To stand under, to bear the weight or burden of; as, I stand under heavy obligations.—To stand up for, to defend the cause of; contend for; support; uphold.

He meant to stand up for every change that the economical condition of the country required.

George Eliot, Felix Holt, viii.

Ye see I stood up for ye, Mr. Avery, but I thought 't would n't do no harm to kind o' let ye know what folks is sayin'.

H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 483.

To stand upon or on. (a) To rely upon; trust to.

We stand upon the same defence that St. Paul did; we appeal to Scripture, and the best and purest Antiquity.

Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. i.

So, standing only on his good Behaviour,

He's very civil, and enters your Favour.

Congreve, Old Bachelors, Prolog.

(b) To be dependent or contingent upon; hinge upon.

Your fortune stood upon the casket there.

Shak., M. of V., iii. 2. 203.

(c) To concern; affect; involve.

Consider how it stands upon my credit.

Shak., C. of E., iv. 1. 68.

I pray God move your heart to be very careful, for it stands upon their lives.

Quoted in Winthrop's Hist. New England, I. 56.

(d) To dwell on; linger over, as a subject of thought.

Since the Authors of most of our Sciences were the Romans, and before them the Greeks, let vs a little stand upon their authorities. Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie.

The third point . . . deserveth to be a little stood upon, and not to be lightly passed over.

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i.

(e) To insist upon; make much of; hence, to pride one's self upon; presume upon.

This widow is the strangest thing, the stateliest,

And stands so much upon her excellencies!

Fletcher, Wit without Money, ii. 2.

Nor stand so much on your gentility.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 1.

Stand not upon the order of your going,

But go at once. Shak., Macbeth, iii. 4. 119.

I must say that of you Women of Quality, if there is but Money enough, you stand not upon Birth or Reputation in either Sex.

Mrs. Centlivre, The Basset-Table, ii.

(f) To be incumbent upon; in the form to stand one upon.

It stands me much upon,

To stop all hopes whose growth may damage me.

Shak., Rich. III., iv. 2. 59.

Does it not stand them upon to examine upon what grounds they presume it to be a revelation from God?

Locke.

To stand upon one's pantables, to stand upon points, etc. See pantable, point, etc.—To stand upon one's rest. See to set up one's rest (a), under set.—To stand up to, to make a stand against; confront or face boldly.

He stood up to the Banbury man for three minutes, and polished him off in four rounds.

Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxxiv.

To stand up with. (a) To take one's place with (a partner) for a dance; hence, to dance with. [Colloq.]

If you want to dance, Fanny, I will stand up with you.

Jane Austen, Mansfield Park, xii.

(b) To act as groomsmen or bridesmaid to; as, I stood up with him at his wedding. [Colloq.]—To stand with. See def. 20.

II. trans. 1. To cause to stand; specifically, to set upright.

"And as concerning the nests and the drawers," said Sloppy, after measuring the handle on his sleeve, and softly standing the stick aside against the wall, "why, it would be a real pleasure to me."

Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, iv. 16.

2†. To abide by; keep to; be true to.

These men, stonnyng the charge and the bonde which thei haue takene, wille leve vterly the besynes of the world, . . . and hooly yeve hem to contemplative liffe.

Hampole, Prose Treatise (L. E. T. S.), p. 24.

3. To undergo; endure; bear; more loosely, to endure without succumbing or complaining; tolerate; put up with; be resigned to; be equal to.

I am sorry you are so poor, so weak a gentleman,

Able to stand no fortune.

Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, iv. 2.

I should never be able to stand Noll's jokes; so I'd have him think, Lord forgive me! that we are a very happy couple.

Sheridan, School for Scandal, i. 2.

The business of their dramatic characters will not stand the moral test.

Lamb, Artificial Comedy.

She did not mind death, but she could not stand pinching.

Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 271.

4. To await and submit to; abide; as, to stand trial.

Bid him disband his legions, . . .

And stand the judgment of a Roman senate.

Addison, Cato, ii. 2.

5†. To withstand; resist; oppose; confront.

Valiant Talbot above human thought

Enacted wonders with his sword and lance;

Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 123.

Not for Fame, but Virtne's better end,

He stood the furious foe.

Pope, Prolog. to Satires, L. 343.

The rebels, who fled from him after their victory, and durst not attack him when so much exposed to them at his passage of the Spey, now stood him, they seven thousand, he ten.

Walpole, Letters, II. 19.

6. To be important or advantageous to; be incumbent upon; behoove.

He knew that it depended solely on his own wit whether or no he could throw the joke back upon the lady. He knew that it stood him to do so if he possibly could.

Trollope, Barchester Towers, xvi.

7. To be at the expense of; pay for; as, to stand treat. [Colloq.]

Asked whether he would stand a bottle of champagne for the company, he consented.

Thackeray, Vanity Fair, liii.

To stand a watch (naut.), to perform the duties of a star-board or port watch for a specified time.—To stand buff. See buff.—To stand fire, to receive the fire of an enemy without giving way.—To stand off, to keep off; hold at a distance; as, to stand off a creditor or a dun.—To stand one's ground. See ground.—To stand out. (a) To endure or suffer to the end.

Jesus fled from the persecution; as he did not stand it out, so he did not stand out against it.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 78.

(b) To persist; insist; maintain; contend.

It were only yesterday at e'en she were standing out that he liked her better than you.

Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xxxix.

To stand pad. See pad.—To stand shot. See shot 2.

stand (stand), n. [< ME. stand = D. stand = MLG. stant, stant = MHG. stant (stand-), G. stand = Dan. (> Icel.) stand, standing, stand, station, etc.; also, in some mechanical senses, E. dial. stound, stound, < ME. stonde, < AS. stand = MD. stunde = MLG. LG. stunde, a tub, = OHG. stante, MHG. G. stunde, a tub, stand, a stand, jack, support, etc. (the Gael. stanna, a tub, vat, is from E.); all from the verb.] 1. The act of standing. (a) A coming to a stop; a cessation from progress, motion, or activity; a halt; a rest; stoppage.

He stalks up and down like a peacock—a stride and a stand.

Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 252.

Lead, if thou think'st thou are right,

Why dost thou make

These often stands? thou said'st thou knew'st the way.

Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, v. 1.

(b) The act of taking a decided attitude, as in aid or resistance; a determined effort for or against something; specifically, milit., a halt for the purpose of checking the advance of an enemy.

Breathe you, my friends; well fought; we are come off like Romans, neither foolish in our stands, Nor cowardly in retire.

Shak., Cor., i. 6. 2.

All we have to ask is whether a man's a Tory, and will make a stand for the good of the country?

George Eliot, Felix Holt, vii.

2. A state of rest or inaction; a standstill; hence, a state of hesitation, embarrassment, or perplexity.

The sight of him put me to a stand in my mind whether I should go on or stop.

T. Ellwood, Life (ed. Howells), p. 256.

Here, then, poor Rip was brought to a stand.

Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 56.

3. The place where a person or an object stands; a position, site, or station; a post or place.

At every halfe houre one from the Corps du guard doth hollow, shaking his lips with his finger between them; vnto whom every Sentinell doth answer round from his stand.

Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 143.

The knight then asked me if I had seen Prince Eugene, and made me promise to get him a stand in some convenient place where he might have a full sight of that extraordinary man.

Addison, Spectator, No. 269.

Amid that area wide they took their stand.

Pope, Dunciad, ii. 27.

A salmon is said to be swimming when he is moving up the river from pool to pool. At other times he is usually resting in his "stand" or "lie," or at most shifting from one stand in a pool to another.

Quarterly Rev., CXXVI. 359, note.

Specifically—(a) The place where a witness stands to testify in court. (b) A rostrum; a pulpit.

Sometimes, indeed, very unseemly scenes take place, when several deputies (in the French Chamber), all equally eager to mount the coveted stand, reach its narrow steps at the same moment and contest the privilege of precedence.

W. Wilson, Cong. Cong., ii.

(c) A stall in a stable. Hallivell.

4. Comparative position; standing, as in a scale of measurement; rank.

Nay, father, since your fortune did attain

So high a stand, I mean not to descend.

Daniel, Civil Wars, iv. 90.

5. A table, set of shelves, or the like, upon which articles may be placed for safety or exhibition; also, a platform on which persons may place themselves. Specifically—(a) A small light table, such as is moved easily from place to place.

A stand between them supported a second candle.

Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxviii.

(b) A stall for the sale of goods; any erection or station where business is carried on; as, a fruit-stand; a news-stand; a carriage-stand.

The Chief of Police [of Racine, Wisconsin], acting under instructions from the Mayor, has notified the proprietors of every cigar-store, soda-fountain, ice-cream stand, and confectionery shop to close on Sunday.

New York Evening Post, June 28, 1889.

(c) A rack, as for umbrellas and canes. (d) In museums, the support for a mounted specimen of natural history; especially, a perch for mounted birds, consisting of an upright and cross-bar of turned wood, usually painted or varnished. Stands are also made in many ways, in imitation of natural objects upon which birds perch or rest. Stands for mammals are usually flat boards of suitable size, rectangular or oval, and with turned border. (e) In a microscope, the frame or support which holds the essential parts of the instrument as well as the object under examination. It includes the tube with the coarse and fine adjustments, the stage and its accessories, the mirror, etc. See microscope. (f) In printing, same as composing-stand. (g) A platform or other structure, usually raised, as for spectators at an open-air gathering, or for a band or other group of performers; as, the grand stand on a race-course.

A large wooden shed, called "The Stand," without floor or weather-boarding, capable of covering, say, four thousand persons, stood near the centre [of a camp-meeting ground].

Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 902.

The stand-buildings for the accommodation of the patrons of the course are four or five in number, and are three stories high.

T. C. Craeford, English Life, p. 28.

6. A standing growth, as of grass, wheat, Indian corn, etc.

By the middle of April there should be a good stand of the young sprouts [of sugar-cane].

The Century, XXXV. 111.

7. (a) A tree growing from its own root, in distinction from one produced from a scion set in a stock of either the same or another kind of tree. (b) A young tree, usually one reserved when other trees are cut. See standel.—8.

Ductility; lack of elasticity.

Leather may have the quality known as Stand—that is to say, may be strongly stretched in either length or breadth without springing back.

Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 372.

9. In com., a weight of from 2½ to 3 cwt. of pitch.—10†. A company; a troop.

A stand of six hundred pikes, consisting of knights and gentlemen as had been officers in the armies of his late Majesty.

England's Joy (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 30).

11. A complete set or suit; an outfit. See stand of arms, below.

Proclamation was made . . . to furnish out to General Lesly's army, and to ilk soldier thereof, their share of a stand of gray cloaths, two shirts, and two pair of shoes.

Spalding, Hist. Troubles in Scotland, I. 289. (Jamieson.)

A stand o' claes was nae great matter to an Oshaldistone (be praised for 't).

Scott, Rob Roy, xxxvi.

12. A tub, vat, or eask, or the quantity it contains. A stand of ale is said in the seventeenth century to correspond with a hogshead of beer.

First dip me in a stand o' milk,
And then in a stand o' water.
The Young Tamlane (Child's Ballads, I. 122).

Here, Will Purkins, take my purse, fetch me
A stand of ale, and set in the market-place,
That all may drink that are athirst this day.
Greene, George-a-Greene (Works, ed. Dyce, II. 200).

Band-stand, a balcony or raised platform in a hall or park for the accommodation of a band or company of musicians.—Brazier-stand, a stand, usually consisting of a ring mounted on three feet, to support a brazier.—Conducting-stand, a rack or frame of wood or metal for holding a score for the conductor of a chorus or an orchestra.—Grand stand, in any place of public resort, the principal stand from which spectators view races, games, or any other spectacle.

We . . . will follow Mr. Egremont to the grand stand, where ladies now sit in their private boxes much as they sat some eighteen hundred years ago to smile on the dying gladiator in the amphitheatres.

Whyte Melville, White Rose, II. iv.

Stand of ammunition. See ammunition.—Stand of armor, stand of arms, a suit of armor and weapons taken together, or, in modern times, the arms and accoutrements sufficient for one man. See arm, n.—Stand of colors, a single color or flag. Wilhelm.—To be at a stand, to be brought to a standstill; to be checked and prevented from motion or action.—To get a stand. See the quotation.

Occasionally these panic fits . . . make them [buffalo] run together and stand still in a stupid, frightened manner. . . . When they are made to act thus it is called in hunters' parlance getting a stand on them; and often thirty or forty have been killed in one such stand, the hunter hardly shifting his position the whole time.

T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 274.

To make a stand. (a) To come to a stop; stand still. When I beheld this hill, and how it hangs over the way, I suddenly made a stand, lest it should fall on my head.
Lunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 95.

(b) To take a position for defense or resistance; stop and fight.—To put to a stand, to stop; arrest by obstacles or difficulties: as, he was put to a stand for want of men and money.

standage (stan'dāj), n. [stand + -age.] 1†. A stall.

Such strawe is to bee given to the draughte oxen and cattell at the standage [read standage] or the barnedores.
Archæologia, XIII. 353.

2. In mining, a place underground for water to collect or accumulate in; a lodge or sump.

standard¹ (stan'dārd), n. [Early mod. E. also standerd; < ME. standard, stander, standord, < late AS. standard (= MD. standaerd, D. standaerd = MLG. standhart, LG. standare = MHG. standert, stanhart, G. standarte (perhaps < It.) = Sw. standar = Dan. standart), < OF. estandard, estandard, an ensign, standard, a point of rallying, F. étendard, an ensign, standard, flag, = Pr. estandard, estandard = Sp. estandarte = It. standardo, an ensign, standard (cf. OF. estandard, estandeille, standale = It. stendale, an ensign); ML. standardum, an ensign, standard (cf. standardus, a stronghold, a receptacle of water); (a) either < OHG. stantan (MHG. standen), stand, = E. stand, etc., + -art, or (b) < ML. stendere* (It. stendere = OF. estendre, etc.), < L. extendere, spread out, extend; see extend. The connection with stand is certain in the other uses: see *standard*², *standard*³.] 1. Milit., a distinctive flag; an ensign. Specifically—(a) The principal ensign of an army, of a military organization such as a legion, or of a military chieftain of high rank. In this sense it may be either a flag or a solid object carried on a pole, as the Roman eagle, or the dragon shown in the Bayeux Tapestry, or a combination of a flag with such an object. (b) A large flag, long in the fly in proportion to its hoist, carried before princes and nobles of high rank, especially when in military command or on occasions of ceremony. A standard of Edward III. was shaped like a long pennon, swallow-tailed, and bearing the royal arms at the hoist, the rest of the pennon being covered with fleurs-de-lis and lions semé. A standard of the Earl of Warwick, carried during the Wars of the Roses, had a cross of St. George, with the rest of the flag covered with small copies of the badge of the Nevilles, a bear and ragged staff. At the present time the word is used loosely. The so-called royal standard of Great Britain, though a standard in function, is properly a banner in form. The flags of the British cavalry regiments are called standards, to distinguish them from the colors of the infantry regiments. In the United States army a silk standard goes to every mounted regiment; it bears the national arms on a blue ground, with the number and name of the regiment underneath the eagle. See cut under tabarum.

2. In bot., same as banner, 5.—3. In ornith.: (a) Same as vexillum. (b) A feather suggesting a standard by its shape or position. See cuts under Semioptera and standard-bearer.—4†. A standard-bearer; an ensign or ancient. [Rare.] Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard.
Shak., Tempest, iii. 2. 18.

To slope the standard. See slope.
standard² (stan'dārd), n. and a. [stand + -ard.] < ME. standard*, < OF. estandard, estandard, also (AF.) estander, ML. (AL.) standardum, standard of weight and measure; appar. a particular use in England of OF. estandard, etc., an ensign, standard, as 'that to which one turns' or, as in *standard*³, 'that which is set up': see stan- *dar*¹, *standard*³.] I. n. 1. A weight, measure, or instrument by comparison with which the accuracy of others is determined; especially, an original standard or prototype, one the weight or measure of which is the definition of a unit of weight or measure, so that all standards of the same denomination are copies of it. The only original standard of the United States is a troy pound. See pound, yard, meter.

It is . . . necessary to have recourse to some visible, palpable, material standard, by forming a comparison with which all weights and measures may be reduced to one uniform size.
Blackstone, Com., I. vii.

2. In coinage, the proportion of weight of fine metal and alloy established by authority. The standard of gold coins in Great Britain is at present 22 carats—that is, 22 parts of fine gold and 2 of alloy; and the sovereign should weigh 123.274 grains Troy. The standard of silver coins is 11 ounces 2 pennyweights of pure silver and 18 pennyweights of alloy, making together 1 pound Troy; and the shilling should weigh 87.273 grains. The gold and silver coins in current use in the United States are all of the fineness 900 parts of the precious metal in 1,000, the gold dollar weighing 25.8 grains, and the silver dollar 412.5 grains.

That precise weight and fineness, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the standard.
Locke, Considerations concerning Raising [the Value of Money].

3. That which is set up as a unit of reference; a form, type, example, instance, or combination of conditions accepted as correct and perfect, and hence as a basis of comparison; a criterion established by custom, public opinion, or general consent; a model.

Let the judgment of the judicious be the standard of thy merit.
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., ii. 8.

Let the French and Italians value themselves on their regularity; strength and elevation are our standard.
Dryden, Epic Poetery.

The degree of differentiation and specialization of the parts in all organic beings, when arrived at maturity, is the best standard as yet suggested of their degree of perfection or highness.
Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 313.

[The respiratory act] ranging, during the successive periods of life, from 44 respirations per minute in the infant soon after birth, to the average standard of 18 respiratory acts in the adult aged from thirty to sixty years.

J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 126.

Measuring other persons' actions by the standards our own thoughts and feelings furnish often causes misconception.
H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 114.

4. A grade; a rank; specifically, in British elementary schools, one of the grades or degrees of attainment according to which the pupils are classified. The amount of the parliamentary grant to a school depends on the number of children who pass the examination conducted by government inspectors—the rate per pupil differing in the different standards.

Every boy in the seventh and sixth standards would have held out his hand, as they had been well drilled on that subject.
N. and Q., 7th ser., VIII. 51.

Average standard, in copper-mining. See *average*².—Double standard, a monetary standard based upon both gold and silver as the materials of the circulating medium, as distinguished from a single standard based upon either gold or silver.—Dutch standard, a set of samples of sugar put up in bottles bearing the official seal and label of the Dutch government (whence the name), and recognized as the standard of the commercial world in fixing the quality of sugars. The set comprises 16 different grades, numbered, according to the different colors of the samples, from 5 (the darkest color) to 20 (the most refined) inclusive. The quality of the sugar to be tested is determined by comparison with the samples or the standard, and the sugar is named accordingly as No. 10, 13, etc., Dutch standard.—Gold standard, a monetary standard based upon gold as the material of the unit of value.—Metallic standard, a gold or silver standard.—Multiple standard, a monetary standard representing a considerable number of important articles in frequent use, the fluctuations in their value neutralizing one another and thus causing a substantial uniformity of value among them.—Mural standard, any standard set up on a wall, as, for instance, a standard of measurement for convenience in testing rules, tapes, measuring-chains, etc.—Photometric standard. See photometric.—Silver standard, a monetary standard based upon silver as the material of the monetary unit.—Single standard. See double standard.—Tabular standard. Same as multiple standard.

II. a. Serving as a standard or authority; regarded as a type or model; hence, of the highest order; of great worth or excellence.

In comely Rank call ev'ry Merit forth;
Imprint on every Act its Standard Worth.
Prior, Carmen Seculare for the Year 1700.

The proved discovery of the forgery of Ingulf's History of Crowland Abbey was a fact that necessitated the revision of every standard book on early English history.
Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 46.

Latimer-Clark standard cell. See cell, 8.—Standard arrow, an arrow used in the latter part of the fifteenth century, and probably the heavier arrow conformed to certain regulations: it is distinguished from the flight-arrow.—Standard battery, a battery in which the electromotive force is perfectly constant, so that it can be used as a standard.—Standard compass. See compass.—Standard pitch. See pitch, 3.—Standard solution, a standardized solution (which see, under solution).—Standard star, a star whose position and proper motion is particularly well known, and on that account is recommended for use in determining the positions of other stars, instrumental constants, time, latitude, and the like.—Standard time, the reckoning of time according to the local mean time on the nearest or other conventionally adopted meridian just an even number of hours from the Greenwich Royal Observatory. See time.

standard² (stan'dārd), v. t. [*standard*², n.] To bring into conformity with a standard; regulate according to a standard.

To standard gold or silver is to convert the gross weight of either metal, whose fineness differs from the standard, into its equivalent weight of standard metal.

Bithell, Counting-House Dict. (Encyc. Dict.)

standard³ (stan'dārd), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also standerd, standert; < ME. standard* (?), < MD. standaerd, a post, pillar, column, mill-post, trophy (cf. OF. estandard, a kind of torch, < D.); a var., conformed to standard, an ensign, etc., of stander, a post, mill-post, etc.: see stander. The E. *standard*³ is thus a var. of stander, with various senses, mostly modern. It has been more or less confused with *standard*¹ and *standard*².] I. n. 1. An upright; a small post or pillar; an upright stem constituting the support or the main part of a utensil. Specifically—(a) The upright support or stem of a lamp or candlestick; hence, also, a candlestick; especially, a candlestick resting on the floor in a church.

Dopplone, a great torch of wax, which we call a standard, or a quarrier.
Florio (ed. 1611).

Beneath a quaint iron standard containing an oil lamp he saw the Abbé again. J. H. Shorthouse, Countess Eve, iv.

(b) In carp., any upright in a framing, as the quarters of partitions, or the frame of a door. (c) In ship-building, an inverted knee placed on the deck instead of beneath it. (d) That part of a plow to which the mold-board is attached. (e) In a vehicle: (1) A support for the hammer-cloth, or a support for the footman's board. See cut under coach. (2) An upright rising from the end of the bolster to hold the body laterally. E. H. Knight.

2. In hort.: (a) A tree or shrub which stands alone, without being attached to any wall or support, as distinguished from an espalier or a cordon.

The espaliers and the standards all
Are thine; the range of lawn and park.
Tennyson, The Blackbird.

(b) A shrub, as a rose, grafted on an upright stem, or trained to a single stem in tree form.

Standards of little bushes pricked upon their top, . . . the standards to be roses, juniper, holly, berberies.
Bacon, Gardens (ed. 1887).

3. A stand or frame; a horse. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]—4†. A large chest, generally used for carrying plate, jewels, and articles of value, but sometimes for linen.

Item, the said Anne shall have two standard-chests delivered unto her for the keeping of the said diaper, the one to keep the cleane stuff, and th'other to keep the stuff that hath been occupied.

Ordinances and Regulations, p. 215. (Halliwel.)

The Standard, which was of mason work, costly made with images and angels, costly gilt with gold and azure, with other colours, and divers sorts of [coats of] arms costly set out, shall there continue and remain; and within the Standard a vice with a chime.

Coronation of Queen Anne, Wife of Henry VIII., in Arber's [Eng. Garner, II. 49].

5. A standing cup; a large drinking-cup.

Frolic, my lords; let all the standards walk;
Ply it, till every man hath ta'en his load.
Greene and Lodge, Looking Glass for Lond. and Eng.

6†. The chief dish at a meal.

For a standard, venouson rost, kyd, favne, or cony.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 165.

7†. A suit; a set. Compare stand, n., 11.

The lady had commanded a standard of her own best apparel to be brought down. E. Jonson, New Inn, Act.

8†. One who stands or continues in a place; one who is in permanent residence, membership, or service.

The fickleness and fugitiveness of such servants justly addeth a valuation to their constancy who are standards in a family, and know when they have met with a good master.
Fuller, General Worthies, xi.

Gas-standard, a gas-fixture standing erect and of considerable size, as one which stands on the floor, common in the lighting of churches, public halls, etc.

II. a. Standing; upright; specifically, in hort., standing alone; not trained upon a wall or other support: as, standard roses.

Rich gardens, studded with standard fruit-trees, . . . clothe the glacies to its topmost edge.
Kingsley, Two Years Ago, xxiii.

Standard lamp. See lamp.

standard-bearer (stan'dārd-bār'ēr), n. 1. An officer or soldier of an army, company, or troop who bears a standard: used loosely and rhetorically; as, the standard-bearer of a political party.

King James, notwithstanding, maintained a Fight still with great Resolution, till Sir Adam Forman bis Standard-bearer was beaten down.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 200.

2. An African caprimulge bird of either of the genera Macrodipteryx and Cosmetornis; a pennant-winged goatsucker. M. longipennis has one flight-feather of each: wing extraordinarily prolonged as a bare shaft bearing a racket at the end. 'C. reziliarius has a less lengthened lance-linear feather, chiefly white, and in other respects resembles the common night-hawk of the United States. Also called four-wings.

Standard-bearer (Macrodactylus longipennis).

standard-bred (stan'därd-bred), a. Bred up to some standard of excellence agreed upon by some association.

standard-grass (stan'därd-gräs), n. Same as stander-grass.

standardization (stan'där-di-zä'shən), n. [< standardize + -ation.] The act of standardizing, or the state of being standardized. Also spelled standardisation.

standardize (stan'där-diz), v. t; pret. and pp. standardized, ppr. standardizing. [< standard² + -ize.] To conform to or compare with a standard; regulate by a standard; constitute or recognize as a standard; specifically, in chemical analysis, to determine accurately in order to use what is so determined as a standard of comparison: said of the strength of a solution, or the quantity of a certain reagent contained in a given volume of it. Also spelled standardise.

They [electrical measuring-instruments] will be useful for standardizing the ordinary forms of voltmeter and ammeter. Science, XI. 237.

standardizer (stan'där-dī-zēr), n. [< standardize + -er¹.] One who or that which standardizes. Also spelled standardiser.

The absolute values of the polarization . . . should of course have been identical, but according to the standardizer they were always markedly different. Philosophical Mag., XXVII. 86.

standard-knee (stan'därd-nē), n. Same as standard³, 1 (c).

standardwing (stan'därd-wing), n. Wallace's bird of paradise. See cut under Semioptera.

stand-by (stand'bi), n. One who or that which stands by one. (a) A supporter or adherent. (b) That upon which one relies, especially, a ready, timely resource.

The Texan cowboys become very expert in the use of the revolver, their invariable standby. T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXVI. 840.

(c) A nautical signal to be in readiness. See stand by (b), under stand.

standel† (stan'del), n. [< stand + -el; equiv. to stander.] A tree reserved for growth as timber; specifically, in law, a young oak-tree, twelve of which were to be left in every acre of wood at the felling thereof.

standelwort† (stan'del-wért), n. [< standel, equiv. to stander, + wort†. Cf. equiv. MD. standelkruid.] Same as stander-grass.

stander (stan'der), n. [= MD. stander, a post, mill-post, axletree, D. ständer, an axletree, = OHG. stantar, MHG. ständer, stender, G. ständer, a tub; as stand + -er†. Cf. standard³ and standel.] 1. One who or that which stands. (a) One who keeps an upright position, resting on the feet. They fall, as being slippery standers. Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 84.

(b) One who or that which remains in a specified place, situation, state, condition, etc.; specifically, a tree left for growth when other trees are felled. Compare standel. They [the Dutch] are the longest standers here by many years: for the English are but newly removed hither from Hean, where they resided altogether before. Dampier, Voyages, II. 1. 49.

(c) A supporter; an adherent. [Rare.] Our young proficients . . . do far outdo the old standers and professors of the sect. Berkeley, Alciphron, ii. § 7.

(d) A sentinel; a picket. [Thieves' slang.]

And so was false to blue among the wicked, sometimes a stander for the padder. Routlands, Hist. Rogues, quoted in Ribton-Turner's [Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 583.

2. pl. In the early church, the highest class of penitents: a mistranslation of consistentes (αὐστητικοί), properly 'bystanders.'

Standers, who might remain throughout the entire rite, but were not suffered to communicate. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 486.

stander-by (stan'dér-bi'), n. One who is present; a mere spectator; a bystander.

When a gentleman is disposed to swear, it is not for any standers-by to curtail his oaths. Shak., Cymbeline, II. 1. 12.

stander-grass (stan'dér-gräs), n. The Orethia muscula and various plants of this and allied genera. See cullion, 2. Also standard-grass, standelwort, standerwort.

standerwort (stan'dér-wért), n. Same as stander-grass.

stand-far-off† (stand'fär-ôf'), n. A kind of coarse cloth. Compare stand-further-off.

In my childhood there was one [kind of cloth] called Stand-far-off (the emblem of Hypocrisy), which seemed pretty at competent distance, but discovered its coarseness when nearer to the eye. Fuller, Worthies, Norwich, II. 488. (Darvies.)

stand-further (stand'fēr'fēr), n. A quarrel; a dissension. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.]

stand-further-off† (stand'fēr'fēr-ôf'), n. A kind of coarse cloth. Compare stand-fur-off.

Certain sonnets, in praise of Mr. Thomas the deceased; fashioned of divers stuffs, as mockado, fustian, stand-further-off, and motly, all which the author dedicates to the immortal memory of the famous Odeombian traveller. John Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

stand-gall (stand'gál), n. Same as slawit.

standing (stan'ding), n. [Verbal n. of stand, v.] 1. The act of one who stands, in any sense. I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing. Ps. lxxix. 2.

He cursed him in sitting, in standing, in lying. Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 212.

2. The time at, in, or during which one stands. (a) The point in time at which anything comes to a stand; specifically, of the sun, the solstice. Brasik is sove atte standing of the Sonne. Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 160.

(b) The interval during which one keeps, or is supposed to keep, an upright or standing position. Compare sitting, n. They [Perch] may be, at one standing, all caught one after another. I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 157.

Hence—(c) Duration; continuance; practice. One of the commendadors of Alcantara, a gentleman of long standing. Middleton and Rowley, Spanish Gypsy, II. 1.

I know less geography than a schoolboy of six weeks' standing. Lamb, Old and New Schoolmaster.

3. A standing-place: a position or post; a stand. You, sirrah, get a standing for your mistress, The best in all the city. Middleton, Women Beware Women, I. 3.

4. Relative position; degree; rank; consideration; social, professional, or commercial reputation; specifically, high rank; as, a member in full standing (of a church, society, club, or other organization); a committee composed of men of good standing. Of all the causes which contribute to form the character of a people, those by which power, influence, and standing in the government are most certainly and readily obtained are by far the most powerful. Calhoun, Works, I. 50.

standing (stan'ding), p. a. 1. Having an erect position; upright; perpendicular: hence, rising or raised; high. Look how you see a field of standing corn, . . . Rising in waves, how it doth come and go Forward and backward. Drayton, Battle of Agincourt. Wear standing collars, were they made of tin! O. W. Holmes, Urania.

2. Involving the attitude or position of one who stands: performed while standing: as, a standing jump. Wide was spread That war and various; sometimes on firm ground A standing fight; then, soaring on main wing, Tormented all the air. Milton, P. L., vi. 243.

3. Remaining at rest; motionless; inactive; specifically, of water, stagnant. And thought so be it is called a see, in very dede it is but a standynge water. Sir R. Gylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 49. The Garigliano had converted the whole country into a mere quagmire, or rather standing pool. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., II. 14.

4. Permanent; lasting; fixed; not transient, transitory, or occasional: as, a standing rule; a standing order.

A standing evidence of the care that was had in those times to prevent the growth of errors. N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 155.

Yes, yes, I think being a standing jest for all one's acquaintance a very happy situation. Sheridan, School for Scandal, v. 2.

5. In printing, remaining for further use: noting composed types, printed or unprinted, which are reserved from distribution.—Standing army. See army².—Standing bed, standing bedstead, the large or high bedstead, as distinguished from the trundle-bed which rolled in and out under it. There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and truckle-bed. Shak., M. W. of W., iv. 5. 7.

Standing bevel or beveling. See bevel, 1.—Standing block. See block¹, 11.—Standing bowl. Same as standing cup. Here, say we drink this standing-bowl of wine to him. Shak., Pericles, II. 3. 65.

Standing bowsprit, committee, cup, galley, matter. See the nouns.—Standing nut, a cup made of a nut-shell mounted in silver or the like: examples remain dating from the sixteenth century or earlier, made most commonly of cocoon-shells.—Standing orders. (a) The permanent orders made by a legislative or deliberative assembly respecting the manner in which its business shall be conducted. (b) In a military organization, those orders which are always in force.—Standing panel. See panel.—Standing part of a tackle, the part of the rope made fast to the strap of a block or any fixed point.—Standing piece†. Same as standing cup. M. S. Arundel, 249, f. 5v. (Hallivell).—Standing rigging (naut.). See rigging².—Standing salt-cellar, shield, etc. See the nouns.—Standing stone, in archæol., a translation of the French pierre levée, a menhir. E. B. Tylor.—Standing table, a permanent table, fixed in its place, or of such size and solidity that it cannot easily be moved, as the table for meals in the old English hall.

standing-cypress (stan'ding-'sī'pres), n. A common biennial garden-flower, Gilia coronopifolia (Ipomopsis elegans), native in the southern United States. In its tubular scarlet flowers and finely dissected leaves it resembles the cypress-vine; but it is of an erect wand-like habit.

standing-ground (stan'ding-'ground), n. Place or ground on which to stand; especially, that on which one rests, in a figurative sense; a basis of operations or of argument; a fundamental principle. W. Wilson, The State, § 204.

standing-press (stan'ding-'pres), n. See press¹.

standing-room (stan'ding-'röm), n. Space sufficient only for standing, as in a theater where all the seats have been taken.

standing-stool (stan'ding-'stöl), n. A small frame or machine moving on wheels, used to support a child when learning to walk.

The elf dares peep abroad, the pretty foole Can wag without a truckling standing-stole. Fletcher, Poems, p. 130. (Hallivell.)

standish (stan'dish), n. [A reduction of stand-*

Standish of Decorate Pottery, 18th century. (From "L'Art pour Tous.") dish, < stand + dish.) An inkstand; also, a case for writing-materials.

In which agonie tormenting my selfe a long time, I grew by degrees to a milde dis-content; and, pausing a while over my standish, I resolved in verse to paynt forth my passion. Nashe, Pierce Penilesse, p. 5.

Here is another letter of Niccolini that has lain in my standish this fortnight. Walpole, Letters, II. 75.

stand-off (stand'ôf), n. [< stand off: see stand, v.] A holding or keeping off; a counteraction. [Colloq.]

The preferences of other clients, perhaps equal in number and value, who are fighting with Fabian tactics, make a complete stand-off. The Atlantic, LXVI. 672.

stand-off (stand'ôf), a. [< stand off: see stand, v.] Holding others off; distant; reserved. [Colloq.]

You always talk . . . as if there were no one but Catherine. People generally like the other two much better. Catherine is so stand-off. Mrs. Humphry Ward, Robert Elsmere, I. 2.

stand-offish (stand'ôf ish), a. [< stand off + -ish.] Same as stand-off. [Colloq.]

If the "landed gentry" were stand-offish, and . . . did not put themselves out of the way to cultivate Miss Sheldon's acquaintance, that young lady was all the more grateful for their reserve. F. W. Robinson, Her Face was her Fortune, v.

stand-offishness (stand'ôf ish-ness), n. The character of being repellent; the disposition or tendency to hold others at a distance. [Colloq.]

I told him I did not like this pride and stand-offishness between man and man, and added that if a duke were to speak to me I should try to treat him civilly.

D. C. Murray, Weaker Vessel, xxxii.

stand-pipe (stand'pīp), n. 1. A vertical pipe erected at a well or reservoir, into which water is forced by mechanical means in order to obtain a head-pressure sufficient to convey it to a distance.—2. A small pipe inserted into an opening in a water-main.—3. An upright gas-pipe connecting the retort and the hydraulic main.—4. In a steam-engine, a boiler supply-pipe elevated enough to cause water to flow into the boiler in spite of the pressure of steam.—5. A pipe on the eduction-pipe of a steam-pump to absorb the concussions due to the pulsation and irregularities caused by the necessary use of bends and changes in the direction of pipes.—6. An upright pipe, open at the top, used in connection with a hot-water heating system to allow room for the expansion of the water when heated; an expansion-pipe.—7. A portable pipe used to afford a high head of water at fires. One section of a pipe is secured to trunnions, while other sections are kept in a rack, and attached when required. When the hose is coupled, the long pipe is raised by means of a wheel, and the lower end is connected with the water-supply. Another more recent form is a derrick, elevated by two cylinders and pistons analogous in construction to these parts in a steam-engine; but the pistons are moved by the pressure of carbonic acid gas, generated, immediately as wanted, from the reaction of sulphuric acid upon a solution of sodium bicarbonate in a suitable generator. The pipe is elevated above the derrick by a wire rope, pulleys, and a hand-winch. A movable butt or nozzle, which can be inclined to any desired angle up or down, or turned in any direction horizontally, is controlled by a man on the lower platform of the derrick, and a copious stream can thus be poured into or upon the top of a tall building. Also called water-tower.

standpoint (stand'point), n. [Tr. G. standpunkt; as stand + point]: a word objected to by purists. The point at which one stands; especially, the position from which one's observations are taken and one's opinions formed or delivered; the point of view; the mental situation.

The attraction of different speakers from Sunday to Sunday strangles thought, each treating his theme from his own standpoint.

A. B. Alcott, Table-Talk, p. 91.

The great snare of the psychologist is the confusion of his own standpoint with that of the mental fact about which he is making his report.

W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 196.

stand-rest (stand'rest), n. A stool, bracket, or the like serving to support a person in an almost upright position, as the miserere in medieval stalls: applied especially to a contrivance like a high stool, but with the top or seat sloping instead of horizontal.

standstill (stand'stil), n. and a. [stand still: see stand, v., and still, a.] I. n. A halt; a pause; a stop, especially in consequence of obstruction, exhaustion, or perplexity.

In consequence of this fancy the whole business was at a standstill.

Greville, Memoirs, Nov. 29, 1823.

II. a. Deficient in progress or advancement; unprogressive: as, a standstill policy.

stand-up (stand'up), a. 1. Standing; erect; upright; high.

He was a tall youth now; . . . he wore his tail-coat and his stand-up collars, and watched the down on his lip with eager impatience.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, ii. 7.

2. Specifically, in pugilism, noting a fair boxing-match, where the combatants stand manfully to each other, without false falls: as, a fair stand-up fight.

His face marked with strong manly furrows, records of hard thinking and square stand-up fights with life.

O. W. Holmes, Poet at the Breakfast Table, i.

stane (stān), n. An obsolete and dialectal (Scotch) form of stone.

stane-raw (stān'rā), n. [Also staniraw, stein-raw, stancy-rag, rock-liverwort, appar. < stane, stone, + raw (origin obscure).] A foliaceous lichen, Parmelia saxatilis, used in the Scotch Highlands for dyeing brown; black crotches. [Orkney.]

stang¹ (stang), n. [ME. stange (prob. in part < Scand.), < AS. stæng, steng, stenge, a pole, rod, bar, stick, stake, = MD. stanghe, D. stang = MLG. stange = OHG. stanga, MHG. stange, G. stange, a pole, = Icel. stöng (stang-) = Sw. stång = Dan. stang, a pole, stang (cf. It. stanga, a bar, spar, < G.); < stingan (pret. stang), pierce, sting; see *sting*¹. Cf. *stang*².] 1. A wooden bar; a pole. [Obsolete or prov. Eng. or Scotch.]

He hatched al hole the halvez to-geder, & sythen on a stif stange stoutly hem beneges.

Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1614.

"Ye strake ower hard, Steenie—I doubt ye foundered the child." "Ne'er a bit," said Steenie, laughing; "he has braw broad shoulders, and I just took the measure of them wi' the stang."

Scott, Antiquary, xxvi.

2†. The bar of a door. Florio.—3. A rod, pole, or perch used in the measurement of land. Swift, Gulliver's Travels, i. 2. [Prov. Eng.]—Riding the stang, in Scotland and the north of England, a mode of punishing brutal or unfaithful (or, sometimes, henpecked) husbands, or other offenders, by carrying them mounted on a stang through the town, with an accompaniment of jeers and rough music. The culprits have sometimes suffered by proxy, or, latterly, only in effigy.

stang¹ (stang), v. t. [*stang*¹, n.] To ease to ride on a stang.

This Word Stang, says Ray, is still used in some Colleges in the University of Cambridge, to stang Scholars in Christ-mass Time being to cause them to ride on a Colt-staff or Pole, for missing of Chapel.

Bourne's Pop. Antig. (1777), p. 410.

stang² (stang), n. [ME. stange, a sting; < sting (pret. stang), sting; see *sting*¹.] 1. A sting. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

Quen the stanged must se
The neddor on the tree their hange,
Thai ware al warisht of their stange.

Holy Kood (ed. Morris), p. 117.

My curse upon thy venom'd stang,
That shoots my tortured gums along.

Burns, Address to the Toothache.

2. The weever, a fish. Also stangster. [Prov.] stang² (stang), v. [Icel. stanga, sting, goad, < stoug, a pole, stake: see *stang*², sting, and cf. *stang*¹.] I. trans. To sting.

The neddres that ware fel Stanged the folk of israel.

Holy Kood (E. E. T. S.), p. 117.

II. intrans. 1. To throb with pain; sting. Hallivell.—2. To cause a sharp, sudden pain; inflict a sting.

But for how lang the flee may stang,
Let inclination law that.

Burns, Jolly Beggars.

[Obsolete or dialectal in all uses.]

stang³. An obsolete or dialectal preterit of *sting*¹.

stang⁴, n. An obsolete form of *stank*¹.

Stangeria (stan-jō'ri-ä), n. [NL. (T. Moore, 1853), named after Dr. Stanger of Natal, one of the first to collect specimens of the plant.] A genus of gymnosperms plants, of the order Cycadaceæ and tribe Zamiæ, made by some a tribe Stangeriæ. It is characterized by a strobile with scales imbricated in alternating series, a thick naked napiform caudex, and leaf-segments with a strong midrib and numerous unbranched or forking nerves. There are one or two species, natives of Natal. They are singular plants with the smooth irregular trunk only about a foot high or nearly subterranean, from which rise a few coarse long-stalked pinnate fern-like leaves, indexed in the bud, the leaflets straight in the bud, linear-lanceolate, scalloped, spiny-toothed or cleft, and traversed by parallel forking veins. The fruit, a thick downy strobile or cone, is borne on a stalk surrounded by circular concave woolly bracts overlapping in two or three ranks. The male plants bear cylindrical cones with numerous stamens on the under side of their compound scales. S. paradoxa, in allusion to its thick, round caudex, is called Hottentot's-head; small articles, as necklaces and snuff-boxes, are sometimes made from its seeds.

stanhope (stan'hōp), n. [So called after a Mr. Stanhope, for whom it was orig. contrived.] A light two-wheeled carriage without a top.

When the carriages met again, he stood up in his stanhope, . . . ready to doff his hat.

Thackeray, Vanly Fair, xix.

Stanhopea (stan-hō'pē-ä), n. [NL. (Frost, 1829), named after Philip Henry, Earl Stanhope, president of the London Medico-botanical Society.] A genus of orchids, of the tribe Vandææ, type of the subtribe Stanhopeæ. It is characterized by a loose raceme of a few large flowers with spreading and nearly equal sepals, a thick fleshy lip which is commonly wavy or twisted, a straight erect or incurved column usually prolonged and two-winged above, and pollinia with flattened stalks and scale-shaped glands. The peculiar lip is highly polymorphous and complex, bearing lateral lobes which are often thickened into a solid mass forming a spherical, oblong, or scaccate hypochilium, a middle lobe or epichilium which is itself often three-lobed and attached by a distinct joint, and sometimes at its base other appendages, lobes or horns—the metachilium. There are about 20 species, natives of tropical America from Brazil to Mexico. They are epiphytes with very short stems bearing many sheaths and a single large plicate leaf. The stem soon thickens into a fleshy pseudobulb, from the base of which the flower-stem proceeds. The flowers are very remarkable for their structure, size, and rich colorings, usually brown-spotted, yellow, or purple; for their great fragrance, whence the recently introduced perfume called stanhopea; and for their growth downward, not upward as in ordinary plants—a habit first discovered by the accidental breaking of a flower-pot in which the blossoms had buried themselves in the earth. They are now cultivated under glass in hard-wood baskets with interstices through which the flowers protrude.

Stanhope lens, press. See lens, *press*¹.

stanhoscope (stan'hō-skōp), n. [Stanho (pe lens) + Gr. σκοπεῖν, view.] A form of simple magnifying-glass, a modification of the Stanhope lens, in which the surface away from the eye is plane instead of convex.

staniel (stan'yel), n. [Also stanyel, stannyel, also (with the consonant i or y following n assimilated to n) stannel, formerly stannell, or assimilated to ch, stanchel, stanchil; < ME. staniel, stanyel, earlier stanzelle*, < AS. stāngella, stāngilla, a kestrel (erroneously used to gloss L. pellicanus) (= G. steingall, a staniel), < stān, stone, rock, + gella*, gilla*, < gellan, giltan, giellan, yell, scream, a secondary form related to galan, sing; see stone and yell, *gale*¹. The word is thus nearly similar in its second element to *nightingale*¹. The E. form stone-gall is partly from the AS. with the long vowel retained, and partly (as to the 2d element) due to the G. form; the form stundgall, with the same terminal syllable, simulates stand, and the form standgale (as if equiv. to windhover) is a simulated form, as if < stand + *gale*¹.] The kestrel or windhover, Falco tinnunculus or Tinnunculus ulularius. See cut under Tinnunculus.

Fab. What a dish o' poison has she dressed him!
Sir To. And with what wing the staniel checks at it!

Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 124.

stanielry (stan'yel-ri), n. [staniel + -ry.] The act or practice of hawking with staniels; ignoble falconry. Lady Alimony, sig. I. 4. (Nares.)

stank¹ (stangk), n. [E. dial. also assimilated stanch (see *stanch*²); < ME. stank, stane, stamke, stang, < OF. estang, F. étang (Walloon estank, stanke) = Pr. estanc = Sp. estanque = Pg. tanque (ML. tauca), a dam to hem in water, < L. stagnum, a pool of stagnant water; see stagnate, stagnant. Cf. *stanch*¹; also cf. tank.] 1. A body of standing water; a pool; a pond. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

And alle be it that men clepen it a See, zit it is nouthur
See ne Arm of the See; for it is but a Stank of fresche Watir, that is in lengthe 100 Furlonges.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 115.

Seint John seith that avowtiers shullen been in helle in a stank brennyng of fyr and of brymston.

Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

2. A tank; a ditch. [Prov. Eng. or Scotch.] stank¹ (stangk), v. t. [*stank*¹, n., or perhaps an unassimilated form of the related verb *stank*¹, q. v.] To dam up. Fletcher, Poems, p. 154. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

stank² (stangk), a. [Early mod. E. also stauk, stauke; < OF. estanc, tired, = Pr. estanc, still, immovable, = It. stanco, tired; cf. Sp. estanco, = Pg. estanque, water-tight, stanch; see *stanch*³, *stauk*², a doublet of *stank*².] Exhausted; weary. Florio; Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

stank³ (stangk). Old preterit of stink.

stank-hen (stangk'hēn), n. [*stank*¹ + hen.] The moor-hen or gallinule, Gallinula chloropus.

[Scotch.]

stankie (stang'ki), n. Same as stank-hen.

[Scotch.]

stannaburrow (stan'a-bur'ō), n. [Prop. stannaburrow, < stanner + *burrow*², 1, 2.] See the quotation (the etymology there suggested is erroneous).

Leaving the stream a little to the right, we shall notice several small heaps of stones placed at intervals along the slope. These little mounds, which are met with in various parts of Dartmoor, are called by the moor-men stannaburrows, which name is probably derived from the same root as the word stannary, and they were probably tin bounds set up by the miners.

W. Crossing, Ancient Crosses of Dartmoor, p. 69, quoted stannary (stan'a-ri), a. and n. [Also stannery; < ML. stannaria, a tin-mine, < L. stannum, tin; see stannum.] I. a. Relating to tin, tin-mines, or the working of tin; as, "stannary courts." Blackstone, Com., III. vi.—Stannary court, a court instituted at a very early period in English history for the purpose of regulating the affairs of the tin-mines and tin-miners of Cornwall.

(in N. and Q., 7th ser., V. 45.)

II. n.; pl. stannaries (-riz). A region or district in which tin is mined: the English form of the Latin stannaria (or stannuria, as written in a charter of the third year of King John, 1201). The miners themselves were called stannatores or (rarely) stannatores.

For they wrongfully claim all the County of Devon to be their Stannary.

Petition to Parliament, 1 Ed. III., MS. in Rec. Office, [quoted in De La Beche's Geol. Rep. on Cornwall.]

If by public laws the mint were ordained to be only supplied by our stannaries, how currently would they pass for more precious than silver mines!

Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 17.

stannate (stan'āt), n. [stann (ic) + *-ate*¹.] A salt of stannic acid.

stannel (stan'el), n. See staniel.

stanner (stan'er), n. [Origin obscure.] A small stone; in the plural, gravel. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

stannery¹, a. and n. See stannary.
stannery² (stan'er-i), a. [ME. stann[e]ry; < stanner + -y¹.] Gravelly; stony. Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 86. [Obsolete or Scotch.]
stannic (stan'ik), a. [= F. stannique; < L. stannum, tin, + -ic².] Of or pertaining to tin; procured from tin: specifically applied to those compounds in which tin appears as a quadrivalent atom: as, stannic acid, SnO(OH)₂, a hydrate obtained from stannous acid, which unites with bases to form salts called stannates.
stanniferous (sta-nif'e-rus), a. [< L. stannum, tin, + ferre = E. *bear*¹.] Containing or affording tin.
stannine (stan'in), n. [< L. stannum, tin, + -ine².] A brittle steel-gray or iron-black ore of tin, of a metallic luster, consisting of the sulphides of tin, copper, and iron, and generally zinc, found in Cornwall; tin pyrites. Also called, from its color, bell-metal ore.
stannite (stan'it), n. [< L. stannum, tin, + -ite².] Same as stannine.
stannotype (stan'ō-tip), n. [< L. stannum, tin, + Gr. τύπος, type.] In photog., a picture taken on a tin plate; a tin-type or ferrotype. Imp. Dict.
stannous (stan'us), a. [< L. stannum, tin, + -ous.] Of, pertaining to, or containing tin: specifically applied to those compounds in which tin appears as a bivalent atom: as, stannous oxide, or protoxid of tin (SnO).
stannum (stan'um), n. [L. stannum, stannum, tin, also an alloy of silver and lead (> It. stagno = Sp. estaño = Pg. estanho = Pr. estanh = F. étain, tain, tin); perhaps the same as L. stagnum, pool, applied to a mass of fluid metal: see *stank*¹, stagnate. Cf. Bret. stean = Corn. stean = W. ystan = Gael. stain = Manx stainny, tin (< L. tin); see tin.] Tin.
stannyel, n. See staniel. stant¹. A contracted form of standeth, third person singular present indicative of stand.
stant² (stant), n. Same as *stant*³. stantion¹ (stan'shon), n. [Appar. a var. of stantion.] Same as stemson.
stanza (stan'zā), n. [Formerly also stanzo, stanze (= Sp. estancia = G. stanz = F. stançe), in def. 2; < It. stanza, Oft. stantia, prop. an abode, lodging, chamber, dwelling, stance, also a stanza (so called from the stop or pause at the end of it), < ML. stantia, an abode: see stance.] 1. Pl. stanze (-ze). In arch., an apartment or division in a building; a room or chamber: as, the stanze of Raphael in the Vatican.—2. In versification, a series of lines arranged in a fixed order of sequence as regards their length, metrical form, or rimes, and constituting a typical group, or one of a number of similar groups, composing a poem or part of a poem. Stanza is often used interchangeably with strophe—strophe, however, being used preferably of ancient or quantitative, and stanza of modern or accentual and rimed poetry. In the latter the stanza often consists of lines identical in form throughout, the arrangement of rimes alone defining the group of lines. Such a stanza is not properly a strophe. A couplet is not regarded as a stanza, and a triplet is rarely so designated. Compare verse. Abbreviated st.
 Horace . . . confines himself strictly to one sort of verse, or stanza, in every Ode. Dryden, Misc., Pref.
stanzaed (stan'zad), a. [< stanza + -ed².] Having stanzas; consisting of stanzas. as, a two-stanzaed poem.
stanzaic (stan-zā'ik), a. [< stanza + -ic.] Consisting of or relating to stanzas; arranged as a stanza. E. C. Stedman, Viet. Poets, p. 381.
stanzic (stan'zik), a. [< stanz-a + -ic.] Same as stanzaic. E. Wadham, Eng. Versification, p. 92.
stanzo (stan'zō), n. An obsolete form of stanza. Shak., As you Like it, ii. 5. 15.
stapet, a. See stapen. stapedial (stā-pē'di-āl), a. [< NL. stapedius + -al.] 1. Stirrup-shaped: as, the stapedial bone of the ear.—2. Pertaining to the stapes or its representative, whatever its form.—Stapedial ligament, the annular ligament of the stapes, connecting the foot or base of the stirrup with the margin of the fenestra ovalis.—Stapedial muscle, the stapedius.—Stapedial nerve, a tympanic branch of the facial which innervates the stapedial muscle.
Stapedifera (stā-pē-dif'e-rā), n. pl. [NL. (Thacher, 1877), neut. pl. of stapedifer: see stapediferous.] Those animals which have a stapes, as mammals, birds, reptiles, and amphibians; all vertebrates above fishes.
stapediferous (stā-pē-dif'e-rus), a. [< NL. stapedifer, < ML. stapes, a stirrup, + L. ferre =

E. *bear*¹.] Having a stapes; of or pertaining to the Stapedifera.
stapedius (stā-pē'di-us), n.: pl. stapedii (-i). [NL. < ML. stapes, a stirrup: see stapes.] The stapedial muscle; a muscle of the tympanum actuating the stapes of some animals. In man the stapedius arises from a cavity hollowed out in the pyramid of the petrosal bone; its tendon passes out of a little hole in the apex of the pyramid, and is inserted into the neck of the stapes. Its action draws the head of the stapes backward, and also causes the stapes to rotate a little on a vertical axis drawn through its own center. The name is correlated with incudius and malleidius. See cut under hyoid.
Stapelia (stā-pē'li-ā), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), named after J. B. van Stapel, a Dutch physician and botanist (died 1636).] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Asclepiadaceæ, type of the tribe Stapelieæ. It is characterized by flowers with a wheel-shaped or reflexed corolla without appendages between the five valvate lobes, and with the tube short and broadly bell-shaped or almost wanting, and by a double corona, the outer of five horizontally spreading lobes alternate with the anthers, the inner of five scales produced into erect or arching horns. There are over 70 species, natives of South Africa. Their short fleshy leafless stems are produced into four prominent angles, which are coarsely toothed, sometimes bearing transient rudiments of leaves at the apex of the new growths. Numerous dark tubercles give the stems a grotesque appearance. Some are cultivated under glass for their beautiful and varied flowers, which are commonly very large, some reaching 12 inches (S. gigantea sometimes 14 inches) in diameter, of singular structure and often exquisitely marbled or dotted. In other species they are dingy or unattractive, usually coarse, thick, fleshy, and short-lived, and in most species exhale transiently a fetid odour of carrion, attracting flies, which deposit their eggs upon them in large quantities. Their colors are largely the livid-purple and lurid-reddish, yellow, and brownish hues which are associated with disagreeable odors also in Rafflesia, Aristolochia, Amorphophallus, and others of the largest flowers. They are sometimes called carrion-flowers; S. bufonia is known, from its blotches, as toad-flower; and S. Asteria, from its spreading narrow-parted corolla, as starfish-flower.
Stapelieæ (stā-pē-lī'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Stapelia + -eæ.] A tribe of gamopetalous plants, of the order Asclepiadaceæ. It is characterized by valvate and commonly fleshy corolla-lobes, waxy erect or laterally placed pollen-masses solitary in each anther-cell, and obtuse or retuse unappendaged anthers, closely incumbent over the disk of the stigma or partly immersed in it. The 16 genera are plants commonly with short, thick, fleshy stems, coarsely angled or tubercled, without leaves except in the East Indian genus Fresea; one genus, Boucerosia, extends into Europe in Spain and Sicily; the others, as Stapelia, the type, are mostly South African.
stapent, stapet, a. Stepped; advanced. Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 270.
stapes (stā'pēs), n. [NL. < ML. stapes, a stirrup, < OHG. stapf, staph = D. stap, etc., a step: see step, and cf. staffier.] In zool. and anat., the inmost one of the three auditory ossicles of man and other mammals, situated in the tympanum, or middle ear. The stapes is connected on the one hand with the incus, and on the other with the fenestra ovalis, and is moved by a small muscle called the stapedius. The name is derived from the close resemblance in shape of the human stapes to a stirrup.

 1. Of Man (the surface of its foot separately shown). 2. Of Seal (Phoca vitulina). 3. Of Chick, its foot separately shown, and cartilaginous parts in dotted outline: m.st., mediostapedial part, forming with st the stapes proper (columella); est, extrastapedial part; i.st., infrastapedial part; sst, suprastapedial part.
 In man the bone presents a head, with a little fossa for movable articulation with the orbicular incudal bone; a neck or constricted part; two branches, leas or crura; and an oval base or foot. This bone is morphologically one of the proximal elements of the hyoidean arch. The corresponding element in birds and reptiles is very differently shaped, and is sometimes called stapes, oftener columella. It is rod-like or columellar, with an expanded base fitting the fenestra ovalis, the other end usually showing a cross-bar. Parts of such a stapes are distinguished as mediostapedial, the main shaft; extrastapedial, the part beyond the cross-bar; infrastapedial, the lower arm of the cross-bar; and suprastapedial, the upper arm of the cross-bar—the last being supposed to represent the incus of mammalia. Some of these parts may be wanting, or only represented by a ligament, or coalesced with a part of the mandibular arch. The stapes or columella furnishes the primitive actual or virtual connection of the hyoidean arch with the petriotic capsule. See stapedial, eduncella, 3 (b), and cuts under hyoid, tythionide, and tympania.—Annular ligament of the stapes. See ligament and stapedial.

Staphisagria (staf-i-sag'ri-ā), n. [NL. (Tragus, 1546), < ML. staphisagria, staphisagria, < Gr. as if σταφίς ἀγρία: σταφίς, a dried grape, a raisin, also (in L. staphis) the plant stavesacre; ἀγρία, fem. of ἀγρός, wild, < ἀγρός, a field, the country. The E. form of the name is stavesacre, q. v.] A former genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Ranunculaceæ. It is now classed as a section of the genus Delphinium, and as such distinguished by a short spur, from three to five ovaries forming bladder few-seeded capsules, and biennial habit. See Delphinium and stavesacre, also ointment of stavesacre (under ointment).
staphisagric (staf-i-sag'rik), a. [< Staphisagria + -ic.] Contained in or derived from Staphisagria. Encyc. Dict.
staphisagrine (staf-i-sag'rin), n. [< Staphisagria + -ine².] A poisonous amorphous alkaloid, soluble in ether and in water, obtained from Delphinium Staphisagria, or stavesacre.
staphyle (staf'i-lē), n. [NL. < Gr. σταφύλη, a bunch of grapes, also the uvula when swollen.] The uvula.
Staphylea (staf-i-lē'ā), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), abridged from Staphylo-dendron (Tournefort, 1700), < L. staphylo-dendron, a shrub thought to have been S. pinnata; prob. so named from its clustered fruit, < Gr. σταφύλη, a bunch of grapes, + δέρον, a tree.] A genus of polypetalous plants, type of the order Staphyleaceæ. It is characterized by an ovary which is two- or three-parted to the base, contains numerous bicarinate ovules, and ripens into an inflated and bladderly membranous capsule, discharging its few seeds at the apex of the two or three lobes. There are 4 species, natives of Europe, the Himalayas, Japan, and North America. They are shrubs with numerous roundish branches, bearing opposite stipulate leaves, each composed of from three to five leaflets, which are involute in the bud and are furnished with stipels. The white flowers, with five erect petals, hang from nodding panicles or racemes. The large and peculiar fruit is the source of the common name bladder-nut. (See cut under nectary.) S. pinnata, also called bag-nut, common in hedgerows and thickets in Europe, bears hard smooth nuts sometimes used for rosaries.
Staphyleaceæ (staf'i-lē-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1825), < Staphylea + -aceæ.] An order of polypetalous plants, of the cohort Sapindales, long classed as a suborder of the Sapindaceæ, from which it is distinguished by its regular bisexual flowers with the five stamens inserted outside of the base of the disk, by albuminous and sometimes arillate seeds with a straight embryo, and by opposite simple or compound leaves. It includes 16 species of 4 genera, of which Staphylea is the type; of the others, Turpinia includes a number of small trees and shrubs with roundish berry-like fruit, mostly of tropical Asia and America, and Euscaphis a few Japanese shrubs bearing coriaceous foli-licles. See cut under bladder-nut.
staphyline (staf'i-lin), a. [< Gr. σταφύλιος, of or pertaining to a bunch of grapes, < σταφύλη, a bunch of grapes, also the uvula.] 1. Having the form of a bunch of grapes; botryoidal.—2. Pertaining to the uvula or to the entire palate.—Staphyline glands, palatine glands.
staphylinid (staf-i-lin'id), n. and a. I. n. A rove-beetle, as a member of the Staphylinidæ. II. a. Of or pertaining to the family Staphylinidæ; staphylinine.
Staphylinidæ (staf-i-lin'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Leach, 1817), < Staphylinus + -idæ.] A large and important family of braehelytrous clavicorn beetles, commonly called rove-beetles. They resemble the Pselaphidæ in having short elytra, but differ in having the abdomen flexible and consisting of eight ventral segments. The antennæ are generally eleven-jointed, the labial palpi three-jointed, and the maxillary four-jointed. The short truncate elytra usually leave most of the abdomen exposed, and this, when the beetles are disturbed, is turned up over the back, as if the insects were about to sting. A familiar example is the Oecypus dens, known as the cocktail and devil's coach-horse. (See Oecypus and cut under devil.) Some species discharge an odoriferous fluid from the tip of the abdomen. The larvae resemble the adults, and are found under bark, in fungi, decaying plants, and the excrement of animals, in ants' nests, hornets' nests, and the nests of certain birds. It is one of the largest and most wide-spread of the families of Coleoptera. About 1,000 species are known in America north of Mexico, and about 5,000 in the whole world. Also Staphylinidæ, Staphylini, Staphylinæ, Staphylinida, Staphylinii, Staphylinites. See cuts under Homalium and rove-beetle.
staphyliniform (staf-i-lin'i-fōrm), a. [< NL. Staphylinus, q. v., + L. forma, form.] Resembling a rove-beetle; related to the Staphylinidæ.
staphylinine (staf-i-lin'in), a. Of or pertaining to the Staphylinidæ.

Staphylinus (staf-i-lī'nus), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1758), < Gr. σταφύλιος, a kind of insect, < σταφύλη, a bunch of grapes.] The typical genus of the family Staphylinidae, formerly corresponding to that family in a broad sense. Used with various limitations, it is now made type of the restricted family, and characterized by having the maxillary palpi with the fourth joint equal to or longer than the third, the marginal lines of the thorax united near the apex, the ligula emarginate, the middle coxae slightly separate, and the abdomen narrowed at the tip. The species are numerous, and among them are the largest forms in the family. Twenty-one are known in America north of Mexico, and about 100 in the whole world.

staphylion (stā-fil'i-on), n. [NL., < Gr. σταφύλιον, dim. of σταφύλη, the uvula: see staphyle.] The median point of the posterior nasal spine. Török.

staphylitis (staf-i-lī'tis), n. [staphyle, the uvula, + -itis.] Uvulitis.

staphyloma (staf-i-lō'mā), n.; pl. staphylomata (-mā-tā). [NL., < Gr. σταφύλωμα, a defect in the eye, < σταφύλη, a bunch of grapes.] A name given to certain local bulgings of the eyeball. — Staphyloma corneæ, a protrusion involving more or less of the cornea, such as may result from preceding ulceration. Also called anterior staphyloma. — Staphyloma corneæ pellucidum, conical cornea. Also called staphyloma pellucidum. — Staphyloma posticum, posterior staphyloma; sclerorhoiditis in the back part of the eye, resulting in a thinning of the coats and consequent bulging and progressive myopia.

staphylomatic (staf'i-lō-mat'ik), a. [staphyloma(-t-) + -ic.] Characterized or affected by staphyloma.

staphylomatous (staf-i-lō-m'a-tus), a. [staphyloma(-t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to or of the nature of staphyloma.

staphyloplasty (staf'i-lō-plas'ti), n. [staphύλη, the uvula, + πλάσσειν, form, shape: see plastic.] In surg., an operation for restoring the soft palate when it is defective.

staphylorrhaphy (staf-i-lor'a-fi), n. [staphύλη, the uvula, + ράφή, a sewing.] In surg., the plastic operation for cleft palate, consisting in uniting the mucous membrane across the cleft. Also called eionorrhaphia, palatorrhaphy.

staphylotome (staf'i-lō-tōm), n. [staphύλωρον, a knife for excising the uvula, < σταφύλη, the uvula, + τέμνειν, ταμείν, cut.] In surg., a knife for operating upon the uvula or the palate.

staphylotomy (staf-i-lōt'ō-mi), n. [staphύλωρον, the excision of the uvula, < σταφύλη, the uvula, + -τομία, < τέμνειν, ταμείν, cut: see -otomy.] In surg., amputation of the uvula.

staple¹ (stā'pl), n. [ME. stapel, stapil, staphyle, stapul, < AS. stapel, stapol, stapul, a prop, post (= OS. stapal = OFries. stapul, stapel = MD. stapel, D. stapel, a prop, foot-rest, a seat, pile, heap, = MLG. LG. stapel (> G. stapel), a pile, staple, stocks, = OHG. staffal, staphal, MHG. staffel, stapfel, G. staffel, a step, = Sw. stapel, a pile, heap, stocks, = Dan. stabel, a pile, stack, stocks (on which a ship is built), hinge), < stapan, step: see step. Cf. *staple*².] 1†. A post; a prop; a support.

Under ech staple of his bed,
That he useth, four that hid.
The Sevin Sages, 201. (Hallivell.)

2. A loop of metal, or a bar or wire bent and formed with two points, to be driven into wood to hold a hook, pin, or bolt.

Massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts.
Shak., T. and C., Prol., 1. 17.

3. In founding, a piece of nail-iron with a flat disk riveted to the head, and pointed below, used in a mold to hold a core in position. E. II. Knight. — 4. Of a lock, same as *box*², 13. — 5. In musical instruments of the oboe class, the metallic tube to which the reeds are fastened, and through which the tone is conveyed from them into the wooden body of the instrument. — 6. In coal-mining, a shallow shaft within a mine. [North. Eng.] — Seizin by hasp and staple. See hasp. — Staple of a press, the frame or uprights of a hand printing-press. C. T. Jacob, Printers' Vocab.

staple¹ (stā'pl), v. t.; pret. and pp. stapled, ppr. stapling. [*staple*¹, n.] To support, attach, or fix by means of a staple or staples. Elect. Rev., XVI, 5.

staple² (stā'pl), n. and a. [Early mod. E. staple; < OF. estaple, estape, F. étape (ML. stapula), a market, store, store-house, = G. stapel (Sw. stapel, Dan. stabel, in comp.), < MD. stapel = MLG. LG. stapel, a market, emporium, appar. a particular use of stapel, a pile, heap: see *staple*¹, I. n. 1. A settled mart or market; an emporium; a town where certain commodities are chiefly taken for sale. In England, formerly, the king's staple was established in certain ports or towns, and certain goods could not be exported without being first brought to these ports to be rated and charged with the duty payable to the king or the public. The principal commodities on which customs were levied were wool, skins, and leather, and these were originally the staple commodities.

The first ordination of a Staple, or of one only called Mart-towne for the uttering of English wools & woollen fells, instituted by the sayd K. Edward.

Hence — 2. A general market or exchange.

Tho., O sir, a Staple of News! or the New Staple, which you please.

P. Jun. What's that?

Fash. An office, sir, a brave young office set up. . . .

P. Jun. For what?

Tho. To enter all the News, sir, of the time.

Fash. And vent it as occasion serves.

B. Jonson, Staple of News, I. 1.

3. A commercial monopoly formed by a combination of merchants acting under the sanction of the royal privilege of fairs and markets. Foreign staple was the system of trade carried on by this monopoly on the continent; home staple was the business organized by it in leading towns in England.

Their ayme in this edict is, if possible, to draw for the louc of currents the staple of diners merchandise to that city.

Sir Thomas Roe, Negotiations (London, 1740).

4. The principal commodity grown or manufactured in a locality, either for exportation or home consumption — that is, originally, the merchandise which was sold at a staple or mart.

The prices of bread-stuffs and provisions, the staples of the North, and of cotton and tobacco, the staples of the South, were high, not only absolutely, but relatively.

Taussig, Tariff History, p. 19.

5. The principal element of or ingredient in anything; the chief constituent; the chief item.

He has two very great faults, which are the staple of his bad side.

Politics, theology, history, education, public improvements, personal matters, are conversational staples.

Harper's Mag., LXXX, 466.

6. The material or substance of anything; raw or unmanufactured material. — 7. The fiber of any material used for spinning, used in a general sense and as expressive of the character of the material: as, wool of short staple; cotton of long staple, etc. — Corrector of the staple. See corrector. — Merchant of the staple. See merchant. — Ordinance of Staple. Same as Statute of Staple. — Staple of land, the particular nature and quality of land. — Statute of Staple, or Ordinance of Staple, an English statute of 1353 (27 Edw. III., st. 2), recognizing the ancient custom of staple, and confirming the rights and privileges of merchants under it. — Statute staple. See statute.

II. a. 1. Pertaining to or being a mart or staple for commodities: as, a staple town.

Flanders is Staple, as men tell mee,
To all nations of Christianitie.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I, 189.

2. Mainly occupying commercial enterprise; established in commerce: as, a staple trade.

3. According to the laws of commerce; marketable; fit to be sold.

Will take off their ware at their own rates, and trouble not themselves to examine whether it be staple or no.

Swift.

4. Chief; principal; regularly produced or made for market: as, staple commodities.

staple² (stā'pl), v.; pret. and pp. stapled, ppr. stapling. [*staple*², n.] I. intrans. To erect a staple; form a monopoly of production and sale; establish a mart for such purpose. Hakluyt's Voyages, I, 437. [Rare.]

II. trans. 1. To furnish or provide with a staple or staples.

Fleeces stapled with such wool
As Lemmster cannot yield more finer stuff.

Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay.

2. To sort or classify according to the length of the fiber: as, to staple wool.

staple-house (stā'pl-hous), n. [MD. stapelhuys; as *staple*² + *house*¹.] A warehouse where commodities chargeable with export duties were stored. See *staple*², n., 1.

In their large staple-house on the Thames . . . were stored the collections of raw produce — wool, tin, and hides the chief of them — which England sent away to foreign countries.

F. Martin, Hist. of Lloyd's, p. 2.

staple-punch (stā'pl-punch), n. A bifurcated punch used for pricking holes in blind-slats and rods for the reception of staples.

stapler (stā'plēr), n. [*staple*² + *-er*¹.] 1†. A merchant of the staple; a monopolist. See *staple*², 3.

You merchants were wont to be merchant staplers.

Middleton, Family of Love, i. 3.

2. One employed in assorting wool according to its staple.

Mr. Glegg retired from active business as a wool-stapler.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 12.

staple-right (stā'pl-rīt), n. A right, possessed by municipalities of the Netherlands, and thence introduced into the New Netherlands (New York), of compelling passing vessels either to stop and offer their merchandise for sale first of all in the market-place of the town, or to pay a duty.

star¹ (stār), n. [(a) < ME. starre, sterre, storre, storre (pl. starrs, sterres, stiores, sterren, steorren), < AS. steorra = OS. sterro = OFries. stera = MD. sterre, starre, D. ster, star = MLG. sterre = OHG. sterro, MHG. sterre, a star; with formative -ra (perhaps orig. -na, -r-na being assimilated to -r-ra, the word being then orig. identical with the next). (b) E. dial. starn, stern, < ME. stern, sterne (perhaps < Scand.) = MD. sterne = MLG. sterne, stern, LG. steern = OHG. sterno, MHG. sternic (also OHG. MHG. stern), G. stern, < Icel. stjarna = Sw. stjerna = Dan. stjerne = Goth. stairno, a star; with a formative -na, -no (seen also in the orig. forms of sun and moon), from a base ster*; cf. L. stella (for sterula*) (> It. stella = Sp. Pg. estrella = OF. estoile, F. étoile), star, = Gr. ἀστὴρ (ἀστρον), a star, ἀστρον (> L. astrum), usually in pl. ἀστροι, the stars (with prothetic a-), = Corn. Bret. steven = W. scren (for stern*) = Skt. tārā (for stārā*), a star, star, pl., the stars, = Zend star, star; root unknown. If, as has been often conjectured, star has a connection with strew, strew, it must be rather as 'strown' or 'sprinkled' over the sky than as 'sprinkler' of light.] 1. Any celestial body which appears as a luminous point. In ordinary modern language star is frequently limited to mean a fixed star (see below). In astrology the stars, especially the planets, are supposed to exercise an influence upon human destinies.

Hise eye twynkled in his hecd arycht,
As doon the sterres in the frosty nyght.

Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 268.

There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars.

The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

You are, thanks to your stars, in mighty credit.

Hence — 2. Destiny. [Rare.]

I was not born unto riches, neither is it, I think, my star to be wealthy.

3. Anything which resembles a star.

His charger trampling many a prickly star
Of sprouted thistle on the broken stones.

Specifically — (a) A star-shaped figure made of silver, gold, or both, sometimes set with jewels, worn usually upon the breast as one of the insignia of a higher class of an honorary order. See insignia, and cuts under bath, garter, and Order of St. Michael (under order).

While peers, and dukes, and all their sweeping train,
And garters, stars, and coronets appear.

(b) The asterisk (*). See asterisk. (c) In pyrotechny, a small piece of inflammable composition, which burns high in air with a colored flame, and presents the appearance of a star. (d) A group of cracks or flaws radiating from a center.

Three times slipping from the outer edge,
I bump'd the ice into three several stars.

(e) A spot of white or light color on the forehead of an animal.

Onward, caballito mio,
With the white star in thy forehead!

(f) In zool.: (1) A star-animal; a starfish, or other echinoderm of obviously radiate figure, as a brittle-star, feather-star, lily-star, sand-star, or sun-star. See the compounds. (2) A stellate sponge-spicule; an aster. (g) In a copper-plate or lithographic printing-press, the radial spokes on the roller, which serve as handles. E. II. Knight.

4. Figuratively, a person of brilliant or attractive qualities; one who shines preëminently; specifically, the chief and preëminent actor or actress of a dramatic or operatic company.

Sole star of all that piece and time,
I saw him — in his golden prime.

5. In her., same as estole. — 6. In fort., a small fort having five or more points, or salient and reëntering angles flanking one another. Also called star-fort. — 7. An additional life bought by a player in the game of pool. [Eng.]

Only one star is allowed in a pool; and when there are only two players left in, no star can be purchased.

Encyc. Brit., III, 677.

Aberration of a star. See aberration, 5. — Apparent place of a star. See apparent. — Binary star. See multiple star. — Blazing star. See blazing star and Aletris. — Circumpolar star. See circumpolar. — Complement of a star. See complement. — Diurnal acceleration tion of the fixed stars. See acceleration.—Double star. See multiple star.—Equestrian star. See Hippodestrum.—Evening star. See evening.—Falling star. See falling star.—Fixed star, a self-luminous body at so vast a distance from the earth as to appear a point of light, almost motionless except for the diurnal revolution of the heavens. To the naked eye the brighter stars appear to have radiating lines of light; but these are due to imperfections of vision, and are different for different observers. All the fixed stars twinkle (see twinkling). In a good telescope on a fine night a star shows a minute round disk surrounded by concentric rings; but these phenomena are mere effects of diffraction, and no instrument yet constructed can enable the eye to detect a fixed star's real breadth. The stars differ in brilliancy, and in this respect are said to have different magnitudes (see magnitude, 5). These in many cases are changeable (see variable star). The number of stars in the whole heavens brighter than a given magnitude m may be approximately calculated by the formula $(3.3)^{25-m}$. The stars are very irregularly distributed in the heavens, being greatly concentrated toward the Milky Way. This is particularly true of first-magnitude stars, and again of faint telescopic stars. There are many clusters of stars, among which the Pleiades, the Hyades, Praesepe, Coma Berenices, and the cluster in the sword-handle of Perseus are visible to the naked eye. Other stars are associated in systems of two, three, or more. (See multiple star.) To most eyes the stars appear yellow, but some are relatively pale, others chromatic yellow, and still others ruddy. There are many ruddy stars in the part of the Galaxy near Lyra. L. M. Rutherford of New York first showed that in reference to their spectral lines the fixed stars fall under several distinct types. Type I, according to the usual nomenclature, embraces spectra showing strong hydrogen-lines, all others being very faint. These belong without exception to pale stars, such as Sirius, Vega, Procyon, Altair, Spica, Fomalhaut, Regulus, Castor. Type II embraces spectra showing many strong metallic lines, like the sun. Almost all such stars are chrome, as Arcturus, Capella, Aldebaran, Pollux; but a few are pale, as Deneb and Elwell, and a few ruddy. Type III consists of banded spectra, the bands shading away toward the red. These stars are all ruddy, and probably all variable. They embrace Betelgeuze, Antares, Mira Ceti, Scheat, Menkar, Pishpai, Rasalgethi. Type IV consists of spectra having three broad bands shaded away toward the blue end. These all belong to very ruddy stars, of which none are bright, and none seem to be variable. Type V consists of spectra showing bright lines. Such stars are few; their magnitudes and colors are variable. Upon careful comparison of the spectra of stars with those of the chemical elements they contain, it is found that the lines are shifted a little along the spectrum toward one end or the other, according as the star is receding from or approaching the earth. The apparent places of the fixed stars are affected in recognized ways by diurnal motion, precession, nutation, aberration, and refraction. In addition, each star has a very slow motion of its own, called its proper motion. There are very few cases in which this is so great as to have carried the star over the breadth of the moon's disk since the beginning of the Christian era. Many stars in one neighborhood of the heavens show, in many cases, like proper motions—a phenomenon first remarked by R. A. Proctor, and termed by him star-drift. But the average proper motion of the stars is away from a radiant under the left hand of Hercules, showing that the solar system has a relative motion toward that point. This is sufficient to carry a sixth-magnitude star 4.7 in a century. The parallax (that is to say, the amount by which the angle at the earth between the star and the sun falls short of 90° when the angle at the sun between the star and the earth is equal to 90°) has been measured only for a few stars, and these few have been selected with a view of finding the largest parallaxes. That of a Centauri, which is the largest, is nearly a second of arc. It is so difficult to measure parallax otherwise than relatively, and to free its absolute amount from variations of latitude, diurnal nutation, refraction, etc., that very little can be said to be known of the smaller parallaxes. It appears, however, that small stars have nearly as great parallaxes as bright ones where the proper motions are not large. The various methods of ascertaining the distances of the stars depend upon three independent principles. The first method is from the parallax, by means of which the distance of the star is calculated by trigonometry. The second method depends on the ascertaining of the speed at which the star is really moving by the shifting of the spectral lines, and then observing its angular motion. In the case of a double star, its motion in the line of sight at elongation can be measured with the spectro-scope; and from this, its orbit being known, its rate of motion at conjunction can be deduced. The third method supposes the ratio of the amount of light emitted by the star to that emitted by the sun to be known in some way, whereupon the ratio of apparent light will show the relative distances. All these methods show that even the nearest stars are hundreds of thousands of times as remote as the sun. In order to reach more exact results it may be necessary to combine two methods so as to determine and eliminate the constant of space, or the amount by which the sum of the angles of a triangle of unit area differs from two right angles. For the present, no decisive result has been reached. The distances of stars having been ascertained, the weights of double stars may be deduced from their elongations and periods. These weights seem to be of the same order of magnitude as that of the sun, not enormously greater or smaller.—French stars, three asterisks arranged in this form * * *, used as a mark of division between different articles in print.—Gloaming, golden, informed, lunar, Medicean star. See the adjectives.—Lone Star State, the State of Texas.—Meridian altitude of a star. See altitude.—Morning star, a planet, as Jupiter or Venus, when it rises after midnight. Compare evening star.—Multiple star, a group of two to six fixed stars within a circle of 15" radius; in a few cases, however, stars distant a minute or more from one another are considered to form a double star. Thus, ϵ and δ Lyrae, distant from one another upward of 3', and separable by the naked eye, each of these consisting of two components distant about 33" from one another, with some other stars between them, are sometimes called collectively a multiple star. The multiple stars are distinguished as double (fr. of Gr. $\acute{\alpha}\sigma\tau\eta\rho$ $\delta\iota\pi\lambda\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$, triple, quadruple, quintuple, and sextuple. Many of the double stars are merely the one in range of the other, without having any physical connection, and these are called optical doubles. The components of other double stars evolve the one round the other, apparently under the influence of gravitation, forming systems known as binary stars. The orbits of about forty of these are known. Thus, the two stars of a Centauri, distant from one another by 17.75, revolve in about 50 years. In many cases the two components of a double star have complementary colors.—Nebulous star. See nebula.—North star, the north polar star. See pole star, 1.—Order of the Star of India (in the full style The Most Exalted Order of the Star of India), an order for the British Possessions in India, founded in 1831. The motto, "Heaven's light our guide." The ribbon is light blue with white stripes near the edge.—Periodic star, a variable star of class II, IV, or V.—Polar star. Same as pole star, 1.—Shooting star, a meteor in a state of incandescence seen suddenly darting along some part of the sky. See arbolite, meteor, 2, and meteoric.—Standard stars. See standard.—Star coral, cucumber, cut, route. See coral, cucumber, etc.—Star-jelly, a name for certain gelatinous algae, as Noctua commune; so called originally in the belief that they are the remains of fallen stars.—Star of Bethlehem. (a) A pilgrim's sign having the form of a star, sometimes like a heraldic mullet with six straight rays, sometimes like an estoile with wavy rays. (b) See star of Bethlehem.—Stars and bars, the flag adopted by the Confederate States of America, consisting of two broad bars of red separated by one of white, with a blue union marked with white stars equal in number to the Confederate States.—Stars and stripes, the flag of the United States, consisting of thirteen stripes, equal to the number of the original States, alternately red and white, with a blue union marked with white stars equal to the whole number of States.—Star service. See star route, under route.—Stone mountain star, a name proposed by Mehan for the composite plant Gynandromia Porteri, found only on Stone Mountain in Georgia.—The seven stars. See seven.—The watery star, the moon, as governing the tides. Shak., W. T., i. 2. 1.—To bless one's stars. See bless.—To see stars, to have a sensation as of flashes of light, produced by a sudden jarring of the head, as by a direct blow.—Variable star, a fixed star whose brightness goes through changes. These stars are of five classes. Class I comprises the "new" or temporary stars, about a dozen in number, which have suddenly appeared very bright, in several cases far outshining Sirius, and after a few months have faded almost entirely away. All these stars have appeared upon the borders of the following semicircle of the Milky Way. They show bright lines in their spectra, indicating incandescent hydrogen. Such was the star which appeared 133 B. C. in Scorpio, and led Hipparchus to the study of astronomy, thus inaugurating sound physical science; others appeared in 1572, 1604, and 1866. Class II embraces stars which go through a cycle of changes, more or less regular, in from four to eighteen months, most of them being at least a hundred times as bright at their maxima as at their minima. These stars are for the most part ruddy. Class III embraces irregularly variable stars, without any definite periods, and commonly undergoing very moderate changes. Class IV embraces stars which in a few days, or a month at most, go through changes of one or two magnitudes, sometimes with two maxima and two minima. Class V embraces stars which remain of constant brightness for some time, and then almost suddenly, at regular intervals, are nearly extinguished, afterward as quickly regaining their former brilliancy.

star¹ (stär'is), v.; pret. and pp. starred, ppr. starring. [star¹, n.] I. trans. 1. (a) To set with stars, literally or figuratively. — Budding, blown, or odour-faded blooms, — Which star the winds with points of coloured light. Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, iii. 3. — Fresh green turf, starred with dandelions. B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 231. Hence—(b) To set with small bright bodies, as gems, spangles, or the like. (c) To set with figures of stars forming a sowing or sprinkle. —2. To transform into a star or stars; set in a constellation. [Rare.] Or that starr'd Ethiop queen that strove To set her beauty's praise above The Sea-Nymphs, and their powers offended. Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 19. 3. To affix a star or asterisk to (a written or printed word) for a distinctive purpose, especially, in a list, to distinguish the name of a deceased person. [Colloqu.]—4. To crack so as to produce a group of radiating lines.—To star a glaze, to cut out a pane of glass. Trifts, Glossary, 1798. (Thieves' jargon.) II. intrans. 1. To shine as a star; be brilliant or prominent; shine above others; specifically (theat.), to appear as a star actor. Doggett . . . had been playing for a week (1699) at the above (Lincoln's Inn Fields) theatre for the sum of £30. This is the first instance I know of the starring system. Doran, Annals of the Stage, l. 188. 2. In the game of pool, to buy an additional life or lives. Encyc. Brit., III. 677. [Eng.]—To star it (theat.), to appear as a star, especially in a provincial tour. star² (stär'), n. [Also starr; Heb. (Chal.) shetar, shetar, a writing, deed, or contract. shetar, cut in, grave, write.] An ancient name for all deeds, releases, or obligations of the Jews, and also for a schedule or inventory. See star-chamber. Also spelled starr. star-animal (stär'an'i-mäl), n. A radiate, especially a starfish.

star-anise (stär'an'is), n. 1. The aromatic fruit of a Chinese shrub or small tree long supposed to be the Illicium anisatum of Linnaeus, but recently determined to be a distinct species, I. verum (named by J. D. Hooker). The fruit is a stellate capsule of commonly eight carpels, each of which contains a seed, of a volatile oil with the odor and flavor of aniseed, or rather of fennel. Star-anise is used in China as a condiment and spice, and in continental Europe to flavor liquors. Also Chinese anise. 2. The tree which yields star-anise.—Star-anise oil, the aromatic essential oil of star-anise seed. The commercial anise-oil is chiefly obtained from the star-anise.

Star-apple; Chrysophyllum Cainito. a, the fruit, transverse section.

star-apple (stär'ap'l), n. The fruit of the West Indian Chrysophyllum Cainito, or the tree which produces it. The fruit is edible and pleasant, of the size of an apple, a berry in structure, having ten or eight cells, which, when cut across before maturity, give the figure of a star. Also called cainito.

starbeam (stär'bēm), n. A ray of light emitted by a star. Watts, Two Happy Rivals. [Rare.]

star-bearer (stär'bär'ēr), n. Same as Bethlehemite, 3 (a).

star-blasting (stär'bläs'ting), n. The pernicious influence of the stars. Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 60.

starblind (stär'blind), a. [*ME. starblind, AS. sterblind (= OFries. starblind, starblind, starblind = MD. D. sterblind = MLG. starblind = OHG. starablint, MHG. starblint, G. starblind = *Icel. starblindr (in starblinda, blindness) = Sw. starblind = Dan. starblind, starblind), star (= MD. ster = MLG. star = OHG. stara, MHG. stare, star, G. staur = Sw. sturr = Dan. star), cataract of the eyes, + blind, blind; see stare¹ and blind.] Seeing obscurely, as from cataract; purblind; blinking.

starboard (stär'börd or -bērd), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also starboord, sterboord; ME. sterboorde, sterburde, AS. steorbord (= MD. stierboord, stuyboord, D. stuurboord = MHG. stürbort, G. steurbord = Icel. stjörnborthi = Sw. Dan. styrbord), steór, a rudder, paddle, + bord, side; see steer¹, n., and board, n. Hence (Teut.) OF. estribord, stribord, F. tribord = Sp. estribord, estribor = Pg. estibordo = It. stribordo, starboard.] I. n. Naut., that side of a vessel which is on the right when one faces the bow: opposed to port (larboard). See port¹. He took his voyage directly North along the coast, hailing upon his starboard always the desert land, and upon the larboard the maine Ocean. Hakluyt's Voyages, l. 4.

II. a. Naut., pertaining to the right-hand side, or being or lying on the right side, of a vessel.

starboard (stär'börd or -bērd), v. t. [starboard, n.] To turn or put to the right or starboard side of a vessel: as, to starboard the helm (when it is desired to have the vessel's head go to port).

starboard (stär'börd or -bērd), adv. [starboard, a.] Toward the right-hand or starboard side. Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Trophies.

starbowliness (stär'bō linz), n. pl. Naut., the men of the starboard watch.

starbright (stär'brīt), a. Brilliant; bright as a star. Emerson, The Day's Ration.

star-bush (stär'būsh), n. A middle-sized South African evergreen, Grewia occidentalis.

star-buzzard (stär'buz'jurd), n. An American buteonine hawk of the genus Asturina, having a system of coloration similar to that of the goshawks or star-hawks, but the form and proportions of the buzzards. The star-buzzards are a small group of handsome hawks peculiar to America. The gray star-buzzard, Asturina pinnata, is found in the United States.

Gray Star-buzzard (Asturina pinnata).

star-capsicum (stär'kap'si-kum), n. See Solanum.

star-catalogue (stär'kat'g-lag), n. An extended list of fixed stars, as complete as possible within specified limits of magnitude, place, etc., with their places and magnitudes.

starch¹ (stäre'h), a. [< ME. starche*, stereh, assimilated form of stark, sterk, strong, stiff: see *stark*¹.] 1. Strong; hard; tough.

Nis non so strong, ne stereh, ne kene,
That mal ago deathes wither blench.
MS. Cott. Calig., A. ix. f. 243. (Halliwell.)

2. Rigid; hence, precise.

When tall Susannah, maiden starch, stidk'd in.
Crabbe, Works, IV. 85.

starch² (stäre'h), n. [< ME. starche (= MHG. sterke, G. stärke), starch; so called from its use in stiffening; < *starch*¹, a., stiff: see *starch*¹, a.]

1. A proximate principle of plants, having the formula C₆H₁₀O₅, or a multiple of that formula. It is a white opaque glistening powder, odorless, tasteless, and insoluble in cold water, alcohol, or ether. Aqueous solutions containing free iodine impart to starch an intense and very characteristic blue color. It is not crystalline, but occurs naturally in fine granules, which are always made up of fine concentric layers. Whether the grains contain a small quantity of another chemical body, allied to but not identical with starch, called starch cellulose or farinose, is a disputed question. When heated with water to 60°-70° C., starch swells up and forms a paste or jelly. When heated in the dry state to 150°-200° C., it is converted into dextrine, a soluble gum-like body much used as a cheap substitute for gum arabic. Heated with dilute mineral acids, or digested with saliva, pancreatic juice, diastase, or certain other enzymes, starch dissolves, and is resolved into a number of products, which are chiefly dextrine, maltose, and dextrose—the last two being fermentable sugars. The malting of barley by brewers effects this change in the starch of the grain, and so prepares it for vinous fermentation. Starch is widely distributed, being formed in all vegetable cells containing chlorophyll-grains under the action of sunlight, and deposited in all parts of the plant which serve as a reserve store of plant-food. Hence grains and seeds contain an abundance of it, also numerous tubers and rhizomes, as the potato and the arrowroot, and the stem and pith of many plants, as the sago-plant. The chief commercial sources of supply are wheat, corn, and potatoes. From these it is manufactured on an extensive scale, being used in the arts, for laundry purposes, sizing, finishing calicos, thickening colors and mordants in calico-printing, and for other purposes. Starch forms the greatest part of all farinaceous substances, particularly of wheat-flour.

Cells of Potato (Solanum tuberosum) filled with starch-granules; a, granules; b, granules (All greatly magnified.)

2. A preparation of commercial starch with boiling (or less frequently cold) water, used in the laundry or factory for stiffening linen or cotton fabrics before ironing. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries the starch used for ruffs, cuffs, etc., was frequently colored, yellow being at one time extremely fashionable. Blue starch was affected by the Puritans.

A certain kind of liquid matter which they call starch, wherein the devil hath willed them to wash and dive their ruffs, which, when they be dry, will then stand stiffe and inflexible about their necks. Stubbes, Anat. of Abuses.

3. A stiff, formal manner; starchedness. [Colloq.]

This professor is to give the society their stiffening, and infuse into their manners that beautiful political starch which may qualify them for levees, conferences, visits. Addison, Spectator, No. 305.

The free-born Westerner thinks the blamed Yankee puts on a yard too much style—the Boys don't approve of style—and suavely proposes to take the starch out of him. Great American Language, Cornhill Mag., Oct., 1888, p. 375.

Animal starch. Same as glycogen. 1.—Glycerite of starch, one part of starch and nine of glycerin, triturated into a smooth mixture.—Poland starch, blue starch.—Starch bandage, a bandage stiffened, after application, with starch.—Starch bath, a hot-water bath containing starch, used in eczema.

starch² (stäre'h), v. t. [< *starch*², n.] To stiffen with starch.

She made her wash, she made her starch.
Queen Eleanor's Fall (Child's Ballads, VII. 296).

star-chamber (stär'chäm'ber), n. [Early mod. E. stare-chamber (poetically chamber of starres (Skelton), late AF. chambre des estoilles), < late ME. stere-chambre (Rolls of Parliament, 1450-1460, cited by Oliphant, in "New English," I. 293), also sterred chamber, i. e. 'starred chamber' (ML. camera stellata); so called because the roof was orig. ornamented with stars, or for some other reason not now definitely known (see the quot. from Minshew); < *star*¹ + chamber. The statement, made doubtfully by Blackstone and more confidently by other writers (as by J. R. Green, "Short Hist. of the Eng. People," p. 115), that the chamber was so called because it was made the depository of Jewish bonds called stars or starrs (< Heb. shetar) rests on no ME. evidence, and is inconsistent with the ME. and ML. forms of the name; it is appar. due to the tendency of some writers to reject etymologies that are obvious, on the unacknowledged ground that being obvious they must be "popular" and therefore erroneous.] 1. [cap.] In Eng. hist., a court of civil and criminal jurisdiction at Westminster, constituted in view of offenses and controversies most frequent at the royal court or affecting the interests of the crown, such as maintenance, fraud, libel, conspiracy, riots resulting from faction or oppression, but freely taking jurisdiction of other crimes and misdemeanors also, and administering justice by arbitrary authority instead of according to the common law. Such a jurisdiction was exercised at least as early as the reign of Henry VI., the tribunal then consisting of the Privy Council. A statute of 3 Henry VII. authorized a committee of the council to exercise such a jurisdiction, and this tribunal grew in power (although successive statutes from the time of Edward IV. were enacted to restrain it) until it fell into disuse in the latter part of the reign of Henry VIII. In 31 Henry VIII., c. 8, a statute declared that the king's proclamation should have the force of law, and that offenders might be punished by the ordinary members of the council sitting with certain bishops and judges "in the Star Chamber at Westminster, or elsewhere." In 1640 the court of Star Chamber was abolished by an act of 16 Charles I., c. 10, reciting that "the reasons and motives inducing the erection and continuance of that court [of Star Chamber] do now cease." As early as the reign of Edward III. a hall in the palace at Westminster, known as the "Chambre des Estoyer" (or "Etoilez"), was occupied by the king's council; and about the reign of Henry VII. appear records of "the Lords sitting in the Star Chamber," or "the Council in the Star Chamber," from which time it seems to have been regarded as the court of the star chamber. There is a difference of opinion whether the tribunal sitting under the act of 3 Henry VII. should be deemed the same court or not.

Starre-chamber, Camera stellata, is a Chamber at the one end of Westminster Hall, so called, as Sir Thomas Smith conjectureth, lib. 2. cap. 4, either because it is so full of windows, or because at the first all the roof thereof was decked with Images of gilded starres. The latter reason is the likelier, because Anno 25. Hen. 8. cap. 1. it is written the sterred chamber. Now it hath the sigae of a Starre ouer the doore, as you one way enter therein. Minshew (1617).

2. Any tribunal or committee which proceeds by secret, arbitrary, or unfair methods: also used attributively: as, star-chamber proceedings; star-chamber methods.

starch-cellulose (stäre'h'sel'ü-lös), n. See *cellulose*².

starch-corn (stäre'h'körn), n. Spelt.

starched (stäre'ched or stäre'ched), p. a. [< *starch*² + -ed.] 1. Stiffened with starch.—2. Stiffened, as with fright; stiff.

Some with black terrors his faint conscience baited,
That wide he star'd, and starched hair did stand.
F. Fletcher, Purple Island, vii.

3. Stiff; precise; formal.

Look with a good starched face, and ruffle your brow like a new boot. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, i. 1.

starchedly (stäre'ched-li), adv. Stiffly; as if starched. Stormouth.

starchedness (stäre'ched-nes), n. The state of being starched; stiffness in manners; formality. L. Addison, West Barbary, p. 105.

starcher (stäre'cher), n. [< *starch*² + -er.] One who starches, or whose occupation it is to starch: as, a clear-starcher. Heywood, Fair Maid of the Exchange.

starch-gum (stäre'h'gum), n. Same as dextrine.

starch-hyacinth (stäre'h'i'a-sinth), n. See hyacinth, 2.

starchiness (stäre'chi-nes), n. The quality of being starchy, or of abounding in starch.

starchly (stäre'h-li), adv. [< *starch*¹ + -ly.] In a starchy manner; with stiffness of manner; formally.

I might . . . talk starchly, and affect ignorance of what you would be at. Swift, To Rev. Dr. Tisdall, April 20, 1704.

starchness (stäre'h-nes), n. Stiffness of manner; preciseness. Imp. Dict.

starchroot (stäre'h'röt), n. See starchwort.

starch-star (stäre'h'stär), n. In Characeae, a bulblet produced by certain species of Chara for propagative purposes: it is an underground node.

starch-sugar (stäre'h'shüg'är), n. Same as dextrine.

starchwoman (stäre'h'wüm'an), n. A woman who sold starch for the stiffening of the great ruffs worn in the sixteenth century. The starch-woman was a favorite go-between in intrigues. See the quotation.

The honest plain-dealing jewel her husband sent out a boy to call her (not bawd by her right name, but starch-woman); into the shop she came, making a low counterfeit cursey, of whom the mistress demanded if the starch were pure gear, and would be stiff in her ruff. Middleton, Father Hubbard's Tales.

starchwort (stäre'h'wört), n. The wake-rob-in, Arum maculatum, whose root yields a starch once used for fine laundry purposes, later prepared as a delicate food under the name of English or Portland arrowroot. This was chiefly produced in the Isle of Portland, where the plant is called starchroot. See euts under Araceae and Arum.

starchy¹ (stäre'chi), a. [< *starch*¹ + -y.] Stiff; precise; formal in manner.

Nothing like these starchy doctors for vanity! . . . He cared much less for her portrait than his own. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xxii.

starchy² (stäre'chi), a. [< *starch*² + -y.] Consisting of starch; resembling starch.

star-clerk (stäre'klärk), n. One learned in the stars; an astronomer. [Rare.]

If, at the least, Star-Clarks be credit worth. Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 3.

star-cluster (stäre'klus'tër), n. A compressed group of six or more fixed stars; but most of the collections so called contain a hundred stars or more.

star-conner (stäre'kon'ër), n. [< *star*¹ + *conner*¹.] A star-gazer. Gascoigne, Fruits of Warre.

starcraft (stäre'kräft), n. Astrology. Tennyson, Lover's Tale, i.; O. Cockayne, Leechdoms, Wort-cunning, and Starcraft of Early England [title]. [Rare.]

star-cross (stäre'krös), a. Same as star-crossed.

Middleton, Family of Love, iv. 4.

star-crossed (stäre'kröst), a. Born under a malignant star; ill-fated. Shak., R. and J., Prolog., l. 6.

star-diamond (stäre'di'a-mönd), n. A diamond that exhibits asterism.

star-drift (stäre'drift), n. A common proper motion of a number of fixed stars in the same part of the heavens. See fixed star, under *star*¹.

star-dust (stäre'düst), n. Same as cosmic dust (which see, under cosmic).

Mud gathers on the floor of these abysses [of the ocean] . . . so slowly that the very star-dust which falls from outer space forms an appreciable part of it. A. Geikie, Geological Sketches, xiii.

stare¹ (stäre), v.; pret. and pp. stared, ppr. staring. [< ME. sturen, < AS. starian = OHG. starön, MHG. staren, G. starren, stare, = Icel. stara, stare (cf. G. stieren = Icel. stira = Sw. stirra = Dan. stirre, stare); connected with starblind, and perhaps with D. staur = G. starr, fixed, rigid (cf. G. stier, storr, stiff, fixed); cf. Gr. σπερδός, fixed, solid, Skt. sthira, fixed, firm.] I. intrans. 1. To gaze steadily with the eyes wide open; fasten an earnest and continued look on some object; gaze, as in admiration, wonder, surprise, stupidity, horror, fright, impudenee, etc.

This monk bigan upon this wyf to stare. Chaucer, Shipman's Tale, l. 124.

Look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret. Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 230.

To blink and stare,
Like wild things of the wood about a fire. Lowell, Agassiz, ii. 1.

2. To stand out stiffly, as hair; be prominent; be stiff; stand on end; bristle.

And her faire locks up stared stiffe on end. Spenser, F. Q., III. xii. 36.

The winter has commenced; . . . even the coats of the hard-worked omnibus horses stare, as the jockeys say. The New Mirror, II. 255 (1843).

3. To shine; glitter; be brilliant.

A [as?] stremande sternez quen strothe men slepe Staren in welkyn in wynter nyzt. Aliterative Poems (ed. Morris), i. 115.

Thei ben y-sewed with whigt silk, . . . Y-stongen with stiches that stareth as siluer. Piers Plouman's Creed (E. E. T. S.), l. 553.

Her fyrie eyes with furious sparkes did stare. Spenser, F. Q., III. vii. 39.

4. To be unduly conspicuous or prominent, as by excess of color or by ugliness. Compare staring, 3.

The homeliness of the sentiment stares through the fantastic enunciation of its fine language, like a clown in one of the new uniforms! Sheridan, The Critic, i. 1.

= Syn. 1. Gaze, Gape, Stare, Gloat. Gaze is the only one of these words that may be used in an elevated sense. Gape represents a fixed and prolonged look, with the mind absorbed in that which is looked at. To gape is in this connection to look with open mouth, and hence with the bumpkin's idle curiosity, listlessness, or ignorant wonder: one may gape at a single thing, or only gape about. Stare expresses the intent look of surprise, of mental weakness, or of insolence: it implies fixeness, whether momentary or continued. Gloat has now almost lost the meaning of looking with the natural eye, and has gone over into the meaning of mental attention; in either sense it means looking with ardor or even rapture, often the delight of possession, as when the miser gloats over his wealth.

II. trans. To affect or influence in some specified way by staring; look earnestly or fixedly at; hence, to look at with either a bold or a vacant expression.

I will stare him out of his wits.

Shak., M. W. of W., ii. 2. 291.

To stare one in the face, figuratively, to be before one's eyes, or undeniably evident to one.

They stare you still in the face.

Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

stare¹ (stär), n. [*stare*², r.] The act of one who stares; a fixed look with eyes wide open, usually suggesting amazement, vacancy, or insolence.

stare² (stär), n. [(a) ME. starc, ster, < AS. star = OIG. stara, MHG. star, G. star, staar, stahr = Icel. starr, stari = Sw. stare = Dan. stær; (b) also AS. stearn = G. dial. starn, staren, storn = L. stornus (> It. storno, storo), dim. stornellus (> OF. estornel, F. estourneau), sturninus (> Sp. estornino = Pg. estorninho), starling; cf. Gr. ψάρι, NGr. ψαρόνι, ψαρόνιον, starling.] A starling.

The stare (var. staring) that the counsel can bewyre.

Chaucer, Parliament of Fowles, l. 348.

And, as a falcon frays

A flock of stares or caddesses, such fear brought his assays Amongst the Trojans and their friends.

Chapman, Iliad, xvi. 541.

Cape stare, cockscomb-stare, silk stare. See Cape starling, etc., under starling.—Ceylonese stare. See Trachycoccus.

stare³ (stär), a. [Cf. D. staar = G. starr, stiff; Eng. stare.] Stiff; weary. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.]

stare⁴ (stär), n. [Formerly also starr; origin obscure.] The marram or matweed, Ammophila arundinacea: same as halm, 3; also applied to species of Carex. [Prov. Eng.]

stareblind, a. See starblind.

staree (stär-é'), n. [*stare*¹ + -ee.] One who is stared at. [Rare.]

I as starer, and she as staree.

Miss Edgeworth, Belinda, iii. (Davies.)

starer (stär'ér), n. [*stare*¹ + -er.] One who stares or gazes. Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 256.

starft. An obsolete preterit of starve.

star-facet (stär'fas'et), n. One of the small triangular facets, eight in number, surrounding the table on a brilliant-cut stone. See brilliant.

starfinch (stär'finch), n. The redstart, Ruticilla phoenicea. See first cut under redstart.

starfish (stär'fish), n. 1. An echinoderm with five or more arms radiating from a central disk: applied to all the members of the Asteroida and Ophiuroidea (see these words). These belong to the phylum Echinodermata, which contains also the sea-urchins, holothurians, crinoids, etc., though these are not usually called starfishes. In some of the asteroids or starfishes proper the disk is enlarged so as to take in nearly or quite the whole length of the rays, so that the resulting figure is a pentagon, or even a circle; but in such cases the stellate structure is evident on examination. Such are known as cushion-stars. In the ophiurians the reverse extreme occurs, the body being reduced to a small circular central disk, with extremely long slender rays, which in some, as the euryaleans, are branched into several thousand ramifications. (See cut under basket-fish.) The commonest type of starfish has five rays; whence such are popularly known as five-fingered jack or five-fingers. (See cuts under Asterias and Echinaster.) Those with more than five rays are often called sun-starfish or sun-stars. (See Heliaster, and cuts under Bristling and Solaster.) The skin of starfishes is tough and leathery, and usually indurated with calcareous plates, tubercles, spines, etc. It is so brittle that starfishes readily break to pieces, sometimes shivering like glass into many fragments. This fragility is at an extreme in the ophiurians, sometimes, on this account, called brittle-stars. (See cut under Astrophyton.) Lost arms are readily replaced by a new growth, if the body of the starfish is not broken. On the under side of the animal's rays may be observed rows of small holes; these are the ambulacra, through which protrude many small soft, fleshy processes—the pedicels, tube-feet, or ambulacral feet—by means of which the creatures crawl about. The ambulacra converge to a central point on the under side, where is the oral opening or mouth. The animals are extremely voracious, and do great damage to oyster-beds. They abound in all seas at various depths, and some of them are familiar objects on every sea-coast. Some of the free crinoids of stellate figure are included under the name starfishes, though they are usually called lily-stars or feather-stars. Encrinurus is fossil starfishes of this kind. (See cuts under Comatulidae and encrinurus.) Very different as are the appearances superficially presented by a starfish, a sea-urchin, a holothurian, and a crinoid, their fundamental unity of structure may be easily shown. If, for instance, a common five-fingered jack should have its arms bent up over its back till they came to a center opposite the mouth, and then soldered together in that position by plates filling the spaces between the arms, it would make the globular or oblate spheroid figure of a sea-urchin. If a starfish should turn over on its back, and have a stem grow from the center, and then have its arms come together like the petals of a lily, it would represent a crinoid. If, again, the starfish should have its arms reduced to mere rudiments, or to tentacular appendages of an elongated leathery body, it would represent a holothurian, sea-slug, or trepan. These are the principal types of echinoderms—in fact less unlike one another than are the several stages they undergo in development. For which see Asteroida, Bipinnaria, Brachiolaria, Echinopodium, and Pluteus.

Brittle Starfish (Luidia clathrata).

2. The butter-fish or dollar-fish.—3. In her., a bearing representing a five-pointed star, the rays surrounded by short waving flames or the like, and having a small circle in the center.—Brittle starfish, a brittle-star; any ophiurian.—Cushion starfish, a cushion-star, as Ctenodiscus crispatus.—Serpent-starfish. Same as serpent-star.—Starfish-flower. See Stapelia.

star-flower (stär'flou'ér), n. A plant with bright stellate flowers. (a) Species of Trientalis, especially T. Americana, the chickweed-wintergreen. (b) Species of the liliaceous genus Brodiaea, formerly classed as Triteleia, of which B. uniflora, a delicately colored free-blooming early flower from Brazil, is the spring star-flower. (c) Species of Sternbergia. (d) Any one of a few other plants.

star-fort (stär'fört), n. Same as *star*¹, 6.

star-fruit (stär'früt), n. A smooth tufted water-plant, Damasonium stellatum, of southern Europe and eastern Asia: so called from the long-pointed radiating carpels. Another name is thrumwort.

star-gage (stär'gäj), n. See under *gage*².

star-gaze (stär'gäz), v. i. To gaze at the stars; especially, to make astronomical or astrological observations: used chiefly in the present participle.

Struck dead with ladies' eyes!—I could star-gaze
For ever thus. Shirley, Maid's Revenge, i. 2.

star-gazer (stär'gäz'ér), n. 1. One who gazes at the stars; especially, an astrologer, or, humorously, an astronomer.

Let now the astrologers, the stargazers, the monthly prognosticators, stand up, and save thee from these things that shall come upon thee. Isa. xlvii. 13.

2. A book-name of fishes of the family Uranoscopidae: so called from the vertical eyes. The name originally designated Uranoscopus curiopeus. Astroscopus guttatus is a common star-gazer of the United States.

Naked Star-gazer (Astroscopus guttatus).

star-gazing (stär'gä'zing), a. Given to the observation and study of the stars.

star-gazing (stär'gä'zing), n. Attentive observation and study of the stars; astrology or astronomy. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 63.

star-gooseberry (stär'gös'ber-i), n. The fruit of a moderate-sized tree, Phyllanthus (Cicca) distichus, native in Java and Madagascar, and cultivated throughout India. It is a globose drupe, three- to five-lobed, acid, and eaten raw, cooked, or pickled.

star-grass (stär'gräs), n. A name of various grass-like plants with starry flowers, or other radiate feature. Such are species of Aetris, Hypoxis, and Rhynchospora; also Callitriche, more often water-starwort, so called from its stellate tufts of leaves. See the genus names, and cut under Hypoxis.

star-hawk (stär'häk), n. A goshawk; a hawk of the genus Astur: so called from the stellate markings of the adult birds. See goshawk, and cut under Astur.

star-head (stär'hed), n. A plant of the genus Scabiosa, section Asteroccephalus.

star-hyacinth (stär'hi'g-sinth), n. A species of squill, Scilla amana, a very early garden-flower with indigo-blue petals and a conspicuous yellowish-green ovary.

stariert, n. [ME., appar. for starricr*, irreg. < starr, sterre, a star.] An astronomer.

Without any manner of nicite of stariertes imagination.
Testament of Love, iii.

stariik (stär'ik), n. [Russ. stariik, the fulmar, lit. 'an old man': so called from its gray head.] An auklet or murrelet; one of several small birds of the family Alcidae, inhabiting the North Pacific. The name was originally applied to the ancient auk or murrelet, Synthliboramphus antiquus, and thence extended to various related auklets of the genus Sinarhynchus and others, as the crested stariik, S. cristatellus. See cuts under auklet and Synthliboramphus.

staring (stär'ing), p. a. 1. Standing out prominently and fixedly, or fixed and wide open, as eyes; gazing fixedly or intently; fixed.

He cast on me a staring look, with colour pale as death.
Surrey, Complaint of a Dying Lover.

How gaunt the Creature is—how lean
And sharp his staring bones!

Wordworth, Peter Bell.

2. Bristling, as hair; standing stiffly or on end; harsh or rough, as pelage.—3. Striking the eye too strongly; conspicuous; glaring: gaudy; as, staring colors.

Starynge or schynnyng as gaye thyngs. Rutilans.

Prompt. Parc., p. 472.

The staring red was exchanged for a tone of colouring every way pleasing to the eye.

E. Hall, Travels In N. A., I. 282.

staringly (stär'ing-li), adv. In a staring manner; with fixed look. Imp. Dict.

stark¹ (stärk), a. [ME. stark, starc, sterk, stere, starc, < AS. steare, strong, stiff, = OS. stark = OFries. sterk, sterik = D. sterk = MLG. stark, sterk, LG. sterk = OIG. starc, starch, MHG. starc, G. stark = Icel. sterkr = Sw. stark = Dan. stærk, strong, orig. stiff, rigid; cf. OHG. storcharnēn, become rigid, Icel. storkna = Dan. störkne, coagulate, Goth. ga-staurknan, dry up; Lith. stregiti, become rigid. Hence *stark*¹, *starch*².] 1. Stiff; rigid, as in death.

For tyre doth aryffe and doth drye vp a mannes blode, and doth make sterke the synewes and loynes of man.

Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 244.

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff
Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 3. 42.

2. Stubborn; stiff; severe.

She that helmed was in starke stoures.

Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 380.

He is only debonaire to those
That follow where he leads, but stark as death
To those that cross him. Tennyson, Barold, ii. 2.

3. Stout; stalwart; strong; powerful.

Me caryinge in his claws starke

As lightly as I were a larke.

Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 545.

Stark beer, boy, stout and strong beer!

Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, iii. 1.

King James shall mark

If age has tamed these sinews stark.

Scott, L. of the L., v. 20.

4. Great; long.

Kay smote Sonygrecx so that he fill from his horse that he lay a starke while with-oute sterynge of haude or foote.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 214.

5. Entire; perfect; utter; downright: sheer; pure; mere.

Consider, first, the stark security

The commonwealth is in now.

B. Jonson, Catiline, i. 1.

What e're they may vnto the world profess—

All their best wisdom is starke foolishnesse.

Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 147.

Ha! ha! ha! a silly wise rogue would make one laugh more than a stark fool. Wycherley, Country Wife, ii. 1.

stark¹ (stärk), adv. [ME. stark, used appar. first in stark ded, lit. 'stiff dead,' 'dead and stiff'; being *stark*¹, a., taken in a quasi-adverbial sense, and extended later to a few other adjectives describing a person's condition (rarely in other uses): as, stark blind, stark drunk, stark mad, etc.] Wholly; entirely; absolutely: used with a few particular adjectives, as stark dead, stark blind, stark drunk, stark mad, stark naked, rarely with other adjectives.

With the same cour he smote a-nother that he fill stark deed, and plunged in depe a-mongz hem.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 514.

In the enueing it grew starke calme.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's True Travels, II. 134.

I drank stark drunk, and, waking, found myself

Cloth'd in this farmer's suit, as in the morning.

Tomkiss (?), Albumazar, v. 9.

He was 86 years of age, stark blind, deaf, and memory lost, after having ben a person of admirable parts and learninog. Evelyn, Diary, May, 1704.

I'll never forgive you if you don't come back stark mad with rapture and impatience—if you don't egad, I'll marry the girl myself. Sheridan, The Rivals, iii. 1.

The captain had not a guess of whither we were blown;
he was stark ignorant of his trade.

R. L. Stevenson, Master of Ballantrae, ii.

stark¹ (stärk), v. t. [*stark*¹, a.] To make stark, stiff, or rigid, as in death. Sir H. Taylor, St. Clement's Eve, v. 5.

stark² (stärk), a. [Abbr. of stark-naked.] Naked; bare.

There is a court dress to be instituted (to thin the drawing-rooms), stiff-bodied gowns and bare shoulders. What dreadful discoveries will be made both on fat and lean! I recommend to you the idea of Mrs. C, when half-stark.

Walpole, Letters (1762), II. 346. (Davies.)

The apple and pear were still unclothed and stark.

H. W. Preston, Year in Eden, i.

starken (stär'kn), v. t. [< stark¹ + -en¹.] To make unbending or inflexible; stiffen; make obstinate. Sir H. Taylor, Edwin the Fair, iv. 4.

Starkey's soap. See soap. starkly (stär'li), adv. In a stark manner; stiffly; strongly; rigidly. Shak., M. for M., iv. 2. 70.

stark-naked (stär'k-nā'ked), a. See stark¹, adv., and start-naked.

starkness (stär'k'nes), n. Stiffness; rigidity; strength; grossness.

How should wee have yielded to his heavenly call, had we beene taken, as they were, in the starkness of our ignorance?
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

starless (stär'les), a. [< star¹ + -less.] Having no stars visible, or no starlight: as, a starless night.

starlet (stär'let), n. [< star¹ + -let.] 1. A small star.

Nebulae may be comparatively near, though the starlets of which they are made up appear extremely minute.
H. Spencer.

2. A kind of small starfish.
starlight (stär'lit), n. and a. [< star¹ + light¹.]

1. n. 1. The light proceeding from the stars.

Nor walk by moon
Or glittering starlight without thee sweet.
Milton, P. L., iv. 656.

Hence—2. A faint or feeble light.
Scripture only, and not any star-light of man's reason.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iii. 11.

II. a. Lighted by the stars, or by the stars only.

A starlight evening, and a morning fair.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, i. 548.

starlike (stär'lik), a. [< star¹ + like².] 1. Resembling a star; stellated; radiated like a star: as, starlike flowers.—2. Bright; lustrous; shining; luminous: as, starlike eyes.

starling¹ (stär'ling), n. [< ME. starling, sterling, sterlyng; < stare (< AS. stær), a stare, passing (see star²), + -ing¹.] 1. An oscine passerine bird, of the family Sturnidae and genus Sturnus, as S. vulgaris of Europe. The common starling or stare is one of the best-known of British birds. It is 8½ inches long when adult; black, of metallic luster, iridescent dark-green on some parts, and steel-blue, purplish, or violet on others, and variegated nearly throughout with pale-buff or whitish tips of the feathers. The wings and tail are duller-black, the exposed parts of the feathers frosted or silvered, with velvety-black and buff edgings. The bill is yellowish, and the feet are reddish. Immature, winter, and female birds are less lustrous, and more variegated with the ochery- or tawny-brown, and have the bill dark-colored. Starlings live much about buildings, and nest in holes of walls, cranies of rock, openings in hollow trees, etc. They are sociable and gregarious, sometimes going in large flocks. They are often caged, readily tamed, and may be taught to whistle tunes, and even to articulate words. The name starling is extended to all birds of the family Sturnidae, and some others of the sturnoid series; also, erroneously, to the American birds of the family Icteridae, sometimes known collectively as American starlings. The last belong to a different series, having only nine primaries, etc. The bird with which the name is specially connected in this sense is Agelaius phoeniceus, the common marsh-blackbird, often called red-winged starling. The name of meadow-starling is often applied to Sturnella magna. See also cuts under Agelrinæ and meadow-lark.

Common European Starling (Sturnus vulgaris).

Looking up, I saw . . . a starling hung in a little cage. "I can't get out—I can't get out," said the starling.
Sterne, Sentimental Journey (The Passport).

2. One of a breed of domestic pigeons which in color resemble the starling.—3. Same as rack-trout, 2.—American starlings. See def. 1.—Black starling, a melanistic variety of the common starling.—Cape starling or stare (Latham, 1783), the black and white Indian starling of Edwards (1751), the contra from Bengal of Albin (1740), Sturnopastor contra: so called as erroneously described from the Cape of Good Hope (as l'étourneau du Cap de Bonne Espérance of Brisson, 1760), but found chiefly in India. It is 9 inches long; the ground-color of the plumage is black, much glossed with greenish and bronze tints and varied with white; the bill and a bare space above the eyes are orange.—Chinese starling (Edwards, 1743), the so-called crested grackle (Latham, 1783), Acridotheres cristatellus of central and southern China, and also the Philippine island Luzon (where it is supposed to have been introduced). It is 10½ inches long; the bill is yellow with rose-colored base; the feet and eyes are orange; the plumage is glossy-black with various sheen, and also varied with white; and the head is crested.—Cockseomb-starling or -stare (Latham, 1783), a remarkable African and Arabian starling, Dilophus carunculatus, having in the adult male the head mostly bare, with two erect caruncles or combs on the crown, and a pendent wattle on each side of the face; the plumage is chiefly isabelline gray, with black wings and tail, the former varied with white.—Glossy starlings, various birds, chiefly African, forming a subfamily Lamprolornithinae (or Judithae) of the family

Glossy Starling (Spreo bicolor).

Sturnidae, as of the genera Lamprolornis, Lamprocolius, Spreo (or Notauges). Of the last-named there are several species, as S. bicolor of South Africa and S. pulchra of West Africa. They are mainly of extremely iridescent plumage.—Meadow-starling. See def. 1.—Red-winged starling. See def. 1.—Rose or rose-colored starling, a bird of the genus Pastor, as P. roseus, which used to be called rose or carunculus, rose-colored thrush, etc. See cut under pastor.—Silk starling (Brown, 1776), or stare (Latham, 1783), the Chinese Poliopsis sericeus, 8 inches long, the bill bright-red tipped with white, the feet orange, the eyes black, the plumage ashy gray varied with black, white, green, brown, purplish, etc.—Talking starling, one of several different sturnoid birds of India, etc.; a religious grackle; a. a. mina, Acridotheres, and cut under Eulabes.

starling² (stär'ling), n. [Also sterling; cf. Sw. Dan. stör, a pole, stake, prop; Sw. störa, prop up with sticks or poles, = Dan. stære, put corn on poles to dry.] 1. In hydraul. engine, an inclosure like a coffer-dam, formed of piles driven closely together, before any work or structure as a protection against the wash of the waves. A supplementary structure of the same kind placed before a starling to resist ice is called a fore-starling. See cut under ice-cannon.

2. One of the piles used in forming such a breakwater.

starling³, n. An obsolete form of sterling².

starlit (stär'lit), a. [< star¹ + lit.] Lighted by stars: as, a starlit night.

star-lizard (stär'liz'ärd), n. A lizard of the genus Stellio; a stellion.

See cut under Stellio.

star-map (stär'map), n.

A projection of part or all of the heavens, showing the fixed stars as they appear from the earth.

star-molding (stär'möl'ding), n. In arch., a Norman molding ornamented with rayed or pointed figures representing stars.

starmonger¹ (stär'mung'ger), n. An astrologer: used contemptuously. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iii. 2.

star-mouthed (stär'moutht), a. Having a stellate or radiate arrangement of month-parts.—Star-mouthed worms, the Strongylidae.

starn¹ (stärn), n. [Early mod. E. also dial. stern; < ME. stern, sterne = MD. stern = MLG. stern, stern, LG. stern = OHG. sterno, stern, MHG. sterne, G. stern = Goth. stairnō, a star; see star¹.] A star. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Star-molding, Romanesque.—Aunay (Charente), France.

Thar es na corrupcion, but cler ayne
And the planettes and sternes shonand.
Hampole, Prick of Conscience, l. 995.
A royal sterne . . . rose or day
Before vs on the firmament.
York Plays, p. 127.

starn² (stärn), n. [*< ME. stern, < AS. stearn, starn, a stare, starling; see stare².] The starling. [Prov. Eng.]

starn³ (stärn), n. A dialectal form of stern².

Starna (stär'nä), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1838), <It. starna, a kind of partridge.] Same as Perdir.

starnel (stär'nel), n. [Also starnill; < starn² + dim. -el.] The starling. [Prov. Eng.]

star-netting (stär'net'ing), n. A kind of netting used for the filling or background of a design: it produces a pattern of four-pointed stars connected by their points.

Starnonadinæ (stär-nō-nä-dī'nē), n. pl. [NL. (Cuvier, 1884), < Starnonax (-ad-) + -inæ.] A subfamily of Columbidae, represented by the genus Starnonax, grading toward gallinaceous birds in structure, habits, and general appearance; the quail-doves. The feet are large and stout, with short and not completely insistent hallux; the tarsi are long, entirely naked, and reticulated with hexagonal scales. There are ceca, but no oil-gland nor amibiens, the reverse of the case of Zenaidinæ, the group of ground-doves with which the genus Starnonax has usually been associated.

Starnonas (stär-nē'nas), n. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1838), < Starna + Gr. oivác, a wild pigeon of the color of ripening grapes, < oivn, the vine, oivés, wine.] A genus of West Indian and Floridian quail-doves, typical of the subfamily Starnonadinæ. The bill is short and stout; the frontal feathers project in a point on the culmen; the wings are short, broad, rounded, and vaulted, with reduced first primary; and the tail is short, broad, and nearly even. The only species is S. cyanocephalus, the blue-headed quail-dove, of olivaceous and purplish-red or chocolate shades, the throat black bordered with white, the crown rich-blue, and a white mark along the side of the head, meeting its fellow on the chin. It is about 11 inches long.

starnose (stär'nōz), n. The star-nosed mole, Condylura cristata.

star-nosed (stär'nōzd), a. Having a circlet of fleshy processes radiating from the end of the snout in the form of a star, as some moles: specifically noting Condylura cristata. See cut under Condylura. Also button-nosed.

star-of-Bethlehem (stär'ov-beth'lē-em), n.

1. A plant of the genus Ornithogalum, particularly O. umbellatum: so called from its starlike flowers, which are pure-white within. This species is native from France and the Netherlands to the Caucasus; it is common in gardens and often runs wild, in some parts of America too freely. In Palestine its bulbs are cooked and eaten, and they are thought by some to have been the "dove's dung" of 2 Kings vi. 25. Some other species are desirable hardy garden-bulbs, as O. nutans and O. Narbonense (O. pyramidale), the latter 3 feet high with a pyramidal cluster. O. caudatum, with long leaves drying like tails at the end, and with watery-looking bulbs, is a species from the Cape of Good Hope, sometimes called onion-lily, remarkably tenacious of life except in cold. It has a flower-scape 2 or 3 feet high, and continues blooming a long time.

2. One of a few plants of other genera, as Stellaria Holostea and Hypericum calycinum. [Prov. Eng.] See also Hypoxis and Gagea. [In the name of all these plants there is reference to the star of Mat. ii., which guided the wise men to Bethlehem.]

star-of-Jerusalem¹ (stär'ov-jē-rō'sā-lēm), n.

The goat's-beard, Tragopogon pratensis. Prior ascribes the name to the salsify, T. porrifolius. See cut under salsify.

star-of-night (stär'ov-nit'), n. A large-flowered tree, Clusia rosea, of tropical America. See Clusia. [West Indies.]

star-of-the-earth (stär'ov-thē-ērth'), n. See Plantago.

starost (stär'ost), n. [< Pol. starosta (= Russ. starosta, a bailiff, steward), lit. elder, senior, < stary, old, = Russ. staro, old.] 1. In Poland, a nobleman possessed of a castle or domain called a starosty.—2. In Russia, the head man of a mir or commune.

starosty (stär'os-ti), n.; pl. starosties (-tiz). [< Pol. starostwo (= Russ. starostvo), < starosta, a starost; see starost.] In Poland, a name given to castles and domains conferred on noblemen for life by the crown.

star-pagoda (stär'pa-gō'dä), n. A variety of the pagoda, an Indian gold coin, so called from its being marked with a star.

star-pepper (stär'pēp'ēr), n. See pepper.

star-pile (stär'pil), n. A thermopile whose elements are arranged in the form of a star.

star-pine (stär'pīn), n. Same as cluster-pine (which see, under pine¹).

star-proof (stär'prōf), a. Impervious to the light of the stars. Milton, Arcades, l. 89.

starrt, n. An obsolete spelling of stare⁴.

star-read¹ (stär'rēd), n. [Early mod. E. also star-redc; < star¹ + read¹, n.] Knowledge of the stars; astronomy. [Rare.]

Egyptian wisards old,
Which in Star-read were wont have best insight.
Spenser, F. Q., V., Prol.

starred (stär'd), p. a. [< ME. stered, stirrede (also sterned = D. gestarnd, gesterned = OHG. gestirnot, MHG. gestirnet), starred; as star + -ed.] 1. Studded, decorated, or adorned with stars.—2. Influenced by the stars: usually in composition: as, ill-starred.

My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckly, is . . .
Haled out to murder. Shak., W. T., li. 2. 100.

3. Cracked, with many rays proceeding from a central point: as, a starred pane of glass; a starred mirror.—4. Marked or distinguished with a star or asterisk.—Starred corals, the Caryophyllide.

star-reed (stär'réd), n. [Tr. Sp. bejuco de la estrella.] A plant, Aristolochia fragrantissima, highly esteemed in Peru as a remedy against dysentery, malignant inflammatory fevers, etc. Lindley.

starrify (stär'i-fi), v. i. [< star + -ify.] To mark with a star. Sylvestor, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Handy-Crafts. [Rare.] starriness (stär'i-nes), n. The state of being starry.

star-rowel (stär'rou'el), n. See rowel.
star-ruby (stär'rö'bi), n. A ruby exhibiting asterism, like the more common star-sapphire or asteria.

starry (stär'i), a. [< ME. sterry, sterri; < star + -y.] 1. Abounding with stars; adorned with stars.

But see! where Daphne wond'ring mounts on high,
Above the clouds, above the starry sky!
Pope, Winter, l. 70.

2. Consisting of or proceeding from stars; stellar; stellary: as, starry light; starry flame.

The starry influences. Scott.

3. Shining like stars; resembling stars: as, starry eyes.—4. Stellate or stelliform; radiate; having parts radiately arranged.—5. Pertaining to or in some way associated with the stars.

The starry Galileo, with his woes.
Byron, Child Harold, iv. 54.

Were 't not much trouble to your starry employments,
I a poor mortal would entreat your furtherance
In a terrestrial business. Tonkiss (C), Albumazar, i. 5.

Starry campion, a species of catch-fly, Silene stellata, found in the eastern United States. It has a slender stem 3 feet high, leaves partly in whorls (whence the name), and a loose panicle of white flowers with a bell-shaped calyx and fringed petals.—Starry hummer, a humming-bird of the genus Stellula, as S. calliope.—Starry puff-ball. Same as earth-star.—Starry ray. See ray.

star-sapphire (stär'saf'ir), n. Same as asteriated sapphire (see sapphire) and asteria.

star-saxifrage (stär'sak'si-fräj), n. A small saxifrage, Saxifraga stellaris, found northward in both hemispheres, having white starry flowers.

star-scaled (stär'skæld), a. Having stellate scales, as a fish: as, the star-scaled dolphins, fishes of the family Astrodermidæ.

star-shake (stär'shāk), n. See shake, n., 7.

star-shell (stär'shell'), n. A thin metal case or shell loaded with luminous stars, fired from a gun or a specially constructed apparatus, and designed to burst in the air like a rocket: used in time of war to illuminate the enemy's position.

starshine (stär'shīn), n. The shine or light of stars; starlight. Tennyson, Oriana.

star-shoot, star-shot (stär'shöt, stär'shot), n. A gelatinous substance often found in wet meadows, and formerly supposed to be the extinguished residuum of a shooting-star. It is, however, of vegetable origin, being the common nostoe.

I have seen a good quantity of that jelly that is sometimes found on the ground, and by the vulgar called a star-shoot, as if it remained upon the extinction of a falling star.
Boyle, Works, l. 24.

star-slough (stär'sluf), n. Same as star-shoot.

star-spangled (stär'spang'gld), a. Spotted or spangled with stars: as, the star-spangled banner, the national flag of the United States.

Thou, friendly Night,
That wide o'er Heaven's star-spangled plain Holdest thy awful reign.
Potter, tr. of Æschylus (ed. 1779), ll. 333. (Jodrell.)

The star-spangled banner, O long may it wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!
F. S. Key, The Star-Spangled Banner.

star-spotted (stär'spot'ed), a. Spotted or studded with stars.

star-stone (stär'stōn), n. 1. Same as asteriated sapphire (see sapphire) and asteria.—2. A cut and polished piece of the trunk of a petrified tree-fern. See Psaronius.

start¹ (stärt), v. [E. dial. also stert, slurt; < ME. starren, starren, starren, starren (pret. sterte, sterte, sterte, sterte, sterte, sterte, later start, pp. stert, stirt, y-stert), prob. *< AS. styttran (not found) = MD. D. storten = MLG. storten = OHG. sturzan, MHG. G. stürzen, fall, start, = Sw. storta (Sw. dial. stjërta, run wildly about) = Dan. styrte, east down, ruin, fall dead; root unknown. The explanation given by Skeat, that the word meant orig. 'turn tail,' or 'show the tail,' hence turn over suddenly, < AS. stert, etc., a tail (see *start*²), is untenable. Hence startle.] I. intrans. 1. To move with a sudden involuntary jerk or twitch, as from a shock of surprise, fear, pain, or the like; give sudden involuntary expression to or indication of surprise, pain, fright, or any sudden emotion, by a quick convulsive movement of the body: as, he started at the sight.

The season priketh every gentill herte,
And maketh him out of his slepe to sterte.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 186.

He is now grown wondrous sad, weeps often too,
Talks of his brother to himself, starts strangely.
Fletcher, Mad Lover, v. 2.

With trial fire touch me his finger-end;
. . . but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 90.

2. To make a sudden or unexpected change of place or position; rise abruptly or quickly; spring; leap, dart, or rush with sudden quickness: as, to start aside, backward, forward, out, or up; to start from one's seat.

Up start the pardoner and that anon,
Chaucer, Prolog. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 163.
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres.
Shak., Hamlet, i. 5. 17.

The Captain started up suddenly, his hair standing at an end.
Howell, Letters, l. iv. 28.

3. To set out; begin or enter upon action, course, career, or pursuit, as a journey or a race.

At once they start, advancing in a line.
Dryden, Æneid, v. 183.

All being ready, we started in a cique very early in the morning. R. Curzon, Monast. in the Levant, p. 294.

4. To run; esape; get away.

As three thynghes ther beoth that doth a man to sterte
Out of his owene hous as holy wirt sheweth.
Piers Plowman (C), xx. 297.

When I have them,
I'll place those guards upon them, that they start not.
B. Jonson, Catiline, iv. 6.

5. To lose hold; give way; swerve aside; be dislocated or moved from an intended position or direction; spring: as, the ship's timbers started.

The best bow may start,
And the hand vary.
B. Jonson, New Inn, ii. 2.

6. To fall off or out; loosen and come away, as the baleen of a dead whale through decomposition, or hair from a soured pelt.—To start after, to set out in pursuit of.—To start against, to become engaged in opposition to; oppose.—To start in, to begin. [Colloq., U. S.]—To start out. (a) To set forth, as on a journey or enterprise. (b) To begin; set out: as, he started out to be a lawyer.—To start up. (a) To rise suddenly, as from a seat or couch; come suddenly into notice or importance.

The mind very often sets itself on work in search of some hidden idea, . . . though sometimes too they start up in our minds of their own accord.
Locke, Human Understanding, ll. x. 7.

(b) To begin operation or business: as, the factory will start up to-morrow. [Colloq.]

II. trans. 1. To rouse suddenly into action, motion, or flight, as a beast from its lair, a hare or rabbit from its form, or a bird from its nest; cause to come suddenly into view, action, play, flight, or the like: as, to start game; to start the detectives.

Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cesar.
Shak., J. C., i. 2. 147.

She had aimed . . . at Philip, but had started quite other game.
J. Hawthorne, Dust, p. 168.

2. To originate; begin; set in motion; set going; give the first or a new impulse to: as, to start a fire; to start a newspaper, a school, or a new business; to start a controversy.

One of our society of the Trumpet . . . started last night a notion which I thought had reason in it.
Steele, Tatler, No. 202.

Kindly conversation could not be sustained between us, because whatever topic I started immediately received from her a turn at once coarse and trite, perverse and inebecile.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxvii.

In 1798, Canning and his friends started, as a weekly paper, the "Anti-Jacobin," which had a brilliant career of eight months. H. Morley, English Writers, etc., l. 110.

3. To cause to set out, or to provide the means or take the steps necessary to enable (one) to set out or embark, as on an errand, a journey, enterprise, career, etc.: as, to start one's son in business; to start a party on an expedition.—4. To loosen, or cause to loosen or lose hold; cause to move from its place: as, to start a plank; to start a tooth; to start an anchor.—5. To set flowing, as liquor from a cask: pour out: as, to start wine into another cask.—6. To alarm; disturb suddenly; startle.

You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts you.
Shak., All's Well, v. 3. 232.

The queen, being a little *start*ed hereat, said, "À moi femme et parler ainsi?" "To me a woman and say so?"
Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Life (ed. Howells), p. 162.

To start a butt. See butt.—To start a tack or a sheet, to slack it off a little.—To start a vessel from the stump, to begin to build a vessel; build an entirely new vessel, as distinguished from repairing an old one; hence, to furnish or outfit a vessel completely.

start¹ (stärt), n. [< ME. stert; *< star*¹, v.] 1. A sudden involuntary spring, jerk, or twitch, such as may be caused by sudden surprise, fear, pain, or other emotion.

The fright awaken'd Arcite with a start.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., i. 555.

The exaggerated start it gives us to have an insect unexpectedly pass over our skin or a cat noiselessly come and snuffle about our hand. W. James, Mind, XII. 189.

2. A spring or recoil, as of an elastic body; spring; jerk.

In strings, the more they are wound up and strained, and thereby give a more quick start back, the more treble is the sound.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 179.

3. A sudden burst or gleam; a sally; a flash.

To check the starts and sallies of the soul.
Addison, Cato, i. 4.

A certain gravity . . . much above the little gratification received from starts of humour and fancy.
Steele, Tatler, No. 82.

4. A sudden bound or stroke of action; a brief, impulsive, intermittent, or spasmodic effort or movement; spasm: as, to work by fits and starts.

For she did speak in starts distractedly.
Shak., T. N., ii. 2. 22.

All men have wandering impulses, fits and starts of generosity.
Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 236.

5. A sudden voluntary movement; a dash; a rush; a run.

When I commend you, you hug me for that truth; when I speak your faults, you make a start, and fly the hearing.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, i. 1.

"Shall I go for the police?" inquired Miss Jenny, with a nimble start toward the door.
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, iv. 8.

6. A starting or setting out in some course, action, enterprise, or the like; beginning; outset; departure.

You stand like greyhounds in the slips, Straining upon the start. Shak., Hen. V., iii. 1. 23.

In the progress of social evolution new starts or variations occur.
Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 150.

7. Lead or advantage in starting or setting out, as in a race or contest; advantage in the beginning or first stage of something: as, to have the start in a competition for a prize.—8. Impulse, impetus, or first movement in some direction or course; send-off: as, to get a good start in life.

How much I had to do to calm his race!
Now fear I this will give it start again.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7. 194.

Who can but magnify the endeavours of Aristotle, and the noble start which learning had under him?
Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., ii. 5.

9. A part that has started; a loosened or broken part; a break or opening.

Thereunder a ship's keel, instead of a start, as they call an opening in the copper, I found something sticking in the hull.
St. Nicholas, XVII. 586.

10. Distance.

Being a great start from Athens to England.
Lily, Euphues and his England, p. 223.

At a start, at a bound; in an instant.

At a start he was betwix hem two.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 817.

To get or have the start, to be beforehand (with); gain the lead or advantage; get ahead: generally with of.

It doth amaze me
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the majestic world
And bear the palm alone. Shak., J. C., i. 2. 130.

start² (stärt), n. [Early mod. E. also stert; < ME. start, stert, stirt, steert; < AS. steort = OFries. stert, stirt = MD. steert, D. steart = MLG. Lät. stert, steert, staart, steerd = MHG. G. stertz = Icecl. stertr = Sw. Dan. stjert, tail; root unknown: some derive it from the root of startl, in the sense 'project' or 'turn'; others compare Gr. σάρπηξ, MGr. σάρπη, a point, tine, tag of hair, etc.] 1. A tail; the tail of an animal: thus, redstart is literally redtail.—2. Something resembling a tail; a handle: as, a plow-start (or plow-tail).—3. The sharp point of a young stag's horn. E. Phillips (under broach).—4. In mining, the beam or lever to which the horse is attached in a horse-whim or gin. [North. Eng.]—5. In an overshot water-wheel, one of the partitions which determine the form of the bucket. E. H. Knight.—6. A stalk, as of an apple. Palsgrave.

startail (stär'täl), n. A sailor's name for the tropic-bird. See cut under Phaëthon.

They also call it by the name of star-tail, on account of the long projecting tail feathers.

J. G. Wood, Illust. Nat. Hist., II. 758.

starter (stär'tër), n. [start + -er]. One who or that which starts. (a) One who shrinks from his purpose; one who suddenly brings forward a question or an objection. (b) One who takes to flight or runs away; a runaway.

Nay, nay, you need not bolt and look so fast;
She is no starter.

Heywood, If you Know not Me (Works, ed. Pearson, I. 213).

(c) One who sets out on a journey, a pursuit, a race, or the like.

We are early starters in the dawn, even when we have the luck to have good beds to sleep in.

Scott, Rob Roy, xxxv.

(d) One who or that which sets persons or things in motion, as a person who gives the signal for a race, or for the starting of a coach, car, boat, or other conveyance, or a lever or rod for setting an engine or a machine in motion.

There is one starter, . . . who, either by word or by pistol-report, starts each race.

The Century, XL. 205.

(e) A dog that starts game; a springer; a cocker.—Bung starter. See bung-starter.

startful (stär'tül), a. [start + -ful]. Apt to start; easily startled or frightened; skittish. [Rare.]

Say, virgin, where dost thou delight to dwell?
With maids of honour, startful virgin? tell.

Wolcot (P. Pindar), Ode to Affection.

startfulness (stär'tül-nes), n. The quality or state of being startful, or easily startled. [Rare.]

star-thistle (stär'this'tl), n. A low spreading weed, Centaurea Calcitrapa, with small heads of purple flowers, the involucre braets ending in stiff spines, the leaves also spiny: in one form called mouse-thorn. According to Prior the name (by him applied to C. solstitialis, a more erect plant with yellow flowers, sometimes named yellow star-thistle) arises from the resemblance of the spiny involucre to the weapon called a morning-star. Both of these plants are sparingly naturalized in the United States, the former on the eastern, the latter on the western coast. The name is extended to the genus, of which one species, C. Cyanus, is the blue-bottle or corn-flower (the Kornblume of the Germans, with whom it has patriotic associations), another is the blessed thistle (see thistle), and others are called centaury, knapsweed, and sultan. See these names and Centaurea.

The Upper Part of the Stem with the Heads of Star-thistle (Centaurea Calcitrapa), a, one of the involucre scales.

starthroat (stär'thröt), n. A humming-bird of the genus Helimaster, having the throat spangled with the scales of the gorget, like many other hummers.

starting-bar (stär'ting-bär), n. A hand-lever for moving the valves in starting a steam-engine.

starting-bolt (stär'ting-bölt), n. A rod or bolt used to drive out another; a drift-bolt. E. H. Knight.

starting-engine (stär'ting-en'jin), n. A small low-pressure engine sometimes connected with a large marine engine, and used to start it. Sometimes called starting-steam-cylinder.

starting-hole (stär'ting-höl), n. [Early mod. E. starting-hole; < starting + hole]. A loophole; evasion; subtlety; dodge; refuge.

Some, which seek for starting-holes to maintain their vices, will object. Sir T. Elgot, The Governour, II. 9.

What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?
Shak., I Hen. IV., II. 4. 290.

startingly (stär'ting-li), adv. By fits and starts; impetuously; intemperately. Shak., Othello, III. 4. 79.

starting-place (stär'ting-pläs), n. A place at which a start or beginning is made; a place from which one starts or sets out.

Asham'd, when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my first starting-place.

Sir J. Denham, Old Age, I.

starting-point (stär'ting-pöint), n. The point from which any one or anything starts; point of departure.

starting-post (stär'ting-pöst), n. The point or line, marked out by a post or otherwise, from which competitors start in a race or contest.

starting-valve (stär'ting-valv), n. A small valve sometimes introduced for moving the main valves of a steam-engine in starting it.

starting-wheel (stär'ting-hwél), n. A wheel which actuates the valves that start an engine.

startish (stär'tish), a. [start + -ish]. Apt to start; skittish; shy: said of horses. [Colloq.]

startle (stär'tl), v.; pret. and pp. startled, ppr. startling. [ME. startlen, stertlen, stertyllen; freq. of startl.] I. intrans. 1. To start; manifest fear, alarm, surprise, pain, or similar emotion by a sudden involuntary start.

At first she startles, then she stands amazed;
At last with terror she from thence doth fly.

Sir J. Davies, Immortal of Soul, Int.

She changed colour and startled at everything she heard.

Addison, Spectator, No. 3.

2. To winee; shrink.

Physic, or mathematics, . . .

She will endure, and never startle.

B. Jonson, Alchemist, IV. 1.

3. To move suddenly, as if surprised or frightened.

Sterling from his traunce,

I wil reuenge (quoth she).

Gascogne, Complaint of Phloemene.

If a dead leaf startle behind me,

I think 'tis your garment's hem.

Lowell, The Broken Trust.

4. To take to flight, as in panic; stampede, as cattle.

And the herd starteled, and ran hedling into the see.

Tyndale, Mark v. 13.

5. To take departure; depart; set out. [Obsolete or provincial.]

A gret sterling he mycht haiff seyne

Off schippy. Barbour, Bruce, III. 170.

Or by Madrid he takes the route, . . .

Or down Italian vista startles.

Burns, The Two Dogs.

II. trans. 1. To cause to start; excite by sudden surprise, alarm, apprehension, or other emotion; scare; shock.

I confess I have perused them all, and can discover nothing that may startle a discreet belief.

Sir T. Brocne, Religio Medici, I. 21.

Like the inhabitants of a city who have been just startled by some strange and alarming news.

Scott, Kenilworth, xl.

2. To rouse suddenly; cause to start, as from a place of concealment or from a state of repose or security.

Let me thy vigils keep

'Mongst boughs pavilioned, where the deer's swift leap Startles the wild bee from the foxglove bell.

Keats, Sonnets, IV.

The garrison, startled from sleep, found the enemy already masters of the towers.

Irring, Granada, p. 31.

startle (stär'tl), n. [startle, v.] A sudden movement or shock caused by surprise, alarm, or apprehension of danger; a start.

After having recovered from my first startle, I was very well pleased with the accident.

Spectator.

startler (stär'tlër), n. [startle + -er]. 1. One who or that which starts or is startled. [Rare.]

When, dazzled by the eastern glow,

Such startler cast his glance below,

And saw unmeasured depth around.

Scott, L. of the L., II. 31.

2. That which startles: as, that was a startler. [Colloq.]

startling (stär'tling), p. a. [Ppr. of startle, v.]

1. That startles or that excites sudden surprise, apprehension, fear, or like emotion; that rouses or suddenly and forcibly attracts attention: as, startling news; a startling discovery.

It was startling to hear all at once the sound of voices singing a solemn hymn.

B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 42.

2. Easily startled or alarmed; skittish; shying.

There was also the lord of the white tour, that was a noble knight and an hardy, with vij hundred knyghtes vpon startelinge stedes.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), II. 257.

The Tyranny of Prelates under the name of Bishops have made our eares tender and startling.

Milton, Reformation in Eng., II.

startlingly (stär'tling-li), adv. In a startling manner; surprisingly.

But who could this be, to whom mere human sympathy was so startlingly sweet?

Curtis, Frue and I, p. 155.

startlish (stär'tlish), a. [startle + -ish]. Apt to start; skittish. [Colloq.]

star-trap (stär'trap), n. A trap-door on the stage of a theater for the disappearance of gymnastic characters. It consists of five or more pointed pieces which part when pressure is applied to the center.

start-up (stär'tup), a. and n. [start up: see startl, v.] I. a. Upstart.

Two junior start-up societies. Swift, Tale of a Tub, I.

Whoever weds Isabella, it shall not be Father Falconara's start-up son.

Walpole, Castle of Otranto, IV.

II. n. One who comes suddenly into notice; an upstart.

That young start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow.

Shak., Much Ado, I. 3. 69.

startup (stär'tup), n. [Usually in pl. startups, also sometimes startopes; origin uncertain.] A half-boot or buskin, described in the sixteenth century as laced above the ankle.

Guests [gaiters], startups; high shoes, or gamashes for country folks.

Cotgrave.

Her neat fit startups of green Velvet bee,
Flourish with silver; and beneath the knee,
Moon-like, indented; butt'ned down the side
With Orient Pearls as big as Filberd's pride.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II., The Decay.

A stupid lout . . . in a grey jerkin, with his head bare, his hose about his heels, and huge startups upon his feet.

Scott, Kenilworth, xxiv.

starvation (stär-vä'shön), n. [starve + -ation. The word is noted as one of the first (firtation being another) to be formed directly from a native E. verb with the L. term -ation. It was first used or brought into notice by Henry Dundas, first Viscount Melville (hence called "Starvation Dundas"), in a speech on American affairs, in 1775.] The state of starving or being starved; extreme suffering from cold or hunger; hence, deprivation of any element essential to nutrition or the proper discharge of the bodily functions: often used figuratively of mental or spiritual needs.

Starvation Dundas, whose pious policy suggested that the devil of rebellion could be expelled only by fasting.

Walpole, To Rev. W. Mason, April 25, 1781.

Starvation was an epithet applied to Mr. Dundas, the word being, for the first time, introduced into our language by him, in a speech, in 1775, in an American debate, and thenceforward became a nickname: . . . "I shall not wait for the advent of starvation from Edinburgh to settle my judgment."

Milford, in Walpole's Letters (ed. Cunningham), VIII. 30, note.

Whether an animal be herbivorous or carnivorous, it begins to starve from the moment its vital food-stuffs consist of pure amyloids, or fats, or any mixture of them. It suffers from what may be called nitrogen starvation.

Huxley and Youmans, Physiol., § 170.

starve (stärv), v.; pret. and pp. starved, ppr. starving. [Early mod. E. also sterve; < ME. sterren, steorren (pret. starf, sterf, pp. stareen, storven, i-storve, y-storve), < AS. steorfan (pret. stearf, pl. starfon, pp. storfen), die, = OS. sterhan = OFries. sterva = D. sterren = MLG. sterren, LG. starven, sterren = OHG. sterban, MHG. G. sterben, die; not found in Goth. or Scand., except as in the derived leel, starf, trouble, labor, toil, work, starfa, toil, work, starfi, epilepsy (= AS. steorfa, E. dial. starf, a plague), which indicate that the verb orig. meant 'labor, be in trouble': cf. Gr. οι καμῶντες, the dead, lit. 'those who have labored,' < καμῶντες, labor, toil.] I. intrans. 1. To die; perish.

She starf for wo neigh when she wente.

Chaucer, Troilus, IV. 1419.

He starf in grete age disherited, as the story witnesseth.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), III. 401.

Specifically—2. To perish from lack of food or nourishment; die of hunger; also, to suffer from lack of food; pine with hunger; famish; suffer extreme poverty.

Starves in the midst of nature's bounty eurst,
And in the laden vineyard dies for thirst.

Addison, Letter from Italy.

starve

3. To perish with cold; die from cold or exposure; suffer from cold. [Now chiefly Eng.]

Starving with cold as well as hunger.

Irving, (Imp. Dict.)

4. To suffer for lack of anything that is needed or much desired; suffer mental or spiritual want; pine.

Though our souls doe starve

For want of knowledge, we doe little care.

Times' Whistle (E. T. S.), p. 15.

1. . . . starve for a merry look. Shak., C. of E., ii. l. 88.

II. trans. 1. To cause to perish with hunger; afflict or distress with hunger; famish; hence, to kill, subdue, or bring to terms by withholding food or by the cutting off of supplies: as, to starve a garrison into surrender.

Whilst I have meat and drink, love cannot starve me.

Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, i. 3.

2. To cause to perish with cold; distress or affect severely with cold; benumb utterly; chill. [Now chiefly Eng.]

Alle the mete he says at on here worde,

The potage fyrst with brede y-cornyn,

Couerys hom agayn lest they ben starvyn.

Babes Book (E. T. S.), p. 324.

That kiss is comfortless

As frozen water to a starved swinke.

Shak., Tit. And., iii. l. 252.

From beds of raging fire to starve in ice

Their soft ethereal warmth. Milton, P. L., ii. 600.

What a sad fire we have got, and I dare say you are both starved with cold. Jane Austen, Mansfield Park, xxviii.

3. To cause to perish through lack of any kind; deprive of life, vigor, or force through want; exhaust; stunt.

If the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but, where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

The powers of their minds are starved by disease. Locke.

Starved rat, a pika, Lagomys princeps. See cony, 4, and cut under Lagomys. [Local, U. S.]

starve-acre (stär'v'ä-kër), n. [starve + obj. accr.] One of the crowfoots, Ranunculus arvensis: so called as impoverishing the soil or indicating a poor one. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names. [Prov. Eng.]

starved (stär'vd), p. a. In her., stripped of its leaves; without leaves or blossoms; noting a branch of a tree used as a bearing.

starveling (stär'v'ing), n. and a. [Formerly also starling; < starve + -ling.] I. n. A starving or starved person; an animal or a plant that is made thin or lean and weak through want of nourishment.

Such a meagre troop, such thin-chapp'd starvelings,

Their barking stomachs hardly could refrain

From swallowing up the foe ere they had slain him.

Randolph, Jealous Lovers, iii. 4.

II. a. Starving (from hunger or cold); hungry; lean; pining with want.

Sending hards of souls starveling to Hell, while they feast and riot upon the labours of hireling Curats.

Milton, Apology for Smeectymnuus.

starvent. An obsolete past participle of starve. Daniel (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 587).

starver (stär'ver), n. One who starves or causes starvation. J. S. Mill, On Liberty, iii.

starward (stär'wärd), adv. [star + -ward.] To or toward the stars. Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, ii. 6.

starward (stär'wärd), a. [starward, adv.] Pointing or reaching to the stars. Blackie, Lays of Highlands, etc., p. 92. (Encyc. Dict.) [Rare.]

star-wheel (stär'hwël), n. A spur-wheel the teeth of which are V-shaped, with an angle of 60°. Such wheels are now little used, except

(a) in the winding-mechanism of the cloth-beams in some kinds of looms, where their teeth are engaged by clicks; (b) for some other special purposes, as in modifications of the Geneva movement, etc.; and (c) in clock-motions, the teeth of the star-wheel engaging with a pin on the hour-wheel, by which the star-wheel is intermittently turned along one tooth for every revolution of the hour-wheel: this movement is used in repeating-clocks, and also in registering-mechanism, adding-machines, etc.—Star-wheel and jumper, in horol., an arrangement of a star-wheel in relation with a pin on the minute-wheel,

by which the snail is caused to move in an intermittent manner, or by jumps.

star-worm (stär'wërm), n. A gephyrean worm; any one of the starwort (stär'wërt), n. [star + wort.] 1. Any plant of the genus Stellaria, the species of which have white starry flowers; chickweed.

Gephyrea.

See cut under Stellaria.—2. Any species of the genus Aster, the name alluding to the stellate rays of the heads. Specifically, in England, A. Tripolium, the sea-starwort, a salt-marsh species. The Italian starwort is A. Anellus, of central and southern Europe. 3. The genus Callitriche, more properly water-starwort. Also star-grass.—Drooping starwort, the blazing-star, Chamaelirium Carolinianum.—Mealy starwort, the colic-root, Aletris farinosa. It is tonic, and in larger doses narcotic, emetic, and cathartic.—Yellow starwort, the elecampane.

stasion (sta-sid'i-on), n.; pl. stasidia (-i-ä). [Gr. στάσιον, a stall, dim. of στάσις, a standing-place.] In the Gr. Ch., a stall in a church, as of a patriarch, hegumen, or monk. Originally the stasidia seem to have been places for standing only (whence the name).

stasimon (stas'i-mon), n.; pl. stasima (-mü). [Gr. στάσιμον (see def.), < στάσις, a standing, station.] In anc. Gr. lit., any song of the chorus in a drama after the parodos. The parabasis of a comedy is not, however, called a stasimon. Some authorities limit the use of the term to tragedy. The name is derived not, as stated by scholiasts, from the chorus standing still during a stasimon (which cannot have been the case), but from the fact that it was sung after they had taken their station in the orchestra.

stasimorphy (stā'si-mōr'fī), n. [Gr. στάσις, standing, + μορφή, form.] Deviation of form arising from arrest of growth. Cooker, Manual.

stasis (stā'sis), n. [NL. < Gr. στάσις, a standing, a stoppage, < ἵσταναι, mid. and pass. ἵστανται, stand: see stand.] 1. In pathol., a stopping of the blood in some part of the circulation, as in a part of an inflamed area.—2. Pl. stasisis or stases. In the Gr. Ch., one of the sections (regularly three) of an eathisma, or portion of the psalter. At the end of each stasis Gloria Patri and Aleluia are said. The name probably comes from the pause (στάσις) in the psalmody so made. A stasis usually contains two or three psalms. See cathisma (a).

stassfurtite (stas'fërt-it), n. [Stassfurt (see def.) + -ite.] A massive variety of boracite, found at Stassfurt in Prussia. It resembles in appearance a fine-grained white marble.

stat. An abbreviation of statute or statutes: as, Rev. Stat. (Revised Statutes).

statable (stā'ta-bl), a. [state + -able.] Capable of being stated or expressed.

statal (stā'tal), a. [stat + -al.] Of, pertaining to, or considered in relation to a particular State; state, as distinguished from national. [Rare, U. S.]

stantant (stā'tant), a. [heraldic F. stantant, equiv. to OF. estant, standing, < L. stan(-s)*, pp. of stare, stand: see stand.] In her., standing still with all four feet on the ground.—Stantant affronté. See at gaze (b), under gaze.

Lion stantant guardant.

statarian (stā-tā'ri-an), a. [L. statarianus, stationary, steady (status, standing, + -an).] Steady; well-disciplined. [Rare.]

A detachment of your statarian soldiers.

A. Tucker, Light of Nature, II. ii. 23.

statarianly (stā-tā'ri-an-lī), adv. [statarian + -ly.] In a statarian manner. [Rare.]

My statarianly disciplined battalion.

A. Tucker, Light of Nature, II. ii. 23.

statary (stā'ta-ri), a. [L. statarianus, stationary, steady, < stare, stand.] Stated; fixed; settled. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., v. 23.

state (stāt), n. and a. [ME. stat, stat, state, condition, existence, also estat, < OF. estat, esta, F. état = Sp. estado = It. stato = MD. stael, D. staat = MLG. stāt = G. staat = Sw. Dan. stat, state, the state, < L. status (statu-), manner of standing, attitude, position, carriage, manner, dress, apparel; also a position, place; situation, condition, circumstances, position in society, rank; condition of society, public order, public affairs, the commonwealth, the state, government, constitution, etc.; in ML. in numerous other uses; < stare (pp. status, used only as pp. of the transitive form sistere), stand: see stand. The noun is in part (def. 15) appar. from the verb. Doublet of estate, status.] I. n. 1. Mode or form of existence; position; posture; situation; condition: as, the state of one's health; the state of the roads; a state of uncertainty or of excitement; the present unsatisfactory state of affairs.

Nor shall he smile at thee in secret thought,

Nor laugh with his companions at thy state.

Shak., Lucecra, I. 1066.

O see how fickle is their state

That doe on fates depend!

The Legend of King Arthur (Child's Ballads, I. 54).

Keep the state of the question in your eye. Boyle.

The solitude of such a mind is its state of highest enjoyment.

Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 29.

The present conscious state, when I say "I feel tired," is not the direct state of tire; when I say "I feel angry," it is not the direct state of anger.

W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 190.

2. Political or social position or status; station; standing in the world or the community; rank; condition; quality.

These Italian bookes are made English, to bryng mischief enough openly and boldly to all states, greite and meane, yong and old, every where.

Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 51.

A train which well besem'd his state,

But all unarm'd, around him wait.

Scott, Marmion, iv. 7.

3. A class or order: same as estate. 9.

We hold that God's clergy are a state which hath been, and will be as long as there is a Church upon earth, necessary by the plain word of God himself.

Hooker, Leclcs. Polity, iii. 11.

4. Style of living; mode of life; especially, the dignity and pomp befitting a person of high degree or large wealth.

Do you know, sir,

What state she carries? what great obedience

Waits at her beck continually?

Fletcher, Mad Lover, i. 1.

5. Stateliness; dignity.

The Abbess, seeing strife was vain,

Assumed her wonted state again—

For much of state she had.

Scott, Marmion, v. 31.

6†. A person of high rank; a noble; a personage of distinction.

The twelve Peeres or States of the Kingdome of France. 1660. Hexham.

Quoted in Babes Book (E. T. S.), Index, p. 120.

First you shall see the men in order set,

States and their Pawns.

Middleton, Game at Chess, Prol.

7†. A seat of dignity; a dais; a chair of state, usually on a raised platform, with or without a canopy; also, this canopy itself.

The state . . . was placed in the upper end of the hall.

B. Jonson, Mask of Blackness.

It is your seat; which, with a general suffrage,

Offering Timoleon the state.

As to the supreme magistrat, Sicily tenders,

Massinger, Bondman, i. 3.

The Queene Consort sat under a state on a black foot-cloth, to entertain the circle.

Evelyn, Diary, March 5, 1655.

8†. The crisis, or culminating point, as of a disease; that point in the growth or course of a thing at which decline begins.

Tumours have their several degrees and times; as beginning, augment, state, and declination.

Wiseman, surgery.

9. Continuance of existence; stability.

By a man of understanding and knowledge the state thereof [of a land] shall be prolonged.

Prov. xxviii. 2.

10†. Estate; income; possession.

I judge them, first, to have their states confiscate.

B. Jonson, Catiline, v. 8.

11. The whole people of one body politic; the commonwealth: usually with the definite article; in a particular sense, a civil and self-governing community; a commonwealth.

In Aleppo once,

Where a malignant and a turban'd Turk

Beat a Venetian and traduced the state.

Shak., Othello, v. 2. 354.

A State is a community of persons living within certain limits of territory, under a permanent organization, which aims to secure the prevalence of justice by self-imposed law.

Woolsey, Introd. to Inter. Law, § 36.

12. The power wielded by the government of a country; the civil power, often as contrasted with the ecclesiastical; as, the union of church and state.—13. One of the commonwealths or bodies politic which together make up a federal republic, which stand in certain specified relations with the central or national government, and as regards internal affairs are more or less independent. In this sense the word state is used chiefly with reference to the several States (generally cap.) of the American Union, the United States of America. The relations between the individual states and the national or central government of Mexico, Brazil, and various other republics of the American continent are formed more or less closely on the model of the United States. Current designations or epithets of the States of the American Union are the following: Badger State, Wisconsin; Bay State, Massachusetts; Bayou State, Mississippi; Bear State, Arkansas, California, Kentucky; Big-bend State, Tennessee; Blue-hen State, Delaware; Blue-law State, Connecticut; Buckeye State, Ohio; Bullion State, Missouri; Centennial State, Colorado; Corn-cracker State, Kentucky; Cracker State, Georgia; Creole State, Louisiana; Dark and Bloody Ground, Kentucky; Diamond State, Delaware; Empire State, New York; Empire State of the South, Georgia; Excelsior State, New York; Freestone State, Connecticut; Garden State, Kansas; Golden State, California; Gopher State, Minnesota; Granite State, New Hampshire; Green Mountain State, Vermont; Gulf State, Florida; Hawkeye

State, Iowa; Hoosier State, Indiana; Keystone State, Pennsylvania; Lake State, Michigan; Land of Steady Habits, Connecticut; Little Rhody, Rhode Island; Lone-star State, Texas; Lumber State, Maine; Mother of Presidents, Virginia; Mother of States, Virginia; Mudcat State, Mississippi; New England of the West, Minnesota; Old Colony, Massachusetts; Old Dominion, Virginia; Old-line State, Maryland; Old North State, North Carolina; Palmetto State, South Carolina; Pan-handle State, West Virginia; Pelican State, Louisiana; Peninsula State, Florida; Pine-tree State, Maine; Prairie State, Illinois; Sage-ben State, Nevada; Silver State, Nevada; Squatter State, Kansas; Sucker State, Illinois; Turpentine State, North Carolina; Web-foot State, Oregon; Wolverine State, Michigan; Wooden Nutmeg State, Connecticut.

14. pl. [cap.] The legislative body in the island of Jersey. It consists of the baillif, jurats of the royal court, constables, rectors of the parishes, and fourteen deputies. The lieutenant-governor has the veto power. Guernsey has a similar body, the Deliberative States, and a more popular assembly, the Elective States.

15. A statement; a document containing a statement, or showing the state or condition of something at a given time; an account (or the like) stated.—16. In engraving, an impression taken from an engraved plate in some particular stage of its progress, recognized by certain distinctive marks not seen on previous impressions or on any made subsequently unless coupled with fresh details. There may be seven, eight, or more states from one plate.—17. In bot., a form or phase of a particular plant.

Sticta linita . . . was recognized as occurring in the United States by Delise, . . . and Dr. Nylander (Syn., p. 353) speaks of a state from Arctic America.

Tuckernann, Genera Lichenum, p. 35.

Border State, in U. S. hist., one of those slave States which bordered upon the free States. They were Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri.—Cap of state, in her., a bearing representing the head-dress worn in the middle ages by the lord mayor of London on his installation, like a short cone with a ring, as of fur, around the head.—Chair of state. See chair.—Civil state. See civil.—Cloth of state. See cloth.—Commissioner for the State of, etc. See commissioner.—Confederate States of America, construct state, cotton States. See the qualifying words.—Council of State. See council.—Cretinoid state, myxedema.—Department of State. See department.—Doctrine of States' rights, in U. S. hist., the doctrine that to the separate States of the Union belong all rights and privileges not specially delegated by the constitution to the general government; the doctrine of strict construction of the Constitution. In this form the doctrine has always been and is still held as one of the distinctive principles of the Democratic party. Before the civil war the more radical believers in the doctrine of States' rights held that the separate States possessed all the powers and rights of sovereignty, and that the Union was only a federation from which each of the States had a right to secede.—Ecclesiastical state, free States. See the adjectives.—In a state of nature. See nature.—Intermediate, maritime etate. See the adjectives.—Middle States. See middle.—Military state, that branch of the government of a state or nation by which its military power is exercised, including all who by reason of their service therein are under military authority and regulation.—Purse of state, in her. See purse.—Reason of state. See reason.—Slave State. See slave.—Southern States, the States in the southern part of the United States, generally regarded as the same as the former slave States.—Sovereign state. See sovereign.—State of facts, in law, a technical term sometimes used of a written statement of facts in the nature of or a substitute for pleadings, or evidence, or both.—State of progress. See progress.—State's evidence. See king's evidence, under evidence.—States of the Church, or Papal States, the former temporal dominions of the Pope. They were principally in central Italy, and extended from about Ravenna and Ancona on the Adriatic to the Mediterranean, including Rome. Their origin dates from a grant made by Pepin the Short in the middle of the eighth century. The territory was greatly reduced in 1860, and the remainder was annexed in 1870 to the kingdom of Italy (with a few small exceptions, including the Vatican and its dependencies).—The States. (a) The Netherlands. (b) The United States of America: as, he has sailed from Liverpool for the States. [Great Britain and her colonies.]—To keep state, to assume the pomp, dignity, and reserve of a person of high rank or degree; act or conduct one's self with pompous dignity; hence, to be diligent of access.

Seated in thy silver chair.

State in wonted manner keep.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

To lie in state, to be placed on view in some public place, surrounded with ceremonious pomp and solemnity: said of a dead person. = Syn. 1 and 2. See situation.

II. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the community or body politic; public: as, state affairs; state policy; a state paper.

To send the state prisoners on board of a man of war which lay off Leith. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., V. 31.

2. Used on or intended for occasions of great pomp or ceremony: as, a state carriage.—3. Of or pertaining to one of the commonwealths which make up a federal republic: opposed to national: as, state rights; a state prison; state legislatures.—State banks. See bank. 4.—State carriage. See carriage.—State church. See established church, under church.—State criminal, one who commits an offense against the state, as treason; a political offender.—State domain, gallantry, law. See the nouns.—State lands, lands granted to or owned by a state, for internal improvements, educational purposes, etc.—State paper. (a) A paper prepared under the direction of a state, and relating to its political interests or government. (b) A newspaper selected by or pursuant to law, for the publication of official or legal notices.—State prison. (a) A jail for political offenders only. (b) A prison maintained by a State for the regular confinement of felons under sentence to imprisonment: distinguished from county and city jails, in which are confined misdemeanants, and felons awaiting trial, or awaiting execution of the death penalty, and from reformatories, etc. [U. S.]—State prisoner, sword, etc. See the nouns.

state (stāt), v. t., pret. and pp. stated, pp. stat- ing. [< state, n.] 1. To set; fix; settle; establish; to state a day: chiefly used in the past participle.

And you be stated in a double hope.

B. Jonson, Volpone, iii. 6.

2. To settle as a possession upon; bestow or settle upon.

You boast to me

Of a great revenue, a large substance,

Wherein you would endow and state my daughter.

Middleton and Kioley, Fair Quarrel, i. 1.

3. To express the particulars of; set down in detail or in gross; represent fully in words; make known specifically; explain particularly; narrate; recite: as, to state an opinion; to state the particulars of a case.

I pretended not fully to state, much less demonstrate, the truth contained in the text. Atterbury.

4. In law, to aver or allege. Thus, stating a case to be within the purview of a statute is simply alleging that it is; while showing it to be so consists in a disclosure of the facts which bring it within the statute.—Account stated. See account.—Case stated. See case agreed, under case.—To state it, to keep state. See state, n.

Wolsey began to state it at York as high as ever.

Fuller, Ch. Hist., V. ii. 4. (Davies.)

=Syn. 3. Speak, Tell, etc. (see say), specify, set forth.

state (stāt), a. [Irreg. used for stately.] State- ly. Spenser, Shep. Cal., September.

statecraft (stāt'krāft), n. The art of conducting state affairs; state management; statesmanship.

stated (stāt'ed), p. a. Settled; established; regular; occurring at regular intervals; appointed or given regularly.

It was his manner to use stated hours and places for exercises of devotion. Steele, Englishman, No. 26.

The stated and unquestionable fee of his office. Addison.

Stated clerk, the principal clerk of Presbyterian church courts in the United States, usually associated in the superior courts with an official called a permanent clerk. The stated clerk of the General Assembly is the custodian of all the books, records, and papers of the court, and has charge of the printing and distribution of the minutes and other documents as ordered by the Assembly.

statedly (stāt'ed-ly), adv. At stated or settled times; regularly; at certain intervals; not occasionally. Imp. Dict.

stateful (stāt'fūl), a. [< state + -ful.] Full of state; stately.

A statefull silence in his presence.

Marston and Webster, Malcontent, i. 5.

statehood (stāt'hūd), n. [< state + -hood.] The condition or status of a state.

state-house (stāt'hous), n. The public building in which the legislature of a State holds its sittings; the capitol of a State. [U. S.]

stateless (stāt'les), a. [< state + -less.] Without state or pomp.

stately (stāt'li-ly), adv. In a stately manner. Sir H. Taylor, Philip van Artevelde, I, v. 9. [Rare.]

stateliness (stāt'li-nes), n. The character or quality of being stately; loftiness of mien or manner; majestic appearance; dignity.

stately (stāt'li), a. [*< ME. stately, estathlich = MD. staetlich, D. statelijk = MLG. statelich, statlich = Dan. statelig, stately; appar. confused in MLG., etc., with MHG. statelich, G. statlich, stately, excellent, important, seeming; cf. the adv. ÖHG. statelicho, properly [< stat, opportunity, etc.; akin to E. stead, place; see stead*], MHG. stateliche, statlich, properly, moderately, G. statlich, magnificently, excellently, etc.; as state + -ly.] Grand, lofty, or majestic in proportions, bearing, manner, or the like; dignified; elevated: applied to persons or to things.*

These regions have abundance of high cedars, and other stately trees casting a shade. Raleigh, Hist. World.

The veneration and respect it [the picture of the Duchess of Ormond] fills me with . . . will make those who come to visit me think I am grown on the sudden wonderful stately and reserved.

Swift, To the Duchess of Ormond, Dec. 20, 1712.

=Syn. August, etc. (see majestic), imperial, princely, royal, palatial, pompous, ceremonious, formal.

stately (stāt'li), adv. [< stately, a.] In a stately manner.

Ye that walk

The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep.

Milton, P. L., v. 201.

statement (stāt'mēt), n. [< state + -ment.]

1. The act of stating, reciting, or presenting verbally or on paper.—2. That which is stated: a formal embodiment in language of facts or opinions; a narrative; a recital; the expression of a fact or of an opinion; account; report: as, a verbal statement; a written statement; a bank statement; a doctrinal statement.—Calculus of equivalent statements. See calculus.

state-monger (stāt'mung'gēr), n. One who is versed in politics, or dabbles in stato affairs. Imp. Dict.

stater¹ (stāt'tēr), n. [< state + -er.] One who states.

stater² (stāt'tēr), n. [< L. stater, < Gr. στατήρ, a standard of weight or money, a Persian gold coin, also a silver (or sometimes gold) coin of certain Greek states, < ιστάται, mid. and pass. ιστάσθαι, stand.] A general name for the principal or standard coin of various cities and states of ancient Greece. The common signification is a gold coin equal in weight to two drachmæ of Attic standard, or about 132.6 grains, and in value to twenty drachmæ. There were also in various states staters of Enbolic and Æginetan standards. The oldest staters, those of Lydia, said to have been first coined by Croesus, were struck in the pale gold called electrum. At the period of Greek decline the silver tetradrachm was called stater. This coin is the "piece of money" (equivalent to a Jewish shekel) of Mat. xvii. 27. As a general term for a standard of weight, the name stater was given to the Attic mina and the Sicilian litra.

state-room (stāt'rōm), n. 1. A room or an apartment of state in a palace or great house.—2. In the United States navy, an officer's sleeping-apartment (called cabin in the British navy).—3. A small private sleeping-apartment, generally with accommodation for two persons, on a passenger-steamer. Compare cabin, 3.—4. A similar apartment in a sleeping-car. [U. S.] states-general (stāts'jen'ē-ral), n. pl. The bodies that constitute the legislature of a country, in contradistinction to the assemblies of provinces; specifically [cap.], the name given to the legislative assemblies of France before the revolution of 1789, and to those of the Netherlands.

statesman (stāts'mān), n.; pl. statesmen (-men). [= D. staatsman = G. staatsmann = Sw. statsman = Dan. statsmand; as state's, poss. of state, + man.] 1. A man who is versed in the art of government, and exhibits conspicuous ability and sagacity in the direction and management of public affairs; a politician in the highest sense of the term.

It is a weakness which attends high and low: the statesman who holds the helm, as well as the peasant who holds the plough. South.

The Eastern politicians never do anything without the opinion of the astrologers on the fortunate moment. . . . Statesmen of a more judicious prescience look for the fortunate moment too; but they seek it, not in the conjunctions and oppositions of planets, but in the conjunctions and oppositions of men and things.

Burke, Letter to a Member of the Nat. Assembly, 1791.

2. One who occupies his own estate; a small landholder. [Prov. Eng.]

The old statesmen or peasant proprietors of the valley had for the most part succumbed to various destructive influences, some social, some economical, added to a certain amount of corrosion from within.

Mrs. H. Humphry Ward, Robert Elsmere, I. ii.

=Syn. 1. See politician.

statesmanlike (stāts'mān-lik), a. [< statesman + like.] Having the manner or the wisdom of statesmen; worthy of or befitting a statesman: as, a statesmanlike measure.

statesmanly (stāts'mān-ly), a. Relating to or befitting a statesman; statesmanlike. De Quincey.

statesmanship (stāts'mān-ship), n. [< statesman + -ship.] The qualifications or employments of a statesman; political skill, in the higher sense.

The petty craft so often mistaken for statesmanship by minds grown narrow in habits of intrigue, jobbing, and official etiquette. Macaulay, Mill on Government.

state-socialism (stāt'sō'shal-izm), n. A scheme of government which favors the enlargement of the functions of the state as the best way to introduce the reforms urged by socialists for the amelioration of the poorer classes, as the nationalization of land, state banks where credit shall be given to laboring men, etc.

state-socialist (stāt'sō'shal-ist), n. A believer in the principles of state-socialism; one who favors the introduction of socialistic innovations through the agency of the state.

stateswoman (stāts'wūm'wān), n.; pl. stateswomen (-wūm'wān). [< state's, poss. of state, + woman.] A woman who is versed in or meddles with public affairs, or who gives evidence of political shrewdness or ability. [Rare.]

How she was in debt, and where she meant
To raise fresh sums: she's a great stateswoman!

B. Jonson.

stathe (státh), n. [Also stáith, stáithe; early mod. E. also stayth, steyth; < ME. stathe (AF. stathe), < AS. stæth, later steth, bank, shore, = Icel. stóðh, a harbor, roadstead, port, landing; akin to AS. stede, stead; see stead.] A landing-place; a wharf. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

stathmograph (státh'mō-gráf), n. [< Gr. σταθμῶν, measure, + γράφειν, write.] An instrument for indicating and registering the velocity of railroad-trains: a form of velocimeter. E. H. Knight.

static (stát'ík), a. [< Gr. στατικός, causing to stand, pertaining to standing, < στατός, verbal adj. of στάναι, mid. and pass. ίστασθαι, stand; see stasis, stand.] 1†. Pertaining to weight and the theory of weight.—2. Same as statical.—Static ataxia, inability to stand without falling or excessive swaying, especially with closed eyes, as in tabes.—Static gangrene, gangrene resulting from mechanical obstruction to the return of blood from a part.—Static refraction. See refraction.

statical (stát'í-kál), a. [< static + -al.] 1. Pertaining to bodies at rest or to forces in equilibrium.—2. Acting by mere weight without producing motion: as, statical pressure.—Statical electricity. See electricity.—Statical induction. See induction.—Statical manometer. See manometer.

statically (stát'í-kál-lí), adv. In a statical manner; according to statics.

Statice (stát'í-sē), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), < Gr. στατική, an astringent herb, fem. of στατικός, causing to stand; see static.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Plumbaginaceae, type of the tribe Staticeae. It is characterized by its acaulescent or tufted herbaceous or somewhat shrubby habit, flat alternate leaves, inflorescence commonly cymose and composed of one-sided spikes, stamens but slightly united to the petals, and styles distinct to the angles of the ovary, with capitate, oblong, or linear stigmas. Over 120 species have been described, natives of the sea-shore and of desert sands, mostly of the Old World, and of the northern hemisphere, especially of the Mediterranean region. A smaller number occur in America, South Africa, tropical Asia, and Australia. They are usually perennials; a few are dioecious loosely branched shrubs. They are smooth or covered with scurf or dust. The leaves vary from linear to obovate, and from entire to pinnatifid or dissected; they form a rosette at the root, or are crowded or scattered upon the branches. The short-pedicelled corolla consists of five nearly or quite distinct petals with long claws, and is commonly surrounded by a funnel-shaped calyx which is ten-ribbed below, and scarious, plicate, and colored above, but usually of a different color from the corolla, which is often white with a purple or lavender calyx and purplish-brown pedicel. They are known in general as sea-lavender. The common European S. Limonium is also sometimes called marsh-beet from its purplish root; it is the red behen of the old apothecaries. Its American variety, Caroliniana, the marsh-rosmary of the coast from Newfoundland to Texas, is also known as canker-root, from the use as an astringent of its large bitter fleshy root, which also contains tannic acid (whence its name ink-root). The very large roots of S. latifolia are used for tanning in Russia and Spain, and those of S. mucronata as a nerve in Morocco under the name of sáfrifa. Other species also form valued remedies, as S. brasiliensis, the guaycura of Brazil and southward. Many species are cultivated for their beauty, as S. latifolia, and S. arborescens, a shrub from the Canaries. In Afghanistan, where several species grow in desert regions, they form a source of fuel.

Flowering Plant of Statice Limonium, var. Caroliniana, a, the flower with its bracts.

Staticeæ (stá-tis'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Statice + -æ.] A tribe of plants, of the order Plumbaginaceae, distinguished from the other tribe (Plumbaginéæ) by flowers with a commonly spreading, scarious, and colored calyx-border, stamens united to the petals at the base or higher, and styles distinct to the middle or the base. It includes 5 genera, of which Statice is the type. They are commonly acaulescent plants, very largely maritime, and of the Mediterranean region.

statics (stát'íks), n. [Pl. of static (see -ics). Cf. F. statique, < Gr. στατική, the art of weighing, fem. of στατικός, causing to stand; see static.] That branch of mechanics which treats of the relations of strains and stresses, or of the figures of bodies in equilibrium and of the magnitudes and directions of the pressures.—Chemical, graphical, social statics. See the adjectives.

station (stá'shən), n. [< ME. stacion, < OF. station, stacion, estacion, estaisan, etc., F. station = Sp. estacion = Pg. estação = It. stazione = D. G. Sw. Dan. station, < L. statio(n)-, a standing, place of standing, station, a post, abode, dwelling, position, office, etc., < stare, stand; see state, stand.] 1. A standing still; a state of rest or inactivity. [Obsolete or archaic.] Her motion and her station are as one. Shak., A. and C., iii. 3. 22. Man's life is a progress, and not a station. Emerson, Compensation. 2. Manner of standing; attitude; pose: rare except in the specific uses. An eye like Mars to threaten and command; A station like the herald Mercury, New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4. 58. Specifically—(a) In med., the steadiness (freedom from swaying) with which one stands. (b) The manner of standing or the attitude of live stock, particularly of exhibition game fowls: as, a duckwing game-cock of standard high station. 3. The spot or place where anything habitually stands or exists; particularly, the place to which a person is appointed and which he occupies for the performance of some duty: assigned post: as, a life-boat station; an observing-station; the station of a sentinel; the several stations of the officers and crew of a ship when the fire-signal is sounded. If that service ye now do want, What station will ye be? Blanchefleur and Jellyflower (Child's Ballads, IV. 297). One of our companions took his station as sentinel upon the tomb of the little mosque. O'Donovan, Merv, xx. 4. The place where the police force of any district is assembled when not on duty; a district or branch police office. See police station, under police.—5. The place where the British officers of a district in India, or the officers of a garrison, reside; also, the aggregate of society in such a place: as, to ask the station to dinner. Yule and Burnell, Anglo-Indian Glossary. The little bills done by the rich bunneahs, the small and great pecuniary relations between the station and the bazaar. W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 194. 6. The condition or position of an animal or a plant in its habitat, or its relation to its environment; often used synonymously with habitat (but habitat is simply the place where an animal or plant lives, station the condition under which it lives there). The males and females of the same species of butterfly are known in several cases to inhabit different stations, the former commonly basking in the sunshine, the latter haunting gloomy forests. Darwin, Descent of Man, I. 391. 7. In surr.: (a) The place selected for planting the instrument with which an observation is to be made. (b) A fixed uniform distance (usually the length of a chain of 100 feet, or 66 feet, or half the length of a twenty-meter chain) into which a line of survey is divided. The stations are consecutively numbered.—8. A stock-farm. [Australia].—9. A regular stopping-place. (a) One of the stages or regular stopping-places at which pilgrims to Rome or other holy place were wont to stop and rest, as a church or the tomb of a martyr. (b) One of the places at which ecclesiastical processions pause for the performance of an act of devotion, as a church, the tomb of a martyr, or some similar sacred spot. Hence—(c) The religious procession to and from or the service of devotion at these places. (d) One of the representations of the successive stages of Christ's passion which are often placed round the naves of churches, and by the sides of the way leading to sacred edifices, and which are visited in rotation. (e) In the early church, the place appointed at church for each class of worshippers, more especially for each grade of penitents; hence, the status, condition, or class so indicated. (f) A place where railway-trains regularly stop for the taking on of passengers or freight; hence, the buildings erected at such a place for railway business; a depot. 10. Eccles.: (a) In the early church, an assembly of the faithful in the church, especially for the celebration of the eucharist. (b) The fast and service on Wednesday and Friday (except between Easter and Pentecost), in memory of the council which condemned Christ, and of his passion. These are still maintained by the Greek Church, but the fast of Wednesday in the Western Church has been abrogated. (c) Among Roman Catholics, a church where indulgences are to be obtained on certain days.—11. Situation; position. The head has the most beautiful appearance, as well as the highest station, in a human figure. Addison, Spectator, No. 98. 12. Status; rank; standing; specifically, rank or standing in life: social state or position; condition of life; hence, high rank or standing. They in France of the best rank and station. Shak., Hamlet, i. 3. 73.

station = Sp. estacion = Pg. estação = It. stazione = D. G. Sw. Dan. station, < L. statio(n)-, a standing, place of standing, station, a post, abode, dwelling, position, office, etc., < stare, stand; see state, stand.] 1. A standing still; a state of rest or inactivity. [Obsolete or archaic.] Her motion and her station are as one. Shak., A. and C., iii. 3. 22. Man's life is a progress, and not a station. Emerson, Compensation. 2. Manner of standing; attitude; pose: rare except in the specific uses. An eye like Mars to threaten and command; A station like the herald Mercury, New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 4. 58. Specifically—(a) In med., the steadiness (freedom from swaying) with which one stands. (b) The manner of standing or the attitude of live stock, particularly of exhibition game fowls: as, a duckwing game-cock of standard high station. 3. The spot or place where anything habitually stands or exists; particularly, the place to which a person is appointed and which he occupies for the performance of some duty: assigned post: as, a life-boat station; an observing-station; the station of a sentinel; the several stations of the officers and crew of a ship when the fire-signal is sounded. If that service ye now do want, What station will ye be? Blanchefleur and Jellyflower (Child's Ballads, IV. 297). One of our companions took his station as sentinel upon the tomb of the little mosque. O'Donovan, Merv, xx. 4. The place where the police force of any district is assembled when not on duty; a district or branch police office. See police station, under police.—5. The place where the British officers of a district in India, or the officers of a garrison, reside; also, the aggregate of society in such a place: as, to ask the station to dinner. Yule and Burnell, Anglo-Indian Glossary. The little bills done by the rich bunneahs, the small and great pecuniary relations between the station and the bazaar. W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 194. 6. The condition or position of an animal or a plant in its habitat, or its relation to its environment; often used synonymously with habitat (but habitat is simply the place where an animal or plant lives, station the condition under which it lives there). The males and females of the same species of butterfly are known in several cases to inhabit different stations, the former commonly basking in the sunshine, the latter haunting gloomy forests. Darwin, Descent of Man, I. 391. 7. In surr.: (a) The place selected for planting the instrument with which an observation is to be made. (b) A fixed uniform distance (usually the length of a chain of 100 feet, or 66 feet, or half the length of a twenty-meter chain) into which a line of survey is divided. The stations are consecutively numbered.—8. A stock-farm. [Australia].—9. A regular stopping-place. (a) One of the stages or regular stopping-places at which pilgrims to Rome or other holy place were wont to stop and rest, as a church or the tomb of a martyr. (b) One of the places at which ecclesiastical processions pause for the performance of an act of devotion, as a church, the tomb of a martyr, or some similar sacred spot. Hence—(c) The religious procession to and from or the service of devotion at these places. (d) One of the representations of the successive stages of Christ's passion which are often placed round the naves of churches, and by the sides of the way leading to sacred edifices, and which are visited in rotation. (e) In the early church, the place appointed at church for each class of worshippers, more especially for each grade of penitents; hence, the status, condition, or class so indicated. (f) A place where railway-trains regularly stop for the taking on of passengers or freight; hence, the buildings erected at such a place for railway business; a depot. 10. Eccles.: (a) In the early church, an assembly of the faithful in the church, especially for the celebration of the eucharist. (b) The fast and service on Wednesday and Friday (except between Easter and Pentecost), in memory of the council which condemned Christ, and of his passion. These are still maintained by the Greek Church, but the fast of Wednesday in the Western Church has been abrogated. (c) Among Roman Catholics, a church where indulgences are to be obtained on certain days.—11. Situation; position. The head has the most beautiful appearance, as well as the highest station, in a human figure. Addison, Spectator, No. 98. 12. Status; rank; standing; specifically, rank or standing in life: social state or position; condition of life; hence, high rank or standing. They in France of the best rank and station. Shak., Hamlet, i. 3. 73.

stationer He never courted men in station. Swift, Death of Dr. Swift. Content may dwell in all stations. Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., i. 27. Given as a tonic, but not worthy an official station. Dunglison, Med. Dict. 13. In mining, an enlargement made in a shaft, level, or gangway to receive a pump, bob, tank, or machinery of any kind.—False station, in surr. See false.—Life-saving station, a station on a sea-coast furnished with life-boats and other apparatus for saving life from shipwreck.—Military station, a place where troops are regularly kept in garrison.—Naval station, a safe and commodious shelter or harbor for the warlike or commercial ships of a nation, where there is a dockyard and everything requisite for the repair of ships.—Outside station. See outside.—Syn. 9 (f). See depot.

station (stá'shən), v. t. [< station, n.] To assign a station or position to; as, to station troops on the right or left of an army; to station a sentinel on a rampart; to station one's self at a door. Not less one glance he caught Thro' open doors of Ida station'd there Unshaken, clinging to her purpose. Tennyson, Princess, v.

stational (stá'shən-əl), a. [< L. stationalis, standing still, fixed, < statio(n)-, a standing still, a post; see station.] Of or pertaining to a station. stationariness (stá'shən-ā-ri-nes), n. Stationary character or quality; fixity: as, the stationariness of the barometer; the stationariness of rents. J. S. Mill, On Liberty, iii. stationary (stá'shən-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. stationnaire = Sp. Pg. estacionario = It. stazionario, < L. stationarius, pertaining to a post or station, < statio(n)-, a post, station; see station.] I. a. 1. Having a particular station or place; remaining in a certain place; not movable, or not intended to be moved; not moving, or appearing not to move; technically, without velocity, whether this condition is only instantaneous, or whether the body spoken of remains motionless for an interval of time. A planet is said to be stationary at a turning point of its motion, when its longitude is neither increasing nor diminishing. The sun is said to be stationary when it reaches one of the tropics and begins to turn toward the equinoctial. 2. Remaining in the same condition or state; making no progress; without change; with neither increase nor decrease of symptoms, intensity, etc.: as, a stationary temperature. The ancient philosophy disdained to be useful, and was content to be stationary. Macanlay, Eacon. Stationary air, the amount of air which remains constantly in the lungs in ordinary respiration.—Stationary contact, diseases, engine. See the nouns.—Stationary motion, such a motion of a system that no particle continually departs further and further from its original position, nor does its velocity continually increase or diminish. Clavius.—Stationary point, on a curve, a point where the point generating the curve is stationary and turns back; a cusp; a binode whose two tangents coincide.—Stationary tangent of a curve, a tangent where the moving tangent generating the curve is stationary and turns back; an inflection.—Stationary tangent plane of a surface, a tangent plane which has stationary contact with the surface. II. n.: pl. stationaries (-riz). 1. A person or thing which remains or continues in the same place or condition; specifically, one of a force of permanent or stationary troops. The stationaries are mine already. So are the soldiery all the way up the Nile. Kingsley, Ilypatia, xx. Then they are stationaries in their houses, which be in the middle points of the latitudes, which they call eclipticks. Holland, tr. of Pliny, ii. 16. 2. One who wishes to stay as or where he is; one who opposes or resists progress; an extreme conservatist. Divided between the party of movement and that of resistance—the progressives and the stationaries. Hue, Travels (trans. 1852), II. 129.

station-bill (stá'shən-bíl), n. Naut., a list containing the appointed posts of the ship's company for all evolutions. station-calendar (stá'shən-kál'en-djār), n. On a railroad, a station-indicator. stationer (stá'shən-ēr), n. [Early mod. E. stationer; < ME. stacyouere, < ML. stationarius, stationarius, a resident, resident canon, venter of books, < L. statio(n)-, a station, stall; see station.] 1†. A bookseller. Any scurrile pamphlet is welcome to our mercenary stationers in English. Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 23. Anterior to the invention of printing, there flourished a craft or trade who were denominated stationers; they were scribes and limners, and dealers in manuscript copies, and in parchment and paper, and other literary wares. I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 432.

stationer He never courted men in station. Swift, Death of Dr. Swift. Content may dwell in all stations. Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., i. 27. Given as a tonic, but not worthy an official station. Dunglison, Med. Dict. 13. In mining, an enlargement made in a shaft, level, or gangway to receive a pump, bob, tank, or machinery of any kind.—False station, in surr. See false.—Life-saving station, a station on a sea-coast furnished with life-boats and other apparatus for saving life from shipwreck.—Military station, a place where troops are regularly kept in garrison.—Naval station, a safe and commodious shelter or harbor for the warlike or commercial ships of a nation, where there is a dockyard and everything requisite for the repair of ships.—Outside station. See outside.—Syn. 9 (f). See depot.

station (stá'shən), v. t. [< station, n.] To assign a station or position to; as, to station troops on the right or left of an army; to station a sentinel on a rampart; to station one's self at a door. Not less one glance he caught Thro' open doors of Ida station'd there Unshaken, clinging to her purpose. Tennyson, Princess, v.

stational (stá'shən-əl), a. [< L. stationalis, standing still, fixed, < statio(n)-, a standing still, a post; see station.] Of or pertaining to a station. stationariness (stá'shən-ā-ri-nes), n. Stationary character or quality; fixity: as, the stationariness of the barometer; the stationariness of rents. J. S. Mill, On Liberty, iii. stationary (stá'shən-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. stationnaire = Sp. Pg. estacionario = It. stazionario, < L. stationarius, pertaining to a post or station, < statio(n)-, a post, station; see station.] I. a. 1. Having a particular station or place; remaining in a certain place; not movable, or not intended to be moved; not moving, or appearing not to move; technically, without velocity, whether this condition is only instantaneous, or whether the body spoken of remains motionless for an interval of time. A planet is said to be stationary at a turning point of its motion, when its longitude is neither increasing nor diminishing. The sun is said to be stationary when it reaches one of the tropics and begins to turn toward the equinoctial. 2. Remaining in the same condition or state; making no progress; without change; with neither increase nor decrease of symptoms, intensity, etc.: as, a stationary temperature. The ancient philosophy disdained to be useful, and was content to be stationary. Macanlay, Eacon. Stationary air, the amount of air which remains constantly in the lungs in ordinary respiration.—Stationary contact, diseases, engine. See the nouns.—Stationary motion, such a motion of a system that no particle continually departs further and further from its original position, nor does its velocity continually increase or diminish. Clavius.—Stationary point, on a curve, a point where the point generating the curve is stationary and turns back; a cusp; a binode whose two tangents coincide.—Stationary tangent of a curve, a tangent where the moving tangent generating the curve is stationary and turns back; an inflection.—Stationary tangent plane of a surface, a tangent plane which has stationary contact with the surface. II. n.: pl. stationaries (-riz). 1. A person or thing which remains or continues in the same place or condition; specifically, one of a force of permanent or stationary troops. The stationaries are mine already. So are the soldiery all the way up the Nile. Kingsley, Ilypatia, xx. Then they are stationaries in their houses, which be in the middle points of the latitudes, which they call eclipticks. Holland, tr. of Pliny, ii. 16. 2. One who wishes to stay as or where he is; one who opposes or resists progress; an extreme conservatist. Divided between the party of movement and that of resistance—the progressives and the stationaries. Hue, Travels (trans. 1852), II. 129.

station-bill (stá'shən-bíl), n. Naut., a list containing the appointed posts of the ship's company for all evolutions. station-calendar (stá'shən-kál'en-djār), n. On a railroad, a station-indicator. stationer (stá'shən-ēr), n. [Early mod. E. stationer; < ME. stacyouere, < ML. stationarius, stationarius, a resident, resident canon, venter of books, < L. statio(n)-, a station, stall; see station.] 1†. A bookseller. Any scurrile pamphlet is welcome to our mercenary stationers in English. Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 23. Anterior to the invention of printing, there flourished a craft or trade who were denominated stationers; they were scribes and limners, and dealers in manuscript copies, and in parchment and paper, and other literary wares. I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 432.

station (stá'shən), v. t. [< station, n.] To assign a station or position to; as, to station troops on the right or left of an army; to station a sentinel on a rampart; to station one's self at a door. Not less one glance he caught Thro' open doors of Ida station'd there Unshaken, clinging to her purpose. Tennyson, Princess, v.

stational (stá'shən-əl), a. [< L. stationalis, standing still, fixed, < statio(n)-, a standing still, a post; see station.] Of or pertaining to a station. stationariness (stá'shən-ā-ri-nes), n. Stationary character or quality; fixity: as, the stationariness of the barometer; the stationariness of rents. J. S. Mill, On Liberty, iii. stationary (stá'shən-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. stationnaire = Sp. Pg. estacionario = It. stazionario, < L. stationarius, pertaining to a post or station, < statio(n)-, a post, station; see station.] I. a. 1. Having a particular station or place; remaining in a certain place; not movable, or not intended to be moved; not moving, or appearing not to move; technically, without velocity, whether this condition is only instantaneous, or whether the body spoken of remains motionless for an interval of time. A planet is said to be stationary at a turning point of its motion, when its longitude is neither increasing nor diminishing. The sun is said to be stationary when it reaches one of the tropics and begins to turn toward the equinoctial. 2. Remaining in the same condition or state; making no progress; without change; with neither increase nor decrease of symptoms, intensity, etc.: as, a stationary temperature. The ancient philosophy disdained to be useful, and was content to be stationary. Macanlay, Eacon. Stationary air, the amount of air which remains constantly in the lungs in ordinary respiration.—Stationary contact, diseases, engine. See the nouns.—Stationary motion, such a motion of a system that no particle continually departs further and further from its original position, nor does its velocity continually increase or diminish. Clavius.—Stationary point, on a curve, a point where the point generating the curve is stationary and turns back; a cusp; a binode whose two tangents coincide.—Stationary tangent of a curve, a tangent where the moving tangent generating the curve is stationary and turns back; an inflection.—Stationary tangent plane of a surface, a tangent plane which has stationary contact with the surface. II. n.: pl. stationaries (-riz). 1. A person or thing which remains or continues in the same place or condition; specifically, one of a force of permanent or stationary troops. The stationaries are mine already. So are the soldiery all the way up the Nile. Kingsley, Ilypatia, xx. Then they are stationaries in their houses, which be in the middle points of the latitudes, which they call eclipticks. Holland, tr. of Pliny, ii. 16. 2. One who wishes to stay as or where he is; one who opposes or resists progress; an extreme conservatist. Divided between the party of movement and that of resistance—the progressives and the stationaries. Hue, Travels (trans. 1852), II. 129.

station-bill (stá'shən-bíl), n. Naut., a list containing the appointed posts of the ship's company for all evolutions. station-calendar (stá'shən-kál'en-djār), n. On a railroad, a station-indicator. stationer (stá'shən-ēr), n. [Early mod. E. stationer; < ME. stacyouere, < ML. stationarius, stationarius, a resident, resident canon, venter of books, < L. statio(n)-, a station, stall; see station.] 1†. A bookseller. Any scurrile pamphlet is welcome to our mercenary stationers in English. Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 23. Anterior to the invention of printing, there flourished a craft or trade who were denominated stationers; they were scribes and limners, and dealers in manuscript copies, and in parchment and paper, and other literary wares. I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 432.

station (stá'shən), v. t. [< station, n.] To assign a station or position to; as, to station troops on the right or left of an army; to station a sentinel on a rampart; to station one's self at a door. Not less one glance he caught Thro' open doors of Ida station'd there Unshaken, clinging to her purpose. Tennyson, Princess, v.

stational (stá'shən-əl), a. [< L. stationalis, standing still, fixed, < statio(n)-, a standing still, a post; see station.] Of or pertaining to a station. stationariness (stá'shən-ā-ri-nes), n. Stationary character or quality; fixity: as, the stationariness of the barometer; the stationariness of rents. J. S. Mill, On Liberty, iii. stationary (stá'shən-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. stationnaire = Sp. Pg. estacionario = It. stazionario, < L. stationarius, pertaining to a post or station, < statio(n)-, a post, station; see station.] I. a. 1. Having a particular station or place; remaining in a certain place; not movable, or not intended to be moved; not moving, or appearing not to move; technically, without velocity, whether this condition is only instantaneous, or whether the body spoken of remains motionless for an interval of time. A planet is said to be stationary at a turning point of its motion, when its longitude is neither increasing nor diminishing. The sun is said to be stationary when it reaches one of the tropics and begins to turn toward the equinoctial. 2. Remaining in the same condition or state; making no progress; without change; with neither increase nor decrease of symptoms, intensity, etc.: as, a stationary temperature. The ancient philosophy disdained to be useful, and was content to be stationary. Macanlay, Eacon. Stationary air, the amount of air which remains constantly in the lungs in ordinary respiration.—Stationary contact, diseases, engine. See the nouns.—Stationary motion, such a motion of a system that no particle continually departs further and further from its original position, nor does its velocity continually increase or diminish. Clavius.—Stationary point, on a curve, a point where the point generating the curve is stationary and turns back; a cusp; a binode whose two tangents coincide.—Stationary tangent of a curve, a tangent where the moving tangent generating the curve is stationary and turns back; an inflection.—Stationary tangent plane of a surface, a tangent plane which has stationary contact with the surface. II. n.: pl. stationaries (-riz). 1. A person or thing which remains or continues in the same place or condition; specifically, one of a force of permanent or stationary troops. The stationaries are mine already. So are the soldiery all the way up the Nile. Kingsley, Ilypatia, xx. Then they are stationaries in their houses, which be in the middle points of the latitudes, which they call eclipticks. Holland, tr. of Pliny, ii. 16. 2. One who wishes to stay as or where he is; one who opposes or resists progress; an extreme conservatist. Divided between the party of movement and that of resistance—the progressives and the stationaries. Hue, Travels (trans. 1852), II. 129.

station-bill (stá'shən-bíl), n. Naut., a list containing the appointed posts of the ship's company for all evolutions. station-calendar (stá'shən-kál'en-djār), n. On a railroad, a station-indicator. stationer (stá'shən-ēr), n. [Early mod. E. stationer; < ME. stacyouere, < ML. stationarius, stationarius, a resident, resident canon, venter of books, < L. statio(n)-, a station, stall; see station.] 1†. A bookseller. Any scurrile pamphlet is welcome to our mercenary stationers in English. Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 23. Anterior to the invention of printing, there flourished a craft or trade who were denominated stationers; they were scribes and limners, and dealers in manuscript copies, and in parchment and paper, and other literary wares. I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 432.

station (stá'shən), v. t. [< station, n.] To assign a station or position to; as, to station troops on the right or left of an army; to station a sentinel on a rampart; to station one's self at a door. Not less one glance he caught Thro' open doors of Ida station'd there Unshaken, clinging to her purpose. Tennyson, Princess, v.

stational (stá'shən-əl), a. [< L. stationalis, standing still, fixed, < statio(n)-, a standing still, a post; see station.] Of or pertaining to a station. stationariness (stá'shən-ā-ri-nes), n. Stationary character or quality; fixity: as, the stationariness of the barometer; the stationariness of rents. J. S. Mill, On Liberty, iii. stationary (stá'shən-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. stationnaire = Sp. Pg. estacionario = It. stazionario, < L. stationarius, pertaining to a post or station, < statio(n)-, a post, station; see station.] I. a. 1. Having a particular station or place; remaining in a certain place; not movable, or not intended to be moved; not moving, or appearing not to move; technically, without velocity, whether this condition is only instantaneous, or whether the body spoken of remains motionless for an interval of time. A planet is said to be stationary at a turning point of its motion, when its longitude is neither increasing nor diminishing. The sun is said to be stationary when it reaches one of the tropics and begins to turn toward the equinoctial. 2. Remaining in the same condition or state; making no progress; without change; with neither increase nor decrease of symptoms, intensity, etc.: as, a stationary temperature. The ancient philosophy disdained to be useful, and was content to be stationary. Macanlay, Eacon. Stationary air, the amount of air which remains constantly in the lungs in ordinary respiration.—Stationary contact, diseases, engine. See the nouns.—Stationary motion, such a motion of a system that no particle continually departs further and further from its original position, nor does its velocity continually increase or diminish. Clavius.—Stationary point, on a curve, a point where the point generating the curve is stationary and turns back; a cusp; a binode whose two tangents coincide.—Stationary tangent of a curve, a tangent where the moving tangent generating the curve is stationary and turns back; an inflection.—Stationary tangent plane of a surface, a tangent plane which has stationary contact with the surface. II. n.: pl. stationaries (-riz). 1. A person or thing which remains or continues in the same place or condition; specifically, one of a force of permanent or stationary troops. The stationaries are mine already. So are the soldiery all the way up the Nile. Kingsley, Ilypatia, xx. Then they are stationaries in their houses, which be in the middle points of the latitudes, which they call eclipticks. Holland, tr. of Pliny, ii. 16. 2. One who wishes to stay as or where he is; one who opposes or resists progress; an extreme conservatist. Divided between the party of movement and that of resistance—the progressives and the stationaries. Hue, Travels (trans. 1852), II. 129.

station-bill (stá'shən-bíl), n. Naut., a list containing the appointed posts of the ship's company for all evolutions. station-calendar (stá'shən-kál'en-djār), n. On a railroad, a station-indicator. stationer (stá'shən-ēr), n. [Early mod. E. stationer; < ME. stacyouere, < ML. stationarius, stationarius, a resident, resident canon, venter of books, < L. statio(n)-, a station, stall; see station.] 1†. A bookseller. Any scurrile pamphlet is welcome to our mercenary stationers in English. Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 23. Anterior to the invention of printing, there flourished a craft or trade who were denominated stationers; they were scribes and limners, and dealers in manuscript copies, and in parchment and paper, and other literary wares. I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 432.

2. One who sells the materials used in writing, as paper, pens, pencils, ink, etc.—Stationers' Hall, a building in London belonging to the guild called the "Company of Stationers," in which a book is kept for the registration of copyrights.—Stationers' rule. See rule.—Walking, running, or flying stationer, a hawk-er of ballads, chap-books, pamphlets, and other kinds of cheap popular literature. Compare running patterer, under patterer. Tatler, No. 4.

stationery (stā'shon-ēr-i), n. and a. [cf. stationer + -y (see -ery).] I. n. The articles usually sold by stationers; the various materials employed in writing, such as paper, pens, pencils, and ink.—Stationery office, an office in London which is the medium through which all government offices, both at home and abroad, are supplied with writing-materials. It also contracts for the printing of reports, etc. Imp. Diet.

II. a. Relating to writing, or consisting of writing-materials; as, stationery goods.

station-house (stā'shon-hous), n. 1. A police-station.—2. The building containing the office, waiting-rooms, etc., of a railway-station. The Century, XXXV, 89.

station-indicator (stā'shon-in-'di-kā-tōr), n. On a railway: (a) A bulletin-board at a station on which are exhibited the time of departure of trains and the stations at which they will stop. (b) A device in a car for exhibiting in succession the names of the stations where stops are to be made.

station-master (stā'shon-mās'tēr), n. The official in charge of a station; specifically, the person in charge of a railway-station.

station-meter (stā'shon-mē'tēr), n. A meter of large size used in gas-works to measure the flow of gas. Such meters are made with various attachments, as water-line, pressure, and overflow gages, register-clock, and telltale indicators of the rate of flow. E. H. Knight.

station-pointer (stā'shon-poin'tēr), n. In surv., an instrument for expeditiously laying down on a chart the position of a place from which the angles subtended by three distant objects, whose positions are known, have been measured; a three-armed protractor.

station-pole, station-staff (stā'shon-pōl, -stāf), n. In surv., same as leveling-staff, 1.

statism (stā'tizm), n. [cf. state + -ism.] The art of government; hence, in a depreciative sense, policy. [Rare.]

Hence it is that the enemies of God take occasion to blaspheme, and call our religion statism. South, Sermons, I, iv.

statist (stā'tist), n. [= G. statist = Sw. statist, a statesman, politician, = Sp. estadista, a statesman, politician, also a statistician, = It. statista, a statesman; as state (l. status) + -ist.] 1. A statesman; a politician; one skilled in government. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Next is your statist's face, a serious, solemn, and supercilious face, full of formal and square gravity. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, II, 1.

2. A statistician.

The keen statist reckons by tens and hundreds; the genial man is interested in every slipper that comes into the assembly. Emerson, Success.

statistic (stā-tis'tik), a. and n. [I. a. = F. statistique = Sp. estadístico = Pg. estadístico = It. statistico (cf. G. statistisch = Sw. Dan. statistisk), lit. pertaining to a statist or to matters of the state; as statist + -ic. II. n. = F. statistique = Sp. estadística = Pg. estadística = It. statistica, statistics, = G. statistik, political science, statistics, = Sw. Dan. statistik, statistics; from the adj.] I. a. Statistical.

II. n. 1. Same as statistics.—2. A statistical statement.—3. A statistician.

Henley said you were the best statistic in Europe. Southey, 1804, in Robberd's Menu, of Taylor of Norwich, [I, 508.]

statistical (stā-tis'ti-kal), a. [cf. statistic + -al.] Of or pertaining to statistics; consisting of facts and calculations or such matters: as, statistical tables; statistical information.—Primary statistical number, the number of a class ascertained by direct counting.—Statistical inference. See inference.—Statistical method, a scientific method in which results are deduced from averages as data. Political economy, the kinetic theory of gases, and Darwinian evolutionism pursue statistical methods, which are also now applied to psychology.—Statistical proposition. See proposition.—Statistical ratio, the number of one class of things which are found associated upon the average with each one of another class of things: thus, the number of children per family is a statistical ratio; so is the average duration of life.

statistically (stā-tis'ti-kal-i), adv. In a statistical manner; by the use of statistics; from a statistical point of view.

statistician (stat-is'tish'an), n. [= F. statisticien; as statistic + -ian.] One who is versed in or collects statistics.

statistics (stā-tis'tiks), n. [Pl. of statistic (see -ics).] 1. A systematic collection of numbers relating to the enumeration of great classes, or to ratios of quantities connected with such classes, and ascertained by direct enumeration. Thus, a table of the populations of the different States of the American Union is called a table of statistics; so is a table showing the percentages of farms in different parts of the country that are mortgaged, provided these percentages have been ascertained from direct sampling, and not calculated by dividing the number of mortgaged farms by the total number of farms.

The word statistics, as the name of a peculiar science, was first engrafted into our language by Sir John Sinclair. It comprehends, according to the practice of the German writers, from whom it was adopted, all those topics of inquiry which interest the statesman.

Monthly Rev., 1796, App., p. 553 (N. and Q., 6th ser., XI, [404].)

2. The study of any subject, especially sociology, by means of extensive enumerations; the science of human society, so far as deduced from enumerations.—Bureau of Statistics. See bureau.—Virtual statistics, a collection of statistical ratios relating to the average course of life, including the death-rates at different ages, liability to different diseases, etc.

statistology (stā-tis-tol'ō-jī), n. [Irreg. cf. statist (ics) + Gr. -λογία, cf. λέγω, speak; see -ology.] A discourse or treatise on statistics.

stative (stā'tiv), a. [= OF. statif, cf. L. stativus, standing still, cf. stare, stand; see state.] 1. Pertaining to a fixed camp or military post or quarters.—2. In Heb. gram., indicating a physical state, or mental, intransitive, or reflexive action; said of certain verbs.

statize (stā'tiz), v. i. [cf. state + -ize. cf. statist.] To meddle in state affairs. Davies.

Secular . . . mysteries are for the knowledge of statizing Jesuits. Rev. T. Adams, Works, II, 168.

statlich, a. A Middle English form of stately.

statoblast (stāt'ō-blāst), n. [cf. Gr. στατός, standing, fixed (see static), + βλαστός, a bud, germ.] One of the peculiar internal asexual buds developed in the body-cavity of the fresh-water or phylactolomatous polyzoans, comparable to the gemmules of the fresh-water sponges, and serving for reproduction. These germs of new individuals to be reproduced asexual-ly by internal gemmation are formed in the funiculus or mesentery of the polyzoan; on the death of the parent organism, they are ruptured, and give exit to a young animal essentially like the parent. The fact that statoblasts contain no germinal vesicle, and never exhibit the phenomena of segmentation or yolk-division, is conclusive against their being ova or eggs; and, moreover, an ovary producing ova occurs elsewhere in the same individual that produces statoblasts. Also called winter bud. See cut under Planatella.

statoblastic (stat'ō-blas'tik), a. [cf. statoblast + -ic.] 1. Having the character or nature of a statoblast; of or pertaining to statoblasts; as, statoblastic capsules; statoblastic reproduction.—2. Giving rise to statoblasts; reproduced by means of statoblasts; as, a statoblastic polyzoan.

statocracy (stā-tok'ra-si), n. [cf. state + -ocracy, after aristocracy, etc.] Government or rule by the state alone, uncontrolled by ecclesiastical power.

statoscope (stat'ō-skōp), n. [cf. Gr. στατός, standing, fixed (see static), + σκοπεῖν, view.] A form of aneroid barometer for registering minute variations of atmospheric pressure. It consists of a sensitive metallic diaphragm exposed on the outside to the changes of atmospheric pressure, and connecting on the inside with a closed reservoir of air, of four or five liters capacity, protected from temperature-changes by non-conducting walls filled with felt and wool. Registration is effected by a long index-needle on the cylinder of a chronograph. At the beginning of observation the index is brought to zero of the scale by opening a stop-cock connecting the reservoir with the outside air, and the absolute pressure at the moment is observed with a mercurial barometer. The stop-cock is then closed, and the index-needle shows variations of pressure as small as .01 millimeter of mercury. The total limit of change that can be registered is about 5 millimeters; for pressures beyond this the instrument must be reset.

statosphere (stat'ō-sfēr), n. [cf. Gr. στατός, standing, fixed, + σφαῖρα, a globe.] The globe, chitinous, spiculiferous envelop of the protoplasm of the winter or resting stage of the fresh-water sponges. J. A. Ryder.

statospore (stat'ō-spōr), n. [NL., cf. Gr. στατός, standing, fixed, + σπορά, seed; see sporē.] In bot., a motionless or resting spore; a hypno-spore.

statuaf (stat'ū-āf), n. [cf. L. statua, an image, a statue; see statue.] A statue.

Even at the base of Pompey's statua, Which all the while ran blood, great Caesar fell. Shak., J. C., III, 2, 192.

Behold the Statuas which wise Vulcan plac'd Under the altar of Olympian Jove, And gave to them an artificial life. Beaumont, Masque of Inner Temple and Gray's Inn.

statuary (stat'ū-ri), a. and n. [= F. statuaire = Sp. estaduario = It. statuario, cf. L. statuarius, of or pertaining to statues (statuaria, see ars, the statuary art), cf. statua, a statue; see statue.] I. a. Of or pertaining to a statue or statuary.

What connoisseurs call statuary grace, by which is meant elegance unconnected with motion. Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 2.

Statuary marble, fine-grained white marble, especially sought for monuments, busts, etc.

II. n.; pl. statuaries (-rīz). 1. One who makes statues; a sculptor; specifically, one who makes statues in metal, a bronze-caster, or one who makes copies of statues designed by another artist.

Statuaries could By the foot of Hercules set down punctually His whole dimensions. Massinger, Emperor of the East, II, 1.

Burst the gates, and burn the palaces, break the works of the statuary. Tennyson, Experiments, Boadicea.

2. The art of carving or making statues or figures in the round representing persons, animals, etc.: a main branch of sculpture.

The northern nations . . . were too barbarous to preserve the remains of learning more carefully than they did those of statuary or architecture or civility. Sir W. Temple, Ancient and Modern Learning.

3. Statues collectively.

statue (stat'ū), n. [cf. ME. statue, cf. OF. statue, F. statue = Sp. estatua = It. statua, cf. L. statua, an image set up, a statue, pillar, cf. statuere, set up; see statute.] 1. A figure of a person or an animal, made of some solid substance, as marble, bronze, iron, or wood, or of any substance of solid appearance; a sculptured, cast, or molded figure, properly of some size (as distinguished from a statuette or figurine) and in the round (as distinguished from a relief or an intaglio).

This proude king let make a statue of golde Sixty cubytes long. Chaucer, Monk's Tale, I, 169.

Within the area of the foundation walls, and all round them, were lying heads and bodies of many statues, which had once stood within the temple on bases still in position in three parallel rows. C. T. Newton, Art and Archaeol., p. 306.

2. A picture.

The rede statue of Mars with spere and targe So syneth in his whyte baner large That alle the feeldes glitern up and down. Chaucer, Knight's Tale, I, 117.

Sir John. Your nieces, ere they put to sea, crave humbly, Though absent in their bodies, they may take leave Of their late suitors' statues. Lake. There they hang. Massinger, City Madam, v, 3.

Equestrian statue, a statue in which the figure is represented as seated on horseback.—Plinth of a statue. See plinth.

statue (stat'ū), v. t.; pret. and pp. statued, pp. statuing. [cf. statue, n.] To place as a statue; form a statue of.

The whole man becomes as if statued into stone and earth. Fellham, Resolves, I, 36.

statued (stat'ūd), a. [cf. statue + -ed.] Furnished with statues; having the form of a statue; consisting of a statue or of statues.

Pacing in sable robes the statued hall. Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Falcon of Federigo.

Sometimes he encountered an imperial column; sometimes he came to an arcadian square flooded with light, and resonant with the fall of statued fountains. Disraeli, Lothair, lxix.

statue-dress (stat'ū-dres), n. Theat., a dress for the body and legs, made in one piece, worn in representations of statuary.

statuesque (stat'ū-esk'), a. [cf. statue + -esque.] Like a statue; having the formal dignity or beauty of a statue.

The statuesque attitudes exhibited in the ballets at the opera-house. De Quincey, English Opium-Eater.

statuesquely (stat'ū-esk'li), adv. In a statuesque manner; in the manner of a statue; as a statue. Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 97.

statuesqueness (stat'ū-esk'nes), n. Statuesque character or appearance. The Academy, No. 904, p. 141.

statuette (stat'ū-et'), n. [F., dim. of statue, a statue; see statue.] A small statue; a statue or image in the round much smaller than nature; a figurine.

Most of the figures do not much exceed life-size, and many were small statuettes. C. T. Newton, Art and Archaeol., p. 307.

statuize (stat'ū-īz), v. t. [cf. statue + -ize.] To commemorate by a statue. [Rare.]

James II. did also statuize himself in copper. Misson, Travels in Eng., p. 309. (Davies.)

statuminate (stat'ū-mi-nāt), v. t. [cf. L. statuminatus, pp. of statuminare, prop up, support, < statumen (-min-), a prop, stay, < statuere, cause to stand, set up, fix upright: see statue.] To prop; support.

I will statuminate and under-prop thee.
B. Jonson, New Inn, ii. 2.

stature (stat'ūr), n. [< ME. stature, < OF. (and F.) stature = Sp. Pg. estatura = It. statura, < L. statura, height or size of the body, stature, size, growth, < statuere, cause to stand, set up; see statue.] 1. The natural height of an animal body; bodily tallness; sometimes, full height: generally used of the human body.

The Lord of Pigmas, where that the folk ben of litylle Stature that ben but 3 Span long.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 211.

Unto stature this damsel was grown.
Catskin's Garland (Child's Ballads, VIII. 174).

2*t.* A stature. [An erroneous use, due to confusion with statue.]

And then before her [Diana's] stature straight he told Devoutly all his whole petition there.
M^r. for Mags., I. 29.

In the second house there is the stature of a man of silver.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 236.

statured (stat'ūr'd), a. [< stature + -ed]. 1*t.* Of the height or stature of.

Were thy dimension but a stride,
Nay, wert thou statur'd but a span,
She'll make thee Mimas. Quarles, Emblems, ii. 6.

2. Of or arrived at full stature. The Century, XXXIII. 48. [Rare.]—3*t.* Conditioned; circumstanced.

They [Tusser and Churchyard] being mark'd alike in their poetical parts, living in the same time, and statur'd alike in their estates.
Fuller, Worthies, Essex, I. 519.

status (stā'tus), n. [< L. status, standing, position, attitude, state; see state.] 1. Standing or position as regards rank or condition.—2. Position of affairs.—3. In law, the standing of a person before the law in the class of persons indicated by his or her legal qualities; the relation fixed by law in which a person stands toward others or the state. Different writers vary much in the extent of meaning implied, but in the best usage it includes liberty, citizenship, and marriage, infancy and majority and wardship or tutelage, and mental capacity or incapacity according to legal tests. It is rarely if ever used of any of those relations which are terminable by consent, such as partnership.—Status quo, the condition in which (the thing or things were at first or are now). Compare in statu quo.

statutable (stat'ū-tā-bl), a. [< statute + -able.] 1. Made, required, or imposed by statute; statutory: as, a statutable punishment.—2. Allowed by the rules; standard.

I met with one the other day who was at least three inches above five foot, which you know is the statutable measure of that club.
Addison, Spectator, No. 108.

statutably (stat'ū-tā-blī), adv. In a manner agreeable to statute; as required or provided by statute.

statute (stat'ūt), n. [< ME. statut, < OF. statut, estatut, statu, F. statut = Pr. statut = Sp. Pg. estatuto = It. statuta, statuto = D. statut = G. Sw. Dan. statut, < L.L. statutum, a statute, prop. neut. of L. status, pp. of statuere, set up, establish: see stand.] 1. An ordinance or law; specifically, a law promulgated in writing by a legislative body; an enactment by a legislature; in the United States, an act of Congress or of a State or Territorial legislature passed and promulgated according to constitutional requirements; in Great Britain, an act of Parliament made by the Sovereign by and with the advice of the Lords and Commons. Some early statutes are in the form of charters or ordinances, proceeding from the crown, the consent of the Lords and Commons not being expressed. Statutes are either public or private (in the latter case affecting an individual or a company); but the term is usually restricted to public acts of a general and permanent character. Strictly speaking, an ordinance established by either house of the legislature, or by both, without the assent of the executive, as a resolution, or joint resolution, is not a statute. The word has sometimes, however, been interpreted to include municipal ordinances. See also act, article, bill, by-law, charter, code, decree, edict, law, ordinance, petition, provision.

As whiles Hunger was her minister there wolde none of hem ehyde, Ne stryve ageines his statut so sterneliche he looked.
Piers Plowman (B), vi. 321.

The statutes of the Lord are right.
Ps. xiv. 8.
Girded with frumps and curtail gibes, by one who makes sentences by the Statute, as if all above three inches long were condiscant. Milton, Apology for Smeectymnus.

What are called in England constitutional statutes, such as Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights, the Act of Settlement, the Acts of Union with Scotland and Ireland, are merely ordinary laws, which could be repealed by Parliament at any moment in exactly the same way as it can repeal a highway act or lower the duty on tobacco.
J. Bryce, American Commonwealth, I. 237.

2. The act of a corporation or of its founder, intended as a permanent rule or law: as, the statutes of a university.—3. In foreign and civil law, any particular municipal law or usage, though not resting for its authority on judicial decisions or the practice of nations. Burill; Worcester.—4. A statute-fair. [Prov. Eng.]—Bloody statute, an occasional name of the Act of the Six Articles. See the Six Articles, under article.—Declaratory statute. See declaratory.—Directory statute. See directory.—Enabling statute, a statute which confers a power upon a person or body that did not previously possess it.—Enlarging statute, a statute which increases a power that already existed.—Equity of a statute. See equity.—Estate by statute, more fully estate by statute merchant, or estate by statute staple, in Eng. law, the estate or tenancy which a creditor acquired in the lands of his debtor by their seizure on judgments by confession in forms now obsolete. See statute merchant and statute staple, below.—General statute, a statute which relates directly to the government or the general public interest, or to all the people of the state or of a particular class, condition, or district therein. See legislation, also public statute and local statute.—Local statute. See local legislation, under local.—Mandatory statute. See mandatory.—Penal statutes. See penal.—Private statutes. (a) See private acts, under private. (b) Same as special statute.—Public statutes. See public acts, under public.—Remedial statutes, statutes the main object of which appears directly beneficial, by supplying some defect in the law or removing inconveniences, as distinguished from those the immediate aspect of which is to impose punishment or penalty, which are called penal statutes. Some statutes partake of both characters, for a statute which is penal as against an offender may be remedial as toward those whom it is intended to protect.—Retrospective statute. See retrospective.—Special or private statute, a statute which the courts will not notice unless pleaded and proved like any other fact; also, a particular or peculiar statute: as, there is a special statute regulating chattel mortgages on canal-boats.—Statute against benevolences, an English statute of 1483-4 (1 Rich. III., c. 2) abolishing the peculiar system of raising money by solicitation, called benevolences, and declaring that such exactions should not be taken for precedent.—Statute cap. See cap.—Statute de Donis, more fully Statute de Donis Conditionalibus, an English statute of 1285 (13 Edw. I., being the Statute of Westminster, ii. c. 1) intended to put an end to the common-law doctrine that under a gift to a man and the heirs of his body he acquired absolute title by having issue, even though none should survive. The act prescribed instead that the condition stated by the giver of reversion in failure of issue should be carried into effect. Also sometimes called statute of entail.—Statute labor. See labor.—Statute lace. See lace.—Statute law, a law or rule of action prescribed or enacted by the legislative power, and promulgated and recorded in writing; also, collectively, the enactments of a legislative assembly, in contradistinction to common law. See law.—Statute merchant, in law, a bond of record, now obsolete, acknowledged before the chief magistrate of some trading town, on which, if not paid at the day, an execution might be awarded against the body, lands, and goods of the obligor. See pocket-judgment.

A certain blinde retaylor, called the Biuell, vsed to lend money vpon pawns or anie thing, and would let one for a need have a thousand poundes vpon a statute merchant of his soule.
Nashe, Pierce Penilence, p. 9.

Statute of bread and ale. See bread.—Statute of charitable uses, an English statute of 1601 (43 Eliz., c. 4), sometimes called the statute of Elizabeth, for the protection of property devoted to charities. It authorized the lord chancellor to appoint commissioners to inquire into the management of such property, with power to correct abuses.—Statute of Circumspecte Agatis, an English statute of 1285 (13 Edw. I.), in the form of a writ addressed to the judges: so named from its first two words. It directed that the king's prohibition should not lie in spiritual matters, and that the jurisdiction of the spiritual courts should be exercised in cases of demands by a parson for tithes, mortuaries, pensions, etc., notwithstanding such prohibition.—Statute of false pretenses, an English statute of 1757 (30 Geo. II., c. 24) which defines and punishes the crime of false pretenses.—Statute of fraudulent conveyances, sometimes called the statute of Elizabeth. (a) An English statute of 1571 (13 Eliz., c. 5), reenacted in nearly all of the United States, which declares all conveyances of property with intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors to be void as against such creditors. (b) An English statute of 1585 (27 Eliz., c. 4) making void all conveyances of land made with intent to deceive purchasers.—Statute of Gloucester, an English statute of 1278 (6 Edw. I.), passed at Gloucester, and relating to local franchises and judicature, damages to real property, waste, trespass, etc.—Statute of laborers, an English statute of 1349 (23 Edw. III.) designed to compel workmen and servants to work for the wages commonly paid in the year 1346; enacted because the pestilence had seriously decreased the number of servants, and the survivors demanded exorbitant wages.—Statute of Lincoln, an English statute of 1315-16 (9 Edw. II., st. 2), so called because the Parliament sat at Lincoln. It prescribed the qualifications of sheriffs. Also known as the statute of sheriffs.—Statute of Marlborough (Marleberge, Marlbridge), an English statute of 1267 (52 Hen. III.), so called because made at Marlborough, containing twenty-nine chapters or sections relating principally to distress suits, landlord and tenant, courts, writs, etc. It is one of the earliest written laws, after the Great Charter, and is said to have been intended to defeat attempts to evade feudal dues on succession at death made by gifts inter vivos.—Statute of merchants (also known as the statute of Acton Burnell, from the place of its enactment). (a) An English statute or ordinance of 1283 (11 Edw. I.) for the collection of debts. (b) Another of 1285 (13 Edw. I.) for the same purpose.—Statute of Merton. Same as provisions of Merton (which see, under provision).—Statute of military tenures. See military.—Statute of monopolies. Same as Monopoly Act (which see, under monopoly).—Statute of Northampton, an English statute of 1328 (2 Edw. III.) relating to felonies, sheriffs, etc.—Statute of Quia Emptores, an English statute of 1280, 1290 (18 Edw. I.), which, because purchasers of land had evaded their feudal dues to the chief lord by claiming to hold under the seller as their lord, provided that upon all sales or feoffments of land in fee simple the feoffee should hold, not of his immediate feoffor, but of the next lord paramount of whom the feoffor himself held, and by the same services, thus putting an end to subfeudation for several centuries.—Statute of Rageman, an English statute of 1276 (4 Edw. I.) requiring justices to "go through-out the land" to try suits for trespasses.—Statute of Rutland, Ruddlan, or Rothlan, an English royal ordinance of 1284 (12 Edw. I.), made at Rutland, which, among other things, forbade suits in the Exchequer except such as concerned the king and his officers, and referred to the keeping of the rolls, etc. Also called provisions made in the Exchequer.—Statute of sheriffs. Same as statute of Lincoln.—Statute of Stamford, an English statute of 1309 (3 Edw. II.) which confirmed an act of 28 Edw. I. abolishing the taking of goods, etc., by the king when on a journey except upon payment, and also abolished certain customs duties.—Statute of Winchester or Winton, an English statute of 1285 (13 Edw. I.) containing police regulations such as concern lesser crimes and the hue and cry, and prohibiting fairs and markets in churchyards.—Statute of York, an English statute of 1315 (12 Edw. II.) which relates to the administration of justice.—Statutes of liveries, English statutes, the first of which were in 1377 (1 Rich. II., c. 7), 1392-3 (16 Rich. II., c. 4), and 1396-7 (20 Rich. II., cc. 1 and 2), for the better preservation of the peace: so called because directed against the practice of giving distinctive liveries to retainers and partizans, whereby confederacies and hostile parties were engendered.—Statutes of Westminster, early English statutes, so called because made at Westminster. "The first" (1275), comprising fifty-one chapters, relates to freedom of elections, amercements, bail, extortion by officers, aid taken by lords, etc. "The second" (1285), including fifty chapters, relates to gifts, writs, pleas, court-proceedings, etc. Also known as Statute de Donis (which see, above). "The third" was the statute "Quia Emptores" (which see, above).—Statute staple, in law, a bond of record, now obsolete, acknowledged before the mayor of the staple or town constituting a grand mart, by virtue of which the creditor might forthwith have execution against the body, lands, and goods of the debtor on non-payment.

