to ourselves, and troublesome to all about us.

But though Life be so desirous, and Health so great a Blessing, yet how much is both the one and the other undervalued by the greatest part of Mankind ? Whatever they may think or say of the inestimableness of those precious Jewels yet 'tis plain by their practice that they put the slight upon, and despise them both ; and the most Men are hardly sensible of the Worth of Health, till they come in good earnest to be deprived of it.

How many Men do we daily see by their Intemperance and Excess to lay the Seeds of future Distempers, which either carry them off in the flower of their Age, which is the case of most, or else render their old Age, if they arrive to it, uneasy and uncomfortable ? And though we see others daily drop into the Grave before us, and are very

very apt with Justice to ascribe the loss of our Friends to their Living too fast, yet we cannot forbear treading in the same Steps, and following the same Courses, till at last by a violent and unnatural Death we are hurried off the Stage of Life after them.

What the Noble Cornaro observes of the Italians of his time, may very well be applied to this Nation at present, viz. “ That we are not contented with a plain Bill of “ Fare; that we ransack the Elements of Earth, Air, and “ Water, for all sorts of Creatures to gratifie our Wanton
“ and Luxurious Appetites: That as if our Tables were “ too narrow and short to hold our Provisions, we heap “ them up upon one another. And lastly, That to create “ a false Appetite, we rack our Cook’s Inventions for “ new Sawce and Provocatives to make the superfluous “ Morsel go down with the greater Gust.

This is not any Groundless Observation, but it carries an Experimental Conviction along with it. Look into all our Publick Entertainments and Feasts, and see whether Luxury and Intemperance be not too predominant in them. Men upon such occasions think it justifiable to give themselves the loose, to eat heartily, and to drink deeply; and many think themselves not welcome or well Entertained, if the Master of the Feast be so wise as not to give them an occasion of losing the MAN, and assuming the BEAST.

In opposition to such a practice, and to shew the good effects of a sober and regular Life, was the Design of Cornaro in writing the ensuing Treatise, as is also Ours in handing it into the World in an English Dress. What he wrote was from his own Experience, and he felt the Benefit of that Regimen which he prescribes to others; and they may meet with the same Success, if with Prudence and Caution they apply it to themselves.

It cannot indeed be expected that every Man should tie himself up strictly to the observation of the same Rules in his Diet, as this Noble Venetian followed; since the Variety of Climates, Constitution, Age and other Circumstances may admit of great Variations. But this we may assert as a reasonable, general, undeniable Maxim, founded upon Reason and the Nature of Things: That for the

Pre-

The P R E F A C E.

Preservation of Health, and the Prolonging a Man's Life, it is necessary that he Eat and Drink no more than what is sufficient to support his Natural Constitution : and on the contrary whatsoever he Eats or Drinks beyond that, is superfluous, and tends to the feeding of the corrupt and vicious Humours, which will at last, though they may be stifled for a time, break out into a flame, and burn the Man quite down, or else leave him like a ruined and shatter'd Building.

This General Maxim which we have laid down, will hold good with respect to Men of all Ages and Constitutions, and under whatsoever Climate they live ; if they have but the Courage to make due Application of it, and to lay a Restraint upon their Unreasonable Appetites.

After all we will not, we dare not warrant, That the most strict and sober Life will secure a Man from all Diseases, or prolong his Days to that Age which Signior Cornaro promises them by his own Experience. Natural Infirmities and Weaknesses which a Man brings along with him into the World, which he deriv'd from his Parents, and could not avoid, may make him sickly and unhealthful, notwithstanding all his Care and Precaution ; and outward Accidents (from which no Man is free) may cut off the Thread of Life before it be half spun out. There is no Fencing against the Latter of these, but as to the Former a Man may in some measure correct and amend them by a Sober and Regular Life. In fine, let a Man's Life be longer or shorter, yet Sobriety and Temperance render it pleasant and delightful. One that is Sober, though he live but thirty or forty years, yet lives long, and enjoys all his days, having a free and clear use of all his Faculties : whilst the Man that gives himself up to Excess, and lays no restraint upon his Appetites, though he prolong his Days to Threescore or Fourscore Years (which is next to Miracle) yet is his Life but one continued dosing Slumber ; his Head being always full of Fumes ; the Powers of his Soul cloudy and dark ; the Organs of his Body weak and worn out ; and neither of them fit to discharge the proper Offices of a Rational Creature.

Now

The P R E F A C E.

Now let any one upon serious Reflection consider, which is most Eligible, a Sober and Regular, or an Intemperate and Disorderly Course of Life. Certainly there is no great Difficulty in determining this Question; the main business is to persuade Men to put into Practice what they are really in their own Consciences convinc'd to be necessary for them to do. And this might easily be done were not Men born down, even against their own Sentiments, by Prejudice, Custom and Example. It is therefore requisite, in order to the farther recommending of Sobriety, to take off and answer some Objections (not taken notice of by Cornaro) which some of Our Days make use of to justify their contrary Practice.

Some of the Wits of the Age tell us, “ That Wine, even drunk to Excess, invivens the Fancy, and infuses bold and great Thoughts into a Man, makes his Writings Brisk and Airy, a Pleasure to himself, and no less delightful to others; whilst others pretend Sobriety, are dull and flat in all their Performances, and nothing but what is Phlegmatick and Heavy is the Product of their Genius.

In answer to this, it may be said, that this their Assertion is apparently false. What the Effects of These Spirits of Wine and a heated Brain have been, and how much the Modern Wits have improved by such a Method, is evident by the many loose and prophane Plays and Poems, which they have of Late years publish'd. There is indeed in them a Flashiness, Sprightliness, and an unusual Boldness of Thought, even to the out-braving and ridiculing of all that is Good and Sacred. But call you this Refin'd Wit? No 'tis Foolhardiness, Prophaneness and Blasphemy, such as would startle a sober Man to hear or read, and would even make the Authors themselves to blush, were they not arriv'd to such a Degree of Impudence, not to be asham'd. The very Air of those Writings informs you that they were drawn off from the Lees of Wine: That a Debauch'd and Licentious Conversation gave them their Ideas of Men and Manners, so forc'd, monstrous, and shocking to Nature. Besides, take those Witty Men out of their own Way, and they are as dull and

and heavy as any other Animals. Witness those paltry Defences, which have hitherto been made for the English Stage, in Opposition to Mr. Collier's View; wherein the Poets have wretchedly betray'd their Cause and the Force of Wit and Wine has not been able to withstand a sober and solid Argument. But the case is not so with Men that observe a due Regimen in what they Eat or Drink. Whatever the Wits may falsely represent, yet we may venture to assert, That the best Discourses which have appear'd in Print upon Pious, Rational, and Noble Subjects, have been the Product of cool, calm and sober Thoughts. No Heat, no Flash, but true and solid Arguments appear in them; and how unpleasant and dull soever they may seem to some of a vitiated and prejudiced temper of mind, yet by the wiser part of Mankind, on whose judgment one ought chiefly to rely, they will be always had in just Respect and Esteem.

'Tis further urg'd by some others, who have absolutely abandon'd themselves to Sensual Pleasures: "That 'tis better to live a few years in the full enjoyment of the Good things of this World, than to spend a Century in a continual Restraint laid upon their Appetites." But the Extravagancy of these Men appears at first view; Eat, Drink and be merry, is all they aim at, and they do not care how soon their Souls shall be requir'd of them: They are Strangers to the Pleasures which Health and good Old Age can afford to Men, and therefore live apace, tho' in truth they do not live at all to any purpose. By their Excesses and Extravagancies they render themselves useless to themselves and others. They are always in a Ferment, and never come to cool and sedate Thoughts of things. Hence it was that a Noble Peer of this Kingdom, one of a large Genius and quick Parts, was hurried by an Intemperate sort of Life to such Extravagancies, as for several years not to be his own Man; and though he lived not half the Age of a Man, yet by his Excesses he did not enjoy the half of those days wherein he liv'd. He perverted those Parts which God had given him, and made them the Pandars of Vice and Debauchery; which occasioned a Noble Friend of his to reflect upon him in these words:

“ Such

Marquis of Normanby's Essay on Heroick Poetry.

But not to insist any longer upon the Recommendation of a Sober and Regular Course of Life, which is the Design of Cornaro's Treatise, and which no Wise Man cannot but approve of : We shall only give you some short account of this Translation of it.

The first Chapter was formerly publish'd in English in the small Tract of Lessius concerning Health, but so far mutilated, that it is not the same with the Original, and falls very much short of it. How it came to pass that it was thus lamely handed into the World, we shall not now enquire, but it may very fairly serve as a Justification for our New Version of that Discourse, especially since we have rendred the whole, and joyn'd three other Discourses, with other Matters relating thereto. It was thought proper to leave out some few things, which being writ by a Stanch Roman Catholick, seemed to reflect upon the Protestant Religion ; but bating this, you have the whole of Cornaro's Treatises, digested into so many distinct Chapters.

But not to weary our Reader with too long a Preface, we shall recommend him to the perusal of the Book itself, and to the practice of the Rules contain'd therein, according as his own Discretion shall direct him : not questioning but that upon a due Experience he will thank Cornaro for the Original, and Us for the Version of it.

MOTTO, thus English'd from the GREEK:

*Fools blind to Truth, nor know their erring Soul,
How much the half is better than the whole,
How great the Pleasure wholesome Herbs afford,
How blest the frugal and the honest Board.*

HES.

THERE is a Story in the Arabian Nights Tales, of a King who had long languished under an ill Habit of Body, and had taken abundance of Remedies to no purpose. At length, says the Fable, a Physician cured him by the following Method: He took an hollow Ball of Wood, and filled it with several Druggs; after which he clos'd it up so artificially that nothing appear'd. He likewise took a Mall, and after having hollowed the Handle, and that Part which strikes the Ball, he enclosed in them several Druggs after the same Manner as in the Ball it self. He then ordered the Sultan, who was his Patient, to exercise himself early in the Morning with these rightly prepared Instruments, till such time as he should sweat. When, as the Story goes, the Vertue of the Medicaments perspiring through the Wood, had so good an Influence on the Sultan's Constitution, that they cured him of an Indisposition which all the Compositions he had taken inwardly had not been able to remove.

This

This eastern Allegory is finely contrived to shew us how beneficial bodily Labour is to Health, and that Exercise is the most effectual Physick. I have described, in my Hundred and Fifteenth Paper, from the general Structure and Mechanism of an human Body, how absolutely necessary Exercise is for its Preservation: I shall in this Place recommend another great Preservative of Health, which in many Cases produces the same Effects as Exercise, and may, in some measure, supply its Place, where Opportunities of Exercise are wanting. The Preservative I am speaking of is Temperance, which has those particular Advantages above all other Means of Health, that it may be practised by all Ranks and Conditions, at any Season, or in any Place. It is a kind of Regimen into which every Man may put himself, without Interruption to Business, Expence of Money, or Loss of Time. If Exercise throws off all Superfluities, Temperance prevents them; if Exercise clears the Vessels, Temperance neither fatiates nor overstrains them; if Exercise raises proper Ferments in the Humours, and promotes the Circulation of the Blood, Temperance gives Nature her full Play, and enables her to exert her self in all her Force and Vigour; if Exercise dissipates a growing Distemper, Temperance starves it.

Physick, for the most Part, is nothing else but the Substitute of Exercise, or Temperance. Medicines are indeed absolutely necessary in acute Distempers, that cannot wait the slow Operations of these two great Instruments of Health; but did Men live in an habitual Course of Exercise and Temperance, there would be but little Occasion for them. Accordingly we find that those Parts of the World are the most healthy, where they subsist by the Chace; and that Men liv'd longest when their Lives were employ'd in hunting, and when they had little Food besides what they caught. Blistering, Cupping, Bleeding, are seldom of Use but to the Idle and Intemperate; as all those inward Applications which are so much in Practice among us, are for the most part nothing else but Expedients to make Luxury consistent with Health. The Apothecary is perpetually employ'd ploy'd in countermining the Cook and the Vintner. It is said of Diogenes, that meeting a young Man who was going to a Feast, he took him up in the Street and carried him home to his Friends, as one who was running into imminent Danger, had not he prevented him. What would that Philosopher have said, had he been present at the Gluttony of a modern Meal? Would not he have thought the Master of a Family mad, and have begged his Servants to tie down his Hands, had he seen him devour Fowl, Fish and Flesh; swallow Oyl and Vinegar, Wines and Spices; throw down Sallads of twenty different Herbs, Sauces of an hundred Ingredients, Confections and Fruits of numberless Sweets and Flavours? What unnatural Motions and Counterferments must such a Medly of Intemperance produce in the Body? For my Part, when I behold a fashionable Table set out in all its Magnificence, I fancy that I see Gouts and Dropsies, Fevers and Lethargies, with other innumerable Distempers lying in Ambuscade among the Dishes.

Nature delights in the most plain and simple Diet. Every Animal, but Man, keeps to one Dish, Herbs are the Food of this Species, Fish of that, and Flesh of a Third. Man falls upon every Thing that comes in his Way, not the smallest Fruit or Excrecence of the Earth, scarce a Berry or a Mushroom, can escape.

It is impossible to lay down any determinate Rule for Temperance, because what is Luxury in one may be Temperance in another; but there are few that have lived any Time in the World, who are not Judges of their own Constitution, so far as to know what Kinds, and what Proportion of Food do best agree with them. Were I to consider my Readers as my Patients, and to prescribe such a kind of Temperance as is accommodated to all Persons, and such as is particularly suitable to our Climate and Way of Living, I would copy the following Rules of a very eminent Physician. Make your whole Repast out of one Dish. If you indulge in a second, avoid drinking any thing Strong 'till you have finish'd your Meal; at the same time abstain from all Sauces, or at least such as are not the most plain and simple. A Man could not well

well be guilty of Gluttony, if he stuck to these few obvious and easy Rules. In the first Case there would be no Variety of Tastes to sollicit his Palate, and occasion Excess; nor in the second any artificial Provocatives to relieve satiety, and create a false Appetite. Were I to prescribe a Rule for Drinking, it should be form'd upon a Saying quoted by Sir William Temple; the first Glass for my self, the second for my Friends, the third for good Humour, and the fourth for mine Enemies. But because it is impossible for one who lives in the World to diet himself always in so philosophical a manner, I think every Man should have his Days of Abstinence, according as his Constitution will permit. These are great Reliefs to Nature, as they qualify her for struggling with Hunger and Thirst, whenever any Distemper or Duty of Life, may put her upon such Difficulties; and at the same time give her an Opportunity of extricating her self from her Oppressions, and recovering the several Tones and Springs of her distended Vessels. Besides that Abstinence well tim'd often kills a Sickness in Embryo, and destroys the first Seeds of an Indisposition. It is observ'd by two or three ancient Authors, that Socrates, notwithstanding he liv'd in Athens during the great Plague, which has made so much Noise through all Ages, and has been celebrated at different times by such eminent Hands; I say, notwithstanding that he liv'd in the time of this devouring Pestilence, he never caught the least Infection, which those Writers unanimously ascribe to that uninterrupted Temperance which he always observ'd.

And here I cannot but mention an Observation which I have often made, upon reading the Lives of the Philosophers, and comparing 'em with any Series of Kings or great Men of the same Number. If we consider these ancient Sages, a great Part of whose Philosophy consisted in a temperate and abstemious Course of Life, one would think the Life of a Philosopher, and the Life of a Man were of two different Dates. For we find that the generality of these wise Men were nearer an hundred than sixty Years of Age at the Time of their respective Deaths. But the most remarkable Instance of the Efficacy of Temperance towards the procuring of long Life, is what we meet with in a little Book publish'd by Lewis Cornaro the Venetian; which I the rather mention, because it is of undoubted Credit, as the late Venetian Ambassador, who was of the same Family, attested more than once in Conversation, when he resided in England. Cornaro, who was the Author of the little Treatise I am mentioning, was of an infirm Constitution, till about forty, when by obstinately persisting in an exact Course of Temperance, he recovered a perfect State of Health; insomuch that at fourscore he publish'd his Book, which has been translated into English under the Title of Sure and certain Methods of attaining a long and Healthy Life. He liv'd to give a 3d or 4th Edition of it, and after having pass'd his hundredth Year, died without Pain or Agony, and like one who falls asleep. The Treatise I mention has been taken notice of by several eminent Authors, and is written with such a Spirit of Chearfulness, Religion, and good Sense, as are the natural Concomitants of Temperance and Sobriety. The Mixture of the old Man in it is rather a Recommendation than a Discredit to it.

