INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK

OF

E Z R A .

AT the conclusion of 2 Kings, and also of the preceding book, 2 Chronicles, we have seen the state of misery and desolation to which the kingdoms of Israel and Judah were reduced through their unparalleled ingratitude to God, and their innumerable backslidings and rebellions. These at last issued in their captivity; the inhabitants of the former country being carried away by the Assyrians, and those of the latter by the Chaldeans. The former never recovered their ancient territories, and were so disposed of by their enemies that they either became amalgamated with the heathen nations, so as to be utterly undistinguishable, or they were transported to some foreign and reclude place of settlement, that the place of their existence, though repeatedly guessed, has for more than two thousand years been totally unknown.

In mercy to the less polluted inhabitants of the kingdom of Judah, though delivered up into the hands of their enemies, God had promised by his prophet, that at the expiration of seventy years, they should be enlarged, and restored to their own country. This prediction was most literally fulfilled; and the books of Ezra, Esther, and Nehemiah, inform us how the divine goodness accomplished this most gracious design, and the movers and agents he employed on the occasion.

The writer of this book is generally allowed among the Jews to have been of the sacerdotal family and therefore he is called the priest, by the Septuagint. Among the rabbins he passes for a most extraordinary critic, divinely authorized to collect and arrange the different portions of the sacred writings, and digest them into a system. How far all they say on this subject is true, we cannot tell; he was, beyond all controversy, a very eminent man; and in all that he did, acted under the immediate direction and inspiration of the Almighty.

This history contains the transactions of about eighty-two years; from the first year of Cyrus in Babylon, according to Archbishop Usher, A.M. 3468, to the nineteenth [or more probably the eighth] year of Ardsheer Diraz Dest, or Artaxerxes Longimanus, who sent Nehemiah to Jerusalem, about A.M. 3550.

[Internal evidence shows that the book of Ezra, though perhaps put together by him, is not entirely his composition. Portions were written by Daniel, and Nehemiah, probably also by Haggai, and by a later writer in the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus. This later writer was undoubtedly Ezra himself.]

CHAPTER I.

The proclamation of Cyrus for the rebuilding of the temple, 1-4. The people provide for their return, 5, 6. Cyrus restores to Sheshbazzar the vessels taken by Nebuchadnezzar out of the temple of Solomon, 7-11.

NOW in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the LORD^a by the mouth of Jeremiah might be fulfilled, the LORD stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia,^b that^c he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing saying,

2 Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The LORD God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath^d charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah.

3 Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the LORD God of Israel, (^e he is the God,) which is in Jerusalem.

4 And whosoever remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, beside the freewill-offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem:

5 Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit^f God had raised, to go

Verse 1. Now in the first year] This is word for word with the two last verses of the preceding book; which stand here in their proper place and connexion, but they are entirely destitute of chronological connexion and reference.

Cyrus] This prince, so eminent in antiquity, is said to have been the son of Cambyses king of Persia, and Mandane, daughter of Astyages king of the Medes; and was born about six hundred years before Christ. Josephus accounts for his partiality to the Jews from this circumstance; that he was shown the places in Isaiah the prophet where he is mentioned by name, and his exploits and conquests foretold: see Isa. xlv. 28, and xlv. 1, &c. Finding himself thus distinguished by the God of the Jews, he was anxious to give him proofs of his gratitude in return; and so made the decree in favour of the Jews, restored their sacred vessels, gave them liberty to return to their own land, and encouraged them to rebuild the temple of Jehovah, &c.

By—Jeremiah] This prophet, chap. xxv. 12, and xxix. 11, had foretold that the Babylonish captivity should last only seventy years: these were now ended; Cyrus had given the Jews permission and encouragement to return to Judea, and rebuild the temple of the Lord: and thus the prediction of Jeremiah was fulfilled.

Verse 2. The Lord God of heaven] It is not unworthy of up to build the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem.

6 And all they that were about them^b strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, beside all that was willingly offered.

7¹ Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the LORD, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods;

8 Even those did Cyrus king of Persia bring forth by the hand of Mithredath the treasurer, and numbered them^k unto Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah.

9 And this is the number of them: thirty chargers of gold, a thousand chargers of silver, and nine and twenty knives,

10 Thirty basons of gold, silver basons of a second sort four hundred and ten, and other vessels a thousand.

11 All the vessels of gold and of silver were five thousand and four hundred. All these did Sheshbazzar bring up with them of¹ the captivity that were brought up from Babylon unto Jerusalem.

remark, that in all the books written prior to the captivity, Jehovah is called The Lord of Hosts; but in all the books written after the captivity, as 2 Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Daniel, he is styled The God of Heaven.

All the kingdoms of the earth] At this time the empire of the Medo-Persians, according to ancient writers, extended, on the EAST, to the Red Sea; on the NORTH, to the Euxine Sea; on the WEST, to the island of Cyprus and Egypt; and on the SOUTH, to Ethiopia.

Verse 4. Whosoever remaineth in any place] Every one was at liberty to go, but none was obliged to go. Thus their attachment to God was tried; he whose heart was right with God, went; he who was comfortably settled in Babylon, might go if he chose. Those who did not go, were commanded to assist their brethren who went.

Verse 6. Vessels of silver] Articles of silver, gold, &c.

Verse 8. Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah] This was probably the Chaldean name of him who was originally called Zerubbabel.

Verse 11. All the vessels—were five thousand and four hundred] This place is without doubt corrupted; the enumeration of the articles, as given in verses 9 and 10, gives the sum of two thousand four hundred and ninety-nine only. But we can correct this account from 1 Esdras ii. 18, 14, where the sum total is only 69 different.

CHAPTER II.

An account of those who returned from Babylon, 1-35. The children of the priests who returned, 36-39. Of the Levites, 40. Of the singers, 41. Of the porters, 42. Of the Nethinims, and the children of Solomon's servants, 43-58. Others who could not find out their registers, 52-62. The number of the whole congregation, 63, 64. Of their servants, maids, and singers, 65. Their horses and mules, 66. Their camels and asses, 67. The offerings of the chief men when they came to Jerusalem, 68, 69. The priests, Levites, singers, porters, and Nethinims betake themselves to their respective cities, 70.

NOW ^a these are the children of the province that went up out of the captivity, of those which had been carried away, ^b whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away unto Babylon, and came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city;

2 Which came with Zerubbabel: Jeshua, Nehemiah, ^c Seraiah, ^d Beelaiah, Mordecai, Bilshan, ^e Mizpar, Bigvai, ^f Rehum, Baanah. The number of the men of the people of Israel:

Verse 1. These are the children of the province] That is, of Judea; once a kingdom, and a flourishing nation; now a province, subdued, tributary, and ruined! Some think Babylon is meant by the province; and that the children of the province means those Jews who were born in Babylon. But the province is contradistinguished from Babylon even in this first verse.

Verse 2. Which came with Zerubbabel] There are many difficulties in this table of names; but as we have no less than three copies, that contained from ver. 1—67, a second in Neh. vii. 6—69, and a third in 1 Esdras v. 7—43, on a careful examination they will be found to correct each other. Verse 3. The children of Parosh] Where the word children is found in this table, prefixed to the name of a man, it signifies the descendants of that person, as from this verse to ver. 21. Verse 36. The priests] The preceding list takes in the census of Judah and Benjamin.

Verse 55. The children of Solomon's servants] The Nethinims, and others appointed to do the meaner services of the holy house.

Verse 68. The Tirshatha] This is generally supposed to be Nehemiah, or the person who was the commandant; see Neh. viii. 9, and x. 1, for the word appears to be the name of an office. [Gesenius derives the word from a Persian root, signifying severity. Haggai applies the term to Zerubabel, who held the office before Nehemiah.]

Should not eat of the most holy things] There was a high-priest then, but no Urim and Thummim, these having been lost in the captivity.

Verse 66. Their horses—seven hundred, &c.] They went into captivity, stripped of every thing; they now return

61 And of the children of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai; which took a wife of the daughters of ^c Barzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their name:

62 These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found: ^d therefore ^e were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.

63 And the ^f Tirshatha said unto them, that they ^g should not eat of the most holy things, till they stood up a priest with ^h Urim and with Thummim.

64 The whole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore, 65 Beside their servants and their maids, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven: and there were among them two hundred singing men and singing women.

66 Their horses were seven hundred thirty and six; their mules, two hundred forty and five.

67 Their camels, four hundred thirty and five; their asses, six thousand seven hundred and twenty.

68 And some of the chief of the fathers, when they came to the house of the LORD which is at Jerusalem, offered freely for the house of God to set it up in his place:

69 They gave after their ability unto the ^a treasure of the work threescore and one thousand drams of gold, and five thousand pound of silver, and one hundred priests' garments.

70 So the priests, and the Levites, and some of the people, and the singers, and the porters, and the Nethinims, dwelt in their cities, and all Israel in their cities.

from it, abounding in the most substantial riches.

Verse 69. Threescore and one thousand drams of gold] A Persian coin, always of gold, and worth about 11. 5s.; not less than 76,250*l* sterling in gold. [The Persian daric weighed 128 grains troy.]

Five thousand pound of silver] As a weight, the maneh was 100 shekels; as a coin, 60 shekels in value, or about 9*l*.; 5000 of these manehs therefore will amount to £45,000, making in the whole a sum of about £120,000; and in this are not included the 100 garments for priests.

Thus we find that God, in the midst of judgment, remembered mercy, and gave them favour in the land of their captivity.

Verse 70. Dwelt in their cities] They all went to those cities which belonged originally to their respective families.

CHAPTER III.

The altar of burnt-offerings is set up, 1-3. They keep the feast of tabernacles, 4-6. They make provision for rebuilding the temple; and lay its foundation in the second month of the second year, 7, 8. Ceremonies observed in laying the foundation, 9-11. Some weep aloud, and others shout for joy, 12, 18.

AND when the seventh month was come, and the children of Israel were in the cities, the people gathered themselves together as one man to Jerusalem.

2 Then stood up Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren the priests, and Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and his brethren, and builded the altar of the God of Israel, to offer burnt-offerings thereon, as it is written in the law of Moses the man of God.

3 And they set the altar upon his bases; for fear was upon them because of the people of those countries; and they offered burnt-offerings thereon unto the LORD, even burnt-offerings morning and evening.

4 They kept also the feast of tabernacles, as it is written, and offered the daily burnt-offerings by number, according to the custom, as the duty of every day required;

5 And afterward offered the continual burnt-offering, both of the new moons, and of all the set feasts of the LORD that were consecrated, and of every one that willingly offered a freewill-offering unto the LORD.

6 From the first day of the seventh month began they to offer burnt-offerings unto the LORD. But the foundation of the temple of the LORD was not yet laid.

7 They gave money also unto the masons, and to the carpenters; and meat, and drink, and oil, unto them of Zidon, and to them of Tyre, to bring cedar-trees from Lebanon to the sea of Joppa, according to the grant that they had of Cyrus king of Persia.

Verse 1. When the seventh month was come] The month Tisri, which answers to the latter part of our September, and beginning of October. It seems that the Israelites had left Babylon about the spring of the year; that on their arrival at Jerusalem they constructed themselves huts and sheds to lodge in among the ruins, in which they must have spent some months. After this they rebuilt the altar of burnt-offerings, and kept the feast of tabernacles, which happened about this time, and continued to offer sacrifices regularly, as if the temple were standing.

Verse 2. Jeshua the son of Jozadak] He was grandson of Seraiah, the high-priest, who was put to death by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxv. 18, 21. This Jeshua or Joshua was the first high-priest after the captivity.

Verse 3. They set the altar upon his bases] Rebuilt it on the same spot on which it had formerly stood. This they did, "though fear was upon them," because of the unfriendly disposition of their surrounding neighbours.

Verse 4. They kept also the feast of tabernacles, as it is written] But they had begun the regular offerings from the first day of this month, ver. 6. And these were religiously continued all the time they were building the temple.

Verse 7. They gave money also] They copied the conduct of Solomon while he was building his temple; see 1 Kings v. 11.

Verse 8. In the second year] The previous time had been employed in clearing the ground, felling timber, hewing

8 Now in the second year of their coming unto the house of God at Jerusalem, in the second month, began Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and the remnant of their brethren the priests and the Levites, and all they that were come out of the captivity unto Jerusalem; and appointed the Levites, from twenty years old and upward, to set forward the work of the house of the LORD.

9 Then stood Jeshua with his sons and his brethren, Kadmiel and his sons, the sons of Judah together, to set forward the workmen in the house of God: the sons of Henadad, with their sons and their brethren the Levites.

10 And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the LORD, they set the priests in their apparel with trumpets, and the Levites the sons of Asaph with cymbals, to praise the LORD, after the ordinance of David king of Israel.

11 And they sang together by course in praising and giving thanks unto the LORD; because he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever toward Israel. And all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the LORD, because the foundation of the house of the LORD was laid.

12 But many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers, who were ancient men that had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice; and many shouted aloud for joy:

13 So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping of the people: for the people shouted with a loud shout, and the noise was heard afar off.

stones, and transporting them to the place, and making other necessary preparations for the commencement of the building.

Verse 10. After the ordinance of David] With psalms which he composed, acting in the manner which he directed.

Verse 12. Wept with a loud voice] They saw that the glory had departed from Israel; in their circumstances it was impossible to build such a house as the first temple was; and had this been even possible, still it would have been greatly inferior, because it wanted the ark of the covenant, the heavenly fire, the mercy-seat, the heavenly manna, Aaron's rod that budded, the divine Shechinah, the spirit of prophecy, and most probably the Urim and Thummim.

Many shouted aloud for joy] These in general, had not seen the original temple; and therefore could not feel affected in that way which the elderly people did.

The sight must have been very affecting: a whole people, one part crying aloud with sorrow; the other shouting aloud for joy; and on the same occasion too, in which both sides felt an equal interest! The prophet Haggai comforted them on this occasion by assuring them that the glory of this latter house should exceed that of the former, because the Lord (Jesus Christ) was to come to this temple, and fill it with his glory. See Haggai, chap. ii. 1—9.

CHAPTER IV.

The Samaritans endeavour to prevent the rebuilding of the temple, 1-5. They send letters to Artaxerxes, against the Jews, 6-9. A copy of the letter, 10-16. He commands the Jews to cease from building the temple, which they do; nor was any thing further done in the work till the second year of Darius, 17-24.

NOW when ^a the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin heard that ^b the children of the captivity builded ^c the temple unto the Lord God of Israel;

2 Then they came to Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers, and said unto them, Let us build with you: for we seek your God, as ye do; and we do sacrifice unto him ^c since the days of Esar-haddon king of Assur, which brought us up hither.

3 But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest of the chief of the fathers of Israel, said unto them, ^d Ye have nothing to do with us to build an house unto our God; but we ourselves together will build unto the Lord God of Israel, as ^e king Cyrus the king of Persia hath commanded us.

4 Then ^f the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building,

5 And hired counsellors against them, to frustrate their purpose, all the days of Cyrus king of Persia, even until the reign of Darius king of Persia.

6 And in the reign of ^g Ahasuerus, in the beginning of his reign, wrote they ^h unto him an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem.

7 And in the days of Artaxerxes wrote ⁱ Bishlam, Mithredath, Tabeel, and the rest of their ^j companions, unto Artaxerxes king of Persia; and the writing of the letter was written in the Syrian tongue, and interpreted in the Syrian tongue.

8 Rehum the chancellor and Shimshai the scribe, wrote a letter against Jerusalem to Artaxerxes the king in this sort:

9 Then wrote Rehum the chancellor, and Shimshai the scribe and the rest of their ^k companions; ^l the Dinaites, the Apharsathchites, the Tarpelites, the Apharsites, the Archevites, the Babylonians, the Susanchites, the Dchavites, and the Elamites,

10 ^m And the rest of the nations whom the great and noble Asnapper brought over, and set in the cities of Samaria, and the rest ⁿ that are on this side the river, ^o and ^p at such a time.

11 This is the copy of the letter that they sent unto him, ^q even unto Artaxerxes the king; Thy servants the men on this side the river, and at such a time.

Verse 1. Now when the adversaries of Judah] These were the Samaritans, and the different nations with which the kings of Assyria had peopled Israel, when they had carried the original inhabitants away into captivity, see ver. 9.

Verse 2. Let us build with you] We acknowledge the same God, are solicitous for his glory, and will gladly assist you in this work.

Verse 3. Ye have nothing to do with us] We cannot acknowledge you as worshippers of the true God, and cannot participate with you in any thing that relates to your worship.

Verse 4. Weakened the hands] Discouraged and opposed them by every possible means.

Verse 5. Hired counsellors] They found means to corrupt some of the principal officers of the Persian court, so that the orders of Cyrus were not executed; or at least so slowly as to make them nearly ineffectual.

Until the reign of Darius] This was probably Darius the son of Hystaspes.

Verse 6. In the reign of Ahasuerus] This is the person who is called Cambyses by the Greeks. He reigned seven years and five months; and during the whole of that time the building of the temple was interrupted.

Verse 7. In the days of Artaxerxes] After the death of Cambyses, one of the Magi usurped the empire, feigning himself to be Smerdis, the brother of Cambyses, who had been put to death. This is the person named Artaxerxes in the text: or, following the Hebrew, Artachshasta.

Written in the Syrian tongue] That is, the Syrian or Chaldean character was used; not the Hebrew.

Interpreted in the Syrian tongue] That is, the language, as well as the character, was the Syriac or Chaldæan.

Verse 8. Rehum the chancellor] With this verse the Chaldæan part of this chapter begins; and the same language continues to the end of verse 18 of chap. vi. These men wrote to Darius in their own language; and the king in the same dialect returns an answer, chap. vii. This circumstance adds authenticity to what is written: so scrupulous was the inspired penman, that he not only gave the words which each spoke and wrote, but he gave them also in the very language in which they were conceived, and in the character peculiar to that language.

Verse 10. The great and noble Asnapper] Whether this was Shabmaneser, or Esar-haddon, or some other person, learned men and chronologists are not agreed. He might have been the military officer who was appointed to escort this people to Judæa.

Verse 11. And at such a time] The original has greatly perplexed all commentators and critics. Some translate it and so forth; and our translators supposed that it referred to the date, which however is not specified, and might have been as easily entered as the words and at such a time.

Verse 13. Toll, tribute, and custom] The first term is supposed to imply the capitation tax; the second, an excise on commodities and merchandise; the third, a sort of land tax.

Verse 14. Now because we have maintenance from the king's palace] More literally: Now, because at all times we are salted with the salt of the palace; i. e., We live on the king's bounty, and must be faithful to our benefactor. Salt was used as the emblem of an incorruptible covenant; and those who ate bread and salt together were considered as having entered into a very solemn covenant.

Verse 15. The book of the records of thy fathers] That is, the records of the Chaldæans, to whom the Persians succeeded.

Verse 19. Hath made insurrection against kings] How true is the proverb, "It is an easy thing to find a staff to records of thy fathers: so shalt thou find in the book of the records, and know that this city is a rebellious city, and hurtful unto kings and provinces, and that they have ^a moved sedition ^b within the same of old time: for which cause was this city destroyed.

16 We certify the king, that if this city be builded again, and the walls thereof set up, by this means thou shalt have no portion on this side the river.

17 Then sent the king an answer unto Rehum the chancellor, and to Shimshai the scribe, and to the rest of their ^c companions that dwell in Samaria, and unto the rest beyond the river, Peace, and at such a time.

18 The letter which ye sent unto us hath been plainly read before me.

19 And ^d I commanded, and search hath been made, and it is found that this city of old time hath ^e made insurrection against kings, and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein.

beat a dog!" The struggles of the Israelites to preserve or regain their independency, which they had from God, are termed insurrection, rebellion, and sedition; because at last they fell under the power of their oppressors. Had they been successful in these struggles, such offensive words had never been used.

Verse 20. Beyond the river] That is, the Euphrates. Both David and Solomon carried their conquests beyond this river.

20 There have been mighty kings also over Jerusalem, which have ^a ruled over all countries ^b beyond the river; and toll, tribute, and custom, was paid unto them.

21 ^b Give ye now commandment to cause these men to cease, and that this city be not builded, until another commandment shall be given from me.

22 Take heed now that ye fail not to do this; why should damage grow to the hurt of the kings?

23 Now when the copy of king Artaxerxes' letter was read before Rehum, and Shimshai the scribe, and their companions, they went up in haste to Jerusalem unto the Jews, and made them to cease ¹ by force and power.

24 Then ceased the work of the house of God which is at Jerusalem. So it ceased unto the ¹ second year of the reign of Darius king of Persia.

Verse 21. Until another commandment shall be given from me.] The rebuilding was only provisionally suspended.

Verse 23. Made them to cease by force and power.] Commanded them on pain of the king's displeasure not to proceed, obliging all to remit their labours, and probably bringing an armed force to prevent them from going forward.

CHAPTER V.

Haggai and Zechariah the prophets encourage Zerubbabel and Jeshua to proceed with the building of the temple, 1, 2. Tatnai, the governor of the provinces on this side the Euphrates, and his companions, inquire by what authority they do this, 3-5. They write to Darius; a copy of the letter, 6-16. They request to know how they are to proceed, 17.

THEN ^a the prophets, ^b Haggai the prophet, and ^c Zechariah the son of Iddo, prophesied unto the Jews that were in Judah and Jerusalem in the name of the God of Israel, even unto them.

2 Then rose up ^d Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and began to build the house of God which is at Jerusalem: and with them were the prophets of God helping them.

3 At the same time came to them ^e Tatnai, governor on this side the river, and Shethar-boznai, and their companions, and said thus unto them, 'Who hath commanded you to build this house, and to make up this wall?'

^a 1 Esd. vi. 1, &c.—^b Hag. i. 1.—^c Zech. i. 1.—^d Ch. iii. 2.—^e Ver. 6. Ch. vi. 6.—^f Ver. 9.—^g Ver. 10.—^h Chald. that build this building?

Verse 1. Haggai—and Zechariah.] These are the same whose writings we have among the twelve minor prophets. The son of Iddo] That is, the grandson of Iddo; for Zechariah was the son of Barachiah, the son of Iddo.

Verse 2. Then rose up Zerubbabel.] Here we find three classes of men joining in the sacred work: Zerubbabel the civil governor; Jeshua the high-priest or ecclesiastical governor; and Haggai and Zechariah the prophets. How glorious it is when we see the civil government joining with the sacerdotal and prophetic for the establishment and extension of true religion!

Verse 3. Tatnai, governor.] He was governor of the provinces which belonged to the Persian empire on their side the 4 ^a Then said we unto them after this manner, What are the names of the men ^b that make this building?'

5 But ¹ the eye of their God was upon the elders of the Jews, that they could not cause them to cease, till the matter came to Darius: and then they returned ¹ answer by letter concerning this matter.

7 They sent a letter unto him, ¹ wherein was written thus; Unto Darius the king, all peace.

Euphrates, comprehending Syria, Arabia Deserta, Phœnicia, and Samaria. He seems to have been a mild and judicious man; and to have acted with great prudence and caution, and without any kind of prejudice.

Verse 4. What are the names] The verse should be read thus: THESE are the names of the men who make this building.

Verse 5. The eye of their God was upon the elders.] The watchful care of God was upon the elders. They were assured of his favour; and they found his especial providence working in their behalf.

Verse 8. With great stones.] They are making a very strong and a very costly building.

the province of Judah, to the house of the great God, which is builded with ^a great stones, and timber is laid in the walls, and this work goeth fast on, and prospereth in their hands.

9 Then asked we those elders, and said unto them thus, ^b Who commanded you to build this house, and to make up these walls?

10 We asked their names also, to ^c certify thee, that we might write the names of the men that were the chief of them.

11 And thus they returned us answer, saying, We are the servants of the God of heaven and earth, and build the house that was builded these many years ago, which a great king of Israel builded ^e and set up.

12 But ^d after that our fathers had provoked the God of heaven unto wrath, he gave them into the hand of ^e Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, the Chaldean, who destroyed this house, and carried the people away into Babylon.

13 But in the first year of ^f Cyrus the king of Babylon, the same king Cyrus made a decree to build ^g this house of God.

^a Chald. stones of rolling.—^b Ver. 3, 4.—^c 1 Kings vi. 1.—^d 2 Chron. xxxvi. 18, 17.—^e 2 Kings xxiv. 2. xxv. 8, 9, 11.—^f Ch. i. 1.—^g Ch. i.

Verse 11. We are the servants of the God of Heaven] How simple, plain, and ingenuous is this confession! They were the servants of the God of heaven. How came they then into bondage? Why, they provoked the God of Heaven—repeatedly sinned against him, and then he gave them into the hands of their enemies.

Verse 17. The—treasure house] This is a Persian word.

14 And ^h the vessels also of gold and silver of the house of God, which Nebuchadnezzar took out of the temple that was in Jerusalem, and brought them into the temple of Babylon, those did Cyrus the king take out of the temple of Babylon, and they were delivered unto one, ^h whose name was Sheshbazzar, whom he had made ⁱ governor;

15 And said unto him, Take these vessels, go, carry them into the temple that is in Jerusalem, and let the house of God be builded in his place.

16 Then came the same Sheshbazzar, and ^j laid the foundation of the house of God which is in Jerusalem: and since that time even until now hath it been in building, and ^k yet it is not finished.

17 Now therefore, if it seem good to the king, let there be search made in the king's treasure house, which is there at Babylon, whether it be so, that a decree was made of Cyrus the king to build this house of God at Jerusalem, and let the king send his pleasure to us concerning this matter.

There is a great deal of good sense and candour in this letter. Nothing of passion or prejudice appears in it. God was in all this business; he was now giving an additional proof of his continued regard for a disobedient people, whom, though he had punished in his justice, he had spared in his mercy.

CHAPTER VI.

Darius orders search to be made for the edict of Cyrus, 1. It is found at Achmetha, 2. A transcript of this edict, 3-5. Darius confirms it, 6-12. Tatnai encourages the Jews to proceed; and they finish the temple in the sixth year of Darius, 13-15. They dedicate the temple, 16-18; keep the passover, 19-21, and the feast of unleavened bread, 22.

THEN Darius the king made a decree, ^a and search was made in the house of the ^b rolls, where the treasures ^c were laid up in Babylon.

2 And there was found at ^d Achmetha, in the palace that is in the province of the Medes, a roll, and therein was a record thus written:

3 In the first year of Cyrus the king, the same Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid; the height

Verse 1. In the house of the rolls] This is the first time we hear of a library.

Verse 2. At Achmetha] Ecbatana in India, whither it is probable all the records of Cyrus had been carried. This was a sort of summer residence for the kings of Persia. [Many commentators translate the word as in the margin: "in a coffer."]

Verse 3. The height thereof threescore cubits] This was much larger than the temple of Solomon.

Verse 4. Three rows of great stones, and a row of new

6 ^h Now therefore, Tatnai, governor beyond the timber] We have noticed this kind of building before, three courses of stones, and then a course of strong balk; and this continued to the square of the building.

And let the expenses be given] Cyrus had ordered wood to be cut at Libanus, and conveyed to Joppa at his expense; but it does not appear that he ^h furnished the other expenses of the building, for we have already seen that the Jews contributed for the defraying of all others. But it appears that he provided at his own expense the sacrifices and offerings for the temple. See ver. 9.

7 Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews build this house of God in his place.

8 Moreover ^b I make a decree what ye shall do to the elders of these Jews for the building of this house of God: that of the king's goods, even of the tribute beyond the river, forthwith expenses be given unto these men, that they be not ^c hindered.

9 And that which they have need of, both young bullocks, and rams, and lambs, for the burnt-offerings of the God of heaven, wheat, salt, wine, and oil, according to the appointment of the priests which are at Jerusalem, let it be given them day by day without fail:

10 ^d That they may offer sacrifices ^e of sweet savours unto the God of heaven, and ^f pray for the life of the king, and of his sons.

11 Also I have made a decree, that whosoever shall alter this word, let timber be pulled down from his house, and being set up, ^g let him be hanged thereon; ^h and let his house be made a dunghill for this.

12 And the God that hath caused his ⁱ name to dwell there destroy all kings and people, that shall put to their hand to alter and to destroy this house of God which is at Jerusalem. I Darius have made a decree; let it be done with speed.

13 Then Tatnai, governor on this side the river, Shethar-boznai, and their companions, according to that which Darius the king had sent, so they did speedily.

14 ^j And the elders of the Jews builded, and they prospered through the prophesying of Haggai the prophet and Zechariah the son of Iddo. And they builded, and finished it, according to the commandment of the God of Israel, and according to the ^k commandment of ^l Cyrus, and ^m Darius, and ⁿ Artaxerxes king of Persia.

15 And this house was finished on the third ^o day of the month Adar, which was in the sixth year of the reign of Darius the king.

16 And the children of Israel, the priests, and the Levites, and the rest of ^p the children of the captivity, kept ^q the dedication of this house of God with joy.

17 And ^r offered at the dedication of this house of God an hundred bullocks, two hundred rams, four hundred lambs; and for a sin-offering for all Israel, twelve he-goats according to the number of the tribes of Israel.

18 And they set the priests in their ^s divisions, and the Levites in their ^t courses, for the service of God, which is at Jerusalem; ^u as ^v it is written in the book of Moses.

19 And the children of the captivity kept the passover ^w upon the fourteenth day of the first month.

20 For the priests and the Levites were ^x purified together, all of them were pure, and ^y killed the passover for all the children of the captivity, and for their brethren the priests, and for themselves.

21 And the children of Israel which were come again out of captivity, and all such as had separated themselves unto them from the ^z filthiness of the heathen of the land, to seek the Lord God of Israel, did eat,

22 And kept the ^a feast of unleavened bread seven days with joy: for the Lord had made them joyful, and ^{aa} turned the heart ^{bb} of the king of Assyria unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of God, the God of Israel.

Verse 6. Be ye far from thence] Do not interrupt the Jews in their building; but on the contrary, further them all in your power.

Verse 10. And pray for the life of the king, and of his sons.] Even heathens believed that offerings made in their behalf to the God of the Jews would be available. And this principle has had considerable influence in certain states, where there was even a form of religion established by the law, to induce them to tolerate other forms, that the state might have the benefit of their prayers.

Verse 11. Let timber be pulled down] Whether this refers to the punishment of hanging and gibbeting, of whipping at a post, or of empaling, is not quite clear.

Let his house be made a dunghill] Let it be never more used, except for the most sordid and unclean purposes.

Verse 14. According to the commandment of the God of Israel] He first gave the order, and stirred up the hearts of the following Persian kings to second that order.

Verse 15. This house was finished] The sixth year of Darius mentioned here was about A.M. 3489, twenty years after the foundation had been laid by Zerubbabel, under the reign of Cyrus.

Verse 17. Twelve he-goats] This was a sin-offering for every tribe.

Verse 18. And they set the priests] With this verse the Chaldee or Aramitic part of this chapter ends.

Verse 20. The Levites were purified together] They were all ready at one time to observe the proper rites and ceremonies, and had no need of having a second passover, which was appointed by the law for those who had been accidentally defiled, or were at a distance from the tabernacle. See 2 Chron. xxx. 3.

Verse 21. And all such as had separated themselves] These were the proselytes who had embraced the Jewish religion by having mingled with the Jews in their captivity.

A good example is very persuasive; and particularly so when founded on pure principles.

Verse 22. Turned the heart of the king of Assyria] Here put for king of Persia. Cyrus and his successors possessed all the rights and estates of the ancient kings of Assyria, and therefore the same monarch may be styled king of Assyria as well as king of Persia.

CHAPTER VII.

In the seventh year of Artaxerxes, king of Persia, Ezra goes up to Jerusalem; and with him certain of the priests, Levites, porters, and Nethinim: his character, 1-10. The letter and decree of Artaxerxes, in behalf of the Jews, 11-26. Ezra's thanksgiving to God for these mercies, 27, 28.

NOW ^aafter these things, in the reign of ^bArtaxerxes king of Persia, Ezra ^cthe son of Seraiah, the son of Azariah, the son of Hilkiah,

2 The son of Shallum, the son of Zadok, the son of Ahitub,

3 The son of Amariah, the son of Azariah, the son of Meraioth,

4 The son of Zerariah, the son of Uzzi, the son of Bukki,

5 The son of Abishua, the son of Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the chief priest:

6 This Ezra went up from Babylon; and he was a ready scribe in the law of Moses, which the LORD God of Israel had given: and the king granted him all his request, ^caccording to the hand of the LORD his God upon him.

7 ^dAnd there went up some of the children of Israel, and of the priests, and ^ethe Levites, and the singers, and the porters, and ^fthe Nethinims, unto Jerusalem, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes the king.

8 And he came to Jerusalem in the fifth month, which was in the seventh year of the king.

9 For upon the first day of the first month ^ghe began he to go up from Babylon, and on the first day of the fifth month came he to Jerusalem, ^haccording to the good hand of his God upon him.

10 For Ezra had prepared his heart to ⁱseek the law of the LORD, and to do it, and to ^jteach in Israel statutes and judgments.

11 Now this is the copy of the letter that the king Artaxerxes gave unto Ezra the priest, the scribe, even a scribe of the words of the commandments of the LORD, and of his statutes to Israel.

Verse 1. In the reign of Artaxerxes] This was Artaxerxes Longimanus, the seventh of whose reign chronologers place A. M. 3547, sixty-eight years after Cyrus had sent back Zerubbabel.

Son of Seraiah] Either this could not have been Seraiah the high-priest, who had been put to death by Nebuchadnezzar one hundred and twenty-one years before this time, or the term son here must signify only his descendants, or one of his descendants. In this place there are only sixteen generations reckoned between Ezra and Aaron, but in 1 Chron. vi. 8, 4, &c., there are not less than twenty-two. We must therefore supply the deficient generations from the above place, between Amariah son of Meraioth, 1 Chron. vi. 7, and Azariah the son of Johanan, ver. 10.

Verse 6. A ready scribe] The original does not merely signify a speedy writer or an excellent penman, but one who was eminently skilful in expounding the law. In this sense the word is repeatedly used in the New Testament; and we find that both in the Old and New Testaments it had the same signification.

Verse 8. He came to Jerusalem in the fifth month] From verse 9, we learn that Ezra and his company were upwards priest, a scribe of the law of the God of heaven, perfect peace, ^oand at such a time.

13 I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel, and of his priests and Levites, in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee.

18 And whatsoever shall seem good to thee, and to thy brethren, to do with the rest of the silver and the gold, that do after the will of your God.

19 The vessels also that are given thee for the service of the house of thy God, ^wthose deliver thou before the God of Jerusalem.

20 And whatsoever more shall be needful for the house of thy God, which thou shalt have occasion to bestow, bestow it out of the king's treasure house.

of four months on their journey. They could not travel fast, as they were a great company, composed in part of the aged and infirm, besides multitudes of women and children. They appear also to have taken a circuitous route.

Verse 10. Ezra had prepared his heart] Here is a fine character of a minister of God: He prepares, fixes, purposes, and determines, with his heart—with all his powers and affections, to seek the law of God, and to do it himself, that he may be properly qualified to teach its statutes and judgments to Israel.

Verse 12. Artaxerxes, king of kings] This letter, from the beginning of this verse to the end of ver. 26, is in the Aramitic or Chaldee language.

Verse 13. Their own freewill] None shall be forced either to go or to stay. He who loves his God will avail himself of this favourable opportunity.

Verse 14. His seven counsellors] It is very likely that the privy council of the king consisted of seven persons simply. The names of those seven counsellors or chamberlains may be found in the book of Esther, chap. i. 10.

Verse 18. After the will of your God] He gave them the fullest liberty, binding them to no form or mode of worship.

23 ^b Whatsoever is commanded by the God of heaven, let it be diligently done for the house of the God of heaven: for why should there be wrath against the realm of the king and his sons?

24 Also we certify you, that touching any of the priests and Levites, singers, porters, Nethinims, or ministers of this house of God, it shall not be lawful to impose toll, tribute, or custom, upon them.

25 And thou, Ezra, after the wisdom of thy God, that is in thine hand, ^c set magistrates and judges, which may judge all the people that are beyond the 26 And whosoever will not do the law of thy God, and the law of the king, let judgment be executed speedily upon him, whether it be unto death, or ^e to banishment, or to confiscation of goods, or to imprisonment.

27 ^f Blessed be the LORD God of our fathers, ^g which hath put such a thing as this in the king's heart, to beautify the house of the LORD which is in Jerusalem:

28 And ^h hath extended mercy unto me before the king, and his counsellors, and before all the king's mighty princes. And I was strengthened as ⁱ the hand of the LORD my God was upon me, and I gathered together out of Israel chief men to go up with me.

An hundred measures of wheat] An hundred cors; each cor was a little more than seventy-five gallons, one quart, and a pint, wine measure.

An hundred baths of wine] Each bath was seven gallons and five pints.

Verse 23. Why should there be wrath] As he believed he was appointed by the Almighty to do this work, he therefore wished to do it heartily, knowing that if he did not, God would be displeased, and that the kingdom would be cut off from him or his posterity.

Verse 24. It shall not be lawful to impose toll] As these persons had no private revenues, it would have been unreasonable to have laid them under taxation.

Verse 26. Whether it be unto death] With this verse the Chaldee part of this chapter ends.

Verse 28. And I was strengthened] In what the king decreed he saw the hand of God; he therefore gave him the praise, and took courage. There is a most amiable spirit of piety in these reflections. Ezra simply states the case; shows what the king had determined, and tells what he said; and then points out the grand agent in the whole business—it was the Lord God of his fathers. Thus God had put it into the king's heart to beautify the house of Jehovah; and, as that house was built for the salvation of the souls of men, he gives God praise for putting it into the king's heart to repair it: he who loves God and man will rejoice in the establishment of the divine worship, because this is the readiest way to promote the best interests of man.

CHAPTER VIII.

The genealogy of the chief persons who went with Ezra from Babylon, 1-14. He gathers them together at Ahava; and finding among them no Levites, he sends confidential persons to the river of Ahava, who return with many Levites and Nethinims, 15-20. He proclaims a fast at Ahava for divine protection on their journey, 21-23. He delivers to the care of the priests, &c., the silver, gold, and sacred vessels, that they might carry them to Jerusalem, and deliver them to the high-priest, 24-30. They depart from Ahava, and come to Jerusalem, 31, 32. The vessels are weighed, and the weight registered, 33, 34. They offer burnt-offerings to God, 35, deliver the king's commissions to his lieutenants, by whom they are furthered in their work, 36.

THESE ^a are now the chief of their fathers, and this is the genealogy of them that went up with me from Babylon, in the reign of Artaxerxes the king.

2 Of the sons of Phinehas; Gershom: of the sons of Ithamar; Daniel: of the sons of David; ^b Hattush.

3 Of the sons of Shechaniah, of the sons of ^c Pharosh; Zechariah: and with him were reckoned by genealogy of the males an hundred and fifty.

4 Of the sons of Pahath-moab; Elihoenai the son of Zerahiah, and with him two hundred males.

5 Of the sons of Shechaniah; the son of Jahaziel, and with him three hundred males.

6 Of the sons also of Adin; Ebod the son of Jonathan, and with him fifty males.

7 And of the sons of Elam; Jeshaiiah the son of Athaliah, and with him seventy males.

8 And of the sons of Shephuthiah; Zebadiah the son of Michael, and with him fourscore males.

9 Of the sons of Joab; Obadiah the son of Jehiel, and with him two hundred and eighteen males.

10 And of the sons of Shelomith; the son of Josiphiah, and with him an hundred and threescore males.

11 And of the sons of Bebai; Zechariah the son of Bebai, and with him twenty and eight males.

12 And of the sons of Azgad; Johanan ^d the son of Hakkatan, and with him an hundred and ten males.

13 And of the last sons of Adonikam, whose names

^a 1 Esd. viii. 28.—^b 1 Chron. iii. 22.

^d Ch. ii. 3.—^c Or, the youngest son.

Verse 2. Gershom] One of the descendants of Phinehas, son of Eleazar.

Verse 8. Of the sons of Shechaniah] There were three of this name; the second is mentioned ver. 5, and the third chap. x. 2. They were all different persons as may be seen from their fathers' houses.

are these, Eliphelet, Jeiel, Shemaiah, and with them threescore males.

14 Of the sons also of Bigvai; Uthai, and Zabud, and with them seventy males.

15 And I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava; and there abode we in tents three days: and I viewed the people, and the priests, and found there none of the sons of Levi.

16 Then sent I for Eliczer, for Ariel, for Shemaiah, and for Elnathan, and for Jarib, and for Elnathan, and for Nathan, and for Zechariah, and for Meshullam, chief men; also for Joiarib, and for Elnathan, men of understanding.

17 And I sent them with commandment unto Iddo the chief at the place Casiphia, and I told them what they should say unto Iddo, and to his brethren the Nethinims, at the place Casiphia, that they should bring unto us ministers for the house of our God.

18 And by the good hand of our God upon us they brought us a man of understanding, of the sons of Mahli, the son of Levi, the son of Israel; and Sherebiah, with his sons and his brethren, eighteen;

19 And Hashabiah, and with him Jeshaiah of the sons of Merari, his brethren and their sons, twenty; 20 Also of the Nethinims, whom David and the princes had appointed for the service of the Levites, two hundred and twenty Nethinims: all of them were expressed by name.

21 Then I proclaimed a fast there, at the river of Ahava, that we might afflict ourselves before our God, to seek of him a right way for us, and for our little ones, and for all our substance.

22 For I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen to help us against the enemy in the way: because we had spoken unto the king, saying, The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him; but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him.

23 So we fasted and besought our God for this: and he was entreated of us.

24 Then I separated twelve of the chief of the priests, Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brethren with them.

25 And weighed unto them the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, even the offering of the house of our God, which the king, and his counsellors, and his lords, and all Israel there present, had offered:

26 I even weighed unto their hand six hundred and fifty talents of silver, and silver vessels an hundred talents, and of gold an hundred talents;

27 Also twenty basons of gold, of a thousand drams; and two vessels of fine copper precious as gold.

28 And I said unto them, Ye are holy unto the Lord; the vessels are holy also; and the silver and the gold are a freewill-offering unto the Lord God of your fathers.

29 Watch ye, and keep them, until ye weigh them before the chief of the priests and the Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, at Jerusalem, in the chambers of the house of the Lord.

30 So took the priests and the Levites the weight of the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, to bring them to Jerusalem unto the house of our God.

31 Then we departed from the river of Ahava on the twelfth day of the first month, to go unto Jerusalem: and the hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us from the hand of the enemy, and of such as lay in wait by the way.

32 And we came to Jerusalem, and abode there three days.

33 Now on the fourth day was the silver and the gold and the vessels weighed in the house of our God by the hand of Meremoth the son of Uriah the priest; and with him was Eleazar the son of Phinehas; and with them was Jozabab the son of Jeshua, and Noadiah the son of Binnui, Levites:

34 By number and by weight of every one: and all the weight was written at that time.

35 Also the children of those that had been carried away, which were come out of the captivity, offered burnt-offerings unto the God of Israel, twelve bullocks for all Israel, ninety and six rams, seventy and seven lambs, twelve he-goats for a sin-offering: all this was a burnt-offering unto the Lord.

36 And they delivered the king's commissions unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors on this side the river: and they furthered the people, and the house of God.

Verse 15. The river that runneth to Ahava] Ahava was a river itself, which is supposed to be the same that is called Drava or Adiava, in the province of Adiabene; and perhaps the place whence the people of Ara came who were brought by the king of Assyria to Palestine, 2 Kings xvii. 24. [The latest researches identify this river with the modern Hitt, on the Euphrates, due east of Damascus.]

None of the sons of Levi.] None that were simply Levites. He found priests, and they were sons of Levi; but no Levites that were not priests.

Verse 17. At the place Casiphia] The most judicious commentators are agreed that by Casiphia, the Caspian mountains, between Media and Hyrcania, are intended; where, probably, the Nethinim were employed in working silver mines: keseph, from which the word comes, signifies silver. [This explanation is improbable. The site is yet uncertain.]

Verse 22. I was ashamed to require—a band] He therefore found it necessary to seek the Lord by fasting and prayer, that they might have from Him those succours without which they might become a prey to their enemies; and then the religion which they professed would be considered by the heathen as false and vain. Thus we see that this good man had more anxiety for the glory of God than for his own personal safety.

Verse 26. Silver vessels an hundred talents] That is, The weight of all the silver vessels amounted to one hundred talents; not that there were one hundred vessels of silver, each a talent in weight.

Verse 35. Twelve bullocks for all Israel] Though of tribes there were only Judah and Benjamin, yet they offered a bullock for every tribe, as if present. There can be little doubt that there were individuals there from all the twelve tribes, possibly some families of each; but no complete tribe but those mentioned above.

Verse 36. The king's lieutenants] This is generally understood to mean lieutenant or deputy, and is probably of Persian origin, though here greatly corrupted.

CHAPTER IX.

The princes inform Ezra that many of the people now settled in the land had married heathen wives; and several of the rulers were principal offenders in this thing, 1, 2. He is greatly afflicted, 3, 4. His prayer to God on this account, 5-15.

NOW * when these things were done, the princes came to me, saying, The people of Israel, and the priests, and the Levites, have not ^b separated themselves from the people of the lands, ^c doing according to their abominations, even of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and the Amorites.

² For they have ^a taken of their daughters for themselves, and for their sons: so that the ^e holy seed have mingled themselves with the people of those lands: yea the hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass.

³ And when I heard this thing, ^f I rent my garment and my mantle, and plucked off the hair of my head and of my beard, and sat down ^b astonished.

⁴ Then were assembled unto me every one that ^l trembled at the words of the God of Israel, because of the transgression of those that had been carried away; and I sat astonished until the ^j evening sacrifice.

⁵ And at the evening sacrifice I rose up from my ^m heaviness; and having rent my garment and my mantle, I fell upon my knees, and ^l spread out my hands unto the Lord my God, ⁶ And said, O my God, I am ⁿ ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God: for ^o our iniquities are increased over our head, and our ^p trespass is ^p grown up unto the heavens.

Verse 1. The people of Israel] These were they who had returned at first with Zerubbabel, and were settled in the land of Judah, and whom Ezra found on his arrival to be little better than the Canaanitish nations from whom God had commanded them ever to keep separate.

Verse 2. Hath been chief in this trespass.] They who are the first men have been the most capital offenders.

Verse 3. I rent my garment and my mantle] This significant act is frequently mentioned in the sacred writings, and was common among all ancient nations.

Plucked off the hair] Shaving the head and beard were signs of excessive grief; much more so the plucking off the hair, which must produce exquisite pain.

Verse 4. Those that had been carried away] Those that had returned long before with Zerubbabel; see ver. 1.

Until the evening sacrifice.] The evening sacrifice was offered between the two evenings, i. e., between sun-set and the end of twilight; the morning sacrifice between break of day and sun-rise. Ezra sat astonished—confounded in his mind, distressed in his soul, and scarcely knowing what to do. He probably had withdrawn himself into some sequestered place, or into some secret part of the temple, spending the time in meditation and reflection.

Verse 5. Fell upon my knees. In token of the deepest humility. Spread out my hands, as if to lay hold on the mercy of God.

Verse 6. I am ashamed and blush] God had been so often provoked, and had so often pardoned them, that he was ashamed to go back again to the throne of grace to ask

⁷ Since the days of our fathers have ^a we been in a great trespass unto this day; and for our iniquities ^b have we, our kings, and our priests, been delivered into the hand of the kings of the lands, to the sword, to captivity, and to a spoil, and to ^c confusion of face, as it is this day.

⁹ For we were bondmen; ^g yet our God hath not forsaken us in our bondage, but ^h hath extended mercy unto us in the sight of the kings of Persia, to give us a reviving, to set up the house of our God, and ⁱ to repair the desolations thereof, and to give us ^j a wall in Judah and in Jerusalem.

¹² Now therefore ⁿ give not your daughters unto their sons, neither take their daughters unto your sons, ^o nor seek their peace or their wealth for ever: that ye may be strong, and eat the good of the land, for mercy in their behalf. This is the genuine feeling of every re-awakened backslider.

Verse 8. And now for a little space] This interval in which they were returning from servitude to their own land.

Grace hath been shewed] God has disposed the hearts of the Persian kings to publish edicts in our favour.

To leave us a remnant to escape] The ten tribes are gone irrecoverably into captivity; a great part even of Judah and Benjamin had continued beyond the Euphrates: so that Ezra might well say, there was but a remnant which had escaped.

A nail in his holy place] Even so much ground as to fix our tent-poles in.

May lighten our eyes] To give us a thorough knowledge of ourselves and of our highest interest, is the reason why God has brought us back to this place.

A little reviving] We were perishing, and our hopes were almost dead: and, because of our sins, we were sentenced to death: but God in his great mercy has given us a new trial; and he begins with little, to see if we will make a wise and faithful use of it.

Verse 10. What shall we say after this?] Even in the midst of these beginnings of respite and mercy we have begun to provoke thee anew.

Verse 11. Have filled it from one end to another]—The abominations have been like a sweeping mighty torrent, that has increased till it filled the whole land, and carried every thing before it.

and ^aleave it for an inheritance to your children for ever.

13 And after all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great trespass, seeing that thou our God ^b hast ^c punished us less than our iniquities deserve, and hast given us such deliverance as this;

14 Should we ^d again break thy commandments,

Verse 13. Hast punished us less than our iniquities] Great, numerous, and oppressive as our calamities have been, yet more as temporal punishments, they have been much less than our provocations have deserved.

Verse 15. Thou art righteous] Thou art merciful; this is one of the many meanings of the word tsedek; and to this meaning St. Paul refers, when he says, God declares his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, Rom. iii. 25.

We remain yet escaped] Because of this righteousness or mercy, and ^ajoin in affinity with the people of these abominations? wouldest not thou be ^b angry with us till thou hadst consumed us, so that there should be no remnant nor escaping?

15 O LORD God of Israel, ^a thou art righteous: for we remain yet escaped, as it is this day: behold, we are ^b before thee ^c in our trespasses: for we cannot ^d stand before thee because of this.

In our trespasses] We have no righteousness; we are clothed and covered with our trespasses.

We cannot stand before thee because of this.] There is a reference here to the temple service: the priests and Levites stood and ministered before the Lord, but they were not permitted to do so unless pure from all legal pollution; so no man shall stand before the judgment-seat of Christ who is not washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. Reader, how dost thou expect to stand there?

CHAPTER X.

The people are greatly afflicted by Ezra's prayer, 1. Shechaniah proposes that all who have taken strange wives should put them away, and the children they had by them; and make a covenant to serve God, 2-4. Ezra is encouraged; and makes a proclamation to collect the people, to find who had transgressed, 5-8. They come together on the twentieth day of the ninth month, 9. Ezra exhorts them to put away their strange wives, 10. The people agree to it, and require time, 11-14. This being granted, the business is completed by the first of the first month, 15-17. Some of the priests had taken strange wives; their names, and the names of all who were in the same trespass, 18-44.

NOW ^awhen Ezra had prayed, and when he had confessed, weeping and casting himself down ^bbefore the house of God, there assembled unto him out of Israel a very great congregation of men and women and children: for the people ^cwept very sore.

2 And Shechaniah the son of Jehiel, one of the sons of Elam, answered and said unto Ezra, We have ^dtrespassed against our God, and have taken strange wives of the people of the land: yet now there is hope in Israel concerning this thing.

3 Now therefore let us make a ^ecovenant with our God ^fto put away all the wives, and such as are born of them, according to the counsel of my lord, and of those that ^gtremble at ^hthe commandment of our God; and let it be done according to the law.

4 Arise; for this matter belongeth unto thee: we

Verse 1. The people wept very sore.] They were deeply affected at the thought of God's displeasure, which they justly feared was about to light upon them, because of their transgressions.

Verse 2. Shechaniah the son of Jehiel] He speaks here in the name of the people, not acknowledging himself culpable, for he is not in the following list. He seems to have been a chief man among the people; and Ezra, at present, stood in need of his influence and support.

Yet now there is hope in Israel] Mikvah, expectation, of pardon; for the people were convinced of the evil, and were deeply penitent.

also will be with thee: ⁱbe of good courage, and do it.

5 Then arose Ezra and made the chief priests, the Levites, and all Israel, ^jto swear that they should do according to this word. And they swore.

6 ^kThen Ezra rose up from before the house of God and went into the chamber of Johanan the son of Eliashib: and when he came thither, he ^ldid eat no bread, nor drink water: for he mourned because of the transgression of them that had been carried away.

7 And they made proclamation throughout Judah and Jerusalem unto all the children of the captivity, that they should gather themselves together unto Jerusalem;

Verse 4. Arise; for this matter belongeth unto thee] By the decree of Artaxerxes, he was authorized to do every thing that the law of God required: see chap. vii. 23-28.

Verse 5. And they swear.] The thing was evidently contrary to the law of God; and now he bound them by an oath to rectify the abuse.

Verse 6. Johanan the son of Eliashib] Eliashib was high-priest, and was succeeded in that office by his son Joiada, Neh. xii. 10. Probably Johanan here is the same as Jonathan in Nehemiah, who was the son of Joiada, and grandson of Eliashib.

and himself separated from the congregation of those that had been carried away.

9 Then all the men of Judah and Benjamin gathered themselves together unto Jerusalem within three days. It was the ninth month on the twentieth day of the month: and ^aall the people sat in the street of the house of God, trembling because of this matter, and for ^bthe great rain.

10 And Ezra the priest stood up, and said unto them, Ye have transgressed, and ^chave taken strange wives, to increase the trespass of Israel.

11 Now therefore ^dmake confession unto the LORD God of your fathers, and do his pleasure: and ^eseparate yourselves from the people of the land, and from the strange wives.

12 Then all the congregation answered and said with a loud voice, As thou hast said, so must we do.

13 But the people are many, and it is a time of much rain, and we are not able to stand without, neither is this a work of one day or two: for ^fwe are many that have transgressed in this thing.

14 Let now our rulers of all the congregation stand, and let all them which have taken strange wives in our cities come at appointed times, and with them the elders of every city, and the judges thereof, until ^gthe fierce wrath of our God ^hfor this matter be turned from us.

15 Only Jonathan the son of Asahel and Jahaziah the son of Tikvah, ⁱwere employed about this matter: and Meshullam and Shabbethai the Levite helped them.

16 And the children of the captivity did so. And Ezra the priest, with certain chief of the fathers, after the house of their fathers, and all of them by their names, were separated, and sat down in the first day of the tenth month to examine the matter.

17 And they made an end with all the men that had taken strange wives by the first day of the first month.

18 And among the sons of the priests there were found that had taken strange wives: namely, of the sons of Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren; Maaseiah, and Eliezer, and Jarib, and Gedaliah.

19 And they ^jgave their hands that they would Verse 8. Himself separated] Excommunicated from the church of God, and exiled from Israel.

Verse 9. Ninth month] Answering to a part of our December.

Trembling because of—the great rain.] Because of the winter, Septuagint; in was now December, the coldest and most rainy part of the year in Palestine.

Verse 11. Make confession] Acknowledge your sins before God, with deep compunction of heart, and the fullest resolution to forsake them.

Verse 13. As thou hast said, so must we do.] They all resolved to do what Ezra then commanded; they did put away their wives, even those by whom they had children; ver. 44: this was a great hardship on the women and children. Though by the Jewish laws such marriages were null and void, yet as the women they had taken did not know these laws, their case was deplorable. After all there is some room to doubt whether they did put them finally away, for several years after Nehemiah found Jews that had mar-put away their wives; and being ^kguilty, they offered a ram of the flock for their trespass.

20 And of the sons of Immer; Hanani, and Zebadiah.

21 And of the sons of Harim; Maaseiah, and Eliah, and Shemaiah, and Jehiel, and Uzziash.

22 And of the sons of Pashur; Elieoenai, Maaseiah, Ishmael, Nethaneel, Jozabad, and Elashah.

23 Also of the Levites; Jozabad, and Shimei, and Kelaiah, (the same is Kelita,) Pethahiah, Judah, and Eliezer.

24 Of the singers also; Eliashib: and of the porters; Shallum, and Telem, and Uri.

25 Moreover of Israel: of the sons of Parosh; Ramiah, and Jeziah, and Malchiah, and Miamin, and Eleazar, and Malchijah, and Benaiah.

26 And of the sons of Elam; Mattaniah, Zechariah, and Jehiel, and Abdi, and Jeremoth, and Eliah.

27 And of the sons of Zattu; Elieoenai, Eliashib, Mattaniah, and Jeremoth, and Zabad, and Aziza.

28 Of the sons also of Bebai; Jehohanan, Hananiah, Zabbai, and Athlai.

29 And of the sons of Bani; Meshullam, Malluch, and Adaiah, Jashub, and Sheal, and Ramoth.

30 And of the sons of Pahath-moab; Adna, and Chelal, Benaiah, Maaseiah, Mattaniah, Bezaleel, and Binnui, and Manassch.

31 And of the sons of Harim; Eliezer, Ishijah, Malchiah, Shemaiah, Shimeon, 32 Benjamin, Malluch, and Shemariah.

33 Of the sons of Hashum; Mattenai, Mattathah, Zabad, Eliphelet, Jeremai, Manassch, and Shimei.

ried wives of Ashdod, Ammon, and Moab; Neh. xiii. 23.

Verse 17. The first day of the first month.] So they were three whole months in examining into this affair, and making those separations which the law required.

Verse 19. They gave their hands] They bound themselves in the most solemn manner to do as the rest of the delinquents had done; and they made an acknowledgment of their iniquity to God by offering each a ram for a trespass-offering.

Verse 25. Moreover of Israel] That is, simple Israelites, to distinguish them from the priests, Levites, and singers, mentioned in verses 13, 23, and 24.

Verse 44. Some of them had wives by whom they had children.] This observation was probably intended to show that only a few of them had children, but it shows also how rigorously the law was put in execution.

In the Hebrew text this and the following book make but one, though sometimes Nehemiah is distinguished as the Second Book of Esdras.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK

THAT this book was compiled out of the journal or memoranda made by Nehemiah himself there can be no doubt; but that he was not the compiler is evident from several passages in the work itself. As it is written consecutively as one book with Ezra, many have supposed that this latter was the author: but whoever compares the style of each, in the Hebrew, will soon be convinced that this is not correct; the style is so very different, that they could not possibly be the work of the same person.

It is doubtful even whether the Nehemiah who is mentioned Ezra ii. 2, who came to Jerusalem with Zerubbabel, be the same with him who is the reputed author of this book. By the computation of the best chronologists, Zerubbabel came to Jerusalem in A.M. 3468; and Nehemiah, who is here mentioned, did not come before the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes, which falls in with A. M. 3558, ninety years after: and as his account here is carried down to A.M. 3570, nearly twenty years later, he must at his death have been about an hundred and thirty, allowing him to have been only twenty years old at the time that Zerubbabel went up to Jerusalem. This is by no means likely, as this would make him the king's cup-bearer when he was upwards of an hundred years of age! It seems, therefore, evident that the Nehemiah of Ezra cannot be the same with the reputed author of this book, and the cup-bearer of the Persian king.

Of what tribe or lineage he was, we cannot tell: all we know of his parentage is, that he was the son of Hachaliah. Some suppose he was a priest, and of the house of Aaron, on the authority of 2 Mac. i. 18, 21; but this is but slender evidence. It is likely he was of a very eminent family, if not of the blood royal of Judah, as only persons of eminence could be placed in the office which he sustained in the Persian court.

THE BOOK

OF

CHAPTER I.

Account of Nehemiah, 1. His inquiry about the Jews that had returned from their captivity, and concerning the state of Jerusalem, of which he receives the most discouraging information, 2, 3. He is greatly affected; fasts and prays, 4. His prayer and confession to God, 5-11.

THE words of ^aNehemiah the son of Hachaliah. And it came to pass in the month Chisleu, in the twentieth year, as I was in Shushan the palace,

2 That Hanani, one of my brethren, came, he and certain men of Judah; and I asked them concerning the Jews that had escaped, which were left of the captivity, and concerning Jerusalem.

3 And they said unto me, The remnant that are left of the captivity there in the province are in great affliction and reproach: ^bthe wall of Jerusalem also ^cis broken down, and the gates thereof are burned with fire.

4 And it came to pass, when I heard these words, that I sat down and wept, and mourned certain days, and fasted, and prayed before the God of heaven,

5 And said, I beseech thee, ^dO LORD God of heaven, the great and terrible God, ^ethat keepeth covenant and mercy for them that love him and observe his commandments:

6 Let thine ear now be attentive, and ^fthine eyes open, that thou mayest hear the prayer of thy servant, which I pray before thee now, day and night, for the children of Israel thy servants, and ^gconfess the sins of the children of Israel, which we have sinned against thee: both I and my father's house have sinned.

7 ^hWe have dealt very corruptly against thee, and have ⁱnot kept the commandments, nor the statutes, nor the judgments, which thou commandedst thy servant Moses.

8 Remember, I beseech thee, the word that thou commandedst thy servant Moses, saying, ^jIf ye transgress, I will scatter you abroad among the nations:

9 ^kBut if ye turn unto me, and keep my commandments and do them; ^lthough there were of you cast out unto the uttermost part of the heaven, yet will I gather them from thence, and will bring them unto the place that I have chosen to set my name there.

10 ^mNow these are thy servants and thy people, whom thou hast redeemed by thy great power, and by thy strong hand.

11 O LORD, I beseech thee, ⁿlet now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, ^owho desire to fear thy name: and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day, and grant him mercy in the sight of this man. For I was the king's ^pcup-bearer.

Verse 1. The month Chisleu] Answering to a part of our November and December.

Twentieth year] That is of Artaxerxes, A. M. 3558, B. C. 446.

Shushan the palace] The ancient city of Susa; called in Persian Shuster: the winter residence of the Persian kings.

Verse 3. The wall of Jerusalem also is broken down] This must refer to the walls which had been rebuilt after the people returned from their captivity: for it could not refer to the walls which were broken down and levelled with the dust by Nebuchadnezzar; for to hear of this could be no news to Nehemiah.

Verse 4. And mourned certain days] From the month Chisleu to the month Nisan; about four months from the time he received the above information, till the time that Artaxerxes noticed his grief, chap. ii. 1. All this time he probably spent in supplication to God; waiting for a favourable opening in the divine providence. Every good work is not to be undertaken hastily; prayer and watchfulness are necessary to its completion. Many good works have been ruined by making haste.

Verse 5. Great] Able to do mighty things. Terrible—able to inflict the heaviest judgments.

Verse 6. Let thine ear] Hear what we say and confess. Thine eyes open—see what we suffer.

Verse 7. Have not kept the commandments] The moral precepts by which our lives should be regulated.

Statutes] What refers to the rites and ceremonies of thy religion. [duct to each other.

Judgments] The precepts of justice relative to our country, and far from the ordinances of God, Nehemiah did not forget the law: he read his Bible well, and quotes correctly.

Verse 11. Mercy in the sight of this man.] Favour before the king Ahasuerus. He seems then to have been giving him the cup.

For I was the king's cup-bearer.] The king's butler; which gave him the opportunity of being frequently with the king: and to be in such a place of trust, he must be in the king's confidence. No eastern potentate would have a cup-bearer with whom he could not trust his life, poison being frequently administered in this way.

CHAPTER II.

Artaxerxes, observing the sorrow of Nehemiah, inquires into the cause, 1, 2. Nehemiah shows him the cause, and requests permission to go and rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, 3-6. The king grants it, and gives him letters to the governors beyond the river, 7, 8. He sets out on his journey, 9. Sanballat and Tobiah are grieved to find he had got such a commission, 10. He comes to Jerusalem; and without informing any person of his business, examines by night the state of the city, 11-16. He informs the priests, nobles, and rulers, of his design and commission, 17, 18. The design is turned into contempt by Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem, 19. Nehemiah gives them a suitable answer, 20.

AND it came to pass in the month Nisan, in the twentieth year of ^a Artaxerxes the king, that wine was before him: and ^b I took up the wine, and gave it unto the king. Now I had not been beforetime sad in his presence.

2 Wherefore the king said unto me, Why is thy countenance sad, seeing thou art not sick? this is nothing else but ^c sorrow of heart. Then I was very sore afraid,

3 And said unto the king, ^d Let the king live for ever: why should not my countenance be sad, when ^e the city, the place of my fathers' sepulchres, lieth waste, and the gates thereof are consumed with fire?

4 Then the king said unto me, For what dost thou make request? So I prayed to the God of heaven.

5 And I said unto the king, If it please the king, and if thy servant have found favour in thy sight, that thou wouldest send me unto Judah, unto the city of my fathers' sepulchres, that I may build it.

6 And the king said unto me, (the ^f queen also sitting by him,) For how long shall thy journey be? and when wilt thou return? So it pleased the king to send me: and I set him ^g a time.

7 Moreover I said unto the king, If it please the king, let letters be given me to the governors beyond the river, that they may convey me over till I come into Judah;

Verse 1. Month Nisan] Answering to a part of our March and April.

I took up the wine] It is supposed that the kings of Persia had a different cup-bearer for each quarter of the year, and that it had just now come to Nehemiah's turn.

Verse 2. Then I was very sore afraid] Probably the king spoke as if he had some suspicion that Nehemiah harboured some bad design, and that his face indicated some conceived treachery or remorse.

Verse 3. Let the king live for ever] Far from wishing ill to my master, I wish him on the contrary to live and prosper for ever.

Verse 4. So I prayed to the God of heaven] Before he dared to prefer his request to the king, he made his prayer to God, that his suit might be acceptable: and this he does by mental prayer. To the spirit of prayer every place is a praying place.

Verse 5. The city of my fathers' sepulchres] The tombs of the dead were sacred among the ancients and nothing could appear to them more detestable than disturbing the ashes or remains of the dead. Nehemiah knew that in mentioning this circumstance he should strongly interest the feelings of the Persian king.

Verse 6. The queen also sitting by him] Who probably forwarded his suit. This was not Esther, nor does shegal signify queen, but rather harlot or concubine, she who was chief favourite.

I set him a time] How long this time was we are not told: it is by no means likely that it was long, probably no more than six months or a year; after which he either returned, or had his leave of absence lengthened; for in the 8 And a letter unto Asaph the keeper of the king's forest, that he may give me timber to make beams for the gates of the palace which appertained ^h to the house, and for the wall of the city, and for the house that I shall enter into. And the king granted me, ⁱ according to the good hand of my God upon me.

9 Then I came to the governors beyond the river, and gave them the king's letters. Now the king had sent captains of the army and horsemen with me.

10 When Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, heard of it, it grieved them exceedingly that there was come a man to seek the welfare of the children of Israel.

11 So I came to Jerusalem, and was there three days.

12 And I arose in the night, I and some few men with me; neither told I any man what my God had put in my heart to do at Jerusalem: neither was there any beast with me, save the beast that I rode upon.

13 And I went out by night ^k by the gate of the valley, even before the dragon well, and to the dung port, and viewed the walls of Jerusalem, which were ^l broken down, and the gates thereof were consumed with fire.

14 Then I went on to the gate of the ^m fountain, same year we find he was made governor of the Jews, in which office he continued twelve years, viz., from the twentieth to the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes, chap. v. 14. He then returned to Susa; and after staying a short time, had leave to return to rectify some abuses that Tobiah the Ammonite had introduced into the temple, chap. xiii. 6, 7, and several others of which the people themselves were guilty. After having performed this service, it is likely he returned to the Persian king, and died in his office of cup-bearer; but of this latter circumstance we have no mention in the text.

Verse 8. Asaph the keeper of the king's forest] The paradise of the king. This I believe is originally a Persian word: signifies a pleasant garden, vineyard, pleasure garden, and what we call a paradise.

And the king granted me, &c.] This noble spirited man attributes every thing to God.

Verse 10. Sanballat the Horonite] Probably a native of Horonaim, a Moabite by birth, and at this time governor of the Samaritans under the king of Persia.

Tobiah the servant] Joint governor with Sanballat. Some suppose that the Sanballat here mentioned was the same who persuaded Alexander to build a temple on mount Gerisim in favour of the Samaritans.

Verse 13. The dragon well] Perhaps so called because of the representation of a dragon, out of whose mouth the stream issued that proceeded from the well.

Dung port] This was the gate on the eastern side of the city, through which the filth of the city was carried into the valley of Hinnom.

Verse 14. The gate of the fountain] Of Siloah.

and to the king's pool: but there was no place for the beast that was under me to pass.

15 Then went I up in the night by the ^a brook, and viewed the wall, and turned back, and entered by the gate of the valley, and so returned.

16 And the rulers knew not whither I went, or what I did; neither had I as yet told it to the Jews, nor to the priests, nor to the nobles, nor to the rulers, nor to the rest that did the work.

17 Then said I unto them, Ye see the distress that we are in, how Jerusalem lieth waste, and the gates thereof are burned with fire: come, and let us build up the wall of Jerusalem, that we be no more ^b a reproach.

The king's pool] Probably the aqueduct made by Hezekiah, to bring the waters of Gihon to the city of David.

Verse 15. By the brook] Kidron.
By the gate of the valley] The valley through which the brook Kidron flowed. It was by this gate he went out; so he went all round the city, and entered by the same gate from which he had gone out.

Verse 16. The rulers knew not whither I went] He made no person privy to his design, that he might hide every thing as much as possible from their enemies till he had all things in readiness; lest they should take measures to defeat the work.

18 Then I told them of ^c the hand of my God which was good upon me; as also the king's words that he had spoken unto me. And they said, Let us rise up and build. So they ^d strengthened their hands for this good work.

19 But when Sanballat the Horonite, and Tobiah the servant, the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian, heard it, they ^e laughed us to scorn, and despised us, and said, What is this thing that ye do? ^f will ye rebel against the king?

20 Then answered I them, and said unto them, The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build: ^g but ye have no portion, nor right, nor memorial, in Jerusalem.

^cVer. 8.—^d2 Sam. ii. 7.—^ePs. xlv. 13. lxxix. 4. lxxx. 6.—^fCh. vi. 6.—^gEzra iv. 8.

Verse 18. Then I told them] He opened to them his design and his commission.

Verse 19. Geshem the Arabian] Some chief of the Arabs contiguous to Samaria, who had joined with Sanballat and Tobiah to distress the Jews, and hinder their work.

Will ye rebel against the king?] This they said in order to raise jealousies in the king's mind, and induce him to recall his ordinance.

Verse 20. Ye have no portion, nor right] To be a citizen of Jerusalem was a high honour; and they would not permit those who did not belong to the tribes of Israel to dwell there.

CHAPTER III.

The names of those who rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem; and the parts assigned to each person, 1-32.

THEN ^a Eliashib the high-priest rose up with his brethren the priests, ^b and they builded the sheep gate; they sanctified it, and set up the doors of it; ^c even unto the tower of Meah they sanctified it, unto the tower of ^d Hananeel.

2 And ^e next unto him builded ^f the men of Jericho. And next to them builded Zaccur the son of Imri.

3 ^g But the fish gate did the sons of Hassenaah build who also laid the beams thereof, and ^h set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

4 And next unto them repaired Meremoth the son of Urijah, the son of Koz. And next unto them repaired Meshullam the son of Berechiah, the son of Meshezabeel. And next unto them repaired Zadok, the son of Baana.

5 And next unto them the Tekoites repaired;

Verse 1. Eliashib the high-priest] It was right that the priests should be first in this holy work; and perhaps the sheep gate which is mentioned here is that by which the offerings or sacrifices were brought into the temple.

They sanctified it] As they began with the sacred offering as soon as they got an altar built, it was proper that the gate by which these sacrifices entered should be consecrated for this purpose, i. e., set apart, so that it should be for this use only.

Verse 8. The fish gate] We really know scarcely any thing about these gates—what they were, why called by these names, or in what part of the wall situated.

but their nobles put not their necks to ¹ the work of their Lord.

6 Moreover ¹ the old gate repaired Jehoiada the son of Paseah, and Meshullam the son of Besodeiah; they laid the beams thereof, and set up the doors thereof, and the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

7 And next unto them repaired Melatiah the Gibeonite, and Jadon the Meronothite, the men of Gibeon, and of Mizpah, unto the ² throne of the governor on this side the river.

8 Next unto him repaired Uzziel the son of Harhaiah of the goldsmiths. Next unto him also repaired Hananiah the son of one of the apothecaries, and they ¹ fortified Jerusalem unto the ³ broad wall.

9 And next unto them repaired Rephaiah the son of Hur, the ruler of the half part of Jerusalem.

10 And next unto them repaired Jedaiah the son of Harumaph, even over against his house. And next ¹Ch. xii. 39.—²Ch. ii. 8.—³Or, left Jerusalem unto the broad wall.—⁴Ch. xii. 38.

Verse 7. The throne of the governor] His house, and the place where he dispensed justice and judgment.

Verse 8. Goldsmiths.] From the remotest period of the history of the Jews they had artists in all elegant and ornamental trades; and it is also evident that goldsmiths, apothecaries, and merchants were formed into companies in the time of Nehemiah.

Apothecaries] Rather such as dealt in drugs, aromatics, spices, &c. for embalming, or for furnishing the temple with the incense consumed there.

Verse 9. Ruler of the half part of Jerusalem.] Probably the city was divided into two parts; one for Judah, and unto him repaired Hattush the son of Hashabniah.

11 Malchijah the son of Harim, and Hashub the son of Pahath-moab, repaired the * other piece, ^b and the tower of the furnaces.

12 And next unto him repaired Shallum the son of Halohesh, the ruler of the half part of Jerusalem, he and his daughters.

13 ^c The valley gate repaired Hanun, and the inhabitants of Zanoah; they built it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof, and a thousand cubits on the wall unto ^d the dung gate.

14 But the dung gate repaired Malchiah the son of Rechab, the ruler of part of Beth-haccerem; he built it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof.

15 But ^e the gate of the fountain repaired Shallum the son of Col-hozeh, the ruler of part of Mizpah; he built it, and covered it, and set up the doors thereof, the locks thereof, and the bars thereof, and the wall of the pool of ^f Siloah by the king's garden, and unto the stairs that go down from the city of David.

16 After him repaired Nehemiah the son of Azbuk, the ruler of the half part of Beth-zur, unto ^g the place over against the sepulchres of David, and to the ^h pool that was made, and unto the house of the mighty.

17 And after him repaired the Levites, Rehum, the son of Bani. Next unto him repaired Hashabiah, the ruler of the half part of Keilah, in his part.

18 After him repaired their brethren, Bavai, the son of Henadad, the ruler of the half part of Keilah.

19 And next to him repaired Ezer the son of Jeshua, the ruler of Mizpah, another piece over against the going up to the armoury at the ⁱ turning of the wall.

20 After him Baruch the son of ^j Zabbai earnestly repaired the other piece, from the turning of the wall unto the door of the house of Eliashib the high-priest.

Verse 11. Repaired the other piece] That which was left by Jedaiah after he had repaired the wall opposite to his own house. Probably some of the principal people were obliged to repair those parts of the wall opposite to their own dwellings.

Verse 12. The son of Halohesh] Or, the son of the Enchanter: conjectured to be thus named from having the art to charm serpents.

Verse 13. The inhabitants of Zanoah] This was a town in the tribe of Judah. Josh. xv. 34. [of Benjamin.]

Verse 14. Beth-haccerem] A village or town in the tribe of Benjamin.

Verse 15. The pool of Siloah] This is probably the same as that mentioned by the evangelists.

The stairs that go down from the city of David.] Jerusalem being built on very uneven ground, and some hills being taken within the walls; there was a necessity that there should be in different places steps by which they could ascend and descend.

Verse 16. The pool that was made] Calmet supposes that 21 After him repaired Meremoth the son of Urijah the son of Koz another piece, from the door of the house of Eliashib even to the end of the house of Eliashib.

22 And after him repaired the priests, the men of the plain.

23 After him repaired Benjamin and Hashub over against their house. After him repaired Azariah the son of Maaseiah the son of Ananiah by his house.

24 After him repaired Binnui the son of Henadad another piece, from the house of Azariah unto ¹ the turning of the wall, even unto the corner.

25 Palal the son of Uzai, over against the turning of the wall, and the tower which lieth out from the king's high house, that was by the ² court of the prison. After him Pedaiah the son of Parosh.

26 Moreover ³ the Nethinims ⁴ dwelt in ⁵ Ophel, ⁶ unto the place over against ⁷ the water gate toward the east, and the tower that lieth out.

27 After them the Tekoites repaired another piece, over against the great tower that lieth out, even unto the wall of Ophel.

28 From above the ⁸ horse gate repaired the priests, every one over against his house.

29 After them repaired Zadok the son of Immer over against his house. After him repaired also Shemaiah the son of Shechaniah, the keeper of the east gate.

30 After him repaired Hananiah the son of Shelemiah, and Hanun the sixth son of Zalaph, another piece. After him repaired Meshullam the son of Berechiah over against his chamber.

31 After him repaired Malchiah the goldsmith's son unto the place of the Nethinims, and of the merchants, over against the gate Miphkad, and to the ⁹ going up of the corner.

32 And between the going up of the corner unto the sheep gate repaired the goldsmiths and the merchants.

The house of the mighty.] Probably a place where a band of soldiers was kept, or the city guard.

Verse 19. The going up to the armoury] This was either a tower that defended the angle where the two walls met; or the city arsenal, where shields, spears, &c. were kept to arm the people in time of danger.

Verse 20. Earnestly repaired] He distinguished himself by his zeal and activity.

Verse 22. The priests, the men of the plain.] Some of the officers of the temple, particularly the singers, dwelt in the plain country round about Jerusalem, chap. xii. 28; and it is likely that several of the priests dwelt in the same place.

Verse 28. The horse gate] The place through which the horses passed in order to be watered; it was near the temple.

Verse 32. The goldsmiths and the merchants.] The word hatsorephim may signify smiths, or persons who worked in metals of any kind; but it is generally understood to mean those who worked in gold.

CHAPTER IV.

Sanballat and Tobiah mock the Jews, and endeavour to prevent the completing of the wall, 1-3. Nehemiah prays against them, and the people complete one half of the wall, 4-6. The Arabians, Ammonites, and Ashdodites, conspire together, and come to fight against the Jews, 7, 8. The Jews commend themselves to God, and determine to fight for their lives and liberties; on hearing of which their enemies are disheartened, 9-16. The Jews divide themselves into two bands; one half working, and the other standing ready armed to meet their enemies. Even the workmen are obliged to arm themselves, while employed in building, for fear of their enemies, 17, 18. Nehemiah uses all precautions to prevent a surprise; and all labour with great fervour in the work, 19-23.

BUT it came to pass, * that when Sanballat heard that we builded the wall, he was wroth, and took great indignation, and mocked the Jews.

2 And he spake before his brethren and the army of Samaria, and said, What do these feeble Jews? will they ^b fortify themselves? will they sacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they revive the stones out of the heaps of the rubbish which are burned?

3 Now ^c Tobiah the Ammonite was by him, and he said, Even that which they build, if a fox go up he shall even break down their stone wall.

4 ^d Hear, O our God; for their own ^e despised: and ^f turn their reproach upon their own head, and give them for a prey in the land of captivity:

5 And ^g cover not their iniquity, and let not their sin be blotted out from before thee: for they have provoked thee to anger before the builders.

6 So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof: for the people had a mind to work.

7 But it came to pass, ^h that when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and the Arabians, and the Ammonites, and the Ashdodites, heard that the walls of Jerusalem ⁱ were made up and that the breaches began to be stopp'd, then they were very wroth,

8 And ^j conspired all of them together to come and to fight against Jerusalem, and ^k to hinder it.

9 Nevertheless ^l we made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch against them day and night, because of them.

10 And Judah said, The strength of the bearers of burdens is decayed, and there is much rubbish; so that we are not able to build the wall.

11 And our adversaries said, They shall not know neither see, till we come in the midst among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease.

12 And it came to pass, that when the Jews which dwelt by them came, they said unto us ten times, ^m From all places whence ye shall return unto us they will be upon you.

13 Therefore set I ⁿ in the lower places behind the wall, and on the higher places, I even set the people after their families with their swords, their spears, and their bows.

14 And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, ^o Be not ye afraid of them: remember the LORD, which is ^p great and terrible, and ^q fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives, and your houses.

15 And it came to pass, when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, ^r and God had brought Verse 2. The army of Samaria] As he was governor, he had the command of the army, and he wished to excite the soldiers to second his views against Nehemiah and his men.

Verse 4. Turn their reproach upon their own head] A prayer of this kind, understood literally, is not lawful for any Christian. Such sayings as the above are excusable in the mouth of a Jew, under severe irritation.

Verse 5. Let not their sin be blotted out] These are the most terrible imprecations; but probably we should understand them as declaratory, for the same form of the verb, in the Hebrew, is used as precativè and imperativè. Besides we may rest assured that Nehemiah's curses, or declaration of God's judgments, had respect only to their bodies, and to their life: not to their souls and the world to come. And then they amount to no more than this: What a man soweth, that he shall reap.

Verse 6. For the people had a mind to work.] The original is very emphatic: "For the people had a heart to work." Their hearts were engaged in it; and where the heart is engaged, the work of God goes on well.

Verse 7. The walls of Jerusalem were made up] That is, they were made up to the half height of the wall; for the preceding verse seems to intimate that the whole wall was thus far built; not half of the wall completed, but the whole wall built to half its height.

Verse 9. We made our prayer unto our God, and set a watch] The strongest confidence in the protection and favour of God does not preclude the use of all or any of the means of self-preservation and defence which his providence has put in our power.

Verse 10. The strength of the bearers of burdens is decayed] They worked both day and night, scarcely ever putting off their clothes, except for the purpose of being washed, ver. 21, 23.

Much rubbish] The ruins they were obliged to clear away, before they could dig the foundation for a new wall: and in this labour they were nearly exhausted; see chap. v. 15.

Verse 12. From all places whence ye shall return unto us] This verse is extremely difficult. Our translators have supplied the words, they will be upon you, which have nothing correspondent in the Hebrew. The Septuagint have given a good sense, They come up from all places against us. It is probable that instead of tashubu, "ye shall return," we should read chashebu, "they designed or meditated." "The Jews who dwelt among them told us frequently, from all places, what they designed against us." But this various reading is not found in any MS., and is not countenanced by any of the Versions.

Verse 14. Be not ye afraid of them] Are they more terrible or stronger than God?

Fight for your brethren] They had everything at stake; and therefore they must fight pro aris et focis, for their religion, their lives, and their property. A people thus interested, who once take up the sword, can never be conquered.

Verse 15. Their counsel to nought] The word counsel used here countenances the emendation in the 12th verse.

their counsel to nought, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work.

16 And it came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons; and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah.

17 They which builded on the wall, and they that bare burdens, with those that laded, every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.

18 For the builders, every one had his sword girded ^a by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet was by me.

19 And I said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, The work is great and Verse 16. Half—wrought in the work] This is no unusual thing, even in the present day, in Palestine; people sowing their seed are often attended by an armed man, to prevent the Arabs from robbing them of their seed, which they will not fail to do if not protected.

Habergeons] It may be considered rather as signifying a breast-plate, or armour for the breast.

Verse 17. With one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.] That is, he had his arms at hand, and was as fully prepared to fight as to work.

Verse 20. Ye hear the sound of the trumpet] As the walls were very extensive, and the workmen consequently much scattered, their enemies might easily attack and destroy them successively; he therefore ordered them all to work as near to each other as they could; and he himself kept a trumpeter always with him, who was to sound when the enemy approached; and all were instantly to run to the place where they heard the sound.

20 In what place therefore ye hear the sound of the trumpet, resort ye thither unto us: ^b our God shall fight for us.

21 So we laboured in the work: and half of them held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared.

22 Likewise at the same time said I unto the people, Let every one with his servant lodge within Jerusalem, that in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

23 So neither I, nor my brethren, nor my servants, nor the men of the guard which followed me, none of us put off our clothes, ^c saving that every one put them off for washing.

^c Or, every one went with his weapon for water: see Judg. v. 11.

Jerusalem] The country people were accustomed, after their day's labour, to return to their families; now, being so formidably threatened, he obliged them all to sleep in Jerusalem, that they might be ready, in case of attack, to help their brethren.

Verse 23. None of us put off our clothes, saving that every one put them off for washing.] The Hebrew for this is, "We, not putting off our garments, a man his dart to the waters." Of this latter clause what sense can be made? Let us hear what the ancient Versions say.

The Vulgate, "Every one stripped himself for the bath."

The Septuagint omit the latter part of this clause.

The Syriac, "None of us put off his clothes for a month each in his turn."

The Arabic, "Nor did we put off our clothes, but with our arms, at the end of a month."

There is a remarkable reading in one of De Rossi's MSS. We did not lay aside our garments, but in order to send them to the washing. This is most likely the sense of the place.

CHAPTER V.

The people complain that they are oppressed and enthralled by their richer brethren, 1-3. Nehemiah calls them to account; upbraids them for their cruelty; and obliges them to swear that they will forgive the debts, restore the mortgaged estates, and free their servants, 4-13. ^a Isa. v. 7.—^b Lev. xxv. 36, 37. Deut. xv. 7.—^c Isa. lviii. 7.

Verse 2. We, our sons and our daughters are many] Our families are larger than we can provide for; we are obliged to go in debt; and our richer brethren take advantage of our necessitous situation, and oppress us.

Verse 8. Because of the dearth.] About the time of Zerubbabel, God had sent a judicial dearth upon the land, as we learn from Haggai, chap. i. 9, &c., for the people it seems were more intent on building houses for themselves than on rebuilding the house of the Lord. This dearth might have been continued, or its effects still felt; but it is more likely that there was a new dearth owing to the great money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards.

5 Yet now ^c our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children: and, lo, we ^d bring into bondage our sons and our daughters to be servants, and some of our daughters are brought unto bondage already: neither is it in our power to redeem them; for other men have our lands and vineyards.

number of people, for whose support the land that had been brought into cultivation was not sufficient.

Verse 4. We have borrowed money] This should be read, We have borrowed money for the king's tribute on our lands and vineyards; they had a tax to pay to the Persian king in token of their subjection to him, and though it is not likely it was heavy, yet they were not able to pay it.

Verse 5. We bring into bondage our sons] The law permitted parents to sell their children in times of extreme necessity, Exod. xxi. 7.

Verse 7. Ye exact usury] This was expressly contrary to 7 Then ^a I consulted with myself, and I rebuked the nobles, and the rulers, and said unto them, ^b Ye exact usury, every one of his brother. And I set a great assembly against them.

8 And I said unto them, We after our ability have ^c redeemed our brethren the Jews, which were sold unto the heathen; and will ye even sell your brethren? or shall they be sold unto us? Then held they their peace, and found nothing to answer.

9 Also I said, ^d It is not good that ye do: ought ye not to walk ^e in the fear of our God ^f because of the reproach of the heathen our enemies?

10 I likewise, and my brethren and my servants, might exact of them money and corn: I pray you, let us leave off this usury.

11 Restore, I pray you, to them, even this day, their lands, their vineyards, their oliveyards, and their houses, also the hundredth part of the money, and of the corn, the wine, and the oil, that ye exact of them.

12 Then said they, We will restore them, and will require nothing of them; so will we do as thou sayest. Then I called the priests, and took an oath of them, that they should do according to this promise.

13 Also ^g I shook my lap, and said, So God shake out every man from his house, and from his labour, that performeth not this promise, even thus be he shaken out, and ^h emptied. And all the congrega-

15 But the former governors that had been before me were chargeable unto the people, and had taken of them bread and wine, beside forty shekels of silver; yea, even their servants bare rule over the people: but ^l so did not I, because of the ^m fear of God.

16 Yea, also I continued in the work of this wall, neither bought we any land: and all my servants were gathered thither unto the work.

17 Moreover there were ⁿ at my table an hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, beside those that came unto us from among the heathen that are about us.

penses. But, during the twelve years that Nehemiah had been with them, he took not this salary, and ate none of their bread. Nor were his servants permitted to take or exact any thing from them. Having such an example, it was scandalous for their chiefs, priests and nobles, thus to oppress an afflicted and distressed people.

Verse 16. Neither bought we any land] Neither he nor his officers took any advantage of the necessities of the people, to buy their lands, &c. He even made his own servants to work at the wall.

Verse 17. An hundred and fifty of the Jews] To be able to bear all these expenses, no doubt Nehemiah had saved money while he was cup-bearer to the Persian king in Susa.

Verse 18. One ox and six choice sheep] This was food sufficient for more than two hundred men.

Once in ten days store of all sorts of wine] It is supposed that every tenth day they drank wine; at all other times they drank water; unless we suppose the meaning of the phrase to be, that his servants laid in a stock of wine every ten days. Though the Asiatics drank sparingly of wine, yet it is not very likely that, in a case such as that above, wine was tasted only thrice in each month.

Verse 19. Think upon me, my God, for good] He does not offer his good deeds to God in extenuation of his sins, or as a compensation for the heaven he expected. Nothing of the kind: he simply says, what any good man might say, My God, as I have done good to them, so do good to me.

This is according to the precept of Christ: "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven; give, and it shall be given unto you."

CHAPTER VI.

Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem insidiously desire a conference with Nehemiah which he refuses, 1-4. They then charge him with the design of rebelling, and causing himself to be made king, 5-7; which he denies, and prays to God for support, 8, 9. A false prophet is hired by Tobiah and Sanballat, to put him in fear; he discovers the imposture, and defeats their design, 10-13. He prays to God against them, 14. The wall is finished in fifty-two days, 15. He discovers a secret and treasonable correspondence between Tobiah, and some of the Jewish nobles, 16-19.

NOW it came to pass, ^a when Sanballat, and Tobiah, and ^b Geshem the Arabian, and the rest of our enemies, heard that I had builded the wall, and that there was no breach left therein; (^c though at that time I had not set up the doors upon the gates;)

2 That Sanballat and Geshem ^d sent unto me, saying, Come, let us meet together in some one of the villages in the plain of ^e Ono. But they ^f thought to do me mischief.

3 And I sent messengers unto them, saying, I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down: why should the work cease, whilst I leave it, and come down to you?

4 Yet they sent unto me four times after this sort; and I answered them after the same manner.

5 Then sent Sanballat his servant unto me in like manner the fifth time with an open letter in his hand;

6 Wherein was written, It is reported among the heathen, and ^g Gashmu saith it, ^h that thou and the Jews think to rebel: for which cause thou buildest the wall, that thou mayest be their king, according to these words.

7 And thou hast also appointed prophets to preach of thee at Jerusalem, saying, There is a king in Judah: and now shall it be reported to the king according to these words. Come now therefore, and let us take counsel together.

8 Then I sent unto him, saying, There are no such things done as thou sayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart.

9 For they all made us afraid, saying, Their hands shall be weakened from the work, that it be not done. Now therefore, O God, strengthen my hands.

Verse 2. Come, let us meet together in—the plain of Ono.] They wished to get him out of Jerusalem from among his friends, that they might either carry him off, or murder him. Ono is supposed to have been in the tribe of Benjamin, near Jordan.

Verse 3. I am doing a great work] Though he knew their design, he does not think it prudent to mention it. Had he done so, they would probably have gone to extremities, finding that they were discovered; and perhaps in a formidable body attacked Jerusalem, when ill provided to sustain such a shock. They wished to effect their purpose rather by treachery than by open violence.

Verse 5. With an open letter in his hand] This was an insult to a person of Nehemiah's quality; as letters sent to chiefs and governors in the East are always carefully folded up, and put in costly silken bags, and these carefully sealed.

Verse 6. And Gashmu saith it] You are accused of crimes against the state, and Geshem, the Arabian, is your accuser.

Verse 7. Thou hast also appointed prophets] Persons who pretend to be commissioned to preach to the people, and say, Nehemiah reigneth!

Come now therefore, and let us take counsel] Come and justify yourself before me. This was a trick to get Nehemiah into his power.

Verse 8. There are no such things done] You well know that what you say is false: I shall not, therefore, trouble myself about a false charge.

Verse 10. Who was shut up] Lived in a sequestered, solitary state: pretending to sanctity, and to close intercourse with God.

Let us meet together in the house of God] This he said to discourage and disgrace him, and to ruin the people; for, had Nehemiah taken his advice, the people would have been without a leader, their enemies would have come upon them

10 Afterward I came unto the house of Shemaiah the son of Delaiah the son of Mehetabeel, who was shut up; and he said, Let us meet together in the house of God, within the temple, and let us shut the doors of the temple; for they will come to slay thee; yea, in the night will they come to slay thee.

11 And I said, Should such a man as I flee? and who is there; that, being as I am, would go into the temple to save his life? I will not go in.

12 And, lo, I perceived that God had not sent him; but that ⁱ he pronounced this prophecy against me: for Tobiah and Sanballat had hired him.

13 Therefore was he hired, that I should be afraid and do so, and sin, and that they might have matter for an evil report, that they might reproach me.

14 ^j My God, think thou upon Tobiah and Sanballat according to these their works, and on the ^k prophetess Noadiah, and the rest of the prophets, that would have put me in fear.

15 So the wall was finished in the twenty and fifth day of the month Elul, in fifty and two days.

16 And it came to pass, that ^l when all our enemies heard thereof, and all the heathen that were about us saw these things, they were much cast down in their own eyes: for ^m they perceived that this work was wrought of our God.

17 Moreover in those days the nobles of Judah ⁿ sent many letters unto Tobiah, and the letters of Tobiah came unto them.

18 For there were many in Judah sworn unto him, because he was the son-in-law of Shechaniah the son of Arah; and his son Johanan had taken the daughter of Meshullam the son of Berechiah.

19 Also they reported his good deeds before me, and uttered my ^o words to him. And Tobiah sent letters to put me in fear.

at once, and they would have been an easy prey. Besides, had Nehemiah done this, he would have been shut up in the temple, his government would have been declared at an end, and Sanballat would have assumed the reins.

Verse 11. Should such a man as I flee?] Shall I, who am governor of the people, appointed both by God and the king, shall I betray my trust, and leave the flock without a shepherd? I will stand at my post, and be ready to receive my enemies whensoever they come; so let Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem look to themselves.

Verse 14. And on the prophetess Noadiah] I think that we should read Noadiah the prophet.

Verse 15. The twenty and fifth—of—Elul] This Jewish month answers to a part of our August and September.

Fifty and two days.] I see no difficulty in supposing that several thousand workmen, each of whom was working as for God, should be able to complete this wall in fifty-two days. There is little doubt that several parts of the old wall were entire; in many places the foundations still remained; there were all the materials of the old wall still at hand; and though they had to clear and carry away much rubbish, yet they do not appear to have had any stones to quarry.

Verse 16. This work was wrought of our God.] This is an additional reason why we should not wonder at the shortness of the time in which so great a work was done, for God helped them by an especial providence; and this was so very observable, that their carnal enemies could discover it.

Verse 17. The nobles of Judah sent many letters] The circumstances marked in this and the following verses show still more clearly the difficulties which Nehemiah had to encounter; he had enemies without and false friends within.

Verse 18. He was the son-in-law of Shechaniah] Previously to the coming of Nehemiah, the Jews seemed to be fast intermixing with the heathen, by intermarriages with Ashdodites,—Ammonites, and Moabites; see chap. xiii. 28. Ezra had many evils of this kind to redress (Ezra ix. 8, &c.), chiefly among the common people, though there were both chiefs and priests in that trespass. But here we find the heathen and Jewish nobles interlinked; and the latter were so far imbued with the spirit of idolatry, that they forgot God, his service, their brethren, and their own souls.

CHAPTER VII.

Nehemiah makes use of proper precautions in guarding the city gates, 1-4. He purposes to reckon the people according to their genealogies; and finds a register of those who came out of Babylon, with Zerubbabel, 5-7. A transcript of the register, 8-60. Account of those who came from other provinces; and of priests who, because they could not show their register, were put away from the priesthood as polluted, 61-65. The sum total of the congregation: of their men-servants and maid-servants; singing men and women; horses, mules, camels, and asses, 66-69. The sums given by different persons for the work, 70-72. All betake themselves to their several cities, 73.

NOW it came to pass, when the wall was built, and I had * set up the doors, and the porters and the singers and the Levites were appointed,

2 That I gave my brother Hanani, and Hananiah the ruler ^b of the palace, charge over Jerusalem: for he was a faithful man, and ^cfeared God above many.

3 And I said unto them, Let not the gates of Jerusalem be opened until the sun be hot; and while they stand by, let them shut the doors, and bar them: and appoint watches of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, every one in his watch, and every one to be over against his house.

4 Now the city was ^dlarge and great: but the people were few therein, and the houses were not builded.

5 And my God put into mine heart to gather together the nobles, and the rulers, and the people, that they might be reckoned by genealogy. And I found a register of the genealogy of them which came up at the first, and found written therein,

6 * These are the children of the province, that went up out of the captivity, of those that had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away, and came again to Jerusalem and to Judah, every one unto his city;

7 Who came with Zerubbabel, Jeshua, Nehemiah, ^eAzariah, Raamiah, Nahamani, Mordecai, Bilshan, Mispereth, Bigvai, Nehum, Baanah. The number, I say, of the men of the people of Israel was this;

8 The children of Parosh, two thousand an hundred seventy and two.

9 The children of Shephatiah, three hundred seventy and two.

10 The children of Arah, six hundred fifty and two.

11 The children of Pahath-moab, of the children of Jeshua and Joab, two thousand and eight hundred and eighteen.

12 The children of Elam, a thousand two hundred fifty and four.

13 The children of Zattu, eight hundred forty and five.

14 The children of Zaccai, seven hundred and threescore.

15 The children of ^fBinnui, six hundred forty and eight.

16 The children of Bebai, six hundred twenty and eight.

17 The children of Azgad, two thousand three hundred twenty and two.

18 The children of Adonikam, six hundred threescore and seven.

19 The children of Bigvai, two thousand threescore and seven.

20 The children of Adin, six hundred fifty and five.

21 The children of Ater of Hezekiah, ninety and eight.

The children of Hashum, three hundred twenty and eight.

* Ezra ii. 1, &c.—^e Or, Seraiah. See Ezra ii. 2.—^f Or, Bani.

Verse 2. My brother Hanani] This was the person who gave Nehemiah the account of the desolate state of the Jews, chap. i. 2. He is now made ruler of Jerusalem probably because Nehemiah was about to return to the Persian court. And he found this man to be one in whom he could trust: 1. Because he was a faithful man. 2. Because he feared God above many. These are the proper qualifications of a governor.

Verse 3. Until the sun be hot] The meaning of this is, the gates were not to be opened before sunrise, and always shut at sunset. This is the custom to the present day in many of the cities of the East. If a traveller arrives after sunset, he finds the gates shut; and on no consideration will they open them till the next morning, so that those who come late are obliged to lodge in the plain, or under the walls.

Every one—over against his house.] Each was obliged to guard that part of the wall that was opposite to his own dwelling.

Verse 4. The houses were not builded.] The city was not yet rebuilt, only a row of houses in the inside of the wall all round.

Verse 5. God put into mine heart] With this good man every good thing was of God. If he purposed any good, it was because God put it into his heart; if he did any good, it was because the good hand of his God was upon him; if he expected any good, it was because he earnestly prayed God to remember him for good. Thus, in all his ways he acknowledged God, and God directed all his steps.

Verse 7. Who came with Zerubbabel] The register which he found was that of the persons only who came long before with Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Joshua the son of Josedek, which register could not answer in every respect to the state of the people then. Several persons and families were no doubt dead, and others had arrived since. Nehemiah probably altered it only in such parts, leaving the body of it as it was before; and this will account for the difference between it and the register that is found in Ezra, chap. ii.

Verse 19. The children of Bigvai, two thousand threescore

23 The children of Bezai, three hundred twenty and four.
 24 The children of ^a Hariph, an hundred and twelve.
 25 The children of ^b Gibeon, ninety and five.
 26 The men of Both-Ichem and Netophah, an hundred fourscore and eight.
 27 The men of Anathoth, an hundred twenty and eight.
 28 The men of ^c Beth-azmaveth, forty and two.
 29 The men of ^d Kirjath-jearim, Chephirah, and Beeroth, seven hundred forty and three.
 30 The men of Ramah and Gaba, six hundred twenty and one.
 31 The men of Michmas, an hundred and twenty and two.
 32 The men of Both-el and Ai, an hundred twenty and three.
 33 The men of the other Nebo, fifty and two.
 34 The children of the other ^e Elam, a thousand two hundred fifty and four.
 35 The children of Harim three hundred and twenty.
 36 The children of Jericho, three hundred forty and five.
 37 The children of Lod, Hadid, and Ono, seven hundred twenty and one.
 38 The children of Senaah, three thousand nine hundred and thirty.
 39 The priests: the children of ^f Jedaiiah, of the house of Jeshua, nine hundred seventy and three.
 40 The children of ^g Immer, a thousand fifty and two.
 41 The children of ^h Pashur, a thousand two hundred forty and seven.
 42 The children of ⁱ Harim, a thousand and seventeen.
 43 The Levites: the children of Jeshua, of Kadmiel, and of the children of ^j Hodevah, seventy and four.
 44 The singers: the children of Asaph, an hundred forty and eight.
 45 The porters: the children of Shallum, the children of Ater, the children of Talmon, the children of Akkub, the children of Hatita, the children of Shobai, an hundred thirty and eight.
 46 The Nethinims: the children of Ziha, the children of Hashupha, the children of Tabbaoth, 47 The children of Keros, the children of ^k Sia, the children of Padon,
 50 The children of Reaiah, the children of Rezin, the children of Nekoda, 51 The children of Gazzam, the children of Uzza, the children of Phaseah, 52 The children of Besai, the children of Meunim, the children of ^m Nephishesim,

54 The children of ⁿ Bazlith, the children of Mehida, the children of Harsha, 55 The children of Barkos, the children of Sisera, the children of Tamah, 56 The children of Neziah, the children of Hatipha.
 57 The children of Solomon's servants: the children of Sotai, the children of Sophereth, the children of ^o Perida, 58 The children of Jaala, the children of Darkon, the children of Giddel, 59 The children of Shephatiah, the children of Hattil, the children of Pochereth of Zebaim, the children of ^p Amon.
 60 All the Nethinims, and the children of Solomon's servants, were three hundred ninety and two.
 61 ^q And these were they which went up also from Tel-melah, Tel-baresha, Cherub, ^r Addon, and Immer: but they could not shew their father's house, nor their ^s seed, whether they were of Israel.
 62 The children of Delaiah, the children of Tobiah, the children of Nekoda, six hundred forty and two.
 63 And of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai, which took one of the daughters of Barzillai the Gileadite to wife, and was called after their name.
 64 These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but it was not found: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood.
 65 And ^t the Tirshatha said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things, till they stood up a trial with Urim and Thummim.
 66 The whole congregation together was forty and two thousand three hundred and threescore,
 67 Besides their man-servants and their maid-servants, of whom there were seven thousand three hundred thirty and seven: and they had two hundred forty and five singing men and singing women.
 68 Their horses, seven hundred thirty and six: their mules, two hundred forty and five:
 69 Their camels, four hundred thirty and five: six thousand seven hundred and twenty asses.
 70 And ^u some of the chief of the fathers gave unto the work. ^v The Tirshatha gave to the treasures a thousand drams of gold, fifty basons, five hundred and thirty priests' garments.
 71 And some of the chief of the fathers gave to the treasure of the work ^w twenty thousand drams of gold, and two thousand and two hundred pound of silver.
 72 And that which the rest of the people gave was twenty thousand drams of gold, and two thousand pound of silver, and threescore and seven priests' garments.
 73 So the priests, and the Levites, and the porters, and the singers, and some of the people, and the Nethinims, and all Israel, dwelt in their cities; ^x and when the seventh month came, the children of Israel were in their cities.

Verse 78. All Israel, dwell in their cities] It was in reference to this particularly that the public registers were examined; for by them they found the different families, and consequently the cities, villages, &c., which belonged to them, according to the ancient division of the lands. It seems that the examination of the registers occupied about a month; for as soon as the walls were finished, which was in the sixth month (Elul), chap. vi. 15, Nehemiah instituted the examination mentioned in this chapter, ver. 5; and by the concluding verse we find that the different families had got into their paternal cities in the seventh month, Tisri, answering to a part of our September and October. Thus the register determined every thing: there was no room for complaint, and none to accuse the governor of partiality.

CHAPTER VIII.

Ezra, Nehemiah, and the Levites read and interpret the law to the people, 1-7. The manner in which they do this important work, 8. The effect produced on the people's minds by hearing it, 9. The people are exhorted to be glad, and are told that the joy of the Lord is their strength, 10-12. On the second day they assemble, and find that they should keep the feast of tabernacles, which they accordingly religiously solemnize for seven days, and Ezra reads to them from the book of the law, 13-18.

AND all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before the water gate: and they spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel.

2 And Ezra the priest brought the law before the congregation both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding, upon the first day of the seventh month.

3 And he read therein before the street that was before the water gate from the morning until mid-day, before the men and the women, and those that could understand; and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the book of the law.

4 And Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose; and beside him stood Mattithiah, and Shema, and Ananiah, and Urijah, and Hilkiah, and Maaseiah, on his right hand; and on his left hand, Pedaiah, and Mishael, and Malchiah, and Hashum, and Hashbadana, Zecariah, and Meshullam.

5 And Ezra opened the book in the sight of all the people; (for he was above all the people; and when he opened it, all the people stood up.)

6 And Ezra blessed the Lord, the great God. And all the people answered Amen, Amen, with lifting up their hands: and they bowed their heads, and worshipped the Lord with their faces to the ground.

7 Also Jeshua, and Bani, and Sherebiah, Jamin, Akkub, Shabbethai, Hodijah, Maaseiah, Kelita, Azariah, Jozabad, Hanan, Pelaiah, and the Levites, caused the people to understand the law: and the people stood in their place.

8 So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading.

9 And Nehemiah, which is the Tirshatha, and Ezra the priest the scribe, and the Levites that taught the people, said unto all the people, This day is holy unto the Lord your God; mourn not, nor weep. For all the people wept, when they heard the words of the law.

10 Then he said unto them, Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our Lord: neither be ye sorry: for the joy of the Lord is your strength.

11 So the Levites stilled all the people, saying, Hold your peace, for the day is holy; neither be ye grieved.

12 And all the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to send portions, and to make great mirth, because they had understood the words that were declared unto them.

13 And on the second day were gathered together the chief of the fathers of all the people, the priests, and the Levites, unto Ezra the scribe, even to understand the words of the law.

Verse 1. The street that was before the water gate] The gate which led from the temple to the brook Kidron.

Verse 2. All that could hear with understanding] Infants, idiots, and children not likely to receive instruction, were not permitted to attend this meeting, nor should any such in any place, be ever brought to the house of God, if it can be avoided: yet, rather than a poor mother should be deprived of the ordinances of God, let her come with her child in her arms; and although it be inconvenient to the congregation, and to some ministers, to hear a child cry, it is cruel to exclude the mother on this account.

Upon the first day of the seventh month.] This was the first day of what was called the civil year; and on it was the feast of trumpets, the year being ushered in by the sound of these instruments.

Verse 4. Stood upon a pulpit of wood] Migdal, a tower, a platform, raised up for the purpose, to elevate him sufficiently for the people both to see and hear him. This is the first intimation we have of a pulpit, or structure of this kind.

Verse 5. All the people stood up.] This was out of respect to the sacred word.

Verse 8. So they read in the book] For an explanation of this verse, see the observations at the end of the chapter.

Verse 9. Nehemiah, which is the Tirshatha] This puts it out of doubt that, when the Tirshatha is mentioned, Nehemiah himself is intended, Tirshatha being the name of his office. [But in ch. vii. 65, it probably refers to Zerubbabel.]

Mourn not, nor weep.] This is an holy day to God; a day appointed for general rejoicing in Him who has turned our captivity, restored to us his law, and again established among us his ordinances.

may be general. Let the poor have reason to rejoice as well as you.

[For the joy of the Lord is your strength.] This is no glutinous and drunken festival that enervates the body, and enfeebles the mind: from your religious feast your bodies will acquire strength, and your minds power and fervour, so that you shall be able to do His will, and to do it cheerfully. Religious joy, properly tempered with continual dependence on the help of God, meekness of mind, and self-diffidence, is a powerful means of strengthening the soul. In such a state every duty is practicable, and every duty delightful. In such a frame of mind no man ever fell, and in such a state of mind the general health of the body is much improved; a cheerful heart is not only a continual feast, but also a continual medicine.

Verse 14. In the feast of the seventh month] That is, the feast of tabernacles, which was held in commemoration of the sojourning of their fathers in the wilderness after they had been delivered from the Egyptian bondage.

Verse 15. Fetch olive branches] For every thing concerning this feast of tabernacles, see the notes on Lev. xxiii. and the other places there referred to.

Verse 16. Upon the roof of his house] It need scarcely be repeated, that the houses in the East are generally built with flat roofs.

Verse 17. Since the days of Jeshua] No feast of tabernacles since Joshua's time had been so heartily and so piously celebrated.

As we nowhere find that what is called preaching on or expounding a text was ever in use before that period, we are probably beholden to the Babylonish captivity for producing, in the hand of Divine Providence, a custom the most excellent and beneficial ever introduced among men.

What the nature of preaching or expounding the word of God was, at this early period of its institution, we learn from the above cited text.

I. They read in the book of the law of God.—The words of God, the doctrines of divine revelation, are the proper matter of preaching.

II. They read distinctly—meporash, from parash, to expand; is analysed, dilated, and expounded it at large, * water gate, ^a and in the street of the gate of Ephraim.

17 And all the congregation of them that were come again out of the captivity made booths, and sat under the booths: for since the days of Jeshua the son of Nun unto that day had not the children of Israel done so. And there was very ¹ great gladness.

18 Also ¹ day by day, from the first day unto the last day, he read in the book of the law of God. And they kept the feast seven days; and on the eighth day was ^a a solemn assembly, ¹ according unto the manner.

showing the import and genuine meaning of every word. III. They gave the sense—vesom sechel, they put weight to it; showing its value and utility, and how intimately concerned they were in all that was revealed: thus applying verbal criticism, and general exposition to their true and most important purposes.

IV. They caused them to understand the reading—vaiyabinu bamnikra: and they understood—had a mental taste and perception of the things which were in the reading, i. e., in the letter and spirit of the text.

This was the ancient method of expounding the word of God among the Jews; and this mode is still more necessary for us:

1. Because the sacred writings, as they came from God, are shut up in languages no longer vernacular: and no translation ever did or ever can reach the force of the original words, though perhaps our own, in general, comes nearest to this of all versions, whether ancient or modern.

2. Ninety-nine out of a hundred know nothing of these languages; and consequently cannot, of themselves, reap all the requisite benefit from reading the Scriptures.

3. Sacred things are illustrated in the Bible by a reference to arts and sciences, of which the mass of the people are as ignorant as they are of the original tongues.

4. Provincial customs and fashions are mentioned in these writings, which must be understood, or the force and meaning of many texts cannot be comprehended.

5. There is a depth in the word of God which cannot be fathomed except either by divine inspiration, or by deep study and research, for which the majority of the people have no time.

6. The people in general trust to the piety, learning, and abilities of their ministers, and maintain them as persons capable of instructing them in all the deep things of God; and believing them to be holy men, they are confident they will not take their tithes, their food, and their raiment, under a pretence of doing a work for which they have not the ordinary qualifications.

Reader—Art thou a Christian minister? Dost thou feed the flock of God? Let thy conduct, thy conscience, and the fruits of thy ministry answer for thee.

CHAPTER IX.

On the twenty-fourth day of the seventh month, the people hold a solemn fast unto the Lord, and confess their sins, 1-3. The Levites give a general account of God's kindness and forbearance to them and to their fathers; and acknowledge God's mercies and judgments, 4-37. They make a covenant with the Lord, 38.

NOW in the twenty and fourth day of * this month the children of Israel were assembled with fasting, and with sackclothes, and earth upon them.

2 And * the seed of Israel separated themselves from all † strangers, and stood and confessed their sins, and the iniquities of their fathers.

3 And they stood up in their place, and * read in the book of the law of the Lord their God one fourth part of the day; and another fourth part they confessed, and worshipped the Lord their God.

4 Then stood up upon the † stairs, of the Levites, Jeshua, and Bani, Kadmiel, Shebaniah, Bunni, Sherebiah, Bani, and Chenani, and cried with a loud voice unto the Lord their God.

5 Then the Levites, Jeshua, and Kadmiel, Bani, Hashabiah, Sherebiah, Hodijah, Shebaniah, and Pethahiah, said, Stand up and bless the Lord your God for ever and ever: and blessed be † thy glorious name, which is exalted above all blessing and praise.

6 † Thou, even thou, art Lord alone; † thou hast made heaven, † the heaven of heavens, with † all their host, the earth, and all things that are therein, the seas, and all that is therein, and thou † preservest them all; and the host of heaven worshippeth thee.

7 Thou art the Lord the God, who didst choose † Abram, and broughtest him forth out of Ur of the Chaldees, and gavest him the name of † Abraham;

8 And foundest his heart † faithful before thee, and madest a † covenant with him to give the land of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Jebusites, and the Girgashites, to give it, I say, to his seed, and † hast performed thy words; for thou art righteous:

9 * And didst see the affliction of our fathers in Egypt, and † heardest their cry by the Red Sea;

10 And † showedst signs and wonders upon Pharaoh, and on all his servants, and on all the people of his land: for thou knewest that they † dealt proudly against thee. So didst thou † get thee a name, as it is this day.

11 * And thou didst divide the sea before them, so that they went through the midst of the sea on the dry land; and their persecutors thou threwest into the deeps, * as a stone into the mighty waters.

12 Moreover thou † leddest them in the day by a cloudy pillar; and in the night by a pillar of fire, to give them light in the way wherein they should go.

13 * Thou earnest down also upon Mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them † right judgments, and † true laws, good statutes and commandments:

14 And madest known unto them thy † holy sabbath, and commandedst them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy † servant:

15 And † gavest them bread from heaven for their hunger, and † broughtest forth water for them out of the rock for their thirst, and promisedst them that they should † go in to possess the land † which thou hadst sworn to give them.

16 † But they and our fathers dealt proudly and † hardened their necks, and hearkened not to thy commandments, 17 And refused to obey, † neither were mindful of thy wonders that thou didst among them; but hardened their necks, and in their rebellion appointed † a captain to return to their bondage: but thou art † a God ready to pardon, † merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and forsookest them not.

18 Yea, † when they had made them a molten calf, and said, This is thy God that brought thee up out of Egypt, and had wrought great provocations;

19 Yet thou in thy † manifold mercies forsookest them not in the wilderness; the † pillar of the cloud departed not from them by day, to lead them in the way; neither the pillar of fire by night, to shew them light, and the way wherein they should go.

20 Thou gavest also thy † good spirit to instruct them, and withheldst not thy † manna from their mouth, and gavest them † water for their thirst.

21 Yea, † forty years didst thou sustain them in the wilderness, so that they lacked nothing; their † clothes waxed not old, and their feet swelled not.

22 Moreover thou gavest them kingdoms and nations, and didst divide them into corners: so they

Verse 1. Now in the twenty and fourth day] The feast of trumpets was on the first day of this month; on the fourteenth began the feast of tabernacles, which, lasting seven days, finished on the twenty-second; on the twenty-third they separated themselves from their illegitimate wives and children; and, on the twenty-fourth, they held a solemn day of fasting and confession of sin, and reading the law; which they closed by renewing their covenants.

Verse 2. The seed of Israel separated themselves] A reformation of this kind was begun by Sara, x. 8;—but it appears that either more were found out who had taken strange wives, or else those who had separated from them had taken them again.

And stood and confessed their sins, and the iniquities of their fathers.] They acknowledged that they had been sinners against God throughout all their generations; that their fathers had sinned, and were punished; and that they with this example before their eyes, had copied their fathers' offences.

Verse 3. One fourth part of the day] As they did no manner of work on this day of fasting and humiliation, so they spent the whole of it in religious duties.

Verse 5. Stand up and bless the Lord your God] It is the shameful custom of many congregations of people to sit still while they profess to bless and praise God, by singing the Psalms of David or hymns made on the plan of the gospel! I ask such persons, Did they ever feel the spirit of devotion while thus employed?

Verse 6. Thou preservest them all] Thou givest life to them all; and the host of the heavens prostrate themselves unto thee.

Verse 7. Who didst choose Abram] See the notes on the passages referred to in the margin.

Verse 14. Madest known unto them thy holy sabbath] They appear to have forgotten this first of all the commandments of God, during their sojourning in Egypt.

Verse 17. And in their rebellion appointed a captain] This clause, read according to its order in the Hebrew text, is thus: And appointed a captain to return to their bondage in their rebellion. But it is probable that beni-yam, in their rebellion, is a mistake for beni-egyptim, in Egypt. The clause should undoubtedly be read, They possessed the land of ^a Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon, and the land of Og king of Bashan.

23 ^b Their children also multipliedst thou as the stars of heaven, and broughtest them into the land, concerning which thou hadst promised to their fathers, that they should go in to possess it.

24 So ^c the children went in and possessed the land, and ^d thou subduedst before them the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, and gavest them into their hands, with their kings, and the people of the land, that they might do with them ^e as they would.

25 And they took strong cities, and ^f a fat land, and possessed ^g houses full of all goods, ^h wells digged, vineyards, and oliveyards, and ⁱ fruit-trees in abundance: so they did eat, and were filled, and ^j became fat, and delighted themselves in thy great ^k goodness.

26 Nevertheless they ^l were disobedient, and rebelled against thee, and ^m cast thy law behind their backs, and slew thy ⁿ prophets which testified against them to turn them to thee, and they wrought great provocations.

27 ^o Therefore thou deliveredst them into the hand of their enemies, who vexed them: and in the time of their trouble, when they cried unto thee, thou ^p heardest them from heaven; and according to thy manifold mercies ^q thou gavest them saviours, who saved them out of the hands of their enemies.

28 But after they had rest, ^r they ^s did evil again before thee: therefore leftest thou them in the hand of their enemies, so that they had the dominion over them: yet when they returned, and cried unto thee, thou heardest them from heaven; and ^t many times didst thou deliver them according to thy mercies;

29 And testifiedst against them, that thou appointed a captain to return to their bondage in Egypt. Verse 19. The pillar of the cloud departed not from them.] This miraculous cloud, the symbol of the Divine Presence, assumed three different positions while accompanying the Israelitish camp: 1. As a cloud, in the form of a pillar, it went before them when they journeyed, to point out their way in the wilderness. 2. As a pillar of fire, it continued with them during the night, to give them light, and be a rallying point of the whole camp in the night-season. 3. As an extended cloud, it hovered over them in their encampments, to refresh them with its dews, and to keep them from the ardours of the sun.

Verse 22. The land of Og king of Bashan.] It is most evident that Sihon was king of Heshbon. How then can it be said that they possessed the land of Sihon, and the land of the king of Heshbon? The reading of the text is undoubtedly wrong; or the vau may be translated here as it often is, even: even the land of the king of Heshbon.

Verse 25. Became fat, and delighted themselves.] They became effeminate, fell under the power of luxury, got totally corrupted in their manners, sinned against all the mercies of God, and then were destroyed by his judgments.

Verse 27. Thou gavest them saviours.] The whole book of Judges is a history of God's mercies, and their rebellions.

Verse 30. Many years didst thou forbear.] It is supposed that Nehemiah refers here principally to the ten tribes. And many years did God bear with them; not less than two mightest bring them again unto thy law: yet they ^a dealt proudly, and hearkened not unto thy commandments, but sinned against thy judgments, (^b which if a man do, he shall live in them;) and ^c withdrew the shoulder, and hardened their neck, and would not hear.

30 Yet many years didst thou ^d forbid them, and testifiedst ^e against them by thy spirit ^f in ^g thy prophets: yet would they not give ear: ^h therefore gavest thou them into the hand of the people of the lands.

31 Nevertheless for thy great mercies' sake ⁱ thou didst not utterly consume them, nor forsake them; for thou art ^j a gracious and merciful God.

32 Now therefore, our God, the great, the ^k mighty, and the terrible God, who keepest covenant and mercy, let not all the ^l trouble seem little before thee, ^m that hath come upon us, on our kings, on our princes, and on our priests, and on our prophets, and on our fathers, and on all thy people, ⁿ since the time of the kings of Assyria unto this day.

33 Howbeit ^o thou art just in all that is brought upon us; for thou hast done right, but ^p we have done wickedly:

34 Neither have our kings, our princes, our priests, nor our fathers, kept thy law, nor hearkened unto thy commandments and thy testimonies, wherewith thou didst testify against them.

35 For they have ^q not served thee in their kingdom, and in ^r thy great goodness that thou gavest them, and in the large and ^s fat land which thou gavest before them, neither turned they from their wicked works.

36 Behold, ^t we are servants this day, and for the land that thou gavest unto our fathers, to eat the fruit thereof, and the good thereof, behold, we are servants in it:

37 And ^u it yieldeth much increase unto the kings whom thou hast set over us because of our hundred and forty-four years from their separation from the house of David, till their captivity and utter dispersion under Shalmaneser; during the whole of which time God invariably warned them by his prophets; or, as it is here said, by thy Spirit in thy prophets, which gives us the true notion of divine inspiration.

Verse 32. On our kings, on our princes.] I believe Nehemiah in this place mentions the whole of civil society in its officers as they stand related to each other in dignity:—1. KINGS. 2. PRINCES. 3. PRIESTS. 4. PROPHETS. 5. THE FATHERS, heads or chiefs of tribes and families. 6. THE COMMON PEOPLE. Those who disturb this natural order are enemies to the peace of the whole, whatever they may pretend to the contrary.

Verse 34. Neither have our kings.] In this verse he acknowledges that the kings, princes, priests, and fathers had broken the law: but the prophets are left out; for they continued faithful to God, testifying by his Spirit against the crimes of all; and this even at the risk of their lives.

Verse 35. For they have not served thee in their kingdom.] Instead of bemalcutham, "in their kingdom," bemalcuthacha, "in thy kingdom," is the reading of two of Kennicott's MSS.; as also of the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic. This is most likely to be the true reading.

Verse 36. Behold, we are servants.] They had no king of their own; and were under the government of the king of Persia, to whom they paid a regular tribute.

* Deut. xxviii. 48.—^b 2 Kings xxiii. 3. 2 Chron. xxix. 10. xxiv. 31. Ch. x. 29. Ezra x. 8.

Verse 37. It yieldeth much increase unto the kings] Good and fruitful as the land is, yet it profits us ^a little; as the chief profits on all things go to the kings of Persia.

Over our bodies] Exacting personal and feudal services from us, and from our cattle; and this not by any fixed rate, but at their pleasure; so that we can neither call our persons, our time, our land, nor our cattle, our own: therefore we are in great distress. Miserable are the people that live under such a government.

Verse 38. Our princes, Levites, and priests, seal unto it.] From this sealing we learn that at this time the government of the Jews was a mixed aristocracy; composed of the nobles for the civil department, and the priests and Levites for the ecclesiastical.

38 And because of all this we ^b make a sure covenant, and write it; and our princes, Levites, and priests, ^c seal ^d unto it.

This was not mixing the church with the state, or the state with the church: both were separate, yet both mutually supported each other. The state never attempted to model the church according to its own mind; because the church had been founded and regulated by God, and neither its creed nor its ordinances could be changed. The church did not meddle with the state, to give it new laws, new ordinances, or new officers. Therefore the one could not be jealous of the other. Where this state of things prevails, every public blessing may be expected. In every state God says to the governors and the governed: "Render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and to God the things which are God's."

CHAPTER X.

The names of those who sealed the covenant, 1-27. All solemnly promise not to have affinity with the people of the land, 28-30; to observe the sabbaths, 31; to provide for the sanctuary according to the law, 32-36; and to pay the regular tithes for the support of the priests, Levites, and other officers of the temple, 37-39.

NOW ^a those that sealed were, ^b Nehemiah, ^c the Tirshathu, ^d the son of Hachaliah, and Zidkijah,

4 Hattush, Shebaniah, Malluch,

5 Harim, Meremoth, Obadiah,

6 Daniel, Ginnothon, Baruch,

7 Meshullam, Abijah, Mijamin,

8 Maaziah, Bilgai, Shemaiah: these were the priests.

9 And the Levites: both Jeshua the son of Azaniah, Binnui of the sons of Henadad, Kadmiel;

10 And their brethren, Shebaniah, Hodijah, Kelita, Pelaiah, Hanan, 11 Micha, Rehob, Hashabiah,

12 Zaccur, Sherebiah, Shebaniah,

13 Hodijah, Bani, Beninu.

14 The chief of the people: 'Parosh, Pahath-moab, Elam, Zattu, Bani, 15 Bunni, Azgad, Bebai,

16 Adonijah, Bigvai, Adin,

17 Ater, Hizkijah, Azzur,

18 Hodijah, Hashum, Bezai,

19 Hariph, Anathoth, Nebai,

20 Magpiash, Meshullam, Hezir,

21 Meshazbeel, Zadok, Jaddua,

24 Halloesh, Pileha, Shobek,

25 Rehun, Hashabnah, Maasiah,

26 And Ahijah, Hanan, Anan,

27 Malluch, Harim, Baanah.

28 ^a And the rest of the people, the priests, the Levites, the porters, the singers, the Nethinims, ^b and all they that had separated themselves from the people of the lands unto the law of God, their wives, their sons, and their daughters, every one having knowledge, and having understanding;

29 They clave to their brethren, their nobles, ^c and entered into a curse, and into an oath, ^d to walk in God's law, which was given ^e by Moses the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the LORD our God, and his judgments and his statutes;

It is strange that, among all these, we hear nothing of Ezra, nor of the high-priest, Eliashib. Nor are any of the prophets mentioned, though there must have been some of them at Jerusalem at this time.

The whole of this chapter, the two first verses excepted, is wanting in the Arabic; the word Pashur of the third verse is retained; and the rest of the chapter is summed up in these words, and the rest of their assembly.

Verse 30. Not give our daughters] Make no affinity with the people of the land.

Verse 32. Charge ourselves yearly with the third part of a shekel] According to the law, every one above twenty years of age was to give half a shekel to the sanctuary, which was ourselves yearly with the third part of a shekel for the service of the house of our God;

33 For ^athe shew-bread, and for the ^bcontinual meat-offering, and for the continual burnt-offering, of the sabbaths, of the new moons, for the set feasts, and for the holy things, and for the sin-offerings to make an atonement for Israel, and for all the work of the house of our God.

34 And we cast the lots among the priests, the Levites, and the people, ^cfor the wood-offering, to bring it into the house of our God, after the houses of our fathers, at times appointed year by year to burn upon the altar of the LORD, our God, ^das it is written in the law;

35 And ^eto bring the first-fruits of our ground, and the first-fruits of all fruit of all trees, year by year unto the house of the LORD:

called a ransom for their souls. See Exod. xxx. 11-16. But why is one third of a shekel now promised instead of the half shekel, which the law required? To this question no better answer can be given than this: the general poverty of the people, occasioned by their wars, overthrows, heavy tributes, &c., in the land of their captivity: and now on their return, having little property, it was impossible for them to give more; and we know, from the terms of the law in this case, that the poor and the rich were obliged to give alike, because it was a ransom for their souls; and the souls of the poor and the rich were of like value, and stood equally in need of redemption; for all were equally fallen, and all had come equally short of the glory of God.

Though only a third part of a shekel was given at this time, and probably for the reason above assigned, yet when the people got into a state of greater prosperity, the half shekel was resumed: for it is clear that this sum was paid in the time of our Lord, though not to the temple, but to the Roman government. Hence when those who collected this as a tribute came to our Lord, it was for the didrachma, which was half a shekel; and the coin with which our Lord paid for himself and Peter was a stater which contained exactly two half shekels.

Verse 34. Cast the lots—for the wood-offering] There does not appear to have been any wood-offering under the law. It was the business of the Nethinim to procure this; and hence they were called hewers of wood and drawers of water to the congregation. But it is very likely that after the captivity few Nethinim were found; hence, the people now cast lots, not who should furnish the wood, but what class or district should furnish it at a particular time of the year, so that there might be a constant supply. Perhaps this providing of the wood was done only once a year by one district, the next year by another district, and so on: and this bringing the wood to the temple at last became a great day; and was constituted into a feast, called by Josephus ἡ μεταφορά, the carrying of the wood. This feast is not mentioned in the sacred writings: then there was no need for such an institution, as the Nethinim were sufficiently numerous.

38 And the priest the son of Aaron shall be with the Levites, ^cwhen the Levites take tithes: and the Levites shall bring up the tithe of the tithes unto the house of our God, to ^dthe chambers, into the treasure house.

39 For the children of Israel and the children of Levi ^eshall bring the offering of the corn, of the new wine, and the oil, unto the chambers, where are the vessels of the sanctuary, and the priests that minister, and the porters, and the singers: ^fand we will not forsake the house of our God.

Verse 36. Also the first-born] See this law, and the reasons of it, Exod. xiii. 1-13. As by this law the Lord had a right to all the first-born, instead of these he was pleased to take the tribe of Levi for the whole; and thus the Levites served at the tabernacle and temple, instead of the first-born of all the tribes.

Verse 38. Tithe of the tithes] The tithes of all the produce of the fields were brought to the Levites: out of these a tenth part was given to the priests. This is what is called the tithe of the tithes. The law for this is found, Num. xviii. 26.

Verse 39. We will not forsake the house of our God.] Here was a glorious resolution; and had they been faithful to it, they had been a great and good people to the present day. But what is implied in, We will not forsake the house of our God? I answer:

I. The church of God is the house of God; there he has his constant dwelling-place.

II. True believers are his family in this house; and this family consists of, 1. Fathers and mothers; 2. Young persons; 3. Little children; And 4. Servants.

III. The ministers of the word of God are the officers and overseers of this house and family.

IV. The worship of God is the grand employment of this family.

V. The ordinances of God are the food of the members of this family; or the means of their spiritual support.

VI. Those who do not forsake the house of their God are those, 1. Who continue in the faith; 2. Who grow in grace; 3. Who labour in the vineyard; 4. Who bring forth fruit; 5. Who conscientiously attend all the ordinances; and 6. Who take care that the offerings of the house of God shall be duly made, providing for those who labour in the word and doctrine.

Reader, 1. Art thou of this house? 2. Art thou in this house? 3. To what part of the family dost thou belong? 4. Art thou still an infant in this house? 5. Dost thou attend the ordinances of this house? 6. Hast thou forsaken this house? These questions are of great importance; answer them as in the sight of God.

CHAPTER XI.

Lots are cast that a tenth of the people may constantly dwell at Jerusalem, and the other nine parts in the other cities and villages, 1. Some willingly offer themselves to dwell in Jerusalem, and the people bless them, 2. An enumeration of the families that dwell in Jerusalem, of Judah, and Benjamin, 3-9; of those of the priests, 10-12; of the chiefs of the fathers, 13; of the mighty men, 14; of the Levites, 15-18; of the porters, 19; of the residue of Israel and the officers, 20-24. The villages at which they dwell, 25-35. Certain divisions of the Levites were in Judah and Benjamin, 36.

AND the rulers of the people dwelt at Jerusalem: the rest of the people also cast lots, to bring one of ten to dwell in Jerusalem ^a the holy city, and nine parts to dwell in other cities.

2 And the people blessed all the men that ^b willingly offered themselves to dwell at Jerusalem.

3 ^c Now these are the chief of the province that dwelt in Jerusalem: but in the cities of Judah dwelt every one in his possession in their cities, to wit, Israel, the priests and the Levites, and ^d the Nethinims, and ^e the children of Solomon's servants.

4 And ^f at Jerusalem dwelt certain of the children of Judah, and of the children of Benjamin. Of the children of Judah; Athaiah the son of Uzziash, the son of Zechariah, the son of Amariah, the son of Shephatiah, the son of Mahalaleel, of the children of ^g Perez;

5 And Maseiah the son of Baruch, the son of Col-hozeh, the son of Hazaiash, the son of Adaiash, the son of Joiarib, the son of Zechariah, the son of Shiloni.

6 All the sons of Perez that dwelt at Jerusalem were four hundred threescore and eight valiant men.

7 And these are the sons of Benjamin; Sallu the son of Meshullam, the son of Joed, the son of Pedaiash, the son of Kolaiah, the son of Maasciah, the son of Ithiel, the son of Jesaiash.

8 And after him Gabbai, Sallai, nine hundred twenty and eight.

9 And Joel the son of Zichri was their overseer: and Judah the son of Senuah was second over the city.

10 ^b Of the priests: Jedaiah the son of Joiarib, Jachin.

11 Seraiah the son of Hilkiah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Zadok, the son of Meraioh, the son of Alitub, was the ruler of the house of God.

12 And their brethren that did the work of the house were eight hundred twenty and two: and Adaiash the son of Jeroham, the son of Pelaliah, the son of Amzi, the son of Zechariah, the son of Pashur, the son of Malchiah,

13 And his brethren, chief of the fathers, two hundred forty and two: and Amashai the son of Azarcel, the son of Ahasai, the son of Meshillemoth, the son of Immer, 14 And their brethren, mighty men of valour, an hundred twenty and eight: and their overseer was Zabdai, ¹ the son of one of the great men.

15 Also of the Levites: Shemaiah the son of Has-hub, the son of Azrikam, the son of Hashabiah, the son of Bunni;

16 And Shabbethai and Jozabad, of the chief of the Levites, ¹ had the oversight of ^k the outward business of the house of God.

17 And Mattaniah the son of Micha, the son of Zabdi, the son of Asaph, was the principal to begin the thanksgiving in prayer: and Bakkukiah the second among his brethren, and Abda the son of Shammua, the son of Galal, the son of Jeduthun.

18 All the Levites in ¹ the holy city were two hundred fourscore and four.

19 Moreover the porters, Akkub, Talmon, and their brethren that kept ^m the gates, were an hundred seventy and two.

20 And the residue of Israel, of the priests, and the Levites, were in all the cities of Judah every one in his inheritance.

21 ^a But the Nethinims dwelt in ^o Ophel: and Ziha and Gispah were over the Nethinims.

22 The overseer also of the Levites at Jerusalem was Uzzi the son of Bani, the son of Hashabiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Micha. Of the sons of Asaph, the singers were over the business of the house of God.

23 For ^p it was the king's commandment concerning them, that ^q a certain portion should be for the singers, due for every day.

24 And Pethahiah the son of Meshezabeel, of the children of ^r Zerah the son of Judah, was ^a at the king's hand in all matters concerning the people.

25 And for the villages, with their fields, some of the children of Judah dwelt at ¹ Kirjath-arba, and in the villages thereof, and at Dibon, and in the villages thereof, and at Jekabzoeel, and in the villages thereof,

Verse 1. To bring one of ten] Jerusalem certainly had many inhabitants at this time; but not sufficient to preserve the city, which was now encompassed with a wall, and the rebuilding of which was going on fast. Nehemiah therefore obliged one tenth of the country people to come and dwell in it, that the population might be sufficient for the preservation and defence of the city.

Verse 2. All the men that willingly offered] Some volunteered their services, which was considered a sacrifice to patriotism at that time, as Jerusalem afforded very few advantages, and was a place of considerable danger; hence the people spoke well of them and no doubt prayed for God's blessing upon them.

Verse 8. Now these are the chief] A good deal of difference will be found between the enumeration here and that in 1 Chron. ix. 2, &c. These, those only who came with Zerubbabel appear to be numbered; here, those, and the persons who came with Ezra and Nehemiah, enter into the account.

Verse 9. And Joel—was their overseer] Joel was chief or magistrate over these, and Judah was his second or deputy. Perhaps each had a different office, but that of Joel was the chief.

Verse 11. Ruler of the house of God] He had the command over all secular matters, as the high-priest had over those which were spiritual.

Verse 14. Mighty men of valour] Noted for strength of body, and military courage.

Verse 17. The principal to begin the thanksgiving] The precentor, pitcher of the tune, or master-singer.

Verse 22. The overseer also of the Levites] The visitant, the inspector; translated ἐπισκοπος bishop, both by the Septuagint and Vulgate.

Verse 23. It was the king's commandment] By the king some understand David, and others Artaxerxes. It is most probable that it was the latter; who wished that a provision should be made for these, a part of whose office was to offer up prayers also as well as praises. See Ezra vi. 10. Some have thought that they had been Jewish singers employed in the service of the Persian king, to whom he had given a salary, and to whom he wished still to continue the same.

Verse 24. Pethahiah—was at the king's hand] He was the governor appointed by the Persian king over the Jewish nation in those matters, in which the civil government interfered with Jewish concerns. He no doubt fixed, levied, and received the tribute.

Verse 26. And at Jeshua] This city is nowhere else mentioned. Verse 28. Mekonah] This city is also unknown.

26 And at Jeshua, and at Moladah, and at Beth-phelet, 27 And at Hazar-shual, and at Beer-sheba, and in the villages thereof,
 28 And at Ziklag, and at Mekonah, and in the villages thereof,
 29 And at En-rimmon, and at Zareah, and at Jarmuth, 30 Zanoah, Adullam, and in their villages, at Lachish, and the fields thereof, at Azekah, and in the villages thereof. And they dwelt from Beer-sheba unto the valley of Hinnom.

 31 The children also of Benjamin * from Geba dwelt ^b at Michmash, and Aija, and Beth-el, and in their villages,
 32 And at Anathoth, Nob, Ananiah,
 33 Hazor, Ramah, Gittaim,
 34 Hadid, Zeboim, Neballat,
 35 Lod, and Ono, ^c the valley of craftsmen.
 36 And of the Levites were divisions in Judah, and in Benjamin.

* Or, of Geba.—^b Or, to Michmash.

^c 1 Chron. iv. 14.

Verse 31. Geba] Probably the same as Gibeah of Saul.
 Verse 32. Ananiah] No city of this name is known.
 Verse 34. Hadid] This place is also unknown.
Neballat] Also unknown.
 Verse 35. Lod, and Ono] These towns were built by the sons of Elpaal, 1 Chron. viii. 12.

The valley of craftsmen.] See 1 Chron. iv. 14. Probably this latter town was built in this valley.
 Verse 36. And of the Levites were divisions] The Levites had their dwellings in the divisions of Judah and Benjamin. This is probably the meaning: the Syriac says, They had the half of Judah and Benjamin; which is not likely.

CHAPTER XII.

Account of the priests and Levites that came with Zerubbabel, 1-7. Of the Levites, 8-21. The Levites in the days of Eliashib, 22-26. Of the dedication of the wall, and its ceremonies, 27-43. Different officers appointed, 44-47.

NOW these are the *priests and the Levites that went up with Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua: ^b Seraiah, Jeremiah, Ezra, 8 Moreover the Levites: Jeshua, Binnui, Kadmiel, Sherebiah, Judah, and Mattaniah, ^m which was over ⁿ the thanksgiving, he and his brethren.

9 Also Bakkubiah and Unni, their brethren, were over against them in the watches.

10 And Jeshua begat Joiakim, Joiakim also begat Eliashib, and Eliashib begat Joiada, 11 And Joiada begat Jonathan, and Jonathan begat Jaddua.

Verse 1. Now these are the priests] Not the whole, but the chief of them, as we are informed, ver. 7, 22, 23, and 24. Mention is made of Ezra in this verse; and he is generally allowed to be that Ezra whose book the reader has already passed over, and who came to Jerusalem in the time of Cyrus, with Zerubbabel. If this were the same, he must have been at this time upwards of an hundred years of age: and this case is not improbable, as an especial providence might preserve such a very useful man beyond the ordinary age of men. [The Ezra mentioned is identical with Azariah, chap. x. 2.]
 Verse 7. The chief of the priests] There were twenty-four orders or courses in number, all subordinate to each other: as established by David, 1 Chron. xxiv. 18. And these orders or courses were continued till the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans.
 Verse 8. Over the thanksgiving] The principal singers: see on chap. xi. 17.

12 And in the days of Joiakim were priests, the chief of the fathers: of Seraiah, Meraiah; of Jeremiah, Hananiah;
 13 Of Ezra, Meshullam; of Amariah, Jehohanan;
 14 Of Melicu, Jonathan; of Shebaniah, Joseph;
 15 Of Harim, Adna; of Meraioth, Helkai;
 16 Of Iddo, Zechariah; of Ginnethon, Meshullam;
 17 Of Abijah, Zichri; of Miniamin; of Moadiah, Piltai;
 18 Of Bilgah, Shammua; of Shemaiah, Jehonathan;
 19 And of Joiarib, Mattenai; of Jedaiah, Uzzi; 20 Of Sallai, Kallai; of Amok, Eber; • • •
 21 Of Hilkiah, Hashabiah; of Jedaiah, Nethaneel.
 22 The Levites in the days of Eliashib, Joiada, and Johanan, and Jaddua, were recorded chief of the fathers: also the priests, to the reign of Darius the Persian.

Verse 22. Jaddua] This was probably the high-priest who went in his pontifical robes, accompanied by his brethren, to meet Alexander the Great, when he was advancing towards Jerusalem, with the purpose to destroy it, after having conquered Tyre and Gaza. Alexander was so struck with the appearance of the priest, that he forbore all hostilities against Jerusalem, prostrated himself before Jaddua, worshipped the Lord at the temple, and granted many privileges to the Jews. [This story is probably apocryphal.]
To the reign of Darius the Persian.] Calmet maintains that this must have been Darius Codomanus who was defeated by Alexander the Great; but Archbishop Usher understands it of Darius Nothus in whose reign he thinks Jaddua was born, who was high-priest under Darius Codomanus. [If Nehemiah wrote this passage he must have referred to Darius Nothus.]
 Verse 23. The book of the chronicles] This is not the 23 The sons of Levi, the chief of the fathers, were written in the book of the chronicles, even until the days of Johanan the son of Eliashib.

24 And the chief of the Levites: Hashabiah, Sherebiah, and Jeshua the son of Kadmiel, with their brethren over against them, to praise and to give thanks, according to the commandment of David the man of God, ward over against ward.

25 Mattaniah, and Bakbukiah, Obadiah, Meshullam, Talmon, Akkub, were porters keeping the ward at the thresholds of the gates.

26 These were in the days of Joiakim the son of Jeshua, the son of Jozadak, and in the days of Nehemiah the governor, and of Ezra the priest, the scribe.

27 And at the dedication of the wall of Jerusalem they sought the Levites out of all their places, to bring them to Jerusalem, to keep the dedication with gladness, both with thanksgivings, and with singing, with cymbals, psalteries, and with harps,

28 And the sons of the singers gathered themselves together, both out of the plain country round about Jerusalem, and from the villages of Netophathi;

29 Also from the house of Gilgal, and out of the fields of Geba and Azmaveth: for the singers had builded them villages round about Jerusalem.

30 And the priests and the Levites purified themselves, and purified the people, and the gates, and the wall.

31 Then I brought up the princes of Judah upon the wall, and appointed two great companies of them that gave thanks, whereof one went on the right hand upon the wall toward the dung gate:

32 And after them went Hoshaiah, and half of the princes of Judah,

33 And Azariah, Ezra, and Meshullam,

34 Judah, and Benjamin, and Shemaiah, and Jeremiah,

35 And certain of the priests' sons with trumpets: namely, Zechariah the son of Jonathan, the son of Shemaiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Michaiah, the son of Zaccur, the son of Asaph:

36 And his brethren, Shemaiah, and Azarael, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethaneel, and Judah, Hanani, with the musical instruments of David the man of God and Ezra the scribe before them.

37 And at the fountain gate, which was over against them, they went up by the stairs of the city of David, at the going up of the wall, above the house of David, even unto the water gate eastward.

38 And the other company of them that gave thanks went over against them, and I after them, and the half of the people upon the wall, from beyond the tower of the furnaces even unto the broad wall;

39 And from above the gate of Ephraim, and above the old gate, and above the fish gate, and the tower of Hananeel, and the tower of Meah, even unto the sheep gate: and they stood still in the prison gate.

40 So stood the two companies of them that gave thanks in the house of God, and I, and the half of the rulers with me:

41 And the priests; Eliakim, Maaseiah, Miniamin, Michaiah, Elioenai, Zechariah, and Hananiah, with trumpets;

42 And Maaseiah, and Shemaiah, and Eleazar, and Uzzi, and Jehohanan, and Malchijah, and Elam, and Ezer. And the singers sang loud, with Jezrahiah their overseer.

43 Also that day they offered great sacrifices and rejoiced: for God had made them rejoice with great joy: the wives also and the children rejoiced: so that the joy of Jerusalem was heard even afar off.

44 And at that time were some appointed over the chambers for the treasures, for the offerings, for the first fruits, and for the tithes, to gather into them out of the fields of the cities the portions of the law for the priests and Levites: for Judah rejoiced for the priests and for the Levites that waited.

45 And both the singers and the porters kept the ward of their God, and the ward of the purification, according to the commandment of David, and of Solomon his son.

46 For in the days of David and Asaph of old there were chief of the singers, and songs of praise and thanksgiving unto God.

47 And all Israel in the days of Zerubbabel, and in the days of Nehemiah, gave the portions of the singers and the porters, every day his portion: and they sanctified holy things unto the Levites; and the Levites sanctified them unto the children of Aaron.

Verse 25. The thresholds of the gates] Some understand this of a sort of porticoes at the gates, and are puzzled about it, because they find no mention of porticoes elsewhere: but why may we not suppose these to resemble our watch-houses, or some temporary moveable shelters for those who took care of the gates?

Verse 27. At the dedication of the wall] The dedication seems to have consisted in processions of the most eminent persons around the walls, and thanksgivings to God, who had enabled them to bring the work to so happy a conclusion: and no doubt to all this were added a particular consecration of the city to God, and the most earnest invocation that he would take it under his guardian care, and defend it and its inhabitants against all their enemies.

Verse 29. From the house of Gilgal, and out of the fields of Geba and Azmaveth.] Or, from Beth-Gilgal; a village erected in the place where the Israelites encamped after they had, under the direction of Joshua, passed over Jordan.

Verse 30. The priests and the Levites purified themselves] This consisted in washings, abstinence from wine, and other matters, which on all other occasions were lawful. And as to the purifying of the gates and the walls, nothing was requisite but to remove all filth from the former, and all rubbish that might have been laid against the latter.

Verse 31. Then I brought up the princes] The following seems to have been the order of the procession: he divided the priests, the Levites, the magistrates, and the people into two companies; each company to go round one half of the wall. They began at the dung gate, one party going to the right and the other to the left, till they met at the great space opposite to the temple, where they all offered many sacrifices to God; and rejoiced with exceeding great joy; shouting so that the noise was heard a great way off.

Verse 33. The broad wall] What part this was, we know not: it might have been a place designed for a public promenade, or a parade for assembling the troops or guard of the temple.

Verse 47. All Israel—gave the portions of the singers]

The singers and the porters were supported by the people at large; and each of these had their portions served out to them daily.

And they sanctified—unto the Levites] The things which were provided for sacred uses were delivered by the people to the Levites, and the Levites presented them to the priests.

The children of Aaron.] This may refer principally to the tithes which the people brought to the Levites; the tithe or tenth of which the Levites gave to the priests. The presenting these tithes is termed sanctifying them; that is, dedicating them to those sacred or ecclesiastical uses for which they were designed: this is a very general meaning of the word sanctify in Scripture.

CHAPTER XIII.

The law is read, which commands that the Ammonite and Moabite should be separated from the congregation; in which they separate all the mixed multitude, 1-3. Eliashib the high-priest having not only joined opinion with Sanballat, but being also allied to Tobiah the Ammonite, and having given him some of the chambers in the court of the house of God, 4, 5; Nehemiah casts out the goods of Tobiah, and purifies the chambers, 6-9. He rectifies several evils; and the people bring the tithes of all things to the treasuries, 10-12. He appoints treasurers, 13, 14; finds that the sabbaths had been greatly profaned by buying and selling, and rectifies this abuse, 15-22; finds Jews that had married strange wives; against whom he testifies, and expels one of the priests who had married the daughter of Sanballat the Hironite, 23-29. He cleanses them from all strangers, makes a final regulation, and prays for God's mercy to himself, 30, 31.

ON that day ^a they ^b read in the book of Moses in the ^c audience of the people; and therein was found written, ^d that the Ammonite and the Moabite should not come into the congregation of God for ever;

2 Because they met not the children of Israel with bread and with water, but ^e hired Balaam against them, that he should curse them: ^f howbeit our God turned the curse into a blessing.

3 Now it came to pass, when they had heard the law, ^g that they separated from Israel all the mixed multitude.

4 And before this, Eliashib the priest, ^h having the oversight of the chamber of the house of our God, was allied unto Tobiah:

5 And he had prepared for him a great chamber, ⁱ where aforetime they laid the meat-offerings, the frankincense, and the vessels, and the tithes of the corn, the new wine, and the oil, ^j which ^k was commanded to be given to the Levites, and the singers, and the porters; and the offerings of the priests.

6 But in all this time was not I at Jerusalem: ^l for in the two and thirtieth year of Artaxerxes king of Babylon came I unto the king, and ^m after certain days ⁿ obtained I leave of the king.

7 And I came to Jerusalem, and understood of the evil that Eliashib did for Tobiah, in ^o preparing him a chamber in the courts of the house of God.

8 And it grieved me sore: therefore I cast forth all the household stuff of Tobiah out of the chamber.

9 Then I commanded, and they ^p cleansed the chambers: and thither brought I again the vessels of the house of God, with the meat-offering and the frankincense.

10 And I perceived that the portions of the Levites had ^q not been given them: for the Levites and the singers, that did the work, were fled every one to ^r his field.

11 Then ^s contended I with the rulers, and said, ^t Why is the house of God forsaken? And I gathered them together, and set them in their ^u place.

12 ^v Then brought all Judah the tithe of the corn and the new wine and the oil unto the ^w treasuries.

13 ^x And I made treasurers, over the treasuries, Shelemiah the priest, and Zadok the scribe, and of the Levites, Pedaiah: and ^y next to them was Hanan the son of Zaccur, the son of Mattaniah: for they were counted ^z faithful, and their ^{aa} office was to distribute unto their brethren.

a connexion with Tobiah, the fast friend of Sanballat; in whose favour he polluted the house of God, giving him one of the chambers for his ordinary residence, which were appointed for the reception of the tithes, oblations, &c., that came to the house of God.