There is not one gentleman amongst twenty but his land be engaged in twenty statute staple.
Middleten, Family of Love, i. 3.

The Great Statute, an English code of customs law of 1660 (12 Car. II., c. 4) imposing duties which were termed the "old subsidy." (As to noted statutes on particular subjects, such as statute of distributions, statute of entailment, statute of fines, statute of frauds, statutes of jeofail, statute of Jevery, statute of limitations, statutes of mortmain, statute of murders, statute of non-clain, statute of preeminure, statute of provisors, statute of staple, statute of tillage, statute of uses, statute of wills, see the word characterizing the statute.) = Syn. 1. Enactment, Ordinance, etc. See law.

statute (stat'ūt), v. t. [< statute, n.] To ordain; enact; decree or establish.

The king hath ordeined and statuted that all and singular strangers . . . shall apply and come to his Towne of Northberne.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 186.

statute-book (stat'ūt-būk), n. A register of statutes, laws, or legislative acts: a generic term commonly used to comprehend all the volumes in which the statute law of a state or nation is authoritatively promulgated.

statute-fair (stat'ūt-fār), n. A fair held by regular legal appointment, in contradistinction to one authorized only by use and wont. See map, 4.

statute-roll (stat'ūt-rōl), n. 1. A statute as enrolled or engrossed.—2. A collection of statutes; a statute-book.

His [Edward IV.'s] statute-roll contains no acts for securing or increasing public liberties.

Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 373.

statutory (stat'ūt-ō-ri), a. [< statute + -ory.] Enacted, required, or imposed by statute; depending on statute for its authority: as, a statutory provision or remedy; statutory fines.

The first duty of the Muse is to be delightful, and it is an injury done to all of us when we are put in the wrong by a kind of statutory affirmation on the part of the critics of something to which our judgment will not consent, and from which our taste revolts.

Lovell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 132.

The reduction of the number of public-houses to a statutory minimum.

Sir C. W. Dilke, Probs. of Greater Britain, vi. 6.

On the first day of July, 1885, . . . the regular statutory duties were imposed.
Harper's Mag., LXXXVI. 429.

Statutory foreclosure. See foreclosure.—Statutory guardian. See guardian.—Statutory law. Same as statute law (which see, under statute).

statuolence (stā-tū'vō-lens), n. [< statuolen(t) + -ence.] A peculiar state or condition into which a person may throw himself by the exercise of the will, independent of extraneous conditions: a kind of self-induced clairvoyance. It is brought about by self-mermerization, and closely resembles that hypnotic or somnambulant condition which may be produced by the will of another in suitable subjects. W. B. Fehnestock. [Recent.]

statuolent (stā-tū'vō-lent), a. [< L. status, a state or condition, + volen(t)-s, ppr. of velle, will.] Inducing statuolence; affected by statuolence, or being in that state. [Rare.]

statuolic (stat-ū'vō-lik), a. [< statuolent + -ic.] Pertaining in any way to statuolence: as, the statuolic state; a statuolic process. [Rare.]

staturolism (stā-tū'vō-lizm), n. [< staturol(ent) + -ism.] Same as staturolence. F. W. Hayes.

stumrel (stām'rel), a. [Cf. stammer.] Stupid; half-witted; blundering. Burns, Brigs of Ayr. [Scotch.] staunch, stancher, etc. See stanch, etc.

Stauton's opening. In chess-playing. See apening, 9.

stauracin (stā'ra-sin), n. [*< ML. stauracinus, < MGr. *σταυρακινός, nout. of σταυρακινός, pertaining to small crosses, < σταυράκιον, dim. of Gr. σταυρός, a cross.] A silken stuff figured with small crosses, in use at the Byzantine court, and as a material for ecclesiastical vestments elsewhere, in the early middle ages.

stauraxonia (stā-rak-sō'ni-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + ἄξων, an axis.] In promorphology, stauraxonal organic forms, as pyramids. Stauraxonia homopola are figures with equal poles, whose stereometric figure is a double pyramid (two pyramids base to base). Stauraxonia heteropola are single pyramids with dissimilar, usually anal and oral, poles. When these have regular bases, they are stauraxonia homostaura; when irregular, stauraxonia heterostaura.

stauraxonal (stā-rak-sō'ni-āl), a. [< stauraxonia + -al.] Having a main axis and a definite number of secondary axes at right angles therewith, so that the stereometric figure is fundamentally a pyramid: correlated with centrarmial.

stauri, n. Plural of staurus.
Stauria (stā'ri-ā), n. [NL. (Edwards and Blaine, 1850), < Gr. σταυρός, a cross, a stake.] The typical genus of Stauriidae, having a compound astriform corallum growing by calicular gemmation, four eueiate primitive septa, and no columella.

staurian (stā'ri-ān), a. [< Stauria + -an.] Resembling or related to the genus Stauria: of or pertaining to the Stauriidae.

Stauriidae (stā-ri-ā-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stauria + -idae.] A family of fossil rugose stone-corals, typified by the genus Stauria. The wall is well developed; the septa are complete, lamellar, and conspicuously tetramerous. The interseptal loculi are crossed by endothelial dissepiments, and there is a central tabulate area. The genera besides Stauria are Holocystis, Polycyelia, Conosmia, and Heteriophyllum. Usually Stauriidae.

staurolite (stā'rō-lit), n. [< Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + λίθος, a stone.] A silicate of aluminium and iron occurring in reddish to yellowish-brown or brownish-black prismatic crystals. These crystals are often twins, in the form of a cross, whence it is called cross-stone. Also staurolite, grenatite.—Staurolite-slate, a mica-slate through which are scattered crystals of staurolite. Rocks of this character have been found in Scotland, the Pyrenees, and New England.

staurolitic (stā'rō-lit'ik), a. [< staurolite + -ic.] Pertaining to, resembling, or characterized by the presence of staurolite.

Stauromedusæ (stā'rō-mē-dū'sō), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + NL. Medusæ, q. v.] In Haeckel's classification, a subfamily of Scyphomedusæ, having four pairs of adradial gonads or four simple interradial gonads in the subumbra, and no special sense-organs.

stauromedusan (stā'rō-mē-dū'san), a. and n. [< Stauromedusæ + -an.] I. A pertaining to the Stauromedusæ, or having their characters.
II. n. A member of the Stauromedusæ.

Stauropus (stā'rō-pus), n. [NL. (Germer, 1813), < Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + πούς = E. foot.]

1. A genus of bombycid moths, of the family Notodontidae, having the thorax woolly, the fore wings rather broad and sinuate on the hind margins, hind wings rounded, tongue weak, and the abdomen slightly tufted above. The larvae have fourteen legs, and are naked, with humps on the middle segments and two short anal projections; the legs on the third and fourth segments are exceedingly long. When at rest they raise the large head and enlarged anal segments, and it is from their extraordinary appearance that the only European species, S. fagi, derives its English name of lobster-moth. Its larva is of a brown color, and feeds on oak, birch, beech, and apple. The only other known species is Asiatic.

2. A genus of melandryid beetles, erected by Fairmaire and Germain in 1863 on a single South American species.

stauroscope (stā'rō-skōp), n. [< Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An optical instrument, invented by Von Kobell of Munich, for examining sections of crystals, and determining the position in them of the planes of light-vibration.

stauroscopic (stā'rō-skōp'ik), a. [< stauroscope + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or made by means of the stauroscope: as, stauroscopic examination. Spottiswoode, Polarisation, p. 113.

stauroscopically (stā-rō-skōp'i-kāl-i), adv. By means of the stauroscope: as, stauroscopically determined systems of crystallization.

staurotide (stā'rō-tid), n. [< Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + -ιδε².] Same as staurolite.

Staurotypidæ (stā-rō-tip'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Staurotypus + -idæ.] A family of tropical American cryptodirous tortoises, represented by the genera Staurotypus and Claudius. They have nine plastral bones, the carapace with epidermal sentes, the nuchal bone with a short costiform process, and caudal vertebrae proœous. Also Staurotypina, as a group of Chelydridæ.

staurotypous (stā'rō-ti-pus), a. [< Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + τύπος, type.] In mineral, having mackles or spots in the form of a cross.

Staurotypus (stā-rō-ti-pus), n. [NL., < Gr. σταυρός, a cross, + τύπος, type.] A genus of tortoises with a cruciform plastron, typical of the group Staurotypina or family Staurotypidæ.

staurus (stā'rus), n.; pl. stauri (-ri). [NL., < Gr. σταυρός, a stake, pile, pale, cross.] A form of sexradiate sponge-spicule, resulting from the suppression of both the distal and the proximal ray. Sollas.

stave (stāv), n. [< ME. staf, staf, stave, pl. staves, steves, < AS. staf, pl. stafas, a staff: see staff. Stave is another form of staff, arising from the ME. oblique and plural forms. In the sense of 'stanza' the word is prob. due to the collateral form, feel, stef, a stave, refrain.]

1. A pole or piece of wood of some length; a staff. Specifically—(a) In cooperage, one of the thin, narrow pieces of wood, grooved for the bottom, the head, etc., which compose a barrel, cask, tub, or the like. (b) One of the boards joined laterally to form a hollow cylinder, a curb for a well or shaft, the curved bed for the intrados of an arch, etc. (c) A spar or round of a rack to contain hay in stables for feeding horses; the rung of a ladder; the spoke of a wheel; etc.
2. A stanza; a verse; a metrical division.

Of eleven and twelve I find none ordinary staves used in any vulgar language.

Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 54.

Chant me now some wicked stave,

Till thy drooping courage rise.

Tennyson, Vision of Sin.

3. Specifically, same as staff, 9.

stave (stāv), v.; pret. and pp. staved or stove, ppr. staving. [< stave, n., or directly < staff (with the usual change of f when medial to v; cf. strive, < strife, live, < life, wire, < wife, etc.). The proper pret. and pp. is staved; stove, like rove for reved, conforms to the supposed analogy of drove, etc.] I. trans. 1. To break in a stave or staves of; knock a hole in; break; burst: as, the boat is stove.
They burnt their wigwams, and all their mats, and some corn, and staved seven canoes, and departed.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, 1. 232.

2. To cause or suffer to be lost by breaking the cask; hence, to spill; pour out.
And Mahomet the third . . . commanded, on pain of death, all such in Constantinople and Pera as had wine to bring it out and stave it, (except Embassadors onely,) so that the streets ranne therewith.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 294.

3. To furnish with staves or rundles.—4. To make firm by compression; shorten or compact, as a heated rod or bar by endwise blows, or as lead in the socket-joints of pipes.—To stave and tail, a phrase current in bear-baiting, to stave being to check the bear with a staff, and to tail to hold back the dog by the tail; hence, to cause a cessation or stoppage.

So lawyers . . .

Do stave and tail with writs of error,

Reverse of judgment, and demurrer.

S. Butler, Hudibras, l. ii. 163.

To stave it out, to fight it out with staves; fight till a decisive result is attained. S. Butler, Hudibras, l. iii. 88.

—To stave off, to beat or ward off with or as with a staff; keep back; delay; prevent the approach or occurrence of.

Two dogs upon me?

And the old beardward will succour me,

I'll stave 'em off myself.

Middleton, Anything for a Quiet Life, ii. 2.

It staved off the quarrelsome discussion as to whether she should or should not leave Miss Matty's service.

Mrs. Gaskell, Cranford, xiv.

II. intrans. To go or rush along recklessly or regardless of everything, as one in a rage; work energetically; drive. [Colloq.]

He . . . went staving down the street as if afraid to look behind him.
The Century, XXXVIII. 41.

stave-jointer (stāv'join'tēr), n. See jointer¹.

staver¹ (stā'vēr), n. [< stave + -er¹.] An active, energetic person. [New Eng.]

Miss Asphyxia's reputation in the region was perfectly established. She was spoken of with applause under such titles as "a staver," "a pealer," "a roarer to work."

H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 117.

staver² (stā'vēr), v. i. [Also staver; < Dan. stavre, trudge, stumble.] To stagger; totter.

He [Carlyle] slept badly from overwork, "gazing staverily about the house at night," as the Scotch maid said.
Froude, Carlyle (Life in London, l. iii.).

stave-rime (stāv'rīm), n. Alliteration; an alliterative word: used especially in treating of Anglo-Saxon and other ancient Germanic poetry. The Academy, Jan. 14, 1888, p. 27.

stavers (stā'vēr), n. pl. [< staver².] The stagers, a disease of horses. See stagger, 2.

staverwort (stā'vēr-wért), n. The ragwort, Senecio Jacobæa: so called as being supposed to cure the stavers or stagers in horses. Also staggerwort.

staves, n. A plural of staff and the plural of stave.

stavesacre (stāvz'ākēr), n. [*Early mod. E. also stavesaker; < ME. staphisagræ, < OF. staphisagræ, < ML. staphisagræ, staphysagræ, staphisagræ, etc., < Gr. as if σταφίς ἀπία, stavesacre: σταφίς, ἀστράγι, dried grapes; ἀπία, fem. of ἄπρος, wild. Cf. Staphisagræ.] A species of larkspur, Delphinium Staphisagræ, native in southern Europe and Asia Minor. It is an erect downy herb, a foot or two high, with bluish or purple flowers in terminal racemes. Its seeds contain a poisonous principle, delphinine, and are used in a powder or ointment against vermin on man and beast, also in tincture as an application for rheumatism. They were formerly employed as a purgative, but found too violent. See delphinine² and lousewort, 2.

stave-tankard (stāv'tang'kård), n. A drinking-cup formed of staves of wood, hooped with either wood or metal, the bottom being generally wood also. One preserved in Exeter, England, is 5 inches high and 4 inches in diameter at the bottom. It is formed of fourteen staves of boxwood, the fifteenth, of oak, forming the handle, and is bound with brass hoops. Also called sapling-tankard.

stave-wood (stāv'wúd), n. [< stave + wood¹.]

1. See quassia, 2.—2. A tall stout tree, Sterculia foetida, of the East Indies, eastern Africa, and Australia. The wood is soft, and thought to be of little value.

staving (stāv'ing), n. [< stave + -ing¹.] 1. Staves collectively, as those which form the curb about a turbine water-wheel.—2. In forging, a method of shortening or compacting a heated bar by striking blows on its end.

staw¹ (stā), v. [*< Dan. stau = Sw. stå = D. staan = OHG. MIH. stān, stand, stay, = L. stare = Gr. ἰστάναι = Skt. √ sthā, stand: see stand, where the relation of the orig. root sta to stand is explained.*] I. intrans. To stand still; become stalled or mired, as a cart; be fixed or set. [North. Eng.]

II. trans. 1. To put to a standstill.—2. To clog; glut; surfeit; disgust. Burns, To a Haggis. [Scotch.] staw² (stā), v. A preterit of steal. [Scotch.] staxis (staks'is), n. [< Gr. στάσις, a dropping.] In pathol., hemorrhage.

stay¹ (stā), n. [*< ME. stay, < AS. stay = D. G. feel. Dan. Sw. stay, a stay (in naut. sense); cf. OF. estay, F. étau = Sp. estay = Pg. estay, estai (pl. estacs), also ostais, a stay (< Tent.); origin uncertain; by some supposed to be named from being used to climb up by, being derived, in this view, like stair, stile¹, stæg, etc., from the root of AS. stigan (pret. stāh) = D. stijgen = G. steigen, etc., climb, ascend: see sty¹. The word has been confused with stay², a prop, etc.] 1. Naut., a strong rope used to support a mast, and leading from the head of one mast down to some other, or to some part of the vessel. Those stays which lead forward are called fore-and-aft stays, and those which lead down to the vessel's sides back-stays. See cut under ship.

2. A rope used for a similar purpose; a guy supporting the mast of a derrick, a telegraph-pole, or the like.—3. In a chain-eable, the transverse piece in a link.—In stays, or rove in stays (naut.), in the act of going about from one tack to the other.—Martingale stays. See martingale.—Slack in stays. See slack.—Spring-stay, a smaller stay parallel to and assisting the regular one.—To heave in stays. See heave.—To miss stays. See miss.—To put a ship in stays, to bring her head to the wind; heave her to.—Toride down a stay. See ride.—Triatic stay (naut.), an arrangement of pendants to hook stay-tackles to for hoisting out or in boats or other heavy weights. One pendant is lashed at the foremast- or foretopmast-head, and one at the mainmast- or maintopmast-head. These pendants have a span at their lower ends to keep them in place, and a large thimble is spliced into the lower end of each, into which the stay-tackles are hooked.

stay¹ (stā), v. [< stay¹, n.] I. trans. Naut.: (a) To incline forward, aft, or to one side by means of stays: as, to stay a mast. (b) To tack; put on the other tack: as, to stay ship.

II. intrans. Naut., to change tack; go about; be in stays, as a ship.

stay² (stā), n. [< ME. staye*, < OF. estaie, estaye, f., F. étai, m., a prop. stay. < MD. stacye, later stacy, a prop. stay, also a contracted form of staede, stade, a prop. stay, help, aid; cf. D. stele, steel, a place, = AS. stede, E. stead, a place: see stead, and cf. stathe. The word *stay*¹ has been confused to some extent with *stay*². The noun is by some derived from the verb. In the later senses it is so derived: see *stay*², v.] 1. A prop; a support.

There were stays on either side on the place of the seat [of Solomon's throne], and two lions stood beside the stays.
1 Ki. x. 19.

See we not plainly that obedience of creatures unto the law of nature is the stay of the whole world?
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 3.

Specifically—(a) In building, a piece performing the office of a brace, to prevent the swerving or lateral deviation of the piece to which it is applied. (b) In steam-engines: (1) A rod, bar, bolt, or gusset in a boiler, to hold two parts together against the pressure of steam: as, a tube-stay; a water-space stay. (2) One of the slung-rods connecting a locomotive-boiler to its frame. (3) A rod, beneath the boiler, supporting the inside bearings of the crank-axle of a locomotive. (c) In mining, a piece of wood used to secure the pump to an engine-shaft. (d) In some hollow castings, a spindle which forms a support for the core. (e) In anat. and zool., technically, a prop or support: as, the bony stay of the operculum of a mail-cheeked fish, or cottoid. This is an enlarged suborbital bone which crosses the cheek and articulates with the preoperculum in the mail-cheeked fishes. See Cottoides, Scleroporæ.

2. pl. A kind of waistcoat, stiffened with whalebone or other material, now worn chiefly by women and girls to support and give shape to the body, but formerly worn also by men. (Hall, Satires.) Stays were originally, as at present, made in two pieces laced together: hence the plural form. In composition the singular is always used: as, staylace, staymaker. See corset, 3.

They could not ken her middle sae jimp, . . .
The stays o' gowd were so well laced.

The Bonny Bows o' London (Child's Ballads, II. 361).

3†. A fastening for a garment; hence, a hook; a clasp; anything to hang another thing on. Cotgrave.

To my dear daughter Philippa, queen of Portugal, my second best stay of gold, and a gold cup and cover.
Test. Vetust., p. 142, quoted in Halliwell.

4. That which holds or restrains; obstacle; check; hindrance; restraint.

The presence of the Governour is (as you say) a great stay and bridle unto them that are ill disposed.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

5. A stop; a halt; a break or cessation of action, motion, or progression: as, the court granted a stay.

They make many stays by the way.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 427.

They were able to read good authors without any stay, if the book were not false.

Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

Works adjourn'd have many stays.

Long demurs breed new stays.

Southwell, Loss in Delay.

6†. A standstill; a state of rest; entire cessation of motion or progress: used chiefly in the phrase at a stay.

In bashfulness the spirits do a little go and come—but with bold men upon a like occasion they stand at a stay.
Bacon, Boldness (ed. 1857).

7. A fixed state; fixedness; stability; permanence.

Alas! what stay is there in human state? Dryden.

8. Continuance in a place; abode for an indefinite time; sojourn: as, you make a short stay in the city.

Your stay with him may not be long.

Shak., M. for M., iii. 1. 256.

9†. A station or fixed anchorage for vessels. Sir P. Sidney, (Imp. Dict.)—10. State; fixed condition. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Among the Utopians, where all things be sett in a good order, and the common wealth in a good staye, it very seldom chanceth that they chuse a newe plotte to build an house vpon.

Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 4.

Man . . . cometh up and is cut down like a flower; he fleeth as it were a shadow, and never continueth in one stay [in eodem stata (Sarum dirge)].

Book of Common Prayer, Burial of the Dead.

He alone continueth in one stay.

Lamb, Decay of Beggars.

11†. Restraint of passion; prudence; moderation; caution; steadiness; sobriety.

With prudent stay he long deferr'd

The rough contention. Philips, Blenheim, l. 276.

Axle-guard stays, queen-post stay, etc. See the qualifying words.—Stay of proceedings, in law, a suspension of proceedings, as till some direction is complied with or till some appeal is decided; sometimes, in England, an entire discontinuance or dismissal of the action. = Syn. 1. See staff.—5. Pause, etc. See stop.

stay² (stā), v.; pret. and pp. stayed, staid, ppr. staying. [< ME. stayen, steyen* (pp. staid). < OF. estayr, F. éstayr, prop. stay, < estaye, a prop. stay: see *stay*², n. By some derived < OF. estayr, estler, estre, F. étre, be, remain, continue; but this derivation is on both phonetic and historical grounds untenable. There is a connection felt between stay and stand; it is, however, very remote.] 1. trans. 1. To prop; support; sustain; hold up; steady.

And Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side. Ex. xvii. 12.

A young head, not so well stayed as I would it were, . . . having many, many fancies begotten in it, if it had not been in some way delivered, would have grown a monster.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, Ded.

Let that stay and comfort thy heart.

Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 442.

2. To stop. (a) To detain; keep back; delay; hinder. Your ships are stay'd at Venice.

Shak., T. of the S., iv. 2. 83.

If I could stay this letter an hour, I should send you something of Savoy.

Doune, letters, xlix.

This businesse staid me in London almost a weeke.

Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 14, 1671.

(b) To restrain; withhold; check; stop.

If I can hereby either prouke the good or staye the ill, I shall thinke my writing herein well employed.

Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 70.

Why do you look so strangely, fearfully,

Or stay your deathful hand?

Fletcher (and another), Queen of Coriath, iv. 3.

Its trench had stayed full many a rock,

Hurled by primeval earthquake shock.

Scott, L. of the L., iii. 26.

(c) To put off; defer; postpone; delay; keep back: as, to stay judgment.

The cardinal did entreat his holiness

To stay the judgement o' the divorce.

Shak., Hen. VIII., iii. 2. 33.

We'll stay

The sentence till another day.

Northern Lord and Cruel Jew (Child's Ballads, VIII. 282).

(d) To hold the attention of.

For the sound of some sillable stayed the eare a great while, and others slid away so quickly, as if they had not bene pronounced. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 56.

3. To stand; undergo; abide; hold out during.

She will not stay the siege of loving terms,

Nor bide the encounter of assailing eyes.

Shak., R. and J., i. 1. 218.

Doubts are also entertained concerning her ability to stay the course.

Daily Telegraph, Nov. 11, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.)

4. To wait for; await.

Let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Shak., As you Like it, iii. 2. 221.

His Lord was gone to Amiens, where they would stay his coming.

Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 3.

There were a hundred and forty people, and most stayed supper.

Walpole, Letters, II. 369.

To stay the stomach, to appease the cravings of hunger; quiet the appetite temporarily; stave off hunger or faintness: also used figuratively.

A piece of gingerbread, to be merry withal,

And stay your stomach, lest you faint with fasting.

B. Jonson, Alchemist, iii. 2.

II. intrans. 1. To rest; depend; rely.

Because ye despise this word, and trust in oppression and perverseness, and stay thereon. Isa. xxx. 12.

I stay here on my hond. Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 242.

2. To stop. (a) To come to a stand or stop.

She would command the hasty sun to stay.

Spenser, F. Q., I. x. 20.

Stay, you come on too fast; your pace is too impetuous.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iii. 3.

(b) To come to an end; cease.

An't please your grace, here my commission stays.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., ii. 4. 76.

(c) To delay; linger; tarry; wait.

Fourscore pound: can you send for bail, sir? or what will you do? we cannot stay.

Webster and Dekker, Northward Hoe, i. 2.

(d) To make a stand; stand.

Give them leave to fly that will not stay.

Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 50.

3. To hold out, as in a race or contest; last or persevere to the end. [Colloq.]

He won at Lincoln, . . . and would stay better than Pizarro.

Daily Telegraph, Sept. 14, 1885. (Encyc. Dict.)

4. To remain; especially, to remain in a place for an indefinite time; abide; sojourn; dwell; reside.

I understand, by some Merchants to-day upon the Exchange, that the King of Denmark is at Glückstadt, and stays there all this Summer.

Howell, Letters, I. v. 41.

They staid in the royal court,

And ll'e'd wif' mirth and glee.

Young Arin (Child's Ballads, I. 188).

5. To wait; rest in patience or in expectation.

If I receive money for your tobacco before Mr. Randall go, I will send you something else; otherwise you must be content to stay till I can.

Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 424.

For present deliverance, they do not much expect it; for they stay for their glory, and then they shall have it, when their Prince comes in his, and the glory of the angels.

Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 127.

6. To wait as an attendant; give ceremonious or submissive attendance: with on or upon.

I have a servant comes with me along,

That stays upon me. Shak., M. for M., iv. 1. 47.

To stay put, to remain where placed; remain fixed. [Colloq.] = Syn. 4. To rest, lodge, delay.

stay-at-home (stā'at-hōm'), n. One who is not given to roaming, gadding about, or traveling; one who keeps at home, either through choice or of necessity; also used adjectively: as, a stay-at-home man.

"Cold!" said her father; "what do ye stay-at-homes know about cold, a should like to know."

Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, ix.

stay-bar (stā'bār), n. 1. In archt., a horizontal iron bar extending in one piece from jamb to jamb through the mullions of a tracery window. See saddle-bar.—2. Same as stay-rod, 2.

Its sectional area should be three or four times that of a stay bar.

Rankine, Steam Engine, § 66.

stay-bolt (stā'bōlt), n. In mach., a bolt or rod binding together opposite plates to enable them to sustain each other against internal pressure.

staybusk (stā'bnsk), n. See *busk*⁴, 2.

stay-chain (stā'chān), n. In a vehicle, one of the chains by which the ends of the double-tree are attached to the fore axle. They serve to limit the swing of the double-tree.

staycord (stā'kōrd), n. Same as staylace.

stayed, stayedly, stayedness. Old spellings of staid, staidly, staidness.

stay-end (stā'end), n. In a carriage, one of the ends of a backstay, bolted or clipped either to the perch or to the hind axle.—Stay-end tie, in a vehicle, a rod forming a connection between the stay-end on the reach and that on the axle.

stayer (stā'ēr), n. [< *stay*² + *-er*1.] 1. One who supports or upholds: a supporter; a backer.

Thou, Jupiter, whom we do call the Stayer

Both of this city and this empire.

B. Jonson, Catiline, iv. 2.

2. One who or that which stops or restrains.—3. One who stays or remains: as, a stayer at home.—4. One who has sufficient endurance to hold out to the end; a person or an animal of staying qualities, as in racing or any kind of contest; one who does not readily give in through weakness or lack of perseverance. [Colloq.] stay-foot (stā'fūt), n. In shoe-manuf., a device attached to the presser-bar of a sewing-machine to guide a seam-stay in some kinds of light work.

stay-gage (stā'gāj), n. In a sewing-machine, an adjustable device screwed to the cloth-plate to guide a strip over the goods in such a way as to cover and conceal a seam.

stay-hole (stā'hōl), n. A hole in a staysail through which it is seized to the hanks of the stay.

stay-hook (stā'hūk), n. A small hook formerly worn on the front of the bodice to hang a watch upon. Fairholt.

staylace (stā'lās), n. [< *stay*² + lace.] A lace used to draw together the parts of a woman's stays in order to give them the form required.

stayless (stā'les), a. [Early mod. E. stailless; < *stay*² + -less.] 1. Without stop or delay; ceaseless. [Rare.]

They made me muse, to see how fast they striu'd,

With stailless steppes, each one his life to shield.

Mir. for Mags, p. 187.

2. Unsupported by stays or corsets.

stay-light (stā'līt), n. Same as riding-light.

staymaker (stā'mā'kēr), n. [< *stay*² + maker.] A maker of stays or corsets.

Our ladies choose to be shaped by the staymaker.

J. Spence, Crito.

stay-pile (stā'pil), n. A pile connected or anchored by land-ties with the main piles in the face of piled work. See cut under pilework.

stay-plow (stā'plou), n. A European plant: same as rest-harrow.

stay-rod (stā'rōd), n. 1. In steam-engines: (a) One of the rods supporting the boiler-plate which forms the top of the fire-box, to keep the top from being bulged down by the pressure of steam. (b) Any rod in a boiler which supports plates by connecting parts exposed to rupture in contrary directions. (c) A tension-rod in a marine steam-engine.—2. A tie-rod in a building, etc., which prevents the spreading asunder of the parts connected.

staysail (stā'sāl or -sl), n. Any sail which hoists upon a stay. See stay, 1.

stay-tackle (stā'tak'l), n. A tackle hanging amidships for hoisting in or out heavy weights, and formerly secured to the forestay or mainstay, but now generally attached to a pendant from the topmast-head.

stay-wedge (stā'wej), n. In locomotives, a wedge fitted to the inside bearings of the driving-axles to keep them in their proper position.

S. T. D. An abbreviation of the Latin Sacree or Sacrosanctae Theologiae Doctor, Doctor of Sacred Theology.

stead (sted), v. [Early mod. E. also sted; < ME. sted, stid, stude, stede, stude, < (A) AS. stede = OS. stod = OFries. sted, stid, steth, steth = MD. stede, stad, D. stede, stef = MHG. stede = OHG. MHG. stat, G. statt = Icel. stathu = Sw. stad = Dan. sted = Goth. staths, place; (b) also, in a restricted sense and now partly differentiated spelling, MD. stede, stad, D. stad = MHG. stat, G. stadt = Sw. Dan. stad (< D. or G.?), a town, city (esp. common as the final element in names of towns); (c) cf. MD. stude, stude, fit time, opportunity, = OHG. stata, f., MHG. stata (esp. in phrase, OHG. zi statu, MHG. ze staten, G. zu staten), fit place or time; (d) AS. stæth = Icel. stöð, port, harbor, etc. (see stathe)—all these forms, which have been more or less confused with one another, being derived from the root of staud, in its more orig. form (OHG. MHG. stän, stän, G. stehen, etc.): see stand, stare. Cf. bedstead, farmstead, homestead, roadstead, etc., instead. Cf. L. statio(-n-), a standing, station (see station), Gr. stasis, a placing (see stasis), from the same ult. root. The phrase in stead, now written as one word, instead, except when a qualifying word intervenes, was in ME. in stede, in slide, on stede, or in the stede, etc. The mod. dial. pron. instid, often aphetically stid, rests on the ME. variant stid, stide.] 1. A place; place in general.

I leue the saying and gyfte stede to hym.
Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 19.

Every kyndly thing that is Hath a kyndly sted ther he May best in hit conserved be.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 731.

Fly therefore, fly this fearefull sted anon.
Spenser, F. Q., II. iv. 42.

The souldier may not move from watchfull sted.
Spenser, F. Q., I. ix. 41.

2. Place or room which another had or might have preceded by in: as, David died, and Solomon reigned in his stead. Hence instead.

And everyche of hem bringethe a Branche of the Bayes of Olyve, in here Bekes, in stede of Offyrng.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 59.

I buried her like my own sweet child,
And put my child in her sted.
Tennyson, Lady Clare.

3†. Space of time; while; moment.

Rest a little sted.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. vii. 40.

4. The frame on which a bed is laid; now rarely used except in the compound bedstead.

But in the gloomy court was rais'd a bed,
Staff'd with black plumes, and on an ebon sted.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., x. 203.

5†. A standing.—6†. Position or situation of affairs; state; condition; plight.

She was my solas, my ioy in eech stede,
My plesauce, my comfort, my delite to!
Rois. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 2886.

He staggered to and fro in doubtfull sted.
Spenser, F. Q., V. xii. 23.

7. Assistance; service; use; benefit; advantage; avail: usually in the phrases to stand in stead, to do stead (to render service).

Here our dogs pottage stood vs in good sted, for we had nothing els. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, l. 90.

The Duke of Savoy felt that the time had at last arrived when an adroit diplomacy might stand him in sted.
Molloy, Dutch Republic, l. 200.

A devil's advocate may indeed urge that his [Thiers'] egotism and almost gasconading temperament stood him in stead in the trying circumstances of his negotiations with the powers and with Prince Bismarck—but this is not really to his discredit.
Encyc. Brit., XXXIII. 305.

Stead oft, instead of. Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 48.—To do stead, to do service; help. Milton, Comus, l. 611. [Rare.]—To stand in stead. See stand. [Stead occurs as the second element in many topographical names, as Hampstead, Winstead.]

stead (sted), v. [< ME. steden (pp. steded, stedd, sted, stad) = Icel. stedhja, place (pp. staddr, placed in a specified position, circumstanced, etc.): from the noun.] 1. trans. 1†. To place; put; set.

Lorde God! that all goodde has by-gonne,
And all may ende both goodde and euyl,
That made for man both mone and sonne,
And stedde yone sterne to stande ston stillle.

York Plays, p. 127.

2†. To place or put in a position of danger, difficulty, hardship, or the like; press; bestead.

The bargayne I made thare,
That rewe me nowe full sare
So am I straitlye sted. York Plays, p. 103.

O father, we are cruelly sted between God's laws and man's laws—What shall we do?—What can we do?
Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xix.

3†. With up: to replace; fill.

We shall advise this wronged maid to stead up your appointment, go in your place. Shak., M. for M., iii. l. 260.

4. To avail; assist; benefit; serve: be of service, advantage, or use to.

We are . . . neither in skill nor ability of power greatly to stead you. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

In my dealing with my child, my Latin and Greek, my accomplishments and my money, stead me nothing; but as much soul as I have avails. Emerson, The Over-Soul.

II.† intrans. To stop; stay.

I shalle not sted Tille I have theym theder led.
Towneley Mysteries, p. 6.

steadable (sted'ā-bl), a. [< stead + -able.] Serviceable.

I have succoured and supplied him with men, money, friendship, and counsel, upon any occasion where I could be steadable for the improvement of his good.
Urquhart, tr. of Rabelais, l. 28. (Davies.)

steadfast, stedfast (sted'fast), a. [< ME. sted-fast, stedfast, stidefast, stederest, studerest, <
AS. stedfast (= MD. stederast = Icel. stithfastr), firm in its place (cf. Sw. stadfästa = Dan. stadfæste, confirm, ratify), < stede, place, stead, + fast, fast.] 1. Firm; firmly fixed or established in place or position.

"Yes, yes," quod he, "this is the case,
Your Ice is ever stedfast in on place."
Gensydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2772.

Ye fleeting streams last long, outliving many a day;
But on more stedfast things Time makes the strongest prey. Drayton, Polyolbion, ii. 148.

2. Firm; unyielding; unwavering; constant; resolute.

Heavenly grace doth him uphold,
And stedfast truth acquite him out of all.

Spenser, F. Q., I. viii. 1.

Stedfast in the faith. I Pet. v. 9.

Through all his [Warren Hastings's] disasters and perils, his brethren stood by him with stedfast loyalty.
Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

3. Steady; unwavering; concentrated.

He loked fast on to hym in stede fast wise,
And thought alway his sonne that he shuld be.
Gensydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 414.

The homely villain court'sies to her low;
And, blushing on her, with a stedfast eye Receives the scroll without or yea or no.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1330.

=Syn. 2. Stanch, stable, unflinching.
steadfastly, stedfastly (sted'fast-li), adv. [<
ME. stedfastly, stedfastlic; < steadfast + -ly 2.]
1. In a steadfast manner. (a) Steadily; firmly; confidently; resolutely.

Hesiod maketh him [Orion] the sonne of Neptune and Euriale; to whom his father gaue that vertue, to walke as stedfastly vpon the sea as the land.
Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 177.

(b) Steadily; fixedly; intently.

Look on me stedfastly, and, whatsoever I say to you,
Move not, nor alter in your face.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, iv. 2.

(c) Assuredly; certainly.

Your woful mooder wende stedfastly
That eruel boundes or som foul vermyne Hadde eten yow. Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 1038.

steadfastness, stedfastness (sted'fast-nes), n. [< ME. stedfastnesse, stedfastnesse, stidefast-nesse; < steadfast + -ness.] 1. Firmness; strength.

Ryht softe as the myrre [marrow] is, that is alwey hidd in the feete al withinne, and that is defendid fro withoute by the stidefastnesse of wode.
Chaucer, Boethius, iii. prose II.

2. Stability and firmness; fixedness in place or position.

Forward did the mighty waters press,
As though they loved the green earth's steadfastness.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, l. 173.

3. Stability of mind or purpose; resolution; constancy; faithfulness; endurance.

What coude a sturdy husband more devyse
To preve hir wythod and hir stedfastnesse?
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 643.

steadier (sted'ī-ēr), n. One who or that which steadies; as, he uses his cane for a steadier.

steadily (sted'ī-li), adv. In a steady manner; firmly; fixedly; steadfastly; intently; without wavering or flinching; without intermission, deviation, or irregularity; uniformly.

steadiness (sted'ī-nes), n. Steady character, quality, or condition. (a) Firmness in position; stability: as, the steadiness of a rock. (b) Freedom from trotting, swaying, or staggering motion: as, he walked with great steadiness; freedom from jolting, rolling, pitching, or other irregular motion: as, the steadiness of the great ocean steamers. (c) Freedom from irregularity of any kind; uniformity: as, prices increased with great steadiness. (d) Firmness of mind or purpose; constancy; resolution: as, steadiness in the pursuit of an object. (e) Fortitude; endurance; staying power.

steading (sted'ing), n. [< stead + -ing 1.] A farm-house and offices—that is, barns, stables, cattle-sheds, etc.; a farmstead; a homestead.
[North. Eng. and Scotch.]

steady¹ (sted'ī), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also stedy, steddy; < ME. stede, stedi, stidig, < AS.
stæthþig (also stedig*, stedig*, Lye) (= Icel. stithþugr = Sw. Dan. stidig), steady, stable, < stæth, stead, bank; see stathe. Cf. MD. stedigh = OHG. stati, MHG. stete, stete(g), G. stättig, stetig, continual, < statt, etc., a place: see stead, to which steady is now referred.] 1. a. 1.
Firmly fixed in place or position; unmovable.

The knight gan fayrly couch his steady speare.
Spenser, F. Q., l. xi. 16.

And how the dull Earth's prop-less massie Ball Stands steddy still, in the midst of All.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 7.

2. Firm or unflinching in action; resolute: as, a steady stroke; a steady purpose.

All the Foot now dis-embark't, and got together in som order on firm ground, with a more steddy charge put the Britans to flight. Milton, Hist. Eng., ii.

With steady step he held his way
O'er shadowy vale and gleaming height.
Bryant, Two Travellers.

In this sense much used elliptically in command, for 'keep' or 'hold steady': (a) Naut., an order to the helmsman to keep the ship straight on her course. (b) In hunting, an order to a dog to be wary and careful.

3. Free from irregularity or unevenness, or from tendency to irregular motion; regular; constant; undeviating; uniform: as, steady motion; a steady light; a steady course; a steady breeze; a steady gait.—4. Constant in mind, purpose, or pursuit; not fickle, changeable, or wavering; not easily moved or persuaded to relinquish a purpose: as, to be steady in the pursuit of an object; steady conduct.

A clear sight keeps the understanding steady. Locke.

To keep us steady in our conduct, he hath fortified us with natural laws and principles, which are preventive of many aberrations. Kames, Elem. of Crit., l. x.

Hence—5. Sober; industrious; persevering; as, a steady workman.—Steady motion, a motion of a fluid such that the velocity at each point remains constant in magnitude and direction.—Steady pin. See pin.

II. n. 1. In much, some device for steadying or holding a piece of work. Specifically, in button-manuf., a hand-support for a button-blank, upon which, used in conjunction with another implement called a grip, the blank is held between the aligned rotating spindles carrying cutters for shaping it into the required form.
2. In stone-cutting, a support for blocking up a stone to be dressed, cut, or broken.—3.
Same as stadla.

steady¹ (sted'ī), v.; pret. and pp. steadied, ppr.
steadying. [< *steady*¹, a.] 1. trans. 1. To make steady; hold or keep from shaking, staggering, swaying, reeling, or falling; support; make or keep firm: as, to steady the hand.

Thus steadied, it [the house-martin] works and plasters the materials into the face of the brick or stone.
Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. Selborne, To D. Barrington, xvi.

Hence—2. To make regular and persevering in character and conduct: as, trouble and disappointment had steadied him.

II. intrans. To become steady; regain or maintain an upright or stable position or condition; move steadily.

She steadies with upright keel!
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, iii.

steady² (sted'ī), n. A dialectal form of stithy.
Job saith, Stetit cor ejus sicut incus: His heart stood as a steady. Bp. Jewell, Works, l. 523. (Davies.)

steady-going (sted'ī-gō'ing), a. Of steady habits; consistently uniform and regular in action; that steadily pursues a reasonable and consistent way: as, a steady-going fellow.

Sir George Burns appears to have been too steady-going through the whole of his long life for it to be marked by any of the exciting incidents that make the charm of biography. Athenæum, No. 3287, p. 545.

steady-rest (sted'ī-rest), n. Same as back-rest.

steak (stāk), n. [< ME. steike, steyke, < Icel.
steik, a steak, = Sw. stek = Dan. steg, roast meat, < Icel. steikja (= Sw. steka = Dan. steye), roast on a spit (cf. stikna, to be roasted or scorched), akin to stika, a stick: see *stiek*¹, *stiek*³.] 1. A slice of flesh, as beef, pork, venison, or halibut, broiled or fried, or cut for broiling or frying.

Steak of fleashe — charbonnee. Palsgrave, p. 275.

Fair ladies, number five,
Who, in your merry freaks,
With little Tom contrive
To feast on ale and steaks.
Swift, Five Ladies at So's Hole.

2†. A slash or panel in a garment.

Is that your lackey yonder, in the steaks of velvet?
Middleton, Phenix, i. 5.

Hamburg steak, raw beef, chopped fine, seasoned with onions, etc., formed into a cake, and cooked in a close frying-pan. — Porter-house steak. See porter-house. — Round steak, a steak from the round. — Rump steak. See rump-steak. — Tenderloin steak. See tenderloin.

steak-crusher (stāk'krush'ēr), n. A kitchen utensil for pounding, rolling, or otherwise crushing a steak before cooking, to make it tender.

steal¹ (stēl), v.; pret. stole, pp. stolen (formerly stole), pp. stealing. [< ME. stelen, stolon (pret. stal, stole, stel, pp. stolen, stolon, stole, i-stolen), < AS. stelan (pret. stal, pl. stolon, pp. stolon) = OS. stelan = OFries. stela = D. stelen = MLG. LiG. stelen = OHG. stelan, MHG. steln, G. stehlen = Icel. stela = Sw. stjåla = Dan. stjåle = Goth. stilan, steal. Connection with Gr. στερισκειν, στερειν, deprive of, is doubtful. Hence ult. *stole*¹, stealth. For another word for 'steal,' with L. and Gr. connections, see *lift*³.] I. trans. 1. To take feloniously; take and carry off clandestinely, and without right or leave; appropriate to one's own uses dishonestly, or without right, permission, or authority: as applied to persons, to kidnap; abduct: as, to steal some one's purse; to steal cattle; to steal a child.

When Grisandol saugh he was on slepe, she and hir fellows com as softly as thei myght, and stole away his staffe.
Martin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 425.

How then should we steal out of thy lord's house silver or gold?
Gen. xlv. 8.

2. To remove, withdraw, or abstract secretly or stealthily.
And from beneath his Head, at dawning Day,
With softest Care have stolen my Arm away.
Prior, Solomon, ii.

3†. To smuggle, literally or figuratively.
Pray Walsh to steal you in, as I hope he will do.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 187.

All the Spices and drugs that are brought to Mecca are stollen from thence as Contrabanda.
Uakhty's Voyages, II. 223.

4. To take or assume without right.
Oh, that deceit should steal such gentle shapes,
And with a virtuous vizard hide foul guile!
Shak., Rich. III., ii. 2. 27.

5. To obtain surreptitiously, or by stealth or surprise: as, to steal a kiss.
What sought these lovers then, by day, by night,
But stolen moments of disturbd delight?
Crabbe, Works, I. 43.

6. To entice or win by insidious arts or secret means.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stolen from mine eye!
Shak., Sonnets, xxxi.

Thou hast discovered some enchantment old Whose spells have stolen my spirit as I slept.
Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, ii. 1.

7. To perform, procure, or effect in a stealthy or underhand way; perform secretly; conceal the doing, performance, or accomplishment of.
And than lough Arthur, and seide to the kyng Ban that this marriage wolde he haue stole hadde no Merlin be.
Martin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 363.

I went this evening to visit a friend, with a design to rally him upon a story I had heard of his intending to steal a marriage without the privy of us his intimate friends and acquaintance.
Steele, Spectator, No. 133.

8. To move furtively and slyly: as, she stole her hand into his.
The 'prentice speaks his disrespect by an extended finger, and the porter by stealing out his tongue.
Steele, Spectator, No. 354.

9. In base-ball, to secure, as a base or run, without an error by one's opponents or a base-hit by the batter; to run successfully to, as from one base to the next, in spite of the efforts of one's opponents: as, to steal second base: sometimes used intransitively with to: as, to steal to second base. — 10. In netting, to take away (a mesh) by netting into two meshes of the preceding row at once. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 359. — To steal a by. See *by*¹. — To steal a march, to march secretly; anticipate or forestall, or otherwise gain an advantage stealthily, or by address. — To steal overt, to smuggle.

In the Flushing and Low Country's troublesome disorders, some few (by stealing over of victuals and other things from this commonwealth) have made themselves privately rich. Dr. J. Dee (Arber's Eng. Garner, II. 69).

= Syn. 1. To filch, pilfer, purloin, embezzle. See pillage, n. II. intrans. 1. To practise or be guilty of theft. Thou shalt not steal. Ex. xx. 15.

2. To move stealthily or secretly; creep softly; pass, approach, or withdraw surreptitiously and unperceived; go or come furtively; slip or creep along insidiously, silently, or unperceived; make insinuating approach: as, to steal into the house at dusk; the fox stole away: sometimes used reflexively.
Age is so on me stolen that y mote to god me gilde.
Hymus to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 72.

Fix'd of mind . . . to fly all company, one night she stole away.
Sir P. Sidney.

He will steal himself into a man's favour, and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries.
Shak., All's Well, iii. 6. 98.

But what has made Sir Peter steal off? I thought he had been with you. Sheridan, School for Scandal, iv. 3.
Ever does natural beauty steal in like air, and envelop great actions.
Emerson, Misc., p. 25.

steal¹ (stēl), n. [*< steal*¹, v.] An act or a case of theft: as, an official steal; specifically, in base-ball, a stolen or furtive run from one base to another: as, a steal to third base. See *steal*¹, v. 1., 9.

steal² (stēl), n. Same as *steal*².

stealer (stē'lēr), n. [*< steal*¹ + *-er*¹.] 1. One who steals, in any sense; especially, a thief: as, a cattle-stealer.
The transgression is in the stealer.
Shak., Much Ado, ii. 1. 233.

Specifically — 2. In ship-building, the foremost or aftmost plank in a strake, which is dropped short of the stem or stern-post and butts against a notch or jog in another plank. Also called stealing-strake.

When the girth of the ship at the midship section is so much in excess of each or either of those at the extremities as to cause the plates to be very narrow if the same number were retained right fore and aft, it becomes necessary to introduce stealers — that is to say, to cause certain plates to stop somewhere between the extremities and midships, and thus reduce the number of strakes which end on the stem and stern post.
Thearle, Naval Arch., § 138.

stealing (stē'ling), n. [Verbal n. of *steal*¹, v.] 1. The act of one who steals; theft.

Men are apt to condemn whatever they hear called stealing as an ill action, disagreeing with the rule of right.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxviii. 16.

2. That which is stolen; stolen property: used chiefly in the plural: as, his stealings amounted to thousands of dollars.

stealingly (stē'ling-li), adv. [< ME. stecndlich; < stealing, pp., + *-ly*².] By stealing; slyly; secretly. [Rare.]

stealing-strake (stē'ling-strāk), n. Same as stealer, 2.

stealth (stelth), n. [Early mod. E. also stelh; < ME. stelthe, stalthe (= Icel. stuldr = Sw. stöld), stealth, with abstract formative -th, < AS. stelan, steal: see *steal*¹. Another form, from the Scand., is stouth. The older noun was *stole*¹. Cf. health, *heal*¹, wealth, *weal*¹.] 1†. The act of stealing; theft.

Yf that Licurgus should have made it death for the Lacedemonians to steale, they being a people which naturally delighted in stealth. . . there should have bene few Lacedemonians then left.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

2†. A thing stolen.
On his backe a heavy load he bare
Of nightly *stelh*s, and pillage severall.
Spenser, F. Q., I. iii. 16.

3. A secret or clandestine method or proceeding; means secretly employed to gain an object; surreptitious way or manner: used in a good or a bad sense.
Yet it were oon that wolde assay hym-self in eny strange turnement by stelh the vnknonen when thi were disiged that thi wolde not be knowe fill thi hadde renouee of grete prowess.
Martin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 502.

Let humble Allen, with an awkward shame,
Do good by stelh, and blush to find it fame.
Pope, Epil., to Satires, i. 136.

4†. A secret going; a stolen or clandestine visit.
I told him of your stelh unto this wood.
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 310.

stealthful (stelth'fūl), a. [< stealth + -ful.] Given to stealth; bent on stealing; stealthy. Chapman, tr. of Homer's Hymn to Hermes, 1. 369.

stealthfully (stelth'fūl-i), adv. By stealing; stealthily.

stealthfulness (stelth'fūl-nes), n. Stealthiness.

stealthily (stel'thi-li), adv. In a stealthy manner; by stealth.

stealthiness (stel'thi-nes), n. Stealthy character or action.

stealthy (stel'thi), a. Acting by stealth; sly; secretive in act or manner; employing concealed methods: as, a stealthy foe; characterized by concealment; furtive: as, a stealthy proceeding; a stealthy movement.

Murder . . . with his stealthy pace.
Shak., Macbeth, ii. 1. 54.

Footfalls of stealthy men he seemed to hear.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 321.

See where the stealthy partner left his tracks!
O. W. Holmes, A Family Record.

steam (stēm), n. [< ME. steem, stem, < AS. steim, vapor, smell, smoke, = Fries. stamme = D. stoom, steam; origin unknown.] 1. Vapor: a rising vapor; an exhalation.

Fough! what a steam of brimstone
Is here!
B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, v. 4.

2. Water in a gaseous state; the gas or vapor of water, especially at temperatures above 100° C. It has a specific gravity of .625 as compared with air under the same pressure. It liquefies at 100° C. (212° F.), under a pressure of 14.7 pounds upon a square inch, or the mean pressure of the atmosphere at the sea-level. The temperature at which it liquefies diminishes with the pressure. Steam constantly rises from the surface of liquid water when not obstructed by impervious inclosures or covered by another gas already saturated with it. Its total latent heat of vaporization (1 pound weight under a pressure of 76 centimeters of mercury (or 14.7 pounds to the square inch) is 965.7 British thermal units, or 536.5 calories for each kilogram. Its specific heat under constant pressure is .485. (Regnault.) It is decomposed into oxygen and hydrogen at temperatures between 1,000° and 2,000° C. (Deville.) In addition to the surface evaporation of water, the change from the liquid to the gaseous state takes place beneath the surface (the gas escaping with ebullition) whenever the temperature of the liquid is raised without a corresponding increase of pressure upon it. The temperature at which this occurs under any particular pressure is the boiling-point for that pressure. The boiling-point of water under the atmospheric pressure at the sea-level is 100° C. or 212° F. Saturated steam has the physical properties common to all gases whose temperatures are near those of their liquefying-points, or the boiling-points of their liquids. Saturated steam when isolated, and superheated at temperatures from 100° to 110° C., and under constant pressure, expands with a given increase of temperature about five times as much as air, and at 180° C. about twice as much as air; and it must be raised to a temperature much higher than this before it will expand uniformly like air. The large quantity of latent heat in steam, its great elasticity, and the ease with which it may be condensed have rendered its use in engines more practicable than that of any other gaseous medium for the generation and application of mechanical power.

3. Water in a visible vesicular condition produced by the condensation of vapor of water in air. — 4. Figuratively, force; energy. [Colloq.]

5†. A flame or blaze; a ray of light.
Steem, or lowe of fyre. Flamma. Prompt. Parv., p. 473.

Absolute steam-pressure. See pressure. — Dead steam. Same as exhaust-steam. — Dry steam, saturated steam without any admixture of mechanically suspended water. — High-pressure steam, low-pressure steam. See pressure. — Live steam, steam which has performed no work, or only part of its work, or which is or might be available for the performance of work in an engine. — Saturated steam, steam in contact with water at the same temperature. In this condition the steam is always at its condensing-point, which is also the boiling-point of the water with which it is in contact. In this it differs from superheated steam of equal tension, which has a temperature higher than its condensing-point at that tension, and higher than the boiling-point of water under the same pressure. — Specific steam-volume, in thermodynamics, the volume which a unit of weight of steam assumes under specific conditions of temperature and pressure. — Steam fire-engine. See fire-engine, 2. — Steam jet-pump. See *pump*¹. — Steam vacuum-pump. See vacuum-pump. — Superheated steam, steam which at any stated pressure has a higher temperature, and for any particular weight of it a greater volume, than saturated steam (which see, above) at the same pressure. Also called steam-gas. — Total heat of steam. Same as steam-heat, 1. — Wet steam, steam holding water mechanically suspended, the water being in the form of spray or vesicles, or both.

steam (stēm), v. [Early mod. E. also stem; < ME. stemen, < AS. stēman, stīman (= D. stoomen), steam, < stem, vapor, steam: see steam, n.] I. intrans. 1. To give out steam or vapor; exhale any kind of fume or vapor.
Ye mists, . . . that . . . rise
From hill or steaming lake.
Milton, P. L., v. 186.

2. To rise in a vaporous form; pass off in visible vapor.
When the last deadly smoke aloft did steeme.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xii. 2.

3. To move or travel by the agency of steam: as, the vessel steamed into port.
We steamed quietly on, past . . . the crowds of yachts at Ryde, and dropped anchor off Cowes.
Lady Brassey, Voyage of Sunbeam I. i.

4†. To flame or blaze up.

His eyes steepe and rolling in his heede,
That steamede us a forneys a leede.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 202.
Steynyn, or lowyn vp. Flammio. Prompt. Parv., p. 473.
Two steynnyng eyes. W'gatt, Satires, l. 53.
II. trans. 1. To exhale; evaporate. [Rare.]
In slouthfull sleepe his molten hart to steme.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vi. 27.

tubes are reached for cleaning; g, ash-pit; h, grate; i, steam-dome; j, safety-valve; k, steam-pipe; l, bridge-wall; m, combustion-chamber; n, back connection for passage of Horizontal Cylindrical Tubular Steam-boiler.

A, vertical longitudinal section; B, vertical cross-section.

the gases of combustion into the rear ends of the tubes; o, flue in the masonry; p, uptake; q, flanged head; r, tubes; s, side-bars which support the masonry; t, dead-air spaces in the masonry in which the air acts as a heat-insulator. The course of the gases of combustion is indicated by arrows.—Locomotive steam-boiler, a tubular boiler which has a contained furnace and ash-pit, and in which the gases of combustion pass from the furnace directly into horizontal interior tubes (instead of passing first under the boiler, as in the horizontal cylindrical tubular boiler), and after passing through the tubes are conveyed directly into the smoke-box at the opposite end of the tubes. The name is derived from the use of such boilers on locomotive engines, but it is typical in its application to all boilers having the construction described, and used for generating steam for stationary or portable engines, as well as for locomotives.—Marine steam-boiler, a boiler specially designed and adapted for supplying steam to marine engines. Compactness, as little weight as is consistent with strength, effective steaming capacity, and economy in consumption of fuel are the prime requisites of marine boilers. They are usually tubular, and short in proportion to their width, and have water-legs at the sides and water-spaces below and at the backs of their furnaces—that is, their furnaces are entirely surrounded by water spaces except at the openings for the doors. Marine boilers are now sometimes used with forced draft—that is, air is forced from the outside into the boiler or fire-rooms (which are sometimes made air-tight) or immediately into the fires by powerful blowers.—Return-flue steam-boiler, a horizontal flue-boiler with one or more interior flues through which the gases of combustion are returned to the front end of the boiler after having passed to the rear from the furnace over the bridge-wall and under the bottom of the shell.—Rotary tubular steam-boiler. See rotary.—Sectional safety steam-boiler, a sectional boiler in which the water is divided into numerous small masses connected with one another by passages large enough for free circulation from one to the other, but not large enough to permit so sudden a release of pressure, in case of rupture of one of the sections, as to cause an explosion.—Tubular steam-boiler, a boiler a prominent feature of which is a series of either fire- or water-tubes.—Vertical steam-boiler, a steam-boiler in which the heating-surface of the tubes or flues is in a vertical position. When constructed with fire-tubes, it is called a vertical tubular boiler.

steam-box (stēm'boks), n. A reservoir for steam above a boiler; a steam-chest.
steam-brake (stēm'brāk), n. A brake applied by the action of steam admitted to a steam-cylinder the piston of which is connected by rods to the levers which apply the brake-shoes.
steam-car (stēm'kär), n. A car drawn or driven by steam-power; a railway-car. [U. S.]
steam-carriage (stēm'kar'āj), n. A road-carriage driven by steam-power.
steam-case (stēm'käs), n. Same as steam-chest.
steam-chamber (stēm'chäm'bēr), n. 1. A box or chamber in which articles are placed to be steamed.—2. A steam-chest.—3. A steam-dome.—4. The steam-room or steam-space in a boiler or engine.
steam-chest (stēm'chest), n. 1. The chamber in which the slide-valve of a steam-engine works. See cuts under passenger-engine, rock-drill, and slide-valve.—2. In calico-printing, a metallic vessel or tank in which printed cloths are steamed to fix their colors.
steam-chimney (stēm'chim'ni), n. An annular chamber around the chimney of a boiler-furnace for superheating steam.
steam-cock (stēm'kok), n. A faucet or valve in a steam-pipe.
steam-coil (stēm'koil), n. A coil of pipe, either made up flat with return bends or in spiral form, used to impart heat to a room or other inclosed space or to a liquid, or by exposure of its exterior surface to air-currents or contact of cold water, to act as a condenser.
steam-color (stēm'kul'ör), n. In dyeing, a color which is developed and fixed by the action of steam after the cloth is printed.
steam-crane (stēm'krän), n. A crane worked by steam, frequently carrying the steam-engine upon the same frame.
steam-cutter (stēm'kut'ēr), n. A ship's boat, smaller than a launch, propelled by steam.
steam-cylinder (stēm'sil'in-dēr), n. The cylinder in which the piston of a steam-engine reciprocates.—Starting steam-cylinder. Same as starting-engine.

steam-dome (stēm'döm), n. A chamber connected with the steam-space and projecting above the top of a steam-boiler. From it the steam passes to the cylinder of a steam-engine, or to steam-heating apparatus. See cut under steam-boiler.
steam-dredger (stēm'drej'ēr), n. A dredging-machine operated by steam.
steam-engine (stēm'en'jin), n. An engine in which the mechanical force arising from the elasticity and expansive action of steam, or from its property of rapid condensation, or from the combination of the two, is made available as a motive power. The invention of the steam-engine has been ascribed by the English to the Marquis of Worcester, who published an account of it about the middle of the seventeenth century. By the French the invention has been ascribed to Papin, toward the close of the same century. Papin's plan contained the earliest suggestion of a vacuum under a piston by the agency of steam. The first actual working steam-engine of which there is any record was invented and constructed by Captain Savery, an Englishman, to whom a patent was granted for it in 1698. This engine was employed to raise water by the expansion and condensation of steam. The steam-engine received great improvements from the hands of Newcomen, Beighton, and others. Still it was imperfect and rude in its construction, and was chiefly applied to the draining of mines or the raising of water. Up to this time it was properly an atmospheric engine (see atmospheric), for the actual moving power was the pressure of the atmosphere, the steam only producing a vacuum under the piston. The steam-engine was brought to a high state of perfection by James Watt about the year 1782. The numerous and vital improvements introduced by him, both in the combination of its mechanism and in the economy of its management, have rendered the steam-engine at once the most powerful, the most easily applied and regulated, and generally speaking the least expensive of all prime movers for im-

Steam-engine (Corliss Engine).

(The upper figure is a front view, the under a rear view.)

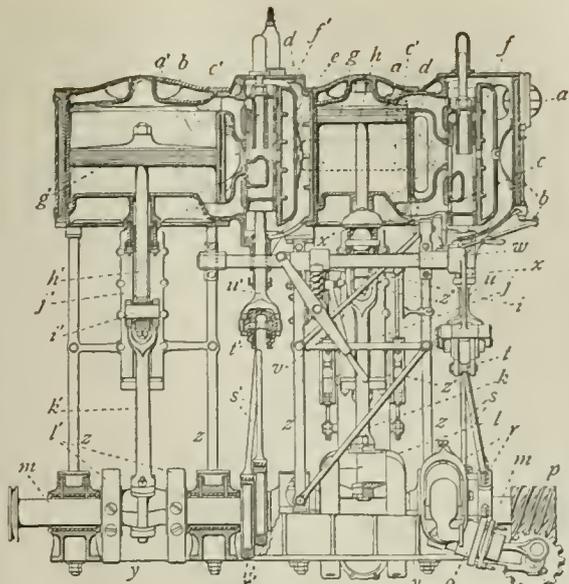

The steam-valve A and exhaust-valve A' are independent of each other, and have cylindrical bearing-surfaces. An oscillatory motion is given to them by rods B, connecting with an oscillating disk C (wrist-plate) upon the side of the steam-cylinder, which is worked by an intermediate rock-lever D, driven by the eccentric-rod E, connected with an eccentric upon the main shaft. The motions of the exhaust-valves are positive, but those of the inlet-valve are varied by means of spring-catches a, which are adjustable to determine the points of opening and the range of motion of the valves, and are also controlled in their disengagement of the valve-stems by the governor F, rock-lever G, connecting-rods H, and rock-levers I, all connected together in such manner that an extremely small increase or decrease of speed in the rotation of the fly-wheel shaft causes the inlet-valves to be released and to close correspondingly earlier or later in the stroke. The closing is performed by exterior weights suspended from short levers on the valve-stems by the rods K, the motion of closing being controlled by dash-pots at a, only the covers of which are shown. The other parts of the engine, which are common to most reciprocating engines, are 1, the bed-plate; 2, cylinder; 3, piston; 4, piston-rod; 5, stuffing-box; 6, sliding-rod or cross-head; 7, connecting-rod or pitman; 8, rod-end fitted to o, the crank-wrist; 9, fly-wheel; 10, crank keyed to 7, the crank-shaft; 11, centrifugal lubricating tube; 12, steam-pipe; 13, lubricator; 14, exhaust-pipe.

pling machinery of every description. The steam-engine is properly a heat-engine, and the total work L is expressed theoretically by the equation in which Q represents the total heat converted into work per unit of weight, G weight of steam, and A the thermal equivalent of a unit of work, while T₁ and T are respectively the higher and lower limits of temperature between which the steam is worked, T₁ being the absolute temperature at which the steam is admitted to the engine, and T the absolute temperature at which it is exhausted from it. Inspection of the equation shows that the work performed must vary directly as the factor (T₁ - T) varies—that is, the greater the difference which can be maintained between the temperature of induction and that of eduction the greater is the amount of work performed by any given weight of steam. It is in accordance with this law that much higher steam-pressures are now adopted than were formerly employed. The factor (T₁ - T) is commonly called the temperature range or fall. The varieties of steam-engines are extremely numerous. (For names of various types, with explanations of their characteristic features, see below.) The specific differences between steam-engines of the same type of construction consist chiefly in their valve-gear. (See valve-gear, governor, 6, regulator, n., slide-valve (with cut), and piston-valve.) Of the total steam-power employed in modern industry on land, that supplied by steam-engines of the horizontal type far exceeds that furnished by steam-engines of all other types put together. Vertical direct-acting engines of large size are little used, but small engines of this type are much employed. Steam-engines of the rotary type are scarcely used except for some kinds of steam hoisting-engines. Double, triple, and quadruple expansion steam-engines are now largely used in marine engineering. Many double expansion stationary engines are in use, and the economical value of the compound system has been demonstrated both theoretically and practically.—Agricultural steam-engine, a portable engine with a boiler, often specially adapted to burn light fuel, as chaff or straw, either by itself or in connection with wood or coal.—Annular steam-engine, a steam-engine having an annular piston working in an annular steam-cylinder, and having two diametrically placed piston-rods connected by the cross-head, the latter also being connected by rods to a guide-block working in the hollow cylinder forming the center of the annular steam-cylinder, this guide-block being connected with the crank by a pitman.—Atmospheric steam-engine. See atmospheric engine, under atmospheric.—Beam steam-engine, an engine in which a working-beam connects the connecting-rod with the crank-pitman, and transmits power from one to the other. See beam-engine.—Compound steam-engine, a steam-engine having two steam-cylinders of unequal size, from the smaller of which the steam, after use, passes into the larger cylinder, and completes its work by expanding against the piston in the latter.—Concentric steam-engine. Same as rotary steam-engine.—Condensing steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the exhaust-steam is condensed, for the purpose of removing the back-pressure of the atmosphere from the exhaust, and also to economize fuel by saving heat otherwise wasted. See condenser, and cut under pulsometer.—Cornish steam-engine, a single-acting condensing steam pumping-engine, first used in the mines of Cornwall. It is also used as a pumping-engine for supplying water to cities. Steam-pressure is not used to raise the water, but to lift a long loaded pump-rod, whose weight in its descent is the power employed to force up the water. The motion is regulated by a kind of hydraulic regulator invented by Smeaton, and called a cataraet.—Direct-acting steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the power of the piston is transmitted to the crank without the intervention of levers, side-beams, or a working-beam.—Disk steam-engine, a form of rotary engine in which the steam-pistons act successively against a revolving disk set at an angle to the plane of rotation, thus imparting a gyratory motion to a central shaft upon which the disk is mounted, the end of this shaft being connected with a crank turning in the plane of rotation.—Double-acting steam-engine, the ordinary form of steam-engine, in which the steam acts upon both sides of the piston.—Double-cylinder steam-engine, a steam-engine having two steam-cylinders acting in combination with each other. See compound steam-engine.—Double expansion steam-engine. (a) A double-cylinder steam-engine in which steam is used expansively. (b) A compound steam-engine.—Double steam-engine, a steam-engine having two cylinders in which the pistons make either simultaneous or alternate strokes and are connected with the same crank-shaft.—Duplex steam-engine. Same as double steam-engine.—High-pressure steam-engine. See high pressure, under pressure.—High-speed steam-engine, a somewhat indefinite name for a reciprocating engine working at a high speed as compared with the much slower speed of engines with the Corliss and other a, high-pressure cylinder; b, low-pressure cylinder; c, induction- and eduction-valve for a in position of exhaust from lower end and of induction to upper end of cylinder; d, passage for steam from a to b; e, induction- and eduction-valve for b; f, f', balance-plates for valves of a and b; g, e', pistons; h, h', piston-rods; i, r, cross-heads; j, j', slipper-guides for cross-heads; k, k', connecting-rods; l, l', cranks; m, crank-shaft; n, shaft which drives feed-pump o and also bilge-pump (not shown on the opposite side); p, worm on main shaft gearing into worm-wheel q on the shaft n, and actuating pump-plungers by crank and pitman connection; r, r', eccentrics; s, s', eccentric-rods; t, t', links connected by link-blocks with valve-stems u, u'; v, crank-lever which turns a segmental worm-gear, keyed to the rock-shaft w carrying the rock-arms x, x', for reversing high-pressure and low-pressure valves respectively; y, bed-plate; z, columns supporting the cylinders; z', tie-rods for stiffening the columns; a', exhaust from low-pressure cylinder to the condenser (not shown); a'', butterfly throttle-valve; b', gear for operating throttle-valve; c, relief-valves.

$$L = QG(T_1 - T) / AT_1,$$

Double Expansion Marine Steam-engine.

piston. The name is sometimes given to reciprocating engines which have a fly-wheel and crank-shaft. E. H. Knight.—Rotary steam-engine. Same as rotary steam-engine.—Semi-portable steam-engine, a steam-engine which is movable with its foundation-plate, as distinguished from an engine mounted on wheels, and from one resting on a fixed foundation.—Triple expansion steam-engine, a steam-engine that expands its steam in three successive stages and in three separate and distinct cylinders, one taking its steam from the boiler, and each of the others taking its steam from the exhaust of the cylinder working at the next higher pressure. This type of marine engine is found at the present time on many of the swiftest steamships, but may be in turn superseded by the quadruple expansion-engine.—Vertical steam-engine, a steam-engine whose piston reciprocates vertically.

steamer (stē'mēr), n. [steam + -er.] One who or that which steams, in any sense. Specifically—(a) A steam-box. (b) A person employed in steaming oysters in shucking them for canning. (c) In calico-printing, one who steams printed cloth for fixing steam-colors. (d) One who steams wood for bending, etc. (e) A steam-generator or boiler: as, the boiler is an excellent steamer. (f) Especially, a vessel propelled by steam; a steamship. (g) A fire-engine the pumps of which are worked by steam. (h) A vessel in which articles are subjected to the action of steam, as in washing or cooking. See steam-chest, 2. (1) In paper-making, a vessel in which old paper, fiber, etc., are treated in order to soften them. (2) An apparatus for steaming grain preparatory to grinding. (i) A locomotive for roads. See road-steamer.

steamer-cap (stē'mēr-kap), n. Same as fore-and-aft, 2.

steamer-duck (stē'mēr-duk), n. A South American duck of the genus Micropterus (or Tachyeres): a race-horse. See Micropterus, 2. This duck becomes when adult incapable of flight, but swims very rapidly, with a movement which has suggested the action of a side-wheel steamboat (whence the name).

steam-excavator (stēm'eks'kā-vā-tōr), n. Same as navy, 3.

steam-fountain (stēm'foun'tān), n. See fountain.

steam-gage (stēm'gāj), n. An attachment to a boiler to indicate the pressure of steam; a pressure-gage. There are many forms. One of the older is a bent tube partially filled with mercury, one end of which connects with the boiler, so that the steam raises a, hollow bent tube attached to case at a', and receiving condensed water or steam under pressure through the opening at c; b, connecting end of tube with short arm of rock-lever e, which has at the upper end a small rack interfering with a pinion on the spindle of the index d; f, small coiled spring which acts upon the spindle of the index or pointer in a direction opposed to the action of the rack and pinion; g, dial, on which the figures indicate pressures (in pounds) above the atmospheric pressure.

Steam-gage (Ashcroft's).

the mercury according to the amount of pressure. A very common form of gage is that known as Bourdon's, which consists essentially of a flattened metal tube, closed at one end and bent circularly, into which the steam is admitted. As such a tube tends to straighten itself out by the force of the steam, the amount of pressure can easily be ascertained by an attached index-apparatus.—Electric steam-gage, an attachment to a steam-boiler for indicating at a distance the pressure of the steam. One form consists of a bent tube filled with mercury, which, as it rises under the pressure, closes a series of electrical circuits after the manner of a thermostat. Another form employs the expansion or movement of an ordinary steam-gage diaphragm as a circuit-closer. The closing of the circuit in each case serves to sound an alarm.

steam-gas (stēm'gās), n. Same as superheated steam (which see, under steam).

steam-generator (stēm'jen'ē-rā-tōr), n. A steam-boiler.

steam-governor (stēm'gūv'ēr-nōr), n. See governor, 6.

steam-gun (stēm'gūn), n. A gun the projectile force of which is derived from the expansion of steam issuing through the shotted tube.

steam-hammer (stēm'ham'ēr), n. A forging-hammer operated by steam-power. It has assumed several forms, but now consists of a vertical and inverted steam-cylinder with piston and piston-rod (the rod passing through the lower cylinder-head and carrying at the e d a mass of metal which forms the hammer, an anvil directly beneath the hammer and cylinder, a supporting framework, and suitable valves for the control of the steam. Steam is used to raise and may also be used to drive down the hammer. By means of the valve-system, steam is admitted below the piston to raise the hammer and to sustain it while the metal to be forged is placed on the anvil. To deliver a blow, the steam is exhausted below the piston, and the hammer is allowed to fall by its own weight. To augment the blow, live steam may be admitted above the piston to assist in driving it downward. To deliver a gentle blow, the exhaust-steam below the piston may be retained to act as a cushion. Blows can be delivered at any point of the stroke, quickly or slowly, lightly or with the full power of the combined weight of the hammer and force of steam-pressure; or the machine may be used as a vise or squeezer. All modern steam-hammers of the type described are modifications of the original Nasmyth steam-hammer illustrated in the cut. Steam-

Steam-hammer (Nasmyth's).

a, anvil; b, frame; c, hammer-head; d, guides; e, piston-rod; f, valve-chests containing valves that control induction of steam to and eduction from the cylinder; h, h', steam-pipe; g, rock-lever (moved by the rod i) connected with the valve-stems and moving the valves; j, tripping-mechanism by which the hammer is caused to descend from any part of the upstroke, the adjusting gear k being manipulated by a workman standing on the platform l.

hammers of the largest class have been made with hammers weighing eighty tons. Another type of steam-hammer consists of two horizontal steam-cylinders placed in line, the hammers meeting over an anvil on which the forging rests.

steam-heat (stēm'hēt), n. 1. In thermodynamics, the total heat required to produce steam at any tension from water at 0° C. or 32° F. It is the sum of the sensible heat and the latent heat expressed in thermal units.—2. Heat imparted by the condensation of steam in coils, pipes, or radiators.

steam-hoist (stēm'hoist), n. A lift or elevator operated by a steam-engine.

steam-house (stēm'hous), n. In oyster-canning, a house or room where oysters are steamed.

steaminess (stēm'i-nēs), n. Steamy or vaporous character or quality; mistiness.

steam-jacket (stēm'jak'et), n. An inclosure adapted for receiving steam, and applying the heat of the steam to a kettle, tank, steam-cylinder, etc., surrounded by such inclosure.

steam-jet (stēm'jet), n. A blast of steam caused to issue from a nozzle.

steam-joint (stēm'joint), n. A joint that is steam-tight.

steam-kettle (stēm'ket'l), n. A vessel heated by steam, and used for various purposes. The types of valve-gears. In general it may be said that engines of considerable power, making one hundred turns per minute and upward, are high-speed engines.—Horizontal steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the piston works horizontally.—Inclined-cylinder steam-engine, a form of marine engine having cylinders inclined to the horizontal.—Inverted-cylinder steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the cross-head is placed below the cylinder. This construction is much used for marine engines, and to some extent for stationary engines.—Low-pressure steam-engine. See low pressure, under pressure.—Marine steam-engine, a steam-engine specially designed for marine propulsion. The best modern types are condensing, short-stroke, double, triple, or quadruple expansion-engines of the inverted-cylinder type. Marine engines for steam-tugs are for the most part single and often non-condensing. See cut in next column.—Non-condensing steam-engine, an engine that exhausts its steam without condensation. See non-condensing.—Oscillating steam-engine, a steam-engine whose cylinder oscillates on trunnions and has its piston-rod directly connected with the crank. Double engines of this type have been considerably used for marine propulsion, and some are still employed.—Overhead steam-engine. See overhead.—Quadruple expansion steam-engine, a steam-engine which, taking its steam at high pressure, expands it in four different operations successively, and in four distinct and separate steam-cylinders. The pistons of the cylinders are connected by piston-rods, cross-heads, and connecting-rods with cranks attached to a common shaft, to which rotary motion is imparted by the coacting pistons.—Reciprocating steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the power of steam is applied to a reciprocating piston.—Revolving-cylinder steam-engine, a steam engine of which the cylinder is so mounted that it is caused to rotate by the reciprocation of the piston. Compare rotary steam-engine.—Rotary steam-engine, a steam-engine in which the piston rotates in the cylinder, or the cylinder upon the steam for heating is usually applied by induction to a steam-jacket surrounding the sides and inclosing the bottom of the kettle.

steam-kitchen (stēm'kich'en), n. An apparatus for cooking by steam.

steam-launch (stēm'lānch), n. See launch.

steam-motor (stēm'mō'tor), n. A steam-engine.

steam-navigation (stēm'nav-i-gā'shon), n. The art of applying the power of steam to the propulsion of boats and vessels; the art of navigating steam-vessels.

steam-navvy (stēm'nav'i), n. A digging-machine or excavator actuated by steam.

steam-organ (stēm'ēr'gan), n. Same as cali-hope, 2.

steam-oven (stēm'uv'n), n. An oven heated by steam at high pressure.

steam-packet (stēm'pak'et), n. A packet propelled by steam. Compare packet, n., 2.

steam-pan (stēm'pan), n. A vessel with a double bottom forming a steam-chamber. See vacuum-pan.

steam-pipe (stēm'pip), n. Any pipe in which steam is conveyed. Specifically—(a) A pipe which leads from a boiler to an engine, pan, tank, etc., or from the boiler to a condenser or to the open air. (b) In a steam-heating or drying apparatus or system, a name given to any one of the steam-supply pipes, in contradistinction to the corresponding return-pipe through which water of condensation is returned to the boiler.

steam-plow (stēm'plou), n. A gang-plow designed to be drawn by a wire rope, and operated by steam-power. Such a plow has usually eight shares arranged in a frame, four pointing in one direction and four in the other. The frame is balanced on a pair of wheels in the center, and forms an angle in the middle, so that when one half the plows are in use the others are raised above the ground. Steam-plows are used with either one or two engines. If with two engines, the plow is drawn forward and backward between them, each engine being advanced the width of the furrows after each passage of the plow. If one engine only is used, snatch-blocks and movable anchors are employed to hold the rope, the anchors being automatically advanced after each passage of the plow. Traction-engines also have been used to drag plows. See anchor, porter, 2, and plow.

steam-port (stēm'pōrt), n. 1. In a slide-valve steam-engine, the name given to each of two oblong passages from the steam-chest to the inside of the cylinder, which afford passage to the steam to and from the cylinder, and act alternately as an induction-port and an eduction-port. See cut under slide-valve.—2. A passage for steam into or out of any inclosure.

steam-power (stēm'pou'ēr), n. The power of steam applied to move machinery or produce any other result.

steam-press (stēm'pres), n. A press actuated by steam-power acting directly or indirectly; specifically, a printing-press worked by steam.

steam-printing (stēm'prin'ting), n. Printing done by machinery moved by steam, as opposed to printing by hand-labor on hand-presses.

steam-propeller (stēm'prō-pel'ēr), n. Same as screw propeller (which see, under screw 1).

steam-pump (stēm'pump), n. See pump 1 and vacuum-pump.

steam-radiator (stēm'rā'di-ā-tōr), n. A nest or collection of iron pipes in ranks or coils, through which steam is passed to heat a room, etc. See cut under radiator.

steam-ram (stēm'ram), n. See ram 2, 2.

steam-regulator (stēm'reg'ū-lā-tōr), n. See regulator, 2.

steam-room (stēm'rōm), n. In a steam-engine, etc., the space which is occupied by steam.

steamship (stēm'ship), n. A ship propelled by steam.

steam-space (stēm'spās), n. A space occupied, or designed to be occupied, by steam only; particularly, in a steam-boiler, the space allowed above the water-line for holding a quantity of steam.

steam-table (stēm'tā'bl), n. 1. A bench or table fitted with shallow steam-tight tanks; used in restaurants, etc., to keep cooked dishes warm.—2. A tabular arrangement of data relating to steam-pressures, temperatures, and quantities of heat.

steam-tank (stēm'tangk), n. A chamber or inclosed vessel in which materials of any kind are treated either by direct contact with steam or with steam-heat by means of pipes coiled in the tank or a steam-jacket. Such tanks are used in many industries, and are made in many forms, for steaming wood, paper-stock, lard, etc. See rendering-tank.

steam-tight (stēm'tit), a. Capable of resisting the passage of steam, as a joint in a steam-pipe.

steam-toe (stēm'tō), n. In a steam-engine, a projection on a lifting-rod, which is raised by it through the action of a cam, tappet, or wiper.

steam-trap (stēm'trap), n. A contrivance for permitting the passage of water of condensation out of pipes, radiators, steam-engine cylinders, etc., while preventing that of steam.

steam-tug (stēm'tug), n. A steamer used for towing ships, boats, rafts, fishing-nets, oyster-dredges, etc. Such vessels are furnished with engines very powerful in proportion to the size of their hulls, and usually carry only sufficient coal for short trips.—Steam-tug heart-murmur, the combination of an aortic regurgitant with an aortic obstructive murmur.

steam-valve (stēm'valv), n. A valve which controls the opening of a steam-pipe or steam-port.

steam-vessel (stēm'ves'el), n. Same as steam-ship.

steam-wagon (stēm'wag'on), n. Same as steam-carriage.

steam-wheel (stēm'hwēl), n. A rotary steam-engine. See steam-engine.

steam-whistle (stēm'hwis'l), n. A sounding device connected with the boiler of a steam-

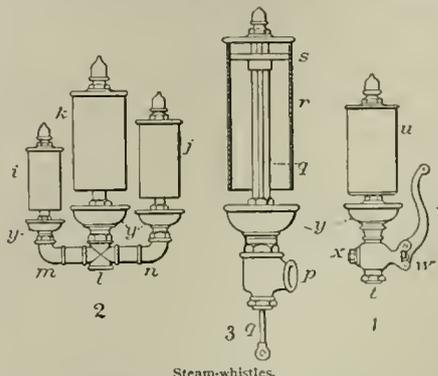

Fig. 1 is the simplest form of steam-whistle, with adjustable lever z, which acts on the valve x, its motion being limited by a stop-pin at u. Steam passes through a pipe connected at l when the valve x is opened. The steam issues through openings in the base y, and, passing over the lower edge of the bell n, causes a powerful vibration producing the sound, the pitch of which depends upon the length of the bell. Fig. 2 is a chime-whistle consisting of three bells, i, j, k, tuned to emit the common chord or some inversion of it. It receives steam at l, and by branches m, n, together with l, distributes it to the several bases y. Fig. 3 is a piston-whistle. Its base y and bell r operate as described for the other whistles, the steam entering at p. The tone of the whistle is changed by moving up and down the piston s by means of the stem q.

engine, either stationary, locomotive, or marine, for the purpose of announcing hours of work, signaling, etc.

steam-winch (stēm'winch), n. A form of winch or hoisting-apparatus in which rotatory motion is imparted to the winding axle from the piston-rod of a steam-engine, directly, or indirectly by means of bevel-gearing, the direct action giving most rapidity, the indirect most power.

steam-worm (stēm'wērm), n. A spiral steam-coil. Such coils are used in tanks for heating liquids, as tan-liquor in tanneries, water in laundries, dye-works, etc., the liquid being placed in the tank enveloping the coil, while steam is passed through the latter. They are also used in some forms of calorimeter.

steam (stēm), a. [steam + -y.] Consisting of or abounding in steam; resembling steam; vaporous; misty.

The bubbling and loud hissing urn Throws up a steam column. Copper, Task, iv. 39.

I found an evening hour in the steam heat of the Har- ram equal to half a dozen afternoons.

R. F. Burton, El-Medinah, p. 272.

steam-yacht (stēm'yot), n. A yacht propelled by steam, or by steam and sails.

steal. See steal, steal, steal.

stealing, n. See stealing.

steapsin (stēp'sin), n. A ferment of the pancreatic secretion which to some extent resolves fats into fatty acids and glycerin.

stearate (stē'ā-rāt), n. [stear(ic) + -ate 1.] A salt of stearic acid. The neutral stearates of the alkalis are soaps.

stearic (stē'ar'ik), a. [Irreg. for stearic*, < Gr. stear(ic), stiff fat, tallow, suet; see stearite.] Of or pertaining to suet or fat; obtained from stearin.—Stearic acid, C₁₈H₃₆O₂, a monobasic acid, forming brilliant white acyl crystals. It is inodorous, tasteless, insoluble in water, but soluble in alcohol and ether. It burns like wax, and is used for making candles. Its compounds with the alkalis, earths, and metallic oxides are called stearates. Stearic acid exists in combination with glycerin as stearin, in beef- and mutton-fat, and in several vegetable fats, such as the butter of cacao. It is obtained from stearin by saponification and decomposition by an acid of the soap formed, and also from mutton-suet by a similar process.

stearin (stē'ā-rin), n. [stear(ic) + -in 2.] 1. An ether or glyceride, C₃H₅O₃(C₁₈H₃₅O₂)₃, formed by the combination of stearic acid and glycerin. When crystallized it forms white pearly scales, soft to the touch but not greasy, and odorless and tasteless when pure. It is insoluble in water, but soluble in hot alcohol and ether. When treated with superheated steam it is separated into stearic acid and glycerin, and when boiled with alkali is saponified—that is, the stearic acid combines with the alkali, forming soap, and glycerin is separated. When melted it resembles wax. There are three stearins, which may all be regarded as derivatives of glycerin in which one, two, or three OH groups are replaced by the radical stearyl. Natural stearin is the tristearyl derivative of glycerin. It is the chief ingredient in suet, tallow, and the harder fats, and may be prepared by repeated solution in ether and crystallization. Candle-pitch, chandlers' gum, or residuary gum, used in the manufacture of roofing-cement, is a by-product of this manufacture.

2. A popular name for stearic acid as used in making candles.—Lard-stearin, the residue left after the expression of the oil from lard.

stearinery (stē'ā-rin-ēr-i), n. [stear(ic) + -ery.] The process of making stearin from animal or vegetable fats; the manufacture of stearin or stearin products.

stearone (stē'ā-rōn), n. [stear(ic) + -one.] A substance (C₃₅H₇₀O) obtained by the partial decomposition of stearic acid. It is a volatile liquid, and seems to be stearic acid deprived of two equivalents of carbonic acid.

stearoptene (stē'ā-rop'tēn), n. [Irreg. < Gr. stear, stiff fat, tallow, suet, + πτηνός, winged (volatile).] The solid crystalline substance separated from any volatile oil on long standing or at low temperatures. See claeoptene.

stearyl (stē'ā-ril), n. [stear(ic) + -yl.] The radical of stearic acid (C₁₈H₃₅O).

stearin (stē'ā-rin), n. Same as stearium.

stearinum (stē'ā-rī'nūm), n. [NL., < Gr. στεάριον, neut. of στεάριος, of or pertaining to tallow or suet, < stear(ic), stiff fat, tallow, suet; see stearite.] A name given to certain pharmaceutical preparations similar to cerates, but containing considerable tallow.—Stearinum iodoforn, stearinum composed of mutton-tallow 18 parts, expressed oil of nutmeg 2 parts, powdered iodoform 1 part.

stearite (stē'ā-rīt), n. [= F. stearite, < L. stearifex, < Gr. stearifēs, used only as equiv. to στεάριος, stearios, of dough made of flour of spelt, < stear(ic), also stear, also contr. stēp (with rare gen. stēpas, also stear-), stiff fat, tallow, suet, also dough made of flour of spelt, prob. < ιστάται (√ sta), cause to stand, fix; see stand.] Soapstone; an impure massive variety of talc. Also called potstone.

stearitic (stē'ā-rīt'ik), a. [stearite + -ic.] Of or pertaining to stearite or soapstone; made of stearite.

stearitogenic (stē'ā-toj'e-nus), a. [stear(ic) + -genic, producing; see -genous.] Tending to produce stearosis (see stearosis, 2); as, stearitogenic processes.

steatoma (stē'ā-tō'mā), n.; pl. steatomata (-mā-tā). [stear(ic) + -oma, a kind of fatty tumor, < stear(ic), fat, tallow, suet.] A lipoma.

stomatobatus (stē'ā-tōm'a-tus), a. [stomat(ic) + -ous.] Of the nature of a steatoma.

steatopyga (stē'ā-tō-pī'gā), n. [NL., < Gr. stear(ic) + -pyga, fat, tallow, suet, + πυγή, the rump.] An accumulation of fat on the buttocks of certain Africans, especially Hottentot women.

steatopygous (stē'ā-tō-pī'gus), a. [NL. steatopyga + -ous.] Affected with or characterized by steatopygia; having enormously fat buttocks.

R. F. Burton, El-Medinah, p. 60.

steatopygy (stē'ā-tō-pī-jī), n. [stear(ic) + -pygy.] The development of steatopygia, or the state of being steatopygous. Jour. Anthropol. Inst., XVIII. 17.

Steatornis (stē'ā-tōr'nīs), n. [NL. (Humboldt, 1817), < Gr. stear(ic), fat, tallow, suet, + ὄρνις, a bird.] The representative genus of Steatornithidæ. The only species is S. caripensis, the guacharo or oil-bird of South America, found from Venezuela to Peru, and also in Trinidad, of frugivorous and nocturnal habits. The bird resembles and is usually classed with the goatsuckers. It is so fat that the natives prepare from it a kind of oil used for butter. See cut under guacharo.

steatornithic (stē'ā-tōr-nith'ik), a. Having the characters of Steatornis.

Steatornithidæ (stē'ā-tōr-nith'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Steatornis (-ornith-) + -idæ.] A family of picarian birds, represented by the genus Steatornis. It is related to the Caprimulgidæ, and is often associated with them, but differs in many important characters, and in some respects approaches the owls.

The sternum has a single notch on each side behind. The palate is desmognathous, with united maxillopalatines and peculiarly shaped palatines. There are basipterygoid processes, and the rostrum of the skull is compressed. The second pectoral muscle is small, and the femoro-caudal is wanting. The syrinx is entirely broochial, and hence paired. The oil-gland is very large. The plumage is not aftershafted, and the rectrices are ten. There is only one genus and one species. See cut under guacharo.

steatornithine (stē-ā-tōr'ni-thin), a. [< Steatornis (-ornith-) + -ine².] Steatornithic; of or pertaining to the Steatornithidae.
steatorrhea, steatorrhœa (stē-ā-tō-rē-ā), n. [N.L., < Gr. steirop (stei-ar-), fat, suet, tallow, + rhoia, a flow, < rhoiv, flow.] 1. Seborrhœa.—2. The passage of fatty stools.

steatosis (stē-ā-tō'sis), n. [N.L., < Gr. steirop (stei-ar-), fat, tallow, suet, + -osis.] 1. Fatty degeneration or infiltration.—2. Any disease of the sebaceous glands. Also called steatopathia.
Steatozoön (stē-ā-tō-zō'on), n. Same as Decmodex.

stedj, n. An obsolete form of stead.
stedfast, stedfastly, etc. See steadfast, etc.
steed (stēd), n. [< ME. stede, < AS. stēda, a stud-horse, stallion, war-horse (cf. gestēd-hors, stud-horse; Icel. steddla for "stadda, a mare; Sw. sto, a mare), < stōd, a stud; see stud¹. Cf. stot¹, stote, stot¹.] A horse: now chiefly poetical.

The kyng aligte of his stede.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 2.

The fiend, . . . like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on,
 Champing his iron curb.
Milton, P. L., iv. 858.

steedless (stēd'les), a. [< steed + -less.] Having no steeds or horses. Whittier, The Norsemen.

steedyokest, n. pl. Reins; thongs. [Rare.] Sorrowful Hector . . .
 Harried in steedyokes as of earst.
Stanhurst, Æneid, ii.

steek (stēk), v. [Also steik; obs. or dial. (Sc.) form of stiek¹.] 1. trans. 1. To pierce with a sharp-pointed instrument; stitch or sew with a needle.—2. To close or shut: as, to steek one's eyes. Burns. [Obsolete or Scotch in both uses.]

But doors were steek'd, and windows bar'd,
 And nane was let hit in.
Willie and May Margaret (Child's Ballads, II. 172).

II. intrans. To close; shut.

It es called cloyster for it cloyss and steekys, and warely shall be lokked.
Religious Pieces (E. E. T. S.), p. 50.

steek (stēk), n. [Also steik; a dial. (Sc.) form of stiek¹.] The act of stitching with a needle; a stitch. [Scotch.] steel¹ (stēl), n. and a. [*< ME. steel, stel, stiel, stiel, < AS. *stēle, stýle, earliest forms stēli, stēli = MD. stah, D. staal = MLG. stāl, LG. staal = OHG. stahh, stāl, MHG. stahel, stachel, stāl, G. stahl = Icel. stāl = Sw. stål = Dan. stål = Goth. stahla = OPruss. stakla, steel; root unknown. The words gold and silver also have no L. or Gr. or other cognate terms outside of Teut. and Slavic.] I. n. 1. A modified form of iron, not occurring in nature, but known and manufactured from very early times, and at the present time of the highest importance in its various applications to the wants of man. For certain purposes, and especially for the manufacture of tools and weapons, there is no metal or metallic alloy which could take the place of steel. The most essential features of steel as compared with iron are elasticity and hardness, and these qualities can be varied in amount to a very extraordinary degree, in the same piece of steel, by slight changes in the manipulation. Steel can be hardened so as to cut glass, by rapid cooling after being strongly heated, and it can be tempered, by reheating after hardening, so as permanently to take the precise degree of hardness best adapted to the use to which it is to be applied. (See temper.) Steel has been known from very early times, but where and how first manufactured is not known. That it has long been in use in India, and that it is still manufactured in that country by methods precisely similar to those in use long ago are well-known facts. (See wootz.) It is thought by some to have been known to the pyramid-builders; but this has not yet been demonstrated, and the same is true of the ancient Semites. The words translated "steel" in the authorized version of the Old Testament signify "copper" or "bronze," and are usually rendered "brass," "brazen." That steel was clearly recognized as something distinct from iron by the author or authors of the Homeric poems cannot be proved. The earliest known and simplest method of reducing iron from its ore—the so-called "direct process"—is capable also of furnishing steel, although a sufficiently homogeneous product cannot be easily obtained by this method. This would explain how steel became known at an early period, and why it was so long before it became an article of general use, with well-established methods of manufacture. Steel is a form of iron in which the amount of carbon is intermediate between that in wrought- and that in cast-iron, and this carbon does not exist in the steel in the form of graphite, but is either combined with or dissolved in it; but the subject of the relation of carbon to iron is one of difficulty, and is now undergoing investigation at the hands of various skilled metallurgical chemists. Other ingredients besides carbon are also present in steel—namely, silicon, manganese, sulphur, and phosphorus. Of these the two first mentioned are probably never entirely wanting, and they are not especially undesirable or injurious, as is the case with the two others, of which only traces can be permitted in the best quality of steel. They are all, however, different from carbon, which latter is regarded as an essential element of steel, while the others may be looked upon as being more or less of the nature of impurities. The quality of steel varies with the amount of carbon present, and the effect of this latter element varies with the amount of impurity (silicon, etc.) present in the steel. The larger the amount of impurity, the larger is the quantity of carbon required to give to the iron the character of steel. In the case of the best bar-iron, a little over 0.3 per cent. of carbon is sufficient to give it a steely character; from 0.5 to 0.65 per cent. of carbon, according to the purity of the iron, gives a steel which can be hardened so as to strike fire with flint. Iron containing from 1 to 1.5 per cent. of carbon gives steel which, after tempering, combines the maximum hardness with the maximum tenacity. One per cent. of carbon gives, on the whole, the most generally useful steel. With more than 1.5 per cent. of carbon the tenacity and weldability of the steel are diminished, although the hardness may be increased. With more than 1.74 per cent. of carbon the steel ceases to be weldable, and is with difficulty drawn out under the hammer; and from 1.8 to 2.0 per cent. is usually considered as the limit between steel and cast-iron, the steel with that amount breaking when hammered after softening by heat. Since steel is intermediate between wrought- and cast-iron in the amount of carbon which it contains, it is evident that it might be made either by carburizing the former or decarburizing the latter. The method of carburization, or cementation as it is generally called, is one of the oldest, perhaps the most ancient, as, although differing greatly in the details, in the essentials it is the same as the process by which the Indian wootz is manufactured. The cementation process was described in detail by Réaumur in a work published in 1722. By this method blister-steel is obtained, and this is further worked up into spring, shear-, and double-shear steel by one or more processes of faceting, welding, and hammering or rolling, the object of this being to give the metal greater homogeneity. A great addition to the value of this process was the invention by Huntsman, in 1740, of cast-steel, the product of the fusion in crucibles, under suitable manipulation, of blister-steel, which process is still in use as first arranged almost without change. By this method, when iron of a sufficiently high grade is used, the finest quality of steel is produced, and it is only steel manufactured in this way which can be used for the best tools, weapons, and cutting instruments of all kinds. The methods of producing steel by the decarburization of pig-iron are numerous and varied. The Styrian method of decarburization in the open-hearth finery, whereby a material called raw steel is produced, was once of very considerable importance, but is now little used. The method of decarburizing pig-iron by puddling, which is similar in principle to the ordinary puddling process used for converting pig-into wrought-iron, is also somewhat extensively employed, especially on the continent of Europe, the product being called puddled steel, this being drawn into bars, which are cut up and re-melted, as is done with blister-steel in manufacturing cast-steel. There are various methods for producing steel by fusing pig-iron with iron ores, or with wrought-iron, or with both together. The Uchatius process belongs to this class of processes, but is of comparatively small importance; but the processes known as the "Siemens," the "Martin," and the "Siemens-Martin" are extensively employed. The steel made by any of these processes is generally called open-hearth steel, as the work of decarburizing the pig is done in the open-hearth regenerative furnace. The difference between these processes is simply that in the first-named the pig-iron is treated with certain iron ores without the addition of wrought-iron (scrap-iron); in the second the pig is melted with scrap-iron; and in the third both scrap and ore are used together; hence the names by which the first two of these modifications of what is essentially the same process are known—pig-and-ore, pig-and-scrap—the third, or the "Siemens-Martin," being the most commonly employed. By far the most important of all steel-producing processes, if only the amount of the metal produced is considered, is the "pneumatic" or "Bessemer" process, invented by Sir Henry Bessemer about 1856, which consists in blowing air through molten pig-iron in a "converter," or vessel of iron lined with a refractory material—the oxidation of the carbon and silicon which the pig contains, together with a small part of the iron itself, furnishing sufficient heat to keep the material in a fluid state while the operation of decarburization goes on. After complete decarburization of the iron, a certain amount of carbon is restored to the metal by the introduction of spiegeleisen or ferromanganese; this extremely important addition to the Bessemer process, without which it would hardly have been a success, was contributed by R. F. Mushet. The Bessemer process, as conducted in a converter lined with the ordinary silicious or "acid" material, is suited only for working iron which is practically free from phosphorus and sulphur, or such as is made from ore like that of Lake Superior, from which all, or nearly all, the Bessemer steel made in the United States is manufactured. By the so-called "basic" or "Thomas-Gilchrist" process, the converter having a basic (calcined dolomite) lining, iron containing a considerable amount of phosphorus is treated, and a fair quality of steel produced, the phosphorus passing into the slag during the operation, as is the case in puddling. The metal produced by the Bessemer process is generally called Bessemer steel, but some consider it more correct to call it ingot-iron. It can be produced of various grades by varying the amount of carbon which it contains, and is a material of the highest value for structural purposes—as being cheaper, and having more durability, than wrought-iron made by puddling—although of no value for the purposes for which the older higher-class steels are employed. Its principal use is for rails, and during the past few years from seventy to eighty per cent. of the Bessemer steel made in the United States has been used for that purpose.

Gold, ne scolver, ne iren, ne stel. Ancien Récit, p. 160.

A single span of the Forth Bridge is nearly as long as two Eiffel Towers turned horizontally and tied together in the middle, and the whole forms a complicated steel structure weighing 15,000 tons, erected without the possibility of any intermediate support, the lace-like fabric of the bridge soaring as high as the top of St. Paul's. The steel of which the compression members of the structure are composed contains $\frac{3}{8}$ of carbon and $\frac{1}{16}$ of manganese. The parts subjected to extension do not contain more than $\frac{1}{16}$ of carbon. H. C. Roberts-Austen, Nature, XLI. 36.

2. Something made of steel. Specifically—(a) A cutting or piercing weapon; especially, a sword. Compare cold steel, below.

Shall I Sir Pandarus of Troy become,
 And by my side wear steel?
Shak., M. W. of W., i. 3. 83.

(b) A piece of steel for striking sparks from flint to ignite tinder or match. (c) A mirror.

We spake of armour,
 She straight replies, Send in your steel combs, with
 The steel you see your faces in.

Carverwright's Lady Errant (1651). (Nares.)

(d) A cylindrical or slightly tapering rod of steel, sometimes having fine parallel longitudinal lines, used for sharpening carving-knives, etc. (e) A strip of steel used to stiffen a corset, or to expand a woman's skirt.—Beard steel, steel made by adding hydrogen gas to the air-blast in the Bessemer process, to remove arsenic, sulphur, and phosphorus.—Bessemer steel, steel made by the Bessemer process. See def. 1.—Blistered steel. Same as blister-steel.—Carbon steel, ordinary steel: not "special steel," but steel in which carbon is clearly the element which gives the iron those peculiar properties which justify its designation by the term steel.—Chrome steel, steel alloyed with a small amount of chromium. Various alloys called by the name of chrome or chromium steel have been introduced, but none have come into general use. They are said to be hard and malleable, and to possess great strength, but to oxidize on exposure more readily than ordinary steel.—Cold-rolled steel, steel to which, after it is rolled hot to approximately the required thickness, a very smooth surface and a very accurately gaged thickness are imparted by first chemically cleaning the surface and then rolling it cold between smooth surface rollers.—Cold steel, a cutting- and thrusting-weapon; a weapon or weapons for close quarters, as distinguished from firearms.—Compressed steel, steel which is made more dense, tenacious, and free from blow-holes by being condensed by pressure while in a fluid state. This pressure is produced in various ways, as by hydraulic machinery, by steam, by centrifugal force, by the use of liquefied carbonic acid, etc.—Crinoline-steels. See crinoline.—Crucible steel. Same as cast-steel.—Damask steel. See damask.—Garb of steel. See garb.—German steel, steel from Germany. The phrase has now no definite meaning other than geographical. It formerly meant steel made in the finery from spathic ore.—Homogeneous steel. Same as cast-steel.—Indian steel. Same as wootz.—Manganese steel, a variety of special steel made by the addition of manganese, which element is present in various manganese steels which have been analyzed in quantity ranging from less than 1 per cent. to over 21 per cent. The qualities vary greatly with its composition.—Mask of steel. See mask.—Mild steel, steel containing a small amount of carbon (Bessemer steel is frequently so designated); a metal which has some of the qualities of steel, but does not admit of being tempered, or only imperfectly so. See def. 1.—Native steel, the name sometimes given to small masses or buttons of steel, steely iron, or iron which has occasionally been formed by the ignition of coal-seams adjacent to deposits of iron ore.—Nickel steel, a variety of special steel recently introduced, and thought by some to surpass the best carbon steel in certain important respects. It has not yet been sufficiently tried to justify a decided statement as to its value. The high price of nickel, and the small likelihood of any considerable reduction in the price of this metal, would seem to bear heavily against the chances of the general introduction of an alloy of which it should form any considerable part.—Run steel, a trade-mark name (in England) of various small articles, such as bridle-bits and stirrups, made of cast-iron which has been to a certain extent rendered malleable by partial decarburization by cementation. The method is one which has been long known, but which has not come into extensive use till comparatively modern times. Also called malleable cast-iron.—Silicon steel, a variety of special steel which has been experimented with to some extent, but which has not yet become of importance.—Special steel, steel in which the element which gives the iron its peculiar qualities, or what distinguishes it from iron, is not carbon, but some other substance. The principal special steels are chrome, manganese, nickel, silicon, titanium, and tungsten steels, all of which have been much experimented with in recent years. While some authorities appear to maintain that the carbon in special steels is so overpowered by the special element used that its effects are entirely neutralized, others believe that some carbon is absolutely necessary that iron may become converted into what can properly be called steel.—Styrian special steel, steel from Styria; steel made by the Styrian process, which closely resembles the Styrian process of making malleable iron in the finery.—Tungsten steel, a variety of special steel, now largely employed in the manufacture of the harder grades of crucible steel. "Mushet's," "special," "imperial," and "crescent-hardened" are brands of tungsten steel now sold in the American markets. Steel may contain a much larger proportion of tungsten than it can of carbon without losing its power of being forged. In a table of thirteen analyses of tungsten steel given by H. M. Howe in his "Metallurgy of Steel" (1891), the tungsten ranges from 1.94 to 11.03 per cent.; the carbon, from 0.85 to 2.15; the manganese, from a trace to 2.66; the silicon, from .05 to .82. Tungsten steel is exceedingly hard and very brittle; it is used chiefly for the tools of lathes and planers designed for heavy work.

II. a. 1. Made of steel: as, a steel plate or buckle.

The average strength [of the Bessemer steel used in building the Forth Bridge] is one-half greater than that of the best wrought iron, and the ductility of the steel plates is fully three times that of corresponding iron plates.
Sir John Fowler and Benjamin Baker, Nineteenth Century, July, 1889, p. 39.

2. Hard as steel; inflexible; unyielding.

Prison my heart in thy steel bosom's ward.
Shak., Sonnets, cxxxiii.

Smart as a steel trap. See smart.—Steel bonnet, a head-piece made of a Scotch bonnet lined with steel, as with a skeleton cap. Compare secret, 9.—Steel bronze.

See bronze, 1.—Steel hat. Same as chapel-de-fer.—Steel rail. See rail.—Steel saddle, the saddle of the mounted-arms in the middle ages, having the bow and sometimes the pommel guarded with steel.—Steel toys, among manufacturers, small articles, such as corkscrews, buckles, button-hooks, and boot-hooks, when made of polished steel.—Steel trap. See trap.

steel¹ (stēl), v. t. [*< ME. stelen, stilen, < AS. stylan (= D. stalen = MLG. stalen, stelen = G. stählen = Icel. stæla), make hard like steel; from the noun.] 1. To fit with steel, as by pointing, edging, overlaying, electroplating, or the like.

Believe her not, her glass diffuses False portraiture; . . .
Her crystal 's falsely steel'd; it scatters
Deceitful beams; believe her not, she flatters.
Quarles, Emblems, ii. 6.
Give me my steel'd coat. I'll fight for France.
Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 1. 55.

2. To iron (clothes). Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.]—3. To make hard as steel; render strong, rigid, inflexible, determined, etc.; make firm or stubborn.

Thy resolution would steel a coward.
Beau. and Fl., Little French Lawyer, i. 2.
Ximenes's heart had been steel'd by too stern a discipline to be moved by the fascinations of pleasure.
Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 5.
4. To cause to resemble steel in smoothness or polish.

Lo! these waters, steel'd
By breezeless air to smoothest polish.
Wordsworth, Sonnets Dedicated to Liberty, ii. 5.

steel², n. An obsolete form of steal², stale².
steel-blue (stēl'blō), a. and n. 1. a. Of a lustrous dark-bluish color, resembling steel tempered blue.

II. n. A lustrous dark-bluish color; a darker shade than Berlin blue and less chromatic, but nearly of the same hue. See blue.

steel-bow (stēl'bow), a. [Origin and distinctive sense obscure.] See the phrase.—Steel-bow goods, in Scots law, corn, cattle, straw, and implements of husbandry, delivered by the landlord to his tenant, by means of which the tenant is enabled to stock and labor the farm, and in consideration of which he becomes bound to return articles equal in quantity and quality at the expiration of the lease.

steelboy (stēl'boy), n. [Prob. < steel¹ in the phrase "hearts of steel," used by the insurgents in a remonstrance entitled "Petition of the Hearts of Steel" (Record Office, London).] A member of a band of insurgents in Ulster, Ireland, who committed various agrarian and other outrages about 1772-4. Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., xvi.

steel-clad (stēl'klad), a. Clothed in armor of steel.

steelent, a. [*< ME. stelen, < AS. stýlen (= D. stalen, stelen), < stýle, stēle, steel: see steel¹ and -ent.] Of steel; made of steel.

The stylene brand. Layanon, i. 7634.

steel-engraving (stēl'en-grāv'ving), n. 1. The art of engraving on steel plates for the purpose of producing prints or impressions in ink on paper and other substances.—2. The design engraved on the steel plate.—3. An impression or print taken from the engraved steel plate.

steel-finch (stēl'fīnch), n. A book-name of the small finch-like birds of the genus Hypochera.

steelhead (stēl'hēd), n. 1. The ruddy duck, Eristamura rubida; so called from the steel-blue of the head, or perhaps for the same reason that it is called hardhead, hickory-head, and toughhead. See cut under Eristamura. [Maryland.]—2. The rainbow-trout, Salmo irideus. See cut under rainbow-trout. [Local, U. S.] steel-head† (stēl'hēd), a. Tipped with steel. Spenser, F. Q., III. ix. 16.

steelification (stēl'i-fi-kā'shon), n. The process of converting iron into steel. Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXV. 304.

steelify (stēl'i-fi), v. t.; pret. and pp. steelified, pp. steelifying. [< steel¹ + -i-fy.] To convert into steel. Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXV. 304.

steeliness (stēl'i-nes), n. The state or character of being steely.

steeling (stō'ling), n. [Verbal n. of steel¹, v.] 1. The process of welding a piece of steel on that part of a cutting-instrument which is to receive the edge.—2. The process of depositing a film of iron on engraved copperplates. The plates are placed in a bath of sulphate of iron and ammonium chloride, a plate of iron submerged in the solution being connected to the copper pole of the battery, and the engraved copperplate to the zinc pole. From such steeled plates from 5,000 to 15,000 impressions can be taken. The same method has been successfully applied to stereotype plates.

steelmaster (stēl'mās'tēr), n. A manufacturer of steel. The Engineer, LXIX. 343.

steel-mill (stēl'mīl), n. A contrivance for giving light, in use previous to the invention of the safety-lamp, in English coal-mines infested with fire-damp. It consisted of a disk of steel which was made to revolve rapidly, a flint being held against it, from which a shower of sparks was given off and a feeble light furnished. This method of obtaining light was for a time quite popular.

steel-ore (stēl'ōr), n. A name given to various iron ores, and especially to spathic iron (siderite), because that ore was supposed to be particularly well adapted for making steel. Much of the so-called German steel was in fact formerly made from that ore.

steel-press (stēl'pres), n. A special form of press designed for compressing molten steel to form sound and dense castings.

steel-saw (stēl'sā), n. A disk of soft iron, revolving with great rapidity, used for cutting cold steel.

steelware (stēl'wār), n. Articles, collectively, made of steel. The Engineer, LXVIII. 642.

steelwork (stēl'wērk), n. Steel articles or objects, or such parts of any work as are made of steel. The Engineer, LXIX. 191.

steel-worker (stēl'wēr'kēr), n. One who works in steel.

steel-works (stēl'wēks), n. pl. or sing. A furnace or other establishment where iron is converted into steel. The Engineer, LXV. 38.

steely (stē'lī), a. [< steel¹ + -y.] 1. Consisting of steel; made of steel.

Full ill (we know, & every man may see)
A steely helme & Cardnais cap agree.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 120.

A steely hammer crushes 'em to pieces.
Ford, Perkin Warbeck, i. 1.

2. Resembling steel in some of its essential properties; hard; firm; stubborn.

When hee can beat it [Truth] off with most steely prowess, he thinks himselfe the bravest man; when in truth it is nothing but exsangine feebly exility of Spirit.
N. Ward, Simple Cobbler, p. 74.

That steely heart [of Judas] yet relents not.
Bp. Hall, Contemplations, iv. 27.

3. Resembling steel in color, metallic luster, or general appearance; having more or less imperfectly the qualities or composition of steel; as, steely iron.

The heating of the steely sea.
W. Morris, Earthly Paradise, Apology.

Steely iron, a mixture of iron and steel; imperfect steel. Bloxam and Huntington, Metals, p. 103.

Steelyard¹ (stēl'yārd, colloq. stīl'yārd), n. [Early mod. E. also Stilyard, Stilliard, Steehard, Steelcard, Styhard, and as two words Steel yard, Stele yarde (also Steel house, Stele house); explained as orig. "the yard in London where steel was sold by German merchants," as if < steel¹ + yard²; but in fact an imperfect translation of the MD. staethof, later staathof, = MLG. stalhof, an office or hall where cloth was marked with a leaden seal as being properly dyed, < MD. stael, a specimen, sample, test of dyeing, D. staaft, a sample, = MLG. stule, LG. stal, > G. dial. stahl, a sample, pattern (hence MD. staeten = MLG. stalen, mark cloth with a leaden seal as being properly dyed) (connected with MD. staeten, stallen = MLG. stallen (OF. estaler, etaler), expose for sale on a stall, display or show on a stall, < MD. stal, etc., a stall; see stall¹), + hof, yard, court; see hovel.] The notion that the MD. staethof is a contraction of *stapethof (which, moreover, does not occur; cf. stapelhuys, E. staple-house) is untenable.] A place in London, comprising great warehouses called before the reign of Edward IV. Gildhalla Teutonico-rum, 'Gildhall of the Germans,' where, until expelled in 1597, the merchants of the Hanseatic League had their English headquarters; also, the company of merchants themselves. The merchants of the Steelyard were bound by almost monastic gild rules, under a separate jurisdiction from the rest of London, were exempt from many exactions and restrictions, and for centuries controlled most of the foreign trade of England.

This yere corn was verie dere, & had ben dearer if marchantes of ye stilyarde had not been & Dutche shippes restrained, & an abstynence of warre betwene Englande & Flaunders.
Fabyan, Chron., an. 1528-9.

From him come I, to entreat you . . . to meet him this afternoon at the Rhenish wine-house i' the Stilliard.
Webster, Westward Ho, ii. 1.

steelyard² (stēl'yārd or stīl'yārd), n. [Early mod. E. stilyard, stilliard, stilliard; appar. lit. "a rod of steel," < steel¹ + yard²; but prob. an altered form, due to popular etymology, of the equiv. early mod. E. stelleere, supposed to stand for stiller or steller* (= G. steller, regulator); see stiller¹. The word seems to have been confused with Steelyard¹, and is generally explained, without evidence, as orig. the balance or weight used by the merchants of the Steelyard.] A kind of balance with two unequal arms, consisting of a lever in the form of a slender iron bar with a, rectangular bar, graduated both above and below; b, adjustable counterpoising weight; c, hook for supporting articles to be weighed (this can be turned easily over the end of the bar at c'); d and d', hooks for support of the steelyard, according as one or other of the graduations is turned to the upper side for use in weighing.

Steelyard.

one arm very short, the other divided by equidistant notches, having a small crosspiece as fulcrum, to which a bearing for suspension is attached, usually a hook at the short end, and a weight moving upon the long arm. It is very portable, without liability to become separated, and the process of weighing is very expeditious. It is much used for cheap commodities, but owing to its simple construction it is liable to be so made as to give false indications. Often used in the plural. Also called Roman balance or beam. Compare Danish balance (sometimes called Danish steelyard), under balance.

Crochet, a small hook. . . . A Romane beame or stelleere, a beame of yron or wood, full of nickes or notches, along which a certaine peize of lead, &c., playing, and at length setting towards the one end, shewes the just weight of a commodity hanging by a hooke at the other end.
Cotgrave.

A pair of steelyards and a wooden sword.
Halleck, Fanny.

steem†, n. An old form of steam. Prompt. Parry.
steen¹ (stēn), v. t. [Also stean, Sc. stein; < ME. stēnen, east stōnes, < AS. stēnan (= OHG. steinōn = Goth. stainjan), stone, < stān, stōne; see stōne, n. Cf. stone, v., of which steen¹ is a doublet.] 1. To stone; pelt with stones.

Te stones that me [men] stenede him mide.
Ancren Riwle, p. 122.

2. To fit with stones; mend, line, pave, etc., with stones. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch in both senses.] steen² (stēn), n. [Also stean; a dial. var. of stone, due to the verb steen¹.] A stone. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.] steen³ (stēn), n. [Also stean, stein; < ME. steene, stene, a stone jar, < AS. stāna (= OHG. steinna), a stone crock (cf. stēnen, of stone; see stōnen), < stān, stōne; see stone.] 1. A kind of jar or urn of baked clay or of stone, of the general type of the sepulchral urns of the Romans. Jour. Brit. Archæol. Ass., XXXV. 105.

Neuerthelatre ther weren not maad of the same monce the stēmys [hydrie, Vulgate] of the temple of the Lord.
Wyclif, 4 Ki. [2 Ki.] xii. 13.

Upon an huge great Earth-pot steane he stood.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vii. 42.

2. A large box of stones used for pressing cheese in making it. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.] steenbok (stān'- or stēn'bok), n. [< D. steenbok = G. steinbock, the wild goat, < D. steen, = G. stein = E. stone, + D. bok = G. bock = E. buck; see stone and buck¹.] One of several small African antelopes of the genus Nanotragus, fond of rocky places (whence the name). The common steenbok is N. tragulus, generally distributed in South Africa, about 3 feet long and 20 inches tall, with straight horns about 4 inches long in the male, none in the female, large ears, and no false hoofs. It is of a general reddish-brown color, white below. The gray steenbok is N. aetanus. N. orotragus is the klip-springer (which see, with cut). Also steenbock, steinbock. Compare steinbock and stonebock.

Steenbok (Nanotragus tragulus).

steening (sté'ning), n. [Also steaning; verbal n. of steep, v.] 1. Any kind of path or road paved with small round stones. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. In arch., the brick or stone wall or lining of a well or cesspool, the use of which is to prevent the irruption of the surrounding soil. Also steining.

steenkirk (stén'kérk), n. [Also, less prop., steinkirk; so called in allusion to the battle fought in 1692 near Steenkerke, F., Steinkérque (lit. 'stone church'), a town in Belgium.] A name brought into fashion, after the battle of Steenkirk, for several articles, especially of dress, as wigs, buckles, large neckties, and powder; especially, a cravat of fine lace, loosely and negligently knotted, with long hanging ends, one of which was often passed through a buttonhole.

Mrs. Calico. I hope your Lordship is pleased with your Steenkirk.

Lord P. In love with it, stay my vitals! Bring your Bill; you shall be paid to-morrow. Vanbrugh, The Relapse, i. 3.

I had yielded up my cravat (a smart Steenkirk, by the way, and richly laced). Scott, Rob Roy, xxxi.

Ladies also wore them (neckcloths), as in "The Careless Husband" Lady Easy takes her Steenkirk from her Neck and lays it gently over his Head.

Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 148.

steenstrupine (stén'strup-in), n. [Named after K. J. V. Steenstrup, a Danish naturalist.] A rare mineral occurring in massive forms and rhombohedral crystals of a brown color in the sodalite syenite of Greenland. It is a silicate of the rare metals of the cerium group, also thorium, and other elements.

steep (stēp), a. and n. [ME. stepe, step, stēp, stap, AS. steap, steep, high, = OFries. stāp, steep; cf. Icel. steypthr, steep, lofty; Norw. stup, a steep cliff; akin to stoop: see sloop], and cf. steep², steep³.] 1. a. 1. Having an almost perpendicular slope; precipitous; sheer.

Two of these Hands are steep and upright as any wall, that it is not possible to climb them.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 748.

Thus far our ascent was easy; but now it began to grow more steep, and difficult.

Maudrell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 119.

2*f.* Elevated; high; lofty.

To a room they came, Steep and of state. Chapman. (Imp. Dict.)

3. Excessive; difficult; forbidding: as, a steep undertaking; a steep price. [Colloq.]

Perhaps if we should meet Shakspeare we should not be conscious of any steep inferiority.

Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 302.

Neither priest nor squire was able to establish any steep difference in outward advantages between himself and the commons among whom he lived. Froude, Sketches, p. 164.

4*f.* Bright; glittering; fiery.

His eye steep and rollyng in his heede.

Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 201.

His eye [eyes] beicnand with light as a low lyn, With streamys [streams] full stithe in his stepe loke.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7724.

II. n. A steep or precipitous place; an abrupt ascent or descent; a precipice.

Suddenly a splendor like the morn

Pervaded all the beeting gloomy steeps.

Keats, Hyperion, ii.

Yet up the radiant steeps that I survey

Death never climbed. Bryant, To the Apennines.

steep² (stēp), v. [ME. steppen, AS. steypa, east down, overturn, pour out, east (metals), red. tumble down, = Sw. stōpa = Dan. stōbe, east (metals), steep (corn); causal of Icel. stūpa = Sw. stupa, fall, steep; see stoop], and cf. steep¹.] I. trans. 1. To tilt (a barrel). Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To soak in a liquid; macerate: as, to steep barley; to steep herbs.

A day afore her [almonds] setting, hem to stepe

In meeth is goode.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 54.

The Gordons good, in English blood

They steep'd their hose and shoon.

Battle of Otterbourne (Child's Ballads, VII. 24).

The prudent Sibyl had before prepared

A sop in honey steeped to charm the guard.

Dryden, Æneid, vi. 567.

3. To bathe with a liquid; wet; moisten.

Then she with liquors strong his eyes did steep,

That nothing should him hastily awake.

Spenser, F. Q., II. vi. 18.

His coursers, steep'd in sweat and staid with gore,

The Greeks' preserver, great Machaon, bore.

Pope, Æneid, xi. 728.

4. To imbue or impregnate as with a specified influence; cause to become permeated or pervaded (with): followed by in.

In this a time to steep
Thy brains in wasteful slumbers?
Quarles, Emblems, i. 7.

Thou art so steep'd in misery,
Surely 'twere better not to be.

Tennyson, The Two Voices.

The habitual criminal, steeped in vice and used to ignominy, cares very little for disgrace, and accepts punishment as an incident in his career.

Bibliotheca Sacra, XLVII. 594.

II. intrans. To be bathed in a liquid; soak.

And now the midnight draught of sleep,

Where wine and spices richly steep,

In massive bowl of silver deep.

The page presents on knee.

Scott, Marmion, i. 30.

steep² (stēp), n. [AS. steep², v.] 1. The process of steeping; the state of being steeped, soaked, or permeated: used chiefly in the phrase in steep.

Strait to each house she hasted, and sweet sleep

Four'd on each wooer; which so laid in steep

Their drowsie temples that each brow did nod.

Chapman, Odyssey, ii. 578.

Whilst the barley is in steep it is gauled by the excise officers, to prevent fraud.

Encyc. Brit., IV. 267.

2. That in which anything is steeped; specifically, a fertilizing liquid in which seeds are soaked to quicken germination.

When taken from the white bath, the skins, after washing in water, are allowed to ferment in a bran steep for some time in order to extract a considerable portion of the alum and salt.

C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 663.

3. Rennet: so called from being steeped before it is used. [Prov. Eng.]—Rot's steep, in bleaching cotton goods, the process of thoroughly saturating the cloth. The name is due to the former practice of allowing the flour or size with which the goods were impregnated to ferment and putrefy. Also called wetting-out steep.

steep-down (stēp'down), a. Having a sheer descent; precipitous.

Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!

Shak., Othello, v. 2. 280.

You see Him till into the steep-down West

He throws his course. J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 14.

steepen (stēp'pn), v. i. [AS. steep¹ + -en.] To become steep.

As the way steepened, . . . I could detect in the hollow of the hill some traces of the old path.

Hugh Miller. (Imp. Dict.)

steeper (stēp'pér), n. [AS. steep² + -er.] A vessel, vat, or eistern in which things are steeped; specifically, a vat in which the indigo-plant is steeped to macerate it before it is soaked in the beating-vat.

steepful (stēp'fúl), a. [AS. steep¹ + -ful.] Steep; precipitous.

Anon he stalks about a steepful Rock,

Where, soon, to shun Death's (never shunned) stroak,

Had clambred vp.

Sylvestre, tr. of Dn Bartas's Weeks, ii, The Vocation.

steep-grass (stēp'grás), n. The butterwort, Pinguicula vulgaris: so called because used like rennet. Also steepweed, steepwort. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names.

steepiness (stē'pi-nes), n. The state or quality of being steepy or steep; steepness. [Rare.]

The cragginess and steepiness of places up and down . . . makes them inaccessible. Howell, Forreine Travels, p. 132.

steeple (stē'pl), n. [ME. stēple, stēpel, stēpylle, stēpil, AS. stēpel, stēppl, a steeple, AS. steap, steep, high: see steep¹.] 1. A typically lofty structure attached to a church, town-house, or other public edifice, and generally intended to contain the bells of such edifice. Steeple is a general term applied to every secondary structure of this description, whether in the form of a simple tower, or, as is usual, of a tower surmounted by a spire.

Ydelitlisse is the grete wynd that thrauth down the greate tours and the hege steeples and the greate beches in wodes thrauth to grounde.

Ayenbite of Inwyrt (E. E. T. S.), p. 23.

Lod. What does he it middle looke like?

Asto. Troth, like a spire steeple in a Country Village ouer-peering so many thatcht houses.

Dekker and Middleton, Honest Whore, ii. 1.

At Paris all steeples are claugouring not for sermon.

Curlye, French Rev., III. i. 4.

2. A lofty head-dress worn by women in the fourteenth century. See hennin.

Some of the more popular of these strange varieties of head-gear have been distinguished as the "horned," the "mitre," the "steeple"—in France known as the "hennin"—and the "butterfly."

Encyc. Brit., VI. 469.

3. A pyramidal pile or stack of fish set to dry. Also called pack. See the quotation under pack¹, 10 (b).

steeplebush (stē'pl-bush), n. The hardhack; also, Spiræa salicifolia. See Spiræa.

steeplechase (stē'pl-chās), n. A horse-race across a tract of country in which ditches, hedges, and other obstacles must be jumped as they come in the way. The name is supposed to be originally due to any conspicuous object, such as a church-steeple, having been chosen as a goal, toward which those taking part in the race were allowed to take any course they chose. The limits of the steeplechase-course are now marked out by flags.

steeplechaser (stē'pl-chā'sér), n. 1. One who rides in steeplechases.—2. A horse running or trained to run in a steeplechase.

"If you do not like hunting, you are to affect to," says Mamma. "You must listen to Captain Breakneck's stories at dinner, laugh in the right places, and ask intelligent questions about his steeplechasers."

Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 780.

steeplechasing (stē'pl-chā'sing), n. [AS. stēppl-chase + -ing.] The act or sport of riding in a steeplechase.

steeple-crown† (stē'pl-kroun), n. A steeple-crowned hat.

And on their heads old steeple-crowns.

Hudibras Redivivus (1706). (Nares.)

steeple-crowned (stē'pl-kround), a. Having a high peaked crown resembling a steeple: noting various articles of head-gear.

The women wearing the old country steeple-crowned hat and simply made gowns.

Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 138.

steeped (stē'pld), a. [AS. steep¹ + -ed.] 1. Furnished or adorned with a steeple or steeples.

As we neared the provincial city [Worcester], we saw the steeped mass of the cathedral, long and high, rise far into the cloud-freckled blue. H. James, Jr., Pass. Pilgrim, p. 44.

2. Having the form of a steeple; peaked: towering.

Steeped hattes.

Wright, Passions of the Mind (ed. 1621), p. 330. (Halliwell.)

A steeped turbant on her head she wore. Fairfax.

steeple-engine (stē'pl-en'jin), n. 1. A form of marine steam-engine used on side-wheel boats, in which the working-beam is the highest part, and the connecting-rod is above the crank-shaft.—2. A direct-acting engine in which the crank-shaft is located between the cylinder and the sliding-block or cross-head. The piston-rod is connected with the latter by two branches or limbs which straddle the crank-shaft and crank, and the connecting-rod or pitman plays between the limbs of the piston-rod. It is used for steam-pumps and donkey-engines, being very compact in form.

steeple-fair, n. [Supposed to be a corruption, simulating steep (as if 'a church-fair' or 'kermess'), of staple-fair*, AS. staple², market, + fair².] A common fair or mart.

These youths, in art, purse, and attire most bare,

Give their attendance at each steeple faire;

Being once brad he'll not displeas his lord.

Taylor, Works (1630). (Nares.)

steeple-hat (stē'pl-hat), n. A steeple-crowned hat.

An old doublet and a steeple hat. Erowning, Stratford.

steeple-house† (stē'pl-hous), n. A church edifice: so called by the early members of the Society of Friends, who maintained that the word church applies properly only to the body of believers.

The reason why I would not go into their steeple-house was because I was to bear my testimony against it, and to bring all off from such places to the Spirit of God, that they might know their bodies to be the temples of the Holy Ghost.

George Fox, Journal (Phila.), p. 167.

There are steeple-houses on every hand, And pulpits that bless and ban;

And the Lord will not grudge the single church

That is set apart for man.

Whittier, The Old South.

steeple-hunting (stē'pl-hun'ting), n. Same as steeplechasing. Carlyle, Sterling, v.

steeple-jack (stē'pl-jak), n. A man who climbs steeples and tall chimneys to make repairs, or to erect scaffolding.

A steeple-jack of Sheffield . . . met with a shocking accident.

St. James's Gazette, May 11, 1887. (Encyc. Dict.)

steepletop (stē'pl-top), n. The bowhead, or great polar whale (Balaena mysticetus): so called from the spout-holes terminating in a sort of cone; a whalers' name. C. M. Scammon.

steeplewise (stē'pl-wiz), adv. In the manner of a steeple; like a steeple.

Thin his haire,

Besides, disordered and vnkembd, his crowne

Picked, made steeple-wise; . . . bald he was beside.

Heywood, Dialogues (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 120).

steeply (stēp'li), adv. In a steep manner; with steepness; with precipitous declivity: as, a height rising steeply.

At this point it [the highway] steeply overtops the fields on one side.

Howells, Indian Summer, xx.

steepness (stēp'nes), n. The state of being steep, in any sense; precipitousness: as, the steepness of a hill or a roof.

steep-to (stēp'tō), v. Abruptly steep: noting a bold shore having navigable water close in to land. [Colloq.]

The pans [pan-ice] rise over all the low lying parts of the Islands, grinding and polishing exposed shores, and rasping those that are steep-to. Amer. Nat., XXII, 230.

steep-tub (stēp'tub), n. A tub in which salt beef and salt pork are soaked before cooking.

steep-up (stēp'up), v. Ascending steeply.

Her stand she takes upon a steep-up hill.

Shak., Passionate Pilgrim, l. 121.

steep-water (stēp'wā'tēr), n. Water used as a steep, or suitable for steeping; specifically, a steep for flax.

The most celebrated steep-water in the world is the river Lys, which rises in the north of France, and flows through the west of Belgium. Ure, Dict., II, 409.

steepweed, steepwort (stēp'wēd, -wērt), n. Same as steep-grass.

steepy (stē'pi), a. [< steep¹ + -y¹.] Steep; precipitous.

Ever to rear his tumbling stone upright

Upon the steepy mountain's lofty height.

Morston, Satires, v. 78.

steer¹ (stēr), v. [*< ME. steeren, steren, stiren, sturen, scoeren, < AS. stōran, stīeran, stīran = OFries. stiura, stiora = MD. stuyren, stueren, stieren, D. sturen, stieren = MLG. sturen, LG. stieren = OHG. stiuran, stiurran, MHG. stiuren, stiueern, direct, control, support, G. steuern, control, steer, pilot, = Icel. stjira = Dan. styre = Sw. styra, steer; cf. Goth. stiurjan, establish, confirm; partly from the noun, AS. stōr, etc., a rudder (see steer¹, n.), but in part, as more particularly appears in the Goth., prob. an orig. verb, 'establish' (hence 'direct,' 'steer'), connected with OHG. stiuri, strong, large; cf. Goth. usstiuriba, unbridled, Skt. sthāvāra, fixed, stable, etc. The ME. forms are partly confused with the ME. forms of stir.] I. trans. 1. To guide by the movements of a rudder or helm; direct and govern, as a ship on her course.*

The two brethren were abiding bothe in a shippe

That was stird with the storme streight out of warde;

Rnt on a Rocke, rof all to pecea.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3709.

You yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., l. 3. 103.

No merchant wittingly

Has steered his keel unto this luckless sea.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, l. 339.

2. To pursue in a specified direction; direct: as, to steer one's way or course.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight

Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air.

Milton, P. L., l. 225.

3. To guide; manage; control; govern.

Fyr so wood, it mighte nat be stered,

In al the noble tour of Ilioun.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 935.

I have a soul

Is full of grateful duty, nor will suffer me

Further dispute your precept; you have power

To steer me as you please.

Shirley, Bird in a Cage, i. 1.

4. To plan; contrive.

Trewely, myn owene lady deere,

Tho sleighte, yit that I have herd you steere,

Ful shapely ben to faylen alle yfeere.

Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1451.

5. To lead; conduct; draw: as, a bunko-man steers his victim to a bunko-join. See bunko-steerer.—Steering balloon.—Steering committee, a small body of men, generally members of a legislative body, engaged in directing the course of legislation. [Slang, U. S.]—To steer a trick at the wheel, to take one's turn in steering a vessel.

II. intrans. 1. To direct and govern a vessel in its course.

Jason . . . the bote tok,

Stird ouer the streame streight to the lond.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 957.

Some of their men were starued, the rest all so weak that onely ooe could lie along vpon the Helm and sterre.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 745.

2. To direct one's course at sea; sail in a specified direction: as, the ship steers southward; he steered for Liverpool.

The Ottomites, . . .

Steering . . . towards the isle of Rhodes,

Have there injoined them with an after fleet.

Shak., Othello, i. 3. 34.

3. To answer the helm: as, the vessel steers with ease.—4. Figuratively, to take or pursue a course or way; hence, to direct one's conduct; conduct one's self.

Well-born, and wealthy, wanting no support,

You steer betwixt the country and the court.

Dryden, To his kinsman, John Dryden, l. 128.

He relieved her of her burden, and steered along the street by her side, carrying her baked mutton and potatoes safely home. Mrs. Gaskell, Cranford, li.

To steer clear of, to keep away from; avoid.

It requires great skill, and a particular felicity, to steer clear of Scylla and Charybdis.

Bacon, Physical Fables, vi., Expl.

To steer roomer. See room¹, adv.—To steer small, to steer with little movement of the helm, and consequently with but slight deviation of the ship's head from the assigned course.—To steer with a small helm, to keep the course accurately, with but slight shifting of the helm in either direction.

steer¹ (stēr), n. [*< ME. steere, stere, ster, steor, < AS. stōr = MD. stuer, stier, D. stuur = MLG. stur, sture, LG. stūr = OHG. stiura, f., MHG. stiure, stiueer, G. steuer, n., = Icel. stjiri = Sw. Dan. styr, a rudder, a steering-oar, prob. orig. a pole (applied to a steering-oar); cf. Icel. staurr, a post, stake, = Gr. σταυρός, a pole, stake, cross (see staurus); see steer¹, v., and cf. steer². Hence ult. stern².] 1. A rudder; a helm.*

With a wawe [wave] brosten was his stere.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2416.

2. A helmsman; a pilot.

He that is lord of fortune be thy stere.

Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale, l. 350.

3. A guide; a director; a governor; a ruler.

My lady dere,

Syn God hath wrought me for I shal yow serve,

As thus I mene ye wol yet be my stere

To do me lyve, if that yow list, or sterve.

Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1291.

Commodity is the steer of all their actions.

Burton, Aunt. of Mel., p. 198.

4. Guidance; direction; government; control.

For whanne I my lady here,

My wit with that hath loste his stere.

Gower, Conf. Amant., l.

To give one a steer, to give one a useful hint; give one a point or tip. [Slang, U. S.]

steer² (stēr), n. [*< ME. steer, ster, steor, < AS. stōr = D. stier = OLG. stier, MLG. stēr = OHG. stiur, MHG. G. stier = Icel. stjör = Goth. stiur, a bull, steer; also without initial s, Icel. thjör = Sw. tjör = Dan. tyr, a steer; cf. L. taurus (> It. Sp. toro = Pg. touro = F. dim. taurceau), < Gr. ταύρος = Oulg. turū = Bohem. Pol. tur = Russ. turū = W. tarw = Ir. Gael. tarbh, a bull, steer; prob. akin to OHG. stūri, stiuri, strong, Skt. sthūrin, a pack-horse, sthūla, great, large, powerful, sthūra, a man, sthāvāra, fixed, stable, Gr. σταυρός, a pole, stake, etc. (see staurus). Cf. steer¹, ult. from the same root; cf. also stirk, and Taurus.] A young male of the ox kind; a bullock, especially one which has been castrated and is raised for beef. In the United States the term is extended to male beef-cattle of any age.*

Juvenius is a yonge oxe whan he is no lenger a calf, and he is then callyd a steere whan he begynneth to be helpfull unto the profit of man in eringe the erth.

Dialogues of Creatures Moralysed, p. 228. (Hallucell.)

Laocoön . . .

With solemn pomp then sacrificed a steer.

Dryden, Æneid, ii. 268.

steer² (stēr), v. t. [< steer², n.] To make a steer of; castrate (a young bull or bull-calf). [Rare.]

The male calves are stered and converted to beef.

Daily Telegraph, Oct. 18, 1886. (Encyc. Dict.)

steer³ (stēr), v. and n. An obsolete or dialectal variant of stir¹.

What's a' the steer, kimmer?

What's a' the steer?

Charlie he is landed,

An, haith, he'll soon be here.

Jacobite song.

steerable (stēr'ā-bl), a. [< steer¹ + -able.] Capable of being steered: as, a steerable balloon.

steerage (stēr'āj), n. [Early mod. E. also steeridge, stirage; < steer¹ + -age.] 1. The act, practice, or method of steering; guidance; direction; control; specifically, the direction or control of a ship in her course.

By reason of the enil stirage of the other ship, we had almost boorded each other. Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 110.

But He that hath the steerage of my course

Direct my sail!

Shak., R. and J., i. 4. 112.

2. That by which a course is steered or directed. [Rare.]

Inscribed to Phœbus, here he hung on high

The steerage [remigium] of his wings.

Dryden, Æneid, vi. 24.

3. Naut., the effect of the helm on a ship; the manner in which the ship is affected by the helm: as, she was going nine knots, with easy steerage.—4. A course steered; a path or way; a course of conduct, or a way of life.

He bore his steerage true in every part,

Led by the compass of a noble heart.

Webster and Routley, Cure for a Cuckold, iv. 2.

Let our Governors beware in time, lest . . . they shipwreck themselves, as others have done before them, in the cours wherein God was directing the Steerage to a Free Commonwealth.

Milton, Free Commonwealth.

5. A rudder; a helm; apparatus for steering; hence, a place of government or control.

This day the William was held a ground, because she was somewhat leake, and to mend her steerage.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 446.

While they who at the steerage stood

And reap'd the profit sought his blood.

Swift, Death of Dr. Swift.

6. The part of a ship where the tiller traverses; the stern.

I was much surprized, and ran into the steeridge to look on the compass.

Dampier, Voyages, an. 1688.

7. In passenger-ships, the part of the ship allotted to the passengers who travel at the cheapest rate, hence called steerage passengers: generally, except in the newest type of passenger-steamers, not in the stern, as might be supposed, but in the bow; in a man-of-war, the part of the berth-deck just forward of the wardroom: it is generally divided into two apartments, one on each side, called the starboard and port steerages, which are assigned to midshipmen, clerks, and others.

It being necessary for me to observe strict economy, I took my passage in the steerage.

Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xvii.

Steerage country (naut.). See country.

steerageway (stēr'āj-wā), n. Naut., that degree of forward movement or headway of a ship which renders her subject to the helm.

steerer (stēr'ēr), n. [< steer¹ + -er¹.] 1. One who or that which steers; a steersman.

And I will be the steerer o' t,

To row you o'er the sea.

Young Bekie (Child's Ballads, IV. 13).

2. In a trieyele, the rod and small wheel by which the machine is turned about and guided: called front steerer or back steerer according to its place on the machine.—3. In bunko swindling, one who steers or leads his victim to the rendezvous; a bunko-steerer. [Slang.]—Boat-steerer, in whaling, the second man in rank in a boat's crew, whose duty it is to act as bow-earman while going on to the whale, to harpoon or bomb the whale if he is so instructed by the officer, and to steer the boat after the whale has been struck, having shifted ends with the officer. The duties of the boat-steerer, or harpooner or slawer as he is also called, are the most important intrusted to the crew.

steering-compass (stēr'ing-kum'pas), n. See compass.

steering-gear (stēr'ing-gēr), n. Naut., the machinery by which the rudder is managed. In large ships steam-power has come into very general use for this purpose—a wheel, turned by the helmsman in the same manner as when steering by hand, by its action admitting steam to the engines which move the helm.

steering-sail (stēr'ing-sāl), n. Same as studdingsail.

steering-wheel (stēr'ing-hwēl), n. The wheel by which the rudder of a ship is shifted and the ship steered.

steerless¹ (stēr'les), a. [< ME. sterles, < AS. stōrlēdas, having no rudder, < stōr, a rudder, + -lēas, E. -less; < steer¹, n., + -less.] Having no rudder.

Al sterless withinne a boot am I.

Chaucer, Troilus, i. 416.

Like to the sterless boat that swerves with every wind.

Surrey, Ecl. iii.

steerling (stēr'ling), n. [< steer² + -ling¹.] A young steer.

To get thy steerling, once again

I'll play such another strain.

Herrick, A Bencolick, or Discourse of Netherds.

steerman (stēr'man), n. [*< ME. sterman, steorman, < AS. stōorman (= D. stuurman = MLG. sturman, stureman = MHG. stiurman, G. steuernmann, steersman, = Icel. stjirimathr, stjörnar-mathr = Sw. styrman = Dan. styrmand, a mate), < stōr, rudder, + man, man; see steer¹ and man.] Same as steersman.*

Their Star the Bible; Steer-man th' Holy-Ghost.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 1.

steersman (stērz'man), n.; pl. steersmen (-men). [< ME. steresman, < AS. stōeresman, steersman, < stōeres, gen. of stōer, a rudder, + man, man.] One who steers. (a) The steerer of a boat; a helmsman; a pilot.

How the tempest al began,

And how he lost his steersman.

Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 436.

Through it the joyful steersman clears his way,

And comes to anchor in his inmost bay.

Dryden.

(bt) A governor; a ruler.

He of the v. steers-men

Vnder hem welden in stercgen [ten].

Genesis and Exodus (E. T. S.), l. 3417.

steersmanship (stēr'z'mān-ship), n. [< steersman + -ship.] The office or art of a steersman; skill in steering.

They praised my steersmanship.

J. Burroughs, Pepecton, p. 19.

steersmate (stēr'z'māt), n. [< steer's, poss. of *steer*¹, + *mate*¹.] A mate or assistant in steering. [Rare.]

What pilot so expert but needs must wreck,

Imbark'd with such a steers-mate at the helm?

Milton's A., l. 1045.

steer-staff, n. [ME. steerstaf; < *steer*¹ + staff.] Same as steer-tree.

steer-tree (stēr'trē), n. [Early mod. E. also stercetre, stertree, stertre; < ME. stercetre; < *steer*¹ + tree.] 1. A rudder.

Wife, tent the stercetre, and I shall assay

The depnes of the see that we here, if I may.

Tourneley Mysteries, p. 31. (Hallivell.)

2. The handle of a plow. Cath. Ang., p. 361, note.

steery (stēr'i), n. [< *steer*³ + -y.] A stir; a bustle; a tumult. [Scotch.]

"Where's the younger womankind?" said the Antiquary. "Indeed, brother, among a' the steery, Maria wadna be guided by me—she set away to the Halket-craig-head."

Scott, Antiquary, ix.

steeve¹ (stēv), a. [Se., also stieve, stive, a var. of stiff, prob. due to Dan. stiv, stiff; see stiff.] Stiff; firm; unbending or unyielding.

A filly buirdly, steeve, so' swank,

An' set weel down a shapely shank

As e'er tread yird.

Burns, Auld Farmer's Salutation to his Auld Mare.

steeve¹ (stēv), v. t.; pret. and pp. steeced, ppr. steeking. [Also stiere; a var. of *stive*¹, v. Cf. *steer*¹, a.] To stiffen; as, to be steeced with cold. Grose. [Prov. Eng.]

steeve² (stēv), v.; pret. and pp. steeced, ppr. steeking. [Appar. orig. 'be stiff' (a steeking bowsprit "being fixed stiff or firmly and immovably in the vessel, a horizontal one being movable"): see *steeve*². Cf. Dan. stiver, a prop, stay, stievbjælke, a beam to prop with.] 1. intrans. Naut., to project from the bows at an angle instead of horizontally: said of a bowsprit.

The bowsprit is said to steeve more or less, as the enter end is raised or drooped. Totten, Naval Dict., p. 417.

II. trans. Naut., to give a certain angle of elevation to: as, to steeve a bowsprit.

steeve² (stēv), n. [< *steeve*², v.] Naut., the angle of elevation which the bowsprit makes with the horizon.

steeve³ (stēv), v. t.; pret. and pp. steeced, ppr. steeking. [Also steev; a var. of *stive*², < OF. estiver, stuff, eram (OF. estive, the loading of a ship): see *stive*².] 1. To stuff; eram; pack firmly and tightly. Jamieson. [Scotch.]—2. Naut., to stow, as cargo in a vessel's hold, by means of a steeve or a jack-screw. R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 306.

steeve³ (stēv), n. [< *steeve*³, v.] A long derrick or spar, with a block at one end, used in stowing cargo. Hamersly, Naval Encyc., p. 777.

steevelly (stēv'li), adv. [< *steeve*¹ + -ly.] Firmly; stoutly. Jamieson. Also stievelly. [Scotch.]

steeking¹ (stē'ving), n. [Verbal n. of *steeve*², v.] Naut., the angle of elevation which a ship's bowsprit makes with the horizon; a steeve.

steeking² (stē'ving), n. [Verbal n. of *steeve*³, v.] The operation of stowing certain kinds of cargo, as cotton, wool, or hides, in a vessel's hold with a steeve or a jack-screw. See *steeve*³, v. t., 2.

steg (steg), n. Same as stag (in various senses). [Prov. Eng.]

steganographist (steg-a-nog'rā-fist), n. [< steganograph-y + -ist.] One who practises the art of writing in eipher. Bailey, 1727.

steganography (steg-a-nog'rā-fī), n. [= F. steganographie, < Gr. στεγανός, covered (< στέγειν, cover), + γράφειν, write, mark.] The art of writing in eipher, or in characters which are not intelligible except to the persons who correspond with each other; cryptography. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 498.

The Art of Stenographie, . . . wherevnto is annexed a very easie Direction for Steganographie, or Secret Writing, printed at London in 1602 for Cuthbert Burbie.

Title, quoted in Encyc. Brit., XXI, 836, note.

Steganophthalmata (steg'a-nof-thal'mā-tā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of steganophthalmatus;

see steganophthalmatus.] The covered-eyed aealephs, a division containing those jelly-fishes whose sensory tentaculieysts are covered with flaps or lappets proceeding from the margin of the disk; contrasted with Gymnophthalmata. This division contains some of the commonest jellyfishes, as Aurelia aurita; it corresponds to Discophora in a usual sense, more exactly to Discophora phanerocephala, or Scyphomedusa. Also called Steganophthalmia. See also cut under Aurelia.

steganophthalmate (steg'a-nof-thal'māt), a. and n. [< NL. steganophthalmatus*, < Gr. στεγανός, covered, + ὀφθαλμός, eye.] I. a. Covered-eyed or hidden-eyed, as a hydromedusan; not gymnophthalmate. Also steganophthalmic, steganophthalmic, steganophthalmous.

II. n. A member of the Steganophthalmata.

steganophthalmatus (steg'a-nof-thal'mā-tus), a. [< NL. steganophthalmatus*; see steganophthalmate.] Same as steganophthalmate.

Steganophthalmia (steg'a-nof-thal'mī-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στεγανός, covered, + ὀφθαλμός, eye.] Same as Steganophthalmata.

steganophthalmic (steg'a-nof-thal'mik), a. [< steganophthalm-ate + -ic.] Same as steganophthalmate.

steganophthalmous (steg'a-nof-thal'mns), a. [< Gr. στεγανός, covered, + ὀφθαλμός, eye.] Same as steganophthalmate.

steganopod (steg'a-nō-pod), a. and n. [< NL. steganopod (-pod-), < Gr. στεγανόπους (-pod-), web-footed, < στεγανός, covered, + πούς (pod-) = E. foot.] I. a. In ornith., having all four toes webbed; totipalmate.

II. n. A member of the Steganopodes.

Steganopoda (steg'a-nop'ō-dā), n. pl. [NL.; see steganopod.] An Aristotelian group of birds, approximately equivalent to the Linnean Anseres, or web-footed birds collectively.

steganopodan (steg'a-nop'ō-dan), a. [< steganopod + -an.] In ornith., totipalmate; steganopod.

Steganopodes (steg'a-nop'ō-dēz), n. pl. [NL.; see steganopod.] An order of natatorial birds, consisting of those which have all four toes webbed and a more or less developed gular pouch; the Totipalmate. It is now usually divided into six families, Sulidæ, Pelecanidæ, Phalacrocoracidæ, Platidæ, Tachypetidæ, and Phaethonidæ, respectively represented by the gannets, pelicans, cormorants, darters, frigates, and tropic-birds. Dysporomorphæ, Pinnipedes, and Piscatores are synonyms. See cuts under anhinga, cormorant, frigate-bird, gannet, pelican, Phaethon, rough-billed, and totipalmate.

steganopodous (steg'a-nop'ō-dus), a. [< steganopod + -ous.] Same as steganopod.

Steganopus (ste-gan'ō-pus), n. [NL. (Vieillot, 1818): see steganopod.] A genus of phalaropes, having the toes margined with an even membrane, and the bill very long and slender.

Wilson's Phalarope (Steganopus wilsoni).

It includes Wilson's phalarope, S. wilsoni, a North American species, the largest and handsomest of the family. This genus has nothing to do with the order of birds that appears, from the term Steganopodes, to be named from it.

Stegocarpus (steg-ō-kār'pī), n. pl. [NL.; see stegocarpous.] A division of bryaceous mosses in which the capsule opens in the upper part by a deciduous lid or operculum. It embraces the larger part of the true mosses.

stegocarpous (steg-ō-kār'pus), a. [< NL. stegocarpus*, < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + καρπός, fruit.] In bot., of or belonging to the Stegocarpi; having an operculate capsule.

Under view of a segment of the disk of Aurelia aurita; m, a lithocyst with its protective hood, a usual character of Steganophthalmata; c, the arrangement of the radiating canals; g, the aperture of a genital chamber, with plaited genital membrane.

Stegocephala (steg-ō-sef'a-lā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of stegocephalus*; see stegocephalous.] Same as Labyrinthodontia. Also Stegocephali.

stegocephalian (steg'ō-sef'a-li-an), a. and n. [< Stegocephala + -ian.] I. a. Stegocephalous.

II. n. A member of the Stegocephala.

stegocephalous (steg-ō-sef'a-lus), a. [< NL. stegocephalus*, < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + κεφαλή, the head.] Having the head mailed, loricated, or cataphracted, as a labyrinthodont; having the characters of, or pertaining to, the Stegocephala.

Stegodon (steg'ō-don), n. [NL. (Falconer, 1857), < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + ὄδοις (ōdōn-) = E. tooth.] 1. A genus of fossil elephants of the Tertiaries of India, intermediate in their dental characters between the existing elephants and the mastodons. They are, however, most nearly related to the former, belonging to the same subfamily, Elephantinae. S. insignis is an example.

2. [l. c.] An elephant of this genus.

stegognathous (ste-gog'nā-thus), a. [< Gr. στέγειν, cover, + γνάθος, jaw.] In conch., having a jaw composed of imbricated plates: noting the Bulinulidæ.

Stegoptera (ste-gop'te-rā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of stegopterus*; see stegopterous.] An order of neuropterous insects; the roof-winged insects. It included the Panorpidæ or scorpion-flies, the Rhaphidiidæ or snake-flies, the Mantispidæ or mantis-flies, the Myrmeleontidæ or ant-lions, the Hemerobiidæ or lacewings, the Stalidæ or May-flies, and the Phryganeidæ or caddis-flies. The order is now broken up.

stegopterous (ste-gop'te-rus), a. [< NL. stegopterus*, < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + πτερόν, wing, = E. feather.] In entom., roof-winged; holding the wings deflexed when at rest; of or pertaining to the Stegoptera.

Stegosauria (steg-ō-sā'ri-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + σαῖρος, a lizard.] An order or suborder of dinosaurs, represented by the families Stegosauridæ and Scelidosauridæ.

stegosaurian (steg-ō-sā'ri-an), a. and n. [< Stegosauria + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Stegosauria, or having their characters.

II. n. A dinosaur of the order Stegosauria.

Stegosauridæ (steg-ō-sā'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stegosaurus + -idæ.] A family of herbivorous dinosaurs, typified by the genus Stegosaurus, with bicneave vertebræ, ischia retrorse and meeting in mid-line, the astragalus coalesced with the tibia, and the metatarsals short. They were Jurassic reptiles of great size.

Stegosaurus (steg-ō-sā'rus), n. [NL. (Marsh, 1857), < Gr. στέγειν, cover, + σαῖρος, a lizard.]

1. The typical genus of Stegosauridæ. It contained species some 30 feet long, mailed with enormous bucklers and spines.—2. [l. c.] A dinosaur of this genus.

steik, v. t. See steek.

steillt, n. An obsolete Scotch spelling of *stale*¹.

stein¹, v. and n. An obsolete Scotch spelling of *steed*¹, *stee*².

stein² (stīn), n. [G. stein, stone.] An earthenware mug, especially one designed to hold beer.

Steinberger (stīn'bēr-ger), n. A white wine grown on the Rhine, near Wiesbaden in Prussia. The vineyard belongs to the Prussian national domain. Steinberger ranks in estimation second only to the Johannisberger, and in some years is considered better by connoisseurs.

steinbock (stīn'bok), n. [G.: see steenbok.] 1. The ibex.—2. Same as steenbok.

Steinerian (stī-nē'ri-an), a. and n. [Named by Cremona from Steiner (see def.).] I. a. Pertaining to the discoveries of the German geometer Jacob Steiner (1796–1863).—Steinerian polygon. See polygon.

II. n. In math., the locus of points whose first polars with respect to a given curve have double points.

Steiner's surface. See surface.

steing, n. Same as *sting*².

steinhellite (stīn'hī-lit), n. A variety of iolite.

steining (stī'ning), n. Same as steening, 2.

Steinitz gambit. See gambit.

steinkirk (stīn'kērk), n. See steenkirk.

steinmannite (stīn'mān-it), n. [Named after Steinmann, a German mineralogist.] A variety of galena containing some arsenic and antimony. It commonly occurs in octahedral crystals.

steirk, n. See stirk. steive, v. A variant of *stive*².

steket, v. An obsolete form of *stiek*¹.

stelt. An obsolete form of *steed*¹, *steal*², *stale*², etc.

stela (stē'lā), n. Same as *stela*³.

stela¹. An old spelling of *steal*¹, *steal*².

stela², n. An obsolete form of *stale*².

stelochite (stel'ō-kit), n. See steelechite.
stelography (stē-log'ra-fi), n. [*L*Gr. στῆλογραφία, an inscription on a stele or upright slab, < Gr. στήλη, a stele (see stela), + γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The practice of writing or inscribing on steles or pillars.

Jacob's pillar . . . thus engraved . . . gave probably the origin to the invention of stelography.
Stalckhouse, Hist. Bible, p. 323.

stem¹ (stem), n. [ME. stem, stam, < AS. stemm, stefn, stefn, also stefn (> D. dial. stovin), stem, trunk (of a tree), = D. stam, stem, trunk, stock (of a tree or family), = MLG. stam, stamme, stem, stock, = OHG. MHG. stam (stamm-), G. stamm, stem (of a tree), trunk, tree, stock, race, = Icel. stafn, stömm, stem, trunk of a tree, = Sw. stam = Dan. stamme (in comp. stamm-), stem, trunk, stock (of a tree), stock, race, family (also with some variation of form in a particular sense, 'the prow of a vessel': see stem²); = Old. tamon, Ir. tamhán (for *stamon), stem, trunk; cf. Gr. στῆλος, an earthen jar; with formative -un-, < √ sta, stand: see stand. Not related to staff, except remotely.] 1. The body of a tree, shrub, or plant; the firm part which supports the branches; the stock; the stalk; technically, the ascending axis, which ordinarily grows in an opposite direction to the root or descending axis. The stem is composed of fibrous, spiral, and cellular tissues, arranged in various ways; it typically assumes a cylindrical form and a perpendicular position, and bears upon it the remaining aerial parts of the plant. Its form and direction, however, are subject to much variation in particular cases. In regard to internal structure, there are three principal modifications of stems characteristic of three of the great natural classes into which the vegetable kingdom is divided—namely, exogens, endogens, and acrogenes. Stems are herbaceous or woody, solid or hollow, jointed or unjointed, branched or simple. Sometimes they are so weak as to be procumbent, although more generally firm and erect; sometimes weak stems are upheld by twining or by other methods of climbing. In some plants the stem is so short as to seem to be wanting, the leaves and flower-stalks appearing to spring from the top of the root. There are also stems, such as the rhizome and tuber, which, being subterranean, have been mistaken for roots. See cuts under baobab, esparto, internode, pipsissewa, snakeroot, rhizome, and tuber.

2. The stalk which supports the flower or the fruit of a plant; the peduncle of the fructification, or the pedicel of a flower; the petiole or leaf-stem. See cuts under pedicel, peduncle, and petiole.

Two lovely berries moulded on one stem.
Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 211.

For I man crush among the stoure
Thy slender stem.
Burns, To a Mountain Daisy.

3. The stock of a family; a race; ancestry.
Ye may all, that are of noble stem,
Approach, and kiss her sacred vesture's hem.
Milton, Arcades, l. 82.

4. A branch of a family; an offshoot.
Richard Plantagenet, . . .
Sweet stem from York's great stock.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 41.

5. Anything resembling the stem of a plant. Specifically—(a) The handle of a tool. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] (b) That part of a vase, cup, or goblet which unites the body to the foot or base, in examples where the body is not immediately set upon the latter.
Wine-glasses or goblets are classified by the nature of their stems, or by the nature of their feet.
H. J. Powell, Glass-Making, p. 61.

(c) In type-founding, the thick stroke or body-mark of a roman or italic letter. See cut under type. (d) In a vehicle, a bar to which the bow of a falling hood is hinged. (e) The projecting rod of a reciprocating valve, serving to guide it in its action. See cut under slide-valve. (f) In zool. and anat., any slender, especially axial, part like the stem of a plant; a stalk, stipe, rachis, footstalk, etc. (g) In ornith., the whole shaft of a feather. (h) In entom., the base of a clavate antenna, including all the joints except the enlarged outer ones: used especially in descriptions of the Lepidoptera.

6. In musical notation, a vertical line added to the head of certain kinds of notes. Of the kinds of note now in use, all but two, the breve and the semi-breve, have stems. It may be directed either upward or downward, thus, ♪. When two voice-parts are written on the same staff, the stems of the notes belonging to the upper part are often directed upward, and those of the lower part downward, particularly when the parts cross, or both use the same note (see figure). The latter note is said to have a double stem. See note 1, 13. Also called tail.

7. In philol., a derivative from a root, having itself inflected forms, whether of declension or of conjugation, made from it; the unchanged part in a series of inflectional forms, from which the forms are viewed as made by additions; base; crude form.—Aerial stem, the above-ground axis of a plant, as opposed to the rootstock or other subterranean form of the stem.—Ancipital, compound, erect, herbaceous, pituitary, secondary, etc., stem. See the adjectives.

stem¹ (stem), v. t.: pret. and pp. stemmed, ppr. stemming. [ME. stemmen; < Icel. stemma = Sw. stamma = Dan. stemme, stem, = OHG. MHG. stemmen, stemen, G. stemmen, stämmen, stop, stem, dam; < √ stam in stan², stammer, etc.: see stammer. Not connected with stem¹ or stem².] 1. To stop; check; dam up, as a stream.
And loke ze stemme no stepe [stcp], hot stretch on faste,
Til ze reche to areset [stopping place], rest ze neuer.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 905.
The best way is, ever, not to attempt to stem a torrent, but to divert it.
A. Hamilton, To Washington (Works, I. 345).
He who stems a stream with sand.
Scott, L. of the L., iii. 23.

2. To tamp; make tight, as a joint, with a lute or cement.
He sat down to his milk-porridge, which it was his old frugal habit to stem his morning hunger with.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, l. 12.

stem² (stem), n. [ME. *stem, stam, < AS. *stemm, stefn, *stefn, also stefna, stefna, the prow of a ship (steofstefn, the poop, lit. 'steer-stem'), = OS. stamm = D. steven = MLG. L*G*. sterven, prow of a ship (> G. sterven, stem (vorder-steven, 'fore stem,' prow, hinter-steven, 'hind stem,' stern-post)), = Icel. stafn, stamm, also stefni, stemmi, stem of a ship (prow or stern), = Dan. stavn, stavn = Sw. stäf, prow (fram-stam, 'fore stem,' prow, bakstam, 'back stem,' stem); a particular use, with variations of form, of AS. stemm, stefn, E. stem¹, etc., stem, trunk, post: see stem¹. The naut. use in E. is prob. in part of Scand. origin.] 1. A curved piece of timber or metal to which the two sides of a ship are united at the foremost end. The lower end of it is scarfed or riveted to the keel, and the bowsprit, when present, rests on its upper end. In wooden ships it is frequently called the main stem, to distinguish it from the false stem, or cutwater. The outside of the stem is usually marked with a scale showing the perpendicular height from the keel, for indicating the draft of water forward. See also cut under forecastle.

Pretious jewells fecht from far
By Italian merchants that with Russian stemes Plout us huge forrowes in the Terren Maine.
The Taming of the Shrew, p. 22. (Halliwell.)

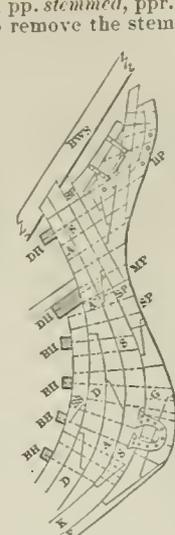

2. The forward part of a vessel; the bow.
Turnynge therfore the stemmes of his shyppes towarde the Easte, he affirmed that he had founde the Ilande of Ophir.
Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on America, ed. Arber, p. 66).

False stem, a stem fitted closely to the forward side of the main stem, generally sharp, and introduced for the purpose of decreasing a vessel's resistance and increasing her speed; a cutwater.—From stem to stern, from one end of the ship to the other, or through the whole length.
They skip
From stem to stern; the boatswain whistles.
Shak., Pericles, iv. 1. 64.

stem³ (stem), v. t.: pret. and pp. stemmed, ppr. stemming. [ME. stemmen; < Icel. stemma = Sw. stamma = Dan. stemme, stem, = OHG. MHG. stemmen, stemen, G. stemmen, stämmen, stop, stem, dam; < √ stam in stan², stammer, etc.: see stammer. Not connected with stem¹ or stem².] 1. To stop; check; dam up, as a stream.
And loke ze stemme no stepe [stcp], hot stretch on faste,
Til ze reche to areset [stopping place], rest ze neuer.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 905.
The best way is, ever, not to attempt to stem a torrent, but to divert it.
A. Hamilton, To Washington (Works, I. 345).
He who stems a stream with sand.
Scott, L. of the L., iii. 23.

2. To head; advance head on.
At first we could scarce lie S. W., but, being got a degree to the Southward of the Line, the Wind veer'd most Easterly, and then we stemmed S. W. by S.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 79.

stem³ (stem), v. t.: pret. and pp. stemmed, ppr. stemming. [ME. stemmen; < Icel. stemma = Sw. stamma = Dan. stemme, stem, = OHG. MHG. stemmen, stemen, G. stemmen, stämmen, stop, stem, dam; < √ stam in stan², stammer, etc.: see stammer. Not connected with stem¹ or stem².] 1. To stop; check; dam up, as a stream.
And loke ze stemme no stepe [stcp], hot stretch on faste,
Til ze reche to areset [stopping place], rest ze neuer.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 905.
The best way is, ever, not to attempt to stem a torrent, but to divert it.
A. Hamilton, To Washington (Works, I. 345).
He who stems a stream with sand.
Scott, L. of the L., iii. 23.

Stem and allied parts.
S, stem; K, keel; A, apron; D, deadwood; SS, stemson; BH, deck-hooks; BH, breast hooks; SP, stem-piece, or independent piece; MP, main piece, or lace-piece; BP, boustay-piece; BWS, bowsprit; G, gripe; F, false keel. (The dotted lines show bolts.)

He sat down to his milk-porridge, which it was his old frugal habit to stem his morning hunger with.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, l. 12.

2. To tamp; make tight, as a joint, with a lute or cement.

stem⁴, n. and v. An old spelling of steam.

stemapod (stem'a-pod), n. [Gr. στῆμα, filament (see stamen), + ποῖς (pois) = E. foot.] One of the caudal filaments of the caterpillars of certain moths, as Cerura and Heterocampa, whose last pair of legs are thus modified into deterrent or repugnatorial organs. A. S. Packard.

stem-character (stem'kar'ak-tēr), n. In gram., same as characteristic letter (which see, under characteristic).

stem-clasping (stem'klás'ping), a. Embracing the stem with its base; amplexicaul, as a leaf or petiole.

stem-climber (stem'kli'mēr), n. In bot., see climber¹, 2.

stemet, v. t. A Middle English form of steam.
stem-eelworm (stem'el'wērm), n. A minute nematoid, Tylenchus devastatrix, which causes stem-sickness in certain plants. See Tylenchus.

stem-end (stem'end), n. That part or point in a fruit which is attached to the stem; opposed to the blossom-end, which frequently bears the remains of the calyx, as in a pear or an apple. The stem-end is usually inferior to the blossom-end in sweetness and flavor.

stem-head (stem'hed), n. In ship-building, the top of the stem, or continuation of the forward extreme of the keel.

stem-knee (stem'nē), n. In ship-building, a knee uniting the stem with the keel.

stem-leaf (stem'lēf), n. A leaf growing from the stem; a cauline leaf.

stemless (stem'les), a. [*stem*¹ + -less.] Having no stem; having the stem so little developed as to appear to be wanting; acaulescent.—Stemless lady's-slipper, thistle, violet. See the nouns.

stemlet (stem'let), n. [*stem*¹ + -let.] A little stem or stalk; a young stem.
Gives insertion to two multarticulate stemlets.
English Cyc., Nat. Hist. Division (1855), III. 87.

stemma (stem'mā), n.; pl. stemmata (-ā-tā). [L. stemma, < Gr. στέμμα, a wreath, garland, < στέβειν, put around, encircle, wreath, crown.] 1. A family tree, or pedigree; specifically, such a pedigree made more or less decorative with heraldic or other ornaments; also, pedigree in general; order of descent; family; as, a man of the stemma of the Cecils.—2. The simple as distinguished from the compound eye of an invertebrate; an ocellus: always sessile and immovable.—3. One of the facets or corneules of a compound eye.—4. In entom., the tubercle from which an antenna arises.—Spurious stemma, a small flat space, covered with semi-transparent membrane, above the bases of the antennae of certain Orthoptera: it has been supposed to represent a stemma, or simple eye, in a rudimentary form.

Stemmatopteris (stem'a-top'te-ris), n. [NL. < Gr. στέμμα(τ-), a wreath, + πτερίς, a fern.] A genus of fossil plants, established by Corda, under which various stems or trunks of tree-ferns have been grouped, but little being known in regard to them, except the form of the scars or impressions marking the points of attachment of the petioles. Lesquerieux describes remains of this kind under the names of Stemmatopteris, Caulopteris, Megaphyton, and Pearonius; but, as he remarks, they could all have been described without inconvenience under the name of Caulopteris. These fossil remains are common in the coal-measures. See Caulopteris.

stemmatous (stem'a-tus), a. [stemma(t-) + -ous.] Pertaining to a stemma, or having its character; ocellar.

stemmed (stemd), a. [*stem*¹ + -ed².] Furnished with or bearing a stem: used chiefly in composition; as, a straight-stemmed plant.

stemmer (stem'ēr), n. [*stem*³ + -er¹.] 1. Same as blasting-needle. [Eng.]—2. An implement used in making joints tight by means of cement.

stemmery (stem'ēr-i), n.; pl. stemmeries (-iz). [*stem*¹ + -ery.] A factory where tobacco is stripped from the stem. New York Herald, July 17, 1884. [Local, U. S.]

stemming (stem'ing), n. [Verbal n. of stem³, v.] 1. The operation of tamping.—2. The material used in tamping. [Eng. in both uses.]

Stemodia (stē-mō'di-ā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1763), shortened from Stomodiacra (P. Browne, 1756), so called from the two-forked stamens; < Gr. στήμων, taken for 'stamen' (see stamen), + dis, di-, two-, + ἄκρον, a point, tip.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Scrophulariaceae and tribe Gratiolaceae, type of a subtribe Stemodieae. It is characterized by flowers with five nearly equal calyx-lobes, and four perfect didynamous stamens included within the corolla-tube, and by a capsule splitting partly or completely into four valves, the two placentae separating or remaining united in a column. There are about 30 species, mostly tropical, occurring in all continents except Europe. They are glandular-hairy or downy herbs, sometimes shrubby and often aromatic. They bear opposite or whorled leaves and solitary or spiked and crowded, usually bluish flowers, sometimes with bracted pedicels. S. maritima is known in Jamaica as bastard or seaside germander, and S. durantifolia as goatweed; the latter, a low clammy plant with purplish spiked flowers, extends also from southern Arizona to Brazil.

Stemona (stē'mō-nā), n. [NL. (Loureiro, 1790), so called from the peculiar stamens; < Gr. στήμων, taken for 'stamen.')] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, type of the order Stemonaceae. It is distinguished by erect ovules and seeds, and stamens with very short filaments more or less united into a ring, having linear erect anthers with a thickened connective, continued above into an erect appendage. There are 4 or 5 species, natives of India, Malaysia, and tropical Australia. They are smooth, lofty-climbing twiners, growing from a fusiform tuberous root, and bearing shining alternate leaves which are cordate, ovate, or narrower, with three or more nerves and numerous cross-veinlets. The flowers form racemes, or are few or solitary in the axils; the perianth segments are rather large, distinct, and erect, marked by many nerves. Formerly called Roxburghia.

Stemonaceae (stē-mō-nā'sō-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Durand, 1888), < Stemona + -aceae.] A small order of monocotyledonous plants, of the series Coronarieae, by many formerly called Roxburghiaceae. It is characterized by regular bisexual flowers with a four-parted perianth of two rows, with four stamens and a one-celled ovary which contains two or more ovules and ripens into a two-valved capsule. It includes 8 species, belonging to 3 genera, of which Stichoneuron and Stemona (the type) are largely Indian; the other genus, Croonia, includes one species in Japan, and another, C. pauciflora, in Florida and adjacent States.

Stemonitaceae (stē'mō-nī-tā'sē-ō), n. pl. [NL., < Stemonitis + -aceae.] A family of myxomycetous fungi, belonging, according to the classification of Rostafinski, to the order Amaurochaetae, which has a single sporangium or aethalium, without the peculiar deposits of lime carbonate that characterize the fructification of other orders, and the spores, epillitium, and columella usually uniformly black, or rarely brownish-violet.

Stemonitis (stē'mō-nī'tis), n. [NL. (Gleditsch), < Gr. στήμων, taken for 'stamen.')] A genus of myxomycetous fungi, giving name to the family Stemonitaceae.

stem-pessary (stem'pes'sā-ri), n. A pessary with a rod or stem which is passed into the cervix uteri.

stem-piece (stem'pēs), n. In ship-building, a piece between the stem and the chocks, also called independent piece. See cut under *stem*².

stempel (stem'pl), n. [Cf. D. stempel = MHG. stempfel, G. stempel (< D.), a mark, stamp; see stamp.] In mining, a small timber used to support the ground by being laid across the stulls, or in other ways: in some mining districts of England nearly the same as lacing or lagging.

stem-sickness (stem'sik'nes), n. A disease of clover in England. It is caused by a nematoid worm, Tylenchus devastatrix, known as the stem-eelworm, and brings about first a stunted condition and finally the death of the plant.

stemson (stem'son), n. [Perhaps a var. of stanchion, confused with *stem*². Cf. keelson, sternson.] In ship-building, a piece of curved timber fixed on the after part of the apron inside. The lower end is scarfed into the keelson, and receives the scarf of the stem, through which it is bolted.

stem-stitch (stem'stich), n. In pillar-lace making, a stitch by which a thick braid-like stripe is produced: used for the stems of flowers and sprigs, tendrils, etc.

stem-winder (stem'wīn'dēr), n. A watch which is wound up or regulated by means of a contrivance connected with the stem, and not by a key.

sten, v. and n. See stend.

stench¹ (stench), n. [ME. stench, stunch, < AS. stenc (= OHG. stanc, stanch, MHG. stanc, stenke, G. stank = Sw. Dan. stank), a smell, odor (pleasant or unpleasant), < stincan, smell: see stink, v., and cf. stink, n. Cf. Icel. stækja, a stench.] An ill smell; an offensive odor.

In our way to Tivoli I saw the rivulet of Salforata, formerly called Albulca, and smelt the stench that arises from its waters some time before I saw them.

Addison, Remarks on Italy (Bohn), I. 482. = Syn. Stink, etc. See smell.

stench¹ (stench), v. t. [< *stench*¹, n.] To cause to emit a stench; cause to stink.

Dead birds stench every coast. Young, Resignation, I. 24.

stench² (stench), v. t. An obsolete variant of *stench*¹. Harvey.

stenchful (stench'fūl), a. [< *stench*¹ + -ful.] Full of bad odors. Her. T. Adams, Werks, II. 56.

stencil (sten'shil), n. A Scotch form of stanchell for stanchion.

stencil-pipe (stencil'pīp), n. In plumbing, an extension of a soil-pipe through and above the roof of a house, to allow foul gases to escape.

stencil-trap (stencil'trap), n. In a drain, a depression or hollow in which water lies, introduced to prevent the reflex passage of foul air or gas.

stenchy (sten'chi), a. [< *stench*¹ + -y.] Having a stench or offensive smell. Dyer, The Fleecce, i.

stencil¹ (sten'sil), v. t.; pret. and pp. stenciled, stencilled, ppr. stenciling, stencilting. [Origin uncertain: (a) According to Skeat, prob. < OF. estinceller (for estinceller*), cover with stars, powder (used in heraldry), lit. 'sparkle,' F. étinceler, sparkle, < L. scintillare, sparkle: see scintillate. Cf. insel. (b) In another view, orig. as a noun, identical with *stencil*², a dial. var. of stanchell, var. of stanchion, ult. < OF. estance, a support: see stance and stanchion.] To mark out or paint by means of a stencil.

stencil¹ (sten'sil), n. [See *stencil*¹, v.] 1. A thin plate or sheet of any substance in which a figure, letter, or pattern is formed by cutting through the plate. If the plate thus cut is placed upon a surface and rubbed with color or ink, the pattern or figure will be marked on the underlying substance. For many purposes, the letters, etc., are cut through completely; for transferring a pattern, as in embroidery, the lines of the pattern are often indicated by small holes. In wall-decoration, etc., both these plans are employed. Different stencils are often used in the same design, each for a different color.

2. The coloring matter used in marking with a stencil-plate. C. T. Davis, Bricks and Tiles, p. 90.—3. In ceram., a preparation laid upon the biscuit to keep the oil used in transfer-printing or enameling from adhering to the surface; hence, the pattern traced by this preparation, reserving a panel or medallion of the unaltered color of the biscuit.

stencil² (sten'sil), n. [A var. of *stanchell*¹.] A door-post; a stanchion. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stenciler, stenciller (sten'sil-ēr), n. [< *stencil*¹ + -er.] One who works with a stencil, especially a decorative painter who applies patterns with a stencil.

stencil-pen (sten'sil-pen), n. A pricking-machine for perforating paper to form a stencil. It consists of a hollow stylus carrying a needle having a reciprocating motion. See electric pen, under *pen*².

stencil-plate (sten'sil-plāt), n. A stencil.

stend (stend), v. i. [< OF. estendre, F. étendre = It. stendere, < L. extendere, stretch forth, extend: see extend.] 1. To extend. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To walk with long steps.—3. To leap; bound; rear; spring. Also sten. [Scotch and prov. Eng.]

stend (stend), n. [< stend, v.] A leap; a spring; a long step or stride. Also sten. Burns, Tam Glen. [Scotch and prov. Eng.]

Stenelytra (stē-nel'i-trā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of stenelytrus*: see stenelytrous.] In entom., in Latreille's system, the third family of heteromerous Coleoptera, divided into 5 tribes, corresponding to the old genera Helaps, Cistela, Dircaea, Oedemera, and Mycterus.

stenelytrous (stē-nel'i-trus), a. [< NL. stenelytros*, < Gr. στενός, narrow, strait, + ἐλύτρον, a cover: see elytrum.] Having narrow elytra; of or pertaining to the Stenelytra.

Stenobothrus (sten-ō-both'rus), n. [NL. (Fischer, 1853), < Gr. στενός, narrow, strait, ing such species as S. maculipennis. This is a common grasshopper in most parts of the United States, and resembles the hateful grasshopper or Rocky Mountain locust (Melanoplus spretus) so closely that it has often been mistaken for the latter.

stenocardia (sten-ō-kār'di-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. στενός, narrow, + καρδία, the heart.] Angina pectoris.

Stenocarpus (sten-ō-kār'pus), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1810), so called from the usually narrow fruit; < Gr. στενός, narrow, + καρπός, fruit.] A genus of apetalous trees, of the order Proteaceae and tribe Embothriaceae. It is characterized by umbellate flowers, and numerous ovules downwardly imbricated and ripening into seeds which are winged below. There are 14 species, 11 of which are natives of New Caledonia and 3 of Australia. They are trees with alternate or scattered leaves, which are entire or deeply divided into a few pinnate segments, and mostly yellow or red flowers with a somewhat irregular perianth-tube and a nearly globular recurved and at length divided border, disposed in terminal or axillary umbels which are solitary or clustered in a short raceme or a compound umbel, and are followed by coriaceous stalked follicles. S. sinuatus is known in Queensland as tulip-tree and fire-tree. S. salignus, native of the same regions, is known as beefwood, sibky oak, and meleyn.

stenocephalous (sten-ō-sef'a-lus), a. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + κεφαλή, head.] Narrow-headed.

stenochromy (sten-ō-krō-mī), n. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + χρῶμα, color.] The art of printing several colors at one impression. This is accomplished by various methods: (1) by dividing the ink-fountain of a printing-press into compartments, one for each color, and allowing the rollers to blend the links on the distributing-table; (2) by cutting or trimming the rollers of a printing-press in such a way that only the desired parts may take and distribute ink—a different color for each roller or set of rollers; (3) by lithographic methods.

stenocoronine (sten-ō-kō-rō-nin), a. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + κορώνη, a crown, also a crown.] Having narrow-crowned molars: noting the hippopotamine type of dentition, as distinguished from the eurycoronine or dinotherian. Fulcoer.

stenderm (sten-ō-dēr-m), n. [< Stenderma.] A bat of the genus Stenderma; a stendermine. — Spectacled stenderm, Stenderma peregrinatum, a tropical American bat marked about the eyes as if wearing spectacles. Also called spectacled vampire.

Stenderma (sten-ō-dēr'mā), n. [NL. (Geoffroy), < Gr. στενός, narrow, + δέρμα, skin, hide.] A genus of American phyllostomine bats, of the subfamily Phyllostomatinae, having a short, broad, obtuse muzzle, short but distinct nose-leaf, no tail, and the interfemoral membrane conceave behind. S. achradohilum of the West Indies is so called from its fondness for the berries of Achras sapota, the naseberry.

Stendermata (sten-ō-dēr'mā-tā), n. pl. [NL.: see Stenderma.] A section of phyllostomine bats, of which the genera Stenderma, Artibeus, and Centurio are leading forms. It includes about 20 species, of 9 genera, of Neotropical bats. See cut under Centurio.

stendermatous (sten-ō-dēr'mā-tus), a. Pertaining to the Stendermata, or having their characters; resembling a stenderm.

stendermine (sten-ō-dēr'min), a. and n. [< Stenderma + -ine.] I. a. Having a contracted wing-membrane, as a bat; of or pertaining to the Stendermata.

II. n. A stendermine bat; a stenderm.

Stenodus (sten-ō-dns), n. [NL. (Richardson, 1836), < Gr. στενός, narrow, + ὄδός = E. tooth.] A genus of salmonoid fishes, related both to Salmo and to Coregonus, having an elongate body, projecting lower jaw, and weak teeth. The inconnu, or Mackenzie river salmon, is S. mackenzii, attaining a weight of 20 pounds or more, esteemed as a food-fish. See cut under inconnu.

stenograph (sten-ō-gráf), n. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + γράφειν, write.] 1. A character used in stenography; a writing, especially any note or memorandum, in shorthand.

I saw the reporters' room, in which they redact their hasty stenographs. Emerson, Eng. Traits, p. 265.

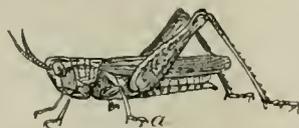

2. A stenographic machine; a form of typewriter in which signs and marks of various kinds—dots, dashes, etc.—are used in place of ordinary letters. A number of different machines have been made, essentially typewriters operated by means of a keyboard.

stenograph (sten-ō-gráf), v. i. [< stenograph, n.] To write or represent by stenography. Ill. London News, [Kare.]

stenographer (stē-nog'grā-fēr), n. [< stenograph (y) + -er.] One who writes shorthand.

stenographic (sten-ō-gráf'ik), a. [= F. sténographique; as stenograph-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to stenography; shorthand.—Stenographic machine. Same as stenograph, 2.

stenographical (sten-ō-gráf'ik-āl), a. [< stenographic + -al.] Same as stenographic.

Stenobothrus maculipennis. a, mature insect; b, pupa; c, larva. (All natural size.)

close, + βόρος, a hole.] A notable genus of grasshoppers, of the family Acridiidae, contain-stenographically (sten-ō-graf'i-kal-i), adv. In shorthand; by means of stenography.

stenographist (stē-nog'ra-fist), n. [< stenography + -ist.] A stenographer; a shorthand-writer.
stenography (stē-nog'ra-fī), n. [= F. sténographie, < Gr. στενός, narrow, close, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The art of writing by means of brief signs which represent single sounds, groups of sounds, whole words, or groups of words; shorthand; brachygraphy: a generic term embracing all systems of shorthand, or brief writing.

The cradle age
 Did throng the Seates, the Boxes, and the Stage
 So much that some by Stenography drew
 The plot: put it in print.
Heywood, If you Know not Me (Works, ed. Pearson, 1. 191).
 Sure 'tis Stenographie, everie Character a word, and here and there one for a whole sentence.
Brome, Northern Lass, iii. 2.

Stenonian duct. See Stenson's duct.
stenopaic, stenopæic (sten-ō-pā'ik, -pē'ik), a. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + ὀπή, an opening, + -ic.] Having a small or narrow opening.—Stenopaic slit, a narrow slit in an opaque lamina, placed before an eye to test the degree of its astigmatism by determining the difference of its refraction in different meridians.—Stenopaic spectacles, spectacles having an oval metal plate with a small central aperture.
Stenopelmatus (sten-ō-pel'ma-tus), n. [NL. (Burmeister, 1838), < Gr. στενός, narrow, + πέλας, the sole of the foot.] A curious genus of Locustidae, containing forms known in the western United States as *sand-cricket*s. They are fierce-looking insects with large head and jaws, and live under stones or in burrows in the sand. They are carnivorous, and in New Mexico are commonly but erroneously reputed to be poisonous. Several species are known in the western Sand-cricket (Stenopelmatus fasciatus), about half natural size.

United States, of which S. fasciatus is the commonest. The genus is also represented in Mexico, South America, and Australia.

stenopetalous (sten-ō-pet'a-lus), a. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + πέταλον, a leaf (petal): see petal.] In bot., having narrow petals; narrow-petaled.

stenophyllous (sten-ō-fil'us), a. [< Gr. στενόφυλλος, narrow-leaved, < στενός, narrow, close, + φύλλον, a leaf.] In bot., having narrow leaves.

Stenopsis (stē-nop'sis), n. [NL. (John Cassin, 1851), < Gr. στενός, narrow, + ὄψις, look, appearance.] A genus of the South American setirostral goatsuckers, of the family Caprimulgidae, containing numerous species, as S. cayennensis.

Stenorhynchinae (sten'ō-ring-kī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Stenorhynchus + -inae.] A subfamily of Phocidae, or seals, typified by the genus Stenorhynchus (or Ogmorhinus); the sterrincks. These seals exclusively inhabit southern seas, for Monachus, sometimes considered stenorhynchine, does not belong here. The only genera besides the type are Lobodon, Leptonychotes (or Leptonyx of Gray, not of Swainson), and Ommatophoca. As explained under sea-leopard, the current name is untenable. See cut under sea-leopard.

stenorhynchine (sten-ō-ring'kin), a. [< Stenorhynchus + -ine.] Of or pertaining to the Stenorhynchinae.

stenorhynchous (sten-ō-ring'kus), a. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + ρύγχος, snout.] In ornith., narrow-billed; having a compressed beak.

Stenorhynchus (sten-ō-ring'kus), n. [NL., < Gr. στενός, narrow, + ρύγχος, snout.] In zool.: (a) A genus of crabs, containing the British spider-crab, S. phalangium: same as Macropodia, Latreille, 1819. (b) A genus of seals. See Stenorhynchinae. F. Currier, 1826. (c) A name of other genera, of birds, reptiles, and insects respectively.

Steno's duct. See Stenson's duct.

stenosed (stē-nōst'), a. [< stenosis + -ed.] Characterized by stenosis; morbidly narrowed.
stenosis (stē-nō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. στενωσις, a straitening, < στενώνω, make narrow, straiten, < στενός, narrow, strait, close.] The pathological narrowing of a passage.

Stenostomata (sten-ō-stō'ma-tā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στενός, narrow, + στόμα(-), mouth.] A suborder of etenopherans, containing the saccate, lobate, and tenate comb-jellies, collectively contrasted with the Eurystomata (which see). Most of the comb-bearers belong to this division.

stenostomatous (sten-ō-stom'a-tus), a. [NL., < Gr. στενός, narrow, + στόμα(-), mouth.] Having a small, narrow, or contracted mouth; not eurystomatous. Also stenostomous.

Stenotaphrum (sten-ō-taf'rum), n. [NL. (Trinius, 1820), so called in allusion to the alternate notches of the rachis, in which the flowers are embedded; < Gr. στενός, narrow, + τάφος, a ditch or trench.] A genus of grasses, of the tribe Panicceae. It is characterized by flowers with only three glumes or with a fourth smaller one, the spikelets acute, borne in small fascicles sessile or half-immersed in excavations along a flattened or angled rachis. There are 3 or 4 species, very widely dispersed along sea-shores of tropical regions, and most frequent on the islands of the Indian and South Pacific Oceans. They are creeping grasses sending up short ascending and often compressed branches with spreading, flat, or convolute leaves, and a terminal spike of flowers. S. Americanum, locally known as buffalo-grass, is valued as a means of covering shifting sands with a firm turf, and has proved useful as a fodder-plant, especially on Ascension Island. See St. Augustine grass (under saint), and cut under petiole.

stenotelegraphy (sten'ō-tē-leg'ra-fī), n. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + E. telegraphy.] A rapid telegraphic transmission of words and sentences by a system of shorthand.

stenoterous (stē-not'e-rus), a. [< Gr. στενώτερος, compar. of στενός, narrow, strait, close.] Becoming more and more contracted from the center to the circumference, relatively to the radii represented.—Stenoterous map-projection. See projection.

stenotic (stē-not'ik), a. [< stenosis (-ot-) + -ic.] Pertaining to or of the nature of stenosis.

Stenotomus (stē-not'ō-mus), n. [NL. (Gill, 1865), < Gr. στενός, narrow, + τόμος, a cut, slice.] A genus of sparoid fishes, or a section of Diplodus, having the incisor teeth very narrow and entire. The type is S. argyriops, the common seup, seuppang, or porgy. See cut under seup.

steno-type (sten'ō-tip), n. [< Gr. στενός, narrow, + τύπος, type.] An ordinary type-letter—capital, lower-case, or italic—used to denote a shorthand character or outline. J. E. Munson, Diet. of Phonography, Int.

stentypic (sten-ō-tip'ik), a. [< stentype + -ic.] Of or pertaining to stentypy; printed according to the rules of stentypy.

stentypy (sten'ō-tī-pī), n. [< stentype + -y.] A method of representing or describing shorthand characters and outlines by ordinary type-letters. It is used for illustrating phonographic textbooks and literature, and also as a system of shorthand for typewriters. Capital letters are used to represent stems; small or lower-case letters stand for adjuncts; and an inverted period shows where a vowel-sound or sign comes in.

Stenson's duct. 1. The duct of the parotid gland (see parotid): so named from Nil Stenson, or Nicolaus Stenonius, of Copenhagen (1638-86). Also Stenonian duct, Steno's duct.—2. See ducts or canals of Stenson, under duct.

stent¹ (stent), v. and n. An obsolete or dialectal variant of stint.

stent² (stent), v. t. [A var. of stend, ult. of extend, after the noun stent².] 1. To stretch.—2. To straiten.—3. To confine. [Scotch in all senses.]

stent³ (stent), n. [A var. of stend, in def. 2 of extent: see stend, n., stent², v., and extent.] 1. A stretcher; a stenter (which see).—2. Extent; limit; in some English mining districts, the limits of a pitch or bargain.

stent⁴ (stent), n. [Se. also stant; < ME. stente, extent, taxation, valuation, < ML. extenta, valuation: see extent.] In Scots law, a valuation of property in order to taxation; a taxation; a tax.

stent⁵ (stent), v. t. [< stent³, n.] In Scots law, to assess; tax at a certain rate.

stent⁶ (stent), n. [ME. stent, stopping-place. Cf. Dan. stente, a stile; ult. < stand, v.] A stopping-place.

stent⁷ (stent), n. [Origin obscure.] In mining, same as attele. [Rare, Eng.]

stenter (sten'tēr), n. [< stent² + -er.] A machine or apparatus for stretching or stentering muslins and other thin fabrics. Also called stenter-hook.

stenter (sten'tēr), v. t. [< stenter, n.] To operate upon (thin cotton fabrics, as book-muslins, etc.) in a manner to impart to them a so-called elastic finish. This work as originally performed by hand was executed by holding the fabric edge-wise by the selvages, and pulling it backward and forward while it was subjected to the action of heated air. The various modern machines and frames now employed are designed to produce the same effect upon the goods by an analogous movement and treatment in a current of heated air.

stenting (sten'ting), n. Same as stenton.

stent-master (stent'mās'tēr), n. A person appointed to allocate the stent or tax on the persons liable. [Scotch.]

stenton (sten'ten), n. A short heading at right angles to a cross-cut. [North of England coal-fields.]

stentor (sten'tōr), n. [< L. Stentor, < Gr. Στένωρ, a Greek herald in the Trojan war, who, according to Homer, had a voice as loud as that of fifty other men together.] 1. A person having a very powerful voice.

British noises
 (For gain, lust, honour, in litigious prose),
 Are hellow'd out, and cracke the barbarous voices Of Turkish stentors.

Chapman, Iliad, To the Reader, l. 222.

2. In mammal: (a) The ursine howler, Myecetes ursinus, a platyrrhine monkey of South America; an aouate; any species of Myecetes. See cut under howler. (b) [cap.] The genus of howlers: same as Myecetes. Geoffroy, 1812.—

3. In Protozoa: (a) A trumpet-animalcule, or so-called funnel-like polyp. (b) [cap.] The typical genus of Stentoridae, of elongate, trumpet-like, or infundibuliform figure, with rounded peristome. They are of large size, often brilliant color, social habits, and wide distribution, among the longest- and best-known of infusorians. They were formerly mistaken for or classed with polyps. S. polymorphus is a leading species; S. niger is another. See also cut under Infusoria.

Stentor poly-morphus, twenty times natural size.

stentorian (sten-tō'ri-an), a. [< Stentor + -ian. Cf. LL. Stentoreus, Stentorian.] 1. Resembling the voice of Stentor (see stentor, etymology); extremely loud or powerful in sound.

They echo forth in stentorian clamours.
 Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 326.

He had a stentorian voice, and thundered it out.
 Aubrey, Lives (Ralph Kettle).

2. Able to utter a very loud sound: as, stentorian lungs.

Stentoridae (sten-tō'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stentor + -idae.] The trumpet-animalcules or funnel-like infusorians, a family of heterotrichous Infusoria, typified by the genus Stentor.
stentorin (sten'tō-rin), n. [< Stentor + -in.] The blue pigment or coloring matter of infusorians of the genus Stentor. E. R. Lankester, 1873.

stentorine (sten'tō-rin), a. [< Stentor + -ine.] Of or pertaining to the Stentoridae.

stentorious (sten-tō'ri-us), a. [< stentor + -ious. Cf. L. Stentoreus, < Gr. Στενώρειος, pertaining to Stentor, < Στένωρ, Stentor.] Stentorian. Fuller, Ch. Hist., X. iv. 61.

stentorophonic (sten'tō-rō-fō'n'ik), a. [< Gr. στενωρόφωνος, loud-voiced like Stentor, < Στένωρ, Stentor (see stentor), + φωνή, voice.] Speaking or sounding very loud. S. Butler, Hudibras, III. i. 252.

stent-roll (stent'rōl), n. The cess-roll. [Scotch.]

Stenus (stē'us), n. [NL. (Latreille, 1796), < Gr. στενός, narrow, strait.] A large and cosmopolitan genus of coleopterous insects, typical of the old family Stenidae, which is now included in the Staphylinidae. More than 200 species are known, all of small size and active habits, found usually on the banks of streams or ponds.

step (step), v.; pret. and pp. stepped or stept, ppr. stepping. [< (a) ME. steppen, stappen, < AS. steppan, steppan = OFries. steppa = MD. steppen, stippen, stappen, D. stappen = MLG. stapen = OHG. stephan, stephen, steffen, stepfen, MHG. stepfen, also OHG. staphōn, MHG. staphen, staffen, stapfen, go, step; secondary forms (in part from the noun) of (b) ME. stapen, *< AS. stapan (not found in the inf., for which appears the form steppan or steppan, above, which has the same pret. stōp, pp. stapen) = OS. stapan = OFries. stapa = MLG. stapen, go, advance; Teut. √ stap, appearing nasalized in stamp, q. v.; cf. Russ. stopa, footstep, sole of the foot; Skt. √ stambh, prop, make firm; ult. < √ sta, stand; see stand.] 1. Intrans. 1. To move the legs and feet as in walking: advance or recede by a movement of the foot or feet: as, to step forward; to step backward; to step up or down.

Alayn, for Goddes banes,
 Stepe on thy feet; com out, man, al st anes.

Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 154.

He pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on.
 Shk., T. N., iii. 4. 306.

'Tis done—he steps into the welcome chaise.
 Cooper, Retirement, l. 391.

2. To go; walk; march; especially to go a short distance: as, to step to a neighbor's house.

He myghte nother stapen ne stonde tyl he a staf hadde.
 Piers Plowman (C), vii. 403.

Pray you, let's step in, and see a friend of mine.

Fletcher, Spanish Curate, iv. 6.

O, if you please, miss, would you step and speak to Mr. Jarndyce?

Dickens, Bleak House, xlv.

3. To advance as if by chance or suddenly; come (in).

By whose death he's stepp'd

Into a great estate. Shak., T. of A., li. 2. 232.

The old poets step in to the assistance of the medalist.

Addison, Ancient Medals, i.

4. To walk slowly, gravely, or with dignity.

The meteor of a splendid season, she . . .

Step thro' the stately minut of those days.

Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

5. To go in imagination; advance or recede mentally; as, to step back to the England of Elizabeth.

They are stepping almost three thousand years backward into the remotest antiquity.

Pope, Iliad, Pref.

To step aside. (a) To walk to a little distance; retire for the occasion. (b) To deviate from the right path; err.

To step aside is human. Burns, To the Unc' Guid.

To step awry. See awry.—To step out, to increase the length of the step and the rapidity of motion.

Jack or Donald marches away, . . . stepping out briskly to the tune of "The Girl I left behind me."

Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxx.

II. trans. 1. To set; plant, as in stepping: as, step your foot on this thwart; he has never stepped foot in the city. [Familiar.]—2. To measure by stepping; as, to step off the distance.—3. To perform by stepping, as a dance; as, he stepped a stately galliard.—4. To place or set (two or more cutting-tools) in a tool-post or -rest in such manner that they simultaneously make successive cuts each respectively deeper than the preceding one, so that these cuts present the appearance of a series of ledges or steps.—5. Naut., to fix the foot of (a mast) in its step, as in readiness for setting sail.

step (step), n. [< ME. steppe, < AS. stape, a step, footstep, = MD. stappe, steppe, stap, step, D. stap = OHG. stapfo, stapfo, MHG. G. stapfe (> It. staf-fa, a stirrup, > ult. E. staffer), a footstep, footprint; from the verb.] 1. A pace; a completed movement made in raising the foot and setting it down again, as in walking, running, or dancing.

Th . . . turn two mincing steps

Into a manly stride. Shak., M. of V., iii. 4. 67.

An inadvertent step may crush the snail.

Cowper, Task, vi. 504.

Hence—2. In the plural, walk; passage; course or direction in which one goes by walking.

Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree

In this deep forest. Dryden, Æneid, vi. 276.

But not by thee my steps shall be,

For ever and for ever.

Tennyson, A Farewell.

3. A support for the foot in ascending or descending; as, steps cut in a glacier; a structure or an appliance used to facilitate mounting from one level to another, whether alone or as one of a series; as, a stone step (a block of stone having a horizontal surface for the foot); a step of a staircase (one of the gradients composed of the tread and riser taken together); the step of a ladder (one of the rungs or rounds, or one of the treads or foot-pieces in a step-ladder).

The breadth of every single step or stair [should] be never less than one foot.

Sir H. Wotton, Reliquia, p. 36.

An hundred winding steps convey

That conclave to the upper day.

Scott, Marmion, ii. 33.

On the step of the altar, in front of the railing, were kneeling a band of the Frates Penitentia.

C. E. Norton, Travel and Study in Italy, p. 6.

Specifically—(a) pl. A step-ladder. Also called pair of steps and set of steps. (b) A foot-piece for entering or alighting from a vehicle.

4. The space passed over or measured by one movement of the foot, as in walking; the distance between the feet in walking when both feet are on the ground; a half-pace.

If you move a step

Beyond this ground you tread on, you are lost.

Fletcher, Spanish Curate, v. 3.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace.

Arbutnot.

5. An inconsiderable space; a short distance; a distance easily walked.

'Tis but a step, sir, just at the street's end.

Cowper, To Joseph Hill, Esq.

It is but a step from here to the Wells, and we can walk there.

Thackeray, Book of Snobs, xxxv.

6. Gradation; degree.

The Turkes . . . studie their prophane Divinitie and Law, and have among them nine severall steps or degrees vnto the highest dignitie.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 313.

7. Degree in progress or advance; particularly, a forward move; gain or advantage; promotion; rise; a grade, as of rank.

Every age makes a step unto the end of all things.

Sir T. Browne, To a Friend.

To earn a garter or a step in the peerage.

Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xvii.

"General Tufto . . . and I were both shot in the same leg at Talavera." "Where you got your step," said George [punning]. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxviii.

The Silver Bill of 1890 . . . was declared to be a long step toward the goal of free coinage of silver.

New York Times, Jan. 15, 1891.

8. Print or impression of the foot; footprint; footstep; track.

And zit apperen the Steppes of the Asses feet, in 3 places of the Degrees, that ben of fülle harde Ston.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 81.

He seigh the steppes brode of a leonia.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 829.

9. Gait; manner of walking; sound of the step; foot; footfall; as, to hear a step at the door.

A foot more light, a step more true,

Ne'er from the heath-flower dash'd the dew.

Scott, L. of the L., i. 18.

10. A proceeding, or one of a series of proceedings; measure; action; as, a rash step; to take prompt steps to prevent something.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,

No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,

That hath deprived me of your grace and favour.

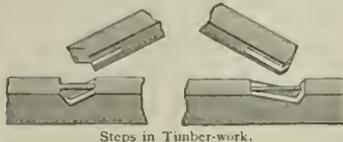

Shak., Lear, i. 1. 231.

Beware of desperate steps. The darkest day,

Live till to-morrow, will have pass'd away.

Cowper, The Needless Alarm.

11. Naut., a socket of wood or metal, or in large ships, a solid platform on the keelson, supporting the heel of a mast.—12. In carp., any piece of timber having the foot of another fixed upright in it.—13. In mach.: (a) The lower brass of a journal-box or pillow-block. (b) A socket or bearing for the lower pivot of a spindle or vertical shaft.—14. In music: (a) Same as degree, whether of the scale or of the staff. (b) The interval between two successive degrees of the scale, degrees of the staff, or keys of the keyboard. In the scale, a whole step is a major second, or tone, and a half-step a minor second, or semitone; and the same nomenclature is transferred to the staff and the keyboard. The successive steps between the normal tones of a scale, whether whole or half, are collectively called diatonic; while intervals involving other tones are called chromatic.—Out of step, not keeping step.—Pair of steps, set of steps, a step-ladder, especially one for indoor use.—Step by step. (a) By gradual and regular process. Locke, Human Understanding, ii. 9. (b) With equal pace; at the same rate of progress. Shak., Tempest, iii. 3. 78.—To break step. See break.—To keep step, to walk or march in unison; put the right and left foot forward alternately at the same moment with the corresponding foot of another person; often followed by with.—To keep step to, to walk, march, or dance in time to: as, to keep step to the music.—To take a step, or to take steps, to make a movement in a certain direction, either actually or as beginning any business; take initiatory measures; institute proceedings.

step (step). [< ME. step, < AS. steop, as in steop-bearn, stepchild (-bairn), steop-cild, stepchild, steop-fæder, stepfather, steop-mōdor, stepmother, etc. = OFries. stiap, step = D. stief = MLG. stief, LG. stief = OHG. stiuif, stioif, MHG. G. stief = Icel. stjúp = Sw. stjuf, stuf = Dan. stif, stir, sted: prob. lit. 'orphaned,' as in AS. steopeild, steopbearn, stepchild, steop-sunn, stepson, etc., which are prob. the oldest compounds, the correlative compounds, steop-fæder, stepfather, etc., being formed later, when the prefix steop was taken appar. in some such sense as 'subsequent,' 'nominal,' or 'in law'; < steopan*, found only as in comp., and in the secondary weak form, in comp. ā-stīpan*, āstīpan*, in pp. pl. āstīpale, āstīpale, orphaned, = OHG. stufan, ar-stufan, bi-stufan, deprive of parents, orphan.] A prefix used in composition before father, mother, son, daughter, brother, sister, child, etc., to indicate that the person spoken of is a connection only by the marriage of a parent.

step-back (step'bak), a. [Irreg. < step + back.] Noting the relationship a deceased person bears to his widow's child by a second marriage. [Rare.]

Richard is Henry's step-back father.

The Nation, Aug. 23, 1888, p. 153.

stepbairn (step'bairn), n. [< ME. steopbern, < AS. steopbearn (= Icel. stjúpibarn = Sw. stjufbarn = Dan. stjúbarn), < steop, step, + bearn, child: see step- and bairn, bairn.] A stepchild. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

step-bit (step'bit), n. A notched key-bit.

step-box (step'box), n. A box or casing to inclose the base of an upright spindle or shaft-step, to retain the shaft in place and furnish a bearing, and to hold the lubricant.

stepbrother (step'brʌθər), n. [< ME. stepbrother, stepbroder, < AS. steopbrothor* (= D. stiefbroeder = MHG. stiefbrüoder, G. stiefbrüder = Sw. stjufbroder = Dan. stjufbroder), < steop, step, + brōthor, brother: see step- and brother.] One's stepfather's or stepmother's son by a former marriage.

stepchild (step'child), n. [< ME. stepchild, < AS. steopcild (= OFries. stiefkind = D. stiefkind = OHG. stiefchint, MHG. stiefkint, G. stiefkind), < steop, step, + cild, child: see step- and child.] The child of one's husband or wife by a former marriage.

step-country (step'kʌntri), n. A country that rears or receives and protects one born in another country. The speaker in the following quotation is an Italian brought up in Sweden:

Farewell, my father—farewell, my step-country.
Disraeli, Contarini Fleming, li. 4.

step-cover (step'kʌvər), n. On a vehicle, a lid or protecting cover over a step. It is usually so fitted that the opening of the door moves the cover to one side and uncovers the step, or causes it, by a hinge or other device, to turn back out of the way.

step-cut (step'kut), n. Same as trap-cut (which see, under cut).

stepdame (step'dām), n. [Formerly also stepdam; < step- + dame.] A stepmother.

Phryxus . . . with his sister Helle fled from their cruel stepdam Ino.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 341.

step-dance (step'dāns), n. A dance marked by originality, variety, or difficulty in the steps; a dance in which the steps are more important than the figure, as a hornpipe or a clog-dance; usually a pas seul.

Orth'ris began rowlin' his eyes an' erackin' his fingers an' dancin' a step-dance for to impress the Headman.

Rudyard Kipling, The Taking of Lungtungpen.

stepdaughter (step'dā'tər), n. [< ME. stepdoughter, stepdoughter, stepdowgter, stepdowter, < AS. steopdohter (= D. stiefdochter = MLG. stiefdochter = MHG. stiuftochter, G. stieftochter = Icel. stjúpöttir = Sw. stjufdotter = Dan. stjufdotter), < steop, step, + dohter, daughter: see step- and daughter.] A daughter of one's husband or wife by a former marriage.

After hir com the stepdaughter of Cleodalis, that hight also Gonnore.

Mertin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 453.

stepel, a. A Middle English form of stepel.

stepfather (step'fā'thər), n. [< ME. stepfader, stepfadyr, corruptly stifader, < AS. steopfader (= OFries. stiapfader, stiefpader = D. stiefvader = MLG. stiefvadere = OHG. stiuftater, stioftater, MHG. G. stiefvater = Icel. stjúpfaðir = Sw. stjufvater = Dan. stjufvater), < steop, step, + fader, father: see step- and father.] A man who is the husband of one's mother, but is not one's father.

I schel the telle altogadre,

Beten Ichane me stifadre.

Beres of Hamtoun, l. 464.

"He was delighted at his mother's marriage." "Odd, for he knew already what a stepfather was."

Jean Ingelow, Off the Skelligs, xvii.

step-fault (step'fält), n. One of a series of small, nearly parallel faults by which strata have been dislocated so as to occupy a position resembling a series of steps or stairs.

step-gage (step'gāj), n. A gage, arranged in the form of steps, for testing and correcting fixed caliper-gages, etc. See cut under gage.

step-grate (step'grät), n. See grate.

stephane (step'a-nē), n. [< Gr. στέφανος, the brim of a helmet, a stephane (see def.), crown. Cf. στέφανος, a wreath, garland, crown: see stephanos.] In Gr. archaeol., a head-dress or ornament consisting of a band or coronet typically high in the middle, over the brow, and diminishing toward either side of the head. It is characteristic of the goddess Hera, though often represented as worn by other goddesses, as well as by mortals, and is frequently ornamented with an anthemion, as in the example figured on the following page.

stephanial (ste-fā'ni-äl), a. [< stephanion + -al.] Of or pertaining to the stephanion: as, a stephanial point.

stephanic (ste-fan'ik), a. [< Gr. στέφανος, a wreath, crown: see stephanos.] Same as stephanial.

Hera Ludovisi, wearing Stephanic.

The arch of the top of the cranium is markedly flat, giving the stephanic region a somewhat angular appearance. H. O. Forbes, Eastern Archipelago, p. 262.

stephanion (ste-fā'ni-on), n.; pl. stephania (-ia). [NL., < Gr. στέφανιον, dim. of στέφανος, a wreath: see stephanos.] In craniom., the point where the coronal suture crosses the temporal ridge. An upper stephanion and a lower are distinguished, corresponding to the upper and lower temporal ridges. See cut under craniometry.

stephanite (ste-fā'n-it), n. [Named after Stephan, Archduke of Austria.] A native sulphid of silver and antimony, a mineral of iron-black color and metallic luster. It crystallizes in the orthorhombic system, and is often pseudohexagonal through twinning. Also called black silver or brittle silver ore.

stephanome (ste-fā'nōm), n. [For stephanonome*, < Gr. στέφανος, crown (corona), + μέτρον, take, μέτρον, law.] An instrument for measuring the angular dimensions of fog-bows—for example, as observed at mountain observatories. See the quotation.

This instrument, named a stephanome, consists of a graduated bar, at one end of which the eye is placed, and in which slides a cross-bar carrying certain projections. With its aid faint objects, for which a sextant would be useless, may be measured to within 5 minutes. Phil. Mag., 5th ser., XXIX. 454.

Stephanophorus (ste-fā'nof'ō-rus), n. [NL. (Strickland, 1841), < Gr. στέφανοφόρος, < στέφανος, crown, + φέρω = E. bear.] 1. In ornith., a monotypic Neotropical genus of tanagers, having a short, turgid, almost pyriform bill. S. leucocephalus is bluish-black, with the lesser wing-coverts blue, the vertical crest crimson, the hindhead silky-white, the forehead, lores, and chin black. The length is seven inches. The bird is confined to southern Brazil, Paraguay, Uruguay, and northern parts of the Argentine Republic.

Stephanophorus leucocephalus.

2. In entom., a genus of coleopterous insects. Chevalot, 1873.

Stephanos (ste-fā'nos), n.; pl. stephanoi (-noi). [Gr. στέφανος, a wreath, crown, < στέφανω, put around, encircle, wreath, crown. Cf. stemma.] In Gr. archaeol.:

(a) A wreath awarded as a prize to the victor in a public contest, or as a token of honor, especially in recognition of some public service. Such wreaths were sometimes of natural leaves, as of the olive, laurel, oak, parsley, or pine, and sometimes of leaves of metal, as gold, and their award was a very usual distinction among the Greeks. In this sense very commonly expressed by the translators as 'crown,' as in the famous oration "On the Crown" of Demosthenes. (b) A head-ornament or crown akin to the stephanic, from which it differs in that it preserves the same height all round, instead of diminishing toward the sides. See cut in preceding column.

Stephanos (H). Head of Hera on Silver Stater of Elis; 5th century B. C.

Stephanotis (ste-fā'nō'tis), n. [NL. (Thouars, 1806), so called in allusion to the corona of five flattish petaloid bodies or auricles; < Gr. στέφανος, a crown, + οὖς (ōr-), ear.] 1. A genus of asclepiadaceous plants, of the tribe Marsdenieæ, distinguished from Marsdenia by its large white salver-shaped or funnelform corolla. There are about 14 species, of which 5 are natives of Madagascar, 5 of the Malay archipelago and southern China, 3 of Cuba, and 1 of Peru. They are smooth shrubby twiners, often high-climbing, bearing opposite deep-green fleshy or coriaceous leaves, and beautiful fragrant waxy flowers in umbelliform cymes between the petioles. The cylindrical corolla-tube is dilated at the base and often again at the throat, and spreads into five overlapping oblique lobes. The fruit consists of two thick horizontal follicles, with numerous comose seeds. S. floribunda is a favorite evergreen greenhouse climber, commonly known by its generic name stephanotis, also as waxflower, and sometimes, from its native country, as Madagascar jessamine or chapel-flower.

2. [L. c.] A plant of this genus.

step-ladder (ste-p'lad'ēr), n. A ladder having flat steps, or treads, in place of rungs, and usually provided with an adjustable supporting frame.

stepmother (ste-p'muth'ēr), n. [ME. stepmōder, stepmōdyr, < AS. steopmōdor (= OFries. stiepmōder = D. stiefmōder = MLG. stiefmōder = OHG. stiuftuoter, MHG. stiefmuoter, G. stiefmutter = Icel. stjúpmodir = Sw. stiefmoder = Dan. stiefmoder), < steop-, step-, + mōdor, mother.] 1. A woman who is the wife of one's father, but is not one's mother.

No, be assured you shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most stepmothers,
Evil-eyed unto you. Shak., Cymbeline, i. 1. 71.

2. A horny filament shooting up by the side of the nail. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.]—3. The pansy. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names. [Prov. Eng.]—Stepmother's blessing, a hangnail. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.] stepmotherly (ste-p'muth'ēr-li), a. [Gr. stepmōthēr + -ly.] Pertaining to or befitting a stepmother; hence, figuratively, harsh or neglectful: in allusion to the behavior popularly attributed to stepmothers.

step-parent (ste-p'pār'ēnt), n. A stepfather or stepmother.

steppe (ste-p), n. [= F. D. G. Dan. steppe = Sw. stepp, < Russ. stepi, a waste, heath, steppe.] A more or less level tract devoid of trees: a name given to certain parts of European and Asiatic Russia, of which the most characteristic feature is the absence of forests. The word steppe was introduced into the scientific literature of western Europe by Humboldt, in whose "Ansichten der Natur"—a work widely circulated, and translated into all the most important European languages—there is a chapter entitled "Steppen und Wüsten" (Steppes and Deserts). The steppe region in Europe begins on the borders of Holland, and extends through northern Germany—where such lands are called Heiden (heaths)—into Russia in Europe, and beyond the Ural Mountains almost to the Pacific Ocean, for a distance of about 4,500 miles. Although the steppes are in general characterized by the lack of an arboreal and the presence of a grassy vegetation, and by a pretty uniformly level surface, there are many breaks in this botanical and topographical monotony, in the form of forests extending along the streams, large patches of dense and sometimes tall shrubbery, lakes (both fresh and saline), rolling hills, ridges, barren sands, and patches covered with saline efflorescence. The general character of the region is pastoral, and the population (especially of the Asiatic steppes) nomadic: but all this has been to a considerable extent interfered with by the spread of Russian civilization and the domination of Russian authority. The Russian and Siberian steppes pass southward into the deserts of central Asia, and northward into the tundra region of the extreme north. Humboldt, in the work named above, occasionally uses the term steppe in describing the pampas and llanos of South America, and the plains, prairies, and barrens of the northern division of the New World, and his example has been followed to a certain extent by other physical geographers writing in regard to America; but the word steppe is nowhere in popular use except as to places where Russian is the dominating language.

Some of the Asiatic Steppes are grassy plains; others are covered with succulent, evergreen, articulated sodaplants: many glisten from a distance with flakes of exuded salt which cover the clayey soil, not unlike in appearance to fresh fallen snow. Humboldt, Aspects of Nature (trans.).

Steppe murrain, rinderpest.

stepped (stept), a. [Gr. step + -ed.] 1. Formed in or forming a step or a series of steps.—2. Supported, as a vertical shaft, by a step, step-like bearing, or shoe.—Stepped cone. Same as cone.

pullen.—Stepped gable, gage, gearing. See the nouns. —Stepped pyramid, a form of pyramid of which the faces, instead of continuing in one slope from base to apex, are formed in a more or less even series of enormous steps. Some of the oldest of the Egyptian pyramids present this form.

Stepped Pyramid, Sakkarah, Egypt.

stepper (ste-p'ēr), n. [Gr. step + -er.] One who or that which steps (with a certain gait or carriage expressed or implied); specifically, a fast horse; often in composition: as, a high-stepper; that horse is a good stepper.

The mare's a stepper, and Phil King knows how to handle the ribbons. The Century, XXXVIII. 377.

stepping (ste-p'ing), n. 1. Collectively, the steps of a joint in which the parts at their junction form a series of reentrant angles, thus resembling a flight of steps, as in the fitting of the doors to the front frames of safes.—2. Collectively, a series of step-like bearings, as the bearings for the spindles of a spinning-frame or spooling-machine, or of a ball-winding machine.

stepping-point (ste-p'ing-point), n. Same as bearding, 1.

stepping-stone (ste-p'ing-stōn), n. 1. A raised stone in a stream or in a swampy place designed to save the feet in walking.—2. A horse-block. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.]—3. An aid or means by which an end may be accomplished or an object gained; an assistance to progress.

stepsister (ste-p'sis'tēr), n. [ME. stepsyster (= D. stiefzuster = MHG. G. stiefschwester = Sw. styfsyster = Dan. stiftoster); < step- + sister.] One's stepfather's or stepmother's daughter by a former marriage.

stepson (ste-p'sun), n. [ME. stepson, stepsone, < AS. steopsunu (= D. stiefzoon = MLG. stiefsone = OHG. stiuftsun, MHG. stiefsun, G. stiefsohn = Icel. stjúpson = Sw. styfson = Dan. stiftsøn), < steop-, step-, + sunu, son.] A son of one's husband or wife by a former marriage.

step-stone (ste-p'stōn), n. Same as stepping-stone. [Rare.] step-vein (ste-p'vān), n. In mining, a vein filling a fissure, consisting alternately of flats, or horizontal, and steeply inclined or vertical parts, resembling in form a flight of steps.

-ster. [ME. -ster, -stre, -estre, -estere, < AS. -estre, used fem. of -ere, as in webbestre, a female weaver (E. webster), fihtelstre, a female fiddler, witegestre, a female prophet, etc.; = D. -ster, as in spinster, a female spinner (= E. spinster), etc., = LL. -ster, as in poetaster (see -aster, poetaster, criticaster, etc.), also in oleaster; < Indo-Eur. -as- + -tar.] A termination denoting occupation, as in maltster, gamester, denster, songster, etc. In the earliest times, and up to about the end of the thirteenth century, it was generally the sign of the feminine gender, corresponding to the masculine -ere or -er. In the fourteenth century it began to give place as a feminine termination to the Norman -ess, with which it was later often combined, as in seamstress, sempstress, songstress, or, if it survived, was used chiefly as masculine, and took on new meanings of contempt or depreciation, as in trickster, gamester, punster, etc., or indicated simplicity or existence, as in dreamster, doomster, huckster, tapster, teamster, upholster, roadster, youngster, etc. Some of the older nouns with this suffix survive as surnames, as Baxter, Webster, Sangster, Dempster, etc.

ster. An abbreviation of *sterling*².

steraclat, n. [Early mod. E., also sterracle, sterakel; < ME. stracle; origin obscure.] A strange thing, sight, or performance; a prank.

When thou art sett upon the pynnaele,
Thou shalt ther playn a qweynt steraele,
Or ellys shewe a grett mercele,
Thyssel from hurte thou save.
Covenry Mysteries, p. 208. (Hallivell.)

stercobilin (stēr'kō-bil-in), n. [Gr. stercus (stercor-), dung, + bilis, bile, + -in.] The brown coloring matter of the feces.

stercoraceous (stēr-kō-rā'shius), a. [L. stercus (-or-), dung, + -aceous.] 1. Pertaining to, composed of, or in any way resembling dung, ordure, or feces; excrementitious; fecal.—2. In entom., frequenting or feeding on dung, as many beetles, flies, etc.—Stercoraceous vomiting, in pathol., vomiting of fecal matter. stercoræmia, n. See stercoræmia.

stercoral (stér'kō-rāl), a. and n. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung, + -al.] I. a. Of or pertaining to feces; stercoraceous.

II. † n. Dung; excrement.

Stercoranism (stér'kō-rān-izm), n. [< Stercoran-ist + -ism.] In ecclēs. hist., the doctrine or belief of the Stercoranists. Also Stercorianism, Stercorianism.

Stercoranist (stér'kō-rān-ist), n. [= F. stercoraniste, < ML. Stercoranista, < L. stercus (-or-), dung.] A name applied by opponents to various persons in the church who were said to hold a grossly materialistic conception of the Lord's Supper. They were alleged to believe that the Lord's body was like other food consumed, digested and evacuated. The word was first used by Cardinal Humbert in 1054. Also Stercorianist, Stercorarian.

stercoraceous (stér'kō-rā'rē-us), a. Same as stercoraceous.

Stercorarian (stér'kō-rā'ri-an), n. [< L. stercorarius, pertaining to dung (< stercus (-or-), dung), + -an.] Same as Stercoranist.

Stercorarianism (stér'kō-rā'ri-an-izm), n. [< Stercorarian + -ism.] Same as Stercoranism.

Stercorariinae (stér'kō-rā'ri-ī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Stercorarius + -inae.] The dung-hunters, a subfamily of Laridae, typified by the genus Stercorarius: same as Lestridinae. See cuts under skua and Stercorarius.

Stercorarius (stér'kō-rā'ri-us), n. [NL. (Brisson, 1760), < L. stercorarius, pertaining to dung; see stercorary.] The dung-hunters, skuas, or jagers, a genus of Laridae, typical of the subfamily Stercorariinae. Also called Lestris. The name is used (a) for all the species of the subfamily; (b) for the larger species, as S. skua, the smaller being called Lestris (see cut under skua); (c) for the smaller species, S.

named, < stercus (stercor-), excrement.] 1. A genus of plants, type of the order Sterculiaceae and of the tribe Sterculieae. It is characterized by a stamen-column usually with fifteen anthers crowded without regular order, a five-celled ovary with two or more Flowering Branch of Sterculia plataniifolia. a, a male flower; b, the same before anthesis; c, the stamens; d, the fruit.

ovules in each cell, and a fruit of distinct spreading dehiscent carpels. There are about 85 species, natives of warm climates, especially of tropical Asia. They are most commonly large trees, with simple feather-veined leaves, and unisexual flowers in drooping panicles, with a colored bell-shaped calyx, and a fruit of five radiating woody follicles opening on the upper edge; but none of these characters is universal. Their inner bark is composed of a tough fiber which is not affected by moisture, and is in many species a valuable material for cordage, mats, bags, paper, or tow for upholstering. Their seeds are filled with an oil which may be used for lamps, and are slightly acrid but often edible. They are mucilaginous, and often exude an abundance of gum resembling gum tragacanth, swelling into a jelly in cold water without dissolving. S. urens, and perhaps other species, furnish a share of the Indian tragacanth, or kuteera gum; S. Tragacantha of western Africa yields the African or Senegal tragacanth. S. acerifolia of New South Wales, a large tree sometimes 80 feet high and 8 feet in girth, with large lobed leaves and racemes of showy red flowers, is known as flame-tree, and also as lacebark from its beautiful lace-like inner bark, which becomes 2 inches thick and is valued for many uses. S. diversifolia, the Victorian bottle-tree, or currijong, is a stout tree with coarser fiber: for the similar S. rupestris, see bottle-tree, and for S. villosa, see oadal. S. lurida, the sycamore of New South Wales, also yields a fiber, there made into fancy articles. S. quadrifida, the calob of eastern and northern Australia, produces clusters of brilliant scarlet fruits, each with ten or eleven black seeds resembling filberts in taste, and eaten as a substitute for them. S. Carthaginensis (S. Chicha), the chicha or panama, yields seeds eaten as nuts in Brazil and northward; it is a handsome tree with yellowish purple-spotted flowers. S. fatiida (see stavewood) is the source of some native remedies in Java. S. alata has been called Buddha's cocoa-nut; S. plataniifolia of Japan and China, sultan's parasol. See mahoe and cassouaba.

2. In entom., a genus of coleopterous insects. Laporte, 1835.

Sterculiaceae (stér-kū-li-ā'shē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Ventenat, 1799), < Sterculia + -aceae.] An order of polypetalous plants, of the cohort Males, intermediate between the two orders Malvaceae and Tiliaceae, resembling the former in its variety of habit and foliage and its frequently monadelphous stamens, and the latter in its two-celled anthers. It includes about 730 species, belonging to 49 genera, classed in 8 tribes, natives mostly of the tropics, or occurring further to the south in Africa and Australia.

sterculiaceous (stér-kū-li-ā'shius), a. Of or pertaining to the plant-order Sterculiaceae.

sterculiad (stér-kū-li-ād), n. A plant of the order Sterculiaceae. Lindley.

Sterculieae (stér-kū-li-ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1824), < Sterculia + -eae.] A tribe of plants, of the order Sterculiaceae. It is characterized by unisexual or polygamous flowers without petals, commonly with a colored calyx, and five to fifteen anthers adnate at the summit of a long or short column of united filaments, and either crowded or arranged in a definite series or a ring. It includes 8 genera, of which Sterculia is the type. They are natives mostly of tropical Asia and Africa, extending into Australia and Java. See Sterculia.

stere¹. A Middle English form of steer¹, steer², stir¹, stoor².

stere² (stär). n. [= F. stère, < Gr. στερεός, solid, cubic; prob. < √ sta as in istāvai, stand.] A cubic meter: the French unit for solid measure, equal to 35.31 cubic feet. The word stere is but little used, except with reference to cordwood, cubic meter being the expression in universal use for the solid unit.

Sterelmitha (ster-el-min'thi), n. pl. [NL., irreg. < Gr. στερεός, stiff, hard, solid, + ἐλμυς (él- muθ-), a worm.] The parenchymatous endoparasitic worms, having no intestinal canal. They formed one of two main divisions, the other being Colelmitha, into which the Entozoa were divided by Owen in 1843, corresponding to the parenchymatous intestinal worms or vers intestinalia parenchymatosa of Cuvier. They are such as the cestoid and trematoid worms, or tapes and flukes.

sterelmithic (ster-el-min'thik), a. [< Sterelmitha + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the Sterelmitha.

sterelmithous (ster-el-min'thus), a. Same as sterelmithic.

stereo- (stér'ē-ō, also, especially in trade use, stē'rē-ō). An element of Greek origin, meaning 'solid.'

stereo (stér'ē-ō), n. and a. [Short for stereotype.] Same as stereotype: as, a stereo plate; stereo apparatus.

stereobate (stér'ē-ō-bāt), n. [= F. stéréobate, < Gr. στερεός, solid, firm, + βάσις, verbal adj. of βαίω, go, step; see base².] In arch., the substructure, foundation, or solid platform upon which a building is erected. In columnar buildings it includes the stylobate, which is the uppermost step or platform of the foundation upon which the column stands.