Having design'd this Paper as the Sequel to that upon Exercise, I have not here consider'd Temperance as it is a Moral Virtue, which I shall make the Subject of a future Speculation, but only as it is the Means of Health.

Sure Way of attaining

Long and Healthful Life.

C H A P. I.

Of a Sober and Regular Life.

Nothing is more certain than that Custom becomes a second Nature, and has a great Influence upon our Bodies. Nay, it has too often more Power over the Mind, than Reason it self. The honestest Man alive, in keeping Company with Libertines, by Degrees forgets the Maxims of Probity which he had imbibed from the very Breast, and gives himself the Loose in those Vices which he sees practis'd. If he be so happy as to relinquish that bad Company, and to meet with Better, Virtue will triumph in its Turn; and he insensibly resumes the Wisdom which he had abandon'd. In a Word, all the Alterations which we perceive in the Temper, Carriage, and Manners of most Men, have scarce any other Foundation but the force and prevalency of Custom.

I have observ'd that 'tis Custom which has given Rise to two very dangerous Evils within a little time in Italy; the first I reckon to be Flattery and Ceremonies; and the second, Intemperance both in Eating and Drinking.

The first of these banishes out of human Conversation all Plain dealing, Frankness and Sincerity: And against the latter I declare open War, as being the most destructive of Health and the greatest Enemy it has.

'Tis

'Tis an unhappines into which the Men of this Age are fal'n, that Variety of Dishes is A-la-mode, and become so far preferable to Frugality. And yet the One is the Product of Temperance; whilst Pride and an unrestrained Appetite is the Parent of the other. Notwithstanding the difference of their Origin, yet Prodigality is at present stiled Magnificence, Generosity and Grandeur, and is commonly esteemed of in the World; whilst Frugality passes for Avarice, and Sordidness of Spirit, in the Eyes of most Men. Here is a visible Errour which Custom and Habit have establish'd.

This Error has so far seduced us, that it has prevailed upon us to renounce a frugal way of Living, tho' taught us by Nature even from the first Age of the World, as being that which would prolong our Days; and has cast us into those Excesses which serve only to abridge the Number of them. We become Old before we have been able to taste the Pleasure of being Young; and the Time which ought to be the Summer of our Lives, is often the beginning of their Winter. We soon perceive our strength to fail, and Weakness to come on apace, and decline even before we come to Perfection. On the Contrary, Sobriety maintains us in the natural State wherein we ought to be: Our Youth is lasting, and our Manhood attended with a Vigour that does not begin to decay till after a great many Years. A whole Century must be run out before Wrinkles can be formed on the Face, or gray Hairs grow on the Head. This is so true, that when Men were not addicted to Voluptuousness, they had more Strength and Vivacity at fourscore, than we have at present at forty.

O unhappy Italy! Dost thou not perceive that Gluttony and Excess robs Thee every Year of more Inhabitants than Pestilence, War and Famine could have destroyed? Thy true Plagues are thy frequent Feastings, which are so extravagant, that no Tables can be made large enough to hold that Number of Dishes which Prodigality lays upon them, but they are forced to be heap'd upon one another in Pyramids. What Madness what Fury is this? Regulate this Disorder, if not for God's fake, yet for thy own. I am sure there is no Sin, that displeases him more, nor any Voluptuousness that can be more pernicious to thy self. Endeavour then to heal thy self of this, as being one of those Epidemical Distempers, from which thou may'st be preserved by wholesome Food, and by the precautions that may prevent them. 'Tis very easy to avoid the Evils which an Excess in Eating or Drinking may bring upon us; nor is it any hard matter to find out a Sovereign Remedy against Repletion, since Nature it self has taught us it. Let us only give it what it requires, and not over charge it; for a small matter suffices Nature. The Rules of Temperance are derived from those of Right Reason. Let us accustom our selves to eat only to support Life; what is more than necessary for our Nourishment sows the Seeds of Sickness and Death; 'tis a Pleasure for which we must pay very dear, and which can neither be innocent nor excusable, since, it may be so prejudicial to us.

How many have I seen cut off in the Flower of their Days by the unhappy Custom of High-feeding? How many excellent Friends has Gluttony deprived me of, who might have been still an Ornament to the World, an Honour to their Country, and have occasioned me as much Satisfaction in enjoying them, as now I have sorrow in losing them?

'Tis to put a Stop to this spreading Contagion that I have undertaken to shew in this small Tract, that the Number and Variety of Dishes is a fatal Abuse which ought to be corrected, by living soberly, as did the Patriarchs of Old. Several young Persons, who for their good Qualities merit my esteem, having lost their Fathers sooner than they could have expected, have express'd a great Desire of being acquainted with my manner of Living. I could not but think their Curiosity very reasonable, since nothing is more reasonable than to wish for long Life. The more we advance in Years, the larger will our Experience be; and if Nature, which aims only at our Good, advises us to grow Old, and concurs with us in that Design, 'tis because she is sensible sensible that the Body being weakned by Time, which destroys all things, the Mind, when disengaged from the Snares of Voluptuousness, is more at leasure to make use of its Reason, and to taste the Sweets of Virtue. Hereupon I was willing to satisfy those Persons, and at the same time to do some Service to the Publick, by declaring what were the Motives that induced me to renounce Intemperance, and live a sober Life; by shewing the Method I observe, and what Benefit I find thereby; and lastly, by demonstrating that nothing can be more beneficial to a Man, then to observe a Regimen, that it is practicable and very necessary to be followed.

I say then, that the Weakness of my Constitution, which was considerably increas'd by my way of Living, cast me into so deplorable a Condition, that I was forced to bid a final Adieu to all Feastings, to which I had all my Life-long a violent Inclination. I was so often engaged in Excesses of this kind, that my tender Constitution could not hold up under the Fatigues of them. I fell into several Distempers, such as Pains of the Stomach, the Cholick, and the Gout. I had a lingering Fever, and an intolerable Thirst continually hanging upon me. This made me despair of any Cure, and tho' I was then not above 35 or 40 Years Old, yet I had no Hopes of finding any other end of my Distempers, but what should end my Life too.

The best Physicians in Italy made use of all their Skill for my Recovery, but without Success. At last when they quite despair'd of me, they told me that they knew only of one Remedy that could cure me, if I had Resolution enough to undertake and continue it, to wit, a Sober and Regular Life, which they exhorted me to live the Remainder of my Days, assuring me, that if Intemperance had brought so many Distempers, it was only Temperance that could free me from them.

I relish'd this Proposal; and perceiv'd that notwithstanding the miserable Condition to which my Intemperance had reduced me, yet I was not so Incurable, but the Contrary might recover or at least ease me. And

I was

I was the more easily persuaded to it, because I knew several Persons of a great Age and a bad Constitution, who only prolong'd their Lives by observing a Regimen, whilst on the other Hand I knew others who were born with a wonderful Constitution, and yet broke it by their Debaucheries. It seem'd very natural to me, that a different Way of living and acting produces different Effects, since Art may conduce to correct, perfect, weaken or destroy Nature according to the good or bad Use that is made of it.

The Physicians beginning to find me tractable, added to what they had before told me, that I must either choose a Regimen or Death; that I could not live if I did not follow their Advice, and that if I defer'd much longer taking my Resolutions accordingly, it would be too late to do it. This was home; I was loath to die so soon, and I could not tell how to bear the Thoughts of it; besides, I was convinced of their Experience and Ability. In short, being morally certain that my best way was to believe them, I resolv'd upon putting into practice this Course of Life, how austere soever it seem'd to me.

I intreated my Physicians to inform me exactly after what manner I ought to govern my self. To this they reply'd, That I must always manage my self as a sick Person, eat nothing but what was good, and that in a small Quantity.

They had a long time before prescribed the same thing to me; but till then I made a Jest of it. When I was cloy'd with the Diet they order'd me, I did eat of all those Meats which they had forbidden, and perceiving my self hot and dry, I drank Wine in abundance. However, I do not boast of this my Conduct; I was one of those imprudent Patients, who not being able to resolve upon doing whatever is prescribed them for their Health, mind nothing else but deceiving their Physicians, tho' they prove the greatest Cheats to themselves at last.

As soon as I resolv'd to believe my Physicians, and thought that it was a Disgrace not to have Courage enough enough to be wise ; I accustomed my self so much to live soberly, that I contracted a Habit of so doing, without any Trouble or Violence offer'd to my self. In a little time I found Relief, and (which may seem to some incredible) at the Year's end I found my self not only on the mending Hand, but I was perfectly cured of all my Distempers.

When I saw I was recovered, and began to taste the Sweets of this Sort of Resurrection, I made abundance of Reflections upon the Usefulness of a regular Life. I admired the Efficacy of it, and perceiv'd that if it had been so powerful as to cure me, it would be capable enough of preserving me from those Distempers to which I had been always Subject.

The Experience I had thereof removing all farther Scruple, I began to study what Food was proper for me. I was minded to try whether what pleased my Taste were beneficial or prejudicial to my Health, and whether the Proverb were true which says, That what delights the Palate cannot but be good for the Heart. I found it to be false, and that it only serves as an Excuse to the Sensualists, who are for indulging themselves in whatever might please their Appetites.

Formerly I could not drink my Wine with Ice ; I loved heady Wines, Melons, all Sorts of raw Fruits, Sallads, salt Meats, high Sauces and baked Meats, notwithstanding they were prejudicial to me. Hereupon I made no account of the Proverb, and being convinced of its falsity, I made choice of such Wines and Meats as agreed with my Constitution : I proportioned the Quantity thereof according to the strength of my Stomach. I declined all Diet that did not agree with me ; and made it a Law to my self to lay a Restraint upon my Appetite, so that I always rose from Table with a Stomach to eat more if I pleas'd. In a Word, I entirely renounced Intemperance, and made a Vow to continue the Remainder of my Life under the same Regimen that I had observ'd : A happy Resolution this, the keeping whereof has freed me from all my Infirmities, which without it were Incurable ! I never before lived a Year together without falling once at least into some violent Distemper; but this never happen'd to me afterwards; on the Contrary I have been always Healthful ever since I have been Temperate.

The Nourishment which I take, being in Quantity and Quality just enough to suffice Nature, breeds no such corrupt Humours as spoil the best Constitutions. 'Tis true indeed, that besides this Precaution I made use of many others. For instance, I took care to keep myself from Heats and Colds: I abstain'd from all violent Exercises, as also from ill Hours and Women. I no longer lived in Places where was an unwholesome Air, and took special Care to avoid the being expos'd to violent Winds, or to the excessive Heat of the Sun. All these Cautions may seem morally impossible to those Men, who in their Transactions in the World follow no other Guides but their own Passions; and yet they are not hard to be practis'd, when a Man can be so just to himself as to prefer the Preservation of his Health to all the Pleasures of Sense and necessary Hurry of Business.

I likewise found it advantageous to me not to abandon my self to Melancholy, by banishing out of my Mind whatever might occasion it: I made use of all the Powers of my Reason to restrain the force of those Passions, whose Violence does often break the Constitution of the strongest Bodies. 'Tis true indeed, that I was not always so much a Philosopher, nor yet so Cautious, but that sometimes I fell into those Disorders that I would have avoided; but this rarely happen'd, and the Guard I kept over my Appetite, which ought chiefly to be minded, prevented all the pernicious Consequences which might have arisen from my petty Irregularities.

This is certain, that the Passions have less Influence, and cause less Disorder in a Body that is regular in its Diet, than in another which gives the loose to the Cravings of an inordinate Appetite. Galen made this Observation before me; and I might produce several Authorities to support this Opinion, but I will go only upon my own Experience. It was impossible for me sometimes to abstain from the Extrems of Hot and Cold, and to get an entire Mastery over all the Occasions of Trouble which had cross'd my whole Life; but yet these Emotions made no Alteration in the State of my Health: And I met with a great many Instances of Persons who sunk under a less Weight, both of Body and Mind.

There was in our Family a considerable Suit of Law depending against some Persons, whose might overcame our Right. One of my Brothers, and some of my Relations, who having never smarted for their Debaucheries, were the more free to indulge them, could not conquer that Concern which the Loss of this Suit of Law wrought in them, and perfectly died of Grief. I was as sensible as they were, of the Injustice that was done us, but I did not die for it; and I attribute their Loss and my Welfare to the Difference in our way of Living. I was made amends for that Disgrace by the Comfort I had of not sinking under it; and now make no manner of Doubt, but that the Passions are less violent in a Man that lives soberly, than in one that does not.

At seventy Years of Age I had another Experiment of the Usefulness of my Regimen. A Business of an extraordinary Consequence drawing me into the Country, my Coach-Horses went faster than I would have them; being lash'd with the Whip, got a head and ran away with me. I was over-thrown, and drag'd a long way before they could stop the Horses. They took me out of the Coach, with my Head broken, a Leg and an Arm out of Joint, and in a Word, in a very Lamentable Condition. As soon as they had brought me Home again, they sent for the Physicians, who did not expect I could live three Days to an end: However, they resolv'd upon letting of me Blood to prevent the coming of a Fever, which usually happens in such Cases. I was so confident that the regular Life which I had led, had prevented the contracting of any ill Humours which I might be afraid of, that I oppos'd their Prescription. I order'd them to dress my Head, to set my Leg and my Arm, to rub me with some specifick Oils proper for Bruises, and without any other Remedies I was soon cured,

cured, to the great Astonishment of the Physicians, and of all those who knew me. From hence I infer, that a regular Life is an excellent Preservative against all Natural Evils, and that Intemperance produces quite contrary Effects.

About four Years ago I was over perswaded to do a thing which had like to have cost me dear. My Relations whom I love, and who have a real Tenderness for me ; my Friends with whom I was willing to comply in any thing that was reasonable ; lastly, my Physicians who were look'd upon as the Oracles of Health did all agree, that I eat too little ; that the Nourishment I took was not sufficient for one of my Years ; that I ought not only to support Nature, but likewise to increase the Vigour of it by eating a little more than I did. It was in vain for me to represent to them, that Nature is content with a little ; that this Little having preserved me so long in Health, Custom was become a second Nature to me : That it was more reasonable, since Natural Heat abates in proportion as one grows older, that I should likewise abridge my Allowance in Diet.

To add the greater force to my Opinion, I mentioned to them the Proverb which saith, He that eats little, eats much ; that is, if a Man is willing to live long in the enjoyment of his Food, let him live sparingly. I likewise told them, that what one leaves at a Meal does one more good, than what one has already eaten. But all this could not prevail upon them ; and being wearied with their Importunities, I was forced to submit. Having therefore before been used to take twelve Ounces, in Bread, Soops, Yolks of Eggs, and Meat, I increas'd it to fourteen Ounces a Day ; and drinking about fourteen Ounces of Wine, I added two Ounces more and made it sixteen.

This Augmentation of Diet was so prejudicial to me, that as brisk as I was, I began to be sad and out of Humour ; every thing offended me, and upon the least Occasion I broke out into a Passion, so that a Dog (as they say) would not live with me. At twelve days end I was taken with a violent Fit of the Cholick, and that followed by a continual Fever, which Tormented me five and thirty days together, and for the first fifteen days put me into such an Agony, that it was impossible for me to take a quarter of an hours sleep at a time. There was no occasion to ask my Friends whether they despair'd of my Life, and whether they repented of the advice they had given me; for they several times believed that I was a dying Man, just giving up the Ghost. However, I recover'd tho' I was seventy eight Years of Age, and tho' we had a harder Winter than is usual in our Climate.