Verse 6. Was not I at Jerusalem] Nehemiah came to Jerusalem in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, and remained there till the thirty-second year, twelve years: then returned to Babylon, and staid one year; got leave to revisit his brethren; and found matters as stated in this chapter.

Verse 8. I cast forth all the household stuff of Tobiah] He acted as Jesus Christ did when he found the courts of the Lord's house profaned.

Verse 10. The portions of the Levites had not been given] This was the fault of the rulers, who permitted all these abuses.

Verse 11. Why is the house of God forsaken? They had all solemnly promised, chap. x. 30, that they would never forsake the house of their God; but, alas, how soon is this forgotten! Nehemiah uses their own words here by way of reproof.

Verse 1. On that day] It is most likely that, when this dedication was ended, Nehemiah returned to Babylon, as himself particularly marks, ver. 6, for he did return in the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes; and then, after certain days, supposed to be about the term of one year, he got leave to return to Jerusalem to see how matters were conducted: and there he found the evils which he mentions in this chapter, and which he redressed in the manner himself describes.

Should not come into the congregation] That is, Ye shall not form any kind of matrimonial alliance with them. This, and this alone, is the meaning of the law.

Verse 3. They separated from Israel all the mixed multitude.] They excluded all strange women, and all persons young and old, who had been born of these illegal connexions.

Verse 4. Eliashib the priest] Perhaps this was a different person from Eliashib the high-priest; but there is no indubitable evidence that he was not the same. If he was high-priest, he was very unfaithful to the high charge which he had received; and a reproach to the priesthood. He had married his grandson to Sanballat's daughter: this produced and wipe not out my ^a good deeds that I have done for the house of my God, and for the ^b offices thereof.

15 In those days saw I in Judah some treading wine-presses ^c on the sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, ^d which they brought into Jerusalem on the sabbath day: and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals.

16 There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish and all manner of ware, and sold on the sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem.

17 ^e Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the sabbath day?

18 ^f Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the sabbath.

19 And it came to pass, that when the gates of Jerusalem ^g began to be dark before the sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the sabbath: ^h and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burdeⁿ be brought in on the sabbath day.

20 So the merchants and sellers of all kind of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice.

21 Then I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye ⁱ about the wall? if ye do so again, I will lay hands on you, From that time forth came they no more on the sabbath.

22 And I commanded the Levites, that ^j they should cleanse themselves, and that they should Verse 14. Wipe not out my good deeds] If thou wert strict to mark what is done amiss, even my good deeds must be wiped out; but, Lord, remember me in thy mercy, and let ray upright conduct be acceptable to thee!

Verse 15. Treading wine-presses] The sabbath appears to have been totally disregarded.

Verse 17. I contended with the nobles] These evils took place through their negligence; and this I proved before them.

Verse 19. When the gates—began to be dark] After sunset on Friday evening he caused the gates to be shut, and kept them shut all the sabbath; and, as he could not trust the ordinary officers, he set some of his own servants to watch the gates, that no person might enter for the purpose of traffic.

Verse 21. I will lay hands on you] I will imprison every man of you. This had the desired effect; they came no more.

Verse 22. Spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy] By some Nehemiah has been thought to deal with God too much on the principle of merit. That he wished God to remember him for good, is sufficiently evident; and who does not wish the same? But that he expected heaven because of his good deeds, does not appear. Indeed, the concluding clause of this verse proves the contrary, and shows that he expected nothing from God but through the greatness of his mercy.

Verse 24. Half in the speech of Ashdod] There were children in the same family by Jewish and Philistine mothers.

As the Jewish mother would always speak to her children in Hebrew or Chaldee, so they learnt to speak these languages; and as the Ashdod mother would always speak to her children in the Ashdod language, so they learnt that tongue. Thus there were, in the same family, children who could not understand each other; half, or one part, speaking one language, and the other part another. Children of different wives did not ordinarily mingle together; and the wives had separate apartments.

Verse 25. I contended with them] Proved the fact against these iniquitous fathers, in a legal assembly.

And cursed them] Denounced the judgments of God and the sentence of the law upon them.

And made them swear by God, saying, Ye shall not give] Caused them to bind themselves by an oath, that they would make no intermarriages with those who were not of the seed of Israel.

Verse 26. Did not Solomon] Have you not had an awful example before you? What a heavy curse did Solomon's conduct bring upon himself and upon the people, for conduct such as yours?

Verse 27. Shall we then hearken unto you] If God spared not Solomon, who was so much beloved of Him, shall we spare you, who by your conduct are bringing down God's judgments upon Israel?

Verse 28. One of the sons of Joiada] This was Manasseh, brother of Jaddua, son of Joiada, and grandson of Eliashib the high-priest.

Verse 29. Because they have defiled the priesthood] God, therefore, will remember their iniquities against them, and punish them for their transgressions. These words of Nehemiah are to be understood declaratively.

Verse 31. For the wood-offering] This was a most necessary regulation : without it the temple service could not have gone forward ; and therefore Nehemiah mentions this as one of the most important services he had rendered to his nation.

Remember me, O my God, for good.] This has precisely the same meaning with, O my God, have mercy upon me! and thus alone it should be understood.

ESTHER.

CONCERNING the author of this book there are several opinions: some attribute the work to Esra; some to one Joachim, a high-priest; others, to the men of the Great Synagogue; and others, to Mordecai. This latter is the most likely opinion: nor is that to be disregarded which gives to Mordecai for co-partner Esra himself; though it is likely that the conclusion, from chap. ix. 23. to the end of the book, was inserted by another hand, and at a later time. Though some Christians have hesitated to receive the book of Esther into the sacred canon; yet it has always been received by the Jews, not only as perfectly authentic, but also as one of the most excellent of their sacred books. They call it megillah, THE VOLUME, by way of eminence; and hold it in the highest estimation. That it records the history of a real fact, the observation of the feast of Purim, to the present day, is a sufficient evidence. Indeed, this is one of the strongest evidences that any fact can have, viz., that, to commemorate it, a certain rite, procession, feast, or the like, should have been instituted at the time, which, without intermission, has been continued annually through every generation of that people, and in whatsoever place they or parties of them may have sojourned, to the present day. This is the fact concerning the feast of Purim here mentioned; which the Jews, in all places of their dispersion, have uninterruptedly celebrated, and do still continue to celebrate, from the time of their deliverance from the massacre intended by Haman to the present time. Copies of this book, widely differing from each other, exist in Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Greek and Latin. All these differ much from the Hebrew text, particularly the Greek and the Chaldee: the former has many additional paragraphs; and the latter, as it exists in the London Polyglot, contains five times more than the Hebrew text.

Though learned men in general decide in favour of a Hebrew original, yet there are many reasons which might be urged in favour of the Persian. Several of the proper names are evidently of a Persian origin; and no doubt all the others are so; but they are so transformed by passing through the Hebrew, that they are no longer discernible. The Hebrew has even retained some of the Persian words, having done little else than alter the characters, e.g., Esther, Mehuman, Mishak, Melsar, Vashti, Shushan, Pur, Darius, Paradise, &c., several of which will be noted in their proper places.

It is a singular circumstance that the name of God does not once occur in the whole of this book as it stands in Hebrew.

OF ESTHER.

CHAPTER I.

Ahasuerus makes royal feasts for his nobles and people, 1-9. Vashti is sent for by the king, but refuses to come, 10-12. Vashti is disgraced; and a law made for the subjection of women, 13-22.

NOW it came to pass in the days of ^aAhasuerus, (this is Ahasuerus which reigned ^bfrom India even unto Ethiopia, ^cover an hundred and seven and twenty provinces:)

^d2 That in those days, when the king Ahasuerus sat on the throne of his kingdom, which was in ^eShushan the palace,

⁴ When he shewed the riches of his glorious kingdom and the honour of his excellent majesty many days, even an hundred and fourscore days.

⁵ And when these days were expired, the king made a feast unto all the people that were present in Shushan the palace, both unto great and small, seven days, in the court of the garden of the king's palace;

⁶ Where were white, green, and ^hblue hangings,

Verse 1. Now it came to pass] The Ahasuerus of the Romans, the Artaxerxes of the Greeks, and Artaxerxes of the Persians, are the same. Some think that this Ahasuerus was Darius, the son of Hystaspes; but Prideaux and others maintain that he was Artaxerxes Longimanus. [Modern criticism identifies the Ahasuerus of this book with Xerxes.]

Reigned from India even unto Ethiopia] This is nearly the same account that is given by Xenophon.

Verse 2. Sat on the throne of his kingdom] Having subdued all his enemies, and brought universal peace to his empire.

Shushan the palace] The ancient city of Susa, which with Ecbatana and Babylon, was a residence of the Persian kings. The word habbira, which we render the palace, should be rendered the city, as in the Septuagint.

Verse 4. The riches of his glorious kingdom] Luxury was the characteristic of the eastern monarchs, and particularly of the Persians. In their feasts, which were superb and of long continuance, they made a general exhibition of their wealth, grandeur, &c., and received the highest encomiums from their poets and flatterers. Their ostentation on such occasions passed into a proverb.

Verse 5. A feast unto all the people] The first was a feast for the nobles in general; this, for the people of the city at large.

In the court of the garden] As the company was very numerous that was to be received, no apartments in the palace could be capable of containing them; therefore the court of the garden was chosen.

Verse 6. White, green, and blue hangings] It was customary on such occasions, not only to hang the place about with fastened with cords of finelinen and purple to silver rings and pillars of marble: the beds were of gold and silver, upon a pavement of red, and blue, and white, and black, marble.

⁷ And they gave them drink in vessels of gold, (the vessels being diverse one from another,) and ^kroyal wine in abundance, according to the state of the king.

⁸ And the drinking was according to the law; none did compel: for so the king had appointed to all the officers of his house, that they should do according to every man's pleasure.

⁹ Also Vashti the queen made a feast for the women in the royal house which belonged to king Ahasuerus.

¹⁰ On the seventh day, when the heart of the king was merry with wine, he commanded Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, and Abagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the seven chamberlains that served in the presence of Ahasuerus the king,

¹¹ To bring Vashti the queen before the king elegant curtains of the above colours, but also to have a canopy of rich stuffs suspended on cords from side to side of the place in which they feasted. And such courts were ordinarily paved with different coloured marbles, or with tiles painted, as above specified. And this was the origin of the Musive or Mosaic work, well known among the Asiatics, and borrowed from them by the Greeks and the Romans.

The beds of gold and silver mentioned here were the couches covered with gold and silver cloth, on which the guests reclined.

Verse 7. Vessels being diverse] They had different services of plate.

Verse 8. None did compel: for so the king had appointed] Every person drank what he pleased; he was not obliged to take more than he had reason to think would do him good.

Among the Greeks, each guest was obliged to keep the round, or leave the company: hence the proverb Drink or begone.

At the Roman feasts there was a person chosen by the cast of dice, who was the Arbiter bibendi, and prescribed rules to the company, which all were obliged to observe.

Verse 9. Also Vashti the queen] Vashti is a mere Persian word; and signifies a beautiful or excellent woman.

Made a feast for the women] As the women of the East never mingle with the men in public, Vashti made a feast for the Persian ladies by themselves; and while the men were in the court of the garden, the women were in the royal house.

Verse 10. He commanded Mehuman] All these are doubtless Persian names; but so disguised by passing through a Hebrew medium, that some of them can scarcely be known. Mehuman signifies a stranger or guest.

with the crown royal, to shew the people and the princes her beauty: for she was fair to look on.

12 But the queen Vashti refused to come at the king's commandment^b by his chamberlains: therefore was the king very wroth, and his anger burned in him.

13 Then the king said to the wise men,^c which knew the times, (for so was the king's manner toward all that knew law and judgment:

14 And the next unto him was Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marsena, and Memucan, the seven princes of Persia and Media,^d which saw the king's face, and which sat the first in the kingdom:)

15 What shall we do unto the queen Vashti according to law, because she hath not performed the commandment of the king Ahasuerus by the chamberlains?

16 And Memucan answered before the king and the princes, Vashti the queen hath not done wrong to the king only, but also to all the princes, and to all the people that are in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus.

17 For this deed of the queen shall come abroad unto all women, so that they shall despise their husbands in their eyes, when it shall be reported,

The king Ahasuerus commanded Vashti the queen to be brought in before him, but she came not.

18 Likewise shall the ladies of Persia and Media say this day unto all the king's princes, which have heard of the deed of the queen. Thus shall there arise too much contempt and wrath.

19 If it please the king, let there go a royal commandment^e from him, and let it be written among the laws of the Persians and the Medes,^f that it be not altered, That Vashti come no more before king Ahasuerus; and let the king give her royal estate^g unto another that is better than she.

20 And when the king's decree which he shall make shall be published throughout all his empire, (for it is great,) all the wives shall give to their husbands honour, both to great and small.

21 And the saying pleased the king and the princes; and the king did according to the word of Memucan;

22 For he sent letters into all the king's provinces,^h into every province according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language, that every man should bear rule in his own house, and that it should be published according to the language of every people.

Verse 11. To bring Vashti the queen] The Targum adds naked. [But there is no authority for this gloss.]

For she was fair to look on.] Hence she had her name Vashti, which signifies beautiful.

Verse 12. Vashti refused to come] And much should she be commended for it. What woman, possessing even a common share of prudence and modesty, could consent to expose herself to the view of such a group of drunken Bacchanalians? Her courage was equal to her modesty: she would resist the royal mandate, rather than violate the rules of chaste decorum.

Her humility was greatly evidenced in this refusal. She was beautiful; and might have shown herself to great advantage, and have had a fine opportunity of gratifying her vanity, if she had any: but she refused to come.

Hail, noble woman! be thou a pattern to all thy sex on every similar occasion! Surely, every thing considered, we have few women like Vashti; for some of the highest of the land will dress and deck themselves in the utmost splendour, even to the selvedge of their fortunes, to exhibit themselves at balls, plays, galas, operas, and public assemblies of all kinds (nearly half-naked), that they may be seen and admired of men, and even, to the endless reproach and broad suspicion of their honour and chastity, figure away in masquerades!

Probably, the privy counsellors of the king. Which saw the king's face—were at all times admitted to the royal presence.

Verse 16. Vashti—hath not done wrong to the king only] This reasoning or arguing was inconsequent and false. Vashti had not generally disobeyed the king, therefore she could be no precedent for the general conduct of the Persian women. She disobeyed only in one particular; and this, to serve a purpose, Memucan draws into a general consequence.

Verse 18. The ladies of Persia] The princesses; but the meaning is very well expressed by our term ladies.

Verse 19. That it be not altered] Let it be inserted among the permanent laws, and made a part of the constitution of the empire. Perhaps the Persians affected such a degree of wisdom in the construction of their laws, that they never could be amended, and should never be repealed. And this we may understand to be the ground of the saying, The laws of the Medes and Persians, that change not.

Verse 22. That every man should bear rule in his own house] Both God's law and common sense taught this from the foundation of the world. And is it possible that this did not obtain in the Persian empire, previously to this edict? The twentieth verse has another clause, That all wives shall give their husbands honour, both to great and small. This also was universally understood. This law did nothing. I suppose the parade of enactment was only made to deprive honest Vashti of her crown.

CHAPTER II.

The counsellors advise that a selection of virgins should be made throughout the empire, out of whom the king should choose one to be queen in place of Vashti, 1-4. Account of Mordecai and his cousin Esther, 5-7. She is chosen among the young women, and is placed under the care of Hegai, the king's chamberlain, to go through a year's purification, 8-11. The manner in which these young women were introduced to the king, and how those were disposed of who were not called again to the king's bed, 12-14. Esther pleases the king, and is set above all the women; and he makes her queen in the place of Vashti, and does her great honour, 15-20. Mordecai, sitting at the king's gate, discovers a conspiracy formed against the king's life by two of his chamberlains; he informs the king, the matter is investigated, they are found guilty and hanged, and the transaction is recorded, 21-23.

AFTER these things, when the wrath of king Ahasuerus was appeased, he remembered Vashti, and what she had done, and what was decreed against her.

2 Then said the king's servants that ministered unto him, Let there be fair young virgins sought for the king :

3 And let the king appoint officers in all the provinces of his kingdom, that they may gather together all the fair young virgins unto Shushan the palace, to the house of the women, unto the custody of Hegai the king's chamberlain, keeper of the women ; and let their things for purification be given them :

4 And let the maiden which pleaseth the king be queen instead of Vashti. And the thing pleased the king ; and he did so.

5 Now in Shushan the palace there was a certain Jew, whose name was Mordecai, the son of Jair, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish, a Benjamite ;

6 Who had been carried away from Jerusalem with the captivity which had been carried away with Jeconiah king of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away.

7 And he brought up Hadassah, that is, Esther, his uncle's daughter : for she had neither father nor mother, and the maid was fair and beautiful ; whom Mordecai, when her father and mother were dead, took for his own daughter.

8 So it came to pass, when the king's commandment and his decree was heard and when many maidens were gathered together unto Shushan the palace, to the custody of Hegai, that Esther was brought also unto the king's house, to the custody of Hegai, keeper of the women.

9 And the maiden pleased him and she obtained kindness of him ; and he speedily gave her things for purification, with such things as belonged to her, and seven maidens which were meet to be given her, out of the king's house : and he preferred her and her maids unto the best place of the house of the women.

10 Esther had not shewed her people nor her kindred : for Mordecai had charged her that she should not shew it.

11 And Mordecai walked every day before the court of the women's house, to know how Esther did, and what should become of her.

12 Now when every maid's turn was come to go in to king Ahasuerus, after that she had been twelve months, according to the manner of the women, (for so were the days of their purification accomplished, to wit, six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and with other things for the purifying of the women ;)

13 Then thus came every maiden unto the king ; whatsoever she desired was given her to go with her out of the house of the women unto the king's house.

14 In the evening she went, and on the morrow she returned into the second house of the women, to the custody of Shaashgaz, the king's chamberlain, which kept the concubines : she came in unto the king no more, except the king delighted in her, and that she were called by name.

15 Now when the turn of Esther, the daughter of Abihail the uncle of Mordecai, who had taken her for his daughter, was come to go in unto the king, she required nothing but what Hegai the king's chamberlain, the keeper of the women, appointed. And Esther obtained favour in the sight of all them that looked upon her.

16 So Esther was taken unto king Ahasuerus into his house royal in the tenth month, which is the month Tebeth, in the seventh year of his reign.

17 And the king loved Esther above all the women, and she obtained grace and favour in his Verse 2. Let there be fair young virgins sought for the king] This was the usual way in which the harem or seraglio was furnished: the finest women in the land, whether of high or low birth, were sought out and brought to the harem. They all became the king's concubines: but one was raised, as chief wife or sultana, to the throne; and her issue was specially entitled to inherit.

Verse 3. Hegai the king's chamberlain] "The king's eunuch;" so the Septuagint, Vulgate, Targum, and Syriac. In the eastern countries the women are intrusted to the care of the eunuchs only.

Let their things for purification be given them] Their cosmetics. What these were we are told in ver. 12; oil of myrrh, and sweet odours. The myrrh was employed for six months, and the odours for six months more, after which the person was brought to the king. This space was sufficient to show whether the young woman had been chaste; whether she were with child or not, that the king might not be imposed on, and be obliged to father a spurious offspring, which might have been the case had not this precaution been used.

Verse 7. He brought up Hadassah] Hadassah signifies a myrtle in Chaldee; this was probably her first or Babylonish name. When she came to the Persian court, she was called Esther, which signifies a star in Persian: the name is undoubtedly Persian. Esther was the daughter of Abihail, the uncle of Mordecai, and therefore must have been Mordecai's cousin, though the Vulgate and Josephus make her Mordecai's niece: but it is safest here to follow the Hebrew.

Verse 9. The maiden pleased him] He conceived a partiality for her above the rest, probably because of the propriety of her deportment, and her engaging though unassuming manners.

Seven maidens] These were to attend her to the bath, to anoint and adorn her, and be her servants in general. Verse 10. Esther had not shewed her people] This might have prejudiced her with the king; for it was certainly no credit at the Persian court to be a Jew; and we shall find from the sequel that those who were in the Persian dominions were far from being reputable, or in a safe state. Besides, had her lineage been known, envy might have prevented her from ever having access to the king.

Verse 13. Whatever she desired] When any of the young women were called to go to the king, it appears that it was an ordinance that whatever kind of dress, stuff, colour, jewels, &c., they thought best to set off their persons, and render them more engaging, should be given them.

Verse 14. She returned into the second house] This was the place where the king's concubines were kept. They went out no more, and were never given in marriage to any man, and saw the king's face no more unless specially called.

Custody of Shaashgaz] This is probably another Persian name, beardless, a proper epithet of a eunuch; or weak loins, for the same reason. Names of this kind at once show the reason of their imposition, by describing the state of the person.

Verse 15. She required nothing] She left this entirely to her friend Hegai, who seems to have been intent on her success. She therefore left her decorations to his judgment alone, and went in that dress and in those ornaments which he deemed most suitable.

Verse 16. The tenth month—Tebeth] Answering to part of our December and January.

Verse 17. Set the royal crown upon her head] Made her what is now called in the East the SULTANA, the queen. She was the mistress of all the rest of the wives, all of whom were obliged to pay her the most profound respect.

sight more than all the virgins; so that he set the royal crown upon her head, and made her queen instead of Vashti.

18 Then the king ^a made a great feast unto all his princes and his servants, even Esther's feast; and he made a ^b release to the provinces, and gave gifts, according to the state of the king.

19 And when the virgins were gathered together the second time, then Mordecai sat ^c in the king's gate.

20 ^d Esther had not yet shewed her kindred nor her people; as Mordecai had charged her: for Esther did the commandment of Mordecai, like as when she was brought up with him.

^a Ch. i. 3.—^b Heb. rest.—^c Ver. 21. Ch. iii. 2.—^d Ver. 10.—

Verse 18. Made a release to the provinces] Remitted some kind of tribute or impost, in honour of Esther, at her coronation, as our kings generally do when they are crowned, ordering a discharge from prison of many who are confined for minor offences. As it was the custom of the Persian kings to give their queens something like what is called with us the aurum reginæ, "queen gold," which was a tenth of all fines, &c., above what was given to the king (for they gave them such a city to buy them clothes, another for their hair, a third for their necklaces, a fourth for their pearls, &c.); it is probable that, on this occasion, Esther so wishing, he relieved those cities and provinces which had before paid this queen gold from all those expenses; and this would tend greatly to make the queen popular.

Verse 21. Mordecai sat in the king's gate.] Mordecai might have been one of the officers of the king, as the gate was the place where such usually attended to await the king's 21 In those days, while Mordecai sat in the king's gate, two of the king's chamberlains, ^a Bigthan and Teresh, of those which kept ^b the door, were wroth, and sought to lay hand on the king Ahasuerus.

22 And the thing was known to Mordecai, ^c who told it unto Esther the queen; and Esther certified the king thereof in Mordecai's name.

23 And when inquisition was made of the matter, it was found out; therefore they were both hanged on a tree: and it was written in ^d the book of the chronicles before the king.

call. It is not likely that he was the porter; had he been only such, Haman could have removed him at once.

Two of the king's chamberlains] Eunuchs. Why they conspired against the life of the king, we are not informed. It is very likely that they were creatures of Haman, who probably affected the kingdom, and perhaps were employed by him to remove the king, and so make his way open to the throne.

Verse 22. Was known to Mordecai] Josephus says that a Jew, named Barnabasus, overheard the plot, told it to Mordecai, Mordecai to Esther, and Esther to the king in Mordecai's name; and he was registered as the discoverer.

Verse 23. It was found out] It was proved against them, in consequence of which they were hanged. Perhaps the words they were hung upon wood or a tree, may refer to their being impaled.

CHAPTER III.

Ahasuerus exalts Haman the Agagite, and commands all his officers to do him reverence, which Mordecai refuses, 1-3. Haman, informed of Mordecai's refusal, plots his destruction, and that of the Jews, 4-6. Lots are cast to find out the proper time, 7. Haman accuses the Jews to Ahasuerus, counsels him to destroy them, and offers ten thousand talents of silver for the damage which the revenue might sustain by their destruction, 8, 9. The king refuses the money, but gives Haman full authority to destroy them, 10, 11. Letters are written to this effect, and sent to the king's lieutenants throughout the empire, and the thirteenth day of the month Adar is appointed for the massacre, 12-15.

AFTER these things did king Ahasuerus promote Haman the son of Hammedatha the ^a Agagite, and advanced him, and set his seat above all the princes that were with him.

2 And all the king's servants, that were ^b in the king's gate, bowed, and revered Haman: for the king had so commanded concerning him. But Mordecai ^c bowed not, nor did him reverence.

3 Then the king's servants, which were in the Verse 1. Haman—the Agagite] Perhaps he was some descendant of that Agag, king of the Amalekites, spared by Saul, but destroyed by Samuel; and on this ground might have an antipathy to the Jews.

Set his seat above all the princes] Made him his prime minister, and put all the officers of state under his direction.

Verse 2. The king's servants, that were in the king's gate] By servants here, certainly a higher class of officers are intended than porters; and Mordecai was one of those officers, and came to the gate with the others who were usually there in attendance to receive the commands of the king.

king's gate, said unto Mordecai, Why transgressest thou the ^a king's commandment?

4 Now it came to pass, when they spake daily unto him, that he hearkened not unto them, that they told Haman, to see whether Mordecai's matters would stand: for he had told them that he was a Jew.

5 And when Haman saw that Mordecai ^b bowed not, nor did him reverence, then was Haman ^c full of wrath.

^a Ver. 5. Ps. xv. 4.—^b Ver. 2.—^c Ver. 2. Ch. v. 9.—^d Dan. iii. 19.

Mordecai bowed not] "He did not bow down;" "nor did he prostrate himself." I think it most evident, from these two words, that it was not civil reverence merely that Haman expected and Mordecai refused; this sort of respect is found in the word cara, to bow. This sort of reverence Mordecai could not refuse without being guilty of the most inexcusable obstinacy, nor did any part of the Jewish law forbid it. But Haman expected, what the Persian king frequently received, a species of divine adoration; and this is implied in the word shachah, which signifies that kind of prostration which implies the highest degree of reverence

6 And he thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone; for they had shewed him the people of Mordecai: wherefore Haman sought to destroy all the Jews that were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahasuerus, even the people of Mordecai.

7 In the first month, that is, the month Nisan, in the twelfth year of king Ahasuerus, they cast Pur, that is, the lot, before Haman from day to day, and from month to month, to the twelfth month, that is, the month Adar.

8 And Haman said unto king Ahasuerus, There is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the people in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and their laws are diverse from all people; neither keep they the king's laws: therefore it is not for the king's profit to suffer them.

9 If it please the king, let it be written that they may be destroyed: and I will pay ten thousand talents of silver to the hands of those that have the charge of the business, to bring it into the king's treasuries.

10 And the king took his ring from his hand, and gave it unto Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, the Jews' enemy.

11 And the king said unto Haman, The silver is that can be paid to God or man, lying down flat on the earth, with the hands and feet extended, and the mouth in the dust.

The Jews all think that Mordecai refused this prostration because it implied idolatrous adoration.

Verse 7. The first month] That is, of the civil year of the Jews.

The month Nisan] Answering to a part of our March and April.

The twelfth year of king Ahasuerus] According to the chronology in our Bibles, about five hundred and ten years before Christ.

They cast Pur, that is, the lot] This appears to be the Hebrew corruption of the pure Persian word pari, which signifies any thing that happens fortuitously. There is an addition here in the Greek text, that was probably in the original, and which makes this place very plain: "that they might destroy in one day the people of Mordecai; and the lot fell on the fourteenth day of the month Adar."

We see plainly intimated by the Hebrew text that they cast lots, or used a species of divination, to find which of the twelve months would be the most favourable for the execution of Haman's design; and, having found the desired month, then they cast lots, or used divination, to find out which day of the said month would be the lucky day for the accomplishment of the enterprise.

Some have questioned whether Pur may not have signified also some game of chance, which they played before or with Haman, from day to day, to divert him from his melancholy, till the lucky time came in which he was to have the gratification of slaying all the people who were objects of his enmity; or they cast lots, or played, who should get the property of such and such opulent families.

Verse 8. Their laws are diverse from all people] Such they certainly were; for they worshipped the true God, according to his own laws; and this was not done by any other people then on the face of the earth.

Verse 9. Let it be written that they may be destroyed] Let it be enacted that they may all be put to death. By this he would throw all the odium off himself, and put it on the king and his counsellors; for he wished the thing to pass into a law, in which he could have but a small share of the blame.

I will pay ten thousand talents of silver] He had said before that it was not for the king's profit to suffer them; but here he is obliged to acknowledge that there will be a loss to given to thee, the people also, to do with them as it seemeth good to thee.

12 Then were the king's scribes called on the thirteenth day of the first month, and there was written according to all that Haman had commanded unto the king's lieutenants, and to the governors that were over every province, and to the rulers of every people of every province, according to the writing thereof, and to every people after their language; in the name of king Ahasuerus was it written, and sealed with the king's ring.

13 And the letters were sent by posts into all the king's provinces to destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish, all Jews, both young and old, little children and women, in one day, even upon the thirteenth day of the twelfth month, which is the month Adar, and to take the spoil of them for a prey.

14 The copy of the writing for a commandment to be given in every province was published unto all people, that they should be ready against that day.

15 The posts went out, being hastened by the king's commandment, and the decree was given in Shushan the palace. And the king and Haman sat down to drink; but the city Shushan was perplexed.

the revenue, but that loss he is willing to make up out of his own property.

Verse 10. The king took his ring] In this ring was no doubt included his privy seal, and he gave this to Haman, that when he had formed such a decree as he thought fit, he might seal it with this ring, which would give it its due force and influence among the rulers of the provinces.

Verse 12. Unto the king's lieutenants] This is in all probability another Persian word, for there is nothing like it in the Hebrew language, nor can it be fairly deduced from any roots in that tongue. The Vulgate translates ad omnes satrapas regis, to all the satraps of the king. It is very likely that this is the true sense of the word.

Verse 13. To destroy, to kill, and to cause to perish] To put the whole of them to death in any manner, or by every way and means.

Take the spoil of them for a prey] Thus, whoever killed a Jew had his property for his trouble! And thus the hand of every man was armed against this miserable people.

Verse 15. The posts] Literally, the couriers, the hircarabs, those who carried the public dispatches; a species of public functionaries, who have been in use in all nations of the world from the remotest antiquity.

The decree was given in Shushan] It was dated from the royal Susa, where the king then was.

The city Shushan was perplexed] They saw that in a short time, by this wicked measure, the whole city would be thrown into confusion; for although the Jews were the only objects of this decree, yet, as it armed the populace against them, even the Persians could not hope to escape without being spoiled, when a desperate mob had begun to taste of human blood, and enrich themselves with the property of the murdered. Besides, many Persian families had no doubt become united by intermarriages with Jewish families, and in such a massacre they would necessarily share the same fate with the Jews. A more impolitic, disgraceful, and cruel measure was never formed by any government; and one would suppose that the king who ordered it must have been an idiot, and the counsellors who advised it must have been madmen. But a despotic government is ever capable of extravagance and cruelty; for as it is the bane of popular freedom and happiness, so is it the disgrace of political wisdom and of all civil institutions. Despotism and tyranny in the state are the most direct curses which insulted justice can well inflict upon a sinful nation.

CHAPTER IV.

On hearing of the king's decree to exterminate the Jews, Mordecai mourns, and clothes himself in sackcloth, 1, 2. The Jews are filled with consternation, 3. Esther, perceiving Mordecai in distress at the palace gate, sends her servant Hatach to inquire the reason, 4-6. Hatach returns with the information, and also the express desire of Mordecai that she should go instantly to the king, and make supplication in behalf of her people, 7-9. Esther excuses herself on the ground that she had not been called by the king for thirty days past; and that the law was such, that any one approaching his presence, without express invitation, should be put to death, unless the king should, in peculiar clemency, stretch out to such person the golden sceptre, 10-12. Mordecai returns an answer, insisting on her compliance, 13, 14. She then orders Mordecai to gather all the Jews of Shushan, and fast for her success three days, night and day; and resolves to make the attempt, though at the risk of her life, 15-17.

WHEN Mordecai perceived all that was done, Mordecai ^arent his clothes, and put on sackcloth ^bwith ashes, and went out into the midst of the city, and ^ccried with a loud and a bitter cry;

2 And came even before the king's gate: for none might enter into the king's gate clothed with sackcloth.

3 And in every province, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, there was great mourning among the Jews, and fasting, and weeping, and wailing; and ^dmany lay in sackcloth and ashes.

4 So Esther's maids and her ^echamberlains came and told it her. Then was the queen exceedingly grieved; and she sent raiment to clothe Mordecai, and to take away his sackcloth from him: but he received it not.

5 Then called Esther for Hatach, one of the king's chamberlains, whom he had appointed to attend upon her, and gave him a commandment to Mordecai, to know what it was, and why it was.

6 So Hatach went forth to Mordecai unto the street of the city, which was before the king's gate.

7 And Mordecai told him of all that had happened

^a2 Sam. i. 11.—^bJosh. vii. 6. Ezek. xxvii. 30.—^cGen. xxvii. 34.—^dHeb. sackcloth and ashes were laid under many. Isa. lviii. 5.

Verse 1. Mordecai rent his clothes] He gave every demonstration of the most poignant and oppressive grief.

Verse 2. Before the king's gate] He could not enter into the gate, or the place where the officers waited, because he was in the habit of a mourner; for this would have been contrary to law.

Verse 3. Fasting, and weeping, and wailing] How astonishing, that in all this there is not the slightest intimation given of praying to God!

Verse 4. Sent raiment] She supposed that he must have been spoiled of his raiment by some means; and therefore sent him clothing.

Verse 5. Then called Esther for Hatach] This eunuch the king had appointed to wait upon her, partly, as is still the case in the East, to serve her, and partly to observe her conduct; for no despot is ever exempt from a two-fold torture, jealousy and suspicion.

Verse 11. Into the inner court] We have already seen that the Persian sovereigns affected the highest degrees of majesty, even to the assuming of divine honours. No man nor woman dared to appear unveiled before them, without hazarding their lives: into the inner chamber of the harem no person ever entered but the king, and the woman he had chosen to call thither. None even of his courtiers or ministers dared to appear there; nor the most beloved of his concubines, except led thither by himself, or ordered to come to him. Here was Esther's difficulty; and that difficulty was now increased by the circumstance of her having not been sent for to the king's bed for thirty days. In the last verse of the preceding chapter we find that the king and Haman sat down to drink. It is very likely that this unto him, and of ^fthe sum of the money that Haman had promised to pay to the king's treasuries for the Jews, to destroy them.

8 Also he gave him ^hthe copy of the writing of the decree that was given at Shushan to destroy them, to show it unto Esther, and to declare it unto her, and to charge her that she should go in unto the king, to make supplication unto him, and to make request before him for her people.

9 And Hatach came and told Esther the words of Mordecai.

10 Again Esther spake unto Hatach, and gave him commandment unto Mordecai;

11 All the king's servants, and the people of the king's provinces, do know that whosoever, whether man or woman, shall come unto the king into ⁱthe inner court, who is not called, ^jthere is one law of his to put him to death, except such ^kto whom the king shall hold out the golden sceptre, that he may live: but I have not been called to come in unto the king these thirty days.

12 And they told to Mordecai Esther's words.

13 Then Mordecai commanded to answer Esther, Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews.

14 For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at wicked man had endeavoured to draw the king's attention from the queen, that his affection might be lessened, as he must have known something of the relationship between her and Mordecai; and consequently viewed her as a person who, in all probability, might stand much in the way of the accomplishment of his designs. I cannot but think that he had been the cause why Esther had not seen the king for thirty days.

Verse 13. Think not—that thou shalt escape] This confirms the suspicion that Haman knew something of the relationship between Mordecai and Esther; and therefore he gives her to understand that although in the king's palace she should no more escape than the Jews.

Verse 14. Then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise] He had a confidence that deliverance would come by some means; and he thought that Esther would be the most likely; and that, if she did not use the influence which her providential station gave her, she would be highly culpable.

And who knoweth whether thou art come] As if he had said, "Is it likely that Divine Providence would have so distinguished thee, and raised thee from a state of abject obscurity, merely for thy own sake? Must it not have been on some public account? Did not he see what was coming? and has he not put thee in the place where thou mayest counteract one of the most ruinous purposes ever formed?" Is there a human being who has not some particular station by an especial providence, at some particular time, in which he can be of some essential service to his neighbour, in averting evil or procuring good, if he be but faithful to the grace and opportunity afforded by this station? Who dares give a negative to these questions? We lose much, both in this time, then shall there * enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

reference to ourselves and others, by not adverting to our providential situation and circumstances.

Verse 16. Fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink three days] What a strange thing, that still we hear nothing of prayer nor of God! What is the ground on which we can account for this total silence? I know it not. He could not suppose there was any charm in fasting, sackcloth garments, and lying on the ground. If these were not done to turn away the displeasure of God, which seemed now to have unchained their enemies against them, what were they done for?

^b present in Shushan, and fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink * three days, night or day: I also and my maidens will fast likewise; and so will I go in unto the king, which is not according to the law: ^d and if I perish, I perish.

[If I perish, I perish.] If I lose my life in this attempt to save my people, I shall lose it cheerfully. I see it is my duty to make the attempt; and come what will, I am resolved to do it. She must, however, have depended much on the efficacy of the humiliations she prescribed.

CHAPTER V.

Esther presents herself before the king, and finds favour in his sight, 1, 2. He asks what her request is, and promises to grant it, 3. She invites him and Haman to a banquet, which they accept, 4, 5. He then desires to know her request; and she promises to make it known on the morrow, if they will again come to her banquet, 6-8. Haman, though overjoyed at the manner in which he was received by the queen, is indignant at the indifference with which he is treated by Mordecai, 9. He goes home, and complains of this conduct to his friends, and his wife Zeresh, 10, 13. They counsel him to make a gallows of fifty cubits high, and to request the king that Mordecai may be hanged on it, which they take for granted the king will not refuse; and the gallows is made accordingly, 14.

NOW it came to pass * on the third day, that Esther put on her royal apparel, and stood in ^b the inner court of the king's house, over against the king's house; and the king sat upon his royal throne in the royal house, over against the gate of the house.

2 And it was so, when the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, that ^c she obtained favour in his sight: and ^d the king held out to Esther the golden sceptre that was in his hand. So Esther ^e drew near, and touched the top of the sceptre.

3 Then said the king unto her, What wilt thou, queen Esther? and what is thy request? * it shall be even given thee to the half of the kingdom.

4 And Esther answered, If it seem good unto the king, let the king and Haman come this day unto the banquet that I have prepared for him.

5 Then the king said, Cause Haman to make haste, that he may do as Esther hath said. So the king

* See ch. iv. 16.—^b See ch. iv. 11.—Ch. vi. 4.—^c See Eth. xv. 7, 8. Prov. xxi. 1.—^d Ch. iv. 11, viii. 4.

Verse 1. On the third day] Most probably the third day of the fast which she had prescribed to Mordecai and the Jews.

Verse 2. She obtained favour in his sight] The Septuagint represents "the king as being at first greatly enraged when he saw Esther, because she had dared to appear before him unveiled; and she, perceiving this, was so terrified that she fainted away; on which the king, touched with tenderness, sprung from his throne, took her up in his arms, laid the golden sceptre on her neck, and spoke to her in the most endearing manner." This is more circumstantial than the Hebrew, but is not contrary to it.

Verse 4. Let the king and Haman come this day unto the banquet] It was necessary to invite Haman to prevent his suspicion, and that he might not take any hasty step which and Haman came to the banquet that Esther had prepared.

6 * And the king said unto Esther at the banquet of wine, * What is thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? even to the half of the kingdom it shall be performed.

7 Then answered Esther, and said, My petition and my request is;

8 If I have found favour in the sight of the king, and if it please the king to grant my petition, and ^b to perform my request, let the king and Haman come to the banquet that I shall prepare for them, and I will do to morrow as the king hath said.

9 Then went Haman forth that day joyful and with a glad heart: but when Haman saw Mordecai in the king's gate, ¹ that he stood not up, nor moved for him, he was full of indignation against Mordecai.

10 Nevertheless Haman ¹ refrained himself: and might have prevented the execution of the great design. Verse 6. The banquet of wine] At that part of the banquet when the wine was introduced.

* So Mark vi. 23.—¹ Ch. vii. 2.—² Ch. ix. 12.—^b Heb. to do.—^c Ch. iii. 5.—^d So 2 Sam. xlii. 22.

Verse 8. I will do to morrow] She saw she was gaining on the king's affections; but she was not yet sufficiently confident; and therefore wished another interview, that she might ingratiate herself more fully in the king's favour, and thus secure the success of her design. But Providence disposed of things thus, to give time for the important event mentioned in the succeeding chapter.

Verse 9. That he stood not up, nor moved for him] This was certainly carrying his integrity or inflexibility to the highest pitch. But still we are left to conjecture that some reverence was required, which Mordecai could not conscientiously pay.

when he came home, he sent and called for his friends, and Zeresh his wife.

11 And Haman told them of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, and all the things wherein the king had promoted him and how he had advanced him above the princes and servants of the king.

12 Haman said moreover, Yea, Esther the queen did let no man come in with the king unto the banquet that she had prepared but myself; and to ^a Heb. caused to come.—^b Ch. ix. 7, &c.—^c Ch. iii. 1.

Verse 11. The multitude of his children] The Asiatic sovereigns delight in the number of their children; and this is one cause why they take so many wives and concubines.

Verse 12. Yet all this availeth me nothing] Pride will ever render its possessor unhappy. He has such a high opinion of his own worth, that he conceives himself defrauded by every one who does not pay him all the respect and homage which he conceives to be his due.

The soul was made for God, and nothing but God can fill it and make it happy. Angels could not be happy in glory, when they had cast off their allegiance to their Maker. As soon as his heart had departed from God, Adam would needs go to the forbidden fruit, to satisfy a desire which was only an indication of his having been unfaithful to his God. Solomon, in all his glory, possessing every thing heart could 13 Yet all this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate.

14 Then said Zeresh his wife and all his friends unto him, Let a gallows be made of fifty cubits high, and to-morrow speak thou unto the king that Mordecai may be hanged thereon: then go thou in merrily with the king unto the banquet. And the thing pleased Haman; and he caused the gallows to be made.

wish, found all to be vanity and vexation of spirit; because his soul had not God for its portion. Ahab, on the throne of Israel, takes to his bed, and refuses to eat bread, not merely because he cannot get the vineyard of Naboth, but because he had not God in his heart, who could alone satisfy its desires. Haman, on the same ground, though the prime favourite of the king, is wretched because he cannot have a bow from that man whom his heart even despised. Oh, how distressing are the inquietudes of vanity! And how wretched is the man who has not the God of Jacob for his help, and in whose heart Christ dwells not by faith!

Verse 14. Let a gallows be made of fifty cubits high] The words ets, which we translate gallows, signifies simply wood, a tree, or pole; and this was to be seventy-five feet high, that he might suffer the greater ignominy, and be a more public spectacle. I believe impaling is here also meant.

CHAPTER VI.

That night the king, not being able to sleep, orders the chronicles of the kingdom to be read to him; and finds there the record concerning the discovery of the treason of the two eunuchs, made by Mordecai, 1, 2. He inquires whether Mordecai had been rewarded, and was answered in the negative, 3. At this time Haman arrives in order to request the king's permission to hang Mordecai; and being suddenly asked what should be done to the man whom the king delighted to honour, supposing that himself must be meant, presented the ceremonial, 4-9. The king orders him to give Mordecai those honours; which he performs, to his extreme mortification, 10, 11. He informs his wife Zeresh of these transactions, who predicts his downfall, 12, 13. He is hurried by the eunuchs to the queen's banquet, 14.

ON that night could not the king sleep, and he commanded to bring the book of records of the chronicles; and they were read before the king.

2 And it was found written, that Mordecai had told of Bigthana and Teresh, two of the king's chamberlains, the keepers of the door, who sought to lay hand on the king Ahasuerus.

3 And the king said, What honour and dignity hath been done to Mordecai for this? Then said the king's servants that ministered unto him, There is nothing done for him.

4 And the king said, Who is in the court? Now Haman was come into the outward court of the Verse 1. The records of the chronicles] It may be well asked, Why should the king, in such a perturbed state of mind, wish such a dry detail, as chronicles afford, to be read to him? But the truth is, as chronicles were composed among the Persians, he could not have brought before him any work more instructive, and more entertaining: because they were all written in verse, and were generally the work of the most eminent poets in the empire. They are written in this way to the present time; and the famous epic poem, of the finest Persian poet, Ferdusi, the Homer of India, is nothing else than a collection of chronicles brought down from the creation to the reign of Mohammed Ghemry, in the beginning of the tenth century. Even our rough English ancestors had their poetic chronicles; and, among many, the king's house, to speak unto the king to hang Mordecai on the gallows that he had prepared for him.

5 And the king's servants said unto him, Behold, Haman standeth in the court. And the king said, Let him come in.

6 So Haman came in. And the king said unto him, What shall be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honour? Now Haman thought in his heart, To whom would the king delight to do honour more than to myself?

7 And Haman answered the king, For the man whom the king delighteth to honour, chronicle of Robert of Gloucester is proof in point. I need not add, that all that is real in Ossian is of the same complexion.

Verse 3. What honour and dignity hath been done to Mordecai] It is certain he found nothing in the record; and had anything been done, that was the most likely place to find it.

Verse 4. Now Haman was come] This must have been very early in the morning. Haman's pride and revenge were both on the tenters to be gratified.

Verse 6. The king said unto him] He did not give him time to make his request; and put a question to him which at the first view, promised him all that his heart could wish.

Verse 8. Let the royal apparel be brought] Pride and folly king useth to wear, and ^athe horse that the king rideth upon, and the crown royal which is set upon his head :

9 And let this apparel and horse be delivered to the hand of one of the king's most noble princes, that they may array the man withal whom the king delighteth to honour, and ^bbring him on horseback throughout the street of the city, ^cand proclaim before him, Thus shall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

10 Then the king said to Haman, Make haste, and take the apparel and the horse, as thou hast said, and do even so to Mordecai the Jew, that sitteth at the king's gate: ^dlet nothing fail of all that thou hast spoken.

11 Then took Haman the apparel and the horse, and arrayed Mordecai, and brought him on horseback through the street of the city, and proclaimed before him, Thus shall it be done unto the man whom the king delighteth to honour.

^a 1 Kings i. 33.—^b Heb. cause him to ride.—^c Gen. xii. 43.—^d Heb. suffer not a whit to fail.

12 And Mordecai came again to the king's gate. But Haman ^ehasted to his house mourning, ^fand having his head covered.

13 And Haman told Zeresh his wife and all his friends every thing that had befallen him. Then said his wise men and Zeresh his wife unto him, If Mordecai be of the seed of the Jews, before whom thou has begun to fall, thou shalt not prevail against him, but shalt surely fall before him.

14 And while they were yet talking with him, came the king's chamberlains, and hasted to bring Haman unto ^gthe banquet that Esther had prepared.

ever go hand in hand. What he asked would have been in any ordinary case against his own life: but he wished to reach the pinnacle of honour; never reflecting that the higher he rose, the more terrible would be his fall. The royal apparel was never worn but by the king; even when the king had laid them aside, it was death to put them on.

And the horse—and the crown royal] Interpreters are greatly divided whether what is called here the crown royal be not rather an ornament worn on the head of the horse, than what may be called the royal crown. The original may be understood both ways; and our Version seems to favour the former opinion: but I think it more likely that the royal crown is meant: for why mention the ordinary trappings of the royal steed?

Verse 9. One of the king's most noble princes] Alas, poor Haman! Never was the fable of the dog and shadow more literally fulfilled. Thou didst gape at the shadow, and didst lose the substance.

Verse 10. Make haste, and take the apparel—and do even so to Mordecai] O mortifying reverse of human fortune! How could Haman bear this? How astonishing is the conduct of Divine Providence in all this business! From it we plainly see that there is neither counsel nor wisdom against the Lord; and that he who digs a pit for his neighbour, is sure to fall into it himself.

Verse 12. Mordecai came again to the king's gate] He resumed his former humble state; while Haman, ashamed to look up, covered his face, and ran home to hide himself in his own house. Covering the head and face was a sign of shame and confusion, as well as of grief, among most people of the earth.

Verse 14. Hasted to bring Haman] There was a dreadful banquet before him, of which he knew nothing: and he could have little appetite to enjoy that which he knew was prepared at the palace of Esther.

One grand design of this history is, to show that he who lays a snare for the life of his neighbour, is most likely to fall into it himself: for, in the course of the divine providence, men generally meet with those evils in life which they have been the means of inflicting on others: and this is exactly agreeable to the saying of our Lord: "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you withal."

CHAPTER VII.

The king at the banquet urges Esther to prefer her petition, with the positive assurance that it shall be granted, 1, 2.

- She petitions for her own life, and the life of her people, who were sold to be destroyed, 3, 4. The king inquires the author of this project, and Haman is accused by the queen, 5, 6. The king is enraged: Haman supplicates for his life; but the king orders him to be hanged on the gallows he had prepared for Mordecai, 7-10.

SO the king and Haman came ^ato banquet with Esther the queen.

2 And the king said again unto Esther on the second day ^bat the banquet of wine, What is thy petition, queen Esther? and it shall be granted thee: and what is thy request? and it shall be performed, even to the half of the kingdom.

3 Then Esther the queen answered and said If I have found favour in thy sight, O king, and if it please the king, let my life be given me at my petition, and my people at my request:

^a Heb. to drink.—^b Ch. v. 8.—^c Ch. iii. 9. iv. 7.—^d Heb. that they should destroy, and kill, and cause to perish.

Verse 2. At the banquet of wine] Postquam vino incalescit, after he had been heated with wine, says the Vulgate. In such a state the king was ^cmore likely to come into the measures of the queen.

Verse 3. Let my life be given me] This was very artfully, as well as very honestly, managed; and was highly calculated to work on the feelings of the king. What! is the life of the queen, whom I most tenderly love, in any kind of danger?

4 For we are ^dsold, I and my people, ^eto be destroyed, to be slain, and to perish. But if we had been sold for bondmen and bondwomen, I had held my tongue, although the enemy could not countervail the king's damage.

5 Then the king Ahasuerus answered and said unto Esther the queen, Who is he, and where is he, ^fthat durst presume in his heart to do so?

6 And Esther said, ^gThe adversary and enemy is this wicked Haman. Then Haman was afraid ^hbefore the king and the queen.

^e Heb. whose heart hath filled him.—^f Heb. The man adversary.—^g Or, at the presence of.

Verse 4. To be destroyed, to be slain] She here repeats the words which Haman put into the decrees.

Could not countervail the king's damage] Even the ten thousand talents of silver could not be considered as a compensation to the state for the loss of a whole nation of people throughout all their generations.

Verse 5. Who is he, and where is he] There is a wonderful abruptness and confusion in the original words, highly expressive of the state of mind in which the king then was:

7 And the king arising from the banquet of wine in his wrath went into the palace garden: and Haman stood up to make request for his life to Esther the queen; for he saw that there was evil determined against him by the king.

8 Then the king returned out of the palace garden into the place of the banquet of wine; and Haman was fallen upon the bed whereon Esther was. Then said the king, will he force the queen also before me in the house? As the word went out

“Who? He? This one? And where? This one? He? Who hath filled his heart to do thus?” He was at once struck with the horrible nature of a conspiracy so cruel and diabolic.

Verse 7. Haman stood up] He rose from the table to make request for his life, as soon as the king had gone out; and then he fell on his knees before the queen, she still sitting upon her couch.

Verse 8. Will he force the queen] On the king's return he found him at the queen's knees; and, professing to think that he intended to do violence to her honour, used the above expressions; though he must have known that, in such cir-of the king's mouth, they covered Haman's face.

9 And ^aHarbonah, one of the chamberlains, said before the king, Behold also, the gallows fifty cubits high, which Haman had made for Mordecai, who had spoken good for the king, standeth in the house of Haman. Then the king said, Hang him thereon.

10 So ^bthey hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. Then was the king's wrath pacified.

umstances, the thought of perpetrating an act of this kind could not possibly exist.

They covered Haman's face.] This was a sign of his being devoted to death: for the attendants saw that the king was determined on his destruction.

Verse 9. Behold also, the gallows] As if he had said, Besides all he has determined to do to the Jews, he has erected a very high gallows, on which he had determined, this very day, to hang Mordecai, who has saved the king's life.

Hang him thereon.] Let him be instantly impaled on the same post.

CHAPTER VIII.

Ahasuerus invests Mordecai with the offices and dignities possessed by Haman, 1, 2. Esther begs that the decree of destruction gone out against the Jews may be reversed, 3-6. He informs her that the acts that had once passed the king's seal cannot be reversed; but he instructs her and Mordecai to write other letters in his name, and seal them with his seal, and send them to all the provinces in the empire, giving the Jews full liberty to defend themselves; which is accordingly done; and the letters are sent off with the utmost speed to all the provinces: in consequence, the Jews prepare for their defence, 7-14. Mordecai appears publicly in the dress of his high office, 15. The Jews rejoice in every place; and many of the people become Jews, because the fear of the Jews had fallen upon them, 16, 17.

ON that day did the king Ahasuerus give the house of Haman the Jews' enemy unto Esther the queen. And Mordecai came before the king; for Esther had told what he was unto her.

2 And the king took off his ring which he had taken from Haman, and gave it unto Mordecai. And Esther set Mordecai over the house of Haman.

3 And Esther spake yet again before the king, and fell down at his feet, and besought him with tears to put away the mischief of Haman the Agagite, and his device that he had devised against the Jews.

4 Then the king held out the golden sceptre towards Esther. So Esther arose, and stood before the king, Verse 1. The king—give the house of Haman] As Haman was found guilty of treasonable practices against the peace and prosperity of the king and his empire, his life was forfeited, and his goods confiscated. And as Mordecai had been the means of preserving the king's life, and was the principal object of Haman's malice, it was but just to confer his property upon him, as well as his dignity and office, as Mordecai was found deserving of the former, and fit to discharge the duties of the latter.

Verse 2. The king took off his ring] In the ring was the

5 And said, If it please the king, and if I have found favour in his sight, and the thing seem right before the king, and I be pleasing in his eyes, let it be written to reverse the letters devised by Haman the son of Hammedatha the Agagite, which he wrote to destroy the Jews which are in all the king's provinces;

6 For how can I endure to see the evil that shall come unto my people? or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred?

seal of the king. Giving the ring to Mordecai was tantamount to giving him the seals of the kingdom, and constituting him the same as Lord Chancellor among us.

Verse 6. To see the destruction of my kindred?] She had now informed the king that she was cousin to Mordecai, and consequently a Jewess; and though her own life and that of Mordecai were no longer in danger, Haman being dead, yet the decree that had gone forth was in full force against the Jews; and, if not repealed, their destruction would be inevitable.

8 Write ye also for the Jews, as it liketh you, in the king's name, and seal it with the king's ring: for the writing which is written in the king's name, and sealed with the king's ring, may no man reverse.

9 ^b Then were the king's scribes called at that time in the third month, that is, the month Sivan, on the three and twentieth day thereof, and it was written according to all that Mordecai commanded unto the Jews, and to the lieutenants, and the deputies and rulers of the provinces which are from India unto Ethiopia, an hundred twenty and seven provinces, unto every province according to the writing thereof, and unto every people after their language, and to the Jews according to their writing, and according to their language.

10 ^c And he wrote in the king Ahasuerus' name, and sealed it with the king's ring, and sent letters by posts on horseback, and riders on mules, camels, and young dromedaries;

11 Wherein the king granted the Jews which were in every city to gather themselves together, and to stand for their life, to destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish, all the power of the people and province that would assault them, both little ones and women, and to take the spoil of them for a prey,

Verse 8. May no man reverse.] Whatever had passed the royal signet could never be revoked: no succeeding edict could destroy or repeal a preceding one: but one of a similar nature to the Jews against the Persians, as that to the Persians was against the Jews, might be enacted; and thus the Jews be enabled legitimately to defend themselves; and, consequently, placed on an equal footing with their enemies.

Verse 9. The month Sivan.] This answers to a part of our May and June.

Verse 10. On mules, camels, and young dromedaries.] What these beasts were is difficult to say. The word rechesh, which we translate mules, signifies a swift chariot horse.

The strange word achashteranim is probably a Persian, word, but perhaps incoherently corrupted. The most likely derivation is that of Bochart, from the Persian akhash, huge, large, rough, and aster, a mule; large mules.

The words benei harammachim, the sons of mares, which we translate dromedaries, are supposed to signify mules, produced between the he ass and the mare, to distinguish them from those produced between the stallion and the ass.

Verse 11. To destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish.] The same words as in Haman's decree: therefore the Jews had as much authority to slay their enemies, as their enemies had to slay them.

Little ones and women.] This was the ordinary custom, to destroy the whole family of those convicted of great crimes; and whether this was right or wrong, it was the custom of the people, and according to the laws. Besides, as this edict was to give the Jews the same power against their enemies as they had by the former decree against them, and the 13 ^b The copy of the writing for a commandment to be given in every province was published unto all people, and that the Jews should be ready against that day to avenge themselves on their enemies.

14 So the posts that rode upon mules and camels went out, being hastened and pressed on by the king's commandment. And the decree was given at Shushan the palace.

15 And Mordecai went out from the presence of the king in royal apparel of blue and white, and with a great crown of gold, and with a garment of fine linen and purple: and the city of Shushan rejoiced and was glad.

16 The Jews had light, and gladness, and joy, and honour.

17 And in every province, and in every city, whithersoever the king's commandment and his decree came, the Jews had joy and gladness, a feast and a good day. And many of the people of the land became Jews; for the fear of the Jews fell upon them.

Verse 14. The decree was given at Shushan.] The contrary effect which it was to produce considered, this decree was in every respect like the former. See ch. iii.

Fine linen and purple.] The buts here mentioned is most probably the same with the byssus of the ancients; supposed to be the beautiful tuft or beard, growing out of the side of the pinna longa, a very large species of mussel, found on the coasts of the Mediterranean Sea.

Shushan—was glad.] Haman was too proud to be popular; few lamented his fall.

Verse 17. Many—became Jews; for—fear.] These were a species of converts not likely to bring much honour to true religion: but the sacred historian states the simple fact. They did profess Judaism for fear of the Jews, whether they continued steady in that faith or not.

It is only the gospel which will not admit of coercion for the propagation and establishment of its doctrines. It is a spiritual system, and can be propagated only by spiritual influence. As it proclaims holiness of heart and life, which nothing but the Spirit of God can produce, so it is the Spirit of God alone that can persuade the understanding and change the heart. If the kingdom of Christ were of this world, then would his servants fight. But it is not from hence.

CHAPTER IX.

On the thirteenth of the month Adar the Jews destroy their enemies, and the governors of the provinces assist them, 1-5. They slay five hundred in Shushan, and kill the ten sons of Haman, but take no spoil, 6-10. The king is informed of the slaughter in Shushan, 11. He desires to know what Esther requests further; who begs that the Jews may be permitted to act on the following day as they had done on the preceding, and that Haman's sons may be hanged upon the gallows; which is granted, and they slay three hundred more in Shushan, and in the other provinces seventy-five thousand, 12-16. A recapitulation of what was done; and of the appointment of the feast of Purim to be observed through all their generations every year, 17-28. Esther writes to confirm this appointment, 29-32.

NOW ^ain the twelfth month, that ^{is}, the month Adar, on the thirteenth day of the same, ^bwhen the king's commandment and his decree drew near to be put in execution, in the day that the enemies of the Jews hoped to have power over them, (though it was turned to the contrary, that the Jews ^chad rule over them that hated them;)

2 The Jews ^dgathered themselves together in their cities throughout all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, to lay hand on such as ^esought their hurt: and no man could withstand them; for ^fthe fear of them fell upon all people.

3 And all the rulers of the provinces, and the lieutenants, and the deputies, and ^gofficers of the king, helped the Jews; because the fear of Mordecai fell upon them.

4 For Mordecai ^{was} great in the king's house, and his fame went out throughout all the provinces: for this man Mordecai ^hwaxed greater and greater.

5 Thus the Jews smote all their enemies with the stroke of the sword, and slaughter, and destruction, and did ⁱwhat they would unto those that hated them.

6 And in Shushan the palace the Jews slew and destroyed five hundred men.

7 And Parshandatha, and Dalphon, and Aspatha,

8 And Poratha, and Adalia, and Aridatha,

9 And Parmashta, and Arisai, and Aridai, and Vajezatha,

10 ^jThe ten sons of Haman the son of Hammedatha, the enemy of the Jews, slew they; ^kbut on the spoil laid they not their hand.

11 On that day the number of those that were slain in Shushan the palace ^lwas brought before the king.

12 And the king said unto Esther the queen, The Jews have slain and destroyed five hundred men in Shushan the palace, and the ten sons of Haman; what have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? now ^mwhat ^{is} thy petition? and it shall be granted thee: or what ⁿis thy request further? and it shall be done.

13 Then said Esther, If it please the king, let it

Verse 1. Now in the twelfth month] What a number of providences, and none of them apparently of an extraordinary nature, concurred to preserve a people so signally, and to all human appearance so inevitably, doomed to destruction! None are ever too low for God to lift up, or too high for God to cast down.

Verse 3. And all the rulers of the provinces] Mordecai being raised to the highest confidence of the king, and to have authority over the whole realm, these officers assisted the Jews, no doubt, with troops under their command, to overthrow those who availed themselves of the former decree to molest the Jews. For it does not appear that the Jews slew any persons who did not rise up to destroy them. See ver. 5.

Verse 6. And in Shushan] It is strange that in this city, where the king's mind must have been so well known, there should be found five hundred persons to rise up in hostility against those whom they knew the king befriended!

Verse 10. The ten sons of Haman] Their names are given above. And it is remarked here, and in ver. 16, where the account is given of the number slain in the province, that the Jews laid no hands on the spoil.

Verse 13. Let Haman's ten sons be hanged] They had been slain the preceding day, and now she requests that they be granted to the Jews which are in Shushan to do to morrow also ^aaccording unto this day's decree, and ^blet Haman's ten sons be hanged upon the gallows.

14 And the king commanded it so to be done: and the decree was given at Shushan; and they hanged Haman's ten sons.

15 For the Jews that were in Shushan ^cgathered themselves together on the fourteenth day also of the month Adar, and slew three hundred men at Shushan; ^dbut on the prey they laid not their hand.

16 But the other Jews that were in the king's provinces ^egathered themselves together and stood for their lives, and had rest from their enemies, and slew of their foes seventy and five thousand, ^fbut they laid not their hands on the prey.

17 On the thirteenth day of the month Adar; and on the fourteenth day ^gof the same rested they, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

18 But the Jews that were at Shushan assembled together ^hon the thirteenth day thereof, and on the fourteenth thereof; and on the fifteenth day of the same they rested, and made it a day of feasting and gladness.

19 Therefore the Jews of the villages, that dwelt in the unwall'd towns, made the fourteenth day of the month Adar ⁱa day of gladness and feasting, ^jand a good day, and of ^ksending portions one to another.

20 And Mordecai wrote these things, and sent letters unto all the Jews that were in all the provinces of the king Ahasuerus, both nigh and far, 21 To establish ^lthis among them, that they should keep ^mthe fourteenth day of the month Adar, and the fifteenth day of the same, yearly.

22 As the days wherein the Jews rested from their enemies, and the month which was ⁿturned unto them from sorrow to joy, and mourning into a good day: that they should make them days of feasting and joy, and of ^osending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor.

23 And the Jews undertook to do as they had begun, and as Mordecai had written unto them; may be exposed on posts or gibbets, as a terror to those who sought the destruction of the Jews.

Verse 15. And slew three hundred men] Esther had probably been informed by Mordecai, that there were still many enemies of the Jews who sought their destruction, who had escaped the preceding day; and, therefore, begs that this second day be added to the former permission. This being accordingly granted, they found three hundred more, in all eight hundred. And thus Susa was purged of all their enemies.

Verse 18. The Jews—gathered—on the thirteenth—and on the fourteenth] These two days they were employed in slaying their enemies; and they rested on the fifteenth.

Verse 19. The Jews of the villages] They joined that to the preceding day, and made it a day of festivity, and of sending portions to each other; that is, the rich sent portions of the sacrifices slain on this occasion to the poor, that they also might be enabled to make the day a day of festivity; that as the sorrow was general, so also might the joy be.

Verse 20. Mordecai wrote these things] It has been supposed that thus far that part of the book of Esther, which was written by Mordecai extends: what follows, to the end, was probably added either by Ezra, or the men of the Great Synagogue; though what is said here may refer only to 24 Because Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, * had devised against the Jews to destroy them, and had cast Pur, that is, the lot, to ^b consume them, and to destroy them;

25 But ^c when ^d Esther came before the king, he commanded by letters that his wicked device, which he devised against the Jews, should ^e return upon his own head, and that he and his sons should be hanged on the gallows.

26 Wherefore they called these days Purim after the name of ^f Pur. Therefore for all the words of ^g this letter, and of ^h that which they had seen concerning this matter, and which had come unto them,

27 The Jews ordained, and took upon them, and upon their seed, and upon all such as ⁱ joined themselves unto them, so as it should not ^j fail, that they would keep these two days according to their writing and according to their appointed time every year;

the letters sent by Mordecai to the Jews of the provinces.

Verse 23. The Jews undertook to do as they had begun] They had already kept the fifteenth day, and some of them in the country the fourteenth also, as a day of rejoicing: Mordecai wrote to them to bind themselves and their successors, and all their proselytes, to celebrate this as an annual feast throughout all their generations; and this they undertook to do. And it has been observed among them, in all places of their dispersion, from that day to the present time, without any interruption.

Verse 26. They called these days Purim] That is from pari, the lot; because, as we have seen, Haman cast lots to find what month and what day of the month, would be most favourable for the accomplishment of his bloody designs against the Jews.

28 And that these days should be remembered and kept throughout every generation, every family, every province, and every city; and that these days of Purim should not ^k fail from among the Jews nor the memorial of them ^l perish from their seed.

29 Then Esther the queen, ^m the daughter of Abihail, and Mordecai the Jew, wrote with ⁿ authority, to confirm this ^o second letter of Purim.

30 And he sent the letters unto all the Jews, to ^p the hundred twenty and seven provinces of the kingdom of Ahasuerus, with words of peace and truth.

Verse 29. Esther—wrote with all authority] Esther and Mordecai had the king's license so to do; and their own authority was great and extensive.

Verse 31. As they had decreed for themselves and for their seed] There is no mention of their receiving the approbation of any high-priest, nor of any authority beyond that of Mordecai and Esther; the king could not join in such a business, as he had nothing to do with the Jewish religion, that not being the religion of the country.

Verse 32. The decree of Esther confirmed these matters] It was received by the Jews universally with all respect, and they bound themselves to abide by it.

Seeking the wealth of his people] Studying to promote the Jewish interest to the utmost of his power.

Speaking peace to all his seed] Endeavouring to settle their prosperity upon such a basis, that it might be for ever permanent. Here the Hebrew text ends; but in the ancient Vulgate, and in the Greek ten verses are added to this chapter, and via whole chapters besides, so that the number of chapters in Esther amounts to sixteen.

This is the last of the historical books of the Old Testament, for from this time to the birth of Christ they had no inspired writers; and the interval of their history must be sought among the Apocryphal writers and other historians who have written on Jewish affairs.

PREFACE TO THE BOOK

OF

J O B.

THIS is the most singular book in the whole of the Sacred Code: though written by the same inspiration, and in reference to the same end, the salvation of men, it is so different from every other book of the Bible, that it seems to possess nothing in common with them; for even the language, in its construction, is dissimilar from that in the Law, the Prophets, and the historical books. But on all hands it is accounted a work that contains "the purest morality, the sublimest philosophy, the simplest ritual, and the most majestic creed." Except the two first chapters and the ten last verses, which are merely prose, all the rest of the book is poetic; and is every where reducible to the hemistich form, in which all the other poetic books of the Bible are written: it is therefore properly called a POEM; and it is evidently a poem of the highest order; dealing in subjects the most grand and sublime; using imagery the most chaste and appropriate; described by language the most happy and energetic; conveying instruction, both in divine and human things, the most ennobling and useful; abounding in precepts the most pure and exalted, which are enforced by arguments the most strong and conclusive, and illustrated by examples the most natural and striking.

Notwithstanding all this, there is not a book in Scripture on the subject of which more difficulties have been started. On this subject the great questions which have been agitated refer, principally, 1. To the person of Job. 2. To his existence. 3. To the time in which he lived. 4. To his country. 5. To his stock or kindred. 6. To his religion. 7. To the author of the book. 8. To its truth. 9. To its authenticity; and 10. To the time and occasion on which it was written.

• With respect to the first and second, several writers of eminent note have denied the personality of Job; according to them, no such person ever existed; he is a mere ideal being, created by the genius of the poet; clothed with such attributes, and placed in such circumstances, as gave the poet scope and materials for his work.

Thirdly, as to the time in which those place him who receive this as a true history, there is great variety. According to some, he flourished in the patriarchal age; some make him contemporary with Moses; that he was in the captivity in Egypt, and that he lived at the time of the exodus. Some place him in the time of the Israelitish judges; others, in the days of David, or Solomon; and others, in the time of the Babylonish captivity, having been teacher of a school at Tiberias in Palestine, and, with the rest of his countrymen, carried away into Babylon; and that he lived under Ahasuerus and Esther. Fourthly, as to his country: some make him an Arab; others, an Egyptian; others, a Syrian; some, an Israelite; and some, an Idumean. Fifthly, as to his origin: some derive him from Nachor, and others from Esau, and make him the fifth in descent from Abraham. Sixthly, as to his religion: some suppose it to have been Sabæism; others, that it was patriarchal; and others, that he was bred up in the Jewish faith. Seventhly, as to the author of the work, learned men are greatly divided: some suppose the author to have been Elihu; others, Job; others, Job and his friends; others, Moses; some, Solomon; others, Isaiah; and others Ezra, or some unknown Jew, posterior to the captivity.

PREFACE TO THE BOOK OF JOB.

Eighthly, as to the book: some maintain that it is a history of fact, given by one best qualified to record it; and others, that it is an instructive fiction—facts, persons, dialogues and all, being suppositional; given, however, by the inspiration of God, in a sort of parabolic form, like those employed in the Gospel; and similar to that of the rich man and Lazarus. Ninthly, as to its authenticity: some have asserted it to be a mere human production, of no divine authority; others have clearly shown that the book itself was ever received by the Jewish church and people as authentic, genuine, and divinely inspired; and incorporated, with the highest propriety, among the most instructive, sublime, and excellent portions of divine revelation. Tenthly, as to the occasion on which it was written: some will have it to be written for the consolation of the Hebrews in their peregrinations through the wilderness; and others, for the comfort and encouragement of the Israelites in the Babylonish captivity: these state that Job represents Nehemiah, and that his three professed friends, but real enemies, Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar, represent Sanballat the Horonite, Tobiah the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian! and that the whole book should be understood and interpreted on this ground; and that, with a little allowance for poetic colouring, all its parts perfectly harmonize, thus understood; showing, in a word, that into whatsoever troubles or persecutions God may permit his people to be brought, yet he will sustain them in the fire, bring them safely through it, and discomfit all their enemies: and that whatsoever is true on this great scale, is true also on that which is more contracted; as he will equally support, defend, and finally render conqueror, every individual that trusts in him.

I shall not trouble my readers with the arguments which have been used by learned men. I believe Job to have been a real person, and his history to be a statement of facts.

As the preface to this book states him to have lived in the land of Uz, or Uts, I believe this place to have been "situated in Arabia Petraea, on the south-western coast of the lake Asphaltites, in a line between Egypt and Philistia, surrounded with Kedar, Teman, and Midian; all of which were districts of Arabia Petraea; situated in Idumea, the land of Edom or Esau; and comprising so large a part of it, that Idumea and Ausitis, or the land of Uz, and the land of Edom, were convertible terms and equally employed to import the same region: thus, Lam. iv. 21: 'Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in the land of Uz.'"

The man and his country being thus ascertained, the time in which he lived is the point next to be considered. That he lived after the giving of the Law appears to me very probable, from what I consider frequent references to the Mosaic institutions occurring in the book, and which I shall notice in their respective places.

As to the author of the book: the opinions that appear the most probable are the following: 1. Moses was the author of this book, as many portions of it harmonize with his acknowledged writings. 2. Solomon is the most likely author, as many of the sentiments contained in it are precisely the same with those in the Proverbs; and they are delivered often in nearly the same words. 3. The book was written by some Jew, in or soon after the time of the Babylonish captivity.

1. That Moses was the author has been the opinion of most learned men; among whom Mr. Mason Good contends, "that the writer of this poem must have been minutely and elaborately acquainted with Astronomy, Natural History, and the general science of his age; that he must have been a Hebrew by birth and native language, and an Arabian by long residence and local study; and, finally, that he must have flourished and composed the work before the exodus." And he thinks that every one of these features is consummated in Moses, and that he composed the poem during some part of his forty years' residence in Midian.

2. That this book was the work of Solomon was the opinion of some early Christian writers, among whom was Gregory Nazianzen; and of several moderns, among whom were Spanheim and Hardouin. The latter has gone so far as to place the death of Job in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of David; and he supposes that Solomon wrote the work in question, about the second or third year of his reign. That Solomon, from his vast learning and wisdom, was capable of such a work, none can deny. His knowledge in astronomy, natural history, politics, theology, languages, and the general science of his age, must have given him at least equal qualifications to those possessed by Moses. And if he was the author of the Book of Canticles, which most men believe, he had certainly a poetic mind equal, if not superior, to all the writers who had existed previously to his time. The Book of Proverbs and that of Ecclesiastes are almost universally attributed to him: now, in the Book of Job, there are a multitude of sentiments, sentences, terms, and modes of speech, which are almost peculiar to Solomon, as will appear from the whole books. I think the argument much stronger in favour of Solomon as its author than of Moses: yet I think it possible that it was the work of neither, but rather of some learned Idumean, well acquainted with the Jewish religion and writers; and I still hold that the work was originally composed in Arabic, and afterwards translated into Hebrew by a person who either had not the same command of the Hebrew as he had of the Arabic, or else purposely affected the Arabic idiom, retaining many Arabic words and Arabisms; either because he could not find appropriate expressions in the Hebrew, or because he wished to adorn and enrich the one language by borrowing copiously from the other.

PREFACE TO THE BOOK OF JOB.

As the person, family, time, and descendants of Job are so very uncertain, I shall not trouble my readers with the many genealogical tables which have been constructed by chronologists and commentators.

THE BOOK

OF

J O B.

CHAPTER I.

Character of Job, 1. His family, 2. His substance, 3. Care of his family, 4, 5. Satan accuses him to God as a selfish person, who served God only for the hope of secular rewards, 6-11. Satan is permitted to strip him of all his children and property, 12-19. Job's remarkable resignation and patience, 20-22.

THERE was a man ^ain the land of Uz, whose name was ^bJob, and that man was ^cperfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil.

2 And there were born unto him seven sons and three daughters.

3 His ^dsubstance also was seven thousand sheep, and three thousand camels, and five hundred yoke of oxen, and five hundred she-asses, and a very great ^ehousehold; so that this man was the greatest of all the ^fmen of the east.

^a Gen. xxii. 20, 21.—^b Ezek. xiv. 14. James v. 11.—^c Ch. ii. 3.—^d Or, cattle.—^e Or, husbandry.—^f Heb. sons of the east.—^g Gen. viii.

Verse 1. In the land of Uz] This country was situated in Idumea, or the land of Edom, in Arabia Petraea, of which it comprised a very large district.

Whose name was Job] The original is Aiyob; the name signifies sorrowful, or he that weeps. He is supposed to have been called Jobab. [This is not likely, nor is the name to be taken as symbolical.]

Perfect and upright] COMPLETE as to his mind and heart, and STRAIGHT or CORRECT as to his moral deportment.

Feared God] Had him in continual reverence as the fountain of justice, truth, and goodness.

Eschewed evil] We have the word eschew from the old French eschever, which signifies to avoid. All within was holy, all without was righteous; and his whole life was employed in departing from evil, and drawing nigh to God.

Verse 3. His substance also was seven thousand sheep] A thousand, says the Chaldee, for each of his sons. Three thousand camels: a thousand for each of his daughters. Five hundred yoke of oxen for himself. And five hundred she-asses for his wife.

A very great household] The word refers chiefly to husbandry, including all manner of labour in the field, with cattle, and every description of servants.

The greatest of all the men of the east] He was more eminent than any other person in that region in wisdom, wealth, and piety. He was the chief emir of that district.

Verse 4. Feasted in their houses, every one his day] It is likely that a birth-day festival is here intended. When the birth-day of one arrived, he invited his brothers and sisters to feast with him; and each observed the same custom. [Or probably the seven sons dined with each other in turn the week round.]

Verse 5. When the days of their feasting were gone about] At the conclusion the pious father appears to have gathered them all together, that the whole family might hold a feast to the Lord, offering burnt-offerings in order to make an

4 And his sons went and feasted in their houses, every one his day, and sent and called for their three sisters to eat and to drink with them.

5 And it was so, when the days of their feasting were gone about, that Job sent and sanctified them, and rose up early in the morning, ^aand offered burnt-offerings according to the number of them all: for Job said, It may be that my sons have sinned, and ^bcursed God in their hearts. Thus did Job ^ccontinually.

6 Now ^dthere was a day ^ewhen the sons of God atonement for sins of all kinds, whether presumptuous or committed through ignorance. This we may consider as a general custom among the godly in those ancient times.

And cursed God in their hearts] In this book, according to most interpreters, the verb barach signifies both to bless and to curse; and the noun Elohim signifies the true God, false gods, and great or mighty. The reason why Job offered the burnt-offerings appears to have been this: in a country where idolatry flourished, he thought it possible that his children might, in their festivity, have given way to idolatrous thoughts, or done something prescribed by idolatrous rites; and therefore the words may be rendered thus: It may be that my children have blessed the gods in their hearts. Others think that the word should be understood as implying farewell, bidding adieu—lest my children have bidden adieu to God, that is, renounced him, and cast off his fear. To me this is very unlikely.

Verse 6. There was a day when the sons of God] All the Versions, and indeed all the critics, are puzzled with the phrase sons of God; literally, sons of the God, or, sons of the gods. Expositions are endless. That of Mr. Peters appears to me to be at once the most simple and the most judicious: "The Scripture speaks of God after the manner of men; as kings, therefore, transact their most important affairs in a solemn council or assembly so God is pleased to represent himself as having his council likewise; and as passing the decrees of his providence in assembly of his holy angels."

And Satan came also] This word also is emphatic in the original, hassatan, the Satan, or the Adversary. St. Peter, 1 Epist. chap. v., ver. 8, plainly refers to this place; and fully proves that hassatan, which he literally translates the ADVERSARY, is no other than the DEVIL, or chief of bad demons, which he adds to others by way of explanation. There are many demons, mentioned in Scripture; but the word Satan or devil is never found in the originals of the Old and New Testaments in the plural number. Hence we reasonably infer, that all evil spirits are came to present themselves before the LORD, and ^a Satan came also ^b among them.

7 And the LORD said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the LORD, and said, From ^c going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

8 And the LORD said unto Satan, ^d Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?

9 Then Satan answered the Lord, and said, Doth Job fear God for nought?

10 Hast not thou made an hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? thou hast blessed the work of his hands, and his ^e substance is increased in the land.

11 ^f But put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, ^g and he will curse thee to thy face.

12 And the LORD said unto Satan, Behold, all that he hath is in thy ^h power, only upon himself put not forth thine hand. So Satan went forth from the presence of the LORD.

13 And there was a day when his sons and his daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house:

14 And there came a messenger unto Job, and said, The oxen were plowing, and the asses feeding beside them:

15 And the Sabeans fell upon them, and took them away; yea, they have slain the servants with the edge of the sword; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

16 While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, ⁱ The fire of God is fallen from heaven, and hath burned up the sheep, and the servants, and consumed them: and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

17 While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, The Chaldeans made out three bands, and ^j fell upon the camels, and have carried them away, yea, and slain the servants with the edge of the sword; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

18 While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, Thy sons and thy daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house; under the government of ONE chief, the DEVIL, who is more powerful and more wicked than the rest.

It is now fashionable to deny the existence of this evil spirit; and this is one of what St. John (Rev. ii. 24.) calls the depths of Satan; as he well knows that they who deny his being will not be afraid of his power and influence; will not watch against his wiles and devices; will not pray to God for deliverance from the evil one; and, consequently, will become an easy prey to the enemy of their souls. By leading men to disbelieve and deny his existence, he throws them off their guard; and is then their complete master, and they are led captive by him at his will. Those who deny the existence of the devil are they who pray little or none at all; and are, apparently, as careless about the existence of God as they are about the being of a devil. Those who do not pray, especially in private (and I never met with a devil-denier who did), have no religion of any kind, whatsoever pretensions they may choose to make.

Verse 7. From going to and fro in the earth] The translation of the Septuagint is curious: "Having gone round the earth, and walked over all that is under heaven, I am come hither."

St. Peter, as has been already stated, ver. 6, refers to this. I rather think, that arets here signifies rather that land, than the habitable globe. The words are exceedingly emphatic; and the latter verb hithallech being in the hithpaal conjugation shows how earnest and determined the devil is in his work: he sets himself to walk; he is busily employed in it; he is seeking the destruction of men; and while they sleep, he wakes—while they are careless, he is alert. The spirit of this saying is often expressed by the simple inhabitants of the country: when they perceive a man plotting mischief, and frequent in transgression, they say, The devil is busy with him.

Verse 8. Hast thou considered my servant Job] Literally, Hast thou placed thy heart on my servant Job? Hast thou viewed his conduct with attention, whilst thou wert roaming about, seeking whom thou mightest devour? viz., the careless, prayerless, and profligate in general.

Verse 9. Doth Job fear God for nought?] Thou hast made it his interest to be exemplary in his conduct: for this assertion Satan gives his reasons in what immediately follows.

Verse 10. Hast not thou made an hedge about him] Thou hast fortified him with spikes and appears. Thou hast defended him as by an unapproachable hedge. He is an object of thy peculiar care; and is not exposed to the common trials of life.

Verse 11. But put forth thine hand] Shoot the dart of poverty and affliction against him.

And he will curse thee to thy face.] "If he will not bless thee to thy appearance." He will bless thee only in proportion to the temporal good thou bestowest upon him; to the providential and gracious appearances or displays of thy power in his behalf. If thou wilt be gracious, he will be pious. The exact maxim of a great statesman, Sir Robert Walpole: Every man has his price. No doubt Sir R. met with many such; and the devil many more. But still God has multitudes that will neither sell their souls, their consciences, nor their country, for any price; who, though God should slay them, will nevertheless trust in him; and be honest men, howsoever tempted by the devil and his vicegerents. So did Job; so have done thousands; so will all do, in whose hearts Christ dwells by faith.

Verse 12. All that he hath is in thy power] Satan cannot deprive a man even of an ass, a sheep, or a pig, but by especial permission of God. His power and malice are ever bounded, and under control.

Verse 13. There was a day] It no doubt refers to one of those birth-day festivals mentioned before.

Verse 14. The asses feeding beside them] Athonoth, the she-asses, which appear to have been more domesticated, as of more worth and use than the others, both for their milk and their work.

Verse 15. And the Sabeans fell] The Vulgate alone understands this of a people. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic understand it as implying a marauding party. The Sabeans mentioned here are supposed to have been the same with those who were the descendants of Abraham by Keturah, whose son Jokshan begat Sheba. Hordes of predatory banditti were frequent in those countries, and continue so to the present day. They made sudden incursions, and carried off men, women, children, cattle, and goods of every description; and immediately retired to the desert, whither it was in vain to pursue them.

Verse 16. The fire of God is fallen] Though the fire of God may mean a great, a tremendous fire, yet it is most natural to suppose lightning is meant: for as thunder was considered to be the voice of God, so lightning was the fire of God. And as the prince of the power of the air was permitted now to arm himself with this dreadful artillery of heaven, he might easily direct the zig-zag lightning to every part of the fields where the sheep were feeding, and so destroy the whole in a moment.

Verse 17. The Chaldeans made out three bands] The Chaldeans inhabited each side of the Euphrates, near to Babylon, which was their capital. They were also mixed with the wandering Arabs, and lived like them on rapine. They divided themselves into three bands, in order the more speedily and effectually to encompass, collect, and drive off the three thousand camels: probably they mounted the camels and rode off.

Verse 19. A great wind from the wilderness] Here was another proof of the influence of the prince of the power of the air. He seems to have directed four different currents, 19 And, behold, there came a great wind * from the wilderness, and smote the four corners of the house, and it fell upon the young men, and they are dead; and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

20 Then Job arose, ^b and rent his * mantle, and shaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, and worshipped, which, blowing against the four corners or sides of the house, crushed it together, and involved all within in one common ruin.

* Heb. from aside, &c.—^b Gen. xxxvii. 29. Ezra ix. 3.—
Or, robe.—^c Ps. xlix. 17.

Verse 20. Rent his mantle] Tearing the garments, shaving or pulling off the hair of the head, throwing dust or ashes on the head, and sitting on the ground, were acts by which immoderate grief was expressed. Job must have felt the bitterness of anguish when he was told that, in addition to the loss of all his property he was deprived of his ten children by a violent death. Had he not felt this most poignantly, he would have been unworthy of the name of man.

Worshipped] Prostrated himself; lay all along upon the ground, with his face in the dust.

• Verse 21. Naked came I out of my mother's womb] I had no earthly possessions when I came into the world; I cannot have less going out of it. What I have the Lord gave: as it was his free gift, he has a right to resume it when he pleases; and I owe him gratitude for the time he has permitted me to enjoy this gift.

Naked shall I return thither] Whither? Not to his mother's womb surely; nor does he call the earth his mother in this place. In the first clause of the verse he speaks without a metaphor, and in the latter he speaks in reference to the ground on which he was about to fall.

Blessed be the name of the Lord.] Seeing I have lost my temporal goods, and all my domestic comforts, may God alone be all my portion! The Vulgate, Septuagint, and Coverdale add, The Lord hath done as he pleased.

Verse 22. In all this Job sinned not] He did not give way to any action, passion, or expression, offensive to his Maker. He did not charge God with acting unkindly towards him, but felt as perfectly satisfied with privation which the hand of God had occasioned, as he was with the affluence and health which that hand had bestowed. This is the transaction that gave the strong and vivid colouring to the character of Job; in this and in this alone, he was a pattern of patience and resignation. In this Satan was utterly disappointed; he found a man who loved his God more than his earthly portion. This was a rare case, even in the experience of the devil. He had seen multitudes who bartered their God for money, and their hopes of blessedness in the world to come for secular possessions in the present. He had been so often successful in this kind of temptation, that he made no doubt he should succeed again. He saw many who, when riches increased, set their hearts on them, and forgot God. He saw many also who, when deprived of earthly comforts, blasphemed their Maker. He therefore inferred that Job, in similar circumstances, would act like the others; he was disappointed. Reader, has he by riches or poverty, succeeded with thee? Art thou pious when affluent, and patient and contented when in poverty?

21 And said, ^a Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither: the LORD gave, and the LORD hath taken away; blessed be the name of the LORD.

That Job lived after the giving of the law, seems to me clear from many references to the rites and ceremonies instituted by Moses. Compare chap. i. 5 with Lev. ix. 7, 22. See also Exod. xxix. 42; Numb. xxviii. 3, 6, 10, 15, 24, 31; Ezra iii. 5; Neh. x. 33; and Ezek. xli. 13-15.

Job appears to have thought that his children might have sinned through ignorance, or sinned privately; and it was consequently necessary to make the due sacrifices to God in order to prevent his wrath and their punishment; he therefore offered the burnt-offering, which was prescribed by the law in cases of sins committed through ignorance.

The worship of the sun, moon, and stars, as being the most prevalent and most seductive idolatry, was very expressly forbidden by the law, Deut. iv. 19. Job purges himself from this species of idolatry, chap. xxxi. ver. 26-28.

He clears himself also from adultery in reference to the law enacted against that sin, Job. xxxi. 9-12. See the law against this sin, Exod. xx. 14, 17; Lev. xx. 10; Deut. xxii. 22. And for the judge's office in such cases, see Deut. xvii. 9-12; 1 Sam. ii. 25.

The passage occurring ch. xxvi. 11, 12, will, I think, be considered an evident allusion to the passage of the Red Sea, and the destruction of the proud Egyptian king. These, with several others that might be adduced, are presumptive proofs that the writer of this book lived after the giving and establishment of the law, if not much later, let Job himself live when he might.

CHAPTER II.

The sons of God once more present themselves before him; and Satan comes also, accusing Job as a person whose steadfastness would soon be shaken, provided his body were to be subjected to sore afflictions, 1-5. He receives permission to afflict Job, and smites him with sore boils, 6-8. His wife reviles him, 9. His pious reproof, 10. His three friends come to visit and mourn with him.

A GAIN * there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the LORD, and Satan came also among them to present himself before the LORD.

2 And the LORD said unto Satan, From whence comest thou? And ^b Satan answered the LORD,

* Ch. i. 6.—^b Ch. i. 7.

Verse 1. Again there was a day] How long this was after the former trial, we know not: probably, one whole year. This appearance of the sons of God and Satan is to be understood metaphorically—there could be nothing real in it—but it is intended to instruct us in the doctrine of the existence of good and evil spirits; that Satan pursues man with implacable enmity, and that he can do no man hurt, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

either in his person or property, but by the especial permission of God; and that God gives him permission only when he purposes to overrule it for the greater manifestation of his own glory, and the greater good of his tempted followers.

7 So went Satan forth from the presence of the LORD, and smote Job with sore boils ^a from the sole of his foot unto his crown.

called for so heavy a judgment. This seems to be the meaning of this saying. The original word signifies to swallow down or devour; and this word St. Peter had no doubt in view: i. Pet. v. 8.

Verse 4. Skin for skin] That is, A man will part with all he has in the world to save his life; and he will part with all by piecemeal, till he has nothing left on earth, and even be thankful, provided his life be spared. Thou hast only destroyed his property; thou hast left him his life and his health. Thou hast not touched his flesh nor his bone; therefore he is patient and resigned. Man, through the love of life, will go much farther: he will give up one member to save the rest; yea, limb after limb, as long as there is hope that, by such sacrifices, life may be spared or prolonged. This is the meaning given to the passage by the Targum; and I believe, the true one: hence, ver. 6, the Lord says, Save his life.

Verse 5. He will curse thee to thy face.] Literally, If he will not bless thee to thy face or appearances. His piety to thee will be always regulated by thy bounty to him.

Verse 6. But save his life] His body thou shalt have permission to afflict, but against his life thou shalt have no power; therefore take care of his life. How astonishing is the economy of salvation! It is so managed, by the unlimited power and skill of God, that the grand adversary of souls becomes himself, by the order of God, the preserver of that which the evil of his nature incessantly prompts him to destroy!

Verse 7. Sore boils] What this diabolical disorder was, interpreters are not agreed. Some think it was the leprosy; and this is the reason why he dwelt by himself, and had his habitation in an unclean place, without the city, or in the open air: and the reason why his friends beheld him afar off, ver. 12, was because they knew that the disorder was infectious.

His scraping himself with a potsherd indicates a disease accompanied with intolerable itching, one of the characteristics of the small pox. Query, Was it not this disorder? In the elephantiasis and leprosy there is, properly speaking, no boil or detached inflammation, or swelling, but one uniform disordered state of the whole surface; in the small pox it is different: each pock or pustule is a separate inflammation, tending to supuration; the itching is extreme; and the hands are often obliged to be confined to prevent the patient from literally tearing his own flesh.

Verse 9. Then said his wife] We translate barech Elohim vanuith, Curse God, and die. The verb barach is supposed to include in it the ideas of cursing and blessing; but it is not clear that it has the former meaning in any part of the sacred writings, though we sometimes translate it so.

Here it seems to be a strong irony. Job was exceedingly afflicted, and apparently dying through sore disease; yet his soul was filled with gratitude to God. His wife, destitute of the salvation which her husband possessed, gave him this ironical reproof. Bless God, and die—What! bless him for his goodness, while he is destroying all that thou hast! bless him for his support, while he is casting thee down and destroying thee! Bless on, and die. [Commentators are very much divided in their exposition of this passage.

The majority favour the interpretation in the text.] Verse 10. Thou speakest as one of the foolish] Thou speakest like an infidel: like one who has no knowledge of God, of religion, or of a future state.

Shall we receive good?] This we have received in great abundance for many years:—

And shall we not receive evil?] Shall we murmur when He afflicts us for a day, who has given us health for so many years? Shall we blaspheme his name for momentary privations, who has given us such a long succession of enjoyments? His blessings are his own: he never gave them to us; they were only lent. We have had the long, the free, the unmerited use of them; and shall we be offended at the Owner, when he comes to reclaim his own property? This would be foolish, ungrateful, and wicked. So may every one reason who is suffering from adversity. But who, besides Job, reasons thus? Man is naturally discontented and ungrateful.

In all this did not Job sin with his lips.] The Chaldee adds, But in his heart he thought words. He had surmises of heart, though he let nothing escape from his lips.

Verse 11. Job's three friends] The first was Eliphaz the Temanite; or, as the Septuagint has it, Eliphaz the king of the Thaimanites. Eliphaz was one of the sons of Esau; and Teman, of Eliphaz, Gen. xxxvi. 10, 11. Teman was a city of Edom, Jer. xlix. 7-20; Ezek. xxv. 13, Amos i. 11, 12.

Bildad the Shuhite] Or, as the Septuagint, Baldad, tyrant of the Suchites. Shuah was the son of Abraham, by Keturah; and his posterity is reckoned among the easterns.

Zophar the Naamathite] Or, according to the Septuagint, Sophar king of the Minaites. He most probably came from that Naamah, which was bordering upon the Edomites to the south, and fell by lot to the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 21-41. That some of those eastern people were highly cultivated, we have at least indirect proof in the case of the Temanites, Jer. xlix. 7. They are celebrated also in Baruch iii. 22, 23. The sayings of Job's three friends are proofs that their reputation for wisdom stood on very solid foundation.

Verse 12. They rent every one his mantle] Significant actions which were in use among all nations.

Verse 13. They sat down with him upon the ground seven days] The seven days mentioned here were the period appointed for mourning. The Israelites mourned for Jacob seven days, Gen. l. 10. And the man of Jabesh mourned so long for the death of Saul, 1 Sam. xxxi. 13. 1 Chron. x. 12. And Ezekiel sat on the ground with the captives at Chebar, and mourned with and for them seven days, Ezek. iii. 15. The wise son of Sirach says, "Seven days do men mourn for him that is dead;" Eccles. xiii. 12. So calamitous was the state of Job, that they considered him as a dead man; and went through the prescribed period of mourning for him. [Or rather, with Delitzsch, they were silent seven days through the force of the impression produced on them, and the fear of annoying the sufferer.]

They saw that his grief was very great.] This is the reason why they did not speak to him: they believed him to be suffering for heavy crimes; and, seeing him suffer so much, they were not willing to add to his distresses by invectives or reproach. Job himself first broke silence.

CHAPTER III.

Job curses the day of his birth, and regrets that he ever saw the light, 1-12. Describes the empire of death, and its inhabitants, 13-19. Regrets that he is appointed to live in the midst of sorrows, for the calamities which he feared had overtaken him, 20-26.

AFTER this opened Job his mouth, and cursed his day.

2 And Job ^a spake, and said,

3 ^b Let the day perish wherein I was born, and the night in which it was said, There is a man child conceived.

4 Let that day be darkness; let not God regard it from above, neither let the light shine upon it.

Verse 1. After this opened Job his mouth] Here the poetic part of the book begins; for most certainly there is nothing in the preceding chapters either in the form or spirit of Hebrew poetry. It is easy indeed to break the sentences into hemistichs; but this does not constitute them poetry: for, although Hebrew poetry is in general in hemistichs, yet it does not follow that the division of narrative into hemistichs must necessarily constitute it poetry.

In many cases the Asiatic poets introduce their compositions with prose narrative; this appears to be the plan followed by the author of this book.

Cursed his day.] That is, the day of his birth. His execrations have something in them awfully solemn, tremendously deep, and strikingly sublime. But let us not excuse all the things which he said in his haste, and in the bitterness of his soul, because of his former well established character of patience. He bore all his privations with becoming resignation to the divine will and providence; but now, feeling himself the subject of continual sufferings, being in heaviness through manifold temptation, and probably having the light of God withdrawn from his mind, as his consolations most undoubtedly were, he regrets that ever he was born; and in a very high strain of impassioned poetry curses his day.

Verse 3. There is a man child conceived.] The word harah signifies to conceive; yet here, it seems, it should be taken in the sense of being born, as it is perfectly unlikely that the night of conception should be either distinctly known or published. [But the original should be translated "the night which said."] The literal sense of harah is therefore to be maintained.]

Verse 4. Let that day be darkness.] The meaning is exactly the same with our expression, "Let it be blotted out of the calendar." However distinguished it may have been, as the birthday of a man once celebrated for his possessions, liberality, and piety, let it no longer be thus noted; as he who was thus celebrated is now the sport of adversity, the most impoverished, most afflicted, and most wretched of human beings.

Let not God regard it from above.] "Let Him not require it"—let Him not consider it essential to the completion of the days of the year; and therefore he adds, neither let the light shine upon it. If it must be a part of duration, let it not be distinguished by the light of the sun.

Verse 5. Let darkness and the shadow of death stain it.] "Pollute or avenge it," from gaal, to vindicate, avenge, &c.; hence goel, the nearest of kin, whose right it was to redeem an inheritance, and avenge the death of his relative by slaying the murderer. Let this day be pursued, overtaken, and destroyed. Let natural darkness, the total privation of the solar light, rendered still more intense by death's shadow projected over it, seize on it and destroy it.

Let a cloud dwell upon it.] Let the thickest clouds have there their dwelling-place—let that be the period of time on which they shall constantly rest, and never be dispersed.

Let the blackness of the day terrify it.] Leaving out the semicolon, we had better translate the whole clause thus: "Let the thickest cloud have its dwelling-place upon it, and let the bitterness of a day fill it with terror."

Verse 6. As for that night, let darkness seize upon it.] Some understand the word ophel as signifying a dark storm; hence the Vulgate, tenebrosus turbo, "a dark whirlwind." Every thing is here personified; day, night, darkness, shadow of death, cloud, &c.; and the same idea of the total extinction of that portion of time, or its being rendered ominous and portentous, is pursued through all these verses, from the third to the ninth, inclusive. The imagery is diversified, the expressions varied, but the idea is the same.

Verse 7. Lo, let that night be solitary.] The word galmud, which we translate solitary, is properly Arabic. From the original we may gather Job's meaning: "Let that night be grievous, oppressive, as destitute of good as a bare rock is of verdure." [The true sense is, "let that night be barren."] Let no joyful voice come therein.] Let there be no choirs of singers; no pleasant music heard; no dancing or merriment.

The word renanah signifies any brisk movement, such as the vibration of the rays of light, or the brisk modulation of the voice in a cheerful ditty.

Verse 8. Let them curse it that curse the day.] Some think the custom of sorcerers, who had execrations for peoples, places, things, days, &c., is here referred to; such as Balaam, Elymas, and many others were: but I cannot think that a man who knew the Divine Being and his sole government of the world so well as Job did, would make such an allusion, who must have known that such persons and their pretensions were impostors and execrable vanities. I shall give as near a translation as I can of the words, and subjoin a short paraphrase: "Let them curse it who detest the day; them who are ready to raise up the leviathan." That is, let them curse my birthday who hate daylight, such as adulterers, murderers, thieves, and banditti, for whose practices the night is more convenient; and let them curse it who, being like me, weary of life, are desperate enough to provoke the leviathan, the crocodile, to tear them to pieces. By leviathan some understand the greatest and most imminent dangers; and others, the devil, whom the enchanters are desperate enough to attempt to raise by their incantations. [The evident reference to sorcerers, who according to popular superstition could raise the dragon or leviathan, warrants the supposition that Job refers to magicians in the former expression].

Verse 9. Let the stars of the twilight thereof.] The stars of the twilight may here refer to the planets Venus, Jupiter, Mars, and Mercury, as well as to the brighter fixed stars.

Let it look for light.] Here the prosopopoeia or personification is still carried on. The darkness is represented as waiting for the lustre of the evening star, but is disappointed; and then for the Aurora or dawn, but equally in vain. Thus his execration comprehends every thing that might irradiate or enliven it.

Verse 11. Why died I not from the womb?] These three not give up the ghost when I came out of the belly?

12 Why did the knees prevent me? or why the breasts that I should suck?

13 For now should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept: then had I been at rest,

14 With kings and counsellors of the earth, which built desolate places for themselves;

15 Or with princes that had gold, who filled their houses with silver.

16 Or as an hidden untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light.

17 There the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary be at rest.

18 There the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the oppressor.

things appear to me to be clearly intended here:—1. Dying in the womb, or never coming to maturity, as in the case of an abortion. 2. Being still-born, without ever being able to breathe. 3. Or, if born alive, dying within a short time after. And to these states, he seems to refer in the following verses.

Verse 12. Why did the knees prevent me? Why was I dandled on the knees? Why was I nourished by the breasts? In either of the above cases I had neither been received into a mother's lap, nor hung upon a mother's breasts.

Verse 13. For now should I have lain still] In that case I had been insensible; quiet—without these overwhelming agitations; slept—unconscious of evil; been at rest—been out of the reach of calamity and sorrow.

Verse 14. With kings and counsellors of the earth] I believe this translation to be perfectly correct. These mighty agitators of the world are at rest in their graves, after the lives of commotion which they have led among men: most of whom indeed have been the troublers of the peace of the globe.

Which built desolate places] Who erect mansoleums, funeral monuments, sepulchral pyramids, &c., to keep their names from perishing, while their bodies are turned to corruption.

Verse 15. Or with princes that had gold] Chief or mighty men, lords of the soil, or fortunate adventurers in merchandise, who got gold in abundance, filled their houses with silver, left all behind, and had nothing reserved for themselves but the empty places which they had made for their last dwelling, and where their dust now sleeps, devoid of care, painful journeys, and anxious expectations.

Verse 16. Or as an hidden untimely birth] An early miscarriage, which was scarcely perceptible by the parent herself; and in this case he had not been—he had never had the distinguishable form of a human being, whether male or female.

As infants] Little ones; those further advanced in maturity, but miscarried long before the time of birth.

Verse 17. There the wicked cease] In the grave the oppressors of men cease from irritating, harassing, and distressing their fellow-creatures and dependants.

And there the weary be at rest.] Those who were worn out with the cruelties and tyrannies of the above. The troublers and the troubled, the restless and the submissive, the toils of the great and the labours of the slave, are here put in opposition.

Verse 18. The prisoners rest together] Those who were slaves, feeling all the troubles, and scarcely tasting any of the pleasures, of life, are quiet in the grave together; and the voice of the oppressor, the hard unrelenting task-master, which was more terrible than death, is heard no more. They are free from his exactions, and his mouth is silent in the dust.

Verse 19. The small and great are there] All sorts and conditions of men are equally blended in the grave, and ultimately reduced to one common dust; and between the bond and free there is no difference. The graves is "The appointed place of rendezvous, where all These travellers meet."

Equality is absolute among the sons of men in their 19 The small and great are there; and the servant is free from his master.

20 Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul;

21 Which long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures;

22 Which rejoice exceedingly, and are glad, when they can find the grave?

23 Why is light given to a man whose way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in?

24 For my sighing cometh before I eat, and my roarings are poured out like the waters.

25 For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me, and that which I was afraid of is come unto me.

entrance into and exit from the world: all the intermediate state is disparity. All men begin and end life alike; and there is no difference between the king and the cottager. A contemplation of this should equally humble the great and the small.

Verse 20. Wherefore is light given] Why is life granted to him who is incapable of enjoying it, or of performing its functions?

Verse 21. Which long for death] They look to it as the end of all their miseries; and long more for a separation from life, than those who love gold do for a rich mine.

Verse 22. Which rejoice exceedingly] Literally They rejoice with joy, and exult when they find the grave.

Verse 23. To a man whose way is hid] Who knows not what is before him in either world, but is full of fears and tremblings concerning both.

God hath hedged in?] Leaving him no way to escape; and not permitting him to see one step before him.

There is an exact parallel to this passage in Lam. iii. 7, 9.

Verse 24. For my sighing cometh] Some think that this refers to the ulcerated state of Job's body, mouth, hands, &c. He longed for food, but was not able to lift it to his mouth with his hands, nor masticate it when brought thither. But perhaps it is most natural to suppose that he means his sighing took away all his appetite, and served him in place of meat.

My roarings are poured out] My lamentations are like the noise of the murmuring stream, or the dashings of the over-swollen torrent.

Verse 25. For the thing which I greatly feared] While I was in prosperity I thought adversity might come, and I had a dread of it. I feared the loss of my family and my property; and both have occurred. I was not lifted up: I knew that what I possessed I had from Divine Providence, and that he who gave might take away. I am not stripped of my all as a punishment for my self-confidence.

Verse 26. I was not in safety] If this verse be read interrogatively, it will give a good and easy sense: Was I not in safety? Had I not rest? Was I not in comfort? Yet trouble came.

In this chapter Job's conflict begins. Now, and not before, Satan appears to have access to his mind. When he deprived him of his property, and, what was still dearer, of his sons and his daughters, the hope of his family, he bore all with the most exemplary patience, and the deepest resignation to the divine will. When his adversary was permitted to touch his body, and afflict it in the most grievous and distressing manner, rendered still more intolerable by his being previously deprived of all the comforts and necessities of life; still he held fast his integrity; no complaint, no murmur was heard. From the Lord's hand he received his temporal good; and from that hand he received his temporal evil, the privation of that good. Satan was, therefore, baffled in all his attempts; Job continued to be a perfect and upright man, fearing God and avoiding evil. This was Job's triumph, or rather the triumph of divine grace; and Satan's defeat and confusion.

It is indeed very seldom that God permits Satan to waste the substance or afflict the body of any man; but at all times this malevolent spirit may have access to the mind of any man, and inject doubts, fears and diffidence, perplexities, and even unbelief. And here is the spiritual conflict. In such cases Satan is often permitted to diffuse darkness into the understanding, and envelope the heavens with clouds. Hence are engendered false views of God and his providence, of men, of the spiritual world, and particularly of the person's own state and circumstances. Strong temptations to things which the soul contemplates with abhorrence are injected; and which are followed by immediate accusations, as if the injections were the offspring of the heart itself; and the trouble and dismay produced are represented as the sense of guilt, from a consciousness of having, in heart committed these evils. Behold here the permission of God, and behold also his sovereign control: all this time the grand tempter is not permitted to touch the heart, the seat of the affections, nor offer even the slightest violence to the will. The soul is cast down, but not destroyed; perplexed, but not in despair. It is on all sides harassed; without are fightings, within are fears; but the will is inflexible on the side of God and truth, and the heart, with all its train of affections and passions, follows it. The man does not wickedly depart from his God; the outworks are violently assailed, but not taken; the city is still safe, and the citadel impregnable. Heaviness may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. Jesus is soon seen walking on the waters. He speaks peace to the winds and the sea: immediately there is a calm. Satan is bruised down under the feet of the sufferer; the clouds are dispersed, the heavens re-appear, and the soul, to its surprise, finds that the storm, instead of hindering, has driven it nearer to the haven whither it would be.

The reader who closely examines the subject will find that this was the case of Job. Satan sifted him as wheat, but his faith failed not.

CHAPTER IV.

Eliphaz answers; and accuses Job of impatience, and of dependance in the time of adversity, 1-6; asserts that no innocent man ever perished, and that the wicked are afflicted for their sins, 7-11; relates a vision that he had 12-16, and what was said to him on the occasion, 17-21.

THEN Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said,

2 If we assay ^a to commune with thee, wilt thou be grieved? but ^b who can withhold himself from speaking?

3 Behold, thou hast instructed many, and thou ^c hast strengthened the weak hands.

4 Thy words have uphelden him that was falling, and thou ^d hast strengthened ^e the feeble knees.

5 But now it is come upon thee, and thou faintest: it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled.

6 Is not this ^f thy fear, ^g thy confidence, thy hope, and the uprightness of thy ways?

Verse 1. Then Eliphaz the Temanite answered] Having now sufficiently contemplated his afflicted state, and heard his bitter complaint, he loses the feeling of the friend in the haughtiness of the ensor, endeavouring to strip him of his only consolation,—the testimony of his conscience, that in simplicity, and godly sincerity, not in fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, he had his conversation among men,—by insinuating that if his ways had been upright, he would not have been abandoned to such distress and affliction; and if his heart possessed that righteousness of which he boasted, he would not have been so suddenly cast down by adversity.

Verse 2. If we assay to commune with thee] Should I and my friends endeavour to reason with thee ever so mildly, because we shall have many things to say by way of reprehension, thou wilt be grieved and faint; and this we may reasonably infer from the manner in which thou bearest thy present afflictions. Yet it is our duty to rise up on the part of God, though thereby we shall grieve him who is our friend.

Verse 3. Thou hast instructed many] Thou hast seen many in affliction and distress, and thou hast given them such advice as was suitable to their state, and effectual to their relief.

Verse 4. But now it is come upon thee] Now it is thy turn to suffer, and give an example of the efficacy of thy own principles; but instead of this, behold, thou faintest. Either, therefore, thou didst pretend to what thou hadst not; or thou art not making a proper use of the principles which ^h ⁱ ^j ^k ^l ^m ⁿ ^o ^p ^q ^r ^s ^t ^u ^v ^w ^x ^y ^z ^{aa} ^{ab} ^{ac} ^{ad} ^{ae} ^{af} ^{ag} ^{ah} ^{ai} ^{aj} ^{ak} ^{al} ^{am} ^{an} ^{ao} ^{ap} ^{aq} ^{ar} ^{as} ^{at} ^{au} ^{av} ^{aw} ^{ax} ^{ay} ^{az} ^{ba} ^{bb} ^{bc} ^{bd} ^{be} ^{bf} ^{bg} ^{bh} ^{bi} ^{bj} ^{bk} ^{bl} ^{bm} ^{bn} ^{bo} ^{bp} ^{bq} ^{br} ^{bs} ^{bt} ^{bu} ^{bv} ^{bw} ^{bx} ^{by} ^{bz} ^{ca} ^{cb} ^{cc} ^{cd} ^{ce} ^{cf} ^{cg} ^{ch} ^{ci} ^{cj} ^{ck} ^{cl} ^{cm} ^{cn} ^{co} ^{cp} ^{cq} ^{cr} ^{cs} ^{ct} ^{cu} ^{cv} ^{cw} ^{cx} ^{cy} ^{cz} ^{da} ^{db} ^{dc} ^{dd} ^{de} ^{df} ^{dg} ^{dh} ^{di} ^{dj} ^{dk} ^{dl} ^{dm} ^{dn} ^{do} ^{dp} ^{dq} ^{dr} ^{ds} ^{dt} ^{du} ^{dv} ^{dw} ^{dx} ^{dy} ^{dz} ^{ea} ^{eb} ^{ec} ^{ed} ^{ee} ^{ef} ^{eg} ^{eh} ^{ei} ^{ej} ^{ek} ^{el} ^{em} ^{en} ^{eo} ^{ep} ^{eq} ^{er} ^{es} ^{et} ^{eu} ^{ev} ^{ew} ^{ex} ^{ey} ^{ez} ^{fa} ^{fb} ^{fc} ^{fd} ^{fe} ^{ff} ^{fg} ^{fh} ^{fi} ^{fj} ^{fk} ^{fl} ^{fm} ^{fn} ^{fo} ^{fp} ^{fq} ^{fr} ^{fs} ^{ft} ^{fu} ^{fv} ^{fw} ^{fx} ^{fy} ^{fz} ^{ga} ^{gb} ^{gc} ^{gd} ^{ge} ^{gf} ^{gg} ^{gh} ^{gi} ^{gj} ^{gk} ^{gl} ^{gm} ^{gn} ^{go} ^{gp} ^{gq} ^{gr} ^{gs} ^{gt} ^{gu} ^{gv} ^{gw} ^{gx} ^{gy} ^{gz} ^{ha} ^{hb} ^{hc} ^{hd} ^{he} ^{hf} ^{hg} ^{hh} ^{hi} ^{hj} ^{hk} ^{hl} ^{hm} ^{hn} ^{ho} ^{hp} ^{hq} ^{hr} ^{hs} ^{ht} ^{hu} ^{hv} ^{hw} ^{hx} ^{hy} ^{hz} ^{ia} ^{ib} ^{ic} ^{id} ^{ie} ^{if} ^{ig} ^{ih} ⁱⁱ ^{ij} ^{ik} ^{il} ^{im} ⁱⁿ ^{io} ^{ip} ^{iq} ^{ir} ^{is} ^{it} ^{iu} ^{iv} ^{iw} ^{ix} ^{iy} ^{iz} ^{ja} ^{jb} ^{jc} ^{jd} ^{je} ^{jf} ^{jj} ^{jk} ^{jl} ^{jm} ^{jn} ^{jo} ^{jp} ^{jq} ^{jr} ^{js} ^{jt} ^{ju} ^{kv} ^{kw} ^{kx} ^{ky} ^{kz} ^{la} ^{lb} ^{lc} ^{ld} ^{le} ^{lf} ^{lg} ^{lh} ^{li} ^{lj} ^{lk} ^{ll} ^{lm} ^{ln} ^{lo} ^{lp} ^{lq} ^{lr} ^{ls} ^{lt} ^{lu} ^{lv} ^{lw} ^{lx} ^{ly} ^{lz} ^{ma} ^{mb} ^{mc} ^{md} ^{me} ^{mf} ^{mg} ^{mh} ^{mi} ^{mj} ^{mk} ^{ml} ^{mm} ^{mn} ^{mo} ^{mp} ^{mq} ^{mr} ^{ms} ^{mt} ^{mu} ^{mv} ^{mw} ^{mx} ^{my} ^{mz} ^{na} ^{nb} ^{nc} nd ^{ne} ^{nf} ^{ng} ^{nh} ⁿⁱ ^{nj} ^{nk} ^{nl} ^{nm} ⁿⁿ ^{no} ^{np} ^{nq} ^{nr} ^{ns} ^{nt} ^{nu} ^{nv} ^{nw} ^{nx} ^{ny} ^{nz} ^{oa} ^{ob} ^{oc} ^{od} ^{oe} ^{of} ^{og} ^{oh} ^{oi} ^{oj} ^{ok} ^{ol} ^{om} ^{on} ^{oo} ^{op} ^{oq} ^{or} ^{os} ^{ot} ^{ou} ^{ov} ^{ow} ^{ox} ^{oy} ^{oz} ^{pa} ^{pb} ^{pc} ^{pd} ^{pe} ^{pf} ^{pg} ^{ph} ^{pi} ^{pj} ^{pk} ^{pl} ^{pm} ^{pn} ^{po} ^{pp} ^{pq} ^{pr} ^{ps} ^{pt} ^{pu} ^{pv} ^{pw} ^{px} ^{py} ^{pz} ^{qa} ^{qb} ^{qc} ^{qd} ^{qe} ^{qf} ^{qg} ^{qh} ^{qi} ^{qj} ^{qk} ^{ql} ^{qm} ^{qn} ^{qo} ^{qp} ^{qq} ^{qr} ^{qs} ^{qt} ^{qu} ^{qv} ^{qw} ^{qx} ^{qy} ^{qz} ^{ra} ^{rb} ^{rc} rd ^{re} ^{rf} ^{rg} ^{rh} ^{ri} ^{rj} ^{rk} ^{rl} ^{rm} ^{rn} ^{ro} ^{rp} ^{rq} ^{rr} ^{rs} ^{rt} ^{ru} ^{rv} ^{rw} ^{rx} ^{ry} ^{rz} ^{sa} ^{sb} ^{sc} ^{sd} ^{se} ^{sf} ^{sg} ^{sh} ^{si} ^{sj} ^{sk} ^{sl} sm ^{sn} ^{so} ^{sp} ^{sq} ^{sr} ^{ss} st ^{su} ^{sv} ^{sw} ^{sx} ^{sy} ^{sz} ^{ta} ^{tb} ^{tc} ^{td} ^{te} ^{tf} ^{tg} th ^{ti} ^{tj} ^{tk} ^{tl} tm ^{tn} ^{to} ^{tp} ^{tq} ^{tr} ^{ts} ^{tt} ^{tu} ^{tv} ^{tw} ^{tx} ^{ty} ^{tz} ^{ua} ^{ub} ^{uc} ^{ud} ^{ue} ^{uf} ^{ug} ^{uh} ^{ui} ^{uj} ^{uk} ^{ul} ^{um} ^{un} ^{uo} ^{up} ^{uq} ^{ur} ^{us} ^{ut} ^{uu} ^{uv} ^{uw} ^{ux} ^{uy} ^{uz} ^{va} ^{vb} ^{vc} ^{vd} ^{ve} ^{vf} ^{vg} ^{vh} ^{vi} ^{vj} ^{vk} ^{vl} ^{vm} ^{vn} ^{vo} ^{vp} ^{vq} ^{vr} ^{vs} ^{vt} ^{vu} ^{vv} ^{vw} ^{vx} ^{vy} ^{vz} ^{wa} ^{wb} ^{wc} ^{wd} ^{we} ^{wf} ^{wg} ^{wh} ^{wi} ^{wj} ^{wk} ^{wl} ^{wm} ^{wn} ^{wo} ^{wp} ^{wq} ^{wr} ^{ws} ^{wt} ^{wu} ^{wv} ^{ww} ^{wx} ^{wy} ^{wz} ^{xa} ^{xb} ^{xc} ^{xd} ^{xe} ^{xf} ^{xg} ^{xh} ^{xi} ^{xj} ^{xk} ^{xl} ^{xm} ^{xn} ^{xo} ^{xp} ^{xq} ^{xr} ^{xs} ^{xt} ^{xu} ^{xv} ^{xw} ^{xx} ^{xy} ^{xz} ^{ya} ^{yb} ^{yc} ^{yd} ^{ye} ^{yf} ^{yg} ^{yh} ^{yi} ^{yj} ^{yk} ^{yl} ^{ym} ^{yn} ^{yo} ^{yp} ^{yq} ^{yr} ^{ys} ^{yt} ^{yu} ^{yv} ^{yw} ^{yx} ^{yy} ^{yz} ^{za} ^{zb} ^{zc} ^{zd} ^{ze} ^{zf} ^{zg} ^{zh} ^{zi} ^{zj} ^{zk} ^{zl} ^{zm} ^{zn} ^{zo} ^{zp} ^{zq} ^{zr} ^{zs} ^{zt} ^{zu} ^{zv} ^{zw} ^{zx} ^{zy} ^{zz}

Verse 6. Is not this thy fear] If these be genuine, surely there is no cause for this complaint, vexation, and despair. [Delitzsch translates this: "Is not thy piety thy confidence, thy hope? And uprightness of thy ways?"]

7 Remember, I pray thee, ^h who ever perished, being innocent? or where were the righteous cut off?

8 Even as I have seen, ⁱ they that plow iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same.

9 By the blast of God they perish, and ^j by the breath of his nostrils are they consumed.

10 The roaring of the lion, and the voice of the fierce lion, and ^k the teeth of the young lions, are broken.

11 ^l The old lion perisheth for lack of prey, and the stout lion's whelps are scattered abroad.

Hos. x. 13. Gal. vi. 7. 8.—ⁿ That is, by his anger: as Isa. xxx. 33. See Exod. xv. 8. Ch. i. 19. xv. 30. Isa. xi. 4. 2 Thes. ii. 8.—^o Ps. lviii. 6.—^p Ps. xxxiv. 10.—^q Heb. by stealth.

Verse 7. Remember, I pray thee] Didst thou ever hear of a case in which God abandoned a righteous man to destruction? Wert thou a righteous man, and innocent of all hidden crimes, would God abandon thee thus to the malice of Satan?

Verse 8. They that plow iniquity] A proverbial form of speech drawn from nature. Whatever seed a man sows in the ground, he reaps the same kind; for every seed produces its like.

Verse 9. By the blast of God they perish] As the noxious and parching east wind blasts and destroys vegetation, so the wicked perish under the indignation of the Almighty.

Verse 10. The roaring of the lion] The design of Eliphaz in using these figures is to show that even those who are possessed of the greatest authority and power—the kings, rulers, and princes, of the earth—when they become wicked and oppressive to their subjects, are cast down, broken to pieces, and destroyed, by the incensed justice of the Lord; and their whelps—their children and intended successors, scattered without possessions over the face of the earth.

Verse 11. The old lion perisheth] In this and the preceding verse the word lion occurs five times; and in the original the words are all different.

All however may point out some quality of the lion; and this was probably the cause why they were originally given: but it is likely that, in process of time, they served only to designate the beast, without any particular reference to any of his properties. We have one and the same idea when we say the lion, the king of beasts, the monarch of the forest, the most noble of quadrupeds, &c.

Verse 12. Now a thing was secretly brought to me] To give himself the more authority, he professes to have received a vision from God, by which he was taught the secret of the divine dispensations in providence; and a confirmation of the doctrine which he was now stating to Job; and which

15 Then a spirit passed before my face; the hair of my flesh stood up:

16 It stood still, but I could not discern the form thereof: an image was before mine eyes, there was silence, and I heard a voice, saying, he applied in a different way to what was designed in the divine communication.

17 'Shall mortal man be more just than God?

Mine ear received a little thereof.] Mr. Good translates, "And mine ear received a whisper along with it." The apparition was the general subject; and the words related ver. 17, &c., were the whispers which he heard when the apparition stood still.

Verse 18. From the visions of the night] "It is in vain to search through ancient or modern poetry for a description that has any pretensions to rival that upon which we are now entering. Midnight—solitude—the deep sleep of all around—the dreadful chill and horripilation or erection of the hair over the whole body—the shivering, not of the muscles only, but of the bones themselves—the gliding approach of the spectre—the abruptness of his pause—his undefined and indescribable form—are all powerful and original characters, which have never been given with equal effect by any other writer."—Good.

Be more just than God?] Or, shall poor, weak, sinful man be justified before God?

Shall a man? Gaher, shall even the strong and mighty man, be pure before his Maker? No. He must be justified by the mercy of God, through an atonement sacrifice; he must be sanctified by the Holy Spirit of God, and thus made a partaker of the divine nature. Then he is justified before God, and pure in the sight of his Maker: and this is a work which God himself alone can do; so the work is not man's work, but God's. It is false to infer, from the words of this spectre that no man can be justified, and that no man can be purified, when God both justifies the ungodly, and sanctifies the unholy. The meaning can be no more than this: no man can make an atonement for his own sins, nor purify his own heart. Hence all boasting is for ever excluded. Of this Eliphaz believed Job to be guilty, as he appeared to talk of his righteousness and purity, as if they had been his own acquisition.

Verse 18. Behold, he put no trust in his servants] This verse is generally understood to refer to the fall of angels; for these were some of those heavenly beings who kept not their first estate: they did not persevere to the end of their probation, and therefore fell into condemnation, and are reserved in chains of darkness unto the judgment of the great day; Jude 6. It is said he put no trust in them—he knew that nothing could be absolutely immutable but himself; and that no intelligent beings could subsist in a state of purity, unless continually dependant on himself, and deriving constant supplies of grace, power, and light from him who gave them their being.

And his angels he charged with folly] Not chargeth, as many quote the passage. He charged those with folly who shall a man be more pure than his Maker?

18 Behold, he ^a put no trust in his servants: ^b and his angels he charged with folly:

19 ^c How much less in them that dwell in ^d houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust, which are crushed before the moth?

20 ^e They are ^f destroyed from morning to evening: they perish for ever without any regarding it.

21 ^g Doth not their excellency which is in them go away? ^h they die, even without wisdom.

—^a Ch. xv. 16.—^b 2 Cor. iv. 7. v. 1.—^c Ps. xc. 5, 6.—^d Heb. beaten in pieces.—^e Ps. xxxix. 11. xlix. 14.—^f Ch. xxxvii. 12.

kept not their first estate. It does not appear that he is charging the others in the same way, who continue steadfast. [Modern criticism does not refer this passage to the fallen angels.]

Verse 19. How much less] Rather, with the VULGATE, How much more? If angels may be unstable, how can man arrogate stability to himself who dwells in an earthly tabernacle, and who must shortly return to dust?

Crushed before the moth?] The slightest accident often-times destroys. This is the general idea in the text; and it is useless to swift for meanings.

Verse 20. They are destroyed from morning to evening] In almost every moment of time some human being comes into the world, and some one departs from it.

They perish for ever] Yobedi; they pass by; they go out of sight; they moulder with the dust, and are soon forgotten. Who regards the past generation now among the dead?

Verse 21. Doth not their excellency—go away?] Personal beauty, corporeal strength, powerful eloquence, and various mental endowments, pass away, or are plucked up by the roots; they are no more seen or heard among men, and their memory soon perisheth.

They die, even without wisdom.] If wisdom means the pursuit of the best end, by the most legitimate and appropriate means, the great mass of mankind appear to perish without it. But, if we consider the subject more closely, we shall find that all men die in a state of comparative ignorance. With all our boasted science and arts, how little do we know! Do we know any thing to perfection that belongs either to the material or spiritual world? Do we understand even what matter or what spirit is? Almost all the phenomena of nature have been explained on the principle of gravitation or attraction; but in what does this consist? We can traverse every part of the huge and trackless ocean by means of the compass; but who understands the nature of magnetism on which all this depends? We eat and drink in order to maintain life; but what is nutrition, and how is it effected? This has never been explained. Life depends on respiration for its continuance; but by what kind of action is it, that in a moment the lungs separate the oxygen, which is friendly to life, from the nitrogen, which would destroy it; suddenly absorbing the one, and expelling the other? Life is continued by the circulation of the blood; but by what power and law does it circulate? Have the systole and diastole of the heart, on which this circulation depends, ever been satisfactorily explained? Most certainly not. To be safe, in reference to eternity, we must know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent; whom to know is life eternal. This knowledge, obtained and retained, will entitle us to all the rest in the eternal world.

CHAPTER V.

Eliphaz proceeds to shew that the wicked are always punished by the justice of God, though they may appear to flourish for a time, 1-8; extols the providence of God, by which the counsels of the wicked are brought to nought, and the poor fed and supported, 9-16; shows the blessedness of being corrected by God, in the excellent fruits that result from it; and exhorts Job to patience and submission, with the promise of all secular prosperity, and a happy death in a mature and comfortable old age, 17-27.

CALL now, if there be any that will answer thee; and to which of the saints wilt thou turn?

2 For wrath killeth the foolish man, and envy slayeth the silly one.

3 I have seen the foolish taking root: but suddenly I cursed his habitation.

4 His children are far from safety, and they are crushed in the gate, neither is there any to deliver them.

5 Whose harvest the hungry eateth up, and taketh it even out of the thorns, and the robber swalloweth up their substance.

6 Although affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground;

7 Yet man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.

8 I would seek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cause:

* Or, look.—^b Or, indignation.—^c Ps. xxxvii. 35, 36. Jer. xii. 2, 3. Ps. cxix. 155. cxvii. 5.—^d Ps. cix. 12.—^e Ch. xviii. 9.—^f Or, infidelity.—^g Gen. iii. 17, 18, 19. 1 Cor. x. 18.—^h Or, labour.—ⁱ Heb. the sons of the burning coal lift up to fly.—^j Ch. ix. 1. xxxvii. 5. Ps. xl. 5. lxxii. 18. cxlv. 3. Rom. xi. 33.—^k Heb. and there is no search.—^l Heb. till there be no number.—^m Ch. xxviii. 26. Ps. lxx.

Verse 1. Call now, if there be any] This appears to be a strong irony. From whom among those whose foundations are in the dust, and who are crushed before the moth, canst thou expect succour?

To which of the saints wilt thou turn?] To whom among the holy ones, or among those who are equally dependant on Divine support with thyself, and can do no good but as influenced and directed by God, canst thou turn for help? Neither angel nor saint can help any man unless sent especially from God; and all prayers to them must be foolish and absurd, not to say impious. Can the channel afford me water, if the fountain cease to emit it?

Verse 2. For wrath killeth the foolish man] The words of Eliphaz may be considered as a sort of maxim, which the wisdom and experience of ages had served to establish; viz., The wrath of God is manifested only against the wicked and impious; and if thou wert not such God would not thus contend with thee.

Verse 3. I have seen the foolish taking root] I have seen wicked men for a time in prosperity: but I well knew that they must soon be blasted. I even ventured to pronounce their doom; for I knew that, in the order of God's providence, that was inevitable.

Verse 4. His children are far from safety] His posterity shall not continue in prosperity. All gotten, all spent; whatever is got by wrong must have God's curse on it.

They are crushed in the gate] In eastern countries the court-house, or tribunal of justice, was at the GATE of the city; here the magistrates attended, and hither the plaintiff and defendant came for justice.

Verse 5. Whose harvest] Their possessions, because acquired by unjust means, shall not be under the protection of God's providence; he shall abandon them to be pillaged and destroyed by the wandering half-starved hordes of the desert banditti. They shall carry it suddenly off; even the thorns—grain, weeds, thistles, and all, shall they carry off in their rapacious hurry.

The robber swalloweth up] Or, more properly, the thirsty, tsammim, as is plain from their swallowing up or gulping down; opposed to the hungry or half-starved, mentioned in the preceding clause.

Verse 6. Affliction cometh not forth of the dust] If there were not an adequate cause, thou couldst not be so grievously afflicted.

Spring out of the ground] It is not from mere natural causes that affliction and trouble come; God's justice inflicts them upon offending man.

Verse 7. Yet man is born unto trouble] Leamal to labour. He must toil and be careful; and if in the course of his labour he meet with trials and difficulties, he should rise superior to them, and not sink as thou dost.

As the sparks fly upward.] And the sons of the coal lift up their flight, or dart upwards. And who are the sons of the coal? Are they not bold, intrepid, ardent, fearless men, who rise superior to all their trials; combat what are termed chance and occurrence; succumb under no difficulties; and rise superior to time, tide, fate, and fortune? I prefer this to all the various meanings of the place with which I have met. [The ordinary interpretation is better. Truth is as much a part of the divine order, as that in the order of nature sparks should ascend.]

Verse 8. I would seek unto God] Were I in your place, instead of wasting my time, and irritating my soul with useless complaints, I would apply to my Maker, and, if conscious of my innocence, would confidently commit my cause to him.

Verse 9. Which doeth great things] No work, however complicated, is too deep for his counsel to plan; none, however stupendous, is too great for his power to execute. He who is upright is always safe in referring his cause to God, and trusting in him.

Verse 10. Sendeth waters upon the fields] The term chutsoth, which we translate fields, and generally signifies streets, may here mean those plantations which are laid out in ridges or plats, in an orderly, regular manner. God does not only send rain upon the earth in a general manner, but, by an especial providence, waters the cultivated ground, so that not one ridge is destitute of its due proportion of fructifying moisture.

Verse 11. To set up on high those that be low] He so distributes his providential blessings without partiality, that the land of the poor man is as well sunned and watered as that of the rich; so that he is thus set upon a level with the lords of the soil.

Verse 12. He disappointeth the devices of the crafty] All these sayings refer to God's particular providence, by which he is ever working for the good, and counterworking the plots of the wicked.

Verse 13. He taketh the wise in their own craftiness] So counterworks them as to cause their feet to be taken in their own snares, and their evil dealings to fall on their own pate.

Verse 14. They meet with darkness in the day-time] God confounds them and their measures; so that they act in noonday as if the sun were extinct, and their eyes put out.

Verse 15. He saveth the poor from the sword, from their mouth] This is rather a harsh construction. To avoid this, some have proposed to render mecheret, which we translate from the sword, the persecuted, but, I am afraid, on very slender authority. Rossi's MSS. read from the sword of their mouth; and with these MSS. the Chaldee, Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic agree. The verse, therefore, may be translated thus:

He saveth from the sword of their mouth; The poor from the hand of the mighty.

Verse 16. So the poor] Dal, he who is made thin, who is wasted, attenuated; hath hope—he sees what God is accustomed to do, and he expects a repetition of gracious dealings in his own behalf; and because God deals thus with those who trust in him, therefore the mouth of impiety is stopped.

Verse 17. Behold, happy is the man] We have had fathers of our flesh, who corrected us for their pleasure or according to their caprices, and we were subject to them; how much more should we be subject to the Father of spirits, and live? for he corrects that we may be partakers of his holiness, in order that we may be rendered fit for his glory. See Heb. xii. 5, James i. 12, and Prov. iii. 12.

Verse 19. He shall deliver thee in six troubles] The numbers six and seven are put here for many; for he saves as well from many as from few. We may also understand the words, He who hath been thy deliverer in past troubles, will not deny his help in those which are to come.

Verse 21. Thou shalt be hid from the scourge of the tongue] Perhaps no evil is more dreadful than the scourge of the tongue: evil-speaking, detraction, back-biting, calumny, slander, tale-bearing, whispering, and scandalizing, are some of the terms which we use when endeavouring to express the baleful influence and effects of that member, which is a world of fire, kindled from the nethermost hell. The Scripture abounds with invectives and execrations against it. See Ps. xxxi. 20, lii. 2-4; Prov. xii. 18, xiv. 8; James iii. 5-8.

Neither shalt thou be afraid] "Thou shouldst have such strong confidence in God, that even in the presence of destruction thou shouldst not fear death," the God of life and power being with thee.

Verse 22. At destruction and famine thou shalt laugh] This most forcibly expresses the strongest security, and confidence in that security.

Verse 23. Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field] Instead of abney, stones, Mr. Good reads beney, sons of produce; but this reading is not supported by any ancient Version, nor, as far as I know, by any MS. yet collated.

Perhaps the reference is to those rocks or strongholds where banditti secured themselves and their prey, or where the emirs or neighbouring chiefs had their ordinary residence. Eliphaz may be understood as saying: Instead, then, of taking advantage of thee, as the Sabceans have done, the circumthe field: and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee.

adjacent chieftains will be confederate with thee; and the very beasts of the field will not be permitted to harm thy flocks. [This interpretation is strained.]

Verse 24. Thou shalt know] The word oholecha, "thy tabernacle," means simply a tent, or moveable dwelling, composed of poles, pins, and cloth or skin, to be pitched any where in a few moments, and struck again with the same ease.

The word navecha, which we properly translate thy habitation, signifies a solid, permanent dwelling-place.

As to techeta, which we translate thou shalt not sin, it comes from chata, to err, to mistake, to miss the mark: hence to sin, transgress God's laws, seeking for happiness in forbidden and unlawful things, and therefore missing the mark, because in them happiness is not to be found: and it is very likely, from the connexion above, that to mistake or err is its meaning in this place.

Verse 25. Thine offspring as the grass] Thou shalt have a numerous and permanent issue.

Verse 26. Thou shalt come to thy grave] Thou shalt not die before thy time; thou shalt depart from life like a full-fed guest; happy in what thou hast known, and in what thou hast enjoyed.

Like as a shock of corn] Thou shalt completely run through the round of the spring, summer, autumn, and winter of life; and thou shalt be buried like a wholesome seed in the earth; from which thou shalt again rise up into an eternal spring!

Verse 27. Lo this, we have searched it] What I have told thee is the sum of our wisdom and experience on these important points. These are established maxims, which universal experience supports. Know—understand, and reduce them to practice for thy good. Thus ends Eliphaz the Temanite, "full of wise saws and ancient instances;" but he miserably perverted them in his application of them to Job's case and character. They contain, however, many wholesome truths, of which the wise in heart may make a very advantageous practical use.

CHAPTER VI.

Job answers, and vindicates himself; and shows that the great affliction which he suffered was the cause of his complaining, by which life was rendered burdensome to him, 1-13. He complains that, whereas he expected consolation from his friends, he had received nothing but the bitterest reproaches, on the assumed ground that he must be a wicked man, else God would not so grievously afflict him, 14-20. He shows them that they knew nothing of his case, and that they had no compassion, 21-23. And then entreats them, if they can, to show him in what he has offended, as he is ready to acknowledge and correct every trespass, 24-30.

BUT Job answered and said,
2 Oh, that my grief were thoroughly weighed, and my calamity ^a laid in the balances together!

3 For now it would be heavier ^b than the sand of the sea: therefore ^c my words are swallowed up.

4 ^d For the arrows of the Almighty are within me, the poison whereof drinketh up my spirit: ^e the terrors of God do set themselves in array against me.

5 Doth the wild ass bray ^f when he hath grass? or loweth the ox over his fodder?

6 Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg?

7 The things that my soul refused to touch are as my sorrowful meat.

8 Oh that I might have my request; and that God would grant me ^g the thing that I long for!

9 Even ^h that it would please God to destroy me; that he would let loose his hand, and cut me off!

10 Then should I yet have comfort; yea, I would harden myself in sorrow; let him not spare; for ⁱ I have not concealed the words of ^j the Holy One.

^a Heb. lifted up.—^b Prov. xxvii. 3.—^c That is, I want words to express my grief. Ps. lxxvii. 4.—^d Ps. xxxviii. 2.—^e Ps. lxxxviii. 15, 16.—^f Heb. at grass.—^g Heb. my expectation.—^h 1 Kings xix. 4.—ⁱ Acts xx. 20.—^j Lev. xix. 2. Isa. lvii. 15. Hos. xi. 9.—^k Heb. brasen.—^l Heb. To him that telleth.—^m Prov. xvii. 17.—ⁿ Ps. xxxviii.

Verse 2. Oh that my grief were thoroughly weighed] Job wished to be dealt with according to justice; as he was willing that his sins, if they could be proved, should be weighed against his sufferings; and if this could not be done, he wished that his sufferings and his complaining might be weighed together; and it would then be seen that, bitter as his complaint had been, it was little when compared with the distress which occasioned it.

Verse 3. Heavier than the sand of the sea] This includes two ideas: their number was too great to be counted; their weight was too great to be estimated.

Verse 4. The arrows of the Almighty] There is an evident reference here to wounds inflicted by poisoned arrows; and to the burning fever occasioned by such wounds, producing such an intense parching thirst as to dry up all the moisture in the system, and terminate in raging mania, from which the patient is relieved only by death. That calamities are represented among the eastern writers as the arrows of the Almighty, we have abundant proofs.

Verse 5. Doth the wild ass] It is the same with the tame ass; only in a wild state it grows to a larger size, is stronger, and more fleet. The meaning of Job appears to be this: You condemn me for complaining; do I complain without a cause? The wild ass will not bray, and the ox will not low, unless in want. If they have plenty of provender, they are silent. Were I at rest, at ease, and happy, I would not complain.

Verse 6. Can that which is unsavoury] Mr. Good renders this verse as follows: Doth insipid food without a mixture of salt, yea, doth the white of the egg give forth pungency? Which he thus illustrates: "I too should be quiet and complain not, if I had nothing provocative or acrimonious; but, alas! the food I am doomed to partake of is the very calamity which is most acute to my soul—that which I most loathe, and which is most grievous or trying to my palate."

Verse 8. Oh that I might have] As Job had no hope that he should ever be redeemed from his present helpless state, he earnestly begs God to shorten it by taking away his life.

Verse 9. Let loose his hand] A metaphor taken from an archer drawing his arrow to the head, and then loosing his hold, that the arrow may fly to the mark.

Verse 10. I would harden myself in sorrow] To know that I should shortly have an end put to my miseries, would cause me to endure the present with determinate resolution. Let him not spare—let him use whatever means he chooses, for I will not resist his decree; he is holy, and his decrees must be just.

Verse 11. What is my strength] I can never suppose that my strength will be restored; and, were that possible, have I any comfortable prospect of a happy termination of my 11 What is my strength, that I should hope? and what is mine end, that I should prolong my life?

19 The troops of ⁱ Tema looked, the companies of ^j Sheba waited for them.

life? Had I any prospect of future happiness, I might well bear my present ills; but the state of my body and the state of my circumstances preclude all hope.

Verse 12. Is my strength the strength of stones?] I am neither a rock, nor is my flesh brass, that I can endure all these calamities. This is a proverbial saying, and exists in all countries.

Verse 13. Is not my help in me?] My help is all in myself; and, alas! that is perfect weakness: and my subsistence, tushiyah, all that is real, stable, and permanent, is driven quite from me. My friends have forsaken me, and I am abandoned to myself; my property is all taken away, and I have no resources left.

Verse 14. To him that is afflicted pity should be shewed from his friend; but he forsaketh the fear of the Almighty.] The Vulgate gives a better sense, "He who takes away mercy from his friend, hath cast off the fear of the Lord." [Better still is the rendering of the latter clause: "Otherwise he might forsake the fear of the Almighty."]

Verse 15. Have dealt deceitfully as a brook] There is probably an allusion here to those land torrents which make a sudden appearance, and as suddenly vanish; being produced by the rains that fall upon the mountains during the rainy season, and are soon absorbed by the thirsty sands over which they run. The approach of Job's friends promised much of sympathy and compassion; his expectations were raised: but their conduct soon convinced him that they were physicians of no value; therefore he compares them to the deceitful torrents that soon pass away.

Verse 16. Blackish by reason of the ice] He represents the waters as being sometimes suddenly frozen, their foam being turned into the semblance of snow or hoar-frost: when the heat comes, they are speedily liquefied; and the evaporation is so strong from the heat, and the absorption so powerful from the sand, that they soon disappear.

Verse 18. The paths of their way] They sometimes forsake their ancient channels, which is a frequent case with the river Ganges; and growing smaller and smaller from being divided into numerous streams, they go to nothing and perish—are at last utterly lost in the sands.

Verse 19. The troops of Tema looked] The caravans coming from Tema are represented as arriving at those places where it was well known torrents did descend from the mountains, and they were full of expectation that here they could slake their thirst and fill their water-skins; but when they arrive, they find the waters totally dissipated and lost.

Verse 21. For now ye are nothing] Ye are just to me as those deceitful torrents to the caravans of Tema and Sheba; they are nothing to them; ye are nothing to me.

22 Did I say, Bring unto me? or, Give a reward for me of your substance?
 23 Or, Deliver me from the enemy's hand? or, Redeem me from the hand of the mighty?

 25 How forcible are right words! but what doth your arguing reprove?

And are afraid.] Ye are terrified at the calamity that has come upon me; and instead of drawing near to comfort me, ye start back at my appearance.

Verse 22. Did I say, bring unto me?] Why do you stand aloof? Have I asked you to bring me any presents? or to supply my wants out of your stores?

Verse 23. Or, Deliver me] Did I send to you to come and avenge me of the destroyers of my property, or to rescue my substance out of the hands of my enemies?

Verse 24. Teach me] Bring proper arguments to convince me of my errors; and you will soon find that I shall gladly receive your counsels, and abandon the errors of which I may be convicted.

Verse 25. How forcible are right words] A well-constructed argument, that has truth for its basis, is irresistible.

 28 Now therefore be content, look upon me; for it is ^c evident unto you if I lie.

 30 Is there iniquity in my tongue? cannot ^f my taste discern perverse things?

* That is, in this matter.—^b Heb. my palate, ch. xii. 11. xxxiv. 3.

Verse 26. Do ye imagine to reprove words] Is it some expressions which in my hurry, and under the pressure of unprecedented affliction, I have uttered, that ye catch at? You can find no flaw in my conduct; would ye make me an OFFENDER for a word?

Verse 27. Ye overwhelm the fatherless] Ye see that I am as destitute as the most miserable orphan; would ye overwhelm such an one? and would you dig a pit for your friend—do ye lay wait for me, and endeavour to entangle me in my talk?

Verse 28. Look upon me] View me; consider my circumstances; compare my words; and you must be convinc'd that I have spoken nothing but truth.

Verse 29. Return, I pray you] Reconsider the whole subject. Do not be offended. Yea, reconsider the subject; my righteousness is in it—my argumentation is a sufficient proof of my innocence.

Verse 30. Is there iniquity in my tongue?] Am I not an honest man? and if in my haste my tongue had uttered falsity, would not my conscience discern it? and do you think that such a man as your friend is would defend what he knew to be wrong?

CHAPTER VII.

Job continues to deplore his helpless and afflicted state, 1-6. He expostulates with God concerning his afflictions, 7-12; describes the disturbed state of his mind by visions in the night-season; abhors life, 13-16; and, showing that he is unworthy of the notice of God, begs pardon and respite, 17-21.

IS there not ^a an ^b appointed time to man upon earth? are not his days also like the days of an hireling?

2 As a servant ^c earnestly desireth the shadow, and as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work:

* Or, a warfare.—^b Ch. xlv. 5, 13, 14. Ps. xxxix. 4.—^c Heb. gapeth after.

Verse 1. Is there not an appointed time to man] "Is there not a warfare to miserable man upon the earth?" And thus most of the Versions have understood the words; and are nearer to the true sense than ours; and of a bad translation, worse use has been made by many theologians. I believe the simple sentiment which the writer wished to convey is this: Human life is a state of probation; and every day and place is a time and place of exercise, to train us up for eternal life. Here is the exercise, and here the warfare: we are enlisted in the bands of the church militant, and must accomplish our time of service, and be honourably dismissed from the warfare, having conquered through the blood of the Lamb; and then receive the reward of the heavenly inheritance.

Verse 2. Earnestly desireth the shadow] As a man who labours hard in the heat of the day earnestly desires to get under a shade, or wishes for the long evening shadows, that he may rest from his labour, get his day's wages, retire to his food, and then go to rest.

Verse 3. So am I made to possess] But night is no relief

3 So am I made to possess ^d months of vanity, and wearisome nights are appointed to me.

4 * When I lie down, I say, When shall I arise, and ^e the night be gone? and I am full of tossings and fro unto the dawning of the day.

5 My flesh is ^f clothed with worms and clods of

to me; it is only a continuance of my anxiety and labour. I am like the hireling, I have my appointed labour for the day. I am like the soldier harassed by the enemy; I am obliged to be continually on the watch, always on the look out, with scarcely any rest.

Verse 4. When I lie down] Nothing can better depict the state of a man under continual afflictions, which afford him no respite, his days and his nights being spent in constant anguish, utterly unable to be in any one posture, so that he is continually changing his position in his bed, finding ease nowhere: thus, as himself expresses it, he is full of tossings.

Verse 5. My flesh is clothed with worms] This is perhaps no figure, but is literally true: the miserably ulcerated state of his body, exposed to the open air, and in a state of great destitution, was favourable to those insects that sought such places in which to deposit their ova, which might have produced the animals in question.

Clods of dust] If Job's disease was the elephantiasis this may refer to the scales which are continually falling off the body in that disorder. It is well known, that in this disease dust; my skin is broken, and become loathsome.

6 * My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope.

7 O remember that ^b my life is wind : mine eye ^c shall no more ^d see good.

8 * The eye of him that hath seen me shall see me no more : thine eyes are upon me, 'and I am not.

9 As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away ; so ^e he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more.

10 He shall return no more to his house, ^b neither shall his place know him any more.

11 Therefore I will ¹ not refrain my mouth ; I will speak in the anguish of my spirit ; I will ² complain in the bitterness of my soul.

12 Am I a sea, or a whale, that thou settest a watch over me ?

13 ^b When I say, My bed shall comfort me, my couch shall ease my complaint ;

* Ch. ix. 25. xvi. 22. xvii. 14. Ps. xc. 6. cii. 11. ciii. 15. cxliv. 4. Isa. xxxviii. 12. xl. 6. the skin becomes very rigid, so as to crack across, especially at the different joints, out of which fissures a loathsome ichor is continually exuding.

Verse 6. Swifter than a weaver's shuttle] The word areg signifies rather the weaver than his shuttle. That some such instrument as the shuttle was in use from time immemorial, there can be no doubt : and it is certain that such an instrument must have been in the view of Job, without which the figure would lose its expression and force. In almost every nation the whole of human existence has been compared to a web ; and the principle of life, through the continual succession of moments, hours, days, weeks, months, and years, to a thread woven through that web. Job represents the thread of his life as being spun out with great rapidity and tenuity, and about to be cut off.

And are spent without hope.] Expectation of future good was at an end ; hope of the alleviation of his miseries no longer existed. The hope of future good is the balm of life : where that is not, there is despair ; where despair is, there is hell.

Verse 8. Shall see me no more] If I die in my present state, with all this load of undeserved odium which is cast upon me by my friends, I shall never have an opportunity of vindicating my character, and regaining the good opinion of mankind.

Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not.] Thou canst look me into nothing. Or, Let thine eye be upon me as judged to death, and I shall immediately cease to live among men.

Verse 9. As the cloud is consumed] As the cloud is dissipated, so is the breath of those that go down to the grave. As that cloud shall never return, so shall it be with the dead ; they return no more to sojourn with the living.

Verse 10. He shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more] He does not mean that he shall be annihilated, but that he shall never more become an inhabitant of the earth.

The word which we properly enough translate grave, here signifies also the state of the dead, hades, and sometimes any deep pit, or even hell itself.

Verse 11. Therefore I will not refrain] All is hopeless : I will therefore indulge myself in complaining.

Verse 12. Am I a sea, or a whale] I think our own version less exceptionable than any other hitherto given of this verse. The meaning is sufficiently plain. Job was hedged about and shut in with insuperable difficulties of various kinds ; he was entangled as a wild beast in a net ; the more he struggled, the more he lost his strength, and the less probability there was of his being extricated from his present situation. The sea is shut in with barriers, over which it cannot pass ; Jer. v. 22. Ps. civ. 9. and chap. xxxviii. 8.