Stereobate of the Parthenon, east front (illustrating the convex curvature of the best Greek Doric temple-foundations).

stereobatic (stér'ē-ō-bat'ik), a. [< stereobate + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or resembling a stereobate; of the character of a stereobate. Encyc. Brit., II, 408.

stereoblastula (stér'ē-ō-blas'tū-lū), n.: pl. stereoblastulæ (-lē). [NL., < Gr. στερεός, solid, + βλαστός, germ.] A solid blastula: a blastula in which there is no cavity. J. A. Ryder.

stereochrome (stér'ē-ō-krōm), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + χρῶμα, color.] A stereochromic picture. See stereochromy.

stereochromic (stér'ē-ō-krō'mik), a. [< stereochrom-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to stereochromy; produced by stereochromy.—Stereochromic process, the method of painting by stereochromy.

stereochromy (stér'ē-ō-krō-mi), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + χρῶμα, color.] A method of painting in which water-glass serves as the connecting medium between the color and its substratum.

stereo-clumps (stér'ē-ō-klump), n. pl. [< stereo + clump.] Sectional blocks of type-metal or wood, usually three fourths of an inch high, made of different sizes so that they can be combined to fit and uphold any size of stereotype plate. When clamps are added, they keep the plate secure in the process of printing. [Eng.]

stereo-electric (stér'ē-ō-lek'trik), a. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + E. electric.] Noting the electric current which ensues when two solids, especially two metals, as bismuth and antimony, are brought together at different temperatures.

stereogastrula (stér'ē-ō-gas'trō-lū), n.: pl. stereogastrulæ (-lē). [NL., < Gr. στερεός, solid, + NL. gastrula, q. v.] A solid gastrula; a form of gastrula in which no cleavage-cavity is developed. J. A. Ryder.

Stereognathus (stér-ē-og'nā-thus), n. [NL. (Charlesworth, 1854), < Gr. στερεός, solid, + γνάθος, jaw.] A genus of fossil mammals of problematical character from the Lower Oolite of Oxfordshire, England, later identified with Microllestes. The original fossil was named S. ooliticus.

stereogram (stér'ē-ō-gram), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + γράμμα, a writing, < γράφω, write; see gram².] A diagram or picture which represents objects in such a way as to give the impression of relief or solidity; specifically, a double photographic picture or a pair of pictures mounted together for the stereoscope; a stereoscopic picture.

stereograph (stér'ē-ō-gráf), n. [< Gr. στερεός, solid, + γράφω, write.] Same as stereogram.

stereographic (stér'ē-ō-graf'ik), a. [= F. stéréographique; as stereograph-y + -ic.] Showing the whole of a sphere on the whole of an Parasitic Jaeger (Stercorarius parasiticus).

ponatorhinus, S. parasiticus, and others, the larger being called Buphagus or Megalestis.

stercorary (stér'kō-rā-ri), a. and n. [< L. stercorarius, pertaining to dung (*ML. neut. stercorarium, a place for dung), < stercus (stercor-), dung.] I. a. Pertaining or relating to dung or manure; consisting of dung. D. G. Mitchell, Wet Days, p. 17.

II. n.; pl. stercoraries (-riz). A place, properly secured from the weather, for containing dung.

stercorate (stér'kō-rāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. stercorated, ppr. stercorating. [< L. stercoratus, pp. of stercorare, dung, manure, < stercus (-or-), dung.] To manure or dung. Scott, Pirate, iv.

stercoratē (stér'kō-rāt), n. [< stercorate, v.] Dung; excrement. Imp. Dict.

stercoration (stér'kō-rā'shōn), n. [< L. stercoratio (-n-), a dunging or manuring, < stercorare, pp. stercoratus, dung, manure, < stercus (-or-), dung.] The act of manuring with dung. Evelyn, To Mr. Wotton.

stercoremia, stercoramia (stér'kō-rē'mi-ā), n. [NL. stercoramia, < L. stercus (-or-), dung, + Gr. αίμα, blood.] Contamination of the blood from retained feces.

Stercorianism, Stercorianist (stér'kō'ri-an-izm, -ist). Same as Stercoranism, Stercoranist.

stercoricolous (stér'kō-rik'ō-lus), a. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung, + colere, inhabit.] Inhabiting excrement; dwelling in dung. Encyc. Brit., XIX, 842.

Stercorist (stér'kō-rist), n. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung, + -ist.] A Stercoranist.

stercorite (stér'kō-rit), n. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung, + -ite².] A hydrous phosphate of ammonium and sodium, found in guano on the island Ichaboe, off the west coast of Africa.

stercory† (stér'kō-ri), n. [< L. stercus (-or-), dung.] Excrement; dung. Mir. for Mags., III, 246.

Sterculia (stér-kū-li-ā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1753), so called from the fetid flowers or fruit of certain species; < L. Sterculius, a deity so infinite plane, while preserving the angles.—Stereographic map-projection. See projection.

stereographical (ster'ē-ō-graf'i-kal), a. [ster- cographic + -al.] Same as stereographic.
stereographically (ster'ē-ō-graf'i-kal-i), adv.
 In a stereographic manner; by delineation on a plane.

stereography (ster'ē-ōg'ra-fi), n. [= F. stéréographie, < Gr. στερεός, solid, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] The art of delineating the forms of solid bodies on a plane; a branch of solid geometry which demonstrates the properties and shows the construction of all solids which are regularly defined.

Stereolepis (ster'ē-ol'e-pis), n. [NL. (Ayres, 1859), < Gr. στερεός, solid, + λεπίς, a scale.] 1. A genus of serranoid fishes of enormous size in comparison with related forms. S. gigas, the Jew-fish or black sea-bass of the Californian coast, reaches a Jew-fish (Stereolepis gigas).

length of 5 feet. It is brownish- or greenish-black with large black blotches, most evident in the young.
 2. [l. e.] A fish of this genus.

stereome (ster'ē-ōm), n. [Gr. στερεώμα, a solid body, < στερεός, solid.] In bot., a name proposed by Schwendener for those elements which impart strength to a fibrovascular bundle. Compare mesotome.

stereometer (ster'ē-ōm'e-tēr), n. [Gr. στερεός, solid, + μέτρον, a measure.] 1. An instrument for measuring the solid capacity of a vessel.—2. An instrument for determining the specific gravity of liquids, porous bodies, etc.

stereometric (ster'ē-ō-met'rik), a. [ster- ometr-y + -ic.] Pertaining to or performed by stereometry.—Stereometric function. See function.

stereometrical (ster'ē-ō-met'ri-kal), a. [ster- metric + -al.] Same as stereometric.

stereometrically (ster'ē-ō-met'ri-kal-i), adv. By or with reference to stereometry.

stereometry (ster'ē-ōm'e-tri), n. [= F. stéréométrie, < Gr. στερεός, solid, cubic, + -μετρία, < μέτρον, measure.] 1. The art of measuring volumes.—2. The metrical geometry of solids.—3. The art or process of determining the specific gravity of liquids, porous bodies, powders, etc.

stereo-mold (ster'ē-ō-möld), n. [ster- co + old.] A mold used in stereotyping.

stereomonoscope (ster'ē-ō-mōn'ō-skōp), n. [Gr. στερεός, solid, + μόνος, single, alone, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An instrument with two lenses for exhibiting on a screen of ground glass a single picture so as to give it all the effect of solidity.

stereoneural (ster'ē-ō-nū'ral), a. [Gr. στερεός, solid, + νεῖρον, a nerve.] Having the nervous center, if any, solid.

stereoplasm (ster'ē-ō-plazm), n. [NL. stereoplasma, < Gr. στερεός, solid, + πλάσμα, anything molded or formed; see plasm.] 1. In corals, a delicate endothelial structure occupying different positions in the corallite, often forming vertical processes in the interseptal loculi or encircling septa, or acting as true endothecia. This substance, which connects septa (envirning their free edges in some paleozoic corals), stretches across interseptal loculi irregularly, and sometimes fills up the lower part of the inside of the corallum, constituting a solid mass there. It is to be distinguished from the true endotheca.
 2. In bot., same as stereoplasma.

stereoplasma (ster'ē-ō-plas'mā), n. [NL.: see stereoplasma.] 1. Same as stereoplasma, 1. Lindström.—2. In bot., a term proposed by Naegeli for the solid part of protoplasm. Compare hygroplasma.

stereoplasmic (ster'ē-ō-plaz'mik), a. [stereoplasma + -ic.] Of the nature of or formed by stereoplasma; consisting of that substance.

stereopticon (ster'ē-ōp'ti-kon), n. [Gr. στερεός, solid, + οπτικός, pertaining to seeing or sight; see optic.] An improved form of magic lantern, consisting essentially of two complete lanterns matched and connected. The object of the reduplication is to permit the pictures shown to pass from one to the next by a sort of dissolving effect which is secured by alternate use of the two lenses, and at the same time to avoid the delay or the unpleasant sliding of the pictures across the field in view of the audience, but imperfectly avoidable when the simple magic lantern is used. The two lanterns may be either superposed or Double-tier Stereopticon.

A, A', tubes containing objectives; B, B', covers for condensers; C, C', collapsible bellows fronts of the lanterns, which are mounted one above the other and hinged together at the rear standards (as shown at D) to provide for the elevation or depression necessary to bring the views on the screen into exact superposition; E, E', lime-light boxes, one of the lime-cylinders F and oxyhydrogen jets G being shown to the upper box, a part of which is removed; H, oxygen-holder; I, hydrogen-holder; J, J', flexible tubes for separately conveying these gases to the burners and mixing them only as they are needed to supply light; L, set-screw for elevation or depression; M, milled heads of shaft operating gear for extending or shortening the lens-tubes A, A' in adjustment of the focus; N, openings for insertion of slides, with inclined bottoms for insuring exact position.

placed side by side. Some forms of stereopticon are made with three lanterns.

stereoscope (ster'ē-ō-skōp), n. [= F. stéréoscope, < Gr. στερεός, solid, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An optical instrument illustrating the phenomena of binocular vision, and serving to produce from two nearly similar pictures of an object the effect of a single picture with the appearance of relief and solidity belonging to ordinary vision. It depends upon the fact that in ordinary vision, while the respective images of an object formed upon the retinas of the two eyes differ slightly because of the divergence of the rays from each point of the object, yet the effect upon the brain is that of a single object seen in perspective relief which the monocular image lacks. The slide of the stereoscope shows two pictures side by side taken under a small difference of angular view, each eye looking upon one picture only; thus, as in ordinary vision, two images are conveyed to the brain which unite into one, exhibiting the objects represented under a high degree of relief. A reflecting form of stereoscope was invented by Sir Charles Wheatstone in 1838. Subsequently Sir David Brewster invented the lenticular or refracting stereoscope, based on the refractive properties of semi-double-convex lenses. This is the one now in general use. There are many forms of it, one of which is shown in the figure. The action is illustrated by the diagram beneath. The light-rays from corresponding points of the two pictures P and P' are refracted in passing through the lenses L, L', and their directions changed so that they now seem to the eyes E, E' to diverge from a common point A beyond the plane of the card. By special effort a skilled observer can combine stereoscopic pictures into one without the use of the instrument, each eye being directed to one picture only and (to produce the normal stereoscopic effect) the one on its own side; the process may be facilitated by interposing a card screen between the pictures so that, for example, the left picture is entirely cut off from the right eye, etc. If the eyes are crossed so that the right eye sees the left picture and the left eye the right only, and the images combined by special effort, the usual stereoscopic effect is reversed—a convex surface becomes concave, etc. A similar pseudoscopic result is obtained with the ordinary stereoscope if the positions of the two pictures are exchanged.

Stereoscope.

stereoscopic (ster'ē-ō-skōp'ik), a. [= F. stéréoscopique; as stereoscope + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or resembling the stereoscope; adapted to the stereoscope; having the form in relief, or proper perspective, as of an object seen in the stereoscope; as, stereoscopic pictures; stereoscopic views.—Stereoscopic camera, diagrams, projection. See the nouns.

stereoscopical (ster'ē-ō-skōp'i-kal), a. [stereoscopic + -al.] Same as stereoscopic.

stereoscopically (ster'ē-ō-skōp'i-kal-i), adv. By or as by a stereoscope.

stereoscopist (ster'ē-ō-skō-pist), n. [stereoscope + -ist.] One versed in the use or manufacture of stereoscopes.

stereoscopy (ster'ē-ō-skō-pi), n. [= F. stéréoscopie, < Gr. στερεός, solid, + σκοπία, < σκοπεῖν, view.] The use or construction of stereoscopes.

stereotomic (ster'ē-ō-tōm'ik), a. [ster- eo- tom-y + -ic.] Pertaining to or performed by stereotomy.

stereotomical (ster'ē-ō-tōm'i-kal), a. [stereotomic + -al.] Same as stereotomic.

stereotomy (ster'ē-ō-tō-mi), n. [= F. stéréotomie, < Gr. στερεός, solid, + -τομία, < τέμνειν, τὰ μὲν, cut.] The science or art of cutting solids into certain figures or sections.

stereotrope (ster'ē-ō-trop), n. [Gr. στερεός, solid, + τροπή, a turning, < τροπέω, turn.] An instrument by which an object is perceived as if in motion and with an appearance of solidity or relief as in nature. It consists of a series of stereoscopic pictures, generally eight, of an object in the successive positions it assumes in completing any motion, affixed to an octagonal drum revolving under an ordinary lenticular stereoscope, and viewed through a solid cylinder pierced in its entire length by two apertures, which makes four revolutions for one of the picture-drum. The observer thus sees the object constantly in one place, but with its parts apparently in motion and in solid and natural relief.

stereotype (ster'ē-ō-tip), n. and a. [= F. stéréotype, < Gr. στερεός, fixed, + τύπος, impression, type; see type.] 1. n. 1. The duplicate, in one piece of type-metal, of the face of a collection of types composed for printing. Three processes are used. (a) The plaster process, in which a mold taken from the composed types in fluid plaster of Paris is baked until dry, and is then submerged in melted type-metal. The cast taken in this mold, when cooled, is shaved to proper thickness, making the stereotype plate. (b) The clay process, in which the mold, taken by a press on a prepared surface of stiff clay, is baked until dry, and filled by pouring into it fluid metal. (c) The papier-mâché process, in which the mold is made by covering the type with a preparation of paper-pulp and clay, which is beaten into the interstices of the type-surface by a stiff brush. This mold when baked by steam-heat is put in a casting-box, which is filled with melted metal. This is the readiest but quickest process. Stereotypes for daily newspapers are usually made in fifteen minutes. For newspaper-work the plates for rotary presses are molded and cast with a curved surface that fits them to the impression-cylinder. The practice of stereotyping is now confined to newspapers and the cheaper forms of printed work. Plates of books, woodcuts, and the finer forms of printing are now made by the electrolytic process. (See electrotype.) Stereotype plates were first made, but imperfectly, by William Ged, at Edinburgh, in 1725. The plaster process, which was the first to become popular, was invented by Wildon and Lord Stanhope in 1810.

A, Stereotype Founding Apparatus. B, Stereotype Plates from the Mold. a, furnace by which the water-jacketed mold is uniformly heated. The mold is supported on the frame d and on the rollers c; the parts of the mold are held together by a clamping-screw e; the water is supplied to the water-jacket through the funnel f; on pouring the metal, the mold is placed in position shown in dotted outline.

2. Loosely, an electrotype.—3. The art of making plates of fixed metallic types; the process of producing printed work by means of such plates.

II. a. Of or pertaining to stereotype, or stereotyping, or stereotype printing: as, stereotype work; stereotype plates.

stereotype (ster'ē-ō-tip), v. t.: pret. and pp. stereotyped, ppr. stereotyping. [ster- type, n.]

1. To cast a stereotype plate from: as, to stereotype a page or a form.—2. To prepare for printing by means of stereotype plates: as, to stereotype the New Testament.—3. To fix or establish firmly or unchangeably.

If men cannot yet entirely obey the law, . . . it does not follow that we ought therefore to stereotype their incompetency, by specifying how much is possible to them and how much is not. H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 506.

stereotype-block (ster'ē-ō-tip-blok), n. A block of iron or of hard wood, bound with brass, about three fourths of an inch high, on which a stereotype plate is fixed for use.

stereotyped (ster'ē-ō-tipt), p. a. 1. Made or printed from stereotype plates.—2. Formed in an unchangeable manner; fixed; set: as, stereotyped opinions.

The entablatures show considerable progress, but the capitals were so stereotyped that it is evident, if any Greek or Roman artists had designed capitals in Gandhara during the period just alluded to, we could predicate exactly what they would have been. J. Fergusson, Hist. Indian Arch., p. 178.

stereotype-metal (ster'ē-ō-tip-met'al), n. An alloy for stereotype plates; type-metal.

stereotyper (ster'ē-ō-ti-pēr), n. [stereotype + -er.] One who stereotypes, or who makes stereotype plates.

stereotypery (ster'ē-ō-tī-pēr-i), n. [< stereotype + -ery.] 1. The art or work of making stereotype plates.—2. Pl. stereotyperies (-iz). A place where stereotype plates are made; a stereotype foundry.

stereotypic (ster'ē-ō-tī-p'ik), a. [< stereotype + -ic.] Of or relating to stereotype or stereotype plates.

stereotyping (ster'ē-ō-tī-p'ing), n. The art, act, or process of making stereotypes.—Paper process of stereotyping. See paper.

stereotypist (ster'ē-ō-tī-p'ist), n. [< stereotype + -ist.] One who makes stereotype plates; a stereotyper.

stereotypographer (ster'ē-ō-tī-pog'rā-fēr), n. [< stereotypography + -er.] A stereotypewriter.

stereotypography (ster'ē-ō-tī-pog'rā-f'ī), n. [< Gr. στερεός, fixed, + E. typography.] The art or practice of printing from stereotype. Imp. Dict.

stereotypy (ster'ē-ō-tī-p'i), n. [= F. stéréotypie; as stereotype + -y.] The art or business of making stereotype plates.

steridraulic (stēr-hi-drā'lik), a. [Irreg. < Gr. στερεός, solid, + E. hydraulic.] Pertaining to or having an action resembling that of a steridraulic press. See the phrase.—Steridraulic press, a peculiar form of hydraulic press in which pressure is generated in a hydraulic cylinder by the displacement of a part of the contained liquid through the entrance into its mass of a rod working through a stuffing-box, a screw working in a packed nut, or in some cases a rope wound upon a barrel in the inclosure and pulled into it through a packed hole, the shaft of the winding-barrel or drum also extending through a stuffing-box in the side of the cylinder, and fitted on the exterior with a winch or a driving-wheel. Of these forms that using a screw is the simplest and best.

sterigma (stē-rig'mā), n.; pl. sterigmata (-mā-tā). [NL., < Gr. στήριγμα, a prop, support, < στήριξις, prop.] In bot., a stalk or support of some kind; a term of varying application. (a) Same as basidium. (b) The stalk-like branch of a basidium which bears a spore. (c) The footstalk of a spore, especially of a spore of minute size. (d) The cell from which a spermatium is cut off. (e) A ridge or foliaceous appendage proceeding down the stem below the attachment of a decurrent leaf.

sterigmatic (ster-ig-mat'ik), a. [< sterigma(-t-) + -ic.] In bot., resembling, belonging to, or of the nature of a sterigma.

steril, a. An obsolete spelling of sterile.

sterile (ster'il), a. [Formerly also steril; < F. stérile = Sp. Pg. esteril = It. sterile, < L. sterilis, unfruitful, barren; cf. Gr. στερεός, stiff, hard, solid, στείριφος, hard, unfruitful, barren.] 1. Unfruitful; unproductive; not fertile.

Indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 310.

It is certain that in sterile years, come sown will grow to an other kinde. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 525.

2. Barren; not reproducing its kind.

She is grown sterile and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable. Dr. H. More, Antidote against Atheism.

3. In bot., of a flower, producing only stamens—that is, staminate or male (compare neutral); of a stamen, having no anther, or a functionless one; of an anther, without pollen; of an ovary, without perfect seeds; of a seed, without an embryo; of a frond, without sori. See cuts under Oncolea, Ophioglossum, sassafras, and smoke-tree.—4. Free from living germs.

I at first suspected that the biologically sterile tube might not be chemically clean. Medical News, XLIX. 400.

5. Leading to no results; fruitless; profitless; useless.

I will endeavour that the favour conferred on me rest not sterile. Abbé Mann, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 431.

6. Lacking richness of thought or expression; bald; bare; as, a sterile style; sterile verse.—Sterile wood a shrub or small tree, Coprosma foetidissima, of the Rubiaceae, found in New Zealand. It is extremely fetid when drying, though inodorous when alive and growing.

sterilization, sterilise, etc. See sterilization, etc.

sterility (ste-ril'i-ti), n. [< F. stérilité = Sp. esterilidad = Pg. esterilidad = It. sterilità, < L. sterilitas, unfruitfulness, barrenness, < sterilis, barren, sterile; see sterile.] The state or character of being sterile. (a) Lack of fertility; unproductiveness; unfruitfulness, as of land, labor, etc.

For the Soil of Spain, the Fruitfulness of their Vallies recomences the Sterility of their Hills. Houell, Letters, I. iii. 32.

(b) Lack of fecundity; barrenness: said of animals or plants.

Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend To make this creature fruitful! Into her womb convey sterility! Shak., Lear, i. 4. 300.

(c) Fruitlessness; profitlessness.

The trueness of this formula is only equalled by its sterility for psychological purposes. W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 551.

(d) Deficiency in ideas, sentiments, or expression; lack of richness or luxuriance, as in literary style; poverty; baldness; meagerness.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses. Pope, Essay on Homer.

sterilization (ster'il-i-zā'shōn), n. [< sterilize + -ation.] The act or operation of making sterile; specifically, the process of freeing from living germs. Also spelled sterilisation.

Sterilization of cow's milk must and will be a most valuable preventive of summer diarrhoea. Medical News, LIII. 12.

sterilize (ster'il-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. sterilized, ppr. sterilizing. [= F. stériliser = Sp. Pg. esterilizar; as sterile + -ize.] To render sterile or unproductive in any way; specifically, in baacteriology, to render free from living germs, as by heating or otherwise. Also spelled sterilise.

No, no—such wars do thou, Ambition, wage! Go sterilize the fertile with thy rage! Whole nations to depopulate is thine. Savage, Public Spirit.

Prof. Tyndall found that he could not sterilize an infusion of old hay . . . without boiling it continuously for several hours. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 309.

sterilizer (ster'il-i-zēr), n. [< sterilize + -er.] One who or that which sterilizes; especially, any apparatus for rendering substances free from living germs, as by means of heat. Also spelled steriliser.

sterkt. An old spelling of stark, stirk.

sterlet (stēr'let), n. [< F. sterlet = Dan. sterlet = Sw. sterlett, < G. sterlet, < Russ. sterlyadi, a sterlet.] A species of sturgeon, Acipenser ruthenus. It is of small size and slender form, with a long sharp snout and fringed barbels, and from sixty to seventy lateral shields. It rarely reaches a length of two feet, and is generally not more than a foot long. It inhabits the Black Sea, Sea of Azof, Caspian Sea, and the rivers of Asiatic Russia, as well as certain rivers of Siberia. It is highly esteemed for its flavor, and its roe makes a superior caviar. Compare also cuts under Acipenser.

Sterlet (Acipenser ruthenus).

Sterletus (stēr'le-tus), n. [NL. (Rafinesque, 1820), < F. sterlet, < Russ. sterlyadi, sterlet; see sterlet.] A genus of sturgeons, the type of which is the sterlet, having the spines of the dorsal shield posterior, no stellate plates, and the lip emarginate.

sterling¹, n. An obsolete form of sterling¹.

sterling² (stēr'ling), n. and a. [*< ME. sterling, steringe, steringe, starling, the coin so called; cf. D. sterling = Sw. Dan. sterling, sterling (as in mod. E. use), = Icel. sterlingr, a sterling (the English coin so called), = MHG. sterline, sterline (-ling), a coin so called, G. sterling (as in mod. E. use); = OF. esterlin, a sterling (the English coin so called), sterlin, esterlin, estellin, estelin, a weight of twenty-eight grains (of gold), the twentieth part of an ounce, = Sp. Pg. esterlino, in libra esterlina, a pound sterling, = It. sterlino, in lira sterlina, a pound sterling, also as a noun, sterlino, sterling coin, standard rate (of coin); ML. sterlingus, sterlingum, sterlinus, stellinus, stelligus, sterlingus, sterlingus, esterlingus, esterlingus, a sterling (the English coin so called), also a weight of twenty-eight grains, the twentieth part of an ounce; all < E., unless, as Kluge asserts, the E. itself (and so in part the OF. and ML.) is < MHG. sterline, sterline (-ling), which is then < sterl- or ster-, origin unknown, + -ing³ or -ling¹ as in shilling, farthing (AS. feorthing, feorthing), pcenny (AS. pening, etc.). In this view the word must have been introduced into ME. use by the Hanse merchants in London, who, according to the story, first stamped the coin in England. The accepted statement is that these merchants were called Eusterlings as coming from "the east parts of Germany" (Camden), and that the coin received its name from them; but the similarity appears to be accidental, and the statement, besides other deficiencies, fails to explain the MHG. name, which could not have meant 'Easterling.' It seems more probable that the MHG. word is, like the rest, derived from the ME. word, which must then be due, in spite of unexplained difficulties, to *Euster- ling, or else is derived, as asserted in a statement quoted by Minshew from Linwood, from the figure of a starling (ME. sterling) at one time engraved on one quarter of the coin so called: see starling¹. Historical evidence of the truth of this assertion is as yet lacking.] I. n. 1. A silver coin struck by English (and Scottish) kings from the time of Richard I. (1190).

Faste comen out of halle And shoken nobles and sterlinges. Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1315.

The oldest pieces [of the coinage of Scotland] are silver pennies or sterlings, resembling the contemporary English money, of the beginning of the 12th century. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 656.

2. English money. [Rare.] And Roman welfth in English sterling view. Arbuthnot.

II. a. 1. Of fixed or standard national value; conforming to the national standard of value: said of English money, and, by extension, of the precious metals: as, a pound sterling; a shilling sterling. Abbreviated ster., sty.

In the Canon Law mention is made of 5 shillings sterling, and a merke sterling, esp. 3. de Arbitris, & c. constitut. 12. de procurator. Minshew, 1617.

When a given weight of gold or silver is of a given fineness, it is then of the true standard, and called esterling or sterling metal. Blackstone, Com., I. vii.

I lost between seven and eight thousand pounds sterling of your English money. J. S. Le Fanu, Dragoon Volant, v.

2. Of acknowledged worth or influence; authoritative.

If my word be sterling yet in England, Let it command a mirror hither straight, That it may show me what a face I have. Shak., Rich. II., iv. 1. 264.

3. Genuine; true; pure; hence, of great value or excellence.

His sterling worth, which words cannot express, Lives with his friends, their pride and their distress. Crabbe, Works, II. 27.

I might recall other evidence of the sterling and unusual qualities of his public virtue. R. Choate, Addresses, p. 321.

sterling³ (stēr'ling), n. See sterling².

Sterling's formula. See formula.

stern¹ (stērn), a. [*< ME. stern, sterin, sterne, sturne, < AS. styrne, severe, austere, stern (also in comp. styrn-mōd, stern-minded); akin to OHG. stornēn, be astonished, sturni, stupor; perhaps related to OHG. storren, MHG. storren, stand out, project, = Goth. staurran, in comp. and-staurran, murmur against, also to D. stuurse, stern, = Sw. stursk, refractory, and to Icel. stūra, gloom, despair, stūra, mope, fret.] 1. Severe in disposition or conduct; austere; harsh; rigorous; hard.

No Man was more gentle where there was Submission; where Opposition, no Man more stern. Baker, Chronicles, p. 132.

And sterner hearts alone may feel The wound that time can never heal. Byron, The Giaour.

2. Characterized by severity or rigor; especially, resulting from or expressive of harshness: as, a stern reply; a stern glance; a stern rebuke.

He herd their strakes, that war ful stern. Yvain and Gawain, l. 3219. (Halliwell.)

If wolves had at thy gate howld that stern time, Thou shouldst have said, "Good porter, turn the key." Shak., Lear, iii. 7. 63.

Gods and men Fear'd her stern frown. Milton, Comus, l. 440.

3. Grim or forbidding in aspect; gloomy; repelling.

In passing through these stern and lofty mountains, their path was often along the bottom of a baranco, or deep rocky valley. Irvine, Granada, p. 88.

4. Rough; violent; tumultuous; fierce.

The werre wox in that wonderly stern. Alexander of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 137.

Those stern waves, which like huge mountains roll. Drayton, Polyolbion, l. 435.

5. Rigid; stringent; strict.

Subjected to stern discipline by the rigid enforcement of uniform motives. Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 3.

6. Stout; strong; heavy.

The hamur bothe stern and gret That drof the nayles thorow hand and fete. Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 184.

Of bak & of brest al were his bodi sturne. Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 143.

7. Firm; unyielding; inflexible; hard.

When that the poor have cried, Cesar hath wept: Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shak., J. C., iii. 2. 97.

The sterner sex. See sex¹. = Syn. 1. Severe, Harsh, Strict, etc. See austere.—1 and 2. Unrelenting, uncompromising, inflexible.

stern² stérn, n. [ME. stern, sterne, steorne (not found in AS., where only stóv, a rudder, appears; see *stóv*¹, n.) = OFries. stiørne, stiørne, a rudder, = Icel. stjörn, a steering, steerage, rudder; with formative -n, from the root of AS. stóv, E. stear, etc., a rudder; see *stóv*¹, n. and v.] 1†. The rudder or helm of a vessel.

zif he rise the rather and rauhte to the stearne,
The wynt wolde with the water the hot ouer-throwe.
Piers Plowman (A), ix. 30.

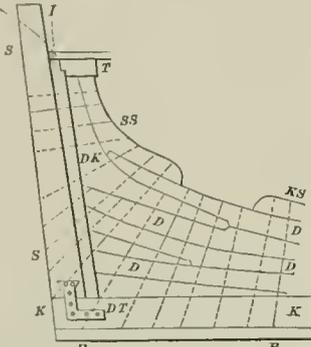

But to preserve the people and the land,
Which now remain as shippe without a stearne.
Norton and Sackville, Ferrex and Porrex, v. 2.

2†. Hence, figuratively, any instrument of management or direction; a guiding agent or agency; also, a post of direction or control.

The father held the stearne of his whole obedience.
Aesham, The Scholemaster, p. 43.

Not a few of them [the eunuchs] have come to sit at the stern of State.
Sandys, Travails, p. 55.

3. The hinder part of a ship or boat, where the rudder is placed; the part furthest removed Lower part of Ship's Stern.

S, stern-post; AS, keelson; K, keel; DT, dovetail-plates; I, inner stern-post; P, deadwood; DA, deadwood-knee; SS, stern; T, deck-transom; F, false keel. (The dotted lines show bolts.)

from the stem or prow. See also cut under poop.

So, when the first bold vessel dared the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian raised his strain.
Pope, Ode on St. Cecilia's Day, l. 39.

4. The hinder parts, backside, buttocks, or rump; the tail of an animal.

He [the dragon] . . . gan his sturdy stearne about to weld,
And him so strongly stroke that to the ground him fell.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xi. 23.

We don't want to deceive ourselves about them, or fancy them cherubs without stearns.
Booke of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), Forewords, [p. xxiii.]

By the stern. See byl.—False stern, an addition made to the stern of a vessel for strength or protection.—From stern to stern. See *stern*².—Square stern, a stern less rounded or elliptical than is usual.—Stern foremost, backside foremost; with the stern advanced.—Stern on, the position of a vessel when her stern is presented toward the observer.—To make a stern board. See board.—To moor head and stern. See *moor*².

stern² (stérn), v. [*<stern*², n.] I. trans. 1†. To steer; guide.

Hulke tower . . . is a notable marke for pilots, in directing them which waie to stearne their ships, and to eschew the danger of the craggy rocks.
Stanhurst, Descrip. of Ireland, iii. (Holinshed.)

2. To back (a boat) with the oars; back water; row backward.—Stern all stern hard! orders to back water given by the officer of a boat to the crew. Also simply stern!

II, intrans. To draw back; back water: said of a boat or its crew.

Meantime Mr. Norton, the mate, having struck the fast whale, he and the second mate sterned off to wait for the whale to get quiet.
Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 273.

stern³ (stérn), n. Same as *stern*¹.

stern⁴ (stérn), n. [A var. of tern: see tern, and cf. Sterna.] A tern.

Sterna (stér'ná), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1758), appar. based on L. tern.] A Linnaean genus of Laridae, typical of the subfamily Sterninae, and containing all the terns or sea-swallows, or variously restricted. It is now commonly confined to species of moderate and large size, white with usually a pealy-blue mantle and black cap, and having a long deeply-forked tail, whose outer feathers are more or less narrowly linear for much of their length. The species are numerous, and are found all over the world, as S. hirundo, the common tern of Europe and America; S. arctica, the arctic tern of the northern hemisphere; S. paradisica or dougalli, the roseate tern (see cut under roseate), very widely distributed; and S. forsteri and S. trudeauti of America. Among the large species, representing a subgenus Thalasseus, are S. ischegara or caspia, the Caspian tern of Asia, Europe, and America; S. mazima, the royal tern (smaller than the last, in spite of its name) of America; S. elegans, the dual tern of America. (See cut under Thalasseus.) A group of small species, such as S. minuta of Europe and S. antillarum of America, are called least terns, and all have a white frontal crescent in the black cap: these represent a subgenus

Common Tern (Sterna hirundo).

Sterna. (See cut under Sterna.) Some middle-sized terns with dark upper parts, widely distributed in tropical and warm temperate regions, are the subgenus Haliplana, as the common sooty and bridled terns, S. fuliginosa and S. anaethetica. (See cut under sooty.) Gull-billed terns form a section Glochelidon (see cut there). The wholly white terns, the black terns, and the noddies belong to other genera. See Sterninae and tern.

sternadiform (stér'ná-di-fórm), a. [<NL. sternum, the breast-bone, + L. ul, to, + forma, form.] In ichth., characterized by a tendency to expansion or extension of the thoracic or sternal region, as exemplified in the John-dory and the Scrranidae. Gill.

sternage (stér'náj), n. [*<stern*² + -age.] Steerage; direction; course, as of a ship or fleet.

Follow, follow:
Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England, as dead midnight still.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. Prol., l. 18.

sternal (stér'nál), a. [= F. sternal, <NL. sternalis, <sternum, the breast-bone; see sternum.]

1. Of or pertaining to the sternum, especially the breast-bone of vertebrates: as, the sternal end of the clavicle; the sternal keel of a bird's breast-bone; sternal articulation; a sternal segment.—2. In Invertebrata, of or pertaining to a sternite; sternitic.—3. Ventral; hemal; on the ventral surface or aspect, where the sternum is situated; on the same side with the sternum; in man, anterior; in other animals, inferior: opposed to dorsal, tergal, or neural.

—Sternal band, in embryol., of insects, a longitudinal thickening of the ovum, which gives rise to the sternal region of the body.—Sternal canal, in Crustacea, a median passage between each pair of endosternites, arched over by the meeting of the mesophragmal apophyses of the apodemes of opposite sides. The sternal canal conveys the chain of nervous ganglia and the sternal artery. See cut under Astacidae.—Sternal glands, a chain of six to ten small lymphatic glands, situated along the course of the internal mammary blood-vessels.—Sternal line, the vertical line on the front of the chest lying over the edge of the sternum.—Sternal region, the region of the front of the chest lying between the sternal lines. It is divided into a superior and an inferior sternal region by a line passing through the uppermost points of the junctions of the third costal cartilages with the sternum.—Sternal rib, (a) A true or fixed rib; one that joins the sternum by its hemapophysis, or costal cartilage, as distinguished from a false rib. See cut under endoskeleton. (b) The hemapophysis of a rib, as distinguished from the pleurapophysis; that part of a bony jointed rib answering to the costal cartilage of a mammalian rib, reaching from the end of the pleurapophysis to the sternum or toward it, as distinguished from a vertebral rib, which is the pleurapophysis alone. See cuts under epipleura and interclavicle.

sternalgia (stér'nál'jí-á), n. [NL., <Gr. στέρνον, the breast-bone, + álgos, pain.] 1. Pain about the sternum or breast-bone.—2. Specifically, angina pectoris. See angina.

sternalgic (stér'nál'jík), a. [<sternalgia + -ic.] Pertaining to or affected with sternalgia; especially, affected with angina pectoris.

sternalis (stér'ná'lis), n.; pl. sternalis (-lēs), [NL., sc. museulus, muscle; see sternal.] A sternal or presternal muscle; specifically, the rectus sternalis of various animals, more expressly called sternalis brutorum and rectus thoracicus superficialis. It is not infrequently present in man.

Sternaspida (stér-nas'pi-dá), n. pl. [NL., irreg. <Sternaspis (-aspis) + -ida.] An order of geophyceans, represented by the genus Sternaspis: distinguished from an order Echiurina, both being referred to a subclass Echiuromorpha of the class Gephyrea. Compare Echiuroides.

Sternbergia (stérn-bér'jí-á), n. [NL. (Waldstein and Kitaibel, 1805), named after Count Kaspar Maria von Sternberg, 1761–1838, author of various botanical and paleontological works.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Amaryllidaceae and tribe Amaryllideae. It is characterized by a commonly solitary funnel-shaped perianth without a corona and with somewhat spreading lobes, and by a fleshy nearly indehiscent fruit with roundish and often strophiolate seeds. About 12 species have been described, now by some reduced to 5, all native of Europe and the Mediterranean region. They produce a short flower-stalk from a coated bulb, with leaves at the same time or earlier. S. lutea and several other dwarf species with handsome yellow flowers are cultivated under the name of star-flower. S. lutea is also known as winter daffodil, and S. Etnensis as Mount Etna lily; these are often sold under the name of amaryllis.

sternbergite (stér'n-bérg-ít), n. [Named after Count K. M. von Sternberg: see Sternbergia.] An ore of silver, a sulphid of silver and iron, having a pinchbeck-brown color and metallic luster. It occurs foliated, the laminae being soft and flexible. It leaves a mark on paper like that of graphite.

stern-board (stér'n'bórd), n. Naut. a backward motion of a vessel. See to make a stern board, under board.

stern-cap (stér'n'káp), n. An iron cap to protect the stern of a boat.

stern-chase (stér'n'chäs), n. A chase in which two vessels sail on one and the same course, one following in the wake of the other: as, a stern-chase is a long chase.

stern-chaser (stér'n'chäs'er), n. A cannon placed in a ship's stern, pointing backward, and intended to annoy a ship that is in pursuit.

Sternae (stér'nē-ē), n. pl. [NL., <Sterna + -ae.] A subdivision of Sterninae, containing all the sea-swallows with forked tails and emarginate webs, as distinguished from the Anoëae or noddies; the typical terns. Cours, 1862.

sternebra (stér'nē-bér), n. [<NL. sternebra, <sternum + (vert)ebra.] One of the pieces of which the breast-bone of a vertebrate usually consists; a bony segment of the sternum; a sternite, or sternbral element. The sternum is a serially segmented bone, made up of pieces, primitively separate bones, corresponding to pairs of ribs, every one of which is a sternebra. Thus, in man the manubrium sterni and the xiphoid or ensiform cartilage are each a sternebra; and the gladiolus, the middle part of the breast-bone, is composed of four other sternebrae.

sternebra (stér'nē-brál), a. [<sternebra + -al.] Entering into the composition of the breast-bone; of or pertaining to a sternebra.

sterned¹ (stérnd), a. [*<stern*² + *-ed*².] Having a stern (of a specified character). Chapman, Iliad, xi.

sterned²† (stérnd), a. [ME., *<stern*³ + *-ed*².] Starred; starry. Hampole, Priek of Conscience.
sterner¹ (stér'nér), n. [*<stern*² + *-er*¹.] A steersman; a guide or director. [Rare.]

He that is "regens sidera," the sterner of the stars.
Dr. Clarke, Sermons (1637), p. 15. (Latham.)

stern-fast (stér'n'fást), n. A rope or chain used to confine the stern of a ship or other vessel to a wharf or quay.

stern-frame (stér'n'frám), n. The several pieces of timber or iron which form the stern of a ship—the stern-post, transoms, and fashion-pieces.

sternfully[†] (stér'n'fúl-i), adv. [*<sternful (irreg. <stern + -ful + *-ly*²)] Sternly. Stanhurst, (conceites). [Rare.]

stern-gallery (stér'n'gal'g-ri), n. Naut. See gallery, 9.

stern-hook (stér'n'húk), n. In ship-building, a curved timber built into the stern of a ship to support the stern-frame.

Sternidae (stér'ni-dē), n. pl. [NL., <Sterna + -idae.] The Sterninae rated as a family apart from Laridae.

Sternidius (stér-nid'i-us), n. [NL. (Le Conte, 1873).] A genus of longicorn beetles, of the family Cerambycidae, equivalent to Liopus (Leiciopus of Serville, 1835). S. acutiferus is a common North American species now placed in Leptostylus. Its larva burrows under the bark of various trees.

Sternidius acutiferus.

sterniform (stér'ni-fórm), a. [<NL. sternum, the breast-bone, + L. forma, form.] In entom., having the form or appearance of a thoracic sternum.—Sterniform process or horn, an anterior projection of the first ventral segment of the abdomen, between the bases of the posterior legs: it is more commonly called the intercoxal process.

Sterninae (stér-nī-nē), n. pl. [NL., <Sterna + -inae.] A subfamily of Laridae, typified by the genus Sterna, containing all the terns or sea-swallows. It differs from Larinae in the average smaller size, slenderer form, relatively longer wings and tail, the forking of the tail, the small feet, and the slender sharp bill. The bill is parangathous (not epigathous as is usual in Larinae), with continuous horny covering, usually long and slender, very sharp, with straight commissure or nearly so, gently curved culmen, long gonyes, and slight sphyssical eminence. The wings are extremely long, narrow, and pointed, with the first primary much the longest, and the secondaries all short. The tail is usually long, and forked or forficulate, with attenuated outer feathers. The feet are small, and scarcely ambulatorial. There are 60 or more species, of all parts of the world. They are divided into two groups, the Sternae or terns proper, including nearly all of the Sterninae, and the noddies or Anoese. Most of the species fall into the single genus Sterna. Other genera are Hydrochelidon, Phaethusa, Procelsterna, Gygis, Inca, and Anous. See Sterna, and cuts there noted.

sternine (stér'nin), n. [< NL. sterninus, < Sterna, tern.] Resembling or related to a tern; or of pertaining to the Sterninae.

sternite (stér'nit), n. [< NL. sternum, the breast-bone, + *-ite*².] 1. In Arthropoda, as an insect or a crustacean, one of the median ventral sclerites of the crust or body-wall; the median ventral piece of any segment, somite, or metanere, whether a distinct piece or only that undistinguished ventral part or region which lies between the insertions of any pair of legs or other appendages. The sternites are primitively and typically all alike, but may be variously modified in different regions of the body, or coalesced with one another or with other pieces of the exoskeleton, or suppressed. See cut under Cephalothorax.

2. In entom., specifically, the under or ventral sclerite of an abdominal segment. [Rare.]—

3. One of the pieces of the sternum or breast-bone of a vertebrate; a sternite. [Rare.]—

Antennary sternite. Same as epistoma (b).

sternitic (stér'nit'ik), a. [< sternite + -ic.] Of or pertaining to a sternite; sternal, as a sclerite of an arthropod.

stern-knee (stér'nō), n. The continuation of a vessel's keelson, to which the stern-post is secured by bolts. Also called sternson and sternson-knee.

stern-light, n. [< *stern*³ + *light*¹.] Starlight.

It was mirk mirk night, and there was nae stern light.
Thomas the Rhymer (Child's Ballads, I. 112).

sternly (stér'nli), adv. [< ME. sternlic, sternliche, sturnelic, < AS. sturnlice, < styrne, stern; see *stern*¹ and *-ly*².] In a stern manner; with severity, harshness, austerity, or rigor.

sternmost (stér'n'mōst), a. superl. [< *stern*² + -most.] Furthest in the rear; furthest stern: as, the sternmost ship in a convoy.

sterness (stér'n'es), n. [< ME. sterunesse, sternnesse; < stern + -ness.] The quality or character of being stern.

With sternness 3c comaundide to hem, and with power.
Wyclif, Ezek. xxxiv. 4.

sternochondroscapularis (stér'nō-kon-drō-skap-ū-lā'ris), n.; pl. sternochondroscapularis (-rēs). [NL. (se. musculus, muscle), < Gr. stērion, the breast-bone, + χόνδρος, cartilage, + NL. scapularis, q. v.] A muscle of some mammals, not infrequent in man, arising from the first costal cartilage and the sternum, and inserted into the superior border of the scapula.

Also called chondroscapularis, scapulo-costalis minor, costoscapularis, subclavius posticus.

sternoclavicular (stér'nō-kla-vik'ū-lār), a. [< NL. sternoclavicularis, < Gr. stērion, the breast-bone, + NL. clavicula: see clavicular.] Pertaining to the sternum and the clavicle. Also sterno-clavicular, and sometimes clido-sternal.—

Sternoclavicular fibrocartilage. See fibrocartilage.—Sternoclavicular ligament, a band of ligamentous fibers uniting the sternum and the clavicle: an anterior and a posterior are distinguished in man.

sternoclavicularis (stér'nō-kla-vik'ū-lā'ris), n.; pl. sternoclavicularis (-rēs). [NL.: see sternoclavicular.] One of two anomalous muscles in man, anterior and posterior, extending over the sternoclavicular articulation.

sternoclidal (stér'nō-kli'dal), a. [< Gr. stērion, the breast-bone, + κλειδ (κλειδ-), key (clavicle), + -al.] Same as sternoclavicular.

sternoclidomastoid (stér'nō-kli-dō-mas'toid), a. and n. [< NL. sternoclidomastoideus, < sternum, q. v., + clidomastoideus, q. v.] I. a. In anat., of or belonging to the sternum, the clavicle, and the mastoid process. The sternoclidomastoid muscle arises from the summit of the sternum and the inner section of the clavicle, and is inserted into the mastoid process of the temporal bone. It is also called sternomastoid, mastoides colli, and nutator capitis. See cut under muscle.

II. n. The sternoclidomastoid muscle.

sternoclidomastoideus (stér'nō-kli-dō-mas'toi'dē-us), n.; pl. sternoclidomastoidei (-ī). [NL.: see sternoclidomastoid.] The sternoclidomastoid muscle.

sternocoracoideus (stér'nō-kor'ā-koid), a. and n. [< NL. sternocoracoideus, < sternum, q. v., + coracoideus, q. v.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the coracoid: as, the sternocoracoideus articulation of birds and reptiles; a sternocoracoideus muscle.

II. n. The sternocoracoideus.

sternocoracoideus (stér'nō-kor'ā-koi'dē-us), n.; pl. sternocoracoidei (-ī). [NL.: see sternocoracoideus.] The sternocoracoideus muscle of various animals, arising from the sternum and inserted in the coracoid. It is represented in man by the pectoralis minor.

sternocostal (stér'nō-kos'tal), a. [< NL. sternocostalis, < sternum, q. v., + L. costa, rib; see costal.] Of or pertaining to the sternum and the ribs or costal cartilages; costosternal.

sternocostalis (stér'nō-kos-tā'lis), n.; pl. sternocostales (-lēz). [NL.: see sternocostal.] A thin median fan-shaped muscle within the thorax, behind the costal cartilages and breast-bone, arising from the lower part of the sternum. Also called transversus thoracis, and usually triangularis sterni.

sternocoxal (stér'nō-kok'sal), a. [< NL. sternocoxalis, < sternum, q. v., + L. coxa, the hip; see coxal.] Of or pertaining to the sternites and coxae of an arthropod.

sternofacial (stér'nō-fā'shal), a. and n. [< NL. sternofacialis, < sternum, q. v., + L. facies, face; see facial.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the face: as, a sternofacial muscle.

II. n. The sternofacialis.

sternofacialis (stér'nō-fā-shi-ā'lis), n.; pl. sternofaciales (-lēz). [NL.: see sternofacial.] A muscle of the hedgehog, arising over the fore part of the sternum and passing to the side of the lower jaw and integument of the face: it assists the action of the orbicularis panniculi.

sternoglossal (stér'nō-glos'al), a. and n. [< NL. sternoglossalis, < Gr. stērion, breast-bone, + γλῶσσα, tongue,] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the tongue: as, a sternoglossal muscle.

II. n. The sternoglossus.

sternoglossus (stér'nō-glos'us), n.; pl. sternoglossi (-ī). [NL., < Gr. stērion, the breast-bone, + γλῶσσα, the tongue.] I. A long retractor muscle of the tongue, as of the great ant-eater, Myrmecophaga jubata, attached behind to the sternum, and antagonizing the action of the protractor muscles, the genioglossus and stylohyoideus.—2. [cap.] In entom., a genus of coleopterous insects.

sternohyoid (stér'nō-hi'oid), a. and n. [< NL. sternohyoideus, < sternum, q. v., + hyoideus: see hyoid.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the hyoid bone.—Sternohyoid muscle, a ribbon-like muscle arising from the manubrium sterni and inner extremity of the clavicle, and inserted into the body of the hyoid bone. It is innervated from the ansa hypoglossi, and its action draws down or back the hyoid bone and larynx. See cut under muscle.

II. n. The sternohyoid muscle.

sternohyoidean (stér'nō-hi-oi'dē-an), a. [< sternohyoid + -e-an.] Same as sternohyoid.

sternohyoidei (stér'nō-hi-oi'dē-us), n.; pl. sternohyoidei (-ī). [NL.: see sternohyoid.] The sternohyoid.

sternomastoid (stér'nō-mas'toid), a. and n. [< NL. sternomastoideus, < sternum, q. v., + mas-toideus, q. v.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the mastoid process of the temporal bone.—Sternomastoid artery. (a.) A superficial descending branch of the superior thyroid artery, which is distributed to the sternomastoid, platysma, and the muscles attached to the thyroid cartilage. (b.) A small muscular branch of the occipital artery which supplies the sternocleidomastoid.—Sternomastoid muscle. (a.) That portion of the sternocleidomastoid which arises from the sternum. (b.) The entire sternocleidomastoid, without distinction.

II. n. The sternomastoid muscle.

sternomastoideus (stér'nō-mas-toi'dē-us), n.; pl. sternomastoidei (-ī). [NL.: see sternomastoid.] The sternomastoid muscle.

sternomaxillaris (stér'nō-mak-si-lā'ris), n.; pl. sternomaxillares (-rēs). [NL.: see sternomaxillary.] The sternomaxillary muscle.

sternomaxillary (stér'nō-mak'si-lā-ri), a. [< NL. sternomaxillaris, < sternum, q. v., + L. maxilla, jaw; see maxillary.] Pertaining to the sternum and the mandible: applied to the sternomastoid muscle when, as in the horse, its anterior end is fixed to the mandible.

sternon (stér'nōn), n. [NL.: see sternum.] Same as sternum. Wiseman, Surgery. [Rare.]

sternopagus (stér'nop'ā-gus), n.; pl. sternopagi (-jī). [NL., < Gr. stērion, breast, chest, + πάγος, that which is firmly set.] In teratol., a double monster with union at the sternum.

Sternoptychidæ (stér-nop'tik'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Sternoptyx (-ptych-) + -idæ.] A family of inious fishes, typified by the genus Sterno- noptyx. (a.) In Günther's system it includes the typical Sternoptychidæ and other families. (b.) In Gill's system, a family of inious fishes with a compressed ventradiform body, carinated contour, deeply and obliquely cleft or subvertical mouth whose upper margin is constituted by the supramaxillaries as well as intermaxillaries, branchiostegial arch near and parallel with lower jaw, scapular arch with an inferior projection, and one or more of the neural spines abnormally developed and projecting above the back in advance of the dorsal fin. There are 3 genera and about 7 species, small deep-sea fishes of remarkable appearance and organization, representing 2 subfamilies, Sternoptychinae and Argyroplectinae. Also Sternoptyges, Sternotidi, and Sternoptygidae.

sternoptychoid (stér-nop'ti-koid), a. and n. [< Sternoptyx (-ptych-) + -oid.] I. a. Of, or having characteristics of, the Sternoptychidæ.

II. n. A fish of the family Sternoptychidæ.

Sternoptyx (stér-nop'tiks), n. [NL. (Hermann, 1781), < Gr. stērion, breast, chest, + πύξ, a fold.] A genus of fishes, so named from the transverse folds on the pectoral or sternal region, typical of the Sternoptychidæ.

sternorhabdite (stér'nō-rab'dit), n. In entom., one of the lowermost or sternal pair of rhabdites.

sternoscapular (stér'nō-skap'ū-lār), a. and n. [< NL. sternoscapularis, < sternum, q. v., + L. scapula, shoulder-blade; see scapular.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the scapula: as, a sternoscapular muscle.

II. n. The sternoscapularis.

sternoscapularis (stér'nō-skap'ū-lār'is), n.; pl. sternoscapulares (-rēs). [NL.: see sternoscapular.] A muscle of many animals, connecting the sternum and the scapula, and forming with the serratus magnus and the levator anguli scapulae a sling in which the fore part of the body is supported upon the anterior extremities.

Sternothæridæ (stér'nō-thē'ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Sternothærus + -idæ.] A family of pleurodirous tortoises, typified by the genus Sternothærus, to which different limits have been assigned. As generally understood, they have eleven plastral bones, mesoplastrals being distinct, and the skull has no bony temporal roof. The species are confined to Africa and Madagascar.

Sternothærus (stér'nō-thē'rus), n. [NL. (Bell, 1825), < Gr. stērion, breast, chest, + θάρος, the hinge of a door or gate.] A genus of tortoises, having a hinged plastron (whence the name).

sternothere (stér'nō-thēr), n. [< NL. Sternothærus, q. v.] An African turtle of the genus Sternothærus. P. L. Scudder.

sternothyroid (stér'nō-thi'roid), a. and n. [< NL. sternothyroideus, < sternum, q. v., + thyroideus.] I. a. In anat., of or pertaining to the sternum and the thyroid cartilage.—Sternothyroid muscle, a small muscle beneath the sternohyoid on either side, arising from the manubrium sterni, and inserted into the oblique line on the outer side of the thyroid cartilage: it is innervated from the ansa hypoglossi.

II. n. The sternothyroid muscle.

sternothyroideus (stér'nō-thi-roi'dē-us), n.; pl. sternothyroidei (-ī). [NL.: see sternothyroid.] The sternothyroid muscle.

sternotracheal (stér'nō-trā'kē-āl), a. and n. [< NL. sternotrachealis, < sternum, q. v., + trachea: see tracheal.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the sternum and the trachea; connecting the breast-bone and the windpipe, as a muscle.

II. n. The sternotrachealis.

sternotrachealis (stér'nō-trā-kē-ā'lis), n.; pl. sternotracheales (-lēz). [NL.: see sternotracheal.] A muscle which in birds passes from the sternum to the trachea or windpipe; one of a pair, or one pair of two pairs, of long slender muscular slips attaching the trachea to the sternum or the clavicle, or both.

sternotribe (stér'nō-trib), a. [< Gr. stērion, the breast, + τρίβειν, rub.] In bot., touching the breast, as of an insect: noting those zygomorphic flowers, especially adapted for cross-fertilization by external aid, in which the stamens and styles are so arranged as to strike the visiting insect on the breast. Compare nototribe, pleurotribe.

Sternoxi (stér-nok'si), n. pl. [NL., irreg. < Gr. stērion, breast, + ὄξις, sharp.] In entom., in Latreille's system, a section of Serricorur, containing two tribes, the buprestids and elaterids, having the prosternum produced in front and pointed behind: distinguished among the serricorn beetles from Malacodermi and Alytrotrogi. It corresponds to the modern families Euprestidae and Elateridae in a broad sense. See cuts under Agrilus, Buprestis, click-beetle, Pyrophorus, and wireworm. Also Sternoxia.

sternoxian (stér-nok'si-an), a. and n. [< Sternoxi + -an.] Same as sternoxine.

sternoxine (stér-nok'sin), a. and n. [< Sternoxi + -ine]. I. a. Pertaining to the Sternoxi, or having their characters.

II. n. A member of the Sternoxi.

stern-port (stérn'pört), n. A port or opening in the stern of a ship.

stern-post (stérn'pöst), n. The principal piece of timber or iron in a vessel's stern-frame. Its lower end is tenoned into or riveted to the keel, and to it the rudder is hung and the transoms are bolted. See cuts under rudder and stern. — Stern-post knee, a large knee which unites the stern-post and the keel. See cut under stern.

stern-sheets (stérn'shêts), n. pl. The space in a boat abaft the thwarts on which the rowers sit.

sternsman (stérnz'man), n. [< stern's, poss. of *stern*², + man]. A steersman; a pilot.

Off from the stern the sternsman dining fell,
And from his shewts flew his soul to hell.
Chapman, Odyssey, xii. 582.

sternson (stérn'son), n. [*Appar. < stern*² + -son as in keelson]. Same as stern-knee.

Sternula (stér'nū-lā), n. [NL. (Boie, 1822), < Sterna + dim. -ula]. The least terns, a genus of Sterninae containing species of the smallest size, with moderately forked tail, a white frontal crescent in the black cap, and the bill yellow tipped with black: of cosmopolitan distribution. S. minuta inhabits Europe, Asia, etc.; S. balaenarum is South African; S. nereis, S. placens, and S. melanacten are Asiatic, East Indian, Australian, and Polyneesian; S. superciliosa is South American. The common bird of the United States and middle America is S. antillarum.

American Least Tern (Sternula antillarum).

larum, which is very abundant along the Atlantic coast. It is 9 inches long and 20 in extent of wings, white with pearly-blue mantle over all the upper parts, a black cap, and the usual white lunule.

sternule (stér'nūl), n. A sea-swallow of the genus Sternula.

sternum (stér'nūm), n.; pl. sterna (-nā) or sternums (-nūnz). [NL., also sternon, < Gr. στέρνον, the breast-bone.] 1. The breast-bone of man and many other vertebrates; a bone or longitudinal series of bones in the middle line of the ventral aspect of the body, chiefly in its thoracic section, completing the thoracic wall by articulation with more or fewer ribs, or elements of the scapular arch, or both: theoretically, in Owen's system, the hemal spines of a series of vertebræ. (a) In man and most mammals the sternum consists of an anterior piece, the "handle," manubrium, or presternum; of several (in man four) segments or sternebrae constituting the body of the sternum, gladiolus, or mesosternum; and of a terminal piece, the xiphoid or ensiform cartilage, or xiphisternum. It articulates in man with the clavicles and with seven costal cartilages. The sternebrae of a mammalian sternum may remain perfectly distinct, or be ankylosed in one. (See cut under mesosternum.) In cetaceans and sirenians the sternum is much reduced, and may be a single bone or quite rudimentary. In the monotrematous mammals a small median bone called proösteon is developed in front of the præsternum. The parts called episternum, omosternum, interclavicle, in the mammals just mentioned, or in various reptiles, or in batrachians, belong rather to the shoulder-girdle. There is no sternum in some reptiles, as serpents. See cuts under Carrilina, Elephantina, interclavicle, omosternum, and skeleton. (b) In birds the sternum is a large single bone without trace of its original composition of several parts, highly specialized in form and function, in relation to the muscular apparatus of the wings, articulating with several ribs, with the coracoids, and sometimes ankylosed with the clavicle; it appears under two principal modifications, known as the carinate and ratite. (See these words.) The carinate sternum normally develops from five ossific centers, having consequently as many separate pieces in early life. The single median ossification, which includes the keel, is the lophosteon; the anterior lateral pieces, a pair, are the pleurostea, which become the costal or costiferous processes; the posterior pair are the metostea. In some birds are additional pieces, a pair of coracostea and a urosteon. The ratite sternum has no median ossification, or lophosteon. The passerine sternum normally develops a prominent forked manubrium. In a few birds, as cranes and swans, the sternum is hollowed out to receive convolutions of the windpipe. See cuts under carinate, Dinornis, and epipleura. (c) In Chelonis, the plastron of a turtle, consisting of several bones, normally nine, one median, and four lateral in pairs. These bones have no homology with the sternum of other vertebrates. See cuts under carapace, plastron, and Chelonis. 2. In arthropods, as insects and crustaceans, a median sternal or ventral sclerite of any somite of the cephalothorax, thorax, or abdomen; a sternite: the opposite of a tergite or notum. In such cases, sternum and sternite are used interchangeably, sternum being seldom used of the series of sternites as a whole. (See cut under cephalothorax.) In insects the three thoracic sterna are specified as prosternum, mesosternum, and metasternum. In Diptera, sternum generally means the mesosternum, as the other thoracic rings do not show a sternal piece. In Coleoptera, sternum is sometimes extended to include the episterna and epimera, or whole lower surface of a thoracic segment. See episternum, 3. — Antennary sternum. See antennary. — Cephalic sternum, in arachnology, the lower part of the head or gula; the central plate on the lower part of the cephalothorax of a spider, between the bases of the legs. — Sternum collare, in entom., the sternal prominence of the prothorax. — Sternum pectorale, in entom., the sternal prominence of the metathorax.

Shoulder-girdle, or Pectoral Arch, and Sternum of a Lizard (Iguana tuberosulata): upper figure, under view; lower figure, side view. sc, scapula; st, suprascapula; mc, mesoscapula; cr, coracoid; pc, pectoral coracoid; mc, mesocoracoid; cc, epicoracoid; cl, clavicle; ul, interclavicle; gl, glenoid; st, sternum; xst, xiphisternum.

sternutation (stér-nū-tā'shūn), n. [< LL. sternutatio (n), a sneezing, < L. sternutare, freq. of sternuere, sneeze]. The act of sneezing. De Quincey, Opium Eater, p. 135.

sternutative (stér-nū-tā-tiv), a. [< L. sternutare, sneeze, + -ive]. Same as sternutative. Bailey, 1731.

sternutativeness (stér-nū-tā-tiv-nes), n. The character of being sternutative. Bailey, 1727.

sternutatory (stér-nū-tā-tō-ri), a. and n. [= F. sternutatoire, < L. sternutare, sneeze; see sternutation]. I. a. Causing or tending to cause sneezing. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 476.

II. n.; pl. sternutatories (-riz). Anything which causes sneezing, as snuff; an emetic.

sternutory (stér-nū-tō-ri), n. An erroneous form of sternutatory. Dunglison.

sternward, sternwards (stérn'wārd, -wārdz), a. and adv. [*< stern*² + -ward, -wards]. Toward the stern.

sternway (stérn'wā), n. The movement of a ship backward, or with her stern foremost. — To fetch sternway. See fetch.

stern-wheeler (stérn'hwē'lér), n. A steam-vessel propelled by one wheel, similar to a side-wheel, mounted astern: used for navigating shallow or narrow waters.

Steropus (stér'ō-pus), n. [NL. (Megerle, 1821), appar. < Gr. στρεπός, solid, + ποιος = E. foot]. A genus of beetles of the family Carabidae, containing about 100 species, widely distributed throughout Europe, northern Africa, Asia, Australia, and both Americas.

sterquilinous (stér-kwi-lí-nus), a. [< L. sterquilinum, sterculinum, stercilinum, sterquilinum, a dunghill or dung-pit, < sterco, dung.] Pertaining to a dunghill; hence, mean; dirty; paltry. Honell, Letters, ii. 48.

sterraster (ste-ras'tér), n. [< Gr. στρεπός, var. of στρεπός, solid, + αστήρ, star.] A form of sponge-spicule characteristic of the family Geodiidae. It is of the polyaxon type, having many rays coalesced for the greater part of their lengths, but ending in separate hooklets.

Sterrastroza (ste-ras-trō'sä), n. pl. [NL.: see sterraster]. In Sollas's classification, a group of choristidan tetractinellid sponges, in which sterrasters are present, usually in addition to simple asters, as in the families Geodiidae and Plecospongiidae: distinguished from Spirastroza and Euaströza.

sterrastrose (ste-ras'trōs), a. [< NL. sterrastrozus, < sterraster, q. v.] Provided with sterrasters, as a sponge; of or pertaining to the Sterrastroza: distinguished from spirastrose.

sterret, n. A Middle English form of *star*¹.

sterrinck (stér'ingk), n. A seal of the genus Stenorhynchus (Ogmorhinus) or of the subfamily Stenorhynchinae: as, the saw-toothed or crab-eating sterrinck, Lobodon carcinophagus.

sterro-metal (stér'ō-met'al), n. An alloy of about three parts of copper with two of zinc, to which a small amount of iron and tin is added. This alloy is not in general use, but is said to be superior to gun-metal in tenacity, while at the same time less expensive. It has been used in Austria for the pumps of hydraulic presses.

stert¹ (stért), v. A dialectal spelling of *start*¹.

stert², n. A Middle English form of *start*².

stertef. [Inf. sterte (n), pret. sterte, pp. stert]. An obsolete preterit of *start*¹.

stertor (stér'tor), n. [< NL. stertor, < L. stertere, snore.] A heavy snoring sound which accompanies inspiration in certain diseases. Compare stertorous.

stertorious (stér-tō'ri-us), a. [< stertor + -i-ous]. Same as stertorous. Poe, Prose Tales, I. 125.

stertoriousness (stér-tō'ri-us-nes), n. Same as stertorousness. Poe, Prose Tales, I. 125.

stertorous (stér'tō-rus), a. [< stertor + -ous]. Characterized by a deep snoring sound, such as characterizes the laborious breathing which frequently accompanies certain diseases, as apoplexy.

stertorously (stér'tō-rus-li), adv. In a stertorous manner.

stertorousness (stér'tō-rus-nes), n. The quality or state of being stertorous.

sterver, v. A Middle English form of starve.

Stesichorean (ste-sik-ō-rō'an), a. [< LL. Stesichoræus, Stesichorius, < Gr. Στεσιχόρειος, Stesichorean, < Στεσιχόρος, Stesichorus (see def.)]. Of or pertaining to the Greek lyric poet Stesichorus (Tisias) of Himera (about 632-550 B. C.), inventor of epodic composition: specifically, in anc. pros., noting (a) a trochaic trimeter of the form — — — | — — — | — — —; (b) an encomiologic verse; (c) a line consisting of two dactylic tetrapodies, the last foot a spondee.

stet (stet). [L., 3d pers. sing. pres. subj. act. of stare, stand; see stand]. Let it (that is, the original) stand: a proof-reader's order to cancel an alteration previously made by him. It is indicated by putting a line of dots under what is crossed out, and writing "stet" in the margin. Abbreviated st.

stet (stet), r. t.; pret. and pp. stetted, ppr. stetting. To mark with the word "stet"; direct or cause to remain, after deletion, as printed; forbear to delete. [Colloq.] stetch (stech), n. A ridge between two furrows, as in plowed land. [Prov. Eng.] stetch (steech), v. t. [< stetch, n.] To form into ridges with a plow: followed by up. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.] stethiæum (steth-i-ē'um), n.; pl. stethiæa (-æ). [NL., < Gr. στήθαιος, of the breast, < στήθος, the breast.] In ornith., the entire anterior half of a bird: opposed to uræum. [Rare.] stethidium (stē-thid'i-um), n.; pl. stethidia (-id). [NL., dim. of Gr. στήθος, the breast.] In entom., the thorax. Illiger.

stethograph (steth'ō-gráf), n. [< Gr. στήθος, the breast, + γράφειν, write.] An instrument for recording the respiratory movements of the thorax. Also called pneumograph.

stethographic (steth'ō-graf'ik), a. [< stethograph + -ic]. Of or pertaining to, or obtained by means of, the stethograph. Nature, XLII. 581.

stethometer (stē-thom'e-tér), n. [< Gr. στήθος, the breast, + μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the respiratory movements of the walls of the chest. In one form a cord or band is extended round the chest, and its extension, as the thorax is expanded, is shown by an index on a dial-plate.

stethoscope (steth'ō-skōp), n. [= F. stéthoscope, < Gr. στήθος, the breast, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An instrument used in auscultation to convey the sounds from the chest or other part of the body to the ear of the observer. — Binaural stethoscope, a stethoscope in which the sound is conducted to both ears. — Differential stethoscope, a double stethoscope having elastic tubular branches and bells which can be applied to different parts of the thorax so as to compare the indications at various points.

Stethoscopes. a, binaural stethoscope.

stethoscope (steth'ō-skōp), v. t.; pret. and pp. stethoscoped, ppr. stethoscoping. [< stethoscope, n.] To examine by means of a stethoscope. Lancet, 1890, II. 1267.

stethoscopic (steth-ō-skop'ik), a. [< stethoscope + -ic.] Of or pertaining to stethoscopy or the stethoscope; obtained by means of the stethoscope.

stethoscopical (steth-ō-skop'i-kal), a. [< stethoscopic + -al.] Same as stethoscopic.

stethoscopically (steth-ō-skop'i-kal-i), adv. In a stethoscopic manner; by means of the stethoscope.

stethoscopist (steth-ō-skō-pist), n. [< stethoscopy + -ist.] One who is versed in the use of the stethoscope.

stethoscopy (steth'ō-skō-pi), n. [< Gr. στῆθος, the breast, + σκοπία, < σκοπεῖν, view.] 1. The examination of the chest.—2. Auscultation with a stethoscope.

stet processus (stet prō-se'sus), [Law L.: L. stet, 3d pers. sing. pres. subj. aet. of stare, stand; processus, process.] In old Eng. law: (a) The termination of a suit at law, upon consent of the parties, by an order of court having the effect of staying permanently all further proceedings. (b) The phrase entered on the record as expressing that order.

stever, v. t. See *steer*³.

stevadore (stē've-dōr), n. [*< Sp. estivador, a wool-packer, hence a stower of wool for exportation, and gen. one who stows a cargo (cf. Sp. estiva = It. stiva = OF. estive, stowage, ballast), < estivar = Pg. estivar = It. stivare, press close, stow (a cargo), < L. stipare, press together; see stive*².] One whose occupation is the stowage of goods, packages, etc., in a ship's hold; one who loads or unloads vessels.

stevan (stev'en), n. [Early mod. E. also stevan; < ME. steven, stevene, steyyn, steyvyn, stefne, stemme, < AS. stefn, stemn = OS. stemna, stemnia = OFries. stemma = MD. stemme, D. stem = MLG. stempe, stemme, LG. stemme = OHG. stinna, stimma, MHG. G. stimme, voice, = Icel. stefna, stemma, direction, summons, = Sw. stämma = Dan. stemme = Goth. sibna, voice; root and connections unknown. Cf. Gr. στόμα, mouth.] 1†. Voice; the voice.

When Little John heard his master speake,
Well knew he it was his steven.
Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne. (Halliwell.)

2†. Speech; speaking; crying out.
Manne, stynte of thy steuen and be stille.
York Plays, p. 363.

3†. That which is uttered; a speech or cry; prayer.

To thee, lady, y make my moone; I praie thee heere my steuen.
Hymans to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 6.

4†. Word; bidding; command; direction.
Thre semely sonnes and a worthy wiffe
I haue ener at my steren to stande.
York Plays, p. 45.

5. One's word or promise; an agreement; an appointment; hence, anything fixed by appointment.

Stephen kept his steuen, and to the time he gave Came to demand what penance he should haue.
Ellis, Spec. of Anc. Poetry, III. 121. (Nares.)

At unset steven, at a time or place not previously specified; without definite appointment.

It is ful fair a man to bere hym evene,
For al day meeteth men at unset stevene.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 666.

To set a steven, to make an agreement; fix an appointed time. [Prov. Eng.]

Hit fil, on a tyde,
That by her bothe assent was set a steven.
Chaucer, Complaint of Mars, l. 52.

stevan (stev'en), v. [< ME. stevenen, < AS. stefnian, call, stemn (= Icel. stefna, stemna, cife, summon), < stefn, stemn, voice; see steven, n.] 1. trans. 1†. To speak; utter; tell of; name.

In Rome V shalle gon steuene
And [an] honyred kyrkes fowrtly and zeuen.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnival), p. 113.

2†. To call; summon; command; appoint.

Lord God! I loue the lastandly,
And highly, botht with harte and hande,
That me, thy poure prophet Hely,
Haue steuened me in this stede to stande.
York Plays, p. 187.

3. To bespeak. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. † intrans. To talk; call out; shout; make a noise.

Ye rebaldis that regnys in this rowte,
3c stynte of youre steuening so stowe.
York Plays, p. 307.

stevened, a. [< late ME. sterynyd, sterynd, sterynyd, also and appar. orig. steyned, steynyd, stened, lit. 'stained,' pp. of steynen, steinen, stain; see stain.] Party-colored. Cath. Ang., p. 363.

Item, a sterynyd clothe, a crucifix. . . . xxl.
Paston Letters, III. 408.

Stevia (stē'vī-ā), n. [NL. (Cavanilles, 1797), named after Estere, a Spanish scientist.] 1. A genus of composite plants, of the tribe Eupatoriaceae and subtribe Agrateae. It is characterized by crowded corymbose or loosely panicle heads with five or six nearly equal involucre bracts, five flowers, appendaged anthers, and a variable pappus of several scales or awns or of both mingled in the same head. Over one hundred species have been described, natives of the warmer parts of America from Buenos Ayres to Mexico, and especially numerous westward; absent in tropical Brazil and nearly so in Galana. They are herbs or shrubs, often somewhat rigid, or rarely diffuse. Their leaves are usually opposite, three-nerved, and serrate, sometimes entire or three-parted. The flowers are white or purplish, forming slender heads. Several species are cultivated as border-plants in Europe. In the United States S. compacta and S. serrata, bearing a profusion of small white fragrant flowers, the latter flowering later, are grown under glass in great quantities for cutting and for winter use in houses. S. serrata and five other species extend within the United States into Arizona or Texas.

2. [r. c.] A plant of this genus.

stew¹ (stū), n. [*< ME. stewe, stuc, stuw, stic, etc., pl. stewes, stucs, stuwes, stywes, stives, stygres, < OF. estuve, estouwe, a heated room, hothouse, bath-room, F. étuve, a vapor-bath, stove, = Sp. Pg. estufa = It. stufa, stove, hothouse, < OHG. stubā, stupā, MHG. stube, a heated room, a bath-room, G. stube, a room or chamber in general, = MLG. stove = MD. stove = AS. stofa, a hothouse, bath-room: see store*¹, the same word in a more orig. form. In defs. 8 and 9 the noun is from the verb.] 1. A heated room, especially such a room for bathing purposes; a hothouse; a stove.

It freshte more strongly in the Contrees than on this hall; and therefore hath the every man Stewes in his Hoos, and in the Stewes thei eten and don here occupations, alle that thei may.
Manderille, Travels, p. 131.

When he came out of his stewe or hayne, he axyd drynke, by the force whereof he was poisoned.
Fabyan, Chron., cxxv.

It [a small artificially warmed room] is used for drying various substances, as plants, extracts, conserves, &c., or for taking vapor baths. In this case the stew or stove is said to be wet or humid; in the opposite case it is said to be dry.
Dunglison, Med. Dict., p. 987.

2. Specifically, a hatters' drying-room. Halliwell.—3†. A room; a chamber; a closet.

Troylus, that stood and myghte it se
Thorghout a litel wyndowe in a stewe,
Ther he bishep, sen mynnyght, was on mewe.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 601.

4. A brothel; a bagnio: often used in the plural, sometimes with the force of a singular noun.

Seuthe . . . wedded on Wanhope, a wenche of the stewes.
Piers Plowman (C), xxiii. 159.

Wommen of the stewes.
Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 34.

5†. A lock hospital. See hospital.

In the borough of Southwark, prior to the time sometimes fixed upon for the origin of syphilis, there were places called stews, where prostitutes were confined and received the benefits of surgical assistance.
S. Cooper, Practice of Surgery (6th ed.), p. 332. (Encyc. Dict.)

6†. A prostitute: sometimes in the plural form with a singular meaning.

And shall Cassandra now be termed, in common speche, a stewes?
G. W'etstone, Promos and Cass, l., iv. 3.

It was so plotted betwixt her husband and Bristol that instead of that beauty he had a notorious stew sent to him.
Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 146.

7†. A close vessel in which something is cooked or stewed; a stew-pot or stew-pan.

I have seen corruption boil and bubble
Till it o'er-run the stew.
Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 321.

8. Food cooked by stewing; especially, meat or fish prepared by slow cooking in a liquid.

The contents of the kettle—a stew of meat and potatoes— . . . had been taken off the fire and turned out into a yellow platter.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 11.

9. A state of agitation or ferment; mental disturbance; worry; fuss. [Colloq.]

And he, though naturally bold and stout,
In short, was in a most tremendous stew.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, l. 104.

Box-stew, an oyster-stew made of box-oysters—that is, of large select oysters.—Irish stew, a dish made of mutton, onions, and potatoes, and sometimes other vegetables, stewed in water mixed with flour, and seasoned with salt and pepper.

stew¹ (stū), v. [*< ME. *stewen, stuen, stuwen, < OP. estuere (*estuere), bathe, stew, F. étuver, stew = Sp. estufar, estufar, estobar = Pg. estufar = It. stufare, stew (cf. D. MLG. LG. stouren (> G. stoven) = Sw. stufa = Dan. sture, stew); from the noun; see stew*¹, n. (cf. *stive*³, a doublet of *stew*¹.)] 1. trans. 1†. To bathe, as in a liquid or a vapor-bath.

Stuwyn or bathyn, or stuy in a stw. Balneo. Prompt. Parv.

2†. Figuratively, to steep.

The Stokes were fitter for him; the most corrupted fellow about the suburbs, his conscience is stew in fribes.
Brome, Sparagus Garden, v. 13.

3. To cook (food) by simmering or slowly boiling; prepare by cooking in a liquid kept at the simmering-point: as, to stew meat or fruit; to stew oysters.

Stuwyn or stuy mete. Stupho. Prompt. Parv.

Stew'd shrimps and Afric cockles shall excite
A jaded drinker's languid appetite.
Francis, tr. of Horace's Satires, li. 4.

Stewed Quaker. See Quaker.

II. intrans. To be cooked by slowly simmering.—To stew in one's own grease. See grease.

stew² (stū), n. [*< ME. stewe, stuc, stiewe, stive = MLG. stouwe, stouwe, stou, stow, a dam, weir, fish-pond; connected with stouwen, dam, hem in, = G. stauen, dam, = MD. stouwen, heap up, collect. Cf. stow*¹.] 1. A pond, usually artificial, used for domestic purposes; especially, a pool or tank in which fish are kept until needed for the table; a vivarium; a stew-pond.

Many a breem and many a luce in stewe.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 350.

At the Priory, a low and moist situation, there were ponds and stews for their fish.
Gilbert White, Antiqu. of Selborne, Letter xxv.

We find vivarium sometimes rendered as "vivary" and at other times as "stew."
Athenaeum, No. 3234, p. 524.

2. A breeding-place for tame pheasants. Encyc. Diet.—3. An artificial bed of oysters: used of the old Roman and also of the modern methods of fattening.

stew³ (stū), n. [< ME. stew (Se. pl. stowys), mist; cf. Dan. stōr, dust, D. stof, dust (stofregen, drizzling rain), G. staub, dust.] Dust; a cloud of dust, smoke, or vapor. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

stew⁴, v. A Middle English variant of *stow*¹.

steward (stū'wārd), n. [*< ME. steward, stewarde, stewart, stewart, steward, stward (also stewart, stuart, as in the surname Stewart, Stuart; AF. estuard), earlier stūward, styward, < AS. stīgweard, later stīweard (> Icel. stívarðr), a steward, < stigi, stigo, a sty, pen for cattle, + weard, a ward; see sty*² and ward. Cf. AS. stīgwiu, stīwita, a steward, < stigu, stigo, a sty, + wita, an officer, adviser.] 1. One who has charge of the household or estate of another; a majordomo; especially, a person employed in a court, household, or important domestic establishment of any kind to superintend financial affairs, as by keeping accounts, collecting rents or other revenue, or disbursing money for household expenses.

This lessoun loke thou nozt for-ȝete:
The steward, controller, and tresurer,
Sittand at de deshe, thou haylse in fere.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 299

The first of them, that eldest was and best,
Of all the house had charge and government,
As Guardian and Steward of the best.
Spenser, F. Q., I. x. 37.

Protector, steward, substitute
Or lowly factor for another's gain.
Shak., Rich. III., iii. 7. 133.

The hedge broke in, the banner blew,
The butler drank, the steward scrawld.
Tennyson, Day-Dream.

2. An officer or retainer appointed to perform duties similar to those mentioned above; especially, a person appointed to provide and distribute food and all the requisites of the table; a purveyor. (a) In some British colleges, one who has charge of the commons. (b) One of a ship's company whose duty it is to distribute provisions to the officers and crew. In passenger-ships he has charge of the table, servants, staterooms, etc., and is called distinctively chief steward, the title steward being also extended to his male helpers—those who wait at table and attend to the staterooms. In a man-of-war the paymaster's steward is now styled paymaster's yeoman (see yeoman); the cabin-steward, ward-room steward, steerage-steward, and warrant-officers' steward are petty officers charged with providing for their several messes and keeping the apartments in order.

3. Figuratively, a manager; especially, one who controls expenditure; a disburser.

A man is but a steward of his owne goods; wherof God one day will demaund an account.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 251.

And what not rare? Luxury being the steward, and the treasure unexhaustible.
Sandys, Trauailes, p. 25.

4. Formerly, in the English gilds, one of the officers in charge of the finances of the society; also, a corresponding functionary in municipal affairs. The title is still given in English towns to magistrates varying in functions, authority, rank, etc. In this latter case it is usually qualified by some limiting word: as, the city steward of York; the land steward of Norwich; the town steward of Northampton; the lord high steward of Gloucester.

That the stewards of every craft that ben contributory shullen be called to the accompt to knowe the charge. English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 385.

5. In the early church, same as economic or economus.—6. A fiscal agent of certain bodies; specifically, in the Methodist Church, an officer having charge of the finances and certain other material interests of the church.—Hospital steward. See hospital.—Lord high steward of England, one of the former great officers of state: his chief functions were at an early date assumed by the justiciar. This office was the inheritance of the Earls of Leicester, till forfeited by Simon de Montfort to Henry III., at the close of whose reign it was abolished as a permanent dignity. A lord high steward is now created only for particular occasions—namely, a coronation or the trial of a peer—the office to cease when the business requiring it is ended. In the former case the lord high steward is commissioned to settle matters of precedence, etc.; in the latter, to preside in the House of Lords.—Lord steward of the household, in England, one of the chief officers of the royal household. He is the head of the court called the Board of Green Cloth, which has the supervision of the household expenses and accounts and their payment, the purveyance of provisions, etc.; but his duties are practically performed by a permanent official called the master of the household. The lord steward is a peer and a member of the ministry.—Steward, or high steward of Scotland, an ancient officer of the crown of the highest dignity and trust. He had not only the administration of the crown revenues, but the chief oversight of all the affairs of the household, and the privilege of the first place in the army, next to the king, in battle.—Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds. See Chiltern Hundreds, under hundred.

steward (stū'ard), v. t. [< steward, n.] To manage as a steward.

Did he thus requite his mother's care in stewarding the estate? Fuller, Holy War, p. 85.

stewardess (stū'ard-des), n. [< steward + -ess.] A female steward; specifically, a woman who waits upon women in passenger-vessels, etc.

My new attendant . . . told me she had formerly been the stewardess of a passenger vessel at the same time that her husband was steward.

Jean Ingelow, Off the Skelligs, vi.

stewardly (stū'ard-li), adv. With or as with the care of a steward; prudently; providently. [Rare.]

It is with a provident deliberation, not a rash and prodigal hand, to be dealt; and to be stewardly dispensed, not wastefully spent.

Tooker, Fabrick of the Church (1604), p. 48. (Latham.) stewardly (stū'ard-li), a. Managing; careful; provident. Hallivell.

stewardry (stū'ard-ri), n. [Also stewardry, q. v.; < steward + -ry.] Stewardship.

stewardship (stū'ard-ship), n. [< ME. steward-shepe; < steward + -ship.] The office or functions of a steward.

He hym gaue, withynne a litill space,
Of all his lande the steward(shepe) to holde,
And full power to reule it as he wold.

Geucrydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1056.

Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward. Luke xvi. 2.

stewart, n. An obsolete spelling of steward.
stewartry (stū'art-ri), n. [Se. var. of stewardry.] 1†. Same as stewardry.

As an human stewartry, or trust,
Of which account is to be giv'n, and just.

Byron, Poetical Version of a Letter.

2. In Scotland, a jurisdiction over a certain extent of territory, very similar to that of a regality; also, the territory over which this jurisdiction extends. Most stewartries consisted of small parcels of land which were only parts of a county; but the stewartry of Kirkcubright (often called distinctively "The Stewartry"), and that of Orkney and Shetland, make counties by themselves.

stewed (stūd), a. [< stew¹ + -ed².] Lodged in or belonging to the stews.

O Aristippus, thou art a greate medler with this woman, being a stewed strumpette.

Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus. (Davies.) steward, n. An old spelling of steward.

steward (stū'ish), n. [< stew¹ + -ish.] Pertaining to or befitting the stews.

Rhymed in rules of stewish ribaldry.

Sp. Hall, Satires, l. ix. 9.

stew-pan (stū'pan), n. A utensil in which anything is stewed.

stew-pond (stū'pond), n. Same as stew².

There is a dovecot, some delightful stew-ponds, and a very pretty canal.

Jane Austen, Sense and Sensibility, xxx.

stew-pot (stū'pot), n. 1. A pot with a cover for making stews, soups, etc.—2. A covered pan used for heating rooms with charcoal. [Prov. Eng.] steyt, steyer, v. and n. Same as sty¹.

steyerer, n. A Middle English form of stair.
stg. An abbreviation of sterling.

sthenia (sthe-nī'ū), n. [NL., < Gr. σθένος, strength.] In pathol., strength; excessive force; opposed to asthenia or debility.

sthenic (sthen'ik), a. [< Gr. σθένος, strength, might, + -ic.] 1. Strong; robust; characterized by power of organization or energy of function, as a part or organ of an animal. See mesogasthenic, microsthenic.—2. In pathol., attended with a morbid increase of vital (especially cardiac) action. Sthenic diseases are opposed to diseases of debility, or asthenic diseases.—3. Exciting; inspiring; said of feeling. [A use introduced by Kant.] sthenochire (sthen'ō-kir), n. [< Gr. σθένος, strength, + χείρ, hand.] An apparatus for exercising and strengthening the hands for pianoforte- or organ-playing.

stiacciato (stiā-chiā'tō), a. [It., crushed, flattened (cf. stiacciato), n., a cake], pp. of stiacciare, crush, press. [In decorative art, in very low relief, as if a bas-relief had been pressed flatter.] stiant, n. A variant of styan for sty³.

stib (stib), n. [Origin obscure.] The American dunlin, pure, or x-bird; a gunners' name. See ent under dunlin. F. C. Browne, 1876. [Massachusetts.] stibble (stib'l), n. A dialectal (Scotch) form of stubble.

stibbler (stib'lər), n. [< stibble + -er¹.] 1. One who goes from ridge to ridge on the harvest-field, and cuts and gathers the handfuls left by the reapers. Janicson. Hence—2. One who has no settled charge, but goes from place to place; often applied humorously to a clerical probationer. Scott, Guy Mannering, xlv. [Scotch in both senses.] stibborne, a. A Middle English spelling of stubborn.

stibial (stib'i-əl), a. [< NL. stibium + -al.] Like or having the qualities of antimony; antimonial.

stibialism (stib'i-əl-izm), n. [< stibial + -ism.] Antimonial intoxication or poisoning. Dunghison.

stibiated (stib'i-ā-ted), a. [< NL. stibium + -at¹ + -ed².] Impregnated with antimony.

stibic (stib'ik), a. [< NL. stibium + -ic.] Same as antimonie.

stibiconite (stib'ik-on-it), n. A hydrous oxid of antimony, of a pale-yellow color, sometimes massive and compact, and also in powder as an incrustation. Also stibite.

stibious (stib'i-us), a. [< NL. stibium + -ous.] Same as antimonious.

stibium (stib'i-um), n. [NL., < L. stibium, also stibi, stibini, < Gr. στίβι, stibium, a sulphuret of antimony. Cf. antimony.] Antimony.

stiblite (stib'lit), n. Same as stibiconite.

stibnite (stib'nit), n. [< NL. stibium + -n- (?) + -ite².] Native antimony trisulphid (Sb₂S₃), a mineral usually occurring in orthorhombic crystals, sometimes of great size, often acicular, and also massive. See ent under arsenifer. The color is lead-gray. Stibnite is sometimes blackish and dull externally, and with an iridescent tarnish, but when fresh it has a very brilliant metallic luster, especially on the surface of perfect cleavage. It is very soft, yielding to the pressure of the nail. This ore is the source of most of the antimony of commerce. Also called antimonite and antimony-glance.

stibogram (stib'ō-gram), n. [< Gr. στίβος, a footprint, + γράμμα, a writing.] A graphic record of footprints.

stiborn, stibourn, a. Middle English forms of stubborn.

stich (stik), n. [< Gr. στίχος, a row, order, line, < στείχειν, go in line or order; see sty¹.] The word occurs in acrostic¹ (for acrostich), distich, etc.] 1. A verse, of whatever measure or number of feet.—2. A line in the Scriptures.—3. A row or rank, as of trees.

sticharion (sti-kā'ri-on), n.; pl. sticharia (-i). [< LGr. στιχάριον.] In the Gr. Ch., a vestment corresponding to the alb of the Western Church. Like the alb, it is a long robe with close sleeves, and formerly was of white linen. At the present day, however, it is often of silk or other rich material, and may be purple in color. It is worn by subdeacons, deacons, priests, and bishops.

stichel (stieh'el), n. [Also stiehall, stieheil; origin obscure.] A term of reproach, applied especially by parents to children. Hallivell. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Barren, stichel! that shall not serve thy turn.

Lady Alimony, l. 4 b.

sticher (stieh'ēr), v. i. [Assibilated freq. of stick¹.] To catch eels in a particular way. See quotation under sticherer.

"Stichering," a Hampshire method [of catching eels], is perhaps one of the most amusing.

Pop. Sci. Mo., XXIX. 259.

sticherer (stieh'ēr-ēr), n. [< sticher + -er¹.] One who stiches.

To the wide, deep drains used for irrigation eels abound, and the object of the sticherer is to thrust the sickle under the eel's body, and, with a sudden hoist, to land him on the bank, from which he is transferred to the bag.

Pop. Sci. Mo., XXIX. 259.

sticheron (sti-kē'ron), n.; pl. stichera (-ri). [< MGr. στιχηρόν (sc. τροπάριον), neut. of στιχηρός, pertaining to a versicle, < Gr. στίχος, a verse, versicle.] In the Gr. Ch., a troparion, or one of several troparia, following the psalms and intermingled with stichoi. See stichos.

stichic (stik'ik), a. [< Gr. στίχος, of lines or verses, < στίχος, a row, line; see stich.] Pertaining to a verse or line; consisting of verses or lines; linear; specifically, in anc. pros., composed of lines of the same metrical form throughout; opposed to systematic.

The stichic portions of the cantica of Terence are divided into strophes. Amer. Jour. Philol., VII. 399.

stichid (stik'id), n. [< stichidium, q. v.] In bot., same as stichidium.

stichidium (sti-kid'i-nm), n.; pl. stichidia (-i). [NL., < Gr. στίχος, a row, line, + dim. -idium.] In bot., a peculiarly modified branch of the thallus in some algae, which serves as a receptacle for the tetraspores. See ent under Algae. Furlow, Marine Algæ, p. 165.

stichomancy (stik'ō-man-si), n. [< Gr. στίχος, a row, line, + μαντεία, divination.] Divination by lines or passages in books taken at hazard; bibliomancy.

stichometric (stik'ō-met'rik), a. [< stichometry + -ic.] Same as stichometrical. J. R. Harris, Jour. of Philol., No. 15, p. 310.

stichometrical (stik'ō-met'ri-kəl), a. [< stichometric + -al.] Of or pertaining to stichometry; characterized by measurement by stichs or lines; stating the number of lines.

Quite lately Mommsen has published . . . a previously unknown stichometrical catalogue of the books of the Bible, and also of the writings of Cyprian.

Salmson, Int. to the New Testament, p. 559, note.

stichometry (stik'ō-mē'tri), n. [< Gr. στίχος, a row, line, verse, + -μετρία, μέτρον, a measure.] In paleog., measurement of manuscripts by lines of fixed or average length; also, an edition or a list containing or stating such measurement.

It ["The Assumption of Moses"] is included in the stichometry of Nicephorus, who assigns it the same length . . . as the Apocalypse of St. John.

Salmson, Int. to the New Testament, p. 526.

stichomythia (stik'ō-mith'i-ī), n. [< Gr. στιχομυθία, dialogue in alternate lines, < στιχομυθεῖν, answer one another line by line; see stich and myth.] In anc. Gr. drama and bucolic poetry, dialogue in alternate lines, or pairs or groups of lines; also, arrangement of lines in this manner. Usually in such dialogue one speaker opposes or corrects the other, often with partial repetition or imitation of his words. Also stichomythy.

The speeches of this play are of inordinate length, though stichomythia in the Greek antithetical manner is also introduced. A. W. Ward, Eng. Dram. Lit., l. 118.

stichos (stik'os), n.; pl. stichoi (-oi). [< Gr. στίχος, a row, line, verse.] 1. In paleog., a line of average length assumed in measuring the length of a manuscript. See epos, 3, and stichometry.—2. In the Gr. Ch., a verse or versicle, as in the psalter or the odes; especially, a verse or part of a verse from a psalm, used as a versicle.

stichwort, n. See stichwort.

stick¹ (stik), v.: pret. and pp. stuck, ppr. sticking. [A verb confused in form and meanings with stick², stick¹ being more prop. stick (as in dial. uses) or steak* (after the analogy of break, speak, etc.); E. dial. stick, Se. stiek, etc.: < ME. stiken, prop. steken (pret. stak, pp. steken, i-steken, y-stekē, stiken, stoken); also, by conformity with stick², pret. stiked, sūked, pp. stiked], < AS. stecan* (pret. stave*, pp. stecen*), pierce, stab, = OE. stekan (pret. stak) = OFries. steka = MD. D. steken = MLG. LG. steken = OHG. stechan, stehhan, MHG. G. stechen (pret. stach, pp. gestochen), pierce: not found in Scand. or Goth. (the Goth. form would be stikan*; cf. Goth. staks, a mark, stigma, stiks, a point, a moment of time): Teut. \sqrt{stik} = L. \sqrt{stig} (in instigare, prick, instigate, stinguere* (in comp. distinguere, distinguish, extinguere, extinguish), stimulus, a prick, goad, stilus, a point, style, etc.) = Gr. $\sigma\tau\epsilon\iota$ (in στειναι, prick, στύβω, a prick, mark, spot) = Skt. \sqrt{tij} for stij*, be sharp. From this root are ult. E. stick², stick³, stitch, steak, sting, etc., and, through OF., ticket, etiquette (from a collateral Teut. root, *stake*¹, *stock*¹, *stany*¹, *stoke*², stoker, etc.); from the L. root are ult. E. *style*¹, distinguish, extinguish, distinct, extinct, instinct, stimulate, stimulus, instigate, prestige, etc. The verb *stick*¹, pierce, has been confused, partly in ME. and completely in mod. E., with its derivative *stick*². The reg. mod. pret. of *stick*¹ would be stake* or stake* (as in ME.), but the pret. has yielded to the influence of the pp., and, becoming stoke*, appears in mod. E. with shortened vowel stuck, as also in the pp. (cf. break, pret. broke, now broke, pp. broken; speak, pret. spake, now spoke, pp. spoken—verbs phonetically parallel to *stick*¹.) I. trans. 1. To pierce or puncture with a pointed instrument, as a dagger, sword, or pin; pierce; stab.

The sowdan and the Cristen everichone
Ben al tohewe [hewed] and stiked at the bord.
Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale, l. 332.

He drew his shining blade,
Thinking to stick her where she stood.
Clerk Colvill; or, The Mermaid (Child's Ballads, I. 194).

A villain fittor to stick swine
Than ride abroad redressing women's wrong.
Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette.

2. To push, thrust, or drive the point or end of, as into something which one seeks to pierce, or into a socket or other receptacle; place and fix by thrusting into something.

A broche golde and aspre,
In whiche a ruby set was lik an herte,
Cryseyde hym gaf, and stak it on his sherte.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1372.

The Israelites . . . neither prayed to him, neither kissed his bones, nor offered, nor sticked up candles before him.
Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 123.

I would not see . . . thy fierce sister
In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs.
Shak., Lear, iii. 7. 58.

3. To thrust; cause to penetrate or enter in any way; loosely, to thrust or put (something) where it will remain, without any idea of penetration.

Byndez byhynde, at his bak, bothe two his handez, . . .
Stik hym stily in stokez.
Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 157.

A lean old gentleman . . . stuck his head out of the window.
J. S. Le Fanu, Dragon Volant, i.

Behind the said ear was stuck a fresh rose.
Kingsley, Westward Ho, ii.

4. To insert in something punctured: as, to stick card-teeth; hence, to set with something pointed or with what is stuck in: as, to stick a cushion full of pins.

The chamber dore stokes the vasher theene
With preket (candles) and torches (torches) that conne brenne.
Babes Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 315.

Biron. A lemon.
Long. Stuck with cloves. Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 654.

5. To thrust or fix upon something pointed: as, to stick a potato on a fork.

Their heads were stuck upon spears.
Burke, Rev. in France.

6. In carp., to run or strike (a molding) with a molding-plane.—7†. To close; shut; shut up. See steck.

When the kyng had consaynit Cassandras noise,
He comandet hir be caght, & closet full hard:
In a stithe house of stou stake hir vp fast.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7191.

Stick a pin there, make a note of that; take heed of that. [Colloq.]—To stick off, to set off; adorn. Compare the phrase and quotation under II.

The humble variety whereof [of the Torch-bearers' habits] stucke off the more ample the maskers high beauties, shining in the habits of themselves.
Chapman, Masque of the Middle Temple.

To stick out, to cause to project; protrude.—To stick pigs, to hunt wild hogs with the spear, the hunter being mounted, especially in British India. [Colloq.]

II. intrans. 1. To be fastened or fixed by or as by piercing or by insertion; remain where thrust in: as, the arrow sticks in the target.

Therein stiked a lily flour. Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 196.

Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 317.

2. To be thrust; extend or protrude in any direction.

She espied his cloven foot.
From his gay robes sticking thro'.
The Demon Lover (Child's Ballads, I. 303).

To stick off, to appear to advantage; show off; make a display.

I'll be your foil, Laertes; in mine ignorance
Your skill shall, like a star i' the darkest night, Stick fiery off indeed. Shak., Hamlet, v. 2. 268.

To stick out, to project; be prominent.

One hair a little here sticks out, forsooth.
B. Jonson, Volpone, iii. 2.

To stick up, to stand up; be erect. [Colloq.]—To stick up for, to espouse or maintain the cause of; speak or act in defense of; defend: as, to stick up for an absent friend; to stick up for the truth or one's rights. [Colloq.]

Heard him abuse you to Ringwood. Ringwood stuck up for you and for your poor governor—spoke up like a man—like a man who sticks up for the fewer who is down.
Thackeray, Philip, xl.

To stick up to. Same as to stand up to (which see, under stand). [Colloq.]

No matter how excellent may be the original disposition of the head boy, if there is no one who dare stick up to him, he soon becomes intolerable.
Contemporary Rev., LV. 173.

stick¹ (stik), n. [*< stick*¹, v.] A thrust with a pointed instrument which pierces, or is intended to pierce.

stick² (stik), v.; pret. and pp. stuck (formerly sticked), ppr. sticking. [< ME. sticken, stikken, stykken, stiken, styken, steken, stikien, stykien, stekien (pret. stikede, etc.); also, by conformity with *stick*¹, pret. stak, pp. steken, stoken], be fastened, adhere, also fasten, < AS. stician (pret. sticode) (= MLG. steken), pierce, stab, intr. cleave, adhere, stick; a weak form, parallel with an unrecorded form to be assumed as the cognate of the LG., etc., weak verb, namely AS. steccan* = MD. stecken = MLG. LG. stecken = OHG. steccen, MHG. G. stecken (pret. steckte); also, by conformity with stehen, pret. stuck], stick, set, stick fast, remain, = Sw. sticka = Dan. stikke, stab, sting (these appar. due in part to the LG. forms cognate with *stick*¹); not found in Goth., where the form would be stakjan*, standing for staijan* = AS. as if stæcan*, etc., a secondary form from the root stik*, or else directly from the root stak*, a collateral form of the root stik*: see *stick*¹, and cf. *stick*³. The forms and senses of the primitive and derivative verbs become confused, and cannot now be wholly separated; in most dictionaries the two verbs are completely merged. Under *stick*² are put all uses of the verb so spelled not clearly belonging originally to *stick*¹ or *stick*³. The proper pret. of *stick*² is sticked; this has been superseded by stuck, or dial. stack (ME. stak), which prop. belongs only to *stick*¹.] I. trans. 1. To pierce; stab. See *stick*¹.—2. To fasten or attach by causing to adhere: as, to stick a postage-stamp on a letter.

Twenty ballads stuck about the wall.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 65.

You should be on the look-out when Debarry's side have stuck up fresh bills, and go and paste yours over them.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xxviii.

3. To cause to come to a stand; puzzle; pose. [Slang.]—4. To impose upon; cheat; chouse. [Slang.]

The pawnbrokers have been so often stuck . . . with inferior instruments that it is difficult to pledge even a really good violin.
Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 18.

The second purchaser found a customer willing to give ten francs for it, but the latter's family so ridiculed him for having been stuck on the canvas that he put it away out of sight in his garret.
The American, XIII. 14.

5. To beat, as at a game of cards; with for before the penalty or stake: as, to stick one for the drinks at poker. [Slang.]—To be stuck on, to be greatly taken with; be enamored of. [Slang, U. S.]—To be stuck up, to be proud or conceited. [Colloq.]—To stick one's self up, to exalt or display one's self; assert one's self. [Colloq.]—To stick up, to plunder; waylay and rob: as, to stick up a mail-coach; to stick up a bank. [Bush-rangers' slang, Australia.]

Having attacked, or, in Australian phrase, stuck up the station, and made prisoners of all the inmates.
Leisure Hour, March, 1885, p. 192. (Encyc. Diet.)

II. intrans. 1. To cleave as by attraction or adhesion; adhere closely or tenaciously.

She nadde on but a streit olde sak,
And many a cloute on it ther stak.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 458.

The gray hairs yet stak to the heft.
Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

And on thy ribs the limpet sticks.
Tennyson, The Sailor-Boy.

2. To remain where placed; held fast: adhere; cling; abide.

A horn devil, on whose nature
Nurture can never stick. Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 189.

Now began an ill name to stick upon the Bishops of Rome and Alexandria. Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

But finding that they [doubts] still stuck with his followers, he took the last and best way of satisfying them.
Ep. Atterbury, Sermons, II. ii.

"We may teach you to ride by-and-by, I see; I thought not to see you stick on so long—" "I should have stuck on much longer, sir, if her sides had not been wet."
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xi.

3. To hold or cling in friendship and affection.

There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.
Prov. xviii. 24.

Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
Sticking together in calamity.

Shak., K. John, iii. 4. 67.

4. To be hindered from proceeding or advancing; be restrained from moving onward or from acting; be arrested in a course, career, or progress; be checked or arrested; stop.

And zit in my synne y stonde and sticke,
Yuel custum ys ful hard to blyne.

Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 197.

I had most need of blessing, and "Amen"
Stuck in my throat. Shak., Macbeth, li. 2. 33.

We stuck upon a sand bank so fast that it was after sunset before we could get off.

Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 93.

5. To be embarrassed or puzzled; be brought to a standstill, as by being unable to interpret or remember the words one is attempting to read or recite.

They will stick a long time at a part of a demonstration, not for want of will and application, but really for want of perceiving the connection of two ideas.

Locke, Conduct of the Understanding, § 6.

Some of the young chaps stick in their parts. They get the stage-fever and knocking in the knees.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, III. 142.

6. To scruple; hesitate: with at.

I . . . desired his opinion of it, and in particular touching the paucity of Auditors, whereto I formerly sticked, as you may remember.

Thomas Adams, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 143.

To serve him I should, I think, stick at nothing.
Pepys, Diary, IV. 141.

To stick at it, to persevere. [Colloq.]—To stick by. (a) To adhere closely to; be constant or faithful to.

For, of so many thousands that were vnder mine empire, you only have followed and sticked by me.
J. Brende, tr. of Quintus Curtius, v.

(b) To remain with; abide in the memory or possession of: as, ill-gotten gains never stick by a man.

Nothing sticks faster by vs, as appears,
Then that which we learne in our tender yeeres.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 197.

To stick in one's gizzard. See gizzard.—To stick in or to one's fingers, to remain unlawfully in one's hands.

He was—if half Leicester's accusations are to be believed—a most infamous peculator. One-third of the money sent by the Queen for the soldiers stuck in his fingers.
Motley, Hist. United Netherlands, II. 87.

To stick out, to refuse to comply or come to terms; hold out or hold back: as, to stick out for a better price.—To stick to, to abide firmly and faithfully by; hold fast to: as, to stick to a resolution.

stick² (stik), n. [*< stick*², v.] 1. An adhesion, as by attraction or viscosity.

A magnetic stick between the wheels and the rails, which largely augments the amount of traction.
Elect. Rev. (Amer.), XVII. 194.

2. Hesitation; demur; a stop; a standstill.

When he came to the Hill Difficulty, he made no stick at that, nor did he much fear the lions.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, Sixth Stage.

3. A strike among workmen. Hallucell. [Prov. Eng.]

stick³ (stik), n. [< ME. sticke, stikke, < AS. sticca, a stick, peg, nail, = MD. stick, steck, MLG. sticke, LG. stikke = OHG. stiecho, stecco, stecho (> It. stecco, thorn, stecca, staff, F. étiquette, ticket, etc.), MHG. stecke, steche, G. stecken, a stick; cf. Icel. stika, stick (for fuel), a stick (yard-measure): so called as having orig. a sharp point; from the root of *stick*¹ (AS. steccan*, etc.); see *stick*¹, *stick*², and cf. stake, steak, stitch, *stickle*¹, etiquette, ticket, etc.; also *stock*¹, etc.] 1. A piece of wood, generally rather long and slender; a branch of a tree or shrub cut or broken off; also, a piece of wood chopped or cut for burning or other use: often used figuratively.

Of all towne, castels, fortes, bridges, and habitations, they left not any stick standing.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

Wither'd sticks to gather, which might serve Against a winter's day. Milton, P. R., i. 316.

Come, hostess, lay a few more sticks on the fire. And now, sing when you will.

I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 174.

2. A cudgel; a rod; a wand; especially, a walking-stick or cane.

Al-though thou stryke me with thi staffe, with stikke or with zerde.
Piers Plowman (B), xii. 14.

Your old friend Mr. Burchell, walking . . . with the great stick for which we used so much to ridicule him!

Goldsmith, Vicar. xxx.

Stick is a large genus, running up from switch to cudgel, from rod to bludgeon.
De Quincey, Homer, ii.

3. Anything in the form of a stick, or somewhat long and slender: as, a stick of candy; a stick of sealing-wax; one of the sticks of a fan, whether of wood, metal, or other material.

A painted Landskip Fann, cutt, gilded Sticks.

Quoted in Ashton's Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, [I. 176.]

4. Specifically—(a) The wand or baton with which a musical conductor directs a chorus or orchestra. (b) The wooden rod or back of a bow for playing on a musical instrument of the viol class. (c) The wooden rod or wand, with a rounded or padded head, with which a drum or similar musical instrument is beaten and sounded; a drumstick.—5. In printing: (a) A composing-stick. (b) A piece of furniture used to lock up a form in a chase or galley. It is called, according to the place it occupies, head-stick, foot-stick, side-stick, or gutter-stick.—6. The rod which is carried by the head of a rocket, and serves to direct its flight.

And the final event to himself [Mr. Burke] has been that, as he rose like a rocket, he fell like the stick.

T. Paine, Letter to the Addressers.

7. A timber-tree. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.]—8. Naut., a mast; as, the gale was enough to blow the sticks out of her. [Humorous.]—9. That which is strung on a stick; a string; as, a stick of herring.—10. The number of twenty-five eels, or the tenth part of a bind, according to the old statute de ponderibus. Also called strike.—11. A stick-insect. See stick-bug and walking-stick.—12. A person who is stiff and awkward in bearing; hence, a stupid, incapable, or incompetent person. [Colloq.]

I was surprised to see Sir Henry such a stick. Luckily the strength of the piece did not depend upon him.

Jane Austen, Mansfield Park, xiii.

About the poorest stick for a legislator ever elected.

New York Tribune, Sept. 4, 1855.

As cross as two sticks. See cross.—Devil on two sticks. See devil.—In a cleft stick. See cleft.—Long stick. In measuring British muslins, long stick is the yard-measure of 36 inches and a thumb, equivalent to 37 inches. It is used to measure goods for the home market. Goods for the foreign market are measured by short stick, in which the yard consists of 35 inches and a thumb, or about 36 inches.—Middle stick, a measure containing 35½ inches and a thumb to the yard, or about 36½ inches.—Stick and stone, the whole; everything; as, to leave neither stick nor stone standing. Compare stock and block, under stock.

And this it was she swore, never to marry
But such a one whose mighty arm could carry . . .
Her bodily away through stick and stone.

Beau, and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, ii. 1.

To beat all to sticks, to outdo completely. [Colloq., Eng.]

Many ladies in Strasburg were beautiful, still
They were beat all to sticks by the lovely Odille.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 239.

To cut one's stick. See cut.—To go to sticks and ataves, to go to pieces; fall into ruin: in allusion to a tub with broken hoops.

She married a Highland drover or tacksman, I can't tell which, and they went all to sticks and staves.

Miss Ferrier, Inheritance, I. 95. (Jamieson.)

=Syn. 2. See staff.

stick³ (stik), r. l. [< stick³, n.] 1. To furnish or set with sticks, as for climbing upon: said of peas.

But I . . . must . . . go stick some rows of peas which are already flourishing in our new garden.

Carlyle, in Froude, First Forty Years, xxiv.

I was sticking peas in my own garden.

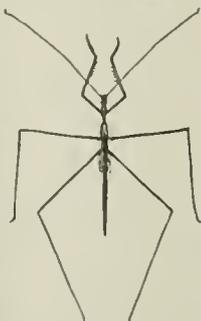

Jean Ingelour, Fated to be Free, vi.

2. In printing, to arrange in a composing-stick; compose: as, to stick type.

stickadore, stickadoret (stik'a-dôr, -dov), n. [Also stickadoue, stickadouc, stickado, steckado, stieados; < F. stéchados (Cotgrave), for corrupt forms of NL. stæchados, stos stæchados, flower of Stæchas: stæchados, gen. of Stæchas, q. v.] A species of lavender, Lavandula Stæchas, used officinally. See lavender.

stick-bait (stik'bât), n. Insects or worms found sticking to the under surface of stones, and used as bait. [North Carolina.]

stick-bug (stik'bug), n. 1. Any orthopterous insect of the family Phasmidæ: particularly applied to Diapheromera femorata, the commonest insect of this kind in the United States, where it is also called wood-horse, stick-insect, twig-bug, twig-insect, walking-twig, walking-stick, prairie-alligator, specter, and devil's horse. See cut under Phasma. [Local, U. S.]—2. A predaceous reduvioid bug of the United States, Emesa longipes, with a long slender brown body and long spider-like legs, the front pair of which are raptorial; the spider-bug. When lodged on a Stick-bug (Emesa longipes).

twig, it awings its body back and forth like some of the daddy-long-legs. This insect resembles some of the Phasmidæ, which receive the same name, but belongs to a different order.

stick-culture (stik'kul'tür), n. A bacterial culture made by thrusting a platinum needle (sterilized and then dipped into a growth of the microbe or other material to be examined) into the culture-medium, as a tube of gelatin.

sticked†. An obsolete past participle of stick.
sticker¹ (stik'ér), n. [< stick¹ + -er¹.] 1. One who or that which sticks or stabs; especially, one who kills swine or other animals by sticking or stabbing.

Master Bardell the pig-butcher, and his foreman, or, as he was more commonly called, Sam the Sticker Hood, sketches on the Road, The Sudden Death.

2. An anglers' gaff. [Slang.]—3. A sharp remark or an embarrassing question, intended or adapted to silence or to cause a person. Thackeray.
sticker² (stik'ér), n. [< stick² + -er¹.] 1. One who adheres, clings, or sticks to anything.

Although culture makes us fond stickers to no machinery, not even our own. M. Arnold, Culture and Anarchy, Pref.

2. One who sticks, or causes to adhere, as by pasting.

The bill-sticker, whose large flat basket, stuffed with placards, leaned near him against the settle.

George Eliot, Felix Holt, xxviii.

3. Same as paster, 2.—4. An article of merchandise which sticks by the dealer and does not meet with a ready sale. [U. S.]—5. In organ-building, a wooden rod serving to transmit motion between the ends of two reciprocating levers. Stickers are usually held in place by pins in their ends, which work freely in holes or slots in the lever-ends. See cut under organ.

6. pl. The arms of a crank-axis employed to change the plane and direction of a reciprocating motion. For distinction the arms are thus named when they act by compression, and are called trackers when they act by tension. The axis is termed a roller.

stickful (stik'fûl), n. [< stick³ + -ful.] In printing, as much composed type as can be contained in a composing-stick.

stick-handle (stik'hân'dl), n. The handle of a walking-stick. See canel.

stick-helmet (stik'hel'met), n. A mask with additional guards for the forehead and head, used in cudgel-play.

stickiness (stik'i-nes), n. The property of being sticky, adhesive, or tenacious; viscousness; glutinousness.

sticking¹ (stik'ing), n. [Verbal n. of stick¹, r.] The act of stabbing or piercing. (a) The act of thrusting a knife or spear into the neck or body of a beast. Hence—(b) pl. The part of a beast's neck where it is stabbed by the butcher; a coarse and cheap cut of beef or pork.

The meat is bought in "pieces," of the same part as the sausage-makers purchase—the stickings—at about 3d. the pound.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 196.

(c) Sticking; needlework. [Scotch, in the form steeking.]

The cloth of it was satin fine,

And the steeking silken work.

The Jolly Goshawk (Child's Ballads, III. 283).

sticking² (stik'ing), n. [Verbal n. of stick², v.] 1. The act of coming to a stop. Compare sticking-place.

All stickings and hesitations seem stupid and stony.

Donne, Letters, iv.

Specifically—2. pl. The last of a cow's milk; strippings. [Prov. Eng.]

sticking-place (stik'ing-pläs), n. The point where anything sticks, stays, or stops; a place of stay.

Which flower out of my hand shall never passe,
But in my heart shall have a sticking-place.

Gorgeous Gallery of Gallant Inventions (1578), quoted in [Furness's Variorum Shakespeare, Macbeth.

But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we'll not fail. Shak., Macbeth, i. 7. 60.

sticking-plaster (stik'ing-pläs'tèr), n. 1. Same as resin plaster (which see, under plaster).—2. Court-plaster.

In the reign of Charles I., . . . suns, moons, stars, and even coaches and four were cut of sticking plaster, and stuck on the face.

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 169.

sticking-point (stik'ing-point), n. Same as sticking-place.

One sight of thee would nerve me to the sticking-point.

Disraeli, Alroy, i. 2.

stick-insect (stik'in'sekt), n. Same as stick-bug, 1. See walking-stick.

stick-in-the-mud (stik'in-thê-mud'), n. An old fogy; a slow or insignificant person. [Colloq.]

This rusty-colored one [a pin] is that respectable old stick-in-the-mud, Nicias.

T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, I. x.

stickit (stik'it), p. a. [See form of sticked, pp. of stick² (and stick¹).] Stuck. [Scotch.]—Stickit minister, in Scotland, a student of theology who fails to obtain license, or a licentiate who fails to obtain a pastoral charge.

He became totally incapable of proceeding in his intended discourse . . . stut the Bible—stumbled down the pulpit-stairs, trampling upon the old women who generally take their station there—and was ever after designated as a stickit minister. Scott, Guy Mannering, ii.

stick-lac (stik'lak), n. See lac², 1.

stickle¹ (stik'l), n. [*< ME. *stikel, stykyll (in comp.), < AS. sticel (also, with diff. formative, sticels), a prickle, sting, = MD. stekel, later sticel, D. stekel = LG. stikkel (in comp.), also stikke = OHG. stichil, MHG. stichel, G. dial. sticel, a prickle, sting, = Icel. stikill, the pointed end of a horn, = Norw. stikel, a prickle (cf. MD. stacel, OHG. stachulla, stacchulla, stachilla, stachila, MHG. G. stachel, a thorn, prickle, sting); akin to sticca, etc., a (pointed) stick (see stick²), < stecan*, pierce, prick, stick: see stick¹.] A sharp point; a prickle; a spine. [Obsolete, except in stickleback, stickle-haired, stickly, and the local name Pike of Stickle, one of the two Pikes of Langdale in England.]

stickle² (stik'l), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also stikle; < ME. stikel, < AS. sticol, sticel, steep, high, inaccessible, < stecan*, pierce, prick, stick: see stick¹.] I. a. 1. Steep; high; inaccessible.—2. High, as the water of a river; swollen; sweeping; rapid.

When they came thither, the river of the Shenin, which inuironeth and runeth round about the cite, they found the same to be so deepe and stikle that they could not passe over the same. Giraldus Cambrensis, Conq. of Ireland, [p. 37 (Hollinshed's Chron., I.).

II. n. 1. A shallow in a river where the water, being confined, runs with violence.

Patient anglers standing all the day
Near to some shallow stickle or deepe bay.
W. Browne, Britannia's Pastoral, ii. 4.

2. A current below a waterfall.

The water runs down with a strong, sharp stickle, and then has a sudden elbow in it, where the small brook trickles in.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, vii.

[Prov. Eng. in all uses.]

stickle³ (stik'l), r.; pret. and pp. stickled, ppr. stickling. [A mod. var. of stightle, which also appears with a reg. change of the orig. guttural gh to f) as stiffle: see stightle. In defs. II., 2, 3, the sense has been influenced by association with stick².] I. † trans. To interpose in and put a stop to; mediate between; pacify.

They ran unto him, and pulling him back, then too feeble for them, by force stickled that unatural fray.

Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, i.

II. intrans. 1†. To interpose between combatants and separate them; mediate; arbitrate.

There had been blood shed if I had not stickled.
W. Cartwright, The Ordinary (Hazlitt's Dodsley, XII. 275).

2. To take part with one side or the other; uphold one party to a dispute.

Fortune (as she's wont) turn'd fickle,
And for the foe began to stickle.

S. Butler, Hudibras, I. iii. 516.

You, Bellmour, are bound in Gratitude to stickle for him; you with Pleasure reap that Fruit which he takes pains to sow.

Congreve, Old Batchelor, I. 4.

3. To contest or contend pertinaciously on insignificant grounds; insist upon some trifle.

I hear no news about your bishops, farther than that the lord lieutenant stickles to have them of Ireland.

Swift, Letter, May 13, 1727.

4. To hesitate.

Some . . . stickle not to aver that you are cater-cousin with Beelzebub himself.

Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 122.

5. To play fast and loose; waver from one side to the other; trim.

stickleback (stik'l-bak), n. [Also corruptly sticklebag, and metamorphosed tittlebat; < ME. stikelbak*, stykybak; < stickle¹ + back¹. Cf. thornback, and see stickling.] Any fish of the family Gasterosteidae: so called from the sharp

Two-spined Stickleback (Gasterosteus aculeatus). (From Report of U. S. Fish Commission.)

spines of the back. They are small fishes, a few inches long, of 5 genera, Gasterosteus, Pygosteus, Eucalia, Apeltes, and Spinachia, but very pugnacious and rapacious, being especially destructive to the spawn and fry of many larger fishes. They inhabit fresh waters and sea-arms of northern Europe, Asia, and North America to the number of nearly 20 species. The common two- or three-spined stickleback, banstickle, burnstickle, or tittebat, is G. aculeatus, 4 inches long. Another is the nine- or ten-spined, Pygosteus pungitius. The fifteen-spined stickleback, or sea-stickleback, is Spinachia vulgaris, of the northern coasts of Europe, a marine species, from 5 to 7 inches long, of very slender elongate form, with a tubular snout. They are among the most characteristic fishes of the northern hemisphere in the colder regions. Except in the breeding-season, they live in shoals, and are sometimes numerous enough to become of commercial value for their oil or for manure. They are noted for the construction of elaborate nests which the male builds for the eggs, in which several females often or generally deposit their burden. The eggs are comparatively few, and while being hatched are assiduously guarded by the male. The local or popular synonyms of the sticklebacks are numerous, among them prickleback, spickleback, stickling, and sharking.

Nest of Stickleback.

sticklebag (stik'l-bag), n. A corruption of stickleback. J. Walton, Complete Angler, i. 5. stickle-haired (stik'l-hård), a. Having a rough or shaggy coat; rough-haired.

Those [dogs] that serve for that purpose are stickle-haired, and not unlike the Irish grayhounds.
Sandys, Travails, p. 60.

stickler (stik'lër), n. [An altered form of stichtler, stichtler*, after stickle for stichtle: see *stickle*³, stichtle.] 1. An attendant on or a judge of a contest, as a duel; a second; hence, an arbitrator; a peacemaker.

The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,
And, stickler-like, the armies separates.
Shak., T. and C., v. 8. 13.

Buriasso, a stickler or judge of any combatants, such a one as brings into the lists such as shall fight a combat, or run at tilt.
Florio, 1598.

Hee is a great stickler in the tumults of double lugges, and venter his head by his Place, which is broke many times to keep whole the peace.
Ep. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Constable.

2. An obstinate contender about anything, often about a thing of little consequence: as, a stickler for ceremony; an advocate; a partizan.

He was one of the delegates (together with Dr. Dale, &c.) for the Tryall of Mary Queen of Scots, and was a great stickler for the saving of her life.
Aubrey, Lives (William Aubrey).

stickling (stik'ling), n. [Early mod. E. also stykelyng; < ME. stikeling, stykelynge, stykelyng; < *stickle*¹ + -ing. Cf. stickleback.] A fish: same as stickleback.

stickly (stik'li), a. [< *stickle*¹ + -y.] Prickly; rough. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

stick-play (stik'plā), n. Same as cudgel-play or single-stick.

stick-pot (stik'pot), n. A lath-pot for taking lobsters: the common form of lobster-trap, semicylindrical or rectangular in shape, and constructed of laths or of any narrow strips of wood.

Other names by which they are known to the fishermen are "box-traps," "house-pots," "stick-pots," and "lath-coops."
Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 666.

stickseed (stik'söd), n. A plant of the genus Echinosperrum, of the borage family. The genus consists of rather slender rough weeds whose seeds bear on the margin from one to three rows of barbed prickles, by which they adhere to clothing, etc. E. Virginicum, the beggar's-lice, is a leading American species.

sticktail (stik'täl), n. The ruddy duck, Erisimatura rubida. See cut under Erisimatura. J. P. Girault, 1844. [Long Island.]

sticktight (stik'tit), n. A composite weed, Bidens frondosa, whose flat achenia bear two barbed awns; also, one of the seeds. The name is doubtless applied to other plants with adhesive seeds. Compare beggar's-ticks, beggar's-lice.

sticky¹ (stik'i), a. [< *stick*² + -y.] 1. Having the property of adhering to a surface; inclining to stick; adhesive; viscous; viscid; glutinous; tenacious. — 2. Humid; producing stickiness; muggy; as, a disagreeable, sticky day. [Colloq.]

sticky² (stik'i), a. [< *stick*³ + -y.] Like a stick; stiff.

But herbs draw a weak juyce, and have a soft stalk; and therefore those amongst them which last longest are herbs of strong smell, and with a sticky stalk.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 583.

Sticta (stik'tä), n. [NL. (Schreber, 1774). < Gr. στικτός, spotted, dappled, punctuated, verbal adj. < στικτιν, mark with a pointed instrument, prick; see stigma.] A large, mostly tropical, genus of parmeliaceous lichens, of the family Peltigere. The thallus is frondose-foliaceous, variously lobed, but for the most part wide-lobed, and coriaceous or cartilaginous in texture. The apothecia are scutelliform, submarginal, elevated, and blackened; the spores are fusiform and acicular, two- to four-celled, usually colorless. There are about 20 North American species. Some of the exotic species, as S. argyracea, are rich in coloring matter. See *crotches*², hazel-crotches, lungwort, 3, oak-lungs, *ray*¹, 3, and cut under apothecium.

sticticine (stik'tē-in), a. [Irreg. < Sticta + -ine.] In bot., relating or belonging to the genus Sticta. E. Tuckerman, N. A. Lichens, I. 83.

stictiform (stik'ti-förm), a. [< NL. Sticta + L. forma, form.] In bot., having the form or characters of the genus Sticta.

stid, n. A Middle English form of stead.

stiddy¹ (stid'i), n. A dialectal form of stithy.

James Yorke, a blacksmith of Lincoln, . . . is a servant as well of Apollo as Vulcan, turning his stiddy into a study.
Fuller, Worthies, Lincoln, II. 295.

stiddy², a. A dialectal form of *steady*¹.

stied. See *sty*¹, *sty*², *sty*³.

Stiebel's canal. See canal.

stieve, stievally. See *steer*¹, steerly.

stife¹ (stif), a. A dialectal variant of stiff.

stife² (stif), n. [Cf. stifle, *stive*².] Suffocating vapor. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

A large open-mouthed chimney or stack, about 45 feet high (one for each set), which serves to carry off the smoke from the fires, the fumes from the metal, and the stife from the grease.
W. H. Wall, Galvanoplastic Manipulations, lxx. 517.

stiff (stif), a. and n. [Also dial. stife, stive (with diphthong after orig. long vowel); < ME. stif, stuf, stecf, stef, < AS. stif or stif = OFries. stef, North Fries. stif, stuf, stif (Siebs) = MD. stief, stif, D. stijf = MLG. stif or stif, LG. stief = MHG. stif (appar. < MLG.). G. stief = Dan. stiv = Sw. stif = Norw. stiv (lecl. stifr* (Webster), not found, stjfr (Haldorsen), prob., like the other Scand. forms, of LG. origin); Teut. √ stif, stif; akin to Lith. stiprus, strong, stipti, be stiff, L. stipes, a stem (see stipe). Cf. *stifle*¹.] I. a. 1. Rigid; not easily bent; not flexible or pliant; not flaccid: as, stiff paper; a cravat stiff with starch.

A stif spere. King Alisaunder, l. 2745.

Oh God, my heart! she is cold, cold, and stiff too,

Stiff as a stake; she's dead!

Fletcher, Double Marriage, v. 2.

Hark! that rattle of a dress,

Stiff with lavish costliness!

Lovell, The Ghost-Seer.

2. Not fluid; thick and tenacious; neither soft nor hard: as, a stiff batter; stiff clay.

I grow stiff, as cooling metals do.

Dryden, Indian Emperor, v. 2.

3. Drawn tight; tense: as, a stiff eord.

Then the two men which did hold the end of the line, still standing there, began to draw, & drew til they had drawn the ends of the line stife, & together.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 433.

Keep a stiff rein, and move but gently on;

The coursers of themselves will run too fast.

Addison, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., ii.

4. Not easily bent; not to be moved without great friction or exertion; not working smoothly or easily.

As he [Rip Van Winkle] rose to walk, he found himself stif in the joints.
Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 56.

The plugs were stif, and water could not get.

Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, v.

5. Not natural and easy in movement; not flowing or graceful; cramped; constrained: as, a stiff style of writing or speaking.

And his address, if not quite French in ease,

Not English stif, but frank, and form'd to please.

Couper, Tirocinium, l. 671.

Our hard, stif lines of life with her

Are flowing curves of beauty.

Whittier, Among the Hills.

6. Rigidly ceremonious; formal in manner; constrained; affected; unbending; starched: as, a stiff deportment.

This kind of good manners was perhaps carried to an excess, so as to make conversation too stif, formal, and precise.
Addison, Spectator, No. 119.

7. Strong and steady in motion: as, a stiff breeze.

And, like a field of standing corn that's mov'd

With a stiff gale, their heads bow all one way.

Beau, and Fl., Philaster, iii. 1.

8. Strong; lusty; stanch, both physically and mentally. [Now provincial only.]

Yet oft they quit
The dank, and, rising on stiff pennons, tower
The mild aerial sky.
Milton, P. L., vii. 441.

Sometime I was an archer good,

A stiffe and eke a stronge,

I was commytted the best archer

That was in myr Englonde.

Lyttell Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 120).

9. Strong; said of an alcoholic drink, or mixed drink of which spirit forms a part.

But, tho' the port surpasses praise,

My nerves have dealt with stiffer.

Tennyson, Will Waterproof.

10. Firm in resistance or persistence; obstinate; stubborn; pertinacious.

A grene hors gret & thikke,

A stede ful stif to strayne [guide].

Sir Gauwayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 173.

Ther the batayle was stiffest and of more strengthe.

Joseph of Arimathe (E. E. T. S.), p. 18.

The boy remained stif in his denial, and seemed not affected with the apprehension of death.

Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 58.

11. Hard to receive or accept; hard to bear.

Labeius —

This is stif news — hath with his Parthian force

Extended Asia from Euphrates.

Shak., A. and C., i. 2. 104.

12. Hard to master or overcome; very difficult: as, a stiff examination in mathematics.

We now left the carriages, and began a stiff climb to the top of the hill.

Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 447.

13. Naut., bearing a press of canvas or of wind without careening much; tending to keep upright: as, a stiff vessel; a stiff keel: opposed to crank.

It continued a growing storm all the day, and towards night so much wind as we bore no more sail but so much as should keep the ship stif.

Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 17.

14. High; steep: as, a stiff price. [Slang.] —

15. Unyielding; firm: said of prices, markets, etc.: as, the wheat-market is stiff. [Commercial slang.] — 16. Rigid as in death; dead.

[Slang.] — A stiff neck. See neck. — To keep a stiff upper lip. See lip. — Syn. 1. Unbending, unyielding. — 6. Firm, punctilious. — 10. Inflexible, uncompromising.

II. n. 1. A dead body; a corpse. [Slang.]

They piled the stiffs outside the door —

They made, I reckon, a cord or more.

John Hay, Mystery of Gilgal.

2. In hatting, a stiffener. — 3. Negotiable paper. [Commercial slang.] — 4. Forged paper. [Thieves' slang.] — To do a bit of stif, to accept or discount a bill. [Slang.]

How are the Three per Cents, you little beggar? I wish you'd do me a bit of stif; and just tell your father, if I may overdraw my account, I'll vote with him.

Thackeray, Newcomes, vi.

stiff (stif), v. i. [< ME. stiffen, stiffen, a later form of stiven, early ME. stifien*, < AS. stifian or stifian, be stiff, < stif, stif; stiff: see stif, a., and cf. *stive*¹, the older form of the verb.] To become or grow stiff. (a) To become upright or strong. As some as they [chicks] stiffe and that they steppe kunne, Than cometh and crieth her owen kynde dame.
Richard the Redless, iii. 54.

(b) To become obstinate or stubborn.

But Dido affrighted stif also in her obstinat onset.
Stanhurst, Æeoid, iv.

stiff-borne (stif'börn), a. Carried on with unyielding constancy or perseverance.

The stiff-borne action. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 1. 177.

stiffen (stif'n), v. [Sw. stifna = Dan. stivne; as stif + -en.] I. intrans. To become stiff. (a) To become less flexible or pliant; become rigid.

With chatt'ring teeth he stands, and stiffning hair,

And looks a bloodless image of despair!

Pope, Iliad, xiii. 364.

In this neighbourhood I have frequently heard it said that if a corpse does not stiffen within a reasonable time it is a sign of another death in the family.

N. and Q., 7th ser., X. 114.

(b) To become less soft or fluid; grow thicker or harder; become inspissated: as, jellies stiffen as they cool.

The tender soil then stiffning by degrees. Dryden.

(c) To become steady and strong: as, a stiffening breeze.

(d) To become unyielding; grow rigid, obstinate, or formal.

Sir Aylmer Aylmer slowly stiffening spoke:

"The girl and boy, Sir, know their differences!"

Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

(e) To become higher in price: become firmer or more unyielding: as, the market stiffens. [Commercial slang.]

II. trans. To make stiff. (a) To make less pliant or flexible.

From his saddle heavily down-leapt,

Stiffened, as one who not for long has slept.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 259.

(b) To make rigid, constrained, formal, or habitual.

I pity kings, whom Worship waits upon, . . .

Whom Education stiffens into state.

Couper, Table-Talk, l. 125.

(c) To make more thick or viscous; inspissate; as, to stiffen paste. (d) To make stubborn or obstinate.

The man . . . who is called and stiffened in vice. Barrow, sermons, III. xvi. (Encyc. Diet.)

stiffener (stif'nér), n. [< stiffen + -er¹.] One who or that which stiffens. (a) Formerly used specifically for a piece of stiff material worn inside a stock or neckcloth, and also for a similar device worn in leg-of-mutton sleeves. (b) In bookbinding, a thick paper or thin mill-board used by bookbinders as an inner lining to book-covers to give them the needed stiffness.

stiffening (stif'ning), n. [Verbal n. of stiffen, v.] 1. Something that is used to make a substance stiff or less soft, as starch.—2. Something inserted to make a garment, or part of a garment, stiff and capable of keeping its shape. See huckram, crinoline.

stiffening-machine (stif'ning-ma-shén'), n. In hat-making, an apparatus for applying the heated composition used to harden and stiffen the felt of hats. It consists of a vat filled with melted shellac, and a pair of rollers for removing the superfluous stiffening material after the hat has been dipped in the vat.

stiffening-order (stif'ning-ór'dér), n. A custom-house warrant by which ballast or heavy goods may be taken on board before the whole inward cargo is discharged, to prevent the vessel from getting too light. Imp. Diet.

stiff-hearted (stif'hár'ted), a. Obstinate; stubborn; contumacious.

They are impudent children and stiff-hearted. Ezek. ii. 4.

stiffle¹ (stif'l), n. A dialectal form of *stightle, stickle*³.

stiffle², n. An obsolete form of *stifle*².

stiffer (stif'fér), n. [Also stifter; *< late ME. styffler, a var. of stightler, whence also stickler: see stickler, stickle, stifle, stightle.] 1. Same as stickler.

The king intendeth, in eschewing all inconvenients, to be as big as they both, and to be a styffler between them. Paston Letters, III. 98, quoted in J. Gairdner's Richard III. i.

The drift was, as I judged, for Dethick to continue such styfflers in the College of his pupils, to win him in time by hook or crook the master's room. Abp. Parker, p. 252. (Davies.)

2. A busybody. Hallivell (spelled stifter). [Prov. Eng.]

stiffly (stif'li), adv. [< ME. stifliche, styffly, stifli (= MD. stijflic); < stiff + -ly².] In a stiff manner, in any sense of the word stiff.

And you, my sinews, grow not instant old, But bear me stiffly up. Shak., Hamlet, i. 5. 95.

Pistorius and others stiffly maintain the use of charms, words, characters, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 271.

stiff-neck (stif'nek), n. Cervical myalgia; sometimes, true torticollis.

stiff-necked (stif'nekt or -nek'ed), a. Stubborn; inflexibly obstinate; contumacious; as, a stiff-necked people.

stiff-neckedness (stif'nekt-nes or -nek'ed-nes), n. The property or character of being stiff-necked; stubbornness.

stiffness (stif'nes), n. [< ME. styffnessc, styffnes; < stiff + -ness.] The state or character of being stiff, in any sense.

stiff-tail (stif'tál), n. The ruddy duck, Erismatura rubida. See cut under Erismatura. [Local, U. S.]

stiff-tailed (stif'táld), a. Having rigid rectrices or tail-feathers denuded to the base; erismaturine; specifically noting ducks of the genus Erismatura.

stifle¹ (stif'l), v.; pret. and pp. stifled, ppr. stifling. [Early mod. E. also stifil; < Icel. stifta = Norw. stifta, dam up, choke, stop, perhaps (like Norw. stira, stiffen) freq. of Norw. stira = Sw. styfta = Dan. stive = ME. stiven, stiffen; see stive¹, stiff, v. The word was prob. confused with E. *stive*², < OF. estiver, pack tight, stive; see stive.] I. trans. 1. To choke up; dam up; close.

Make fast the chamber door, stifle the keyhole and the cranies. Shirley, Traitor, iii. 1.

2. To kill by impeding respiration, as by covering the mouth and nose, by introducing an irrespirable substance into the lungs, or by other means; suffocate or greatly oppress by foul air or otherwise; smother.

Sure, if I had not pinch'd you 'till you wak'd, you had stifted me with kisses. Congreve, Old Batchelor, ii. 3.

I took my leave, being half stifted with the closeness of the room. Swift, Account of Partridge's Death.

3. To stop the passage of; arrest the free action of; extinguish; deaden; quench: as, to stifle flame; to stifle sound.

They [colored bodies] stop and stifle in themselves the rays, which they do not reflect or transmit. Newton, Opticks, I. ii. x.

She whisp'rd, with a stifled moan. Tennyson, Mariana in the South.

4. To suppress; keep from active manifestation; keep from public notice; conceal; repress; destroy: as, to stifle inquiry; to stifle a report; to stifle passion; to stifle convictions.

A record surreptitiously or erroneously made up, to stifle or pervert the truth. Blackstone, Com., III. xxv. =Syn. 2. Suffocate, Strangle, etc. See another.—4 To hush, muffle, muzzle, gag.

II. intrans. To suffocate; perish by asphyxia. You shall stifle in your own report, And smell of calumny. Shak., M. for M., ii. 4. 15c.

stife² (stif'l), n. [Formerly also stiffl; appar. < stiff, dial. stif; see stif.] 1. The stifle-joint.

If the horse be but hurt in the stifle with some stripe or straine. Topell, Four-Footed Beasts (1607), p. 405. (Hallivell.)

2. Disease or other affection of the stifle-bone or stifle-joint, as dislocation or fracture of the patella.

stife-bone (stif'l-bón), n. The patella of the horse; the kneecap, kneecap, or bone of the stifle-joint.

stifed (stif'fd), a. [Formerly also stifted; < stifle² + -ed².] Affected with stife. See *stife*², 2.

The horse is said to be stifed when the stifling bone is removed from the place. Topell, Four-Footed Beasts (1607), p. 405. (Hallivell.)

stife-joint (stif'l-jóint), n. The stifle or knee-joint of the horse; the joint of the hind leg between the hip and the hock, whose convexity points forward, which is close to the belly, and which corresponds to the human knee. See cut under Equide.

stifer (stif'fér), n. [< stifle¹, v., + -er².] Milit. See camouflet.

stife-shoe (stif'l-shō), n. A form of horseshoe exposing a curved surface to the ground; used in treating a stifled horse. It is fixed on the sound foot, with the effect of forcing the animal to throw its weight on the weak joint, and thus strengthen it by exercise.

stifling (stif'fling), p. a. Close; oppressive; suffocating: as, a stifling atmosphere.

E'en in the stifling bosom of the town. Copey, Task, iv. 753.

stifling-bonet, n. Same as stife-bone. stight, v. [ME. stigten, < AS. stihtan, stihtian (for stiftan*), order, rule, govern, = MD. D. stichten, found, build, impose a law, = OHG. MHG. G. stiften = Icel. stipta, stifta, stifta = Sw. stifta, stikta = Dan. stifte, found, institute; cf. Icel. stítt, foundation, pavement, stepping-stone, foot-piece. Hence stightle.] To found; establish; set.

The ston that theron was stigt was of so stif vertu That neuer man vpon mold might it him on haue. William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), 1. 4425.

stightlet, v. [< ME. stightlen, styghtlen, stightelen, stigten, stygtlen, order, arrange, direct, freq. of stighten, AS. stihtan, order, rule, govern: see stight. Hence mod. E. stickle³, stifle², q. v.] I. trans. 1. To order; arrange; dispose of; take order concerning; govern; direct.

That other was his stward that stigtled al his meyne. William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), 1. 1199.

II. intrans. To make arrangements; treat; direct; mediate; stickle.

When they com to the courte keppte wern thay fayre, Stigtled with the steward, stad in the halle. Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 90.

stigma¹ (stig'mä), n.; E. pl. stigmas (stig'mäz), used chiefly in senses 1, 2, and 6; L. pl. stigmata (stig'mä-tä), used more or less in all the senses. [= F. stigmaté = Sp. Pg. estigma = It. stimate, stigma = G. stigma, < NL. stigma, < L. stigma, < Gr. στίγμα, pl. στίγματα, a mark, esp. of a pointed instrument, a spot, brand, < στίξω, mark (with a point), prick, brand: see stick¹.] 1. A mark made with a red-hot iron, formerly in many countries upon criminals as a badge of infamy; a brand impressed on slaves and others.

The Devil, however, does not imprint any stigma upon his new vassal, as in the later stories of witch-compacts. Lovell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 95.

2. Any mark of infamy, slur, or disgrace which attaches to a person on account of evil conduct.

Itaehs is it for him that the blackest stigma that can be fastened upon him is that his robes were whiter than his brethren's. By. Hall, Remains, Pref.

3. In anat. and zool., a mark; a marked point or place: variously applied to marks of color, as a spot, and to many different pores or small holes. Specifically—(a) A birth-mark; a nevus. (b) The point or place on the surface of an ovary where a mature Graafian follicle ruptures. (c) In ornith., the place where the calyx or ovisac of the ovary ruptures to discharge an ovum into the oviduct. See calyx, 3 (b). (d) In entom.: (1) The exterior orifice of a trachea; a spiracle. See cut under pulmonary, flesh-fly, sheep-bot, and Acarida. (2) A chitinous spot or mark on the anterior margin of the fore wings of many insects, formed by a special enlargement of a vein; a pterostigma. (e) In Protozoa, a spot of pigment; the so-called eye of an Infusorian. (f) In Annelida, one of the pores or openings of the segmental organs. (g) In Hydrozoa, the pore by which a pneumatocyst opens to the exterior. See cut under Hydrozoa. (h) In Pharyngogonista, as an ascidian, one of the ciliated openings by which the cavity of the pharynx is placed in communication with that of the atrial canal. See cuts under Appendicularia and Tunicata.

4. A place or point on the skin which bleeds periodically or at irregular intervals during some mental states. The spontaneous appearance of stigmata was formerly regarded superstitiously.—5. pl. In the Rom. Cath. Ch., marks said to have been supernaturally impressed upon the bodies of certain persons in imitation of the wounds on the crucified body of Christ.

In the life of St. Francis of Assisi we have the first example of the alleged miraculous infliction of stigmata. Encyc. Brit., XXII. 549.

6. In bot., a modified part of the style or, when that is wanting, of the surface of the ovary, which in impregnation receives the pollen. In the latter case the stigma is said to be sessile, as in the poppy and the tulip. When the style is present, the stigma may be terminal, occupying its summit, as in the plum and cherry, or lateral, running down its face in one or two lines, as in Ranunculus. Its form and appearance are very various. In many plants there is only one stigma, while in others there are two, three, five, or many, according to the number of styles or style-branches. The stigma is composed of delicate cellular tissue; its surface is destitute of true epidermis, and is usually moist. See pistil (with cut) and pollen-tube.

1. Of Cynodon Dactylon. 2. Of Vitis Labrusca. 3. Of Papaver Argemone. 4. Of Gordonia pubescens. 5. Of Tilia Americana. 6. Of Silene Pennsylvanica. 7. Of Tribulus cistoides. 8. Of Dionaea muscipula. 9. Of Linum Virginianum. 10. Of Paricaria officinalis. 11. Of Rumex obtusifolius.

stigma² (stig'mä), n. [Gr. στίγμα, the ligature σ , an altered form, to bring in σ , of σίμα or σίμα, the letter σ , sigma; see sigma.] The ligature was also called στί. In Gr. gram. and paleog., a ligature (σ) still sometimes used for σ (st), and also used as a numeral (6).

stigma-disk (stig'mä-disk), n. In bot., a disk forming the seat of a stigma, sometimes produced by the fusion of two or more style-apices, as in Aselepias.

stigmatal (stig'mäl), a. [< stigma¹ + -al.] Of or pertaining to a stigma; stigmatic. Specifically applied in entomology to a vein of the wings of some insects, whose modification makes a stigma (pterostigma).

Stigmara (stig-mä'ri-ä), n. [NL. < L. stigma¹, a mark (see *stigma*¹), + -aria.] A former genus of fossil plants, very abundant in many regions in the coal-measures, and especially in the under-clay, or clayey material (often mixed with more or less sand) by which most seams of coal are underlain; also [l. c.], a plant of this genus. These plants are cylindrical root-like bodies, usually starting from a center in four main branches, and afterward bifurcating irregularly, and extending sometimes to great distances. The bodies are covered with small round depressions or scars arranged in lozenge-shaped patterns, and each the point of attachment of a ribbon-shaped filament or rootlet. In some cases the stigmarias have been found attached to trunks of Sinularia, in such a position as would naturally be occupied by the roots with reference to the stem of the plant or tree; hence they have been admitted by most paleobotanists to be in fact the roots of the widely distributed coal-plant called Sigillaria. Some who maintain this, however, admit that the relation of the stigmata to the plant itself was peculiar; while others believe that they were floating stems, able under favorable conditions to play the part of roots. This opinion has for its support the fact that thick beds of under-layer are frequently found almost entirely made up of remains of stigmata, while not even a fragment of Sigillaria can be found in the vicinity.

Stigmarian (stig-mā'ri-an), a. [< Stigmata + -an.] Relating to, containing, or consisting of Stigmata. Geol. Mag., No. 267, p. 407.

stigmarioid (stig-mā'ri-oid), a. [< Stigmata + -oid.] In bot., resembling Stigmata.

stigmata, n. Latin plural of stigma.

stigmatal (stig'ma-tal), a. [< Stigmata + -al.] In entom., pertaining to, near, or containing the stigmata or breathing-pores; stigmatic: as, the stigmatal line of a caterpillar.

stigmatic (stig-mat'ik, formerly also stig'mat'ik), a. and n. [< ML. stigmaticus, < L. stigma, < Gr. στίγμα, a mark, brand: see stigma¹.] I. a. Of or pertaining to a stigma, in any sense of that word. Specifically—(a) Having the character of a brand; ignominious. Print in my face
The most stigmaticke title of a villaine.
Heywood, Woman Killed with Kindness (Works, II. 110).

(b) Marked with or as with a stigma or brand; repulsive; abhorrent. So the world is become ill favoured and shrewd-pated, as politic in brain as it is stigmatic in limbs.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 19.

(c) In nat. hist., belonging to or having the character of a stigma; stigmatal. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 374. (d) In bot., receptive of pollen; said of parts of the style which have the function without the form of a stigma, as the "silk" of maize. (e) Bearing the stigmata; stigmatized. See stigma¹, 5.—Stigmatic cells, in bot., same as tid-cells.

II. n. 1. A person who is marked with stigmata, in the ecclesiastical or the pathological sense; a stigmatist.—2. A criminal who has been branded; one who bears upon his person the marks of infamy or punishment; a notorious profligate. Convaide him to a justice, where one swore
He had been branded stigmatic before.
Philomylæe (1616). (Nares.)

3. One on whom nature has set a mark of deformity. But like a foul, mis-shapen stigmatic, Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 2. 136.

stigmatical (stig-mat'ik-al), a. [< stigmatic + -al.] Same as stigmatic. Shak., C. of E., iv. 2. 22.

stigmatically (stig-mat'ik-al-i), adv. With stigmata; with a mark of infamy or deformity. If you spye any man that has a looke, Stigmatically drawne, like to a furie, (Able to fright) to such I'll give large pay.
Dekker, Wonder of a Kingdom, iii. 1.

stigmatiferous (stig-ma-tif'e-rus), a. [< NL. stigma(t)-, a stigma, + L. ferre = E. bear¹.] In bot., stigma-bearing.

stigmatiform (stig'ma-ti-fôrm), a. [< NL. stigma(t)-, stigma, + L. forma, form.] In entom., having the structure or appearance of a stigma, spiracle, or breathing-pore; spiraculiform.

stigmatisation, stigmatise, etc. See stigmatisation, etc.

stigmatist (stig'ma-tist), n. [< Gr. στίγμα(τ)-, a mark, a brand (see stigma¹), + -ist.] One on whom the stigmata, or marks of Christ's wounds, are said to be supernaturally impressed.

stigmatization (stig'ma-ti-zā'shon), n. [< stigmatize + -ation.] 1. The act of stigmatizing, or the condition of being stigmatized; specifically, the supposed miraculous impression of the marks of Christ's wounds on the bodies of certain persons.—2. The act, process, or result of producing, as by hypnotic suggestion, on the surface of the body points or lines which bleed. [Recent.]

Also spelled stigmatization.

stigmatize (stig'ma-tiz), v. t.; pret. and pp. stigmatized, ppr. stigmatizing. [< F. stigmatizer = Sp. estigmatizar = Pg. estigmatizar = It. stigmatizzare, < ML. stigmatizare, < Gr. στίγματιζεν, mark, brand, < στίγμα(τ)-, a mark, brand: see stigma¹.] 1. To mark with a stigma or brand. They had more need some of them . . . to have their cheeks stigmatized with a hot iron.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 474.

2. To set a mark of disgrace on; disgrace with some mark or term of reproach or infamy. It was thought proper to restrain it [comedy] within bounds by a law enacting that no person should be stigmatized under his real name.
Goldsmith, Essay, Origin of Poetry.

3. To produce red points, sometimes bleeding, in or on: as, a person or the skin stigmatized by hypnotic suggestion. [Recent.]

Also spelled stigmatise.

stigmatized (stig'ma-tizd), p. a. 1. Marked with a stigma; branded; specifically, marked with the stigmata of the passion.—2. Resembling stigmata: as, the stigmatized dots on the skin in measles. Also spelled stigmatized.

stigmatose (stig'ma-tôs), n. [*< NL. stigmatosus, < stigma¹, a stigma: see stigma¹.] 1. In bot., same as stigmatic.—2. Affected with stigmata; stigmatized.

stigne (stig'mē), n. [< Gr. στίγμα, a prick, point.] 1. In Gr. paleog., a dot used as a punctuation-mark; especially, a dot placed at the top of the line, like the later Greek colon, and having the value of a period.—2. In Gr. pros., a dot placed over a time or syllable to mark the ietus.

Stignonema (stig-mō-nē'mā), n. [< Gr. στίγμα, a mark, + νῆμα, a thread.] A genus of cyanophyceous algæ, giving name to the family Stignonemaceæ.

Stignonemæ (stig-mō-nē'mā-ē), n. pl. [< Stignonema + -æ.] A family of cyanophyceous algæ, embraced, according to late systematists, in the order Scytonemaceæ.

Stigmus (stig'mus), n. [< NL. (Jurine, 1807), < Gr. στίγμα, a mark: see stigma¹.] In entom., a genus of fossorial wasps, of the family Pemphredonidæ, having a large stigma to the fore wing and a petiolate abdomen. S. troglodytes of Europe makes its cells in the hollow straws of thatched roofs, and provisions them with masses of immature Thripes.

stilar, a. See stylar.

Stilbæ (stil'bē-ē), n. pl. [< Gr. στίλβειν, glitter, shine, + -æ.] A division of hyphomycetous fungi, characterized by the cohering of the spore-bearing hyphæ into a dense and slender stipe.

stilbite (stil'bīt), n. [< Gr. στίλβειν, glitter, shine, + -ite².] 1. A common zeolitic mineral, usually occurring in radiated or sheaf-like tufts of crystals having a pearly luster on the surface of cleavage. It varies in color from white to brown or red. It is essentially a hydrous silicate of aluminum and calcium. Also called desmine. See cut under tufted.

2. The mineral henlandite.

stile¹ (stil), n. [Early mod. E. also style; < ME. stile, style, stizele, < AS. stigol (= OHG. stigula, stiagil, MHG. stiegel, stigele, a step, G. dial. stegel, a step), a stile, < stigan (pp. stigen), climb, ascend. Cf. styl¹, n., and stair¹.] 1. A series of steps, or a frame of bars and steps, for ascending and descending in getting over a fence or wall. Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way,
And merrily hent the stile-a.
Shak., W. T., iv. 3. 133.

2. In carp., a vertical part of a piece of framing, into which the ends of the rails are fixed by mortises and tenons. See cut of panel-door, under door.

stile², n. A former and more correct spelling of style¹.

stile³, n. A former spelling of style².

stilet¹ (sti-let'), n. A former and more correct form of stiletto. Scott, Monastery.

stilet² (sti-let'), n. In zool., a small style; a stilet.

stilette (sti-let'), n. Same as stylet.

stiletto (sti-let'ō), n. [< It. stiletto, a dagger, dim. of stilo, a dagger, < L. stilus, a stake, a pointed instrument: see stile², style², and cf. stylet.] 1. A dagger having a blade slender and narrow, and thick in proportion to its width—that is, triangular, square, etc., in section, instead of flat.—2. A small sharp-pointed implement used for making eyelet-holes and for similar purposes. Stilettoes are of ivory, bone, metal, and other materials.—3. A beard trimmed into a sharp-pointed form. The stiletto beard,
O, it makes me afraid,
It is so sharp beneath.
Acad. of Compl. (Nares.)

The very quack of fashion, the very he that Wears a stiletto on his chin? Ford, Strikes, iii. 1.

stiletto (sti-let'ō), v. t. [< stiletto, n.] To strike or wound with a stiletto; hence, in general, to stab. Henry IV. . . . [was] likewise stilettoed by a rascal votary.
Bacon, Charge against W. Talbot, p. 202.

still¹ (stil), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also stil, stille, styll, style; < ME. stille, style, < ML. stille, MHG. stille, G. still = Sw. stilla = Dan. stille, quietly, from the adj.] 1. Quietly; silently; softly; peacefully. Thei crde mercy with good wille, Somme lowde & somme stille.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 96.

2. Constantly; continually; habitually; always; ever. Thou still hast been the father of good news.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 42.

What a set face the gentlewoman has, as she were still going to a sacrifice! B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

3. To lull, pacify, tranquilize, smooth.—3. To hush. II. intrans. To become calm or tranquil; grow quiet; be still. [Rare.] Herupon the people peacyd, and stilled unto the tyme the shire was doon.
Paston Letters, 1. 180.

still¹ (stil), adv. [Early mod. E. also stil, stille, styll, style; < ME. stille, < AS. stille = OS. stille = D. stille = OHG. stille, MHG. stille, G. still = Sw. stilla = Dan. stille, quietly, from the adj.] 1. Quietly; silently; softly; peacefully. Thei crde mercy with good wille, Somme lowde & somme stille.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 96.

2. Constantly; continually; habitually; always; ever. Thou still hast been the father of good news.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 42.

What a set face the gentlewoman has, as she were still going to a sacrifice! B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

2. To calm; appease; quiet or allay, as commotion, tumult, agitation, or excitement. A turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 163.

3. To silence; quiet. With his name the mothers still their babes.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 17.

O still my brain, norrice;
O still him wi' the pap!
Lamkin (Child's Ballads, III. 97).

still¹ (stil), v. [Early mod. E. also stille, styll, style; < ME. stille, < AS. stille = OS. stille = D. stille = OHG. stille, MHG. stille, G. still = Sw. stilla = Dan. stille, quietly, from the adj.] 1. Quietly; silently; softly; peacefully. Thei crde mercy with good wille, Somme lowde & somme stille.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 96.

2. Constantly; continually; habitually; always; ever. Thou still hast been the father of good news.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 42.

What a set face the gentlewoman has, as she were still going to a sacrifice! B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

stille = OS. stilla = OFries. stille = MD. stille, stil, D. stil = MLG. stille, LG. stille = OHG. stilla, MHG. stille, G. stille = Icel. stilla = Dan. stilla = Sw. stilla, quiet, still; with adj. formative, from the root (stil) of AS. steall, etc., a place, stall: see stall¹, stell.] I. a. 1. Remaining in place; remaining at rest; motionless; quiet: as, to stand, sit, or lie still. Foot & hand thou kepe fulle stille Fro clawyng or tryppynge, hit ys skylle.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 13.

2. Calm; tranquil; peaceful; undisturbed or unruffled: as, still waters run deep; a still night. In the calmest and most stillest night.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 1. 28.

A Poet in still musings bound.
Wordsworth, Sonnets, iii. 11.

3. Silent; quiet; calm; noiseless; hushed. A man that sayth little shall perceue by the speche of another;
Be thou still and see, the more shalt thou perceue in another.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 85.

The trumpet's silver sound is still,
The warde silent on the hill!
Scott, Marmion, f., Int.

4. Soft; low; subdued: as, a still small voice. The gentle blasts of western winds shall move
The trembling leaves, and through their close boughs breathe Still musick, whilst we rest ourselves beneath Their dancing shade. Carver, Poems, p. 70. (Latham.)

5. Not sparkling or effervescent: said of wine, mineral water, and other beverages; contrasted with sparkling; by extension, having but little effervescence. Thus, still champagne is not the non-effervescent natural wine, but champagne which is only moderately sparkling.

6. Continual; constant. But I of these will wrest an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.
Shak., Tit. And., iii. 2. 45.

Still alarm, an alarm of fire given by a person calling at a station, and not by the regular system of fire-signals.—Still days. See day¹.—Still hunt. See hunt.—Still life, inanimate objects, such as furniture, fruits, or dead animals, represented by the painter's art. The same dull sights in the same landscape mixt, Scenes of still life, and points for ever fixed,
A tedious pleasure on the mind bestow.
Addison, Epil. to British Enchanters.

II. n. 1. Calm; silence; freedom from noise. He [Henry VIII.] had never sny . . . jealousy with the King his father which might give any occasion of altering court or counsel upon the change; but all things passed in a still. Bacon, Hist. Hen. VIII.

2. A still alarm. [Colloq.] Many alarms were what the firmen called stills, where a single engine went out to fight the fire. Elect. Rev. (Amer.), II. xxv. 6.

still¹ (stil), v. [Early mod. E. also stille, styll; < ME. stillen, < AS. stillan = OS. stillian, stillōn = MD. D. stillen = MLG. LG. stillen = OHG. stillan, stillēn, MHG. G. stillen = Icel. Sw. stilla = Dan. stille, make or become still; from the adj.] I. trans. 1. To make still; cause to be at rest; render calm, quiet, unruffled, or undisturbed; check or restrain; make peaceful or tranquil; quiet. Lord, still the seas, and shield my ship from harm.
Quarles, Emblems, iii. 11.

2. To calm; appease; quiet or allay, as commotion, tumult, agitation, or excitement. A turn or two I'll walk,
To still my beating mind.
Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 163.

3. To silence; quiet. With his name the mothers still their babes.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 17.

O still my brain, norrice;
O still him wi' the pap!
Lamkin (Child's Ballads, III. 97).

still¹ (stil), adv. [Early mod. E. also stil, stille, styll, style; < ME. stille, < AS. stille = OS. stille = D. stille = OHG. stille, MHG. stille, G. still = Sw. stilla = Dan. stille, quietly, from the adj.] 1. Quietly; silently; softly; peacefully. Thei crde mercy with good wille, Somme lowde & somme stille.
King Horn (E. E. T. S.), p. 96.

2. Constantly; continually; habitually; always; ever. Thou still hast been the father of good news.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 42.

What a set face the gentlewoman has, as she were still going to a sacrifice! B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

O first of friends! (Pelides thus reply'd)
Still at my heart, and ever at my side!

Pope, Iliad, xi. 743.

3. Now as in the past; till now; to this time; now as then or as before; yet: as, he is still here.

At after noone, with an easy wynde, and salyd styll in alto pelago, leuyngre Grece on ye lefte hande and Barbary on the right hande. Sir R. Guyforde, Pylgrymage, p. 12.

Poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
Stands on his hinder lega with listning ear,
To hearken if his foes pursue him still.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 699.

Apart she lived, and still she lies alone.
Crabbe, Works, l. 113.

4. In an increased or increasing degree; beyond this (or that); even yet; in excess: used with comparatives or to form a comparative: as, still greater things were expected; still more numerous.

What rich service!
What mines of treasure! richer still!
Fletcher (and another), False One, iii. 4.

The matter of his treatise is extraordinary; the manner more extraordinary still.
Macaulay, Sadler's Law of Population.

5. For all that; all the same; nevertheless; notwithstanding this (or that).

Though thou repent, yet I have still the loss.
Shak., Sonnets, xxxiv.

The Bey, with all his good sense and understanding, was still a Mamaluke, and had the principles of a slave.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, l. 30.

Loud and (or or) still. See loud.—Still and anon, at intervals and repeatedly; continually.

And, like the watchful minutes of the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time.
Shak., K. John, iv. 1. 47.

still² (stil), v. [< ME. *stillen, styllen, in part an abbr. of distil, in part < L. stillare, drop, fall in drops, also let or cause to fall in drops, < stilla, a drop; cf. stiria, a frozen drop, an icicle. Cf. distil, instil.] I. t. intrans. To drop; fall in drops. See distil.

From her faire eyes wiping the dewy wet
Which softly still'd.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. vii. 35.

II. trans. 1. t. To drop, or cause to fall in drops.

Her father Myrrha sought,
And loved, but loved not as a daughter ought.
Now from a tree she stills her odorous tears,
Which yet the name of her who shed them bears.
Dryden, the Ovid's Art of Love, i.

2. To expel, as spirit from liquor, by heat and condense in a refrigerator; distil. See distil.

In Burgos, Anno 21., Doctor Sotto cured me of a certeine wandering fener, made me eat so much Apium, take so much Barley water, & drink so much stilled Endive.
Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 275.

still² (stil), n. [< still², v. The older noun was stillatory.] 1. An apparatus for separating, by means of heat, volatile matters from substances a, alembic; b, hot-water jacket; c, head; d, rostrum or beak; e, worm; f, refrigerator; g, funnel-tube for supplying cold water to the refrigerator; h, h', tubes for conveying away the warm upper stratum of water, which is heated by the condensation of vapor in the worm.

Still.

containing them, and recondensing them into the liquid form. It assumes many forms, according to the purposes for which it is used; but it consists essentially of two parts, a vessel in which the substance to be distilled is heated, and one in which the vapor is cooled and condensed. The most important use of stills is for the distillation of spirituous liquors. See distillation, and ent under petroleum-still.

2. A house or works in which liquors are distilled; a distillery. S. Judd, Margaret, i. 15.—

3. In bleaching, a rectangular vessel made of slabs of freestone or flagstone with rabbeted and stemmed joints held together by long bolts, and provided with a steam-chamber below, and with a manhole for introducing the materials for making chlorid of manganese solution, called still-liquor.

stillage (stil'āj), n. [Origin uncertain.] A stout support, in the nature of a stool, for keeping something from coming in contact with the floor of a shop, factory, bleachery, etc. Specifically—(a) In bleaching, a stout low stool or bench to keep textiles or yarns from the floor, and to permit the moisture to drain out of them. (b) In the packing of cloths and other goods for shipment, etc., a stool or bench for supporting the goods taken out of a stock to be packed. Some stillages are made so that they can be tilted, and allow articles placed on them to slide off into packing-boxes, etc.

stillatitious (stil-a-tish'us), a. [< L. stillatitius, dropping, dripping, < stillare, pp. stillatus, drop, trickle: see still², v.] Falling in drops; drawn by a still. [Rare.] Imp. Dict.

stillatory (stil'a-tō-ri), n.; pl. stillatories (-riz). [< ME. stillatorie, a distilling-vessel (cf. OF. F. stillatoire, a.), < ML. stillatorium, neut. of stillatorius*, adj., < L. stillare, pp. stillatus, fall in drops: see still², v.] 1. A still; a vessel for distillation; an alembic.

His forced, dropped as a stillatorie
Were full of plantayne and of paritoric.
Chaucer, Prolog to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 27.

In stillatories where the vapour is turned back upon itself by the encounter of the sides of the stillatory.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 27.

2. A laboratory; a place or room in which distillation is performed; a still-room.

Marins, Arnmanns, as you are noble friends,
Go to the privy garden, and in the walk
Next to the stillatory stay for me.
Beau. and Fl. (?), Faithful Friends, iv. 3.

still-birth (stil'bēth), n. The birth of a lifeless thing; also, a still-born child.

still-born (stil'bōrn), a. Dead at birth; born lifeless: as, a still-born child.

still-burn (stil'bērn), v. t. To burn in the process of distillation: as, to still-burn brandy.

still¹ (stil'ēr), n. [< still¹ + -er¹.] 1. One who or that which stills or quiets.—2. A wooden disk laid on the liquid in a full pail to prevent splashing. [Prov. Eng.] still² (stil'ēr), n. A distiller. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXX. 830.

still-fish (stil'fish), v. i. [< still¹ + fish¹, after still-hunt.] To fish from a boat at anchor.

still-fisher (stil'fish'ēr), n. An angler engaged in still-fishing.

still-fishing (stil'fish'ing), n. Fishing from a boat at anchor, or from the bank of a stream.

still-house (stil'hous), n. A distillery, or that part of it which contains the still.

still-hunt (stil'hunt), v. [< still hunt: see under hunt.] I. trans. To hunt stealthily; stalk; lie in ambush for.

The only way to get one [a grizzly] is to put on moccasins and still-hunt it in its own haunts.
T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 327.

The best time to still-hunt deer is just before sunset, when they come down from the hills to drink.
Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 51.

II. intrans. To hunt without making a noise; pursue game stealthily or under cover.

The best way to kill white-tail is to still-hunt carefully through their haunts at dusk.
T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 118.

An inferior sort of still-hunting, as practised, for instance, on Norwegian islands for the large red-deer.
Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLI. 394.

still-hunter (stil'hun'tēr), n. One who pursues game stealthily and without noise; one who hunts from ambush or under cover; a stalker. W. T. Hornaday, Smithsonian Report, 1887, ii. 430.

Stilliard¹, n. See Steclyard¹.

stilliard², n. An old spelling of steclyard².

stillicide (stil'i-sid), n. [< F. stillicide, < L. stillicidium, stillicidium, a falling of drops, dripping, falling rain, < stilla, a drop (see still²), + cadere, fall.] 1. t. A continual falling or succession of drops.

The stillicides of water, . . . if there be water enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small thread, because they will not discontinue; but if there be no remedy, then they cast themselves into round drops.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 24.

2. In Rom. law: (a) The right to have the rain from one's roof drop on another's land or roof. (b) The right to refuse to allow the rain from another's roof to drop on one's own land or roof.

stillicious (stil-i-sid'i-us), a. [< stillicide + -ious.] Falling in drops. Sir T. Brocne, Vulg. Err., ii. 1.

stillicidium (stil-i-sid'i-um), n. [L.: see stillicide.] A morbid dropping or trickling.—Stillicidium lacrymarum, the trickling of tears down over the lower lids from obstruction of the lacrymal passages.—Stillicidium urinæ, a discharge of urine in drops.

stilliform (stil'i-fōrm), a. [< L. stilla, a drop, + forma, form.] Drop-shaped.

stilling (stil'ing), n. [Also stillion; appar. a variant of E. dial. steling, a shed for cattle (= L.G. steling = G. steling, a stand, scaffold; cf. lecl. stilling, management, < stell + -ing.)

1. A stand for easks.—2. In a brewery, a stand on which the rounds or cleansing-vats are placed in a trough, which serves to carry off the overflowing yeast.—3. A stand on which pottery is placed in the drying-kiln preparatory to firing.

Stillingia (sti-lin'ji-ā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1767), named after Benjamin Stillingfleet, an English botanist who published botanical papers in 1759.] 1. A genus of apetalous plants, of the order Euphorbiaceæ, tribe Crotonææ, and subtribe Hippomaneæ. It is characterized by monoclous flowers in terminal bracted spikes, each bract bearing two glands—the male flowers having a small calyx with two or three broad shallow lobes, and two or rarely three free exserted stamens, and the female flowers bearing an ovary of two or three cells, which terminate in undivided styles united at the base, and ripen into two-valved carpels which on falling leave the receptacle armed with three hard spreading horns. There are about 13 species, natives of North and South America, the Mascarene Islands, and the islands of the Pacific. They are mostly smooth shrubs, usually with alternate short-petioled leaves and a few small female flowers solitary under the lower bracts of the dense sterile spike, which bears usually three male flowers under each of the short and broad upper bracts. One species, S. sylvatica, occurs from Virginia southward, for which see queen's-delight and silver-leaf.

2. [l. c.] A plant of the above genus, especially the officinal S. sylvatica.

stillion (stil'yōn), n. Same as stilling. G. Scamell, Breweries and Maltings, p. 92.

stillitory, n. An erroneous spelling of stillatory.

still-life, n. See still life, under still¹.

still-liquor (stil'lik'or), n. Bleaching-liquor prepared by the reaction of hydrochloric acid upon manganese binoxid in large stone chambers called stills (whence the name). It is a solution of manganese chlorid.

stillness (stil'nes), n. [< ME. stillnesse, < AS. stiles, stiles (= OFries. stīlness, stīlness = MLG. stīlness = OHG. stīlmissi, stīlnessi, MHG. stīlness, stīlness), < stille, still: see still¹ and -ness.] The state or character of being still.

(a) Rest; motionlessness; calmness: as, the stillness of the air or of the sea. (b) Noiselessness; quiet; silence: as, the stillness of the night. (c) Freedom from agitation or excitement: as, the stillness of the passions. (d) Habitual silence; taciturnity.

still-peering† (stil'pēr'ing), a. Appearing still.

O you leaden messengers,
That ride upon the violent speed of fire,
Fly with false aim; move the still-peering air,
That sings with piercing.
Shak., All's Well, iii. 2. 113.

[A doubtful word, by some read still-piercing.]

still-room (stil'rōm), n. 1. An apartment for distilling; a domestic laboratory.—2. A room connected with the kitchen, where coffee, tea, and the like are made, and the finer articles supplied to the table are made, stored, and prepared for use. [Eng.] still-stand (stil'stand), n. A standstill; a halt; a stop. [Rare.]

The tide swell'd up unto his height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., ii. 3. 64.

still-watcher (stil'woch'ēr), n. In distilling, a reservoir in which the density of the liquid given over is tested by a hydrometer in order to follow the progress of the distillation.

stilly (stil'i), a. [< ME. stīllich, < AS. stīllīc (= MLG. stīllīch, stīllīk); as still¹ + -ly¹.] Still; quiet.

Oft in the stilly night,
Ere Slumber's chain has bound me,
Fond Memory brings the light
Of other days around me.
Moore, Irish Melodies.

stilly (stil'li), adv. [< ME. stīllīche, < AS. stīllīc (= MD. stīllīch, also stīllēkens = MLG. stīllīken, stīllīken); as still¹ + -ly².] 1. Silently; without uproar.

And he a-roos as stīllīche as he myght.
Mertin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 180.

The hum of either army stilly sounds.
Shak., Hen. V., iv., Prolog., l. 5.

2. Calmly; quietly; without agitation.

He takes his own, and stilly goes his way.
Dr. H. More, Cupid's Conflict, st. 47.

stilogonidium (stī'lō-gō-nid'i-um), n.; pl. stilogonidia (-jī). [NL., < L. stīlus, a pointed instrument, + NL. gonidium, q. v.] In bot., a gonidium cut off or separated from the end of a sterigma.

stilp (stilp), v. i. [With variation of vowel, < stulp, a prop: see walup.] 1. To stalk; take long, high steps in walking.—2. To go on stilts or crutches. [Scotch.] stilpers (stil'pērz), n. pl. [< stilp + -er¹.] Stilts; crutches. [Scotch.] stilpnomelane (stilp-nom'e-lān), n. [< Gr. στῖλον, glittering (< στῖλῖν, glitter, glisten), + υἰάς (uēzās), black, dark.] A black, greenish-black, or bronze-colored mineral occurring in foliated plates or thin scales sometimes forming a velvety coating (the variety chalcodite), also in fibrous forms. It is essentially a hydrous silicate of iron.

stilpnosiderite (stilp-nō-sid'e-rīt), n. [< Gr. στῖλπνωδ, glittering, + ἒ. siderite.] Same as limonite.

stilt (stīlt), n. [Early mod. E. also stylte; < ME. stille, stylte; < Sw. styla, a prop, stilt, = Dan. stytte (cf. Norw. styltra), a stilt, = D. stelt, a stilt, wooden leg, = MLG. LG. stelte = OHG. stelza, MHG. G. stelze, a prop, crutch; perhaps akin to *stale*², *stalk*².] 1. A prop used in walking; a crutch.

Verely she was heled, and left her styttes thore,
And on her fete went home reasonably well.
Joseph of Arimathe (E. E. T. S.), p. 47.

I have laughed a-good to see the cripples
Go limping home to Christendom on stills.
Marlowe, Jew of Malta, ii. 3. 215.

2. One of two props or poles, each having a step or stirrup at some distance from the lower end, by means of which one may walk with the feet raised from the ground, and with a longer stride: used for crossing sandy or marshy places, streams, etc., and by children for amusement. Stilts were sometimes merely props fastened under the feet, as if very high-heeled shoes. Those used by children are slender poles about 6 feet long, with steps or stirrups 12 inches or more from one end; the longer end of the pole can be held by the hand or passed behind the arm. In a modified form the upper end of the pole is much shorter, and is fitted with a cross-handle which can be grasped by the hand, or is strapped to the leg below the knee. Stilts are used by the shepherds of the marshy Landes in southwestern France.

The doubtful fords and passages to try
With stills and lope-staves.

Drayton, Barons' Wars, i. 43.

3. In hydraul. engin., one of a set of piles forming the back for the sheet-piling of a starling. E. H. Knight.—4. The handle of a plow. Scott, Kenilworth, xv.—5. In ceram., a support, generally of iron, used to hold a piece of pottery in the kiln, to allow the fire free access to the bottom of the piece. Also called cockspur and spur (which see).—6. [Abbr. of stilt-bird.] In ornith., any bird of the genus Himantopus: so called from the extremely long, slender legs. The bill is likewise very slender, straight, and sharp. The body is slender, the neck long, the wings are long and pointed, and the tail is short. The stilts are wading-birds living in marshes. They are white below, with most of the upper parts glossy-black, the bill is black, and the legs are of some bright tint. They are very generally distributed over the world, nest on the ground, and lay four dark-colored, heavily spotted eggs. Their food consists of small soft animals found in the mud and water, which they explore with their probe-like bills. The common stilt of the Old World is H. candidus or melanocephalus; that of the United States is H. mexicanus, a rare bird in the eastern regions of the country, but abundant in some parts of the west. It is about 15 inches long, and 30 in extent of wings; the bill 2½ inches; the legs, from the feathers to the toes, 7½ inches. There are only three toes, which are semipalmated. This species is locally called longhanks and lawyer. The South American stilt is H. nigricollis; the Australian, H. leucocephalus. A related bird of Australia to which the name extends is Cladorhynchus pectoralis, having the toes webbed like those of the avocet.—Stilt prolegs, in entom., the prolegs of a caterpillar when they are unusually long, so that the body over them is much raised above the surface on which the insect walks.

Black-necked Stilt (Himantopus mexicanus).

stilt (stīlt), v. t. [< stilt, n.] To raise above the ordinary or normal position or surface, as if by the use of stilts.

The fluted columns [of San Moisé] are stilted upon pedestals, and their lines are broken by the bands which encircle them like broad barrel-hoops.

Howells, Venetian Life, xviii.

stilt-bird (stīlt'bērd), n. 1. The stilt or stilt-plover.—2. pl. Wading birds collectively; the grallatorial birds, constituting the old order Grallæ or Grallatores. Also called stilt-walkers. stilted (stīl'ted), p. a. Elevated, as if on stilts; hence, pompous; inflated; formal; stiff and bombastic: said especially of language: as, a stilted mode of expression; a stilted style.

His earliest verses have a stilted, academic flavor.
Stobæan, Viet. Poets, p. 39.

Stilted arch, an arch which does not spring immediately from the apparent or feigned imposts, as from the capitals of the supporting pillars, but from horizontal courses of masonry resting on these false imposts, as if the arch were raised on stilts. Such arches occur frequently in all mediæval styles, especially as a means of maintaining a uniform height when spans of different width are used in the same range. Compare arch.

Stilted Arch.—Mihrab in the Mosque of Sultan Hassan, Cairo.

stiltedness (stīl'ted-nes), n. Stilted character; pompous stiffness. Athenæum, No. 3195, p. 94. stiltify (stīl'ti-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. stiltified, pp. stiltifying. [< stilt + -i-fy.] To raise as on stilts; elevate or prop up, as with stilts. [Rare.]

Skinny dwarfs ye are, cushioned and stiltified into great fat giants.
C. Keade, Cloister and Hearth, lxx.

Stilton cheese. See *cheese*¹.

stilt-petrel (stīlt'pet'rel), n. A stormy petrel of the genus Fregata: so called from the length of the legs. F. grallaria is an example.

stilt-plover (stīlt'pluv'èr), n. The stilt or stilt-bird: so called because it has only three toes on each foot, like a plover.

stilt-sandpiper (stīlt'sand'pī-pèr), n. A long-legged sandpiper of America, Micropalama himantopus. The adult in summer is blackish above, with each feather edged and tipped with white, or tawny and bay; the under parts are mixed reddish, whitish, and black in streaks on the throat, elsewhere in bars; the ear-coverts are chestnut, the upper tail-coverts white with dusky bars, and the bill and feet greenish-black. The length is 8½ inches, the extent 16½. The young and the adults in winter are quite different, being ashy-gray above, with little or no trace of the reddish and black; a line over the eye and the whole under parts are white; and the jugulum and sides are suffused with ashy, and streaked with dusky. The bird inhabits North America, breeding in high latitudes, and migrating in the fall to Central and South America. See ent under Micropalama.

stilt-walker (stīlt'wā'kèr), n. 1. One who walks on stilts. Amer. Nat., Nov., 1889, p. 943.—2. A grallatorial bird; a stilt-bird.

stilty (stīl'ti), a. [< stilt + -y.] Inflated; pompous; stilted. Quarterly Rev.

stilus, n. See stylus.

Stilwell act. See act.

stime (stim), n. [Also styme; < ME. stime; a var. of stem, stem, a ray of light (see steam).] It is otherwise explained as perhaps a var., due to some interference, of shim, < AS. scīma, a light, brightness, a gleam of light (see *shim*¹, shime).] A ray of light; a glimmer; a glimpse: not now used except in negative expressions. [Now only Scotch.]

Ne he iwis might se a stīme.

Cursor Mundi, l. 19652. (Stratmann.)

Wherewith he blinded them so close

A stīme they could not see.

Robin Hood and the Beggar (Child's Ballads, V. 201).

stimulant (stim'ū-lānt), a. and n. [= F. stimulant = Sp. Pg. estimulante = It. stimolante, < L. stimulan(t)-s, ppr. of stimulare, prick, urge, stimulate: see stimulate.] 1. a. Stimulating; serving to stimulate, incite, or provoke; specifically, in physiol., temporarily quickening some functional or trophic process.—Stimulant balsam, a mixture of oil of turpentine 8 parts and flour mustard 1 part.

II. n. 1. That which stimulates, provokes, or incites; a stimulus; a spur.

The stimulant used to attract at first must be not only continued, but heightened to keep up the attraction.

Mrs. H. More, Cælebs, xxv.

2. In physiol., an agent which temporarily quickens some functional or trophic process. It may act directly on the tissue concerned, or may excite the nerves which effect the process or paralyze the nerves which inhibit it. Stimulants comprise certain medicinal substances, as ammonia, alcohol, ethylic ether, as well as physical conditions, such as warmth, cold, light, or electricity, esthetic effects, as music and other products of art, and emotions of various kinds, as joy, hope, etc. Stimulants have been divided into general and topical, according as they affect directly or indirectly the whole system or only a particular part.—Diffusible stimulants, those stimulants, as ether or ammonia, which have a speedy and quickly transient effect.

stimulate (stim'ū-lāt), v.; pret. and pp. stimulated, ppr. stimulating. [< L. stimulatus, pp. of stimulare (> It. stimolare = Sp. Pg. estimular = F. stimuler), prick, urge, stimulate, < stimulus, a goad: see stimulus.] 1. trans. 1. To prick; goad; excite, rouse, or animate to action or more vigorous exertion by some effective motive or by persuasion; spur on; incite.

The general must stimulate the mind of his soldiers to the perception that they are men, and the enemy is no more.
Emerson, Courage.

Mystery in nature stimulates inquiry; why should it not do so in religion? J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 149.

2. In physiol., to quicken temporarily some functional or trophic process in.—3. Specifically, to affect by the use of intoxicating drinks.

We were all slightly stimulated [with arrack] before a move was made toward the dinner table.

O'Donovan, Merv, xi.

Stimulating bath, a bath containing aromatic astringent or tonic ingredients. = Syn. 1. To encourage, impel, urge, instigate, provoke, whet, foment, kindle, stir up.

II. intrans. To act as a stimulus.

Urg'd by the stimulating goad,
I drag the cumbrous waggon's load.
Gay, To a Poor Man, l. 87.

stimulation (stim'ū-lā'shon), n. [= F. stimulation = Sp. estimulación = Pg. estimulação = It. stimolazione, < L. stimulatio(n)-s, a pricking, incitement, < stimulare, prick, goad, stimulate: see stimulate.] 1. The act of stimulating, or the state of being stimulated; urging; encouragement; incitement; increased or quickened action or activity.

The providential stimulations and excitations of the conscience. Ep. Ward, Sermon, Jan. 30, 1674. (Latham.)

A certain length of stimulation seems demanded by the inertia of the nerve-substance.

W. James, Prin. of Psychol., I. 648.

2. In med., the act or method of stimulating; the condition of being stimulated; the effect of the use of stimulants.

The latent morbid predisposition [to delirium tremens] engendered in the nervous system by prolonged and abnormal stimulation is evoked or brought into activity by the depressing influence of the shock [of a corporeal injury].

J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 153.

= Syn. 1. See stimulate.

stimulative (stim'ū-lā-tiv), a. and n. [= It. stimulativo; as stimulate + -ive.] 1. a. Having the quality of stimulating; tending to stimulate.

II. n. That which stimulates; that which rouses into more vigorous action; a stimulant or incentive.

Then there are so many stimulatives to such a spirit as mine in this affair, besides love!

Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, I. 225. (Davies.)

stimulator (stim'ū-lā-tor), n. [= F. stimulateur = It. stimolatore, < LL. stimulator, an instigator, < L. stimulare, prick, goad: see stimulate.] One who or that which stimulates.

stimulatrix (stim'ū-lā-tres), n. [= F. stimulatrice = It. stimolatrice, < L. stimulatrix, fem. of (LL.) stimulator: see stimulator.] A woman who stimulates or animates.

stimulose (stim'ū-lōs), a. [< F. stimuleux = It. stimoloso, < L. stimulosus, abounding with prickles, < stimulus, a prick, goad, prickle: see stimulus.] In bot., covered with stings or stimuli.

stimulus (stim'ū-lus), n.; pl. stimuli (-lī). [= F. stimulus, stimble = Sp. estimulo = Pg. estimulo = It. stimolo, stimulo, < L. stimulus, a goad, a pointed stake, fig. a sting, pang, an incitement, spur, stimulus, < √ stig-, also in instigare, set on, incite, urge, = Gr. στῖκεν, pierce, prick, = AS. stecean*, pierce: see *stick*¹.] 1. Literally, a goad.—2. In bot., a sting: as, the nettle is furnished with stimuli.—3. The point at the end of a crozier, pastoral staff, precentor's staff, or the like. In the staves of ecclesiastical authority the stimulus or point is regarded as the emblem of judgment or punishment.

4. Something that excites or rouses the mind or spirits; something that incites to action or exertion; an incitement or incentive.

We went to dine last Thursday with Mr. —, a neighboring clergyman, a haunch of venison being the stimulus to the invitation. Sydney Smith, in Lady Holland, vi.

The infinitely complex organizations of commerce have grown up under the stimulus of certain desires existing in each of us. H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 25.

5. In physiol., something which evokes some functional or trophic reaction in the tissues on which it acts.

Light does not act as a stimulus to the nervous substance, either fibres or cells, unless it have an intensity which is nearly deadly to that substance.

G. T. Ladd, Physiol. Psychology, p. 179.

Absolute stimulus difference, in psychophysics, the actual difference in strength between two stimuli.—Relative stimulus difference, in psychophysics, the ratio of the difference between two stimuli to their mean.—Stimulus receptivity, in psychophysics, the power of appreciating stimuli, measured by the least intensity of stimulus giving the greatest conscious effect.—Stimulus scope, in psychophysics, the difference between the measure of stimulus receptivity and the stimulus threshold.—Stimulus insensibility, in psychophysics, the power of perceiving a stimulus, so that the greater the stimulus susceptibility the lower the stimulus threshold.—Stimulus threshold, in psychophysics, the minimum amount of stimulus required to produce a conscious effect.

stimy (sti'mi), n. In golf, the position of a ball when it is directly between the hole for which an adversary is playing and his ball.

stimy (sti'mi), v. t. In golf, to hinder by a stimy.

stinch, v. t. [A var. of stanch.] To stanch.

First, the blood must be stunched, and how was that done? Bretton, Miseries of Manilla, p. 39. (Davies.)

stine (stin), n. A dialectal form of styan.

sting¹ (sting), v.; pret. and pp. stung (pret. formerly stang), pp. stinging. [< ME. stingen (pret. stang, stong, stonge, pp. stungen, stongen, y-stongen, y-stonge). < AS. stingan (pret. stang, pp. stungen) = Icel. stinga = Sw. stinga = Dan. stinge; cf. Goth. as-stiggan, push, push out. = L. stingere*, quench; see *stick*¹, v.] I. trans.

1†. To pierce; prick; puncture.

Thei ben y-sewed with whiz silk, . . .

Y-stongen with stiches.

Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), l. 553.

2†. To impale.

He stingeth him upon his speres orde.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 645.

3. To prick severely; give acute pain to by piercing with a sharp point; especially, to pierce and wound with any sharp-pointed weapon supplied with acrid or poisonous fluid, as a fang or sting, with which certain animals and plants are furnished; bite; urticate: as, to be stung by a bee, a scorpion, or a nettle, or by a serpent or a sea-nettle.

I often have been stung too with curst bees.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ll. 2.

4. To pain acutely, as if with a sting; goad: as, a conscience stung with remorse.

Unhappy Psyche, stung by these reproaches,

Profundly feels the wound dive in her heart.

J. Beaumont, Psyche, v. 14.

5. To stimulate; goad.

She was trying to task herself up to her duty. At last she stung herself into its performance by a suspicion.

Mrs. Gaskell, North and South, xxviii.

II. intrans. 1. To have a sting; be capable of wounding with a sting; use the sting: literally or figuratively: as, horns sting; epigrams often sting; a stinging blow.

At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.

Prov. xxiii. 32.

2. To give pain or smart; be sharply painful; smart: as, the wound stung for an hour.

Under the dust, beneath the grass,

Deep in dim death, where no thought stings.

A. C. Swinburne, Félise.

sting¹ (sting), n. [= Icel. stingi, a pin, a stitch in the side, = Sw. sting, a sting (in sense 4), = Dan. sting, stitch; from the verb.] 1. A sharp-pointed organ of certain insects and other animals, capable of inflicting by puncture a painful wound.

I bring no tales nor flatteries; in my tongue, sir,

I carry no fork'd stings. Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ll. 1.

In zool., specifically—(a) The modified ovipositor of the females of certain insects, as bees, wasps, hornets, and many other Hymenoptera; an aculeus; a terbra. This weapon is generally so constructed as to inflict a poisoned as well as punctured wound, which may become inflamed and very painful or even dangerous; an irritating fluid is injected through the tubular sting when the thrust is given. See cut under Hymenoptera. (b) The mouth-parts of various insects which are formed for piercing and sucking, as in the mosquito and other gnats or midges, gadflies, fleas, bedbugs, etc. In these cases the wound is often poisoned. See cuts under gnat and mosquito. (c) A stinging hair or spine of the larvae of various moths, or such organs collectively. See cuts under bag-moth, saddleback, and stinging. (d) The fangs of spiders, with which these creatures bite—in some cases, as of the Kistiyo or malin-gnatte, inflicting a very serious or even fatal wound. See cuts under chelicera and falx. (e) The curved or claw-like telson of the tail of a scorpion, inflicting a serious poisoned wound. See cuts under scorpion and Scorpionida. (f) One of the feet or claws of centipeds, which, in the case of some of the larger kinds, of tropical countries, inflict painful and dangerous wounds. (g) The poison-fang or venom-tooth of a noxious serpent; also, in popular misapprehension, the harmless soft forked tongue of any serpent. See cuts under Crotalus and sarke. (h) A fin-spine of some fishes, capable of wounding. In a few cases such spines are connected with a venom-gland whence poison is injected; in others, as the tail spines of sting-rays, the large bony sting, several inches long and sometimes jagged, is smeared with a substance which may cause a wound to fester. See cuts under stone-eel, sting ray. (i) An urticating organ, or such organs collectively, of the jellyfishes, sea-nettles, or other coelenterates. See cut under nematocyst.

2. In bot., a sort of sharp-pointed hollow hair, seated upon or connected with a gland which secretes an acrid or poisonous fluid, which, when introduced under the skin, produces a stinging pain. For plants armed with such stings, see cowhage, *nettle*¹ (with cut), nettle-tree, 2, and tread-softly.—3. The fine taper of a dog's tail. Sportsman's Gazetteer.—4. The operation or effect of a sting; the act of stinging; the usually poisoned punctured wound made by a sting; also, the pain or smart of such a wound.

Their softest touch as smart as lizards' stings!

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 2. 325.

5. Anything, or that in anything, which gives acute pain, or constitutes the principal pain; also, anything which goads to action; as, the sting of hunger; the stings of remorse; the stings of reproach.

The sting of death is sin.

1 Cor. xv. 56.

Whose sting is sharper than the sword's.

Shak., W. T., ii. 3. 86.

A bitter jest leaves a sting behind it.

Burton, Anat. of Mel., To the Reader, p. 77.

6. Mental pain inflicted, as by a biting or cutting remark or sarcasm; hence, the point of an epigram.

There is nothing harder to forgive than the sting of an epigram.

O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LXVI. 667.

7. A stimulus, irritation, or incitement; a netting or goading; an impulse.

The wanton stings and motions of the sense.

Shak., M. for M., i. 4. 59.

Exserted sting. See exserted.

sting² (sting), n. [Also sting; a var. of *stang*¹.]

1†. A pole.—2†. A pike; a spear.—3. An instrument for thatching.—4. The mast of a vessel. [Prov. Eng. or Scotch in all uses.]

sting-and-ling (sting'and-ling'), adv. [Lit. pole and line; < *sting*² + and + ling. See var. of *line*².] Entirely; completely; with everything; hence, by force. [Scotch.]

Unless he had been brought there sting and ling.

Scott, Antiquary, xlv.

stingaree (sting'ga-rē), n. [A corrupt form of sting-ray.] See sting-ray.

sting-bull (sting'būl), n. The greater weever, or sting-fish, Trachinus draco. See Trachinus and weever. Also called otter-fish.

stinger (sting'ēr), n. [< *sting*¹ + -er.] One who or that which stings, vexes, or gives acute pain.

That malice

Wears no dead flesh about it, 'tis a stinger.

Middleton, More Dissemblers Besides Women, iii. 2.

(a) An animal or a plant that stings.

The Mutilla being a well-armed insect, and a severe stinger.

E. D. Cope, Origin of the Fittest, p. 212.

(b) The sting of an insect. (c) A biting or cutting remark. [Colloq.] (d) A smart, telling blow. [Colloq.]

Rooke, . . . rushing at him incautiously, received a stinger that staggered him and nearly closed his right eye.

C. Reade, Hard Cash, xliii.

sting-fish (sting'fish), n. 1. Same as sting-bull. See cut under Trachinus.—2. The sea-scorpion, Cottus scorpius, a fish of the family Cottidae.

stingily (stin'ji-li), adv. In a stingy manner; with mean niggardliness; in a niggardly manner.

stinginess (stin'ji-nes), n. The state or quality of being stingy; extreme avarice; niggardliness; miserliness.

stinging (sting'ing), p. a. 1. That uses a sting; furnished with a sting or stinging organs of any sort; urticating: as, a stinging insect or sea-nettle.—2. In bot., noting a plant furnished with stinging hairs. See *stimp*¹, 2.—3. That pierces or wounds as with a sting; that causes acute pain, irritation, or the like; keen; sharp; pungent; telling: as, a stinging tongue; a stinging rebuke or remark.

He wrapped her warm in his seaman's coat,

Against the stinging blast.

Longfellow, Wreck of the Hesperus.

The stinging lash of wit.

O. W. Holmes, Opening of Fifth Ave. Theatre, N. Y., 1873.

Stinging ant, an ant of the family Myrmicidae.—Stinging bug, the blood-sucking cone-nose, Conorhinus sanguisugus, a common bug of the family Reduviidae, which sucks the blood of man and domestic animals, and inflicts a painful wound. See cut under Conorhinus.—Stinging caterpillar, the larva of any one of certain bombycid moths in the United States, as Saturia maia, Hyperclaria io, Empretia stimulea, Phobeton pythecium, Stinging Caterpillar, or Slug-caterpillar, and Moth of Lagoa opercularis, both natural size.

Linnacodes scapha, and Lagoa opercularis, which are provided with stinging spines.—Stinging hair. See hair and stinging spine.—Stinging nettle. See *nettle*¹, 1.—Stinging spine, in entom., one of the modified bristles of any stinging caterpillar, which are sharp and have an urticating effect. See cuts under bag-moth and saddleback.—Stinging tree. Same as nettle-tree, 2.

stinging-bush (sting'ing-būsh), n. Same as tread-softly.

stinging-cell (sting'ing-sel), n. The thread-cell or lasso-cell with which any coelenterate, as a sea-nettle, urticates. See nematophore, and cuts under cnida and nematocyst.

stingingly (sting'ing-li), adv. With stinging effect.

stingless (sting'les), a. [< *sting*¹ + -less.] Having no sting, as an insect. Shak., J. C., v. 1. 35.—Stingless nettle, the riceweed or clearweed, Pilea pumila. See clearweed.

sting-moth (sting'môth), n. The Australian Doratifera vulcerans, whose larva is capable of inflicting a stinging wound.

stingo (sting'gō), n. [With a simulated It. or Sp. or L. termination, < *sting*¹: in allusion to its sharp taste.] Strong malt liquor. [Colloq.]

Come, let's in and drink a cup of stingo.

Randolph, Hey for Honesty, ii. 6.

sting-ray (sting'rā), n. [Also, corruptly, stingaree, stingoree; < *sting*¹ + *ray*².] A batoid fish of the family Trygonidae, as Trygon (or Dasybatis) pastinaca, having a long, smooth, flexible, lash-like tail armed near the base with a bony spine several inches long, sharp at the point, and serrated along the sides. It is capable of inflicting a severe and very painful wound, which appears to be poisoned by the slime with which the sting is covered. There are many species of sting-rays, in some of which there are two or three spines bundled together. The British species above named is locally known as fire-flare or fiery-flare.

The commonest sting-ray of the North Atlantic coast of the United States is T. centroura, locally known as clam-cracker, and corruptly called stingaree. T. sabina is a similar southern species. The name extends to any ray with a tail-spine. See Myliobatidae (a).

(b) The sting of an insect. (c) A biting or cutting remark. [Colloq.] (d) A smart, telling blow. [Colloq.]

Rooke, . . . rushing at him incautiously, received a stinger that staggered him and nearly closed his right eye.

C. Reade, Hard Cash, xliii.

sting-fish (sting'fish), n. 1. Same as sting-bull. See cut under Trachinus.—2. The sea-scorpion, Cottus scorpius, a fish of the family Cottidae.

stingily (stin'ji-li), adv. In a stingy manner; with mean niggardliness; in a niggardly manner.

stinginess (stin'ji-nes), n. The state or quality of being stingy; extreme avarice; niggardliness; miserliness.

stinging (sting'ing), p. a. 1. That uses a sting; furnished with a sting or stinging organs of any sort; urticating: as, a stinging insect or sea-nettle.—2. In bot., noting a plant furnished with stinging hairs. See *stimp*¹, 2.—3. That pierces or wounds as with a sting; that causes acute pain, irritation, or the like; keen; sharp; pungent; telling: as, a stinging tongue; a stinging rebuke or remark.

He wrapped her warm in his seaman's coat,

Against the stinging blast.

Longfellow, Wreck of the Hesperus.

The stinging lash of wit.

O. W. Holmes, Opening of Fifth Ave. Theatre, N. Y., 1873.

Stinging ant, an ant of the family Myrmicidae.—Stinging bug, the blood-sucking cone-nose, Conorhinus sanguisugus, a common bug of the family Reduviidae, which sucks the blood of man and domestic animals, and inflicts a painful wound. See cut under Conorhinus.—Stinging caterpillar, the larva of any one of certain bombycid moths in the United States, as Saturia maia, Hyperclaria io, Empretia stimulea, Phobeton pythecium,

Linnacodes scapha, and Lagoa opercularis, which are provided with stinging spines.—Stinging hair. See hair and stinging spine.—Stinging nettle. See *nettle*¹, 1.—Stinging spine, in entom., one of the modified bristles of any stinging caterpillar, which are sharp and have an urticating effect. See cuts under bag-moth and saddleback.—Stinging tree. Same as nettle-tree, 2.

stinging-bush (sting'ing-būsh), n. Same as tread-softly.

stinging-cell (sting'ing-sel), n. The thread-cell or lasso-cell with which any coelenterate, as a sea-nettle, urticates. See nematophore, and cuts under cnida and nematocyst.

stingingly (sting'ing-li), adv. With stinging effect.

stingless (sting'les), a. [< *sting*¹ + -less.] Having no sting, as an insect. Shak., J. C., v. 1. 35.—Stingless nettle, the riceweed or clearweed, Pilea pumila. See clearweed.

sting-moth (sting'môth), n. The Australian Doratifera vulcerans, whose larva is capable of inflicting a stinging wound.

stingo (sting'gō), n. [With a simulated It. or Sp. or L. termination, < *sting*¹: in allusion to its sharp taste.] Strong malt liquor. [Colloq.]

Come, let's in and drink a cup of stingo.

Randolph, Hey for Honesty, ii. 6.

sting-ray (sting'rā), n. [Also, corruptly, stingaree, stingoree; < *sting*¹ + *ray*².] A batoid fish of the family Trygonidae, as Trygon (or Dasybatis)

pastinaca, having a long, smooth, flexible, lash-like tail armed near the base with a bony spine several inches long, sharp at the point, and serrated along the sides. It is capable of inflicting a severe and very painful wound, which appears to be poisoned by the slime with which the sting is covered. There are many species of sting-rays, in some of which there are two or three spines bundled together. The British species above named is locally known as fire-flare or fiery-flare.

The commonest sting-ray of the North Atlantic coast of the United States is T. centroura, locally known as clam-cracker, and corruptly called stingaree. T. sabina is a similar southern species. The name extends to any ray with a tail-spine. See Myliobatidae (a).

(b) The sting of an insect. (c) A biting or cutting remark. [Colloq.] (d) A smart, telling blow. [Colloq.]

Rooke, . . . rushing at him incautiously, received a stinger that staggered him and nearly closed his right eye.

C. Reade, Hard Cash, xliii.

sting-fish (sting'fish), n. 1. Same as sting-bull. See cut under Trachinus.—2. The sea-scorpion, Cottus scorpius, a fish of the family Cottidae.

stingily (stin'ji-li), adv. In a stingy manner; with mean niggardliness; in a niggardly manner.

stinginess (stin'ji-nes), n. The state or quality of being stingy; extreme avarice; niggardliness; miserliness.

stinging (sting'ing), p. a. 1. That uses a sting; furnished with a sting or stinging organs of any sort; urticating: as, a stinging insect or sea-nettle.—2. In bot., noting a plant furnished with stinging hairs. See *stimp*¹, 2.—3. That pierces or wounds as with a sting; that causes acute pain, irritation, or the like; keen; sharp; pungent; telling: as, a stinging tongue; a stinging rebuke or remark.

He wrapped her warm in his seaman's coat,

Against the stinging blast.

Longfellow, Wreck of the Hesperus.

The stinging lash of wit.

O. W. Holmes, Opening of Fifth Ave. Theatre, N. Y., 1873.

Stinging ant, an ant of the family Myrmicidae.—Stinging bug, the blood-sucking cone-nose, Conorhinus sanguisugus, a common bug of the family Reduviidae, which sucks the blood of man and domestic animals, and inflicts a painful wound. See cut under Conorhinus.—Stinging caterpillar, the larva of any one of certain bombycid moths in the United States, as Saturia maia, Hyperclaria io, Empretia stimulea, Phobeton pythecium,

Linnacodes

The gripping and stingy humour of the covetous.

Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. vii.

3. Seanty; not full or plentiful.

When your teams

Drag home the stingy harvest.

Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Birds of Killingworth.

= Syn. 2. Parrimonious, Miserly, etc. (see penurious), illiberal, ungenerous, saving, chary.

stink (stingk), v.; pret. and pp. stunk (pret. formerly stank), pp. stinking. [< ME. stinken, stynken (pret. stank, stonk, pp. stonken), < AS. stincan (pret. stanc, pp. stuncon), smell, have an odor, rise as vapor, = MD. D. stinken = MLG. LG. stinken = OHG. stincan, smell, have an odor, MHG. G. stinken = Sw. stinka = Dan. stinke, have a bad smell, stink; cf. Gr. ῥάγος, rancid. Perhaps connected with leel. stökkva, spring, leap, sprinkle, but not with Goth. stiggk-wan, smite, thrust, strike; cf. L. tangere, touch (see tact, tangent). Hence ult. steneh.] I. intrans. To emit a strong offensive smell; send out a disgusting odor; hence, to be in bad odor; have a bad reputation; be regarded with disfavor.

And therewithal he stank so horribel.

Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 627.

Full Fate upon us,

Our memories shall never stink behind us.

Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, iii. 7.

Stinking badger, the stinkard or teledu.—Stinking bunt. Same as stinking smut.—Stinking camomile. Same as mayweed.—Stinking cedar, a coniferous tree of the genus Torreya; so named from the strong peculiar odor of the wood and foliage, especially when bruised or burnt. Most properly so called is T. taxifolia, an extremely local tree of western Florida, an evergreen of moderate size, with bright-yellow (or in old trees reddish) wood susceptible of a fine polish, very durable in contact with the soil, and, where found, largely used for fence-posts. Also called sarin. See cut under Torreya. The similar T. californica is the California nutmeg (see nutmeg). T. grandis of China, called kaya, affords a good timber. T. nucifera, a smaller Japanese species, yields a wood valued by coopers and turners, and a food-oil is expressed from its nuts. Also stinking yew.—Stinking crane's-bill. Same as herb-robert.—Stinking goose-foot. Same as notchweed.—Stinking hellebore, hoarhound. See the nouns.—Stinking mayweed, the common mayweed.—Stinking nightshade. Same as hembane.—Stinking nutmeg, the California nutmeg, one of the stinking cedars. See nutmeg.—Stinking smut. See smut, 3.—Stinking vervain, the guinea-hen weed. See Petiveria.—Stinking yew. Same as stinking cedar.

II. trans. To annoy with an offensive smell; affect in any way by an offensive odor. Imp. Dict.

stink (stingk), n. [< ME. stinke, stynk, stynke; from the verb. Cf. steneh.] 1. A strong offensive smell; a disgusting odor; a steneh.

And fro him cometh out Smoke and Stynk and Fuyr, and so moche Abhymynacion that unethie no man may there endure. Manderüle, Travels, p. 232.

In Koln, a town of monks and bones,
And pavements fanged with murderous stones,
And rags, and hags, and hideous wenches—
I counted two and seventy stenehs,
All well-defined and several stinks!

Coleridge, Cologne.

2†. Hell, regarded as a region of sulphurous smells (or of infamy?).

So have I doon in erthe, allas the while!
That certes, but if thou my socour be,
To stynk eterne he wol my gost exile.

Chaucer, A. B. C., l. 56.

3. A disagreeable exposure. [Slang.]

The newspapers of the district where he was then located had raised before the eye and mind of the public what the "patterers" of his class [genteel beggars] proverbially call a stink—that is, had opened the eyes of the unwary to the movements of "Chelsea George."

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, l. 250.

Fire stink, in coal-mining, a smell indicating the spontaneous combustion of the coal or coal somewhere in the mine. = Syn. 1. Steneh, etc. See smell.

stink-alive (stingk'a-liv'), n. The bib or pout, Gadus tuscus: so called because it speedily putrefies after death. J. G. Wood.

stinkard (stingk'kãrd), n. [< stink + -ard.] 1†. One who stinks; hence, a mean, paltry fellow.

Your stinkard has the self-same liberty to be there in his tobacco-fumes which your sweet courtier hath.

Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 133.

That foolish knave, that hose and doublet stinkard.

Chapman, Gentleman Usher, v. 1.

2. The stinking badger of Java, Mydaus meliceps; the teledu. See cut under teledu.—3. In icth., a shark of the genus Mustelus.

stinkardlyt (stingk'kãrd-li), a. [< stinkard + -lyt.] Stinking; mean.

You notorious stinkardly bearward.

B. Jonson, Epicæne, iv. 1.

stink-ball (stingk'hãl), n. A preparation of pitch, resin, niter, gunpowder, colophony, asafetida, and other offensive and suffocating ingredients, placed in earthen jars, formerly used for throwing upon an enemy's decks at close quarters, and still in use among Eastern pirates.

stink-bird (stingk'bãrd), n. The hoactzin, Opisthocomus cristatus.

stink-bug (stingk'bug), n. Any one of several malodorous bugs, particularly the common squash-bug, Anasa tristis, of the Coreidae. See cut under squash-bug.

stinker (stingk'kãr), n. [< stink + -er.] 1. One who or that which stinks; a stinkard; a stink-pot.

The air may be purified . . . by burning of stink-pots or stinkers in contagious lanes. Harvey, Consumptions.

2. One of several large petrels, as the giant fulmar, Ossifraga gigantea, which acquire an offensive odor from feeding on blubber or carrion.

stinkhorn (stingk'hõrn), n. [< stink + horn.] In bot., a common name for certain ill-smelling fungi of the genus Phallus. The most common species is P. impudicus. See Phallus, 3.

stinkingly (stingk'ing-li), adv. In a stinking manner; disgustingly; with an offensive smell.

stinking-weed (stingk'ing-wẽd), n. 1. A species of Cassia, C. occidentalis, found distributed throughout the tropics; so called from its fetid leaves. Also stinking-wood.—2. The ragwort, Senecio Jacobæa. [Local, Scotland.]

stinking-wood (stingk'ing-wũd), n. 1. Same as stinking-weed, 1.—2. A leguminous shrub, Anagyris fetida, of southern Europe.

stinkpot (stingk'põt), n. 1. A pot or jar of stinking materials; a chamber-pot. Smollett.

—2†. A receptacle containing a disinfectant. See the quotation under stinker.—3. A stink-ball.—4. The musk-turtle, Cinosternum odoratum or Aromochelys odorata, a stinking kind of turtle common in some parts of the United States. It is a common inhabitant of the eastern and central streams of the country, and is very troublesome to fishermen by swallowing their bait. It is useful as a scavenger.

Stinkpot (Cinosternum odoratum or Aromochelys odorata).

stink-rat (stingk'rat), n. The musk-turtle. See stinkpot, 4. [Local, U. S.] stink-shad (stingk'shad), n. Same as mud-shad.

stinkstone (stingk'stõn), n. A variety of limestone which gives off a fetid odor when quarried or struck by a hammer. This odor comes from the escape of sulphureted hydrogen, and in most cases it seems to be caused by the decomposition of embedded organic matter. In some quarries in the Carboniferous limestone of Ireland the smell has been found so overpowering that the men were sickened by it, and had to leave off work for a time. (Jukes.) Also called fetid limestone, and strinstone.

stink-trap (stingk'trap), n. A contrivance to prevent the escape of effluvia from the openings of drains; a steneh-trap.

stink-turtle (stingk'tãr'tl), n. The musk-turtle. See stinkpot, 4.

stinkweed (stingk'wẽd), n. 1. An ill-smelling cruciferous plant, Diploaxis muralis, of southern Europe. [Prov. Eng.].—2. The jimson-weed.

stinkwood (stingk'wũd), n. One of several trees with fetid wood. (a) In South Africa, Ocotea bullata (see Ocotea) and Celtis Kraussiana, the latter a tree 20 feet high and 2 feet in diameter, with a tough yellowish-white wood used for planks, cooperage, etc. (b) In Tasmania, a shrub or tree, Zieria Smithii, also found in Australia, and sometimes called sand-fly bush. (c) In the Mascarene Islands, Patelin Mauritanica of the Myrtaceæ, a tree from 20 to 40 feet high, whose wood is used for foundations, not being attacked by white ants.

stint (stint), v. [*Also obs. or dial. stent; < ME. stinten, stynen, stenten, < AS. stytan, make dull, blunt, orig. make short (also in comp. forstytan, ge-stentan, warn, restrain) (= leel. stytta (for stymta), shorten, = Sw. dial. stynta, shorten, = Norw. stytta, stutta, shorten, tuck up the clothes), < stunt, dull, obtuse, stupid, = leel. stuttr = OSw. stunt = Norw. stult, short: see stunt.] I. trans. 1. To ease to cease; put an end to; stay; stop. [Obsolete or archaic.]

See, "al forgeven," and stynt is al this fare [disturbance] Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1107.

Make war breed peace, make peace stint war.

Shnk, T. of A., v. 4. 83.

Stint thy babbling tongue!

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, l. 1.

The thin jackals waiting for the feast

Stinted their hungry howls as he passed by.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 172.

2†. To bring to a stand; stay; put a stop to.

The kynes were stinted at the entre of the forest by a river, and ther assembled alle her peple that thei myght haue.

Martin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 154.

3. To forbear; cease.

Art thou a serving man? then scrue agalene,

And stint to steale as common souldours dn.

Gascogne, Steele Glas (ed. Arber), p. 67.

Spare not to spur, nor stint to ride,

Until thou come to fair Tweedsidde.

Scott, L. of L. M., l. 22.

4. To limit; restrain; restrict; hence, to limit or confine to a scanty allowance; as, to stint one's self in food; to stint service or help.

[He] travels halfe a day without any refreshment then water, whereof wisely and temperately he stinted himselfe.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, II. 135.

Was the infinite One to be confined to this narrow space? Could His love be stinted to the few to whom He had especially revealed His Will? Channing, Perfect Life, p. 61.

5. To assign a definite task to; prescribe a specified amount of labor for; as, to stint a pupil or a servant. See stint, n., 2.—6. To cover or serve (a mare) successfully; get with foal. See the quotation under stinted, 2.

II. intrans. 1. To cease; desist; stay; stop; hold.

Of this cry they wolde nevere stente.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 45.

He styntid not, nor neuer wold he sese,
And with his swerd where that his stroke glyut,
Owt of ther sadll full redely they went.

Gearydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 2420.

And swears she'll never stint. Shak., Pericles, iv. 4. 42.

2. To be saving or careful in expenditure.

It's in things for show they cut short; while for such as me, it's in things for life we've to stint.

Mrs. Gaskell, Mary Barton, xxxvii.

stint (stint), n. [Also obs. or dial. stent; < stint, v.] 1. Limit; bound; limitation; restriction; restraint: as, common without stint (that is, without limitation or restriction as to the extent of the pasturage, the number of cattle to be pastured, or the period of the year).

If the summe which the debter oweth be above the stint, he shall not be released. Coryat, Cruicities, l. 167.

I know not how, Diuine Providence seemeth to haue set those Scythian stints to the Persian proceedings.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 352.

By rallying round the throne the whole strength of the Royalists and High-Churchmen, and by using without stint all the resources of corruption, he [Danby] flattered himself that he could manage the Parliament.

Macaulay, Sir W. Temple.

2. Fixed amount or quantity; allowance; prescribed or allotted task or performance: as, a certain stint of work.

Put me to a certain stint, sir; allow me but a red herring a-day. Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, ii. 1.

In the divided or social state, these functions are parcelled out to individuals, each of whom aims to do his stint of the joint work. Emerson, Misc., p. 72.

Margaret had a new stint at quilling.

S. Judd, Margaret, i. 2.

If you are sick or weak, and can't finish your stent, you are given twenty blows with the cat.

The Century, XXXVII. 36.

3. One of several small species of sandpiper, especially of the genus Actodromas; a sandpeep. The common stint is the dunlin, purre, or ox-bird, Felidna alpina. (See dunlin.) This is an early, if not the first, application of the name, as by Ray, who called this bird also ozeze and least snipe. The little stint is Actodromas minutata; the least atint is A. minutilla, which abounds in North America, and is also known as Wilson's sandpiper. Temminck's stint is A. temminckii; the red-necked, A. ruficollis. There are several others of the same genus. The broad-billed sandpiper, Linnæola platyrhynchos, is a kind of stint, and the spoon-billed, Euryorhynchus pygmaeus, is another. Extension of the name to the sandpiper and to phalarope is unusual.

American Least Stint (Actodromas minutilla).

stintance† (stin'tans), n. [< stint + -ance.] Stint; limit; restriction; restraint. London Prodigal, p. 7. (Halliwel.) [Rare.] stinted (stin'ted), p. a. 1. Limited; scanty; serimped.

Oh! trifle not with wants you cannot feel,
 Nor mock the misery of a stinted meal.
Crabbe, Works, I. 9.

2. In foal. See stint, v. t., 6. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

Stinted, 'in foal.' The word was printed, in this sense, in a catalogue of live-stock for sale at Nashville a year or two ago [1893]. Halliwel and Wright give it as an adjective, meaning in foal, in the West of England, Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., XVII. 44.

stintedness (stin'ted-nes), n. The character or condition of being stinted.

stinter (stin'ter), n. [< stint + -er.] One who or that which stints, checks, or puts a stop to: as, a stinter of strife.

Let us now see whether a set form, or this extemporary way, be the greater hinderer and stinter of it.
South, Sermons, II. iii.

stintingly (stin'ting-li), adv. Restrictedly; restrainedly; grudgingly. George Eliot, Janet's Repentance, viii.

stintless (stin'tles), a. [< stint + -less.] 1†. Ceaseless.

His life was nothing else but stintless passion.
Roseland, Betraying of Christ (1508). (Halliwel.)

2. Without stint; unstinted; generous.

He gets glimpses of the same stintless hospitality.
The Century, XXVII. 201.

stinty (stin'ti), a. [< stint + -y.] Restricted; grudging; illiberal. [Rare.]

Those endowments which our Anglo-Saxon forefathers made to win for themselves and kindred such ghostly aids to another world were neither few nor stinty.
Rock, Church of our Fathers, ii. 327.

stony, n. See stony.

Stipa (sti'pä), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1753), named from the flaxen appearance of the feathery awns of S. pennata; < L. stipa, stupa, stuppa, the coarse part of flax, tow: see stupa.] A genus of grasses, of the tribe Agrostidæ, type of the subtribe Stipeæ. It is characterized by one-flowered paucicapped spikelets, with their pedicels not continued beyond the flower, which contains three or perhaps sometimes only two lodicules and a narrow acuminate flowering glume indurated closely around the grain and prolonged, usually by a joint, into a long and commonly conspicuously twisted or bent awn. There are nearly 100 species, widely dispersed through both tropical and temperate regions. They are tufted grasses, usually tall, with convolute leaves and a slender, sparingly branched panicle of rather long scattered spikelets, with awns sometimes extremely attenuated. A general name of the species is feather-grass, applying particularly to the highly ornamental S. pennata of Europe. The only common species of the eastern United States is S. avenacea, the black oat-grass; westward the species are numerous—several, known as bunch-, beard-, or feather-grass, being somewhat valuable wild forage-plants of the mountains and great plain. Among these are S. comata (silk-grass) and S. spartea (porcupine-grass), the latter remarkable for its hygrometric awns, which are coiled when dry, but uncoil under moisture and, when resisted, tend to push the seed into the ground. S. viridula, var. robusta, of Mexico, New Mexico, etc., is reported to have a narcotic effect upon horses, and is called sleepy-grass. S. aristiglumis of Australia is a valuable fodder-plant, of remarkably rapid growth; S. micrantha of Queensland borrows the name of bambusa. S. tenacissima and S. arcuaria, on account of their large membranous spikelets and two-cleft flowering glume, are sometimes separated as a genus, Macrochloa (Kunth, 1835). See esparto, alfa, and atocha-grass.

stipate (sti'pät), a. [< L. stipatus, pp. of stipare, crowd, press together. Cf. constipate.] In bot., crowded.

stipe¹ (stip), n. [A dial. var. of *steep*¹. Cf. Stiper Stone group.] A steep ascent. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.] stipe² (stip), n. [< F. stipe, a stipe, = Sp. estipite, a door-post, = It. stipite, a stock, trunk, post, door-post, < L. stipes (stipit-), a stock, trunk, post, poet, a tree, a branch of a tree; perhaps cognate with E. stiff.] 1. In bot., a stalk or support of some sort, the word being variously employed. (a) In flowering plants, the stalk formed by the receptacle or some part of it, or by a carpel. To distinguish further this kind of stipe, various other terms are employed, as thecephore, gonophore, anthophore, gynobase, and carpopore. See cut under Arachis. (b) The stalk or petiole of a frond, especially of a fern or seaweed. See cut under seaweed. (c) In fungi, especially of the genus Agaricus, the stalk or stem which supports the pileus or cap. (d) The caudex of a tree-fern. Also stipes. See cut in next column.

a, Longitudinal section of the flower of Gynandropis pentaphylla, showing the calyx, two of the petals, two of the stamens, and the stipitate ovary. b, Frond of Asplenium Trichomanes. c, Agaricus campestris. (s, Stipe in a, b, and c.)

2. In anat., a stem: applied to two branches, anterior and posterior, of the zygol or paraceipital fissure of the brain. B. G. Wilder.—3. In zool., a stipes.

stipel (sti'pel), n. [*< NL. stipella, for stipitella*, dim. of L. stipes, a post: see stipe².] In bot., a secondary stipule situated at the base of the leaflets of a compound leaf. Unlike stipules, there is only a single one to each leaflet, with the exception of the terminal leaflet, which has a pair.

stipellate (sti'pel-ät), a. [*< NL. stipellatus, < stipella*, a stipel: see stipel.] In bot., bearing or having stipels.

stipend (sti'pend), n. [= Sp. Pg. estipendio = It. stipendio, < L. stipendium, a tax, impost, tribute; in military use, pay, salary; contr. for stipendium*, < stips, a gift, donation, alms (given in small coin), + pendere, weigh out: see pendent.] A fixed periodical allowance or payment: settled or fixed pay; salary; pay; specifically, in Scotland, the salary paid to a clergyman; the income of an ecclesiastical living.

Americus Vesputius, . . . under the stipende of the Portugales, hadde sayled toward the south pole many degrees beyond the Equinoctiall.

Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on America, [ed. Arber, p. 134].

'Twas a wonder with how small a stipend from his father Tom Tusher contrived to make a good figure.
Thackeray, Henry Esmond, x.

= Syn. Pay, etc. See *salary*¹.

stipend (sti'pend), v. t. [< F. stipendier = Sp. Pg. estipendiar = It. stipendiare, pay, hire, < L. stipendiari, receive pay, serve for pay, < stipendium, pay: see stipend, n.] To pay by settled stipend or wages; put upon or provide with a stipend. Shelton, tr. of Don Quixote, xlviii. (Latham.) [Rare.] stipendiarian (sti-pen-di-ä-ri-an), a. [< stipendiary + -an.] Acting from mercenary considerations; hired; stipendiary. Imp. Diet.

stipendiary (sti-pen-di-ä-ri), a. and n. [< F. stipendiaire = Sp. Pg. estipendiario = It. stipendiario, < L. stipendiarius, pertaining to tribute, contribution, or pay, < stipendium, tribute, pay: see stipend.] 1. A. Receiving wages or salary; performing services for a stated price or compensation; paid.—Stipendiary curate. See *curate*¹.—Stipendiary estate, in law, a feud or estate granted in return for services, generally of a military kind.—Stipendiary magistrate, in Great Britain, a police justice sitting in large cities and towns, under appointment by the Home Secretary on behalf of the crown.

II. n.; pl. stipendiaries (-riz). 1. One who performs services for a settled payment, salary, or stipend.—2. A stipendiary magistrate. See under I.—3. In law, a feudatory owing services to his lord.

stipendiate† (sti-pen-di-ät), v. t. [< L. stipendiatu, pp. of stipendiar, receive pay, serve for pay, < stipendium, tribute, salary: see stipend, v.] To endow with a stipend or salary.

Besides the exercise of the horse, arms, dancing, &c., all the sciences are taught in the vulgar French by professors *stipendiate*d by the great Cardinal.
Evelyn, Diary, Sept. 14, 1644.

Stiper Stone group. [< Stiper Stones (see def.).] In geol., a subgroup, the equivalent of the Arenig series in Carnarvonshire: so called from the name Stiper Stones given to a prominent ridge of quartzose rocks rising above the moorland in Shropshire, and extending for about ten miles in length. The Arenig or Stiper Stone group, according to Murchison's original classification (1833-4), formed the base of the Silurian system. It is now considered to be the base of Lapworth's Urdovician, of the Cambro-Silurian of Jukes, and of the Middle Cambrian of other English geologists.

stipes (sti'péz), n. [NL. < L. stipes, stips (stipit-), a stock, trunk: see stipe².] 1. In bot., same as stipe².—2. In zool., a stalk or stem, as an eye-stalk or a footstalk: a stipe. Specifically—(a) In entom., the footstalk of the maxilla of an insect, the outer or main division of that organ; the second joint of the maxilla, borne upon the carpal, and through the palpi and subgalea bearing the palpus, galea, and lacinia, when these organs exist. Also called shaft. See cuts under galea and Insecta. (b) In Myriapoda: (1) The proximal or median one of two pieces of which the protomala, or so-called mandible, consists, the other being the cardo. See protomala, and figure under epilabrum. (2) One of two sets, an inner and an outer, of broad plates into which the deutomala, or second pair of mouth-appendages, of a myriapod is divided. See deutomala. A. S. Packard, Proc. Amer. Philos. Soc., June, 1883, pp. 198, 200.

stipiform (sti'pi-förm), a. [< L. stipes, stips (stipit-), a stock, trunk, + forma, form.] In bot. and zool., having the form or appearance of a stipe or stipes. See stipe², stipes.

stipitate (sti'pi-tät), a. [*< NL. stipitatus, < L. stipes (stipit-), a stock, trunk: see stipe².] In bot. and zool., having or supported by a stipo or stipes; elevated on a stipe.

stipitiform (sti'pi-ti-förm), a. [< L. stipes (stipit-), a stock, trunk (see stipe²), + forma, form.] In bot. and zool., having the form or character of a stipe or stipes; stipiform; stalk-like.

stipiture (sti'pi-tür), n. A bird of the genus Stipiturus; an emu-wren.

Stipiturus (sti-pi-tür'us), n. [NL. (Lesson, 1831). < L. stipes (stipit-), a stock, trunk, + Gr. οἰπά, tail.] An Australian genus of warbler-like birds, assigned to the Malurinae or placed elsewhere, having the tail curiously formed of ten feathers with stiffened shafts and loose decomposed barbs (whence the name); the emu-wrens.

Emu-wren (Stipiturus malacurus).

the true position of all these forms seems to be among or near the reed- or grass-warblers, especially such as have but ten tail-feathers. See warbler.

stipple (stip'l), v. t.; pret. and pp. stippled, ppr. stippling. [< D. stippen, speckle, dot over (cf. stippel, a speckle, dim. of stip, a point), freq. of stippen (> G. stippen), prick, dot, speckle, < stip, MD. stip, stip, a point, dot.] To produce gradation in color or shade in (any material) by means of dots or small spots. See stippling.

The interlaying of small pieces can not altogether avoid a broken, stippled, spotty effect.

Milman, Latin Christianity, xiv. 10.

stipple (stip'l), n. [< stipple, v.] 1. In the fine arts, same as stippling.—2. In decorative art, an intermediate tone or color, or combination of tones, used to make gradual the passage from one color to another in a design.—Stipple-engraving process, the process of making an engraved plate by stippling. The first step is to lay an etching-ground on a copperplate; the next, after the subject has been transferred as in etching, is to dot in the outline; after which the darker parts are marked with dots, which are laid in larger and more closely in the deeper shades. The plate is then bitten in, the ground is removed, and the lighter parts are laid in with dry-point or the stipple-graver.

stippled (stip'ld), p. a. Spotted; shaded or modeled by means of minute dots applied with the point of the brush or in a similar way.

stipple-graver (stip'l-grä'vër), n. An engraver's tool of which the point is bent downward so as to facilitate the making of small dots or indentations in the surface of a copperplate.

stippler (stip'lër), n. [< stipple + -er.] 1. One who stipples.—2. A brush or tool used for stippling: as, a stippler made of hog's hair.

stippling (stip'ling), n. [Verbal n. of stipple, v.] In the fine arts, dotted work of any kind, whether executed with the brush-point, the pencil, or the stipple-graver.

stiptic†, a. and n. See stiptic.

stipula (sti'pü-lä), n.; pl. stipula (-lä). [NL. < L. stipula, a stalk: see stipule.] In ornith., same as stipule.

stipulaceous (sti-pü-lä'shi-us), a. [< stipula + -aceous.] In bot., same as stipular.

stipular (sti'pü-lär), a. [< NL. stipula + -ar.] In bot., of, belonging to, or standing in the place of stipules; growing on stipules, or close to them: as, stipular glands.—Stipular buds, buds which are enveloped by the stipules, as in the tulip-tree. stipulary (stip'ū-lā-rī), a. [< NL. stipula + -ary.] In bot., relating to stipules; stipular. stipulate¹ (stip'ū-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. stipulated, pp. stipulating. [< L. stipulatus, pp. of stipulare (> It. stipulare = Sp. Pg. estipular = F. stipuler), exact, bargain for; origin doubtful: by some referred to O.L. stipulus*, firm; by others to L. stipula, a straw.] To arrange or settle definitely, or by special mention and agreement, or as a special condition: as, it is stipulated that A shall pay 5 per cent.

Henry the Fourth and the king my master had stipulated with each other that, whenever any one of them died, the survivor should take care of the other's child.
Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Life (ed. Howells), p. 129.

Those Articles which were stipulated in their Favour.
Howell, Letters, I, iii. 20.

It is stipulated also that every man shall be bound to obey his own lord "convenienter," or so far as is fitting and right.
Eneye, Brit., XXII, 782.

Stipulated damages. (a) In a general sense, a sum named in a contract or obligation as the damages to be paid in case of non-performance. (b) As commonly used in law, damages liquidated by a stipulation—that is, a sum fixed by a contract or obligation in such manner as to be the sum payable in case of breach, without any further question as to the amount of the actual damages.

stipulate² (stip'ū-lāt), a. [*< NL. stipulatus, < L. stipula, a stalk, stipule: see stipule.] In bot., having stipules: as, a stipulate stalk or leaf.

Stipulateæ (stip'ū-lā-tē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (J. von Sachs), *< stipulatus, stalked (see *stipulate*²), + -æ.] Sachs's name for the euphorbiaceous ferns, a division which embraces the Ophioglossaceæ and Marattiaceæ. The name is now abandoned, as it is known that there are no stipules in the Ophioglossaceæ, and that they are sometimes wanting in the Marattiaceæ.

stipulation¹ (stip'ū-lā'shon), n. [< F. stipulation = Sp. estipulacion = Pg. estipulação = It. stipulazione, < L. stipulatio (n.), a promise, bargain, covenant, < stipulari, demand a formal promise, bargain, covenant, stipulate: see stipulate.] 1. The act of stipulating, agreeing, or covenanting; a contracting or bargaining.