Nothing freed me from this Danger, but the Regimen which I had so long observed. It had prevented me from contracting those ill Humours, with which they are troubled in their old Age, who are not so wise as to take care of themselves whilst they are Young. I did not perceive in me the old Leaven of those Humours, and having nothing to struggle with but the new ones, which were occasioned by this small Addition to my Diet, I opposed and conquer'd my Indisposition notwithstanding its force.

From this Sickness, and my Recovery from it, we may discern, what an Influence a Regimen has over us, which preserv'd me from Death, and what a Power Repletion has, which in so few days brought me to the last Extremity. 'Tis probable that Order being necessary for the Conversation of the Universe, and our Bodily Life being nothing else but a Harmony and perfect Agreement between the Elementary Qualities of which our Bodies are compos'd, we cannot live long in a disorderly Course of Life, of which nothing but Corruption can possibly come.

Order indeed is so exceeding Beneficial, that it cannot be too strictly observed in every thing. 'Tis by the Means of this that we arrive to the perfection of Arts, and an easy accomplishment in the Sciences. It renders Armies Victorious, keeps up the Civil Polity of Cities, and Concord in Families: It renders whole Nations flourishing; in a word, it is the support and preserver both of the Civil and Natural Life; and the best remedy that can be applied to all Evills, whether Publick or Private.

When a disinterested Physician waits upon a patient, let him remember to recommend to him his Diet, and especially a Regimen therein in order to his Recovery.

This

This is certain, that if all Men would live regularly and frugally, there would be so few sick Persons, that there would hardly be any occasion for Remedies; ev'ry one would become his own Physician, and would be convinced that he never met with a better. It would be to little purpose to study the Constitution of other Men; every one, if he would but apply himself to it, would always be better acquainted with his own, than with that of another; every one would be capable of making those Experiments for himself, which another could not do for him, and would be the best judge of the strength of his own Stomach, and of the Food which is agreeable thereto; for in one word, 'tis next to impossible to know exactly the Constitution of another, the Constitutions of Men being as different from one another as their Complexions. Who now for instance, would imagine that Old Wine should be hurtful, and new Wine wholesome to me? That things which are looked upon to be hot by Nature should refresh and strengthen me? What Physician could have observed in me those Effects so uncommon in most Bodies, and so contrary to the Notions of mankind, when I my self was at no small pains in discovering the Causes thereof after abundance of Trials, which prove the difference of Mens Constitutions?

Since no Man therefore can have a better Physician than himself, nor a more Sovereign Antidote than a Regimen, every one ought to follow my Example; that is, to study his own Constitution, and to Regulate his Life according to the Rules of right Reason.

I own indeed that a Physician may be sometimes necessary; since there are some Distempers which all human Prudence cannot provide against. There happen some unavoidable Accidents, which seize us after such a manner as to deprive our Judgment of the Liberty it ought to have to be a comfort to us. It is foolishness then wholly to rely upon Nature, it must have a supply, and recourse must be had to some one or other for it.

If the presence of a Friend who comes to visit a sick Person and to testify the concern he has for his Illness, be a Comfort and Refreshment to him; there is greater reason to believe that the Visit of a Physician must needs be more agreeable, being a Friend upon whose Advice and Care we may depend for a speedy Recovery of our Health; but for the Maintaining of that Health there needs no other support but a sober and Regular Life. 'Tis a Specifick and Natural Medicine, which preserves the Man, how tender soever his Constitution be, and prolongs his Life to above an Hundred Years, spares him the Pain of a Violent Death, sends him quietly out of the World, when the Radical Moisture is quite spent, and which in short, has all the Properties that are fancied to be in Aurum Potabile, and the Elixir which a great many Persons have sought after in vain.

But alas! most men suffer themselves to be seduced by the Charms of a Voluptuous Life. They have not courage enough to deny their Appetites; and being over-swayed by their prejudices so far, as to think they cannot prevent the gratification of them without abridging too much of the Pleasures, they form Systems whereby to persuade themselves, that it is more eligible to live ten years less than to be upon the Restraint, and deprived of whatever may gratifie the Cravings of their Appetites.

Alas! They know not the Value of Ten Years Healthful Life in an Age when a Man may enjoy the full use of his Reason and make an advantage of all his Experiences: In an Age wherein a Man may appear to be truly such by his Wisdom and Conduct; lastly, in a time wherein he is in a condition of reaping the fruits of his Studies and Labours.

To instance only in the Sciences; it is certain, that the best Books which we have extant, were composed in those last Ten Years which the Intemperate despise; and that Men's Minds growing to perfection proportionably as their Bodies grow old, Arts and Sciences would have lost a great deal of their Perfection, if all the Great Men who were Professors of that had lived ten Years shorter than they did. For my part, I think it proper to keep the fatal day of my Death as far off as I can. If this had been my resolution, I should not have finished several Pieces, which will be both pleasing and instructing to those who come after me. The

The Sensualists farther Object, that it is impossible to live a Regular Life. To this I reply; that Galen, who was so great a Man, made choice of it, and advised others to do the same, as being the best Course they could take. Plato, Cicero, Isocrates, and a great many Famous Men of past Ages imbraced it; and in our time, Pope Paul Farnese, Cardinal Bembo, and two of our Doges, Lando and Donato, have practised it, and thereby arrived to an extreme Old Age. I might instance in others of a meaner Extract; but, having followed this Rule my self. I think I cannot produce a more convincing proof of its being practicable, and that the greatest trouble to be met with therein is the first resolving and entring upon such a Course of Life.

You will tell me that Plato, as Sober a Man as he was, yet affirmed, That a Man devoted to the Administration of the Government in publick Affairs, can hardly lead an Exact and Regular Life, being often obliged in the Service of the State to be exposed to the Badness of Weather, to the Fatigues of Travelling, and to Eat whatever he can meet with. This cannot be denied; but then I maintain, That these Things will never hasten a Man's Death, provided he that is in this post accustoms himself to a frugal way of Living. There is no Man in what condition soever he is, but may prevent his overeating: and cure himself of those Distempers that are caused by Repletion. They who have the charge of publick Affairs committed to their Trust are more obliged to it than any others: Where there is no Glory to be got for their Country, they ought not to sacrifice themselves: They should preserve themselves to serve it, and if they persue my Method, it is certain they would ward off the Distempers which Heat, and Cold, and Fatigues might bring upon them; or should they be disturbed with them, it would be but very lightly.

It may likewise be Objected, That if one who is Well, is Dieted like one that is Sick, he will be at a loss about the choice of his Diet when any Distemper comes upon him. To this I say, That Nature which preserves all Beings as far as possible, teaches us how we ought to govern our selves in such a case. It begins by depriving us altogether of our Appetite, that we can eat little or nothing at all. At that time, whether the Sick Person has been Sober or intemperate, no other Food ought to be made use of, but such as is proper for the condition wherein he is; such as Broth, Jellies, Cordials, Barley-water, &c. When his Recovery will permit him to make use of a more solid Nourishment, he must take less than he was used to before his Sickness, and notwithstanding the eagerness of his Appetite, he must take care of his Stomach till he has a perfect Cure. Should he do otherwise, he would overburden Nature, and infallibly relapse into the Danger from whence he escaped. But notwithstanding this I dare to aver, That he who leads a Sober and Regular Life will hardly ever be Sick; or if he is, it will be but seldom and for a short time. This way of Living preserves us from those Humours which occasion our Infirmities, and by consequence heals us of all those Distempers which they engender. The defect of the Cause does Physically prevent the production of the Effect, and the Effect cannot be dangerous and violent, when the Cause it self is but slight and weak.

Since then Sobriety lays a restraint upon our Passions, preserves our Health, and is both Wholsome and Beneficial to us, ought it not to be followed and embraced by all Men? Self-love if well understood advises us to it: It is neither impossible nor difficult, and the method I take ought to discourage no body from undertaking it. For I do not pretend to persuade every body to eat as little as I do, or to debar themselves from the use of a great many things from which I refrain. I Eat but little, because my Stomach is nice, and I abstain from certain Dishes because they are prejudicial to me. They who are not offended by them, are not oblig'd to refrain from them, but are allow'd the use of them; only they ought to abstain from eating too much even of that which agrees with them, because it would be prejudicial to them, since an over charged Stomach cannot so easily digest it. In short he that is offended at nothing has no occasion of enquiring into the Quality of his Diet, he ought only to be cautious of the Quantity thereof. It

It signifies nothing to tell me, That there are several who denying themselves nothing, do yet live as long without Infirmities as they who are Sober. This is but rare, uncertain, hazardous, and in a manner Miraculous. The instances of this nature do not at all justify the Conduct of those Persons, who reckon it an extraordinary Happiness, and are commonly the Betrayers of their good Constitution. It is more certain, that an infirm Old Man, will live longer by observing a strict Regimen, than a young, vigorous, and healthful Man will, that gives the loose to his Appetite.

However this is certain, That a good Constitution with the support of a regular Life, will carry a Man farther than a weak one, though managed with an equal degree of Care. God and Nature may form bodies so strong and robust, as to be proof against all that is contrary to us; as I have observ'd at Venice the Procurator Thomas Materini, and at Padua the Chevalier Antonio Capo di Vacca; but among a thousand one shall hardly meet with the like. All others who are for a Long and Healthful Life who would Die without an Agony and only by a pure dissolution, who would, lastly, enjoy the Advantages of a happy Old Age, will never come to what they aim at without Sobriety.

'Tis Temperance alone which supports our Constitution, without any Alteration; it creates nothing but sweet and wholesome Humours, which sending up no Vapours to the Brain, leave the Mind in the perfect use of the Organs, and are no hindrance from raising its Contemplation from the Wonders of the World, to the Consideration of the Power of its Creator. A Man can never be the better for those Reflections, when his Head is full of the Vapours of Wine and Meat. But when once these Fumes are gone, his Understanding is clear, he observes and discerns a thousand agreeable things, which he would not have known or comprehended in another State. He can then discern the falsity of those pleasures which Voluptuousness promises, the Real Goods with which Virtue loads us, and the Unhappiness of those whom a fatal delusion renders Slaves to their Passions.

The three most dangerous are the Pleasure of the Taste, the hunting after Honours, and the Possession of Riches. These Desires increase with the Age of Old Men, who having always led a disorderly life, have suffer'd their Lusts to take Root in their Youth and Manhood. A Wise Man does not stay so long before he corrects them; he declares betimes a War against his Passions, of which he does not obtain the Mastery till after several struggles, and then Virtue in its turn Triumphs, and Crowns the Man with the Blessings of Heaven and the Esteem of all the World.

Is he ready to pay the Tribute that is due to Nature? Full of acknowledgements for the favours already received from God, he throws himself into the Arms of his future Mercy. He is not afraid of those Everlasting Punishments, which they deserve, who by their Intemperance offer violence to their own Lives. He dies without complaining, because he was not to live for ever; and his Reason sweetens the Bitterness of this Fatality: In a word, he leaves the world generously, when in a long tract of happy Years he has had time enough to enjoy his Virtue and Reputation, and considers that not one in a thousand who have lived otherwise than he has done, has arrived to such an Age.

He is comforted the more upon considering that this Separation will not be violent, painful or feverish. His End is Calm, and he expires like a Lamp when the Oil is spent, no Delirium, no Convulsions attending him; and so he passes from this Corruptible Life to that whose Eternal happiness is the Reward of the Virtuous.

O Happy, blessed, and regular Life, how worthy art thou of our Esteem, and how dost thou deserve to be prefer'd before thy Contrary? We need only reflect upon the different Effects of both to be sensible of the Advantages that attend thee, tho' thy name alone is sufficient to attract that Esteem which you Deserve.

Having thus given the Reasons which made me abandon an Intemperate and take up with a sober Life as also the Method I observed in it, and the Benefit which I reap'd from it, and the Advantage which others may receive ceive from the practice thereof, I shall now direct my Discourse to those who suppose it to be no benefit to grow Old, because they fancy that when a Man is past seventy his Life is nothing but Weakness, Infirmity and Misery. In the first place I can assure them that they are mightily mistaken, and that I find my self, as Old as I am, which is much beyond what they speak of, to be in the most pleasant and Delightful Stage of Life.

To prove that I have reason for what I say, they need only enquire how I spend my time, what are my usual Pleasures and Business, and to hear the Testimony of all those that know me. They unanimously testify that the Life I lead is not a dead and languishing Life, but as happy a one as can be wish'd for in this World.

They will tell you that I am still so strong at fourscore and three, as to mount a Horse without any Help: That I can, not only go down Stairs without any concern, but likewise descend a Hill all on foot: That I am always merry, always pleas'd, always in humour, maintaining a happy peace in my own mind, the sweetness and serenity whereof appear at all times in my Countenance.

Besides, they know that 'tis in my power to pass away the time very pleasantly, having nothing to hinder me from tasting all the pleasures of an agreeable Society with several persons of parts and worth. When I am willing to be alone, I read good Books, and sometimes fall to Writing, seeking always an occasion of being useful to the publick, and doing service to private persons as far as possible. I do all this without the least trouble; and in such times as I set apart for these Employments.

I dwell in a House, which beside its being situated in the pleasantest part of Padua, may be look'd upon as the most convenient and most agreeable Mansion of that City. I there make my Apartments proper for the Winter and Summer, which serve as a Shelter to defend me from the Extreme Heat of the One, and the Rigid Coldness of the other. I walk out in my Gardens along my Canals and Walks, where I always meet with some little thing or other to do, which at the same time employs and diverts me,

I spend

I spend the Months of April, May, September, and October at my Country-House; which is in the finest Situation imaginable. The Air of it is Good, the Avenues Neat, the Gardens magnificent, the Waters clear and plentiful; and this Seat may well pass for an enchanted palace. When I am there I sometimes divert my self with a sport that agrees most with my Age, viz. in going out with a setting Dog or with Terriers.

Sometimes I take a walk to my Villa, all whose Streets terminate at a large Square, in the midst of which is a pretty neat Church, and large enough for the bigness of the Parish.

Through this Villa runs a Rivulet, and the Country about is enrich'd with fruitful and well cultivated Fields, having at present a considerable number of Inhabitants. This was not so anciently; it was a Marshy place, and the Air so bad, that it was more proper for Frogs and Toads, than for Men to dwell in. I thought it advisable to drain the Marshy-Lands, so that being dry, the Air became more wholesome: Several Families have settled there and rendred the place very populous, where I may say that I have dedicated to the Lord a Church, Alters, and Hearts to Worship him; which Reflection is a great Comfort to me as often as I make it.

Sometimes I pay a Visit to my Friends, of the Neighbouring Towns, who procure me an acquaintance with the Ingenious Men of the place. I discourse with them about Architecture, Painting, Sculpture, Mathematicks and Agriculture; Sciences for which I had all my Life long a great Fondness, and the rather because they were very much in esteem in my time.

I saw with Curiosity the new pieces of Workmanship; and it was a new Pleasure to me to take a second View of those which I had already seen; and am always learning something that I am pleased to know.

I visit publick Buildings, Palaces, Gardens, Antiquities, Squares, Churches, and Fortifications passing by no place that may gratifie my Curicfity or give me any new Light into things.

That

That which charm'd me most in the little Journeys I took, was the various Prospects of Places through which I went. The Plains, the Hills, the Rivulets, the Castles and the Villages, were as so many Objects that offer'd themselves with Pleasure to my Sight; and afforded a delightful View.

In short, the Pleasures I take are not imperfect upon the Account of the Weakness of my Organs. I see and hear as well as ever I did in my Life: All my Senses are as free and as perfect as ever, especially my Taste, which is better with that little which I eat at present, than when I was a Slave to my Appetite.