As bounds, doors, &c., are the watchers or keepers which God has set to prevent the sea from overflowing the earth ; so Job's afflictions and distresses were the bounds and bars

14 Then thou scarest me with dreams, and terrifiest me through visions :

15 So that my soul chooseth strangling, and death rather ¹ than my life.

16 ^m I loathe it ; I would not live alway : ⁿ let me alone ; ^o for my days are vanity.

17 ^p What is man, that thou shouldest magnify him ? and that thou shouldest set thine heart upon him ?

18 And that thou shouldest visit him every morning, and try him every moment ?

19 How long wilt thou not depart from me, nor let me alone till I swallow down my spittle ?

20 I have sinned ; what shall I do unto thee, O thou preserver of men ? why ^r hast thou set me as a mark against thee, so that I am a burden to myself ?

21 And why dost thou not pardon my transgression, and take away mine iniquity ? for now shall I sleep in the dust : and thou shalt seek me in the morning, but I shall not be.

which God had apparently set to prevent him from injuring his fellow-creatures. At least Job, in his complaint, so takes it. Am I like the sea, which thou hast imprisoned within bounds, ready to overwhelm and destroy the country ? or am I like a dragon, which must be cooped up in the same way, that it may not have the power to kill and destroy ? [Some think that the reference here is to the Nile and the crocodile.]

Verse 14. Thou scarest me with dreams] There is no doubt that Satan was permitted to haunt his imagination with dreadful dreams and terrific appearances ; so that, as soon as he fell asleep, he was suddenly roused and alarmed by those appalling images. He needed rest by sleep, but was afraid to close his eyes because of the horrid images which were presented to his imagination. Could there be a state more deplorable than this ?

Verse 15. Chooseth strangling] It is very likely that he felt, in those interrupted and dismal slumbers, an oppression and difficulty of breathing something like the incubus or nightmare ; and, distressing as this was, he would prefer death by this means to any longer life in such miseries.

Verse 16. I loathe it ; I would not live alway] Life, in such circumstances, is hateful to me ; and though I wish for long life, yet if length of days were offered to me with the sufferings which I now undergo, I would despise the offer, and spurn the boon.

Verse 17. What is man that thou shouldest magnify him ? and that thou shouldest set thine heart upon him ?] Two different ideas have been drawn from these words :

1. Man is not worth thy notice ; why therefore dost thou contend with him ?

2. How astonishing is thy kindness that thou shouldest set thy heart—thy strongest affections, on such a poor, base, vile, impotent creature as man, that thou shouldest so highly exalt him beyond all other creatures, and mark him with the most particular notice of thy providence and grace !

Verse 19. Till I swallow down my spittle] This is a proverbial expression, and signifies the same as Let me draw my breath ; give me a moment's space ; let me have even the twinkling of an eye. Suspend my sufferings even for so short a space as is necessary to swallow my spittle, that my parched tongue may be moistened, so that I may renew my complaint.

Verse 20. I have sinned ; what shall I do] Those who suppose that the address is made to God, translate the verse thus : " Be it that I have sinned, what injury can I do unto thee, O thou Observer of man ? Why hast thou set me up as a mark for thee, and why am I made a burden to thee ? "

Verse 21. And why dost thou not pardon] These words are spoken after the manner of men. If thou have any design to save me, if I have sinned, why dost thou not pardon my transgression, as thou seest that I am a dying man ; and to-morrow morning thou mayest seek me to do me good, but in all probability I shall then be no more, and all thy kind thoughts towards me shall be unavailing?

That Job does not criminate himself here, as our text intimates, is evident enough from his own repeated assertions of his innocence. And it is most certain that Bildad, who immediately answers, did not consider him as criminating but as justifying himself; and this is the very ground on which he takes up the subject. Were we to admit the contrary, we should find strange inconsistencies, if not contradictions, in Job's speeches: on such a ground the controversy must have immediately terminated, as he would then have acknowledged that of which his friends accused him; and here the Book of Job would have ended.

CHAPTER VIII.

Bildad answers, and reproves Job for his justifying himself, 1, 2. Shows that God is just, and never punishes but for iniquity; and intimates that it was on account of their sins that his children were cut off, 3, 4. States that, if Job would humble himself to the Almighty, provided he were innocent, his captivity would soon be turned, and his latter end be abundantly prosperous, 5-7. Appeals to the ancients for the truth of what he says; and draws examples from the vegetable world, to show how soon the wicked may be cut off, and the hope of the hypocrite perish, 8-19. Asserts that God never did cast off a perfect man, nor help the wicked; and that, if Job be innocent, his end shall be crowned with prosperity, 20-22.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said,

2 How long wilt thou speak these things? and how long shall the words of thy mouth be like a strong wind?

3 *Doth God pervert judgment? or doth the Almighty pervert justice?

4 If^b thy children have sinned against him, and he have cast them away^c for their transgression;

5^d If thou wouldest seek unto God betimes, and make thy supplication to the Almighty;

6 If thou wert pure and upright, surely now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteousness prosperous.

7 Though thy beginning was small, yet thy latter end should greatly increase.

8^e For inquire, I pray thee, of the former age, and prepare thyself to the search of their fathers:

Verse 1. Bildad the Shuhite] Supposed to be a descendant of Shuah, one of the sons of Abraham, by Keturah, who dwelt in Arabia Deserta, called in Scripture the east country. See Gen. xxv. 1, 2, 6.

Verse 2. How long wilt thou speak these things?] Wilt thou still go on to charge God foolishly? Thy heavy affliction proves that thou art under his wrath; and his wrath, thus manifested, proves that it is for thy sins that he punisheth thee.

Be like a strong wind?] The Arabic, with which the Syriac agrees, is the spirit of pride. Wilt thou continue to breathe forth a tempest of words? This is more literal.

Verse 3. Doth God pervert judgment?] God afflicts thee; can he afflict thee for nought? As he is just, his judgment is just; and he could not inflict punishment unless there be a cause.

Verse 4. If thy children have sinned] I know thy children have been cut off by a terrible judgment; but was it not because by transgression they had filled up the measure of their iniquity?

Verse 5. If thou wouldest seek unto God] Though God has so severely afflicted thee, yet if thou wilt now humble thyself before him and implore his mercy, thou shalt be saved.

Verse 6. If thou wert pure and upright] If thou hadst been a holy man, and these calamities had occurred through accident, or merely by the malice of thy enemies, would not God, long ere this, have manifested his power and justice in thy behalf?

The habitation of thy righteousness] Strongly ironical. If thy house had been as a temple of God, in which his worship had been performed, and his commandments obeyed, would it now be in a state of ruin and desolation?

Verse 7. Though thy beginning was small] Thy former state, compared to that into which God would have brought thee, would be small; for to show his respect for thy piety, because thou hadst, through thy faithful attachment to him, suffered the loss of all things, he would have greatly multiplied thy former prosperity, so that thou shouldst now have vastly more than thou didst ever before possess.

Verse 8. Inquire—of the former age] Of the first age; of the patriarchs; the first generation of men that dwelt upon the earth.

Verse 9. For we are but of yesterday, and know nothing] It is evident that Bildad refers to those times in which human life was protracted to a much longer date than that in which Job lived; when men from the long period of eight or nine hundred years, had the opportunity of making many observations, and treasuring up a vast fund of knowledge and experience. In comparison with them, he considers that age as nothing, and that generation as being only of yesterday, not having had opportunity of laying up knowledge: nor could they expect it, as their days upon earth would be but a shadow, compared with that substantial time in which the fathers had lived. Perhaps there may be an allusion here to the shadow projected by the gnomon of a dial, during the time the sun is above the horizon. As is a single solar day, so is our life. [There is no reason for assuming that this verse is an antithesis to the long life of former ages. The idea is that our ephemeral life is not long enough to allow of our passing judgment on the dealings of God.]

Verse 10. Shall not they teach thee] Wilt thou not treat their maxims with the utmost deference and respect? They utter words from their heart—what they say is the fruit of long and careful experience.

Verse 11. Can the rush grow] The word gome which we translate rush, is, without doubt, the Egyptian flag papyrus, on which the ancients wrote and from which our paper derives its name.

This plant grows in the muddy banks of the Nile, as it requires an abundance of water for its nourishment.

Can the flag grow without water?] Parkhurst supposes that the word achu, which we render flag, is the same with 12 * Whilst it is yet in his greenness, and not cut down, it withereth before any other herb.

13 So are the paths of all that forget God; and the hypocrite's hope shall perish:

14 Whose hope shall be cut off, and whose trust shall be a spider's web.

15 He shall lean upon his house, but it shall not stand: he shall hold it fast, but it shall not endure.

16 He is green before the sun, and his branch shooteth forth in his garden.

17 His roots are wrapped about the heap, and seeth the place of stones.

* Ps. cxxix. 6. Jer. xvii. 6.—b Ch. xi. 20. xviii. 14. xxvii. 8. Ps. cxli. 10. Prov. x. 28.—c Heb. a spider's house. Isa. lix. 5, 6.—d Ch. xxvii. 18.—e Ch. vii. 10. xx. 9. Ps. xxxvii. 26.—f Ps.

a species of reed found growing near the river Nile. The Egyptians make ropes of the leaves.

Verse 12. Whilst it is yet in his greenness] We do not know enough of the natural history of this plant to be able to discern the strength of this allusion, but we learn from it that although this plant be very succulent, and grow to a great size, yet it is short-lived, and speedily withers; and this we may suppose to be in the dry season, or on the retreat of the waters of the Nile. Soon RIPE, soon MOTTEN, is a maxim in horticulture.

Verse 13. So are the paths] The papyrus and the rush flourish while they have a plentiful supply of ooze and water; but take these away, and their prosperity is speedily at an end: so it is with the wicked and profane; their prosperity is of short duration, however great it may appear to be in the beginning.

The hypocrite's hope shall perish] This is the first place in which the word hypocrite occurs, or the noun chaneph, which rather conveys the idea of pollution and defilement than of hypocrisy. A hypocrite is one who wishes to be taken for a religionist, though he is conscious he has no religion. Such a person cannot have hope of any good, because he knows he is insincere: but the person in the text has hope; therefore hypocrite cannot be the meaning of the original word. But all the vile, the polluted, and the profligate, have hope; they hope to end their iniquities before they end life; and they hope to get at last to the kingdom of heaven.

Verse 14. Whose hope shall be cut off] Such persons, subdued by the strong habits of sin, hope on fruitlessly, till the last thread of the web of life is cut off from the beam; and then they find no more strength in their hope than is in the threads of the spider's web.

Verse 15. He shall lean upon his house] When the spider suspects his web to be frail or unsure, he leans upon it in different parts, propping himself on his hinder legs, and pulling with his fore claws, to see if all be safe. If he find any part of it injured, he immediately adds new cordage to that part, and attaches it strongly to the wall. When he finds all safe and strong, he retires into his hole at one corner, supposing himself to be in a state of complete security, when in a moment the brush or the besom sweeps away both himself, his house, and his confidence. The wicked, whose hope is in his temporal possessions, strengthens and keeps his house in repair; and thus leans on his earthly 18 * If he destroy him from his place, then it shall deny him, saying, I have not seen thee.

19 Behold, this is the joy of his way, and out of the earth shall others grow.

20 Behold, God will not cast away a perfect man, neither will he help the evil doers;

21 Till he fill thy mouth with laughing, and thy lips with rejoicing.

22 They that hate thee shall be clothed with shame; and the dwelling place of the wicked shall come to nought.

cxlii. 7.—g Heb. take the ungodly by the hand.—h Heb. shouting for joy.—i Ps. xxxv. 26. cix. 29.—j Heb. shall not be.

supports; in a moment, as in the case of the spider, his house is overwhelmed by the blast of God's judgments, and himself probably buried in its ruins.

Verse 16. He is green before the sun] The wicked is represented as a luxuriant plant, in a good soil, with all the advantages of a good situation; the roots intervolving themselves with stones, so as to render the tree more stable; but suddenly a blast comes, and the tree begins to die. The sudden fading of its leaves, &c., shows that its root is become as rottenness, and its vegetable life destroyed.

Verse 18. If he destroy him from his place] Is not this a plain reference to the alienation of his inheritance? God destroys him from it; it becomes the property of another; and on his revisiting it, the place, by a striking prosopopœia, says, "I know thee not; I have never seen thee."

Verse 19. Behold, this is the joy of his way] A strong irony. Here is the issue of all his mirth, of his sports, games, and pastimes! See the unfeeling, domineering, polluting and polluted scape-grace, levelled with those whom he had despised, a servant of servants, or unable to work through his debaucheries, cringing for a morsel of bread.

Out of the earth shall others grow.] As in the preceding case, when one plant or tree is blasted or cut down, another may be planted in the same place; so, when a spendthrift has run through his property, another possesses his inheritance, and grows up from that soil in which he himself might have continued to flourish, had it not been for his extravagance and folly.

Verse 20. Behold, God will not cast away a perfect man] This is another of the maxims of the ancients, which Bildad produces: "As sure as he will punish and root out the wicked, so surely will he defend and save the righteous."

Verse 21. Till he fill thy mouth with laughing] The two verses may be read as a prayer; and probably they were thus expressed by Bildad, who speaks with less virulence than his predecessor, though with equal positiveness in respect to the grand charge.

This most exceptionable position, taken by these men, was founded upon maxims which they derived from the ancients. Surely observation must have, in numberless instances, corrected this mistake. They must have seen many worthless men in high prosperity, and many of the excellent of the earth in deep adversity and affliction; but the opposite was an article of their creed, and all appearances and facts must take its colouring.

CHAPTER IX.

Job acknowledges God's justice and man's sinfulness, 1-3. Celebrates his almighty power as manifested in the earth and in the heavens, 4-10. Maintains that God afflicts the innocent as well as the wicked, without any respect to their works: and hath delivered the earth into the hands of the wicked, 11-24. Complains of his lot, and maintains his innocence, 25-35.

THEN Job answered and said,
2 I know it is so of a truth : but how should a man be just b with God ?

3 If he will contend with him, he cannot answer him one of a thousand.

4 c He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength : who hath hardened himself against him, and hath prospered ?

5 Which removeth the mountains, and they know not : which overturneth them in his anger.

6 Which d shaketh the earth out of her place, and e the pillars thereof tremble.

7 Which commandeth the sun, and it riseth not ; and sealeth up the stars.

8 f Which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the g waves of the sea.

9 h Which maketh i Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south.

10 j Which doeth great things past finding out ; yea, and wonders without number.

11 k Lo, he goeth by me, and I see him not : he passeth on also, but I perceive him not.

a Ps. cxliii. 2. Rom. iii. 20.—b Or, before God.—c Ch. xxxvi. 5.—d Isa. ii. 19, 21. Hag. ii. 6, 21. Heb. xii. 28.—e Ch. xxvi. 11.—f Gen. i. 6. Ps. civ. 2, 3.—g Heb. heights.—h Gen. i. 16. Ch. xxxviii. 31, &c. Amos v. 8.—i Heb. Ash, Cessil, and Camah.—j Ch. v. 9. Ps. lxxi.

Verse 2. I know it is so of a truth] I acknowledge the general truth of the maxims you have advanced. God will not ultimately punish a righteous person, nor shall the wicked finally triumph ; and though righteous before man, and truly sincere in my piety, yet I know, when compared with the immaculate holiness of God, all my righteousness is nothing.

Verse 3. If he will contend with him] God is so holy, and his law so strict, that if he will enter into judgment with his creatures, the most upright of them cannot be justified in his sight.

One of a thousand.] Of a thousand offences of which he may be accused, he cannot vindicate himself even in one. Oh, how necessary to fallen, weak, miserable, imperfect, and sinful man, is the doctrine of justification by faith, and sanctification through the Divine Spirit, by the sacrificial death and mediation of the Lord Jesus Christ !

Verse 4. He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength] By his infinite knowledge he searches out and sees all things, and by his almighty power he can punish all delinquencies. He that rebels against him must be destroyed.

Verse 5. Removeth the mountains, and they know not] This seems to refer to earthquakes. By those strong convulsions, mountains, valleys, hills, even whole islands, are removed in an instant ; and to this latter circumstance the words, they know not, most probably refer.

Verse 6. The pillars thereof tremble.] This also refers to an earthquake, and to that tremulous motion which sometimes gives warning of the approaching catastrophe, and from which this violent convulsion of nature has received its name.

Verse 7. Which commandeth the sun] Obscures it either with clouds, with thick darkness, or with an eclipse.

Sealeth up the stars.] Sometimes the heavens become as black as ebony, and no star, figure, or character in this great book of God can be read.

Verse 8. And treadeth upon the waves] This is a very majestic image. God not only walks upon the waters, but, when the sea runs mountains high, he steps from billow to billow in his almighty and essential majesty.

Verse 9. Which maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south.] As to the Hebrew words, they might as well have been applied to any of the other constellations of heaven : indeed, it does not appear that constellations are at all meant. Parkhurst and Bate have given, perhaps, the best interpretation of the words, which is as follows :—

“Kimah from camah, to be hot or warm, denotes genial heat or warmth, as opposed to ash, a parching, biting air, on the one side ; and kesil, the rigid, contracting cold, on the other ; and the chambers (thick clouds) of the south.”

I need scarcely add that these words have been variously translated by critics and commentators.

12 l Behold, he taketh away, m who can hinder him ? who will say unto him, What doest thou ?

13 If God will not withdraw his anger, n the o proud helpers do stoop under him.

14 How much less shall I answer him, and choose out my words to reason with him ?

15 p Whom, though I were righteous, yet would I not answer, but I would make supplication to my judge.

16 If I had called, and he had answered me ; yet would I not believe that he had hearkened unto my voice.

17 For he breaketh me with a tempest, and multiplieth my wounds q without cause.

18 He will not suffer me to take my breath, but filleth me with bitterness.

19 If I speak of strength, lo, he is strong : and if of judgment, who shall set me a time to plead ?

20 If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me : if I say I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse.

21 Though I were perfect, yet would I not know my soul : I would despise my life.

Verse 11. Lo, he goeth by me, and I see him not] He is incomprehensible in all his ways, and in all his works ; and he must be so if he be God, and work as God ; for his own nature and his operations are past finding out.

Verse 12. He taketh away] He never gives, but he is ever lending : and while the gift is useful or is improved, he permits it to remain ; but when it becomes useless or is misused, he recalls it.

Who can hinder him ?] Literally, Who can cause him to restore it ?

What doest thou ?] He is supreme, and will give account of none of his matters. He is infinitely wise, and cannot mistake. He is infinitely kind, and can do nothing cruel. He is infinitely good, and can do nothing wrong. No one, therefore, should question either his motives or his operations.

Verse 13. If God will not withdraw his anger] It is of no use to contend with God ; he cannot be successfully resisted ; all his opposers must perish.

Verse 14. How much less shall I answer] I cannot contend with my Maker. He is the Lawgiver and the Judge. How shall I stand in judgment before him ?

Verse 15. Though I were righteous] Though clear of all the crimes, public and secret, of which you accuse me, yet I would not dare to stand before his immaculate holiness. Man's holiness may profit man, but in the sight of the infinite purity of God it is nothing.

I would make supplication to my judge.] Though not conscious of any sin, I should not think myself thereby justified ; but would, from a conviction of the exceeding breadth of the commandment, and the limited nature of my own perfection, cry out, “Cleanse thou me from secret faults !”

Verse 16. If I had called, and he had answered] I could scarcely suppose, such is his majesty and such his holiness, that he could condescend to notice a being so mean, and in every respect so infinitely beneath his notice.

Verse 17. He breaketh me with a tempest] That is, There is no reason known to myself, or to any man, why I should be thus most oppressively afflicted. It is, therefore, cruel and inconsequent to assert that I suffer for my crimes.

Verse 18. He will not suffer me to take my breath] I have no respite in my afflictions ; I suffer continually in my body, and my mind is incessantly harassed.

Verse 19. If I speak of strength, lo, he is strong] Human wisdom, power, and influence avail nothing before him.

Who shall set me a time] “Who would be a witness for me ?” or, Who would dare to appear in my behalf ? Almost all the terms in this part of the speech of Job, from ver. 11 to ver. 24, are forensic or juridical, and are taken from legal processes and pleadings in their gates or courts of justice.

Verse 20. If I justify myself] Though I am conscious of 22 This is one thing, therefore I said it, 'He destroyeth the perfect and the wicked.

23 If the scourge slay suddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent.

24 The earth is given into the hand of the wicked: 'he covereth the faces of the judges thereof; if not, where, and who is he?

25 Now 'my days are swifter than a post: they flee away, they see no good.

26 They are passed away as the 'swift 'ships: 'as the eagle that hasteth to the prey.

27 'If I say, I will forget my complaint, I will leave off my heaviness, and comfort myself:

28 'I am afraid of all my sorrows, I know that thou 'wilt not hold me innocent.

none of the crimes of which you accuse me; and know not why he contends with me; yet he must have some reason, and that reason he does not choose to explain.

Verse 21. Though I were perfect] Had I the fullest conviction that, in every thought, word, and deed, I were blameless before him, yet I would not plead this; nor would I think it any security for a life of ease and prosperity, or any proof that my days should be prolonged.

Verse 22. This is one thing] My own observation shows, that in the course of providence the righteous and the wicked have an equal lot; for when any sudden calamity comes, the innocent and the guilty fall alike. There may be a few exceptions, but they are very extraordinary, and very rare.

Verse 24. The earth is given into the hand of the wicked] Is it not most evident that the worst men possess most of this world's goods, and that the righteous are scarcely ever in power or affluence? This was the case in Job's time; it is the case still. Therefore prosperity and adversity in this life are no marks either of God's approbation or disapprobation.

He covereth the faces of the judges thereof] Or, The faces of his decisions he shall cover. God is often stated in Scripture as doing a thing which he only permits to be done. So he permits the eyes of judgment to be blinded; and hence false decisions.

Where, and who is he?] If this be not the case, who is he that acts in this way, and where is he to be found? If God does not permit these things, who is it that orders them?

Verse 25. Swifter than a post] The light-footed messenger or courier who carries messages from place to place.

They flee away] So swiftly do they flee away that I cannot discern them; and when past they cannot be recalled.

Verse 26. As the swift ships] Ships of desire, or ships of Ebeh, says our margin, perhaps more correctly inflated ships, the sails belling out with a fair brisk wind, tide favourable, and the vessels themselves lightly freighted.

Perhaps the idea to be seized is not so much the swiftness of the passage, as their leaving no trace or track behind them.

The next words, As the eagle that hasteth to the prey, seem at least to countenance, if not confirm, the above reading; the idea of robbery and spoil, prompt attack and sudden retreat, is preserved in both images.

Verse 27. I will forget my complaint] I will forsake or forego my complaining. I will leave off my heaviness.

29 If I be wicked, why then labour I in vain?

30 'If I wash myself with snow water, and make my hands never so clean;

31 Yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and mine own clothes shall 'abhor me.

32 For 'he is not a man as I am, that I should answer him, and we should come together in judgment.

33 'Neither is there 'any 'day's-man betwixt us, that might lay his hand upon us both.

34 'Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrify me:

35 Then would I speak, and not fear him: 'but it is not so with me.

xlix. 19. Rom. ix. 20.—'Ver. 19. 1 Sam. ii. 25.—'Heb. one that should argue.—'Or, umpire.—'Ch. xlii. 20, 21, 22. xxxiii. 7. Ps. xxxix. 10.—'Heb. but I am not so with myself.

VULGATE, I will change my countenance—force myself to smile, and endeavour to assume the appearance of comfort.

Verse 28. Thou wilt not hold me innocent.] Thou wilt not acquit me so as to take away my afflictions from me.

Verse 29. If I be wicked.] If I am the sinner you suppose me to be, in vain should I labour to counterfeit joy, and cease to complain of my sufferings.

Verse 30. If I wash myself with snow water.] Supposed to have a more detergent quality than common water; and it was certainly preferred to common water by the ancients.

Verse 31. And mine own clothes shall abhor me.] Searched and tried by the eye of God, I should be found as a leper, so that my own clothes would dread to touch me, for fear of being infected by my corruptions. This is a strong and bold figure; and is derived from the corrupted state of his body, which his clothes dreaded to touch, because of the contagious nature of his disorder.

Verse 32. For he is not a man as I am] I cannot contend with him as with one of my fellows in a court of justice.

Verse 33. Neither is there any day's-man] DAY'S-MAN, in our law, means an arbitrator or umpire between party and party; as it were bestowing a day, or certain time on a certain day, to decree, judge, or decide a matter. DAY is used in law for the day of appearance in court, either originally or upon assignation, for hearing a matter for trial. But arbitrator is the proper meaning of the term here: one who is, by the consent of both parties, to judge between them, and settle their differences.

Poor Job! He did not yet know the Mediator between God and man: the only means by which God and man can be brought together and reconciled. Had St. Paul this in his eye when he wrote 1 Tim. ii. 5, 6? Without this Mediator and the ransom price which he has laid down, God and man can never be united: and that this union might be made possible, Jesus took the human into conjunction with his divine nature; and thus God was manifest in the flesh.

Verse 34. Let him take his rod away] As shebet signifies, not only rod, but also sceptre or the ensign of royalty, Job might here refer to God sitting in his majesty upon the judgment-seat; and this sight so appalled him that, filled with terror, he was unable to speak. When a sinful soul sees God in his majesty, terror seizes upon it, and prayer is impossible. We have a beautiful illustration of this, Isa. vi. 1-5.

Verse 35. But it is not so with me.] I am not in such circumstances as to plead with my Judge. A natural picture of the state of a penitent soul, which needs no additional colouring.

CHAPTER X.

Job is weary of life, and expostulates with God, 1-6. He appeals to God for his innocence; and pleads on the weakness of his frame, and the manner of his formation, 7-13. Complains of his sufferings, and prays for respite, 14-20. Describes the state of the dead, 21, 22.

MY ^asoul is ^bweary of my life; I will leave my complaint upon myself; ^cI will speak in the bitterness of my soul.

2 I will say unto God, Do not condemn me; shew me wherefore thou contendest with me.

3 Is it good unto thee that thou shouldst oppress, that thou shouldst despise ^dthe work of thine hands, and shine upon the counsel of the wicked?

4 Hast thou eyes of flesh? or ^eseest thou as man seeth?

5 Are thy days as the days of man? are thy years as man's days,

6 That thou inquirest after mine iniquity, and searchest after my sin?

7 'Thou ^fknowest that I am not wicked; and there is none that can deliver out of thine hand.

8 ^hThine hands ⁱhave made me and fashioned me together round about; yet thou dost destroy me.

9 Remember, I beseech thee, that ^jthou hast

Verse 1. My soul is weary of my life] Here is a proof that nephesh does not signify the animal life, but the soul or immortal mind, as distinguished from chai the animal life; and is a strong proof that Job believed in the distinction between these two principles; was no materialist; but, on the contrary, credited the proper immortality of the soul.

I will leave my complaint] I will charge myself with the cause of my own calamities; and shall not charge my Maker foolishly; but I must deplore my wretched and forlorn state.

Verse 2. Do not condemn me] Let me not be afflicted in thy wrath.

Shew me wherefore thou contendest] If I am afflicted because of my sin, show me what that sin is.

Verse 3. Is it good unto thee] Surely it can be no gratification to thee to distress the children of men, as if thou didst despise the work of thy own hands.

And shine upon the counsel] For by my afflictions the harsh judgments of the wicked will appear to be confirmed; viz., that God regards not his most fervent worshippers; and it is no benefit to lead a religious life.

Verse 4. Hast thou eyes of flesh?] Dost thou judge as man judgeth? Illustrated by the next clause; Seest thou as man seeth?

Verse 5. Are thy days as the days of man] Enosh, wretched, miserable man. Thy years as man's days; gaber, the strong man. Man in his low estate cannot be likened unto thee; nor can he in his greatest excellence, though made in thy own image and likeness, be compared to thee.

Verse 6. That thou inquirest] Is it becoming thy infinite dignity to concern thyself so much with the affairs or transgressions of a despicable mortal? A word spoken in the heart of most sinners.

Verse 7. Thou knowest that I am not wicked] While thou hast this knowledge of me and my conduct, why appear to be sifting me as if in order to find out sin: and, though none can be found, treating me as though I were a transgressor?

Verse 8. Thine hands have made me] Thou art well acquainted with human nature, for thou art its author.

And fashioned me together round about] It is thou who hast refined the materials out of which I have been formed, and modified them into that excellent symmetry and order in which they are now found; so that the union and harmony of the different parts, and their arrangement and completion proclaim equally thy wisdom, skill, power, and goodness.

Yet thou dost destroy me.] Men generally care for and prize those works on which they have spent most time, skill, and pains: but, although thou hast formed me with such incredible skill and labour, yet thou art about to destroy me! How dreadful an evil must sin be, when, on its account, God has pronounced the sentence of death on all mankind; and that body, so curiously and skilfully formed, must be decomposed, and reduced to dust!

Verse 9. Thou hast made me as the clay] Thou hast fashioned me, according to thy own mind, out of a mass of clay: after so much skill and pains expended, men might naturally made me as the clay; and wilt thou bring me into dust again?

10 ^kHast thou not poured me out as milk, and curdled me like cheese?

11 Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast ^lfenced me with bones and sinews.

12 Thou hast granted me life and favour, and thy visitation hath preserved my spirit.

13 And these things hast thou hid in thine heart: I know that this is with thee.

14 If I sin, then ^mthou markest me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity.

15 If I be wicked, ⁿwoe unto me; ^oand if I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head. I am full of confusion; therefore ^psee thou mine affliction;

16 For it increaseth. ^qThou huntest me as a fierce lion: and again thou shewest thyself marvellous upon me.

17 Thou renewest ^rthy witnesses against me, and suppose they were to have a permanent being; but thou hast decreed to turn them into dust!

Verse 10. Hast thou not poured me out as milk] After all that some learned men have said on this subject, in order to confine the images here to simple nutrition, I am satisfied that generation is the true notion.

The different expressions in this and the following verse are very appropriate; well imagined, and delicately, and at the same time forcibly, expressed.

Verse 12. Thou hast granted me life and favour] Thou hast given me an actual existence among men; by thy favour or mercy thou hast provided me with the means of life; and thy visitation—thy continual providential care, has preserved me in life—has given me the air I breathe, and furnished me with those powers which enable me to respire it as an agent and preserver of life.

Verse 13. And these things hast thou hid in thine heart] Thou hast had many gracious purposes concerning me which thou hast not made known; but thy visitations and mercy are sufficient proofs of kindness towards me; though for purposes unknown to me thou hast sorely afflicted me, and continuest to treat me as an enemy.

Verse 14. If I sin] From thee nothing can be hidden; if I sin, thou takest account of the transgression, and canst not hold me for innocent when thou knowest I am guilty.

Verse 15. If I be wicked] I must meet with that punishment that is due to the workers of iniquity.

If I be righteous] I am only in the state which my duty to my Creator requires me to be in; and I cannot therefore suppose that on this account I can deserve any thing by way of favour from the justice of my Maker.

I am full of confusion] I know that thou art merciful, and dost not afflict willingly the children of men; I know I have not wickedly departed from thee; and yet I am treated by thee as if I were an apostate from every good. I am therefore full of confusion.

Verse 16. For it increaseth] Probably this refers to the affliction mentioned above, which is increased in proportion to its duration.

Thou huntest me as a fierce lion] As the hunters attack the king of beasts in the forest, so my friends attack me. They assail me on every side.

Thou shewest thyself marvellous] Thy designs, thy ways, thy works, are all incomprehensible to me; thou dost both confound and overpower me.

Verse 17. Thou renewest thy witnesses] In this speech of Job he is ever referring to trials in courts of judicature, and almost all his terms are forensic. Thou bringest witnesses in continual succession to confound and convict me.

Changes and war] I am as if attacked by successive troops; one company being wearied, another succeeds to the attack, so that I am harassed by continual warfare.

Verse 18. Wherefore then] Why didst thou give me a being, when thou didst foresee I should be exposed to such incredible hardships?

increasest thine indignation upon me; changes and war are against me.

18 Wherefore then hast thou brought me forth out of the womb? Oh that I had given up the ghost, and no eye had seen me!

19 I should have been as though I had not been; I should have been carried from the womb to the grave.

* Ch. iii. 11.—^b See ch. vii. 6, 16. viii. 9. Ps. xxxix. 5.—
* Ps. xxxix. 18.

Verse 19. I should have been as though] Had I given up the ghost as soon as born, as I could not then have been conscious of existence, it would have been, as it respects myself, as though I had never been; being immediately transported from my mother's womb to the grave.

Verse 20. Are not my days few?] My life cannot be long; let me have a little respite before I die.

Verse 21. I shall not return] I shall not return again from the dust to have a dwelling among men.

To the land of darkness] There are here a crowd of obscure and dislocated terms, admirably expressive of the obscurity and uncertainty of the subject. What do we know of the state of separate spirits? What do we know of the spiritual world? How do souls exist separate from their respective bodies? Of what are they capable, and what is their employment? Perhaps nothing can be said much better of the state than is here said, a land of obscurity, like darkness.

The shadow of death] A place where death rules, over which he projects his shadow, intercepting every light of every kind of life. Without any order, having no arrangements, no distinction of inhabitants; the poor and the rich are there the master and the slave, the king and the beggar,

20 ^b Are not my days few? ^c cease then and ^d let me alone, that I may take comfort a little,

21 Before I go whence I shall not return, ^e even to the land of darkness, ^f and the shadow of death;

22 A land of darkness, as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness.

^a Ch. vii. 16, 19.—^b Ps. lxxxviii. 12.—^c Ps. xxiii. 4.

their bodies in equal corruption and disgrace, their souls distinguished only by their moral character. Stripped of their flesh, they stand in their naked simplicity before God in that place.

Verse 22. Where the light is as darkness.] A palpable obscure: it is space and place, and has only such light or capability of distinction as renders "darkness visible." A duration not characterized or measured by any of the attributes of time; where there is no order of darkness and light, night and day, heat and cold, summer and winter. It is the state of the dead! The place of separate spirits! It is out of time, out of probation, beyond change or mutability. It is on the confines of eternity; But what is THIS? and where? Eternity! how can I form any conception of thee? In thee there is no order, no bounds, no substance, no progression, no change, no past, no present, no future! Thou art an indescribable something, to which there is no analogy in the compass of creation. Thou art infinity and incomprehensibility to all finite beings. Thou art what, living, I know not, and what I must die to know; and even then I shall apprehend no more of thee than merely that thou art E-T-E-R-N-I-T-Y!

CHAPTER XI.

Zophar answers Job, and reproves him severely for his attempts to justify himself; charges him with secret iniquity, and contends that God inflicts less punishment on him than his iniquities deserve, 1-6. Shows the knowledge and perfections of God to be unsearchable, and that none can resist his power, 7-11. Warns him against vanity of mind, and exhorts him to repentance on the ground that his acceptance with God is still a possible case, and that his latter days may yet become happy and prosperous, 12-20.

THEN answered Zophar the Naamathite, and said,

2 Should not the multitude of words be answered? and should ^a a man full of talk be justified?

3 Should thy ^b lies make men hold their peace? and when thou mockest, shall no man make thee ashamed?

* Heb. a man of lips —^b Or, devices.

Verse 1. Zophar the Naamathite] He is the most inveterate of Job's accusers, and generally speaks without feeling or pity. In our godliness he excelled all the rest.

Verse 2. Should not the multitude of words be answered?] Some translate, "To multiply words profiteth nothing."

And should a man full of talk be justified?] "A man of lips," a proper appellation for a great talker: his lips are the only active parts of his system.

Verse 3. Should thy lies make men hold their peace?] This is a very severe reproof, and not justified by the occasion.

And when thou mockest] As thou despisest others, shall no man put thee to scorn? Zophar could never think that the solemn and awful manner in which Job spoke could be called bubbling, as some would translate the term laag. He might consider Job's speech as sarcastic and severe, but he could not consider it as nonsense.

Verse 4. My doctrine is pure] "My assumptions." What I assume or take as right, and just, and true, are so; the precepts which I have formed, and the practice which I have founded on them, are all correct and perfect. Job had not exactly said, My doctrine and way of life are pure, and I am clean in thine eyes; but he had vindicated himself from their 4 For ^c thou hast said, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes.

5 But oh that God would speak, and open his lips against thee;

6 And that he would shew thee the secrets of wisdom, that they are double to that which is! Know therefore that ^d God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity deserveth.

* Ch. vi. 10. x. 7.—^a Esra ix. 18.

charges of secret sins and hypocrisy, and appealed to God for his general uprightness and sincerity: but Zophar here begs the question, in order that he may have something to say, and room to give vent to his invective.

Verse 5. But oh that God would speak] How little feeling, humanity, and charity is there in this prayer!

Verse 6. The secrets of wisdom] All the depths of his own counsels; the heights, lengths, and breadths, of holiness. That they are double to that which is. Tushiyah, which we translate that which is, is a word frequent in Job and in the Book of Proverbs, and is one of the evidences brought in favour of Solomon as the author of this book. It signifies substance or essence, and is translated by a great variety of terms; enterprise, completeness, substance, the whole constitution, wisdom, law, sound wisdom, solid complete happiness, solidity of reason and truth, the complete total sum, &c., &c. Perhaps Zophar is here, in mind comparing the wisdom which has been revealed with the wisdom not revealed. The perfection and excellence of the divine nature, and the purity of his law, are, in substance and essence, double or manifold to the revelation already made.

Less than thine iniquity deserveth.] That Zophar intends to insinuate that God afflicted Job because of his 7 Canst thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?

8 It is ^aas high as heaven; what canst thou do? deeper than hell; what canst thou know?

9 The measure thereof is longer than the earth, and broader than the sea.

10 If he ^acut off, and shut up, or gather together, then ^awho can hinder him?

11 For ^ahe knoweth vain men: he seeth wickedness also; will he not then consider it?

12 For ^avain ^aman would be wise, though man be born ^alike a wild ass's colt.

13 If thou ^aprepare thine heart, and ^astretch out thine hands toward him;

14 If iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away, and ^alet not wickedness dwell in thy tabernacles.

iniquities, is evident; and that he thought that God had inflicted less chastisement upon him than his sins deserved, is not less so; and that, therefore, Job's complaining of harsh treatment was not at all well founded.

Verse 7. Canst thou by searching find out God? What is God? A Being self-existent, eternal, infinite, immense, without bounds, incomprehensible either by mind, or time, or space. Who then can find this Being out? Who can fathom his depths, ascend to his heights, extend to his breadths, and comprehend the infinitude of his perfections?

Verse 8. It is as high as heaven High as the heavens, what canst thou work; deep below sheol (the invisible world), what canst thou know? Long beyond the earth, and broad beyond the sea, is its measure.

Verse 10. If he cut off As he is unlimited and almighty, he cannot be controlled. He will do whatsoever he pleases; and he is pleased with nothing but what is right. Who then will dare to find fault? Perhaps Zophar may refer to Job's former state, his losses and afflictions. If he cut off, as he has done, thy children; if he shut up, as he has done, thyself by this sore disease; or gather together hostile bands to invade thy territories, and carry away thy property; who can hinder him? He is a sovereign, and has a right to dispose of his own property as he pleases.

Verse 11. He knoweth vain men "Men of falsehood." He seeth wickedness He sees as well what is in man, as what man does; and of his actions and propensities he cannot be an indifferent spectator.

Verse 12. For vain man would be wise The original is difficult and uncertain, "And shall the hollow man assume courage," or "pride himself?"

Though man be born like a wild ass's colt There is no end to the translations of this verse, and conjectures relative to its meaning. I shall conclude with the Vulgate:—"Vain man is puffed up with pride; and he supposes himself to be born free like the wild ass's colt." Man is full of self-conceit; and imagines himself born to act as he pleases, to roam at large, to be under no control, and to be accountable to none for his actions. [Delitzsch translates this difficult passage:—"But before an empty head gaineth understanding, a wild ass would become a man." But this is open to criticism.]

Verse 13. If thou prepare thine heart Make use of the powers which God has given thee, and be determined to seek him with all thy soul.

And stretch out thine hands toward him Making fervent prayer and supplication, putting away iniquity out of thy hand, and not permitting wickedness to dwell in thy tabernacle; then thou shalt lift up thy face without a blush, thou wilt become established, and have nothing to fear, ver 14, 15.

Zophar, like all the rest, is true to his principle. Job must be a wicked man, else he had not been afflicted. There must be some iniquity in his hand; and some wickedness tolerated in his family. So they all supposed.

Verse 14. Because thou shalt forget thy misery Thou shalt have such long and complete rest, that thou shalt scarcely remember thy labour.

As waters that pass away Like as the mountain floods,

15 For then shalt thou lift up thy face without spot; yea, thou shalt be steadfast, and shalt not fear:

16 Because thou shalt ^aforget thy misery, and remember it as waters that pass away:

17 And ^athine age ^ashall ^abe clearer than the noonday; thou shalt shine forth, thou shalt be as the morning.

18 And thou shalt be secure, because there is hope; yea, thou shalt dig about thee, and ^athou shalt take thy rest in safety.

19 Also thou shalt lie down, and none shall make thee afraid; yea, many shall ^amake suit unto thee.

20 But ^athe eyes of the wicked shall fail, and ^athey shall not escape, and ^atheir hope shall be as ^athe giving up of the ghost.

which sweep everything before them, and are speedily absorbed by the sandy plains over which they run; so shalt thou remember thy sufferings: they were wasting and ruinous for the time, but were soon over and gone.

Verse 17. Thine age shall be clearer than the noonday The rest of thy life shall be unclouded prosperity.

Thou shalt shine forth Thou shalt be in this unclouded state, as the sun in the firmament of heaven, giving light and heat to all around thee.

Thou shalt be as the morning Thus the sun of thy prosperity shall arise, and shine more and more unto the perfect day.

Verse 18. And thou shalt be secure Thou shalt not fear any further evils to disturb thy prosperity, for thou shalt have a well-grounded hope and confidence that thou shalt no more be visited by adversity.

Yea, thou shalt dig I believe this refers to the custom of digging for water in the places where they pitched their tents. It was a matter of high importance in Asiatic countries to find good wells of wholesome water; and they were frequently causes of contention among neighbouring chiefs, who sometimes stopped them up, and at other times seized them as their own. Zophar, in reference to all these sorts of contentions and petty wars about wells and springs, tells Job that in the state of prosperity to which he shall be brought by the good providence of God, he shall dig—find wells of living water; none shall contend with him; and he shall rest in safety, all the neighbouring chieftains cultivating friendship with him.

Verse 20. The eyes of the wicked shall fail They shall be continually looking out for help and deliverance; but their expectation shall be cut off.

And they shall not escape They shall receive the punishment due to their deserts; for God has his eye continually upon them, "And escape perishes from them." Flight from impending destruction is impossible.

And their hope shall be as the giving up of the ghost "And their hope an exhalation of breath," or a mere wish of the mind. They retain their hope to the last; and the last breath they breathe is the final and eternal termination of their hope. And thus endeth Zophar the Naamathite; whose premises were in general good, his conclusions legitimate; but his application of them to Job's case totally erroneous; because he still proceeded on the ground that Job was a wicked man, if not ostensibly, yet secretly; and that the sufferings he was undergoing were the means by which God was unmasking him to the view of men.

Zophar seems to have had a full conviction of the all-governing providence of God; and that those who served him with an honest and upright heart would be ever distinguished in the distribution of temporal good. He sees, however, to think that rewards and punishments were distributed in this life, and does not refer, at least very evidently, to a future state. Probably his information on subjects of divinity did not extend much beyond the grave; and we have much cause to thank God for a clearer dispensation. God grant that we may make a good use of it!

CHAPTER XII.

Job reproves the boasting of his friends, and shows their uncharitableness towards himself, 1-5; asserts that even the tabernacles of robbers prosper; and that, notwithstanding, God as the Governor of the world; a truth which is proclaimed by all parts of the creation whether animate or inanimate, and by the revolutions which take place in states, 6-25.

Verse 2. No doubt but ye are the people] This is a strong irony.

Verse 3. I am not inferior to you] I do not fall short of any of you in understanding, wisdom, learning, and experience.

Who knoweth not such things as these?] All your boasted wisdom consists only in strings of proverbs which are in every person's mouth, and are no proof of wisdom and experience in them that use them.

Verse 4. I am as one mocked of his neighbour] Though I am invoking God for help and salvation, yet my friends mock me in this most solemn and sacred work. But God answereth me.

The just upright man is laughed to scorn.] This is a very difficult verse, on which no two critics seem to be agreed.

The general sense is tolerably plain; but to emendations and conjectures there is no end.

Verse 6. The tabernacles of robbers prosper] Those who live by the plunder of their neighbours are often found in great secular prosperity; and they that provoke God by impiety and blasphemy live in a state of security and affluence. These are administrations of Providence which cannot be accounted for; yet the Judge of all the earth does right. Therefore prosperity and adversity are no evidences of a man's spiritual state, nor of the place he holds in the approbation or disapprobation of God.

Verse 10. In whose hand is the soul of every living thing] "The soul of all life."

And the breath of all mankind.] "And the spirit or breath of all flesh." Does not the first refer to the immortal soul, the principle of all intellectual life; and the latter to the breath, respiration, the grand means by which animal existence is continued?

Verse 11. Doth not the ear try words?] All these are common-place sayings. Ye have advanced nothing new; ye have cast no light upon the dispensations of Providence.

Verse 12. With the ancient is wisdom] Men who have lived in those primitive times, when the great facts of nature were recent, had much knowledge of those facts, and their length of days gave them such an opportunity of accumulating wisdom by experience, that they are deservedly considered as oracles.

Verse 13. With him is wisdom and strength] But all these things come from GOD; he is the Fountain of wisdom, and 11 ^mDoth not the ear try words? and the ⁿmouth taste his meat?

the Source of power. He alone can give us unerring counsel, and understanding to comprehend and act profitably by it.

Verse 14. He breaketh down] He alone can create, and he alone can destroy. Nothing can be annihilated but by the same Power that created it. Man, by chemical agency, may change its form; but to reduce it to nothing belongs to God alone.

He shutteth up a man] He often frustrates the best laid purposes, so that they can never be brought to good effect.

Verse 15. He withholdeth the waters] This is, I think, an allusion to the third day's work of the creation, Gen. i. 9. Thus the earth was drained, and the waters collected into seas, and bound to their particular places.

Also he sendeth them out] Here is also an allusion to the flood, for when he broke up the fountains of the great deep, then the earth was overturned. [Probably there is no historical reference in these verses.]

Verse 16. With him is strength and wisdom] Strength or power, springing from an exhaustless and infinite source of potency. With him is every excellence, in potentia and in esse. He borrows nothing, he derives nothing. As he is self-existent, so is he self-sufficient.

The deceived and the deceiver are his.] Some think this refers to the fall; even Satan the deceiver or beguiler, and Adam and Eve, the deceived or beguiled, are his. Satan, as this book shows, cannot act without especial permission; and man, whom the seducer thought to make his own property for ever, is claimed as the peculium or especial property of God, for the seed of the woman was then appointed to bruise the head of the serpent; and Jesus Christ has assumed the nature of man, and thus brought human nature into a state of fellowship with himself. Thus he who sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one, for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren; Heb. ii. 11.

Verse 17. He leadeth counsellors away spoiled] It is he who gives victory; through him even the counsellors—the great and chief men, are often led into captivity, and found among the spoils.

And maketh the judges fools.] He infatuates the judges. Does this refer to the foolish conduct of some of the Israelitish judges, such as Samson?

Verse 18. He looseth the bond of kings] He takes away 19 He leadeth princes away spoiled, and overthroweth the mighty.

20 ^a He removeth away ^b the speech of the trusty, and taketh away the understanding of the aged.

their splendid robes, and clothes them with sackcloth; or, he dissolves their authority, permits their subjects to rebel and overthrow the state, to bind them as captives, and despoil them of all their power, authority, and liberty.

Verse 19. He leadeth princes away spoiled, and overthroweth the mighty.] What multitudes of proofs of this does the history of the world present!

Verse 20. He removeth away the speech of the trusty] The faithful counsellor and the eloquent orator avail nothing: "God infatuates those whom he is determined to destroy."

The understanding of the aged.] Zekenim signifies the same here as our word elders or eldermen: which includes in itself the two ideas of seniority, or considerably advanced age, and official authority. Those can do no more to save a state which God designs to destroy, notwithstanding their great political wisdom and knowledge, than the child who can neither reason nor speak.

Verse 21. He poureth contempt upon princes] "Those of royal extraction."

Weakeneth the strength of the mighty.] Aphikim, the compact; the well-strung together; the nervous and sinewy. Perhaps there is a reference here to the crocodile, as the same term is applied, chap. xl. 13, to the compactness of his bones. What is human strength against this?

Verse 22. He discovereth deep things out of darkness] This may refer either to God's works in the great deep or to the plots and stratagems of wicked men, conspiracies that 23 ^f He increaseth the nations, and destroyeth them: he enlargeth the nations, and ^g straiteneth them again.

24 He taketh away the heart of the chief of the people of the earth, and ^h causeth them to wander in a wilderness where there is no way.

were deeply laid, well digested, and about to be produced into existence, when death, whose shadow had hitherto concealed them, is to glut himself with carnage.

Verse 23. He increaseth the nations] Mr. Good translates, He letteth the nations grow licentious. When, then, the cup of iniquity is full, God destroys the nation, by bringing or permitting to come against it a nation less pampered, more necessitous, and inured to toil.

He enlargeth the nations] All these things seem to occur as natural events, and the consequence of state intrigues, and such like causes; but when divine inspiration comes to pronounce upon them, they are shown to be the consequence of God's acting in his judgment and mercy; for it is by him that kings reign; it is he who putteth down one and raiseth up another.

Verse 24. He taketh away the heart of the chief] Suddenly deprives the leaders of great counsels, or mighty armies, of courage! so that, panic-struck, they flee when none pursue them, or are confounded when about to enter on the accomplishment of important designs.

And causeth them to wander in a wilderness] A plain allusion to the journeyings of the Israelites in the deserts of Arabia, on their way to the promised land.

Verse 25. They grope in the dark] See Deut. xxviii. 28, 29. And this also may refer to the unaccountable errors, transgressions, and judicial blindness of the Israelites in their journeying to the promised land; but it will apply also to the state of wicked nations under judicial blindness.

CHAPTER XIII.

Job defends himself against the accusations of his friends, and accuses them of endeavouring to pervert truth, 1-8.

Threatens them with God's judgments, 9-12. Begs some respite, and expresses strong confidence in God, 13-19. He pleads with God, and deploras his severe trials and sufferings, 20-28.

LO, mine eye hath seen all this, mine ear hath heard and understood this.

2 ^a What ye know, the same do I know also:

I am not inferior unto you.

3 ^b Surely I would speak to the Almighty, and I desire to reason with God.

^a Ch. xii. 3.—^b Ch. xxxiii. 8. xxxi. 38.

Verse 1. Lo, mine eye hath seen all this] Ye have brought nothing new to me; I know those maxims as well as you: nor have you any knowledge of which I am not possessed.

Verse 3. Surely I would speak to the Almighty] O that I wish I could speak to the Almighty!

I desire to reason with God.] He speaks here in reference to the proceedings in a court of justice. Ye pretend to be advocates for God, but ye are forgers of lies? O that God himself would appear! Before him I could soon prove my innocence of the evils with which ye charge me.

Verse 4. Ye are forgers of lies] Ye frame deceitful arguments: ye reason sophistically, and pervert truth and justice, in order to support your cause.

Physicians of no value.] Probably Job's friends had tried their skill on his body as well as on his mind. He therefore had, in his argument against their teaching, a double advantage: Your skill in divinity and physic is equal: in the 4 But ye are forgers of lies, ye are all physicians of no value.

5 O that ye would altogether hold your peace! and ^c it should be your wisdom.

^c Ch. vi. 21. xvi. 2.—^d Prov. xvii. 28.

former ye are forgers of lies; in the latter, ye are good-for-nothing physicians. The imagery in the former clause is chirurgical, and refers to the sewing together or connecting the divided sides of wounds: for topheley, which we translate forgers, comes from taphal, to fasten, tie, connect, sew together. And I question whether topheley here may not as well express surgeons, as rophesey, in the latter clause, physicians.

Verse 5. Hold your peace; and it should be your wisdom.] In Prov. xvii. 28 we have the following apophthegm: "Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise; and he that shutteth his lips, a man of understanding."

I may observe here that a silent man is not likely to be a fool; for a fool will be always prating, or according to another adage, a fool's bolt is soon shot. The Latins have the same proverb: "A wise man speaks little."

Verse 6. Hear now my reasoning] The speeches in this 7 * Will ye speak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for him?

8 Will ye accept his person? will ye contend for God?

9 Is it good that he should search you out? or as one man mocketh another, do ye so mock him?

10 He will surely reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons.

11 Shall not his excellency make you afraid? and his dread fall upon you?

12 Your remembrances are like unto ashes, your bodies to bodies of clay.

15 * Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him: but I will maintain mine own ways before him.

book are conceived as if delivered in a court of justice, different counsellors pleading against each other. Hence most of the terms are forensic.

Verse 7. Will ye speak wickedly for God? Will ye continue to assert that God could not thus afflict me, unless flagrant iniquity were found in my ways; for it is on this ground alone that ye pretend to vindicate the providence of God. Thus ye tell lies for God's sake, and thus ye wickedly contend for your Maker.

Verse 8. Will ye accept his person? Do you think to act by him as you would by a mortal; and, by telling lies in his favour, attempt to conciliate his esteem?

Verse 9. Is it good that he should search you out? Would it be to your credit God should try your hearts, and uncover the motives of your conduct? Were you tried as I am, how would you appear?

Do ye so mock him? Do ye think that you can deceive him; and by flattering speeches bring him to your terms, as you would bring an undiscerning, empty mortal, like yourselves?

Verse 10. He will surely reprove you. You may expect, not only his disapprobation, but his hot displeasure.

Verse 11. His dread fall upon you? The very apprehension of his wrath is sufficient to crush you to nothing.

Verse 12. Your remembrances are like unto ashes. Your memorable sayings are proverbs of dust. This he speaks in reference to the ancient and reputedly wise sayings which they had so copiously quoted against him.

Verse 13. Hold your peace. You have perverted righteousness and truth, and your pleadings are totally irrelevant to the case; you have travelled out of the road; you have left law and justice behind you; it is high time that you should have done.

Let come on me what will. I will now defend myself against you, and leave the cause to its issue.

Verse 14. Wherefore do I take my flesh in my teeth. A proverbial expression. I risk every thing on the justice of my cause.

Verse 15. Though he slay me. I have no dependence but God; I trust in him alone. Should he even destroy my life by this affliction, yet will I hope that when he has tried me, I shall come forth as gold.

But I will maintain mine own ways. I am so conscious of my innocence, that I fear not to defend myself from your aspersions, even in the presence of my Maker.

Verse 16. He also shall be my salvation. He will save me, because I trust in him.

An hypocrite. A wicked man shall never be able to stand before him; and were I a secret sinner, I should not dare to make this appeal.

Verse 18. Behold now, I have ordered. I am now ready 18 Behold now, I have ordered my cause; I know that I shall be justified.

19 Who is he that will plead with me? for now if I hold my tongue, I shall give up the ghost.

20 Only do not two things unto me: then will I not hide myself from thee.

21 Withdraw thine hand far from me: and let not thy dread make me afraid.

22 Then call thou, and I will answer: or let me speak, and answer thou me.

23 How many are mine iniquities and sins? make me to know my transgression and my sin.

24 Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and holdest me for thine enemy?

25 Wilt thou break a leaf driven to and fro? and wilt thou pursue the dry stubble?

26 For thou writest bitter things against me, and makest me to possess the iniquities of my youth.

27 Thou putttest my feet also in the stocks, and lookest narrowly unto all my paths; thou settest a print upon the heels of my feet.

28 And he, as a rotten thing, consumeth, as a garment that is moth-eaten.

to come into court, and care not how many I have to contend with, provided they speak truth.

Verse 19. Who is he that will plead with me? Let my accuser come forward; I will defend my cause against him. I shall give up the ghost. While he is stating his case, I will be so silent as scarcely to appear to breathe.

Verse 20. Only do not two things unto me. 1. Withdraw thine hand far from me—remove the heavy affliction which thy hand has inflicted. 2. Let not thy dread make me afraid—terrify me not with dreadful displays of thy majesty. The reasons of this request are sufficiently evident: 1. How can a man stand in a court of justice and plead for his life, when under grievous bodily affliction? 2. Is it to be expected that a man can be sufficiently recollected, and in self-possession, to plead for his life, when he is overwhelmed with the awful appearance of the judge, the splendour of the court, and the various ensigns of justice?

Verse 22. Then call thou. Begin thou first to plead, and I will answer for myself: or, I will first state and defend my own case, and then answer thou me.

Verse 23. How many are mine iniquities. What are the specific charges in this indictment? To say I must be a sinner to be thus afflicted, is saying nothing; tell me what are the sins, and show me the proofs.

Verse 24. Wherefore hidest thou thy face. Why is it that I no longer enjoy thy approbation?

Holdest me for thine enemy? Treatest me as if I were the vilest of sinners?

Verse 25. Wilt thou break a leaf. Is it becoming thy dignity to concern thyself with a creature so contemptible?

Verse 26. Thou writest bitter things against me. The indictment is filled with bitter or grievous charges, which, if proved, would bring me to bitter punishment.

The iniquities of my youth. The levities and indiscretions of my youth I acknowledge; but is this a ground on which to form charges against a man, the integrity of whose life is unimpeachable?

Verse 27. Thou putttest my feet also in the stocks. "In a clog," such as was tied to the feet of slaves, to prevent them from running away.

And lookest narrowly. Thou hast seen all my goings out and comings in; and there is no step I have taken in life with which thou art unacquainted.

Thou settest a print upon the heels of my feet. Some understand this as the mark left on the foot by the clog; or the owner's mark indented on this clog, or, Thou hast pursued me as a bound does his game, by the scent.

Verse 28. And he, as a rotten thing. I am like a vessel made of skin; rotten, because of old age; or like a garment corroded by the moth. So the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic understood it. The word he may refer to himself.

CHAPTER XIV.

The shortness, misery, and sinfulness of man's life, 1-4. The unavoidable necessity of death; and the hope of a general resurrection, 5-15. Job deploras his own state, and the general wretchedness of man, 16-22.

MAN that is born of a woman is ^a of few days, and ^b full of trouble.

2 ^c He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not.

3 And ^d dost thou open thine eyes upon such an one, and ^e bringest me into judgment with thee?

4 ^f Who ^g can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one.

5 ^h Seeing his days ⁱ are determined, the number of his months ^j are with thee, thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass;

6 ^k Turn from him, that he may ^l rest, till he shall accomplish, ^m as an hireling, his day.

The unavoidable necessity of death; and the hope of a general resurrection, 5-15. Job deploras his own state, and the general wretchedness of man, 16-22.

7 For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down ⁿ that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease.

8 Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground;

9 Yet through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant.

10 But man dieth, and ^o wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where ^p is he?

11 ^q As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up:

Verse 1. Man—born of a woman] There is a delicacy in the original, not often observed: "Adam born of a woman, few of days, and full of tremor." Adam, who did not spring from woman, but was immediately formed by God, had many days, for he lived nine hundred and thirty years; during which time neither sin nor death had multiplied in the earth, as they were found in the days of Job. But the Adam who springs now from woman, in the way of ordinary generation, has very few years. He seems born, not indeed to live, but to die; and, by living, he forfeits the title to life.

Verse 2. He cometh forth like a flower] This is a frequent image both in the Old and New Testament writers; I need not quote the places here, as the readers will find them all in the margin.

He fleeth also as a shadow] Himself as he appears among men, is only the shadow of his real, substantial, and eternal being. He is here compared to a vegetable; he springs up, bears his flower, is often nipped by disease, blasted by affliction, and at last cut down by death. The bloom of youth, even in the most prosperous state, is only the forerunner of hoary hairs, enfeebled muscles, impaired senses, general debility, anility, and dissolution!

Verse 3. Dost thou open thine eyes upon such an one] The whole of this chapter is directed to God alone; in no part of it does he take any notice of his friends.

Verse 4. Who can bring a clean thing] The text refers to man's original and corrupt nature. Every man that is born into the world comes into it in a corrupt or sinful state. This is called original sin; and is derived from fallen Adam, who is the stock, to the utmost ramifications of the human family. Not one human spirit is born into the world without this corruption of nature. All are impure and unholy; and from this principle of depravity all transgression is produced; and from this corruption of nature God alone can save.

Verse 5. Seeing his days are determined] The general term of human life is fixed by God himself; in vain are all attempts to prolong it beyond this term. Several attempts have been made in all nations to find an elixir that would expel all the seeds of disease, and keep men in continual health; but all these attempts have failed.

But, although man cannot pass his appointed bounds, yet he may so live as never to reach them; for folly and wickedness abridge the term of human life; and therefore the Psalmist says, Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days, Ps. lv. 23, for by indolence, intemperance, and disorderly passions, the life of man is shortened in cases innumerable. We are not to understand the bounds as applying to individuals, but to the race in general. Perhaps there is no case in which God has determined absolutely this man's age shall be so long, and shall neither be more nor less. The contrary supposition involves innumerable absurdities.

Verse 6. Turn from him, that he may rest] Cease to try him by afflictions and distresses, that he may enjoy some of the comforts of life, before he be removed from it: and thus, like a hireling, who is permitted by his master to take a little repose in the heat of the day, from severe labour, I shall also have a breathing time from affliction, before I come to that bound over which I cannot pass.

Verse 7. For there is hope of a tree] There are some trees which grow from cuttings; and some which, though pulled out of the earth, will, on being replanted, take root and resume their verdure. There are also certain trees, the fibres of which are so solid, that if after several years they be steeped in water, they resume their vigour, the tubes dilate, and the blossoms or flowers which were attached to them expand, as the rose of Jericho.

Verse 9. Through the scent of water it will bud] A fine metaphor: the water acts upon the decaying and perishing tree, as strong and powerful odours from musk, otto of roses, ammonia, &c., act on a fainting or swooning person.

Verse 10. But man dieth] No human being ever can spring from the dead body of man; that wasteth away, corrupts, and is dissolved; for the man dies: and when he breathes out his last breath, and his body is reduced to dust, then where is he?

Verse 11. The waters fail from the sea] As the waters are evaporated from the sea, and the river in passing over the sandy desert is partly exsiccated, and partly absorbed; and yet the waters of the sea are not exhausted; so man is imperceptibly removed from his fellows by death and dissolution: yet the human race is still continued, the population of the earth being kept up by perpetual generations.

Verse 12. So man lieth down] He falls asleep in his bed of earth.

And riseth not] Men shall not, like cut down trees and plants, reproduce their like; nor shall they arise till the heavens are no more, till the earth and all its works are burnt up, and the general resurrection of human beings shall take place. Surely it would be difficult to twist this passage to the denial of the resurrection of the body. Neither can these expressions be fairly understood as implying Job's belief in the materiality of the soul, and that the whole man sleeps from the day of his death to the morning of the resurrection. We have already seen that Job makes a distinction between the animal life and rational soul in man; and it is most certain that the doctrine of the materiality of the soul, and its sleep till the resurrection, has no place in the sacred records.

Verse 13. O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave] Dreadful as death is to others, I shall esteem it a high privilege; it will be to me a covert from the wind and from the tempest of this affliction and distress.

Keep me secret] Hide my soul with thyself, where my enemies cannot invade my repose.

Job does not appear to have the same thing in view when he entreats God to hide him in the grave; and to keep him secret, until his wrath be past. The former relates to the body; the latter, to the spirit.

13 O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time, and remember me!

14 If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time * will I wait, ^b till my change come.

15 * Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands.

16 ^d For now thou numberest my steps: dost thou not watch over my sin?

17 * My transgression is sealed up in a bag, and thou sewest up mine iniquity.

* Ch. xiii. 15.—^b Ver. 7. 1 Cor. xv. 51. 2 Cor. iii. 18. Phil. iii. 21.—^d Ch. xiii. 23.—^d Ch. x. 6, 14. xiii. 27. xxxi. 4. xxxiv. 21. Ps. lvi. 8. cxxxix. 1, 2, 3. Prov. v. 21. Jer. xxxii. 19.—^d Deut.

That thou wouldest appoint me a set time] As he had spoken of the death of his body before, and the secreting of his spirit in the invisible world, he must refer here to the resurrection; for what else can be said to be an object of desire to one whose body is mingled with the dust?

And remember me!] When my body has paid that debt of death which it owes to thy divine justice, and the morning of the resurrection is come, when it may be said thy wrath, "thy displeasure," against the body is past, it having suffered the sentence denounced by thyself; then remember me—raise my body, unite my spirit to it, and receive both into thy glory for ever.

Verse 14. If a man die, shall he live again?] Here is no doubt, but a strong persuasion, of the certainty of the general resurrection.

All the days of my appointed time] "Of my warfare;" see on chap. vii. 1. Will I await till my renovation come. This word is used to denote the springing again of grass, Ps. xc. 5, 6, after it had once withered, which is in itself a very expressive emblem of the resurrection.

Verse 15. Thou shalt call] Thou shalt say, There shall be time no longer: Awake ye dead! and come to judgment! And I will answer thee] My dissolved frame shall be united at thy call; and body and soul shall be rejoined.

Thou wilt have a desire] "Thou wilt part with desire;" or, "Thou wilt yearn over the work of thy hands." Man is one of the noblest works of God. He has exhibited him as a master-piece of his creative skill, power, and goodness. Nothing less than the strongest call upon justice could have induced him thus to destroy the work of his hands. No wonder that he has an earnest desire towards it; and that although man dies, God is represented as earnestly longing for the ultimate reviviscence of his sleeping dust. He cannot, he will not, forget the work of his hands.

Verse 16. For now thou numberest my steps] ALTHOUGH thou, &c. Though thou, by thy conduct towards me, seemest bent on my utter destruction, yet thou delightest in mercy, and I shall be saved.

Verse 17. My transgression is sealed up in a bag] An allusion to the custom of collecting evidence of state trans-

18 And surely the mountain falling 'cometh to nought, and the rock is removed out of his place.

19 The waters wear the stones: thou ^a washest away the things which grow out of the dust of the earth; and thou destroyest the ^b hope of man.

gressions, sealing them up in a bag, and presenting them to judges and officers of state to be examined, in order to trial and judgment. Some suppose the allusion is to money, sealed up in bags; which is common in the East. This includes two ideas: 1. Job's transgressions were all numbered; not one was passed by. 2. They were sealed up; so that none of them could be lost.

Verse 18. The mountain falling cometh to nought] Every thing in nature is exposed to mutability and decay:—even mountains themselves may fall from their bases, and be dashed to pieces; or be suddenly swallowed up by an earthquake; and, by the same means, the strongest and most massive rocks may be removed.

Verse 19. The waters wear the stones] Even the common stones are affected in the same way. Were even earthquakes and violent concussions of nature wanting, the action of water, either running over them as a stream, or even falling upon them in drops, will wear these stones.

Thou washest away the things] Alluding to sudden falls of rain occasioning floods, by which the fruits of the earth are swept away; and thus the hope of man—the grain for his household, and provender for his cattle, is destroyed.

Verse 20. Thou prevailest for ever against him] It is impossible for him to withstand thee; every stroke of thine brings him down.

Thou changest his countenance] Probably an allusion to the custom of covering the face, when the person was condemned, and sending him away to execution. [Or more probably to the disfiguration of the countenance by the death struggle.]

Verse 21. His sons come to honour] When dead, he is equally indifferent and unconscious whether his children have met with a splendid or oppressive lot in life; for as to this world, when man dies, in that day all his thoughts perish.

Verse 22. But his flesh upon him shall have pain] The sum of the life of man is this, pain of body and distress of soul; and he is seldom without the one or the other, and often oppressed by both. Thus ends Job's discourse on the miserable state and condition of man.

CHAPTER XV.

Eliphaz charges Job with impiety in attempting to justify himself, 1-13; asserts the utter corruption and abominable state of man, 14-16; and, from his own knowledge and the observations of the ancients, shows the desolations to which the wicked are exposed, and insinuates that Job has such calamities to dread, 17-35.

THEN answered Eliphaz the Temanite, and said,

2 Should a wise man utter ^a vain knowledge, and fill his belly with the east wind?

* Heb. knowledge of wind.—^b Heb. thou makest void.

Verse 2. Should a wise man utter vain knowledge] Or rather, Should a wise man utter the science of wind? A science without solidity or certainty.

3 Should he reason with unprofitable talk? or with speeches wherewith he can do no good?

4 Yea, ^b thou castest off fear, and restrainest ^c prayer before God.

* Or, speech.

And fill his belly with the east wind?] Batem, which we translate belly, is used to signify any part of the cavity of the body, whether the region of the thorax or abdomen;

5 For thy mouth uttereth thine iniquity, and thou chooseth the tongue of the crafty.

6 Thy own mouth condemneth thee, and not I: yea, thine own lips testify against thee.

7 Art thou the first man that was born? or wast thou made before the hills?

8 Hast thou heard the secret of God? and dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself?

9 What knowest thou, that we know not? what understandest thou, which is not in us?

10 With us are both the gray-headed and very aged men, much elder than thy father.

11 Are the consolations of God small with thee? is there any secret thing with thee?

12 Why doth thine heart carry thee away? and what do thy eyes wink at,

13 That thou turnest thy spirit against God, and lettest such words go out of thy mouth?

14 What is man, that he should be clean? and he which is born of a woman, that he should be righteous?

15 Behold, he putteth no trust in his saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight.

16 How much more abominable and filthy is man, which drinketh iniquity like water?

17 I will shew thee, hear me; and that which I have seen I will declare;

18 Which wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid it:

19 Unto whom alone the earth was given, and no stranger passed among them.

20 The wicked man travaileth with pain all his days, and the number of years is hidden to the oppressor.

21 A dreadful sound is in his ears: in prosperity the destroyer shall come upon him.

22 He believeth not that he shall return out of darkness, and he is waited for of the sword.

here it evidently refers to the wings, and may include the cheeks and faucets. The east wind, kadim, is a very stormy wind in the Levant, supposed to be the same with that called by the Greeks euroclydon, the east storm, mentioned Acts xvii. 14. Eliphaz, by these words, seems to intimate that Job's speech was a perfect storm or tempest of words.

Verse 3. Should he reason with unprofitable talk? Should a man talk disrespectfully of his Maker, or speak to him without reverence? and should he suppose that he has proved any thing, when he has uttered words of little meaning, and used sound instead of sense?

Verse 4. Thou castest off fear. Thou hast no reverence for God.

And restrainest prayer. Instead of humbling thyself, and making supplication to thy Judge, thou spendest thy time in arraigning his providence, and justifying thyself.

When a man has any doubts whether he has grieved God's Spirit, and his mind feels troubled, it is much better for him to go immediately to God, and ask forgiveness, than spend any time in finding excuses for his conduct, or labouring to divert it of its seeming obliquity.

Verse 5. For thy mouth uttereth. In attempting to justify thyself, thou hast added iniquity to sin, and hast endeavoured to impute blame to thy Maker.

The tongue of the crafty. Thou hast varnished thy own conduct, and used sophistical arguments to defend thyself. Thou resemblest those cunning persons, arumim, who derive their skill and dexterity from the old serpent, "the nachash, who was arum, subtle or crafty, beyond all the beasts of the field." Thy wisdom is not from above, but from beneath.

Verse 7. Art thou the first man that was born? Literally, "Wert thou born before Adam?" Or art thou like Adam, in his first state? It does not become the fallen descendant of a fallen parent to talk as thou dost.

Made before the hills? Did God create thee in the beginning of his ways? or wert thou the first intelligent creature his hands have formed?

Verse 8. Hast thou heard the secret of God? "Hast thou hearkened in God's council?" Wert thou one of the celestial cabinet, when God said, Let us make man in our image, and in our likeness?

Dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself? Dost thou wish us to understand that God's counsels were revealed to none but thyself, and that we should give implicit credence to whatsoever thou art pleased to speak? These are all strong sarcastic questions, and apparently uttered with great contempt.

Verse 9. What knowest thou. Is it likely that thy intellect is greater than ours; and that thou hast cultivated it better than we have done ours?

What understandest thou. Or, Dost thou understand anything? and it is not with us? Show us any point of knowledge possessed by thyself, of which we are ignorant.

Verse 10. With us are both the gray-headed. It is very likely that Eliphaz refers to himself and his friends in this verse, and not either to the old men of their tribes, or to the masters by whom they themselves were instructed. Eliphaz seems to have been the eldest of these sages; and, therefore he takes the lead in each part of this dramatic poem.

Verse 11. Are the consolations of God small with thee? Scarcely any two translators or interpreters agree in the translation, or even meaning, of this verse. The sense is plain enough:—"Hast thou been so unfaithful to God, that he has withdrawn his consolations from thy heart? And is there any secret thing, any bosom sin, which thou wilt not give up, that has thus provoked thy Maker?"

Verse 12. Why doth thine heart carry thee away? Why is it that thou dost conceive and entertain such high sentiments of thyself?

And what do thy eyes wink at? With what splendid opinion of thyself is thine eye dazzled? Perhaps there is an allusion here to that sparkling in the eye which is excited by sensations of joy, and pleasing objects of sight, or to that furious rolling of the eyes observed in deranged persons. This latter seems to agree best with the words of the text, and with the context.

Verse 13. That thou turnest thy spirit against God. The ideas here seem to be taken from an archer, who turns his eyes and his spirit—his desire, against the object which he wishes to hit; and then lets loose his arrow, that it may attain the mark.

Verse 14. What is man, that he should be clean? What is weak, sickly, dying, miserable man, that he should be clean? This is the import of the original word enosh.

And—born of a woman, that he should be righteous. It appears, from many passages in the sacred writings, that natural birth was supposed to be a defilement; and that every man born into the world was in a state of moral pollution. Perhaps the word yitsdak should be translated, that he should justify himself, and not, that he should be righteous.

Verse 15. Behold, he putteth no trust in his saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight.

Eliphaz uses the same mode of speech, chap. iv. 17, 18; where see the notes. Nothing is immutable but God: saints may fall; angels may fall; all their goodness is derived and dependent. The heavens themselves have no purity compared with his.

Verse 16. How much more abominable and filthy is man. As in the preceding verse it is said, he putteth no trust in his saints, it has appeared both to translators and commentators that the original words should be rendered how much LESS, not how much MORE: How much less would he put confidence in man, who is filthy and abominable in his nature, and profligate in his practice, as he drinks down iniquity like water? This is a finished character of a BAD man; he hungers and thirsts after sin.

Verse 17. I will shew thee, hear me; and that which I have seen I will declare. Eliphaz is now about to quote a whole collection of wise sayings from the ancients; all good enough in themselves, but sinfully misapplied to the case of Job.

Verse 19. Unto whom alone the earth was given. Some think that Noah and his sons may be intended; as it is certain that the whole earth was given to them, when there were no strangers—no other family of mankind, in being.

23 He ^a wandereth abroad for bread, saying, Where is it? he knoweth that ^b the day of darkness is ready at his hand.

24 Trouble and anguish shall make him afraid; they shall prevail against him, as a king ready to the battle.

25 For he stretcheth out his hand against God, and strengtheneth himself against the Almighty.

26 He runneth upon him, even on his neck, upon the thick bosses of his bucklers:

27 ^c Because he covereth his face with his fatness, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks.

But, system apart, the words seem to apply more clearly to the Israelites.

• Verse 20. The wicked man travaileth with pain] This is a most forcible truth: a life of sin is a life of misery; and he that will sin must suffer. The sense of the original, mithcholel, is, he torments himself; and he alone is author of his own sufferings, and of his own ruin.

Verse 21. A dreadful sound is in his ears] If he be an oppressor or tyrant, he can have no rest; he is full of suspicions that the cruelties he has exercised on others shall be one day exercised on himself; for even in his prosperity he may expect the destroyer to rush upon him.

Verse 22. That he shall return out of darkness] If he take but a few steps in the dark, he expects the dagger of the assassin. Some think the passage should be understood to signify that he has no hope of a resurrection; he can never escape from the tomb. This I doubt: in the days of the writer of this book, the doctrine of a future judgment was understood in every part of the East where the knowledge of the true God was diffused.

Verse 23. He wandereth abroad for bread] He is reduced to a state of the utmost indigence; he who was once in affluence requires a morsel of bread, and can scarcely by begging procure enough to sustain life.

Is ready at his hand.] Is beyado, in his hand—in his possession. As he cannot get bread, he must soon meet death.

Verse 24. Trouble and anguish shall make him afraid] He shall be in continual fear of death; being now brought down by adversity, and stripped of all the goods which he had got by oppression, his life is a mark for the meanest assassin.

As a king ready to the battle.] The acts of his wickedness and oppression are as numerous as the troops he commands; and when he comes to meet his enemy in the field, he is not only deserted but slain by his troops.

Verse 25. He stretcheth out his hand against God] While in power he thought himself supreme. He not only did not acknowledge God, by whom kings reign, but stretched out his hand—used his power, not to protect, but to oppress those over whom he had supreme rule; and thus strengthened himself against the Almighty.

Verse 26. He runneth upon him] This refers to God, who, like a mighty conquering hero, marches against the ungodly, rushes upon him, seizes him by the throat, which the mail by which it is encompassed cannot protect; neither his shield nor spear can save him.

Verse 27. Because he covereth his face] He has lived in luxury and excess; and like a man overloaded with flesh, he cannot defend himself against the strong gripe of his adversary.

To the lust of power and the schemes of ambition there are no bounds; but see the end of such persons: the haughty spirit precedes a fall; their palaces become desolate; and their heaven is reduced to a chaos.

Verse 28. He dwelleth in desolate cities] It is sometimes the fate of a tyrant to be obliged to take up his habitation in some of those cities which have been ruined by his wars, and in a house so ruinous as to be ready to fall into heaps.

Verse 29. He shall not be rich] The threatened evils are, 1. He shall not be rich, though he labours greatly to acquire riches. 2. His substance shall not continue—God will blast it, and deprive him of power to preserve it. 3. Neither shall he prolong the perfection thereof—all his works shall perish, for God will blot out his remembrance from under heaven.

Verse 30. He shall not depart out of darkness] 4. He shall be in continual afflictions and distress. 5. The flame shall dry up his branches—his children shall be cut off by sudden judgments. 6. He shall pass away by the breath of his mouth; for by the breath of his mouth doth God slay the wicked.

Verse 31. Let not him that is deceived] 7. He has many vain imaginations of obtaining wealth, power, pleasure, and happiness; but he is deceived, and he finds that he has trusted bahshav, in a lie; and this lie is his recompence.

Verse 32. It shall be accomplished before his time] 8. He shall be removed by a violent death, and not live out half his days. 9. And his branch shall not be green—there shall be no scion from his roots; all his posterity shall fail.

Verse 33. He shall shake off his unripe grape] 10. Whatever children he may have, they shall never survive him, nor come to mature age. They shall be like wind-fall grapes and blasted olive blossoms.

Verse 34. The congregation of hypocrites] 11. Job is here classed with hypocrites, or rather the impious of all kinds. The congregation, or adath, society, of such, shall be desolate, or a barren rock.

Fire shall consume the tabernacles of bribery.] 12. Another insinuation against Job, that he had perverted justice and judgment, and had taken bribes.

Verse 35. They conceive mischief] The figure here is both elegant and impressive. The wicked conceive mischief, from the seed which Satan sows in their hearts; in producing which they travail with many pangs (for sin is a sore labour); and at last their womb produces fraud or deception. This is an accursed birth, from an iniquitous conception. St. James gives the figure at full length, most beautifully touched in all its parts; Jam. i. 15.

Poor Job! what a fight of affliction had he to contend with! His body wasted and tortured with sore disease; his mind harassed by Satan; and his heart wrung with the unkindness and false accusations of his friends. No wonder he was greatly agitated, often distracted, and sometimes even thrown off his guard. However, all his enemies were chained; and beyond that chain they could not go. God was his unseen Protector, and did not suffer his faithful servant to be greatly moved.

5 For thy mouth ^a uttereth thine iniquity, and thou choosest the tongue of the crafty.
 6 ^b Thine own mouth condemneth thee, and not I: yea, thine own lips testify against thee.
 7 Art thou the first man that was born? ^c or wast thou made before the hills?
 8 Hast thou heard the secret of God? and dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself?
 9 What knowest thou, that we know not? what understandest thou, which is not in us?
 10 With us are both the gray-headed and very aged men, much elder than thy father.
 11 Are the consolations of God small with thee? is there any secret thing with thee?
 12 Why doth thine heart carry thee away? and what do thy eyes wink at, 13 That thou turnest thy spirit against God, and tellest such words go out of thy mouth?

here it evidently refers to the lungs, and may include the cheeks and faucets. The east wind, kadim, is a very stormy wind in the Levant, supposed to be the same with that called by the Greeks euroclydon, the east storm, mentioned Acts xvii. 14. Eliphaz, by these words, seems to intimate that Job's speech was a perfect storm or tempest of words.

Verse 8. Should he reason with unprofitable talk? Should a man talk disrespectfully of his Maker, or speak to him without reverence? and should he suppose that he has proved any thing, when he has uttered words of little meaning, and used sound instead of sense?

Verse 4. Thou castest off fear? Thou hast no reverence for God.

And restrainest prayer? Instead of humbling thyself, and making supplication to thy Judge, thou spondest thy time in arraigning his providence, and justifying thyself.

When a man has any doubts whether he has grieved God's Spirit, and his mind feels troubled, it is much better for him to go immediately to God, and ask forgiveness, than spend any time in finding excuses for his conduct, or labouring to divest it of its seeming obliquity.

Verse 5. For thy mouth uttereth] In attempting to justify thyself, thou hast added iniquity to sin, and hast endeavoured to impute blame to thy Maker.

The tongue of the crafty.] Thou hast varnished thy own conduct, and used sophistical arguments to defend thyself. Thou resemblest those cunning persons, arumim, who derive their skill and deceitry from the old serpent. "the nachash, who was arum, subtle or crafty, beyond all the beasts of the field." Thy wisdom is not from above, but from beneath.

Verse 7. Art thou the first man that was born? Literally, "Wert thou born before Adam?" Or art thou like Adam, in his first state? It does not become the fallen descendant of a fallen parent to talk as thou dost.

Made before the hills?] Did God create thee in the beginning of his ways? or wert thou the first intelligent creature his hands have formed?

Verse 8. Hast thou heard the secret of God?] "Hast thou hearkened in God's council?" Wert thou one of the celestial cabinet, when God said, Let us make man in our image, and in our likeness?

Dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself?] Dost thou wish us to understand that God's counsels were revealed to none but thyself, and that we should give implicit credence to whatsoever thou art pleased to speak? These are all strong sarcastic questions, and apparently uttered with great contempt.

Verse 9. What knowest thou?] Is it likely that thy intellect is greater than ours; and that thou hast cultivated it better than we have done ours?

What understandest thou?] Or, Dost thou understand anything? and it is not with us? Show us any point of knowledge possessed by thyself, of which we are ignorant.

Verse 10. With us are both the gray-headed?] It is very likely that Eliphaz refers to himself and his friends in this verse, and not either to the old man of their tribes, or to the masters by whom they themselves were instructed. Eliphaz he which is born of a woman, that he should be righteous?

15 Behold, he putteth no trust in his saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight.

16 How much more abominable and filthy is man, which drinketh iniquity like water?

17 I will shew thee, hear me; and that which I have seen I will declare;

19 Unto whom alone the earth was given, and no stranger passed among them.

20 The wicked man travaileth with pain all his days, and the number of years is hidden to the oppressor.

21 A dreadful sound is in his ears: in prosperity the destroyer shall come upon him.

22 He believeth not that he shall return out of darkness, and he is waited for of the sword.

seems to have been the eldest of these sages; and, therefore he takes the lead in each part of this dramatic poem.

Verse 11. Are the consolations of God small with thee?] Scarcely any two translators or interpreters agree in the translation, or even meaning, of this verse. The sense is plain enough:—"Hast thou been so unfaithful to God, that he has withdrawn his consolations from thy heart? And is there any secret thing, any bosom sin, which thou wilt not give up, that has thus provoked thy Maker?"

Verse 12. Why doth thine heart carry thee away?] Why is it that thou dost conceive and entertain such high sentiments of thyself?

And what do thy eyes wink at?] With what splendid opinion of thyself is thine eye dazzled? Perhaps there is an allusion here to that sparkling in the eye which is excited by sensations of joy, and pleasing objects of sight, or to that furious rolling of the eyes observed in deranged persons. This latter seems to agree best with the words of the text, and with the context.

Verse 13. That thou turnest thy spirit against God?] The ideas here seem to be taken from an archer, who turns his eye and his spirit—his desire, against the object which he wishes to hit; and then lets loose his arrow, that it may attain the mark.

Verse 14. What is man, that he should be clean?] What is weak, sickly, dying, miserable man, that he should be clean? This is the import of the original word enosh.

And—born of a woman, that he should be righteous?] It appears, from many passages in the sacred writings, that natural birth was supposed to be a defilement; and that every man born into the world was in a state of moral pollution. Perhaps the word yitsdak should be translated, that he should justify himself, and not, that he should be righteous.

Eliphaz uses the same mode of speech, chap. iv. 17, 18; where see the notes. Nothing is immutable but God: saints may fall; angels may fall; all their goodness is derived and dependent. The heavens themselves have no purity compared with his.

Verse 16. How much more abominable and filthy is man?] As in the preceding verse it is said, he putteth no trust in his saints, it has appeared both to translators and commentators that the original words should be rendered how much less, not how much more: How much less would he put confidence in man, who is filthy and abominable in his nature, and profligate in his practice, as he drinks down iniquity like water? This is a finished character of a bad man; he hungereth and thirsteth after sin.

Verse 17. I will shew thee, hear me; and that which I have seen I will declare.] Eliphaz is now about to quote a whole collection of wise sayings from the ancients; all good enough in themselves, but unwisely misapplied to the case of Job.

CHAPTER XVI

Job replies to Eliphaz, and through him to all his friends, who, instead of comforting him, had added to his misfortunes; and shows that, had they been in his circumstances, he would have treated them in a different manner, 1-5. Enters into an affecting detail of his sufferings, 6-16. Consols himself with the consciousness of his own innocence, of which he takes God to witness, and patiently expects a termination of all his sufferings by death, 17-22.

THEN Job answered and said,
 2 I have heard many such things :
 * miserable ^b comforters are ye all.
 3 Shall ^c vain words have an end ? or what emboldeneth thee that thou answerest ?
 4 I also could speak as ye do : if your soul were in my soul's stead, I could heap up words against you, and ^d shake mine head at you.
 5 But I would strengthen you with my mouth, and the moving of my lips should assuage your grief.
 6 Though I speak, my grief is not asswaged and though I forbear, ^e what am I eased ?
 7 But now he hath made me weary : thou hast made desolate all my company.
 8 And thou hast filled me with wrinkles, which is a witness against me : and my leanness rising up in me beareth witness to my face.
 9 ^f He teareth me in his wrath, who hateth me : he gnasheth upon me with his teeth ; ^g mine enemy sharpeneth his eyes upon me.
 10 They have ^h gaped upon me with their mouth : they ⁱ have smitten me upon the cheek reproachfully ; they have ^j gathered themselves together against me.

 11 God ^k hath ^l delivered me to the ungodly, and turned me over into the hands of the wicked.
 12 I was at ease, but he hath broken me asunder : he hath also taken me by my neck, and shaken me to pieces, and ^m set me up for his mark.
 13 His archers compass me round about, he cleaveth my reins asunder, and doth not spare, he poureth out my gall upon the ground.
 14 He breaketh me with breach upon breach, he runneth upon me like a giant.
 15 I have sewed sackcloth upon my skin, and ⁿ defiled my horn in the dust.
 16 My face is foul with weeping, and on my eyelids is the shadow of death.
 17 Not for any injustice in mine hands : also my prayer is pure.
 18 O earth, cover not thou my blood, and ^o let my cry have no place.
 19 Also now, behold, ^p my witness is in heaven, and my record is on ^q high.

* Or, troublesome —^b Ch. xli. 4.—^c Heb. words of wind —^d Ps. xxii 7. cix. 25. Lam. ii. 16.—^e Heb. what goeth from me?—^f Ch. x. 16, 17.—^g Ch. xlii. 24 —^h Ps. xxii. 13.—ⁱ Lam. iii. 30. Mto. v. 1.—^j Ps.

Verse 2. I have heard many such things] These sayings of the ancients are not strange to me ; but they do not apply to my case : ye see me in affliction ; ye should endeavour to console me. This ye do not ; and yet ye pretend to do it !

Verse 3. Vain words] Literally, words of air. What emboldeneth thee] Thou art totally ignorant of the business ; what then can induce thee to take part in this discussion ?

Verse 4. I also could speak] It is probably better to render some of these permissives or potential verbs literally in the future tense, as in the Hebrew : I also will speak.

If your soul were in my soul's stead] Even when I might not choose to go further in assertion, I might shake my head by way of insinuation that there was much more behind, of which I did not choose to speak ; but would this be right ? That such sayings are in memory, is no proof that they were either made for me, or apply to my case. [The shaking of the head in this verse is a gesture of mockery at misfortune.]

Verse 6. Though I speak] But it will be of no avail thus to speak ; for reprehensions of your conduct will not serve to mitigate my sufferings.

Verse 7. But now he hath made me weary] Perhaps Job alluded here to his own afflictions and the desolation of his family. Thou hast made me weary with continual affliction ; my strength is quite exhausted ; and thou hast made desolate all my company, not leaving me a single child to continue my name, or to comfort me in sickness or old age.

Verse 8. Thou hast filled me with wrinkles] If Job's disease were the elephantiasis, in which the whole skin is wrinkled as the skin of the elephant, from which this species of leprosy has taken its name, these words would apply most forcibly to it ; but the whole passage, through its obscurity, has been variously rendered.

Verse 9. He teareth me in his wrath] Who the person is that is spoken of in this verse, and onward to the end of the fourteenth, has been a question on which commentators have greatly differed. Some think God, others Eliphaz, is intended : I think neither. Probably God permitted Satan to show himself to Job ; and the horrible form which he and his demons assumed increased the misery under which Job had already suffered so much. All the expressions, from this to the end of the fourteenth verse, may be easily understood on this principle.

If we consider all these expressions as referring to Job's three friends, we must, in that case, acknowledge that the figures are all strained to an insufferable height, so as not to be justified by any figure of speech. [The best critics refer the passage to God.]

Verse 13. His archers compass me] Rabbain, "his great ones." The Syriac, Arabic, and Chaldee, his arrows.

Verse 15. I have sewed sackcloth] Sack, a word that has passed into almost all languages, as I have already had occasion to notice.

Defiled my horn in the dust.] The horn was an emblem of power ; and the metaphor was originally taken from beasts, such as the urus, wild ox, buffalo, or perhaps the rhinoceros, who were perceived to have so much power in their horns. Hence a horn was frequently worn on crowns and helmets, as is evident on ancient coins.

Defiling or rolling the horn in the dust, signifies the disgrace or destruction of power, authority, and eminence.

Verse 16. On my eyelids is the shadow of death.] Death is now fast approaching me ; already his shadow is projected over me.

Verse 17. Not for any injustice] I must assert, even with my last breath, that the charges of my friends against me are groundless. I am afflicted unto death, but not on account of my iniquities.

Also my prayer is pure] I am no hypocrite, God knoweth.

Verse 18. O earth, cover not thou my blood] This is evidently an allusion to the murder of Abel, and the verse has been understood in two different ways : 1. Job here calls for justice against his destroyers. His blood is his life, which he considers as taken away by violence, and therefore calls for vengeance. Let my blood cry against my murderers, as the blood of Abel cried against Cain. 2. It has been supposed that the passage means that Job considered himself accused of shedding innocent blood ; and conscious of his own perfect innocence, he prays that the earth may not cover any blood shed by him. I therefore prefer the first sense, which is sufficiently natural, and quite in the manner of Job in his impassioned querulousness.

Verse 19. My witness is in heaven] I appeal to God for my innocence.

Verse 20. My friends scorn me] They deride and insult me, but my eye is towards God; I look to him to vindicate my cause.

Verse 21. O that one might plead] Let me only have liberty to plead with God, as a man hath with his fellow.

Verse 22. When a few years are come] I prefer Mr. Good's Version :

God, as a man pleadeth for his * neighbour!
22 When ^d a few years are come, then I shall * go the way whence I shall not return.

* Or, friend.—^d Heb. years of number.—* Eccles. xii. 5.

"But the years numbered to me are come,

And I must go the way whence I shall not return."

Job could not, in his present circumstances, expect a few years of longer life; from his own conviction he was expecting death every hour. See next verse.

I have said on ver. 9 that a part of Job's sufferings probably arose from appalling representations made to his eye or to his imagination by Satan and his agents. I think this neither irrational nor improbable. That he and his demons have power to make themselves manifest on especial occasions, has been credited in all ages of the world: not by the weak, credulous, and superstitious only, but also by the wisest, the most learned, and the best of men.

CHAPTER XVII.

Job complains of the injustice of his friends, and compares his present state of want and woe with his former honour and affluence, 1-6. God's dealings with him will even astonish upright men; yet the righteous shall not be discouraged, but hold on his way, 7-9. Asserts that there is not a wise man among his friends, and that he has no expectation of a speedy death, 10-16.

MY ^a breath is corrupt, my days are extinct,
^b the graves are ready for me.

2 Are there not mockers with me? and doth not mine eyes ^c continue in their ^d provocation?

3 Lay down now, put me in a surety with thee; who is he that ^e will strike hands with me?

4 For thou hast hid their heart from understanding: therefore shalt thou not exalt them.

Verse 1. My breath is corrupt] Rather, my spirit is oppressed. There is probably a reference here to cemeteries, where were several niches, in each of which a corpse was deposited.

Verse 2. Are there not mockers with me?] This has been variously translated. The general meaning is sufficiently plain. ["Truly mockery surrounds me." Delitzsch.]

Verse 3. Lay down now] Deposit a pledge; stake your conduct against mine, and your life and soul on the issue; let the cause come before God; let him try it; and see whether any of you shall be justified by him, while I am condemned.

Verse 4. For thou hast hid their heart] This address is to God; and here he is represented as doing that which in the course of his providence he only permits to be done.

Shalt thou not exalt them.] This was exactly fulfilled: not one of Job's friends was exalted; on the contrary, God condemned the whole; and they were not received into the divine favour till Job sacrificed, and made intercession for them.

Verse 5. He that speaketh flattery] The general sense is, The man who expects much from his friends will be disappointed: while depending on them his children's eyes may fail in looking for bread.

Verse 6. He hath made me also a by-word] My afflictions and calamities have become a subject of general conversation, so that my poverty and affliction are proverbial. As poor as Job, As afflicted as Job, are proverbs that have even reached our times, and are still in use.

Aforetime I was as a tabret.] Instead of lephanim, I would read liphneyhem, and then the clause might be translated thus: I shall be as a furnace, or consuming fire

6 He hath made me also a 'by-word of the people; and ^a aforetime I was as a tabret.

7 ^b Mine eye also is dim by reason of sorrow, and all ^c my members are as a shadow.

8 Upright men shall be astonished at this, and the innocent shall stir up himself against the hypocrite.

(Tophet) before them. They shall have little reason to mock when they see the end of the Lord's dealings with me; my example will be a consuming fire to them, and my false friends will be confounded. [A better translation is: I became as one in whose face they spit."]

Verse 7. Mine eye also is dim] Continual weeping impairs the sight; and indeed any affliction that debilitates the frame generally, weakens the sight in the same proportion.

All my members are as a shadow] Nothing is left but skin and bone. I am but the shadow of my former self.

Verse 8. Upright men shall be astonished] In several of these verses Job is supposed to speak prophetically of his future restoration, and of the good which religious society should derive from the history of his original affluence, consequent poverty and affliction, and final restoration to health, peace, and prosperity. The upright will receive the account with astonishment, and wonder; while hypocrites—false professors and the sour-headed godly, shall be unmasked, and innocent men, whether in affliction or affluence, shall be known to be favourites of the Almighty.

Verse 9. The righteous also shall hold on his way] There shall be no doubt concerning the dispensations of the divine providence. My case shall illustrate all seemingly intricate displays of God's government. None shall be stumbled at seeing a godly man under oppression, knowing that God never permits any thing of the kind but for the good of the subject, and the manifestation of his own mercy, wisdom, and love.

Shall be stronger and stronger.] This is one grand use of the Book of Job. It casts much light on seemingly partial displays of divine providence; and has ever been the great text-book of godly men in a state of persecution and affliction.

11 My days are past, my purposes are broken off, even^b the thoughts of my heart.

12 They change the night into day: the light is^c short because of darkness.

^a Ch. vii. 6. ix. 25.—^b Heb. the possessions.—
^c Heb. near.

Verse 10. But as for you all] Ye are too proud, and too full of self-importance, to profit by what ye see. Return— enter into yourselves, consider your ways, go again to school, and endeavour to acquire humility and knowledge; for there is not one wise man among you.

Verse 11. My days are past] Job seems to relapse here into his former state of gloom. These transitions are very frequent in this poem; and they strongly mark the struggle of piety and resignation with continued affliction, violent temptation, and gloomy providences.

The thoughts of my heart.] All my purposes are interrupted; and all my schemes and plans, in relation to myself and family, are torn asunder, destroyed, and dissipated.

Verse 12. They change the night into day] These purposes and thoughts are so very gloomy, that they change day into night.

The light is short because of darkness.] “The light is near from the face of darkness.” A fine picture of the state of his mind—he was generally in darkness; but had occasional gleams of hope.

Verse 13. The grave is mine house] Let my life be long or short, the grave at last will be my home. I expect soon to lie down in darkness—there is my end. I cannot reasonably hope for any thing else.

Verse 14. I have said to corruption] The Hebrew might be thus rendered: To the ditch I have called, Thou art my father. To the worm, Thou art my mother and my sister. I am in the nearest state of affinity to dissolution and corruption: I may well call them my nearest relations, as I shall be soon blended with them.

ther: to the worm, Thou art my mother, and my sister.

15 And where is now my hope? as for my hope, who shall see it?

16 They shall go down^e to the bars of the pit, when our^f rest together is in the dust.

^d Heb. cried or called.—^e Ch. xviii. 13.—
^f Ch. iii. 17, 18, 19.

Verse 15. And where is now my hope?] In the circumstances in which I am found, of what use can hope be? Were I to form the expectation of future good, who could ever see it realized? Is it then any wonder that I should complain, and bemoan my wretched lot?

Verse 16. They shall go down to the bars of the pit] All that I have must descend into the depths of the grave. Thither are we all going; and there alone can I rest.

The word which we translate bars, signifies also branches, distended limbs, or claws, and may here refer either to a personification of the grave, a monster who seizes on human bodies, and keeps them fast in his deadly gripe; or to the different branching-off alleys in subterranean cemeteries, or catacombs, in which niches are made for the reception of different bodies.

When our rest together is in the dust.] That is, according to some critics, My hope and myself shall descend together into the grave. It shall never be realized, for the time of my departure is at hand.

In those times what deep shades hung on the state of man after death, and on every thing pertaining to the eternal world! Perplexity and uncertainty were the consequences; and a corresponding gloom often dwelt on the minds of even the best of the Old Testament believers. Job himself, though sometimes strongly confident, is often harassed with doubts and fears upon the subject, inasmuch that his sayings and experience often appear contradictory. Jesus alone brought life and immortality to light by his gospel.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Bildad, in a speech of passionate invective, accuses Job of impatience and impiety, 1-4; shows the fearful end of the wicked and their posterity; and apparently applies the whole to Job, whom he threatens with the most ruinous end, 5-21.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said,

2 How long will it be ere ye make an end of words? mark, and afterwards we will speak.

3 Wherefore are we counted^a as beasts, and reputed vile in your sight?

^a Ps. lxxlii. 22.—^b Ch. xlii. 14.—^c Heb. his soul.—^d Prov. xlii.

Verse 2. How long will it be ere ye make an end] It is difficult to say to whom this address is made: being in the plural number, it can hardly be supposed to mean Job only. It probably means all present; as if he had said, It is vain to talk with this man, and follow him through all his quibbles: take notice of this, and then let us all deliver our sentiments fully to him, without paying any regard to his self-justifications. It must be owned that this is the plan which Bildad followed; and he simply unburdens a mind that was labouring under the spirit of rancour and abuse. Mr. Good translates:—“How long will ye plant thorns among words?” translating the unusual term kniteey, thorns, instead of hounds or limbs. The word kniteey may be the Chaldee form for kniteey, and may be considered as the contracted plural from kats, a thorn, from kats, to lacerate, rather than kats, an end, from katash, to cut off.

Verse 3. Counted as beasts] Thou treatest us as if we had neither reason nor understanding.

4 ^b He teareth^c himself in his anger: shall the earth be forsaken for thee? and shall the rock be removed out of his place?

5 Yea,^d the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine.

6 The light shall be dark in his tabernacle,^e and his^f candle shall be put out with him.

^b Ps. xx. xxiv. 20.—^c Ch. xli. 17. ^d Ps. xliii. 20.—^e Or, lamp.

Verse 4. He teareth himself in his anger] Literally, Rending his own soul in his anger: as if he had said, Thou art a madman! thy fury has such a sway over thee that thou eatest thy own flesh. While thou treatest us as beasts, we see thee to be a furious maniac, destroying thy own life.

Shall the earth be forsaken for thee?] To say the least, afflictions are the common lot of men. Must God work a miracle in providence, in order to exempt thee from the operation of natural causes? Dost thou wish to engross all the attention and care of Providence to thyself alone? What pride and insolence!

Verse 5. The light of the wicked shall be put out] Some think it would be better to translate the original, “Let the light of the wicked be extinguished!” Thou art a bad man and thou hast perverted the understanding which God hath given thee. Let that understanding, that abused gift, be taken away. From this verse to the end of the chapter is a continual invective against Job.

7 The steps of his strength shall be straitened, and ^a his own counsel shall cast him down.

8 For ^b he is cast into a net by his own feet, and he walketh upon a snare.

9 The king shall take him by the heel, and ^c the robber shall prevail against him.

10 The snare ^d is laid for him in the ground, and a trap for him in the way.

11 ^e Terrors shall make him afraid on every side, and shall ^f drive him to his feet.

12 His strength shall be hunger-bitten, and ^g destruction shall be ready at his side.

13 It shall devour the ^h strength of his skin: even the first-born of death shall devour his strength.

14 ⁱ His confidence shall be rooted out of his tabernacle, and it shall bring him to the king of terrors.

Verse 6. The light shall be dark in his tabernacle] His property shall be destroyed, his house pillaged, and himself and his family come to an untimely end.

His candle shall be put out] He shall have no posterity.

Verse 7. The steps of his strength] Even in his greatest prosperity he shall be in straits and difficulties.

His own counsel] He shall be the dupe and the victim of his own airy, ambitious, and impious schemes.

Verse 8. For he is cast into a net] His own conduct will infallibly bring him to ruin. He shall be like a wild beast taken in a net; the more he flounces in order to extricate himself, the more he shall be entangled.

He walketh upon a snare] He is continually walking on the meshes of a net, by which he must soon be entangled and overthrown.

Verse 9. The gin shall take him] From the beginning of the seventh verse to the end of the thirteenth there is an allusion to the various arts and methods practised in hunting.

Verse 13. It shall devour the strength of his skin] This may refer to the elephant, or to the rhinoceros, whose skin scarcely any dart can pierce: but in the case referred to above, the animal is taken in a pitfall, and then the first-born of death—a sudden and overwhelming stroke, deprives him of life.

Verse 14. His confidence shall be rooted out] His dwelling-place, how well soever fortified, shall now be deemed utterly insecure.

And it shall bring him to the king of terrors] He shall be completely and finally overpowered.

The phrase king of terrors has been generally thought to mean death; but it is not used in any such way in the text.

It may however be stated that death has been denominated by similar epithets both among the Greeks and Romans.

15 It shall dwell in his tabernacle, because ^j it is none of his: brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation.

16 ^k His roots shall be dried up beneath, and above shall his branch be cut off.

17 ^l His remembrance shall perish from the earth, and he shall have no name in the street.

18 ^m He shall be driven from light into darkness, and chased out of the world.

19 ⁿ He shall neither have son nor nephew among his people, nor any remaining in his dwellings.

20 They that come after him shall be astonished at ^o his day, as they that ^p went before ^q were affrighted.

21 Surely such ^r are the dwellings of the wicked, and this ^s is the place of him that ^t knoweth not God.

Verse 15. It shall dwell in his tabernacle] Desolation is here personified, and it is said that it shall be the inhabitant, its former owner being destroyed.

Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation] This may either refer to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, as has already been intimated, or to an ancient custom of fumigating houses with brimstone, in order to purify them from defilement.

But it is most likely that Bildad, in his usual uncharitable manner, alludes to the destruction of Job's property and family by winds and fire: see chap. i. 16, 19.

Verse 16. His roots shall be dried up—his branch be cut off] He shall be as utterly destroyed, both in himself, his posterity, and his property, as a tree in whose branches are all lopped off, and whose every root is cut away.

Verse 17. His remembrance shall perish] He shall have none to survive him, to continue his name among men.

No name in the street] He shall never be a man of reputation: after his demise, none shall talk of his fame.

Verse 18. He shall be driven from light] He shall be taken off by a violent death.

And chased out of the world] The wicked is DRIVEN AWAY in his iniquity. This shows his reluctance to depart from life.

Verse 20. They that come after him] The young shall be struck with astonishment when they hear the relation of the judgments of God upon this wicked man. As they that went before. The aged who were his contemporaries, and who saw the judgments that fell on him, were affrighted, achazu saar, seized with horror—were horrified; or, were panic-struck.

Verse 21. Such are the dwellings] This is the common lot of the wicked; and it shall be particularly the case with him who knoweth not God, that is Job, for it is evident he alludes to him. Poor Job! hard was thy lot, severe were thy sufferings.

CHAPTER XIX.

Job complains of the cruelty of his friends, 1-5. Pathetically laments his sufferings, 6-12. Complains of his being forsaken by all his domestics, friends, relatives, and even his wife, 13-19. Details his sufferings in an affecting manner, calls upon his friends to pity him, and earnestly wishes that his speeches may be recorded, 20-24. Expresses his hope in a future resurrection, 25-27. And warns his persecutors to desist, lest they fall under God's judgments, 28, 29.

THEN Job answered and said,
2 How long will ye vex my soul, and break me in pieces with words?

3 These ^aten times have ye reproached me:
ye are not ashamed that ye ^bmake yourselves strange to me.

4 And be it indeed that I have erred, mine error remaineth with myself.

5 If indeed ye will ^cmagnify yourselves against me, and plead against me my reproach:

6 Know now that God hath overthrown me, and hath compassed me with his net.

7 Behold, I cry out of ^dwrong, but I am not heard: I cry aloud, but there is no judgment.

8 ^eHe hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and he hath set darkness in my paths.

9 ^fHe hath stripped me of my glory, and taken the crown from my head.

10 He hath destroyed me on every side, and I am gone: and mine hope hath he removed like a tree.

11 He hath also kindled his wrath against me, and ^ghe counteth me unto him as one of his enemies.

Verse 2. How long will ye vex my soul] Everything that was irritating, vexatious, and opprobrious, his friends had recourse to, in order to support their own system, and overwhelm him. Not one of them seems to have been touched with a feeling of tenderness towards him, nor does a kind expression-drop at any time from their lips! They were called friends; but this term, in reference to them, must be taken in the sense of cold-blooded acquaintances. However, there are many in the world that go under the sacred name of friends, who, in times of difficulty, act a similar part.

Verse 3. These ten times] The exact arithmetical number is not to be regarded here; ten times being put for many times, as we have already seen.

Ye make yourselves strange to me.] When I was in affluence and prosperity, ye were my intimates, and appeared to rejoice in my happiness; but now ye scarcely know me, or ye profess to consider me a wicked man because I am in adversity. Of this you had no suspicion when I was in prosperity! Circumstances change men's minds.

Verse 4. And be it indeed that I have erred] Suppose indeed that in the simplicity of my heart I have gone astray, and that this matter remains with myself, you must grant that this error, whatsoever it is, has hurt no person except myself. Why then do ye treat me as a person whose life has been a general blot, and whose example must be a public curse?

Verse 6. Know now that God hath overthrown me] The matter is between him and me, and he has not commissioned you to add reproaches to his chastisements.

And hath compassed me with his net.] There may be an allusion here to the different modes of hunting which have been already referred to in the preceding chapter. But if we read the latter clause before the former, the allusion may be to an ancient mode of combat practised among the ancient Persians, ancient Goths, and among the Romans. The custom among the Romans was this: "One of the combatants was armed with a sword and shield, the other with a trident and net. The net he endeavoured to cast over the head of his adversary, in which when he succeeded, the entangled person was soon pulled down by a noose that fastened round the neck, and then dispatched." The Persians in old times used what was called kumund, the noose. It was not a net, but a sort of running loop, which horsemen endeavoured to cast over the heads of their enemies that they might pull them off their horses.

The Goths used a hoop net fastened to a pole, which they endeavoured to throw over the heads of their foes.

Verse 7. I cry out of wrong] I complain of violence and of injustice; but no one comes to my help.

Verse 8. He hath fenced up my way] This may allude to the mode of hunting the elephant, or to the operations of an invading army.

12 His troops come together, and ^hraise up their way against me, and encamp round about my tabernacle.

13 ⁱHe hath put my brethren far from me, and mine acquaintance are verily estranged from me.

14 My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends have forgotten me.

15 They that dwell in mine house, and my maids, count me for a stranger: I am an alien in their sight.

16 I called my servant, and he gave me no answer; I entreated him with my mouth.

17 My breath is strange to my wife, though I entreated for the children's sake of ^jmine own body.

18 Yea, ^kyoung children despised me; I arose, and they spake against me.

19 ^lAll ^mmy inward friends abhorred me: and they whom I loved are turned against me.

Verse 9. He hath stripped me of my glory] I am reduced to such circumstances, that I have lost all my honour and respect.

Verse 10. Mine hope hath he removed like a tree.] There is no more hope of my restoration to affluence, authority, and respect, than there is that a tree shall grow and flourish, whose roots are extracted from the earth. I am pulled up by the roots, withered, and gone.

Verse 11. And he counteth me unto him as one of his enemies.] From the seventh to the thirteenth verse there seems to be an allusion to a hostile invasion, battles, sieges, &c.

Verse 14. My kinsfolk have failed] Literally, departed: they have all left my house now there is no more hope of gain.

Verse 15. They that dwell in mine house] In this and the following verses the disregard and contempt usually shown to men who have fallen from affluence and authority into poverty and dependence, are very forcibly described: formerly revered by all, now esteemed by none. Pity to those who have fallen into adversity is rarely shown; the rich have many friends, and to him who appears to be gaining worldly substance much court is paid; for many worship the rising sun, who think little of that which has gone down. Some are even reproached with that eminence, which they have lost, though not culpable for the loss.

Verse 17. Though I entreated for the children's sake of mine own body.] This may imply no more than adverting her by the tenderest ties, by their affectionate intercourse, and consequently by the children which had been the seals of their mutual affection, though these children were no more.

But the mention of his children in this place may intimate that he had still some remaining; that there might have been young ones, who, not being of a proper age to attend the festival of their elder brothers and sisters, escaped that sad catastrophe. [How widely divergent the criticism on this passage is may be judged from the rendering contended for by Delitzsch: "My breath is offensive to my wife, and my stench to my own brethren."]

Verse 19. My inward friends] Those who were my greatest intimates.

Verse 20. My bone cleaveth to my skin] My flesh is entirely wasted away, and nothing but skin and bone left.

I am escaped with the skin of my teeth.] To escape with the skin of the teeth seems to have been a proverbial expression, signifying great difficulty. I had as narrow an escape from death, as the thickness of the enamel on the teeth. I was within an hair's breadth of destruction. [Or it may refer to the disease itself.]

Verse 21. Have pity upon me] The iteration here strongly indicates the depth of his distress, and that his spirit was worn down with the length and severity of his suffering.

22 Why do ye ^a persecute me as God, and are not satisfied with my flesh ?

23 ^b Oh that my words were now written ! oh that they were printed in a book !

24 That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever.

25 For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that

^a Ps. lxxix. 26.—^b Heb. Who will give, &c.—^c Or, After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed, yet out of my flesh shall I see God.—^d Ps. xvii. 15. 1 Cor. xiii. 12. 1 John iii. 2.—^e Heb. a stranger.

Verse 22. Why do ye persecute me as God? Are not the afflictions which God sends enough ? Do ye not see that I have as much as I can bear ?

And are not satisfied with my flesh ? Will ye persecute my soul, while God is persecuting my body ? Is it not enough that my body is destroyed ? Why then labour to torment my mind ?

Verse 23. O that my words were now written ! Job introduces the important subject which follows in a manner unusually solemn ; and he certainly considers the words which he was about to utter of great moment, and therefore wishes them to be recorded in every possible way. All the modes of writing then in use he appears to refer to. As to printing, that should be out of the question, as no such art was then discovered, nor for nearly two thousand years after. Our translators have made a strange mistake by rendering the verb yuchaku, printed, when they should have used described, traced out. It is necessary to make this remark, because superficial readers have imagined that the art of printing existed in Job's time, and that it was not a discovery of the fifteenth century of the Christian era : whereas there is no proof that it ever existed in the world before A.D. 1440, or thereabouts, for the first printed book with a date is a psalter printed by John Fust, in 1457, and the first Bible with a date is that by the same artist in 1460.

Three kinds of writing Job alludes to, as being practised in his time : 1. Writing in a book, formed either of the leaves of the papyrus, or on a sort of linen cloth. 2. Cutting with an iron spike on plates of lead. 3. Engraving on large stones or rocks, many of which are still found in different parts of Arabia.

To the present day the leaves of the palm-tree are used in the East instead of paper, and a stile of brass, silver, iron, &c., with a steel point, serves for a pen. By this instrument the letters are cut or engraved on the substance of the leaf, and afterwards some black colouring matter is rubbed in, in order to make the letters apparent. This was probably the oldest mode of writing, and it continues among the Cingales to the present day.

Verse 24. Iron pen and lead.] Some suppose that the meaning of this place is this : the iron pen is the chisel by which the letters were to be deeply cut in the stone or rock ; and the lead was melted into those cavities in order to preserve the engraving distinct. But this is not so natural a supposition as what is stated above ; that Job refers to the different kinds of writing for perpetuating public events, used in his time.

Verse 25. For I know that my redeemer liveth.] Any attempt to establish the true meaning of this passage is almost hopeless. By learned men and eminent critics the words have been understood very differently ; some vehemently contending that they refer to the resurrection of the body, and the redemption of the human race by Jesus Christ ; while others, with equal vehemence and show of argument, have contended that they refer only to Job's restoration to health, family comforts, and general prosperity, after the present trial should be ended. There is one principle, without which no mode of interpretation hitherto offered can have any weight : Job was now under the special inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and spoke prophetically.

Now, whether we allow that the passage refers to the general resurrection and the redemption by Christ, or to Job's restoration to health, happiness, and prosperity, this principle is equally necessary. 1. In those times no man could speak so clearly concerning the general resurrection and the redemption by Jesus Christ as Job, by one class of interpreters, is supposed here to do, unless especially inspired for this very purpose. 2. Job's restoration to health and happiness was so totally improbable to himself, and, in every sense, impossible, except to the almighty power of God, that it could not be inferred from any thing that had already he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth :

26 ^a And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet ^d in my flesh shall I see God :

27 Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not ^e another ; ^f though my reins be consumed ^g within me.

28 But ye should say, ^h Why persecute we him, —^a Or my reins within me are consumed with earnest desire [for that day.]—^b Heb. in my bosom.—^c Ver. 22.

taken place, and must be foreshown by direct inspiration. But which was most likely to be the subject of this oracular declaration, the general resurrection and redemption by Christ ; or the restoration of Job to health and affluence ?

If we look only to the general importance of these things this question may be soon decided ; for the doctrine of human redemption, and the general resurrection to an eternal life, are of infinitely greater importance than any thing that could affect the personal welfare of Job.

It is natural to conclude, therefore, that the revelation relative to the general resurrection, &c., is that which most likely the text includes.

But to this it may be answered, God does not do always in the first instance that which is most necessary and important in itself, as everything is done in that order and in that time which seems best to his godly wisdom. God made the earth before he made man, produced light before he formed the celestial luminaries, and instituted the Mosaic economy before the Christian dispensation. This is all true, for every thing is done in that season in which it may best fulfil the designs of providence and grace. But the question still recurs, Which of the predictions was most congruous to the circumstances of Job, and those of his companions ; and which of them was most likely to do most good on that occasion, and to be most useful through the subsequent ages of the world ? 1. For the sake of righteousness, justice, and truth, and to vindicate the ways of God with man, it was necessary that Job's innocence should be cleared ; and as Job was now reduced to a state of the lowest distress, it was worthy the kindness of God to give him some direct intimation that his sufferings should have a happy termination. But surely there was no need of so solemn a revelation to inform them of what was shortly to take place, when they lived to see it ; nor can it be judged essentially necessary to the support of Job, when the ordinary consolations of God's Spirit, and the excitement of a good hope through grace, might have as completely answered the end.

2. On the other hand, to give men, who were the chiefs of their respective tribes, proper notice of a doctrine of which they appear to have had no adequate conception, and which was so necessary to the peace of society, the good government of men, and the control of unruly and wayward passions : and to stay and support the suffering godly under the afflictions and calamities of life, were objects worthy the highest regards of infinite philanthropy and justice, and of the most pointed and solemn revelation which could be given on such an occasion. In short, they are the grounds on which all revelation is given to the sons of men : and the prophetic in question, viewed in this light, was, in that dark age an country, a light shining in a dark place. I have thus endeavoured dispassionately to view this subject ; and I arrive at the conclusion that the prophecy in question was not designed to point out the future prosperity of Job ; but rather the future redemption of mankind by Jesus Christ, and the general resurrection of the human race.

I know, yadati, I have a firm and full persuasion, that my Redeemer, goali, my Kinsman, he whose right it was among the ancient Hebrews to redeem the forfeited heritages belonging to the family, to vindicate its honour, and to avenge the death of any of his relatives by slaying the murderer (Lev. xxv. 25 ; Numb. xxxv. 12 ; Ruth iii. 13) ; but here it must refer to Christ, who has truly the right of redemption, being of the same kindred, who was born of woman, flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone.

Liveth, chai, is the Living One, who has the keys of hell and death : the Creator and Lord of the spirits of all flesh, and the principle and support of all life.

And that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. The latter day, aclaron, the latter day or time, when God comes to judgment ; or finally, or at last, or in the last time,

* seeing the root of the matter is found in me? 29 Be ye afraid of the sword: for wrath bringeth or latter days, as the gospel is termed, he shall be manifested in the flesh.

*Or, and what root of matter is found in me?

He shall stand, yakum, he shall arise, or stand up, i. e., to give sentence in judgment; or he himself shall arise from the dust, as the passage has been understood by some to refer to the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

Upon the earth, *al apha*r, over the dead, or those who are reduced to dust. This is the meaning of aphar in Psa. xxx. 9: What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pit? Shall the DUST (i. e. the dead) praise thee? He shall arise over the dust—over them who sleep in the dust, whom he shall also raise up.

Verse 26. And though after my skin worms destroy this body] My skin, which is now almost all that remains of my former self, except the bones; see ver. 20. They destroy this—not body. Rikkephu zoth, they—diseases and affliction, destroy THIS wretched composition of misery and corruption.

Yet in my flesh shall I see God] Either, I shall arise from the dead, have a renewed body, and see him with eyes of flesh and blood, though what I have now shall shortly moulder into dust; or, I shall see him in the flesh; my Kinsman, who shall partake of my flesh and blood, in order that he may ransom the lost inheritance.

Verse 27. Whom I shall see for myself] Have a personal interest in the resurrection, as I shall have in the Redeemer.

And mine eyes shall behold] That very person who shall be the resurrection, as he is the life.

And not another] Velo zar, and not a stranger, one who has no relation to human nature; but goali, my redeeming Kinsman.

Though my reins be consumed within me.] Though I am now apparently on the brink of death, the thread of life being spun out to extreme tenuity.

This, on the mode of interpretation which I have assumed, the punishments of the sword, ^b that ye may know there is a judgment.

^b Ps. lvi. 10, 11.

appears to be the meaning of this passage. The words may have a somewhat different colouring put on them; but the basis of the interpretation will be the same.

Verse 28. But ye should say] Or, Then ye shall say. Why persecute we him] Or, as Mr. Good, How did we persecute him! Alas! we are now convinced that we did wrong.

Seeing the root of the matter] A pure practice, and a sound hope, resting on the solid ground of sound faith, received from God himself. Instead of bi, in ME, bo, in HIM, is the reading of more than one hundred of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and in several of the Versions. Seeing the root of the matter is found in HIM.

Verse 29. Be ye afraid of the sword] Of God's judgments. For wrath bringeth] Such anger as ye have displayed against me God will certainly resent and punish.

That ye may know there is a judgment.] That ye may know that God will judge the world; and that the unequal distribution of riches and poverty, affliction and health, in the present life, is a proof that there must be a future judgment, where evil shall be punished and virtue rewarded. ^a

A third method of solving all difficulties has been proposed, viz., that Job refers to a divine conviction which he had just then received, that God would appear in the most evident manner to vindicate his innocence, and give the fullest proofs to his friends and to the world that his afflictions had not been sent as a scourge for his iniquities.

There is something very plausible in this; and in the conflicting opinions relative to the meaning of this celebrated and much controverted passage, no doubt some will be found who will adopt it as a middle course. The theory, however, is better than some of the arguments by which it is supported.

CHAPTER XX.

Zophar answers Job, and largely details the wretchedness of the wicked and the hypocrite; shows that the rejoicing of such is short and transitory, 1-9. That he is punished in his family and in his person, 10-14. That he shall be stripped of his ill-gotten wealth, and shall be in misery, though in the midst of affluence, 15-23. He shall at last die a violent death, and his family and property be finally destroyed, 24-29.

THEN answered Zophar the Naamathite, and said,

2 Therefore do my thoughts cause me to answer, and for this ^a I make haste.

3 I have heard the check of my reproach, and the spirit of my understanding causeth me to answer.

^a Heb. my haste is in me.—^b Pa. xxxvii. 35, 36.

Verse 2. Therefore do my thoughts] It has already been observed that Zophar was the most inveterate of all Job's enemies, for we really must cease to call them friends. He sets no bounds to his invective, and outrages every rule of charity. A man of such a bitter spirit must have been, in general, very unhappy. With him Job is, by insinuation, every thing that is base, vile, and hypocritical. He acknowledges that he is pressed by the impetuosity of his spirit to reply to Job's self-vindication. The original is variously translated, but the sense is as above.

For this I make haste.] My feelings provoke me to reply. Verse 3. I have heard the check of my reproach] Zophar assumes his old ground, and retracts nothing of what he had said. Like many of his own complexion in the present day, he was determined to believe that his judgment was infallible, and that he could not err.

Verse 4. Knowest thou not this of old] This is a maxim

4 Knowest thou not this of old, since man was placed upon earth,

5 ^b That the triumphing of the wicked is ^c short, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment?

6 ^d Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto ^e the clouds; as ancient as the world; it began with the first man: A wicked man shall triumph but a short time; God will destroy the proud doer.

Since man was placed upon earth] Literally, since ADAM was placed on the earth; that is, since the fall, wickedness and hypocrisy have existed, but they have never triumphed long. Thou hast lately been expressing confidence in reference to a general judgment; but such is thy character, that thou hast little reason to anticipate with any joy the decision of that day.

Verse 6. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens] Probably referring to the original state of Adam, of whose fall he appears to have spoken, ver 4. He was created in the image of God; but by his sin against his Maker he fell into wretchedness, misery, death, and destruction.

Verse 7. He shall perish for ever] He is dust, and shall return to the dust from which he was taken. Zophar here

7 Yet he shall perish for ever like his own dung: they which have seen him shall say, Where is he?

8 He shall fly away as a dream, and shall not be found: yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night.

9 The eye also which saw him shall see him no more; neither shall his place any more behold him.

10 His children shall seek to please the poor, and his hands shall restore their goods.

11 His bones are full of the sin of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust.

12 Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue;

13 Though he spare it, and forsake it not; but keep it still within his mouth:

14 Yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of asps within him.

15 He hath swallowed down riches, and he shall vomit them up again: God shall cast them out of his belly.

16 He shall suck the poison of asps: the viper's tongue shall slay him.

• Ps. lxxxvii. 10.—b Ps. lxxxiii. 20. xc. 5.—c Ch. vii. 8, 10. viii. 18. Ps. xxxvii. 36. ciii. 16.—d Or, The poor shall oppress his children.—e Ver. 18.—(Ch. xiii. 26. Ps. xxv. 7.—f Ch. xxi. 26.—g Hob. in the midst of his palate.—h Ps. xxxvi. 9. Jer. xvii. 6.—i Or, streaming brooks.

hints his disbelief in that doctrine, the resurrection of the body, which Job had so solemnly asserted in the preceding chapter. Or he might have been like some in the present day, who believe that the wicked shall be annihilated, and the bodies of the righteous only be raised from the dead; but I know of no scripture by which such a doctrine is confirmed.

Like his own dung] His reputation shall be abominable, and his putrid carcase shall resemble his own excrement. A speech that partakes as much of the malevolence as of the asperity of Zophar's spirit.

Verse 8. He shall fly away as a dream] Instead of rising again from corruption, as thou hast asserted (chap. xix. 26), with a new body, his flesh shall rot in the earth, and his spirit be dissipated like a vapour; and like a vision of the night, nothing shall remain but the bare impression that such a creature had once existed, but shall appear no more for ever.

Verse 10. His children shall seek to please the poor] They shall be reduced to the lowest degree of poverty and want, so as to be obliged to become servant to the poor. There are cases where the poor actually serve the poor; and this is the lowest or most abject state of poverty.

His hands shall restore their goods.] He shall be obliged to restore the goods that he has taken by violence.

• Verse 11. His bones are full of the sin of his youth] At first view it might appear that Zophar refers to those infirmities in old age, which are the consequences of youthful vices and irregularities. Alumar, which we translate his youth, may be rendered his hidden things; as if he had said, his secret vices bring down his strength to the dust. For this rendering Rosenmüller contends, and several other German critics. [There is much to be said against this rendering.]

Verse 12. Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth] This seems to refer to the secret sins mentioned above.

Hide it under his tongue] This and the four following verses contain an allegory; and the reference is to a man who, instead of taking wholesome food, takes what is poisonous, and is so delighted with it because it is sweet, that he rolls it under his tongue, and will scarcely let it down into his stomach, he is so delighted with the taste; "he spares it, and forsakes it not, but keeps it still within his mouth," ver. 13. "But when he swallows it, it is turned to the gall of asps within him," ver. 14, which shall corrode and torture his bowels.

Verse 15. He shall vomit them up again] This is also an allusion to an effect of most ordinary poisons; they occasion a nausea, and often excruciating vomiting; nature striving to eject what it knows, if retained, will be its bane.

Verse 16. He shall suck the poison of asps] That delicious morsel, that secret, easily-besetting sin, so palatable, and so pleasurable, shall act on the life of his soul, as the poison of asps would do on the life of his body.

17 He shall not see the rivers, the floods, the brooks of honey and butter.

18 That which he laboured for shall he restore, and shall not swallow it down: according to his substance shall the restitution be, and he shall not rejoice therein.

19 Because he hath oppressed and hath forsaken the poor; because he hath violently taken away an house which he builded not;

20 Surely he shall not feel quietness in his belly, he shall not save of that which he desired.

21 There shall none of his meat be left; therefore shall no man look for his goods.

22 In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits: every hand of the wicked shall come upon him.

23 When he is about to fill his belly, God shall cast the fury of his wrath upon him, and shall rain it upon him while he is eating.

24 He shall flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of steel shall strike him through.

25 It is drawn, and cometh out of the body; yea, —k Ver. 10, 15.—l Hob. according to the substance of his exchange.—m Heb. crushed.—n Eccles. v. 13, 14.—o Heb. know.—p Or, There shall be none left for his meat.—q Or, troublesome.—r Num. xi. 33. Ps. lxxxviii. 30, 31.—s I. a. xxiv. 18. Jer. xlvi. 41. Amos v. 19.

This poison is called the gall of asps, it being anciently supposed that the poison of serpents consists in their gall, which is thought to be copiously exuded when those animals are enraged; as it has been often seen that their bite is not poisonous when they are not angry.

Verse 17. He shall not see the rivers] The expression appears to have been proverbial; and is certainly used here to denote a very high degree of temporal prosperity. See also chap. xxix. 5. To the Hebrews such expressions were quite familiar. See Exod. iii. 8; xiii. 5; xxxiii. 3; 2 Kings xviii. 32; Deut. xxxi. 20, and elsewhere.

The Greek and Roman writers abound in such images. Verse 18. That which he laboured for shall he restore] I prefer here the reading of the Arabic, which is also supported by the Syriac, and is much nearer to the Hebrew text than the common Version. He shall return to labour, but he shall not eat; he shall toil, and not be permitted to enjoy the fruit of his labour.

The general meaning is, He shall labour and toil, but shall not reap, for God shall send on his land blasting and mildew.

Verse 19. He hath oppressed and hath forsaken the poor] Literally, He hath broken in pieces the forsaken of the poor. The poor have fled from famine, and left their children behind them; and this hard-hearted wretch, meaning Job all the while, has suffered them to perish, when he might have saved them alive.

He hath violently taken away an house which he builded not] Or, rather, He hath thrown down a house, and hath not rebuilt it. By neglecting or destroying the forsaken orphans of the poor, mentioned above, he has destroyed a house (a family), while he might, by helping the wretched, have preserved the family from becoming extinct.

Verse 20. Surely he shall not feel quietness in his belly] I have already remarked that the word beten, which we translate belly, often means in the sacred scriptures the whole of the human trunk; the heart, lungs, liver, &c., and consequently all the thoughts, purposes, and inclinations of the mind, of which those viscera were supposed to be the functionaries.

Verse 21. There shall none of his meat be left] He shall be stripped of everything.

Verse 22. In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits] This fine saying is literally true of every great, rich, wicked man; he has no God, and anxieties and perplexities torment him, notwithstanding he has his portion in this life.

Every hand of the wicked shall come upon him.] All kinds of misery shall be his portion.

Verse 23. When he is about to fill his belly] Here seems a plain allusion to the lustings of the children of Israel in the desert. God showered down quails upon them, and showered down his wrath while the flesh was in their mouth.

* the glittering sword cometh out of his gall: ^b terrors are upon him.

26 All darkness shall be hid in his secret places: a fire not blown shall consume him; it shall go ill with him that is left in his tabernacle.

27 The heaven shall reveal his iniquity; and the earth shall rise up against him.

^a Ch. xvi. 18.—^b Ch. xviii. 11.—^c Ps. xxi. 9.

Verse 24. He shall flee from the iron weapon] Or, "Though he should flee from the iron armour, the brazen bow should strike him through." That is, he shall most certainly perish: all kinds of death await him.

Verse 25. It is drawn, and cometh out] This refers to archery: The arrow is drawn out of the sheaf or quiver, and discharged from the bow against its mark, and pierces the vitals, and passes through the body.

Verse 26. A fire not blown shall consume him] As Zophar is here showing that the wicked cannot escape from the divine judgments; so he points out the different instruments which God employs for their destruction. A fire not blown—a supernatural fire; lightning; such as fell on Korah and his company, to whose destruction there is probably here an allusion: hence the words, It shall go ill with him who is left in his tabernacle.

Verse 27. The heaven shall reveal his iniquity; and the earth shall rise up against him.] Another allusion, if I mistake not, to the destruction of Korah and his company.

28 The increase of his house shall depart, and his goods shall flow away in the day of his wrath.

29 ^a This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage ^a appointed unto him by God.

^a Ch. xxvii. 13. xxxi. 2, 3.—^b Heb. of his decree from God.

The heaven revealed their iniquity; God declared out of heaven his judgment of their rebellion.

Verse 28. The increase of his house shall depart, and his goods shall flow away in the day of his wrath.] A farther allusion to the punishment of the rebellious company of Korah, who not only perished themselves, but their houses also, and their goods.

These examples were all in point, on the ground assumed by Zophar; and such well-attested facts would not be passed over by him, had he known the record of them; and that he did know it, alludes to it, and quotes the very circumstances, is more than probable.

Verse 29. This is the portion] As God has dealt with the murmuring Israelites, and with the rebellious sons of Korah, so will he deal with those who murmur against the dispensations of his providence, and rebel against his authority. Instead of an earthly portion, and an ecclesiastical heritage, such as Korah, Dathan, and Abiram sought; they shall have fire from God to scorch them, and the earth to swallow them up.

CHAPTER XXI.

Job expresses himself as puzzled by the dispensations of Divine Providence, because of the unequal distribution of temporal good; he shows that wicked men often live long, prosper in their families, in their flocks, and in all their substance, and yet live in defiance of God and sacred things, 1-16. At other times their prosperity is suddenly blasted, and they and their families come to ruin, 17-21. God, however is too wise to err; and he deals out various lots to all according to his wisdom: some come sooner, others later, to the grave: the strong and the weak, the prince and the peasant, come to a similar end in this life; but the wicked are reserved for a day of wrath, 22-33. He charges his friends with falsehood in their pretended attempts to comfort him, 34.

BUT Job answered and said,
2 Hear diligently my speech, and let this be your consolations.

3 Suffer me that I may speak; and after that I have spoken, ^a mock on.

4 As for me, is my complaint to man? and if it were so, why should not my spirit be ^b troubled?

^a Ch. xvii. 10. xviii. 2.—^b Heb. shortened.—^c Heb. look unto me.—^d Jud. xviii. 19. (b. xxix. 9. xl. 4. Ps. xxxix. 9.

Verse 2. Let this be your consolations.] "And let this be your retractions." Let what I am about to say induce you to retract what you have said, and to recal your false judgments.

Nacham signifies, not only to comfort, but to change one's mind, to repent; hence the Vulgate translates, et agite penitentiam, "and repent;" which Coverdale follows in his Version. Some suppose the verse to be understood ironically: I am now about to give you consolations for those you have given me. When I have done, then turn them into mockery if you please.

Verse 4. As for me] "Alas for me!" Is it not with a man that I speak? And, if this be the case, why should not my spirit be troubled? I do not reply against my Maker: I suffer much from God and man; why then may I not have the privilege of complaining to creatures like myself?

Verse 5. Mark me, and be astonished] Consider and compare the state in which I was once, with that in which I am now; and be astonished at the judgments and dispensations

5 ^c Mark me and be astonished, ^d and lay your hand upon your mouth.

6 Even when I remember I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my flesh.

7 ^e Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power?

8 Their seed is established in their sight with of God. You will then be confounded; you will put your hands upon your mouths, and keep silence.

Putting the hand on the mouth or the finger on the lips, was the token of silence. The Egyptian god Harpocrates, who was the god of silence, is represented with his finger compressing his upper lip.

Verse 6. I am afraid] I am about to speak of the mysterious workings of Providence; and I tremble at the thought of entering into detail on such a subject; my very flesh trembles.

Verse 7. Wherefore do the wicked live] You have frequently asserted that the wicked are invariably punished in this life; and that the righteous are ever distinguished by the strongest marks of God's providential kindness; how then does it come that many wicked men live long and prosperously, and at last die in peace, without any evidence whatever of God's displeasure?

Verse 8. Their seed is established] They see their own children grow up, and become settled in the land; and be-them, and their offspring before their eyes.

9 Their houses ^a are safe from fear, ^b neither is the rod of God upon them.

10 Their bull gendereth, and faileth not; their cow calveth, and ^c casteth not her calf.

11 They send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance.

12 They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ.

13 They ^d spend their days ^e in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave.

14 ^f Therefore they say unto God, Depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways.

15 ^g What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and ^h what profit should we have, if we pray unto him?

hold their children's children also; so that their generations are not cut off. Even the posterity of the wicked continue.

Verse 9. Neither is the rod of God upon them.] They are not afflicted as other men.

Verse 10. Their bull gendereth] Their flocks multiply greatly, they bring forth in time, and none of them is barren.

Verse 11. They send forth their little ones] It is not very clear whether this refers to the young of the flocks or to their children. The first clause may mean the former, the next clause the latter; while the young of their cattle are in flocks, their numerous children are healthy and vigorous, and dance for joy.

Verse 12. They take the timbrel and harp] Yisus, they rise up or lift themselves up, probably alluding to the rural exercise of dancing.

Toph, which we translate timbrel, means a sort of drum, such as the tom-tom of the Asiatics.

Kinnor may mean something of the harp kind.

Ugab, organ, means nothing like the instrument now called the organ, though thus translated both by the Septuagint and Vulgate; it probably means the syminx, composed of several unequal pipes, close at the bottom, which, when blown into at the top, gives a very shrill and lively sound. To these instruments the youth are represented as dancing joyfully.

The original is intended to convey the true notion of the gambols of the rustic nymphs and swains on festival occasions; and let it be observed that this is spoken of the children of those who say unto God, "Depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways. What is the Almighty that we should serve him? and what profit should we have if we pray unto him?" ver. 14, 15. Is it any wonder that the children of such parents should be living to the flesh, and serving the lusts of the flesh? for neither they nor their parents know God, nor pray unto him.

Verse 13. They spend their days in wealth] There is a various reading here of some importance. In the text we have yeballu, they grow old, or wear out as with old age; and in the margin, yechallu, they consume. I incline to the former, as Job's argument derives considerable strength from this circumstance; they not only spend their days in faring sumptuously every day, but they even wear out so as to grow old in it; they are not cut off by any sudden judgment of God. This is fact; therefore your doctrine, that the wicked are cut off suddenly and have but a short time, is far from the truth.

In a moment go down to the grave.] They wear out their years in pleasure; grow old in their gay and giddy life; and die, as in a moment, without previous sickness.

Verse 14. They say unto God] This is the language of their conduct, though not directly of their lips.

Depart from us] Let us alone; we do not trouble thee. Thy ways are painful; we do not like cross-bearing. Thy ways are spiritual; we wish to live after the flesh. We have learned to do our own will; we do not wish to study thine.

Verse 15. What is the Almighty] What allegiance do we owe to him? We feel no obligation to obey him; and what profit can we derive from prayer? We are as happy as flesh 16 Lo, their good is not in their hand: ⁱ the counsel of the wicked is far from me.

17 ^j How oft is the ^k candle of the wicked put out? and how oft cometh their destruction upon them. God ^l distributeth sorrows in his anger.

18 ^m They are as stubble before the wind, and as chaff that the storm ⁿ carrieth away.

19 God layeth up ^o his iniquity ^p for his children: he rewardeth him, and he shall know it.

and blood can make us: our kingdom is of this world; we wish for no other portion than that which we have.

Those who have never prayed as they ought, know nothing of the benefits of prayer.

Verse 16. Their good is not in their hand] With all their boasting and self-dependence, God only lends them his bounty; and though it appears to be their own, yet it is at his disposal. Some of the wicked he permits to live and die in affluence, provided it be acquired in the ordinary way of his providence, by trade, commerce, &c. Others he permits to possess it for a while only, and then strips them of their illegally procured property.

The counsel of the wicked is far from me.] I have nothing in common with them, and am not their apologist. I state a fact: they are often found in continual prosperity. I state another fact: they are often found in wretchedness and misery.

Verse 17. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out?] The candle or lamp is often used, both as the emblem of prosperity and of posterity. Oftentimes the rejoicing of the wicked is short; and not unfrequently, his seed is cut off from the earth. The root is dried up, and the branch is withered. [Delitzsch translates the interrogation at the beginning of the verse "How rarely!"]

God distributeth sorrows in his anger.] He must be incensed against those who refuse to know, serve, and pray unto him. In his anger, therefore, he portions out to each his due share of misery, vexation, and woe.

Verse 18. They are as stubble before the wind] The original signifies that they shall be carried away by a furious storm; and borne off as booty is by the swift-tiding robbers of the desert, who make a sudden irruption, and then set off at full speed with their prey.

Verse 19. God layeth up his iniquity for his children] This is according to the declaration of God, Exod. xx. 5. This always supposes that the children, who are thus visited have copied their parents' example; or that ill-gotten property is found in their hands, which has descended to them from their wicked fathers; and of this God, in his judgments, strips them. It is, however, very natural to suppose that children brought up without the fear of God will walk in the sight of their own eyes, and according to the imaginations of their own hearts.

He rewardeth him, and he shall know it.] He shall so visit his transgressions upon him, that he shall at last discern that it is God who hath done it. And thus they will find that there would have been profit in serving him, and safety in praying unto him. But this they have neglected, and now it is too late.

Verse 20. His eyes shall see his destruction] He shall perceive its approach, and have the double punishment of fearing and feeling; feeling a THOUSAND deaths in fearing ONE.

He shall drink of the wrath] The cup of God's wrath, the cup of trembling, &c., is frequently expressed or referred to in the sacred writings, Deut. xxxii. 33; Isa. li. 17-22; Jer. xxv. 15; Rev. xiv. 8. It appears to be a metaphor taken from those cups of poison which certain criminals were obliged to drink. A cup of the juice of hemlock was the wrath or punishment assigned by the Athenian magistrates to the philosopher Socrates.

Verse 21. For what pleasure hath he in his house after him? What may happen to his posterity he neither knows nor cares for, as he is now numbered with the dead, and numbered with them before he had lived out half his years.

Verse 22. Shall any teach God knowledge? Who among the sons of men can pretend to teach God how to govern the world, who himself teaches those that are high—the heavenly inhabitants, that excel us infinitely both in knowledge and wisdom? Neither angels nor men can comprehend the reasons of the divine providence. It is a depth known only to God.

Verse 23. One dieth in his full strength. In this and the three following verses Job shows that the inequality of fortune, goods, health, strength, &c., decides nothing either for or against persons in reference to the approbation or disapprobation of God, as these various lots are no indications of their wickedness or innocence.

Verse 24. His breasts are full of milk. The word atnair, which occurs nowhere else in the Hebrew Bible, is most likely an Arabic term, but probably so provincial as to be now lost. Under the root atan, Mr. Parkhurst gives the following definitions: "occurs, not as a verb, but as a noun masculine plural, in construction, atney, the bowels, intestines; once Job xxi. 24, atnair, his bowels or intestines, are full of, or abound with, chalah, fat. May not atnim be a noun masculine plural from atah, to involve; and may not the intestines, including those fatty parts, the mesentery and omentum, be so called on account of their wonderful involutions?" I think this conjecture to be as likely as any that has yet been formed. [The Arabic root seems to point to "troughs," but there is much difficulty in the word.]

Verse 26. They shall lie down alike in the dust. Death levels all distinctions, and the grave makes all equal. There may be a difference in the grave itself; but the human corpse is the same in all. Splendid monuments enshrine corruption; but the soil must lie close and heavy upon the putrefying carcass, to prevent it from becoming the bane of the living.

Verse 27. I know your thoughts. Ye still think that, because I am grievously afflicted, I must therefore be a felonious transgressor.

Verse 28. For ye say, Where is the house of the prince? In order to prove your point, ye ask, Where is the house of the tyrant and oppressor? Are they not overthrown and destroyed? And is not this a proof that God does not permit the wicked to enjoy prosperity?

Verse 29. Have ye not asked them that go by the way? This appears to be Job's answer. Consult travellers who have gone through different countries; and they will tell you that they have seen both examples—the wicked in great prosperity in some instances, while suddenly destroyed in others.

Verse 30. That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction. Though every one can tell that he has seen the wicked in prosperity, and even spend a long life in it; yet this is no proof that God loves him, or that he shall enjoy a prosperous lot in the next world. There he shall meet with the day of wrath. There, the wicked shall be punished, and the just rewarded.

32 Yet shall he be brought to the ⁱ grave, and shall ^j remain in the tomb.

34 How then comfort ye me in vain, seeing in your answers there remaineth ^l falsehood?

—^f Heb. the day of wraths.—^g Gal. ii. 11.—^h Heb. graves.—ⁱ Heb. watch in the heap.—^j Heb. ix. 27.—^k Heb. transgression.

Verse 31. Who shall declare his way to his face? Who shall dare to tell him what his true character is? or, to repay him the evil he has done? As such a person cannot have his punishment in this life, he must have it in another; and for this the day of wrath—the day of judgment, is prepared.

Verse 32. Yet shall he be brought to the grave. He shall die like other men; and the corruption of the grave shall prey upon him. [Or rather, "And over the tomb he still keepeth," or one keepeth watch.]

Verse 33. The clods of the valley shall be sweet unto him. Perhaps there is an allusion here to the Asiatic mode of interment for princes, saints, and nobles: a well watered valley was chosen for the tomb, where a perpetual spring might be secured. This was intended to be the emblem of a resurrection, or of a future life; and to conceal as much as possible the disgrace of the rotting carcass.

Every man shall draw after him. There seem to be two allusions intended here: 1. To death, the common lot of all. Millions have gone before him to the tomb; and all men shall follow him: all past generations have died; all succeeding generations shall die also. 2. To pompous funeral processions; multitudes preceding, and multitudes following, the corpse.

Verse 34. How then comfort ye me in vain. Mr. Good translates: "How vainly then would ye make me retract!" See the note on ver. 2. I cannot retract any thing I have said, as I have proved by fact and testimony that your positions are false and unfounded. Your pretensions to comfort me are as hollow as the arguments you bring in support of your exceptionable doctrines.

This chapter may be called Job's triumph over the insinuated calumnies, and specious but false doctrines, of his opponents. The irritability of his temper no longer appears^f from the time he got that glorious discovery of his Redeemer, and the joyful hope of an eternal inheritance, chap. xix. 25, &c., we find no more murmurings, nor unsanctified complainings. Impassioned transports no longer carry him away: his mind is serene; his heart, fixed; his hope, steady; and his faith, strong. Zophar the Naamathite is now, in his presence, as an infant in the gripe of a mighty giant. Another of these pretended friends but real enemies comes forward to renew the attack with virulent invective, malevolent insinuation, and unsupported assertion. Him Job meets, and vanquishes by pious resignation and fervent prayer. Though, at different times after this, Job had his buffetings from his grand adversary, and some seasons of comparative darkness, yet his faith is unshaken, and he stands as a beaten anvil to the stroke. He effectually exculpates himself, and vindicates the dispensations of his Maker.

Neither good nor evil can be known by the occurrences of this life. Every thing argues the certainty of a future state, and the necessity of a day of judgment. They who are in the habit of marking casualties, especially if those whom they love not are the subjects of them, as tokens of divine displeasure, only show an ignorance of God's dispensations, and a malevolence of mind that would fain arm itself with the celestial thunders in order to transfix those whom they deem their enemies.

CHAPTER XXII.

Eliphaz reproves Job for his attempts to clear his character and establish his innocence, 1-4. Charges him with innumerable transgressions; with oppressions towards his brethren, cruelty to the poor, hard-heartedness to the needy, and uncharitableness towards the widow and the orphan; and says it is on these accounts that snares and desolations are come upon him, 5-11. Speaks of the majesty and justice of God: how he cut off the antediluvians, the inhabitants of Sodom and the cities of the plain, 12-20. Exhorts him to repent and acknowledge his sins, and promises him great riches and prosperity, 21-30.

THEN Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said,

2 ^a Can a man be profitable unto God, ^b as he that is wise may be profitable unto himself?

3 Is it any pleasure to the Almighty, that thou art righteous? or is it gain to him, that thou makest thy ways perfect?

4 Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? will he ester with thee into judgment?

5 Is not thy wickedness great? and thine iniquities infinite?

6 For thou hast ^c taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and ^d stripped the naked of their clothing.

7 Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou ^e hast withholden bread from the hungry.

8 But as for ^f the mighty man, he had the earth; and the ^g honourable man dwelt in it.

Verse 2. Can a man be profitable unto God? God does not afflict thee because thou hast deprived him of any excellency. A man may be profitable to a man, but no man can profit his Maker. He has no interest in thy conduct; he does not punish thee because thou hast offended and deprived him of some good. Thy iniquities are against justice, and justice requires thy punishment.

Verse 3. Is it any pleasure to the Almighty? Infinite in his perfections, he can neither gain nor lose by the wickedness or righteousness of men.

Verse 4. For fear of thee? Is it because he is afraid that thou wilt do him some injury, that he has stripped thee of thy power and wealth?

Verse 5. Is not thy wickedness great? Thy sins are not only many, but they are great; and of thy continuance in them there is no end.

Verse 6. Thou hast taken a pledge. Thou hast been vexatious in all thy doings, and hast exacted where nothing was due, so that through thee the poor have been unable to procure their necessary clothing.

Verse 7. Thou hast not given water. It was esteemed a great virtue in the East to furnish thirsty travellers with water; especially in the deserts, where scarcely a stream was to be found, and where wells were very rare.

Verse 8. But as for the mighty man, he had the earth. Ish seroa, the man of arm. Finger, hand, and arm, are all emblems of strength and power. The man of arm is not only the strong man, but the man of power and influence, the man of rapine and plunder.

The honourable man.] Literally, the man whose face is accepted, the respectable man, the man of wealth. Thou wert an enemy to the poor and needy, but thou didst favour and flatter the rich and great.

Verse 9. The arms of the fatherless. Whatever strength or power or property they had, of that thou hast deprived them. Thou hast been hard-hearted and cruel, and hast enriched thyself with the spoils of the poor and the defenceless.

Verse 10. Therefore snares. As thou hast dealt with others, so has God, in his retributive providence, dealt with thee.