—2. That which is stipulated or agreed upon; a contract or bargain, or a particular article or item in a contract: as, the stipulations of the allied powers to furnish each his contingent of troops; a contract containing so many stipulations.—3. In law, specifically—(a) An agreement between counsel or attorneys in a cause, affecting its conduct. (b) An undertaking in the nature of bail taken in the admiralty courts. (c) In Roman law, a contract in which the form consisted in a question and answer, formalities which in course of time came to be recognized as making a valid contract which might dispense with the ceremonies required by the earlier law.

stipulation² (stip'ū-lā'shon), n. [< L. stipula, a stalk: see stipule.] In bot., the situation and structure of the stipules.

stipulator (stip'ū-lā-tor), n. [< L. stipulator, one who stipulates, < stipulari, demand a formal promise, bargain, stipulate: see stipulate.] One who stipulates, contracts, or covenants; in Rom. law, one to whom a stipulation or promise was given in the form of contract known as stipulatio. See *stipulation*¹, 3 (c).

stipule (stip'ūl), n. [= F. stipule = It. stipula, < L. stipula, a stalk, stem, blade, dim. of stipes, stock, trunk: see *stipe*².] 1. In bot.: (a) One of a pair of lateral appendages found at the base of the petiole of many leaves. Stipules are normally flat organs, leaf-like in appearance and use, or colorless and scale-like, and without function—sometimes, however, as in the magnolia, fig, and beech, serving as bud-scales and falling when the leaves expand. Stipules may be free from the petiole, or adnate by one edge, then passing by grades into mere wing-like expansions of its base; they may be free from one another, or variously united, sometimes so as to clasp the stem, sometimes between it and the leafstalk (then intrapetiolar), sometimes sheathing the stem, as in Polygonum, then forming ocreæ (see ocrea). The adjacent members of two opposite pairs may become connate around the stem, as in many Rubiaceæ. Stipules are sometimes reduced to mere bristles, or take the form of spines, as in the common locust; in Smilax they appear to be converted into tendrils. They are often wholly wanting, but where present they generally characterize whole families, as they do the Malvaceæ, Leguminosæ, and Rosaceæ. (b) In the Characeæ, one of certain unicellular tubes, of greater or less length, on the inner and outer sides of the so-called leaf. (c) Same as paraphyllum (b).—2. In ornith., a newly sprouted feather; a pin-feather. Also stipula.

stipuled (stip'ūl), a. [< stipule + -ed.] In bot., furnished with stipules, or lateral leafy appendages.

stipuliform (stip'ū-li-fōrm), a. [< L. stipula, a stalk, + forma, form.] In bot., having the form of a stipule.

stir¹ (stēr), v.; pret. and pp. stirred, ppr. stirring. [Also dial. steer (and stoor); early mod. E. also stirr, stirre, stire, stere; < ME. stiren, steren, sturen, styren, < AS. styrian, move, stir, = North Fries. stüren = MD. stooren, D. stören, disturb, vex, = MLG. stören, disturb, hinder, = OHG. stören, störren, scatter, destroy, disturb, MHG. stören, G. stören, disturb, interrupt, hinder, = Sw. störa, disturb; cf. Icel. stýrr, a stir, Dan. for-stýrr, disturb; not connected with L. sternere, scatter, or E. strew: see strew. Cf. *stoor*². Hence ult. storm and sturgeon. The ME. forms are in some uses confused with similar forms of *steer*¹, 'direct,' 'guide.' I. trans.

1. To move; change the position or situation of: as, to stir hand or foot.

Stonde he neuere so styliche thorgh sterynge of the hote He hendeth and boweth the body is vnable.
Piers Plowman (C), xi. 36.

He pulls you not a hair, nor pares a nail,
Nor stirs a foot, without due figuring
The horoscope. T. Tomkis (?), Albumazar, i. 3.

2. To set in motion; agitate; disturb.

There is evermore gret Wynd in that Fosse, that stereth the evermore the Gravelle, and maketh it trouble.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 32.

My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirred.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 311.

Airs that gently stir
The vernal leaves. Wordsworth, Ruth.

3. To move briskly; bestir.

Now stureth hym self Arthour,
Thenkyng on hys labour,
And gaderyth to hym strength aboute,
Hys kynges & Eyles on a rowte.
Arthur (ed. Furnivall), l. 295.

Come, you must stir your Stumps, you must Dance.
Steele, Tender Husband, v. 1.

4. To cause the parties or parts of to change place in relation to each other by agitating with the hand or an implement: as, to stir the fire with a poker; to stir one's coffee with a spoon.

He stireth the coles.
Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 267.

Mr. —, one of the fellows (in Mr. Fr. Potter's time), was wont to say that Dr. Kettle's braine was like a hasty-pudding, where there was memorie, judgement, and phancy all stirred together. Aubrey, Lives (Ralph Kettle).

5. To brandish; flourish.

Now hatz Arthure his axe, & the halme grypez, & sturnly sturez hit aboute, that stryke wyth hit thogt.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 331.

6. To bring into notice or discussion; agitate; debate; moot.

Stir not questions of jurisdiction. Bacon, Great Place.

7. To rouse, as from sleep or inaction; awaken.

Nay, then, 'tis time to stir him from his trance.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 1. 182.

Thy dear heart is stirred
From out its wonted quiet.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 344.

8. To move; excite; rouse.

His steed was bloody red, and fomed yre,
When with the maistring spur he did him roughly stire.
Spenser, F. Q., II. v. 2.

The music must be shrill and all confus'd
That stirs my blood.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, i. 1.

9. To incite; instigate; set on.

Feendis threten faste to take me,
And stere helle boundis to bite me.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 70.

With him along is come the mother-queen,
An Ate, stirring him to blood and strife.
Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 63.

To stir coalst. See coal.—To stir up. (a) To instigate; incite: as, to stir up a nation to rebellion.

To these undertakings these great Lords of the World have been stirred up rather by the desire of Fame . . . than by the affection of bearing rule.

Raleigh (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 654).

There's that Will Maskery, sir, as is the rampagouscest Methodis' as can be, an' I make no doubt it was him as stirred up th' young woman to preach last night.
George Eliot, Adam Bede, v.

(b) To excite; provoke; foment; bring about: as, to stir up a mutiny; to stir up contention.

They gan with fowle reproch
To stirre up strife, and troublous cotecke broch.
Spenser, F. Q., III. i. 64.

To be more just, religious, wise, or magnanimous than the common sort stirs up in a Tyrant both feare and envy.
Milton, Eikonoklastes, xv.

(c) To rouse to action; stimulate; quicken: as, to stir up the mind.

[They] are also perpetually stirred up to fresh industry and new discoveries. Bacon, Physical Fables, ii, Expl.

The man who stirs up a reposing community . . . can scarcely be destitute of some moral qualities which exert even from enemies a reluctant admiration.
Macaulay, Sir William Temple.

II. intrans. 1. To pass from rest or inaction to motion or action; move; budge: as, they dare not stir; to stir abroad.

"Master," said he, "he wul'd by me,
From the Green-wood we'll not stir."
Robin Hood and the Golden Arrow (Child's Ballads, V. 384).

No disaffected or rebellious person can stir without being presently known; and this renders the King very safe in his Government.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 74.

During the time I remained in the convent, the superior thought it proper I should not stir out.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. l. 4.

2. To be in motion; be in a state of activity; be on the move or go; be active: as, to be continually stirring.

If ye will nedys know at short and longe,
It is evyn a woman's tounge,
For that is ever sterynge.
Interlude of the Four Elements. (Halliwell, under short.)

If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Cassio entreats of her a little favour of speech.
Shak., Othello, iii. 1. 27.

She will brook
No tarrying; where she comes the winds must stir.
Wordsworth, Sonnets, i. 32.

3. To be in circulation; be current; be on foot.

No ill luck stirring but what lights on his shoulders.
Shak., M. of V., iii. 1. 99.

Ther dyed such multitudes weckly of ye plague, as all trade was dead, and little money stirring.
Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 204.

There is no News at all stirring here now.
Howell, Letters, li. 18.

4. To use an instrument or the hand for making a disturbing or agitating motion, as in a liquid.

The more you stir in it the more it stinks. Bulwer.

5. To be roused; be excited; disturb or agitate one's self.

You show too much of that
For which the people stir.
Shak., Cor., iii. 1. 53.

stir¹ (stēr), n. [Early mod. E. also stirre; *< stir*¹, v.] 1. Movement; action.

The sounding of our wordes (is) not alwayes egall; for some aske longer, some shorter time to be vttered in, & so, by the Philosophers definition, stirre is the true measure of time.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 56.

2. A state of motion, activity, briskness, bustle, or the like; the confusion and tumult of many persons in action.

Why all these words, this clamour, and this stir?
Sir J. Denham, Prudence, l. 112.

The house had that pleasant aspect of life which is like the cheery expression of comfortable activity in the human countenance. You could see at once that there was the stir of a large family within it.
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xiii.

It is well to turn aside from the fretful stir of the present.
Huxley, Animal Automatism.

3. Commotion; excitement; tumult: as, his appearance on the scene created quite a stir.

Men may thinke it strange there should be such a stirre for a little come; but had it bene gold, with more ease wee might have got it; and had it wanted, the whole Colony had starved.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 219.

When Portzey, weighing wull the ill to her might grow,
In that their mighty stirs might be her overthrow.
Drayton, Polyolbion, ii. 448.

An Impost was leui'd of the subjects, to satisfy the pay due to the souldiours for the Persian warre, which raised these stirres.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 257.

4. Motion; impulse; emotion; feeling.

He did keep
The deck, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief,
Still waving, as the fits and stirs of his mind
Could best express how slow his soul sail'd on.
Shak., Cymbeline, i. 3. 12.

5. A poke; a jog.

"Eh, Arthur?" said Tom, giving him a stir with his foot.
T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, ii. 8.

Stipules (St.).

1. Of Robinia Pseudacacia. 2. Of Rosa canina. 3. Of Prunus arvensis. 4. Of Lathyrus alphaca. 5. Of Smilax bona-nox.

6. A house of correction; a lockup; a prison. [Thieves' slang.]

I was in Brummagem, and was seven days in the new stir, and nearly broke my neck.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 469.

stir² (stir), n. [A corruption of sir.] Sir. [Scottish vulgarism.]

I'm seeking for service, stir. Scott, Old Mortality, viii.

stirabout (stēr'ā-boutⁿ), n. [*stir*¹ + about.] 1. Oatmeal or other porridge.

The fifth book is of pease-porridge, under which are included frumetary, water-gruel, milk-porridge, rice-milk, flunary, stir-about, and the like.

W. King, Art of Cookery, Letter ix.

2. Oatmeal and dripping or bacon-fat mixed together and stirred about in a frying-pan. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

Stiretrus (stī-rō'trus), n. [NL. (Laporte, 1833). < Gr. στειρος, barren, + ἄτροπος, the abdomen.]

A notable genus of water bugs, of the family Pentatomidae, comprising about 25 species peculiar to America, most of them tropical. One species, S. anchorago, is found in the southern United States, and is a common enemy of the chinch-bug, Colorado potato-beetle, and cotton-worm.

Stiretrus anchorago. (Hair-line shows natural size.)

stiriated (stir'i-ā-ted), a. [stiriate (< L. stiria, a frozen drop, an icicle; cf. *stilt*²) + -ed.] Adorned with pendants like icicles.

stirrious (stir'i-us), a. [L. stiria, a frozen drop, an icicle, + -ous.] Consisting of or resembling icicles.

Crystal is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not much unlike the stirrious or stilticidous dependencies of ice.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 1.

stirk (stērk), n. [Also sterk, stark; < ME. stirk, styrk, sterke, styrke, < AS. stīre, a young ew, heifer, styre, styrre, a young steer, = MD. stierick = MHG. sterke, > G. stürke, starke, a young ew, heifer, G. dial. sterk, a young steer; usually explained as derived, with dim. suffix -ic, < AS. stōd, etc., a steer; but prob. connected, as orig. 'a young ew that has not yet calved,' with OHG. stero, MHG. ster, a ram, Goth. staira, barren, L. sterilis, barren, Gr. στειρος, στειρός, barren, Skt. stari, barren, sterile: see sterile.] An animal of the ox or ew kind from one to two years old. [Prov. Eng. or Scotch.]

stirless (stēr'les), a. [*stir*¹ + -less.] Still; motionless; inactive; very quiet. [Rare.]

She kept her hollow, stirless eyes on his. There was an absence of movement about her almost oppressive. She seemed not even to breathe. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 228.

stirn (stēr'n), n. Same as *stern*⁵.

stiropt, n. An old spelling of stirrup.

stirp (stērp), n. [stirpe, < L. stirps, a stock, root, race.] Stock; race; family.

So is she spronge of noble stirp and high. Court of Love, I. 16.

Democracies . . . are commonly more quiet, and less subject to sedition, than where there are stirps of nobles. Bacon, Nobility (ed. 1887).

stirpicultural (stēr-pi-kul'tūr-āl), a. Pertaining to stirpiculture. The Sanitarian, XXIV. 514.

stirpiculture (stēr-pi-kul'tūr), n. [L. stirps, a stock, race, + cultura, culture.] The breeding of special stocks or strains.

Sentimental objections in the way of the higher stirpiculture. The Nation, Aug. 10, 1876, p. 92.

stirps (stērps), n.; pl. stirpes (stēr'pēs). [L.: see stirp.] 1. Race; lineage; family; in law, the person from whom a family is descended. See per stirpes, under per.—2. In zool., a classificatory group of uncertain rank and no fixed position, by MacLeay made intermediate between a family and a tribe; a superfamily. Compare *group*¹, section, cohort, and phalanx.—3. In bot., a race or permanent variety.

stirrage¹ (stēr'āj), n. [*stir*¹ + -age.] The act of stirring; agitation; commotion; stir.

Every small stirrage waketh them. Granger, On Eccles. (1621), p. 320.

stirrage², n. Same as stearage.

stirrer (stēr'ēr), n. [*stir*¹ + -er.] 1. One who stirs; especially, one who is active or bustling.

Come on, . . . give me your hand, sir: an early stirrer. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iii. 2. 3.

Bris. Good day to you. Cain. You are an early stirrer. Fletcher, Double Marriage, I. 1.

2. One who stirs or agitates anything, as a liquid, with the hand or an implement for stirring.—3. An implement or a machine used for stirring a liquid or the like.

The liquid being taken out on a pointed glass rod or stirrer. W. B. Carpenter, Microsc., § 207.

4. One who incites or instigates; an instigator: often with up: as, a stirrer up of contention.

We must give, I say, Unto the motives, and the stirrers up Of humours in the blood.

B. Jonson, Alchemist, iii. 1.

Stirrers of sedition, without any zeal for freedom. Macaulay, Sir W. Temple.

stirring (stēr'ing), n. [ME. steringe, styrnyge, steringe; verbal n. of *stir*¹, v.] 1. Movement; motion; activity; effort; the act of moving or setting in motion.

Eche abouten other goynge, Causeth of others steringe.

Chaucer, House of Fame, I. 800.

The emotions voiced in his song are stirrings of the spirit rather than thrills of the senses. The Atlantic, LXV., p. 4 of adv'ts.

2†. Temptation.

zif any sterynge on me stele, Out of the clos of thi clenness Wyse me, lord, in wo & wele, And kepe me fram vnykynnesse.

Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 251.

3. In agri., the second tith or fallow. Florio, p. 273. (Halliwel).—4†. Riot; commotion.

I'll lie about Charing-cross, for, if there be any stirrings, there we shall have 'em.

Webster and Dekker, Northward Ho, I. 2.

stirring (stēr'ing), p. a. [Pr. of *stir*¹, v.] 1. Being in active motion; characterized by stir or activity; active; bustling; lively; vivacious; brisk: as, a stirring life; stirring times.

Such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit. Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 16.

Those who appear the most stirring in the scene may possibly not be the real movers. Burke, Rev. in France.

2. Animating; rousing; awakening; stimulating; exciting; inspiring: as, a stirring oration; a stirring march.

Often the ring of his verse is sonorous, and overcomes the jagged consonantal diction with stirring lyrical effect. Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 302.

3†. Fiekle.

A stye the man of his stature, stirrowl of wille, Menyt hym to mony thynges, & of mynde gode. Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 3333.

stirrup (stir' or stēr'up), n. [Early mod. E. also stirrop, stirap, sterope; < ME. stirap, styrope, styrope, sterepe, < AS. stirap, stigrap, stigeap (= MD. stegerep, steeghrecp, also stegelrecp = OHG. stegareif, MHG. G. stegreif = Icel. stigræip, lit. 'mounting-ropes,' < stigran, mount, + rāp, rope: see styl and *rope*¹. Cf. D. stijg-beugel = G. stieig-bügel = Sw. stig-bygel = Dan. stig-bøjle, a stirrup, lit. a ring or loop for mounting (see *baül*¹).] 1. A support for the foot of a person mounted on a horse, usually a metal loop with the bottom part flat and corrugated or finished with points to give a hold to the sole of the boot and to aid in mounting. The metal loop is suspended from the saddle by a strap or thong, which in modern saddles is adjustable in length. The stirrup of Arab or other Eastern horsemen has a very broad rest for the foot; this projects sometimes beyond the heel, and the sharp edge of it serves instead of a spur. The stirrups of some modern military saddles have a strong front piece of leather or other material which prevents the foot from passing too far into the loop and protects the front of the leg. See also cut under saddle.

Our hosts upon his stirrups stood anon. Chaucer, Prol. to Shipman's Tale, I. 1.

I'll hold your stirrup when you do alight, And without grudging wail till you return. Beau. and Fl., Honest Man's Fortune, iv. 1.

2. Naut., a rope with an eye at its end, through which a foot-rope is reeve, and by which it is supported. The ends of stirrups are securely fastened to the yard, and they steady the men when reefing or furling sails.

3. In mach., any piece resembling in shape and functions the stirrup of a saddle, as the iron loop by which a mill-saw hangs from the

1. Stirrup for poulaine; 2. modern stirrup; 3. Mexican wooden stirrup; 4. Mexican wooden stirrup with taps.

muley-head or in the sash.—4. In carp., etc., an iron loop-strap or other device for securing a rafter-post or strut to a tie, or for supporting a beam, etc.—5. A hold for the foot at the end of the stock of a large crossbow, to keep it firm while the bow is bent and the string drawn to the notch. See cut under arbalister.

—6. In anat., the stapes or stirrup-bone.

stirrup-bar (stir'up-bār), n. The spring-bar or other device on a riding-saddle to which the upper end of the stirrup-strap is fastened.

stirrup-bone (stir'up-bōn), n. The stapes of a mammal: so called from its shape.

stirrup-cup (stir'up-kup), n. A cup of wine or other liquor presented to a rider when mounted and about to take his departure; a parting-cup.

stirrup-hose (stir'up-hōz), n. pl. Heavy stockings worn over the other garments for the legs by men traveling on horseback in the seventeenth century, and probably earlier. They are described as made very large at the top, and secured by points to the girdle or the bag-breeches.

stirrup-iron (stir'up-ī'ēr'n), n. The stirrup proper—that is, the metal loop in which the foot is placed, as distinguished from the leather strap which suspends it.

stirrup-lantern (stir'up-lan'tēr'n), n. A small lantern with an iron frame fastened below the stirrup to light the road at night and also to warm the rider's feet: a contrivance used in the fifteenth century and later.

stirrup-leather (stir'up-leth'ēr), n. The leather strap by which a stirrup hangs from the saddle.

stirrup-muscle (stir'up-mus'el), n. The stapedius.

stirrup-oil (stir'up-oil), n. A sound beating; a drubbing. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

stirrup-piece (stir'up-pēs), n. In carp., mach., etc., anything which performs the office of a stirrup, in hanging from a fixed point of support and supporting anything else which lies in its loop or hollow.

stirtet, stirt. Obsolete forms of the preterit and past participle of *start*¹.

stitch (stich), n. [ME. stiche, styeche, < AS. stice, a pricking sensation (also in comp. instice, an inward stitch, fār-stice, a sudden stitch or twinge, stic-āll, stic-wære, stitch in the side), not found in lit. sense 'pricking,' 'piercing,' = OFries. sticke, stec = OHG. stih, MHG. G. stich, a pricking, prick, sting, stab, stitch, = Goth. stiks, a point of time; from the verb, AS. stecan*, etc., prick, sting, stick: see *stiek*¹, *stiek*².] 1. An acute sudden pain like that produced by the thrust of a needle; a sharp spasmodic pain, especially in the intercostal muscles: as, a stitch in the side. Such pains in the side may be myalgic, neuralgic, pleuritic, or due to muscular cramp.

'Twas but a stitch into my side, And sair it troubles me. The Queen's Marie (Child's Ballads, III. 117).

Corporal sickness is a perpetual monitor to the conscience, every pang a reproof, and every stitch reads a lesson of mortality. Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 441.

2†. A contortion; a grimace; a twist of the face.

If you talk, Or pull your face into a stitch again, As I love truth, I shall be very angry. Beau. and Fl., Captain, ii. 2.

3. In sewing: (a) One movement of a threaded needle, passing in and out of the fabric, and uniting two parts by the thread, which is drawn tight after each insertion. (b) The part of the thread left in the fabric by this movement.—4. In knitting, netting, crochet, embroidery, lucemaking, etc.: (a) One whole movement of the implement or implements used, as knitting-needles, bobbins, hook, etc. (b) The result of this movement, shown in the work itself.—5. The kind or style of work produced by stitching: as, buttonhole-stitch; cross-stitch; pillow-lace stitch; by extension, a kind or style of work with the loom. For stitches in lace, see *point*¹. See also whip-stitch.—6†. Distance passed over at one time; stretch; distance; way.

How far have ye come to-day? So they said, From the house of Gains our friend. I promise you, said he, you have gone a good stitch; you may well be weary; sit down. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 314.

7. In agri., a space between two double furrows in plowed ground; a furrow or ridge.

And many men at plough he made, that drave earth here and there. Chapman, Iliad, xviii. 495.

8. A bit of clothing; a rag: as, he had not a dry stitch on. [Colloq.].—9. In bookbind- fug, a connection of leaves or pieces of paper, through perforations an inch or so apart, with thread or wire. A single stitch is made with two perforations only, the thread being tied near the entering place of the stitching-needle. A double stitch has three and sometimes four perforations, the thread being reversed in and out on the upper and under side at each perforation. A saddle-back stitch has its perforations in the center of the creased folded double leaves. A side-stitch has perforations through the sides of the leaves, about one eighth of an inch from the back fold. A French stitch has two perforations only in each section of the pamphlet, the second perforation of the first section ending where the first perforation of the second section begins, in which diagonal line the stitching-needle is put through each succeeding section, and is then reversed and looked at the end. A machine-stitch is a succession of ordinary locked stitches made by the sewing-machine. A wire stitch has short staples of turned wire, which are forced through the leaves and clamped by one operation of the wire-stitching machine. See kettle-stitch.—Blind stitch. See blind.—Damask stitch. See damask.—Dotted stitch. Same as dot-stitch.—False stitch, in pillow-lace making, same as false pinhole (which see, under pinhole).—Fancy, Flemish, German, gloves', gobelin, herring-bone, honeycomb, idiot, Irish, overcast stitch. See the qualifying words.—Outline-stitch. See outline.—Plaited stitch. See plaited.—Raised stitch. See raised.—Royal stitch. See royal.—Russian stitch. A kind of ribbed stitch in crochet. Dict. of Needlework.—Short stitch, a kind of needlework used in embroidery of the simplest kind, where the ground is partly covered by single stitches of a thread usually of different color, the ground not so covered generally forming the pattern.—Slanting stitch. See slant.—To go through stitch with, to prosecute to the end; complete.

And in regard of the main point, that they should never be able to go through stitch with that war.

Urruhart, tr. of Rabelais, Gargantua, i. 47.

(See also backstitch, chain-stitch, crewel-stitch, cross-stitch, feather-stitch, hemstitch, lock-stitch, rope-stitch, spider-stitch, stem-stitch, streak-stitch, etc.)

stich (stich'el), v. [< ME. stiechen (prot. stizte, stizt), prick, stitch, = MD. stiechen, D. stikken = OHG. stiechan, MHG. G. stiechen, embroider, stitch; from the noun. Cf. *stick*¹, v.] I. trans. 1. To unite by stitches; sew.—2. To ornament with stitches.—3. In agri., to form into ridges.—To stitch up. (a) To form or put together by sewing.

She has, out of impatience to see herself in her Weeds, ordered her Mantua-Woman to stitch up any thing immediately.

Steele, Grief A-la-Mode, v. 1.

(b) To mend or unite with a needle and thread: as, to stitch up a rent; to stitch up an artery.

II. intrans. To sew; make stitches.

Stitch! stitch! stitch!
In poverty, hunger, and dirt.
Hood, Song of the Shirt.

stitchel (stich'el), n. A kind of hairy wool. [Local.] Imp. Dict.

stitcher (stich'ér), n. [< stitch + -er.] One who stitches; also, a tool or machine used in stitching.

All alike are rich and richer,
King with crown, and cross-legged stitcher,
When the grave hides all.
R. W. Gilder, Drinking Song.

stitchery (stich'ér-i), n. [< stitch + -ery.] Needlework; in modern times, the labor or drudgery of sewing.

Come, lay aside your stitchery; I must have you play the idle huswife with me this afternoon.

Shak., Cor., i. 3. 75.

stitchfallen (stich'fâ'ln), a. [< stitch + fallen, pp. of fall.] Fallen, as a stitch in knitting. [Rare.]

A stitch-fal'n cheek, that hangs below the jaw.
Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, x. 309.

stitching (stich'ing), n. [Verbal n. of stitch, v.] Stitches collectively; especially, ornamental stitches designed to show on the surface of the work.—Middle stitching (naut.). Same as monk's seam, 1.

stitching-horse (stich'ing-hôrs), n. A harness-makers' clamp or work-holder mounted on a wooden frame or horse. The jaw of the clamp is kept in position by means of a foot-lever. See cut under sewing-clamp.

stitch-wheel (stich'hwêl), n. In harass-making, a small notched wheel mounted in a handle, used to mark the places for the stitches in hand-sewed work; a pricking-wheel.

stitch-work (stich'wêrk), n. Embroidery. B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 415.

stichwort (stich'wêrt), n. [Early mod. E. also stichwort; < ME. stichwert, < AS. sticwyr, < sticc, stitch, + wyr, plant: see stitch and wort.] One of several plants of the chickweed or starwort genus, Stellaria. The proper stitchwort is S. Holostea, the greater stitchwort, locally called albone, break-bones, shirt-buttons, snap-jack, etc., a pretty Old World species with an erect slender stem and starry white flowers. The name alludes to its reputed virtue for the cure of stich in the side, or, according to one old work, to its use for curing the sting of venomous reptiles (Prior). S. graminea is in England the lesser stitchwort. In the United States S. longifolia, a plant of similar habit, is named long-leaved stitchwort. The name is sometimes extended, in books, to the whole genus.

stith¹ (stith), a. [< ME. stith; < ME. stith, stithe, < AS. stith = OFries. stith, strong, hard, harsh; cf. lecl. stirdlor, stiff, rigid, harsh, severe.] Strong; hard.

Telamachus he toke, his tru sone,
Stake hym in a stith house, & stuerne men to kepe,
Wallit full wele, with water aboute,
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), i. 13841.

stith² (stith), n. [< ME. stith, stithe, < lecl. stithi = Sw. stid, an anvil: so called from its firmness; cf. lecl. stathr, a fixed place, AS. stede, a place, stead; see stead. Doublet of stithy.] An anvil; a stithy.

The smyth
That forgeth sharpe swerdes on his stith.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1168.

stithy (stith'i), adv. [ME., < AS. stithice, strongly, < stith, strong: see *stith*¹ and *-ly*².] Strongly; stiffly; greatly; sore.

Stithy with stony [they] steynt hir to dethe.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 12157.

stithy (stith'i), n.; pl. stithies (-iz). [Also dial. stiddy, stedly, steady; an extension of *stith*² (prob. due to confusion with smithy as related to smith): see *stith*².] 1. An anvil.

"Let me sleep on that hard point," said Varney; "I cannot else perfect the device I have on the stithy."
Scott, Kenilworth.

2. A smithy; a smith's shop; a forge.

And my imaginatious are as foule
As Vulcan's stithy. Shak., Hamlet, iii. 2. 89.

stithy (stith'i), v. t.; pret. and pp. stithied, ppr. stithying. [< stithy, n.] To forge on an anvil.

The forge that stithied Mars his helm.
Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 255.

stithy-man (stith'i-man), n. A smith.

The subtle stithy-man that lived whêre.
Bp. Hall, Satires, II. i. 44. (Davies.)

stive¹ (stiv), a. Same as *steev*¹ for stiff.

stive¹ (stiv), v. [< ME. stiven, < AS. stifian or stifan, also in comp. ástifian or ástifian (= OFries. stiva, steca = MD. D. stifen = G. steyfen = Sw. steyfa = Dan. stive), grow stiff, < stif or stif, stiff: see stiff.] I. intrans. To become stiff; stiffen.

II. trans. To stiffen.

The hote sunne had so hard the hides stived.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3033.

stive² (stiv), v. t.; pret. and pp. stived, ppr. stiving. [< OF. estiver = Sp. Pg. estivar = It. stivare, < L. stipare, compress, crowd together. Cf. *steev*³, steev.] To stuff; cram; stow; crowd. [Obsolete or provincial.]

You would think it strange that so small a shell should contain such a quantity, but admire, if you saw them stive it in their ships.

Sandys, Travailes, p. 12.

"Things are a good deal stived up," answered the Deacon. "People's minds are sour, and I don't know, Molly, what we can do."
S. Judd, Margaret, ii. 8.

stive³ (stiv), v. [< ME. stiven, a var. of stiven, stauen, < OF. estiver, stew, bathe; see *stew*¹.] I. trans. To stew, as meat.

II. intrans. To stew, as in a close atmosphere; be stifled. [Provincial.]

I shall go out in a boat. . . . One can get rid of a few hours every day in that way, instead of stiving in a damnable hotel.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, liv.

stive⁴, n. An obsolete form of stew.

stive⁴ (stiv), n. [Also dial. stew; appar. < MD. stuyre, dust, = G. staub = Dan. stør, dust.] Dust; the dust floating in flour-mills during the operation of grinding. Simmonds.

stiver¹ (stiv'ér), n. [= Sw. steyfer = Dan. steyver, < MD. stuyrer, D. stuyrer = G. stuber, a stiver; origin unknown.] 1. A small coin formerly current in Holland and in the Dutch colonies; in Dutch called stuyver. (a) A small silver coin formerly current in Holland, the twentieth part of the Dutch guilder.

Set him free,
And you shall have your money to a stiver,
And present payment. Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, i. 3.

(b) A copper coin formerly current in the Dutch colonies.

Obverse. Reverse.
Stiver.—British Museum. (Size of the original.)

Hence—2. Any very small coin, or coin of little value.

Entre nous, mon cher, I care not a stiver for popularity.

Bulwer, My Novel, ix. 3.

"There's fourteen foot and over," says the driver,
"Worth twenty dollars, ef it's worth a stiver."
Lowell, Fitz Adam's Story.

stiver² (stiv'ér), n. [*< stive*³ + -er.] An inhabitant of the stews; a harlot. Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, ii. 1.

steward, n. A Middle English form of steward.
Stizostedion (stí-zò-stò'di-on), n. [NL. (Rafinesque, 1820), also Stizostedion, Stizostethidium, and prop. Stizostethium*, < Gr. stizein, prick, + σθηδον, dim. of σθηδον, breast.] In ichth., a genus of pike-perches, including two marked species of Europe and North America. They are of large size, are carnivorous, and inhabit fresh waters. S. vitreum is the wall-eyed, goggle-eyed, glass-eyed, yellow, or blue pike, dory, or jack-salmon, and S. canadense the gray pike, sand-pike, sauger, or hornfish. See cut under pike-perch.

stoa (stò'a), n. [< Gr. stoa, sometimes στοά, a porch, colonnade.] In Gr. arch., a portico, usually a detached portico, often of considerable extent, generally near a public place to afford opportunity for walking or conversation under shelter. The Greek stoa was often richly adorned with sculpture and painting. Many examples had two stories.—The Stoa. Same as the Porch. See porch, Stoic.

Diagram of the construction of a Greek Stoa, as excavated and restored by the Archaeological Institute of America, at Assos, 1882.

stoat (stòt), n. [Also stote; a var. of stoll.] The ermine, Putorius erminea, and other members of that genus when not specified by distinctive names. See *ermine*¹, weasel, mink, fitchew, polecat, *ferret*¹. Stoat more particularly designates the animal in ordinary summer pelage, when it is dull mahogany-brown above, and pale sulphur-yellow below, with the tail black-tipped as in winter.

Stoat or Ermine (Putorius erminea), in summer pelage.

stob (stob), n. [A var. of stob.] 1. A small post.—2. A thorn; spine. Halliwel.—3. A long steel wedge used for bringing down coal after holing. Gresley. [Prov. Eng. in all us.]

stoblet, n. A Middle English form of stubble.

stocall (stò'käl), n. [Early mod. E. also stokaghe; < Ir. Gael. stocach, an idler in the kitchen.] An attendant; a hanger-on: an old Irish term.

The strength of all that nation is the Kearne, Galloglasse, Stokaghe, Horsemen, and Horseboyes.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

stoccade (sto-käd'), n. [Also stockado, stoccado, and stocata, after Sp. or It.; < OF. estocade, estocade = Sp. Pg. estocada, a thrust, pass, < It. stocata, a thrust with a weapon, *< stoccare, < stocco, a truncheon, short sword. < G. stock, a stick, staff, stock, = MD. stock, a stock-rapier, etc.: see *stock*¹. Cf. stockade.] 1. A thrust with a sword, one of the movements taught by the early fencing-masters, as in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

Your punto, your reverse, your stocata, your imbrocata your passada, your montanto.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iv. 5

2. See stockade.

stoccade, v. t. See stockade.
stoccadot, stoccatat, n. Same as stoccade.
stocco (stok'ō), n. [It.: see *stock*¹, stoccade.] A long straight sword for thrusting, similar to the tuck. See *tuck*² and estoc.
stochastic (stō-kas'tik), a. [Gr. στοχαστικός, able to hit or to guess, conjecturing, < στοχάζεσθαι, aim at, endeavor after, < στόχος, aim, shot, guess.] Conjectural; given to or partaking of conjecture.

Though he [Sir T. Browne] were no prophet, . . . yet in that faculty which comes nearest to it he excelled, i. e. the Stochastic, wherein he was seldom mistaken as to future events, as well publick as private.

Whitefoot, quoted in Sir T. Browne's Works, I. xvii.
stock¹ (stok), n. and a. [ME. stocke, stokke, stok, stoke, stoc (pl. stokkes, the stocks), < AS. stoc, stacc (stocce-), a post, trunk, stock, = OFries. stok = MD. stock, D. stok = MLG. stok, LG. stock = OHG. stoc, stoch, MHG. stoc (> It. stocco, a rapier), G. stock = Icel. stokkr = Dan. stok = Sw. stock (not recorded in Goth.), a post, stock (hence, from Teut., OF. estoc, a stock, trunk of a tree, rapier, etc., = It. stocco, a stock, trunk of a tree, rapier, etc.: see stocco, stoccade, *stock*², *tuck*², etc.); generally supposed to be connected with the similar words, of similar sense, *stick*³, *stake*¹, and so with stuck; but the phonetic connection is not clear. Assuming the sense 'stick' or 'club' to be original, a connection may be surmised with Skt. √ tuj (orig. stug* ?), thrust. The senses of this noun are numerous and complicated; the ME. senses are in part due to the OF. estoc.] I. n. 1. A wooden post; a stake; a stump.

The Cros of oure Lord was made of 4 manere of Trees, . . . and the Stock, that stode within the Erthe, . . . was of Cedre.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 10.

Lay this roudt plate upon an evene grond or on an evene ston or on an evene stok flix in the gronde.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, ii. 33.

They all went downward, fleetly and gaily downward, and only he, it seemed, remained behind, like a stock upon the wayside.
R. L. Stevenson, Will o' the Mill.

2. A wooden block; a block; a log; hence, something lifeless and senseless.

He swore hire yis, by stokkes and by stones,
 And by the goddess that in hevene dwelle.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 589.

There was an exe, and a stoke, and oon of the lowdeste of the shippe badde hym ley down his hedde, and he should be fair ferd wyth, and dye on a swerd.
Paston Letters, I. 125.

More than dead stocks would startle at such beauty.
Chapman, Blind Beggar of Alexandria.

And those made thee forsake thy God,
 And worship stocks and stones.
Wanton Wife of Bath (Child's Ballads, VIII. 155).

3. A person who is as dull and senseless as a block or a log.

Let 'a be no stoics nor no stocks.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 1. 31.
 Such a stock of a child, such a statue! Why, he has no kind of feeling either of body or mind.

Brooke, Fool of Quality, iii.
 What a phlegmatic sot it is! Why, sirrah, you'r an anchorite!—a vile insensible stock.
Sheridan, Rivals, iii. 1.

4. A dull object or recipient of action or notice, as of wonder, scorn, or laughter; a butt: generally the second element in a compound: as, a gazing-stock; a laughing-stock.

Howsoever we are all accounted dull, and common jesting stocks for your gallants, there are some of us do not deserve it.
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, iii. 3.

Thou art the stock of men, and I admire thee.
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 5.

I know, and may presume her such,
 As, out of humour, will return no love;
 And therefore might indifferently be made
 The courting-stock for all to practise on.
B. Jonson, New Inn, i. 1.

5. The stalk, stem, or trunk of a tree or other plant; the main body, or fixed and firm part.

Though the root thereof was old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground.
Job xiv. 8.

There, in the stocks of trees, white furies do dwell.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2.

You know him—old, but full
 Of force and choler, and firm upon his feet,
 And like an oaken stock in winter woods.
Tennyson, Golden Year.

6. A stem in which a graft is inserted, and which is its support; also, a stem, tree, or plant that furnishes slips or cuttings.

You see, sweet maid, we marry
 A gentler scion to the wildest stock.
Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 93.

The action ever over-ruleth the stock.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., Int. to § 477.

Hence—7. The original progenitor of a family or race; the person from whom any given line of descent or inheritance is derived. See stock of descent, below.

This first stok was full of rightwisenesse,
 Trewe of his word, sobre, pitons, and free.
Chaucer, Gentillesse, l. 8.

Brave soldier, yield, thou stock of arms and honour.
Fletcher, Bonduca, v. 5.

8. Direct line of descent; race; lineage; family: as, children of the stock of Abraham.

What things are these! I shall marry into the stock!
Brome, Northern Lass, ii. 2.

In his actions and sentiments he belied not the stock to which he pretended.
Lamb, Two Races of Men.

They sprang from different stocks. They spoke different languages.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

9. The principal supporting or holding part; the part in which other parts are inserted, or to which they are attached in order to furnish a firm support or hold. Specifically—(a) The wooden support to which the barrel and lock of a rifle or like firearm are attached, or upon which the bow of the crossbow is mounted. See cut under gun and gun-carriage. (b) The handle by which a boring-bit is held and turned; a bit-stock; a brace. See cut under brace. (c) The block of wood which constitutes the body of a plane, and in which the cutting iron is fitted. See cut under plane, rounding-plane, and router. (d) The support of the block on which an anvil is fitted, or of the anvil itself. (e) The crosspiece of an anchor, perpendicular to the shank, formerly of wood, when the shank was passed through a hole cut in the stock, or the latter was made in two parts joined to receive the shank; now usually of iron, in which case the stock slips through a hole made in the shank. See cut under anchor. (f) An adjustable wrench for holding screw-cutting dies. (g) That part of a plow to which the handles, irons, etc., are attached. (h) A beater, as used in a fulling-mill, in the manufacture of chamois-leather, etc. (i) An arm of a bevel-gage or of a square. (j) The wooden frame in which the wheel and post of a spinning-wheel are supported.

10. A stiff band of horsehair, leather, or the like, covered with black satin, cambric, or similar material, and made to imitate and replace the cravat or neckband; formerly worn by men generally, and, in some forms, still in military use. It was sometimes fastened behind with a buckle, which was often an ornamental object.

Military Stock, 18th century.

A shining stock of black leather supporting his chin.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 321.

He wore a magnificent stock, with a liberal kind of knot in the front; in this he stuck a great pin.
H. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 98.

11. The front part, especially the front side-piece, of a bed. [Scotch.]

I winna lie in your bed,
 Either at stock or wa'.
Capt. Wedderburn's Courtship (Child's Ballads, VIII. 12).

12. pl. An apparatus for the confinement of vagrants and petty offenders, formerly in use in different parts of Europe, and retained until recently in country villages in England. It consisted of two heavy timbers, one of which could be raised, and when lowered was held in place by a padlock or the like; notches in these timbers, forming round holes when the upper timber was shut down in place, held firmly the legs of those upon whom this punishment was inflicted; in some cases a second row of openings could be used to restrain the hands, and even the neck, also. Compare pillory.

Stocks.

 This yere was ordeyned in every ward of [of London] a peyr stockis.
Arnold's Chronicle, p. xxxvi.

Mars got drunk in the town, and broke his landlord's head, for which he sat in the stocks the whole evening.
Steele, Tatler, No. 4.

13. The frame or timbers on which a ship rests while building; hence, generally, on the stocks, in course of construction or preparation.—

14. That part of the tally which the creditor took away as evidence of the king's debt, the part retained in the Exchequer being called the counterstock. See tally.

It was the custom when money was borrowed for State purposes to record the transaction by means of notches on a stick (commonly hazel), and then to split the stick through the notches. The lender took one half as a proof of his claim against the Exchequer, and it was called his Stock. The Exchequer kept the other half, which was called the counterstock, and which answered the same purpose as was served in after-times by the counterfoil.
Bithell, Counting-House Dict., p. 290.

15. In finance: (a) The money represented by this tally; money lent to a government, or a fund consisting of a capital debt due by a government to individual holders who receive a fixed rate of interest. In modern usage, especially in Great Britain, the name is applied to a capital of which payment cannot be claimed, but on which interest is paid in perpetuity at a given rate; hence, to buy stock is simply to buy the right to this interest on a certain amount of this capital debt—a right which may be sold again. The various kinds of stocks are called the public funds. See *fund*¹, n., 2.

I have known a Captain rise to a Colonel in two days by the fall of stocks.
Steele, quoted in Ashton's Reign of Queen Anne, II. 206.

The term Stock was originally applied to the material sign and proof of money lent. But as the thing signified was of greater importance to both parties than the sign, it was at length transferred to the money itself, or rather to the right to claim it. In this way Stock came to be understood as money lent to the government, and eventually to any public body whatever.
Bithell, Counting-House Dict., p. 290.

(b) The share capital of a corporation or commercial company; the fund employed in the carrying on of some business or enterprise, divided into shares of equal amount, and owned by individuals who jointly form a corporation; in the plural, shares: as, bank stock; railway stock; stocks and bonds.—16. The property which a merchant, a tradesman, or a company has invested in any business, including merchandise, money, and credits; more particularly, the goods which a merchant or a commercial house keeps on hand for the supply of customers.

Who trades without a stock has naught to fear. Cibber.

"We must renew our stock, Cousin Heppzibah!" cried the little saleswoman. "The gingerbread figures are all gone, and so are those Dutch wooden milkmaids, and most of our other playthings."
Hawthorne, Seven Gables, v.

17. Fund; sum of money.

Mr. John Whitson being Mayor, with his brethren the Aldermen, and most of the Merchants of the City of Bristol, raised a stock of 1000*l.* to furnish out two Barks.
 Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 108.

It's proverbial He gave them an alms-penny, for which reason Judas carried the bag that had a common stock in it for the poor.
Barnard, Heylin, § 104.

The money is raised out of the interest of a stock formerly made up by the nobility and gentry.
Butcher, quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 103.

18. Hoard or accumulation; store; supply: fund which may be drawn upon as occasion demands: as, to lay in a stock of provisions; a stock of information.

Though all my stock of tears were spent already Upon Pisano's loss.
Shirley, Traitor, v. 1.

He set up as a Surgeon upon his bare natural stock of knowledge, and his experience in Kibes. But then he had a very great stock of confidence withal, to help out the other.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 388.

A great stock of parliamentary knowledge.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

19. Share; portion.

Whilst we, like younger Brothers, get at best
 But a small stock, and must work out the rest.
Cowley, To Lord Falkland.

Therefore nothing would satisfy him [a young prodigal] unless he were intrusted with the Stock which was intended for him, that he might shew the difference between his Father's Conduct and his own.
Stillingfleet, Sermons, III. i.

20. Ground; reason; evidence; proof.

He piles our infirmities, and strikes off much of the account upon that stock.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 914.

21. The part of a pack of cards which in certain games is not dealt out, but left on the table, to be drawn from as occasion requires.

Nay, then, I must buy the stock; send me good carding! I hope the prince's hand be not in this sport.
Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, iv. 1.

22. In agri.: (a) The horses, cattle, sheep, and other useful animals raised or kept on a farm or ranch: distinctively known as live stock: as, a farmer's land and stock. The term is extended to any animals, as fish or oysters, artificially propagated.

Brandy was produced, pipes lighted, and conversation returned to the grand staple Australian subject—stock.
A. C. Grant, Bush Life in Queensland, I. 141.

(b) The implements of husbandry stored for use. Also called dead stock.—23. The raw material from which anything is made; stuff; material: as, paper-stock (rags, fiber, wood-pulp, etc.); soap-stock.

In its natural state, fat of animals is always associated with cellular tissue and other foreign matters, which must be separated before it can be used as candle stock.
Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 350.

24. The liquor or broth prepared by boiling meat, with or without vegetables, etc., so as to extract the nutritious properties, and used as a foundation for different kinds of soup. Also called soup-stock.—25. A good kind of red and gray brick, used for the exterior of walls and the front of buildings.—26. A name of several cruciferous garden-flowers. (a) One of several species of Mathiola, or sometimes the species in general: originally stock-gillyflower. (b) By extension, the somewhat similar Malcolbia maritima, the Mahon stock, a low diffuse annual, in England called Virginia or virgin stock, though from the shores of the Mediterranean. The name has been applied also to the genus Heliphila.

27. A covering for the leg; a stocking. Compare nether-stocks.

A linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other.
Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 67.

28. In her., the stump of a tree used as a bearing: represented as cut square on top and eradicated—that is, torn up by the roots—with at least the main roots indicated.—29. (a) The pillar or post on which the holy-water vessel was fixed. E. Peacock. Hence—(b) A holy-water vessel, or aspersorium.

Item. one holywater stocke of glasse with a bayle.
Inventory 34, Henry VIII.

30. The proceeds of the sale of the catch of a fishing-trip; the net value of a cargo of fish. [New Eng.]—31. pl. A frame in which a horse or other animal can be secured or slung for shoeing or for a veterinary operation.—32. In mining, sometimes used as the equivalent of the German stock (plural stöcke), especially in translating from that language. A "stock" is a mass of ore of irregular form, but usually thick in proportion to its other dimensions, and not having the characters of a true vein, but belonging more properly to the class of segregated veins or masses. Some "stocke" resemble very nearly the "carbonas" of the Cornish miner; others are akin to the "flats" of the north of England.

33. In early forms of feudalism, commendation. See to accept stock, below.—34. In zool., a compound, colonial, or aggregate organism; an aggregate of persons forming one organic whole, which may grow by budding or cast off parts to start a new set of persons: as, a polyp-stock. A polypidom, a polyzoary, a chain of salps or doliolids, etc., are examples. Haeckel extends stock in this sense to the broader biological conception which includes those plants that propagate by buds or shoots. See teetology.—Dead stock. See def. 22.—Drop of stock. See drop.—Fancy stocks. See fancy.—Holy-water stock, a vessel for holy water; a holy-water stoup. See water.—Live stock. See def. 22.—Lock, stock, and barrel. See lock.—Long of stock. See long.—Net stock. See net.—On or upon the stocks. See def. 13.—Preference or preferred stock. See preference.—Rolling stock. See rolling-stock.—Stock-and-bill tackle. Same as stock-tackle.—Stock and block, everything; both capital and interest.

Before I came home I lost all, stock and block.
Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, p. 236.

Stock and die, a screw-cutting die in its holder.—Stock certificate. (a) In the law of corporations, a certificate issued by a corporation or joint-stock company to a shareholder, as evidence of his title to a specified number of shares of the capital stock. (b) In Eng. finance, a certificate issued by or on behalf of the government, pursuant to the National Debt Act, 33 and 34 Vict., c. 71, to a holder of consols or of some other public indebtedness or annuities, as evidence of his title to such stock, with coupons annexed, entitling the bearer of the coupon to the corresponding dividend. A stock certificate is evidence of title to the stock, as distinguished from the stock itself, which is considered as an intangible right.—Stock company. (a) A commercial or other company or corporation whose capital is divided into shares, which are held or owned by individuals, generally with limited liability, as distinguished from a partnership: as, a stock company for the manufacture of window-glass. (b) A company of actors and actresses employed more or less permanently under the same management, and usually connected with a central or home theater.—Stock dividend. See dividend.—Stock indicator. See indicator.—Stock in trade, the goods kept for sale by a shop-keeper; hence, a person's mental equipment or resources considered as qualifying him for a special service or business.—Stock of descent, in the law of inheritances, the person with whose ownership any given succession of inheritance is considered as commencing. At common law, in order to determine who was entitled to succeed as heir, the inquiry was for the heir of the person last actually seized. This rule has been superseded by modern legislation.—To accept stock, in early feudal customs, the act of a lord in receiving another person as his vassal.—To give stock, the act of a person in becoming the vassal of a lord.—To have on the stocks, to have in hand; to be at work upon.—To take stock. (a) Same as to accept stock. (b) In com., to make an inventory of stock or goods on hand; hence, with of, to make an estimate of; set a value upon; investigate for the purpose of forming an opinion; loosely, to notice.

In taking stock of his familiarly worn . . . nautical clothes, piece by piece, she took stock of a formidable knife in a sheath at his waist, . . . and of a whistle hanging round his neck, and of a short jagged knotted club.
Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, ii. 12.

To take stock in. (a) To take a share or shares in; take or have an interest in. Hence—(b) To repose confidence in; believe in: as, to take little stock in one's stories. [Colloq.]

Captain Polly gives the right hand of fellowship to two boys in whom nobody else is willing to take stock, and her faith in them saves them.
Harper's Mag., Oct., 1889, Literary Notes.

To water stocks. See water, v. t.

II. a. Kept in stock; ready for service at all times; habitually produced or used; standing; as, a stock play; a stock anecdote; a stock sermon.

The old stock-oaths, I am confident, do not amount to above forty-five, or fifty at most.
Swift, Polite Conversation, Int.

The master of the house, who was burning to tell one of his seven stock stories.
Dickens, Sketches, Tales, x. 2.

stock¹ (stok), v. [< ME. stocken, stokken = MD. MHG. stocken, G. stocken, put in the stocks; from the noun: see stock¹, n.] I. trans. 1. To provide with a stock, handle, or the like: as, to stock a gun or an anchor.
They can mend and new stock their pieces, as well, almost, as an Englishman.
Gov. Bradford, in App. to New England's Memorial, p. 456.

2. To fasten, bolt, or bar, as a door or window. [Old and prov. Eng.]

Oftn tymes the dure is stocked, and we parsons & vicars cannot get brode, wyne, nor water.
Fabric Rolls of York Minster (1519), p. 268. (E. Peacock.)

3. To put in the stocks as a punishment; hence, to confine; imprison.

Rather deye I wolde and determine,
As thynketh me now, stocked in prison,
In wrechednesse, in filthe and in vermyne.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 330.

They suffered great hardships for this their love and good-will, being often stocked, stoned, beaten, whipped, and imprisoned. Penn., Rise and Progress of Quakers, v.

4. To lay up in store; accumulate for future use: as, to stock goods. Scott, Quentin Durward, xviii.—5. To provide or supply with stock. (a) To supply with a stock of goods; store with commodities; store with anything: as, to stock a warehouse.

Our Author, to divert his Friends to Day, Stocks with Variety of Fools his Play.
Steele, Tender Husband, Prol.

The bazaars were crowded with people, and stocked with all manner of eastern delicacies.
R. P. Burton, El-Medinal, p. 419.

(b) To supply with cattle, sheep, etc., or, in some uses, to supply with domestic animals, implements, etc.: as, to stock a farm.

He has bought the great farm, . . .
And stock'd it like an emperor.
Fletcher (and another?), Prophetess, v. 2.

(c) To furnish with a permanent growth, especially with grass: as, to stock a pasture.

6. To suffer to retain milk for many hours, as cows before selling.—7. To dig up; root out; extirpate by grubbing: sometimes with up.

This time is to be stocked every tree
At way with herbes brode, eke root and bough.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 182.

The wild bear not only spoils her branches, but stocks up her roots.
Decay of Christian Piety.

8. Same as stock¹, 2.

II. intrans. 1. To branch out into shoots immediately above ground; tiller: applied to grasses, grain, or flowers.

About two months ago broad blanks were to be seen on many outfields, and, though they were stocked a little, the crop is far too thin.
The Scotsman.

2. To send out sprouts, as from a stem which has been cut over: said of a tree or plant.—3. To make a certain profit on stock. See stock¹, n., 30. [New Eng.] stock² (stok), n. [< OF. cstoc = It. stocco, a rapier: see stock¹, and cf. estoc, tuck².] 1. Same as stoc; also, a thrusting-sword used in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, superseding the cut-and-thrust sword of earlier times.—2. Same as stoccade, 1.

stock² (stok), v. t. [< stock², n.] To hit with a rapier or stock.

Oh, the brave age is gone! in my young days
A chevalier would stock a needle's point
Three times together.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, iii. 4.

stock-account (stok'a-kount'), n. In com., an account in a ledger showing on one side the amount of the original stock with accumulations, and on the other the amount of what has been disposed of.

stockade (sto-kād'), n. [Formerly also stockado, stoccade; < stock² + -ade¹, in imitation of stocade, < F. cstocade, a thrust in fencing (and of palisade?): see stoccade.] 1. In fort., a fence or barrier constructed by planting upright in the ground timber, piles, or trunks of trees, so as to inclose an area which is to be defended. In Oriental warfare such stockades are often of formidable strength and great extent, as the stockades of Rangoon.

2. An inclosure or pen made with posts and stakes.—3. In hydraul. engin., a row of piles serving as a breakwater, or to protect an embankment.

stockade (sto-kād'), v. t.; pret. and pp. stockaded, ppr. stockading. [Formerly also stockado, stoccade; < stockade, n.] To encompass or fortify with posts or piles fixed in the ground.

On the back of the Hill, the Land being naturally low, there is a very large Moat cut from the Sea to the River, which makes the whole an Island; and that back part is stockadoed round with great Trees, set up an end.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 160.

stockadoŭ (sto-kā'dō), n. 1. Same as stoccade.

Robrus, who, addict to nimble fence,
Still greets me with stockado's violence.
Marston, Satires, i. 132.

2. Same as stockade.

Stockadoes, Palisadoes, stop their waters.
Heywood, Four Prentises (Works, ed. 1574, II. 242).

stockadoŭ, v. t. See stockade.

stock-beer (stok'bēr), n. Lager-beer. See becy¹. [Rare.] stock-blind (stok'blind), a. Blind as a stock or block; stone-blind.

True lovers are blind, stockblind.
Wycherley, Country Wife, ii. 1.

stock-board (stok'bōrd), n. 1. In brickmaking, a board over which the mold is passed, and which forms the bottom of the mold in molding.—2. In organ-building, the upper board of a wind-chest.

stock-book (stok'būk), n. In com., a book in which a detailed account is kept of the stock of goods on hand.

stock-bow (stok'bō), n. A crossbow of any kind; a bow mounted on a stock.

stock-breeder (stok'brē'dēr), n. One whose occupation is the breeding of live stock; a stock-farmer; a stock-raiser.

stock-broker (stok'brō'kēr), n. [< stock¹ + broker.] A broker who, for a commission, attends to the purchase and sale of stocks or shares, and of government and other securities, in behalf and for the account of clients. On the London stock-exchange brokers cannot deal directly with brokers, but must treat with a class of operators called jobbers. See jobber², 4.

stock-broking (stok'brō'king), n. The business of a stock-broker.

stock-brush (stok'brush), n. A brush in which the tufts are arranged on a flat wooden stock with a handle. Encyc. Brit., IV. 403.

stock-buckle (stok'buk¹), n. A buckle used to fasten the stock (see stock¹, n., 10), usually at the back of the neck. These buckles were frequently of gold, and sometimes jeweled.

stock-car (stok'kär), n. On a railroad, a car used to transport live stock, as horses, cattle, pigs, and sheep; a cattle-car. It is usually a long covered car, with sides and ends formed with slats for ventilation, and is sometimes fitted with conveniences for feeding and watering the stock.

stock-dove (stok'duv), n. [< ME. stok-douwe, stokke-dowe = MD. stock-duyee; as stock¹ + dovel: so called, according to some writers, because it was at one time believed to be the stock of the many varieties of the domestic pigeon; according to others, from its breeding in the stocks of trees.] The wild pigeon of Europe, Columba oenas. It is closely related to the rock-dove, C. livia, with which it has often been confounded, but is smaller and darker-colored, without white on the neck or wings. Also rarely called hole-dove. Compare rock-dove, ring dove.

stock-duck (stok'duk), n. The common mallard, Anas boscas.

stock-eikle (stok'ikl), n. Same as hickwall. [Worcestershire, Eng.] stocker (stok'ēr), n. [< stock¹ + -er¹.] 1. A workman who makes or fits gun-stocks.

The stocker upon receiving the stock first roughs it into shape, or, as it is called, trims it out, with a mallet, chisel, and draw-knife.
W. F. Greener, The Gun, p. 249.

2. One who is employed in the felling and grubbing up of trees. [Prov. Eng.]—Stockers' saw, a small saw designed especially for the use of the gun-stocker or armorer.

stock-exchange (stok'eks-chānj'), n. 1. A building, place, or mart where stocks or shares are bought and sold.—2. An association of brokers and dealers or jobbers in stocks, bonds, and other securities, created under state or municipal authority, or by corporations concerned in the business connected with the carrying on of railways, mines, manufactures, banks, or other commercial or industrial pursuits.

stock-farm (stok'fārm), n. A farm devoted to stock-breeding.

stock-farmer (stok'fār'mēr), n. A farmer who is chiefly engaged in the breeding and rearing of different kinds of live stock. Also called store-farmer.

stock-father (stok'fā'fthēr), n. A progenitor.
stock-feeder (stok'fē'dēr), n. 1. One who is chiefly engaged in the feeding or fattening of live stock; a stock-farmer.—2. An attachment to a manger for the automatic supply of a certain quantity of feed to stock at fixed intervals.

stock-fish¹ (stok'fish), n. [< ME. stokefysche, stokfysche = D. MLG. stokvisch = MHG. stocvisch, G. stockfisch = Sw. stockfisk = Dan. stokfisk; as stock¹, n., + fish¹.] The exact sense in which stock is here used is uncertain; various views are reflected in the quotations. Certain gadoid fish which are cured by splitting and drying hard without salt, as eod, ling, hake, hallock, torsk, or cusk. Codfish are thus hard-dried in the air without salt most extensively in Norway and Greenland, but the art has not been acquired in the United States.

From hense [Norway] is brought into all Europe a fysshe of the kindes of them whiche we caule haddockes or hakes, indurate and dried with coulede, and beaten with clubbes or stockes, by reason whereof the Gernasyns caule them stokfysche.
R. Eden, tr. of Jacobus Zieglerus (First Books on America, [Ed. Arber, p. 303].

Cogan says of stockfish, "Concerning which fish I will say no more than Erasmus hath written in his Colloquio. There is a kind of fishe which is called in English Stockfish: it nourisheth no more than a stock." . . . Stockfish whilst it is imbeaten is called Buckhorn, because it is so tough; when it is beaten upon the stock, it is termed stockfish.
Quoted in Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 155, note.

stock-fish² (stok'fish), n. [< stock¹, n., 22. + fish¹.] In fish-culture, fish adapted or used for stocking rivers, ponds, lakes, etc.

stock-gang (stok'gāng), n. In a saw-mill, a group or gang of saws arranged in a frame and used for reducing a log or balk to boards, etc., at one passage through the machine. A saw used in such a stock-gang is called a stock-saw.

stock-gillyflower (stok'jil'i-flou-ēr), n. A plant of the genus Matthiola, chiefly M. incana: so called as having a woody stem, to distinguish it from the clove-gillyflower or carnation.

stock-hawk (stok'hāk), n. The peregrine falcon, Falco peregrinus. See cut under duck-hawk. [Shetland.]

stock-holder (stok'hōl'dēr), n. One who is a proprietor of stock in the public funds, or who holds some of the shares of a bank or other company.

stock-horse (stok'hōrs), n. A horse used on an Australian station in driving, mustering, cutting out, and similar work.

He was an aged stockhorse, which I had bought very cheap, as being a secure animal to begin with.
H. Kingsley, Hillyars and Burtons, 1.

stockily (stok'i-li), adv. In a stocky manner; short and stout: as, a stockily built person.

stock-indicator (stok'in'di-kā-tōr), n. See indicator.

stockinet (stok-i-net'), n. [Adapted from stocking-et, < stocking + -et.] An elastic knitted textile fabric, of which undergarments, etc., are made. Also spelled stocking-et or stockingette, and also called jersey, jersey cloth, and elastic cloth.

stocking (stok'ing), n. [< stock¹ + dim. -ing.] 1. A close-fitting covering for the foot and lower leg. Stockings were originally made of cloth or milled stuff, sewed together, but they are now usually knitted by the hand or woven in a frame, the material being wool, cotton, or silk.

Their legges were adorn'd with close long white silke stockings, curiously embroidered with golde to the Middle-legge.
Chapman, Masque of Middle Temple and Lincoln's Inn.

2. Something like or suggesting such a covering. (a) The lower part of the leg of a quadruped when of a different color from the rest: as, a horse or cow with white stockings. See cut under gayal. (b) A covering of feathers on the shank of some birds: a legging or leg-muff. Compare blue stocking, 2, and see cuts under Erionemis, Spathura, and pouter.—Elastic stocking, a stocking of elastic webbing, used for giving uniform pressure to a limb, as in the treatment of varicose veins.—In one's stockings or stocking-feet, without shoes or slippers: used in statements of stature-measurements: as, he stands six feet in his stockings (that is, with his shoes off).—Lisle-thread stocking. See thread.—Silk stockings. See silk.—To sew up one's stocking. See sew.

stocking (stok'ing), v. t. [< stocking, n.] To dress in stockings; cover as with stockings. Dryden.

stockinger (stok'ing-ēr), n. [< stocking + -er¹.] 1. One who knits or weaves stockings.

The robust rural Saxon degenerates in the mills to the Leicester stockinger, to the imbecile Manchester spinner.
Emerson, English Traits, x.

2. One who deals in stockings and other small articles of apparel.

stockinet (stok-ing-et'), n. Same as stockinet.

stocking-frame (stok'ing-frām), n. A special form of knitting-machine; also, a general term for the knitting-machine.

stocking-loom (stok'ing-lōm), n. A stocking-frame.

stocking-machine (stok'ing-mā-shōn'), n. A stocking-frame or knitting-machine.

stocking-maker (stok'ing-mā'kēr), n. A bottle-tit, Acredula caudata, or A. rosea: translating a French name, débaissaire, referring to the long woven nest, likened to a stocking. C. Swainson.

stocking-yarn (stok'ing-yār'n), n. Loosely spun thread, made especially for stockings.

stockish (stok'ish), a. [< stock¹ + -ish¹.] Like a stock or block; stupid; blockish. Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 81. [Rare.]

stockishness (stok'ish-nes), n. The quality or character of being stockish; stupidity; lack of sense or feeling. [Rare.]

Friend,
I've seen you with St. John—O stockishness!
Wear such a ruff, and never call to mind
St. John's head in a charger?

Broening, Strafford, iii. 3.

stock-jobber (stok'job'ēr), n. One who speculates in stocks for gain; one whose occupation is the purchase and sale of stocks or shares.

Publick Knaves and Stock-Jobbers pass for Wits at her end of the Town, as common Cheats and Gamsters do at yours.
Steele, Tender Husband, ii. 1.

stock-jobbery (stok'job'ēr-i), n. The practice or business of dealing in stocks or shares.

stock-jobbing (stok'job'ing), n. The business of dealing in stocks or shares; the purchase and sale of stocks, bonds, etc., as carried on by jobbers who operate on their own account.

stockless (stok'les), a. Without a stock: as, stockless anchors; stockless guns.

stock-list (stok'list), n. A list, published daily or periodically in connection with a stock-exchange, enumerating the leading stocks dealt in, the prices current, the actual transactions, etc.

stockman (stok'mān), n.; pl. stockmen (-men). 1. A man who has charge of the stock in an establishment of any kind.—2. A stock-farmer or rancher.—3. A man employed by a stock-farmer as a herdsman or the like. [U. S. and Australia.]

stock-market (stok'mār'ket), n. 1. A market where stocks are bought and sold; a stock-exchange.—2. The purchase and sale of stocks or shares: as, the stock-market was dull.—3. A cattle-market.

stock-morel (stok'mor'el), n. A fungus, Morchella esculenta. See morel², Morchella.

stock-owl (stok'oul), n. The great eagle-owl of Europe, Bubo ignavus.

stock-pot (stok'pot), n. A pot in which soup-stock is prepared and kept ready for use.

stock-printer (stok'prin'tēr), n. An instrument for automatically printing stock quotations transmitted by telegraph; a stock-indicator.

stock-pump (stok'pūmp), n. A pump which, by means of levers, is operated by the weight of an animal as it walks on the platform of the pump, seeking water.

stock-punished (stok'pun'isht), a. Punished by being confined in the stocks. Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 140.

stock-purse (stok'pērs), n. A fund used for the common purposes of any association or gathering of persons.

stock-raiser (stok'rā'zēr), n. One who raises cattle and horses: a stock-farmer.

stock-ranch (stok'rānch), n. A stock-farm. [Western U. S.]

stock-range (stok'rānj), n. A tract or extent of country over which live stock (especially cattle) range. [Western U. S.]

stock-rider (stok'rī'dēr), n. A man employed as a herdsman on an unfenced station in Australia.

Now and afterwards I found out that he was a native of the colony, a very great stock-rider, and was principal overseer to Mr. Charles Morton.

H. Kingsley, Hillyars and Burtons, xlviii.

stock-room (stok'rōm), n. A room in which is kept a reserved stock of materials or goods ready for use or sale.

stocks (stoks), n. pl. See stock¹, 12.

stock-saddle (stok'sad'l), n. A saddle used in the western United States, an improvement of the old Spanish and Mexican saddle. Its peculiarity is its heavy tree and iron horn, made to withstand a strong strain from a rope or reata.

For a long spell of such work a stock-saddle is far less tiring than the ordinary Eastern or English one, and in every way superior to it.

T. Roosevelt, The Century, XXXV. 863.

stock-station (stok'stā'shōn), n. A ranch or stock-farm. [Australia.]

stock-still (stok'stīl'), a. Still as a stock or fixed post; perfectly still.

If he begins a digression, from that moment, I observe, his whole work stands stock-still.

Sterne, Tristram Shandy, i. 22.

stock-stone (stok'stōn), n. A scouring-stone used in the stretching and smoothing of leather before currying.

stock-tackle (stok'tak'l), n. A tackle used in handling an anchor and rousing it up to secure it for sea; usually called a stock-and-bill tackle.

stock-taking (stok'tā'king), n. See to take stock, under stock¹.

stock-train (stok'trān), n. A train of cars carrying cattle; a cattle-train. [U. S.]

stock-whaup (stok'hwāp), n. The curlew, Numenius arquata: the whaup.

stockwork (stok'wērk), n. [< stock¹ + work; tr. G. stockwerk.] In mining, that kind of ore-deposit in which the ore is pretty generally or uniformly distributed through a large mass of rock, so that the excavations are not limited to a certain narrow zone, as they are in the case of an ordinary fissure-vein. This mode of occurrence is almost exclusively limited to, and very characteristic of, stanniferous deposits, and the word is used especially in describing those of the Erzgebirge. Also called stockwerk (the German name).

The name of interlaced masses, or stockworks, is given to masses of igneous rock penetrated by a great number of little veins of metallic ores which cross in various ways. Callon, Mining (tr. by Le Neve Foster and Galloway), i. 47.

The stockwerk consists of a series of small veins, interlacing with each other and ramifying through a certain portion of the rock.

J. D. Whitney, Met. Wealth of the U. S., p. 39.

stocky (stok'i), a. [< stock¹ + -y¹. Cf. stogy.] 1. Short and stout; stumpy; stock-like.

They had no titles of honour among them but such as denoted some bodily strength or perfection: as, such a one "the tall," such a one "the stocky," such a one "the gruff."

Addison, Spectator, No. 433.

2. In zool., of stout or thick-set form: stout-bodied.—3. In bot., having a strong, stout stem, not spindling.

Stocky plants, vigorous, and growing rapidly, are better than simply early plants. Science, XIV. 364.

4. Headstrong; stubborn. [Prov. Eng.]

stock-yard (stok'yārd), n. An inclosure connected with a railroad, or a slaughter-house, or a market, etc., for the distribution, sorting, sale, or temporary keeping of cattle, swine, sheep, and horses. Such yards are often of great size, and are arranged with pens, sheds, stables, conveniences for feeding, etc.

stodgy (stoj'i), a. [Assimilated form of stogy, ult. of stocky.] 1. Heavy; lumpy; distended. [Colloq., Eng.]

"Maggie," said Tom, . . . "you don't know what I've got in my pockets. . . ." "No," said Maggie. "How stodgy they look, Tom! Is it marls or colubus?"

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 5.

2. Crammed together roughly; lumpy; crude and indigestible. [Colloq., Eng.]

The book has too much the character of a stodgy summary of facts. Saturday Rev.

3. Wet; miry. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

stœchiology, stœchiometrical, etc. Same as stœchiology, etc.

stog (stog), v.: pret. and pp. stogged, ppr. stogging. [< stog, n.; ult. a var. of stock¹, v. Cf. stodge, v.] 1. trans. 1. To plunge a stick down through (the soil), in order to ascertain its depth; probe (a pool or marsh) with a pole. [Scotch.]—2. To plunge and fix in mire; stall in mud; mire. [Colloq., Eng.]

It was among the ways of good Queen Bess, Who ruled as well as mortal ever can, sir, When she was stogged, and the country in a mess, She was wont to send for a Devon man, sir.
West Country Song, quoted in Kingsley's Westward Ho, x.

II. intrans. To plant the feet slowly and cautiously in walking. Jamieson. [Scotch.] stogy (stō'gi), a. and n. [cf. stog + *-y*¹. Cf. stodgy, stocky.] I. a. Rough; coarse; heavy; as, stogy shoes; a stogy cigar.

One of his legs, ending in a stogy boot, was braced out in front of him. The Century, XXXVI, 88.

II. n.; pl. stogies (-giz). 1. A rough, heavy shoe.—2. A long, coarse cigar.

[Colloq. in all uses.]

stoic (stō'ik), a. and n. [Formerly also stoick; = F. stoïque = Sp. estóico = Pg. estoico = It. stoico, < L. stoicus, < Gr. στοικός, pertaining to a porch or portico, specifically pertaining to that called Στοὰ Ποικίλη, 'the Painted Porch' in the Agora at Athens, and to the school of philosophy founded by Zeno, who frequented this porch.] I. a. [cap.] Pertaining to the Stoics, or to their teaching; as, a Stoic philosopher; the Stoic doctrine; hence, manifesting indifference to pleasure or pain (compare stoical).

II. n. 1. [cap.] A disciple of the philosopher Zeno, who founded a sect about 308 B. C. He taught that men should be free from passion, unmoved by joy or grief, and submit without complaint to the unavoidable necessity by which all things are governed. The Stoics are proverbially known for the sternness and austerity of their ethical doctrines, and for the influence which their tenets exercised over some of the noblest spirits of antiquity, especially among the Romans. Their system appears to have been an attempt to reconcile a theological pantheism and a materialist psychology with a logic which seeks the foundations of knowledge in the representations or perceptions of the senses, and a morality which claims as its first principle the absolute freedom of the human will. The Stoics teach that whatever is real is material; matter and force are the two ultimate principles; matter is of itself motionless and unformed, though capable of receiving all motions and all forms. Force is the active, moving, and molding principle, and is inseparably joined with matter; the working force in the universe is God, whose existence as a wise thinking being is proved by the beauty and adaptation of the world. The supreme end of life, or the highest good, is virtue—that is, a life conformed to nature, the agreement of human conduct with the all-controlling law of nature, or of the human will with the divine will; not contemplation, but action, is the supreme problem for man; virtue is sufficient for happiness, but happiness or pleasure should never be made the end of human endeavor. The wise man alone attains to the complete performance of his duty; he is without passion, although not without feeling; he is not indulgent, but just toward himself and others; he alone is free; he is king and lord, and is inferior in inner worth to no other rational being, not even to Zeus himself.

Certain philosophers of the Epicureans and of the Stoics encountered him. Acts xvii, 18.

Hence—2. A person not easily excited; one who appears or professes to be indifferent to pleasure or pain: one who exhibits calm fortitude.

Flint-hearted Stoics, you, whose marble eyes Contain a wrinkle, and whose souls despise To follow nature's too affected fashion.

Quarles, Emblems, ii, 4.

School of the Stoics, the Porch. See porch.

stoical (stō'ik-əl), a. [cf. stoic + -al.] Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of the Stoics; hence, manifesting or maintaining indifference to pleasure or pain; exhibiting or proceeding from calm fortitude: as, stoical indifference.

It is a common imputation to Seneca that, though he declaimed with so much strength of reason, and a stoical contempt of riches and power, he was at the same time one of the richest and most powerful men in Rome. Steele, Tatler, No. 170.

Stoical ethics. See Stoic, n. 1.

stoically (stō'ik-əl-i), adv. In the manner of the Stoics, or of a stoic; without apparent feeling or sensibility; with indifference to pleasure or pain; with calm fortitude.

stoicalness (stō'ik-əl-nes), n. The state of being stoical; indifference to pleasure or pain; calm fortitude.

stoicheiology (stōi-kī-ol'ō-jī), n. [Also stoichiology, and more prop. stachiology; < Gr. στοιχείον, a small post, also a first principle (dim. of στοίχος, a row, rank, < στέλλειν, go in line or order: see stich), + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] A division of a science which treats of the nature of the different kinds of objects that science deals with, but not of the manner in which they are associated with one another; the doctrine of elements.

The conditions of mere thinking are given in certain elementary requisites; and that part of logic which analyzes and considers these may be called its stoicheiology, or doctrine of elements. . . . Logical stoicheiology, or the doctrine conversant about the elementary requisites of mere thought. . . . In its stoicheiology, or doctrine of elements, logic considers the conditions of possible thought. Sir W. Hamilton, Logic, iv., xxiv.

stoicheometrical (stōi'kī-ō-met'ri-kal), a. [Also stachometrical; < stoicheiometr-y + -ic-al.] Pertaining to stoicheometry.

stoicheometry (stōi-kī-ōm'e-trī), n. [Also stachometry; < Gr. στοιχείον, a first principle, + μέτρον, a measure: *see meter*¹.] The science of calculating the quantities of chemical elements involved in chemical reactions or processes.

Stoicant, n. [ME. stoicien; as Stoic + -ian.] A Stoic. Chaucer, Boethius, v. meter 4.

stoicism (stō'is-izm), n. [= F. stoïcisme; as stoic + -ism.] 1. [cap.] The opinions and maxims of the Stoics; also, the conduct recommended by the Stoics.—2. A real or pretended indifference to pleasure or pain; the bearing of pain without betraying feeling; calm fortitude.

He (Nuncomar) had just parted from those who were most nearly connected with him. Their cries and contortions had appalled the European ministers of justice, but had not produced the smallest effect on the iron stoicism of the prisoner. Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

= Syn. 2. Insensibility, Impassibility, etc. See apathy.

stoicity (stō-is'i-tī), n. [cf. stoic + -ity.] Stoicalness; stoical indifference. B. Jonson, Epicoene, i, 1.

stoit (stōit), v. i. [A dial. var. of *stot*².] 1. To walk in a staggering way; totter; stumble on any object. [Scotch.]—2. To leap from the water, as certain fish. Day, [Prov. Eng.] stoiter (stōi'tēr), v. i. [A dial. var. of stotter.] Same as stoit.

stoke¹, v. t. and i. [ME. stoken, < OF. estoquer (= *It. stoccare), stab, thrust, < estoc, a rapier, stoc; *see stock*², stoccade.] To pierce; stiek; thrust.

Ne short swerd for to stoke with point bytynge. Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1683.

stoke² (stōk), v.; pret. and pp. stoked, ppr. stoking. [cf. stoker, taken as an E. noun, < stoke* + *-er*¹, but appar. < D. stoker, < stoken, kindle a fire, incite, instigate, < MD. stok, D. stok, a stiek, stock, rapier; *see stock*¹. Cf. *stok*¹.] I. trans. To poke, stir up, and maintain the fire in (a furnace, especially one used with a boiler for the generation of steam for an engine); supply with fuel; trim and maintain combustion in.

Much skill is needed to stoke the furnace of a steam-boiler successfully; and one stoker will often be able to keep the steam well up when another of equal strength and diligence will fail altogether.

Brande and Cox, Dict. Sci., Lit., and Art.

Gold stoking, in glass-manuf., the process of lowering the temperature of the oven until the glass attains the tough fluid consistency necessary for blowing.

II. intrans. To attend to and supply a furnace with fuel; act as a stoker or fireman.

stoke-hole (stōk'hōl), n. The compartment of a steamer in which the furnace-fires are worked: in the United States called fire-room.

stoker (stō'kēr), n. [D. stoker, one who kindles or sets on fire, < stoken, kindle a fire, stir a fire, < stok, a stock, stiek (hence a poker for a fire): *see stock*¹, and *cf. stoke*².] 1. One who attends to and maintains suitable combustion in a furnace, especially a furnace used in generating steam, as on a locomotive or steamship; a fireman.—2. A poker. [Rare.]—Mechanical stoker, an automatic device for feeding fuel to a furnace, and for keeping the grate free from ashes and clinkers. Many such machines have been invented. Endless aprons or chains, or revolving toothed cylinders, are common feeders, distributing the coal to the grate in definite quantity as needed, while shaking grates, revolving grate-bars, and special bars called picker-bars, with teeth working in the air-spaces of the grate, are employed for the discharge of ashes and cinders.

Stokesia (stō-kē'si-ä), n. [NL. (L'Heritier, 1788), named after Dr. Jonathan Stokes (1755–1831), a British botanist.] A genus of composite plants, of the tribe Fernoniaceæ, subtribe Euvernoniceæ, and series Stilpnopapeæ.

It is characterized by large stalked heads of blue flowers, with smooth three- or four-angled achenes and a pappus of four or five long bristles. The corollas, unlike the tubular type otherwise prevalent in the tribe, are flattened above the middle and somewhat ligulate, and toward the outside of the head, by their increased size and deeply five-parted border, they suggest the tribe Chicoriaceæ. The only species, S. cyanæa, is a native of the southern United States near the Gulf of Mexico, a rare plant of wet pine-barrens. It is an erect shrub, clad above with loose wool and alternate clasping leaves, and bearing petioled leaves below, which are entire or spiny-fringed. The handsome blue flowers form large terminal heads which are purplish in the bud, resemble those of the China aster, and are grown in large quantities for the London market, under the name of Stokes's aster.

stola (stō'lā), n.; pl. stolæ (-lē). [L.: *see stola*².] An ample outer tunic or dress worn by Roman women over the under-tunic or chemise; it fell as low as the ankles or feet, and was gathered in around the waist by a girdle. It was a characteristic garment of the Roman matrons, as the toga was of the men, and divorced women and courtesans were not permitted to wear it. See cut in preceding column.

stole¹ (stōl), n. Preterit and obsolete past participle of *steal*¹.

stole² (stōl), n. [cf. ME. stole, stoole, < OF. estole, F. étole = Sp. Pg. estola = It. stola, < L. stola, a stola, robe, stole, < Gr. στολή, a long robe; orig., in a gen. sense, dress, equipment, sacerdotal vestment or vestments; < πέλλειν, set, array, despatch: see stell.] 1. A stola, or any garment of similar nature.

Forsoth the fadir seyde to his zerauntis, Soone brynge ze forth the first stole, and clothe ze him.

Wyclif, Luke xv, 22.

Behind, four priests, in sable stole, Sung requiem for the warrior's soul.

Scott, L. of I. M., v, 30.

2. In the Roman Catholic, Oriental, and Anglican churches, an ecclesiastical vestment, consisting of a narrow strip of silk or other material, worn over the shoulders (by deacons over one shoulder) and hanging down in front to the knees or below them. It is widened and fringed at the ends, and usually has a cross embroidered on it at the middle and at each extremity. Stoles are worn of different colors, according to the ecclesiastical season. When celebrating the eucharist a priest wears his stole crossed upon the breast and secured by the girdle, at other times simply pendent from the shoulders. A bishop, on account of his pectoral cross, wears it pendent even when celebrating. A deacon wears it over the left shoulder and tied on the right side. In the Greek Church the stole has been worn since early times in two different forms, the deacon's (orarion) and the priest's (epitrachelion). Originally the stole was of linen, and probably was a napkin or cloth indicative of ministering at the altar and at agapæ. The pall or omophorion is of entirely distinct origin. See orarium.

Forth comth the preest with stole aboute his nekke, And bad hire be lyke to Sarra and Rebekke In wysdom and in trouthe of marriage.

Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 459.

3. A chorister's surplice or cotta: an occasional erroneous use.

Six little Singing-boys—dear little souls— In nice clean faces, and nice white stoles.

Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I, 210.

4. In her., usually, a bearing representing a scarf with straight and parallel sides, fringed at each end.—Groom of the stole, the first lord of the bed-chamber in the household of an English king.—Order of the Golden Stole, a Venetian order, the badge of which was a stole of cloth of gold worn over the robes. It disappeared with the independence of the republic of Venice.—Stole-fee, a fee paid to a priest for religious or ecclesiastical service, as for marriages, christenings, and funerals.

stole³ (stōl), n. Same as stolon.

stole⁴, n. An obsolete form of stool.

stoled (stōld), a. [cf. *stole*² + *-ed*².] Wearing a stole. G. Fletcher, Christ's Triumph After Death.

stolen (stō'ln), p. a. [Pp. of *steal*¹.] Obtained or acquired by stealth or theft: as, stolen goods.

Stolen waters are sweet. Prov. ix, 17.

Stolephoridae (stol-e-for'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stolephorus + -idae.] A family of malaacopterygian fishes typified by the genus Stolephorus; the anchovies. The body is oblong or elongate; the snout is produced forward; the mouth is very large and inferior; the maxillaries are very narrow, and project backward; the dorsal fin is submedian and short; the anal fin is rather long; the pectorals are normal; and the ventrals are abdominal, but further advanced than usual, and of moderate size. There is no lateral line, but along the sides is generally developed a broad silvery band, to which the typical genus owes its name. The species are mostly of small size, rarely exceeding 6 inches, and often less. About 70 are known, some inhabiting almost all tropical and temperate seas. Engraulitidae is a synonym.

stolephoroid (stō-lef'ō-roid), n. and a. [cf. Stolephorus + -oid.] I. n. A fish of the family Stolephoridae.

II. a. Of, or having characters of, the Stolephoridae.

Stolephorus (stō-lef'ō-rus), n. [NL. (Lacépède, 1803), < Gr. στολή, a stole, + φείρειν = *E. bear*¹.] A genus of fishes, related to the herrings, but with a produced snout, and a broad silvery band which has been compared to the white stole or band worn by priests, typical of the family Stolephoridae (or Engraulitidae). The common anchovy is S. encrasicolus. There are several others, as S. browni, from Cape Cod to Brazil, abounding southward; S. ringens, from Vancouver Island to Peru, a large anchovy; S. delicatissimus and S. compressus, of the Californian and Mexican coasts, the latter locally known as sprat (*see sprat*²).

Roman Woman Clad in the Stola (over which is draped the palla).

2 (c). This genus has been oftener called Engraulis. See cut under anchovy.
stolid (stol'id), a. [= Sp. estólido = Pg. estólido = It. stólido, < L. stólidus, unmoving, slow, dull, stupid; prob. akin to Gr. στίλιος.] Heavy; dull; stupid; not easily moved; lacking in or destitute of susceptibility; denoting dullness or impassiveness; as, a stolid person; a stolid appearance.

But the stolid calm of the Indian alone Remains where the trace of emotion has been.
Whittier, Mogg Megone, i.

=Syn. Doltish, wooden.

stolidity (stō-lid'i-ti), n. [= It. stolidità, < LL. stoliditas (t-s), dullness, stupidity, < L. stolidus, dull, stupid; see stolid.] The state or character of being stolid; dullness; stupidity.

These certainly are the fools in the text, indocile, intractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and be proof against demonstration itself.
Bentley, Sermons, i.

=Syn. See stolid.

stolidly (stol'id-li), adv. In a stolid manner: as, to gaze stolidly at one. Bailey.

stolidness (stol'id-nes), n. Stolidity.

stolo (stō'lō), n.; pl. stolones (stō-lō'nēz). [L.: see stolon.] In zool., a stolon.—Stolo prolifer, the proliferating stolon of some animals, as certain ascidians; a germ-stock. See stolon, 2 (e).

stolon (stō'lon), n. [NL., < L. stolon (n-), a shoot, branch, sucker.] 1. In bot.: (a) In phanerogams, a reclined or prostrate branch which strikes root at the tip, developing a new plant.

Carex vulgaris, var. stolonifera, showing the stolons.

A very slender naked stolon with a bud at the end constitutes a runner, as of the strawberry. See also cut under Solidago. (b) In mosses, a shoot running along or under the ground, and eventually rising into the air and producing fully leafed shoots. Goebel.—2. In zool., some proliferated part or structure, likened to the stolon of a plant, connecting different parts or persons of a compound or complex organism, and usually giving rise to new zooids by the process of budding. See cuts under Campanularia and Willisia. (a) A process of protoplasm between the different compartments of a multilocular foraminifer. (b) The procumbent, adherent, or creeping basal section of the stock of some social infusorians. (c) One of the prolongations of the caenosarc of some actinozoans. (d) The second stage of the embryo of some hydrozoans. (e) The germ-stock or prolongation of the tunie of some compound ascidians, as a salp; a stolo prolifer. See cuts under Salpa and Cyathozoid.

Also stole.

stolonate (stō'lon-āt), a. [stolon + -ate.] In zool., giving rise to or provided with a stolon or stolons; originating in a stolon; stoloniferous.

stoloniferous (stō-lō-nif'e-rus), a. [stolon (n-), a shoot, sucker, + ferre, bear, carry; see -ferous.] Producing or bearing stolons; proliferating, as an ascidian or a hydroid; stolonate.

stolzite (stol'zit), n. [Named after Dr. Stolz of Teplitz in Bohemia.] Native lead tungstate, a mineral occurring in tetragonal crystals of a green, brown, or red color, and resinous or subadamantine luster. Sometimes called scheelite.

stoma (stō'mā), n.; pl. stomata (-ma-tā). [NL., < Gr. στόμα (stōmar-), pl. στόματα, the mouth, a mouth, opening, entrance or outlet, a chiasm, cleft, etc., the face, front, fore part, etc.; = Zend staman, mouth. Cf. stomach, from the same source.] 1. In zool., a mouth or ingestive opening; an oral orifice; an ostium or ostiole; chiefly used of small or simple apertures, as a cytostome; hence, also, a small opening of any kind through which something may pass in or out; a pore. Specifically—(a) An opening of a lymphatic vessel; a lymphatic pore or orifice, as an interstice between the cells of a serous membrane. (b) The outer opening of a trachea or air-tube of an insect; a spiracle or breathing-hole. (c) A branchial pore of an ascidian or cranial vertebrate.

2. In bot., a minute orifice or slit in the epidermis of leaves, etc., which opens directly into air-cavities or intercellular spaces that pervade the interior, and through which free ingress and egress of air take place; a breathing-pore. The apparatus of the stoma consists usually of a pair of cells (there are several in the Equisetaceae, Hepaticaceae, etc.), called guard-cells or guardian-cells, between the opposed concave sides of which lies the slit or opening, which extends through the whole height of the epidermis and permits free communication between the intercellular spaces and the external air. According to Van Tieghem, the stomata are always open in sunlight and closed in darkness. These cells are strongly thickened on the upper and under walls of their opposed faces, while elsewhere their walls are relatively thin. The opening and closing of a stoma depend upon the difference in thickness of the parts of the walls. When the turgescence of the guard-cells increases, they curve more strongly, and consequently the cleft widens; but with decreased turgescence the cleft becomes narrower. See also cut under Iris.

3. In Swedenborg's philosophy, a cubical figure with hollowed surfaces, being the figure of the interstices of spheres arranged in what Swedenborg calls the fixed quadrilateral pyramidal position, supposed to be that natural to the spherical particles of water.

stomacace (stō-mak'ā-sē), n. [NL., < L. stomacace, < Gr. στομακία, a disease of the mouth, scurvy of the gums, < στόμα, mouth, + κάκη, badness, < κακός, bad.] Ulcerous stomatitis. See stomatitis.

stomach (stum'ak), n. [Now conformed terminally to the L. spelling, but pron. according to its ME. origin; early mod. E. stomack, stomacke, stomak, stomake; < ME. stomak, stouake, stomake, < OF. estomac, estomach, F. estomac = Pr. estomach = Sp. estómago = Pg. estomago = It. stomaco, the stomach, < L. stomachus, the throat, gullet, also the stomach, fig. taste, liking, also distaste, dislike, irritation, chagrin, < Gr. στόμαχος, the throat, gullet, the orifice of the stomach, hence also the stomach, lit. (as shown also in other uses, the neck of the bladder or of the uterus, etc.) a mouth or opening, < στόμα, mouth, opening; see stoma.] 1†. The throat; the gullet; the mouth.

Spiteful tongues in cankered stomachs placed.
Raleigh. (Insp. Dict.)

2. A more or less sac-like part of the body where food is digested. In the lowest animals any part of the sarcode or protoplasmic substance of the body is capable of digesting food, and forms during the process a temporary stomach, as in an amoeba. In many infusorial animalcules special vacuoles containing food are formed. These are inconstant both in number and in position, whence Ehrenberg's name, Polygastrica, for these organisms. In the highest protozoans, which have a definite oral or ingestive area, there is likewise a more or less fixed digestive tract, constituting a stomach. A few of the metazoans have no true digestion, and consequently no stomach; such are the parenchymatous or anenterous worms, which imbibe or soak in nutriment already elaborated in the tissues of the host of which they are parasites. But the vast majority of animals above the protozoans have an intestinal digestive tract the whole or a part of which may properly be called a stomach. In most of these, again, a definite stomach exists as a specialized, usually dilated, part of the alimentary canal, in which food is subjected to a certain degree of digestion subsequent to mastication and insalivation and prior to further digestive changes which go on in the intestine. Among vertebrates more than one section of the alimentary canal is called a stomach, and many vertebrates have more than one. Thus, in birds there are a true glandular stomach, the proventriculus, in which the esophagus ends, and a muscular or grinding stomach, the gizzard or gigerium. In mammals the stomach always extends from the end of the gullet to the beginning of the gut. It is of extremely variable size and shape. Kinds of mammalian stomachs sometimes distinguished are the simple, as in man, the carnivores, etc.; the complex or plurilocular stomach, as in various marsupials, rodents, some monkeys, etc.; and the compound or pluripartite. The last is confined to the ruminants. (See Ruminantia.) In man the stomach is the most dilated and most distensible part of the alimentary canal. It occupies parts of the left hypochondriac and epigastric regions of the abdomen, immediately within the abdominal walls, below the diaphragm and partly under the liver, to the right of the spleen, and above the transverse colon. In form it is irregularly conoidal, and curved upon itself. When moderately distended it is about 12 inches long and 4 wide; it weighs 3 or 4 ounces. But the size, shape, and hence the anatomical relations, vary greatly in different individuals and in different states of distention. It begins where the gullet ends, at the esophageal or cardiac orifice, and ends at the pyloric orifice, where the duodenum begins. From the cardiac orifice the stomach bulges to the left in a great cul-de-sac, the fundus cardiaca, or cardiac end, in contact with the spleen, and from this greatest caliber the organ lessens in diameter with a sweep to the right.

The lesser curvature or short border of the stomach, between the cardiac and pyloric orifices, is uppermost, and is connected with the liver by the lesser or gastrohepatic omentum. The greater curvature or long border of the stomach is opposite the other, between the same two points, and gives attachment to the great or gastrocolic omentum. These two curvatures separate the anterior and posterior surfaces. The stomach is held in place by folds of peritoneum, the gastrocolic, gastrohepatic, gastrosplenic, and gastrophrenic omenta, the last of which gives it most fixity. The arteries of the stomach are the gastric (a branch from the celiac axis), the pyloric and right gastro-epiploic branches of the hepatic, the left gastro-epiploic, and short branches from the splenic artery. The veins end in the splenic, superior mesenteric, and portal veins. The numerous lymphatics consist of a deep set and a superficial set. The nerves are the terminal branches of both pneumogastrics and many branches from the sympathetic system. The coats of the stomach are four—serous, muscular, submucous, and mucous. The serous layer is the peritoneum, which covers the whole organ on both its surfaces, and is reflected away from it along each of its curvatures. The muscular coat includes three sets of fibers—longitudinal, circular, and oblique, the last chiefly limited to the cardia. The submucous coat is simply the connective tissue between the muscular layer and the mucous membrane lining the stomach. This mucous membrane is the so-called "coat" of the stomach. It is thick, pinkish, reddish, or brownish, with a soft velvety surface, thrown into longitudinal folds or rugae when the organ is contracted. Studding the surface of the mucous membrane are numberless depressions or alveoli of polygonal tendency to hexagonal form, $\frac{2}{15}$ to $\frac{1}{15}$ of an inch in diameter; these are the enlarged mouths of the tubular gastric glands, which secrete the gastric juice by the action of which gastric digestion is effected. Two kinds of these follicles are distinguished by their microscopic structure—the pyloric and the cardiac. The former are found chiefly at and near the pyloric end, the latter most typical at the cardiac, and there are intermediate forms in intermediate regions. The epithelium lining the mucous membrane and its alveoli is of the kind called columnar. Besides the four coats above described, a fifth, a layer of involuntary muscular fibers between the mucous membrane and the submucous layer, is distinguished as the muscularis mucosae. The digestive activity of the stomach is intermittent, and depends upon the stimulus which the presence of food occasions. The muscular arrangement is such that food is continually rolled about, so that every part of the mass is submitted to the action of the gastric juice. In the stomach the proteids are converted into albumins and peptones by the pepsin, milk is curdled by the rennet-ferment, the gelatiniferous tissues are dissolved, and other less important changes are effected. See also cuts under alimentary, Asteroides, Appendicularia, Dibrochatiata, Doliolidae, intestine, peritoneum, Plumatella, pluteus, Protula, Pulmonata, Pycnogonida, Ruminantia, Salpa, Tragulus, and Tunicata.

3. The digestive person or alimentary zooid of a compound polyp. See gasterozoid.—4. In most insects of the orders Lepidoptera, Diptera, and some Hymenoptera, a bladder-like expansion of the esophagus, which can be dilated at the will of the insect; the sucking-stomach, by means of which the nectar of flowers or other liquid is sucked up, as water is drawn into a syringe. In mandibulate insects the oesophagus or crop takes the place of the sucking-stomach, and nearly all insects have two true stomachs, called proventriculus and ventriculus.

5. Appetite; desire or relish for food: as, to have a good stomach for one's meals.

The body is as so redy and penyble
 To wake, that my stomak is destroyed.
Chaucer, Summoner's Tale, l. 133.

Pray, sent you, lords; we'll bear you company,
 But with small stomach to taste any food.
Beau. and Fl. (?), Faithful Friends, iii. 2.

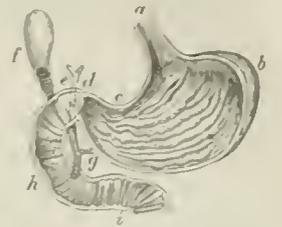

I'll make as bold with your meat; for the trot has got me a good stomach.
Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 234.

In some countries, where men and women have good travelling stomachs, they begin with porridge, then they fall to capon, or so forth, but if capon come short of filling their bellies, to their porridge again, 'tis their only course.
Webster and Deiker, Northward Hoe, i. 1.

Hence—6. Relish; taste; inclination; liking: as, to have no stomach for controversy.

He also hathe tolde me moche off hys stomake and tendre faver that he owythe to yow. Pastan Letters, III. 160.

Finding that the citizens had apparently no stomach for the fight, he removed his trophies, and took his departure.
Motley, Dutch Republic, II. 68.

Human Stomach and Beginning of Intestine, laid open to show rugae.
 a, esophagus or gullet; b, cardiac left dilatation of stomach; c, lesser curvature of stomach, opposite which is the unretorted greater curvature; d, pylorus, at right extremity of stomach; e, biliary or hepatic duct; f, gall bladder, whose duct, the cystic duct, forms with the hepatic duct the ductus communis choledochus, or common bile-duct; g, pancreatic duct, opening into the last; h, i, duodenum, or beginning of the small intestine.

7. Disposition. (a) Spirit; temper; heart.

Though I be not worthy to receive any favor at the hands of your maiestie, yet is your excellent herte and noble stomake worthy to shew favour.

Udall, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 4.

This was no small Magnanimity in the King, that he was able to pull down the high Stomachs of the Prelates in that time.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 50.

(b) Compassion; pity.

Nere myn extorcoun I myghte nat lyven,
Nor of swiche japes wol I nat be shryven,
Stomak ne conscience ne knowe I nou.

Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 143.

(c) Courage; spirit.

For In them, as men of stowter stomackes, bolder spirites, and manlyer courages then handycraftes men and plowmen be, doth consiste the whole powre, strength, and puissance of our arme, when we muste fight in battayle.

Sir T. More, Utopia, tr. by Robinson, p. 39.

(d) Pride; haughtiness; conceit.

He was a man
Of an unbouded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes.

Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 2. 34.

(e) Spleen; anger; cholera; resentment; sullenness.

From that time King Richard, moored in stomacke against King Philip, neuer showed any gentle countenance of peace & amitie.

Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 23.

Many learned men haue written, with much diuersitie for the matter, and therefore with great contrarietie and some stomacke amongst them selues.

Asham, The Scholemaster, p. 123.

Which might teach these times not suddenly to condemn all things that are sharply spoken, or vehemently written, as proceeding out of stomach, virulence, and ill nature.

Milton, Church-Government, il. 1m.

Circulating stomach, one of the temporary food-vacuoles of an infusorian or other protozoan, which moves about with a kind of cyclosis. See Polygastrica.—Frigidity of the stomach, a state of gastric debility formerly considered to depend on sexual excesses.—Fullness of the stomach, a feeling of weight or distention in the epigastric region.—Glandular stomach. See proventriculus.—Hypogenesis of the stomach, unnatural smallness of the stomach, seen in some children.—Masticatory stomach. See masticatory.—Muscular stomach. See muscular and gizzard.—Pit of the stomach, the depression just below the sternum; same as epigastrium, 1. Also called infrasternal fossa, serobiculus cordis, and anticardium.—Proud stomach, a haughty disposition. Compare def. 7.

Truths which are as unwelcome to a proud stomach as wet clover to a cow's.

Scott, Pirate, xviii.

Rugæ of the stomach, folds of the mucous membrane, present when the organ is contracted, and extending for the most part in a longitudinal direction. See cut in def. 2.—Sour stomach, that condition of the stomach which causes acid eructations.—Sucking-stomach. See def. 4.—To stay the stomach. See stay 2.

stomach (stum'ak), v. [= OF. estomaquer = Sp. Pg. estomagar = It. stomacare, disgust, refl. feel disgust, < L. stomachari, feel disgust, be angry, < stomachus, distaste, dislike, stomach: see stomach, n.] I. trans. 1†. To encourage; hearten.

When he had stomached them by the Holy Ghost to shoot forth his word without fear, he went forward with them by his grace, conquering in them the prince of this world.

Ep. Bate, Select Works (Parker Soc.), p. 313.

2†. To hate; resent; remember or regard with anger or resentment.

If that any stomach this my deed,
Alphonus can revenge thy wrong with speed.

Greene, Alphonus, iii.

A plague on them all for me! . . . O, I do stomach them hugely.

E. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, iii. 2.

3. To put up with; bear without open resentment or opposition: as, to stomach an affront.

"The priests talk," said he, "of absolution in such terms that laymen can not stomach it."

Motley, Dutch Republic, I. 76.

4. To turn the stomach of; disgust. [Rare.]

It is not because the restaurants are very dirty — if you wipe your plate and glass carefully before using them, they need not stomach you.

Howell's, Venetian Life, vi.

II. † intrans. To be or become angry.

What one among them commonly doth not stomach at such contradiction?

Hooker.

stomachal (stum'ak-al), a. and n. [= F. stomacal = Sp. Pg. estomacal = It. stomacale, < NL. stomachalis*, < L. stomachus, stomach: see stomach.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to the stomach; gastric: as, stomachal tubes.

The body-wall, which encloses the stomachal cavity.

Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 92.

2. Relating to the stomach, or to a region of the body which contains the stomach; gastric; epigastric; abdominal; ventral: as, the stomachal part of a crab's carapace.—3. Remedial of a disordered stomach; peptic or digestive; eardial; stomachic.—Stomachal teeth, sharp, horny processes of the lining of the proventriculus, and sometimes of other parts of the alimentary canal, found in many insects and crustaceans, and serving for the comminution of food.

II. n. A stomachic.

stomach-animals† (stum'ak-an'f-i-malz), n. pl. The Infusoria. See Polygastrica. Oken.

stomach-brush (stum'ak-brush), n. A brush designed to be introduced into the stomach, by way of the esophagus, to stimulate secretion.

stomach-cough (stum'ak-kôf), n. A form of reflex cough excited by irritation of the stomach or small intestine.

stomacher (stum'ak-er), n. [< stomach, v., + -er 1.] 1. One who stomachs, in any sense of the word.—2†. A stomachic; an appetizer.

In Sir Kenelm Digby's "Choice and Experimental Receipts in Physick and Chirurgery" (London, 1675) I find a preparation of herbs for external application with this heading: "To strengthen the stomach use the following stomacher."

N. and Q., 7th ser., IV. 173.

3. A part of the dress covering the front of the body, generally forming the lower part of the bodice in front and usually projecting down into the skirt or lapping over it—the name being given to the whole front piece covering the pit of the stomach and the breast. In some fashions the stomacher was richly embroidered, and ornamented with jewels, as in Europe in the sixteenth century.

Less fashionable ladies, between 1615 and 1625, discarded the tight and pointed stomacher and farthingale, and wore, over an easy jerkin and ample petticoat, a loose gown open in front, made high to meet the ruff.

Encyc. Brit., VI. 473.

4. A plaque or brooch, usually large, the name being derived from that part of the dress upon which the brooch was worn. J. B. Atkinson, Art Jour. (1867), p. 203.

stomachful (stum'ak-fül), a. [Early mod. E. also stomackful; < stomach + -ful.] Full of stomach or wilfulness; proud; spirited; wilful; perverse; stubborn; sturdy.

From all those Tartars he hath had an Army of an hundred and twenty thousand excellent, swift, stomackfull Tartarian horse.

Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 39.

Nay, if I had but any body to stand by me, I am as stomachful as another.

Wycherley, Plain Dealer, iii. 1.

stomachfully† (stum'ak-fül-i), adv. In a stomachful, or perverse or wilful, manner; stubbornly; perversely. Ep. Hall, The Golden Calf. stomachfulness† (stum'ak-fül-nes), n. Stubbornness; perverseness; wilfulness.

Pride, stomachfulness, headiness—avail but little.

Granger, On Eccles. (1621), p. 243.

stomach-grief (stum'ak-grêf), n. Anger.

Stomacke grief is when we will take the matter as hot as a toste. We neede no examples for this matter, hot men have to many.

Sir T. Wilson, Art of Rhetoric.

stomachic (stô-mak'ik), a. and n. [= F. stomachique = Sp. estomático = Pg. estomachico = It. stomachico, < L. stomachicus, < Gr. στομαχικός, pertaining to the stomach, < στόμαχος, the stomach: see stomach.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the stomach. (a) Stomachal; gastric: as, stomachic vessels or nerves. (b) Specifically, sharpening the appetite, and stimulating gastric digestion. See stomachal, 3.

He [Boswell] was . . . gluttonously fond of whatever would yield him a little solacement, were it only of a stomachic character.

Carlyle, Boswell's Johnson.

Stomachic balsam, a mixture of balsam of Peru with oil of nutmeg and other volatile oils, as those of wormwood, cloves, mace, peppermint, orange-peel, and amber, made up in different proportions.—Stomachic calculus, a concretion, usually containing hair, found in the stomach, particularly of lower animals. See bezoar.—Stomachic fever, gastric fever. See fever 1.

II. n. A medicine which sharpens the appetite, and is supposed to stimulate digestion, as the bitter tonics; a stomachal.

stomachical (stô-mak'ik-al), a. [< stomachic + -al.] Same as stomachic. Wiseman, Surgery, i. 18.

stomaching† (stum'ak-ing), n. [Verbal n. of stomach, v.] Resentment. Shak., A. and C., ii. 2. 9.

stomachless (stum'ak-less), a. [Early mod. E. stomacklesse; < stomach + -less.] Lacking stomach; having no appetite. Ep. Hall, Balm of Gilead, ii. § 6.

stomachous† (stum'ak-us), a. [< L. stomachosus, angry, choleric, < stomachus, distaste, dislike: see stomach.] Resentful; sullen; obstinate.

Young blood is hot; youth hasty; ingenuity open; abuse impatient; cholera stomachous.

G. Hareey, Four Letters.

stomach-piece (stum'ak-pês), n. In ship-carp., same as apron, 3.

stomach-plaster (stum'ak-plás'tér), n. See plaster.

stomach-pump (stum'ak-pump), n. A small pump or syringe used in medical practice for the purpose of emptying the stomach or of introducing liquids into it. It resembles the common syringe, except that it has two apertures near the end, instead of one, in which the valves open different ways, so as to constitute a sucking and a forcing passage. When the object is to empty the stomach, the pump is worked while its sucking orifice is in connection with a flexible tube passed into the stomach; and the extracted matter escapes by the forcing orifice. When, on the contrary, the object is to force a liquid into the stomach, the tube is connected with the forcing orifice, by which the action of the pump is reversed. It is now not much used, the stomach being emptied, when necessary, by the stomach-tube working as a siphon.

stomach-qualified (stum'ak-kwämd), a. Same as stomach-sick. Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 4. 193.

stomach-sick (stum'ak-sik), a. Nauseated; qualmish; hence, having an aversion.

Receiving some hurt in his stomach by drinking those cold waters, he proud stomach-sick to his expedition also.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 239.

stomach-staggers (stum'ak-stag'ézr), n. A disease in horses, depending on a paralytic affection of the stomach. The animal so affected dozes in the stable, resting his head in the manger; on awaking, or being aroused, he falls to eating, and continues to eat voraciously, death from apoplexy or repletion often resulting.

stomach-sweetbread (stum'ak-swê't'bred), n. The pancreas of the calf, as used for food: distinguished from the throat-sweetbread, or thyrus gland of the same animal.

stomach-timber (stum'ak-tim'bér), n. Same as belly-timber. [Slang.]

As Prior tells, a clever poet, . . .
The main strength of ev'ry member Depends upon the stomach timber.

Conbe, Dr. Syntax's Tours, xxxiii.

stomach-tooth (stum'ak-tôth), n. A lower canine milk-tooth of infants: so called because there is often gastric disturbance at the time of its appearance.

stomach-tube (stum'ak-tüb), n. A long flexible tube to be introduced into the stomach, through the gullet, as for washing out the stomach.

stomach-worm (stum'ak-wêrm), n. A common intestinal roundworm, Ascaris lumbricoides, sometimes found in the human stomach.

stomachy (stum'ak-i), a. [< stomach + -y 1.] Proud; haughty; irascible; easily offended.

Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stomacki, stomaki, stomaket, n. Obsolete spellings of stomach.

stomatopod (stô-ma-pôd), a. and n. Same as stomatopoda.

Stomatopoda (stô-map'ô-dä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στόμα, mouth, + ποδός (pod-) = E. foot.] Same as Stomatopoda. Latreille, 1817.

stomatopodiform (stô-ma-pod'i-fôrm), a. [< NL. Stomatopoda + L. formä, form.] Resembling or shaped like a stomatopod, especially of the genus Squilla. Applied in entomology to certain elongate, somewhat flattened larvæ which have the abdomen wider than the thorax, long antennæ, and six legs, the anterior pair being large and raptorial. In aquatic species the body is furnished with lateral false gills. The larvæ of Ephemera are examples of this form.

stomatopodus (stô-map'ô-dus), a. [< stomatopod + -ous.] Same as stomatopod.

stomata, n. Plural of stoma.

stomatal (stô-ma-tal), a. [< NL. stoma(t)- + -al.] In bot. and zool., relating or belonging to stomata.

stomate (stô-mät), a. and n. [< NL. stomatus* for stomatatus, < stoma (stomat-), a stoma: see stoma.] I. a. Having a stoma or stomata; stomatous.

II. n. A stoma.

stomatia, n. Plural of stomatium.

stomatic (stô-mat'ik), a. and n. [= It. stomatico, < Gr. στοματικός, of or pertaining to the mouth, < στόμα (-), mouth: see stoma.] I. a. In zool. and bot., of or pertaining to a stoma or stomata; oral.

II. n. A medicine for diseases of the mouth.

stomatiferous (stô-ma-tif'ê-rus), a. [< NL. stoma(t)- + L. ferre, bear, carry: see -ferous.] Bearing or provided with stomata; stomatophorous.

stomatitis (stô-ma-ti'tis), n. [NL., < Gr. στόμα (-), mouth, + -itis.] Inflammation of the interior of the mouth, including the mucous membrane of the lips, gums, tongue, cheeks, and palate.—Apthous stomatitis, inflammation of the mucous membrane of the mouth-cavity, consisting in the formation of small superficial ulcers. Also called aphthæ, canker sore, mouth, ulcer, or vesicular stomatitis.—Catarrhal stomatitis, a simple local or general inflammation of the mucous membrane of the mouth-cavity. Also called oral catarrh, erythema of the mouth, and erythematous, simple, and superficial stomatitis.—Gangrenous stomatitis. See noma.—Mercurial stomatitis, an inflammation of the mucous membrane of the mouth, with ulceration, caused by mercurial poisoning.—Parasitic stomatitis, inflammation of the mouth due to or complicated with the growth on the mucous membrane of Odium albicans. Also called thrush, pseudomembranous stomatitis.

and either do not mention the stone, or define it as 8 pounds. The only legal stone in Great Britain now is that of 14 pounds.

And sende ye me word how mech more yn value yn a stoon shall I syle my wolle. Pastor Letters, 1. 155.

He was not a ghost, my visitor, but solid flesh and bone; He wore a Palo Alto hat, his weight was twenty stone.

O. W. Holmes, Nux Postconcentica.

Alençon stone, pure rock-crystal cut in rose or brilliant form.—Amazonian or Amazon stone. See Amazonian.—Arkansas stone, a fine-grain whetstone found in Arkansas, and used to sharpen surgical and dental instruments.—Armenian stone. See Armenian.—Artificial stone, a material prepared for decorative and building purposes by consolidating sand with the aid of some chemical. The best-known and most extensively used artificial stone is Ransome's, which is made by mixing sand with silicate of soda in a pug-mill, so as to form a plastic substance, which is then rolled or pressed into any desired form. The articles as thus prepared are then immersed in a solution of calcium chloride, when double decomposition takes place, a calcium silicate being formed which firmly cements the particles of sand together, while the sodium chloride, the other product of the decomposition, is afterward removed by washing. This material has been somewhat extensively used in England and elsewhere. Other processes akin to this, but in which different chemicals were used, have also been patented in the United States, but the materials thus produced have not met with any extensive sale. Beton or concrete has also been employed as a building material, to take the place of stone or brick, especially the "béton-coignet," which is extensively used in and near Paris and elsewhere. Beton and concrete, which are mixtures of sand, gravel, stone chippings, fragments of brick, etc., with cement or hydraulic mortar or cement, are also frequently, but not correctly, designated artificial stone.—Ayr stone, a stone used for polishing marble and surfacing metals. The harder varieties are used as whetstones. Also called water of Ayr, Scotch stone, and smoke-stone.—Bath stone, a rock used extensively for building purposes in England, and especially near Bath (whence its name). It is a limestone, having an oolitic structure, and belonging to the Inferior Oolite, which lies directly upon the Lias, the lowest division of the Jurassic of Continental and American geologists. Also called Bath oolite.—Beer stone, a hard sandy chalk stratum of small thickness, occurring westward of Seaton in Devonshire, England. It forms a part of the Lower Chalk, and contains Inoceramus mytiloides. This series of beds, not having a thickness of more than 10 feet, is only of local importance, but it has been quarried as a building-stone for many hundred years, and parts of Exeter Cathedral are built of it.—Bologna stone, or Bolognian stone, a variety of barite, or barium sulphate, found in roundish masses, composed of radiating fibers, first discovered near Bologna. It is phosphorescent in the dark after being heated to ignition, powdered, and exposed to the sun's light for some time.—Bristol stone, rock-crystal, or Bristol diamond, small round crystals of quartz, found in the Clifton limestone, near the city of Bristol in England.—Caen stone, the French equivalent of the English Bath oolite. It is a cream-colored building-stone, of excellent quality, got near Caen in Normandy. Although soft in the quarry, it is of fine texture and hardens by exposure, so as to become extremely durable. Winchester and Canterbury cathedrals, Henry VII.'s chapel at Westminster, and many churches are built of it. It is still frequently used in England.—Cambay stones. See carnelian.—Centurial stones. See centurial.—Ceylon stone, a dark-green, brown, or black spinel from Ceylon, also called ceylonite: the name is also given to other minerals or gems from Ceylon.—Channel-stone. See channel.—Charnwood Forest stone, an oilstone found only in Charnwood Forest in Leicestershire, England. It is one of the best substitutes for the Turkey oilstone, and is much used to give a fine edge to knives and other tools.—Cornish stone. Same as china-stone, 2.

Cornish stone is used for almost all English wares, both in the body and the glaze. Spons' Encyc. Manuf., p. 1560.

Crab's stones. Same as crab's eyes (which see, under crab). See also crabstone.—Crape stone, a trade-name for onyx of which the surface is cut in imitation of crape and colored a lusterless black. A similar article is made from artificial silicious compounds cast in molds.—Cut stone, hewn stone, or work in hewn stone; ashler.—Deaf as a stone. See deaf.—Dimension stone, ashler.—Drafted stone, ashler stone having a chisel-draft around the face, the part inside the draft being left rough.—Heracleian stone. See Heracleian.—Hewn stone, blocks of stone with faces dressed to shape by the hammer.—Holy stone, a stone used in magical rites, whether as a magic mirror or show-stone, or as a sort of amulet.—Infernal ledger, lithographic, Lydian stone. See the adjectives.—Maltese stone, a limestone of a delicate brown cream-color, very compact, and almost as soft as chalk. The natives of the island of Malta turn and carve it into various ornamental objects.—Memorial, meteoric, Moabite stone. See the adjectives.—Mocha stone (formerly also Moco stone; also Mocha-pebble); so called from Mocha in Arabia, where the stone is plentiful, a variety of dendritic agate, containing dark outlines of arborization, like vegetable filaments, due to the presence of metallic oxides, as of manganese and iron; moss-agate.—Philosopher's stone. See elixir, 1.—Portland stone, in England, a rock belonging to the Portlandian series: so named from the Isle of Portland, where it is typically developed. The Portlandian is a part of the Jurassic series, and lies between the Purbeckian, the highest member of that series, and the Kimmeridgian. The Portland group, or Portlandian, consists of two divisions, the Portland stone and the Portland sand; the former has several subdivisions, to which local names are attached, such as curf, base-lee, and whit-lee. The Portland stone, which is a nearly pure carbonate of lime, is an important building-stone in England, and was extensively used by Inigo Jones and Sir Christopher Wren, in important public buildings, especially in St. Paul's Cathedral.—Precious stone. See precious.—Protean stone. See Protean.—Quarry-faced stone, cut stone of which the face is left rough as it comes from the quarry, as distinguished from tooled, hammer-faced, pitch-faced stone, etc.—Rocking stone. See rock.—Rosetta stone, a stele or tablet of black basalt, found in 1799 near Rosetta, a town of Egypt, on the delta of the Nile, by M. Boussard, a French officer of engineers. This stone bears a trilingual inscription, a decree of Ptolemy V. (Epiphanes) in Greek and Egyptian hieroglyphic and demotic. The inscription was deciphered chiefly by Champollion, and afforded the key to the interpretation of Egyptian hieroglyphics. The monument is now in the British Museum.—Rough-pointed stone. See rough.—Rubbed stone, stone-work of which the surface is cut straight with the stone-saw, and afterward smoothed by rubbing with grit or sandstone.—Samian stone. See Samian.—Saracen's or Sarsen's stone. See Saracen.—Scotch stone. Same as Ayr stone.—Shipman's stone. See shipman.—Sonorous stone. See sonorous.—Standing stone. See standing.—Stick and stone. See stick.—Stone cancer. Same as scirrhous cancer (which see, under scirrhous).—Stone of the second class. See elixir, 1.—Stones of sulphur. See sulphur.—To leave no stone unturned, to do everything that can be done; use all practicable means to effect an object; spare no exertions.

New crimes invented, left unturn'd no stone

To make my guilt appear, and hide his own.

Dryden, Æneid, li. 133.

To mark with a white stone, to mark as particularly fortunate, favored, or esteemed. The phrase arose from the custom among the Romans of marking their lucky days on the calendar with a white stone (as a piece of chalk), while unlucky days were marked with charcoal. Brewer, =Syn. 1 and 2. See rock.

II. a. 1. Made of stone: as, a stone house; a stone wall.

The lion on your old stone gates

Is not more cold to you than I.

Tennyson, Lady Clara Vere de Vere.

2. Made of stoneware: as, a stone jar; a stone mug.

Now mistress Gilpin (careful soul!)

Had two stone bottles found,

To hold the liquor that she loved,

And keep it safe and sound.

Cowper, John Gilpin.

Stone age. See archæological ages, under age.—Stone ax, an ax-head or hatchet-head made of hard stone. Such axes are found, belonging to prehistoric epochs, and have also been in use down to the present time among savage tribes in different parts of the world. Compare stone-ax.—Stone brick. See brick.—Stone jug. See jug, 2.—Stone ocher. See ocher.

Stone (stōn), v. t.; pret. and pp. stoned, ppr. stoning. [< ME. stonen, stānen (in earlier use stēnen, whence mod. E. dial. steen)]; < AS. stānan = OHG. steinon, MHG. steinen = Sw. stena = Dan. stene = Goth. stainjan (cf. D. steenigen = G. steinigen), pelt with stones, stone; from the noun.] 1. To throw stones at; pelt with stones.

With stones men shulde hir stryke and stone hir to deth.

Piers Plowman (B), xii. 77.

Francis himself was stoned to death.

R. W. Dixon, Hist. Church of Eng., xv.

2. To make like stone; harden. [Rare.]

O perjurd woman! thou dost stone my heart.

Shak., Othello, v. 2. 63.

3. To free from stones, as fruit.

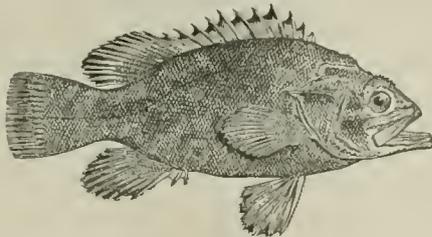

She picked from Polly's very hand the raisins which the good woman was stoning for the most awfully sacred election cake.

H. B. Stone, Oldtown, p. 270.

4. To provide or fit with stones, as by lining, walling, or facing: as, to stone a well or a road.—5. In leather-manuf., to work (the leather) with a stock-stone to reduce it to uniform thickness, stretch it, and make it smooth-grained.

stone-ax (stōn'aks), n. [< ME. stonak*, < AS. stānex, < stān, stone, + ax, ax.] An ax or a hammer with two somewhat obtuse edges, used in hewing stone.

stone-basil (stōn'baz'il), n. Same as basil-weed.—stone-bass (stōn'bās), n. A fish of the family Serranidae, Polyprion cernium, or another of the same genus. It is distinguished by the development of a strong longitudinal bony ridge on the operculum, and the Stone-bass (Polyprion cernium).

sertation of the spines of the anal and ventral fins. It inhabits moderately deep water in the Mediterranean and neighboring Atlantic. (Also called wreck-fish and cernier.) The corresponding stone-bass of Pacific waters is a very similar though distinct species, P. oxygenus (originally oxygenus). See Polyprion.

stone-bird (stōn'bērd), n. 1. The vinous grosbeak, or moro.—2. The stone-snipe, or greater yellowlegs. See cut under yellowlegs.

stone-biter (stōn'bi'tēr), n. The common wolf-fish. See cut under Anarrhichas.

stone-blind (stōn'blīnd'), a. [= Icel. stein-blindr = Sw. Dan. sten-blind; as stone + blind.] Blind as a stone; wholly blind, either literally or figuratively.

I thought I saw everything, and was stone-blind all the while.

George Eliot, Mr. Gilfil, xviii.

stone-blue (stōn'blū), n. A compound of indigo and starch or whiting.

stone-boat (stōn'bōt), n. A drag or sled without runners, used for moving stones; also, a wagon-platform hung below the axles, used for the same purpose. [U. S.]

stonebock (stōn'bok), n. Same as steenbok.—stone-boilers (stōn'boi'lērz), n. pl. A tribe or race of men who practise stone-boiling.

The Australians, at least in modern times, must be counted as stone-boilers.

E. B. Tylor, Early Hist. Mankind, ix.

stone-boiling (stōn'boi'ling), n. The act or process of making water boil by putting hot stones in it.

The art of boiling, as commonly known to us, may have been developed through this intermediate process, which I propose to call stone-boiling.

E. B. Tylor, Early Hist. Mankind, ix.

stone-borer (stōn'bōr'ēr), n. A mollusk that bores stones; a lithodomous, lithophagous, or saxicavous bivalve. See cuts under accessory, date-shell, Glycymeris, and pidcock.

stone-bow (stōn'bō), n. [< ME. stonbowe; < stone + bow.] A weapon somewhat resembling a crossbow, for shooting stones; a catapult; also, a sort of toy.

O, for a stone-bow, to hit him in the eye!

Shak., T. N., li. 5. 51.

Item, six stone bowes that shoot lead pellets.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 363.

Children will shortly take him for a wall,

And set their stone-bows in his forehead.

Beau. and Fl., King and No King, v. 1.

stone-bram (stōn'brām), n. Same as roebuck-berry.

stone-brash (stōn'brash), n. In agri., a subsoil composed of shattered rock or stone.

stonebreak (stōn'brāk), n. The meadow-saxifrage, Saxifraga granulata: so called from the virtue, according to the doctrine of signatures, of its pebble-like bulbs against calculus. The name is also a general equivalent of saxifrage.

stone-breaker (stōn'brā'kēr), n. One who or that which breaks stones; specifically, a ma-

Stone-breaker.

a, stationary jaw; a', oscillating jaw; b, hopper; c, fly-wheel; d, short pitman connecting crank-wrist with toggles; e, e', toggles; f, frame, strengthened at g, where the thrust of the toggles is received; h, base of machine; i, rubber spring which withdraws the lower end of the jaw a'.

chine for pounding or crushing stone; an ore-mill; a stone-crusher.

stone-bruise (stōn'brōz), n. A bruise caused by a stone; especially, a painful and persistent bruise on the sole of the foot, commonly in the middle of the ball of the foot, due to walking barefooted; also, a bruise produced on the hand, as by ball-playing. [Local, U. S.]

stonebuck (stōn'buk), n. [< ME. stonbukke*, < AS. stānbucca, the ibex, < stān, stone, rock, + bucca, buck. In mod. use, tr. D. steenbok, G. steinbock: see steenbok.] The steenbok.

stone-butter (stōn'but'ēr), n. A sort of alm.

stone-canal (stōn'ka-nal'), n. In echinoderms, the duct leading from the madreporic plate to the circular canal: so called because it ordinarily has calcareous substances in its walls. Also sand-canal. Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 220.

stone-cast (stōn'kást), n. The distance which a stone may be thrown by the hand; a stone's cast; a stone's throw.

About a stone-cast from the wall

A sluice with blacken'd waters leapt.

Tennyson, Mariana.

stonecat (stōn'kat), n. A catfish of the genus Noturus, as N. flavus, common in many parts of the United States. N. flavus is one of the largest, sometimes exceeding a foot in length. N. insignis is another, nearly as large, found in the Middle and Southern States. There are several more, a few inches long, all of fresh waters of the same country.

Stonecat (Noturus flavus).

stone-centiped (stōn'sen'ti-ped), n. A centipede of the family Lilhoiidae.

stonechacker (stōn'chak'er), n. Same as stonechat.

stonechat (stōn'chat), n. One of several different Old World chats, belonging to the genera Saxicola and (especially) Pratincola; a kind of bushchat; applied to three different English birds, and extended, as a book-name, to several others of the above genera. (a) Improperly, the wheatear, Saxicola oenanthe, and some other species of the restricted genus Saxicola. See cut under wheatear. [In this sense chiefly Scotch and American, the wheatear being the only bird of the kind which straggles to America.] (b) Improperly, the whin-bushchat or whinchat, Pratincola rubetra. [Eng.] (c) The black-headed bushchat, Pratincola rubicola, a common bird of Great Britain and other parts of Europe. The true stonechat is about 5 inches long, the wing 2½, the tail scarcely 2. The male in full plumage has the head and most of the back black, the feathers of the back mostly edged with sandy brown; the upper tail-coverts white, varied with black and brown; the wings and tail blackish-brown, the former with a large white area on the coverts and inner secondaries; the sides of the neck and breast white; the rest of the under parts rufous-brown; the bill and feet black; and the eyes brown. It nests on the ground, and lays four to six bluish-green eggs clouded and varied with reddish-brown. Also called chickadee, stonechacker, stonechatter, stoneclink, stonesmich, stonesmüch, or stonesmickle, and stonesmüh.

Stonechat (Pratincola rubicola), in a usual plumage.

The Stonechat closely resembles the Whinchat, . . . a circumstance which has caused much confusion; . . . for in almost all parts of England the Whinchat, by far the commonest species, popularly does duty for the Stonechat, and in many parts of Scotland the Wheatear is universally known by that name. Seebohm, Hist. Brit. Birds, I, 317.

stonechatter (stōn'chat'er), n. Same as stonechat.

stone-climber (stōn'kli'mër), n. The dobson or hellgrammite. See cut under sprawler. [Local, U. S.]

stoneclink (stōn'klingk), n. Same as stonechat.

stone-clover (stōn'klō'vër), n. The rabbit-foot or hare's-foot clover, Trifolium arvense, a low slender branching species with very silky heads, thence also called puss-clover. It is an Old World plant naturalized in America.

stone-coal (stōn'kōl), n. [= G. steinkohle; as stone + coal.] Mineral coal, or coal dug from the earth, as distinguished from eburcoale; generally applied in England to any particularly hard variety of coal, and especially to that called in the United States anthracite. See coal.

stone-cold (stōn'kōld'), a. Cold as a stone. Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, iv, 4.

stone-color (stōn'kul'ör), n. The color of stone; a grayish color.

stone-colored (stōn'kul'örd), a. Of the usual color of a large mass of stone, a cold bluish gray.

stone-coral (stōn'kor'al), n. Massive coral, as distinguished from branching coral, or tree-coral; hard, sclerodermatous or lithocoralline coral, as distinguished from scleroblastic coral. Most corals are of this character, and are hexacoralline (not, however, the red coral of commerce, which is related to the sea-fans and other octocorallines).

stonecrab (stōn'krab), n. 1. Any crab of the family Homolidae.—2. A European crab, Li- thodes maia.—3. A large, stout, edible crab of the Atlantic coast of the United States, Menippe Stonecrab (Menippe mercenaria).

mercenaria.—4. The dobson or hellgrammite. See cut under sprawler. [Local, U. S.]

stone-crawfish (stōn'krä'fish), n. A crawfish of Europe, specified as Astacus torrentium, in distinction from the common crawfish of that country, A. fluviatilis.

stone-cray (stōn'krä), n. A distemper in hawks. Imp. Dict.

stone-cricket (stōn'krik'et), n. One of the wingless forms of the orthopterous family Locustidae, living under or among stones and in dark places, and popularly confounded with true crickets (which belong to the orthopterous family Gryllidae or Achetidae). There are many species, of various parts of the world, some simply called crickets, and others cave-crickets. The commonest American stone-cricket belongs to the genus Ceuthophilus, as C. maculatus, etc. See cave-cricket, and cut under Hadenæus.

stonecrop (stōn'krop), n. [ME. stoncrop, AS. stāncrop, stoncrop, stān, stone, + crop, the top or head of a plant, a sprout, a bunch or cluster of flowers; see stone and crop.] The wall-pepper, Sedum acre: so called as frequently growing upon walls and rocks. It is native throughout Europe and Asiatic Russia, and somewhat employed in ornamental gardening; in America called moos, mossy stonecrop, etc., from its creeping and matting stems beset with small sessile leaves. The flowers are bright-yellow in small terminal cymes. The name is also extended to other species of similar habit, especially S. ternatum, and not seldom to the whole genus.—Ditch-stonecrop, a plant of the genus Penthorum, chiefly the American P. sedoïdes, a weed-like plant with yellowish-green flowers, common in ditches and wet places.—Great stonecrop, an old designation of the kidneywort, Cotyledon Umbilicus, also of Sedum album.—Mossy stonecrop. See det.

stone-crush (stōn'krush), n. A sore on the foot caused by a bruise from a stone. [Local.]

stone-crusher (stōn'krush'er), n. A mill or machine for crushing or grinding stone or ores for use on roads, etc.; an ore-crusher; an ore-mill; a stone-breaker (which see).

stone-curlew (stōn'kër'lū), n. 1. The stone-plover or thick-knee, Ædinenus crepitans. See cut under Ædinenus.—2. The whimbrel, Numenius phaeopus.—3. In the southern United States the willet, Symphemia semipalmata: a misnomer. Audubon.

stone-cutter (stōn'kut'er), n. 1. One whose occupation it is to hew or cut stones for building, ornamental, or other purposes.—2. A machine for shaping or facing stones.

stone-cutting (stōn'kut'ing), n. The business of cutting or hewing stones for walls, monuments, etc.

stoned (stōnd), a. [stone + -ed.] Having or containing stones, in any sense.

Of stoned fruits I have met with three good sorts: viz., Cherries, plums, and persimmons. Beverley, Hist. Virginia, iv, § 12.

The way Sharpe ston'd and thorny, where he pass'd of late. W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii, 3 stone-dead (stōn'ded'), a. [ME. stundeed, standed (= Sw. Dan. stendöd); stone + dead.] Dead as a stone; lifeless.

The Geant was by Gaffray don bore, So discomfite, standede, and all cold. Rom. of Parvauay (E. E. T. S.), I, 3121.

He cannot be so stupid, or stone-dead. B. Jonson, Volpone, i, 1.

stone-deaf (stōn'def'), a. Deaf as a stone; totally deaf.

stone-devil (stōn'dev'l), n. The dobson or hellgrammite. See cut under sprawler. [Virginia.]

stone-dresser (stōn'dres'er), n. 1. One who tools, smooths, and shapes stone for building purposes. Simmonds.—2. One of a variety of power-machines for dressing, polishing, and finishing marbles, slates, and other building-stones.

stone-dumb (stōn'dum'), a. Perfectly dumb. The Century, XXXV, 622. [Rare.]

stone-eater (stōn'ē tēr), n. Same as stone-borer.

stone-engraving (stōn'eu-grā'ving), n. The art of engraving on stone. See lithography, etching, gem-engraving.

stone-falcon (stōn'fā kn), n. See falcon, and cut under merlin.

stone-fern (stōn'fēr'n), n. A European fern, Asplenium Ceterach: so called from its habit of growing on rocks and stone walls.

stone-fish (stōn'fish), n. The shanny. Parnell. [Local, Scotch.]

stone-fly (stōn'fli), n. A pseudoneuropterous insect of the family Perlidae: so called because the larval forms abound under the stones of streams. (See cut under Perla.) P. bicaudata, whose larva is much used by anglers, is an example.

stone-fruit (stōn'früt), n. [= D. steenfrucht = G. steinfrucht = Sw. steinfrukt = Dan. steinfrugt; as stone + fruit.] In bot., a drupe; a fruit whose seeds are covered with a hard shell enveloped in a pulp, as the peach, cherry, and plum. See drupe.

Bring with you the kernels of peares and apples, and the stones of such stonefruits as you shall find there. Hakluyt's Voyages, I, 439.

stonegale (stōn'gāl), n. Same as staniel.

stone-gall¹ (stōn'gāl), n. [stone + gall.] A roundish mass of clay often occurring in variegated sandstone.

stone-gall² (stōn'gāl), n. Same as staniel.

stone-gatherer (stōn'gath'er-er), n. A horse-machine for picking up loose stones from the ground. It consists of a receiving-box with a toothed wheel and a traveling apron, or a fork with curved teeth, and a lever for emptying it into the box when loaded.

stone-gray (stōn'grā), n. A dark somewhat brownish-gray color.

stone-grig (stōn'grig), n. The pride or mud-lamprey, Ammocetes branchialis.

stone-hammer (stōn'ham'er), n. A hammer for breaking or rough-dressing stones.

stone-hard (stōn'härd), a. 1. Hard as a stone; unfeeling. Shak., Riel. III., iv, 4, 227.—2. Firm; fast.

Steken the gates ston-harde with stalwerth barre. Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii, 884.

stone-harmonicon (stōn'här-mon'i-kon), n. Same as lapidean and rock-harmonicon.

stone-hatch (stōn'hach), n. The ring-plover, Ægialites hiaticula: so called from nesting on shingle. See cut under Ægialites. Yarrell. [Prov. Eng.]

stone-hawk (stōn'häk), n. Same as stone-falcon.

stone-head (stōn'hed), n. The bed-rock; the solid rock underlying the superficial detritus. [Eng.]

stone-hearted (stōn'här'ted), a. Same as stony-hearted.

Weepe, ye stone-hearted men! Oh, read and pittie! W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, ii, 1.

stone-hore† (stōn'hör), n. The common stonecrop, Sedum acre; also, S. reflexum. Britten and Holland.

stone-horse (stōn'hōrs), n. A stallion. [Obsolete or provincial.]

My grandfathers great stone-hors, blinging up his head and jerking out his left legge. Marston, Antonio and Mellida, II, I, 3.

stone-leek (stōn'lëk), n. Same as cibol, 2.

stone-lichen (stōn'h'ken), n. A lichen growing upon stones or rocks, as species of Parmelia, Umbilicaria, etc. See lichen.

stone-lily (stōn'il'i), n. A fossil crinoid: a crinite or encrinite, of a form suggesting a lily on its stem. Also called lily-encrinite. J. G. G. Geikie, Geol. Sketches, i.

stone-liverwort† (stōn'liv'er-wört), n. The plant Marchantia polymorpha.

stone-lobster (stōn'lob stër), n. See lobster. [Local, U. S.]

stone-lugger (stōn'lug'er), n. 1. A catostomid fish of the United States, Catostomus or Hypentelium nigricans; the hog-sucker or hog-molly. Also called stone-roller and stone-toter.

—2. A cyprinoid fish of the United States, Campostoma anomalum, or some other member of that genus. It is 6 or 8 inches long; in the males in spring some of the parts become fiery-red, and the head and often the whole body is studded with large rounded tubercles. It is herbivorous, and abounds in deep still places in streams from New York to Mexico. Also stone-roller. See cut under Campostoma.

stoneman (stōn'man), n. [stone + dial. man, a heap of stones, W. maen, a stone. Cf. dol- men.] A pile of rocks roughly laid together, usually on a prominent mountain-peak or -ridge, and intended to serve either as a landmark or as a record of a visit; a cairn.

stone-marten (stōn'mār'ten), n. Same as beech-marten.

stone-mason (stōn'mā'su), n. One who dresses stones for building, or builds with them; a builder in stone.

stone-merchant (stōn'mēr'chant), n. A dealer in stones, especially building- or paving-stones.

stone-mill (stōn'mil), n. 1. A machine for breaking or crushing stone; a stone-breaker; an ore-crusher. See cut under stone-breaker. — 2. A stone-dresser. See stone-dresser, 2.

stone-mint (stōn'mint), n. The American dittany. See Cunila.

stone-mortar (stōn'mōr'tär), n. A form of mortar used for throwing projectiles of irregular and varying form, such as stones.

stonen (stō'nen), a. [< ME. stonen, also stenu, < AS. stēnen, of stone, < stān, stone: see stone and *-en*².] Consisting or made of stone. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

He forsothe arcrife a stonen signe of worship.

Wyclif, Gen. xxxv. 14.

stone-oak (stōn'ōk), n. An oak, Quercus Javensis, found in Java and other islands: so named from its thick osseous nut, which is peculiar among acorns in being ridged, with the cupule fitting into the furrows.

stone-oil (stōn'oil), n. Rock-oil or petroleum.

stone-owl (stōn'oul), n. The Aadian or saw-whet owl, Nyctala acadica, which sometimes hides in quarries or piles of rock. See cut under Nyctala. [Pennsylvania.]

stone-parsley (stōn'pārs'li), n. The plant Sison Amomum; also, Seseli Libanotis and other species of the genus Seseli. See Seseli.

stonepecker (stōn'pek'ēr), n. 1. The turnstone, Streptopus interpres. See cut under turnstone. [Local, Great Britain.] — 2. The purple sandpiper, Tringa maritima, a bird of similar resorts and habits. [Shetland Islands.]

stone-pine (stōn'pin), n. See *pin*¹, also oil-tree, 5, and pignon, 1.

stone-pit (stōn'pit), n. A pit or quarry where stones are dug.

stone-pitch (stōn'pich), n. Hard inspissated pitch.

stone-plover (stōn'pluv'ēr), n. 1. The stone-curlew, thick-kneed plover, or thick-knee, a charadriomorphie or plover-like wading bird of the family Edicnemidae, Edicnemus crepitans, a common bird of Europe. See cut under Edicnemus. — 2. Hence, one of various limicoline birds of the plover and snipe families. (a) The Swiss, gray, or bullhead plover, Squatarola helvetica. See cut under Squatarola. (b) The ring-plover, Egialites hiaticula, or the dotterel, Eudromias morinellus; a stone-runner. See cuts under Egialites and dotterel. (c) A shore-plover of the genus Enacus, as E. recurvirostris. (d) The bar-tailed godwit, Limosa lapponica. See cut under Limosa. (e) The whimbrel, Numenius phaeopus.

stone-pock (stōn'pok), n. A hard pimple which suppurates; aene.

stone-priest (stōn'prēst), n. A lascivious priest. Grim the Collier. (Davies.)

stoner (stō'nēr), n. [< stone + *-er*¹.] One who or that which stonens, in any sense of that word.

stone-rag (stōn'rag), n. A lichen, Parmelia saxatilis.

stone-raw (stōn'rā), n. 1. Same as stone-rag. — 2. The turnstone, Streptopus interpres. [Armagh, Ireland.]

stonern (stō'nēr), a. [Var. of stonen.] Consisting or made of stone. [Scotch.]

The West Port is of stonern work, and mair decorated with architecture and the policy of bigging.

Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, ii.

stone-roller (stōn'rō'lēr), n. Same as stone-lagger.

stone-root (stōn'rōt), n. See horse-balm and heat-all.

stone-rue (stōn'rō), n. The fern Asplenium Ruta-muraria. [Eng.]

stone-runner (stōn'rūn'ēr), n. Same as stone-plover, 2 (b). [Prov. Eng.]

stone-saw (stōn'sā), n. A tool or a sawing-machine for cutting marble, millstones, and building-stones into slabs, disks, columns, and blocks, either from the live rock in the quarry or in a stone-yard. The most simple form of machine is a flat blade of iron strained tight in a saw-frame, and reciprocated by means of suitable mechanism. The cutting is done by particles of sand continually supplied to the saw by means of a stream of water. Stone-saws of this type are usually arranged in gangs, the frame supporting a number of saws, and being suspended by chains over the block to be cut, the spaces between the blades regulating the thickness of the slabs. Circular saws have also been used to cut thin slabs of stone into narrow pieces by the agency of wet sand. An improvement on this method is the use of circular saws armed with black diamonds or carbon-points. The saw is placed in a frame resembling an iron-planer, the saw-arbor having a vertical motion; and the block of stone, dogged to a traversing table, is fed to the saw as the cut is made. Diamond stone-cutting machines have also been made in the form of reciprocating saws. In one new stone-sawing machine, called a channeling-machine, used to cut out large blocks and columns in a quarry, a circular saw having carbon points is employed, the power being applied by means of gearing to the edge of the saw instead of at the arbor. Another form of quarrying stone-saw consists of an endless band of twisted wire rope passing in a horizontal direction over large pulleys, like a band-saw, and employing wet sand as the cutting-material.

stone's-cast (stōnz'kást), n. Same as stone-cast.

stoneseed (stōn'sēd), n. A plant of the genus Lithospermum, particularly the gromwell, L. officinale and L. arvense. The name, as also that of the genus, refers to the hardness of the seeds.

Stonesfield slate. See slate, 2.

stone-shot (stōn'shot), n. The distance a stone can be thrown, either from a cannon or from a sling.

He show'd a tent

A stone-shot off. Tennyson, Princess, v.

stone-shower (stōn'shou'ēr), n. A fall of aërolites; a meteoric shower.

stonesmickle (stōn'smik'el), n. Same as stone-chat (c). Also stonesmich, stonesmitch, stone-smith.

stone-snipe (stōn'snīp), n. 1. The greater tattler, greater yellowshanks, or long-legged tattler, Totanus melanoleucus, a common North American bird of the family Scelopacidae. The length is from 13 to 14 inches, the extent 24; the bill is 2 or more inches long, the tarsus 2½. The legs are chrome-yellow; the bill is greenish-black. The upper parts are dusky, speckled with whitish; the under parts are white, streaked on the jugulum, marked on the sides, flanks, and axillars with dusky bars and arrow-heads. The tail is barred with blackish and white. The stone-snipe inhabits North America at large, breeding in high latitudes, and is chiefly seen in the United States during the migrations and in winter. It is a noisy and restless denizen of marshes, bays, and estuaries. See cut under yellowlegs.

2. Same as stone-plover, 1. Encyc. Diet.

stone-sponge (stōn'spūnj), n. A lithistidan sponge: so called from the hardness. See Lithistida.

stone-squarer (stōn'skwār'ēr), n. One who forms stones into square shapes; a stone-cutter.

And Solomon's builders and Hiram's builders did hew them, and the stonesquarers [the Gehalites, R. V.].

1 Ki. v. 18.

stone-still (stōn'stil'), a. [< ME. ston-stille; < stone + *still*¹.] Still as a stone; absolutely motionless, silent, etc. Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 242.

stone-sturgeon (stōn'stēr'jōn), n. Same as lake-sturgeon.

stone-sucker (stōn'suk'ēr), n. The lamprey; a petromyzont. [Local, Eng.]

stone-thrush (stōn'thrush), n. The mistle-thrush. [Prov. Eng.]

stone-toter (stōn'tō'tēr), n. 1. Same as stone-lugger, 1. Also toter. — 2. A cyprinoid fish, Eryglossum marilingua: a cut-lips. [Local, U. S., in both senses.]

stone-walling (stōn'wā'ling), n. 1. The process of walling with stone; hence, walls built of stone. Encyc. Brit., II. x. 388. — 2. Parliamentary obstruction by talking against time, raising technical objections, etc. [Australia.]

He is great at stone-walling tactics, and can talk against time by the hour.

Mrs. Campbell Praed, The Head Stare, p. 35.

stoneware (stōn'wār), n. Potters' ware made from clay of very silicious nature, or a composition of clay and flint. The clay is beaten in water and purified, and the flint is calcined, ground, and suspended in water, and then mixed (in various proportions for various wares) with the clay. The mixture is then dried in a kiln until it is sufficiently solid to be kneaded, and is then beaten and tempered before being molded into shape. When fired it is not porous, like common pottery, but vitrified through its whole substance in consequence of the great amount of silica contained in the prepared clay. Vessels of stoneware are generally glazed by means of common salt. The salt, being thrown into the furnace, is volatilized by heat, becomes attached to the surface of the ware, and is decomposed, the muriatic acid flying off and leaving the soda behind it to form a fine thin glaze on the ware, which resists ordinary acids. The old German stoneware had often a vitreous glaze. See gris de France, under gris, and Cologne ware, under *ware*².

stoneweed (stōn'wēd), n. 1. Same as stone-seed. — 2. The doorweed, Polygonum aviculare. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

stonework (stōn'wērk), n. Work consisting of stone; masons' work of stone. — Broken-range stonework. See range, n. — Crandalled stonework. See crandall. — Random range, etc., stonework. See the qualifying words.

stone-works (stōn'wērk), n. sing. and pl. 1. A stone-cutting establishment. — 2. An establishment for the making of stoneware. Jewitt.

stonewort (stōn'wōrt), n. [< stone + *wort*¹.] 1. A plant of the genus Chara: so called from the calcareous deposits which frequently occur on the stems. — 2. Sometimes, the stone-parsley, Sison Amomum.

stone-yard (stōn'yārd), n. A yard or inclosure in which stone-cutters are employed.

stong (stōng), n. [A var. of *stang*¹.] An instrument with which eels are commonly taken. Richardson. [Lincolnshire, Eng.]

stonify (stō'nī-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. stonified, pp. stonifying. [< stone + -ify.] To make stony; petrify. [Rare.]

Wilkes of stone, a shell-fish stonified.

Holland's Camden, p. 365, margin. (Davies.)

stonily (stō'nī-li), adv. In a stony manner; stiffly; harshly; frigidly.

stoniness (stō'nī-nēs), n. The quality of being stony: as, the stoniness of ground or of fruit; stoniness of heart.

stonish¹ (stō'nish), a. [< stone + *-ish*¹.] Stony. Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), ii. 7.

stonish² (stōn'ish), v. t. [An aphetic form of astonish. Cf. *stony*².] Same as astonish. Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 825.

stonishment (stōn'ish-ment), n. Same as astonishment. Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 19.

stont. A Middle English form of stant, stent, contraction of standeth, present indicative third person singular of stand.

stony¹ (stō'nī), a. [< ME. stony, stany, < AS. stēnig (= OHG. MHG. steinag, G. steinig = Sw. stenig), stony, < stān, stone: see stone. Cf. AS. stanht = G. steinig = Dan. stenet, stony.] 1. Containing stones; abounding in stone. — 2. Made of stone; consisting of stone; rocky.

And some fell on stony [the rocky, R. V.] ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth. Mark iv. 5.

With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these walls;

For stony limits cannot hold love out.

Shak., R. and J., ii. 2. 67.

3. Hard like stone, but not made of stone; stone-like.

The cocca-nut with its stony shell.

Whittier, The Palm-Tree.

Specifically, in anat. and zool., very hard, like a stone; hard as a rock. (a) Sclerodermic or madreporian, as corals. (b) Lithistidan, as sponges. (c) Especially thick and hard, as some opercula of shells. See sea-bean, 3. (d) Petros or petrosal, as bone. (e) Otolithic, as concretions in the ear. See ear-bone, ear-stone, otolith. (f) Turned to stone; petrified, as a fossil.

4. Pertaining to or characteristic of stone: as, a stony quality or consistency.

Chattering stony names

Of shale and hornblende, rag and trap and tuff.

Tennyson, Princess, iii.

5. Rigid; fixed; hard, especially in a moral sense; hardened; obdurate.

Thou knowest that all these things do little or nothing move my mind — my heart, O Lord, is so stony. J. Bradford, Works (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 257.

6. Painfully hard and cold; chilling; frigid; freezing.

The stony fears

Ran to his hart, and all his sense dismayd.

Spenser, F. Q., II. viii. 46.

Out of my stony griefs

Bethel I'll raise.

Sarah F. Adams, Nearer my God, to Thee.

He . . .

Gorgonised me from head to foot

With a stony British stare.

Tennyson, Maud, xiii.

Stony cataract, a cataract with great hardening of the lens.

stony², v. [< ME. stonen, stonien; cf. astony, *stun*¹, *stound*³, and aston.] I. trans. 1. To stun.

He was stonyed of the stroke that he myght not stonde on his feet ne meve no membre that he hadde.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 265.

2. To astonish; confound.

Sothely these wordes when I here thaim or redis than stonyes me. Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 43.

II. intrans. To be or become stunned or astounded.

By land and sea, so well he him acquitte,

To speake of him I stony in my witte.

Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 296.

stony-hearted (stō'nī-hār'ted), a. Hard-hearted; unfeeling; obdurate. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 2. 28.

stood (stūd), Preterit and past participle of stand.

stook (stük), n. [Also dial. stouk; prob. < MLG. stüke, LG. stuke, a heap or bundle, as of flax or turf, = G. stauche, a bundle, as of flax; cf. MD. styeke, a chest, hamper.] A sheaf of corn, consisting, when of full size, of twelve sheaves. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

But stooks are cowpet wth the blast.
Burns, Third Epistle to J. Lapraik.

Stook, twelve sheaves of corn stuck upright, their upper ends inclining towards each other like a high pitched roof. Myc's Instructions for Parish Priests (E. E. T. S.), [Notes, p. 79.]

stook (stük), v. [< stook, n.] I. trans. To set up, as sheaves of grain, in stooks or shoeks. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Still shearing, and clearing,
The tither stooked raw [row].
Burns, To the Guildwife of Wanchope House.

II. intrans. To set up grain in stooks.

Those that binde and stooke are likewise to have 2d. a day, for binding and stooking of winter corne is a man's labor. Best's Farming Book (1641), p. 43. (E. Peacock.)

stooker (stük'ér), n. [< stook + -er.] One who sets up sheaves in stooks or shoeks in the harvest-field. J. Wilson.

stool (stöl), n. [< ME. stool, stole, stol, < AS. stól = OS. stól = OFries. stól = D. stoel = MLG. stól, LG. stol = OHG. stool, stual, stól, MHG. stool, G. stuhl = Icel. stóll = Sw. Dan. stól = Goth. stóls, a seat, chair; cf. OBulg. stolū = Russ. stolū = Lith. stulus, a table, = Gr. στῆλη, an upright slab (see stela); from the root of stall, still, ult. from the root of stand: see stall¹, stell, stand.] I. A seat or chair; now, in particular, a seat, whether high or low, consisting of a piece of wood mounted usually on three or four legs, and without a back, intended for one person; also, any support of like construction used as a rest for the feet, or for the knees when kneeling.

I may nougite stonde ne stoupe ne with-oute a stole knele.
Piers Plowman (B), v. 394.

By sitting on the stage, you may . . . have a good stool for sixpence.
Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, p. 141.

Oh! who would cast and balance at a desk.
Perch'd like a crow upon a three-legg'd stool?
Tennyson, Audley Court.

2†. The seat of a bishop; a see.

This bispriche [Salisbury] was hwylen two bispriche; theo other stol wes at Remmesbury, . . . the other at Schireburne.
Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 145.

3. Same as ducking-stool.

I'll speed me to the pond, where the high stool
On the long plank hangs o'er the muddy pool,
That stool, the dread of every scolding queen,
Yet sure, a lover should not die so mean.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Wednesday, l. 107.

4. The seat used in easing the bowels; hence, a fecal evacuation; a discharge from the bowels.—5†. A frame for tapestry-work.

This woful lady lerned bad in yonthe
So that she werken and enbrouden couthe,
And weven in hir stole the radevoro
As hit of women hath be woned yore.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2352.

6. The root or stump of a timber-tree, or of a bush, cane, grass, etc., which throws up shoots; also, the cluster of shoots thus produced.

What is become of the remains of these ancient vineyards, as vines shoot strongly from the stool, and are not easily eradicated?
Archeologia, III. 91. (Davies.)

The male prisoners, who were besom-makers, had been seen cutting sticks in Sweetheo Dene . . . a few days before, and these sticks, having been compared with some stools in that secluded wood from which cuttings had been made, were found to correspond.
North-Country Lore and Legend, II. 254.

7. The mother plant from which young plants are propagated by the process of layering. Lindley.—8. Naut.: (a) A small channel in the side of a vessel for the deadeyes of the back-stays. (b†) An ornamental block placed over the stem to support a poop-lantern.—9. A movable pole or perch to which a pigeon is fastened as a lure or decoy for wild birds. See the extract under stool-pigeon, 1. Hence—10. A stool-pigeon; also, a decoy-duck.

The decoys, or stools, as they are called, are always set to windward of the blind. . . . The stools should be set in a crescent-shaped circle [about fifty of them] with the heads of the decoys pointing to the wind.
Shore Birds, p. 44.

11. Material spread on the bottom for oyster-spat to cling to; set, either natural or artificial. See cuttle.—Back-stool, a kind of low easy-chair.—Folding stool. See fold.—Office stool, a high stool made for use by persons writing at a high desk, such as are used by bookkeepers and clerks.—Stool of a window, or window-stool, in arch., the flat piece on which the sash shuts down, corresponding to the sill of a door.—Stool of repentance, in Scotland, an elevated seat in a church on which persons were formerly made to sit to receive public rebuke as a punishment for fornication or adultery. Compare cutty-stool.

What! d'ye think the lads wth the kilts will care for yer synods, and yer presbyteries, and yer buttock-mail, and yer stool o' repentance?
Scott, Waverley, xxx.

To fall between two stools, to lose, or be disappointed in, both of two things between which one is hesitating.

No one would have thought that . . . Lily was aware . . . that she was like to fall to the ground between two stools—having two lovers, neither of whom could serve her turn.
Trolope, Last Chronicle of Barset, xxxv.

(See also camp-stool, footstool, night-stool, piano-stool.)

stool (stöl), v. [< stool, n.] I. intrans. 1. To throw up shoots from the root, as a grass or a grain-plant; form a stool. See stool, n., 6.

I worked very hard in the copse of young ash with my bill-hook and a shearing knife, cutting out the saplings where they stooled too close together.
R. D. Blackburne, Lorna Doone, xxxviii.

2. To decoy duck or other fowl by means of stools. [U. S.]

For wet stooling, the wooden ones [decoys] are preferable, as the tin ones soon rust and become worthless.
Shore Birds, p. 45.

3. To be decoyed; respond to a decoy. [U. S.]

They [widgeons] stool well to any shoal-water duck decoys, and answer their call. Sportsman's Gazetteer, p. 206.

4. To evacuate the bowels.

II. trans. To plow; cultivate. [Prov. Eng.]
—To stool turfs, to set turfs two and two, one against the other, to be dried by the wind. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

stool-ball (stöl'bäl), n. An outdoor game of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, generally played by women alone, but sometimes in company with men. See second quotation.

Daugh. Will you go with me?
Woer. What shall we do there, wench?
Daugh. Why, play at stool-ball.
Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 2.

Stool-ball. This game, so often mentioned in old writers, is still played in almost every village in Sussex, and is for ladies and girls exactly what cricket is to men. Two pieces of board 18 inches by 12 are fixed to two sticks from 3 to 4 feet high, according to the age of the players. These sticks are stuck in the ground sloping a little backwards, and from 10 to 15 yards apart. The players take sides, generally eight to ten each. . . . The bowler pitches the ball at the board, which in fact is the wicket. If he hits it the player is out. The same is the case if the ball is caught; and the running out, stumping, &c., are exactly like cricket.
N. and Q., 3d ser., XI. 457.

stool-end (stöl'end), n. In mining, a part of rock left unworked for the purpose of supporting the rest.

stool-pigeon (stöl'pīj'on), n. 1. A pigeon fastened to a stool, and used as a decoy.

The Stool-Pigeon, also, as familiar to English ears as to ours, exists here—and even in the Eastern States—still in both its primary signification and its figurative extension. In the former it means the pigeon, with its eyes stitched up, fastened on a stool, which can be moved up and down by the hidden fowler, an action which causes the bird to flutter anxiously. This attracts the passing flocks of wild pigeons, which alight and are caught by a net, which may be sprung over them.
De Vere, Americanisms, p. 210.

Hence—2. A person employed as a decoy; as, a stool-pigeon for a gambling-house; such a fellow is generally a "rook" who pretends to be a "pigeon." See pigeon, 2, and *rook*¹, 3.

stoom (stöm), n. and v. Same as stum.

stoop¹ (stöp), v. [Formerly and still dial. stoup; < ME. stoupen, stoupen, stuppen, < AS. stūpian = MD. stuppen = Icel. stupa (very rare), stoup, = Norw. stupa, fall, drop, = Sw. stupa, dial. stjupa, fall, drop, tr. lower, incline, tilt; akin to *steep*¹: see *steep*¹, and cf. *steep*².] The reg. mod. form from AS. stūpian is stoup (pron. stoup), as in dialectal use. The retention of o or reversion to the orig. AS. vowel-sound ō occurs also in room (< AS. rūm) (and in wound [as pron. wōnd], < AS. wund).] I. intrans. 1. To bend; bow; incline; especially, of persons, to lower the body by bending forward and downward.

He hit on his helme with a heny sword,
That greit him full gretly, gert hym to stoupe.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7256.

The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light.
Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 1028.

How sweetly does this fellow take his dowst!
Stoops like a camel!

Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, iv. 1.

2. To be bent or inclined from the perpendicular; specifically, to carry the head and shoulders habitually bowed forward from the upright line of the rest of the body.

A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white.
Shak., Hen. V., v. 2. 168.

Tall trees stooping or soaring in the most picturesque variety.
George Eliot, Felix Holt, xxiii.

3. To come down; descend.

The cloud may stoop from heaven and take the shape,
With fold to fold, of mountain or of cape.
Tennyson, Princess, vi. (song).

4. Specifically, to swoop upon prey or quarry, as a hawk; pounce.

As I am a gentleman,
I'll meet next cocking, and bring a haggard with me
That stoops as free as lightning.

Tonkiss (?), Albumazar, iii. 5.

Here stands my dove; stoop at her if you dare.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, v. 3.

5. To condescend; deign; especially expressing a lowering of the moral self, and generally followed by an infinitive or the preposition to.

Is Religion a beggarly and contemptible thing, that it doth not become the greatness of your minds to stoop to take any notice of it?
Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. v.

Frederic, indeed, stooped for a time even to use the language of adulation.
Macauley, Frederic the Great.

6. To yield; submit; succumb.

Thus hath the Field and the Church stooped to Mahomet.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 242.

I will make thee stoop, thou abject.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, v. 3.

II. trans. I. To bend downward; bow.

Myself . . .
Have stooped my neck under your injuries.
Shak., Rich. II., iii. 1. 19.

She stooped her by the rummel's side.
Scott, Marmion, vi. 30.

2. To incline; tilt; as, to stoop a cask. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]—3. To bring or take down; lower, as a flag or a sail.

Nor, with that Consul Join'd, Vespasian could prevail
In thirty several fights, nor make them stoop their sail.
Drayton, Polyolbion, viii. 212.

4. To put down; abase; submit; subject.

I will stoop and humble my intents
To your well-practised wise directions.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 2. 120.

5. To cast down; prostrate; overthrow; overcome.

You have found my spirit; try it now, and teach me
To stoop whole kingdoms.

Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, i. 1.

6†. To swoop or pounce down upon.

The hawk that first stooped my pheasant is killed by the spaniel that first sprang all of our side.

Webster and Dekker, Northward Hoe, v. 1.

7. To steep; macerate. [Prov. Eng.]

stoop¹ (stöp), n. [*< stoop*¹, v.] 1. The act of stooping or bending down; hence, a habitual bend of the back or shoulders: as, to walk with a stoop.

Now observe the stoops,
The bendings, and the falls.
B. Jonson, Sejanus, i. 1.

His clumsy figure, which a great stoop in his shoulders, and a ludicrous habit he had of thrusting his head forward, by no means redeemed.

Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, li.

2. The darting down of a bird on its prey; a swoop; a pounce.

Once a kite, hovering over the garden, made a stoop at me.
Swift, Gulliver's Travels, li. 5.

Hence—3†. That which stoops or swoops; a hawk. [Rare.]

You glorious martyrs, you illustrious stoops,
That once were cloister'd in your fleshly coops.
Quarles, Emblems, v. 10.

4. A descent from superiority, dignity, or power; a condescension, concession, or submission: as, a politic stoop.

Can any loyal subject see
With patience such a stoop from sovereignty?
Dryden.

To give the stoopt, to stoop; submit; yield.

O that a king should give the stoop to such as these.
Ep. Hacket, Abp. Williams, ii. 186. (Davies.)

stoop², stoup² (stöp, stoup), n. [< ME. stoup, stoupe, appar. a var. (due to confusion with the related ME. stoupe, < AS. stoppa: see *stop*²) of stepe*, steap*, < AS. steap, a cup, = MD. stoup, a cup, vessel, D. stoup, a measure of about two quarts, = MLG. stöp, a cup, vessel, also a measure, LG. stouf, a measure, = OHG. stouf, stouph, MHG. stouf, G. stouf, a cup, = Icel. stouf, a cup, = Sw. stöp (< D. or LG.), a measure of about three pints; also in dim. form, MHG. stübechün, G. stübechen, a gallon, measure; prob. nit. identical with Icel. stouf, a lump (orig. meaning something east), hence a vessel of metal, etc., from the verb represented by Icel. steppa = Sw. stōpa = Dan. støbe, east (metals), pour out (liquids), E. steep: see *steep*².] The spelling stoup is partly Sc., and in the Sc. pron. stoup is prob. of Icel. origin.] 1. A drinking-vessel; a beaker; a flagon; a tankard; a pitcher.

Fetch me a stoupe of liquor.
Shak. (folio 1623), Hamlet, v. 1. 63.

Hence—2. Liquor for drinking, especially wine, considered as the contents of a stoop: as, he tossed off his stoop.

He took his rouse with stoops of Rhenish wine. Marlowe, Doctor Faustus, III. 4.

3. A basin for holy water, usually placed in a niche or against the wall or a pillar at the entrance of Roman Catholic churches; also used in private houses. In the Greek Church it is called a colymbion or hagia-materon. In this sense usually written stoup. Sometimes also called by the French name bénitier, and formerly holy-water stock, holy-water stone.

Holy-water Stoop.—Church of San Miniato, Florence.

stoop³ (stöp), n. [Derived from D. usage in New York; < D. stocp, a stoop (een hooge stoep, a high stoop), MD. stoepe, a stoop, a bench at the door, = OS. stōpo = OHG. stoufo, MHG. stoufe, G. stufe, a step, guide; a doublet of stope, lit. a step, and from the root of step (AS. stapan, stappan, pret. stōp): see step.] An uncovered platform before the entrance of a house, raised, and approached by means of steps. Sometimes incorrectly used for porch or veranda. [U. S.; originally New York.]

Stoop.—Van Rensselaer House, at Greenbush, New York.

Nearly all the houses [in Albany] were built with their gables to the street, and each had heavy wooden Dutch stoops with seats at its door. J. F. Cooper, Satanstoe, xi.

They found him [Stuyvesant], according to custom, smoking his afternoon pipe on the stoop, or bench at the porch of his house. Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 297.

stoop⁴ (stöp), n. [Also stoup; a var. of stulp.]

1†. The stock or stem, as of a tree; the stump. It may be known, hard by an ancient stoop, Where grew an oak in elder days, decay'd. Tancred and Gismunda, iv. 2.

2. A post or pillar; specifically, an upright post used to mark distance, etc., on a race-course. Stoupe, before a doore, souche. Palsgrave.

Carts or waines are debarred and letted (by coaches): the milk-maid's ware is often spilt in the dirt, . . . being crowded and shrowded up against stalls and stoopes. John Taylor, Works, ii. 242. (Bartlett.)

And 'twere well to have a flag at the ending stoop of each heat to be let down as soon as the first horse is past the stoop. Quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 421.

3. An upright support; a prop or column; specifically, in coal-mining, a pillar of coal left to support the roof.—4. Figuratively, a sustainer; a patron.

Dalhousie, of an auld descent, My chief, my stoop, and ornament. Ramsay, Poems, II. 367. (Jamieson.)

[Prov. Eng. and Scotch in all uses.]

Stoop and room, a method of mining coal in use in Scotland, differing but little from the pillar and breast method. See pillar.—Stoop and roop. [Also stoup and roup; a riming formula, of which the literal or original meaning is not obvious; explained by Jamieson as for stump and rump.] The whole of everything; every jot: often used adverbially.

"But the stoeking, Hobbie?" said John Elliot; "we're utterly ruined. . . . We are ruined stoop and roop." Scott, Black Dwarf, x.

Stoop and thirl. Same as stoop and room. N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 264.

stooped (stō'ped or stōpt), a. [< *stoop*¹ + *-ed*².] Having a stoop in posture or carriage; round-shouldered; bent.

The college witticism that "— and —" (another highly esteemed university dignitary) "are the stoopedest men in New Haven." The Atlantic, LXIV. 557.

stooper (stō'pēr), n. [< *stoop*¹ + *-er*¹.] One who or that which stoops.

stooping (stō'ping), p. a. 1. Leaning; bending forward and downward; hence, bent; bowed: as, stooping shoulders; a stooping figure.—2†. Yielding; submissive.

A stooping kind of disposition, clean opposite to contempt. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vii. 24.

3. In her., swooping or flying downward as if about to strike its prey: noting a hawk used as a bearing. Also spelled stooping.

stoopingly (stō'ping-li), adv. In a stooping manner or position; with a bending of the body forward. Sir H. Wotton, Reliquia, p. 260.

stoop-shouldered (stōp'shōl'dērd), a. Having a habitual stoop in the shoulders and back.

stoor¹ (stōr), a. [Also stour; early mod. E. also stoore; Sc. stour, stoure, sture, < ME. stoor, store, stor, < AS. stōr = OFries. stōr = Icel. stōrr = Dan. Sw. stōr, great, large.] 1. Great; large; strong; mighty.

He was store man of strenght, stoutest in armes. Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3743.

On a grene hille he sawe n tre, The savoure of hit was stronge & store. Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 101.

2. Stiff; hard; harsh. Stoure, rude as course clothe is, gros. Palsgrave.

Now, to look on the feathers of all manner of birds, you shall see some so low, weak, and short, some so coarse, stoore, and hard, and the ribs so briclike, thin, and narrow, that it can neither be drawn, pared, nor yet will set on. Asclam, Toxophilus (ed. 1864), p. 123.

3. Austere; harsh; severe; violent; turbulent: said of persons or their words or actions.

O stronge lady stoore, what dost thou? Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 1123.

Thenne he gef hym god-day, & wyth a glent lazed, & as ho stod, ho stouyed hym wyth ful stor wordes. Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), l. 1291.

Stouere of conuersacyon, estourdy. Palsgrave.

4. Harsh; deep-toued. Halliwell.

[Obsolete or provincial in all uses.] stoor² (stōr), v. [Also stour; < ME. stōren, < AS. as if stōrian*, a var. of stȳrian = MLG. stōren, etc., move, stir; see *stir*¹ and *stee*³, doublets of *stoor*².] 1. To move; stir. Halliwell. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Loke ye store not of that steed, Whedur y be quyck or dedd. MS. Cantab. Fl. ii. 38, f. 191. (Halliwell.)

2. To move actively; keep stirring. [Prov. Eng.]—3. To rise up in clouds, as smoke, dust, etc. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. 1. To stir up, as liquor. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.] Hence—2. To pour; especially, to pour leisurely out of any vessel held high. [Scotch.]—3. To sprinkle. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

stoor³ (stōr), n. [Also stour; < *stoor*², v. Cf. *stir*¹, n. In some senses confused in the spelling stour with *stour*³.] 1. Stir; bustle; agitation; contention. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

An infinite cockneydom of stoor and din. Carlyle, in Froude, l. 161.

2. Dust in motion; hence, also, dust at rest. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Our ancient crown's fa'n in the dust— De'il blin' them wi' the stoure o' t. Burns, Awa', Whigs, Awa'.

3. A gush of water. Jamieson; Halliwell (under stour, stowre). [Scotch.]—4. Spray. [Scotch.]—5. A sufficient quantity of yeast for brewing. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stoor^{3†}, n. A Middle English form of *store*³.

stoorey (stō'ri), n. [Cf. *stoor*², n., 5.] A mixture of warm beer and oatmeal stirred up with sugar. [Prov. Eng.]

stoorness† (stōr'nes), n. [Also stourness; < ME. stourenes, stourenes; < *stoor*¹ + -ness.] Strength; power.

And Troiell, the tru knight, trayturlly he slogh, Noght thurgh stourenes of strokes, ne with strenght one. Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 10345.

stoory (stō'ri), a. [Also stoury, stoury; < *stoor*², n., 2, + -y.] Dusty. [Scotch.]

An sye she took the tither souk, To drouk the stourie tow. Burns, I Bought my Wife a Stane of Liut.

stooth (stōth), n. [Early mod. E. stothic; prob. < Icel. stath = Sw. stod, a post; cf. AS. studu, > ME. stode, E. stud, a post, etc.: see *stud*¹.] A stud; a post; a batten. [Obsolete or provincial.]

For settinge in ij. stothes and mendyng the wall of the receiver's chalmere over the stare. Houden Roll (1552), in Fabric Rolls of York Minster, p. 355. (E. Peacock.)

stooth (stōth), v. t. [< stooth, n.] To lath and plaster. Halliwell; Jamieson. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

stoothing (stō'thing), n. [< stooth + -ing], or a var. of studding, accom. to stooth.] Studding; battening.

stop¹ (stop), v.; pret. and pp. stopped, ppr. stopping. [< ME. stoppen, stoppien, < AS. stopian (in comp. for-stopian), stop up, = OS. stoppōn = MD. D. stoppen = MLG. LG. stoppen, stuff, cram, = OHG. stoffōn, stoppōn, MHG. G. stopfen, stoppen = Icel. Sw. stoppa = Dan. stoppe, stop. (a) According to the usual view, = OF. estouper, F. étouper = OSP. estopar = It. stoppare, stop up with tow, < LL. stupare, stuppare, stop up with tow, cram, stop, < L. stupa, stippa = Gr. στῦπη, στῦππη, coarse part of flax, hards, oakum, tow; see stupa, *stupr*¹. (b) But this explanation, which suits phonetically, is on grounds of meaning somewhat doubtful; it does not appear from the early instances of the verb that the sense 'stop with tow,' 'stuff,' is the original. The similarity with the L. and Rom. forms may be accidental, and the Teut. verb may be different (though mingled with the other), and connected with OHG. stoplān, MHG. stopfen, stüpfen, pierce, and so ult. with E. stump. Cf. stuff, v., derived, through the F., from the same Teut. source.] I. trans. 1. To close up, as a hole, passage, or cavity, by filling, stuffing, plugging, or otherwise obstructing; block up; choke: as, to stop a vent or a channel.

There is an odde that is y-hote iue latin aspis, thet is of zuiche kende that hi stoppeth thet ou eare mid orthe, and thet other mid hare tayle, thet hi ne yhere thane charnere. Ayenbite of Inceyt (E. E. T. S.), p. 257.

Imperious Cesar, dead, and turn'd to clay, Might stop n hole to keep the wind away. Shak., Hamlet, v. 1. 237.

Mountains of ice, that stop the imagined way, Beyond Petsora eastward, to the rich Cathaian coast. Milton, P. L., x. 291.

2. To make close or tight; close with or as with a compressible substance, or a lid or stopper: as, to stop a bottle with a cork; hence, to stanch.

The eldest and wyset at Geball were they that mended and stopped thy shippes. Bible of 1551, Ezek. xxvii. 9.

Have by some surgeon, Shylock, on your charge, To stop his wounds, lest he do bleed to death. Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 258.

Children yet Unborn will stop their ears when thou art nam'd. Beau. and FL., Laws of Candy, v. 1.

This place [a Maronite convent] is famous for excellent wine, which they preserve, as they do in all these parts, in large earthen jars, close stopped down with clay. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 103.

3. To shut up; inclose; confine. Forthi yf combes rouke of hony weep, Three dayes stopped up at the home hem [bees] keep. Polladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 138.

Whatever spirit . . . leaves the fair at large Shall feel sharp vengeance soon o'ertake his sins, Be stopp'd in vials, or transfix'd with pius. Pope, R. of the L., ii. 126.

4. To hinder from progress or procedure; cause to cease moving, going, acting, working, or the like; impede; check; head off; arrest: as, to stop a car; to stop a ball; to stop a clock; to stop a thief.

"How dare you stop my errand?" he says; "My orders you must obey." Child Noryce (Child's Ballads, II. 41).

Did they exert themselves to help onward the great movement of the humau race, or to stop it? Macaulay, Sir J. Mackintosh.

5. To hold back, as from a specified course, purpose, end, or the like; restrain; hinder: followed by from (obsolete or dialectal of). No man shall stop me of this boasting. 2 Cor. xi. 10.

Thus does he poison, kill, and slay, . . . Yet stops me o' my lawfu' prey. Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook.

6. To prevent the continuance of; suppress; extinguish; bring to an end: as, to stop a leak. Thei putten here houtes upon his mouthe, and stoppen his Brethe, and so thei sleen him. Mandeville, Travels, p. 201.

If there be any love to my deservings Borne by her virtuous self, I cannot stop it. Beau. and FL., Knight of Burning Pestle, i. 1.

7. To check or arrest by anticipation. The grief . . . that stops his answer. Shak., Lucrece, l. 1664.

Every bold sinner, when about to engage in the commission of any known sin, should . . . stop the execution of his purpose with this question: Do I believe that God has denounced death to such a practice, or do I not? South. (Johnson.)

8. To keep back; withhold. Do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hineckley fair? Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 1. 24.

by a set-screw on a shaft or rod as a stop or gage to limit the motion of a movable part sliding on the rod or shaft, as a fitting on the main shaft on which the carriage of a type-writer slides, and adjustments in many other machines.

stop-cylinder (stop'sil'in-dér), n. In printing. See cylinder-press and printing-machine.

stop-drill (stop'dril), n. A form of drill made with a solid shoulder, or admitting of the attachment of a collar by a side-screw, to limit the depth of penetration of the tool.

stope¹ (stóp), n. [< ME. stope* = MD. stocpe, etc., a step; or a var. of stape, stap, a step (cf. stopen, stope, stapen, pp. of stapen): see step, and cf. stopp.] An excavation made in a mine to remove the ore which has been rendered accessible by the shafts and drifts. These are, to a certain extent, permanent constructions, being carefully supported by the necessary timbering and left open for passage, while the stopes are only supported so far as may be necessary for the safety of the mine, and are more or less completely filled up with the attle or refuse rock left behind after the ore has been picked out and sent to the surface.

stope² (stóp), v. t. and i.; pret. and pp. stoped, ppr. stopping. [< *stope*¹, n.] In mining, to remove the contents of a vein. The stopping is done after a vein or lode has been laid open by means of the necessary shafts and drifts. See stopping.

stope³ (stóp), n. An obsolete form of *stope*².

stope⁴, stoptent. Middle English forms of stapen, past participle of step.

stop-finger (stop'fing'gér), n. Same as faller-wire, 2.

stop-gap (stop'gap), n. and a. [< *stop*¹, v., + obj. gap.] 1. n. That which fills a gap or hiatus, or, figuratively, that which serves as an expedient in an emergency.

I declare off; you shall not make a stop-gap of me.

Foote, The Cozeners, i. 1.

A good deal of conversation which is . . . introduced as a stop-gap. Proc. Eng. Soc. Psych. Research, XVII, 450.

II. a. Filling a gap or pause, as in the course of talk.

The "well's" and "ah's," "don't-you-know's," and other stop-gap interjections.

Proc. Amer. Soc. Psych. Research, I, 312.

stop-gate (stop'gät), n. A gate used to divide a canal into sections, so that in case of a break in an embankment in one section the water can be shut off from flowing into it from other sections.

stop-hound (stop'hound), n. A dog trained to hunt slowly, stopping at the huntsman's signal. Davies (under stop).

Sir Roger, being at present too old for fox-hunting, to keep himself in action, has disposed of his beagles and got a pack of stop-hounds. Budget, Spectator, No. 116.

stopping (stöp'ping), n. [Verbal n. of *stope*¹, v.] In mining, the act of excavating mineral ground to remove the ore after this has been rendered accessible by the necessary preliminary excavations—namely, sinking one or more shafts or winzes and running drifts.—Overhand stopping, a method of working out the contents of a vein by advancing from below upward, the miner being thus always helped by gravity. It is the method most commonly employed. That part of the material thrown down which is worth saving is raised to the surface, and the refuse rock (attle or dead) rests on the stulls remains in the excavation, helping to support the walls of the mine, and giving the miner a place on which to stand.—Underhand stopping, excavating the ore by working from above downward. In underhand stopping everything loosened by blasting has to be lifted up to be got out of the way. The advantage of this method is that in case the ore is very valuable, less of it need be lost by its getting so mixed with the attle that it cannot be picked out.

stop-knob (stop'nob), n. In organ-building, the handle by which the player controls the position of the slider belonging to a particular stop, or set of pipes. When the knob is drawn out, the pipes are ready to be sounded by the keys. The name of the stop is commonly written on the knob. Also called register and stop. See cut under reed-organ.

stopless (stop'les), a. [< *stop*¹ + -less.] Not to be stopped or checked. [Rare.]

Making a civil and staid senate rude

And stopless as a running multitude.

Sir W. Davenant, On King Charles the Second's Return.

stop-motion (stop'mō'shon), n. In mech., a device for automatically arresting the motion of an engine or a machine, when from any cause it is necessary to stop suddenly to prevent injury to the machine or material. Stop-motion mechanisms are applied to looms, spinning, roving, and drawing-machines, winding-machines, elevators, knitting-machines, and engines. They are divided into two classes: those operated by some mechanical means, as a weighted arm resting on the thread of a loom, where the breakage of the thread causes the arm to fall; and those actuated by electricity, in which the fall of an arm closes a circuit, and by means of a magnet sets in motion some mechanical device for arresting the motion. In most machines the usual method is the shifting of the belt that moves the machine. It engages the stoppage and fall of the governor closes the steam-valve. Electrical stop-motion appliances, not self-acting, are sometimes used; in case of a break-down the use of a push-button releases a weight that by suitable mechanism shuts off steam from the engine. Fork-and-grid stop-motion, in a power-loom, a stop-motion in which a grid on the batten acts in connection with a fork, which when the weft-thread breaks causes a lever to drop and stops the loom.

stop-net (stop'net), n. An addition to the main net in seine-fishing. Encyc. Brit., IX, 254.

stop-order (stop'ór'dér), n. In stock-broking, an order given by a person to his broker to sell or buy a specified stock when the price reaches a specified figure.

stop-over (stop'ó'vèr), n. and a. See to stop off or over, under *stop*¹, v. i.

stoppage (stop'áj), n. [< *stop*¹ + -age.] 1. The act of stopping, in any sense, or the state of being stopped; especially, a stopping of motion or procedure.

His majesty, . . . finding unexpected stoppage, tells you he now looks for a present proceed in his affairs.

Court and Times of Charles I., I, 344.

2. A deduction made from pay or allowances to repay advances, etc.—Stoppage in transit or in transitu, in law, the act of a seller of goods who has sent them on their way to the buyer, in reclaiming them before they have come into the actual possession or control of the buyer, and terminating or suspending performance of the sale: a right allowed in case of discovering the buyer to be insolvent.

stopper, n. [ME., < AS. stoppa, a vessel: see *stope*².] A pail or bucket. Prompt. Parv., p. 477; Halliwell.

stopped (stopt), p. a. 1. In playing musical instruments, noting the effect produced by stopping in any of the senses described under *stop*¹, v. t., 10.—2. In an organ, having the upper end plugged; said of a pipe: opposed to open. The tone produced by a stopped pipe is an octave lower than that produced by an open pipe of the same length.—Stopped diapason, in organ-building. See diapason (e).—Stopped note. See *note*¹.

stopple¹, n. An obsolete form of stopple.

stopple², n. Same as estopple.

Abatements, stopples, inhibitions.

Marston, Scourge of Villainie, vii, 57.

stopper (stop'èr), n. [< *stop*¹ + -er.] 1. One who or that which stops or plugs. (a) One who fills up holes or openings.

The ancients of Gelal and the wise men thereof were in thee thy calkers [margin: stoppers of chinks].

Ezek. xxvii, 9.

(b) That which closes or fills up (an opening, etc.) as a plug, a bung, or a cork; especially, such an article for the mouth of a fruit-jar, decanter, or vial, when made of the same material as the vessel itself, and having no special name, as cork, bung, etc.; a stopple; specifically, a device for closing bottles for aerated water. See cut under siphon-bottle. (c) A convenient utensil made of wood, bone, ivory, or the like, formerly used to compress or pack some loose or flocculent substance into small compass.

I sold little bone "tobacco-stoppers"—they're seldom asked for now; stoppers is quite out of fashion.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I, 490.

(d) One who or that which brings to a stop or stand; specifically, one of the players in tennis, football, and other games, who stops the balls. Halliwell. (e) Naut., a piece of rope secured at one end to a bolt or the like, used to check the motion of another rope or of a cable. Stoppers for cables are of various construction, such as an iron clamp with a lever or screw, a claw of iron with a rope attached, etc. (f) In an organ, a wooden plug inserted in the tops of certain kinds of pipes, as in those of the stopped diapason, flute, bourdon, etc., whence they are called stopped pipes. Such pipes are tuned by means of the stopper. (g) In a vehicle, a bar of wood with iron points pivoted to the body, and allowed to trail on the ground behind to serve as a stop or brake in ascending steep grades. Such a device is used, for instance, on ice-carts plying on hilly streets, where stoppages are frequent.

2. The upper pad or principal callosity of the sole of a dog's foot.

The leg, or bones below the knee [of the greyhound], should be of good size, the stopper (or upper pad) well united to it, and firm in texture.

Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 45.

3. A small tree of one of four species of the genus Eugenia occurring in Florida. Of the species E. buxifolia is the gurgoon or Spanish stopper, E. monticola is the white stopper, and E. proccra is the red stopper. The last is somewhat abundant, and has a very heavy, hard, strong, and close-grained wood of a light yellowish-brown color, likely to be valuable for cabinet-making and coarse engraving. The remaining species so called is E. longipes, a rare tree bearing a small red fruit with the flavor of cranberries. All except the last are found also in the West Indies. Sargent.—Cat-head stopper. See cat-head.—Spanish stopper. See def. 3. (See also fighting-stopper.)

stopper (stop'èr), v. t. [< stopper, n.] 1. To close or secure with a stopple: as, stopped bottles.—2. To fit with a stopple or stopples.

The mouth of the vessel to be stopped is ground by an iron cone fixed to a lathe.

H. J. Powell, Glass-making, p. 73.

3. Naut., to secure with a stopper or stoppers.—To stopper a cable, to put stoppers on a cable to prevent it from running out of the ship when riding at anchor.

stopper-bolt (stop'èr-bólt), n. Naut., a large ring-bolt driven into the deck before the main hatch, etc., for securing the stoppers.

stopper-hole (stop'èr-hól), n. In iron-puddling, a hole in the door of the furnace through which the metal is stirred. See ent under puddling-furnace.

stopper-knot (stop'èr-not), n. A knot in the end of a rope-stopper made by double-walling the strands.

stopping (stop'ing), n. [Verbal n. of *stop*¹, v.] 1. The act of one who or that which stops, in any sense. Specifically—(a) The process of filling cracks or fissures, as in an oil-painting, with a composition preparatory to restoring; also, the material used in the process.

The stopping, as this mixture [of size and whiting] is called, is pressed into the cracks by means of a palette-knife.

Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 127.

(b) In etching. See to stop out (a), under *stop*¹, v. t. (c) The act or process of altering the pitch of the tones of a musical instrument in any of the ways described under *stop*¹, v. t., 10.

2. Something that stops. Specifically—(a) In mining, any solid wall or brattice built across a passage in a mine, to shut out the air from the goaves, or to limit it to certain passages, or to keep the gas confined, or for any other purpose. (b) In dental surg., material for filling cavities in teeth. (c) In farrery, a ball or pad for stuffing the space in a horse's foot within the inner edge of the shoe.—Double stopping, in viol-playing, the act or process of producing tones simultaneously from two stopped strings.

stopping-brush (stop'ing-brush), n. 1. In hat-making, a brush used to sprinkle boiling water upon the napping and the hat-body to assist in uniting them.—2. In etching, a camel's-hair brush used in stopping out parts of etched plates.

stopping-coat (stop'ing-kót), n. The covering of resistant material applied to any part of an object about to be exposed to the action of an acid or other agent, in order to protect that part from such action.

stopping-knife (stop'ing-nif), n. A knife used in stopping, as a glaziers' putty-knife.

stop-plank (stop'plangk), n. One of the planks employed to form a sort of dam in some hydraulic works. They generally occupy vertical grooves in the wing walls of a lock or weir, to hold back water in case of temporary disorder of the lock-gates.

stop-plate (stop'plät), n. An end-bearing for the axle in a railroad journal-box, designed to resist end-play of the axle.

stopple¹ (stop'pl), n. [< ME. stoppel, stoppell, stoppell; < stop + -el, now -le, a noun-formative indicating the instrument (as also in whittle, scrangle, etc.).] 1. That which stops or closes the mouth of a vessel; a stopper: as, a glass stopple; a cork stopple.

Item, j. litill botell, with j. cheyne and j. stopell, weying xxxviij. unces.

Paston Letters, I, 472.

Who knows, when he openeth the stopple, what may be in the bottle?

B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, ii, 1.

2. A plug sometimes inserted in certain finger-holes of a flute or flageolet to accommodate its scale to some unusual series.

stopple¹ (stop'pl), v. t.; pret. and pp. stoppled, ppr. stopping. [< *stopple*¹, n.] To stop or close with a stopple.

His hours of study clos'd at last,

And finish'd his concise repast,

Stopp'd his cruise, replac'd his book

Within its customary nook.

Couper, Moralizer Corrected.

stopple² (stop'pl), n. [< ME. stopyll, stople; a more orig. form of stubble: see stubble.] Stubble. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

And thoru haubert and ys coler, that nere nothyng souple,
He smot of ys heved as lyztliche as yt were a lute stopple.

Robert of Gloucester, p. 223.

stop-ridge (stop'rij), n. A band slightly elevated upon the surface of a blade or a similar part of an implement, intended to stop and hold it in the proper place, as in the handle. In stone celts the presence of such a stop-ridge marks a certain class or category.

stop-rod (stop'rod), n. In weaving, the rod which extends longitudinally under the batten of a loom, forming a part of the stop-motion, and which raises a catch that, if not raised, engages mechanism which immediately stops the loom. Every time the shuttle enters the shuttle-box fairly it acts upon a stop-finger to cause the stop-rod to lift the catch; but, if the shuttle is stopped in its course through the shed, the catch is not raised, the loom is stopped, and the warp, which would otherwise be broken by the impact of the reed against the shuttle while in the shed, is thus saved.

stop-ship (stop'ship), n. [< stop¹, v., + obj. ship; a translation of the Gr. ἔχεις, the remora: see Echeneis, and cf. mora, remora.] The fish remora.

O Stop-ship, . . . tell vs where thou doo'st thine Anchors hide;

Whence thou resistest Sayls, Owers, Wind, and Tide.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 5.

stop-thrust (stop'thrust), n. In fencing, a slight thrust at one's opponent, instead of a parry, made after he has begun to lunge forward in an attack. The stop-thrust goes over by delicate gradations into the time-thrust, but is not considered by fencers a fine blow like the time-thrust.

stop-valve (stop'valv), n. 1. In hydraul., a valve which closes a pipe against the passage of fluid. It is usually a disk which occupies a chamber above the pipe when the passage through the latter is open, and is driven down by a screw to stop the aperture.

2. In steam-engines, a valve fitted to the steam-pipes, where they leave the several boilers, in such a way that any boiler may be shut off from the others and from the engines.

stop-watch (stop'woch), n. A watch which records small fractions of a second, and in which the hands can be stopped at any instant, so as to mark the exact time at which some event occurs: chiefly used in timing races.

He suspended his voice in the epilogue a dozen times, three seconds and three fifths by a stop-watch, my lord, each time.
Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iii. 12.

stop-water (stop'wät'er), n. [< stop¹, v., + obj. water.] 1. Naut., a drag.—2. A plug of soft wood driven tightly into a hole at the joint of a scarf, the expansion of which, when immersed, prevents water from working up through the scarf and behind the bottom planking. In building iron ships a piece of canvas covered with red lead is used to make water-tight joints where caulking is difficult.

stop-wheel (stop'hwël), n. See Geneva movement, under movement.

stop-work (stop'wërk), n. A device attached to the barrel of a watch, musical box, etc., to prevent overwinding.

stor¹, n. A Middle English form of stoor¹. stor², n. [ME., < AS. stôr, incense, storax (= W. ystor, resin, resin), < L. storax, storax: see storax.] Incense.

That Stor signified Gode werkes, for ase se smech of the store wanne hit is i-do into the ueré and goth upward to the heuene and to Gode warde Swo amuntel si gode biddinge to gode of the herte of the gode cristenemane.
Old Eng. Misc. (ed. Morris), p. 28.

storable (stôr'a-bl), a. [< stor² + -able.] Capable of being stored. R. S. Ball, Exper. Mechanics, p. 262.

storage (stôr'āj), n. [< stor² + -age.] 1. The act of storing, in any sense; specifically, the keeping of goods in a store, warehouse, or other place of deposit.—2. The price charged or paid for keeping goods in a storehouse.—Cold storage, storage in refrigerating chambers or other places artificially cooled, as for the preservation of articles liable to be damaged by heat.—Storage battery. See battery.—Storage magazine. Same as magazine, 1 (a).—Storage warehouse. See warehouse.

storage-bellows (stôr'āj-bel'ôz), n. See organ¹, 6.

storax (stôr'raks), n. [= F. storax, styrax, < L. storax, styrax, < Gr. στριπάς, a sweet-smelling resin so called, also a tree producing it.] 1. A solid resin resembling benzoin, with the fragrance of vanilla, formerly obtained from a small tree, Styrax officinalis, of Asia Minor and Syria. It was in use from ancient times down to the close of the last century, but has disappeared from the market, the trees having been mostly reduced to bushes by excessive lopping.

This, that, and ev'ry thicket doth transpire
More sweet than storax from the hallowed fire.
Herrick, Apparition of his Mistress.

2. The tree yielding storax, or some other tree or shrub of the same genus. Among the American species, Styrax Californica is a handsome Californian shrub. See cut in next column.—Liquid storax, a balsam known from ancient times with the true storax, obtained by boiling and pressing from the inner bark of the Oriental sweet-gum tree, Liquidambar orientalis, itself also called liquidambar. It is a semi-fluid adhesive substance with the properties of a stimulant expectorant, but now scarcely used in Western practice except as a constituent in the compound tincture of benzoin (resembling friars' balsam: see benzoin), and as an application for itch. It has long been used in making incense and fumigating preparations, and also enters into perfumery. Its chief markets are China and India. A similar balsam is obtained, chiefly in Burma, from Altingia excelsa, known (together with the last) in East Indian commerce as rose-maloes, rasamala, etc. In Formosa and southern China a dry terbinthinous resin of the same character is derived from Liquidambar Formosana (a species recently identified). An American Liquidambar, or liquid storax, or a substitute for it, is produced as natural exudation or by incision from the bark Branch with Flowers of Storax (Styrax Californica).

a, a leaf, showing venation.

of the sweet-gum, Liquidambar styraciflua, in the hotter parts of its habitat. It is better known in Europe than in the United States, where it is perhaps most used for making chewing-gum.

Storax liquida [cometh] from Rhodes.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 277.

Storax ointment. See ointment.

storax-tree (stôr'raks-trê), n. Same as storax, 2.

store¹, a. A Middle English form of stoor¹.

store², v. A Middle English form of stoor².

store³ (stôr), v. t.; pret. and pp. stored, ppr. storing. [< ME. storen, also astoren, astorien, < OF. estorer, esturer, estaurer, make, build, establish, provide, furnish, store, < L. instaurare, renew, repair, make, ML. also provide, store, *< in, in, to, + staurare, set up, place (found also in restaurare, restore), *< staurus, fixed, = Gr. στραυός, n., an upright pole, a stake, cross, = Skt. sthāvara, fixed, = AS. steór, a rudder, etc.; from the root of stand: see stand. Cf. restore, instauration, etc. Hence store³, n., storage, store², etc.] 1. To provide; furnish; supply; equip; outfit.

No Cytee of the World is so wel stored of Schippes as is that.
Manderille, Travels, p. 207.

Her Mind with thousand Virtues stor'd.
Prior, Ode to the King after the Queen's Death, st. 35.

I believe for Greek & Latin there come very few lads so well stored to the University.
William Lloyd, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 188.

2. To stock with provisions; provision; replenish.

Alle thine castles ich habbe wel stored.
Layamon, l. 13412.

Backe to the yle of Alango, where some of vs went a londe . . . to store vs of newe vytylles.
Sir R. Guylforde, Pylgrymage, p. 50.

3. To deposit in a store or warehouse for preservation or safe-keeping; warehouse.

Now was stored
In the sweet-smelling granaries all the hoard
Of golden corn.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 393.

4. To lay up in reserve; accumulate; hoard; often with up.

According to Sir W. Thomson a single Faure cell of the spiral form, weighing 165 lbs., can store 2,000,000 foot-pounds of energy.
W. L. Carpenter, Energy in Nature (1st ed.), p. 125.

5. To restore.

Keppit the fro combranne & fro cold deth,
Storet thee to strenght & thi stythe londes,
And dawly hir distitour of hir fader.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 726.

store³ (stôr), n. and a. [< ME. stor, store, stoor (cf. W. ystôr = Gael. stor, < E.), < OF. estorer, estoirer, estorie, provisions, store, a fleet, navy, army, < ML. staurum (also, after OF., storium), same as instaurum, store, < L. instaurare, renew, restore, ML. also provide, furnish, store: see store³, v.] 1. n. 1. That which is provided or furnished for use as needed; a stock accumulated as for future use; a supply; a hoard; specifically, in the plural, articles, particularly of food, accumulated for a specific object; supplies, as of food, ammunition, arms, or clothing: as, military or naval stores; the winter stores of a family.

He . . . kepte hir to his usage and his store.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 2327.

500 pounds of hard bread, sleeping-bags, and assorted subsistence stores were landed from the floe.
Schley and Soley, Rescue of Greely, p. 77.

Hence — 2. A great quantity; a large number; abundance; plenty; used with, or archaically without, the indefinite article.

That olde man of pleasing wordes had store.
Spenser, F. Q., I. l. 35.

With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
Rain influence, and judge the prize.
Milton, L'Allegro, l. 121.

3. A place where supplies, as provisions, ammunition, arms, clothing, or goods of any kind, are kept for future use or distribution; a storehouse; a warehouse; a magazine.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam, . . .
Concocted and adjusted, they reduced
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd.
Milton, P. L., vl. 515.

Hence — 4. A place where goods are kept for sale by either wholesale or retail; a shop; as, a book-store; a dry-goods store. See note under shop¹, 2. [U. S. and British colonies.]

Stores, as the shops are called.

Capt. B. Hall, Travels in N. A., I. 8.

Bill of stores. See bill³.—Bonded store. See bonded.—Cooperative store. See cooperative.—Fancy store. See fancy.—General-order store, a customs warehouse in which goods are stored temporarily, as unclaimed, or arriving in advance of invoice or transportation papers, or through other like cause of detention. Such goods are obtainable only on a general order.—General store, a store or shop where goods of all ordinary kinds are kept for sale; especially, such a store in a country village or at cross-roads.—In store, laid up; on hand; ready to be produced: as, we know not what the future has in store for us.

I have an hour's talk in store for you.
Shak., J. C., ii. 2. 121.

Marine, ordnance, public stores. See the qualifying words.—Sea-stores, provisions and supplies on shipboard for use at sea. Compare ship-stores.—Ship-stores, provisions and supplies for use on board ships at sea or in port: such supplies are sealed, as non-dutiable, by the customs officers.—Small stores, in a man-of-war, a general term embracing tinware, tobacco, soap, razors, brushes, thread, needles, etc., issued and charged to the men by the paymaster.—Subsistence stores. See subsistence.—To set store by. See set, v. t., 18.—To tell no store off, to make no account of; set no store by.

I ne telle of laxatyves no store,
For they be venymous, I woot it weel;
I hem diffye, I love hem never a deel.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 334.

II. a. 1. Hoarded; laid up: as, store linen; store fruit.

Of this treasure . . . the gold was accumulate, and store treasure; . . . but the silver is still growing.
Bacon, Holy War.

2. Containing stores; set apart for receiving stores or supplies. Compare store-city.—3. Obtained at a store or shop; purchased or purchasable at a shop or store: as, store clothes; store teeth (humorously used for false teeth).

This word in rural or frontier use is commonly opposed to home-made, and implies preference: as, stylish store curtains; in town use it is usually opposed to made to order, and implies disparagement: as, clumsy store boots. [Colloq., U. S.]—Store casemate. Same as barrack casemate (which see, under barrack).—Store cattle, lean cattle bought for fattening by squatters who find that they have more grass than the natural increase of their herd requires. [Australia.]

Oh, we are not fit for anything hut store cattle: we are all blady grass.
Mrs. Campbell Praed, Head Station, p. 74.

Store pay, payment for country produce, labor, etc., by goods from a store, in lieu of cash; barter. [Rural, U. S.]

See, a girl has just arrived with a pot of butter to trade off for store pay. She wants in exchange a yard of calico, a quarter of tea, . . . and a bottle of rum.
Capt. Priest's Adventures, p. 54. (Bartlett.)

store⁴, n. A Middle English form of stoor³.

store⁵ (stôr), n. [< F. store, a window-shade, spring-blind, roller-blind, < L. storca, a mat.] A window-shade: the French term used in English for such a shade when of decorative character, especially when of French manufacture.

store-city (stôr'sit'ē), n. In the Old Testament, a city provided with stores of provisions for troops.

He [Solomon] built Tadmor in the wilderness, and all the store cities, which he built in Hamath.
2 Chron. viii. 4.

store-farm (stôr'färm), n. A stock-farm; a cattle-farm; a sheep-farm. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xlii. [Scotch.]

store-farmer (stôr'färm'ër), n. Same as stock-farmer. [Scotch.]

storehouse (stôr'hous), n. 1. A house in which things are stored; a building for the storing of grain, food-stuffs, or goods of any kind. a magazine; a repository; a warehouse; a store.

They ne'er cared for us yet; suffer us to famish, and their store-houses crammed with grain.
Shak., Cor., i. l. 83.

2. A store; a plentiful supply.

And greatly joyed merry tales to faine,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain.

Spenser, F. Q., II. vl. 6.

storekeeper (stōr'kē'pēr), n. 1. One who has the care or charge of a store or stores. (a) A shopkeeper. [U. S.] (b) An officer in a dockyard in charge of stores and storehouses; the superintendent of a storehouse in a navy-yard. (c) Milit., a commissioned officer in the United States army who has charge of the military stores at depots and arsenals. A military storekeeper is an officer of the quartermaster's department; an ordnance storekeeper, of the ordnance department; a medical storekeeper, of the medical department. These officers have the rank and pay of mounted captains in the army, but are not in the line of promotion.

2. Figuratively, an article in a stock of goods that remains so long on hand as to be unsalable. [Slang, U. S.]

storekeeping (stōr'kē'ping), n. The act of taking charge of stores or a store.

storeman (stōr'man), n.; pl. storemen (-men). 1. A man in charge of stores or supplies; as, the storeman's stock of bolts and screws.—2. A man employed in a storehouse for the work of storing goods.

The question of wages of shifters and store-men has been referred to arbitration.

Weekly Echo, Sept. 5, 1885. (Encyc. Diet.)

store-master (stōr'mās'tēr), n. The tenant of a store-farm. [Scotch.]

storer (stōr'ēr), n. [*< store*³ + *-er*¹.] One who lays up or accumulates a store.

Storeria (stō-rē'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Baird and Girard, 1853), named after Dr. D. H. Storer, an American naturalist.] A genus of harmless colubrid serpents of North America, of the family Colubridæ. Two common species of the United States are S. dekayi, and S. occipitoma-culata, the spotted-neck snake.

store-room (stōr'rōm), n. A room set apart for stores or supplies, especially table and household supplies.

Miss Jenkens asked me if I would come and help her to tie up the preserves in the store-room.

Mrs. Gaskell, Cranford, II.

store-ship (stōr'ship), n. A government vessel detailed to carry stores for the use of a fleet or garrison, or to store them in foreign ports.

storey, n. See *story*².

storge (stōr'gē), n. [< Gr. στοργή, natural love or affection, < στέργειν, love, as parents their children.] The strong instinctive affection of animals for their young; hence, the attachment of parents for children, or of children for parents; parental or filial love. [Rare and technical.]

In the storge, or natural affections of divers animals to their young ones. . . . There appears in the parent manifest tokens of solicitude, skill, and in some cases courage too.

Boyle, Christian Virtuoso, pt. II. aph. viii.

The innocence of infancy . . . is the cause of the love called storge. Swedenborg, Conjugal Love (trans.), § 395.

storialt (stō'ri-äl), a. [ME. storial, an aphetic form of historial.] 1. Historical.

This is storial sooth, it is no fable.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 702.

2. Of the nature of a story.

He shal fynde ynowe, grete and smale,
Of storial thyng that toucheth gentillesse,
And eek marlyttee and hoolynesse.

Chaucer, Prolog. to Miller's Tale, l. 71.

storiated (stō'ri-ä-ted), a. [CF. historiated.] Decorated with elaborate ornamental and illustrative designs, as title-pages of books in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, in which the ornamentation often covered the entire page.

The mania for the acquisition of storiated title-pages has led to the cruel spoliation of thousands of rare old books.

London Art Jour., No. 51, p. 91.

storied¹ (stō'rid), a. [*< story*¹ + *-ed*².] 1. Celebrated or recorded in story or history; associated with stories, tales, or legends.

To-morrow hurry through the fields
Of Flanders to the storied Rhine!

M. Arnold, Calais Sands.

2. Adorned with scenes from a story, or from history, executed by means of sculpture, painting, weaving, needlework, or other art: as, storied tapestries.

Storied windows, richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light.

Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 159.

Can storied urn, or animated bust,
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?

Gray, Elegy.

storied² (stō'rid), a. [Formerly also storeyed; *< story*² + *-ed*².] Having stories or stages: as, a four-storied building.

storier (stō'ri-ēr), n. [*< story*¹ + *-er*¹.] A later of stories; a story-teller; a historian.

The honeyed rhythm of this melodious storier.

J. Rogers Rees, Poetry of the Period (Bookworm, p. 65).

storify¹ (stō'ri-fi), v. t. [*< story*¹ + L. facere, make, do: see -fy.] To make or tell stories about.

storify² (stō'ri-fi), v. t.; pret. and pp. storified, ppr. storifying. [*< story*² + L. facere, make, do: see -fy.] To range, as beehives over and under one another, in the form of stories. Phin, Diet. Apiculture, p. 67. [Rare.]

storiologist (stō-ri-ol'ō-jist), n. [< storilog-y + -ist.] A student or expounder of popular tales and legends; one who is versed in folk-lore. [Recent.]

The resuscitation of the roe from its bones will recall to storiologists similar incidents in European and especially Scandinavian and Icelandic folk-lore.

N. and Q., 7th ser., I. 484, note.

storiology (stō-ri-ol'ō-jī), n. [*< E. story*¹ + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak: see -ology.] The science of folk-lore; the study of popular tales and legends. [Recent.]

For Chancer's direct source, it might be well worth while for students of comparative storiology who have leisure . . . to examine these and similar monkish collections of exempla [of the thirteenth century].

N. and Q., 7th ser., I. 485.

stork (stōrk), n. [< ME. stork, < AS. storc = D. MLG. LG. stork = OHG. storch, MHG. G. storch (also OHG. storc, MHG. G. dial. stork) = Icel. storkr = Sw. Dan. stork, a stork; cf. OBNlg. strūkū, Bulg. strūk, shtrūk = Serv. shtrk = ORuss. sterkū, Russ. sterkhū = Lith. starkus = Lett. stārks = Hung. cszterag = Albanian sterkjak, a stork. The relation of the Teut. to the Slav. and other forms is undetermined. Cf. Gr. τόρνος, a vulture, τόρνος ὑγρόφοις, a swan.] A large altricial gullatorial bird, of the family Ciconiidae and especially of the subfamily Ciconiinae (which see for technical characters). The stork is related to the herons, spoonbills, and ibises, but not very closely to the cranes. There are several species, found in nearly all temperate and tropical regions. They are tall and stately birds, equalling the cranes and larger herons in stature, but are readily distinguished by many technical characters. Storks are wading birds, frequenting the vicinity of water; but some of them become semi-domesticated, and often nest on buildings. Their fidelity and amiability are traditional. They feed chiefly on reptiles (as snakes and lizards), amphibians (as frogs), fishes, mollusks, and worms, but also sometimes capture small quadrupeds and birds. The best-known species is the common white stork of Europe, Ciconia alba; when adult, it is pure-white with black-tipped wings and reddish bill and feet; it is about 3½ feet long, and stands 4 feet high. The black stork of the same country is C. nigra, a rarer species. Various birds of different countries, technically storks, are known by other names, as adjutant, marabou, maguari, jabiru, shell-ibis, and wood-ibis. See these words, and cuts under adjutant-bird, Ciconiidae, Grallæ, jabiru, openbill, Pelargomorphæ, simbil, and Tantalus.—Black-necked stork, Xenorhynchus australis, of India and Australia, related to the American jabiru and African saddle-billed stork, the three being often placed in the genus Mycteria.—Black stork. See def.—Episcopal stork, Dissoura episcopus. See cut under Pelargomorphæ.—Giant stork, the adjutant-bird.—Hair-crested stork, Leptoptilus (Cranoplargus) javanicus, a small and quite distinct species of marabou, related to the adjutant, found in parts of India, Java, Sumatra, etc.—Maguari stork, Euzenura maguari. See maguari.—Marabou stork. See marabou, and cut under adjutant-bird.—Pouched stork. Same as adjutant-bird.—Saddle-billed stork, Ephippiorhynchus senegalensis. See the generic name.—White-bellied stork, Sphenorhynchus abdimi. See cut under simbil.—White stork. See def.

stork-billed (stōrk'bil'd), a. Having a bill like a stork's, as a kingfisher of the genus Pelargopsis. See cut under Pelargopsis.

stork's-bill (stōrks'bil), n. 1. A plant of the genus Erodium, particularly the heron's-bill, E. cicutarium (also called hemlock stork's-bill), a low bushy herb with pinnate leaves, a mostly Old World plant, abundantly naturalized in many parts of the United States, perhaps indigenous in the west. See alfilerilla.—2. A plant of the related genus Pelargonium, which includes the geraniums, etc., of gardens.

Flowering Plant of Stork's-bill (Erodium cicutarium). a., one of the carpels.

storm (stōrm), n. [< ME. storm, < AS. storm, storm = OS. MD. D. MLG. LG. storm = OHG. MHG. G. sturm = Icel. sturm = Sw. Dan. storm (not in Goth.; cf. It. sturno, a fight, It. dial. sturn = Pr. estorn = Orl. estour, estour (> E. *stour*³, a tumult, stir) = Ir. Gael. stuir = Bret. stourm, a storm, all < Teut.); perhaps with formative -m, from the root of *stir*¹ (√ stir, √ stor) or of L. sternere, strew: see *stir*¹, strew.]

1. A disturbance of the normal condition of the atmosphere, manifesting itself by winds of unusual direction or force, or by rain (often with lightning and thunder), snow, or hail, or by several of these phenomena in combination; a tempest: also used with reference to precipitation only, as in hail-storm, thunder-storm, snow-storm. A storm is usually associated with an area of low pressure, and its intensity or violence depends upon the steepness of the density-gradients which produce it. The terms area of low pressure, cyclone, cyclonic storm, and storm are often used interchangeably. In area of low pressure the primary reference is to the state of the barometer, in cyclone it is to the gyratory character of the atmospheric circulation, and in storm to the disturbance of the weather: but each term is extended to include the whole of the attendant phenomena.

And there arose a great storm of wind. Mark iv. 37.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm.

Shak., Lear, ill. 4. 29.

2. Specifically—(a) Technically, in nautical use, a wind of force 11 on the Beaufort scale, being that in which a man-of-war could carry only storm-staysails.

The wind suddenly shifted in a heavy rain squall from SSE. to W., and increased to a storm; at 12 noon the barometer read lowest, and the wind was blowing a storm.

Monthly Weather Review (1887), p. 40.

(b) A fall of snow. (c) A prolonged frost. [Prov. Eng.] Hence, figuratively—3. A tempestuous flight or descent of objects fiercely hurled: as, a storm of missiles.

No drizzling shower,

But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire.

Milton, P. L., vi. 546.

4. A violent disturbance or agitation of human society; a civil, political, or domestic commotion; a tumult; a clamor.

I will stir up in England some black storm

Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven or hell.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 349.

5. A destructive or overwhelming calamity; extremity of adversity or disaster.

Having passed many bitter brunts and blasts of vengeance, they dread no storms of Fortune.

Spenser, Shep. Cal., February, Embleme.

An old man, broken with the storms of state,

Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 2. 21.

6. A vehement or passionate outbreak, as of some emotion, or of the expression of such emotion: as, a storm of indignation; a storm of applause; a storm of hisses.

Mark'd you not how her sister

Began to scold and raise up such a storm?

Shak., T. of the S., i. 1. 177.

Her bosom shaken with a sudden storm of sighs.

Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

7. Milit., a violent assault on a fortified place or strong position; a dashing attempt by troops to capture a fortified place, as by scaling the walls or forcing the gates.

How by storm the walls were won,

Or how the victor sacked and burnt the town.

Dryden.

Cyclonic storm, one that accompanies or is caused by a cyclone.—Electric storm. See electric.—Eye of a storm, the calm region at the center of a violent cyclonic storm, where the clouds clear away and blue sky appears—occurring mostly in the tropics, but also experienced more or less perfectly in higher latitudes. This phenomenon is due to the circumstance that the winds immediately bordering the central area blow circularly around it, leaving a region of calm. The centrifugal force of the wind intensifies the diminution of pressure, and develops a tendency toward a gently descending current from above, and a consequent clearing of the sky.—High-area storm, a storm associated with an area of high pressure.—Low-area storm. Same as cyclonic storm.—Magnetic, revolving, etc., storm. See the adjectives.—Storm and stress [a translation of the German Sturm und Drang, alluding to a drama by Klinger, "Sturm und Drang"], a name given to a period in German literary history (about 1770 to 1790) influenced by a group of younger writers whose works were characterized by passion and reaction from the old methods; hence, a proverbial phrase for unrest or agitation.—To take by storm. (a) Milit., to carry by assault. See def. 7.

The recollection of the victory of Roanoke imparted to the Federals that assurance which is a great element of success; they knew that a battery could be taken by storm.

Comte de Paris, Civil War in America (trans.), I. 587.

(b) To captivate or carry away by surprising or delighting: as, the new singer has taken the town by storm.—Wind-storm, a storm with heavy wind, without precipitation. = Syn. 1. Tempest, etc. See *wind*².

storm (stôrm), v. [ME. stormen, sturmen. < AS. styrman = D. MLG. LG. stormen = OHG. sturman, MHG. G. stürmen = Teel. styrma = Sw. storma = Dan. storme, storm; cf. It. stormire, make a noise, stormeggiare, ring the storm-bell, throng together; from the noun.] I. intrans. 1. To blow with great force; also, to rain, hail, snow, or sleet, especially with violence; used impersonally: as, it storms.— 2. To fume; seold; rage; be in a violent agitation or passion; raise a tempest.

The Dolphin then, diserying Land (at last),
Stormes with himselfe for hauing made such haste.
Syluester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 5.

When . . . I see a gentleman lose his money with severity, I recognise in him all the great qualities of a philosopher. If he storms and invokes the gods, I lament that he is not placed at the head of a regiment.
Steele, Guardian, No. 174.

3. To move with violence; rush angrily or impetuously: as, he stormed about the room.

Bobby Wick stormed through the tents of his Company.
R. Kipling, Only a Subaltern.

II. trans. To attack and attempt to take possession of, as by scaling walls or forcing gates or breaches; assault: as, to storm a fortified town: often used figuratively.

With eager warmth they fight, ambitious all
Who first shall storm the breach, or mount the wall.
Addison, To the King.

storm-area (stôrm'ā-rē-ā), n. The area covered by a storm; the region within the closed isobars surrounding a center of low pressure. In the United States this region is generally an oval whose length is, on the average, nearly twice its width. Its longest diameter may be turned in any azimuth, but is most frequently directed to a point between north and north 60° east. Over the ocean storm-areas are generally nearly circular.

storm-beat, storm-beaten (stôrm'bēt, -bē'tn), a. Beaten or damaged by storms.

storm-belt (stôrm'belt), n. A belt of maximum storm-frequency. On charts containing a large number of storm-tracks the paths are found to be mostly divided into several well-defined groups whose loci form natural storm-belts. In the United States three storm-belts are distinguished: (1) that of storms which appear in the northwest British provinces, advance eastward to the lake region, and thence down the St. Lawrence valley; (2) that of storms which originate in the southwest near the Gulf of Mexico, and move northeastward to the lakes; (3) that of the West India hurricanes, which first move westerly, and then northeastward along the Atlantic coast. Over Europe three storm-belts may be distinguished: one lying across the northern Mediterranean, one across the North Sea and the Baltic, and one northeast and southwest off the coast of Norway and the British Isles. Also called storm-zone.

storm-bird (stôrm'bērd), n. 1. A petrel; one of the birds of the family Procellariidae, including the albatrosses, fulmars, etc., as well as those to which the name petrel is more commonly applied; specifically, the stormy petrel. See cut under petrel.—2. A bird that indicates or seems to foretell bad weather by its cries or other actions, as a storm-cock. Compare rain-bird.

storm-bound (stôrm'bound), a. Confined or delayed by storms; relating to hindrance by storms: as, we were storm-bound in port.

Weeks of storm-bound inactivity.
Carlyle, To John Carlyle, Feb. 11, 1830.

storm-card (stôrm'kârd), n. A transparent card containing lines to represent the wind-directions in all quarters of a cyclonic storm: devised by Reid as an aid to seamen in avoiding dangerous storms. When the card is drawn to suitable scale, and placed over the position of a vessel on a chart, so that the observed wind-direction and the same wind-direction on the card are brought into coincidence, the bearing of the center of the card from the point of observation indicates the direction of the center of the storm. Knowing the direction of the storm-center, its probable path can be laid down with considerable precision, and the best course for the vessel may then be determined. It is now known that a storm-card cannot universally be used to discover the bearing of a storm-center, for the angle between the wind and the radius varies in different latitudes, and is different at different distances from the center. Also called storm-circle, storm-compass.

storm-center (stôrm'sen'tēr), n. The position of lowest pressure in a cyclonic storm. In the typical case the wind throughout the storm-area blows spirally inward toward the storm-center, changing from a radial to an approximately circular path, and increasing in force as the center is approached. The center itself is an area of comparative calm, accompanied by a partial or complete clearing away of the clouds, and a mild temperature. (See eye of a storm, under storm.) Violent ocean storms frequently exemplify this typical description; but in land storms, which present irregularities of all kinds, these conditions are in general only partially realized.

storm-circle (stôrm'sēr'kl), n. Same as storm-card.

storm-cloud (stôrm'kloud), n. A cloud that brings or threatens storm.

storm-cock (stôrm'kok), n. 1. The fieldfare, Turdus pilaris; also, the mistlethrush, T. viscivorus.

Its song . . . It [the missel] begins . . . very early in the spring, often with the new year, in blowing showery weather, which makes the inhabitants of Hampshire call it the storm-cock. Pennant, Brit. Zool. (ed. 1776), l. 302.

2. The green woodpecker, Geococcyx viridis. [Prov. Eng. in all uses.] storm-compass (stôrm'kum'pās), n. Same as storm-card.

storm-cone (stôrm'kōn), n. A cone consisting of tarred canvas extended on a frame 3 feet high and 3 feet wide at the base, used either alone or along with the drum as a storm-signal. See cut under storm-signal. [Eng.] storm-current (stôrm'kur'ent), n. A surface sea-current produced by the force of the wind in a storm. Such a current frequently outruns its generating storm, and affords the first announcement thereof on a distant shore by increasing there the intensity of the usual current or by changing its set.

storm-door (stôrm'dōr), n. An outer or additional door for protection against inclement weather: in general used temporarily, for the winter only.

storm-drum (stôrm'drum), n. A cylinder of tarred canvas extended on a hoop 3 feet high and 3 feet wide, hoisted in conjunction with the cone as a storm-signal. See storm-signal. [Eng.] stormer (stôrm'mēr), n. [< storm + -er.] One who storms; specifically (milit.), a member of an assaulting party.

storm-finch (stôrm'finch), n. See finch, and cut under petrel.

storm-flag (stôrm'flag), n. See storm-signal.

stormful (stôrm'fūl), a. [< storm + -ful.] Abounding with storms.

They know what spirit brews the stormful day.
Collins, Ode on the Popular Superstitions of the Highlands.

stormfulness (stôrm'fūl-nes), n. The state of being stormful; stormy character or condition.

storm-glass (stôrm'glās), n. A hermetically sealed tube containing an alcoholic solution of camphor, together with crystals of nitrate of potash and ammonium chlorid: so named because an increase in the amount of the precipitate was supposed to indicate the approach of stormy weather. The changes in the amount of the precipitate are due solely to variations of temperature, and the instrument is simply a chemical thermometer.

storm-house (stôrm'hous), n. A temporary shelter for men employed in constructing or guarding railroads, or other works in exposed situations.

stormily (stôr'mi-li), adv. In a stormy manner; tempestuously.

storminess (stôr'mi-nes), n. The state of being stormy, or of being agitated or visited by violent winds; tempestuousness; impetuosity; violence.

storming-party (stôr'ming-pār'ti), n. Milit., the party to whom is assigned the duty of making the first assault in storming an enemy's works.

storm-kite (stôrm'kit), n. A device, on the principle of a kite, for carrying a rope from a ship to the shore in a storm.

stormless (stôrm'les), a. [< storm + -less.] Free from storms; without storm.

Our waking thoughts
Suffer a stormless shipwreck in the pools
Of sullen slumber. Tennyson, Harold, v. 1.

storm-pane (stôrm'pān), n. An extra square of glass fitted in a frame provided with clamps, used to fit over a window in an exposed building, as a lighthouse, in case of breakage.

storm-path (stôrm'pāth), n. Same as storm-track.

storm-pavement (stôrm'pāv'ment), n. In hydraulic engin., a sloping stone pavement lining the sea-face of a pier or breakwater. E. H. Knight.

storm-petrel (stôrm'pet'rel), n. A small blackish petrel, belonging to the genus Procellaria as now restricted, or to one of a few closely related genera, as Oceanites, Cymochorea, and Halocypella. The three best-known storm-petrels are Procellaria pelagica, Cymochorea leucorhoa, and Oceanites oceanicus. All are also called Mother Carey's chickens. See cut under petrel. The form stormy petrel is also common.

storm-proof (stôrm'prōf), a. Proof against storms or stress of weather.

storm-sail (stôrm'sāl), n. A sail made of very stout canvas, of smaller size than the corresponding sail in ordinary use, set in squally or heavy weather.

storm-signal (stôrm'sig'nal), n. A signal displayed on sea-coasts and lake-shores for indicating the expected prevalence of high winds or storms. For this purpose flags and lanterns are used in the United States, and a cone and drum in Great Britain. In the practice of the United States Weather Bureau, a red flag with black center is displayed by day when a violent storm is expected, and an additional pennant indicates the quadrant of the probable wind-direction, as follows: red pennant above flag, northeasterly winds; red pennant below flag, southeasterly winds; white pennant above flag, northwesterly winds; white pennant below flag, southwesterly winds. By night, a red light indicates easterly winds, and a white light above a red light indicates westerly winds. In the British system the inverted cone indicates a south gale, the upright cone a north gale, while the addition of the drum indicates that the winds are expected to be of marked violence. See weather-signal.

English Storm-signal, indicating dangerous winds from the south.

storm-stay (stôrm'stā), n. A stay on which a storm-sail is set.

storm-stayed (stôrm'stād), a. Prevented from proceeding on, or interrupted in the course of, a journey or voyage by storms or stress of weather.

storm-stone (stôrm'stōn), n. Same as thunder-bolt.

storm-tossed (stôrm'tost), a. Tossed about by storm or tempest: as, a storm-tossed bark; hence, agitated by conflicting passions or emotions: as, his storm-tossed spirit is at rest.

storm-track (stôrm'trak), n. The path traversed by the center of a cyclonic storm. North of the parallel of 30° storm-tracks almost invariably pursue an easterly course, having generally a northerly inclination. Within the tropics storm-tracks almost invariably tend westerly, generally with an inclination toward the pole; they have rarely, if ever, been traced nearer to the equator than 6°. Continuous storm-tracks are sometimes traced across North America, the Atlantic ocean, and Europe; but in general less than 12 per cent. of the storms leaving America reach the European coast.

storm-wind (stôrm'wind), n. The wind or blast of a storm or tempest; a hurricane; also, a wind that brings a storm.

Then comes, with an awful roar,
Gathering and sounding on,
The storm-wind from Labrador,
The wind Euroclydoo,
The storm-wind!
Longfellow, Midnight Mass.

storm-window (stôrm'win'dō), n. 1. An outer window to protect the inner from inclemency of the weather.—2. A window raised from the roof and slated above and on each side.

stormy (stôr'mi), a. [< ME. stormi, < AS. stormig (= D. Sw. stormig = MHG. sturmig, G. stürmig), < storm, storm; see storm.] 1. Characterized by storm or tempest, or by high winds; tempestuous; boisterous: as, a stormy season.

No cloudy show of stormy blustering weather
Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear.

Shak., Lucrece, l. 115.

His trumpet has often been heard by the neighbors, of a stormy night, mingling with the howling of the blast.
Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 448.

2. Characterized by violent disturbances or contentions; agitated; turbulent.

For love is yet the moste stormy lyf,
Right of hymself, that ever was begonne.

Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 778.

His [Warren Hastings's] administration, so eventful and stormy, closed in almost perfect quiet.

Macaulay, Warren Hastings.

3. Violent; passionate; easily roused to anger or strife.

The lives of all your loving complies
Lean on your health; the which, if you give o'er
To stormy passion, must perforce decay.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 1. 165.

The stormy chiefs of a desert but extensive domain.
Scott.

4. Associated with storms, as seen in them or supposed to presage them: specifically, in ornithology, noting certain petrels.—Stormy petrel. Same as storm-petrel. = Syn. 1. Windy, gusty, squally, blustering. See wind 2.

storm-zone (stôrm'zōn), n. Same as storm-belt. The regions between 40° and 70° latitude are the great storm zones of the world.

R. Hinman, Eclectic Physical Geography, p. 94.

stornello (stôr-nel'lo), n.; pl. stornelli (-li). [It.] A form of Italian folk-song, usually improvised and either sentimental or satirical.

The Tuscan and Umbrian stornello is much shorter [than the rispetto], consisting, indeed, of a hemistich naming some natural object which suggests the motive of the little poem. Encyc. Brit., XIX, 272.

Storthing (stōr'ting), n. [< Dan. Norw. storthing (= Icel. stórthing), great or high court, parliament, < stor (= Sw. stor = Icel. storr = AS. stōr, > E. stoor), great, + thing = Sw. ting = Icel. thing, assembly, meeting, = AS. thing; see *thing*².] The national parliament of Norway. It is composed of 114 members, who are chosen by indirect election. The Storthing is convened every year, and divides itself into an upper house (Lagthing) and a lower house (Odelsting). The former is composed of one fourth, and the latter of three fourths of the members. See Lagthing and Odelsting.

storvent. Preterit plural and past participle of Middle English sterren, die. See starve.

story¹ (stō'ri), n.; pl. stories (-riz). [< ME. storie, storye (cf. It. storia, < LL. storia), an aphetic form of istoric, historic, history; see history.] 1. A connected account or narration, oral or written, of events of the past; history. The prime virtue of Story is verity. Howell, Vocall Forrest, Pref.

She was well versed in the Greek and Roman story, and was not unskilled in that of France and England. Swift, Death of Stella.

There's themes enough in Caledonian story Would show the tragic muse in a her glory. Burns, Prologue for Mr. Sutherland's Benefit.

2. An account of an event or incident; a relation; a recital: as, stories of bravery. A lured man, to lere the [teach thee] . . . of gode Friday the storye. Piers Plowman (B), xiii, 447.

And tell sad stories of the death of kings; How some have been deposed, some slain in war. Shak., Rich. II, iii, 2, 156.

To make short of a long story. . . I have been bred up from childhood with great expectations. Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, vi.

3. In lit., a narrative, either true or fictitious, in prose or verse; a tale, written in a more or less imaginative style, of that which has happened or is supposed to have happened; specifically, a fictitious tale, shorter and less elaborate than a novel; a short romance; a folk-tale.

Call up him that left half-told The story of Cambuscan bold, Of Camball and of Algarsife, And who had Canace to wife. Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 110.

Voltaire has a curious essay to show that most of our best modern stories and plots originally belonged to the eastern nations. I. D'Israeli, Curios. of Lit., I, 174.

4. The facts or events in a given case considered in their sequence, whether related or not; the experience or career of an individual: as, the story of a founding; his is a sad story.

Weep with me, all you that read This little story. B. Jonson, Epitaph on Salathiel Pavy.

There was not a grave in the church-yard but had its story. Lovell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 206.

5. An anecdote: as, a speech abounding in good stories. I will go yet further, and affirm that the success of a story very often depends upon the make of the body, and formation of the features, of him who relates it. Steele, Guardian, No. 42.

Sometimes I recorded a story, a jest, or a pun for consideration. O. W. Holmes, The Atlantic, LXVI, 666.

6. A report; an account; a statement; anything told: often used slightly: as, according to his story, he did wonders. Fal. You confess, then, you picked my pocket? Prince. It appears so by the story. Shak., I Hen. IV., iii, 3, 191.

All for a slanderous story, that cost me many a tear. Tennyson, The Grandmother.

7. A falsehood; a lie; a fib. [Colloq. and euphemistic.] I wrote the lines; . . . owned them; he told stories. (Signed) Thomas Ingoldsby. Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I, 116, note.

8. The plot or intrigue of a novel or drama: as, many persons read a novel, or are interested in a play, only for the story. It is thought clever to write a novel with no story at all, or at least with a very dull one. R. L. Stevenson, A Gossip on Romance.

9†. A scene from history, legend, or romance, depicted by means of painting, sculpture, needlework, or other art of design. The walls also of all the body of the Chirche, from the pylers to the Roof, be pointyd with stories from the begynnyng of the world. Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 49.

To erect greate Chapells, . . . to paint faire stories, and to make rich ornaments. Guevara, Letters (tr. by Hellowes, 1577), p. 341.

There's his chamber, . . . 'tis painted about with the story of the Irodigal, fresh and new. Shak., M. W. of W., iv, 5, 8.

Blind story, a pointless tale.—To be in a or one story†, to be in the same story†, to agree in testimony; give the same account. So I find they are all in a story. Sheridan, The Duenna, II, 3.