Changing of Beds is no hinderance to my Repose, I sleep very soundly; and if I Dream, my Dreams are pleasant.

'Tis with a great deal of Satisfaction that I see the End of a Work of such Importance to this State, which has rendred so many Places fertile, that before were uncultivated and useles; a thing I never expected to have seen compleated, considering how many States are loath to begin, and weary of carrying on Undertakings of so vast a Charge and so difficult to be perform'd. I was upon the Places for two Months together with the Commisaries that had the oversight of these Works, and this during the greatest Heat of Summer; and yet, thanks to my Regimen, the only preserver of Health, neither the unwholesome Air of the Fens, nor the Fatigue did me any Injury.

Such as these are the Employments and Diversions of my Old Age, which is, Blessed be God, free from those disturbances of Mind and Infirmities of Body, under which so many poor Rheumatick and crazy Old Men, as well as miserable Young Men labour.

If in discoursing on such a serious Subject as this, it be allowable to speak of Trifles, I might tell you that at the Age of fourscore and three, a sober Life had preserv'd me in that Sprightliness of Thought, and Gaiety of Humour, as to be able to compose a Play for the use of the Stage, which was diverting without shocking the Audience. Comedy is usually the product of Youth, as Tragedy is of Old Age, The latter by Gravity of its composurè suiting to riper Years, whilst the former by its facetiousness is more agreeable to those that are Young. If Antiquity has so far commended and admired a Greek Poet, for having in the seventy third Year of his Age compos'd a Tragedy, which is a grave and serious Poem, why should I be less admir'd and happy in having compos'd a Comedy, which is diverting at my Age? For this I am sure of, that tho' that Author was ten Years Younger than I am, yet he had not more Health, nor a brisker Genius.

To conclude, as an addition to my Happiness, I see my self as it were immortalized, and born again by the great Number of my Descendants. I meet with not only two or three when I come home, but eleven Grand-Children, the eldest of which is Eighteen, and the Youngest two Years Old, all born of the same Father, and the same Mother; all healthful, of good Parts, and of promising hopes. I take a delight in playing with the Youngsters; Children between three and five Years of Age, being generally very merry and diverting Company. Those who are older entertain me better: I often make them sing, and play upon musical Instruments, and sometimes I join in Consort with them.

Call you this an infirm and crazy Old Age, as they pretend, who say that a Man is but half alive after he is seventy? They may believe me as they please, but in reality I would not change my Age and Life for the most flourishing Youth, which lays no restraint upon his Senses, being sure that it is Subject to a great many Distempers which may occasion Death.

I remember all the Follies that I was Guilty of in my young Days, and am perfectly sensible of the Danger and Imprudence of them. I know with what Violence young Persons are carried away by their Passions, and how much they presume upon their strength, but would think they had taken a sure Lease of their Lives; they expose it rashly, as if it were chargeable to them, and they run headlong into whatsoever their Concupiscence prompts them them to. They must gratify their Appetites whatever it cost them, without perceiving that they feed those ill Humours, which will render their Lives miserable, and hasten the Hour of their Death.

Of these two, the one is Cruel; the other dreadful and insupportable by all sensual Men, especially young People, who suppose they have a better Title to Life than others, and Libertines who are not so Blind as to flatter themselves that God will permit their Sin to go unpunished.

As for my Part, blessed be God, I find my self freed from those just fears which cannot but Alarm them whenever they are capable of Reflections. For in the first place, I am certain that I shall not fall Sick, since I take care by a regular Diet to ward off Infirmities. And then secondly, the Time of my Death approaching teaches me to submit quietly to that which is Inevitable and from which no Man could ever secure himself. 'Tis folly to be afraid of that which cannot be avoided; but I hope whenever the Time comes, the Merits of Jesus Christ will be available to me; and tho' I am sensible that I must die, yet I am persuaded it will be a long time ere I shall, since this Dissolution cannot happen but by the Consumption of the Radical Moisture which is exhausted by Age.

The Regular Life which I lead has left Death this only way of destroying me. The Humours of my Body can do me more injury than the Elementary Qualities which prevail'd in my Nature ever since my Birth. I am not so stupid as not to perceive, that having had a beginning I must of necessity have an End; but since we must die, doubtless that Death is attended with less Terror which happens by the Natural Dissolution of the Parts of which we are composed. Nature her self having tyed the Bands of our Life, can likewise unty them again without the least pain, and can stay longer before it executes that Office than Sickness generally do, which with Violence break the Bands of our Life asunder, and which cannot happen to us but by foreign Causes, since, nothing is more contrary to Nature than that which tends to our Destruction.

When a Man draws near his End, he perceives his Strength to abate by Degrees; The Organs and all the Faculties grow weak; he can no longer Walk, and can hardly speak; His Judgment and Memory fail him: He becomes blind, deaf, and bowed together; in fine, his whole frame is worn out. Blessed be God, I am not as yet in that Condition. On the Contrary I promise my self, that my Soul finds it self so well in my Body, where she meets with nothing but Peace, Unity and Concord (spite of all the different Qualities of the Humours which compose us, and the various Inclinations that are produced by the Senses) that she will be under no Temptation to wish a speedy Separation, and that it will be a long time before she can be brought to a Resolution.

To conclude, I am assur'd that I shall still live several Years in Health, and that I shall long enjoy the Pleasure of being in the World, which is certainly very comfortable, when a Man knows how to make a right use of it. I hope to reap a greater satisfaction from hence in the other Life, and I shall lie under Obligations to the Virtues of the Regimen, to which I am indebted for the Victory I have obtain'd over my Passions. Nor is there any Man but may hope for the same Happiness, if he would live as I have done.

A sober Life therefore being so necessary, its Name so commendable, the Enjoyment of it so beneficial, nothing remains after what have been said but to conjure all Men as they love themselves to make the best of Life and lay in a stock of that, which being the most precious of all, deserves to be sought after if we have it not, and to be preserv'd if we have it.

'Tis this Divine Sobriety which is always pleasing to God, and always the Friend of Nature; she is the Daughter of Reason, the Sister of all other Virtues, the Companion of Temperance; always Cheerful, always Modest, always Wise and Regular in her Operations,
She

She is the Root of Health, of Industry, and of whatever becomes a great Soul to be employ'd about. She has the Laws of God and Nature both to justify and enforce her. When she reigns, Repletions, Disorders, Evil Habits, Superfluous Humours, Fevers, Aches, and the fears of Death, do not disrelish or embitter our Pleasures.

The Happiness of it should invite us ; the Comeliness of it should allure us to embrace it. She offers to us the Duration of our mortal Being ; She is the faithful Guardian of the Life of Man, whether he be rich or poor, young or old, or of what Sex soever. She teaches the Rich not to abuse his Wealth, the poor to bear patiently the Inconveniencies of his State ; She teaches the Man Wisdom, the Woman Chastity ; Old Men the Secret of putting off their Death, and young Men the Means of enjoying a long Life. She files the Rust off of our Senses, renders the Body Vigorous, the Mind clear, the Soul lovely ; gives us a happy Memory, free Motions, and just Actions. 'Tis by it that the Mind being disengaged from Matter enjoys a larger freedom, and the Blood runs smoothly in our Veins, without meeting with any Obstruction in its Circulation. 'Tis lastly by it that all the Powers both of Soul and Body are kept up in a perfect Union, which nothing but the contrary Vice can disturb.

O Sacred and Healthful Sobriety ! The powerful support of our Nature ! The true Physick of Body and Mind ! How ought Men to praise thee and acknowledge thy Benefits, since thou furnishest them with the Means of attaining Heaven, and of preserving Life and Health here upon Earth !

But not designing to enlarge any farther in commendation of this Virtue, I shall conclude, keeping within the bounds of Sobriety on this Subject ; not because I have said enough of it, but that I may say more of it another time.

C H A P. II.

The Method of Correcting a Bad Constitution:

Several Persons, whose weak Constitution required great Care in the Management of it, having been well satisfied with what I have written concerning Sobriety, the Experience which they have had of the Usefulness of my Counsels, and the Acknowledgments which they have made thereof, encourage me to take up my Pen again, that I may convince those, who meet with no Inconvenience from Intemperance, that they are in the wrong in relying so much on the Strength of their Constitution.

Let it be ever so well compos'd, yet it holds not good but to such an Age. These Persons seldom arrive to Sixty, but they decay all of a sudden, and perceive themselves loaded with a Complication of Distempers. Some are Gouty, Dropical, and Rheumatical: Others are subject to Cholicks, the Stone and Piles; lastly, to abundance of Distempers, which would never have happened to them, if they had been so wise, as to have taken care of themselves in their Youth. If they die infirm at fourscore Years of Age, they might have lived in Health to an hundred, and so have run out the Term of Life, which Nature has left open to all Men.

It is to be supposed, that this common Parent wishes that all her Children might live at least a Century; and since some among them have lived to a longer Date, why should not others have a Right of expecting the same Advantage?

I do not disagree but that we are subject to the Stars which were predominant at our Birth. Their good or bad Aspects enfeeble or strengthen the Springs of our Life; but Man being endued with Judgment and Reason, ought to repair, by his prudent Conduct, the Harm which his Planet may have done him; he may prolong his Days by the means of a sober Life to as long a Period, as if he had been born very strong and lusty. Prudence dence prevents and corrects the Malignity of the Planets ; they give us certain Inclinations, they carry us out to certain Passions ; but they lay no Violence upon us, we may resist them, and in this Sense a wise Man is above the Stars.

I was born very choleric and haughty ; I flew out into Passion for the least Trifle, I huffed all Mankind, and was so intolerable, that a great many Persons of Repute avoided my Company. I apprehended the Injury which I did my self ; I knew that Anger is a real Frenzy ; that it disturbs our Judgment, that it transports us beyond our selves, and that the Difference between a passionate and a mad Man, is only this, that the latter has lost his Reason for ever, and the former is only deprived of it by Fits. A sober Life cured me of this Frenzy ; by its Assistance I became so moderate, and so much a Master of my Passion, that no body could perceive that it was born with me.

A Man may likewise with Reason and a regular Life correct a bad Constitution, and notwithstanding the Tenderness thereof, may live a long Time in good Health. I should never have seen forty Years, had I followed all my Inclinations, and yet I am in the eighty sixth Year of my Age. If the long and dangerous Distempers which I had in my Youth, had not consumed a great deal of the radical Moisture, the Loss of which is irreparable, I might have promis'd my self to have lived a compleat Century. But without flattering my self, I find it to be a great matter to have arrived to forty six Years more than I ever expected, and that in my old Age my Constitution is still so good, that not only my Teeth, my Voice, my Memory and my Heart are in as good a Condition as ever they were in the briskest Days of my Youth ; but likewise my Judgment has lost nothing of its Clearness and Force.

I am of the Opinion that this proceeds from the Abridgment I make of my Food proportionably to my growing into Years. Experience, which tells us that Infants have a greater Appetite, and are more often hungry, than grown Men, ought likewise to teach us, that in old Age we have less need of Nourishment than in the beginning of our Life. A Man who is very old, can hardly eat, because he can scarce digest what he eats; a little serves his Turn, and the Yolk of an Egg is a good Meal to him. I shall be satisfied therewith to the end of my Days, hoping by this Conduct, neither to die with Violence nor with Pain, not questioning but that they who will imitate me, will meet with as easy an Exit, since we are all of the same Species, and made up of the same Materials.

Since nothing then is more advantageous for a Man upon Earth than to live long; he is obliged to preserve his Health as far as possible, and this he cannot do without Sobriety. 'Tis true indeed, that there are several who eat and drink plentifully, and yet live to an hundred Years of Age. 'Tis by their Example that others flatter themselves with the Hopes of attaining to the same Age, without any occasion of laying a Restraint upon themselves. But they are in the wrong upon these two Accounts: First, because there is hardly one in a thousand, that has so strong a Constitution. Secondly, because such Men do generally end their Lives by such Distempers as put them into great Agonies by dying, which would never happen to those that have the same Government of themselves that I have. A Man runs the risk of not attaining to fifty Years of Age for not daring to undertake a regular Course of Life, which is no impossible Thing, since 'tis what I and several others have practised and do practise: And a Man becomes insensibly a Murderer of himself, because he cannot be persuaded, that notwithstanding the false Charms of a voluptuous Life, a wise Man ought not to look upon it as any Hardship to put in Practice what his Reason advises him.

Reason, if we hearken to it, will tell us, that a good Regimen is necessary for the prolonging of our Days, and that it consists in two Things. First, in taking care of the Quality; and secondly, of the Quantity, so as to eat and drink nothing that offends the Stomach; nor any more than what we can easily digest. Our Experience ought

ought to be our Guide in these two principles, when we are arrived to forty, fifty, or threescore Years of Age: He who puts in practice that Knowledge which he has of what is good for him, and goes on in a frugal way of Living, keeps the Humours in a just Temperature, and prevents them from being altered, tho' he suffer Heat and Cold, tho' he be fatigued, tho' his Sleep be broke, provided there be no Excess in any of them. This being so, what an Obligation does a Man lie under of living soberly? And ought he not to free himself from the Fears of sinking under the least Intemperature of the Air, and under the least Fatigue, which make us sick upon every slight Occasion?

'Tis true, indeed, the most sober may sometimes be indisposed, when they are unavoidably obliged to transgress the Rule which they have been used to observe; but then they are certain, that their Indisposition will not last above two or three Days at most; nor can they fall into a Fever. Weariness and Faintness are easily remedied by Rest and good Diet. The Malignancy of the Stars cannot put the malignant Humours in a Ferment, in Bodies which have them not: Tho' Distempers which proceed from Intemperance have an internal Cause, and may be dangerous; those which are derived from the Influences of the Planets, affect us only externally, and cannot produce any great Disorders.

There are some who feed high, and maintain, that whatsoever they eat is so little a Disturbance to them, that they cannot perceive in what Part of their Body their Stomach lies; but I aver, that they do not speak as they think, nor is it natural. 'Tis impossible that any created Being should be of so perfect a Composition, as that neither Heat nor Cold, Dryness nor Moisture, should have any Influence over it, and that the Variety of Food which they make use of, of different Qualities, should be equally agreeable to them. Those Men cannot but acknowledge that they are sometimes out of order; if it is not owing to a sensible Indigestion, yet they are troubled with Head-aches, want of Sleep, and Feavers, of which they are cured by a Diet, and taking such Medicines as are proper for Evacuation. It is therefore certain that their Distempers proceed from Repletion, or from their having eat or drank something which did not agree with their Stomachs.

Most Old People excuse their high feeding, by saying that it is necessary for them to eat a great deal to keep up their Natural Heat, which deminishes proportionably as they grow into Years, and to create an Appetite 'tis requisite to find out proper Sawces, and to eat whatever they have a fancy for; and that without thus humouring their Palates they should be soon in their Graves. To this I reply, that Nature for the Preservation of a Man in Years, has so compos'd him, that he may live with a little Food; that his Stomach cannot digest a great Quantity, and that he has no need of being afraid of dying for want of eating; since when he is sick he is forc'd to have Recourse to a Regular sort of Diet, which is the first and main thing prescribed him by his Physicians. Lastly, that if this Remedy is of such Efficacy as to snatch us out of the Arms of Death, 'tis a mistake to suppose, that a Man may not, by eating a little more than he does when he is Sick, live a long time without ever being Sick.

Others had rather be disturbed twice or thrice a Year with the Gout, the Sciatica, and their Epidemical Distempers, than to be always put to the Torment and Mortification of laying a Restraint upon their Appetites, being sure that when they are indispos'd, a Regular Diet will be an infallible Remedy and Cure. But let them be informed by me, that as they grow up in Years their Natural Heat abates; That a Regular Diet despis'd as a Precaution, and only look'd upon as Physick cannot always have the same Effect, nor force to draw off the Crudities and repair the Disorders which are caused by Repletion, and lastly, that they run the Hazard of being Cheated by their Hope and their Intemperance.