9 Thou hast sent widows away empty, and the arms of ^h the fatherless have been broken.

10 Therefore ⁱ snares are round about thee, and sudden fear troubleth thee;

11 Or darkness, that thou canst not see; and abundance of ^j waters cover thee.

12 Is not God in the height of heaven? and behold ^k the height of the stars, how high they are!

13 And thou sayest ^l How ^m doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud?

15 Hast thou marked the old way which wicked men have trodden?

As thou hast spoiled, so art thou spoiled. Thou art taken in a net from which thou canst not escape.

Verse 11. Or darkness, that thou canst not see. The sense of this passage in the connexion that the particle or gives it with the preceding verse, is not easy to be ascertained. The copy used by the Septuagint had the word or, light, instead of o, which we translate "or;" and therefore they translate the verse thus: Thy LIGHT is changed into darkness; that is, Thy prosperity is turned into adversity. [If the sentence be used interrogatively, the difficulty vanishes.]

Verse 12. Is not God in the height of heaven? It appears from this and the following verses, that Eliphaz was attributing infidel and blasphemous speeches or sentiments to Job. These Job never uttered; but if a man be dressed in a bear's skin, he may be hunted and worried by his own dogs. Job's friends attribute falsities to him, and then dilate upon them, and draw inferences from them injurious to his character. Polemic writers, both in theology and politics, often act in this way.

Verse 14. He walketh in the circuit of heaven. He confines himself to those infinitely exalted regions, and cares nothing for the inhabitants of the earth.

Verse 15. Hast thou marked the old way? This is supposed to be another accusation.

Verse 16. Whose foundation was overflown with a flood. The unrighteous in the days of Noah said, in effect to God, Depart from us. And when Noah preached unto them the terrors of the Lord, and the necessity of repentance, they rejected his preaching with, What can the Almighty do for us? Let him do his worst; we care not for him, ver. 17.

For lamo, to THEM, the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, have evidently read lano, to US. This reading quotes their own saying: the former reading narrates it in the third person. The meaning however is the same.

Verse 18. But the counsel of the wicked is far from me. Sarcastically quoting Job's words, chap. xxi. 14, 16. Eliphaz here, having described the impious, among whom he evidently ranks Job, makes use of the same expression, as if he had said, "Thank God, I have no connexion with you nor your companions; nor is my mind contaminated by your creed. Verse 19. The righteous see it, and are glad] They see God's judgments on the incorrigibly wicked, and know that the Judge of all the earth does right; hence they rejoice in all the dispensations of his providence.

Verse 20. Whereas our substance is not cut down] We, who fear the Lord, still continue in health and peace; whereas they who have departed from him are destroyed even to their very remnant.

The reference here is supposed to be to the destruction of the men of Sodom and Gomorrah. A judgment by a flood took off the world of the ungodly in the days of Noah. Their remnant, those who lived in the same ungodly way, were taken off by a judgment of fire, in the days of Lot. Eliphaz introduces these two examples in order to terrify Job into a compliance with the exhortation which immediately follows.

Verse 21. Acquaint now thyself with him] Perhaps the verb hasken should be translated here, treasure up, or lay up. Lay up or procure an interest now with him, and be at peace.

Thereby good shall come unto thee.] Bahem, "in them," shall good come unto thee. That is, in getting an interest in the divine favour, and in having thy soul brought into a state of peace with him; thereby, in them, that is, these two things, good will come unto thee. First, thou wilt have an interest in his favour, from which thou mayest expect all blessings; and, secondly, from his peace in thy conscience thou wilt feel unutterable happiness.

Verse 22. Receive, I pray thee, the law from his mouth] Some, who wish to place Job before the law given by Moses, say that this means the Noahic precepts; others, that the law of nature is intended! Stuff and vanity! The allusion is plainly to the law given by God to the children of Israel, called here, by way of emphasis, torah, the LAW, which contained amarain, his words, the words or sayings of God himself; consequently, it is not the Noahic precepts, nor the law of nature, neither of which were ever written or registered as the words of God's mouth. [This interpretation of the Hebrew torah is not admissible here. Its value as fixing the date of the book of Job is simply nothing.]

Verse 23. Thou shalt be built up] God will restore thee to thy wonted state of prosperity; and thou shalt again have a household, not only of servants, but of children also. So much may be implied in the words, Thou shalt be built up.

Verse 24. Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust] The original is not fairly rendered in this translation, veshith al apha batser, which Montanus renders: "And fix a tower upon the dust;" ubetsaur mechalim Ophir, "and in the rock, the torrents of Ophir."

Verse 25. Thou shalt have plenty of silver.] Here again

26 For then shalt thou have thy ¹delight in the Almighty, and ² shalt lift up thy face unto God.

27 *Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him, and he shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy vows.

28 Thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee: and the light shall shine upon thy ways.

29 When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, There is lifting up; and ^o he shall save ^p the humble person.

30 *He shall deliver the island of the innocent: and it is delivered by the pureness of thine hands.

15. Isa. lviii. 9.—^q Prov. xxix. 23. James iv. 6. 1. Pet. v. 5.—^r Heb. him: that hath low eyes.—^s Or, The innocent shall deliver the island, Gen. xviii. 28, &c.

the Versions and critics vary. The critics may disagree; but the doctrine of Eliphaz is sufficiently plain: "To those whom God loves best he gives the most earthly good. The rich and the great are his high favourites: the poor and the distressed he holds for his enemies."

In the above verses, there seems to be a reference to the mode of obtaining the precious metals: 1. Gold in dust; 2. Gold in streams from the hills and mountains; 3. Silver in mines; keseph toaphoth, "silver of giddiness;" of mines so deep as to make one giddy by looking into them. [Ewald's translation is better: silver of brightest lustre.]

Verse 26. For then shalt thou have thy delight] Thou shalt know, from thy temporal prosperity, that God favours thee; and for his bounty thou shalt be grateful. How different is this doctrine from that of St. Paul and St. John! Tribulation itself was often a mark of God's favour.

Verse 27. Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him] Tatir, thou shalt open or unbosom thyself. And when the heart prays, God hears; and the person, being blessed, vows fidelity, prays on, is supported, and enabled to pay his vows.

Verse 28. Thou shalt also decree a thing] Whatsoever thou purporest in his strength, thou shalt be enabled to accomplish.

Verse 29. When men are cast down] There is a great difficulty in this verse; the sense, however, is tolerably evident, and the following is nearly a literal version: When they shall humble themselves, thou shalt say, Be exalted, or, there is exaltation: for the downcast of eye he will save. The same sentiment as that of our Lord, "He that exalteth himself shall be abased; but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Verse 30. He shall deliver the island of the innocent] The word ai, which we translate island, is most probably the Arabic particle whosoever, whatsoever, any, whosoever he may be. The text may therefore be translated, He shall deliver every innocent person: He, the innocent person, shall be delivered by the pureness of thy hands; i. e., as thou lovest justice, so thou wilt do justice. Instead of cappayca, thy hands, the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, have read, his or their hands.

Thus ends Eliphaz the Temanite, who began with a tissue of the bitterest charges, continued with the most cruel insinuations, and ended with common-place exhortations to repentance, and promises of secular blessings in consequence: and from his whole speech scarcely can one new or important maxim be derived. Blessed be God for Moses and the prophets! for Jesus, the evangelists, and the apostles! Their trumpet gives no uncertain sound: but by that of Job's friends who can prepare himself for the battle?

CHAPTER XXIII.

Job answers; apologises for his complaining; wishes to plead his cause in the presence of his Maker, from whom he knows he should receive justice; but regrets that he cannot find him, 1-9. He, however, gives himself and his cause up to God, with the conviction of his own innocence, and God's justice and goodness, 10-14. He is, nevertheless, afraid when he considers the majesty of his Maker, 15-17.

THEN Job answered and said,
 2 Even to day is my complaint bitter: * my stroke is heavier than my groaning.
 3 ^b Oh that I knew where I might find him! that I might come even to his seat!
 4 I would order my cause before him, and fill my mouth with arguments.
 5 I would know the words which he would answer me, and understand what he would say unto me.
 6 ^c Will he plead against me with his great power? No; but he would put strength in me.
 7 There the righteous might dispute with him; so should I be delivered for ever from my judge.
 8 ^d Behold, I go forward, but he is not there; and backward, but I cannot perceive him:
 9 On the left hand, where he doth work, but I cannot behold him: he hideth himself on the right hand, that I cannot see him:

[Verse 2. Even to day is my complaint bitter] Job goes on to maintain his own innocence, and shows that he has derived neither conviction nor consolation from the discourses of his friends. He grants that his complaint is bitter; but states that, loud as it may be, the affliction which he endures is heavier than his complaints are loud.

[Verse 5. I would know the words which he would answer me] He would speak nothing but what was true, decree nothing that was not righteous, nor utter any thing that I could not comprehend.

[Verse 6. Will he plead against me] He would not exhibit his majesty and his sovereign authority to strike me dumb, or so overawe me that I could not speak in my own vindication.

[No; but he would put strength in me.] On the contrary, he would treat me with tenderness, he would rectify my mistakes, he would show me what was in my favour, and would temper the rigid demands of justice by the mild interpretations of equity; and where law could not clear me, mercy would conduct all to the most favourable issue.

[Verse 7. There the righteous might dispute with him] Nochach, might argue or plead. To dispute with God sounds very harsh.

[So should I be delivered for ever] The Hebrew word lanetsach may as well be translated to victory as for ever: and in this sense the Vulgate understood the words. Nothing less than the fullest conviction of his own innocence could have led Job to express himself thus to the Judge of quick and dead!

[Verse 8. Behold, I go forward] These two verses paint in vivid colours the distress and anxiety of a soul in search of the favour of God. No means are left untried, no place unexplored, in order to find the object of his research. This is a true description of the conduct of a genuine penitent.

[Verse 9. On the left hand, where he doth work] In these two verses Job mentions the four cardinal points of the heavens. And from this it appears that the Hebrews, Idumeans, and Arabs had the same ideas of these points of the heavens. It is worthy of remark that Job says, He hideth himself on the right hand (the south), that I cannot see him: for in fact, the southern point of heaven is not visible in Idumea, where Job was. Hence it comes that when he spake before, chap. ix. 9, of the constellations of the antarctic pole, he terms them the hidden chambers of the south; i. e., those compartments of the celestial concave that never appeared above the horizon in that place.

10 But he * knoweth 'the way that I take: when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold.

11 ^b My foot hath held his steps, his way have I kept, and not declined.

12 Neither have I gone back from the commandment of his lips; ^c I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than ^d my necessary food.

13 But he is in one mind, and ^e who can turn him? and what ^f his soul desireth, even that he doeth.

14 For he performeth the thing that is ^g appointed for me: and many such things are with him.

15 Therefore am I troubled at his presence; when I consider, I am afraid of him.

16 For God * maketh my heart soft, and the Almighty troubleth me:

[Verse 10. But he knoweth the way that I take] He approves of my conduct; my ways please him. He tries me: but, like gold, I shall lose nothing in the fire; I shall come forth more pure and luminous. If that which is reputed to be gold is exposed to the action of a strong fire, if it be genuine, it will lose nothing of its quality, nor of its weight. If it went into the fire gold, it will come out gold; the strongest fire will neither alter nor destroy it. So Job: he went into this furnace of affliction an innocent, righteous man; he came out the same. His character lost nothing of its value, nothing of its lustre.

[Verse 11. My foot hath held his steps, his way have I kept] I have carefully marked his providential dealings; and in his way—his pure and undefiled religion, have I walked. I have not only been generally but particularly religious: I have attended carefully to the weightier matters of the law, and have not forgotten its slightest injunctions.

[Verse 12. The commandment of his lips] The written law that proceeded from his own mouth.

[I have esteemed the words of his mouth] Mr. Good has given a better version of the original: In my bosom have I stored up the words of his mouth. The Asiatics carry every thing precious or valuable in their bosom, their handkerchiefs, jewels, purse, &c. Job, therefore, intimates that the words of God's mouth were to him a most precious treasure. [But it would be difficult to show how the original bears this rendering.]

[Verse 13. But he is in one mind] The original is literally, But he is in one: properly rendered by the Vulgate, But he is alone. He has no partner; his designs are his own, they are formed in his infinite wisdom, and none can turn his determinations aside. It is vain, therefore, for man to contend with his Maker. He designs my happiness, and you cannot prevent its accomplishment.

[Verse 14. For he performeth the thing that is appointed for me] Chukki may as well be translated bosom here as in the 12th verse; but probably it may mean a portion, lot, sufficiency: For he hath appointed me my lot; and like these there are multitudes with him. He diversifies human affairs: scarcely any two men have the same lot; nor has the same person the same portion at all times. He has multitudes of resources, expedients, means, &c., which he employs in governing human affairs.

[Verse 15. Therefore am I troubled] I do not as yet see an end to my afflictions: he has not exhausted his means of trial: therefore when I consider this, I am afraid of him.

Verse 16. For God maketh my heart soft] Prostrates my strength, deprives me of courage, so that I sink beneath my burden, and I am troubled at the thought of the Almighty, the self-sufficient and eternal Being.

Verse 17. Because I was not cut off] "Oh, why can I not draw darkness over my face? Why may not thick darkness cover my face?"—Good. This verse should be read in connexion with the preceding; and then we shall have the sense.

Nothing can humble a pious mind so much as scriptural apprehensions of the majesty of God. It is easy to contemplate his goodness, loving-kindness, and mercy; but to consider his holiness and justice, the infinite righteousness of his nature, under the conviction that we have sinned and broken the laws prescribed by his sovereign majesty, and to feel ourselves brought as into the presence of his judgment-seat,—who can bear the thought? If cherubim and seraphim veil their faces before his throne, what must a sinner feel, whose conscience is not yet purged from dead works, and who feels the wrath of God abiding on him? And how, without such a mediator and sacrifice as Jesus Christ is, can any human spirit come into the presence of its Judge? Those who can approach him without terror, know little of his justice, and nothing of their sin.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Job asserts that there are various transgressors whose wickedness is not visited on them in this life; and particularises the unjust and oppressive, 1-6; those who are cruel to the poor, 7-13; the murderer, 14; the adulterer, 15; thieves and plunderers, 16, 17. Nevertheless they have an accursed portion, and shall die, and their memory perish, 18-20. He speaks of the abuse of power and of the punishment of oppressors, 21-24; and asserts that what he has said on these subjects cannot be contradicted, 25.

WHY, seeing * times are not hidden from the Almighty, do they that know him not see his days?

2 Some remove the ^b landmarks; they violently take away flocks, and ^c feed thereof.

8 They drive away the ass of the fatherless, they ^d take the widow's ox for a pledge.

4 They turn the needy out of the way: * the poor of the earth hide themselves together.

5 Behold, as wild asses in the desert, go they forth to their work; rising betimes for a prey; the wilderness yieldeth food for them and for their children.

6 They reap every one his ^f corn in the field: and ^g they gather the vintage of the wicked.

7 They ^h cause the naked to lodge without clothing, that they have no covering in the cold.

8 They are wet with the showers of the mountains, and ⁱ embrace the rock for want of a shelter.

9 They pluck the fatherless from the breast, and take a pledge of the poor.

10 They cause him to go naked without clothing,

Verse 1. Why, seeing times are not hidden from the Almighty] Mr. Good translates: "Wherefore are not doomsdays kept by the Almighty, so that his offenders may eye their periods?" Domsdays are here used in the same sense as term times; and the wish is, that God would appoint such times that the falsely accused might look forward to them with comfort; knowing that, on their arrival, they should have a fair hearing, and their innocence be publicly declared; and their detractors, and the unjust in general, meet with their deserts. But God reserves the knowledge of these things to himself.

Verse 2. Some remove the landmarks] Stones or posts were originally set up to ascertain the bounds of particular estates: and this was necessary in open countries, before hedges and fences were formed. Wicked and covetous men often removed these, and set them in on their neighbours' ground, that, by contracting their boundaries, they might enlarge their own. The law of Moses denounces curses on those who remove their neighbours' landmarks.

They violently take away flocks, and feed thereof.] Mr. Wood translates yiru, they destroy, deriving the word, not from roch, to feed, but from ra, to rend, to destroy.

The Septuagint had read roch, a shepherd; and therefore ra translated "violently carrying off both the flock and the shepherd."

Verse 4. They turn the needy out of the way] They will not permit them to go by the accustomed paths; they oblige them to take circuitous routes. All tolerated oppression and voluntary forfeiture of ancient rights, are injurious to society at large, and they who sink at them leave the world worse than they found it.

Verse 5. Rising betimes for a prey] The general sense here seems plain enough. There are some who live a lawless roaming life; make a predatory life their employment; for this purpose, frequent the wilderness, where they seize on and appropriate whatsoever they find, and by this method they and their families are supported.

Verse 6. They reap every one his corn in the field] This is perfectly characteristic of the Bedouin Arabs. These wandering hordes often make sudden irruptions, and carry off the harvest of grain, olives, wines, &c., and plunge into the wilderness, where none can follow them.

Verse 7. They cause the naked to lodge without clothing] Or rather, They spend the night naked, without clothing: and without a covering from the cold: another characteristic of the wandering Arabs. They are ill-fed, ill-clothed, and often miserably off, even for tents. They can have little household stuff: as they are plunderers, they are often obliged to fly for their lives, and cannot encumber themselves with what is not absolutely needful.

Verse 8. And embrace the rock for want of a shelter.] In cases of storm, the firm rock is the only shelter which can be found, or safely trusted.

Verse 9. They pluck the fatherless from the breast] They forcibly take young children in order that they may bring them up in a state of slavery. This verse is the commencement of a new paragraph, and points out the arbitrary dealings of oppressors, under despotic governors.

Take a pledge of the poor.] Oppressive landlords who let out their grounds at an exorbitant rent, which the poor labourers, though using the utmost diligence, are unable at all times to pay; and then the unfeeling wretch sells them up, as the phrase here is, or takes their cow, their horse, their cart, or their bed, in pledge, that the money shall be paid in such a time. This is one of the crying sins of some countries of Europe.

Verse 10. They cause him to go naked] These cruel, hard-hearted oppressors seize the cloth made for the family wear, or the wool and flax out of which such clothes should be made.

And they take away the sheaf] Seize the grain as soon as it is reaped, that they may pay themselves the exorbitant rent at which they have leased out their land: and thus the sheaf—the thraves and ricks, by which they should have 13 They are of those that rebel against the light ; they know not the ways thereof, nor abide in the paths thereof.

15 ^c The eye also of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight, ^d saying, No eye shall see me : and ^e disguiseth his face.

16 In the dark they dig through houses, which they had marked for themselves in the day-time : they ^f know not the light.

17 For the morning is to them even as the shadow of death : if one know them, they are in the terrors of the shadow of death.

been supported, are taken away from the hungry.
Verse 11. Make oil within their walls] Thus stripped of all that on which they depended for clothing and food, they are obliged to become vassals to their lord, labour in the fields on scanty fare, or tread their wine-presses, from the produce of which they are not permitted to quench their thirst.

Verse 12. Men groan from out of the city] The poor in such places are often in the most wretched state ; they are not only badly fed, and miserably clothed, but also most unwholesomely lodged.

Yet God layeth not folly to them.] He does not impute their calamities to their own folly. Or, according to the Vulgate, "And God will not leave (these disorders) unpunished." But the Hebrew may be translated, And God doth not attend to their prayers. Job's object was to show, in opposition to the mistaken doctrine of his friends, that God did not hastily punish every evil work, nor reward every good one. That vice often went long unpunished, and virtue unrewarded ; and that we must not judge of a man's state either by his prosperity or adversity.

Verse 13. They—rebel against the light] Speaking of wicked men. They rebel against the light of God in their consciences, and his light in his word. They are tyrants in grain, and care neither for God nor the poor. They know not the ways thereof—they will not learn their duty to God or man. Nor abide in the paths thereof—if brought at any time to a better mind, they speedily relapse ; and are steady only in cruelty and mischief. This is the character of the oppressors of suffering humanity, and of sinners audacious and hardened.

Verse 14. The murderer rising with the light] This description is suitable to a highwayman ; one who robs in daylight, and who has been impelled by poverty and distress to use this most unlawful and perilous mode to get bread ; and for fear of being discovered or taken, commits murder, and thus adds crime to crime.

In the night is as a thief.] Having been a highwayman in the day-time, he turns footpad or house-breaker by night, and thus goes on from sin to sin.

Verse 15. The eye also of the adulterer] This is another sin particularly of the city. The adulterer has made his assignation ; he has marked the house of her into whose good graces he has insinuated himself, called digging through the house : he waits impatiently for the dusk : and then goes forth, having muffled or disguised his face, and spends a criminal night with the faithless wife of another man. The morning dawns : but it is to him as the shadow of death, lest he should be detected before he can reach his own home. And if one know him—if he happen to be recognised in coming out of the forbidden house ; the terrors of death seize upon him, being afraid that he shall be called to account. [But the 16th and following verses indicate the way of the thief not the adulterer.]

Verse 16. In the dark they dig through houses] Thieves in Bengal very frequently dig through the mud wall and under the clay floors of houses, and, entering unperceived, plunder them while the inhabitants are asleep.

Verse 18. He is swift as the waters] Literally, Light is he on the face of the waters : and cursed shall be their portion on the earth.

He beholdeth not the way of the vineyards.] These no longer flourish or bring forth fruit. The labour of the vintage fails.

Verse 19. Drought and heat consume the snow waters] The public cisterns or large tanks which had been filled with water by the melting of the snow on the mountains, and which water was stored for the irrigation of their lands, had been entirely exhausted by the intensity of the heat, and the long continuance of drought.

So doth the grave those which have sinned.] For this whole paragraph we have only two words in the original ; viz., sheol chatau, "the pit, they have sinned."

I have elsewhere shown that sheol signifies, not only hell and the grave, but any deep pit ; and, also, that chata signifies to miss the mark.

Verse 20. The womb shall forget him] The mother that bare him shall have no affection for him, nor be afflicted at his death. But the word rechem signifies compassion, mercy. Mercy shall be unmindful of him. How dreadful such a state ! When mercy itself forgets the sinner, his perdition slumbereth not.

The worm shall feed sweetly on him] The Chaldee has, "The cruel, who have neglected to commiserate the poor, shall be sweet to the worms." He shall be brought into a state of the greatest degradation, and shall be no more remembered.

And wickedness shall be broken as a tree.] He shall be as a rotten or decayed tree, easily broken to pieces.

Verse 21. He evil entreateth the barren] I believe the original word should be translated he feedeth ; and so the Vulgate understood the word. He has been kind to the barren woman ; but he has done no good to the widow. He has shown no mercy to large families ; he has been an enemy to the procreation of children. Though he may, for particular reasons, have provided for a barren woman ; yet the widow he has not comforted, she being old or infirm, or such as might not suit his purpose. [The version in the text is most probably correct.]

Verse 22. He draweth also the mighty] In the midst even of his guards he is afraid ; and dares not put confidence in any person. This is an admirable delineation of the iniquities and terrors of a tyrant.

Verse 23. Though it be given him to be in safety] I think the words should be translated thus : "He gives them (i. e., the guards) to him for security, and he leans upon them ; yet his eyes are upon their ways." Though he has taken the guards, mentioned in the preceding verse, for his personal defence, and for this purpose he uses them ; yet he is full of diffidence, and he is continually watching them, lest they should be plotting his destruction. The true picture of an eastern tyrant. Without are fightings ; within are fears.

Verse 24. They are exalted for a little while] Such tyrants are exalted for a time, for God putteth down one and raiseth up another; but he turns his hand against them, and they are gone. They may flourish for a time, and continue their oppressions; but they shall at last come to an untimely end. Few tyrants ever visit the eternal world, but by a violent death. All eastern history is full of this great fact.

Verse 25. And if it be not so now] Job has proved by examples that the righteous are often oppressed; that the wicked often triumph over the just; that the impious are always wretched even in the midst of their greatest prosperity; and he defies his friends to show one flaw in his argument, or an error in his illustration of it; and that existing facts are farther proofs of what he has advanced.

In the preceding chapters we find Job's friends having continual recourse to this assertion, which it is the grand object of all their discourses to prove, viz., The righteous are so distinguished in the approbation of God, that they live always in prosperity, and die in peace.

On the other hand, Job contends that the dispensations of Providence are by no means thus equal in this life; that experience shows that the righteous are often in adversity, and the wicked in power and prosperity.

Job's friends had also endeavoured to prove, that if a reported good man fell into adversity, it was a proof that his character had been mistaken, that he was an internal sinner and hypocrite; and that God, by these manifest proofs of his disapprobation, unmasked him. Hence they charged Job with hypocrisy and secret sins, because he was now suffering adversity; and that his sins must be of the most heinous nature, because his afflictions were uncommonly great. This Job repels by appeals to numerous facts where there was nothing equivocal in the character; where the bad was demonstrably bad, and yet in prosperity; and the good demonstrably good, and yet in adversity. It is strange that none of these could hit on a middle way; viz., The wicked may be in prosperity, but he is ever miserable in his soul; the righteous may be in adversity, but he is ever happy in his God. In these respects, God's ways are always equal.

CHAPTER XXV.

Bildad, the Shuhite, in an irregular speech, shows that God's dominion is supreme, his armies innumerable, and his providence extended over all, 1-3; that man cannot be justified before God; that even the heavenly bodies cannot be reputed pure in his sight; much less man, who is naturally weak and sinful, 4-6.

THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said,

2 Dominion and fear are with him, he maketh peace in his high places.

3 Is there any number of his armies? and upon whom doth not his light arise?

* James i. 17.—^b Ch. iv. 17, &c. xv. 14, &c.

Verse 1. Bildad the Shuhite] This is the last attack on Job; the others felt themselves foiled, though they had not humility enough to acknowledge it, but would not again return to the attack. Bildad makes a few assertions, particularly in reference to what Job has said in the commencement of the preceding chapter.

Verse 2. Dominion and fear are with him] God is an absolute sovereign; his fear is on all the hosts of heaven; and by his sovereignty he establishes and preserves order in the heavens, and among all the inhabitants of the eternal world: how canst thou, therefore, dare to appeal to him, or desire to appear before him?

Verse 3. Is there any number of his armies?] He has troops innumerable; he can serve himself of all his creatures; every thing may be a means of help or destruction according to his divine will. When he purposes to save, none can destroy; and when he is determined to destroy, none can save. It is vain to trust in his creatures against himself.

Upon whom doth not his light arise?] That is, his providence rules over all; he is universal Lord; he causes his sun to arise on the evil and the good, and sends his rain on the just and unjust.

Verse 4. How then can man be justified?] Or, With what shall a man be justified with God?] Though this is no conclusion from Bildad's premises, yet the question is of the highest importance to man. Neither Bildad nor any of his fellows could answer it; the doctrine of redemption through the blood of the cross, was then known only through types and shadows. We, who live in the gospel dispensation, can readily answer the question, With what shall miserable man be justified with God?—Ans. By bringing forward by faith, to the throne of the divine justice, the sacrificial offering of the Lord Jesus Christ; and confiding absolutely in it, as being a full, sufficient, and complete atonement and sacrifice for his sins, and for the salvation of a lost world.

How, or with what shall he be clean that is born of a woman?—Ans. By receiving that grace or heavenly influence communicated by the power and energy of the eternal Spirit applying to the heart the efficacy of that blood which cleanses from all unrighteousness. This, and this only, is the way in which a sinner, when truly penitent, can be justified before God; and in which a believer, convinced of indwelling sin, can be sanctified and cleansed from all unrighteousness. This is the only means of justification and sanctification, without which there can be no glorification. And these two great works, which constitute the whole of salvation, have been procured for a lost world by the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, who was delivered for our offences, and rose again for our justification; to whom be glory and dominion now and for evermore, Amen!

Verse 5. Behold even to the moon, and it shineth not] It is continually changing its appearance. It never appears twice in its whole revolution with the same face: it is ever waxing or waning; and its face is variegated with opaque spots. Its changeableness can never be compared with the unchangeable nature of God.

Yea, the stars are not pure in his sight.] Whatever their excellence may be as stars, it is nothing in comparison with him from whom they have derived their being and splendour.

Some think that by stars are meant those angels who kept not their first estate: this may be so, but I cannot see it in the text. It may, however, mean the heavenly host, as it is supposed to do, chap. xxviii. 7; but I still must hesitate on the propriety of such applications.

It is probable this speech of Bildad was delivered in the night-season, when clouds interrupted the bright shining of the moon. The third verse seems to refer immediately to the stars, which to the naked eye are innumerable. The sun is not mentioned because of his absence.

Verse 6. How much less man, that is a worm?] Almost all the Versions read, "Truly man is corruption, and the son of man a worm." The original is degradingly expressive: "Even because enosh, miserable man, is rimmah, a crawling worm; and the son of Adam, who is toleah, a worm, or rather maggot, from its eating into and dividing certain substances."

Thus endeth Bildad the Shuhite, who endeavoured to speak on a subject which he did not understand; and, having got on bad ground, was soon confounded in his own mind, spoke incoherently, argued inconclusively, and came abruptly and suddenly to an end. Thus, his three friends being confounded, Job was left to pursue his own way; they trouble him no more; and he proceeds in triumph to the end of the thirty-first chapter.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Job, perceiving that his friends could no longer support their arguments on the ground they had assumed, sharply reproves them for their want both of wisdom and feeling, 1-4; shows that the power and wisdom of God are manifest in the works of creation and providence; gives several proofs; and then adds that these are a small specimen of his infinite skill and unlimited power, 5-14.

BUT Job answered and said,
 2 How hast thou helped him that is without power? how savest thou the arm that hath no strength?
 3 How hast thou counselled him that hath no wisdom? and how hast thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?
 4 To whom hast thou uttered words? and whose spirit came from thee?
 5 Dead things are formed from under the waters, and the inhabitants thereof.

* Neh. v. 5.—1 Sam. ii. 9.—Or, with the inhabitants.—^d Ps. cxxxix. 8, 11. Prov. xv. 11. Heb. iv. 13.—^e Ch. ix. 8. 1's. xxiv. 2.

Verse 2. How hast thou helped him] This seems a species of irony. How wonderfully hast thou counselled the unskilful, and strengthened the weak! Alas for you! ye could not give what ye did not possess.

Verse 4. Whose spirit came from thee?] The retort is peculiarly severe; and refers immediately to the proverbial sayings which in several of the preceding answers have been adduced against the irritated sufferer. I therefore regard the remainder of this chapter as a sample, ironically exhibited by Job, of the harangues on the power and greatness of God which he supposes his friends to have taken out of the mouths of other men, to deck their speeches with borrowed lustre. Only, in descanting on the same subject, he shows how much he himself can go beyond them in eloquence and sublimity.

Job intimates that, whatever spirit they had, it was not the Spirit of God, because in their answers falsehood was found.

Verse 5. Dead things are formed from under the waters] This verse, as it stands in our Version, seems to convey no meaning; and the Hebrew is obscure; "the Rephaim," certainly means not dead things; nor can there be any propriety in saying that dead things, or things without life, are formed under the waters, for such things are formed everywhere in the earth, and under the earth, as well as under the waters.

There is probably here an allusion to the destruction of the earth by the general deluge. Moses, speaking concerning the state of the earth before the flood, says, Gen. vi. 4, "There were giants, nephilim, in the earth in those days." Now it is likely that Job means the same by rephaim as Moses does by the nephilim; and that both refer to the antediluvians, who were all, for their exceeding great iniquities, overwhelmed by the waters of the deluge. Can those mighty men and their neighbours, all the sinners who have been gathered to them since, be rejected from under the waters, by which they were judiciously overwhelmed?

I greatly question whether sea-monsters be not intended, such as porpoises, sharks, narwals, grampuses, and whales.

Verse 6. Hell is naked before him] Sheol, the place of the dead, or of separate spirits, is always in his view. And there is no covering to Abaddon—the place of the destroyer, where destruction reigns, and where those dwell who are eternally separated from God. The ancients thought that hell or Tartarus was a vast space in the centre, or at the very bottom of the earth.

6 Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering.

7 He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing.

8 He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds; and the cloud is not rent under them.

9 He holdeth back the face of his throne, and spreadeth his cloud upon it.

10 He hath compassed the waters with bounds, until the day and night come to an end.

civ. 2, &c.—^f Prov. xxx. 4.—^g Ch. xxxviii. 8. Ps. xxxiii. 7. civ. 9. Prov. viii. 29. Jer. v. 22 —^h Heb. until the end of light with darkness.

And some have supposed that there is an allusion to this opinion in the above passage, as well as in several others in the Old Testament; but it is not likely that the sacred writers would countenance an opinion that certainly has nothing in fact or philosophy to support it. Yet still a poet may avail himself of popular opinions.

Verse 7. He stretcheth out the north over the empty place] The same word as is used, Gen. i. 2, The earth was without form, tohu. The north must here mean the north pole, or northern hemisphere; and perhaps what is here stated may refer to the opinion that the earth was a vast extended plain, and the heavens poised upon it, resting on this plain all round the horizon. Of the south, the inhabitants of Idumea knew nothing; nor could they have any notion of inhabitants in that hemisphere.

Verse 8. He bindeth up the waters] Drives the aqueous particles together, which were raised by evaporation, so that, being condensed, they form clouds which float in the atmosphere, till, meeting with strong currents of wind, or by the agency of the electric fluid, they are farther condensed; and then, becoming too heavy to be sustained in the air, fall down in the form of rain, when, in this poetic language, the cloud is rent under them.

Verse 9. He holdeth back the face of his throne] Though all these are most elegant effects of an omniscient and almighty power, yet the great Agent is not personally discoverable; he dwelleth in light unapproachable, and in mercy hides himself from the view of his creatures. The world, however, may refer to those obscurations of the face of heaven, and the hiding of the body of the sun, when the atmosphere is laden with dense vapours, and the rain begins to be poured down on the earth.

Verse 10. He hath compassed the waters with bounds] Perhaps this refers merely to the circle of the horizon, the line that terminates light and commences darkness, called here ad tachlith or im choseth, "until the completion of light with darkness." Or, if we take tachlith here to be the same with techeleth, Exod. xxv. 4, and elsewhere, which we translate blue, it may mean that sombre sky-blue appearance of the horizon at the time of twilight, i. e., between light and darkness; the line where the one is terminating and the other commencing. Or, He so circumscribes the waters, retaining them in their own place, that they shall not be able to overflow the earth until day and night, that is, time itself, come to an end.

11 The pillars of heaven tremble, and are astonished at his reproof.

12 He divideth the sea with his power, and by his understanding he smiteth through the proud.

*Exod. xiv. 21. Ps. lxxiv. 13. Isa. li. 15. Jer. xxxi. 85.

Verse 11. The pillars of heaven tremble] This is probably a poetical description either of thunder, or of an earthquake.

But there may be an allusion to the high mountains, which were anciently esteemed by the common people as the pillars on which the heavens rested; and when these were shaken with earthquakes, it might be said the pillars of heaven tremble. Mount Atlas was supposed to be one of those pillars, and this gave rise to the fable of Atlas being a man who bore the heavens on his shoulders.

Verse 12. He divideth the sea with his power] Here is a manifest allusion to the passage of the Red Sea by the Israelites, and the overthrow of Pharaoh and his host, according to the opinion of the most eminent critics.

He smiteth through the proud.] Rahab, the very name by which Egypt is called Isa. li. 9, and elsewhere. [Rahab, which Isaiah uses as figurative of Egypt, may mean here nothing more than a sea-monster or dragon.]

Verse 13. By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens] See the observations below.

Verse 14. Lo, these are parts of his ways] Ketsoth, the ends or extremities, the outlines, an indistinct sketch, of his eternal power and godhead.

How little a portion is heard] Shemets, a mere whisper; admirably opposed to raam, the thunder, mentioned in the next clause. As the thunder is to a whisper, so are the tremendous and infinitely varied works of God to the faint outlines exhibited in the above discourse. Every reader will relish the dignity, propriety, and sense of these expressions. They force themselves on the observation of even the most heedless.

By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens.—Some think this refers to the clearing of the sky after a storm, such as appears to be described ver. 11, 12; and suppose his spirit means the wind, which he directs to sweep and cleanse the face of the sky, by which the splendour of the day or the lustre of the night is restored: and by the crooked flying or aerial serpent, as it is variously rendered, the ecliptic is supposed to be meant, as the sun's apparent course in it appears to be serpentine, in his approach to and recession from each of the tropics. This tortuous line may be seen on any terrestrial globe. Many will object to this notion as too refined for the time of Job; but this I could easily 13 By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens; his hand hath formed the crooked serpent.

14 Lo, these are parts of his ways: but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can understand?

^bHeb. pride.—^cPs. xxxiii. 6. ^dIsa. xxvii. 1.

admit, as astronomy had a very early existence among the Arabians, if not its origin. But with me the chief objection lies against the obscurity of the allusion, if it be one; for it must require no small ingenuity, and almost the spirit of divination, to find out the sun's oblique path in the zodiac in the words His hand hath formed the crooked serpent. Others have imagined that the allusion is to the lightning in that zig-zag form which it assumes when discharged from one cloud into another during a thunder storm. This is at once a natural and very apparent sense. Others think that the act of the creation of the solar system is intended to be expressed, which is in several parts of the sacred writings attributed to the Spirit of God (Gen. i. 2; Ps. xxxiii. 6); and that the crooked serpent means either Satan, who deceived our first parents, or huge aquatic animals; for in Isa. xxvii. 1, we find the leviathan and dragon of the sea called nachash bariach, the very terms that are used by Job in this place. And we know that in Gen. i. 21 hattanninim laggedolim, which we translate great whales, includes all sea-monsters or vast aquatic animals. The intelligent Dr. Sherlock gives another interpretation: "that Job here intended to oppose that grand religious system of sabæism which prevailed in his time, and to which, in other parts of this book, he alludes; a system which acknowledged two opposite independent principles by which the universe was governed, and paid divine adoration to the celestial luminaries. In opposition to the idolatrous practice of the time, he asserts God to be the maker of all the host of heaven: By his spirit he garnished the heavens. In opposition to the false notion of two independent principles, he asserts God to be the maker of him who was the author of evil: His hand hath formed the crooked serpent." [The more obvious interpretation is that "the crooked serpent" is the straggling constellation of the dragon, which winds between Ursa Major and Ursa Minor.]

From the contradictory opinions on this passage, the reader will no doubt feel cautious what mode of interpretation he adopts, and the absolute necessity of admitting no texts of doubtful interpretation as vouchers for the essential doctrines of Christianity. Neither metaphors, allegories, similes, nor figurative expressions of any kind, should ever be adduced or appealed to as proofs of any article in the Christian faith.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Job strongly asserts his innocence, determines to maintain it, and to avoid every evil way, 1-7. Shows his abhorrence of the hypocrite by describing his infamous character, accumulated miseries, and wretched end, 8-23.

MOREOVER Job continued his parable and said,

2 As God liveth who hath taken away my judgment; and the Almighty, who hath vexed my soul;

* Heb. added to take up.—^bCh. xxxiv. 5.—^cHeb. made my soul bitter. Ruth. i. 20. 2 Kings iv. 27.

Verse 1. Continued his parable] After having paused to see if any of his friends chose to make any reply; he resumed his discourse, which is here called meshalo, his parable, his authoritative weighty discourse; from marshal, to exercise rule, authority, dominion, or power. Parkhurst.

Verse 2. Who hath taken away my judgment] Who has turned away my cause, and has not permitted it to come to a hearing, where I might have justice done to me, but has abandoned me to the harsh and uncharitable judgment of 3 All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils; my enemies? There appears to be a great want of reverence in these words of Job; he speaks with a degree of irritation, if not bitterness, which cannot be justified. No man should speak thus of his Maker.

Verse 3. All the while my breath is in me] The whole of Job's assertion may be no more than a periphrasis for As long as I live and have my understanding. Indeed wish-maths may be rendered my mind or understanding, and ruach Eloah, the breath of God, the principle of animal life, die * I will not remove my integrity from me.

6 My righteousness ^b I hold fast, and will not let it go: * my heart shall not reproach me ^c so long as I live.

7 Let mine enemy be as the wicked, and he that riseth up against me as the unrighteous.

8 * For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul?

9 ' Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him?

10 * Will he delight himself in the Almighty? will he always call upon God?

11 I will teach you ^a by the hand of God: that which is with the Almighty will I not conceal.

12 Behold, all ye yourselves have seen it; why then are ye thus altogether vain?

the same that he breathed into Adam; for it is there said, Gen. ii. 7, He breathed into his nostrils, nismath chayim, the breath of lives, or that principle from which animal and spiritual life proceeds; in consequence of which he became lenepesh chayiah, an intelligent or rational animal.

Verse 4. My lips shall not speak wickedness] As I have hitherto lived in all good conscience before God, as he knoweth, so will I continue to live.

Verse 5. God forbid] Far be it from me, that I should justify you—that I should now by any kind of acknowledgment of wickedness or hypocrisy, justify your harsh judgments. You say that God afflicts me for my crimes; I say, and God knows it is truth, that I have not sinned so as to draw down any such judgment upon me.

Verse 6. My righteousness I hold fast] I stand firmly on this ground; I have endeavoured to live an upright life, and my afflictions are not the consequence of my sins.

My heart shall not reproach me] I shall take care so to live that I shall have a conscience void of offence before God and man. 1 John iii. 21.

Verse 7. Let mine enemy be as the wicked] Let my accuser be proved a lying and perjured man, because he has laid to my charge things which he cannot prove, and which are utterly false.

Verse 8. What is the hope of the hypocrite] The word chaneph, which we translate, most improperly, hypocrite, means a wicked fellow, a defiled, polluted wretch, a rascal, a knave, a man who sticks at nothing in order to gain his ends. In this verse it means a dishonest man, a rogue, who by overreaching, cheating, &c., has amassed a fortune.

When God taketh away his soul?] Could he have had any well-grounded hope of eternal blessedness when he was acquiring earthly property by guilt and deceit? And of what avail will this property be when his soul is summoned before the judgment-seat? A righteous man yields up his soul to God; the wicked does not, because he is afraid of God, of death, and of eternity. God therefore takes the soul away—forces it out of the body.

The words appear to have been in the eye of our Lord, when he said, "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Matt. xvi. 26.

Verse 11. I will teach you by the hand of God] Job felt that the good hand of his God was upon him, and that therefore he should make no mistake in his doctrines.

Verse 12. Ye yourselves have seen it] Your own experience and observation have shown you that the righteous are frequently in affliction, and the wicked in affluence.

Why then are ye thus altogether vain?] The original is very emphatical: hebel tebbalu, "Why then should ye thus babble babblings?"

Verse 13. This is the portion of a wicked man] Job now commences his promised teaching; and what follows is a description of the lot or portion of the wicked man and of tyrants. And this remuneration shall they have with God in general, though the hand of man be not laid upon them. Though he does not at all times show his displeasure against the wicked, by reducing them to a state of poverty and affliction, yet he often does it so that men may see it; and 13 This is the portion of a wicked man with God, and the heritage of oppressors, which they shall receive of the Almighty.

14 If his children be multiplied, it is for the sword: and his offspring shall not be satisfied with bread.

15 Those that remain of him shall be buried in death: and his widows shall not weep.

16 Though he heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay;

17 He may prepare it, but the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver.

18 He buildeth his house as a moth, and as a booth that the keeper maketh.

19 The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered: he openeth his eyes, and he is not.

29, 27.—^a Or, being in the land, &c.—(Ch. xx. 29.—) Dent. xxviii. 41. Esth. ix. 10. Hos. ix. 13.—^b Ps. lxxxviii. 64.—^c Prov. xxviii. 8. Eccles. ii. 26.—^d Isa. i. 8. Lam. ii. 6.

at other times he seems to pass them by, reserving their judgment for another world, that men may not forget that there is a day of judgment and perdition for ungodly men, and a future recompence for the righteous.

Verse 14. If his children be multiplied] As numerous families were supposed to be a proof of the benediction of the Almighty, Job shows that this is not always the case; for the offspring of the wicked shall be partly cut off by violent deaths, and partly reduced to great poverty.

Verse 15. Those that remain of him] His remains, whether meaning himself personally, or his family.

Shall be buried in death] Shall come to utter and remediless destruction. Death shall have his full conquest over them, and the grave its complete victory. These are no common dead. Even widows shall not weep for them; the public shall not bewail them; for when the wicked perish there is shouting.

Verse 16. Though he heap up silver] Unsanctified wealth is a curse to its possessor. Money, of all earthly possessions, is the most dangerous, as it is the readiest agent to do good or evil. He that perverts it is doubly cursed, because it affords him the most immediate means of sinful gratification; and he can sin more in an hour through this, than he can in a day or week by any other kind of property. On the other hand, they who use it aright have it in their power to do the most prompt and immediate good.

Verse 17. The just shall put it on] Money is God's property; and though it may be abused for a time by unrighteous hands, God, in the course of his providence, brings it back to its proper use; and often the righteous possess the inheritance of the wicked.

Verse 18. He buildeth his house as a moth] With great skill, great pains, and great industry; but it shall be only a temporary habitation, like that which the moth makes in its larva or caterpillar state, during its change from a chrysalis to a winged insect.

As a booth that the keeper maketh] A shed made of the lightest and most worthless material which the watchman or keeper of a vineyard erects to cover him from the scorching sun, while watching the ripening grapes, that they may be preserved from depredation.

Verse 19. The rich man shall lie down] In the grave.

But he shall not be gathered] Neither have a respectable burial among men, nor be gathered with the righteous in the kingdom of God. It may be that Job alludes here to an opinion relative to the state of certain persons after death, prevalent in all nations in ancient times, viz., that those whose funeral rites had not been duly performed, wander about as ghosts, and find no rest.

He openeth his eyes] In the morning of the resurrection. And he is not] He is utterly lost and undone for ever.

This seems to be the plain sense of the passage; and so all the Versions appear to have understood it; but Mr. Good translates thus: Let the rich man lie down, and care not. I see no manner of occasion to resort to his interpretation, which, in my judgment, gives a sense inferior to that given above, or to the following: The rich man shall lie down—go to his rest, fully persuaded that his property is in perfect safety; but he shall not be gathered, or he shall not gather—

20 *Terrors take hold on him as waters, a tempest stealeth him away in the night.

21 The east wind carrieth him away, and he departeth: and as a storm hurleth him out of his place.

* Ch. xviii. 11.

make any farther addition to his stores: he openeth his eyes in the morning, when he is not—marauders in the night have stripped him of all his property, as in the case of Job himself; a case quite probable, and not unfrequent in Arabia, when a hostile tribe makes a sudden incursion, and carries off an immense booty. But I prefer the first meaning, as it is obtained without crucifying the text. [It is difficult, however, to see how the passage in itself, or its relations, can have any reference to death and the resurrection.]

Verse 20. Terrors take hold on him as waters] They come upon him as an irresistible flood; and he is overwhelmed as by a tempest in the night, when darkness partly hides his danger, and deprives him of discerning the way to escape.

22 For God shall cast upon him, and not spare: ^b he would fain flee out of his hand.

23 Men shall clap their hands at him, and shall hiss him out of his place.

^b Heb. in fleeing he would flee.

Verse 21. The east wind carrieth him away] Such as is called the euoclydon, the eastern storm of Acts xxvii. 14.

Verse 22. God shall cast upon him] Or, rather, the storm mentioned above shall incessantly pelt him, and give him no respite; nor can he by any means escape from its fury.

Verse 23. Men shall clap their hands at him] These two verses refer to the storm, which is to sweep away the ungodly; therefore the word God in ver. 22, and men in this verse, should be omitted. Here the storm is personified, and the wicked actor is hissed and driven by it from off the stage. It seems it was an ancient method to clap the hands against and hiss a man from any public office, who had acted improperly in it.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Job, in showing the vanity of human pursuits in reference to genuine wisdom, mentions mining for and refining gold and silver, 1; iron and other minerals, 2; the difficulties of mining, 3, 4; produce of grain for bread from the earth, and stones of fire from under it, 5. He speaks of precious stones and gold dust, 6; of the instinct of fowls and wild beasts in finding their way, 7, 8; and of the industry and successful attempts of men in mining and other operations, 9-11; but shows that with all their industry, skill, and perseverance, they cannot find out true wisdom, 12; of which he gives the most exalted character, 13-22; and shows that God alone, the fountain of wisdom, knows and can teach it, 23-27; and in what the true wisdom consists, 28.

SURELY there is ^a a vein for the silver, and a place for gold where they fine it.

2 Iron is taken out of the ^b earth, and brass is molten out of the stone.

3 He setteth an end to darkness, and searcheth out all perfection: the ^c stones of darkness, and the ^d shadow of death.

^a Or, a mine.—^b Or, dust.—^c Ver. 5.

Verse 1. Surely there is a vein for the silver] This chapter is the oldest and finest piece of natural history in the world, and gives us very important information on several curious subjects; and could we ascertain the precise meaning of all the original words, we might, most probably, find out allusions to several useful arts which we are apt to think are of modern, or comparatively modern, invention.

The word motsa, which we here translate vein, signifies literally a going out, i. e., a mine, or place dug in the earth, whence the silver ore is extracted. And this ore lies generally in veins or lodes, running in certain directions.

A place for gold where they fine it.] This should rather be translated, A place for gold which they refine. Gold ore has also its peculiar mine, and requires to be refined from earthy impurities.

Verse 2. Iron is taken out of the earth] This most useful metal is hidden under the earth, and men have found out the method of separating it from its ore.

Brass is molten out of the stone.] As brass is a factitious metal, copper must be the meaning of the Hebrew word nechusah: literally, the stone is poured out for brass. If we retain the common translation, perhaps the process of making brass may be that to which Job refers; for this metal is formed from copper melted with the stone calamine; and thus the stone is poured out to make brass.

Verse 3. He setteth an end to darkness] As Job still refers to mining, the words above point out the persevering industry of man in penetrating into the bowels of the earth. Even the stones that lay hidden in the bowels of the earth he has brought to light, and has penetrated in directions in which the solar light could not be transmitted; so that he

4 The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant; even the waters forgotten of the foot: they are dried up, they are gone away from men.

5 As for the earth, out of it cometh bread: and under it is turned up as it were fire.

6 The stones of it are the place of sapphires: and it hath ^e dust of gold.

7 There is a path which no fowl knoweth, and appears to have gone to the regions of the shadow of death.

Verse 4. The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant] This passage is very difficult. Some think it refers to mining; others, to navigation. If it refer to the former, it may be intended to point out the waters that spring up when the miners have sunk down to a considerable depth, so that the mine is drowned, and they are obliged to give it up.

Forgotten of the foot] No man treads there any more. The waters increase, dallu, they are elevated, they rise up to a level with the spring, or till they meet with some fissure by which they can escape; and then meenash nau, they are moved or carried away from men; the stream is lost in the bowels of the earth.

[Modern exegesis gives a very different sense to this verse. The word rendered "flood" is properly "the shaft" of the mine, and the following words describe the position of the miners, swinging by the descending rope.]

Verse 5. The earth, out of it cometh bread] Or the earth, mimmennah, from itself, by its own vegetative power, it sends out bread, or the corn of which bread is made.

And under it is turned up as it were fire.] It seems as if this referred to some combustible fossil, similar to our stone coal, which was dug up out of the earth in some places of Arabia.

Verse 6. The stones—the place of sapphires] In the language of mineralogists, the gangue, matrix, or bed in which the sapphire is found.

Dust of gold.] Or rather, gold dust.

Verse 7. There is a path which no fowl knoweth] The instinct of birds is most surprising. They traverse vast forests, &c., in search of food, at a great distance from the which the vulture's eye hath not seen:

8 The lion's whelps have not trodden it, nor the fierce lion passed by it.

9 He putteth forth his hand upon the rock; he overturneth the mountains by the roots.

10 He cutteth out rivers among the rocks; and his eye seeth every precious thing.

11 He bindeth the floods from overflowing; and the thing that is hid bringeth he forth to light.

12 But where shall wisdom be found? and where is the place of understanding?

*Or, mint.—Heb. from weeping.—Ver. 20. Eccles. vii. 24.—Prov. iii. 15.—Ver. 22. Rom. xi. 33, 34.—Heb. fine gold shall not place which they have chosen for their general residence; and return in all weathers, never missing their track: they also find their own nest without ever mistaking another of the same kind for it. It is possible that Job may here refer to undiscovered mines and minerals; that notwithstanding man had already discovered much, yet much remained undiscovered, especially in the internal structure and contents of the earth. Since his time innumerable discoveries have been made; and yet how little do we know! Our various conflicting and contradictory theories of the earth are full proofs of our ignorance, and strong evidences of our folly. [The reference of the poet is evidently to the mining operations of men. Paths, unknown and inaccessible to bird and beast, are penetrated by man in his search after precious metals and stones.]

Verse 9. He putteth forth his hand upon the rock] Still there appears to be a reference to mining. Man puts his hand upon the rock, he breaks that to pieces, in order to extract the metals which it contains.

He overturneth the mountains] He excavates, undermines, or digs them away, when in search of the metals contained in them: this is not only poetically, but literally, the case in many instances.

Verse 10. He cutteth out rivers among the rocks] He cuts canals, adits, &c., in the rocks, and drives levels under ground, in order to discover lodes or veins of ore. These are often continued a great way under ground; and may be poetically compared to rivers, channels, or canals.

His eye seeth every precious thing.] He sinks those shafts, and drives those levels, in order to discover where the precious minerals lie, of which he is in pursuit

Verse 11. He bindeth the floods] Prevents the risings of springs from drowning the mines; and conducts rivers and streams from their wonted course, in order to bring forth to light what was hidden under their beds.

Verse 12. But where shall wisdom be found?] It is most evident that the terms wisdom and understanding are used here in a widely different sense from all those arts and sciences which have their relation to man in his animal and social state, and from all that reason and intellect by which man is distinguished from all other animals. In ver. 28, Job says, The fear of the Lord is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding. We know that the fear of the Lord is often taken for the whole of that religious reverence and holy obedience which God prescribes to man in his word, and which man owes to his Maker. Hence the Septuagint render choelmah, wisdom, by divine worship; and as to a departure from evil, that is necessarily implied in a religious life; but it is here properly distinguished, that no man might suppose that a right faith, and a proper performance of the rites of religious worship, is the whole of religion. No. They must not only worship God in the letter, but also in the spirit; they must not only have the form, but also the power of godliness: hence they will be truly happy: so that wisdom is another word for happiness.

Verse 13. Man knoweth not the price thereof] It is of infinite value; and is the only science which concerns both worlds. Without it, the wisest man is but a beast; with it, the simplest man is next to an angel.

Neither is it found in the land of the living.] The world by wisdom, its wisdom, never knew God. Literature, science, arts, &c., &c., can only avail man for the present life; nor can they contribute to his true happiness, unless tempered and directed by genuine religion.

Verse 14. The depth saith, It is not in me] Men may dig into the bowels of the earth, and there find gold, silver, and 13 Man knoweth not the price thereof; neither is it found in the land of the living.

14 The depth saith, It is not in me: and the sea saith, It is not with me.

15 It cannot be gotten for gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof.

16 It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx, or the sapphire.

17 The gold and the crystal cannot equal it: and the exchange of it shall not be for jewels of fine gold.

18 No mention shall be made of coral, or of pearls: for the price of wisdom is above rubies.

be given for it.—Prov. iii. 13, 14, 15, viii. 10, 11, 19. xvi. 16.—Or, vessels of fine gold.—Or, Ramoth.

precious stones; but these will not give them true happiness. The sea saith, It is not with me.] Men may explore foreign countries, and by navigation connect as it were the most distant parts of the earth, and multiply the comforts and luxuries of life; but every voyage and every enjoyment proclaim, True happiness is not here.

Verse 15. It cannot be gotten for gold] Solomon made gold and silver as plentiful as the stones in Jerusalem, and had all the delights of the sons of men, and yet he was not happy; yea, he had wisdom, was the wisest of men, but he had not the wisdom of which Job speaks here, and therefore, to him, all was vanity and vexation of spirit.

Verse 16. The gold of Ophir] Gold is five times mentioned in this and verses 17 and 19, and four of the times in different words. I shall consider them all at once.

1. SĒGOR, from sagar, to shut up. Gold in the mine, or shut up in the ore; native gold washed by the streams out of the mountains, &c.; unwrought gold.

Verse 16. 2. KETHĒM, from cutham, to sign or stamp: gold made current by being coined, or stamped with its weight or value; what we would call standard or sterling gold.

Verse 17. 3. ZAHAB, from zahab, to be clear, bright, or resplendent: the untarnishing metal; the only metal that always keeps its lustre. But probably here it means gold chased, or that in which precious stones are set; burnished gold.

4. PAZ, from paz, to consolidate, joined here with keley, vessels, ornaments, instruments, &c.: hammered or wrought gold; gold in the finest forms, and most elegant utensils.

In these verses there are also seven kinds of precious stones, &c. These I shall also consider in the order of their occurrence.

Verse 16. 1. Shoham, the ONYX, a word signifying a man's nail, hoof of an horse, because in colour it resembles both. This stone is a species of chalcodony; and consists of alternate layers of white and brown chalcodony, under which it generally ranges. In the Vulgate it is called sardonys, compounded of sard and onyx.

2. Sappir, the SAPPHIRE stone, from saphar, to count, number; probably from the number of golden spots with which it is said the sapphire of the ancients abounded.

I conjecture that lapis lasuli, which is of a blue colour, with golden-like spots, formed by pyrites of iron, must be intended. The lapis lasuli is that from which the beautiful and unfading colour called ultramarine is obtained.

Verse 17. 3. Zechuchith, CRYSTAL, or glass, from zachah, to be pure, clear, transparent. Crystal or crystal of quartz is a six-sided prism, terminated by six-sided pyramids. It belongs to the siliceous class of minerals: it is exceedingly clear and brilliant, inasmuch that this property of it has become proverbial, as clear as crystal.

Verse 18. 4. Ramoth, CORAL, from raam, to be exalted or elevated; probably from this remarkable property of coral, "it always grows from the tops of marine rocky caverns with the head downwards." Red coral is found in the Mediterranean, about the isles of Majorca and Minorca, on the African coasts, and in the Ethiopic ocean.

5. Gabish, PEARLS, from gabash, in Arabic, to be smooth, to shave off the hair; and hence gabish, the pearl, the smooth round substance; and also hail or hailstones, because of their resemblance to pearls. The pearl is the production of a shell-fish of the oyster kind, found chiefly in the East Indies, and called berber: but pearls are occasionally found in the common oyster, and in the mussel also. They are of a brilliant sparkling white, perfectly round in general, and formed of coats in the manner of an onion.

19 The topaz of Ethiopia shall not equal it, neither shall it be valued with pure gold.

20 "Whence then cometh wisdom? and where is the place of understanding?"

21 Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, and kept close from the fowls of the air.

22 "Destruction and death say, We have heard the fame thereof with our ears.

23 God understandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof.

* Ver. 12.—^b Or, heaven.—^c Ver. 14.—^d Prov. xv. 3.—
• Ps. cxxxv. 7.—^e Ch. xxxviii. 25.

Verse 18. 6. Peninim, RUBIES, from panah, he turned, looked, beheld. The oriental ruby is blood-red, rose-red, or with a tinge of violet. It has occasionally a mixture of blue, and is generally in the form of six-sided prisms.

But some learned men are of opinion that the magnet or loadstone is meant, and it is thus called because of the remarkable property it has of turning north and south. And this notion is rendered the more likely, because it agrees with another word in this verse, expressive of a different property of the magnet, viz., its attractive influence: for the Hebrew which we render, The price of wisdom is above rubies, is literally, The attraction of wisdom is beyond the peninim, the loadstone; for all the gold, silver, and precious stones, have strong influence on the human heart, attracting all its passions strongly; yet the attraction of wisdom—that which insures a man's happiness in both worlds, is more powerful and influential, when understood, than all of these, and even than the loadstone, for that can only attract iron; but, through desire of the other, a man having separated himself from all those earthly entanglements, seeketh and intermeddleth with ALL WISDOM.

7. Pitdah, the TOPAZ. This stone is generally found in a prismatic form, sometimes limpid and nearly transparent, or of various shades of yellow, green, blue, lilac, and red. [The uncertainty as to the meaning of the original word weakens the authority of Dr. Clarke's account of these precious stones.]

Verse 19. The topaz of Ethiopia] The country called Cush, which we call Ethiopia, is supposed to be that which extends from the eastern coast of the Red Sea, and stretches towards Lower Egypt. Diodorus Siculus says that the topaz was found in great abundance, as his description intimates, in an island in the Red Sea called Ophiodes, or the isle of serpents.

Verse 20. Whence then cometh wisdom?] Nearly the same words as in ver. 12, where see the note.

Verse 22. Destruction and death say, We have heard the fame thereof] Abaddon ramaveth, the destroyer and his offspring death. This is the very name that is given to the devil in Greek letters, Rev. ix. 11, and it is rendered by the Greek word, Apollyon, a word exactly of the same meaning. No wonder death and the devil are brought in here as saying they had heard the fame of wisdom, seeing ver. 23 defines it to be, the fear of the Lord, and a departure from evil; things point blank contrary to the interests of Satan, and the extension of the empire of death.

Verse 23. God understandeth the way thereof] It can only be taught by a revelation from himself. Instead of hebin, understandeth, six MSS. have hechin, disposed or established.

Verse 24. For he looketh to the ends of the earth] His knowledge is unlimited, and his power infinite.

Verse 25. To make the weight for the winds] God has given an atmosphere to the earth, which, possessing a certain degree of gravity perfectly suited to all necessities, is the cause in his hand of preserving animal and vegetative life through the creation; for by it the blood circulates in the veins of animals, and the juices in the tubes of vegetables. Without this pressure of the atmosphere, there could be no respiration; and the elasticity of the particles of air included in 26 When he made a decree for the rain, and a way for the lightning of the thunder;

27 Then did he see it, and declare it; he prepared it, yea, and searched it out.

28 And unto man he said, Behold, the fear of the LORD that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding.

* Or, number it.—^b Deut. iv. 6. Pa. cxi. 90. Prov. i. 7. ix. 10. Eccles. xii. 13.

animal and vegetable bodies, without this superincumbent pressure, would rupture the vessels in which they are contained, and destroy both kinds of life.

And he weigheth the waters by measure.] It has been found, by a pretty exact calculation, that the aqueous surface of the globe is to the terrene parts as three to one; or, that three-fourths of the surface of the globe is water, and about one-fourth earth. And other experiments on evaporation, or the quantity of vapours which arise from a given space in a given time, show that it requires such a proportion of aqueous surface to afford moisture sufficient for the other proportion of dry land. Thus God has given the waters by measure, as he has given the due proportion of weight to the winds.

Verse 26. When he made a decree for the rain] When he determined how that should be generated; viz., By the heat of the sun, evaporation is produced, the particles of vapour, being lighter than the air on the surface, ascend into the atmosphere, till they come to a region where the air is of their own density; there they are formed into thin clouds, and become suspended. When the particles are driven together and condensed, so as to be weightier than the air in which they float, then they fall down in the form of rain; the drops being greater or less according to the force or momentum, or suddenness, of the agitation by which they are driven together, as well as to the degree of rarity in the lower regions of the atmosphere through which they fall.

A way for the lightning of the thunder] Kol signifies voice of any kind; and koloth is the plural, and is taken for the frequent claps or rattlings of thunder. Chaz signifies to notch, indented, or serrate, as in the edges of the leaves of trees; chaziz must refer to the zigzag form which lightning assumes in passing from one cloud to another. Nothing can better express this appearance than the original word.

Verse 27. Then did he see it, and declare it] When he had finished all his creative operations, and tried and proved his work, chakarah, investigated and found it to be very good; then he gave the needful revelation to man; for,

Verse 28. Unto man he said] This probably refers to the revelation of his will which God gave to Adam after his fall. He had before sought for wisdom in a forbidden way. When he and Eve saw that the tree was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, they took and did eat, Gen. iii. 6. Thus they lost all the wisdom that they had, by not setting the fear of the Lord before their eyes; and became foolish, wicked, and miserable. Hear, then, what God prescribes as a proper remedy for this dire disease: The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; it is thy only wisdom now to set God always before thy eyes, that thou mayest not again transgress.

Depart from evil is understanding.] Depart from the evil within thee, and the evil without thee; for thy own evil, and the evil that is now, through thee, brought into the world, will conspire together to sink thee into ruin and destruction. Therefore, let it be thy constant employment to shun and avoid that evil which is every where diffused through the whole moral world by thy offence; and labour to be reconciled to him by righteousness and true holiness, that thou mayest escape the bitter pains of an eternal death.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Job laments his present condition, and gives an affecting account of his former prosperity, having property in abundance, being surrounded by a numerous family, and enjoying every mark of the approbation of God, 1-6. Speaks of the respect he had from the young, 7, 8; and from the nobles, 9, 10. Details his conduct as a magistrate and judge in supporting the poor, and repressing the wicked, 11-17; his confidence, general prosperity, and respect, 18-25.

Verse 2. Oh that I were as in months past] Job seems here to make an apology for his complaints, by taking a view of his former prosperity, which was very great, but was now entirely at an end. He shows that it was not removed because of any bad use he had made of it; and describes how he behaved himself before God and man, and how much, for justice, benevolence, and mercy, he was esteemed and honoured by the wise and good.

Preserved me] Kept, guarded, and watched over me.
Verse 3. When his candle shined upon my head] Alluding most probably to the custom of illuminating festival or assembly rooms by lamps pendant from the ceiling. These shone literally on the heads of the guests.

By his light I walked through darkness] His light—prosperity and peace, continued to illuminate my way. If adversity came, I had always the light of God to direct me. Almost all the nations of the world have represented their great men as having a nimbus or divine glory about their heads, which not only signified the honour they had, but was also an emblem of the inspiration of the Almighty.

Verse 4. The days of my youth] The original word rather means in the days of my winter, charpi, from charaph, "to strip or make bare." Mr. Harmer supposes the rainy season is intended, when the fields, &c., parched up by long drought, are revived by the plentiful showers. Others think the autumnal state is meant, when he was loaded with prosperity, as the trees are with ripe fruits. [The last opinion is probably correct.]

The secret of God was upon my tabernacle] Besod E'toah, "the secret assembly of God," meaning probably the same thing that is spoken of in the beginning of this book, the sons of God, the devout people, presenting themselves before God. It is not unlikely that such a secret assembly of God Job had in his own house; where he tells us, in the next verse, "The Almighty was with him, and his children were about him." [This is scarcely the meaning of the text: the original word denotes not an assembly, but confidential intercourse.]

Verse 6. Washed my steps with butter] See the note on chap. xx. 17.

Verse 7. When I went out to the gate] Courts of justice were held at the gates or entrances of the cities of the East;

11 When the ear heard me, then it blessed me: and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me:

12 Because ^l I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him.

13 The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me: and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy.

14 ^m I put on righteousness, and it clothed me: my judgment was as a robe and a diadem.

15 I was ⁿ eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame.

16 I was a father to the poor: and ^o the cause which I knew not I searched out.

17 And I brake ^p the ^q jaws of the wicked and ^r plucked the spoil out of his teeth.

18 Then I said, ^s I shall die in my nest, and I shall multiply my days as the sand.

19 ^t My root was ^u spread out ^v by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon my branch.

and Job, being an emir, was supreme magistrate: and here he speaks of his going to the gate to administer justice.

I prepared my seat in the street] I administered judgment openly, in the most public manner; and none could say that I, in any case, perverted justice.

Verse 8. The young men saw me, and hid themselves] The YOUNG, through modesty and bashfulness, shrunk back, and were afraid to meet the eye of their prince; and the AGED rose from their seats when I entered the place of judgment.

Verse 9. The princes refrained talking] They never ventured an opinion in opposition to mine; so fully were they persuaded of the justice and integrity of my decision.

Verse 10. The nobles held their peace] PRINCES, sarim, and NOBLES, negidim, must have been two different classes of the great men of Idumea. Job here intimates that his judgment was so sound, his decisions so accredited, and his reasoning power so great, that every person paid him the utmost deference.

Verse 11. When the ear heard me] This and the six following verses present us with a fine exhibition of a man full of benevolence and charity, acting up to the highest dictates of those principles, and rendering the miserable of all descriptions happy, by the constant exercise of his unconfined philanthropy.

Verse 12. Because I delivered the poor that cried] This appears to be intended as a reputation of the charges produced by Eliphaz, chap. xxi. 5-10, to confute which Job appeals to facts, and to public testimony.

Verse 15. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame] Alluding probably to the difficulty of travelling in the Arabian deserts. I was eyes to the blind—those who did not know the way, I furnished with guides. I was feet to the lame—those who were worn out, and incapable of walking, I set forward on my camels, &c. [More probably the expression was proverbial.]

Verse 16. The cause which I knew not I searched out] When any thing difficult occurred, I did not give it a slight consideration; I examined it to the bottom, whatever pain, time, and trouble it cost me, that I might not pronounce a hasty judgment.

Verse 17. I brake the jaws of the wicked] A metaphor taken from hunting. See the case 1 Sam. xvii. 34-37.

20 My glory was ^a fresh in me, and ^b my bow was ^c renewed in my hand.

21 Unto me men gave ear, and waited, and kept silence at my counsel.

22 After my words they spake not again; and my speech dropped upon them.

23 And they waited for me as for the rain; and

^a Heb. new.—^b Gen. xlix. 24.

Verse 18. I shall die in my nest] As I endeavoured to live soberly and temperately, fearing God and departing from evil, endeavouring to promote the welfare of all around me, it was natural for me to conclude that I should live long, be very prosperous, and see my posterity multiply as the sands on the sea-shore.

Verse 19. My root was spread out by the waters] A metaphor taken from a healthy tree growing beside a rivulet where there is plenty of water; which in consequence flourishes in all seasons; its leaf does not wither, nor its fruit fall off. See Ps. i. 3, Jer. xvii. 8.

Verse 20. My glory was fresh in me] My vegetative power was great; my glory—my splendid blossom, large and mellow fruit, was always in season, and in every season.

My bow was renewed] I was never without means to accomplish all my wishes.

Verse 22. My speech dropped upon them] It descended as refreshing dew; they were encouraged, comforted, and strengthened by it.

Verse 23. They waited for me as for the rain] They longed as much to hear me speak, to receive my counsel and my decisions, as the thirsty land does for refreshing waters.

They opened their mouth wide] A metaphor taken from ground chapped with long drought.

The latter rain] The rain that falls a little before harvest, in order to fill and perfect the grain. The former rain is that which falls about seed-time, or in spring.

Verse 24. I laughed on them, they believed it not] Similar to the expression in the Gospel, Luke xxiv. 41. We have a similar phrase: The news is too good to be true, they opened their mouth wide, as for ^d the latter rain.

24 If I laughed on them, they believed it not; and the light of my countenance they cast not down.

25 I chose out their way, and sat chief, and dwelt as a king in the army, as one that comforteth the mourners.

^e Heb. changed.—^d Zeoh. x. 1.

The light of my countenance] This evidence of my benevolence and regard. A smile is, metaphorically, the light of the countenance.

They cast not down] They gave me no occasion to change my sentiments or feelings towards them. I could still smile upon them, and they were then worthy of my approbation. Their change he refers to in the beginning of the next chapter. [This exposition is doubtful.]

Verse 25. I chose out their way, and sat chief—as a king in the army] I cannot see, with some learned men, that our version of the original is wrong. The whole verse seems to me to point out Job in his civil, military, and domestic life.

As supreme magistrate he chose out their way, adjusted^f their differences, and sat chief presiding in all their civil assemblies.

As captain general he dwelt as a king in the midst of his troops, preserving order and discipline, and seeing that his fellow-soldiers were provided with requisites for their warfare, and the necessities of life.

As a man he did not think himself superior to the meanest offices in domestic life, to relieve or support his fellow-creatures; he went about comforting the mourners—visiting the sick and afflicted, and ministering to their wants, and seeing that the wounded were properly attended. Noble Job! Look at him, ye nobles of the earth, ye generals of armies, and ye lords of provinces. Imitate his active benevolence, and be healthy and happy. Be as guardian angels in your particular districts, blessing all by your example and your bounty.

CHAPTER XXX.

Job proceeds to lament the change of his former condition, and the contempt into which his adversity had brought him, 1-15. Pathetically describes the afflictions of his body and mind, 16-31.

B now they that are ^a younger than I have me in derision, whose fathers I would have disdained to have set with the dogs of my flock.

2 Yea, whereto might the ^b strength of their hands profit me, in whom old age was perished?

^a Heb. of fewer days than I.—^b Ch. xii. 21.

Verse 1. But now they that are younger than I have me in derision] Compare this with chap. xxix. 8, where he speaks of the respect he had from the youth while in the days of his prosperity. Now he is no longer affluent, and they are no longer respectful.

Dogs of my flock] Not respectable or confidential enough to be made shepherds, ass-keepers, or camel-drivers; nor even to have the care of the dogs by which the flocks were guarded. [Or, rather, to associate with the dogs, &c., &c.]

Verse 2. The strength of their hands profit me] He is speaking here of the fathers of these young men. The sense I believe to be this: I have never esteemed their strength even in their most vigorous youth, nor their conduct nor their counsel even in old age. They were never good for any thing, either young or old. As their youth was without profit, so their old age was without honour.

Verse 3. Fleeing into the wilderness] This shows the extreme of want, when the desert is supposed to be the only place where any thing to sustain life can possibly be found.

3 For want and famine they were ^c solitary; fleeing into the wilderness ^d in former time desolate and waste.

4 Who cut up mallows by the bushes, and juniper roots for their meat.

5 They were driven forth from among men, (they cried after them as after a thief.)

^e Or, dark as the night.—^d Heb. yesternight.

Verse 4. Who cut up mallows by the bushes] Some herb or shrub of a salt nature, sea-purslane, or saltwort, an extensive genus of plants, common to Asia, and indigenous to a dry and sandy soil.

And juniper roots for their meat] This is variously translated juniper, broom, furze, gorse, or whin. It is supposed to derive its name from the toughness of its twigs, as ratham signifies to bind; and this answers well enough to the broom. But how can it be said that the roots of this shrub were eaten? I do not find any evidence from Asiatic writers that the roots of the juniper-tree were an article of food; and some have supposed, because of this want of evidence, that the word lachmam, for their bread, should be understood thus, to bake their bread, because it is well known that the wood of the juniper gives an intense heat, and the coals of it endure a long time; and therefore we find coals of juniper used Ps. cxx. 4 to express severe and enduring punishment. But that the roots of the juniper were used for food in the northern countries, among the Goths, we have a positive testimony from Olaus Magnus, himself a Goth and archbishop of Upsal, in lib. vii., c. 4, of his Hist. de Gentibus Septentrionalibus.

9 ^c And now am I their song, yea, I am their by-word.

11 Because he ^f hath loosed my cord, and afflicted me, they have also let loose the bridle before me.

Verse 5. They were driven forth] They were persons whom no one would employ; and if any of them appeared, the hue and cry was immediately raised up against them.

Verse 6. To dwell in the cliffs of the valleys] They were obliged to take shelter in the most dangerous, out-of-the-way and unfrequented places.

Verse 7. Among the bushes they brayed] They cried out among the bushes, seeking for food, as the wild ass when he is in want of provender.

Under the nettles] The briars or brambles, under the brush wood in the thickest parts of the underwood; they huddled together like wild beasts.

Verse 8. Children of fools] Children of nabal; children without a name; persons of no consideration, and descendants of such.

Viler than the earth.] Rather, Driven out of the land; persons not fit for civil society.

Verse 9. Now am I their song] I am the subject of their mirth, and serve as a proverb or by-word. They use me with every species of indignity.

Verse 10. They abhor me] What a state must civil society be in when such indignities were permitted to be offered to the aged and afflicted!

Verse 11. Because he hath loosed my cord] Instead of yithri, my cord, yithro, his cord, is the reading of the text in many copies; and this reading directs us to a metaphor taken from an archer, who observing his butt, sets his arrow on the string, draws it to a proper degree of tension, levels, and then loosing his hold, the arrow flies at the mark. He hath let loose his arrow against me; it has hit me; and I am wounded.

They have also let loose the bridle] When they perceived that God had afflicted me, they then threw off all restraints; like headstrong horses, swallowed the bit, got the reins on their own necks, and ran off at full speed.

Verse 12. Upon my right hand rise the youth] The word pirchach, which we translate youth, signifies properly buds, or the buttons of trees.

They push away my feet] They trip up my heels, or they in effect trample me under their feet. They rush upon and overwhelm me. They roll themselves upon me, as waves of the sea which wash the sand from under the feet, and then swamp the man to the bottom; see ver. 14.

Verse 13. They mar my path] They destroy the way-marks, so that there is no safety in travelling through the deserts, the guide-posts and way-marks being gone.

There may be an allusion here to a besieged city: the besiegers strive by every means and way to distress the besieged; stopping up the fountains, breaking up the road, raising up towers to project arrows and stones into the city, called here raising up against it the ways of destruction, ver. 12; preventing all succour and support.

15 Terrors are turned upon me: they pursue ^a my soul as the wind: and my welfare passeth away as a cloud.

16 ^b And now my soul is poured out upon me; the days of affliction have taken hold upon me.

17 My bones are pierced in me in the night-season: and my sinews take no rest.

18 By the great force of my disease is my garment changed: it bindeth me about as the collar of my coat.

19 He hath cast me into the mire, and I am become like dust and ashes.

20 I cry unto thee, and thou dost not hear me: I stand up, and thou regardest me not.

21 Thou art ^c become cruel to me: with ^d thy strong hand thou opposeth thyself against me.

22 Thou liftest me up to the wind; thou causest me to ride upon it, and dissolveth my ^e substance.

23 For I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the house ^f appointed for all living.

xxvii. 30.—^a See ch. xii. 18.—^b Ch. xix. 12.—^c Heb. my principal.—^d 1s. xlii. 4.—^e Heb. turned to be cruel.—^f Heb. the strength of thy hand.—^g Or, wisdom.—^h Heb. ix. 27.

They have no helper.] There is none to give them better instruction.

Verse 14. They came upon me as a wide breaking in] They storm me on every side.

In the desolation they rolled themselves] When they had made the breach, they rolled in upon me as an irresistible torrent. There still appears to be an allusion to a besieged city: the sap, the breach, the storm, the fight, the pursuit, and the slaughter.

Verse 15. Terrors are turned upon me] Defence is no longer useful; they have beat down my walls.

They pursue my soul as the wind] They follow me like a whirlwind; and as fast as that drives away the clouds before it, so is my prosperity destroyed. The word nedibathi, which we translate my soul, signifies properly my nobility, my excellence: they endeavour to destroy both my reputation and my property.

Verse 18. Is my garment changed] There seem to be here plain allusions to the effect of his cruel disease; the whole body being enveloped with a kind of elephantine hide, formed by innumerable incrustations from the ulcerated surface.

It bindeth me about] My disease seizes me as a strong armed man; it has throttled me, and cast me in the mud. This is probably an allusion to two persons struggling; the stronger seizes the other by the throat, brings him down, and treads him in the dirt.

Verse 20. I cry unto thee] I am persecuted by man, afflicted with sore disease, and apparently forsaken of God.

I stand up] Or, as some translate: "I persevere, and thou lookest upon me." Thou seest my desolate, afflicted state; but thine eye doth not affect thy heart. Thou leavest me unsupported to struggle with my adversities.

Verse 21. Thou art become cruel to me] Thou appearest to treat me with cruelty. I cry for mercy, trust in thy goodness, and am still permitted to remain under my afflictions.

Thou opposeth thyself] Instead of helping thou opposeth me; thou appearest as my enemy.

Verse 22. Thou liftest me up to the wind] Thou hast so completely stripped me of all my substance, that I am like chaff lifted up by the wind; or as a straw, the sport of every breeze; and at last carried totally away, being dissipated into particles by the continued agitation.

Verse 23. Thou wilt bring me to death] This must be the issue of my present affliction: to God alone it is possible that I should survive it.

To the house appointed for all living.] Or to the rendezvous, the place of general assembly of human beings: the great devourer in whose jaws all that have lived, now live, and shall live, must necessarily meet.

Verse 24. He will not stretch out his hand to the grave] Is not this in the mouth of Job a consolatory reflection? As if he had said, Though I suffer here, I shall not suffer hereafter. Though he add stroke to stroke, so as to destroy my life, yet his displeasure shall not proceed beyond the 24 Howbeit he will not stretch out his hand to the grave, though they cry in his destruction.

25 Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? was not my soul grieved for the poor?

26 When I looked for good, then evil came unto me: and when I waited for light, there came darkness.

grave. [This obscure passage reads better interrogatively.] Though they cry in his destruction.] In the sepulchre there is freedom from calamity, and rest for the weary.

Verse 25. Did not I weep for him that was in trouble?] “Should I not then weep for the ruthless day?” May I not lament that my sufferings are only to terminate with my life? Or, Did I not mourn for those who suffered by times of calamity?

Was not my soul grieved for the poor?] Did I not relieve the distressed according to my power; and did I not sympathize with the sufferer?

Verse 27. My bowels boiled.] This alludes to the strong commotion in the bowels which every humane person feels at the sight of one in misery.

Verse 28. I went mourning without the sun.] Chammah, which we here translate the sun, comes from a root of the same letters, which signifies to hide, protect, &c., and may be translated, I went mourning without a protector or guardian; or, the word may be derived from cham, to be hot, and here it may signify fury, rage, anger.

Verse 29. I am a brother to dragons.] By my mournful and continual cry I resemble tannim, the jackals or hyenas. And a companion to owls.] To the daughters of howling:

28 I went mourning without the sun: I stood up, and I cried in the congregation.

29 I am a brother to dragons, and a companion to owls.

30 My skin is black upon me, and my bones are burned with heat.

generally understood to be the ostrich; for both the jackal and the female ostrich are remarkable for their mournful cry, and for their attachment to desolate places.

Verse 30. My skin is black.] By continual exposure to the open air, and parching influence of the sun.

My bones are burned with heat.] A strong expression, to point out the raging fever that was continually preying upon his vitals.

Verse 31. My harp also is turned to mourning.] Instead of the harp, my only music is my own plaintive cries.

And my organ.] What the uggab was, we know not; it was most probably some sort of pipe, or wind-instrument.

This chapter is full of the most painful and pathetic sorrow; but nevertheless tempered with a calmness and humiliation of spirit, which did not appear in Job's lamentations previously to the time in which he had that remarkable revelation mentioned in the nineteenth chapter. After he was assured that his Redeemer was the living God, he submitted to his dispensations, kissed the rod, and mourned not without hope, though in deep distress, occasioned by his unremitting sufferings. If the groaning of Job was great, his stroke was certainly heavy.

CHAPTER XXXI.

Job makes a solemn protestation of his chastity and integrity, 1-12; of his humanity, 13-16; of his charity and mercy, 16-23; of his abhorrence of covetousness and idolatry, 24-32; and of his readiness to acknowledge his errors, 33, 34; and wishes for a full investigation of his case, being confident that this would issue in the full manifestation of his innocence, 35-40.

I MADE a covenant with mine eyes; why then should I think upon a maid?

2 For what portion of God is there from above? and what inheritance of the Almighty from on high?

3 Is not destruction to the wicked? and a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity?

* Mat. v. 28.—^b Ch. xx. 29. xxvii. 18.—^c 2 Chron. xvi. 9. Ch. xxxiv. 21. Prov. v. 21. xv. 3. Jer. xxxiii. 19.—^d Heb. Let him weigh me in Verse 1. I made a covenant with mine eyes.] “I have cut” or divided “the covenant sacrifice with my eyes.” My conscience and my eyes are the contracting parties; God is the Judge; and I am therefore bound not to look upon any thing with a delighted or covetous eye, by which my conscience may be defiled, or my God dishonoured.

Why then should I think upon a maid?] And why should I set myself to contemplate, or think upon, Bethulah?] That Bethulah may here signify an idol, is very likely. Sanchoniatho observes, that Ovranos first introduced Baithulia when he erected animated stones, or, rather, as Bochart observes, ANOINTED stones, which became representatives of some deity. I suppose that Job purges himself here from this species of idolatry. For more on the subject of the Baithulia, see the notes on Gen. xviii. [This criticism cannot be sustained. The sense in the text is undoubtedly correct.]

Verse 2. For what portion of God is there from above?] Though I have not, in this or in any other respect, wickedly departed from God, yet what reward have I received?

Verse 3. Is not destruction to the wicked?] If I had been guilty of such secret hypocritical proceedings, professing faith in the true God while in eye and heart an idolater, would not such a worker of iniquity be distinguished by a strange and unheard-of punishment?

Verse 4. Doth not he see my ways?] Can I suppose that I could screen myself from the eye of God, while guilty of such iniquities?

Verse 5. If I have walked with vanity.] If I had been guilty of idolatry, or the worshipping of a false god: for thus shav, which we here translate vanity, is used, Jer. xviii. 15 (compare with Ps. xxxi. 6, Hos. xii. 11, and Jonah ii. 9); and it seems evident that the whole of Job's discourse here is a vindication of himself from all idolatrous dispositions and practices.

Verse 6. Mine integrity.] Tummathi, my perfection; the totality of my unblameable life.

Verse 7. If my step hath turned out of the way.] I am willing to be sifted to the uttermost—for every step of my foot, for every thought of my heart, for every look of mine eye, and for every act of my hands.

8 Then * let me sow, and let another eat; yea, let my offspring be rooted out.

9 If mine heart have been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid wait at my neighbour's door;

10 Then let my wife grind unto ^b another, and let others bow down upon her.

11 For this is an heinous crime; yea ^c it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges.

12 For it is a fire that consumeth to destruction, and would root out all mine increase.

13 If I did despise the cause of my man-servant or of my maid-servant, when they contended with me;

14 What then shall I do when ^d God riseth up? and when he visiteth, what shall I answer him?

15 ^e Did not he that made me in the womb make him? and ^f did not one fashion us in the womb?

16 If I have withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail;

17 Or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof;

19 ^h If I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering;

Verse 8. Let me sow, and let another eat] Let me be plagued both in my circumstances and in my family.

My offspring be rooted out.] It has already appeared probable that all Job's children were not destroyed in the fall of the house mentioned chap. i. 18, 19.

Verse 9. If mine heart have been deceived by a woman.] The Septuagint add, another man's wife.

Verse 10. Let my wife grind unto another] Let her work at the hand-mill, grinding corn; which was the severe work of the meanest slave.

And let others bow down upon her.] Let her be in such a state as to have no command of her own person; her owner disposing of her person as he pleases. In Asiatic countries, slaves were considered so absolutely the property of their owners, that they not only served themselves of them in the way of soortation and concubinage, but they were accustomed to accommodate their guests with them!

Verse 11. For this is an heinous crime] That is, it would not only be a sin against the individuals more particularly concerned, but a sin of the first magnitude against society; and one of which the civil magistrate should take particular cognizance and punish as justice requires.

Verse 12. For it is a fire] Nothing is so destructive of domestic peace. Where jealousy exists, unmixed misery dwells; and the adulterer and fornicator waste their substance on the unlawful objects of their impure affections.

Verse 13. The cause of my man-servant] In ancient times slaves had no action at law against their owners; they might dispose of them as they did of their cattle, or any other property. The slave might complain; and the owner might hear him if he pleased, but he was not compelled to do so.

Verse 15. Did not he that made me—make him?] I know that God is the Judge of all; that all shall appear before him in that state where the king and his subject, the master and his slave, shall be on an equal footing, all civil distinctions being abolished for ever. If, then, I had treated my slaves with injustice, how could I stand before the judgment-seat of God?

Verse 17. Or have eaten my morsel myself alone] Hospitality was a very prominent virtue among the ancients in almost all nations: friends and strangers were equally welcome to the board of the affluent. The supper was their grand meal: it was then that they saw their friends; the business and fatigues of the day being over, they could then enjoy themselves comfortably together. But Job speaks

20 If his loins have not ⁱ blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep;

21 If I have lifted up my hand ^j against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate:

22 Then let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade, and mine arm be broken from ^k the bone.

23 For ^l destruction from God was a terror to me, and by reason of his highness I could not endure.

24 ^m If I have made gold my hope, or have said to the fine gold, Thou art my confidence;

27 And my heart hath been secretly enticed, or ^s my mouth hath kissed my hand:

28 This also ^t were ^u an iniquity to be punished by the judge: for I should have denied the God that is above.

29 ^v If I rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated me, or lifted up myself when evil found him:

here of dividing his bread with the hungry: Or have eaten my morsel myself alone.

Verse 18. This is a very difficult verse, and is variously translated.

From these translations the general meaning may be gathered; but they are very discordant. [The difficulty is lessened if the passage be referred to Job's treatment of the orphan, v. 17, and the widow, v. 16.]

Verse 20. If his loins have not blessed me] This is a very delicate touch: the part that was cold and shivering is now covered with warm woollen. It feels the comfort; and, by a fine prosopopœia, is represented as blessing him who furnished the clothing.

Verse 21. If I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless] I have at no time opposed the orphan, nor given, in behalf of the rich and powerful, a decision against the poor, when I saw my help in the gate—when I was sitting chief on the throne of judgment, and could have done it without being called to account.

Verse 22. Let mine arm fall] Let judgment fall particularly upon those parts which have either done wrong, or refused to do right when in their power.

Verse 23. Destruction from God was a terror] I have ever been preserved from outward sin, through the fear of God's judgments; I knew his eye was constantly upon me.

Verse 26. If I beheld the sun when it shined] In this verse Job clears himself of that idolatrous worship which was the most ancient and most consistent with reason of any species of idolatry; viz., Sabœism, the worship of the heavenly bodies; particularly the sun and moon, Jupiter and Venus; the two latter being the morning and evening stars, and the most resplendent of all the heavenly bodies, the sun and moon excepted.

Verse 28. For I should have denied the God that is above.] Had I paid divine adoration to them, I should have thereby denied the God that made them.

Verse 29. If I rejoiced] I did not avenge myself on my enemy; and I neither bore malice nor hatred to him.

Verse 30. Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin] I have neither spoken evil of him, nor wished evil to him. How few of those called Christians can speak thus concerning their enemies; or those who have done them any mischief!

Verse 31. If the men of my tabernacle said] My domestics have had all kindness shown them; they have lived like my own children, and have been served with the same viands as my family. They have never seen fish come to my table, when they have been obliged to live on pulse.

32 * The stranger did not lodge in the street : but I opened my doors ^b to the traveller.

Verse 32. The stranger did not lodge in the street] My kindness did not extend merely to my family, domestics, and friends ; the stranger—he who was to me perfectly unknown, and the traveller—he who was on his journey to some other district, found^r my doors ever open to receive them, and were refreshed with my bed and my board.

Verse 33. If I covered my transgressions as Adam] Here is a most evident allusion to the fall. And it is very likely that Job refers immediately to the Mosaic account in the Book of Genesis. The spirit of this saying is this : When I have departed at any time from the path of rectitude, I have been ready to acknowledge my error, and have not sought excuses or palliatives for my sin.

Verse 34. Did I fear a great multitude] Was I ever prevented by the voice of the many from decreasing and executing what was right ? When many families or tribes espoused a particular cause, which I found, on examination, to be wrong, did they put me in fear, so as to prevent me from doing justice to the weak and friendless ? Or, in any of these cases, was I ever, through fear, self-seeking, or favour, prevented from declaring my mind, or constrained to keep my house, lest I should be obliged to give judgment against my conscience ?

I am satisfied that ver. 38, 39, and 40, should come in either here, or immediately after ver. 25 ; and that Job's words should end with ver. 37, which, if the others were inserted in their proper places, would be ver. 40.

Verse 35. Oh, that one would hear me !] I wish to have a fair and full hearing : I am grievously accused ; and have no proper opportunity of clearing myself, and establishing my own innocence.

Behold, my desire is] Or, "There is my pledge." I bind myself, on a great penalty, to come into court, and abide the issue.

That the Almighty would answer me] That he would call this case immediately before himself ; and oblige my adversary to come into court, to put his accusations into a legal form, that I might have the opportunity of vindicating myself in the presence of a Judge who would hear dispassionately my pleadings, and bring the cause to a righteous issue.

And that mine adversary had written a book] That he would not indulge himself in vague accusations, but would draw up a proper bill of indictment, that I might know to what I had to plead, and find the accusation in a tangible form.

Verse 36. Surely I would take it upon my shoulder] I would be contented to stand before the bar as a criminal, bearing upon my shoulder the board to which the accusation is affixed. Far from considering this a disgrace, he would clasp it as dearly as he would adjust a crown or diadem to his head ; being fully assured, from his innocence, and the evidence of it, which would infallibly appear on the trial, that he would have the most honourable acquittal. There may also be an allusion to the manner of receiving a favour from a superior : it is immediately placed on the head as a mark of respect ; and if a piece of cloth be given at the temple, the receiver not only puts it on his head but binds it there.

Verse 37. I would declare unto him the number of my steps] I would show this adversary the different stations I had been in, and the offices which I had filled in life, that he might trace me through the whole of my civil, military, and domestic life, in order to get evidence against me.

As a prince would I go near] Though carrying my own accusation, I would go into the presence of my Judge as the nagid, chief, or sovereign commander and judge, of the people and country, and would not shrink from having my conduct investigated by even the meanest of my subjects.

Verse 38. If my land cry] The introduction of this and the two following verses here disturbs the connexion ; they are most evidently out of their place. Job seems here to refer to that law, Lev. xxv. 1-7, by which the Israelites were obliged to give the land rest every seventh year, that the soil might not be too much exhausted by perpetual cultivation, especially in a country which afforded so few advantages to improve the arable ground by manure. He, conscious that he had acted according to this law, states that his land could not cry out against him, nor its furrows complain. He had not broken the law, nor exhausted the soil.

Verse 39. If I have eaten the fruits thereof without money] I have never been that narrow-minded man who, through a principle of covetousness, exhausts his land, putting himself to no charges, by labour and manure, to strengthen it ; or defrauds those of their wages who were employed under him.

Verse 40. Let thistles grow instead of wheat] What the word choach means, which we translate thistles, we cannot tell : but as chach seems to mean to hold, catch as a hook, to hitch, it must signify some kind of hooked thorn, like the briar : and this is possibly its meaning.

And cockle] Bashah, some fetid plant, from baash, to stink. In Isa. v. 2, 4, we translate it wild grapes ; and Bishop Louth, poisonous berries : but Hasselquist, a pupil of the famous Linnæus, in his Voyages, p. 280, is inclined to believe that the solanum incanum, or hoary night-shade is meant, as this is common in Egypt, Palestine, and the East. Others are of opinion that it means the aconite, a poisonous herb, which grows luxuriantly on the sunny hills among the vineyards.

The words of Job are ended.] That is, his defence of himself against the accusations of his friends, as they are called. He spoke afterwards, but never to them ; he only addresses God, who came to determine the whole controversy.

These words seem very much like an addition by a later hand.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Elihu comes forward, and expresses his disapprobation both of Job and his three friends,—with the one for justifying himself; and with the others for taking up the subject in a wrong point of view, and not answering satisfactorily;—and makes a becoming apology for himself, 1-22.

SO these three men ceased ^a to answer Job, because he was ^b righteous in his own eyes.

2 Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu the son of Barachel ^c the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram: against Job was his wrath kindled, because he justified ^d himself rather than God.

3 Also against his three friends was his wrath kindled, because they had found no answer, and yet had condemned Job.

4 Now Elihu had ^e waited till Job had spoken, because they were ^f elder than he.

5 When Elihu saw that there was no answer in the mouth of these three men, then his wrath was kindled.

6 And Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite answered and said, I am ^g young, ^h and ye are very

^a Heb. from answering.—^b Ch. xxxiii. 9.—^c Gen. xxii. 21.—^d Heb. his soul.—^e Heb. expected Job in words.—^f Heb. elder for days.—^g Heb. few of days.—^h Ch. xv. 10.—ⁱ Heb. feared.—1 Kings iii. 12. lv. 29.

Verses 1. These three men ceased to answer Job] The truth is, they failed to convince Job of any point, because they argued from false principles; and, as we have seen, Job had the continual advantage of them. There were points on which he might have been successfully assailed; but they did not know them. Elihu, better acquainted both with human nature and the nature of the divine law, and of God's moral government of the world, steps in, and makes the proper discriminations; acquits Job on the ground of their accusations, but condemns him for his too great self-confidence, his trusting too much in his external righteousness; his incautiously arraigning the providence of God of unkindness in its dealings with him. This was the point on which Job was particularly vulnerable, and which Elihu very properly clears up.

Verses 2. Then was kindled the wrath] This means no more than that Elihu was greatly excited, and felt a strong and zealous desire to vindicate the justice and providence of God, against the aspersions of Job and his friends.

Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite] Buz was the second son of Nahor, the brother of Abram, Gen. xxii. 21.

Of the kindred of Ram] Kemuel was the third son of Nahor; and is called in Genesis (see above) the father of Aram, which is the same as Ram. A city of the name of Buz is found in Jer. xv. 23, which probably had its name from this family; and, as it is mentioned with Dedan and Tema, we know it must have been a city in Idumea, as the others were in that district.

Because he justified himself rather than God.] Literally, he justified his soul, naphsho, before God. He defended, not only the whole of his conduct, but also his motives, thoughts, &c.

Verses 3. They had found no answer] They had condemned Job; and yet could not answer his arguments on the general subject, and in vindication of himself.

Verses 4. I am young] How young he was, or how old they were, we cannot tell; but there was no doubt a great disparity in their ages; and among the Asiatics the youth never spoke in the presence of the elders, especially on any subject of controversy.

Verses 5. Days should speak] That is, men are to be reputed wise and experienced in proportion to the time they have lived. The Easterns were remarkable for treasuring up wise sayings: indeed, the principal part of their boasted wisdom consisted in proverbs and maxims on different subjects.

Verses 6. But there is a spirit in man] "The spirit itself is in miserably man, and the breath of the Almighty causeth them to understand." How true is it that in God we live, move, and have our being! The spirit itself is in man as the old; wherefore I was afraid and ⁱ durst not shew you mine opinion.

7 I said, Days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom.

8 But there is a spirit in man; and ^j the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.

9 ^k Great men are not always wise: neither do the aged understand judgment.

10 Therefore I said, Hearken to me; I also will shew mine opinion.

11 Behold, I waited for your words; I gave ear to your ^l reasons, whilst ye searched out ^m what to say.

12 Yea, I attended unto you, and, behold, there was none of you that convinced Job, or that answered his words:

spring or fountain of his animal existence; and, by the afflatus of this spirit he becomes capable of understanding and reason, and consequently of discerning divine truth. The animal and intellectual lives are here stated to be from God; and this appears to be an allusion to man's creation, Gen. ii. 7: "And God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of lives."

When man fell from God, the Spirit of God was grieved, and departed from him; but was restored, as the enlightener and corrector, in virtue of the purposed incarnation and atonement of our Lord Jesus; hence, he is "the true Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world," John i. 9. That afflatus is therefore still continued to enosh, man in his wretched fallen state; and it is by that Spirit, the Ruach Elohim, "the Spirit of the merciful or covenant God," that we have any conscience, knowledge of good and evil, judgment in divine things, and, in a word, capability of being saved. And when, through the light of that Spirit, convincing of sin, righteousness, and judgment, the sinner turns to God through Christ, and finds redemption in his blood, the remission of sins; then it is the office of that same Spirit to give him understanding of the great work that has been done in and for him; for the Spirit itself beareth witness with his spirit that he is a child of God. It is the same Spirit which sanctifies, seals, lives and works in the believer, guiding him by its counsel till it leads him into glory.

Verses 9. Great men are not always wise] This is a true saying, which the experience of every age and every country increasingly verifies. And it is most certain that, in the case before us, the aged did not understand judgment; they had a great many wise and good sayings, which they had collected, but showed neither wisdom nor discretion in applying them.

Verses 11. Whilst ye searched out what to say.] "Whilst ye were searching up and down for words." A fine irony, which they must have felt.

Verses 12. Behold, there was none of you that convinced Job] Confuted Job. They spoke multitudes of words, but were unable to overthrow his arguments.

Verses 13. We have found out wisdom] We, by dint of our own wisdom and understanding, have found out the true system of God's providence; and have been able to account for all the sufferings and tribulations of Job. Had they been able to confute Job, they would have triumphed over him in their own self-sufficiency.

God thrusteth him down, not man.] This is no accidental thing that has happened to him: he is suffering under the just judgments of God, and therefore he must be the wicked man which we supposed him to be.

Verse 14. He hath not directed] I am no party in this controversy ; he has not spoken a word against me, therefore I have no cause of irritation. I shall speak for truth, not for conquest or revenge. Neither will I answer him with your speeches ; your passions have been inflamed by contradiction, and you have spoken foolishly with your lips.

Verse 15. They were amazed] Spoken of Job's friends. They took their several parts in the controversy as long as they could hope to maintain their ground ; for a considerable time they had been able to bring nothing new ; at last, weary of their own repetitions, they gave up the contest.

Verse 16. When I had waited] I waited to hear if they had any thing to reply to Job ; and when I found them in effect speechless, then I ventured to come forward.

Verse 17. I will answer also my part] "I will recite my portion." We have already seen that the book of Job is a sort of drama, in which several persons have their different parts to recite. Probably the book was used in this way, in ancient times, for the sake of public instruction. Eliphaz, Zophar, and Bildad had recited their parts, and Job had responded to each : nothing was brought to issue. Elihu, a by-stander, perceiving this, comes forward and takes a part, when all the rest had expended their materials : yet Elihu, though he spoke well, was incapable of closing the controversy ; and God himself appears, and decides the case.

Verse 18. I am full of matter] "I am full of words," or sayings ; i. e., wise sentences, and ancient opinions.

The spirit within me constraineth me.] Elihu considered himself under the influence of that spirit of God which gives understanding, and felt anxiously concerned for the welfare both of Job and his friends.

Verse 19. My belly is as wine which hath no vent] New wine in a state of effervescence.

18 For I am full of ^a matter, ^d the spirit within me constraineth me.

19 Behold, my belly is as wine which ^e hath no vent ; it is ready to burst like new bottles.

20 I will speak, ^f that I may be refreshed ; I will open my lips, and answer.

Like new bottles.] Bottles, or rather bags, made of goat skins. When the wine is in a state of fermentation, and the skin has no vent, these bottles or bags are ready to burst ; and if they be old, the new wine destroys them, breaks the old stitching, or rends the old skin. Our Lord makes use of the same figure, Matt. ix. 17 ; where see the note.

Verse 20. I will open my lips, and answer.] In the preceding verse, Elihu compares himself to a skin-bottle, in which the wine was in a state of fermentation, and the bottle ready to burst for want of vent. He carries on the metaphor in this verse : the bottle must be opened to save it from bursting ; I will OPEN my mouth.

Verse 21. Let me not—accept any man's person] I will speak the truth without fear or favour.

Neither let me give flattering titles] I will not give epithets to any man that are not descriptive of his true state. I will not beguile him by telling him he is what he is not. Acannah, from canah, is generally supposed to signify to surname, to put a name to or upon a name. as the French word surnom implies. It means to give proud titles to persons who are worthless. It is well known that the Arabs make court to their superiors by carefully avoiding to address them by their proper names, instead of which they salute them with some title or epithet expressive of respect.

Verse 22. My Maker would soon take me away.] Were I to copy this conduct while under the influence which I now feel, God might justly consume me as in a moment. He is my Maker ; he made me to know truth, to tell truth, and to live according to truth ; for he is the God of truth : I shall, therefore, through his help, speak the TRUTH, the WHOLE TRUTH, and NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Elihu offers himself in God's stead to reason with Job in meekness and sincerity, 1-7. Charges Job with irreverent expressions, 8-12. Vindicates the providence of God, and shows the various methods which he uses to bring sinners to himself:—By dreams and visions, 13-15 ; by secret inspirations, 16-18 ; by afflictions, 19-22 ; by messengers of righteousness, 23 ; and by the great atonement, 24. How and from what God redeems men, and the blessings which he communicates, 25-30. Job is exhorted to listen attentively to Elihu's teaching, 31-33.

WHEREFORE Job, I pray thee, hear my speeches, and hearken to all my words.

2 Behold, now I have opened my mouth, my tongue hath spoken in ^a my mouth.

3 My words shall be of the uprightness of my heart : and my lips shall utter knowledge clearly.

^a Heb. in my palate.—^b Gen. ii. 7.—^c Ch. ix. 34, 35. xiii. 20, 21. xxxi. 35.

Verse 3. My words shall be of the uprightness] As God has given me his Spirit, from that Spirit alone will I speak ; therefore all my words shall be of uprightness, knowledge, and truth.

Knowledge clearly.] I shall lay down no false positions, and I shall have no false consequences.

Verse 4. The Spirit of God hath made me] Another plain allusion to the account of the creation of man, Gen. ii. 7.

4 ^b The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.

5 If thou canst answer me, set thy words in order before me, stand up.

6 ^c Behold, I am ^d according to thy wish in God's stead : I also am ^e formed out of the clay.

7 ^f Behold, my terror shall not make thee afraid,

^a Heb. according to thy mouth.—^b Heb. out out of the clay.—^c Ch. ix. 24. xiii. 21.

Verse 6. I am according to thy wish in God's stead : I also am formed out of the clay.] Mr. Good has most probably hit the true meaning :—

"Behold, I am thy fellow.

I too was formed by God out of the clay."

[It may be rendered thus : "I, like thyself, am of God."]

Verse 7. My terror shall not make thee afraid] Being thy equal, no fear can impose upon thee so far as to overawe neither shall my hand be heavy upon thee.

8 Surely thou hast spoken * in mine hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, saying,

9 ^b I am clean without transgression, I am innocent; neither is there iniquity in me.

10 Behold, he findeth occasions against me, ^c he counteth me for his enemy, 11 ^d He putteth my feet in the stocks, he marketh all my paths.

12 Behold, in this thou art not just: I will answer thee, that God is greater than man.

13 Why dost thou * strive against him? for 'he giveth not account of any of his matters.

14 ^e For God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not.

15 ^h In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed; thee; so that thou shouldst not be able to conduct thy own defence. We are on equal terms; now prepare to defend thyself.

Verse 8. Surely thou hast spoken.] What Elihu speaks here and in the three following verses, contains, in general, simple quotations from Job's own words, or the obvious sense of them, as the reader may see by referring to the margin, and also to the notes on those passages.

Verse 12. In this thou art not just.] Thou hast laid charges against God's dealings, but thou hast not been able to justify those charges; and were there nothing else against thee, these irreverent speeches are so many proofs that thou art not clear in the sight of God.

Verse 13. Why dost thou strive against him?] Is it not useless to contend with God? Can he do any thing that is not right? As to his giving thee any account of the reasons why he deals thus and thus with thee, or any one else, thou needst not expect it; he is sovereign, and is not to be called to the bar of his creatures.

Verse 14. For God speaketh once.] Elihu, having made the general statement that God would not come to the bar of his creatures to give account of his conduct, shows the general means which he uses to bring men to an acquaintance with themselves and with him; he states these in the six following particulars, which may be collected from ver. 15-24.

Verse 15. I. In a DREAM—when deep sleep falleth upon men.] Many, by such means, have had the most salutary warnings; and to decry all such, because there are many vain dreams, would be nearly as much wisdom as to deny the Bible, because there are many foolish books, the authors of which supposed they were under a divine influence while composing them.

II. In a VISION of the night—in slumberings upon the bed.] Visions or images presented in the imagination during slumber, when men are betwixt sleeping or waking, or when, awake and in bed, they are wrapt up in deep contemplation. Many warnings in this way have come from God; to deny this would be to call into doubt the testimony of the best, wisest, and holiest men in all ages of the church.

Verse 16. Then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth, &c.] III. By secret INSPIRATIONS. A dream or a vision simply considered is likely to do no good; it is the opening of the understanding, and the pouring in of the light that make men wise to salvation. Serious alarms, holy purposes, penitential pangs for past sine, apprehension of death and judgment, discoveries of God's justice, of Christ's love, of the world's vanity, of heaven's excellence, &c., &c., &c., are often used by the divine Spirit to withdraw men from their evil purpose, and to hide pride from man, ver. 17; and of all these openings of the ear of the heart, and sealing instructions upon the conscience, we have numerous examples in the history of the church, in the experience of good men, and even in the civil and providential history of all nations.

Verse 18. He keepeth back his soul from the pit.] By the above means, how many have been snatched from an un-

17 That he may withdraw man from his * purpose, and hide pride from man.

18 He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life ^l from perishing by the sword.

19 He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with strong pain:

20 ^m So that his life abhorreth bread, and his soul ⁿ dainty meat.

21 His flesh is consumed away, that it cannot be seen; and his bones that were not seen stick out.

22 Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave, and his life to the destroyers.

23 If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thousand, to shew unto man his uprightness:

24 Then he is gracious unto him, and saith, Deliver him from going down to the pit: I have found ^o a ransom.

25 His flesh shall be fresher ^p than a child's: he shall return to the days of his youth:

timely death! By taking the warning thus given, some have been prevented from perishing by the pit—some sudden accident; and others from the sword of the assassin or nocturnal murderer.

Verse 19. He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, &c.] IV.—AFFLICTIONS are a fourth means which God makes use of to waken and convert sinners. In the hand of God these were the cause of the salvation of David, as himself testifies: Ps. cxix. 67, 71, 75.

The multitude of his bones.] By such diseases, especially those of a rheumatic kind, when to the patient's apprehension every bone is diseased, broken, or out of joint. [The original may be rendered "limbs."]

Verse 20. His life abhorreth bread.] These expressions strongly and naturally point out that general nausea or loathing which sick persons feel in almost every species of disorder.

Verse 21. His flesh is consumed away.] As in atrophy, marasmus, and consumptive complaints in general.

Verse 22. His soul draweth near unto the grave.] Nephesh, soul, is here taken for the immortal spirit, as it is distinguished from chaiyah, the animal life. The former draws near to the pit, shachath, corruption; perhaps he meant dissipation, considering it merely as the breath. The latter draws near to the dead; i. e., to those who are already buried.

Verse 23. If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter, &c.] V.—THE MESSENGERS of righteousness: this is a FIFTH method. "If there be over him an interpreting or mediatorial angel or messenger." One among a thousand, "One from the CHIEF, HEAD, or TEACHER."

To shew unto man his uprightness.] "To manifest or cause to be declared to man his righteousness:" to show unto Adam—men in general, the descendants of the first man, his purity and holiness: to convince him of sin, righteousness, and judgment, that he may be prepared for the discovery of what is next to be exhibited.

Verse 24. Then he is gracious unto him.] He exercises mercy towards fallen man, and gives command for his respite and pardon.

Deliver him from going down to the pit.] Let him who is thus instructed, penitent, and afflicted, and comes to me, find a pardon; for—

VI. I have found a ransom.] Copher, an atonement. Pay a ransom for him, pedah, that he may not go down to the pit—to corruption or destruction, for I have found out an atonement. It is this that gives efficacy to all the preceding means: without which they would be useless, and the salvation of man impossible. I must think that the redemption of a lost world, by Jesus Christ, is not obscurely signified in ver. 23, 24.

Verse 25. His flesh shall be fresher than a child's.] He shall be born a new creature.

He shall return to the days of his youth.] He shall be born again, and become a child of God, through faith in Christ Jesus.

26 He shall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him, and he shall see his face with joy : for he will render unto man his righteousness.

27 *He looketh upon men, and if any ^b say, I have sinned, and perverted that which was right, and it ^c profited me not :

28 ^dHe will ^e deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light.

* Or, He shall look upon men, and say, I have sinned, &c.—^b 2 Sam. xii. 13. Prov. xxviii. 13. Luke xv. 21. 1 John i. 9.—^c Rom. vi. 21.—^d Or, he hath delivered my soul, &c.; and my life.—^e Isa. xxxviii.

Verse 26. He shall pray unto God] Being now adopted into the heavenly family, and become a new creature, he shall have the spirit of prayer, which is indeed the very breath and language of the new or spiritual life.

He will be favourable unto him] He shall manifest his good will to him; he shall live under the influences of divine grace.

He shall see his face with joy] He shall know that God is reconciled to him: and this shall fill him with joy, with exultation: for, "being justified by faith, he has peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom he has received the atonement; and rejoices in hope of the glory of God."

He will render unto man his righteousness.] So good and gracious is the Lord, that by his grace he will enable this convert to live to his glory, to bring forth all the fruits of the Spirit, and then reward him for the work, as if it were done by his own might.

Verse 27. He looketh upon men] Anashim, wretched, fallen men. He shines into them, to convince them of sin; and if any, under this convicting light of God, say, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and perverted the right—abused the powers, faculties, mercies, and advantages, which thou didst give me, by seeking rest and happiness in the creature, and it profited me not—it was all vanity and vexation of spirit; "and it was not equal to me," did not come up to my expectation, nor supply my wants:—

Verse 28. He will deliver his soul] He will do that to every individual penitent sinner which he has promised in his word to do for a lost world,—he will deliver his soul from going down to the pit of hell.

And his life shall see the light.] He shall walk in the light, as Christ is in the light; always enjoying a clear sense of his acceptance through the blood of the Lamb.

Verse 29. Lo, all these things worketh God] God frequently uses one, or another, or all of these means, to bring men, gaber, stout-hearted men, who are far from righteousness, to holiness and heaven.

Ofentimes] "Three times over;" or as paamayim is by the points in the dual number, then it signifies twice three times, that is, again and again; very frequently. Blessed be God!

29 Lo, all these things worketh God ^a oftentimes with man.

30 ^aTo bring back his soul from the pit, to be enlightened with the light of the living.

31 Mark well, O Job, hearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I will speak.

32 If thou hast any thing to say, answer me: speak, for I desire to justify thee.

33 If not, ^b hearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I shall teach thee wisdom.

17.—^a Heb. twice and thrice.—^b Ver. 28. Ps. lvi. 13.—^a Ps. xxxiv. 11.

Verse 30. To bring back his soul from the pit] Nearly a repetition of the promise in ver. 28.

To be enlightened with the light of the living.] An echo of Ps. lvi. 13, and probably quoted from it.

Verse 31. Mark well, O Job] Pay the deepest attention to what I have said, and to what I shall say, Verse 32. If thou hast any thing to say] If thou hast any objection to make against what I have already stated, now, answer, now speak freely; for it is my desire that thou shouldst stand clear of all charges.

Verse 33. If not] Then I will proceed: listen carefully, keep silence, and I will teach thee what true wisdom is.

On the 27th, 28th, and 29th verses, the following paraphrase has been recommended.

Verse 26. He (Jesus Christ the head and ransom-price) shall pray unto God (shall make intercession for the transgressors, for he is the Mediator between God and man). And he (God the Father) will be favourable (will manifest his good will towards him). And he shall see his face (his faces, God the Father, Son, and Spirit) with joy (with exultation or triumph) for he will render unto man his righteousness, "He will restore to wretched man his righteousness;" i. e., He will create the soul anew, and restore to the fallen spirit that righteousness and true holiness which it has lost, and bring it again to its original state of perfection, through the grand atonement mentioned ver. 24.

But when is it that wretched miserable man shall be brought to this state of salvation? This is answered in Verse 27. When God, looking upon men, seeth any of them saying, I have sinned and perverted that which was right, and it hath profited me nothing—has afforded nothing equal to my wishes, and the tribulation which I sustained in seeking happiness in forbidden things. Redeem my soul from going down to destruction, and my life shall see the light, or shall be as the light. This is the prayer, of the penitent, which God has promised to hear.

This is one of the best, the deepest, and most spiritual, and most important chapters which the reader has yet met with in the Book of Job. It is every way important, and full of useful information. It is a grand exhibition of the way of salvation as revealed to patriarchs and prophets.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Elihu begins with an exhortation to Job's friends, 1-4; charges Job with accusing God of acting unrighteously, which he shows is impossible, 5-12; points out the power and judgments of the Almighty, 13-30; shows how men should address God, and how irreverently Job has acted, 31-37.

FURTHERMORE Elihu answered and said,
2 Hear my words, O ye wise men: and give ear unto me, ye that have knowledge.

* Ch. vi. 30. xii. 11.

^b Heb. palate.

Verse 3. The ear trieth words] The Asiatics valued themselves on the nice and harmonious collection of words, both in speaking and writing; and perhaps it will be found here that Elihu labours as much for harmonious versification as for pious and weighty sentiments. To connect sense with sound was an object of general pursuit among the Hebrew, Arabic, and Persian poets; and so fond are the latter of euphony, that they often sacrifice both sense and sentiment to it; and some of the Greek poets are not exempt from this fault.

Verse 4. Let us choose to us judgment] Let us not seek the applause of men, nor contend for victory. Let our aim be to obtain correct views and notions of all things; and let us labour to find out what is good.

Verse 5. Job hath said, I am righteous] Job had certainly said the words attributed to him by Elihu, particularly 5 For Job hath said, ^a I am righteous; and ^b God hath taken away my judgment.

6 ^c Should I lie against my right? ^d my wound is incurable without transgression.

7 What man is like Job, ^e who drinketh up scorning like water?

8 Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.

9 For ^f he hath said, It profiteth a man nothing that he should delight himself with God.

10 Therefore hearken unto me, ye ^g men of understanding; ^h far be it from God, that he should do wickedness; and ⁱ from the Almighty, that he should commit iniquity.

11 ^j For the work of a man shall he render unto him, and cause every man to find according to his ways.

12 Yea, surely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty ^k pervert judgment.

13 Who hath given him a charge over the earth? or who hath disposed ^l the whole world?

in chap. xxvii. 2, &c., but it was in vindication of his aspersed character that he had asserted his own righteousness, and in a different sense to that which Elihu appears to take it up. He asserted that he was righteous quoad the charges his friends had brought against him. And he never intimated that he had at all times a pure heart, and had never transgressed the laws of his Maker. It is true also that he said, God hath taken away my judgment; but he most obviously does not mean to charge God with injustice, but to show that he had dealt with him in a way wholly mysterious, and not according to the ordinary dispensations of his providence; and that he did not interpose in his behalf, while his friends were overwhelming him with obloquy and reproach.

Verse 6. Should I lie against my right? Should I acknowledge myself the sinner which they paint me, and thus lie against my right to assert and maintain my innocence?

My wound is incurable without transgression. If this translation is correct, the meaning of the place is sufficiently evident. In the tribulation which I endure, I am treated as if I were the worst of culprits; and I labour under incurable maladies and privations, though without any cause on my part for such treatment.

The word chitsetsi, which we translate my wound, signifies more literally my arrow; and if we take it as a contracted noun, chitsetsey for chitsetsim, it means calamities. Anush which we translate incurable, may be the noun enosh, wicked, miserable man, and then the whole may be read thus: "A man of calamities and transgressions." I suffer the punishment of an enemy to God, while free from transgressions of this kind.

Verse 7. Drinketh up scorning like water? This is a proverbial expression, and seems to be formed, as a metaphor, from a camel drinking, who takes in a large draught of water, even the most turbid, on its setting out on a journey in a caravan, that it may serve it for a long time. Job deals largely in scorning; he fills his heart with it.

Verse 8. Which goeth in company with the workers of iniquity? This is an allusion to a caravan: all kinds of persons are found there; but yet a holy and respectable man might be found in that part of the company where profligates assembled. But surely this assertion of Elihu was not strictly true; and the words, literally translated, will bear a less evil meaning: "Job makes a track, to join fellowship with the workers of iniquity;" i. e., Job's present mode of reasoning, when he says, "I am righteous, yet God hath taken away my judgment," is according to the assertion of sinners, who say, "There is no profit in serving God; for, if a man be righteous, he is not benefited by it, for God does net vindicate a just man's cause against his oppressors." By adopting so much of their creed, he intimates that Job is taking the steps that lead to fellowship with them.

Verse 10. Far be it from God! Rather, Wickedness, far be that from God; and from iniquity, the Almighty. The sense is sufficiently evident without the paraphrase in our Version.

Verse 11. For the work of a man shall he render God ever will do justice; the righteous shall never be forsaken, nor shall the wicked ultimately prosper.

Verse 13. Who hath given him a charge? Who is it that governs the world? Is it not God? Who disposes all things in it? Is it not the Almighty, by his just and merciful providence? The government of the world shows the care, the justice, and the mercy of God.

Verse 14. If he set his heart upon man! On whomsoever God sets his heart, that is, his love, though his body shall perish and turn to dust, like the rest of men, yet his soul will God gather to himself.

Verse 17. Shall—he that hateth right govern? Or, Shall he who hateth judgment, lie under obligation? It is preposterous to suppose that he who lives by no rule should impose rules upon others. God, who is the Fountain of all justice and righteousness, binds man by his laws; and wilt thou, therefore, pretend to condemn him who is the sum of righteousness?

Verse 18. Is it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? Civil governors should be treated with respect; no man should speak evil of the ruler of the people. This should never be permitted. Even where the man cannot be respected, because his moral conduct is improper, even there the office is sacred, and should be revered. He who permits himself to talk against the man, would destroy the office and authority, if he could.

Verse 19. That accepteth not! If it be utterly improper to speak against a king or civil governor, how much more so to speak disrespectfully of God.

Verse 20. In a moment shall they die! Both are equally dependent on the Almighty for their breath and being; the mighty as well as the poor. If the great men of the earth have abused their power, he sometimes cuts them off by the most sudden and unexpected death; and even at midnight, when in security, and least capable of defence, they are cut off by the people whom they have oppressed, or by the invisible hand of the angel of death.

Verse 22. There is no darkness! In this life; and no shadow of death in the other world—no annihilation in which the workers of iniquity may hide themselves, or take refuge.

Verse 28. For he will not lay upon man] The meaning appears to be this: He will not call man a second time into judgment; he does not try a cause twice; his decisions are just, and his sentence without appeal.

Man's time is not in his own hand; nor is his lot cast or ruled by his own wisdom and power. When God thinks best, he will judge for him; and, if oppressed or calumniated, he will bring forth his righteousness as the light, and do him justice on his adversaries.

Verse 24. He shall break in pieces] Neither their strength nor number can afford them security.

Verse 25. He knoweth their works] He knows what they have done, and what they are plotting to do.

He overturneth them in the night] In the revolution of a single night, the plenitude of power on which the day closed is annihilated.

Verse 26. He striketh them as wicked men] At other times he executes his judgments more openly; and they are suddenly destroyed in the sight of the people.

Verse 27. Because they turned back] They had departed from him in their hearts, their moral conduct, and their civil government. He is speaking of corrupt and tyrannical rulers. And they did not, would not, understand any of his ways.

Verse 28. So that they cause the cry of the poor] Nothing so dreadful appears in the court of heaven against an unfeeling, hard-hearted, and cruel man of power, as the prayers, tears, and groans of the poor.

When the poor refer their cause to God, he is a terrible avenger. Let the potters strive with the potters of the earth; but woe to the man that contendeth with his Maker.

Verse 29. When he giveth quietness, who then can make trouble?] How beautiful is this sentiment, and how true! And, if he give to every human being the right to worship him according to their conscience, for the director of which he gives both his word and his Spirit, who shall dare to say to another, "Thou shalt worship God in my way, or not at all;" or, through a pretended liberality, say, "Thou shalt be tolerated to worship him so and so;" and even that toleration be shackled and limited?

Reader, thou hast as much right to tolerate another's mode of worship as he has to tolerate thine: or, in other words, neither of you have any such right at all; the pretension is as absurd as it is wicked.

borne chastisement, I will not offend any more: 32 That which I see not teach thou me: if I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

33 Should it be according to thy mind? he will recompense it, whether thou refuse, or whether thou choose; and not I: therefore speak what thou knowest.

34 Let men ^k of understanding tell me, and let a wise man hearken unto me.

35 ^l Job hath spoken without knowledge, and his words were without wisdom.

36 ^m My desire is that Job may be tried unto the end, because of his answers for wicked men.

If, however, there be any thing in the religious practice of any particular people that is inimical, by fair construction, to the peace of the country, then the civil power may interfere, as they ought to do in all cases of insurrection; but let no such inference be drawn when not most obviously flowing from the practice of the people, and the principles they profess; and when solemnly disclaimed by the persons in question. Whatever converts sinners from the error of their ways, must be good to society and profitable to the state.

Whether it be done against a nation] He defends and supports nations or individuals, howsoever weak, against their enemies, howsoever numerous and powerful. He destroys nations or individuals who have filled up the measure of their political or moral iniquity, though all other nations and individuals stand up in their support.

Verse 33. According to thy mind? he will recompense it] If thou wilt not thus come unto him, he will act according to justice, whether that be for or against thee. Choose what part thou wilt take, to humble thyself under the mighty hand of God, or still persist in thy supposed integrity. Speak therefore; the matter concerns thee, not me; but let me know what thou art determined to do.

Verse 34. Let men of understanding tell me] I wish to converse with wise men; and by men of wisdom I wish what I have said to be judged.

Verse 35. Job hath spoken without knowledge] There is no good in arguing with a self-willed, self-conceited man. Job has spoken like a man destitute of wisdom and discretion.

Verse 36. My desire is that Job may be tried unto the end] This is a very harsh wish: but the whole chapter is in the same spirit; nearly destitute of mildness and compassion. Who could suppose that such arguings could come out of the mouth of the loving Saviour of mankind? Yet a very pious divine has supposed Elihu to be Jesus Christ!

Verse 37. He addeth rebellion unto his sin] An ill-natured cruel, and unfounded assertion, borne out by nothing which Job had ever said or intended; and indeed, more severe than the most inveterate of his friends (so called) had ever spoken.

Though Elihu began well and tolerantly, he soon got into the spirit, and under the mistake, of those who had preceded him in this "tempest of words."

CHAPTER XXXV.

Elihu accuses Job of impious speeches, 1-4. No man can effect God by his iniquity, nor profit him by his righteousness, 5-8. Many are afflicted and oppressed, but few cry to God for help; and, for want of faith, they continue in affliction, 9-16.

ELIHU spake moreover, and said,
 2 Thinkest thou this to be right, that thou saidst, My righteousness is more than God's?

3 For thou saidst, What advantage will it be unto thee? and, What profit shall I have if I be cleansed from my sin?

4 I will answer thee, and thy companions with thee.

5 Look unto the heavens, and see; and behold the clouds which are higher than thou.

6 If thou sinnest, what doest thou against him?
 or if thy transgressions be multiplied, what doest thou unto him?

7 If thou be righteous, what givest thou him?
 or what receiveth he of thine hand?

8 Thy wickedness may hurt a man as thou art;
 and thy righteousness may profit the son of man.

9 By reason of the multitude of oppressions they

Verse 2. My righteousness is more than God's?] This would indeed be a blasphemous saying; but Job never said so, neither directly nor constructively: it would be much better to translate the words, I am righteous before God. And Job's meaning most certainly was, "Whatever I am in your sight, I know that in the sight of God I am a righteous man," and he had a right to assume this character, because God himself had given it to him.

Verse 3. What advantage will it be unto thee?] As if he had said to God, "My righteousness cannot profit thee, nor do I find that it is of any benefit to myself." Or perhaps Elihu makes here a general assertion, which he afterwards endeavours to exemplify: Thou hast been reasoning how it may profit thee, and thou hast said, "What profit shall I have in righteousness more than in sin?"

Verse 4. I will answer thee] I will show thee the evil of a sinful way, and the benefit of righteousness; and supply what thy friends have omitted in their discourses with thee.

Verse 5. Look unto the heavens] These heavens and their host, God has created: the bare sight of them is sufficient to show thee that God is infinitely beyond thee in wisdom and excellence.

Behold the clouds] The ethers (Vulgate, æthera); from shachak, to contend, fight together: the agitated or conflicting air and light; the strong agitation of these producing both light and heat. Look upon these, consider them deeply, and see and acknowledge the perfections of the Maker.

Verse 6. If thou sinnest] God is not benefited by thy righteousness, nor injured by thy iniquity, howsoever multiplied it may be.

Verse 8. Thy wickedness may hurt] That is—Thou mayest injure thyself and others by thy wickedness, and thou mayest benefit both by thy righteousness; but God thou canst neither hurt nor profit.

Verse 9. By reason of the multitude] The wicked rich oppress the wicked poor; these cry aloud because of their oppressors; but they have no relief, because they call not upon God.

Verse 10. Where is God my Maker] They have no just apprehension of his being; they do not consider themselves make the oppressed to cry: they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty.

10 But none saith, Where is God my Maker, who giveth songs in the night;

11 Who teacheth us more than the beasts of the earth, and maketh us wiser than the fowls of heaven?

12 There they cry, but none giveth answer, because of the pride of evil men.

13 Surely God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it.

14 Although thou sayest thou shalt not see him yet judgment is before him; therefore trust thou in him.

15 But now, because it is not so, he hath visited in his anger; yet he knoweth it not in great extremity:

his creatures, or that he who created them still preserves them, and would make them happy if they would pray unto him.

Who giveth songs in the night] A holy soul has continual communion with God: night and day its happiness is great; and God, from whom it comes, is the continual subject of its songs of praise.

Verse 11. Who teacheth us more than the beasts] Beasts, birds, fowls, and in many cases pond-fishes know and seem thankful to the hand that feeds them; while man, made much more noble than they, gifted with the greatest powers, privileged with the most important benefits, considers not the Lord, nor discerns the operation of his hand. [Some expositors read, "who teacheth us by the beasts," &c.]

Verse 12. There they cry] They bewail their calamities, but sorrow not for the cause of them; they cry against their oppressors, but they call not upon God.

Because of the pride of evil men.] Or, mippency, from the face, presence, or influence, of the pride of wicked men. They cry for deliverance from the pride of wicked men; but they are not heard, because they cry not to God.

Verse 13. Surely God will not hear vanity] He will not attend to such vain cries: they cry from their oppressions, but they cry not to God.

Verse 14. Yet judgment is before him] Rest assured that God has not forgotten either to punish or to save; therefore trust in him; choose to be a monument of his mercy, rather than of his justice.

Verse 15. But—because it is not so] Rather, "But now, because he visiteth not in his anger."

Verse 16. Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain] God will execute vengeance when it may best serve the ends of his justice, providence, and mercy. The delay of judgment is no proof that it shall not be executed; nor is the deferring of mercy any proof that God has forgotten to be gracious.

He multiplieth words without knowledge.] However this may apply to Job, it most certainly applies very strongly and generally to the words, not only of Job's three friends, but to those also of Elihu himself. The contest is frequently a strife of words.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Elihu vindicates God's justice, and his providential and gracious dealings with men, 1-9. Promises of God to the obedient, and threatenings to the disobedient; also promises to the poor and afflicted, 10-16. Sundry proofs of God's mercy, with suitable exhortations and cautions, 17-33.

ELIHU also proceeded, and said,
 2 Suffer me a little, and I will shew thee that * I have yet to speak on God's behalf.

3 I will fetch my knowledge from afar, and will ascribe righteousness to my Maker.

4 For truly my words shall not be false: he that is perfect in knowledge is with thee.

5 Behold, God is mighty, and despiseth not any:
 he is mighty in strength and wisdom.

 eous: but with kings are they on the throne; yea, he doth establish them for ever, and they are exalted.

Verse 1. Elihu also proceeded] Elihu goes on to lay before Job the impropriety of his behaviour towards God, and desires him to consider how vain it will prove.

Verse 2. That I have yet to speak on God's behalf] I have other proofs to allege in behalf of God's justice and providence.

Verse 3. I will fetch my knowledge from afar] I will show thee that all antiquity and experience are on my side. I can bring proofs from the remotest ages and from the most distant countries to demonstrate that God is infinitely wise, and can do nothing foolish or erroneous; that he is infinitely POWERFUL, and can bring all the purposes of his wisdom to effect; that he is infinitely GOOD, and can will nothing and can do nothing that is not good in itself, and well calculated to do good to his creatures. And I shall show that his operations in the heavens and on the earth prove and demonstrate the whole.

And will ascribe righteousness to my Maker.] By proving the above points, the righteous conduct of God, and his gracious government of the world, will be fully established.

Verse 4. My words shall not be false] My words shall be truth without falsity.

He that is perfect in knowledge is with thee.] "The perfection of knowledge is with thee." Thou art a sensible, well-informed man, and wilt be able to judge of what I say.

Verse 5. God is mighty, and despiseth not any] He reproaches no man for his want of knowledge. I prefer this to the passive sense, will not be despised.

He is mighty] Literally, "He is mighty in strength of heart;" he can never be terrified nor alarmed.

Verse 6. He preserveth not the life] He will not give life to the wicked; all such forfeit life by their transgressions.

But giveth right] Justice will he give to the afflicted or humble, anivim.

Verse 7. He withdraweth not his eyes] Exactly similar to the words of David, Ps. xxiv. 15.

But with kings are they on the throne] The word vayashibem, he will establish or place them, should be added to the first clause, as I have done; and then the sense becomes much clearer. Instead of lanetaach, for ever, perhaps to victory would be a better sense: "But with kings upon the throne will he place them; and they shall be exalted or triumph to victory." Rev. iii. 21.

Verse 8. And if they be bound in fetters] These are means which God uses, not of punishment, but of correction.

Verse 9. He sheweth them their work] He shows them the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

That they have exceeded.] That they have strengthened themselves, and did not trust in the living God; and therefore they would not help themselves when trouble came.

their days in prosperity, and their years in pleasures.
 12 But if they obey not, they shall perish by the sword, and they shall die without knowledge.

13 But the hypocrites in heart heap up wrath: they cry not when he bindeth them.

14 They die in youth, and their life is among the unclean.

15 He delivereth the poor in his affliction, and openeth their ears in oppression.

16 Even so would he have removed thee out of the strait into a broad place, where there is no straitness; and that which should be set on thy table should be full of fatness.

17 But thou hast fulfilled the judgment of the wicked: judgment and justice take hold on thee.

18 Because there is wrath, beware lest he take thee away with his stroke: then a great ransom cannot deliver thee.

19 Will he esteem thy riches? no, not gold, nor all the forces of strength.

Verse 10. He openeth also their ear] He gives them to understand the reason why they are so corrected, and commands them to return from those iniquities which have induced him to visit them with afflictions and distresses.

Verse 11. If they obey and serve him] There may appear in the course of providence to be some exceptions to this general rule; but it is most true, that this is literally or spiritually fulfilled to all the genuine followers of God. Every man is happy, in whatever circumstances, whose heart is unreservedly dedicated to his Maker.

Verse 12. But if they obey not] This also is a general rule from which, in the course of providence, there are only few, and those only apparent, deviations. Instead of they shall perish by the sword, the meaning of the Hebrew is, "By a dart they shall pass by." They shall be in continual dangers, and often fall before they have lived out half their days.

Verse 13. But the hypocrites in heart] The profligates. The hypocrite is he who has the form, but not the power, though he wishes to be thought as inwardly righteous as he is outwardly correct; and he takes up the profession of religion only to serve secular ends. This is not the meaning of the word in the book of Job, where it frequently occurs.

They cry not] They are too obstinate to humble themselves even under the mighty hand of God.

Verse 14. They die in youth] Exactly what the psalmist says, Ps. lv. 23. Literally, the words of Elihu are, "They shall die in the youth of their soul."

Their life is among the unclean.] Among the whores, harlots, prostitutes, and sodomites. In this sense the word is used, though it also signifies consecrated persons; but we know that in idolatry characters of this kind were consecrated to Baal and Ashtaroth, Venus, Priapus, &c.

Verse 15. And openeth their ears in oppression.] He will let them know for what end they are afflicted, and why he permits them to be oppressed. The word yigel might be translated, he shall make them scull, or sing with joy, in oppression; like the three Hebrews in the burning fiery furnace.

Verse 16. Even so would he have removed thee] If thou hadst turned to, obeyed, and served him, thy present state would have been widely different from what it is.

Verse 17. But thou hast fulfilled the judgment of the wicked] Elihu is not a whit behind Job's other friends. None of them seems to have known anything of the permission given by God to Satan to afflict and torment an innocent man.

Verse 18. Because there is wrath] This is a time in which God is punishing the wicked; take heed lest thou be cut off in a moment. Redeem the time; the days are evil.

Then a great ransom] When he determines to destroy, who can save?

21 Take heed, * regard not iniquity : for ^b this hast thou chosen rather than affliction.

22 Behold, God exalteth by his power : * who teacheth like him ?

23 * Who hath enjoined him his way ? or * who can say, Thou hast wrought iniquity ?

24 Remember that thou ^c magnify his work, which men behold.

25 Every man may see it ; man may behold it afar off.

Verse 20. Desire not the night] If he hear thee, and send death, thou mayest be cut off in a way at which thy soul would shudder.

Verse 21. Regard not iniquity] It is sinful to entertain such wishes ; it is an insult to the providence of God. He sends affliction ; he knows this to be best for thee ; but thou hast preferred death to affliction, thereby setting thy wisdom against the wisdom of God. Many, in affliction, long for death ; and yet they are not prepared to appear before God ! What madness is this ! If he takes them at their wish, they are ruined for ever. Affliction may be the means of their salvation ; the wished-for death, of their eternal destruction.

Verse 22. God exalteth by his power] He knows what is best to be done ; he teaches thee how thou shouldst suffer and improve. Why sin against his kindness ? Who can teach like him ?

Verse 23. Who hath enjoined him his way ?] Has God taken instructions from any man how he shall govern the world ?

Thou hast wrought iniquity ?] Who can show that there is, in the course of the divine providence, one unrighteous, cruel, or unwise act ? All the cunning and wickedness of man have never been able to find out the smallest flaw in the work of God.

Verse 24. Remember that thou magnify his work] Take this into consideration ; instead of fretting against the dispensations of Divine Providence, and quarrelling with thy Maker, let the visible works of thy Maker prove to thee his eternal power and Godhead, and let nature lead thee to the Creator.

Verse 25. Every man may see it] He who says he can examine the earth with a philosophic eye, and the heavens with the eye of an astronomer, and yet says he cannot see in them a system of infinite skill and contrivance, must be ignorant of science, or lie against his conscience, and be utterly unworthy of confidence or respect.

Verse 26. God is great] He is omnipotent. We know him not.] He is unsearchable.

Neither can the number of his years be searched out.] He is eternal.

These three propositions are an ample foundation for endless disquisition. As to paraphrase and comment, they need none in this place ; they are too profound, comprehensive, and sublime.

Verse 27. He maketh small the drops of water] This appears simply to refer to evaporation. God is seen in little things as well as great things ; and the inconceivably little, as well as the stupendously great, are equally the work of Omnipotence.

They pour down rain] These exceedingly minute drops or vapour become collected in clouds ; and then, when agitated by winds, &c., many particles being united, they become too heavy to be sustained by the air in which they before were suspended, and so fall down in rain. And this is proportioned le-odo, "to its vapour," to the quantity of the fluid evaporated and condensed into clouds.

Verse 28. Which the clouds do drop] In proportion to the evaporation will be the clouds or masses of volatilized and suspended vapour ; and in proportion to this will be the quantum of rain which in different forms will fall upon the earth.

Verse 29. Can any understand the spreadings of the clouds] pour down rain according to the vapour thereof : 28 ^d Which the clouds do drop and distil upon man abundantly.

29 Also can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle ?

30 Behold, he ^e spreadeth his light upon it, and covereth ^f the bottom of the sea.

31 For ^g by them judgeth he the people ; ho ^h giveth meat in abundance.

32 ⁱ With clouds he covereth the light ; and commandeth it not to shine by the cloud that cometh betwixt.

33 ^j The noise thereof sheweth concerning it, the cattle also concerning ^k the vapour.

Though the vapour appear to be fortuitously raised, and subject, when suspended in the atmosphere, to innumerable accidents, to different winds and currents which might drive it all to the sandy deserts, or direct its course so that it should fall again into the great deep from which it has been exhaled, without watering and refreshing the earth ; yet so does the good and wise providence of God manage this matter, that every part of the arable surface receives an ample supply.

The noise of his tabernacle ?] By the tabernacle we may understand the whole firmament or atmospheric expansion ; the place where the Almighty seems more particularly to dwell ; whence he sends forth the rain of his strength, and the thunder of his power.

The noise must refer to the blowing of winds and tempests, or to the claps, peals, and rattling of thunder, by means of the electric fluid.

Verse 30. He spreadeth his light upon it] This is spoken in reference to the flashes and coruscations of lightning in the time of thunder-storms ; when even in a dark night, a sudden flash illuminates for a moment the surface of the earth under that place.

And covereth the bottom of the sea.] Yea, the depths of the sea are as much under his control and influence as the atmosphere, and its whole collection of vapours, meteors, and galvanic and electric fluids.

Verse 31. By them judgeth he the people] He makes storms, tempests, winds, hurricanes, tornadoes, thunder and lightning, drought and inundation, the instruments of his justice, to punish rebellious nations.

He giveth meat in abundance.] Storms, tempests, and hurricanes, agitate the lower regions of the atmosphere, disperse noxious vapours, and thus render it fit for respiration ; and without these it would soon become a stagnant, putrid, and deadly mass, in which neither animals could live, nor vegetables thrive. And by dew, rains, snows, frosts, winds, cold, and heat, he fructifies the earth, and causes it to bring forth abundantly, so that every thing living is filled with plenteousness.

Verse 32. With clouds he covereth the light] The Vulgate, with which all the other Versions, less or more, agree, has, In manibus abscondit lucem, "In his hands he hideth the light ;" or, more literally, "By the hollow of his hands he concealeth the light," the fountain of light, i. e., the SUN.

And commandeth it not to shine by the cloud that cometh betwixt.] I am afraid this is no translation of the original.

The mending of the text by conjecture, to which we should only recur in desperate necessity, has furnished various translations. For my own part, I must acknowledge an extreme difficulty both here and in the concluding verse, on which I am unwilling to lay a correcting hand. I think something of eclipses is here referred to ; the defect of the solar light, by the interposition of the moon. So in the time of an eclipse God is represented as covering the body of the sun with the hollow of his hand, and thus obscuring the solar light, and then removing his hand so as to permit it to re-illuminate the earth.

Verse 33. The noise thereof sheweth concerning it, the cattle also concerning the vapour.] I think this may be translated without any violence to any word in the text :—

Its loud noise (or his thunder) shall proclaim concerning him ;

A magazine of wrath against iniquity.

This is literal, and gives in my opinion a proper meaning of the passage, and one in strict connexion with the context. And it is worthy of remark that every wicked man trembles at the noise of thunder and the flash of lightning, and considers this a treasury of divine wrath, emphatically called among us the artillery of the skies; and whenever the noise is heard, it is considered the voice of God. Thus the thunder declares concerning him. [There is no valid reason for rejecting the reading of the text: cattle have an instinctive sense of a coming storm.]

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Elihu continues to set forth the wisdom and omnipotence of God, as manifested in the thunder and lightning, 1-5; in the snows and frosts, 6-8; in various meteors; and shows the end for which they are sent, 9-13. Job is exhorted to consider the wondrous works of God in the light, in the clouds, in the winds, in heat and cold, in the formation of the heavens, and in the changes of the atmosphere, 14-22. The perfections of God, and how he should be revered by his creatures, 23, 24.

AT this also my heart trembleth, and is moved out of his place.

2 Hear attentively the noise of his voice, and the sound that goeth out of his mouth.

3 He directeth it under the whole heaven, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth.

4 After it a voice roareth: he thundereth with the voice of his excellency; and he will not stay them when his voice is heard.

5 God thundereth marvellously with his voice:

* Heb. Hear in hearing.—b Heb. light.—c Heb. wings of the earth.—d Ps. xxix. 3. lxxviii. 33.—e Ch. v. 9. ix. 10. xxxvi. 26. Rev. xv. 3.—f Ps. cxviii. 16, 17.—g Heb. and to the shower of rain, and to the *great things doeth he, which we cannot comprehend.

6 For he saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth: likewise to the small rain, and to the great rain of his strength.

7 He sealeth up the hand of every man: that all men may know his work.

8 Then the beasts go into dens, and remain in their places.

9 Out of the south cometh the whirlwind: and cold out of the north.

showers of rain of his strength.—h Ps. cix. 27.—i Ps. civ. 23.—j Heb. Out of the chamber.—k Heb. scattering winds.

Verse 1. My heart trembleth] A proper consideration of God's majesty in the thunder and lightning is enough to appal the stoutest heart, confound the wisest mind, and fill all with humility and devotion. This, to the middle of ver. 5, should be added to the preceding chapter, as it is a continuation of the account of the thunder and lightning given at the conclusion of that chapter. Our present division is as absurd as it is unfortunate.

Verse 2. Hear attentively] The words seem to intimate that there was actually at that time a violent storm of thunder and lightning, and that the successive peals were now breaking over the house, and the lightning flashing before their eyes. The storm continued till Elihu had finished, and out of that storm the Almighty spoke.

The noise of his voice] The sudden clap.

And the sound that goeth out] The peal or continued rattling, pounding, and thumping, to the end of the peal. The whole is represented as the voice of God himself, and the thunder as immediately issuing from his mouth.

Verse 3. He directeth it under the whole heaven] He directeth it (the lightning) from east to west; and its light—the reflection of the flash, not the lightning, unto the ends of the earth, so that a whole hemisphere seems to see it at the same instant.

Verse 4. After it a voice roareth] After the flash has been seen, the peal is heard; and this will be more or fewer seconds after the peal, in proportion to the distance of the thunder-cloud from the ear. Lightning traverses any space without any perceivable succession of time; nothing seems to be any obstacle to its progress. But as sound depends on the undulations of the air for its propagation, and is known to travel at the rate of only 1142 feet in a second; consequently, if the flash were only 1142 feet from the spectator, it would be seen one second, or one swing of the pendulum, before the sound could reach the ear, though the clap and the flash take place in the same instant; and if twice this distance, two seconds, and so on.

He thundereth with the voice of his excellency] We hear the brass in its rustling, the rain in its pattering, the hail in its rattling, the wind in its hollow howlings, the cataract in its dash, the bull in his bellowing, the lion in his roar; but we hear GOD, the Almighty, the Omnipresent, in the continuous peal of THUNDER! This sound, and this sound only, becomes the majesty of Jehovah.

And he will not stay them] His lightnings light the world; literally, the whole world. The electric fluid is diffused through all nature, and every where art can exhibit it to view. To his thunder and lightning, therefore, he has assigned no limits. And when his voice soundeth, when the lightning goes forth, who shall assign its limits, and who can stop its progress? It is, like God, IRRESISTIBLE.

Verse 5. God thundereth marvellously with his voice] This is the conclusion of Elihu's description of the lightning and thunder: and here only should chap. xxxvi. have ended.

Great things doeth he] This is the beginning of a new paragraph; and relates particularly to the phenomena which are afterwards mentioned. All of them wondrous things; and, in many respects, to us incomprehensible.

Verse 6. For he saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth] We may consider the formation of snow thus:—A cloud of vapour being condensed into drops, these drops, becoming too heavy to be suspended in the atmosphere, descend; and, meeting with a cold region of the air, they are frozen, each drop shooting into several points. These still continuing their descent, and meeting with some intermitting gales of a warmer air, are a little thawed, blunted, and again, by falling into colder air, frozen into clusters, or so entangled with each other as to fall down in what we call flakes.

Snow differs from hail and hoar-frost in being crystallized: this appears on examining a flake of snow with a magnifying glass; when the whole of it will appear to be composed of fine spicula or points diverging like rays from a centre. On each of these points are other collateral points, set at the same angles as the main points themselves, though some are irregular, the points broken, and some are formed of the fragments of other regular stars.

By the small rain, we may understand drizzling showers: by the rain of his strength, sudden thunder storms, when the rain descends in torrents; or violent rain from dissipating water-spouts.

Verse 7. He sealeth up the hand of every man] I think that the act of freezing is probably intended: that when the earth is bound up by intense frost, the hand, yad, labour, of every man is sealed up; he can do no more labour in the field, till the south wind blow, by which a thaw takes place. While the earth is in this state of rigidity, the beasts go into their dens, and remain in their places, ver. 8, some of them sleeping out the winter in a state of torpor, and others of them feeding on the stores which they had collected in autumn. However, the passage may mean no more than by the severity of the rains beasts are drawn to their covers; and man is obliged to intermit all his labours. On this verse, as its scriptural foundation, the doctrine of chiro-mancy is built! God has so marked the hand of every man by the lines thereon exhibited, that they tell all the good or bad fortune they shall have during life, and he has done this that all men, by a judicious examination of their hands, may know his work!

*Ch. xxxviii. 29, 30. Ps. cxlvii. 17, 18.—^b Heb. the cloud of his light.—^c Ps. cxlvii. 8.—^d Exod. ix. 18, 23. 1 Sam. xii. 18, 19. Ezra x. 9. (b. xxxvi. 31.—^e Heb. a rod.—^f Ch. xxxviii. 26, 27.—

Verse 9. Out of the south cometh the whirlwind] See the note on chap. ix. 9. What is rendered south here, is there rendered chambers. What the whirlwind, suphah, is, we know not. It might have been a wind peculiar to that district; and it is very possible that it was a scorching wind, something like the simoon. [More likely a raw cold wind.]

Verse 10. By the breath of God frost is given] The freezing of water, though it is generally allowed to be the effect of cold, and has been carefully examined by the most eminent philosophers, is still involved in much mystery; and is a very proper subject to be produced among the great things which God doeth, and which we cannot comprehend, ver. 5. The breath of God freezes the waters; and that breath thaws them. It is the work of Omnipotence; and there, for the present, we must leave it.

The breadth of the waters is straitened.] This has been variously translated; mutak, which we here render straitened, we translate ver. 18 melted. It has been observed that water which lay low in ponds did not freeze till some slight current of air fell on and ruffled the surface, when it instantly shot into ice.

Verse 11. By watering he wearieth the thick cloud] Perhaps it would be better to say, The brightness, bari, dissipates the cloud; or, if we follow our Version, By watering the earth he wearieth, wearieth out or emptieth, the thick cloud—causes it to pour down all its contents upon the earth, that they may cause it to bring forth and bud.

Verse 12. And it is turned round about by his counsels] Possibly the passage refers to the revolutions of the seasons, and the operations connected with them.