= Syn. 1. Relation, Narration, etc. (see account); record, chronicle, annals.—2. Anecdote, Story. See anecdote—3. Tale, fiction, fable, tradition, legend.—4. Memoir, life, biography.

story¹ (stō'ri), v.; pret. and pp. storied, ppr. storying. [< *story*¹, n. Cf. history, n.] I. trans. 1. To tell or describe in historical relation; make the subject of a narrative, tale, or legend; relate. Pigmies (those diminutive people, or sort of apes or satyrs, so much resembling the little men storied under that name). Evelyn, True Religion, I, 261.

What the sage poets, taught by the heavenly Muse, Storied of old in high immortal verse, Of dire chimeras, and enchanted isles. Milton, Comus, l. 516.

2. To ornament with sculptured or painted scenes from history or legend. Compare *storied*². II. intrans. To relate; narrate. Cupid, if storying Legends tell aright, Once framed a rich Elixir of Delight. Coleridge, Composition of a Kiss.

story² (stō'ri), n. [Sometimes storey, early mod. E. storie, stourie; < ME. story, prob. < OF. estorce*, a building, a thing built, < estorce, fem. pp. of estorer, build, < L. instaurare, erect, build, etc.: see *store*³, v.] 1†. A building; an edifice. Hii [they] bygonne her heyte tounes strengthy [strengthen] vaste aboute, Her castles & stories, that hii myghte be ynne in doute [danger]. Rob. of Gloucester, p. 181.

2. A stage or floor of a building; hence, a subdivision of the height of a house; a set of rooms on the same level or floor. A story comprehends the distance from one floor to another: as, a story of nine, twelve, or sixteen feet elevation. They founde the kyng in his pallaice sittynge vpon a store or stourie made of the leaves of date trees wrought after a curious device lyke a certeyne kynde of matter. R. Eden, tr. of Antonio Pigafetta (First Books on America, [ed. Archer, p. 257]).

Upon the ground storey a fair gallery, open, upon pillars; and upon the third storey likewise an open gallery upon pillars, to take the prospect and freshness of the garden. Bacon, Building (ed. 1887).

Attic story. See *attic*², 1.—Mezzanine story. Same as entresol.—The upper story, the brain; the wits. [Familiar and ludicrous.] He's a good sort o' man, for all he's not overburthen'd i' th' upper storey. George Eliot, Amos Burton, I.

story-book (stō'ri-bōk), n. A book containing one or more stories or tales; a printed collection of short tales. If you want to make presents of story-books to children, his [Richter's] are the best you can now get. Ruskín, Elements of Drawing, App.

story-post (stō'ri-pōst), n. In building, an upright post supporting a beam on which rests a floor or a wall, as when the whole front of a ground floor is glazed.

story-rod (stō'ri-rōd), n. A wooden strip used in setting up a staircase. It is equal in height to the staircase, and is divided according to the number of stairs.

story-teller (stō'ri-tel'ler), n. 1. One who tells stories, true or fictitious, whether orally or in writing. Specifically—(a) One whose calling is the recitation of tales in public: as, the story-tellers of Arabia. "Master," said he [Achmet], "I know many stories, such as the story-tellers relate in the coffee-houses of Cairo." B. Taylor, Journey to Central Africa, xix.

(b) One given to relating anecdotes: as, a good story-teller at a dinner-table. Good company will be no longer pestered with dull, dry, tedious story-tellers. Swift, Polite Conversation, Int.

(c) One who tells falsehoods; a fibber. [Colloq. and euphemistic.] Becky gave her brother-in-law a bottle of white wine, some that Rawdon had brought with him from France, . . . the little story-teller said. Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xlv.

story-telling (stō'ri-tel'ing), n. 1. The act or art of relating stories, true or fictitious. Story-telling . . . is not perfect without proper gesticulations of the body, which naturally attend such merry emotions of the mind. Steele, Guardian, No. 42.

2. The telling of fibs; lying. [Colloq. and euphemistic.] story-writer (stō'ri-rī'ter), n. 1. A writer of stories. The story-writer's and play-writer's danger is that they will get their characters mixed, and make A say what B ought to have said. O. W. Holmes, Atlantic Monthly, LXVI, 664.

2†. A historian; a chronicler.

Rathumus the storywriter, and Semellius the scribe, . . . and the judges. I Ead. II, 17.

stosh (stosh), n. [Origin obscure.] Fish-offal; gurry; especially, a thick paste made by grinding slivers in a bait-mill, and used as toll-bait; elum; pomace.

stot¹ (stot), n. [Early mod. E. also stotte; < ME. stot, stott, stotte, a horse, a bullock; cf. Icel. stútr, a bull, the butt-end of a horn, a stumpy thing, = Sw. stut, a bullock, also a blow, bang, dial. a young ox, a young man, = Norw. stut, a bullock, also an ox-horn, = Dan. stut, a bullock; prob. lit. 'pusher,' from the root of D. stooten = G. stossen, push, thrust, strike, = Icel. stauta, strike, beat, stunter, = Sw. stöta = Dan. støde, strike, push, thrust, = Goth. stutan, strike. Cf. stoot, *stote*¹.] 1†. A horse; a stallion. This reve sat upon a ful good stot, That was al pomely grey and highte Scot. Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 615.

2. A young ox; a steer. And Grace gaue Pieres of his goodnesse foure stottis, Al that his oxen cryed they to harve after. Piers Plowman (B), xix, 262.

To procure restitution in integrum of every stirk and stot that the chief . . . and his clan had stolen since the days of Malcolm Canmore. Scott, Waverley, xv.

The woman would work — ay, and get up at any hour; and the strength of a stot she had. W. Black, Harper's Mag., LXXVI, 889.

3. A weasel; a stoat. See ent under stoat. Lamb, wolf, fox, leopard, minx, stot, miniver. Middleton, Triumphs of Love and Antiquity.

[The name was formerly applied in contempt to a human being. "Nay, olde stot, that is not myn entente," Quod this somonour, "for to repent me." Chaucer, Friar's Tale, l. 332.]

stot² (stot), v. i.; pret. and pp. stotted, ppr. stotting. [Formerly stote; < ME. stoten; = D. stotten, push, etc.: see *stot*¹, and cf. stotter, stut, *stutter*¹.] 1. To stumble; walk irregularly; bonnet in walking. Compare stoit. [Prov. Eng.] They stotted along side by side. Miss Ferrier, Inheritance, ii, 367.

2. To rebound, as a ball. [Prov. Eng.] stotay, v. i. [ME. stotayen, stotaien, < OF. estoteier, estotier, estoutoier, etc., be thrown into disorder, tr. throw into disorder, maltreat (< estout, estot, etc., rash, bold, stout; see *stout*¹), but in sense confused with stoten, stumble; see *stot*².] To stumble; stagger. Than he stotays for made, and alle his strenghe faylez, Lokes up to the lyfte, and alle his lyre chaunges! Downne he sweya fulle swythe, and in a swoone fallys! Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 4272.

stote¹, n. See stoat. stote², v. i. See *stot*² and *stut*¹.

stoter, v. i. An obsolete form of stotter. stoteyet, n. [ME., < OF. estotie, estoutie, estutic, boldness, rashness, < estout, estot, bold, stout; see *stout*¹.] Cunning; stratagem. Hade he had his ost he wold [haue] a-saide there To haue with stoteye & strengthe stontli hire wonne. William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4985.

stotter (stot'er), v. [< ME. stoteren; freq. of *stot*². Cf. *stutter*¹.] I. intrans. To stumble. [Prov. Eng.] II. trans. To affect with staggers. He'd tel what bullock's fate was tragick So right, some thought he dealt in magick; And as well knew, by wisdom outward, What ox must fall, or sheep be stotered. D'Urfeys, Colin's Walk, i. (Davies.)

stouk, n. An obsolete or dialectal form of stook. stound¹ (stound), n. [< ME. stounde, stund, stunt, stunde, < AS. stund, a time, space of time, season, = OS. stunda = OFries. stunde, stoude = MD. stoude, a time, while, moment, D. stond, a moment, = MLG. stunde, stunt, LG. stunde = OHG. stunta, stunt, MHG. stunde, a time, while, hour, G. stunde, an hour, = Icel. Sw. Dan. stund, a time, while, hour, moment; perhaps orig. 'a point of resting or standing,' and akin to stand.] A time; a short time; a while; a moment; an instant. Now lat ns synte of Troylus a stounde. Chaucer, Troilus, i, 1086.

See death is heer & yonder in one stound. Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 129.

Upon a stound, in a moment. stound² (stound), v. i. [Also stoun; = Icel. stynja = Dan. stønne = D. stenen = LG. stenen, stōnen, > G. stöhnen, groan. Cf. *stound*², n.] 1. To ache; smart. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To long;

pine: as, the cows stound for grass. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.]

stound², n. [ME.: see stound², v.] Sorrow; grief; longing.

To putte away the stoundes stronge,
Which in me listen alle to longe.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 2639.

stound³ (stound), v. t. [A var. of stun¹, as astound of astun, astun: see stun¹, stony², astun, astun, etc.] 1. To stun as with strokes; beat heavily: as, to stound the ears with the strokes of a bell. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To astound; amaze.

Your wrath, weak boy? Tremble at mine unless Retraction follow close upon the heels
Of that late stounding insult.
Keats, Otho the Great, iv. 2. 95.

stound³ (stound), n. [A var. of stun¹, v.] 1. A stunning blow or stroke; the force of a blow.

Like to a mazed atear,
That yet of mortall stroke the stound doth here.
Spenser, F. Q., IV. vi. 37.

2. Astonishment; amazement; bewilderment.

Thus we stood as in a stound,
And wet with tears, like dew, the ground.
Gay, Shepherd's Week, Prol., l. 23.

stound⁴ (stound). An obsolete past participle of stun¹. Spenser.

stound⁵ (stound), n. [A dial. var. of stond, stund: see stund, n.] A vessel to contain small beer. [Prov. Eng.]

stoundmeal¹ (stound'mel), adv. [A ME. stoundmele, stoundmele, < AS. stundmælum, at times, < stund, time, space of time (see stound¹), + mælum, dat. pl. of mæl, a time: see meal², and cf. dropmeal, flockmeal, piecmeal, thousandmeal, etc.] At times; at intervals; from moment to moment: also used adjectively.

The lyl of love is fulle contrarie,
Which stoundemele can ofte varie.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 2304.

This wynde that moore and moore
Thus stoundemele enereseth in my face.
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 674.

stoup. See stoop¹, stoop², stoop⁴.

stour¹, a. See stour¹.

stour², v. and n. See stour².

stour³ (stour or stür), n. [Early mod. E. also stoure, Se. also sture; < ME. stour, store, stor, stur, < OF. estor, estour (also rarely estorme, also estormie, estourmie, esturnie), a tumult, conflict, assault, shock, battle, = Pr. estor = It. stormo, dial. sturm, tumult, noise, bustle, throng, troop, band, < OHG. sturm, storm, battle, = E. storm: see storm. For the loss of the final m in OF., cf. OF. tour, turn, jour, day, etc., with loss of final n (see turn, turn².)] 1. Tumult; conflict; a warlike encounter; shock of arms; battle.

Men sen al day and reden ek in storyes
That after sharpe stoures ben oft victorie.
Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1066.

His horsemen they raid sturdily,
And stude about him in the stoure.
Raid of the Redswire (Child's Ballads, VI. 135).

2†. A fit; a paroxysm.

Which sudden fitt, and halfe extatick stoure,
When the two fearful women saw, they grew Greatly confusd in behavoure.
Spenser, F. Q., III. iii. 50.

3†. Encounter; time or place of meeting.

Maidens blush when they kiss men;
So did Phillis at that stoure;
Her face was like the rose flower.
Greene, The Shepherd's Ode (trans.).

stour⁴ (stour), n. [Also stower; < ME. stoure, stourre, < Icel. staurr, a stake, pale; perhaps akin to Gr. stavros, a stake, cross: see steer¹ and stauris.] 1. A stake.

And if he wille no te do soo, I salle late hym witt that 3e salle sende a grete powere to his citee, and bryne it up stikke and stourre.
MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 41. (Hallivell.)

2. A round of a ladder.—3. A stave in the side of a wagon. Hallivell.—4. A long pole by which barges are propelled against the stream. Also called poj. [Prov. Eng. in all uses.]

Stourbridge clay. A refractory clay from Stourbridge, in Worcestershire, England, occurring in the coal-measures, extensively worked for the manufacture of fire-brick and crucibles.

stoured (stoured), a. [Early mod. E. stowered; < stour⁴ + -ed².] Staked. [Prov. Eng.]

Standing together at a comon watering place ther called Hedgedyke, lately stowered for call to drynke at.
Archæologia, XXVII. 23. (Hallivell.)

stourness¹, stoury. Same as stourness, stoury.

stout¹ (stout), a. and n. [ME. stout, stoutte, sometimes stought; < OF. stout, estout, estolt, estot, estut, F. dial. stout, proud, = Pr. estout, stout, bold, valiant, rash, impetuous, violent, < MD. stolt, D. stout, stout, bold, rash, also stupid (influenced by It. stolto, silly, < L. stultus: see stultify), = AS. stolt = OFries. stult = MLG. LG. stolt = OHG. MHG. G. stolz, proud (MHG. also foolish, due to the influence of the It. word), = Icel. stoltr = Sw. Dan. stolt, proud; perhaps akin to stilt. Hence ult. (< OF.) ME. stotay, stoteye.] 1. a. 1. Bold; valiant; brave; daring.

So sterne he was & stoute & swilche str'okes lent;
Was non so stif stelen wele that with-stod his wepen.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3335.

Verily Christian did here play the man, and showed himself as stout as Hercules could, had he been here.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 286.

Have you a stout heart? Nerves fit for aliding panels and tapestry?
Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, xx.

2†. Proud; haughty.

I was hig of herte and stoute,
And in my clothing wondre gay.
Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 36.
As stout and proud as he were lord of all.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., i. 1. 187.

3. Firm; resolute; persistent; stubborn.

He was a great Becketist—viz, a stout opposer of Regal Power over Spiritual Persons.
Fuller, Worthies, Wilts, II. 467.

Shakespeare was Article XL of stout old Doctor Portman's creed.
Thackeray, Pendennis, ix.

4. Hardy; vigorous; lusty; sturdy.

The people of this part of Candia are stout men, and drive a great coasting trade round the island in small boats, by carrying wood, corn, and other merchandizes.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. l. 241.

Seven brow fellows, stout and able
To serve their king and country weel.
Burns, Dedication to G. Hamilton.

5. Firm; sound; stanch; strong.

The stoutest vessel to the storm gave way.
Dryden, Æneid, l. 170.

6. Solid; substantial.

With blithe air of open fellowship,
Brought from the cupboard wine and stouter cheer.
Wordsworth, Excursion, ii.

7. Bulky in figure; thick-set; corpulent.

Mrs. Reed was rather a stout woman; but . . . she ran nimbly up the stair.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, iv. =Syn. 1. Valorous, manful, gallant.—4 and 5. Stalwart, Sturdy, etc. See robust.

II. n. Strong ale or beer of any sort; hence, since the introduction of porter, porter of extra strength: as, Dublin stout.

The waiter's hands, that reach
To each his perfect pint of stout.
Tennyson, Will Waterproof.

stout¹ (stout), v. [ME. stouten; < stout¹, a.] 1. intrans. 1†. To be bold or defiant.

Lewed man, thou shalt cursyng doute,
And to thy prest thou shalt nat stoute.
MS. Harl. 1701, f. 72. (Hallivell.)

2. To persist; endure: with an impersonal it. [Prov. Eng.]

We stouted it out and lived.
Annals of Phila. and Penn., I. 385.

II.† trans. To dare; defy; resist.

For no man ful comunly
Besecheth a wyfe of foly,
But there the wyfe ys aboute
The gode man for to stoute.
MS. Harl. 1701, f. 20. (Hallivell.)

stout² (stout), n. [Also stut; < ME. stout, stut, < AS. stūt, a gnat.] 1. A gnat.—2. A gadfly. [Prov. Eng. in both uses.]—3†. A firefly or miller.

Pirawsta, a fire-fly; . . . some call it a candle-flie, a stout, a miller-fowle, or bishop.
Florio.

stout-dart (stout'därt), n. A British noctuid moth, Agrotis rorida.

stouten (stout'n), v. t. [A var. of stout¹ + -en¹.] To make stout; strengthen. [Rare.]

The pronounced realist is a useful fellow-creature, but so also the pronounced idealist—stouten his work though you well may with a tincture of modern reality.
R. W. Gilder, New Princeton Rev., IV. 12.

stouth (stouth), n. [ME. stouth, stealth, < Icel. stuldr = Sw. stöld, stealth: see stealth.] Theft; stealth; also, a clandestine transaction. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

Sum rownyas till his fallow thaim betwene, Hys mery stouth and pastyme lait zistrene.
Gavin Douglas, Æneid, xii., Prol., l. 212.

stouth-and-routh (stouth-and-routh'), n. [A Sc. riming formula, in which one of the words appears to be wrenched, as usual, from its lit. meaning: prob. orig. as if 'plunder and plenty,' i. e. much property acquired and inherited: stouth, theft, stealth (cf. stouthrief, robbery with violence, also provision, furniture);

routh, plenty; see routh³.] Plenty; abundance. [Scotch.]

It's easy for your honour and the like o' you gentle folks to say sae, that hac stouth-and-routh, and fire and fending, and meat and clath, and sit dry and canny by the fireside.
Scott, Antiquary, xi.

stout-hearted (stout'här'ted), a. Having a stout or brave heart; also, obstinate.

The stouthearted are spoiled; they have aleep their sleep.
Pa. lxxvi. 5.

stout-heartedness (stout'här'ted-nes), n. The quality of being stout-hearted; courage; especially, moral courage.

If any one wants to see what German stout-heartedness, rectitude, and hard work could do for Syria, he had better go and live for a while in the German colony at Haifa.
Contemporary Rec., LIV. 367.

stouthrief (stouth'rëf), n. [Also corruptly stouthrie; < stouth + rief, Se. rief, reif, robbery: see rief.] In Scots law, theft accompanied by violence; robbery; burglary. The term is usually applied in cases in which robbery is committed within a dwelling-house.

stoutly (stout'li), adv. [ME. stoutly; < stout + -ly².] In a stout or sturdy manner; with boldness, stanchness, or resolution.

stoutness (stout'nes), n. [ME. stoutnes; < stout + -ness.] The state or quality of being stout, in any sense.

stove¹ (stöv), n. [Early mod. E. also stoore, rarely stouph; not found in ME. and rare in AS. (see below); < MD. stove, a heated room, bath-room, also (with dim. stofken) a foot-stove used by women, later D. stooft, a stove, furnace, = MLG. stove, a heated room, bath-room, in gen. a room, LG. stove, usually stave, a bath-room, in gen. a room, = OHG. stuba, stupā, MHG. stube, a heated room, a bath-room, G. stube, a room (cf. OF. esture, F. étuve = Pr. estuba = Sp. Pg. estufa = It. stufa, a bath-room, hothouse, < OHG.), = AS. stofa, a bath-room (glossing L. balneum), = Icel. stofu, stufa, a bath-room with a stove, = Sw. stuga = Dan. stue, a room; cf. OBulg. istūba, izba, a tent, Bulg. a hut, cellar, = Sloven. izba, jezba, a room, = Serv. izba, a room, = Bohem. izba, izba = Pol. izba, a bath-room, = Russ. istuba, izba, a hut, dial. kitchen, = Albanian isbe, a cellar, = Rum. izbe, a stove, = Turk. izbe, a cellar, = OPruss. stubo = Lith. stuba = Lett. istaba = Finn. tupa = Hung. szoba, a bath-room; all prob. < OHG. or G. The orig. sense appears to have been 'a heated room.' The application of the name to a means of heating is comparatively recent. From the Teut., through OF., are derived E. steer¹ and stee³, which are thus doublets of stove¹.] 1. A room, chamber, or house artificially warmed. [Obsolete except in the specific uses (a), (b), below.]

When a certain Frenchman came to visit Melanchthon he found him in his stove, with one hand dandling his child in the swaddling clouts and the other holding a book and reading it.
Fuller.

When you have taken Care of your Horse, you come whole into the Stove, Boots, Baggage, dirt and all, for that is a comon Room for all Corners.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquia of Erasmus, I. 288.

Specifically—(a) In hort., a glazed and artificially heated building for the culture of tender plants: the same as a greenhouse or hothouse, except that the stove maintains a higher temperature—not lower than 60° F. See greenhouse, hothouse, and dry-stove. [Eng.] (b) A drying-chamber, as for plants, extracts, conserves, etc.; also, a highly heated drying-room, used in various manufactures.

They are suntimes enforced to rype and dry them [grain] in their stoves and hottes houses.
R. Eden, tr. of Sebastian Munster (First Books on America, [ed. Arber, p. 292]).

2†. A place for taking either liquid or vapor baths; a bath-house or bath-room.

In that village there was a Stove, into which the captain went in the morning, requesting M. Garrard to go also to the same to wash himself.
Hakluyt's Voyages, I. 423.

There are in Fez a hundred bath-stoves well built, with four Halls in each, and certain Galleries without, in which they put off their clothes.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 617.

3. A closed or partly closed vessel or receiver in which fuel is burned, the radiated heat being utilized for warming a room or for cooking. Stoves are made of cast-iron and sheet-iron, and also of earthenware in the form of tiles cemented together, of plaster held together by a frame of wire, or the like, and of masonry solidly put together. The stoves of tiles, masonry, etc., radiate less heat than iron stoves, but when heated remain hot for a long time. Stoves are divided into the two main classes of cooking-stoves and warming-stoves, and are also classified according to the fuel used, as wood-stoves, gas-stoves, etc. There are many varieties, named according to their use, as the car-stove, camp-stove, foot-stove, tinmen's stove, etc., or according to some attachment, as a water-back stove. Warming-stoves range from the open fireplace or Franklin stove to magazine and base-burning fireplaces and heaters for warming more than one room, which are more properly furnaces. The word was first used in English in this sense as applied to foot-stoves. See foot-stove, oil-stove, gas-stove.

The sempstress speeds to change with red-tipt nose;
The Belgian stove beneath her footstool glows.

Gay, Trivia, ii. 338.

4. In ceram., a pottery-kiln.—5. In a furnace, the oven in which the blast is heated.—6. In bookbinding, an apparatus with which the finisher heats his tools, formerly made to burn charcoal, but latterly gas.—Air-tight stove. See air-tight.—Bark-stove. Same as bark-bed.—Base-burning stove. See base-burning.—Camp-stove, a small sheet-iron stove, light and portable, used for both cooking and heating, as in a tent.—Cooking-stove, a stove arranged especially for cooking, having ovens, and often a water-back, exposed to the heat of the fire, and pot-holes above the fire.—Franklin stove, a form of open stove invented by Benjamin Franklin in the early part of his life, and called by him "the Pennsylvania fireplace." The name is now given (n) to any open stove with or without doors that open widely, and with andirons or a grate similar to those of an ordinary fireplace; (b) to a kind of fireplace with back and sides of ironwork and some arrangement for heating the air in chambers which communicate with the room.—Norwegian stove, a chamber the walls of which are made as perfect non-conductors of heat as possible, used for cooking by enabling a pot or saucepan full of boiling water, placed in it, to retain its heat for a great length of time, thus stewing the meat, etc., which it may contain. The same chamber may be used as a refrigerator, as it keeps ice unmelted for a long time.—Rotary stove. See rotary oven, under oven.

stove¹ (stōv), v. t.; pret. and pp. stoved, ppr. storing. [< stove¹, n. Cf. stew¹, v., stive³, v.]
1. To heat in a stove or heated room; expose to moderate heat in a vessel. Specifically—(a) To keep warm in a house or room by artificial heat: as, to stove orange-trees.

For December and January, and the latter part of November, you must take such things as are green all winter: . . . lemon-trees, and myrtles, if they be stoved.

Bacon, Gardens (ed. 1887).

(b) To heat in or as in a stove: as, to stove leathers; to stove printed fabrics (to fix the color); to stove ropes (to make them pliable); to stove timber.

Light upon some Dutchmen, with whom we had good discourse touching stoving, and making of cables.

Pepys, Diary, II. 210.

And in 1726, when the ship was surveyed by the Master Shipwrights of Portsmouth and Deptford, with the view to her being rebuilt, it was found that the stoved planks were fresher and tougher, and appeared to have fewer defects, than those which had been charred, many of the latter being found rotten. Fincham, Ship-building, iii. 32.

(c) In vinegar-manuf., to expose (malt-wash, etc.) in casks to artificial heat in a close room, in order to induce acetous fermentation. (d) In ceram., to expose to a low heat. See pottery, porcelain, and kiln. (e) To cook in a close vessel; stew. [Scotch or prov. Eng.]

The supper was simple enough. There were omelettes and cheese on the table, a large dish of stoved potatoes steaming and savory, and a jug of milk.

Mrs. Oliphant, Joyce, v.

2†. To shut up, as in a stove; inclose; confine.

A naked or stov'd fire, pent up within the house without any exit or succession of external fresh and unexhausted vital air, must needs be noxious and pernicious.

Evelyn, Advertisement to Quintenye. (Richardson.)

Fighting cocks . . . must then be stoved, which meant putting them in deep baskets filled with straw, covering them with straw, and shutting down the lids.

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 302.

stove² (stōv). Preterit and past participle of stove.

stove-coal (stōv'kōl), n. Coal of either of two sizes: (a) large stove, or No. 3, which passes through a 2½- to 2-inch mesh, and over a 1½- to 1¼-inch mesh, and (b) small stove, known as No. 4, which passes through a 1½- to 1¼-inch mesh, and over a 1½- to 1-inch mesh. Penn. Surv. Gloss.

stove-drum (stōv'drum), n. A chamber over a stove in which the heated gases are received before being discharged into the chimney, in order that their heat may be utilized.

stove-glass (stōv'glās), n. See glass.

stove-hearth (stōv'hārth), n. The horizontal shelf or ledge which in some stoves lies outside and in front of the grate containing the fuel. [New Eng.] stove-house (stōv'hous), n. Same as stove¹, 1. (a) Same as stove¹, 1 (a). (b) In the preparation of furs, a house or chamber in which the skins are dried.

The stove-house is full of iron racks upon which are placed iron rods, which receive the skins. Ure, Diet., IV. 380.

stove-jack (stōv'jak), n. Same as smoke-jack, 2.

stovepipe (stōv'pīp), n. 1. A metal pipe for conducting smoke, gases, etc., from a stove to a chimney-flue.—2. Same as stovepipe hat. [Colloq., U. S.]—Stovepipe hat. Same as chimney-pot hat (which see, under hat). [Colloq., U. S.]

He bore himself like an ancient prophet, and would have looked like one only for his black face and a rusty stove-pipe hat. Harper's Mag., LXXX. 391.

stovepiping (stōv'pī'pīng), n. [< stovepipe + -ing.] Tubing for a stovepipe.

A piece of stove-piping about 18 in. long.

Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 102.

stove-plant (stōv'plant), n. A plant cultivated in a stove. See stove¹, 1 (a).

stove-plate (stōv'plāt), n. 1. One of the plates or lids serving to cover the apertures in the top of a cooking-stove; a griddle.—2. Same as stove-hearth. Trans. Amer. Philol. Ass., XVII., App., p. xii. [Pennsylvania.]

stove-polish (stōv'pol'ish), n. See polish¹.

stover¹ (stō'vēr), n. [< ME. stover, < OF. estover, estovoir, necessities, < estover, estoreir, estovoir, estovoir, estovoir, astovoir, istovoir, entovoir, stovoir, used impers., it is necessary; origin unknown.] Fodder and provision of all sorts for cattle. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Where live nibbling sheep,

And flat meads thatch'd with stover, them to keep.

Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 63.

stover²† (stō'vēr), v. i. [Origin obscure.] To bristle up; stiffen. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Beard, be confin'd to neatness, that no hair

May stover up to prick my mistress' lip.

Ford, Love's Sacrifice, ii. 1.

stove-truck (stōv'truk), n. 1. In a cannon-foundry, a truck on which ordnance is moved.—2. A truck for moving heavy stoves. It is run under the stove, when, by means of a lever, its platform is raised, and lifts the stove. The lever serves as a handle for guiding the truck. E. H. Knight.

stow¹ (stō), v. t. [< ME. stowen, stauen, stowen, < AS. stowigan, stow, = MD. stowen, stauen, D. stuwen = MLG. stowen, stowen, LG. stauen, bring to a stand, hinder, = OHG. stowan, stowan, stuwon, stuan, stuen, stuwon, MHG. stowen, G. stauen, bring to a halt, hem in, stop, pack, = Sw. stufa = Dan. stave, stow, pack (< LG. ?); lit. 'place,' 'put in place,' < stow, a place, = OFries. sto, a place, = *Icel. stō, in eld-stō, a fireplace, = Lith. stowa, a place where one stands; prob. from the root of stand (< stā): see stand, stave. But the continental forms (to which is due stow²) may not be connected with the AS. verb, which is rare. Cf. bestow. See also stew².]
1. To put in a suitable or convenient place or position; put in a place aside or out of the way; lay up; put up; pack; especially, to pack in a convenient form: as, to stow bags, bales, or casks in a ship's hold; to stow sheaves.

He radde religion here rucle to holde,
"Leste the kyng and hus conseil zoure commes a-peyre,
And be stywardes of zoure stedes til ze be stewed betere."

Piers Plowman (C), vi. 146.

Foul thief, where hast thou stow'd my daughter?
Shak., Othello, i. 2. 62.

We pointed to the white rolls of stowed hammocks in the nettings.

J. W. Palmer, Up and Down the Irrawaddi, p. 219.

2. To accumulate or compactly arrange anything in; fill by packing closely: as, to stow a box or the hold of a ship.

The tythe o' what ye waste at cartea

Wad stow'd his pantry!

Burns, To W. Simpson.

3. To contain; hold.
Shall thy black bark these guilty spirits stow
That kill themselves for love?

Fletcher, Mad Lover, iv. 1.

There was an English ship then in the roads, whereof one Mr. Mariot was master; he entertained as many as his ship could stow. Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 293.

4. To furl or roll up, as a sail.—5. In mining, to fill up (vacant spaces) with stowing. A mine is worked by the method of stowing when all the valuable substance—ore, or coal, or whatever it may be—is taken out, and the vacant space packed full of deads or refuse, either that furnished by the workings themselves, or stuff brought from the surface, or both together.
6†. To bestow; give; grant.

If thou dost flow

In thy frank gulfes, & thy golde freely stow,

The principall will make thy pennance ebbe.

Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 81.

7†. To intrust; commit; give in charge.
Stovyne or warney, or besettyne, as men done moneye or chaifir. Comimuto.

Pronpt. Parv., p. 478.

To stow down. (a) To put in the hold of a vessel; stow away; specifically, to run (oil) into the casks of a whaler. (b) To furnish as the stowdown: as, the whale stowed down 75 barrels of oil.

stow² (stō), v. [ME. stowen; see stow¹.] I. trans. 1†. To resist; hinder; stop.

ziff any man stow me this nyth,

I xal hym geve a dedly wounde.

Cowentry Mysteries, p. 217. (Halliuell.)

2. To put out of sight or hearing; be silent about. [Slang.]

Now if you'll stow all that gammon and speak common-sense for three minutes, I'll tell you my mind right away.

Whyte Melodie, White Rose, II. xx.

II.† intrans. To make resistance; resist.

Thay stekede steds in stoure with stelene wapynes,

And alle stowede wyth strengthe that stode thesme agaynes!

Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), I. 1489.

stow³ (stou), v. t. [Cf. LG. stawe, stof, a remnant, stuf, blunt, stumpy.] To cut off; crop; lop. [Prov. Eng. and Scotl.]

If ever any body should affront his kinsman, . . . he would stow his luga out of his head, were he the best man in Glasgow.

Scott, Rob Roy, xxvii.

stow⁴ (stō), n. [A dial. var. of stow¹.] In tin-plate manuf., the structure which contains the furnace and the series of five pots. [Prov. Eng.] stow⁴ (stō), v. t. [A dial. var. of stow¹.] To dry in an oven. [Prov. Eng.] stowage (stō'āj), n. [< stow¹ + -age.] 1. The act or operation of stowing.

Coasting vessels, in the frequent hurry and bustle attendant upon taking in or discharging cargo, are most liable to mishap from the want of a proper attention to stowage.

Poe, Narrative of A. Gordon Pym, vi.

2. The state of being stowed; also, a place in which something is or may be stowed; room for stowing.

I am something curious, being strange,

To have them [jewels, etc.] in safe stowage.

Shak., Cymbeline, i. 6. 192.

They may as well sue for Nunneries, that they may have some convenient stowage for their wither'd daughters.

Milten, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures.

Addison, (Johnson.)

3. Money paid for stowing goods.—4. That which is stowed.

We ha' ne'er better luck

When we ha' such stowage as these trinkets with us.

Fletcher (and another), Sea Voyage, i. 1.

stowaway (stō'a-wā'), n. [< stow¹ + away.] One who, in order to secure a free passage, conceals himself aboard an outward-bound vessel, with the hope of remaining undiscovered until too late to be sent ashore.

stowdown (stō'doun), n. The act of stowing down, also that which is stowed down, in the hold of a vessel.

stower¹ (stō'ēr), n. [< stow¹ + -er.] One who stows; specifically, a workman who assists in stowing away the cargo in the hold of a vessel.

stower², stowered†. See stow⁴, stowed.

stowing (stō'ing), n. In mining, rubbish, or material of any kind, taken from near at hand, or brought from the surface, and used to fill up places from which ore, coal, or other valuable substance has been removed.

stowlings (stō'linz), adv. [*Contracted from stolentings, < stolen + -ing.] Stealthily.

Rab, stowlins, prie'd her bonnie mou'

Unseen that night. Burns, Halloween.

stoun (stou). A Scotch past participle of stcal.

My mither she fell sick, and the cow was stoun awa.

Auld Robin Gray.

stowret. Same as stoor¹, stoor².

stow-wood (stō'wud), n. Naut., billets of wood used for steadyng casks in a vessel's hold.

S. T. P. An abbreviation of Sacra or Sacro-saucte Theologia Professor, Professor of Sacred Theology.

strat. n. An obsolete form of strow¹.

strabism (strā'bizm), n. [< NL. strabismus.] Same as strabismus.

strabismal (strā-biz'māl), a. [< strabism + -al.] Same as strabismic.

strabismic (strā-biz'mik), a. [< strabism + -ic.] Pertaining to, affected by, or involving strabismus; squinting; distorted.

strabismical (strā-biz'mi-kāl), a. [< strabismic + -al.] Same as strabismic. Science, XIII. 364.

strabismometer (strab-is-mom'e-tēr), n. [< NL. strabismus, q. v., + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for measuring strabismus; a strabometer.

strabismus (strā-bis'mus), n. [= F. strabisme, < NL. strabismus, < Gr. στραβισμός, a squinting, < στραβός, crooked, distorted, < στρέφω, twist, turn about.] Squint; a failure of one of the visual axes to pass through the fixation-point (the point which is looked at). The eye whose visual axis passes through the fixation-point is called the working eye, the other the squinting eye.—Absolute strabismus, strabismus occurring for all distances of the fixation-point.—Concomitant strabismus, strabismus which remains about the same in amount for all positions of the fixation-point.—Convergent strabismus, strabismus in which the visual axes cross between the fixation-point and the eyes. Diplopia from this cause is said to be homonymous.—Divergent strabismus, divergent squint, in which the visual axes diverge, or at least cross beyond the fixation-point. Diplopia from this cause is said to be crossed.—Latent strabismus, strabismus existing only when one eye is occluded.—Manifest strabismus, strabismus occurring when both eyes are open.—Monolateral strabismus, strabismus in which it is always the visual axis of the same eye which fails to pass through the fixation-point.—Relative strabismus, strabismus occurring for some and not for other distances of the fixation-point.—Strabismus deorsum vergens, downward squint, in which the visual axis of the squinting eye passes lower than the fixation-point.—Strabismus sursum vergens, upward squint, in which the visual axis of the squinting eye passes higher than the fixation-point.

strabometer (strā-bom'ē-tēr), n. [Gr. στραβός, crooked, + μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for measuring strabismus; a strabismometer.

strabotomy (strā-bot'ō-mi), n. [Gr. στραβός, crooked, distorted (στρέφω, twist, turn about), + -τομία, κτένειν, ταμίειν, cut.] In surg., the operation for the cure of squinting by cutting the attachment of a muscle or muscles to the eyeball.

strachyt, n. A word of doubtful form and meaning, occurring only in the following passage, where in the earlier editions it is italicized as a title or proper name.

There is example for 't; the lady of the Strachy married the yeoman of the wardrobe. Shak., T. N., ii. 5. 45.

strackent. An obsolete past participle of strike. Chaucer.

stract (strakt), a. [Aphetic form of distract.] Distracted. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

So I did, but he came afterwards as one stract and beside himself. Terence in English (1614). (Nares.)

strad (strād), n. [Origin obscure.] A kind of leather gaiter worn as a protection against thorns. Hallivell.

straddle (strād'l), v.; pret. and pp. straddled, ppr. straddling. [A var. of stridle, striddle, freq. of stride: see striddle, stride.] I. intrans. 1. To stand or walk with the legs wide apart; sit or stand astride.

At length (as Fortune arde) I lighted vpon an old, straddling usurer. Nashe, Pierce Penilesse, p. 11.

Then Apollyon straddled quite over the whole breadth of the way, and said, I am void of fear in this matter. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

2. To include or favor two apparently opposite or different things; occupy or take up an equivocal position in regard to something; as, to straddle on the tariff question. [Colloq.]

II. trans. 1. To place one leg on one side and the other on the other side of; stand or sit astride of: as, to straddle a fence or a horse.—2. To occupy or take up an equivocal position in regard to; appear to favor both sides of: as, to straddle a political question. [Colloq.]

The platform [of the Ohio Democrats] contains the well-known plank straddling the tariff question, which has appeared in previous Democratic platforms of that and other States. The Nation, July 3, 1884, p. 4.

3. To double (the blind) in poker.

straddle (strād'l), n. [Gr. στραδύλιν, v.] 1. The act of standing or sitting with the legs far apart.—2. The distance between the feet or legs of one who straddles.—3. In speculative dealings on 'change, a "privilege" or speculative contract covering both a "put" and a "call"—that is, giving the holder the right at his option (1) of calling, within a specified number of days, for a certain stock or commodity at a price named in the contract, or (2) of delivering to the person to whom the consideration had been paid a certain stock or commodity upon terms similarly stated. See call, n., 15, privilege, n., 5, and put, n., 5. Also called spread eagle. [Slang.]—4. In the game of poker, a doubling of the blind by one of the players.—5. An attempt to take an equivocal or non-committal position: as, a straddle in a party platform. [Colloq.]—6. In mining, one of the vertical timbers by which the different sets are supported at a fixed distance from each other in the shaft; a vertical post used in various ways in timbering a mine, as in supporting the framework of a shaft at a hanging-on place.

straddle (strād'l), adv. [Short for astraddle.] Astride; with straddled legs: as, to ride straddled.

straddle-bug (strād'l-bug), n. A sort of tumble-bug; a scarabæid beetle with long legs, of the genus Canthos, as C. lœvis. See cut under tumble-bug. [U. S.]

Out in the woods for a good time. Cloth spread on the green-sward, crickets and straddle-bugs hopping and crawling over sandwiches and everything else.

St. Nicholas, XVII, 12, advt.

straddle-legged (strād'l-legd), a. Having the legs wide apart; with the legs astride of an object. W. H. Russell.

straddle-pipe (strād'l-pip), n. In gas-manuf., a bridge-pipe connecting the retort with the hydraulic main. E. H. Knight.

straddle-plow (strād'l-plou), n. A plow with two triangular parallel shares set a short distance apart, used to cover a row of corn, etc., by running it so that the line of seed comes between the shares. E. H. Knight.

stradioti (strād'i-ōt), n. [OF. stradiot, cstradiot: see cstradiot.] Same as cstradiot.

strae (strā), n. A Scotch form of strack.

straget, n. [L. strages, slaughter.] Slaughter; destruction.

He presaged the great strage and massacre which after hapned in Sicilia. Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 230.

straggle (strag'gl), v. i.; pret. and pp. straggled, ppr. straggling. [Formerly also stragle; a var. of strackle*, freq. of strake (perhaps due in part to the influence of draggle, but cf. stagger for stracker): see strack.] Straggle is not connected with stray. 1. To roam or wander away, or become separated, as from one's companions or the direct course or way; stray.

In the plain beyond us, for we durst not straggle from the shore, we beheld where once stood Ilim by him [Ilius] founded. Sandys, Travailes, p. 16.

I found my self four or five Mile to the West of the Plaee where I stragled from my Companions. Dampier, Voyages, II, ii. 84.

2. To roam or wander at random, or without any certain direction or object; ramble.

Master George How, one of the Councell, stragling abroad, was slaine by the Salvages. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I, 100.

3. To escape or stretch out ramblingly or beyond proper limits; spread widely apart; shoot too far in growth.

Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

How these tall Naked geraniums straggle! Browning, Pippa Passes, i.

4. To be dispersed; be apart from any main body; stand alone; be isolated; occur at intervals or apart from one another; occur here and there: as, the houses straggle all over the district.

straggler (strag'glēr), n. [Gr. στραγγλῆρ, v.] 1. One who straggles or strays away, as from his fellows or from the direct or proper course; one who lags behind or becomes separated in any way from his companions, as from a body of troops on the march.

This manner of speech is termed the figure of digression by the Latines, following the Greeke original; we also call him the straggler, by allusion to the souldier that marches out of his array. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 195.

The first stragglers of a battalion of rocks, guarding a sort of pass, beyond which the beck rushed down a waterfall. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xxvii.

2. Specifically, in ornith., a stray, or strayed bird, out of its usual range, or off its regular migration. The stragglers are the casual or accidental visitants in any avifauna. In the nature of the case they are never numerous as regards individuals; but the list of what are technically called stragglers in any region or locality usually becomes, in the course of time, a long one, so far as species are concerned. Thus, in the avifauna of the District of Columbia, the stragglers are about as many species as the regular visitants of either summer or winter, or the permanent residents of the year round, though fewer than the spring and autumn migrants.

3. One who roams or wanders about at random, or without settled direction or object; a wanderer; a vagabond; especially, a wandering, shiftless fellow; a tramp.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again. Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 327.

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by stragglers and other servants. Sicily, Advice to Servants (Butler).

4. Something that shoots beyond the rest or too far; an exuberant growth.

Let thy hand supply the pruning-knife, And crop luxuriant stragglers. Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, li. 503.

5. Something that stands apart from others; a solitary or isolated individual.

In a manner alone of that time left a standing straggler, peradventur, though my frute be very small, yet, because the ground from whence it sprong was so good, I may yet be thought somewhat fit for seede, when all yow the rest ar taken up for better store.

Ascham, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 14.

straggle-tooth (strag'l-tōth), n. An irregular or misshapen tooth; a snagle-tooth; a snag.

stragging (strag'ling), n. [Verbal n. of straggle, v.] A mode of dressing the surfaces of grindstones.

stragglingly (strag'ling-li), adv. In a stragglingly manner; one here and one there, or one now and one again: as, to come in stragglingly.

stragging-money (strag'ling-mun'ē), n. In the British navy: (a) Money given to those who apprehend deserters or others who have straggled or overstayed their leave of absence. (b) Money deducted from the wages of a man absent from duty without leave.

straggly (strag'li), a. [Gr. στραγγλῆρ + -γλῆρ.] Straggling; lone and spread out irregularly: as, a straggly scrawl; a straggly village. [Colloq.]

stragular (strag'ū-lār), a. In ornith., pertaining to the stragulum or mantle; pallial.

stragulum (strag'ū-lum), n.; pl. stragula (-lā). [L. stragulum, a cover, coverlet: see strail.] In ornith., the mantle; the pallium: the back and folded wings taken together, in any way distinguished from other parts, as by color on a gull or tern. [Rare.]

strahlite (strā'lit), n. [G. strahl, a ray, beam, arrow (see strale), + -ite.] Same as actinolite.

straight (strāt), a. and n. [Formerly also streight, straught, Se. straught, straucht, and, with the omission of the silent guttural, struit (prob. by confusion with the diff. word strait), narrow, strict, which was also, on the other hand, formerly spelled straight]; [ME. streight, streight, rarely stroit, straight, lit. 'stretched,' < AS. stræt, pp. of strecan, stretch: see stretch. Cf. ME. strek, strik, < AS. strec, strac, strec = MLG. L.G. strak = OIG. strach, MHG. strac, G. strack, extended, stretched, straight, = Dan. (obs.) stray, straight, erect, tight; from the same ult. root. Cf. the equiv. right, lit. 'stretched.'] I. a. 1. Stretched; drawn out.

Sithe thi fleisch, lord, was furst perceyued And, for our sake, laid streyt in stalle.

Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 252.

Pirrus with his stretche sword.

Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 537.

2. Without bend or deviation, like a string tightly stretched; not crooked or curved; right; in geom., lying, as a line, evenly between its points. This is Euclid's definition. The principal characteristic of a straight line is that it is completely determined, if unlimited, by any two points taken upon it, or, if limited, by its two extremities. The idea of measurement does not enter into the idea of a straight line, and it is unnecessary to introduce that idea into the definition, as is done when it is said (after Legendre) to be the shortest distance between two points.

He that knoweth what is straight doth even thereby discern what is crooked, because the absence of straightness in bodies capable thereof is crookedness.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, i. 8.

There is no moe such Cæsars; other of them may have crook'd noses, but to owe such straight arms, none.

Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 1. 83.

Be pleased to let thy Holy Spirit lead me in the straight paths of sanctity, without deflections to either hand.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), l. 86.

3. Without interruption or break; direct.

Forth-with declarid to hys peple all, And to thys cite his peple gan call, Wherunto that had an eyn straight way.

Rona, of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 1308.

With straight air—that is, with the pressure from the main reservoir, or the air-pump, going directly to the brake cylinder—the engineer can apply the brakes to all the wheels of his train simultaneously.

Scribner's Mag., VI, 333.

4. Direct; authoritative; sure; reliable: as, a straight tip. [Slang.]—5. Upright; marked by adherence to truth and fairness; fair; honorable: as, a man straight in all his dealings. [Colloq.]—6. Proceeding or acting with directness; keeping true to the course. [Colloq.]

He shows himself to be a man of wide reading, a pretty straight thinker, and a lively and independent critic.

The Nation, Dec. 6, 1888, p. 459.

7. Free from disorder or irregularity; in order: as, his accounts are not quite straight.

Finally, being belted, curled, and set straight, he descended upon the drawing-room.

Thackeray, Pendennis, vii.

He told her that she needn't mind the place being not quite straight, he had only come up for a few hours—he should be busy in the studio.

H. James Jr., The Century, XXXVI, 218.

8. Unqualified; unreserved; out-and-out: as, a straight Democrat (that is, one who supports the entire platform and policy of his party).—9. Unmixed; undiluted; neat. [Slang.]

Dissipating their rare and precious cash on "whisky straight" in the ever-recurring bar-rooms.

Forthnightly Rec., N. S., XXXIX, 76.

10. East and west; along an east and west line; used of the position of the body in Christian burial.

First Clo. Is she to be buried in Christian burial that willfully seeks her own salvation?

Sec. Clo. I tell thee she is; and therefore make her grave straight; the crowner hath sat on her, and finds it Christian burial.

Shak., Hamlet, v. 1. 4.

11. In poker, consisting of a sequence; forming a straight: as, a straight hand; a straight flush.—A straight face, an unsmiling face; a sober, unamused expression; as, he could with difficulty keep a straight face. [Colloq.]—Long straight, See long.—Straight accents, the long marks over the vowels, as ā, ē, ī, o, ū, ŷ.—Straight angle. See angle.—Straight arch, in arch., a form of arch spanning an aperture in which the intrados is represented by straight lines which meet in a point at the top and comprise two sides of a triangle.—Straight ends and walls, a system of working coal, somewhat similar to "board and pillar." [North Wales.]—Straight flush. See flush.—Straight intestine, bowel, or gut, the rectum. See cuts under alimentary, intestine, and peritoneum.—Straight sheer. See sheer.—Straight sinus, ticket, tubule, etc. See the nouns.

II. n. 1. The condition of being straight, or free from curvature or crookedness of any kind: as, to be out of the straight. [Colloq.]—2. A straight part or direction: as, the straight of a piece of timber.—3. In poker, a sequence of cards, generally five in number, or a hand containing such a sequence.

straight¹ (strāt), adv. [ME. streight, streyght, streyghte, etc.; < straight¹, a.] 1. In a straight line; without swerving or deviating from the direct course; directly.

Streight aform hym a fair feld gan behold.

Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 4661.

Floating straight, obedient to the stream.

Shak., C. of E., i. 1. 87.

2. At once; immediately; directly; straightway.

And went streyghte into the Hospytall, and refreshed vs with mete and drynke, and rested vs there an houre or .ij. because of our wache the nyght byfore.

Sir R. Guyford, Pilgrimage, p. 28.

Shew him an enemy, his pain's forgot straight.

Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, i. 1.

straight¹ (strāt), v. t. [straight¹, a.] To make straight; straighten. [Rare.]

The old gypsy, in the mean time, set about arranging the dead body, composing its limbs, and straightening the arms by its side.

Scott, Guy Manering, xxvii.

straight², a. and n. An obsolete spelling of straight¹.

straightaway (strāt'ā-wā'), a. Straight forward, without turn or curve: as, a straightaway course in a yacht- or horse-race.

At the Ascot, where I was last Thursday, the course is a straightaway one.

T. C. Crawford, English Life, p. 28.

straight-billed (strāt'bil'd), a. Having the bill straight, as a bird; rectirostral.

straight-cut (strāt'kut), a. Cut in a straight manner: applied to fine grades of cut smoking tobacco. The leaves are flattened out, packed compactly, and cut lengthwise, long fibers being thus obtained that present a beautiful silky appearance.

straight-edge (strāt'ej), n. A bar having one edge, at least, as straight as possible, to be used as a fiducial line in drawing and testing straight lines. Such instruments when of the greatest accuracy are somewhat costly. Common straight-edges for ruling ordinary lines, testing the surface of mill-stones, brickwork and stonework, etc., are made of wood, and range from a slip of wood one foot long to planks cut in the form of a truss and ten or more feet in length. See cut under plumb-rule.

straighten¹ (strāt'n), v. [straight¹ + -en¹] I. trans. To make straight, in any sense; specifically, to reduce from a crooked to a straight form.

A crooked stick is not straightened unless it be bent as far on the clean contrary side.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iv. 8.

To straighten the sheer. See sheer.

II. intrans. To become straight; assume a straight form.

straighten², v. t. See straiten.

straightener (strāt'nēr), n. [straighten¹ + -er¹] One who or that which straightens.

straightening-block (strāt'ning-blök), n. An anvil used in straightening buckled saws. E. H. Knight.

straightening-machine (strāt'ning-mā-shēn'), n. In metal-work, any machine for removing a twist, bend, buckle, or kink from rails, rods, plates, straps, tubes, or wire.

straightforth (strāt'fōrth'), adv. [Early mod. E. straight forth; < straight¹ + forth¹] Directly; straightway.

She smote the ground, the which streight forth did yield A fruitful Olive tree.

Spenser, Muioptomos, l. 325.

straightforward (strāt'fōr'wārd), adv. [Also straightforwards, formerly also straitforward; < straight¹ + forward¹.] Directly forward; right ahead.

Look not on this side or that side, or behind you as Lot's wife did, but straightforward on the end.

J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 211.

straightforward (strāt'fōr'wārd), a. [straight-forward, adv.] 1. Direct; leading directly forward or onward.

Midway upon the journey of our life

I found myself within a forest dark,

For the straightforward pathway had been lost.

Longfellow, tr. of Dante's Inferno, l. 3.

2. Characterized by uprightness, honesty, or frankness; honest; frank; open; without deviation or prevarication: as, a straightforward course; a straightforward person, character, or answer.

In prose he wrote as he conversed and as he preached, using the plain straightforward language of common life.

Southey, Bunyan, p. 40.

straightforwardly (strāt'fōr'wārd-li), adv. In a straightforward manner. Athenæum, No. 3258, p. 451.

straightforwardness (strāt'fōr'wārd-nes), n. Straightforward character or conduct; undeviating rectitude: as, a man of remarkable straightforwardness.

straight-hearted, a. See strait-hearted.

straight-horn (strāt'hōrn), n. A fossil cephalopod of the family Orthoceratidae, some of which were 12 or 15 feet long; an orthoceratite. P. P. Carpenter.

straight-joint (strāt'joint), a. Noting a floor the boards of which are so laid that the joints form a continuous line throughout the length.

straightly¹ (strāt'li), adv. [straight¹ + -ly²] In a straight line; not crookedly; directly: as, to run straightly on. Imp. Diet.

straightly², adv. An obsolete spelling of straightly.

straightness (strāt'nes), n. The property or state of being straight.

straight-out (strāt'out), a. and n. I. a. Out-and-out; straight: as, straight-out Republicans.

II. n. In U. S. politics, one who votes a straight or strictly party ticket; a thorough partizan.

Other Straight-outs, as they call themselves, . . . cannot take Grant and the Republicans.

The Nation, Aug. 22, 1872, p. 113

straight-pight (strāt'pīt), a. [straight¹ + pight] Straight-fixed; erect.

Straight-pight Minerva. Shak., Cymbeline, v. 5. 164.

straight-ribbed (strāt'rib'd), a. In bot., having the lateral ribs straight, as leaves of Castanea, palms, etc.

straightway (strāt'wā), adv. [ME. streight-way; < straight¹ + way¹] Immediately; forthwith; without loss of time; without delay.

Thei hilde her streight-way toward north wales to a Citee that longed to the kyngge Tradily-saunte.

Merkn (E. E. T. S.), iii. 558.

And straightway the damsel arose and walked.

Mark v. 42.

straightway (strāt'wāz), adv. [straightway + adv. gen. -s.] Straightway.

None of the three could win a palm of ground but the other two would straightways balance it.

Bacon, Empire (ed. 1887).

straight-winged (strāt'wing'd), a. In entom., having straight wings; orthopterous.

strai¹, n. A Scotch spelling of stroke.

strai², v. t. A Scotch form of stroke.

strait, n. [ME. stragle, < AS. streagl, stragel*, contr. stræl, a bed-cover, carpet, rug, = OF. stragule, a mantle, coverlet, < L. stragulum, a spread, covering, coverlet, blanket, carpet, rug, also stragula, a covering, blanket; neut. and fem. respectively of stragulus, serving for spreading or covering, < sternere, pp. stratus, spread, strew; see stratum.] A covering; a coverlet. Prompt. Parr., p. 478.

strain¹ (strān), v. [Early mod. E. also strayne; < ME. straynen, streincn, streynen, straynen, < OF. streindre, estraindre, straindre, F. êtreindre = Pr. estrenher, estreigner = It. striguere, strequere, stringere, < L. stringere, pp. strietus, draw tight; akin to Gr. σπαγγός, twisted, σπαγγίζω, press out, Lith. stregti, become stiff, freeze, AS. strecean, stretch, etc.: see stretch, straight¹. From L. stringere are also ult. E. constrain, distraint, restrain, stringent, strait¹, striet, etc.] I. trans. 1†. To draw out; stretch; extend, especially with effort or care.

And thi vynes footes IV ascende,

Thenne armes IV is goode forth forto streyne.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 70.

All their actions, voyces, and gestures, both in charging and retiring, were so strained to the height of their qualitie and nature that the strangeness thereof made it seeme very delightful.

Capt. John Smith, Works, l. 136.

2†. To draw tight; tighten; make taut.

To the pyller, lorde, also,

With a rope men bownd the too,

Hard drawe and streynyd faste.

Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 181.

Sir Mungo, who watched his victim with the delighted yet wary eye of an experienced angler, became now aware that, if he strained the line on him too tightly, there was every risk of his breaking hold.

Scott, Fortunes of Nigel, xv.

3†. To confine; restrain; imprison.

There the steede in stodee strayed in bondes.

Alexander of Macedoine (E. E. T. S.), l. 1157.

4. To stretch to the utmost tension; put to the stretch; exert: as, to strain every nerve to accomplish something.

He sweats,

Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture

That acts my words. Shak., Cymbeline, iii. 3. 94.

5. To stretch beyond measure; push beyond the proper extent or limit; carry too far.

He strained the Constitution, but he conquered the Lords.

N. A. Rev., CXLII. 593.

6. To impair, weaken, or injure by stretching or overtasking; harm by subjection to too great stress or exertion; hence, to sprain.

Hold, sir, hold, pray use this whistle for me,

I dare not straine my selfe to winde it I,

The Doctors tell me it will spend my spirits.

Brome, Sparagus Garden, iv. 7.

Trudes decay'd about may tack,

Strain their necks with looking back. Swift.

7. To force; constrain.

Whether that Goddes worthy forwetyng

Streyne me nedely for to don a thing.

Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 422.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd.

Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 184.

His mirth

Is forc'd and strain'd.

Sir J. Denham, The Sophy. (Latham.)

8. To urge; press.

Note if your lady strain his entertainment

With any strong or vehement importunity.

Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 250.

9. To press; squeeze; hence, to hug; embrace.

He that nyght in armes wold hire streyne

Harder than ever Paris did Eleyne.

Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 509.

I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace.

Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., x. 407.

10. To press through a filter or colander; separate extraneous or coarser matters from (a liquid) by causing it to pass through a filter or colander; purify from extraneous matter by filtration; filter: as, to strain milk.—11. To separate or remove by the use of a filter or colander: with out. See phrase under v. i., below.

Ye blind guides, which strain out the gnat, and swallow the camel.

Mat. xxiii. 24 [R. V.]

12†. To force out by straining.

I at each sad strain will strain a tear.

Shak., Lucrece, l. 1131.

13. To deform, as a solid body or structure.—To strain a point. See point.—To strain courtesy, to use ceremony; stand too much upon form or ceremony; insist on the precedence of others; hang back through excess of courtesy or civility.

My business was great; and in such a ease as mine a man may strain courtesy.

Shak., R. and J., ii. 4. 55.

Strain not courtesies with a noble enemy.

Lamb, Two Races of Men.

= Syn. 10. Bolt, Screen, etc. See sift.

II. intrans. 1. To exert one's self; make violent efforts; strive.

To build his fortune I will strain a little.

Shak., T. of A., i. 1. 143.

What

Has made thy life so vile that thou shouldst strain

To forfeit it to me? J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 105.

2. To urge; press.

Nay, sir, indeed the fault is yours most extreamlie now. Pray, sir, forbear to strain beyond a womans patience.

Brome, Northern Lass, iii. 3.

3. To stretch strugglingly; stretch with effort.

This parlor looked out on the dark courtyard, in which there grew two or three poplars, straining upward to the light.

Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, iii.

No sound, no sight as far as eye could strain.

Browning, Childe Roland.

4. To undergo distortions under force, as a ship in a high sea.

A ship is said to strain if in launching, or when working in a heavy sea, the different parts of it experience relative motions.

Sir W. Thomson, in Phil. Trans., CXLVI. 451.

The ship ran

Straining, heeled o'er, through seas all changed and wan.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 10.

5. To drip; ooze; filter; drain; flow; issue: as, water straining through sand becomes pure.

Then, in the Deserts dry and barren sand,
From flinty rocks doth plentiful Rivers strain.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Triumph of Faith, lii. 18.
To strain at, to strive after; endeavor to reach or obtain.

I do not strain at the position.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 112.

To strain at a gnat, a typographical error found in the authorized version (Mat. xxiii. 24) for strain out a gnat, the phrase found in Tyndale's and Coverdale's and other versions. See def. 11, above, and quotation there.

strain¹ (strān), n. [< strain¹, v. In some uses (def. 7), cf. strain².] 1†. Stretch; extent; pitch.

If it did infect my blood with joy,
Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 5. 171.

May our Minerva
Answer your hopes, unto their largest strain!
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, Ind.

2. Stretching or deforming force or pressure; violence. (This use of the word, while permissible in literature, is incorrect in mechanics. The strain is not the force, but the deformation produced by the force.)

A difference of taste in jokes is a great strain on the affections.
George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xv.

3. Tense or constrained state or condition; tension; great effort.

A dismal wedding! every ear at strain
Some sign of things that were to be to gain.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 314.

Whether any poet . . . has exerted a greater variety of powers with less strain and less ostentation.
Lander.

4. In mech., a definite change in the shape or size of a solid body setting up an elastic resistance, or stress, or exceeding the limit of elasticity. The deformation of a fluid is not commonly called a strain. The word, which had previously been ill-defined, was made a scientific and precise term in this sense by Rankine in 1850. Thomson and Tait, in their "Treatise on Natural Philosophy," extend the term to deformations of liquid masses, and even of groups of points; and Tait subsequently extends it to any geometrical figure, so that it becomes a synonym of deformation.

Fresnel made the very striking discovery that glass and other simply refracting bodies are rendered doubly refracting when in a state of strain. To this Brewster added the observation that the requisite strain might be produced by unequal heating instead of by mechanical stress.
Tait, Light, § 292.

In this paper the word strain will be used to denote the change of volume and figure constituting the deviation of a molecule of a solid from that condition which it preserves when free from the action of external forces.
Rankine, Axes of Elasticity (1855).

A strain is any definite alteration of form or dimensions experienced by a solid. . . . If a stone, a beam, or a mass of metal in a building, or in a piece of framework, becomes condensed or dilated in any direction, or bent, or twisted, or distorted in any way, it is said to experience a strain.
W. Thomson, Mathematical Theory of Elasticity (1856).

5. A stretching of the muscles or tendons, giving rise to subsequent pain and stiffness; sprain; wrench; twist.—6. A permanent deformation or injury of a solid structure.—7. Stretch; flight or burst, as of imagination, eloquence, or song. Specifically—(a) A poem; a song; a lay.

All unworthy of thy noble strain.
Scott, L. of the L., i, Int.

(b) Tune; melody.
I was all ear,
And took in strains that might create a soul
Under the ribs of death.
Milton, Comus, l. 561.

In sweet Italian strains our Shepherds sing.
Congreve, Opening of the Queen's Theatre, Epil.

(c) In a stricter sense, in music, a section of a piece which is more or less complete in itself. In written music the strains are often marked by double bars.
An Cynthia had but seen me dance a strain, or do but one trick, I had been kept in court.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, iv. 1.

(d) Tone; key; style or manner of speech or conduct.
The third [sort] is of such as take too high a strain at the first.
Bacon, Youth and Age (ed. 1887).

That sermon is in a strain which I believe has not been heard in this kingdom.
Burke, Rev. in France.

(e) Mood; disposition.
Henry . . . said, "I am come, young ladies, in a very moralizing strain, to observe that our pleasures in this world are always to be paid for."
Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, xxvi.

Axes of a homogeneous strain, three straight lines of particles perpendicular to one another both before and after the strain.—Composition of strains. See composition of displacements, under composition.—Concurrent stress and strain. See concurrent.—Homogeneous or uniform strain, a strain which leaves every straight line of particles straight, and every pair of parallel lines parallel.—Longitudinal strain. See longitudinal.—Normal plane of a homogeneous strain, one of three planes each containing two of the three axes. There is generally only one such system of planes through each point of the body.—Orthogonal strain. (a) Relatively to a stress, a strain which neither does nor uses work by virtue of that stress. (b) Relatively to another strain, a strain orthogonal to a stress perfectly concurrent to the other strain.—

Principal strain. Same as principal strain-type (which see, under strain-type).—Pure strain, a homogeneous strain which does not rotate any axis of the strain.—Simple strain, any one of a number of strains conceived as independent components of other strains which they are employed to define. The phrase simple strain has no definite meaning, but simple longitudinal strain, simple tangential strain, simple shearing strain, etc., mean such strains existing not as components merely, but as resultants. Thus, if a bar is elongated without any transverse contraction or expansion, there is a simple longitudinal strain in the direction of the elongation. A simple tangential strain is a homogeneous strain in which all the particles are displaced parallel to one plane.—Strain-ellipsoid. See ellipsoid.—To have a strain. See have.—Type of a strain. See type.

strain² (strān), n. [An altered form, due appar. to confusion with strain¹, 7, of what would be reg. streen; < ME. streen, stren, earlier streon, istrean, race, stock, generation, < AS. gestreón, gestrión, gain, wealth (= OS. gistriuni, = OHG. gistriuni, gain, property, wealth, business); appar. confused in ME. with the related noun, ME. streud, stryud, strund, < AS. strýnd, race, stock; < streónan, strýnan = OHG. strüanan, beget, gestreónan, get, acquire.] 1. Race; stock; generation; descent; hence, family blood; quality or line as regards breeding; breed; a race or breed; a variety, especially an artificial variety, of a domestic animal. Strain indicates the least recognizable variation from a given stock, or the ultimate modification to which an animal has been subjected. But since such variation usually proceeds by insensible degrees, the significance of strain grades into that of breed, race, or variety.

Bountee comth al of God, nat of the streen
Of which they been engendred and ybore.
Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, l. 101.

O, if thou wert the noblest of thy strain,
Young man, thou couldst not die more honourable.
Shak., J. C., v. 1. 59.

The ears of a cat vary in shape, and certain strains, in England, inherit a pencil-like tuft of hairs, above a quarter of an inch in length, on the tips of their ears.
Darwin, Var. of Animals and Plants, i.

2. Hereditary or natural disposition; turn; tendency; character.

Sir, you have shown to-day your valiant strain.
Shak., Lear, v. 3. 40.

And here I shall not restrain righteousness to the particular virtue of justice, but enlarge it according to the genius and strain of the book of the Proverbs. Tillotson.

3. Sort; kind; style.

Let man learn a prudence of a higher strain.
Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 214.

4. Trace; streak.

With all his merit there was a strain of weakness in his character.
Baneroff, Hist. Const., II. 6.

5. The shoot of a tree. Hattiwell (under stren). [Prov. Eng.]—6†. The track of a deer.

When they have shot a Deere by land, they follow him like blood-hounds by the blood, and straine, and oftentimes so take them.
Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 134.

strain³† (strān), v. t. [An aphetic form of distrain.] To distract.

When my lord refused to pay the two shillings, Mr. Knightly charged the constable to strain two shillings' worth of goods.
Court and Times of Charles I., 1. 56.

strainable (strā'na-bl), a. [Early mod. E. streynable, streynable; < strain¹ + -able.] 1†. Constraining; compelling; violent.

This yere the Duke of Burgon, . . . with his xii. M. men, was drynen in to Englund, with a fere streynable wynde, in ther selynge towarde Spayn.
Arnold's Chron. (1502), p. xliii.

2. Capable of being strained.
strainably† (strā'na-bli), adv. [Early mod. E. streynable; < strainable + -ly².] Violently; fiercely.

The wind . . . drone the flame so streynable amongst the tents and cabins of the Saxons, that the fire . . . increased the feare amongst the soldidours wonderfullie.
Hobinshed, Hist. Scotland, p. 93.

strained¹ (strānd), p. a. [< strain¹ + -ed¹.] Forced; carried beyond proper limits; as, a strained interpretation of a law.

strained² (strānd), a. [< strain² + -ed².] Of this or that strain or breed, as an animal.

strainer (strā'nēr), n. [< ME. streynour, stren-youre; < strain¹ + -er¹.] 1. One who or that which strains.—2. A stretcher or tightener; as, a strainer for wire fences.—3. Any utensil for separating small solid particles from the liquid that contains them, either to preserve the solid objects or to clarify the liquid, or for both purposes.

Item, j. dressyng knyfte, j. fyre schawle, ij. treys, j. streynour.
Paston Letters, l. 490.

4. In carriage-building: (a) A reinforcing strip or button at the back of a panel. (b) Canvas glued to the back of a panel to prevent warping or cracking. Also called stretcher.—Strainer of Hippocrates. Same as Hippocrates's sleeve (which see, under sleeve).

strainer-vine (strā'nēr-vīn), n. The sponge-gourd, Luffa acutangula, and other species: so called from the use of the fibrous network contained in its fruit for straining palm-wine.

straining (strā'ning), n. [Verbal n. of strain¹, v.] In saddlery, leather, canvas, or other fabric drawn over a saddle to form a base for the seating. It is put on the saddle with a tool called a straining-fork, the fabric having first been stretched on a machine called a straining-reel. Also called straining-leather.—Cross-straining, canvas or webbing drawn transversely over the first straining.

straining-beam (strā'ning-bēm), n. In a queen-post roof, a horizontal beam uniting the tops of the two queen-posts, and acting as a tie-rod to resist the thrust of the roof; a straining-piece. If a similar beam is placed on the main tie-rod, between the bases of the posts, it is called a straining-sill.

straining-leather (strā'ning-leTH'ēr), n. In saddlery, same as straining.

straining-piece (strā'ning-pēs), n. Same as straining-beam.

straining-sill (strā'ning-sil), n. See straining-beam.

strain-normal (strā'nōr'māl), n. A normal of a homogeneous strain.

strain-sheet (strān'shēt), n. In bridge-building, a skeleton drawing of a truss or other part of a bridge, with the calculated or computed greatest strain to which it will be subjected annotated at the side of each member. In making the actual working-drawings, the respective members are drawn to a size sufficient to sustain the stresses so marked on the sheet multiplied by a certain predetermined "factor of safety." Also called stress-sheet.

strait† (strānt), n. [< OF. estrainte, estreinte, fem. of estraint, F. étréint, pp. of OF. estraindre, F. étréindre, strain; see strain¹, v., and cf. restraint, constraint.] A violent stretching or tension; a strain; pressure; constraint.

Uppon his iran collar griped fast,
That with the strait his wesand nigh he brast.
Spenser, F. Q., V. ii. 14.

strain-type (strān'tīp), n. The type of a strain.—Principal strain-type, one of six strain-types such that, when the homogeneous elastic solid to which they belong is homogeneously strained in any way, the potential energy of the elasticity is expressed by the sum of the products of the squares of the components of the strain expressed in terms of these strain-types, each multiplied by a determinate coefficient.

strait¹ (strāt), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also straight, streight, streit, etc.; < ME. strait, strayt, strait, strayte, streit, streyt, stroite, also sometimes straight, < OF. estreit, estrait (F. étroit), narrow, strict (as a noun, a narrow passage of water), = Pr. estreit = Sp. estrecho = Pg. estrito = It. stretto, narrow, strict, < L. strictus, pp. of stringere, draw tight: see strain¹, stringent. Cf. strict, which is a doublet of strait, the one being directly from the L., the other through OF. and ME. The word strait¹, formerly also spelled straight, has been more or less confused with the diff. word straight¹, which was sometimes spelled strait.] I. a. 1. Narrow; having little breadth or width.

Egypt is a long Contree; but it is streyt, that is to seye narrow; for thei may not enlargen it toward the Desert, for defaute of Watre.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 45.

Strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.
Mat. vii. 14.

Britons seen, all flying
Through a strait lane.
Shak., Cymbeline, v. 3. 7.

2. Confined; restricted; limited in space or accommodation; close.

There was swich congregaoun
Of peple, and eek so streyt of herberge,
That they ne founde as much as o cotage
In which they bothe nighte ylogged be.
Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 169.

And the sons of the prophets said unto Elisha, Behold now, the place where we dwell with thee is too strait for us.
2 Ki. vi. 1.

3†. Of time, short; scant.

If thi gode be greet & thi tyme streyte,
Than go thi silt therto & worche an houswijfes brayde.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 41.

4†. Tight.

You rode, like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait strossers.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. 7. 57.

He [man] might see that a strait glove will come more easily on with use.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 295.

I denounce against all strait Laclng, squeezing for a Shape.
Congreve, Way of the World, iv. 5.

5†. Close. (a) Near; intimate; familiar.

He, forgetting all former injuries, had received that naughty Pexirtus into a straight degree of favour, his goodness being as apt to be deceived as the other's craft was to deceive.
Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ii. (Latham.)

(b) Strict; careful.

Much strait watching of master bailiffs is about us, that there be no privy conference amongst us.
Bp. Ridley, in Bradford's Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 94.
 (c) Close-listed; stingy; avaricious.

I do not ask you much;
 I beg cold comfort; and you are so strait
 And so ingrateful, you deny me that.
Shak., K. John, v. 7. 42.

6. Strict; rigorous; exacting.
 It was old and som del strait.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 174.

After the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee.
Acts xvi. 5.

Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue.
Tennyson, Coming of Arthur.

Led a strait life in continence and austerity, and was therefore admired as a Prophet, and resorted to out of all parts.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 379.

Bonded them by so strait vows.
Tennyson, Coming of Arthur.

7†. Sore; great; difficult; distressing.
 At a strait neede they can wele stanche bloode.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 17.

8†. Hard-pressed; straitened; hampered.
 Mother, I kindly thank you for your Orange pills you sent me. If you are not too strait of money, send me some such thing by the woman, and a pound or two of Almonds and Raisons.
Styrie, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 178.

To make your strait circumstances yet straiter.
Secker, Sermons, II. xi.

II. n. 1. A narrow pass or passage.
 Thi rode forth the softe pas *strait*e and clos till they come to the *strait*e betwene the wode and the river, as the kynge loot hadde hem taught.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 169.

The barbarous people lay in waite for him in his way, in the strait of Thermopyles.
North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 394.

Honour travels in a strait so narrow,
 Where one but goes abreast.
Shak., T. and C., iii. 3. 154.

2. Specifically, a narrow passage of water connecting two bodies of water; often used in the plural: as, the Strait or Straits of Gibraltar; the Straits of Magellan; the Straits of Dover. Abbreviated St.—3. A strip of land between two bodies of water; an isthmus.

A broken channel with a broken cross,
 That stood on a dark strait of barren land:
 On one side lay the Ocean, and on one Lay a great water. Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

4†. A narrow alley in London.
 Look into any angle of the town, the Straights, or the Bermudas, where the quarrelling lesson is read, and how do they entertain the time, but with bottle-ale and tobacco?
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, ii. 6.

Cant names then given to the places frequented by bullies, knights of the post, and fencing masters. . . . These Straights consisted of a nest of obscure courts, alleys, and avenues, running between the bottom of St. Martin's Lane, Half-Moon, and Chandos Street.
Gifford's Note at "Bermudas" in the above passage.

5. A tight or narrow place; difficulty; distress; need; case of necessity: often in the plural.
 Finding himself out of straits, he will revert to his customs.
Bacon, Expense (ed. 1887).

The straits and needs of Catiline being such
 As he must fight with one of the two armies.
B. Jonson, Catiline, v. 6.

Take me: I'll serve you better in a strait.
Tennyson, Princess, i.

6†. pl. Cloth of single width, as opposed to broad cloth: a term in use in the sixteenth century and later.—Between the Straits, through and beyond the Straits of Gibraltar: used by American sailors with reference to a voyage to Mediterranean ports: as, he has made two voyages between the Straits.—Perineal strait. See perineal.—Straits of the pelvis, in obstet., the openings of the pelvic canal, distinguished as the superior and inferior straits. See pelvis.—Straits oil. See oil.

strait† (strät), v. t. [Also straight; < strait†, a.] 1. To make strait or narrow; narrow; narrow; contract.
 He [Crassus] set his ranks wide, casting his souldiers into a square battell. . . . Yet afterward he changed his mind againe, and *straight*ed the battell [formation] of his footmen, fashioning it like a brick, more long than broad, making a front and shewing their faces every way.
North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 477.

2. To stretch; draw tight; tighten.
 This weighty Scott saill strait a rope,
 And hangd he shall be.
Lany Johnny Moir (Child's Ballads, IV. 273).

3. To press hard; put to difficulties; distress; puzzle; perplex.
 If your lass
 Interpretation should abuse, and call this Your lack of love or bounty, you were strait
 For a reply.
Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 365.

strait† (strät), adv. [< ME. streite, streyte; < strait†, a.] Narrowly; tightly; closely; strictly; rigorously; strenuously; hard.

Hir hosen weren of fyn scarlet reed
 Ful streite yteyd.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 457.

Worcester sayd at Caste it schuld be necessary for strait to have good witness, as he saythe it schuld go streithe with zow wythowt zowr witness were ry the sofyccyt.
Paston Letters, I. 516.

strait†, a. and adv. An old spelling of straight†. straiten (strät'n), v. t. [Formerly also straight-en; < strait† + -en.] 1. To make strait or narrow; narrow; contract; diminish.
 Let not young beginners in religion . . . straiten their liberty by vows of long continuance.
Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, iv. 7.

2. To confine; hem in.
 Feed high henceforth, man, and no more be straiten'd
 Within the limits of an empty patience.
Ford, Fancies, iv. 1.

3. To draw tight; tighten.
 My horses here detain,
 Fix'd to the chariot by the straiten'd rein.
Pope, Hiad, v. 325.

4. To hamper; inconvenience; restrict.
 An other time having straightned [var. straighted] his enemies with scarcity of victuals.
North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 495.

Newtown men, being straitened for ground, sent some to Merimack to find a fit place to transplant themselves.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 150.

The shackles of an old love straiten'd him.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

5. To press hard, as with want or difficulties of any kind; distress; afflict with pecuniary difficulties: as, to be straitened in money matters.
 So straitened was he at times by these warlike expenses that when his daughter married Boabdil, her bridal dress and jewels had to be borrowed.
Iving, Granada, p. 68.

straitforward†, adv. An old spelling of straightforward.

strait-handed† (strät'han'ed), a. Parsimonious; niggardly; close-fisted.
 In the distribution of our time God seems to be strait-handed, and gives it to us, not as nature gives us rivers, enough to drown us, but drop by drop.
Jer. Taylor, Holy Dying, ii. 1.

strait-handedness† (strät'han'ed-nes), n. Niggardliness; parsimony.
 The Romish doctrine makes their strait-handedness so much more injurious as the cause of separation is more just.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iv. 3.

strait-hearted (strät'här'ted), a. Narrow; selfish; stingy. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ii. 17.

strait-jacket (strät'jak'et), n. Same as strait-waistcoat.

strait-laced (strät'läst), a. 1. Made close and tight by lacing, as stays or a bodice.—2. Wearing tightly laced stays, bodice, etc.
 We have few well-shaped that are strait-laced.
Locke, Education, § 11.

Hence—3. Strict in manners or morals; rigid in opinion.
 And doubt'st thou me? suspect you I will tell
 The hidden mysteries of your Paphian cell
 To the strait-lac'd Dians?
Randolph, Complaint against Cupid.

Why are you so strait-lac'd, sir knight, to cast a lady off so coy?
Peele, Sir Clyomon and Sir Clamydes.

One so strait-lac'd
 In her temper, her taste, and her morals and waist.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 113.

straitly (strät'li), adv. [Formerly also straightly; < ME. straitly, streptly, straitliche, streitliche; < strait† + -ly.] In a strait manner. (a) Narrowly; closely.
 If men look straitly to it, they will find that, unless their lives are domestic, those of the women will not be.
Margaret Fuller, Woman in 19th Cent., p. 36.

(b) Tightly; tight.
 Other bynde it straitly with sum bonnde.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 74.

"Spare me not," he said to Christie; for even that ruffian hesitated to draw the cord straitly.
Scott, Monastery, xxxi.

(c) Strictly; rigorously.
Streety tor-bede ze that no wyfe [woman] he at zoure mete.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 329.

His majesty hath straitly given in charge
 That no man shall have private conference,
 Of what degree soever, with his brother.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 1. 85.

(d) Closely; intimately. (e) Hardly; grievously; sorely.
 I hear how that you are something straitly handled for reading books, speaking with good men, yea, praying to God, as you would do.
J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 203.

straitness (strät'nes), n. [Formerly also straightness; < ME. streitnes, streytneesse; < strait† + -ness.] The state or quality of being strait. (a) Narrowness; smallness; confined or restricted character.
 For the streitnes of thin astrelabie, than is every smal devysioum in a signe departed by two degrees & two.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, i. 17.

By reason of the straitness of all the places.
 2 Mac. xii. 21.

(b) Strictness; rigor.
 If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well. Shak., M. for M., iii. 2. 269.

(c) Distress; difficulty; pressure from narrowness of circumstances or necessity of any kind, particularly from poverty; want; scarcity.
 But he seyde their shal no thyng hurt hym but youre streytneesse of mony to hym.
Paston Letters, II. 38.

I received your loving letter, but straitness of time forbids me. Winthrop, in New England's Memorial, p. 191.

He was never employed in public affairs, . . . the straitness of his circumstances keeping him close to his trade.
Everett, Orations, II. 13.

strait-waistcoat (strät'wäst'köt), n. A garment for the body made of canvas or similar strong textile material, and so shaped as to lace up behind and fit closely. It has sleeves much longer than the arms, and usually sewed up at the ends, so that the hands cannot be used to do injury. The sleeves can also be tied together so as to restrain the wearer. It is used for the control or discipline of dangerous maniacs and other violent persons. Also called strait-jacket.

strake¹ (sträk), v. i.; pret. and pp. straked, ppr. striking. [< ME. straken; a collateral form of strecken, striken, a secondary form of striken, < AS. strican (pret. strāc), go, pass swiftly over: see streak¹, strike, and stroke¹. Hence ult. strag-gle.] To move; go; proceed. [Old and prov. Eng.]
 And with that worde right anon
 They gan to strake forth.
Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 1311.

strake² (sträk), n. [See also strait; < ME. strake; in part a var. of strecke, mod. E. streak², and in part of strok, mod. E. stroke: see streak¹, streak², stroke¹.] 1†. A streak; a stripe.
 Summe lowe places therof by the water syde looke like redde chifes with white strakes like waye a cable length a piece.
K. Eden, First Books on America (ed. Arber), p. 381.

2†. A strip; a narrow tract.
 This Morrea is a plentyous cuntrye, and almost inuy-rounde with the see, excepte one strake of a .vj. myle brode, whiche youeth entre into Grecia, that ye Turke hathe.
Sir R. Guylford, Pylgrymage, p. 12.

3†. A reef in a sail.
 For no han thei straked a strake and sterid hem the better,
 And abated a bonet or the blast come,
 They had be throwe ouere the borde backwarde icheonne.
Richard the Redeless, iv. 80.

4. A rut in a road. [Prov. Eng.]—5. A crack in a floor. [Prov. Eng.]—6. A breadth of plank or planking; specifically, a continuous line of planking or plates on a vessel's side, reaching from stem to stern. Also streak and shutter-in. See cut under clinch-built.—7. The iron band used to bind the felloes of a wheel; the hoop or fire of a wheel.—8. A piece of board or metal used for seraping off the skimpings in hand-jigging or toizing.—9. Same as lyc³.—10. A bushel: more commonly strike (which see). [Obsolete or colloq.]
 Come, Ruose, Ruose! I sold fifty strake o' barley to-day in half this time.
Farquhar, Recruiting Officer, iii. 1.

11. In hunting, a particular signal with a horn.
 As bookes report, of sir Tristram came all the good termes of ventry and of hunting, and the sises and measures of blowing of an horne. And of him we had . . . all the blasts that long to all manner of games. First to the uncoupling, to the seeking, to the recharge, to the fight, to the death, and to strak, and many other blasts and termes. Sir T. Mallory, Morte d'Arthur, II. cxxxvii.

Binding-strake. See binding.

strake^{3†} (sträk). An obsolete preterit of strike.

strake⁴ (sträk), v. t. A dialectal (Scotch) form of stroke².

strale† (sträl), n. See streal.

stram (stram), v.; pret. and pp. strammed, ppr. strammig. [Cf. Dan. stramme = Sw. stramma, be too tight, tighten, stretch, straiten, < Dan. stram = Sw. stram = G. stramm, tight, stiff, stretched; cf. D. straf, G. straff, severe, strict, stern.] I. intrans. 1. To spring or recoil with violence. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To spread out the limbs; walk with long ungraceful strides. [Colloq.]
II. trans. To dash down violently; beat. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

stram (stram), n. A hard, long walk. [Colloq.]
 I hed such a stram this mornin'.
H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 562.

stramaget, n. [ME., < OF. stramage* (ML. stramagium), scattered straw, < L. stramen, straw, litter, < sternere, pp. stratus, scatter, strew: see stratum. Cf. straminous, strammel.] Straw; litter. Prompt. Parv., pp. 478, 480.

stramash (stra-mash'), v. t. [Developed from stramazoua, pronounced later something like stramashin*, and so taken for stramashing*, the verbal n. of a supposed verb *stramash. Otherwise a made verb, on the basis of stramazoun; cf. squabash, a word of similar type.] To strike, beat, or bang; break; destroy. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

stramash (stra-mash'), n. [See stramash, v.] A tumult; fray; fight; struggle; row; disturbance. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Seaforth profited by the confusion to take the delinquent who had caused this stramash by the arm.
Barham, Ingolishby Legends, I. 35.

stramazone, stramazoun, n. [OF. estramazon, a cut with a sword, a downright blow, bang, < It. stramazone, a cut with a sword, a blow in fencing, < stramazzo, a knock-down blow.] In old fencing, a cut delivered from the wrist with the extreme edge of the sword near the point. Egerton Castle, Schools and Masters of Fence.

I, being loth to take the deadly advantage that lay before me of his left side, made a kind of stramazoun, ran him up to the hilts through the doublet, through the shirt, and yet missed the skin.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 4.

stramineous (strā-min'ō-us), a. [OF. stramineus, made of straw, < stramen, straw, litter: see stramaye.] 1. Consisting of straw; strawy. — 2. Like straw; light.

His sole study is for words . . . to set out a stramineous subject.
Barton, Anat. of Mel., p. 223.

straw-colored; pale-yellowish.
strammel (stram'el), n. [OF. estramier, straw, < estram, estrain, stran = It. strame, straw, litter, < L. stramen, straw: see stramaye.] Straw; litter. [Cant.]

Sleep on the strammel in his barn.
Scott, Guy Mannering, xxviii.

stramonium (strā-mō'ni-um), n. [F. stramonium = Sp. Pg. estramonio = It. stramonina, < NL. stramonium (stramonium spinosum), stramonina, stramonium, stramonium; origin obscure.]

1. The thorn-apple, Datura Stramonium: so called particularly as a drug-plant. It is a stout ill-scented poisonous weed with green stem and pure-white flowers, widely diffused, in America often called Jamestown weed or jinson-weed. D. Tatula, a similar, but commonly taller, species with purple stem and pale-violet corolla (purple stramonium), has the same properties. It is found in the Atlantic United States.

2. An official drug consisting of the seeds or leaves of stramonium, the seeds being more powerful. Its properties are the same as those of belladonna. See belladonna and Datura.—Stramonium ointment. See ointment.—Stramonium plaster. See plaster.

stramony (stram'ō-ni), n. [OF. stramonium.] Stramonium.

strand¹ (strand), n. [OF. strand, strond, < AS. strand = MD. strande, D. strand = late MHG. strant, G. strand = Icel. strönd (strand) = Sw. Dan. strand, border, edge, coast, shore, strand; root unknown.] 1. The shore or beach of the sea or ocean, or (in former use) of a lake or river; shore; beach.

He fond hi the stronde,
Arived on his londe,
Schipes oftene.

King Horn (E. E. T. S.), I. 35.

The strand
Of precious India no such Treasure shows.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, iii. 24.

2. A small brook or rivulet. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]—3. A passage for water; a gutter. B. Jonson, Epig. of Inigo Jones. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch (Scotch also strawn).]—Strand mole-rat, the Cape mole-rat of South Africa, Bathyergus maritimus. See mole-rat, and cut under Lathyrgus.

strand¹ (strand), v. [= D. MLG. G. stranden = Icel. Sw. stranda = Dan. strande; from the noun.] I. trans. To drive or run aground on the sea-shore: as, the ship was stranded in the fog; often used figuratively.

II. intrans. 1. To drift or be driven on shore; run aground, as a ship.

Stranding on an isle at moru. Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

2. To be checked or stopped; come to a standstill.

strand² (strand), n. [With excrement d, for stran* (Sc. strawn), < D. streen, a skein, hand of thread, = OHG. streno, MHG. strene, stren, G. stribne, a skein, hank; root unknown.] 1. A number of yarns or wires twisted together to form one of the parts of which a rope is twisted; hence, one of a number of flexible things, as grasses, strips of bark, or hair, twisted or woven together. Three or more strands twisted together form a rope. See cut under ermen, v. t., 9.

Wampum heads and birchen strands Dropping from her careless hands.

Whittier, Truce of Piscataqua.

2. A single thread; a filament; a fiber.

The continuous communication of the gray matter of the spinal cord with the motor and sensory strands.

J. M. Carver, Operative Surgery, p. 97.

3. A string. [Scotch, in the form strawn.]—Mycelial strand. Same as fibrous mycelium (which see, under mycelium).

strand² (strand), v. t. [OF. strand, n.] 1. To break one or more of the strands of (a rope).—2. In rope-making, to form by the union or twisting of strands.—Stranded wire, a wire rope. [Eng.]

strand-bird (strand'bērd), n. Any limicoline wading bird which is found on the strand or beach, as a beach-bird, sanderling, sandpiper, sand-snipe, bay-snipe. See the distinctive names, and shore-bird, bay-birds.

stranding-machine (stran'ding-ma-shēn'), n. A machine for twisting strands into ropes.

strand-mycele, strand-mycelium (strand'mi-sēl', -mī-sē'li-um), n. Same as fibrous mycelium (which see, under mycelium).

strand-plover (strand'pluv'ēr), n. The Swiss, gray, bull-head, or black-bellied plover, Squatarola helvetica. See cut under Squatarola.

strand-rat (strand'rat), n. The strand mole-rat (which see, under *strand*¹).

strand-wolf (strand'wūlf), n. The brown hyena, Hyena villosa, found in South Africa.

strang (strang), a. A dialectal form of *strong*¹. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

strange (strānj), a. [Early mod. E. straunge; < ME. strange, straunge, estrange, < OF. estrange, estrange, estraigne, estrange, etc., F. étrange = It. strano, strange, foreign, < L. extraneus, that is without, external, < extra, without, on the outside: see extraneous, extra.] 1. Foreign; alien; of or belonging to some other country. [Archaic.]

I have been an alien in a strange land. Ex. xviii. 3.
She hadde passed many a straunge strem.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 464.

Also asouche as may be, eschew straunge words.
Gauecoigne, Notes on Eng. Verse (Steele Glas, etc., ed. [Arber].)

One of the strange queen's lords.
Shak., L. L. L., iv. 2. 134.

2. Of or pertaining to another or others; alien; belonging to others, or to some other place or neighborhood; not lawfully belonging to one; intrusive.

The mouth of strange women is a deep pit.
Prov. xxii. 14.

Strange fowl light upon neighbouring ponds.
Shak., Cymbeline, i. 4. 97.

Call me not Mother; for if I brought thee forth, it was As foolish heus at times hatch vipers, by Sitting upon strange eggs.
Byron, Deformed Transformed, i. 1.

3. Not before known, heard, or seen; unfamiliar; unknown; new: as, the custom was strange to them.

To knowe the verrey degree of any maner sterre straunge or unstraunge after his longitude, thow he be indeterminat in their astralabic.
Chaucer, Astrolabe, ii. 17.

Our strange garments cleave not to their mould
But with the aid of use. Shak., Macbeth, l. 3. 145.

Then a soldier,
Full of strange oaths, . . .
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel.
Shak., As you Like it, ii. 7. 150.

Sat 'neath strange trees, on new flowers growing there,
Of scent unlike to those we knew of old.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 44.

4. Outlandish; queer; odd.

This power that some of them have is disguised gear and strange fashions. Latimer, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

They were enforced for feare of quarell & blame to disguise their players with strange apparell, and by colouring their faces and carrying hatts & capps of diuerse fashions to make them selves lesse known.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 25.

5. Unusual; singular; wonderful; surprising; remarkable; of a kind to excite curiosity; not easily explained or explainable: as, a strange story, if true; a strange hallucination.

This is above strange.
That you should be so reckless!
B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, iii. 3.

Losing, by a strange after-game of Folly, all the battels we had won. Milton, Free Commonwealth.

You will see an odd country, and sights that will seem strange to you. Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 228.

6. Like a stranger; reserved; distant; estranged; not familiar.

And Joseph saw his brethren, and he knew them, but made himself strange unto them, and spake roughly unto them.
Gen. xlii. 7.

Little and little he [Cæsar] withdrew from men his accustomed gentleness, becoming more . . . strange in countenance than euer before.

Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, ii. 5.

Let us be very strange and well bred.
Congreve, Way of the World, iv. 5.

7. Unacquainted; inexperienced; unversed.

I know thee well;
But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.
Shak., T. of A., iv. 3. 56.

8. Unfavorable; averse to one's suit.

Thow that his lady euer more be strange,
Yit lat hym serve hire til that he be ded.
Chaucer, Parllament of Fowls, l. 584.

A strange fish. See a cool fish, under fish.—Strange sail (naul.), an unknown vessel.—To make a thing strange, to make it a matter of difficulty, or of surprise or astonishment.

Strauunge he made it of hir mariage;
His purpos was for to bistowe hire hye
Into some worthy blood of aunceyry.
Chaucer, Reeve's Tale, l. 60.

She makes it strange; but she would be best pleased
To be so ager'd with another letter.
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 2. 102.

To make strange, to seem to be surprised or shocked; look astonished; express astonishment.

Lyford denied, and made strange of sundry things laid to his charge.
N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 116.

= Syn. 4. Singular, Odd, etc. See eccentric.—5. Surprising, Curious, etc. See wonderful.

strange (strānj), v. [OF. straungen; < strange, a.; in part by aphoresis from estrange, q. v.] I. trans. To alienate; estrange.

And these preseedents consedred wolde discourage any man to a bide but a litel amouges hem that so stranged hem self from me and mistrusted me.
Paston Letters, I. 508.

II. intrans. 1. To wonder; to be astonished.

Whereat I should strange more, but that I find . . .
Fuller, Holy War, p. 169. (Latham.)

2. To be estranged or alienated.

strange (strānj), adv. [OF. strange, a.] Strangely.
She will speak most bitterly and strange.
Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 36.

strangeful (strānj'fūl), a. [OF. strange + -ful.] Strange; wonderful. [Rare.]

O Frantick France! why dost not Thou make vse
Of strangeful Signes, whereby the Heav'ns induce Thee to repentance?
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 2.

strangely (strānj'li), adv. In a strange manner, in any sense of the word strange.

strangeness (strānj'nes), n. The state or character of being strange, in any sense of that word.

stranger (strānj'jēr), n. [OF. stranger, strauunger, estruunger, < OF. estrange, F. étranger (= It. straniere), a stranger, foreigner, < estrange, strange: see strange.] 1. One who comes from another country or region; a foreigner.

There shall no stranger eat of the holy thing.
Lev. xxii. 10.

And there ben aouthre Thieves ne Robbours in that Contree; and every man worschipe the other; but no man there dothe no reverence to no Strauungers, but zif they ben grete Princes.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 250.

I am a most poor woman, and a stranger,
Born out of your dominions.
Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 4. 15.

2. A person with whom one is not acquainted; one whose name and character are unknown.

I do desire we may be better strangers.
Shak., As you Like it, iii. 2. 275.

"As I hope to be sav'd," the stranger said,
"One foot I will not flee."
Robin Hood and the Stranger (Child's Ballads, V. 406).

The name of envy is a stranger here.
Fletcher (and another?), Nice Valour, v. 2.

3. One who is ignorant (of) or unacquainted (with): with to.

I am no stranger to such easy calms
As sit in tender bosoms.
Ford, Broken Heart, iii. 4.

I . . .
Unspeak mine own detraction, here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature.
Shak., Macbeth, iv. 3. 125.

They say she's quite a stranger to all his gallantries.
Sirif, Polite Conversation, iii.

4. One not belonging to the house; a guest; a visitor.

A messenger passed forth the by,
Wher Caffray with gret toth was in his manere
At ioyous disport ryght full merly
At Lusignen castell with strangers many.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), I. 6017.

Fit to honour and receive
Our heavenly stranger. Milton, P. L., v. 316.

5. In law, one not privy or party to an act.—
6. Something popularly supposed or humorously said to botoken the approach of a stranger or guest, as guttering in a candle or a teastalk in a cup of tea.—7. Specifically, in entom., the noctuid moth Hadena peregrina; an English collectors' name.—Strangers' Court. See court.—Strangers' fever. See fever.
stranger† (strān'jēr), v. t. [stranger, n.] To estrange; alienate.

Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath.
Shak., Lear, l. 1. 207.

strangle (strang'gl), v.; pret. and pp. strangled, ppr. strangling. [ME. stranglen, < OF. estrangler, F. étrangler = Sp. Pg. estrangular = It. strangolare, strangulare, < L. strangulare, < Gr. στραγγαλίειν, στραγγαλίσειν, strangle, < στραγγαλίειν, a halter, cf. στραγγός, twisted, < στράγγειν*, draw tight, squeeze; cf. L. stringere, draw tight; see strain, stringent.] I. trans. 1. To choke by compression of the windpipe; kill by choking; throttle.

And yet I'll have it done; this child shall strangle thee.
Fletcher, Pilgrim, il. 2.

2. To suppress; keep from emergence or appearance; stifle.

Strangle such thoughts as these with any thing
That you behold the while. Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 47.

3†. To suffocate by drowning. Defoc. = Syn. 1. Choke, Stifle, etc. See smother.

II. intrans. To be choked or strangled.

strangle (strang'gl), n. [ME. strangle; < strangle, v.] 1†. Strangulation. Chaucer.—
2. pl. An infectious eatairh of the upper air-passages, especially the nasal cavity, of the horse, ass, and mule, associated with suppuration of the submaxillary and other lymphatic glands. The disease usually attacks young animals. Enfeebled health, exposure, and neglect are predisposing causes. It may appear as an epizootic in large stables. The mortality is from 2 to 3 per cent. The disease begins with fever and a serous discharge from the nose, which later becomes viscid. At the same time a swelling appears under the jaws, indicating inflammation and suppuration of the submaxillary glands. The disease ordinarily lasts several weeks. Complications may, however, appear. The throat and neighboring lymphatics may become involved and the infection extend to various parts of the system, giving rise to pyemia. Specific bacteria (Streptococci) have been found in the suppurating glands.
strangleable (strang'gl-ə-bl), a. [strangle + -able.] Capable of being strangled. [Rare.]

I own, I am glad that the capital strangler should in his turn be strangleable, and now and then strangled.
Chesterfield.

strangler (strang'glēr), n. [OF. estrangleur, F. étrangleur = It. strangolatore, < ML. strangulator, < L. strangulare, strangle; see strangle.] One who or that which strangles or destroys.

The band that seems to tie their friendship together will be the very strangler of their amity.

Shak., A. and C., ii. 6. 130.

strangle-tare (strang'gl-tār), n. The broom-rape, Orobanchē: so named from its parasitism upon tares or other plants; also, species of Vicia and Lathyrus, as tares which strangle other plants by their climbing; also, the twining parasite Cuscuta Europaea, European dodder. See cuts under Cuscuta and Orobanchē. [Old or prov. Eng.]

strangleweed (strang'gl-wēd), n. The dodder, Cuscuta, and, in books, the broom-rape, Orobanchē. Compare strangle-tare. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names. [Old or prov. Eng.]

stranguary†, n. Same as strangury. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ix. 5.

strangulate (strang'gū-lāt), a. [L. strangulatus, pp. of strangulare, strangle; see strangle.] Same as strangulated.

strangulate (strang'gū-lāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. strangulated, ppr. strangling. [L. strangulatus, pp. of strangulare, strangle; see strangle.] To strangle; in pathol., to compress so as to suppress the function of a part, as a loop of intestine, a vessel, or a nerve. See strangulated.

Creepers of literature, who suck their food, like the ivy, from what they strangulate and kill.

Southey, Doctor, Interchapter vii. (Davies.)

A strong double ligature was passed through this part of the cheek, with the intention of strangulating the projection [a tubercle or tumor] at its base.

J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 47.

strangulated (strang'gū-lā-ted), p. a. 1. In pathol., compressed so as to suppress the function of a part; as, a hernia is said to be strangulated when it is so compressed as to obstruct the circulation in the part and cause dangerous symptoms.—2. In bot., contracted and expanded in an irregular manner.—3. In entom., constricted; much narrowed; especially noting the thorax or abdomen when constricted in one or more places, as in many ants.—Strangulated hernia. See def. 1 and hernia.

strangulation (strang-gū-lā'shōn), n. [F. strangulation = Sp. estrangulacion = Pg. estrangulacao = It. strangolazione, < L. strangulatio(n)-, a choking, a suffocating, < strangulare, pp. strangulatus, choke, suffocate; see strangle.]

1. The act or state of strangling; a sudden and violent compression of the windpipe, constriction being applied directly to the neck, either around it or in the fore part, or from within the esophagus, so as to prevent the passage of air, and thereby suspend respiration and, if the constriction is prolonged, destroy life.—2. In pathol., the state of a part too closely constricted, as the intestine in strangulated hernia.—3. Excessive or abnormal constriction of any kind.

At the point where the strangulation takes place the glacier lies in a kind of basin, of which the lower lip presents proofs of the most intense erosion.

A. Geikie, Geol. Sketches, vi.

strangurious (s'rang-gū'ri-us), a. [LL. stranguriosus, affected with strangury, < L. stranguria, strangury; see strangury.] Affected with strangury; of the nature of strangury; noting the pain of strangury.

strangury (strang'gū-ri), n. [F. strangurie = OSp. estranguria, Sp. estranguria = Pg. estranguria = It. stranguria, < L. stranguria, < Gr. στραγγυρία, retention of urine, < στράγγειν (στραγγειν), a drop, that which is squeezed out (< *στράγγειν, draw or bind tight, squeeze; see strangle), + οὔριον, urinate, < οὔρον, urine.] 1. Scanty micturition with painful sense of spasm.

He, growing ancient, became sick of the stone, or strangury, whereof, after his suffering of much dolorous pain, he fell asleep in the Lord.

N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 262.

2. In hort., a disease in plants produced by tight ligatures.

strap (strap), n. [Also, more orig., strop, dial. strobe (the form strop being also in reg. E. use in some senses); < ME. stroppe, strobe, < AS. strop = MD. strop, strop, D. strop = MLG. strop = MHG. stroppe, strips, G. stroppe, stroppe, stroppe = Sw. strop = Dan. strop, a strap, = OF. estrope, F. étrope = Sp. Pg. estrovo, an oar-thong, < L. stropus, stropus, a thong, strap, fillet, akin to Gr. στροβός, a twisted band, < στροβειν, twist; see strophe. Doublet of strop.] 1. A narrow strip of leather or other flexible material, generally used for some mechanical purpose, as to surround and hold together, or to retain in place. In ordinary use straps are most frequently of leather, and are often used with one or more buckles, or a buckle and slide, allowing of a more or less close adjustment of the strap. See cut under shot-pouch. Specifically—(a) Naut.: (1) A piece of rope with the ends spliced together, used for attaching a tackle to anything or for slinging any weight to be lifted. (2) A ring of rope or band of iron put round a block or deadeye, suspending it or holding it in place. Sometimes spelled strop. (b) A razor-strap. See razor-strap and strop. (c) An ornament like a strap; a shoulder-strap. See shoulder-strap, 2.

2. A long and narrow piece of thin iron or other metal used to hold different parts together, as of a frame or the sides of a box; a leaf of a hinge; in carp., an iron plate for connecting two or more timbers, to which it is bolted or screwed.—3. In bot., the ligule in florets of Compositæ (see ligule); also, in some grasses, the leaf exclusive of its sheath.—4. A string. [Scotch.]

They winna string the like o' him up as they do the pair whig bodies that they catch in the mairs, like straps o' onions.
Scott, Old Mortality, x.

5. Credit; originally, credit for drink. [Slang.]

—6. In a vehicle: (a) A plate on the upper side of the tongue and resting upon the double-tree, to aid in holding the wagon-hammer. (b) A clip, such as that which holds a spring to the spring-bar or to the axle. (c) The stirrup-shaped piece of a clevis. E. H. Knight.—7. A strap-oyster.

strap (strap), v. t.; pret. and pp. strapped, ppr. strapping. [strap, n.] 1. To fasten or bind with a strap; especially in the sense of compressing and holding very closely: often with up or down.

He carries white thread gloves, sports a cane, has his trousers tightly strapped.
W. Besant, Fifty Years Ago, p. 49.

2. To beat or chastise with a strap. [Colloq.]—3. To sharpen with a strap; strop, as a razor.

"I shouldn't wonder if we had a snow-storm before it's over, Molly," said Pluck, strapping his knife on the edge of the kit.
S. Judd, Margaret, l. 17.

4. To hang. [Scotch.]

Weel I wot it 'a a crime, bath by the law of God and man, and mony a pretty man has been strapped for it [murder].
Scott, St. Ronan's Well, xiv.

To be or become strapped, to lose one's money; be bankrupt or out of money. [Slang.]—To strap a deadeye, to fasten a strap of rope or iron round a block, deadeye, or bull's-eye.

strap-bolt (strap'bōlt), n. Same as lug-bolt.

strap-game (strap'gām), n. A swindling trick otherwise known as prick the garter, prick at the loop, and fast and loose (which see, under fast, a.).

strap-head (strap'hed), n. In mach., a journal-box formed at the end of a connecting-rod.

strap-hinge (strap'hinj), n. See hinge.

strap-joint (strap'joint), n. In mach., a connection formed by a strap, key, and gib, as on the end of a pitman. E. H. Knight.

strap-laid (strap'lād), a. Noting a flat rope made by placing two or more strands of hawser-laid rope side by side, piercing them laterally, and binding them together by twine inserted through the pierced holes.

strap-mounts (strap'mounts), n. pl. The buckles, chapes, slides, etc., with which leather straps are fitted.

strap-oil (strap'oil), n. A beating. [Humorous.]
strap-oyster (strap'ois'tēr), n. A long slender oyster which grows upright in mud. Also called stuck-up, stick-up, coon-heel, shaughai, razor-blade, rabbitear, etc. [New Jersey.]

strappado (stra-pā'dō), n. [Formerly also strappado; < OF. strapade, F. estrapade = Sp. estrapada = It. strappata, < strappare, pull.] A punishment or torture which consisted in raising the victim to a certain height by a rope and letting him fall suddenly, the rope being secured to his person in such a way that the jerk in falling would inflict violent pain. For example, the hands being tied together, the rope would be secured to the wrists; the punishment was more severe when the arms had previously been brought behind the back.

We presently determined rather to seeke our liberties then to bee in danger for euer to be slaves in the country, for it was told vs we should haue y^e strappado.
Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 253.

They vse also the Strappado, hoising them vp and downe by the armes with a cord. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 441.

strappado (stra-pā'dō), v. t. [strappado, n.] To torture by the strappado.

Oh, to redeeme my honour,
I would haue this hand cut off, these my breasts sear'd,
Be rack'd, strappado'd, put to any torment.
Heywood, Woman Killed with Kindness (Works, ed. 1874, II. 141).

strapper (strap'ēr), n. [strap + -er.] 1. One who has to do with straps; specifically, one who has charge of the harnessing of horses.

Men who, though nothing but strappers, call themselves groomers.
Encyc. Brit., XII. 195.

2. Anything bulky; a large, tall person. [Colloq.]

A strapper—a real strapper, Jane; big, brown, and buxom; with hair just such as the ladies of Carthage must have had.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xx.

strapping¹ (strap'ing), n. [Verbal n. of strap, v.] 1. The act of fastening with a strap.—2. A beating; a whipping. [Colloq.]—3. Material for straps, or straps in general.

Securing the loose flaps of the lip with pieces of strapping.
Lancet, 1890, I. 183.

strapping² (strap'ing), p. a. [Ppr. of strap, v., used, like thumping, whacking, whopping, bouncing, and other participial adjectives expressing violent action, to denote something of impressively large size.] Tall; lusty; robust. [Colloq.]

Then that t'other great strapping Lady—I can't hit off her Name.
Congreve, Double-Dealer, lii. 10.

strapping-plate (strap'ing-plāt), n. In mining, one of the wrought-iron plates by which the spears of a pump-rod are bolted together. Also called spear-plate.

strapplet (strap'l), v. t. [Freq. of strap, v.] To bind with a strap; strap; entangle.

His ruin startled th' other steeds, the gears crack'd, and the reins Strapped his fellows.
Chapman, Iliad, xvi. 438.

strap-rail (strap'rāl'), n. A flat rail laid upon a continuous longitudinal sleeper.

strap-shaped (strap'shāpt), a. Ligulate; shaped like a strap; used especially of the rays of the tubuliferous and the corollas of the liguliferous Compositæ.

strap-skein (strap'skän), n. In carriage-building, a flat strip of iron let into the wood of an axle-arm to protect it from wear.

strap-work (strap'wèrk), n. Architectural ornament consisting of a narrow fillet or band represented as folded and crossed, and occasionally interlaced with another.

strap-worm (strap'wɔrm), n. A cestoid worm of the family Ligulidae.

strawwort (strap'wɔrt), n. A sea-coast plant of the Mediterranean region and western Europe, Corrigiola littoralis, of the Illecebraceae. It is an herb with numerous slender trailing stems, suggesting the name, and small white flowers in little heads or cymes, the sepals petal-like on the margin.

Strasbourg finch, pâté, ware, etc. See *fuch*¹, etc.

strass (stras), n. [So called from the name of the German inventor, Josef Strasser.] 1. Same as *paste*¹, 3.—2. The refuse of silk left in making up skeins. E. H. Knight.

strata, n. Plural of stratum.

strategem (strat'a-jem), n. [Formerly also strategy; early mod. E. strategeme; < OF. stratagem, F. stratème = Sp. estratema = Pg. estrategema, stratagma = It. stratagemma (in Rom. erroneously spelled with a in the second orig. syllable), < L. strategema, < Gr. στρατηγία, the act of a general, a piece of generalship, < στρατηγός, a general, command an army, < στρατήγος, a general, the leader or commander of an army: see strategy.] 1. An artifice in war; a plan or scheme for deceiving an enemy.

The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils.

Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 85.

He [Henry V.] never fought Battle, nor won Town, wherem he prevailed not as much by Stratagem as by Force.

Baker, Chronicle, p. 179.

2. Any artifice; a trick by which some advantage is intended to be obtained.

Ambition is full of distractions; it teems with stratagems, and is swelled with expectations as with a tympany.

Jer. Taylor.

It is an honest stratagem to take advantage of ourselves.

Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 13.

= Syn. 1 and 2. Artifice, Manœver, Trick, etc. See artifice.—2. Deception, plot, trap, device, snare, dodge, contrivance.

strategematic (strat'a-je-mat'ik), a. [< OF. stratagematique, < NL. strategematicus*, < Gr. στρατηγικα (στ-), a stratagem: see stratagem.] Using stratagem; skilled in strategy. Pattenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie (ed. Arber), p. 35. [Rare.]

strategematically (strat'a-je-mat'ik-al-i), adv. By stratagem or artifice. G. Hurey, Four Letters.

strategemic (strat-a-jem'ik), a. [< stratagem + -ic.] Containing or characterized by stratagem or artifice. [Rare.]

strategemical (strat-a-jem'ik-al), a. [< stratagemic + -al.] Same as strategemic. Cotgrave; Swift (?), Tripos, iii.

stratarithmetry (strat-a-rith'me-tri), n. [Irreg. < Gr. στρατός, an army, + ἀριθμός, a number (see arithmetic), + μετρία, μέτρον, measure.] Milit., the art of drawing up an army or body of men in a geometrical figure, or of estimating or expressing the number of men in such a figure. Imp. Diet.

strategic (strat-ē-jet'ik), a. [< Gr. στρατηγικός, pertaining to the command of an army, < στρατηγός, a general, command an army: see stratagem.] Same as strategic. [Rare.]

strategetical (strat-ē-jet'ik-al), a. [< strategic + -al.] Same as strategical.

strategetically (strat-ē-jet'ik-al-i), adv. In a strategetical manner.

strategetics (strat-ē-jet'iks), n. [Pl. of strategetic (see -ics).] Same as strategic.

strategi, n. Plural of strategia, 1.

strategie (stra-tej'ik), a. [= F. stratégique, < Ll. strategieus* (in neut. pl. strategica, the deeds of a general), < Gr. στρατηγικός, of or pertaining to a general, < στρατηγός, a general: see stratagem, and cf. strategy.] Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of strategy; demanded by, used in, or characterized by strategy: as, strategie movements.—Strategie battle. See *battle*¹, 1.

strategical (stra-tej'ik-al), a. [< strategie + -al.] Same as strategie.

strategically (stra-tej'ik-al-i), adv. In a strategical manner; as regards strategy.

strategics (stra-tej'iks), n. [Pl. of strategie (see -ics).] Same as strategie.

strategist (strat'ē-jist), n. [= F. stratègiste; as strateg-y + -ist.] One skilled in strategy.

He [Milton] was a strategist rather than a drill-sergeant in verse, capable, beyond any other English poet, of putting great masses through the most complicated evolutions without elash or confusion, but he was not curious that every foot should be at the same angle.

Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 286.

strategus (stra-tē'gus), n. [< L. strategus, < Gr. στρατηγός, the commander of an army, a general: see strategy.] 1. Pl. strategi (-jī). A military commander in ancient Greece: as, Darius was strategus of the Achaean League.—2. [cap.] [NL. (Hope, 1837).] In entom., a genus of large American scarabæid beetles, whose males usually have three prothoracic horns. They are mainly tropical and subtropical, but S. antæus extends north to Massachusetts.—3. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of mollusks.

strategy (strat'ē-jī), n. [< OF. strategie, F. strategie = Sp. estrategia = It. strategia, strategy (cf. L. strategia, a government, province), < Gr. στρατηγία, the office or dignity of a commander, generalship, a pretorship, government, province, < στρατηγός, the leader or commander of an army, a general, a governor, pretor, consul, < στρατός, an army, host, soldiery (prop. an encamped army, lit. 'scattered, spread' (= L. stratus, scattered, spread), < στροπερνύω = L. sternere (pp. stratus), scatter, spread, strew: see stratum), + ἀγέω, lead (see agent).] 1. The science of combining and employing the means which the different branches of the art of war afford, for the purpose of forming projects of operations and of directing great military movements; the art of moving troops so as to be enabled either to dispense with a battle or to deliver one with the greatest advantage and with the most decisive results; generalship. In strategy three things demand especial consideration: (1) the base of operations, or line from which an army commences its advance upon an enemy; (2) the objective, or objective point, the point which it aims to possess, or the object which it strives to attain; (3) the line of operations, or that line which an army must pass over to attain its objective point. When an army assumes a strictly defensive attitude, the base of operations becomes the line of defense, and in a retrograde movement the line of operations becomes the line of retreat. Strategical points are the points of operations of an army—namely, points whose occupation secures an undoubted advantage to the army holding them for offensive and defensive purposes, and points which it is the chief object of an army to attain. The theater of operations comprises the territory to be invaded or defended by an army. It includes the base of operations, the objective point, the front of operations, the lines of operation, the lines of communication which connect the several lines of operations, obstacles, natural or artificial, lines of retreat, and places of refuge. The front of operations is the length of the line in advance of the base of operations covered or occupied by an army.

2. The use of artifice, finesse, or stratagem for the carrying out of any project.

strath (strath), n. [< Gael. srath = Ir. srath, sratha = W. ysrath, a valley; perhaps connected with street, ult. < L. stratus: see street.] In Scotland, a valley of considerable size, often having a river running through it and giving it its distinctive appellation: as, Strathspey (the valley of the Spey), Strathearn (the valley of the Earn), and Strathmore (the great valley).

strathspey (strath-spā'), n. [So called from Strathspey in Scotland.] 1. A Scotch dance, invented early in the eighteenth century, resembling the reel, but slower, and marked by numerous sudden jerks.

While youths and maids the light strathspey
So nimbly danced, with Highland glee!

Scott, Glenfinlas.

2. Music for such a dance or in its rhythm, which is duple, moderately rapid, and abounding in the rhythmic or metric figure called the Scotch snap or catch (which see, under *Scotch*¹), or its converse.

stratulate (strā-tik'ū-lāt), a. [< NL. stratuleatus*, < straticulum*, dim. of stratum, a layer: see stratum.] Arranged in thin layers, as a banded agate.

stratification (strat'i-fī-kā'shon), n. [= F. stratification = Sp. estratificación = It. stratificazione: as stratify + -ation.] 1. The act of stratifying, or the state of being stratified; formation or arrangement in layers.

It was formerly the practice in England, as it still is on the Continent, to tan by the process of stratification, for which purpose a bed of bark is made upon the bottom of the pit; upon this is laid the hide, then bark, then a hide, and so on until the pit is full. Eneye Brit., XIV 385.

2. Specifically, in geol., deposition in beds or strata; the mode of occurrence of those rocks which have been laid down or spread over the surface by water. The most important indication and result of stratification is that the rock separates more or less easily along the planes separating the beds or strata. Each stratification-plane marks a change in the character of the deposit, or a shorter or longer period during which deposition was suspended. Often one stratum is succeeded by another of quite different character, showing a change in the existing conditions. Sometimes, however, a rock is distinctly stratified, but each stratum separates easily into much thinner layers, closely resembling one another in petrographic character; this is generally called lamination.

In some cases the apparent stratification seems to be of the nature of an imperfect cleavage, there having been a certain amount of rearrangement of the particles of the rock parallel to the planes of deposition. See cuts under Artemian and erosion.

3. In physiol., the thickening of a cell-wall by the deposition of successive thin layers of formed material; also, the arrangement of the layers so deposited.

It is now known that stratification is due to a subsequent change in the amount of water of organization present in particular parts of the cell wall. Bessey, Botany, p. 33.

4. In elect., the appearance presented by an electric discharge, or a series of rapid discharges, in a rarefied gas, light and dark bands or striæ being produced.

stratified (strat'i-fīd), p. a. Arranged or disposed in layers or strata: as, stratified rocks. See cut under erosion.—Stratified cartilage, ordinary white fibrocartilage.—Stratified epithelium, see epithelium.—Stratified thallus, in lichens, a thallus in which the gonidia, or algal cells, are disposed in one or more layers, thus producing stratification. See heteromeros, (c) (2).

stratiform (strat'i-fōrm), a. [< NL. stratum, a layer, + forma, form.] Forming or formed into a layer or lamella; embedded as a stratum or layer; stratified: specifically used in the anatomy of a form of cartilage.—Stratiform cartilage or fibrocartilage, a layer of cartilage embedded in a groove of bone along which the tendon of a muscle plays; referring not to a special kind of cartilage, but to the particular form in which it is arranged. The cartilage lining the bicipital groove of the humerus, on which the tendon of the long head of the biceps glides, is an example.

stratify (strat'i-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. stratified, pp. stratifying. [= F. stratifier = It. stratificare, < NL. stratum, a layer, + L. facere, make, do.] To form into a layer or layers, as substances in the earth; lay or arrange in strata.

stratigrapher (strā-tig'ra-fēr), n. [< stratigraph-y + -er.] One who devotes himself to the study of stratigraphical geology. Nature, XLIII. 142.

stratigraphic (strat-i-graf'ik), a. [< stratigraph-y + -ic.] Having to do with the order of succession, mode of occurrence, and general geological character of the series of stratified rocks of which the earth's crust is largely composed.

stratigraphical (strat-i-graf'ik-al), a. [< stratigraphic + -al.] Same as stratigraphic.

stratigraphically (strat-i-graf'ik-al-i), adv. In a stratigraphic manner; as regards stratigraphy, or the disposition of strata.

stratigraphist (strā-tig'ra-fist), n. [< stratigraph-y + -ist.] One who studies stratigraphy; a stratigrapher. Nature, XXXVIII. 506.

stratigraphy (strā-tig'ra-fi), n. [< NL. stratum, a layer, + Gr. -γραφία, < γράφω, write.] In geol., order and position of the stratified groups; all that part of geological science which is not specially theoretical or paleontological; general descriptive geology.

Stratiomyia (strat'i-ō-mī'i-ī), n. [NL. (Macquart, 1838), orig. Stratiomyis (Geoffroy, 1764), also Stratiomya (Schiner, 1868), Stratiomyis (Schelling, 1803), Stratiomyis (J. E. Gray, 1832); irreg. < Gr. στρατιώτης, a soldier, + μύια, a fly.] The typical genus of the family Stratiomyidae. They are medium-sized or rather large flies of dark color with light spots or stripes. The larvae live in mud or damp sand, and the flies are found upon umbelliferous and other flowers growing near water. About 40 species are known in North America, and about 20 in Europe. They are sometimes called chameleon-flies, from the name of one species, S. chameleon.

Stratiomyidæ (strat'i-ō-mī'i-ī-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Leach, 1819, as Stratiomyidæ), < Stratiomyia + -idæ.] A family of true flies, belonging to the brachycerous Diptera and to the section Notanthes. It is a large and wide-spread family; about 200 species occur in North America. They vary much in size and color, and have a large hemispherical head, flattened or convex abdomen, and tibiae usually without spurs. They are mostly flower-flies, and are often found upon vegetation in damp places.

Stratioteæ (strat-i-ō'tē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Link, 1829), < Stratiotes + -æ.] A tribe of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Hydrocharideæ and series Glycyrrhææ. It is characterized by a very short stem bearing crowded sessile submerged leaves and usually also long-petioled floating leaves, by peduncled spathes, and by one-celled ovaries spuriously six-celled by intrusion of the lobed placenta. It includes five genera, of which Stratiotes is the type. (See also Hydrocharis.) The others are mostly tropical plants of fresh water, with ovate-oblong or broadly cordate floating leaves and ribbed or winged spathes.

Stratiotes (strat-i-ō'tōz), n. [NL. (in def. 1 (Linnaeus, 1737) so called from the sword-like leaves), < Gr. στρατιώτης, se. στράτις, an Egyptian water-plant, by some said to have been the water-lettuce, Pistia Stratiotes; lit. 'river-solδία, < στρατιώτης, a soldier, < στρατιά, an army, < στρατός, an army; see strategy. Cf. stratiot, estradiot.] 1. A genus of water-plants, of the order Hydrocharidaceae, type of the tribe Stratioteae. It is without floating leaves, unlike the rest of its tribe, and is characterized by spathes of two leaves which in the male enclose the base of a long pedicel bearing two or more flowers with from 11 to 15 stamens each. The female flowers are solitary and short-pedicelled, with numerous linear staminodes, 6 slender two-cleft styles, and a beaked ovary becoming in fruit ovoid and acuminate, externally fleshy, and exerted from its spathe on a recurved pedicel. The only species, S. alodes, the water-soldier, is a native of Europe and Siberia, and resembles a small aloe. It is a perennial submerged aquatic, with somewhat fleshy crowded sword-shaped leaves, which are acute, sessile, and sharply serrate. The flowers are borne above the surface of the water; each perianth consists of three calyx-like segments and three much larger wavy crisped white petals. Old names are knightswort, crab's-claw, and water-sengreen.

2. In entom., a genus of South American carabid beetles. Putzeys, 1846.

strato-cirrus (strā-tō-sir'us), n. [NL., < stratus + cirrus.] A cloud very like cirro-stratus, but more compact in structure, and formed at a lower altitude. Abercromby.

stratocracy (strā-tok'ra-si), n. [Gr. στρατός, an army, + κρατία, < κρατείν, rule.] A military government; government by force of arms.

Enough exists to show that the form of polity [according to Plato's system] would be a martial aristocracy, a qualified stratocracy. De Quincy, Plato.

strato-cumulus (strā-tō-kū'mū-lus), n. [NL., < stratus + cumulus.] A stratum of low cloud consisting of separate irregular masses; a cloud of the layer type, but not sufficiently uniform to be pure stratus. Also called cumulo-stratus.

stratographic (strat-ō-graf'ik), a. [Gr. στρατογραφία + -ic.] Pertaining to stratography.

stratographical (strat-ō-graf'i-kal), a. [Gr. στρατογραφία + -al.] Same as stratographic.

stratographically (strat-ō-graf'i-kal-i), adv. In a stratographic manner.

stratography (strā-tog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. στρατός, an army, + γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] Description of armies or what belongs to an army.

A great commander by land and by sea, he [Raleigh] was critical in all the arts of stratography, and delights to illustrate them on every occasion.

I. D'Israeli, Amen, of Lit., II, 273.

Stratonic (strā-ton'ik), a. Same as Stratonical.

Stratonical (strā-ton'i-kal), a. [Gr. Strato (see def.) + -ical.] Pertaining to Strato or Straton of Lampasacus, called "the physicist," the third head of the Peripatetic school of philosophy, over which he presided from 288 to 270 B. C. He was a thorough materialist, and held that every particle of matter has a plastic and seminal power, and that the world is formed by natural development.—Stratonical atheism, a form of evolutionism which replaces the absolute chance of the Epicureans by a sort of life which is regarded as an intrinsic attribute of matter.

There is, indeed, another form of atheism, . . . we for distinction sake shall call Stratonical, such as, being too modest and shamed to fetch all things from the fortuitous motion of atoms, would therefore allow to the several parts of matter a certain kind of natural (though not animal) perception, such as is devoid of reflexive consciousness, together with a plastic power whereby they may be able artificially and methodically to form and frame themselves to the best advantage of their respective capabilities—something like to Aristotle's Nature, but that it hath no dependence at all upon any higher mind or deity. Cudworth, Intellectual System, ii, § 3.

stratopelite (strā-tō'pē-it), n. [Gr. stratum, a layer; second element uncertain.] A hydrous silicate of manganese, of uncertain composition, derived from the alteration of rhodonite.

stratose (strā'tōs), a. [Gr. stratosus, < stratum, a layer; see stratum.] In bot., stratified; arranged in more or less clearly defined layers. Farlow, Marine Algae, p. 51.

stratotic (strā-tot'ik), a. [Irreg. < Gr. στρατός, an army, + -itic; or erroneously for stratiotic, < Gr. στρατιωτικός, of or pertaining to a soldier, < στρατιώτης, a soldier; see Stratiotes.] Warlike; military. [Rare.] Imp. Diet.

stratum (strā'tum), n.; pl. strata (-tā). [NL., < L. stratum, a spread for a bed, a coverlet, quilt, blanket, a pillow, bolster, a bed, also pavement, prop. neut. of stratus (= Gr. στρατός, an army), pp. of sternere, = Gr. σπορνίβαιναι, spread, extend. Cf. strew.] A layer of material, formed either naturally or artificially. Specifically—(a) In geol., same as bed. See bed, 6 (c), and stratification, also cut under Artesian. (b) In zool. and anat., a layer of tissue, as a membrane, etc.; a lamina or lamella; especially, one of several similar or superposed layers specified by a qualifying word; used with either English or Latin context.—Gonidial stratum. See gonidial.—Rise of strata, in geol. See dip, n., 4 (a).—Secondary strata, in geol., the Mesozoic strata.—Stratum bacillosum. Same as rod-and-cone layer of the retina (which see, under retina).—Stratum cinereum, a layer of gray matter in the nates, lying just beneath the stratum zonale, with few and small ganglion-cells.—Stratum corneum, the outer layer of the epidermis, above the stratum granulosum. See cut under skin.—Stratum cylindrorum. Same as stratum bacillosum.—Stratum gelatinosum, a layer of gray matter of the olfactory bulb, consisting of fusiform or pyramidal gray nerve-cells in a fine mesh of white nerve-fiber.—Stratum glomerulosum, a layer of gray matter of the olfactory bulb, consisting of nodulated masses containing small nuclear cells, among which is a convoluted olfactory nerve-fiber.—Stratum granulosum, the thin stratum next above the stratum spinosum of the epidermis, consisting of cells rendered granular by minute globules of ceratohyalin. It is wanting over the lips and under the nails, and gives the white color to the skin. See cut under skin.—Stratum lacunosum, a layer of the hippocampus major, next above the stratum radiatum, characterized by the open reticulated nature of the neuroglia.—Stratum lucidum, the lowest layer of the stratum corneum of the epidermis. See cut under skin.—Stratum opticum, the layer in the upper quadrilateral body which lies below the stratum cinereum, composed of longitudinal white fibers interspersed with ganglion-cells.—Stratum radiatum, a layer of the hippocampus major, striated at right angles to its surfaces by the processes of the large pyramidal cells which lie along its inner border.—Stratum spinosum, the lowest layer of the epidermis, next to the corium, formed of prickles, and limited above by the stratum granulosum. Also called rete mucosum, rete Malpighii or Malpighi, and stratum Malpighii or Malpighi. See cut under skin.—Stratum zonale, a superficial stratum of white nerve-fibers.

stratus (strā'tus), n. [NL., < L. stratus, a spread for a bed, a coverlet, < sternere, pp. stratus, spread, extend; see stratum.] A continuous horizontal sheet of cloud, generally of uniform thickness. It is essentially a fine-weather cloud, and is characteristic of areas of high pressure. In the evening and morning of fine days it frequently appears as a low foggy canopy overspreading the whole or a part of the sky, and disappears as the heat of the day increases. All low detached clouds which look like lifted fog and are not consolidated into definite form are stratus. It is the lowest of the clouds. Abbreviated s. See cut under cloud.

All cloud which lies as a thin flat sheet must either be pure stratus or contain the word strato in combination.

Abercromby, Weather, p. 71.

straucht, straight¹ (strācht), a. and v. Obsolete or dialectal (Scotch) forms of straight¹.

straight² (strāt), a. [By aphesis from distraught. Cf. stract.] Distraught.

So as being now straight of minde, desperate, and a verie fool, he goeth, etc.

R. Scot, Witchcraft, L 8 b. (Nares.)

straughter, straight³. Obsolete forms of the preterit and past participle of stretch.

stravagant¹, a. [= It. stravagante; an aphetic form of extravagant.] Extravagant; profuse.

stravaig (stra-vāg'), v. i. [Also stravaige; prop. stravaque*, < OF. estravaquer = OIt. stravagare, < ML. extravagari, wander out or beyond; see extravagant. Cf. stravagant.] To stroll; wander; go about idly. [Scotch and Irish.]

What did ye come here for? To go prancing down to the shore and back from the shore—and stravaying about the place? W. Black, In Far Lochaber, vii.

stravaiger (stra-vā'gēr), n. [Gr. stravaig + -er.] One who wanders about idly; a stroller; a wanderer. [Scotch and Irish.]

straw¹ (strā), n. and a. [= Se. strac; < ME. straw, strau, stru, stre, strec, < AS. stredw*, stred*, stredwe* (found independently only in the form strewu (appar. pl.), in two glosses, otherwise only in comp. streberie, etc.; see strawberry) = OS. strō = OFries. strē = MD. strow, stroy, D. strow = MLG. strō, LG. stro = OHG. strō, MHG. strou, strō (strac, strou, strow), G. stroh = Icel. strā = Sw. strā = Dan. strau, straw; appar. 'that which is scattered about' (if so, it must have been orig. applied to the broken stalks of grain after threshing, the simple sense 'stalk' being then later), from the root of strew (dial. straw): see strew, straw²; cf. L. stramen, straw, < sternere, pp. stratus, strew (see strund³, stramaye, strammuel, stratum).] 1. n. 1. The stalk or stem of certain species of grain, pulse, etc., chiefly of wheat, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, and pease, cut or broken off (and usually dry); also, a piece of such a stem.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws. Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 913.

2. Such stalks collectively, especially after drying and threshing: as, a load of straw. In this sense a collective without plural.

Ne how the fyr was couched first with stree, And thanne with drye stokkes cloven a thre. Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2075.

3. Figuratively, anything proverbially worthless: the least possible thing.

For thy sword and thy bow I care not a straw, Nor all thine arrows to boot. Robin Hood and the Tanner (Child's Ballads, V. 225).

Love, like despair, catches at straws. Scott, Quentin Durward, xxxv.

4. [In allusion to the proverb, "A straw shows which way the wind blows."] A slight fact, taken as an instance in proof of a tendency.—5. A clay pipe, especially a long one. [Colloq.]—6. Same as straw-needle.—7. In entom., a stick-insect; a walking-stick.—Dunstable straw, wheat-straw used for bonnet-plaits. The middle part of the straw above the last joint is selected. It is cut into lengths of about 10 inches, which are then split by a machine into slips of the requisite width. Whole Dunstable signifies a plait that is formed of seven entire straws, while a patent Dunstable consists of fourteen split straws. Simmonds.—Face of straw, a sham; a mere caddy.

Off drops the Vizor, and a Face of Straw appears. Roger North, Examen, III, viii. § 6.

In the straw, lying-in, as a mother; in childbed. Our English plain Proverb de Puerperis, "they are in the straw," shows Feather-Beds to be of no ancient use among the common sort of our nation.

Fulter, Worthies, Lincolnshire, II, 263. (Davies.)

Jack of straw. Same as jackstraw, 1.—Leghorn straw. See leghorn.—Man of straw. See man.—Pad in the straw. See pad².—To break a straw, to quarrel. Udall, tr. of Apophthegms of Erasmus, p. 65.—To draw straws, to give indications of sleepiness.

Lady Anse. I'm sure 'tis time for honest folks to be a-bed. Miss. Indeed my eyes draw straws. Swift, Polite Conversation, iii.

To lay a straw, to pause and make a note. Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 141.

II. a. 1. Made or composed of straw: as, a straw hat.—2. Sham; fictitious; useless: as, a straw bid. Compare straw bail, under bail², 5.—Straw bond. See bond¹.—Straw bonnet, a bonnet made of woven or plaited straw. See straw hat, Dunstable straw (above), and leghorn.—Straw hat, a hat made of straw either woven together in one piece or, as is more common, plaited into a narrow braid which is wound spirally, the separate turns being sewed together where the edges touch. Hats for men and bonnets for women are included under the general term.—Straw mosaic, rope, etc. See the nouns.—Straw vote, a vote taken without previous notice, in a casual gathering or otherwise. See I, 4.

straw¹ (strā), v. t. [Gr. straw¹, n.] To furnish or bind with straw; apply straw to.—Strawed seal, a seal containing a straw, a blade of grass, or a rush, or several of these, embedded in the wax, often around it as a border, or tied in fastening the seal to the document. Such additions to the ordinary seal were often made in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries; but whether the purpose was to strengthen or protect the wax or to preserve a fragment of the clod delivered in making livery of seizin seems to be matter of conjecture.

straw² (strā), v. t. An obsolete or dialectal form of strew. Ex. xxxii, 20.

She strawed the roses on the ground, Threw her mantle on the brier. Lord John (Child's Ballads, I, 135).

strawberry (strā'ber'i), n.; pl. strawberries (-iz). [Gr. strawberry, strawberi, strabery, straberi, strebry, strebri, strebere, also (in comp.) strawbery, strobery, < AS. stredwberic, stredwberige, also contracted strāberie, stredberige, stredberige, also stredwberige, strebberie, late AS. strāberie (in comp.), strawberry (also called corthberie, G. crabberie, 'earth-berry'), < stredw*, straw, + berie, berry; see straw¹ and berry.] The first element, lit. 'straw,' is very rare in AS. use, and its exact application here is uncertain. It may be taken in the sense of 'a long stem,' referring to the runners of the plant, or it may allude to an old habit of stringing the berries on a straw. The word is often erroneously explained as a corruption of a supposed strayberry*, or even as referring to the common use of straw or hay about the plants to keep the earth from soiling the berries. No corresponding name appears in the other languages. Cf. strawberry-wisc.] The fruit of any of the species of the genus Fragaria, or the plant itself. The plants are stemless, propagating by slender runners (whence they are often called strawberry-vines), with trifoliate leaves, and scapes a few inches high, bearing mostly white-petaled flowers in small cymes, followed by the "berry," which consists of an enlarged fleshy receptacle, colored scarlet or other shade of red, bearing the achenes on its exterior. About six natural species are recognized, though these are so variable as to make it possible that they all belong to one multiform species. F. vesca is common throughout the northern Old World and northward in North America. It includes the alpine strawberry, hantboy, and wood-strawberry (see below), was probably the first cultivated, and is the source of many artificial varieties, including the perpetuals. The Virginian or scarlet strawberry, F. virginiana, is common eastward in North America, and in the more robust variety Hinnensis extends perhaps to Oregon. The achenes, which in F. vesca are superficial, are in this species sunk in pits. It was the source of the famous Hovey's seedling, produced near Boston about 1840, and later of Wilson's Albany (or simply Wilson's), whose production marked an epoch in American strawberry-culture. In Chili and along the Pacific coast from San Francisco to Alaska grows the Chill strawberry, F. chilensis, a low stout densely hairy plant with thick leaves and large flowers, which has been the source of valuable hybrids in France and England. The Indian strawberry, F. indica, peculiar in its yellow petals and tasteless fruit, is only of ornamental value. The strawberry was not cultivated by the ancients; its culture in Europe began probably in the fifteenth or sixteenth century. It is now grown in great quantities in Europe and North America for its delicious subacid fruit, which is used fresh for dessert, and also canned or made into jam, and affords a syrup for flavoring drinks, ices, creams, etc. The varieties, which are mainly or wholly from the first three species above named, are numerous and constantly changing. See cuts under flagellum and Fragaria.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle.

Shak., Hen. V., i. 1. 60.

Dr. Hotcher said, of strawberries, "Doubtless God could have made a better berry, but doubtless God never did."

J. Walton, Complete Angler (ed. Bohn), p. 158.

Alpine strawberry, a European form of Fragaria vesca, sometimes distinguished as F. collina.—Ananas strawberry. Same as pine-strawberry.—Barren strawberry, in England, Potentilla Fragariastrum, resembling the strawberry in its trifoliate leaves and white flowers; in America, Waldsteinia fragarioides, having the leaves three-parted, but the flowers yellow. Neither has fleshy fruit.—Bog-strawberry, the marsh-fivefinger, Potentilla palustris. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]—Carolina strawberry, a misnomer of the pine-strawberry, once thought to have come from Carolina.—Chili strawberry. See def. and pine-strawberry.—Crushed strawberry, a crimson-red color of considerably reduced luminosity and somewhat reduced chroma. A color disk of 38 parts pure red, 7 parts artificial ultramarine, 48 parts velvet-black, and 7 parts white shows a crushed strawberry.—Hautboy strawberry. See hautboy, 2.—Pine-strawberry, a variety of the Chili strawberry (see def. above), so called from its pineapple flavor. Also Ananas strawberry. See Carolina strawberry. [Eng.]—Scarlet strawberry, specifically, the Virginian strawberry. [Eng.]—Strawberry-crown borer, a curculionid beetle, Tylo-

(c) One of three geometrids, Petrophora truncata, Nematocampa flamentaria, and Angerone croceataria, whose larvae feed on the foliage. (d) The smeared dagger, Acronycta obliqua.

strawberry-pear

(strá'ber-i-pár), n.

The fruit of a cactaceous plant, Cereus triangularis, of the West Indies, etc., or the plant itself. This plant has three-angled branches which climb by rooting. The fruit is subacid, pleasant, and cooling, and is said to be the best-flavored afforded by any plant of the order.

strawberry-perch

(strá'ber-i-pérel), n.

The grass-bass.

strawberry-plant

(strá'ber-i-plant), n.

1. See strawberry.

2. Same as strawberry-shrub.

strawberry-roan

(strá'ber-i-rôn), a. See roan 1.

strawberry-shrub

(strá'ber-i-shrub), n. The sweet shrub, Calycanthus floridus and other species. See Calycanthus.

strawberry-tomato

(strá'ber-i-tô-má'tô), n. The winter-cherry, Physalis Alkekengi. The berry, inclosed within an inflated calyx, resembles a cherry or a very small tomato in appearance. Also called husk-tomato.

strawberry-tree

(strá'ber-i-trê), n. [ME. strawberry-tree; < strawberry + tree.] 1. The strawberry-plant. See the quotation under strawberry-wise.—2. A handsome evergreen shrub or bushy tree, Arbutus Unedo, native in southern Europe. The scarlet granulated fruit at a distance resembles a strawberry, but is dry and lacking in flavor, though sometimes eaten. In Spain a sugar and a spirit are extracted from it. The flowers appear in autumn, when also the fruit, which ripens only the second season, is present. The name is extended to the other species of the genus. See cut under Arbutus, 3.

strawberry-vine

(strá'ber-i-vîn), n. See strawberry.

strawberry-wisest

(strá'ber-i-wisest), n. [ME. strawberry wise, strawberry wise, strobery wise, stroberwise, < AS. strawberic-wisc, stredberic-wisc, later stræberiewise, strawberry-plant, < stræwberic, strawberry, + wise, here appar. a particular use of wise, way, manner, wise; see strawberry and wise.] The strawberry-plant.

Strawberry wise (strawberry, K. strawber[er] wise, H. strawber[er] wise, S. Fragus. Prompt. Parv., p. 478.

strawberry-worm

(strá'ber-i-wêrm), n. The worm, grub, or caterpillar of any insect which injures the strawberry; especially, the larva of the strawberry saw-fly, Empythus maculatus, more fully called strawberry false-worm. See cut under Empythus. [U. S.]

strawboard

(strá'ber-i-bôrd), n. A thick and coarse hard-rolled fabric of yellow paper or cardboard made of straw: largely used by makers of cheap paper boxes.

straw-buff

(strá'buf), n. Straw-color of very low chroma, as in Manila paper.

straw-built

(strá'bilt), a. Built or constructed of straw. Milton, P. L., i. 773.

straw-cat

(strá'kat), n. The pampas-eat.

straw-coat

(strá'kôt), n. Same as puillasse, 2.

straw-color

(strá'kul'ôr), a. and n. I. a. Straw-colored; stramineous.

Your straw-colour beard. Shak., M. N. D., i. 2. 95.

II. n.

An extremely luminous, very cool yellow color, of somewhat reduced chroma, recalling the color of yellow straw, but cooler in hue. There is a wide range of chroma in colors called by this name.

straw-colored

(strá'kul'ôrd), a. Pale light-yellow, like dry straw; corn-colored; stramineous: as, the straw-colored bat, Natalus albivent-

straw-cotton

(strá'kôt'n), n. A cotton thread made for the manufacture of hats and other articles of straw.

straw-cutter

(strá'kut'éer), n. In agri., any machine for cutting straw and hay into short pieces suitable for feed for cattle.

straw-drain

(strá'drân), n. A drain filled with straw.

straw-embroidery

(strá'em-broi'dér-i), n. Fancy work done upon net, usually black silk net, by means of yellow straw, which forms the flowers and principal parts of the pattern, and silk of the same color.

strawen†

(strá'en), a. [ME. strawen + -en.] Made of straw. Slow.

Strawberry-pear (Cereus triangularis).

Strawberry-crown borer (Tyloderma fragariae). a. larva, full-grown; b. adult beetle, from side; c. same, from above. (Hair-lines show natural sizes.)

ma fragariae, which lays its eggs at the crown of the strawberry-plant in the United States, and whose larva often seriously damages the crop.—Strawberry false-worm. See strawberry saw-fly (below), and strawberry-worm.—Strawberry leaf-roller, a tortricid moth, Phoxoptera fragariae, the larva of which rolls the leaves of the strawberry-plant in the United States; also, one of several other moths whose larva has this habit. See cut under leaf-roller.—Strawberry-leaves, a dukedom: from the eight strawberry-leaves on a ducal coronet.—Strawberry root-borer, a moth, Anarsia lineatella, whose larva burrows in the roots of this plant, and often does great damage.—Strawberry run. See run 1.—Strawberry saw-fly, a small black saw-fly, Empythus maculatus, whose larva is a strawberry-worm. See cut under Empythus.—Strawberry spinach. Same as strawberry-blet.—Strawberry tongue, in med., a red papillated tongue, as seen in scarlatina.—Wild strawberry, any native strawberry; also, sometimes, species of Potentilla, from their resemblance to the true strawberry.—Wood-strawberry, the typical form of Fragaria vesca. [Eng.]

strawberry-bass (strá'ber-i-bás), n. Same as grass-bass.

strawberry-blet (strá'ber-i-blit), n. A species of goosefoot, Chenopodium (Blitum) capitatum, also C. (B.) virgatum, whose flower-heads ripen into a bright-red juicy compound fruit. They are Old World plants found in gardens, and the fruit, though insipid, is said to have been formerly used in cookery. Also called strawberry spinach.

strawberry-borer (strá'ber-i-bór'ér), n. One of several different insects whose larvæ mine, bore, or burrow in the crown, leaf, or root of the strawberry. See the specific phrase-names under strawberry.

strawberry-bush (strá'ber-i-búsh), n. A low upright or straggling American shrub, Euonymus Americana: so named from its crimson and scarlet fruit.

strawberry-clover (strá'ber-i-klô'vêr), n. A species of clover, Trifolium fragiferum, of Europe and temperate Asia. It resembles the common white clover, T. repens, but has the fruiting heads involucre, and very dense from the inflation of the calyxes, which are also somewhat colored, thus suggesting the name.

strawberry-comb (strá'ber-i-kôm), n. See comb 1, 3.

strawberry-crab (strá'ber-i-krab), n. A small maoid or spider-crab of European waters, Eurytemora aspera: so called from the reddish tubercles with which the carapace is studded.

strawberry-finch (strá'ber-i-fínch), n. Same as amadavat.

strawberry-geranium (strá'ber-i-jê-râ'ni-um), n. See geranium and saxifrage.

strawberry-mark (strá'ber-i-márk), n. A kind of birth-mark: a vascular nevus, of reddish color and soft consistency, like a strawberry.

strawberry-moth (strá'ber-i-môth), n. Any moth whose larva injures the strawberry. (a.) A strawberry root-borer. (b.) A strawberry leaf-roller.

straw-fiddle (strá'fid'el), n. A variety of xylophone in which the wooden bars are laid on rolls of straw. Also gigilira and sticcado.

straw-fork† (strá'fôrk), n. A pitchfork.

Flail, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong.

Tusser, September's Husbandry.

straw-house (strá'hous), n. A house for holding straw after the grain has been thrashed out.

strawing (strá'ing), n. The occupation of selling straws in the street and giving with them something which is forbidden to be sold, as indecent papers, political songs, and the like. Mayhev, London Labour and London Poor, I. 229. [Cant.]

straw-necked (strá'nekt), a. Having husky or straw-like feathers on the neck: as, the straw-necked ibis, Carphibis spinicollis.

straw-needle (strá'nê'dl), n. A long thin needle used for sewing together straw braid, as in the manufacture of hats. Also called straw.

straw-ride (strá'rid), n. A pleasure-ride in the country, taken in a long wagon or sleigh filled with straw, upon which the party sit. [Colloq., U. S.]

strawsmall (strá'sínál), n. The whitethroat, Sylvia cinerea: so called from the straw used in constructing its nest. [Eng.]

strawsmear (strá'smêr), n. 1. Same as straw-small.—2. The garden-warbler, Sylvia hortensis.—3. The willow-warbler, Phylloscopus trochilus. [Prov. Eng. in all senses.]

straw-stem (strá'stem), n. 1. In glass-making, the stem of a wine-glass pulled out of the substance of the bowl. Hence—2. A wine-glass having a stem of the above character.

A party of young men . . . let fall that superb cut-glass Claret, and shivered it, with a dozen of the delicately-engraved straw-stems that stood upon the waiter.

G. F. Curtis, Potiphar Papers, ii.

straw-stone (strá'stôn), n. Same as carpholite.

straw-underwing (strá'un'dêr-wing), n. A British noctuid moth, Cerigo cytherea, having straw-colored underwings, with a broad, smoky marginal band.

straw-wine (strá'win), n. Wine made from grapes which have been dried or partly dried by exposure to the sun: so called from the bed of straw upon which they have been laid. Such wine is generally sweet and rich.

We may presume that oseye was a luscious-sweet, or straw-wine, similar to that which is still made in that province (Alsace). Babes Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 203, note.

straw-worm (strá'wêrm), n. The larva of a trichopteron neuropterous insect; a caddis-worm: so called from the bits of straw of which it builds its case. See cut under caddis-worm.

strawy (strá'î), a. [ME. strawe + -y.] Pertaining to, made of, or like straw; consisting of straw; resembling straw.

There the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,

Fall down before him, like the mower's swath.

Shak., T. and C., v. 5. 24.

straw-yard (strá'yârd), n. See the quotation.

They [trampers] come back to London to avail themselves of the shelter of the night asylums or refuges for the destitute (usually called straw-yards by the poor). Mayhev, London Labour and London Poor, II. 133.

straw-yellow (strá'yel'ô), n. A chromatic variety of straw-color, or a yellow verging upon straw-color.

stray (strá), v. [ME. strayen, straien, < OF. estraiër, estrayër, estraer, estraer, wander about, stray (said of an animal, esp. of a horse, going about without its master), also of a person, wander, ramble, prob. lit. 'go about the streets or highways' (= !. stradare, put on the way, show the way) (cf. estraiër, estrayër, wandering about, straying, stray, = Pr. estradier, one who wanders about the streets, < ML. as if strataris*; cf. also It. stradiotto, a wanderer, traveler, gadder, a particular use of stradiotto, a soldier, free-booter (see stradiot, estradiot), associated with strada, street), < estree, stree, strac, also (after Pr.) estrade, a street, road, highway. = Pr. estrada = It. strada, a street, road, highway, < L. strata, a street, road: see *estre*² and street. According to some etymologists the OF. estraiër is prob. = Pr. estraguar, < ML. extravagari, wander, < L. extra, without, + vagari, wander: see extravagant, extravagat. Cf. astray, estray, v. doublets of stray.] I. intrans. 1. To wander, as from a direct course; deviate or go out of the way or from the proper limits; go astray.

A sheep doth very often stray,

And if the shepherd be a while away,

Shak., T. G. of V., i. 1. 74.

2. To wander from the path of truth, duty, or rectitude; turn from the accustomed or prescribed course; deviate.

We have erred, and strayed from thy ways like lost sheep. Book of Common Prayer, General Confession.

Tom Tusher never permitted his mind to stray out of the prescribed University path.

Thackeray, Henry Esmond, x.

3. To move about without or as without settled purpose or direction.

My eye, descending from the hill, surveys

Where Thames among the wanton valleys strays.

Sir J. Denham, Cooper's Hill, l. 160.

The Cardinal de Cabasolle strayed with Petrarch about his valley in many a wandering discourse.

I. D'Israeli, Lit. Char. Men of Genius, p. 147.

=Syn. 1. To straggle.—1 and 3. Wander, Roam, etc. See ramble, v.

II. trans. To cause to stray; mislead; seduce. [Rare.]

Hath not else his eye

Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?

Shak., C. of E., v. 1. 51.

stray¹ (strā), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also straye, straic; by aphesis from stray, n., as well as astray, orig. pp., < F. estrainé, estrayer, strayed, astray, pp. of estraier, estrayer, stray; see *stray*¹, v. Cf. estrayer, n. In defs. II., 3 and 4, directly from the verb.] I. a. Having gone astray; strayed; wandering; straggling; incidental.

Stray beast, that goethe a-stray. Prompt. Parv., p. 478.

That little apothecary who sold a stray customer a pennyworth of saits. Thackeray, Pendennis, ii.

II. n. 1. Any domestic animal that has left an inclosure or its proper place and company, and wanders at large or is lost; an estray.

Impounded as a stray

The King of Scots. Shak., Hen. V., i. 2. 100.

Hence—2. A person or persons astray; a straggler; a truant.

Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd stray.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 2. 120.

There is also a school for strays and truants.

Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 545.

3. The act of wandering. [Rare.]

I would not from your love make such a stray,

To match you where I hate. Shak., Lear, i. 1. 212.

4. A pasturage for cattle. [Prov. Eng.]

The eight hundred acres, more or less, in six different strays without the walls, belonging to the four ancient wards, and on which freemen have exclusive right to depasture their cattle. Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 843.

On the stray, upon stray, deserting; straggling; scattering; wandering.

Lokis well to the listis, that no Iede passe!

If any stert upon stray, strike hym to dethe!

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6258.

Right of stray, the right of pasturing cattle on commons. Hallivell.

stray² (strā), n. [Early mod. E. also strayre*, streure; < ME. strayre, streure, appar. for strayre*, streure, < OF. estraiere, estrayerre, estruihere, estrahierre, estrahiera, f., estraier, estrayer, m. (ML. reflex estraieria, estraieria), usually in pl. estraieres, etc., goods left by an alien or bastard intestate, and escheated to the king as unowned or 'stray,' < estraier, estrayer, adj., straying, stray. The word was confused with the related noun *stray*¹, prop. a straying animal, and as a more technical term suffered some variation in use.] Property left behind by an alien at his death, and escheated to the king in default of heirs.

Somme seruen the kynge, . . . chalengynge hus dettes, Of wardes and of wardemotes, waynes and straynes.

Piers Plowman (C), l. 92.

strayed (strād), p. a. Wandering; astray; as, strayed cattle; a strayed reveler.

strayer (strā'ér), n. [< *stray*¹ + -er¹.] One who or that which strays; a wanderer.

stray-line (strā'lin), n. 1. In whaling, that part of the towline which is in the water when fast to a whale.—2. The unmarked part of a logline, next to the chip, which is allowed to run off before beginning to count, in order to clear the chip from eddies at the stern. The limit of the stray-line is indicated by a rag called the stray-mark.

strayling (strā'ling), n. [< *stray*¹ + -ling¹.] A little waif or stray. [Rare.]

Hardy Asiatic straylings, whose seeds have followed the grains. Grant Allen, Colin Clout's Calendar, p. 182.

stret, n. A Middle English form of *straw*¹.

streak¹ (strēk), v. i. [< ME. streken, a var. of striken, a secondary form of striken (pret. pl. and pp. striken), go: see strike, v., and cf. strakel, v. Cf. snack, ult. < AS. snican. As used in the United States, this verb is commonly associated with *streak*², n. To run swiftly. [Obsolete or prov. Eng. and U. S.]

O'er hill and dale with fury she did dree!

A' roads to her were good and bad alike;

Nane o' 't she wyl'd, but forward on did streak.

Ross, Helenore, p. 56. (Jamieson.)

They jest streaked it out through the battery-door!

H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 172.

streak² (strēk), n. [< ME. streke, strike, < AS. strica, a line, stroke (= MD. streke, D. streck = MLG. streke, LG. streck = OHG. MHG. G. strich, a stroke, line, G. streich, a stroke, blow, etc., = Icel. stryk, strykr, a streak, stroke, = Sw. streck = Dan. streg, a streak, line, = Goth. striks, a stroke of a pen), < strican (pp. stricen), go: see strike, and cf. stroke, *strake*². The L. strīga, a swath, furrow, is of diff. origin.] 1. A line, band, or stripe of somewhat irregular shape.

While the fantastic Tulip strives to break

In two-fold Beauty, and a parted streak.

Prior, Solomon, i.

In dazzling streaks the vivid lightnings play.

Couper, Heroism, l. 18.

2. In mineral., the line or mark of fine powder produced when a mineral is scratched, or when it is rubbed upon a hard, rough surface, as that of unglazed porcelain. The color of the streak is often an important character, particularly in the case of minerals having a metallic luster. For example, certain massive forms of the iron ores hematite and magnetite resemble each other closely, but are readily distinguished by the fact that the former has a red and the latter a black streak.

3. In zool., a color-mark of considerable length for its width, and generally less firm and regular than a stripe. See streaked, streaky, and compare stripe, 1.—4. Figuratively, a trait; a vein; a turn of character or disposition; a whim.

Some Streaks too of Divinity ran,

Partly of Monk, and partly Puritan.

Cowley, The Mistress, Wisdom.

Mrs. Britton had been churning, and the butter "took a contrary streak," as she expressed it, and refused to come.

E. Eggleston, The Graysons, xviii.

5. Naut., same as *strake*², 6.—6†. A rung of a ladder.

You are not a little beholden to the poor dear soul that's dead, for putting a streak in your ladder, when you was on the last step of it. Cumberland, Natural Son, iii.

7. A short piece of iron, six of which form the wheel-fire of a wooden artillery-carriage.—Germanal streak, primitive streak. Same as primitive groove (which see, under primitive).—Streak of luck, fortunate chance; run of luck. [Colloq., U. S.]—Streak of the spear. See spear, 6.—To go like a streak (se. of lightning), to go very rapidly; rush. [Colloq., U. S.]

streak² (strēk), v. t. [< *streak*², n.] To put a streak upon or in; break up the surface of by one or more streaks.

Eche a strete was streaked & strawed with floures.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 1617.

The last faint gleams of the sun's low beams

Had streak'd the gray with red.

Scott, The Gray Brother.

streak³ (strēk), v. [Also streck, streck; an unassimilated form of stretch: see stretch.] I. trans. 1. To stretch; extend. [Obsolete or dialectal.]

As the lion lies before his den,

Guarding his whelps, and streaks his careless limbs.

Chapman, Gentleman Usher, v. 1.

2. To lay out, as a dead body. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

The streichit corpse, till still midnight,

They waked, but naething hear.

Young Benjé (Child's Ballads, II. 302).

II. intrans. To stretch out; shoot, as a rocket or a shooting-star.

Fore-god, my lord, haue you beheld the like [a blazing star]?

Look how it streaks! what do you think of it?

Heywood, If you Know not Me (Works, ed. 1874, l. 292).

streaked (strēkt or strē'ked), a. 1. Striped; striate; having streaks or stripes; especially, having lengthwise streaks, as distinguished from crosswise bands, bars, or fasciæ.—2. Confused; ashamed; agitated; alarmed. [Low, U. S.]

But wen it comes to bein' killed—I tell ye I felt streaked The fust time 't ever I found out wy baggonets wuz peaked.

Lovell, Biglow Papers, 1st ser., ii.

Streaked falcon. See falcon.—Streaked gurnard, a fish, Trigla lineata.—Streaked sandpiper. See sandpiper.

streakfield (strēk'fēld), n. The scuttler, or six-striped lizard, Cnemidophorus sexlineatus; so called from the swiftness with which it scuttles or streaks across fields.

streakiness (strē'ki-nes), n. The state or quality of being streaked or streaky.

streaking (strē'king), n. [< *streak*² + -ing.] A streak; a stripe.

Sho . . . striped its pure, celestial white

With streakings of the morning light.

J. R. Drake, The American Flag.

streak-stitch (strēk'stich), n. A stitch in needle-made lace by means of which an open line is left in the mat or toilé.

streaky (strē'ki), a. [< *streak*² + -y¹.] 1. Having streaks; marked with streaks; streaked. It differs from striped in that the lines are not accurately parallel, nor straight and uniform.

When streaky sunset faded softly into dusk.

R. D. Blackmore, Kit and Kitty, xiv.

Hence—2. Uneven in quality; variable in character or excellence: as, his poetry is decidedly streaky. [Colloq.]

streal (strēl), n. [Early mod. E. also strale; < ME. strel*, strāl, < AS. strāl, an arrow, missile, = OS. strāla = MD. stracle, D. straal = MLG. strale = OHG. strāla, MHG. strāle (> It. strale), G. strahl, an arrow, beam of light, = Icel. strjal, an arrow, = Sw. stråle = Dan. stråle, a beam of light, jet of water, flash of lightning, = Bulg. striela = Russ. striela, an arrow; cf. Russ. strielit, an archer (see strelitz).] 1. An arrow. Wright (spelled streaile). [Prov. Eng.]—2†. The pupil of the eye.

The strale of the eye, pupilla.

Withals, Diet. (ed. 1608), p. 278. (Nares.)

stream (strēm), n. [< ME. strem, strem, < AS. stream = OS. strōm = OFries. stram = D. strom = MLG. strom = OHG. stromm, strōm, MHG. stromm, strām, strām, G. strom = Icel. straurm = Sw. Dan. ström (Goth. not recorded), a stream; with initial str- for orig. sr-, akin to OIr. sruth, Ir. sroth, a stream, srainm, a stream, Rnss. struia, Lith. sroce, a stream, Gr. βίσις, a flowing, βήμα, a flowing, a stream, river, etc. (see *rheum*¹), βήμας, a flowing, rhythm (see rhythm); < √ sru = Gr. ῥέειν (for ῥεειν*), = Skt. √ sru, flow.] 1. A course of running water; a river, rivulet, or brook.

He stod bi the fodes stren.

Genesis and Exodus (E. E. T. S.), l. 2006.

He brought streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers. Pa. lxxviii. 16.

As streams their channels deeper wear.

Burns, To Mary in Heaven.

2. A steady current in a river or in the sea; especially, the middle or most rapid part of a current or tide: as, to row against the stream; the Gulf Stream.

My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.

Shak., Othello, ii. 3. 65.

Row, brothers, row! the stream runs fast,

The rapids are near, and the daylight's past!

Moore, Canadian Boat-Song.

3. A flow; a flowing; that which flows in or out, as a liquid or a fluid, air or light.

Bright was the day, and blew the firmament:

Phœbus hath of gold hise strenes down ysent

To gladen every flour with hise warnnes.

Chaucer, Merchant's Tale, l. 976.

Fourth gusht a stream of gore blood thick.

Spenser, F. Q., II. i. 39.

A wandering stream of wind,

Breathed from the west, has caught the expanded sail.

Shelley, Alastor.

4. Anything issuing from a source and moving or flowing continuously: as, a stream of words; a stream of sand; a stream of people.

With never an end to the stream of passing feet.

Tennyson, Maud, xxvii. 1.

5. A continued course or current; the course or current of affairs or events; current; drift.

Such was the stream of those times that all men gave place unto it, which we cannot but impute partly to their own oversight.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 42.

For science, God is simply the stream of tendency by which all things fulfil the law of their being.

M. Arnold, Literature and Dogma, l.

6. A rift; so called by English anglers. Norris.—Gulf Stream. See gulf.—Stream-function of the motion of an incompressible fluid in two dimensions, such a function that the total instantaneous flow across any curve, referred to the unit of time, is equal to the difference of the values of the stream-function at the extremities of the curve.—Stream of thought, the train of ideas which pass successively into present consciousness, regarded as analogous to a current flowing past a point upon the bank.—The stream, the Gulf Stream.—Syn. 1 and 2. Stream, Current, Eddy. All rivers and brooks are streams, and have currents. An eddy is a counter-current, n current contrary to the main direction.

stream (strēm), v. [< ME. stremen = D. stroemen = G. strömen = Icel. streyma = Sw. strömma = Dan. ströme; from the noun.] I. intrans. 1. To move or run in a continuous current; flow continuously. See streaming, n., 2.

Within those banks, where rivers now

Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train.

Milton, P. L., vii. 306.

On all sides round
Streams the black blood. Pope, Odyssey, iii. 581.

2. To move or proceed continuously and uniformly, or in unbroken succession.
And to imperial Love, that god most high,
Do my sighs stream. Shak., All's Well, ii. 3. 82.

Streaming files of wild ducks began to make their appearance high in the air. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 437.

3. To pour out a stream; also, to throw off a stream from the surface: as, streaming eyes; a streaming umbrella.
Then grateful Greece with streaming eyes would raise Historic marbles, to record his praise.
Fenton, in Pope's Odyssey, i. 305.

Blasts that blow the poplar white,
And lash with storm the streaming pane.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxii.

4. To move swiftly and continuously, as a ray of light; swift.
I looked up just in time to see a superb shooting star stream across the heavens. Nature, XXX. 455.

5. To stretch out in a line; hang or float at full length: as, streaming hair.
Standards and gonfalons 'twixt yon and rear Stream in the air. Milton, P. L., v. 590.

Ribauds streaming gay. Cowper, Task, iv. 541.

II. trans. 1. To discharge in a stream; cause to flow; pour out.
Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood.
Shak., J. C., iii. 1. 201.

Calanus told Onesicritus of a golden world, where meale was as plentiful as dust, and fountains streamed milke, hony, wine, and oyle. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 454.

2. To cause to float out; wave.
Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought,
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens.
Shak., Rich. II., iv. 1. 94.

3†. To stripe or ray. See streaming, á. [Rare.]
The herald's mantle is streamed with gold. Bacon.

4. (a) In mining, to wash, as the superficial detritus, especially that accumulated in the beds of rivers, for the purpose of separating any valuable ore which it may contain. See *placer*². The term stream, long in use in Cornwall, exclusively with reference to tin ores, seems hardly to have come into general use in any mining regions except those in which the ore of tin is mined. (b) In dyeing, to wash in running water, as silk, before putting in the dye. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 40.—To stream a buoy. See buoy.

stream-anchor (strēm'ang'kor), n. Naut., an anchor of a size intermediate between the bower anchor and the kedg. It is used for warping and like purposes. In the United States navy stream-anchors weigh from 400 to 1,500 pounds, and are about one fourth the weight of bower-anchors.

stream-cable (strēm'kā'bl), n. The cable or hawser of the stream-anchor.

stream-clock (strēm'klok), n. [Tr. G. strom-uhl.] A physiological instrument for determining the velocity of blood in a vessel.

stream-current (strēm'kur'ent), n. See the quotation, and also drift-current.
A current whose onward movement is sustained by the vis a tergo of a drift-current is called a stream-current.
Encyc. Brit., III. 19.

streamer (strēm'mēr), n. [ML. stremēr, stremere; < stream + -er.] 1. That which streams out, or hangs or floats at full length: applied to anything long and narrow, as a ribbon.
All twinkling with the dewdrops' sheen,
The brier-rose fell in streamers green.
Scott, L. of the L., i. 11.

(a) A long narrow flag; a pennon extended or flowing in the wind: same as pennant, 1 (a).
His brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phebus fanning.
Shak., Hen. V., iii. Prol., l. 6.

(b) A stream or column of light shooting upward or outward, as in some forms of the aurora borealis.
He knew, by the streamers that shot so bright,
That spirits were riding the northern light.
Scott, L. of the L., ii. 3.

(c) A long flowing strip of ribbon, or feather, or something similar, used in decoration, especially in dress.
A most airy sort of blue and silver turban, with a streamer of plume on one side.
Charlotte Brontë, Villette, xx.

(d) A long-exserted feather which streams away from the rest of the plumage of some birds: a pennant or standard. See cuts under Scimitera and standard-bearer.

2. In mining, a person who washes for stream-tin. See streaming, —3. The geometrid moth Anticlea derivata: an English collectors' name.

streamful (strēm'fūl), a. [< stream + -ful.] Full of streams or currents.
Like a ship despoiled of her sails,
Shov'd by the wind against the streamful tide.
Dryden, Legend of Pierce Gaveston, st. 105.

stream-gold (strēm'göld), n. See the quotation.

The gold of alluvial districts, called stream-gold or placer-gold, occurs, as well as alluvial tin, among the debris of the more ancient rocks. Ure, Dict., III. 298.

stream-ice (strēm'is), n. Pieces of drift or bay ice forming a ridge and following the line of current.

At 4 A. M. a scencingly close pack was seen to the eastward, but later it developed into stream-ice of small extent. A. W. Greeley, Arctic Service, p. 67.

streaminess (strēm'ni-nes), n. The quality or state of being streamy.

I give the case of a star-group which is certainly not the most remarkable for streaminess. R. A. Proctor, Universe of Stars (2d ed., 1878), p. 22.

streaming (strēm'ing), n. [Verbal n. of stream, v.] 1. In tin-mining, the washing of tin ore from the detritus with which it is associated. The now almost entirely exhausted deposits of detrital tin ore in Cornwall and Devon were called streams, because they occur chiefly in or near the bottoms of the valleys and adjacent to the present streams, or in the manner of deposits formed by streams, analogous to the channels of the Californian and the gutters of the Australian miners; the miners were themselves called streamers; the localities where streaming was carried on, stream-works; and the ore obtained, stream-tin.

2. In biol., the peculiar flowing motion of the particles of protoplasm in an amoeba or other rhizopod, by which the form of the animalcule changes or pseudopods are protruded; also, the similar circulation or rotation of the protoplasm of some plant-cells. See protoplasm, and rotation of protoplasm (under rotation).

streaming (strēm'ing), p. a. In her., issuing, as rays of light: as, rays streaming from the dexter chief.

streamless (strēm'les), a. [< stream + -less.] Not traversed by streams; unwatered. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 758.

streamlet (strēm'let), n. [< stream + -let.] A small stream; a rivulet; a rill.

Unnumber'd glittering streamlets play'd,
And hurried every where their waters sheen.
Thomson, Castle of Indulgence, i. 3.

stream-line (strēm'lin), n. See *line*², and line of flow (under *flow*¹).—Stream-line surface. See surface.

streamling (strēm'ling), n. [< stream + -ling.] Same as streamlet.

A thousand Streamlings that n'er saw the Sun,
With tribute silver to his service run.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii, The Captaines.

stream-tin (strēm'tin), n. In mining, tin ore, or oxid of tin, obtained in streaming (which see).

stream-wheel (strēm'hwēl), n. An undershot wheel, or current-wheel.

stream-works (strēm'wērks), n. sing. and pl. In mining, a locality where the detrital deposits are washed in order to procure the valuable metal or ore which they may contain; alluvial washings, or surface mining. The words stream-works and stream (c. t.) are rarely, if ever, used except with reference to the separation of tin ore from detrital deposits.

streamwort (strēm'wört), n. A plant of Lindley's order Haloragaceæ. [Rare.]

streamy (strēm'i), a. [Early mod. E. also stremy; < stream + -y.] 1. Abounding in streams. (a) Full of running water or of springs.

Areadia
(However streamy), now adust and dry, Deny'd the Goddess Water.
Prior, First Hymn of Callimachus.

(b) Full of or emitting streaming rays of light.
In streamy sparkles, kindling all the skies,
From pole to pole the trail of glory flies.
Pope, Iliad, xiii. 321.

2. Having the form of a beam or stream of light.

street, n. An obsolete form of street.
Streetful's operation. See operation.

Strebery, n. An obsolete form of strawberry.
Strebla (streb'lä), n. [NL. (Wiedemann, 1824), < Gr. στρεβλός, twisted, crooked, < στρέβω, twist.] A peculiar genus of pupiparous dipterous insects, of the family Nycterihidae, including certain so-called bat-liee or bat-ticks.

S. respertionis is a common bat-parasite occurring in South America and the West Indies.

streblosis (streb-lō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. στρεβλός, twisted; see Strebla.] The angle through which it is necessary to rotate an element of a figure to bring it into coincidence with the corresponding element of a given conformable figure.

Streblus (streb'lus), n. [NL. (Loureiro, 1790), so called in allusion to its branches, which form a dense mass of rigid straggling twigs; < Gr. στρεβλός, twisted; see Strebla.] A genus of apetalous plants, of the order Urticaceæ and tribe Morææ, type of the subtribe Strebloseæ. It is characterized by usually dioecious flowers, the male in clustered two-bracted heads, the female solitary on the peduncle, the perianth consisting of four widely overlapping segments which closely invest the one-celled ovary. As in most of the subtribe, its cotyledons are very unequal, and the larger, which is very fleshy, incloses the smaller. The only species, S. asper (Trophis aspera), is the tonkoi or paper-tree of the siamese, who prepare several kinds of paper from its bark, including a heavy and a thin white paper, and a black paper for use like a slate, much employed in the native law-courts. It is a small tree, reaching about thirty feet in height, bearing dark-green oval coriaceous two-ranked leaves, and occurring from China and Manila to the Andaman Islands.

strecchet, v. An old spelling of stretch.
street, n. A Middle English form of *stræt*¹.

street (strēt), v. t. [Cf. stræt.] To trail; stream.
A yellow satin train that streeted after her like the tail of a comet.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xx.

street, n. A Middle English form of *stræt*². street, v. A Middle English form of *strip*¹.

street (strēt), n. [Early mod. E. also street, streete; < ME. streete, streete, street, strate, < AS. stræt = OS. strata = OFries. streete = MD. streete, D. straat = MLG. strāte, LG. strate = OIIG. strāza, MHG. strāze, G. strasse = Icel. strati = Sw. strät = Dan. stråde (= It. strada = Sp. Pg. Pr. estrada = OF. estree, streete, strae, F. étree = W. ystrad, ystrid = OIr. srāth = Ir. Gael. sruid = NGr. στράτα), < LL. strata, a street, road, highway, orig. via strata, a paved way, < L. strata, fem. of stratus, pp. of sternere, strewn, scatter, spread, cover, pave; see stratum. Street is one of the very few words regarded as received in England from the Roman invaders, others being chester (Chester), port, wall, and -coln in Lincoln. Cf. *stray*¹, *stray*².] 1†. A paved road; a highway.

This grand-child, great as he [Mulmutius], those four proud Streets begun
That each way cross this Isle, and bounds did them allow.
Dryden, Polyolbion, viii. 74.

There were at that time [fifth year after the Conquest] in England four great roads, . . . of which two ran lengthways through the island, and two crossed it, . . . Watlinge-strete, Fosse, Hikenilde-strete, and Erming-strete.
Guest, Origines Celtice, II. 218.

2. A public way or road, whether paved or unpaved, in a village, town, or city, ordinarily including a sidewalk or sidewalks and a roadway, and having houses or town lots on one or both sides; a main way, in distinction from a lane or alley: as, a fashionable street; a street of shops. Abbreviated St., st. Compare road, 3. Strictly, the word excludes the houses, which are on the street; but in a very common use it includes the land and houses, which are then in the street: as, a house in High Street. In law, street sometimes includes as much of the surface, and as much of the space above and of the soil or depth beneath, as may be needed for the ordinary works which the local authorities may decide to execute on or in a street, including sidewalks.

Up Fish Street! down Saint Magnus' Corner!
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. s. 1.

3. The way for vehicles, between the curbs, as distinguished from the sidewalks: as, to walk in the street.—4. Hence, a path or passageway inclosed between continuous lines of objects; a track; a lane.

It seemed to be, as it were, a continued street of shippes.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 435.

I was ushered through an actual street of servitors.
Disraeli, Vivian Grey, iii. 8.

5†. A path: a way.
Than makest thou his pees with his sovereyn,
And bringest him out of the crooked streete.
Chaucer, A. B. C., l. 70.

While I ran by the most secret streets,
Eschewing still the common haunted track.
Surrey, Æneid, ii. 975.

6. The inhabitants of a street collectively. [Colloq.]

All the whole street will hate us, and the world
Point me out cruel. Middleton, Chaste Maid, v. 2.

Grub Street. See Grub-street.—Lombard Street. See *Lombard*², 1.—Queer Street. See *queer*¹.—Street Arab. See Arab, 2.—Street broker. See broker. The street, a street (as Wall Street in New York) or locality where merchants or stock-brokers congregate for business; the commercial exchange: as, it is rumored on the street.

Common places whither marchantes resort as to the bursc or streete. Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books [on America, ed. Arber, p. 186]).

To have the key of the street. See key.—To spin street-yarn. See spin.—Syn. 2. Road, etc. See way.

streetage (strēt'āj), n. [< street + -age.] A charge made for the use of a street. [Rare.]

street-car (strēt'kär), n. A passenger-car for local or city travel, drawn on the surface of the public streets by horses, by a locomotive engine, or by an endless cable, or propelled by electricity. [U. S.]

The street-cars rattled in the foreground, changing horses and absorbing and emitting passengers.

H. James, Jr., The Bostonians, xxxiv.

street-door (strēt' dōr), n. The door of a house or other building which opens upon a street.

When you step but a few doors off . . . to see a brother-footman going to be hanged, leave the street door open.

Swift, Advice to Servants (Footman).

streeted (strē'ted), a. Provided with streets.

There are few Places this Side the Alps better built, and so well streeted as this [Antwerp].

Howell, Letters, I. i. 12.

street-locomotive (strēt' lō' kō-mō-tiv), n. See locomotive.

street-orderly (strēt' ōr' dēr-li), n. A person employed to keep the streets clean by the prompt removal of rubbish, dung, or dirt of any kind by means of a hand-brush and bag.

By the street-orderly method of scavaging, the thoroughfares are continually being cleansed, and so never allowed to become dirty; whereas, by the ordinary method, they are not cleansed until they are dirty.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 257.

street-railroad (strēt' rāil' rōd), n. A railroad constructed upon the surface of a public street in towns and cities; a tramway. Cars on such railroads are variously propelled, and the railroads take specific names from the system of propulsion, as cable-railroad, horse-railroad, electric railroad. [U. S.]

street-sweeper (strēt' swē' pēr), n. One who or that which sweeps the streets; specifically, a machine provided with brushes and scrapers for removing dust, mud, etc., from the streets.

street-walker (strēt' wā' kēr), n. 1. One who walks the streets; a pedestrian.

All street-walkers and shop-keepers bear an equal share in its hourly vexation [the nuisance of beggars].

Swift, Proposal for giving Badges to Beggars.

2. A common prostitute who walks the streets at night.

streetward¹ (strēt' wārd), n. [< street + ward.] Formerly, an officer who had the care of the streets.

streetward² (strēt' wārd), adv. and a. [< street + ward.] Next the street; looking out on the street. Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

streetway (strēt' wā), n. [< street + way.] The open space of a street; the roadway.

straight¹. An old spelling of *straight*¹.

straight², streighten¹. Old spellings of *strait*¹, straiten. Drayton.

streik, v. See *streak*³.

streinet, streinable¹. Old spellings of *strain*¹, strainable. Hollinshead.

streit, streitet, a. Old spellings of *strait*¹.

strek. A Middle English form of *streak*¹, *streak*², and strike.

strelitz (strel' its), n. [< G. strelitze, < Russ. strelitsā, an archer, shooter, < strelitsā, shoot, strelitsā, an arrow; prob. < OHG. strāla, G. strahl = AS. strāl, arrow; see straal.] A soldier of the ancient Muscovite guards, abolished by Peter the Great.

Strelitzia (strē-lit' si-ā), n. [NL. (Aiton, 1789), named after Queen Charlotte, wife of George III. of England, and descended from the German house of Meeklenburg-Strelitz.] 1. A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Musaceae, distinguished by its flowers with three free sepals and three very dissimilar and peculiar petals, of which the outer is short, broad, and concave or hooded, the two lateral long, narrow, more or less united, and continued into a long petaloid appendage. There are 4 or 5 species, natives of South Africa. They are singular plants, producing an erect or subterranean woody rootstock, and large leaves which resemble those of a small banana-tree, or are reduced mainly or completely to tall erect cylindrical petioles. The large handsome flowers are borne few together far exerted from a spathe, which consists of one or two large boat-shaped bracts on a terminal or axillary scape. S. Reginae, known as queen-plat, bird's-tongue flower, or bird-of-paradise flower, produces large brilliant flowers, highly prized for the oddity of their shape and coloring, showing the unusual combination of orange and blue. S. augusta, a larger species with small white flowers and purple bracts, has a palm-like stem reaching 20 feet in height, and is cultivated under the name grand strelitzia. S. juncea and other species are also cultivated under glass.

2. [l. c.] A plant of this genus.

stremet, n. and v. An obsolete spelling of stream.

strent, strenet, n. Middle English forms of *strain*².

strenger¹, strengest¹, a. Earlier comparative and superlative of *strong*¹.

strengite (streng' it), n. [Named after A. Streng, of Giessen, Germany.] A hydrous phosphate of iron, occurring in reddish orthorhombic crystals: it is isomorphous with scorodite.

strength (streng'th), n. [< ME. strengthe, strenthe, strenkyth, also strenthe, streintke, <

AS. strengthu (= OHG. streugida), strength, *< strant, strong; see strong*¹. Cf. length, < lang.]

1. The property of being strong; force; power. Specifically—(a) In animals, that attribute of an animal body by which it is enabled to move itself or other bodies. The strength of animals is the muscular force or energy which they are capable of exerting. See horse-power.

Vixes also, with angarely mony
Of talkis [knights] of Traci, for men of strenkyth.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 6804.

The external indications of strength are the abundance and firmness of the muscular fibres.

Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, vi. 9.

[Used in plural with same sense as singular.

All e his [samson's] strengthes in his heres were.

Chaucer, Monk's Tale, I. 68.

(b) In inanimate things, the property by which they sustain the application of force without breaking or yielding; as, the strength of a bone; the strength of a beam; the strength of a wall; the strength of a rope.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn.

Shak., Macbeth, v. 5. 2.

The city is of no greate strength, having a trifling wall about it.

Evelyn, Diary, May 21, 1645.

Hence—2. Power or vigor of any kind; ability; capacity for work or effective action, whether physical, intellectual, or moral: as, strength of grasp or stroke; strength of mind, memory, or judgment; strength of feeling (that is, not intensity but effectiveness of emotion).

If, rather than to marry County Paris,
Thou hast the strength of will to slay thyself.

Shak., I. and J., iv. 1. 72.

The belief
He has of his own great and catholic strengthes
In arguing and discourse.

B. Jonson, Devil is an Ass, i. 2.

In the world of morals, as in the world of physics, strength is nearly allied to hardness.

Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 354.

3. One who or that which is regarded as an embodiment of force or strength; that on which confidence or reliance is firmly set; stay; support; security.

God is our refuge and strength.

Ps. xvi. 1.

Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress,
My only strength and stay.

Milton, P. L., x. 921.

Hitherto, Davenant observes, in taxing the people we had gone chiefly on land and trade, which is about one-third of the strength of England.

S. Doweil, Taxes in England, II. 56.

4. Force; violence; vehemence; intensity.

And al men speken of hanting,
How they wolde see the hert with strengthe.

Chaucer, Death of Blanche, I. 351.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring, . . .
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 198.

5. Degree of the distinguishing or essential element or constituent; the power to produce sensible effects on other bodies; potency: said of liquors and the like: as, the strength of an acid; the strength of wine or spirits; the strength of a potion or a poison.—6. Force as measured or stated in figures; amount or numbers of any collective body, as of an army or a fleet: as, a play adapted to the whole strength of the company; the full strength of a regiment.

Demand of him of what strength they are a-foot.

Shak., All's Well, iv. 3. 181.

Half a dozen gentlemen, furnished with a good strength of water-pauels.

Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. Selborne, To T. Pennant, xxii.

7. Available force or backing, as of a candidate: as, his strength is greatest in the cities. [Political cant.]—8. Force proceeding from motion and proportioned to it; vehemence; impetuosity: as, the strength of a current of air or water; the strength of a charge of cavalry.—9. A stronghold.

Syne they hae left him, hail and feir,
Within his strength of stane.

Auld Maitland (Child's Ballads, VI. 222).

"No to say it's our best dwelling," he added, turning to Bucklaw, "but just a strength for the Lord of Ravenswood to flee until."

Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, vii.

10. In colors, the relative property possessed by a pigment of imparting a color to and modifying the shade of any other pigment to which it is added. Thus, one pound of lampblack added to 100 pounds of white lead produces a dark-gray shade, but one pound of ivory-black added in the same way would have little effect on the white.

11. In the fine arts, boldness of conception or treatment.

Carracci's strength, Correggio's softer line.

Pope, Epistle to Jervas, l. 37.

12. In soap-making. See the quotation.

A peculiar phenomenon may be remarked in the cooling [of a little of the soap placed on a glass plate], which affords a good criterion of the quality of the soap. When there is formed around the little patch an opaque zone, a fraction of an inch broad, this is supposed to indicate complete saponification, and is called the strength; when it is absent, the soap is said to want its strength. When this zone soon vanishes after being distinctly seen, the soap is said to have false strength. Ure, Dict., III. 582.

On the strength (milit. and naval), on the muster-rolls. [Colloq.]

The colonel had put the widow woman on the strength; she was no longer an unrecogized wife, but had her regimental position.

Arch. Forbes, in Eng. Illust. Mag., VI. 525.

On or upon the strength of, in reliance upon the value of; on the faith of; as, to do something on the strength of another's promise.

My father set out upon the strength of these two following axioms.

Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ii. 19.

Proof strength. See proof, a.—Strength of a current, in elect., the quantity of electricity which passes in a unit of time; the measure of electrical energy. See Ohm's law, under *law*¹.—Strength of materials. See material.—Strength of pole. See *pole*².—Strength of the source. See the quotation.

The time rate of supply of liquid through the source is called the strength of the source.

Minchin, Uniplanar Kinematics, vi.

To measure strength. See measure.—Syn. 1. Force, etc. See *power*¹.

strengthen (streng'th), v. t. [< ME. strengthen, streintken; < strength, n.] To strengthen.

Take this for a general rule, that every counsel that is affirmed or strengthened so strongly that it may not be changed for no condition that may bite—I say that thilke counsel is wikked.

Chaucer, Tale of Melibeus (Harleian Ms.).

The helpe of Gods grace in that tribulation to strengthen him.

Sir T. More, Comfort against Tribulation (1573), fol. 16.

His armes and leggyis [were] well lengthened and strengthened.

Fabjan, Chron., clvi.

strengthen (streng'th), v. [*< strength + -en*¹.] I. trans. To make strong or stronger; add strength to, either physical, legal, or moral: confirm; establish: as, to strengthen a limb; to strengthen an obligation; to strengthen a claim; to strengthen authority.

Charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him.

Deut. iii. 28.

Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest . . .
With powerful policy strengthen themselves.

Shak., 3 Hen. VI., i. 2. 58.

For the more strengthening the Acts of this Parliament, the King purchased the Pope's Bulls, containing grievous Censures and Curses to them that should break them.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 149.

Strengthening plaster. See plaster.—Syn. To invigorate, fortify, brace, nerve, steel, corroborate, support, heighten.

II. intrans. To grow strong or stronger.

The young disease, that must subdue at length,
Grows with his growth, and strengthens with his strength.

Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 136.

strengthen (streng'th), v. [*< strength + -en*¹.] One who or that which makes strong or stronger; one who or that which increases strength, physical or moral.

Whose plays are strengtheners of virtue.

Mary Lamb, Tales from Shakspeare, Pref.

strengthful (streng'th-ful), a. [< strength + -ful.] Abounding in strength; strong. Mars- ton.

strengthfulness (streng'th-ful-nes), n. The state or quality of being strengthful or strong: fullness of strength.

strengthening (streng'thing), n. [Verbal n. of strengthen, v.] A strengthening. Palsgrave. (Halliwell.)

strengthenless (streng'th-less), a. [< strength + -less.] Destitute of strength, in any sense of the word. Shak.; Boyle.

strengthen (streng'th-ner), n. Same as strengthen.

strengthe (streng'thi), a. [Early mod. E. also strenthe; *< strength + -y*¹. Cf. lengthy.] Having strength; strong.

The simple and strenthe defence of one iust caus.

J. Tyrie, Refutation, Pref. 2. (Jamieson.)

strenkle (streng'kl), v. t. An obsolete or Scotch form of sprinkle.

strenkle (streng'kl), n. [< ME. strenkyll; < streukle, v. Cf. sprinkle, n.] A sprinkler. [Obsolete or Scotch.]

Strenkyll to cast holy water, vimpilon.

Palsgrave. (Halliwell.)

strenth, n. An obsolete form of strength.

strenuity (stre-nū'i-ti), n. [< L. strenuita(t)-s, nimbleness, friskness, < strenuus, quick, active, vigorous; see strenuous.] Strenuousness.

About in the see
No Prince was of better strenuities.
Hakluyt's Voyages, 1. 206.

strenuosity (stren-ū-os'ī-ti), n. [< strenuous + -ity.] 1. The state or character of being strenuous; strenuousness.—2. A strained effect, or a straining for effect, as in a literary composition.

Strenuosity in style is not quite the same thing as strength. The Academy, Jan. 30, 1886, p. 73.

strenuous (stren'ū-us), a. [< L. strenuus, quick, active, brisk, vigorous; cf. Gr. στερεός, firm, hard, σπρηγής, strong.] 1. Strong; vigorous; active; pushing.

His whose strenuous tongue
Can burst Joy's grape against his palate fine.
Keats, Melancholy.

2. Eagerly pressing or urgent; energetic; zealous; ardent; bold; earnest; valiant; intrepid.

To strenuous minds there is an inquietude in overquietness. Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., 1. 33.

This scheme encountered strenuous opposition in the council. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

3. Necessitating vigor or energy; accompanied by labor or exertion.

What more oft, in nations grown corrupt,
Than to love bondage more than liberty,
Bondage with ease than strenuous liberty?
Milton, S. A., 1. 271.

Worldlings revelling in the fields
Of strenuous idleness. Wordsworth, Memory.

=Syn. 1 and 2. Energetic, resolute.
strenuously (stren'ū-us-ly), adv. In a strenuous manner; with eager and pressing zeal; ardently; boldly; vigorously; actively.

strenuousness (stren'ū-us-ness), n. The state or character of being strenuous; eagerness; earnestness; active zeal.

strepēt, v. An old spelling of strip.
strepēt (strep'ēt), a. [< L. strepen(-t), ppr. of strepere, make a noise, rumble, murmur.] Noisy; loud. [Rare.]

Peace to the strepēt horn!
Shenstone, Rural Elegance.

Strepera (strep'e-rĭ-ĭ), n. [NL. (Lesson, 1831), < L. strepere, make a noise.] An Australian genus of corvine passerine birds, typical of the subfamily Streperinae, having long wings and naked nostrils. Also called Coronica (Gould, 1837). There are 7 species, commonly called crow-shrikes, of a black, blackish-brown, or gray color, more or less varied with white or rufous. The type is Corvus graculinus of White, the noisy roller of Latham, Coracias or Gracula or Barita strepera of various authors, now Strepera graculina. It is glossy-black, with the base of the tail and an alar speculum white, the iris yellow. The length is 18 inches. S. crissalis, arguta, intermedia, cuveicauda (or anaphonensis; see squeaker), melanoptera, and fuliginosa are the other species.

Crow-shrike (Strepera graculina).

streperine (strep'e-rĭ-n), a. [< Strepera + -ine.] Of or pertaining to birds of the genus Strepera.
streperous (strep'e-rus), a. [< L. strepere, make a noise, rumble, murmur, + -ous. Cf. obstreperous.] Noisy; loud; boisterous. [Rare.]

In a streperous eruption it [the bay or laurel] riseth against fire. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 6.

strephtome (stref'ō-tōm), n. [< Gr. σπρέω, twist, turn, + -τομος, τέμνειν, ταμῖν, cut.] A corkserew-like needle used in an operation for the radical cure of inguinal hernia.

Strepitores (strep-i-tō'rĕz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of strepitor*, < L. strepere, make a noise; see strepent.] A group of insectivorous birds, established by Blyth in 1849 for those Cuvierian Passerinae which are non-passerine, and primarily divided into Syndactylī, Zygodactylī, and Heterodactylī. See these words.

strepitoso (strep-i-tō'sō), adv. [It., < strepito, noise, < L. strepitus, noise; see strepitous.] In music, in an impetuous, boisterous, noisy manner.

strepitous (strep'i-tus), a. [< L. strepitus, noise, < strepere, make a noise; see strepent.] Noisy.
strepsicere (strep'si-sĕr), n. [< strepsiceros.] An antelope with twisted horns; a strepsiceros.
strepsiceros (strep-sis'e-ros), n. [NL., < L. strepsiceros, < Gr. στρεψικερος, an animal with twisted horns, called by the Africans addax.] 1. Some antelope with twisted horns, as the koodoo; originally, perhaps, the addax.—2. [cap.] [NL. (Hamilton Smith, 1827).] A genus of antelopes with twisted or spiral horns. The only species now left in the genus is S. kudu, the koodoo. See ent under koodoo.

Strepsilas (strep'si-las), n. [NL. (Illiger, 1811), < Gr. στρέψις, a turning round, < σπρέφειν (aor. σπρέψαι), twist, turn, + λάς, λάος, a stone.] The typical genus of a subfamily Strepsilainae; the turnstones. The bill is short, constricted at the base, tapering to a sharp point, with ascending gony longer than the mandibular rami, short and broad nasal fossae, and short shallow grooves in the under mandible. The legs are short and stout, with the tarsus scutellate in front and reticulate on the sides and back, and four toes, cleft to the base. There are 2 species—S. interpres, the common turnstone, and S. melanocephalus of the North Pacific, the black-headed turnstone, perhaps only a variety of the other. The genus was also called Cinclus, Arenaria, and Morinella. See cuts under Pressirostres and turnstone.

strepsipter (strep-sip'tĕr), n. [< NL. Strepsiptera.] A member of the Strepsiptera.

Strepsiptera (strep-sip'tĕ-rĭ-ĭ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of strepsipterus*; see strepsipterous.] 1. An order of insects, named by Kirby in 1833 from the twisted wings, synonyms with Rhipiptera of Latreille, and corresponding to the family Stylopidae. The fore wings are mere twisted filaments or pseudelytra; the hind wings are expansive and fan-shaped; the females are wingless. The strepsipters are parasitic on hymenopterous insects, especially bees and wasps. They are now regarded as anomalous Coleoptera degraded by parasitism. See cut under Stylops.

2. In Gegenbaur's system of classification, a family of neuropterous insects, forming with Phryganida the suborder Trichoptera.
strepsipteral (strep-sip'tĕ-rĭ-ĭ), a. [< strepsipter-ous + -al.] Same as strepsipterous.
strepsipteran (strep-sip'tĕ-rĭ-ĭ-n), n. and a. [< NL. Strepsiptera + -an.] I. n. A strepsipter. II. a. Same as strepsipterous.

strepsipterous (strep-sip'tĕ-rus), a. [< *NL. strepsipterus, < Gr. στρέφειν (aor. σπρέψαι), twist, turn, + πτερόν, a wing.] Having twisted front wings, as a stylops; of or pertaining to the Strepsiptera; rhipipterous. Also strepsipteran, strepsipteral. See cut under Stylops.

strepsirrhinal, strepsirrhine (strep-si-rĭ-nĭ-ĭ-nal), a. [< strepsirrhine + -al.] Same as strepsirrhine.

strepsirrhine, strepsirhine (strep'si-rĭ-n), a. and n. [< *NL. strepsirrhinus, < Gr. σπρέφειν (aor. σπρέψαι), turn, twist, + ρῖς (rh-), nose.] I. a. Having twisted or curved nostrils, as a lemur; of or pertaining to the Strepsirrhini; neither catarrhine nor platyrrhine, as a primate. Also strepsorhine.

II. n. Any lemur or prosimian; a member of the Strepsirrhini.
Strepsirrhini, Strepsirhini (strep-si-rĭ-nĭ), n. pl. [NL. (Geoffroy); see strepsirrhine.] The lemuroid mammals, or lemurs; so called from the twisted nostrils, in distinction from Catarrhini and Platyrrhini. In these animals the nostrils are at the corners of the snout, and somewhat comma-shaped, as is usual in mammals, instead of having the more human character of those of the higher Primates. The term is exactly synonymous with Prosimia or Lemuroidea, excepting that in early usages of all three of these names of lemurs the so-called flying-lemurs (Galopithecidae) were wrongly included, these being insectivorous and not primate mammals, now always excluded from the strepsirrhines. Also Strepsirrhina, Strepsirrhina, and Strepsorhina.

Streptanthus (strep-tan'thus), n. [NL. (Nuttall, 1825), so called from the greatly twisted claws of the petals; < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted (< σπρέφειν, twist, turn), + ἄνθος, flower.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Crucifera and tribe Arabidæ, distinguished from the type-genus Arabis by a calyx commonly of large size, longer and sometimes connate stamens, and petals usually borne on a twisted claw. There are about 16 species, natives of North America, and chiefly of the western United States. They are smooth annuals or perennials, with entire or lyrate leaves and commonly bractless flowers, which are purple or sometimes white or yellow, and in some species pendulous. S. obtusifolius, a pink-flowered species, has been called Arkansas cabbage.

streptobacteria (strep-tō-bak-tĕ-rĭ-ĭ-ĭ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + NL. bacterium.] A supposed bacterium, consisting of a chain of short rod-formed bacteria linked together. Ziegler, Pathol. Anat. (trans.), i. 185.

Streptocarpus (strep-tō-kār'pus), n. [NL. (Lindley, 1828), so called from the spirally twisted fruit; < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + καρπός, fruit.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Gesneraceæ, tribe Cyrtandrae, and subtribe Didymocarpeæ. It is characterized by flowers with an elongated corolla-tube which is much enlarged above, and contains two perfect stamens and a linear ovary imperfectly four-celled by the protrusion of lobed placenta densely covered on their margins with ovules, and becoming a spirally twisted capsule which is linear and terete and splits into valves coherent at the base and apex. There are about 19 species, natives of South Africa and of Madagascar. They are woolly or downy herbs, chiefly with spreading radical leaves or with a single leaf (a persistent cotyledon), sometimes with a stem bearing opposite leaves. The handsome flowers are mostly pale purple or blue; they form a many-flowered cyme, or are borne few or singly upon their peduncle. S. Dunnii, a remarkable species from the Transvaal mountains, is cultivated for its peculiar solitary grayish-green leaf, prostrate on the ground and over 3 feet long, with thick fleshy veins and clothed beneath with close reddish down, and for its bright-red tubular decurved flowers, of which there are sometimes over one hundred on a scape at once. Several other species are in cultivation under glass, especially S. Watsoni, a hybrid with several large leaves and rich crimson flowers, and S. Rezii, with blue flowers. They are known as Cope primrose.

streptococchia, streptococchiaemia (strep-tō-ko-kĕ'mĭ-ĭ-ĭ), n. [NL., < streptococci + Gr. αἷμα, blood.] The presence of streptococci in the blood.

streptococci (strep-tō-kok'sĭ), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + κόκκος, a berry.] A chain of micrococci linked together, occurring in some specific diseases. Ziegler, Pathol. Anat. (trans.), i. 185.

Streptoneura (strep-tō-nū'rĭ-ĭ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of streptoneurus; see streptoneurous.] A branch of anisopleurous Gastropoda, in which the long loop of visceral nerves embracing the intestine is caught and twisted into a figure-of-8 by the torsion which the animal undergoes in its development. The Streptoneura are divided into two orders, Zygobranchia and Azygobranchia. They include all the anisopleural gastropods except the opisthobranchs and pulmonifers. The nearest synonym is Prosobranchiata.

streptoneural (strep-tō-nū'rĭ-ĭ), a. [< streptoneurous + -al.] Same as streptoneurous.

streptoneurous (strep-tō-nū'rĭ-us), a. [< *NL. streptoneurus, < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + νεῦρον, a nerve.] Having twisted (visceral) nerves; specifically, pertaining to the Streptoneura, or having their characters.

Streptopus (strep'tō-pus), n. [NL. (F. A. Michaux, 1803), so called from the abruptly bent flower-stalk; < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + πούς = Be. foot.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants, of the order Liliaceæ and tribe Polygonatæ. It is characterized by nodding solitary or twin axillary flowers, divided into six more or less spreading segments, with a filiform or columnar style which is three-cleft at the apex. There are 4 species, natives of Europe, North America, and temperate parts of Asia. They are rather delicate plants, from a short and densely fiber-bearing or a creeping rootstock, with a simple or sparingly branched stem, bearing numerous ovate or lanceolate alternate sessile or clasping leaves. The small rose-colored or whitish flowers hang upon slender recurved or reflexed peduncles, followed by small roundish berries with numerous pale oblong or curving striate seeds. They are known by the name twisted-stalk, translating the genus name. S. amplexifolius is found in Europe, and together with S. rozeus, in northern North America, and southward in the mountains.

streptospondylian (strep'tō-spon-dil'i-an), a. Same as streptospondylous.

streptospondylous (strep-tō-spon'di-lus), a. [< *NL. streptospondylus, < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + σπόνδυλος, σφονδύλος, a vertebra.] Having the character of the vertebral articulations reversed, or supposed to be so, as in the genus Streptospondylus.

Streptospondylus (strep-tō-spon'di-lus), n. [NL. (Meyer); see streptospondylous.] A genus of fossil crocodiles, founded on remains represented by vertebrae of the Wealden and Oolitic formations. It was originally placed among the opisthocrelian Crocodylia, subsequently among the amphicealian. The genus agrees with such forms as Telosaurus, which have the external nares terminal, and is placed by Huxley in the family Telosauridae.

streptostylic (strep-tō-stĭ'lik), a. [< NL. streptostylicus, < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + στυλοῦ, a pillar.] Having the quadrate bone freely articulated with the skull, as in opibidian and saurian reptiles; not monimostylic; of or pertaining to the Streptostylica.

Streptostylica (strep-tō-stĭ'lĭ-ĭ-ĭ-ĭ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of streptostylicus; see streptostylic.] Streptostylic reptiles, a prime division of ordinary reptiles (as snakes and lizards), having an articulated quadrate bone and a pair of extracloacal copulatory organs; opposed to Monimostylica. They were divided into ophi- da and Sauria (including Amphisbæna). Stannus, 1856.

Streptothrix (strep'tō-thrīks), n. [NL. (F. Cohn), < Gr. στρεπτός, twisted, + ὄψις, the hair.] A genus standing probably intermediate between the bacteria and the fungi proper. It comprises very minute, colorless, branching filaments, growing in interlacing masses like the mycelium of fungi. S. foersteri was found by Cohn in the concretions of the lacrimal canals of the eye.

stress¹ (stres), v. t. [OF. estreier, estressier, estrechier, estroyssier, etc., straiten, contract, < ML. as if strictare*, < L. strictus, pp. of stringere, draw together, compress: see stringent, *strain*¹, strict. Cf. distress.] 1. To straiten; constrain; press; urge; hamper. [Rare.]

If the magistrate be so stressed that he cannot protect those that are pious and peaceable, the Lord help. Waterhouse, Apol. for Learning, p. 153. (Latham.)

2. In mech., to subject to a stress.

The theory of elastic solids . . . shows that when a solid is stressed the state of stress is completely determined when the amount and direction of the three principal stresses are known. Thomson and Tait, Nat. Phil., § 832.

3. To lay the stress, emphasis, or accent on; emphasize.

If he had eased his heart in stressing the first syllable, it was only temporary relief. G. Meredith, The Egoist, xviii.

stress¹ (stres), n. [*stress*¹, v.] 1. Constraining, urging, or impelling force; constraining power or influence; pressure; urgency; violence.

By stress of weather driven,
At last they landed. Dryden, Æneid, i. 503.

2. In mech., an elastic force, whether in equilibrium with an external force or not; the force called into play by a strain. This word was introduced into mechanics by Rankine in 1855. In the following year Sir William Thomson used the word as synonymous with pressure, or an external force balanced by elastic forces. The terminology has been further confused by the use of Rankine's word strain, by Thomson and others, as a synonym for deformation. The words stress and strain are needed in the senses originally given to them by Rankine; while they both have familiar equivalents to which they have been wrested. At present, some writers use them in one way and some in the other.

In this paper the word strain will be used to denote the change of volume and figure constituting the deviation of a molecule of a solid from that condition which it preserves when free from the action of external forces; and the word stress will be used to denote the force, or combination of forces, which such a molecule exerts in tending to recover its free condition, and which, for a state of equilibrium, is equal and opposite to the combination of external forces applied to it.

Rankine, Axes of Elasticity, § 2.

A stress is an equilibrating application of force to a body. . . . It will be seen that I have deviated slightly from Mr. Rankine's definition of the word stress, as I have applied it to the direct action experienced by a body from the matter around it, and not, as proposed by him, to the elastic reaction of the body equal and opposite to that action. Thomson, Phil. Trans., CLXVI. 487.

3. Stretch; strain; effort.

Though the faculties of the mind are improved by exercise, yet they must not be put to a stress beyond their strength. Locke, Conduct of the Understanding, xxviii.

4. Weight; importance; special force or significance; emphasis.

Consider how great a stress he laid upon this duty, . . . and how earnestly he recommended it. Bp. Atterbury.

This, on which the great stress of the business depends. Locke. (Johnson.)

So rare the sweep, so nice the art,
That lays no stress on any part.

Lowell, Appledore.

5. The relative loudness with which certain syllables or parts of syllables are pronounced; emphasis in utterance; accent; ictus. In elocution, initial, opening, or radical stress is stress or emphasis at the beginning; medial or median stress is that in the middle; and close, final, or vanishing stress is stress at the end of a vowel-sound. The union of initial and final is compound stress, that of all three stresses is thorough stress.—Anticlastic stress. See anticlastic.—Axis of a stress, one of three mutually perpendicular lines meeting at any point of a body in which a given stress tends to produce only elongation or contraction, without any tangential action.—Center of stress. See *center*¹.—Close stress. See def. 5.—Composition of stresses. See composition of displacements, under composition.—Compound stress. See def. 5.—Concurrent stress and strain. See concurrent.—Final stress. See def. 5.—Homogeneous stress, in mech., a stress which affects alike all similar and similarly turned portions of matter within the boundary within which the stress is said to be homogeneous.—Initial stress. See def. 5.—Lateral stress. See lateral.—Medial, median stress. See def. 5.—Normal stress, a stress such that its tendency to change the relative positions of two parts of a solid always acts along the normals to the surface separating those parts. Such a stress consists of three extensive or compressive stresses along three rectangular axes.—Orthogonal stress. (a) Relatively to a homogeneous strain, a stress which neither increases nor diminishes the work of producing that strain. (b) Relatively to another stress, a stress orthogonal to a strain perfectly concurrent with the other stress.—Perfectly concurrent stress. (a) Relatively to another stress, a stress equal to that other multiplied by a real number. (b) Relatively to an infinitesimal homogeneous strain, a stress such that, if the strain be so compounded with a rotation as to produce a pure strain, the motions of the particles upon the surface of a sphere relatively to its center represent in magnitude and direction the components of the stress.—Principal tension of a stress, a component of the stress along one of its axes.—Radical stress. See def. 5.—Shearing stress, a stress tending to produce a shear.—Storm and stress. See storm.—Synclastic stress, a stress upon a plate tending to give it a positive curvature.—Tangential stress, a stress such that its tendency to change the relative positions of two parts of a solid always acts along the tangents to the surface separating those parts. Such a stress consists of three shearing stresses having orthogonal axes.—The principal axes of stress. See *axis*¹.—Thorough stress. See def. 5.—Type of a stress. See type.—Vanishing stress, an increasing loudness toward the end of a vowel-sound, producing the effect of a jerk. See def. 5.—Syn. 5. Accent, etc. See emphasis.

stress² (stres), n. [*stress*¹, v.] 1. Distress; difficulty; extremity; pinch. [Obsolete or archaic.]

And help the pure that ar in stres
Oppress and hereit mercyles.
Lauder, Dewtie of Kyngis (E. E. T. S.), i. 469.

The agony and stress
Of pitying love. Whittier, The Two Rabbits.

2. In law: (a) The act of distraining; distress. (b) A former mode of taking up indictments for circuit courts.

stress-diagram (stres'di'ā-gram), n. See diagram.

stressless (stres'les), a. [*stress*¹ + -less.] Without stress; specifically, unaccented. Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 788.

stress-sheet (stres'shēt), n. In bridge-building, same as strain-sheet.

stretch (streech), v. [ME. strecchen (also unassibilated strecken, whence mod. E. dial. streck, strack, var. strake) (pret. straughte, straght, strahie, streahte, streighte*, streizte, streichte, pp. straught, straght, streight, streich, streichit), < AS. strecvan (pret. strechte, pp. strecht) = OFries. strekka = D. strecken = MLG. strecken = OHG. strecchen, MHG. G. strecken = Sw. sträcka = Dan. strække, draw out, stretch; connected with the adj. AS. stræc, strec, strong, violent (lit. stretched?), = MHG. strac (strack-), G. strack, straight; √ strak, perhaps orig. √ srak*, a var. of √ rak in *retch*², reck, *reach*¹; otherwise akin to L. stringere, pp. strictus, draw tight (see stringent, *strain*¹, *strait*¹), and to Gr. σπαγγός, twisted tight. Hence *straight*¹, orig. pp. of stretch. Connection with string, *strong*¹, etc., is uncertain.] I. trans. 1†. To draw (out); pull (out).

But stert vp stithly, straught out a swerde.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), i. 1240.

2. To draw out to full length; extend; expand; spread: as, to stretch one's self; to stretch the wings; to stretch one's legs; hence, sometimes, to tighten; make tense or taut.

Reddi, of your rist arm that ouer rome streyt,
I se wel the signifaunce.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), i. 2957.

I have stretched my legs up Tottenham Hill to overtake you.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 43.

3. To extend, or cause to reach or extend, lengthwise, or between specified points: as, to stretch a rope from one point to another.

My wings shall be Stretch'd out no further then from thee to thee.
Quarles, Emblems, iii. 12.

Phœnicia is stretched by some . . . euen to Egypt, all alongst that Sea-coast.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 95.

A clothes-line with some clothes on it . . . is stretched between the trunks of some stunted willows.
Ruskin, Elements of Drawing, iii.

4. To draw out or extend in any direction by the application of force; draw out by tensile stress: as, to stretch cloth; to stretch a rubber band beyond its strength.

My business and that of my wife is to stretch new boots for millionaires.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 623.

5. To distend or expand forcibly or violently; strain by the exercise of force; subject to stress, literally or figuratively.

Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood.
Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 10.

They that stretch his infallibility further do they know not what.
Selden, Table-Talk, p. 86.

6. To extend or strain too far; impair by straining; do violence to; exaggerate: as, to stretch the truth.—7†. To exert; strain.

Till my veins
And sinews crack, I'll stretch my utmost strength.
Beau. and Fl. (5), Faithful Friends, iii. 3.

Stretching their best abilities to express their lones.
Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, i. 182.

8. To reach or hold out; put forth; extend.

He drough oute a letter that was wrapped in a cloth of silke, and straught it to the kynge.
Martin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 639.

Stretch thine hand unto the poor. Eccles. vii. 32.

9. To cause to lie or fall extended at full length: as, to stretch an opponent on the ground by a blow.—10. To hang. [Slang.]

The night before Larry was stretched.
R. Burroues, in Prout's Reliques, p. 267.

To stretch a point. Same as to strain a point (which see, under *point*¹).

II. intrans. 1. To extend; reach; be continuous over a distance; be drawn out in length or in breadth, or both; spread.

Twenty fadme of brede the armes straughte.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2058.

The town stretcheth along the bottom of the haven, back on the West with a rocky mountain.
Sandys, Travailes, p. 10.

2. To be extended or to bear extension without breaking, as elastic substances; attain greater length: literally or figuratively.

The inner membrane, . . . because it would stretch and yield, remained unbroken.
Boyle.

The terms . . . must be very elastic if they would stretch widely enough to include all the poems.

O. W. Holmes, Emerson, xiv.

3. To go beyond the truth; exaggerate. [Colloq.]

What an ally do we find to the credit of the most probable event that is reported by one who uses to stretch!
Government of the Tongue.

4. Naut., to sail by the wind under all sail.—

5. To make violent efforts in running.—Stretching convulsions, tetanic convulsions which, acting through the extensor muscles, straighten the limbs.—Stretch out! an order to a boat's crew to pull hard.

stretch (streech), n. [stretch, v.] 1. A stretching or straining, especially a stretching or straining beyond measure: as, a stretch of authority.

A great and sudden stretch or contortion.
Ray, Works of Creation, p. 287.

It is only by a stretch of language that we can be said to desire that which is inconceivable.
W. K. Clifford, Lectures, L. 229.

2. A state of tension; strain: as, to be on the stretch.

Those put a lawful authority upon the stretch, to the abuse of power, under the colour of prerogative.
Sir R. L. Estrange.

3. Reach; extent; scope.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., Ceyx and Alcyone, l. 482.

This is the utmost stretch that Nature can,
And all beyond is fulsome, false, and vain.
Granville, Unnatural Flights in Poetry.

It strains my faculties to their highest stretch.
Swift, Tale of a Tub, ix.

4. A long tract; an extended or continued surface or area, relatively narrow; a reach; distance; sweep: as, a long stretch of country road; a great stretch of grassy land; a stretch of moorland.

The grass, here and there, is for great stretches as smooth and level as a carpet.
H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 147.

5. One of the two straight sides of a race-course, as distinguished from the bend or curve at each end. The home-stretch is that part of the course which the contestant goes over after passing the last curve just before completing the race.

6. Naut., the reach or extent of progress on one tack; a tack.—7. In wearing: (a) The plot of ground on which a weaver stretches his warp. (b) The length of spun-yarn between the spindles and roller-beam, which is wound upon the spindles each time the carriage is run toward the roller-beam. Also called draw. Spens' Encyc. Manuf., i. 760.—8. A single continued effort; one uninterrupted sitting, diet, shift, turn, or the like: as, to work ten hours at a stretch.

She could not entertain the child long on a stretch.
Bulwer, Night and Morning, ii. 8.

But all of them left me a week at a stretch to attend the county fair.
The Century, XXVIII. 555.

9. A year's imprisonment or punishment. [Thieves' slang.]—10. Course; direction: as, the stretch of seams of coal.—11. Stride; bound, as of a running animal. Gay.

stretcher (streech'ēr), n. [stretch + *-er*¹.] 1. One who or that which stretches or expands. Specifically—(a) A tool for stretching the fingers of leather gloves, that they may be put on more easily. (b) In shoemaking, same as shoe-stretcher. (c) A frame, composed of four pieces of wood, upon which painters' canvas is drawn light. By driving small wedges in at the angles the tension is increased. (d) One of the rods in an umbrella attached at one end to one of the ribs, and at the other to the tube sliding upon the handle. (e) In a vehicle, a jointed rod which when extended expands the carriage-bows, and thus spreads the hood or cover. (f) A short piece of wood placed in the clew of a hammock to extend it.

2. In masonry, a brick or stone laid horizontally with its length in the direction of the face of the wall, as distinguished from a header, which is laid lengthwise across the thickness of the wall, so that its small head or end is seen in the external face of the wall. See cut under inbond.—3. One of the cylindrical rails between the legs of a chair; a round. E. H. Knight.—4. In cabinet-making, a low shelf serving as a brace or stay to the legs of a table, and roomy enough to hold a vase, a basket of flowers, or other ornament.—5. In carp., a tie-timber in a frame.—6. Naut., a narrow piece of plank placed across a boat for the rowers to set their feet against; also, a cross-piece placed between a boat's sides to keep them apart when the boat is hoisted up and gripped.—7. A light, simple litter, without inclosure or top, upon which a dead body or a wounded person can be carried: so called because generally composed of canvas stretched on a frame, or because the body is stretched out upon it. Such frames, covered with canvas, are often used as beds, as in camping.—8. A flat board on which corpses are stretched or laid out preparatory to coffining.—9. In angling: (a) The leader at the extreme end of the line. (b) The tail-fly; the fly that is fastened to the east called the stretcher; a stretcher-fly. See tail-fly (under fly) and whip.—10. A statement which over-stretches the truth; a lie. [Colloq.]—11. In carriage-building, same as strainer, 4.

stretcher-bond (strech'čr-bond), n. A method of building in which bricks or stones are laid lengthwise in contiguous courses, the joints of one coming at half length of the bricks or stones in the other. See cuts under bond.

stretcher-fly (strech'čr-flī), n. The fly on the stretcher of a casting-line, at the extreme end.

stretcher-mule (strech'čr-mūl), n. In cotton-manuf., a mule which stretches and twists fine rovings, advancing them a stage toward finishing. E. H. Knight.

stretch-halter (strech'hāl'tēr), n. [< stretch, v., + obj. halter]. One who ought to be hanged; a scoundrel. Also crack-ropes, wag-halter, etc.

'Stoot, look here, look here, I know this is the shop, by that same stretch-halter.
Heywood, If you know not Me (Works, ed. 1874), I. 283.

stretching-frame (strech'ing-frām), n. 1. In cotton-manuf., a machine for stretching rovings previous to spinning them into yarn.—2. A frame on which starched fabrics are stretched to dry. It is sometimes arranged so that the direction of the tension can be changed in order to give the fabric a soft and elastic finish.

stretching-iron (strech'ing-ī'črn), n. In leather-manuf.: (a) A carriers' tool for stretching curried leather, smoothing the surface, removing rough places, and raising the bloom. It consists of a flat piece of metal or stone set in a handle. (b) Same as softening-iron.

stretching-machine (strech'ing-mā-shēn'), n. Any machine by which some material is stretched; specifically, a machine in which cotton goods and other textile fabrics are stretched, to lay all their warp- and woof-yarns truly parallel.

stretching-piece (strech'ing-pēs), n. See *strut*².

stretchy (strech'i), a. [< stretch + -y]. 1. Liable to stretch unduly.

A workman with a true eye can often contract stretchy stock.
Harper's Mag., LXX. 282.

2. Inclined to stretch one's self: a consequence of fatigue or sleepiness. [Colloq. in both uses.]

But in the night the pup would get stretchy and brace his feet against the old man's back and shove, grunting complacently the while. S. L. Clemens, Roughing it, xxvii.

stretta (stret'tā), n.; pl. strette (-te). [It., fem. of stretto, drawn tight: see *strait*¹, strict.] Same as stretto.

stretto (stret'tō), n.; pl. stretti (-ti). [It., < L. strictus, drawn tight: see *strait*¹, strict.] In music: (a) In a fugue, that division in which the entrances of the answer are almost immediately after those of the subject, so that the two overlap, producing a rapidly cumulative effect. The stretto properly follows the "working out." When a stretto is constructed in strict canon, it is sometimes called a stretto maestrale or magistrale. (b) In dramatic music, a quickening of the tempo at the end of a movement for the sake of climax.

strew (strō or strō), v.; pret. strewed, pp. strewed or strewen, ppr. strewing. [Also archaically strow, formerly or dial. also straw; < ME. strewen, strawen, strewen, < AS. strewian, also strewian, strewian* (Somner) = OS. strewian, strowian = OFries. strowa = D. stroomen = OHG. strewen, MHG. strōwen, strowen, G. strewen = Leel. strā = Sw. Dan. strō = Goth. straujan (pret. strawida), > It. strajare, stretch, strew; cf. O Bulg. strewi, strew. < L. sternere (pret. stravi, pp. stratus), scatter (see stratum), = Gr. σπορῖναι, σπαρῖναι, strew, scatter, = Skt. √ star, scatter. The relation of the Teut. to the variant L. and Gr. roots is not wholly clear. Hence ult. *straw*¹, n. The three pronunciations strō, strā, or strā are due to the instability of the AS. vowel or diphthong before w, and its wavering in ME.]. 1. trans. 1. To scatter; spread loosely: said of dry, loose, separable things: as, to strew seed in beds; to strew sand on the floor; to strew flowers over a grave.

I had hem strowe floures on my bed.
Chaucer, Good Women (1st version), l. 101.

And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way: others cut down branches from the tree, and strawed [spread, R. V.] them in the way. Mat. xxi. 8.

2. To cover in spots and patches here and there, as if by sprinkling or casting loosely about.

And [they] made soche martire that all the feilde was strawed tull of deed men and horse.

Merlin (L. E. T. S.), ii. 294.
Fore-run fair Love, strewing her way with flowers.
Shak., L. C. L., iv. 3. 380.

3. To spread abroad; give currency to.

She may strew
Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 5. 14.

strewing (strō'ing or strō'ing), n. [Verbal n. of strew, v.] Anything strewed, or suitable to be strewed (for some special purpose).

The herbs that have on them the cold dew o' the night
Are strewings fitt'st for graves.
Shak., Cymbeline, iv. 2. 285.

strewment (strō'ment or strō'ment), n. [< strew + -ment]. The act of strewing, or something strewed.—*Maiden strewment*s. See maiden.

strewn (strōn or strōn), n. A past participle of strew.

streyter. A Middle English spelling of *strait*¹.

stria (strī'ā), n.; pl. strīe (-ē). [= F. strie, < L. stria, a furrow, channel, hollow.]. 1. In anat., zool., and bot., a stripe or streak; a line, or linear marking, whether of elevation or depression—as a ridge or a furrow—or of texture or color. See *cuts under brain, muscle*¹, and Diatomacæ.—2. In arch., a fillet between the flutes of columns, pilasters, and the like.—3. In pathol., a linear hemorrhagic macula.—4. An imperfection in the form of a streak or band, whether a discoloration or an irregularity of structure, especially in glass.—5. pl. In elect., the peculiar stratifications of the light observed in vacuum-tubes (Geissler tubes) upon the passage of an electrical discharge.—Confluent, dilated, distinct striae. See the adjectives.—Dislocated stria. See dislocate.—Glacial striae, nearly parallel lines, varying in depth and coarseness, engraved on rock-surfaces by the passage of ice in which fragments of rock are embedded. See glaciation, 3.—Obliterate, scutellar, etc., striae. See the adjectives.—Striae acusticae, transverse white lines, more or less apparent, on the floor of the fourth ventricle, arising close to the middle line, and curving outward over the restiform bodies to the nucleus accessorius of the auditory nerve. Also called lineae transversae, striae medullares.—Striae musculares, the transverse striae or stripes of striated muscular fiber. See *cut under muscle*¹.—Stria lateralis, a lateral stria on the surface of the corpus callosum, running lengthwise on either side of the striae longitudinales.—Stria longitudinalis, stria Lancisi. Same as nerve of Lancisi (which see, under nerve).—Stria medullaris thalami, a band of white fibers running backward along the junction of the median and superior surfaces of the thalamus to end in the habenular ganglion.

strial (strī'al), a. [< stria + -al]. Of the nature of striae; marked by striae. Amer. Jour. Sci., XXXI. 135. [Rare.]

striate (strī'āt), a. [= F. strié, < L. striatus, pp. of striare, furrow, channel, < stria, a furrow, channel, hollow; see stria.] 1. Striped or streaked; marked with striae; scored with fine lines; striped, as muscle; striated.—2. Having a thread-like form.

Des Cartes imagines this earth once to have been a sun, and so the centre of a lesser vortex, whose axis still kept the same posture, by reason of the striate particles finding no fit pores for their passages but only in this direction.
Ray.

striate (strī'āt), v. t.: pret. and pp. striated, ppr. striating. [< L. striatus, pp. of striare (> F. strier), furrow, channel, < stria, a furrow, channel; see stria.] To mark with striae; cause striation in; score; stripe. Nature, XXX. 23.

—Striated fiber, striated muscular fiber, striated muscle, the striped fiber characteristic of the voluntary muscles, though also found in a few other red muscles which are involuntary, as those of the heart. See *muscle*¹.—Striated ipecacuanha. See ipecacuanha.—Striated sandpiper. See sandpiper.

striately (strī'āt-ī), adv. In a striate manner; with striae.

striate-plicate (strī'āt-plī'kāt), a. In bot., striate by reason of minute folds.

striate-punctate (strī'āt-pungk'tāt), a. In entom., having rows of punctures set in regular lines very close together, sometimes elongated or running into one another.

striate-sulcate (strī'āt-sul'kāt), a. In bot., striate with minute furrows.

striation (strī-ā'shōn), n. [< striate + -ion].

1. The state of being striated; a striate condition or appearance; striature; also, one of a set of striae; a stria.—2. In geol., grooves, flutings, and scratches made on the surfaces of rocks by the passage over them of bodies of ice: a result frequently observed along the sides of existing glaciers, and in regions which were formerly occupied by ice.—3. In mineral., fine parallel lines on a crystalline face, commonly due to the oscillatory combination of two crystalline forms.

striatopunctate (strī-ā'tō-pungk'tāt), a. Same as striate-punctate.

striatum (strī-ā'tum), n.: pl. striata (-tā). [L. striatum (se. corpus), neut. of striatus, streaked; see striate.] The great ganglion of the fore-brain: more fully called corpus striatum.

striature (strī-ā'tūr), n. [< L. striatura, condition of being furrowed or channeled, < striare, pp. striatus, furrow, channel; see striae.] Disposition of striae; mode of striation; striation; also, a stria.

stricht, n. [Ireg. < L. stris (strig-), a screech-owl.] A screech-owl.

The ruefull strich, still waiting on the bere.
Spenser, F. Q., II. xii. 36.

strick (stri'k), n. [A var. of strike. Cf. strickle.]

1. A flat piece of wood for leveling grain in a measure; a strickle.

A strichhilt; a stricke: a long and round peece of wood like a rolling pinne (with us it is flat), wherewith measures are made even.
Nomenclator. (Nares.)

2 A bushel measure.

One cheesepress, one coffer, one strick, and one fourme [form].
Worcestershire Wills of 16th and 17th Cent., [quoted in N. and Q., 7th ser., X. 369.]

3. A handful or bunch of flax, jute, or other fiber, heckled and sorted, or ready to be heckled.

The heckler stakes a handful or strick of rough flax.
Encyc. Brit., XIV. 665.

stricken (stri'k'n), p. a. [Pp. of strike, v.] 1. Struck; smitten: as, the stricken deer.—2. Advanced; far gone.

I chanced to espye this foresayde Peter talkynge with a certayne Stranger, a man well stricken in age.

Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), p. 29.

Stricken hour, a whole hour, marked as completed by the striking of the clock.

He persevered for a stricken hour in such a torrent of unnecessary tattle.
Scott.

strickle (stri'k'l), n. [Early mod. E. also strickle, and assimilated stritchel, stritchell, stritchill, strichell; < ME. strikele, strykylle (= MD. striekel, strekel, strekel), a strickle; dim. of strike.]

1. A straight-edge used to sweep grain off level with the top of a measure when measuring grain.—2. A wooden swingle for dressing flax.

—3. In carp. and masonry, a pattern or template.—4. In founding: (a) A straight-edge used to remove superfluous sand to a level with the top of a flask after running the sand into it. Compare loam-board. (b) A template or pattern used in sweeping patterns in sand or loam.

—5. In cutlery, a straight-edge fed with emery, and employed to grind the edges of knives arranged spirally on a cylinder. E. H. Knight.

strickler (stri'k'lēr), n. [Also striker; < strickle + -er]. A strickle or strike. Randb Holme, Aead. of Armory, p. 337. (Nares) [Local Eng.]

strict (strikt), a. [= F. strict (OF. streit, etc.), < L. strictus, pp. of stringere, draw tight, bind, contract; see *stringent, strain*¹. Cf. *strait*¹, the older form of the same word.] 1. Drawn tight; tight; close: as, a strict ligature. Arbuthnot.

The lustful god, with speedy pace,
Just thought to strain her in a strict embrace Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., i. 976.

2. Tense; stiff: as, a strict or lax fiber.—3. Narrow; restricted; confined; strait. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Strict passage [the ear] through which sighs are brought, And whispers for the heart, their shave.

Wordsworth, Power of Sound, l. 1.

4. Close; intimate.

There never was a more strict friendship than between those Gentlemen.

Steele, in A. Dobson's Selections from Steele, Int., p. xl.

5. Absolute; unbroken: as, strict silence.—6. Exact; accurate; careful; rigorously nice: as, words taken in their strictest sense; a strict command.

I wish I had not look'd
With such strict eyes into her follies.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, l. 2.
And fall into deception unaware,
Not keeping strictest watch.
Milton, P. L., ix. 363.

7. Exacting; rigorous; severe; rigid: as, strict in keeping the Sabbath; a strict disciplinarian.

Within these ten days take a monastery,
A most strict house.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, l. 1.
Not over-ruled by fate
Inextricable, or strict necessity.
Milton, P. L., v. 528.

Strict statutes and most biting laws.
Shak., M. for M., i. 3. 19.

8. Restricted; taken strictly, narrowly, or exclusively: as, a strict generic or specific diagnosis.—9. In zool., constricted; narrow or close; straitened; not loose or diffuse: as, the strict stem of some corals.—10. In bot., close or narrow and upright: opposed to lux: said of a stem or an inflorescence.—11. In music, regular, exactly according to rule; without liberties: as, a strict canon or fugue.—A strict hand. See hand.—Strict constructionist, counterpoint, cross-examination. See the nouns.—Strict creditor's bill. See creditor's action, under creditor.—Strict foreclosure, fugue, sense, etc. See the nouns.—Strict imitation. See imitation, 3.—Strict settlement, in law, a device in English conveyancing by which the title to landed estates is preserved in the family by conveying it in such manner that the father holds an estate for life and the eldest son a contingent or expectant estate in remainder, with interests also in other members of the family, so that usually only by the concurrence of father and son, and often of trustees also, can complete alienation be made.—Syn. 6. Close, acrupulous, critical.—7. Severe, rigorous, etc. See auvere.

strict (strikt'shōn), n. [L. strictio(n)-, a drawing or pressing together, < stringere, pp. strictus, draw tight, contract: see strict.] A drawing or pressing together.—Line of striction of a ruled surface, the locus of points on the generators of a ruled surface where each is nearest to the next consecutive generator.

strictland, n. [< strict + land: prob. suggested by island.] An isthmus. Halliwel. [Rare.] strictly (strikt'li), adv. In a strict manner. (a) Narrowly; closely; carefully: as, the matter is to be strictly investigated. (b) Exactly; with nice or rigorous accuracy, exactness, or precision: as, strictly speaking, all men are not equal.

Horace hath but more strictly spoke our thoughts.
B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

(c) Positively; definitely; stringently.