Others say that it is more eligible to feed high and enjoy themselves, tho' a Man lives the less while. It is no surprizing Matter that Fools and Mad-men should contemn and despise Life; the World would be no Loser when-whenever they go out of it ; but 'tis a Considerable Loss when Wise, Virtuous and Holy Men drop into the Grave. If one of them were a Bishop, he might have been an Archbishop in growing Older ; if he were in some considerable post in the State he might have arrived to the highest ; if he were learned or excelled in any Art, he would have been more excellent, and done more Honour to his Country and himself.

Others there are who perceiving themselves to grow Old, tho' their Stomach becomes less capable of digesting well every Day than other, yet will not upon that account abate any thing of their Diet. They only abridge themselves in the Number of their Meals, and because they find two or three times a Day is troublesome, they think their Health is sufficiently provided for by making only one Meal ; that so the time between one Repast and another may (as they say) facilitate the Digestion of those Aliments which they might have taken at twice : For this Reason they Eat at this one Meal so much that their Stomach is overcharged and out of Order, and converts the superfluities of its Nourishment into bad Humours, which engender Diseases and Death. I never knew a Man that lived long by this Conduct. These Men would doubtless have prolonged their Days had they abridg'd the Quantity of their ordinary Food proportionably as they grew into Years, and had they Eaten a great deal less and a little oftener.

Some again are of Opinion, That Sobriety may indeed preserve a Man in Health, but does not prolonge his Life. To this we say, That there have been Persons in past Ages who have prolonged their Lives by this means ; and some there are at present who still do it : Intemperance shortens our Days, as the Infirmities contracted by Repletion do, a Man of an ordinary reach may perceive that if he desires to live long, it is better to be Well than Sick, and that consequently Temperance contributes more to a long Life than an Excessive Feeding.

Whatsoever the Sensualists may say, Temperance is of infinite Benefit to Mankind : To it he owes his Preservation ; it banishes from his Mind the dismal apprehension hension of Dying; 'tis by its means that he become^s Wise, and arrives to an Age wherein Reason and Experience furnish him with Assistance to free himself from the Tyranny of his Passions, which have lorded it over him for almost the whole course of his Life. O sacred and beneficent Temperance! How much am I obliged to thee for seeing the Time which has so many Charms when one follows thy Maxims, and observes those Rules which thou dost prescribe? When I denied my Senses nothing, I did not taste such pure and refin'd Pleasures as I now enjoy. They were then so troublesome and mix'd with Pains, that even in the height of those Enjoyments the bitterness exceeded the sweetness of them.

O happy State of Life! which besides other Blessings with which thou favourest an Old Man, dost preserve his Stomach in so perfect a Tone, as to make him relish a piece of dry Bread better than the Voluptuous do all their dainty Morfels, and best season'd Dishes. The Appetite which thou givest us for Bread is just and reasonable, since 'tis the most proper food for Mankind, when attended with a Desire of Eating. A Sober Life is never without such an Appetite. So that by Eating a little, my Stomach is often craving after the Manna, which I sometimes relish with so much Pleasure, that I should think I trespass upon the Duty of Temperance, did I not know that one must Eat it to support Life, and that one cannot make use of a plainer and a more natural Diet.

My Spirits are not injur'd by what I Eat, they are not only revived, but supported by it. I always find my self in an even Temper, always Chearful, and more so after, than before Meals. I use my self presently upon rising from Table to Write or Study, and never find that this Application of Mind after Eating is prejudicial to me; for I am equally capable at all times of doing it, and never perceive my self drowsy, as a great many People do. The Reason of this is, because the little I Eat is not sufficient to send up the Fumes from the Stomach to the Head, which fill the Brain and render it incapable of performing its Functions.

What

What I eat is as follows, viz. Bread, Soop, New-laid Eggs, Veal, Kid, Mutton, Patridges, Pullets, and Pigeons. Among the Sea-fish I chuse Goldenis, and of the River-fish the Pike. All these Aliments are proper for Old Men, who if they be wise for themselves, would be contented with these, and seek for no other.

A Poor Old Man, who has not wherewith to purchase all these, should be satisfied with Bread, Broth and Eggs; and there is no Man, how poor soever he be, that can stand in want of this Food, unless they be downright Beggars, reduc'd to live upon Alms, of whom I do not pretend to say any thing. The Reason of their being so miserable in their Old Age, is because they were idle and lazy when they were Young; it were better for them to die than to live, for they are a burthen to the World. But this we say, that another Man in low Circumstances, who has only Bread, Broth, and Eggs, ought not to Eat much of them at a time, but so to regulate himself with respect to the Quantity of his Diet, as that he may not die but by a meer dissolution. For it is not to be supposed that a Stab or the like, is the only violent Death; Fevers and a great many other Distempers of which one dies in Bed are to be counted as such, being caused by those Humours against which Nature would not struggle if they were Natural.

What a difference then is there between a sober and an intemperate Life? The one shortens, the other prolongs our Days, and makes us enjoy a perfect Health. How many of my Relations and Friends has Intemperance carry'd off, who would have been still alive had they follow'd my Counsel? But it has not been able to destroy me as it has done so many others; and because I had the Power of resisting its Charms, I am still in the Land of the Living, and am arrived to a good old Age.

If I had not abandoned thee, thou infamous source of Corruption, I should never have had the Pleasure of seeing Eleven of my Grand Children, all of them Witty and Promising; nor beheld the Ornaments which I have made to my Houses and Gardens. But thou, O cruel Intemperance ! dost often put an End to the Days of thy Slaves before they could have finish'd what they begun. They dare not undertake any thing that requires time to compleat it ; and should they be so happy as to see their Works brought to Perfection, yet they do not long enjoy the fruit of their Labours. But to shew what thou really art, viz. a deadly Poison, the most dangerous Enemy of Mankind, and wishing that all Men may conceive a just abhorrence for thee, I promise my self that my Eleven Grand-Children will declare War against thee, and following my Example will convince all Mankind of the Abuse of thy Cravings, and of the Usefulness of a Regular Course of Life.

I cannot understand how it comes to pass that so many People, otherwise Prudent and Rational, cannot resolve upon laying a restraint upon their insatiable Appetites at fifty or threescore Years of Age, or at least when they begin to feel the Infirmities of Old Age coming upon them. They might rid themselves of them by a strict Diet, and become incurable, because they will not observe a Regimen. I do not wonder so much that Young People are so hardly brought to such a Resolution ; they are not capable enough of Reflecting, and their Judgment is not solid enough to resist the Charms of Sense : But at Fifty a Man ought to be govern'd by his Reason, which would convince us, if we would hearken to it, that to gratify all our Appetites without any Rule or Measure, is the way to become infirm and to die Young. Nor does the Pleasure of Taste last long, it hardly begins but 'tis gone and past ; the more one Eats the more one may, and the Distempers which it brings along with it last us to our Graves. Now should not a Sober Man be very well satisfy'd when he is at Table, upon the assurance that as often as he rises from it, what he Eats will do him no harm ?

I was willing to add this Supplement to my Treatise, it is short and runs upon other Arguments ; the Reason of my casting them into two Chapters, is because the Reader

Reader will be better pleased to peruse them at twice than at once. I wish all the World were so curious as to peruse both, and be the better for them.

C H A P. III.

A Letter to Seignior Barbaro, Patriarch of Aquilea; concerning the Method of enjoying a compleat Happiness in Old Age.

IT must needs be own'd that the Mind of Man is one of the greatest Works of God, and that 'tis the Master-piece of the Divine Architect. Is it not something surprizing to be able by Writing to keep up a Correspondence with one's Friends at a distance? And is not our Nature of a wonderful Composition, which affords us the Means of seeing one another with the Eyes of our Imagination, as I (Sir) behold you at present? 'Tis after this manner that I shall enter into Discourse with you, and relate to you several pleasing and profitable things.

'Tis true indeed, that what I have to tell you is no News with respect to the subject Matter thereof, but I never told it you at the Age of ninety one Years. 'Tis somewhat astonishng that I am able to tell you, that my Health and Strength are in so good a Plight, that instead of diminishing with my Age, they seem to increase as I grow Old. All mine acquaintance are surprized at it, and I, who know to what I am indebted for this Happiness, do every where declare the Cause of it. I endeavour all I can to convince all Mankind that a Man may enjoy a compleat Happiness in this World after the Age of fourscore, and this cannot be attained without Continnence and Sobriety, which are two Virtues precious in the Eyes of God, because they are Enemies to our sensual Appetites, and Friends to our Preservation.

Be pleas'd then (Sir) to know ; that for some Days past, several Doctors of our University, as well Physicians as Philosophers, came to be inform'd by me of the Method I took in my Diet, having understood that I was still healthful and strong, that I had my Senses perfect, that my Memory, my Heart, my Judgment, the Tone of my Voice and my Teeth, were all as found as in my Youth ; That I wrote seven or eight hours a Day with my Hand, and spent the rest of the Day in walking out a foot, and in taking all the Innocent Pleasures that are allowed to a virtuous Man ; even Musick it self, in which I bear my Part.

Ah Sir! how sweet a Voice would you perceive mine to be, were you to hear me like another David chant forth the praises of God to the Sound of my Lyre ? You would certainly be surpriz'd and charm'd with the Harmony which I make. Those Gentlemen particularly admir'd, with what Easiness I could Write upon Subjects, which requir'd a great and earnest Application of Mind, and which were so far from fatiguing, that they diverted me. You need not question, but that taking up my Pen to have the Honour of entertaining you to day, the Pleasure which I conceive in such an Employment is far more pleasing and delightful to me, than those which I am us'd to take.

Those Doctors told me that I ought not to be look'd upon as an Old Man, since all my Works and Employments were such as were proper for a Youth, and did by no Means resemble the Works of Men advanced in Years ; who are capable of doing nothing after fourscore, who are loaded with Infirmities and Distempers, who are perpetually languishing and in pain.

That if there be any of them who are less infirm, yet their Senses are decay'd ; their Sight and Hearing fails them, their Legs tremble, and their Hands shake, they can no longer walk nor are they capable of doing any thing: And should there chance to be One that is free from those Disasters, his Memory decreases, his Spirits sink, and his Heart fails him ; in short, he does not enjoy joy a Life so perfectly as I do. What they wonder'd at most was a thing that is really surprizing. 'Tis this, That by an invincible sort of Antipathy, I cannot drink any Wine whatsoever, during the Months of July and August every Year. I have so great an Aversion to it, that I should certainly die, did I but force my self to drink any; for neither my Stomach nor my Palate can bear it; so that Wine being as it were Mothers Milk to Old Men, It seems as if I could not possibly preserve my Life without that Nourishment. My Stomach then being depriv'd of a Help so useful and proper for the maintaining the Heat thereof, I could Eat but a very little, which about the middle of August brought me so low and Weak, that Jelly, Broths, and Cordials could not keep up my Spirits. However this Weakness is not attended with any Pain or pernicious Accident. Our Doctors were of Opinion, that if the New Wine which restores me perfectly to my Health in the beginning of September, were not made at that time, I could never escape Death. They were no less surpriz'd to see that in three or four Days time, New Wine will restore to me that strength, which I had lost by drinking of the Old, a thing of which they were Witnesses these days past, when they saw me in those two different Circumstances, without which they could never have believ'd it.

Several Physicians were pleas'd to prognosticate to me, ten Years ago, that it was impossible for me to hold out two or three Years longer with this pernicious Antipathy: However I still find my self less weak than ever, and am stronger this Year than any that went before. This sort of Miracle, and the many Favours which I receive from God, oblig'd them to tell me that I brought along with me at my Birth an extraordinary and special Gift of Nature; and for the proof of their Opinion, they employ'd all the Rhetorick, and made several Elegant Speeches upon that Head. It must be acknowledg'd my Lord, that Eloquence has a great deal of force upon the Mind of Man, since it often persuades him to believe that which never was, and never could be. I was very much pleas'd to hear them discourse ; and how could it be help'd, since they were Men of Parts who harangued at that rate? But that which delighted me most, was to reflect, that Age and Experience may render a Man Wiser than all the Colleges in the World can. These are two infallible Means of acquiring a clear Sight into things, and it was in truth by their help that I knew the Error of that Notion. To undeceive those Gentlemen, and at the same time to instruct them better, I reply'd, that their way of Arguing was wrong : That the favour I receiv'd was no special, but a general and universal One : That there was no Man alive but what may have received it as well as my self: That I was but a Man as well as Others: That we have all, besides our Existence, Judgment, a Mind and Reason: That we are all Born with these same Faculties of the Soul ; because God was pleas'd that we should all of us have those Advantages above the other Creatures, who have nothing in common with us but the Use of their Senses : That the Creator has bestow'd upon us this Reason and this Judgment to preserve our Lives, so that this Grace proceeds immediately from God, and not from Nature or the Stars: That Man when he is Young being more subject to his Sense than to his Reason, gives himself up wholly to his Pleasures, and that when he is arriv'd to forty or fifty Years of Age he ought to know that he is in the midst of his Life, thanks to the Goodness of his Constitution which has carried him so far : But that when he is arrived to this Period, he goes down the Hill apace to meet his Death, of which the Infirmities of Old Age are the fore-runners : That Old Age is as different from Youth as a Regular Life is opposite to Intemperance: That 'tis necessary for him at that Age to change his Course of Life, especially with respect to the Quantity and the Quality of his Diet, because 'tis on that the Health and Length of our Days do radically depend. That lastly, if the former part of our Lives were altogether Sensual, then the latter ought to be Rational and Regular ; Order being necessary for the Preservation of all things, especially the Life of Man, as may be perceiv'd by those

Inconveniences

Inconveniences that are caused by Excess, and by the Healthfulness of those that observe a strict Regimen. In truth, my Lord, 'tis impossible for them who will always gratify their Taste and their Appetite, not to break their Constitution; and that I might not break mine, when I was arriv'd to Maturity, I entirely devoted myself to a sober Life. It is true, it was not without some Reluctancy that I entered upon the Resolution, and abandon'd my profuse way of Living. I began with praying to God that he would grant me the Gift of Temperance, and was fully persuaded, that how difficult soever any Undertaking be, which a Man sets about, he will attain his End, if he has but Resolution enough to conquer the Obstacles to his Design. By this Means I rooted out my evil Habits, and contracted Good Ones; so that I us'd my self to a Course of Life, which was by so much the more severe and austere, by how much the more my Constitution was become very weak when I began it. In short, my Lord, when they had heard my Reasons, they were forced to submit to them.

The Youngest among them told me that he agreed that this favour might be universal to all Men, but that it was very rarely Efficacious, and that I must needs have a more especial and victorious Grace to get above the Delights and Custom of an easy Life, and embrace One that was quite contrary to it: That he did not look upon it to be impossible, since my Practice convinced him of the Contrary, but however it seem'd to him to be very Difficult.

I replyed to him, that it was a shame to relinquish a good Undertakeing upon the Account of the Difficulties that might attend it, and that the more we met with, the more Glory should we acquire: That 'tis the Will of the Creator that every one should attain to a long Life, to which he has appointed Man, because in his Old Age he might be freed from the bitter Fruits that were produced by Sense, and might enjoy the good Effects of his Reason, that then he shakes Hands with

with his Vices, is no longer a Slave to the Devil, and finds himself in a better Condition of providing for the Salvation of his Soul: That God, whose Goodness is infinite, has ordained that the Man who comes to the End of his Race, should End his Life without any Distemper, and by a pure Dissolution, which only ought to be called a Natural Death, all others being violent and brought upon Men by Repletion and Excess. That lastly, God is willing that Man should pass by so sweet and easy a Death to a Life of Immortality and Glory, which I expect, I hope, (said I to him) to die singing the Praises of my Creator. The sad Reflection, that we must one Day Cease to live, is no disturbance to me, tho' I easily perceive that at my Age that fatal Day cannot be far from me, that as certainly as I was born so I must die, and that many thousands of Younger Persons than my self are departed this Life before me, Nor am I afraid of the Terrors of Hell, because I am a Christian, and put my trust in the Mercy and Merits of the Blood of Jesus Christ: Lastly, I hope that so pleasant a Life as mine will be followed by as happy a Death.