Verse 13. He causeth it to come] In the preceding verse it is said that God conducts the clouds according to the order of his counsels, whithersoever he pleases: and here it is added that, when he designs to heap favours upon any land, he commands the clouds to go thither, and pour out on it their fertilizing showers. He sends rain also as a judgment, inundating certain lands, and sweeping away their produce by irresistible floods.

Verse 14. Stand still] Enter into deep contemplation on the subject.

And consider] Weigh every thing; examine separately and collectively; and draw right conclusions from the whole.

The wondrous works of God.] Endless in their variety; stupendous in their structure; complicated in their parts;

17 How thy garments are warm, when he quieteth the earth by the south wind ?

18 Hast thou with him ^k spread out the sky, which is strong, and as a molten looking glass ?

19 Teach us what we shall say unto him ? for we cannot order our speech by reason of darkness.

20 Shall it be told him that I speak ? If a man speak, surely he shall be swallowed up.

21 And now men see not the bright light which is in the clouds : but the wind passeth, and cleanseth them.

indescribable in their relations and connexions; and incomprehensible in the mode of their formation, in the cohesion of their parts, and in the ends of their creation.

Verse 15. Dost thou know when God disposed them] Dost thou know the laws by which they are governed; and the causes which produce such and such phenomena ?

And caused the light of his cloud to shine ?] Almost every critic of note understands this of the rainbow, which God gave as a sign that the earth should no more be destroyed by water. [There is little reason for this criticism.]

Verse 16. Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds] Art thou so well acquainted with the nature of evaporation, and the gravity of the air at the different heights, to support different weights of aqueous vapour, so as to keep them floating for a certain portion of time, and then let them down to water the earth; dost thou know these things so as to determine the laws by which they are regulated ?

Verse 17. How thy garments are warm] What are warmth and cold ? Is heat incontestably a substance, and is cold none ? The existence of caloric, as a substance, is supposed to be demonstrated. But supposing this question to be set at rest, is it demonstrated that cold is only a quality, the mere absence of heat ? But how do our garments keep us warm ? By preventing the too great dissipation of the natural heat. And why is it that certain substances, worked into clothing, keep us warmer than others ? Because they are bad conductors of caloric.

Verse 18. Strong—as a molten looking glass ?] Like a molten mirror. The whole concave of heaven, in a clear day or brilliant night, being like a mass of polished metal, reflecting or transmitting innumerable images.

Verse 19. Teach us what we shall say unto him ?] Thou pretendest to be so very wise, and to know every thing about God, pray make us as wise as thyself, that we may be able to approach with thy boldness the Sovereign of the world; and maintain our cause with thy confidence before him. As for our parts, we are ignorant; and on all these subjects, are enveloped with darkness.

Verse 20. Shall it be told him that I speak ?] Shall I dare to whisper even before God ? And suppose any one were to accuse me before him for what I have spoken of him, how should I be able to stand in his presence ? I should be swallowed up in consternation, and consumed with the splendour of his majesty.

Verse 21. And now men see not the bright light] Elihu seems to refer to the insufferable brightness of the sun. Can any man look at the sun shining in his strength, when a clear and strong wind has purged the sky from clouds and vapours ? Much less can any gaze on the majesty of God. Every creature must sink before him. What dangerous folly in man to attempt to arraign His conduct !

Verse 22. Fair weather cometh out of the north] The original is rendered by almost every Version, ancient and modern, thus, or to this effect: "From the north cometh gold." In the time of Moses, Job, and Solomon, and for a long time after, gold was obtained from lands which were all north of Judea and Idumea; and are in the Scriptures ordinarily termed the north country. "But what relation can there be between, Gold cometh out of the north, and, With God is terrible majesty ?" Answer: Each thing has its properties, and out: ^a he is excellent in power, and in judgment, and in plenty of justice: he will not afflict.

proper characteristics, which distinguish it; and each country has its advantages. Gold, for instance, comes from the northern countries; so praises offered to the Supreme God should be accompanied with fear and trembling; and as this metal is from the north, and northern countries are the places whence it must be procured; so terrible majesty belongs to God, and in him alone such majesty is eternally resident. [Criticism has done little for this difficult passage. Some have thought that the reference is to the splendours of the Aurora Borealis.]

Verse 23. Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out.] This is a very abrupt exclamation, and highly descriptive of the state of mind in which Elihu was at this time; full of solemnity, wonder, and astonishment, at his own contemplation of this "great First Cause, least understood." The ALMIGHTY! we cannot find him out.

He will not afflict.] He will not ANSWER. He will give account of none of his matters to us. We cannot comprehend his motives, nor the ends he has in view.

Verse 24. Men do therefore.] Therefore men, anashim, wretched, miserable, ignorant, sinful men, should fear him.

He respecteth not any.] No man is valuable in his sight on account of his wisdom; for what is his wisdom when compared with that of the Omniscient? Whatever good is in man, God alone is the author of it. Let him, therefore, that glorieth, glory in the Lord.

In the speech of Elihu every thing appears to be original; he speaks from a deep and comprehensive mind, that had profoundly studied the subjects which he discoursed. His descriptions of the divine attributes, and of the wonderful works of God, are correct, splendid, impressive and inimitable. The evidences of the divine presence throng on his eyes and mind: they confound all his powers of reasoning and description; he cannot arrange his words by reason of darkness; and he concludes with stating, that to poor weak man God must for ever be incomprehensible, and to him a subject of deep religious fear and reverence. Just then, the terrible majesty of the Lord appears! Elihu is silent! The rushing mighty wind proclaims the presence of Jehovah: and out of this whirlwind God answers for and proclaims himself! Reader, canst thou not conceive something of what these men felt? Art thou not astonished, perplexed, confounded, in reading over these descriptions of the thunder of God's power? Prepare, then, to hear the voice of God himself out of this whirlwind.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

The Lord answers Job out of a whirlwind, and challenges him to answer, 1-3. He convinces him of ignorance and weakness, by an enumeration of some of his mighty works; particularly of the creation of the earth, 4-7. The sea and the deeps, 8-18. The light, 19-21. Snow, hail, thunder, lightning, rain, dew, ice, and hoarfrost, 22-30. Different constellations, and the ordinances of heaven influencing the earth, 31-33. Shows his own power and wisdom in the atmosphere, particularly in the thunder, lightnings, and rain, 34-38. His providence in reference to the brute creation, 39-41.

THEN the LORD answered Job ^a out of the whirlwind, and said,

² ^b Who is this that darkeneth counsel by ^c words without knowledge.

³ ^d Gird up now thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and ^e answer thou me.

Verse 1. The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind.] It is not suprah, as in the preceding chapter, ver. 9; but searah, which signifies something turbulent, tumultuous, or violently agitated; and here may signify what we call a tempest, and was intended to fill Job's mind with solemnity, and an awful sense of the majesty of God.

Verse 2. Who is this that darkeneth counsel.] Who art thou who pretendest to speak on the deep things of God, and the administration of his justice and providence; and leavest my counsels and designs the darker for thy explanation?

Verse 3. Gird up now thy loins.] I will not confound thee with my terrors; set like a man, keyber, like a hero: stand and vindicate thyself. For I will demand of thee—I will ask thee a series of questions more easy of solution than those which thou hast affected to discuss already.

The most impressive and convincing manner of arguing is allowed to be that by interrogation, which the Almighty here adopts. The best orations delivered by the ancients were formed after this manner. That celebrated oration of Cicero against Catiline, which is allowed to be his masterpiece, begins with a multitude of short questions, closely pressed upon each other.

Verse 4. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?] Thou hast a limited and derived being; thou art only of yesterday; what canst thou know? Didst thou see me create the world?

Verse 5. Who hath laid the measures thereof.] Who hath adjusted its polar and equatorial distances from the centre?

Who hath stretched the line.] Who hath formed its zones and its great circles, and adjusted the whole of its magnitude and gravity to the orbit in which it was to move, as well as its distance from that great centre about which it was to revolve?

Verse 6. Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? How does it continue to revolve in the immensity of space? What supports it? Has it foundations like a building, and is it fastened with a key-stone to keep the mighty fabric in union?

Verse 7. When the morning stars sang together.] By the sons of God and the morning stars, the angelic host is meant; as they are supposed to be first, though perhaps not chief, in the order of creation.

Verse 8. Who shut up the sea with doors.] Who gathered the waters together into one place, and fixed the sea its limits, so that it cannot overpass them to inundate the earth?

When it brake forth, as if it had issued out of the womb?] This is a very fine metaphor. The sea is represented as 9 When I made the cloud the garment thereof, and thick darkness a swaddling-band for it,

10 And ^b brake ^b up for it my decreed place, and set bars and doors,

11 And said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further: and here shall ^c thy proud waves ^d be stayed?

a newly born infant issuing from the womb of the void and formless chaos; the allusion to the birth of a child is carried on in the next verse.

Verse 9. When I made the cloud the garment] Alluding to the cloth in which the new-born infant is first received.

And thick darkness a swaddling-band for it] Here is also an allusion to the first dressings of the new-born child: it is swathed in order to support the body, too tender to bear even careful handling without some medium between the hand of the nurse and the flesh of the child.

There is here an allusion also to the creation, as described in Gen. i. The thick darkness was a swaddling-band for the new-born SEA.

Verse 10. And set bars and doors] And let the dry land appear. This formed the bars and doors of the sea; the land being every where a barrier against the encroachments, and inundations of the sea; the great rivers, bays, creeks, &c., the doors, by which it passes into the interior of continents, &c.

Verse 11. Hitherto shalt thou come] The tides are marvellously limited and regulated, not only by the lunar and solar attraction, but by the quantum of time also which is required to remove any part of the earth's surface from under the immediate attractive influence of the sun and moon. The attraction of the sun and moon, and the gravitation of its own parts to its own centre, which prevent too great a flux on the one hand, and too great a reflux on the other, or, in other words, too high a tide, and too deep an ebb, are also some of those bars and doors by which its proud waves are stayed, and prevented from coming farther. A world of wisdom and management was necessary, in order to proportion all these things to each other, so as to procure the great benefits which result from the flux and reflux of the sea, and prevent the evils that must take place, at least occasionally, were not those bars and doors provided.

Verse 12. Hast thou commanded the morning] This refers to dawn or morning twilight, occasioned by the refraction of the solar rays by means of the atmosphere; so that we receive the light by degrees, which would otherwise burst at once upon our eyes, and injure, if not destroy, our sight: and by which even the body of the sun himself becomes evident several minutes before he rises above the horizon.

Caused the dayspring to know his place] This seems to refer to the different points in which day-break appears during the course of the earth's revolution in its orbit; and which variety of points of appearing depends on this annual revolution. The dawn does not appear, nor the sun rise exactly in the same point of the horizon, two successive days in the whole year, as he declines forty-three degrees north, and forty-three degrees south, of east; beginning on the 21st of March, and ending on the 22nd of December; which variations not only produce the places of rising and setting, but also the length of day and night. And by this declination north and south, the solar light takes hold of the ends of the earth (ver. 18.)—enlightens the arctic and antarctic circles in such a way as it would not do were it always on the equinoctial line; these tropics taking the sun twenty-three and a half degrees north, and as many south, of this line.

Verse 13. That the wicked might be shaken out of it?] The meaning appears to be this: as soon as the light begins to dawn upon the earth, thieves, assassins, murderers, and adulterers, who all hate and shun the light, fly like ferocious beasts to their several dens and hiding-places; for such do not dare to come to the light, lest their works be manifest, which are not wrought in God. To this verse the fifteenth appears to belong, as it connects immediately with it, which connexion the introduction of the fourteenth verse disturbs.

Verse 14. It is turned as clay to the sea] The earth, like soft clay, is capable of modifying itself in endless ways, and assuming infinite forms. As a proof of this, see the astonishing variety of plants, flowers, and fruits, and the infinitely diversified hues, odours, tastes, consistency, and properties, of its vegetable productions.

There seems to be an allusion here to the sealing of clay, which has been, and is now, frequent in the East.

And they stand as a garment] The earth receiving these impressions from the solar light and heat, plants and flowers spring up, and decorate its surface as the most beautiful stamped garment does the person of the most sumptuously dressed female.

Verse 16. Hast thou entered into the springs of the sea?] Of these springs, inlets, or outlets, of the sea, we know just as much as Job. There was prevalent among philosophers an opinion, that through a porous bottom fresh matter was constantly oozing, by which the sea was supplied with new materials. But through such pores these materials might as well ooze out as ooze in.

Walked in the search of the depth?] In other words, Dost thou know the depths of the sea? No man since him has found them out. In multitudes of places they are unfathomable by any means hitherto used by man.

Verse 17. Have the gates of death been opened unto thee?] Dost thou know in what the article of death consists? This is as inexplicable as the question, What is animal life?

The doors of the shadow of death?] The intermediate state, the openings into the place of separate spirits. Here two places are distinguished: naveth, death, and tsalmaveth, the shadow of death. It will not do to say, death is the privation of life, for what then would be the shadow of that privation?

Verse 18. The breadth of the earth?] At that time the circumference of the globe was not known, because the earth itself was supposed to be a vast extended plain, bordered all round with the ocean and the sky.

Verse 19. Where light dwelleth?] What is the source of light? Yea, what is light itself? It is not in the sun, for light was before the sun; but what is light? It is no doubt a substance; but of what kind? and of what are its particles? As to darkness, what is it? Is it philosophical to say, It is the mere privation of light?

Verse 20. Shouldest take it to the bound thereof?] Here darkness and light are personified, each as a real intelligent being having a separate existence and local dwelling. But flowing of waters, or a way for the lightning of thunder;

28 Hath the rain a father? or who hath begotten the drops of dew?

poetry animates every thing. It is the region of fictitious existence.

Verse 21. Knowest thou? This is strong and biting irony, and the literal translation proves it: "Thou knowest, because thou wast then born; and the number of thy day is great," or multitudinous, rabbim, multitudes.

Verse 22. The treasures of the snow? The places where snow is formed, and the cause of that formation.

Treasures of the hail? Hail is generally supposed to be drops of rain frozen in their passage through cold regions of the air; and the hail is always in proportion to the size of the rain drop from which it was formed.

Hail is the only meteor of this kind, from which no apparent good is derived. Rain and dew invigorate and give life to the whole vegetable world; frost, by expanding the water contained in the earth, pulverizes and renders the soil fertile; snow covers and defends vegetables from being destroyed by too severe a frost; but hail does none of these. It not only does no good, but often much harm—always some. It has a chilling, blasting effect in spring and summer, and cuts the tender plants so as to injure or totally destroy them. In short, the treasures of hail are not well known; and its use in the creation has not yet been ascertained. But frost is God's universal plough, by which he cultivates the whole earth.

Verse 23. Reserved against the time of trouble? "To the season of strictness," i.e., the season when the earth is constricted or bound by the frost.

Against the day of battle and war? Hailstones being often employed as instruments of God's displeasure against his enemies, and the enemies of his people.

Verse 24. By what way is the light parted? Who can accurately describe the cause and operation of a thunder-cloud, the cause, nature, and mode of operation of the lightning itself? How is it parted? How does it take its zig-zag form? This is the curious, indescribable, and unknown parting. Are all the causes of positive and negative electricity found out? What are its particles, and how do they cohere, and in what order are they propagated? Much has been said on all these points, and how little of that much satisfactorily?

Verse 25. Divided a water-course? The original tealah, from alah, to ascend, may signify rather a cloud or clouds in general, where the waters are stored up. I cannot see how the overflowings or torrents of water can be said to ascend any other way than by evaporation; and it is by this divine contrivance that the earth is not only irrigated, but even dried; and by this means too much moisture is not permitted to lie upon the ground, which would not only be injurious to vegetation, but even destroy it. But query, may not a water-spout be intended?

A way for the lightning of thunder? "A path for the bolt of thunder." God is represented as directing the course even of the lightning; he launches the bolt, and makes the path in which it is to run. To grasp, manage, and dart the thunder-bolt or lightning, was a work which heathenism gave to Jupiter, its supreme god. None of the inferior deities were capable of this. But who can thunder with a voice like the Almighty? He is THE THUNDERER.

Verse 26. To cause it to rain on the earth? It is well known that rain falls copiously in thunder-storms. But how does the thunder cause rain? By the most accurate and incontestable experiments it is proved that water is a composition of two elastic airs or gases, as they are called, 31 Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion?

34 Canst thou lift up thy voice to the clouds, that abundance of waters may cover thee?

oxygen and hydrogen. In 100 parts of water there are 88½ of oxygen and 11½ of hydrogen. The electric spark or matter of lightning, passing through the atmosphere, ignites and decomposes the oxygen and hydrogen, which explode, and the water which was formed of these two falls down in the form of rain.

Verse 27. To satisfy the desolate and waste? The thunder-cloud is conducted over deserts where there is no human inhabitant; and this to cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth; for there are beasts, fowls, and insects, that inhabit the desert and the wilderness, and must be nourished by the productions of the ground.

Verse 28. The drops of dew? Dew is a dense moist vapour, found on the earth in spring and summer mornings, in the form of a mizzling rain. Various experiments have been instituted to ascertain whether dew arises from the earth, or descends from the atmosphere; and those pro and con have alternately preponderated. [Dew is ascertained to be an atmospheric deposit.]

Verse 29. Out of whose womb came the ice? Ice is a solid, transparent, and brittle body, formed of water by means of cold. Some philosophers suppose that ice is only the re-establishment of water in its natural state; that the mere absence of fire is sufficient to account for this re-establishment; and that the fluidity of water is a real fusion, like that of metals exposed to the action of fire; and differing only in this, that a greater portion of fire is necessary to one than the other.

The hoary frost of heaven, who hath gendered it? Hoar-frost is the congelation of dew, in frosty mornings, on the grass. The question, Who hath engendered the hoar-frost of heaven? is, to this hour nearly as inexplicable to us as it was to Job! Is it enough to say that hoar-frost is water deposited from the atmosphere at a low temperature, so as to produce congelation?

Verse 30. The waters are hid as with a stone? Here is a reference to freezing in the winter, as we may learn from some of the constellations mentioned below, which arise above our horizon, in the winter months.

Verse 31. Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades? The Pleiades, a constellation in the sign Taurus, consist of six stars visible to the naked eye; to a good eye, in a clear night, seven are discernible; but with a telescope ten times the number may be readily counted. They make their appearance in the spring. Orion may be seen in the morning towards the end of October, and is visible through November, December, and January; and hence it becomes a correct and elegant synecdoche for the winter at large. The Pleiades are elegantly opposed to Orion, as the vernal renovation of nature is opposed to its wintry destruction; the mild and open benignity of spring, to the severe and icy inactivity of winter.

Verse 32. Mazzaroth in his season? This is generally understood to mean the signs of the zodiac.

Verse 33. Knowest thou the ordinances of heaven? Art thou acquainted with all the laws of the planetary system? Canst thou account for the difference of their motions, and the influence by which they are retained and revolve in their orbits? And canst thou tell what influence or dominion they exercise on the earth?

Verse 34. Canst thou lift up thy voice to the clouds? Canst thou produce lightning and thunder, that water may be formed, and poured down upon the earth?

Thunder is called koloth, voices; for it is considered the voice of God: here then Job's voice, kolecha, is opposed to the voice of JEHOVAH!

Verse 35. Canst thou send lightnings] We have already seen that the lightning is supposed to be immediately in the hand and under the management of God. Lightnings—How much like the sound of thunder is the original word; Berakim! Here are both sense and sound.

Here we are?] Will the winged lightnings be thy messengers, as they are mine?

Verse 36. Who hath put wisdom in the inward parts? Who has given lasechvi, to the contemplative person, understanding? A power which he knows he has, but which he cannot comprehend. Man knows nothing of his own mind nor of the mode of its operations.

"The Septuagint" has, "Who hath given the knowledge of weaving to women; or the science of embroidery?" Instead of understanding to the heart, the Vulgate has, understanding to the cock; that it might be able to distinguish and proclaim the watches of the night.

Verse 37. Who can number the clouds] Perhaps the word saphar, which is commonly rendered to number, may here mean, as in Arabic, to irradiate; and may refer to those celestial and inimitable tinges which we sometimes behold in the sky.

Bottles of heaven] The clouds: it is an allusion to the bottles made of skin, in which they are accustomed to carry their water from wells and tanks.

Verse 38. When the dust groweth into hardness] What is the principle of cohesion among the different particles of matter, in all metals and minerals?

Verse 39. Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion? Rather the lioness, or strong lion. Hast thou his instinct? Dost thou know the habits and haunts of such animals as he seeks for his food?

In the best Hebrew Bibles the thirty-ninth chapter begins properly with this verse, as a new subject now commences, relating to the natural history of the earth, or the animal kingdom.

Verse 40. When they couch in their dens] Before they are capable of trusting themselves abroad.

Abide in the covert] Young lions, before they have acquired sufficient strength and swiftness, lie under cover, in order to surprise those animals which they have not fleetness enough to overtake in the forest; and from this circumstance the kephirim, "young lions, or lion's whelps," have their name: the root is caphar, to cover or hide.

Verse 41. Who provideth for the raven] This bird is chosen, perhaps, for its voracious appetite, and general hunger for prey, beyond most other fowls. He makes a continual cry, and the cry is that of hunger.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

Several animals described: the wild goats and hinds, 1-4. The wild ass, 5-8. The unicorn, 9-12. The peacock and ostrich, 13-18. The war-horse, 19-25. The hawk, 26. And the eagle and her brood, 27-30.

KNOWEST thou the time when the wild goats of the ^a rock bring forth or canst thou mark when ^b the hinds do calve?

2 Canst thou number the months that they fulfil? or knowest thou the time when they bring forth?

3 They bow themselves, they bring forth their young ones, they cast out their sorrows.

* 1 Sam. xxiv. 2. Ps. civ. 18.—^b Ps. xxix. 9.—^c Ch. xxiv. 5. Jer. ii. 24. Hos. viii. 9.

Verse 1. Knowest thou the time] To know the time &c., only was easy, and has nothing extraordinary in it; but the meaning of these questions is, to know the circumstances, which have something peculiarly expressive of God's providence, and make the questions proper in this place. What is called the wild goat, yael, from alah, to ascend, go or mount up, is generally understood to be the ibex or mountain goat, called yael, from the wonderful manner in which it mounts to the tops of the highest rocks. This animal is indigenous to Arabia, is of amazing strength and agility, and considerably larger than the common goat.

Verse 4. In good liking] Houbigan's version appears very correct: "(Knowest thou) "how their young ones grow up, increase in the fields, and once departing, return to them no more?" The word bar, translated corn, should be field or country. The stag does not feed on corn.

Verse 5. Who hath sent out the wild ass free?] The same as the oncs agricos of the Greeks, and the onager of the Latins;

4 Their young ones are in good liking, they grow up with corn; they go forth, and return not unto them.

5 Who hath sent out the wild ass free? or who hath loosed the bands of the wild ass?

which must not be confounded with the Zebra, for this is an animal of a different species from the ass. The wild ass is not striped like the Zebra, nor so elegantly shaped. There are many of those animals in the deserts of Libya and Numidia: they are of a gray colour; and run so swiftly that no horses but the Arab barbs can overtake them. They differ from tame asses only in their independence and liberty, and in their being stronger and more nimble: but in their shape they are the same.

The bands of the wild ass?] Arod, the brayer, the same animal, but called thus because of the frequent and peculiar noise he makes.

Verse 6. Whose house] Habitation, or place of resort. The barren land] The salt land, or salt places, as in the margin.

Verse 7. He scorneth the multitude] He is so swift that he cannot be run or hunted down.

and desert places are his peculiar places of pasture; and he lives on any thing that is green, on any kind of vegetable production.

Verse 9. Will the unicorn be willing to serve thee? The animal in question, called reim, is undoubtedly the rhinoceros, who has the latter name from the horn that grows on his nose. The rhinoceros is known by the name of reim in Arabia to the present day. He is allowed to be a savage animal, showing nothing of the intellect of the elephant. His skin is like armour, and so very hard as to resist sabres, javelins, lances, and even musket-balls; the only penetrable parts being the belly, the eyes, and about the ears. [Delitzsch thinks that the reim was the Syrian gazelle, a one-horned species.]

Or abide by thy crib? These and several of the following expressions are intended to point out his savage, untameable nature.

Verse 10. Canst thou bind the unicorn—in the furrow? He will not plough, nor draw in the yoke with another; nor canst thou use him singly, to harrow the ground.

Verse 12. That he will bring home thy seed? Thou canst make no domestic nor agricultural use of him.

Verse 13. The goodly wings unto the peacocks? I believe peacocks are not intended here; and the Hebrew word renanim should be translated ostriches; and the term chasidah, which we translate ostrich, should be, as it is elsewhere translated, stork; and perhaps the word notsah, rendered here feathers, should be translated hawk, or pelican.

Mr. Good has come nearest both to the original and to the meaning, by translating thus:—

“The wing of the ostrich-tribe is for flapping;
But of the stork and falcon for flight.”

Verse 14. Which leaveth her eggs in the earth? This want of parental affection in the ostrich is almost universally acknowledged.

Verse 16. She is hardened against her young? She neglects her little ones, which are often found half-starved, straggling, and moaning about, like so many deserted orphans, for their mother.

Verse 18. She lifteth up herself? She neither flies nor runs distinctly, but has a motion composed of both; and, using her wings as sails, makes great speed.

Here follow all the great and sprightly images that thought

20 Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper? the glory of his nostrils is terrible.

22 He mocketh at fear, and is not affrighted: neither turneth he back from the sword.

23 The quiver rattleth against him, the glittering spear and the shield.

24 He swalloweth the ground with fierceness and rage: neither believeth he that it is the sound of the trumpet.

25 He saith among the trumpets, Ha, ha; and he smelleth the battle afar off, the thunder of the captains, and the shouting.

26 Doth the hawk fly by thy wisdom, and stretch her wings toward the south?

27 Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high?

28 She dwelleth and abideth on the rock, upon the crag of the rock, and the strong place.

can form of the horse expressed in such force and vigour of style as would have given the great wits of antiquity new laws for the sublime, had they been acquainted with these writings.

Verse 21. He paweth in the valley? They dig in the valley, i. e., in his violent galloping, in every pitch of his body, he scoops up sods out of the earth.

Verse 25. He saith among the trumpets, Ha, ha! The original is peculiarly emphatical: Heach! a strong, partly nasal, partly guttural sound, exactly resembling the first note which the horse emits in neighing.

Verse 26. Doth the hawk fly by thy wisdom? The hawk is called nets, from its swiftness in darting down upon its prey; hence its Latin name, netus, which is almost the same as the Hebrew. It was owing to its swiftness that the Egyptians in their hieroglyphics made it the emblem of the wind.

Stretch her wings toward the south? Most of the falcon tribe pass their spring and autumn in cold climates; and wing their way towards warmer regions on the approach of winter. Is it through thy teaching that this or any other bird of passage knows the precise time for taking flight, and the direction in which she is to go in order to come to a warmer climate? There is much of the wisdom and providence of God to be seen in the migration of birds of passage. See a beautiful passage in Jeremiah, chap. viii. 7.

Verse 27. Doth the eagle mount up? The eagle is said to be of so acute a sight, that when she is so high in the air that men cannot see her, she can discern a small fish in the water!

Verse 28. Upon the crag of the rock? The tooth of the rock, i. e., some projecting part, whither adventurous man himself dares not follow her.

Verse 29. Her eyes behold afar off. The eagle was proverbial for her strong and clear sight.

Verse 30. Her young ones also suck up blood? The eagle does not feed her young with carrion, but with prey newly slain, so that they may suck up blood.

Where the slain are, there is she. These words are quoted by our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 28. It is likely however that this was a proverbial mode of expression; and our Lord adapts it to the circumstances of the Jewish people, who were about to fall a prey to the Romans.

CHAPTER XL

Job humbles himself before the Lord, 1-5. And God again challenges him, by a display of his power and judgments, 6-14. A description of behemoth, 15-24.

MOREOVER the LORD answered Job, and said,
2 Shall he that contendeth with the Almighty instruct him? he that reproveth God, let him answer it.

3 Then Job answered the LORD, and said,
4 Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth.

5 Once have I spoken; but I will not answer; yea, twice; but I will proceed no further.

6 Then answered the LORD unto Job out of the whirlwind, and said,

7 Gird up thy loins now like a man: I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

8 Wilt thou also disannul my judgment? wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayest be righteous?

*Ch. xxxiii. 13.—^bEzra ix. 6. Ch. xlii. 6. Ps. li. 4.—^cCh. xxix. 9. Ps. xxxix. 9.—^dCh. xxxviii. 1.—^eCh. xxxviii. 3.—^fCh. xlii. 4.—^gPs. li. 4. Rom. iii. 4.—^hCh. xxxvii. 4. Ps. xxix. 3, 4.—ⁱPs.

Verse 1. Moreover the Lord answered] That is, the Lord continued his discourse with Job. Answered does not refer to anything said by Job, or any question asked.

I think it very likely that this whole piece, from the beginning of this first verse to the end of the fourteenth, was originally the ending of the poem.

Verse 2. He that reproveth God, let him answer it.] Let the man who has made so free with God and his government, answer to what he has now heard.

Verse 4. Behold, I am vile] I acknowledge my inward defilement. I cannot answer thee.

I will lay mine hand upon my mouth.] I cannot excuse myself, and I must be dumb before thee.

Verse 5. I will proceed no further.] I shall attempt to justify myself no longer; I have spoken repeatedly; and am confounded at my want of respect for my Maker, and at the high thoughts which I have entertained of my own righteousness. All is impurity in the presence of thy Majesty.

Verse 7. Gird up thy loins] See chap. xxviii. 1-8.

Verse 8. Wilt thou condemn me] Rather than submit to be thought in the wrong, wilt thou condemn my conduct, in order to justify thyself? Some men will never acknowledge themselves in the wrong. "God may err, but we cannot," seems to be their impious maxim. There are three words most difficult to be pronounced in all languages,—I AM WRONG.

Verse 9. Hast thou an arm like God?] Every word from this to the end of ver. 14 has a wonderful tendency to humble the soul; and it is no wonder that at the conclusion of these sayings Job fell in the dust confounded, and ascribed righteousness to his Maker.

Verse 10. Deck thyself now with majesty] Act like God, seeing thou hast been assuming to thyself perfections that belong to him alone.

Verse 13. Hide them in the dust together] Blend the high and the low, the rich and the poor, in one common ruin. Show them that thou art supreme, and canst do whatsoever thou pleasest.

Bind their faces in secret.] This seems to refer to the custom of preserving mummies: the whole body is wrapped round with strong swathings of linen or cotton cloth. Not only the limbs, but the very head, face, and all, are rolled round with strong filleting, so that not one feature can be seen, not even the protuberance of the nose. On the outside of these involutions a human face is ordinarily painted; but as to the real face itself, it is emphatically bound in secret, for these rollers are never intended to be removed.

Verse 14. Thine own right hand can save thee.] It is the prerogative of God alone to save the human soul. This is most clearly asserted in this speech of Jehovah: When thou canst extend an arm like God, i. e., an uncontrollable power, 9 Hast thou an arm like God? or canst thou thunder with a voice like him?

10 Deck thyself now with majesty and excellency; and array thyself with glory and beauty.

11 Cast abroad the rage of thy wrath: and behold every one that is proud, and abase him.

12 Look on every one that is proud, and bring him low; and tread down the wicked in their place.

13 Hide them in the dust together; and bind their faces in secret.

14 Then will I also confess unto thee that thine own right hand can save thee.

15 Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox.

16 Lo now, his strength is in his loins, and his force is in the navel of his belly.

xciii. 1. civ. 1.—^aIsa. ii. 12. Dan. iv. 67.—^bOr, the elephant, as some think.

—when thou canst arm thyself with the lightning of heaven, and thunder with a voice like God,—when thou canst deck thyself with the ineffable glory, beauty, and splendour of the supreme majesty of Jehovah,—when thou canst dispense thy judgments over all the earth, to abase the proud, and tread down the wicked,—when thou canst, as having the keys of hell and death, blend the high and the low in the dust together; then I will acknowledge to thee that thy own right hand can save thee. In other words: Salvation belongeth unto the Lord; no man can save his own soul by works of righteousness which he has done, is doing, or can possibly do, to all eternity. Without Jesus every human spirit must have perished everlastingly.

Verse 15. Behold now behemoth] The word behemoth is the plural of behemah, which signifies cattle in general, or graminivorous animals, as distinguished from chayetho, all wild or carnivorous animals.

In this place it has been supposed to mean some animal of the bevee kind. The Vulgate retains the Hebrew name; so do the Syriac and Arabic. The Chaldee is indefinite, translating creature or animal. And the Septuagint is not more explicit, translating by beasts or wild beasts. From the name, therefore, or the understanding had of it by the ancient Versions, we can derive no assistance relative to the individuality of the animal in question; and can only hope to find what it is by the characteristics it bears in the description here given of it.

These, having been carefully considered and deeply investigated both by critics and naturalists, have led to the conclusion that either the elephant, or the hippopotamus or river horse, is the animal in question; and on comparing the characteristics between these two, the balance is considerably in favour of the hippopotamus. I have my doubts whether either of the animals above is that in question; and I am of the opinion that the animal here described is now extinct. The skeletons of three lost genera have actually been found out: these have been termed palæotherium, anoplotherium, and mastodon or mammoth.

The mammoth, for size, will answer the description in this place, especially ver. 19: He is the chief of the ways of God. God seems to have made it as the proof of his power; and had it been prolific, and not become extinct, it would have depopulated the earth. Creatures of this kind must have been living in the days of Job: the behemoth is referred to here, as if perfectly and commonly known. [The best critics favour the supposition that the hippopotamus is here described.]

He eateth grass as an ox] This seems to be mentioned as something remarkable in this animal: that though from the form of his teeth he must have been carnivorous, yet he ate grass as an ox; he lived both on animal and vegetable food.

17 ^a He moveth his tail like a cedar: the sinews of his stones are wrapped together.

18 His bones are as strong pieces of brass; his bones are like bars of ^b iron.

19 He is the chief of the ways of God: he that made him can make his sword to approach unto him.

20 Surely the mountains ^c bring him forth food, where all the beasts of the field play.

^a Or, He setteth up.—^b Dan. ii. 40.—^c Ps. civ. 14.—
^d Heb. he oppresseth.

Verse 16. His strength is in his loins] This refers to his great agility, notwithstanding his bulk; by the strength of his loins he was able to take vast springs, and make astonishing bounds.

Verse 17. He moveth his tail like a cedar] Therefore it was neither the elephant, who has a tail like that of the hog, nor the hippopotamus, whose tail is only about a foot long. [The word translated tail refers rather to the sinews of the thigh.]

The sinews of his stones] I translate with Mr. Good, and for the same reasons, the sinews of his haunches, which is still more characteristic; as the animal must have excelled in leaping.

Verse 18. His bones are as strong pieces of brass—bars of iron.] The task of the mammoth was uncommonly hard, solid, and weighty for its size.

Verse 19. He is the chief of the ways of God] The largest, strongest, and swiftest quadruped that God has formed.

He that made him] No power of man or beast can overcome him. God alone can overcome him, and God alone could make his sword (of extinction) approach to him.

Verse 20. The mountains bring him forth food] It cannot therefore be the hippopotamus, as he is seldom found far from the rivers where he has his chief residence. [The reference is to the herbage of the hill-slopes, which the hippopotamus eats.]

21 He lieth under the shady trees, in the cover of the reed, and fens.

22 The shady trees cover him with their shadow the willows of the brook compass him about.

23 Behold, ^d he drinketh up a river, and hasteth not: he trusteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth.

24 ^e He taketh it with his eyes: his nose pierceth through snares.

^e Or, Will any take him in his sight, or bore his nose with a gin? Ch. xii. 1, 2.

Where all the beasts of the field play.] He frequents those places where he can have most prey. He makes a mock of all the beasts of the field. They can neither resist his power, nor escape from his agility.

Verse 21. He lieth under the shady trees] This and the following verses refer to certain habits of the behemoth, with which we are and must be unacquainted.

Verse 22. The willows of the brook compass him] This would agree well enough with the hippopotamus.

Verse 23. Behold, he drinketh up a river] A similar mode of expression, and of precisely the same meaning, as that in chap. xxxix. 24. No river can stop his course: he wades through all; stems every tide and torrent; and hurries not as though he were in danger.

He trusteth that he can draw up Jordan] Even when the river overflows its banks, it is no stoppage to him: though the whole impetuosity of its stream rush against his mouth, he is not afraid.

Verse 24. He taketh it with his eyes] He looks at the sweeping tide, and defies it.

His nose pierceth through snares.] If fences of strong stakes be made in order to restrain him, or prevent him from passing certain boundaries, he tears them in pieces with his teeth; or, by pressing his nose against them, breaks them off.

CHAPTER XLII.

God's great power in the leviathan, of which creature he gives a very circumstantial description, 1-34.

CANST thou draw out ^a leviathan ^b with an hook? or his tongue with a cord ^c which thou lettest down?

2 Canst thou ^d put an hook into his nose? or bore his jaw through with a thorn?

^a That is, a whale, or a whirlpool.—^b Ps. civ. 28. Isa. xxvii. 1.—
^c Heb. which thou drawest.

Verse 1. Canst thou draw out leviathan] What is leviathan? The Hebrew word liwyathan is retained by the Vulgate and the Chaldee. The Septuagint have, "Canst thou draw out the DRAGON?" The Syriac and Arabic have the same. A species of whale has been supposed to be the creature in question; but the description suits no animal but the crocodile or alligator; and it is not necessary to seek elsewhere. The crocodile is a natural inhabitant of the Nile, and other Asiatic and African rivers. It is a creature of enormous voracity and strength, as well as fleetness in swimming. He will attack the largest animals, and even men with the most daring impetuosity. In proportion to his size he has the largest mouth of all monsters. The upper jaw is armed with forty sharp strong teeth, and the under jaw with thirty-eight. He is clothed with such a coat of mail as cannot be pierced, and can in every direction resist a musket ball. The Hebrew signifies the coupled dragon; but what this is we know not, unless the crocodile be meant.

With an hook] That crocodiles were caught with a baited hook, at least one species of crocodile, we have the testimony of Herodotus, lib. ii., c. 70; but it was undoubtedly both a difficult and dangerous work, and but barely practicable in the way in which Herodotus relates the matter.

Or his tongue with a cord] It is probable that, when the animal was taken, they had some method of casting a noose round his tongue, when opening his mouth; or piercing it with some barbed instrument.

Verse 2. Canst thou put an hook into his nose?] In the East they frequently lead the oxen and buffaloes with a ring in their noses.

Bore his jaw through with a thorn?] Some have thought that this means, Canst thou deal with him as with one of those little fish which thou strongest on a rush by means of the thorn at its end? Or perhaps it may refer to those ornaments with which they sometimes adorned their horses, mules, camels, &c.

Verse 4. Will he make a covenant] Canst thou hire him as thou wouldst a servant, who is to be so attached to thy family as to have his ear bored, that he may abide in thy house for ever? Exod. xxi. 1-6.

wilt thou bind him for thy maidens ?

6 Shall thy companions make a banquet of him ? shall they part him among the merchants ?

7 Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons ? or his head with fish spears ?

8 Lay thine hand upon him, remember the battle, do no more.

9 Behold, the hope of him is in vain : shall not one be cast down even at the sight of him ?

10 None is so fierce that dare stir him up : who then is able to stand before me ?

11 ^a Who hath prevented me, that I should repay him ? ^b whatsoever is under the whole heaven is mine.

12 I will not conceal his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion.

13 Who can discover the face of his garment ? or who can come to him ^c with his double bridle ?

14 Who can open the doors of his face ? his teeth are terrible round about.

15 His ^d scales are his pride, shut up together as with a close seal.

16 One is so near to another, that no air can come between them.

17 They are joined one to another, they stick together, that they cannot be sundered.

18 By his needings a light doth shine, and his eyes are like the eyelids of the morning.

Verse 5. Wilt thou play with him] Is he such a creature as thou canst tame; and of which thou canst make a pet, and give as a plaything to thy little girls, naarotheycha ?

Verse 6. Shall thy companions make a banquet] Canst thou and thy friends feast on him as ye were wont to do on a camel sacrificed for this purpose ? Or, canst thou dispose of his flesh to the merchants—to buyers, as thou wouldst do that of a camel or an ox ?

Verse 7. Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons ? This refers to some kind of harpoon work, similar to that employed in taking whales, and which they might use for some other kinds of animals; for the skin of the crocodile could not be pierced.

Verse 8. Lay thine hand upon him] He is a dangerous animal; when thou attackest him, be sure of thy advantage; if thou miss, thou art ruined. Depend not on other advantages, if thou miss the first. Kill him at once, or he will kill thee.

Verse 9. Behold, the hope] If thou miss thy first advantage, there is no hope afterwards: the very sight of this terrible monster would dissipate thy spirit, if thou hadst not a positive advantage against his life, or a place of sure retreat to save thine own.

Verse 10. None is so fierce that dare stir him up] The most courageous of men dare not provoke the crocodile to fight, or even attempt to rouse him, when, satiated with fish, he takes his repose among the reeds.

Who then is able] If thou canst not stand against the crocodile, one of the creatures of my hand, how canst thou resist me, who am his Maker ?

Verse 11. Who hath prevented me] Who is it that hath laid me under obligation to him ? Do I need my creatures ? All under the heavens is my property.

Verse 12. I will not conceal his parts] This is most certainly no just translation of the original. Mr. Good applies it to leviathan :—

“I cannot be confounded at his limbs and violence ;
The strength and structure of his frame.”

The Creator cannot be intimidated at the most formidable of his own works ; man may and should tremble ; GOD cannot.

Verse 13. Who can discover the face of his garment] Who can take away his covering, in order to pierce his vitals ?

Verse 14. The doors of his face] His jaws ; which are most tremendous.

Verse 15. By his needings a light doth shine] When he 20 Out of his nostrils goeth smoke, as out of a seething pot or caldron.

21 His breath kindleth coals, and a flame goeth out of his mouth.

22 In his neck remaineth strength, and ^e sorrow is turned into joy before him.

23 The flakes of his flesh are joined together : they are firm in themselves ; they cannot be moved.

24 His heart is as firm as a stone ; yea, as hard as a piece of the nether mill-stone.

25 When he raiseth up himself, the mighty are afraid : by reason of breakings they purify themselves.

26 The sword of him that layeth at him cannot hold ; the spear, the dart, nor the ^f habergeon.

27 He esteemeth iron as straw, and brass as rotten wood.

28 The arrow cannot make him flee : sling stones are turned with him into stubble.

29 Darts are counted as stubble : he laugheth at the shaking of a spear.

30 ^g Sharp stones are under him : he spreadeth sharp pointed things upon the mire.

31 He maketh the deep to boil like a pot : he maketh the sea like a pot of ointment.

sputs up the water out of his nostrils, the drops form a sort of iris or rainbow.

The eyelids of the morning] It is said that, under the water, the eyes of the crocodile are exceedingly dull ; but when he lifts his head above water they sparkle with the greatest vivacity. Hence the Egyptians, in their hieroglyphics, made the eyes of the crocodile the emblem of the morning.

Verse 19. Out of his mouth go burning lamps] The crocodile, according to naturalists, lying long under water, and being there forced to hold its breath, when it emerges, the breath long repressed is hot, and bursts out so violently, that it resembles fire and smoke.

Verse 22. In his neck remaineth strength] The head and shoulders must be here meant, as the crocodile has no neck, being shaped very nearly like a lizard.

And sorrow is turned into joy before him] “And destruction exulteth before him.” This is as fine an image as can well be conceived.

Verse 23. The flakes of his flesh] His muscles are strongly and firmly compacted.

Verse 24. Hard as a piece of the nether mill-stone] Which is required to be harder than that which runs above.

Verse 25. By reason of breakings they purify themselves] No version, either ancient or modern, appears to have understood this verse ; nor is its true sense known. [Daltaseh seems to catch the true meaning :—“From alarm they miss their aim.”]

Verse 26. Habergeon] The hauberk, the Norman armour for the head, neck, and breast, formed of rings. [Or, more likely, a kind of harpoon.]

Verse 29. Darts are counted as stubble] All these verses state that he cannot be wounded by any kind of weapon, and that he cannot be resisted by any human strength.

Verse 30. Sharp stones are under him] So hard and impenetrable are his scales, that splinters of flint are the same to him as the softest reeds.

Verse 31. He maketh the deep to boil like a pot] This is occasioned by strongly agitating the waters at or near the bottom ; and the froth which arises to the top from this agitation may have the appearance of ointment. But several travellers say that the crocodile has a very strong scent of musk, and that he even imparts this smell to the water through which he passes, and therefore the text may be taken literally.

Verse 32. He maketh a path to shine after him] In certain states of the weather a rapid motion through the water dis-engages many sparks of phosphoric fire. Whether this phenomenon takes place in fresh water or in the Nile, I have had no opportunity of observing. [The reference is undoubtedly to the white trail of foam.]

The deep to be hoary.] By the frost and foam raised by the rapid passage of the animal through the water.

Verse 33. Upon earth there is not his like! There is no creature among terrestrial animals so thoroughly dangerous, so exceedingly strong, and so difficult to be wounded or slain.

Who is made without fear.] Perhaps there is no creature selves without fear.

who is at all acquainted with man, so totally destitute of fear as the crocodile.

Verse 34. He is a king over all the children of pride.] There is no animal in the waters that does not fear and fly from him.

After all, what is leviathan? I have strong doubts whether either whale or crocodile be meant. Perhaps leviathan was some extinct mammoth of the waters, as behemoth was of the land.

CHAPTER XLII.

Job humbles himself before God, 1-6. God accepts him; censures his three friends; and commands Job to offer sacrifices for them, that he might pardon and accept them, as they had not spoken what was right concerning their Maker, 7-9. The Lord turns Job's captivity; and his friends visit him, and bring him presents, 10, 11. Job's affluence becomes double to what it was before, 12. His family is also increased, 13-15. Having lived one hundred and forty years after his calamities, he dies, 16, 17.

THEN Job answered the LORD, and said,
2 I know that thou * canst do every thing, and that ^b no thought can be withholden from thee.

3 *Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge? therefore have I uttered that I understood not; ^c things too wonderful for me, which I knew not.

4 Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak: * I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

5 I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee:

6 Wherefore I ^d abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

7 And it was so, that after the LORD had spoken these words unto Job, the LORD said to Eliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled against thee, and Verse 2. I know that thou canst do every thing] Thy power is unlimited; thy wisdom, infinite.

Verse 3. Who is he that hideth counsel] These words are a repetition of what Jehovah said, chap. xxxviii. 2. Job now having heard the Almighty's speech, and having received his reproof, echoes back his words: "Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge?" Alas, I am the man; I have uttered what I understood not; things too wonderful for me, that I knew not.

Things too wonderful] I have spoken of thy judgments, which I did not comprehend.

Verse 5. I have heard of thee] I have now such a discovery of thee as I have never had before. I have only heard of thee by tradition, or from imperfect information; now the eye of the mind clearly perceives thee; and in seeing thee, I see myself; for the light that discovers thy glory and excellence, discovers my meanness and vileness.

Verse 6. I abhor myself] Compared with thine, my strength is weakness; my wisdom, folly; and my righteousness, impurity.

Repent] Job is now sufficiently humbled at the feet of Jehovah; and having earnestly and piously prayed for instruction, the Lord in a finishing speech, which appears to be contained in the first fourteen verses of chap. xl., perfects his teaching on the subject of the late controversy, which is concluded with, "When thou canst act like the Almighty," which is, in effect, what the questions and commands amount to in the preceding verses of that chapter, "then will I also confess unto thee, that thy own right hand can save thee."

against thy two friends: for ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath.

8 Therefore take unto you now ^e seven bullocks and seven rams, and ^f go to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering; and my servant Job shall ^g pray for you: for ^h him will I accept: lest I deal with you after your folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job.

9 So Eliphaz the Temanite and Bildad the Shuhite and Zophar the Naamathite went, and did according as the LORD commanded them: the LORD also accepted ⁱ Job.

10 ^j And the LORD turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the LORD ^k gave Job ^l twice as much as he had before.

11 Then came there unto him ^m all his brethren,

Verse 7. After the Lord had spoken these words] Those recorded at chap. xl. 7-14; he said to Eliphaz, who was the eldest of the three friends, and chief speaker: Ye have not spoken of me—right.

Verse 8. Take—seven bullocks and seven rams] From this it appears that Job was considered a priest, not only in his own family, but also for others. For his children he offered burnt-offerings, chap. i. 5; and now he is to make the same kind of offerings, accompanied with intercession, in behalf of his three friends. This is a full proof of the innocence and integrity of Job: a more decided one could not be given, that the accusations of his friends, and their bitter speeches, were as untrue as they were malevolent. God thus clears his character, and confounds their devices.

Verse 10. The Lord turned the captivity of Job] There is a remark which these words suggest, which has been rarely, if at all, noticed. He had suffered much through the unkindness of these friends; they had criticised his conduct without feeling or mercy; and he had just cause to be irritated against them. God was now about to show Job his mercy: but mercy can be shown only to the merciful; Job must forgive his unfeeling friends, if he would be forgiven by the Lord: he directs him, therefore, to pray for them, ver. 8. He who can pray for another cannot entertain enmity against him: Job did so; and when he prayed for his friends, God turned the captivity of Job. "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven."

Verse 11. A piece of money] Kesitah signifies a lamb; and it is supposed that this piece of money had a lamb stamped on it, as that quantity of gold was generally the and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house : and they bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the Lord had brought upon him : every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an ear-ring of gold.

12 So the Lord blessed ^a the latter end of Job more than his beginning : for he had ^b fourteen thousand sheep, and six thousand camels, and a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she-asses.

13 ^c He had also seven sons and three daughters.

current value for a lamb. See note on Gen. xxxiii. 19, where the subject is largely considered.

Ear-ring of gold.] Literally, a nose jewel.

Verse 12. He had fourteen thousand sheep] The reader, by referring to chap. i. 3, will perceive that the whole of Job's property was exactly doubled.

Verse 13. Seven sons and three daughters.] This was the same number as before; and so the Vulgate, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic read : but the Chaldee doubles the sons, "And he had fourteen sons, and three daughters."

Verse 14. The name of the first, Jemimah] Yemimah, days upon days. [Or, if the Arabic root be chosen, a dove.]

Kezia] Ketsiah, cassia, a well-known aromatic plant. And,

Keren-happuch.] Keren happuch, the inverted or flowing horn, cornu copia, the horn of plenty. The Chaldee will not permit these names to pass without a comment, to show the reason of their imposition : "He called the first Jemimah, because she was as fair as the day; the second Ketsiah, because she was as precious as cassia; the third Keren-happuch, because her face was as splendid as the emerald."

14 And he called the name of the first, Jemima; and the name of the second, Kezia; and the name of the third, Keren-happuch.

15 And in all the land were no women found so fair as the daughters of Job: and their father gave them inheritance among their brethren.

16 After this ^d lived Job an hundred and forty years, and saw his sons, and his sons' sons, even four generations.

17 So Job died, being old and ^e full of days.

^d Ch. v. 26. Prov. iii. 16.—^e Gen. xxv. 8.

Verse 16. After this lived Job an hundred and forty years] How long he had lived before his afflictions, we cannot tell. If we could rely on the Septuagint, all would be plain, who add here, "And all the years that Job lived were two hundred and forty." This makes him one hundred years of age when his trial commenced.

Verse 17. Job died, being old and full of days.] He had seen life in all its varieties; he had risen higher than all the men of the East, and sunk lower in affliction, poverty, and distress, than any other human being that had existed before, or has lived since. He died when he was satisfied with his life; this the word seba implies. He knew the worst and the best of human life; and in himself the whole history of Providence was exemplified and illustrated, and many of its mysteries unfolded.

We have now seen the end of the life of Job, and the end or design, which God had in view by his afflictions and trials, in which he has shown us that he is very pitiful, and of tender mercy, James v. 11; and to discern this end of the Lord should be the object of every person who reads or studies it, Quis in excelsis Deo!

OF

P S A L M S.

THIS book is termed in Hebrew Sepher Tehllim, which some learned men derive from hal or halal, to move briskly, irradiate, shine; and translate, The Book of the Shining forth, Irradiations, Manifestations, or Displays, namely, of divine wisdom and love exhibited in God's dealings with his chosen people, or with particular persons, as figures, for the time being, of what should be accomplished either in the person of Christ, or in his mystical body the church. But as halal signifies also to praise, and praise arises from a sense of gratitude, is the expression of inward joy, and was often exhibited by brisk notes, sprightly music, &c., it may be well denominated The Book of Praises, as the major part of the psalms have for their subject the praises of the Lord.

The Psalms were sung in the Jewish service, and frequently accompanied by musical instruments; and hence the most ancient translation we have of the Psalms, viz., the Septuagint, as it stands in what is called the Codex Alexandrinus, is called, The Psaltery, which is a species of musical instrument resembling the harp. From this term came the Psalterium of the Vulgate, and our word Psalter, all of which are deduced from the verb $\psi\alpha\lambda\lambda\omega$, to sing, as the voice no doubt always accompanied this instrument, and by it the key was preserved and the voice sustained. A Psalm is called in Hebrew mimnor, from samar, to cut off, because in singing, each word was separated into its component syllables, each syllable answering to a note in the music.

The collection, as it now stands, was probably made long after David's death; and it is commonly believed that Ezra was the collector and compiler.

In making this collection it does not appear that any attention was paid to chronological arrangement. As Ezra was an inspired man, he could judge of the pieces which came by divine inspiration, and were proper for the general edification of the Church of God.

The only method we have of judging of the date and authorship of the Psalms is from the internal evidence afforded by them, and from the inscriptions which many of them bear. As far as time and facts are concerned, many of them can be traced to the days of David, and the transactions which then occurred, and in which he bore so eminent a part. But there are others in which we find no note of time, and no reference to the transactions of David's reign. As to the inscriptions, they are of slender authority; several of them do not agree with the subject of the Psalm to which they are prefixed, and not a few of them appear to be out of their places. According to our common version there are twenty-four psalms which have no inscription of any kind; seventy-three have the name of David prefixed; two bear Solomon's name; ten are prefixed by the name of the Sons of Korah; twelve are attributed to Asaph; one to Heman, Ethan, and Moses; and the remaining twenty-six are Hallelujah Psalms, and Songs of Degrees.

There are nine Psalms in which there is no note or indication of the time when written; seventeen seem to have been composed by David during his persecution by Saul; sixteen after Saul's death and David's elevation to the throne; eight during the rebellion of Absalom; ten belong to the period between Absalom's rebellion and the Babylonish captivity; thirty-eight were written during the captivity; and forty-nine after the Jews were permitted by the edict of Cyrus to return to their own land.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Hebrew Psalter is the most ancient collection of poems in the world; and was composed long before those in which ancient Greece and Rome have gloried. Among all the heathen nations Greece had the honour of producing not only the first, but also the most sublime, of poets: but the subjects on which they employed their talents had, in general, but little tendency to meliorate the moral condition of men. Their writings served only to render vice amiable, to honour superstition, to favour the most dangerous and most degrading passions of men, such as impure love, ambition, pride, and impiety. What is said of the Greek poets may be spoken with equal truth of their successors and imitators, the Latin poets; out of the whole of whose writings it would be difficult to extract even the common maxims of a decent morality.

The Hebrew poets, on the contrary, were men inspired of God, holy in their lives, pure in their hearts, labouring for the good of mankind; proclaiming, by their incomparable compositions, the infinite perfections, attributes, and unity of the divine nature; laying down and illustrating the purest rules of the most refined morality, and the most exalted piety. By means of these men the lamp of true religion has been lighted in the earth; and wherever there is a ray of truth among the sons of men, it is an emanation immediately taken, or indirectly borrowed, from the prophets, poets, and statesmen, of the sons of Jacob.

Some have imagined that the Book of Psalms is to be understood mystically, in reference to the Christian system; and, indeed, on this plan they have been interpreted and applied by many Fathers, both ancient and modern. To this opinion I cannot subscribe: and therefore cannot frame a commentary in this way. That several of them are quoted, both by our Lord and his apostles, we have the fullest proof, and where they have shown the way, we may safely follow.

Several of these quotations are, without doubt, directly prophetic, and were intended to announce and describe the Redeemer of the world, and the gospel state; others of them are accommodated, their own historical meaning being different; but these accommodations are made by the same Spirit by which the Psalms were originally given; who has a right to extend his own meaning, and to adapt his own words to subjects, transactions, and times, to which, from similarity of circumstances, they may be applicable. Many passages of the Old Testament seem to be thus quoted in the New; and often the words a little altered, and the meaning extended, to make them suitable to existing circumstances.

THE BOOK

OF PSALMS

PSALM I.

The blessedness of the righteous shown, in his avoiding every appearance of evil, 1. In his godly use of the law of the Lord, 2. This further pointed out under the metaphor of a good tree planted in a good well-watered soil, 3. The opposite state of the ungodly pointed out, under the metaphor of chaff driven away by the wind, 4. The miserable end of sinners, and the final happiness of the godly, 5, 6.

BLESSED ^bis the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ^cungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, ^dnor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.

2 But ^ehis delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night.

3 And he shall be like a tree ^fplanted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season :

^aLuke xx. 42. Acts i. 20.—^bProv. iv. 14, 15.—^cOr, wicked—^dPs. xxvi. 4. Jer. xv. 17.—^ePs. cxix. 35, 47, 92.—^fJosh. i. 8. Ps. cxix. 1, 97.—^gJer. xvii. 8. Ezek. xvii. 12.—^hHeb. fada.—ⁱGen.

Verse 1. Blessed is the man] The word ashrey is properly in the plural form, blessednesses; or may be considered as an exclamation, Oh, the blessednesses of the man! And the word hais, is emphatic: THAT man; that one among a thousand who lives for the accomplishment of the end for which God created him.

That walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly] 1. The UNGODLY, reshaim, from rasha, to be unjust; withholding from God, society, and himself, what belongs to each. 2. SINNERS, chattaim, from chata, "to miss the mark," "to transgress." This man not only does no good, but he does evil. 3. SCORNFUL, letsim, from latsah, "to mock, deride." He who has no religion; and turns revelation, the immortality of the soul, and the existence of an invisible world into ridicule. As the sinner exceeds the ungodly, so the scornful exceeds both.

The UNGODLY man walks, the SINNER stands, and the SCORNFUL man sits down in the way of iniquity.

The ungodly man is unconcerned about religion; he counsels and advises those with whom he converses to adopt his plan, and not trouble themselves about praying, reading, repentance, &c., &c.

The sinner has his particular way of transgressing; one is a drunkard, another dishonest, another unclean. Few are given to every species of vice.

The scornful has sat down—is utterly confirmed in impiety, and makes a mock at sin. His conscience is seared; and he is a believer in all unbelief.

He who walks according to the counsel of the ungodly will soon stand to look on the way of sinners; and at last sit down with the scorner, and endeavour to turn religion into ridicule.

The great lesson to be learned from the whole is, sin is progressive; one evil propensity or act leads to another. He who acts by bad counsel may soon do evil deeds; and he who abandons himself to evil doings, may end his life in total apostasy from God. Prov. iv. 14, 15.

As the blessedness of the man is great who avoids the ways and the workers of iniquity; so his wretchedness is great who acts on the contrary.

his leaf also shall not ^hwither; and whatsoever he doeth shall ⁱprosper.

4 The ungodly are not so: but are ^jlike the chaff which the wind driveth away.

5 Therefore the ungodly ^kshall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous.

6 For ^lthe Lord knoweth the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly shall perish.

Verse 2. But his delight is in the law of the Lord] Chepftso, his will, desire, affection, every motive in his heart, and every moving principle in his soul, are on the side of God and his truth. As his heart is in it, the employment must be frequent, and the disposition to it perpetual.

Verse 3. Like a tree planted] Not like one growing wild, but one that has been carefully cultivated; and for the proper growth of which all the advantages of soil and situation have been chosen.

By the rivers of water] Alluding to the custom of irrigation in the eastern countries, where streams are conducted from a canal or river to different parts of the ground, and turned off or on at pleasure. Deut. xi. 10.

His fruit in his season] In such a case, expectation is never disappointed. A godly education, under the influences of the Divine Spirit, which can never be withheld where they are earnestly sought, is sure to produce the fruits of righteousness.

His leaf also shall not wither] As the leaves and the fruit are the evidences of the vegetative perfection of the tree; so a zealous religious profession, accompanied with good works, are the evidences of the soundness of faith in the Christian man.

Whatsoever he doeth shall prosper] He is ever taking deeper root, growing stronger in the grace he has already received, and, under the continual influence of the Divine Spirit, forming those purposes from which much fruit to the glory and praise of God shall be produced.

Verse 4. The ungodly are not so] There is nothing solid in the men; there is nothing good in their ways. They are not of God's planting; they are not good grain; they are only chaff, and a chaff that shall be separated from the good grain when the fan or shovel of God's power throws them up to the wind of his judgments.

Verse 5. Therefore the ungodly shall not stand] This refers to the winnowing mentioned in the preceding verse. When they come to be judged, they shall be condemned. They shall have nothing to plead in their behalf.

Verse 6. The Lord knoweth] Yodea, approveth the way of the righteous, tsaddikim, from tsadak, to give even weight; the men who give to all their due; opposed to reshaim, ver. 1; they who withhold right from all; see above.

The way of the ungodly shall perish.] God's curse shall be on all that they have, do, and are. And in the day of judgment they shall be condemned to everlasting fire in the perdition of ungodly man.

PSALM II.

This psalm treats of the opposition raised, both by Jew and Gentile, against the kingdom of Christ, 1-3. Christ's victory, and the confusion of his enemies, 4-6. The promulgation of the gospel after his resurrection, 7-9. A call to all the potentates and judges of the earth to accept it, because of the destruction that shall fall on those who reject it, 10-12.

WHY do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?
2 The kings of the earth set themselves and the rulers take counsel together, against the LORD, and against his anointed, saying,
3 Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us.
4 He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh: the LORD shall have them in derision.
5 Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure.

Ps. xlv. 6. Acts iv. 25, 26.—Or, tumultuously assemble.—Heb. meditate.—Ps. xlv. 7. John i. 41.—Jer. v. 5. Luke xix. 14.—Ps. xl. 4.—Ps. xxxvii. 18. lix. 8. Prov. i. 26.—Or, trouble.—Heb. anointed.—Heb. upon Zion the hill of my holiness.—2 Sam.

Verse 1. Why do the heathen rage? It has been supposed that David composed this psalm after he had taken Jerusalem from the Jebusites, and made it the head of the kingdom; 2 Sam. v. 7-9. We find from the use made of this psalm, Acts iv. 27, that David typified Jesus Christ; and that it celebrates the victories of the gospel over the Philistine Jews, and all the confederate power of the heathen governors of the Roman empire.

The heathen, goyim, the nations; those who are commonly called the Gentiles.

Rage, rageshu; the gnashing of teeth, and tumultuously rushing together, of those indignant and cruel people, are well expressed by the sound as well as the meaning of the original word.

Verse 2. Against his anointed. This may refer first to David, as it does secondly to Christ.

Verse 3. Let us break their bands. These are the words of the confederate heathen powers; and here we may see the unwillingness of rebellious nature to submit to the obligations of divine laws, which cross the interests, and lay a restraint on the desires of men.

Verse 4. He that sitteth in the heavens. Whose kingdom is above all might and power, human and diabolical. Shall laugh. Words spoken after the manner of men; shall utterly contain their puny efforts.

Verse 6. I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion. Here the gospel shall be first preached; here the kingdom of Christ shall be founded; and from hence shall the doctrine of the Lord go out into all the earth.

Verse 7. I will declare the decree. These words are supposed to have been spoken by the Messiah. I will declare to the world the decree, the purpose of God to redeem them by my blood, and to sanctify them by my Spirit.

Thou art my son.] Made man, born of a woman by the creative energy of the Holy Ghost, that thou mightest feel and suffer for man, and be the first-born of many brethren.

This day have I begotten thee.] Thou art declared to be the Son of God. It is well known that the words, "Thou art my son; this day have I begotten thee," have been produced by many as a proof of the eternal generation of the Son of God. The word hasiyom, TO-DAY, is in no part of the sacred writings used to express eternity, or anything in reference to it; nor can it have any such signification. To-day is an absolute designation of the present, and equally excludes time past and time future; and never can, by any figure or allowable latitude of construction, 6 Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion.

7 I will declare the decree: the LORD hath said unto me, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee.

8 Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.

9 Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.

v. 7.—Or, for a decree.—Acts xiii. 23. Heb. i. 5. v. 5.—Ps. xxii. 27. lxxii. 8. lxxxix. 27. Dan. vii. 13, 14. See John xvii. 4, 5. ix. 15.

be applied to express eternity. But why then does the Divine Spirit use the word begotten in reference to the declaration of the inauguration of the Messiah to his kingdom, and his being seated at the right hand of God? Plainly to show both to Jews and Gentiles that this Man of sorrows is no less than that eternal word, who was in the beginning with God, who was God, and in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily: that this rejected Person was he for whom in the fulness of time a body was prepared, begotten by the exclusive power of the Most High in the womb of an unspotted virgin, which body he gave unto death as a sin-offering for the redemption of the world; and having raised it from death, declared it to be that miraculously-begotten son of God, and now gave further proof of this by raising the God-man to his right hand.

The word yaliditi, "I have begotten," is here taken in the sense of manifesting, exhibiting, or declaring; and to this sense of it St. Paul (Rom. i. 3, 4) evidently alludes when speaking of "Jesus Christ, who was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, and declared (exhibited or determined) to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of Holiness." This very rejected Person I this day, by raising him from the dead, and placing him at my right hand, giving to him all power in heaven and earth, declare to be my Son, the beloved one in whom I am well pleased. The Hebrew verb yalad, to beget, is frequently used in reference to inanimate things, to signify their production, or the exhibition of the things produced. In Gen. ii. 4: These are the generations, toledoth, of the heavens and the earth; this is the order in which God produced and exhibited them. [It is scarcely necessary to remind the reader that, on the doctrine of the eternal Sonship of Christ, Dr. Clark diverged widely from the teachings, not only of the Church of which he was a minister, but of the orthodox church at large. See further on Luke i. 35.]

Verse 8. Ask of me, and I shall give thee. Here a second branch of Christ's office as Saviour of the world is referred to; viz., his mediatorial office.

Verse 9. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron. This may refer to the Jewish nation. They were dispossessed of their land, their city was razed to its foundations, their temple was burnt with fire, and upwards of a million of themselves were slaughtered by the Romans!

Verse 10. Be wise—O ye kings! All these should listen to the maxims of the gospel, be governed by its precepts, and rule their subjects according to its dictates.

PSALM III.

10 Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth.

11 ^a Serve the LORD with fear, and rejoice ^b with trembling.

^a Ps. lxxxix. 23. Rev. ii. 27. xii. 5.—^b Heb. xii. 28.—^c Phil. ii. 12.—^d Gen. xii. 40. 1 Sam. x. 1. John v. 23.—^e Rev. vi. 16, 17.—

Be instructed, ye judges] Be ye reformed—cast away all your idolatrous maxims; and receive the gospel as the law, or the basis of the law, of the land.

Verse 11. Serve the Lord with fear] Fear God with that reverence which is due to his supreme majesty. Serve him as subjects should their sovereign, and as servants should their master.

Rejoice with trembling.] If ye serve God aright, ye cannot but be happy; but let a continual filial fear moderate all your joys.

Verse 12. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry] It is remarkable that the word son (bar, a Chaldee word) is not found in any of the Versions except the Syriac, nor indeed anything equivalent to it.

12 ^c Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when ^d his wrath is kindled but a little. ^e Blessed are all they that put their trust in him. ^f

^g Ps. xxxiv. 8. lxxxiv. 12. Prov. xvi. 20. Isa. xxx. 18. Jer. xvii. 7. Rom. ix. 33. x. 11. 1 Pet. ii. 6.

The Chaldee, Vulgate, Septuagint, Arabic, and Æthiopic have a term which signifies doctrine or discipline: "Embrace discipline, lest the Lord be angry with you," &c.

As all judgment is committed to the Son, the Jews and others are exhorted to submit to him, to be reconciled to him. Kissing was the token of subjection and friendship.

Is kindled but a little.] The slightest stroke of the iron rod of Christ's justice is sufficient to break in pieces a whole rebel world.

Blessed are all they] He is only the inexorable Judge to them who harden their hearts in their iniquity, and will not come unto him that they may have life.

PSALM III.

David complains, in great distress, of the number of his enemies, and the reproaches they cast on him, as one forsaken of God, 1, 2; is confident, notwithstanding, that God will be his protector, 3; mentions his prayers and supplications, and how God heard him, 4, 5; derides the impotent malice of his adversaries, and foretells their destruction, 6, 7; and ascribes salvation to God, 8.

A Psalm of David, ^a when he fled from Absalom his son.

LORD, ^b how are they increased that trouble against me! many are they that rise up

2 Many there be which say of my soul, ^c There is no help for him in God. Selah.

3 But thou, O LORD, art ^d a shield ^e for me; my glory, and ^f the lifter up of mine head.

4 I cried unto the LORD with my voice, and ^g he heard me out of his ^h holy hill. Selah.

This is said to be A Psalm of David when he fled from Absalom his son. See 2 Sam. xv. 1, &c. And David is supposed to have composed it when obliged to leave Jerusalem, passing by the mount of Olives, weeping with his clothes rent, and with dust upon his head.

Verse 1. Lord, how are they increased that trouble me] We are told that the hearts of all Israel went after Absalom, 2 Sam. xv. 18; and David is astonished to find such a sudden and general revolt. How publicly does God take vengeance for the sins which David committed so privately!

Verse 2. No help for him in God.] These were some of the reproaches of his enemies, Shimei and others. These reproaches deeply affected his heart; and he mentions them with that note which so frequently occurs in the Psalms, and which occurs here for the first time, selah. The Septuagint always translate it by diapsalma, "a pause in the psalm." The Chaldee sometimes translates it by lealmin, "for ever." The rest of the Versions leave it unnoticed. It either comes from sal, to raise or elevate, and may denote a particular elevation in the voice of the performers, which is observable in the Jewish singing to the present day; or it may come from salah, to strew or spread out, intimating that the subject to which the word is attached should be spread out, meditated on, and attentively considered by the reader. [It refers probably to the musical accompaniment.]

Verse 3. Thou, O Lord, art a shield] As a shield covers and defends the body from the strokes of an adversary, so wilt thou cover and defend me from them that rise up against me.

5 ⁱ I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the LORD sustained me.

6 ^j I will not be afraid of ten thousands of people, that have set themselves against me round about.

7 Arise, O LORD; save me, O my God: ^k for thou hast smitten all mine enemies upon the cheek bone; thou hast broken the teeth of the ungodly.

8 ^l Salvation belongeth unto the LORD: thy blessing is upon thy people. Selah.

The lifter up of mine head.] Thou wilt restore me to the state from which my enemies have cast me down. This he speaks prophetically.

Verse 4. I cried unto the Lord with my voice] He was exposed to much danger, and therefore he had need of fervour.

He heard me] God never forsakes those who trust in him. He never shuts out the prayer of the distressed.

Verse 5. I laid me down and slept] He who knows that he has God for his Protector may go quietly and confidently to his bed, without fear.

Verse 6. I will not be afraid of ten thousands] Strength and numbers are nothing against the Omnipotence of God.

Verse 7. Arise, O Lord] Though he knew that God had undertaken his defence, yet he knew that his continued protection depended on his continued prayer and faith. God never ceases to help as long as we pray.

Thou hast smitten] That is, Thou wilt smite. He speaks in full confidence of God's interference; and knows as surely that he shall have the victory, as if he had it already. Breaking the jaws and the teeth are expressions which imply, confounding and destroying an adversary; treating him with extreme contempt; using him like a dog &c.

Verse 8. Salvation belongeth unto the Lord] It is God alone who saves. He is the fountain whence help and salvation come; and to him alone the praise of all saved souls is due.

P S A L M I V.

David prays to be heard, 1; expostulates with the ungodly, 2; exhorts them to turn to God, and make their peace with him, 3-5; shows the vain pursuits of men in search of happiness, which, he asserts, exists only in the approbation of God, 6, 7; commends himself to the Lord; and then quietly takes his repose, 8.

To the *chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm of David.

HEAR me when I call, O God of my righteousness: thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress; ^b have mercy upon me and hear my prayer.

2 O ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into shame? how long will ye love vanity, and seek after leasing? Selah.

3 But know that the ^c LORD hath set apart him that is godly for himself: the LORD will hear when I call unto him.

4 ^d Stand in awe, and sin not: ^e commune with 5 Offer ^f the sacrifices of righteousness, and ^g put your trust in the LORD.

6 There be many that say, Who will shew us any good? ^h LORD, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.

7 Thou hast put ⁱ gladness in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased.

8 ^j I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: ^k for thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety.

This psalm seems to have been composed on the same occasion with the preceding, viz., Absalom's rebellion. It appears to have been an evening hymn, sung by David and his company previously to their going to rest. It is inscribed to the chief Musician upon Neginoth. Probably the first word comes from natsach, to be over or preside; and may refer to the precentor in the choir. Neginoth seems to come from nagan, to strike; and probably may signify some such instruments as the cymbal, drum, &c., and stringed instruments in general.

Verse 1. Hear me when I call] No man has a right to expect God to hear him if he do not call. Indeed, how shall he be heard if he speak not?

God of my righteousness] Whatever pardon, peace, holiness, or truth I possess, has come entirely from thyself.

Thou hast enlarged me] I was in prison; and thou hast brought me forth abroad. Have mercy on me—continue to act in the same way.

Verse 2. O ye sons of men] Ye powerful men—ye who are now at the head of affairs, or who are leaders of the multitude.

Love vanity] The poor empty, shallow-brained, pretty-faced Absalom; whose prospects are all vain, and whose promises are all empty!

Seek after leasing] This is a Saxon word, signifying false-^{[hood.} Verse 3. The Lord hath set apart him that is godly] Chasid, the pious, benevolent man. He has marked such, and put them aside as his own property.

Verse 4. Stand in awe, and sin not] The Septuagint, copied Eph. iv. 26, translate this clause, Be ye angry, and sin not. The Vulgate, Syriac, Ethiopic, and Arabic, give the same reading; and thus the original rigzu might be translated: If ye be angry, and if ye think ye have cause to be angry; do not let your disaffection carry you to acts of rebellion against both God and your king. Do nothing rashly; sleep on the business; converse with your own heart upon your bed; consult your pillow.

And be still.] “And be dumb.” Hold your peace; fear lest ye be found fighting against God.

Verse 5. Offer the sacrifices of righteousness] Turn to God from whom you have revolted; and offer to him a righteous sacrifice, such as the law prescribes, and such as he can receive. No sacrifice—no performance of religious duty, will avail any man, if his heart be not right with God.

Verse 6. Who will shew us any good?] The word any is not in the text, nor any thing equivalent to it: and the place is sufficiently emphatic without it. There are multitudes who say, Who will shew us good? But men look for a good that is to gratify their passions; they have no notion of any happiness that does not come to them through the medium of their senses.

Lift thou up the light of thy countenance] This alone, the light of thy countenance—thy peace and approbation, constitute the supreme good. This is what we want, wish, and pray for. The first is the wish of the worldling, the latter the wish of the godly.

Verse 7. Thou hast put gladness in my heart] Thou hast given my soul what it wanted and wished for. I have peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost; such inward happiness as they cannot boast who have got the highest increase of corn and wine; those two things in the abundance of which many suppose happiness to be found.

Verse 8. I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep] Most men lie down, and most sleep, daily, for without rest and sleep life could not be preserved; but alas! how few lie down in peace! peace with their own consciences, and peace with God! David had then two great blessings, rest by sleep, and peace in his soul. He had a happy soul; and when he lay down on his bed, his body soon enjoyed its repose, as the conscience was in peace. And he had a third blessing, a confidence that he should sleep in safety. And it was so.

P S A L M V.

David continues instant in prayer, 1, 2; makes early application to God, 3; and shows the hatred which God bears to the workers of iniquity, 4-6. His determination to worship God, and to implore direction and support, 7, 8. He points out the wickedness of his enemies, 9, and the destruction they may expect, 10; and then shows the happiness of those who trust in the Lord, 11, 12.

To the chief Musician upon Nehiloth, A Psalm of David.

GIVE ear to my words, O LORD, consider my meditation.

2 Hearken unto the voice of my cry, my King, and my God: for unto thee will I pray.

3 My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O LORD; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up.

4 For thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness: neither shall evil dwell with thee.

5 The foolish shall not stand in thy sight: thou hastest all workers of iniquity.

6 Thou shalt destroy them that speak leasing: the LORD will abhor the bloody and deceitful man.

7 But as for me, I will come into thy house in the multitude of thy mercy: and in thy fear will I worship toward thy holy temple.

8 Lead me, O LORD, in thy righteousness because of mine enemies; make thy way straight before my face.

9 For there is no faithfulness in their mouth; their inward part is very wickedness: their throat is an open sepulchre; they flatter with their tongue.

10 Destroy thou them, O God; let them fall by their own counsels; cast them out in the multitude of their transgressions; for they have rebelled against thee.

11 But let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice: let them ever shout for joy, because thou defendest them: let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee.

12 For thou, LORD, wilt bless the righteous; with favour wilt thou compass him as with a shield.

Verse 6. That speak leasing] See on Ps. iv. 2.

The Lord will abhor the bloody and deceitful man.] The man of bloods; for he who has the spirit of a murderer, will rarely end with one blood-shedding.

Verse 7. In the multitude of thy mercy] David considered it an inexpressible privilege to be permitted to attend public worship; and he knew that it was only through the multitude of God's mercy that he, or any man else, could enjoy such a privilege. He knew further that, from the multitude of this mercy, he might receive innumerable blessings in his house. In this spirit, and with this dependence, he went to the house of the Lord. He who takes David's views of this subject will never, willingly, be absent from the means of grace.

In thy fear] Duly considering the infinite holiness of thy majesty, will I bow and prostrate myself, in the deepest self-abasement and humility.

Toward thy holy temple.] If David was the author of this psalm, as is generally agreed, the temple was not built at this time. But temple here may signify the holy of holies, before which David might prostrate himself while in the house, i. e., the court of the tabernacle. Even in the house of God, there is the temple of God; the place where the Divine Shechinah dwells. God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself. In him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. In all ages and dispensations, Jesus was ever the temple where the Supreme Deity was met with and worshipped. The human nature of Jesus was the real temple of the Deity. Nowhere else can God be found.

Verse 8. Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness] We need God, not only to bring us to his house, but to keep our feet while we are there.

Because of mine enemies] His conduct was marked; his enemies looked upon and watched him with an evil eye. Oh, how cautiously should those walk who make a profession of living to God, of knowing themselves to be in his favour, and of being delivered from all sin in this life!

Make thy way straight] Show me that I must go right on; and let thy light always shine on my path, that I may see how to proceed.

Verse 9. No faithfulness in their mouth] They make professions of friendship; but all is hollow and deceitful.

Very wickedness] Their heart is full of all kinds of depravity.

Their throat is an open sepulchre] It is continually gaping for the dead; and sends forth effluvia destructive to the living.

Verse 10. Destroy thou them, O God] All these apparently imprecatory declarations should be translated in the future tense, to which they belong; and which shows them to be prophetic.

Verse 11. Let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice] Such expressions as these should be translated in the same way, declaratively and prophetically.

Verse 12. For thou, Lord, wilt bless the righteous] A

This psalm is inscribed to the chief Musician upon Nehiloth. Nehiloth, from chal, to be hollow, to bore through, may signify any kind of wind instruments, such as the horn, trumpet, flute, &c.

Verse 1. Give ear to my words] This is properly a morning hymn, as the preceding was an evening hymn.

Verse 2. Hearken unto the voice of my cry] We may easily find the process through which David's mind was now passing: 1. We have seen from the preceding psalm that he lay down in a very happy frame of mind, and that he had enjoyed profound repose. 2. As soon as he awakes in the morning, his heart, having a right direction, resumes its work. 3. He meditates on God's goodness; and on his own happy state, though pursued by enemies, and only safe as long as God preserved him by an almighty hand and special providence. 4. This shows him the need he has of the continual protection of the Most High; and therefore he begins to form his meditation and the desires of his heart into words, to which he entreats the Lord to give ear. 5. As he was accustomed to have answers to his prayers, he feels the necessity of being importunate, and therefore lifts up his voice. 6. Seeing the workers of iniquity, liars, and blood-thirsty men strong to accomplish their own purposes in the destruction of the godly, he becomes greatly in earnest, and cries unto the Lord: "Hearken unto the voice of my cry." 7. He knows that, in order to have a right answer, he must have a proper disposition of mind. He feels his subjection to the supreme authority of the Most High, and is ready to do his will and obey his law; therefore he prays to God as his King: "Hearken, my King, and my God." 8. Knowing the necessity and success of prayer, he purposes to continue in the spirit and practice of it: "Unto thee will I pray."

Verse 3. My voice shalt thou hear in the morning] He finds it good to begin the day with God; to let divine things occupy the first place in his waking thoughts; as that which first occupies the mind on awaking is most likely to keep possession of the heart all the day through.

In the morning will I direct my prayer] Here seems to be a metaphor taken from an archer. Prayers that have a right aim, will have a prompt answer: and he who sends up his petitions to God through Christ, from a warm, affectionate heart, may confidently look up for an answer, for it will come. If an immediate answer be not given, let not the upright heart suppose that the prayer is not heard. It has found its way to the throne; and there it is registered.

Verse 4. Neither shall evil dwell with thee.] As thou art holy, so thou hast pleasure only in holiness; and as to evil men, they shall never enter into thy glory; "the evil man shall not even sojourn with thee."

Verse 5. Thou hastest all workers of iniquity.] Some sin now and then, others generally; some constantly, and some labour in it with all their might. These are the workers of iniquity. Such even the God of infinite love and mercy hates. Alas! what a portion have the workers of iniquity! the hatred of God Almighty!

PSALMS.

righteous soul is a peculiar object of God's affectionate regards; and therefore will be a subject of continual blessing.

With favour] Like a shield, thy favour will crown him. God loves such; and this love is their defence. He who abides in this love need not fear the face of any adversary.

PSALM VI.

This psalm contains a deprecation of eternal vengeance, 1; a petition to God for mercy, 2. This is enforced from a consideration of the Psalmist's sufferings, 3; from that of the divine mercy, 4; from that of the praise and glory which God should fail to receive if man were destroyed, 5; from that of his humiliation and contrition, 6, 7. Being successful in his supplication, he exults in God, 8, 9; and predicts the downfall of all his enemies, 10.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth upon Sheminith, A Psalm of David.

O LORD, rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

2 Have mercy upon me, O LORD, for I am weak: O LORD, heal me; for my bones are vexed.

3 My soul is also sore vexed: but thou, O LORD, how long?

4 Return, O LORD, deliver my soul: oh save me for thy mercies' sake.

5 For in death there is no remembrance of thee:

*Or, upon the eighth. See 1 Chron. xv. 21.—^bPs. xii. title.—^cPs. xxxviii. 1. Jer. x. 24. xlvii. 28.—^dPs. xli. 4.—^eHos. vi. 1.—^fPs. xc. 18.—^gPs. xxx. 9. lxxxviii. 11. cxv. 17. cxviii. 17. Isa. xxxviii. 18.—

We have already seen that neginoth probably signifies all instruments which emitted sounds by strokes, or stringed instruments in general. This psalm was to be accompanied with such instruments; but one of a particular kind is specified, viz., sheminith, so called from its having eight strings.

Verse 1. O Lord, rebuke me not] This, which is one of the seven penitential psalms, is supposed to have been written during some grievous disease with which David was afflicted after his transgression with Bath-sheba. It argues a deep consciousness of sin, and apprehension of the just displeasure of God.

Verse 2. Have mercy] I have no merit. I deserve all I feel and all I fear.

O Lord, heal me] No earthly physician can cure my malady. Body and soul are both diseased, and only God can help me.

I am weak] I am exceedingly weak; I cannot take nourishment, and my strength is exhausted.

My bones are vexed] The disease hath entered into my bones.

Verse 3. How long?] How long will it be before thou speak peace to my troubled heart?

in the grave who shall give thee thanks?

6 I am weary with my groaning; all the night make I my bed to swim; I water my couch with my tears.

7 Mine eye is consumed because of grief; it waxeth old because of all mine enemies.

8 Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity; for the LORD hath heard the voice of my weeping.

9 The LORD hath heard my supplication; the LORD will receive my prayer.

10 Let all mine enemies be ashamed and sore vexed: let them return and be ashamed suddenly.

^bOr, every night.—^cJob xvii. 7. Ps. xxxi. 9. xxxviii. 10. lxxxviii. 9. Lam. v. 17.—^dPs. cxix. 115. Mat. vii. 28. xxv. 41. Luke xiii. 27.—^ePs. iii. 4.

Verse 4. Return, O Lord] Once I had the light of thy countenance; by sin I have forfeited this; I have provoked thee to depart: O Lord, return!

Verse 6. In death there is no remembrance of thee] Man is to glorify thee on earth. A dead body in the grave can do no good to men, nor bring any glory to thy name!

Verse 7. Mine eye is consumed] Is blasted, withered, sunk in my head.

Verse 8. Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity] It seems that while he was suffering grievously through the disease, his enemies had insulted and mocked him;—upbraided him with his transgressions, not to increase his penitence, but to cast him into despair.

The Lord hath heard the voice of my weeping] The Lord pitifully beheld the sorrows of his heart, and mercifully forgave his sins.

Verse 10. Ashamed and sore vexed] May they as deeply deplore their transgressions as I have done mine! May they return; may they be suddenly converted! The original will bear this meaning, and it is the most congenial to Christian principles.

PSALM VII.

The Psalmist prays against the malice of his enemies, 1, 2; protests his own innocence, 3-5; prays to God that he would vindicate him, for the edification of his people, 6-8; prays against the wickedness of his enemies, 9; expresses strong confidence in God, 10; threatens transgressors with God's judgments, 11-13; shows the conduct and end of the ungodly, 14-16; and exults in the mercy and loving-kindness of his Maker, 17.

The word shiggaion comes from shagah, to wander, a wandering song ; i. e., a Psalm composed by David in his wanderings, when he was obliged to hide himself from the fury of Saul. [Others derive it from a root which signifies to extol : De Wette translates it a lamentation.]

As to Cush the Benjamite, he is a person unknown in the Jewish history ; the name is probably a name of disguise ; and by it he may covertly mean Saul himself, the son of Kish, who was of the tribe of Benjamin.

Verse 1. O Lord my God] God in covenant with thy creature man ; and my God and portion particularly. Therefore, I repose all my confidence in thee, and expect all my good from thee.

Deliver me] From the counsels which they have devised, and from the snares and gins they have laid in my path.

Verse 2. Lest he tear my soul like a lion] These words seem to answer well to Saul. As the lion is king in the forest ; so was Saul king over the land. As the lion, in his fierceness, seizes at once, and tears his prey in pieces ; so David expected to be seized and suddenly destroyed by Saul. As from the power of the lion no beast in the forest could deliver any thing ; so David knew that Saul's power was irresistible, and that none of his friends or well-wishers could save or deliver him out of such hands.

Verse 3. If I have done this] David was accused by Saul of affecting the kingdom ; and of waiting for an opportunity to take away the life of his king, his patron, and his friend. In his application to God he refers to these charges ; clears himself of them by a strong appeal to his Judge ; and an imprecation that, if he had meditated or designed any such thing, he might meet with nothing but curse and calamity either from God or man.

Verse 4. Yea, I have delivered him] When thou didst put his life in my hands in the cave, I contented myself with cutting off his skirt ; and yet even for this my heart smote me, because it appeared to be an indignity offered to him who was the Lord's anointed.

Verse 5. Let the enemy persecute my soul] If I have been guilty of the things laid to my charge, let the worst evils fall upon me.

Verse 6. Arise, O Lord, in thine anger] To thee I commit my cause ; arise, and sit on the throne of thy judgment in my behalf.

Verse 7. For their sakes therefore return thou on high.] Thy own people who compass thy altar, the faithful of the land, are full of gloomy apprehensions. For their sakes, return thou on high—ascend the judgment-seat ; and let them see, by the dispensations of thy providence, who is innocent and who is guilty.

Verse 8. The Lord shall judge the people] He will execute justice and maintain truth among them.

Verse 9. The wickedness of the wicked] The iniquity of Saul's conduct.

But establish the just] Show the people my uprightness.

Verse 10. My defence is of God] I have no uneasy or fearful apprehensions, because I know God will save the upright in heart.

Verse 11. God is angry with the wicked every day.] The Hebrew should be rendered : And God is angry every day. The Chaldee reads : In strength he is angry against the wicked every day."

The VULGATE : " Will he be angry every day ?"

The SEPTUAGINT : " Not bringing forth his anger every day."

The mass of evidence supports the latter reading.

Verse 12. If he turn not] Some contend that the two verses should be read in connexion, thus : " God is a just Judge ; a God who is provoked every day. If (the sinner) turn not, he will whet his sword ; he hath bent his bow, and made it ready."

Verse 13. He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death] This appears to be all a prophecy of the tragical death of Saul. He was wounded by the arrows of the Philistines ; and his own keen sword, on which he fell, terminated his woful days !

Verse 14. He travaileth with iniquity] All these terms show the pitch of envy, wrath, and malevolence, to which Saul had carried his opposition against David.

Verse 15. He made a pit] The metaphor is taken from pits dug in the earth, and slightly covered over with reeds, &c., so as not to be discerned from the solid ground ; but the animal steps on them, the surface breaks, and he falls into the pit, and is taken.

Verse 16. Shall come down upon his own pate.] Upon his scalp, the top of the head. It may refer to knocking the criminal on the head, in order to deprive him of life.

Verse 17. I will praise the Lord according to his righteousness.] I shall celebrate both his justice and his mercy. I will sing praise to the name of the Lord Most High. The name of God is often put for his perfections.

PSALM VIII.

The glory and excellence of God manifested by his works, 1, 2; particularly in the starry heavens, 3; in man, 4; in his formation, 5; and in the dominion which God has given him over the earth, the air, the sea, and their inhabitants, 6, 7, 8; in consequence of which God's name is celebrated over all the earth, 9.

To the chief Musician upon Gittith, A Psalm of David.

O LORD our LORD how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens.

2 Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger.

3 When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained;

4 What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?

* Ps. lxxxvi. lxxxvii. title.—Ps. cxlviii. 13.—Ps. cxlii. 4.—^d See Mat. xi. 25. xxi. 16. 1 Cor. i. 27.—^e Heb. founded.—^f Ps. xlii. 16.—^g Ps. cxi. 2.—^h Job. vii. 17. Ps. cxliv. 8. Heb. ii. 6.—Gen. i.

The inscription has been metaphrased, "To the conqueror, concerning the wine-presses;" and has been supposed to be a psalm intended for the time of vintage. The Chaldee gives it a different turn: "A Psalm of David, to be sung upon the harp, which he brought out of Gath." [Some refer Gittith to the Levitical minstrels.] That the psalm has respect to our Lord and the time of the gospel, is evident from the reference made to ver. 2 in Matt. xi. 25, the express quotation of it in Matt. xxi. 16, and another reference to it in 1 Cor. i. 27. The fourth and sixth verses are quoted Heb. ii. 6-9. See also 1 Cor. xv. 27, and Eph. i. 22.

Verse 1. O Lord our Lord] O Jehovah our Prop, our Stay or Support. Adonai is frequently used for the word Jehovah itself. The root dan signifies to direct, rule, judge, support. So Adonai is the Director, Ruler, Judge, Supporter of men. It is well joined with Jehovah; this showing what God is in himself; that, what God is to man; and may here very properly refer to our Lord Jesus.

How excellent is thy name in all the earth!] How illustrious is the name of Jesus throughout the world! No name is so universal, no power and influence so generally felt, as those of the Saviour of mankind.

Thy glory above the heavens.] The heavens are the most glorious of all the works of God which the eye of man can reach; but the glory of God is infinitely above even these. The words also seem to intimate that no power, earthly or diabolical, can lessen or injure that glory. This has been applied by some to the resurrection of our Lord.

Verse 2. Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings] Our Lord applied this passage to the Jewish children; Matt. xxi. 16. And as the psalm wholly concerns Jesus Christ, it is most probable that in this act of the Jewish children the prophecy had its primary fulfilment.

The words may also be applied to the apostles and primitive preachers of the gospel; to the simple and comparatively unlearned followers of Christ, who, through his teaching, were able to confound the wise among the Jews, and the mighty among the heathen; and in this sense our Lord uses the term babes, Matt. xi. 25.

We may also witness, in the experience of multitudes of simple people who have been, by the preaching of the gospel, converted from the error of their ways, such a strength of testimony in favour of the work of God in the heart, and his effectual teaching in the mind, as is calculated to still, or reduce to silence, every thing but bigotry and prejudice, neither of which has either eyes or ears. This teaching, and these changing or converting influences, come from God.

Verse 3. When I consider thy heavens] He had often seen the heavens with astonishment, and he purposes to make them frequent subjects of contemplation; and he could not behold them without being affected with the skill, contrivance, and power manifested in their formation.

The work of thy fingers] What a view does this give of the majesty of God! The planet Uranus is eighty times and a half greater than the earth; Saturn, nine hundred and ninety-five times greater; Jupiter, one thousand two hundred and eighty-one times greater; and the sun, the most prodigious body in the system, one million three hundred and eighty-four thousand, four hundred and sixty-two times greater. The immense volume (in cubic miles) which the solar surface includes amounts to the following most inconceivable quantity: 366,252,303,118,866,128. Notwithstanding the amazing magnitude of the sun, we have abundant reason to believe that some of the fixed stars are much larger; and yet we are told they are the work of God's fingers: What a hand, to move, form, and launch these globes! This expression is much more sublime than even that of the prophet: Isaiah xl. 12.

The moon and the stars] The sun is not mentioned, because the heavens—the moon, planets, and stars, could not have appeared, had he been present.

Which thou hast ordained] Made their respective spheres, and fitted them for their places. Space to matter, and matter to space; all adjusted in number, weight, and measure.

Verse 4. What is man] What is wretched miserable man (enosh); man in his fallen state, full of infirmity, ignorance, and sin?

That thou art mindful of him?] That thou settest thy heart upon him, keepest him continually in thy merciful view.

And the son of man] The son of Adam, the first great rebel; the fallen child of a fallen parent. Some think eminent men are here intended. What is man in common; what the most eminent men; that thou shouldst be mindful of them, or deign to visit them?

That thou visitest him?] By sending thy Holy Spirit to convince him of sin, righteousness, and judgment. Were God to withhold them, there would be nothing in the soul of man but sin, darkness, hardness, corruption, and death.

Verse 5. Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels] The original is certainly very emphatic: Thou hast lessened him for a little time from God. Or, Thou hast made him less than God for a little time. See the notes on Heb. ii. 6, &c.

Verse 6. Thou madest him to have dominion] Jesus Christ, who, being in the form of God, and equal with God, for a time emptied himself, and made himself of no reputation; was afterwards highly exalted, and had a name above every name.

Thou hast put all things under his feet] Though the whole of the brute creation was made subject to Adam in his state of innocence; yet it could never be literally said of him, that God had put all things under his feet, or that he had dominion over the work of God's hands; but all this is most literally true of our Lord Jesus; and to him the apostle, Heb. ii. 6, &c., applies all these passages.

Verse 7. All sheep and oxen] All domestic animals, and those to be employed in agriculture.

Beasts of the field] All wild beasts and inhabitants of the forest.

Verse 8. The fowl of the air] The Psalmist most obviously refers to Gen. ix. 2.

Verse 9. O Lord our Lord] The Psalmist concludes as he began. Jehovah, our Prop and Support! his name is excellent in all the earth.

PSALM IX.

David praises God for the benefits which he has granted to Israel in general, and to himself in particular, 1-6. He encourages himself in the Lord, knowing that he will ever judge righteously, and be a refuge for the distressed, 7-10. He exhorts the people to praise God for his judgments, 11, 12; prays for mercy and support; and thanks God for his judgments executed upon the heathen, 13-16. He foretels the destruction of the ungodly, 17; prays for the poor and needy, and against their oppressors, 18-20.

To the chief Musician upon Muth-labben, A Psalm of David.

I WILL praise thee, O LORD, with my whole heart; I will shew forth all thy marvellous works.

2 I will be glad and rejoice in thee: I will sing praise to thy name, O thou most High.

3 When mine enemies are turned back, they shall fall and perish at thy presence.

4 For thou hast maintained my right and my cause: thou satest in the throne judging right.

5 Thou hast rebuked the heathen, thou hast destroyed the wicked, thou hast put out their name for ever and ever.

6 O thou enemy, destructions are come to a perpetual end: and thou hast destroyed cities: their memorial is perished with them.

7 But the LORD shall endure for ever: he hath prepared his throne for judgment.

8 And he shall judge the world in righteousness, he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness.

9 The LORD also will be a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in times of trouble.

To the chief Musician upon Muth-labben. Both the title and the psalm have been so variously understood, that it would be painful as it would be useless to follow the different commentators through all their conjectures.

Verse 1. I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart. And it is only when the whole heart is employed in the work that God can look upon it with acceptance.

I will shew forth. "I will number out, or reckon up;" a very difficult task, "thy miracles;" supernatural interventions of thy power and goodness. He whose eye is attentive to the operation of God's hand will find many of these.

Verse 2. I will be glad and rejoice in thee. I am glad that thou hast heard my prayer, and showed me mercy; and I will rejoice in thee, in having thee as my portion, dwelling and working in my heart.

Verse 3. When mine enemies are turned back. It is a sure sign of a nearly approaching complete conquest over sin, when, by resistance to its influences, it begins to lose its power. That is the time to follow on to know the Lord.

Verse 5. Thou hast rebuked the heathen. This refers to the Canaanitish nations, which God destroyed from off the face of the earth. Here clam has its proper signification, without end. He who contends it means only a limited time, let him tell us where the Hivites, Perizzites, Jebusites, &c., now dwell; and when it is likely they are to be restored to Canaan.

Verse 6. Destructions are come to a perpetual end. Rather, "The enemy is desolated for ever; for thou hast destroyed their cities, and their memory is perished with them."

Verse 7. But the Lord shall endure. All things shall have an end but God and holy spirits.

Verse 8. He shall judge the world in righteousness. All the dispensations of God's providence are founded in righteousness and truth.

Verse 9. A refuge. Misgab, a high place, where their enemies can neither reach nor see them.

10 And they that know thy name will put their trust in thee: for thou, LORD, hast not forsaken them that seek thee.

11 Sing praises to the LORD, which dwelleth in Zion: declare among the people his doings.

12 When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the humble.

13 Have mercy upon me, O LORD; consider my trouble which I suffer of them that hate me, thou that liftest me up from the gates of death:

14 That I may shew forth all thy praise in the gates of the daughter of Zion: I will rejoice in thy salvation.

15 The heathen are sunk down in the pit that they made: in the net which they hid is their own foot taken.

16 The LORD is known by the judgment which he executeth: the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. Higgaion. Selah.

17 The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God.

Verse 10. They that know thy name. Who have an experimental acquaintance with thy mercy.

Verse 11. Declare among the people his doings. It is the duty of all those who have received the salvation of God, to recommend him and his salvation to the whole circle of their acquaintance.

Verse 12. When he maketh inquisition for blood. This applies to all nations, who, to enlarge their territory, increase their wealth, or extend their commerce, have made destructive wars. If man should make no inquisition for this iniquitously spilt blood, God will do it.

Verse 13. Have mercy upon me, O Lord. David, having laid down the preceding maxims, now claims his part in their truth. I also am in trouble through the unjust dealings of my enemies; I am brought to the gates of death; have mercy on me, and lift me up, that, being saved from the gates of death, I may shew forth thy praise in the gates of the daughter of Zion.

Verse 16. The Lord is known by the judgment. It is not every casualty that can properly be called a judgment of God. Judgment is his strange work; but when he executes it, his hand is plainly to be seen.

The wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. He is continually doing himself harm, and takes more pains to destroy his soul than the righteous man does to get his saved unto eternal life.

Verse 17. The wicked shall be turned into hell. Headlong into hell, down into hell. The original is very emphatic.

Verse 18. The needy shall not always be forgotten. Though sometimes their deliverance is delayed for the greater confusion of their enemies, the greater manifestation of God's mercy, and the greater benefit to themselves.

Verse 19. Arise, O Lord. Let this be the time in which thou wilt deliver thy poor people under oppression and persecution.

* the expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever.
19 Arise, O LORD; let not man prevail: let the heathen be judged in thy sight.

Verse 20. Put them in fear] O Lord, place a teacher among them," that they may know they also are accountable creatures, grow wise unto salvation, and be prepared for a state of blessedness.

20 Put them in fear, O LORD: that the nations may know themselves to be but men. Selah.

18. xxiv. 14.

That the nations may know themselves to be but men.] Let the Gentiles be taught by the preaching of thy gospel that they are weak and helpless, and stand in need of the salvation which Christ has provided for them.

PSALM X.

The Psalmist complains to God of the oppressions which the poor suffer from the wicked man, whom he describes as the hater of the poor, 1, 2; proud, 3; one who will not seek God, 4; and is regardless of his judgments, 5; self-confident, 6; blasphemous and deceitful, 7; strives by subtlety and treachery to destroy the poor, 8-10; and supposes that God is regardless of his conduct, 11. The Psalmist calls earnestly on God to preserve the poor and humble, and cast down the oppressor, 12-15. He foresees that his prayer is heard, that judgment will be executed, and the poor delivered, 16-18.

WHY standest thou afar off, O LORD? why hidest thou thyself in times of trouble?
2 * The wicked in his pride doth persecute the poor: ^b let them be taken in the devices that they have imagined.
3 For the wicked ^c boasteth of his ^d heart's desire, and ^e blesseth 'the covetous, whom the LORD abhorreth.
4 The wicked, through the pride of his countenance, ^f will not seek after God: ^g God is not in all his ^h thoughts.
5 His ways are always grievous: ⁱ thy judgments are far above out of his sight: as for all his enemies, ^k he puffeth at them.

Verse 1. Why standest thou afar off, O Lord?] This psalm seems to belong to the time of the captivity, or the return of the captives. It was probably made in reference to Sanballat, and the other enemies of the Jews. There is a great similarity between this and Psalms xiii., xiv., xxv., and liii.
Verse 2. The wicked in his pride] The devil hates godliness; and the wicked man hates it also, because the devil is in his heart.
Verse 3. Boasteth of his heart's desire] This shows the excess of a depraved and embroiled spirit. He who can boast of his iniquity, is in the broad road to perdition.
Verse 4. Blesseth the covetous, whom the Lord abhorreth.] Or, He blesseth the covetous, he abhorreth the Lord. Those who are like himself he commends, and with them he associates.
Verse 5. Will not seek after God] He is too proud to bend his knee before his Judge; he is too haughty to put on sackcloth, and lay himself in the dust.
Verse 6. His ways are always grievous] Or, He is travelling in pain to bring forth iniquity at all times. He is full of lust, or irregular and unholy desires; he conceives, and brings forth sin; and sin being finished, time, place, and opportunity concurring, death is soon brought forth.
Verse 7. Thy judgments are far above out of his sight] He is so blinded with sin, that he cannot see the operation of God's hand.
Verse 8. He puffeth at them.] He whistles at them; insults God,

8 He sitteth in the lurking-places of the villages: ^a in the secret places doth he murder the innocent: ^b his eyes are ^c privily set against the poor.
9 He ^d lieth in wait ^e secretly as a lion in his den: he lieth in wait to catch the poor: he doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net.
10 ^f He croucheth, and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall ^g by his strong ones.
11 He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten: ^h he hideth his face; he will never see it.
12 Arise, O LORD; O God, ⁱ lift up thine hand: forget not the ^j humble.
13 Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God? ^k he hath said in his heart, Thou wilt not require it.

Verse 6. I shall not be moved] I have whatever I covet. I hold whatsoever I have gotten. I have money and goods to procure me every gratification.
Verse 7. His mouth is full of cursing, and deceit, and fraud] What a finished character! a blasphemer, a deceitful man, and a knave!
Verse 8. He sitteth in the lurking-places] In this and the following verse there appears to be an allusion to the conduct of an assassin or private murderer. He is like a hunter that lays his traps and gins, digs his pits, sets his nets; and when the prey falls into them, he destroys its life.
Verse 9. He croucheth] The lion squats down and gathers himself together, that he may make the greater spring.
Verse 10. God hath forgotten] He has cast off this people and he will never more re-establish them.
Verse 11. Arise, O Lord] Hear their reproaches, see their guile, consider thy oppressed people. "Lift up thine hand," threaten them, that they may desist and repent.
Verse 12. Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God?] How is it that the Lord permits such persons to triumph in their iniquity? The long-suffering of God leadeth them to repentance.
Verse 13. Thou hast seen it] Nothing can escape thy notice. Thou hast not forgotten thy justice, though judgment is not speedily executed on an evil work. The poor committeth himself unto thee] With the full conviction that thou, who art the helper of the fatherless, wilt not forget him.

Verse 15. Break thou the arm] Destroy his power, deprive him of his influence, that he may be no longer able to oppress.

Seek out his wickedness till thou find none.] Bring all his villainies to light, and continue to inflict punishment, while there is a crime to punish.

Verse 16. The Lord is King for ever] He has, and ever will have, the supreme power.

The heathen are perished out of his land.] They are all either out off or converted. This may refer to the Canaanites. Verse 17. Lord, thou hast heard] Thou hast not permitted thy tempted and afflicted followers to pray in vain.

Thou wilt prepare their heart] 1. God prepares the heart; 2. Suggests the prayer; 3. Hears what is prayed; 4. Answers the petition.

Verse 18. That the man of the earth may no more oppress.] I believe the Hebrew will be better translated thus: "That he may not add any more to drive away the wretched man from the land." Destroy the influence of the tyrant; and let him not have it again in his power to add even one additional act of oppression to those which he has already committed.

PSALM XI.

David's friends advise him to flee to the wilderness from Saul's fury, 1-3. He answers that, having put his trust in God, knowing that he forsakes not those who confide in him, and that he will punish the ungodly, he is perfectly satisfied that he shall be in safety, 4-7.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

IN the LORD put I my trust: ^bhow say ye to my soul, Flee as a bird to your mountain?

Verse 1. In the Lord put I my trust: how say ye] Some of David's friends seem to have given him this advice when they saw Saul bent on his destruction: "Flee as a bird to your mountain." To which advice he answers, "In the Lord put I my trust;" shall I act as if I were conscious of evil, and that my wicked deeds were likely to be discovered?

Verse 2. For, lo, the wicked bend their bow] Perhaps these are more of the words of his advisers.

Verse 3. If the foundations be destroyed] If Saul, who is the vicegerent of God, has cast aside his fear, and now regards neither truth nor justice, a righteous man has no security for his life. This is at present thy case; therefore flee! These I think to be also the words of David's advisers. To all of which he answers:

Verse 4. The Lord is in his holy temple] He is still to be sought and found in the place where he has registered his name. I may expect his presence in the temple: he has not promised to meet me in the mountain.

Verse 5. The Lord trieth the righteous] He does not abandon them; he tries them to show their faithfulness, and he afflicts them for their good.

Verse 6. Upon the wicked he shall rain] This is a manifest allusion to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Snares] Judgments shall fall upon them suddenly and unawares.

Fire] Such as shall come immediately from God, and be inextinguishable.

Brimstone] Melted by the fire, for their drink! This shall be the portion of their cup.

An horrible tempest] "The spirit of terrors." Suffering much, and being threatened with more, they shall be filled with confusion and dismay. Or, the blast of destructions. This may refer to the horribly suffocating Arabian wind, called Smum.

The portion of their cup.] Cup is sometimes put for plenty, for abundance; but here it seems to be used to express the quantum of sorrow and misery which the wicked shall have on the earth.

Verse 7. The righteous Lord loveth righteousness] He loves that which resembles himself. His countenance—his face, is ever open and unclouded to the upright.

PSALM XII.

The Psalmist, destitute of human comfort, craves help from God, 1; gives the character of those who surrounded him, and denounces God's judgments against them, 2-5; confides in the promises of God, and in his protection of him and all good men, 6-8.

Some think that this psalm was made when Doeg and the Ziphites betrayed David to Saul, see 1 Sam. xxii. and xxiii.; but it is most likely that it was written during the Babylonish captivity.

Verse 1. Help, Lord] Save me, O Lord; for merciful men fail, and faithful men have passed away from the sons of Adam.

Verse 2. They speak vanity every one with his neighbour] They are false and hollow; they say one thing while they mean another; there is no trusting to what they say.

Flattering lips, and with a double heart do they speak.] "With a heart and a heart." They seem to have two hearts; one to speak fair words, and the other to invent mischief.

Verse 3. Proud things] Great things; great swelling words, both in their promises and in their commendations.

Verse 4. Our lips are our own] Many think, because they have the faculty of speaking, that therefore they may speak what they please.

Verse 5. For the oppression of the poor] This seems to refer best to the tribulations which the poor Israelites suffered while captives in Babylon.

From him that puffeth at him.] Here is much interpolation to make out a sense.

Verse 6. The words of the Lord are pure words] None of his promises shall fall to the ground: the salvation which he has promised shall be communicated.

Silver tried in a furnace of earth] A reference to the cupel, a sort of instrument used in the purification of silver.

Verse 7. Thou shalt keep them—thou shalt preserve them] Instead of the pronoun them in these clauses several MSS. have us. The sense is equally good in both readings.

Verse 8. The wicked walk on every side] The land is full of them. When the vilest men are exalted; rather, As villians gains ground among the sons of Adam.

The vilest men are exalted.] Were we to take this in its obvious sense, it would signify that at that time wickedness was the way to preferment, and that good men were the objects of persecution.

PSALM XIII.

This psalm contains the sentiments of an afflicted soul that earnestly desires succour from the Lord. The Psalmist complains of delay, 1, 2; prays for light and comfort, because he finds himself on the brink of death, 3; dreads the revilings of his enemies, 4; anticipates a favourable answer, and promises thanksgiving, 5, 6.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

*Or, overbear.—^a Deut. xxxi. 17. Job. xlii. 24. Ps. xlv. 24. lxxxviii. 14. lxxxix. 46. Isa. lix. 2.

This psalm is supposed to have been written during the captivity, and to contain the prayers and supplications of the distressed Israelites, worn out with their long and oppressive bondage.

Verse 1. How long wilt thou forget me?] The words translated here how long? are four times repeated in the two first verses, and point out at once great dejection and extreme earnestness of soul.

Hide thy face from me?] How long shall I be destitute of a clear sense of thy approbation.

Verse 2. Take counsel in my soul] I am continually framing ways and means of deliverance; but they all come to nought, because thou comest not to my deliverance.

shall mine enemy be exalted over me?

3 Consider and hear me, O LORD my God; ^c lighten mine eyes, ^d lest I sleep the sleep of death;

*Ezra ix. 8.—^a Jer. ii. 39.—^b Ps. xxv. 2. xxxv. 19. xxxviii. 16.

Mine enemy be exalted] Satan appears to triumph while the soul lies under the curse of a broken law.

Verse 3. Consider and hear me] Rather, answer me. I have prayed; I am seeking thy face; I am lost without thee; I am in darkness; my life draws nigh to destruction; if I die unforgiven, I die eternally.

Verse 4. Lest mine enemy say] Satan's ordinary method in temptation is to blind the understanding and inflame the passions; and when he succeeds, he triumphs by insults and reproaches. None so ready then to tell the poor soul how deeply, disgracefully, and ungratefully it has sinned.

When I am moved.] O what desolation is made by the fall of a righteous soul! Itself covered with darkness and desolation, infidels filled with scoffing, the church clad in mourning, the Spirit of God grieved, and Jesus crucified afresh, and put to an open shame!

Verse 5. But I have trusted in thy mercy.] Thou wilt not suffer me to fall; or if I have fallen, wilt thou not, for his sake who died for sinners, once more lift up the light of thy countenance upon me?

My heart shall rejoice in thy salvation.] There is no true joy but of the heart; and the heart cannot rejoice till all guilt is taken away from the conscience.

Verse 6. I will sing unto the Lord.] That heart is tuned to God's praise which has a clear sense of God's favour.

Because he hath dealt bountifully with me.] Hath recompensed me. My sorrows were deep, long continued, and oppressive; but in thy favour is life. A moment of this spiritual joy is worth a year of sorrow!

PSALM XIV.

The sentiments of Atheists and Deists, who deny the doctrine of a divine providence. Their character: they are corrupt, foolish, abominable, and cruel, 1-4. God fills them with terrors, 5; reproaches them for their oppression of the poor, 6. The Psalmist prays for the restoration of Israel, 7.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. ^bThey are corrupt, they have done abominable works, there is none that doeth good.

2 ^cThe LORD looked down from heaven upon the children of men; to see if there were any that did understand, and seek God.

The word ledavid, of David, is improperly prefixed, as it is sufficiently evident, from the construction of the psalm, that it speaks of the Babylonish captivity. The author probably lived beyond the Euphrates.

Verse 1. The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.] Nabal, which we render fool, signifies an empty fellow, a contemptible person, a villain. The word is not to be taken in the strict sense in which we use the term atheist, that is, one who denies the being of a God, or confounds him with matter. There are some who, without absolutely denying the divine existence, deny his providence; and there are others who, while they profess to acknowledge both, deny them in their heart, and live as if they were persuaded there was no God either to punish or reward.

They are corrupt.] They are in a state of putrescency; and they have done abominable works—the corruption of their hearts extends itself through all the actions of their lives. They are a plague of the most deadly kind; propagate nothing but destruction; and, like their father the devil, spread far and wide the contagion of sin and death.

Verse 2. The Lord looked down from heaven.] Words spoken after the manner of men. God is represented as looking down upon the habitable globe, to see if there were any that did understand that there was a Supreme Being, the governor and judge of men; and, in consequence, seek God for his mercy, support, and defence.

Verse 3. They are all gone aside.] They will not walk in the straight path.

They are all together become filthy.] They are become sour and rancid; a metaphor taken from milk that has fermented, and turned sour, rancid and worthless.

There is none that doeth good, no, not one.] This is not only the state of heathen Babylon, but the state of the whole inhabitants of the earth, till the grace of God changes their heart.

Verse 4. Have all the workers of iniquity no knowledge?]

4 Have all the workers of iniquity no knowledge? who ¹eat up my people as they eat bread, and ²call not upon the LORD.

5 There ^bwere they in great fear: for God is in the generation of the righteous.

6 Ye have shamed the counsel of the poor, because the LORD is his ¹refuge.

7 ¹Oh ²that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! ³when the LORD bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

they feared a fear. Ps. liii. 5.—¹Ps. ix. 9. cxlii. 5.—²Heb. Who will give, &c. See Rom. xi. 26.—³Ps. liii. 6.—⁴Job. xlii. 10. Ps. cxxvi. 1.

Is there not one of them who takes this dreadful subject into consideration?

Who eat up my people as they eat bread.] They have no power to oppose you, and therefore you destroy them. That this is the meaning of the expression, is plain from the speech of Joshua and Caleb relative to the Canaanites, Numb. xiv. 9.

And call not upon the Lord.] They have no defence, for they invoke not the Lord. They are all either atheists or idolaters.

Verse 5. There were they in great fear.] This is a manifest allusion to the history of the Canaanitish nations; they were struck with terror at the sight of the Israelites, and by this allusion the Psalmist shows that a destruction similar to that which fell upon them, should fall on the Babylonians.

For God is in the generation.] They feared the Israelites, because they knew that the Almighty God was among them.

Verse 6. Ye have shamed the counsel of the poor.] The Psalmist refers to the confidence which the afflicted people professed to have in God for their deliverance, which confidence the Babylonians turned into ridicule. The poor people took counsel together to expect help from God, and to wait patiently for it; and this counsel ye derided, because ye did not know—did not consider, that God was in the congregation of the righteous.

Verse 7. Oh that the salvation.] Or, more literally, Who will give from Zion salvation to Israel? From Zion the deliverance must come; for God alone can deliver them: but whom will he make his instruments?

When the Lord bringeth back.] That is the remains of the kingdom of Israel, and those of Judah, shall be rejoined, to their mutual satisfaction, and become one people, worshipping the same God. Many of the Fathers have understood this verse as referring to the salvation of mankind by Jesus Christ.

PSALM XV.

The important question answered, Who is a proper member of the church militant? and who shall finally join the church triumphant? Ver. 1 contains the question; ver. 2-5, the answer.

A Psalm of David.

LORD, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart.

He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour.

^aPs. xxiv. 8, &c.—^bHeb. sojourn.—^cPs. ii. 6. iii. 4.—^dIsa. xxxiii. 15.—^eZech. viii. 16. Eph. iv. 25.—^fLev. xix. 16. ^gPs. xxxiv. 13.—^hExod. xliii. 1.—ⁱOr, revealeth or endureth.—^jEsth. iii. 2.—^kJudg.

If this psalm was composed during the captivity, the name of David is improperly prefixed.

Verse 1. Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? The literal translation of this verse is, "Lord, who shall sojourn in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in the mountain of thy holiness?" For the proper understanding of this question we must note the following particulars;

1. The tabernacle was a type of the church militant, or the state of the people of God in this world.

2. Mount Zion, the holy mount, where the temple was built was the type of the kingdom of heaven. There the ark became stationary, and was no longer carried about from place to place; and the whole was typical of the rest that remains for the people of God.

3. The tabernacle was a temporary and frequently-re-moved building, carried about from place to place, and not long in any one place. Concerning this it is said, "Who shall lodge, or sojourn," there? It is not a residence or dwelling-place, but a place to lodge in for a time.

4. The temple was a fixed and permanent building; and here it is inquired, "Who shall dwell, abide," or have his permanent residence, there?

5. The tabernacle being a migratory temple, carried about on the shoulders of the priests and Levites, there was no dwelling there for any; they could but lodge or sojourn.

6. The temple being fixed, the priests, Levites, &c., became permanent occupiers.

7. The tabernacle is, therefore, a proper type of the church militant, wandering up and down, tossed by various storms and tempests; the followers of God having here no continuing city; sojourning only on earth to get a preparation for eternal glory.

8. The temple is also a proper type or emblem of the church triumphant in heaven. It is the dwelling-place, the eternal residence, of all who are faithful unto death, who are made pillars in that temple of God, to go no more out for ever.

Verse 2. He that walketh uprightly] 1. He who walks perfectly. Who sets God before his eyes, takes his word for the rule of his conduct, considers himself a sojourner on earth, and is continually walking to the kingdom of God.

And worketh righteousness] 2. He is not satisfied with a contemplative life; he has duties to perform. The law of righteousness has placed him in certain relations, and each of these relations has its peculiar duties. 1. As he is the creature of God, he has duties to perform to him. 2. As a member of civil society, he has various duties to perform to his fellows, as they have to him. 3. There are duties which he owes to himself. That his body may be in health, vigour, and activity, he should avoid everything by which it might be injured. That his soul may be saved, he should avoid all sin; all irregular and disorderly passions.

And speaketh the truth in his heart.] 3. He is a true man; in him there is no false way. He is no man of pretences; speaking one thing, and meaning another. He professes nothing but what he feels and intends: with him there are no hollow friendships, vain compliments, nor empty professions of esteem, love, regard, or friendship. His heart, his tongue, and his hand, are all in unison.

Verse 3. He that backbiteth not with his tongue] "He foot not upon his tongue." 4. He is one who treats his neighbour with respect. The tongue, because of its slanderous conversation, is represented in the nervous original as kicking about the character of an absent person; a very common vice, as destructive as it is common.

5 He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.

^lIsa. 58.—^mExod. xxli. 25. Lev. xxv. 36. Deut. xxiii. 19. Ezek. xviii. 8. xlii. 12.—ⁿExod. xxiii. 8. Deut. xvi. 19.—^oPs. xvi. 8. 2 Pet. i. 10.

neighbour with respect. The tongue, because of its slanderous conversation, is represented in the nervous original as kicking about the character of an absent person; a very common vice, as destructive as it is common.

Nor doeth evil to his neighbour] 5. He not only avoids evil speaking, but he avoids also evil acting towards his neighbour.

Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour.] 6. The word cherpah, which we here translate a reproach comes from charaph, to strip, or make bare, to deprive one of his garments. The application is easy: a man, for instance, of a good character is reported to have done something wrong; the tale is spread, and the slanderers and backbiters carry it about; and thus the man is stripped of his fair character, of his clothing of righteousness, truth, and honesty. Who that has not the heart of a devil would not strive rather to cover than make bare the fault? But what reception has the tale-bearer? The good man taketh it not up; he will not bear it; it shall not be propagated from him. He cannot prevent the detractor from laying it down; but it is in his power not to take it up; and thus the progress of the slander may be arrested.

Verse 4. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned] 7. This man judges of others by their conduct; he tries no man's heart. A vile person, nimas, the prostrate, one abandoned to sin; is despised, nibzeh, is leprosy, as if he were covered with the elephantiasis or leprosy, for so the word implies. He may be rich, he may be learned, he may be a great man and honourable with his master, in high offices in the state; but if he be a spiritual leper, an infidel, a profigate, the righteous man must despise him, and hold him, because he is an enemy to God and to man, in sovereign contempt.

He honoureth them that fear the Lord.] 8. Character is the object of his attention; persons and circumstances are of minor importance.

The fear of the Lord is often taken for the whole of religion; and sometimes for that reverence which a man feels for the majesty and holiness of God, that induces him to hate and depart from evil. Here it may signify the lowest degree of religion, repentance whereby we forsake sin.

Swearth to his own hurt, and changeth not.] 9. Though to keep his oath will be greatly to his damage, yet such reverence has he for God and for truth, that he will not change. He is faithful also to his promises; his bare word will bind him equally with an oath. He that will not be honest without an oath will not be honest with one.

Verse 5. Putteth not out his money to usury] 10. As usury signifies unlawful interest, or that which is got by taking advantage of the necessity of a distressed neighbour, no man that fears God can be guilty of it. The word neshech, which we translate usury, comes from nashach, to bite as a serpent; and here must signify that biting or devouring usury, which ruins the man who has it to pay.

The Jews ever were, and are still, remarkable for usury and usurious contracts; and a Jew that is saved from it is in the fair way, charity would suppose, to the kingdom of heaven.

Nor taketh reward against the innocent.] 11. He neither gives nor receives a bribe in order to pervert justice or injure an innocent man in his cause. The lawyer, who is convinced in his conscience that the poor man has justice and right on his side, yet takes the larger fee from the rich man to plead against the poor man, has in fact taken a bride against the innocent, and without the most signal interposition of the mercy of God, is as sure of hell as if he were already there.

PSALM XVI.

He that doeth these things] He in whose character all these excellences meet, though still much more is necessary under the Christian dispensation, shall never be moved—he shall stand fast for ever.

Now we have the important question answered, Who shall go to heaven? The man who to faith in Christ Jesus adds those eleven moral excellences which have been already enumerated. And only such a character is fit for a place in the church of Christ.

PSALM XVI.

The contents of this Psalm are usually given in the following manner: David, sojourning among idolaters, and being obliged to leave his own country through Saul's persecutions, cries to God for help; expresses his abhorrence of idolatry, and his desire to be again united to God's people, 1-4; and declares his strong confidence in God, who had dealt bountifully with him, 5-7. Then follows a remarkable prophecy of the resurrection of Christ, 8-11.

* Michtam of David.

PRESERVE me, O God: * for in thee do I put my trust.

2 O my soul, thou hast said unto the LORD, Thou art my LORD; * my goodness extendeth not to thee;

* Or, A golden Psalm of David.—^b So Ps. lvi. lviii. lix. lx.—^c Ps. xxv. 20.—^d Job xxii. 2, 3. xxxv. 7, 8. Ps. l. ix. Rom. xi. 35.—^e Or, give gifts to another.—^f Exod. xxiii. 13. Josh. xxiii. 7.

The title of this psalm in the Hebrew is michtam ledavid; which the Chaldee translates, "A straight sculpture of David." The Septuagint, "The inscription on a pillar to David;" as if the psalm had been inscribed on a pillar, to keep it in remembrance. As caltham signifies to engrave or stamp, this has given rise to the above inscription. Michtam also means pure or stamped gold; and hence it has been supposed that this title was given to it on account of its excellence: a golden psalm, or a psalm worthy to be written in letters of gold; as some of the verses of Pythagoras were called the golden verses, because of their excellence. [Rosenmüller and Gesenius make it identical with Michtab, a writing.]

That David was the author there can be no doubt. It is most pointedly attributed to him by St. Peter, Acts ii. 25-31. From the most serious and attentive consideration of the whole psalm, I am convinced that every verse of it belongs to Jesus Christ, and none other. But as he is referred to here as the Redeemer of the world, consequently, as God manifested in the flesh, there are several portions of the psalm, as well as in the New Testament, where the divine and human natures are spoken of separately: and if this distinction be properly regarded, we shall find, not only no inconsistency, but a beautiful harmony through the whole.

Verse 1. Preserve me, O God: for in thee do I put my trust.] I consider this a prayer of the man Christ Jesus on his entering on his great atoning work, particularly his passion in the garden of Gethsemane.

For in thee, chastithi, have I hoped. These are no common sufferings; they are not of a natural kind; they are not proportioned to the strength of a human body, or the energy of a human spirit; and my immaculate humanity, which is subject to these sufferings, must be dissolved by them, if not upheld by thee, the strong God. It is worthy of remark that our Lord here uses the term El, which signifies the strong God, an expression remarkably suited to the frailty of that human nature which was now entering upon its vicarious sufferings. It will be seen with what admirable propriety the Messiah varies the appellations of the Divine Being in this address; a circumstance which no translation without paraphrase can express.

Verse 2. Thou hast said unto the Lord, Thou art my Lord] Thou hast said to Jehovah, the supreme, self-existing, and eternal Being; Thou art my Lord, adonai atiah, my prop, stay, or support. As the Messiah or Son of God, Jesus derived his being and support from Jehovah; and the man Christ was supported by the eternal Divinity that dwelt within him, without which he could not have sustained the after another god: their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer, nor take up their names into my lips.

5 * The LORD is the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup: thou maintainest my lot.

6 The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage.

7 I will bless the LORD, who hath given me counsel: * my reins also instruct me in the night seasons.

sufferings which he passed through, nor have made an atonement for the sin of the world.

My goodness extendeth not to thee] There are almost endless explanations of this clause; no man can read them without being confounded by them. The SEPTUAGINT read, Because thou dost not need my goods. The VULGATE follows the Septuagint. The CHALDEE: My good is given only by thyself. So the SYRIAC: My good is from thee. The ARABIC: Thou dost not need my good works. And in this sense, with shades of difference, it has been understood by most commentators and critics. [Among later critics, Hengstenberg renders the passage: My prosperity is not without thee.]

I think the words should be understood of what the Messiah was doing for men. My goodness, tobathi, "my bounty," is not to thee. What I am doing can add nothing to thy divinity; thou art not providing this astonishing sacrifice because thou canst derive any excellence from it: but this bounty extends to the saints—to all the spirits of just men made perfect, whose bodies are still in the earth; and to the excellent, addirey, "the noble or supereminent ones," those who through faith and patience inherit the promises. Perhaps angels themselves may be intended; they are not uninterested in the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of our Lord.

The kedoshim, "saints" or consecrated persons, may refer to the first planters of Christianity, evangelists, apostles, &c., who were separated from all others, and consecrated to the great important work of preaching among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.

The passage, taken as referring to David, intimates that he abhorred the company of the profane and worthless, and delighted to associate with them that excelled in virtue.

Verse 4. Their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another god] In the Hebrew text there is no word for God, and therefore Messiah or Saviour might be as well substituted; and then the whole will refer to the unbelieving Jews. Their sorrows have been multiplied for more than 1800 years.

Their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer] A drink-offering of blood is not a correct form of expression; it is rather the libation on the blood of the sacrifice already made. As applicable to our Lord, here is an intimation that their libations and sacrifices should cease. None of these should exist under the Christian dispensation; Jesus Christ's offering upon the cross being the accomplishment and termination of all such sacrifices.

Nor take up their names into my lips.] None of those sacrifices shall be mentioned with any kind of respect after the end of their institution shall have been accomplished ; for sacrifice, offering, burnt-offering, and sacrifice for sin, such as are offered according to the law, God would no longer receive ; therefore Jesus said : " Lo, I come to do thy will ; a body hast thou prepared me." Since that time all these sacrifices have ceased.

Verse 5. The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance] The Messiah speaks. Jehovah is the portion of mine inheritance ; I seek no earthly good ; I desire to do the will of God, and that only. From him I have received the cup of suffering, which I shall drink for their sake, through which I shall impart to them the cup of consolation.

Verse 6. The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places] Here is an allusion to the ancient division of the land by lot among the Israelites, the breadth and length being ascertained by lines which were used in measuring.

I have a goodly heritage.] A church, an innumerable multitude of saints, partakers of the divine nature, and filled with all the fulness of God. And these shall dwell with me in the heaven of heavens to all eternity.

Verse 7. Who hath given me counsel] Jesus, as man, received all his knowledge and wisdom from God ; Luke ii. 40-52. And in him were hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

My reins also instruct me] Reins or kidneys, which from their retired situation in the body are often used in Scripture for the most secret workings and affections of the heart.

The kidneys and their fat were always to be burnt in sacrifice, to indicate that the most secret purposes and affections of the soul are to be devoted to God.

In the night seasons.] That is, in the time of my passion, my secret purposes and determination concerning the redemption of man support me.

Verse 8. I have set the Lord always before me] This verse, and all to the end of ver. 11, are applied by St. Peter to the death and resurrection of Christ. Acts ii. 25, &c.

He is at my right hand] That is, I have his constant presence, approbation, and support. All this is spoken by Christ as man.

I shall not be moved.] Nothing can prevent me from fulfilling the divine counsel, in reference to the salvation of man.

neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.

11 Thou wilt shew me the ^a path of life : ^b in thy presence is fulness of joy ; ^c at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore.

—^a Ps. xvii. 15. xxi. 6. Matt. v. 8. 1 Cor. xiii. 12. 1 John iii. 2.—^b Ps. xxxvi. 8.

Verse 9. Therefore my heart is glad] Unutterably happy in God ; always full of the divine presence ; because whatsoever I do pleaseth him.

My glory rejoiceth] My tongue, so called by the Hebrews (see Ps. lvii. 8, xxx. 12), because it was bestowed on us to glorify God, and because it is our glory, being the instrument of expressing our thoughts by words. But soul bids as fair to be the meaning.

My flesh also shall rest in hope.] There is no sense in which these and the following words can be spoken of David.

Verse 10. Thine Holy One] This is in the plural number, chasideycha, thy Holy Ones ; but none of the Versions translate it in the plural. The present reading is probably a corruption.

As to leaving the soul in hell, it can only mean permitting the life of the Messiah to continue under the power of death ; for sheol signifies a pit, a ditch, the grave, or state of the dead.

See corruption.] All human beings see corruption, because born in sin, and liable to the curse. The human body of Jesus Christ, as being without sin, saw no corruption.

Verse 11. Thou wilt show me the path of life] I first shall find the way out of the regions of death, to die no more. Thus Christ was the first-fruits of them that slept. Several had before risen from the dead, but they died again. Jesus rose from the dead, and is alive for evermore. Jesus Christ's resurrection from the dead was the first entrance out of the grave to eternal life or lives, chayyim, for the word is in the plural, and with great propriety too, as this resurrection implies the life of the body, and the life of the rational soul also.

In thy presence] Every holy soul has, throughout eternity, the beatific vision i. e., " it sees God as he is," because it is like him ; 1 John iii. 2. It drinks in beatification from the presence of the eternal TRINITY.

Thy right hand] The place of honour and dignity ; repeatedly used in this sense in the Scriptures.

Pleasures for evermore.] Onwardly ; perpetually, continually, well expressed by our translation ever and more ; an eternal progression. Think of duration in the most extended and unlimited manner, and there is still more ; more to be suffered in hell, and more to be enjoyed in heaven.

PSALM XVII.

David implores the succour of God against his enemies ; and professes his integrity and determination to live to God's glory, 1-4. He prays for support, and expresses strong confidence in God, 5-9 ; describes the malice and cruelty of his enemies, and prays against them, 10-14 ; receives a strong persuasion of support and final victory, 15.

knowest whether I render to all their due, and whether others act justly by me.

Verse 3. Thou hast proved mine heart] Thou hast seen me in my most secret retirements, and knowest whether I have plotted mischief against him who now wishes to take away my life.

Thou hast tried me] Thou hast put me to the test, as they do metals, in order to detect their alloy, and to purify them.

My mouth shall not transgress.] This clause is added to the following verse by the Vulgate and Septuagint. So far from doing any improper action, I have even refrained from all words that might be counted inflammatory or seditious by my adversaries.

Verse 4. The paths of the destroyer.] Some render, hard or difficult paths, the sense of which is given above. But the passage is exceedingly obscure.

Verse 5. Hold up my goings in thy paths] David walked in God's ways; but, without divine assistance, he could not walk steadily, even in them. He had been kept from the paths of the destroyer; but this was not sufficient; he must walk in God's paths—must spend his life in obedience to the divine will. Negative holiness can save no man.

Verse 6. Incline thine ear unto me] In a believer's mind the petition and the answer should not be separated.

Verse 7. Shew thy marvellous loving-kindness] If God did not work miracles for him, he must fall by the hand of Saul. Yet he lays no claim to such miraculous interpositions; he expects all from God's loving-kindness.

The marginal reading of this verse is nearer the original than that of the text.

Verse 8. Keep me as the apple of the eye] Or, as the black of the daughter of the eye. Take as much care to preserve me now by divine influence, as thou hast to preserve my eye by thy good providence.

Hide me under the shadow of thy wings] This is a metaphor taken from the hen and her chickens. See Matt. xxiii. 37.

Verse 9. From my deadly enemies, who compass me about.] This is a metaphor taken from huntsmen, who spread themselves around a large track of forest, driving in the deer from every part of the circumference, till they are forced into the nets or traps which they have set for them in some particular narrow passage.

Verse 10. They are inclosed in their own fat] Dr. Kennicott, and others, read the passage thus: "They have closed their nets upon me." This continues the metaphor which was introduced in the preceding verse, and which is continued in the two following: and requires only the interchange of two letters.

11 They have now compassed us in our steps: they have set their eyes bowing down to the earth;

12 Like as a lion that is greedy of his prey, and as it were a young lion lurking in secret places.

13 Arise, O LORD, disappoint him, cast him down: deliver my soul from the wicked, which is thy sword:

14 From men which are thy hand, O LORD, from men of the world, which have their portion in this life, and whose belly thou fillest with thy hid treasure: they are full of children, and leave the rest of their substance to their babes.

15 As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness.

xxi. 18.—¹ 1 Sam. xxiii. 26.—² Ps. x. 8, 9, 10.—³ Heb. The likeness of him (that is, of every one of them) is as a lion that desireth to ravine.—⁴ Heb. sitting.—⁵ Heb. present his face.—⁶ Isa. x. 5.—⁷ Or, by thy sword.—⁸ Or, From men by thine hand.—⁹ Ps. lxxiii. 12. Luke xvi. 25. James v. 6.—¹⁰ Or, their children are full.—¹¹ 1 John iii. 2.—¹² Ps. iv. 6, 7. xvi. 11. lxx. 4.

They speak proudly.] Being assured that they will soon be in possession of their prey.

Verse 11. They have set their eyes bowing down to the earth] All the commentators and critics have missed the very expressive and elegant metaphor contained in this clause. It is the attitude of the huntsman looking for the spot, or track of the hart's, hind's, or antelope's foot on the ground.

Verse 12. Like as a lion that is greedy of his prey] I believe the word lion is here used to express Saul in his strength, kingly power, and fierce rapacity.

Verse 13. From the wicked, which is thy sword] Saul is still meant, and we may understand the words as either implying the sword, the civil power, with which God had intrusted him, and which he was now grievously abusing; or, it may mean, deliver me by thy sword—cut him off who wishes to cut me off. On this ground the next verse should be read from men, by thy hand. The hand of God not only meaning his power, but his providence.

Verse 14. From men of the world, which have] From mortal men of time; temporizers; men who shift with the times; who have no fixed principle but one, that of securing their own secular interest; who have bartered heaven for earth, and have got the portion they desired; for thou fillest their belly with thy hid treasure. Their belly—their sensual appetites, is their god; and, when their animal desires are satisfied, they take their rest without consideration, like the beasts that perish.

Their portion in this life] In lives, probably meaning heritable lands and estates; for they leave them to their children, they descend to posterity, and every one has his life portion in them.

They are full of children] Have a numerous offspring, whom they educate in the same principles, and to whom they leave a large earthly patrimony, and who spend it as their fathers have done, and perhaps even more dissolutely. Often covetous fathers lay up riches, which profligate sons scatter to all the winds of heaven.

Verse 15. As for me] I cannot be satisfied with such a portion.

I will behold thy face] Nothing but an evidence of thy approbation can content my soul.

In righteousness] I cannot have thy approbation unless I am conformed to thy will.

I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness.] Nothing but God can satisfy the wishes of an immortal spirit; and he satisfies the soul only by restoring it to his image, which, by the fall, it has lost.

I do not think that he refers to the resurrection of the body, but to the resurrection of the soul in this life; to the regaining the image which Adam lost.

PSALM XVIII.

David's address of thanks to Jehovah, 1-3. A relation of sufferings undergone, and prayers made for assistance, 4-6. A magnificent description of divine interposition in behalf of the sufferer, 7-15; and of the deliverance wrought for him, 16-19. That this deliverance was in consideration of his righteousness, 20-24; and according to the tenor of God's equitable proceedings, 25-28. To Jehovah is ascribed the glory of the victory, 29-36; which is represented as complete by the destruction of all his opponents, 37-42. On these events the heathens submit, 43-45. And for all these things God is glorified, 46-50.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, ^a the servant of the LORD, who spake unto the LORD the words of ^b this song in the day that the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul: And he said,

I WILL love thee, O LORD, my strength.
 2 The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, ^d my strength, ^e in whom I will trust; my buckler, and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower.

3 I will call upon the LORD, ^f who is worthy to be praised: so shall I be saved from mine enemies.

4 ^g The sorrows of death compassed me, and the floods of ^h ungodly men made me afraid.

5 The ⁱ sorrows of hell compassed me about: the ^j snares of death prevented me.

6 In my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God: he heard my voice out of his temple, and my cry came before him, even into his ears.

^a Ps. xxxvi. title.—^b 2 Sam. xxii. 1.—^c Ps. cxlv. 1.—^d Heb. my rock.—^e Heb. ii. 13.—^f Ps. lxxvi. 4.—^g Ps. cxvi. 3.—^h Heb. Belial.—ⁱ Or, cords.—^j 2 Sam. xxii. 6. Prov. xlii. 14. xiv. 27.—^k Acts iv. 81.—

Except the first clause, the title is taken from 2 Sam. xxii. 1. The strong current of commentators and critics apply this psalm to Christ; and in the main I am of the same mind; and on this principle chiefly I shall proceed to its illustration; still however considering that there are many things in it which concern David, and him only.

Verse 1. I will love thee] Love always subsists on motive and reason. The verb racham signifies to love with all the tender feelings of nature. "From my inmost bowels will I love thee, O Lord!"

My strength.] Thou who hast given me power over my adversaries, and hast enabled me to avoid evil and do good.

Verse 2. The Lord is my rock.] The word sela signifies those craggy precipices which afforded shelter to men and wild animals; where the bees often made their nests, and whence honey was collected in great abundance. Deut. xxxii. 18. He was his fortress; a place of strength and safety, fortified by nature and art, where he could be safe from his enemies. He refers to those inaccessible heights in the rocky, mountainous country of Judea, where he had often found refuge from the pursuit of Saul.

Deliverer.] This refers to his preservation in straits and difficulties. He was often almost surrounded and taken, but still the Lord made a way for his escape—made a way out as his enemies got in; so that, while they got in at one side of his stronghold, he got out of the other, and so escaped with his life. My God, my strong God, not only the object of my adoration, but he who puts strength in my soul. My strength, tower. This is a different word from that in the first verse: when applied to God, it signifies fountain, source, origin, &c. God is not only the source whence my being was derived, but he is the fountain whence I derive all my good; in whom, says David, I will trust. My buckler, my shield, my defender, he who covers my head and my heart, so that I am neither slain nor wounded by the darts of my adversaries. Horn of my salvation. Horn was the emblem of power, and power in exercise. My high tower; not only a place of defence, but one from which I can discern the country round about, and always be able to discover danger before it approaches me.

Verse 4. The sorrows of death compassed me.] The cables or cords of death. He was almost taken in those nets or stratagems, by which, if he had been entangled, he would have lost his life.

7 ^k Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations also of the hills moved and were shaken, because he was wroth.

8 There went up a smoke ^l out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

9 ^m He bowed the heavens also, and came down: and darkness was under his feet.

10 ⁿ And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly: yea, ^o he did fly upon the wings of the wind.

11 He made darkness his secret place; ^p his pavilion round about him were dark waters and thick clouds of the skies.

12 ^q At the brightness that was before him his thick clouds passed; hail stones and coals of fire.

13 The LORD also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave ^r his voice; hail stones and coals of fire.

14 ^s Yea, he sent out his arrows, and scattered

The floods of ungodly men.] Troops of wicked men were rushing upon him like an irresistible torrent; or like the waves of the sea, one impelling another forward in successive ranks; so that, thinking he must be overwhelmed by them, he was for the moment affrighted; but God turned the torrent aside, and he escaped.

Verse 5. The sorrows of hell.] The cables or cords of the grave. Is not this a reference to the cords or ropes with which they lowered the corpse into the grave? or the bandages by which the dead were swathed?

The snares of death prevented me.] I was just on the point of dropping into the pit which they had digged for me.

Verse 6. In my distress I called.] His enemies had no hope of his destruction unless God should abandon him. But God heard his cry and came down to his help; and this interference is most majestically described in the 7th and following verses.

Verse 11. He made darkness his secret place.] Deut. iv. 11; Ps. cxvii. 2. This representation in the place before us is peculiarly proper; as thick heavy clouds deeply charged, and lowering aspects, are always the forerunners and attendants of a tempest, and greatly heighten the horrors of the appearance; and the representation of them, spread about the Almighty as a tent, is truly grand and poetic.

Dark waters.] The vapours strongly condensed into clouds; which, by the stroke of the lightning, are about to be precipitated in torrents of rain.

Verse 12. At the brightness that was before him his thick clouds passed.] The word noqah signifies the lightning.

This goes before him; the flash is seen before the thunder is heard, and before the rain descends; and then the thick cloud passes. Its contents are precipitated on the earth, and the cloud is entirely dissipated.

Hail stones and coals of fire.] This was the storm that followed the flash and the peal; for it is immediately added—

Verse 13. The Lord also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice.] The former verse mentioned the lightning, with its effects; this gives us the report of the thunder, and the increasing storm of hail and fire that attended it.

Verse 14. He sent out his arrows—he shot out lightnings.] I believe the latter clause to be an illustration of the former. Sense and sound are wonderfully combined in the Hebrew them; and he shot out lightnings, and discomfited them.

15 * Then the channels of waters were seen, and the foundations of the world were discovered at thy rebuke, O LORD, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.

16 ^b He sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of ^c many waters.

17 He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them which hated me: for they were too strong for me.

18 They prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the LORD was my stay.

19 ^d He brought me forth also into a large place: he delivered me, because he delighted in me.

20 * The LORD rewarded me according to my righteousness; according to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

21 For I have kept the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

22 For all his judgments were before me, and I did not put away his statutes from me.

23 I was also upright ^e before him, and I kept myself from mine iniquity.

24 * Therefore hath the LORD recompensed me, of this last clause: uberakim raf vaihummeh, "and thunders he multiplied and confounded them." Who does not hear the bursting, brattling, and pounding of thunder in these words?

Verse 15. The channels of waters were seen] This must refer to an earthquake; for in such cases, the ground being rent, water frequently gushes out at the fissures, and often rises to a tremendous height.

Verse 16. He drew me out of many waters.] The waters thus poured out were sweeping the people away; but God, by a miraculous interference, sent and drew David out. Sometimes waters are used to denote multitudes of people; and here the word may have that reference; multitudes were gathered together against David, but God delivered him from them all.

Verse 17. He delivered me from my strong enemy] Does not this refer to his conflict with Ishbi-benob? It appears that at this time he was in the most imminent danger of his life, and that he must have fallen by the hands of the giant, if God had not sent Abishai to his assistance. They were too strong for me. He was nearly overpowered by the Philistines; and his escape was such as evidently to show it to be supernatural. [It is better, however, to take this word collectively, as not applying to any one enemy.]

Verse 18. They prevented me in the day of my calamity] They took advantage of the time in which I was least able to make head against them, and their attack was sudden and powerful.

Verse 19. He brought me forth also into a large place] He enabled me to clear the country of my foes, who had before cooped me up in holes and corners.

Verse 20. According to my righteousness] I dealt righteously with him while he dealt unrighteously with me.

Verse 21. I have kept the ways of the Lord] I was neither an infidel nor a profligate; I trusted in God, and carefully observed all the ordinances of his religion.

Verse 22. All his judgments were before me] I kept his law before my eyes, that I might see my duty, and know how to walk and please God.

Verse 23. I was also upright] The times in which David was most afflicted were the times of his greatest uprightness. Mine iniquity.] Probably meaning what is generally termed the easily-besetting sin; the sin of his constitution, or that to which the temperament of his body most powerfully disposed him.

Verse 25. With the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful] Thou wilt deal with men as they deal with each other.

according to my righteousness, according to the cleanness of my hands ^b in his eyesight.

25 ^c With the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful: with an upright man thou wilt shew thyself upright;

26 With the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure; and ^d with the froward thou wilt ^e shew thyself froward.

27 For thou wilt save the afflicted people; but wilt bring down ^f high looks.

28 * For thou wilt light my ^g candle: the LORD my God will enlighten my darkness.

29 For by thee I have ^h run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall.

30 As for God, ⁱ his way is perfect; ^j the word of the LORD is ^k tried: he is a buckler ^l to all those that trust in him.

It is in reference to this that our Lord teaches us to pray: "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us."

Verse 26. With the froward] The perverse man; he that is crooked in his temper and ways.

Thou wilt show thyself froward.] Thou wilt set thyself to twist, twine, and wrestle. If he contend, thou wilt contend with him. Thou wilt follow him through all his windings; thou wilt trace him through all his crooked ways; untwist him in all his cunning wiles; and defeat all his schemes of stubbornness, fraud, overreaching, and deceit.

Verse 27. For thou wilt save the afflicted] The afflicted are the humble; and those thou hast ever befriended.

Verse 28. For thou wilt light my candle] Thou wilt restore me to prosperity, and give me a happy issue out of all my afflictions.

Verse 29. I have run through a troop] This may relate to some remarkable victory; and the taking of some fortified place, possibly Zion, from the Jebusites. See 2 Sam. v. 6-8.

Verse 30. The word of the Lord is tried] Literally, tried in the fire. It has stood all tests; and has never failed those who pleaded it before its author.

He is a buckler] A sure protection to every simple believing soul. We cannot believe his word too implicitly; nor trust too confidently in him.

Verse 31. For who is God save the Lord?] None is worthy of adoration but the self-existent, eternal, infinitely perfect, and all-merciful Being.

Or who is a rock] A fountain emitting continual supplies of grace and goodness.

Verse 32. God—girdeth me with strength] The girdle was a necessary part of the eastern dress: it strengthened and supported the loins; served to confine the garments close to the body; and in it they tucked them up when journeying. The strength of God was to his soul what the girdle was to the body.

And maketh my way perfect.] He directs me so that I do not go astray; he blesses me in all my undertakings, and by him the issue of my labours is crowned with prosperity.

Verse 33. My feet like hinds' feet] Swiftmess, or speed of foot, was a necessary qualification of an ancient hero. This was of great advantage in pursuing, combating, or escaping from a fallen foe.

Upon my high places.] In allusion to the hinds, antelopes, mountain-goats, &c., which frequented such places, and in which they found both food and safety.

Vers 34. He teacheth my hands to war] The success

35 Thou hast also given me the shield of thy salvation : and thy right hand hath holden me up, and * thy gentleness hath made me great.

36 Thou hast enlarged my steps under me ^b that * my feet did not slip.

37 I have pursued mine enemies, and overtaken them : neither did I turn again till they were consumed.

38 I have wounded them that they were not able to rise : they are fallen under my feet.

39 For thou hast girded me with strength unto the battle : thou hast ^d subdued under me those that rose up against me.

40 Thou hast also given me the necks of mine enemies ; that I might destroy them that hate me.

41 They cried, but there was none to save them : * even unto the LORD, but he answered them not.

which I have had in my military exercises I owe to the divine help.

[A bow of steel is broken by mine arms.] All the Versions render this, "Thou hast made my arm like a brazen bow." A bow of steel is out of the question. In the days of David it is not likely that the method of making steel was known.

Verse 35. The shield of thy salvation] In all battles and dangers God defended him. He was constantly safe because he possessed the salvation of God. Thy gentleness, anathema, thy meekness or humility. Thou hast enabled me to bear and forbear ; to behave with courage in adversity, and with humility in prosperity : and thus I am become great. By these means thou hast multiplied me.

Verse 36. Enlarged my steps] See on ver. 10. From the hand of God he had continual prosperity ; and while he walked with God no enemy was able to prevail against him.

Verse 40. The necks of mine enemies] Treading on the neck of an enemy was the triumph of the conqueror, and the utmost disgrace of the vanquished.

Verse 41. They cried] The Philistines called upon their gods, but there was none to save them.

Even unto the Lord] Such as Saul, Ish-bosheth, Absalom, &c., who, professing to worship the true God, called on him while in their opposition to David ; but God no more heard them than their idols heard the Philistines.