Charge him strictly
Not to proceed, but wait my farther pleasure.
Dryden, Spanish Friar, iii. 3.

(d) Rigorously; severely; without remission or indulgence; with close adherence to rule.

I wish those of my blood that do offend
Should be more strictly punish'd than my foes.
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, iv. 1.

(e) Exclusively; out-and-out; thoroughly.

Corwall . . . was a strictly British land, with a British nomenclature, and a British speech which lingered on into the last century.
E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 140.

strictness (strikt'nēs), n. The state or quality of being strict, in any sense.

stricture (strikt'ūr), n. [= F. stricture = It. strittura, < L. stricturea, a contraction, < stringere, draw tight, contract: see strict. Cf. stricture.] 1. A drawing tight; contraction; compression; binding.

Christ . . . came to knit the bonds of government faster by the stricture of more religious ties.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 207.

2. In pathol., a morbid contraction of some mucous canal or duct of the body, as the esophagus, intestine, urethra, or vagina.—3. Strictness.

A man of stricture and firm abstinence.
Shak., M. for M., l. 3. 12.

4. Sharp criticisms; critical remark; censure.

I leave it [antobiography] wholly, both as to the matter and stile, to your commendations. . . . By your blots and strictures it may receive a beauty which of itself it had not.
J. Cotton, in Aubrey's Letters and Lives, l. 20.

5. Mark; trace; evidence; sign.

The God of nature implanted in their vegetable natures certain passive strictures, or signatures, of that wisdom which hath made and ordered all things with the highest reason.
Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 46.

Cock's, Syme's, and Wheelhouse's operations for stricture. See operation.—Resilient, spasmodic, etc., stricture. See the adjectives. (See also bride-stricture.)

strictured (strikt'ūr), a. [< stricture + -ed.] Affected with stricture: as, a strictured duct.

strid. A preterit (obsolete) and past participle of stride.

striddle (strid'li), v.; pret. and pp. striddled, ppr. striddling. [Freq. of stride. Cf. straddle.] To straddle. [Prov. Eng.] stride (strid'), v.; pret. strode (formerly also strid), pp. stridden or strid, ppr. striding. [< ME. striden (pret. strode, strood, strade), < AS. stridan (pret. strād, pp. striden), stride, = MD. striden, D. striden = MLG. striden (pret. street), stride, strive, = OHG. stritan, MHG. striten, G. streiten = Dan. stride, strive, contend; also in weak form, OS. strithian = OFries. strida = Lecl. stridha = Sw. strida, strive; orig. appar. contend, hence, in a particular use, go hastily, take long steps. Hence the comp. bestride and freq. striddle, also straddle, bestraddle; and, through OF., strive and strife.] I. intrans. 1. To walk with long steps; step.

There was no Greke so grym, ne of so gret wille,
Durst abate on the burnes, ne to bonke stride;
Ne atorse hym with fight to terke out of ship.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 5687.
Hell trembled as he strode.
Milton, P. L., ii. 676.

2. To stand with the feet far apart; straddle.

Because th' acute, and the rect-Angles too,
Heard not so wide as obtuse Angles doo.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartaa's Weeks, ii., The Columnes.
The arches, striding o'er the new-horn stream.
Durus, Verse Written in Kenmore Inn.

Striding level, a spirit-level the frame of which carries at its two extremities inverted Y's below, so that it may be placed upon two concentric cylinders and straddle any small intervening projections. The striding level is a necessary adjunct of the transit-instrument when this is used for determining time, and is used in many leveling-instruments.

II. trans. 1. To pass over at a step: as, to stride a ditch.

Another, like an Embrian's sturdy spouse, Strides all the Space her Petticoat allows.
Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love, iii.

2. To sit astride on; bestride; straddle; ride upon.

And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast.
Shak., Macbeth, i. 7. 22.

stride (strid'), n. [< stride, v.] 1. A step, especially one that is long, measured, or pompous; a wide stretch of the legs in walking.

Simplicity flies away, and iniquity comes at long strides upon us.
Sir T. Browne, Urn-Burial, Decl.

Her voice theatrically loud,
And masculine her stride.
Pope, Imit. of Earl of Dorset.

A lofty bridge, stepping from cliff to cliff with a single stride.
Longfellow, Hyperion, iii. 2.

2. The space measured or the ground covered by a long step, or between putting down one foot and raising the other.

Betwixt them both was but a little stride,
That did the house of Richesse from hell-mouth divide.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 24.

strident (stri'dent), a. [= F. strident = Sp. Pg. estridente = It. stridente, < L. strident(-t)-s, ppr. of stridere, give a harsh, shrill, or whistling sound, creak.] Creaking; harsh; grating.

"Brava! brava!" old Steyne's strident voice was heard roaring over all the rest.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, II.

stridently (stri'dent-li), adv. Creakingly; harshly; gratingly.

stridor (stri'dor), n. [L. < stridere, give a harsh, shrill, or whistling sound, creak: see strident.] A harsh, creaking noise.—Stridor dentium, grinding of the teeth: a common symptom during sleep in children affected with worms or other intestinal irritation. It occurs also in fevers as a symptom of irritation of the brain.

stridulant (strid'ū-lant), a. [*< NL. as if stridulau(-t)-s, ppr. of stridulare*: see stridulate.] Strident or stridulous, as an insect; capable of stridulating; specifically, of or pertaining to the Stridulantia.

Stridulantia (strid'ū-lan'shi-ä), n. pl. [NL. (Burmeister, 1835): see stridulant.] A group of hemipterous insects, including various forms which have the faculty of stridulating; specifically, the cicadas. See Cicadidae.

stridulate (strid'ū-lät), v. i.: pret. and pp. stridulated, ppr. stridulating. [*< NL. as if stridulau(-t)-s, ppr. of stridulare*, < L. stridulus, giving a shrill sound, creaking: see stridulous.] To make a stridulous noise, as an insect; effect stridulation, as the cicada; grate, scrape, or creak with the organs of stridulation; shrill; chirr.

stridulating-organ (strid'ū-lä-ting'ōr-gan), n. In entom., a finely wrinkled or file-like surface or plate, frequently having a pearly luster, by friction of which against another surface brought into contact with it a creaking sound is produced. These organs are variously situated on the wings, elytra, legs, abdomen, thorax, and even the head.

stridulation (strid'ū-lä'shōn), n. [< stridulate + -ion.] The act, process, or function of stridulating; the power of so doing, or the thin, harsh, creaking noise thus produced; a shrilling. Stridulation is effected by rubbing together hard or rough parts of the body, often specially modified in various ways for that purpose, being thus not vocalization or phonation. It is highly characteristic of many homopterous insects, as the cicadas; of many orthopterous insects, as various locusts or grasshoppers; and of some coleopterous insects, or beetles. It rarely occurs in lepidopterous insects, but has been observed in some butterflies and moths, and also in a few spiders, as of the genus Theridion. Those homopterous insects in which it is especially marked are named Stridulantia.

stridulator (strid'ū-lä-tōr), n. [< stridulate + -or.] An insect which stridulates, shrills, or chirrs; that which is stridulatory.

stridulatory (strid'ū-lä-tō-ri), a. [< stridulate + -ory.] Pertaining to stridulators or stridulation; stridulant or stridulous; shrill or shrilling; chirring.

stridulous (strid'ū-lus), a. [< L. stridulus, creaking, rattling, hissing, < stridere, creak: see strident.] Making a small harsh sound; having a thin, squeaky sound; squeaky; creaking.

To make them [the old men] garrulous, as grasshoppers are stridulous.
Chapman, Iliad, lii., Commentary.

Stridulous angina, same as tarynginarius stridulus (which see, under larynginarius).

striet, v. t. A Middle English form of strew.

strife (strif), n. [< ME. strif, < OF. estrif, < lecl. strith, strife, contention, pain, grief, = Sw. Dan. strid, combat, contention, = OS. OFries. strid = D. strijd = OHG. Mjig, strif, G. streit, strife, = OL. stlis (gen. stlit-), L. lis (lit-), strife, litigation (see litigate); from the verb, lecl. stridha, strive, contend, etc.: see stride. Cf. strive.] 1. A striving or effort to do one's best; earnest attempt or endeavor.

With strife to please you, day exceeding day.
Shak., All's Well, Epil.

2. Emulative contention or rivalry; active struggle for superiority; emulation.

With equal strife
Who should weep most.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 1791.
Thus gods contended (noble strife, Worthy the heavenly mind)
Who most should do to soften anxious life.
Congreve, To the Earl of Godolphin.

3. Antagonistic contention; contention characterized by anger or enmity; discord; conflict; quarrel: as, strife of the elements.

Sith for me ye fight, to me this grace
Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vi. 33.

Twenty of them fought in this black strife.
Shak., R. and J. iii. 1. 153.

To take strifet, to enter into conflict.

For which he took with Rome and Cesar strif.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 595.

= Syn. 2 and 3. Strife, Contention. These words agree in being very general, in having a good sense possible, and in seeming elevated or poetical when applied to the organized quarrels of war or to anything more than oral disputes. Strife is the stronger. Contention often indicates the more continued and methodical effort, and hence is more often the word for rivalry in effort to possess something. Such a rivalry, when definite in form and limited in time, is a contest: as, the contents of the Greek games. A contention that is forcible, violent, exhausting, or attended with real or figurative convulsions or contortions, is a struggle. See battle, encounter.

strifeful (strif'fūl), a. [< strife + -ful.] Full of strife; contentious; discordant.

But strifeful mind and diverse qualitee
Drew them in partes, and each made others foe.
Spenser, F. Q., II. ii. 13.

strig (strig), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. The footstalk of a flower, leaf, or fruit. Ure, Diet., l. 302.—2. The tang of a sword-blade. See tang.

strig (strig), v. t.; pret. and pp. strigged, ppr. strigging. [< strig, n.] To remove the footstalk from: as, to strig eurrants.

striga (strig'gä), n.; pl. strigae (-jē). [NL., < L. striga, a swath, furrow, < stringere, draw tight, contract: see strict.] 1. In bot., a sharp-pointed appressed bristle or hair-like scale, constituting a species of pubescence in plants.—2. In zool., a streak or stripe; a stria.—3. In arch., a flute of a column.

strigate (strig'gät), a. [*< NL. strigatus, < L. striga, a furrow: see striga.] In entom., same as strigose.

Striges (strig'jēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. strix (strig-), an owl.] The owls, or Strigidæ in a broad sense, as a suborder of Raptores; the nocturnal birds of prey. The physiognomy is peculiar by reason of the lateral expansion, lengthwise contraction, and double thickening of the skull, which is often asymmetrical. The eyes look forward, not laterally as in other birds, and are set in a peculiar disk of radiated feathers more or less completely formed, the feathers of the front being antrorse and adpressed, hiding the base of the bill. This is the facial disk, of which some radiating feathers of peculiar shape and texture constitute a ruff. The eyes are very large, with a peculiarly shaped eyeball, the cornea being protuberant, and with the sclerotic presenting a figure somewhat like a short acorn in its cup; the iris is capable of great movement, dilating and contracting the pupil more than is usual in birds. The ear-parts are very large, often unlike on opposite sides of the head, and provided with a movable external flap, the operculum, sometimes of great extent. The tufts of feathers, or so-called "ears," of many owls are the corniplumes or plumicorns. The bill is peculiar in that the nostrils open at the edge of the cere rather than in its substance, and the tomia are never toothed. There are four toes, of which the outer is versatile and shorter than the inner, with three of its joints together shorter than the fourth joint. The claws are all long, sharp, and curved, and the middle one is sometimes pectinate. The feathers lack aftershafts, and the plumage is peculiarly soft and blended, conferring a noiseless flight. The birds have no umbilical muscle, one pair of intrinsic syringal muscles, a nude oil-gland, long clubbed cæca, short intestines, moderately muscular gizzard, capacious gullet without special crop, a peculiar structure of the tarsometatarsal and shoulder-joint, a manubriated and double-notched or entire sternum, basipterygoid processes, and spongy maxillopalatine and lacrymal. The suborder is divided into two families, Strigidae and Alucoideæ. Nyctarpages is a synonym. See cuts under barn-owl, braccae, *Bubo*², hawk-owl, Otus, Nyctala, owl, snow-owl, and Strix.

Strigidae (strij'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Strix (Strig-) + -idae.] The owls as a family of strigine or nocturnal birds of prey of the order Raptores: used in three senses. (a) Same as Striges, including all owls. (b) Same as Alucoideæ, including only the barn-owls. (c) Including all owls excepting the Alucoideæ. In this sense the distinctive characters are the furculum not ankylosed to the double-notched or fenestrate sternum, the middle claw not pectinate, and the facial disk incomplete or not triangular.

strigil (strij'il), n. [L. strigilis (= Gr. στλεγγίς), a scraper, < stringere, draw tight, contract, touch, graze, stroke: see strigil.] 1. An instrument of metal, ivory, or horn, used by the ancients for scraping the skin at the bath and in the gymnasium; a flesh-scraper. See cut under Lysippus.—2. A flesh-brush, or a glove of hair-cloth, rough toweling, or other article used for stimulating the skin by rubbing.

You are treated after the eastern manner, washing with hot and cold water, with oyles, and being rubbed with a kind of strigil of seal's-skin, put on the operator's hand like a glove. Evelyn, Diary, June, 1645.

strigilate (strij'i-lāt), a. [L. strigilatus*, < strigilis, q. v.] In entom., noting the front leg of a bee when it is furnished with a strigilis.

strigilis (strij'i-lis), n.; pl. strigiles (-lēs). [NL., < L. strigilis, a scraper: see strigil.] An organ on the first tarsal joint of a bee's fore leg, used to curry or clean the antennæ; a curry-comb: so called on account of the fringe of stiff hairs. At the end of the tibia is a movable spur, and on this spur an expanded membrane, the velum, which can be brought into contact with the strigilis, forming a circular orifice. The bee lays the antenna in the hollow of the strigilis, presses the velum of the spur upon it, and draws the antenna through the aperture thus formed.

strigilose (strij'i-lōs), a. [Also, erroneously, strigillose; dim. of strigose.] In bot., minutely strigose.

strigine (strij'in), a. [L. strig- (strig-) + *-ine*².] Owl-like; related to or resembling an owl. (a) Of or pertaining to the Striges, or Strigidae in a broad sense. (b) In a narrow sense, belonging to the Strigidae (c); distinguished from Alucine.

strigment (strig'ment), n. [L. strigmentum, that which is scraped off, a scraping, < stringere, draw tight, contract, graze, stroke: see strigil.] Scraping; that which is scraped off.

Brassavolus and many other, beside the strigments and sudorous adhesions from men's hands, acknowledge that nothing proceedeth from gold in the usual decoction thereof. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 5.

Strigopidæ (stri-gop'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Bonaparte, 1849), < Strigops + -idae.] The Strigopinae regarded as a family apart from Psittacidae.

Strigopinae (strig-ō-pi'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Strigops + -inae.] The owl-parrots; a subfamily of Psittacidae, or the only subfamily of Strigopidæ, represented by the genus Strigops. Also Stringopinae. O. Fusch.

Strigops (stri'gops), n. [NL. (G. R. Gray, 1845); also Strigopsis; also Strigops and Strigopsis (Van der Hoeven, 1856); < Strix (Strig-), a screech-owl, + Gr. ὤψ, eye, face.] A genus of Psittacidae, or made type of a family Strigopidæ, containing the kakapo, or nocturnal flightless parrot of New Zealand, S. habroptilus; the owl-parrots: so called from the owlish physiognomy. The sternal keel and the furculum are defective, and the birds have not the power of flight. See cut under owl-parrot.

strigose (stri'gōs), a. [NL. strigosus, < striga, q. v.] 1. In bot., rough with strigæ; beset with sharp-pointed and adpressed straight and stiff hairs or bristles: as, a strigose leaf or stem.—2. In entom., streaked, or finely fluted; having fine, close parallel ridges or points, like the surface of a file. Also strigatæ.

strigosus (stri'gūs), a. [NL. strigosus: see strigose.] Same as strigose.

strike (stri:k), v.; pret. struck, pp. struck, stricken (obs. or dial. strucken), ppr. striking. [ME. striken, stryken (pret. strok, stroke, strake, pp. striken, stricken), < AS. strican (pret. stræc, pp. stricen), go, proceed, advance swiftly and smoothly, = OFries. strika = D. strijken = MLG. striken, LG. striken = OHG. strihan (strong), streichen (weak), MHG. strichen, streichen, G. strichen, smooth, rub, stroke, spread, strike; cf. Ital. strjka, stryka = Sw. stryka = Dan. stryge, stroke, rub, wipe, Goth. striks, a stroke, tittle, akin to L. stringere, draw tight, graze, stroke, etc. (see stringent, strain, strict). Cf. *strak*¹, *strak*², *strak*¹, *strake*², stroke, etc. The senses of strike are much involved, the orig. sense 'go,' 'go along,' being commonly lost from view, or retained only as associated with the sense 'hit.'] I. intrans. 1. To go; proceed; advance; in modern use, especially, to go or move suddenly, or with a sudden turn.

A mouse that moche good couthe, as me thoughte, Stroke forth sternly, and stode biforn hem alle. Piers Plowman (B), ProL, l. 183.

To avoyd them, we struck out of the way, and crossed the pregnant champion to the foot of the mountains. Sandys, Travails, p. 158.

By God's mercy they recovered themselves, and, having the flood with them, struck into the harbour. N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 47.

Whether the poet followed the romancer or the chronicler in his conception of a dramatic character, he at the first step struck into that undeviating track of our humanity amid the accidents of its position. I. D'Israeli, Amen. of Lit., II. 239.

A dispatch from Newfoundland says that the caplin have struck in. This means that the cod, the most famous of all commercial fish, has arrived on the banks. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII. 352.

2. To flow; glide; run.

As stream that striketh stille. Morris and Skeat's Specimens Early Eng., ii. 48.

3. To pass with sudden quickness and effect; dart; pierce.

Till a dart strike through his liver. Prov. vii. 23.

How the bright and blissful Reformation (by Divine Power) strook through the black and settled Night of Ignorance and Anti-christian Tyranny.

Milton, Reformation in Eng., i. 4.

4. To come suddenly or unexpectedly.

We had struck upon a well-beaten track on entering the hills. B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 117.

5. To run or extend in any particular direction, especially with reference to the points of the compass: a word used chiefly by geologists in speaking of the strata, or of stratified masses, but also by miners in indicating the position of the lode or vein. The latter, however, generally use run in preference to strike.—6. To lower a sail, a flag, or colors in token of respect; hence, to surrender, as to a superior or an enemy; yield.

The enemy still came on with greater fury, and hoped by his number of men to carry the prize; till at last the Englishman, finding himself sink space, and ready to perish, struck. Steele, Spectator, No. 350.

The interest of our kingdom is ready to strike to that of your poorest fishing towns. Swift.

7. To touch; glance; graze; impinge by appulse.

Let us consider the red and white colours in porphyry: hinder light from striking on it, and its colours vanish. Locke, Human Understanding, II. viii. 19.

8. To run aground or ashore; run upon a bank, rock, or other obstacle; strand: as, the ship struck at midnight.—9. To inflict a blow, stroke, or thrust; attack: as, to strike in the dark.

We have drawn our swords of God's word, and stricken at the roots of all evil to have them cut down. Lattimer, Sermons, p. 249.

He strake at him, and missed him, 'd ye mark? Chapman, Gentleman Usher, v. 1.

A Surprise in War is like an Apoplexy in the Body, which strikes without giving Warning for Defence. Baker, Chronicles, p. 70.

By their designing leaders taught To strike at power which for themselves they sought. Dryden, Astrea Redux, l. 32.

10. To hit; beat; tap: as, the hammer strikes on the bell of a clock.

They plunge their Oars all at one instant into the Water, keeping exact time with each other: and that they may the better do this, there is one that strikes on a small Gong, or a wooden Instrument, before every stroke of the Oar. Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 74.

11. To sound by percussion, with or as with blows; be struck: as, the clock strikes.

One whose Tongue is struck vp like a Cloeke tick the time, and then strikes, and says much when hee talks little. Ep. Earle, Micro-cosmographic, A stayed Man.

A deep sound strikes like a rising knell! Byron, Child Harold, iii. 21.

12. To use one's weapons; deal blows; fight: as, to strike for one's country.

God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds. Shak., Hen. V., iv. 3. 5.

Is not he the same God still? Is his hand shorted that he cannot strike, or doth his heart fail that he dare not punish? Stillingsfleet, Sermons, l. x.

13. To press a claim or demand by coercive or threatening action of some kind; in common usage, to quit work along with others, in order to compel an employer to accede to some demand, as for increase of pay, or to protest against something, as a reduction of wages: as, to strike for higher pay or shorter hours of work.—14. To steal, as by pocket-picking. [Slang.]—15. To give the last plowing before the seed is sown. Davies.

To harrow the ridges ere ever ye strike Is one piece of husbandry Suffolk doth like. Tusser, September's Husbandry, st. 9.

16. To take root, as a slip of a plant.

The young tops strike freely if they are taken off about three inches long, and inserted singly in some sandy soil in small pots. The Field, March 12, 1857. (Encyc. Dict.)

17. To fasten to stones, shells, etc., as young oysters; become fixed or set.—18. To move with friction; grate; creak.

The closet door struck as it uses to do, both at her coming in and going out. Aubrey, Misc., p. 83.

19. In the United States army, to perform menial services for an officer; act as an officer's servant: generally said of an enlisted man detailed for that duty.—20. To become saturated with salt, as fish in the process of pickling or curing.—21. To run; change or fade, as colors of goods in washing or cleaning. Workshop Receipts, 1st ser., p. 321.—To be struck or stricken in years, to be far along in years; to be of an advanced age.

And they had no child, . . . and they both were well stricken in years. Luke i. 7.

The king Is wise and virtuous, and his noble queen Well struck in years. Shak., Rich. III., i. 1. 92.

To strike again. See again.—To strike at, to make or aim a blow at; attempt to strike; attack: as, to strike at one's rival.—To strike back. (a) To return blow for blow. (b) To refuse to lead, as fish when, instead of following close along the leader and passing into the bowl of the weir, they retreat from the net, and with a sweep double the whole weir.—To strike for, to start suddenly for; make for: as, he struck for home. [Colloq.]—To strike home, to give a decisive and effective blow or thrust.

Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike home. Shak., M. for M., i. 3. 41.

To strike in. (a) To make a vigorous move, effort, or advance.

If he be mad, I will not be foolish, but strike in for a share. Browne, Northern Lass, iii. 2.

He advises me to strike in for some preferment, now I have friends. Swift, Journal to Stella, xxx.

(b) To put in one's word suddenly; interpose; interrupt.

I proposed the embassy to Constantinople for Mr. Henshaw, but my Lord Winchelsea struck in. Evelyn, Diary, June 15, 1660.

(c) To begin; set about.

It [the water of the Dead Sea] bore me up in such a manner that when I struck in swimming, my legs were above the water, and I found it difficult to recover my feet. Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 36.

(d) To fall in; conform; join or unite.

I always feared ye event of ye Amsterdammers striking in with us.

Cushman, quoted in Bradford's Plymouth Plantation, p. 57.

He struck in very zealously with the Presbyterians, went to their meetings, and was very liberal in his abuses, not only of the Archbishop, but of the whole order. E. Gibson, in Ellis's Lit. Letters, p. 227.

(e) To arrive; come in; make for the shore: said of fish.

Those who have been on the Newfoundland coast when the caplin strikes in will not forget the excitement that ensued. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII. 352.

To strike into. (a) To enter upon, as by some sudden act or motion; break into: as, to strike into a run.

It struck on a sudden into such reputation that it scorns any longer to sculk, but owns itself publicly. Government of the Tongue.

(b) To turn into quickly or abruptly; betake one's self to in haste.

It began raining, and I struck into Mrs. Vaohomrigh's, and dined. Swift.

To strike out. (a) In boxing, to deliver a blow from the shoulder. (b) To direct one's course, as in swimming: as, to strike out for the shore. (c) To make a sudden move or excursion: as, to strike out into an irregular course of life.

I concluded to move on and strike out to the south and southwest into Missouri. The Century, XLI. 107.

(d) To base-ball, to be put out because of failure to strike the ball after a certain number of trials: said of the batter.—To strike up. (a) To begin to play or sing.

If the Musicke overcome not my melancholly, I shall quarrel; and if they sodainly do not strike up, I shall presently strike thee downe.

Hegwood, Woman Killed with Kindness, l. 1.

He got a little excited, as you may have seen a canary sometimes when another strikes up.

O. W. Holmes, Autoerat, ix.

(b) To make acquaintance; become associated: with with. [Colloq.]

He spur'd to London, and left a thousand curses behind him. Here he struck up with sharpers, scourers, and Alsatians.

Gentleman Instructed, p. 491. (Daries, under Alsatian.)

II. trans. 1†. To pass the hand over lightly; stroke: as, to strike the beard or hair.

I strike ones heed, as we do a chylde when he dothe well. Je applianie. . . My father sayeth I am a good soune; he dyd strike my heed by cause I had conved my lesson without the booke.

Palsgrave.

Also even when he [Sir T. More] shuld lay doune his head on the blocke, he, haying a great gray beard, struck out his beard, and said to the hangman, I pray you let me lay my beard over the blocke leas't ye should cut it.

Hall, Chron. (ed. 1809), p. 818.

2†. To pass lightly as in stroking.

I thought, He will surely . . . strike his hand over the place and recover the leper.

2 Ki. v. 11.

3. To make level or even, as a measure of grain, salt, etc., by drawing a strickle or straight-edge along the top, or, in the case of potatoes, by seeking to make the projections equal to the depressions: as, to strike a bushel of wheat; a struck or striked as distinguished from a heaped measure.

Four straked measures or firlots contains in just proportion four heaped firlots.

Report Scotch Commissioners, 1618.

All grain to be measured stricked, without heaps, and without pressing or shaking down.

Act Irish Parliament, 1695.

4†. To balance the accounts in.

And the said journal, with two other bookes, to lye upon the greencloth dayly, to the intent the accountants, and other particular clerkes, may take out the solutions entred into said bookes, whereby they may strike their lyders, and see to bring in their accounts incontinently upon the same.

Ordinances and Regulations, p. 229. (Halliwel.)

5. To lower or dip; let, take, or haul down: as, to strike the topmasts; to strike a flag, as in token of surrender or salute; to strike or lower anything below decks.

Fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, [they] strike sail, and so were driven.

Acts xvii. 17.

Now, strike your sailes, yee jolly Mariners,

For we be come unto a quiet roade.

Spenser, F. Q., I. xii. 42.

The Maltese commanding ours to strike their flag for the great masters of Malta, and ours bidding them strike for the King of England.

Court and Times of Charles I., I. 409.

6. To take down or apart; pack up and remove; fold: as, to strike a tent; to strike a scene on the stage of a theater.

The king, who now found himself without an enemy in these parts, struck his tents, and returned to Gaza in Daware.

Bruce, Source of the Nile, II. 28.

Yes, on the first had weather you'll give orders to strike your tents.

Sheridan (?), The Camp, ii. 3.

7. To lade into a cooler, as cane-juice in sugar-making.—8†. To dab; rub; smear; anoint.

They shall take of the blood, and strike it on the two side posts.

Ex. xii. 7.

The mother said nothing to this, but gave nurse a certain ointment, with directions that she should strike the child's eyes with it.

Keightley's Fairy Mythology (Bohn's Ant. Lib.), p. 302.

9. To efface with a stroke of a pen; erase; remove from a record as being rejected, erroneous, or obsolete: with away, out, off, etc.: as, to strike out an item in an account.

Madam, the wonted mercy of the king,

That overtakes your faults, has met with this,

And struck it out.

Beau. and Fl., King and No King, ii. 1.

That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away

From the great compt. Shak., All's Well, v. 3. 56.

Vernon is struck off the list of admirals.

Walpole, Letters, II. 18.

Halifax was informed that his services were no longer needed, and his name was struck out of the Council Book.

Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

10. To come upon suddenly or unexpectedly; hit upon; light upon; find; discover: as, to strike oil; to strike ore; to strike the right path. [Chiefly colloq.]

One meets (on paper only) with the "eighteen-carat desperado," who has "struck it rich" on the Pikes or in the ranches.

Cornhill Mag., N. S., No. 64, p. 369.

We resumed our march the following day, but soon struck snow that materially impeded our progress.

Harpers Mag., LXXVI. 400.

"I didn't strike the stairs at first," whispered the butcher, "and I went too far along that upper hall; but when I came against a door that was partly open I knew I was wrong, and turned back."

F. R. Stockton, Merry Chanter, xii.

11. To enter the mind of, as an idea; occur to.

It appeared never to have struck traveller or tourist that there was anything in Albania except snipes.

R. Curzon, Monast. in the Levant, p. 204.

It struck me that . . . It might be worth while to study him.

D. Christie Murray, Weaker Vessel, iv.

12. To impress strongly: as, the spectacle struck him as a solemn one.

It [the temple of Baalbec] strikes the Mind with an Air of Greatness beyond any thing that I ever saw before, and is an eminent proof of the Magnificence of the ancient Architecture.

Maunderell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 137.

I have been struck, also, with the superiority of many of the old sepulchral inscriptions.

Ireing, Sketch-Book, p. 215.

13. To appear to: as, how does it strike you?

Now, Mrs. Dangle, didn't you say it struck you in the same light?

Sheridan, The Critic, i. 1.

When earth breaks up and Heaven expands,

How will the change strike me and you,

In the house not made with hands?

Browning, By the Fireside.

14. To fall into; assume: as, to strike an attitude.

No sooner had the horses struck a canter than Gibbie's jack-boots . . . began to play alternately against the horse's flanks.

Scott, Old Mortality, iii.

15. To give a blow to; smite; hit; collide with; impinge upon. See to strike down, off, out, etc., below.

The servants did strike him with the palms of their hands.

Mark xiv. 65.

He at Philippi kept

His sword e'en like a dancer; while I struck

The lean and wrinkled Cassius.

Shak., A. and C., iii. 11. 36.

The laird strak her on the mouth,

Till she spat out o' blude.

Laird of Warriestoun (Child's Ballads, III. 110).

16. To attack; assail; set upon.

That was the lawe of Lewes,

That what woman were in anontric taken, were she riche or pore,

With stouces men shulde hir strike, and stone hir to deth.

Piers Plouman (B), xii. 77.

The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome!

Shak., Cor., iv. 1. 13.

Death struck them in those Shapes again,

As once he did when they were Men.

Prior, Turtle and Sparrow.

17. To assail or overcome, as with some occult influence, agency, or power; smite; shock; blast.

I will go study mischief,

And put a look on, arm'd with all my cunning,

Shall meet him like a basilisk, and strike him.

Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 2.

About Maidstone in Kent, a certain Monster was found stricken with the Lightning, which Monster had a Head like an Ass.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 75.

Even brave men have been struck with this involuntary trembling upon going into battle for the first time, the series of sensations commencing with the boom of the yet distant cannon.

J. M. Carrochon, Operative Surgery, p. 109.

18. To knock; dash: as, to strike one's foot against a stone.

He struck his head upon his breast,

And kiss'd the fatal knife. Shak., Luerce, l. 1842.

19. To deal or inflict: with blow, stroke, or a similar word as object.

Hadst thou foxshipp

To banish him that struck more blows for Rome

Thane thou hast spoken words? Shak., Cor., iv. 2. 19.

Not riot, but valour, not fancy, but policy, must strike the stroke.

G. Harvey, Four Letters.

Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow.

Byron, Child Harold, ii. 76.

20. To produce by blows or strokes: as, to strike fire; to strike a light.

War is a Fire struck in the Devil's tinder-box.

Howell, Letters, ii. 43.

21. To cause to ignite by friction: as, to strike a match.—22. To tap; broach; draw liquor from: as, to strike a cask.

Strike the vessels, ho!

Here is to Cæsar! Shak., A. and C., ii. 7. 103.

23†. To take forcibly or fraudulently; steal: as, to strike money. [Slang.]

Now we hane well bondd, let vs strike some chete. Now we hane well dronke, let vs steale some thing.

Ep. Earle. Micro-cosmographie, App.

24. To bring suddenly and completely into some specified state, by or as by a swift, sharp blow or stroke: as, to strike one dumb.

S. Paulie was himseife sore against Christ, til Christ gave him a great fall, and threw him to the ground, and strake him starke blind.

Sir T. More, Comfort against Tribulation (1573), fol. 11.

Oh, hard news! it frets all my blood, And strikes me stiffe with horour and amazement.

Hegwood, Fair Maid of the West (Works, ed. 1874, II. 398).

In view of the amazed town and camp,

He strake him dead, and brought Peralta off.

Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, i. 1.

25. To pierce; stab.

Yet when the tother answered him that there was in enery mans mouth spoke of him much shame, it so strake him to ye heart that w' in fewe daies after he withered & consumed away.

Sir T. More, Rich. III. (Works, p. 61 f).

For I hit him not in vaine as Artageres did, but full in the forehead hard by the eye, and strake him through and through his head againe, and so overthrew him, of which blow he died.

North, tr. of Plutarch, p. 792.

26. To produce with sudden force; effect suddenly and forcibly; cause to enter.

It cannot be this weak and writhled shrimp Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 24.

Bring out the lady: she can quell this mutiny,

And with her powerful looks strike awe into them.

Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 2.

Waving wide her myrtle wand,

She strikes a universal peace through sea and land.

Milton, Nativity, l. 52.

27. To stamp with a stroke; impress; hence, to mint; coin: as, to strike coin at the mint.

The princes who struck these medals, says Eugenius, seem to have designed them rather as an ostentation of their wealth than of their virtues.

Addison, Ancient Medals, iii.

Here they are, thirty good Harry groats as ever were struck in bluff old Hal's time.

Scott, Abbot, vii.

28. To cause to enter or penetrate; thrust: as, a tree strikes its roots deep.

Bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices, Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary.

Shak., Lear, ii. 3. 16.

29. To cause to sound; announce by sound: as, the clock strikes twelve; hence, to begin to beat or play upon, as a drum or other instrument; begin to sing or play, as a song or tune: often with up.

Strike up the drums.

Shak., K. John, v. 2. 179.

Strike the Lyre upon an untry'd String.

Congreve, Taking of Namure.

When the college clock struck two, Hogg would rise, in spite of Shelley's entreaty or remonstrance, and retire for the night.

E. Dowden, Shelley, l. 67.

30. To make; effect; conclude; ratify: as, to strike a bargain. [Compare the Latin fadus ferire, to strike a treaty; also the phrase to strike hands.]

The rest strike truce, and let loue seale firm leagues twixt Greece and Troy.

Chapman, Iliad, iii. 98.

A bargain was struck; a sixpence was broken; and all the arrangements were made for the voyage.

Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xvi.

Be admonished, by what you already see, not to strike leagues of friendship with cheap persons, where no friendship can be.

Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 195.

31. To cease, stop, quit, or knock off as a coercive measure: as, to strike work.

I never heard of authors striking work, as the mechanics call it, until their masters the booksellers should increase their pay.

Scott, in Lockhart's Life, xi.

Don't yo think I can keep three people . . . on sixteen shillings a week? Dun yo think it's for mysel' I'm striking work at this time?

Mrs. Gaskell, North and South, xvii.

32. To make a sudden and pressing demand upon; especially, to make such a demand successfully: as, to strike a friend for fifty dollars. [Colloq.]—33†. To match, as the stock and counterstock of a tally (see tally); hence, to unite; join.

I'll find a portion for her, if you strike Affectionate hearts, and joy to call you nephew.

Shirley, The Brothers, i. 1.

34†. To fight; fight out.

They fight near to Anxerre the most bloody battle that ever was struk in France.

Raleigh, Hist. World, Pref., p. xx.

We, that should check

And quench the raging fire in others' bloods,

We strike the battle to destruction?

Fletcher and Rowley, Maid in the Mill, iv. 2.

35. To draw (lines) on a surface or on the face of a piece of stuff, as by snapping or twanging a chalked string stretched tightly along it.—

36. In carp., to form (a molding) with a molding-plane.—37. To harpoon or bomb (a whale).—

38. In angling, to hook (a fish when it rises to the fly but fails to hook itself). It is accomplished by a quick dexterous turn or twist of the wrist.—39. To put (fish) in a strike-barrel.—40. In electroplating, to produce the beginning of a deposit of metal upon, as on a plate or other article of metal placed in the electroplating solution. The work is said to be struck as soon as a uniform film of deposited metal distinctly appears upon its surface.—41. In color-making and dyeing, to affect (a coloring matter) so as to obtain the desired precipitation of color in the vat or on the fabric by the addition of the proper color-producing chemical. See color-striker.

A simpler method of dyeing by means of bichromates is also given, . . . by which the logwood is struck of an intense black and fixed.

O'Neill, Dyeing and Calico Printing, p. 86.

42. In electric lighting, to produce (the arc) by parting the carbons.—A struck battle, a hard-fought battle.

Ten struck battles

I suck'd these honour'd scars from, and all Roman.
Fletcher, Bonduca, i. 1.

Strike me luck, strike me lucky, a familiar expression used in making a bargain, derived from the old custom of striking hands together in ratification of the bargain, the buyer leaving in the hand of the seller an earnest-penny.

But if that's all you stand upon,
Here, strike me luck, it shall be done.

S. Butler, Hudibras, II. i. 540.

Striking the flars. See flar, 2.—Striking-up press. See press.—Struck jury. See jury.—To strike a balance, to compare the summations on both sides of an account, in order to ascertain the amount due by either party to the other.—To strike a center or centering, in arch. See centering.—To strike a docket. See docket.—To strike a lead. (a) In mining, to light on a lode or vein of metal. (b) To enter on any undertaking that proves successful.—To strike all of a heap. See heap.—To strike an answer (or other pleading), to strike it out as improper or insufficient. [Local, U. S.]—To strike down. (a) To prostrate by a blow; fell. (b) In fisheries, to head up and stow away barrels of, as fish.—To strike fire. See fire.—To strike from, to remove with or as with a blow or stroke; as, to strike a name from a list.

Among the Arabians they that were taken in adultery had their heads stricken from their bodies.

Homilies, Sermon against Adultery, p. 120.

To strike hands. See hand.—To strike off. (a) See def. 9. (b) (1) To cancel; deduct; as, to strike off the interest of a debt. (2) To separate or remove by a blow or stroke; as, to strike off what is superfluous or injurious.

From thence we entred in to the gardeyn, and visited the place wher our savor was takyn and wher Seynt Petir Stroke of Malens cere.

Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 29.

(3) To print; as, to strike off a thousand copies of a book.—To strike oil. See oil.—To strike out. (a) To produce by collision, as by blows or strokes; as, to strike out sparks with steel.

My pride struck out new sparkles of her own.

Dryden, Hind and Panther, i. 75.

(b) See def. 9. (c) To plan quickly or for an emergency; devise; invent; contrive; as, to strike out a new plan of finance. (d) In base-ball, to put out, as the pitcher does the batter when the latter is unable in a certain number of trials to hit the ball; as, he struck out three men in succession.—To strike root, sail, soundings, tally. See the nouns.—To strike up. (a) To begin to play or sing; as, to strike up a tune.

Strike up our drums, to find this danger out.

Shak., K. John, v. 2. 179.

(b) To send up; give out.
Let the court not be paved, for that strieth up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter.

Bacon, Building (ed. 1887).

(c) To enter upon by mutual agreement; begin to cultivate; as, to strike up an acquaintance with somebody.

She [Mme. de Souza] charmed and delighted me, and she struck up an intimacy without farther delay.

Mme. D'Arblay, Diary, IV. 174.

strike (striĕk), n. [< ME. strike, strie, strek, streek (= LG. striek); < strike, r.] 1. A wooden implement with a straight edge for leveling a measure of grain, salt, etc., by striking off what is above the level of the top; a strickle.

Wing, cartnave and bushel, peck, strike ready [at] hand.
Tusser, Husbandly Furniture, st. i.

2. A piece of wood used in the manufacture of pottery, in brickmaking, etc., to remove superfluous clay from a mold.—3. A puddlers' stirrer; a rabble.—4. A stanchion in a gate, palisade, railing, or the like.

Stowe says "there were nine tombs of alabaster and marble, invroned with strikes of iron, in the choir." See preface to the "Chronicle of the Grey Friars of London."
Piers Plowman's Crede (E. T. S.), Notes, p. 39.

5. In metal-working, a hook in a foundry to hoist the metal.—6. The direction or run of a bed or member of a stratified formation, especially with reference to the points of the compass. See bearing, 12, and cut under dip.

The Devonian sandstones . . . are exposed in rugged cliffs slightly oblique to their line of strike, along a coast-line of ten miles in length, to the head of the bay [Gaspé].
Dawson, Geol. Hist. of Plants, p. 106.

7. An English dry measure, consisting regularly of two bushels. It was never in other than local use, and varied in different localities from half a bushel to four bushels.

He seltheth all the malt or corn for the best, when there be but two strikes of the best in his sack.

Latimer, Misc. Ser.

Jailer. What dowry has she?

Dough. Some two hundred bottles.
And twenty strike of oats; but he'll ne'er have her.

Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, v. 2.

How many strike of peace would feed a hog fat against Christide?

Marston, Antonio and Mevlida, I, ii. 1.

8. A handful or bunch of flax, jute, or other fiber, either ready for heckling or after heckling; a strike.

This pardonor hadde heer as yelow as wax,

But smoothe it heng as doth a strike of flex.

Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 676.

9. In sugar-making and -refining, the quantity of syrup emptied at one time into the coolers; also, the quantity of sugar boiled or crystallized at one time; as, to boil a strike; to run off a strike.

The strike is now done, air is admitted to the pan, and the contents are run off into the "mixer."

The Century, XXXV. 114.

10. In base-ball: (a) An unsuccessful attempt of the batter to hit the ball. (b) A ball so pitched as to pass over the home-plate, and considered by the umpire as one that the batter should have tried to strike.—11. In American bowling, a play by which one of the contestants knocks down all the pins with one bowl, entitling him to add to his score as many points as the number of the pins knocked down with the first two balls of his next play. Also called ten-strike. Compare spare, 1, n., 2.—12. A concerted or general quitting of work by a body of men or women for the purpose of coercing their employer in some way, as when higher wages or shorter hours are demanded, or a reduction of wages is resisted; a general refusal to work as a coercive measure. Compare lockout.

Accounts at that time [1362] of strikes in the building-trade are particularly numerous.

English Guilds (E. E. T. S.), Int., p. cxliv.

There have been times and incidents when the strike was the only court of appeals for the workman, and the evil lay in the abuse of them and not in the use of them.

Sci. Amer., N. S., LVII. 292.

13. Any unscrupulous attempt to extort money or to obtain other personal advantage by initiating an attack with the intention of being bought off, as by introducing a bill into a legislature, hostile to some moneyed interest, with the hope of being paid to let the matter drop. [Political slang, U. S.]—14. Full measure; especially, in brewing, full measure of malt; thus, ale of the first strike is that which has its full allowance of malt and is strong.

Three hogsheds of ale of the first strike. Scott.

15. In coining, the whole amount struck at one time.—16. In type-founding, an imperfect matrix for type; the deeply sunken impression of the engraved character on a punch in a short and narrow bar of copper; so called because the punch is struck a hard blow with a hammer. Also known as unjustified matrix, or drive. See type-founding.

When the letter is perfect, it is driven into a piece of polished copper, called the drive or strike. This passes to the justifier, who makes the width and depth of the faces uniform throughout the fount.

Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 699.

17. A metal piece which is inserted in a door-jamb, and against which the latch strikes as the door closes. It is beveled to permit the easy closing and self-latching of the door. Also called striker-plate.

18. Same as stick, 10.—19. In soap-making: (a) The general crystalline appearance of hard soaps, which is characteristic of soaps which retain the normal amount of water, and in which the saponification and separation have been complete. (b) The proper and characteristic marbling of well-made mottled soaps.—By the strike, by measure not heaped up, but having what was above the level of the measure scraped off with a strike.—Strike of day, the dawn or break of day.

If I was to speak till strike o' day.

Dickens, Hard Times, ii. 4.

strike-a-light (striĕk'ā-lit'), n. A piece of flint trimmed into the shape of a gun-flint, but somewhat larger, used with pyrites or steel for procuring fire from the sparks. Such implements have been frequently found among prehistoric relics. They have been used from remote ages, and are still manufactured and sold for that purpose.

Another strike-a-light which I lately bought in a stall at Trèves is about 2 inches long by 1½ broad, and is made from a flat flake, trimmed to a nearly square edge at the butt-end, and to a very flat arc at the point.

Evans, Ancient Stone Implements of Great Britain, p. 283.

strike-block (striĕk'blok), n. In carp., a plane shorter than a jointer, used for shooting a short joint.

strike-fault (striĕk'fält), n. In geol., a fault running in the same general direction as the strike of the strata where it occurs.

strike-or-silent (striĕk'ör-si lent), n. In horol., a piece which sets the striking-mechanism of a clock in or out of action. E. H. Knight.

strike-pan (striĕk'pan), n. In sugar-making, same as teache or teache-pan.

strike-pay (striĕk'pä), n. An allowance paid by a trades-union to men on strike.

In one memorable case, at least, a great employer . . . himself gave strike pay to his own men, when, under a sense of social duty, they left his works empty.

Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 722.

strike-plate (striĕk'plät), n. The keeper for a beveled latch-bolt, against which it strikes so as to snap shut automatically. Car-Builder's Dict.

striker (striĕk'ër), n. [< strike + -er]. 1. One who strikes, in any sense of the verb strike. Specifically—(a) A robber.

I am joined with no foot-and rakers, no long-staff six-penny strikers.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., ii. 1. 82.

(b) A workman who with others quits work in order to coerce their employer to accede to their demands.

The method employed by the Strikers in this country, during the past ten years, and more especially in their recent strikes, is most unreasonable, violent, as well as disastrous in its results.

N. A. Rev., CXLII. 692.

(c) One who seeks to effect a strike, in sense 13. [Political slang, U. S.]

If he can elect such a ticket even in Virginia alone, he will take the field after election as a striker, and will offer his electoral votes to whichever candidate will give the highest terms.

The Nation, Sept. 6, 1883, p. 201.

(d) In the United States army, a soldier detailed to act as an officer's servant. See strike, r. 4, 19. (e) A wench.

Massinger. (f) A harpooner.

Where-ever we come to an anchor, we always send out our strikers, and put our hooks and lines overboard to try for fish.

Dampier, Voyages, I. 118.

(g) In the hardware districts of England, a workman who manages the fire, heats the steel, and assists the forger. (h) An assistant or inferior shipwright. (i) A man employed to strike off the superfluous quantity of grain, salt, etc., from the top of a measure.

2. That which strikes. Specifically—(a) A species of tilt-hammer operated directly from the engine. (b) A hardened mold upon which a softened steel block is struck to receive a concave impression. (c) The hammer of a gun, the stroke of which fires the piece. (d) An automatic apparatus which regulates the descent, at the proper time and place, of the ruling-pens of a paper-ruling machine. (e) The lever which puts a machine into motion. [Eng.]

3. In ornith., a tern or sea-swallow. [Local, U. S.]—4. In the menhaden-fishery: (a) The man who manages the striker-boat. A vessel usually has two striker-boats, with one man in each; these row close to the school of fish, observe its course, signal the purse-crew to set the seine, and drive the fish in the desired direction with pebbles which they carry in the boats.

(b) A green hand who works at low wages while learning the business, but is one of the crew of a vessel.

striker-arm (striĕk'ër-ärm), n. A seat-arm. Car-Builder's Dict.

striker-boat (striĕk'ër-böt), n. In the menhaden-fishery, the striker's boat. See striker, 4 (a).

striker-out (striĕk'ër-out'), n. In lawn-tennis, the player who receives, and if possible returns, the ball when first served.

It now becomes the duty of the adversary, called the striker-out, to return the ball by striking it with his racket in such a manner that it shall pass back over the net to the service side.

Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 179.

striker-plate (striĕk'ër-plät), n. Same as strike, 17.

striking (striĕking), n. [Verbal n. of strike, v.]

1. The removal of the center upon which an arch has been built. See striking-plate.—2. The propagation of plants by cuttings or slips.

striking (striĕking), p. a. Standing out prominently and conspicuously, so as strongly to impress the eye or the mind; prominent; notable; impressive; remarkable; surprising; as, a striking resemblance; a striking remark.

The most striking characteristic of the poetry of Milton is the extreme remoteness of the associations by means of which it acts on the reader.

Maeaday, Milton.

striking-beam (striĕking-bēm), n. A cylindrical horse on which hides, when removed from the tanning-liquor, are placed. While drying they are struck or scraped from time to time.

strikingly (striĕking-li), adv. In a striking manner; in such a manner as to surprise or impress; forcibly; impressively.

The force of many strikingly poetic passages has been weakened or unperceived, because their origin was unknown, unexplored, or misunderstood.

T. Warton, Pref. to Milton's Smaller Poems.

strikingness (striĕking-nes), n. Striking character or quality.

In tuning, the string is tightened by turning the nut on the shank of the stringer.

3. In railway engine, a longitudinal timber on which a rail is fastened, and which rests on transverse sleepers.—4. In ship-building, an inside strake of plank or of plates, secured to the ribs and supporting the ends of the beams; ♯ shelf. See cut under beam, 2 (g).—5. In carp.: (a) A horizontal timber connecting two posts in a framework. (b) Same as string-board.—6. A tie in a truss or a truss-bridge.—7. A fornicator; a wench.

A whoreson tyrant! hath been an old stringer in his days, I warrant him!

Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, i. 1.

8. A small stick or switch used to string fish on by the gills.

string-gage (string'gāj), n. A gage, like a wire-gage, for measuring the size of a string for a musical instrument.

string-halt (string'hält), n. A corruption of spring-halt.

stringiness (string'ī-nes), n. Stringy character or condition; fibrousness. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 360.

stringing (string'ing), n. [Verbal n. of string, v.] 1. In silk-manuf., same as glossing.—2. pl. Straight or curved inlaid lines in luth-work.

stringless (string'les), a. [< string + -less.] Without strings.

His tongue is now a stringless instrument.

Shak., Rich. II., ii. 1. 149.

stringman (string'man), n. A musician who plays upon a stringed instrument.

Some use trumpets, some shalmes, some small pipes, some are stringmen.

MSS. Harp., No. 610, in Collier's Eng. Dram. Poetry, l. 32.

string-minstrel (string'min'strel), n. A minstrel who accompanies himself on a stringed instrument. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 278.

Stringopidæ (string-gop'ī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Stringops + -idæ.] Same as Strigopidæ.

Stringopinæ (string-gō-pī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Stringops + -inæ.] Same as Strigopinæ.

Stringops, Stringopsis (string'gops, string-gop'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. σπρίξ (σπρίγ-) (> l. strix, strig), a screech-owl (< σπρίξ, cry, squeak), + ωψ, face, eye.] Same as Strigops.

string-orchestra (string'ōr'kes-trā), n. A string-band.

string-organ (string'ōr'gan), n. A musical instrument with a keyboard, characterized by a graduated set of vibrators or free reeds, which are severally connected by rods with a corresponding set of wires or strings in such a way that the vibrations of the reeds are communicated to the appropriate strings. The tones thus secured are sweet and pure, combining some of the advantages of both the harmonium and the pianoforte.

string-pea (string'pē), n. See *pea*¹, 1.

string-piece (string'pēs), n. A name of various parts in constructions of wood. (a) That part of a flight of stairs which forms its ceiling or soffit. (b) Same as string-board. (c) A long piece of timber, especially one used to support a floor. (d) In a frame, a horizontal connecting-piece. (e) A heavy horizontal piece of squared timber carried along the edge of the front of a wharf or of cribwork, to hold the timbers in place, and strengthen the whole.

string-plate (string'plāt), n. In pianoforte-making, the metal plate which carries the string-block. It was originally made separate, but is now combined in a single casting with the entire frame.

stringwood (string'wūd), n. A small euphorbiaceous tree, Acalypha rubra, formerly of St. Helena, now extinct. It was a handsome tree, named from its pendent spikes of reddish male flowers.

stringy (string'ī), a. [< string + -y.] 1. Consisting of strings or small threads; fibrous; filamentous; as, a stringy roof.

Power by a thousand tough and stringy roots

Fixed to the people's pious nursery-faith.

Coleridge, tr. of Schiller's Piccolomini, iv. 4.

2. Ropy; viscid; gluey; that may be drawn into a thread.

They heard up glue, whose clinging drops,

Like pitch or bird-lime, hang in stringy ropes.

Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

3. Sinewy; wiry. [Colloq.]

A stringy little man of about fifty.

Jerrold, Men of Character, Job Pippus, iii.

4. Marked by thread-like flaws on the surface; as, stringy glass; stringy marble. Marble-worker, § 8.

stringy-bark (string'ī-bārk), n. 1. One of a class of Australasian gum-trees (Eucalyptus) distinguished by a tenacious fibrous bark. The common stringy-bark is E. obliqua, abounding in Tasmania and southern Australia, in Victoria from its gregarious habit called messmate-tree (whence see). A common stringy-bark of Victoria and New South Wales is E. vaeororrhyncha, a smaller tree, the wood of which is used for various purposes. Other stringy-barks are E. capillata, E. eugenioides, E. tetradonta, E. microcorps (mostly known as tullur-wood), E. piperita (white stringy-bark), and E. amygdalina; the last two are also called peppermint-tree. See cut under Eucalyptus. Also called string-bark.

Split string-bark timber is the usual material for fences in Australia, when procurable.

A. L. Gordon.

2. In Australia, a post and rail fence.

strinkle (string'kl), v. t. and i.; pret. and pp. strinkled, ppr. strinkling. [< ME. strincken, streinken, strenkelen, freq. of strenken, sprinkle; origin uncertain. The resemblance to sprinkle is appar. accidental; but the word may be a var. of sprinkle, perhaps due to initial conformation with strec.] To strew or sprinkle sparingly. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]

strinkling (string'kling), n. [Verbal n. of strinkle, v.] 1. The act of one who strinkles.—2. That which is strinkled; a small quantity.

Men whose brains were searced with some strinklings at least of madness and phrensy.

Dr. H. More, On Godliness, xiv. § 11. (Trench.)

striolate (stri'ō-lāt), a. [*< NL. *striolata. < striola, dim. of L. stria, a furrow: see stria.] In bot., minutely striate.

striolet (stri'ō-let), n. [*< NL. striola (dim. of L. stria) + -el.] In entom., a short stria or impressed line. Kirby.

strip¹ (strip), v.; pret. and pp. stripped or stript, ppr. stripping. [(a) < ME. stripen, strepen, strepen, strepen (pret. streple, strepte, pp. strept, i-strept), *< AS. *strīpan, strēpan, in comp. be-strīpan, rob, plunder. = MD. stroopen, rob, plunder, skin, strip, also bind, strain, etc., D. stroopen = MLG. stroepen, plunder, strip, = OHG. stroufen, MHG. stroufen, G. streifen, strip, skin, flay; (b) ef. D. strippen, strip (leaves), whip, = LG. strepen, strip (leaves), etc., = MHG. striefen, skin, flay. The two sets of forms (to either of which the ME. stripen, strepen could be referred) are more or less confused with each other, and with the forms of *strip*², stripe; but they appear to be orig. distinct. The two senses 'rob' or 'plunder' and 'skin' are not necessarily connected, though rob and reave supply a partial analogy.] I. trans. 1. To rob; plunder; despoil; deprive; divest; bereave; with of before the thing taken away; as, to strip a man of his possessions; to strip a tree of its fruit.

Wherefore labour they to strip their adversaries of such furniture as doth not help? Hooker, Eccles. Polity, ii. 7.

If such tricks . . . strip you out of your lieutenantcy.

Shak., Othello, i. l. 173.

Like Thieves, when they have plundered and stript a man, leave him.

Wycherley, Ep. Ded. to Plain Dealer.

2. To deprive of covering; remove the skin or outer covering of; skin; peel; with of before the thing removed; as, to strip a beast of its skin; to strip a tree of its bark.

The forward, backward fall, the mare, the turn, the trip, When stript into their shirts, each other they invade Within a spacious ring. Drayton, Polyolbion, i. 244.

A simple view of the object, as it stands stripped of every relation, in all the nakedness and solitude of metaphysical abstraction.

Burke, Rev. in France.

3. To uncover; unsheathe.

On, or strip your sword stark naked.

Shak., T. N., iii. 4. 274.

4. To unrig; as, to strip a ship.—5. To tear off the thread of; said of a screw or bolt: as, the screw was stripped.—6. To pull or tear off, as a covering or some adhering substance; as, to strip the skin from a beast; to strip the bark from a tree; to strip the clothes from a man's back: sometimes emphasized with off.

And he stripped off his clothes also. 1 Sam. xix. 24.

She stripp'd it from her arm.

Shak., Cymbeline, ii. 4. 101.

7. To milk dry; press all the milk out of; as, to strip a cow.—8. In fish-culture, to press or squeeze the ripe roe or milt out of (fishes). After the fishes are stripped the spawn of opposite sexes is mixed together; and after this artificial fecundation the eggs are hatched by artificial methods.

9. In agri., to pare off the surface of in strips, and turn over the strips upon the adjoining surface. Imp. Dict.—10. To separate; put away; with from.

His . . . unkindness,

That stripp'd her from his benediction.

Shak., Lear, iv. 3. 45.

11. In tobacco-manuf., to separate (the wings of the tobacco-leaf) from the stems. E. H. Knight.—12. In carding, to clean (the teeth of the various cylinders and top flats) from short fibers. E. H. Knight.—13. In file-making, to cross-file and draw-file (a file-blank) in order to bring it to accurate form and to clean the surface preliminary to grinding and cutting.—14. In mining, to remove the overlying soil or detrital material from (any bed or mineral deposit which it is desired to open and work).—15. In gun-making, to turn (the exterior of a gun-barrel) in a lathe in such manner that its longitudinal axis shall coincide with the axis of the bore.—16. To run past or beyond; outrun; outstrip. See outstrip.

Alate we ran the deer, and through the lawnds

Stripp'd with our nags the lofty frolic bucks.

Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay.

= Syn. 2. To denude, lay bare.

II. intrans. 1. To take off the covering or clothes; uncover; undress.—2. To lose the thread, as a screw, or have the screw stripped off, as a screw-bolt.—3. To issue from a rifled gun without assuming the spiral turn: said of a projectile. Farrow.—4. To come off, as an outer covering (as bark); separate from an underlying surface.—5. To be stripped of milt or spawn. Compare 1., 8.

strip² (strip), n. [Another form of stripe: see stripe.] Strip is to stripe as bit to bite, smile to smile. It is commonly referred to *strip*¹, v. 1. A narrow piece, comparatively long; as, a strip of cloth; a strip of territory.—2. An ornamental appendage to women's dress, formerly worn: it is spoken of as worn on the neck and breast.

When a plun'd fan may shade thy chalked face,

And lawnny strips thy naked bosom grace.

Ep. Hall, Satires, IV. iv. 51.

A stomacher upon her breast so bare.

For strips and forget were not then the ware.

Dr. Smith, Penelope and Ulysses, l. 1658.

3. A striping; a slip. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xlvii.—4. In joinery, a narrow piece of board nailed over a crack or joint between planks.—5. In mining, one of a series of troughs forming a labyrinth, or some similar arrangement, through which the ore flows as it comes from the stamps, and in which the particles are deposited in the order of their equivalence.

strip³ (strip), n. [See also stripe, streak, dim. striptic; perhaps another use of *strip*². Cf. strip-pel.] 1. A rill. [Scotch.]—2. Destruction of fences, buildings, timber, etc.; waste. [U. S.]

strip-armor (strip'ār'mōr), n. Armor, especially for the legs, used in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and showing broad raised strips alternating with sunken bands.

stripe (strip), n. [< ME. stripe (stripe, prob. also stripe, > E. strip), < MD. strijpe, strepe, D. strep = MLG. stripe, LG. stripe, a stripe or strip, = MHG. G. strief = Dan. strib (< D.), a stripe, strip; cf. *strip*¹, *strip*².] 1. A streak of a different color from that of the ground; a long narrow division of something of a different color from the ground: as, a stripe of red on a green ground; hence, any linear variation of color. Compare *streak*², stria, striga.—2. A narrow piece attached to something of a different color or texture: as, the red stripe on the leg of a soldier's trousers.—3. Generally, a strip or narrow piece.

The whole ground that is sown, to the sandy ascent of the mountains, is but a narrow stripe of three quarters of a mile broad.

Bruce, Source of the Nile, l. 75.

4. A long narrow discolored mark made on flesh by the stroke of a lash or rod; a wale; hence, a stroke made with a lash, whip, rod, strap, or scourge.

Forty strips he may give him, and not exceed.

Deut. xxv. 3.

5. A blow; a stroke.

Every one gyve but one suer stripe, & suerly ye forney is ours.

Hall, Chron., Rich. III., an. 3.

But, when he could not quite it, with one stripe

Her lions claws he from her feete away did wipe.

Spenser, F. Q., V. xi. 27.

6. Distinctive color; particular kind or character; hence, distinguishing characteristic; as, a politician of the Republican stripe.

I shall go on; and first in differing stripe

The flood-god's speech thus tune an open pipe.

W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, l. 2.

Various poems are of a democratic, liberal stripe, inspired by the struggle then commencing over Europe.

Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 256.

Bengal stripe, a kind of cotton cloth woven with colored stripes; gingham.—Cirrus stripe, a long thin stripe of cirrus cloud, generally occurring in parallel rows which, by the effect of perspective, usually appear to be convergent. The motion of these stripes is usually either broadside forward, or oblique to their length.

Cirrus-stripes lie in regions of maximum pressure most often nearly perpendicular to the isobar.

Abercromby, Weather, p. 92.

Doble's stripe. Same as Krause's membrane (which see, under membrane).—Spanish stripes. See Spanish.—Stars and stripes. See stars.—To come to hand stripes, to come to close quarters; fight hand to hand. Brende, tr. of Quintus Curtius, ix.

stripe (strip), v. t.; pret. and pp. striped, ppr. stripping. [<strip, n.] 1. To make stripes upon; form with lines of different colors; variegate with stripes.—2. To strike; lash. [Rare.]—3†. To thrust.

He has striped his bright brown brand
Out through Clerk Saunders' fair bodye.
Clerk Saunders ('Child's Ballads, II. 48).

Droved and striped. See drove.
striped (stri'ped or stript), a. 1. Having stripes. See streaked. Striped and streaked are synonymous, but differ slightly as strip and streak do, the former implying greater firmness, evenness, and regularity of the markings indicated: as, a striped zebra; streaked soap.—Striped-barked maple, striped dogwood. Same as striped maple.—Striped dormouse, function, jasper. See the nouns.—Striped grass. Same as ribbon-grass.—Striped maple, mullet, perch, snake, spinebelly, etc. See the nouns.—Striped muscle, striated muscle. See muscular tissue (with cut), under muscular.—Striped squirrel, the chipmunk.

striped-bass (stri'ped-bās), n. Rocenus lineatus, the bass or rockfish. See cuts under bass and gill. [U. S.] stripetail (stri'pētāl), n. A humming-bird of the genus Eupherusa, of which there are several species.

strip-leaf (stri'p-lēf), n. Tobacco from which the stalks have been removed before packing.

strip-lights (stri'p-līts), n. pl. In a theater, rows of lights fastened behind wings.

stripling (stri'plīng), n. [Appar. <strip² + -ling¹.] A youth in the state of adolescence, or just passing from boyhood to manhood; a lad. Mandeville, Travels, p. 278.

And the king said, Enquire thou whose son the stripling is.
1 Sam. xvii. 56.

And now a stripling cherub he appears.
Milton, P. L., iii. 636.

stripper (stri'p-er), n. [<strip¹ + -er¹.] One who strips, or an implement or machine used for stripping. Specifically—(a) In wool-carding: (1) A small card-roll the function of which is to remove or strip the fiber from another roll in a carding-machine. The fiber thus stripped off is delivered to some other carding-roll or worker. In some carding-machines a stripper is used to take the wool from the licker-in and deliver it to the breast-cylinder. (2) An automatic device for lifting the top cards or flats employed in some kinds of wool-carding machines. Also called angle-stripper. (b) A machine for smoothing down old and worn-out files to make them ready for recutting; a file-stripper. (c) An implement used on osier-farms for stripping off willow-bark. One form is an annular scraper through which the willows or switches are drawn after starting the bark sufficiently to allow the wood to pass through the scraper and be grasped by a pair of nippers. The bark thus stripped off is used for medicinal purposes, and the peeled switches are used for baskets and other willow wares.

stripplet (stri'p-et), n. [<strip³ + -et.] A small brook; a rivulet. Holinshead, Descrip. of Scotland, x.

stripping (stri'p-īng), n. [Verbal n. of strip¹, v.] 1. That which is removed by stripping.

Light strippings from the fan-trees.
Brocning, Paracelsus, iv.

2. pl. The last milk drawn from a cow, procured by a downward stripping action of the thumb and forefinger.—3. In fish-culture, the operation of pressing ripe spawn or milt out of the live fish.—4. In quarrying and mining, the act of removing the superficial detritus, soil, etc., preparatory to opening a mine or quarry, or to lay bare the surface for examination; also, the material thus removed.

stripping-knife (stri'p-īng-nīf), n. A knife for separating the blades of sorghum from the stalks to prepare them for grinding. E. H. Knight.

stripping-plate (stri'p-īng-plāt), n. A fixed plate attached to the frame of a roller, to scrape or strip off any adhering material, as in paint-grinding mills, clay-crushers, and in some rolling-mills for metals which adhere to rollers.

stripulose (stri'p-ū-lōs), a. In entom., covered with coarse, decumbent hairs, as the elytra of certain beetles.

stripy (stri'p-ī), a. Stripe-like; occurring in stripes; marked by streaks or stripes.

Strisores (stri-sō'rēz), n. pl. [NL.; origin obscure.] An artificial order or suborder of birds, including a number of picarian families. It was divided by Cabanis into Macrochires (the humming-birds, swifts, and goatsuckers) and Amphibolæ (the colies, touracons, and hoactzins). [Not in use.]

stritchel (strich'el), n. An assibilated form of strickle.

strive (striv), v. i.; pret. strove, pp. striven (formerly also strived, Rom. xv. 20), ppr. striving. [<ME. striven, stryven, strifen (orig. a weak verb, pret. strived, afterward conformed to the analogy of strong verbs like drive, pret. drove, with pret. strof, strove, pp. striven), <OF. estriever = Pr. estriabar, strive, prob. *<OHG. strihan, in deriv. weak verb, MHG. G. stroben = D. strevēn = MLG. strevēn, LG. strevēn = Sw. sträfe = Dan. strabe, strive; cf. Icel. stridha = Sw. strida, strive; see stride, and cf. strife.] 1. To make strenuous effort; endeavor earnestly; labor hard; do one's endeavor; try earnestly and persistently; followed by an infinitive: as, he strove hard to win the prize; to strive to excel; to strive to pay one's way.

Strive to enter in at the strait gate. Luke xiii. 24.

I'll strive . . . to take a nap. Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 104.

When there is perfect sincerity—when each man is true to himself—when everyone strives to realize what he thinks the highest rectitude—then must all things prosper.
H. Spencer, Social Statics, p. 518.

2. To contend; struggle; battle; fight; followed with with, against, or for: as, to strive against fate; to strive for the truth.

First with thi bettir be war for to strive,
Agens thi felaw noo quarrel thou contrye.
Babers Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 58.

While Iesus strove with Sathans strong Temptations.
Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 1.

Against the Deity 'tis hard to strive.
Prior, Second Hymn of Callimachus.

Striving with love and hate, with life and death,
With hope that lies, and fear that threateneth.
William Morris, Earthy Paradise, II. 151.

3. To vie; contend for preëminence; with with.

With the rose colour stroof hire hewe.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 180.

Nor that sweet grove
Of Daphne by Orontes, and the inspired Castalian spring, night with this Paradise
Of Eden strive. Milton, P. L., iv. 275.

4. To quarrel or contend with one another; be at variance one with another, or come to be so; be in contention, dispute, or altercation.

Do as adversaries do in law,
Strive mightily, but eat and drink as friends.
Shak., T. of the S., i. 2. 279.

5. To oppose by contrariety of qualities; with with.

Now private pity strove with publick hate,
Reason with rage, and eloquence with fate.
Sir J. Denham, On the Earl of Strafford's Trial [and Death].

=Syn. 1. Undertake, Endeavor, etc. (see attempt); seek, aim, toil.—2. To compete, contest.—4. To dispute, wrangle.

strive (striv), n. [<strive, v.] A striving; an effort; a strife. [Old Eng. and Scotch.] striver (stri'v-er), n. [<strive + -er¹.] One who strives or contends; one who makes efforts of body or mind. Glanville.

striving (stri'v-īng), n. [Verbal n. of strive, v.] Strenuous or earnest effort; struggle; endeavor.

Failure after long perseverance is much grander than never to have a striving good enough to be called a failure.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, xxii.

strivingly (stri'v-īng-lī), adv. In a striving manner; with earnest or persistent efforts or struggles. Imp. Diet.

Strix (striks), n. [NL., <L. strix (strig-), <Gr. στριξ (στρυ-), a screech-owl, perhaps *<striξev, equiv. to striξev, creek, grate, croak.] A Linnæan genus of owls. (a) Containing all the Striges. (b) Restricted to the barn-owls: same as Atuco. See cut under barn-owl. (c) Restricted to the wood-owls, like Strix stridula, having the facial disk complete, circular, and no plumbeons. In this sense it is now commonly employed. The common barred owl of the United States is Strix nebulosa. See cut in preceding column.

stroakt, stroakingt. Obsolete spellings of stroke¹, stroking.

stream (ström), v. i. [Prob. a var. of stream (as soam² for seam²), perhaps associated with ream: see stream.] 1†. To wander about idly and vacantly.—2. To walk with long strides. [Prov. Eng.]

He, ejaculating blessings upon his parents, and calling for just vengeance upon himself, streamed up and down the room. Mme. D'Arblay, Camilla, iii. 10. (Darvies.)

strob (strob), n. [<Gr. στρόβος, a twisting or whirling round, <σπρέφειν, turn, twist. Cf. strabile, strophe.] The angular velocity of one radian per second.

strobic (strob'ik), a. [<strob + -ic.] Appearing to spin.—Strobic circles, a number of circles drawn concentrically which appear to spin round when they are moved about.

strobila (strō-bī-lā), n.; pl. strobilæ (-læ). [NL., <Gr. στρόβιλη, a plug of lint like a pine-cone, cf. στρόβιλος, anything twisted, a pine-cone, etc.: see strobile.] In zool.: (a) In Hydrozoa, a stage in the development of a discophoran, supervening upon the scyphistoma or hydra-tuba stage by the development of ephyrae, and before these become detached from one another and from the stalk upon which they grow. See ephyra, 1, and scyphistoma. (b) In Vermes, a segmented tapeworm; the chain of zooids formed by a scolex and the proglottides which have successively budded from it. (c) [cap.] [NL.] A supposed genus of aculephs, based on the strobiliform stage of certain hydrozoans. Sars, 1835.

Two Strobiles or Strobilæ, a, b. of Cyanea capitata, resulting from fission of the hydræ tube of the scyphistoma stage. At a tentacles are developed at the base of the lower of the two ephyra borne upon the stalk of the strobila.

(d) [cap.] [NL.] In entom., a genus of lepidopterous insects. Sodoffsky, 1837.

strobilaceous (strob-i-lā'-shius), a. [<strobile + -aceous.] 1. Resembling a strobile; strobiliform.—2. Bearing strobiles; strobiliferous.

strobilæ, n. Plural of strobila.

Strobilanthes (strob-i-lan'thēz), n. [NL. (Bume, 1825), so called from the inflorescence, usually cone-like when in bud; <Gr. στρόβιλος, a pine-cone, + άνθος, a flower.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Acanthacea and tribe Ruellieæ. It is characterized by flowers with acute linear calyx-lobes, a somewhat equally five-lobed corolla with a short or long and slender tube, stamens four and perfect or two perfect and two rudimentary, and two or perhaps rarely three ovules in each of the two ovary-cells. There are about 180 species, natives mostly of India, scantily represented in China, Japan, and Malaysia, with one species in tropical Africa. They are herbs or shrubs, commonly erect, bearing opposite entire or toothed leaves, which are in a few species very unequal in the same pair. They usually rather large and handsome flowers are often blue or purple, and form dense or interrupted spikes which are terminal or crowded in the axils, and are sometimes replaced by a panicle or cyme. The fruit is an oblong or linear capsule slightly contracted at the base. Several species are cultivated for ornament, sometimes under the name cone-head. S. fasciculifolia yields the room, or maigey dye, of India, etc. See room², and cut under stoma, 2.

strobilate (strob'i-lāt), v. i.; pret. and pp. strobilated, ppr. strobilating. [<strobile + -ate².] To form or develop strobiles; be or become a strobile; effect strobilation.

strobilation (strob-i-lā'shōn), n. [<strobilate + -ion.] 1. Formation or production of strobiles; metameric division of a scyphistoma or hydra tuba into medusæ.—2. Gemination of the successive links or joints of a tapeworm; also, the transverse fission of various worms.

strobile (strob'il), n. [= F. strobile = G. strobil, a pine-cone. <LL. strobilus, a pine-cone, <Gr. στρόβιλος, anything twisted, a pine-cone, a top, sea-snail, whirlpool, twist or turn, etc., <σπρέφειν, turn, twist, spin.] 1. In bot., a cone (which see, and cuts under Lepidostrobos and pericarp). Also strobilus.

With reference to fructification, the form of Lycopodium Milleri renders it certain that it must have borne strobiles at the ends of its branchlets, or some substitute for these, and not naked spore-cases like those of Psilophyton. Dawson, Geol. Hist. of Plants, p. 101.

2. In zool., a strobila. Quain, Med. Diet., p. 1587.

Barred Owl (Strix nebulosa).

strobiliferous (strob-i-lif'ē-rus), a. [L. strobilus (see strobile, 2) + ferre = *E. bear*¹.] In zool., bearing a strobile or chain of zooids: as, the strobiliferous stage of an acaloph or a worm.

strobiliform (strō-bil'if-ōr-m), a. [L. strobilus (see strobile) + forma, form.] In bot. and zool., having the form or character of a strobile.

strobiline (strob'i-lin), a. [Gr. στροβίλιος, of or like a pine-cone, < στροβίλος, a pine-cone: see strobila.] Of or pertaining to a strobile or strobiles; strobiliform; strobilaceous.

strobilite (strob'i-lit), n. [Gr. στροβίλιος, a pine-cone, + *-ite*².] A fossil pine-cone, or something supposed to be the fruit of a coniferous tree.

strobilization (strob i-li-zā'shōn), n. [Gr. strobile + -ize + -ation.] Same as strobilation.
The second mode of reproduction [of Seyxipistoma], the process of strobilization, begins later.
Clava, Zool. (trans.), p. 256.

strobiloid (strob'i-loid), a. [Gr. στροβίλιος, a pine-cone, + ειδος, form.] Like a strobile; strobiliform: as, strobiloid gemmation; strobiloid buds. Encyc. Brit.

strobilophagous (strob-i-lof'a-gus), a. [NL. Strobilophaga (Vieillot, 1816), a genus of birds (the same as Pinicola, q. v.), < Gr. στροβίλιος, a pine-cone, + φαγίω, eat.] Feeding upon pine-cones, as a bird.

Strobilosauria (strō-bi-lō-sā'rī-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στροβίλιος, a pine-cone, + σαυρα, a lizard.] A former superfamily of Lacertilia, having a fleshy inextensible tongue, eyelids, developed limbs, and aerodont or pleurodont dentition. It included the families Agumidæ and Iguanidæ. Also Strobilosauria.

strobilosaurian (strō-bi-lō-sā'rī-an), a. and n. [Gr. Strobilosauria + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Strobilosauria; agamoid or iguanoid. II. n. A member of the Strobilosauria. Also strobilosaurian.

strobilure (strob'i-lūr), n. [NL. Strobilurus.] A lizard of the genus Strobilurus.

Strobilurus (strob'i-lū'r-us), n. [NL. (Wiegmann), < Gr. στροβίλιος, a pine-cone, + οἶψα, tail.] A genus of South American iguanoid lizards, having the tail ringed with spinose scales (whence the name). S. torquatus is the Brazilian strobilure.

strobilus (strō-bi'l-us), n. Same as strobile, 1.

stroboscope (strōb'ō-skōp), n. [Gr. στροβίλος, a twisting or whirling round (< στροβέω, turn, twist: see strobile), + σκοπεῖν, view.] An instrument used in the study of the periodic motion of a body, as one in rapid revolution or vibration, by illuminating it at frequent intervals (for example, by electric sparks or by a beam of light made intermittent by passing through a moving perforated plate), or again by viewing it through the openings of a revolving disk: also used as a toy. The phenakistoscope and zoëtrope represent one form of stroboscope.

stroboscopic (strōb'ō-skōp'ik), a. [Gr. stroboscope + -ic.] Pertaining to the stroboscope, to observations made with it, or to the physical principle involved in its use. Nature, XXXIX, 451.

strocal, strocket, strocle, n. See strokle.
strode (strōd). Preterit of stride.

stroft. An obsolete form of the preterit of strive.
strogle, v. i. A Middle English form of struggle.
stroit, v. t. See stroy.

stroil (stroil), n. [Also stroyl; origin obscure.] The couch- or quitch-grass, Agropyrum repens: applied especially to the white and worm-like roots. See cut under quitch-grass. Britten and Holland, [Prov. Eng.]

strokal, n. See strokle.
stroke¹ (strōk), n. [Formerly also strōk; < ME. strook, strook, strak, < AS. strāc (= MHG. G. streich, a stroke), < strācan (pret. strāc), go, pass along, etc.: see strike, v., and cf. strike, n., *stroke*², *steal*², n.] 1. A sweeping movement of a sustained object; the moving of something held or supported through a limited course: in mech., one of a series of alternating continuous movements of something back and forth over or through the same line: as, the strokes of an oar; a stroke of a pen in writing; the strokes of a file, a saw, a piston-rod, or a pump-handle; the length of stroke of a pendulum.

A few strokes of his muscular arms, and he is reached by the launch and swings himself up into her bows.
St. Nicholas, XVII, 834.

In a stroke or two the canoes were away out in the middle of the Scheidt. R. L. Stevenson, Inland Voyage, p. 11.

2. In rowing, specifically—(a) The manner or style of moving the oars or making strokes; the handling of the oars: as, to set the stroke for the race; the stroke was very rapid or exhausting. (b) The guiding-stroke: as, to pull stroke in a race. (c) The rower who sets the stroke; the stroke-oar or strokesman.—3. A line or mark impressed by or as if by a sweeping movement; hence, a part of an impression of any kind appearing as if so made: as, the hair-strokes, curved strokes, or up-and-down strokes of a letter; fine or coarse strokes in an engraving. See cut under type.

Carracci's strength, Correggio's softer line,
Paulo's free stroke, and Titian's warm divine.
Pope, To Mr. Jervas, l. 38.

4. A throbbing; a pulsation; a beat.
For twenty strokes of the blood, without a word,
Linger'd that other, staring after him.
Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

5. In musical instruments with a keyboard, the range of motion of a key.—6. A striking of one body or mass upon another; a sudden impact of an object moved or hurled through space; a blow or concussion, especially one administered or effected by design or in some definite manner: as, a stroke of the fist or of a sword; the strokes of a hammer; the stroke of a bat, a cue, or a mallet against a ball (in various games).
He smote a-houtie hym grete strokes bothe on the left syde and on the right syde. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 118.
How now! what noise? That spirit's possess'd with haste
That wounds the unresisting postern with these strokes.
Shak., M. for M., iv. 2. 92.

7. A sudden or special effect produced upon an object as if by a striking movement; a result or consequence of the action of some rapidly working or efficient agency or cause: as, a stroke of lightning; a stroke of paralysis (for which the word stroke is often used absolutely, both colloquially and by physicians); the stroke of fate or of death: used in the Bible especially of a divine chastisement or judgment.

Remove thy stroke away from me. Ps. xxxix. 10.
When I did speak of some distressful stroke
That my youth suffer'd. Shak., Othello, i. 3. 157.
She'll make you shrink, as I did, with a stroke
But of her eye, Tigranes.
Beau. and Fl., King and No King, i. 1.
A stroke of cruel sunshine on the cliff.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

8. A sound of striking; a resonant concussion; a giving out of sounds by striking: as, the strokes of a bell or a hammer; the clock is on (that is, on the point of giving out) the stroke of twelve.
His hour's upon the stroke.
Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, iii. 2.

9. An effective movement, action, or expression; an energetic touch, effort, or exertion; a piece or course of activity: as, a good stroke of business; he will not do a stroke of work; a bold stroke for liberty.
The boldest strokes of poetry, when they are managed artfully, are those which most delight the reader.
Dryden, State of Innocence, Pref.
I am heartily glad to hear Mr. Cook has given the finishing stroke to your fine chapel.
Dr. Plot, in Letters of Eminent Men, I. 74.

Christianity [is] the greatest and happiest stroke ever yet made for human perfection.
M. Arnold, Literature and Dogma, iv.

10. A trait; a feature; a characteristic.
In its main strokes, it accords with the Aristotelian philosophy.
Parker, Platonic Philosophy, 2d ed., p. 42.
I have the highest idea of the spiritual and refined sentiments of this reverend gentleman, from this single stroke in his character. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, i. 10.

11. A feat; a thing successfully done; a coup.
To wake the soul by tender strokes of art.
Addison, Cato, Prol.

But the advance in double column against the combined fleets was a stroke of genius as affairs stood.
The Academy, June 28, 1890, p. 437.

12†. Capacity for doing anything; effective ability; skill in action or manipulation.
Neither can any man be entertained as a Soldier that has not a greater stroke than ordinary at eating.
Dampier, Voyages, ii. i. 71.

13†. Moving or controlling power; influence; sway; ascendancy; standing; importance.
They . . . which otherwise have any stroke in the disposition of such preferences. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 81.

In this new state of government, Apphus was the man that bare the greatest stroke; he ruled the rod and swaied all the rest. Holland, tr. of Livy (ed. 1600), p. 109.

A stroke above, a degree above; of somewhat higher grade or quality than. [Colloq.]
She was a stroke above the other girls. Dickens.

Indoor stroke. See outdoor, 3.—Split stroke. See split.
—Stroke of the glottis. See glottis.—To keep stroke, in rowing, to move the oars in unison.
stroke¹ (strōk), v. t.; pret. and pp. strōked, ppr. strōking. [*Gr. stroke*¹, n.] To act as stroke or strokesman to: handle the stroke-oar for or of. [Recent.]
The Yale crew have lost their stroke. . . . He strōked the university crew to victory in six races.
Harper's Weekly, XXXIII, 571.

stroke² (strōk), v. t.; pret. and pp. strōked, ppr. strōking. [Also dial. (Sc.) strāk, strāik; < ME. strōken, strāken, < AS. strācian (= D. strijken = OHG. streichōn, MHG. G. streichen, also freq. streicheln), stroke, causal form of strācan, etc., go, strike: see strike, and cf. *stroke*¹. Cf. Sw. stryka, Dan. strygge, Icel. strjúka, stroke (see stroll).] 1. To pass the hands or an instrument over (something) lightly or with little pressure; rub, or rub down, with a gentle movement in a single direction: an action often performed for soothing or caressing a person or an animal, also for smoothing or polishing an object, etc., and sometimes as a curative process.
She strōked my head, and she kemb'd my hair.
Alison Gross (Child's Ballads, I. 168).
And then another panac; and then,
Strōking his beard, he said again.
Longfellow, Wayside Inn, Second Interlude.

2. Hence, figuratively, to soothe; flatter; pacify; encourage. [Now prov. Eng.]
Such smooth soft language as each line Might stroke an angry god, or stay Jove's a thunder. Carew, To my Rival.

3. To affect in some way by a rubbing action.
What a slovenly little villian art thou!
Why dost thou not stroke up thy hair?
Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, v. 5.

The ancient Chinese were very proud of the Hair of their Heads, letting it grow very long, and strōking it back with their Hands curiously. Dampier, Voyages, I. 407.

4. In masonry, to work the face of (a stone) in such a manner as to produce a sort of fluted surface.—To stroke the wrong way (of the hair, expressed or implied), to go against the grain of; ruffle or annoy, as by opposition: from the irritating effect on an animal, especially a cat, of rubbing up the fur by stroking it in the direction opposite to the way it lies.

stroke² (strōk), n. [*Gr. stroke*², v.] An act of stroking; a stroking caress.
His white-man'd steeds, that bow'd beneath the yoke,
He cheer'd to courage with a gentle stroke.
Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., xii. 108.

stroke^{3†}. An obsolete form of the preterit of strike.
stroke-gear (strōk'gēr), n. In machine-tools having a reciprocating cutter, that part of the gearing by which the forward and backward strokes of the tool-slide are effected—the return stroke being usually made with much greater velocity than the cutting stroke.

stroke-hole (strōk'hōl), n. In golf, a hole at which, in handicapping, a stroke is given.

stroke-oar (strōk'ōr), n. 1. The foremost oar in a rowboat, to the strokes of which those of the other oars must be conformed.—2. The oarsman who handles the stroke-oar; the strokesman.

stroke-oarsman (strōk'ōrz'mān), n. One who handles the stroke-oar. In a whale-boat the stroke-oarsman is usually the lightest man of the crew. Also called after-oarsman.

stroker (strō'kēr), n. [*Gr. stroke*² + *-er*¹.] 1. One who strokes; formerly, one who practised stroking as a method of cure.
Curea worked by Stroking.
Warburton, Works, X. xxvii.

2†. A soothing flatterer; a fawning sycophant. [Rare.]
What you please, Dame Polish,
My lady's strōker.
B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady, iv. 1.

3. In printing, a form of wood or bone paper-folier with which the layer-on or feeder strokes or brings forward separate sheets of paper to the grippers of a printing-machine. [Eng.]—Stroker in, in printing, the workman who strokes or combs separate sheets of paper to the grippers of a printing-machine. [Eng.]

strokesman (strōks'mān), n.; pl. strokesmen (-men). [*Gr. stroke*², poss. of stroke, + man.] A stroke-oar or stroke.

stroking (strō'king), n. [Formerly also stroak-ing; verbal n. of *stroke*², v.] 1. The act of passing the hand over a surface.—2. pl. The last milk drawn from a cow, pressed out by gentle stroking; strippings. [Prov. Eng.]
The cook entertained me with choice bits, the dairy-maid with strookings.
Smollett, Roderick Random, xl (Daries).

stroklet, n. [Also strocle, strockle, strokal, strocut; appar. a var., simulating stroke, of strickle.] A glassmakers' shovel with recurved edges, for handling sand and other materials. Blount, Glossographia, p. 615.

stroll (stról), v. i. [Early mod. E. also stroul, stroule, stroule; appar. contracted from a ME. form *strouken, < MD. struyckelen, D. struikelen, stumbe, = MHG. strücheln, G. struucheln, stumbe, G. dial. (Swiss) strolchen, rove, freq. of OHG. strühön, MHG. strüchen, stumbe; = Icel. strjúka, stroke, rub, brush, flog, etc.; go off, stray, = Dan. stryge = Sw. stryka, stroke, stroll, ramble; cf. Sw. stryker, dial. strykel, a stroller. Akin to straggle, q. v., but prob. not to straggle, which, with strakel, etc., belongs to AS. strican, ME. striken, go, proceed, wander, = G. streichen, go (> streicher, a stroller), etc.: see strike, strakel, straggle, etc., struggle.] 1. To saunter from point to point on foot; walk leisurely as inclination directs; ramble, especially for some particular purpose or aim.

An elderly dame dwells in my neighborhood. . . in whose odoriferous herb garden I love to stroll sometimes, gathering simples. Thoreau, Walden, p. 149.

There was something soothing, something pleasant, in thus strolling along the path by the flowing river. Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xxxix.

2. To rove from place to place; go about deviously as chance or opportunity offers; roam; wander; tramp; used especially of persons who lead a roaming life in search of occupation or subsistence.

In 1703, "3 strouling Gipsies are ordered down to Huntington to be Tried for Robbing two Women." Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 222.

He turned strolling player; but his form and figure were ill suited to the boards. Macaulay, Goldsmith.

3. To turn in different directions; veer or glance about; rove, as the eyes. [Rare.] The am'rous Eyes thus always go A-strolling for their Friends below. Prior, Alma, ii.

= Syn. 1 and 2. Saunter, Wander, etc. See romble, v. stroll (stról), n. [stroll, r.] 1. A wandering along or about; a leisurely walk; a saunter.

Bright days, when a stroll is my afternoon wont, And I meet all the people I do know or don't. F. Locker, Piccadilly.

2t. A stroller. We'll entertain no mountebanking stroll, No piper, fiddler, tumbler through small hoops, No ape-carrier, baboon-bearer. Middleton and Kolvey, Spanish Gypsy, ii. 1.

3. A narrow strip of land. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

stroller (stról'ler), n. [stroll + -er.] One who strolls; a wanderer; a straggler; a vagabond; especially, an itinerant performer.

When strollers durst presume to pick your purse, Dryden, Fifth Frol. to Univ. of Oxford.

He had been stolen away when he was a child by a gipsy, and had rambled ever since with a gang of those strollers up and down several parts of Europe. Addison, Sir Roger and the Gipsies.

We allow no strollers or vagrants here. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxxii.

strom¹, n. A Middle English form of stream.

strom² (strom), n. [Origin obscure.] An instrument to keep the malt in the vat. Bailey, 1731. [Prov. Eng.]

stroma (stróm'ä), n.; pl. stromata (-mä-tä). [NL., < L. stroma, < Gr. στρώμα (strómät-), a covering, a coverlet, < στρώνω, στρένω, spread, spread out, strew: see strew, stratum.]

1. In anat.: The sustentacular tissue or substance of a part or organ, usually of connective tissue.—2. In bot.: (a) In fungi, a variously shaped more or less continuous layer of cellular tissue, in which perithecia or other organs of fructification are immersed. Sometimes called receptacle. See cut under crypt. (b) In vegetable physiology, the solid matter remaining after all the fluid has been expressed from protoplasm. Goudale.—Cancer stroma, the interlacing connective-tissue framework containing the alveoli of cancer-cells.—Intertubular stroma, the connective-tissue framework which supports the tubules of the kidney, and which contains the blood-vessels, lymphatics, nerves, etc.—Stroma fibrin, fibrin formed from the stroma of the blood-corpules.—Stroma of red blood-corpules, that part of those corpules which remains after the hemoglobin is removed.—Stroma of the ovary, the connective tissue of the ovary. Formerly the ova were supposed to originate in this stroma. They are, however, derived from the investing cell-layer or germ-epithelium of the ovary, from which multitudinous cells, some of them to become ova, penetrate the stroma.

Stromateidæ (stróm-mä-té'i-dé), n. pl. [NL., < Stromateus + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Stromateus, related to the scombroids and earangoids.

They have large dentigerous or saciform gill-rakers on the last branchial arch, extending into the esophagus; a single long dorsal fin with a few spines in front; and the ventrals, when present, generally under the pectorals, but in the typical forms more or less reduced, or absent. They are small fishes of most warm seas, of about 6 genera and 25 species, divided into Stromateinæ and Centrolophinae. Also Stromateina, as a division of Scombridae.

stromateine (stróm-mät'ë-in), a. and n. [Stromateus + -in¹.] I. a. Of, or having characters of, the Stromateidæ.

II. n. A fish of the family Stromateidæ.

stromateoid (stróm-mät'ë-oid), a. and n. [Stromateus + -oid.] Same as stromateine.

Stromateoides (stróm-mä-té-oi'déz), n. [NL. (Bleeker, 1857), < Stromateus + Gr. eidos, form.] A genus of stromateoid fishes, with restricted branchial apertures. S. sinensis is the white and S. cinereus the gray pomfret. See cut under pomfret.

Stromateus (stróm-mät'ë-us), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1748), < Gr. στρωματεΐς, a coverlet, a bag for bed-clothes (in pl. cloths), a kind of fish, < στρώμα (strómät-), a coverlet or spread (in allusion to the color of the typical species, supposed to resemble that of a spread or carpet): see strama.] The typical genus of the family Stromateidæ, in which the ventral fins are lost in the adult, the caudal peduncle is not keeled, and the gill-membranes are free from the isthmus. There are a number of species, of tropical to warm temperate seas. One of the best-known is S. triacanthus of the Atlantic coast of the United States, variously called butter-fish, harvest-fish, and dollar-fish. (See cut under butter-fish.) A very similar species is S. alepidotus; another is S. similimus of the Californian coast, highly esteemed as a food-fish, known in the markets of San Francisco as the ponapano. See ponapano, 2.

stromatic¹ (stróm-mät'ik), a. [stroma(-t-) + -ic.] In anat., physiol., and bot., of the nature of a stroma; resembling a stroma; stromatous.

stromatic² (stróm-mät'ik), a. [Gr. στρωματά, a false reading for στρωματεΐς, i. e. 'patchwork,' 'miscellany,' the title of a work by Clement of Alexandria; pl. of στρωματεΐς, a coverlet; see Stromateus.] Miscellaneous; composed of different kinds. [Rare.]

stromatiform (stróm-mä-ti-fórm), a. [NL. stroma(-t-), q. v., + L. forma, form.] In bot., having the form of a stroma.

Stromatopora (stróm-mä-top'ö-rä), n. [NL. (De Blainville, 1830), < Gr. στρώμα(τ-), a covering, + πόρος, pore.] 1. The typical genus of Stromatoporidae.—2. [l. c.] A member of this genus.

Stromatoporidae (stróm-mä-tö-por'i-dé), n. pl. [NL., < Stromatopora + -idæ.] A family of hydrocoralline corals, typified by the genus Stromatopora. They are all of Paleozoic age. Also Stromatoporaidea.

stromatoporoid (stróm-mä-top'ö-roid), a. and n. [Stromatopora + -oid.] I. a. Pertaining to the Stromatoporidae, or having their characters.

II. n. A member of the Stromatoporidae.

stromatus (stróm-mä-tus), a. [stroma(-t-) + -us.] 1. Of or pertaining to stroma.—2. In bot., bearing or producing a stroma.

stromb (strom), n. [NL. Strombus.] A conch of the family Strombidae, and especially of the genus Strombus; a wing-shell; a fountain-shell.

The best-known stromb is S. gigas, whose delicate pink shell is used for cameo-cutting, and also ground up in the manufacture of some fine kinds of porcelain, for which purposes it is said that 300,000 were imported into England in one year from the Bahamas. Another well-known species is S. pugilis, so called from the red, as if bloody, mouth. See also cut under wing-shell.

Strombidae (strom'bi-dé), n. pl. [NL., < Strombus + -idæ.] A family of tanioglossate siphonostomatous pectinibranchiate gastropods, typified by the genus Strombus; the strombs or wing-shells. The animal has an elongate annulated muzzle. The eyes are highly developed, at the ends of thick elongated peduncles, from which the inner sides of the tentacles, when present, originate. The foot is compressed, rather small, and adapted for leaping. The shell is mostly obconic, with a rather short conic spire and an elongate and narrow aperture; a horny claw-like operculum, serrated along the outer margin, is generally developed. Numerous species live in tropical seas, and some of them attain a large size. The largest is Strombus gigas, the giant conch of the West Indies, much used for cameos, and also as an ornament, especially around fountains, whence it is known as the fountain-shell. The family is divided into Strombinae and Seraphyinae. See cuts under Rostellaria, scorpion-shell, and stromb.

Strombidium (strom-bid'ü-m), n. [NL. (Claparède and Laehmann, 1859), < Strombus + Gr. dim. -idium.] A genus of peritrichous ciliate infusorians, of the family Halteriidae. These interesting animals inhabit both salt and fresh water, and, though there are no spring-hairs, they are noted for such activity and energy of movement that their examination is difficult. They are free-swimming, of globose or turbinate form, with eccentric terminal oral aperture associated with a spiral wreath of erect cilia; the endoplast and contractile vacuole are conspicuous. Numerous species are described.

strombiform (strom'bi-fórm), a. [NL. Strombus + L. forma, form.] Shaped like a wing-shell; having the form of a stromb; belonging or related to the Strombidae.

strombine (strom'bin), a. and n. [Strombus + -in¹.] I. a. Of, or having characters of, the Strombidae; stromboid.

II. n. A stromboid; a gastropod of the family Strombidae.

strombite (strom'bit), n. [stromb + -ite².] A fossil stromb, or some similar shell.

stromboid (strom'boid), a. and n. [stromb + -oid.] I. a. Resembling a stromb; pertaining or related to the Strombidae; strombiform.

II. n. A strombine or stromb.

strombuliform (strom'bü-li-fórm), a. [NL. strombulus, dim. of *strombus, a top (see Strombus), + L. forma, form.] 1. In geol., formed like a top.—2.

In bot., twisted or coiled into the form of a screw or helix, as the legumes of the serow-bean, some species of Medicago, etc.

Strombus (strom'bus), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1758), < L. Strombus, a kind of spiral snail. < Gr. στρόβιλος, a top, a pine-cone, a snail, anything twisted or whorled, < στρέφω, twist, turn: see strobile.] The typical genus of Strombidae, formerly conterminous with the family, now restricted to such species as the West Indian giant stromb, S. gigas; the wing-shells, fountain-shells, or strombs. They are active, predatory, and carnivorous marine shells, much used for ornamental purposes. Also called Gallus. See cut at stromb.

stromeyerine (stróm-mi-ér-in), n. [As stromeyer(ite) + -in².] Same as stromeyerite.

stromeyerite (stróm-mi-ér-it), n. [Named after Fr. Stromeyer, a German chemist and mineralogist (died 1835).] A sulphid of silver and copper occurring in crystals near chalcocite in form, also massive. It has a dark steel-gray color and metallic luster.

strommell, n. An obsolete form of strammel.

stromdi, n. An obsolete form of strand¹.

strong¹ (stróng), a. [Sc. strong; < ME. strong, stronge, strang (compar. stronger, strengere), < AS. strang, strong (compar. strengra, strængra). strong, mighty, = OS. strang = MD. stronge, strength, D. streng = MLG. LG. streng = OHG. strang, strangi, strengi, MHG. streng, G. streng, hard, rigid, severe, strict, = Icel. strangr = Sw. sträng = Dan. streng, strong; connections uncertain; perhaps related to string. Cf. L. stringent, draw tight (see stringent, strain¹, strict); Gr. σπαστός, tightly twisted, σπαστόλη, a halter, etc. (see strangle). No connection with stark¹. Hence strength, strengthen, etc.] 1. Possessing, exerting, or imparting force or energy, physical or moral, in a general sense; powerful; forcible; effective; capable; able to do or to suffer.

For-fore worship god, bothe olde and zong, To be in body sad soule yliche stronge. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 304.

What can be strong enough to resist those charms which either innocence, nor wisdom, nor power are sufficient security against? Stillingsfleet, Sermons, II. iii.

Know how sublime a thing it is To suffer and be strong. Longfellow, Light of Stars.

When a man is able to rise above himself, only then he becomes truly strong. J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 368.

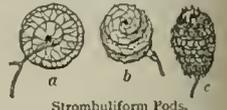

2. Having vital force or capability; able to act effectively; endowed with physical vigor; used absolutely, physically powerful; robust; muscular: as, a strong body; a strong hand or arm.

And he was a moche knyght, and a stronge out of measure. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 164.

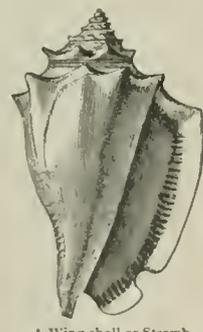

Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness. Judges xiv. 14.

Of two persons who have had, the one the education of a gentleman, the other that of a common sailor, the first may be the stronger, at the same time that the other is the hardier. Bentham, Intro. to Principles of Morals, vi. 9.

3. Having means for exerting or resisting force; provided with adequate instrumentalities: powerful in resources or in constituent parts: as, a strong king or kingdom; a strong army; a strong corporation or mercantile house.

Strombuliform Pods. a. Of Medicago orbiculata. b. Of Medicago apiculata. c. Of Medicago sativaria.

A Wing-shell or Stromb (Strombus pugilis).

When the kyng Brangore was come to Eastrangore, his strong place, . . . he hidde it stufte with knyghtes and vi-taille.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 247.

He grewe stronge, and in shorte space got to himselfe a greate name.
Spenser, State of Ireland.

At last, nigh thr'd, a castle strong we fand,
The utmost border of my native land.
Fairfax, tr. of Tasso's Godfrey of Boulogne, iv. 55.

4. Having or consisting of a large number, absolutely or relatively; numerically forcible or well provided: usually implying also some special element of strength in some or all of the units composing the number: as, a strong detachment of troops; a strong political party.

Byn thoughte he was nat able for to speede,
For she was strong of freendes.
Chaucer, Doctor's Tale, l. 135.

5. Of specified numerical force; having so many constituent members: applied to armies, and sometimes to other bodies of men, or to animals. First demand of him how many horse the duke is strong.
Shak., All's Well, iv. 3. 149.

The rebels at Drumlog were eight or nine thousand strong.
Swift, Mem. of Capt. Creighton.

6. Exerting or capable of characteristic force; powerful in the kind or mode of action implied; specifically, forcible or efficient: as, a strong painter or actor; a strong voice; strong eyes.

His mother was a witch, and one so strong
That could control the moon, make flows and ebbs.
Shak., Tempest, v. l. 269.

I was stronger in prophecy than in criticism.
Dryden.
A solitary shriek, the bubbling cry
Of some strong swimmer in his agony.
Byron, Don Juan, ii. 53.

7. Vigorous in exercise or operation; acting in a firm or determined manner; not feeble or vacillating: used of the mind or any of its faculties: as, a strong-minded person; a strong intellect, memory, judgment, etc.

Divert strong minds to the course of altering things.
Shak., Sonnets, exv.

8. Possessing moral or mental force; firm in character, knowledge, conviction, influence, or the like; not easily turned, resisted, or refuted: as, a strong candidate; a strong reasoner.

Pray that ye may be strong in honesty,
As in the use of arms.
Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 3.

They were very diligent, plain, and serious; strong in Scripture, and bold in profession.
Penn., Rise and Progress of Quakers, i.

He wants to show the party that he too can be a "Strong Man" on a pinch.
The Nation, XXX. 1.

9. Marked by force or vigor of performance; done, executed, produced, or uttered energetically; effected by earnest action or effort; strenuous; stressful; urgent.

Anthony wred with strong besinease
The Erle of Faborugh.
Rom. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 2495.

When he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears.
Heb. v. 7.

The ears of the people they have therefore filled with strong clamour.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iv. 4.

10. Marked by force of action or movement; vigorously impelled or sent forth; impetuous; violent; vehement: as, a strong wind; strong tides; strong breathing.

If Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is herft.
Shak., Lucrece, l. 835.

When they came to the great river, they were carried over by one Ludham, . . . the stream being very strong.
Winthrop, in New England's Memorial, p. 170, note.

11. Firm in substance or texture: capable of resisting physical force; not weak; not easily broken, rent, or destroyed: said of material things.

His bones are as strong pieces of brass.
Job xl. 18.
The graven flowers that wreath the sword
Make not the blade less strong.
Whittier, My Psalm.

12. Solid.

Ye . . . are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong ment [solid food, R. V.].
Heb. v. 12.

13. Firmly fixed or constituted; having inherent force or validity; hard to affect or overcome; sound; stable; settled: as, a strong constitution or organization (of body, mind, government, etc.); strong arguments, reasons, or evidence; to take a strong hold, or get a strong advantage; a strong project.

In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence.
Prov. xiv. 26.
Ye strong foundations of the earth.
Micah vi. 2.

14. Vigorous or extreme in kind; specifically, distinct or exceptional: bold; striking; effective; forcible; conspicuous: as, strong invectives; a strong attraction.

And Merlyn, that full of stronge arte was, yede hem aboute, and cleded the kyng as they weren sette, and shewed hym the voyde place.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 60.

On our ground of grief
Rise by day in strong relief
The prophecies of better things.
Whittier, Astraea at the Capitol.

15. Intense or thorough in quality; having a high degree of the proper specific character; not mild, weak, dull, insipid, or ineffective: as, strong drink; strong tea; a strong infusion; strong lights and shadows; a strong color.

So is it full of Dragounes, of Serpentes, and of other venomous Bestes that no man dar not passe, but zif it be strong Wyntre.
Manderlyle, Travels, p. 266.

This is strong phisic, sionir,
And never will agree with my weak body.
Fletcher (and another), Love's Cure, li. 2.

By mixing such powders we are not to expect strong and full white, such as is that of paper.
Newton, Opticks, l. ii. 5.

16. Intense or intensified in degree; existing in great amount or force; forcibly impressive to feeling or sensation: used of either active or passive qualities: as, strong love or devotion; a strong flavor or scent.

Is it possible . . . you should fall into so strong a liking with old Sir Rowland's youngest son?
Shak., As you Like it, i. 3. 28.

Nor was her heart so small
That one strong passion should engross it all.
Crabbe, Works, IV. 83.

17. Forcefully offensive in quality; repellent to sense or sensation: ill-tasting or ill-smelling; rank; rancid; tainted.

They say poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know we have strong arms too.
Shak., Cor., i. 1. 61.

18. In com., specifically, firm; favorable to gain; steadily good or advancing; active; profitable: as, a strong market; strong prices: to do a strong business.—19. In gram., inflected—(a) as a verb, by a change of the radical vowel instead of by regular syllabic addition: opposed to weak: thus, find (found), spake (spoke or spoke, spoken), strike (struck, stricken), and swim (swam, swum) are strong verbs; (b) as a noun or an adjective, with fuller retention of older case-distinctions: thus, German Buch is called of strong declension, and Held of weak. Strong and weak are purely fanciful terms, introduced by J. Grimm; they belong properly to Germanic words alone, but are occasionally applied to similar phenomena in other languages also.

20. In photog., same as dense, 3.—Strong arm or hand, figuratively, great power or force; forcible or violent means; overpowering vigor; the force of arms: as, to overcome opposition with a strong arm; "a strong hand," Ex vi. 1.

It was their meaning to take what they needed by strong-hand.
Raleigh.

Strong box, a strongly made case or chest for the preservation of money and other things of great value in small compass.—Strong double refraction, in optics. See refraction, 1.—Strong drink, election, place. See the nouns.—Strong faints. See faint, 2.—Strong room, a fire-proof and burglar-proof apartment in which to keep valuables.—Strong water. (a) Distilled spirit of any sort; generally in the plural: as, a draught of strong waters. In the time of our fast, two of our landmen pierced a rindlet of strong water, and stole some of it.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, l. 4.

(b) Aqua fortis, or some other strong biting acid.

Metals themselves do receive in readily strong-waters; and strong-waters do readily pierce into metals and stones; and . . . [some] strong-waters will touch upon gold, that will not touch upon silver.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 800.

=Syn, 2. Sturdy, Stout, etc. (see robust); hardy; sinewy.—3. Potent.—11. Tenacious, tough.—13. Impregnable.—14. Vivid.—15. Pungent, sharp.

strong¹ (stróng), adv. [ME. strong, stronge; < strong¹, a.] Strongly; very; exceedingly. [Obsolete except in the slang phrase below.]

I will to-morrow go to an Abbey, and feyne me stronge sike.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), i. 52.

To go or come it strong, to do a thing with energy and perseverance. [Slang.]

strong². An obsolete past participle of string.
Spenser, Virgil's Gnat, l. 16.

strong-back (stróng'bak), n. Naut.: (a) A piece of wood or iron over the windlass, to trice the chain up to when the windlass is to be used for any purpose. (b) A spar across boat-davits, to which the boat is secured at sea.

strongbark (stróng'hárk), n. A tree or shrub of the boraginaceous genus Bourreria, which belongs to the West Indies and tropical America. One species, B. Harauensis, which extends into Florida, is a small tree or shrub with a hard, fine, and beautiful wood of a brown color streaked with orange; the larger trees, however, are hollow and defective.

strong-barred^t (stróng'bárd), a. Strongly barred; tightly fastened. Shak., K. John, ii. 1. 370.

strong-based^t (stróng'bást), a. Strongly or firmly based. Shak., Tempest, v. l. 46.

strong-besieged^t (stróng'bé-séjéd'), a. Strongly besieged. Shak., Lucrece, l. 1429.

strong-bonded^t (stróng'bon'déd), a. Strongly bound or secured; made strongly binding. Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 279. [Rare.]

strong-fixed^t (stróng'fíks't), a. Strongly fixed; firmly established. Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 102.

stronghand^t (stróng'hánd'), n. Violence; force; power: a contraction of the phrase by the strong hand. See strong arm or hand, under strong.

stronghold (stróng'höld), n. A fastness; a fort; a fortified place; a place or position of security: often used figuratively, and formerly as two words.

David took the strong hold of Zion. 2 Sam. v. 7 strong-knit (stróng'nít), a. Strongly or well knit; firmly joined or compacted.

For strokes received, and many blows repaid,
Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 4.

strongle (stróng'gl), n. A strongyle. T. S. Cobbold.

strongly (stróng'li), adv. [ME. strongly, strongely, strongliche, strangliche; < AS. stranglice, strong, < stranglic, strong, < strang, < strong¹ and -ly².] In a strong manner, in any sense of the word strong.

That Cyter [Cassay] is strongliche enshabtyd with peple, in so moche that in on House men maken 10 households.
Manderlyle, Travels, p. 269.

Fly, fly; delay
Both oft the stronglied founded flots betray.
J. Beaumont, Psyche, i. 44.

strongman's-weed (stróng'manz-wé'd), n. See Petiveria.

strong-minded (stróng'mín'ded), a. 1. Having a strong or vigorous mind.—2. Not in accordance with the female character or manners; unfeminine: applied ironically to women claiming the privileges and opportunities of men.

strong-mindedness (stróng'mín'ded-nes), n. The character or quality of being strong-minded, especially as used of women.

strong-tempered^t (stróng'tém'pérd), a. Made strong by tempering; strongly tempered. Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 111.

strongylate (stróng'ji-lát), a. [< strongyle + -ate¹.] Having the character of a strongyle, as a sponge-spicule; simply spicular, with blunt ends. Sollas.

strongyle (stróng'jil), n. [< NL. strongylus (see Strongylus), < Gr. στρογγύλος, round, spherical, < *σπάγγειν, draw tight; see strangle.] 1. A spicule of the monaxon biradiate type, with each end rounded off; a strongylate sponge-spicule. It is simply a rhabdus whose two ends are blunt instead of sharp. A strongyle blunt at one end and sharp at the other becomes a strongyloxa. Sollas.

2. In Vermes, a nematoid or threadworm of the genus Strongylus in a broad sense; a strongylid. There are many species. See Strongylida.

Strongylia (stróng-jil'i-ä), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. στρογγύλος, round, spherical; see strongyle.] A suborder of chilognath myriapods, with manducatory mouth, and sexual organs opening in the anterior part of the body. It includes the families Polyxenidae, Polydesmidae, Iulidae, and Lysioptelidae. H. C. Wood, 1865.

strongylid (stróng'ji-lid), a. and n. Same as strongylid.

Strongylidae (stróng-jil'i-dé), n. pl. [NL., < Strongylus + -idae.] A family of endoparasitic nematoid worms, typified by the genus Strongylus, and containing about 10 other genera. They are formidable parasites, sometimes attaining a length of 3 feet, though usually much smaller than this. They are cylindrical, and more or less elongated and ill-form; the mouth is oval, circular, or triangular, and armed or unarmed; and the tail of the male is furnished with a bursa or pouch, or a pair of membranous lobes, and usually a pair of protruding spicules. The female is commonly larger than the male. Strongylus bronchialis is the lung-strongle of man; the female is an inch long, the male half that size. S. armatus infests the horse; S. micrurus and S. contortus are found in ruminants, as cattle and sheep. Eustrongylus pilosus is the giant strongyle of the kidney, the largest known endoparasite of this kind, the male being about a foot long, the female a yard or more. Strongylus quadridentatus or Sclerostoma duceduale infests the human intestine, and a similar strongyle, Synommus trachealis, causes the capes in poultry, occurring in great numbers in the air-passages.

Strongylocentrotus (stróng'ji-lō-sen-tró'tus), n. [NL. (Brandt), < Gr. στρογγύλος, round spherical, + κεντροτός, κέντρον, point, center; see center¹.] A genus of regular sea-urchins, Common New England Sea-urchin (Strongylocentrotus drobachensis).

of the family Echinidae. One of the commonest and best-known sea-urchins of the Atlantic coast of the United States is S. drobachensis.

strongyloid (stron'ji-loid), a. and n. [κ stron-yylo + -oid.] I. a. Like a strongyle; related to the genus Strongylus; belonging to the Strongyloidea.

II. n. A strongyle, or some similar nematoid.

strongyloxa (stron-ji-lok'sē-ā), n.; pl. strongyloxeae (-ē). [NL., < Gr. στρογγύλος, round, + ἀξίς, sharp.] A strongyle blunt at one end and sharp at the other; a strongyloxeate sponge-spicule. Encyc. Brit., XXII, 417.

strongyloxeate (stron-ji-lok'sē-āt), a. [As strongyloxa + -ate.] Blunt at one end and sharp at the other, as a sponge-spicule of the rhabdus type; having the character of a strongyloxa. Sollas.

Strongylus (stron'ji-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. στρογγύλος, round, spherical, < σπάγω*, draw tight, squeeze; see strangle.] I. The typical genus of the family Strongyloidea. Müller, 1780.—2. [L. c.; pl. strongyli (-i).] In sponges, a strongyle.

strontia (stron'shi-ā), n. [NL. (Klaproth), < strontium, q. v.] The monoxid of strontium, SrO, an alkaline earth which when pure is an infusible grayish-white powder having an acrid burning taste. It is soluble in water with evolution of heat, slaking into a hydrate, Sr(OH)₂, which is quite soluble and deposits from its solution crystals of the hydrate containing eight molecules of water of crystallization. The hydrate has a strong alkaline reaction, and is more caustic than lime, but less so than the alkalis. Strontia does not occur native, but is prepared by igniting the carbonate, the mineral strontianite.

strontian (stron'shi-an), n. and a. [κ strontium + -an.] I. n. Native strontium carbonate; strontianite; hence, also, strontia, and sometimes strontium. [Indefinite and rare.]

II. a. Pertaining to or containing strontia or strontium. Strontian yellow, a color formed by adding potassium chromate to a solution of a strontium salt.

strontianiferous (stron'shi-a-nif'e-rus), a. [κ strontian + -iferous.] Containing strontian. Philos. Mag., 5th ser., XXV, 238.

strontianite (stron'shi-an-īt), n. [κ strontian + -ite.] Native strontium carbonate, a mineral that occurs massive, fibrous, stellated, and rarely in orthorhombic crystals resembling those of aragonite in form. It varies in color from white to yellow and pale green. It was first discovered in the lead-mines of Strontian, in Argyllshire, Scotland.

strontic (stron'tik), a. [κ strontia + -ic.] Same as strontianite.

strontites (stron-ti'tēz), n. [NL., < strontium + -ites.] Same as strontia; so named by Dr. Hope, who first obtained this earth from strontianite, or native carbonate of strontium.

strontitic (stron-tit'ik), a. [κ NL. strontites + -ic.] Pertaining to or derived from strontia or strontium.

strontium (stron'shi-nm), n. [NL., < Strontian, in Argyllshire, Scotland.] Chemical symbol, Sr; atomic weight, 87.68; specific gravity, 2.54. A dark-yellow metal, less lustrous than barium, malleable, and fusible at a red heat. When heated in air, it burns with a bright flame to the oxid. It decomposes water at ordinary temperatures, evolving hydrogen, and uniting with the oxygen of the water to form the oxid strontia. It does not occur native. The chief strontium minerals are the carbonate (strontianite) and the sulphate (celestine). Strontium also occurs as a silicate in the mineral brewsterite. It has been detected in the waters of various mineral springs, as well as in sea-water, and in the ashes of some marine plants. Salts of strontium are chiefly used in pyrotechny, imparting an intense red color to flames.

strookt (strük). An old preterit of strike. Pope, Hiad, xxi, 498.

stroot (strüt), v. An obsolete or dialectal form of strut.

strop (strop), n. [The older and more correct form of strap; < ME. strop, strobe, < AS. stropp (= D. strop, etc.), < L. strappus, strappus, a strap; see strap.] 1. Same as strap. Specifically—2. A strap or strip of leather, thick canvas, or other flexible material, suitably prepared for smoothing the edge of a razor drawn over it while it is attached by one end and held in the hand by the other; hence also, by extension, a two-sided or four-sided piece of wood, with a handle and a casing, having strips of leather of differing surfaces affixed to two sides, and the two other sides, when (as more commonly) present, covered with coarser and finer emery or other abrasive powder for use in honing a razor.—3. Naut., same as strap, 1 (a).—4. In rope-making, a rope with an eye at each end, used in twisting strands.

strop (strop), v. t.; pret. and pp. stropped, ppr. stropping. [κ strop, n.] To sharpen on or as if on a strop or strap.

Scarce are the gray-haired sires who strop their razors on the family Bible, and doze in the chimney-corner. C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 2.

strobe (ströp), n. A dialectal form of strap. strophanthin (strö-fan'thin), n. [κ Strophanthus + -in.] An active poisonous principle, said to be neither an alkaloid nor a glucoside, found in the seeds of Strophanthus hispidus.

Strophanthus (strö-fan'thus), n. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1801), so called from the twisted and tailed lobes of the corolla; < Gr. στροφός, a twisted band, a cord (< στρέφειν, turn, twist), + ἄθος, flower.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Apocynaceae, tribe Echitideae, and subtribe Nerieae. It is characterized by a glandular calyx; a funnel-shaped corolla with five tailed lobes and an ample throat, bearing about ten scales within, and including the long taper-pointed anthers; and an ovary of two distinct carpels, ripening into divergent follicles with seeds tailed at one end and extended at the other into a long plumose beak. There are about 20 species, natives of Asia and tropical Africa, with one, S. Capensis, in South Africa. They are small trees or shrubs or often climbers, either smooth or hairy, with opposite feather-veined leaves, and terminal cymes of handsome flowers which are either white, yellowish, orange, red, or purple. The seeds of several species or varieties in Africa yield arrow-poison: in western Africa S. hispidus affords the incé poison (see poison of Pakoman, under poison), in eastern Africa S. Kombe the Kombe poison, and some species between Zanzibar and Somali-land the wauka poison. But S. Kombe is suspected to be a variety of S. hispidus, and the third species is probably the same. Since 1878 these seeds have excited great medical interest as a medium for the treatment of heart-disease, but their investigation is not complete. (See strophanthin.) Several species are cultivated under the name twisted-flower.

strophe (strö'fō), n. [κ NL. strophe, < L. strophē, < Gr. στροφή, a turning round, a recurring metrical system, the movement of a chorus while turning in one direction in the dance, the accompanying rhythmical (musical and metrical) composition, < στρέφειν, turn, twist.] 1. In anc. pros.: (a) A system the metrical form of which is repeated once or oftener in the course of a poem; also, a stanza in modern poetry. In a narrower sense—(b) The former of two metrical corresponding systems, as distinguished from the latter or antistrophe. (c) The fourth part of the parabasis and first part of the epirrhematic syzygy. It is hymnic in character, as opposed to the septic tone of the epirrhema.—2. In bot., one of the spirals formed in the development of leaves. [Rare or obsolete.]—Asclepiadean strophe. See Asclepiadean.

strophic (strof'ik), a. [κ (Gr. στροφικός, of or pertaining to a strophe, < στροφή, a strophe; see strophe.)] Of or pertaining to a strophe or strophes; constituting strophes; consisting of strophes: as, strophic composition; strophic poems.

strophical (strof'i-kal), a. [κ strophic + -al.] Same as strophic. Athenæum, No. 3300, p. 123.

strophiolate (strof'i-ō-lāt), a. [κ strophiole + -ate.] In bot., bearing or furnished with a strophiole or something that resembles it.

strophiolated (strof'i-ō-lāt-ed), a. [κ strophiolate + -ed.] Same as strophiolate.

strophiole (strof'i-ōl), n. [κ L. strophium, a small wreath or chaplet, dim. of strophium, < Gr. στροφίον, a band, a breast-band, dim. of στροφή, a twisted band, a braid, a cord, < στρέφειν, twist, turn.] In bot., an appendage produced from the hilum of certain seeds, of the same origin as a true aril, but less developed. Sometimes used interchangeably with caruncle, from which it clearly differs.

strophoid (strof'oid), n. [κ F. strophoide, < Gr. στροφή, a twisted band, a cord.] 1. A nodal plane cubic curve which is the locus of a focus of a conic whose directrix and two tangents are given.—2. A curve which is the locus of intersections of two lines rotating uniformly with commensurable velocities. See also substrophoid.—Right strophoid, a strophoid symmetrical with respect to the line through the two centers of rotation.

Strophostyles (strof'ō-sī'lēz), n. [NL. (Millott, 1824), so called from the incurved style; < (Gr. στροφή, a twisted band, a cord, + στυλος, a pillar.)] A genus of leguminous plants, of the tribe Phaseoleae. It is distinguished from the related genus Phaseolus, in which it was formerly included, by capitate flowers with the keel and included style and stamens incurved but not spirally coiled, and followed by a commonly terete and straight pod with its scurfy or smooth seeds quadrate or oblong, not reniform. About 17 species have been described, but some of them insufficiently, natives largely of North America, including Mexico and the West Indies, also occurring in Peru, India, and China. They are tangled vines with prostrate or climbing stems, usually retroscly hairy, bearing pinnate leaves of three leaflets, and usually long-stalked purplish clusters of a few sessile flowers. Two species, known as wild bean, both called Phaseolus helvolus by various authors, extend along the Atlantic coast northward to Long Island or further, of which S. pedunculatus (Phaseolus umbellatus) is a slender twiner of sandy fields, and S. angulosa (P. diversifolius) a commonly trailing plant extending west to Minnesota, and to Missouri, where on river-bottoms a high-climbing variety sometimes reaches 30 feet. Another species, S. pauciflorus, occurs in the southern and western United States. See Phaseolus.

strophulus (strof'ū-lus), n. [NL., dim. of strophus*, < Gr. στροφή, a twisted band, a cord; see strophiole.] A papular eruption upon the skin, peculiar to infants, exhibiting a variety of forms, known popularly as red-gum, white-gum, tooth-rash, etc.

strosser† (stros'ēr), n. [A var. of trossers, which is a variant of trousers; see trossers.] Same as trossers.

You rode like a kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait strossers. Shak., Ilen, V, iii, 7, 57.

Sets his son a-horseback in cloth-of-gold breeche, while he himself goes to the devil a-foot in a pair of old strossers! Middleton, No Wit Like a Woman, ii, 1.

stroud¹ (stroud), n. [Also strowd; origin obscure.] A senseless or silly song. Jamieson. [Scotch.]

stroud² (stroud), n. [Also strowd; origin obscure.] 1. Same as strowing.—2. A blanket made of strounding.

Be pleased to give to the son of the Piankasha kung these two strowds to clothe him.

Journal of Capt. Treat (1752), p. 52. (Bartlett.)

strouing (strou'ing), n. [κ *stroud*¹ + -ing.] Coarse warm cloth; a kind of blanketing used in trading with North American Indians.

Hazelnuts enough to barter at the nearest store for a few yards of blue strouing such as the Indians use.

The Century, XXXIII, 33.

stroup (stroup), n. [Also strop; < ME. stroupe, stroupe, < Sw. strupe, the throat, gullet, = Norw. strupe, the throat, gullet, an orifice, = Dan. strube, the throat, gullet; cf. Icel. strjúpi, the trunk of the human body with the head cut off.] 1. The trachea or windpipe. [Obsolete and prov. Eng.]

He smote him in the helm, bakward he bare his stroupe. Langtoft's Chronicle, p. 190. (Halliwel.)

2. A spout (of a tea-kettle, etc.). [Scotch.]

strout, v. An obsolete or provincial variant of *strut*¹. Bacon.

strove (ströv). Preterit of strove.

strow (strö), v. t.; pret. strowed, pp. strowed or strown, ppr. strowing. An archaic form of strew.

strowt, a. [Cf. strow, strew.] Loose; scattered. [Rare and dubious.]

Nay, where the grass,
Too strow for fodder, and too rank for food,
Would generate more fatal maladies.
Lady Alimony, D 4 b. (Nares.)

strowd¹ (stroud), n. See *stroud*¹.

strowd², n. See *stroud*².

strowlt, v. i. An old spelling of stroll.

strown (strön). A past participle of strow.

strowpet, n. See stroup.

stroyt, v. t. [ME. stroyen, by apheresis from destroyen; see destroy.] To destroy. Middleton.

stroyt, n. [ME. < stroy, v.] Destruction.

stroyall† (stro'i'äl), n. [κ stroy, v., + obj. all.] One who destroys or wastes recklessly; a waster.

A giddy brain master, and stroyall his knave, Brings ruling to ruin, and throft to her grave.
Tusser, Good Husbandly Lessons.

stroyer† (stro'i'ēr), n. [κ ME. stroyere, by apheresis from destroyer.] A destroyer.

The drake, stroyere of his owene kynde.
Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 360.

stroyl, n. See stroll.

Strophoid.

strub (strub), v. t. and i.; pret. and pp. strubbed, ppr. strubbing. [A dial. var. of *strup, var. of strip.] To rob, or practise robbery; strip of something: as, to strub a bird's nest. [Old and prov. Eng.]

Robert Coad . . . was convicted of "being a night-walker, and pilfering and inhabiting in the night-time." A. H. A. Hamilton, Quarter Sessions, p. 220.

struck (struk). Preterit and past participle of strike.

strucken (struk'n). An old or dialectal past participle of strike.

structural (struk'tū-ral), a. [structure + -al.] 1. Of or pertaining to structure; constructional.

The structural differences which separate Man from the Gorilla and Chimpanzee. Huxley, Man's Place in Nature, p. 123.

2. Concerned with structure or construction; constructive. [Rare.]

Chaucer . . . had a structural faculty which distinguishes him from all other English poets, his contemporaries. Lovell, Study Widdows, p. 254.

3. In biol.: (a) Of or pertaining to structure; morphological: as, structural characters; structural peculiarities. (b) Possessing or characterized by structure; structured; organized. —Structural botany. See botany (a). —Structural disease, a disease involving visible (gross or microscopic) changes in the tissues affected. Also called organic and contrasted with functional disease. —Structural geology, that branch of geology which has to do with the position and arrangement of the materials composing the crust of the earth, from the point of view of their composition, mode of aggregation, and relations of position, as determined by physical conditions, without special reference to paleontological characters. Nearly the same as stratigraphical geology, or stratigraphy. Also called geotectonic geology.

structuralization (struk'tū-ral-i-zā'shon), n. [structuralize + -ation.] A making or keeping structural; the act of bringing into or maintaining in structural form or relation. Also spelled structuralisation. [Rare.]

There is the materialisation of motives as the basis of future function, the structuralisation of simple function as the step of an advance to a higher function. Maudsley, Body and Will, p. 30.

structurally (struk'tū-ral-i), adv. In a structural manner; with regard to structure.

structure (struk'tūr), n. [F. structure = Sp. estructura = It. struttura, < L. structura, a fitting together, adjustment, building, erection, a building, edifice, structure, < struere, pp. structus, pile up, arrange, assemble, build. Cf. construct, instruct, destroy, etc.] 1. The act of building or constructing; a building up; edification. [Obsolete or rare.]

This doon, the sydes make up with structure, And footes VIII it hold in latitude. Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 176.

His son builds on, and never is content Till the last farthing is in structure spent. J. Dryden, Jr., tr. of Juvenal's Satires, xiv. 116.

2. That which is built or constructed; an edifice or a building of any kind; in the widest sense, any production or piece of work artificially built up, or composed of parts joined together in some definite manner; any construction.

There stands a structure of majestic frame. Pope, R. of the L., iii. 3.

The vaulted polygonal chapter-house is a structure peculiar to England. C. H. Moore, Gothic Architecture, p. 168.

3. An organic form; the combination of parts in any natural production; an organization of parts or elements.

A structure which has been developed through long-continued selection. Darwin, Origin of Species, p. 131.

There can be no knowledge of function without a knowledge of some structure as performing function. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 205.

4. Mode of building, construction, or organization; arrangement of parts, elements, or constituents; form; make; used of both natural and artificial productions.

Thy House, whose stately Structure so much cost. Congreve, Imit. of Horace, II. xiv. 3.

The antistrophic structure [of Eschylus's odes] being perhaps a concession to fashion. Quarterly Rev., CLXII. 174.

Specifically — (a) In biol., manner or mode of organization; construction and arrangement of tissues, parts, or organs as components of a whole organism; structural or organic morphology; organization: as, animal or vegetable structure; the structure of an animal or a plant; the structure of the brain, of a coral, etc.

Though structure up to a certain point [in the animal organism] is requisite for growth, structure beyond that point impedes growth. H. Spencer, Study of Sociol., p. 64.

(b) In geol., various characteristic features, considered collectively, of rocks and of rock-forming minerals, which features differ much in their nature and origin. Stratification, jointing, cleavage, and foliation are among the principal structural peculiarities of rock-masses, which are chiefly to be studied in the field. Some geologists would limit the term structure to petrographic phenomena of this kind, which have been designated as macroscopic rock-structures. The minuter structural details of rocks and their components are in part included under the name structure, and in part under that of texture. Thus, a rock may have a crystalline, granular, glassy, etc., texture, etc., structure, or a flinty, earthy, shaly, etc., texture. But the usages of geologists differ in the employment of terms of this kind, and there can be no precise limit drawn separating textures from structures. In general, however, the structural peculiarities of a rock are those which specially interest the geologist; the textural belong more properly to the mineralogist. Microstructures, or those details of structure belonging to the constituents of rocks which are in general not to be satisfactorily studied without the aid of the microscope, are peculiarly the field of observation of the lithologist. For macrostructures, see breccia, cleat, cleavage, concretionary, fragmentary, foliation, joint, schist, slate, and slaty, and stratification; for microstructures and textures, see amphibolitic, cryptocrystalline, crystalline, feldsphe, globulite, granuloid, granophyre and granophyre, holocrystalline, massive, microcrystalline, microolith and micro-lithic, ocellar, permatitic, perlitic, porphyritic, scortaceous, spherulitic, trachytic, vesicular, vitreous, and vitrophyre.

Viewed broadly, there are two leading types of structure among rocks — crystalline or massive, and fragmental.

A. Geikie, in Encyc. Brit., X. 229.

Banded, columnar, concentric, epidermal, fibrous, fluidal structure. See the adjectives. —Centric structure. See ocellar structure, under ocellar. —Flow-and-plunge structure. See flow. —Fluxion-structure. Same as fluidal structure. —Globulitic structure, a structure characterized by the predominance of those minute drop-like bodies called by Vogel'sang globulites, which are the earliest and simplest forms of the devitrification process in a glassy component of a rock. —Granitoid structure, the structure of granite; a holocrystalline structure. —Tabular structure. See tabular.

structure (struk'tūr), v. t.; pret. and pp. structured, ppr. structuring. [structure, n.] To form into a structure; organize the parts or elements of in structural form. [Rare.]

What degree of likeness can we find between a man and a mountain? . . . the one has little internal structure, and that irregular, the other is elaborately structured internally in a definite way. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 186.

structureless (struk'tūr-less), a. [structure + -less.] Without structure; devoid of distinct parts; unorganized; unformed; hence, lacking arrangement; informal; specifically, in biol., having no distinction of parts or organs; not histologically differentiated; not forming or formed into a tissue; homogeneous; amorphous.

structurally (struk'tūr-li), adv. [structure + -ly.] In structure or formation; by construction. [Rare.]

These aggregates of the lowest order, each formed of physiological units united into a group that is structurally single. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 181.

structurist (struk'tūr-ist), n. [structure + -ist.] One who makes structures; a builder. [Rare.]

struggle (strug'l), v. i.; pret. and pp. struggled, ppr. struggling. [Early mod. E. also strogell, strogell; < ME. struglen, stroglen, strogelen; perhaps a weakened form of strokelen, which may be a var. of strokelen*, the supposed ME. orig. of E. stroll, < MD. strayckelen, D. struikelen = LG. strükeln = MHG. strücheln, G. straucheln, stumble; see stroll.] To put forth violent effort, as in an emergency or as a result of intense excitement; act or strive strenuously against some antagonistic force or influence; be engaged in an earnest effort or conflict; labor or contend urgently, as for some object; used chiefly of persons, but also, figuratively, of things.

Everie Merchant, viewing their limbs and wounds, caused other slaves to struggle with them, to trie their strength. Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 29.

How nature and his honour struggle in him! Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, ii. 5.

A brave man struggling in the storms of fate, And greatly falling with a fallow state! Addison, Cato, Irol.

So saying, he took the boy, that cried aloud And struggled hard. Tennyson, Dora.

The light struggled in through windows of oiled paper, but they read the word of God by it. Emerson, Hist. Discourse at Concord.

So on and on I struggled, thro' the thick bushes and over logs. Grace Greenwood, Recollections of Childhood, p. 28.

=Syn. Strive, etc. (see attempt); toil.

struggle (strug'l), n. [struggle, v.] A violent effort; a strenuous or straining exertion; a strenuous endeavor to accomplish, avoid, or escape something; a contest with some opposing force: as, a struggle to get free; the struggle of death; a struggle with poverty.

With great hurry and struggle [he] endeavoured to clap the cover on again. Bacon, Physical Fables, ii.

The long and fierce struggle between the Crown and the Barons had terminated. Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

=Syn. Endeavor, Effort, Exertion, Pains, Labor, Struggle. See strife. The above are in the order of strength.

struggler (strug'lér), n. [struggle + -er.] One who or that which struggles; one who strives or contends with violent effort.

struldrug (strul'drug), n. [A made name.] In Swift's "Gulliver's Travels" ("Voyage to Laputa"), one of a small class of immortals or deathless persons in "Luggnagg," born with an indicative sign in the forehead, who after fourscore live on at public expense in the imbecility of extreme age.

strull (strul), n. [Origin obscure; cf. E. dial. stroil, strength, agility; cf. strut, a brace.] A bar so placed as to resist weight. Loudon.

strum (strum), v.; pret. and pp. strummed, ppr. strumming. [Prob. a var. of thrum with intensive prefix s (as in splash, plash, etc.): see thrum, drum.] I. intrans. To play unskillfully, or in a vulgar, noisy manner, on a stringed musical instrument of the lute or harp kind, as a guitar, banjo, or zither, or (by extension) on a pianoforte; thrum.

"Ah, there is Fred beginning to strum! I must go and hinder him from jarring all your nerves," said Rosamond. . . . Fred, having opened the piano, . . . was parenthetically performing "Cherry Ripe!" with one hand. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xvi.

II. trans. 1. To play upon carelessly or unskillfully, as a stringed instrument; produce by rough manipulation of musical chords. — 2. To produce a specified effect upon by strumming on a musical instrument.

To be stuck down to an old spinet to strum my father to sleep. Sheridan, School for Scandal, ii. 1.

strum (strum), n. [strum, v.] A strumming; a careless or discordant performance on a stringed instrument.

We heard the occasional strum of a guitar. The Century, XXXIX. 487.

struma (strö'mä), n.; pl. strumæ (-më). [NL., < L. struma, a scrofulous tumor, < struere, pile up, build; see structure.] 1. In pathol.: (a) Scrofula. (b) Goiter. — 2. In bot., a cushion-like swelling or dilatation of or on an organ, as that at the extremity of the petiole of many leaves, or at one side of the base of the capsule in many mosses.

strumatic (strö-mat'ik), a. [LL. strumaticus, pertaining to struma, < L. struma, struma; see struma.] Same as strumose.

strumiferous (strö-mif'e-rus), a. [NL. struma, q. v., + L. ferre = E. bear.] In bot., bearing strumæ; strumose.

strumiform (strö-mi-förm), a. [NL. struma + L. forma, form.] In bot., having the form or appearance of a struma.

strummer (strum'ér), n. [strum + -er.] One who strums; a careless or unskillful player on a stringed instrument. W. Black, House-boat, vi.

strumose, strumous (strö'mös, -mus), a. [= OF. strumoseus, estrumeus, < L. strumosus, characterized by the presence of struma, or of strumæ, < struma, struma; see struma.] 1. Scrofulous; of, pertaining to, resembling, or affected with struma. — 2. In bot., bearing strumæ.

strumousness (strö'mus-nes), n. The state or character of being strumose or strumous.

strumpet (strum'pet), n. [ME. strumpet, strompet, strumpet; origin unknown; perhaps orig. stropete* or strupete*, < OF. strupete*, vernacularly struppee*, < L. stuprata, fem. pp. of stuprare, debauch; cf. OF. strupe, stupre, debauchery, concubinage, < L. stuprare, debauchery, > stuprare (> It. stuprare, stuprare = Sp. estrupear = Sp. Pg. estuprar), debauch; cf. Gr. στροπῆσις, maltreat (see stuprum, stuprate). Cf. Ir. Gael. striopach, strumpet. The E. dial. strum, strumpet, is prob. an abbr. of strumpet.] A prostitute; a harlot; a bold, lascivious woman; also used adjectively.

Shameless strumpets, whose vncurbed swing Many poore soles vnto confusion bring. Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 88.

The scarfed bark puts from her native bay, Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind. Shak., M. of V., ii. 6. 16.

strumpet (strum'pet), v. t. [strumpet, n.] 1. To make a strumpet of; bring to the condition of a strumpet. Shak., C. of E., ii. 2. 146. [Rare.] — 2. To call or treat as a strumpet; give an ill name to; slander scurrilously.

With his untrue reports strumpet your fame. Massinger.

strumstrum (strum'strum), n. [Imitative reduplication of strum. Cf. tom-tom.] A rude musical instrument with strings. See the quotation.

The Strumstrum is made somewhat like a Cittern; most of those that the Indians use are made of a large board cut in the midst, and a thin board laid over the hollow, and which is fastened to the sides; this serves for the belly, over which the strings are placed. Dampier, Voyages, I, 127.

strumulose (strū'mū-lōs), a. [Dim. of strumose.] In bot., furnished with a small struma.

strung (strung). Preterit and past participle of string.

strunt¹ (strunt), v. i. [Prob. a nasalized form of strut.] To walk sturdily; walk with state; strut. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

strunt² (strunt), n. [Origin obscure.] A bird's tail; also, the tail of any animal. Hallivell. [North. Eng.]

strunt³ (strunt), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. Spirituous liquor, or a drink partly consisting of such liquor.

Syne wi' a social glass o' strunt
They parted aff careerin'.

Burns, Halloween.

2. A sullen fit; a pet. Ramsay.
[Scotch in both uses.]

strut¹ (strut), v.; pret. and pp. strutted, ppr. strutting. [Early mod. E. or dial. also strout, stroot; < ME. strouten, stroeten, struten, < Dan. strutte, strut, = Sw. strutta, walk with a jolting step, = MHG. G. strotzen, swell, strut; cf. MHG. strüz, G. strauss, a fight, contention, MHG. striuzen, contend, struggle. See strut², n., and cf. strunt¹.] 1. To swell; protuberate; bulge or spread out.

Cruel was his heer and as the gold it shoon,
And strutted as a fanne, large and brode.

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 129.

The mizens strooted with the gale.

Chapman, Iliad, l. 364.

The bellying canvas strutted with the gale. Dryden.

2. To stand or walk stiffly with the tail erect and spread, as the peacock, the turkey, and various other birds. It is characteristic of the male in the breeding-season. See showing-off, 2, and ents under peafowl and turkey.

3. To walk with a pompous gait and erect head, as from pride or affected dignity.

Does he not hold up his head, . . . and strut in his gait?
Shak., M. W. of W., l. 4. 31.

Meanly to sneak out of difficulties into which they had proudly strutted.
Burke, American Taxation.

II.† trans. 1. To cause to swell; enlarge; give more importance to.

I will make a brief list of the particulars themselves in an historical truth noways strutted nor made greater by language.
Bacon, War with Spain.

2. To protrude; cause to bulge.

Or else [the lands] lifting vp themselves in Hills, knitting their frowed brows, and strouting out their goggle eyes to watch their treasure, which they keep imprisoned in their stonie walls.
Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 829.

strut¹ (strut), n. [< ME. strut, strout, strut; see strut¹, v.] 1. A proud step or walk, with the head erect; affected dignity in walking.

Stynst of thy strut & fyne to fyte, & sech hys blythe ful sweste & swythe.

Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), l. 353.

2. Stubbornness; obstinacy. [Prov. Eng.]—
3†. Dispute; contention; strife. Havelok, l. 1039.

strut¹, p. a. [Contr. pp. of strut¹, v.] Swelling out; protuberant; bulging.

He beginneth now to return with his belly strut and full.

Holland, tr. of Ammianus Marcellinus, p. 213. (Trench.)

strut² (strut), n. [Cf. Icel. strútr, a hood jutting out like a horn, = Norw. strut, a spout, nozzle, = Sw. strut, a paper cornet; cf. LG. strutl, stiff, rigid; from the root of strut¹; see strut¹, v.] A brace or support for the reception of direct thrust, pressure, or weight in construction; any piece of wood or iron, or other member of a structure, designed to support a part or parts by pressure in the direction of its length. Struts may be either upright, diagonal, or horizontal. The struts of a roof extend obliquely from a rafter to a king post or queen-post. Diagonal struts are also used between joists, in gates, etc. Also called stretching-piece. See ents under roof, queen-post, and floor.

strut² (strut), v. t.; pret. and pp. strutted, ppr. strutting. [< strut², n.] To brace or support by a strut or struts, in construction of any kind; hold in place or strengthen by an upright, diagonal, or transverse support.

strut-beam† (strut'bēm), n. A collar-beam.

struthian (strō'thi-ān), a. [< Struthio + -an.]

Same as struthious.

Struthidea (strō'thid'ē-ā), n. [NL. (J. Gould, 1836), < Gr. στρουθός, a small bird, a sparrow, + είδος, form.] An Australian genus of jay-like birds, belonging to the family Corvidæ, having the wings short, the tail moderately long and graduated, the nostrils exposed, and the bill stout and conical. The only species is S. cinerea, 12 inches long, gray with black bill, feet, and tail, and white eyes. Also called Brachystoma and Brachyprorus.

Struthidea cinerea.

struthiiform (strō'thi-i-fōrm), a. Same as struthioniform.

Struthio (strō'thi-ō), n. [NL. (Brisson, 1760; Linnæus, 1766), < L. struthio, < Gr. στρουθίον, the ostrich, < στρουθός, a sparrow, ὄμις, a flock, 'the big sparrow,' the ostrich; see ostrich.] The only genus of Struthionidæ, having but two toes, and so many other important structural characters that in some systems it is made the sole representative of an order Struthionæ. S. camelus, the African ostrich, is the only established species; there are nominally two others, S. australis of South Africa, and S. molybdophanes of Somali-land. The genus formerly included some other struthious birds, as the American ostriches, now called Rhea. See ent under ostrich.

Struthiocamelus (strō'thi-ō-ka-mē'lus), n. [NL., < L. struthiocamelus, for struthocamelus*. < Gr. στρουθόκαμηλος, the ostrich, < στρουθός, sparrow, + κάμηλος, camel; see camel.] Same as Struthio.

struthioid (strō'thi-oid), a. [< Gr. στρουθίον, the ostrich, < είδος, form.] Ostrich-like; struthious to any extent; especially, struthious in the narrowest sense.

Struthiolaria (strō'thi-ō-lā'ri-ā), n. [NL. (Lamarck, 1812).] In conch., a genus of gastropods, typical of the family Struthiolariidæ; so called because the lip of the shell has been compared to the foot of an ostrich.

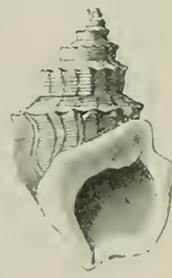

Strutholariidæ (strō'thi-ō-lā-rī-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Struthiolaria + -idæ.] A family of tænioglossate gastropods, typified by the genus Struthiolaria. The animal has slender tentacles with eyes at their external bases, an oval foot, and a characteristic dentition (the central tooth being squarish, the lateral wide, five marginal teeth filiform, and the supplementary ones very narrow). The shell is bucciniform with oval subcanaliculate aperture. The living species are confined to the southern Pacific.

struthiarioid (strō'thi-ō-lā'ri-oid), a. Of, or having characteristics of, the Struthiariidæ.

Struthionæ (strō'thi-ō-nēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Struthio, q. v.] 1. The ostriches in a broad sense; the struthious or rufite birds. See Ratite, and ents under cassowary, Dromæus, emu, ostrich, and Rhea.—2. An ordinal group restricted to the genus Struthio. A. Newton.

Struthionidæ (strō'thi-on'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Struthio(n.) + -idæ.] The ostrich family, variously restricted. (a) Containing the genera Struthio, Rhea, Casuarina, and Dromæus, and divided into Struthioninæ and Casuarinæ; same as Struthionæ, 1. (b) Containing the genera Struthio and Rhea. Same as Struthionæ, (a). (c) Containing only the genus Struthio, or the two-tailed African ostriches alone. The differences between these ostriches and all other birds is about as great as those usually held to characterize orders in ornithology. The digits are only two, the hallux and inner digit being aborted, leaving the third and fourth digits with the usual ratio of phalanges (4, 5), and there are corresponding modifications of the lower end of the metatarsus. The leg-bones are greatly elongated, and there is a pubic symphysis. The fore limb is reduced, with the antebra-chium not half so long as the humerus; and the manus has three digits, two of which bear claws. The wings are useless for flight. There are thirty five precaudal vertebrae, and the bodies of the sacral vertebrae ankylose with the fore ends of the pelves and ischia. The sternum is doubly notched on each side behind. There are important cranial and especially palatal characters. The plumage is not aftershafted.

Struthiolaria straminea.

struthioniform (strō'thi-on'i-fōrm), a. [Also irreg. struthiiform; < NL. struthioniformis, < L. struthio(n.) + ostrich, + forma, form.] Resembling an ostrich in the sense of being dromæognathous, as a tinamou; or of pertaining to the Struthioniformes.

Struthioniformes (strō'thi-on-i-fōr'mēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of struthioniformis; see struthioniform.] In ornith., in Sundevall's system of classification, a cohort of Gallinæ, composed of the South American tinamous, or Crypturi, and coextensive with the Dromæognathæ of Huxley; so called from their resemblance in some respects (notably palatal structure) to struthious birds.

Struthioninæ (strō'thi-ō-nī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Struthio(n.) + -inæ.] The ostriches, variously restricted. (a) A subfamily of Struthionidæ (a), containing the genera Struthio and Rhea, or the African and American ostriches, thence contrasted with Casuarinæ, the casuarines and emus. (b) A subfamily of Struthionidæ (b); contrasted with Rheinae. (c) The only subfamily of Struthionidæ (c), containing them with.

struthionine (strō'thi-ō-nīn), a. [< NL. struthioninus, < L. struthio(n.) + -inus.] Resembling or related to an ostrich more or less closely; in a narrow sense, of or pertaining to the Struthioninæ; in a wide sense, struthious; rare.

struthious (strō'thi-ūs), a. [< NL. Struthio + -ous.] Ostrich-like; resembling or related to the ostriches; struthiiform; rare.

strutter (strut'tēr), n. [< strut¹ + -er.] One who struts; a pompous fellow. Imp. Dict.

strutting (strut'ting), n. [Verbal n. of strut², v.] In carp., diagonal braces between joists, to prevent side deflection.

strutting-beam† (strut'ting-bēm), n. A collar-beam.

struttingly (strut'ting-li), adv. In a strutting manner; with a proud step; boastingly.

strutting-piece (strut'ting-pēs), n. Same as bridging.

struvite (strō'tvit), n. [Named after Struve, a Russian statesman.] A hydrous phosphate of ammonium and magnesium, often occurring in connection with guano-deposits. It is found in orthorhombic crystals, often hemimorphic, and has a white or pale-yellow color and vitreous luster.

struyt, v. t. A Middle English form of stroy.

stry (strī), v. t.; pret. and pp. stried, ppr. strying. An obsolete or dialectal form of stroy.

strychnia (strik'nī-ā), n. [NL., < Strychnos, q. v.] Same as strychnine.

strychnic (strik'nik), a. [< NL. strychnia + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, obtained from, or including strychnine; as, strychnic acid.

strychnina (strik'nī-nā), n. A form of strychnia.

strychnine, strychnin (strik'nin), n. [< NL. Strychnos + *-ine*², *-in*².] A vegetable alkaloid (C₂₁H₂₂N₂O₂), the sole active principle of Strychnos Tieuté, the most active of the Java poisons, and one of the active principles of S. Ignatii, S. Nux-vomica, S. colubrina, etc. It is usually obtained from the seeds of S. Nux-vomica. It is colorless, inodorous, crystalline, unalterable by exposure to the air, and extremely bitter. It is little soluble, requiring 7,000 parts of water for solution. It dissolves in hot alcohol, although sparingly, if the alcohol be pure and not diluted. It forms crystallizable salts, which are intensely bitter. Strychnine and its salts, especially the latter from their solubility, are most energetic poisons. They produce tetanic spasms, but are used in medicine especially in conditions of exhaustion and certain forms of paralysis. See ent under nux vomica.—Hall's solution of strychnine. See solution.

strychninism (strik'nī-nizm), n. [< strychnine + -ism.] The condition produced by an excessive dose of strychnine.

strychnism (strik'nizm), n. [< strychnia + -ism.] The hyperexcitable state of the spinal cord produced by strychnine.

strychnized (strik'nīzid), a. Brought under the influence of strychnine.

Strychnos (strik'nos), n. [NL. (Linnæus, 1737), < L. strychnos, < Gr. στρίχνος or στρίχνος, a plant of the nightshade kind.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, of the order Loganiaceæ and tribe Euloganiæ, type of the subtribe Struchneæ. It is characterized by flowers with valvate corolla-lobes, and a usually two-celled ovary which becomes in fruit an indehiscent berry, commonly globose and pulpy with a hardened rind. About 65 species have been described, widely scattered through tropical regions. They are trees or shrubs, often vines climbing high by stiff hooked and recurved tendrils, in a few species armed with straight spines. They have opposite membranous or coriaceous three- to five-nerved leaves, and small or rather long salver-shaped flowers in terminal or axillary cymes, usually white and densely aggregated. Many species yield powerful poisons, sometimes of great medicinal value. For species yielding strychnine, see strychnine; for S. Nux-vomica, see also nuxvomica, brucine, and Angostura bark (under bark); for S. Tielei, chettik; for S. colubrina, snakewood; for S. Ignatii, St. Ignatius' beans, under bean. For S. toxifera, see curari; for S. Pseudo-quina, copalche, 2; for S. potatorum (also called water-filter nut), see clearing-nut. The root of West African species is used in ordeals. Although the seeds are usually poisonous, the fruit of several species, as in India of S. potatorum, in Java of S. Tielei, and in Egypt and Senegal of S. innocua, contains a pulp which is an article of food. S. pilosperma, the Queensland strychnine-tree, is an evergreen shrubby climber, sometimes cultivated.

stryne, v. t. An obsolete variant of strain.
stuard, stuart, n. Old spellings of steward.
Stuartia (stj-ür'ti-ä), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1753), named after John Stuart, Marquis of Bute, a patron of botany.] 1. A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Ternstramiaceae and tribe Gordoniaceae. It is characterized by flowers with nearly equal sepals, and an ovary which contains two ascending ovules in each of its five cells, and ripens into a loculicidal and somewhat woody capsule with lenticular seeds, little albumen, and a straight embryo with a slender inferior radicle. There are 6 species, natives of North America and Japan. They are shrubs with membranous deciduous leaves, and short-peduncled flowers solitary in the axils, often large and showy, each usually of five imbricated petals, and numerous stamens with versatile anthers. Two handsome white-flowered species, from the mountains of Virginia, Kentucky, and southward, are sometimes cultivated under the name of stuartia—S. virginica with a single style, and S. pentagyna with five styles and larger leaves. S. Pseudo-Camelia, from Japan, is also in cultivation in ornamental grounds.
 2. [l. e.] A shrub of this genus.

stub (stub), n. [ME. stub, stubbe, AS. styb = D. stobbe = LG. stubbe = Icel. stubbi, stobbi, also stubb = Norw. stubbe, stubb = Sw. stubbe, stubb = Dan. stub, a stump, stub. Cf. Gael. stob, a stake, stub, Lith. stebas, an upright pillar, mast, L. stipes, a post, Gr. στῆπιος, a stump, Skt. stumbha, a post, √ stambh, make firm, set fast. Cf. stump and stubble.] 1. The end of a fallen tree, shrub, or plant remaining in the ground; a stump; now, especially, a short stump or projecting root of inconspicuous size. Here stands a drie stub of some tree, a cubite from the ground. Chapman, Iliad, xxiii. 305.
 2. A projection like a stump; a piece or part of something sticking out; as, a dog with only a stub of a tail; the stub of a broken tooth.
 The horn [of the buffalo] at three months is about 1 inch in length, and is a mere little black stub.
W. T. Hornaday, Smithsonian Report (1887), ii. 37.
 3. A short remaining piece of something; a terminal remnant; as, the stub of a pencil or of a cigar; a stub of candle.—4. A worn horseshoe-nail; a stub-nail; specifically, in the plural, nails, or bits of iron of the quality of old horseshoe-nails, used as material for gun-barrels or other articles requiring great toughness.
 Every blacksmith's shop rung with the rhythmic clang of busy hammers, beating out old iron, such as horse-shoes, nails, or stubs, into the great harpoons.
Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, xvi.

5. Something truncated, resembling a small stump, or constituting a terminal remnant. (a) A blunt-pointed pen; a stub-pen. (b) A stationary stud in a lock, which acts as a detent for the tumblers when their slots are in engagement with it. (c) A short file adapted to working in and around depressions that cannot be reached by an ordinary file. (d) The unsawed butt-end of a plank. See stub-shot, 1.
 6. The inner end of one of the duplicate numbered blanks in a check-book or the like, which is left in the book with a memorandum corresponding to the check or other blank which is filled out and detached; counterfoil.—7†. Figuratively, a block; a blockhead.
 Our dullest and laziest youth, our stocks and stubs.
Milton, Education.

Stub damascus. See damascus.
stub (stub), v. t.; pret. and pp. stubbed, ppr. stubby. [= Sw. stubba = Dan. stubbe, cut short, dock, curtail; from the noun.] 1. To grub up by the roots; pull or raise the stub of; pull or raise as a stub; as, to stub a tree; to stub up roots.
 The other tree was griev'd,
 Grew scrubbed, di'd a-top, was stunted;
 So the next parson stubb'd and burnt it.
Swift, Baniacs and Philemon.
 2. To clear of stubs; grub up stubs or roots from, as land.
 Nohbut a bit on it's left, an' I meán'd to 'a stubb'd it at fall.
Tennyson, Northern Farmer (Old Style).
 A large fenced-in field, well stubbed, on which the manure from the cattle is spread.
Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 424.
 3. To make a stub of; cut to a stub; give a truncated or stubbed appearance to; truncate; as, to stub off a post or a quill pen.—4. To ruin by extravagance. Hallivell. [Prov. Eng.]—5. To strike against something projecting from a surface; stump; as, to stub one's foot. [U. S.]

stubbed (stub'ed or stubd), a. [stub + -ed.] 1. Resembling a stub; short and blunt; truncated.
 Hang upon our stubbed horns
 Garlands, ribands, and fine postes.
B. Jonson, Masque of Oberon.
 2. Rough with roots and stumps; stubby.
 Then came a bit of stubbed ground, once a wood.
Bronning, I'hilic Roland.
 3. Blunt or rugged in character; not delicate or sensitive; hardy.
 The hardness of stubbed vulgar constitutions renders them insensible of a thousand things that fret and gall those delicate people.
Tip, Berkeley, Siris, § 105.

stubbedness (stub'ed-nes), n. Bluntness; obtuseness.
stubbiness (stub'i-nes), n. 1. The state of being stubby.—2. Same as stubbedness.
stubble (stub'l), n. [Also dial. stoppel; < ME. stubble, stubbel, stubbyl, stobil, stobul, stouple, < OF. stable, estable, estoble, estouble, estoule, estouille, estude, F. itouble, étoule = Pr. estolla = It. stoppia = MD. D. stoppel = LG. stoppele, stoppel = OHG. stopfala, MiG. stopfel, G. stopfel, stubbe; all appar. < L. stipula, dim. of stipes, a stalk, etc.: see stipule. The word has been confused in ML., etc., with L. stippa, stupa, stipa, tow, and in E. with stub.] 1. The lower ends of grain-stalks, collectively, left standing in the ground when the crop is cut; the covering of a harvested field of grain.
 They turned in their stubble to sow another crophe of wheat in the same place.
Coryat, Crudities, f. 151.
 2. Something resembling or analogous to stubble, especially a short rough beard, or the short hair on a cropped head. See stubby.
stubbled (stub'ld), a. [stubble + -ed.] 1. Covered with stubble; stubbly.
 A crow was strutting o'er the stubbled plain,
 Just as a lark, descending, clod'd his strain.
Gay, To the Right Hon. Paul Methuen.
 2†. Stubbed.

stubble-field (stub'l-fêld), n. A field covered with stubble; a piece of ground from which grain has been cut.
stubble-geese (stub'l-gös), n. [ME. stubbelgoos; < stubble + goose.] 1. The graylag goose, Anser cinereus. Also called harvest-geese.
 Of many a pilgrym hastow Crystes curs,
 For of thy perely yet they fare the wors
 That they han eten with thy stubble goos.
Chaucer, Prol. to Cook's Tale, l. 27.
 2. See the quotation, and compare green-geese.
 So stubble-geese at Michaelmas are seen
 Upon the spit; next May produces green.
W. King, Art of Cookery, l. 77.

stubble-land (stub'l-land), n. Land covered with stubble; a stubble-field. Shak. 1 Hen. IV., i. 3. 35.
stubble-plow (stub'l-plou), n. A plow especially adapted for turning up stubbly ground.
stubble-rake (stub'l-räk), n. A rake for gleaming a reaped field.
stubble-turner (stub'l-tër'nër), n. A wing attachment to a plow to turn down stubble, etc., in advance of the plowshare.
stubbly (stub'li), a. [stubble + -y.] 1. Covered with stubble; stubbed.
 He . . . rubbed his stubbly chin with a sort of bewildered thoughtfulness.
Harper's Mag., LXXX. 357.
 2. Resembling stubble; short and stiff.
 A young man of aggressive manners, whose stubbly black hair stood out from his head. The Century, XXXVII. 600.

stub-book (stub'bük), n. A book containing only stubs, and serving as a record of the checks or other papers detached from them.
 The filed stub-books of stamps, now occupying a very large and rapidly increasing space in the files rooms.
Rep. of Sec. of Treasury, 1886, p. 700.

stubborn (stub'örn), a. [Early mod. E. also stuhburne, stoburne; < ME. stohurn, stoburne, styburne, stiburn, stiborn, stibourne; prob. orig. styhör, stihör (the final n being due to misdividing of the derived noun stubbornness taken as styhörnness* (E. stubbornness), or a mere addition as in bittern, slattern], appar. < AS. styb, a stump, stub, + adj. formative -or as in AS. bitor, E. bitter, etc.] 1†. Sturdy; stout; strong.
 I was yong and full of ragerye,
Stubborn and strong and joly as a pye.
Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 456.
 2. Fixed or set in opinion or purpose; obstinately determined; inflexibly resolute; not to be moved by persuasion; unyielding.
 The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be tried by't.
Shak., Hen. VIII., ii. 4. 122.

stubbornly (stub'örn-li), adv. In a stubborn manner; inflexibly; obstinately.
stubbornness (stub'örn-nes), n. [Early mod. E. stubburnesse; < ME. styburnesse, stiburnesse, etc.: see stubborn.] The state or character of being inflexible or stubborn; obstinate persistence, obduracy, or refractoriness.
stubborn-shafted (stub'örn-shäf'ted), a. Having a stiff or unyielding shaft or trunk. [Rare.]
 Before a gloom of stubborn-shafted oaks,
 Three . . . horsemen waiting.
Tennyson, Geraint

stubby (stub'j), a. [stub + -y.] 1. Abounding with stubs.—2. Short, thick, and stiff; stubbed; as, stubby bristles; stubby fingers.
stub-damask (stub'dam'ask), n. A kind of damaskeened iron made of stubs, used for shot-gun barrels. See stub-twist.
Stub damask is made from the same materials as stub twist, but the rods after the first drawing are subjected to a high degree of torsion, and two or three of them are then welded laterally to form the ribbon.
Amer. Cyc., VII. 356.
stub-end (stub'end'), n. In mach., the enlarged rectangular end or prism of a pitman or connecting-rod, over which the strap of a strap-joint passes, forming with the end of the prism a rectangular inclosure which holds the brasses or boxes fitted to a crank-wrist or to a cross-head pin. Compare strap-joint.
 The keyway is the butt or stub end of the rod.
Joshua Rose, Practical Machinist, p. 403.
stub-feather (stub'feth'èr), n. One of the short feathers left on a fowl after it has been plucked; a pin-feather. Hallivell.
stub-iron (stub'í-ern), n. Iron formed from stubs, used principally for making fine gun-barrels.

Some of them, for their stubborn refusing the Grace he had offered them, were adjudged to death, and the rest fined.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 172.
 3. Persistently obdurate; obtuse to reason or right; obstinately perverse. [This sense depends upon the connection, and is not always clearly distinguishable from the preceding, since what is justifiable or natural persistence from one point of view may be sheer perversity from another.]
 And he that holdithe a quarel agayn right,
 Holding his purpos stiburn agayn reason.
Lydgate, Urler of Fools.
 They ceased not from their own dolings, nor from their stubborn way.
Judges ii. 19.
 Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
 That apprehends no further than this world.
Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 485.
 From the necessity of bowing down the stubborn neck of their pride and ambition to the yoke of moderation and virtue.
Burke, Rev. in France.

4. Persistently pursued or practised; obstinately maintained; not readily abandoned or relinquished.
Stubborn attention, and more than common application.
Locke.
 Proud as he is, that iron heart retains Its stubborn purpose, and his friends disdain.
Pope, Iliad, ix. 742.
 Stout were their hearts, and stubborn was their strife.
Scott, The Poacher.
 5. Difficult of treatment or management; hard to deal with or handle; not easily manipulated; refractory; tough; unyielding; stiff.
 Facts are stubborn things.
Proverbial saying.
 In hissing flames huge silver bars ar' roll'd,
 And stubborn brass, and tin, and solid gold.
Pope, Iliad, xviii. 546.
 While round them stubborn thorns and furze increase,
 And creeping briars.
Dyer, Fleecce, l. 107.
 Not Hope herself, with all her flattering art,
 Can cure this stubborn sickness of the heart.
Crabbe, Works, I. 140.
Stubborn marble is that which, on account of its excessive hardness, is very difficult to work, and is apt to fly off in splinters.
Marble-Worker, § 35.

6†. Harsh; rough; rude; coarse in texture or quality.
 Like strict men of order,
 They do correct their bodies with a bench
 Or a poor stubborn table.
Beau. and Fl., Scornful Lady, iv. 2.
 Their Cloth [made from bark] . . . is stubborn when new, wears out soon.
Dampier, Voyages, l. 315.
 If Hector's Spouse was clad in stubborn stuff,
 A Soldier's Wife became it well enough.
Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love.

= Syn. 2 and 3. Refractory, Intractable, etc. (see obstinate): willful, headstrong, unruly, inflexible, obdurate, ungovernable, indocile, mulish.
stubborn (stub'örn), v. t. [stubborn, a.] To make stubborn; render stiff, unyielding, enduring, or the like. [Rare.]
 Slaty ridge
Stubborn'd with iron. Keats, Hyperion, ii.

stubbornly (stub'örn-li), adv. In a stubborn manner; inflexibly; obstinately.
stubbornness (stub'örn-nes), n. [Early mod. E. stubburnesse; < ME. styburnesse, stiburnesse, etc.: see stubborn.] The state or character of being inflexible or stubborn; obstinate persistence, obduracy, or refractoriness.
stubborn-shafted (stub'örn-shäf'ted), a. Having a stiff or unyielding shaft or trunk. [Rare.]
 Before a gloom of stubborn-shafted oaks,
 Three . . . horsemen waiting.
Tennyson, Geraint

stubby (stub'j), a. [stub + -y.] 1. Abounding with stubs.—2. Short, thick, and stiff; stubbed; as, stubby bristles; stubby fingers.
stub-damask (stub'dam'ask), n. A kind of damaskeened iron made of stubs, used for shot-gun barrels. See stub-twist.
Stub damask is made from the same materials as stub twist, but the rods after the first drawing are subjected to a high degree of torsion, and two or three of them are then welded laterally to form the ribbon.
Amer. Cyc., VII. 356.
stub-end (stub'end'), n. In mach., the enlarged rectangular end or prism of a pitman or connecting-rod, over which the strap of a strap-joint passes, forming with the end of the prism a rectangular inclosure which holds the brasses or boxes fitted to a crank-wrist or to a cross-head pin. Compare strap-joint.
 The keyway is the butt or stub end of the rod.
Joshua Rose, Practical Machinist, p. 403.
stub-feather (stub'feth'èr), n. One of the short feathers left on a fowl after it has been plucked; a pin-feather. Hallivell.
stub-iron (stub'í-ern), n. Iron formed from stubs, used principally for making fine gun-barrels.

stubbornly (stub'örn-li), adv. In a stubborn manner; inflexibly; obstinately.
stubbornness (stub'örn-nes), n. [Early mod. E. stubburnesse; < ME. styburnesse, stiburnesse, etc.: see stubborn.] The state or character of being inflexible or stubborn; obstinate persistence, obduracy, or refractoriness.
stubborn-shafted (stub'örn-shäf'ted), a. Having a stiff or unyielding shaft or trunk. [Rare.]
 Before a gloom of stubborn-shafted oaks,
 Three . . . horsemen waiting.
Tennyson, Geraint

stubby (stub'j), a. [stub + -y.] 1. Abounding with stubs.—2. Short, thick, and stiff; stubbed; as, stubby bristles; stubby fingers.
stub-damask (stub'dam'ask), n. A kind of damaskeened iron made of stubs, used for shot-gun barrels. See stub-twist.
Stub damask is made from the same materials as stub twist, but the rods after the first drawing are subjected to a high degree of torsion, and two or three of them are then welded laterally to form the ribbon.
Amer. Cyc., VII. 356.
stub-end (stub'end'), n. In mach., the enlarged rectangular end or prism of a pitman or connecting-rod, over which the strap of a strap-joint passes, forming with the end of the prism a rectangular inclosure which holds the brasses or boxes fitted to a crank-wrist or to a cross-head pin. Compare strap-joint.
 The keyway is the butt or stub end of the rod.
Joshua Rose, Practical Machinist, p. 403.
stub-feather (stub'feth'èr), n. One of the short feathers left on a fowl after it has been plucked; a pin-feather. Hallivell.
stub-iron (stub'í-ern), n. Iron formed from stubs, used principally for making fine gun-barrels.

stubbornly (stub'örn-li), adv. In a stubborn manner; inflexibly; obstinately.
stubbornness (stub'örn-nes), n. [Early mod. E. stubburnesse; < ME. styburnesse, stiburnesse, etc.: see stubborn.] The state or character of being inflexible or stubborn; obstinate persistence, obduracy, or refractoriness.
stubborn-shafted (stub'örn-shäf'ted), a. Having a stiff or unyielding shaft or trunk. [Rare.]
 Before a gloom of stubborn-shafted oaks,
 Three . . . horsemen waiting.
Tennyson, Geraint

stubby (stub'j), a. [stub + -y.] 1. Abounding with stubs.—2. Short, thick, and stiff; stubbed; as, stubby bristles; stubby fingers.
stub-damask (stub'dam'ask), n. A kind of damaskeened iron made of stubs, used for shot-gun barrels. See stub-twist.
Stub damask is made from the same materials as stub twist, but the rods after the first drawing are subjected to a high degree of torsion, and two or three of them are then welded laterally to form the ribbon.
Amer. Cyc., VII. 356.
stub-end (stub'end'), n. In mach., the enlarged rectangular end or prism of a pitman or connecting-rod, over which the strap of a strap-joint passes, forming with the end of the prism a rectangular inclosure which holds the brasses or boxes fitted to a crank-wrist or to a cross-head pin. Compare strap-joint.
 The keyway is the butt or stub end of the rod.
Joshua Rose, Practical Machinist, p. 403.
stub-feather (stub'feth'èr), n. One of the short feathers left on a fowl after it has been plucked; a pin-feather. Hallivell.
stub-iron (stub'í-ern), n. Iron formed from stubs, used principally for making fine gun-barrels.

stub-mortise (stub'môr'tis), n. A mortise which does not pass through the entire thickness of the timber in which it is made.

stub-nail (stub'nâl), n. An old or worn horse-shoe-nail; any short and thick nail; a stub.

stub-pen (stub'pen), n. A pen having a blunt or truncated nib, usually short and broad.

stub-short (stub'shört), n. Same as stub-shot, 1.

stub-shot (stub'shot), n. 1. In a saw-mill, the butt or unsawn part at the end of a plank, separated from the log. Also called stub-short.

—2. In turning, the unworked part on a piece turned in a lathe, where it is secured to the center. It is removed when the work is finished.

stub-tenon (stub'ten'on), n. In carp., a short tenon, as at the end of an upright. E. H. Knight.

stub-twist (stub'twist), n. A material for fine shot-gun barrels, as those of fowling-pieces, wrought from stubs, and brought into form by twisting or coiling round a mandrel or by welding; also, a gun-barrel made of this material.

stubwort (stub'wört), n. The wood-sorrel, Oxalis Acetosella: so called from its growing about stubs or stumps. [Prov. Eng.]

stucco (stuk'ô), n. [Formerly also stuck, < F. stuc = Sp. estuco = Pg. estucuc = D. stuc = G. Sw. stuck = Dan. stuck; < It. stucco, stucco, < O. It. stucchi, MHG. stüccc, G. stück, a piece, a patch, = D. stuk = OS. stukki = AS. stucc = Icel. stykki, a piece; connected with stock.] 1. Plaster or cement, of varying degrees of fineness, used as a coating for walls, either internally or externally, and for the production of ornamental effects and figures. Stucco for decorative purposes, as the cornices and moldings of rooms and the enrichment of ceilings, usually consists of slaked lime, chalk, and pulverized white marble, tempered in water, or of escaïed gypsum or plaster of Paris mixed with glue, and sometimes also gelatin or gum arabic, in a hot solution. The stucco employed for external purposes is of a coarser kind, and variously prepared, the different sorts being generally distinguished by the name of cements. Some of these take a surface and polish almost equal to those of the finest marble. The stucco used for the third coat of three-coat plaster consists of fine lime and sand. In a species called bastard stucco a small quantity of hair is used. Rough stucco is merely floated and brushed with water, but the best kind is floated.

2. Work made of stucco. The ornamenting of cornices, etc., with garlands, festoons, fruits, and figures in stucco was carried to great elaboration by the ancient Romans, and by the Italians under Raphael's guidance in the sixteenth century.

stucco (stuk'ô), v. t. [stucco, n.] To apply stucco to; cover with stucco or fine plaster.

stuccoer (stuk'ô-ër), n. [stucco + -er.] One who stuccoes; one who applies stucco to walls, etc.; one who works or deals in stucco.

stucco-work (stuk'ô-wèrk), n. Ornamental work composed of stucco.

stuck¹ (stuk), *Preterit and past participle of stick¹ and *stick*².*

stuck² (stuk), n. [A var. of *stock*². Cf. *tuck*².] A thrust.

stuck³ (stuk), n. and v. A dialectal variant of stook.

stuck⁴ (stuk), n. [F. stuc, < It. stucco, stucco: see stucco.] Stucco. Imp. Dict.

stuck-in (stuk'in), n. The stoccade.

I had a pass with him, rapier, scabbard, and all, and he gives me the stuck in with such a mortal motion that it is inevitable. Shak., T. N., iii. 4. 303.

stuckle (stuk'l), n. [Din. of *stuck*³, stook.] A number of sheaves set together in a field; a stook. [Prov. Eng.]

stuckling (stuk'ling), n. [Origin obscure.] A thin apple pasty; a fritter. [Prov. Eng.]

stuck-up (stuk'up), a. and n. 1. a. Offensively proud or conceited; puffed up; consequential. [Colloq.]

He [the true gentleman] is never stuck-up, nor looks down upon others because they have not titles, honors, or social position equal to his own. W. Matthews, Getting on in the World, p. 144.

II. n. Same as strap-oyster. E. Ingersoll.

stud¹ (stud), n. [Early mod. E. also stude; < ME. stode, < AS. studa, stulhu, a post, = Icel. stóth = Sw. stöd, a post, = Dan. stöd, stüb, stump, = MHG. G. stütze, a prop, support; cf. Skt. sthūna, a post. Cf. stooth, a doublet of *stud*¹. Hence nit. studdle.] 1. A post; an upright prop or support; specifically, one of the small beams or scantlings in a building, of the height of a single story, which, with the laths nailed upon them, form the walls of the different rooms. See cut under siding.

It is a gross mistake in architecture to think that every small stud bears the main stress and burthen of the building, which lies indeed upon the principal timbers. Jer. Taylor (3), Artif. Handsomeness, p. 11. (Latham.)

24. The stem, trunk, or stock of a tree or shrub.

Seest not thilke same Hawthorne stude, How bragly it begins to budde, And utter his tender head? Spenser, Shep. Cal., March.

3. A transverse piece of east-iron inserted in each link of a chain cable to prop the sides apart and strengthen it. See cut under chain.

—4. A nail, boss, knob, or protuberance affixed to a surface, especially as an ornament.

Crystal and myrrhine cups, embossed with gems And studs of pearl. Milton, P. R., iv. 120.

The armour of the legs consists of a chaïsson of chalu-mail, and chusses lacing behind, which appear to be formed of studs rivetted on cloth or leather. J. Hewitt, Ancient Armour, I. p. xvii.

5. A piece in the form of a boss or knob for use as a button or fastener, or in some other way. A stud for a bolt is a rounded nut to be screwed on to the projecting end. A stud for lacing is a button set in an eyelet-hole and having an ear round which the lace is passed. A shirt-stud is an ornamental button commonly with a tang or a spire by which it can be inserted in and removed from an eyelet-hole or small buttonhole in the front of the shirt.

The grate which (shut) the day out-barres, Those golden studies which naille the starres, Dekker, Londons Tempe (Works, IV. 122).

The stud itself, called the anvil, is connected to the sending battery, and the other pole of this battery is to earth. R. S. Culley, Pract. Teleg., p. 269.

The mantle, which falls over the back of the figure and is not gathered up at the arms, is secured by a cordon attached to two lozenge-shaped studs. Encyc. Brit., VI. 469.

Shirt-stud abscess, an abscess with a superficial and a deep cavity, connected by a short sinus.

stud¹ (stud), v. t.; pret. and pp. studded, ppr. studding. [*stud*¹, n. Cf. Icel. stydja, prop. studs, or upright props.] 1. To furnish with or support by studs, or upright props.

Is it a wholesome place to live in, with its black shingles, and the green moss that shows how damp they are? its dark, low-studded rooms? Hawthorne, Seven Gables, xii.

2. To set with or as with studs.

Thy horses shall be trapp'd, Their harness studded all with gold and pearl. Shak., T. of the S., Ind., ii. 44.

3. To set with protuberant objects of any kind; scatter over with separate things rising above the surface: as, a bay studded with islands.

A fine lawn sloped away from it, studded with clumps of trees. Irvine, Sketch-Book, p. 30.

4. To lie scattered over the surface of; be spread prominently about in.

The turf around our pavilion fairly blazes with the splendor of the yellow daisies and crimson poppies that stud it. B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracens, p. 22.

Studded armor, armor composed of leather, cloth in several thicknesses, or the like, through which are driven metal rivets with large heads, forming studs or bosses.

stud² (stud), n. [ME. stoo, stod, < AS. stod, a stud, = O. It. stuo, stuo, stuo, a stud, MHG. stuo, stut, a stud, a breeding mare, G. stute, a breeding mare (gestüt, a stud), = Icel. stóth = Dan. stod, a stud, = Sw. sto, a mare. Cf. Russ. studo, a herd or drove, Lith. stodas, a drove of horses. Cf. sted.] 1. A number of horses kept for any purpose, especially for breeding or sporting.

He keeps the stud (which is to be diminished) because he thinks he ought to support the turf. Grecille, Memoirs, July 18, 1830.

2. The place where a stud is kept, especially for breeding; a stud-farm.

In the studs of persons of quality in Ireland, where care is taken, . . . we see horses bred of excellent shape. Sir W. Temple, Advancement of Trade in Ireland.

3. A stallion, especially one kept for service in breeding; a stud-horse. [Colloq.]—4. Dogs kept for breeding; a kennel. [U. S.]—In the stud, kept for breeding, as a horse or dog.

stud³, studet, n. Middle English forms of stead.

stud-bolt (stud'bolt), n. A bolt with a thread at each end, to be screwed into a fixed part at one end and have a stud or nut screwed on it at the other.

stud-book (stud'búk), n. The genealogical register of a stud, especially of horses; a book giving the pedigree of noted or thoroughbred animals, especially horses.

studdery (stud'ër-i), n. [*stud*² + -ery.] A place for keeping a stud of horses. Harrison, Descrip. of Eng., iii. 1 (Holinshed's Chron., I.).

studding (stud'ing), n. [Verbal n. of *stud*¹, v.] In carp., studs or joists collectively, or material for studs or joists.

studdingsail (stud'ing-säl), pron. by sailors stun'sl, n. [studding, verbal n. of *stud*¹, support, + sail; or else altered from steadying-sail*.] A sail set beyond the leeches of some of the principal squaresails during a fair wind, very seldom used. Lower studdingsails, either square or three-cornered, are set outside of the leeches of the foresail. Topmast- and topgallant-studdingsails are set outside of the topsail and topgallantsail. They are spread at the head by small yards and at the foot by booms which slide out from the yardarms. Also called steering-sail. See cuts under ringtail and ship.—Studdingsail-booms, long poles which slide out and in through boom-irons on the yards. See cut under ship.

studdle (stud'l), n. [ME. studdly, studdul, stodul, stodulle, < Icel. stodhill, a prop, stay, upright, stud, dim. of stóth (= AS. studu, etc.), a prop; see *stud*¹.] 1. A prop or bar about a loom. Prompt. Parv., p. 481.—2. One of the vertical timbers which support the sets in the timbering of a mining-shaft.

studer, n. See *stud*³.

student (stü'dent), n. [= F. étudiant = Pr. estudian = Sp. estudiante = Pg. estudante = It. studiente, studiente, studente = D. G. Sw. Dan. student, a student, < L. studen(-t-), ppr. of studere, be eager, zealous, or diligent, apply one's self, study; perhaps (with alteration of sp- to st-) = Gr. σπουδέν, be eager, hasten. Hence also studly, studious, etc.] 1. A studious person; one who practises studying or investigation; one given to the study of books or the acquisition of knowledge: as, a student of science or of nature.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shak., M. W. of W., lii. 1. 38.

2. A person who is engaged in a course of study, either general or special; one who studies, especially with a view to education of a higher kind; an advanced scholar or pupil: as, an academical or college student; a student of theology, law, medicine, or art.

A greater degree of gentility is affixed to the character of a student in England than elsewhere. Goldsmith, English Clergy.

Student or students' lamp. See lamp.

student-parsnip (stü'dent-pärs'nip), n. See parsnip.

studentry (stü'dent-ri), n. [stud + -ry.] Students collectively; a body of students. Kingsley, Hypatia. [Rare.]

studentship (stü'dent-ship), n. [stud + -ship.] 1. The state of being a student. [Rare.]

—2. An endowment or foundation for a student; a provision for the maintenance of a person in a course of study.

She [George Eliot] . . . founded to his memory the "George Henry Lewes studentship." Dict. Nat. Biog., XIII. 221.

studerite (stó'dër-ít), n. [Named after Bernhard Studer, a Swiss geologist (1794-1887).] A mineral from the canton of Valais in Switzerland, closely related to tetrahedrite.

stud-farm (stud'färm), n. A tract of land devoted to the breeding and rearing of horses.

studfish (stud'fish), n. A kind of killifish, Fundulus (Xenisma) catenatus, 6 or 7 inches long, locally abundant in the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers. It is one of the largest and handsomest of the cyprinodonts. A related species is the spotted studfish, F. (X.) stellifer, of the Alabama river. These represent a section of the genus with the dorsal fin beginning nearly above the anal.

Studfish (Fundulus (Xenisma) catenatus).

stud-flower (stud'flou'ër), n. A name proposed by Meehan for the plant Helonias bullata, translating the specific name.

stud-groom (stud'gröm), n. A groom (generally the head groom) of a stud. Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 782.

stud-horse (stud'hörs), n. [*ME. stodhors, < AS. stóthhors (= Icel. stóthhross), < stóth, stud, + hors, horse.] A horse kept in the stud for breeding purposes; a stallion.

studied (stud'id), p. n. 1. Informed or qualified by study; instructed; versed; learned.

The natural man, . . . be he never so great a philosopher, never so well seen in the law, never so sore studied in the Scripture, . . . yet he cannot understand the things of the Spirit of God. Tyndale, Ans. to Sir T. More, etc. (Parker Soc., 1850), p. 6.

2. Studiously contrived or thought out; premeditated; deliberate: as, a studied insult.

The flattering senate Decrees him divine honours, and to cross it Were death with studied torments. Massinger, Roman Actor, I. 1.

studiedly (stud'id-li), adv. In a studied manner; with study or deliberation; deliberately. Life of Mede, prefixed to his Works, p. 39. (Latham.)

studier (stud'i-er), n. [< study + -er]. One who studies; an examiner or investigator. June Austen, Pride and Prejudice, ix.

studio (stü'di-ö), n. [< It. studio, a study; see study]. A room especially arranged for painting, drawing, photographing, or other art-work. It is usually fitted with windows for securing a pure skylight, or light free from cross-reflections, and is so placed, when possible, as to receive light from the north side.

studious (stü'di-us), a. [= F. studieux = Sp. estudioso = It. studioso, < L. studiosus, eager, assiduous, < studium, eagerness, zeal, study; see study]. 1. Given to study or learning; inclined to learn or investigate; seeking knowledge from books, inquiry, meditation, or by other means; as, a studious pupil or investigator; a studious reasoner.

Let the studious of these things search them in their proper Authors. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 319.

2. Exercising study or careful consideration; attentively mindful or considerate; thoughtful; heedful; intent; assiduous.

I am studious to keep the ancient terms. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii. 157.

One at least studious of deserving well. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 3.

3. Manifesting study or deliberation; planned; studied.

But yet be wary in thy studious care. Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 5. 97.

4. Devoted to or used for the purposes of study; serving as a place of study or contemplation. [Rare.]

Some to the wars, to try their fortune there; . . . Some to the studious universities. Shak., T. G. of V., i. 3. 10.

But let my due feet never fail To walk the studious cloisters pale. Milton, 11 Penseroso, l. 156.

=Syn. 1. Studious, Scholarly. Studious represents a fact in conduct; scholarly, a fact in taste or predilection, or a similar result; as, he was very studious, but not really of scholarly instincts, nor likely ever to produce a scholarly treatise.

studiously (stü'di-us-li), adv. In a studious manner; with reference to study or learning; as a student; in a studied manner; with studious consideration or care; studiedly; heedfully; deliberately; as, to be studiously inclined; to investigate a subject studiously.

studiousness (stü'di-us-nes), n. The character of being studious, diligence in study; addictiveness to books or investigation.

Studite (stü'dit), n. [< LGr. Στουδιτης, < Στουδιος, Studius, a Roman who built a monastery (thence known as the Studium) for the order.] A member of the order of Acoemeti. The most famous of the order was St. Theodore the Studite (died 826), confessor against the Iconoclasts and hymnographer.

studwork (stud'wërk), n. [< stud + work]. 1. Brickwork interspaced with studs; construction with alternating bricks and studs.—2. That which is made or held by means of studs, especially in armor; brigandine-work, jazerant-work, or other process for producing garments of fene by means of ordinary textile fabrics or leather set with studs. See cut under brigandine.

*study*¹ (stud'i), n.; pl. studies (-iz). [Early mod. E. also studie; < ME. study, study, studie, studie, < OF. estude, estude, F. étude = Sp. estudio = Pg. estudo = It. studio, < L. studium, eagerness, zeal, exertion, study, < studere, be eager, zealous, or diligent, study; see student.] 1. Eagerness; earnestness; zeal. [Obsolete or archaic.]

They do thereby [by the burning of the books] better declare the study of their godliness. Calvin, on Acts xix. 19, p. 189 (Calvin Trans. Soc.).

2. Zealous endeavor; studied effort, aim, or purpose; deliberate contrivance or intention.

Men's study is set rather to take gifts, and to get of other men's goods, than to give any of their own. Lathin, 2d Sermon bet. Law. VI., 1550.

It is my study To seem despitiful and ungentle to you. Shak., As you Like it, v. 2. 85.

As touching your Graces diligence and singular good study and means for the eyde of th'Emperors altayres. R. Sampson, To Wolsey (Ellis's Hist. Letters, 3d ser., [l. 354].)

This is a cruelty beyond man's study. Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, iv. 6.

3. The mental effort of understanding, appreciating, and assimilating anything, especially a book; the earnest and protracted examination of a question, by reflection, collection and scrutiny of evidence, and otherwise; the pursuit of learning.

In continual studie and contemplation. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 4.

When the mind with great earnestness, and of choice, fixes its view on any idea, considers it on all sides, and will not be called off by the ordinary solicitation of other ideas, it is that we call intension or study. Locke, Human Understanding, II. xix. 1.

4. An exercise in learning or the pursuit of knowledge; an act or course of intellectual acquisition, as by memorizing words, facts, or principles; as, the actor's study was very rapid; also, an effort to gain an understanding of something; a particular course of learning, inquiry, or investigation; as, to pursue the study of physics or of a language; to make a study of trade, of a case at law, or of a man's life or character.

The chiefe citie is Hamsa, sometime called Tarsus, famous for the studies of learning, herein (saith Strabo) surmounting both Athens and Alexandria. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 334.

His [Calvin's] bringing up was in the study of the civil law. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, Pref., ii.

5. That which is studied or to be studied; a branch of learning; a subject of acquired or desired knowledge; a matter for investigation or meditation.

Studies serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability. Bacon, Studies (ed. 1887).

The proper study of mankind is man. Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 2.

'Twas, in truth, a study, To mark his spirit, alternating between A decent and professional gravity And an irreverent mirthfulness. Whittier, Bridal of Pennacook, Int.

Personally I think that Shakespeare is almost the easiest study; perhaps because of my being accustomed as a boy to see Shakespeare's plays. Lester Wallack, Scribner's Mag., IV. 720.

6. A state of mental inquiry or cogitation; debate or counsel with one's self; deep meditation; a muse; a quandary.

Pandarus, that in a studie stod, Er he was war, she tok hym by the hood. Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1180.

I haf gret study til I haf tydings for zow. Paston Letters, l. 78.

The king of Castile, herewith a little confused, and in a studie, said, That can I doe with my honour. Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 224.

7. Theat., one who studies or learns; a student; specifically, a memorizer of a part for the theater; an actor as a memorizer.

I've got a part of twelve lengths here which I must be up in to-morrow night, and I haven't had time to look at it yet. I'm a confounded quick study, that's one comfort. Dickens, Nicholas Nickleby, xxxiii.

8. In music, a composition, usually instrumental, having something of the instructive and gymnastic purpose of an exercise combined with a certain amount of artistic value; an étude. An elaborate work of this class, combining great technical difficulty with decided artistic interest, is often called a concert study.

9. Something done as an exercise in learning, or in special study or observation; specifically, in art, a sketch or performance executed as an educational exercise, as a memorandum or record of observations or effects, or as a guide for a finished production; as, the story is a study of morbid passion; a study of a head for a painting.—10. A room in a dwelling-house or other building set apart for private study, reading, writing, or any similar occupation; by extension, the private room or office of the master of a house, however it may be used.

Get me a taper in my study, Lucius. Shak., J. C., ii. 1. 7.

There is a gold wand, Stands in King Cornwall's study window. Ballad of King Arthur (Child's Ballads, l. 242).

Academy study. See academy.—Brown study. See brown.—Syn. 3. Research, inquiry, investigation.—6. Reflection.

*study*¹ (stud'i), v.; pret. and pp. studied, ppr. studying. [< ME. studyn, studyn, < OF. estudier, F. étudier = Sp. estudiar = Pg. estudar = It. studiare, < ML. studiare, study, < L. studium, eagerness, zeal, study; see *study*¹, n.] I. intrans. 1. To exercise the mind in learning; apply one's self to the acquisition of knowledge; acquire knowledge and mental training, as by memorizing words, facts, or principles.

So much, dear liege, I have already sworn: That is, to live and study here three years. Shak., L. L. L., i. 1. 35.

2. To exercise the mind in considering or contriving; deliberate upon or about something; ponder.

Al this maketh me on metes to studie, And how the preest prenced no pardon to Do-wel. Piers Plowman (C), x. 317.

I found a moral first, and then studied for a fable. Swift.

3. To muse; meditate; cogitate; reflect; revolve thoughts or ideas; used absolutely. [Archaic or colloq.]

Which made the butchers of Nottingham To study as they did stand, Saying, "Surely he is some prodigal." Robin Hood and the Butcher (Child's Ballads, V. 35).

Brer Fox, he come up, en dar lay Brer Rabbit, periently cole en stit. Brer Fox he look at Brer Rabbit, en he sorter study. J. C. Harris, Uncle Remus, xv.

4. To endeavor studiously or thoughtfully; use studied or careful efforts; be diligent or zealous; plan; contrive; as, to study for peace or for the general good.

With that he departed from his moder and yede into a chamber, and he-gan to study howe he myght spede to go to the kyng Arthur. Merlin (E. L. T. S.), ii. 178.

Study [give diligence, R. V.] to shew thyself approved unto God. 2 Tim. ii. 15.

5. To prosecute a regular course of study, as that prescribed to prepare one for the exercise of a profession; as, to study for the bar, or for the church or ministry.—To study up, to make a special study; bring up or refresh one's knowledge by study. [Colloq.]

II. trans. 1. To seek to learn by memorizing the facts, principles, or words of; apply the mind to learning; store in the memory, either generally or verbatim; as, to study a book, a language, history, etc.; to study a part in a play or a piece for recitation.

Kath. Where did you study all this goodly speech? Pet. It is extempore, from my mother-wit. Shak., T. of the S., ii. 1. 264.

2. To seek to ascertain or to learn the particulars of, as by observation or inquiry; make a study of; inquire into; investigate; as, to study a man's character or the customs of a society; to study the geology of a region, or a case of disease.

I'll . . . entertain some score or two of tailors, To study fashions to adorn my body. Shak., Rich. III., i. 2. 288.

3. To consider in detail; deliberate upon; think out; as, to study the best way of doing something; to study a discourse or a compliment.

I will still study some revenge past this. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, i. 2.

4. To regard attentively or discriminatingly; consider as to requirements, character, quality, use, effect, or the like; pay distinguishing attention to; as, to study one's own interests; to study the effect of one's actions; to study a person; to study a drapery or a model in art.—5. To look at musingly, as in a brown study.

He was studying the toe of his foot, visible through a rift in his well-worn brogan. The Century, XXXVIII. 85.

6. To apply the mind to learning (a specific science or branch of science), especially with the object of preparing for the exercise of a profession; as, the one is studying medicine, the other theology.—7. To subject to study; carry through a course of learning; educate; instruct.

The State of Avignon, . . . being visited with such of the French Preachers as had been studied at Geneva, the people generally became inclined unto Calvin's doctrines. Heylin, Hist. Presbyterians, p. 54. (Davies.)

To study out. (a) To find out by study or consideration; get at the bottom of; unravel; as, to study out a person's meaning; he has studied out the mystery. (b) To think out deliberately; arrange definitely in the mind; determine the details of; as, I have studied out a plan; to study out a set of rules.—To study up. (a) To learn by special study or investigation; get up a knowledge of, as for a particular purpose or occasion; as, to study up a law-case, or a subject for an examination; to study up routes of travel. (b) To seek or get a knowledge of by observation or consideration; observe or reflect upon critically; make up one's mind about; as, to study up a person or a man's character; to study up arguments or reasons.—Syn. 2. To scrutinize, search into.—3. To reflect upon, meditate, ponder.—4. To contemplate.

*study*² (stud'i), n.; pl. studies (-iz). Another spelling of *study*¹, a variant of stithy. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

stufa (stü'fū), n.; It. pl. stufe (-fe), E. stufas (-fūz). [It.] A jet of steam issuing from a fissure of the earth in volcanic regions.

In many volcanic regions jets of steam, called by the Italians stufas, issue from fissures at a temperature high above the boiling-point. Lyell, Prin. of Geol. (11th ed.), l. 391.

stuff (stuf), n. and a. [Early mod. E. stuffe; < ME. stof, stuff, stuffe (= D. L.G. Dan. stof = G. Sw. stoff; ML. stoffa), < OF. estoffe, F. étouffe = Sp. Pg. estofa, quilted stuff, = It. stoffa, < L. stappa (ML. prob. also Germanized stufā*, stoffa), earlier stupa, the coarse part of flax, hards, tow; see *stupa*¹. Cf. stop. The sense of the L. word is better preserved in the verb stuff, cram; see stuff, stop, v. I. n. 1. Substance or material in some definite state, form, or situation; any particular kind, mass, or aggregation of matter or things; material in some distinct or limited sense, whether raw, or wrought or to be wrought into form.

Of such a stoffe as easy is to fynde
Is best to bilde.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 15.

The wit and mind of man, if it work upon matter, . . .
worketh according to the stuff.

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, i. 44.

The breccia, too, is quite comparable to moraine stuff.
J. Geikie, Geol. Sketches, ii. 4.

The stiff upstanding of fine young stuff, hazel, ash, and so on, tapering straight as a fishing-rod, and knobbing out on either side with scarcely controllable bulges.

R. D. Blackmore, Cripps, the Carrier, xxiv.

2. Incorporeal or psychical substance of some special kind; that which arises from or constitutes mind, character, or quality; any im-material effluence, influence, principle, or essence. See mind-stuff.

Yet do I hold it very stuff o' the conscience
To do no contrived murder. Shak., Othello, i. 2. 2.

As soon as my soul enters into heaven, I shall be able to say to the angels, I am of the same stuff as you, spirit and aspirit.

Donne, Sermons, xii.

Do not squander time; for that is the stuff which life is made of.

Franklin, Way to Wealth, § 1.

The spirit of Ximenes was of too stern a stuff to be so easily extinguished by the breath of royal displeasure.

Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 25.

3. Goods; possessions in a general sense; baggage: now chiefly in the phrase household stuff.

Assemblet were sone the same in the fight,
And restorit full stithly the stuff of the Grekes.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), i. 5775.

I will not stay to-night for all the town;
Therefore away, to get our stuff aboard.

Shak., C. of E., iv. 4. 162.

I have good household stuff, though I say it, both brass and pewter, lioens and woollens.

Steele, Spectator, No. 324.

4. Something made up, or prepared or designed, for some specific use. (a) Woven material; a textile fabric of any kind; specifically, a woolen fabric.

At my little mercer's in Lombard Street, . . . and there cheapened some stuffs to hang my room.

Pepys, Diary, II. 434.

(b) A preparation of any kind to be swallowed, as food, drink, or medicine.

I . . . did compound for her
A certain stuff, which, being ta'en, would cease
The present power of life.

Shak., Cymbeline, v. 5. 255.

(c) Ready money; cash; means in general. [Colloq.]

But has she got the stuff, Mr. Frag? is she rich, hey?

Sheridan, The Rivals, i. 1.

(d) A preparation or composition for use in some industrial process or operation. Among the many things technically known as stuff in this sense are (1) ground paper-stock ready for use, the material before the final preparation being called half-stock; (2) the composition of tallow with various oils, wax, etc. (also called dubbing), used in a hot state by curriers to fill the pores of leather; (3) the similar composition of turpentine, tallow, etc., with which the masts, sides, and other parts of wooden ships are smeared for preservation; (4) the mixture of alum and salt used by bakers for whitening bread. For others, see phrases below.

5. Unwrought matter; raw material to be worked over, or to be used in making or producing something: as, breadstuffs (see breadstuff); foodstuff; rough stuff (for carpenters' use): the vein-stuff of mines.

The stuff, i. e., the mixed ore, veinstone, and country rock, having been cleansed, it is now possible to make a separation by hand.

Encyc. Brit., XVI. 463.

6. Refuse or useless material; that which is to be rejected or cast aside: in mining, attle or rubbish. Hence—7. Intellectual trash or rubbish; foolish or irrational expression; instian; tiddle: often in the exclamatory phrase stuff and nonsense!

A Deal of such Stuff they sung to the deaf Ocean.

N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 278.

8t. Supply or amount of something; stock; provision; quantity; extent; vigor.

That they leve reasonable stuff [of fuel] upon the bak for spryng to spryng, to serve the pouere people of penyworthes and halfpenny worthes in the neep seasons.

English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 425.

I have but easy stufte of money withinne me, for so meche as the seison of the yer is not yet grown.

Paston Letters, I. 61.

Clear stuff, in carp., boards free from imperfections such as knots, wind-shakes, and ring-hearts.—Coarse stuff, in building, a mixture of lime and hair used in the first coat and floating of plastering.—Fine, free, inch stuff. See the qualifying words.—Gaged stuff. Same as gage-stuff.
—Quarter stuff, in carp. See quarter-stuff.—Red stuff, a watchmakers' name for crocus, or oxid-of-iron powder.— Small stuff (naut.). See small.—The real stuff. See real.—Touching-stuff, in aquaint engraving, a composition of the ashes of cork, ivory-black, and gall with trectle, made into a ball, and used with water (or touching up the dark parts of the plate.—White stuff, a gilders' composition, formed of size and whiting, used in forming a surface over wood that is to be gilded.

II. a. Made of stuff, especially of light woolen fabric.—Stuff gown, a gown made of stuff, as distinguished from one of finer material, as silk; especially, in legal phraseology, the gown of a junior barrister; hence, in England, a junior barrister, or one under the rank of queen's counsel.

There she sat, . . . in her brown stuff gown, her cheek apron, white handkerchief, and cap.

Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xvi.

Stuff hat, a hat made in imitation of beaver, the fur of various animals being applied to a foundation which is rendered water-proof by the application of varnish.

stuff (stuff), v. [Early mod. E. also stuf; < ME. stufen; from the noun.] I. trans. 1. To fill with any kind of stuff or loose material; eram full; load to excess: erowd with something: as, to stuff the ears with cotton.

If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 2. 146.

2. Specifically, to fill with stuffing or packing; eram the cavity with material suitable for the special use or occasion: as, to stuff a cushion or a bedtrick; to stuff a turkey or a leg of veal for roasting.—3. To cause to appear stuffed; puff or swell out; distend. [Rare.]

Lest the gods for sin
Should with a swelling drowsy stuff thy skin.

Dryden, tr. of Persius's Satires, v. 273.

4. To fill the prepared skin of (an animal), for the purpose of restoring and preserving its natural form and appearance: the process includes wiring and mounting. See taxidermy and stuffing, n., 3.

A few stuffed animals (as the Rector was fond of natural history) added to the impressive character of the apartment.

Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxxii.

5. Figuratively, to fill, eram, or erowd with something of an immaterial nature: as, to stuff
a poem with mawkish sentiment.

Well stuffed with all manner of goodness.

Rom. of Parthenay (E. E. T. S.), i. 6378.

You have a learned head, stuff it with libraries.

Fletcher, Spanish Curate, iv. 5.

6. To use as stuffing or filling; dispose of by crowding, eramming, or packing.

Put them (roses) into . . . a glass with a narrow mouth, stuffing them close together.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 365.

A woman was busy making a clearance of such articles as she could stuff away in corners and behind chairs.

Chambers's Jour., LV. 42.

7. To constitute a filling for; be erowded into;
occupy so as to fill completely.

With inward arms the dire machine they load,
And iron bowels stuff the dark abode.

Dryden, Æneid, ii. 26.

8. To apply stuff to; treat with stuff, in some technical sense. See stuff, n., 4 (d) (2).

Ordinarily the hand process of stuffing leather is accomplished after rolling the sides into bundles with the grain side in, and softening them by treating or beating.

C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 408.

9t. To stock or supply; provide with a quota or outfit; furnish; replenish.

He stuffed alle castelle
Wyth armyre & vytelle.

Arthur (ed. Furnivall), i. 549.

Stithe shippes & stoure stuffed with vitell,
All full vpon dote with tyme pepull in.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), i. 2748.

The same nyght I cam to Placiencia or Plesance; ther
I stuffed me wt wyne and bred and other casles as me thought necessary for me at that tyme.

Torkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 5.

10. To deceive with humorous intent; gull.
[Colloq.]—To stuff a ballot-box, to thrust into a ballot-box surreptitiously fraudulent ballots, or any ballots which have not actually been cast by legal voters. [U. S.]
—To stuff out, to fill round, or puff out; swell to the full; distend; expand.

Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form.

Shak., K. John, iii. 4. 97.

II. intrans. To eat greedily; play the glutton.

He looged to lay him down upon the shelly bed, and stuff;
He had often eaten oysters, but had never had enough.

W. S. Gilbert, Etiquette.

stuff-chest (stuff'chest), n. In paper-manuf., a vat in which the pulp is mixed preparatory to molding.

stuffed (stuffed), p. a. 1. Filled with or as with stuffing.—2. Having the nose obstructed, as during a cold.

I am stuffed, cousin; I cannot smell.

Shak., Much Ado, iii. 4. 64.

3. In bot., filled with a cottony web or spongy mass which is distinct from the walls: said of stems of fungi.

stuff-engine (stuff'en'jin), n. In paper-manuf.,
a pulp-grinder.

stuffer (stuf'er), n. [< stuff + -er.] 1. One who stuffs, or does anything called stuffing: as, a bird-stuffer; a ballot-box stuffer.—2. That which stuffs; specifically, a machine or an instrument for performing any stuffing operation:
as, a sausage-stuffer; a stuffer for horse-collars.

They (tomatoes) fall into the hopper, and are fed by the stuffer, a cylinder worked by a treadle, into the can.

Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 445.

stuff-gownsmen (stuff'gounz'men), n. A junior barrister; a stuff gown. See stuff, a.

stuffiness (stuf'i-nes), n. 1. The state or property of being stuffy, close, or musty: as, the stuffiness of a room.—2. The condition of being stuffed, or stuffed up, as by a cold. [Rare.]

As soon as one [cold] has departed with the usual final stage of stuffiness, another presents itself.

George Eliot, in Cross, II. xii.

stuffing (stuf'ing), n. [Verbal n. of stuff, v.] 1.

The material used for filling a cushion, a mattress, a horse-collar, the skin of a bird or other animal, etc.

Your titles are not writ on posts,
Or hollow statues which the best men are,
Without Promethean stuffings reached from heaven!

B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

2. In cooking, seasoned or flavored material, such as bread-crumbs, chestnuts, mashed potatoes, or oysters, used for filling the body of a fowl, or the hollow from which a bone has been taken in a joint of meat, before cooking, to keep the whole in shape, and to impart flavor.

Idle, a little of the stuffing. It'll make your hair curl.

Thackeray, Phillip, xvi.

Geese and ducks to be freighted hereafter with savoury stuffing.

Lemon, Wait for the End, i. 14.

3. The art or operation of filling and mounting the skin of an animal; taxidermy. Two main methods of stuffing are distinguished as soft and hard.
In the former the skin is wired, or otherwise fixed on an internal framework, and cotton or tow is introduced, bit by bit, till the desired form is secured. In the latter a solid mass of tow, shaped like the animal, is introduced within the skin, which is then molded upon this artificial body.
Hard stuffing is usually practised upon birds.

4. A filling of indifferent or superfluous material for the sake of extension, as in a book; padding.

If these topics be insufficient habitually to supply what compositors call the requisite stuffing, . . . recourse is to be had to reviews.

W. Taylor, in Robberds's Memoir, I. 425. (Davies.)

5. A mixture of fish-oil and tallow rubbed into leather to soften it and render it supple and water-proof. E. H. Knight.

The leather to receive grease or stuffing is usually placed in a rotating drum or wheel. C. T. Davis, Leather, p. 410.

6. The wooden wedges or folds of paper used to wedge the plates of a comb-cutter's saw into the two grooves in the stock.—Rough stuffing, a composition of yellow ochre, white lead, varnish, and japan, used as a groundwork in painting carriages.

stuffing-box (stuf'ing-boks), n. In mach., a contrivance for securing a steam-, air-, or watertight joint when it is required to pass a movable rod out of a vessel or into it. It consists of a close box cast round the hole through which the rod passes, in which is laid, around the rod and in contact a, cylinder head; b, box cast integrally with the head a; c, pistonrod; d, d, packing wound about the rod; e, follower for compressing the packing; f, f, bolts and nuts for forcing the follower against the packing.

with it, a quantity of hemp or india-rubber packing. This packing is lubricated with oily matter, and a ring is then placed on the top of it and pressed down by screws, so as to squeeze the packing into every crevice. The stuffing-box is used in steam-engines, in pumps, on the shaft of a screw steamer where it passes through the stern, etc.
Also called packing-box.—Lantern stuffing-box, a long stuffing-box with tightening-bolts, used in some marine engines. E. H. Knight

stuffing-brush (stuf'ing-brush), n. A stiff brush for rubbing stuffing into leather.

stuffing-machine (stuf'ing-ma-shēn'), n. In tanning and currying, a machine for working stuffing into leather.

stuffing-wheel (stuf'ing-hwēl), n. In tanning, a stuffing-machine in which leather is worked with stuffing in a revolving hollow drum, the a, cylinder head; b, box cast integrally with the head a; c, pistonrod; d, d, packing wound about the rod; e, follower for compressing the packing; f, f, bolts and nuts for forcing the follower against the packing.

heat being variously applied by a steam-jacket, an internal steam-coil, or (now rarely) by direct admission of steam into the drum.

stuffy (stuf'ī), a. [stuff + -y]. 1. Close, as if from being stuffed and unaired; musty from closeness; oppressive to the head or lungs.

The huts let in the frost in winter and the heat in summer, and were at once stuffy and draughty.

Mrs. J. W. Ewing, Short Life, ii.

2. Stuffed out; fat: said of a person. [Prov. Eng.]—3. Affected as if by stuffing; muffled: said of the voice or speech.

Why, this was Mrs. Vangilt herself; her own stuffy voice, interspersed with the familiar coughs and gasps.

Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 548.

4. Made of good stuff; stout; resolute; mettlesome. [Scotch.]—5. Angry; sulky; obstinate. [Colloq., U. S.]

stuggy (stug'ī), a. [A dial. var. of stogy, stocky.] Stucky; thick-set; stout. [Devonshire, Eng.]

We are of a thickset breed. . . Like enough, we could meet them, man for man, . . . and show them what a cross-buttock means, because we are so stuggy.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, v.

stuket, n. An old spelling of stuck.

stull¹ (stul), n. [Prob. < G. stolle, < MHG. stolle, OHG. stollo, a support, prop, post. Cf. stool, stulm.] In mining, a heavy timber secured in an excavation, and especially in the stopes.

On the stulls rests the lagging, and they together form the support for the attle, or deads, which is left in the mine partly to keep the excavation from falling together and partly to avoid the expense of raising worthless rock.

stull² (stul), n. [Origin obscure.] A luncheon; also, a large piece of bread, cheese, or other eatable. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

stulp (stulp), n. [E. dial. also stolp, stoup, *stoup*⁴; early mod. E. stoupe; < ME. stulpe, stolpe, < Icel. stólpi = Sw. Dan. stolpe = MD. stolpe, a post, pillar. Cf. stull.] A short stout post of wood or stone set in the ground for any purpose.

But III foote high on stulpes must ther be a floor for hem.

Palladius, Hushondrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 39.

stultification (stul'ti-fī-kā'shōn), n. [LL. stultificare, turn into foolishness (see stultify), + -ation.] The act of stultifying, or the state of being stultified. Imp. Dict.

stultifier (stul'ti-fī-ēr), n. [LL. stultify + *-er*¹.] One who or that which stultifies.

stultify (stul'ti-fī), v. t.; pret. and pp. stultified, ppr. stultifying. [LL. stultificare, turn into foolishness, < L. stultus, foolish, silly, + facere, make.] 1. To make or cause to appear foolish; reduce to foolishness or absurdity: used of persons or things.

We stick at technical difficulties. I think there never was a people so choked and stultified by forms.

Emerson, Affairs in Kansas.

Mythologists . . . contrived . . . to stultify the mythology they professed to explain.

E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, I. 252.

2. To look upon as a fool; regard as foolish. [Rare.]

The modern sciolist stultifies all understandings but his own, and that which he regards as his own.

Hazlitt. (Imp. Dict.)

To stultify one's self. (a) To deny, directly or by implication, what one has already asserted; expose one's self to the charge of self-contradiction. (b) In law, to allege one's own insanity.

stultiloquence (stul-tī-lō-kwens), n. [LL. stultiloquentia, foolish talk, babbling, < stultiloquen(t)-s, equiv. to stultiloquus, talking foolishly; see stultiloquent.] Foolish or stupid talk; senseless babble. Bailey, 1731.

stultiloquent (stul-tī-lō-kwent), a. [*LL. stultiloquen(t)-s, equiv. to stultiloquus, talking foolishly, < stultus, foolish, + loquen(t)-s, ppr. of loqui, talk, speak.] Given to stultiloquence, or foolish talk. Imp. Dict.

stultiloquently (stul-tī-lō-kwent-lī), adv. In a stultiloquent manner; with foolish talk.

stultiloquy (stul-tī-lō-kwi), n. [LL. stultiloquium, foolish talking, < stultiloquus, talking foolishly; see stultiloquent.] Foolish talk; silly babbling. [Rare.]

What they call facetiousness and pleasant wit is indeed to all wise persons a mere stultiloquy, or talking like a fool.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 741.

stulty, a. [L. stultus, foolish.] Foolish; stupid.

Shall the hen be blamed for it breed a foole naturally by his own stulty wit in stering?

Testament of Love, ii. (Richardson.)

stum (stum), n. [Also dial. stoom; < D. stom, unfermented wine, must, < stom, mute, quiet, = OS. stum = MLG. stum, LG. stumm = OHG. MHG. stum, G. stumm = Sw. Dan. stum, dumb, mute; akin to *stem*³, v., stammer. Cf. F. rin muet, 'mute wine.'] Unfermented or partly fermented grape-juice. Specifically—(a) Must which has not yet begun to ferment. (b) Must the fermentation of which has been checked by some ingredient mixed with it.

Let our wines without mixture or stum be all fine, Or call up the master, and break his dull noddle.

B. Jonson, Leges Convivales, v.

stum (stum), v. t.; pret. and pp. stunned, ppr. stunning. [Also stoom; < D. stommen; from the noun; see stum, n.] 1. To prevent from fermenting; operate upon (wine) in a manner to prevent after-fermentation in casks. A common method is, before filling them, to burn sulphur in the casks with the bung-holes stopped. The sulphur is coated upon a linen rag, lighted, and then dropped in through the bung-hole, which is thereupon immediately closed. The wood of the cask is thus saturated with sulphur dioxide, which destroys all the germs of fermentation contained in it, and when the wine is put in a minute portion of the sulphur dioxide is dissolved in the liquor. Sodium sulphite added to wine in small quantity produces a similar result. Salicylic acid in minute quantity also prevents after-fermentation. A few drops of oil of mustard or a little mustard-seed dropped into wine will also stum it.

When you with High-Dutch Heeren dine, Expect false Latin and stum'd Wine.

Prior, Upon a Passage in Scaligeriana.

We stum our wines to renew their spirits.

Sir J. Floyer.

2. To fume with sulphur or brimstone, as a cask. [Prov. Eng.]

stumble (stum'bl), v.; pret. and pp. stumbled, ppr. stumbling. [ME. stumblen, stumblen, stumlen, stummelen, stomelen, stomelin = MD. stomelen, D. stommelen, stumble, = OHG. stumbalon, bnstle, = Sw. dial. stambla, stamma, stomla = Norw. stumbla, stumble, falter; a var. of stummer, q. v., and ult. of stammer. Cf. stump.] I. intrans. 1. To slip or trip in moving on the feet; make a false step; strike the foot, or miss footing, so as to stagger or fall.

He made the kynge Rion for to stumble, that was sory for his brasen malle that he hadde so loste.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 339.

If my horse had happened to stumble, he had fallen downe with me.

Coryat, Crudities, I. 89.

Stumbling at every obstacle . . . left in the path, he at last . . . attained a terrace extending in front of the Place of Fairladies.

Scott, Redgauntlet, ch. xv.

2. To move or act unsteadily or in a staggering manner; trip in doing or saying anything; make false steps or blunders, as from confusion or inattention: as, to stumble through a performance.

Fray Inocencio, who was terribly frightened at speaking to so great a personage, grew pale and stumbled in his speech.

The Century, XXXVIII. 351.

3. To take a false step or be staggered mentally or morally; trip, as against a stumbling-block; find an occasion of offense; be offended or tempted.

He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. 1 John ii. 10.

This Article of God's sending his Son into the World, which they seem most to stumble at.

Stillingfleet, Sermons, III. ix.

4. To come accidentally or unexpectedly; chance; happen; light: with on or upon.

Chance sometimes, in experimenting, maketh us to stumble upon somewhat which is new.

Bacon, Praise of Knowledge (ed. 1887).

On what evil day Has he then stumbled?

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 415.

II. trans. 1. To cause to stumble; cause to trip; stagger; trip up.

False and dazzling fires to stumble men.

Milton, Divorce, ii. 3.

2. To puzzle; perplex; embarrass; nonplus; confound. [Archaic.]

One thing more stumbles me in the very foundation of this hypothesis.

Locke.

We do not wonder he [President Edwards] was stumbled with this difficulty, for it is simply fatal to his theory.

Bibliotheca Sacra, XLV. 616.

stumble (stum'bl), n. [stumble, v.] 1. The act of stumbling; a trip in walking or running.

He would have tripped at the upward step. . . Then he apologized for his little stumble.

Trollope, Last Chron. of Barset, xlix.

2. A blunder; a failure; a false step.

One stumble is enough to deface the character of an honourable life.

Sir R. L'Estrange.

stumbler (stum'blēr), n. [ME. stumcler, stomclarc; < stumble + *-er*¹.] One who stumbles, in any sense. G. Herbert, Church Porch.

stumbling-block (stum'bling-blok), n. Any cause of stumbling or failing; that which presents itself as a difficulty in one's way; a hindrance or obstruction, physically or morally; an offense or temptation.

We preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness. 1 Cor. i. 23.

Indeed this [coasting trade-wind] was the great stumbling block that we met with in running from the Gallapagos Islands for the Island Cocos.

Dampier, Voyages, II. iii. 15.

stumblingly (stum'bling-lī), adv. In a stumbling or blundering manner.

I . . . marvel . . . that wee in this cleare age make so stumblingly after him [Chancer].

Sir P. Sidney, Apol. for Poetrie, p. 62.

stumbling-stone (stum'bling-stōn), n. Same as stumbling-block.

This stumblingstone we hope to take away.

T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

stumbly (stum'bli), a. [stumble + -y]. Liable to stumble; given to stumbling. [Rare.]

The miserable horses of the peasants are awfully slow and very stumbly.

The Century, XL. 570.

stummel (stum'el), n. The short part of a tobacco-pipe, consisting of the pipe-bowl and a short section of the stem or a socket for the attachment of a stem or mouthpiece. Heyl, U. S. Import Duties (1889), iii. 95.

stummer (stum'ēr), v. i. [ME. stomercu = Icel. Norw. stumra = Dan. stumre, stumble; cf. stumble and stammer.] To stumble. [Prov. Eng.]

stump (stump), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also stampe; < ME. stumpe, stompe = MD. stompe, D. stomp = OHG. stumph, MHG. G. stumpf = Icel. stump = Dan. Sw. stump, a stump, = Lith. stambra, a stump; Skt. stambha, a post, stem. Cf. stub.] I. n. 1. The truncated lower end of a tree or large shrub; the part of a vegetable trunk or stem of some size left rooted in the ground when the main part falls or is cut down; after eradication, the stub with the attached roots; used absolutely, the stub of a tree: as, the stump of an oak; cabbage-stumps; to clear a field of stumps.

Their courtly figures, seated on the stump Of an old yew, their favorite resting-place.

Wordsworth, Excursion, vi.

They disposed themselves variously on stumps and boulders, and sat expectant. Bret Harte, Tennessee's Partner.

2. A truncated part of anything extended in length; that part which remains after the main or more important part has been removed; a stub: as, the stump of a limb; the stump of a tooth; a cigar-stump.

The stump of Dagon, whose head and bands were cut off by his fall.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 30.

A Gauntlet of hot Oil was clapped upon the stump [of an amputated arm], to stanch the blood.

Howell, Letters, I. i. 18.

3. pl. Legs: as, to stir one's stumps. [Colloq.]

How should we hustle forward? give some counsel How to bestir our stumps in these cross ways.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, iii. 1.

4. A post. [Prov. Eng.]—5. One of the three posts constituting a wicket in the game of cricket. They are called respectively the leg-stump (next to which the batsman stands), middle stump, and off-stump. Their lower ends are pointed so as to be easily driven into the ground; the height at which they stand when fixed is 27 inches, and the width of the three, including the space between them, 8 inches. The top of each stump is grooved, and in the grooves the two small pieces of wood called bails, each 4 inches long, are laid from stump to stump.

6. A rubbing instrument used for toning the lights and shades of crayon- or charecoal-drawings, and sometimes for softening or broadening the lines of pencil-drawings and for applying solid tints with powdered colors. It is a short thick roll of paper or soft leather, or a bar of india-rubber, pointed at both ends.—7. In a lock, a projection on which a dog, fence, or tumbler rests. Sometimes it is introduced to prevent the improper retraction of the bolt, and sometimes to guide a moving part.—8. A place or an occasion of popular political oratory; a political rostrum or platform; hence, partizan public speaking; popular advocacy of a cause: as, to take the stump, or go on the stump, for a candidate. This meaning of the word arose from the frequent early use in the United States of a tree stump as a rostrum in open-air political meetings. It does not necessarily convey a derogatory implication.

Superficial politicians on the stump still talk of the Gladstonian policy of 1856 as if it existed in 1889.

Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 748.

9. In coal-mining, a small pillar of coal left between the gangway or airway and the breasts to protect these passages; any small pillar. Penn. Surr. Gloss.—10. A blunted sound; a sound which seems to be suddenly cut off or stopped; a thud. [Rare.]

Far up the valley the distant stump of a musket-shot reaches our ears. The Century, XXXVIII, 399.

11. A challenge or defiance to do something considered impracticable, very difficult, or very daring—that is, something to stump the person attempting it. [Colloq., U. S.]

The reason for this little freak was a stump on the part of some musicians, because . . . it was not supposed he could handle a baton. He did it.

Elect. Rev. (Amer.), XIV, 4.

12. In entom., a very short vein or nervure of the wing, arising from another vein, and suddenly ending without emitting branches.—13. Of worms, a foot-stump. See parapodium, 1.—To start a vessel from the stump. See start.—Up a stump, stumped; nonplussed; “up a tree.”

II. a. i. Stumped; stumpy; truncated; like a stump or stub; as, a dog with a stump tail.

A heave stompe leg of wood to go withal.

Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 127.

2. Of or pertaining to the stump in the political sense; as, a stump speech or speaker; stump eloquence.

The florid eloquence of his (Lincoln's) stump speeches. The Century, XXXIX, 575.

Stump tracery, in arch., a name for a late German variety of interpenetrating medieval pointed tracery, in which the molded bar is represented as contorted and passing through itself at intervals, and cut off short so as to form a stump after every such interpenetration.

stump (stump), v. [Also stump; < stump, n.] I. trans. 1. To truncate; lop; reduce to a stump.

Around the stumped top soft mosses did grow.

Dr. H. More, Psychozofia, ii, 50.

2. To strike unexpectedly and sharply, as the foot or toes, against something fixed; stub; as, to stump one's toe against a stone. [Colloq.]—

3. To bring to a halt by obstacle or impediment; block the course of; stall; foil; of American origin, from the obstruction to vehicles offered by stumps left in a cleared tract without a road. [Colloq.]

Be inventive. Cultivate the creative side of your brain. Don't be stumped. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII, 337.

Uncle Sam himself confesses that he can do everything but enjoy himself. That, he admits, stumps him. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII, 977.

Hence—4. To challenge or dare to do something difficult, dangerous, or adventurous. [Colloq., U. S.]

In some games . . . younger children are commanded, or older ones stumped or dared, to do dangerous things, like walking a picket fence or a high roof. Amer. Jour. Psychol., III, 66.

5. To make stump speeches in or to; canvass or address with stump oratory; as, to stump a county or a constituency. [Colloq.]—6. In cricket: (a) To knock down a stump or the stumps of.

A herd of boys with clamour bowl'd,

And stump'd the wicket. Tennyson, Princess, ProL

(b) To put (a batsman) out by knocking down his wicket with the ball when, in an attempt to hit the ball, he has gone off the ground allotted to him: sometimes with out; as, he was stumped, or stumped out. Hence—7. To defeat; impoverish; ruin.

Don't you know our history?—haven't you heard, my dear fellow, we are stumped? T. Hook, Gilbert Gurney, xiv.

[He] had shrunk his “weak means,” and was stump'd and “hard up.” Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II, 47.

8. To pay on the spot; plank down; hand over; generally with up. [Slang.]

My trusty old crony,

Do stump up three thousand once more as a loan.

Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II, 48.

How much is the captain going to stump up?

It. D. Blackmore, Christowell, I, xxiii.

9. In art., to use a stump upon; tone or modify by the application of a stump; as, to stump a crayon- or charcoal-drawing.—10. In hat-making, to stretch out (a felted wool hat) after the operation of washing, and prior to drying.

II. intrans. 1. To walk stiffly, heavily, or noisily, as if on stumps or wooden legs.

He rose from his seat, stumped across the room.

Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xii.

The guard picks him off the coach-top and sets him on his legs, and they stump off into the bar.

T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, i, 4.

2. To make stump speeches; conduct electioneering by public speaking; make harangues from the stump. See stump, n., 8. [Colloq.]

There will be a severe contest between the Conservatives, who are stumping vigorously, and Mr. — and the Republicans. The Nation, VI, 242.

To stump it. (a) To take to flight; run off. [Slang.]

Stump it, my cove; that 's a Bow-street runner.

Bulwer, Night and Morning, ii, 2.

(b) To travel about making stump speeches. [Colloq.] stumpage (stum'pāj), n. [< stump + -age.] 1. Standing timber; timber-trees collectively, as in a particular tract of forest, with reference to their value for cutting or stumping, independently of that of the land. [U. S.]

No forest lands are to be sold, but the stumpage on them may be disposed of in the discretion of the commissioner of forests. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVIII, 98.

2. A tax levied in some of the United States on the amount and value of timber cut for commercial purposes.

stumper (stum'pèr), n. [< stump + -er.] One who or that which stumps, in any sense.

“How many legs has a caterpillar got?” I need hardly add that the question was a stumper to the good bishop. N. and Q., 7th ser., XI, 117.

stump-extractor (stum'pèks-trak'tòr), n. 1. A tool or appliance for removing the stumps of trees in clearing woodland. They range from a simple hand-lever and cant-hook to frames and tripods or strong four-wheel carriages bearing a screw, toggle-joint, tackle, or windlass operated by hand- or horse-power. Also called stump-puller.

2. A dental instrument for extracting the stumps of teeth.

stumpiness (stum'pi-nes), n. The state or condition of being stumpy.

stump-joint (stum'pòint), n. A form of joint in which the ends or stumps of the parts joined rest against each other when in line, and permit movement in but one direction, as the joint of the common carpenters' rule. See cut under rule-joint.

stump-puller (stum'pùl'èr), n. Same as stump-extractor, 1.

stump-tailed (stum'pàld), a. Having a short stumpy tail; humped; curtail.

stump-tree (stum'p'rè), n. The Kentucky coffee-tree, Gymnocladus Canadensis; so called from its lack of small branches. See cut under Gymnocladus, Fallows.

stumpy (stum'pì), a. [< stump + -y.] Cf. stubby.] 1. Abounding with stumps of trees.

We were shaving stumpy shores, like that at the foot of Madrid bend. S. L. Clemens, Life on the Mississippi, p. 134.

2. Having the character or appearance of a stump; short and thick; stubby; stocky.

A pair of stumpy bow-legs supported his squat, unwieldy figure. Poe, King Pest.

A thick-set, stumpy old copy of Richard Baxter's “Holy Commonwealth.” J. P. Fields, Underbrush, p. 15.

stumpy (stum'pì), n. [< stump, v. t., s.] Ready money; cash. [Slang.]

Down with the stumpy; a tizzy for a pot of half-and-half. Kingsley, Alton Locke, ii. (Darvies).

stun (stun), v. t.; and pp. stunned, ppr. stunning. [*< ME. stonien, stonien, < AS. stunian, make a din; cf. leel. stynja, Sw. stöna, Dan. stönne, D. steunen (> G. stöhnen), groan (leel. stynr, etc., a groan); AS. pret. ā-sten for *ā-stēn, implying an orig. strong verb stēnan; OBulg. stenja, Russ. steniti, Lith. stencti, Gr. στένει, groan; Skt. √ stan, sound, thunder. Hence the dial. or obs. var. stound; also in comp. astun, astound, astony, astonish, etc., with variations due in part to confusion with other words: see the words cited.] 1. To strike the ears of rudely, as it were by blows of sound; shock the hearing or the sense of; stupefy or bewilder by distracting noise.

We were stunned with these confused noises.

Addison, Tatler, No. 254.

Tho' Shouts of Thunder loud afflict the Air.

Stun the Birds now releas'd, and shake the Iv'ry Chair.

Prior, Solomon, iii.

2. To strike with stupor physically, as by a blow or violence of any kind; deprive of consciousness or strength.

So was he stound with stroke of her huge taile.

Spenser, F. Q., V, xi, 29.

The giddy ship betwixt the winds and tides,
Fore'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,
Stunn'd with the different blows.

Dryden, Cym. and Iph., 1, 341.

3. To benumb; stupefy; deaden.

That she [the cramp-fish] not only staves them in the Deep,

But stuns their sense, and lulls them fast a-sleep.

Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i, 5.

The assailants, . . . stunned by the furious, unexpected, and multiplied nature of the resistance offered, could hardly stand to their arms. Scott, Quentin Durward, xxvii.

The little weak infant soul, which had just awakened to her, had been crushed and stunned in its very birth-hour. Kingsley, Hypatia, xxviii.

4. To strike with astonishment; astound; amaze.

At the sight, therefore, of this River the Pilgrims were much stunned.

Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

The multitude, unacquainted with the best models, are captivated by whatever stuns and dazzles them.

Macaulay, Madame D'Arbly.

stun¹ (stum), n. [< stun¹, v. Cf. stound².] A stroke; a shock; a stupefying blow, whether physical or mental; a stunning effect.

With such a stun

Came the amazement that, absorb'd in it,

He saw not three wonderers. Keats, Endymion, ii.

The electrical flash is a stun too quickly applied to be painful.

Sci. Amer., N. S., LXIII, 200.

stun² (stum), n. [Origin obscure.] In marble-working, one of the deep marks made by coarse particles of sand getting between the saw-blade and the side of the kerf. O. Byrne.

stundt, n. See stound.

stung (stung). Preterit and past participle of *sting*¹.

stunk (stungk). Preterit and past participle of stink.

stunner (stum'er), n. [< stun¹ + -er.] One who or that which stuns, or excites astonishment; a person, an action, or a thing that astounds or amazes. [Colloq.]