To this the Young Gentleman replied not a Word, only that he was resolved to lead a sober Life, that he might live and die as happily as I hoped to do; and that tho' hitherto he had wish'd to be Young a long time, yet now he desir'd to be quickly Old, that he might enjoy the Pleasures of such an Admirable Age.

The Desire I had of giving you, my Lord, a long Entertainment, as being One with whom I could never be Weary, has inclin'd me to write this Long Letter to you, and to add one Word more before I conclude.

Some sensulal Persons give out, that I have troubled my self to no purpose in Composing a Treatise concerning Sobriety, and that I have lost my time in endeavouring to persuade Men to the Practice of that which is impossible: That my Advices will prove as useless as the Laws which Plato would have establish'd in

in his Commonwealth, the Execution of which was so difficult, that he could never prevail upon any Man to receive them; and that what I have written upon this Subject, will meet with no better a success. I find this Comparifon is by no means just, fince I practis'd what I teach a great many years before I wrote upon it, that I would never have put Pen to Paper had I not known by my own Experience, that this Practice was not impossible, that it is likewise very useful, and very prudent, and this was the Motive which prevail'd upon me to publish it. In a Word, I have been the Occasion of a great many Persons practicing it who find themselves the better for so doing, so that the Laws of Plato have no Resemblance to the Advices which I give. But such Persons who deny themselves, nothing that they may gratify their Sense, do not care to give me their Approbation. However I pity these Men, though they deserve for their Intemperance to be tormented in their Old Days, with a Complication of Distempers, and to be the Victims of their Passions a whole Eternity.

I am, &c.

C H A P. IV.

Of the Birth and Death of Man.

THAT I may not be deficient in that Duty of Charity, which all Men owe to one another, or lose one Moment of that Pleasure which the Enjoyment of Life affords, I will again write to inform those who do not know me, of what they who are acquainted with me, have known and seen. What I am going to say will be look'd upon as impossible or incredible: But at the same time nothing is more certain; it being what a great many know, and what is worthily to be admir'd by all Posterity. I am now ninety five Years of Age, and find my self as healthful and brisk, and as airy, as if I were but Twenty five Years old.

What Ingratitude should I be guilty of, did I not return Thanks to the Divine Goodness for all his Mercies reach'd out unto me? Most of your old Men have scarce arrived to Sixty, but they find themselves loaded with Infirmities. They are melancholy, unhealthful, always full of the frightful Apprehensions of dying: They tremble Day and Night for fear of being within one Foot of their Graves; and are so strongly possess'd with the Fancy of it, that 'tis a hard matter to divert them but for a Moment from that doleful Thought. Blessed be God, I am free from their Ills and Terrors. 'Tis my Opinion, that I ought not as yet to abandon my self to that vain Fear. This I will make appear by the Sequel, and will also evince how certain I am of living an hundred Years. But that I may observe a Method in the Subject I am treating of, I will begin with the Birth of Man, and end with his Death.

I say then, that some Bodies are born with so bad a Constitution, that they live but few Days or Months. Whether this proceeds from the bad Constitutions of the Parents, or from the Influences of the Stars, or from a Weakness of Nature, which derives this Defect from some foreign Cause, is hard to determine. For it is not likely, that Nature, as she is the common Parent of all Mankind, should be guilty of Over-fondness to some of her Children, and of Cruelty towards others.

Since we are not able to discover the true Reason from whence the Shortness of our Lives proceeds, it is in vain to enquire into the Cause of it. 'Tis enough to know, that there are Bodies which die, almost as soon as they are born.

Others are born well shaped and healthful, but of a tender Make; and some of these live ten, twenty, thirty, or forty Years, without being able to attain to that Period, which is called Old Age.

Others there are, who bring along with them a strong Constitution into the World, and they indeed get to be old; but then they are so decrepid and unhealthful, as hath

hath been already observed, bringing upon themselves all the Distempers they labour under; because they trusted too much to the Strength of their Constitution. They are unwilling to alter their Course of Life, and make no Difference between their being old and young, as if they were to be as vigorous at Fourscore as in the Flower of their Days. By this means they never correct their Conduct, nor make any Reflection that they are old, that their Constitution decays, that their Stomach loses every Day something of its natural Heat, and for that Reason they ought to be more careful both of the Quality and Quantity of what they eat and drink. They are of Opinion, that a Man's Strength impairing as he grows into Years, he ought to repair and support it by a greater Quantity of Food; they fancy that to eat a great deal preserves their Lives, but therein they are mistaken; for the natural Heat beginning to decay, they overcharge it with too much Food, and Prudence requires that a Man should proportion his Diet to his digestive Faculties. This is certain, that the peccant Humours proceed only from an imperfect Digestion, and there is but little good Chyle made, when the Stomach is charg'd with fresh Aliments, before it has thrown off the former Meal's Meat into the Intestines. It cannot then be urg'd too often, that when the natural Heat begins to decay, 'tis necessary for the Preservation of Health, to abate the Quantity of what one eats and drinks every Day, Nature requiring but very little for the Support of the Life of Man, especially that of an old Man.

However instead of taking this Course, most old People continue to live as they did formerly. If they had stinted themselves in time, they would at least have arrived to my Years, and enjoy'd as long a Life as myself, since they brought into the World a strong Constitution. They might have liv'd so long at least, I say, for they might have arrived to Six-score, as a great many others, who liv'd soberly, have done, whom we have known our selves, or have heard of by Tradition, provided always that they had as happy a Constitution, as those those People. Had I been as well made, I would not question but I might prolong my Days to that Date, but because I was born with a tender Constitution, I cannot hope to live above a Century; and even they who are of no stronger a make than my self may by living soberly as I do, easily attain to the same Period.

Nothing seems more delightful than this certainty of a long Life, whilst the rest of Mankind, who observe not the Rules of Sobriety, are not sure of seeing the next day. This expectation of a long life is founded on such natural Consequences as can never fail. It is next to impossible, that he who leads a regular and sober life should fall sick, or die a natural Death before the time that Nature has prescrib'd. I say he cannot die before that time, because a sober life prevents that corruption which feeds our Distempers, which cannot be produc'd without a cause; and if there is no bad one reigning, there can be no fatal Effect, or violent Death.

There is no question to be made but that a Regular Life puts at Distance the sad Hour of our Death; since 'tis able to keep the Humours in an exact Temperature; whereas on the contrary, Gluttony and Drunkenness disturbs, heats and puts them into a ferment, which is the Origine of Catarrhs, Fevers, and almost all the Accidents which hurry us to our Graves.

However, tho' Sobriety which preserves us from abundance of Disasters, may repair what Excess has impair'd, yet it must not be suppos'd that it will make a Man immortal. It is impossible but that time which effaces all things, should likewise destroy the most curious Workmanship of Nature. That which had a Beginning must needs have an End; but Man ought to end his Days by a natural Death, that is, without any pain, as they will see me die when the Radical Moisture shall be quite exhausted.

I find this Principle of Life still so perfect in me, that I promise my self still to be at some distance from my last day; and I fancy I am not mistaken, because I am healthful and brisk, relish all I eat, sleep quietly, and in a word none of my Senses fail me. I have still a lively Fancy, a happy Memory, a sound Judgment, a strong Heart, and my Voice is more tuneable than ever, (tho' the first Organ that fails) so that I can chant forth my Office every Morning without any prejudice to my Lungs, and more easily than I could in my Youth.

All these are infallible Signs that I have a great while still to live; but that my Life shall end, whenever it please God. How glorious will it then be, having been then attended with all the Happiness this World can afford, since Age has freed me from the Slavery of my Passions? A prudent and regular old Age conquers and eradicates them, prevents them from bringing forth any envenom'd fruits, and changes all the ill thoughts, which Youth inspires into those that are good.

Being no longer a Slave to Sense, I am not troubled with the thoughts that my Soul shall one day be separated from the Body. I am no longer disturb'd with anxious Fears, and racking Cares, nor vex'd at the Loss of that which is not really mine. The Death of my Friends and Relations occasions no other Grief in me, than that of the first Movement of Nature, which cannot be avoided, but is of no long Continuance.

I am still less mov'd at the Loss of any Temporal Good, so afflictive to a great many Persons. This is only the Happiness of those that grow old by Sobriety, and not of those Persons, who by Virtue of a strong Constitution arrive to such an Age, notwithstanding their Excesses. The one enjoy a foretaste of Heaven even in this World, whilst the others cannot relish any pleasure without a great deal of trouble. Who would not think himself happy at my Age never to be sensible of the least Inconvenience? A Happiness which seldom attends the most flourishing Youth. There are none of 'em but what are subject to a thousand Disorders, which I know nothing of: On the contrary, I enjoy a thousand pleasures, which are as pure as they are calm.

The first of these, is to be serviceable to my Country; and how does this Pleasure innocently please my Vanity! When I reflect how I have furnish'd my Countrymen with useful means both of fortifying their City and their

Port: That these Works will subsist for many Ages, that they will conduce to the making of Venice a famous Republick, a Rich and Matchless City, and serve to eternize its fair Title of being Queen of the Sea.

I have likewise the Satisfaction of having afforded to her Inhabitants the means of obtaining always a plenty of all things necessary for Life, by manuring untill'd Lands, draining the Marshes, by laying under Water and fatning the Fields which were barren by reason of the Dryness of the Soil, which would otherwise have been a Work of Time.

In short, I have render'd the City wherein I was born, stronger, richer, and more beautiful than ever, as also the Air more wholesome; all which is to my Credit, and nothing hinders me from enjoying the Glory which is due unto me.

My Misfortune having robb'd me of a considerable Estate whilst I was young, I knew how to make amends for that Loss by my Care; so that without the least Wrong done to any Person, and without any other trouble than that of giving forth the Orders that were necessary, I have doubled my Income, and shall leave to my Grand-children twice the Estate that I had by Inheritance from my Ancestors.

One Satisfaction which pleases me more than all the rest is, that what I have written concerning Sobriety, is of great use to many, who loudly proclaim, how highly they are oblig'd to me for that Work: Several of them having sent me word from foreign Parts, that under God they have been indebted to me for their Lives.

I have likewise another Satisfaction, the Deprivation of which would very much disturb me; which is, that I write and draw with my Hand all that is proper for my Buildings, and for the Conduct of my Domestick Affairs.

I likewise frequently converse with Men of Learning, from whom I daily receive new Notices. And 'tis a Wonder that at my Age I should have so quick parts as to learn and comprehend the most refin'd and difficult of Sciences.

But

But that which makes me look upon my self as one of the happiest of Men, is, that I in some measure enjoy two sorts of Lives; the one Terrestrial, with respect to the Actions of my Body; and the other Divine and Celestial, by the pleasures of the Mind; which are attended with a great many Charms, when founded on Reasonable Objects, and a Moral Assurance of the Infinite good Things which the divine Bounty prepares for us.

I enjoy then perfectly the pleasures of this Mortal Life, Thanks to Sobriety, which is extremely grateful to God, as being the Guardian of Virtue, and an irreconcilable Enemy to Vice; and by Way of foretaste I enjoy eternal Life, by contemplating so often on the Happiness thereof, that I can hardly think upon any thing else. I look upon Death as the necessary passage to Heaven, and am so far charm'd with the glorious Elevation to which I think my Soul is design'd, that I can no longer stoop to those Trifles, which charm and infatuate the greatest part of Mankind. The Deprivation of those pleasures to which I was most addicted, gives me no Disquiet; on the contrary the Loss of them raises my Joy, since it is to be the Beginning of a Life incomparably more Happy.

Who then would be troubled if he were in my place? However there is not a Man but may hope for the like Happiness, if he would live as I do. For in short, I am neither Saint nor Angel, but only a Man, the Servant of God, to whom a sober and regular Life is so grateful, that even in this World he rewards those who practise it.

If all they who retire into Monasteries, to lead there a Penitent Life, a Life of Prayer and Contemplation, would to all their Vertues, add the Prudence of abridging themselves in their Diet, they would become more Deserving and more Venerable.

They would be look'd upon as Saints by persevering in their Austerities, and esteem'd as those old Patriarchs and ancient Hermits, who observ'd a constant sobriety, and liv'd so long a time. They might very probably obtain at the Age of Sixscore so much Grace as to be able to work Miracles, which they could not do for want of such a Perfection to which they could not arrive before that time. And besides this Privilege, which is almost an infallible mark of Predestination, they would be in constant Health, which is as rarely to be met with in the old Age of the most pious Monks, as in that of the greatest part of the wisest Worldlings.

Several of those Monks fancy, that God does on purpose annex Infirmities to old Age, to serve instead of Penance impos'd for the Sins committed in their Youth. But therein, as I think, they are very much mistaken. For I cannot imagine how God who loves Mankind can be delighted in their Sufferings. 'Tis the Devil and Sin which brings all the Evils we suffer upon our Heads, and not God who is our Father and Creator. He desires that Mankind should be happy both in this and in the other World: His Commands tend to no other Purpose, and Temperance would not be a Vertue, if the Benefit it does us by preserving us from Distempers were repugnant to the Designs of God in our old Age.

In short, if all the truly pious were sober, Christendom would be as full of Saints as in the primitive times, nay, they would be more numerous, because the Number of Christians are increased since that time. How many Venerable Doctors might edify others by their wholesome Preachings and good Examples? How many Sinners might receive benefit by their Intercessions: How many Blessings might they shower upon the Earth? These Monks in observing the Maxims which I profess, need not fear acting contrary to those of their Rule.

There is not one that forbids them the use of Bread, Wine and Eggs; some also permit them to eat Flesh. Beside these things, they make use of Sallads, Pulse, Fruit, Cakes, which are prejudicial to some Stomachs. Because these Messes are offer'd to them in the Refectory, they may perhaps be afraid of transgressing their Rule, if they should abstain from them. However they would have done better if thirty years ago they had abstained from that Diet, and contented themselves with Bread, Wine, Broths and Eggs, which are the best Food a tender Body can take. Would not this be better than the Nourishment of the ancient Fathers in the Desert, who drank nothing but fair Water, did eat only wild Fruit, Herbs, and raw Roots, yet liv'd a long time without Infirmities? Our Anchorets would likewise find a more easy Way to Heaven, than those of Thebais.

I will conclude all with saying, that since extreme old Age may be so useful and pleasant to Men, I should have fail'd in point of Charity, had I not taken care to inform them by what Methods they might prolong their Days. I have had no other Motive in writing upon this Subject than that of engaging them to practise all their Lives a Vertue which would bring them like me to a happy old Age, in which I will not cease to cry, Live, live long, to the End you may serve God, and be fit for the Glory which he prepares for his Elect.

C H A P. V.

Being a Letter from a Nun of Padua, the Grand-Daughter of Lewis Cornaro.

Lewis Cornaro was by the ill Conduct of some of his Relations depriv'd of the Dignity of a noble Venetian, of which he was possess'd, and which he deserv'd for his Vertues, and by his Birth. He was not banish'd from his Country, but was free to remain in Venice if he pleas'd; but seeing himself excluded from all the publick Employes of the Republick, he retir'd to Padua, where he took up his Residence.

He married at Udine a City of Friuli; his Wife's Name was Venorica, of the Family of the Spilenbergs. She was a long time barren, and as he ardently wish'd for Children, he neglected nothing which might give him that Satisfaction. At last, after many Vows, Prayers and Remedies, his Wife became pregnant, and was deliver'd of a Daughter, who was named Clara, because of the Devotion which each of them had for Saint Francis.