Verse 42. Then did I beat them] God was with him, and they had only an arm of flesh.

Small as the dust before the wind] This well expresses the manner in which he treated the Moabites, Ammonites, and the people of Rabbah : 2 Sam. xii. 31.

Verse 43. The strivings of the people] Disaffections and insurrections among my own subjects.

The head of the heathen] "The chief," or "governor, of the nations ;" all the circumjacent heathen people ; all these were subdued by David, and brought under tribute.

A people whom I have not known] The people whom he knew were those of the twelve tribes ; those whom he did not know were the Syrians, Philistines, Idumeans, &c. All these served him, that is, paid him tribute.

Verse 44. As soon as they hear of me] His victories were so rapid and splendid over powerful enemies that they struck a general terror among the people, and several submitted without a contest.

Verse 45. The strangers shall fade away] They shall not the people ; and ^b thou hast made me the head of the heathen : ^a a people whom I have not known shall serve me.

44 ^c As soon as they hear of me, they shall obey me : ^d the strangers ^e shall ^f submit ^g themselves unto me.

45 ^h The strangers shall fade away, and be afraid out of their close places.

46 The LORD liveth, and blessed be my rock : and let the God of my salvation be exalted.

47 It is God that ^a avengeth me, ^b and ^c subdueth the people unto me.

48 He delivereth me from mine enemies : yea, ^d thou liftest me up above those that rise up against me : thou hast delivered me from the ^e violent man.

49 ^f Therefore will I ^g give thanks unto thee, O LORD, among the heathen, and sing praises unto thy name.

50 ^h Great deliverance giveth he to his king ; and sheweth mercy to his anointed, to David, and to his seed ⁱ for evermore.

be able to effect any thing against me ; "they shall fall as the leaves fall off the trees in winter."

[And be afraid out of their close places.] Perhaps all these verbs should be understood in the perfect tense for David is here evidently speaking of a kingdom at rest, all enemies having been subdued ; or, as the title is, when the Lord had delivered him from all his enemies.

Verse 46. The Lord liveth] By him alone I have gained all my victories : and he *continuet*h, and will be my Rock, the Source whence I may at all times derive help and salvation.

Verse 47. God that avengeth me] The way that I took was after his own heart ; therefore he sustained me in it, and did me justice over my enemies.

Subdueth the people unto me] He keeps down the spirits of the disaffected, and weakens their hands.

Verse 48. He delivereth me] That is, he hath delivered me, and continues to deliver me, from all that rise up against me.

The violent man] Saul ; this applies particularly to him.

Verse 49. Will I give thanks unto thee—among the heathen] Quoted by St. Paul, Rom. xv. 9, to prove that the calling of the Gentiles was predicted, and that what then took place was the fulfilment of that prediction.

Verse 50. Great deliverance giveth he to his king] Literally, He is magnifying the salvation of his king. He not only delivers but follows up those deliverances with innumerable blessings.

Sheweth mercy—to David] I have no claim upon his bounty. I deserve nothing from him, but he continues to show mercy.

For evermore] Ad clam, for ever ; through all duration of created worlds. And more—the eternity that is beyond time. This shows that another David is meant, with another kind of posterity, and another sort of kingdom. This government shall last through all time, for Christianity will continue to prevail till the end of the world : and it will be extended through eternity ; for that is the kingdom of glory in which Jesus reigns on the throne of his Father, and in which his followers shall reign with him for ever and ever.

It has already been remarked that this whole psalm has been understood as relating to the passion and victories of CHRIST, and the success of the gospel in the earth. Many of the primitive Fathers and modern interpreters have taken the same view of it. To apply the whole psalm in this way appears to be very injudicious, and often derogatory from the majesty of Christ.

PSALM XIX.

The heavens and their host proclaim the majesty of God, 2-6; the excellence and perfection of the divine law, 7-10; its usefulness, 11. The Psalmist prays for pardon and preservation from sin, 12, 13; and that his words and thoughts may be holy, 14.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handy-work.

2 Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge.

3 There is no speech nor language, ^b where ^c their voice is not heard.

4 Their ^e line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun,

* Gen. i. 6. Isa. xl. 22. Rom. i. 19, 20.—^b Or, without these their voice is heard.—^c Heb. without their voice heard.—^d Rom. x. 13.—^e Or,

There is no note in this psalm to lead us to know when, where, or by whom it was written. It is a highly finished and beautiful ode.

Verse 1. The heavens declare the glory of God.] Literally, The heavens number out the glory of the strong God. A first view of the starry heavens strikes every beholder with astonishment at the power by which they were made, and by which they are supported. To find out the wisdom and skill displayed in their contrivance requires a measure of science: but when the vast magnitude of the celestial bodies is considered, we feel increasing astonishment at these works of the strong God.

The firmament.] The whole visible expanse; not only containing the celestial bodies above referred to, but also the air, light, rains, dews, &c., &c.

Verse 2. Day unto day uttereth speech.] Each day is represented as teaching another relative to some new excellence discovered in these manifold works of God. The nights also, by the same figure, are represented as giving information to each other of the increase of knowledge already gained.

Verse 3. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard.] Leave out the expletives here, which pervert the sense; and what remains is a tolerable translation of the original:—

“No speech, and no words: their voice without hearing. Into all the earth hath gone out their sound; and to the extremity of the habitable world, their eloquence.”

The word which we translate line is rendered by the Septuagint and Vulgate sound. Perhaps the idea is taken from a stretched cord, that emits a sound on being struck; and hence both ideas may be included in the same word. But I rather think that the Hebrew word originally meant sound or noise; for in Arabic the verb kavaha signifies he called out, cried, clamavit.

St. Paul applies this as a prophecy relative to the universal spread of the gospel of Christ, Rom. x. 13; for God designed that the light of the gospel should be diffused wheresoever the light of the celestial luminaries shone; and be as useful and beneficent, in a moral point of view, as that is in a natural. All the inhabitants of the earth shall benefit by the gospel of Christ as they all benefit by the solar, lunar, and stellar light.

All the Versions, except the Chaldee, render the last clause of the fourth verse thus: “In the sun he hath placed his tabernacle.” They supposed that if the Supreme Being had a local dwelling, this must be it; as it was, to all human appearance, the fittest place. But the Hebrew is, “Among whom hath he set a tabernacle for the sun.” He is the centre of the universe; all the other heavenly bodies appear to serve him. He is like a general in his pavilion, surrounded by his troops, to whom he gives his orders, and by whom he is obeyed. So, the solar influence gives motion, activity, light, and heat to all the planets.

Verse 5. Which is as a bridegroom, &c.] This is a reference to the rising of the sun, as the following verse is to the 5 Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.

6 His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.

7 The law of the LORD is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the LORD is sure, making wise the simple.

8 The statutes of the LORD are right, rejoicing the setting. The sun is compared to a bridegroom in his ornaments, because of the glory and splendour of his rays; and to a giant or strong man running a race, because of the power of his light and heat. The apparent motion of the sun, in his diurnal and annual progress, are here both referred to.

Coming out of his chamber.] Mechuppatho, from under his veil. It was a sort of canopy erected on four poles, which four Jews held over the bridegroom's head.

Verse 7. The law of the Lord.] And here are two books of Divine Revelation: 1. The visible HEAVENS, and the works of creation in general. 2. The BIBLE, or divinely inspired writings contained in the Old and New Testaments. These may all be called the LAW of the Lord; torah, from arah, to instruct, direct, put straight, guide. Some think that torah means the preceptive part of Revelation. Some of the primitive Fathers have mentioned three LAWS given by God to man: The law of nature; the law given to Moses and the prophets; the law of grace given by Christ Jesus. The first is written in hieroglyphics in the heavens and the earth. The second was written on tables of stone, and in many rites and ceremonies. The third is to be written on the heart by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Is perfect.] It is perfection. It is perfect in itself as a law, and requires perfection in the hearts and lives of men.

Converting the soul.] Turning it back to God. The testimony of the Lord.] Eduth, from ad, beyond, forward. The various types and appointments of the law, which refer to something beyond themselves, and point forward to the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world. Some understand, the doctrinal part of the law.

Is sure.] Neemanah, are faithful; they point out the things beyond them fairly, truly, and fully, and make no vain or false report. They all bear testimony to the great atonement.

Making wise the simple.] The simple is he who has but one end in view: who is concerned about his soul, and earnestly inquires, “What shall I do to be saved?” These testimonies point to the atonement, and thus the simple-hearted is made wise unto salvation.

Verse 8. The statutes of the Lord.] The appointments, or charge delivered by God to man for his regard and observance.

Are right.] Opposed to crookedness in mind or conduct; showing what the man should be, both within and without.

Rejoicing the heart.] As they show a man how he is to please God, and the divine help he is to receive from the visitations of God, they contribute greatly to the happiness of the upright.

The commandment.] What God has ordered men to do or not to do.

Is pure.] All God's commandments lead to purity, enjoy purity, and point out that sacrificial offering by which cleansing and purification are acquired.

Enlightening the eyes.] Showing men what they should do, and what they should avoid.

heart: * the commandment of the LORD is pure, ^b enlightening the eyes.

9 The fear of the LORD is clean, enduring for ever: the judgments of the LORD are ^c true and righteous altogether.

10 More to be desired are they than gold, ^d yea, than much fine gold: * sweeter also than honey and ^e the honeycomb.

11 Moreover by them is thy servant warned: and ^f in keeping of them there is great reward.

* Ps. xii. 6.—^b Ps. xiii. 8.—^c Heb. truth.—^d Ps. cxix. 72, 127. Prov. viii. 10, 11, 19.—^e Ps. cxix. 103.—^f Heb. the dropping of honey-combs.—^g Prov. xxix. 18.—^h Ps. xl. 12.—ⁱ Lev. iv. 2, &c.—^j Ps. xc. 8.

Verse 9. The fear of the Lord] The reverence we owe to the Supreme Being.

Is clean] Bright as the heavens; as purified SILVER. Its object is to purge away all defilement, to make a spotless character.

Enduring for ever] The fear that prevents us from offending God, that causes us to reverence him, and is the beginning as it is the safe-guard of wisdom, must be carried all through life.

The judgments of the Lord] All God's regulations, all his decisions; what he has pronounced to be right and proper.

Are true] Emeth, truth, from am, to support, confirm, make stable, and certain. This is the character of God's judgments. They shall all stand; they are certain, and fixed.

And righteous altogether.] They are not only according to truth; but they are righteous, they give to all their due. They show what belongs to God, to man, and to ourselves. And hence the word altogether, equally, is added; or truth and righteousness united.

Verse 10. More to be desired are they than gold] By most men gold is preferred both to God and his judgments; and they will barter every heavenly portion for gold and silver!

Sweeter also than honey] To those whose mental taste is rectified, who have a spiritual discernment.

Honeycomb.] Honey is sweet; but honey just out of the comb has a sweetness, richness, and flavour, far beyond what it has after it becomes exposed to the air.

Verse 11. By them is thy servant warned] By these laws, testimonies, &c., thy servant is fully instructed; he sees all clearly; and he discerns that in keeping of them there is great reward; every man is wise, holy, and happy, who observes them. All Christian experience confirms this truth.

Verse 12. Who can understand his errors?] It is not 12 ^b Who can understand his errors? ^c cleanse thou me from ^d secret faults.

13 ^e Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; ^f let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from ^g the great transgression.

possible, without much of the divine light, to understand all our deviations from, not only the letter, but the spirituality, of the divine law.

Cleanse thou me from secret faults.] From those which I have forgotten; for which I have not repented; which have been committed in my heart, but have not been brought to act in my life; which I have committed without knowing that they were sins, sins of ignorance; and which I have committed in private, for which I should blush and be confounded were they to be made public.

Verse 13. From presumptuous sins] Sins committed not through frailty or surprise, but those which are the offspring of thought, purpose, and deliberation. Sins against judgment, light, and conscience.

Let them not have dominion over me] Let me never be brought into a habit of sinning. He who sins presumptuously will soon be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

Then shall I be upright] He who would be innocent from the great transgression, must take care that he indulge not himself in any.

Verse 14. Let the words of my mouth] He has prayed against practical sin, the sins of the body; now, against the sins of the mouth and of the heart.

Acceptable in thy sight] Like a sacrifice without spot or blemish, offered up with a perfect heart to God.

O Lord, my strength] "My fountain, my origin."

My redeemer.] My kinsman, he whose right it is to redeem the forfeited inheritance; for so was the word used under the old law. This prayer is properly concluded; he was weak, he felt the need of God's strength. No prayer can be acceptable before God which is not offered up in his strength; through HIM who took our nature upon him, that he might redeem us unto God, and restore the long-lost inheritance.

PSALM XX.

A prayer for the king in his enterprizes, that his prayers may be heard, his offerings accepted, and his wishes fulfilled, 1-4. Confidence of victory expressed, 5, 6. Vain hopes exposed; and supplication made for the king.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE LORD hear thee in the day of trouble; * the name of the God of Jacob ^b defend thee.

2 Send ^c thee help from ^d the sanctuary, and * strengthen thee out of Zion.

It is most likely that this psalm was penned on the occasion of David's going to war; and most probably with the Ammonites and Syrians, who came with great numbers of horses and chariots to fight with him. See 2 Sam. x. 6-8; 1 Chron. xix. 7.

Verse 1. The Lord hear thee] David had already offered

4 ^b Grant thee according to thine own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel.

5 We will ^c rejoice in thy salvation, and ^d in the name of our God, we will set up our banners: the LORD fulfil all thy petitions.

the Covenant, the Lord Jesus, in whom was the name of God, the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

Verse 2. Send thee help from the sanctuary] This was the place where God recorded his name; the place where he was to be sought, and the place where he manifested himself. He dwelt between the cherubim over the mercy-seat. He is now in Christ, reconciling the world to himself. This is the true sanctuary where God must be sought.

Strengthen thee out of Zion.] The temple or tabernacle where his prayers and sacrifices were to be offered.

Verse 3. Remember all thy offerings] The minchah, which is here mentioned, was a gratitude-offering. It is rarely used to signify a bloody sacrifice.

Burnt sacrifice.] The olah here mentioned was a bloody sacrifice, and implied a consciousness of sin in the offerer. The blood of the victim was spilt at the altar, and the flesh consumed.

Verse 4. Grant thee according to thine own heart] May God give thee whatsoever thou art setting thy heart upon, and accomplish all thy desires! This was probably the prayer of the high-priest.

Verse 5. We will rejoice in thy salvation] We expect help from thee alone; it is in thy cause we engage; and to thee, as our war is a just one, we consecrate our banners, inscribed with thy name.

The words of this verse were spoken by David and his officers; immediately after which I suppose the high-priest to have added, The Lord fulfil all thy petitions.

Verse 6. Now know I that the Lord saveth his anointed] These are probably the words of the priest after the victim had been consumed; and those signs had accompanied the offering, which were proofs of God's acceptance of the sacrifice; and, consequently, that the campaign would have a successful issue. David is God's anointed; therefore, he is under his especial care.

The HAND of God is his power; the RIGHT HAND, his almighty power; the STRENGTH of his right hand, his almighty power in action; the SAVING strength of his right hand, the miraculous effects wrought by his almighty power brought into action.

Verse 7. Some trust in chariots] The words of the original are short and emphatic: These in chariots; and these in horses; but we will record in the name of Jehovah our God. This and the following verse I suppose to be the words of David and his officers. According to the law, David could neither have chariots nor horses; and those who came against him with cavalry must have a very great advantage; but he said that Jehovah his God was more than a match for all his foes, and in him he trusts with implicit confidence.

Verse 8. They are brought down and fallen] They were so confident of victory that they looked upon it as already gained.

But we are risen] We who have trusted in the name of Jehovah are raised up from all dependency; and we stand upright—we shall conquer, and go on to conquer.

Verse 9. Save, Lord] This verse was spoken by all the congregation, and was the chorus and conclusion of the piece.

The verse may be read, Lord save the king! He will hear us in the day of our calling. "If thou proservest him, he will be thy minister for good to us." This appears to be the easiest sense of the place, and harmonizes with all the rest.

PSALM XXI.

The Psalmist returns thanks to God for giving him the victory over his enemies; which victory he had earnestly requested, 1, 2. He enters into a detail of the blessings that in consequence of the victory he had obtained, 3-7. He predicts the destruction of all those who may hereafter rise up against him, 8-12; and concludes with praising the power of Jehovah, 13.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

Some think this psalm was composed to celebrate the victory obtained over Sennacherib: others, that it was made on the recovery of Hezekiah, and the grant of fifteen years of longer life; see ver. 4. Others, and they with most appearance of propriety, consider it a song of rejoicing composed by David for his victory over the Ammonites, which ended in the capture of the royal city of Rabbah, the crown of whose king David put on his own head, see ver. 3, and to procure which victory David offered the prayers and sacrifices mentioned in the preceding psalm. Lastly, many think that it is to be wholly referred to the victories of the Messiah; and it must be owned that there are several expressions in it which apply better to our Lord than to David, or to any other person.

to be of God, because they took care to have their quarrel rightly founded; the latter sing a Te Deum, pro forma, because they well know that their battle is not of the Lord.

Verse 2. Thou hast given him his heart's desire] This seems to refer to the prayers offered in the preceding psalm; see especially verses 1-4.

Verse 3. Thou preventest him] To prevent literally signifies to go before. Hence that prayer in the communion service of our public liturgy, "Prevent us, O Lord, in all our doings with thy most gracious favour!" That is, "Go before us in thy mercy, make our way plain, and enable us to perform what is right in thy sight!"

A crown of pure gold] Probably alluding to the crown of the king of Rabbah, which, on the taking of the city, David took and put on his own head. 2 Sam. xii. 28, 30.

interpreters to understand the psalm of Hezekiah's sickness, recovery, and the promised addition to his life of fifteen years; but it may be more literally understood of the Messiah, of whom David was the type, and in several respects the representative.

Verse 5. His glory is great] There is no true nobility but of the soul, and the soul has none but what it receives from the grace and salvation of God.

Verse 6. Thou hast made him most blessed for ever] Literally, "Thou hast set him for blessings for ever."

Thou hast made him exceeding glad] Jesus, as Messiah, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, and despised the shame.

Verse 7. The king trusteth in the Lord] It was not by my skill or valour that I have gained this victory, but by faith in the strong, protecting, and conquering arm of JEHOVAH. He shall not be moved.] Perhaps this may be best understood of him who was David's prototype.

Verse 8. Thine hand shall find out] God knows the secret sinner, and where the workers of iniquity hide themselves.

Verse 9. Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven] By thy wrath they shall be burnt up, and they shall be the means of consuming others.

^e imagined a mischievous device, which they are not able to perform.

Verse 10. Their fruit shalt thou destroy] Even their posterity shall be cut off, and thus their memorial shall perish.

Verse 11. For they intended evil] Sinners shall not be permitted to do all that is in their power against the godly; much less shall they be able to perform all that they wish.

Verse 12. Therefore shalt thou make them turn their back] God can in a moment strike the most powerful and numerous army, even in the moment of victory, with panic; and then even the lame, the army which they had nearly routed, shall take the prey, and divide the spoil.

Against the face of them.] Thou shalt cause them to turn their backs and fly, as if a volley of arrows had been discharged in their face.

Verse 13. Be thou exalted] Exalt thyself, O Lord—thy creatures cannot exalt thee. Lift thyself up, and discomfit thy foes by thine own strength!

Praise thy power.] God is to receive praise in reference to that attribute which he has exhibited most in the defence or salvation of his followers. Whatever attribute or perfection he exhibits most, that should be the chief subject of his children's praise.

PSALM XXII.

Under great affliction and distress, the Psalmist prays unto God, 1-3; appeals to God's wonted kindness in behalf of his people, 4, 5; relates the insults that he received, 6-8; mentions the goodness of God to him in his youth, as a reason why he should expect help now, 9-11; details his sufferings, and the indignities offered to him, 12-18; prays with the confidence of being heard and delivered, 19-24; praises God, and foretells the conversion of the nations to the true religion, 25-31.

3 But thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the ^fpraises of Israel.

The words ajeleth hashshachar in the title are translated in the margin, "the hind of the morning;" but what was this? Calmet translates "A Psalm of David, addressed to the Music-master who presides over the Band called the Morning Hind." This is more likely than any of the other conjectures I have seen. But ajeleth hashshachar may be the name of the psalm itself, for it was customary among the Asiatics to give names to their poetic compositions which often bore no relation to the subject itself. [Or it may be a direction that the Psalm is to be sung after a tune bearing this name.]

That several parts of this Psalm relate to David, primarily, there is very little reason to doubt; that several passages may be applied by way of accommodation to our Lord, though originally belonging to and expressing the state of David, may be piously believed; and that it contains portions which are direct prophecies of our Lord's passion, death, and victory, appears too evident to be safely denied.

Verse 1. My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?] Show me the cause why thou hast abandoned me to my enemies; and why thou seemest to disregard my prayers and cries?

Verse 2. I cry in the day time—and in the night season] This seems to be David's own experience; and the words seem to refer to his own case alone.

Verse 3. But thou art holy] This is the language of profound resignation, in trials the most difficult to be borne. Inhabitest the praises of Israel.] Thou dwellest in the sanctuary where the praises, thanksgivings, and sacrifices of thy people are continually offered.

9 * But thou art he that took me out of the womb: thou didst make me hope when I was upon my mother's breasts.

10 I was cast upon thee from the womb: thou art my God from my mother's belly.

11 Be not far from me; for trouble is near; for there is none to help.

12 * Many bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round.

13 They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion.

14 I am poured out like water, and all my bones are out of joint: my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels.

15 * My strength is dried up like a potsherd; and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; and thou hast brought me into the dust of death.

16 For dogs have compassed me: the assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: they pierced my hands and my feet.

Verse 4. Our fathers trusted in thee] David is supposed to have been, at the time of composing this psalm, at Mahanaim, where Jacob was once in such great distress; where he wrestled with the angel, and was so signally blessed.

Verse 5. They cried unto thee] So do I. They were delivered; so may I. They trusted in thee; I also trust in thee. And were not confounded; and is it likely that I shall be put to confusion?

Verse 6. But I am a worm, and no man] I can see no sense in which our Lord could use these terms.

Verse 7. Laugh me to scorn] Laugh to scorn is so completely antiquated that it should be no longer used; derided, despised, treated with contempt, are much more expressive, and are still in common use.

They shoot out the lip, they shake the head] This is applied by St. Matthew, chap. xxvii. 39, to the conduct of the Jews towards our Lord, when he hung upon the cross; as is also the following verse. But both are primarily true of the insults which David suffered from Shimei and others during the rebellion of Absalom; and, as the cases were so similar, the Evangelist thought proper to express a similar conduct to Jesus Christ by the same expressions.

Verse 9. But thou art he that took me out of the womb] Thou hast made me; and hast guided and defended me from my earliest infancy.

Verse 11. Be not far from me; for trouble is near] A present God is a present blessing.

Verse 12. Many bulls have compassed me] The bull is the emblem of brutal strength, that goes and tramples down all before it. Such were Absalom, Ahithophel, and others, who rose up in rebellion against David; and such were the Jewish rulers who conspired against Christ.

Strong bulls of Bashan] Bashan was a district beyond Jordan, very fertile, where they were accustomed to fatten cattle, which became, in consequence of the excellent pasture, the largest, as well as the fattest, in the country.

Verse 13. They gaped upon me] They were fiercely and madly bent on my destruction.

Verse 14. I am poured out like water] The images in this verse are strongly descriptive of a person in the deepest distress; whose strength, courage, hope, and expectation of succour and relief, had entirely failed.

I cannot think there is any sound theologic sense in which these things can be spoken of Christ, either in his agony in the garden, or his death upon the cross.

Verse 15. My strength is dried up] All these expressions mark a most distressed and hopeless case.

Into the dust of death] This means only that he was apparently brought nigh to the grave, and consequent corruption; this latter David saw; but Jesus Christ never saw corruption.

Verse 16. For dogs have compassed me] This may refer to 17 I may tell all my bones: they look and stare upon me.

the Gentiles, the Roman soldiers, and others by whom our Lord was surrounded in his trial, and at his cross.

They pierced my hands and my feet] The other sufferings David, as a type of our Lord, might pass through; but the piercing of the hands and feet was peculiar to our Lord; therefore, this verse may pass for a direct revelation.

But there is a various reading here which is of great importance. Instead of caaru, they pierced, some read caari, as a lion. This is to me most evidently the true reading.

Verse 17. I may tell all my bones] This may refer to the violent extension of his body when the whole of its weight hung upon the nails which attached his hands to the transverse beam of the cross. The body being thus extended, the principal bones become prominent, and easily discernible.

Verse 18. They part my garments] This could be true in no sense of David. The fact took place at the crucifixion of our Lord. Of this scripture the Roman soldiers knew nothing; but they fulfilled it to the letter. This was foreseen by the Spirit of God; and this is a direct revelation concerning Jesus Christ, which impresses the whole account with the broad seal of eternal truth.

Verse 19. Be not thou far from me] St. Jerome observes here, that it is the humanity of our blessed Lord which speaks to his divinity. Jesus was perfect man; and as man he suffered and died. But this perfect and sinless man could not have sustained those sufferings so as to make them expiatory had he not been supported by the divine nature. All the expressions in this psalm that indicate any weakness, as far as it relates to Christ (and indeed it relates principally to him), are to be understood of the human nature.

O my strength] The divinity being the power by which the humanity was sustained in this dreadful conflict.

Verse 20. Deliver my soul from the sword] Deliver naphshi my life; save me alive, or raise me again.

My darling] "My only one." The only human being that was ever produced since the creation, even by the power of God itself, without the agency of man.

Verse 21. Save me from the lion's mouth] Probably our Lord here includes his church with himself. The lion may then mean the Jews; the unicorns, remin (probably the rhinoceros), the Gentiles.

Verse 22. I will declare thy name unto my brethren] I will make a complete revelation concerning the God of justice and love, to my disciples; and I will announce to the Jewish people thy merciful design in sending me to be the Saviour of the world.

Verse 23. Ye that fear the LORD] Perhaps, by them that fear him, the Gentiles, and particularly the proselytes, may be intended.

Verse 24. For he hath not despised] It is his property to help and save the poor and the humble; and he rejects not the sighings of a contrite heart.

Verse 25. The great congregation] Here the Gentiles are probably meant. The Jewish nation was but a small number in comparison of the Gentile world. And those of the former who received the gospel were very few when compared with those among the Gentiles who received the divine testimony. The one was kahal, an assembly; the other was, is, and will be increasingly, kahal rab, a GREAT ASSEMBLY.

Verse 26. The meek shall eat] The poor shall eat. Those who offered the sacrifice, fed on what they offered. Jesus, the true Sacrifice, is the bread that came down from heaven; they who eat of this bread shall never die.

Verse 27. All the ends of the world] The gospel shall be preached to every nation under heaven; and not only the nations of the world shall receive the gospel as a revelation from God, but each family shall embrace it for their own salvation.

Verse 28. The kingdom is the Lord's] That universal sway of the gospel which in the New Testament is called the kingdom of God in which all men shall be God's subjects; and right-

Verse 29. All they that be fat upon earth] The rich, the great, the mighty, even princes, governors, and kings shall embrace the gospel. They shall count it their greatest honour to be called Christian.

That go down to the dust] Every dying man shall put his trust in Christ, and shall expect glory only through the great Saviour of mankind.

None can keep alive his own soul] The Vulgate has: "and my soul shall live to him, and my seed shall serve him." And with this agree the Syrian, Septuagint, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. I believe this to be the true reading.

Verse 30. Shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation] They shall be called Christians after the name of Christ.

Verse 31. Unto a people that shall be born] That is, one generation shall continue to announce unto another the true religion of the Lord Jesus; so that it shall be for ever propagated in the earth. Of his kingdom there shall be no end.

Some think the Psalm was written by David in his exile, which is not likely; others, that he penned it when he was finally delivered from the persecutions of Saul. I rather incline to the opinion that it was written after the captivity. It is a truly beautiful psalm.

Verse 1. The Lord is my shepherd] There are two allegories in this psalm which are admirably well adapted to the purpose for which they are produced, and supported both with art and elegance. The first is that of a shepherd; the second, that of a great feast, set out by a host the most kind and the most liberal. As a flock, they have the most excellent pasture; as guests, they have the most nutritive and abundant fare. God condescends to call himself the Shepherd of his people, and his followers are considered as a flock under his guidance and direction.

But who are his flock? All real penitents, all true believers; all who obediently follow his example, and in a holy life and conversation show forth the virtues of him who called them from darkness into his marvellous light.

But who are not his flock? Neither the backslider in heart, nor the vile Antinomian, who thinks the more he sins, the more the grace of God shall be magnified in saving him; nor those who fondly suppose they are covered with the righteousness of Christ while living in sin; nor the crowd of the indifferent and the careless, nor the immense herd of Laodicean loiterers; nor the fiery bigots who would exclude all from heaven but themselves, and the party who believe as they do.

I shall not want] How can they? He who is their Shepherd has all power in heaven and earth; therefore he can protect them. The silver and gold are his, and the cattle on a thousand hills; and therefore he can sustain them.

Verse 2. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures] Not green pastures, but cottages of turf or sods such as the shepherds had in open champaign countries; places in which themselves could repose safely; and pens thus constructed where the flock might be safe all the night. They were inclosures, and inclosures where they had grass or provender to eat.

Beside the still waters] Deep waters that the strongest heat could not exhale; not by a rippling current, which argues a shallow stream. Or perhaps he may here refer to the waters of Siloam, or Shiloa, that go softly, Isa. vii. 6, compared with the strong current of the Euphrates.

Verse 3. He restoreth my soul] Bring back my life from destruction; and convert my soul from sin, that it may 6 Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all not eternally perish. Or, After it has backslidden from him, heals its backslidings, and restores it to his favour.

In the paths of righteousness] "In the circuits" or "orbits of righteousness." In many places of Scripture man appears to be represented under the notion of a secondary planet moving round its primary; or as a planet revolving round the sun, from whom it receives its power of revolving, with all its light and heat. Thus man stands in reference to the Sun of righteousness; by his power alone is he enabled to walk uprightly; by his light he is enlightened; and by his heat he is vivified, and enabled to bring forth good fruit.

For his name's sake.] God's motives of conduct towards the children of men are derived from the perfections and goodness of his own nature.

Verse 4. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death] The reference is still to the shepherd. He knows all the passes, dangerous defiles, hidden pits, and abrupt precipices in the way; and he will guide me around, about, and through them.

For thou art with me] He who has his God for a companion, need fear no danger; for he can neither mistake his way nor be injured.

Thy rod and thy staff] Shibetcha, thy sceptre, rod, ensign of a tribe, staff of office; and thy staff, umishantecha, thy prop or support. The former may signify the shepherd's crook; the latter, some sort of rest or support, similar to our camp stool, which the shepherds might carry with them as an occasional seat, when the earth was too wet to be sat on with safety. With the rod or crook the shepherd could defend his sheep, and with it lay hold of their horns or legs to pull them out of thickets, bogs, pits, or waters. We are not to suppose that by the rod correction is meant: there is no idea of this kind either in the text, or in the original word; nor has it this meaning in any part of Scripture. The other term shaan signifies support, something to rest on, as a staff, crutch, stave, or the like.

Verse 5. Thou preparest a table, before me] Here the second allegory begins. A magnificent banquet is provided by a most liberal and benevolent host; who has not only the bounty to feed me, but power to protect me; and, though surrounded by enemies, I sit down to this table with confidence, knowing that I shall feast in perfect security.

Thou anointest my head with oil] Perfumed oil was poured on the heads of distinguished guests, when at the feasts of great personages. See Matt. xxvi. 6, 7; Mark, xiv. 8; Luke vii. 46.

My cup runneth over.] Thou hast not only given me abundance of food, but hast filled my cup with the best wine.

Verse 6. Goodness and mercy shall follow me] There seems to be an allusion here to the waters of the rock smitten by the rod of Moses, which followed the Israelites all the way through the wilderness, till they came to the Promised Land. I will dwell in the house, "and I shall return to the house of the Lord," for ever, "for length of days." During the rest of my life, I shall not be separated from God's house, nor from God's ordinances; and shall at last dwell with him in glory. These two last verses seem to be the language of a priest returned from captivity to live in the temple, and to serve God the rest of his life.

PSALM XXIV.

The Lord is Sovereign Ruler of the universe, 1, 2. The great question, Who is fit to minister to the Lord in his own temple? 3-6. The glory of God in his entrance into his temple, 7-10.

A Psalm of David.

THE earth is the LORD's, and the fulness thereof: the world and they that dwell therein.

2 For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods.

* Exod. ix. 29, xix. 5. Deut. x. 14. Job xli. 11. Ps. i. 12. 1 Cor. x. 28, 29.—b Gen. i. 9. Job xxxviii. 6. Ps. civ. 5. cxlvi. 6.

It is probable that this psalm was composed on occasion of bringing the ark from the house of Obadedom to Mount Zion, and the questions may respect the fitness of the persons who were to minister before this ark; the last verses may refer to the opening of the city gates in order to admit it.

Verse 1. The earth is the Lord's] Men may claim districts and kingdoms of it as their property, but God is Lord of the soil.

The fulness thereof] Every tree, plant, and shrub; the silver and the gold, and the cattle on a thousand hills.

Verse 2. He hath founded it upon the seas] He not only created the vast mass, but separated the land from the waters, so that the mountains, &c., being elevated above the waters, appear to be founded on them, and notwithstanding all the tossings and ragings of the ocean, these waters cannot prevail.

Verse 3. Who shall ascend] Who is sufficiently holy to wait in his temple? Who is fit to minister in the holy place?

3 Who shall ascend into the hill of the LORD? or who shall stand in his holy place?

Verse 4. He that hath clean hands] He whose conscience is irreprouchable; whose heart is without deceit, and uninfluenced by unholy passions.

Who hath not lifted up his soul] Who has no idolatrous inclination; whose faith is pure, and who conscientiously fulfils his promises and engagements.

Verse 5. He shall receive the blessing] Perhaps alluding to Obadedom, at whose house the ark had been lodged, and on whom God had poured out especial blessings.

And righteousness] Merit; every kind of necessary good. It is the mercy of God that crowns the obedience and fidelity of good men. For what made them good and faithful? God's mercy. What crowns their fidelity? God's mercy.

Verse 6. This is the generation] This is the description of people who are such as God can approve of and delight in. That seek thy face, O Jacob.] It is most certain that Eloeiy, O God, has been lost out of the Hebrew text in most and righteousness from the God of his salvation.

6 This is the generation of them that seek him, that seek thy face, O Jacob. Selah.

7 Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in.

MSS., but it is preserved in two of Kennicott's MSS, and also in the Syriac, Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. "Who seek thy face, O God of Jacob."

Verse 7. Lift up your heads, O ye gates] The address of those who preceded the ark, the gates being addressed instead of the keepers of the gates. Allusion is here made to the triumphal entry of a victorious general into the imperial city.

Everlasting doors] There seems to be a reference here to something like our portcullis, which hangs by pulleys above the gate, and can be let down at any time so as to prevent the gate from being forced. In the case to which the Psalmist refers, the portcullis is let down, and the persons preceding the ark order it to be raised.

Verse 8. Who is this King of glory?] This is the answer of those who are within.

The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle.] It is Jehovah, who is come to set up his abode in his imperial city: He who has conquered his enemies, and brought salvation to Israel. To make the matter still more solemn, and give those without an opportunity of describing more and mighty, the LORD mighty in battle.

9 Lift up your heads, O ye gates: even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in.

10 Who is this King of glory? The LORD of hosts, he is the King of glory. Selah.

particularly this glorious Personage, those within hesitate to obey the first summons; and then it is repeated, ver. 9,—

Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in.] To which a more particular question is proposed:—Who is He, this King of glory? To which an answer is given that admitted of no reply. The Lord of hosts—he who is coming with innumerable armies, He is this King of glory. On which, we may suppose, the portcullis was lifted up, the gates thrown open, and the whole cavalcade admitted.

Though this psalm has all the appearance of being an unfinished piece, yet there is a vast deal of dignity and majesty in it; and the demands from without, the questions from those within, and the answers to those questions partake of the true sublime; where nature, dignity, and simplicity are very judiciously mingled together. The whole procedure is natural, the language dignified, and the questions and answers full of simplicity and elevated sentiments.

Several, both among ancients and moderns, have thought this psalm speaks of the resurrection of our Lord, and is thus to be understood.

PSALM XXV.

The Psalmist, in great distress, calls upon God frequently, 1-5; prays for pardon with strong confidence of being heard, 6-11; shows the blessedness of the righteous, 12-14; again earnestly implores the divine mercy; and prays for the restoration of Israel, 15-22.

A Psalm of David.

UNTO thee, O LORD, do I lift up my soul.
2 O my God, I trust in thee: let me not be ashamed, let not mine enemies triumph over me.

3 Yea, let none that wait on thee be ashamed: let them be ashamed which transgress without cause.

This psalm seems to refer to the case of the captives in Babylon, who complain of oppression from their enemies, and earnestly beg the help and mercy of God.

It is the first of those called acrostic psalms, i. e., psalms each line of which begins with a several letter of the Hebrew alphabet, in their common order. Of acrostic psalms there are seven, viz., xv., xxxiv., xxxvii., cxl., cxli., cxix., and cxlv.

Verse 1. Do I lift up my soul.] His soul was cast down, and by prayer and faith he endeavours to lift it up to God.

Verse 2. I trust in thee] I depend upon thy infinite goodness and mercy for my support and salvation.

Let me not be ashamed] Hide my iniquity, and forgive my guilt.

Verse 3. Let none that wait on thee be ashamed] Though he had burden enough of his own, he felt for others in similar circumstances, and became an intercessor in their behalf.

Transgress without cause.] Perhaps bogedim may here mean idolatrous persons. "Let not them that wait upon and worship thee be ashamed: but they shall be ashamed who vainly worship, or trust in false gods."

Verse 4. Shew me thy ways] The Psalmist wishes to know God's way, and to be taught his path, and to be led into his truth. He cannot discern this way unless God show it; he cannot learn the path unless God teach it; and he cannot walk in God's truth unless God lead him: and even then, unless God continue to teach, he shall never fully learn the lessons of his salvation.

That he may get this showing, teaching, and leading, he comes to God, as the "God of his salvation;" and that he may not lose his labour, he "waits on him all the day."

Verse 6. Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies, and thy loving-kindnesses] The word rachamim, means the commiseration that a man feels in his bowels at the sight of his distress. The second word, chasadim, signifies those kindnesses which are the offspring of a profusion of benevolence.

They have been ever of old.] Thou wert ever wont to dis-pry thyself as a ceaseless fountain of good to all thy creatures.

Verse 7. Remember not the sins of my youth] Those which I have committed through inconsiderateness, and heat of passion.

According to thy mercy] As it is worthy of thy mercy to act according to the measure, the greatness, and general practice of thy mercy; so give me an abundant pardon, a plentiful salvation.

For thy goodness' sake] Goodness is the nature of God; mercy flows from that goodness.

Verse 8. Good and upright is the Lord] He is good in his nature, and righteous in his conduct.

Therefore will he teach sinners] Though they deserve nothing but destruction.

Verse 9. The meek will he guide] The poor, the distressed; he will lead in judgment—he will direct them in their cause, and bring it to a happy issue, for he will show them the way in which they should go.

Verse 10. All the paths of the Lord] Orchoth signifies the tracks or ruts made by the wheels of wagons by often passing over the same ground. Mercy and truth are the paths in which God constantly walks in reference to the children of men; and so frequently does he show them mercy, and so frequently does he fulfil his truth, that his paths are easily discerned. How frequent, how deeply indented, and how multiplied are those tracks to every family and individual! Wherever we go, we see that God's mercy and truth have been there by the deep tracks they have left behind them.

Verse 12. That feareth the Lord] Who has a proper apprehension of his holiness, justice, and truth; and who, at the same time, sees himself a fallen spirit, and a transgressor of God's holy law, and consequently under the curse.

Him shall he teach] Such a person has a teachable spirit. The way that he shall choose.] God will bless him in it, and give him as much earthly prosperity as may be useful to his soul in his secular vocation.

Verse 13. His soul shall dwell at ease] " Shall lodge in goodness;" this is the marginal reading in our Version; and is preferable to that in the text.

His seed shall inherit] His posterity shall be blessed. For them many prayers have been sent up to God by their pious father; and God has registered these prayers in their behalf.

Verse 14. The secret of the Lord is with them] God, the secret assembly of the Lord is with them that fear him; many of them have a church in their own house.

He will shew them his covenant.] He will let them see how great blessings he has provided for them that love him. Some refer this to the covenant of redemption by Christ Jesus.

Verse 15. Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord] All my expectation is from him alone. If I get at any time entangled, he will pluck my feet out of the net.

Verse 16. Turn thee unto me] Probably the prayer of the poor captives in Babylon, which is continued through this and the remaining verses.

Verse 17. The troubles of my heart are enlarged] The evils of our captive state, instead of lessening, seem to multiply, and each to be extended.

Verse 18. Look upon mine affliction] See my distressed condition, and thy eye will affect thy heart.

Forgive all my sins.] My sins are the cause of all my sufferings; forgive these.

Verse 19. Consider mine enemies] Look upon them, and thou wilt see how impossible it is that I should be able to resist and overcome them.

Verse 20. O keep my soul] Save me from sin, and keep me alive.

Verse 21. Let integrity and uprightness] I wish to have a perfect heart, and an upright life. This seems to be the meaning of these two words.

Verse 22. Redeem Israel, O God] The people are prayed for in the preceding verse as if one person; now he includes the whole, lest his own personal necessities should narrow his heart, and cause him to forget his fellow-sufferers.

The Psalmist appeals to God for his integrity, and desires to be brought to the divine test in order to have his innocence proved, 1-3; shows that he had avoided all fellowship with the wicked, and associated with the upright, 4-8; prays that he may not have his final lot with the workers of iniquity, 9, 10; purposes to walk uprightly before God, 11, 12.

A Psalm of David.

JUDGE me, O LORD; for I have walked in mine integrity: I have trusted also in the LORD; therefore I shall not slide.

2 Examine me, O LORD, and prove me; try my reins and my heart.

3 For thy loving-kindness is before mine eyes: and I have walked in thy truth.

4 I have not sat with vain persons, neither will I go in with dissemblers.

Ps. lxxiii. 13. 1 Tim. ii. 8.—

This psalm is attributed to David during his exile, when all manner of false accusations were brought against him at the court of Saul.

Verse 1. Judge me, O Lord] There are so many strong assertions in this psalm concerning the innocence and uprightness of its author, that many suppose he wrote it to vindicate himself from some severe reflections on his conduct or accusations relative to plots, conspiracies, &c.

I have walked in mine integrity] I have neither coveted nor endeavoured to possess myself of Saul's crown.

I have trusted] Had I acted otherwise, I could not have been prosperous; for thou wouldst not have worked miracles for the preservation of a wicked man.

I shall not slide] I shall be preserved from swerving from the paths of righteousness and truth.

Verse 2. Examine me, O Lord] To thee I appeal; and feel no hesitation in wishing to have all the motives of my heart dissected and exposed to thy view, and to that of the world.

Verse 3. For thy loving-kindness] A sense of thy favour and approbation was more to my heart than thrones and sceptres; and in order to retain this blessing, I have walked in thy truth.

Verse 4. I have not sat with vain persons] Men of lies, dissemblers, backbiters, &c.

Neither will I go in with dissemblers] The hidden ones, the dark designers, the secret plotters and conspirators in the state.

Verse 5. I have hated the congregation of evil doers] I have never made one in the crowds of discontented persons.

Verse 6. I will wash mine hands in innocency] Washing the hands was frequent among the Jews, and was sometimes an action by which a man declared his innocence of any base or wicked transaction. This Pilate did, to protest his innocence of the mal-treatment and death of Christ.

7 That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works.

9 Gather not my soul with sinners, nor my life with bloody men;

10 In whose hands is mischief, and their right hand is full of bribes.

11 But as for me, I will walk in mine integrity: redeem me and be merciful unto me.

So will I compass thine altar] It is a mark of respect among the Hindoos to walk several times round a superior, and round a temple.

Verse 7. That I may publish] I have endeavoured to act so as always to keep a conscience void of offence towards thee and towards man.

Verse 8. Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house] I have not been attentive to thine ordinances, merely because they were incumbent on me; but I have loved the place where thine honour dwelleth; and my delight in thy ordinances has made my attendance as pleasant as it was profitable.

Verse 9. Gather not my soul with sinners] As I have never loved their company, nor followed their practice, let not my eternal lot be cast with them!

Verse 10. Their right hand is full of bribes] He speaks of persons in office, who took bribes to pervert judgment and justice.

Verse 11. But as for me, I will walk in mine integrity] Whatever I may have to do with public affairs, shall be done with the strictest attention to truth, justice, and mercy.

Redeem me] From all snares and plots laid against my life and my soul.

And be merciful unto me] I deserve no good, but thou art merciful; deal with me ever in thy mercy.

Verse 12. My foot standeth in an even place] On the above principles I have taken my stand: to abhor evil; to cleave to that which is good; to avoid the company of wicked men; to frequent the ordinances of God; to be true and just in all my dealings with men; and to depend for my support and final salvation on the mere mercy of God.

Will I bless the Lord] In all my transactions with men, and in all my assemblings with holy people, I will speak good of the name of the Lord, having nothing but good to speak of that name.

PSALM XXVII

The righteous man's confidence in God, 1-3; his ardent desire to have the spiritual privilege of worshipping God in his temple, because of the spiritual blessings which he expects to enjoy there, 4-6; his prayer to God for continual light and salvation, 7-9; his confidence that, though even his own parents might forsake him, yet God would not, 10. Therefore he begs to be taught the right way to be delivered from all his enemies, and to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living, 11-13; he exhorts others to trust in God; to be of good courage; and to expect strength for their hearts, 14.

A Psalm of David.

THE LORD is ^a my light and ^b my salvation ; whom shall I fear ? ^c the LORD is the strength of my life ; of whom shall I be afraid ?

2 When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, ^d came upon me to ^e eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell.

3 ^f Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear : though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident.

4 ^g One thing have I desired of the LORD, that will I seek after ; that I may ^h dwell in the house of the LORD all the days of my life, to behold ⁱ the ^j beauty of the LORD, and to inquire in his temple.

5 For ^k in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion ; in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me ; he shall ^l set me up upon a rock.

6 And now shall ^m mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me ; therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices ⁿ of joy : I will sing, yea
I will sing praises unto the LORD.

Some commentators say that this is a psalm belonging to the captivity, and upon that system it may be well interpreted. It has also been contended that it was written by David after he had been in danger of losing his life by the hand of a gigantic Philistine, and must have perished had he not been succoured by Abishai ; see the account 2 Sam. xxi. 17 ; and was counselled by his subjects not to go out to battle any more, lest he should extinguish the light of Israel. To these advisors he is supposed to make the following reply :

Verse 1. The Lord is my light and my salvation] This light can never be extinguished by man ; the Lord is my salvation, my safeguard, my shield, and my defence ; of whom then should I be afraid ?

Verse 2. When the wicked—came upon me] They failed of their purpose, and fell ; the Philistine lost his own life.

Verse 3. Though an host should encamp against me] I am so confident of the Almighty's protection, that were I alone, and encompassed by a host, I would not fear.

Verse 4. One thing have I desired] If I am grown too old and from that circumstance unable to serve my country, I shall then prefer a retirement to the tabernacle, there to serve God the rest of my days. There I shall behold his glory, and there I may inquire and get important answers respecting Israel.

But though these words be thus interpreted, they more naturally belong to the captivity, and this verse especially shows the earnest longing of the captives to return to their own land, that they might enjoy the benefit of divine worship.

Verse 5. He shall hide me in his pavilion] I would make his temple my residence ; I would dwell with God, and be in continual safety. Pavilion signifies a tent made of cloth stretched out on poles, from pavilio a butterfly.

In the secret of his tabernacle] Were there no other place, he would put me in the holy of holies, so that an enemy would not dare to approach me.

He shall set me up upon a rock.] He shall so strengthen and establish me, that my enemies shall not be able to prevail against me. He shall hide me where they cannot find me, or put me out of the reach of the fiery darts of the wicked.
He who lives nearest to God suffers least from temptation.

7 Hear, O LORD, when I cry with my voice : have mercy also upon me, and answer me.

8 When thou saidst, ^a Seek ye my face ; my heart said unto thee, Thy face, LORD, will I seek.

9 ^b Hide not thy face far from me ; put not thy servant away in anger : thou hast been ^c my help ; leave me not, neither forsake me, O God of my salvation.

10 ^d When my father and my mother forsake me, then the LORD ^e will take me up.

11 ^f Teach me thy way, O LORD, and lead me in a ^g plain path, because of ^h mine enemies.

12 ⁱ Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies : for ^j false witnesses are risen up against me, and such as ^k breathe out cruelty.

13 I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the LORD ^l in the land of the living.

14 ^m Wait on the LORD : be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart : wait, I say, on the LORD.

Verse 6. Now shall mine head be lifted up] We shall most assuredly be redeemed from this captivity, and restored to our own land, and to the worship of our God in his own temple.

Verse 7. Hear, O Lord, when I cry] This is the utmost that any man of common sense can expect—to be heard when he cries. But there are multitudes who suppose God will bless them whether they cry or not ; and there are others, and not a few, who although they listlessly pray and cry not, yet imagine God must and will hear them !

Verse 8. When thou saidst, Seek ye my face] The true rendering of the original words I believe to be the following—“Unto thee, my heart, he hath said, Seek ye my face. Thy face, O Jehovah, I will seek. O my heart, God hath commanded thee to seek his face.”

Verse 9. Hide not thy face—from me] As my face is towards thee wheresoever I am, so let thy face be turned towards me.

Verse 10. When my father and my mother forsake me] Or, more literally, “For my father and my mother have forsaken me : but the Lord hath gathered me up.” My parents were my protectors for a time ; but the Lord has been my protector always.

Verse 11. Teach me thy way] Let me know the gracious designs of thy providence towards me, that my heart may submit to thy will.

And lead me in a plain path] In the path of righteou-ness, because mine enemies watch for my halting.

Verse 12. Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies] To their soul, their whole soul thirsts for my destruction.

Verse 13. I had fainted, unless I had believed] The words in italics supplied by our translators injure the sense. Throw out the words I had fainted, and leave a break after the verse, and the elegant figure of the Psalmist will be preserved :—“Unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living ;”—What ! what, alas !
should have become of me !

Verse 14. Wait on the Lord] All ye who are in distress, wait on the Lord. Take me for an example. I waited on him, and he strengthened my heart ; wait ye on him, and he will strengthen your heart.

PSALM XXVIII.

A righteous man in affliction makes supplication to God, and complains of the malice of his enemies, 1-4; whom he describes as impious, and whose destruction he predicts, 5. He blesses God for hearing his prayers, and for filling him with consolation, 6-7; then prays for God's people, 8-9.

Psalm of David.

UNTO thee will I cry, O LORD my rock; * be not silent ^b to me: ^c lest, if thou be silent to me, I become like them that go down into the pit.

2 Hear the voice of my supplications, when I cry unto thee, ^d when I lift up my hands ^e toward ^f thy holy oracle.

3 ^g Draw me not away with the wicked, and with the workers of iniquity, ^h which speak peace to their neighbours, but mischief is in their hearts.

4 ⁱ Give them according to their deeds, and according to the wickedness of their endeavours: give them after the work of their hands; render to them their desert.

* Ps. lxxxviii. 1.—^b Heb. from me —^c Ps. lxxxiv. 4. cxliii. 7.—^d 1 Kings vi. 22, 23. viii. 28, 29. —^e Ps. v. 7.—^f Or, toward the oracle of thy sanctuary.—^g Ps. cxxxviii. 2.—^h Ps. xxvi. 9.—ⁱ Ps. xii. 2. iv. 21. lxi. 4. Jer. ix. 8.—^j 2 Tim. iv. 14. Rev. xvii. 6.—^k Job xxxiv. 27. Isa.

This psalm is of the same complexion with the two preceding; and belongs most probably to the times of the captivity, though some have referred it to David in his persecutions.

Verse 1. O Lord my rock] Tsur not only means my rock, but my fountain, and the origin of all the good I possess.

If thou be silent] If thou do not answer in such a way as to leave no doubt that thou hast heard me, I shall be as a dead man. It is a modern refinement in theology which teaches that no man can know when God hears and answers his prayers, but by an induction of particulars, and by an inference from his promises. True religion knows nothing of these abominations; it teaches its votaries to pray to God, to expect an answer from him; and to look for the Holy Spirit to bear witness with their spirits that they are the sons and daughters of God.

Verse 2. Toward thy holy oracle] The original means that place in the holy of holies from which God gave oracular answers to the high-priest. This is a presumptive proof that there was a temple now standing; and the custom of stretching out the hands in prayer towards the temple, when the Jews were at a distance from it, is here referred to.

Verse 3. Draw me not away] Let me not be involved in the punishment of the wicked.

Verse 4. Give them] Is the same as thou wilt give them; a prophetic declaration of what their lot will be.

5 Because ^l they regard not the works of the LORD, nor the operation of his hands, he shall destroy them, and not build them up.

6 Blessed be the LORD, because he hath heard the voice of my supplications.

Verse 5. They regard not the works of the Lord] They have no knowledge of the true God, either as to his nature, or as to his works.

He shall destroy them, and not build them up] This is a remarkable prophecy, and was literally fulfilled: the Babylonian empire was destroyed by Cyrus, and never built up again; for he founded the Persian empire on its ruins.

Verse 7. The Lord is my strength] I have the fullest persuasion that he hears, will answer, and will save me.

Verse 8. The Lord is their strength] Some read leammo, to his people; and this reading makes the passage more precise and intelligible; of the truth of it there can be no reasonable doubt. "The Lord is the strength of his PEOPLE, and the saving strength of his anointed."

Verse 9. Save thy people] Continue to preserve them from all their enemies; from idolatry, and from sin of every kind.

Bless thine inheritance] They have taken thee for their God; thou hast taken them for thy people.

Feed them] Kaah signifies both to feed and to govern. Feed them as a shepherd does his flock; rule them, as a father does his children.

Lift them up for ever] Maintain thy true church; let no enemy prevail against it. Preserve and magnify them for ever.

PSALM XXIX.

The Psalmist calls upon the great and mighty to give thanks unto God, and to worship him in the beauty of holiness, on account of a tempest that had taken place, 1, 2. He shows the wonders produced by a thunder-storm, which he calls the voice of God, 3-9. Speaks of the majesty of God, 10; and points out the good he will do to his people, 11.

A Psalm of David.

GIVE unto the LORD, O ye mighty, give unto the LORD glory and strength.

2 Give unto the LORD the glory due unto his name: worship the LORD in the beauty of holiness.

3 The voice of the LORD is upon the waters: the God of glory thundereth: the LORD is upon many waters.

4 The voice of the LORD is powerful; the voice of the LORD is full of majesty.

5 The voice of the LORD breaketh the cedars; yea, the LORD breaketh the cedars of Lebanon.

^a1 Chron. xvi. 28, 29. Ps. xcvi. 7, 8, 9.—^b Heb. ye sons of the mighty.—^c Heb. the honour of his name.—^d Or, in his glorious sanctuary.—^e 2 Chron. xx. 21.—^f Job. xxxvii. 4, 5.—^g Or, great waters.—^h Heb. in power.—ⁱ Heb. in majesty.—^j Isa. li. 18.—^k Ps. cxiv. 4.—

This psalm was probably written to commemorate the abundant rain which fell in the days of David, after the heavens had been shut up for three years; 2 Sam. xxi. 1-10.

Verse 1. O ye mighty] "Sons of the strong ones," or "sons of rams." The Vulgate has, "Offer to the Lord, ye sons of God; offer to the Lord the sons of rams:" in this rendering agree the Septuagint, Aithiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon.

The whole psalm is employed in describing the effects produced by a thunder-storm which had lately taken place.

Verse 2. The glory due unto his name] Rather, the glory of his name. His name is Mercy; his nature is love. Ascribe mercy, love, power, and wisdom to him. All these are implied in the name Jehovah.

In the beauty of holiness.] "The beautiful garments of holiness." Let the priests and Levites put on their best and cleanest apparel; and let the whole service be conducted in such a way as to be no dishonour to the Divine Majesty. The Vulgate and others read, In the palace of his holiness. Let all go to the temple, and return thanks to God for their preservation during this dreadful storm.

Verse 3. The voice of the Lord] THUNDER, so called, Exod. ix. 28, 29; Job. xxxvii. 4; Ps. xviii. 18; Isa. xxx. 30.

Upon many waters.] The clouds, which Moses calls the waters, which are above the firmament.

Verse 4. Is powerful] There is no agent in universal nature so powerful as the electric fluid. It destroys life, tears castles and towers to pieces, rends the strongest oaks, and cleaves the most solid rocks: universal animate nature is awed and terrified by it.

Full of majesty.] No sound in nature is so tremendous and majestic as that of thunder; it is the most fit to represent the voice of God.

Verse 5. Breaketh the cedars] Very tall trees attract the 6 He maketh them also to skip like a calf; Lebanon and Sirion like a young unicorn.

7 The voice of the LORD divideth the flames of fire.

8 The voice of the LORD shaketh the wilderness; the LORD shaketh the wilderness of Kadesh.

9 The voice of the LORD maketh the hinds to calve, and discovereth the forests; and in his temple doth every one speak of his glory.

10 The LORD sitteth upon the flood; yea, the LORD sitteth King for ever.

11 The LORD will give strength unto his people; the LORD will bless his people with peace.

lightning from the clouds, by which they are often torn to pieces.

Verse 7. Divideth the flames of fire.] The forked zigzag lightning is the cause of thunder; and in a thunder-storm these lightnings are variously dispersed, smiting houses, towers, trees, men, and cattle, in different places.

Verse 8. The wilderness of Kadesh.] This was on the frontiers of Idumea and Paran.

Verse 9. Maketh the hinds to calve] Strikes terror through all the tribes of animals; which sometimes occasions those which are pregnant to cast their young.

Discovereth the forests] Makes them sometimes evident in the darkest night, by the sudden flash; and often by setting them on fire.

And in his temple] Does this refer to the effect which a dreadful thunder-storm often produces? Multitudes run to places of worship as asylums in order to find safety, and to pray to God.

Verse 10. The Lord sitteth upon the flood] "Jehovah sat upon the deluge." It was Jehovah that commanded those waters to be upon the earth. He directed the storm; and is here represented, after all the confusion and tempest, as sitting on the floods, appeasing the fury of the jarring elements; and reducing all things, by his governing influence, to regularity and order.

Sitteth King for ever.] He governs universal nature; whatsoever he wills he does, in the heavens above, in the earth beneath, and in all deep places. Every phenomenon is under his government and control.

Verse 11. The Lord will give strength] Prosperity in our secular affairs; success in our enterprises; and his blessings upon our fields and cattle.

The Lord will bless his people with peace.] The plentiful rain which God has now sent is a foretaste of his future blessings and abundant mercies.

PSALM XXX.

The Psalmist returns thanks to God for deliverance from great danger, 1-3. He calls upon the saints to give thanks to God at the remembrance of his holiness, because of his readiness to save, 4, 5. He relates how his mind stood affected before this great trial, and how soon an unexpected change took place, 6, 7; mentions how, and in what terms, he prayed for mercy, 8-10; shows how God heard and delivered him, and the effect it had upon his mind, 11, 12.

A Psalm and Song * at the dedication of the house of David.

I WILL extol thee, O LORD; for thou hast lifted me up, and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me.

2 O LORD my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me.

3 O LORD, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave; thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit.

4 Sing unto the LORD, O ye saints of his, and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness.

5 For his anger endureth but a moment; in his favour is life: weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.

6 And in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

This psalm or song is said to have been made or used at the dedication of the house of David, or rather the dedication of a house or temple; for the word David refers not to the house, but to the psalm. But what temple or house could this be? Calmet supposes it to have been made by David on the dedication of the place which he built on the threshing-floor of Araunah, after the grievous plague which had so nearly desolated the kingdom; 2 Sam. xxiv. 25; 1 Chron. xxi. 26. All the parts of the psalm agree to this; and I feel myself justified in modelling the comment on this principle alone.

Verse 1. I will extol thee—for thou hast lifted me up] Thou hast made me blessed, and I will make thee glorious.

In the psalm we find seven different states of mind distinctly marked; and as it is impossible for any man to have passed through all these states at the same time, it is supposed that the psalm, like many others of the same complexion, has been formed out of the memoranda of a diary.

Thou hast lifted me up] Out of the pit into which I had fallen: the vain curiosity, and want of trust in God, that induced me to number the people.

Verse 2. Thou hast healed me.] Thou hast removed the plague from my people by which they were perishing in thousands before my eyes.

Verse 3. Thou hast brought up my soul from the grave] I and my people were about to be cut off; but thou hast spared us in mercy, and given us a most glorious respite.

Verse 4. Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of his.] Ye priests, who wait upon him in his sanctuary, and whose business it is to offer prayers and sacrifices for the people, magnify him for the mercy he has now showed in staying this most destructive plague.

Give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness.] He who can give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness is one who loves holiness; who hates sin; who longs to be saved from it; and takes encouragement at the recollection of God's holiness, as he sees in this the holy nature which he is to share, and the perfection which he is here to attain.

Verse 5. For his anger endureth but a moment] There is an elegant abruptness in these words in the Hebrew text: "For a moment in his anger. Lives in his favour. In the 10 Hear, O LORD, and have mercy upon me: LORD, be thou my helper.

11 Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing: thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness; evening weeping may lodge: but in the morning exultation." This description of God's slowness to anger, and readiness to save, is given by a man long and deeply acquainted with God as his Judge and as his Father.

Verse 6. In my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.] Peace and prosperity had seduced the heart of David, and led him to suppose that his mountain—his dominion, stood so strong, that adversity could never affect him. See 2 Sam. xxiv.

Verse 7. Thou didst hide thy face] Thou didst show thyself displeased with me for my pride and forgetfulness of thee: and then I found how vainly I had trusted in an arm of flesh.

Verse 8. I cried to thee, O Lord] I found no help but in him against whom I had sinned. See 2 Sam. xxiv. 17.

Made supplication.] Continued to urge my suit; was instant in prayer.

Verse 9. What profit is there in my blood] My being cut off will not magnify thy mercy. If spared and pardoned, I will declare thy truth; I will tell to all men what a merciful and gracious Lord I have found.

Verse 11. Thou hast turned—my mourning into dancing] Rather into piping. I have not prayed in vain. Though I deserved to be cut off from the land of the living, yet thou hast spared me, and the remnant of my people.

Verse 12. To the end that my glory may sing] The word cabod, which we here translate glory, is sometimes taken to signify the liver. Here it is supposed to mean the tongue; why not the heart? But does not David mean, by his glory, the state of exaltation and honour to which God had raised him, and in which he had before too much trusted; forgetting that he held it in a state of dependence on God? Now he was disciplined into a better sentiment. My glory before had sung praise to myself; in it I had rested; on it I had presumed; and, intoxicated with my success, I sent Joab to number the people. Now my glory shall be employed for another purpose; it shall give thanks to God, and never be silent. I shall confess to all the world that all the good, the greatness, the honour, the wealth, prosperity, and excellence I possess, came from God alone; and that I hold them on his mere good pleasure.

PSALM XXXI.

The Psalmist, with strong confidence in God, in a time of distress prays earnestly for deliverance, 1-5. He expresses his abhorrence of evil, 6; gratefully mentions former interpositions of God, 7, 8; continues to detail the miseries of his case, 9-18; points out the privileges of them that fear God, 19, 20; shows that God had heard his prayers, notwithstanding he had given himself over for lost, 21, 22; calls on the saints to love God, and to have confidence in him, because he preserves the faithful, and plentifully rewards the proud doer, 23, 24.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

In thee, O LORD, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed: deliver me in thy righteousness.

2 Bow down thine ear to me; deliver me speedily: be thou my strong rock, for an house of defence to save me.

3 For thou art my rock and my fortress; therefore for thy name's sake lead me, and guide me.

4 Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me: for thou art my strength.

5 Into thine hand I commit my spirit: thou hast redeemed me, O LORD God of truth.

6 I have hated them that regard lying vanities: but I trust in the LORD.

7 I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy: for thou hast considered my trouble; thou hast known my soul in adversities;

8 And hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou hast set my foot in a large room.

9 Have mercy upon me, O LORD, for I am in trouble; mine eye is consumed with grief, yea, my soul and my belly.

10 For my life is spent with grief, and my years with sighing: my strength faileth because of mine iniquity, and my bones are consumed.

This Psalm contains no notes of time or place, to help us to ascertain when, where, or on what account it was written. Nor have we any certain evidence relative to the author: it might have been written by David during his persecution by Saul. Some think Jeremiah to have been the author: the thirteenth verse begins exactly with the same words as Jeremiah xx. 10.

Verse 1. In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust] I confide in thee for every good I need: let me not be confounded by not receiving the end of my faith, the supply of my wants, and the salvation of my soul.

Verse 2. Bow down thine ear] Put thy ear to my lips, that thou mayest hear all that my feebleness is capable of uttering.

Strong rock] Rocks, or caves in the rocks, were often strong places in the land of Judea.

Verse 4. Pull me out of the net] They have hemmed me in on every side, and I cannot escape but by miracle.

Verse 5. Into thine hand I commit my spirit] These words, as they stand in the Vulgate, were in the highest credit among our ancestors; by whom they were used in all dangers, difficulties, and in the article of death. For an ejaculation nothing can be better; and when the pious or the tempted with confidence use them, nothing can exceed their effect. These words are sanctified, or set apart, by the use made of them by our blessed Lord just before he expired on the cross. Luke xxiii. 46. St. Stephen uses nearly the same words, and they were the last that he uttered. Acts vii. 59.

Verse 6. I have hated them] Idolaters are the persons of whom David speaks.

I trust in the Lord] While they trust in vanities, vain things (for an idol is nothing in the world); and in lying vanities (for much is promised and nothing given); I trust in Jehovah, who is God all-sufficient, and is my Shepherd, and therefore I shall lack no good thing.

Verse 7. Thou hast known my soul in adversities] When all forsook me; when my enemies were sure that I could not escape; then I found thee to be my Friend and Supporter. Human friendships may fail; but the Friend of sinners never fails.

Verse 8. Thou hast set my foot in a large room] Many hair-breadth escapes David had for his life; at that time especially when, playing before Saul, the furious king took a spear and endeavoured to pierce him through the body, but 11 I was a reproach among all mine enemies, but especially among my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did see me without fled from me.

12 I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind: I am like a broken vessel.

13 For I have heard the slander of many: my fear was on every side: while they took counsel together against me, they devised to take away my life.

14 But I trusted in thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my God.

15 My times are in thy hand: deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me.

16 Make thy face to shine upon thy servant: save me for thy mercies' sake.

17 Let me not be ashamed, O LORD; for I have called upon thee: let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be silent in the grave.

18 Let the lying lips be put to silence: which speak grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous.

19 Oh how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee; which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men!

he escaped and got to the deserts. Here God, who had saved his life, set his feet in a large room.

Verse 9. Mine eye is consumed] Grief had brought many tears from his eyes, many agonies into his soul, and many distressful feelings into his whole frame.

My soul and my belly] The belly is often taken for the whole body. But the term belly or bowels, in such a case as this, may be the most proper; for in distress and misery, the bowels being the most tender part, and in fact the very seat of compassion, they are often most affected.

Verse 10. My life is spent with grief] My life is a life of suffering and distress, and by grief my days are shortened. Grief disturbs the functions of life, induces morbid action in the animal economy, and hastens death.

My years with sighing] Anachath. This is a mere natural expression of grief; the very sounds which proceed from a distressed mind; an-ach-ah! common, with little variation, to all nations, and nearly the same in all languages. Thousands of beauties of this kind are to be found in the sacred language.

Verse 11. I was a reproach] When proscribed by the court of Saul, my enemies triumphed, and loaded me with execrations; my neighbours considered me as a dangerous man, now deservedly driven from society; my acquaintance, who knew me best, were afraid to hold any communication with me; and they who saw me in my exile avoided me as if affected with a contagious disorder.

Verse 12. I am forgotten as a dead man] I am considered as a person adjudged to death. I am like a broken vessel—like a thing totally useless.

Verse 13. I have heard the slander of many] To this and the two foregoing verses the reader may find several parallels; Jer. xviii. 18 to the end of chap. xix., and ten first verses of chap. xx. This has caused several to suppose that Jeremiah was the author of this psalm.

Verse 14. But I trusted in thee] Hitherto thou hast been my Helper, and thou art my God; I have taken thee for my eternal portion.

Verse 15. My times are in thy hand] The events of my life are under thy control.

Verse 16. Make thy face to shine upon thy servant] Only let me know that thou art reconciled to and pleased with me, and then, come what will, all must be well.

Verse 17. Let the wicked be ashamed] Those who traduce

Verse 19. Oh how great is thy goodness] God's goodness is infinite; there is enough for all, enough for each, enough for evermore. It is laid up where neither devils nor men can reach it, and it is laid up for them that fear the Lord; therefore every one who trembles at his word, may expect all he needs from this Fountain that can never be dried up.

Which thou hast wrought] Thou hast already prepared it; thou hast provided it and proportioned it to the necessities of men, and all who trust in thee shall have it. And for them especially it is prepared who trust in thee before men—who boldly confess thee amidst a crooked and perverse generation.

Verse 20. Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence] "With the covering of thy countenance." To such a hiding-place Satan himself dare not approach. There the pride of man cannot come.

Thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion] Thou shalt put them in the innermost part of thy tent.

Verse 21. In a strong city.] If this psalm was written by David, this must refer to his taking refuge with Achish, king Verse 22. I said in my haste] Not duly advertent to the promise of God; however, I continued to pray, and thou didst hear the voice of my supplication.

Verse 23. O love the Lord, all ye his saints] It is only the saints that can love God, as they only are made partakers of the divine nature.

Preserveth the faithful] While a man is faithful to the grace he has received, that is, uses and improves the talents with which God has intrusted him, God's service is perfect freedom.

The proud doer.] A proud man is peculiarly odious in the sight of God; and in the sight of reason how absurd! A sinner, a fallen spirit, an heir of wretchedness and corruption—proud! Proud of what? Of an indwelling devil! Well; such persons shall be plentifully rewarded.

Verse 24. Be of good courage, and he shall strengthen your heart] They that hope in God, and are endeavouring to walk carefully before him, may take courage at all times, and expect the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of peace.

^a Or, A Psalm of David giving instruction.—^b Ps. lxxxv. 2. Rom. iv. 6, 7, 8.—^c 2 Cor. v. 19.—^d John i. 47.—^e 1 Sam. v. 6, 11. Job xxxiii.

The title of this psalm is A Psalm of David, giving instruction; so called by way of eminence, because it is calculated to give the highest instruction relative to the guilt of sin, and the blessedness of pardon and holiness, or justification and sanctification. [Or, according to Ewald, Maschil may be a musical term, indicating the necessity of great skill in execution.] It is supposed to have been composed after David's transgression with Bath-shebe, and subsequently to his obtaining pardon.

Verse 1. Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven] In this and the following verse four evils are mentioned: 1. Transgression, pešah. 2. Sin, chataah. 3. Iniquity, avon. 4. Guile, remiyah. The first signifies the passing over a boundary, doing what is prohibited. The second signifies the missing of a mark, not doing what was commanded; but is often taken to express sinfulness, or sin in the nature, producing transgression in the life. The third signifies what is turned out of its proper course or situation; any thing morally distorted or perverted. The fourth signifies fraud, deceit, guile, &c. To remove these evils, three acts are mentioned: forgiving, covering, and not imputing. 1. TRANSGRESSION must be forgiven, borne away, i. e., by a vicarious sacrifice; for bearing sin, or bearing away sin, 4 For day and night thy ^e hand was heavy upon me: my moisture is turned into the drought of summer. Selah.

5 I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. ^f I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the LORD; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah.

always implies this. 2. SIN must be covered, kesui, hidden from the sight. It is odious and abominable. 3. INIQUITY must not be reckoned to his account. 4. GUILT must be annihilated from the soul: In whose spirit there is no GUILT.

St. Paul quotes this passage, Rom. iv. 6, 7, to illustrate the doctrine of justification by faith.

Verse 3. When I kept silence] Before I humbled myself, and confessed my sin, my soul was under the deepest horror.

Verse 5. I acknowledged my sin] When this confession was made thoroughly and sincerely, and I ceased to cover and extenuate my offence, then thou didst forgive the iniquity of my sin.

Verse 6. For this shall every one that is godly] Because thou art merciful; because thou hast shown mercy to all who have truly turned to thee, and believed in thee; every one who fears thee, and hears of this, shall pray unto thee in an acceptable time, when thou mayest be found; in a time of finding. When the heart is softened and the conscience alarmed, that is a time of finding. God is ever ready; men are not so. Who can pray with a hard heart and a dark mind?

the floods beat against that godly man who prays to and trusts in God; "they shall not come nigh him," so as to weaken his confidence or destroy his soul. His house is founded on a rock.

Verse 7. Thou art my hiding place] An allusion, probably, to the city of refuge. The avenger of blood shall not be able to overtake me. And, being encompassed with an impregnable wall, I shall feel myself encompassed with songs of deliverance—I shall know that I am safe.

Verse 8. I will instruct thee] These are probably the Lord's words to David. I will give thee all the assistance requisite. I will keep mine eye upon thee, and thou shalt keep thine upon me: as I go, thou must follow me; and I will continually watch for thy good.

Verse 9. Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule] They will only act by force and constraint; be not like them; give a willing service to your Maker.

Verse 10. Many sorrows shall be to the wicked] Every wicked man is a miserable man. God has wedded sin and misery as strongly as he has holiness and happiness.

But he that trusteth in the Lord] Such a person is both safe and happy.

Verse 11. Be glad—and rejoice] Let every righteous soul rejoice and glory, but let it be in the Lord. Man was made for happiness, but his happiness must be founded on holiness; and holiness, as it comes from God, must be retained by continual union with him.

PSALM XXXIII.

The Lord is praised for his works of creation, 1-9; and for the stability of his own counsels, 10, 11. The blessedness of the people who have the knowledge of the true God, his grace, and providence, 12-15. The vanity of all earthly dependence, 16, 17. The happiness of them that fear God, and trust in his mercy, 18-22.

This psalm was probably intended as a hymn of praise in order to celebrate the power, wisdom, and mercy of God.

Verse 1. Rejoice in the Lord] It is very likely that the last verse of the preceding psalm was formerly the first verse of this. In the preceding psalm we have an account of the happiness of the justified man: in this, such are taught how to glorify God, and to praise him for the great things he had done for them.

Praise is comely for the upright.] It is right they should give thanks to him, who is the fountain whence they have received all the good they possess; and thankfulness becomes the lips of the upright.

Verse 2. Praise the Lord with harp] Kinnor; probably something like our harp; but Calmet thinks it the ancient testudo, or lyre with three strings.

The psaltery] Our translation seems to make a third instrument in this place, by rendering asor, an instrument of ten strings; whereas they should both be joined together, for nebel-asor signifies the nebel, or nablá, with ten strings, or holes.

Verse 3. Sing unto him a new song] Do not wear out the old forms; fresh mercies call for new songs of praise and gratitude.

Play skilfully with a loud noise.] Let sense and sound accompany each other; let the style of the music be suited to the words.

Verse 4. The word of the Lord is right] He is infinitely wise, and can make no mistakes; and all his works are done in truth. The dispensations of his providence and mercy are equally so.

Verse 5. He loveth righteousness] What he delights in himself, he loves to see in his followers.

The earth is full of the goodness of the Lord.] The overflowing kindness of God fills the earth. Even the iniquities of men are rarely a bar to his goodness: he causes his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends his rain upon the just and the unjust.

Verse 6. By the word of the Lord were the heavens made]—his evidently refers to the account c stands in the first chapter of Genesis.

Verse 9. Let all the earth fear the Lord] He who has thus bound, can unloose; he who has created, can destroy. He has promised life and prosperity only to the godly; let the ungodly stand in awe of him.

Verse 10. The counsel of the heathen to nought] This appears to refer to the useless attempts of ungodly nations or men to prevent the extension of the kingdom of Christ in the earth.

Verse 11. The counsel of the Lord] What he has determined shall be done.

Verse 12. Blessed is the nation] O how happy is that nation which has Jehovah for its Elohim; the self-existent and eternal Lord for its covenant God; one who should unite himself to it by connexions and ties the most powerful and endearing! The word Elohim, which we translate God, refers to that economy in which God is manifested in the flesh.

The people whom he hath chosen] The Jews, who were elected to be his heritage, whom he preserved as such for two thousand years, and whom he has reprobated because of their unbelief and rebellion, and elected the Gentiles in their place.

Verse 13. The Lord looketh from heaven] This and the following verse seem to refer to God's providence.

Verse 15. He fashioneth their hearts alike] He forms their hearts in unity; he has formed them alike: with the same powers, faculties, passions, &c.; body and spirit having the same essential properties in every human being.

Verse 16. There is no king saved by the multitude of an host] Even in the midst of the most powerful and numerous army, no king is in safety unless he have God's protection.

A mighty man is not delivered by much strength.] There are times in which his might can be of no avail to him: and unless he have the protection of God, there is no time in which his might may not be turned into weakness, his wisdom into folly, and his dignity into disgrace.

Verse 17. An horse is a vain thing for safety] Even the horse, with all its fleetness, is no sure means of escape from danger.

Verse 18. Behold, the eye of the Lord] One thing can never fail; "the eye of the Lord,"—the watchful providence of the Most High, "is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy."

Verse 19. To deliver their soul from death] To watch over and protect them in all sudden dangers and emergencies, so that they shall not lose their lives by any accident.

And to keep them alive in famine.] By extraordinary supplies granted them in an extraordinary manner.

Verse 20. Our soul waiteth] Our whole life is employed in this blessed work; we trust in nothing but him, "who is our help and our shield."

Verse 21. For our heart shall rejoice in him] Here is the fruit of our confidence: our souls are always happy, because we have taken God for our portion.

Verse 22. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us] We cannot abide in this state unless upheld by thee: and, as we disclaim all merit, we seek for a continuance of thy mercy; and this we cannot expect but in a continual dependence on thee.

PSALM XXXIV.

David praises God, and exhorts others to do the same, 1-3; shows how he sought the Lord, and how he was found of him, 4-6. All are exhorted to taste and see the goodness of God; with the assurance of support and comfort, 7-10. He shows the way to attain happiness and long life, 11-16; the privileges of the righteous, and of all who sincerely seek God, 17-22.

occasion of this psalm, as stated here, I have given my opinion in the notes on 1 Sam. xxi.

This is the second of the acrostic or alphabetical psalms, each verse beginning with a consecutive letter of the Hebrew alphabet. But in this psalm some derangement has taken place.

Verse 1. I will bless the Lord at all times] He has laid me under endless obligation to him, and I will praise him while I have a being.

Verse 2. My soul shall make her boast] Shall set itself to praise the Lord—shall consider this its chief work.

• The humble] Anavim, the afflicted, such as David had been.

Verse 3. Magnify the Lord with me] “Make greatness to Jehovah;” show his greatness; and “let us exalt his name;” let us show how high and glorious it is.

Verse 4. I sought the Lord] This is the reason and cause of his gratitude.

Verse 6. This poor man cried] “This afflicted man,” David.

Verse 7. The angel of the Lord encampeth round] I should rather consider this angel in the light of a watchman going round his circuit, and having for the objects of his especial care such as fear the Lord.

Verse 8. O taste and see that the Lord is good] Apply to him by faith and prayer; plead his promises, he will fulfil them; and you shall know in consequence, that the Lord is good. God has put it in the power of every man to know whether the religion of the Bible be true or false. The promises relative to enjoyments in this life are the grand tests of divine revelation. These must be fulfilled to all them who with deep repentance and true faith turn unto the Lord, if the revelation which contains them be of God. This is what is called experimental religion; the living, operative knowledge that a true believer has that he is passed from death unto life; that his sins are forgiven him for Christ's sake, the Spirit himself bearing witness with his spirit that he is a child of God. He knows that he is of God by the Spirit which God has given him.

Verse 9. There is no want to them that fear him.] Of things essential to happiness, whether spiritual or temporal, for this life or for that which is to come.

Verse 10. The young lions do lack] Instead of kephirim, the young lions, one of Kennicott's MSS. has cabbirim “powerful men.” The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, Syriac, and Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon have the same reading; and indeed the sense and connexion seem to require it.

Verse 11. Come, ye children] All ye that are of a humble, teachable spirit.

Verse 12. What man is he that desireth life] He who wishes to live long and to live happily, let him act according to the following directions.

Verse 17. The righteous cry] There is no word in the present Hebrew text for righteous; but all the Versions preserve it.

Verse 18. A broken heart] Broken to shivers. A contrite spirit.] “The beaten-out spirit.” In both words the hammer is necessarily implied; in breaking to pieces the ore first, and then plating out the metal when it has been separated from the ore. The broken heart, and the contrite spirit, are two essential characteristics of true repentance.

Verse 19. Many are the afflictions of the righteous] No commander would do justice to a brave and skilful soldier, by refusing him opportunities to put his skill and bravery to proof by combating with the adversary; or by preventing him from taking the post of danger when necessity required it. The righteous are God's soldiers. He suffers them to be tried, and sometimes to enter into the hottest of the battle; and in their victory the power and influence of the grace of God is shown, as well as their faithfulness.

Delivereth him out of them all.] He may well combat heartily, who knows that if he fight in the Lord, he shall necessarily be the conqueror.

Verse 20. He keepeth all his bones] He takes care of his life; and if he have scars, they are honourable ones.

Verse 21. Evil shall slay the wicked] The very thing in which they delight shall become their bane and their ruin.

They that hate the righteous] All persecutors of God's people shall be followed by the chilling blast of God's displeasure in this world; and if they repent not, shall perish everlastingly.

Verse 22. The Lord redeemeth] Both the life and soul of God's followers are ever in danger, but God is continually redeeming both.

Shall be desolate.] Literally, shall be guilty. They shall be preserved from sin, and neither forfeit life nor soul.

PSALM XXXV.

The Psalmist, in great straits, prays for his personal safety, 1-3; and for the confusion of his enemies, 4-8; expresses his confidence in God, 9, 10; mentions his kindness to those who had rewarded him evil for his good, 11-16; appeals to God against them, 17-26; prays for those who befriended him; and praises God for his

This psalm is simply attributed to David, and was most probably of his composing; and refers to the time of his persecution by Saul and his courtiers.

Verse 1. Plead my cause, O Lord] Literally, Contend Lord, with them that contend with me. The word is often used in a forensic or law sense.

Verse 2. Take hold of shield and buckler] Let them be discomfited in battle who are striving to destroy my life. It is by the shield and buckler of others, not any of his own, that God overthrows the enemies of his people.

Verse 3. Say unto my soul, I am thy salvation] Give me an assurance that thou wilt defend both body and soul against my adversaries.

Verse 4. Let them be confounded] The imprecations in these verses against enemies are all legitimate. They are not against the souls or eternal welfare of those sinners, but against their schemes and plans for destroying the life of an innocent man; and the holiest Christian may offer up such prayers against his adversaries.

Verse 5. Let the angel of the Lord chase them] By angel we may either understand one of those spirits, whether good or bad, commonly thus denominated, or any thing used by God himself as the instrument of their confusion.

Verse 6. Let their way be dark] All these phrases are military; and relate to ambushes, hidden snares, forced marches in order to surprise, and stratagems of different kinds.

Verse 7. For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit] Or rather: Without a cause they have hidden for me their net, without a cause they have digged a pit for my life.

Verse 9. My soul] My life, thus saved—Shall be joyful in the Lord] I am in the utmost danger of being destroyed by my foes: if I escape, it must be by the strong arm of the Lord; and to him shall the glory be given.

Verse 10. All my bones shall say] All the members of my body shall magnify thy saving mercy.

10 *All my bones shall say, LORD, °who is like unto thee, which deliverest the poor from him that is too strong for him, yea, the poor and the needy from him that spoileth him?

11 False °witnesses did rise up; °they laid to my charge things that I knew not.

12 °They rewarded me evil for good to the °spoiling of my soul.

13 But as for me, °when they were sick, my clothing was sackcloth: I °humbled my soul with fasting; °and my prayer returned into mine own bosom.

14 I °behaved myself °as though he had been my friend or brother: I bowed down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother.

15 But in mine °adversity they rejoiced, and gathered themselves together: yea, °°the abjects gathered themselves together against me, and I knew it not; they did °°tear me, and ceased not:

16 With hypocritical mockers in feasts, °°they gnashed upon me with their teeth.

17 LORD, how long wilt thou °°look on? rescue my soul from their destructions, °°my °°darling from the lions.

Deliverest the poor] This is a general maxim: God is peculiarly mindful of the poor. Where secular advantages are withheld, there is the more need for spiritual help.

Verse 11. False witnesses did rise up] There is no doubt that several of this kind were found to depose against the life of David; and we know that the wicked Jews employed such against the life of Christ. See Matt. xxvi. 59, 60.

Verse 12. To the spoiling of my soul] To destroy my life; so nephesh should be translated in a multitude of places, where our translators have used the word soul.

Verse 13. When they were sick] This might refer to the case of Absalom, who was much beloved of his father, and for whose life and prosperity he no doubt often prayed, wept, and fasted.

My prayer returned into mine own bosom] God did not permit me to pray in vain. My prayers were like alms given to the miserable for God's sake, who takes care to return to the merciful man tenfold into his bosom. The bosom is not only the place where the Asiatics carry their purses, but also where they carry any thing that is given to them.

Verse 14. Mourneth for his mother] Cabel em, °° a mourning mother. How expressive is this word!

Verse 15. The abjects] Smiters, probably hired assassins. They were every where lying in wait, to take away my life.

Verse 16. With hypocritical mockers in feasts] These verses seem to be prophetic of the treatment of Christ. They did tear me, and I knew it not. They blindfolded and buffeted him; they placed him in such circumstances as not to be able to discern who insulted him, except by a supernatural knowledge. With hypocritical mockers in feasts may also relate prophetically to our Lord's sufferings. Herod clothed him in a purple robe, put a reed in his hand for a sceptre, bowed the knee before him, and set him at nought. Here their hypocritical conduct (pretending one thing while they meant another) was manifest, and possibly this occurred at one of Herod's feasts.

Verse 17. My darling] See Ps. xxii. 20.

18 ^a I will give thee thanks in the great congregation: I will praise thee among ^b much people.

19 ^a Let not them that are mine enemies ^d wrongfully rejoice over me: neither ^e let them wink with the eye ^f that hate me without a cause.

20 For they speak not peace: but they devise deceitful matters against them that are quiet in the land.

21 Yea, they ^g opened their mouth wide against me, and said, ^h Aha, aha, our eye hath seen it.

22 This thou hast ⁱ seen, O LORD: ^j keep not silence: O LORD, be not ^k far from me.

23 ^l Stir up thyself, and awake to my judgment, even unto my cause, my God and my Lord.

Verse 18. I will give thee thanks in the great congregation] I hope to be able to attend at the tabernacle with thy followers, and there publicly express my gratitude for the deliverance thou hast given me.

Verse 19. That are mine enemies] Saul and his courtiers.

Verse 21. They opened their mouth wide] Gaped upon me to express their contempt.

And said, Aha, aha, our eye hath seen it.] They said heach, heach, the last syllable in each word being a protracted strongly guttural sound, marking insult and triumph at the same time.

Verse 22. This thou hast seen] I have no need to adduce evidences of these wrongs.

Verse 23. Stir up thyself, and awake to my judgment] I have delivered my cause into thy hand, and appeal to thee

Verse 27. Let them shout for joy, and be glad] While my enemies are confounded, let my friends exult in the Lord; and let them all praise him for his marvellous kindness to me.

Verse 28. And my tongue shall speak] I, who am chiefly concerned, and who have received most, am under the greatest obligation; and it will require the constant gratitude and obedience of my whole life to discharge the mighty debt I owe.

PSALM XXXVI.

The miserable state of the wicked, 1-4. The excellence of God's mercy in itself, and to his followers, 5-9. He prays for the upright, 10; for himself, that he may be saved from pride and violence, 11; and shows the end of the workers of iniquity, 12.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David the servant of the LORD.

THE transgression of the wicked saith within my heart, that ^a there is no fear of God before his eyes.

2 For ^b he flattereth himself in his own eyes, ^c until his iniquity be found to be hateful.

The title in the Hebrew is, To the conqueror, to the servant of Jehovah, to David. It is one of the finest psalms in the whole collection.

Verse 1. The transgression of the wicked saith within my heart] It is difficult to make any sense of this line as it now stands. But instead of libbi, my heart, four of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have libbo, his heart. "The speech of transgression to the wicked is in the midst of his heart." "There is no fear of God before his eyes." It is not by example that such a person sins; the fountain that sends forth the impure streams is in his own heart. The reading above proposed, and which should be adopted, is supported by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Syriac, Ethiopic,

^a deceit: ^b he hath left off to be wise, and to do good.

4 ^c He deviseth ^d mischief upon his bed; he setteth himself ^e in a way that is not good; he abhorreth not evil.

5 ^f Thy mercy, O LORD, is in the heavens; and thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds.

6 Thy righteousness is like ^g the great mountains;

Mic. ii. 1.—^h Or, vanity.—ⁱ Isa. lxx. 2.—^j Ps. lvii. 10. cviii. 4.—^k Heb. the mountains of God.

Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. The Psalmist here paints the true state of the Babylonians: they were idolaters of the grossest kind, and worked iniquity with greediness. The account we have in the book of Daniel of this people, exhibits them in the worst light; and profane history confirms the account.

Verse 2. For he flattereth himself] He endeavours to persuade himself that he may safely follow the propensities of his own heart, until his iniquity be found to be hateful. He sins so boldly, that at last he becomes detestable.

Verse 3. The words of his mouth are iniquity] In the principle; and deceit calculated to pervert others, and lead them astray.

* thy judgments are a great deep: O LORD, ^b thou preservest man and beast.

7 *How ^d excellent is thy loving-kindness, O God! therefore the children of men * put their trust under the shadow of thy wings.

8 *They shall be ^e abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house; and thou shalt make them drink of ^h the river ^l of thy pleasures.

He hath left off to be wise, and to do good.] His heart is become foolish, and his actions wicked. He has cut off the connexion between himself and all righteousness.

Verse 4. He deviseth mischief upon his bed.] He seeks the silent and undisturbed watohes of the night, in order to fix his plans of wickedness.

He setteth himself.] Having laid his plans, he fixes his purpose to do what is bad; and he does it without any checks of conscience or abhorrence of evil. A finished character of a perfect sinner.

Verse 5. Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens.] That is, thou art abundant, infinite in thy mercy; else such transgressors must be immediately out off; but thy long-suffering is intended to lead them to repentance.

Thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds.] Ad shechakim, to the eternal regions; above all visible space.

Verse 6. Thy righteousness is like the great mountains.] Like the mountains of God; exceeding high mountains.

Thy judgments are a great deep.] The great abyss; as incomprehensible as the great chaos, Gen. i. 2; and darkness was on the face, tekoh, of the deep, the vast profound, or what is below all conjecturable profundity. How astonishing are the thoughts in these two verses! What an idea do they give us of the mercy, truth, righteousness, and judgments of God!

Man and beast.] So infinitely and intensely good is the nature of God, that it is his delight to make all his creatures happy. He preserves the man, and he preserves the beast; and it is his providence which supplies the man, when his propensities and actions level him with the beasts that perish.

Verse 7. How excellent is thy loving-kindness.] How indescribably excellent, abundant, and free; and, "therefore the children of Adam put their trust under the shadow of thy wings." They trust in thy good providence for the supply of their bodies; they trust in thy mercy for the salvation of their souls. These, speaking after the figure, are the two wings of the divine goodness, under which the children of men take refuge. The allusion may be to the wings of the cherubim, above the mercy-seat.

Verse 8. They shall be abundantly satisfied.] Shall be saturated, as a thirsty field is by showers from heaven. Inebriabuntur, they shall be inebriated.—Vulgate. This refers to the joyous expectation they had of being restored to their own land, and to the ordinances of the temple.

Of the river of thy pleasures.] They shall be restored to their paradisaical estate; for here is a reference to the river that ran through the garden of Eden, and watered it; Gen. ii. 10. Or the temple, and under it, the Christian Church, 9 *For with thee is the fountain of life: * in thy light shall we see light.

10 O ^l continue thy loving-kindness ^m unto them that know thee; and thy righteousness to the ^a upright in heart.

11 Let not the foot of prida come against me, and let not the hand of the wicked remove me.

12 There are the workers of iniquity fallen: they are cast down, ^o and shall not be able to rise.

may be compared to this Eden; and the gracious influences of God to be had in his ordinances, to the streams by which that garden was watered, and its fertility promoted.

Verse 9. For with thee is the fountain of life.] This, in Scripture phrase, may signify a spring of water; for such was called among the Jews living water, to distinguish it from ponds, tanks, and reservoirs, that were supplied by water either received from the clouds, or conducted into them by pipes and streams from other quarters. But there seems to be a higher allusion in the sacred text: "For with thee is the vein of lives." Does not this allude to the great aorta, which, receiving the blood from the heart, distributes it by the arteries to every part of the human body, whence it is conducted back to the heart by means of the veins. As the heart, by means of the great aorta distributes the blood to the remotest parts of the body; so God, by Christ Jesus, conveys the life-giving streams of his providential goodness to all the worlds and beings he has created, and the influences of his grace and mercy to every soul that has sinned. All spiritual and temporal good comes from Him, the FATHER, through Him, the SON, to every part of the creation of God.

In thy light shall we see light.] No man can illuminate his own soul; all understanding must come from above. Here the metaphor is changed, and God is compared to the sun in the firmament of heaven, that gives light to all the planets and their inhabitants. This is literally true, both in a spiritual and philosophical sense.

Verse 10. O continue thy loving-kindness.] Literally "Draw out thy mercy." The allusion to the spring is still kept up.

Unto them that know thee.] To them who acknowledge thee in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation.

To the upright in heart.] To the straight of heart; to those who have but one end in view, and one aim to that end. This is true of every genuine penitent, and of every true believer.

Verse 11. Let not the foot of pride come against me.] Let me not be trampled under foot by proud and haughty men.

Let not the hand of the wicked remove me.] Both these verses may have immediate respect to the captives in Babylon.

Verse 12. There are the workers of iniquity fallen.] A prophecy of the destruction of the Babylonish empire by Cyrus. That it was destroyed, is an historical fact; that they were never able to recover their liberty, is also a fact; and that Babylon itself is now blotted out of the map of the universe so that the site of it is no longer known, is confirmed by every traveller who has passed over those regions. [This, of course, is no longer correct. See Layard's Nineveh and Babylon.]

PSALM XXXVII

Godly directions for those who are in adversity not to envy the prosperity of the wicked, because it is superficial, and of short duration, 1-22; to put their confidence in God, and live to his glory, as this is the sure way to be happy in this life, and in that which is to come, 23-40.

A Psalm of David.

FRET not thyself because of evil doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity.

2 For they shall soon be cut down ^b like the grass, and wither as the green herb.

3 Trust in the LORD, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and ^c verily thou shalt be fed.

4 ^d Delight thyself also in the LORD; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart.

5 ^e Commit ^f thy way unto the LORD; trust also in him, and he shall bring ^g it to pass.

6 ^h And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday.

7 ⁱ Rest ^j in the LORD, ^k and wait patiently for him: ^l fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass.

8 Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; ^m fret not thyself in any wise to do evil.

9 ⁿ For evil-doers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the LORD, they shall ^o inherit the earth.

10 For ^p yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, ^q thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be.

In the title this psalm is attributed to David by the Hebrew, and by most of the Versions: but it is more likely it was intended as an instructive and consoling ode for the captives in Babylon, who worshipped the true God, in affliction and slavery. Their return to their own land is predicted in not less than ten different places in this psalm.

This psalm is one of the acrostic or alphabetical kind: but it differs from those we have already seen, in having two verses under each letter; the first only exhibiting the alphabetical letter consecutively.

Verse 1. Fret not thyself because of evildoers] It is as foolish as it is wicked to repine or be envious at the prosperity of others. It is God who is the dispenser of the bounty they enjoy; and, most assuredly, he has a right to do what he will with his own. To be envious in such a case is to arraign the providence of God.

Verse 2. For they shall soon be cut down] They have their portion in this life; and their enjoyment of it cannot be long.

Verse 3. Dwell in the land] Do not flee to foreign climes to escape from that providence which, for thy own good, denies thee affluence in thine own country.

And verily thou shalt be fed.] God will provide for thee the necessities of life: its conveniences might damp thy intellect in its inventions, and lead thee into idleness; and its superfluities would induce thee to pamper thy passions till the concerns of thy soul would be absorbed in those of the flesh; and, after having lived an animal life, thou mightest die without God, and perish everlastingly.

Verse 4. Delight thyself also in the Lord] Expect all thy happiness from him, and seek it in him.

The desires of thine heart.] The petitions. The godly man never indulges a desire which he cannot form into a prayer to God.

Verse 5. Commit thy way unto the Lord] ROLL thy way upon the Lord: probably a metaphor taken from the camel, who lies down till his load be rolled upon him.

He shall bring it to pass.] "He will work." Trust God, and he will work for thee.

Verse 6. Thy righteousness as the light] He shall say, Let thy innocency appear, and it will appear as suddenly and as evident as the light was at the beginning.

Verse 7. Rest in the Lord] "Be silent, be dumb." Do not find fault with thy Maker; he does all things well for others, he will do all things well for thee.

11 ^a But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

12 The wicked ^b plotteth against the just, ^c and gnasheth upon him with his teeth.

13 ^d The LORD shall laugh at him; for he seeth that ^e his day is coming.

14 The wicked have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and to slay ^f such as be of upright conversation.

15 ^g Their sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken.

16 ^h A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked.

17 For ⁱ the arms of the wicked shall be broken: but the LORD upholdeth the righteous.

18 ^j The LORD ^k knoweth the days of the upright: and their inheritance shall be ^l for ever.

19 They shall not be ashamed in the evil time: and ^m in the days of famine they shall be satisfied.

20 But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the LORD shall be as ⁿ the fat of lambs: they shall consume; ^o into smoke shall they consume away.

21 The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again: but the ^p righteous sheweth mercy, and giveth.

And wait patiently for him] Set thyself to expect him; and be determined to expect, or wait for him.

Verse 9. They shall inherit the earth.] The word arets, throughout this psalm, should be translated land, not earth; for it is most probable that it refers to the land of Judea.

Verse 10. For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be] A prediction of the destruction of Babylon. This empire was now in its splendour; and the captives lived to see it totally overturned by Cyrus, so that even the shadow of its power did not remain.

Thou shalt diligently consider his place] The ruler is killed; the city is taken; and the whole empire is overthrown in one night! And now even the place where Babylon stood cannot be ascertained. [The site has been discovered.]

Verse 11. But the meek] The afflicted, the poor Jewish captives.

Shall inherit the earth] The land of Judea, given by God himself as an inheritance to their fathers, and to their posterity for ever.

Verse 13. He seeth that his day is coming.] The utter desolation of your oppressors is at hand. All this may be said of every wicked man.

Verse 14. The wicked have drawn out the sword] There is an irreconcilable enmity in the souls of sinners against the godly; and there is much evidence that the idolatrous Babylonians maligned the poor captives, and insulted them in every possible way.

Verse 15. Their sword shall enter into their own heart] All their execrations and maledictions shall fall upon themselves, and their power to do mischief shall be broken.

Verse 16. A little that a righteous man hath] Whatever a good man has, has God's blessing on it; even the blessings of the wicked are cursed.

Verse 17. The arms of the wicked] Talents lent and abused shall be resumed, and the misuser called to a severe account by the Lord of the talents.

Verse 18. The Lord knoweth the days of the upright] He is acquainted with all his circumstances, sufferings, and ability to bear them; and he will either shorten his trials, or increase his power. The Lord also approves of the man and his concerns; and his inheritance shall be for ever. He shall have God for his portion, here and hereafter.

Verse 20. The enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs] That is, as the fat is wholly consumed in sacrifices by the fire on the altar, so shall they consume away in the fire of God's wrath.

21 Forsake me not, O LORD : O my God, * be not far from me.

halting ; and when my foot slipped, they rejoiced that I had fallen into sin !

Verse 17. For I am ready to halt] Literally, I am prepared to halt. So completely infirm is my soul, that it is impossible for me to take one right step in the way of righteousness, unless strengthened by thee.

Verse 18. I will declare mine iniquity] I will confess it with the deepest humiliation and self-abasement.

Verse 19. But mine enemies are lively] Instead of chayyim, lively, I would read chinam, without cause ; a change made by the half of one letter. See the parallel places, Ps. xxxv. 19, lxxix. 5.

22 Make haste ^b to help me, O LORD ^c my salvation.

* Ps. xxvii. 1, lxii. 2, 6. Isa. xli. 2.

Verse 20. Because I follow the thing that good is.] The translation is as bad as the sentence is awkward : because I follow goodness.

Verse 21. Forsake me not, O Lord] Though all have forsaken me, do not thou.

Be not far from me.] Though my friends keep aloof, be thou near to help me.

Verse 22. Make haste to help me] Whoever carefully reads over this psalm will see what a grievous and bitter thing it is to sin against the Lord, and especially to sin after having known his mercy, and after having escaped from the corruption that is in the world.

PSALM XXXIX.

The Psalmist's care and watchfulness over his thoughts, tongue, and actions, 1-3. He considers the brevity and uncertainty of human life, 4-7 ; prays for deliverance from sin, 8-11 ; and that he may be protected and spared till he is fitted for another world, 12, 13.

To the chief Musician, even to *Jeduthun, A Psalm of David.

I SAID, I will ^b take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue : I will keep ^c my ^d mouth with a bridle, ^e while the wicked is before me.

2 I was dumb with silence, and I held my peace, even from good ; and my sorrow was ^f stirred.

3 My heart was hot within me, while I was musing ^h the fire burned : then spake I with my tongue.

It is supposed that Jeduthun in the title is the same with Ethan, 1 Chron. vi. 44, compared with 1 Chron. xvi. 41 ; and is there numbered among the sons of Merari. And he is supposed to have been one of the four masters of music, or leaders of bands, belonging to the temple. It is very likely that this psalm was written on the same occasion with the preceding.

Verse 1. I said, I will take heed to my ways] I must be cautious because of my enemies ; I must be patient because of my afflictions ; I must be watchful over my tongue, lest I offend my God, or give my adversaries any cause to speak evil of me.

Verse 2. I held my peace, even from good] I spoke nothing, either good or bad. I did not even defend myself.

My sorrow was stirred.] It is a hard thing to be denied the benefit of complaint in sufferings, as it has a tendency to relieve the mind, and indeed, in some sort, to call off the attention from the place of actual suffering ; and yet undue and extravagant complaining enervates the mind, so that it becomes a double prey to its sufferings.

Verse 3. My heart was hot within me] A natural feeling of repressed grief.

While I was musing] A metaphor taken from vegetables, which, being heaped together, begin to heat and ferment, if not scattered and exposed to the air ; and will soon produce Verse 4. Lord, make me to know mine end] I am weary of life ; I wish to know the measure of my days, that I may see how long I have to suffer, and how frail I am.

Verse 5. And mine age is as nothing] Keen, as if it were not before thee. All time is swallowed up in thy eternity.

Verily every man at his best state] "Every man that exists, is vanity." All his projects, plans, schemes, &c., soon come to nothing. His body also moulders with the dust, and shortly passes both from the sight and remembrance of men.

Verse 6. Walketh in a vain shew] He is but the semblance of being ; he appears for a while, and then vanishes away. He heapeth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them.] He raketh together. This is a metaphor taken from agriculture : the husbandman rakes the corn, &c., together in the field, and yet, so uncertain is life, that he knows not who shall gather them into the granary !

Verse 7. And now, Lord, what wait I for ?] Have I any object of pursuit in life, but to regain thy favour and thine image.

Verse 8. Deliver me from all my transgressions] Grant it, "that I be not the reproach of the foolish" (the godless and the profane), who deride my expectation, and say no

Verse 10. Remove thy stroke away from me] This seems to be a figure taken from the case of a gladiator, or persons contending in single combat. One is wounded so as to be able to maintain the fight no longer: he therefore gives in, and prays his adversary to spare his life.

Verse 11. When thou with rebukes dost correct man] A metaphor taken from the case of a culprit, who, by the arguments of counsel, and the unimpeachable evidence of witnesses, has the facts all proved against him, grows pale, looks terrified; his fortitude forsakes him, and he faints in court.

12 Hear my prayer, O LORD, and give ear unto my cry; hold not thy peace at my tears: ^f for I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, ^g as all my fathers were.

13 ^h O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and ⁱ be no more.

2 Cor. v. 6. Heb. xi. 18. 1 Pet. i. 17. II. 11.—^g Gen. xiv. 9.—^h Job. x. 20, 21. xiv. 5, 6.—ⁱ Job xiv. 10, 11, 12.

Surely every man is vanity.] He is incapable of resistance: he falls before his Maker; and none can deliver him but his Sovereign and Judge, against whom he has offended.

Verse 12. I am a stranger with thee] I have not made this earth my home; I have not trusted in any arm but thine. Like my fathers, I looked for a city that has permanent foundations, in a better state of being.

Verse 13. O spare me] Take me not from this state of probation till I have a thorough preparation for a state of blessedness. This he terms recovering his strength—being restored to the favour and image of God, from which he had fallen.

PSALM XL.

The benefit of confidence in God, 1-3. The blessedness of those who trust in God, 4, 5. The termination of the Jewish sacrifices in that of Christ, 6-8. The Psalmist's resolution to publish God's goodness, 9, 10; he prays to be delivered from evils, 11-13; against his enemies, 14, 15; and in behalf of those who were destitute, 16, 17.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

I WAITED ^b patiently for the LORD; and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry.

2 He brought me up also out of ^c an horrible pit, out of ^d the miry clay, and ^e set my feet upon a rock, and ^f established my goings.

^a Heb. In waiting I waited.—^b Ps. xxvii. 14. xxxvii. 7.—^c Heb. a pit of notes.—^d Ps. lxxix. 2, 14.—^e Ps. xxvii. 5.—^f Ps. xxxvii. 23.—^g Ps. xxxiii. 3.—^h Ps. lli. 6.—ⁱ Ps. xxxiv. 8. Jer. xvii. 7.—^j Ps. ci. 3, 7.—

Concerning the occasion and author of this psalm there has been a strange and numerous diversity of opinions. I am satisfied the psalm was composed by David, and about the same time and on the same occasion as the two preceding; with this difference, that here he magnifies God for having bestowed the mercy which he sought there. It is therefore, a thanksgiving for his recovery from the sore disease by which he was afflicted in his body, and for his restoration to the divine favour. The sixth, seventh, and eighth verses contain a remarkable prophecy of the incarnation and sacrificial offering of Jesus Christ.

Verse 1. I waited patiently for the Lord] The two preceding psalms are proofs of the patience and resignation with which David waited for the mercy of God.

And heard my cry.] The two preceding psalms show how he prayed and waited; this shows how he succeeded.

Verse 2. An horrible pit] Literally, the sounding pit; where nothing was heard except the howlings of wild beasts, or the hollow sounds of winds reverberated and broken from the craggy sides and roof.

The miry clay] Where the longer I staid the deeper I sank, and was utterly unable to save myself. These are figurative expressions to point out the dreary, dismal, ruinous state of sin and guilt, and the utter inability of a condemned sinner to save himself either from the guilt of his conscience, or the corruption of his heart.

Set my feet upon a rock] Thou hast changed my state from guilt to pardon; from corruption to holiness; in consequence of which my goings are established.

Verse 3. A new song] Cheerfulness and joy had long been strangers to him. Praise for a sense of God's favour was a 3 ^g And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God: ^h many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the LORD.

4 ⁱ Blessed is that man that maketh the LORD his trust, and ^j respecteth not the proud, nor such as ^k turn aside to lies.

5 ^l Many, O LORD my God, are thy wonderful new song to him. The word is often used to signify excellence: I will sing a most excellent and eminent song.

Many shall see it] I will publish it abroad; and fear—to sin against the Lord, knowing by my example what a grievous and bitter thing it is.

And shall trust in the Lord.] Even the worst of sinners shall not despair of mercy, being penitent, when they see that I have found favour in his sight.

Verse 4. Blessed is that man] The man must be blessed and happy who casts his soul, with all its burden of sin and wretchedness, at the footstool of God's mercy; for he will save all who come to him through the Son of his love.

Verse 5. Many—are thy wonderful works] The Psalmist seems here astonished and confounded at the counsels, loving-kindnesses, and marvellous works of the Lord, not in nature, but in grace.

Verse 6. Sacrifice and offering] The apostle, Heb. x. 5, &c., quoting this and the two following verses, says, When he (the Messiah) cometh into the world—was about to be incarnated, He saith, to God the Father, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not—it was never thy will and design that the sacrifices under thy own law should be considered as making atonement for sin; they were only designed to point out my incarnation and consequent sacrificial death; and therefore a body hast thou prepared me, by a miraculous conception in the womb of a virgin.

A body hast thou prepared me.—The quotation of this and the two following verses by the apostle, Heb. x. 5, &c., is taken from the Septuagint, with scarcely any variety of reading: but, although the general meaning is the same, they are widely different in verbal expression in the Hebrew.

works which thou hast done, *and thy thoughts which are to us-ward: ^b they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee; ^c if I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered.

⁶ * Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; mine ears hast thou ^d opened: burnt-offering and sin-offering hast thou not required.

⁷ Then said I, Lo, I come: in the volume of the book ^e it is written of me.

⁸ * I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is ^f within ^h my heart.

⁹ * I have preached righteousness in the great congregation: lo, ⁱ I have not refrained my lips, O LORD, ^k thou knowest.

¹⁰ * I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart; I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation: I have not concealed thy loving-kindness and thy truth from the great congregation.

¹¹ Withhold not thou thy tender mercies from

* Isa. lv. 8.—^b Or, none can order them unto thee.—¹ Sam. xv. 22. Ps. xl. 8. 1. 8. 11. 16. Prov. xxi. 3. Eccles. v. 1. Isa. i. 11. lxxi. 3. Hos. vi. 6. Matt. ix. 13. xii. 7. David's words might be more properly rendered, My ears hast thou bored; that is, thou hast made me thy servant for ever, to dwell in thine own house: for the allusion is evidently to the custom mentioned, Exod. xxi. 2, &c.

But how is it possible that the Septuagint and the apostle should take a meaning so totally different from the sense of the Hebrew? Dr. Kennicott supposes that the Septuagint and apostle express the meaning of the words as they stood in the copy from which the Greek translation was made; and that the present Hebrew text is corrupted. On his supposition, the ancient copy translated by the Septuagint, and followed by the apostle, must have read the text thus: Then a body hast thou prepared me: thus the Hebrew text, the version of the Septuagint, and the apostle will agree in what is known to be an indisputable fact in Christianity; namely, that Christ was incarnated for the sin of the world.

It is remarkable, that all the offerings and sacrifices which were considered to be of an atoning or cleansing nature, offered under the law, are here enumerated by the Psalmist and the apostle, to show that none of them, nor all of them, could take away sin; and that the grand sacrifice of Christ was that alone which could do it.

Verse 7. In the volume of the book] "In the roll of the book." Anciently, books were written on skins, and rolled up. Among the Romans, these were called volumina, from volvo, I roll; and the Pentateuch in the Jewish synagogues is still written in this way. There are two wooden rollers; on one they roll on, on the other they roll off, as they proceed in reading. The book mentioned here must be the Pentateuch, or five books of Moses; for, in David's time, no other part of divine revelation had been committed to writing.

Verse 8. To do thy will] God willed not the sacrifices under the law, but he willed that a human victim of infinite merit should be offered for the redemption of mankind.

Hence we see that the sovereign WILL of God is that Jesus should be incarnated; and that the introduction of the Messiah into the world should be the abolition of the law; and that his sacrifice should last for ever.

Verse 9. I have preached righteousness] I think it best to refer these words to Christ and his apostles. In consequence of his having become a sacrifice for sin, the Jewish sacrificial system being ended, the middle wall of partition was broken down, and the door of faith, the doctrine of justification by faith, opened to the Gentiles.

The great congregation, both in this and the following verse, I think, means the Gentiles, contradistinguished from the Jews.

me, O LORD: * let thy loving-kindness and thy truth continually preserve me.

¹² For innumerable evils have compassed me about: * mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of mine head: therefore ^o my heart ^p faileth me.

¹³ * Be pleased, O LORD, to deliver me: O LORD, make haste to help me.

¹⁴ * Let them be ashamed and confounded together that seek after my soul to destroy it; let them be driven backward and put to shame that wish me evil.

¹⁵ * Let them be ^q desolate for a reward of their shame that say unto me, Aha, aha.

¹⁶ * Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee; let such as love thy salvation ^r say continually, The LORD be magnified.

¹⁷ * But I am poor and needy; yet ^s the LORD thinketh upon me: thou art my help and my deliverer; make no tarrying, O my God.

The word righteousness means the plan or method of salvation by Jesus Christ—God's method of justifying sinners by faith, without the deeds of the law.

Verse 10. Thy faithfulness] This means the exact fulfilment of the promises made by the prophets relative to the incarnation of Christ, and the opening of the door of faith to the Gentiles.

Loving-kindness] Shows the gift itself of Jesus Christ, the highest proof that God could give to a lost world of his mercy, kindness, and loving-kindness.

Verse 11. Thy tender mercies] Such propensities and feelings as a mother bears to her child; or animals in general to their young.

Let thy loving-kindness] Thy overflowing and superabundant mercy.

And thy truth] What is revealed in thy word: continually preserve me. Mercy to help me, truth to direct me; and, by the operation of both, I shall be continually preserved from sin and evil.

Verse 12. Innumerable evils have compassed me about] This part does not comport with the preceding; and either argues a former experience, or must be considered a part of another psalm, written at a different time and on another occasion; and, were we to prefix the two first verses of the seventieth psalm to it, we should find it to be a psalm as complete in itself as that is.

They are more than the hairs of mine head] This could not be said by any person who was exulting in the pardoning mercy of God, as David was at the time he penned the commencement of this psalm.

Verse 16. Let all those that seek thee—be glad] In making prayer and supplication to thee, let them ever find thee, that they may magnify thee for the blessings they receive.

Love thy salvation] Who earnestly desire to be saved from sin: saved in thy own way, and on thy own terms.

The Lord be magnified] Let God be praised continually for the continual blessings he pours down.

Verse 17. But I am poor] Am, afflicted, greatly depressed. And needy] A beggar. One utterly destitute, and seeking help.

The Lord thinketh upon me] The words are very emphatic; Adonai, my prop, my support, thinketh, meditateth, upon me.

Make no tarrying] Seeing thou art disposed to help, and I am in such great necessity, delay not, but come speedily to my assistance.

PSALM XLI.

PSALM XLI,

The blessedness of the man who is merciful to the poor, 1-3. The Psalmist complains of his enemies, and prays for support, 4-10; and blesses God for having heard his prayer, and preserved him from his adversaries, 11, 12. A fine doxology closes the psalm, 13.

To the chief Musician, a Psalm of David.

BLESSED ^a is he that considereth ^b the poor: the LORD will deliver him ^c in time of trouble.

2 The LORD will preserve him, and keep him alive: and he shall be blessed upon the earth: ^d and ^e thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.

3 The LORD will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: thou wilt ^f make all his bed in his sickness.

4 I said, LORD, be merciful unto me: ^g heal my soul; for I have sinned against thee.

5 Mine enemies speak evil of me, When shall he die, and his name perish?

6 And if he come to see me, he ^h speaketh vanity: his heart gathereth iniquity to itself; when he goeth abroad, he telleth it.

^a Prov. xiv. 21.—^b Or, the weak or sick.—^c Heb. in the day of evil.—^d Ps. xxviii. 19.—^e Or, do not thou deliver.—^f Heb. turn.—^g 2 Chron. xxx. 20. Ps. vi. 2. cxlviii. 3.—^h Ps. xii. 2. Prov. xxvi. 24, 25, 27.—ⁱ Heb. evil to me.—^j Heb. A thing of Belial.—^k 2 Sam. xv. 12. Job.

This appears to me to have been written on the same occasion as the three former, and to relate to David's malady and cure, and the evil treatment he had from his enemies during his affliction. Our Lord, by accommodation, applies the ninth verse to the treachery of Judas, John xiii. 18; but as to any other direct reference to Christ or his history, I believe the psalm has none.

Verse 1. Blessed is he that considereth] God is merciful; he will have man to resemble him; and the mercy he shows to others God will show to him. But it is not a sudden impression at the sight of a person in distress, which obliges a man to give something for the relief of the sufferer, that constitutes the merciful character. It is he who considers the poor; who endeavours to find them out; who looks into their circumstances; who is in the habit of doing so; and actually, according to his power and means, goes about to do good.

Verse 2. The Lord will preserve him, and keep him alive] Benevolent persons, who consider the poor, and especially the sick poor; who search them out (even in the places where contagion keeps its seat), very seldom fall a prey to their own benevolence. The Lord, in an especial manner, keeps them alive, and preserves them.

Verse 3. The Lord will strengthen him] Good, benevolent, and merciful as he is, he must also die; but he shall not die as other men; he shall have peculiar consolations, refreshment, and support, while passing through the valley of the shadow of death.

Thou wilt make all his bed] Thou hast turned up, tossed, and shaken it; and thou wilt do so to all his bed—thou wilt not leave one uneasy place in it—not one lump, or any unevenness, to prevent him from sleeping. Thou wilt do every thing, consistently with the accomplishment of the great decree, "Unto dust thou shalt return," to give him ease, refreshment, and rest.

Verse 4. I said, Lord, be merciful unto me] I need thy mercy especially, because I have sinned against thee, and my sin is a deadly wound to my soul; therefore heal my soul, for it has sinned against thee.

Verse 5. Mine enemies speak evil] It is often a good man's lot to be evil spoken of; to have his motives and even his most benevolent acts, misconstrued.

Verse 6. And if he come to see me] This may relate to Athithophel; but it is more likely that it was to some other person who was his secret enemy, who pretended to come and inquire after his health, but with the secret design to see whether death was dispatching his work.

7 All that hate me whisper together against me: against me do they devise ^l my hurt.

8 ^m An evil disease, say they, cleaveth fast unto him: and now that he lieth he shall rise up no more.

9 ⁿ Yea, ^o mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, ^p which did eat of my bread, hath ^q lifted up his heel against me.

10 But thou, O LORD, be merciful unto me and raise me up, that I may requite them.

11 By this I know that thou favourest me, because mine enemy doth not triumph over me.

12 And as for me, thou upholdest me in mine integrity, and ^r settest me before thy face for ever.

13 ^s Blessed be the LORD God of Israel from everlasting, and to everlasting. Amen, and Amen.

xix. 19. Ps. lv. 12, 13, 20. Jer. xx. 10.—^t Heb. the man of my peace.—^u Obad. 7. John xlii. 18.—^v Heb. magnified.—^w Job xxxvi. 7. Ps. xxxiv. 15.—^x Ps. civ. 48.

When he goeth abroad, he telleth it.] He makes several observations on his dying state; intimates that I am suffering deep remorse for secret crimes; that God is showing his displeasure against me, and that I am full of sorrow at the approach of death.

Verse 7. All that hate me whisper together against me] This is in consequence of the information given by the hypocritical friend, who came to him with the lying tongue, and whose heart gathereth iniquity to itself, which, when he went abroad, he told to others as ill-minded as himself, and they also drew their wicked inferences.

Verse 8. An evil disease, say they, cleaveth fast unto him] A thing, word, or pestilence of Belial, is poured out upon him. His disease is a diabolical malady.

He shall rise up no more.] His disease is incurable without a miracle; and he is too much hated of God to have one wrought for him.

Verse 9. Mine own familiar friend] This is either a direct prophecy of the treachery of Judas, or it is a fact in David's distresses which our Lord found so similar to the falsity of his treacherous disciple, that he applies it to him. What we translate mine own familiar friend, is the man of my peace. The man who, with the peace be to thee! kissed me; and thus gave the agreed-on signal to my murderers.

Did eat of my bread] Was an inmate in my house. Applied by our Lord to Judas, when eating with him out of the same dish. See John xiii. 18, 26. Possibly it may refer to Athithophel, who was the strength of Absalom's conspiracy.

Verse 10. Raise me up] Restore me from this sickness, that I may requite them. This has also been applied to our Lord; who, knowing that he must die, prays that he may rise again, and thus disappoint the malice of his enemies.

Verse 11. By this I know that thou favourest me] If thou hadst not been on my side, I had perished by this disease; and then my enemies would have had cause to triumph.

This also has been applied to our Lord; and Calmet says it is the greatest proof we have of the divinity of Christ, that he did not permit the malice of the Jews, nor the rage of the devil, to prevail against him.

Verse 12. Thou upholdest me] I am still enabled to show that my heart was upright before God.

Settest me before thy face for ever.] Thou showest that thou dost approve of me; that I stand in thy presence, under the smiles of thy approbation.

This also has been applied to our Lord, and considered as pointing out his mediatorial office at the right hand of God.

Verse 13. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel] By all these circumstances and events glory shall redound to the name of God for ever; for the record of these things shall never perish, but be published from one generation to another; and it has been so.

From everlasting, and to everlasting.] From the hidden time to the hidden time; from that which had no beginning to that which has no end.

Thus ends what the Hebrews call the first book of Psalms; for the reader will recollect that this book is divided by the Jews into five books, the first of which ends with this psalm.

PSALM XLII.

The Psalmist earnestly longs for the ordinances of the Lord's house, 1-4; describes his deep distress, 5-7; endeavours to take comfort from the consideration that the Lord would appear in his behalf, 8, 9; speaks of the insults of his enemies, 10; and again takes encouragement, 11.

To the chief Musician, *Maschil, for the sons of Korah.

As the hart ^b panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God.

2 ^c My soul thirsteth for God, for ^d the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?

3 ^e My tears have been my meat day and night, while ^f they continually say unto me, Where is thy God?

4 When I remember these things, ^g I pour out my soul in me: for I had gone with the multitude, ^h I went with them to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, with a multitude that kept holiday.

5 ⁱ Why art thou ^j cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? ^k hope thou in God: for I shall yet ^l praise him ^m for the help of his countenance.

6 O my God, my soul is cast down within me:

therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from ⁿ the hill Mizar.

7 ^o Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterspouts: ^p all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.

8 Yet the LORD will ^q command his loving-kindness in the daytime, and ^r in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life.

9 I will say unto God my rock, Why hast thou forgotten me? ^s why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

10 As with a ^t sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me; ^u while they say daily unto me, Where is thy God?

11 ^v Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

The title, To the chief Musician, giving instruction to the sons of Korah. This is the first of the psalms that has this title prefixed, and it is probable that such psalms were composed by the descendants of Korah during the Babylonish captivity, or by some eminent person among those descendants, and that they were used by the Israelites during their long captivity, as means of consolation: and, indeed, most of the psalms which bear this inscription are of the consoling kind; and the sentiments appear to belong to that period of the Jewish history, and to none other. The word maskil, from sakal, signifies to make wise, to direct wisely, to give instruction; and here is so understood by our translators, who have left this signification in the margin; and so the Versions in general.

Verse 1. As the hart panteth after the water brooks] The hunted hart feels himself almost entirely spent; the dogs are in full pursuit; he is parched with thirst; and in a burning heat pants after the water, and when he comes to the river, plunges in as his last refuge. Thus pursued, spent, and nearly ready to give up the ghost, the Psalmist pants for God, for the living God! for him who can give life, and save from death.

Verse 2. When shall I come] When, when shall I have the privilege of appearing in his courts before God? In the mouth of a Christian these words would import: "When shall I see my heavenly country? When shall I come to God, the Judge of all, and to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant?" He who is a stranger and a pilgrim here below, and feels a heart full of piety to God, may use these words in this sense; but he who feels himself here at home, whose soul is not spiritual, wishes the earth to be eternal, and himself eternal on it—feels no panting after the living God.

Verse 3. My tears have been my meat day and night] My longing has been so intense after spiritual blessings, that I have forgotten to take my necessary food; and my sorrow has been so great that I have had no appetite for any.

Verse 4. When I remember these things] Or, these things I shall remember. My soul is dissolved, becomes weak as water, when I reflect on what I have had, and on what I have lost. Or, I pour out my soul to myself in deep regrets and complaints, when reflecting on these things. I once enjoyed all the ordinances of God, and now I have none. There was a multitude to worship God in public; with these I often went: but, alas, this is no more; now there are found only a few solitary individuals who sigh for the desolations of Zion.

Verse 5. Why art thou cast down, O my soul?] Bad as the times are, desolate as Jerusalem is, insulting as are our enemies, hopeless as in the sight of man our condition may be, yet there is no room for despair. All things are possible to God. We have a promise of restoration; he is as good as he is powerful; hope therefore in him.

I shall yet praise him] For my restoration from this captivity. He is the health of my soul. I shall have the light and help of his countenance, his approbation, and a glorious deliverance wrought by his right hand.

Verse 6. O my God, my soul is cast down] I am full of discouragements, notwithstanding I labour to hope in thee.

Therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan] That is, from Judea, this being the chief river of that country. And of the Hermonites] Hermons, used in the plural because Hermon has a double ridge joining in an angle, and rising in many summits.

From the hill Mizar.] The little hill, as in the margin; probably Zion, which was little in comparison of the Hermons.

Verse 7. Deep calleth unto deep] The Psalmist seems to represent himself as cast away at sea; and, by wave impelling wave, is carried to a rock, around which the surges dash in all directions, forming hollow sounds in the creeks and caverns. At last, several waves breaking over him, tear him away from that rock to which he clung, and where he had a little before found a resting-place, and, apparently, an escape from danger. "All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me;" he is then whelmed in the deep, and God alone can save him.

Waterspouts] A large tube formed of clouds by means of the electric fluid, the base being uppermost, and the point of the tube let down perpendicularly from the clouds. This tube has a particular kind of circular motion at the point; and being hollow within, attracts vast quantities of water, which it pours down in torrents upon the earth. These spouts are frequent on the coast of Syria.

Verse 8. The Lord will command] Every day the Lord will give an especial commission to his loving-kindness to visit me. During the night I shall sing of his mercy and goodness; and alternately mingle my singing with prayer for a continuance of his mercy, and for power to make the best use of these visitations.

Verse 9. I will say unto God my rock] God, my Fortress and Support.

Why hast thou forgotten me?] This and the following verse is badly pointed in our Bibles: "Why go I mourning as with a sword in my bones because of the oppression of the enemy? Mine enemies reproach me daily, while they say unto me, Where is thy God?"

Verse 11. Why art thou cast down?] There is no reason why thou shouldst despair. God will appear and release thee and thy brother captives; and soon thy sighing and sorrowing shall flee away.

Who is the health of my countenance?] As a healthy state of the constitution shows itself in the appearance of the face; God will so rejoice thy heart, heal all thy spiritual maladies, that thy face shall testify the happiness that is within thee.

PSALM XLIII.

The Psalmist begs God to take his part against his enemies, 1, 2; to send his light and truth to guide him to the tabernacle, 3; promises, if brought thither, to be faithful in the divine service, 4; chides himself for despondency, and takes courage, 5.

JUDGE ^ame, O God, and ^bplead my cause against an ^cungodly nation: O deliver me ^dfrom the deceitful and unjust man.

2 For thou art the God of ^emy strength: why dost thou cast me off? ^fwhy go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

3 ^gO send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me unto ^hthy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles.

There is no title to this psalm in the Hebrew, nor in the Chaldee. It is most evidently on the same subject with the forty-second psalm, had the same author or authors, and contains the remaining part of the complaint of the captive Jews in Babylon.

Verse 1. Judge me, O God, and plead my cause] Ribah ribi, a forensic term, properly enough translated, plead my cause, be my counsellor and advocate.

Ungodly nation] The Babylonians; the impious, perfidious, wicked, and deceitful Babylonians.

The deceitful and unjust man.] Nebuchadnezzar.

Verse 2. For thou art the God of my strength] The Psalmist speaks here, as in other places, in the person of the whole Israelitish people then captive in Babylon. We still acknowledge thee for our God. Why are we cast off?

Verse 3. O send out thy light and thy truth] We are in darkness and distress, O send light and prosperity; we look for the fulfilment of thy promises; O send forth thy truth. Let thy light guide me to thy holy hill, to the country of my fathers; let thy truth lead me to thy tabernacles, there to worship thee in spirit and in truth.

Verse 4. Then will I go unto the altar] When thy light—a favourable turn in our affairs, leads us to the land of our fathers, and thy truth—the fulfilment of thy gracious promises, has placed us again at the door of thy tabernacles, then will we offer joyfully those sacrifices and offerings which thy law requires, and rejoice in thee with exceeding great joy.

Verse 5. Why art thou cast down?] Though our deliverance be delayed, God has not forgotten to be gracious. Let us still continue to trust in God, for we shall yet praise him for the fullest proofs of his approbation in a great out-pouring of his benedictions.

PSALM XLIV.

The Psalmist recounts the mercies of God; shows to his people how God in ancient times gave them the victory over all their enemies, 1-8; points out their present miserable state, 9-16; asserts that they have not apostatised, and appeals to God for the truth of his assertion, 17-22; and calls upon the Lord for deliverance from their enemies, 23-26.

To the chief Musician for the sons of Korah, Maschil.

WE have heard with our ears, O God, *our fathers have told us, what work thou didst in their days, in the times of old.

2 How ^b thou didst drive out the heathen with thy hand, and plantedst them; how thou didst afflict the people, and cast them out.

3 For ^c they got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither did their own arm save them: but thy right hand, and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, ^d because thou hadst a favour unto them.

4 *Thou art my King, O God: command deliverances for Jacob.

5 Through thee ^e will we push down our enemies: through thy name will we tread them under that rise up against us.

6 For ^f I will not trust in my bow, neither shall my sword save me.

7 But thou hast saved us from our enemies, and ^g hast put them to shame that hated us.

8 ^h In God we boast all the day long, and praise thy name for ever. Selah.

9 But ⁱ thou hast cast off, and put us to shame; and goest not forth with our armies.

10 Thou makest us to ^k turn back from the enemy: and they which hate us spoil for themselves.

11 ^l Thou hast given us ^m like sheep appointed for meat; and hast ⁿ scattered us among the heathen.

The title here is the same as that in Ps. xlii.; which see. Like the preceding, it appears to belong to the time of the captivity.

Verse 1. We have heard with our ears] The Psalmist begins thus, that he might the better strengthen his confidence, and form a ground on which to build his expectation of additional help.

Verse 2. Thou didst drive out the heathen] The Canaanites were as a bad tree planted in a good soil, and bringing forth bad fruit with great luxuriance. God plucked up this bad tree from the roots, and in its place planted the Hebrews as a good tree, a good vine, and caused them to take root, and fill the land.

Verse 3. For they got not the land] Neither by their valour, nor cunning, nor for their merit; yet they were obliged to fight. But how did they conquer? By the right hand of the Lord, and by his arm; by his strength alone, and the light of his countenance—his favour most manifestly shown unto them.

Verse 4. Thou art my King] What thou wert to them, be to us. We believe in thee as they did; we have sinned and are in captivity, but we repent and turn unto thee; command, therefore, deliverances.

Verse 5. Through thee will we push down] Literally, "we will toss them in the air with our horn;" a metaphor taken from an ox or bull tossing the dogs into the air which attack him.

Through thy name] Jehovah; the infinite, the omnipotent, the eternal Being; whose power none is able to resist.

Verse 6. I will not trust in my bow] As he is speaking of what God had already done for his forefathers, these words should be read in the past tense: "We have not trusted," &c.

Verse 8. In God we boast] We have told the heathen how great and powerful our God is. If thou do not deliver us by thy mighty power, they will not believe our report.

Verse 9. But thou hast cast off] Our enemies have dominion over us.

And goest not forth with our armies.] Were we to attempt to muster our several tribes and form an host, like our fathers

12 *Thou sellest thy people ^p for nought, and dost not increase thy wealth by their price.

13 *Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us.

14 *Thou makest us a byword among the heathen, ^q a shaking of the head among the people.

15 My confusion ^r is continually before me, and the shame of my face hath covered me, 16 For the voice of him that reproacheth and blasphemeth: ^s by reason of the enemy and avenger.

17 *All this is come upon us; yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant.

18 Our heart is not turned back, ^t neither have our ^u steps declined from thy way.

19 Though thou hast sore broken us in ^v the place of dragons, and covered us ^w with the shadow of death.

20 If we have forgotten the name of our God, or ^x stretched out our hands to a strange god;

21 *^y Shall not God search this out? for he knoweth the secrets of the heart.

22 ^{bb} Yea, for thy sake are we killed all the day long; we are counted as sheep for the slaughter.

23 ^{cc} Awake, why sleepest thou, O LORD? arise, ^{dd} cast us not off for ever.

24 ^{ee} Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and forgettest our affliction and our oppression?

when they came out of Egypt, thou wouldst not accompany us as thou didst them.

Verse 11. And hast scattered us among the heathen.] This most evidently alludes to the captivity. Jews have been found in every province of the East; there they settled, and there their successors may be found to the present day.

Verse 12. Thou sellest thy people for nought.] An allusion to the mode of disposing of slaves by their proprietors or sovereigns.

Verse 14. Thou makest us a byword.] We are evidently abandoned by thee, and are become so very miserable in consequence, that we are a proverb among the people.

Verse 17. Yet have we not forgotten thee] We have not apostatized from thee; we have not fallen into idolatry. And this was strictly true: the charge of idolatry could never be brought against the Jewish nation from the time of the captivity, with sufficient evidence to support it.

Verse 19. Thou hast sore broken us in the place of dragons] Thou hast delivered us into the hands of a fierce, cruel, and murderous people.

Verse 20. If we have forgotten the name of our God] That name, Yehovah, by which the true God was particularly distinguished, and which implied the exclusion of all other objects of adoration.

Or stretched out our hands] Made supplication; offered prayer or adoration to any strange god—a god that we had not known, nor had been acknowledged by our fathers.

Verse 21. Shall not God search this out?] We confidently appeal to the true God, the searcher of hearts, for the truth of this statement.

Verse 22. For thy sake are we killed all the day long] We are exposed to continual death; some of us fall a daily sacrifice to the persecuting spirit of our enemies, and we all carry our lives continually in our hands. In the same state were the primitive Christians. Rom. viii. 36.

Verse 23. Awake, why sleepest thou, O Lord?] This is a freedom of speech which can only be allowed to inspired men; and in their mouths it is always to be figuratively understood.

Verse 24. Wherefore hidest thou thy face?] Show us the cause why thou withdrawest from us the testimony of thy approbation.

PSALM XLV.

25 For ^aour soul is bowed down to the dust: our belly cleaveth unto the earth.

^a Ps. cxix. 26.

Verse 25. Our soul is bowed down] Our life is drawing near to the grave. If thou delay to help us, we shall become extinct.

Verse 26. Arise for our help] Show forth thy power in delivering us from the hands of our enemies.

26 Arise ^bfor our help, and redeem us for thy mercies' sake.

^b Heb. a help for us.

Redeem us] Ransom us from our thralldom.

For thy mercies' sake.] On account of thy mercy. That we may have that proper view of thy mercy which we should have, and that we may magnify it as we ought to do, redeem us.

PSALM XLV.

The contents of this psalm are generally summed up thus: The majesty and grace of Christ's kingdom; or an epithalamium of Jesus Christ and the Christian church; the duty of this church, and its privileges. The psalm contains a magnificent description of the beauty, ornaments, valour, justice, and truth of the divine

- Bridegroom; the beauty, magnificence, and riches of the bride, who was to become mother of a numerous and
- powerful posterity. The preamble is found in the title and verse 1. The description and character of the bridegroom, 2-9. The address to the bride by her companions, 10-15. A prediction of her numerous and glorious descendants, 16, 17.

To the chief Musician ^aupon Shoshannim, for the sons of Korah, ^bMaschil, A Song of loves.

MY heart ^cis inditing a good matter: I speak of the things which I have made touching the king: my tongue is the pen of a ready writer.

2 Thou art fairer than the children of men: ^dgrace is poured into thy lips: therefore God hath blessed thee for ever.

^a Ps. lxxxix. lxxx. title.—^b Or, of instruction.—^c Heb. boileth or bubbleth up.—^d Luke iv. 22.—^e Isa. xlix. 2. Heb. iv. 12. Rev. i. 16.

I believe this Psalm to be an epithalamium, or nuptial song which primarily respected Solomon's marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh; and that it probably has a prophetic reference to the conversion of the Gentiles, and the final aggrandisement of the Christian church. [Shoshannim in the title refers probably to a musical instrument shaped like a lily.]

Verse 1. My heart is inditing a good matter] Rachash, boileth or bubbleth up, as in the margin. It is a metaphor taken from a fountain that sends up its waters from the earth in this way.

I speak of the things which I have made touching the king] "I dedicate my work unto the king."

My tongue is the pen of a ready writer.] I shall compose and speak as fluently the divine matter which is now in my heart, as the most expert scribe can write from my recitation.

Verse 2. Thou art fairer than the children of men] As this is a regular epithalamium, we are to consider that the bride and bridegroom have compliments paid them by the friends of the bridegroom, and the companions of the bride. But it seems that the whole psalm, except the first verse, was spoken by those who are called in the title yedidoth, the beloved maids, or female companions, who begin with his perfections, and then describe hers. And afterwards there is a prophetic declaration concerning his issue. It would be unauthenticated to say Solomon was the most beautiful man in the universe; but to the perfections of the Lord Jesus they may be safely applied.

Grace is poured into thy lips] This probably refers to his speech, or the gracious words which he spoke. Solomon was renowned for wisdom, and especially the wisdom of his conversation. But a greater than Solomon is here. No man ever spoke like this man, his enemies themselves being judges.

God hath blessed thee for ever.] This, I am afraid, could in no sense be ever spoken of Solomon; but of the man Christ Jesus it is strictly true.

Verse 3. Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty] O hero, gird thy sword upon thy thigh! This cannot be spoken of Solomon. He was not a warlike prince: he never 3 Gird thy ^esword upon thy thigh, 'O most mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty.

4 ^fAnd in thy majesty ^gride prosperously because of truth and meekness and righteousness; and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things.

5 Thine ^harrows are sharp in the heart of the king's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee.

6 ⁱThy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: the sceptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre.

did any feats of arms. The words more properly apply to Christ, who is King of kings, and Lord of lords; whose sword with two edges, proceeding from his mouth, cuts all his adversaries to pieces.

With thy glory and thy majesty.] Be as warlike as thou art glorious and majestic. Solomon's court was splendid, and his person was majestic. These words may be well said of him. But the majesty and glory of Christ are above all.

Verse 4. In thy majesty ride prosperously] These words cannot be spoken of Solomon: they are true only of Christ. His riding is the prosperous progress of his gospel over the earth. 1. The gospel is a revelation of eternal TRUTH, in opposition to all false systems of religion, and to all figurative and ceremonial representations of the true religion. 2. It teaches the doctrine of meekness or HUMILITY; strips man of his assumed merits; proclaims and enforces the necessity of humiliation or repentance because of sin, humiliation under the providential hand of God, and humility in imitation of the character of the Lord Jesus Christ throughout life. 3. The gospel teaches RIGHTEOUSNESS: shows the nature of sin, wrong, injustice, transgression, &c.; works righteousness in the heart; and directs and influences to the practice of it in all the actions of life.

And thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things.] Nothing shall be able to resist thee, and the judgments which thou shalt inflict on thine enemies shall be terrible.

Verse 5. Thine arrows are sharp] The arrows here may mean the convictions produced in the hearts of men by the preaching of the gospel. The King is God himself; his enemies are sinners of all sorts. The people, the Jews, thousands of whom were pricked in their hearts under the preaching of Peter and others. All fall before Christ; those who received the word rose again by repentance and faith; those who did not, fell down—all down!

Verse 6. Thy throne, O God, is for ever] The word Elohim here is the very first term or name by which the Supreme God has made himself known to the children of men. See Gen. i. 1; and this very verse the apostle, Heb. i. 8, has applied to Jesus Christ. On this I shall make a very short remark, but it shall be conclusive: If the apostle did 7 *Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest wickedness; therefore ^b God, thy ^c God, ^d hath anointed thee with the oil ^e of gladness above thy fellows.

8 *All thy garments smell of myrrh, and aloes, and cassia, out of the ivory palaces, whereby they have made thee glad.

9 *Kings' daughters were among thy honourable women : ^a upon thy right hand did stand the queen in gold of Ophir.

10 Hearken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; ¹ forget also thine own people, and thy father's house;

11 So shall the king greatly desire thy beauty : ¹ for he is thy Lord; and worship thou him.

not believe Jesus Christ to be the true and eternal God, he has utterly misapplied this Scripture. See notes on Heb. i. 8, 9.

Verse 7. Oil of gladness] As an evidence that all causes of mourning, sorrow, and death were at an end; as in the state of mourning the ancients did not anoint themselves.

Verse 8. All thy garments smell of myrrh] The Asiatics are very partial to perfumes; every thing with them is perfumed, and especially their garments. And the ivory palaces mentioned are the wardrobes inlaid with ivory, in which their numerous changes of raiment were deposited. Myrrh and aloes are well known; cassia is probably the bark or wood of the cinnamon tree.

Whereby they have made thee glad.] Referring to the effect of strong perfumes refreshing and exhilarating the spirits.

Verse 9. Kings' daughters were among] If we apply this to Solomon's marriage with the daughter of the king of Egypt, it may signify no more than the princesses and ladies of honour who accompanied her to the Israelitish court. Applied to Christ, it may signify that the gospel, though preached particularly to the poor, became also the means of salvation to many of the kings, queens, and nobles of the earth. Perhaps by kings' daughters may be meant different regions and countries, which are represented as constituting the families of potentates. Whole nations shall be converted to the Christian faith; and the queen—the Christian church, shall be most elegantly adorned with all the graces and good works which at once constitute and adorn the Christian character.

Verse 10. Hearken, O daughter, and consider] Suppose the daughter of Pharaoh to be intended, the words import: Thou art now become the spouse of the most magnificent monarch in the universe. To thee he must be all in all. Forget therefore thy own people—the Egyptians, and take the Israelites in their place. Forget also thy father's house; thou art now united to a new family. So shall the king—Solomon, greatly desire thy beauty—thou wilt be, in all respects, pleasing to him. And it is right thou shouldst act so; for he is now become thy lord—thy supreme governor. And worship thou him—submit thyself reverently and affectionately to all his commands.

Taken in reference to Christ and the gospel, this is an address to the Gentiles to forsake their idolatrous customs and connexions, to embrace Christ and his gospel in the spirit of reverence and obedience, with the promise that, if beautified with the graces of his Spirit, Christ will delight in them, and take them for his peculiar people; which has been done.

Verse 12. The daughter of Tyre shall be there with a gift] The Tyrians shall pay tribute to thy spouse, and assist him in all his grand and magnificent operations.

As, at this time, Tyre was the greatest maritime and commercial city in the world, it may be here taken as representing those places which lay on the coasts of the sea, and carried on much traffic; and which first received the gospel of Christ and were the instruments of sending it to all the other nations of the earth.

Rich among the people] The most powerful and opulent empires, kingdoms, and states, shall embrace Christianity, and entreat the favour of its Author.

Verse 13. The king's daughter is all glorious within] This, in some sense, may be spoken of Solomon's bride, the daughter of the king of Egypt; and then the expression may refer either to the cultivation of her mind, or the ornaments and splendour of her palace.

Her clothing is of wrought gold.] Of the most costly embroidery.

Spiritually, the king's daughter may mean the Christian church filled with the mind that was in Christ, and adorned with the graces of the Holy Spirit; while the whole of its outward conduct is pure and holy, ornamented with the works of faith and love, and always bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit.

Verse 14. She shall be brought unto the king] When an Asiatic princess is brought to her spouse, no part of her person is visible. She is attended by her principal friends and companions, and the ceremony is accompanied with great rejoicing; and thus they enter into the palace of the king.

This part of this parabolical psalm may refer to the glories of a future state. The Christian church shall be brought to the KING eternal in the great day, adorned with the graces of the Divine Spirit; and thus shall all the redeemed of the Lord enter into the king's palace—into the everlasting joy of their Lord.

Verse 16. Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children] This is the third part, or prophetic declaration relative to the numerous and powerful issue of this marriage. Instead of the kindred, which thou hast left behind in Egypt, thou shalt have numerous children. This cannot refer either to Solomon, or to the daughter of Pharaoh; for there is no evidence that he ever had a child by Pharaoh's daughter; and it is very certain that Behoboam, Solomon's successor, was not son to the daughter of Pharaoh; nor did any princes of that line ever occupy a foreign throne; nor by successive generations ever continue the remembrance of Solomon and his Egyptian queen. The children mentioned here are generally supposed to mean the apostles and their successors in the Christian ministry; founding churches all over the world, by whom the Christian name becomes a memorial through all the earth.

Verse 17. Therefore shall the people praise thee] They shall magnify the heavenly Bridegroom, and sing the wonderful displays of his love to the Church, his spouse.

PSALM XLVI.

The confidence of believers in God, 1-3. The privileges of the church, 4, 5; her enemies, and her helper, 6, 7. God's judgments in the earth, 8, 9. He will be exalted among the heathen, and throughout the earth, 10, 11.

The title in the Hebrew is, "An ode upon Alamoth, or concerning the virgins;" possibly meaning a choir of stinging girls. Some translate the word secrets or mysteries; Calmet thinks it was composed by the descendants of Korah on their return from the Babylonish captivity. Houbigant thinks it was made on occasion of an earthquake; Kenmooth thinks that alamoth means a musical instrument. All I can pretend to say about it is, that it is a very sublime ode; contains much consolation for the church of God; and was given by the inspiration of his Holy Spirit.

Verse 1. God is our refuge] It begins abruptly, but nobly; ye may trust in whom and in what ye please; but GOD (ELOHIM) is our refuge and strength.

A very present help] A help found to be very powerful and effectual in straits and difficulties. The words are very emphatic: "He is found an exceeding, or superlative, help in difficulties."

Verse 2. Therefore will not we fear] Probably the earthquake referred to, here means political commotions, such as those mentioned under the title; and by mountains, kings or secular states may be intended.

Verse 3. Though the waters thereof roar] Waters, in prophetic language, signify people; and, generally, people in a state of political commotion, here signified by the term roar. And by these strong agitations of the people, the mountains—the secular rulers, shake with the swelling thereof—tremble, for fear that these popular tumults should terminate in the subversion of the state.

Verse 4. There is a river, the streams whereof] The Chaldee understands the river, and its streams or divisions, as pointing out various peoples who should be converted to the faith, and thus make glad the city of God, Jerusalem, by their flowing together to the worship of the true God.

But the river may refer to the vast Medo-Persian army and its divisions; those branches which took Babylon; and, instead of ruining and destroying the poor Jews, preserved them alive, and gave them their liberty; and thus the city of God, and the tabernacle of the Most High, were gladdened.

Verse 5. God is in the midst of her] God will not abandon them that trust in him; he will maintain his own cause; and, if his church should at any time be attacked, he will help her, and that right early—with the utmost speed. As soon as the onset is made, God is there to resist.

6 ^l The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice, ^m the earth melted.

7 ⁿ The LORD of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is ^o our refuge. Selah.

8 ^p Come, behold the works of the LORD, what desolations he hath made in the earth.

9 ^q He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; ^r he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; ^s he burneth the chariot in the fire.

10 Be still, and know that I am God: ^t I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.

Verse 6. The heathen raged] There had been terrible wars on all hands, and mighty states were crushed; when the poor Jews were, by the especial favour of God, kept in peace and safety.

He uttered his voice] These words seem to refer to thunder, lightning, and earthquake. The expressions, however, may be figurative, and refer to the wars and desolations already mentioned.

Verse 7. The Lord of hosts is with us] We, feeble Jews, were but a handful of men; but the Lord of hosts—the God of armies, was on our side.

The God of Jacob] The God who appeared to Jacob in his distress, and saved him out of all his troubles, appeared also for us his descendants, and has amply proved to us that he has not forgotten his covenant.

Verse 8. Come, behold the works of the Lord] See empires destroyed and regenerated; and in such a way as to show that a supernatural agency has been at work.

Verse 9. He maketh wars to cease] That same God who for our unfaithfulness has delivered us into the hands of our enemies, and subjected us to a long and grievous captivity and affliction, has now turned our captivity, and raised us up the most powerful friends and protectors in the very place in which we have been enduring so great a fight of afflictions.

He breaketh the bow] He has rendered useless all the implements of war.

Verse 10. Be still, and know that I am God] Cease from your provocations of the divine justice; cease from murmuring against the dispensations of his providence; cease from sin and rebellion against your God; let that disgrace you no more, that ye may no more be brought into distress and desolation.

Know that I am God] Understand that I am the Fountain of power, wisdom, justice, goodness, and truth.

I will be exalted among the heathen] By the dispensation of punishments, the heathen shall know me to be the God of justice; by the publication of my gospel among them, they shall know me to be the God of goodness.

I will be exalted in the earth] I will have my salvation proclaimed in every nation, among every people, and in every tongue.

Verse 11. The God of Jacob is our refuge] He who saved our fathers will save us, and will never abandon his people in distress.

PSALM XLVII.

The Gentiles are invited to celebrate the praises of God as the Sovereign of the world, 1, 2. The Jews exult in his kindness to them, 3, 4. All then join to celebrate his Majesty, as reigning over the heathen, and gathering the dispersed Jews and Gentiles together into one church, 5-9.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm * for the sons of Korah.