I am busy working a cap for you, dear aunty, . . . and I think when finished [it] will be quite a stunner.

E. B. Itinerary, Scottish Life and Character, iv.

stunning (stum'ing), n. [Verbal n. of *stun*¹, v.] The act or condition expressed by the verb stun; stupefaction.

They (symptoms of pathological collapse) appear in succession, and run from a condition of stunning or partial torpor into a state of general insensibility.

J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 98.

stunning (stum'ing), p. a. [Ppr. of *stun*¹, v.] Very striking; astonishing, especially by fine quality or appearance; of a most admirable or wonderful kind. [Colloq.]

He heard another say that he would tell them of a stunning workhouse for a good supper and breakfast.

Gibson-Turner, Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 294.

What a stunning tap, Tom! You are a winner for hotting the swipes. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, li, 3.

stunningly (stum'ing-li), adv. In a stunning manner; so as to produce a stunning effect. [Chiefly colloq.]

Gale, . . . visible by the tossing boughs, stunningly audible.

The Century, XXVII, 36.

stunsail (stum'sl), n. A nautical contraction of studdingsail.

stunt (stunt), a. [*< ME. stunt, < AS. stont, dull, obtuse, stupid, = leel. stuttr (for stuntr) = OSw. stunt = Norw. stutt, short, stunted.] 1†. Dull; obtuse; stupid; foolish. Ormulund, 1, 3714.—2. Fierce; angry. [Prov. Eng.]

stunt (stunt), v. t. [< ME. stunten; < stunt, a. Cf. stint, a var. of stunt, v.; cf. also stut².] 1. To make a fool of. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To check; cramp; hinder; stint: used of growth or progress.

Oligarchy, wherever it has existed, has always stunted the growth of genius. Macaulay, Mitford's Hist. Greece.

3. To check the growth or development of; hinder the increase or progress of; cramp; dwarf: as, to stunt a child by hard usage.

The hardy sect grew up and flourished in spite of everything that seemed likely to stunt it.

Macaulay, Nugent's Hampden.

stunt (stunt), n. [< stunt, v.] 1. An animal which has been prevented from attaining its proper growth: a stunted creature; specifically, a whale of two years, which, having been weaned, is lean, and yields but little blubber.—

2. A check in growth; a partial or complete arrest of development or progress.

Are not our educations commonly like a pile of books laid over a plant in a pot? The compressed nature struggles through at every crevice, but can never get the cramp and stunt out of it.

Lovell, Fireside Travels, p. 137.

stunted (stum'ted), p. a. Checked in growth; undeveloped; dwarfed.

Where stunted birches hid the rill.

Scott, Marmion, iii, 1.

There is a seed of the future in each of us, which we can unfold if we please, or leave to be forever only a stunted, half-grown stalk. J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 40.

I lived for years a stunted sunless life.

Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

stuntedness (stum'ted-nes), n. The state of being stunted.

stuntiness (stum'ti-nes), n. Same as stuntedness. Cheyne, Philos. Conjectures. [Rare.]

stuntness (stum'tnes), n. [Prop. stuntnedness.] Stunted brevity; shortness. [Rare.]

Short sentences are prevalent in our language, as long ones are in German. In all things we incline to curtness and stuntness. J. Earle.

stupa¹ (stū'pū), n.; pl. stupae (-pē). [L.: see stupel.] 1. Same as stupel.—2. In bot., tufted or matted filamentous matter like tow.

stupa² (stū'pū), n. [Skt. stūpa (> Hind. top, > E. lope: see lope), a mount, mound, accumulation.] In Buddhist arch., one of a class of dome-like edifices erected in honor of some event, or as a monument to mark a sacred spot. The sense is sometimes extended to include the dagoba, or shrine containing a relic of Buddha (see dagoba). Also called lope. See Buddhist architecture (b), under Buddhist.

stupe¹ (stūp), n. [L. stupa, stuppa, < Gr. στύπη, the coarse part of flax, tow. Cf. stuff, stop.] 1. A pledget of tow, flannel, or similar material, used as a dressing in treating a wound.

The several stupes and dressings being skillfully applied, the children were ordered to their respective beds. Brooke, Fool of Quality, iii.

2. Flannel or other cloth wrung out of hot water and applied as a fomentation. It may be sprinkled with some active substance, as turpentine.

Turpentine stupes applied over the chest. J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 160.

stupe¹ (stūp), v. t.; pret. and pp. stuped, ppr. stuping. [L. stupa, n.] To apply a stupe to; foment. Wiseman, Surgery.

stupe² (stūp), n. [An abbr. of stupid.] A stupid person. [Colloq.]

Was ever such a poor stupe! Bickerstaff, Love In a Village, ii. 2.

stupefacient (stū-pē-fā'shēnt), a. and n. [L. stupefaciens (-t-s), ppr. of stupefacere, make stupid or senseless: see stupefy.] 1. a. Having a stupefying power.

II. n. A medicine which produces stupor or insensibility; a narcotic.

stupefaction (stū-pē-fak'shōn), n. [= F. stupéfaction = Sp. estupefacción = Pg. estupefacção = It. stupefazione, < L. stupefacere, stupefy: see stupefy.] 1. The act of stupefying, or the state of being stupefied.—2. A stolid or senseless state; torpor; insensibility; stupidity.

Resistance of the dictates of conscience brings a hardness and stupefaction upon it. South.

Stupefaction is not resignation; and it is stupefaction to remain in ignorance. George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, v. 3.

stupefactive (stū-pē-fak'tiv), a. and n. [= OF. stupéfactif, F. stupéfactif = Sp. Pg. estupefactivo = It. stupefattivo, < ML. stupéfactivus, serving to stupefy, < L. stupefactus, pp. of stupefacere, stupefy: see stupefy.] 1. a. Causing insensibility; deadening or blunting the sense of feeling or the understanding; stupefacient.

II. n. That which stupefies; specifically, a medicine that produces stupor; a stupefacient. [Rare.]

The operation of opium and *stupefactive*s upon the spirits of living creatures. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 74.

stupefiedness (stū'pē-fid-nes), n. The state of being stupefied; stupefaction; insensibility.

We know that insensibility of pain may as well proceed from the deadness and stupefiedness of the part as from a perfect and unmolested health. Boyle, Works, VI. 6.

stupefier (stū'pē-fī-ēr), n. [L. stupefy + -er.] One who or that which stupefies, or makes insensible or stupid.

stupefy (stū'pē-fī), v.; pret. and pp. stupéified, ppr. stupéifying. [Formerly also stupify; = F. stupéfier (< L. as if stupéficare*), equiv. to It. stupefare, < L. stupefacere, make senseless, deaden, benumb, stupefy, < stupere, be struck senseless, + facere, make (see -fy).] I. trans. 1. To make stupid or torpid; blunt the faculties of; deprive of sensibility by any means; make dull or dead to external influences: as, to be stupéified by a blow on the head, by strong drink, or by grief.

The dead-numbing night-shade, The stupéifying hemlock, adder's tongue, And marigau. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, ii. 2. His anxiety stupéified instead of quickening his senses. Mrs. O'Flaherty, Poor Gentleman, xlv.

2. To deprive of mobility: said of a substance or material.

This stupéifieth the quicksilver that it runneth no more. Bacon, Physiol. Remains, Compounding of Metals.

II. intrans. To become stupid or torpid; lose interest or sensibility; grow dull. [Rare.]

I which live in the country without stupéifying am not in darkness, but in shadow. Donne, Letters, iv.

stupend¹ (stū-pend'), a. [= Sp. Pg. estupendo = It. stupendo, < L. stupendus, astonishing: see stupendus.] Stupendous.

The Romans had their public baths very sumptuous and stupend. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 285.

stupendous¹ (stū-pen'di-us), n. [An erroneous form for stupendus.] Stupendous.

There was not one Almighty to begin The great stupendous Work. Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 19.

stupendously¹ (stū-pen'di-us-li), adv. Stupendously. Sandys, Paraph. upon Lamentations.

stupendly¹ (stū-pend'li), adv. Stupendously; amazingly.

The Britons are so stupendly superstitious in their ceremonies that they go beyond those Persians. Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 509.

stupendus (stū-pen'dus), a. [L. stupendus, amazing, astonishing, fut. part. pass. of stupere, be stunned or astonished: see stupid.] Causing stupor or astonishment; astounding; amazing; specifically, astonishing from greatness in extent or degree; of wonderful magnitude; immense; prodigious: as, a stupendus work of nature or art; a stupendus blunder.

All are but parts of one stupendus whole. Pope, Essay on Man, i. 267.

Like reptiles in a corner of some stupendus palace, we peep from our holes. Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xxii.

How stupendus a mystery is the incarnation and sufferings of the Son of God! J. H. Newman, Parochial Sermons, i. 209.

stupendously² (stū-pen'dus-li), adv. In a stupendous manner.

stupendousness (stū-pen'dus-nes), n. The character or state of being stupendous. Bailey, 1727.

stupent (stū'pent), a. [L. stupen(t)-s, ppr. of stupere, be struck senseless, be stunned or astonished.] Struck with stupor; stunned; dumfounded; aghast. [Rare.]

We will say mournfully, in the presence of Heaven and Earth, that we stand speechless, stupent, and know not what to say! Carlyle. (Imp. Dict.) stuppeous (stū'pē-us), a. [L. stupa, stuppa, tow: see stupel.] In entom., covered with long, loose scales, like tow, as the palpi of some lepidopterous insects; stuppe.

stupid (stū'pid), a. and n. [= F. stupide = Sp. estúpido = Pg. estúpido = It. stupido, < L. stupidus, struck senseless, amazed, confounded, stupid, stolid, < stupere, be amazed or confounded, be struck senseless: see stupent.] I. a. 1. In a state of stupor; having the faculties deadened or dulled; stupefied, either permanently or temporarily; benumbed.

Is he not stupid With age and altering rhyma? Shak., W. T., iv. 4. 409.

One cannot weep, his fears congeal his grief; But, stupid, with dry eyes expects his fate. Dryden, Ceyx and Aleyone, l. 179.

2. Lacking ordinary activity of mind; dull in ideas or expression; slow-witted; obtuse; crass.

A man who cannot write with wit on a proper subject is dull and stupid. Addison, Spectator, No. 291.

A stupid preacher of unrighteousness, who would constantly make them yaww. Whipple, Memoir of Starr King.

3. Characterized by mental dullness or inanity; witless; senseless; foolish; inane: as, a stupid joke; a stupid book; stupid fears.

Observe what loads of stupid rhymes Oppress us in corrupted times. Swift.

=Syn. 1. Heavy, dull, drowsy, lethargic, comatose, torpid.—2. Muddy-brained, muddled.—3. Silly, Foolish, etc. (see absurd); flat, tame, humdrum, pointless, prosaic. See list under foolish.

II. n. A stupid or humdrum person; a block-head; a dunce. [Colloq.]

Tom . . . inconsiderately laughed when her horses [of cards] fell, and told her she was "a stupid." George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, i. 9.

stupiditarian (stū-pid-i-tā'ri-an), n. [L. stupiditas + -itarian.] A person characterized by stupidity; one who thinks or acts stupidly; a dullard. [Rare.]

How often do history and the newspapers exhibit to us the spectacle of a heavy-headed stupiditarian in official station, veiling the sheerest incompetency in a mysterious sublimity of carriage! Whipple, Lit. and Life, p. 143.

stupidity (stū-pid'i-ti), n. [= F. stupidité = It. stupidità, < L. stupiditas(-s), senselessness, dullness, < stupidus, senseless, stupid: see stupid.] 1. A state of stupor or stupefaction; torpidity of feeling or of mind. [Rare.]

A stupidity Past admiration strikes me, joined with fear. Chapman.

2. The character or quality of being stupid; extreme dullness of perception or understanding; inanity; crass ignorance.

The mind ought not to be reduced to stupidity, but to retain pleasure. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii.

A consideration of the fat stupidity and gross ignorance concerning what importa men most to know. Burke, Rev. in France.

For getting a fine flourishing growth of stupidity there is nothing like pouring out on a mind a good amount of subjects in which it feels no interest. George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, v. 2.

=Syn. See stupid.

stupidly (stū'pid-li), adv. In a stupid manner or degree; so as to be or appear stupid, dazed, or foolish; with stupidity: as, stupidly drunk: to be stupidly cautious; to speak stupidly.

stupidness (stū'pid-nes), n. The quality of being stupid; stupidity. [Rare.]

stupidness, stupidfy, etc. Erroneous spellings of stupefiedness, etc.

stupor (stū'por), n. [= F. stupéur = Sp. Pg. estupor = It. stupore, < L. stupor, insensibility, numbness, dullness, < stupere, be struck senseless, be amazed or confounded: see stupent, stupid.] 1. Suspension or great diminution of sensibility; a state in which the faculties are deadened or dazed; torpidity of feeling.

The first flashing of the candles upon that canvas had seemed to dissipate the dreamy stupor which was stealing over my senses. Poe, Tales, i. 367.

The injured person is . . . in a condition between stupor and insensibility, with other signs of general prostration. J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 414.

2. Intellectual insensibility; dullness of perception or understanding; mental or moral numbness.

Our Church stands haltered, dumb, like a dumb ox; lewning only for provender (of tithes); content if it can have that; or, with dumb stupor, expecting its further doom. Carlyle, French Rev., I. ii. 3.

Anergic stupor. Same as stuporous insanity (which see, under stuporous).

stuporous (stū'por-us), a. [L. stupor + -ous.] Characterized by stupor; having stupor as a conspicuous symptom. [Recent.]—Stuporous insanity, a psychoneurosis, usually of young adults, characterized by extreme apathy and dementia, ensuing usually on conditions of exhaustion from shock or otherwise, and generally issuing in recovery after a few weeks or months. Also called acute dementia, primary dementia, primary curable dementia, and anergic stupor.

Stuporous insanity being a recoverable form, dementia would more properly include cases of traumatism resembling it. Allen, and Newell, IX. 458.

stupose (stū'pōs), a. [L. stupa, stuppa, tow (see stupel), + -ose.] In bot. and cool., bearing tufts or mats of long hairs; composed of matted filaments like tow. Compare stuppeous.

stuprate (stū'prāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. stuprated, ppr. stuprating. [L. stupratus, pp. of stuprare (> It. stuprare = Sp. Pg. estuprar), defile, debauch, < stuprum, defilement, dishonor.] To debauch; ravish.

stupration (stū-prā'shōn), n. [L. as if stupratio*(-n), < stuprare, defile, debauch, see stuprate.] Violation of chastity by force; rape.

stuprum (stū'prum), n. [NL., < L. stuprum, defilement, dishonor.] 1. Stupration.—2. In civil law, any union of the sexes forbidden by morality.

stupulose (stū'pū-lōs), a. [Dim. of stupose.] In entom., covered with short, fine, decumbent hairs; finely stupose.

sturdied (stēr'did), a. [L. *sturdy*² + -ed.] Affected with the disease called sturdy.

I caught every sturdied sheep that I could lay my hands upon. Hogg, The Shepherd's Guide, p. 58.

sturdily (stēr'di-li), adv. In a sturdy manner; stoutly; lustily.

His refusal was too long and sturdily maintained to be reconciled with affectation or insincerity. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 5.

sturdiness (stēr'di-nes), n. [ME. sturdinesse, sturdynesse; < *sturdy*¹ + -ness.] The state or property of being sturdy. (a) Obstinacy; contumacy. (b) Stuntness; lustiness; vigor.

sturdy¹ (stēr'di), a. [ME. sturdy, sturdy, sturdy, stordi, stowrdi, < OF. estoriti, estourdi, stunned, amazed, stupefied, rash, heedless, careless, pp. of estordir, estourdir, F. étourdir = OSp. estordeir, estordeir = It. stordire, stun, amaze, stupefy; origin uncertain; perhaps < LL. as if extorpidire*, benumb, render senseless or torpid, < L. ex, out, + torpidus, dull: see torpid.] 1. Obsurdly set or determined; doggedly obstinate; stubborn; sulky; used of persons. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Y was ful sturdy, & thou ful myelde; Ihesu, lord, y knowe weel it. Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. F. T. S.), p. 35.

Come, gentlemen, leave pitying and mourning of her, And praising of her virtues and her whimwhams; It makes her proud and sturdy. Fletcher, Pilgrim, l. 1.

2. Having great force or endurance; strong in attack or resistance; vigorous; hardy; stout; lusty; robust: as, a sturdy opponent; sturdy pioneers; sturdy legs; a sturdy tree.

So tute a sturdy wyne that it shal smyle,
And of a rough drinker be clere and best.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. F. T. S.), p. 201.

Some bent them coates of brasse, or sturdy breastplate hard they drine,
And some their gauntlets gilde, or bootes with silver nesh contriue.
Phaer, Faetiv, vii.

But they so belahour'd him, being sturdy men at arms, that they made him make a retreat.
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, ii.

How bow'd the woods beneath their sturdy stroke!
Gray, Elegy, l. 28.

Three young sturdy children, brown as berries.
Dickens, Old Curiosity Shop, xv.

3. Firmly fixed or settled; resolute; unyielding; hard to overcome: used of things.

The King declareth him the cas
With sterne loke and sturdy chere.
Gower, Conf. Amant., viii.

Nothing, as it seemeth, more preuailing or lit to redress and edifie the cruell and sturdie courage of man then it [music].
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 4.

There are, as in phillosophy, so in diuinity, sturdy doubts.
Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, l. 19.

A nation proud of its sturdy justice and plain good sense.
Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

Sturdy beggar, in old Eng. law, an able-bodied beggar; one who lives by begging while capable of earning his livelihood.

Those that were Vagabonds and sturdy Beggars they were to carry to Bridewel.
Strype, Order of City of London, 1569 (quoted in Ribbton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 104).

= Syn. 2. Stout, Stalwart, etc. (see robust), brawny, sinewy, muscular, firm.

sturdy² (stér'di), n. [Cf. Gael. stuir, stuirdean, vertigo, a disease of sheep (< E.); < OF. estordie, giddiness, < estordi, stunned, stupefied: see *sturdy*¹.] A disease of sheep caused by the presence in the brain of the cœnurus, or cystic larval form of the dog's tapeworm, Tœnia cœnurus. The cysts vary in size from that of a pea to that of a pigeon's egg. The disease is marked by lack or loss of coordination in muscular action, evinced in a disposition to stagger, move sidewise, or sit on the rump, and also by stupor. Sturdy generally attacks sheep under two years old, and is rarely cured, since puncturing or trephining gives but temporary relief. Also called gid and stagers.

sture, n. A Scotch form of *stour*³.

sturgeon (stér'jon), n. [Cf. ME. sturjoun, sturjium, < AF. sturjoun, OF. esturjeon, later estourjeon, F. esturgeon = Sp. esturion = Pg. esturião = It. storione, < ML. sturio(u), < OHG. sturjo, sturo, MHG. sture, stur, stür, G. stör = D. stour = Sw. Dan. stör = Icel. styrja = AS. styrja, stiriga, a sturgeon; prob. lit. 'a stirrer' (so called, it has been conjectured, because it stirs up mud by floundering at the bottom of the water), < OIlg. stören, MHG. staren, G. stören, etc., stir: see *stir*¹.] A chondroganoid fish of the order Chondrostei and family Acipenseridae (see the technical names). There are 2 leading genera, Acipenser and Scaphirhynchops, or ordinary and shovel-nosed sturgeons. Of the latter there are 4 species, confined to the fresh waters of the United States and some parts of Asia, as S. platyrhynchus of the former country, 5 feet long. (See cut under shovelhead.) The common sturgeon of the Atlantic, anadromous in Europe and North America, is A. sturio. Another, of the Atlantic coast of the United States, is the short-nosed sturgeon, A. brevirostris. The small or Ruthenian sturgeon, or sterlet, of some European waters is A. ruthenus. (See sterlet, with cut.) The great white sturgeon, beluga, or buse of Pontoaspian waters, is A. huso; this is the largest known, 12 or 15 feet or more in length, weighing 1,000 pounds or more, and an important source of isinglass and of caviar. The white sturgeon of the Columbia and Sacramento rivers is A. transmontanus, an important food-fish, of from 300 to 600 pounds weight. The green sturgeon of the same waters is A. medirostris, supposed to be unfit for food. An isolated and very distinct species, land-locked in fresh waters of the United States, is A.

Common Sturgeon (Acipenser sturio).

Lake-sturgeon (Acipenser rubicundus).

rubicundus, variously known as the red, black, stone, rock, lake, and Ohio sturgeon; it reaches a length of 6 feet, and a weight of from 20 to 100 pounds. Nearly all the sturgeons are the objects of important fisheries, for their flesh, for various uses of their bony plated skins, and as sources of isinglass and caviar. Sturgeons rank with whales as regal or royal fishes (see regal). See also cut under Acipenser. — Russian sturgeon, the beluga. — Spoon-billed stur- geons, the Polyodontidae. See cuts under paddle-fish, Psephurus, and Spatularia.

Sturiones (stü-ri-ó'nēz), n. pl. [NL., pl. of ML. sturio, sturgeon: see sturgeon.] 1. In Cuvier's system of classification, the first order of chondropterygian fishes: same as Chondrostei, 2. See cuts under paddle-fish, Psephurus, Spatularia, sterlet, and sturgeon. — 2. Same as Acipenseridae. Bonaparte, 1837.

sturionian (stü-ri-ó'ni-an), a. and n. [Cf. NL. Sturion-es + -ian.] 1. a. Pertaining to the sturgeon, or having their characters; acipenserine.

II. n. A sturgeon; an acipenserid.

sturionid (stü-ri-ó-nid'i-an), n. [Cf. Sturion-es + -id + -ian.] A fish of the order Chondrostei; a sturgeon-like fish. Sir J. Richardson.

sturionine (stü-ri-ó-nin), a. and n. [Cf. Sturion-es + -in.] Same as sturionian.

sturk, n. See stirk.

Sturmian (stér'mi-an), a. [Cf. Sturm (see def.) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to the French mathematician J. C. F. Sturm (1803-55). — Sturmian function, one of the series of remainders obtained in the process of finding the greatest measure of an integral function and its derivative, provided the sign of each is changed as we proceed.

Sturnella (stér-nel'ü), n. [NL. (Vicillot, 1816), < Sturnus + dim. -ella.] A remarkable genus of Icteridae, typical of the subfamily Sturnellinae, containing the American meadow-starlings or so-called field-larks. The bill is of peculiar shape, longer than the head, with straight outlines, abruptly angulated commissure, and flattened culmen extending on the forehead. The feet are large and strong, reaching beyond the tail when outstretched, eminently fitted for terrestrial locomotion. The wings are short and rounded, and the tail is very short, with stiffish narrow acute feathers. The coronal feathers are bristle-tipped; and the plumage is much variegated, the under parts being yellow with a black horseshoe on the breast.

There is one species with several geographical races, or several species, inhabiting Mexico, Central America, and most parts of North America and the West Indies. S. magna is the common meadow-lark of the eastern United States, and S. neglecta is characteristic of the western prairies. The genus formerly included those related South American birds in which the yellow is replaced by red, now called Trupialis or Pezites. Also called Pedoparis. See also cut under meadow-lark.

Western Field-lark (Sturnella neglecta).

Sturnellinae (stér-ne-li'nó), n. pl. [NL., < Sturnella + -inae.] A subfamily of Icteridae, represented by the genera Sturnella and Trupialis. Coues, 1884.

sturnelline (stér'ne-lin), a. Of or pertaining to the genus Sturnella or the subfamily Sturnellinae.

Sturnia (stér'ni-ä), n. [NL. (Lesson, 1847), < L. sturnus, starling: see Sturnus.] A genus of Oriental starlings. The species, of which there are few, range from eastern Siberia and Japan through China to Burma, the Philippines, Moluccas, etc. The type is S. sinensis, the kink of early French ornithologists (kink oriole of Latham, 1783), with many New Latin synonyms; its plumage is much varied with glossy blackish, greenish, and purplish, and different shades of gray, buff, isabel, and salmon-color; the bill is blue and the eyes are white; the length is about 8 inches. This bird is chiefly Chinese, but is wide-ranging. S. sturnia (the dominican thrush of Latham, with a host of synonyms) extends from Siberia and northern China through the Malay peninsula, etc. A third species is S. violacea, with fifteen or more different Latin names and a few English ones; this is especially Japanese, but migrates in winter to the Philippines, the Moluccas, Borneo, and Celebes.

Sturnidae (stér'ni-dé), n. pl. [NL., < Sturnus + -idae.] A family of oscine passerine birds, typified by the genus Sturnus; the Old World starlings. They have ten primaries, of which the first is short or spurious; the wings are lengthened or moderate; the frontal antie extend into the nasal fosse; there are no rictal vibrissae; and the bill is atypically concavate, with blunt, rounded, or flattened culmen, ascending gony, and angulated commissure. The plumage is mostly of metallic or iridescent hues, sometimes splendidly lustrous or beautifully variegated, or both. The family is a large one, widely diffused in the Old World, excepting in Australia, and entirely absent from America. Both its limits and its subdivisions vary with different writers. See cuts under Euphaga, Eulabes, Pastor, sturling, and Temenuchus.

sturniform (stér'ni-fórm), a. [Cf. L. sturnus, a starling, + forma, form.] Having the form or technical characters of the starlings; sturnoid; of or pertaining to the Sturniformes.

Sturniformes (stér-ni-fór'mēz), n. pl. [NL.: see sturniform.] A superfamily of sturnoid passerine birds, composed of 4 families; the sturnoid Passeres.

Sturninae (stér-ni'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Sturnus + -inae.] A subfamily of Sturnidae, containing the typical starlings, represented by the genus Sturnus and related forms. In some systems the Sturninae correspond to the Sturnidae divested of certain genera referred to other families, as Buphagidae and Paradisidae, and are represented in this sense by about 28 genera and 124 species; in others the term is used in a much more restricted sense. See cut under starling.

sturnoid (stér'noid), a. [Cf. Sturnus + -oid.] Of or pertaining to the family Sturnidae. — Sturnoid Passeres, one of four groups or series in which A. R. Wallace (Ibis, 1874, pp. 406-416) distributed the normal oscine passerine birds, the others being the typical or turdoid, the tanagraid, and the formicarioid Passeres. They are otherwise called Sturniformes, and include the starling group, a characteristic feature of which is the possession of ten primaries, of which the first is spurious. See cuts under *starling*¹, Pastor, Scissirostrum, Eulabes, Temenuchus, and Buphaga.

Sturnopastor (stér-nō-pas'tor), n. [NL. (Hodgson, 1843, as Sturnopastor), < Sturnus + Pastor, q. v.] A genus of starlings with bare circumorbital spaces and comparatively rounded wings. There are several species, as S. contra of India, S. supercilioris of Burma, S. jalla and S. melanoptera of Java.

Sturnus (stér'nus), n. [NL. (Brissen, 1760; Linnæus, 1766), < L. sturnus, a starling: see *sturn*² and *sturn*².] The representative genus of Sturninae, formerly employed with latitude, now closely restricted to such forms as the common stare or starling, S. vulgaris. The plumage is metallic and iridescent, with distinctly outlined individual feathers. The feet are short and typically oscine. The tail is about half as long as the wings, emarginate, with twelve rectrices. The wings are pointed by the second and third primaries, the first being spurious and very small. The bill is not bristled; feathers fill the interramal space, and extend into the nasal fosse; there is a nasal scale, and the tomial edges of the bill are dilated; the commissure is angulated, and the culmen and gony are both nearly straight; the culmen extends on the forehead, parting well-marked antie. See cut under starling.

sturt¹ (stért), v. [An obs. or dial. var. of stert, *sturt*¹.] I. trans. To vex; trouble. Burns. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

II. intrans. To start from fright; be afraid. Burns, Halloween. [Scotch.]

sturt² (stért), v. [Also dial. transposed strut; < *sturt*¹, v.] 1. Trouble; disturbance; vexation; wrath; heat of temper. [Scotch.]

Scotland has cause to mak great sturt For laiming of the Laird of Mow.
Raid of the Reidswire (Child's Ballads, VI. 137).

2. In Eng. mining, an extraordinary profit made by a tributer by taking at a high tribute a "pitch" which happens to cut an unexpectedly large body of ore, so that his profit is correspondingly great. [Cornwall, Eng.]

sturtion (stér'shon), n. A corruption of nasturtium. See nasturtium, 2.

Sturt's desert-pea. See *pea*¹.

stut¹ (stut), v. i. [Early mod. E. stutte, < ME. stoten, stutter; = D. stooten, stutter, = OHG. stōzan, MHG. stōzen, G. stossen, push, strike against, = Icel. stauta, beat, strike, also stutter, = Sw. stōta = Dan. stōde, strike against, = Goth. stutun, strike: see *stot*². Hence *stutter*¹.] 1. To stutter. [Old and prov. Eng.]

To stut or stammer is a foule erime.
Babees Book (E. F. T. S.), p. 348.

Nay, he hath Albano's imperfection too,
And stuttes when he is vehemently mov'd.
Marston, What you Will, i. 1.

2. To stagger.
Stut, to stagger in speaking or going.
Baret, Alvearie, 1580.

stut², v. [Cf. ME. stutten, stutten, < Icel. stytta, make short, < stuttr, short: see stunt, u., and cf. stunt, v., stent, v.] I. trans. To ent short; cause to cease. Ancien Rible, p. 72, note f.

II. intrans. To cease; stop. Scinte Marherete (E. F. T. S.), p. 6.

stut³ (stut), n. A variant of *stout*².

stutter¹ (stut'ér), v. [Cf. ME. stoteren* = D. stoteren = MLG. stoteren, LG. stöttern, stöttern (> G. stottern) = Sw. dial. stutra, stutter; freq. of stut.] I. intrans. To speak with a marked stammer; utter words with frequent breaks and repetitions of parts, either habitually or under special excitement.

The stuttering declamation of the isolated Hibernian.
Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, i.

= Syn. Falter, etc. See stammer.

II. trans. To utter with breaks and repetitions of parts of words; say disjointedly.

Red and angry, scarce
Able to stutter out his wrath in words.
Browning, Ring and Book, II. 22.

stutter¹ (stut'ér), n. [*< stutter*¹, v.] A marked stammer; broken and hesitating utterance of words.

stutter² (stut'ér), n. [< stut + *-er*¹.] One who stuts or stutters; a stutterer.

Many stutters (we find) are choleric men.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 386.

stutterer (stut'ér-ér), n. [*< stutter*¹ + *-er*¹.] One who stutters; a stammerer.

His words were never many, as being so extreme a stutterer that he would sometimes hold his tongue out of his mouth a good while before he could speak so much as one word. Lord Herbert of Chesham, Life (ed. Howells), p. 129.

stuttering (stut'ér-ing), n. [Verbal n. of *stutter*¹, v.] A hesitation in speaking, in which there is a spasmodic and uncontrollable reiteration of the same syllable. See stammering.

stutteringly (stut'ér-ing-li), adv. In a stuttering manner; with stammering.

stuwet, n. and v. An obsolete form of *stew*¹, *stew*².

sty¹ (stí), r. i. [< ME. stien, styen, steyen, stighen, stigen, < AS. stigan = OS. stigan = OFries. stiga = D. stijgen = MLG. LG. stigen = OHG. stigan, MHG. stigen, G. steigen = Icel. stiga = Sw. stiga = Dan. stige = Goth. stigan, rise, ascend, mount; in comp. AS. ástigan, rise, move up, or, with an appropriate adverb, move down, descend; = Gr. στειναι, go, walk, march, go in line (see stich), = L. √ stigh in vestigium, footprint, vestige (see vestige), = OBulg. stignanti, haste, Skt. √ stigh, mount. From this root are ult. E. *sty*¹, n., *sty*², *sty*³, *stilet*¹, stair.] 1. To go upward; mount; ascend; soar.

Tak thame this drawht, and whan thou art wel refreshed and relect, thow shal be moore stydefast to stye into heyere questyouna.
Chaucer, Boethius, iv. prose 6.

That was Ambition, rash desire to sty,
And every luck thereof a step of dignity.
Spenser, F. Q., II. vii. 46.

2. To mount (upon a horse).
Stiden vpon stithe horse stird to the Cité,
And wenton in wightly to the worthy hom aeloun.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 4948.

3. To aspire.
T had been in vaine;
Shee donely sties to such as haue no brayne.
Heywood, Dialogues (Works, ed. Pearson, 1874, VI. 122).

sty¹ (stí), n. [(a) < ME. sty, styc, stie, stiz, stih, < AS. stig = MD. stijhe = OHG. stig, stic, MHG. stic, G. steig = Icel. stigr, stigr = Sw. stig = Dan. sti, a path, footway; (b) < ME. sty, stie, a step, ladder, = OHG. stiga, MHG. stige, a path, step, ladder; also MD. steghe, stegh, D. steg, a path, lane, = MLG. stega, a path, ascent, also a step, = OHG. stiega, MHG. stiege, a rise, ascent, step, stair, staircase, = Icel. stigi, stegi = Dan. stige, a step, ladder; (c) cf. OHG. steg, MHG. stee, G. steg, a path, bridge (the forms, of three or four orig. diff. types, being more or less confused with one another, and wavering between the long and short vowel); related to *sty*², *stilet*¹, stair, etc., all ult. from the verb *sty*¹.] 1†. An ascent; an ascending lane or path; any narrow pathway or course.

Themperour on his stif stede a sty forth thanne takes.
William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 212.

The scheref made to seke [caused to search] Notyngham, Bothe be strete and stye.
Robin Hood and the Monk (Child's Ballads, V. 14).

2†. A step upward; a stair.
And sties also are ordande thore [there],
With stalworthe ateeles as mystr wore [need were],
Bothe some schorte and some lang.
York Plays, p. 340.

3. A ladder. Halliwell. [Prov. Eug.]

sty² (stí), n.; pl. sties (stiz). [Early mod. E. also styc, stic; < ME. stie, styc, < AS. stigu, stigo, a pen for cattle, = MD. stijhe = OHG. stiga, MHG. stige, a pen for small cattle, a sow's litter, G. steige, steig, pen, chicken-coop (schweine-steige, swine-sty), = Icel. stia = OSw. stiga, stia, Sw. stia, dial. sti, steg = Dan. sti, pen for swine, goats, sheep, etc.; from the root of *sty*¹, AS. stigan, rise, orig. go; see *sty*¹.] The connection of thought is not clear; cf. Gr. στυγιος, a row, file of soldiers, also a row of poles with hunting-nets into which game was driven (i. e., a pen).] 1. A pen or inclosure for swine; a pigsty.

Her [their] cotes make beforene
Under sum porche, and parte hem so betwene
That every stye a moder [sow with litter] wol sustene.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 99.

Hence — 2. A filthy hovel or place; any place of mean living or bestial debauchery.

To roll with pleasure in a sensual stye.
Milton, Comus, l. 77.
The painted booth and sordid sties of vice and luxury.
Burke, Rev. in Fraunce.

sty² (stí), r.; pret. and pp. stied, ppr. styng. [*< sty*², n.] I. intrans. To occupy a sty or hovel; live in a sty.

What miry wallowers the generality of men of our class are in themselves, and constantly troug and sty with!
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, V. cxx.

II. trans. To lodge in a sty or hovel; pen up.

Here you sty me
In this hard rock. Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 343.

sty³ (stí), n.; pl. sties (stiz). [In three distinct forms: (a) Sty, also styc, and formerly stie, a reduction of the earlier stigen, styan (see (b)), or directly parallel with MD. stiighe, LG. stige, sticy, Norw. stijje, stij, sti, a sty (cf. stijköyna, a sty, < stig + köyna, a pustule). (b) Stygen, styan, early mod. E. also stian, *< ME. styand, styend*, < AS. stigend, a sty, lit. 'riser,' < stigende, ppr. of stigan, rise; see *sty*¹, v. (c) Styan, stion, early mod. E. styanic, styon, styonie, < ME. styanic, a sty, supposed to stand for styand ye*, lit. 'rising eye': styand, ppr. of styan, rise; ye, eye; see *sty*¹, v., and *eye*¹, n. But there is no evidence of the ME. styand ye*, nor of the alleged AS. stigend edge* assumed by Skeat; a sty is not a 'rising eye' at all, and the AS. phrase, if used, would be stigende edge*, as an AS. ppr. invariably retains its final e except when used as a noun.] A circumscribed inflammatory swelling of the edge of the eyelid, like a small boil; hordeolum. Also spelled stye.

There is a sty grown o'er the eye o' th' Bull,
Which will go near to blind the constellation.
Fletcher (and another), Elder Brother, ii. 4.

styan (stí'an), n. [Also styen, early mod. E. stian, etc.; see *sty*³ (b).] Same as *sty*³. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

A soveraigne liniment for the stian or any other hard swellings in the eyelides. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xviii. 11.

I knew that a styan . . . upon the eyelid could be easily reduced.
De Quincey, Autob. Sketches, ii.

styanic, n. [Also stion, early mod. E. styanic, styon, etc.: see *sty*³ (c).] Same as *sty*³.

Styanic (or a perle) yn the eye, egilopa.
Pronpt. Parv., p. 475.

Styony, disease growing within the eyelides, syccosis.
Ulmoet.

styca (stí'kä, AS. pron. stük'ä), n. [AS. styca.] A small copper coin of the Anglo-Saxon period, current in the kingdom of Northumbria in the seventh, eighth, and ninth centuries, and weighing about eighteen or nineteen grains.

Obverse. Reverse.
Styca of Redwall, King of Northumbria, A. D. 844.—British Museum. (Size of original.)

stye¹, n. An old spelling of *sty*¹, *sty*².

stye² (stí), n. Same as *sty*³.

Stygia (stij'i-ä), n. [NL., < L. Stygius, < Gr. Στυγιος, pertaining to the Styx; see Styr.] In entom.: (a) In Lepidoptera, a genus of bombycid moths, of the family Psychidæ. (b) In Diptera, a genus of tanystomine flies, of the family Bombyliidæ, not having the antennæ wide apart at the base. Also called Lomatia and Stygides. Meigen.

Stygial (stij'i-äl), a. [< L. Stygius (see Stygian) + -äl.] Same as Stygian. [Rare.]

Stygian (stij'i-an), a. [< L. Stygius, < Gr. Στυγιος, pertaining to the Styx, < Στυξ (Στυγ-), a river of the lower world, also applied to a fatally cold fountain, a piercing chill, hatred, < στρυειν, hate, abhor.] 1. Pertaining to the Styx, a river, according to the ancient myth, flowing around the lower world, the waters of which were used as a symbol in the most binding oaths of the gods.

From what Part of the World came you? For here was a melancholy Report that you had taken a Voyage to the Stygian Shades.

N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquia of Erasmus, II. 2.

Hence — 2. Infernal; hellish: as, Stygian vapors; a Stygian pool.

At that so sudden blaze, the Stygian throng Bent their aspect. Milton, P. L., l. 433.

Stygozenes (stí-goj'e-néz), n. [NL. (Günther, 1864), < Gr. Στυξ (Στυγ-), a river of the lower world, + -γενής, produced.] In ichth., a genus of catfishes, of the family Argyridæ, found in the Andean waters; so named from the popular notion that the typical species lives in subterranean waters of active volcanoes. Also called Cyclopinum.

stylagalmaic (stí'la-gal-mä'ik), a. and n. [Irreg. < Gr. στύλος, a pillar, + γάλαμα, a statue; see agalma.] In arch., noting a caryatid, or a figure performing the office of a column: as, stylagalmaic images. See cut under caryatid.

stylamblys (stí-lam'blis), n. [NL., < Gr. στύλος, a pillar, + αμβλύς, blunt, dulled.] A small blunt process of the inner branch of a pleopod of some crustaceans. C. Spencer Bate.

stylar (stí'lär), a. [Also stilar; *< style*¹ + -är.] Of or pertaining to a style; having the character of or resembling a style for writing.

Stylaria (stí-lä'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Lamarck, 1816), < Gr. στύλος, a pillar, + -aria.] A genus of annelids: same as Nais, l.

Stylaster (stí-las'tér), n. [NL. (J. E. Gray, 1831), < Gr. στύλος, a pillar, + αστήρ, a star.] 1. The typical genus of Stylasteridæ. It was formerly considered actinozoan, and placed in the family Oculinidæ; it is now known to be hydrozoan, and closely related to Millepora.

2. [l. c.] Any polyp of the family Stylasteridæ. The numerous species are delicate calcareous corals, usually pink, and most nearly related to the milleporæ.

Stylasteridæ (stí-las-ter'i-dæ), n. pl. [NL., < Stylaster + -idæ.] A family of the order Hydrocorallina, or coralligenous hydromedusans, typified by the genus Stylaster, related to the Milleporidæ, and with the milleporæ forming the order. Stylasteridæ differ from Milleporidæ in having a calcified axial style at the base of an ampulla or dilated section of each gastrozoid, and in the more complicated cyclostyles the massive hydrosome contains tubes which possess pseudosepta formed by the regular position of the tentacular zooids; the alimentary zooids have from four to twelve tentacles. The stylasters abound in tropical seas, where they contribute to the formation of coral reefs.

stylate¹ (stí'lät), a. [*< NL. stylatus, prop. stilatus*, < L. stilus, a stake, point, style; see *style*¹.] In zool.: (a) Having a style or stylet; styliferous. (b) Pen-like or peg-like; styloid; styliiform.

stylate² (stí'lät), a. [*< NL. stylatus, < stylus, a style (of a flower), < Gr. στύλος, a pillar; see *style*².] In bot., having a persistent style.

style¹ (stíl), n. [Formerly also, and prop., stile; also in def. 1, as L. stylus, prop. stilus; < OF. style, stile, F. style = Sp. Pg. estilo = It. stilo, < L. stílus, in ML. also, improp., stylus, a stake, pale, a pointed instrument used about plants, the stem or stalk of a plant, and esp. for scribing on a waxen tablet, hence writing, manner of writing, mode of expression in writing or speech, style; perhaps earlier with long vowel, stilus, for orig. stíglus*, < √ stig in stingere = Gr. στειν, pierce, stick, puncture (see *stiek*¹, stigma); otherwise akin to OHG. MHG. stil, G. stiel, a handle, etc., AS. stæl, stel, E. stale, stual, a handle; see *stale*².] 1. An iron instrument, in the form of a bodkin tapering to a point at one end, used, in one of the methods of writing practised in ancient and medieval times, for scratching the letters into a waxed tablet, the other end being blunt for rubbing out writing and smoothing the tablet; figuratively, any writing-instrument.

But this style no living man shall touch,
If first I be not forced by base reproach;
But like a beathed sword it shall defend
My innocent life. B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

Some wrought in Silks, some writ in tender Farks;
Some the sharp Stile in waxen Tables marks.
Cocleay, Davideis, i.

2. Something similar in form to the instrument above described, or in some respect suggestive of it. (a) A pointed or needle-like tool, implement, or attachment, as the marking-point in the telegraph or phonograph, a graver, or an etching-needle. (b) In zool. and anat., a small, slender, pointed process or part; a styloid or styliiform part or organ; a stylet; of spongespicules, a stylus. Specifically, in entom.: (1) Same as stylet, 3. (2) The bristle or seta of the antenna of a dipter. a stylus. See cuts under Gordius and Hynechoera.

3. Mode of expression in writing or speaking; characteristic diction; a particular method of expressing thought by selection or collocation of words, distinct in some respect from other methods, as determined by nationality, period, literary form, individuality, etc.; in an absolute sense, appropriate or suitable diction; conformity to an approved literary standard; as, the style of Shakspeare or of Dickens; antiquated or modern style; didactic, poetic, or forensic style; a pedantic style; a nervous style; a cynical style.

Stile is a constant & continual phrase or tenor of speaking and writing, extending to the whole tale or process of the poem or historie, and not properly to any peccor or member of a tale.

Pultenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 123.

Proper words in proper places make the true definition of a style.

Jeffreys spoke against the motion in the coarse and savage style of which he was a master.

Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

If thought is the gold, style is the stamp which makes it current, and says under what king it was issued.

Dr. J. Brown, Spare Hours, 3d ser., p. 277.

4. Distinctive manner of external presentation; particular mode or form (within more or less variable limits) of construction or execution in any art or employment; the specific or characteristic formation or arrangement of anything. In this sense the applications of the word style are coextensive with the whole range of productive activity. Styles in the arts are designated according to subject, treatment, origin, school, period, etc.; as, in painting, the landscape, genre, or historical style; the style of Titian or of Rubens; the Preraphaelite or the Impressionist style; in architecture, the Greek, mediæval, and Renaissance styles, the Pointed or the Perpendicular style; the Louis-Quatorze or the Eastlake style of furniture; the Florentine style of wood-carving; carpets and rugs in the Persian style; styles in dress.

I don't know in what style I should dress such a figure and countenance, to make anything of them.

Cooper, Liencoln, iii.

It [a bed-chamber] is fitted up in the style of Louis XVI.

Thackeray, Newcomes, xlv.

Monteverde, Claudio (1568-1643), the inventor of the "free style" of musical composition, was born at Cremona in 1568.

Encyc. Brit., XVI, 785.

5. Particular mode of action or manifestation; physical or mental procedure; manner; way; as, styles of rowing, riding, or walking; styles of acting, singing, or bowing.—6. Mode, as of living or of appearing; distinctive or characteristic manner or fashion, with reference to appearance, bearing, social relations, etc.; in absolute use, an approved or prevalent mode; superior manner; noticeable elegance; the fashion: as, to live in style; style of deportment or of dress.

There are some very homely women who have a style that amounts to something like beauty.

H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 68.

That otherwise impalpable quality which women call style.

Hovells, Indian Summer, ii.

7. Hence, in general, fine appearance; dashing character; spirited appearance; as, a horse that shows style.—8. Mode of designation or address; a qualifying appellation or title; an epithet distinctive of rank, office, character, or quality.

With one voice, sir,

The citizens salute you with the style
Of King of Naples.

Fletcher, Double Marriage, v. 4.

Give unto God his due, his reverend style.

Middleton, Solomon Paraphrased, i.

9. In chron., a mode of reckoning time with regard to the Julian and Gregorian calendars. See calendar. Style is Old or New. The Old Style (abbreviated O. S.) is the reckoning of time according to the Julian calendar, the numbering of the years being that of the Christian era. In this reckoning the years have 365 days, except those whose numbers are divisible by 4, which have 366 days. The extra day is inserted in February, and is considered to be that following the 23d of that month. For ecclesiastical reasons, the calendar was reformed by Pope Gregory XIII., by adding 10 days to the date after October 4th, 1582, and thereafter making no years whose numbers end with two ciphers leap-years except those whose significant figures are divisible by 4. The year in New Style always begins with January 1st, but in Old Style there was some diversity of practice. The Gregorian year accords closely with the tropical year; but otherwise its advantages are merely ecclesiastical and theoretical. This mode of correcting the calendar has been adopted at different times by almost all civilized nations except Russia and other countries where the Greek Church is predominant, which still adhere to the Old Style. In England the Gregorian or New Style (abbreviated N. S.) was adopted by act of Parliament in 1751, and as one of the years concluding a century in which the additional or intercalary day was to be omitted (the year 1700) had elapsed since the correction by Pope Gregory, it was necessary to omit 11 instead of 10 days in the current year. Accordingly, 11 days in September, 1752, were re-trenched, and the 3d day was reckoned the 14th. The difference between the Old and New Style is now 12 days.

—Attic style. See Attic.—Concertante, Corinthian, crystalline, cushion, discharge style. See the qualifying words.—Early English style, a toodern factitious style of furniture and decoration, in which some elements of the decoration of the middle ages were used mingled with others. It was characterized by a free use of black and gold, and by designs in color in hard flat patterns of one color relieved upon another.—Florid style of mediæval architecture. See florid.—Garancin style. Same as madder style.—Geometric style. See geometric.—Jesuit style, in arch. See baroque, 2.—Juridical styles, in Scots law, the particular forms of expression and arrangement necessary to be observed in formal deeds and instruments.—Lacrymal style, a short wire worn in a lacrymal duct in treatment of obstruction of this duct.—Lapidary, madder, monodic, oecipital style. See the qualifying words.—Paestrina style, in music, the style of church music. Compare a cappella.—Perpendicular style. See perpendicular.—Queen Anne style. See queen.—Rainbow, Renaissance, resist, etc., style. See the qualifying words.—Style of a court, the practice observed by any court in its way of proceeding.—Syn. 3. Diction, Phrasology, etc. (See diction.) Invention, Style, Amplification, in rhetoric. See invention.—8. Appellation, etc. See name.

*style*¹ (stil), v. t.; pret. and pp. styled, ppr. styling. [Formerly also, and prop., stile; < *style*¹, n.] 1. To record with or as with a style; give literary form to; write.

Poesy is nothing else but Feigned History, which may be styled as well in prose as in verse.

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii.

2. To give or accord the style or designation of; entitle; denominate; call.

He is also stiled the God of the rural inhabitants.

Bacon, Fable of Pan.

Upon this Title the Kings of England were styled Kings of Jerusalem a long time after. Baker, Chronicles, p. 63.

Declared the Deceased

Had stiled him "a Beast."

Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, l. 64.

*style*² (stil), n. [Formerly also stile (in senso 1); < NL. stylus, a style of a plant, < ML. stylus, also inprop. stilus, a pillar, < Gr. στύλος, a pillar, column, also a post, pale; not connected with L. stilus, inprop. written stylus, a stake, pale, a pointed instrument, etc., with which the word has been associated, so that the E. *style*¹ and *style*² are now commonly confused.] 1. A pillar; a column. See *style*¹.—2. The pin or gnomon of a sun-dial, which marks the time by its shadow, or any fixed pointer serving a similar purpose. See cut under sun-dial.

Then turne the globe vntill the style that sheweth the houre be cooime to the houre in the whiche yowe sought the vnknowne place of the moone.

R. Eden, tr. of Gemma Phrysius (First Books on America, [ed. Arber, p. 389].

3. In bot., a narrowed extension of the ovary, which, when present, supports the stigma. It is usually slender, and in that case of varying length, often elongated, as in honeysuckle, fuchsia, and in an extreme case Indian corn (forming its "silk"); sometimes it is thick and short, as in squash, grape-vine, etc.; sometimes wholly wanting, leaving the stigma sessile. Morphologically it is the attenuated tip of the carpel, hence equaling the carpels in number, except when, as in many compound pistils, the styles are consolidated. It is said to be simple when undivided, even if formed by the union of several. When cleft or slit it is bifid, trifid, etc.; when more deeply separated it is bipartite, tripartite, etc. According to the conformation of the carpel, the style may be terminal, rising from its summit, as is typically the case, or lateral, as in strawberry and cinquefoil, or basal, as in comfrey and salvia—the carpel being in these last cases more or less bent over. In position it may be erect, ascending, declinate, recurved, etc.; in form it may be filiform, subulate, trigonal, claviform, petaloid, etc. In relation to the corolla or calyx it may be included or exserted. A style may be persistent, but is commonly caducous, falling soon after fecundation. The function of the style is to present the stigma in a position advantageously to receive the pollen, and to form a medium for its communication to the ovules; accordingly, it has the structure of a tube filled or lined with a conductive tissue of the same nature as that which composes the stigma. See pistil, ovary, pollen-tube, and stigma.

*style*³, n. An obsolete spelling of *stilic*¹.
style-branch (stil'branch), n. In bot., a branch or division of the style. In the Compositæ the character of the style-branch is of important systematic value.
style-curve (stil'kërv), n. A curve constructed to exhibit the peculiarities of style or composition of an author. It may be drawn so that the abscissæ represent the number of letters in a word, while the corresponding ordinates show the relative frequency of the occurrence of such words, or other characteristics may be selected. Experiments seem to prove that, when a sufficiently extensive analysis is made in this manner, every writer will be found to be represented by a curve peculiar to himself. Science, XIII, 92.

stylet (sti'let), n. [OF. stylet, < It. stiletto, a pointed instrument, dagger, dim. of stilo, a pointed instrument: see *style*¹, and cf. stiletto.] 1. A slender pointed instrument; a stiletto.

"Come, Plover!" she reiterated, her eye grazing me with its hard ray like a steel stylet.

Charlotte Brontë, Villette, xii.

2. In surg., the perforator of a trocar; the stiffening wire or rod in a flexible catheter; sometimes, a probe. Also stilette.—3. In zool., a little style; also, a style; specifically, in entom., one of the second of the three pairs of rhabdites or appendages of the abdominal sternites entering into the formation of the ovipositor. See cut under Arctisea.

styletiform (sti'let-i-fôrnm), a. [< stylet + L. forma, form.] Shaped like a stylet; styloid.

stylewort (stil'wört), n. A plant of the genus Candollea, formerly Stylidium; more broadly (Lindley), a plant of the order Candolleaceæ, formerly Stylidiaceæ (Stylidiaceæ).

Stylidiaceæ (sti-li-di'i-é-é), n. pl. [NL. (Jussieu, 1811), < Stylidium + -æc.] An order of gamopetalous plants, of the cohort Cumpanales, now known as Candolleaceæ. It is characterized by flowers usually with an irregular calyx and corolla each with five lobes, two stamens united into a column with the style, and a two-celled ovary with numerous ovules. The order is closely related in habit to the Lobeliaceæ, which, however, are readily distinguished by the free style. It contains about 105 species, belonging to 5 genera, of which Stylidium is the type, mostly Australian herbs, a few in tropical Asia, New Zealand, and antarctic America. They are herbs or rarely somewhat shrubby plants with radical scattered or seemingly whorled leaves, which are entire and usually narrow or small. Their flowers form terminal racemes or panicles, usually primarily centripetal in development and secondarily centrifugal. Also Stylidiaceæ.

Stylidium (sti-lid'i-um), n. [NL. (Swartz, 1807), so named from the stamen-column; < Gr. στύλος, a pillar, column, + dim. -ιδίον.] A genus of gamopetalous plants, now known as Candollea (Labillardière, 1805), type of the order formerly called Stylidiaceæ, and now known as Candolleaceæ. It is characterized by flowers with the fifth lobe of the irregular corolla very different from the others, forming a small or narrow curving lip, and by the long recurved or replicate and usually elastic stamen-column. The 87 species are all Australian but 3, which are natives of Asia, principally of India. Many species are cultivated under glass, under the name of stylewort, for their rose-colored flowers; see also hairtrigger-flower. The name Stylidium

(Loureiro, 1790), no longer used for Candollea, is at present applied instead to a small tropical genus of cornaceous trees and shrubs, formerly Markea (Roxburgh, 1819), sometimes cultivated under glass for its yellow flowers.

*styliferous*¹ (sti-lif'e-rus), a. [< L. stylus, prop. stilus, a pointed instrument (see *style*¹), + ferre = E. *bear*¹.] In zool. and anat., having a style or styloid process; stylate.

*styliferous*² (sti-lif'e-rus), a. [< NL. stylus, a style (see *style*²), + L. ferre = E. *bear*¹.] In bot., style-bearing; bearing one or more styles.
styliform (sti'li-fôrnm), a. [< L. stylus, prop. stilus, a pointed instrument, + forma, form, shape; see form.] Having the shape of a style; resembling a pen, pin, or peg; styloid.

styline (sti'lin), a. [< *style*² + *-in*¹.] In bot., of or pertaining to the style.

styliscust (sti-lis'kus), n.; pl. stylisci (-i). [NL. (Lindley), < Gr. στύλιος, dim. of στύλος, a pillar, a shaft; see *style*².] In bot., the channel which passes from the stigma of a plant through the style into the ovary.

stylish (sti'lish), a. [< *style*¹ + *-ish*¹.] Having style in aspect or quality; conformable or conforming to approved style or taste; strikingly elegant; fashionable; showy; as, stylish dress or manners; a stylish woman; a stylish house.

stylishly (sti'lish-li), adv. In a stylish manner; fashionably; showily.

stylishness (sti'lish-nes), n. The state or property of being stylish, fashionable, or showy; showiness: as, stylishness of dress or of an equipage. Jane Austen, Northanger Abbey, viii.

stylist (sti'list), n. [< *style*¹ + -ist.] A writer or speaker distinguished for excellence or individuality of style; one who cultivates, or is a master or critic of, literary style.

Exquisite style, without the frigidity and the over-correctness which the more deliberate stylists frequently display.

G. Saintsbury, Hist. Elizabethan Literature, x.

stylistic (sti-lis'tik), a. and n. [< stylist + -ic.] 1. a. Of or relating to style.

Nor has accuracy been sacrificed to stylistic requirements.

Athenæum, No. 3044, p. 292.

II. n. 1. The art of forming a good style in writing. Also used in the plural.—2. A treatise on style. [Rare.]

Stylidium (Candollea) laricifolium. a, a flower; b, longitudinal section of flower; c, transverse section of fruit.

Campanula sp. a, style; b, stigma.

stylistically (stī-lis'ti-kāl-i), adv. In a stylistic relation; with respect to style. Classical Rev., III. 87.

stylete (stī'lit), n. [LGr. στυλίτης, of or pertaining to a pillar, a pillar-saint, < στυλος, a pillar: see *style*².] In eccles. hist., one of a class of solitary ascetics who passed the greater part of their lives unsheltered on the top of high columns or pillars. This mode of mortification was practised among the monks of the East from the fifth to the eleventh century. The most celebrated was St. Simeon the Stylite, who lived in the fifth century. Also called pillar-saint.

stylobate (stī'lō-bāt), n. [= F. stylobate, < Gr. στυλοβάτης, the base of a pillar, < στυλος, a pillar, + βαίνειν, go, advance.] In arch., a continuous basement upon which columns are placed to raise them above the level of the ground or a floor; particularly, the uppermost step of the stylobate of a columnar building, upon which rests an entire range of columns. It is distinguished from a pedestal, which, when it occurs in this use, supports only a single column. See cuts under base and stylobate.

stylocerite (stī-los'e-rīt), n. [L. stylus, prop. stilus, a stilet instrument (see *style*¹), + Gr. κέρας, horn, + -ίτης.] A style or spine on the outer side of the first joint of the antennule of some crustaceans. C. Spence Bate.

styloglossal (stī-lō-glos'al), a. and n. [styloglossus + -al.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the styloid process and the tongue.

II. n. The styloglossus.
styloglossus (stī-lō-glos'us), n.; pl. styloglossi (-ī). [NL., < E. stylo(id) + Gr. γλῶσσα, tongue.] A slender muscle arising from the styloid process and inserted into the side of the tongue.

stylogonidium (stī'lō-gō-nid'i-um), n.; pl. stylogonidia (-ī). [L. stylus, prop. stilus, a pointed instrument (see *style*¹), + NL. gonidium, q. v.] In bot., a gonidium formed by abstriction on the ends of special filaments. Phillips, Brit. Diatoms.

stylograph (stī'lō-grāf), n. [L. stylus, prop. stilus, a style (see *style*¹), + Gr. γράφειν, write.] A stylographic pen. Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXVI. 68.

stylographic (stī-lō-grāf'ik), a. [As stylograph-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to stylography or a stylograph; characterized by or adapted to the use of a style: as, stylographic cards; a stylographic pencil; stylographic ink.—stylographic pen. See *pen*².

stylographical (stī-lō-grāf'i-kāl), a. [stylographic + -al.] Same as stylographic.

stylographically (stī-lō-grāf'i-kāl-i), adv. In a stylographic manner; by means of a style for writing or engraving.

stylography (stī-log'ra-fī), n. [L. stylus, prop. stilus, a style (see *style*¹), + Gr. γραφία, γράφειν, write.] The art of tracing or the act of writing with a stylo; specifically, a method of drawing and engraving with a style on cards or tablets.

stylohyal (stī-lō-hī'al), n. [stylo(id) + hy(oid) + -al.] In zool. and anat., one of the bones of the hyoidean arch, near the proximal extremity of that arch, being or representing an infrastapedial element. In some vertebrata below mammals it is a part or division of the columellar stapes; in mammals it is the first bone of the hyoidean arch outside of the ear; in man it is normally ankylosed with the temporal bone, constituting the styloid process of that bone, and is connected only by a ligament (the stylohyoid ligament: see epihyal) with the lesser cornu of the hyoid. See stylohyoid, and cuts under Petromyzon, skull, and hyoid.

stylohyoid (stī-lō-hī'oid), a. and n. [stylo(id) + hyoid.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the stylohyal, or styloid process of the temporal bone, and the hyoid bone.—stylohyoid ligament. See epihyal and ligament, and cut under skull.—Stylohyoid muscle, a slender muscle extending from the styloid process of the temporal bone to the hyoid bone; the stylohyoid muscle. See II.—Stylohyoid nerve, that branch of the facial nerve which goes to the stylohyoid muscle.

II. n. The stylohyoid muscle. See cuts under skull and *muscle*¹.

stylohyoidean (stī'lō-hī-oi'dē-an), a. [stylohyoid + -e-an.] Same as stylohyoid.

stylohyoideus (stī'lō-hī-oi'dē-us), n.; pl. stylohyoidei (-ī). [NL.: see stylohyoid.] The stylohyoid muscle. See stylohyoid, n.

styloid (stī'lōid), a. [L. stylus, prop. stilus, a style (see *style*¹), + Gr. είδος, form.] Having some resemblance to a style or pen; like or likened to a style; styliform or stylate: an anatomical term applied to several processes of bone, generally slenderer than those called spines or spinous processes.—Styloid cornua, the epiphyses; the lesser cornua of the hyoid bone: so called because of their attachment to the stylohyoid ligament.—Styloid process. See process and cuts under skull and Jorearn.

styloite (stī'lō-īt), n. [Gr. στυλος, a pillar (see *style*²), + λίθος, stone.] A peculiar form of jointed or columnar structure occasionally seen in beds of limestone, uniting the adjoining surfaces of two layers of the rock, and usually from half an inch to 3 or 4 inches in length. Styloites were at first considered to be fossil corals, and called lygnites, and later crinoides, it being supposed that they had been formed by the crystallization of sulphate of magnesia. Styloite is the name now most generally adopted for them, and it is believed that they are due to pressure of the superincumbent rock, which the styloite has been able to resist to a certain extent because protected by a shell, or some other organic body, which would not admit of the sinking of the material immediately under it as rapidly as did the adjacent rock under the compression of the overlying material, the part thus protected forming a columnar individual mass with slightly striated surface.

stylo mastoid (stī-lō-mas'toid), a. [stylo(id) + mastoid.] In anat., common to the styloid process and the mastoid division of the temporal bone.—Stylo mastoid artery, a branch of the posterior auricular artery, which enters the stylo mastoid foramen to supply parts of the inner ear.—Stylo mastoid foramen. See foramen, and cuts under Felidae and skull.—Stylo mastoid vein, a small vein emptying into the posterior auricular vein.

stylo maxillary (stī-lō-mak'si-lā-ri), a. [stylo(id) + maxillary.] Of or pertaining to the styloid process of the temporal bone and the inframaxillary, or lower jaw-bone.—Stylo maxillary ligament, a thin band of ligamentous fibers passing from near the tip of the styloid process to the angle and posterior border of the ramus of the mandible.

stylo meter (stī-lō-m'e-tēr), n. [Gr. στυλος, pillar, column, + μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for measuring columns.

Stylo mmato phora (stī-lō-mā-tof'ō-rā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of stylo mmato phorus: see stylo mmato phorus.] A suborder or other prime division of pulmonate gastropods, having the eyes borne on the ends of the tentacles: opposed to Baso mmato phora. It includes the terrestrial pulmonates, as land-snails and slugs. Geophila and Nephepneusta are synonyms.

stylo mmato phorus (stī-lō-mā-tof'ō-rus), a. [NL. stylo mmato phorus, < Gr. στυλος, a pillar, + ὄμμα(-), an eye, + -φόρος, < φέρειν = E. *bear*¹.] Having eyes at the top of a style, horn, or tentacle, as a snail; of or pertaining to the Stylo mmato phora.

stylo mmato us (stī-lō-mā'tus), a. [Gr. στυλος, a pillar, + ὄμμα(-), an eye.] Same as stylo mmato phorus.

stylo pharyngeal (stī-lō-fā-rin'jē-al), a. and n. [stylo pharyngeus + -al.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the styloid process and the pharynx.

II. n. The stylo pharyngeus.
stylo pharyngeus (stī'lō-far-in-jē'us), n.; pl. stylo pharyngei (-ī). [NL., < L. stylus, prop. stilus, a style, + Gr. φάρυγξ (φάρυγγ-), the throat.] A long slender muscle, spreading out below, arising from the base of the styloid process of the temporal bone, and inserted partly into the constrictor muscles of the pharynx, and partly into the posterior border of the thyroid cartilage: it is innervated by the glossopharyngeus.

Stylo phorum (stī-lōf'ō-rum), n. [NL. (Nuttall, 1818), so called from the conspicuous style; < Gr. στυλος, a pillar (see *style*²), + φέρειν = E. *bear*¹.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Papaveraceæ and tribe Papaveræ. It is characterized by flowers with two sepals, four petals, and a distinct style which bears from two to four erect lobes, and is persistent with the placenta after the fall of the valves and serobianulate seeds from the ovoid, oblong, or linear, and commonly stalked capsule. There are 4 or 5 species, 2 in North America, the others in the Himalayas, Manchuria, and Japan. They are herbs with a perennial rootstock and a yellow juice, bearing a few lobed or dissected tender stem-leaves, and usually others which are pinnatifid and radical. The yellow or red flowers are borne on long peduncles which are nodding in the bud. S. diphyllum is thecelandine poppy or yellow poppy of the central United States, formerly classed under Mecconopsis. Its light-green leaves resemble those of thecelandine, and, like it, contain a yellow juice.

Stylo pidæ (stī-lōp'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Kirby, 1813), < Stylo + -idæ.] An aberrant group of insects, formerly considered as forming a distinct order, Strepsiptera or Rhipiptera, but now ranked as a family of heteromericous beetles, typified by the anomalous genus Stylops. In the males, which are capable of flight, the mouth-parts are atrophied, except the mandibles and one pair of palpi; the prothorax and mesothorax are very short; the elytra are reduced to simple club-shaped appendages (pseudelytra), while the hind wings are well developed, the metathorax being remarkably large and long, and the abdomen small. The females are wingless and worm-like, with a flattened triangular head, and live in the abdomen of certain bees and wasps, though the members of some exotic genera parasitize ants and some homopterous and orthopterous insects. They are viviparous, giving birth to hundreds of minute young, of very primitive form, with bulbous feet, slender hairy body ending in two long styles, and intestine ending as a closed sac. Stylops and Xenus are the only genera represented in North America. S.

Stylo pidæ.—Stylops aterrima, adult winged male. (Cross shows natural size.)

childreni lives in certain bees, and X. pecki in a common wasp (Polistes metricus). See cut under Stylops.

stylo pized (stī'lō-pīzd), a. [stylops + -ize + -ed.] Penetrated by a stylops; serving as the host of the parasitic stylops.

stylo pod (stī'lō-pōd), n. [NL. stylo podium, < Gr. στυλος, a pillar (see *style*²), + πούς (πόδ-) = E. foot.] In bot., same as stylo podium.

stylo podium (stī-lō-pō'di-um), n.; pl. stylo podia (-ā). [NL.: see stylo pod.] In bot., one of the double fleshy disks from which the styles in the Umbelliferae arise.

Stylops (stī'lōps), n. [NL. (Kirby, 1802), < Gr. στυλος, a pillar (see *style*²), + ὤψ, eye, face.] 1. A genus of insects, type of the order Rhipip-

1. Stylops aterrima, adult female, with two nearly hatched eggs. C, D, in B, the abdomen; A, ventral surface of thorax of three segments 1, 2, 3; a, mandibles; b, mouth. 2. Stylops aterrima, newly born larva, on a hair of a bee (Andrena trimera). (All highly magnified.)

tera or Strepsiptera, and now of the coleopterous family Stylo pidæ.—2. [l. c.] An insect of this genus; a rhipipter or strepsipter.

Stylo santhes (stī-lō-san'thēz), n. [NL. (Swartz, 1788), so called from the stalk-like calyx-tube; irreg. < Gr. στυλος, a pillar (see *style*²), + ἄθος, flower.] A genus of leguminous plants, of the tribe Hedysarææ, type of the subtribe Stylo santhesæ. It is characterized by pinnate leaves of three leaflets, and an oblong or globose and usually densely flowered spike, a long stalk-like calyx-tube, and stamens united into a closed tube with their anthers alternately oblong and basifixed and shorter and versatile. There are about 21 species, of which 4 are natives of Africa or Asia, 1 is North American, and the others are South American and mainly Brazilian. They are commonly viscous herbs with yellow flowers in dense terminal spikes or heads, rarely scattered or axillary. S. elatior of the United States, the pencil-flower of southern pine-barrens, extends north to Long Island and Indiana. S. procumbens is known in the West Indies as treefool.

stylo spore (stī'lō-spōr), n. [Gr. στυλος, a pillar (see *style*²), + σπορά, seed: see spore.] In bot., a stalked spore, developed by abstriction from the top of a slender thread or sterigma, and produced either in a special receptacle, as a pycnidium, or uninclosed as in the Contomyces. See pycnidium, macrostylo spore. Also called pycnidiospore, pycnogonidium, pycnospore.

stylo sporous (stī-los'pō-rus), a. [stylo spore + -ous.] In bot., of the nature of a stylo spore; resembling a stylo spore.

stylo stegium (stī-lō-stē'ji-um), n.; pl. stylo stegia (-ī). [NL. < Gr. στυλος, a pillar (see *style*²), + στέγος, cover.] In bot., the peculiar orbicular corona which covers the style in Stapelia and similar asclepiads.

stylo stomont (stī-lō-stō'mōn), n. [NL. < Gr. στυλος, a pillar, + στόμον, taken as 'stamen' (see *stamen*¹).] In bot., an epigynous stamen.

stylo typite (stī'lō-tī-pīt), n. [Gr. στυλος, a pillar (see *style*²), + τύπος, impression, + -ίτης.] A sulphid of antimony, copper, iron, and silver, from Copiapo, Chili: it is closely related to bournonite.

stylus (sti'lus), n.; pl. styli (-li). [NL. < L. stylus, prop. stilus, a pointed instrument: see style.] 1. A sponge-spicule of the monaxon miradiate type, sharp at one end and not at the other. It is regarded as an oxea one of whose rays is suppressed.—2. In entom., a style or stylet.

styme, n. See styme.

stymie (sti'mi), n. [Origin obscure; perhaps connected with styme, styme, a glimpse, a transitory glance.] In yolf-playing, a position in which a player has to putt for the hole with his opponent's ball directly in the line of his approach.

Stymphalian (stim-fā'li-an), a. [L. Stymphalius, < Gr. Στυμφάλιος, < Στυμφάλος, Stymphalus (see def.).] Of or pertaining to Stymphalus (the ancient name of a small deep valley, a lake, a river, and a town in Areadia, Greece).—Stymphalian birds, in Gr. fable, a flock of noisome, voracious, and destructive birds, with brazen or iron claws, wings, and beaks, which infested Stymphalus. The killing or expulsion of these birds was the sixth labor of Hercules.

A sort of dangerous fowl [critics], who have a perverse inclination to plunder the best branches of the tree of knowledge, like those Stymphalian birds that eat up the fruit.

Sicfl, Tale of a Tub, iii.

styptic (stip'tik), a. and n. [Formerly also stiptic, stiptik; < ME. stiptik, < OF. (and F.) stiptique = Sp. estiptico = Pg. estitica = It. stptico, < L. stypcticus, < Gr. στυπτικός, astringent, < στίβειν, contract, draw together, be astringent.] I. a. 1. Astringent; constrictive; binding.

Take heed that slippery meats be not fyrste eaten, nor that stiptik nor restraining meates be taken at the beginning, as quynces, peares, and medlars.

Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Health, fol. 45.

2. Having the quality of checking hemorrhage or bleeding; stanching.

Then in his hands a bitter root he bruise'd;

The wound he wash'd, the styptic juice infus'd.

Pope, Iliad, xi. 983.

Styptic collodion, a compound of collodion 100 parts, carbolic acid 10 parts, pure tannin 5 parts, and benzoic acid 3 parts. Also called styptic collod.—Styptic powder. See powder.

II. n. 1. An astringent; something causing constriction or constraint.

Mankind is infinitely beheld to this noble styptick, that could produce such wonderful effects so suddenly.

Steele, Lying Lover, v. 1.

2. A substance employed to check a flow of blood by application to the bleeding orifice or surface.

This wyne alle medycyne is take unto Ther stiptik stont [stop] clectyng bloode, and wo
Of wombe or of stomak this wol deelyne.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 102.

Cotton-wool styptic, cotton-wool soaked in tincture of perchlorid of iron.

styptical (stip'ti-kal), a. [< styptic + -al.] Same as styptic.

styptic-bur (stip'tik-bér), n. See Priva.

stypticite (stip'ti-sit), n. [< styptic + -ite.] Same as fibraferrite.

stypticity (stip-tis'i-ti), n. [< styptic + -ity.] The property of being styptic; astringency.

Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their stypticity, and mix with all animal acids.

Sir J. Floyer.

styptic-weed (stip'tik-wéd), n. The western cassia, Cassia occidentalis, a tall herb of tropical America and the southern United States. Its seeds, from their use, are called negro or Mogdad coffee, though they do not contain caffeine; its root is said to be diuretic; and its leaves are used as a dressing for slight wounds (whence the name). Also stinking-weed, stinking-wood.

Styracaceæ (sti-rā-kā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. Alphonse de Candolle, 1844], < Styrax (-ac-) + -acæ.] Same as Styracææ.

Styracææ (sti-rā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Richard, 1808), for Styracææ; < Styrax + -acææ.] An order of gamopetalous plants, of the cohort Ebenales. It is characterized by flowers which usually have ten or more stamens attached to a five-lobed corolla, and an ovary which is inferior, half inferior, or fixed by a broad base, and contains a solitary ovule or few in each cell. The embryo, with its doubtful radicle, also differs from that of the allied orders, the Sapotaceæ and Ebenaceæ, in which it is respectively inferior and superior. The order includes about 235 species, belonging to 7 genera, of which one is Halesia of North America and Asia, 4 are small South American genera, and the others belong to the large genus Symplocos or to the type Styrax, natives of warm regions, but wanting in Africa. They are smooth, hairy, or scurfy trees or shrubs, with alternate entire or serrate membranous or coriaceous feather-veined leaves. Their flowers are usually white and racemed, rarely reddish, and sometimes cymose or fasciated. See Halesia, Styrax, and storax.

styracin, styracine (stir'a-sin), n. [< NL. Styrax (-ac-) + -in, -ine.] An ester (C₁₈H₁₆O₂) of cinnamic acid, which is the chief constituent of storax. It forms odorless and tasteless crystals, which have the properties of a resin.

Styrax (stir'aks), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), so named because producing a gum; < L. styrax, storax, < Gr. στυραξ, the gum storax, also the tree producing it; see storax.] A genus of dicotyledonous plants, type of the order Styracææ. It is characterized by flowers with five partly united or separate petals, ten stamens in one row with linear or rarely oblong anthers, and a three-celled or afterward one-celled ovary with the ovules usually few and erect or pendulous. The fruit is seated upon the calyx and is globose or oblong, dry or drupaceous, indehiscent or three-valved, and nearly filled by the usually solitary seed. There are over 60 species, widely scattered through warm regions of Asia and America, a few also natives of temperate parts of Asia and southern Europe, but none found in Africa or Australia. They are shrubs or trees, usually scurfy or covered with stellate hairs, and bearing entire or slightly serrate leaves, and usually white flowers in pendulous racemes. Several species are cultivated for ornament; S. japonica, recently introduced into gardens, is known from its feathery white blossoms as snowflake-flower. Others yield valuable gums, especially S. benzoin (see benzoin) and S. officinalis (see storax). S. punctata, a Central American tree, yields a gum which is used as frankincense, and is obtained on removing the external wood from trees which have been cut for several years. S. grandifolia, S. Americana, and S. puberulenta, known as American storax, occur in the United States from Virginia southward, with one species in Texas and one in California.

Styrax Benzoin. a, a flower.

Styrian (stir'i-an), a. and n. [< Styria (see def.) + -an.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Styria, a crownland and duchy of the Austrian empire, lying south of Upper and Lower Austria, and west of Hungary.

II. n. One of the people of Styria.

styrol (sti'rol), n. [< L. styr(ax) + -al.] A colorless strongly refractive liquid (C₈H₈), with an odor like that of benzol, obtained by heating styraen with calcium hydrate. Also called cinnamenc.

styrolene (sti'rō-lēn), n. [< styrol + -ene.] Same as styrol.

styrene (sti'rōn), n. [< styr(ax) + -ene.] Cinnamyl alcohol (C₉H₁₀O), a crystalline solid with a fragrant odor, obtained by treating styraen with caustic potash. It is slightly soluble in water, and volatile at high temperatures.

stythe¹, n. [An irreg. var. of sty.] A sty.

O out of my stythe I [a maiden transformed to a beast] whina rise . . .

Till Kempion, the Kingis son,

Cum to the crag, and thrice kiss me.

Kempion (Child's Ballads, I. 140).

And, at last, into the very swine's stythe,

The Queen brought forth a son.

Faust Foodrage (Child's Ballads, III. 43).

stythe² (stith), n. [More prop. stithe; cf. E. dial. stithe, stifing; prob. a var. of stive, after stithe, stith, strong; see stith.] Choke-damp; after-damp; blaek-damp; the mixture of gases left after an explosion of fire-damp, and consisting chiefly of carbonic-acid gas; also, more rarely, this gas accumulated in perceptible quantity in any part of a coal-mine, whether arising from respiration of men or animals, from the use of gunpowder, or from the burning of lamps or candles. [Lancashire, Eng., coal-field.]

Shallow and badly ventilated mines produce stythe.

Gresley.

styward, n. A Middle English form of steward.

Styx (stiks), n. [< L. Styx, < Gr. Στύξ (Στυγ-), a river of the infernal regions, lit. 'the Hateful,' < στυγείν, hate, abominate.] 1. In Gr. myth., a river of the lower world.—2. [NL.] In zool., a genus of butterflies, of the subfamily Pierinae. Staudinger, 1876.

Suabian, a. and n. Same as Swabian.

suability (sū-ā-bil'i-ti), n. [< suable + -ity.] Liability to be sued; the state of being suable, or subject by law to civil process.

suable (sū-ā-bl), a. [< suē + -able.] Capable of being or liable to be sued; subject by law to civil process.

suade (swād), v. t. [< OF. suader = Sp. suadir = It. suadere, < L. suadere, advise, urge, persuade; see suasion, and cf. dissuade, persuade.] To persuade.

suadible (swā'di-bl), a. [< suade + -ible.] Same as suasible.

Suæda (sū-ē'djū), n. [NL. (Forskål, 1775), from an Ar. name.] A genus of apetalous plants, of the order Chenopodiaceæ and series Spirolobææ, type of the tribe Suædeæ. It is characterized by fleshy linear leaves, and flowers with a five-lobed persistent perianth from which the included utricle is nearly or quite free. There are about 45 species, natives of sea-shores and salt deserts. They are erect or prostrate herbs or shrubs, green or glaucous, and either simple or diffusely branched. Their leaves are usually terete and entire, and their flowers small and nearly or quite sessile in the axils. S. linearis is a small sea-coast plant of the Atlantic coast from Nova Scotia to Florida; 6 or 7 other species occur westward. S. fruticosa, known as sea-rosemary, shrubby goosefoot, or white glasswort, an erect branching evergreen common in the Mediterranean region, is one of the plants formerly burned to produce barilla. For S. maritima, also called sea-goosefoot, see sea-bite, under *bite*².

Suædeæ (sū-ē'dē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Moquin, 1852), < Suæda + -ææ.] A tribe of apetalous plants, of the order Chenopodiaceæ and suborder Chenopodiææ. It is characterized by an unjointed stem with mostly linear, terete, or ovate leaves, and by its fruit, a utricle included in the unchanged or appendaged perianth, the seed-coat crustaceous or finally membranous, and the embryo spiral. It includes five genera, four monotypic and occurring in saline regions in Persia and central Asia; for the other, the type, see Suæda.

suaget, swaget (swāj), v. [< ME. swagen; by apheresis from assuage.] I. trans. To make quiet; soothe; assuage.

Kfayne were the freikes and the folke all,
And swiftly thni swere, swaget these hertes,
To be lell to the lord all his lyl tyme.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), i. 13643.

Nor wanting power to mitigate and suage
With solemn touches troubled thoughts.

Milton, P. L., i. 566.

II. intrans. To become quiet; abate.

These yoies suage

Shalle neuer suage nor sesse

But euermore endure and enresse.

Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 146.

Soone after mydayght the grete tempest byganne to suage and wex lasse.

Sir R. Guyford, Pylgrymage, p. 73.

suant¹ (sū'ant), a. [Also suent, formerly sewant, sewent; < OF. suant, ppr. of suivre, etc., follow; see sue, sequent.] 1. Following; sequent; pursuant. Haliwell (under suent).—2. Smooth; even.

The Middlesex Cattle Show goes off here with éclat annually, as if all the joints of the agricultural machine were suent.

Thoreau, Walden, p. 37.

[Prov. Eng. and New Eng. in both senses.]

suant² (sū'ant), n. [Formerly also sewant; origin uncertain.] The plaiter. Haliwell (under sewant). [Prov. Eng.]

Behold some others raoged all along

To take the sewant, yea, the flounder sweet.

J. Dennis (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 171).

The shad that in the springtime cometh in;

The suant swift, that is not set by least.

J. Dennis (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 175).

suantly (sū'ant-li), adv. Evenly; smoothly; regularly. Also suently. [Prov. New Eng.]

suarrow (sū-ā-rō), n. A variant of souarie.

suasible (swā'si-bl), a. [= Sp. suasible = It. suasibile, < L. suadere, pp. suasus, advise, urge; see suade, suasion. Cf. suadible.] Same as persuasible. Bailey, 1731. [Rare.]

suasion (swā'zhon), n. [< ME. suacyan, < OF. suasion = It. suasione, < L. suasio(n)-, an advising, a counseling, exhortation, < suadere, pp. suasus, advise, counsel, urge, persuade (cf. LL. suadus, persuasive, L. Suada, the goddess of persuasion), < suavis, orig. suadris*, pleasant, sweet; see suare, sweet.] The act or effort of persuading; the use of persuasive means or efforts: now chiefly in the phrase moral suasion.

The suacyon of swetnesse rethoryen.

Chaucer, Boethius, ii. prose 1.

Thei had, by the subtil suasion of the denill, broken the thirde commandement in tasting the forboden fruite.

Sir T. More, Works, p. 157.

She did not dare to come down the path to shake her, and moral suasion at the distance of sixty or seventy feet is very ineffective. T. C. Crawford, English Life, p. 184.

suasive (swā'siv), a. [< OF. suasif = Sp. It. suasivo, < L. suadere, pp. suasus, advise, urge; see suade, suasion.] Having power to persuade; persuasive. [Archaic and poetical.]

Its [justice's] command over them was but suasive and political.

South, Sermons, I. ii.

suasively (swā'siv-li), adv. So as to persuade.

Let a true tale . . . be suasively told them.

Cartyle, French Rev., i. iii. 2.

suasory (swā'sō-rī), a. [= OF. suasore = Sp. Pg. It. suasorio, < L. suasorius, of or pertaining to advice or persuasion, < suasor, one who advises or persuades, < suadere, advise, persuade: see suade, suasion.] Tending to persuade; persuasive.

A Suasory or Enticement Temptation.

Ep. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, Works, I. 140.

suave (swāv or swāv), a. [F. suave = Sp. Pg. suave = It. soave, < L. suavis, orig. suadvis* = Gr. ἰδύς, sweet, agreeable, = AS. swēc, E. sweet: see sweet. Cf. suade, suasion, etc.] Soothingly agreeable; pleasant; mollifying; bland: used of persons or things: as, a suave diplomatist; suave politeness.

Mr. Hall, . . . to whom the husky oat-cake was, from custom, suave as manna, seemed to his best spirits.

Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xxvi.

What gentle, suave, courteous tones!

Mrs. H. Jackson, Ramona, I.

suavely (swāv' or swāv'li), adv. In a suave or soothing manner; blandly: as, to speak suavely.

suavify (swāv'i-fī), v. t. [L. suavis, sweet, + facere, make (see -fy).] To make affable. Imp. Dicit.

suaviloquent (swāv-il'ō-kwēt), a. [LL. suaviloquent(-s), speaking sweetly, < L. suavis, sweet, + loquens(-s), ppr. of loqui, speak.] Speaking suavely or blandly; using soothing or agreeable speech. Bailey, 1727.

suaviloquy (swāv-il'ō-kwi), n. [LL. suaviloquium, sweet speaking, < L. suaviloquens, speaking sweetly, < suavis, sweet, + loqui, speak.] Sweetness of speech. Compare suaviloquent.

suavity (swāv'i-ti), n. [F. suavité = Sp. suavidad = Pg. suavidade = It. suavità, soavità, < L. suavitas(-s), sweetness, pleasantness, < suavis, sweet, pleasant: see suave.] 1. Pleasant or soothing quality or manner; agreeableness; blandness: as, suavity of manner or address.

Our own people . . . greatly lack suavity, and show a comparative inattention to minor civilities.

H. Spencer, Princ. of Sociol., § 431.

The worst that can be said of it [Perugino's atyle] is that its suavity inclines to mawkishness, and that it quietises borders upon sleepiness.

J. A. Synonds, Italy and Greece, p. 75.

Hence—2. Pl. suavities (-tiz). That which is suave, bland, or soothing.

The elegances and suavities of life die out one by one as we sink through the social scale.

O. W. Holmes, Professor, vi.

3†. Sweetness to the senses; a mild or agreeable quality. Johnson.

She [Racbel] desired them [the mandrakes] for rarity, pulchritude, or suavity. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vii. 7. =Syn. 1. Urbanity, amenity, civility, courtesy.

sub- [ME. sub- = OF. sub-, sou-, F. sub-, sou- = Pr. sub- = Sp. Pg. It. sub-, < L. sub, prep. with abl., under, before, near; of time, toward, up to, just after; in comp., under (of place), secretly (of action); the b remains in comp. unchanged, except before c, f, g, p, where it is usually, and before n and r, where it is often assimilated (suc-, suf-, sug-, sup-, sur-); also in another form sub-, in comp. sus-, as in suscipere, undertake, sustinere, sustain, etc., reduced to su- before a radical s, as in suspiciere, look under, suspirare, sigh; prob. = Gr. ὑπό, under (see hypo-), with initial s- as in super = Gr. ὑπέρ (see super-, hyper-): see up and over. Cf. subter-.] A prefix of Latin origin, meaning 'under, below, beneath,' or 'from under.' (a) It occurs in its literal sense in many words, verbs, adjectives, and nouns, taken from the Latin, as in subaltern, underlying, subscribe, underwrite, subside, sit down, submerge, plunge down, etc., the literal sense being in many cases not felt in English, as in subject, subjoin, subtract, etc. (b) It also expresses an inferior or subordinate part or degree, as in subdivide, especially with adjectives, where it is equivalent to the English -ish, meaning 'somewhat, rather,' as in subacid, sourish, subdulcis, sweetish, etc., being in these greatly extended in modern use, as an accepted English formative, applicable not only to adjectives of Latin origin, especially in scientific use, as in subatle, subordinate, subdivine, etc., but to words of other origin, as subhornblendic. (c) It is also freely used with nouns denoting an agent or a division, to denote an inferior or subordinate agent or division, as in subaeronaut, subprior, subgenus, subspecies, etc., not only with Latin but with nouns of other origin, as in subreader, submarshal, subfreshman, etc., where it is equivalent to under- or deputy, and is usually written with a hyphen. (d) In many cases, especially where it has been assimilated, as in suc-, suf-, sug-, sup-, sur-, the force of the prefix is not felt in English, and the word is to English apprehension a primitive, as in sucor, suffer, suggest, support, summon, surrender, etc. In technical use sub- denotes—(e) In zool. and anat.: (1) inferiority in kind, quality, character, degree, extent, and the like. It is prefixed almost at will to adjectives admitting of comparison, and in its various applications may be rendered by 'less than, not quite, not exactly, somewhat, nearly, hardly, almost,' etc.; it often has the diminishing or depreciating force of the suffix -ish; it is sometimes prefixed, like about, merely to avoid committal to more precise or exact statement, but in a few cases implies unlikeness amounting to oppositeness and so to negation of some character or attribute, with the meaning nearly of quasi- or pseudo-. A particular case indicates taxonomic inferiority, or subordination in classificatory grade, of any group from subkingdom to subvariety: it is the sense (c) above noted, and the same as the botanical sense (2) below. (2) Inferiority in place or position: lowness of relative location. This sense is more definite, and the meaning of 'lower than' may usually be rendered by 'under, underneath, beneath, below,' sometimes by 'on the under side of.' This sub- is synonymous with infra- or infero-, and with hypo-, and is the opposite of supra- or super-, hyper-, and sometimes epi-. (f) In bot., (1) with adjectives, literal position beneath, as in subcortical, subhymental, subepidermal, subpetiolar, etc.; (2) with classificatory terms, a systematic grade next lower than that of the stem-word, as in suborder, subgenus, subspecies; (3) with adjectives and adverbs, an inferior degree or extent, 'somewhat, to some extent, imperfectly,' as in subangulose, subascending, subcaudate, subconate, etc. (g) In chem., the fact that the member of the compound with which it is connected is in relative minimum: thus, subacetate of lead is a compound of lead and acetic acid which is capable of combining with more acetic acid radicals, but not with more lead. [As sub- in most of the uses noted above is now established as an English formative, it is to be treated, like under- in similar cases, as applicable in modern use in any instance where it may be wanted; and of the modern compounds so formed only the principal ones are entered below, usually without further etymological note. Many of the adjectives have two meanings, the mode of formation differing accordingly: thus, subabdominal, 'situated under the abdomen,' is formed < L. sub, under, + abdomen (abdomin-), abdomen, + -al; while subabdominal, 'not quite abdominal,' is < sub- + abdominal. For the full etymology of these words, when not given below, see sub- and the other member of the compound. The less familiar compounds with sub- are often written with a hyphen; it is here uniformly omitted.]

sub (sub), n. [Contr. of subaltern or subordinate.] A subaltern; a subordinate. [Colloq.]

"Ah, when we were sub together in camp in 1803, what a lively fellow Charley Baynes was!" his comrade, Colonel Bunch, would say.

Thackeray, Philip, xxvi.

suba, n. See subah.

subabdominal (sub-ab-dom'i-nāl), a. [= F. subabdominal; as sub- + abdominal.] 1. Situated below or beneath the abdomen: as, the subabdominal appendages of a crustacean.—2. Not quite abdominal in position, as the ventral fins of a fish.

subacetate (sub-as'e-tāt), n. A basic acetate—that is, one in which there are one or more equivalents of the basic radical which may combine with the acid anhydrid to form a normal acetate: as, subacetate of lead; subacetate of copper (verdigris).

subacid (sub-as'id), a. and n. [= Sp. subácido = It. subacido, < L. subacidus, somewhat sour, < sub, under, + acidus, sour: see acid.] I. a. 1. Moderately acid or sour: as, a subacid juice. Arbuthnot.—2. Hence, noting words or a temperament verging on acidity or somewhat biting.

A little subacid kind of drollish impatience in his nature. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, viii. 26.

II. n. A substance moderately acid.

subacidity (sub-a-sid'i-ti), n. The state of being subacid; also, that which is slightly acid or aerid.

A theologic subacidity. The Atlantic, LXVII. 411.

subacidulous (sub-a-sid'ū-lus), n. Moderately acidulous.

Tasting a thimbleful of rich Canary, honeyed Cyprus, or subacidulous Hoek. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 291.

subacid (sub-ak'rid), a. Moderately acid, sharp, or pungent. Sir J. Floyer.

subacromial (sub-a-krō'mi-āl), a. [L. sub, under, + NL. acromion: see acromial.] Situated below the acromion: as, a subacromial bursa.

subact (sub-akt'), v. t. [L. subactus, pp. of subigere, bring under, subdue, < sub, under, + agere, lead, bring: see act.] To reduce; subdue; subjeet. Evelyn, True Religion, II. 375.

subact (sub-akt'), a. [ME. < L. subactus, pp.: see the verb.] Reduced; subdued.

In Novemb'r and Marche her branches sette

In danged lande subact.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 122.

subaction (sub-ak'shōn), n. [L. subactio(-n), a working through or up, preparation: see sub-act.] 1. The act of reducing, or the state of being reduced; reduction. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 538.—2. A substance reduced.

subacuminate (sub-ā-kū'mi-nāt), a. Somewhat acuminate.

subacute (sub-ā-kūt'), a. Noting a condition just below that of acuteness, in any sense.

subacutely (sub-ā-kūt'li), adv. In a subacute manner.

subaërial (sub-ā-ē'ri-āl), a. In geol., formed, produced, or deposited in the open air, and not beneath the sea, or under water, or below the surface; not submarine or subterranean: thus, subaërial denudation or erosion. See æolian, 2.

subagency (sub-ā'jen-si), n. A delegated agency.

subagent (sub-ā'jent), n. In law, the agent of an agent.

subah (sō'bāi), n. [Also suba, soubah; < Pers. Hind. subāl, a province.] 1. A division or province of the Mogul empire. Yule and Burnell.—2. An abbreviation of subahdar.

subahdar (sō-bā-dār'), n. [Also soubahdar, soubadar; < Pers. Hind. subāhdār, < sūbah, a province, + -dār, holding, keeping.] 1. Originally, a lord of a subah or province; hence, a local commandant or chief officer.—2. The chief native officer of a company of sepoys. Yule and Burnell.

subaid (sub-ād'), v. t. To give secret or private aid to. Daniel. [Rare.]

subalmoner (sub-al'mōn-ēr), n. A subordinate almoner. Wood.

subalpine (sub-al'pin), a. [= F. subalpin = Pg. subalpina, < L. subalpinus, lying near the Alps, < sub, under, + Alpinus, Alpine: see alpine.] 1. Living or growing on mountains at an elevation next below the height called alpine.—2. Lower Alpine: applied to that part or zone of the Alps which lies between the so-called "highland" zone and the "Alpine" zone proper. It extends between the elevations of 4,000 and 5,500 feet approximately, and is especially characterized by the presence of coniferous trees, chiefly firs, which cover a large part of its surface. Large timber-trees rarely reach much above its upper border. Below the subalpine zone is the highland or mountain zone, the region of deciduous trees, and above it the Alpine, which, as this term is generally used, embraces the region extending between the upper limit of trees and the first appearance of permanent snow. Still higher up is the glacial region, comprehending all that part of the Alps which rises above the limit of perpetual snow. The terms alpine and subalpine are sometimes applied to other mountain-chains than the Alps, with signification more or less vaguely accordant with their application to that chain.

subaltern (sub-al'tēr-n or su-bāl'tēr-n, the former always in the logical sense), a. and n. [F. subalterne = Sp. It. subalterno, < ML. subalternus, subaltern, < L. sub, under, + alternus, one after the other, alternate: see altern.] I. a. Having an inferior or subordinate position: subordinate; specifically (milit.), holding the rank of a junior officer usually below the rank of captain.

To this system of religion were tagged several subaltern doctrines. Swift, Tale of a Tub, ii.

Subaltern genus, opposition, proposition, etc. See the nouns.

II. n. A subaltern officer; a subordinate.

subalternant (sub-al-tēr'nānt), a. and n. [= Sp. It. subalternante; as subaltern + -ant.] I. a. In logic, universal, as opposed to particular.

II. n. A universal.

subalternate (sub-al-tēr'nāt), a. and n. [sub- + altern + -ate.] I. a. 1. Succeeding; succeeding by turns. Imp. Dict.—2. Subordinate; subaltern: inferior. Canon Tooker.

II. n. In logic, a particular, as opposed to a universal.

subalternating (sub-al-tēr'nā-ting), a. Succeeding by turns; successive. Imp. Dict.

subalternation (sub-al-tēr'nā'shōn), n. [= Pg. subalternação; as subalternate + -ion.] 1. The state of inferiority or subjection; the state of being subalternate; succession by turns. Hooker, Eeoles, Polity, v. 73.—2. In logic, an immediate inference from a universal to a particular under it: as, every griffin breathes fire; therefore, some animals breathe fire. Some logicians do not admit the validity of this inference.

subanal (sub-ā'nāl), a. [L. sub, under, + anus, anus: see anal.] Situated under the anus; specifically noting a plate or other formation in echinoderms. Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLV. 644.

subancestral (sub-an-sēs'trāl), a. Of collateral ancestry or derivation; not in the direct line of descent. Proc. U. S. Nat. Mus., XI. 588.

subanconal (sub-ang-kō'nē-āl), a. [L. sub, under, + NL. anconus: see anconal.] Situated underneath the anconus.

subanconeus (sub-ang-kō'nē-us), n.; pl. subanconci (-i). [NL. < L. sub, under, + NL. anconus, q. v.] A small muscle of the back of the elbow, arising from the humerus just above the olecranon fossa, and inserted into the capsular ligament of the elbow-joint. It resembles the subperoneus of the knee.

subandean (sub-an'dē-an), a. [sub- + Andes: see Andean.] In zoögeog., sub adjacent with reference to certain parts of the Andes, and nowhere attaining an altitude so great as that of the highest Andean mountains: specifying a certain faunal area. (See below.)—Subandean subregion, in zoogeog., one of four subregions into which the continent of South America (with the islands appertaining thereto) has been divided by A. Newton. It includes a not well defined northerly section of the continent, with the islands of Tobago, Trinidad, and the Galapagos, and takes in all the South American countries that do not belong to the Amazonian, Brazilian, or Patagonian subregion. The Subandean subregion includes what has also been called the Columbian (or Colombian), but is more extensive. It is recognized upon ornithological grounds, and said to possess 72 peculiar genera of birds. Encyc. Brit., III, 744.

subangled (sub-ang'gld), a. Same as subangular.—Subangled wave. See wave.

subangular (sub-ang'gū-lār), a. Slightly angular; bluntly angulated. Huxley, Physiography, p. 278.

subangulate, subangulated (sub-ang'gū-lāt, -la-ted), a. Somewhat angled or sharp.

subantichrist (sub-an'ti-krist), n. A person or power partially antagonistic to Christ; a lesser antichrist. Milton, Church-Government, i. 6. [Rare.]

subapennine (sub-ap'e-nin), a. [= F. subapennin, < L. sub, under, + Apenninus, Apennine: see Apennine.] Being at the base or foot of the Apennines.—Subapennine series in geol., a series of rocks of Pliocene age, developed in Italy on the flanks of the Apennines, and also in Sicily. In the Ligurian region the Pliocene has been divided into Messinian and Astian; in Sicily, into Astian, Pliastellan, and Zanclean. In the last region these rocks rise to an elevation of 4,000 feet above the sea-level, and are replete with well-preserved forms of organic life now living in the Mediterranean.

subapical (sub-ap'i-kal), a. [L. sub, under, + apex, point: see apical.] Situated below the apex.

subaponeurotic (sub-ap'ō-nū-rot'ik), a. [L. sub, under, + NL. aponurosis: see aponurotic.] Situated beneath an aponeurosis.

subapostolic (sub-ap'ōs-tol'ik), a. Of, pertaining to, or constituting the period succeeding that of the apostles; as, subapostolic literature. Encyc. Brit., XI, 854.

subappressed (sub-a-prest'), a. In entom., partly appressed; as, subappressed hairs.

subaquatic (sub-ā-kwat'ik), a. 1. Not entirely aquatic, as a wading bird.—2. [= F. subaquatique.] Situated or formed in or below the surface of the water; subaqueous.

subaqueous (sub-ā'kwē-us), a. [= It. subaqueo; as L. sub, under, + E. aqueous.] Situated, formed, or living under water; subaquatic.

subarachnoid (sub-a-rak'no'id), a. 1. Situated beneath the arachnoid—that is, between that membrane and the pia mater: as, the subarachnoid space.—2. Subdural.—Subarachnoid fluid, the cerebrospinal fluid.—Subarachnoid space, the space between the arachnoid membrane and the pia mater.

subarachnoidal, subarachnoidean (sub-ar-ak-noi'dal, -dē-an), a. Same as subarachnoid. H. Gray, Anat. (ed. 1887), p. 653.

subarborescent (sub-ār-bō-res'ent), a. Having a somewhat tree-like aspect.

subarctic (sub-ār-k'tik), a. Nearly arctic; existing or occurring a little south of the arctic circle; as, a subarctic region or fauna; subarctic animals or plants; a subarctic climate.

subarcuate (sub-ār-kū-āt), a. Somewhat bent or bowed; slightly arcuated.

subarcuated (sub-ār-kū-ā-ted), a. Same as subarcuate.

subareolar (sub-a-rē'ō-lār), a. Situated beneath the mammary areola.—Subareolar abscess, a furuncular subcutaneous abscess of the areola of the nipple.

subarmor (sub-ār'mor), n. A piece of armor worn beneath the visible outer defense. J. Hewitt, Anc. Armour, II, 132.

subarrhation (sub-a-rā'shon), n. [*L. ML. subarratio (n-), < subarrare, betroth, < L. sub, under, + arrha, earnest-money, a pledge: see arrha.] The ancient custom or rite of betrothing by the bestowal, on the part of the man, of marriage gifts or tokens, as money, rings, or other objects, upon the woman. Also subarration.

The prayer which follows . . . takes the place of a long form of blessing which followed the subarrhation in the ancient office. Blunt, Annotated Book of Common Prayer, p. 455.

subastragal (sub-as-trag'ā-lār), a. Situated beneath the astragalus.—Subastragal amputation, amputation of most of the foot, leaving only the astragalus.

subastragaloid (sub-as-trag'ā-lo'id), a. Situated beneath or below the astragalus.

subastral (sub-as'tral), a. [L. sub, under, + astrum, a star: see astral.] Situated beneath the stars or heavens; terrestrial.

subaud (sub-ād'), v. t. [L. subaudire, supply a word omitted, hear a little, < sub, under, + audire, hear: see audient.] To supply mentally, as a word or an ellipsis. Imp. Dict. [Rare.]

subaudition (sub-ā-dish'ōn), n. [L. subauditiō (n-), the supplying of a word omitted, < subaudire, supply a word omitted: see subaud.] The act of understanding something not expressed; that which is understood or implied from that which is expressed; understood meaning. Horne Tooke.

subaural (sub-ā'ral), a. Situated beneath or below the ear.

subaxillar (sub-ak'si-lār), a. and n. Same as subaxillary.

subaxillary (sub-ak'si-lā-ri), a. and n. I. a. 1. In zool.: (a) Situated beneath the axilla or armpit. (b) Specifically, in ornith., same as axillary: as, "subaxillary feathers," Pennant.—2. In bot., placed under an axil, or angle formed by the branch of a plant with the stem, or by a leaf with the branch.—Subaxillary region. See region.

II. n.; pl. subaxillaries (-riz). In ornith., same as axillar or axillary.

subbass (sub'bās), n. In organ-building, a pedal stop resembling either the open or the stopped diapason, and of 16- or 32-foot tone. Also called subbourdon.

subblush (sub-blush'), v. i. To blush slightly. [Rare.]

Raising up her eyes, sub-blushing as she did it. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ix. 25.

subbourdon (sub-bōr'don), n. Same as subbass.

subbrachial (sub-brā'ki-āl), a. and n. Same as subbrachiate.

subbrachiate (sub-brā'ki-āt), a. and n. I. a. Situated under the pectorals, as the ventral fins; having the ventrals under the pectorals, as a fish.

II. n. A subbrachiate fish. See Subbrachiati.

Subbrachiati (sub-brak-i-ā'ti), n. pl. An order of malacopecterygian fishes, containing those which are subbrachiate; contrasted with Apoles and Abdominales. See under Malacopecterygii.

subbrachycephalic (sub-brak'i-so-fal'ik or -sef'ā-lik), a. Nearly but not quite brachycephalic; somewhat short-headed; having a cephalic index of 80.01 to 83.33 (Broca). Nature, XLII, 357.

subbranch (sub'brāneh), n. 1. A subdivision of a branch, in any sense of that word. W. S. Jevons, Money and the Mechanism of Exchange, p. 258.—2. Specifically, in zoological classification, a primo division of a branch or phylum; a subphylum.

subbranchial (sub-brang'ki-āl), a. Situated under the gills.

subbreed (sub'brēd), n. A recognizable strain or marked subdivision of a breed; an incipient artificial race or stock. Darwin.

subbrigadier (sub'brig-ā-dēr'), n. An officer in the Horse Guards who ranks as cornet. [Eng.]

subcalcareous (sub-kal-kā'rē-us), a. Somewhat calcareous.

subcalcarine (sub-kal'kā-rin), a. Situated below the calcare, as of a bird, or below the calcareo fissure of the brain.

subcaliber (sub-kal'i-bēr), a. Of less caliber: said of a projectile as compared with the bore of the gun. See subcaliber projectile, under projectile.

subcantor (sub-kan'tor), n. In music, same as succantor, I.

subcapsular (sub-kap'sū-lār), a. Situated under a capsule; being in the cavity of a capsule. Lancet, 1889, I, 787.—Subcapsular epithelium, an epitheloid lining of the inside of the capsule of a spinal ganglion.

Subcarboniferous (sub-kār-bo-nif'ē-rus), n. and a. In geol., a name given by some geologists to the mountain-limestone division of the Carboniferous series, or that part of the series which lies beneath the millstone-grit. See carboniferous.

subcartilaginous (sub-kār-ti-laj'i-nus), a. 1. Situated below or beneath cartilage; lying under the costal cartilages; hypochondrial.—2. Partly or incompletely cartilaginous.

subcaudal (sub-kā'dal), a. and n. I. a. 1. Situated under the tail; placed on the under side of the tail: as, subcaudal chevron-bones; the subcaudal scutes, or orosteges, of a snake.—2. Not quite caudal or terminal; situated near the tail or tail-end; subterminal.—Subcaudal pouch, a pocket or recess beneath the root of the tail of the badger, above the anus, into which empty the secretions of certain subcaudal glands distinct from the ordinary anal or perineal glands of other Mustelidæ.

II. n. That which is subcaudal; specifically, in herpet., a orostege; one of the special scutes upon the under side of the tail of a serpent.

subcaudate (sub-kā'dāt), a. 1. In entom., having an imperfect tail-like process: as, butterflies with subcaudate wings.—2. In bot. See sub- (f) 3.

subcelestial (sub-sē-les'ti-āl), a. Being beneath the heavens.

The superlunary but subcelestial world. Harey, Irenæus, p. xxvii.

subcellar (sub'sel'sēr), n. A cellar beneath another cellar.

subcentral (sub-sen'tral), a. 1. Being under the center.—2. Nearly central; a little eccentric.

subcentrally (sub-sen'tral-i), adv. 1. Under the center.—2. Nearly centrally.

subcerebral (sub-ser'ē-brāl), a. Below the cerebrum; specifically, below the supposed seat of consciousness, or not dependent on volition: said of involuntary or reflex action in which the spinal cord, but not the brain, is concerned.

subchanter (sub'chān'tēr), n. In music, same as subcantor, succantor, I.

subchela (sub-kō'lā), n.; pl. subchela (-lā). The hooked end of an appendage which bends down upon the joint to which it is articulated, but has no other movable elaw to oppose it and thus make a nipper or chela.

subchelate (sub-kē'lāt), a. Of the nature of or provided with a subchela. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 327.

subcheliform (sub-kō'li-fōrm), a. Subchelate. Eng. Cyc. Nat. Hist. (1855), III, 87.

subchlorid, subchloride (sub'klō'rid), n. A compound of chlorine with an element two atoms of which form a bivalent radical: as, subchlorid of copper (Cu₂Cl₂); subchlorid of mercury (Hg₂Cl₂, calomel).

subchondral (sub-kon'dral), a. Lying underneath cartilage; subcartilaginous: as, subchondral osseous tissue.

subchordal (sub-kōr'dal), a. Situated beneath the chorda dorsalis, or notochord, of a vertebrate. Compare parachordal.

subchoroid (sub-kō'roid), a. Same as subchoroidal.

subchoroidal (sub-kō-roi'dal), a. Situated beneath the choroid tunic of the eye.—Subchoroidal dropsy, morbid accumulation of fluid between the adherent choroid sclerotic and the retina.

subcinctorium (sub-sing-kō'tō-ri-um), n.; pl. subcinctoria (-i-ā). See succinctorium.

subclass (sub'klās), n. A prime subdivision of a class; in zool. and bot., a division or group of a grade between the class and the order; a superorder.

subclavate (sub-klā'vāt), a. Somewhat clavate; slightly enlarged toward the end.—Subclavate antennæ, in entom., antennæ in which the outer joints are somewhat larger than the basal ones, but without forming a distinct club.

subclavian (sub-klā'vi-an), a. and n. [L. sub, under, + clavis, a key: see clavis, and cf. clavicle.] I. a. 1. Lying or extending under, beneath, or below the clavicle or collar-bone; subclavicular.—2. Pertaining to the subclavian artery or vein: as, the subclavian triangle or groove.—Subclavian artery, the principal artery of the root of the neck, arising on the right side from the innominate artery and on the left from the arch of the aorta, and ending in the axillary artery; the beginning or main trunk of the arterial system of the fore limb. See cut under lung and embryo.—Subclavian groove, (a) A shallow depression on the surface of the first rib, denoting the situation of a subclavian vessel. There are two of them, separated by a tubercle, respectively in front of and behind the insertion of the anterior scalene muscle—the former for the subclavian vein, the latter for the subclavian artery. (b) A groove on the under side of the clavicle, for the insertion of the subclavius.—Subclavian muscle, the subclavius.—Subclavian nerve, the motor nerve of the subclavius muscle, arising from the fifth cervical nerve at its junction with the sixth.—Subclavian triangle. See triangle.—Subclavian vein, the continuation of the axillary vein from the lower border of the first rib to the sternoclavicular articulation, where the vessel ends by joining the internal jugular to form the innominate vein. See cut under lung.

II. n. A subclavian artery, vein, nerve, or muscle.

subclavicular (sub-klā-vik'ū-lār), a. Situated below the clavicle; infraclavicular; subclavian.—Subclavicular aneurism, an aneurism of the axillary artery situated too high to be ligated below the clavicle.—Subclavicular fossa, the surface depression below the outer end of the clavicle.—Subclavicular region. Same as infraclavicular region (which see, under infraclavicular).

subclavius (sub-klā'vi-us), n.; pl. subclavii (-i-). [NL.: see subclavian.] A muscle passing from the first rib to the under surface of the clavicle or collar-bone.—Subclavius posticus. Same as sternohondroscapularis.

Subcoccinella (sub-kok-si-nel'ä), n. [NL., < sub + Coccinella.] A genus of ladybirds or coccinellids based by Huber (1841) upon the widespread S. 24-punctata. Also called Lasia.

subcollateral (sub-kō-lat'ē-ral), a. Situated below the collateral fissure of the brain.

subcommission (sub'kō-mish'ōn), n. An under-commission; a division of a commission.

subcommissioner (sub'kō-mish'ōn-ēr), n. A subordinate commissioner.

subcommittee (sub'kō-mit'ē), n. An under-committee; a part or division of a committee.

subconcave (sub-kon'kāv), a. Slightly concave.

subconcealed† (sub-kon-sēld'), a. Hidden underneath. Roger North, Examen, p. 430. (Darics.)

subconchoidal (sub-kong-koi'dal), a. Imperfectly conchoidal; having an imperfectly conchoidal fracture.

subconical (sub-kon'i-kal), a. Somewhat or not quite conical; conoidal.

subconjunctival (sub-kon-jungk-ti'val), a. Situated beneath the conjunctiva.

subconnate (sub-kon'āt), a. In entom., partially connate; divided by an indistinct or partial suture.

subconscious (sub-kon'sbus), a. 1. Partially or feebly conscious; of or pertaining to subconsciousness.—2. Being or occurring in the mind, but not in consciousness.

subconsciously (sub-kon'shus-li), adv. In a subconscious manner; with faint consciousness; without consciousness.

subconsciousness (sub-kon'sbus-nes), n. 1. A form or state of consciousness in which there is little strength or distinctness of perception or mental action in general.—2. Mental processes conceived as taking place without consciousness.

The hypothesis of unconscious mental modifications, as it has been unfortunately termed—the hypothesis of subconsciousness, as we may style it to avoid this contradiction in terms. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 47.

subconstellation (sub'kon-ste-lā'shōn), n. A subordinate or secondary constellation.

subcontiguous (sub-kon-tig'ū-us), a. Almost touching; very slightly separated; as, subcontiguous coxae.

subcontinuous (sub-kon-tin'ū-us), a. Almost continuous: noting a line or mark which has but slight breaks or interruptions.

subcontract (sub'kon'trakt), n. A contract under a previous contract.

subcontract (sub-kon'trakt'), v. i. To make a contract under a previous contract. Lancet, 1889, I. 498.

subcontracted (sub-kon-trak'ted), a. 1. Contracted under a former contract; betrothed for the second time. Shak., Lear, v. 3. 86.—2. In entom., slightly narrowed: noting wing-cells.

subcontractor (sub'kon-trak'ter), n. One who takes a part or the whole of a contract from the principal contractor.

subcontrariety (sub'kon-tra-rī'ē-ti), n.; pl. subcontrarieties (-tiz). In logic, the relation between a particular affirmative and a particular negative proposition in the same terms; also, the inference from one to the other.

subcontrary (sub-kon'trā-ri), a. and n. I. a. Contrary in an inferior degree. (a) In geom., it denotes the relative position of two similar triangles of which one of the pairs of homologous angles coincide while the including sides are interchanged. Thus, in the cent

(b) In logic the term is applied (1) to the particular affirmative proposition and the particular negative proposition, with relation to the universal affirmative proposition above them, which have the same subject and predicate; thus, "some man is mortal" and "some man is not mortal" are subcontrary propositions, with relation to "every man is mortal" and "no man is mortal," which are contraries; (2) to the relation between two attributes which co-exist in the same substance, yet in such a way that the more there is of one the less there is of the other.—Subcontrary section, one of the circular sections of a quadric cone in its relation to another circular section not parallel to it.

II. u.; pl. subcontraries (-riz). In logic, a subcontrary proposition.

subconvex (sub-kon'veks), a. Somewhat rounded or convex.

subcoracoid (sub-kor'a-koid), a. Situated or occurring below the coracoid process.

subcordate (sub-kōr'dāt), a. Nearly heart-shaped.

subcordiform (sub-kōr'di-fōrm), a. Same as subcordate.

subcorneous (sub-kōr'nē-us), a. 1. Somewhat horny; partly or partially converted into horn.—2. Placed beneath a layer of corneous structure; situated under or within a horn, nail, claw, or the like: as, the subcorneous frontal processes of a ruminant.

subcortical (sub-kōr'ti-kal), a. Situated beneath the cortex. (a) Situated beneath the cerebral cortex. (b) Situated beneath the cortex of a sponge. (c) Situated or living beneath the cortex or bark of a tree.

subcosta (sub-kos'tā), n.; pl. subcostae (-tē). The subcostal vein or nervure of the wing of some insects; the first vein behind the costa. See cut under costal.

subcostal (sub-kos'tal), a. and n. I. a. 1. In anat. and zool.: (a) Situated below a rib; extending from one rib to a succeeding one; infra-costal: specifically noting the muscles called subcostales. (b) Lying along the under side or edge of a rib: as, a subcostal groove for an artery. (c) Placed under or within the ribs or costal cartilages collectively; hypochondrial; subcartilaginous.—2. In entom., situated near, but not at or on, the costa: specifically noting the subcostal.—Subcostal angle, the angle which the costal border of one side forms with that of the other at the lower end of the sternum.—Subcostal cells, in entom., cells between the costal and subcostal veins: they are generally numbered from the base outward.—Subcostal vein or nervure, in entom., a strong longitudinal vein behind the costal vein and more or less parallel to the costal edge: in the Lepidoptera it forms the anterior edge of the large dorsal cell, and exteriorly it is divided into a number of branches, called subcostal veinlets or nervules, and numbered from before backward. Sometimes called postcostal vein or nervure. See cut under costal.

II. n. 1. In zool. and anat.: (a) A subcostal or infra-costal muscle. See subcostalis. (b) A subcostal artery, vein, or nerve, running along the groove in the lower border of a rib; an intercostal.—2. In entom., a subcostal vein or nervure; the subcosta.

subcostalis (sub-kos-tā'lis), n.; pl. subcostales (-lēs). In anat., a subcostal or infra-costal muscle: any one of several muscles which extend from the lower border or inner surface of a rib to the first, second, or third succeeding rib.

subcranial (sub-krā'ni-āl), a. 1. Situated beneath the skull, in general.—2. Situated below the cranial axis or cranium proper—that is, in man, in front of the brain-case: as, the subcranial visceral arches of the embryo.

subcrenate (sub-kre'nāt), a. Obscurely or irregularly scalloped.

subcrepitant (sub-krep'i-tant), a. Approaching in character the crepitant rāle. See rāle. Therapeutic Gaz., IX. 8.

subcrepitation (sub-krep-i-tā'shōn), n. The noise of subcrepitant rāles.

subcrescentic (sub-kre-sen'tik), a. Irregularly or imperfectly crescentic.

subcruræus (sub-krō-rē-us), n.; pl. subcruræi (-i). A small muscle arising from the fore part of the femur, beneath the cruræus, and inserted into the synovial pouch of the knee. Also called subcruralis, subfemorals, and articularis genu.

subcrureal (sub-krō-rē-āl), a. Lying under or beneath the cruræus, as a muscle: specifying the subcruræus.

subcrystalline (sub-kris'tā-lin), a. Imperfectly crystalline.

subcultrate (sub-kul'trāt), a. Somewhat cultriform; like a colter in being curved along one edge and straight along the other. Also subcultrated.

subculture (sub-kul'tūr), n. In bacteriology, a culture derived from a previous culture.

subcutaneous (sub-kū-tā'nē-us), a. 1. Situated beneath the skin, in general; subdermal; lying in the true skin or cutis, under the cuticle; subcuticular; placed or performed under the skin; hypodermic: as, a subcutaneous injection.—2. Fitted for use under the skin; hypodermic: as, a subcutaneous syringe; a subcutaneous saw.—3. Living under the skin; burrowing in the skin: as, a subcutaneous parasitic insect.—Subcutaneous feeding, a mode of artificial feeding by means of large hypodermic injections of nutrient substances.—Subcutaneous fracture, simple fracture.—Subcutaneous method, the mode or manner of performing surgical operations, as tenotomy, osteotomy, etc., with the smallest possible opening through the skin.

subcutaneously (sub-kū-tā'nē-us-li), adv. In a subcutaneous manner, in any sense; hypodermically.

subcuticular (sub-kū-tik'ū-ljūr), a. Situated under the cuticle or scarf-skin; subepidermic; cutaneous; dermal.

subcutis (sub'kū'tis), n. [NL., < L. sub, under, + cutis, skin.] The deeper part of the cutis, corium, or true skin, sometimes distinguished from the rest. Hauckel.

subcylindric, subcylindrical (sub-si-lin'drik, -lri-kal), a. Nearly or somewhat cylindrical.

subdatary (sub'dā'ta-ri), n. The head of the officials under the datary or prodatory. See datary 1.

subdeacon (sub'dē-kn), n. [< ME. suddeken, sudekene = OF. sodekene, also sondiacre = Sp. subdiacano = Pg. subdiacano = It. subdiacano. < LL. subdiaconus, < L. sub, under, + LL. diaconus, a deacon: see dracon.] A member of the ecclesiastical order next below that of deacon. Subdeacons are first mentioned in the third century. They assisted the deacons, and kept order at the doors of the church. In the Western Church the duty of the subdeacon is to prepare the holy vessels and the bread, wine, and water for the eucharist, to pour the water into the chalice, and, since the seventh or eighth century, to read the epistle—a duty previously, as still in the East, assigned to the reader. In the Greek Church the subdeacon prepares the holy vessels, and guards the gates of the bema during liturgy. In the Greek Church the subdeacon has always been one of the minor orders. In the Western Church it became one of the major or holy orders in the twelfth century. The bishop, priest, or other cleric who acts as second or subordinate assistant at the eucharist is called the subdeacon, and the term is used in this sense in the Anglican Church also, although that church has no longer an order of subdeacons. See epistler.

subdeaconry (sub'dē'kn-ri), n. [< subdeacon + -ry.] Same as subdeaconship.

subdeaconship (sub'dē'kn-ship), n. The order or office of subdeacon; the subdiaconate.

subdean (sub'dēn), n. [< ME. sudene, sodene, also southdene, < OF. soudéien*, sousdoien, < ML. subdecanus, subdean, < L. sub, under, + decanus, dean: see dean 2.] A vice-dean; a dean's substitute or vicegerent.

Secutors and sodenes. Piers Plowman (C), xvii. 277.

subdeanery (sub'dē'nēr-i), n. [< subdean + -ry.] The office or rank of subdean.

subdecanal (sub-dek'ā-nal), a. [< ML. subdecanus, subdean, + -al.] Relating to a subdean or his office.

subdecimal (sub-des'i-mal), a. Derived by division by a multiple of ten.

subdecuple (sub-dek'ū-pl), a. Containing one part of ten (Johanson); having the ratio 1:10.

subdelegate (sub'del ē-gāt), n. A subordinate delegate.

subdelegate (sub-del'ē-gāt), v. t. To appoint to act as subdelegate or under another.

subdelirium (sub-dē-lir'i-nm), n. Mild delirium with lucid intervals.

subdeltoidal (sub-del-toi'dal), a. Approaching in shape the Greek letter Δ. Also subdeltoid.

subdentate (sub-den'tāt), a. 1. Imperfectly dentate; having indistinct teeth; denticulate.—2. Of cetaceans, having teeth in the lower jaw only: the opposite of superdentate. Deerhurst, 1834. [Rare.]

subdentated (sub-den'tā-ted), a. Same as subdentate, 1.

subdented (sub-den'ted), a. Indented beneath. Imp. Diet.

subdepressed (sub-dē-prest'), a. Somewhat depressed or flattened.

subderisorious† (sub-der-i-sō'ri-us), a. [< L. sub, under, + derisorius, serving for laughter, ridiculous: see derisory.] Ridiculing with moderation or delicacy. Dr. H. More.

subderivative (sub-dē-riv'ā-tiv), n. A word following another in immediate grammatical derivation, or a word derived from a derivative and not directly from the root. [Rare.]

subdermal (sub-dēr'mal), a. Beneath the skin; hypodermic; subcutaneous.

subdeterminant (sub-dē-tēr'mi-nant), n. In math., a determinant from a symmetrically taken part of a matrix.

subdiaconate (sub-dī-ak'ō-nāt), n. [< ML. subdiacnatus*, < LL. subdiaconus, subdeacon: see subdeacon.] The office or order of subdeacon.

subdial (sub'di-āl), a. [= OF. subdial, < L. subdialis, subdivalis, that is in the open air, < sub, under, + divum, the sky, the open air, akin to dies, day, Skt. dya, the sky: see deity, dial.] Of or pertaining to the open air; being under the open sky. Imp. Diet. [Rare.]

The Athenian Heliastick or Subdial Court was rural, and for the most part kept in the open air. N. Bacon, iv. 15.

subdialect (sub'di-ā-lect), n. An inferior dialect; a subordinate or less important or prominent dialect.

subdiapente† (sub-dī-ā-pen'tē), n. In medieval music, an interval of a fifth below a given tone.

subdiatessaron (sub-dī-a-tes'a-ron), n. In medieval music, an interval of a fourth below a given tone.

subdichotomy (sub-di-kot'ō-mi), n. A subordinate or inferior dichotomy, or division into pairs; a subdivision. Milton, Areopagitica, p. 53.

subdistinction (sub'dis-tingk'shon), n. A subordinate distinction. Sir M. Hale.

subdistrict (sub'dis'trikt), n. A part or division of a district.

subditious (sub-di-tish'us), a. [L. subditus, subditivus, substituted, suppositions, < subdere, put or set under, < sub, under, + dare*, put.] Put secretly in the place of something else; foisted in. Imp. Dict. [Rare.]

subdiversify (sub-di-vēr'si-fi), v. t. To diversify again what is already diversified. Sir M. Hale. [Rare.]

subdivide (sub-di-vīd'), v.: pret. and pp. subdivided, ppr. subdividing. [= Sp. Pg. subdividir = It. subdividere, < LL. subdividere, subdivide, < L. sub, under, + dividere, divide: see divide.] I. trans. To redivide after a first division.

The progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others. Dryden.

II. intrans. 1. To separate into subdivisions.

Amongst some men a sect is sufficiently thought to be reprov'd if it subdivides and breaks into little fractions, or changes its own opinions. Jer. Taylor, Works, VI. 125.

2. To become separated. [Rare.]

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, then soon after Antonius and Octavius brake and subdivided. Bacon, Faction (ed. 1887).

subdivisible (sub-di-viz'i-bl), a. Susceptible of subdivision.

subdivision (sub-di-viz'hon), n. [= F. subdivision = Sp. subdivisión = Pg. subdivisão, < LL. subdivisio(n), < subdividere, subdivide: see subdivide.] 1. The act of redividing, or separating into smaller parts.

When any of the parts of an idea are yet farther divided in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a subdivision. Watts, Logic, I. vi. § 8.

2. A minor division; a part of a part; specifically, in zool. and bot., a minor division of a group; a subsection: as, subdivisions of a genus.

In the Decimal Table the subdivisions of the Cubit, viz. the Span, Palm, and Digit, are deduced . . . from the shorter Cubit. Arbutnot, Ancient Coins, p. 73.

subdivisional (sub-di-viz'hon-al), a. [L. subdivisio(n) + -al.] Of or pertaining to subdivision or a subdivision: as, a subdivisional name. Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLV. ii. 62.

subdivisive (sub-di-vī'siv), a. [L. subdivisivus, < subdividere, subdivide: see subdivide.] Arising from subdivision.

When a whole is divided into parts, these parts may, either all or some, be themselves still connected multiplicities; and, if these are again divided, there results a subdivision the several parts of which are called the subdivisive members. Sir W. Hamilton, Logic, Lect. xxv.

subdolichocephalic (sub-dol'i-kō-sef'a-lik or -se-fal'ik), a. In craniom., having a cephalic index ranging between 75.01 and 77.77 in Broca's classification.

subdoulos (sub'dō-lus), a. [L. subdoulosus, < L. subdoulos, somewhat crafty or deceitful, < sub, under, + doulos, artifice, guile: see dole.] Somewhat crafty; sly; cunning; artful; deceitful. Howell, Letters, I. vi. 14.

subdoulosly (sub'dō-lus-li), adv. In a subdoulos manner; slyly; artfully. Evelyn, To Pepys, Dec. 5. 1681.

subdulousness (sub'dō-lus-nes), n. The state of being subdoulos. Baker, Chronicles, p. 382.

subdominant (sub-dom'i-nant), n. In music, the tone next below the dominant in a scale: the fourth, as D in the scale of A: also used adjectively. See diagram under circle.

subdorsal (sub-dōr'sal), a. In entom., situated on the side of the upper or dorsal surface of the body: as, subdorsal striae.

subdouble (sub-dub'l), a. Being in the ratio of 1 to 2.

subduable (sub-dū'a-bl), a. [L. subducere + -able.] Capable of being subdued; conquerable. Imp. Dict.

subdual (sub-dū'al), n. [L. subducere + -al.] The act of subduing. Warburton, Works (ed. Hurd), VII. 329.

subduce (sub-dūs'), v. t.: pret. and pp. subduced, ppr. subducing. [L. subducere, pp. subductus, draw from under, lift up, haul up, take away, < sub, under, + ducere, lead, bring: see duct. Cf. subduct, subduc.] 1. To withdraw; take away; draw or lift up.

It shall be expedient for such as intend to exercise prayer . . . to subduce and convey themselves from the company of the worldly people. Bacon, Early Works, p. 130.

2. To subtract arithmetically.

If, out of that supposed infinite multitude of antecedent generation, we should . . . subduce ten, . . . the residue must needs be less by ten than it was before that subtraction. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 10.

subduct (sub-dūkt'), v. t. [L. subductus, pp. of subducere, draw from under, take away: see subduce.] Same as subduce, 1.

He . . . established himself upon the rug, . . . subducting his coat-tails one under each arm. Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 32.

subduction (sub-dūk'shon), n. [L. subductio(n)], a hauling ashore (of a ship), a taking away, < subducere, pp. subductus, haul up, take away; see subduce.] 1. The act of subducting, taking away, or withdrawing. Bp. Hall, Occasional Meditations, § 66.—2. Arithmetical subtraction. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind, p. 10.

subdue (sub-dū'), v. t.: pret. and pp. subdued, ppr. subduing. [ME. subduen, earlier soduen, sodeven, sodeven, < OF. souduire, lead away, seduce, prob. also subdue, < L. subducere, draw from under, lift up, take away, remove; see subduce, subduct.] 1. To conquer and bring into permanent subjection; reduce under dominion.

John of Gaunt,
Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iii. 3. 82.

Rome learning arts from Greece whom she subdued.
Pope, Prolog. to Addison's Cato, l. 40.

2. To overpower by superior force; gain the victory over; bring under; vanquish; crush.

Tugg'd for life, and was by strength subdued.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 2. 173.

Lay hold upon him; if he do resist,
Subdue him at his peril. Shak., Othello, I. 2. 81.

Think of thy woman's nature, subdued in hopeless thrall.
Whittier, Cassandra Southwick.

3. To prevail over by some mild or softening influence; influence by association; assimilate; overcome, as by kindness, persuasion, entreaty, or other mild means; gain complete sway over; melt.

My nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand.
Shak., Sonnets, cxi.

I might Therein enjoy'd were worthy to subdue
The soul of man. Milton, P. L., viii. 584.

Clasp hands and that petitionary grace
Of sweet seventeen subdued me ere she spoke.
Tennyson, The Brook.

4. To bring down; reduce.

Nothing could have subdued nature
To such a lowness but his unkind daughters.
Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 72.

5. To tone down; soften: make less striking or harsh, as in sound, illumination, or color: in this sense generally in the past participle: as, subdued colors; a subdued light.

The voices of the disputants fell, and the conversation was carried on thenceforth in a more subdued tone.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 17.

6. To improve by cultivation; make mellow; break, as land.

In proportion as the soil is brought into cultivation, or subdued, to use the local phrase, the consumers will become more numerous, and their means more extensive.
B. Hall, Travels in N. A., I. 86.

=Syn. 1 and 2. Vanquish, Subjugate, etc. (see conquer), crush, quell.—3. To soften.

subduct (sub-dūkt'), n. [ME., < subduc, v.] Subjugation; conquest. Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 5.

subduement (sub-dū'ment), n. [L. subducere + -ment.] Subdual; conquest. Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 187.

subduer (sub-dū'er), n. [L. subducere + -er.] One who or that which subdues; one who conquers and brings into subjection; a conqueror; a tamer.

subdulcid (sub-dul'sid), a. [L. subdulcis, sweetish (< sub, under, + dulcis, sweet), + -id.] Somewhat sweet; sweetish. Evelyn, Acartaria (ed. 1706), p. 154. [Rare.]

subduple (sub-dū-pl), a. [L. sub, under, + duplus, double.] Having the ratio of 1 to 2.—Subduple ratio, in math. See duplex.

subduplicate (sub-dū'pli-kāt), a. In math., expressed by the square root: as, the subduplicate ratio of two quantities—that is, the ratio of their square roots. Thus, the subduplicate ratio of a to b is the ratio of \sqrt{a} to \sqrt{b} , or it is the ratio whose duplicate is that of a to b.

subdural (sub-dū'ral), a. Situated beneath the dura mater, between the dura mater and the arachnoid.—Subdural space, the interval between the dura mater and the arachnoid, formerly called the cavity of the arachnoid, when the latter membrane was supposed to be reflected continuously from the outer surface of the pia mater to the inner surface of the dura mater.

subectodermal (sub-ek-tō-dēr'mal), a. Situated underneath the ectoderm. Jour. Microsc. Sci., XXVIII. 381.

subedit (sub-ed'it), v. t. To edit under the supervision of another. Thackeray, Philip, xlii.

subeditor (sub-ed'it-ōr), n. An assistant or subordinate editor; one who subedits.

subeditorial (sub-ed-ē-tō'ri-āl), a. Of or pertaining to a subeditor. Athenaeum, No. 3238, p. 653.

subeditorship (sub-ed'it-ōr-ship), n. [L. subeditor + -ship.] The office or charge of a subeditor. Thackeray, Philip, xxx.

subelaphine (sub-el'a-fin), a. Resembling the red-deer, Cervus elaphus, as in the structure of the antlers, but having the brow-tine simple, not reduplicated, as in the genera Dama and Pseudaxis: correlated with claphine.

subelliptic (sub-e-lip'tik), a. Somewhat elongate-ovate; between ovate and elliptic or oblong and elliptic.

subelliptical (sub-e-lip'ti-kal), n. Same as subelliptic.

subemarginate (sub-ē-mār'ji-nāt), a. Slightly emarginate.

subendocardial (sub-en-dō-kār'di-āl), a. Lying or occurring beneath the endocardium.—Subendocardial tissue, the substance of the heart immediately underneath the endocardium.

subendothelial (sub-en-dō-thē'li-āl), a. Lying or occurring beneath the endothelium.

subentitled (sub-en-tī'tl), v. t. To give a subordinate title to. The Academy, Jan. 4. 1890, p. 7.

subepidermal (sub-ep-i-dēr'mal), a. Lying or occurring beneath the epidermis, in any sense.

subepithelial (sub-ep-i-thē'li-āl), a. Lying or occurring beneath the epithelium.—Subepithelial endothelium, Debove's name for an almost continuous layer of connective-tissue cells between the mucous membrane and the epithelium of the bronchi, bladder, and intestine.—Subepithelial plexus. See plexus.

subequal (sub-ē'kwāl), a. 1. Nearly equal.—2. Related as several numbers of which no one is as large as the sum of the rest.

subequilateral (sub-ē-kwi-lat'eq-rāl), a. Nearly equilateral, as a bivalve shell.

subequivale (sub-ē'kwi-valv), a. Nearly equivalent, as a bivalve shell.

suber (sū'bēr), n. [NL., < L. suber, cork, the cork-oak.] In bot., same as cork, 3.

suberate (sū'be-rāt), n. [L. suber-ic + -ate.] A salt (C₈H₁₂Mo₄O₄) of suberic acid.

suberect (sub-ē-rekt'), a. Nearly erect.

suberose (sū-bē're-us), a. [L. suberoseus, of cork, pertaining to the cork-oak, < suber, cork, the cork-oak.] Corky; suberose; in entom., specifying a soft elastic substance, somewhat like cork, found in the mature galls of some cynipidous insects.

suberic (sū-ber'ik), a. [L. suber, cork, the cork-oak, + -ic.] Of or pertaining to cork: suberose.—Suberic acid, C₈H₁₄O₄, a dibasic acid which forms small granular crystals very soluble in boiling water, in alcohol, and in ether; it fuses at about 300° F., and sublimes in acicular crystals. It is prepared by treating rasped cork with nitric acid. It is also produced when nitric acid acts on stearic, margaric, or oleic acid, and other fatty bodies.

suberiferous (sū-be-rif'ē-rus), a. [L. suber(in) + L. ferre = E. bear.] In bot., bearing or producing suberin.

suberification (sū-be-rif-i-kā'shon), n. [L. suber, cork, + -ficatio(n), < facere, make.] In bot., same as suberization.

suberin, suberine (sū'be-rin), n. [L. suber, cork, the cork-oak, + -in, -ine.] The cellular tissue of cork after the various soluble matters have been removed. It is allied to cellulose. See cork, 2.

suberization (sū'be-rī-zā'shon), n. [L. suberize + -ation.] In bot., the transformation of a membrane or cell-wall into suberin or cork.

suberize (sū'be-rīz), v. t.: pret. and pp. suberized, ppr. suberizing. [L. suber, cork, + -ize.] In bot., to render corky, as a cell-wall.

suberoded (sub-ē-rō'ded), a. Same as suberose.

suberose¹ (sub-ē-rōs'), a. [L. sub, under, + erosus, pp. of erodere, gnaw off or away, consume: see erode.] In bot., slightly erose; appearing as if a little eaten or gnawed on the margin.

suberose², suberous (sū'be-rōs, -rus), a. [L. suber, cork, the cork-oak, + -ose, -ous.] Same as suberrous, suberic.

subesophageal, subesophageal (sub-ē-sō-faj'-ē-āl), a. Situated below or beneath the esophagus or gullet; in Arthropoda, specifying certain nervous ganglia which lie underneath (ventrad of) the esophagus. Also infra-esophageal.—Subesophageal ganglion. See ganglion.

subfactor (sub-fak'tor), n. An under factor or agent. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xli.

subfactorial (sub-fak-tō'ri-āl), n. One of a series of numbers calculated as follows. Starting with 1, multiply it by 1 and subtract 1, getting 0, which is called subfactorial one; multiply this by 2 and add 1, getting 1, which is called subfactorial two; multiply this by 3 and subtract 1, getting 2, which is called subfactorial three; multiply this by 4 and add 1, getting 9, which is called subfactorial four. This is carried on indefinitely.

subfalcial (sub-fal'si-āl), a. Running along the under edge of the falx cerebri; as, "a subfalcial sinus." Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, VIII, 121.

subfalciform (sub-fal'si-fōrm), a. Somewhat falciform. Günther.

subfamily (sub-fam'i-li), n. In zool., the first subdivision of a family, containing several genera or only one genus. A subfamily may be introduced formally between the genus and the family when there is no other subdivision. Then the only subfamily of a family is coterminous with the higher group. Subfamilies are now regularly indicated by the termination -inae; as, family Felidae, subfamily Felinae. That subfamily which takes the name of the family with a different termination is usually regarded as the typical subdivision of the family.

subfascial (sub-fash'i-āl), a. Situated below any fascia.

subfebrile (sub-fē'bril), a. Somewhat but not decidedly febrile.

subfemorals (sub-fem-ō-rā'lis), n.; pl. subfemorales (-lēz). Same as suberureus.

subfeu (sub-fū'), v. t. [< sub- + feu, after ML. subfeudare; see sub- and *feud*², feoff.] To make subfeudation of: said of a vassal who vests lands held by him as such in a subvassal.

It was . . . impossible to subfeu the burgh lands. Encyc. Brit., IV, 63.

subfeudation (sub-fū-dā'shōn), n. [*< ML. subfeudatio (-n-), < subfeudare, subfeu: see subfeu.] Same as subfeudation.

It seems most probable that this practice, which is called subfeudation or sub-infeudation, began while the feu was only for life. Brougham.

subfeudatory (sub-fū-dā-tō-ri), n.; pl. subfeudatories (-riz). [< sub- + feudatory. Cf. ML. subfeudatarius.] An inferior tenant who held a feu from a feudatory of the crown or other superior.

subflavor (sub-flā'vor), n. A subordinate flavor; a secondary flavor.

subflavous (sub-flā'vus), a. [< L. sub, under, + flavus, yellow; see flavous.] Yellowish.—Subflavous ligament, a short ligament of yellow elastic tissue interposed between the laminae of the vertebrae.

subflora (sub-flō'rā), n. [NL., < sub- + flora.] A more local flora included in a territorially broader one.

subfluvial (sub-flō'vi-āl), a. [< L. sub, under, + fluvius, stream; see fluvial.] Situated under a river or stream.

The sub-fluvial avenue [Thames tunnel]. Hawthorne, Our Old Home, p. 285.

subfoliar (sub-fō'li-ār), a. [*< subfolium + -ar*³.] Having the character of a subfolium. B. G. Wilder.

subfolium (sub-fō'li-um), n.; pl. subfolia (-ā). A small or secondary folium, as of the cerebellum. Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, VIII, 127.

subform (sub-fōrm), n. A secondary form. Jour. Micros. Sci., XXX, 195.

subfornical (sub-fōr'ni-kāl), a. Situated beneath the fornix of the brain.

subfossil (sub-fos'il), a. Partly fossilized; imperfectly petrified.

subfossilized (sub-fos'il-izd), a. Same as subfossil.

subfossorial (sub-fo-sō'ri-āl), a. In entom., adapted in some measure for digging; said of the legs when they approach the fossorial type.

subfrontal (sub-frōn'tal), a. Situated under the front, face, or fore end; subterminal in front.—Subfrontal area, of Limulus, a smooth flattened space on the ventral surface of the cephalic shield anteriorly. See Limulus (with cut).—Subfrontal fold, of trilobites, an inferior inflection of the limb or marginal area of the cephalic shield.

subfulcrum (sub-ful'krum), n.; pl. subfulera (-krā). In entom., a rarely differentiated labial sclerite between the mentum and the palpiger (the latter in some systems being called the fulerum). It occurs in certain earabid and scarabæid larvae.

subfumigation (sub-fū-mi-gā'shōn), n. Same as subfumigation.

subfusc, a. See subfusk.

subfuscous (sub-fus'kus), a. [< L. subfuscus; see subfusk.] Same as subfusk.

subfusiform (sub-fū'si-fōrm), a. More or less nearly fusiform or spindle-shaped.

subfusk, subfusc (sub-fusk'), a. [< L. subfuscus, suffuscus, somewhat brown; see sub- and fuscous.] Dusky; moderately dark; brownish; tawny; lacking in color.

O'er whose quiescent walls
Arachne's unmolested care has drawn Curtains subfusk. Shenstone, Economy, iii.

The University statute requiring the wearing only of black or subfusc clothing. Dickens, Dict. of Oxford, p. 66.

subgalea (sub-gā'lē-ā), n.; pl. subgaleæ (-ē). [NL., < L. sub, under, + NL. galea.] One of the sclerites of the typical maxilla of insects. It usually articulates with the stipes and bears the galea. In many beetles it is united with the lacinia. See cut under galea.

subganoid (sub-gan'oid), a. Having a somewhat ganoid character; as, a subganoid scale.

subgelatinous (sub-jē-lat'i-nus), a. Imperfectly or partially gelatinous.

subgenera, n. Plural of subgenus.

subgeneric (sub-jē-ner'ik), a. Of or pertaining to a subgenus; having the rank, grade, or value of a subgenus.

subgenerical (sub-jē-ner'i-kāl), a. Same as subgeneric.

subgenerically (sub-jē-ner'i-kāl-i), adv. So as to be subgeneric; as a subgenus.

subgeniculate (sub-jē-nik'ū-lāt), a. Imperfectly geniculate or elbowed.

subgenital (sub-jē-ni'tal), a. Situated beneath the genitalia; specifically noting certain pits or pouches of jellyfishes, as the rhizostomous or monostomous discomedusans.

subgenus (sub-jē'nus), n.; pl. subgenera (-jēn'ē-rā). [NL., < L. sub, under, + genus, kind; see genus.] A subordinate genus; a section or subdivision of a genus higher than a species. Since there is no fixed definition of a genus, there can be none of a subgenus; and thousands of groups in zoology formerly regarded as subgenera, or disregarded entirely, are now named and held to be genera. Though there is theoretically or technically a difference, it is ignored in practice; since a name, whether given as that of a genus or of a subgenus, is a generic name. The case is somewhat different in practice from that of the names of families and subfamilies, whose difference in termination preserves a formal distinction, and from that of the names of all supergeneric groups, because none of these enter into the technical binomial designation of a given animal or plant. Thus, the name Lynx may have been given to a subdivision of the genus Felis and be thus a subgeneric name; but a cat of this kind, as the bay lynx, would be known by the alternative names Felis rufus and Lynx rufus, according to the difference of expert opinion in the case; or, as a compromise, the subgeneric term would be formally introduced in parentheses between the generic and the specific name, as Felis (Lynx) rufus. In botany a subgenus is a section of a genus so strongly marked as to have plausible claims to be itself an independent genus.

subgeti, a. and n. A Middle English form of subject.

subglabrous (sub-glā'brus), a. In entom., almost devoid of hairs or other like covering.

subglacial (sub-glā'shial), a. Situated or occurring beneath or under a glacier; as, a subglacial stream.

subglenoid (sub-glē'noid), a. Lying or occurring immediately below the glenoid fossa.

subglobose (sub-glō'bōs), a. Nearly globose; subspherical; spheroidal.

subglobular (sub-glob'ū-lār), a. Nearly globular.

subglobulose (sub-glob'ū-lōs), a. Somewhat globulose.

subglossal (sub-glos'al), a. Same as hypoglossal or sublingual.

subglottic (sub-glot'ik), a. Situated under the glottis, or beneath the true vocal cords of the larynx.

subglumaceous (sub-glō-mā'shius), a. Somewhat glumaceous.

subgrade (sub'grād), n. A grade of the second rank in zoölogical classification; a prime division of a grade: used like subclass, suborder, etc. See grade, 3.

Subgrallatores (sub-gral-ā-tō'rēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. sub, under, + NL. Grallatores, q. v.] In ornith., in Sundevall's system, a cohort of Galinae, composed of the genera Thiocoerus, Attagis, and Chionis. [Not in use.]

subgrallatorial (sub-gral-ā-tō'ri-āl), a. Imperfectly grallatorial; exhibiting imperfectly the characters of the grallatorial birds.

subgranular (sub-gran'ū-lār), a. Somewhat granular.

subgroup (sub'grōp), n. 1. Any subordinate group in classification; a subdivision of a group; especially, a division the name of which begins with sub-, as subfamily or subgenus.—2. A mathematical group forming part of another group.

subgular (sub-gū'lār), a. Situated under the throat, or on the under side of the throat; subjugular.

subhastation (sub-has-tā'shōn), n. [= F. subhastation = Sp. subastacion = It. subastazione, < LL. subhastatio (-n-), a sale by public auction, < subhastare, pp. subhastatus, sell at public auction. lit. 'bring under the spear' (in allusion to the Roman practice of planting a spear on the spot where a public sale was to take place), < L. sub, under, + hasta, a spear, a lance.] A public sale of property to the highest bidder; a sale by auction. Bp. Burnet, Letters from Switzerland, p. 9.

subhead (sub'hed), n. A subordinate head or title; a subdivision of a heading. See head, 13.

subheading (sub'hed'ing), n. Same as subhead.

subhepatic (sub-hē-pat'ik), a. In anat. and zool.: (a) Of doubtful or disputed hepatic character, as a glandular tissue of some invertebrates, which resembles that of the liver. (b) Lying under the liver, on the ventral side of hepatic lobules; sublobular, as ramifications of the portal vein in the liver. (c) Situated beneath the hepatic region; specifically applied to an anterolateral division of the ventral surface of the carapace in brachyurous crustaceans. See Brachyura (with cut).

subhexagonal (sub-hek-sag'ō-nal), a. Six-sided, but not forming a regular hexagon.

Sub-Himalayan (sub-him-ā'lā-yan), a. Related to or forming the whole or a part of the Sub-Himalayas, the designation adopted by the Geological Survey of India for a fringe or belt of hills extending along the southern edge of the Himalayan chain almost uninterruptedly for a distance of 1,500 miles, and composed of Tertiary rocks.

By abrupt difference of elevation and by contour, the Sub-Himalayan hills are everywhere easily distinguishable from the much higher mountains to the north of them. Geol. of India, ii, 521.

Sub-Himalayan system, in geol., the name adopted by the Geological Survey of India for the system of rocks forming the Sub-Himalayan division of the Himalayas. It is divided into two series—the Sivalik (subdivided into three subgroups, the Upper, Middle, and Lower or Nah) and the Sirmir (also with three subgroups, the Upper or Kasauli, the Middle or Dagshai, and the Lower or Subāthu). See Sivalik.

subhuman (sub-hū'mān), a. Under or beneath the human; next below the human.

Pretended superhuman birth and origin, . . . lives and characters more decidedly subhuman than those of common men. E. H. Sears, The Fourth Gospel, p. 230.

subhumeral (sub-hū'mē-rāl), a. Situated below the humerus.

subhumerate (sub-hū'mē-rāt), v. t. [< L. sub, under, + humerus, prop. umerus, shoulder, + *-ate*².] To take or bear on one's shoulders. Feltham, Resolves, i, 82.

subhyaloid (sub-hi'ā-loid), a. Situated beneath (on the attached side of) the hyaloid membrane of the eyeball.

subhymenial (sub-hi-mē'ni-āl), a. In bot., lying under or just below the hymenium.—Subhymenial layer, a stratum of hyphal tissue under the hymenium in some fungi; the hypothecium, and sometimes another layer still further below. See cuts under apothecium and ascus.

subhyoid (sub-hi'oid), a. 1. Situated below the hyoid bone, as of man.—2. Coming next in order after the hyoid arch from before backward; specifically, noting the fourth visceral arch of the vertebrate embryo, or first branchial arch proper.

subhyoidean (sub-hi-oi'dē-an), a. Same as subhyoid.

subicteric (sub-ik-ter'ik), a. Somewhat but not distinctly icteric.

subiculum (sū-bik'ū-lum), n. [NL., dim. of subex (subic-), in pl. subices, a layer, < subicere, throw under; see subject.] 1. The uncus.—2. In bot., the modified tissue of the host penetrated by the mycelium of a parasite. Burrill.

subiliac (sub-il'i-ak), a. 1. Pertaining to the subilium.—2. Situated below the ilium.

subilium (sub'il'i-um), n.; pl. subilia (-ā). [NL., < L. sub, under, + NL. ilium, q. v.] An inferior section of the ilium, supposed to correspond to the subscapula.

subimaginal (sub-i-maj'i-nal), a. [< subimago (-imago) + -al.] Having the character of a subimago; not quite perfect or imaginal, as an insect; pseudimaginal.

subimaginary (sub-i-maj'i-nā-ri), a. Imaginary in a reduced sense.—Subimaginary transformation, a linear transformation defined by equations between two sets of variables, which equations are imaginary, but the transformation being such that a real linear function may in that way be transformed into a real function.

subimago (sub'i-mā gō), n.; pl. subimagos or subimagines (sub'i-mā gōz or -maj i-nēz). [NL., < L. sub. under, + imago, image; see imago.] An imperfect or incompleting winged stage in certain pseudoneuropterous and neuropterous insects, succeeding the pupa, and preceding the imago. Also called pseudimago. The insect in this stage is active, and resembles the imago, but has to shed another skin. This stage occurs as a rule in the Ephemera of the Pseudoneuroptera, and Riley has recorded it in Chrysopa of the Neuroptera.

subimpressed (sub-im-press'), a. In entom., slightly impressed; having indistinct impressions.

subincomplete (sub-in-kom-plēt'), a. In entom., noting that metamorphosis of an insect in which the active larva and pupa resemble the imago, the pupa having rudimentary wings, as in the grasshoppers.

subincusat (sub-in-kū-zā'shon), n. [< L. sub. under, + incusatus(n.), accusation, < incusare, accuse, bring a complaint against. < in, on, against, + causa, a cause, suit; see cause. Cf. accuse.] An implied charge or accusation.

But all this cannot deliver thee [Mary] from the just blame of this bold subincusation: Lord, dost thou not care?
Ep. Hall, Contemplations, Mary and Martha.

subindicate (sub-in-dī-kāt'), v. t. To indicate secondarily; indicate in a less degree.

subindicative (sub-in-dī-kā'shon), n. The act of indicating secondarily; a slight indication.

subindicative (sub-in-dī-kā'tiv), a. Partially or secondarily indicative. Lamb, Some of the Old Actors.

subindividual (sub-in-dī-vid'ū-al), n. A division of that which is individual.

An individual cannot branch itself into subindividuals.
Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst., § 13.

subinduce (sub-in-dūs'), v. t. To insinuate; suggest; offer or bring into consideration imperfectly or indirectly. Str Z. Dering, Speeches in Parliament, p. 114.

subinfer (sub-in-fēr'), v. t. To infer or deduce from an inference already made. Ep. Hall, Resol. for Religion.

subinfundation (sub-in-fū-dā'shon), n. [< OF. subinfundation, < L. sub. under, + ML. infrudatio(n.), infundation; see infundation.] 1. The process in feudal tenure, where the stipendiary or feudatory, considering himself as substantially the owner, began to imitate the example of his sovereign by carving out portions of the benefice or feud, to be held of himself by some other person, on terms and conditions similar to those of the original grant: a continued chain of successive dependencies was thus established, connecting each stipendiary, or vassal as he was termed, with his immediate superior or lord. H. Stephen. See Statute of Quia Emptores, under statute.

The widow is immediate tenant to the heir, by a kind of subinfundation or under tenancy.
Blackstone, Com., II. viii.

2. The fief or tenancy thus established.

These smaller fiefs were called subinfundations, and were, in fact, mere miniatures of the larger fiefs.
Sitté, Stud. Med. Hist., p. 137.

Also subinfundation.
subinfudatory (sub-in-fū-dā-tō-ri), n.; pl. subinfudatories (-riz). One who holds by subinfundation.

At the time of the Conquest the manor was granted to Walter d'Euincourt, and in the 12th century it was divided among the three daughters of his subinfudatory Paganna.
Encyc. Brit., XX. 298.

subinflammation (sub-in-flā-mā'shon), n. Incipient or undeveloped inflammation.

subinflammatory (sub-in-flām'a-tō-ri), a. Pertaining to or of the nature of a slight and indistinct degree of inflammation.

subingression (sub-in-gresh'on), n. The penetration by one body of the substance of another body.

An eminent naturalist hath taught that, when the air is sucked out of a body, the violence wherewith it is wont to rush into it again proceeds mainly from this, that the pressure of the ambient air is strengthened upon the accession of the air sucked out, which, to make itself room, forceth the neighboring air to a violent subingression of its parts.

Boyle, New Experiments Touching the Spring of the Air, [Exp. iii.]

subinspector (sub'in-spek'tor), n. A subordinate or assistant inspector.

subinspectorship (sub'in-spek'tor-ship), n. [< subinspector + -ship.] The office or jurisdiction of a subinspector.

subintestinal (sub-in-tes'ti-nal), a. Situated beneath the intestine.

subintroduce (sub-in-trō-dūs'), v. t. To introduce in a subordinate or secondary manner.

Although presbyters join not in the consecration of a bishop, yet of a presbyter they do; but this is only by a positive subintroduced constitution, first made in a provincial of Africa.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 198.

subinvariant (sub-in-vā-ri-ant), n. Any rational integral function, ϕ , of the letters a, b, c, \dots , which satisfies the partial differential equation $(aD_a + bD_b + cD_c + \dots)\phi = 0$.

subinvolute (sub-in-vō-lū-ted), a. Exhibiting incomplete involution. Medical News, L. 394.

subinvolution (sub-in-vō-lū'shon), n. Incomplete involution. Barnes, Diseases of Women, xxxviii.

subitaneous (sub-i-tā'nē-us), a. [< L. subitaneus, sudden, < subitus, sudden, unexpected; see sudden.] Sudden; hasty.

subitaneousness (sub-i-tā'nē-us-nes), n. Suddenness; hastiness.

subitany (sub'i-tā-ni), a. [< L. subitaneus, sudden; see subitaneous.] Sudden; hasty.

subito (sō'bi-tō), adv. [It., < L. subito, suddenly, abl. sing. neut. of subitus, sudden; see subitaneous, sudden.] In music, suddenly; quickly; as, volti subito (V. S.), turn (the leaf) quickly.

subj. An abbreviation of subjunctive.

subjacency (sub-jā'sen-si), n. [< subjacent(t) + -cy.] The state of being subjacent.

subjacent (sub-jā'sent), a. and n. [= F. subjacent = Pg. subjacente, < L. subjacent(t)-s, pp. of subjacere, lie under or near or adjoin anything, < sub, under, + jacere, lie; see jucent. Cf. ad-jacent.] I. a. 1. Lying under or below; in geol., applied to rocks, beds, or strata, considered with reference to their position beneath other overlying formations.—2. Being in a lower situation, though not necessarily directly beneath.

Between some breaches of the clouds we could see land-skipts and villages of the subjacent country.
Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 2, 1644.

3. In alg., following below the line of the main characters: as, a subjacent letter, as the n in mn.

II. n. In logic, the converting proposition or consequent of a conversion.

subject (sub'jekt), a. and n. [Now altered to suit the orig. L. form; < ME. subget, suggest, soget, soget, < OF. suget, soget, songiet, sujet, subject, later subject, F. sujet = Sp. sujeto, subjecto = Pg. sujeto = It. suggetto, soggetto, subject, as a noun (= G. subjekt), a subject (person or thing), < L. subjactus, lying under or near, adject., also subject, exposed, as a noun, subjectus, m., a subject, an inferior, subjectum, neut., the subject of a proposition, prop. pp. of subjicere, subicere, pp. subjectus, throw, lay, place, or bind under, subject, < sub, under, + jacere, throw; see ject. Cf. subjacent. Cf. object, object, project.] I. a. 1. Placed or situated under or beneath.

Long he them bore above the subject plane.
Spenser, F. Q., I. xi. 19.

2. Being under the power or dominion of another.

For there nys God in heaven or helle, iwis,
But he hath been right soged unto Love.
Court of Love, l. 93.

Though in name an independent kingdom, she [Scotland] was during more than a century really treated, in many respects, as a subject province.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., i.

3. Exposed; liable, from extraneous or inherent causes; prone: with to: as, a country subject to extreme heat or cold; a person subject to attacks of fever.

Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 4. 54.

My Lord, you are a great Prince, and all Eyes are upon your Actions; this makes you more subject to Envy.
Howell, Letters, I. iv. 18.

A little knowledge is subject to make men headstrong, insolent, and untractable.
Ep. Sprat, Hist. Royal Soc., p. 429.

Hence—4. Exposed or liable, as to what may confirm or modify: with to: as, subject to your approval; subject to correction.—5. Submissive; obedient. Tit. iii. 1.

No man was ever bidd he subject to the Church of Corinth, Rome, or Asia, but to the Church without addition, as it held faithfull to the rules of Scripture.

Milton, Elkonoklastes, xxvii.
Unless Love held them subject to the Will
That gave them being, they would cease to be.
Bryant, Order of Nature.

=Syn. 2. Subordinate, subservient, inferior.—3. Appt. Likely, etc. See apt.

II. n. 1. One who is placed under the authority, dominion, or controlling influence of another; specifically, one who owes allegiance to a sovereign and is governed by his laws; one who lives under the protection of, and owes allegiance to, a government.

And he leet make an Ymage in the lyknesse of his Fadre, and constryeind alle his Subyctes for to worshipspe it.
Maunder, Travels, p. 41.

Tell his majesty
I am a subject, and I do confess
I serve a gracious prince.
Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, ll. 1.

2. A person or thing regarded as the recipient of certain treatment; one who or that which is exposed or liable to something specified.

Alack, alack, that heaven should practise stratagems
Upon so soft a subject as myself!
Shak., R. and J., iii. 5. 212.

There is not a fairer subject for contempt and ridicule than a knave become the duke of his own art.
Sheridan, The Duenna, iii. 7.

The town bear [of Congleton] having died, it was ordered that certain monies . . . should be placed at the disposal of the bearward, to enable him to provide a new subject.
Municip. Corp. Report, 1835, p. 2652.

Specifically—(a) A dead body used for dissection. (b) One who is peculiarly sensitive to psychological experimentation; a sensitive.

The monotonous ticking of a watch held to the ear will throw the nervous system of a sensitive subject into an abnormal state.
Proc. Soc. Psych. Research, I. 251.

3. One who or that which is the cause or occasion of something.

I am the unhappy subject of these quarrels.
Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 238.

Hear her, ye noble Romans! 'tis a woman;
A subject not for swords, but pity.
Fletcher, Valentinian, v. 8.

4. That on which any mental operation is performed; that which is thought, spoken, or treated of: as, a subject of discussion or negotiation; a subject for a sermon or a song; the subject of a story.

The matter or subject of Poesie . . . to myne intent is what soever wittie and delicate conceit of man meet or worthy to be put in written verse, for any necessary use of the present time, or good instruction of the posteritie.
Pattenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 18.

O, sure I am, the wits of former days
To subjects worse have given admiring praise.
Shak., Sonnets, lix.

This subject for heroic song
Pleased me.
Milton, P. L., ix. 25.

But this, no more the subject of debate,
Is past, forgotten, and resign'd to fate.
Pope, Iliad, xix. 67.

5. In gram., that of which anything is affirmed; the nominative of a verb, without or with modifiers; the member or part of a sentence signifying that of which predication is made. A subject may be simple or compound; it may be a noun, or anything used with the value of a noun, whether word or phrase or clause: thus, that he has gone is true. A logical subject is one having the character of a subject according to the true meaning of the sentence; a grammatical subject is one having that character formally only: thus, in it is good to be here, it is the grammatical and to be here is the logical subject.

6. In logic, that term of a proposition of which the other is affirmed or denied. Thus, in the proposition "Plato was a philosopher," Plato is the logical subject, philosopher being its predicate, or that which is affirmed of the subject. Also, in the proposition "No man living on earth can be completely happy," no man living on earth is the subject, and completely happy is the predicate, or that which is denied of the subject.

7. In metaph.: (a) A real thing to which given characters relate and in which they are said to inhere.

That which manifests its qualities—in other words, that in which the appearing causes inhere, that to which they belong—is called their subject, or substance, or substratum.
Sir W. Hamilton, Metaphysics, viii.

(b) In Kantian and modern philosophy, the self or ego to which in all thought all mental representations are attributed (according to Kant); also, a real (hypothetical) thing in which mental phenomena are supposed to inhere. The word is commonly used by those psychologists who teach that the immediate consciousness of self (the subject) is an aspect or inseparable accompaniment of an immediate perception of an external object. The doctrine is that perception involves a sense of action and reaction (self and not-self). To this is often joined another proposition, that there is no mode of consciousness in which the opposition of subject and object does not appear. [Expressions very close to this meaning are to be found in pre-Kantian writers (see Leibnitz, Remarques sur le livre de M. King, § 20), but the word is in such passages used relatively, as in def. 6.]

In the first syllogism of transcendental psychology reason imposes upon us an apparent knowledge only, by representing the constant logical subject of thought as the knowledge of the real subject in which that knowledge inheres. Of that subject, however, we have not, and cannot have, the slightest knowledge, because consciousness is that which alone changes representations into thoughts, and in which, therefore, as the transcendental subject, all our perceptions must be found. Beside this logical meaning of the I, we have no knowledge of the subject in itself which forms the substratum and foundation of it and of all our thoughts.

Kant, Critique of Pure Reason, tr. by Muller (Century ed.), II. 305.

The particular modes in which I now feel, desire, and think arise out of the modes in which I have previously done so; but the common characteristic of all these has been that in them a subject was conscious of itself as its own object, and thus self-determined.

T. H. Green, Prolegomena to Ethics, § 102.

The subject can be conscious of itself only in relation to an object which it at once excludes and determines.

E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 348, note.

8. In music: (a) In general, the theme or melodic phrase on which a work or movement is based, consisting of few or many tones variously combined and treated; a motive. When two or more principal subjects are used, they are often known as first, second, etc. (b) In contrapuntal works, the theme given out at the beginning, to which (in fugue and canon) the answer responds, and with which the counter-subject is combined which is taken as the basis for thematic development, for imitation, etc. In a fugue, the subject is also called antecedent, dux, proposta, etc.; in a canon, guida; and in freer contrapuntal music, cantus firmus or canto fermo.

9. In the fine arts, the plan or general view chosen by an artist; the design of a composition or picture; the scheme or idea of a work of art: as, a historical subject; a genre subject; a marine subject; a pastoral subject.—10. In decorative art, a pictorial representation of human figures or animals; a picture representing action and incident.

Vases painted with subjects after Watteau. Soc. Arts Report, Exhib. 1867.

Diminished subject. See diminished.—First subject. See first.—Intervening subject. See intervene.—Inversion of subjects. See inversion.—Mixed subjects of property. See mixed.—Subject of inhesion, a thing in which characters inhere.—Subject of predication, the subject of a proposition.—Subject of relation, that one of the correlates to which the others are referred as secondary; the relate.—To be in a subject, to be related to any thing somewhat as a predicate is related to its subject; to exist by virtue of that subject of which the attribute which is in the subject does not form a part.—Syn. 4. Subject, Theme, Topic, Point, Thesis. The first three of these words are often popularly used as exactly synonymous. Daniel Webster puts within a few lines of each other the two following sentences: [If an American Thucydides should arise,] "may his theme not be a Peloponnesian war," and [American history] "will furnish no topic for a Gibbon." Yet, strictly in rhetoric, and more often in general use, subject is the broad word for anything written or spoken about, while theme is the word for the exact and generally narrower statement of the subject. A topic is a still narrower subject; there may be several interesting topics suggested under a single subject. A point is by its primary meaning the smallest possible subdivision under a subject. Thesis is a technical word for a subject which takes the form of an exact proposition or assertion which is to be proved; as, Luther fastened his ninety-five theses to the church-door. The paper in which the proof of a thesis is attempted is also called a thesis. A student's composition is often called a theme. The meaning of the other words is not extended to the written or spoken discourse. See proposition.

subject (sub-jekt'), v. [Now altered to suit the orig. L. form; < ME. sugetten, < OE. sujecter* = Sp. sujectar, sujectur, sujectar = Pg. sujectar = It. suggettare, sojgettare, subject, < ML. subiectare, subject, freq. of L. subiicere, subicere, throw under: see subject, a. and n.] I. trans. 1. To put, lay, or spread under; make subja-cent. In one short view subjected to our eye, Gods, Emperors, Heroes, Sages, Beauties lie. Pope, To Addison, l. 33.

The lands that lie Subjected to the Heliconian ridge. Tennyson, Tiresias.

2. To expose; make liable or obnoxious: with to: as, credulity subjects one to impositions.

Subject himself to anarchy within, Or lawless passions in him, which he serves. Milton, P. R., ii. 471.

If the vessels yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniences of an erroneous circulation. Arbuthnot.

3. To submit; make accountable, subservient, or the like; cause to undergo; expose, as in chemical or other operations: with to: as, to subject clay to a white heat.

Subjected to his service angel-wings. Milton, P. L., ix. 155.

God is not bound to subject his ways of operation to the scrutiny of our thoughts. Locke.

Church discipline [in Germany] was subjected to state approval; and a power of expelling rebellious clergy from the country was established.

H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 559.

No gas is "atomic" in the chemist's sense, except when subjected to the action of electricity, or, in the case of hydrogen, to a high temperature.

J. N. Lockyer, Spect. Anal., p. 144.

4. To bring under power, dominion, or sway; subdue; subordinate.

High Iove permits the sunne to cast his beames, And the moyst cloudes to drop downe plenteous streames, Alike vpon the just & reprobate: Yet are not both subjected by one fate? Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 6.

Neither God nor the Lawes has subjected us to his will, nor sett his reason to be our Sovran above Law. Milton, Eikonoklastes, xi.

II. † intrans. To be or become subject.

When men freely subject to any just as a new master. T. Brooks, Works, II. 242.

subjectable (sub-jek'ta-bl), a. [< subject + -able.] To be subjected or submitted. [Rare.]

It was pronounced to these fathers confessors as a thing not subjectable to their penitential iudicature. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 106.

subjectdom (sub-jekt-dum), n. [< subject + -dom.] The state or condition of being a subject.

No clue to its nationality, except in the political sense of subjectdom, therefore is available. Greenwell, British Barrows, p. 608. (Encyc. Dict.)

subjection (sub-jek'shon), n. [< ME. subjection, subjeccion, subjeccioun, < OF. (and F.) subjection = Sp. sujeccion = Pg. sujeição, sogjeição = It. suggezione, soggezione, < L. subiectio(-n-), a placing under, substitution, reducing to obedience, subjectio, < subiicere, subicere, throw under, subject: see subject, v.] 1. The act of subjecting or subduing; the act of vanquishing and bringing under the dominion of another.

The prophesie seith that the grete dragon shall come fro Rome that wolde distroie the reame of the grete Breteyne and put it in his subjection. Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 433.

King Arthur . . . sailed with his fleet into island, and brought it and the people thereof under his subjection. Hakluyt's Voyages, l. 1.

After the conquest of the kingdom, and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who they were that, fighting against the king, had saved themselves by flight. Sir M. Hale.

2. The state of being in the power or under the control or domination of another; service.

Thei that marchen upon zou schulle ben undre zoure Subieccioun, as zee han ben undre hires. Mandeville, Travels, p. 225.

Both in subjection now To sensual appetite. Milton, P. L., ix. 1128.

A lofty mind, By philosophic discipline prepared For calm subjection to acknowledged law. Wordsworth, Excursions, iii.

3. In logic, the act of attaching a subject to a predicate: corresponding to predication.

subjective (sub-jek'tiv), a. [= F. subjectif = Sp. subiectivo = G. subjektiv, < L. subiectivus, of or pertaining to a subject, < subiectum, a subject: see subject, n.] 1. Relating to or of the nature of a subject, as opposed to an object. In the older writers subjective is nearly synonymous with real, and still more closely so with the common modern meaning of objective. By Kant, following some of his earlier contemporaries, the word was restricted to the subject of thought, or the ego. See objective.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself, and subjective when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other is in our minds. Watts, Logic, II. ii. § 8.

The words subjective and objective are getting into general use now. E. Fitzgerald, Letter, Mar. 21, 1841 (in Lit. Remains, I. 71).

The uncivilized or semi-civilized man is wholly unable to think of the maniac's visions as subjective illusions. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 124.

All knowledge on its subjective side is belief. J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 434.

2. In literature and art, noting a production characterized by the prominence given to the individuality of the author or artist: as, the subjective school of painting; also, relating to such individuality. The writings of Shelley and Byron are essentially subjective, while the novels of Scott are objective.

They [the Iliad and Odyssey] are so purely objective that they seem projected, as it were, into this visible diurnal sphere with hardly a subjective trace adhering to them, and are silent as the stars concerning their own genesis and mutual relation. W. D. Geddes.

I am disposed to consider the Sonnets from the Portuguese as . . . a portion of the finest subjective poetry in our literature. Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 137.

3. Relating to a subject in a political sense; submissive; obedient. [A rare and irregular use.]

What eye can look, through clear love's spectacle, On virtue's majesty that shines in beauty, But, as to nature's divin' miracle, Performs not to it all subjective duty? Sir J. Davies, Witte's Pilgrimage, sig. D. 2. (Latham.)

Which sadly when they saw How those had sped before, with most subjective awe Submit them to his sword. Drayton, Polyolbion, xl. 370.

Subjective certainty. See certainty.—Subjective colors. Same as accidental colors (which see, under accidental).—Subjective doubt, end, ens. See the nouns.—Subjective idealism. Same as Fichteian idealism (which see, under idealism).—Subjective method, power, reason, etc. See the nouns.—Subjective part. See extension, 5.—Subjective perspective, a method of representation which looks right, though it is geometrically false. This method is, in fact, usually practised by painters who greatly exaggerate certain effects of perspective, as if the picture were intended to be seen from a point of view much nearer than that usually chosen by the spectator, and are then obliged to modify certain consequences of this exaggeration.—Subjective sensation, a sensation which is not caused by an object outside of the body.—Subjective symptoms, in pathol., symptoms, as sensations, appreciable by the patient, but not discernible by another observer.

subjectively (sub-jek'tiv-li), adv. In a subjective manner; in relation to the subject; as existing in a subject or mind.

I do not see how we can successfully guard against the danger of considering as both objectively and subjectively evident things which, in fact, are only subjectively evident. Micart, Nature and Thought, p. 58.

subjectiveness (sub-jek'tiv-nes), n. The state of being subjective; subjectivity.

subjectivism (sub-jek'tiv-izm), n. [< subjective + -ism.] 1. The doctrine that we can immediately know only what is present to consciousness. Those who adhere to this opinion either regard it as axiomatic, or fortify it by arguments analogous to those by which Zeno sought to prove that a particle can have only position, and not velocity, at any instant—arguments which appear, upon logical analysis, to beg the question. Those who oppose the opinion maintain that it would lead to the absurd corollary that there can be no cognition whatever, not even of a problematical or interrogatory kind, concerning anything but the immediate present.

The philosophical principle of subjectivism. Ueberweg, Hist. Philosophy (trans. by Morris), I.

2. The doctrine, sometimes termed relativism, that "man is the measure of things"—that is, that the truth is nothing but each man's settled opinion, there being no objective criterion of truth at all. This is an opinion held by some English philosophers as well as by Protagoras in antiquity. It is a modification of subjectivism in sense 1, above.

3. Same as subjectivity, 3.

subjectivist (sub-jek'tiv-ist), n. and a. [< subjective + -ist.] I. n. In metaph., one who holds the doctrine or doctrines of subjectivism.

II. a. Same as subjectivistic.—Subjectivist logic. See logic.

subjectivistic (sub-jek-ti-vis'tik), a. [< subjectivist + -ic.] Pertaining to or characterized by subjectivism.

subjectivistically (sub-jek-ti-vis'ti-kal-i), adv. With subjectivistic reasoning; from the point of view of subjectivism.

subjectivity (sub-jek-tiv'i-ti), n. [= F. subjectivité = G. subjektivität, < NL. subjectivita(-t)s, < L. subiectivus, subjective: see subjective.] 1. The absence of objective reality; illusiveness; the character of arising within the mind, as, for example, the sensation of a color does.

We must, in the first place, remember that analysis and subjectivity on the one hand, and synthesis and objectivity on the other hand, go together in Kant's mind. E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 413.

Belief in the subjectivity of time, space, and other forms of thought inevitably involves Agnosticism. J. Martineau, Mind, XIII. 596.

2. The private, arbitrary, and limited element of self; that which is peculiar to an individual mind: as, the subjectivity of Byron or Shelley.

There are two ways of looking at subjectivity. We may understand by it, in the first place, only the natural and finite subjectivity, with its contingent and arbitrary content of particular interests and inclinations. . . . In this sense of subjectivity, we cannot help admiring the tranquil resignation of the ancients to destiny, and feeling that it is a much higher and worthier mood than that of the moderns, who obstinately pursue their subjective aims, and when they find themselves constrained to give up the hope of reaching them, console themselves with the prospect of a reward in some shape or other. But the term subjectivity is not to be confined merely to the bad and finite kind of it which is contradistinguished from the fact. In its truth subjectivity is immanent in the fact, and as a subjectivity thus infinite is the very truth of the fact. . . . Christianity, we know, teaches that God wishes all men to be saved. That teaching declares that subjectivity has an infinite value. Hegel, Henning's notes of his lectures, tr. in Wallace's [Logic of Hegel, § 147.

It is surely subjectivity and interiority which are the notions latest acquired by the human mind. W. James, Prin. of Psychology, II. 43.

subjectivize (sub-jek'ti-viz), v. [< subjective + -ize.] To render subjective; to bring into the perceptive mind.

subjectless (sub'jekt-less), a. [< subject + -less.] Having no subject or subjects.

The subject without the king can do nothing; the subjectless king can do something. Carlyle.

subject-matter (sub'jekt-mat'tēr), n. The subject or matter presented for consideration in some written or oral statement or discussion.

It [a catalogue] is disposed according to the Subject Matter of the Books, as the Bibles and Expositors, Historians, Philosophers, &c. Lister, Journey to Paris, p. 107.

subjectness (sub'jekt-nes), n. The state or condition of being subject; subjection. [Rare.]

subject-notion (sub'jekt-nō'shon), n. A concept or notion the subject of a judgment.

subject-object (sub'jekt-ob'jekt), n. The immediate object of cognition, or the thought itself, as distinguished from the object-object, or unknown real object. [In Kantian terminology, the Gegenstand, as distinguished from the Objekt.]

subjectship (sub'jekt-ship), n. [< subject + -ship.] The state of being subject or a subject. [Rare.]

The subjectship, being the very relation in which the creature stands to the Creator as his lawgiver, ruler, and judge. Candlish, The Fatherhood of God, I. 54.

subjecture (sub-jek'tūr), n. [< subject + -ure.] The state of being subject; subjection. [Rare.]

subjee (sub'jē), n. [Hind. subzi, the larger leaves and capsules of the hemp-plant, also greenness, greens, < sabza, greenness, verdure, the hemp-plant.] The larger leaves and capsules of the Indian hemp without the stalks. See bhang.

subjectibility (sub-jis-i-bil'i-ti), n. [< ML. subiicitibilia(-t)s, < subiicitibilis: see subjectible.] Capability of being a subject of predication.

subjectible (sub-jis'i-bl), a. [< ML. subiicitibilis, subiicere, subicere, place under, subject; see subject.] 1. Capable of being subjected. [Rare.]

He [Jesus] was not a person subjectible to a command; it was enough that he understood the inclinations and designs of his Father's mercies. Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 56.

2. Capable of being made the subject of something else as predicate.

subjoin (sub-join'), v. t. [< OF. subjoindre, < L. subiungere, add, annex, yoke, < sub, under, + iungere, join, yoke: see join.] To add at the end of, especially of something said or written; annex: append: as, to subjoin an argument or an illustration.

I shall subjoin, as a Corollary to the foregoing Remark, an admirable Observation out of Aristotle. Addison, Spectator, No. 273.

= Syn. To affix, attach.

subjoinder (sub-join'dēr), n. [< OF. subjoindre, subjoin, inf. used as a noun; see subjoin.] A remark following or subjoined to another; a rejoinder. [Rare.]

"I will never stand to be hissed," was the subjoinder of young Confidence. Lamb, Elisioniana.

subjoint (sub'joint), n. In zool., a subsidiary or secondary joint; one of the subdivisions, often very numerous, of the regular joints of an insect's or a crustacean's legs, antennae, etc. Thus, the fore legs of a pedipalp arachnid, or the antennae of a lobster, have numerous subjoints in the long, slender, lash-like part of the organ beyond the short and stout joints that are identified by name. See Phryniida. Also called subsegment.

sub justice (sub jō'di-sē), [L.: sub, under; judice, abl. sing. of iudex, judge; see judgy.] Before the judge; under judicial consideration; not yet decided.

The relations of the people and the crown were then [reign of James I.] brought to issue, and, under shifting names, continued sub justice from that time to 1688. De Quincy, Rhetoric.

subjugable (sub'jō-gā-bl), a. [< L. as if subjugabilis*, < subjugare, subjugate; see subjugate.] That may be subjugated; capable of being subdued or conquered.

An abundance of good, readily subjugable land awaiting the settler. Science, VII. 232.

subjugal (sub-jō'gal), a. [< L. sub, under, + E. jugal.] Situated below the jugal, malar, or zygomatic bone.

subjugate (sub'jō-gāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. subjugated, ppr. subjugating. [< L. subjugatus, pp. of subjugare (> It. subjugare = Sp. subjugar, sojuzgar = Pg. subjugar = F. subjuguer), bring under the yoke, subjugate, < sub, under, + jugum, yoke: see yoke.] 1. To bring under the yoke; subdue; conquer; compel to submit to the dominion or control of another; vanquish.

He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Baker.

In a few months he [Cromwell] subjugated Ireland as Ireland had never been subjugated during the five centuries of slaughter which had elapsed since the landing of the first Norman settlers. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., I.

2. To make subservient; take or hold captive; bring under bondage, as the senses.

Mans sense captiv'de, his reason subjugate. Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 109.

I understood that unto such a torment The carnal malefactors were condemned Who reason subjugate to appetite. Langfellow, tr. of Dante's Inferno, v. 39.

= Syn. 1. Vanquish, Subdue, etc. See conquer.

subjugation (sub-jō-gā'shon), n. [= Sp. subjugación, < ML. subjugatio(-n-), < L. subjugare, subjugate; see subjugate.] The act of subjugating, or the state of being subjugated; subjection.

Her policy was military because her objects were power, ascendancy, and subjugation.

D. Webster, Speech at Plymouth, Dec. 22, 1820.

The subjugation of virgin soil, as we had occasion to notice, is a serious work. B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 348.

subjugator (sub'jō-gā'tor), n. [= Sp. sojuzgador = Pg. subjugador, < L. subjugator, one who subjugates, a conqueror, < subjugare, subjugate; see subjugate.] One who subjugates or enslaves; a conqueror. Coleridge.

subjunction (sub-jungk'shon), n. [< L. as if subiunctio(-n-)*, < subiungere, add, subjoin: see subjoin.] The act of subjoining, or the state of being subjoined; also, something subjoined.

subjunctive (sub-jungk'tiv), a. and n. [= F. subjonctif = Sp. subjuntivo = Pg. subjunctivo = It. subjuntivo, < L. subiunctivus, serving to join, connecting, in gram., se. modus, the subjunctive mode, < subiungere, pp. subiunctus, add, join, subjoin: see subjoin.] I. a. 1. Subjoined or added to something before said or written.

A few things more, subjunctive to the former, were thought meet to be castigated in preachers at that time. Ep. Hacket, Abp. Williams, p. 57. (Latham.)

2. In gram., noting that mode of the verb by which is expressed condition, hypothesis, or contingency, and which is generally used in a clause subjoined or subordinate to another clause or verb, and preceded by one of certain conjunctions, especially (in English) if or though: as in the sentence "if that be the case, then I am wrong." The subjunctive mode was an original part of the inflection of Indo-European verbs, and is preserved in most of the existing languages of the family: but be and were are the only remaining forms in English in which it is conspicuously distinguished from the indicative. Abbreviated subj.

II. n. In gram., the subjunctive mode.

The subjunctive is evidently passing out of use, and there is good reason to suppose that it will soon become obsolete altogether. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xiv.

subkingdom (sub'king'dūm), n. 1. A prime subdivision of the animal kingdom; a superclass corresponding to the "branches" or "embranchements" of French zoologists, as Cuvier, who recognized the four subkingdoms of the vertebrates, mollusks, articulate, and radiates. Such main groups are now more commonly called phyla. Eight such groups now very generally recognized, in fact if not in name, are Protozoa, Coelentera, Echinodermata, Vermes, Arthropoda, Mollusca, Mollusca, and Vertebrata. Some authors degrade Vermes from this rank, or otherwise dispose of it as a subkingdom; some elevate the Tunicata to this rank; and the Mollusca are not recognized by all as a subkingdom.

The prolific animals of the fifth day's creation belonged to the three Cuvierian subkingdoms of the Radiata, Articulate, and Mollusca, and to the classes of Fish and Reptiles among the Vertebrata. Dawson, Origin of World, p. 213.

2. In bot., a primary division of the vegetable kingdom; the highest class below the kingdom itself. The ordinary division is into two such subkingdoms, the Phanerogamia and the Cryptogamia; but late systematists incline to recognize four: Spermophyta (corresponding to the Phanerogamia), Pteridophyta, Bryophyta, and Thallophyta (corresponding to Cryptogamia).

sublacunose (sub-lā-kū'nōs), a. Somewhat lacunose.

Convergent to a sublacunose centre. Encyc. Nat. Hist. (1855), III. 580.

sublanate (sub-lā'nāt), a. In bot., somewhat lanate or woolly.

sublanceolate (sub-lau'sē-ō-lāl), a. In zool. and bot., approaching the lanceolate form; somewhat tapering and pointed.

sublapsarian (sub-lap-sā'ri-an), a. and n. [< L. sub, under, + lapsus, fall (see lapse), + -arian.] I. a. Relating to the sublapsarians or to their tenets.

According to the sublapsarian doctrine. Hammond.

II. n. One who believes in sublapsarianism. Compare supralapsarian.

sublapsarianism (sub-lap-sā'ri-an-izm), n. [< sublapsarian + -ism.] The doctrine that the decrees of election and reprobation are subsequent to the fall, or that men are elected to grace or reprobated to death while in a state of sin and ruin.

sublapsary (sub-lap'sā-ri), a. and n. Same as sublapsarian.

sublate (sub-lāt'), v. t.; pret. and pp. sublated, ppr. sublating. [< L. sublatus, used as pp. of tollere, raise, take up, < sub, under, from under, + latus, used as pp. of ferre, bear.] 1. To take or carry away; remove. [Rare.]

The authores of ye mischiefe [were] sublated & plucked away. Hall, Hen. VII., an. 1.

2. In logic, to deny; opposed to posit.

Where . . . the propositional lines are of uniform breadth, it is hereby shewn that all such opposition is sublated. Sir W. Hamilton, Logic, II. 471.

3. In Hegelian logic, to cancel by a subsequent movement.

The process of the external world left to itself in its externality can only be to go into itself, or to sublate or remove its own externality. Craig, Hegel, p. 198.

sublation (sub-lā'shon), n. [< L. sublatio(-n-), a raising, removal, < sublatus, raised, taken away; see sublate.] 1. The act of taking or carrying away. [Rare.]

He could not be forsaken by a sublation of union. Ep. Hall, Remains, p. 188.

2. Cancellation by a subsequent logical movement, in Hegelian philosophy.

sublative (sub'lā-tiv), a. [< sublate + -ive.] Tending to take away or deprive.

sublease (sub'lēs), n. In law, an under-lease; a lease granted by one who is himself a lessee or tenant. For some purposes, a sublease for the entire remaining term of the lessor is deemed an assignment rather than a sublease.

sublease (sub-lēs'), v. t.; pret. and pp. subleased, ppr. subleasing. To underlease.

He leased his house, . . . and subleased part of it. New York Evening Post, March 3, 1886.

sublessee (sub'le-sē'), n. The receiver or holder of a sublease.

sublessor (sub-les'or), n. The grantor of a sublease.

sublet (sub-let'), v. t.; pret. and pp. sublet, ppr. subletting. To underlet; let to another person, the party letting being himself lessee or tenant.

He's let and sublet, and every man has to make something out of him [the convict] each time. The Century, XL. 221.

sublevaminous (sub-lē-vam'i-nus), a. [< ML. sublevamen (-mīn-), a lifting, supporting, < L. sublevare, lift, support; see sublevate.] Supporting; upholding.

His up-holding and sublevaminous Providence. Feltham, Resolves, ii. 2.

sublevate (sub'lē-vāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. sublevated, ppr. sublevating. [< L. sublevatus, pp. of sublevare (> It. sollevare = Pg. sublevare), lift up from beneath, < sub, under, + levare, lift up, raise, < levis, light.] To raise; elevate; excite. Formerly also sollevate.

sublevation (sub-lē-vā'shon), n. [= Sp. sublevación = Pg. sublevação = It. sollevazione, < L. sublevatio(-n-), a lightning, < sublevare, pp. sublevatus, lift up from beneath, support; see sublevate.] 1. The act of lifting or raising; elevation.—2. A rising or insurrection.

Any general commotion or sublevation of the people. Sir W. Temple, Works (ed. 1731), II. 566.

sublicense (sub-lī'sens), v. t. To underlicense; license to another person under the provisions of a license already held by the person so licensing.

sublieutenant (sub'lī-ten'ant), n. In the British navy, a grade immediately below that of lieutenant. Formerly called mate.

subligation (sub-li-gā'shon), n. [< L. subligatio(-n-), a binding below, < L. subligare, pp. subligatus, bind below, < sub, under, + ligare, tie, bind; see ligation.] The act of binding underneath. [Rare.]

sublimable (sub-lī'mā-bl), a. [< sublime + -able.] Capable of being sublimated. See sublimation. Boyle, Works, III. 57.

sublimableness (sub-lī'mā-bl-nes), n. The quality of being sublimable. Boyle, Works, I. 573.

sublimary (sub'lī-mā-ri), a. [< sublime + -ary.] Elevated. [Rare.]

First to the master of the feast
This health is consecrated,
Thence to each sublimary guest
Whose soul doth desire
This nectar to raise and inspire.
A. Brome, The Painter's Entertainment.

sublimate (sub'li-māt, v. t.; pret. and pp. sublimated, ppr. sublimating. [L. sublimatus, pp. of sublimare, lift up on high, raise; see sublime, v.]) 1. To bring (a solid substance, such as camphor or sulphur) by heat into the state of vapor, which on cooling returns again to the solid state. See sublimation.—2. To extract by or as by sublimation.

It will be a harder alchemy than Lullius ever knew to sublimate any good use out of such an invention.

You that have put so fair for the philosopher's stone that you have endeavoured to sublimate it out of poor men's bones ground to powder by your oppressions.

3. Figuratively, to deprive of earthly dross; elevate; refine; purify; idealize.

And when [the sultan is] in state, there is not in the world to be seen a greater spectacle of humane glory, and of sublimated manhood.

I can conceive nothing more sublimating than the strange peril and novelty of an adventure such as this.

The atmosphere was light, odor, music; and each and all sublimated beyond anything the sober senses are capable of receiving.

sublimate (sub'li-māt as adj., -māt as noun), a. and n. [L. sublimatus, pp. of sublimare, lift on high; see sublimate, v.] 1. a. Brought into a state of vapor by heat, and again condensed, as camphor, sulphur, etc.; hence, elevated; purified.

Offering her self more sublimate and pure, in the sacred name and rites of Religion.

II, n. 1. Anything produced by sublimation or refining.—2. In mineral, the deposit formed, as in a glass tube or on a surface of charcoal, when a mineral containing a volatile ingredient is heated before the blowpipe.—Blue sublimate, a preparation of mercury in combination with flowers of sulphur and sal ammoniac, used in painting.—Corrosive sublimate. See corrosive.

sublimation (sub-li-mā'shon), n. [ME. sublimacion, OF. and F. sublimation = Sp. sublimacion = Pg. sublimação = It. sublimazione, L. sublimatio (n.), a lifting up, a deliverance, L. sublimare, lift up; see sublimate, sublime, v.]

1. In chem., the act or process of sublimating; a process by which solid substances are, by the aid of heat, converted into vapor, which is again condensed into the solid state by the application of cold. Sublimation effects for solids to some extent what distillation effects for liquids. Both processes purify the substances to which they are severally applied, by separating them from the fixed matters with which they are associated. Sublimation is usually conducted in one vessel, the product being deposited in the upper part of the vessel in a solid state, and often in the crystalline form, while the impurity remains in the lower part. The vapors of some substances which undergo the process of sublimation condense in the form of a fine powder called flowers; such are the flowers of sulphur, flowers of benzoin, etc. Other sublimates are obtained in a solid and compact form, as camphor, ammonium chlorid, and all the sublimates of mercury.

The quint essencia therof is naturally incorruptible, the which we schal drawe out by sublimacion.

2. The act of heightening, refining, purifying, or freeing (something) from baser qualities; as, the sublimation of the affections.—3. That which has been highly refined or purified; hence, the highest product of anything.

Religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality.

His verse was the sublimation of his rarest mood.

Sublimation theory, in geol. and mining, the theory according to which ore-deposits were formed and re-fissures filled by the volatilization of metalliferous matter from beneath, or from the ignited interior of the earth.

sublimatory (sub'li-mā-tō-ri), a. and n. [ME. sublymatorie = F. sublimatoire, L. sublimator, a lifter, L. sublimare, lift up; see sublimate.] 1. a. Tending to sublimate; used in sublimation.

II, n.; pl. sublimatories (-triz). A vessel for sublimation.

Violes, croslets, and sublimatories.

sublime (sub-lim'), a. and n. [= F. sublime = Sp. Pg. It. sublime, L. sublimis, uplifted, high, lofty, sublime; origin unknown.] 1. a. 1. High in place; uplifted; elevated; exalted; lofty.

Lie to thy selfe, pursue not after Fame; Thunders at the sublimest buildings aime.

Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd

2. High in excellence; elevated by nature; exalted above men in general by lofty or noble traits; eminent; said of persons.

The age was fruitful in great men, but amongst them all, if we except the sublime Julian leader, none, as regards splendour of endowments, stood upon the same level as Cicero.

Here dwells no perfect man sublime, Nor woman winged before her time.

3. Striking the mind with a sense of grandeur or power, physical or moral; calculated to awaken awe, veneration, exalted or heroic feeling, and the like; lofty; grand; noble; noting a natural object or scenery, an action or conduct, a discourse, a work of man's hands, a spectacle, etc.: as, sublime scenery; sublime heroism.

Easy in Words thy Style, in Sense sublime.

Know how sublime a thing it is To suffer and be strong.

The forms of elevated masses that are most sublime are the lofty and precipitous, as implying the most intetuge effort of supporting might.

4. Of lofty mien: elevated in manner, expression, or appearance.

His fair large front and eye sublime declared Absolute rule.

For the proud Souldan, with presumptuous cheare And countenance sublime and insolent, Sought onely slaughter and avengement.

5. In anal., superficial; not deep-seated: opposed to profound: as, the sublime flexor of the fingers (the flexor sublimis, a muscle).—Sublime geometry, the theory of higher curves.—Sublime Porte. See Porte.—Syn. 2 and 3. Grand, Lofty, Sublime, majestic, stately. Grand founds its meanings on the idea of great size, lofty and sublime on that of height. Natural objects may be sublime without physical height, if vastness and great impressiveness are present. In the moral field the sublime is that which is so high above ordinary human achievements as to give the impression of astonishment blended with awe, as the leap of Curtius into the chasm, or the death of the martyr Stephen. In moral things the grand suggests both vastness and elevation. Lofty may imply pride, but in this connection it notes only a lower degree of the sublime, sublime being the strongest word in the language for ideas of its class.

II, n. That which is sublime: commonly with the definite article. (a.) In lit., that which is most elevated, stately, or imposing in style.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase.

The origin of the sublime is one of the most curious and interesting subjects of inquiry that can occupy the attention of a critic.

(b.) The grand, impressive, and awe-inspiring in the works of nature or art, as distinguished from the beautiful: occasionally with the indefinite article, to express a particular character of sublimity.

There is a sublime in nature, as in the ocean or the thunder—in moral action, as in deeds of daring and self-denial—and in art, as in statuary and painting, by which what is sublime in nature and in moral character is represented and idealized.

(c.) That which has been elevated and sublimated to its extreme limit; a noble and exalted ideal.

Your upward gaze at me now is the very sublime of faith, truth, and devotion.

Are you—poor, sick, old ere your time— Nearer one whit your own sublime Than we who never have turned a rhyme?

5. sublime (sub-lim'), v.; pret. and pp. sublimed, ppr. subliming. [ME. sublimen, OF. sublimier = Sp. Pg. sublimar = It. sublimare, L. sublimare, raise on high, in ML. also sublimare, L. sublimis, raised on high, sublime; see sublime, a.] I, trans. 1. To raise on high.

Thou dear vine, . . . Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong, Nor can thy head (not help'd) itself sublime, Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb.

2. To sublimate.

Th' austere and ponderous juices they sublime Make them ascend the porous soil and climb The orange tree, the citron, and the lime.

Sub. How do you sublime him? Face. With the Calce of Egg-shells.

3. To elevate; refine; purify; etherealize.

Sublimed thee, and exalted thee, and fixed thee In the third region, called our state of grace?

I am sublimed! gross earth, Support me not! I walk on air!

Our Dross but weighs us down into Despair, While their sublimed spirits dance f' th' Ayre.

A judicious use of metaphors wonderfully raises, sublimes, and adorns oratory or elocution.

II, intrans. 1. To be affected by sublimation; be brought or changed into a state of vapor by heat, and then condensed by cold, as camphor or sulphur.

Particles of antimony which will not sublime alone.

Different bodies sublime at different temperatures, according to their various degrees of volatility.

2. To become exalted as by sublimation.

This new faith subliming into knowledge.

Sublimed sulphur. Same as flowers of sulphur. See sulphur.

sublimely (sub-lim'li), adv. In a sublime manner: with exalted conceptions; loftily.

In English lays, and all sublimely great, Thy Homer warms with all his ancient heat.

sublimeness (sub-lim'nes), n. The condition or quality of being sublime; loftiness of sentiment or style; sublimity.

sublimier (sub-li'mèr), n. [sublime, v. + -er.] One who or that which sublimates; specifically, an apparatus for performing the operation of sublimation. Sublimiers are of various forms and materials, according to their special requirements, but each consists essentially of an inclosure of metal, earthenware, or glass, to which heat may be applied, and a condenser or collector for the sublimed substance.

sublimette (sub-li-met'), n. [F. sublime, high (see sublime), + dim. -ette.] A variety of music-box.

sublimification (sub-lim'i-fi-kā'shon), n. [L. sublimis, sublime, + facere, do, make (see -fy), + -ation.] The act of making sublime, or the state of being made sublime.

subliminal (sub-lim'i-nal), a. [L. sub, under, + limen (limin-), threshold.] Below the threshold of sensation. In the following quotation a similar threshold of consciousness is supposed.

As attention moves away from a presentation its intensity diminishes, and when the presentation is below the threshold of consciousness its intensity is then subliminal, whatever that of the physical stimulus may be.

sublimination (sub-lim-i-tā'shon), n. A subordinate or secondary limitation.

sublimity (sub-lim'i-ti), n.; pl. sublimities (-tiz). [F. sublimité = Sp. sublimitad = Pg. sublimitade = It. sublimità, L. sublimita (-is), loftiness, elevation, L. sublimis, raised on high, sublime; see sublime.] 1. The state of being sublime; that character or quality of anything which marks it as sublime; grandeur. Especially—(a.) Loftiness of nature or character; moral grandeur: as, the sublimity of an action.

The sublimity of the character of Christ owes nothing to his historians.

(b.) Loftiness of conception; exaltation of sentiment or style.

Milton's chief talent, and, indeed, his distinguishing excellence, lies in the sublimity of his thoughts.

(c.) Grandeur; vastness; majesty, whether exhibited in the works of nature or of art: as, the sublimity of a scene or of a building.

It seems manifest that the most perfect realization of structural beauty and sublimity possible to music is attained by instrumental composition.

There is also the sensation of great magnitude, corresponding to the voluminous in sound, and lying at the foundation of what we term sublimity.

2. That which is sublime; a sublime person or thing.

The particle of those sublimities Which have relapsed to chaos.

3. The highest degree of its highest quality of which anything is capable; climax; acme.

The sublimity of wisdom is to do those things living which are to be desired when dying.

sublinear (sub-lin'ē-jēr), a. Nearly linear.

Suture sublinear above and slightly channeled below.

sublingua (sub-ling'gwä), n.; pl. sublinguae (-gwä). [NL. (cf. LL. sublinguam, the epiglottis), L. sub, under, + lingua, the tongue.] A process of the mucous membrane of the floor of the mouth developed between the tip of the tongue and the symphysis of the lower jaw of some animals, as lemurs; it may acquire considerable size, and become denticulated or pectinated.

In many Prosimii and Chiroptera, as also in the platyrrhine apes, there is a process below the tongue which is sometimes double; this is the so-called sublingua.

Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 553.

sublingual (sub-ling'gwāl), a. [= F. sublingual; as sub- + lingual.] 1. Situated under the tongue, or on the under side of the tongue; hypoglossal: specifying various structures. Also subglossal.—2. Of or pertaining to the sublingua.—Sublingual artery, a branch of bifurcation of the lingual artery, arising with the ramus opposite the margin of the hyoglossus muscle, and running on the goniohyoglossus to the sublingual gland.—Sublingual calculus, a salivary calculus of the sublingual gland.—Sublingual cyst. Same as ranula.—Sublingual fossa, a shallow cavity on the inner surface of the inferior maxillary bone above the mylohyoid ridge, and near the symphysis menti, partly lodging the sublingual gland.—Sublingual gland, the smallest salivary gland, lying on the floor of the mouth, discharging by a series of ducts (eight to twenty—the ducts of Rivini) either freely into the mouth or into the duct of Wharton. The longest duct, running along Wharton's duct, and opening with or very near it, is called the duct of Bartholin. See cut under salivary.—Sublingual process, the sublingua.

sublition (sub-lish'ōn), n. [K. L. as if sublition*(n-), < sublino, pp. sublinitus, sublinitus, lay on as a ground-color, prime, < sub, under, + linere, smear: see liniment.] In painting, the act or art of laying the ground-color under the perfect color.

sublittoral (sub-lit'ō-rāl), a. In zoöl., of littoral habits to some extent; living near the seashore; especially, living at a somewhat lower horizon under water than that of the littoral zone.

sublobular (sub-lob'ū-lār), a. Situated beneath a lobule. Compare interlobular and intralobular.

The intralobular vein . . . opens into the sublobular vein, and thence into the hepatic vein.

Holden, Anat. (1885), p. 507.

Sublobular veins, branches of the hepatic vein on which the hepatic lobules lie and into which the intralobular veins discharge.

sublunar (sub-lū'nār), a. [= F. sublunaire = Sp. Pg. sublunar = It. sublunare, < L. sub, under, + luna, the moon: see lunar.] Situated beneath or nearer than the moon.

This vast sublunar vault. Milton, P. L., iv. 777.

The city's moonlit spires and myriad lamps
Like stars in a sublunar sky did glow.

Shelley, Revolt of Islam, v. 1.

sublunary (sub-lū'nār-ī), a. and n. [See sublunar.] 1. a. 1. Situated beneath the moon.

Each sublunary bodie is cosmopod
Of the lower elements, which are propode
By Nature to that end.

Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 116.

Hence—2. Pertaining to this world; terrestrial; mundane; earthly; worldly: as, sublunary affairs.

All things which are sublunary are subject to change.
Dryden, Parallel of Poetry and Painting.

Am I not now dying a victim to the horror and the mystery of the wildest of all sublunary visions?
Poe, Tales, I. 418.

II.† n. Any worldly thing.

That these sublunaries have their greatest freshness plac'd in only hope, it is a conviction undeniable; that, upon enjoyment, all our joys do vanish.
Feltham, Resolves, ii. 66.

sublunate (sub-lū'nāt), a. Approaching the form of a crescent; subcrescentic: as, a sublunate mark.

subluxate (sub-luk'sāt), v. t. To dislocate partially.

subluxation (sub-luk-sā'shōn), n. Partial dislocation.

submammary (sub-mam'ā-ri), a. Situated beneath or below the mammary gland; inframammary; also, more deeply seated than this gland.—Submammary abscess, an abscess between the mammary gland and the chest-wall.—Submammary region. Same as inframammary region (which see, under inframammary).

submargin (sub-mār'jin), n. In entom., a space parallel to a margin and but slightly separated from it.

submarginal (sub-mār'ji-nāl), a. In bot. and zoöl., situated near the margin.—Submarginal cells, in entom., a series of cells in the wing of a hymenopterous insect lying behind the stigma and marginal cell.—Submarginal vein or nervure, in hymenopterous insects, one of the transverse nervures separating the submarginal cells. In the Chalcididae it is a short subcostal vein running from the base of the wing and bending upward to the costal margin, where it takes the name of marginal vein.

submarginate (sub-mār'ji-nāt), a. In entom., bordered with a mark which is slightly separated from the edge.

submarginated (sub-mār'jind), a. Same as submarginate.

submarine (sub-mā-rēn'), a. and n. [= F. sous-marin = Sp. Pg. submarino; as sub- + marine.]

1. a. 1. Situated or living under or in the sea, either at the bottom or below the surface; below the surface of the sea: as, submarine plants; a submarine telegraph.—2. Occurring or carried on below the surface of the sea: as, submarine explorations; designed for use under the sea: as, submarine armor.—Submarine armor. See armor.—Submarine boat, a boat which is so fitted that it can be propelled when entirely submerged, and carries a sufficient amount of compressed air to admit of remaining below the surface for several hours. The chief object sought is the carrying and operating of torpedoes.—Submarine cable. See cable.—Submarine denudation, denudation which takes place beneath the level of the sea. Some geologists, however, do not clearly distinguish between marine and submarine denudation. In the former, all denudation under or at the edge of the sea is properly included; in the latter, only that which takes place beneath the sea-level.—Submarine forest. See forest.—Submarine gun, a gun adapted for the discharge of projectiles below the surface of the water.—Submarine lamp, mine, etc. See the nouns.—Submarine volcano, a volcano begun beneath the sea, but usually developed by the continued action of the eruptive forces so as to rise above the sea-level, and sometimes to a very considerable height. Some islands thus begun by submarine volcanic agencies have disappeared after a time; others have been permanent. The Mediterranean, the vicinity of the Azores, and the coast of Iceland are localities where submarine volcanic action has been exhibited on a grand scale.

II. n. A submarine plant.

submaster (sub-mās'tēr), n. [OF. soubmaistre, F. sousmaître, < ML. submagister, a submaster, < L. sub, under, + magister, master: see master 1.] A subordinate or deputy master: as, the submaster of a school.

submaxilla (sub-mak-sil'ā), n.; pl. submaxillae (-ē). The under jaw or mandible; especially, the submaxillary bone, or bone of the under jaw.

submaxillary (sub-mak'si-lār-ī), n. and a. 1. n.; pl. submaxillaries (-riz). The inferior maxillary bone; the under jaw-bone, inframaxillary, or mandible.

II. a. 1. (a) Of or pertaining to the under jaw or inferior maxilla; forming the basis of the lower jaw, as a bone or bones; mandibular. (b) Of or pertaining to the submaxillary gland: as, submaxillary secretion or saliva.—2. Situated under the jaws: as, the submaxillary triangle.—Submaxillary artery, one of several large branches of the facial artery which supply the submaxillary gland and neighboring parts.—Submaxillary duct, the duct of Wharton.—Submaxillary fossa. See fossa 1.—Submaxillary ganglion. See ganglion.—Submaxillary gland, a salivary gland situated beneath the lower jaw, on either side, discharging beneath the tongue by Wharton's duct: it is innervated from the chorda tympani and sympathetic nerves. See cut under salivary.—Submaxillary nerve, the inframaxillary nerve.—Submaxillary region. Same as suprahyoid region (which see, under suprahyoid).—Submaxillary triangle. See triangle.—Submaxillary vein, a tributary of the facial vein draining the submaxillary gland.

submaximal (sub-mak'si-māl), a. Nearly but not quite maximal.

Submaximal nerve-irritations.

W. James, Prin. of Psychology, I. 235.

submedial (sub-mē'di-āl), a. Same as submedian.

submedian (sub-mō'di-ān), a. Situated near but not at the middle; specifically, in conch., admedian; lying next the middle line on each side, as certain teeth of the radula. Also submedial.—Submedian cell, in entom., same as internomedian cell (which see, under internomedian).

submediant (sub-mē'di-ant), n. In music, the tone of a scale midway between the subdominant and the upper tonic; the sixth, as B in the scale of D. Also called superdominant.

submembranous (sub-mem'brā-nus), a. Somewhat membranous; a little leathery or coriaceous.

submeningeal (sub-mē-nin'jē-āl), a. Situated beneath the meninges.

submental (sub-men'tal), a. [K. submentum + -al.] 1. Situated beneath the chin, or under the edge of the lower jaw. Specifically—2. In entom., of or pertaining to the submentum.—

Submental artery, the largest of the cervical branches of the facial artery, given off in the region of the submaxillary gland, and distributed to the muscles of the jaw.

submental vein, that one of the tributary veins of the facial vein which accompanies the submental artery.

submentum (sub-men'tum), n.; pl. submenta (-tū). [NL., < L. sub, under, + mentum, the chin: see mentum.] In entom., the proximal one of two basal median parts or pieces of the labium, the other being the mentum; the proximal one of the two basal parts of the second maxilla. See cuts under mouth-part, palpus, Hymenoptera, and Insecta.

submerge (sub-mēr'j'), v. t.; pret. and pp. submerged, ppr. submerging. [K. OF. submerger soubmerger, F. submerger = Pr. submerger, submergir, somergir = Sp. sumergir = Pg. submergir = It. sommeregere, < L. submergere, summergere, plunge under, sink, overwhelm, < sub, under, + mergere, dip, sink, plunge: see merge.] 1. trans. 1. To put under water; plunge.—2. To cover or overflow with water; inundate; drown.

So half my Egypt were submerged, and made A cistern for scaled snakes!

Shak., A. and C., ii. 5. 94.

Submerged bog, submerged forest, a bog or forest sunk below its original position, so that it has become covered by water. Thus, at Clonea, near Dungarvon, in Ireland, there are remains of an ancient pine forest, miles in length, now usually covered with many fathoms of water.—Submerged pump. See pump 1.

II. intrans. To sink under water; be buried or covered, as by a fluid; sink out of sight.

There is . . . a plot, which emerges more than once, for carrying the King to Rouen; plot after plot emerging and submerging, like ignes fatui in foul weather, which lead nowhither.
Carlyle, French Rev., II. iii. 4.

submergence (sub-mēr'jens), n. [K. submergere + -ence.] The act of submerging, or plunging under water; the state of being submerged; submersion; hence, a sinking out of sight.

submerse (sub-mēr's'), v. t. [K. L. summersus, summersus, pp. of submergere, summergere, submerge: see submerge.] To put under water; submerge. [Rare.]

submerse (sub-mēr's'), a. [K. L. summersus, pp. of the verb.] Same as submersed.

submersed (sub-mēr'st'), p. a. In bot., growing under water, as the leaves of aquatic plants. Also demersed and submerged.

submersible (sub-mēr'si-bl), a. [K. submerse + -ible.] That may be submersed. The Engineer, LXVII. 59.

submersion (sub-mēr'shōn), n. [= F. submersion = Sp. sumersion = Pg. submersão = It. sommersione, < LL. submersio(n-), summersio(n-), a sinking, submerging, < L. submergere, summergere, submerge: see submerge.] The act of submerging, or the state of being submerged.

submetallic (sub-me-tal'ik), a. Imperfectly or partially metallic: as, the submetallic luster of wolfram.

submiliary (sub-mil'i-ār-ī), a. Slightly smaller than miliary. Lauec, 1891, I.

subminimal (sub-min'i-māl), a. Less than minimal.

subminister (sub-min'is-tēr), v. [K. OF. subministrer = Sp. suministrar = Pg. suministrare, < L. sumministrare, sumministrare, aid by giving, afford, supply, < sub, under, + ministrare, attend, provide, furnish, < ministrer, an attendant: see minister.] 1. trans. To supply; afford; administer. Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Man-kind, p. 154.

II. intrans. To subserv; be useful; be subservient. Sir R. L'Estrange.

subministrant (sub-min'is-trant), a. [K. L. sumministrant(s-), sumministrant(s-), ppr. of sumministrare, sumministrare, aid by giving, supply: see subminister.] Subservient; subordinate. Bacon.

subministratē (sub-min'is-trāt), v. t. [K. L. sumministratus, sumministratus, pp. of sumministrare, sumministrare, aid by giving, supply: see subminister.] Same as subminister. Harvey.

subministration (sub-min'is-tra'shōn), n. [K. OF. subministratio = Sp. suministracion = Pg. suministratio(n-), < L. sumministratio(n-), sumministratio(n-), a giving, supplying: see subministerate.] The act of subministering, or furnishing or supplying. Sir H. Wotton, Reliquie, p. 529.

submit (sub-mis'), a. [= OF. submit, soumit, soumit, F. soumis = Sp. sumiso = Pg. sumisso = It. sommesso, < L. submitus, summissus, pp. of submittere, summittere, put under, lower, reduce: see submit.] 1. Humble; submissive. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Nearer his presence—Adam, though not awed,
Yet with submit approach and reverence neck,
As to a superiour nature bowing low.

Milton, P. L., v. 359.

A simple, submit, humble style.

C. Mather, Mag. Chris. Int.

2†. Low; soft; gentle.

Thus th' old Hebrew muttering gan to speak
In submit voice, that Isaac might not hear His bitter grief.
Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii., The Fathers.

These are crying sins, and have shrill voices in heaven;
neither are they submit and whispering on the earth.
Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 213.

submission (sub-mish'on), n. [< OF. submis-sion, submission, soumission, F. soumission = Sp. submisión = Pg. submissão = It. submissione, < L. submissio(-u-), submissio(-u-), a letting down, lowering, sinking, < submittere, submittere, pp. submissus, submissus, put under, let down, lower, reduce; see submit.] I. The act of submitting, in any sense of that word; especially, the act of yielding; entire surrender to the control or government of another.

Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere French word;
We English warriors wot not what it means.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 7. 54.
This known we are up, and marching. No submission,
No promise of base peace, can cure our malices.
Fletcher, Loyal Subject, v. 4.

2. The state of being submissive; humility; yielding of opinion; acquiescence.

In all submission and humility
York doth present himself unto your highness.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., v. 1. 58.

3. Compliance with the commands or laws of a superior; obedience.

This Passage was a little pleasing to the King, to think that he had a Judge of such Courage, and a Son of such Submission.
Baker, Chronicle, p. 163.

God will relent, and quit thee all his debt;
Who ever more approves, and more accepts (Best pleased with humble and filial submission).
Milton, S. A., l. 511.

4. In law, an agreement to submit a disputed point to arbitration.—Submission of the clergy, the agreement made by the clergy of the Church of England in convocation in 1532, and embodied in the act of Parliament of 1534 known as the Act of Submission, not to promulgate new canons without the royal assent. = Syn. 4. Compliance, etc. See obedience.

submissive (sub-mis'iv), a. [< submit + -ive.] 1. Inclined or ready to submit; yielding to power or authority; obedient; humble.

His heart relented
Towards her, his life so late, and sole delight,
Now at his feet submissive in distress.
Milton, P. L., x. 942.

2. Testifying or showing submission: of things.

He bring him on submissive knees.
Brone, Antipodes, iii. 2.
He, in delight
Both of her beauty and submissive charms, Smiled with superior love. Milton, P. L., iv. 498.
The sever'd Bars
Submissive clink again their brazen Portals.
Prior, Second Hymn of Callimachus.

= Syn. 1. Compliant, yielding, obsequious, subservient, tractable, docile; resigned, uncomplaining, unrepining, patient, long-suffering.

submissively (sub-mis'iv-li), adv. In a submissive manner; with submission; with acknowledgment of inferiority; humbly.

submissiveness (sub-mis'iv-nes), n. The state or quality of being submissive, in any sense of the word. Milton, Eikonoklastes, xi.

submissly (sub-mis'li), adv. Humbly; with submission. Eccles. xxix. 5.

submissness (sub-mis'nes), n. Submissiveness; humbleness; obedience. Barton, Anat. of Mel., p. 140.

submit (sub-mit'), v.; pret. and pp. submitted, ppr. submitting. [< ME. submitten, < OF. soumettre, soumettre, F. soumettre = Pr. sobmetre, sotzmetre = Sp. someter = Pg. submitter = It. sommettere, < L. submittere, submittere, put or place under, let down, lower, reduce, put down, quell, < sub + mittere, send.] I. trans. 1. To put or place under or down.

This said, the bristled throat
Of the submitted sacrifice with ruthless steel he cut;
Which straight into the hoary sea Talthybins cast, to feed
The sea-born nation. Chapman, Iliad, xix. 258.

2. To let down; cause to sink; lower.

Sometimes the hill submits itself a while.
Dryden, To Lord Chancellor Clarendon, l. 139.

3. To yield; surrender to the power, will, or authority of another; subject: often used reflexively.

If ought be mys in word, syllable, or dede,
I submitte me to correccion withoute any debate.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 33.

Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands.

Eph. v. 22.
She sets her forward countenance
And leaps into the future chance, Submitting all things to desire.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, cxiv.

4. To refer to the discretion or judgment of another; refer: as, to submit a controversy to arbitrators; to submit a question to the court.

I submit for your especial consideration whether our Indian system shall not be remodelled.
Lincoln, in Raymond, p. 316.

5. To propose; declare as one's opinion.

Morris submitted that congress should apply to the states for the power of incorporating a bank.

Encyclo., Hist. Const., 1. 32.

6. To moderate; restrain; soften.

What oypn confession of felonye hadde ever jnges so acordantt in eruelte . . . that eyther erroure of wannes wit or elles condicioun of fortune . . . ne submittede some of hem?
Chaucer, Boethius, i. prose 4.

II. intrans. 1. To yield one's self, physically or morally, to any power or authority; give up resistance; surrender.

Courage never to submit or yield.
Milton, P. L., i. 108.

The Mahometans . . . with one consent submitted to the tribute imposed upon them.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, II. 116.

2. To be subject; acquiesce in the authority of another; yield without opposition.

To thy husband's will Thine shall submit. Milton, P. L., x. 196.

Justice is grave and decorous, and in its punishments rather seems to submit to a necessity than to make a choice. Burke, Rev. in France.

No statesman ever enjoyed success with so exquisite a relish, or submitted to defeat with so genuine and unforced a cheerfulness. Macaulay, Horace Walpole.

3. To maintain; declare: usually in formally respectful expression of a decided opinion: as, "That, I submit, sir, is not the ease." [Collog.] = Syn. 1 and 2. To succumb, comply, bow.

submittal (sub-mit'al), n. [< submit + -al.] The act or process of submitting. Amer. Nat., XXII. 262. [Rare.]

submitter (sub-mit'er), n. [< submit + -er.] One who submits. Whitlock, Manners of the English, p. 118.

submitsh (sub-mon'ish), v. t. [With term, as in monish, admonish, < L. submonere, summonere, remind privately, < sub, under, + manere, pp. monitus, remind, advise: see monish.] To suggest; reprove gently; advise. Granger.

submonition (sub-mō-nish'on), n. [< ML. submonitio(-u-), < L. submonere, summonere, remind privately: see submonish.] Suggestion; gentle reproof. Granger, On Ecclesiastes, p. 29.

submontagne (sub-mon-tān'), a. Same as submontane. The Nation, March 11, 1869, p. 191.

submontane (sub-mon'tān), a. Situated at or near the base of a mountain or mountain-range; belonging to the foot-hills of a range. See foothill.

Foremost among the wines of Hungary is the sweet Tokay, grown in the submontane district around the town of Tokay. Encyclo. Brit., XXIV. 610.

submucosa (sub-mū-kō'sā), n.; pl. submucosae (-sē). [NL., < L. sub, under, + mucosus, mucous.] The layer of areolar tissue underlying a mucous membrane; submucous tissue.

submucous (sub-mū'kus), a. 1. Consisting in part of mucus, as a secretion; also, of a character between mucous membrane and ordinary skin, as the red part of the lips.—2. Lying beneath mucous membrane. See submucosa.—Submucous coat. Same as submucosa.—Submucous cystitis, cystitis affecting the submucosa of the urinary bladder.—Submucous râles, râles produced in medium-sized bronchial tubes of an indistinctly mucous character.

submucronate (sub-mū'krō-nāt), a. In zoöl., imperfectly mucronate; having an imperfect mucro.

submultiple (sub-mul'ti-pl), n. and a. I. n. A number which divides another without a remainder, or is an aliquot part of it: thus, 7 is a submultiple of 56.

II. a. Noting a number or quantity which is exactly contained in another number or quantity an exact number of times: as, a submultiple number.—Submultiple ratio. See ratio.

submundane (sub-mun'dān), a. Existing under the world; underground; subterranean.

submucular (sub-mus'kū-lār), a. Situated beneath a muscle.

subnarcotic (sub-nār-kot'ik), a. Moderately narcotic.

subnasal (sub-nā'zāl), a. Situated at the bottom of or under the nose; specifically, situated at the base of the anterior nasal spine.—Subnasal point, in craniom., the middle of the inferior border of the anterior nares, or the roof of the anterior nasal spine. See cut under craniometry.

subnascent (sub-nas'ent), a. [< L. subnascent(-t)-s, ppr. of subnasci, grow up under or out of, follow after, < sub, under, + nasci, be born: see nascent.] Growing underneath.

Of noxious influence to the subnascent plants of other kinds. Evelyn, Sylva, l. xii. § 1.

subnatural (sub-nat'ūr-āl), a. Below nature: infranatural; hypophysical.

Subnecromorphotica (sub-nek'rō-mōr-fot'ik-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Westwood, 1840), < L. sub, under, + Gr. νεκρός, a dead body, + μορφή, form.] A division of neuropterous insects (in a broad sense), including those which have quiescent incomplete pupæ, which, however, acquire the power of locomotion before they assume the perfect state. It corresponds closely with the modern restricted order Neuroptera (as distinguished from the Pseudoneuroptera).

subnect (sub-nekt'), v. t. [< L. subnectere, tie under, bind on beneath, < sub, under, + nectere, pp. nectus, bind, tie, fasten. Cf. annect, connect: see also subnex.] To tie, buckle, or fasten beneath. Imp. Dict.

subnervian (sub-nēr'vi-an), a. Same as subneural. Encyclo. Brit., XXIV. 679.

subneural (sub-nūr'al), a. Situated beneath a main neural axis or nervous cord: in annelids, specifying that one of the longitudinal trunks of the pseudohemal system which runs beneath the ganglionic cord, as in the earthworm. Encyclo. Brit., XXIV. 185.

subnex (sub-neks'), v. t. [< L. subnexus, pp. of subnectere, tie under: see subnect.] To subjoin; add. Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 873.

subnitrate (sub-ni'trāt), n. A basic nitrate, capable of saturating more nitric acid, thus forming a normal nitrate.

subniveal (sub-nī'vē-āl), a. Same as subnivean.

subnivean (sub-nī'vĕ-an), a. Situated or carried on under the snow. [Rare.]

At a spot where the whirling winds had left the earth nearly bare [of snow], he commenced his subnivean work. S. Judd, Margaret, i. 17.

Subnobiles (sub-nob'i-lēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. sub, under, + nobilis, noble.] In ornith., in Sundevall's system, a cohort of the order Proceres, established to distinguish the Apterygidae or kiwis from their rattle or struthious birds.

subnodal (sub-nō'dāl), a. In entom., situated behind the nodus, a point near the center of the costal margin, in the wings of certain dragonflies, where the nervures appear to be knotted.

subnormal (sub-nōr'mal), a. and n. I. a. 1. Less than normal; abnormal by defect or deficiency.—2. In math., cut off by the normal.

II. n. That part of the axis of abscissas of a curve which is intercepted between the normal and the ordinate.—Polar subnormal, the line drawn from the origin of polar coordinates perpendicular to the radius vector to meet the normal.

subnormality (sub-nōr-mal'i-ti), n. [< subnormal + -ity.] The state or condition of being subnormal. Lawet, 1890, I. 105.

subnotation (sub-nō-tā'shōn), n. [< L. subnotatio(-u-), a signing underneath, a subscription, < subnotare, pp. subnotatus, note or write underneath, subscribe, < sub, under, + notare, note, mark: see note.] Same as rescript, 1.

subnubilar (sub-nū'bi-lār), a. [< L. sub, under, + nubila, clouds (see subnubular), + -ar.] Situated under the clouds. [Rare.]

The every-day observation of the most unlettered man who treads the fields and is wet with the mists and rains must convince him that there is no subnubilar solid sphere. Davson, Origin of the World, p. 63.

subnude (sub-nūd'), a. In bot., almost naked or bare of leaves.

subnubular (sub-nū'vō-lār), a. [< L. sub, under, + It. nubola, a cloud, < L. nubila, clouds, neut. pl. of nubilus, cloudy: see nubulous. Cf. L. subnubilus, somewhat cloudy, < sub, under, + nubilus, cloudy.] Somewhat cloudy; partially covered or obscured by clouds. [Rare.]

Subnubular lights of evening. Lord Houghton.

subobscure (sub-ob-skūr'), a. [< L. subobscurus, somewhat obscure, < sub, under, + obscurus, obscure: see obscure.] Somewhat obscure.

subobscurely (sub-ob-skūr'li), adv. Somewhat obscurely or darkly. Doune, Devotions, p. 218.

subobtuse (sub-ob-tūs'), a. Somewhat obtuse.

suboccipital (sub-ok-sip'i-tāl), a. 1. Situated under the hindhead, or below (back of) the occipital bone, as a nerve.—2. Situated on the under surface of the occipital lobe of the brain, as a gyre or a fissure.—Suboccipital nerve, the first cervical nerve.—Suboccipital triangle. See triangle.

suboceanic (sub-ō-shĕ-an'ik), a. Lying beneath the ocean. Nature, XL. 658.

subocellate (sub-os'el-āt), a. Indistinctly ocellate; somewhat resembling an ocellus; in entom., noting spots on the wings of butterflies, etc., surrounded by a ring of another color, but destitute of a central spot or pupil. Also called blind or epupillate spots.

suboctave (sub-ok'tāv), n. 1. An eighth part. Our gallon, which has the pint for its suboctave. Arbutnot, Anc. Coins suboptuple (sub-ok'tū-pl), a. Containing one part of eight; having the ratio 1:8. Ips. Wilkins, Archimedes, vii.

2. In music, the octave below a given tone.—Suboctave coupler, in organ-building, a coupler which adds digitals an octave below those struck, either on the same keyboard or on another.

subocular (sub-ok'ū-lār), a. [L. subocularis, that is beneath the eye, < sub, under, + ocularis, pertaining to the eye, < oculus, eye.] Situated under the eye; suborbital; suboptic.—Subocular antennæ, in entom., antennæ inserted below the eyes, as in most Hemiptera.

subesophageal, a. See subesophageal.

subopercular (sub-ō-pēr'kl), n. The subopercular bone, or suboperculum, of a fish.

subopercular (sub-ō-pēr'kū-lār), a. [< suboperculum + -ar³.] Composing a lower part of the operculum or gill-flap of a fish; pertaining to a suboperculum in any sense, or having its character. See cut under opercular.

suboperculum (sub-ō-pēr'kū-lum), n.; pl. subopercula (-lā). [NL. < L. sub, under, + operculum, a lid, cover.] 1. In ichth., the subopercular bone, an inferior one of four opercular bones usually entering into the composition of the gill-cover, of which it forms a part of the lower margin. See cuts under opercular and teleost.—2. In anat. of the brain, a part of an orbital gyre which to some extent covers the insula or island of Reil in front, and is situated under the preoperculum.

suboptic (sub-op'tik), a. Same as suborbital: as, the suboptic foramen.

suboral (sub-ō'rāl), a. Placed under the mouth or oral orifice.

Other specimens with the characteristic dorsal surface have no suboral avicularium. Geol. Jour., LXVII. 6.

suborbicular (sub-ōr-bik'ū-lār), a. Almost orbiculate or orbicular; nearly circular.

suborbiculate (sub-ōr-bik'ū-lāt), a. Same as suborbicular.

suborbital (sub-ōr'bi-tal), a. and n. 1. a. Situated below the orbit of the eye or on the floor of that orbit; infra-orbital; subocular. Also suborbiculate.—Suborbital cartilage. See II.—Suborbital foramen, the infra-orbital foramen (which see, under foramen).—Suborbital fossa. Same as canine fossa.

II. n. A special formation of parts below, along the lower border of, or on the floor of the orbit of the eye. (a) A branch of the second division of the fifth nerve, which in various animals, as man, runs under the orbit and escapes upon the cheek through the suborbital foramen. (b) One of a chain of bones or cartilages which in many of the lower vertebrates borders the brim of the orbit below, and corresponds to a like series which may form the supra-orbital margin. The great development of one of these suborbitals is a prominent feature of the mail-checked or cottoid fishes. See Scleroparia, and cut under teleost.

subordain (sub-ōr-dān'), v. t. To ordain to an inferior position. [Rare.]

For she is finite in her acts and powre,
But so is not that Powre omnipotent
That Nature subordain'd chiefest Governor
Of fading creatures while they do endure.
Davies, Miram in Modum, p. 24. (Davies.)

suborder (sub-ōr'ō-dēr), n. 1. In bot. and zool., a subdivision of an order; a group subordinate to an order; a superfamily. See family, 6, and order, n., 5.—2. In arch., a subordinate or secondary order; an order introduced for decoration, or chiefly so, as distinguished from a main order of the structure.

In the triforium of the choir [of the cathedral of Seville] the shafts which carry the sub-orders of the arches are comparatively slender monoliths.
C. H. Moore, Gothic Architecture, p. 202.

subordinacy (sub-ōr'di-nā-si), n. [< subordinatio (to) + -cy.] The state of being subordinate, or subject to control; subordination. [Rare.]

He forms a Whole, coherent and proportioned In itself, with due Subjection and Subordinacy of constituent Parts.
Shaftesbury, Advice to an Author, i. § 3.

subordinal (sub-ōr'di-nāl), a. [< NL. subordo (-ordis), suborder (< L. sub, under, + ordo, order), + -al.] Of the classificatory rank or taxonomic value of a suborder; subordinate to an order, as a group or division of animals; or pertaining to a suborder.

subordinance (sub-ōr'di-nāns), n. [< subordinatio (ate) + -ance.] Same as subordinacy.

subordinancy (sub-ōr'di-nān-si), n. [As subordinance (see -cy).] 1. Subordinacy.—2. Subordinate places or offices collectively.