This was an only Daughter, and was Married to John Carnaro the Son of Fantin of the Family of that Name, which was distinguish'd by the Sirname of Carnaro dell' Episcopia. It was a very powerful Family before the loss which Christendom suffer'd by losing the Kingdom of Cyprus, where that Family had a considerable Estate.

Clara had Eleven Children, Eight Sons and Three Daughters. Lewis Carnaro had also the pleasure to see himself, as it were, revived by Miracle in a great number of Successors; for tho' he was very ancient when Clara came into the World, yet he lived to see her very Old, and his Offspring to the Third Generation.

Cornaro was a Man of Understanding, Merit and Courage. He loved Glory, and was naturally liberal, nevertheless without profuseness. His Youth was infirm; being very passionate and hasty; but when he perceiv'd what damage the Vices of his temper caus'd him, he resolv'd to correct them, and had strength enough over himself to conquer his passion, and those extravagant humours to which he was subject. After this Glorious Victory, he became so moderate, mild, and affable that he gained the esteem and friendship of all that knew him.

He was extraordinary sober, and observ'd the Rules which he mentions in his Writings, and dieted himself always with so much wisdom and precaution, that finding his natural heat decaying by degrees in his Old Age, he also diminished his Diet by degrees, so far as to stint himself to the yolk of an Egg for a meal, and sometimes a little before his Death, it serv'd him for two meals.

By this means he preserv'd his health, and was also vigorous to the age of an hundred years; his Mind did not decay, he never had need of Spectacles, neither lost he his Hearing.

And that which is no less true than difficult to believe, is that he preserv'd his Voice so clear and harmonious, that at the end of his Life he sang with as much strength and delight as he did at the Age of twenty five years.

He had foreseen that he should live long without any infirmity, and was not deceiv'd in it. When he felt that his last hour drew near, he disposed himself to leave this life with the Piety of a Christian, and the Courage of a Philosopher. He made his Will, and set all his Affairs in order, after which he received the last Sacraments, and expected death patiently in an Elbow-Chair. In short, it may be said that being in good health, feeling no manner of pain, having also his Mind and Eye very brisk, a little fainting fit took him, which was instead of an Agony, and made him fetch his last Breath. He died at Padua, the twenty sixth of April 1566, and was Buried the eight of May following.

His Wife died some Years after him. Her Life was long, and her Old Age as happy as that of her Spouse, only her latter days were not altogether like his. Sometime before her Death she was seized with a lingering, which brought her to her Grave. She gave up her Soul one Night in her Bed without any Convulsive motions, and with so perfect tranquility she left this life without being perceiv'd.

This is all I can say of those good people, by the Idea which remains of them from what I heard my deceas'd Father, and some other Friends of Louis Cornaro say of them, who having liv'd so long after an extraordinary manner, deserve not to die so soon in the memory of Man.

C H A P. VI.

Authorities taken from the History of M. de Thou ; and the Dialogues of Cardan, concerning the Method of prolonging a Man's Life, and preserving his Health.

TH E Extract of the 38th Book of the History of M. President de Thou, runs thus :

“ Lewis Cornaro was an extraordinary and admirable Instance of a long life, for he lived an hundred years healthful in Body and sound in Mind. He was descended from one of the most Illustrious Families of “ Venice ;

“ Venice ; but through some Misfortune owing to his “ Birth, he was excluded from all Honours and publick “ Employments in the State. He Married at Udine in “ Friuli one Veronica, of the Family of Spilemburg, and “ being in possession of a good Estate, he was very desi“ rous of having Children to inherit it. In short, what
 “ by the Prayers he put up and by the help of Physici“ ans he conquer’d the point, and his Wife whom he “ dearly loved, and who was pretty well gone in Years,
 “ was brought to Bed of a Daughter, when he least of all “ expected it. This Daughter named Clara was Mar“ ried to John the Son of Fantini Carnaro, a Rich Fa“ mily of Cyprus, by whom she had eight Sons and three “ Daughters.

“ In a word, Lewis Cornaro by his Sobriety, and the “ Regimen he observ’d in his Diet, corrected the Infir“ mities he had contracted by Intemperance in his “ Youth, and by the Strength of his Reason moderated “ his Inclination and Propensity to Anger. So that in “ his Old Age he had as good a Constitution of Body,
 “ and as mild and even temper’d a Mind, as before in “ the flower of his Youth he was infirm, and apt to fly
 “ out into a Passion. He compos’d several Treatises
 “ when he was very Old, wherein he tells us of the ir“ regularity of his former Life, and of his Reformation,
 “ and the hopes he had of Living long. Nor was he “ mistaken in his account, for he died calmly and with“ out any pain, being above an hundred Years old, at “ Padua, where he had taken up his Residence. His “ Wife almost as old as himself surviv’d him, but with-
 “ in a short time after died a very easy Death. They “ were both buried in St. Anthony’s Church without any “ pomp, according as they had order’d by their last Will “ and Testament.

In the Dialogue of Cardan, between a Philosopher, a Citizen, and an Hermit, concerning the Methods of prolonging a Man’s Life, and preserving his Health, Cardan introduces the Hermit discoursing thus :

“ Whereas in solid Nourishments and even in Drinks
 “ there are several things worthy our observation : viz.
 “ their

“ their Natural Qualities, and those which they acquire
 “ by the seasoning of them, the order and the time
 “ wherein we ought to make use of them, without men“ tioning the Quantity of those very Aliments and “ Drinks : it is not without reason that the Question is “ ask’d, which of these things is to be regarded most ?

“ Some have declar’d themselves for the Quantity, “ maintaining that it has in effect a greater share than “ any other thing in the preservation of Health and Life.

“ The famous Lewis Cornaro a Noble Venetian was
 “ of this Mind. He treated on this Subject at the Age
 “ of Fourscore, enjoying then a perfect soundness of Bo“ dy and Mind. This Venerable Old Man, at the Age
 “ of Thirty-six was seiz’d with so violent a Distemper,
 “ that his Life was despair’d of. Ever after that time
 “ he took care to eat just the same Quantity every “ Meal : and tho’ he was not free from a great many “ Fatigues, and some Misfortunes which occasion’d his “ Brothers Death, yet the exactness of his Regimen pre“ serv’d him always in Health with an entire freedom of “ Mind.

“ At seventy years of Age a Coach in which he tra“ velt’d was overthrown, by which he was drag’d a great “ way, and wounded in his Head, one of his Legs and “ Arms. The Physicians despair’d of his Recovery,
 “ and were for applying a great many Remedies to him.
 “ But Cornaro tells us, that being well satisfied of the “ Temperature of his Humours, he rejected all the assi“ stances of the Physicians, and was quickly cur’d.

“ Nine Years after when he was almost Fourscore,
 “ his Friends and his very Physicians advis’d him to add
 “ two Ounces to his Ordinary Diet. Within ten or “ twelve Days, after he fell sick : the Physicians gave “ him over, and he himself began to fear the Worst,
 “ however he recover’d his Health, tho’ with much “ ado.

“ The same Author adds, that being Fourscore Years “ Old, his Sight and Hearing was sound and good ;
 “ that his Voice held strong ; that he sometimes sang
 “ in Consort with his Grand-Children ; that he could “ either

“ either Ride or Walk a foot very well, and that he “ compos'd a Comedy which came off with Applause.

“ This Wise Old Gentleman was then of the Opini-
 “ on that a Regular and small Quantity of Food contri“ buted more than any thing else to the preservation of “ Health ; for he makes no mention of his choice of “ Diets. I am us'd (says Cornaro) to take in all twelve “ Ounces of solid Nourishment, such as Meat and the “ yolk of an Egg, and fourteen Ounces of Drink. 'Tis
 “ to be lamented, that he did not precisely tell us, whe“ ther he took this Quantity at once, or twice a day :
 “ However since he tells us, that he did eat but a very “ little, it seems as if he did so but once a Day.

“ The Famous Civilian Panigarolus, who lived above “ seventy Years, tho' of a very weak Constitution, never “ eat or drank above twenty eight Ounces a Day, “ which comes almost to the same Quantity of Cornaro.

“ I was intimately acquainted with one, who never “ took above thirty six Ounces a Day. 'Tis true in“ deed, that every Fortnight he purg'd himself, but “ he liv'd to above ninety Years of Age.

“ It seems then as if Cornaro was minded to keep
 “ from us a perfect knowledge of his Regimen, and only
 “ to tell us that he had found out an extraordinary one ;
 “ since he has not inform'd us whether he took the Quan“ tity he speaks of, at once or twice a Day, nor whe“ ther he alter'd his Diet : for he treats on that Subject
 “ as darkly and obscurely as Hypocrates.

“ 'Tis likewise strange, that the Quantity of this Li“ quid should exceed that of his solid Diet, and the ra“ ther, because what he did eat was not equally nourish“ ing, since he took yolks of Eggs as well as Meat. In “ truth, to me he seems to talk more like a Philosopher “ than a Physician.

Thus far Cardan : But by his leave, if he had read what Cornaro has written concerning a sober and Regular Life with attention, he would have pass'd a sounder judgment on his Writing ; for in them he not only speaks of the Quantity, but in exprefs terms discourses of the Quality of our Diet.

Maxims to be Observ'd for the prolonging of Life.

TIS not good to eat too much, or to fast too long, or do any thing else, that is preternatural.

Whoever eats or drinks too much will be sick.

The Distempers of Repletion are cur'd by Abstinence.

Old Men can fast easily ; Men of Ripe Age can fast almost as much ; but young Persons and Children, that are brisk and lively can hardly fast at all.

Growing Persons have a great deal of Natural Heat, which requires a great deal of Nourishment, else the Body will pine away : but old Men, who have but a little Natural Heat, require but a little Food, and too much overcharges them.

It must be examin'd what sort of Persons ought to feed once or twice a Day, more or less ; allowance being always made to the Age of the Person, to the Season of the Year, to the Place where one lives, and to Custom.

The more you feed foul Bodies, the more you hurt your selves.

A short Discourse on Longevity, in several Instances of Persons living to an extream old Age, as much from a cool and temperate Diet and regular Course of Life, as from the true Basis and Ground of Old Age, that happy Parental Blessing of Bona stamina vitæ.

THAT the Devil for once spake true when he said, Skin for Skin, and all that a Man has for his Life, &c. Long Life is so desirable, and so valu'd and esteem'd among Men, that 'tis every Man's Hope and Wish to obtain it. And yet we see notwithstanding this great Like and Love Men shew and express for it, how remis and careles the greatest part of Mankind are in the

the Means to secure it. This supine and stupid Neglect arises from our too much Trust in a good Constitution; when alas! they think not that the least Debauch (tho' it does not blow up, yet) like an Earthquake it shakes the very Foundation of the human Fabrick, and repeated Acts soon ruin the Superstructure, and because they see some few old Drunkards of fourscore safe waded through an Aceldama of their Neighbours Skulls that has fallen in the Battle, young Men presently take non Causa pro Causa, and imitate them in Drinking; not considering that this their Precedent, had he trimm'd his Lamp, and wisely manag'd the Flame, he might have liv'd to have been an Old Par or a Jenkins, &c. But alas! where one Claret Professor lives to 80, ten thousand of their Tyroes sink under it. I must confess that Company is very pleasant and charming, especially if it be all of a piece, witty and ingenious; but we should consider how dearly we purchase a little frothy and fleeting Discourse, and swop our precious Time and Health for nothing but Piss and Prate, for in the Sink and Chamber-pot all Tavern-Delights terminate; and tho' a Man may wrestle thro' a great many Years under a Custom and Habit of Drinking, yet the Bottle will at last prevail and fairly lay him on his Back. The serious Consideration of this many Years since, even in my Youth, dictated this Caution to my self, viz.

*Trust not to Constitution, 'twill decay,
 And twisted Strength its Fibres wears away;
 As close-wove Garments of a strong-spun Thread
 The Wooff frets out and tears away the Web:
 So Soul and Body tho' ne'er so well conjoin'd,
 The longer that they wear the more they grind,
 Then the crackt Organ must impair the Mind.
 All finite Things tend to their own Undoing,
 But Man alone's industrious to his Ruin;
 For what with Riot, Delicates and Wine,
 Turns Pioneer himself to undermine.
 Besides the hidden Snares laid in our Way,
 The sudden Deaths we hear of every Day,*

*The smoothest Paths have unseen Ambuscades,
And Insecurity Security invades ;
For no Man knows what's the next Hour's Event,
Man lives, as he does die, by Accident.
How soft is Flesh, how brittle is a Bone !
Time eats up Steel and Monuments of Stone,
And from his Teeth art thou exempt alone ?
What Warrant hast thou that thy Body's Proof
Against the Anguish of an aching Tooth ?
How soon's a Fever rous'd by acute Pains ?
The smallest Ails have all their Partizans ;
And in intestine Wars they may divide,
And Life's Deserters list on the wrong Side,
Diseases, like true Blood-Hounds, seize their Dam,
And prey upon the Carcass whence they sprang.
Be always on thy Guard, watchful and wise,
Lest Death should take thee napping by Surprize.*

A Letter giving an Account of one Henry Jenkins a Yorkshire Man, who attained the Age of 169 Years, communicated by Dr. Tancred Robinson Fellow of the College of Physicians, and R. S. with his Remarks on it.

S I R,

MR. Robinson tells me you desire the Relation of Henry Jenkins, which is as followeth.

When I came first to live at Bolton, it was told me, there lived in that Parish a Man near an Hundred and fifty Years old ; that he had sworn as Witness in a Cause at York to an Hundred and twenty Years, which the Judge reproving him for, he said, he was Butler at that Time to the Lord Conyers ; and they told me, that it was reported his Name was found in some old Register of the Lord Conyer's Menial Servants ; but truly it was never in my Thoughts to enquire of my Lord Darcy, whether this last Particular was true or no ; for I believed little of the Story for a great many Years ; till one Day being in my Sister's Kitchin, Henry Jenkins coming

coming in to beg an Alms, I had a Mind to examine him ; I told him he was an Old Man, who must suddenly expect to give an Account to God, of all he did or said ; and I desired him to tell me very truly how old he was : He paused a little, and then said, that to the best of his Remembrance he was about One hundred sixty two or three ; and I asked him what Kings he remembered ? He said Henry VIII. I asked what publick thing he could longest remember ? He said Flowden-Field ; I asked whether the King was there ? He said no, he was in France, and the Earl of Surry was General ; I asked him how old he might be then ? He said, I believe I might be between Ten and Twelve ; for says he, I was sent to Northallerton with a Horse-Load of Arrows, but they sent a bigger Boy from thence to the Army with them. I thought by these Marks I might find something in Histories, and look'd into an old Chronicle that was in the House, and I did find that Flowden-field was an Hundred fifty two Years before ; so that if he was Ten or Eleven Years Old, he must be One hundred sixty two Years, or three, as he said when I examined him. I found by the Book, that Bows and Arrows were then used, and that the Earl he named was then General, and that King Henry VIII. was then at Tournay, so that I don't know what to answer to the Consistencies of these Things, for Henry Jenkins was a poor Man, could neither write nor read: There were also four or five in the same Parish, that were reputed all of them to be an Hundred Years Old, or within two or three Years of it, and they all said he was an elderly Man ever since they knew him ; for he was born in another Parish, and before any Registers were in Churches, as it is said ; he told me then too, that he was Butler to the Lord Conyers, and remembered the Abbot of Fountains-Abby very well, who used to drink a Glass with his Lord heartily, and that the Dissolution of the Monasteries he said he well remembered.

ANN SAVILLE.

This

This Henry Jenkins departed this Life the eighth Day of December, 1670. at Ellerton upon Swale.

The Battle of Flowden-Field was fought upon the Ninth Day of September, in the Year of our Lord, 1513, Henry Jenkins was twelve Years old when Flowden-Field was fought, so he lived 169 Years.

