Her cleim was aggravated by the plunder of whole cities, by the messacre of peaceable inhabitants, by the violation of every tie that bound man to man, and all the treasures of France would be inadequit to discharge the account of blood. The Chamber ought to recollect the different claims which had been made in favour of America—in essecueive negotiations, 12, 14, 11, and 15 millions had been demanded. Taking one demand with another, the average amount would be found to be about 12 millions that that sum, he believed to be about the just amount of the debt. He thought the Restoration—that restoration which had been accused of prodigality—would not have effered merely 15 millions, liad it recognized the justice of series of their position than of their duty they would on the first rejection of the members. They would thus have escaped an enormous difficulty, for he would thus have escaped an enormous difficulty, for he would

This vie jobbing was again apparent in the pretended ner gedition in the course of which as American conceased behind a band of speculators, was found to abandon the special mission with which he had been charged relative to the indemnities to which so much importance was now attched; to obtain a certain number of licenses, to turn to an account an affair is which for these door speculaters the handsome profit of forty eight millions was in question. The Duke of Bassano did justices to those infamous practices. He the hose deputy, was willing to believe for the chonor of diplomacy, that the Minister of a great/power would not have played such part if he had not received secret instructions. The American Gayeriment wished for all the money it could get —it perceived a chance in the licenses, and it took advantage of Napoleon's embarrasements to obtain them. The memorit too for reviving that elaim had been, in his spinion, ment ill chosen. He saked how it had happesed that in 1831, when the thunder of the Revolution of July still sounded in the ears of Europewhen the tisse which bound France to other nations seemed on the point of being severed—how had it happaped that such a moment had been chosen for the termination of an affair, which, for twenty years, had reminated peaking, and the sectionent of which might have been indefinitely postpound, had not some mysterious, but impactative merity, operated to haster its conctusion?

The Hos. Deputy here extered into a narrative of facts. He stated that the Duke de Bassano, os far from recognizing the American claim to the amount of 25 millions, had considered that the cession of the Floridas would be perfectly entificatively postpound, had considered that the exession of the Floridas with the part of the accuracy of the depth of a many on the Rhine, they were not paid.