The subordinancy of the government changing hands so often.
Sir W. Temple.

subordinary (sub-ōr'di-nā-ri), n. In her., a bearing of simple figure, often appearing, but not considered so common or so important as one of the ordinaries. See ordinary, 9. Those bearings which are called ordinaries by some writers and not by others are called subordinaries by these latter: such are the pile, the inescutcheon, the bend sinister, the canton or quarter, the border, the orle, and the point.

subordinate (sub-ōr'di-nāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. subordinated, ppr. subordinating. [< ML. subordinatus, pp. of subordinare (> It. subordinare = Sp. Pg. subordinar = F. subordonner), place in a lower order, make subject, < L. sub, under, + ordinare, order, arrange: see ordinate, order, v.] 1. To place in an order or rank below something else; make or consider as of less value or importance: as, to subordinate temper to spiritual things.

So plans he,
Always subordinating (note the point!)
Revenge, the milder sin, to interest,
The meaner. Browning, Ring and Book, II. 186.

All that is merely circumstantial shall be subordinated to and in keeping with what is essential. J. Caird.

2. To make auxiliary or subservient to something else; put under control or authority; make subject.

The stars fight in their courses under his banner, and subordinate their powers to the dictates of his will.
South, Sermons, VII. 1.

The branch societies were subordinated to the central one. English Guilds (E. E. T. S.), p. cxxxv.

There is no known vertebrate in which the whole of the germ-product is not subordinated to a single axis. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 50.

Subordinating conjunction. See conjunction, 3.

subordinate (sub-ōr'di-nāt), a. and n. [= F. subordonné = Sp. Pg. subordinado = It. subordinato, < ML. subordinatus, place in a lower order: see subordinate, v.] 1. a. 1. In a lower order or class; occupying a lower position in a descending scale; secondary.

Life is the function of the animal's body considered as one whole, just as the subordinate functions are those of the body's several sets of organs. Mivart, Nature and Thought, p. 188.

2. Inferior in order, nature, dignity, power, rank, importance, etc.

It was subordinate, not enslaved, to the understanding. South.

The great . . . are naturally averse to a power raised over them, and whose weight must ever lean heaviest on the subordinate orders. Goldsmith, Vicar, xix.

Subordinate clause. See clause, 1.—Subordinate clause. (a) In gram., same as dependent clause. (See under clause, 3.) Such a clause has the value of either a noun, an adjective, or an adverb in some other clause to which it is subordinated, being introduced either by a relative pronoun or an adverb, or by a subordinating conjunction. (b) In law, a clause in a statute which, from its position or the nature of its substance, or especially by reason of grammatical relation as above indicated, must be deemed controlled or restrained in its meaning if it conflicts with another clause in the same statute.—Subordinate end. See end. = Syn. Subservient, minor.

II. n. One inferior in power, order, rank, dignity, office, etc.; one who stands in order or rank below another; often, one below and under the orders of another; in gram., a word or clause dependent on another.

His next subordinate,
Awakening, thus to him in secret spake.
Milton, P. L., v. 671.

subordinately (sub-ōr'di-nāt-li), adv. In a subordinate manner; in a lower order, class, rank, or dignity; as of inferior importance.

subordinateness (sub-ōr'di-nāt-nes), n. The state of being subordinate or inferior.

subordination (sub-ōr-di-nā'shōn), n. [= F. subordination = Sp. subordinación = Pg. subordinação = It. subordinazione, *< ML. subordinatio (n-), < subordinare, subordinate: see subordinate.] 1. The act of subordinating, subjecting, or placing in a lower order, rank, or position, or in proper degrees of rank; also, the state of being subordinate or inferior; inferiority of rank or dignity.

There being no Religion that tends so much to the peace of mens minds and the preservation of civil Societies as this [the Christian religion] doth; yet all this it doth by way of subordination to the great end of it, which is the promoting mens eternal happiness. Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. iv.

In his narrative a due subordination is observed: some transactions are prominent; others retire. Macaulay, History.

2†. Degree of lesser rank.

Persons who, in their several subordinations, would be obliged to follow the example of their superiors. Swift.

3. The state of being under control of government; subjection to rule; habit of obedience to orders.

Never, never more shall we behold that generous loyalty to rank and sex, that proud submission, that dignified obedience, that subordination of the heart, which kept alive, even in servitude itself, the spirit of an exalted freedom. Burke, Rev. in France.

They were without subordination, patience, industry, or any of the regular habits demanded for success in such an enterprise. Prescott, Verd. and Isa., II. 8.

subordinationism (sub-ōr-di-nā'shōn-izm), n. [< subordination + -ism.] In theol., the doctrine that the second and third persons of the Trinity are inferior to God the Father as regards (a) order only, or (b) as regards essence. The former doctrine is considered orthodox, the latter is that of the Arians and others.

Justin . . . did not hold a strict subordinationism. Liddon, Divinity of Our Lord, p. 430.

subordinative (sub-ōr'di-nā-tiv), a. [< subordinate + -ive.] Tending to subordinate; causing, implying, or expressing subordination or dependence.

suborn (sub-ōrn'), v. t. [< F. suborner = Sp. Pg. subornar = It. subornare, < L. subornare, furnish, equip, fit out, incite secretly, < sub, under, + ornare, fit out, provide, ornament.] 1†. To furnish; equip; adorn; ornament.

Evil things, being decked and suborned with the gay attire of goodly wordes, may easily deceive. Spenser, State of Ireland.

2. To furnish or procure unlawfully; procure by indirect means.

So men oppressed, when weary of their breath,
Throw off the burden, and suborn their death.
Dryden, Pal. and Arc., III. 1039.

3. To bribe or unlawfully procure to some act of wickedness—specifically, in law, to giving false testimony; induce, as a witness, to perjury.

He had put to death two of the kynes which were the chief authors of this new reulte, and had suborned Guarionexius and the other kynes to attempt the same. Peter Martyr (tr. in Eden's First Books on America, ed. [Arber, p. 84].)

By heaven, fond wretch, thou know'st not what thou speakest:
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In hateful practice. Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 106.

It was he indeed
B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

A faithless clerk, who had been suborned . . . to betray their consultations, was promptly punished. Bancroft, Hist. U. S., I. 148.

To bribe a trustee, as such, is in fact neither more nor less than to suborn him to be guilty of a breach or an abuse of trust. Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, [xvi. 27, note 3.]

subornation (sub-ōr-nā'shōn), n. [= F. subornation = Sp. subornación = Pg. subornação = It. subornazione, < ML. subordinatio (n-), < L. subornare, pp. subornatus, furnish, suborn: see suborn.] 1. The act of procuring wrongfully.—2. The act of procuring one by persuasion, bribery, etc., to do a criminal or bad action; specifically, in law, the crime of procuring perjured testimony; procuring a witness to commit the crime of perjury; more specifically called subornation of perjury.

The subornation of witnesses, or the corrupt sentence of a judge! Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. xvii.

Foul subornation is predominant. Shak., 2 Hen. VI., III. 1. 145.

suborner (sub-ōr'nēr), n. [< suborn + -er¹.] One who suborns; one who procures another to do a bad action, especially to take a false oath. Bacon, Charge at Session for the Verge.

subostracal (sub-ōs'trā-kāl), a. Situated under the shell: noting a dorsal cartilage of some cephalopods.

A thin plate-like sub-ostracal or (so-called) dorsal cartilage, the anterior end of which rests on and fits into the concave nuchal cartilage. Encyc. Brit., XVI. 675.

Subostracea (sub-ōs-trā'sō-ſhā), n. pl. [NL. (De Blainville), < L. sub, under, + NL. Ostracea.] A group of lamellibranchs or bivalve mollusks, so named from their relationship to the oyster family, including such forms as the thorn-oysters (Spondyliatæ), etc. See cut under Spondyliatæ.

subostracean (sub-ōs-trā'sō-an), a. and n. 1. a. Of or pertaining to the Subostracea.

II. n. A member of the Subostracea. suboval (sub-ō'vāl), a. Nearly or somewhat oval.

subovarian (sub-ō-vā'ri-an), a. Situated below the ovary; specifying certain plates of cystic crinoids.

subovate (sub-ō'vāt), a. Nearly or somewhat ovate.

subovoid (sub-ō'void), a. Somewhat or nearly ovoid.

suboxid, suboxide (sub-ōk'sid, -sid or -sīd), n. An oxid which contains less oxygen than the protoxid. [Now rare.]

subpallial (sub-pal'i-äl), a. Situated under the mantle or beneath the pallium of a mollusk: as, the subpallial space or chamber.

subpalmar (sub-pal'mät), a. Nearly or somewhat palmate.

subpanation (sub-pä-nä'shon), n. [< NL. subpanatio (n.), < subpanare*, < L. sub, under, + panis, bread: see *pain*². Cf. impanation.] In the theological controversies of the Reformation, a designation of the view that Christ is under the form of bread and wine in a localized or materialistic sense. See consubstantiation, impanation.

subparallel (sub-par'ä-läl), a. Nearly or not quite parallel.

subparietal (sub-pä-rí'e-täl), a. Situated beneath or below the parietal bone or lobe.—Subparietal sulcus, a small inconstant sulcus extending back from the callosomarginal sulcus at its angle.

subjectinate (sub-pek'ti-nät), a. Imperfectly pectinate, as antennae which exhibit a form between serrate and pectinate.

subpeduncular (sub-pë-dung'kü-lär), a. Situated below a peduncle of the cerebellum.—Subpeduncular lobe of the cerebellum. Same as floculus, 2.

subpedunculate (sub-pë-dung'kü-lät), a. Having a very short stem or peduncle; scarcely pedunculate; subpetiolate. See ent under Polistes.

subpellucid (sub-pe-lü'sid), a. Nearly or almost pellucid; somewhat pellucid or clear.

subpena, subpenäl. See subpena, subpenäl.

Subpentamera (sub-pen-tam'ë-rä), n. pl. [NL.] Same as Cryptopentamera or Pseudotetramera.

subpentamerous (sub-pen-tam'ë-rns), a. Same as cryptopentamerous or pseudotetramerous.

subpentangular (sub-pen-tang'gü-lär), a. Irregularly or imperfectly pentagonal; having five sides of different lengths, or five rounded-off angles.

subpericardial (sub-per-i-kär'di-äl), a. Situated or occurring beneath the pericardium.

subpericranial (sub-per-i-krä'ní-äl), a. Situated or occurring under the pericranium.

subperiosteal (sub-per-i-os'të-äl), a. Situated or occurring beneath the periosteum.—Subperiosteal amputation, an amputation in which the periosteum is dissected up from the bone before the bone is cut, so that the cut end of the bone may be covered by the flaps of periosteum.—Subperiosteal blastema, the osteogenic layer of the periosteum. Kolliker.

subperiosteally (sub-per-i-os'të-äl-i), adv. In a subperiosteal manner.

subperitoneal (sub-per'i-tö-në-äl), a. Situated beneath the peritoneum—that is, on its outer or attached surface.—Subperitoneal abscess, an abscess situated between the abdominal wall and the parietal peritoneum.—Subperitoneal fascia, the layer of areolar and fatty tissue attaching the peritoneum to the surfaces it covers.

subpermanent (sub-për'mä-nent), a. Somewhat permanent; remaining for a time, but with gradual loss of intensity: as, the subpermanent magnetism of iron.

It was impossible in many cases to avoid imparting subpermanent torsion. Proc. Roy. Soc., XXXVIII, 42.

subperpendicular (sub-për-peu-dik'ü-lär), n. A subnormal.

subpetiolar (sub-pet'i-ö-lär), a. In bot., situated under or within the base of the petiole, as the leaf-buds of the plane-tree (Platanus).

subpetiolate (sub-pet'i-ö-lät), a. 1. In bot., having a very short petiole.—2. In zool., somewhat petiolate, as an insect's abdomen; subpedunculate. See ent under Polistes.

subpharyngeal (sub-fä-rin'jê-äl), a. Situated beneath or below the pharynx, as a nervous ganglion or commissure.

subphratry (sub'frä'tri), n. A subdivision of a phratry. Encyc. Brit., XXIII, 474.

subphrenic (sub-fren'ik), a. Lying beneath the diaphragm.—Subphrenic abscess, an abscess between the diaphragm and the liver.

subphyllar (sub-fi'lär), a. Subordinate to a phylum in taxonomic rank; of the classificatory value of a subphylum.

subphyllum (sub-fi'lüm), n.; pl. subphylla (-lä). A prime division or main branch of a phylum; a group of a grade next below that of a phylum. Encyc. Brit., XXIV, 810.

subpia (sub-pí-äl), a. Situated beneath the pia mater.

subpilose (sub-pí-lös), a. In bot. and entom., thinly pilose or hairy.

subplantigrade (sub-plan'ti-gräd), a. Not quite plantigrade; walking with the heel a little raised.

subpleural (sub-plö'ral), a. Situated beneath the outer or attached side of the pleura.—Sub- pleural emphysema, that form of interstitial emphysema in which air is found in the subpleural connective tissue.

subplexal (sub-plek'säl), a. Lying under a plexus of the brain. Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, VIII, 145.

subplinth (sub'plinth), n. In arch., a second and lower plinth placed under the principal one in columns and pedestals.

subpena, subpena (sub-pë'nä or su-pë'nä), n. [*S*o called from the initial words of the writ in its original form, L. sub pana, 'under penalty': sub, under; panä, abl. of pana, pain, penalty: see *pain*².] In law, a writ or process commanding the attendance in a court of justice of the person on whom it is served, under a penalty. Specifically—(a) The process by which bills in equity are enforced; a writ, issued by chancery in the name of the sovereign or of the people, commanding the person complained of to appear and answer the matter alleged against him, and abide by the order or decree of the court, under penalty of a fine, etc. Hence—(b) In old Eng. law, a suit in equity. (c) A writ by which the attendance of witnesses is required: used now in all courts. If the writ requires the witness to bring writings, books, or the like with him, it is called a subpena duces tecum.

subpena, subpena (sub- or su-pë'nä), v. t. [< subpena, subpena, n.] To serve with a writ of subpena; command the attendance of in court by a legal writ: as, to subpena a witness.

My friend, who has a natural aversion to London, would never have come up, had he not been subpenaed to it, as he told me, in order to give his testimony for one of the rebels. Addison, Freeholder, No. 44.

subpenäl, subpenäl (sub- or su-pë'näl), a. [< subpena + -äl.] Subject to penalty.

These meetings of Ministers must be authoritative, not arbitrary, not precarious, but subpenäl. Ep. Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 483. (Davies.)

subpolar (sub-pö'lär), a. 1. Under or below the poles of the earth in latitude; adjacent to the poles.—2. Beneath the pole of the heavens, as a star at its lowest culmination.

By a subpolar altitude of the sun, the latitude of 80° 02' N. was obtained (August 14th, 1872). C. F. Hall, Polar Expedition, p. 408.

subpolygonal (sub-pö-lig'ö-näl), a. Nearly or somewhat polygonal.

subporphyritic (sub-pö-fir-it'ik), a. Having in an imperfect degree the character of porphyry.

subprefect (sub'prë'fekt), n. [= F. sous-préfet; as sub + prefect.] An assistant or deputy prefect; specifically, in France, an official charged with the administration of an arrondissement under the immediate authority of the prefect of the department.

subprefecture (sub'prë'fëk-tür), n. A part or division of a prefecture; also, the office or authority of a subprefect.

subprehensile (sub-prë-hen'sil), a. Somewhat prehensile, as a monkey's tail; imperfectly or partially fitted for prehension.

subpreputial (sub-prë-pü'shal), a. Placed between the prepuce and the glans penis.—Subpreputial calculus, a calculus consisting of calcified smegma between the prepuce and the glans penis.

subprimary (sub-pri'mä-ri), a. Under the primary: as, a subprimary school.

subprincipal (sub'prin'si-päl), n. 1. An under-principal.—2. In corp., an auxiliary rafter, or principal brace.—3. In organ-building, a subclass of the open diapason class.

subprior (sub'pri'ör), n. [< ML. subprior, < sub, under, + prior, prior.] Eccles., the vicar-general of a prior; a claustral officer who assists the prior.

subprostatic (sub-pros-tat'ik), a. Situated under the prostate gland. Rarely, also, hypoprostatic.

subprovince (sub'prov'ins), n. A prime division of a province; in zoögeog., a division subordinate to a subregion.

subpubescent (sub-pü-bes'ent), a. In entom. and bot., slightly or somewhat pubescent.

subpubic (sub-pü'bik), a. Situated beneath the pubes of man, or in the corresponding position in other animals.—Subpubic arch, the arch or angle formed by the junction of the ascending rami of the pubes, broadly arched in the female, more angular and contracted in the male.—Subpubic hernia, obturator hernia. See obturator.—Subpubic ligament, a thick triangular fibrous arch lying along the lower margin of the pubic bones and binding them together.

subpulmonary (sub-pul'mö-nä-ri), a. Situated under (in man) or ventrad of the lungs.

subpurchaser (sub'për'ehä-sër), n. A purchaser who buys from a purchaser.

subpyramidal (sub-pi-ram'i-däl), a. Approximately pyramidal. Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLV, 51.—Subpyramidal fossa, a depression in the inner wall of the middle ear, below the pyramid and behind the fenestra rotunda.

subquadrangular (sub-kwed-rang'gü-lär), a. Approaching an oblong form; in form between quadrangular and oval.

subquadrate (sub-kwod'rät), a. Nearly but not quite square; squarish. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 238.

subquadruple (sub-kwod'rö-pl), a. Containing one part of four; having the ratio 1:4.

subquintuple (sub-kwin'tü-pl), a. Containing one part of five; having the ratio 1:5.

subradular (sub-rad'ü-lär), a. Situated beneath the radula: specifying a membrane forming part of the odontophore of gastropods.

subramose, subramous (sub-rä'mös, -mus), a. 1. In bot., slightly ramose: having few branches.—2. In entom., noting antennae whose joints are furnished with short branches.

subrational (sub-rash'on-äl), a. Almost rational.—Subrational function. If X is a rational function of x, and Y a rational function of y, then the equation X = Y constitutes y as a subrational function of x.

subreader (sub'rö'dër), n. An under-reader in the inns of court. [Eng.] subrectangular (sub-rek-tang'gü-lär), a. Approaching a right angle in form; a little obtuse or acute.

subrector (sub'rek'tör), n. A rector's deputy or substitute.

subregion (sub'rö'jën), n. A subdivision of a region; in zoögeog., a faunal area subordinate in extent to one called a region.—Guinean, Mediterranean, Mongolian, Mozambican subregion. See the adjectives.—New Zealand subregion, a division of the great Australian region, probably more isolated, both in time and in space, than any other faunal area of the globe. It consists of the three large islands of New Zealand, with numerous satellites. The fauna is remarkable in the almost entire absence of indigenous mammals, and the presence of many peculiar avian and reptilian types, some of which, like the moas, are recently extinct, and others of which seem doomed to extinction in the near future.—Papuan, Polynesian, Siberian, etc., subregion. See the adjectives.

subregional (sub-rë'jon-äl), a. [< subregion + -äl.] Of or pertaining to a subregion: as, subregional divisions; subregional distribution of animals or plants.

subreniform (sub-ren'i-förm), a. Shaped somewhat like the human kidney.

subrent (sub-rent'), v. t. To sublease.

subreption (sub-rep'tshën), n. [= F. subreption = Sp. subrepcion = Pg. subreção, < L. subreptio (n.), subreptio (n.), a stealing, a purloining, < subripere, surripere, pp. subreptus, surreptus, take away secretly, steal, < sub, under, + rapere, take away, snatch: see rapt.] 1. The act of obtaining a favor by surprise or by suppression or fraudulent concealment of facts.

Lest there should be any subreption in this sacred business. Ep. Hall, A Modest Offer.

2. In Scots law, the obtaining of gifts of escheat, etc., by concealing the truth. Compare obreption, 2.

subreptitious (sub-rep-tish'us), a. Same as surreptitious.

subreptitiously (sub-rep-tish'us-li), adv. Same as surreptitiously.

subreptive (sub-rep'tiv), a. [< L. subreptivus, subreptivus, false, fraudulent, < subreptus, surreptus, pp. of subripere, surripere, take away secretly, steal: see subreption.] Surreptitious.

Many conceptions arise in our minds from some obscure suggestion of experience, and are developed to inference after inference by a secret logic, without any clear consciousness either of the experience that suggests or of the reason that develops them. These conceptions—of which there are no small number—may be called subreptive.

Kant, tr. in E. Caird's Philos. of Kant, p. 151.

subresin (sub'rez'in), n. That part of a resin which is soluble only in boiling alcohol, and is precipitated again as the alcohol cools, forming pseudo-crystals.

subretinal (sub-ret'i-näl), a. Lying beneath the retina.

subretractile (sub-rë-trak'til), a. Somewhat retractile; noting the legs of an insect which can be folded against the body, but do not fit into grooves of the lower surface.

subrhomboidal (sub-rom-boi'däl), a. Somewhat rhomboidal or diamond-shaped.

subrigid (sub-rij'id), a. Somewhat rigid or stiff.

subriguous (sub-rij'ü-us), a. [< L. subriguus, subriguus, watered, < sub, under, + riguus, that waters or irrigates, < rigare, wet, moisten.] Watered or wet beneath; well-watered. Blount, Glossographia.

subrogate (sub'rö-gät), v. t.: pret. and pp. subrogatus, subrogatus, pp. of subrogare, subrogare (> It. surrogare = Sp. Pg. subrogar = F. subroger), put in another's place, substitute: see surrogate.] To put in the place of another; substitute. See surrogate. Ser. Taylor, Holy Dying, iv. 8.

subrogation (sub-rō-gā'shōn), n. [= F. subrogation = Sp. subrogación = Pg. subrogação = It. surrogazione, < ML. subrogatio (-n-), substitution, < L. subrogare, surrogare, substitute: see subrogate.] 1. In law, the act or operation of law in vesting a person who has satisfied, or is ready to satisfy, a claim which ought to be borne by another with the right to hold and enforce the claim against such other for his own indemnification.

Subrogation is "purely an equitable principle, disregarding forms, and aiming to do exact justice by placing one who has been compelled to pay the debt of another as near as possible in the position of him to whom the payment was made." Bartoa.

2. In a general sense, succession of any kind, whether of a person to a person, or of a person to a thing.

sub rosa (sub rō'zā). [L.: sub, under; rosā, abl. of rosa, a rose.] Under the rose; privately. The rose is the emblem of silence.

subsacral (sub-sā'krāl), a. Situated below (ventral of) the sacrum; placed in relation with the venter or concavity of the sacrum; presacral (in man): as, subsacral foramina; subsacral divisions of nerves.

subsaline (sub-sā-lin' or -sā'lin), a. Moderately saline or salt.

subsalt (sub-sālt), n. In chem., a basic salt; a salt in which two or more equivalents of the base, or molecules of the metallic oxid, are combined with one of the acids radical, as mercurous subacetate, Hg₂(C₂H₃O₂)₂, or cuprous chlorid, Cu₂Cl₂.

subsannation (sub-sa-nā'shōn), n. [< LL. subsannare, pp. subsannatus, moek, < L. sub, under, + sannare, mock, < sanna, < Gr. σάρναξ, a mocking grimace.] Derision; scorn; moekery; dishonor.

Idolatry is as absolute a subsannation and villification of God as malice could invent.

Dr. H. More, Mystery of Iniquity, I. v. § 11.

subsaturated (sub-sat'ū-rā-ted), a. Not completely saturated.

subsaturation (sub-sat'ū-rā'shōn), n. The condition of being subsaturated.

subscapular (sub-skāp'ū-lār), a. and n. 1. a.

In anat.: (a) Occupying the under surface of the scapula; of or pertaining to that side of the shoulder-blade which presents to the ribs. (b) Running under or below the scapula, as a vessel or nerve.—Subscapular aponeurosis, the subscapular fascia.—Subscapular artery, (a) The largest branch of the axillary artery, passing along the lower border of the scapula. (b) A small branch of the supra-scapular artery.—Subscapular fascia. See fascia.—Subscapular fossa. See fossa.—Subscapular muscle, the subscapularis.—Subscapular nerve, one of three branches of the brachial plexus: (a) The upper supplies the subscapular muscle; (b) the lower supplies the teres major muscle; (c) the long or middle supplies the latissimus dorsi, running in the course of the subscapular artery.—Subscapular region. See region.—Subscapular vein, a lateral tributary of the axillary vein.

2. n. A subscapular vessel or nerve, and especially the subscapular muscle. See subscapularis.

subscapularis (sub-skāp'ū-lā'ris), n.; pl. subscapularcs (-rēz). [NL.: cf. subscapular.] A muscle arising from the venter of the scapula, and inserted into the lesser tuberosity of the humerus.—Subscapularis minor, an anomalous muscle in man, occurring about once in eight subjects, having its origin on the axillary border of the scapula and its insertion above that of the teres major. Also called subscapulothoracalis, infraspinatus secundus.

subscapulary (sub-skāp'ū-lā-ri), a. Same as subscapular.

subsclerotic (sub-sklē-rot'ik), a. Beneath the sclerotic.—Subsclerotic dropsy, a morbid collection of fluid between the choroid and sclerotic coats of the eye.

subscribable (sub-skrī'ba-bl), a. [< subscribere + -able.] Capable of being subscribed. Coleridge.

subscribe (sub-skrīb'), v.; pret. and pp. subscribed, pp. subscribing. [= F. souscrire = Sp. subscribir = Pg. subscriver = It. soscrivere, < L. subscribere, write under, write below, sign one's name, < sub, under, + scribere, write: see scribe.] 1. trans. 1. To write beneath: said of what is so written or of the handwriting.

Ador. You'll subscribe Your hand to this?

Camd. And justify 't with my life.

Massinger, Guardian, iii. 3.

I saw in the Court of the . . . Senate house a goodly statue, . . . with an honourable Elogium subscribed underneath the same.

Coryat, Crudities, I. 59.

Hence—2. To sign with one's own hand.

Let your Friend to you subscribe a Female Name. Congreve, tr. of Ovid's Art of Love.

By extension—3. To give consent to, as to something written, or to bind one's self to, by writing one's name beneath: as, to subscribe a covenant or contract. In law subscribe implies a written or printed signature at the end of a document. See sign, 2.

The Commons would . . . have freed the Clergy from subscribing those of the Thirty-nine Articles which related to discipline and Church government.

E. A. Abbott, Bacon, p. 16.

4. To attest by writing one's name beneath.

At last, after many Debatings and Demurs, the Archbishop yields to this also, and subscribes the Ordinance, and sets his Hand unto it. Baker, Chronicles, p. 57.

This message was subscribed by all my chief tenants. Swift, Story of the Injured Lady.

5. To promise to give or pay, by writing one's name under a written or printed agreement: as, each subscribed $10.—6. To resign; transfer by signing to another.

The king gone to-night? subscribed his power? Shak., Lear, I. 2. 24.

7. To write down or characterize as.

Claudio undergoes my challenge; and either I must shortly hear from him, or I will subscribe him a coward. Shak., Much Ado, v. 2. 59.

He who would take Orders must subscribe himself slave, and take an oath withal, which, unless he took with a conscience that would reach, he must either strait perjure, or split his faith.

Milton, Church-Government, ii., Int.

II. intrans. 1. To promise a certain sum verbally, or by signing an agreement; specifically, to undertake to pay a definite amount, in a manner or on conditions agreed upon, for a special purpose: as, to subscribe for a newspaper or for a book (which may be delivered in instalments); to subscribe to a series of entertainments; to subscribe for railway stock; also, to contribute money to any enterprise, benevolent object, etc. In law the word implies that the agreement is made in writing.

This prints my letters, that expects a bribe, And others roar aloud, "Subscribe, subscribe!" Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 114.

"Yes, I paid it, every farthing," replied Squeers, who seemed to know the man he had to deal with too well to suppose that any blinking of the question would induce him to subscribe towards the expenses.

Dickens, Nicholas Nickleby, xxxiv.

Mrs. H., who, being no great reader, contented herself with subscribing to the Book-Club.

Bulwer, My Novel, i. 12.

2. To give consent; assent as if by signing one's name.

We will all subscribe to thy advice. Shak., Tit. And., iv. 2. 130.

So spake, so wish'd, much-humbled Eve; but fate Subscribed not. Milton, P. L., xi. 182.

The foundations of religion are already established, and the principles of salvation subscribed unto by all.

Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, ii. 3.

The conclusion of the poem is more particular than I would choose publicly to subscribe to.

Walpole, Letters, II. 37.

3. To yield; submit.

For Hector in his blaze of wrath subscribes To tender objects. Shak., T. and C., iv. 5. 105.

Subscribing witness. See witness.

subscriber (sub-skrī'bēr), n. [< subscribere + -er.] One who subscribes, in any sense of that word.—The subscriber, the one writing or speaking. [Colloq.]

subscript (sub'skript), a. and n. [= F. souscrit = Sp. suscrito = It. soscritto, < L. subscriptus, pp. of subscribere, write underneath or below; see subscribe.] 1. a. Written beneath: as, the Greek iota (i) subscript, so written since the twelfth century in the improper diphthongs a (āi), η (ηi), ω (ωi): opposed to adscript (as in 'A', 'H', 'Ω'). This i had become mute by about 200 B. c., and was sometimes written (adscript), sometimes omitted.

II. n. Something written beneath. [Rare.]

Behy postscripts or subscripts, your translators neither made them nor recommended them for Scripture.

Bentley, Free-Thinking, § 37.

subscription (sub-skrip'shōn), n. [= F. souscription = Sp. subscripción = Pg. subscrição = It. soscrizione, < L. subscriptio (-n-), anything written underneath, a signature. < subscribere, pp. subscriptus, write under, subscribe: see subscript.] 1. The act of subscribing, in any sense of that word.—2. That which is subscribed. (a) Anything underwritten.

The cross we had seen in the subscription. Bacon, New Atlantis.

(b) The signature attached to a paper. In law subscription implies written signature at the end of a document. See signature, 3, sign, v., 2. (c) Consent, agreement, or attestation given by signature.

The more ye light of ye gospel grew, ye more ye urged their subscriptions to these corruptions. Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 5.

(d) A sum subscribed; the amount of sums subscribed: as, an individual subscription, or the whole subscription, to a fund.

3. A formal agreement to make a payment or payments. See subscribe, v. i., 1.

Where an advance has been made or an expense or liability incurred by others in consequence of a subscription, before notice given of a withdrawal, the subscription becomes obligatory, provided the advances were authorized by a reasonable dependence on the subscription.

Anderson, Dict. of Law, p. 986.

4. Submission; obedience.

I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children, You owe me no subscription. Shak., Lear, iii. 2. 18.

[The word subscription is also used attributively, especially as noting what is done by means of the subscribing of money or by money subscribed.

The singers were all English; and here we have the commencement of the subscription opera.

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 29.]

subscriptive (sub-skrip'tiv), a. [< subscript + -ive.] Of or pertaining to a subscription or signature.

I made the messenger wait while I transcribed it. I have endeavoured to imitate the subscriptive part.

Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, VIII. 78. (Davies.)

subscripture (sub'skrip'tūr), n. A subordinate or lesser scripture. Sir W. Jones, Dissertations Relating to Histories, etc., of Asia, p. 401. [Rare.]

subsecive (sub'sē-siv), a. [< L. subsecivus, more prop. subsecivus, transposed subsecivus, succisivus, that is cut off and left remaining (in surveying lands), hence, left over, remaining (horæ subsecivæ, tempora subseciva, odd hours, spare time). < subsecare, cut away, < sub, under, + secare, cut; see scant.] Remaining; extra; spare. [Rare.]

Surely at last those "subsecive hours" were at hand in which he might bring to a fruitful outcome the great labour of two-and-thirty years, his never-to-be-written "History of Portugal." Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLI. 836.

subsection (sub'sek'shōn), n. 1. A part or division of a section: as, a subsection of a learned society; also, the act of subdividing a section.—2. In bot. and zool., a division of a genus of less extent than a section, yet above and including one or more species.

subsecute (sub'sē-kūt), v. t. [< L. subsecutus, pp. of subsequi, follow close after: see subsequent.] To follow so as to overtake; follow closely. Hall, Rich. III., an. 3.

subsecutive (sub-sek'ū-tiv), a. [< subsecute + -ive.] Following in a train or succession. [Rare.] Imp. Dict.

subsegment (sub'seg'mēnt), n. In entom., same as subjoint.

subsellium (sub-sel'i-um), n.; pl. subsellia (-i). [< L. subsellium, bench, seat, < sub, under, + sella, a seat, a chair: see sell.] Same as miserere, 2.

subsemifusate (sub-sem-i-fū'sā), n. In medieval musical notation, a thirty-second note.

subsemitone (sub'sem'i-tōn), n. In medieval music, same as leading note (which see, under leading), or subtonic.

subsensation (sub'sen-sā'shōn), n. A moderate or lesser sensation; a sensation under or beside the obvious one. [Rare.]

As we followed the fortunes of the king, we should all at the while have been haunted by a subsensation of how, in Rossetti's weird phrase, his death was "growing up from his birth." The Academy, March 29, 1890, p. 218.

subsensible (sub-sen'si-bl), a. Deeper than the range of the senses; too profound for the senses to reach or grasp. Compare supersensible.

Through scientific insight we are enabled to enter and explain that subsensible world into which all natural phenomena strike their roots. Tyndall.

subseptuple (sub-sep'tū-pl), a. Containing one of seven parts; having the ratio 1:7.

subsequence (sub'sē-kwēns), n. [< subsequen(t) + -ee.] The state or act of being subsequent or following.

By which faculty [reminiscence] we are . . . able to take notice of the order of precedence and subsequence in which they are past.

N. Grew, Cosmologia Sacra, ii. 3. (Richardson.)

subsequency (sub'sē-kwēn-si), n. [As subsequence (see -cy).] Same as subsequence.

Why should we question the heliotrope's subsequency to the course of the sun?

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 336.

subsequent (sub'sē-kwent), a. [L. subsequens (-t-), ppr. of subsequi, follow close after, < sub, under, after, + sequi, follow: see sequent.] 1. Following in time; happening or existing at any later time, indefinitely: as, subsequent events; subsequent ages.

This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster. Swift.

[His (Leocleas's) bronze group of the eagle carrying up Ganymede was a bold invention, and as such was duly appreciated, if we may judge from subsequent repetitions of the motive. A. S. Murray, Greek Sculpture, II, 323.

2. Following in the order of place or succession; succeeding: as, a subsequent clause in a treaty.

The subsequent words come on before the precedent vanish. Bacon.

3. Following as a consequence: as, a subsequent illness after exposure.

On any physical hypothesis of the formation of the universe . . . there ought to have been diffused light first, and the aggregation of this about the central luminary as a subsequent process. Dawson, Nature and the Bible, p. 64.

Condition subsequent. See condition, 8 (a).

subsequently (sub'sē-kwent-li), adv. In a subsequent manner; at a later time.

subserous (sub-sē-rus), a. 1. Somewhat serous or watery, as a secretion.—2. Situated or occurring beneath a serous membrane.—Subserous cystitis, cystitis affecting chiefly the subserous tissue of the urinary bladder.—Subserous tissue, the areolar connective tissue situated beneath a serous membrane.

subseriate (sub-ser'āt), a. Somewhat or slightly serrate; serrulate.

subserve (sub-serv'), v. [L. subservire, serve, < sub, under, + servire, serve: see serve.] I. trans. 1. To serve in subordination; be subservient, useful, or instrumental to; promote: scarcely to be distinguished now from serve.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glauville.

2. To avail: used reflexively. [Rare.]

I not merely subserve myself of them, but employ them. Coleridge, Literary Remains, I, 373. (Hall.)

II. intrans. To serve in an inferior capacity; be subservient or subordinate.

Not made to rule,
But to subserve where wisdom bears command!
Milton, S. A., I, 57.

subservience (sub-sēr'vi-ēns), n. [L. subservient (-t-) + -cc-.] Same as subserviency.

There is an immediate and agile subservience of the spirits to the empire of the soul.

Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

subserviency (sub-sēr'vi-ēn-si), n. [As subservience (see -cy).] 1. The state or character of being subservient, in any sense.

A seventh property, therefore, to be wished for in a mode of punishment is that of subserviency to reformation, or reforming tendency.

Bentham, Introd. to Morals and Legislation, xv, 15.

2. Specifically, obsequiousness; truckling.

There was a freedom in their subserviency, a nobleness in their very degradation. Macaulay, Milton.

subservient (sub-sēr'vi-ēnt), a. [L. subservient (-t-), ppr. of subservire, serve: see subserve.] 1. Useful as an instrument or means to promote an end or purpose; serviceable; being of service.

There is a most accurate, learned, & critical Dictionary, . . . explaining . . . not only the terms of architecture, but of all those other arts that write upon & are subservient to her. Evelyn, To Mr. Place (Bookseller).

All things are made subservient to man. Bacon, Physical Fables, II., Expl.

The state . . . is not a partnership in things subservient only to the gross animal existence of a temporary and perishable nature. Burke, Rev. in France.

2. Acting as a subordinate instrument; fitted or disposed to serve in an inferior capacity; subordinate; hence, of persons and conduct, truckling; obsequious.

The foreigner came here poor, beggarly, cringing, and subservient, ready to doff his cap to the meanest native of the household. Scott, Ivanhoe, XXI.

Members of Congress are but agents, . . . as much subservient, as much dependent, as willingly obedient, as any other . . . agents and servants. D. Webster, Speech, Pittsburg, July, 1833.

subserviently (sub-sēr'vi-ēnt-li), adv. In a subservient manner; with subserviency.

subsesquialterate (sub-ses-kwi-al'tēr-āt), a. Having the ratio 2:3.

subsesquiterial (sub-ses-kwi-tēr'shāl), a. Having the ratio 3:4.

sessile (sub-ses'il), a. 1. In bot., not quite sessile; having a very short footstalk.—2. In zool., not quite sessile, as an insect's abdomen; subpetiolate. See cut under Polistes.

subsextuple (sub-seks'tū-pl), a. Containing one part in six; having the ratio 1:6.

subside (sub-sid'), v. t.; pret. and pp. subsided, ppr. subsiding. [L. subsidere, sit down, sink down, settle, remain, lie in wait, < sub, under, + sedere, sit: see sedent, sit.] 1. To sink or fall to the bottom; settle, as leas from a state of motion or agitation.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specific gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

2. To cease from action, especially violent action or agitation; fall into a state of quiet; be calmed; become tranquil; abate: as, the storm subsided; passion subsides.

In every page of Paterculus we read the swell and agitation of waters subsiding from a deluge. De Quincey, Style, III.

By degrees Rip's awe and apprehension subsided. Irving, Sketch-Book, p. 55.

Old fears subside, old hatreds melt. Whittier, Charming.

3. To fall to a lower level; tend downward; sink; fall; contract after dilatation.

Small air-bladders, dilatible and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admission of Air, and to subside at the Expulsion of it. Arbuthnot, Aliments, II.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weights the men's wits against the lady's hair; . . .
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside.
Pope, R. of the L., v. 74.

The coast both south and north of Callao has subsided. Darwin, Geol. Observations, II, 272.

4. To stop talking; be quiet; be less conspicuous: as, you had better subside. [Collog.] = Syn. 2. Abate, Subside, Intermit (see abate); retire, lull.

subsidence (sub-sī'dēns or sub'si-dēns), n. [L. subsidere + -ence.] The act or process of subsiding, in any sense of the verb subside.

With poetry it was rather better. He delighted in the swell and subsidence of the rhythm, and the happily-recurring rhyme. Hawthorne, Seven Gables, x.

In certain large areas where subsidence has probably been long in progress, the growth of the corals has been sufficient to keep the reefs up to the surface. Darwin, Coral Reefs, p. 104.

= Syn. Ebb, decrease, diminution, abatement.

subsidiency (sub-sī'dēn-si or sub'si-dēn-si), n. [L. subsidere + -ency.] Subsidence. T. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

subsidiarily (sub-sid'i-ā-ri-li), adv. In a subsidiary manner. Amer. Jour. Philol., IX, 147.

subsidiary (sub-sid'i-ā-ri), a. and n. [= F. subsidiaire = Sp. Pg. subsidiario = It. sussidiario, < L. subsidiarius, belonging to a reserve, < subsidium, a reserve, help, relief: see subsidy.] I. a. 1. Held ready to furnish assistance; held as a reserve.

There is no error more frequent in war than, after brisk preparations, to halt for subsidiary forces. Bacon, Fable of Persens.

2. Lending assistance; aiding; assistant; furnishing help; ancillary.

We must so far satisfy ourselves with the word of God as that we depise not those other subsidiary helps which God in his church hath afforded us. Donne, Sermons, II.

No ritual is too much, provided it is subsidiary to the inner work of worship; and all ritual is too much unless it ministers to that purpose. Gladstone, Might of Right, p. 222.

3. Furnishing supplementary supplies: as, a subsidiary stream.—4. Relating or pertaining to a subsidy; founded on or connected with a subsidy or subsidies: as, a subsidiary treaty.—Subsidiary note. Same as accessory note (which see, under note).—Subsidiary quantity or symbol, in math., a quantity or symbol which is not essentially a part of a problem, but is introduced to help in the solution. The phrase is particularly applied to angles in trigonometrical investigations.—Subsidiary troops, troops of one nation hired by another for military service.

II. n.: pl. subsidiaries (-riz). 1. One who or that which contributes aid or additional supplies; an auxiliary; an assistant. Hammond.—2. In music, a subordinate theme or subject, especially in an episode of an extended work.

subsidize (sub'si-dīz), v. t.; pret. and pp. subsidized, ppr. subsiding. [L. subsidium + -ize.] To furnish with a subsidy; purchase the assistance of by the payment of a subsidy; hence, in recent use, to secure the coöperation of by bribing; buy over. Also spelled subsidise.

He obtained a small supply of men from his Italian allies, and subsidized a corps of eight thousand Swiss, the strength of his infantry. Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., II, 14.

Pietro could never save a dollar? Straight He must be subsidized at our expense. Browning, Ring and Book, I, 155.

subsidy (sub'si-di), n.: pl. subsides (-dīz). [= F. subsidie = Pr. subsidi = Sp. Pg. subsidio

= It. sussidio, help, aid, subsidy, < L. subsidium, troops stationed in reserve, auxiliary forces, help in battle, in gen. help, aid, relief, < subsistere, sit down, settle, remain, lie in wait: see subside.] An aid in money; pecuniary aid.

Out of small earnings [he] managed to transmit no small comforts and subsides to old parents living somewhere in Munster. Thackeray, Philip, xvi.

Especially—(a) In Eag. hist., an aid or tax formerly granted by Parliament to the crown for the urgent occasions of the realm, and levied on every subject of ability according to the value of his lands or goods; a tax levied on a particular occasion.

That made us pay . . . one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy. Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv, 7, 25.

Tonnage and poundage was granted for a year, and a new and complicated form of subsidy was voted. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 334.

(b) A sum paid, often according to treaty, by one government to another, sometimes to secure its neutrality, but more frequently to meet the expenses of carrying on a war.

The continental allies of England were eager for her subsides, and lukewarm as regarded operations against the common enemy. Sir E. Creasy, Hist. Eng., I, xiii. (Latham.)

(c) Any direct pecuniary aid furnished by the state to private industrial undertakings, or to eleemosynary institutions. Such aid includes bounties on exports, those paid to the owners of ships for running them, and donations of land or money to railroad, manufacturing, theatrical, and other enterprises.

A postal subsidy . . . is simply a payment made for the conveyance, under certain specified conditions as to time and speed, of postal matter. H. Faucett, Free Trade and Protection (ed. 1881), p. 29.

It seems clear, therefore, that subsides as a means of restoring American shipping cannot be made the policy of the United States.

D. A. Wells, Our Merchant Marine, p. 141. = Syn. Subsidy, Subvention. In the original and essential meaning of a government grant in aid of a commercial enterprise, these terms are substantially equivalent; but two circumstances lead to some difference in common usage.

(a) Such grants being rarely, if ever, made in England or the United States except in aid of the mercantile marine, the establishment of lines of transportation, or the like, subsidy is used more commonly than subvention in reference to such enterprises, while, such grants being frequent in France in aid of the drama and the press, etc., the word subvention is used more commonly than subsidy in application to enterprises connected with literature and the arts. (b) Writers who oppose all such uses of public funds commonly prefer to characterize them as subsides, while those who approve of them commonly prefer the term subvention.

subsign (sub-sin'), v. t. [L. subsignare, pp. subsignatus, write beneath, subscribe, sign, < sub, under, + signare, set a mark upon, sign: see sign.] 1. To sign; sign under; write beneath; subscribe.

A letter of the Sophie, . . . subsigned with the hands both of the Sophie & his Secretary. Hakluyt's Voyages, I, 394.

2. To assign by signature to another.

His [Philip III.] rents and custome [were] subsigned, for the most part, for money borrowed. Sir C. Cornwallis, quoted in Motley's Hist. Netherlands, IV, 280.

subsignation (sub-sig-nā'shōn), n. [L. subsignatio (-n-), a signature, < subsignare, sign: see subsign.] The act of writing the name or its equivalent under something for attestation; the name so written. [Obsolete or rare.]

The epistle with subsignation of the scribe and notary. Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist (1616), p. 300. (Latham.)

For a good while after the Conquest the usage of subsignation with crosses was sometimes retained. Madox, Formulare Anglicanum (ed. 1702), p. xxvii.

subsimious (sub-sim'i-us), a. Nearly simious or monkey-like: as, "a subsimious absurdity." Swinburne. [Rare.]

subsist (sub-sist'), v. [F. subsister = Sp. Pg. subsistir = It. sussistere, sossistere, < L. subsistere, take a stand or position, stand still, stop, stay, remain, continue, < sub, under, + sistere, cease to stand, place: see sist. Cf. consist, desist, exist, insist, persist.] I. intrans. 1. To remain; continue; abide; retain the existing state.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve. Milton, P. L., ix, 359.

It is a pity the same fashion don't subsist now. Waipole, Letters, II, 62.

2. To have continued existence; exist.

Can the body Subsist, the soul departed? 'tis as easy As ! to live without you. Beau. and Fl., Custom of the Country, v, 4.

Those ideas which Plato sometimes contends to be substances, and to subsist alone by themselves. Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 499.

These enthusiasts do not scruple to avow their opinion that a state can subsist without any religion better than with one. Burke, Rev. in France.

3. To be maintained; be supported; live.

Had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity.
J. Atterbury.

4. To inhere; have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy. South.

II. trans. 1†. To keep in existence.

The old town [of Solvree] is thinly inhabited; the present city, which is a poor place, is to the west of it, and is chiefly subsisted by being a great thorough fare.

Pococke, Description of the East, II. ii. 139.

2. To feed; maintain; support with provisions.

I will raise one thousand men, subsist them at my own expense, and march myself at their head for the relief of Boston. Washington, quoted in Adams's Works, II. 360.

subsistence (sub-sis'tens), n. [= F. subsistance = Sp. Pg. subsistencia = It. sussistenza, < L. subsistentia, substance, reality, ML. also stability, < L. subsisten(t)-s, ppr. of subsistere, continue, subsist: see subsistent.] 1. Real being; actual existence.

Their difference from the Pharisees was about the future reward, which being denied, they by consequence of that error fell into the rest, to deny the Resurrection, the subsistence spiritual, &c. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 144.

2†. Continuance; continued existence.

This Liberty of the Subject concerns himself and the subsistence of his own regal power in the first place.

Milton, Eikonoklastes, xxvii.

Subsistence is perpetual existence.

Sveedenborg, Christian Psychol. (tr. by Gorman), p. 19.

3. That which exists or has real being.—4. The act or process of furnishing support to animal life, or that which is furnished; means of support; support; livelihood.

In China they speak of a Tree called Maguals, which affords not only good Drink, being pierced, but all Things else that belong to the subsistence of Man.

Howell, Letters, ii. 54.

Those of the Hottentots that live by the Dutch Town have their greatest subsistence from the Dutch, for there is one or more of them belonging to every house.

Dampier, Voyages, I. 540.

5. The state of being subsistent; inherence in something else: as, the subsistence of qualities in bodies.—Subsistence department, a military staff department in the United States army, which has charge of the purchase or procurement of all provisions for the supply of the army. Its chief officer is the commissary-general of subsistence, with the rank of brigadier-general.—Subsistence diet, the lowest amount of food on which life can be supported in health.—Subsistence stores (milit.), the food-supplies procured and issued for the support of an army. The phrase also covers the grain, hay, straw, or other forage supplied for the sustenance and bedding of animals intended for slaughter in order to provide an army with fresh meat.—Syn. 4. Sustenance, etc. See living.

subsistency (sub-sis'ten-si), n. [As subsistence (see -cy).] Same as subsistence.

A great part of antiquity contented their hopes of subsistency with a transmigration of their souls.

Sir T. Browne.

We know as little how the union is dissolved that is the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced. Glanville.

subsistent (sub-sis'tent), a. [= F. subsistant = Sp. Pg. subsistente = It. sussistente, < L. subsisten(t)-s, ppr. of subsistere, continue, subsist: see subsist.] 1. Continuing to exist; having existence; subsisting.

Such as deny there are spirits subsistent without bodies. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., i. 10.

2. Inherent.

These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

subsistential (sub-sis-ten'shal), a. Pertaining to subsistence; especially, in theol., pertaining to the divine subsistence or essence.

Having spoken of the effects of the attributes of God's essence us such, we must next speak of the effects of his three great attributes which some call subsistentia—that is, his omnipotency, understanding, and will.

Baxter, Divine Life, i. 7.

subsister (sub-sis'ter), n. [< subsist + -er.] One who subsists; specifically, one who is supported by others; a poor prisoner.

Like a subsister in a gown of rugge rent on the left shoulder, to sit singing the counter-tenor by the eage in Southwark.

Kind-Heart's Dreame (1592). (Halliwell.)

subsizar (sub'si'zär), n. An under-sizar; a student of lower standing than a sizar. Also spelled subsizer.

Friar Bacon's subsizer is the greatest blockhead in all Oxford.

Greene, Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay.

How lackeys and subsizers press

And scramble for degrees.

Bp. Corbet, Ans. to A Certain Poem.

subsoil (sub'soil), n. The under-soil: the bed or stratum of earth or earthy matter which lies immediately under the surface soil, and which is less finely disintegrated and contains less organic matter than that. When, as is often the case, it is densely compacted, it becomes what is frequently called hard-pan. In agriculture a great deal depends on the character of the subsoil, more especially as to whether it does or does not permit water to pass through it.

Subsoil is the broken-up part of the rocks immediately under the soil. Its character of course is determined by that of the rock out of which it is formed by subaerial disintegration. A. Geikie, Encyc. Brit., X. 237.

Subsoil-plow. See plow.

subsoil (sub'soil), v. t. [< subsoil, n.] In agri., to employ the subsoil-plow upon; plow up so as to cut into the subsoil.

The farmer drains, irrigates, or subsoils portions of it.

J. S. Mill.

subsoiler (sub'soi-lër), n. [< subsoil + -er.] One who or that which subsoils; an implement or part of an implement used in subsoiling. The Engineer, LXX. 472.

subsolar (sub-sō'lär), a. [< L. sub, under, + sol, the sun: see solar.] Being under the sun; terrestrial; specifically, being between the tropics. Fitzroy, Weather Book, p. 71.

subsolar† (sub'sō-lä-ri), a. Same as subsolar.

The causes and effects of all Things done upon this subsolar ball.

A. Brome, Paraphrase on Eccles., i.

subsolid (sub-sol'id), n. A solid incompletely inclosed.

subspatulate (sub-spat'ū-lät), a. Nearly or somewhat spatulate.

subspecies (sub'spō'shēz), n.; pl. subspecies. [< NL. subspecies, < L. sub, under, + species, species.] In zool. and bot., a variety of a species; a climatic or geographical race recognizably different from another, yet not specifically distinguished; a conspecies. The nearest synonym is race. (See race, n., 5 (a) (b).) Subspecies is a stronger and stricter word than variety, though nearly synonymous with the latter in its biological sense; it means decidedly more than strain, sport, or breed in like senses. The interpretation of subspecies and their actual handling in zoological and botanical taxonomy have been much mooted. Such forms are commonly regarded as nascent or incipient species (see species, 5) which have acquired subspecific characters under varying conditions of environment, and whose specific invalidity is determinable by the fact of their intergradation. See intergrade, v. i.

subspecific (sub-spō-sif'ik), a. Of the nature of a subspecies; not quite specific; conspecific. subspecifically (sub-spō-sif'i-kal-i), adv. As a subspecies. Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 819.

subspenoidal (sub-sfē-noi'däl), a. Situated beneath or on the under side of the sphenoid.

subsphere (sub'sfēr), n. A solid imperfectly or approximately spherical.

subspherical (sub-sfēr'i-käl), a. Imperfectly spherical; of a form approaching that of a sphere.

subspherically (sub-sfēr'i-käl-i), adv. In the form of a subsphere. Quar. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLIV. 150.

subspinous (sub-spi'nus), a. 1. Somewhat spinous or prickly; like a spine to some extent: as, subspinous hairs in the pelage of a mammal.

—2. Situated under (ventrad of) the spinal column; hypaxial with reference to the backbone; subvertebral.—3. Situated or occurring below, beneath, or on the under side of a spine, as (1) of a vertebra, or (2) of the scapula: infraspinous: as, a subspinous muscle (the infraspinatus).—Subspinous dislocation of the humerus, a dislocation in which the head of the humerus rests beneath the spine of the scapula.—Subspinous fossa, the fossa below the spine of the scapula; the infraspinous fossa.

subspirial (sub-spi'riäl), a. Somewhat spiral; especially, in conch., noting the opercula of some shells which are faintly or indistinctly marked on one side with a spiral line, or this line itself. See under operculum.

subsplenial (sub-splē'niäl), a. Situated under the splenium of the corpus callosum: noting certain cerebral gyres.

subst. An abbreviation of (a) substantive and (b) substitute.

substage (sub'stāj), n. An attachment to the compound microscope, placed beneath the ordinary stage, and used to support the achromatic condenser, the polarizing prism, etc. It is usually arranged with a rack-and-pinion movement, centering screws, etc., by which the position may be adjusted; and in the swinging substage there is an arched arm upon which the support holding the condenser can be moved, so as to give very oblique illumination when desired.

substalagmite (sub-stā-lag'mit), n. A name used by Nelson for the compact deposit of carbonate of lime, without crystalline structure, filling crevices in the soft calcareous sandstone of Bermuda. Similar deposits when crystalline are called by him stalagmite. Trans. Geol. Soc. London, 1849, V. 106.

substalagmitic (sub-stal-ag-mit'ik), a. [< substalagmite + -ic.] Relating to or consisting of substalagmite. Darwin, Geol. Observations, I. vii. 162.

substance (sub'stans), n. [< ME. substance, substantia, < OF. substance, substantia, F. substance = Sp. substancia, substancia = Pg. substancia = It. substanza, substanzia, < L. substantia, being, essence, material, < substān(t)-s, ppr. of substare, stand under or among, be present, hold out, < sub, under, + stare, stand: see stand.] 1. That which exists by itself, and in which accidents inhere; that which receives modifications, and is not itself a mode; that which corresponds, in the reality of things, to the subject in logic. Aristotle and Kant agree in making the conception of substance essentially the same as that of a subject of predication. But it is difficult to find a property by which substances may be recognized; for the above definition seems to afford none. Many philosophers hold that whatever is perdurable is substance. This, however, would include mechanical energy. Indeed, since every physical law can be stated in the form of an equation, and since that equation must have a constant term, it follows that every absolute uniformity of nature must consist in the perdurability of some quantity. Aristotle makes substances proper, called first substances, to be things individual; but this comports with few philosophical systems. Thus, in the medieval development of Aristotelianism, scientific propositions were regarded as universal statements concerning natures, so that the true subjects, or substances, were universal. Moreover, to make individuality the criterion of substance would seem to make space, as the source of individuality, the only first substance. At any rate, under that view, spatial positions would be substances in a preminent sense. Others, remarking that the parts of space are not distinct in themselves, apart from their relations to material things, make self-existence, or the being distinct from all other things, not by virtue of modifications or characters, but by the thing's own nature, or arbitrary extrusion of itself, to be the chief mark of a substance, which would thus be most simply defined as an independent entity. Substance and essence are nearly synonymous, except that the latter cannot appropriately be used to designate an individual and lifeless thing.

They add . . . that as he [Christ] coupled the substance of his flesh and the substance of bread together, so we together should receive both.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 67.

Since the substance of your perfect self

Is else devoted, I am but a shadow;

And to your shadow will I make true love.

Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 2. 124.

A substance is a being subsisting of itself and subject to accidents. To subsist by itself is nothing else than not to be in anything as in a subject; and it agrees to all substances, even to God, but to be subject to accidents only to finite; for God is not subject to accidents. Substance is either first or second. The first is a singular substance, or that which is not said of a subject, as Alexander, Bucephalus. The second is that which is said of a subject, as man, horse. For man is said of Alexander and Phillip, and horse of Bucephalus and Cyllarus.

Burgersdicius, tr. by a Gentleman, i. 4.

I confess there is another idea which would be of general use for mankind to have, as it is of general talk as if they had it; and that is the idea of substance, which we neither have, nor can have, by sensation or reflection. If nature took care to provide us any ideas, we might well expect they should be such as by our own faculties we cannot procure to ourselves: but we see on the contrary that since by those ways whereby our ideas are brought into our minds this is not, we have no such clear idea at all, and therefore signify nothing by the word substance but only an uncertain supposition of we know not what, i. e., of some thing whereof we have no particular distinct positive idea, which we take to be the substratum, or support, of those ideas we do know. Had the poor Indian philosopher (who imagined that the earth also wanted something to bear it up) but thought of this word substance, he needed not to have been at the trouble to find an elephant to support it, and a tortoise to support his elephant: the word substance would have done it effectually. And he that inquired might have taken it for as good an answer from an Indian philosopher, that substance, without knowing what it is, is that which supports the earth, as we take it for a sufficient answer and good doctrine from our European philosophers that substance, without knowing what it is, is that which supports accidents. So that of substance we have no idea of what it is, but only a confused obscure one of what it does.

Locke, Human Understanding, I. 4, § 18, and II. 13, § 19.

Substance, if we leave out the sensuous condition of permanence, would mean nothing but a something that may be conceived as a subject, without being the predicate of anything else.

Kant, Critique of Pure Reason, tr. by Muller, II. 130.

2. The real or essential part; the essence.

And wel I woot the substance is in me,

If any thing shal wel reported be.

Chaucer, Prolog. to Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 37.

Miserable bigots, . . . who hate sects and parties different from their own more than they love the substance of religion.

Burke, Rev. in France.

At the close of the [seventeenth] century, . . . the sovereign retained the shadow of that authority of which the Tudors had held the substance.

Macaulay, Sir William Temple.

All the forms are fugitive,

But the substances survive.

Emerson, Woodnotes, ii.

3. In theol., the divine being or essence, common to the three persons of the Trinity.

One Lord Jesus Christ, . . . being of one substance with the Father. Nicene Creed.

4†. The character of being a substance, in sense 1; substantiality.

Thou ground of our substance,
Continue on us thy pitous eyen cleare.
Chaucer, A. B. C., l. 87.

5. The meaning expressed by any speech or writing, or the purport of any action, as contradistinguished from the mode of expression or performance.

Now haue I here rehersid in substance
xv kynges, as shortly as I myght,
With ther powre and all ther hooles puyssaunce.
Generydes (E. E. T. S.), l. 1968.

Unto your grace do I in chief address
The substance of my speech.
Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 1. 32.

It seems swearing of Fealty was with the Scots but a Ceremony without Substance, as good as nothing.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 97.

6. Substantiation; that which establishes or gives firm support.

Faith is the substance (margin, ground or confidence) [assurance (margin, giving substance to), R. V.] of things hoped for.
Heb. xi. 1.

7. Any particular kind of corporeal matter; stuff; material; part; body; specifically, a chemical species.

Sir, there she stands.
If aught within that little seeming substance
. . . may fitly like your grace,
She's there, and she is yours. Shak., Lear, l. 1. 201.

All of one nature, of one substance bred.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., i. 1. 11.

Books are as meats and viands are, some of good, some of evil substance.
Milton, Areopagitica, p. 16.

It [chemistry] tells us that everything which exists here is really made up of one or more of only sixty-three different things; that the whole of the animal kingdom, the vegetable kingdom, the mineral kingdom, is made up of only sixty-three different substances.
J. N. Lockyer, Spect. Anal., p. 166.

8. Wealth; means; good estate: as, a man of substance.

His substance also was seven thousand sheep, and three thousand camels.
Job i. 3.

I did not think there had been a merchant
Liv'd in Italy of half your substance.
Webster, Devil's Law-Case, i. 1.

9†. Importanece.

And for as much as hit is don me to understande that there is a greet straungenesse betwix my right trusty frend John Radcliff and you, withoute any matier or cause of substance, as I am lerned.
Paston Letters, III. 426.

10†. The main part; the majority.

Finally, what wight that it witsyde,
It was for nocht — it moste ben, and sholde,
For substance of the parlement it wolde.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 217.

Colloid substance. See colloid.—Cortical substance of the kidney, the outer part of the kidney-substance, which contains the glomeruli.—Cortical substance of the teeth, the cementum of the teeth.—First substance, an individual thing.—Intervertebral substance. See intervertebral.—Nervous substance. See nervous.—Second substance, a natural class. See second.—Substance of Rolando. Same as substantia gelatinosa Rolandi.—Syn. 2. Fifth, gist, soul.

substante (sub'stans), v. t. [< substance, n.] To furnish with substance or property; enrich.
Chapman, Odyssey, iv.

substante (sub'stans-les), a. [< substance + -less.] Having no substance; unsubstantial.
Coleridge, Human Life.

substant (sub'stant), a. [< L. substan(t)-s, pp. of substare, be present, hold out; see substance.] Constituting substance. [Rare.]

Its [a glacier's] substant ice curls freely, molds, and breaks itself like water.
The Century, XXVII. 146.

substantia (sub-stan'shi-ä), n. [L.: see substance.] Substance: used chiefly in a few anatomical phrases.—Substantia cinerea gelatinosa. Same as substantia gelatinosa Rolandi.—Substantia eburnea, ossea, vitrea. See tooth.—Substantia feruginea, a group of pigmented ganglion-cells on either side of the middle line (just below the surface of the floor) of the anterior part of the fourth ventricle. Seen from the surface, it is the locus ceruleus.—Substantia gelatinosa centralis, the neuroglia which backs the layer of columnar epithelial cells lining the central canal of the spinal cord.—Substantia gelatinosa posterior or Rolandi, a part of the caput of the posterior cornu of gray matter of the spinal cord, near the tip of that cornu, having a peculiar semitransparent appearance. Also called formatio gelatinosa Rolandi.—Substantia nigra, a region, marked by dark pigmented cells, separating the crusta from the tegmentum of the crus cerebri. Also called substantia nigra Sacceriviani, stratum nigrum, stratum intermedium, and locus niger.—Substantia reticularis. Same as reticular formation (which see, under reticular).—Substantia spongiosa, that part of the gray matter of the spinal cord which is not substantia gelatinosa centralis or posterior.

substantial (sub-stan'shal), a. and n. [< ME. substantial, < OF. substancial, F. substantiel = Sp. Pg. substancial = It. sostanziale, < L. sub- stantialis, of or pertaining to the substance, essential, < substantia, substance, material: see substance.] I. n. 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of substance; being a substance; real: actually existing; true; actual; not seeming or imaginary; not illusive.

If this Atheist would have his chance or fortune to be a real and substantial agent, as the vulgar seem to have commonly apprehended, . . . he is . . . more stupid and more supinely ignorant than those vulgar.

Bentley, Eight Boyle Lectures, v.
All this is but a dream,
Too flattering-sweet to be substantial.
Shak., R. and J., ii. 2. 141.

The sun appears to be flat as a plate of silver . . . the moon appears to be as big as the sun, and the rainbow appears to be a large substantial arch in the sky: all which are in reality gross falsehoods.
Watts, Logic, Int.

2. Having essential value; genuine; sound; solid: as, substantial cloth.

The matter of the point controverted is great, but it is driven to an over-great subtlety and obscurity, so that it becometh a thing rather ingenious than substantial.
Bacon, Unity in Religion (ed. 1857).

This he looks upon to be sound learning and substantial criticism.
Addison, Tatler, No. 158.

3. Having firm or good material; strong; stout; solid: as, substantial cloth.

Most ponderous and substantial things.
Shak., M. for M., iii. 2. 290.

There are, by the direction of the Lawgiver, certain good and substantial steps placed even through the very midst of this slough [of Despond].
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, i.

4. Possessed of considerable value, goods, or estate; moderately wealthy: well-to-do.

She has, 'mongst others, two substantial suitors.
Middleton, The Widow, i. 2.

Pray take all the care you can to inquire into the value, and set it at the best rate to substantial people.
Swift, To Dr. Sheridan, June 29, 1725.

5. Real or true in the main or for the most part: as, substantial success.

Substantial agreement between all as to the points discussed.
The Century, XXXIX. 563.

6. Of considerable amount: as, a substantial gift; substantial profit.—7†. Capable of being substantiated or proved.

It is substantial;

For, that disguise being on him which I wore,
It will be thought I, which he calls the Pandar,
Did kil the Duke and fled away in his apparel,
Leaving him so disguis'd to avoid swift pursuit.
C. Tourneur, Revenger's Tragedy, iv. 2.

8. Vital; important.

Christes church can neuer erre In any substantial point that God would haue vs bounden to beleue.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 163.

9. In law, pertaining to or involving the merits or essential right, in contradistinction to questions of form or manner. Thus, a substantial performance of a contract is one which fulfils reasonably well all the material and essential stipulations, though it may be deficient in respect of punctuality or departure from minor details of manner for which moderate deductions from the price would compensate. So, in litigation, the right of trial by jury is a substantial right, but the order in which evidence shall be adduced is not.

10. Pertaining to the substance or tissue of any part or organ.

Transition from substantial to membranous varieties.
Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, VIII. 120.

Substantial being, division, form, mode, etc. See the nouns.

II. n. 1. That which has a real existence; that which has substance.—2. That which has real practical value.

A large and well filled basket . . . contained substantials and delicacies . . . especially helpful.
New York Evangelist, Dec. 2, 1886.

3. An essential part.

Although a custom introduced against the substantials of an appeal be not valid, as that it should not be appealed to a superior but to an inferior judge, yet a custom may be introduced against the accidentals of an appeal.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

substantialia (sub-stan'shi-ä'li-ä), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. substantialis: see substantial.] In Scots law, those parts of a deed which are essential to its validity as a formal instrument.

substantialism (sub-stan'shal-izm), n. The doctrine that behind phenomena there are substantial realities, or real substances, whether mental or corporeal.

substantialist (sub-stan'shal-ist), n. One who adheres to the doctrine of substantialism.

Philosophers, as they affirm or deny the authority of consciousness in guaranteeing a substratum or substance to the manifestations of the ego and non-ego, are divided into realists or substantialists and into nihilists or non-substantialists.
Sir W. Hamilton, Metaph., xvi.

substantiality (sub-stan'shi-äl'i-ti), n. [< F. substantialité = It. sostanzialità, < L. substan- titilität(-s), the quality of being substantial or essential, < substantialis, substantial: see substantial.] 1. The character of being substantial, in any sense; the having of the function of a substance in upholding accidents.

The soul is a stranger to such gross substantiality.
Glandville, Vanity of Dogmatizing, iv.

Many of the lower animals build themselves dwellings that excel in substantiality . . . the huts or hovels of men.
Lindsay, Mind in the Lower Animals, l. 113. (Encyc. Diet.)

We understand his lordship very well; he means a particular providence and a future state, the moral attributes of the Deity and the substantiality of the soul.
Warburton, Bolingbroke's Philosophy, iii.

2. Substance; essence.

I shall know whether all souls came from Adam's own substantiality, and whether there be more substance in all than in that one.
Baxter, Dying Thoughts.

substantialize (sub-stan'shal-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. substantialized, pp. substantializing. [< substantial + -ize.] To render substantial; give reality to.

I liked well to see that strange life, which even the stout, dead-in-earnest little Bohemian musicians, piping in the centre of the Piazza, could not altogether substantialize.
Hovells, Venetian Life, iv.

substantially (sub-stan'shal-i), adv. 1. In the manner of a substance; with reality of existence; truly; really; effectually.

In him all his Father shone Substantially express'd. Milton, P. L., iii. 140.

Be substantially great in thyself, and more than thou appearest unto others. Sir T. Browne, Christ, Mor., i. 19.

2. In a substantial manner; strongly; solidly.

To know . . . what good laws are wanting, and how to frame them substantially, that good Men may enjoy the freedom which they merit.
Milton, Hist. Eng., iii.

Pleasing myself in my own house and manner of living more than ever I did, by seeing how much better and more substantially I live than others do. Pepys, Diary, l. 421.

3. In substance; in the main; essentially; by including the material or essential part: as, the two arguments are substantially the same.

A king with a life revenue and an unchecked power of exacting money from the rich is substantially an absolute sovereign.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 373.

substantialness (sub-stan'shal-nes), n. The state or quality of being substantial, in any sense.

substantiate (sub-stan'shi-ät), v. t.; pret. and pp. substantiated, pp. substantiating. [< ML. substantiatus, pp. of substantiare (> It. sostanziare, sostanziare = Sp. Pg. substanciar), < L. substantia, substance: see substance.] 1. To make to exist; make real or actual.

The accidental of any act is said to be whatever advenes to the act itself already substantiated.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. To establish by proof or competent evidence; verify; make good: as, to substantiate a charge or an allegation; to substantiate a declaration.

Observation is in turn wanted to direct and substantiate the course of experiment.
Coleridge.

3. To present as having substance; body forth.

Every man feels for himself, and knows how he is affected by particular qualities in the persons he admires, the impressions of which are too minute and delicate to be substantiated in language.
Boswell, Johnson, l. 129.

As many thoughts in succession substantiate themselves, we shall by and by stand in a new world of our own creation.
Emerson, Friendship.

substantiation (sub-stan'shi-ä'shon), n. [< substantiate + -ion.] The act of substantiating or giving substance to anything; the act of proving; evidence; proof.

This substantiation of shadows.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 382.

The fact as claimed will find lasting substantiation.
The American, VIII. 379.

substantival (sub-stan-ti'val or sub-stan-ti-val), a. [< LL. substantivalis, substantival: see substantive.] 1. Pertaining to or having the character of a substantive.

There remain several substantival and verbal formations for which a satisfactory explanation was not reached.
Amer. Jour. Philol., VI. 450.

2. Independent or self-dependent.

The real is individual, self-existent, substantival.
Mind, IX. 128.

substantive (sub'stan-tiv), a. and n. [I. a. = F. substantif = Sp. Pg. sustantivo = It. sustantivo, < LL. substantivus, self-existent, substantive (substantivum verbum, the substantive verb), ML. also having substance, substantive, < L. substantia, substance, reality: see substance. II. n. = F. substantif = Sp. Pg. sustantivo = It. sustantivo = D. substantief = G. Sw. Dan. substantiv, < NL. substantivum, se. nomen, a substantive name, a noun substantive (a noun), i. e. the name of a thing, as distinguished from

L. adjectivum, so. uomen, an adjective name, a noun adjective (an adjective), the name of an attribute.] I. u. 1. Betokening or expressing existence: as, the substantive verb.—2. Depending on itself; independent; self-dependent; hence, individual.

He considered how sufficient and substantive this land was to maintain itself, without any aid of the foreigner. Bacon.

Many . . . thought it a pity that so substantive and rare a creature should . . . be only known . . . as a wife and mother. George Eliot, Middlemarch, Finale.

3. Substantial; solid; enduring; firm; permanent; real.

The trait which is truly most worthy of note in the politics of Homeric Greece is . . . the substantive weight and influence which belonged to speech as an instrument of government. Gladstone, Studies on Homer (ed. 1858), III. 102.

As to . . . the substantive value of historical training, opinions will still differ. Stubbs, Medieval and Modern Hist., p. 35.

All this shows that he [Racine] had already acquired some repute as a promising novice in letters, though he had as yet done nothing substantive. Encyc. Brit., XX. 204.

4. Independent; not to be inferred from something else, but itself explicitly and formally expressed.

She [Elizabeth] then, by a substantive enactment, declaring her governorship of the Church. Nineteenth Century, XXVI. 891.

The decisions of the chair . . . could be brought before the House only by way of a substantive motion, liable to amendment and after due notice. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XXXIX. 265.

5. In gram., of the nature of a noun, usable as subject or object of a verb and in other noun constructions: as, a substantive word; a substantive pronoun; a substantive clause.—Substantive colors, colors which, in the process of dyeing, become fixed or permanent without the intervention of other substances, in distinction from adjective colors, which require the aid of mordants to fix them.—Substantive law. See law.—Substantive verb, the verb to be.

II. n. 1. In gram., a noun; a part of speech that can be used as subject or as object of a verb, be governed by a preposition, or the like. The term noun, in older usage, included both the "noun substantive" and the "noun adjective": it is now much more common to call the two respectively the substantive, or the noun simply, and the adjective. See noun. Abbreviated s., subst.

2†. An independent thing or person. Every thing is a total or substantive in itself. Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii.

K. John, being a Substantive of himself, hath a Device in his Head to make his Subjects as willing to give him Money as he was to have it. Baker, Chronicles, p. 70.

substantive (sub'stan-tiv), v. t.; pret. and pp. substantived, ppr. substantivizing. [< substantive, n.] To convert into or use as a substantive. [Rare.]

Wherefore we see that the word δαμόνιον, as to its grammatical form, is not a diminutive, as some have conceived, but an adjective substantivē, as well as το θεῖον is. Cudworth, Intellectual System, p. 264.

substantively (sub'stan-tiv-ly), adv. 1. In a substantive manner; in substance; essentially: as, a thing may be apparently one thing and substantively another.—2. In gram., as a substantive or noun: as, an adjective or a pronoun used substantively.

substantiveness (sub'stan-tiv-ness), n. The state of being substantive. J. H. Newman, Development of Christ. Doct., i. § 1. [Rare.] substantivize (sub'stan-tiv-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. substantivized, ppr. substantivizing. [< substantive + -ize.] To make a substantive of; use as a substantive.

Perhaps we have here the forerunners of the substantivized être, pouvoir, vouloir, savoir, etc. Amer. Jour. Philol., VIII. 104.

substation (sub'stā'shōn), n. A subordinate station: as, a police substation.

substernal (sub'stēr-nal), a. Situated beneath the sternum; lying under the breast-bone.

substyle, n. See substyle.

substitute (sub'sti-tūt), v. t.: pret. and pp. substituted, ppr. substituting. [< L. substitutus, pp. of substituere (> It. sostituire = Sp. sustituir = Pg. substituir = F. substituer), place under or next to, put instead of, substitute. < sub, under, + statuere, set up, station, cause to stand: see statute. Cf. constitute, institute.] 1. To put in the place of another: put in exchange.

For real wit he is obliged to substitute vivacity. Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 1.

2†. To appoint; invest with delegated authority.

But who is substituted 'gainst the French I have no certain notice. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 3. 84.

Their request being effected, he substituted Mr. Scrivener his deare friend in the Presidency. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 180.

Substituted service. See service.

substitute (sub'sti-tūt), a. and n. [< F. substituit = Pr. substituit = Sp. Pg. substituto = It. substituito (= D. substituit = G. Sw. Dan. substituit, n.), < L. substitutus, pp. of substituere, substitute: see substitute, v.] I. a. Put in the place or performing the functions of another; substituted.

It may well happen that this pope may be deposed, & another substitute in his room. Sir T. More, Works, p. 1427.

II. n. 1. A person put in the place of another; one acting for or in the room of another; theat., an understudy; specifically (milit.), one who for a consideration serves in an army or navy in the place of a conscript; also, a thing serving the purpose of another.

That controlled self-consciousness of manner which is the expensive substitute for simplicity. George Eliot, Middlemarch, xliii.

2. In calico-printing, a solution of phosphate of soda and phosphate of lime with a little glue or other form of gelatin, used as a substitute for cow-dung.—Substitutes in an entail, in law, those heirs who are called to the succession on the failure of others.—Syn. 1. Proxy, alternate.

substitution (sub-sti-tū'shōn), n. [< F. substitution = Sp. sustitucion = Pg. substituição = It. sostituzione, < L. substitutio(n-), a putting in place of another, substitution, < substituere, pp. substitutus, substitute: see substitute.] 1. The act of substituting, or putting (one person or thing) in the place of another; also, the state or fact of being substituted.

We can perceive, from the records of the Hellenic and Latin city communities, that there, and probably over a great part of the world, the substitution of common territory for common race as the basis of national reunion was slow. Maine, Early Hist. of Institutions, p. 75.

2. The office of a substitute; delegated authority. [Rare.]

He did believe He was indeed the duke; out of the substitution, And executing the outward face of royalty, With all prerogative. Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 103.

3. In gram., the use of one word for another; syllepsis.—4. In Rom. law, the effect of appointing a person to be heir, in case the heir first nominated would not or could not be heir. This was called rogular substitution. Pupillary substitution existed where, after instituting his child as heir, the testator directed that, if after the child should have become heir it should die before attaining puberty, another be substituted in its place. This was originally allowed only for children under age in the power of the testator, but was afterward extended to children who for any reason could not make a valid will.

5. In French law, a disposition of property whereby the person receiving it, who is called the institute (le grévé), is charged either at his death or at some other time to deliver it over to another person called the substitute (l'appelé).

—6. In chem., the replacing of one or more elements or radicals in a compound by other elements or radicals. Thus, by bringing water and potassium together, potassium (K) is substituted for a hydrogen atom in water (H₂O), yielding KOH, or caustic potash. By further action the other hydrogen atom may be replaced, yielding potassium oxid (K₂O). Substitution is the principal method employed in examining the chemical structure of organic bodies. Also called metalepsy.

No generalization has, perhaps, so extensively contributed to the progress made by organic chemistry during the last fifteen years as the doctrine of substitution.

E. Frankland, Exper. in Chem., p. 210.

7. In alg.: (a) The act of replacing a quantity by another equal to it; also, in the language of some algebraists, the replacement of a set of variables by another set connected with the first by a system of equations equal in number to the number of variables in each set. See transformation (which is the better term). (b) The operation of changing the order of a finite number of objects, generally letters, that are in a row, the change following a rule according to which the object in each place is carried to some definite place in the row, this operation being regarded as itself a subject of algebraical operations. For example, supposing we were to start with the row a, b, c, d, e, a substitution might consist in carrying us to the row b, c, a, e, d. Denoting this substitution by S, the repetition of it, which would be denoted by S², would carry us to c, a, b, d, e. If T denote the substitution of d, e, c, b for a, b, c, d, e, then TS would convert the last row into d, e, a, c, b, while ST would convert it into d, c, e, a, b. One way of denoting a substitution to which the terminology of the theory refers is to write a row upon which the substitution could operate, with the resulting row above it. These two rows are called the terms of the substitution, the upper one the numerator, the lower the denominator of the substitution. The objects constituting the rows are called the letters of the substitution.—Associate substitution, one of two substitutions interchangeable with the same substitution.—Bifid substitution. See bifid.—Circular factors of a substitution, circular substitutions whose product constitutes the substitution spoken of, it being understood that no two of these affect the positions of the same letters.—Circular substitution, a substitution whose successive powers carry the letters which it displaces round in one cycle.—Cremona substitution, a substitution of a Cremona transformation, especially of a quadratic transformation.—Derivate substitution, a substitution whose inverse multiplied by another substitution, and then this product by the derivate substitution itself, makes a substitution the derivate of that other substitution.—Derivate of a substitution, the product of three substitutions, of which the middle one is the substitution spoken of, while the other two are inverse substitutions.—Determinant of a linear substitution. See determinant.—Doctrine of substitution, in theol., the doctrine that Christ suffered vicariously, as a substitute for the sinner.—Elementary substitution, a substitution into which only the elements 0, 1, and 2 enter.—Identical substitution, a substitution which leaves the order of all the letters unchanged.—Imprimitive substitution, a substitution not primitive.—Index of a system of conjugate substitutions, the quotient of the number of permutations of the letters by the order of the system.—Interchangeable substitutions, two substitutions which give the same product in whichever order they are multiplied—that is, whichever is taken first in forming the product.—Inverse substitutions, two substitutions whose product is an identical substitution.—Isomorphous substitution group, one of two groups of substitutions such that every substitution of the one corresponds to a single substitution of the other, and every product of two substitutions to a product of analogous substitutions.—Linear substitution. (a) A circular substitution between a variable, a linear function of it, and the successive iterations of that function. (b) A linear transformation.—Order of a substitution, that power of a substitution which is an identical substitution.—Order of a system of conjugate substitutions, the number of substitutions belonging to the system.—Orthogonal substitution. See orthogonal.—Permutate substitutions, interchangeable substitutions.—Power of a substitution, the operation which consists in the repetition of the substitution spoken of as many times as the exponent of the power indicates.—Primitive substitution, a substitution whose order is a prime number or a power of a prime number.—Product of two substitutions, the result of performing two substitutions successively upon one row.—Rational substitution, a circular substitution between successive iterations of a rational function, such as $x_{m+1} = (ax_m + b) / (cx_m + d)$.—Reduced substitution, a substitution represented by an integral algebraic function having 1 for the coefficient of the highest power of the variable, and 0 for the coefficient of the next highest power and for the absolute term.—Regular substitution, a substitution whose circular factors are all of the same order.—Service by substitution. See substituted service, under service.—Similar substitutions, two substitutions which have the same number of circular factors and the same number of letters in the cycles.—Substitution product, a chemical compound prepared by substituting an element or radical for some member of a complex molecule without altering the rest of the molecule.—System of conjugate substitutions, a group of substitutions—that is to say, such a collection of substitutions that every product of substitutions belonging to it is itself a substitution of the same collection.—Term of a substitution, one of the two permutations whose relation constitutes the substitution.

substitutional (sub-sti-tū'shōn-əl), a. [< substitution + -al.] Pertaining to or implying substitution; supplying, or capable of supplying, the place of another. Imp. Diet.

substitutionally (sub-sti-tū'shōn-əl-ly), adv. In a substitutional manner; by way of substitution. Elec. Rev.

substitutionary (sub-sti-tū'shōn-ā-ri), a. [< substitution + -ary.] Relating to or making substitution; substitutional.

The mediation of Christ in what may . . . be called his substitutionary relation to men. Prog. Orthodoxy, p. 52.

substitutive (sub'sti-tū-tiv), a. [< LL. substitutivus, conditional, < L. substitutus, pp. of substituere, substitute: see substitute.] Tending to afford or furnish a substitute; making substitution; capable of being substituted. Bp. Wilkins.

subtract (sub-strakt'), v. t. An erroneous form of subtract, common in vulgar use. Heywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 469.

subtraction (sub-strak'shōn), n. An erroneous form of subtraction.

subtractor (sub-strak'tor), n. An erroneous form of subtractor, subtractor: used in the quotation in the sense of 'detractor.'

By this hand they are scoundrels and subtractors. Shak., T. N., i. 3. 37.

substrate (sub'strāt), n. [< NL. substratum.] A substratum.

Albert and Aquinas agree in declaring that the principle of individuation is to be found in matter—not, however, in matter as a formless substrate, but in determinate matter (materia signata), which is explained to mean matter quantitatively determined in certain respects. Encyc. Brit., XXI. 423.

substrate (sub'strāt), v. t. [< L. substratus, pp. of substernere, strew or spread under, < sub, under, + sternere, spread, extend, scatter: see stratum.] To strew or lay under anything.

The melted glass being supported by the substrated sand. Boyle, Works, II. 222.

substrator (sub-strā'tor), n. [L. substratus, pp. of substruere, spread under: see substrate.] Same as kneller, 2.

The mourners or weepers, the hearers, the substrators, and the co-standers. Bingham, Antiquities, XVIII. i. 1.

substratum (sub-strā'tum), n.; pl. substrata (-tū). [NL., L. substratum, neut. of substratus, spread under: see substrate, and cf. stratum.]

1. That which is laid or spread under; a stratum lying under another; in agri, the subsoil; hence, anything which underlies or supports: as, a substratum of truth.

In the living body we observe a number of activities of its material substratum, by which the series of phenomena spoken of as life are conditioned.

Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 13.

2. In metaph., substance, or matter, as that in which qualities inhere.

We acustom ourselves to suppose some substratum wherein they [simple ideas] do subsist, and from whence they do result; which therefore we call substance.

Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxiii., note A.

substriate (sub-strī'āt), a. In entom., having indistinct or imperfect striæ.

substruct (sub-strukt'), v. t. [L. substructus, pp. of substruere, build beneath, underbuild, sub, under, + struere, pile up, erect, build: see structure.] To place beneath as a foundation; build beneath something else. [Rare.]

substruction (sub-struk'shon), n. [F. substruction = Pg. substrucção, L. substructio (-n-), an underbuilding, a foundation, substruere, build beneath: see substruct.] An underbuilding; a mass of building below another; a foundation.

It is a magnificent, strong building, with a substruction very remarkable. Euclyn, Diary, Nov. 8, 1644.

substructural (sub'strukt'ū-rāl), a. [substructure + -al.] Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of a substructure.

substructure (sub'strukt'ūr), n. [substruct + -ure; cf. structure.] A substruction; any under-structure; a foundation.

substylar (sub'stī'lār), a. [substyle + -ar.] Of, pertaining to, or consisting of the substyle.

substyle (sub'stīl), n. In diating, the line on which the style or gnomon stands, formed by the intersection of the face of the dial with the plane which passes through the gnomon.

subsubliver (sub-sul'tiv), a. [L. subsublatus, pp. of subsilire, leap up, sub, under, + salire, leap, spring: see salient. Cf. L. subsublim, with leaps or jumps.] Moving by sudden leaps or starts; making short bounds; spasmodic.

The earth, I was told, moved up and down like the boiling of a pot. . . . This sort of subsubliver motion is ever accounted the most dangerous.

Ep. Berkeley, Works (ed. 1784), I. 81.

subsublitorily (sub-sul'tō-ri-li), adv. In a subsublitory or bounding manner; by leaps, starts, or twitches. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 326.

subsublitory (sub-sul'tō-ri), a. [As subsubliver + -ory.] Same as subsubliver. De Quincey, Style, i.

subsublulus (sub-sul'tns), n.; pl. subsublulus. [NL., L. subsublulus, pp. subsublulus, leap up: see subsubliver.] A twitching, jerky, or convulsive movement.—Subsublulus clonus. Same as subsublulus tendinum.—Subsublulus tendinum, a twitching of the tendons, observed in many cases of low fevers, etc.: it is a grave symptom.

subsume (sub-sūm'), v. t.; pret. and pp. subsumed, ppr. subsuming. [NL. subsumere*, L. sub, under, + sumere, take: see assume.] In logic, to state (a case) under a general rule; instance (an object or objects) as belonging to a class under consideration. Especially, when the major proposition of a syllogism is first stated, the minor proposition is said to be subsumed under it. Modern writers often use the word in the sense of stating that the object of the verb belongs under a class, even though that class be not already mentioned.

St. Paul, who cannot name that word "sinners" but must straight subsume in a parenthesis "of whom I am the chief." Hammond, Works, IV. viii.

Its business [that of the understanding] is to judge or subsume different conceptions or perceptions under more general conceptions that connect them together.

E. Caird, Philos. of Kant, p. 202.

subsumption (sub-sūmp'shōn), n. [NL. subsumptio (-n-), L. subsumere, pp. subsumere*, subsumere: see subsume.] 1. The act of subsuming; the act of mentioning as an instance of a rule or an example of a class; the act of including under something more general (and, in the strict use of the word, something already considered), as a particular under a universal, or a species under a genus.

379

The first act of consciousness was a subsumption of that of which we were conscious under this notion.

Sir W. Hamilton.

2. That which is subsumed; the minor premise of a syllogism, when stated after the major premise.

Thus, if one were to say, "No man is wise in all things," and another to respond, "But you are a man," this proposition is a subsumption under the former.

Fleming, Vocab. Philos.

Subsumption of the libel, in Scots law, a narrative of the alleged criminal act, which must specify the manner, place, and time of the crime libeled, the person injured, etc.

subsumptive (sub-sūmp'tiv), a. [subsumption + -ive.] Of or relating to a subsumption; of the nature of a subsumption.

subsurface (sub'sēr'fās), a. and n. I. a. Being or occurring below the surface.

II. n. A three-dimensional continuum in a space of five dimensions.

subsynovial (sub-si-nō'vi-āl), a. Situated or occurring within a synovial membrane.—Subsynovial cysts, cysts caused by distention of the synovial follicles which open into joints, due to obstruction of their ducts.

subtack (sub'tak), n. In Scots law, an underlease; a lease, as of a farm or a tenement, granted by the principal tenant or leaseholder.

subtangent (sub'tan'jēnt), n. In analytical geom., the part of the axis of abscissas of a curve cut off between the tangent and the ordinate.—Polar subtangent, that part of the line through the origin of polar coordinates perpendicular to the radius vector which is cut off between the tangent and the radius vector.

subtartarean (sub-tār-tā'rē-ān), a. Being or living under Tartarus.

The sable subtartarean pow'rs. Pope, Iliad, xiv. 314.

subteclat (sub-tek'ta-kl), n. [L. sub, under, + teclat, pp. of tegere, cover (see teet, thatch), + -accl.] A tabernacle; a covering.

This is true Faith's intire subteclat.

Davies, Holy Roode, p. 20. (Davies.)

subtectal (sub-tek'tāl), n. [L. sub, under, + tectum, roof, tegere, pp. tectus, cover: see teet, thatch.] In zool., a bone of the skull, generally underlying the roof of the cranium behind the orbit, and variously homologized with the orbitosphenoid and with the alisphenoid of higher vertebrates: also used attributively.

subtegulaneous (sub-teg-ū-lā'nē-us), a. [L. subtegulaneus, under the roof, indoor, sub, under, + tegula, a tile, a tiled roof: see tile.] Under the eaves or roof; within doors. [Rare.] Imp. Dict.

subtegmental (sub-teg-ū-men'tal), a. Situated beneath the integument; subcutaneous.

subtemperate (sub-tem'pēr-āt), a. Colder than the average climate of the temperate zone; noting the temperature and also other physical conditions of parts of the north temperate zone toward the arctic circle.

subtemporal (sub-tem'pō-rāl), a. Situated beneath a temporal gyrus of the brain.

subtenancy (sub'ten'an-si), n. An under-tenancy; the holding of a subtenant.

subtenant (sub'ten'ant), n. A tenant under a tenant; one who rents land or houses from a tenant.

subtend (sub-tend'), v. t. [Sp. Pg. subtender = It. sottendere, L. subtendere, stretch underneath, sub, under, + tendere, stretch.] 1. To extend under or be opposite to: a geometrical term: as, the side of a triangle which subtends the right angle.

In our sweeping arc from Æschylus to the present time, fifty years subtend scarcely any space.

S. Lanier, The English Novel, p. 9.

2. In bot., to embrace in its axil, as a leaf, bract, etc.; as, in many Compositæ the florets are subtended by bracts called chaff.

subtense (sub-tens'), n. [L. subtensus, subtensus, pp. of subtendere, stretch across: see subtend.] In geom., a line subtending or stretching across; the chord of an arc; a line opposite to an angle spoken of.

subtentacular (sub-teu-tak'ū-lār), a. Situated beneath the tentacles or tentacular canal of a erinoid. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 502.

subtepid (sub-tep'id), a. Slightly tepid; moderately warm.

subter- [L. subter, also supter, adv. and prep., below, beneath, in comp. also secretly; with compar. suffix, sub, under, below: see sub-.] A prefix in English words, meaning 'under,' 'below,' 'less than': opposed to super-.

subterbrutish (sub'tēr-brō'tish), a. So brutish as to be lower than a brute. [Rare.]

O subter-brutish! vile! most vile!

Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, I. 8.

subterete (sub-tē-rēt'), a. Somewhat terete. subterfluent (sub-tēr'flō-ent), a. [L. subterfluen(t)-s, ppr. of subterfluere, flow beneath, subter, beneath, + fluere, flow: see fluent.] Running under or beneath. Imp. Dict.

subterfluus (sub-tēr'flō-us), a. [L. as if subterfluus*, L. subterfluere, flow beneath: see subterfluent.] Same as subterfluent.

subterfuge (sub'tēr-fūj), n. [F. subterfuge = Sp. Pg. subterfugio = It. sutterfugio, L. L. subterfugium, a subterfuge, L. subterfugere, flee by stealth, escape, avoid, subter, secretly, + fugire, flee.] That to which a person resorts for escape or concealment; a shift; an evasion; artifice employed to escape censure or the force of an argument.

By forgery, by subterfuge of law.

Couper, Task, ii. 670.

We may observe how a persecuting spirit in the times drives the greatest men to take refuge in the meanest arts of subterfuge. I. D'Israeli, Calam. of Authors, II. 276.

=Syn. Shift, etc. (see evasion), excuse, trick, quirk, shuffle, pretense, pretext, mask, blind.

subterminal (sub-tēr'mi-nāl), a. Nearly terminal; situated near but not at the end. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 186.

subternatural (sub-tēr-nat'ū-rāl), a. Below what is natural; less than natural; subnatural.

If we assume health as the mean representing the normal poise of all the mental faculties, we must be content to call hypochondria subternatural, because the tone of the instrument is lowered.

Lovell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 87.

subterposition (sub'tēr-pō-zish'on), n. The state of lying or being situated under something else; specifically, in geom., the order in which strata are situated one below another.

subterrane (sub'tēr-rān), a. and n. [= OF. subterrain, soubterrain, F. souterrain = Sp. subterráneo = Pg. subterraneo = It. sotterraneo, L. subterraneus, underground, sub, under, + terra, earth, ground: see terrane.] I. a. Underground; subterranean.

A subterrane tunnel. Annals of Phila. and Penn., I. 412.

II. n. A cave or room underground. [Poetical and rare.]

subterranean (sub'tēr-rā'nē-āl), a. [subterrane + -al.] Same as subterranean. Bacon, Physical Fables, xi.

subterranean (sub'tēr-rā'nē-ān), a. [subterrane + -an.] Situated or occurring below the surface of the earth or under ground.

His taste in cookery, formed in subterranean ordinaries and à la mode beefshops, was far from delicate.

Macauley, Samuel Johnson. (Encyc. Brit., XIII. 721.)

Subterranean forest, a submarine, submerged, or buried forest. See submarine forest and forest-bed group, both under forest, and submerged forest, under submerge.

subterraneity (sub'tēr-rā'nē-ī-ti), n. [subterrane + -ity.] A place under ground. [Rare.]

We commonly consider subterraneities not in contemplations sufficiently respective unto the creation.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 1.

subterraneous (sub'tēr-rā'nē-us), a. [L. subterraneus, underground: see subterrane.] Same as subterranean.

subterraneously (sub'tēr-rā'nē-us-li), adv. In a subterraneous manner; under the surface of the earth; hence, secretly; imperceptibly.

Preston, intent on carrying all his points, skilfully commenced with the smaller ones. He wended the duke circuitously—he worked at him subterraneously.

I. D'Israeli, Curios. of Lit., IV. 368.

subterrany (sub'tēr-rā-ni), a. and n. [L. subterraneus, underground: see subterrane.] I. a. Subterranean.

They [metals] are wholly subterrany; whereas plants are part above earth, and part under earth.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 603.

II. n. That which lies under ground.

We see that in subterrany there are, as the fathers of their tribes, brimstone and mercury.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 354.

subterrene (sub-te-rēn'), a. [L. L. subterrenus, underground, L. sub, under, + terra, earth, ground: see terrane.] Subterranean.

For the earth is full of subterrene fires, which have evaporated stones, and raised most of these mountains.

Sandys, Traavailes, p. 235.

subterrestrial (sub-te-res'tri-āl), a. [L. sub, under, + terra, earth, ground, > terrestri, of the earth: see terrestrial.] Subterranean.

The most reputable way of entering into this subterrestrial country is to come in at the fore-door.

Tom Brown, Works, I. 200. (Davies.)

Subtetramera (sub-te-tram'e-rā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of subtetramerus*: see subtetrameros.]

A division of coleopterous insects, having the tarsi four-jointed with the third joint diminutive and concealed; synonymous with Cryptotetramera and Pseudotetramera.

subtetramerous (sub-tē-tram'ē-rus), a. [< NL. subtetramerus*, < L. sub, under, + NL. tetramerus, four-parted: see tetramerous.] Four-jointed, as an insect's tarsus, but with the third joint very small and concealed under the second; of or pertaining to the Subtetramera; pseudotrimmerous.

subthoracic (sub-thō-ras'ik), a. 1. Situated under or below the thorax.—2. Not quite thoracic in position: as, the subthoracic ventral fins of a fish.

subtil, a. An obsolete or archaic form of subtile or subtle.

subtile (sut'il or sub'til), a. [Early mod. E. also subtil, subtyle; an altered form, to suit the L., of the earlier sotil, sutil, etc.; = F. subtil = Sp. sutil = Pg. subtil = It. sottile, < L. subtilis, fine, thin, slender, delicate, perhaps < sub, under, + tela, a web, fabric: see tela, toil.] 1. Tenuous; thin; extremely fine; rare; rarefied: as, subtile vapor; subtile odors or effluvia; a subtile powder; a subtile medium. Also subtle.

He forges the subtile and delicate air into wise and melodious words. Emerson, Nature, p. 49.

2. Delicately constituted, made, or formed; delicately constructed; thin; slender; fine; delicate; refined; dainty. Also subtle.

The remanent was well kevered to my pay,
Byght with a subtyl covercheif of Valence,
There nas no thikere clothe of defens.

Chaucer, Parliament of Fowls, l. 272.

Gadere that away with a sotil sponne or ellis a fether.
Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 9.

When he [the bear] resorteth to the hyllocke where the antes lye hid as in theyr fortresse, he putteth his tongue to one of the rytes wherof we haue spoken, being as subtyle as the edge of a sword, and there with continuall lye-kyng maketh the place moist.

R. Eden, tr. of Gonzalus Ovidius (First Books on America, [ed. Arber, p. 222]).

Venustus, in a silver robe, with a thin, subtile veil over her hair and it. B. Jonson, Masque of Beauty.

The more frequently and narrowly we look into them [works of nature], the more occasion we shall have to admire their fine and subtile texture, their beauty, and use, and excellent contrivance. Bp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. xii.

The virtue acquires its subtile charm because considered as an outgrowth of the beautiful, beneficent, and bounteous nature in which it has its root. Whipple, Starr King.

3†. Sharp, penetrating; piercing.

The Monasterie is moist and ye soyle colde, the aire subtyle, scarce of bread, evil wines, crude waters.

Guevara, Letters (tr. by Helwess, 1577), p. 45.

Pass we the slow Disease, and subtil Pain,
Which our weak Frame is destin'd to sustain.

Prior, Solomon, iii.

4. Same as subtle, 3.

The Devels ben so subtyle to make a thing to seme otherwise than it is, for to disceyve mankynde.

Manderivle, Travels, p. 253.

The seyd Walter by these sotil and ungoddly enformacion caused the seyd Duke to be hevvy toid to the seyd William.

Paston Letters, l. 16.

Now the serpent was more subtil than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made.

Gen. iii. 1.

The subtile persuasions of Ulysses.

Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, iii. 25.

Wherevnto this subtile Savage . . . replied.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 195.

A most subtile wench! how she hath baited him with a viol yonder for a song!

B. Jonson, Poetaster iv. 1.

But yet I shall remember you of what I told you before, that he [the carp] is a very subtile fish, and hard to be caught.

I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 145.

5. Same as subtle, 4.

And [he] made that by subtyll condyutes water to be hydde, and to come downe in manner of Rayne.

Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 162.

With sotil pencil depeyted was this storie,
In redoutnyng of Mars and of his glorie.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1191.

6. Same as subtle, 5.

Subtyle and sage was he manyfold,
All trouth and verite by hym was vnfold.

Rona. of Partenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 5989.

A subtile observer would perceive how truly he [Shelley] represents his own time.

Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 411.

7. Same as subtle, 7.

She . . . made her subtil werkmen make a shryne
Of alle the rubies and the stones fyne

In al Egipte that she coude espye.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 672.

subtilet (sut'il or sub'til), v. [< ME. sotilen, < OF. soultier, subtilier, < ML. subtiliare, make thin, contrive cunningly, < L. subtilis, thin, subtle; see subtile, a.] 1. trans. To contrive or practise cunningly.

All these sciences I my-self sotiled and ordneyed,
And founded hem fornest folke to deceyve.

Piers Plowman (B), l. 214.

II. intrans. To scheme or plan cunningly.

Eche man sotileth a sleight synne forto hyde,
And coloureth it for a kunnyng and a cliche luyng.
Piers Plowman (B), xix. 454.

2. To tamper; meddle.

It is no science for sothe forto sotyle Inne.

Piers Plowman (B), x. 183.

subtily (sut'il-li or sub'til-li), adv. [Formerly also subtilyly, subtilly; < subtile + -ly. Cf. subtily.] 1. In a subtile manner; thinly; finely.

A dram thereof [glass] subtilyly powdered in butter or paste.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., li. 5.

2. Artfully; skillfully; subtly.

At night she stal away ful prively
With her face ywimpled subtily.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 707.

Putte it into a uestel of glas clepid amphora, the which sotyle scele.

Book of Quinte Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 11.

In avoyding of the payement of the seid vij. c. marc, the seide Sir Robert Wynnfeld sotilyly hath outlawed the seide John Lyston in Notyngham shir, be the vertue of wch outlagre all maner of chattell to the seide John Lyston apperteynyng an acruyd on to the Kyng.

Paston Letters, l. 41.

A sot, that has spent £2000 in Microscopes, to find out the Nature of Eals in Vinegar, Mites in a Cheese, and the blue of Plums, which he has subtily found out to be living Creatures.

Shadwell, The Virtuoso, l. 1.

subtleness (sut'il-nes or sub'til-nes), n. [< subtile + -ness. Cf. subtleness.] The character or state of being subtile, in any sense.

subtiliate (sut-til'i-āt), v. t. [< L. subtilis, fine, slender, subtle, + -ate.] To make subtile; make thin or rare; rarely.

Matter, however subtiliated, is matter still.

Boyle, Works, III. 39.

subtiliation (sub-til-i-ā'shōn), n. [< subtiliate + -ion.] The act of making thin, rare, or subtile.

By subtiliation and rarefaction the oil contained in grapes, if distilled before it be fermented, becomes spirit of wine.

Boyle, Works, III. 39.

subtilisation, subtilise, etc. See subtilization, etc.

subtilism (sut'i-lizm or sub'ti-lizm), n. [< subtile + -ism.] The quality of being subtile, discriminating, or shrewd.

The high orthodox subtilism of Duns Scotus.

Mitman, Latin Christianity, xlv. 3.

subtily (su- or sub-til'i-ti), n.; pl. subtilyties (-tiz). [Formerly also subtilyty; < F. subtilité = Sp. subtilidad = Pg. subtilidade = It. sottilità, < L. subtilitas (-s), fineness, slenderness, acuteness, < subtilis, fine, slender, subtle; see subtile.] 1. Subtleness or subtleness; the quality of being subtile or subtle. Also subtilyty. [Rare.]

Without any of that speculative subtilyty or ambidexterity of argumentation.

Sterne, Tristram Shandy.

2. A fine-drawn distinction; a nicety. Also subtilyty.

I being very inquisitive to know of the subtilyties of those countreyes [China and Tartary], and especially in matter of learning and of their vulgar Poesie.

Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 75.

Their tutors commonly spend much time in teaching them the subtilyties of logic.

Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Life (ed. Howells), p. 42.

subtilization (sut'i- or sub'ti-li-zā'shōn), n.

[= F. subtilisation = Sp. subtilización = Pg. subtilização; as subtilize + -ation.] 1. The act of making subtile, fine, or thin.—2. In chem., the operation of making so volatile as to rise in steam or vapor.—3. Nicety in drawing distinctions, etc.

Also spelled subtilisation.

subtilyze (sut'i-liz or sub'ti-liz), v.; pret. and pp. subtilyzed, ppr. subtilyzing. [= F. subtiliser = Sp. subtilizar = Pg. subtilizar = It. sottilizzare; as subtile + -ize.] 1. trans. To make thin or fine; make less gross or coarse; refine or etherealize, as matter; spin out finely, as an argument.

They spent their whole lives in agitating and subtilyzing questions of faith.

Warburton, Works, IX. viii.

By long brooding over our recollections we subtilyze them into something akin to imaginary stuff.

Hawthorne, Blithedale Romance, xii.

What has been said above, however, in regard to a possible subtilyzed theory applies a fortiori to the coarser theory of Absolute and Relative Time.

Amer. Jour. Philol., VIII. 66.

II. intrans. To refine; elaborate or spin out, as in argument; make very nice distinctions; split hairs.

In doubtfull Cases he can subtilyze,

And wyldest pleaders hearts anatomize.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, li. The Magnificence.

And Rask, one of the most eminent of modern philologists, has subtilyzed so far upon them [intonations] that few of his own countrymen, even, have sufficient acuteness of ear to follow him.

G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xiii.

Seneca, however, in one of his letters (ep. lxxv.), subtilyzes a good deal on this point [that the affectionate are of the nature of a disease].

Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 198.

Also spelled subtilise.

subtilizer (sut'i- or sub'ti-li-zēr), n. [< subtilize + -er.] One who or that which subtilyzes; one who makes very nice distinctions; a hair-splitter.

A subtilizer, and inventor of unheard-of distinctions.

Roger North, Lord Guilford, l. 118. (Davies.)

subtily (sut'il-ti or sub'til-ti), n.; pl. subtilyties (-tiz). [A form of subtilyty, partly conformed in mod. use to subtilyty: see subtilyty, subtilyty.]

1. The state or character of being subtile; thinness; fineness; tenuity: as, the subtilyty of air or light; the subtilyty of a spider's web. Also subtilyty.

Moderation must be observed, to prevent this fine light from burning, by its too great subtilyty and dryness.

Bacon, Physical Fables, vi. Expl.

2. The practice of making fine-drawn distinctions; extreme niceness or refinement of discrimination; intricacy; complexity. Also subtilyty.

Intelligible discourses are spoiled by too much subtilyty in nice divisions.

Locke.

The subtilyty of nature, in the moral as in the physical world, triumphs over the subtilyty of syllogism.

Macaulay, Utilitarian Theory of Government.

Subtilyty of motives, refinements of feeling, delicacies of susceptibilty, were rarely appreciated [by the Romans].

Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 236.

3. Same as subtilyty, 4.

The Sarazines countrefeten it be sotyltee of Craft for to disceyven the Cristene Men, as I have seen full many a tyme.

Manderivle, Travels, p. 51.

Put thou thy mayster to no payne
By fraude nor fayned subtilyty.

Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 85.

But had of his owne perswaded her by his great subtilyty.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 25.

His subtilyty hath chese this doubling line.

B. Jonson, Sejanus, iv. 5.

Indeed, man is naturally more prone to subtilyty than open valor, owing to his physical weakness in comparison with other animals.

Irring, Sketch-Book, p. 350.

He [Washington] had no subtilyty of character, no cunning; he hated duplicity, lying, and liars.

Theo. Parker, Historic Americans, p. 130.

4. Same as subtilyty, 5.

Loading him with trifling subtilyties, which, at a proper age, he must be at some pains to forget.

Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 6.

It is only an elevated mind that, having mastered the subtilyties of the law, is willing to reform them.

Sumner, Orations, I. 162.

5. Skill; skilfulness.

For eld, that in my spirit dulthe me,
Hath of endyting al the sotelle [var. subtilyty]
Wel ny hereft out of my remembrance.

Chaucer, Complaint of Venus, l. 77.

6†. A delicate; a carefully contrived dainty.

A bake mete . . . with a sotelle: an antelope . . . on a sele that saith with scriptour, "beith all gladd & mery that sitteth at this messe."

Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 376.

7†. An intricate or curious device, symbol, or emblem.

But Grekes have an other subtilyty:
Of set quete ye taketh that mayne
Water purest, oon yere that lete it fyne, Wherof thai sayen so made is the nature
Of bitterness or salt that it is sure.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 197.

A subtilyty, a kyng setting in a chayre with many lordes about hym, and certayne knyghtes with other people standing at the bar.

Leland, Inthron. of Abp. Warham. (Richardson.)

subtyle (sub'ti'tl), n. 1. A secondary or subordinate title of a book, usually explanatory.

In this first volume of Mr. Van Campen's monograph (the Dutch in the Arctic Seas, Volume I: A Dutch Arctic Expedition and Route; being a Survey of the North Polar Question, etc.) it is the subtyle rather than the title that indicates the chief importance of his work.

N. A. Rev., CXXVII. 346.

2. The repetition of the leading words in the full title at the head of the first page of text.

Table and contents, xii, followed by subtyle to whist.

N. and Q., 7th ser., IX. 143.

subtle (sut'l), a. [Early mod. E. also suttle; < ME. sotil, sotyl, souil, subtil, subtyl, < OF. sotil, souil, subtil = Sp. sutil = Pg. subtil = It. sottile, < L. subtilis, fine, thin, slender, delicate; see subtile, a more mod. form of the same word. The b in subtle and its older forms subtil, etc., was silent, as in debt, doubt, etc., being, as in those words, inserted in simulation of the orig. L. form. The form subtil, used in the authorized version of the Bible, has been retained in the revised version.] 1. Same as subtile, 1.

See, the day begins to break,
And the light shoots like a streak
Of subtle fire.

Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, iv. 4.

We'll rob the sea, and from the subtle air Fetch her inhabitants to supply our fare.

Dekker and Ford, Sun's Darling, v. 1.

2. Same as subtilty, 2.

Can I do him all the mischief imaginable, and that easily, safely, and successfully, and so applaud myself in my power, my wit, and my subtle contrivances?

South, Sermons, III. iii.

Besides functional truth, there is always a subtle and highly ornamental play of lines and surfaces in these fanciful creatures [grotesques in medieval sculpture].

C. H. Moore, Gothic Architecture, p. 268.

3. Sly; insinuating; artful; cunning; crafty; deceitful; treacherous: as, a subtle adversary; a subtle scheme. Also subtile.

Play thou the subtle spider; weave fine nets
To ensnare her very life.

Middleton and Dekker, Roaring Girl, i. 1.

The Uthi, saith he, were the subtlest beggars of all men in the world.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 151.

The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field.

Milton, P. L., vii. 495.

4. Cunningly devised; artfully contrived or handled; ingenious; clever: as, a subtle stratagem. Also subtile.

There is nowhere a more subtle machinery than that of the British Cabinet. . . . These things may be pretty safely asserted; that it is not a thing made to order, but a growth; and that no subject of equal importance has been so little studied. Gladstone, Might of Right, p. 161.

5. Characterized by acuteness and penetration of mind; sagacious; discerning; discriminating; shrewd; quick-witted: as, a subtle understanding; subtle penetration or insight. Also subtile.

She is too subtle for thee; and her smoothness,
Her very silence and her patience,
Speak to the people, and they pity her.

Shak., As you Like it, i. 3. 79.

Scott . . . evinces no very subtle perception of the spiritual mysteries of the universe.

Whipple, Ess. and Rev., I. 321.

The brave impetuous heart yields everywhere
To the subtle, contriving head.

M. Arnold, Empedocles on Etna.

The name of the Subtle Doctor, we are told, was the thirty-sixth on the list, and the entry recording his death ran as follows:—D. P. Fr. Joannes Scotus, sacre theologie professor, Doctor Subtilis nominatus, quondam lector Colonia, qui obiit Anno 1308, vi. Idus Novembrii.

N. and Q., 7th ser., VII. 452.

6†. Made carefully level; smooth; even.

Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I have tumbled past the throw.

Shak., Cor., v. 2. 20.

The subtlest bowling-ground in all Tartary.

B. Jonson, Chloridia.

7. Ingenious; skilful; clever; handy: as, a subtle operator. Also subtile.—Syn. 3. Cunning, Artful, Sly, etc. (see cunning), designing, acute, keen, Jesuitical.—5. Sagacious, Sage, Knowing, etc. (see astute), deep, profound.

subtleness (sut'1-nes), n. [< subtle + -ness. Cf. subtilness.] The quality of being subtle, in any sense.

subtlety (sut'1-ti), n.; pl. subtleties (-tiz). [Cf. subtilty; < ME. sottille, sottyle, sottelle, sottile, < OF. sottilete, sottilete, later subtilite (> E. subtilty), < L. subtilitas (-s), fineness, slenderness, acuteness: see subtilty, and cf. subtle, subtile.] 1. Same as subtilty, 1.

Naught ties the soul, her subtlety is such.

Sir J. Davies, Immortal, of Soul, x.

2. Acuteness of intellect; delicacy of discrimination or penetration; intellectual activity; subtilty.

Although it may seem that the ability to deceive is a mark of subtlety or power, yet the will testifies without doubt of malice and weakness.

Descartes, Meditations (tr. by Veitch), iv.

Uttled with much humour fine subtlety of apprehension.

W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 15.

3. Same as subtilty, 2.—4. Slyness; artifice; cunning; craft; stratagem; craftiness; artfulness; williness. Also subtilty.

For, in the wily snake

Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit and native subtlety

Proceeding. Milton, P. L., ix. 93.

5. That which is subtle or subtile. Also subtilty, (a) That which is fine-drawn or intricate.

My father delighted in subtleties of this kind, and listened with infinite attention.

Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iv. 29.

(b) That which is intellectually acute or nicely discriminating.

The delicate and infinite subtleties of change and growth discernible in the spirit and the speech of the greatest among poets.

Swinburne, Shakespeare, p. 7.

(c) That which is of false appearance; a deception; an illusion. [Rare.]

Unlearned in the world's false subtleties.

Shak., Sonnets, cxxxviii.

6†. Same as subtilty, 6.

At the end of the dinner they have certain subtleties, custards, sweet and delicate things.

Lutiner, Misc. Selections.

subtle-witted (sut'1-wit'ed), a. Sharp-witted; crafty.

Shall we think the subtle-witted French,
Conjurers and sorcerers, . . . have contrived his end?

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., i. 1. 25.

subtly (sut'li), adv. [Early mod. E. also suttly; < ME. sotly; < subtle + -ly². Cf. subtilty.] In a subtle manner; with subtlety. (a) Ingeniously; cleverly; delicately; nicely.

I know how suttly greatest Clarks Presume to argue in their learned Works.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, i. 2.

In the nice bee what sense so subtly true
From poisonous herbs extract the healing dew?

Pope, Essay on Man, i. 219.

Substance and expression subtly interblended. J. Caird.

(b) Slyly; artfully; cunningly.

Thou seest

How subtly to detain thee I devise.

Milton, P. L., viii. 207.

(c) Deceitfully; delusively.

Thou proud dream,

That play'st so subtly with a king's repose.

Shak., Hen. V., iv. 1. 275.

subtonic (sub'ton'ik), n. In music, the next tone below the upper tonic of a scale; the leading-tone or seventh, as E in the scale of F. Also called subsemitone.

subtorrid (sub-tor'id), a. Subtropical.

subtract (sub-trakt'), v. t. [Formerly, and still in illiterate use, erroneously substract (so earlier substraction for subtraction), after the F. forms, and by confusion with abstract, extract; < L. subtractus, pp. of subtrahere (> It. sottrarre = Sp. subtracar, sustraer = Pg. subtrahir = F. soustraire = G. subtrahiren = Sw. Dan. subtrahera = Dan. subtrahere), draw away from under, take away by stealth, carry off, < sub, under, + trahere, draw, drag: see tract. Cf. abstract, extract, protract, retract, etc.] To withdraw or take away, as a part from a whole; deduct.

All material products consumed by any one, while he produces nothing, are so much subtracted, for the time, from the material products which society would otherwise have possessed. J. S. Mill, Polit. Econ., I. iii. § 4.

=Syn. Subtract, Deduct. See deduct.

subtractor (sub-trak'ter), n. [< subtract + -er¹.] 1. One who subtracts.—2. A subtrahend.

subtraction (sub-trak'shon), n. [Formerly, and still in illiterate use, substraction (= D. substraktion), < OF. substraction, soustraction, F. soustraction = Sp. sustraccion = Pg. subtracção = It. sottrazione = G. subtraction = Sw. Dan. subtraktion, < L. subtractio(n)-, a drawing back, taking away, < subtrahere, pp. subtractus, draw away, take away: see subtract.] 1. The act or operation of subtracting, or taking a part from a whole.

The colour of a coloured object, as seen by transmitted light, is produced by subtraction of the light absorbed from the light incident upon the object.

A. Daniell, Prin. of Physics, p. 450.

2. Specifically, in arith. and alg., the taking of one number or quantity from another; the operation of finding the difference between two numbers.

Subtraction diminisheth a grosse sum by withdrawing of other from it, so that subtraction or rebation is nothing else but an arte to withdraw and abate one sum from another, that the remainder may appere. Records, Ground of Artes.

3. In law, a withdrawing or neglecting, as when a person who owes any suit, duty, custom, or service to another withdraws it or neglects to perform it.—4. Detraction. [Rare.]

Of Shakspeare he [Emerson] talked much, and always without a word of subtraction. The Century, XXXI. 624.

subtractive (sub-trak'tiv), a. [= Pg. subtractivo; as subtract + -ive.] 1. Tending to subtract; having power to subtract.—2. In math., having the minus sign (—).

subtrahend (sub'tra-hend), n. [< NL. subtrahendum, neut. of L. subtrahendus, that must be subtracted, fut. pass. part. of subtrahere: see subtract.] In math., the number to be taken from another (which is called the minuend) in the operation of subtraction.

subtranslucent (sub-trans-lū'sent), a. Imperfectly translucent.

subtransparent (sub-trans-pār'ent), a. Imperfectly transparent.

subtransverse (sub-trans-vers'), a. In entom., somewhat broader than long; specifying coxæ which tend to depart from the globose to the transverse form.

subtreasury (sub-trez'ū-ri), n. A branch of the United States treasury, established for convenience of receipt of public moneys under the independent treasury system, and placed in charge of an assistant treasurer of the United States. There are nine subtreasuries, situated in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, and San Francisco.

subtriangular (sub-tri-ang'gū-lār), a. Somewhat triangular; three-sided with uneven sides or with the angles rounded off. Darwin, Fertil. of Orchids by Insects, p. 104.

subtriangulate (sub-tri-ang'gū-lāt), a. In entom., subtriangular.

subtribal (sub'tri-bāl), a. [< subtribe + -al.] Of the classificatory grade of or characterizing a subtribe.

subtribe (sub'trib), n. A division of a tribe; specifically, in zool. and bot., a section or division of a tribe: a classificatory group of no fixed grade. See tribe.

subtriedral (sub-tri-ē'drāl), a. Same as subtri-hedral. Owen.

subtrifid (sub-trī'fid), a. Slightly trifid.

subtrigonal (sub-trig'ō-nāl), a. Nearly or somewhat trigonal. Amer. Jour. Sci., XXIX. 449.

subtrigonate (sub-trig'ō-nāt), a. Same as subtrigonal.

subtrihedral (sub-tri-hē'drāl), a. Somewhat prismatic; somewhat like a three-sided pyramid: as, the subtrihedral crown of a tooth. Also subtridral.

subtriple (sub-trip'l), a. Containing a third or one of three parts: as, 3 is subtriple of 9; having the ratio 1:3. subtriplicate (sub-trip'li-kāt), a. In the ratio of the cube roots: thus, $\sqrt[3]{a}$ to $\sqrt[3]{b}$ is the subtriplicate ratio of a to b.

subtrist (sub-trist'), a. [< L. substristis, somewhat sad, < sub, under, + tristis, sad: see trist.] Somewhat sad or saddened. [Rare.]

But hey! you look subtrist and melancholic.

Scott, Abbot, xxix.

subtrochanteric (sub-trō-kan-ter'ik), a. Situated below the trochanter.

subtropic (sub-trop'ik), a. and n. I. a. Same as subtropical.

II. n. A subtropical region.

There are but two counties [of Florida] in the sub-tropics—Dade and Monroe. Of these Dade has the most equable climate. The Times (Phila.), May 3, 1886.

subtropical (sub-trop'i-kāl), a. Of a climate or other physical character between tropical and temperate; approaching the tropical or torrid zone in temperature; noting a region on the confines of either tropic, or its plants, animals, and other natural productions: as, subtropical America; a subtropical fauna or flora.

subtrude (sub-trūd'), v. t.; pret. and pp. subtruded, ppr. subtruding. [< L. sub, under, + trudere, thrust, press on, drive. Cf. intrude, extrude, protrude, etc.] To insert or place under. [Rare.]

subtutor (sub'tū'tor), n. An under-tutor.

subtympanic (sub-tim-pā-nit'ik), a. Approaching tympanic quality.

subtype (sub'tip), n. In biol., a more special type included in a more general one.

subtypical (sub-tip'i-kāl), a. Not quite typical, or true to the type; somewhat aberrant: noting a condition or relation between typical and aberrant. Compare atypical, etypical.

subucula (sū-buk'ū-lā), n. [L. subucula, a man's undergarment, a shirt, < sub, under, + uere, used also in exuere, put off: see exuvia.] 1. Among the ancient Romans, a man's undertunic.—2. In the Anglo-Saxon Church, an inner tunic worn under the alb. It seems to have served the purpose of a cassock. Rock, Church of our Fathers, i. 460.

Subularia (sū-bū-lā-ri-ā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1737), named from the leaves; < L. subula, an awl.] A genus of polypetalous plants, of the order Cruciferae and tribe Camelineæ. It is characterized by its growing immersed under water, and by its awl-shaped leaves, and its short ovate-globose turgid silicle, with about four seeds. The original species, S. aquatica, is a native of fresh-water lakes of Europe, Siberia, and North America, occurring within the United States in lakes of Maine and New Hampshire, and at Yellowstone lake and Yello Pass, California. A species in Abyssinia is also reported. See subvert.

subulate (sū'bū-lāt), a. [< NL. subulatus, < L.

Subulate Leaves of Juniper (J. niperus communis).

subula, an awl, < suere, sew: see scel.] Awl-shaped; subuliform; in bat., zoöl., etc., slender, more or less cylindrical, and tapering to a point. See awl-shaped, 2.

subulated (sū' bŭ-lā-ted), a. [< subulate + -ed.] Same as subulate.

subulicorn (sū' bŭ-li-kōrn), a. and n. [< NL. subulicornis, < L. subula, an awl, + cornu, horn.] I. a. Having subulate antennae, as an insect: of or pertaining to the Subulicornia.

II. n. A member of the Subulicornia.

Subulicornia (sū' bŭ-li-kōr'ni-ä), n. pl. [NL. (Latreille, in the form Subulicornes), < L. subula, an awl, + cornu, horn.] In Latreille's classification of insects, a division of Neuroptera containing the Odonata of Fabricius, and the Ephemera or Agnathi, or the dragon-flies and May-flies.

subuliform (sū' bŭ-li-fōrm), a. [< L. subula, an awl, + forma, form.] Subulate in form: awl-shaped.

Subulipalpi (sū' bŭ-li-pal'pī), n. pl. [NL., < L. subula, an awl, + palpus, in mod. sense of 'palp.'] In Latreille's system, a group of caraboid beetles, distinguished from the Grandipalpi by the subulate form of the outer palp. It corresponds to the Bembidiidae.

subumbonal (sub-un' bō-nal), a. Situated under the umbones of a bivalve shell.

subumbra (sub-un' bral), a. In Hydrozoa, same as subumbrellar.

subumbrella (sub-um-brel' ŭ), n.; pl. subumbrellae (-ē). [NL., < L. sub, under, + NL. umbrella.] The internal ventral or oral disk of a hydrozoan, as a jellyfish; the muscular layer beneath the umbrella or swimming-bell of a hydromedusa, continuous with the velum. If such an acaliph is likened to a woman's parasol, lined, then the lining is the subumbrella, the covering being the umbrella. Compare cut under Discophora.

subumbrellar (sub-um-brel' ŭr), a. [< subumbrella + -ar.] Of, or having characters of, a subumbrella.

subuncinate (sub-un' si-nāt), a. Imperfectly uncinat or hooked.

subundation (sub-un-dā'shon), n. [< L. sub, under, + undare, overflow: see ound, inundation.] A flood; a deluge. Hulocet.

subungual, subungual (sub-ung' gwāl, -gwī-āl), a. Situated under the nail, claw, or hoof.

Subungulata (sub-ung-gŭ-lā' tŭ), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of subungulatus: see subungulate.] 1. The Ungulata polydactyla, or polydactyl hoofed quadrupeds, including the existing Hyraeoida and Proboscidea, with the fossil Amblypoda, having a primitive or archetypal carpus, with the os magnum of the distal row of carpal bones articulating mainly with the lunare, or with the cuneiform, but not with the scaphoid. See Ungulata.—2t. In Illiger's classification (1811), a family of rodents whose claws are somewhat hoof-like, as the paca, agouti, guinea-pig, and capibara. See Caviidae.

subungulate (sub-ung' gŭ-lāt), a. and n. [< NL. subungulatus, < L. sub, under, + LL. unguilatus, unguilate, < L. ungula, a hoof.] I. a. Hoofed, but with several digits, and thus not typically unguilate; having the characters of the Subungulata, 1. See ungulate, and compare solidungulate.

II. n. A member of the Subungulata, 1. as the elephant or the hyrax.

suburb (sub' ərb), n. and a. [< ME. suburbe, suburbe, < OF. suburbe, usually in pl. suburbes, = Sp. Pg. suburbia, < L. suburbium, an outlying part of a city, a suburb, < sub, under, near, + urbs, city: see urban.] I. n. 1. An outlying part of a city or town; a part outside of the city boundaries but adjoining them: often used in the plural to signify loosely some part near a city: as, a garden situated in the suburbs of London. The form suburbs was formerly often used as a singular.

"In the suburbes of a town," quod he,
"Lurking in herces and in lanes blynde."
Chaucer, Prolog, to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 104.

From which Northward is the Market-place and St. Nicolas's Church, from whence for a good way shoots out a Suburb to the North-east, . . . and each Suburb has its particular Church.

Defoe, Tour through Great Britain, III. 213. (Davies.)

A small part only spreads itself on to Bua, where it begins to climb the hills. . . . This outlying part, which contains two churches, may pass as a suburb, a Peraia.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 179.

2. The confines; the outskirts.

The suburb of their straw-built citadel.
Milton, P. L., l. 773.

This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call Death.
Longfellow, Resignation.

II. † a. Suburban; suited to the suburbs, or to the less well regulated parts of a city.

Now, if I can but hold him up to his height, as it is happily begun, it will do well for a suburb humour; we may hap have a match with the city, and play him for forty pound. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, l. 2.

A low humour, not flattered with urbanity; fitted to the tastes of the inferior people who usually reside in the suburbs.
Whalley, Note at "humour" in the above passage.

Some great man sure that 's asham'd of his kindred; perhaps some Suburb Justice, that sits o' the skirts o' the City, and lives by 't.
Brome, Sparagus Garden, il. 3.

suburban (sub-ərb' ban), a. and n. [= Sp. Pg. It. suburbano; < L. suburbannus, situated near the city (of Rome), < sub, under, + urbs, city. (Cf. suburb.)] I. a. Pertaining to, inhabiting, or being in the suburbs of a city.

The old ballad of King Christian Shouted from suburban taverna.
Longfellow, To an Old Danish Song-book.

II. n. One who dwells in the suburbs of a city.

suburbanism (sub-ərb' ban-izm), n. [< suburban + -ism.] The character or state of being suburban. Mrs. Humphrey Ward, Robert Elsmere, II. xi.

suburbed (sub' ərbd), a. [< suburb + -ed.] Having a suburb. [Rare.]

Bottreaux Castle, . . . suburbed with a poorer market town.
R. Carew, Survey of Cornwall, fol. 120.

suburbial (sub-ərb' bi-āl), a. [< L. suburbium, suburb (see suburb), + -al.] Same as suburban. T. Watson, Hen. IV., i. 2., note.

suburbian (sub-ərb' bi-an), a. [< OF. suburbien, < *ML. suburbianus, < L. suburbium, suburb: see suburb. Cf. suburban.] Same as suburban. Dryden, Mac Flecknoe, l. 83.

Take me e're a shop suburbian
That selles anch ware.
Times' Whistle (E. E. T. S.), p. 72.

suburbican (sub-ərb' bi-kan), a. [For suburbicarian.] Same as suburban. Bp. Gauden, Tears of the Church, p. 27. (Davies.)

suburbicarian (sub-ərb' bi-kā' ri-an), a. [< LL. suburbicarius, situated near the city (of Rome), < L. sub, under, near, + urbs, city. Cf. suburb, suburban.] Being near the city: an epithet applied to the provinces of Italy which composed the ancient diocese of Rome. The name suburbicarian churches is by some restricted to those that are within a hundred miles of Rome, or, as at a later period, the districts in central and southern Italy and the Italian islands, since this circuit was under the authority of the prefect of the city. Certain Roman Catholic scholars, however, consider it to have included and still to include all the churches of the Western Church.

The Pope having stretched his authority beyond the bounds of his suburbicarian precincts.
Barrow, Pope's Supremacy.

suburbicary (sub-ərb' bi-kā' ri), a. [< LL. suburbicarius; see suburbicarian.] Same as suburbicarian.

subursine (sub-ərb' sin), a. and n. I. a. Somewhat ursine; bear-like to some extent; representing the arctoid series of carnivores subtypically; procyoniform or racoon-like.

II. n. A subursine carnivore; one of several small animals of the arctoid or ursine series, as the racoon, the coati, and the panda.

subvaginal (sub-vaj' i-nal), a. Placed within or on the inner side of a vaginal or sheathing membrane.

subvarietal (sub-vā' ri' e-tal), a. Varying slightly; having the character of a subvariety.

subvariety (sub-vā' ri' e-ti), n.; pl. subvarieties (-tiz). A subordinate variety: the further and minor modification of a variety: a strain differing little from one more comprehensive, as among domestic animals, or cultivated plants.

subvene (sub-vēn'), v. i.; pret. and pp. subvenire, subvening. [< F. subvenire = Sp. subvenir, relieve, supply, < L. subvenire, come to aid, relieve, succor, < sub, under, + venire, come: see come. Cf. convene, etc.] To come under, as a support or stay; arrive or happen, especially so as to prevent or obviate something.

A future state must needs subvene, to prevent the whole edifice from falling into ruin.
Warburton, Bolingbroke's Philosophy, iv.

subventaneous (sub-ven-tā' nē-us), a. [< L. sub, under, + ventus, wind, + -aneus.] Pertaining to, of the nature of, or caused by wind; windy. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iii. 21.

subvention (sub-ven'shon), n. [< F. subvention = Sp. subvencion, < LL. subventio(n)], a rendering of aid, assistance, < L. subvenire, relieve, subvene: see subvene.] 1. The act of coming under.

The subvention of a cloud which raised him from the ground.
Stackhouse.

2. The act of coming to the relief of some one; something granted in aid; support; subsidy. For specific use, see under subsidy.

The largesses to the Roman people, and the subventions to the provinces in aid of sufferers from earthquakes.
C. T. Newton, Art and Archaeol., p. 131.

= Syn. 2. Subsidy, Subvention. See subsidy. subvention (sub-ven'shon), v. t. [< subvention, n.] To give aid to; assist pecuniarily.

The Revue Européenne (1859) was at first subventioned, like the Revue Contemporaine.
Encyc. Brit., XVIII. 540.

subventitious (sub-ven-tish' ŭs), a. [< subvention + -itious.] Affording subvention or relief; aiding; supporting. Trquair, tr. of Labelais, iii. 33.

subvermiform (sub-vēr' mi-fōrm), a. [< L. sub, under, + vermis, a worm, + forma, form.] Shaped somewhat like a worm.

subverset (sub-vēr's'), v. t. [< L. subversus, pp. of subvertere, subvert: see subvert.] To subvert. Spenser, F. Q., III. xii. 42.

subversed (sub' vērst), a. Same as subversed.

subversion (sub-vēr'shon), n. [= F. subversio = Sp. subversion, subversion = Pg. subversão = It. subversione, < L. subversio(n)], an overthrow, ruin, destruction, < subvertere, overturn, subvert: see subvert.] 1. The act of subverting or overthrowing, or the state of being overthrowing; entire overthrow; utter ruin; destruction.

Subversion of thy harmless life.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 208.

The subversion [by a storm] of woods and timber.
Evelyn.

Nothing can be so gratifying and satisfactory to a rightly disposed mind as the subversion of imposture by the force of ridicule.
Landor, Lucian and Timotheus.

2. The cause of overthrow or destruction.

It may be truly affirm'd he [the Pope] was the subversion and fall of that Monarchy, which was the hoisting of him.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

= Syn. 1. Overturning, downfall, demolition. See subvert.

subversory (sub-vēr'shon- ŭ-ri), a. [< subversion + -ary.] Destructive; subversive.

subversive (sub-vēr'siv), a. [= F. subversif = Sp. subversivo, subversivo = Pg. subversivo; as subverse + -ive.] Tending to subvert; having a tendency to overthrow and ruin: with af.

Utterly subversive of liberty.
A. Tucker, Light of Nature, II. iii. 25.

From mere superstition may arise a systematized polytheism, which in every stage of growth or decay is subversive of all high religious aims.
Dawson, Nature and the Bible, p. 28.

subvert (sub-vért'), v. t. [< F. subvertir = Sp. subvertir = Pg. subvertere = It. sorvertere, sorvertire, < L. subvertere, overturn, upset, overthrow, < sub, under, + vertere, turn: see verse. Cf. evert, invert, pervert, etc.] To overthrow; overturn; ruin utterly; destroy.

Wo worth these gifts! they subvert justice every where.
Latimer, 3d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1549.

Those books tend not so much to corrupt honest living as they do to subvert trewe Religion.
Ascham, The Scholemaster, v. 79.

Razeth your cities and subverts your towns.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ii. 3. 65.

The tempest of wind being south-west, which subverted, besides huge trees, many houses.
Evelyn, Diary, Feb. 17, 1662.

This would subvert the principles of all knowledge.
Locke.

In Rome the oligarchy was too powerful to be subverted by force.
Macaulay, Mitford's Hist. Greece.

= Syn. Overthrow, invert, etc. See overturn.

subvertebral (sub-vēr' tē-bral), a. Placed under a vertebra; lying under the vertebral or spinal column: subspinal or hypaxial.—Subvertebral aorta, the aorta; especially, one of the primitive aorta, as distinguished from the definitive aorta. See aorta.—Subvertebral chevron-bone or wedge-bone. See wedge-bone, and cut under chevron-bone.

subverted, subvertent (sub-vēr'ted, -tēt), a. In her., same as reversed.

subverter (sub-vēr'tēr), n. [< subvert + -er.] One who subverts; an overthrower. Waterland, On Occasional Reflections, i., App.

subvertible (sub-vēr'ti-bl), a. [< subvert + -ible.] Capable of being subverted.

subvertical (sub-vēr'ti-ka), a. Almost vertical or perpendicular.

subverticillate (sub-vēr'ti-sil-āt), a. Imperfectly verticillate: forming or disposed in an incomplete or irregular whorl or verticil.

subvesicular (sub-vē-sik'ū-lār), a. Somewhat vesicular; imperfectly vesicular.

subvirate (sub'vi-rāt), n. [< L. sub, under, + viratus, manly, < vir, man: see virile.] One having an imperfectly developed manhood. [Rare.]

Even these poor New England Brahmins of ours, subvirates of an organizable base as they often are, count as full men if their courage is big enough for the uniform which hangs so loosely about their slender figures. O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 9.

subvirile (sub-vir'il), a. Deficient in virility. Roger North, Examen, III. vii. § 62.

subvitreous (sub-vit'rē-us), a. More or less imperfectly vitreous; vitreous in part.

sub voce (sub vō'sē), [L.: sub, under; voce, abl. of vox, voice, a word: see voce.] Under a word specified: a common dictionary reference. Abbreviated s. v.

subway (sub'wā), n. An underground way: an underground passage for traffic, or to contain gas- and water-mains, telegraph-wires, etc.

subworker (sub'wér'kér), n. A subordinate worker or helper. South.

subzonal (sub-zō'nal), a. 1. Somewhat zonal or zony, as the placenta of some mammals.— 2. Lying below a zone, belt, or girdle: noting a membrane between the zona radiata and the umbilical vesicle of a mammalian embryo.

subzone (sub'zōn), n. A subdivision of a zone. Quart. Jour. Geol. Soc., XLIV. 403.

suc- See sub-.

succade (su-kād'), n. [Also sucket (as if < suck + -et); appar. < L. succus, juice, liquor, + -ade.] A sweetmeat: green fruits and citron, candied and preserved in syrup. Defoe.—Succade gourd. See squash².

succatashit, n. Same as succotash. J. F. Cooper.
succedaneus (suk-sē-dā'nē-us), a. [< L. succedaneus, succidaneus, that follows after or fills the place of something, < succedere, follow after, succeed: see succeed.] Pertaining to or acting as a succedaneum; supplying the place of something else; being or employed as a substitute.—Succedaneous end, an end sought in default of the principal end.

succedaneum (suk-sē-dā'nē-um), n.; pl. succedanea (-ā). [N.L., neut. of succedaneus: see succedaneus.] One who or that which supplies the place of another; that which is used for something else: a substitute.

I would have a gentleman know how to make these medicines himself, and afterwards prepare them with his own hands, it being the manner of apothecaries so frequently to put in the succedanea that no man is sure to find with them medicines made with the true drugs which ought to enter into the composition when it is exotic or rare. Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Life (ed. Howells), p. 44.

Prudence . . . is a happy succedaneum to genius. Goldsmith, Voltaire.

Caput succedaneum. See caput.
succedent (suk-sē'dent), n. [< ME. succedent. < L. succedent(-s), ppr. of succedere, follow after: see succeed.] 1. A follower; a succeder.

So maketh to crafte nature a succedent. Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 101.

2. That which follows or results.
Such is the mutability of the inconstant Vulgar, desirous of new things but never contented, despising the time being, extolling that of their forefathers, and ready to act any mischief to try by alteration the succedent. E. Fannant (?), Hist. of Edw. II., p. 143.

3. In astrol., a house about to succeed or follow the angular houses. The succedent houses are the second, fifth, eighth, and eleventh. Skeat.

The lord of the assendent, sey they . . . is fortunate when he . . . is in a succedent, whereas he is in his dignite and comforted with friendly aspects of planetes and wel reserved. Chaucer, Astrolabe, ll. 4.

succeed (suk-sēd'), v. [< OF. succeder, F. succéder = Sp. suceder = Pg. suceder = It. succedere, succidere, succeed, < L. succedere, go below, go under, go from under, mount, also go near, come near, approach, follow after, follow, succeed, go well, prosper, < sub, under, + cedere, go: see cede.] 1. To follow; come after; be subsequent or consequent to.

The curse of heaven and men succeed their evils! Shak., Pericles, i. 4. 104.

Those destructive effects . . . succeeded the curse. Sir T. Broune, Vulg. Err., v. 4.

Hypocrisy in one age is generally succeeded by atheism in another. Addison, Spectator, No. 119.

2. To take the place of; be heir or successor to. Not Amurath an Amurath succeeds, But Harry Harry. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 2. 48.

3. To fall heir to; inherit. [Rare.]
Else let my brother die, If not a feodary, but only he, Owe and succeed thy weakness. Shak., M. for M., il. 4. 123.

4†. To prosper; give success to.

God was pleased so far to succeed their . . . endeavours that a stop was put to the fury of the fire. Stillingfleet, Sermons, I. i.

II. intrans. 1. To follow; be subsequent; come after; come next; come in the place of another or of that which has preceded.

Enjoy, till I return, Short pleasures; for long toils are to succeed. Milton, P. L., iv. 535.

The pure law Of mild equality and peace succeeds To faiths which long have held the world in awe. Shelley, Revolt of Islam, iv. 15.

The succeeding Legend has long been an established favourite with all of us. Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 70.

2. To become heir; take the place of one who has died; specifically, to ascend a throne after the removal or death of the occupant.

No woman shall succeed in Salique land. Shak., Hen. V., I. 2. 39.

Rodolph succeeded in the See of Canterbury, but not till five Years after the Death of Anselm. Baker, Chronicles, p. 41.

3. To come down by order of succession; descend; devolve.
A ring the county wears That downward hath succeeded in his house, From son to son, some four or five descents. Shak., All's Well, iii. 7. 23.

4. To arrive at a happy issue; be successful in any endeavor; meet with success; obtain the object desired; accomplish what is attempted or intended.

'Tis almost impossible for poets to succeed without ambition. Dryden.

The surest way not to fail is to determine to succeed. Sheridan. (Imp. Dict.)

5. To terminate according to desire; turn out successfully; have the desired result: as, his plan succeeded admirably.—6†. To descend.

Or will you to the cooler cave succeed? Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Eclogues, v.

7†. To approach by following. Spenser, F. Q. VI. iv. 8. = Syn. 1. Follow, Succeed, Enue. See follow.

—4 and 5. To prosper, flourish, thrive.

succedant (suk-sē'dant), a. [< F. succédant. < L. succedent(-s), following: see succedent.] In her., following; especially, following one another: noting several hearings of the same sort, especially beasts or birds.

succeder (suk-sō'dér), n. [< succeed + -er.] One who succeeds; one who follows or comes in the place of another; a successor. Shak., Rich. III. v. 5. 30.

succeeding (suk-sē'ding), n. [Verbal n. of succeed, v.] 1. The act of one who succeeds.—2†. Consequence; result.

Laf. Is it not a language I speak? Par. A most harsh one, and not to be understood without bloody succeeding. Shak., All's Well, ii. 3. 199.

succent (suk-sent'), v. t. [< L. succentus, pp. of succinere, succunere. sing to, accompany, agree, < sub, under, + canere, sing: see chant.] To sing the close or second part of. (See the quotation. [Rare.]

One voice sang the first part of a verse (as we say, incepted it), and the rest of the congregation all together succented it—that is, sang the close of it. Dict. of Christ. Antiq., p. 1741.

succentor (suk-sen'tor), n. [< L.L. succentor, an accompanier in singing, a promoter, < L. succinere, succunere, sing to, accompany, agree: see succent.] 1. In music: (a) One who sings a lower or bass part. (b) A precentor's deputy: a subchanter charged with the performance of the precentor's duties in his absence or under his direction. Also subcantor, subchanter.—2†. An inciter.

The prompter and succentor of these cruel enterludes. Holland, tr. of Ammianus Marcellinus (1609). (Nares.) succenturiat, v. t. [< L. succenturiatus, pp. of succenturiare, receive into a century, substitute, < sub, under, + centuria, a century: see century.] To fill up the number of (a band of soldiers). Bailey, 1731.

succenturiate (suk-sen-tū'ri-āt), a. [< L. succenturiatus, pp.: see the verb.] Secondary or subsidiary to; substituted for, or as it were taking the place of: applied in anatomy to the adrenals or suprarenal capsules, formerly called renes succenturiati.

success (suk-ses'), n. [= OF. succés, succéz, F. succès = Sp. suceso = Pg. sucesso = It. successo. < L. succensus, an advance, a succession, a happy issue, success, < succedere, pp. succensus, follow, go well, succeed: see succeed.] 1†. Succession; order of sequence. Shak., W. T., i. 2. 394.

Then all the sonnes of these five brethren raynd By dew successes. Spenser, F. Q., II. x. 45.

2. The termination of any affair, whether happy or (now rarely) unhappy; issue; result; consequence.

Go bid the priests do present sacrifice, And bring me their opinions of success. Shak., J. C., ii. 2. 5.

In Italy the Spaniard hath also had ill successes often displays itself towards enemies. Hocell, Letters, ii. 43.

3. A favorable or prosperous termination of anything attempted; a termination which answers the purpose intended; prosperous issue; often, specifically, the gaining of money, position, or other advantage.

Or teach with more success her son The vices of the time to shun. Waller, Epitaph on Sir George Speke.

The good humour of a man elated by successes often displays itself towards enemies. Macculay, Dryden.

They follow success, and not skill. Therefore as soon as the success stops and the admirable man blunders, they quit him; . . . and they transfer the repute of judgment to the next prosperous person who has not yet blundered. Emerson, Fortune of the Republic.

Success in its vulgar sense, the gaining of money and position. O. W. Holmes, Emerson, xi.

4. A successful undertaking or attempt; what is done with a favorable result: as, political or military successes.

Could any Soul have imagined that this Isle [Great Britain] would have produc'd such Monsters as to rejoice at the Turks good Successes against Christians? Hocell, Letters, ii. 62.

5. One who or that which succeeds, especially in a way that is public or notorious: as, the speech was a success; he is a social success. [Colloq.]

successantly, adv. In succession. Shak., Tit. And., iv. 4. 113.

successary, n. [< success + -ary.] Succession. [Rare.]

The glory Of my peculiar honours, not deriv'd From successary, but purchas'd with my blood. Beau. and Fl., Laws of Candy, l. 2.

successful (suk-ses'fūl), a. [< success + -ful.] Having or resulting in success; obtaining or terminating in the accomplishment of what is wished or intended; often, specifically, having succeeded in obtaining riches, high position, or other objects of ambition; prosperous; fortunate.

And welcome, nephews, from successful wars. Shak., Tit. And., i. 1. 172.

But, besides the tempting profits of an author's night, which . . . could hardly average less than from three to four hundred pounds, there was nothing to make the town half so fond of a man . . . as a successful play. J. Forster, Life and Adventures of Oliver Goldsmith, p. 377.

= Syn. Prosperous, etc. (see fortunate); effectual.

successfully (suk-ses'fūl-ē), adv. In a successful manner; with a favorable termination of what is attempted; prosperously; favorably.

successfulness (suk-ses'fūl-nēs), n. The character or state of being successful; prosperous conclusion; favorable event; success.

succession (suk-sesh'ōn), n. [< F. succession = Sp. sucesion = Pg. sucessão = It. successione. < L. successio(n-), a following after, a coming into another's place, succession, success, < succedere, pp. succensus, follow after, succeed: see succeed.] 1. A following of things in order; consecution; also, a series of things following one another, either in time or in place.

Another idea . . . is . . . constantly offered us by what passes in our own minds; and that is the idea of succession. For if we look immediately into ourselves, and reflect on what is observable there, we shall find our ideas always . . . passing in train, one going and another coming without intermission. Locke, Human Understanding, II. vii. 9.

The succession of his ideas was now rapid. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, ii. 5.

The leaves of "evergreens" . . . are not cast off until the appearance of a new succession. W. B. Carpenter, in Grove's Corr. of Forces, p. 418.

The succession of certain strong emotions passed through yesterday is easier to recall than the emotions themselves. H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 105.

2. The act or right of succeeding to the place, proper dignity, functions, or rights of another; the act or right of succeeding or coming to an inheritance; the act or right of entering upon an office, rank, etc., held by another: as, he holds the property by the title of succession; also, a line of persons so succeeding.

Slander lives upon succession, For ever housed where it gets possession. Shak., C. of E., iii. 1. 105.

Especially—(a) The act of succeeding under established custom or law to the dignity and rights of a sovereign; also, a line of sovereigns thus following one another.

King Richard being dead, the Right of Succession remained in Arthur, Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Baker, Chronicles, p. 63.

(b) The act of succeeding under established custom or law to the dignity and rights of a sovereign; also, a line of sovereigns thus following one another.

King Richard being dead, the Right of Succession remained in Arthur, Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Baker, Chronicles, p. 63.

(c) The act of succeeding under established custom or law to the dignity and rights of a sovereign; also, a line of sovereigns thus following one another.

King Richard being dead, the Right of Succession remained in Arthur, Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Baker, Chronicles, p. 63.

(d) The act of succeeding under established custom or law to the dignity and rights of a sovereign; also, a line of sovereigns thus following one another.

King Richard being dead, the Right of Succession remained in Arthur, Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Baker, Chronicles, p. 63.

(e) The act of succeeding under established custom or law to the dignity and rights of a sovereign; also, a line of sovereigns thus following one another.

King Richard being dead, the Right of Succession remained in Arthur, Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Baker, Chronicles, p. 63.

(f) The act of succeeding under established custom or law to the dignity and rights of a sovereign; also, a line of sovereigns thus following one another.

King Richard being dead, the Right of Succession remained in Arthur, Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Baker, Chronicles, p. 63.

(g) The act of succeeding under established custom or law to the dignity and rights of a sovereign; also, a line of sovereigns thus following one another.

King Richard being dead, the Right of Succession remained in Arthur, Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Baker, Chronicles, p. 63.

(h) The act of succeeding under established custom or law to the dignity and rights of a sovereign; also, a line of sovereigns thus following one another.

King Richard being dead, the Right of Succession remained in Arthur, Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Baker, Chronicles, p. 63.

(i) The act of succeeding under established custom or law to the dignity and rights of a sovereign; also, a line of sovereigns thus following one another.

King Richard being dead, the Right of Succession remained in Arthur, Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet. Baker, Chronicles, p. 63.

(j) The act of succeeding under established custom or law to the dignity and rights of a sovereign; also, a line of sovereigns thus following one another.

These 2 Kings they have at present are not any way related in their Descent or Families, nor could I learn how long their Government has continued in the present form; but it appears to have been for some successions.

Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 67.

This hereditary right should be kept so sacred as never to break the succession.

Swift, Sentiments of a Ch. of Eng. Man, II.

Although their [the Beauforts'] legitimation by pope and parliament was complete, they were excluded from the succession by Henry IV. so far as he had power to do it.

Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 347.

(b) Eccles., the act of succeeding to clerical office or receiving transmitted authority through ordination; a series of persons so succeeding. See apostolic succession, under apostolic.

We can justly that [mission] of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession from Christ himself: a succession which hath already continued longer than the Aeronical priesthood, and will, we doubt not, still continue till the church militant and time itself shall be no more.

Ep. Atterbury, Sermons, I. xviii.

3. An order or series of descendants; lineage; successors collectively; heirs.

Cassiblan. . . for him
And his succession, granted Rome a tribute, Yearly three thousand pounds.

Shak., Cymbeline, III. 1. 8.

4. In biol., descent with modification in unbroken evolutionary series; the sequence of organic forms thus developed; the fact or the result of evolution or development along any line of descent or during any period of time.—

5†. A person succeeding to rank, office, or the like. Milton.—6. In music, same as progression (of parts) or as sequence. 5.—7. In psychol., suggestion; association. Sir W. Hamilton.—

Apostolic succession. See apostolic.—Arms of succession, in her. See arm², 7 (d).—Conjunct succession. Same as conjunct motion (which see, under conjunct).—

Law of succession, the law regulating inheritance. (See descent and distribution.) In civil law succession is either singular or universal. It is the former when it passes one or more separate rights, the latter when all the rights as an aggregate are considered to pass.—

Lucrative succession. See lucrative.—Right of succession, the right to succeed; the right to take by succession.—

Succession Act, Succession to the Crown Act. See Limitation of the Crown Act, under limitation.—

Succession bath, a bath in which cold and hot water are alternately applied.—

Succession Duty Act, an English statute of 1853 (16 and 17 Vict., c. 61) which imposed a tax upon property transmitted by will or operation of law. A class of somewhat similar statutes is known as collateral-inheritance tax laws.—

Succession of crops, in agri., the rotation of crops. See rotation.—

Succession tax, in hmo., a tax on property passing by succession; a tax on the devolution of property by inheritance or will. A collateral-inheritance tax is a succession tax on the devolution of property on others than direct descendants or progenitors. A legacy tax is a succession tax on devolution in some or all cases by will.—

Teeth of succession. See tooth.—

Title by succession. (a) Title acquired by inheritance, etc. (b) More specifically, the continuity of title in a corporation notwithstanding successive changes of membership.—

Wars of succession, wars undertaken for the purpose of settling a disputed succession to a throne. The most notable are those of the Spanish Succession (1701–13), of the Austrian Succession (1741–8), and of the Bavarian Succession (1778–9).

Successional (suk-sesh'ōn-əl), a. [< succession + -al.] Relating to succession; implying succession; existing in succession; consecutive: as, "successional tooth," Owen, Anat. of Vertebrates, § 70.

Successionally (suk-sesh'ōn-əl-i), adv. In a successional manner; by way of succession.

Successionist (suk-sesh'ōn-ist), n. [< succession + -ist.] One who insists on the validity and necessity of a given succession of persons or events; especially, one who adheres to the doctrine of apostolic succession.

Successive (suk-ses'iv), a. [= F. successif = Sp. sucesivo = Pg. It. successivo, < ML. successivus, successive, < L. succedere, pp. successus, succeed: see succeed, success.] 1. Following in order or uninterrupted course, either in time or in place, as a series of persons or things; consecutive.

Send the successive ills through ages down. Prior.

2†. Inherited by succession; having or giving the right of succeeding to an inheritance; hereditary.

And countrymen, my loving followers,
Hlead my successive title with your swords.

Shak., Tit. And., I. 1. 4.

This function is successive, and by tradition they teach their eldest sonnes the mysterie of this iniquitie.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 752.

Successive indorsements. See indorsement, 3 (a).

Successively (suk-ses'iv-li), adv. 1. In succession; in a series or uninterrupted order, one following another.

2. By order of succession and inheritance.

But as successively from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own.

Shak., Rich. III., III. 7. 135.

3†. Successfully; fully; completely; entirely. Fairfax. (Imp. Dict.)

Successiveness (suk-ses'iv-nes), n. The state of being successive. Bailey.

Successful (suk-ses'les), a. [< success + -less.] Without success.

Successful wars, and poverty behind.

Dryden, Pal. and Arc., II. 587.

Unsuccessfully (suk-ses'les-li), adv. In a unsuccessful manner; without success. Imp. Dict.

Unsuccessfulness (suk-ses'les-nes), n. The state of being unsuccessful; want of success. Imp. Dict.

Successor (suk-ses'or), n. [< F. successeur = Sp. sucesor = Pg. sucessor = It. successore, < L. successor, a follower, one who succeeds, < succedere, follow after, succeed; see succeed.] One who or that which succeeds or follows; one who takes the place which another has left, and sustains the like part or character: correlative to predecessor.

I here declare you rightful successor,
And heir immediate to my crown.

Dryden, Secret Love, v. 1.

The splendid literature of the classic period in Greece and Rome had no successors, but only the feeblest of imitators.

N. A. Rev., CXL. 329.

Singular successor. See singular.

Successorship (suk-ses'or-ship), n. [< successor + -ship.] The state or office of a successor; the position of being in the line of succession.

Successory (suk-ses'ō-ri), a. [< LL. successorius, of or belonging to succession, < successor, one who succeeds; see successor.] Of or pertaining to succession.

Succi, n. Plural of succus.

Succiduous (suk-sid'ū-us), a. [< L. succiduus, sinking down, failing, < succidere, sink down, < sub, under, + cadere, fall; see cadent. Cf. deciduous.] Ready to fall; falling. [Rare.] Imp. Dict.

Succiferous (suk-sif'ē-rus), a. [< L. succus, succus, juice, + -ferre = E. bear; see -ferous.] Producing or conveying sap. Imp. Dict.

Succin (suk'sin), n. [< L. succinum, succinum, amber (usually called electrum).] Amber.

Succinate (suk'si-nāt), n. [< succin(ie) + -ate¹.] A salt of succinic acid.

Succinated (suk'si-nā-ted), a. [< succin(ie) + -ate¹ + -ed².] Combined with or containing succinic acid.

Succinct (suk-singkt'), a. [= F. succinct = Sp. succincto = Pg. It. succinto, < L. succinctus, pp. of succingere, gird below or from below, tuck up, < sub, under, + cingere, gird; see cineture.] 1. Drawn up, or held up, by or as by a girdle or band; passed through the girdle, as a loose garment the folds of which are so retained; hence, unimpeded. [Rare.]

His habit fit for speed succinct. Milton, P. L., III. 643.

Over her broad brow in many a round, . . .
Succinct, as toil prescribes, the hair was wound
In lustrous coils, a natural diadem.

Lowell, Ode for Fourth of July, 1876, l. 1.

2. Compressed into a small compass, especially into few words; characterized by verbal brevity; short; brief; concise; terse: as, a succinct account of the proceedings of the council.

See [man] is stilled a little and succinct world within himself.

Meywood, Hierarchy of Angels, p. 83.

A strict and succinct style is that where you can take away nothing without loss, and that loses to be manifest.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

A tale should be judicious, clear, succinct,
The language plain, and incidents well link'd.

Couper, Conversation, 1. 235.

3. In entom., girdled, as a lepidopterous pupa; having the character of those chrysalids which are supported by a silken thread around the middle. See ent b under Pupilionida. = Syn. 2.

Condensed, Laconic, etc. See concise.

Succinctly (suk-singkt'li), adv. In a succinct manner; briefly; concisely; tersely: as, the facts were succinctly stated.

Succinctness (suk-singkt'nes), n. The state or character of being succinct; brevity; conciseness; terseness: as, the succinctness of a narration.

Succinctorium (suk-singktō'ri-um), n.; pl. succinctoria (-ā). [LL., < L. succinctus, pp. of succingere, gird; see succinct.] A vestment worn on solemn occasions by the Pope, similar in shape to a mantle, and hanging on his left side from a cineture or girdle (also called succinctorium or subcingulum) answering to the lower of the two girdles formerly worn by bishops with a similar pendent ornament, sometimes on both sides. It has been variously explained as originally a towel or cloth, and connected by some with the gremial or the Greek epigonation, or as a purse, at first a pair of purses. It has embroidered upon it an Agnus Dei bearing a banner. Also subinctorium.

Succinctorium (suk-singktō'ri), n.; pl. succinctoria (-riz). [< LL. succinctorium; see succinctorium.] Same as succinctorium.

Succinea (suk-sin'ē-ā), n. [NL. (Drapiez), < L. succineus, succineus, of amber, < succinum, succinum, amber; see succin.] The typical genus of Succineidae; the amber-snails. Also Succinea, Succinea.

Succineidae (suk-si-nē'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Succinea + -idae.] A family of geophilous pulmonate gastropods, typified by the genus Succinea. The shell is more or less developed, spiral, thin, and transparent; the mantle is more or less included; the jaw is surmounted by an accessory quadrangular plate; and the teeth are differentiated into three kinds.

Succinic (suk-sin'ik), a. [< succin + -ic.] Of or pertaining to amber; obtained from amber.—

Succinic acid, C₁₀H₈O₄, a dibasic acid crystallizing in white monoclinic tables having a faint acid taste and quite soluble in water. It is obtained by the dry distillation of amber, by the fermentation of calcium malate, and in small amount is a product of a variety of fermentations. It was formerly employed in medicine, under the name of salt of amber. Also called acid of amber.

Succinite (suk'si-nit), n. [< succin + -ite².] 1. An amber-colored variety of lime-garnet.—

2. A name given to amber.

Succinous (suk'si-nus), a. [< L. succinus, succinus, of amber; see succin.] Pertaining to or resembling amber.

Succirubra-bark (suk-si-rō'brä-bärk), n. [< NL. succirubra, specific name, fem. of "succiruber, < L. succus, succus, juice, + ruber, red; see red.] The bark of Cinchona succirubra; red cinchona.

Succise (suk-sis'), a. In bot., appearing as if cut or broken off at the lower end. J. Gray.

Succision† (suk-siz'h'on), n. [< LL. succisio(n)-, a cutting off or away, < L. succidere, pp. succidens, cut off, cut from below, < sub, under, + cadere, cut.] The act of cutting off or down.

In the succision of trees. Bacon. (Imp. Dict.)

Succivorous (suk-siv'ō-rus), a. [< L. succus, succus, juice, + vorare, devour.] Feeding upon the juices of plants, as an insect.

Succlamation† (suk-lā-mā'sh'on), n. [< L. succlamatio(n)-, a crying out, < succlamare, cry out, exclaim after or in reply, < sub, under, after, + clamare, cry out; see clām.] A shouting after; a calling after, as to deter.

Why may we not also, by some such succlamations as these, call off young men to the better side?

Plutarch's Morals (trans.), III. 412.

Succor, succour (suk'or), v. t. [< ME. socouren, sokouren, souccoren, socoren, succurn, < OF. succurre, soscorre, soscorrer, soscorrir, later secourir, F. secourir = Pr. socorre, secorre, secorrer = Sp. socorrer = Pg. socorrer = It. soccorrere, < L. succurrere, subcurrere, run under, run to the aid of, aid, help, succor, < sub, under, + currere, run; see current.] To help or relieve when in difficulty, want, or distress; assist and deliver from suffering.

And anon the Cristene men kneelden to the grounde, and made hire preyres to God, to sokoure hem.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 260.

He is able to succour them that are tempted. Heb. II. 13.

Bethink thee, mayest thou not be born
To raise the crushed and succor the forlorn?

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 106.

Succor, succour (suk'or), n. [< ME. socouren, socours, socurs, sucurs, < OF. succurs, secours, sos-cors, F. secours = Pr. socors, secors = Sp. socorro = Pg. socorro = It. soccorso, < ML. succursus, help, succor, < L. succurrere, help, succor: see succor, v.] 1. Aid; help; assistance.

Thus, alas! withouten his succours,
Twenty tyme yswowned hath she thanne.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1341.

My noble father, . . .
Flying for succour to his servant.

Shak., Hen. VIII., II. 1. 109.

She . . . knew them all, had studied their wants, had again and again felt in what way they might best be succored, could the means of succor only be found.

Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xiv.

2. The person or thing that brings relief; especially, troops serving as an aid or assistance.

Than com the socours on bothe sides, and ther began the bataille a-bowte Gawein fell and longe lastinge.

Martin (E. E. T. S.), II. 198.

The levied succours that should lend him aid.

Shak., I. Hen. VI., IV. 4. 23.

Take up the bodies; mourn in heart, my friends;
You have lost two noble succours; follow me.

Fletcher, Double Marriage, v. 2.

succorable, succourable (suk'or-a-bl), a. [= F. secourable; as succor + -able.] 1. Capable of being succored or relieved; admitting of succor.—2. Affording succor or relief; helpful; helping.

The goodness of God, which is very succorable, aerveth for feet and wings to his servants that are wrongfully traduced. Cleaver, The Book of Proverbs, p. 434. (Lathana.)

succorer, succourer (suk'or-er), n. [ME. socorour; < succor + -er.] One who succors, or affords assistance or relief; a helper; a deliverer.

Socorouris of the said fraternite.

English Guilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 335.

She hath been a succorer of many, and of myself also.

Rom. xvi. 2.

succoresst (suk'or-es), n. [ME. succor + -ess.] A female helper.

Of traury of Troians, O Queene, thee succoresst.

Stanburst, Æneid, i.

succorless, succourless (suk'or-less), a. [ME. succor + -less.] Destitute of succor, help, or relief. Drayton, Queen Isabella to Rich. II.

succory (suk'ō-ri), n. [A corruption of cichory, now chicory: see chicory.] The chicory, Cichorium Intybus. See chicory.—Blue succory, the blue cupidade. See Catananche.—Gum succory, an Old World composite plant, Chondrilla juncea, with straggling branches and small yellow heads, the leaves small except the radical. A narcotic gum is said to be obtained from it on the island of Lemnos. The plant is abundantly naturalized in Maryland and Virginia.—Lamb's-succory, a low stemless composite herb, Arnoseris pusilla, found in central and northern Europe. The acapes bear single small yellow heads.—Poisonous succory, Hyoseris (Apozeris) foetida.—Swine's-succory, the hog-succory or the lamb's-succory. Also called dwarf nippelwort.—Wild succory, the common or wild chicory. (See also hog-succory.)

succose (suk'ōs), a. [L. succus, sucus, juice, + -ose.] Full of juice.

succotash (suk'ō-tash), n. [Also succatash, succatash, succatash; < Amer. Ind. (Narragansett msiekquatash).] A dish consisting of Indian corn (maize) and beans, variously prepared. The early settlers in New England and Virginia found it a favorite dish among the Indians. In winter it was and still is in some parts of New England prepared from hulled corn and dried beans, but it usually consists of green corn and beans, with or without a piece of salt pork or other meat.

According to him [Roger Williams, Key, pp. 208, 221], the Indian msiekquatash was boiled corn whole.

Trans. Amer. Antiq. Soc., IV, 183, note.

The wise Huron is welcome; . . . he is come to eat his succatash with his brothers of the lakes.

J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxxviii.

By and by, the old woman poured the contents of the pot into a wooden trough, and disclosed a smoking mess of the Indian dish denominated succotash—to wit, a soup of corn and beans, with a generous allowance of salt pork.

H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 157.

succour, succourable, etc. See succor, etc.

succub (suk'ub), n. [F. succube, < L. succuba: see succuba.] Same as succuba.

succuba (suk'ū-bā), n.; pl. succubæ (-bæ). [L. succuba, subcuba, m. and f., one who has sexual connection with another, a strumpet, < succumbere (cf. succubare), lie under: see succumb.] A female demon fabled to have sexual connection with men in their sleep.

We'll call him Cacodemon, with his black gib there, his succuba, his devil's seed, his spawn of Phlegethon, that o' my conscience, was bred o' the spume of Cocytus.

Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, v. 2.

succubate (suk'ū-bāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. succubated, pp. succubating. [L. succubatus, pp. of succubare, lie under: see succuba.] To have carnal knowledge of (a man), as a succuba.

succubine (suk'ū-bin), a. [ME. succuba + -ine.] Of the nature of, or characteristic of, a succuba.

Oh happy the slip from his Succubine grip
That saved the Lord Abbot.

Barkam, Ingoldsby Legends, I, 254.

succubous (suk'ū-bus), a. [L. succumbere, lie under (see succuba), + -ous.] In bot., having the anterior margin of one leaf passing beneath the posterior margin of that succeeding it: opposed to incubous: noting the foliage of certain of the Jungermanniaceæ.

succubus (suk'ū-bus), n.; pl. succubi (-bī). [ML. succubus, a masc. form of L. succuba, regarded as fem. only: see succuba. Cf. incubus.] A demon fabled to have sexual intercourse with human beings in their sleep.

So Men (they say), by Hell's Delusions led,
Have ta'en a Succubus to their Bed.

Cowley, The Mistress, Not Fair.

The witches' circle intact, charms undisturbed
That raised the spirit and succubus.

Brentano, King and Book, I, 236.

succula (suk'ū-lī), n.; pl. succulæ (-læ). [Prop. succula; < L. succula, a winch, windlass, capstan.]

A bare axis or cylinder with staves on it to move it round, but no drum.

succulence (suk'ū-lent), n. [ME. succulent (t) + -ce.] The character of being succulent; juiciness; as, the succulence of a peach.

succulency (suk'ū-len-si), n. [As succulence (see -cy).] Same as succulence.

succulent (suk'ū-lent), a. [= F. succulent = Sp. succulento = Pg. succulento = It. succulento, L. succulentus, succulentus, full of juice, sappy, < succus, prop. sucus, juice, < sugere, suck: see suck. Cf. suck.] 1. Full of juice; specifically, in bot., juicy; thick and fleshy: noting plants that have the stems or leaves thick or fleshy and juicy, as in the houseleek and live-for-ever, the orders Cactaceæ, Crassulacæ, etc.

As the leaves are not succulent, little more juice is pressed out of them than they have imbibed.

Cook, First Voyage, i. 13.

Hence—2. Figuratively, affording mental sustenance; not dry.

It occurred to her that when she had known about them [glimpses of Lingon heraldry] a good while they would cease to be succulent themes of converse or meditation, and Mrs. Transome, having known them all along, might have felt a vacuum in spite of them.

George Eliot, Felix Holt, xl.

succulently (suk'ū-lent-li), adv. In a succulent manner; juicily.

succulous (suk'ū-lus), a. [L. succul(ent) + -ous.] Succulent. Imp. Dict.

succumb (su-kum'), v. i. [= F. succomber = Sp. succumbir = Pg. succumbir = It. succumbere, < L. succumbere, lie under, sink down, submit, yield, succumb, < sub, under, + cubare, lie down.] To sink or give way under pressure or superior force; be defeated; yield; submit; hence, to die.

He, too, had finally succumbed, had been led captive in Cæsar's triumph.

Sir E. Creasy, Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World, v.

In general, every evil to which we do not succumb is a benefactor.

Emerson, Compensation.

succumbent (su-kum'bent), a. [ME. succumbent(-t)-s, pp. of succumbere, submit, yield: see succumb.] Yielding; submissive.

Queen Morphandra . . . useth to make nature herself not only succumbent and passive to her desires, but actually subservient and pliable to her transmutations and changes.

Hovell, Parly of Beasta, p. 2. (Davies.)

succumbentes (suk-um-bent'ēt), n. pl. [L., pl. of ppr. of succumbere, submit, fall down: see succumb.] The class of penitents also known as kneelers.

The succumbentes were passing the silver gates on their way out.

J. M. Neale, Eastern Church, i. 210.

succursale (su-kēr'sal), a. [F. succursale, an establishment that contributes to the success of another, a subsidiary branch, < ML. succursus, aid, help, succor: see succor.] Serving as a subsidiary church, or chapel of ease (which see, under chapel).

Not a city was without its cathedral, surrounded by its succursale churches, its monasteries and convents.

Milman, Hist. Latin Christianity, VI, 564.

succus (suk'us), n.; pl. succi (-sī). [NL., < L. succus, prop. sucus, juice, moisture: see suck, succulent.] 1. In anat. and physiol., juice; one of certain fluid secretions of the body specified by a qualifying term.—2. In med., the extracted juice of different plants: as, succus liquoritæ, Spanish licorice.—Succus entericus, intestinal juice, the secretion of the small glands of the intestinal walls. It seems to have more or less feeble amylolytic and proteolytic properties.—Succus gastricus, gastric juice.—Succus pancreaticus, pancreatic juice.

succuss (su-kus'), v. t. [L. succussus, pp. of succutere, fling up, shake up, < sub, under, + quatire, shake, disturb: see quash. Cf. concuss, discuss, percuss.] To shake suddenly for any purpose, as to elicit a splashing sound in pneumothorax.

succussation (suk-ū-sā'shon), n. [L. succussare, pp. succussatus, shake or jerk up and down, freq. < succutere, pp. succussus, fling up: see succuss.] 1. A trot or trotting. [Rare.]

Lifting one foot before and the cross foot behind, which is succussation or trotting. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 6.

2. A shaking; succussion.

By a more frequent and a more convulsive elevation and depression of the diaphragm, and the succussions of the intercostal and abdominal muscles in laughter, to drive the gall and other bitter juices from the gall-bladder . . . down into their duodenums.

Sterne, Tristram Shandy, iv. 22.

succussion (su-kush'on), n. [= F. succussion, < L. succussio(-n-), a shaking, < succutere, shake up: see succuss.] 1. The act of shaking.—2. A shaking; a violent shock.

If the trunk is the principal seat of lesion, as . . . from violent succussion.

J. M. Carnochan, Operative Surgery, p. 111.

3. A method in physical diagnosis which consists in grasping the thorax between both hands and shaking it quickly to elicit sounds, and thus to detect the presence of liquid, etc., in the pleural sacs.—Succussion sound, a splashing sound developed by sudden movements of the body, as in pneumothorax or pneumopyothorax.

succussive (su-kus'iv), a. [L. succussus, a shaking, jolting, < succutere, shake up: see succuss.] Characterized by a shaking motion, especially an up-and-down movement.

such (such), a. and pron. [Early mod. F. also soch, soche; dial. sich, sech, Se. sic, siek, sik, etc.; < ME. such, suchc, soche, sieche, also unassibilated sik, sike, contracted, with loss of w, from sweich, swech, suchc, seych, seyche, itself contracted, with loss of l, from swilich, an assibilated form of swile, swilk, swyll; < AS. swyle, swile, swelc = OS. sulik = OFries. sullik, sellech, selik, selk, salk, sulch, sek, suk = MD. solick, solek, sulek, D. zull = MLG. solik, sollik, solick, solk, LG. sölk, sulc, suk = OHG. sulih, solih, solh, MHG. sulich, solich, solch, G. solch = lecl. slirk (> ME. slike) = OSw. salik, Sw. sliik = Norw. sliik = Dan. sliig = Goth. scalciks, such; < AS., etc., scā, so, + -lic, an adj. formative connected with gelic, like, lic, form. body: see sol and like, -ly, and cf. which, Sc. whilk and thilk, of similar formation with such, and cach, which contains the same terminal element.] 1. a. 1. Of that kind; of the like kind or degree; like; similar. Such always implies from its sense a comparison with another thing, either unexpressed, as being involved in the context (as, we have never before seen such a sight (sc. as this is); we cannot approve such proceedings (sc. as these are); such men (sc. as he is) are dangerous, or expressed, such being then followed by as or that before the thing which is the subject of comparison (as, we have never had such a time as the present; give your children such precepts as tend to make them wiser and better; the play is not such that I can recommend it). As in such constructions often becomes by ellipsis the apparent subject of the verb of the second clause: as, such persons as are concerned in this matter. It is to be noted that, as with other pronominal adjectives, the indefinite article a or an never immediately precedes such, but is placed between it and the noun to which it refers, or such comes after the noun preceded by the article: as, such a man; such an honor; I never saw a man such as he.

Clerk that knowen this sholde kenne lordes,
What David seide of suche men as the sauter telleth.

Piers Plowman (C), viii. 92.

I am soche a fole that I love a-nother better than myself, and haue hir lerned so moche, where though I am thus be-closed.

Merlin (E. E. T. S.), iii. 624.

For truly, such as the noblemen be, such will the people be.

Latimer, Sermon of the Plough.

The variety of the curious objects which it exhibiteth to the spectator is such that a man shall much wrong it to speake a little of it.

Coryat, Crudities, I, 216.

True fortitude glories not in the feats of war as they are such, but as they serve to end War soonest by a victorious Peace.

Milton, Hist. Eng., vi.

There is no place in Europe so much frequented by strangers, whether they are such as come out of curiosity, or such who are obliged to attend the court of Rome on several occasions.

Addison, Remarks on Italy (Works, ed. Bohn, I, 420).

Trade brings men to look each other in the face, and gives the parties the knowledge that these enemies over sea or over the mountain are such men as we, who laugh and grieve, who love and fear as we do.

Emerson, War.

When such is followed by an attributive adjective before the noun, it assumes a quasi-adverbial appearance, as if equivalent to so: as, such terrible deeds; such reckless men; such different views; but it is still properly adjective, as when with the indefinite article: as, such a terrible deed; such a reckless man.

Such terrible impression made the dream.

Shak., Rich. III, i. 4. 63.

In Middle English such appears in another quasi-adverbial use, preceding a numeral, in the sense of 'as much,' or 'as many': as, such seven, 'seven such'—that is, 'seven times as many.'

This town is ful of ladyes al aboute,
And to my doom, fayrer than suche twelve
As ever she was, shal I fynden in some route.

Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 402.

The length is suche ten as the deepnesse.

Pilgrimage of the Manhode, p. 235. (Encyc. Dict.)

Such without the correlative clause with as is often used emphatically, noting a high degree or a very good or very bad kind, the correlative clause being either obvious, as, he did not expect to come to such honor (sc. as he attained), or quite lost from view, as, such a time! he is such a liar!

How have I lost a father! such a father!
Such a one, Decius! I am miserable Beyond expression.

Beau. and Fl., Laws of Candy, i. 2.

2. The same as previously mentioned or specified; not other or different.

A fayr syz to Mannes ye
To see such a cheualrye.

Arthur (ed. Furnivall), I, 300.

Soche was the a-vision that I saugh in my slepe.
Merlin (L. E. T. S.), iii. 632.
 In China they have a holy kind of Liquor made of such sort of Flowers for ratifying and binding of Bargaina.
Howell, Letters, ii. 54.
 In another garden to the east is such another mosque, called by the Mahometans Zalouasa, who pretend also that some holy person is buried there.
Pococke, Description of the East, II. i. 84.
 For such is fate, nor canst thou turn its course
 With all thy rage, with all thy rebel force.
Pope, Iliad, viii. 505.
Such was the transformation of the baronage of early England into the nobility of later times.
Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 299.

3. Of that class: especially in the phrase as such, 'in that particular character.'
 Of onest morth sche cowde rith mosche,
 Too danuce and synghe and othre suche.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 50.
 In it he melted lead for bullets
 To shoot at foes and sometimes pullets,
 To whom he bore so fell a grutch,
 He ne'er gave quarter t' any such.
S. Butler, Hudibras, I. 1. 358.
 Witty men are apt to imagine they are agreeable as such.
Steele, Spectator, No. 386.

4. Some; certain: used to indicate or suggest a person or thing originally specified by a name or designation for which the speaker, for reasons of brevity, of convenience or reserve, or from forgetfulness, prefers to substitute, or must substitute, a general phrase: often repeated, such or such, or such and such (even with a single subject, but in this case implying repetition of action or selection of instances).
 News then was brought unto the king
 That there was sicke a won as hee.
Johnie Arnstrang (Child's Ballads, VI. 251).
 She complayneth of him that, not contented to take the wheate, the bacon, the butter, the oyle, the cheese, to give unto such and such out of y^r doores, but also steleth from her, to give unto his minion, that which she spinneeth at the rock.
Guicciardini, Letters (tr. by Helwiese, 1577), p. 310.
 I have appointed my servants to such and such a place.
 1 Sam. xxi. 2.
 When in rush'd one, and tells him such a knight
 Is new arriv'd.
Daniel, Civil Wars, iii.
 In the mean time, those [conditions in life] of husband, wife, parent, child, master, servant, citizen of such or such a city, natural-born subject of such or such a country, may answer the purpose of examples.
Bentham, Introductio to Morals and Legislation, xvi. 11.
 From the earliest times we hear of the king of such and such a province, the arch-king of all Ireland, the kings of Orkney and Man, even kings of Dublin.
The Century, XL. 235.

As such. See def. 3.—Never such. See never.—Such like. See like, 2. a.
 II. pron. 1. Such a person or thing; more commonly with a plural reference, such persons or things: by ellipsis of the noun.
Such as sit in darkness and in the shadow of death.
 Ps. cvii. 10.
 2. The same.
 I bring you amiles of pity, not affection;
 For such she sent.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, i. 1.

Suchospondylia (sū'kō-spon-dil'i-ä), n. pl. [N.L., < Gr. σούχος, the crocodile, + σπονδύλη, a vertebra: see spondyl]. One of the major groups into which Reptilia (except Pleurospendylia) are divisible, characterized by having upon the anterior dorsal vertebrae long and divided transverse processes, the divisions of these with which the tubercles of the ribs articulate being longer than those with which the heads of the ribs articulate. The group contains the existing order Crocodylia, and the fossil orders Diemodontia, Ornithoscelida, and Pterosauria, which are collectively thus distinguished on the one hand from Herpetospondylia and on the other from Perospondylia. See these words, and Pleurospendylia.

suchospondylian (sū'kō-spon-dil'i-an), a. [Suchospondylia + -an]. Having a crocodilian conformation of the vertebrae with regard to the articulation of the ribs, in consequence of the occurrence of long divided transprocesses of the vertebrae; pertaining to the Suchospondylia, or having their characters.
suchospondylous (sū'kō-spon-di-lus), a. [As Suchospondylia + -ous]. Same as suchospondylum.

suck¹ (suk), v. [Early mod. E. also souke; < ME. smeken, souken, suken (pret. sec, soe, sock, sok), < AS. sūcan (pret. suac, pp. socan), also sūgan = MD. suighen, D. zuigen = MLG. sūgen = OHG. sūgan, MHG. sūgen, G. saugen = Icel. sjuga, suga = Sw. sugu = Dan. suge, suck (Goth. not recorded): Teut. root in two forms, √ suk and √ sig; = W. sguno, suck, = Gael. sig, suck, = OIr. sigim, Ir. sughaim, suck, = L. sūgere (pp. suctus) (LL. suctiare*, > It. succiare = OF. succer, sucer), suck (cf. L. sucus, succus, juice:

see succulent, suction); = Lett. sugu, suck, = OBulg. sūsati, suck. Hence ult. suck (of which the ME. form soken was more or less confused with the ME. forms of suck), suckle, suckling, hounsuckle, etc.] I. trans. 1. To draw into the mouth by action of the lips and tongue which produces a partial vacuum.
 The milk thou suck'st from her did turn to marble.
Shak., Tit. And., i. 3. 144.
 The Bee and the Spider suck Honey and Poison out of one Flower.
Howell, Letters, iii. 4.

2. To draw something from with the mouth; specifically, to draw milk from.
 A certain woman . . . lifted up her voice, and said unto him, Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked.
 Luke xi. 27.
 Did a child suck every day a new nurse, I make account it would be no more affrighted with the change of faces at six months old than at sixty.
Locke, Education, § 115.
 Some [bees] watch the food, some in the meadows ply,
 Taste every bud, and suck each blossom dry.
Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

3. To draw in or imbibe by any process; inhale; absorb: usually with in, out, away, etc.: as, to suck in air; a sponge sucks in water.
 Wise Dara's province, year by year,
 Like a great sponge, sucked wealth and plenty up.
Lowell, Dara.

4. To draw or drain.
 Old ocean too suck'd through the porous globe.
Thomson, Autumn, l. 770.

5. To draw in, as a whirlpool; swallow up; engulf.
 As waters are by whirlpools sucked and drawn.
Dryden.
 Thus far no suspicion has been suffered to reach the disciple that he is now rapidly approaching to a torrent that will suck him into a new faith.
De Quincy, Esseenes, iii.

6†. To draw in or obtain by fraudulent devices; soak.
 For ther is no thief withoute a lowke,
 That helpeh hym to wasten, and to sucke
 Of that he brybe kan or borwe may.
Chaucer, Cook's Tale, l. 52.

To suck in. (a) To draw into the mouth; imbibe; absorb. (b) To cheat; deceive; take in. [Slang.]—To suck the monkey. See monkey.—To suck up, to draw into the mouth; draw up by any sucking action.

II. intrans. 1. To draw fluid into the mouth; draw by producing a vacuum, as with a tube.
 Where the bee sucks, there suck I.
Shak., Tempest, v. 1. 88.
 2. To draw milk from a teat: said of the young of a mammal.—3. To draw air when the water is low or the valve imperfect: said of a pump.
 This pump never sucks; these screws are never loose.
Emerson, Farming.

suck¹ (suk), n. [*suck*¹, v. Cf. *suck*², n.] 1. Suction by the mouth or in any way; the act of sucking; a sucking force.
 Powerful whirlpools, sucks and eddies.
Scribner's Mag., VIII. 611.
 2. Nourishment drawn from the breast.
 They moreover drawe unto themselves, together with they sucke, even the nature and disposition of their nurses.
Spenser, State of Ireland.
 I have given suck, and know
 How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me,
Shak., Macbeth, i. 7. 54.

3. A small draught. [Colloq.]
 Well. No bouse? nor no tobacco?
 Tap. Not a suck, sir;
 Nor the remainder of a single can.
Massinger, New Way to Pay Old Debts, i. 1.
 4. Rum or liquor of some kind. Tuyl's Glossary.—5. Same as sucket, 1.

suck² (suk), n. [*suck*², v. Cf. *suck*¹, n.] 1. Juice; succulence.
 The force whereof pearceh the sucke and marie [marrow] within my bones.
Palace of Pleasure, ii. 85 b. (Nares.)

suckatash, n. Same as succotash.
sucken (suk'n), n. [Also suckin; a var. of soken]. In Scots law, the district attached to a mill, or the whole lands ascribed to a mill, the tenants of which are bound to bring their grain to the mill to be ground. See thirlage. Jamieson. [Lowland Scotch.]
suckener (suk'nér), n. [sucken + -er]. A tenant bound to bring his grain to a certain mill to be ground. See sucken.

suckenyt, n. [ME. suckiny, suckenye, < OF. souquenie, sosquenie, souskanie, a surcoat (> F. dim. souquenille, chiquenille). < ML. soscania, < MGr. σοσκάνια, a surcoat; origin unknown.] A loose frock worn over their other clothes by carters, etc.

She hadde on a sukkenye,
 That not of hempe ne heerd is was.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 1233.
sucker (suk'ér), n. [*suck*¹ + -er]. 1. One who or that which sucks; a suckling.
 The entry of doubts is as so many suckers or sponges to draw use of knowledge.
Bacon, Advancement of Learning, ii.

Specifically—(a) A sucking pig: a commercial term.
 For suckers the demand was not very brisk.
Standard, Sept. 3, 1882. (Encyc. Dict.)
 (b) A new-born or very young whale. (c) In ornith., a bird which sucks or is supposed to do so: only in composition. See goatsucker, honey-sucker. (d) In ichth., one of numerous fishes which suck in some way or are supposed to do so, having a conformation of the protrusive lips which suggests a sucker, or a sucker-like organ on any part of the body by means of which the fish adheres to foreign objects.

(1) Any North American cyprinoid of the family Catostomidae, as a carp-sucker, chub-sucker, hog-sucker, etc. There are about 60 species, of some 12 or 14 genera, almost confined to the fresh waters of North America, though one or two are Asiatic; they are little esteemed for food, the flesh being insipid and full of small bones. Leading generic forms besides Catostomus are Ictiobus and Eubalichthys, the buffalo-fishes; Carpionides, the carp-suckers, as C. cyprinus, the quillback or skimbuck; Cycloptus, as C. elongatus, the black-horse, or gourd-seed sucker; Pantosteus, the hard-headed suckers; Erimyzon, the chub-suckers, as E. suctata, the sweet sucker; Minytrema, the spotted suckers; Moxostoma, some of whose many species are called mullet, chub-mullet, jump-rocks, red-horse, etc.; and Quassalabio, or hardclipped suckers. (See the distinctive names, with various cuts.) The typical genus Catostomus is an extensive one, including some of the commonest species, as C. commersoni, the white or brook sucker, 18 inches long, widely distributed from Labrador to Montana and southward to Florida; its section Hypentelium contains H. nigricans, the hog-sucker, hog-molly, or stone-linger, etc. (2) Any fish of the genus Lepidogaster. The Cornish sucker is L. gunani; the Connemara sucker, L. candollei; the bimaculated or network sucker, L. binaculatus. See cut under Lepidogaster. [Eng.] (3) A snail fish or sea-snail; one of several different members of the family Liparididae, as the unctuous sucker, Liparis vulgaris. See cuts under snail-fish. (4) The lump-sucker or lump-fish. See cut under Cyclopterus. (5) The sucking-fish or remora. See cut under Echeneis. (6) A cyclostomous fish, as the glutinous hag, Myxine glutinosa. See cut under hag, 3. (7) A Californian food-fish, the scienoid Menticirrhus undulatus.

2. A suctorial part or organ; a formation of parts by means of which an animal sucks, imbibes, or adheres by atmospheric pressure, as if sucking; a sucking-tube or sucking-disk. (a) The fin of a fish formed into a suctorial disk, as that of the remora. See cuts under Echeneis and Rhombocirrus. (b) The mouth of a myzont or cyclostomous fish. (c) The hanstellate or siphonal mouth-parts of an insect or siphonostomous crustacean; a sucking-tube, especially of a flea. See cut under chrysalis. (d) One of the cup-shaped sucking-disks or cupules on the lower surface of the expanded tarsi, found in certain aquatic beetles. They are either affixed directly to the joint, or the smaller ones are elevated on stems, and resemble wine-glasses in shape. (e) An adhesive pad of an insect's foot, as a fly's, by means of which it walks on walls and ceilings; a pulvillus. See cut under house-fly. (f) A sucking-disk or acetabulum of the arms of a cephalopod, as an octopus; one of the acetabuliferous arms of such an animal. See cut under cattle-fish. (g) An adhesive or suctorial facet on the head or tail of various parasitic worms, as tapeworms or leeches; a bothrium. See cuts under Bucephalus, leech, and cestoid. (h) The disk-like suctorial mouth of a leech. (i) One of the ambulacral pedicels or tube-feet of echinoderms, as starfishes; a sucker-foot or sucker-tube.

3. The piston of a suction-pump.
 Pretty store of oil must be poured into the cylinder,
 . . . that the sucker may slip up and down in it the more smoothly and freely.
Boyle, Works, I. 6.
 4. A pipe or tube through which anything is drawn.—5. In bot.: (a) A shoot rising from a subterranean creeping stem. Plants which emit suckers freely, as the raspberry and rose, are readily propagated by division. (b) A sprout from the root near or at a distance from the trunk, as in the pear and white poplar, or an adventitious shoot from the body or a branch of a tree.

Here, therefore, is our safest course, to make a retrenchment of all those excrescences of affections which like the wild and irregular sucker, draw away nourishment from the trunk.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 103.

(c) Same as haustorium. Compare propagulum (a).—6. A small piece of leather to the center of which a string is attached, used by children as a toy. When rendered flexible by wetting and pressed firmly down on a smooth object, as a stone, the adhesion of the two surfaces, due to atmospheric pressure, is so firm that a stone of considerable weight may be lifted by the string.

7. A parasite; a sponger; in recent use, also, a stupid person; a dolt. [Colloq.]
 This sucker thinks nane wiche
 But him that can to immense riches rise.
Allan Ramsay, The General Mistake.
 A person readily deceived . . . the . . . Suckers, . . . who, despite . . . oft-repeated warnings, . . . swallowed the hook so clumsily baited with "Bohemian Oats."
New York Semi-weekly Tribune, Jan. 11, 1857.
 8. A cant name for an inhabitant of Illinois. [U. S.]—9. Same as sucket, 1. [Scotch.]

sucker (suk'ér), v. [< sucker, n.] I. trans. 1. To strip off suckers or shoots from; deprive of suckers; specifically, to remove superfluous shoots from the root and at the axils of the leaves of (tobacco).

How the Indians ordered their tobacco I am not certain, . . . but I am informed they used to let it all run to seed, only suckering the leaves to keep the sprouts from growing upon and starving them; and when it was ripe they pulled off the leaves, cured them in the sun, and laid them up for use. Leventley, Virginia, II. 20.

2. To provide with suckers: as, the suckered arms of a cuttlefish. H. Spencer, Prin. of Psychol., § 5.

II. intrans. To send out suckers or shoots. Its most marked characteristics, however, are its tendencies to sucker immoderately.

suckerel (suk'ér-el), n. [< suckl + -erel, on model of pickereel.] A catostomid fish of the Mississippi valley, Cycteplus elongatus; the Missouri or gourd-seed sucker, or black-horse, a singular catostomid of large size (1½ to 2½ feet long), and of very dark or blackish coloration. See ent under Cycteplus.

sucker-fish (suk'ér-fish), n. The sucking-fish or remora. Jour. Anthropol. Inst., XIX. 325.

sucker-foot (suk'ér-füt), n. 1. One of the suctorial tube-foot, or sucker-tubes, of an echinoderm; an ambulacral pedicel capable of acting as a sucker.—2. In cutom., a proleg.

sucker-mouthed (suk'ér-moutht), a. Having a mouth like that of the catostomid fishes called suckers: as, the sucker-mouthed buffalo, a fish, Ictiobus bubalus.

sucker-rod (suk'ér-rod), n. A rod which connects the brake and the bucket of a pump. E. H. Knight.

sucker-tube (suk'ér-tüb), n. One of the sucker-foot of an echinoderm.

sucket (suk'et), n. [Partly an accom. form of succade, partly < suckl + -et. Cf. equiv. suckl, 5, sucker, 9.] 1. A dried sweetmeat or sugar-plum; hence, a delicacy of any kind.

Windam, all rageing, brake vype Pinteados Caben, broke open his chestes, spoyled suchie prouison of couldie stilled waters and suckettes as he had prouided for his health, and lette hym nothyng.

R. Eden, First Books on America (ed. Arber, p. 377).
But, monsieur,
Here are suckets, and sweet dishes.
Fletcher, Sea Voyage, v. 2.

2. A sucking rabbit. Hallivell. [Obsolete or provincial in both uses.]

suckfish (suk'fish), n. 1. The sucking-fish or remora.—2. A crustacean parasite of the sperm-whale: so called by whalers. Lobotting is said to be done by the whale to rid itself of these troublesome creatures. C. M. Scammon.

suckin (suk'in), n. See sucken.

suck-in (suk'in), n. [< suck in: see suckl.] A take-in; a fraud. [Slang.]

sucking (suk'ing), p. a. [< ME. souking; ppr. of suckl, v.] 1. Drawing or deriving nourishment from the mother's breast; not yet weaned; very young.

There were three sucking pigs ser'vd up in a dish. Massinger, City Madam, II. 1.

Hence—2. Figuratively, very young and inexperienced; undergoing training; in the early stage of a career; in leading-strings; "vealy."

My enemies are but sucking critics, who would fain be nibbling ere their teeth are come.

Dryden, All for Love, Pref.
The very curates . . . she . . . looked upon as sucking saints. Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xiv.

3†. Draining; exhausting.
Accidia ys a souking sore. Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 117.

Sucking center, a nervous center believed to exist in the medulla, with afferent fibers from the fifth and glossopharyngeal nerves—the efferent fibers being in the facial, hypoglossus, third division of the fifth, and branches of the cervical plexus, which supply the depressors of the lower jaw.—Sucking dove, a sucker or dupe; a simpleton; a cony; a gull.

sucking-bottle (suk'ing-bot'l), n. A nursing-bottle.

sucking-disk (suk'ing-disk), n. A sucker; a discoidal sucking-organ, as an acetabulum; applied to any flat or concave expansive surface which functions as a sucker.

sucking-fish (suk'ing-fish), n. 1. A fish of the family Echeneididae; a remora.—2. The lamprey. [Local, Eng.]

sucking-pump (suk'ing-pump), n. Same as suction-pump.

sucking-stomach (suk'ing-stum'gak), n. The haustellate or suctorial stomach of various insects and some crustaceans, which sucks up the juices of plants on which they feed or of the host on which they are parasites.

suckiny, n. Same as suckeny.

suckle (suk'l), v.; pret. and pp. suckled, ppr. suckling. [< Freq. of suckl. Cf. suckling.] I. trans. To give suck to; nurse at the breast.

She was a wight, if ever such wight were, . . .
To suckle fools and chronicle small beer.
Shak., Othello, II. 1. 161.

II. intrans. To suck; nurse.

suckle (suk'l), n. [< suckle, v.] A teat.

Two paps, which are not only suckles, but stilts to creep a shoare upon. Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 26.

suckler (suk'lér), n. [< suckle + -erl.] An animal which suckles its young; any mammal; also, a young one not yet weaned; a suckling.

Sucklers, or even weaned calves.
The Field, Jan. 16, 1886. (Encyc. Dict.)

sucklers (suk'lérz), n. [Pl. of suckler.] The red clover, Trifolium pratense; also, the white clover, T. repens: so called because the flowers are sucked for honey. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]

suckling (suk'ling), n. and a. [< ME. sokling, sokeling, sokelyng (= MD. suygelinc, sooghe-linc, D. zuigeling = MHG. sügelinc, G. säugling), a suckling, < soken, souken, suck, + -ingl. Cf. suckle.] I. n. 1. A suckler; a young animal not yet weaned.

Babes and sucklings. Ps. viii. 2.
The tend'rest Kid
And fattest of my Flock, a Suckling yet,
That ne'er had Nourishment but from the Teat.
Congreve, tr. of Eleventh Satire of Juvenal.

2. (a) The white clover, Trifolium repens; (b) the red clover, T. pratense; (c) the honeysuckle, Lonicera Periclymenum: so called because their flower-tubes are sucked for honey. Britten and Holland. [Prov. Eng.]—Lamb's suckling, the white clover, and the bird's-foot trefoil, Lotus corniculatus.—Yellow suckling, an agricultural name for the small yellow clover, Trifolium minus.

II. a. Suckling, as a young mammal; not yet weaned; hence, figuratively, young and inexperienced.

1) breast whereat some suckling sorrow clings.
Swinburne, Lans Veneris.

suckstone (suk'stön), n. [< suckl, v., + obj. stonc.] The suckfish, Echeneis remora.

A little fishe called a suckstone, that stiaeth a ship under saile, remora. Withals, Diet., 1608.

sucré†, n. and v. A Middle English form of sugar.

sucré² (sö'kre), n. A silver coin of Ecuador, of the weight of 25 grams and the fineness of .900. Rep. of Sec. of Treasury, 1886, pp. 230, 412, 413.

sucrose (sü'krös), n. [< F. sucre (see sugar) + -ose.] A general name for the sugars identical in composition and in general properties with cane-sugar, having the formula (C₁₂H₂₂O₁₁)_n: same as saccharose.

suction (suk'shon), n. [*< OF. suction, F. succion = Sp. succion, < L. as if suctio(-n), < sugere, pp. succus, suck: see suckl.] The process or condition of sucking; the removal of air or gas from any interior space producing a diminution of pressure which induces an inrush of gas or liquid to restore the equilibrium. If the process is maintained, a continuous current is produced. See suction-pump and *pump*¹. Also used attributively.—Suction curette of Teale, an instrument employed for the removal of a soft cataract from the eye.

suction-anemometer (suk'shon-an-e-mom'et-ér), n. An anemometer in which a diminution of pressure caused by the wind is used as a measure of its velocity. Two different forms have been proposed, corresponding to two distinct ways in which a moving fluid produces a diminution of pressure. This, the so-called suction, is produced in the one by the wind blowing through a horizontal tube having a contracted section, and in the other by the wind blowing across the mouth of a vertical tube.

suction-box (suk'shon-boks), n. In paper-making, a chamber in which there is a partial vacuum, placed below the web of pulp to assist in removing the water from it.

suction-chamber (suk'shon-chäm'bér), n. The barrel or chamber of a pump into which the liquid is delivered from the suction-pipe.

suction-fan (suk'shon-fan), n. In milling, a fan for withdrawing by suction chaff and refuse from grain, or steam and hot air from meal as it comes from the burs. E. H. Knight.

suction-pipe (suk'shon-píp), n. 1. The pipe leading from the bottom of a pump-barrel or cylinder to the well, cistern, or reservoir from which the water or other liquid is to be drawn up. See *pump*¹.—2. An air-tight pipe running from beneath a water-wheel to the level of the tail-race. It is said to render the whole fall available. E. H. Knight.

suction-plate (suk'shon-plät), n. A form of dental plate for supporting an upper set of artificial teeth, held in position by atmospheric pressure induced by a vacuum between the plate and the roof of the mouth.

suction-primer (suk'shon-pri-mér), n. A small force-pump fitted to a steam-pump, and used to fill the pump and drive out the air before admitting steam to the main pump.

suction-pump (suk'shon-pump), n. A pump having a barrel placed above the level of the water to be drawn, a suction-pipe extending from the barrel down into the water to be raised, an inlet-valve opening inward or toward the piston, and an outlet-valve in the piston. When the piston is raised, the air in the barrel below the piston expands, its tension is correspondingly diminished, and the pressure of the external air upon the surface of the liquid outside forces it up into the suction-tube. See *pump*¹.

suction-valve (suk'shon-valv), n. 1. In a suction-pump, the valve in the bottom of the barrel, below the piston.—2. In a steam-engine, a valve through which the rise of the plunger causes the water from the hot-well to flow into the feed-pump.

Suctoria (suk-tó'ri-i), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of suctorius: see suctorius.] Suctorial animals; applied to various zoological groups in which the mouth is suctorial, haustellate, siphonostomous, or otherwise fitted for sucking. Specifically—(a) In ichth., the cyclostomous fishes, or myzouts; the lampreys and hags, having the mouth formed into a sucker; in Cuvier's system, the second family of Chondropterygii branchiis fixis, later called Cyclostomata, or Cyclostomi, and Myzontes, and now known as the class Marsipobranchii. Also Suctoria. See ent under lamprey. (b) In Vermes: (1) The suctorial or disciphorous annelids; the leeches: now called Hirudinea. See ent under leech. (2) A branch of the phylum Platyhelmintha, composed of the three classes Trematodea, Cestoidea, and Hirudinea: an artificial group contrasted with a branch Ciliata. E. R. Lankester. (c) In entom., the suctorial apterous insects: so called by De Geer; in Latreille's system, the fourth order of insects, also called by him Siphonaptera, and now known as Aphaniptera or the fleas. (d) In Crustacea, the Rhizocephala or Centrogomida. (e) In Protozoa, the suctorial, acinetiform, or tentaculiferous infusorians; in the classification of Claparède and Lachmann (1858-60), the third order of Infusoria, consisting of a family Acinetina, with a genera: called by Kent Tentaculifera suctoria. See Tentaculifera.

suctorial (suk-tó'ri-ál), a. [< suctori-ous + -al.] 1. Adapted for sucking; functioning as a sucker or sucking-organ of any kind: sucking; haustellate: as, the suctorial mouth of a lamprey; the suctorial tongue (antlia) of a butterfly or moth; the suctorial proboscis of a flea; the suctorial disk of a sucking-fish, an octopod, a leech; the suctorial facets of a trematoid worm; the suctorial tentacles of an infusorian.—2. Capable of sucking; fitted for imbibing fluid or for adhering by means of suckers; provided with a sucking-organ, whether for imbibing or for adhering; of or pertaining to the Suctoria, in any sense: as, a suctorial bird, fish, worm, insect, crustacean, or animalcule.—Suctorial fishes, the cyclostomous fishes, or lampreys and hags; same as Suctoria (a). The lancelets have been called fringed-mouthed suctorial fishes.

suctorian (suk-tó'ri-an), n. [< suctori-ous + -an.] A suctorial animal; a member of the Suctoria, in any sense; especially, a cyclostomous fish.

suctorious (suk-tó'ri-us), a. [< NL. suctorius, < L. suctorius, < sugere, pp. succus, suck: see suckl.] Same as suctorial.—Suctorious mandibles, in entom., mandibles which are tubular, having an orifice through which liquid food passes to the mouth, as in the larvæ of certain aquatic beetles and in the young ant-lion.

sud (sud), n. [A var. of sod, or from the same ult. source: see sod, seethe. Cf. suds.] 1. The drift-sand left in meadows by the overflowing of rivers. [Prov. Eng.]—2. A young scallop of the first year, from July to November.

sud (sud), v. t.; pret. and pp. sudded, ppr. sudding. [< sud, n.] To cover with drift-sand by flood. Wright. [Prov. Eng.]

sudamina (sü-dam'i-ni), n. pl. [NL., < L. sudare, sweat: see sudation.] In pathol., vesicles resembling millet-seeds in form and magnitude, appearing on the skin in various fevers.

Suction-pump.
a, piston; b, barrel;
c, c, suction-pipe; d,
pump-back or pump-box; e, valve in piston; f, valve which admits water into the barrel; g, spout, pump-dale, or dale.

In sudamina alba the epithellum is macerated and the vesicular contents milky; in sudamina crystallina the vesicles are clear; and in sudamina rubra they have a reddish base.

sudaminal (sū-dam'i-nāl), a. [< sudamina + -al.] Pertaining to or of the nature of sudamina.

Sudanese (sū-da-nēs' or -nēz'), a. and n. [< Sudan (see def.) + -ese.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Sudan, or Soudan, a region in Africa lying south of Sahara, and sometimes extended to include the valley of the middle Nile and the region eastward to the Red Sea.

II. n. sing. and pl. An inhabitant or the inhabitants of Sudan.

Also Soudanese.
sudarium (sū-dā'ri-nm), n.; pl. sudaria (-i). [L.: see sudary.] A handkerchief.

The most intrepid veteran of us all dares no more than wipe his face with his cambric sudarium.

Sydney Smith, in Lady Holland, iii. Specifically—(a) The legendary sweat-cloth; the handkerchief of St. Veronica, according to tradition miraculously impressed with the mark of Christ; also, the napkin about Christ's head (John xx. 7). (b) In general, any miraculous portrait of Christ. See vernicte. (c) Same as maniple, 4. (d) The orarium or vexillum of a pastoral staff.

sudary (sū'dā-ri), n.; pl. sudaries (-riz). [< ME. sudarye, < L. sudarium, a cloth for wiping off perspiration, a handkerchief, < sudare, sweat; see sudation.] Same as sudarium.

He shewed me the clothe in ye whiche I wrapped his body and also the sudarye that I bound his hede withall.

Here a monk fumbled at the sick man's mouth With some undoubted relic— a sudary Of the Virgin.

sudation (sū-dā'shōn), n. [< L. sudatio(n)-, a sweating, perspiration, < sudare, pp. sudatus, sweat; see sweat.] A sweating.

sudatorium (sū-dā-tō'ri-um), n.; pl. sudatoria (-i). [L., < sudare, pp. sudatus, sweat.] A hot-air bath for producing perspiration.

sudatory (sū'dā-tō-ri), n. and a. [< L. sudatorius, pertaining to or serving for sweating, < sudare, pp. sudatus, sweat.] I. n.; pl. sudatories (-riz). That which is sudorific; a sweat-bath; a sudatorium; a diaphoretic.

Nere to this cave are the natural stoves of St. Germain, of the nature of sudatories, in certaine chambers partition'd with stone for the sick to sweate in.

Evelyn, Diary, Feb. 7, 1645.

II. a. 1. Sweating or perspiring;—2. Promoting or inducing perspiration; sudorific; diaphoretic.—Sudatory fever, sweating-sickness.

sudd (sud), n. [< Ar. sudd, sodd, a barrier, obstacle.] An impenetrable mass of floating water-plants interlaced with trunks of trees and decayed vegetable matter, forming floating islands in the White Nile.

It is in this part of the White Nile that, from time to time, forms the sudd, that vegetable barrier which completely closes the river to navigation.

Scribner's Mag., VI. 520.

sudden (sud'n), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also suddain, soudaine, sodeine, < ME. sodain, sodein, sodeyn, soden, sodene, < OF. sodain, sodeyne, sudain, soubdain, soudain, F. soudain = Pr. sobtain, sobtain, sobitan = Sp. subitaneo = Pg. subitaneo = It. subitaneo, subitano, sudden, < L. subitanus, ML. also subitanus, sudden, < subitus, sudden, lit. that which has come stealthily, orig. pp. of subire, come or go stealthily, < sub, under, + ire, go; see iter. Cf. subitaneous.] I. a. 1. Happening without notice, instantly and unexpectedly; immediate; instant.

To glad, ne to sore, but kepe thee enene bitwene For los, or lynch, or any case sodene.

From lightning and tempest; from plague, pestilence, and famine; from battle and murder, and from sudden death, Good Lord, deliver us!

Book of Common Prayer, Litany.

For when they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them.

2. Found or hit upon unexpectedly.

Up sprung a suddain Grove, where every Tree Impeopled was with Birds of softest throats.

J. Beoumont, Psyche, iv. 88.

A sudden road! a long and ample way.

A sudden little river crossed my path, As unexpected as a serpent comes.

Browning, Child Roland.

3. Hastily made, put in use, employed, prepared, etc.; quick; rapid.

Never was such a sudden scholar made,

These pious flourishes and colours, examin'd thoroughly, are like the Apples of Asphaltis, appearing goodly to the sudden eye, but look well upon them, or at least but touch them, and they turne into Cinders.

Milton, Elkonoklastes, xxiv.

Nothing is more certain than that great poets are not sudden prodigies, but slow results.

Lowell, Study Windows, p. 234.

4. Hasty; violent; rash; precipitate; passionate.

The wordes of this sodeyn Diomedea.

I grant him bloody, Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful, Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin That has a name.

How, child of wrath and anger! the loud lie? For what, my sudden boy?

B. Jonson, Alchemist, iv. 1.

5. In zool., abrupt; sharply defined from neighboring parts: as, a sudden antennal club; a sudden truncation.—Syn. I. Unexpected, unanticipated, unlooked-for, abrupt.

II. n. That which is sudden; a surprise; an unexpected occurrence. [Obsolete except in the phrases below.]

I would wish parents to mark heedfully the witty excesses of their children, especially at suddains and surprizals.

All of (on) a sudden, at the sudden, on a (the) sudden, of a sudden, of the sudden, sooner than was expected; without the usual preparatives; all at once and without notice; hastily; unexpectedly; suddenly.

Before we had gone far, we saw all of a sudden about fifty Arab horse coming towards us; immediately every one had his fire arms ready.

In the warre wee haue seen many Captaines loste for no other cause but for that, when they shoulde haue done a thing at the soudaine, they haue sit downe with great leysure to take counsell.

How art thou lost! how on a sudden lost.

When you have a mind to leave your master and are too bashful to break the matter, for fear of offending him, the best way is to grow rude and saucy of a sudden.

Why may not I be a favourite on the sudden? I see no thing against it.

On such a sudden, so suddenly.

Is it possible, on such a sudden, you should fall into so strong a liking with old Sir Rowland's youngest son?

Upon all suddens! for all unexpected occurrences; for all emergencies.

Be circumspect and careful to have your ships in readiness, and in good order alwayes, and upon all suddens.

sudden (sud'n), adv. [< sudden, a.] Suddenly; unexpectedly.

suddenly (sud'n-li), adv. [< ME. sodeynly, sodeynliche; < sudden + -ly.] 1. In a sudden or unexpected manner; unexpectedly; hastily; without preparation or premeditation; quickly; immediately.—2. In zool., sharply; abruptly; squarely: as, a part suddenly truncate.

suddenness (sud'n-nes), n. The state or character of being sudden, in any sense; a coming or happening without previous notice.

suddenty (sud'n-ti), n. [< OF. soudaintete, F. soudainté, < *ML. subitaneita(t)-s, suddenness, < L. subitanus, sudden; see sudden.] Suddenness. [Scotch.]—(On) of a suddenty, on a sudden; without premeditation.

My father's tongue was loosed of a suddenty.

sudder (sud'er), a. [< Hind. sadr, < Ar. sadr, chief.] Chief: in Bengal specially noting several important departments of government; as, the sudder court or sudder adawlet; the sudder board (of revenue); the sudder station, or the chief station of a district, where the civil officials reside.

An Indian lawyer expresses this by saying that the three older High Courts were formed by the fusion of the Supreme and Sudder Courts, words which have the same meaning, but which indicate very different tribunals.

sud-oil (sud'oil), n. In soap-making, oil or fat recovered from soapy waters or suds. The addition to such waters of an acid in sufficient quantity to neutralize the alkali frees the oily matters, which then separate from the water and are so regained.

sudor (sū'dor), n. [L., < sudare, sweat; see sweat.] Sweat or perspiration; the insensible vapor or sensible water which issues from the sudoriferous pores of the skin; diaphoresis.—Sudor anglicus, the English sweating-sickness.—Sudor cruentus, hemathidrosis.

sudoral (sū'dō-ral), a. [< sudor + -al.] Of or pertaining to sudor or sweat.

sudoriferous (sū-dō-rif'e-rus), a. [= F. sudorifere = Sp. sudorifero = Pg. It. sudorifero, < L. sudorifer, sweat-producing, < sudor (sudoris), sweat, + ferre = E. bear.] Bearing or producing sweat; sudoriparous.—Sudoriferous gland. Same as sweat-gland.

sudorific (sū-dō-rif'ik), a. and n. [= F. sudorifique = Sp. sudorifico = Pg. It. sudorifico, < L. sudor, sweat, + facere, make, do.] I. a. Causing, inducing, or promoting sweat; sudatory; diaphoretic.

A decoction of sudorific herbs.

Did you ever . . . hurst out into sudorific exudation like a cold thaw?

II. n. Something which promotes sweating; a diaphoretic.

sudoriparous (sū-dō-rip'a-rus), a. [< L. sudor, sweat, + parere, bring forth, produce.] Secreting sweat; producing perspiration.—Sudoriparous gland. Same as sweat-gland.

sudorous (sū'dō-rus), a. [< LL. sudorus, sweaty, < L. sudor, sweat; see sudor.] Sweaty; sticky or clammy like sweat; consisting of or caused by sweat.

Sudra (sū'drā), n. [Also Soodra (and Sooder); < Hind. sudra, < Skt. śūdra.] The lowest of the four principal castes into which Hindu society was anciently divided, composed of the non-Aryan aborigines of India, reduced to subjection or servitude by their Aryan conquerors.

The Brahmin still dodges the shadow of the Soodra, and the Soodra spits upon the footprint of the Pariah.

J. W. Palmer, The New and the Old, p. 289.

suds (sudz), n. pl. [Prop. pl. of sud, var. of sod, lit. 'a bubbling or boiling'; see sud, sod, secthe.] 1. Water impregnated with soap, forming a frothy mass; a lixivium of soap and water.

Alas! my miserable master, what suds art thou wash'd into!

Why, thy best shirt is in t' suds, and no time for t' starch and iron it.

2. The foam or spray churned up by a wounded whale; white water. [Slang.]

An officer of a boat never follows the wake of a right whale, for the moment the boat strikes the suds it is maintained that the whale is immediately made acquainted with the fact through some unknown agency.

In the suds, in turmoil or difficulty; in distress. [Colloq.]

Hist, hist, I will be rul'd;

I will, i' faith; I will go presently;

Will you forsake me now, and leave me i' the suds?

Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, ii. 3.

sue (sū), v.; pret. and pp. sued, ppr. suing. [Early mod. E. also sew; < ME. suen, sween, sewen, seween, < OF. suir, sewir, sevir, also sevre, sare, suivre, F. suivre = Pr. segre, seguir = Sp. Pg. seguir = It. seguire, follow, < *LL. sequere, follow, for L. sequi, follow; see sequent, and cf. cusuc, pursuc, suit, suite, etc.] I. trans. 1. To follow; follow after; pursue; chase; follow in attendance; attend.

Maistre, I shal sue thee, whidir euer thou shalt go.

For yit was ther no man that hadde him sued.

I shal sue thi wille.

To follow up; follow out; continue.

But while I, suing this so good successe, Laid siege to Orliance on the river's side.

He meanes no more to sue His former quest, so full of toile and paine.

To follow with entreaty; seek to persuade; entreat.

I suydde hys Grace [Henry VIII.] to signe the Popis lettre. And he commaundyde me to brynge the same unto hym at evynsonge tyme.

To seek after; try to win; seek the favor of; seek in marriage; woo.

I was belov'd of many a gentle Knight, And sude and sought with all the service dew.

They would sue me, and woo me, and flatter me.

To seek justice or right from by legal process; institute process in law against; prosecute in a civil action for the recovery of a real or supposed right: as, to sue one for debt; to sue one for damages in trespass. [Used sometimes of the object of the action instead of the defendant.]

The executors of bishops are sued if their mansion-house be snffered to go to decay.

It is written, our men's goods and estates in Spain are confiscated, and our men sued, some to be imprisoned, others to be enjoined, on pain of death, to depart.

To sue livery, to sue out livery, to take proceedings, on arriving at age, to recover lands which the king had held as guardian in chivalry during the plaintiff's minority; hence, metaphorically, to declare one's self of age.

I am denied to sue my livery here.

Our little Cupid hath sued livery,
And is no more in his minority.

Donne, Eclogue (1613).

It concern'd them first to sue out their livery from the unjust wardship of his encroaching Prerogative.

Milton, Eikonoklastes, xi.

To sue out, to petition for and take out; to apply for and obtain: as, to sue out a writ in chancery; to sue out a pardon for a criminal.

Thou art my husband, no divorce in heaven
Has been sued out between us.

Ford, Perkin Warbeck, v. 3.

And now he would go to London at once, and sue out his pardon.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xxxviii.

II. intrans. 1†. To follow; come after, either as a consequence or in pursuit.

With Ereules and other mo of his some men,
He sues furth on the soile to Chethes the kyng.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 821.

Wetith wel that we . . . haue grauntyd . . . to the citizens of the forsayd cite the franchises that ben suying to haue to hem and to her eyers and successours for euer.

Charter of London (Rich. II.), in Arnold's Chron., p. 23.

The kyngs dide do make this dragon in all the haste he myght, like to the dragon that suede in the ayre.

Martin (E. E. T. S.), i. 57.

2. To make entreaty; entreat; petition; plead: usually with for.

And aa men here devoutly wolde written holy Seyntes Lyses and here Myracles, and sueven for here Canoniza-cions, righte so don thei there, for hem that sleen hem self wilfully, and for love of here Ydole.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 176.

The Kings of Poland and Sweden have sued to be their Protector.

Howell, Letters, l. vi. 3.

By adverse destiny constrain'd to sue

For counsel and redress, he sues to you. Pope.

Much less shall mercy sue

In vain that thou let innocence survive.

Bronning, King and Book, II. 108.

3. To pay court, or pay one's addresses as a suitor or lover; play the lover; woo, or be a wooer.

But, foolish boy, what bootest thy service bace
To her to whom the heavens do serve and sue?

Spenser, F. Q., III. v. 47.

Well, Has she no suitors? . . .

All. Such as sue and send,

And send and sue again, but to no purpose.

Massinger, New Way to Pay Old Debts, i. 1.

4. To prosecute; make legal claim; seek for something in law: as, to sue for damages.

Their fast, on the 17 of the fourth Moneth, . . . and from thence to the ninth day of the month following, are holden voluckie dayes, in which schoole masters may not beat their schollers, nor any man will sue at the law.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 211.

5†. To issue; flow.

Being rough-cast with odious sores to cover
The deadly juice that from his brain doth sue.

J. Beaumont, Psyche, ii. 167.

To sue, labor, and travel, in Eng. marine insurance, to make due exertions and use necessary and proper means: used with reference to the preservation of insured property from loss or to its recovery. What is called the suing and laboring clause in a policy usually provides that "in any case of loss or misfortune, it shall be lawful to the assured . . . to sue, labour, and travel, for, in, and about the defence, safeguard, and recovery of" what is insured.

These two words [sue and labor], the meaning of which is different, and not merely a redundant parallelism, take in the acts of the owner or assured, whether in asserting and following the rights of interests in danger, or working and expending money for the benefit of those interests. . . . In this clause two things are noticeable: that suing (which in this place is understood 'doing work,' and not simply 'suing at law'), labouring, and travelling are made lawful to certain persons acting in lieu of the insured, and that to such expenses of suing, etc., the underwriters agree to contribute their share.

Hopkins, Law of Gen. Av., pp. 386, 390.

sue†. An old spelling of scw†, scw†, 2.

suède (swād), a. and n. [F., 'Swede.'] Of undressed kid: said of gloves; also, undressed kid. [Trade use.]

suent, suently. See suant†, suantly.

suer (sū'et), n. [sue† + -er†.] 1†. One who follows.—2. A suitor.

suerte†, n. An old spelling of surety.

suet (sū'et), n. [Early mod. E. also suwet; < ME. suet, suete, < OF. suu, suis, suif, F. suif = Pr. seu, sef = Sp. Pg. sebo = It. seco, < L. sebum, sebum, tallow, suet, grease; prob. akin to sapo, soap; see sebaceous, soap.] The fatty tissue about the loins and kidneys of certain animals, as the ox, the sheep, the goat, and the hart, harder and less fusible than that from other parts of the same animals. That of the ox and sheep is chiefly used, and when melted out of its connective tissue forms tallow. Mutton suet is used as an ingredient in cerates, plasters, and ointments; beef suet, and also mutton suet, are used in cookery. The corresponding flaky fat of hogs furnishes leaf-lard.

suety (sū'et-i), a. [suet + -y†.] Consisting of suet or resembling it: as, a suety substance.

Imp. Diet.

suf-. See sub-.

suff† (suf), n. See sough†, surf†.

suff† (suf), n. See sough†.

suffect (su-fekt'), v. t. [suffectus, pp. of sufficere, put into, afford, furnish, be sufficient: see suffice.] To substitute. [Rare.]

The question was of suffecting Amadeus, Duke of Savoy, a married man, in the room of Eugenius.

By. Hall, Honour of Married (Tregly, l. § 24.

suffect (su-fekt'), a. [suffectus, pp. of sufficere, put into: see suffect, v.] Substituted; put in place of another. [Rare.]

The date of the suffect consulship of Silina the younger is not known.

Athenæum, Oct. 28, 1882, p. 569.

suffer (suf'èr), v. [suffere, suffren, < OF. souffrir, souffrir, souffrir, souffrir, F. souffrir = Sp. sufir = Pg. souffrir = It. souffrire, souffrire, < L. sufferre, carry or put under, hold up, bear, support, undergo, endure, suffer, < sub, under, + ferre = E. bear†.] I. trans. 1. To endure; support bravely or unflinchingly; sustain; bear up under.

If she be riche and of heigh parage,
Thanne seistow it is a tormentrie
To suffren hire [a wife's] pride and hire malencolie.

Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 252.

Our spirit and strength entire,
Strongly to suffer and support our pains.

Milton, P. L., l. 147.

2. To be affected by; undergo; be acted on or influenced by; sustain; pass through.

Nothing of him that doth fade
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.

Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 400.

When all that seems shall suffer shock.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, cxxxii.

3. To feel or bear (what is painful, disagreeable, or distressing); submit to with distress or grief; undergo: as, to suffer acuto bodily pain; to suffer grief of mind.

At the day of Doom 4 Aungeles, with 4 Trompes, schulle blowen and reysen alle men that hadden suffred Dethe sithe that the World was formed, from Deth to Lyve.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 114.

A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment.

Prov. xix. 19.

It is said all martyrdoms looked mean when they were suffered.

Emerson, Experience.

Each had suffer'd some exceeding wrong.

Tennyson, Geraint.

4. To refrain from hindering; allow; permit; tolerate.

I prayed Pieres to pulle adown an apple, and he wolde,
And suffre me to assaye what saoure it hadde.

Piers Plowman (B), xvi. 74.

Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not.

Mark x. 14.

Heaven will not suffer honest men to perish.

Fletcher (and Massinger?), Lovers' Progress, ii. 4.

My Lord Sandwich . . . suffers his beard to grow on his upper lip more than usual.

Pepys, Diary, II. 347.

They live only as pardoned men; and how pitiful is the condition of being only suffered.

Steele, Spectator, No. 438.

5†. To tolerate abstention from.

Master More . . . by no meanes would admit of any disoison, nor suffer his men from finishing their fortificationa.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's True Travels, II. 130.

=Syn. 2. To feel, bear, experience, go through.—4. Allow, Permit, Consent, to, etc. See allow†.

II. intrans. 1†. To have endurance; bear evils bravely.

Now looke that atempree be thy brydel,
And for the beste ay suffre to the tide.

Chaucer, Troilus, l. 954.

2. To feel or undergo pain of body or mind; bear what is distressing or inconvenient.

If I be false,

Send me to suffer in those punishments
You speak of; kill me!

Beau. and Fl., Phylaster, iii. 1.

Raw meat, unless in very small bits, and large pieces of albumen, &c., . . . injure the leaves, which seem to suffer, like animals, from a surfeit.

Darwin, Insectiv. Plants, p. 130.

3. To be injured; sustain loss or damage.

The kingdom's honour suffers in this cruelty.

Fletcher, Wife for a Month, ii. 1.

Thus the English prosper every where, and the French suffer.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 122.

4. To undergo punishment; especially, to be put to death.

The father was first condemned to suffer upon a day appointed, and the son afterwards the day following.

Clarendon.

5. To allow; permit.

Remainyng as diuers languages and dialects will suffer, almost the same.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 437.

Still dost thou suffer, heaven! will no flame,
No heat of sin, make thy just wrath to boil!

B. Jonson, Sejanus, iv. 5.

6†. To wait; hold out.

Marganors hem seide, and badde hem suffre and a-blide while thei myght for to socour their peple.

Martin (E. E. T. S.), ii. 165.

sufferable (suf'èr-a-bl), a. [suffrabilis, < OF. souffrable, < OF. souffrir, < souffrir, suffer: see suffer and -able.] 1. Capable of being suffered, endured, tolerated, or permitted; allowable.

It shal be more sufferable to the loond of men of Sodom and of Gommor in the dai of iugement than to thilke citee.

Wyclif, Mat. x. 15.

Ye have a great loss;

But bear it patiently: yet, to say truth,
In justice 'tis not sufferable.

Fletcher, Valentinian, iv. 4.

I believe it's very sufferable; the pain is not so exquisite but that you may bear it a little longer.

Steele, Conscious Lovers, iii. 1.

2†. Capable of suffering or enduring with patience; tolerant; patient.

It is fair to have a wyf in pees:

One of us two moste bowen, dontlees;

And sith a man is more resonable
Than womman is, ye moste been sufferable.

Chaucer, Prol. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 442.

The people are thus inclined, religious, franke, amorous, ireful, sufferable of infinit paines.

Stanikurst, Ireland, viii. (Holinshed's Chron., l.)

sufferableness (suf'èr-a-bl-nes), n. The state or character of being sufferable or endurable; tolerableness.

sufferably (suf'èr-a-bli), adv. In a sufferable manner; tolerably. Addison, tr. of Claudius, in Anc. Medals, ii.

sufferance (suf'èr-ans), n. [Early mod. E. also suffraunce; < ME. suffraunce, soverans, < OF. souffrance, F. souffrance = Pr. sufrensua, sufransa = It. soufferanza, < L. sufferentia, endurance, toleration, < suffer (t-), ppr. of sufferre, endure, suffer: see suffer.] 1. The state of suffering; the bearing of pain or other evil; endurance; suffering; misery.

He must not only die the death,

But thy unkindness shall the death draw out
To lingering sufferance.

Shak., M. for M., ii. 4. 167.

Sufferance

Of former trials hath too strongly arm'd me.

Ford, Fancies, iv. 1.

All praise be to my Maker given!

Long sufferance is one path to heaven.

Scott, Rokeby, iv. 24.

2†. Damage; loss; injury.

A grievous wreck and sufferance

On most part of their fleet.

Shak., Othello, ii. 1. 23.

3. Submission under difficult or oppressive circumstances; patient endurance; patience.

Therefore hath this wise worthy knyght,
To lyve in use, suffraunce hire bihicht.

Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 60.

Still have I borne it with a patient shrug,
For sufferance is the badge of all our tribe.

Shak., M. for M., i. 3. 111.

Sir, I have learn'd a prisoner's sufferance,

And will obey.

Beau. and Fl., King and No King, l. 1.

4. Consent by not forbidding or hindering; toleration; allowance; permission; leave.

And, sers, syn he so is souerans of goddis,
V's may falle here by fortune a fulfaine gifte,
That shuld lere be lacht, as me leue thinke.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3154.

5. In customs, a permission granted for the shipment of certain goods.—Bill of sufferance. See bill†.—Estate by sufferance or at sufferance, in law, the interest in land recognized by the law in a person who came into possession by lawful right but is keeping it after the title has ceased, without positive leave of the owner. Such person is called a tenant at sufferance.—On sufferance, by passive allowance, permission, or consent; without being actively interfered with or prevented; without being positively forbidden: often with a sense of blame or disparagement.—Sufferance wharf, a wharf on which goods may be landed before any duty is paid. Such wharves are appointed by the commissioners of the customs.

5. In customs, a permission granted for the shipment of certain goods.—Bill of sufferance. See bill†.—Estate by sufferance or at sufferance, in law, the interest in land recognized by the law in a person who came into possession by lawful right but is keeping it after the title has ceased, without positive leave of the owner. Such person is called a tenant at sufferance.—On sufferance, by passive allowance, permission, or consent; without being actively interfered with or prevented; without being positively forbidden: often with a sense of blame or disparagement.—Sufferance wharf, a wharf on which goods may be landed before any duty is paid. Such wharves are appointed by the commissioners of the customs.

5. In customs, a permission granted for the shipment of certain goods.—Bill of sufferance. See bill†.—Estate by sufferance or at sufferance, in law, the interest in land recognized by the law in a person who came into possession by lawful right but is keeping it after the title has ceased, without positive leave of the owner. Such person is called a tenant at sufferance.—On sufferance, by passive allowance, permission, or consent; without being actively interfered with or prevented; without being positively forbidden: often with a sense of blame or disparagement.—Sufferance wharf, a wharf on which goods may be landed before any duty is paid. Such wharves are appointed by the commissioners of the customs.

5. In customs, a permission granted for the shipment of certain goods.—Bill of sufferance. See bill†.—Estate by sufferance or at sufferance, in law, the interest in land recognized by the law in a person who came into possession by lawful right but is keeping it after the title has ceased, without positive leave of the owner. Such person is called a tenant at sufferance.—On sufferance, by passive allowance, permission, or consent; without being actively interfered with or prevented; without being positively forbidden: often with a sense of blame or disparagement.—Sufferance wharf, a wharf on which goods may be landed before any duty is paid. Such wharves are appointed by the commissioners of the customs.