Old Parre lived One hundred fifty two Years nine Months ; so that Henry Jenkins out-lived him by Computation sixteen Years, and was the oldest Man born upon the Ruins of this Post-diluvian World.

This Henry Jenkins in the last Century of his Life was a Fisherman, and used to wade in the Streams ; his Diet was coarse and sower ; but towards the latter End of his Days he begged up and down ; he hath sworn in Chancery and other Courts, to above 140 Years Memory, and was often at the Assizes at York, whether he generally went a-foot : and I have heard some of the Country-Gentlemen affirm, that he frequently swam in the Rivers after he was past the Age of One hundred Years.

'Tis to be wished that particular Enquiries were made, and answered, concerning the Temperament of this Man's Body, his manner of Living, and all other Circumstances, which might furnish many useful Instructions to those who are curious about Longevity.

Francisco Lupatsoli, the Venetian Consul at Smyrna, liv'd 113 Years, and had by his Wives and other Women about 50 Children ; he used to pray for the Soul of all his defunct Mistresses by Name. He drank nothing but Water and Milk, sometimes a small Sherbet ; his usual Diet was small Soops of Flesh, sometimes of Bread, Water and Figs. He saw at that Age, or near it, without Spectacles, and could hear well. He drank no manner of Tea, Coffee, or Chocolate, nor any fermented Liquor. He went upright. He had some new black Hairs on his Head, and Mr. Ray, the English Consul there, told me that he saw a Tooth cut in his upper Gum. He said that he was potent for Women at that Age, and was known to give Money for a she young Slave to be kind with her. Towards his latter End he complain'd to a Doctor that his Eyes began to grow dim, and desired a Remedy; the Doctor's Name was Barbatscio. He was a fair Man, of a middle Stature, &c.

Mr. Ray lodges at Mr. Butler's, next Door to Mr. Holt's in Charter-house-yard.

Mr. John Bill, related too that Richard Lloyd, born two Miles from Montgomery, was aged 133 within two Months, a strong, strait and upright Man, wanted no Teeth, had no grey Heirs, which were of a darkish brown Colour; could hear well, and read without Spectacles, fleshy and full cheek'd, and the Calves of his Legs not wasted or shrunk, he could talk well: He was of a tall Stature: His Food was Bread, Cheese and Butter for the most part, and his Drink Whey, Buttermilk or Water, and nothing else; but being by a Neighbour-Gentlewoman persuaded to eat Flesh-meat, and drink Malt-liquors, soon fell off and died. He was a poor labouring Man in Husbandry, &c. To the Truth of this, the Copy of the Register produc'd affirm'd it.

Dr. Lower, Brother to our famous Lower, told me, that he saw a Man in the North of an extream Age, full or above sixscore; he lay on a Pad on the Ground in a dark smoaky tatter'd Cottage, with a Clout or old Stocking that stopt a Hole in (the next to no Wall) a Clay-plaster'd Hurdle, with a little Cow lying by him, chewing the Cud. I ask'd him what that Hole in the Wall serv'd for? He told me that it serv'd to let out Smoak or let in the fresh Air, according as he wanted the one, or was oppress'd with t'other. I ask'd him what that Cow serv'd for, with her Mouth so near him? He answer'd, for Refreshment; for, said he, the Breath of the Cow is a Cordial, and much refreshes me when I am faint, &c. I ask'd him what Diet he us'd? He answer'd Oatmeal made into Water-pottage, and Potatoes, and sometimes a little Milk, when his Son and Daughter did not drink it from him. He said that he had been a labouring Man all his Days, and that he never had been sick as he ever could remember in his Life; that he eat very little Flesh, &c.

As to being comforted with the Breath of the Cow, 'tis highly rational to believe it; for the Breath was warm, and must emit with it some volatile Salts, and fragrant Particles, analogous to our own Spirits. I have heard several Shepherds, and other Cattle-keepers say, That in rouzing of their Herds from their Rest in a Morning, the Steams not only of their Bodies, but even the Effluvia and Scent of their Dung and Urine has been grateful and refreshing, from those salubrious volatile Salts that they draw in with their Breath in their Sheep-Folds, and Cow-houses, early in a Morning before the Beams of Light and Heat exhale them, and rob them of the best Nose-gay in the World. And in the Times of the old Patriarchs, no Doubt but that the whole Family lay upon the Ground, Old Adam's first Floor, both Man and Beast, Wife and Children, which might be one Cause of their long Life, &c. For in those Days they were Strangers to the cursed Invention of tall Houses and painted Roofs, which the divine Seneca, Socrates, Plato, Epicetus, Antoninus the Emperor (who as Cassauban remarks, had more Kingdoms than ever Solomon had Towns, &c. I say all these, and many others of the wise Philosophers of all Ages have expos'd and rail'd at the Pride, Vanities, and Unnecessaries of Life, which is not only the Trouble, but the very Plague and Torment of it, according to the Poet,

*He that would restless live in this short Life,
Let him have a vain and fashionable Wife,
From Top-knot Shop to Top-knot let her range,
And constant to nothing but to constant change.*

But whilst the Devil, that Spiritual Taylor, Prince of the Air, can so easily fly to France, and monthly fetch us new Fashions, 'tis never likely to be otherwise. What a Shame is it, in the Church, the House of God, where People ought to assemble in Sack-cloth and Ashes to lament and mourn for their Sins, to come with a Bushel of erected Head-geer, like so many walking Turrets? and the Men to disguise themselves with long dangling Perriwigs hanging to their Rumps, as if each had a Bear's-Skin at his Back, is a Shame to the sober and christian part of the World, in making the Church a Spiritual Hide-Park, an ogling Rendezvouz of Amoretto's and Lovers, rather than a House of Prayer and Humiliation? Really this must be a great Offence even to the poor Mumpers that beg at the Church-door.

There is at the Bath an Old Fellow in the Summer-time, who is an Assistant to the Play-house. I have observ'd this Old Fellow once in a Week, or sometimes oftner, to go to a Milk-house (where I used often to drink Milk) to fill a great Pitcher (which held at least 6 or 7 Quarts) of new Butter-milk, but always kept it until it was sour, and then drank of that and nothing else all the Summer Months, (i. e.) from April or May, until October; the remaining part of the Year he drank either Water or Small Beer, tho' he told me that in his Youth he has sometimes drank strong Drinks, but they never agreed with him: And he also told me, that not above two Years ago he went from Bath to London on foot, in two Days, and came home to the Bath again in two Days more, and that he was then near 87 Years of Age, as may be seen by the Register. He is a streight upright Man, without stooping, and of his great Age moves wonderfully nimble. He has an ungrateful Name, tho' an honest Fellow, for it is Seth Untbanke. He was born in Milfield, in the County of Northumberland, in Glendall Ward, in the Year of our Lord 1617. on the 29th of September, in the 15th Year of the Reign of King James, and was baptiz'd in the Kirk Newton. He was the youngest of 22 Children. His eldest Sister has been dead a Year. He has a Brother living 10 Years older than himself, his eldest Brother has been dead three Years. He has a Sister living in Spittle, within half a Mile of Berwick, 16 Years older than himself. His Uncle was 126 Years old, when he died, he was a Pensioner to the Bishop of Durham.

Henry de la Grange D'Arquin was born in France the 13th of April 1606, and was made Cardinal D'Arquin by Innocent XII. the 12th of December 1625. He is now at Rome, and enjoys Health enough to deserve being called the youngest Man in it. He goes frequently on Foot, diverts himself more than any Body at Feasts, and has often Concerts of Musick at his House, where he entertains the Company with an Air of Youth; he lives at liberty, and without constraint. He has a robust Complexion, and is not subject to any Indisposition but the Gout, which may proceed from his too much eating, having a most devouring Stomach. He is so little sensible of his great Age, that he often talks of going into France for a Year or two, and afterwards return to Rome.

He deny'd himself no Pleasure in his Youth, and notwithstanding is very like to carry the same Temperament and Briskness to the Grave.

Mr. Martin in his Description of the Western Islands of Scotland says, that Donald Roy, who lived in the Isle of Sand, where they have neither Physic nor Physician, died lately in the 100th Year of his Age, and was able to travel and manage his Affairs till about two Years before his Death.

He makes mention of one that died about 18 Years ago, aged one hundred and forty, and of another who they said died at one hundred and eighty.

At Beau Soleil, a Village near Turin, I saw about three Years ago, an old Woman in the Inn that was 105 Years old, as her Grandson told me, who was Master of the Inn. She was become from a tall proper Woman, a short hump-back'd Figure, but had all her Senses in Perfection, and was continually employ'd in the Drudgery of the House, and had a prodigious Appetite, as I observed during my stay. She was reputed older by all the neighbouring Villages, and had never been sick.

*It is to be noted, That this Village where she lived, is famous for the best Air in * Piedmont.*

* This Account Dr. Baynard had from Dr. English.

About two Years and a half since, going into the North Country, and lying at Northampton, I desir'd my Landlord of the Inn to shew me the famous old Man so much talk'd of. When I came into his Room, I saw a short, broad breasted old Fellow sit by the Fire-side on a low Stool : I ask'd him how old he was ? he answer'd me that he was 128 and half. I ask'd him about a great many memorable things done near a 100 Years since, some whereof he perfectly remembred, as the coming in of King James the first, &c. and farther said, that he was one of the 24 Morrice-Dancers that danc'd before him into the Town : But here I doubted my old Man's veracity, for if I am not mistaken, the King came in the Yorkshire Road, through Huntington. But however I found him, by all, and the nicest Enquiry I could make, that he was not far short of that Age, as appear'd by the Testimony of several People, some near, others above a hundred ; and they all say, that he seem'd to be an old Man ever since they could remember. That he was born in the Town, but before Registers were used, &c. He had a very strong Voice, and spake very heartily and loud. He said (not designing it for a Jest) that he should never die so long as he could breath freely, which is no small Happiness. Diseases and Difficulties of the breathing Faculty, are not only most troublesome, but the most dangerous also ; and I never knew a very old Man, but his Respiration was very liberal, &c. And this agrees with the Sentiments of Hippocrates ; viz. Facile spirare magni momenti est ad salutem, &c. and Jacob. Spon. upon him, Spirare enim Facile partium Thoracicarum libertatem indicat, &c. And upon this Article how many Nurses and careless Mothers ought to be hang'd for their hard swathing poor helpless and tender Infants, &c ? as in another Place I have said more at large ; nay I have seen a Nurse lay her heavy Hand, and sometimes her Arm, upon the Breast of a Child, as it lay flat and supine in her lap, until it has been black in the Face ; which tho' not always the present destruction of it, yet it gives the Thorax a crush, which the Child may never well recover as long as it lives, &c.

This old Man, whose Name was John Bailes, told me, that he had buried the whole Town of Northampton, except 3 or 4, 20 times over. Strong Drink, quoth the old Man, kills 'em all. He told me that he never was drunk in his Life, and that Water, small Beer and Milk was his Drink, sometimes taken per se, sometimes mix'd, and that his Food was, for the most part, brown Bread and Cheese; he cared not much for Flesh Meats. He was a sensible old Fellow, and had no Disease but Blindness, which had seiz'd him not above four or five Years, &c.

Mr. Robinson, Minister of Ous'y in Cumberland, has wrote me several Letters of poor People that have liv'd to extream old Ages, of a hundred or more, and that upon enquiry, he mostly found that they lived upon the lacticinia, especially on Whey and fowr Butter-milk, and Oat-bread, &c. he also wrote me Word, and I have heard it confirm'd by many other Cumberland Gentlemen, That a Man sleeping on some Mineral Bank, the Steams and Effluvia of it had turn'd that side of his Hair which lay next the Ground as white as Snow, as also one Eye-brow, and half his Beard, which before was as black as a Raven. This Minister attested this (verbo Sacerdotis) at Child's Coffee-House at the West End of St. Paul's Church, before Major Roycroft and several others. Mr. Robinson desir'd it to be recorded in the Philosophical Transactions, but I hear it was oppos'd by Sir Tiffany Slesby the Muslin-Man.

Mrs. Hudson, Mother to Mr. George Hudson a Solicitor in Chancery, lived a hundred and five Years, and then died of an acute Disease, by catching Cold. Her Eyes were so very good, that she could see to thread a Needle at that great Age: Her Food was nothing (or very little else) save Bread and Milk all her Life time.

Mr. Johnston, the Father of my learned Friend Dr. Johnston of Warwick, always a strong lusty Man, dy'd at a hundred and eleven. His usual Drink was Milk and Ale, or Milk and small Beer mixt together.

That

64 The sure Way of Attaining

That Milk is of a salubrious, safe and sweet Nourishment, is evident by many Nations that eat much of it, and live long. One Instance of it is at Croydon in Surry; a Physician of good worth and learning was so kind as to give me an account of himself, who has conquer'd a Distemper, and acquir'd a good Constitution by his drinking of Milk only, eating and drinking nothing else for these 6 or 7 Years past. His Quantum is a Quart in a Morning, a Quart at Noon, and a Pint at Night, without Bread, &c. and to this Quantity he exactly keeps; sometimes he drinks it hot, sometimes cold, as for his Conveniency it happens.

All those that have written of the Islands of Scotland, &c. say, That the Whig or Whey they boyl'd with sweet Herbs, and barrel'd it up for their Potus ordinarius.

A hundred Examples of this kind may be found to confirm the Doctrine of Temperance and a cool diet, as necessary to the prolongation of Life; but if an Angel from Heaven should come down and preach it, one Bottle of Burgundy would be of more Force with this Claret-stew'd Generation than ten Tun of Arguments to the contrary, tho' never so demonstrable and divine, &c.

*But when alas ! Men come to die
Of Dropsy, Jaundice, Stone and Gout,
When the black Reckoning draws nigh,
And Life (before the Bottle) 's out :*

*When (low drawn) Time's upon the Tilt,
Few Sands and Minutes left to run ;
And all our (past gone) years are spilt,
And the great Work is left undone :*

*When restless Conscience knocks within,
And in Despair begins to baul,
Death like a Drawer then steps in,
And asketh, Gentlemen ! d'ye call ?*

I wish

*I wish that Men would, timely, think
On this great Truth in their full Bowls,
Both I and W I L L. of Ludgate-hill,
And all our Friends round Paul's*

As the Divine Herbert has it,

*A Verse may find him whom a Sermon flies,
And turn Delight into a Sacrifice.*

&c.

A short dehortatory P O E M to a Claret Prone Kinsman and Godson of mine, against immoderate Drinking.

PAs by a Tavern-door, my Son,
This sacred Truth write on thy Heart;
'Tis easier Company to shun,
Than at a Pint it is to part.

For one Pint draws another in,
And that Pint lights a Pipe;
And thus in th' Morn, they tap the Day,
And drink it out e'er Night.

Not dreaming of a sudden Bounce,
From Vinous Sulphurs stor'd within;
Which blows a Drunkard up at once,
When th' Fire takes Life's Magazin.

An Apoplexy kills as sure,
As Cannon Ball,; and oft as soon,
And will no more yield to a Cure,
Than murd'ring Chain-shot from a Gun.

Why should Men dread a Cannon bore?
Yet boldly 'proach a Pottle Pot,
That may fall short, shoot wide, or o'er,
But drinking is the surer Shot.

*How many Fools about this Town,
Do Quaff and Laugh away their Time?
And Nightly knock each other down,
With Claret Clubs, of NO-GRAPE Wine.*

*Until a Dart from Bacchus Quiver,
As Solomon describeth right,
Doth shoot his Tartar thro' the Liver,
Then (Bonus Nocius) SOT, good Night.*

*Good Wine will Kill as well as bad,
When drank beyond (our Nature's) bounds;
Then Wine gives Life a mortal Stab,
And leaves her weltring in her wounds,*

*Wounds! that no Physick Art can heal,
And very rarely that they feel
The Stroke, the Moment it does Kill.*