O ^bCLAP your hands, all ye people; shout unto God with the voice of triumph.

2 For the LORD most high is ^cterrible:

^d he is a great King over all the earth.

3 * He shall subdue the people under us, and the nations under our feet.

4 He shall choose our 'inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved. Selah.

5 ^e God is gone up with a shout, the LORD with the sound of a trumpet.

* Or, of.—^b Or, Isa. lv. 12.—^c Deut. vii. 21. Neh. i. 5. Ps. lxxvi. 12.—^d Mal. i. 14.—^e Ps. xviii. 47.—^f 1 Pet. i. 4.—^g Ps. lxxviii. 24, 25.—^h Zech. xiv. 9.—ⁱ 1 Cor. xiv. 15, 16.—^j Or, every one that hath understanding.—^k 1 Chron. xvi. 31. Ps. xciii. 1. xvi. 10. xvii. 1. xcix.

This psalm was probably written about the same time with the preceding, and relates to the happy state of the Jews when returned to their own land. In a spiritual sense, it appears to relate to the calling of the Gentiles to be made partakers of the blessings of the gospel with the converted Jews.

Verse 1. O clap your hands, all ye people] Let both Jews and Gentiles magnify the Lord: the Jews, for being delivered from the Babylonish captivity; the Gentiles, for being called to enter into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Verse 2. For the Lord most high is terrible] He has insufferable majesty, and is a great King—the mightiest of all emperors, for he is Sovereign over the whole earth.

Verse 3. He shall subdue the people under us] He shall do again for us what he had done for our forefathers—give us dominion over our enemies and establish us in our own land. I would rather read this in the past tense, relative to what God did for their fathers in destroying the Canaanites. This is also applied to the conversion of the Gentiles.

Verse 5. God is gone up with a shout] Primarily, this may refer to the rejoicing and sounding of trumpets, when the ark was lifted up to be carried on the shoulders of the Levites. But it is generally understood as a prophetic declaration of the ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ; and the shout may refer to the exultation of the evangelists and apostles in preaching Christ crucified, buried, risen from the dead, and ascended to heaven, ever to appear in the presence of God for us.

Verse 6. Sing praises] This word is four times repeated in this short verse, and shows at once the earnestness and happiness of the people.

Verse 7. For God is the King of all the earth] He is not your King only, but the King of the universe. He has no limited power, no confined dominion.

Sing ye praises with understanding] Let sense and sound go together. Let your hearts and heads go with your voices.

6 Sing praises to God, sing praises: sing praises unto our King, sing praises.

7 ^h For God is the King of all the earth: ⁱ sing ye praises ^j with understanding.

8 ^k God reigneth over the heathen; God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness.

9 ^l The princes of the people are gathered together ^m even the people of the God of Abraham: ⁿ for the shields of the earth belong unto God: he is ^o greatly exalted.

1. Rev. xix. 6.—^h Or, The voluntary of the people are gathered unto the people of the God of Abraham.—^m Rom. iv. 11, 12.—ⁿ Ps. lxxxix. 18.—^o Ps. cxii. 9. Isa. ii. 11, 17. xxxiii. 10. Phil. ii. 9.

Understand what you sing; and feel what you understand; and let the song be what will give instruction in righteousness to them that hear it.

Verse 8. God reigneth over the heathen] Though this is literally true in God's universal dominion, yet more is here meant. God reigns over the heathen when, by the preaching of the gospel, they are brought into the church of Christ.

God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness] The throne of his holiness is the heaven of heavens; also the temple at Jerusalem; and, lastly, the hearts of the faithful.

Verse 9. The princes of the people are gathered] The voluntary people—the princely, noble, or free-will people; those who gladly receive the word of life. It is a similar word which is used Pa. cx. 3; and I believe both texts speak of the same people—the Gentiles, who gladly come unto his light, and present themselves a freewill-offering to the Lord.

The people of the God of Abraham] Properly speaking, the Gentiles are those whom Abraham represented; for the covenant was made with him while yet a Gentile; and in his seed all the nations—the Gentiles, of the earth were to be blessed.

The shields of the earth belong unto God] These are supposed to mean kings and rulers of provinces which were present at the dedication of the temple (for some suppose the psalm to have been composed for this solemnity); and that they are said here to be greatly exalted, because they exercised a very high degree of power over their respective districts. The words refer to something by which the inhabitants of the earth are defended; God's providence, guardian angels, &c., &c.

He is greatly exalted] Great as secular rulers are, God is greater, and is above all; King of kings and Lord of lords; and the hearts of kings and governors are in his hand; and he turns them whithersoever he pleases.

PSALM XLVIII.

The ornaments and the privileges of the church, 1-8. The duty of God's people, 9-14.

A Song and Psalm * for the sons of Korah.

GREAT is the LORD, and greatly to be praised ^b in the city of our God, in the ^c mountain of his holiness.

2 ^a Beautiful for situation, * the joy of the whole earth, ^d is Mount Zion, ^e on the sides of the north, ^f the city of the great King.

3 God is known in her palaces for a refuge.

4 For, lo, ^h the kings were assembled, they passed by together.

5 They saw it, and so they marvelled; they were troubled, and hastened away.

6 Fear ⁱ took hold upon them there, ^j and pain, as of a woman in travail.

7 Thou ^k breakest the ships of Tarshish ^l with an east wind.

8 As we have heard, so have we seen in ^m the city

* Or, of.—^b Ps. xlv. 4. lxxxvii. 3.—^c Isa. ii. 2, 3. Mic. iv. 1. Zech. viii. 3.—^d Ps. i. 2. Jer. iii. 19. Lam. ii. 15. Dan. viii. 9. xi. 16.—^e Ezek. xx. 6.—^f Isa. xiv. 13.—^g Matt. v. 35.—^h 2 Sam. x. 6, 14, 16, 18, 19.—ⁱ Exod. xv. 15.—^j Hos. xiii. 13.—^k Ezek. xxvii. 26.—

This Psalm is evidently of the same complexion with the two preceding, and refers to the Jews returned from captivity; and perhaps was sung at the dedication of the second temple, in order to return thanks to the Lord for the restoration of their political state, and the re-establishment of their worship.

Verse 1. Great is the Lord] This verse should be joined to the last verse of the preceding psalm, as it is a continuation of the same subject.

In the city of our God] That is, in the temple; or in Jerusalem, where the temple was situated.

The mountain of his holiness.] Mount Moriah, on which the temple was built. The ancient city of Jerusalem, which David took from the Jebusites, was on the south of Mount Zion, on which the temple was built, though it might be said to be more properly on Mount Moriah, which is one of the hills of which Mount Zion is composed.

Verse 2. The joy of the whole earth] If we take the earth here for the habitable globe, there is no sense in which it ever was the joy of the whole earth; but if we take col haarets, as signifying the whole of this land (and it has no other meaning), the assertion is plain and easy to be understood, for the temple was considered the ornament and glory of the whole land of Judea.

Verse 3. God is known in her palaces for a refuge.] All those who worship there in spirit and truth, find God for their refuge. But the words may be understood: God is known for the defence of her palaces; and with this view of the subject agree the three following verses.

Verse 4. For lo, the kings were assembled] Many of the neighbouring potentates, at different times, envied the prosperity of the Jewish nation, and coveted the riches of the temple; but they had no power against it till the cup of Jewish transgression was full. In vain did they assemble—confederate, and invade the land. Saw it—reconnoitred the place; marvelled at its excellence and strength, for they were troubled—struck with fear; hastened away for fear of destruction, for fear took hold on them as pains seize on a woman in travail.

Verse 7. Thou breakest the ships of Tarshish] Calmet thinks this may refer to the discomfiture of Cambyses, who came to destroy the land of Judea. Ships of Tarshish he 13 ^a Mark ye well her bulwarks, * consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generation following.

conjectures to have been large stout vessels, capable of making the voyage to Tarsus, in Cilicia.

Verse 8. As we have heard, so have we seen] Our fathers have declared what mighty works thou didst in their time; and we have seen the same.

The city of the Lord of hosts] His hosts defended the city, and it was known to be the city of the great King.

God will establish it for ever.] This must refer to the true temple, the Christian church, of which the Jewish church was a type.

Verse 9. We have thought of thy loving-kindness] We went to thy temple to worship thee; we meditated on thy goodness; we waited for a display of it; and the panic that in the first instance struck us, was transferred to our enemies.

Verse 10. According to thy name] As far as thou art known, so far art thou praised; and where thou art known, thou wilt have praise to the end of the earth.

Verse 11. Let Mount Zion rejoice] The temple is restored in majesty, which was threatened with total destruction; it is again repaired.

Let the daughters of Judah be glad] That thou hast turned her captivity, and poured out thy judgments upon her oppressors.

Verse 12. Walk about Zion] Consider the beauty and magnificence of the temple, count the towers by which it is fortified.

Verse 13. Mark ye well her bulwarks] See the redoubts by which she is defended.

Consider her palaces] See her courts, chambers, altars, &c., &c.; that ye may have to tell your children how Jerusalem was built in troublesome times; how God restored you; and how he put it into the hearts of the heathen to assist to build, beautify, and adorn the temple of our God.

Verse 14. For this God] Who did all these wonderful things,—

Is our God] He is our portion, and he has taken us for his people.

He will be our guide] Through all the snares and difficulties of life,—

Even unto death] He will never leave us; and we, by his grace, will never abandon him. Even unto and in death, he will be our portion.

All men are invited to attend to lessons of wisdom relative to the insufficiency of earthly good to save or prolong life; to secure the resurrection from the dead, 1-9. Death is inevitable, 10. The vain expectations of rich men, 11-13. Death renders all alike, 14. The Psalmist encourages and fortifies himself against envying the apparently prosperous state of the wicked, who are brutish, and die like beasts, 15-20.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm * for the sons of Korah.

HEAR this, all ye people; give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world:

2 Both ^b low and high, rich and poor, together.

3 My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and the meditation of my heart shall be of understanding.

4 ° I will incline mine ear to a parable: I will open my dark saying upon the harp.

5 Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil; when ^a the iniquity of my heels shall compass me about?

6 They that ^a trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches;

7 None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor ^a give to God a ransom for him:

8 (For ^a the redemption of their soul is precious, and it ceaseth for ever:)

9 That he should still live for ever, and ^b not see corruption.

10 For he seeth that ^a wise men die, likewise the fool and the brutish person perish, ^a and leave their wealth to others.

11 Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever, and their dwelling places ^a to all

This Psalm is so much in the style of the book of Job that one might believe they had the same author.

Verse 1. Hear this, all ye people] The four first verses contain the author's introduction, delivered in a very pompous style, and promising the deepest lessons of wisdom and instruction.

Verse 4. I will incline mine ear to a parable] This was the general method of conveying instruction among the Asiatics. They used much figure and metaphor to induce the reader to study deeply in order to find out the meaning. This had its use; it obliged men to think and reflect deeply; and thus in some measure taught them the use, government, and management of their minds.

My dark saying upon the harp] Music was sometimes used to soothe the animal spirits, and thus prepare the mind for the prophetic influx.

Verse 5. The iniquity of my heels] Perhaps akebai, which we translate my heels, should be considered the contracted plural of akevim, supplanters. The verse would then read thus: "Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil, though the iniquity of my supplanters should compass me about."

Verse 7. None of them can by any means redeem his brother] Wealth cannot save from death; brother, however, rich, cannot save his brother; nor will God accept riches as a ransom for the life or soul of any transgressor.

Verse 8. For the redemption of their soul is precious] It is of too high a price to be redeemed with corruptible things, such as silver or gold, and has required the sacrificial death of Christ.

And it ceaseth for ever] This is very obscure, and may apply to the ransom which riches could produce. That ransom must be for ever unavailable, because of the value of the soul. Or this clause should be added to the following verse, and read thus: "And, though he cease to be, during the hidden time; yet he shall live on through eternity, and not see corruption." This is probably the dark saying which it was the design of the author to utter in a parable, and leave it to the ingenuity of posterity to find it out.

Verse 10. For he seeth that wise men die] Though they may be very rich, and their wisdom teach them the best method of managing their riches so as to derive all the good from them they can possibly produce, yet they die as well as the fool and the poor ignorant man; and their wealth is left to others who will be equally disappointed in their expectation from it.

generations; they ^a call their lands after their own names.

12 Nevertheless ^a man being in honour abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish.

13 This their way is their ^a folly: yet their posterity ^a approve their sayings. Selah.

14 Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and ^a the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; ^a and their ^a beauty shall consume ^a in the grave from their dwelling.

15 But God ^a will redeem my soul ^a from the power of the ^a grave: for he shall receive me. Selah.

16 Be not thou afraid when one is made rich, when the glory of his house is increased;

17 ^a For when he dieth, he shall carry nothing away: his glory shall not descend after him.

18 Though ^a while he lived ^a he blessed his soul: and men will praise thee, when thou doest well to thyself.

19 ^a He shall ^a go to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see ^b light.

20 ^c Man that is in honour, and understandeth not, ^d is like the beasts that perish.

Ps. lvi. 13.—Ver. 12.—Eccles. iii. 19.

Verse 11. Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever] Instead of kirbam, their inward part, the Septuagint appear to have used a copy in which the second and third letters have been transposed kibram, their sepulchres; for they translate: "For their graves are their dwellings for ever." So six or seven feet long, and two or three wide, is sufficient to hold the greatest conqueror in the universe! What a small house for the quondam possessor of numerous palaces and potent kingdoms!

They call their lands after their own names] There would have been no evil in this if it had not been done on an infidel principle. They expected no state but the present; and if they could not continue themselves, yet they took as much pains as possible to perpetuate their memorial.

Verse 12. Man being in honour abideth not] However rich, wise, or honourable, they must die; and if they die not with a sure hope of eternal life, they die like beasts.

Verse 13. Their posterity approve their sayings] Go the same way; adopt their maxims.

Verse 14. Like sheep they are laid in the grave] Into sheol, the place of separate spirits.

Death shall feed on them] "Death shall feed them!" What an astonishing change! All the good things of life were once their portion, and they lived only to eat and drink; and now they live in sheol, and Death himself feeds them! and with what? Damnation.

Verse 15. But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave] That is, by the plainest construction, I shall have a resurrection from the dead, and an entrance into his glory; and death shall have no dominion over me.

Verse 16. Be not thou afraid when one is made rich] Do not be envious; do not grieve: it will do you no harm; it will do him no good.

Verse 18. He blessed his soul] He did all he could to procure himself animal gratifications, and he was applauded for it; for it is the custom of the world to praise them who pay most attention to their secular interest.

Verse 19. They shall never see light] Rise again they shall; but they shall never see the light of glory, for there is prepared for them the blackness of darkness for ever.

Verse 20. Man that is in honour] The rich and honourable man who has no spiritual understanding, is a beast in the sight of God. The spirit of this maxim is, A man who is in a dignified official situation, but destitute of learning and sound sense, is like a beast. The important place which he occupies reflects no honour upon him, but is disgraced by him.

This verse has been often quoted as a proof of the fall of man; and from yalm (in ver. 12), which signifies to lodge for a night, it has been inferred that Adam fell on the same day on which he was created, and that he did not spend a single night in the terrestrial paradise. But we may rest assured this is no meaning of the text.

PSALM L.

God, the Sovereign Judge, cites before his throne all his people, and the priests and the judges, 1-6; and reproaches them for their vain confidence in the sacrifices they had offered, 7-13; and shows them the worship he requires, 14, 15; and then enters into a particular detail of their hypocrisy, injustice, and union with scandalous transgressors, all of whom he threatens with heavy judgments, 16-22. The blessedness of him who worships God aright, and walks unblamably, 23.

A Psalm of Asaph.

THE mighty God, even the LORD, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.

2 Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined.

3 Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.

4 He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people.

5 Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.

6 And the heavens shall declare his righteousness: for God is judge himself. Selah.

7 Hear, O my people, and I will speak; O Israel, and I will testify against thee: I am God, even thy God.

8 I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices or thy burnt-offerings, to have been continually before me.

9 I will take no bullock out of thy house, nor he-goats out of thy folds.

10 For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills.

*Or, for Asaph. See 1 Chron. xv. 17. xxv. 2. 2 Chron. xxix. 30. — Neb. ix. 32. Isa. ix. 6. Jer. xxxiii. 18. — Ps. xlviii. 2. — Deut. xxxiii. 2. Ps. lxxx. 1. — Lev. x. 2. Num. xvi. 35. Ps. xvii. 3. It is not known on what particular occasion this psalm was written; but at most times it was suitable to the state of the Jewish church.

Verse 1. The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken] Here the essential names of God are used: EL, ELOHIM, YEHOWAH, hath spoken. The six first verses of this psalm seem to contain a description of the great judgment: to any minor consideration or fact it seems impossible, with any propriety, to restrain them.

Verse 7. Hear, O my people] Asaph proceeds to show the necessity of repentance and amendment; that when that great day should arrive, they might be found among those who had made a covenant with God by sacrifice. And he shows them that the sacrifice with which God would be well pleased was quite different from the bullocks, he-goats, &c., which they were in the habit of offering. In short, he shows here that God has intended to abrogate those sacrifices, as being no longer of any service.

Verse 8. I will not reprove thee] I do not mean to find fault with you for not offering sacrifices; you have offered them, they have been continually before me: but you have not offered them in the proper way.

Verse 10. Every beast of the forest is mine] Can ye suppose that ye are laying me under obligation to you, when ye present me with a part of my own property?

Verse 12. The world is mine, and the fulness thereof] Ye cannot, therefore, give me any thing that is not my own.

Verse 13. Will I eat the flesh of bulls] Can ye be so

11 I know all the fowls of the mountains; and the wild beasts of the field are mine.

12 If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof.

13 Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats?

14 Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the Most High:

15 And call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.

16 But unto the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldst take my covenant in thy mouth?

17 Seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee.

18 When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with adulterers.

19 Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit.

simple as to suppose that I appointed such sacrifices for my own gratification? All these were significative of a spiritual worship, and of the sacrifice of that Lamb of God which, in the fulness of time, was to take away, in an atoning manner, the sin of the world.

Verse 14. And pay thy vows] "Thy vow-offerings, to the Most High." The neder or vow-offering was a male without blemish, taken from among the beeves, the sheep, or the goats. Compare Lev. xxii. 19 with ver. 22. Now these were offerings, in their spiritual and proper meaning, which God required of the people: and as the sacrificial system was established for an especial end—to show the sinfulness of sin, and the purity of Jehovah, and to show how sin could be atoned for, forgiven, and removed; this system was now to end in the thing that it signified,—the grand sacrifice of Christ, which was to make atonement, feed, nourish, and save the souls of believers unto eternal life; to excite their praise and thanksgiving; bind them to God Almighty by the most solemn vows to live to him in the spirit of gratitude and obedience all the days of their life. And, in order that they might be able to hold fast faith and a good conscience, they were to make continual prayer to God, who promised to hear and deliver them, that they might glorify him, ver. 15.

Verse 16. But unto the wicked] The bloodthirsty priests, proud Pharisees, and ignorant scribes of the Jewish people.

Verse 17. Seeing thou hatest instruction] All these rejected the counsel of God against themselves; and refused to receive the instructions of Christ.

Verse 18. When thou sawest a thief] Rapine, adulteries, and adulterous divines, were common among the Jews in our Lord's time.

Verse 21. These things hast thou done] My eye has been continually upon you, though my judgments have not been poured out.

Verse 22. Now consider this] Ye have forgotten your God, and sinned against him. He has marked down all your iniquities, and has them in order to exhibit against you. Beware, therefore, lest he tear you to pieces, when there is none to deliver; for none can deliver you but the Christ you reject. And how can ye escape, if ye neglect so great a salvation?

Verse 23. Whoso offereth praise] These are the very same words as those in ver. 14, and should be read the same way :

23 ^c Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me: and ^d to him ^e that ordereth his conversation aright will I shew the salvation of God.

^d Gal. vi. 16.—^e Heb. that disposeth his way.

"sacrifice the thank-offering." JESUS is the great eucharistic sacrifice; offer him up to God in your faith and prayers. By this sacrifice is God glorified, for in him is God well pleased; and it was by the grace or good pleasure of God that he tasted death for every man.

Ordereth his conversation] DISPOSETH his way.—Margin. Has his way THERE, as many MSS. and old editions have it; or makes that his custom.

Will I shew the salvation of God.] I will cause him to see into the salvation of God; into God's method of saving sinners by Christ. He shall witness my saving power even to the uttermost: such a salvation as it became a God to bestow, and as a fallen soul needs to receive; the salvation from all sin, which Christ has purchased by his death.

PSALM LI.

The Psalmist, with a deeply penitent heart, prays for remission of sins, 1-4; which he confesses, and deeply deplores, 5-14; states his willingness to offer sacrifice, but is convinced that God prefers a broken heart to all kinds of oblations, 15-17; prays for the restoration of the walls of Jerusalem, and promises that then the Lord's sacrifice shall be properly performed, 18, 19.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, * when Nathan the prophet came unto him, after he had gone in to Bath-sheba.

HAVE mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving-kindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies, blot out my transgressions.

2 Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.

3 For ^d I acknowledge my transgressions; and my sin is ever before me.

* 2 Sam. xii. 1. xl. 2, 4.—^b Ver. 9. Isa. xliii. 25. xlv. 22. Col. ii. 14.—^c Heb. ix. 14. 1 John i. 7, 9. Rev. i. 5.—^d Ps. xxxii. 5. xxxviii. 18.—^e Gen. xx. 6. xxxix. 9. Lev. v. 19. vi. 2. 2 Sam. xii.

Were it not for the 4th, 18th, and 19th verses, the psalm would accord well enough with the title, and the deep penitence it expresses would be suitable enough to David's state. But on account of these verses, the propriety of the title has been suspected.

Verse 1. Have mercy upon me, O God] Without mercy I am totally, finally ruined and undone.

According to thy loving-kindness] Mark the gradation in the sense of these three words, HAVE MERCY on me—thy LOVING-KINDNESS—thy TENDER MERCIES, here used to express the divine compassion.

Blot out my transgressions.] There is a reference here to an indictment: the Psalmist knows what it contains; he pleads guilty, but begs that the writing may be defaced; that a proper fluid may be applied to the parchment, to discharge the ink, that no record of it may ever appear against him: and this only the mercy, loving-kindness, and tender compassions of the Lord can do.

Verse 2. Wash me thoroughly] "Wash me again and again,—cause my washings to be multiplied." My stain is deep; ordinary purgation will not be sufficient.

Verse 3. For I acknowledge my transgressions] I know, I feel, I confess that I have sinned.

My sin is ever before me.] A true, deep, and unsophisticated mark of a genuine penitent. Wherever he turns his face, he sees his sin, and through it the eye of an angry God.

Verse 4. Against thee, thee only, have I sinned] This 4 * Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil ^f in thy sight: * that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest.

5 ^h Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; ⁱ and in sin did my mother ^j conceive me.

6 Behold, thou desirest truth ^k in the inward parts; and in the hidden part thou shalt make me to know wisdom.

7 ^l Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean:

verse is supposed to show the impropriety of affixing the above title to this psalm. It could not have been composed on account of the matter with Bath-sheba, and the murder of Uriah; for, surely, these sins could not be said to have been committed against God ONLY, if we take the words of this verse in their common acceptation.

That thou mightest be justified when thou speakest] Perhaps, to save the propriety of the title, we might understand the verse thus: David, being king, was not liable to be called to account by any of his subjects; nor was there any authority in the land by which he could be judged and punished. In this respect, God ALONE was greater than the king; and to him ALONE, as king, he was responsible.

Verse 5. Behold, I was shapen in iniquity] He deploras not only the transgression, but the carnal mind, which is enmity against God. The light that shines into his soul shows him the very source whence transgression proceeds; he sees his fallen nature, as well as his sinful life; he asks pardon for his transgressions, and he asks washing and cleansing for his inward defilement. I believe David speaks here of what is commonly called original sin; the propensity to evil which every man brings into the world with him, and which is the fruitful source whence all transgression proceeds.

Verse 6. Behold, thou desirest truth] I am the very reverse of what I should be. In me there is nothing but sin and falsity.

Thou shalt make me to know wisdom.] Thou wilt teach wash me, and I shall be ^awhiter than snow.

8 Make me to hear joy and gladness: that the bones which thou hast broken ^bmay rejoice.

9 ^cHide thy face from my sins, and ^dblot out all mine iniquities.

10 ^eCreate in me a clean heart, O God; and renew ^fa right spirit within me.

11 Cast me not away ^gfrom thy presence; and take not thy ^hHoly Spirit from me.

12 Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation: and uphold me with thy ⁱfree spirit.

13 Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee.

me to restrain every inordinate propensity, and to act according to the dictates of sound wisdom, the rest of my life.

Verse 7. Purge me with hyssop] "Thou shalt make a sin-offering for me;" probably alluding to the cleansing of the leper: Lev. xiv. 1, &c. But it is worthy of remark that this ceremony here indicated was not performed till the plague of the leprosy had been healed in the leper (Lev. xiv. 3.); and was intended to declare to the people that the man was healed, that he might be restored to his place in society, having been healed of a disease that the finger of God alone could remove. This David seems to have full in view; hence he requests the Lord to make the sin-offering for him and to show to the people that he had accepted him, and cleansed him from his sin.

Verse 8. Make me to hear joy] Let me have a full testimony of my reconciliation to thee; that the soul, which is so deeply distressed by a sense of thy displeasure, may be healed by a sense of thy pardoning mercy.

Verse 9. Hide thy face from my sins] The sentiment here is nearly the same as that in ver. 3: His sin was ever before his own face; and he knew that the eye of God was constantly upon him, and that his purity and justice must be highly incensed on the account. He therefore, with a just horror of his transgressions, begs God to turn away his face from them, and to blot them out, so that they may never more be seen.

Verse 10. Create in me a clean heart] Mending will not avail; my heart is altogether corrupted; it must be new made, made as it was in the beginning.

A right spirit within me.] Ruach nachon, a constant, steady, determined spirit; called ver. 12, ruach nedibah, a noble spirit, a free, generous, princely spirit; cheerfully giving up itself to thee; no longer bound and degraded by the sinfulness of sin.

Verse 11. Cast me not away from thy presence] Banish me not from thy house and ordinances.

Take not thy Holy Spirit from me.] While the Spirit stays, painfully convincing of sin, righteousness, and judgment, there is hope of salvation; when it departs, then the hope of redemption is gone. But while there is any godly sorrow, any feeling of regret for having sinned against God, any desire to seek mercy, then the case is not hopeless; for these things prove that the light of the Spirit is not withdrawn.

Verse 12. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation] This is an awful prayer. And why? Because it shows he once had the joy of God's salvation; and had lost it by sin!

Uphold me with thy free spirit.] Prop me up; support me with a princely spirit, one that will not stoop to a mean or base act.

thou God of my salvation: and ^lmy tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness.

15 O LORD, open thou my lips; and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise.

16 For ^mthou desirest not sacrifice; ⁿelse would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt-offering.

17 ^oThe sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

18 Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion: build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

19 Then shalt thou be pleased with ^pthe sacrifices of righteousness, with burnt-offering and whole burnt-offering: then shall they offer bullocks upon thine altar.

Verse 18. Then will I teach transgressors] I will show myself to be grateful; I will testify of thy loving-kindness; I will call on transgressors to consider the error of their ways; and shall set before them so forcibly thy justice and mercy, that sinners shall be converted unto thee.

Verse 14. Deliver me from blood-guiltiness] This is one of the expressions that gives most colour to the propriety of the title affixed to this psalm. Here he may have in view the death of Uriah, and consider that his blood cries for vengeance against him; and nothing but the mere mercy of God can wipe this blood from his conscience. The prayer here is earnest and energetic: O God! thou God of my salvation! deliver me!

My tongue shall sing aloud] I shall testify to all that thou hast the highest displeasure against sin, and wilt excuse it in no person; and that so merciful art thou, that if a sinner turn to thee with a deeply penitent and broken heart, thou wilt forgive his iniquities. None, from my case, can ever presume; none, from my case, need ever despair.

Verse 15. O Lord, open thou my lips] He could not praise God for pardon till he felt that God had pardoned him; then his lips would be opened, and his tongue would show forth the praise of his Redeemer.

Verse 16. For thou desirest not sacrifice] Crimes, like mine, are not to be expiated by any sacrifices that the law requires; nor hast thou appointed in the law any sacrifices to atone for deliberate murder and adultery: if thou hadst, I would cheerfully have given them to thee. The matter is before thee as Judge.

Verse 17. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit] These words are very expressive. Shabar signifies exactly the same as our word shiver, to break into pieces, to reduce into splinters; and dakah, signifies to beat out thin,—to beat out masses of metal, &c., into laminae or thin plates. The spirit broken all to pieces, and the heart broken all to pieces, stamped and beaten out, are the sacrifices which, in such cases, thou requirest; and these "thou wilt not despise." We may now suppose that God had shone upon his soul, healed his broken spirit, and renewed and removed his broken and distracted heart; and that he had now received the answer to the preceding prayers.

Verse 18. Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion] This and the following verse most evidently refer to the time of the captivity, when the walls of Jerusalem were broken down, and the temple service entirely discontinued; and, consequently, are long posterior to the times of David. Hence it has been concluded that the psalm was not composed by David, nor in his time; and that the title must be that of some other psalm inadvertently affixed to this.

PSALM LII.

The Psalmist points out the malevolence of a powerful enemy, and predicts his destruction, 1-5. At which destruction the righteous should rejoice, 6, 7. The Psalmist's confidence in God, 8, 9.

To the chief Musician, Maschil, A Psalm of David, when Doeg the Edomite came and told Saul, and said unto him, David is come to the house of Ahimelech.

WHY boastest thou thyself in mischief, O mighty man? the goodness of God endureth continually.

2 Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs; like a sharp razor, working deceitfully.

3 Thou lovest evil more than good; and lying rather than to speak righteousness. Selah.

4 Thou lovest all devouring words, O thou deceitful tongue.

5 God shall likewise destroy thee for ever, he shall take thee away, and pluck thee out of thy dwelling place, and root thee out of the land of the living. Selah.

6 The righteous also shall see, and fear, and shall laugh at him.

7 Lo, this is the man that made not God his strength; but trusted in the abundance of his riches and strengthened himself in his wickedness.

8 But I am like a green olive tree in the house of God: I trust in the mercy of God for ever and ever.

9 I will praise thee for ever, because thou hast done it: and I will wait on thy name; for it is good before thy saints.

The history to which the title of this Psalm alludes may be found 1 Sam. xxi. 1-7, xxii. 9-23. All the Versions agree in this title except the Syriac, which speaks of it as a psalm directed against vice in general, with a prediction of the destruction of evil.

Though the psalm be evidently an invective against some great, wicked, and tyrannical man, yet I think it too mild in its composition for a transaction the most barbarous on record, and the most flagrant vice in the whole character of Saul.

Verse 1. Why boastest thou thyself? It is thought that Doeg boasted of his loyalty to Saul in making the above discovery; but the information was aggravated by circumstances of falsehood that tended greatly to inflame and irritate the mind of Saul. Exaggeration and lying are common to all informers.

O mighty man? This character scarcely comports with Doeg, who was only chief of the herdsmen of Saul, 1 Sam. xxi. 7; but I grant this is not decisive evidence that the psalm may not have been a man of credit and authority.

Verse 2. Deviseth mischiefs? Lies and slanders proceeding from the tongue argue the desperate wickedness of the heart.

Like a sharp razor, working deceitfully. Which instead of taking off the beard, cuts and wounds the flesh; or as the operator who, when pretending to trim the beard, cuts the throat.

Verse 3. Thou lovest evil? This was a finished character. Verse 5. God shall likewise destroy thee? 1. God shall set himself to destroy thee; yittotscha, "he will pull down thy building;" he shall unroof it, dilapidate, and dig up thy foundation. 2. He shall bruise or break thee to pieces for ever; thou shalt have neither strength, consistence, nor support. 3. He will mow thee down, and sweep thee away like dust or chaff, or light hay in the whirlwind, so that thou shalt be scattered to all the winds of heaven.

Verse 6. The righteous also shall see, and fear? The thing shall be done in the sight of the saints; they shall see God's judgments on the workers of iniquity; and they shall fear a God so holy and just, and feel the necessity of being doubly on their guard lest they fall into the same condemnation.

Verse 7. Made not God his strength? Did not make God his portion.

In the abundance of his riches? Literally, in the multiplication of his riches. He had got much, he hoped to get more, and expected that his happiness would multiply as his riches multiplied. And this is the case with most rich men.

Strengthened himself in his wickedness. Loved money instead of God; and thus his depravity, being increased, was strengthened.

Where is the religious man, in whose hands money has multiplied, who has not lost the spirit of piety in the same ratio? To prevent this, and the perdition to which it leads, there is no way, but opening both hands to the poor.

Verse 8. But I am like a green olive-tree in the house of God? It does not mean that there were olive-trees planted in God's house; but he was in God's house, as the olive was in its proper place and soil.

I trust in the mercy of God? The wicked man trusts in his riches; I trust in my God. He, like a bad tree, bringing forth poisonous fruit, shall be cursed, and pulled up from the roots; I, like a healthy olive in a good soil, shall, under the influence of God's mercy, bring forth fruit to his glory.

Verse 9. I will praise thee for ever? Because I know that all my good comes from thee; therefore will I ever praise thee for that good.

I will wait on thy name? I will expect all my blessings from the all-sufficient Jehovah, who is eternal and unchangeable.

It is good before thy saints. It is right that I should expect a continuation of thy blessings by uniting with thy saints in using thy ordinances. Thus I shall wait.

PSALM LIII.

The sentiments of Atheists and Deists, who deny Divine Providence; their character: they are corrupt, foolish, abominable, and cruel, 1-4; God fills them with terror, 5; reproaches them for their oppression of the poor, 5. The Psalmist prays for the restoration of Israel, 6.

A Psalm of David.

THE fool hath said in his heart, There is no God. Corrupt are they, and have done abominable iniquity: ^b there is none that doeth good.

2 God ^c looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, that did ^d seek God.

3 Every one of them is gone back: they are altogether become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

Verse 1. The fool hath said in his heart] The whole of this psalm, except a few inconsiderable differences, is the same as the fourteenth; and, therefore, the same notes may be applied to it; or, by referring to the fourteenth, the reader will find the subject of it amply explained. I shall add a few short notes.

Verse 5. For God hath scattered the bones of him that encampeth against thee: thou hast put them to shame because God hath despised them] The reader will see, on comparing this with the fifth and sixth verses of Ps. xiv.,

4 Have the workers of iniquity ^a no knowledge? who eat up my people as they eat bread: they have not called upon God.

5 ^b There ^c were they in great fear, where no fear was: for God hath ^d scattered the bones of him that encampeth against thee: thou hast put them to shame, because God hath despised them.

that the words above are mostly added here to what is said there; and appear to be levelled against the Babylonians, who sacked and ruined Jerusalem, and who were now sacked and ruined in their turn.

Verse 6. O that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion!] I have already shown that the proper translation is, "Who shall give from Zion salvation of Israel?" The word salvation is in the plural here, deliverances: but many MSS. have it in the singular.

PSALM LIV.

The Psalmist complains that strangers were risen up against him to take away his life, 1-3; expresses his confidence in God that he will uphold him, and punish his enemies, 4, 5; on which he promises to sacrifice to God, 6; he speaks of his deliverance, 7.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, Maschil, A Psalm of David, ^a when the Ziphims came and said to Saul, Doth not David hide himself with us?

Save me, O God, by thy name, and judge me by thy strength.

2 Hear my prayer, O God; give ear to the words of my mouth.

3 For ^b strangers are risen up against me, and oppressors seek after my soul; they have not set God before them. Selah.

It is supposed to have been after the deliverance recorded in 1 Sam. xxiii. 19-29 that David composed this psalm. Neginoth, from nagan, to strike or play on some kind of instrument, probably signifies stringed instruments, such as were played on with a plectrum.

Verse 1. Save me, O God, by thy name] Save me by thyself alone; so name here may be understood. The name of God is often God himself. David was now in such imminent danger of being taken and destroyed, that no human means were left for his escape; if God therefore had not interfered, he must have been destroyed.

Verse 2. Hear my prayer] In his straits he had recourse to God; for from him alone, for the reasons alleged above, his deliverance must proceed.

Verse 3. Strangers are risen up against me] The Ziphites.

And oppressors] Saul, his courtiers, and his army. They have not set God before them.] It is on no religious account, nor is it to accomplish any end, on which they can ask the blessing of God.

Verse 4. Behold, God is mine helper] This would naturally occur to him when he saw that Saul was obliged to leave the pursuit, and go to defend his territories, when he was on the very point of seizing him.

Is with them that uphold my soul.] Naphshi, my life. This may even refer to the Philistines, who had at this time made an inroad on Israel. God was even with his own enemies, by making them instruments to save the life of his servant.

Verse 5. He shall reward evil] Saul and his courtiers, instead of having God's approbation, shall have his curse.

Cut them off in thy truth.] Thou hast promised to save me; these have purposed to destroy me. Thy truth is engaged in my defence; they will destroy me if permitted to live; to save thy truth, and to accomplish its promises, thou shalt cut them off.

Verse 6. I will freely sacrifice unto thee] Or, I will sacrifice nobly unto thee. Not only with a willing mind, but with a liberal hand, will I bring sacrifice unto thee.

For it is good.] Thy name is good; it is descriptive of thy nature; full of goodness and mercy to man. And it is good to be employed in such a work: whoever worships thee in sincerity is sure to be a gainer.

Verse 7. For he hath delivered me] Saul had now departed, and was returned to save his territories; and David in the meanwhile escaped to En-gedi. God was most evidently the author of this deliverance.

Mine eye hath seen his desire upon mine enemies.] There is nothing in the text for his desire; and the words might be translated, My eye hath seen my enemies—they have been so near that I could plainly discover them; and yet they were not permitted to approach me. God has been my Deliverer.

PSALM L V.

David, in great danger and distress from the implacable malice of his enemies, calls on God for mercy, 1-5; wishes he had the wings of a dove, that he might flee away, and be at rest, 6-8; prays against his enemies, and describes their wickedness, 9-11; speaks of a false friend, who had been the principal cause of all his distresses, 12-14; again prays against his enemies, 15; expresses his confidence in God, 16-18; gives a further description of the deceitful friend, 19-21; encourages himself in the Lord; and foretells the destruction of his foes, 22, 23.

Verse 2. I mourn in my complaint] In my sighing; a strong guttural sound, expressive of the natural accents of sorrow.

And make a noise] I am in a tumult—I am strongly agitated.

Verse 3. They cast iniquity upon me] To give a colourable pretence to their rebellion, they charge me with horrible crimes. Clamour against the person of the sovereign is always the watch-word of insurrection, in reference to rebellion.

Violence and strife in the city.] They have been concerting violent measures; and thus are full of contention.

Verse 10. Day and night they go about] This and the following verse show the state of Jerusalem at this time. Indeed, they exhibit a fair view of the state of any city in the beginning of an insurrection.

Verse 12. It was not an enemy] It is likely that in all these three verses Ahithophel is meant, who, it appears, had been at the bottom of the conspiracy from the beginning.

Verse 14. Walked unto the house of God in company.] Or with haste; for the rabbins teach that we should walk hastily to the temple, but slowly FROM it.

Verse 15. Let death seize upon them] This is a prediction of the sudden destruction which should fall on the ring-leaders in this rebellion. And it was so.

Let them go down quick into hell] Let them go down alive into the pit. Let the earth swallow them up! And something of this kind actually took place. The words might be rendered, "Death shall exact upon them; they shall descend alive into sheol." And death did exact his debt upon them, as we have seen above.

Verse 16. I will call upon God] He foresaw his deliverance, and the defeat of his enemies, and therefore speaks confidently, "The Lord shall save me."

Verse 17. Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray] This was the custom of the pious Hebrews. See Dan. vi. 10. The Hebrews began their day in the evening, and hence David mentions the evening first. The rabbins say, Men should pray three times each day, because the day changes three times. This was observed in the primitive church; but the times, in different places, were various.

Verse 18. He hath delivered my soul] David may refer to the supernatural assistance which was afforded him when his enemies were so completely discomfited.

Verse 19. Because they have no changes] At first Absalom, Ahithophel, and their party, carried all before them. Most of those who have few or no afflictions and trials in life, have but little religion.

Verse 20. He hath put forth his hands] A farther description of Ahithophel. He betrayed his friends, and he broke his covenant with his king.

Verse 21. Were smoother than butter] He was a complete courtier, and a deep, designing hypocrite besides. This is a literal description of the words and conduct of Absalom, as we learn from the inspired historian, 2 Sam. xv. 2, &c.

Verse 22. Cast thy burden upon the Lord] Whatever cares, afflictions, trials, &c., they may be with which thou art oppressed, lay them upon him.

And he shall sustain thee] He shall bear both thee and thy burden. What a glorious promise to a tempted and afflicted soul! God will carry both thee and thy load. Then cast thyself and it upon him.

He shall never suffer the righteous to be moved.] While a man is righteous, trusts in, and depends upon God, he will never suffer him to be shaken. He is as safe as if he were in heaven.

Verse 23. Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days] So we find, if there be an appointed time to man upon earth, beyond which he cannot pass; yet he may so live as to provoke the justice of God to cut him off before he arrives at that period; yea, before he has reached half way to that limit. According to the decree of God, he might have lived the other half; but he has not done it.

But I will trust in thee.] Therefore I shall not be moved, and shall live out all the days of my appointed time.

The fathers in general apply the principal passages of this psalm to our Lord's sufferings, the treason of Judas, and the wickedness of the Jews; but these things do not appear to me fairly deducible from the text. It seems to refer plainly enough to the rebellion of Absalom.

PSALM LVI.

David prays for support against his enemies, whose wickedness he describes, 1-6; and foretells their destruction, 7; expresses his confidence in God's mercy, expects deliverance, and promises thanksgiving and obedience, 8-13.

To the chief Musician upon Jonath-elem-rechokim; * Michtam of David; when the ^b Philistines took him in Gath.

If the title of this psalm be at all authentic, David may mean himself and his companions by it, when he escaped from the hands of the Philistines; particularly from Achish, king of Gath.

But there is no end to conjectures, and all the titles in the whole book are not worth one hour's labour. Perhaps there is not one of them authentic.

Verse 1. Be merciful unto me] I am assailed both at home and abroad. I can go nowhere without meeting with enemies; unless thou, who art the Fountain of mercy and the Most High, stand up in my behalf, my enemies will most undoubtedly prevail against me.

Verse 2. O thou Most High.] I do not think that this word expresses any attribute of God, or indeed is at all addressed to him. It signifies, literally, from on high, or from a high or elevated place: "For the multitudes fight against me from the high or elevated place;" the place of authority—the court and cabinet of Saul.

Verse 4. In God I will praise his word.] Belohim may mean here, through God, or by the help of God I will praise his word. And, that he should have cause to do it, he says, "I will not fear what flesh can do unto me." Man is but flesh, weak and perishing; God is an infinite Spirit, almighty and eternal.

Verse 5. Every day they wrest my words] They have been spies on my conduct continually; they collected all my sayings, and wrested my words out of their proper sense and meaning, to make them speak treason against Saul. They are full of evil purposes against me.

Verse 6. They gather themselves together] They form cabals; have secret meetings and consultations how they may most effectually destroy me, under the pretence of justice and safety to the state.

They wait for my soul.] They lie in wait for my life.

Verse 7. Shall they escape by iniquity?] Shall such conduct go unpunished? Shall their address, their dexterity in working iniquity, be the means of their escape? No. "In anger, O God, wilt thou cast down the people."

Verse 8. Thou tellest my wanderings] Thou seest how often I am obliged to shift the place of my retreat. I am hunted everywhere; but thou numberest all my hiding-places, and seest how often I am in danger of losing my life.

Put thou my tears into thy bottle] Here is an allusion to a very ancient custom, of putting the tears which were shed for the death of any person in small phials, called lacrymatories or urns lacrymales, and offering them on the tomb of the deceased. Some of these were of glass, some of pottery, and some of agate, sardonyx, &c.

Are they not in thy book?] Thou hast taken an exact account of all the tears I have shed in relation to this business; and thou wilt call my enemies to account for every tear.

Verse 9. When I cry unto thee, then shall mine enemies turn back] The cry of faith and prayer to God is more dreadful to our spiritual foes than the war-whoop of the Indian is to his surprised brother savages.

This I know] He who has God WITH him need not fear the face of any adversary.

Verse 12. Thy vows are upon me] I have promised in the most solemn manner to be thy servant; to give my whole life to thee; and to offer for my preservation sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving.

Verse 13. Thou hast delivered my soul from death] My life from the grave, and my soul from endless perdition.

My feet from falling, &c.] To walk before God is to please him; the light of the living signifies the whole course of human life, with all its comforts and advantages.

PSALM LVII.

David cries to God for mercy, with the strongest confidence of being heard, 1-3; he describes his enemies as lions, 4; thanks God for his deliverance, 5; and purposes to publish the praises of the Lord among his people, 6-11.

To the chief Musician * Al-taschith, Michtam of David, ^b when he fled from Saul in the cave.

It is very likely that this psalm was made to commemorate David's escape from Saul in the cave of En-gedi. See the history, 1 Sam. xxiv. [The word Al-taschith in the title of this and other psalms refers to the beginning of some well-known song, according to the manner of which this psalm was to be chanted.]

Verse 1. Be merciful unto me] To show David's deep earnestness, he repeats this twice; he was in great danger, surrounded by implacable enemies, and he knew that God alone could deliver him.

My soul trusteth in thee] I put my life into thy hand; and my immortal spirit knows no other portion than thyself.

In the shadow of thy wings] A metaphor taken from the brood of a hen taking shelter under her wings when they see a bird of prey; and there they continue to hide themselves till their enemy disappears. In a storm, or tempest of rain, the mother covers them with her wings to afford them shelter and defence.

Verse 2. I will cry unto God most high] He is the Most High; and therefore far above all my enemies, though the prince of the power of the air be at their head.

Unto God, lael, unto the strong God, one against whom no human or diabolic might can prevail. David felt his own weakness, and he knew the strength of his adversaries; and therefore he views God under those attributes and characters which were suited to his state. This is a great secret in the God shall send forth his mercy and his truth.] Here mercy and truth are personified. They are the messengers that God will send from heaven to save me.

Verse 4. My soul is among lions] "My soul dwells in parched places," from laab, he thirsted.

I lie even among them that are set on fire] I seem to be among coals. It is no ordinary rage and malice by which I am pursued: each of my enemies seems determined to have my life.

Verse 5. Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens] Let the glory of thy mercy and truth be seen in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath.

Verse 6. They have prepared a net for my steps] A gin or springe, such as huntamen put in the places which they know the prey they seek frequents: such, also, as they place in passages in hedges, &c., through which the game creeps.

and wild beasts. Saul digged a pit, laid snares for the life of David ; and fell into one of them himself, particularly at the cave of Engedi ; for he entored into the very pit or cave where David and his men were hidden, and his life lay at the generosity of the very man whose life he was seeking !

Verse 7. My heart is fixed] My heart is prepared to do and suffer thy will. It is fixed—it has made the firmest purpose through his strength by which I can do all things.

Verse 8. Awake up, my glory] Instead of kebodi, “ my glory,” one MS., and the Syriac, have kennori, “ my harp.” I think the Syriac likely to be the true reading. If we read my glory, it may refer either to his tongue ; or, which is more likely, to his skill in composition, and in playing on different instruments.

Verse 9. Among the people] The Israelites.

10 * For thy mercy is great unto the heavens, and thy truth unto the clouds.

11 ^a Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens : let thy glory be above all the earth.

* Ps. xxxvi. 5. lxxi. 19. ciii. 11. cviii. 4.—^a Ver. 5.

Among the nations.] The Gentiles at large. A prophecy either relating to the gospel times, Christ being considered as the Speaker : or a prediction that these divine compositions should be sung, both in the synagogues and in Christian churches, in all the nations of the earth. And it is so : wherever the name of Christ is known, there is David's known also.

Verse 10. Thy mercy is great unto the heavens] It is as far above all human description and comprehension as the heavens are above the earth.

Verse 11. Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens] David was not only in a happy state of mind when he wrote this psalm, but in what is called a state of triumph. His confidence in God was unbounded ; though encompassed by the most ferocious enemies, and having all things against him except God and his innocence.

PSALM LVIII.

David reproves wicked counsellors and judges, who pervert justice, and stir up the strong against the weak and innocent, 1-5. He foretells their destruction, and describes the nature of it, 6-9. The righteous, seeing this, will magnify God's justice and providence, 10, 11.

To the chief Musician, * Al-taschith, ^b Michtam of David.

DO ye indeed speak righteousness, O congregation ? do ye judge uprightly, O ye sons of men ?

2 Yea, in heart ye work wickedness ; ^c ye weigh the violence of your hands in the earth.

3 ^a The wicked are estranged from the womb : they go astray ^c as soon as they be born, speaking lies.

* Or, Destroy not, A golden Psalm of David.—^b Ps. Ivii. title.—^c Ps. xciv. 20. Isa. x. 1.—^d Ps. li. 5. Isa. xlvi. 8.—^e Heb. from the belly.—^f Ps. cxl. 3. Eccles. x. 11.—^g Heb. according to the likeness.—^h Jer.

The title seems to have no reference to the subject of the psalm. Saul is supposed to have called a council, when they, to ingratiate themselves with him, adjudged David to be guilty of treason in aspiring to the throne of Israel.

Verse 1. Do ye indeed speak righteousness] Or, seeing ye profess to act according to the principles of justice, why do ye not give righteous counsels and just decisions, ye sons of men ? Or, it may be an irony : What excellent judges you are ! well do ye judge according to law and justice, when ye give decisions not founded on any law, nor supported by any principle of justice !

Verse 2. Yea, in heart ye work wickedness] With their tongues they had spoken maliciously, and given evil counsel. In their hearts they meditated nothing but wickedness. And though in their hands they held the scales of justice, yet in their use of them they were balances of injustice and violence.

Verse 3. The wicked are estranged from the womb] He calls these wicked men, men who had been always wicked, originally and naturally bad, and brought up in falsehood, flattery and lying. The part they acted now was quite in character.

Verse 4. Their poison is like the poison of a serpent] When they bite, they convey poison into the wound, as the serpent does. They not only injure you by outward acts, but by their malevolence they poison your reputation. Such is the slanderer, and such his influence in society. From such no reputation is safe ; with such no character is sacred ; and against such there is no defence. God alone can shield the innocent from the venomous tongue and lying lips of such inward monsters in the shape of men.

4 * Their poison is ^a like the poison of a serpent : they are like ^b the deaf ^c adder that stoppeth her ear ;

5 Which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, ^d charming never so wisely.

6 ^k Break their teeth, O God, in their mouth : break out the great teeth of the young lions, O LORD.

viii. 17.—^l Or, asp.—^m Or, be the charmer never so cunning.—ⁿ Job iv. 10. Pa. iii. 7.—^o Josh. vii. 5. Pa. cxii. 16.

Like the deaf adder that stoppeth her ear] It is a fact that cannot be disputed with any show of reason, that in ancient times there were persons that charmed, lulled to inactivity, or professed to charm, serpents, so as to prevent them from biting. See Eccles. x. 11 ; Jer. viii. 17.

Verse 5. Which will not hearken to the voice of charmers] It seems as if there were a species of snake or adder that is nearly deaf ; and as their instinct informs them that if they listen to the sounds which charmers use they shall become a prey ; therefore they stop their ears to prevent the little hearing they have from being the means of their destruction. We have also an account of a species of snake, which if it cast its eye on the charmer, feels itself obliged to come out of his hole ; it therefore keeps close, and takes care neither to see nor be seen.

Verse 6. Break their teeth] He still compares Saul, his captains, and his courtiers, to lions ; and as a lion's power of doing mischief is greatly lessened if all his teeth be broken, so he prays that God may take away their power and means of pursuing their bloody purpose. But he may probably have the serpents in view, of which he speaks in the preceding verse : break their teeth—destroy the fangs of these serpents, in which their poison is contained. This will amount to the same meaning as above. Save me from the adders—the sly and poisonous slanderers ; save me also from the lions—the tyrannical and blood-thirsty men.

Verse 7. Let them melt away as waters] Let them be diminished away like the waters which sometimes run in the desert, but are soon evaporated by the sun, or absorbed by the sand.

8 As a snail which melteth, let every one of them pass away: like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not see the sun.

9 Before your pots can feel the thorns, he shall take them away as with a whirlwind, both living, and in his wrath.

When he bendeth his bow] When my adversaries aim their envenomed shafts against me, let their arrows not only fall short of the mark, but be broken to pieces in their flight.

Verse 9. Before your pots can feel the thorns] From the time that the fire of God's wrath is kindled about you, it will be but as a moment before ye be entirely consumed by it: so very short will be the time, that it may be likened to the heat of the first blaze of dry thorns under a pot, that has not as yet been able to penetrate the metal, and warm what is contained in it.

A whirlwind] Or the suffocating simoom that destroys life in an instant, without previous warning: so, without pining sickness—while ye are living—lively and active, the whirlwind of God's wrath shall sweep you away.

Verse 10. The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance] He shall have a strong proof of the divine providence, of God's hatred against sinners, and his continual care of his followers.

10 ^d The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance: ^e he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.

11 ^f So that a man shall say, Verily there is ^g a reward for the righteous: verily he is a God that ^h judgeth in the earth.

^a Ps. cxli. 15.—^b Heb. fruit of the, &c. Isa. lli. 10.—^c Ps. lxxvii. 4. xcvi. 13. cxviii. 9.

He shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.] This can only mean that the slaughter would be so great, and at the same time so very nigh to the dwelling of the righteous, that he could not go out without dipping his feet in the blood of the wicked. Every thing that is vindictive in the psalms must be considered as totally alien from the spirit of the gospel and not at all, under our dispensation, to be imitated.

Verse 11. So that a man shall say] That is, people seeing these just judgments of God, shall say: There is a reward (peri, fruit) to the righteous man. He has not sown his seed in vain; he has not planted and watered in vain: he has the fruit of his labours, he eats the fruit of his doings.

He is a God that judgeth in the earth.] There is a God who does not entirely defer judgment till the judgment-day, but executes judgment now, even in this earth; and thus continues to give such proof of his hatred to sin and love to his followers, that every considerate mind is convinced of it.

PSALM LIX.

The Psalmist prays for deliverance from his enemies, whose desperate wickedness he describes, 1-7; professes strong confidence in God, 8-10; speaks of the destruction of his enemies, 11-15; praises God for benefits already received; and determines to trust in him, 16, 17.

To the chief Musician, ^a Al-taschith, ^b Michtam of David: ^c when Saul sent, and they watched the house to kill him.

DELIVER ^d me from mine enemies, O my God: ^e defend me from them that rise up against me.

2 Deliver me from the workers of iniquity, and save me from bloody men.

3 For, lo, they lie in wait for my soul: ^f the mighty are gathered against me; ^g not for my transgression, nor for my sin, O LORD.

^a Or, Destroy not, A golden Psalm of David.—^b Ps. lvii. title.—^c 1 Sam. xix. 11.—^d Ps. xviii. 48.—^e Heb. set me on high.—^f Ps. lvi. 6.—^g 1 Sam. xxiv. 11.—^h Ps. xxxv. 23. xlv. 23.—ⁱ Heb. to meet me.—

When the reader considers the whole of this psalm carefully, he will be convinced that the title does not correspond to the contents. There is scarcely any thing in it that can apply to the circumstances of Saul's sending his guards by night to keep the avenues to the house of David, that when the morning came they might seize and slay him; and of his being saved through the information given him by his wife Michal, in consequence of which he was let down through a window, and so escaped. See 1 Sam. xix. 10, 11. The psalm most evidently agrees to the time of Nehemiah, when he was endeavouring to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, when the enterprise was first mocked; then opposed by Sanballat the Horonite, Tobiah the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian, who watched day and night that they might cause the work to cease; and laid ambuscades for the life of Nehemiah himself.

Verse 2. The workers of iniquity] Principally Sanballat the Horonite, Tobiah the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian; who were the chief enemies of the poor returned captives.

that they might take away his life. See Neh. vi. 1-4.

Verse 4. They run and prepare themselves] They leave no stone unturned that they may effect my destruction, and prevent the building.

Verse 5. O Lord God of hosts] This was a proper view to take of God, when Israel, a handful of poor distressed captives were surrounded and opposed by the heathen chiefs above mentioned, and their several tribes. But Jehovah, God of hosts, was the God of Israel; and hence Israel had little to fear.

Be not merciful to any wicked transgressors.] Do not favour the cause of these wicked men. They are bogedey aven, "changers of iniquity:" they go through the whole round of evil; find out and exercise themselves in all the varieties of transgression. How exactly does this apply to Nehemiah's foes! The prayer here is exactly the same sentiment with that of Nehemiah, chap. iv. 4, 5.

Verse 6. They return at evening] When the beasts of prey leave their dens, and go prowling about the cities and villages.

Verse 7. They belch out with their mouth] They use the lowest insult, the basest abuse.

Verse 8. Thou, O Lord, shalt laugh at them] They have mocked us; God will turn them and their schemes into ridicule and contempt: "Thou shalt have all these heathenish nations in derision."

Verse 9. Because of his strength will I wait upon thee] With this reading, I can make no sense of the passage. But instead of uzzo, "his strength," uzzi, "my strength," is the reading of fourteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., of the Vulgate, Septuagint, Chaldee, and Arabic; and also of the Anglo-Saxon. To thee I commit all my strength; all I have I derive from thee, and all the good I possess I attribute to thee.

Verse 10. The God of my mercy shall prevent me] The mercy of God shall go before me, and thus help me in all my doings.

God shall let me see my desire] The sentence is short. God will let me see concerning my enemies, i.e., how he will treat them.

Verse 11. Slay them not, lest my people forget] Preserve them long in a state of chastisement, that Israel may see thou hast undertaken for them: that thy hand is on the wicked for evil, and on them for good.

Verse 12. For the sin of their mouth] This verse has puzzled all the commentators. If we take chattath for sin-offering instead of sin, we shall get a better sense. He may allude particularly to the occupancy by Tobiah of the chamber of offerings, which offerings, instead of being given to the Levites, were consumed by Tobiah and his household. This may be fairly gathered from Neh. xiii. 5, 10, 11. Here then we have the sin of their mouth; their eating the offerings that belonged to the Levites; so that the temple service was deserted, the Levites being obliged to go and till the ground in order to obtain the means of life. And if we take chattath for sin-offering, it may refer to promises of sacrifice and offering which Tobiah and his family made, but never performed. They ate instead of offering them; and here was the sin of their mouth, in connexion with the words of their lips, and their cursing and lying which they spake, for which the Psalmist calls upon the Lord to consume them, that they may not be, ver. 13.

Verse 14. At evening let them return] Being fully assured of God's protection, and that they shall soon be made a public example, he says, Let them return and make a noise like a dog, &c., like dogs, jackals, and other famished creatures, who come howling about the city-walls for something to eat, and wander up and down for meat, grumbling because they are not satisfied, ver. 15.

Verse 16. I will sing of thy power] For it was because thy hand was upon me for good, that I have thus succeeded in my enterprises.

Yea, I will sing aloud of thy mercy] I shall publish abroad what thou hast done; and done not for my worthiness, nor for the worthiness of the people; but for thy own mercy's sake.

In the day of my trouble.] When I came with small means and feeble help, and had the force and fraud of many enemies to contend with, besides the corruption and unfaithfulness of my own people; thou wast then my defence; and in all attacks, whether open or covered, my sure refuge.

Verse 17. Unto thee, O my strength] The words are very emphatic: God is my strength; God is my elevation. My God is my mercy. I have nothing good but what I have from God. And all springs from his dwelling in me. God, therefore, shall have all the glory, both now and for ever.

PSALM LX.

The Psalmist complains of the desolations which had fallen on the land; prays for deliverance, 1-5; and promises himself victory over Shechem, Succoth, Gilead, Ephraim, Moab, Idumea, and the Philistines, by the especial help and assistance of God, 6-12.

To the chief Musician * upon Shushan-eduth, ^b Michtam of David, to teach; * when he strove with Aram-naharaim and with Aram-zobah, when Joab returned, and smote of Edom in the valley of salt twelve thousand.

O GOD, * thou hast cast us off, thou hast scattered us, thou hast been displeased: O turn thyself to us again.

2 Thou hast made the earth to tremble; thou hast broken it: * heal the breaches thereof; for it shaketh.

3 * Thou hast shewed thy people hard things: * thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment.

4 * Thou hast given a banner to them that feared thee, that it may be displayed because of the truth. Selah.

5 * That thy beloved may be delivered; save with thy right hand, and hear me.

* Ps. lxxx. title.—^b Or, A golden Psalm.—^c 2 Sam. viii. 3, 13. 1 Chron. xviii. 3, 12.—^d Ps. xiv. 9.—^e Heb. broken.—^f 2 Chron. vii. 14.—^g Ps. lxxi. 20.—^h Isa. li. 17, 22. There is nothing in the contents of this psalm that bears any relation to the title. [It is impossible to attach any intelligible meaning to the title.] According to the title it should be a song of victory and triumph; instead of which the first part of it is a tissue of complaints of disaster and defeat, caused by the divine desertion. Besides, it was not Joab that slew twelve thousand men in the Valley of Salt; it was Abishai, the brother of Joab; and the number twelve thousand here is not correct; for there were eighteen thousand slain in that battle, as we learn from 1 Chron. xviii. 12. The valley of salt or salt pits is in Idumea. The latter part of the psalm seems to be intended to put God in remembrance of his ancient promise of putting Israel in possession of the whole land by driving out the ancient iniquitous inhabitants.

Verse 1. O God, thou hast cast us off] Instead of being our general in the battle, thou hast left us to ourselves; and then there was only the arm of flesh against the arm of flesh, numbers and physical power were left to decide the contest.

Verse 3. Thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment.] We reel as drunken men; we are giddy, like those who have drunk too much wine; but our giddiness has been occasioned by the astonishment and dismay that have taken place in consequence of the prevalence of our enemies, and the unsettled state of the land.

Verse 4. Thou hast given a banner] Nes, a sign, something that was capable of being fixed on a pole.

Because of the truth.] Mippeney koshet, from the face of truth; which has been thus paraphrased: If we have displayed the ensign of Israel, and gone forth against these our enemies, who have now made such a terrible breach among us (ver. 1-3), it was because of thy truth—the promises of victory which we supposed would attend us at all times.

The fourth verse seems to mean that God had appointed for the consolation of his people a certain signal of favour, with which therefore he prays him to answer them. This, accordingly, he does. God speaketh in his sanctuary, called debir or oracle for that very reason. What he desires then, as he stands imploring the mercy of God before the oracle, is, that he may see the usual signal of favour proceed from it; a voice, perhaps joined with some luminous emanation, whence the phrase of the light of God's countenance. The expression in the sixth verse seems to be proverbial, and means, "I shall divide the spoils of my enemies with as much ease as the sons of Jacob portioned out Shechem, and measured out for their tents the valley of Succoth."

Verse 6. God hath spoken] Judah shall not only be re-established in Jerusalem, but shall possess Samaria, where Shechem is, and the country beyond Jordan, in which is situated the valley of Succoth. Dividing and meting out signify possession.

Verse 7. Gilead is mine] This country was also beyond Jordan, and Manasseh and Ephraim are put for the tribes that formed the kingdom of Israel. All these, after the return from the captivity, formed but one people, the Jews and Israelites being united.

The strength of mine head] It shall be the principle support of the new-formed kingdom, when all distinctions shall be buried.

Judah is my lawgiver] This tribe was chief of all those who returned from the captivity; and Zerubbabel, who was their leader, was chief of that tribe, and of the family of David.

Verse 8. Moab is my washpot] The Moabites shall be reduced to the meanest slavery.

Over Edom will I cast out my shoe] I will make a complete conquest of Idumea, and subject the Edomites to the meanest offices, as well as the Moabites.

Philistia, triumph thou because of me.] The words here seem to predict their entire subjugation.

Verse 9. Who will bring me into the strong city?] If this part of the psalm, from the sixth to the twelfth verse, refer to the return of the captives from Babylon, as I think probable; then the strong city may mean either Petra, the capital of Idumea; Bozra, in Arabia, near the mountains of Gilead; Rabba, the capital of the Ammonites; or Tyre, according to the Chaldee, the capital of Phœnicia; or Jerusalem itself, which, although dismantled, had long been one of the strongest cities of the East. Or it may imply, Who shall give me the dominion over the countries already mentioned?

Verse 10. Wilt not thou, O God] It is God alone from whom we can expect our enlargement.

Verse 11. Give us help from trouble: for vain is the help of man.] We have done all we can do, and have trusted too much in ourselves; now, Lord, undertake for us.

Verse 12. Through God we shall do valiantly] Through thee alone shall we do valiantly; thou alone canst tread down our enemies; and to thee alone we look for conquest.

PSALM LXI.

The Psalmist's prayer for those who were banished from their own land, and from the ordinances of God, 1, 2. He praises God for his past mercies, 3; purposes to devote himself entirely to his service, 4, 5. He prays for the king, 6, 7; and promises to perform his vows to the Lord daily, 8.

To the chief Musician upon Neginah, A Psalm of David.

HEAR ^amy cry, O God; attend unto my prayer.

2 From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee, when my heart is overwhelmed: lead me to the rock that is higher than I.

3 For thou hast been a shelter for me, and ^ba strong tower from the enemy.

This psalm appears to have been written about the close of the captivity; and the most judicious interpreters refer it to that period. On this supposition the notes are formed.

Verse 1. Hear my cry, O God] In the midst of a long and painful captivity, oppressed with suffering, encompassed with cruel enemies and insolent masters, I address my humble prayer to THEE, O my God.

Verse 2. From the end of the earth] Arets should be here translated land, not earth, and so it should be in numerous places besides. But here it seems to mean the country beyond the Euphrates; as it is thought to do, Ps. lxxv. 5, 8, called there also the ends of the earth or land. It may be remarked that the Jews were always more pious and devoted to God in their afflictions and captivities, than when in their own land, in ease and affluence.

Lead me to the rock that is higher than I] Direct me to a place of refuge and safety. It is a metaphorical expression; and Calmet interprets it of the liberty granted to the Jews by Cyrus to return to their own land.

Verse 4. I will abide in thy tabernacle] The greater portion of those psalms which were composed during and after the captivity had Levites and priests for their authors. Hence we find the ardent desire so frequently expressed of seeing the temple; of praising God there; of spending their lives in that place, performing the functions of their sacred office. There I shall sojourn;—there I shall dwell,—be at rest,—be in safety,—be covered with thy wings, as a bird in its nest is covered with the wings of its mother.

Verse 5. Hast heard my vows] Often have I purposed to 5 For thou, O God, hast heard my vows: thou hast given me the heritage of those that fear thy name.

6 ^aThou ^bwilt prolong the king's life: and his years ^cas many generations.

7 He shall abide before God for ever: O prepare mercy ^dand truth, which may preserve him.

give up my whole life to thy service: and thou hast heard me, and taken me at my word; and given me that heritage, the privilege of enjoying thee in thy ordinances, which is the lot of them that fear thy name.

Verse 6. Thou wilt prolong the king's life] Literally "Days upon days thou wilt add to the king; and his years shall be like the generations of this world, and the generations of the world to come." I am persuaded no earthly king is intended: and it is Christ, as Mediator, that "shall abide before God for ever," ver. 7.

Verse 7. He shall abide before God for ever] Literally, "He shall sit for ever before the faces of God." He shall ever appear in the presence of God for us. And he ever sits at the right hand of the Majesty on high; for he undertook this office after having, by his sacrificial offering, made atonement for our sins.

Prepare mercy and truth which may preserve him] As Mediator, his attendants will ever be mercy and truth. He will dispense the mercy of God, and thus fulfil the truth of the various promises and predictions which had preceded his incarnation.

Verse 8. So will I sing praise unto thy name for ever] For the benefits which I have received, and hope to receive endlessly from thee, I will to all perpetuity praise thee.

That I may daily perform my vows] While I live, I shall yon yom, "day by day," each day as it succeeds, render to thee my vows—act according to what I have often purposed, and as often promised.

PSALM LXII.

David, in imminent danger, flees to God for help and safety, 1, 2; points out the designs of his adversaries, 3, 4; encourages his soul to wait on God, 5-8; shows the vanity of trusting in man, and of trusting in riches, 9, 10; and concludes with asserting that power and mercy belong to God, and that he will give to every man according to his works, 11, 12.

To the chief Musician, to "Jeduthun, A Psalm of David.

TRULY ^c my soul ^d waiteth upon God :

Though it is not very clear from the psalm itself on what occasion it was composed, yet it is most likely it was during the rebellion of Absalom ; and perhaps at the particular time when David was obliged to flee from Jerusalem.

Verse 1. Truly my soul waiteth upon God] "Surely to God only is my soul dumb." I am subject to God Almighty. He has a right to lay on me what he pleases ; and what he lays on me is much less than I deserve ; therefore am I dumb before God.

Verse 2. I shall not be greatly moved.] Having God for my rock—strong fortified places, for my salvation—continual safety, and my defence—my elevated tower, which places me out of the reach of my enemies ; I shall not be greatly moved—I may be shaken, but cannot be cast down.

Verse 3. How long will ye imagine mischief] The original word has been translated variously ; rush upon, rage against, stir yourselves up, thrust against : the root is hathath or hathah, to rush violently upon, to assault. It points out the disorderly riotous manner in which this rebellion was conducted.

As a bowing wall—a tottering fence.] Ye are just ready to fall upon others, and destroy them ; and in that fall yourselves shall be destroyed.

Verse 4. To cast him down from his excellency] They are consulting to dethrone me, and use treachery and falsehood in order to bring it about : "They delight in lies."

They bless with their mouth] Probably alluding to Absalom's blandishments of the people. He flattered them in order to get the sovereign rule.

Verse 5. Wait thou only upon God] There is none but him in whom thou canst safely trust ; and to get his help, resign thyself into his hands ; be subject to him, and be silent before him ; thou hast what thou hast deserved.

Verse 7. In God is my salvation] "Upon God is my salvation ;" he has taken it upon himself. And my glory— the preservation of my state, and the safety of my kingdom.

7 ^l In God is my salvation and my glory : the rock of my strength, and my refuge, is in God.

8 Trust in him at all times ; ye people, ^m pour out your heart before him : God is ⁿ a refuge for us.
Selah.

9 ^o Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie : to be laid in the balance, they are ^p altogether lighter than vanity.

10 Trust not in oppression, and become not vain in robbery : ^q if riches increase, set not your heart upon them.

11 God hath spoken ^r once ; twice have I heard this ; that ^s power 'belongeth unto God.

Verse 8. Trust in him—ye people] All ye who are faithful to your king, continue to trust in God. The usurper will soon be cast down, and your rightful sovereign restored to his government.

Verse 9. Men of low degree are vanity] Literally, sons of Adam, put in opposition to beney ish, literally, the sons of substance, or children of substantial men. Adam was the name of the first man when formed out of the earth ; ish was his name when united to his wife, and they became one flesh. Before, he was the incomplete man ; after, he was the complete man ; for it seems, in the sight of God, it requires the male and female to make one complete human being.

To be laid in the balance] In the balances they ascend : exactly answerable to our phrase, they kick the beam.

They are altogether lighter than vanity.] Literally, Both of them united are vanity. Put both together in one scale, and truth in the opposite, and both will kick the beam. They weigh nothing, they avail nothing.

Verse 10. Trust not in oppression] Do not suppose that my unnatural son and his partisans can succeed.

Become not vain in robbery] All oppressors come to an untimely end ; and all property acquired by injustice has God's curse on it.

Verse 11. God hath spoken once] God has once addressed his people in giving the law on Mount Sinai.

Twice have I heard this] Once hath God spoken ; these two things have I heard. 1. "That strength is the Lord's ;" that is, He is the Origin of power. 2. "And to thee, Lord, is mercy," that is, He is the Fountain of mercy. These, then, are the two grand truths that the law, yea, the whole revelation of God, declares through every page. He is the Almighty ; he is the most merciful ; and hence the inference : The powerful, just, and holy God, the most merciful and compassionate Lord, will by and by judge the world, and will render to every man according to his works.

PSALM LXIII

David's soul thirsts after God, while absent from the sanctuary, and longs to be restored to the divine ordinances, 1, 2. He expresses strong confidence in the Most High, and praises him for his goodness, 3-8 ; shows the misery of those who do not seek God, 9, 10 ; and his own safety as king of the people, 11.

A Psalm of David, "when he was in the wilderness of Judah."

O GOD, thou art my God; early will I seek thee: ^b my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and ^c thirsty land, ^d where no water is;

2 To see ^e thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary.

3 " Because thy lovingkindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee.

4 Thus will I bless thee " while I live: I will lift up my hands in thy name.

5 My soul shall be ^h satisfied as with ⁱ marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips:

It is most probable that this psalm was written when David took refuge in the forest of Hareth, in the wilderness of Ziph, when he fled from the court of Achish. But Calmet understands it as a prayer by the captives in Babylon.

Verse 1. O God, thou art my God] He who can say so, and feels what he says, need not fear the face of any adversary. He has God, and all sufficiency in him.

Early will I seek thee] From the dawn of day: as soon as day breaks; and often before this, for his eyes prevented the night-watches; and he lodged and watched for God more than they who watched for the morning.

What first lays hold of the heart in the morning is likely to occupy the place all the day. First impressions are the most durable, because there is not a multitude of ideas, to drive them out, or prevent them from being deeply fixed in the moral feeling.

In a dry and thirsty land] In a land: but several MSS. have, as a dry and thirsty land, &c.

Verse 2. To see thy power and thy glory—in the sanctuary.] God shows his power and glory in his ordinances; therefore public worship should never be neglected.

Verse 3. Thy lovingkindness is better than life] This is the language of every regenerate soul. But oh, how few prefer the approbation of God to the blessings of life, or even to life itself in any circumstances!

My lips shall praise thee.] Men praise, or speak well, of power, glory, honour, riches, worldly prospects and pleasures; but the truly religious speak well of God, in whom they find infinitely more satisfaction and happiness than worldly men can find in the possession of all earthly goods.

Verse 4. I will lift up my hands in thy name.] I will take God for my portion. I will dedicate myself to him, and will take him to witness that I am upright in what I profess and do.

Verse 5. My soul shall be satisfied] I shall have, in the true worshipping of thee, as complete a sensation of spiritual sufficiency and happiness, so that no desire shall be left unsatisfied, as any man can have who enjoys health of body, and a fulness of all the necessaries, conveniences, and comforts of life.

Verse 6. When I remember thee upon my bed] I will lie down in thy fear and love; that I may sleep soundly under thy protection, and awake with a sense of thy presence and 6 When I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches.

7 Because thou hast been my help, therefore ^k in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice.

8 My soul followeth hard after thee: thy right hand upholdeth me.

9 But those that seek my soul, to destroy it, shall go into the lower parts of the earth.

10 " They ^m shall fall by the sword: they shall be a portion for foxes.

11 But the king shall rejoice in God; " every one that sweareth by him shall glory: but the mouth of them that speak lies shall be stopped.

approbation; and when I awake in the night watches, or be awakened by them, I will spend the waking moments in meditation upon thee.

Verse 7. Therefore in the shadow of thy wings] I will get into the very secret of thy presence, into the holy of holies, to the mercy-seat over which the cherubs extend their wings. The Psalmist may have in view, as a metaphor, the young of fowls seeking shelter, protection, and warmth, under the wings of their mothers.

Verse 8. My soul followeth hard after thee] " My soul cleaves (or) is glued after thee." This phrase not only shows the diligence of the pursuit, and the nearness of the attainment, but also the fast hold he had got of the mercy of his God.

Verse 9. Lower parts of the earth.] They shall be slain and buried in the earth, and shall be seen no more. Some understand the passage as referring to the punishment of hell; which many supposed to be in the centre of the earth.

Verse 10. They shall fall by the sword] They shall be poured out by the hand of the sword, Heb. That is, their life's blood shall be shed either in war, or by the hand of justice.

They shall be a portion for foxes.] They shall be left unburied, and the jackals shall feed upon their dead bodies. The jackal, or chokal, is a very ravenous beast, and fond of human flesh.

Verse 11. But the king shall rejoice] David shall come to the kingdom according to the promise of God. Or, if it refer to the captivity, the blood royal shall be preserved in and by Zerubbabel till the Messiah come, who shall be David's spiritual successor in the kingdom for ever.

That sweareth by him] It was customary to swear by the life of the king. The Egyptians swore by the life of Pharaoh; and Joseph conforms to this custom as may be seen in the book of Genesis, chap. xlii. 15, 16. See also 1 Sam. i. 26, and xvii. 55, and Judith xi. 7. But here it may refer to GOD. He is THE KING, and swearing by his name signifies binding themselves by his authority, acknowledging his supremacy, and devoting themselves to his glory and service alone.

The mouth of them that speak lies] All false religions shall be destroyed by the prevalence of the truth. For he, CHRIST, shall reign till all his enemies are put under his feet.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

HEAR my voice, O God, in my prayer: preserve my life from fear of the enemy.

2 Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked; from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity.

3 ^a Who whet their tongue like a sword, ^b and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words:

4 That they may shoot in secret at the perfect: suddenly do they shoot at him, and fear not.

Some think this Psalm was composed by David when he was persecuted by Saul; or during the rebellion of Absalom. But Calmet thinks it is a complaint of the captives in Babylon.

Verse 1. Hear my voice] The Psalmist feared for his life, and the lives of his fellow-captives; and he sought help of God.

Verse 2. Hide me from the secret counsel] They plotted his destruction, and then formed insurrections to accomplish it.

Workers of iniquity.] It is supposed that by this title the Babylonians are intended.

Verse 3. Who whet their tongue like a sword] They devise the evil they shall speak, and meditate on the most provoking, injurious, and defamatory words; as the soldier whets his sword that he may thereby the better cut down his enemies.

Their arrows—bitter words] Their defamatory sayings are here represented as deadly as poisoned arrows; for to such is the allusion here made.

Verse 4. That they may shoot in secret] They lurk, that they may take their aim the more surely, and not miss their mark.

Suddenly] When there is no fear apprehended, because none is seen.

6 They search out iniquities; ^a they accomplish ^b a diligent search: both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart is deep.

7 ^c But God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly ^d shall they be wounded.

8 So they shall make ^e their own tongue to fall upon themselves: ^f all that see them shall flee away.

9 ^g And all men shall fear, and shall ^h declare the work of God; for they shall wisely consider of his doing.

Verse 5. They commune of laying snares] They lay snares to entrap those whom they cannot slay by open attack or private ambush.

Verse 6. They search out iniquities; they accomplish a diligent search] The word claphash, which is used three times, as a noun and a verb, in this sentence, signifies to strip off the clothes. "They investigate iniquities; they perfectly investigate an investigation."

Verse 7. But God shall shoot at them with an arrow] They endeavour to trace me out, that they may shoot me; but God will shoot at them. This, if the psalm refer to the times of David, seems to be prophetic of Saul's death. The archers pressed upon them, and sorely wounded them with their arrows. 1 Sam. xxxi. 3.

Verse 8. Their own tongue to fall upon themselves] All the plottings, counsels, and curses they have formed against me, shall come upon themselves.

Verse 9. And all men shall fear] They endeavoured to hide their mischief; but God shall so punish them that all shall see it, and shall acknowledge in their chastisement the just judgment of God.

Verse 10. The righteous shall be glad] They shall see that God does not abandon his followers to the malice of bad men. The rod of the wicked may come into the heritage of the just; but there it shall not rest.

PSALM LXV.

God is praised for the fulfilment of his promises, and for his mercy in forgiving sins, 1-3. He is praised for the wonders that he works in nature, which all mankind must acknowledge, 4-8; for the fertilizing showers which he sends upon the earth, and the abundance thereby produced both for men and cattle, 9-13.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm and Song of David.

PRAISE ^a waiteth for thee, O God, in Sion: and unto thee shall the vow be performed.

^a Heb. is silent. Ps. lxv. 1.—^b Isa. lxvi. 23.—^c Ps. xxxviii. 4. xl. 12.

This Psalm is supposed to have been written after a great drought, when God had sent a plentiful rain upon the land. I rather think that there was no direct drought or rain in the prophet's view, but a celebration of the praises of God for his giving rain and fruitful seasons, and filling men's mouths with food, and their hearts with gladness.

Verse 1. Praise waiteth for thee] Praise is silent or dumb for thee. Thou alone art worthy of praise; all other perfections are lost in thine; and he who considers thee aright can have no other subject of adoration.

Unto thee shall the vow be performed.] All offerings and sacrifices should be made to thee. All human spirits are under obligation to live to and serve thee.

Verse 2. Unto thee shall all flesh come.] It is supposed to be a prediction of the calling of the Gentiles to the faith of the gospel of Christ.

Verse 3. Iniquities prevail against me] "Iniquitous words have prevailed against me," or, "The words of iniquity are strong against me." All kinds of calumnies, lies, and slanders have been propagated, to shake my confidence, and ruin my credit.

Our transgressions, thou shalt purge them away.] What-

4 * Blessed is the man whom thou^b choosest, and causest to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts : c we shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple.

5 By terrible things in righteousness wilt thou answer us, O God of our salvation ; who art the confidence of^d all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the sea :

6 Which by his strength setteth fast the mountains ; e being girded with power :

7 Which stilleth the noise of the seas, the noise of their waves, f and the tumult of the people.

8 They also that dwell in the uttermost parts are afraid at thy tokens : thou makest the outgoings of the morning and evening^h to rejoice.

soever offences we have committed against thee, thou wilt pardon ; teceperem, thou wilt make atonement for them, when with hearty repentance and true faith we turn unto thee.

Verse 4. Blessed is the man whom thou choosest] This is spoken in reference to the priests who were chosen of God to minister at the tabernacle ; and who were permitted to approach, draw nigh, to the Divine Majesty by the various offerings and sacrifices which they presented.

We shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house] Though we are not priests, yet we can worship at the temple, feel the outpouring of thy Spirit, and be happy with the blessings which thou dispensest there to thy true worshippers.

Verse 5. By terrible things in righteousness] The Psalmist may refer to those wonderful displays of God's providence in the change of seasons, and fertilization of the earth ; and, consequently, in the sustenance of all animal beings.

The confidence of all the ends of the earth] Thou art the hope of thy people scattered through different parts of the world, and through the isles of the sea. This passage is also understood of the vocation of the Gentiles.

Verse 6. Setteth fast the mountains] It is by thy strength they have been raised, and by thy power they are girded about or preserved. The image is very fine. They were hooped about by the divine power.

Verse 7. Stilleth the noise of the seas] Thou art Sovereign over all the operations of sea and land. Earthquakes are under thy control : so are the flux and reflux of the sea ; and all storms and tempests by which the great deep is agitated. Even the head-strong multitude is under thy control ; for thou stillest the madness of the people.

Verse 8. Are afraid at thy tokens] Thunder and lightning, storms and tempests, eclipses and meteors, tornadoes and earthquakes, are proofs to all who dwell even in the remotest parts of the earth, that there is a Supreme Being who is wonderful and terrible in his acts. From this verse to the end of the psalm there is a series of the finest poetic imagery in the world.

The outgoings of the morning, &c.] The rising and setting sun, the morning and evening twilight, the invariable succession of day and night, are all ordained by thee, and contribute to the happiness and continuance of man and beast.

Verse 9. Thou visitest the earth] Directing the clouds how and where to deposit their fertilizing showers, and the rivers where to direct their beneficial courses.

The river of God] Some think the Jordan is meant ; and the visiting and watering refer to rain after a long drought. But the clouds may be thus denominated, which properly are the origin of rivers.

Thou preparest them corn] Or, Thou wilt prepare them corn, because "thou hast provided for it." Thou hast made 9 Thouⁱ visitest the earth, and^j waterest^k it : thou greatly enrichest it^l with the river of God, which is full of water : thou preparest them corn, when thou hast so provided for it.

10 Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly :^m thou settlest the furrows thereof :ⁿ thou makest it soft with showers : thou blessest the springing thereof.

11 Thou crownest^o the year with thy goodness ; and thy paths drop fatness.

12 They drop upon the pastures of the wilderness : and the little hills^p rejoice on every side.

13 The pastures are clothed with flocks ;^q the valleys also are covered over with corn ; they shout for joy, they also sing.

all necessary provision for the fertilization of the earth. Thou hast endued the ground with a vegetative power.

Verse 10. Thou waterest the ridges] In seed-time thou sendest that measure of rain that is necessary, in order to prepare the earth for the plough ; and then, when the ridges are thrown into furrows, thou makest them soft with showers, so as to prepare them for the expansion of the seed, and the vegetation and development of the embryo plant.

Thou blessest the springing thereof] Literally, Thou wilt bless its germinations—its springing buds. Thou watchest over the young sprouts ; and it is by thy tender, wise, and provident care, that the ear is formed ; and by thy bountiful goodness that mature grains fill the ear ; and that one produces thirty, sixty or an hundred or a thousand fold.

Verse 11. Thou crownest the year] A full and plentiful harvest is the crown of the year ; and this springs from the unmerited goodness of God. This is the diadem of the earth. Thou encirclest, as with a diadem. A more beautiful image could not have been chosen ; and the very appearance of the space termed the zodiac on a celestial globe, shows with what propriety the idea of a circle or diadem was conceived by this inimitable poet.

Thy paths drop fatness.] "Thy orbits." The various planets, which all have their revolutions within the zodiacal space, are represented as contributing their part to the general fructification of the year. Or perhaps the solar revolution through the twelve signs, dividing the year into twelve parts or months, may be here intended ; the rains of November and February, the frosts and snows of December and January, being as necessary for the fructification of the soil, as the gentle showers of spring, the warmth of summer, and the heat and drought of autumn.

Verse 12. The pastures of the wilderness] Even the places which are not cultivated have their sufficiency of moisture, so as to render them proper places of pasturage for cattle.

The little hills rejoice] Literally, The hills gird themselves with exultation. The metaphor appears to be taken from the frisking of lambs, bounding of kids, and dancing of shepherds and shepherdesses, in the joy-inspiring summer season.

Verse 13. The pastures are clothed with flocks] Cattle are seen in every plain, avenue, and vista, feeding abundantly ; and the valleys are clothed, and wave with the richest harvests ; and transports of joy are heard every where in the cheerful songs of the peasantry, the singing of the birds, the neighing of the horse, the lowing of the ox, and the bleating of the sheep.

Shout for joy, they also sing.] They are not loud and unmeaning sounds, there are both music and harmony in their different notes ; all together form one great concert, and the bounty of God is the subject which all celebrate.

PSALM LXVI.

The Psalmist exhorts all to praise God for the wonders he has wrought, 1-4; calls on Israel to consider his mighty acts in behalf of their fathers, 5-7; his goodness in their own behalf, 8-12; he resolves to pay his vows to God, and offer his promised sacrifices, 13-15; calls on all to hear what God had done for his soul, 16-20.

To the chief Musician, A Song or Psalm.

MAKE a joyful noise unto God, b all ye lands:

2 Sing forth the honour of his name: make his praise glorious.

3 Say unto God, How terrible art thou in thy works! c through the greatness of thy power shall thine enemies d submit e themselves unto thee.

4 f All the earth shall worship thee, and g shall sing unto thee; they shall sing to thy name. Selah.

5 h Come and see the works of God: i he is terrible, in his doing toward the children of men.

6 j He turned the sea into dry land: k they went through the flood on foot: there did we rejoice in him.

7 He ruleth by his power for ever; l his eyes behold the nations: let not the rebellious exalt themselves. Selah.

By many of the ancients, this Psalm is supposed to be a celebration of the restoration from the Babylonish captivity. Others think it commemorates the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, their introduction into the Promised Land, and the establishment of the worship of God in Jerusalem.

Verse 1. Make a joyful noise] Sing aloud to God, all ye lands—all ye people who, from different parts of the Babylonish empire, are now on return to your own land.

Verse 2. The honour of his name] Let his glorious and merciful acts be the subject of your songs.

Verse 3. How terrible art thou] Consider the plagues with which he afflicted Egypt before he brought your fathers from their captivity, which obliged all his enemies to submit.

Thine enemies submit themselves] Literally, lie unto thee. This was remarkably the case with Pharaoh and the Egyptians. They promised again and again to let the people go, when the hand of the Lord was upon them: and they as frequently falsified their word.

Verse 4. All the earth] The whole land shall worship thee. There shall no more an idol be found among the tribes of Israel.

Verse 5. Come and see the works of God] Let every man lay God's wonderful dealings with us to heart; and compare our deliverance from Babylon to that of our fathers from Egypt.

Verse 6. He turned the sea into dry land] This was a plain miracle: no human art or contrivance could do this.

Verse 7. He ruleth by his power] His omnipotence is employed to support his followers, and cast down his enemies.

His eyes behold the nations] He sees what they purpose, what they intend to do; and what they will do, if he restrain them not.

Let not the rebellious exalt themselves.] They shall not succeed in their designs: they have their own aggrandizement in view, but thou wilt disappoint and cast them down.

Verse 8. O bless our God] Who have so much cause as you to sing praises to the Lord?

Verse 9. Which holdeth our soul in life] Literally, "he who placeth our soul bachayim, in lives." We are preserved alive, have health of body, and feel the life of God in our hearts.

And suffereth not our feet to be moved.] Keeps us steadfast in his testimonies. We have our life, our liberty, and our religion.

8 O bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise to be heard:

9 Which n holdeth our soul in life, and o suffereth not our feet to be moved.

10 For p thou, O God, hast proved us: q thou hast tried us, as silver is tried.

11 r Thou broughtest us into the net; thou laidst affliction upon our loins.

12 s Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads; t we went through fire and through water: but thou broughtest us out into a u wealthy place.

13 v I will go into thy house with burnt-offerings; w I will pay thee my vows,

14 Which my lips have x uttered, and my mouth hath spoken, when I was in trouble, 15 I will offer unto thee burnt sacrifices of y fatlings, with the incense of rams; I will offer bullocks with goats. Selah.

Verse 10. For thou, O God, hast proved us] A metaphor taken from melting and refining metals: afflictions and trials of various kinds are represented as a furnace where ore is melted, and a crucible where it is refined. And this metaphor is used especially to represent cases where there is doubt concerning the purity of the metal, the quantity of alloy, or even the nature or kind of metal subjected to the trial.

Verse 11. Thou broughtest us into the net] This refers well to the case of the Israelites, when, in their departure from Egypt, pursued by the Egyptians, having the Red Sea before them, and no method of escape, Pharaoh said, "The wilderness hath shut them in,—they are entangled."

Affliction upon our loins.] Perhaps this alludes to that sharp pain in the back and loins which is generally felt on the apprehension of sudden and destructive danger.

Verse 12. Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads] Thou hast permitted us to fall under the dominion of our enemies; who have treated us as broken infantry are when the cavalry dashes among their disordered ranks, treading all under the horses' feet.

We went through fire and through water] Through afflictions of the most torturing and overwhelming nature. To represent such, the metaphors of fire and water are often used in Scripture.

Wealthy place.] Well watered place, to wit, the land of Judea.

Verse 13. I will pay thee my vows] We often vowed, if thou wouldst deliver us from our bondage, to worship and serve thee alone: now thou hast heard our prayers, and hast delivered us; therefore will we fulfil our engagements to thee.

Verse 14. When I was in trouble.] This is generally the time when good resolutions are formed, and vows made; but how often are these forgotten when affliction and calamity are removed!

Verse 15. I will offer, &c.] Thou shalt have the best of the herd and of the fold; the lame and the blind shall never be given to thee for sacrifice.

The incense of rams] The fine effluvia arising from the burning of the pure fat.

Verse 16. Come and hear, all ye that fear God] He proposes to tell them his spiritual experience, what he needed, what he earnestly prayed for, and what God has done for him. Thus he intended to teach them by example, more powerful always than precept, however weighty in itself, and impressively delivered.

PSALM LXVIII.

16 ^a Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul.

17 I cried unto him with my mouth, and he was extolled with my tongue. [will not hear me :

^a Ps. xxxiv. 11.—^b Job xxvii. 9. Prov. xv. 29. xxviii. 9.

Verse 17. I cried unto him with my mouth] My prayer was fervent; he heard and answered; and my tongue celebrated his mercies; and he as graciously received my thanksgiving, as he compassionately heard my prayer.

Verse 18. If I regard iniquity in my heart] "If I have seen iniquity in my heart," if I have known it was there, and encouraged it; if I pretended to be what I was not; if I loved iniquity, while I professed to pray and be sorry for 19 But verily God hath heard me; he hath attended to the voice of my prayer.

my sin; the Lord, Adonai, my Prop, Stay, and Supporter, would not have heard, and I should have been left without help or support.

Verse 19. Verily God hath heard me] A sure proof that my prayer was upright, and my heart honest before him.

Verse 20. Blessed be God] I therefore praise God, who has not turned aside my prayer, and who has not withheld his mercy from me.

PSALM LXVII.

The Psalmist prays for the enlargement of God's kingdom, 1, 2; calls upon all nations to serve him, because he judges and governs righteously, 3-5; promises prosperity to the faithful and obedient, 6, 7.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm or Song.

GOD is merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine ^b upon us. Selah.

2 That ^c thy way may be known upon earth,

^d thy saving health among all nations.

3 ^e Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

4 O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for

^a Num. vi. 25. Ps. iv. 6 xxxi. 16. lxxx. 3, 7, 19. cxix. 135.—^b Heb. with us.—^c Acts xviii. 25.—^d Luke ii. 30, 31. Tit. ii. 11.—^e Ps. lxxi.

This Psalm is supposed to have been written at the return from the Babylonish captivity, and to fortall the conversion of the Gentiles to the Christian religion. The prayer for their salvation is very energetic.

Verse 1. God be merciful unto us] Show the Jewish people thy mercy, bless them in their bodies and souls, and give a full evidence of thy approbation.

Verse 2. That thy way may be known] God's way is God's religion; what he walks in before men; and in which men must walk before him. A man's religion is his way of worshipping God, and going to heaven.

Thy saving health] "Thy salvation." The great work which is performed in God's way, in destroying the power, pardoning the guilt, cleansing from the infection, of all sin; and filling the soul with holiness, with the mind that was in Christ. Let all nations—the whole Gentile world, know that way, and this salvation!

Verse 3. Let the people praise thee] When this is done, the people—the Gentiles, will praise thee; all will give thanks to God for his unspeakable gift.

Verse 4. Glad and sing for joy] They shall be made

'thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Selah.

5 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

6 ^b Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.

7 God shall bless us, and 'all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

4.—^c Ps. xvi. 10, 18. xxviii. 9.—^d Heb. lead.—^e Lev. xxvi. 4. Ps. lxxxv. 12. Ezek. xxiv. 27.—^f Ps. xxii. 27.

happy in thy salvation. Even their political state shall be greatly meliorated; for God will be acknowledged the supreme Judge; their laws shall be founded on his word; and the nations of the earth shall be governed according to judgment, justice, and equity.

Verse 5. Let the people praise thee] Seeing the abundance of the blessings which the Gentiles were to receive, he calls again and again upon them to magnify God for such mercies.

Verse 6. The earth yield her increase] As the ground was cursed for the sin of man, and the curse was to be removed by Jesus Christ, the fertility of the ground should be influenced by the preaching of the gospel; for as the people's minds would become enlightened by the truth, they would, in consequence, become capable of making the most beneficial discoveries in arts and sciences; and there should be an especial blessing on the toil of the pious husbandman. Whenever true religion prevails, every thing partakes of its beneficent influence.

Verse 7. God shall bless us] He shall ever be speaking good to us, and ever showering down good things upon us.

PSALM LXVIII.

The Psalmist calls upon God to arise, bless his people, and scatter his enemies, 1-3; exhorts them to praise him for his greatness, tenderness, compassion, and judgments, 4-6; describes the grandeur of his march when he went forth in the redemption of his people, 7, 8; how he dispensed his blessings, 9, 10; what he will still continue to do in their behalf, 11-18; the effects produced by the manifestation of God's majesty, 14-18; he is praised for his goodness, 19, 20; for his judgments, 21-23; he tells in what manner the divine worship was conducted, 24-27; how God is to be honoured, 28-31; all are invited to sing his praises, and extol his greatness, 32-35.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm or Song of David.

LET God arise, let his enemies be scattered; let them also that hate him flee before him.

2 As smoke is driven away, so drive them away: as wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish at the presence of God.

3 But let the righteous be glad; let them rejoice before God: yea, let them exceedingly rejoice.

4 Sing unto God, sing praises to his name: extol him that rideth upon the heavens by his name JAH, and rejoice before him.

5 A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation.

6 God setteth the solitary in families: he bringeth out those which are bound with chains: but the rebellious dwell in a dry land.

7 O God, when thou wentest forth before thy people, when thou didst march through the wilderness; Selah:

8 The earth shook, the heavens also dropped at the presence of God: even Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God, of God of Israel.

It is probable that this psalm, or a part of it at least, might have been composed by Moses, to be recited when the Israelites journeyed. See Num. x. 35; and that David, on the same model, constructed this psalm. It might have been sung also in the ceremony of transporting the ark from Kirjath-jearim to Jerusalem; or from the house of Obadedom to the tabernacle erected at Zion.

I know not how to undertake a comment on this psalm: it is the most difficult in the whole psalter; the torture of critics, and the reproach of the commentators. There are customs here referred to which I do not fully understand; there are words whose meaning I cannot, to my own satisfaction, ascertain; and allusions which are to me inexplicable. Yet of the composition itself I have the highest opinion: it is sublime beyond all comparison; it is constructed with an art truly admirable; it possesses all the dignity of the Sacred language; none but David could have composed it; and, at this lapse of time, it would require no small influence of the Spirit that was upon him, to give its true interpretation.

Verse 1. Let God arise] This was sung when the Levites took up the ark upon their shoulders; see Num. x. 35, 36.

Verse 4. Extol him that rideth upon the heavens by his name JAH] Baaraboth, which we render in the high heavens is here of doubtful signification. As it comes from the root arab, to mingle (hence ereb the evening or twilight, because it appears to be formed of an equal mixture of light and darkness) it may mean the gloomy desert, through which God, in the chariot of his glory, led the Israelites. If this interpretation do not please, then let it be referred to the darkness in which God is said to dwell, through which the rays of his power and love, in the various dispensations of his power and mercy, shine forth for the comfort and instruction of mankind.

By his name JAH] Yah, probably a contraction of the word Yehovah; at least, so the ancient Versions understood it. It is used but in a few places in the sacred writings. It might be translated The Self-existent.

Verse 6. The solitary in families] Single persons. Is not the meaning, God is the Author of marriage: and children, the legal fruit of it, are an inheritance from him?

Verse 7. O God, when thou wentest forth] This and the following verse most manifestly refer to the passage of the Israelites through the wilderness.

Verse 9. Didst send a plentiful rain] Shower of liberality. I believe this to refer to the manna by which God refreshed and preserved alive the weary and hungry Israelites.

Verse 10. Thy congregation hath dwelt therein] Thy living creature; so all the Versions. Does not this refer to 9 Thou, O God, didst send a plentiful rain, whereby thou didst confirm thine inheritance when it was weary.

10 Thy congregation hath dwelt therein: thou, O God, hast prepared of thy goodness for the poor.

11 The LORD gave the word: great was the company of those that published it.

12 Kings of armies did flee apace: and she that tarried at home divided the spoil.

13 Though ye have lien among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold.

14 When the Almighty scattered kings in it, it was white as snow in Salmon.

15 The hill of God is as the hill of Bashan: an high hill as the hill of Bashan.

16 Why leap ye, ye high hills? this is the hill which God desireth to dwell in; yea the LORD will dwell in it for ever.

17 The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels: the LORD is among them, as in Sinai, in the holy place.

the quails that were brought to the camp of the Israelites, and dwell, as it were, round about it? And was not this, with the manna and the refreshing rock, that goodness which God had provided for the poor—the needy Israelite? [This is not likely.]

Verse 11. Great was the company of those that published it] "Of the female preachers there was a great host." Such is the literal translation of this passage; the reader may think of it what he pleases. Some think it refers to the women, who, with music, songs, and dances, celebrated the victories of the Israelites over their enemies. But the publication of good news, or of any joyful event, belonged to the women.

Verse 12. Kings of armies did flee] Jabin and the kings of the Canaanites, who united their forces to overwhelm the Israelites.

And she] Deborah the prophetess, a woman accustomed to tarry at home, and take care of the family; she divided the spoils, and vanquished their kings.

Verse 13. Though ye have lien among the pots] The prophet is supposed here to address the tribes of Keuben, and Gad, who remained in their inheritances, occupied with agricultural, maritime, and domestic affairs, when the other tribes were obliged to go against Jabin, and the other Canaanitish kings. Ye have been thus occupied, while your brethren sustained a desperate campaign; but while you are inglorious, they obtained the most splendid victory, and now dwell under those rich tents which they have taken from the enemy; coverings of the most beautiful colours, adorned with gold and silver.

Verse 15. The hill of God is as the hill of Bashan] "Is Mount Bashan the craggy mount, Mount Bashan, the mount of God? Why envy ye, ye craggy mounts? This is the mount of God in which he has desired to dwell."

The Psalmist is speaking particularly of the mountains of Judea, and those of Gilead; the former were occupied by the Canaanites, and the others by Og, king of Bashan, and Sihon, king of the Amorites, whom Moses defeated.

Verse 17. The chariots of God are twenty thousand] "Two myriads of thousands doubled." Does not this mean simply forty thousand? A myriad is 10,000; two myriads, 20,000; these doubled, 40,000.

Verse 18. Thou hast ascended on high] This seems to be an allusion to a military triumph. The conqueror was placed on a very elevated chariot.

Led captivity captive] The conquered kings and generals were usually tied behind the chariot of the conqueror—bound to it, bound together, and walked after it, to grace the triumph of the victor.

18 * Thou hast ascended on high, ^b thou hast led captivity captive: ^c thou hast received gifts ^d for men; yea, for ^e the rebellious also, ^f that the LORD God might dwell among them.

Thou hast received gifts for men] "And gave gifts unto men;" Eph. iv. 8. At such times the conqueror threw money among the crowd. Thou hast received gifts among men, boadam, IN MAN, in human nature; and God manifest in the flesh dwells among mortals! Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift! By establishing his abode among the rebellious, the prophet may refer to the conquest of the land of Canaan, and the country beyond Jordan.

Yea, for the rebellious also] Even to the rebellious. Those who were his enemies, who traduced his character and operations, and those who fought against him now submit to him, and share his munificence; for it is the property of a hero to be generous.

That the Lord God might dwell among them.] The conqueror now coming to fix his abode among the conquered people to organise them under his laws, to govern and dispense justice among them. The whole of this is very properly applied by St. Paul, Eph. iv. 5, to the resurrection and glory of Christ.

Verse 19. Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us] With benefits is not in the text. Perhaps it would be better to translate the clause thus: "Blessed be the Lord, who supports us day by day." The word amas, which we translate to load, signifies to lift, bear up, support, or to bear a burden for another. Hence it would not be going far from the ideal meaning to translate, "Blessed be the Lord day by day, who bears our burdens for us." But loadeth us with benefits is neither a translation nor meaning.

Verse 20. The issues from death.] The going out or exodus from death—from the land of Egypt and house of bondage. Or the expression may mean, Life and death are in the hand of God.

Verse 21. The hairy scalp] Does this mean any thing like the Indian scalping? Or does it refer to a crest on a helmet or headcap? I suppose the latter.

Verse 22. From the depths of the sea.] All this seems to speak of the defeat of the Egyptians, and the miraculous passage of the Red Sea.

Verse 23. That thy foot may be dipped in the blood] God will make such a slaughter among his enemies, the Amorites, that thou shalt walk over their dead bodies; and beasts of prey shall feed upon them.

Verse 24. They have seen thy goings] These kings of the Amorites have seen thy terrible majesty in their discomfiture, and the slaughter of their subjects.

Verse 25. The singers went before.] This verse appears to be a description of the procession.

27 There is ^v little Benjamin with their ruler, the princes of Judah ^w and their council, the princes of Zebulun, and the princes of Naphtali.

Verse 26. Bless ye God] This is what they sung.

Verse 27. There is little Benjamin] This is a description of another part of the procession.

Verse 28. Thy God hath commanded] This and the following verses is what they sung.

Verse 30. Rebuke the company of spearmen] The wild beast of the reed—the crocodile or hippopotamus, the emblem of Pharaoh and the Egyptians: thus all the Versions. Our translators have put the true sense in the margin.

Verse 31. Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God.] This verse had its literal fulfilment under Solomon, when Egypt formed an alliance with that king by his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter; and when the queen of Sheba came to Jerusalem to hear the wisdom of Solomon. But as this may be a prophetic declaration of the spread of Christianity, it was literally fulfilled after the resurrection of our Lord.

Verse 32. Sing unto God] All the inhabitants of the earth are invited to sing unto God, to acknowledge him as their God, and give him the praise due to his name.

Verse 33. Rideth upon the heavens] As an able and skilful rider manages his horse, so does God the sun, moon, planets, and all the hosts of heaven.

He doth send out his voice] At his word of command they run, shed, or reflect their light; and without the smallest deviations obey his will.

Mighty voice.] He thunders in the heavens, and men tremble before him.

Verse 34. His strength is in the clouds.] This refers to the bursting, rattling, and pounding of thunder and lightning; for all nations have observed that this is an irresistible agent; and even the most enlightened have looked on it as an especial manifestation of the power and sovereignty of God.

Verse 35. O God, thou art terrible out of thy holy places] The sanctuary and heaven. Out of the former he had often shone forth with consuming splendour; see the case of Korah and his company: out of the latter he had often appeared in terrible majesty in storms, thunder, lightning, &c.

He that giveth strength and power unto his people.] Therefore that people must be invincible who have this strong and irresistible God for their support.

Blessed be God.] He alone is worthy to be worshipped. Without him nothing is wise, nothing holy, nothing strong, and from him, as the inexhaustible Fountain, all good must be derived.

PSALM LXIX.

The Psalmist describes his afflicted state, and the wickedness of his adversaries, 1-21; he declares the miseries that should come upon his enemies, 22-28; enlarges on his afflicted state, and expresses his confidence in God, 29-34; prophesies the restoration of the Jews to their own land and temple, 35, 36.

This psalm is supposed to have been written during the captivity, and to have been the work of some Levite, divinely inspired. It is a very fine composition, equal to most in the Psalter. Several portions of it seem to have a reference to our Lord; to his advent, passion, resurrection, the vocation of the Gentiles, the establishment of the Christian church, and the reprobation of the Jews. Those portions which the writers of the New Testament apply to our Lord, we may apply also; of others we should be careful.

Verse 1. The waters are come in unto my soul. The waters have broken their dikes, and are just ready to sweep me away! Save me, Lord! In such circumstances, I can have no other help.

Verse 3. I am weary of my crying. A pathetic description of the state of the poor captives for about seventy years.

Verse 4. Then I restored that which I took not away. I think that this is a sort of proverbial expression such as this: "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." Our fathers have grievously sinned against the Lord, and we their posterity suffer for it. Some have applied it to our Lord. But such applications are very gratuitous.

Verse 5. Thou knowest my foolishness. Though we have been brought into captivity in consequence of the crimes of our fathers, yet we have guilt enough of our own to merit a continuation of our miseries.

Verse 6. Be ashamed for my sake. The sins of the Jews were a great stumbling-block in the way of the conversion of the Gentiles. They had been the peculiar people of the Lord. "How," say the Gentiles, "can a pure and holy Being love such people?" They were now punished for their crimes. "How," say the Gentiles, "can God deal so hardly with those whom he professes to love?" The pious among the captives felt keenly, because this reproach seemed to fall upon their gracious and merciful God.

Verse 7. For thy sake I have borne reproach. The Gentiles have said, "Why such an obstinate attachment to the worship of a Being who treats you so rigorously, and who interests not himself in your comfort and deliverance?" And in these cutting reproaches some of the ungodly Jews took a part: "I am an alien to my mother's children."

Verse 9. The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up. The strong desire to promote thy glory has absorbed all others. All the desires of my body and soul are wrapped up in this. This verse is very properly applied to our Lord, John ii. 17.

Verse 12. They that sit in the gate. At the gates were the courts for public justice; there were complaints lodged, and causes heard.

The song of the drunkards. How miserable was this lot! Forsaken by friends, scorned by enemies, insulted by inferiors; and the scoff of libertines, and the song of drunkards; besides hard travail of body, miserably lodged and fed; with the burning crown of all, a deep load of guilt upon the conscience. To such a life any death was preferable.

Verse 13. My prayer is unto thee, O Lord, in an acceptable time. This seems to refer to the end of the captivity, which Jeremiah had said should last seventy years, Jer. xxv. 11, 12. The conclusion of this period was the accepted time of which the Psalmist speaks. Now, they incessantly pray for the fulfilment of the promise made by Jeremiah: and to hear them, would be the truth of God's salvation; it would show the promise to be true, because the salvation—the deliverance, was granted.

Verse 16. Thy loving-kindness is good. The word chesed signifies exuberance of kindness; and the word rachamim, which we translate tender mercies, signifies such affection as mothers bear to their young; and in God, there is a multitude of such tender mercies towards the children of men!

Verse 19. Thou hast known my reproach. This is one of the most forcible appeals to mercy and compassion that was ever made. The language of these two verses is inimitable; and the sentiment cannot be mended.

Verse 21. They gave me also gall for my meat] Even the food, necessary to preserve us in their slavery, was frequently mingled with what rendered it unpleasant and disgusting, though not absolutely unwholesome. And vinegar, sour small wines, was given us for our beverage. This is applied to our Lord, Matt. xxvii. 34.

Verse 22. Let their table become a snare] The execrations here and in the following verses should be read in the future tense, because they are predictive; and not in the imperative mood, as if they were the offspring of the Psalmist's resentment.

Verse 27. Add iniquity unto their iniquity] Give iniquity, that is, the reward of it, upon or for their iniquity. Or, as the original signifies perverseness, treat their perverseness with perverseness: act, in thy judgments as crookedly towards them as they dealt crookedly towards thee.

Verse 28. Let them be blotted out] The Psalmist is speaking of retributive justice; and in this sense all these passages are to be understood.

And not be written with the righteous.] They shall have no title to that long life which God has promised to his followers.

Verse 29. I am poor and sorrowful] Literally, I am laid low, and full of pain or grief.

Verse 31. An ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs.]

29 But I am poor and sorrowful: let thy salvation, O God, set me up on high.

30 ^p I will praise the name of God with a song, and will magnify him with thanksgiving.

31 * This also shall please the Lord better than an ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs.

Oxen offered in sacrifice had their horns and hoofs gilded; and the Psalmist might mention these parts of the victim more particularly, because they were more conspicuous.

Verse 32. The humble shall see this, and be glad] Those who are low; expecting thou wilt lift them up also; and thus the heart of those who seek the Lord shall be revived.

Verse 33. For the Lord heareth the poor] The beggars. He perhaps refers here to the case of the captives, many of whom were obliged to beg bread from their heathen oppressors.

His prisoners.] The captives, shut up by his judgments in Chaldea, without any civil liberty, like culprits in a prison.

Verse 34. Let the heaven and earth praise him] The Psalmist has the fullest confidence that God will turn their captivity, and therefore calls upon all creatures to magnify him for his mercy.

Verse 35. God will save Zion] This fixes the psalm to the time of the captivity. There was no Zion belonging to the Jews in the time of Saul, when those suppose the psalm to be written who make David the author.

Will build the cities of Judah] This refers to the return from the Captivity, when all the destroyed cities should be rebuilt, and the Jews repossess their forfeited heritages. Some apply this to the redemption of the human race; and suppose that Zion is the type of the Christian church into which the Gentiles were to be called.

The Psalmist prays for speedy deliverance, 1; prays against those who sought his life, 2, 3; and for the blessedness of those who sought God, 4; urges his speedy deliverance, 5.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, * to bring to remembrance.

MAKE haste, ^b O God, to deliver me; make haste ^c to help me, O LORD.

2 ^d Let them be ashamed and confounded that seek after my soul: let them be turned backward, and put to confusion, that desire my hurt.

* Ps. xxxviii. title.—^b Ps. xl. 18, &c. lxxi. 12.—^c Heb. to my help.

The title seems to intimate that the psalm was written as a memorial that David had been in sore affliction, and that God had delivered him.

Verse 1. Make haste to help me] I am in extreme distress, and the most imminent danger.

Verse 2. Let them be turned backward] They are coming in a body against me. Lord, stop their progress!

Verse 3. That say, Aha, aha.] Heach! heach! a note of supreme contempt. See on Ps. xl. 15.

3 * Let them be turned back for a reward of their shame that say, Aha, aha.

4 Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: and let such as love thy salvation say continually, Let God be magnified.

5 ' But I am poor and needy: * make haste unto me, O God: thou art my help and my deliverer; O LORD, make no tarrying.

^d Ps. xxxv. 4, 26. lxxi. 13.—^e Ps. xl. 15.—^f Ps. xl. 17.—^g Ps. cxli. 1.

4. Let God be magnified.] Let his glory, mercy, and kindness continually appear in the increase of his own work in the souls of his followers!

Verse 5. But I am poor and needy] I am an afflicted beggar; a sense of my poverty causes me to beg.

Thou art my help] I know thou hast enough, and to spare: and therefore I come to thee.

Make no tarrying.] My wants are many, my dangers great, my time short. O God, delay not!

PSALM LXXI.

The prophet, in confidence, prays for God's favour, 1-5; recounts God's kindness to him from youth to old age, 6-9; shows what his adversaries plot against him, and prays for their confusion, 10-13; promises fidelity, and determines to be a diligent preacher of righteousness even in old age, 14-19; takes encouragement in God's mercy; and foresees the confusion of all his adversaries, 20-24.

Iⁿ * thee, O LORD, do I put my trust: let me never be put to confusion.

2 ^b Deliver me in thy righteousness, and cause me to escape: * incline thine ear unto me, and save me.

3 ^c Be * thou my strong habitation, whereunto I may continually resort: thou hast given * commandment to save me; for thou art my rock and my fortress.

4 ^d Deliver me, O my God, out of the hand of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man.

5 For thou art: ^b my hope, O LORD God: thou art my trust from my youth.

6 ^e By thee have I been holden up from the womb: thou art he that took me out of my mother's bowels: my praise shall be continually of thee.

Thou hast given commandment to save me] Thou hast determined my escape, and hast ordered thy angels to guard me. See Ps. xci. 11, 12.

Verse 4. Out of the hand of the wicked] Probably his unnatural son Absalom, called here the WICKED, because he had violated all laws, human and divine.

The unrighteous and cruel man.] Probably, Ahithophel who was the iniquitous counsellor of a wicked and rebellious son.

7 ^f I am as a wonder unto many; but thou art my strong refuge.

8 Let ^g my mouth be filled with thy praise and with thy honour all the day.

9 ^h Cast me not off in the time of old age; for-sake me not when my strength faileth.

10 For mine enemies speak against me: and they that ⁱ lay wait for my soul: ^j take counsel together.

11 Saying, God hath forsaken him: persecute and take him; for there is none to deliver him.

12 ^k O God, be not far from me; O my God, ^l make haste for my help.

13 ^m Let them be confounded and consumed that are adversaries to my soul: let them be covered with reproach and dishonour that seek my hurt.

Verse 5. My trust from my youth.] When I was born into the world, thou didst receive me, and thou tookest me under thy especial care. "My praise shall be continually of thee." Rather, I have always made thee my boast.

Verse 7. I am as a wonder unto many] I am "as a portent," or "type;" I am a typical person; and many of the things that happen to me are to be considered in reference to him of whom I am a type. But he may mean, I am a continual prodigy.

Verse 9. Cast me not off in the time of old age] It was in David's old age that the rebellion of Absalom took place.

Verse 10. Lay wait for my soul] They seek to destroy my life.

15 ^a My mouth shall shew forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day; for ^b I know not the numbers thereof.

16 I will go in the strength of the LORD GOD: I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only.

Verse 11. God hath forsaken him] Thus men judge. "Secular prosperity is a proof of God's favour: adversity is a proof of his displeasure." But this is not God's way, except in especial judgments, &c. He never manifests his pleasure or displeasure by secular good or ill.

Verse 13. Let them be confounded] They shall be confounded: these are prophetic denunciations.

Verse 14. I will hope continually] I shall expect deliverance after deliverance, and blessing after blessing; and, in consequence, I will praise thee more and more. As thy blessings abound, so shall my praises.

Verse 15. I know not the numbers] I must be continually in the spirit of gratitude; for thy blessings to me are innumerable.

Verse 16. I will go] I will enter, i. e., into the tabernacle, in the strength or mightinesses of Adonai Jehovah, the supreme God, who is my Prop, Stay, and Support.

I will make mention of thy righteousness] I will continually record and celebrate the acts of thy mercy and goodness.

Verse 17. Thou hast taught me from my youth] I have had thee for my continual instructor: and thou didst begin to teach me thy fear and love from my tenderest infancy. Those are well taught whom God instructs; and when he teaches, there is no delay in learning.

Verse 18. Old and grey-headed] In the ninth verse he mentioned the circumstance of old age: here he repeats it, with the addition of hoary-headedness, which, humanly speaking, was calculated to make a deeper impression in his favour.

Verse 19. Thy righteousness—is very high] Is up to the exalted place, reaches up to heaven. The mercy of God fills all space and place. It crowns in the heavens what it governs upon earth.

Who hast done great things] Thou hast worked miracles, and displayed the greatest acts of power.

Who is like unto thee!] God is alone,—who can resemble him? He is eternal, unlimited, impartible, incomprehensible, and uncompounded, a Being, whose essence is hidden from all created intelligences, and whose counsels cannot be fathomed by any creature that even his own hand can form.

Verse 20. Thou, which hast shewed me great and sore troubles] Multiplied straits and difficulties. And thou hast only showed them. Hadst thou permitted them to have fallen upon me with all their own energy, and natural consequences, they would have destroyed me.

Shalt quicken me again] Shalt revive me—put new life in me. This has been applied to the passion of our Lord, and his resurrection; for it is added, Thou Shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth.] Death shall not prey upon my body; thy Holy One can see no corruption. As applicable to David, it might mean his being almost overwhelmed with afflictions; and his deliverance was like a life from the dead.

Verse 21. Thou shalt increase my greatness] Thou wilt restore me to my throne and kingdom; and it shall be done in such a way that all shall see it was the hand of God; and I shall have the more honour on that account.

Comfort me on every side] I shall have friends in all quarters; and the tribes on all sides will support me.

Verse 22. I will also praise thee with the psaltery, &c.] Both were stringed instruments, and the principal used in the Jewish worship.

Verse 23. My lips shall greatly rejoice—and my soul] My lips shall use words expressive of my soul's happiness and gratitude. Thou hast redeemed me; and thou shalt have the eternal praise.

Verse 24. Talk of thy righteousness] The righteousness of God is frequently used in this psalm, and in other places, to signify his justice, judgments, faithfulness, truth, mercy, &c. There are few words of more general import in the Bible.

They are confounded] The counsel of Ahithophel is confounded, and turned to foolishness; and he was so ashamed that he went and hanged himself. As to the vain and wicked Absalom, he met with the fate he had meditated against his father.

PSALM LXXII.

David prays to God for Solomon, 1; prescribes Solomon's work, 2; the effects of his administration, 3-7; the extent of his dominion, 8-11; his mercy and kindness to the poor, and the perpetuity of his praise, 12-17. God is blessed for his power and goodness; and the Psalmist prays that the whole earth may be filled with his glory, 18-20.

A Psalm *for ^b Solomon.

GIVE the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son.

2 * He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment.

3 * The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills, by righteousness.

4 * He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor.

5 They shall fear thee 'as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations.

6 * He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass: as showers that water the earth.

7 In his days shall the righteous flourish; * and abundance of peace 'so long as the moon endureth.

8 ' He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth.

This is most probably a psalm of David, composed in his last days, when he had set his beloved son on the throne of the kingdom.

Verse 1. Give the king thy judgments] Let Solomon receive thy law, as the civil and ecclesiastical code by which he is to govern the kingdom.

And thy righteousness unto the king's son.] Let him not only rule according to the strict letter of thy law, that being the base on which all his decisions shall be founded; but let him rule also according to equity, that rigorous justice may never become oppressive. Solomon is called here the king, because now set upon the Jewish throne; and he is called the king's son, to signify his right to that throne on which he now sat.

Verse 2. He shall judge thy people with righteousness] With justice and mercy mixed, or according to equity.

And thy poor with judgment.] Every one according to the law which thou hast appointed; but with especial tenderness to the poor and afflicted.

Verse 3. The mountains shall bring peace] Perhaps mountains and hills are here taken in their figurative sense, to signify princes and petty governors; and it is a prediction that all governors of provinces and magistrates should administer equal justice in their several departments and jurisdictions; so that universal peace should be preserved, and the people be every where prosperous; for shalom signifies both peace and prosperity, for without the former the latter never existed.

But what is the meaning of "the little hills by righteousness?" Why, it has no meaning: it is a false division of the verse. The word btsedakah, in righteousness, should begin verse 4, and then the sense will be plain. Ver. 3: "The mountains and the hills shall bring prosperity to the people." Ver. 4: "In righteousness he shall judge the poor of the people: he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor."

Verse 5. They shall fear thee] There is no sense in which this can be spoken of Solomon, nor indeed of any other man: it belongs to Jesus Christ, and to him alone.

Verse 6. He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass] The word grass which we translate mown grass, more properly means pastured grass or pastured land; for the dew of the night is intended to restore the grass which has been eaten in the course of the day. But there seems to be a reference to the thick night dews which in summer fall on the pasturages, and become the means of restoring the grass consumed in the day-time by the cattle.

As showers that water the earth.] The influence of the doctrine and Spirit of Christ on the soul of man shall be as grateful, as refreshing, and as fructifying, as the nightly dews on the cropped fields, and the vernal showers on the cultivated lands.

Verse 7. In his days shall the righteous flourish] There was nothing but peace and prosperity all the days of Solomon: 1 Kings iv. 26.

So long as the moon endureth.] "Till there be no more moon."

9 * They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him; * and his enemies shall lick the dust.

10 * The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts.

11 * Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him.

12 For he * shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper.

13 He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy.

14 He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence: and * precious shall their blood be in his sight.

15 And he shall live, and to him * shall be given of the gold of Sheba: prayer also shall be made for him continually; and daily shall he be praised.

16 There shall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof

Verse 8. He shall have dominion also from sea to sea] The best comment on this, as it refers to Solomon, may be found in 1 Kings iv. 21, 24.

Unto the ends of the earth.] Or land, must mean the tract of country along the Mediterranean Sea, which was the boundary of the land on that side: but, as the words may refer to Christ, every thing may be taken in its utmost latitude and extent.

Verse 9. They that dwell in the wilderness] It is likely that those who dwell by the sea-coasts, and support themselves by navigation and fishings are here intended.

His enemies shall lick the dust.] Shall be so completely subdued, that they shall be reduced to the most abject state of vassalage, till they shall become proselytes to the Jewish faith.

Verse 10. The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents] Though Solomon did not reign over Cilicia, of which Tarsus was the capital, yet he might receive gifts, not in the sense of tribute; for minchah, the word here used, signifies a gratitude or friendly offering.

The kings of Sheba and Seba] Both countries of Arabia. From the former came the queen of Sheba, to hear the wisdom of Solomon. And she brought exceeding great presents or gifts, but not in the way of tribute; for Solomon had no jurisdiction in her country. And certainly many sovereigns, to obtain his friendship, sent him various presents of the choicest produce of their respective countries; and no doubt he did with them as with the queen of Sheba, gave them gifts in return. Hence the word eshear is used, which signifies "a compensative present, made on account of benefits received."

Verse 11. All kings shall fall down before] They shall reverence him on account of his great riches, &c.

All nations shall serve him.] All the surrounding nations. This and the preceding verses are fully explained by 1 Kings x. 23-25. If we take these expressions to mean literally all the habitable globe then they cannot be applied to Solomon; but if we take them as they are most evidently used by the sacred writer, then they are literally true.

Verse 12. He shall deliver the needy when he crieth] The poor and the rich shall, in the administration of justice, be equally respected; and the strong shall not be permitted to oppress the weak.

Verse 14. From deceit and violence] Because they are poor and uneducated, they are liable to be deceived; and because they are helpless, they are liable to oppression.

And precious shall their blood be] If the blood or life of such a person shall have been spilt by the hand of violence, he shall seek it out, and visit it on the murderer, though he were the chief in the land.

Verse 15. To him shall be given of the gold of Sheba] The Arabians shall pay him tribute.

Prayer also shall be made for him continually] In all conquering countries the people were obliged to pray for the conqueror in their acts of public worship.

Daily shall he be praised.] He shall not act by the conquered like conquerors in general: he shall give them the same laws and privileges as his natural subjects, and therefore "he shall be daily praised."

Verse 16. There shall be an handful of corn] Even a handful of corn sown on the top of a mountain shall grow up strong and vigorous; and it shall be, in reference to crops in other times, as the cedars of Lebanon are to common trees or shrubs: and as the earth will bring forth in handfuls, so the people shall be multiplied who are to consume this great produce.

Verse 17. His name shall endure for ever] Hitherto this has been literally fulfilled. Solomon is celebrated in the east and in the west, in the north and in the south; his writings still remain, and are received, both by Jews and by Gentiles, as a revelation from God; and it is not likely that the name of the author shall ever perish out of the records of the world.

All nations shall call him blessed.] Because of the extraordinary manner in which he was favoured by the Most High. I well know that all these things are thought to belong properly to Jesus Christ; and, in reference to him, they are all true, and ten thousand times more than these. But I believe they are all properly applicable to Solomon: and it is the business of the commentator to find out the literal sense, and historical fact, and not seek for allegories and mysteries where there is no certain evidence of their presence.

Verse 18. Blessed be the Lord God] David foresaw all Solomon's grandeur; his justice, equity, and the happiness of the subjects under his government; and his soul has, in consequence, sensations of pleasure and gratitude to God, which even his own wondrous pen cannot describe. But it is worthy of remark, that God did not reveal to him the apostasy of his beloved son. God hid this from his eyes, that his heart might not be grieved, and that he might die in peace. Besides, there was still much contingency in the business. God would not predict a thing as absolutely certain, which was still poised between a possibility of being and not being; the scale of which he had left, as he does all contingencies, to the free-will of his creature to turn.

Who only doeth wondrous things.] God alone works miracles: wherever there is a miracle, there is God. No creature can invert or suspend the course and laws of nature; this is properly the work of God. Jesus Christ, most incontrovertibly, wrought such miracles; therefore, most demonstrably, Jesus Christ is God.

Verse 19. Let the whole earth be filled with his glory] Let the gospel—the light, the Spirit, and power of Christ, fill the world.

Verse 20. The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended.] This was most probably the last psalm he ever wrote. Those that were found afterwards have got out of their proper connexion.

PSALM LXXIII.

The Psalmist speaks of God's goodness to his people, 1; shows how much he was stumbled at the prosperity of the wicked, and describes their state, 2-12; details the process of the temptation, and the pain he suffered in consequence, 13-16; Shows how he was delivered, and the dismal reverse of the state of the once prosperous ungodly man, by which his own false views were corrected, 17-22; his great confidence in God, and the good consequences of it, 23-28.

The title is "A Psalm of Asaph;" and it is likely that this Asaph was the composer of it; that he lived under the Babylonish captivity; and that he published this psalm to console the Israelites who were greatly tried to find themselves in such outward distress and misery, while a people, much more wicked and corrupt than they, were in great prosperity, and held them in bondage.

Verse 1. Truly God is good to Israel] Captives as they were, they still had many blessings from God; and they had promises of deliverance, which must be fulfilled in due time.

heart must have inward happiness: and, because they resemble God, they can never be forsaken by him.

Verse 2. My feet were almost gone] I had nearly given up my confidence.

Verse 3. I was envious at the foolish] I saw persons who worshipped not the true God, and others who were abandoned to all vices, in possession of every temporal comfort, while the godly were in straits, difficulties, and affliction. I began then to doubt whether there was a wise providence; and my mind became irritated. Human trials and afflictions, the general warfare of human life, are the highest proof of a providence as benevolent as it is wise. Were the state of human affairs different from what it is, hell would be more thickly peopled ; and there would be fewer inhabitants in glory.

Verse 4. No bands in their death] Satan will not molest them ; he is sure of his prey ; they are entangled, and cannot now break their nets ; their consciences are seared, they have no sense of guilt. Perhaps, "they die without a sigh or a groan ; and thus go off as quiet as a lamb"—to the slaughter.

Verse 6. Pride compasseth them about as a chain] Perhaps there is an allusion here to the office which some of them bore. Chains of gold, and golden rings, were ensigns of magistracy and civil power.

Verse 7. Their eyes stand out with fatness] By fatness, or corpulency, the natural lines of the face are changed, or rather obliterated. The characteristic distinctions are gone ; and we see little remaining besides the human hog.

They have more than heart could wish.] It would be more literal to say, "They surpass the thoughts of their heart." They have more than they expected, though not more than they wish.

Verse 8. They are corrupt] They mock, act dissolutely. And speak wickedly concerning oppression] They vindicate excessive acts of government ; they push justice to its rigour. They neither show equity, lenity, nor mercy ; they are cruel, and they vindicate their proceedings.

Verse 9. Set their mouth against the heavens] They blaspheme God, ridicule religion, mock at Providence, and laugh at a future state.

Their tongue walketh through the earth.] They find fault with every thing ; they traduce the memory of the just in heaven, and ridicule the saints that are upon earth.

Verse 10. Therefore his people return hither] That is, The people, seeing the iniquity of the Babylonians, and feeling their oppressive hand, shall be converted to me ; and I will bring them to their own land, where they shall find an abundance of all the necessaries of life.

Verse 11. They say, How doth God know ?] My people are so stumbled by the prosperity of the wicked, that they are ready in their temptation to say, "Surely God cannot know these things, or he would never dispense his favours thus." Others consider these words as the sayings of the wicked : "We may oppress these people as we please, and live as we list ; God knows nothing about it."

Verse 12. These are the ungodly] The people still speak. It is the ungodly that prosper, the irreligious and profane.

Verse 13. I have cleansed my heart in vain] It is no advantage to us to worship the true God, to walk according to the law of righteousness, and keep the ordinances of the Most High.

Verse 14. For all the day long have I been plagued] Far from enjoying worldly prosperity, we are not only poor, but we are afflicted also ; and every succeeding day brings with it some new trouble.

Verse 15. If I say, I will speak thus] I have at last discovered that they have reasoned incorrectly ; and that I have the uniform testimony of all thy children against me.

Verse 16. When I thought to know this] When I reviewed the history of our fathers, I saw that, though thou hadst from time to time hidden thy face, because of their sins, yet thou hadst never utterly abandoned them to their adversaries ; and it was not reasonable to conclude that thou wouldst do now what thou hadst never done before ; and yet the continuance of our captivity, the oppressive hardships which we suffer, and the small prospect there is of release, puzzle me again. These things have been very painful to me.

Verse 17. Until I went into the sanctuary] Until, in the use of thy ordinances, I entered into a deep consideration of thy secret counsels, and considered the future state of the righteous and the wicked. Then light sprang up in my mind, and I was assured that all these exercises were for our benefit, and that the prosperity of the wicked here was a prelude to their destruction. And this I saw to be their end.

That this psalm was written during the captivity, there is little room to doubt. How then can the Psalmist speak of the sanctuary ? There was none at Babylon ; and at Jerusalem it had been long since destroyed ? There is no way to solve this difficulty but by considering that midreshay may be taken in the sense of holy places—places set apart for prayer and meditation. And that the captives had such places in their captivity, there can be no doubt ; and the place that is set apart to meet God in, for prayer, supplication, confession of sin, and meditation, is holy unto the Lord ; and is, therefore, his sanctuary, whether a house or the open field.

Verse 18. Thou didst set them in slippery places] Affluence is a slippery path ; few have ever walked in it without falling. It is possible to be faithful in the unrighteous mammon, but it is very difficult. No man should desire riches ; for they bring with them so many cares and temptations as to be almost unmanageable. Rich men, even when pious, are seldom happy ; they do not enjoy the consolations of religion.

Verse 19. Are they brought into desolation] This is often a literal fact.

Verse 20. As a dream when one awaketh] So their goods fled away. Their possession was a dream—their privation, real.

Thou shalt despise their image.] While destitute of true religion, whatever appearance they had of greatness, nobility, honour, and happiness, yet in the sight of God they had no more than the ghost or shade of excellence, which God is said here to despise. Who would be rich at such risk and dishonour ?

Verse 21. Thus my heart was grieved] The different views which I got of this subject quite confounded me ; I was equally astonished at their sudden overthrow and my own ignorance. I felt as if I were a beast in stupidity.

Verse 23. I am continually with thee] I now see that myself and my people are under thy guardian care ; that we Verse 24. Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel] Thy counsel—thy word and SPIRIT, shall guide me through life; and when I have done and suffered thy righteous will, thou wilt receive me into thy eternal glory.

Verse 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee?] The original is more emphatic: "Who is there to me in the heavens? And with thee I have desired nothing in the earth." No man can say this who has not taken God for his portion in reference to both worlds.

Verse 26. My flesh—faileth] I shall soon die; and my heart—even my natural courage, will fail; and no support but what is supernatural will then be available.

God is the strength of my heart] Literally, the rock of my heart.

And my portion] Allusion is here made to the division of the promised land. I ask no inheritance below; I look for one above. I do not look for this in the possession of any place; it is God alone that can content the desires and wishes of an immortal spirit.

Verse 27. They that are far from thee shall perish] The perish: thou hast destroyed all them that go a whoring from thee.

28 But it is good for me to draw near to God: I have put my trust in the Lord God, that I may declare all thy works.

^a Exod. xxxiv. 15. Num. xv. 39. James iv. 4.—^b Heb. x 22.—
^c Ps. ovii. 23. cxviii. 17.

term perish is generally used to signify a coming to nothing, being annihilated; and by some it is thus applied to the finally impenitent; they shall all be annihilated. But where is this to be found in the Scriptures? In no part, properly understood. To suppose that the wicked shall be annihilated, is as great a heresy, though scarcely so absurd, as to believe that the pains of damnation are emendatory, and that hell-fire shall burn out.

All them that go a whoring from thee.] That is, all that worship false gods; all idolaters. This is the only meaning of the word in such a connexion.

Verse 28. It is good for me to draw near] We have already seen that those who are far off shall perish; therefore, it is ill for them. Those who draw near—who come in the true spirit of sacrifice, and with the only available offering, the Lord Jesus, shall be finally saved; therefore, it is good for them.

I have put my trust in the Lord God] I confide in Jehovah, my Prop and Stay. I have taken him for my portion.

That I may declare all thy works.] That I may testify to all how good it is to draw nigh to God; and what a sufficient portion he is to the soul of man.

PSALM LXXIV.

The Psalmist complains of the desolations of the sanctuary, and pleads with God, 1-3; shows the insolence and wickedness of their enemies, 4-8; prays to God to act for them as he had done for their fathers, whom, by his miraculous power, he had saved, 9-17; begs God to arise and vindicate his own honour against his enemies, and the enemies of his people, 18-23.

^a Maschil of Asaph.

O GOD, why hast thou ^b cast us off for ever? why doth thine anger ^c smoke against ^d the sheep of thy pasture?

2 Remember thy congregation, ^e which thou hast purchased of old; the ^f rod ^g of thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed; this Mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt.

^a Or, A Psalm for Asaph to give instruction.—^b Ps. xlv. 9, 23. lx. 1, 10. lxxvii. 7. Jer. xxxi. 37. xxxiii. 24.—^c Deut. xix. 20.—^d Ps.

That this psalm was written at a time when the temple was ruined, Jerusalem burnt, and the prophets scattered or destroyed, is evident. But it is not so clear whether the desolations here refer to the days of Nebuchadnezzar, or to the desolation that took place under the Romans about the seventh year of the Christian era.

Verse 1. O God, why hast thou cast us off for ever?] Hast thou determined that we shall never more be thy people? Are we never to see an end to our calamities?

Verse 2. Remember thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old] We are the descendants of that people whom thou didst take unto thyself; the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Wilt thou never more be reconciled to us?

Verse 3. Lift up thy feet] Arise, and return to us; our desolations still continue. The sanctuary is profaned by thee and our enemies.

Verse 4. Thine enemies roar] Their boisterous mirth,

3 Lift up thy feet unto the perpetual desolations: even all that the enemy hath done wickedly in the sanctuary.

4 ^a Thine enemies roar in the midst of thy congregations; ^b they set up their ensigns for signs.

5 A man was famous according as he had lifted up axes upon the thick trees.

their cruel mockings, their insulting commands, are heard every where in all our assemblies.

They set up their ensigns for signs.] All the ensigns and trophies were those of our enemies; our own were no longer to be seen.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh verses give a correct historical account of the ravages committed by the Babylonians, as we may see from 2 Kings xxv. 4, 7, 8, 9, and Jer. lii. 7, 18, 19. Thus they broke down, and carried away, and destroyed this beautiful house; and in true barbarian spirit, neither sanctity, beauty, symmetry, nor elegance of workmanship, was any thing in their eyes. What hammers and axes could ruin, was ruined; Jerusalem was totally destroyed, and its walls laid level with the ground.

Verse 8. Let us destroy them] Their object was totally to annihilate the political existence of the Jewish people.

They have burned up all the synagogues of God in the 6 But now they break down the carved work thereof at once with axes and hammers.

7 They have cast fire into thy sanctuary, they have defiled by casting down the dwelling-place of thy name to the ground.

8 They said in their hearts, Let us destroy them together: they have burned up all the synagogues of God in the land.

9 We see not our signs: there is no more any prophet: neither is there among us any that knoweth how long.

10 O God, how long shall the adversary reproach? shall the enemy blaspheme thy name for ever?

11 Why withdrawest thou thy hand, even thy right hand? pluck it out of thy bosom.

12 For God is my King of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth.

13 Thou didst divide the sea by thy strength: thou brakest the heads of the dragons in the waters.

14 Thou brakest the heads of leviathan in pieces, and gavest him to be meat to the people inhabiting the wilderness.

land.] It is supposed that there were no synagogues in the land till after the Babylonish captivity. How then could the Chaldeans burn up any in Judea? The word which we translate synagogues, may be taken in a more general sense, and mean any places where religious assemblies were held: and that such places and assemblies did exist long before the Babylonish captivity, is pretty evident from different parts of Scripture. See 2 Kings iv. 23; Acts xv. 23; and Ezekiel xxxiii. 31. This is the only place in the Old Testament where we have the word synagogue.

Verse 9. We see not our signs] But they were not totally destitute of these. The preservation of Daniel in the lion's den, and of the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace; the metamorphosis of Nebuchadnezzar; the handwriting that appeared to Belshazzar; were all so many prodigies and evidences that God had not left them without proofs of his being and his regard.

There is no more any prophet] There was not one among them in that place that could tell them how long that captivity was yet to endure. But there were prophets in the captivity. Daniel was one; but his prophecies were confined to one place. Ezekiel was another; but he was among those captives who were by the river Chebar. They had not, as usual, prophets who went to and fro through the land preaching repentance and remission of sins.

Verse 11. Why withdrawest thou thy hand] The outward habit of the easterns had no sleeves; the hands and arms were frequently covered with the folds of the robe; and in order to do any thing, the hand must be disentangled and drawn out.

Verse 12. For God is my King of old] We have always acknowledged thee as our sovereign; and thou hast reigned as a king in the midst of our land, dispensing salvation and deliverance from the centre to every part of the circumference.

Verse 13. Thou didst divide the sea] When our fathers came from Egypt.

Thou brakest the heads of the dragons in the waters.] Pharaoh, his captains, and all his host were drowned in the Red Sea, when attempting to pursue them.

Verse 14. The heads of leviathan.] Leviathan might be intended here as a personification of the Egyptian government; and its heads, Pharaoh and his chief captains.

15 Thou didst cleave the fountain and the flood, thou driedst up mighty rivers.

16 The day is thine, the night also is thine; thou hast prepared the light and the sun.

17 Thou hast set all the borders of the earth; thou hast made summer and winter.

18 Remember this, that the enemy hath reproached, O Lord, and that the foolish people have blasphemed thy name.

19 O deliver not the soul of thy turtle-dove unto the multitude of the wicked: forget not the congregation of thy poor for ever.

20 Have respect unto the covenant: for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty.

21 O let not the oppressed return ashamed: let the poor and needy praise thy name.

22 Arise, O God, plead thine own cause: remember how the foolish man reproacheth thee daily.

23 Forget not the voice of thine enemies: the tumult of those that rise up against thee increaseth continually.

To the people inhabiting the wilderness.] Probably meaning the birds and beasts of prey. These were the people of the wilderness, which fed on the dead bodies of the Egyptians, which the tides had cast ashore.

Verse 15. Thou didst cleave the fountain] Thou didst cleave the rock in the wilderness, of which all the congregation drank.

Thou driedst up mighty rivers.] Does not this refer to the cutting off the waters of the Jordan, so that the people passed over dry-shod?

Verse 16. The day is thine, the night also is thine] Thou art the Author of light, and of the sun, which is the means of dispensing it.

Verse 17. Thou hast set all the borders of the earth] Thou alone art the Author of all its grand geographical divisions. Thou hast made summer and winter.] Thou hast appointed that peculiarity in the poise and rotation of the earth, by which the seasons are produced.

Verse 19. Deliver not the soul of thy turtle-dove] Thy people Israel are helpless, defenceless, miserable, and afflicted; oh, deliver them no longer into the power of their brutal adversaries.

Verse 20. Have respect unto the covenant] The covenant sacrifice; to that offered by Abraham, Gen. xv. 9, &c., when the contracting parties, God and Abram, passed through between the separated parts of the covenant sacrifice. An indisputable type of Jesus Christ; and of God and man meeting in his sacrificed humanity.

The dark places of the earth] The caves, dens, woods, &c., of the land are full of robbers, outthroats, and murderers, who are continually destroying thy people; so that the holy seed seems as if it would be entirely cut off, and the covenant promise thus be rendered void.

Verse 21. Let not the oppressed return ashamed] Do not permit the people to be so diminished, that when, according to thy promise, they are restored to their own land, they may appear to be but a handful of men.

Verse 22. Plead thine own cause] Thy honour is concerned, as well as our safety and salvation.

Verse 23. Forget not the voice] Vindicate thy injured honour: and let all the nations see that thou lovest thy followers, and hatest those who are thy enemies.

PSALM LXXVI.

PSALM LXXV.

The Psalmist praises God for present mercies, 1; the Lord answers, and promises to judge the people righteously, 2, 3; rebukes the proud and haughty, 4, 5; shows that all authority comes from himself, 6, 7; that he will punish the wicked, 8; the Psalmist resolves to praise God, 9; and the Most High promises to cast down the wicked, and raise up the righteous, 10.

To the chief Musician, *Al-taschith, † A Psalm or Song † of Asaph.

UNTO thee, O God, do we give thanks, unto thee do we give thanks: for that thy name is near thy wondrous works declare.

2 † When I shall receive the congregation I will judge uprightly.

3 The earth and all the inhabitants thereof are dissolved: I bear up the pillars of it. Selah.

4 I said unto the fools, Deal not foolishly: and to the wicked, † Lift not up the horn:

5 Lift not up your horn on high: speak not with a stiff neck.

* Or, Destroy not.—† Ps. lvi. title.—‡ Or, for Asaph.—§ Or, When I shall take a set time.—|| Zech. i. 21.—¶ Heb. desert.—* Ps. l. 6. lviii. 11.—† 1 Sam. ii. 7. Dan. ii. 21.—† Job. xxi. 20. Ps. lx. 8. Jer.

This psalm seems to have been composed during the captivity; and appears to be a continuation of the subject in the preceding.

Verse 1. Unto thee, O God, do we give thanks] Thou canst not forget thy people. The numerous manifestations of thy providence and mercy show that thou art not far off, but near: this Thy wondrous works declare.] These words would make a proper conclusion to the preceding psalm, which seems to end very abruptly. The second verse is the commencement of the divine answer to the prayer of Asaph.

Verse 2. When I shall receive the congregation] When the proper time is come that the congregation, my people of Israel, should be brought out of captivity and received back into favour, I shall not only enlarge them, but punish their enemies.

Verse 3. The earth and all the inhabitants thereof are dissolved] They all depend on me; and whenever I withdraw the power by which they exist and live, they are immediately dissolved.

I bear up the pillars of it.] By the word of my power all things are upheld; and without me nothing can subsist.

6 For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south.

7 But † God is the Judge: † he putteth down one and setteth up another.

8 For † in the hand of the LORD there is a cup, and the wine is red; it is † full of mixture: and he poureth out of the same: † but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them.

9 But I will declare for ever; I will sing praises to the God of Jacob.

10 † All the horns of the wicked also will I cut off; but † the horns of the righteous shall be exalted.

xxv. 15. Rev. xiv. 10. xvi. 19.—† Prov. xxiii. 30.—† Ps. lxxiii. 10.—† Ps. ci. 8. Jer. xlviii. 25.—† Ps. lxxxix. 17. cxlviii. 14.

Verse 4. I said unto the fools] I have given the idolatrous Chaldeans sufficient warning to abandon their idols, and worship the true God; but they would not. I have also charged the wicked, to whom for a season I have delivered you because of your transgressions, not to lift up their horn—not to use their power to oppress and destroy.

Verse 6. For promotion cometh neither from the east, &c.] As if the Lord had said, speaking to the Babylonians, None of all the surrounding powers shall be able to help you; none shall pluck you out of my hand. I am the Judge: I will pull you down, and set my afflicted people up, ver. 7.

Verse 8. It is full of mixture] Alluding to that mingled potion of stupifying drugs given to criminals to drink previously to their execution.

Verse 9. I will sing praises to the God of Jacob.] These are the words of the Psalmist, who magnifies the Lord for the promise of deliverance from their enemies.

Verse 10. All the horns of the wicked] All their power and influence, will I cut off; and will exalt and extend the power of the righteous. The Psalmist is said to do these things, because he is as the mouth of God to denounce them.

PSALM LXXVI.

The true God known in Judah, Israel, Salem, and Zion, 1, 2. A description of his defeat of the enemies of his people, 3-6. How God is to be worshipped, 7-9. He should be considered as the chief Ruler: all the potentates of the earth are subject to him, 10-12.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm or Song * of Asaph.

In ^b Judah is God known: his name is great in Israel.

2 In Salem also is his tabernacle, and his dwelling-place in Zion.

3 There brake he the arrows of the bow, the shield, and the sword, and the battle. Selah.

4 Thou art more glorious and excellent ^d than the mountains of prey.

5 The stout-hearted are spoiled, ^f they have slept their sleep; and none of the men of might have found their hands.

6 At thy rebuke, O God of Jacob, both the chariot and horse are cast into a dead sleep.

7 Thou, even thou, art to be feared: and ^h who may stand in thy sight when once thou art angry?

8 Thou didst cause judgment to be heard from heaven; ⁱ the earth feared, and was still,

9 When God ^k arose to judgment, to save all the meek of the earth. Selah.

10 Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain.

This Psalm is considered by some of the best commentators to have been composed after the death of Sennacherib. If Asaph was its author, it could not be the Asaph that flourished in the days of David, but some other gifted and divinely inspired man of the same name, by whom several others of the psalms appear to have been composed during the captivity.

Verse 1. In Judah is God known] The true God revealed himself to the Jews.

Verse 2. In Salem also is his tabernacle] Salem was the ancient name of Jebus, afterwards called Jerusalem. Here was the tabernacle set up; but afterwards, when the temple was built on Mount Zion, there was his habitation.

Verse 3. There brake he the arrows of the bow] Arrows, round the heads of which inflammable matter was rolled, and then ignited, were used by the ancients, and shot into towns to set them on fire; and were discharged among the towers and wooden works of besiegers.

The shield, and the sword] If this refers to the destruction of Sennacherib's army, it may be truly said that God rendered useless all their warlike instruments, his angel having destroyed 185,000 of them in one night.

Verse 4. Than the mountains of prey] This is an address to Mount Zion, Thou art more illustrious and excellent than all the mountains of prey, i. e., where wild beasts wander, and prey on those that are more helpless than themselves.

Verse 5. The stout-hearted are spoiled] The boasting blasphemers, such as Rab-shakeh, and his master Sennacherib, the king of Assyria.

They have slept their sleep] They were asleep in their tent when the destroying angel, the suffocating wind, destroyed the whole; they over whom it passed never more awoke.

None of the men of might] Is not this a strong irony? Where are your mighty men? Their boasted armour, &c.?

Verse 6. At thy rebuke] It was not by any human means that this immense army was overthrown; it was by the power of God alone. Not only infantry was destroyed, but the cavalry also.

The chariot and horse] That is, the chariot horses, as well as the men, were Cast into a dead sleep] Were all suffocated in the same night. 2 Kings xix.

Verse 7. Thou, even thou, art to be feared] The Hebrew is simple, but very emphatic: "Thou art terrible; thou art." The repetition of the pronoun deepens the sense.

When once thou art angry?] Literally, From the time thou art angry. In the moment thy wrath is kindled, in that moment judgment is executed. How awful is this consideration!

Verse 8. Thou didst cause judgment to be heard] When God declared by his prophet that the enemy should not prevail, but on the contrary be destroyed, the earth—the land, and by metonymy the inhabitants of the land, were struck with astonishment and terror, so as not to be able to move.

Verse 9. The meek of the earth] The humbled or oppressed people of the land. The poor Jews, now utterly helpless, and calling upon the Lord for succour.

Verse 10. Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee] The rage of Sennacherib shall only serve to manifest thy glory.

The remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain] The Hebrew gives rather a different sense: "Thou shalt gird thyself with the remainder of wrath." Even after thou hast sent this signal destruction upon Sennacherib and his army, thou wilt continue to pursue the remnant of the persecutors of thy people; their wrath shall be the cause of the excitement of thy justice to destroy them. As a man girds himself with his girdle, that he may the better perform his work, so thou wilt gird thyself with wrath, that thou mayest destroy thy enemies.

Verse 11. Vow, and pay unto the Lord] Bind yourselves to him, and forget not your obligations.

Let all that be round about him] All the neighbouring nations, who shall see God's judgments against his enemies, should Bring presents unto him] Give him that homage which is due unto him.

That ought to be feared] "To the terrible One;" lest they be consumed as the Assyrians have been.

Verse 12. He shall cut off the spirit of princes] Even in the midst of their conquests, he can fill them with terror and dismay, or cut them off in their career of victory.

He is terrible to the kings of the earth] Thus all are under his dominion, and are accountable to him. Even those whom man cannot bring to justice, God will; and to judge them is one grand use of a final judgment-day.

PSALM LXXVII

The Psalmist's ardent prayer to God in the time of distress, 1-4. The means he used to excite his confidence, 5-12. God's wonderful works in behalf of his people, 13-20.

Asaph and Jeduthun were celebrated singers in the time of David, and no doubt were masters or leaders of bands which long after their times were called by their names. But there is reason to believe also, that there was a person of the name of Asaph in the captivity at Babylon. The author must be considered as speaking in the person of the captive Israelites. It may however be adapted to the case of any individual in spiritual distress through strong temptation, or from a sense of the divine displeasure in consequence of backsliding.

Verse 1. I cried unto God] The repetition here marks the earnestness of the Psalmist's soul; and the word voice shows that the psalm was not the issue of private meditation but of deep mental trouble, which forced him to speak his griefs aloud.

Verse 2. My sore ran in the night, and ceased not] This is a most unaccountable translation: the literal meaning is, my hand was stretched out, i. e., in prayer. He continued during the whole night with his voice and hands lifted up to God, and ceased not, even in the midst of great discouragements.

Verse 3. My spirit was overwhelmed.] My spirit was overpowered in itself. It purposed to involve itself in this calamity. I felt exquisitely for my poor suffering countrymen.

Verse 4. Thou holdest mine eyes waking] Literally Thou keepst the watches of mine eyes—my grief is so great that I cannot sleep.

I am so troubled that I cannot speak.] This shows an increase of sorrow and anguish. At first he felt his misery, and called aloud. He receives more light, sees and feels his deep wretchedness, and then his words are swallowed by excessive distress. "Small troubles are loquacious; the great are dumb."

Verse 5. I have considered the days of old] I have counted up; I have reckoned up the various dispensations of thy mercy in behalf of the distressed, marked down in the history of our fathers.

Verse 6. I call to remembrance my song in the night] It appears to me that the Psalmist here speaks of the circumstances of composing the short ode contained in the seventh, eighth, and ninth verses; which it is probable he sung to his harp as a kind of dirge, if indeed he had a harp in that distressful captivity.

My spirit made diligent search.] The verb chaphas signifies such an investigation as a man makes who is obliged to strip himself in order to do it; or, to lift up coverings, to search fold by fold, or in our phrase, to leave no stone unturned.

Verse 7. Will the Lord cast off for ever?] Will there be no end to this captivity? Has he not said, "Turn, ye backsliders; for I am married unto you: I will heal your backsliding, and love you freely."

Verse 8. For evermore?] From race to race. Shall no mercy be shown even to the remotest generation of the children of the offenders?

Verse 9. Hath God—in anger shut up his tender mercies?] The metaphor here is taken from a spring, the mouth of which is closed, so that its waters can no longer run in the same channel; but, being confined, break out and take some other course.

Verse 10. And I said, this is my infirmity] The Hebrew is very obscure, and has been differently translated: "And I said, Is this my weakness? Years the right hand of the Most High." Some derive the word shenoth, years, from shanah to change. This appears to me the better translation; the sum of the meaning is, "I am in deep distress; the Most High alone can change my condition."

Verse 11. I will remember the works of the Lord] I endeavour to recollect what thou hast done in behalf of our fathers in past times; in no case hast thou cast them off, when, with humbled hearts, they sought thy mercy.

Verse 13. Thy way is in the sanctuary] See Ps. lxxiii. 17. I must go to the sanctuary now to get comfort, as I went before to get instruction. What a mercy to have the privilege of drawing near to God in his ordinances!

Some understand the words, Thy way is in holiness—all thy dispensations, words, and works are holy, just, and true. And as is thy majesty, so is thy mercy!

Verse 14. Thou—doest wonders! Every act of God, whether in nature or grace, in creation or providence, is wondrous; surpasses all power by his own; and can be comprehended only by his own wisdom.

Verse 15. The sons of Jacob and Joseph.] The Israelites are properly called the sons of Joseph as well as of Jacob, seeing Ephraim and Manasseh, his sons, were taken into the number of the tribes. All the latter part of this psalm refers to the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt; and the Psalmist uses this as an argument to excite the expectation of the captives.

Verse 16. The waters saw thee] He represents God approaching the Red Sea; and the waters, seeing him, took fright, and ran off before him, dividing to the right and left to let him pass.

The depths also were troubled.] The waters see the Almighty, do not wait his coming, but in terror flee away! The deeps, uncovered, are astonished at the circumstance; and as they cannot fly, they are filled with trouble and dismay. Under the hand of such a poet, inanimate nature springs into life; all thinks, speaks, acts; all is in motion, and the dismay is general.

Verse 17. The clouds poured out water] It appears from this that there was a violent tempest at the time of the passage of the Red Sea. There was a violent storm of thunder, lightning, and rain.

Verse 18. Thy way is in the sea] Thou didst walk through the sea, thy path was through a multitude of waters.

Thy footsteps are not known.] It was evident from the effects that God was there: but his track could not be discovered; still he is the Infinite Spirit, without parts, limits, or passions.

Verse 20. Thou leddest thy people like a flock] This may refer to the pillar of cloud and fire. It went before them, and they followed it. So, in the eastern countries, the shepherd does not drive, but leads his flock. He goes before them to find them pasture, and they regularly follow him.

By the hand of Moses and Aaron.] They were God's agents; and acted, in civil and sacred things, just as directed by the Most High.

PSALM LXXVIII.

An enumeration of the principal effects of the goodness of God to his people, 1-16; of their rebellions and punishment, 17-38; their feigned repentance, 34-37; God's compassion towards them, 38, 39; their backsliding, and forgetfulness of his mercy, 40-42; the plagues which he brought upon the Egyptians, 43-51; the deliverance of his own people, and their repeated ingratitude and disobedience, 52-58; their punishment, 59-64; God's wrath against their adversaries, 65, 66; his rejection of the tribes of Israel, and his choice of the tribe of Judah, and of David to be king over his people, 67-72.

* Maschil ^b of Asaph.

GIVE ^c ear, O my people, to my law: incline your ears to the words of my mouth.

2 ^d I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark sayings of old:

3 ^e Which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us.

4 ^f We will not hide them from their children, shewing to the generation to come the praises of the LORD, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.

5 For ^g he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, that ^h they should make them known to their children:

6 ⁱ That the generation to come might know them even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children:

7 That they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments:

This psalm was probably not written by David, but after the separation of the ten tribes of Israel, and after the days of Rehoboam, and before the Babylonish captivity, for the temple was still standing, ver. 69.

Verse 1. Give ear, O my people] This is the exordium of this very pathetic and instructive discourse.

Verse 2. In a parable] Or, I will give you instruction by numerous examples; see Ps. lxxxix. 1-4, which bears a great similarity to this; and see the notes there. The term parable, in its various acceptations, has already been sufficiently explained; but maschal may here mean example, as opposed to torah, law or precept, ver. 1.

Verse 3. Which we have heard and known] We have heard the law, and known the facts.

Verse 4. We will not hide them] In those ancient times there was very little reading, because books were exceedingly scarce; tradition was therefore the only, or nearly the only, means of preserving the memory of past events. They were handed down from father to son by parables or pithy sayings, and by chronological poems.

8 And ^k might not be as their fathers, ^l a stubborn and rebellious generation: a generation ^m that ⁿ set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not stedfast with God.

Verse 5. A testimony in Jacob] This may signify the various ordinances, rites, and ceremonies prescribed by the law; and the word law may mean the moral law, or system of religious instruction, teaching them their duty to God, to their neighbour, and to themselves.

Verse 9. The children of Ephraim—turned back] This refers to some defeat of the Ephraimites; but to what defeat is not certainly known; probably the Israelites after the division of the two kingdoms are intended.

Verse 10. They kept not the covenant of God] They abandoned his worship, both moral and ritual.

Verse 12. The field of Zoan] Dr. Shaw thinks Zoan was intended to signify Egypt in general.

Verse 18. By asking meat for their lust] "For their souls," i.e. for their lives; for they said in their hearts that the light bread, the manna, was not sufficient to sustain 17 And they sinned yet more against him by provoking the Most High in the wilderness.

18 And they tempted God in their heart by asking meat for their lust.

19 Yea, they spake against God; they said, Can God furnish a table in the wilderness?

20 Behold, he smote the rock, that the waters gushed out, and the streams overflowed; can he give bread also? can he provide flesh for his people?

21 Therefore the Lord heard this, and was wroth: so a fire was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel:

22 Because they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation:

23 Though he had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the doors of heaven.

24 And had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

25 Man did eat angels' food: he sent them meat to the full.

26 He caused an east wind to blow in the heaven: and by his power he brought in the south wind.

27 He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and feathered fowls like as the sand of the sea:

28 And he let it fall in the midst of their camp, round about their habitations.

29 So they did eat, and were well filled: for he gave them their own desire;

30 They were not estranged from their lust. But while their meat was yet in their mouths,

31 The wrath of God came down upon them, and their natural force, and preserve their lives. It seems, however, from the expression, that they were wholly carnal; that they had no spirituality of mind: they were earthly, animal, and devilish.

Verse 22. They believed not in God. After all the miracles they had seen, they were not convinced that there was a Supreme Being! and, consequently, they did not trust in his salvation—did not expect the glorious rest which he had promised them.

Verse 24. The corn of heaven. The manna. It fell about their camp in the form of seeds; and as it appeared to come down from the clouds, it was not improperly termed heavenly corn, or heavenly grain.

Verse 25. Man did eat angels' food. "Man did eat the bread of the mighty ones;" or, each person ate, &c. They ate such bread as could only be expected at the tables of the rich and great; the best, the most delicate food. How little did this gross people know of the sublime excellence of that which they called light bread, and which they said their soul loathed; Numb. xxi. 5. It was a type of Jesus Christ, for so says St. Paul.

Verse 32. For all this they sinned still! We shall cease to wonder at this, if we have a thorough acquaintance with our own hearts.

Verse 33. Their days did he consume in vanity! By causing them to wander forty years in the wilderness, vainly expecting an end to their labour, and the enjoyment of the promised rest, which, by their rebellions, they had forfeited.

Verse 34. When he slew them! While his judgments were upon them, then they began to humble themselves, and deprecate his wrath. When they saw some fall, the rest began to tremble.

Verse 35. That God was their rock! They recollected in their affliction that Jehovah was their Creator, and their Father; the Rock, the Source, not only of their being, but of all their blessings; or, that he was their sole Protector.

And the high God their Redeemer.] "And the strong slew the fattest of them, and smote down the chosen men of Israel.

32 For all this they sinned still, and believed not for his wondrous works.

33 Therefore their days did he consume in vanity, and their years in trouble.

34 When he slew them, then they sought him: and they returned and inquired early after God.

35 And they remembered that God was their rock, and the high God their Redeemer.

36 Nevertheless they did flatter him with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongues.

37 For their heart was not right with him, neither were they stedfast in his covenant.

38 But he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not: yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath.

39 For he remembered that they were but flesh; a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again.

40 How oft did they provoke him in the wilderness, and grieve him in the desert!

41 Yea, they turned back and tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel.

42 They remembered not his hand, nor the day when he delivered them from the enemy.

43 How he had wrought his signs in Egypt, and his wonders in the field of Zoan:

44 And had turned their rivers into blood; and their floods, that they could not drink.

45 He sent divers sorts of flies among them,

God, the Most High, their kinsman." That one who possessed the right of redemption; the nearest akin to him who had forfeited his inheritance; so the word originally means, and hence it is often used for a redeemer.

Verse 36. Nevertheless they did flatter him with their mouth. They promised well, they called him their God, and their fathers' God; and told him how good, and kind, and merciful he had been to them. Thus, their mouth flattered him. And they said that, whatever the Lord their God commanded them to do, they would perform.

And they lied unto him! I think the Vulgate gives the true sense of the Hebrew: "They loved him with their mouth; and they lied unto him with their tongue."

Verse 37. Their heart was not right! When the heart is wrong, the life is wrong; and because their heart was not right with God, therefore they were not faithful in his covenant.

Verse 38. Forgave their iniquity! Yechapper, made an atonement for their iniquity.

And did not stir up all his wrath.] The punishment was much less than the iniquity deserved.

Verse 39. He remembered that they were but flesh! He took their feeble perishing state always into consideration, and knew how much they needed the whole of their state of probation; and therefore he bore with them to the utmost.

A wind that passeth away, and cometh not again.] The translation should be, "The spirit goeth away, and it doth not return." The present life is the state of probation; when therefore the flesh—the body, fails, the spirit goeth away into the eternal world, and returneth not hither again.

Now God, being full of compassion, spared them, that their salvation might be accomplished before they went into that state where there is no change; where the pure are pure still, and the defiled are defiled still.

Verse 41. Limited the Holy One of Israel. The Hebrew word hithru is supposed to come from the root tavah, which which devoured them; and * frogs, which destroyed them.

46 ^b He gave also their increase unto the caterpillar, and their labour unto the locust.

47 ^c He ^d destroyed their vines with hail, and their sycamore-trees with ^e frost.

48 ^f He ^g gave up their cattle also to the hail, and their flocks to ^h hot thunderbolts.

49 He cast upon them the fierceness of his anger, wrath, and indignation, and trouble, by sending evil angels among them.

50 ⁱ He made a way to his anger; he spared not their soul from death, but gave ^j their life over to the pestilence;

51 ^k And smote all the first-born in Egypt; the chief of their strength in the ^l tabernacles of Ham:

53 And he ⁿ led them on safely, so that they feared not: but the sea ^o overwhelmed ^p their enemies.

54 And he brought them to the border of his ^q sanctuary, even to this mountain, ^r which his right hand had purchased.

55 ^s He cast out the heathen also before them, and ^t divided them an inheritance by line, and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents.

56 ^u Yet they tempted and provoked the most high God, and kept not his testimonies:

signifies to mark. Here it most obviously means an insult offered to God.

Verse 47. He destroyed their vines with hail] Though the vine was never plentiful in Egypt, yet they have some; and the wine made in that country is among the most delicious.

And their sycamore-trees] This tree was very useful to the ancient Egyptians, as all their coffins are made of this wood; and to the modern, as their barques are made of it. Besides, it produces a kind of fig, on which the common people in general live.

Verse 49. By sending evil angels] This is the first mention we have of evil angels. There is no mention of them in the account we have of the plagues of Egypt in the Book of Exodus, and what they were we cannot tell: but by what the Psalmist says here of their operations, they were the sorest plague that God had sent; they were marks of the fierceness of his anger, wrath, indignation, and trouble. An angel or messenger may be either animate or inanimate; a disembodied spirit or human being; any thing or being that is an instrument sent of God for the punishment or support of mankind.

Verse 54. The border of his sanctuary] "Of his holy place," that is, the land of Canaan, called afterwards the mountain which his right hand had purchased; because it was a mountainous country, widely differing from Egypt, which was a long, continued, and almost perfect level.

Verse 57. They were turned aside like a deceitful bow.] The eastern bow must be recurved, or turned the contrary way, in order to be what is called bent and strung. If a person who is unskilful or weak attempt to recurve and string one of these bows, if he take not great heed it will spring back and regain its quiescent position, and perhaps break his arm.

Verse 60. He forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh] The Lord, high places, and moved him to jealousy with their graven images.

59 When God heard this, he was wroth, and greatly abhorred Israel.

60 ^a So that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed among men;

61 ^b And delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand.

62 ^c He gave his people over also unto the sword; and was wroth with his inheritance.

63 The fire consumed their young men; and ^d their maidens were not ^e given to marriage.

64 ^f Their priests fell by the sword; and ^g their widows made no lamentation.

65 Then the LORD ^h awaked as one out of sleep, and ⁱ like a mighty man that shouteth by reason of wine.

66 And ^j he smote his enemies in the hinder part: he put them to a perpetual reproach.

67 Moreover he refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim:

68 But chose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion ^k which he loved.

69 And he ^l built his sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which he hath ^m established for ever.

70 ⁿ He chose David also his servant, and took him from the sheepfolds:

71 ^o From following the ^p ewes great with young he brought him ^q to feed Jacob his people, and Israel, his inheritance.

72 So he fed them according to the ^r integrity of his heart; and guided them by the skillfulness of his hands.

offended with the people, and principally with the priests, who had profaned his holy worship, gave up his ark into the hands of the Philistines. And so true it is that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh that he never returned to it again. See 1 Sam. vi. 1; 2 Sam. vi; 1 Kings viii. 1; where the several removals of the ark are spoken of, and which explain the remaining part of this psalm.

Verse 63. Their maidens were not given to marriage.] It is considered a calamity in the East if a maiden arrives at the age of twelve years without being sought or given in marriage.

Verse 64. Their priests fell by the sword] Hophni and Phinehas; 1 Sam. iv. 11.

Verse 65. Then the Lord awaked] He seemed as if he had totally disregarded what was done in his people, and the reproach that seemed to fall on himself and his worship by the capture of the ark.

Like a mighty man] Like a hero that shouteth by reason of wine. One who, going forth to meet the enemy, having taken a sufficiency of wine to refresh himself, and become a proper stimulus to his animal spirit, shouts—gives the war-signal for the onset; impatient to meet the foe, and sure of victory. The idea is not taken from the case of a drunken man. A person in such a state would be very unfit to meet his enemy, and could have little prospect of conquest.

Verse 66. He smote his enemies in the hinder part] This refers to the hemorrhoids, with which he afflicted the Philistines. See the note on 1 Sam. v. 6-10.

Verse 69. He built his sanctuary like high palaces] Kemo ramim, which several of the Versions understand of the monoceros or rhinoceros. The temple of God at Jerusalem was the only one in the land, and stood as prominent on Mount Zion as the horn of the unicorn or rhinoceros does upon his snout. And there he established his ark, to go no more out as long as the temple should last.

Verse 71. From following the ewes] Instances of this kind are not unfrequent in the ancient Greek and Roman history.

Verse 72. So he fed them] Here David is mentioned as having terminated his reign. He had fed the people, ac-ording to the integrity of his heart, for that was ever disposed to do the will of God in the administration of the kingdom: and his hand being skilful in war, he always led them out to victory against their enemies.

PSALM LXXIX.

The Psalmist complains of the cruelty of his enemies and the desolations of Jerusalem, and prays against them, 1-7. He prays for the pardon and restoration of his people, and promises gratitude and obedience, 8-13.

A Psalm of Asaph.

O GOD, the heathen are come into ^b thine inheritance; ^c thy holy temple have they defiled; ^d they have laid Jerusalem on heaps.

2 ^e The dead bodies of thy servants have they given to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven, the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth.

3 Their blood have they shed like water round about Jerusalem; ^f and there was none to bury them.

4 ^g We are become a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us.

5 ^h How long, LORD? wilt thou be angry for ever? shall thy ⁱ jealousy burn like fire?

6 ^j Pour out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee, and upon the kingdoms that have not called upon thy name.

This psalm was composed during the Babylonish captivity, when the city of Jerusalem lay in heaps, the temple was defiled, and the people were in a state of captivity. Some think it was composed by Jeremiah; and it is certain that the sixth and seventh verses are exactly the same with Jer. x. 25.

Verse 1. The heathen are come into thine inheritance] Thou didst cast them out, and take thy people in; they have cast us out, and now taken possession of the land that belongs to thee.

Verse 2. The dead bodies of thy servants] It appears that, in the destruction of Jerusalem, the Chaldeans did not bury the bodies of the slain, but left them to be devoured by birds and beasts of prey. This was the grossest inhumanity.

Verse 3. There was none to bury them.] The Chaldeans would not; and the Jews who were not slain were carried into captivity.

Verse 4. We are become a reproach to our neighbours.] The Idumeans, Philistines, Paganicians, Ammonites, and Moabites, all gloried in the subjugation of this people; and their insults to them were mixed with blasphemies against God.

Verse 5. How long, Lord?] Wilt thou continue thine anger against us, and suffer us to be insulted, and thyself blasphemed?

Verse 6. Pour out thy wrath] Bad as we are, we are yet less wicked than they.

Verse 7. Laid waste his dwelling-place.] The Chaldee understands this of the temple. This, by way of eminence, was Jacob's place.

8 ⁿ O remember not against us ^o former iniquities: let thy tender mercies speedily prevent us: for we are ^p brought very low.

9 ^q Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name: and deliver us, and purge away our sins, ^r for thy name's sake.

10 ^s Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is their God? let him be known among the heathen in our sight by the ^t revenging of the blood of thy servants which is shed.

11 Let ^u the sighing of the prisoner come before thee; according to the greatness of ^v thy power preserve thou those that are appointed to die:

12 And render unto our neighbours ^w seven-fold into their bosom ^x their reproach, wherewith they have reproached thee, O LORD.

13 So ^y we thy people and sheep of thy pasture will give thee thanks for ever: ^z we will shew forth thy praise ^{aa} to all generations.

Verse 8. Remember not against us former iniquities] Visit us not for the sins of our forefathers.

Speedily prevent us] Let them go before us, and turn us out of the path of destruction; for there is no help for us but in thee.

We are brought very low.] Literally, "We are greatly thinned." Few of us remain.

Verse 9. Purge away our sins] Be propitiated, or receive an atonement on account of our sins.

Verse 10. Where is their God?] Show where thou art by rising up for our redemption, and the infliction of deserved punishment upon our enemies.

Verse 11. The sighing of the prisoner] The poor captive Israelites in Babylon, who sigh and cry because of their bondage.

Those that are appointed to die] "Sons of death." Either those who were condemned to death because of their crimes, or condemned to be destroyed by their oppressors. Both these senses apply to the Israelites: they were sons of death, i. e., worthy of death because of their sins against God; they were condemned to death or utter destruction, by their Babylonish enemies.

Verse 12. Sevenfold into their bosom] That is, Let them get in this world what they deserve for the cruelties they have inflicted on us. Probably this is a prediction.

Verse 13. We thy people] Whom thou hast chosen from among all the people of the earth.

And sheep of thy pasture] Of whom thou thyself art the Shepherd.

PSALM LXXX.

A prayer for the captives, 1-3. A description of their miseries, 4-7. Israel compared to a vineyard, 8-14. Its desolate state, and a prayer for its restoration, 15-19.

To the chief Musician ^a upon Shoshannim Eduth,
A Psalm ^b of Asaph.

GIVE ear, O Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadest Joseph like a flock: ^c thou that dwellest between the cherubims, ^d shine forth.

2 ^e Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh stir up thy strength, and ^f come and save us.

3 ^h Turn us again, O God, ⁱ and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

4 O LORD God of hosts, how long ^j wilt thou be angry against the prayer of thy people ^k?

5 ^l Thou feedest them with the bread of tears; and givest them tears to drink in great measure.

6 ^m Thou makest us a strife unto our neighbours: and our enemies laugh among themselves.

7 ⁿ Turn us again, O God of hosts, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

8 Thou hast brought ^o a vine out of Egypt: ^p thou hast cast out the heathen, and planted it.

9 Thou ^q preparedst room before it, and didst cause it to take deep root, and it filled the land.

10 The hills were covered with the shadow of it,

This psalm seems to have been written on the same occasion with the former.

Verse 1. O Shepherd of Israel] The subject continued from the last verse of the preceding psalm.

Leadest Joseph] Israel and Joseph mean here the whole of the Jewish tribes.

That dwellest between the cherubims] It was between the cherubim, over the cover of the ark, called the propitiatory or mercy-seat, that the glory of the Lord, or symbol of the Divine Presence, appeared.

Shine forth.] Restore thy worship; and give us such evidences of thy presence now, as our fathers had under the first tabernacle, and afterwards in the temple built by Solomon.

Verse 2. Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh] It is supposed that these three tribes represent the whole, Benjamin being incorporated with Judah, Manasseh comprehending the country beyond Jordan, and Ephraim all the rest.

Verse 3. Turn us again] Convert or restore us.
Verse 5. Thou feedest them with the bread of tears] They have no peace, no comfort, nothing but continual sorrow.

In great measure.] Shalish, threefold. Some think it was a certain measure used by the Chaldeans, the real capacity of which is not known. Others think it signifies abundance or abundantly.

Verse 6. Thou makest us a strife] A people so wonderfully preserved, and so wonderfully punished, is a mystery to them. They see in us both the goodness and severity of God. Or, all the neighbouring nations join together to malign and execrate us. We are hated by all; derided and cursed by all.

Verse 8. Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt] This is a most elegant metaphor, and everywhere well supported. And this was the ordinary figure to represent the Jewish church. This vine was brought out of Egypt that it might be planted in a better and more favourable soil. God cast out the heathen nations from the land of Canaan, that his pure worship might be established, and that there might not remain there any incitements to idolatry.

Verse 9. Thou preparedst—before it] God caused the land and the boughs thereof were like ^a the goodly cedars.

11 She sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches ^b unto the river.

12 Why hast thou ^c then broken down her hedges, so that all they which pass by the way do pluck her ^d?

13 The boar out of the wood doth waste it, and the wild beast of the field doth devour it.

14 Return, we beseech thee, O God of hosts: ^e look down from heaven, and behold, and visit this vine;

15 And the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted, and the branch ^f that thou madest ^g strong for thyself.

16 It is burned with fire, it is out down: ^h ⁱ they perish at the rebuke of thy countenance.

17 ^j Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, upon the son of man ^k whom thou madest strong for thyself.

18 So will not we go back from thee: quicken us, and we will call upon thy name.

19 ^l Turn us again, O LORD God of hosts, cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

to be divided by lot to the different tribes, and then to the several families of which these tribes were composed.

And didst cause it to take deep root] Thus did God, by especial manifestations of his kind providence, support and protect the Israelites in Canaan; and by various religious ordinances, and civil institutions, he established them in the land; and, by the ministry of priests and prophets, did every thing necessary to make them morally fruitful.

It filled the land.] God so carefully, tenderly, and abundantly blessed the Israelites, that they increased and multiplied; and, in process of time, filled the whole land of Canaan.

Verse 10. The hills were covered] God so blessed the Jews, particularly in the days of David and Solomon, that all the neighbouring nations were subdued—the Syrians, Idumeans, Philistines, Moabites, and Ammonites.

Verse 11. She sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river.] The Israelitish empire extended from the River Euphrates on the east to the Mediterranean Sea on the west, and from the same Euphrates on the north of the promised land to its farthest extent on the south; Syria bounding the north, and Arabia and Egypt the south.

Verse 12. Why hast thou broken down.] God protected Jerusalem and his temple by his own almighty arm; and none of their enemies could molest them as long as they had that protection.

Verse 13. The boar out of the wood] Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who was a fierce and cruel sovereign. The allusion is plain.

Verse 14. Return—O God of hosts] Thou hast abandoned us, and therefore our enemies have us in captivity. Come back to us, and we shall again be restored.

Behold, and visit this vine] Consider the state of thy own people, thy own worship, thy own temple. Look down! Let thine eyes affect thy heart.

Verse 15. The vineyard which thy right hand hath planted] Thy holy and pure worship, which thy Almighty power had established in this city.

And the branch—thou madest strong for thyself.] The original reads, "and upon the Son whom thou hast strengthened for thyself." As Christ seems here to be intended, this is the first place in the Old Testament where the title Son of man is applied to him.

Verse 17. The man of thy right hand] The only person who can be said to be at the right hand of God as intercessor, is JESUS the MESSIAH. Let him become our Deliverer: appoint him for this purpose, and let his strength be manifested in our weakness.

Verse 18. So will not we go back from thee] We shall no more become idolaters: and it is allowed on all hands that the Jews were never guilty of idolatry after their return from the Babylonian captivity.

Quicken us] Make us alive, for we are nearly as good as dead.

We will call upon thy name.] We will invoke thee. Thou shalt be for ever the object of our adoration, and the centre of all our hopes.

Verse 19. Turn us again] Redeem us from this captivity. O Lord God of hosts] Thou who hast all power in heaven and earth, the innumerable hosts of both worlds being at thy command.

Cause thy face to shine] Let us know that thou art reconciled to us. Smile upon thy poor rebels, weary of their sins, and prostrate at thy feet, imploring mercy.

And we shall be saved.] From the power and oppression of the Chaldeans, from the guilt and condemnation of our sins, and from thy wrath and everlasting displeasure.

PSALM LXXXI.

An exhortation to the people to praise God for his benefits, 1-7; and to attend to what he had prescribed, 8-10; their disobedience lamented, 11; the miseries brought on themselves by their transgressions, 12-16.

To the chief Musician, * upon Gittith, A Psalm ^b of Asaph.

SING aloud unto God our strength: make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob.

2 Take a psalm, and bring hither the timbrel, the pleasant harp with the psaltery.

3 Blow up the trumpet in the new moon, in the time appointed, on our solemn feast day.

4 For ^c this was a statute for Israel, and a law of the God of Jacob.

5 This he ordained in Joseph for a testimony, when he went out ^d through the land of Egypt: ^e where I heard a language that I understood not.

6 ^f I removed his shoulder from the burden: his hands ^g were delivered from ^h the pots.

7 ⁱ Thou calledst in trouble, and I delivered thee; ^j I answered thee in the secret place of thunder:

^a Ps. viii. title. — ^b Or, for Asaph. — ^c Lev. xxiii. 24. Num. x. 10. — ^d Or, against. — ^e Ps. cxiv. 1. — ^f Isa. ix. 4. x. 27. — ^g Heb. passed away. — ^h Exod. i. 14. — ⁱ Exod. ii. 23. xiv. 10. Ps. i. 15. — ^j Exod. xix. 19. — ^k Exod. xvii. 8, 7. Num. xx. 13. — ^l Or, strife. — ^m Ps. i. 7. — ⁿ Exod. xx. 3, 5. — ^o Deut. xxxii. 12. Isa. xliii. 12. — ^p Exod. xx. 2. — ^q Ps.

There are various opinions concerning the occasion and time of this psalm: but it is pretty generally agreed that it was either written for or used at the celebration of the Feast of Trumpets (see on Lev. xxiii. 24), which was held on the first day of the month Tisri, which was the beginning of the Jewish year; and on that day it is still used in the Jewish worship.

Verse 1. Sing aloud unto God our strength] There is much meaning here: as God is our strength, let that strength be devoted to his service; therefore, sing aloud! This is principally addressed to priests and Levites.

Verse 2. Take a psalm] I rather think that the original is the name of a musical instrument. Bring hither the timbrel] Toph, some kind of drum or tom tom.

The pleasant harp] Kinnor. Probably a sistrum, or something like it. A STRINGED instrument.

With the psaltery.] The cithara, Septuagint.

Verse 3. Blow up the trumpet] Shophar, a species of horn. Certainly a wind instrument, as the two last were stringed instruments. Perhaps some chanted a psalm in recitative, while all these instruments were used as accompaniments.

The feast of the new moon was always proclaimed by sound of trumpet.

Verse 5. I heard a language that I understood not.] This passage is difficult. Who heard? And what was heard? All the Versions, except the Chaldees, read the pronoun in the third person, instead of the first. "He heard a language that he understood not." But what was that language?

I ^k proved thee at the waters of ^l Meribah. Selah.

8 ^m Hear, O my people, and I will testify unto thee: O Israel, if thou wilt hearken unto me;

9 ⁿ There shall no ^o strange god be in thee; neither shalt thou worship any strange god.

10 ^p I am the LORD thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt: ^q open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it.

11 But my people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would ^r none of me.

12 ^s So I gave them up ^t unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels.

13 ^u Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways;

14 I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries.

Some say the Egyptian; others, who take Joseph to signify the children of Israel in general, say it was the declaration of God by Moses, that Jehovah was the true God, that he would deliver their shoulder from their burdens, and their hands from the pots—the moulds and furnaces in which they formed and baked their brick.

Verse 7. Thou calledst in trouble] They had cried by reason of their burdens, and the cruelty of their task-masters; and God heard that cry, and delivered them. See Exod. iii. 7, &c.

In the secret place of thunder] On Mount Sinai; where God was heard, but not seen. They heard a voice, but they saw no shape.

Verse 10. Open thy mouth wide] Let thy desires be ever so extensive, I will gratify them if thou wilt be faithful to me. Thou shalt lack no manner of thing that is good.

Verse 11. Israel would none of me.] They willed me not, they would not have me for their God.

Verse 12. Unto their own hearts' lust] To the obstinate wickedness of their own heart.

In their own counsels.] God withdrew his restraining grace, which they had abused: and then they fulfilled the inventions of their wicked hearts.

Verse 13. Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, — Israel had walked in my ways.] Nothing can be more plaintive than the original; sense and sound are surprisingly united. I scruple not to say to him who understands the Hebrew, however learned, he has never found, in any poet, Greek or Latin, a finer example of deep-seated grief, unable to express itself in appropriate words without frequent interruptions of sighs and sobs, terminated with a mournful cry. Verse 14. I should soon have subdued] If God's promise appeared to fail in behalf of his people, it was because they rejected his counsel, and walked in their own. While they were faithful, they prospered; and not one jot or tittle of God's word failed to them.

PSALMS.

16 He should ^d have fed them also ^e with the finest of the wheat: and with honey ^f out of the rock should I have satisfied thee.

^d Deut. xxxii. 13, 14. Ps. cxviii. 14.—^e Heb. with the fat of wheat.—^f Job. xxix. 6.

Verse 15. Their time should have endured for ever.] That is, Their prosperity should have known no end.

Verse 16. With the finest of the wheat] Literally, with the fat of wheat, as in the margin.

Honey out of the rock] Several of the Fathers understand this place of Christ.

PSALM LXXXII.

A warning to corrupt judges, 1, 2; an exhortation to them to dispense justice without respect of persons, 3-5; they are threatened with the judgments of the Lord, 6-8.

A Psalm * of Asaph.

GOD ^bstandeth in the congregation of the mighty; he judgeth among ^cthe gods.

2 How long will ye judge unjustly, and ^daccept the persons of the wicked? Selah.

3 *Defend the poor and fatherless: ^edo justice to the afflicted and needy.

4 ^fDeliver the poor and needy: rid them out of the hand of the wicked.

*Or, for Asaph.—^b 2 Chron. xix. 6. Eccles. v. 8.—^c Exod. xxi. 8. xxii. 28.—^d Deut. i. 17. 2 Chron. xix. 7. Prov. xviii. 5.—^e Heb. Judge.—^f Jer. xxii. 3.—^g Job xxix. 12. Prov. xxiv. 11.—^h Mic. iii. 1.

This psalm, which, in the title, is attributed to Asaph, was probably composed in the time when Jehoshaphat reformed the courts of justice throughout his states: see 2 Chron. xix. 6, 7, where he uses nearly the same words as in the beginning of this psalm.

Verse 1. God standeth in the congregation of the mighty] "God standeth in the assembly of God." God is among his people; and he presides especially in those courts of justice which himself has established.

Verse 2. Accept the persons of the wicked?] "Lift up their faces," encourage them in their oppressions.

Verse 3. Defend the poor] You are their natural protectors under God. They are oppressed: punish their oppressors, however rich or powerful; and deliver them.

Verse 4. They know not] The judges are not acquainted with the law of God, on which all the decisions should be founded.

Neither will they understand] They are ignorant, and do not wish to be instructed. They will not learn: they cannot teach.

All the foundations of the earth] "All the civil institutions of the land totter." Justice is at the head of all the institutions in a well regulated state: when that gets 5 They ^bknow not, neither will they understand; they walk on in darkness: ^call the foundations of the earth are ^dout of course.

6 ^eI have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the Most High.

7 But ^fye shall die like men, and fall like one of the princes.

poisoned or perverted, every evil, political and domestic, must prevail; even religion itself ceases to have any influence.

Verse 6. Ye are gods] Or, with the prefix ke, the particle of similitude, keelohim, "like God." Ye are my representatives, and are clothed with my power and authority to dispense judgment and justice; therefore all of them are said to be children of the Most High.

Verse 7. But ye shall die like men] "Ye shall die like Adam," who fell from his high perfection and dignity as ye have done. Your high office cannot secure you an immortality.

And fall like one of the princes.] Justice shall pursue you, and judgment shall overtake you; and you shall be executed like public state criminals. You shall not, in the course of nature, fall into the grave; but your life shall be brought to an end by a legal sentence, or a particular judgment of God.

Verse 8. Arise, O God, judge the earth] Justice is perverted in the land: take the sceptre, and rule thyself.

For thou shalt inherit all nations.] Does not this last verse contain a prophecy of our Lord, the calling of the Gentiles, and the prevalence of Christianity over the earth?

PSALM LXXXIII.

The Psalmist calls upon God for immediate help against a multitude of confederate enemies who had risen up against Judah, 1-5. He mentions them by name, 6-8; shows how they were to be punished, 9-17; and that this was to be done for the glory of God, 18.

A song or Psalm * of Asaph.

KEEP ^b not thou silence, O God: hold not thy peace, and be not still O God.

2 For, lo, ^c thine enemies make a tumult: and they that ^d hate thee have lifted up the head.

3 They have taken crafty counsel against thy people, and consulted * against thy hidden ones.

4 They have said, Come, and ^e let us cut them off from being a nation; that the name of Israel may be no more in remembrance.

5 For they have consulted together with one * consent: they are confederate against thee:

6 ^b The tabernacles of Edom, and the Ishmaelites; of Moab, and the Hagarenes;

7 Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek; the Philistines with the inhabitants of Tyre;

8 Assur also is joined with them: ^f they have holpen the children of Lot. Selah.

9 Do unto them as unto the ^g Midianites; as to ^h Sisera, as to Jabin, at the brook of Kison:

* Or, for Asaph.—^a Ps. xxviii. 1. xxxv. 22. cix. 1.—^b Ps. ii. 1. Acts. iv. 25.—^c Ps. lxxxii. 15.—^d Ps. xxvii. 5. xxxi. 20.—^e See Esth. iii. 6. Jer. xi. 18. xxxi. 36.—^f Heb. heart.—^g See 2 Chron. xx. 1, 10, 11.—^h Heb. they have been an arm to the children of Lot.—Num.

Among a multitude of conjectures relative to the time and occasion of this psalm, that which refers it to the confederacy against Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, mentioned 2 Chron. xx., is the most likely.

Verse 1. Keep not thou silence] A strong appeal to God just as the confederacy was discovered. Thy honour and our existence are both at stake.

Verse 2. Thine enemies make a tumult] They are not merely the enemies of thy people, but they are the enemies of thyself, thy worship, ordinances, and laws: "They make a tumult," they throng together.

They—have lifted up the head.] They had made an irruption into the land of Judea, and encamped at Engedi, by the Dead Sea, 2 Chron. xx. 1, 2.

Verse 3. Consulted against thy hidden ones.] Thy hidden things; places; persons. The people of Israel are probably meant. Or perhaps the temple, the ark, and the treasures of the temple, are intended.

Verse 4. Let us cut them off] Let us exterminate the whole race, that there may not be a record of them on the face of the earth.

Verse 5. They have consulted together with one consent] With a united heart. Their heart and soul are in the work.

They are confederate against thee] "They have made a covenant," "they have cut the covenant sacrifice." They have slain an animal, divided him in twain, and passed between the pieces of the victim; and have thus bound themselves to accomplish their purpose.

Verse 6. The tabernacles of Edom. Tents are probably mentioned because it was the custom of some of these people, particularly the Ishmaelites, to live a migratory or wandering life; having no fixed habitation, but always abiding in tents.

Hagarenes] These people dwelt on the east of Gilead; and were nearly destroyed in the days of Saul, being totally expelled from their country, 1 Chron. v. 10, but afterwards recovered some strength and consequence; but where they dwelt after their expulsion by the Israelites is not known.

Verse 7. Gebal] The Giblites, who were probably the persons here designed, were a tribe of the ancient inhabitants of the land of Canaan, and are mentioned as unconquered at the death of Joshua, chap. xiii. 5. What is now called Gibyle, a place on the Mediterranean Sea, between Tripoli and Sidon, is supposed to be the remains of the city of the Giblites.

Ammon and Moab were the descendants of the children of Lot. Calmet supposes that Ammon is put here for Men or Maon, the Meonians, a people who lived in the neighbourhood of the Amalekites and Idumeans.

Amalek] The Amalekites are well known as the ancient and inveterate enemies of the Israelites. They were neighbours to the Idumeans.

The Philistines] These were tributaries to Jehoshaphat,

10 Which perished at En-dor: ⁱ they became a dung for the earth.

11 Make their nobles like ^m Oreb, and like Zeeb: yea, all their princes as ⁿ Zebah, and as Zalmonna:

12 Who said, Let us take to ourselves the houses of God in possession.

13 ^o O my God, make them like a wheel; ^p as the stubble before the wind.

14 As the fire burneth a wood, and as the flame ^q setteth the mountains on fire;

15 So persecute them ^r with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm.

16 ^s Fill their faces with shame; that they may seek thy name, O LORD.

17 Let them be confounded and troubled for ever; yea, let them be put to shame, and perish:

18 ^t That men may know that thou, whose ^u name alone is JEHOVAH, art ^v the Most High over all the earth.

2 Chron. xvii. 11; but it seems they took advantage of the present times, to join in the great confederacy against him.

The inhabitants of Tyre] These probably joined the confederacy in hopes of making conquests, and extending their territory on the main land.

Verse 8. Assur also is joined] The Ammonites might have got those auxiliaries from beyond the Euphrates, against Jehoshaphat, as formerly they were brought against David. See 2 Chron. x. 16.

They have holpen the children of Lot.] The Ammonites, who appear to have been the chief instigators of this war.

Verse 9. Do unto them as unto the Midianites] Who were utterly defeated by Gideon, Judg. vii. 21, 22.

As to Sisera] See Judg. iv. 15, &c.

Verse 10. Perished at En-dor] There Gideon attacked and defeated them; and, in various places during their flight, they were destroyed, and left to rot upon the earth. Judg. vii. 22-25.

Verse 11. Make their nobles like Oreb, and like Zeeb] They were two of the chiefs, or generals, of the Midianites; and were slain in the pursuit of the Midianites, by the men of Ephraim; and their heads brought to Gideon on the other side of Jordan, Judg. vii. 24, 25.

Yea, all their princes as Zebah, and as Zalmonna] These were kings of Midian, who were encamped at Karkor. See Judg. viii. 10-21. Of the Midianites there fell at this time one hundred and twenty thousand men.

Verse 12. Let us take to ourselves the houses of God in possession] Nearly the words spoken by the confederates when they came to attack Jehoshaphat. See 2 Chron. xx. 11.

Verse 13. O my God, make them like a wheel] Alluding to the manner of threshing corn in the east. A large broad wheel was rolled over the grain on a threshing-floor, which was generally in the open air; and the grain being thrown up by a shovel against the wind, the chaff was thus separated from it, in the place where it was threshed.

Verse 14. The flame setteth the mountains on fire] This may refer to the burning of the straw and chaff after the grain was thrashed and winnowed. And as their threshing-floors were situated often on the hills or mountains, to take the advantage of the wind, the setting the mountains on fire may refer to the burning of the chaff, &c. in those places.

Verse 15. So persecute them] In this and the two following verses we find several awful execrations; and all this seems to be done in reference to that ancient custom, "pouring execrations on an enemy previously to battle."

Verse 16. That they may seek thy name] Let them be confounded in all their attempts on Israel; and see so manifestly that thou hast done it, that they may invoke thy name, and be converted to thee.

Verse 17. Let them—perish] That is, in their present attempts. Some have objected to the execrations in this psalm, without due consideration. None of these execrations refer either to their souls, or to their eternal state; but merely to their discomfiture in their present attempts.

Verse 18. That men may know] That they may acknowledge, and be converted to thee. Here is no malice; all is self-defence.

PSALM LXXXIV.

The Psalmist longs for communion with God in the sanctuary, 1-3. The blessedness of those who enjoy God's ordinances, 4-7. With confidence in God, he prays for restoration to his house and worship, 8-12.

To the chief Musician upon Gittith, A Psalm for the sons of Korah.

HOW amiable are thy tabernacles, O LORD of hosts!

2 My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the LORD: my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God.

3 Yea, the sparrow hath found an house, and the swallow a nest for herself, where she may lay her young, even thine altars, O LORD of hosts, my King and my God.

4 Blessed are they that dwell in thy house: they will be still praising thee. Selah.

5 Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee; in whose heart are the ways of them:

6 Who passing through the valley of Baca

The sons of Korah were singers in the temple; see 2 Chron. xx. 19. This psalm must have been sent to them to be sung, or one of themselves might have been its author.

Verse 1. How amiable are thy tabernacles] In this plural noun he appears to include all the places in or near the temple where acts of divine worship were performed.

Verse 2. My soul longeth] It is a Levite that speaks, who ardently longs to regain his place in the temple, and his part in the sacred services.

My heart and my flesh] All the desires of my soul and body; every appetite and wish, both animal and spiritual, long for thy service.

Verse 3. Yea, the sparrow hath found an house] It is very unlikely that sparrows and swallows, or birds of any kind, should be permitted to build their nests, and hatch their young, in or about altars which were kept in a state of the greatest purity; and where perpetual fires were kept up for the purpose of sacrifice, burning incense, &c. "My heart crieth out for the living God (even the sparrow hath found a house, and the swallow, the ring-dove, a nest for herself, where she may lay her young), for thine altars, O Lord of hosts!" Or, as a comparison seems to be here intended, the following may best express the meaning: "Even as the sparrow finds out (seeks) a house, and the swallow her nest in which she may hatch her young; so I, thine altars, O Lord of hosts, my King and my God."

Verse 4. Blessed are they that dwell in thy house] They who have such a constant habitation in thy temple, as the sparrow or the swallow has in the house wherein it has built its nest.

They will be still praising thee.] They will find it good to draw nigh unto God, as he always pours out his Spirit on his sincere worshippers.

Verse 5. In whose heart are the ways of them] This is no sense. The original, however, is obscure: "the high ways are in their hearts;" that is, the roads winding to thy temple.

Verse 6. Passing through the valley of Baca make it a well] I believe Baca to be the same here as Bochim, Judg. ii. 1-5, called The Valley of Weeping. Though they pass through this barren and desert place, they would not fear evil, knowing that thou wouldst supply all their wants; and even make it a well; the rain also filleth the pools.

7 They go from strength to strength, every one of them in Zion appeareth before God.

8 O LORD God of hosts, hear my prayer: give ear, O God of Jacob. Selah.

9 Behold, O God our shield, and look upon the face of thine anointed.

10 For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness.

11 For the LORD God is a sun and shield: the LORD will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.

in the sandy desert cause them to find pools of water, in consequence of which they shall advance with renewed strength, and shall meet with the God of Israel in Zion.

The rain also filleth the pools.] The Hebrew may be translated differently, and has been differently understood by all the Versions. "Yea the instructor is covered or clothed with blessings." While the followers of God are passing through the wilderness of this world, God opens for them fountains in the wilderness, and springs in the dry places.

Verse 7. They go from strength to strength] They proceed from one degree of grace to another, gaining divine virtue through all the steps of their probation.

Every one of them in Zion appeareth before God.] This is a paraphrase, and a bad one, but no translation. "The God of gods shall be seen in Zion." God shall appear in their behalf, as often as they shall seek him; in consequence of which they shall increase in spiritual strength.

Some think there is a reference here to companies of people going up to Jerusalem from different parts of the land, blending together as they go on, so that the crowd is continually increasing. This meaning our translators have put in the margin.

Verse 8. Hear my prayer] Let us be restored to thy sanctuary, and to thy worship.

Verse 9. Behold, O God, our shield] We have no Protector but thee. Thou seest the deadly blows that are aimed at us; cover our souls; protect our lives!

Look upon the face of thine anointed.] Consider the supplications sent up by him whom thou hast appointed to be Mediator between thee and man—thy Christ. But some apply this to David, to Zerubbabel, to the people of Israel; and each has his reasons.

Verse 10. A day in thy courts is better than a thousand.] Not only better than one thousand in captivity, as the Chaldees states, but any where else. For in God's courts we meet with God the King, and are sure to have what petitions we offer unto him through Christ.

I had rather be a doorkeeper] What a strong desire does this express for the ordinances of God!

Verse 11. For the LORD God is a sun and shield] To illuminate, invigorate, and warm; to protect and defend all such as prefer him and his worship to every thing the earth can produce.

The Lord will give grace] To pardon, purify, and save the soul from sin: and then he will give glory to the sanctified in his eternal kingdom; and even here he withholds no good thing from them that walk uprightly. Well, therefore, might the Psalmist say, verse 13, "O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee."

PSALM LXXXV.

Thanksgiving to God for restoration to the divine favour, 1-3; prayer for further mercies, 4-7; the Psalmist waits for a gracious answer in full confidence of receiving it, 8. He receives the assurance of the greatest blessings, and exults in the prospect, 9-13.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm * for ^b the sons of Korah.
LORD, thou hast been ^c favourable unto thy land: thou hast ^d brought back the captivity of Jacob.

2 ^e Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people, thou hast covered all their sin. Selah.

3 Thou hast taken away all thy wrath: ^f thou hast turned thyself from the fierceness of thine anger.

4 ^g Turn us, O God of our salvation, and cause thine anger toward us to cease.

5 ^h Wilt thou be angry with us for ever? wilt thou draw out thine anger to all generations?

6 Wilt thou not ⁱ revive us again: that thy people may rejoice in thee?

This psalm seems to have been written during, or even after, the return from the Babylonish captivity. The whole may have a reference to the redemption of the world by Jesus Christ.

Verse 1. Lord, thou hast been favourable] Literally, Thou hast been well pleased with thy land.

Thou hast brought back the captivity] This seems to fix the time of the psalm to be after the return of the Jews from Babylon.

Verse 2. Thou hast forgiven the iniquity] Thou hast borne, or carried away, the iniquity. An allusion to the ceremony of the scape-goat.

Thou hast covered all their sin.] As thou hast freely forgiven it, its offensiveness and abominable nature no longer appear. The whole is put out of sight; and, as we are restored from our captivity, the consequences no longer appear.

Verse 3. Thou hast taken away] "Thou hast gathered up all thy wrath." This carries on the metaphor in the second verse: "Thou hast collected all thy wrath, and carried it away with all our iniquities."

Verse 4. Turn us, O God of our salvation] Thou hast turned our captivity; now convert our souls. And they find a reason for their prayer in an attribute of their God; the God of their salvation.

Verse 5. Wilt thou draw out thine anger] We have already suffered much and wrong; our fathers have suffered, and we have succeeded to their distresses.

Verse 6. Wilt thou not revive us] Shall not our nation yet live before thee? Shall we not become once more numerous, pious, and powerful; that Thy people may rejoice in thee? As the Source of all our mercies; and give thee the glory due to thy name?

Verse 7. Show us thy mercy] Blot out all our sins. And grant us thy salvation.] Give us such a complete

7 Show us thy mercy, O LORD, and grant us thy salvation.

10 Mercy and truth are met together; ^o righteousness and peace have kissed each other.

11 ^p Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven.

12 ^q Yea, the LORD shall give that which is good; and ^r our land shall yield her increase.

deliverance as is worthy of thy majesty and mercy to bestow!

Verse 8. I will hear what God the LORD will speak] The Psalmist goes as a prophet to consult the Lord; and, having made his request, waits an answer from the spirit of prophecy.

He will speak peace] He will give prosperity to the people in general; and to his saints—his followers, in particular.

But let them not turn again to folly.] Let them not abuse the mercy of their God, by sinning any more against him.

Verse 9. Surely his salvation is nigh] To him who fears God, and trembles at his word, his salvation is nigh at hand.

That glory may dwell in our land.] That thy worship may be restored, the temple rebuilt, and the divine shechinah, or symbol of the presence of God, resume its place. The pure and undefiled religion of God preached, professed, and experienced in a nation, is the glory of that land.

Verse 10. Mercy and truth are met together] It would be more simple to translate the original,—

"Mercy and truth have met on the way; Righteousness and peace have embraced."

Mercy and peace are on one side; truth and righteousness on the other. Truth requires righteousness; mercy calls for peace. They meet together on the way; one going to make inquisition for sin, the other to plead for reconciliation.

Having met, their differences are adjusted; and their mutual claims are blended together in one common interest; on which peace and righteousness immediately embrace. Thus, righteousness is given to truth, and peace is given to mercy.

Now, Where did these meet? In Christ Jesus.

When were they reconciled? When he poured out his life on Calvary.

Verse 11. Truth shall spring out of the earth] In consequence of this wonderful reconciliation, the truth of God shall prevail among men. The seeds of it shall be so plentifully sown by the preaching of Christ and his apostles that true religion shall be diffused over the world.

And righteousness shall look down from heaven.] And be delighted with the reformation of the sons of Adam; and shall be so satisfied with the glorious work which is carried forward, that,

Verse 12. The Lord shall give—good.] THE GOOD thing—what is the supreme good, the summum bonum, for which man has searched in vain through all his generations.

Our land shall yield her increase.] There shall be neither death nor barrenness; for truth, that springs out of the earth, shall yield an abundant harvest, in the conversion of all nations to the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Verse 13. Righteousness shall go before him.] Perhaps this verse may receive its best solution from Rom. iii. 25. This term is used by the apostle to point out God's method of justifying or saving mankind. And this, in the preaching of the pure Gospel, is ever going before to point out the Lord Jesus, and the redemption that is in his blood. And thus going before him, the sinner, who feels his need of salvation, is Set—in the way of his steps; as Bartimeus sat by the way-side begging, by which way Jesus walked; and when he came where he was, heard his prayer, and restored him his sight. Or, righteousness—the pure and holy law of God must be proclaimed as broken by sinners, and calling aloud for vengeance, before they can see and feel their need of Christ crucified. By the preaching of the law they are prepared to receive the grace of the Gospel.

PSALM LXXXVI.

The Psalmist prays to God for support, from a conviction that he is merciful, good, ready to forgive, and that there is none like him, 1-8; all nations shall bow before him because of his wondrous work, 9, 10; he prays to be instructed, and promises to praise God for his great mercy, 11-13; describes his enemies, and appeals to God, 14-16; begs a token for good, that his enemies may be confounded, 17.

* A Prayer of David.

2 Preserve my soul; for I am ^b holy: O thou my God, save thy servant ^c that trusteth in thee.

3 ^d Be merciful unto me, O LORD: for I cry unto thee ^e daily.

4 Rejoice the soul of thy servant: ^f for unto thee, O LORD, do I lift up my soul.

5 ^g For thou, LORD, art good, and ready to forgive; and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee.

6 Give ear, O LORD, unto my prayer; and attend to the voice of my supplications.

The title attributes this psalm to David; and in this all the Versions agree: but in its structure it is the same with those attributed to the sons of Korah; and was probably made during the captivity. It is a very suitable prayer for a person labouring under affliction from persecution or calamity.

Verse 1. Bow down thine ear.] Spoken, after the manner of men: I am so low, and so weak, that, unless thou stoop to me, my voice cannot reach thee.

Poor and needy.] I am afflicted, and destitute of the necessaries of life.

Verse 2. Preserve my soul.] Keep it as in a strong place. For I am holy.] For I am merciful.

Save thy servant.] I have long taken thee as my Master and Lord; I receive the word from thy mouth, and obey thee.

Verse 4. Rejoice the soul of thy servant.] I want spiritual blessings; I want such consolations as thou dost impart to them that love thee.

Verse 5. For thou, Lord, art good.] I found my expectation of help on thy own goodness, through which thou art always ready to forgive.

Verse 6. Give ear, O Lord.] Attend to me. Millions call upon thee for help and mercy; but who has more need than myself?

7 ^h In the day of my trouble I will call upon thee: for thou wilt answer me.

8 ⁱ Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O LORD; ^j neither are there any works like unto thy works.

9 ^k All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O LORD; and shall glorify thy name.

10 For thou art great, and ^l doest wondrous things: ^m thou art God alone.

11 ⁿ Teach me thy way, O LORD; I will walk in thy truth: unite my heart to fear thy name.

12 I will praise thee, O LORD my God, with all my heart: and I will glorify thy name for evermore.

13 For great is thy mercy toward me: and thou

Verse 7. Thou wilt answer me.] Because thou art good, merciful, and ready to forgive; and I call upon thee fervently, and seek thee in thy own way.

Verse 8. Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord.] None that trusted in an idol ever had help in time of need; none that prayed to any of them ever had an answer to his petitions. Thou savest; they cannot; thou upholdest; they must be upheld by their foolish worshippers. Thou art my Director, Adonai: but they cannot direct nor teach; they have mouths, but they speak not.

Verse 9. All nations.] Thy word shall be proclaimed among all the Gentiles: they shall receive thy testimony, and worship thee as the only true and living God.

Verse 10. For thou art great.] Almighty, infinite, eternal. And doest wondrous things.] Thou art the Worker of miracles. This thou hast done in numerous instances, and thereby showed thy infinite power and wisdom.

This appears to be a prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles to the faith of Christ, and the evidence to be given to his divine mission by the miracles which he should work.

Verse 11. Teach me thy way.] Instruct me in the steps I should take; for without thy teaching I must go astray.

Unite my heart.] Join all the purposes, resolutions, and affections of my heart together, to fear and to glorify thy name. This is a most important prayer. A divided heart is a great curse; scattered affections are a miserable plague.

Verse 12. I will praise thee—with all my heart! When my heart is united to fear thy name, then shall I praise thee with my whole heart.

Verse 13. Thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell. This must mean more than the grave; a hell below hell—a place of perdition for the soul, as the grave is a place of corruption for the body.

Verse 14. The assemblies of violent men! The congregation of the terrible ones. Men of violent passions, violent counsels, and violent acts; and, because they have power, terrible to all.

Have not set thee before them. Who sins that sets God before his eyes? Who does not sin that has no consciousness of the divine presence?

16 O ^f turn unto me, and have mercy upon me; give thy strength unto thy servant, and save ^g the son of thine handmaid.

Verse 15. But thou, O Lord! What a wonderful character of God is given in this verse! Adonai, the Director, Judge, and Support; El, the strong God; rachum, tenderly compassionate; chanun, the Dispenser of grace or favour; erech appayim, suffering long, not easily provoked; raḥ chesed, abundant in blessings; and emeth, faithful and true. Such is the God who has made himself more particularly known to us in Christ.

Verse 16. O turn unto me! He represents himself as following after God; but he cannot overtake him: and then he prays that he would turn and meet him through pity, or give him strength that he might be able to hold on his race.

Verse 17. Shew me a token for good! "Make with me a sign." Fix the honourable mark of thy name upon me, that I may be known to be thy servant.

PSALM LXXXVII.

The nature and glorious privileges of Zion and Jerusalem, 1-3. No other city to be compared to this, 4. The privilege of being born in it, 5, 6. Its praises celebrated, 7.

A Psalm or Song ^a for the sons of Korah.

HIS foundation is ^b in the holy mountains.

2 ^c The LORD loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob.

3 ^d Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God. Selah.

4 I will make mention of ^e Rahab and Babylon to them that know me: behold Philistia, and Tyre,

^a Or, of.—^b Ps. xlviii. 1.—^c Ps. lxxviii. 67, 68.—^d See Isa. lx.

This Psalm begins and ends so abruptly that many have thought it to be only a fragment of a larger Psalm. This opinion is very likely. As to its general design, it seems to have been written in praise of Jerusalem; and those who are for mystic meanings, think that it refers to the Christian church: and, on this supposition it is interpreted by several writers, both ancient and modern.

Verse 1. His foundation is in the holy mountains. Jerusalem was founded on the mountains or hills of Zion and Moriah. The after increase of the population obliged the inhabitants to inclose all the contiguous hills; but Zion and Moriah were the principal.

Verse 2. The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob. That is, he preferred Zion for his habitation, to be the place of his temple and sanctuary, before any other place in the promised land. Mystically, the Lord prefers the Christian church to the Jewish: the latter was only a type of the former; and had no glory by reason of the glory that excelleth. To this position no exception can be made.

Verse 3. Glorious things are spoken of thee! Or, there are glorious words or doctrines in thee. Does this refer to the glorious doctrines of the Christian church? These are glorious sayings indeed.

Verse 4. I will make mention of Rahab! The meaning seems to be, Rahab, i.e., Egypt, Babylon, Tyre, Philistia, and Ethiopia are not so honourable as Jerusalem. To be with Ethiopia; this man was born there.

5 And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her; and the Highest himself shall establish her.

6 ^f The LORD shall count, when he ^g writeth up the people, that this man was born there. Selah.

7 As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there: all my springs are in thee.

^a Ps. lxxxix. 10. Isa. li. 9.—^f Ps. xxii. 30.—^g Ezek. xlii. 9.

born in any of them is no privilege when compared with being a native of Jerusalem: their cities are but heads of villages; Jerusalem alone is a city.

Verse 5. This and that man was born in her! It will be an honour to any person to have been born in Zion. But how great is the honour to be born from above, and be a citizen of the Jerusalem that is from above! To be children of God, by faith in Christ Jesus!

The Highest himself shall establish her. The Christian church is built on the foundation of the prophets and apostles; Jesus Christ himself being the Corner-stone.

Verse 6. The Lord shall count, when he writeth up the people! In the register of the people. When he takes account of those who dwell in Jerusalem, he will particularly note those who were born in Zion.

This has an easy spiritual meaning. When God takes an account of all professing Christians, he will set apart those for inhabitants of the New Jerusalem who were born in Zion, who were born again, received a new nature, and were fitted for heaven.

Verse 7. As well the singers, &c.! Perhaps, this may mean no more than, The burden of the songs of all the singers and choristers shall be, "All my fountains (ancestors and posterity) are in thee;" and consequently, entitled to all thy privileges and immunities.

It would be a very natural cause of exultation, when considering the great privileges of this royal city, to know that all his friends, family, and children were citizens of this city, were entered in God's register, and were entitled to his protection and favour. Applied to the Christian church, the privileges are still higher: born of God, enrolled among the living in Jerusalem, having their hearts purified by faith, and being washed and made clean through the blood of the covenant, and sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, such have a right to the inheritance among the saints in light.

PSALM LXXXVIII.

The earnest prayer of a person in deep distress, abandoned by his friends and neighbours, and apparently forsaken of God, 1-18.

A Song or Psalm * for the sons of Korah, to the chief Musician upon Mahalath ^b Leannoth, ^c Maschil of ^d Heman the Ezrahite.

O LORD ^a God of my salvation, I have cried day and night before thee:

2 Let my prayer come before thee: incline thine ear unto my cry;

3 For my soul is full of troubles; and my life draweth nigh unto the grave.

4 ^b I am counted with them that go down into the pit: ^c I am as a man that hath no strength:

5 Free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more: and they are ^d cut off ^e from thy hand.

6 Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit, in darkness, in the deeps.

7 Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and ^f thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Selah.

8 ^g Thou hast put away mine acquaintance far from me; thou hast made me an abomination unto them: ^h I am shut up, and I cannot come forth.

* Or, of.—^b That is, To humble.—^c Or, A Psalm of Heman the Ezrahite, giving instruction.—^d 1 Kings iv. 31. 1 Chron. ii. 6.—^e Ps. xxvii. 9. li. 14.—^f Luke xviii. 7.—^g Ps. cvii. 18.—^h Ps. xxviii. 1.—ⁱ Ps. xxxi. 12.—^j Isa. liii. 8.—^k Or, by thy hand.—^l Ps. xlii. 7.—^m Job. xix.

Heman and Ethan, whose names are separately prefixed to this and the following psalm, are mentioned as the grandsons of Judah by his daughter-in-law Tamar, 1 Chron. ii. 6, for they were the sons of Zerah, his immediate son by the above. Probably Zerah was also called Mahol. If the psalms in question were written by these men, they are the oldest poetical compositions extant; and the most ancient part of divine revelation, as these persons lived at least one hundred and seventy years before Moses. This may be true of the seventy-eighth psalm; but certainly not of the following, as it speaks of transactions that took place long afterwards, at least as late as the days of David, who is particularly mentioned in it. Were we sure of Heman as the author, there would be no difficulty in applying the whole of the psalm to the state of the Hebrews in Egypt, persecuted and oppressed by Pharaoh.

Verse 1. O Lord God of my salvation] This is only the continuation of prayers and supplications already often sent up to the throne of grace.

Verse 2. Let my prayer come before thee] It is weak and helpless, though fervent and sincere: take all hindrances out of its way, and let it have a free passage to thy throne.

Verse 4. I am counted with them, &c.] I am as good as dead; nearly destitute of life and hope.

Verse 5. Free among the dead] Perhaps stripped among the dead. Both the fourth and fifth verses allude to a field of battle: the slain and the wounded are found scattered over the plain; the spoilers come among them, and strip, not only the dead, but those also who appear to be mortally wounded, and cannot recover, and are so feeble as not to be able to resist.

They are cut off from thy hand.] An allusion to the roll in which the general has the names of all that compose his army under their respective officers. And when one is killed

9 Mine eye mourneth by reason of affliction: LORD, I have called daily upon thee, ^a I have stretched out my hands unto thee.

10 Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? shall the dead arise and praise thee? Selah.

11 Shall thy lovingkindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction?

12 Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?

13 But unto thee have I cried, O LORD; and in the morning shall my prayer prevent thee.

14 LORD, why castest thou off my soul? why hidest thou thy face from me?

15 I am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up: while ^b I suffer thy terrors I am distracted.

16 Thy fierce wrath goeth over me; thy terrors have cut me off.

he is erased from this register, and remembered no more, as belonging to the army; but his name is entered among those who are dead, in a separate book.

Verse 7. Thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves.] The figures in this verse seem to be taken from a tempest at sea. The storm is fierce, and the waves cover the ship.

Verse 8. Thou hast made me an abomination] This verse has been supposed to express the state of a leper, who, because of the infectious nature of his disease, is separated from his family—is abominable to all, and at last shut up in a separate house, whence he does not come out to mingle with society.

Verse 10. Arise and praise thee? Any more in this life? The interrogations in this and the two following verses imply the strongest negations.

Verse 11. Or thy faithfulness in destruction? Faithfulness in God refers as well to his fulfilling his threatenings as to his keeping his promises. The wicked are threatened with such punishments as their crimes have deserved; but annihilation is no punishment.

Verse 12. The land of forgetfulness? The place of separate spirits, or the invisible world.

Verse 13. Shall my prayer prevent thee.] It shall get before thee; I will not wait till the accustomed time to offer my morning sacrifice, I shall call on thee long before others come to offer their devotions.

Verse 14. Why castest thou off my soul? Instead of my soul, several of the ancient Versions have my prayer.

Verse 15. From my youth up] There are still found in the church of God persons in similar circumstances; persons who are continually mourning for themselves and for the desolations of Zion. A disposition of this kind is sure to produce an unhealthy body; and indeed a weak constitution may often produce an enfeebled mind; but where the terrors of the Lord prevail, there is neither health of body nor peace of mind.

Verse 16. Thy fierce wrath goeth over me] It is a mighty flood by which I am overwhelmed.

Verse 17. They came round about me daily like water] The waves of God's displeasure broke over him, and his enemies came around him like water, increasing more and more, rising higher and higher, till he was at last on the point of being submerged in the flood.

Verse 18. Lover and friend] I have no comfort, and neither friend nor neighbour to sympathize with me.

Mine acquaintance into darkness.] "Darkness is my companion." Perhaps he may refer to the death of his acquaintances; all were gone; there was none left to console him! That man has a dismal lot who has outlived all his old friends and acquaintances; well may such complain.

PSALM LXXXIX.

The Psalmist shows God's great mercy to the house of David, and the promises which he had given to it of support and perpetuity, 1-37; complains that, notwithstanding these promises, the kingdom of Judah is overthrown, and the royal family nearly ruined, 38-45; and earnestly prays for their restoration, 46-52.

*Maschil of ^bEthan the Ezrahite,

I WILL sing of the mercies of the LORD for ever: with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulness ^a to all generations.

2 For I have said, Mercy shall be built up for ever: thy faithfulness shalt thou establish in the very heavens.

3 ^fI have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant,

4 ^bThy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne ¹to all generations. Selah.

5 And ^hthe heavens shall praise thy wonders, O LORD: thy faithfulness also in the congregation of the saints.

6 ^bFor who in the heaven can be compared unto the LORD? who among the sons of the mighty can be likened unto the LORD?

7 ¹God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him.

It is most probable that this psalm was composed during the captivity. The title should probably be translated,—To give instruction to Ethan the Ezrahite.

Verse 1. I will sing of the mercies of the Lord] I will celebrate the mercy of God to the house of Jacob; the mercy that has been shown to our fathers from time immemorial.

To all generations.] What I say concerning thy mercy and goodness, being inspired by thy Spirit, is not only true, but shall be preserved by the divine providence for ever.

Verse 2. Mercy shall be built up for ever] God's goodness is the foundation on which his mercy rests; and from that source, and on that foundation, acts of mercy shall flow and be built up for ever and ever.

Thy faithfulness shalt thou establish] What thou hast promised to do to the children of men on earth, thou dost register in heaven; and thy promise shall never fail.

Verse 3. I have made a covenant with my chosen] And this is the covenant with David:—

Verse 4. Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations.] And this covenant had most incontestably Jesus Christ in view. David and his family are long since become extinct; none of his race has sat on the Jewish throne for more than two thousand years: but the Christ has reigned invariably since that time, and will reign till all his enemies are put under his feet.

Verse 5. The heavens shall praise thy wonders] The works that shall be wrought by his descendant of David, shall be so plainly miraculous as shall prove their origin to be divine: and both saints and angels shall join to celebrate his praises.

Thy faithfulness also] All thy promises shall be fulfilled; and particularly and supereminently those which respect the congregation of the saints—the assemblies of Christian believers.

Verse 6. For who in the heaven] Shachak signifies the ethereal regions, all visible or unbounded space; the universe. Who is like Jesus? Even in his human nature none of the sons of the mighty can be compared with him.

Verse 7. God is greatly to be feared] In all religious assemblies the deepest reverence for God should rest upon the people. Where this does not prevail, there is no true worship. While some come with a proper scriptural boldness to the throne of grace, there are others who come into the presence of God with a reprehensible, if not sinful, boldness.

Verse 8. O Lord God of hosts] Thou who hast all armies at thy command, and canst serve thyself by every part of thy creation, whether animate or inanimate.

Thy faithfulness round about thee?] Or, more properly, thy faithfulness is round about thee. God's truth leads him to fulfil his promises: they stand round his throne as the faithful servants of an eastern monarch stand round their master, waiting for the moment of their dismissal to perform his will.

Verse 9. Thou rulest the raging of the sea] Whoever has seen the sea in a storm, when its waves ran what is called mountain high, must acknowledge that nothing but omnipotent power could rule its raging.

When the waves thereof arise, thou stillest them.] Thou governest both its flux and reflux. Thou art the Author of storms and calms.

Verse 10. Thou hast broken Rahab] Thou hast destroyed the power of Egypt, having overthrown the king and its people when they endeavoured to prevent thy people from regaining their liberty.

As one that is slain] The whole clause according to the original is, "Thou, like a hero, hast broken down Egypt."

Verse 11. The heavens are thine] Thou art the Governor of all things, and the Disposer of all events. The world] The terraqueous globe.

And the fulness] All the generations of men. Thou hast founded them—thou hast made them, and dost sustain them.

Verse 12. The north and the south] It is generally supposed that by these four terms all the four quarters of the globe are intended. Tabor, a mountain of Galilee, was on the west of Mount Hermon, which was beyond Jordan, to the east of the source of that river.

Verse 14. Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne] The throne—the government of God, is founded in righteousness and judgment. He knows what is right; he sees what is right; he does what is right; and his judgments are ever according to righteousness. His decisions are all oracles; no one of them is ever reversed.

Mercy and truth shall go before thy face] These shall be the heralds that shall announce the coming of the Judge.

Verse 15. Blessed is the people] "O the blessedness of that people that know the joyful sound;" that are spared to hear the sound of the trumpet on the morning of the jubilee, which proclaims deliverance to the captives, and the restoration of all their forfeited estates. "They shall walk vigorously in the light of thy countenance" the full persuasion of the approbation of God their Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier.

Verse 16. In thy name shall they rejoice] Or, "greatly exult," "all that day," the jubilee, referred to above.

And in thy righteousness] In the declaration of thy righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, Rom. iii. 25, 26.

Shall they be exalted] The jubilee was a type of the gospel, and under that type the Psalmist here speaks of the glorious advent of the Lord Jesus, and the great happiness of believers in him.

Verse 17. For thou art the glory of their strength] They are strong in faith, and give glory to thee, because they know that their strength cometh from the Lord of hosts.

22 ° The enemy shall not exact upon him; nor the son of wickedness afflict him.

23 ^p And I will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him.

24 But ^q my faithfulness and my mercy shall be with him : and ^r in my name shall his horn be exalted.

25 * I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers.

27 Also I will make him ^v my first-born, ^w higher than the kings of the earth.

28 ^x My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and ^y my covenant shall stand fast with him.

29 ^z His seed also will I make to endure for ever, and his throne ^{aa} as the days of heaven.

30 ^{ac} If his children ^{ad} forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments;

Verse 19. Then thou spakest in vision to thy holy one] Instead of chasidecha, "thy holy one," chasideycha, "thy holy ones," is the reading of several MSS., and a great number of editions.

If we take it in the singular, it most probably means Samuel, and refers to the revelation God gave to him relative to his appointment of David to be king in the stead of Saul. If we take it in the plural, it may mean not only Samuel, but also Nathan and Gad.

Verse 20. I have found David my servant] This is the sum of what God had said in prophetic visions to his saints or holy persons, Samuel, Nathan, and Gad; see the parallel places in the margin. But all these things may have reference to Christ and his kingdom; for we are assured that David was a type of the Messiah.

Verse 22. The enemy shall not exact upon him] None of his enemies shall be able to prevail against him. It is worthy of remark that David was never overthrown; he finally conquered every foe that rose up against him.

Verse 25. I will set his hand also in the sea] This was literally fulfilled in David. Hand signifies power or authority; he set his hand on the sea in conquering the Philistines, and extending his empire along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, from Tyre to Pelusium.

His right hand in the rivers] First, the Euphrates: he subjected all Syria, and even a part of Mesopotamia; 2 Sam. viii. 3, 1 Chron. xviii. 3. He also took Damascus, and consequently had his hand or authority over the river Chrysorhoes, or Baraddi; and in his conquest of all Syria his hand must have been on the Orontes and other rivers in that region. But referring this to the typical David, we see that He was never conquered; he never lost a battle; the hosts of hell pursued him in vain. Satan was discomfited, and all his enemies bruised under his feet. Even over death he triumphed; and as to his dominion, it has spread, and is spreading over all the isles of the sea, and the continents of the world.

Verse 27. I will make him my first-born] First-born is not always to be understood literally in Scripture. It often signifies simply a well-beloved, or best-beloved son; one preferred to all the rest, and distinguished by some eminent prerogative. Thus Exod. iv. 22; Jer. xxxi. 9. In the same sense it is sometimes applied even to Jesus Christ himself, to signify his super-eminent dignity; not the eternal Sonship of his divine nature, as in verterate prejudice and superficial thinking have supposed. [See supplemental note on Psalm ii. 7.]

Verse 29. His seed also will I make to endure for ever. This can apply only to the spiritual David. The posterity of David are long since extinct, or so blended with the remaining Jews as to be utterly indiscernible; but Jesus ever liveth, and his seed (Christians) are spread, and are spreading over all nations; and his throne is eternal.

Verse 30. If his children forsake my law. See the notes on 2 Sam. vii. 13.

Verse 34. My covenant will I not break. My determination to establish a spiritual kingdom, the head of which shall be Jesus the Son of David, shall never fail.

Verse 35. Once have I sworn. There needs no second oath, the one already made is of endless obligation.

Verse 36. His throne as the sun. Splendid and glorious! dispensing light, heat, life, and salvation to all mankind.

Verse 37. As the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. The moon appears to be termed a faithful witness here, because by her particularly time is measured. Or the rainbow may be intended, that sign which God has established in the cloud; that faithful witness of his that the earth shall no more be destroyed by water.

Verse 38. But thou hast cast off. He shows what appears to him a failure of the promise, and what he calls in the next verse the making void the covenant of his servant. God cannot lie to David; how is it then that his crown is profaned, that it is cast down to the ground; the land being possessed by strangers, and the twelve tribes in the most disgraceful and oppressive captivity?

Verse 40. Thou hast broken down all his hedges. Thou hast permitted the land to be stripped of all defence; there is not even one strong place in the hands of thy people.

Verse 41. All that pass by the way spoil him. The land is in the condition of a vineyard, the hedge of which is broken down, so that they who pass by may pull the grapes, and dismantle or tear down the vines.

44 Thou hast made his ^j glory to cease, and ^k cast his throne down to the ground.

45 The days of his youth hast thou shortened: thou hast covered him with shame. Selah.

46 ^l How long, Lord? wilt thou hide thyself for ever? ^m shall thy wrath burn like fire?

47 ⁿ Remember how short my time is: wherefore hast thou made all men in vain?

48 ^o What man is he that liveth, and shall not ^p see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave? Selah.

49 Lord, where are thy former lovingkindnesses, which thou ^q swarest unto David ^r in thy truth?

50 Remember, Lord, the reproach of thy servants; ^s how I do bear in my bosom the reproach of all the mighty people;

Verse 42. Thou hast set up the right hand of his adversaries. Thou hast given them that strength which thou didst formerly give to thy own people; therefore these are depressed, those exalted.

Verse 43. Thou hast also turned the edge of his sword. The arms and military prowess of thy people are no longer of any use to them; THOU art against them, and therefore they are fallen.

Verse 44. Thou hast made his glory to cease. The kingly dignity is destroyed, and there is neither king nor throne remaining.

Verse 45. The days of his youth hast thou shortened. Our kings have not reigned half their days, nor lived out half their lives. The four last kings of Judaea reigned but a short time, and either died by the sword or in captivity.

Verse 46. How long, Lord? The promise cannot utterly fail. When then, O Lord, wilt thou restore the kingdom to Israel?

Verse 47. How short my time is. If thou deliver not speedily, none of the present generation shall see thy salvation.

Verse 48. What man is he that liveth. All men are mortal, and death is uncertain; and no man, by wisdom, might, or riches, can deliver his life from the hand—the power, of death and the grave.

Verse 49. Lord, where are thy former lovingkindnesses. Wilt thou not deal with us as thou didst with our fathers?

Verse 50. I do bear in my bosom. Our enemies mock us for our confidence, and blaspheme these. This wounds my soul; I cannot bear to hear thy name blasphemed among the heathen.

Verse 51. They have reproached the footsteps of thine anointed. They search into the whole history of thy people; they trace it up to the earliest times; and they find we have been disobedient and rebellious; and on this account we suffer much, alas, deserved reproach.

Verse 52. Blessed be the Lord for evermore. Let him treat us as he will, his name deserves eternal praises: our affliction, though great, is less than we have deserved.

The Versions ascribe this psalm to Moses; but that it could not be of Moses the lawgiver is evident from this consideration, that the age of man was not then seventy or eighty years. Therefore the psalm cannot at all refer to such ancient times. If the title be at all authentic, it must refer to some other person of that name; and indeed ish Elohim, a man of God, a divinely inspired man, agrees to the times of the prophets, who were thus denominated. The psalm was doubtless composed during or after the captivity; and most probably on their return, when they were engaged in rebuilding the temple; and this may be the work of their hands which they pray God to bless and prosper.

Verse 1. Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place] Instead of maon several MSS. have maox, "place of defence," or "refuge," which is the reading of the Vulgate, Septuagint, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. Ever since the covenant with Abraham thou hast been the Resting-place, Refuge, and Defence of thy people Israel.

Verse 2. Before the mountains were brought forth] Thou hast been from the eternity that is past, before time began; to the eternity that is after, when time shall have an end. This is the highest description of the eternity of God to which human language can reach.

Verse 3. Thou turnest man to destruction] Literally, Thou shalt turn dying man, enosh, to the small dust, but thou wilt say, Return, ye children of Adam. This appears to be a clear and strong promise of the resurrection of the human body, after it has long slept, mingled with the dust of the earth.

Verse 4. For a thousand years in thy sight] As if he had said, Though the resurrection of the body may be a thousand (or any indefinite number of) years distant; yet, when these are past, they are but as yesterday, or a single watch of the night. But, short as they appear to the eye of the mind, they are nothing when compared with the eternity of God!

Verse 5. Thou carriest them away as with a flood] Life is compared to a stream, ever gliding away; but sometimes it is a mighty torrent, when by reason of plague, famine, or war, thousands are swept away daily. In particular cases it is a rapid stream, when the young are suddenly carried off by consumptions, fevers, &c.; this is the flower that flourisheth in the morning, and in the evening is cut down wrath: we spend our years as a tale that is told.

10 The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.

11 Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.

12 So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

13 Return, O Lord, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.

14 O satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days.

15 Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16 Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

and withered. The whole of life is like a sleep or as a dream. The eternal world is real; all here is either shadowy or representative.

Verse 7. We are consumed by thine anger] Death had not entered into the world, if men had not fallen from God. By thy wrath are we troubled.] Pain, disease, and sickness are so many proofs of our defection from original rectitude.

Verse 8. Thou hast set our iniquities before thee] Every one of our transgressions is noted and minuted down in thy awful register.

Our secret sins] What can be hidden from the all-seeing eyes of God? Darkness is no darkness to him; wherever he comes there is a profusion of light—for God is light!

Verse 9. We spend our years as a tale] The Vulgate has: "Our years pass away like those of the spider." Our plans and operations are like the spider's web; life is as frail, and the thread of it as brittle, as one of those that constitute the well-wrought and curious, but fragile, habitation of that insect. All the Versions have the word spider.

The Hebrew is: "We consume our years like a groan." We live a dying, whining, complaining life, and at last a groan is its termination! How amazingly expressive!

Verse 10. Yet is their strength labour and sorrow] This refers to the infirmities of old age, which, to those well advanced in life, produce labour and sorrow.

And we fly away.] The immortal spirit wings its way into the eternal world.

Verse 11. Who knoweth the power of thine anger?] The afflictions of this life are not to be compared to the miseries which await them who live and die without being reconciled to God, and saved from their sins.

Verse 12. So teach us to number our days] Let us deeply consider our own frailty, and the shortness and uncertainty of life, that we may live for eternity.

Verse 13. Return, O Lord, how long?] Wilt thou continue angry with us for ever?

Let it repent thee] Be comforted, rejoice over them to do them good. Be glorified rather in our salvation than in our destruction.

Verse 14. O satisfy us early] Let us have thy mercy soon, (literally, in the morning).

Verse 15. Make us glad according to the days] Let thy people have as many years of prosperity as they have had of adversity.

Verse 16. Let thy work appear unto thy servants] That thou art working for us we know; but oh, let thy work appear! Let us now see, in our deliverance, that thy thoughts towards us were mercy and love.

And thy glory] Thy pure worship be established among our children for ever.

Verse 17. And let the beauty of the Lord] Let us have thy presence, blessing, and approbation, as our fathers had.

Establish thou the work of our hands] This is supposed, we have already seen, to relate to their rebuilding the temple, which the surrounding heathens and Samaritans wished to hinder.

Yea, the work of our hands] The repetition marks great earnestness to get the temple of God rebuilt, and his pure worship restored. Every truly pious man feels more for God's glory than his own temporal felicity, and rejoices more in the prosperity of God's work than in the increase of his own worldly goods.

PSALM XCI.

The safety of the godly man, and his confidence, 1, 2. How he is defended and preserved, 3-10. The angels of God are his servants, 11, 12; and he shall tread on the necks of his adversaries, 13. What God says of, and promises to, such a person, 14-16.

HE that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

2 I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in him will I trust.

3 Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence.

4 He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust: his truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

5 Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day;

6 Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday.

7 A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee.

8 Only with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked.

This psalm has no title in the Hebrew; nor can it be determined on what occasion, or by whom it was composed. It is allowed to be one of the finest psalms in the whole collection.

Verse 1. In the secret place of the Most High] Spoken probably in reference to the Holy of Holies. This was the privilege of the high-priest only, under the law; but under the new covenant all believers in Christ have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus; and those who thus enter are safe from every evil.

Verse 2. I will say of the Lord] This is my experience: "He is my fortress, and in him will I continually trust."

Verse 3. Surely he shall deliver thee] As the original word, dabar, signifies a word spoken, and deber, the same letters, signifies pestilence; so some translate one way, and some another: he shall deliver thee from the evil and slanderous word; he shall deliver thee from the noisome pestilence.

Verse 4. He shall cover thee with his feathers] He shall act towards thee as the hen does to her brood,—take thee under his wings when birds of prey appear, and also shelter thee from chilling blasts.

His truth shall be thy shield and buckler] His revelation; his Bible. The fulfilment of a promise relative to defence and support is to the soul what the best shield is to the body.

Verse 5. The terror by night] Night is a time of terrors, because it is a time of treasons, plunder, robbery, and mur-

9 Because thou hast made the Lord which is my refuge, even the Most High, thy habitation;

10 There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling.

11 For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.

12 They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone.

13 Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder: the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet.

14 Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him: I will set him on high, because he hath known my name.

15 He shall call upon me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him and honour him.

16 With long life will I satisfy him, and shew him my salvation.

slumbers nor sleeps. It may also mean all spiritual foes,—the rulers of the darkness of the world.

Nor for the arrow] Thou needest not to fear a sudden and unprovided-for death.

Verse 6. Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday] The rabbins supposed that the empire of death was under two demons, one of which ruled by day, the other by night. The Vulgate and Septuagint have—the noonday devil. The ancients thought that there were some demons who had the power to injure particularly at noonday.

Verse 7. A thousand shall fall at thy side] This is a promise of perfect protection, and the utmost safety.

Verse 8. The reward of the wicked] Thou shalt not only be safe thyself, but thou shalt see all thy enemies discomfited and cast down.

Verse 9. Because thou hast made the Lord] Thou shalt be safe in thy soul, body, household, and property, ver. 10. Every pious man may expect such protection from his God and Father.

Verse 11. He shall give his angels charge over thee] The angels of God shall have an especial charge to accompany, defend, and preserve thee; and against their power, the influence of evil spirits cannot prevail. These will, when necessary, turn thy steps out of the way of danger; ward it off when it comes in thy ordinary path; suggest to thy mind prudent counsels, profitable designs, and pious purposes; and thus minister to thee as a child of God, and an heir of salvation.

To keep thee in all thy ways] The path of duty is the way of safety. Thou canst not reasonably expect protection if thou walk not in the way of obedience. Thy ways are the paths of duty, which God's word and providence have marked out for thee.

Verse 12. They shall bear thee up in their hands] Take the same care of thee as a nurse does of a weak and tender child.

Verse 13. Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder] Even the king of the forest shall not be able to injure thee; should one of these attack thee, the angels whom God sends will give thee an easy victory over him. And even the asp, one of the most venomous of serpents, shall not be able to harm thee.

The dragon shalt thou trample] The tannin, which we translate dragon, means often a large aquatic animal; and perhaps here the crocodile or alligator.

Verse 14. Because he hath set his love upon me] Here the Most High is understood as confirming the word of his servant. He has fixed his love—his heart and soul, on me.

Therefore will I deliver him] I will save him in all troubles, temptations, and evils of every kind.

I will set him on high] I will place him out of the reach of all his enemies. I will honour and ennoble him, because he has loved, honoured, and served me, and rendered me that worship which is my due.

Verse 15. He shall call upon me] All his blessings must come in this way.

I will be with him in trouble] Literally, I am with him; as soon as the trouble comes, I am there.

I will deliver him] I may permit him to be exercised for a time, but delivered he shall be.

And honour him] I will load him with honour; that honour that comes from God. I will even show to men how highly I prize such.

Verse 16. With long life] Literally, With length of days will I fill him up. He shall neither live a useless life, nor die before his time.

And shew him my salvation] He shall discover infinite lengths, breadths, depths, and heights, in my salvation. He shall feel boundless desires, and shall discover that I have provided boundless gratification for them. He shall dwell in my glory, and throughout eternity increase in his resemblance to and enjoyment of me.

PSALM XCII.

The Psalmist shows the duty and advantage of praising God, 1-3; speaks of the grandeur of God's works, 4-6; the fall of the wicked, 7-9; the happiness of the righteous, 10-14; and all this founded on the perfections of God.

A Psalm or Song for the Sabbath-day.

IT is a good thing to give thanks unto the LORD, and to sing praises unto thy name,

O Most High:

2 To shew forth thy lovingkindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night.

^a Ps. cxlvii 1.—^b Ps. lxxxix. 1.—^c Heb. in the nights.—^d 2 Chron. xxiii. 5. Ps. xxxiii. 2.—^e Or, upon the solemn sound with the harp.—

Cabmet supposes this psalm to have been composed by some of the Levites during or near the close of the Babylonish captivity, acknowledging the mercy of God, and foreseeing the desolation of their enemies, and their own return to Jerusalem, and their temple service.

Verse 1. It is a good thing to give thanks] Good to confess unto the Lord.

Verse 2. To shew forth thy loving-kindness] Chasdecho, thy abundant mercy, in the morning—that has preserved me throughout the night, and thy faithfulness in the night, that has so amply fulfilled the promise of preservation during the course of the day.

Verse 3. Upon an instrument of ten strings] I believe the whole verse should be translated thus: Upon the asur, upon the nebel, upon the higgayon, with the kinnor. Thus it stands in the Hebrew.

Verse 4. For thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy work] I am delighted with thy conduct towards me; with the work of thy providence, the works of thy grace, and the works of creation.

Verse 5. How great are thy works] They are multitudinous, stupendous, and splendid: and thy thoughts—thy designs and counsels, from which, by which, and in reference to which, they have been formed; are very deep—so profound as not to be fathomed by the comprehension of man.

Verse 6. A brutish man knoweth not] The human hog—the stupid bear—the boor; the man who is all flesh; in whom spirit or intellect neither seems to work nor exist.

Neither doth a fool understand this] Kesil, the fool, is different from baar, the brutish man; the latter has mind, but it is buried in flesh; the former has no mind, and his stupidity is unavoidable.

3 Upon an instrument of ten strings, and upon the psaltery; upon the harp with a solemn sound.

4 For thou, LORD, hast made me glad through thy work: I will triumph in the works of thy hands.

5 O LORD, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep.

^a Heb. Higgayon. Ps. lx. 16.—^b Ps. xl. 5. cxxxix. 17.—^c Isa. xxviii. 29. Rom. xi. 33, 34.

Verse 7. When the wicked spring as the grass] The favour of God towards him is not to be known by outward prosperity; nor is his disapprobation to be known by the adverse circumstances in which any person may be found.

Verse 8. High for evermore] They are brought down and destroyed; but the Lord is exalted eternally, both for his judgments and his mercies.

Verse 10. Like the horn of an unicorn] The rhinoceros seems to be the real monoceros of the Scriptures.

I shall be anointed with fresh oil] Perhaps the allusion is here not to any sacramental anointing, but to such anointings as were frequent among the Asiatics, especially after bathing, for the purpose of health and activity.

Verse 11. Mine eye also shall see—and mine ears shall hear] Even in my own times my enemies shall be destroyed; and of this destruction I shall be either an eye-witness or have authentic information.

Verse 12. The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree] Very different from the wicked, ver. 7, who are likened to grass. These shall have a short duration; but those shall have a long and useful life. They are compared also to the cedar of Lebanon, an incorruptible wood, and extremely long-lived.

Verse 13. Those that be planted in the house of the Lord] As these trees flourish in their respective soils and climates, so shall the righteous in the ordinances of God. There is no allusion to either palm-trees or cedars, planted near the tabernacle or temple.

Verse 14. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age] They shall continue to grow in grace, and be fruitful to the end of their lives. It is a rare case to find a man in old age full of faith, love, and spiritual activity.

PSALM XCIV:

6 * A brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool understand this.

7 When ^b the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed for ever:

8 ^c But thou, LORD, art most high for evermore.

9 For, lo, thine enemies, O LORD, for lo, thine enemies shall perish; all the workers of iniquity shall ^d be scattered.

10 But * my horn shalt thou exalt like the horn of an unicorn: I shall be ^e anointed with fresh oil.

* Ps. lxxiii. 22. xclv. 8.—^b Job xii. 6. xxi. 7. Ps. xxxvii. 1, 2, 35, 38. Jer. xii. 1, 2. Mal. iii. 15.—^c Ps. lvi. 2. lxxxiii. 18.—^d Ps. lxxviii. 1. lxxxix. 10.—^e Ps. lxxxix. 17, 24.—^f Ps. xxiii. 5.—

Verse 15. To shew that the Lord is upright] Such persons show how faithful God is to his promises, how true to his word, how kind to them who trust in him. He is the Rock, the Fountain, whence all good comes.

11 * Mine eye also shall see my desire on mine enemies, and mine ears shall hear my desire of the wicked that rise up against me.

12 The ^b righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree: he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon.

13 Those that be planted in the house of the LORD shall flourish ⁱ in the courts of our God.

14 They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and ^j flourishing;

15 To shew that the LORD is upright: * he is my rock, and ^k there is no unrighteousness in him.

^g Ps. lrv. 7. lix. 10. cxii. 8.—^h Ps. lli. 8. Isa. lxxv. 22. Hos. xiv. 5, 6.—ⁱ Ps. c. 4. cxlxxv. 2.—^j Heb. green.—^k Deut. xxxii. 4.—^l Rom. ix. 14.

There is no unrighteousness in him.] He does nothing evil, nothing unwise, nothing unkind. He is both just and merciful.

PSALM XCIII.

The universal government of God, 1, 2; the opposition to that government, 3, 4; the truth of God's testimonies, 5.

THE * LORD reigneth, ^b he is clothed with majesty; the LORD is clothed with strength, ^c wherewith he hath girded himself: ^d the world also is established, that it cannot be moved.

2 * Thy throne is established ^e of old: thou art from everlasting.

* Ps. xvi. 10. xvii. 1. xci. 1. Isa. lli. 7. Rev. xix. 6.—^b Ps. clv. 1.—^c Ps. lxxv. 6.—^d Ps. xcvi. 10.—^e Ps. xlv. 6. Prov. viii. 22,

This Psalm was probably written at the close of the captivity by the Levites, descendants of Moses.

Verse 1. The Lord reigneth] He continues to govern every thing he has created; and he is every way qualified to govern all things, for he is clothed with majesty and with strength—dominion is his, and he has supreme power to exercise it; and he has so established the world that nothing can be driven out of order; all is ruled by him.

He hath girded himself] The girding with strength refers to the girding in order to strengthen the loins, arms, knees, &c.

Verse 2. Thy throne is established of old] There never was a time in which God did not reign, in which he was not a supreme and absolute Monarch; for he is from everlasting.

3 The floods have lifted up, O LORD, the floods have lifted up their voice; the floods lift up their waves.

4 * The LORD on high is mightier than the noise of many waters, yea, than the mighty waves of the sea.

5 Thy testimonies are very sure: holiness becometh thine house, O LORD, ^k for ever.

&c.—^f Heb. from them.—^g Ps. lxxv. 7. lxxxix. 9.—^h Heb. to length of days.

Verse 3. The floods have lifted up] Multitudes of people have confederated against thy people; and troop succeeds troop as the waves of the sea succeed each other.

Verse 4. The Lord—is mightier than the noise of many waters] Greater in strength than all the peoples and nations that can rise up against him.

Mighty waves of the sea.] Even the most powerful empires can prevail nothing against him; therefore those who trust in him have nothing to fear.

Verse 5. Thy testimonies are very sure] Thou wilt as surely fulfil thy word as thou wilt keep possession of thy throne.

Holiness becometh thine house] Thy nature is holy, all thy works are holy, and thy word is holy; therefore, thy house—thy church, should be holy.

PSALM XCIV

An appeal to God against oppressors, 1-7. Expostulations with the workers of iniquity, 8-11. God's merciful dealings with his followers, 12-15; and their confidence in him, 16-19. The punishment of the wicked foretold, 20-23.

O LORD ^aGod, ^bto whom vengeance belongeth; O God, to whom vengeance belongeth, ^cshew thyself.

2 ^aLift up thyself, thou ^bJudge of the earth: render a reward to the proud.

3 LORD, ^ahow long shall the wicked, how long shall the wicked triumph?

4 How long shall they ^autter and speak hard things? and all ^bthe workers of iniquity boast themselves?

5 They break in pieces thy people, O LORD, and afflict thine heritage.

6 They slay the widow and the stranger, and murder the fatherless.

7 ^aYet they say, The LORD shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it.

8 ^aUnderstand, ye brutish among the people: and ye fools, when will ye be wise?

9 ^aHe that planted the ear, shall he not hear? he that formed the eye, shall he not see?

10 He that chastiseth the heathen, shall not he correct? he that ^ateacheth man knowledge, shall not he know?

11 ^aThe LORD knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity.

12 ^aBlessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O LORD, and teachest him out of thy law;

This Psalm is probably a prayer of the captives in Babylon for deliverance, and was written by the descendants of Moses, to whom some of the preceding psalms have been attributed. It contains a description of an iniquitous and oppressive government, such as that under which the Israelites lived in Babylon.

Verse 1. O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth] God is the author of retributive justice, as well as of mercy. This retributive justice is what we often term vengeance, but perhaps improperly; for vengeance with us signifies an excitement of angry passions, in order to gratify a vindictive spirit; whereas what is here referred to is that simple act of justice which gives to all their due.

Verse 2. Lift up thyself] Exert thy power. Render a reward to the proud.] To the Babylonians, who oppress and insult us.

Verse 3. How long shall the wicked triumph?] Their prosperity only shows us of how little worth riches are in the sight of God, when he bestows them on the most contemptible of mortals.

Verse 4. They utter and speak] Their hearts get full of pride and insolence; and then, from the abundance of such vile hearts, the mouth speaks.

Verse 5. They break in pieces thy people] This was true of the Babylonians. Nebuchadnezzar slew many; carried the rest into captivity; ruined Jerusalem; overturned the temple; sacked, pillaged, and destroyed all the country.

Verse 6. They slay the widow] The widow, the orphan, and the stranger, persons in the most desolate condition of life, were not distinguished from others by Nebuchadnezzar's ruthless sword.

Verse 7. The Lord shall not see] This was either the language of infidelity or insult.

Verse 9. He that planted the ear, shall he not hear?] This is allowed to be an unanswerable mode of argumentation. Whatever is found of excellence in the creature, must be derived from the Creator, and exist in him in the plenitude of infinite excellence.

Verse 10. He that chastiseth the heathen, shall not he correct?] You, who are heathens, and heathens of the most abandoned kind.

He that teacheth man knowledge] We here supply, shall not he know? But this is not acknowledged by the original, nor by any of the Versions. Indeed it is not necessary; for either the words contain a simple proposition, "It is he who 13 That thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity, until the pit be digged for the wicked.

14 ^aFor the LORD will not cast off his people, neither will he forsake his inheritance.

15 But judgment shall return unto righteousness: and all the upright in heart ^bshall follow it.

16 Who will rise up for me against the evildoers? or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity?

17 ^aUnless the LORD had been my help, my soul had ^balmost dwelt in silence.

18 When I said, ^aMy foot slippeth; thy mercy, O LORD, held me up.

19 In the multitude of my thoughts within me thy comforts delight my soul.

20 Shall ^athe throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which ^bframeth mischief by a law?

21 ^aThey gather themselves together against the soul of the righteous, and ^bcondemn the innocent blood.

22 But the LORD is ^amy defence: and my God is the rock of my refuge.

23 And ^bhe shall bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness; yea, the LORD our God shall cut them off.

teacheth man knowledge," or this clause should be read in connexion with ver. 11: "Jehovah, who teacheth man knowledge, knoweth the devices of man, that they are vanity."

Verse 12. Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest] Whom thou instructest; and teachest out of thy law.

Verse 13. That thou mayest give him rest] He whom God instructs is made wise unto salvation; and he who is thus taught has rest in his soul, and peace and confidence in adversity.

Verse 14. The Lord will not cast off his people] They are his inheritance, and he will again restore them to their own land.

Verse 15. But judgment shall return unto righteousness] If we read yosheb, shall sit, for yashub, shall return, we have the following sense: Until the just one shall sit in judgment, and after him all the upright in heart. Cyrus has the epithet tsedek, the just one, in different places in the prophet Isaiah. See Isa. xli. 2, 10, xlv. 8, li. 5.

Verse 16. Who will rise up for me] Who will come to our assistance against these wicked Babylonians?

Verse 17. Unless the Lord had been my help] Had not God in a strange manner supported us while under his chastising hand, we had been utterly cut off.

Verse 18. Thy mercy, O Lord, held me up.] It is a metaphor taken from any thing falling, that is propped, shored up, or buttressed. How often does the mercy of God thus prevent the ruin of weak believers, and of those who have been unfaithful!

Verse 19. In the multitude of my thoughts] Of my sorrows. Or, While I have been deeply meditating on thy wondrous grace and mercy, divine light has broken in upon my soul, and I have been filled with delight.

Verse 20. Shall the thrones of iniquity] No wicked king, judge, or magistrate shall ever stand in thy presence.

Verse 21. They gather themselves together] In every thing that is evil, they are in unity. The devil, his angels, and his children, all join and draw together when they have for their object the destruction of the works of the Lord.

This and the following verses have been applied to our Lord, and the treatment he met with, both from his own countrymen and from the Romans. All this had, in reference to him, a most literal fulfilment.

Verse 22. The rock of my refuge.] Alluding to those natural fortifications among rocks, which are frequent in the land of Judea.

PSALM XCVI.

Verse 23. Shall cut them off] This is repeated, to show that the destruction of the Babylonians was fixed and indubitable: and in reference to the Jews, the persecutors and murderers of our Lord and his apostles, it was not less so.

PSALM XCV.

An invitation to praise God, 1, 2. The reason on which this is founded, the majesty and dominion of God, 3-5. An invitation to pray to God, 6. And the reasons on which that is founded, 7. Exhortation not to act as their fathers had done, who rebelled against God, and were cast out of his favour, 8-11.

O COME, let us sing unto the LORD: * let us make a joyful noise to ^b the rock of our salvation.

2 Let us ^c come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.

3 ^d For the LORD is a great God, and a great King above all gods.

4 ^e In his hand are the deep places of the earth; ^f the strength of the hills is his also.

5 ^g The ^h sea is his, and he made it: and his hands formed the dry land.

6 O come, let us worship and bow down: let ⁱ us kneel before the LORD our Maker.

7 For he is our God; and ^j we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand. ^k To-day if ye will hear his voice,

8 Harden not your heart, ^l as in the ^m provocation, and as in the day of temptation in the wilderness;

9 When ⁿ your fathers tempted me, proved me, and ^o saw my work.

10 ^p Forty years long was I grieved with this generation, and said, It is a people that do err in their heart, and they have not known my ways:

The psalm is a solemn invitation to the people when assembled for public worship, to praise God from a sense of his great goodness; and to be attentive to the instructions they were about to receive from the reading and expounding of the law; and on these accounts it has been long used in the Christian church, at the commencement of public service, to prepare the people's minds to worship God in spirit and in truth.

Verse 1. O come, let us sing] Let us praise God, not only with the most joyful accents which can be uttered by the voice; but let us also praise him with hearts tuned to gratitude, from a full sense of the manifold benefits we have already received.

The rock of our salvation.] The strong Fortress in which we have always found safety, and the Source whence we have always derived help for our souls.

Verse 2. Let us come before his presence] Praise him for what he has already done, and confess your unworthiness of any of his blessings.

Verse 3. For the Lord is a great God] The Supreme Being has three names here: EL, JEROVAH, ELOHIM. The first implies his strength; the second, his being and essence; the third, his covenant relation to mankind. In public worship these are the views we should entertain of the Divine Being.

Verse 5. The sea is his] He is the absolute Master of universal nature.

Verse 6. O come, let us worship] Three distinct words are used here to express three different acts of adoration: 1. Let us worship, let us prostrate ourselves; the highest act of adoration by which the supremacy of God is acknowledged.

2. Let us bow down, let us crouch or cower down, as a dog in the presence of his master, which solicitously waits to receive his commands. 3. Let us kneel, let us put our knees to the ground, and thus put ourselves in the posture of those who supplicate.

Verse 7. For he is our God] Here is the reason for this service. He has condescended to enter into a covenant with us, and he has taken us for his own.

To-day if ye will hear his voice] To-day—you have no time to lose; to-morrow may be too late. This should commence the eighth verse, as it begins what is supposed to be the part of the priest or prophet who now exhorts the people.

Verse 9. When your fathers tempted me] Tried me by their insolence, unbelief, and blasphemy. They proved me—

y. but murmur, disbelieve, and rebel, from the time they began their journey at the Red Sea till they passed over Jordan, a period of forty years.

It is a people that do err in their heart] Or, These are a people whose idols are in their hearts. At any rate they had not God there.

They have not known my ways] The verb yada, to know is used here, as in many other parts of Scripture, to express approbation. They knew God's ways well enough; but they did not like them; and would not walk in them.

Therefore God determined that they should not enter into the rest which he had promised to them on condition that, if they were obedient, they should inherit the promised land.

PSALM XCVI.

All the inhabitants of the earth are invited to praise the Lord, 1, 3. His supreme majesty, 4-6. The tribes of Israel are invited to glorify him, 7-9; and to proclaim him among the heathen, 10. The heavens and the earth are commanded to rejoice in him, 11, 13.

O SING unto the LORD a new song: sing unto the LORD, all the earth.
 2 Sing unto the LORD, bless his name; shew forth his salvation from day to day.
 3 Declare his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people.
 4 For the LORD is great, and greatly to be praised: he is to be feared above all gods.
 5 For all the gods of the nations are idols: but the LORD made the heavens.
 6 Honour and majesty are before him: strength and beauty are in his sanctuary.
 7 Give unto the LORD, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the LORD glory and strength.
 8 Give unto the LORD the glory due unto his

We have seen in 1 Chron. xvi. 23-33 a psalm nearly like this, composed by David, on bringing the ark to Zion, from the house of Obed-edom. But the psalm as it stands in the Chronicles has thirty verses; and this is only a section of it, from the twenty-third to the thirty-third.

Verse 1. Sing unto the Lord a new song] A song of peculiar excellence. He has done extraordinary things for us, and we should celebrate in praise and thanksgiving.

Verse 2. Shew forth his salvation from day to day.] The original is very emphatic. "Preach the gospel of his salvation from day to day."

Verse 3. Declare his glory among the heathen] Declare, sapperu, detail, number out his glory, kebodo, his splendour and excellence.

His wonders among all people.] Declare also to the Jews his wonders, his miracles. Dwell on the works which he shall perform in Judea.

Verse 4. He is to be feared above all gods.] I think this verse should be read thus: "Jehovah is great, and greatly to be praised. Elohim is to be feared above all."

I doubt whether the word Elohim is ever, by fair construction, applied to false gods or idols. The contracted form in the following verses appears to have this meaning.

Verse 5. All the gods of the nations are idols] Elohey. All those reputed or worshipped as gods among the heathens are elilim, vanities, emptinesses, things of nought. Instead of being Elohim, they are elilim; they are not only not God, but they are nothing.

name: bring an offering, and come into his courts.
 9 O worship the LORD in the beauty of holiness: fear before him, all the earth.

10 Say among the heathen that the LORD reigneth: the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved: he shall judge the people righteously.

11 Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof.

12 Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein: then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice

13 Before the LORD: for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth.

Verse 6. Honour and majesty are before him] Does this refer to the cloud of his glory that preceded the ark in their journeying through the wilderness? The words strength and beauty, and glory and strength, ver. 7, are those by which the ark is described, Ps. lxxviii. 61.

Verse 7. Ye kindreds of the people] Ye families, all the tribes of Israel in your respective divisions.

Verse 8. Come into his courts.] Probably referring to the second temple. The reference must be either to the tabernacle or temple.

Verse 9. Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness] Behadrath kodesh, signifies holy ornaments, such as the high-priest wore in his ministrations. These were given him for glory and beauty; and the Psalmist calls on him to put on his sacerdotal garments, and perform his functions, and make intercession for the people.

Verse 10. The world also shall be established] The word tebel signifies the habitable globe, and may be a metonymy here, the container put for the contained. And many think that by it the church is intended; as the Lord, who is announced to the heathen as reigning, is understood to be Jesus Christ; and his judging among the people, his establishing the Holy Gospel among them, and governing the nations by its law.

Verse 11. Let the heavens rejoice] The publication of the gospel is here represented as a universal blessing; all things are called to rejoice at this glorious event.

PSALM XCVII.

The reign of Jehovah, its nature and blessedness, 1, 2. He is fearful to the wicked, 3-8. Idolaters shall be destroyed, 7. The blessedness of the righteous, 8-12.

THE LORD reigneth; let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of isles be glad thereof.
 2 Clouds and darkness are round about him: righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne.

3 A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about.

* Ps. xcvi. 10.—† Heb. many or great tees.—‡ Isa. lx. 9.—§ 1 Kings viii. 12. Ps. xviii. 11.

Who the author was is uncertain: it is much in the spirit of David's finest compositions; and yet many learned men suppose it was written to celebrate the Lord's power and goodness in the restoration of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity.

Verse 1. The Lord reigneth] JEHOVAH is infinite and eternal; is possessed of unlimited power and unerring wisdom; as he is the Maker, so he must be the Governor, of all things.

But this supreme King is not only called JEHOVAH, but also ADONAI, the Director and Judge. He directs human actions, by his word, Spirit, and providence. As Adonai or Director, he shows his creatures the difference between good and evil; and their duty to their God, their neighbours, and themselves; and he finally becomes the Judge of their actions. But as his law is holy, and his commandment holy, just, and good, and man is in a fallen, sinful state; hence he reveals himself as ELOHIM, God, entering into a gracious covenant with mankind, to enlighten his darkness, and help his infirmities; that he may see what is just, and be able to do it. But as this will not cancel the sins already committed, hence the necessity of a Saviour, an atonement; and hence the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of our Lord Jesus. This is the provision made by the great God for the more effectual administration of his kingdom upon earth.

Let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of isles be glad]

4 ^a His lightnings enlightened the world: the earth saw, and trembled.

5 ^b The hills melted like wax at the presence of the LORD, at the presence of the LORD of the whole earth.

6 ^c The heavens declare his righteousness, and all the people see his glory.

7 ^d Confounded be all they that serve graven images, that boast themselves of idols: ^e worship him, all ye gods.

8 Zion heard, and was glad; and the daughters

Providence is not only general, taking in the earth and its inhabitants, en masse; giving and establishing laus by which all things shall be governed; but it is also particular; it takes in the multitudes of the isles, as well as the vast continents; the different species, as well as the genera; the individual, as well as the family. Now, as God is an infinitely wise and good Being, and governs the world in wisdom and goodness, the earth may well rejoice, and the multitude of the isles be glad.

Verse 2. Clouds and darkness are round about him] God is infinite; therefore, the reasons of his government cannot be comprehended by the feeble, limited powers of man. There must be clouds and darkness—an impenetrable obscurity, round about him; and we can no more comprehend him in the eternity that passed before time commenced, than we can in the eternity that is to come, when time shall be no more.

Righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne.] Righteousness, tsedek, the principle that acts according to justice and equity; that gives to all their due, and ever holds in all things an even balance. And judgment, mishpat, the principle that discerns, orders, directs, and determines everything according to truth and justice; these form the habitation of his throne; that is, his government and management of the world are according to these; and though we cannot see the springs, the secret counsels, and the times, which this omniscient and almighty FATHER must ever have in his own power, yet we may rest assured that all his administration is wise, just, holy, good, and kind.

Verse 3. A fire goeth before him] Literally, this may refer to the electric fluid, or to manifestations of the divine displeasure, in which, by means of ethereal fire, God consumed his enemies. But fire is generally represented as an accompaniment of the appearances of the Supreme Being. Exod. xix. 16-18; Daniel, chap. vii. 9, 10; 2 Thess. i. 8; 2 Peter, iii. 7, 10, 11.

Burneth up his enemies round about.] The fire is his pioneer which destroys all the hindrances in his way, and makes him a plain passage.

Verse 4. His lightnings enlightened the world] A majestic description of the coming of the Lord, to confound his enemies and succor his followers.

The earth saw, and trembled.] The earth is represented as a sentient being. It saw the terrible majesty of God; and trembled through terror, fearing it should be destroyed on account of the wickedness of its inhabitants.

Verse 5. The hills melted like wax] The fire of God seized on and liquefied them, so that they no longer opposed his march; and the mountains before him became a plain.

The Lord of the whole earth.] The Director, Stay, and Support of the whole earth.

of Judah rejoiced because of thy judgments, O LORD.

9 For thou, LORD, art ^a high above all the earth: ^b thou art exalted far above all gods.

10 Ye that love the LORD, ^c hate evil: ^d he preserveth the souls of his saints; ^e he delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked.

11 ^f Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart.

Verse 6. The heavens declare his righteousness] They also, in this poetic description, become intelligent beings, and proclaim the majesty and the mercy of the Most High.

And all the people see his glory.] Whatsoever God has made proclaims his eternal power and godhead; and who, from a contemplation of the work of his hands, can be ignorant of his being and providence?

Verse 7. Confounded be all they] They shall be confounded that boast themselves in idols. There is a remarkable play on the letters here, hammithalelim, who move like madmen; referring to the violent gestures practised in idolatrous rites.

Of idols] Baelilim, in vanities, emptinesses; who take a mad and painful pleasure in ridiculous and unprofitable ceremonies of religion.

Worship him] Who? JESUS: so says the apostle, Heb. i. 6.

All ye gods.] "Let all the angels of God worship him!" and the words are most certainly applied to the Saviour of the world by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews; see the note there.

Verse 8. Zion heard, and was glad] All the land of Israel, long desolated, heard of the judgments which God had shown among the enemies of his people.

And the daughters of Judah] Zion, as the mother, and all the villages in the country as her daughters, rejoice in the deliverance of God's people.

Verse 9. For thou, Lord, art high] Thou art infinitely exalted above men and angels.

Verse 10. Ye that love the Lord, hate evil] Because it is inconsistent with his love to you, as well as your love to him.

He preserveth the souls of his saints] The saints, chasidim, his merciful people: their souls—lives, are precious in his sight. He preserves them; keeps them from every evil, and every enemy.

Out of the hand of the wicked.] From his power and influence.

Verse 11. Light is sown for the righteous] The divine light in the soul of man is a seed which takes root, and springs up and increases, thirty, sixty, and an hundred fold. Gladness is also a seed; it is sown, and, if carefully improved and cultivated, will also multiply itself into thousands.

The words may also signify that, however distressed or persecuted the righteous, and the upright may be, it shall not be always so.

Verse 12. Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous] It is your privilege to be happy. Rejoice: but let it be in the Lord.

At the remembrance of his holiness.] But why should you give thanks at the remembrance that God is holy? Because he has said, Be ye holy; for I am holy; and in holiness alone true happiness is to be found.

God is celebrated for his wondrous works, 1, 2; for the exact fulfilment of his gracious promises, 3. The manner in which he is to be praised, 4-6. Inanimate creation called to bear a part in this concert, 7, 8. The justice of his judgments, 9.

This Psalm in its subject is very like the ninety-sixth. It was probably written to celebrate the deliverance from the Babylonish captivity; but is to be understood prophetically of the redemption of the world by Jesus Christ.

Verse 1. A new song] A song of excellence. Give him the highest praise.

Hath done marvellous things] "Miracles;" the same word as in Ps. xvi. 3, where we translate it wonders.

Hath gotten him the victory.] "Hath made salvation to himself."

Verse 2. Made known his salvation] He has delivered his people in such a way as to show that it was supernatural and that their confidence in the unseen God was not in vain.

Verse 3. He hath remembered his mercy] His gracious promises to their forefathers.

And his truth] Faithfully accomplishing what he had promised. All this was fulfilled under the gospel.

Verse 5. With—the voice of a psalm.] I think zimrah, which we translate psalm, means either a musical instrument, or a species of ode modulated by different voices.

Verse 6. With trumpets] Some kind of tubular instruments, earth: make a loud noise, and rejoice, and sing praise.

5 Sing unto the LORD with the harp; with the harp, and the voice of a psalm.

6 ^a With trumpets, and sound of cornet, make a joyful noise before the LORD the King.

of the form and management of which we know nothing. And sound of cornet] The word commonly used for what we call trumpet.

Verse 7. Let the sea roar] These are either fine poetic images; or, if we take them as referring to the promulgation of the gospel, by the sea all maritime countries, and commercial nations may be intended.

Verse 8. Let the floods clap their hands] Properly the rivers—possibly meaning immense continents, where only large rivers are found; thus including inland people, as well as maritime nations, and those on the sea-coasts generally. The gospel shall be preached in the most secluded nations of the world.

Let the hills be joyful] All the inhabitants of rocky and mountainous countries.

Verse 9. For he cometh to judge the earth] He comes to make known his salvation, and show his merciful designs to all the children of men.

With righteousness shall he judge the world] His word shall not be confined; all shall know him, from the least to the greatest: he shall show that he is loving to every man, and hateth nothing that he hath made.

PSALM XCIX.

The empire of God in the world and the church, 1, 2. He ought to be praised, 3. Justice and judgment are his chief glory, 4. He should be worshipped as among the saints of old, whom he graciously answered and saved, 5-8. Exalt him, because he is holy, 9.

THE ^a LORD reigneth; let the people tremble: ^b he sitteth between the cherubims; let the earth ^c be moved.

2 The LORD is great in Zion; and he is ^a high above all the people.

* Ps. xciii. 1.—Exod. xxv. 22. Ps. xviii. 10. lxxx. 1.—Heb. stagger.

Calmet thinks that this psalm was sung at the dedication of the city, or of the second temple, after the return from the Babylonish captivity.

Verse 1. Let the people tremble] He will establish his kingdom in spite of his enemies; let those who oppose him tremble for the consequences.

He sitteth between the cherubims] Sitting between the cherubims implies God's graciousness and mercy.

Verse 2. The Lord is great in Zion] It is among his own worshippers that he has manifested his power and glory in an especial manner.

3 Let them praise ^a thy great and terrible name; for it is holy.

4 ^a The king's strength also loveth judgment; thou dost establish equity, thou executest judgment and righteousness in Jacob.

* Ps. xcvi. 9.—Deut. xxviii. 68. Rev. xv. 4.—Job xxxvi. 5, 6, 7.

Verse 3. Let them praise thy great and terrible name] Let them confess thee to be great and terrible: let them tremble before thee.

For it is holy.] His holiness—the immaculate purity of his nature, was the reason why he should be exalted, praised, and worshipped.

Verse 4. The king's strength] If this psalm were written by David, he must mean by it that he was God's vicegerent or deputy, and that, even as king, God was his strength, and the gatherer according to which equity, judgment, and righteousness should be executed in Jacob.

5 ^a Exalt ye the LORD our God, and worship at ^b his footstool; for ^c he ^d is holy.

Verse 5. Worship at his footstool] Probably meaning the ark on which the divine glory was manifested. The Israelites, when they worshipped, turned their faces toward the ark, because that was the place where was the symbol of the Divine Presence.

For he is holy.] The burden chanted by the chorus.

Verse 6. Moses and Aaron] Moses was properly the priest of the Hebrews before Aaron and his family were appointed to that office.

Verse 7. He spake unto them in the cloudy pillar] That is, he directed all their operations, marchings, and encampments by this cloudy pillar.

They kept his testimonies] Do ye the same, and God will be your portion as he was theirs.

Verse 8. Thou—forgavest them] When the people had sinned, and wrath was about to descend on them, Moses and Aaron interceded for them, and they were not destroyed.

Tookest vengeance of their inventions.] God spared them, but showed his displeasure at their misdoings. He chastised, but did not consume them.

Verse 9. Worship at his holy hill] Worship him publicly in the temple.

For the Lord our God is holy.] The words of the chorus; as in the third and fifth verses.

PSALM C.

All nations are exhorted to praise the Lord, 1, 2; to acknowledge him to be the Sovereign Good and their Creator, and that they are his people and the flock of his pasture, 3; to worship him publicly, and be grateful for his mercies, 4. The reasons on which this is founded; his own goodness, his everlasting mercy, and his ever-during truth, 5.

^a A Psalm of ^b Praise.

MAKE ^c a joyful noise unto the LORD, ^d all ye lands.

2 Serve the LORD with gladness: come before his presence with singing.

3 Know ye that the LORD he is God; ^e it is he that hath made us, ^f and not we ourselves; ^g we

It is likely that this Psalm was composed after the captivity, as a form of thanksgiving to God for that great deliverance, as well as an inducement to the people to consecrate themselves to him, and to be exact in the performance of the acts of public worship.

Verse 1. All ye lands.] Not only Jews, but Gentiles, for the Lord bestows his benefits on all with a liberal hand.

Verse 2. Serve the Lord with gladness] The religion of the true God is intended to remove human misery, and to make mankind happy.

Verse 3. Know ye that the Lord he is God] Acknowledge in every possible way, both in public and private, that Jehovah, the uncreated, self-existent, and eternal Being, is Elohim, the God who is in covenant with man, to instruct, redeem, love, and make him finally happy.

It is he that hath made us] He is our Creator, and has consequently the only right in and over us.

And not we ourselves] Were there ever a people on earth, however grossly heathenish, that did believe, or could believe, that they had made themselves? In twenty-six of are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.

4 ^a Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him, and bless his name.

5 For the LORD is good; ^b his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth ^c to all generations.

lxvi. 13. cxvi. 17, 18, 19.—^a Ps. cxxxvi. 1, &c.—^b Heb. to generation and generation. Ps. lxxxix. 1.

Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. we have "and HIS we are;" lo, the pronoun, being put for lo, the negative particle. Every person must see, from the nature of the subject, that this is the genuine reading. God made us; therefore we are HIS: we are his people, and should acknowledge him for our God; we are the sheep of his pasture, and should devote the lives to him constantly which he continually supports.

Verse 4. Enter into his gates with thanksgiving] Publicly worship God; and when ye come to the house of prayer, be thankful that you have such a privilege. The word which we render with thanksgiving, is properly with the confession-offering or sacrifice.

Verse 5. For the Lord is good] GOODNESS, the perfect, eternal, opposition to all badness and evil, is essential to God. Mercy and compassion are modifications of his goodness; and as his nature is eternal, so his mercy, springing from his goodness, must be everlasting. And as TRUTH is an essential characteristic of an infinitely intelligent and perfect nature: therefore God's truth must endure from generation to generation.

PSALMS.

PSALM CI.

The subject proposed, mercy and judgment, 1. The Psalmist's resolution in respect to his private conduct, 2. He will put away evil, inward and outward, 3. No evil person shall stand in his presence, 4; nor any slanderer of his neighbour, 5. He will encourage the faithful and upright, 6; but the deceitful, the liars, and the profligate, he will cast out of the city of God, 7, 8.

A Psalm of David.

I WILL sing of mercy and judgment : unto thee, O LORD, will I sing.

2 I will ^b behave myself wisely in a perfect way. O when wilt thou come unto me?

I will ^c walk within my house with a perfect heart.

3 I will set no ^d wicked thing before mine eyes : I hate the work of them ^f that turn aside ; it shall not cleave to me.

4 A froward heart shall depart from me : I will not ^g know a wicked person.

5 Whoso privily slandereth his neighbour, him

^a Ps. lxxix. 1.—^b 1 Sam. xviii. 14.—^c 1 Kings ix. 4. xi. 4.—^d Heb. thing of Baial.—^e Ps. xvii. 10.—^f Josh. xxiii. 6. 1 Sam. xii. 2, 21. Ps. xl. 4. cxv. 5.—^g Matt. vii. 23. 2 Tim. ii. 19.—^h Ps. xviii. 27.

The Hebrew and all the Versions attribute this psalm to David.

Verse 1. I will sing of mercy and judgment] Adverse and prosperous providences have been of the utmost use to my soul; therefore, I will thank God for both. Or, as he was probably now called to the government of all the tribes, he might make a resolution that he would show chesed, incessant benevolence, to the upright; and mishpat, the execution of judgment, to the wicked; and would make the conduct of God the model of his own.

Verse 2. I will behave myself wisely] God's law prescribes a perfect way of life; in this perfect way I have professed to walk, and I must act wisely in order to walk in it.

When wilt thou come unto me?] For without thee I can do nothing.

I will walk within my house] It is easier for most men to walk with a perfect heart in the church, or even in the world, than in their own families. How many are as meek as lambs among others, when at home they are wasps or tigers!

The original is very emphatic: I "will set myself to walk," I will make it a determined point thus to walk.

Verse 3. I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes] I will undertake no unjust wars; will enter into no sinful alliances; will not oppress my subjects by excessive taxation, to support extravagance in my court.

Them that turn aside] I shall particularly abominate the conduct of those who apostatize from the true religion, and those who deny its divine authority shall never be put in a place of political trust or confidence by me.

Verse 4. A froward heart] Rash and headstrong men shall not be employed by me.

will I cut off: ^a him that hath an high look and a proud heart will not I suffer.

6 Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh ^b in a perfect way, he shall serve me.

7 He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house: he that telleth lies ^c shall not tarry in my sight.

8 I will ^d early destroy all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers ^e from the city of the LORD.

Prov. vi. 17.—^a Or, perfect in the way. Ps. cxix. 1.—^b Heb. shall not be established.—^c Ps. lxxv. 10. Jer. xxi. 12.—^d Ps. xlviii. 2, 8.

I will not know a wicked person.] I will give no countenance to sinners of any kind; and whatever is evil shall be an object of my abhorrence.

Verse 5. Whoso privily slandereth his neighbour] All flatterers and time-servers, and those who by insinuations and false accusations endeavour to supplant the upright, that they may obtain their offices for themselves or their dependants, will I consider as enemies to the state, I will abominate, and expel them from my court.

An high look and a proud heart] One who is seeking preferment; who sticks at nothing to gain it; and one who behaves himself haughtily and insolently in his office.

Will not I suffer.] I cannot away with. These persons especially will I drive from my presence, and from all state employments.

Verse 6. Mine eyes] My approbation.

Upon the faithful] The humble, upright followers of God.

That they may dwell with me] Be my confidants and privy-counsellors.

He that walketh in a perfect way] He that is truly religious.

He shall serve me.] Shall be my prime minister, and the chief officer in my army, and over my finances.

Verse 7. He that worketh deceit—that telleth lies] I will expel from my court all sycophants and flatterers.

Verse 8. I will early destroy] I will purify my court, purge Jerusalem, and cleanse the whole land of every abomination and abominable person; so that the city of my God, where holiness alone should dwell, shall indeed become the Holy City; that the state may be made prosperous, and the people happy.

PSALM CII.

The complaint and miserable state of the poor captives, 1-11; the expectation of deliverance, 12-14; the conversion of the heathen, 15-18; the termination of the captivity, 19-22; the great frailty of man, 23, 24; the unchangeableness of God, 25-27; the permanence of the church, 28.

A Prayer * of the afflicted, b when he is overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint before the LORD.

HEAR my prayer, O LORD, and let my cry c come unto thee.

2 d Hide not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble ; e incline thine ear unto me : in the day when I call answer me speedily.

3 f For my days are consumed g like smoke, and h my bones are burned as an hearth.

4 My heart is smitten, and i withered like grass ; so that I forget to eat my bread.

5 By reason of the voice of my groaning j my bones cleave to my k skin.

6 l I am like m a pelican of the wilderness : I am like an owl of the desert.

7 n watch, and am as a sparrow o alone upon the house-top.

8 Mine enemies reproach me all the day ; and they that are p mad against me are q sworn against me.

9 For I have eaten ashes like bread, and r mingled my drink with weeping,

10 Because of thine indignation and thy wrath : for s thou hast lifted me up, and cast me down.

11 t My days are like a shadow that declineth ; and u I am withered like grass.

12 But v thou, O LORD, shalt endure for ever ;

There seems to be little doubt that this is the prayer of the captives in Babylon, when, towards the end of the captivity, they were almost worn out with oppression, cruelty, and distress.

Verse 1. Hear my prayer] The chief parts of the psalm answer well to the title : it is the language of the deepest distress, and well directed to Him from whom alone help can come.

Verse 3. My days are consumed like smoke] He represents himself (for the Psalmist speaks in the name of the people) under the notion of a pile of combustible matter, placed upon a fire, which soon consumes it ; part flying away in smoke, and the residue lying on the hearth in the form of charred coal and ashes.

Verse 4. My heart is smitten and withered like grass] The metaphor here is taken from grass cut down in the meadow. It is first smitten with the scythe, and then withered by the sun.

Verse 6. I am like a pelican of the wilderness] It may be the pelican, or the bittern.

Verse 7. As a sparrow alone] Tspoor, seems to be often used for any small bird, such as the swallow, sparrow, or the like.

Verse 8. They that are mad against me are sworn against me] The Chaldeans are determined to destroy us ; and they have bound themselves by oath to do it.

Verse 9. I have eaten ashes like bread] Fearful of what they might do, we all humbled ourselves before thee, and sought thy protection ; well knowing that, unless we were supernaturally assisted, we must all have perished ; our enemies having sworn our destruction.

Verse 10. For thou hast lifted me up, and cast me down] Thou hast lifted me on high, that thou mightest dash me down with the greater force. We were exalted in thy favour beyond any people, and now thou hast made us the lowest and most object of the children of men.

Verse 11. My days are like a shadow that declineth] Or rather, My days decline like the shadow. I have passed my meridian, and the sun of my prosperity is about to set for ever.

Verse 12. But thou, O Lord, shalt endure for ever] Our life is a shadow ; we can scarcely be called beings when compared with thee, for thou art eternal.

and w thy remembrance unto all generations.
13 Thou shalt arise, and x have mercy upon Zion : for the time to favour her, yea, the z set time, is come.

14 For thy servants take pleasure in a her stones, and favour the dust thereof.

15 So the heathen shall aa fear the name of the LORD, and all the kings of the earth thy glory.

16 When the LORD shall build up Zion, bb he shall appear in his glory.

17 cc He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer.

18 This shall be dd written for the generation to come : and ee the people which shall be created shall praise the LORD.

19 For he hath ff looked down from the height of his sanctuary ; from heaven did the LORD behold the earth ;

20 gg To hear the groaning of the prisoner ; to loose hh those that are appointed to death ;

21 To ii declare the name of the LORD in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem ;

22 When the people are gathered together, and the kingdoms, to serve the LORD.

23 He jj weakened my strength in the way ; he kk shortened my days.

Verse 13. Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion] The set time—the seventy years predicted by Jeremiah, was ended ; and God gave him to see that he was ever mindful of his promises.

Verse 14. Thy servants take pleasure in her stones] Though Jerusalem was at this time in a heap of ruins, yet even her rubbish was sacred in the eyes of the pious, for this had been the city of the great King.

Verse 15. So the heathen shall fear the name of the Lord] After the edict of Cyrus to restore and rebuild Jerusalem, the name of the true God was more generally known among the heathen.

Verse 16. When the Lord shall build up Zion] It is such a difficult thing, that when God does it, he must manifest his power and glory in a most extraordinary manner.

Verse 17. The prayer of the destitute] Of him who is laid in utter ruin, who is entirely wasted.

Verse 18. The people which shall be created] How often the conversion of the soul to God is represented as a new creation, no reader of the New Testament need be told.

Verse 19. For he hath looked down] This, with the three following verses, seems to me to contain a glorious prophecy of the incarnation of Christ, and the gathering in of the Jews and the Gentiles to him.

Verse 20. To hear the groaning] By sin, all the inhabitants of the earth are miserable. They have broken the divine laws, are under the arrest of judgment, and all cast into prison. They have been tried, found guilty, and appointed to die ; they groan under their chains, are alarmed at the prospect of death, and implore mercy.

Verse 21. To declare the name of the Lord] To publish that Messenger of the Covenant in whom the name of the Lord is, that Messiah in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwelt ; and to commence at Jerusalem, that the first offers of mercy might be made to the Jews, from whom the word of reconciliation was to go out to all the ends of the earth.

Verse 22. When the people are gathered together] When all the Gentiles are enlightened, and the kings of the earth brought to pay homage to the King of kings.

Verse 23. He weakened my strength in the way] There is now no hope of our restoration by any efforts of our own.

Verse 24. I said, O my God] This and the following verses seem to be the form of prayer which the captives used previously to their deliverance.

24 * I said, O my God, take me not away in the midst of my days : ^bthy years are throughout all generations.

25 * Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth : and the heavens are the work of thy hands.

26 ^d They shall perish, but * thou shalt ^e endure : yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment ; as a Verse 25. Of old hast thou laid the foundation] Of old, lephanim, before there were any faces, or appearances, thou didst lay the foundations of the earth. It was created by thee ; it did not grow by accretion or aggregation from a pre-existent nucleus.

Verse 26. They shall perish] Nothing can be eternal but thyself. Even that which thou hast created, because not necessarily eternal, must be perishable ; necessary duration belongs to God only ; and it is by his will and energy alone that universal nature is preserved in existence, and preserved from running into speedy disorder, decay, and ruin.

Yea, all of them shall wax old] Every thing must deteriorate, unless preserved by thy renewing and invigorating energy. Even the productions of the earth wear out or deteriorate. Plant the same seed or grain for several years consecutively, and it degenerates so as at last not to be worth the labour of tillage, however expensively the soil may be manured in which it is planted.

Verse 27. But thou art the same] Thou art HE, that is, THE ETERNAL ; and, consequently, he who only has immortality.

Thy years shall have no end.] "They shall not be completed." What is necessarily eternal is unchangeable and imperishable ; all created beings are perishable and mutable, because not eternal. God alone is eternal ; therefore God alone is imperishable and immutable.

Verse 28. The children of thy servants shall continue] Thy church shall be permanent, because founded on thee ; it shall live throughout all the revolutions of time. Nothing can be permanent but by God's supporting and renewing influence.

PSALM CIII.

God is praised for his benefits to his people, 1, 2 ; he forgives their iniquities, and heals their diseases, 3 ; redeems their lives, crowns them with loving-kindness, 4 ; satisfies them with good things, renews their youth, 5 ; he helps the oppressed, makes his ways known, is merciful and gracious, and keeps not his anger for ever, 6-9 ; his forbearance, and pardoning mercy, 10-12 ; he is a tender and considerate Father, 13, 14 ; the frail state of man, 15, 16 ; God's everlasting mercy, and universal dominion, 17-19 ; all his angels, his hosts, and his works, are invited to praise him, 20-22.

A Psalm of David.

BLESS * the LORD, O my soul : and all that is within me, bless his holy name.

2 Bless the LORD, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits :

3 ^b Who forgiveth all thine iniquities ; who ^c healeth all thy diseases ;

4 Who ^d redeemeth thy life from destruction : * who crowneth thee with lovingkindness and tender mercies ;

The inscription in the Hebrew, and in all the Versions, gives this psalm to David ; and yet many of the ancients believed it to refer to the times of the captivity, or rather to its conclusion, in which the redeemed Jews give thanks to God for their restoration.

Verse 1. Bless the Lord] Under such a weight of obligation the lips can do little ; the soul and all its powers must be engaged.

Verse 2. Forget not all his benefits] Call them into recollection ; particularize the chief of them ; and here record them for an everlasting memorial.

Verse 4. Who redeemeth] Kaggoel, properly, redemption of life by the binsman ; possibly looking forward, in the spirit of prophecy, to him who became partaker of our flesh and blood, that he might have the right to redeem our souls from death by dying in our stead.

5 Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things ; so that ^f thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.

6 * The LORD executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed.

7 ^b He made known his ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel.

8 ^c The LORD is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and ^d plenteous in mercy.

9 * He will not always chide : neither will he keep his anger for ever.

Verse 5. Who satisfieth thy mouth] For continual communications of spiritual and temporal good ; so that the vigour of his mind was constantly supported and increased.

Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.] I believe the Psalmist refers to the moulting of birds, which, in most, takes place annually, in which they cast their old feathers and get a new plumage. To express this, he might as well have chosen any bird, as this is common to all the feathered race : but he chooses the king of the birds, because of his bulk, his strength, and vivacity ; and perhaps his long life.

Verse 6. The Lord executeth] "He is slow to anger ;" but he will punish. "He is plenteous in mercy," and he will save. The persevering sinner shall be destroyed ; the humble penitent shall be saved.

Verse 7. He made known his ways unto Moses] His wonderful acts in behalf of the children of Israel are so many

PSALM CIV.

10 * He hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities.

11 ^b For ^c as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him.

12 As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he ^d removed our transgressions from us.

13 * Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him.

14 For he knoweth our frame; ^e he remembereth that we are dust.

15 As for man, ^f his days are as grass: ^g as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth.

proofs of his mercy, power, and goodness; and so many reasons why we should now trust in him.

Verse 9. He will not always chide] He will not contend with us continually.

Verse 10. He hath not dealt with us after our sins] He has never apportioned our punishment to our sins, nor has he regulated the exercise of his mercy by our merits.

Verse 11. For as the heaven is high above the earth] Great and provoking as our crimes may have been, yet his mercies have, in their magnitude and number, surpassed these.

Verse 12. As far as the east is from the west] As the east and west can never meet in one point, but be for ever at the same distance from each other, so our sins and their decreed punishment are removed to an eternal distance by his mercy.

Verse 13. Like as a father pitieth his children] "As the tender compassions of a father towards his children; so the tender compassions of Jehovah towards them that fear him." Nothing can place the tenderness and concern of God for his creatures in a stronger light than this.

Verse 14. For he knoweth our frame] "Our formation;" the manner in which we are constructed, and the materials of which we are made. In all his conduct towards us he considers the frailty of our nature, the untowardness of our circumstances, the strength and subtlety of temptation, and the sure party (till the heart is renewed) that the tempter has within us. The man who can say, in the face of these Scriptures, Let us sin that grace may abound, is a brute and demon, who has neither lot nor part in this thing.

17 But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto ^a children's children;

18 ^b To such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.

19 The Lord hath prepared his ^c throne in the heavens; and ^d his kingdom ruleth over all.

20 * Bless the Lord, ye his angels, ^e that excel in strength, that ^f do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word.

21 Bless ye the Lord, all ye ^g his hosts; ^h ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure.

22 * Bless the Lord, all his works in all places of his dominion: ⁱ bless the Lord, O my soul.

Verse 16. The wind passeth over it] Referring perhaps to some blasting pestilential wind.

Verse 17. The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting] Chesed signifies more particularly the exuberant goodness of God. This is an attribute of his nature, and must be from everlasting to everlasting; and hence, his righteousness, his merciful mode of justifying the ungodly, is extended from one generation to another.

Unto children's children] It is still in force, and the doctrine of reconciliation through Christ shall continue to be preached till the conclusion of time.

Verse 19. The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens] There he is Sovereign: but his dominion extends equally over all the earth; for his kingdom—regal government, influence, and sway, ruleth over all.

Verse 20. That excel in strength] Some take the mighty in strength for another class of the hierarchy—they that do his commandments, hearkening to his words; and consider them to be that order of beings who are particularly employed in operations among and for the children of men; probably such as are called powers in the New Testament.

Verse 21. All ye his hosts; ye ministers of his] We know almost nothing of the economy of the heavenly host; and, therefore, cannot tell what is the difference between angels, mighty powers, hosts, and ministers who do his pleasure.

Verse 22. Bless the Lord, all his works] Let every thing he has done be so considered as to show forth his praise.

Bless the Lord, O my soul.] Let me never forget my obligation to his mercy; for with tender mercies and loving-kindness has he crowned me.

PSALM CIV.

The majesty and power of God manifested in the creation of the heavens and the atmosphere, 1-3; of the earth and sea, 4-9; of the springs, fountains, and rivers, 10-13; of vegetables and trees, 14-18; of the sun and moon, 19; of day and night, and their uses, 20-23; of the riches of the earth, 24; of the sea, its inhabitants, and its uses, 25, 26; of God's general providence in providing food for all kinds of animals, 27-31; of earthquakes and volcanoes, 32. God is praised for his majesty, and the instruction which his works afford, 33, 34. Sinners shall be destroyed, 35.

This psalm has no title either in the Hebrew or Chaldee; but it is attributed to David by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Æthiopic, Arabic, and Syriac. It is properly a poem on the works of God in the creation and government of the world; and some have considered it a sort of epitome of the history of the creation, as given in the book of Genesis.

Verse 1. O Lord my God, thou art very great] The works of God, which are the subject of this psalm, particularly show the grandeur and majesty of God.

Verse 2. Who coverest thyself with light] Light, insufferable splendour, is the robe of the Divine Majesty. Light and fire are generally the accompaniments of the Supreme Being, when he manifests his presence to his creatures: Gen. xv. 17; Exod. ii. 2; Exod. xix. 18. Moses calls God a consuming fire, Deut. iv. 24. When Christ was transfigured on the mount, his face shone like the sun, and his garment was white as the light, Matt. xvi. 2. And when the Lord manifests himself to the prophets, he is surrounded with fire and the most brilliant light.

Verse 6. Thou coverdest it with the deep] This seems to be spoken in allusion to the creation of the earth, when it was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep, and the waters invested the whole, till God separated the dry land from them; thus forming the seas and the terraqueous globe.

Verse 7. At thy rebuke they fled] When God separated the waters which were above the firmament from those below, and caused the dry land to appear. He commanded the separation to take place; and the waters, as if instinct with life, hastened to obey.

At the voice of thy thunder] It is very likely God employed the electric fluid as an agent in this separation.

Verse 8. They go up by the mountains; they go down by the valleys] Taking the words as they stand here, springs seem to be what are intended. But it is difficult to conceive how the water could ascend, through the fissures of mountains, to their tops, and then come down their sides so as to form rivulets to water the valleys. Possibly, however, vapours and exhalations are understood; these by evaporation ascend to the tops of mountains, where they are condensed and precipitated.

Some have thought there is a reference to the breaking up of the fountains of the great deep at the time of the flood.

Verse 9. Thou hast set a bound that they may not pass] And what is this bound? The flux and reflux of the sea, occasioned by the solar and lunar attraction, the rotation of the earth on its own axis, and the gravitation of the waters, to the centre of the earth. And what is the cause of all these? The will and energy of God.

Verse 10. He sendeth the springs into the valleys] Evaporation is guided and regulated by Divine Providence. The sun has a certain power to raise a certain portion of vapours from a given space. God has apportioned the aqueous to the terrene surface, and the solar attraction to both.

Verse 11. The wild asses quench their thirst] The peregrine, onager, or wild ass, differs in nothing from the tame ass, only it has not a broken spirit, and is consequently more lively and active. It is very timid, or rather jealous of its liberty, and therefore retires deep into the desert: yet even there the providence of God regards it; springs are provided, and it has the instinct to find them out.

Verse 12. By them shall the fowls of the heaven have their habitation] All fowls love verdure, and have their residence where they can find wood and water.

Verse 13. From his chambers] The clouds, as in ver. 8. The earth is satisfied] The inhabitants of it.

Verse 14. He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle] Doth God care for oxen? Yes, and there is not a beast of the field that does not share his merciful regards.

And herb for the service of man] Plants, esculent herbs, and nutritive grain in general; and thus he brings forth food out of the earth.

Verse 15. And wine] Wine, in moderate quantity, has a wondrous tendency to revive and invigorate the human being. This is its use. Those who continue drinking till wine inflames them, abuse this mercy of God.

Oil to make his face to shine] That is, to anoint the body; and particularly those parts most exposed to the sun and weather. This is of high importance in all arid lands and sultry climates.

Bread which strengtheneth man's heart] Hunger has no enterprise, emulation, nor courage. But when, in such circumstances, a little bread is received into the stomach, even before concoction ~~can~~ have time to prepare it for nutriment, the strength is restored and the spirits revived.

Verse 16. The trees of the Lord are full of sap] "Are saturated"

Verse 18. The high hills are a refuge] The barren tops of the highest hills, and the craggy abrupt precipices of the most stupendous rocks, afford protection, refuge, and food for creatures whose dispositions and habits are suited to such places; and thus no part of the creation is useless.

The yael, translated here the wild goat, is no doubt a creature of the stag or deer kind; the ibex, chamois, antelope, &c.

Verse 19. He appointed the moon for seasons] The heathens thought that the sun and moon were gods, and worshipped them as such.

Verse 20. Thou makest darkness] That man may labour, he gives him, by means of the sun, the light of the day; and that he may rest from his labour, and get his strength recruited, he gives him night, and comparative darkness. And as it would not be convenient for man and the wild beasts of the forest to collect their food at the same time, he has given the night to them as the proper time to procure their prey, and the day to rest in.

Verse 21. The young lions roar after their prey] It is said of the lion, that his roaring is so terrible as to astonish and quite unnerve the beast which he pursues; so that, though fleetest than himself, it falls down and becomes an easy prey.

Verse 22. The sun ariseth] The dawn of day is the warning for man to arise and betake himself to his work; and is the warning to them to retire to their dens.

Verse 25. This great and wide sea] "This very sea, great and extensive of hands." Its waters, like arms, encompassing all the terrene parts of the globe. I suppose the Psalmist was within sight of the Mediterranean when he wrote these words.

Verse 26. There go the ships] By means of navigation countries the most remote are connected, and all the inhabitants of the earth become known to each other. He appears at this time to have seen the ships under sail.

Verse 27. These wait all upon thee] The innumerable fry of the smaller aquatic animals, as well as whales, dolphins, porpoises, and sharks, all have their meat from God.

Verse 28. That thou givest them they gather] Infinitely varied as are living creatures in their habits and internal economy, so are the aliments which God has caused the air, the earth, and the waters to produce.

Thou openest thine hand] An allusion to the act of scattering grain among fowls.

Verse 20. Thou hidest thy face] If thou bring dearth or famine on the land, contagion in the air, or any destruction on the provision made by the waters, then beasts, fowl, and fish die, and are dissolved.

Verse 30. Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created] "They are created again."

And thou renewest the face of the earth.] Do not these words plainly imply a resurrection of the bodies which have died, been dissolved, or turned to dust? And is not the brute creation principally intended here?

Verse 32. He looketh on the earth] Even the look of God terrifies all created nature!

He toucheth the hills] So easy is it for God to burn up the earth and the works thereof, that even his touch kindles the mountains into flames!

Verse 33. I will sing unto the Lord] I will sing unto the Lord with my lives, the life that I now have, and the life that I shall have hereafter.

I will sing praise to my God] "In my eternity;" my going on, my endless progression. What astonishing ideas! But then, how shall this great work be brought about? and how shall the new earth be inhabited with righteous spirits only? The answer is,

Verse 35. Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more.] Or, He shall consume the wicked and ungodly, till no more of them be found. Then the wicked shall be turned into hell, with all the nations that forget God.

PSALM CV.

An exhortation to praise God for his wondrous works, 1-5; his goodness to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, 6-16; to Joseph in Egypt, 17-22; to Israel in Egypt, 23-25; to Moses in the same land, 26; the plagues sent on the Egyptians, 27-36; the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt, 37, 38; how he supported them in the wilderness, 39-43; and brought them into Canaan, 44, 45.

O ¹ GIVE thanks unto the LORD; call upon his name: ² make known his deeds among the people.

² Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him: ³ talk ye of all his wondrous works.

³ Glory ye in his holy name: let the heart of them rejoice that seek the LORD.

⁴ Seek the LORD, and his strength: ⁵ seek his face evermore.

⁵ Remember his marvellous works that he hath done; his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth;

⁶ O ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob his chosen.

⁷ He is the LORD our God: ⁸ his judgments are in all the earth.

⁸ He hath ⁹ remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations.

⁹ ¹⁰ Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac;

¹⁰ And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant:

¹¹ Saying, ¹² Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, ¹³ the lot of your inheritance:

¹² ¹⁴ When they were but a few men in number: yea, very few, ¹⁵ and strangers in it.

¹³ When they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people;

¹⁴ ¹⁶ He suffered no man to do them wrong: yea, ¹⁷ he reprov'd kings for their sakes;

¹⁵ ¹⁸ Saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

¹⁶ Moreover ¹⁹ he called for a famine upon the land: he brake the whole ²⁰ staff of bread.

¹⁷ ²¹ He sent a man before them, even Joseph, who ²² was sold for a servant:

We find several verses of this psalm in 1 Chron. xvi., from which it is evident that David was the author of the principal part of it: but it was probably enlarged and sung at the restoration of the people from the Babylonish captivity. It is a history of God's dealings with Abraham and his posterity, till their settlement in the promised land.

Verse 1. O give thanks] He had been meditating on God's gracious dealings with their fathers; and he calls upon himself and all others to magnify God for his mercies.

Verse 2. Talk ye of all his wondrous works.] "Of his miracles." Who have so many of these to boast of as Christians! Christianity is a tissue of miracles; and every part of the work of grace on the soul is a miracle.

Verse 3. Glory ye in his holy name] Show the name Jesus; exult in it—praise it. His name was called Jesus; because he came to save his people from their sins.

Let the heart of them rejoice] That is, the heart of those shall rejoice who seek the Lord: therefore it is added, Verse 4. Seek the Lord] Worship the one only Supreme Being, as the only and all-sufficient good for the soul of man.

And his strength] Man is weak; and needs connexion with the strong God, that he may be enabled to avoid evil and do good.

Seek his face] Reconciliation to him. Live not without a sense of his favour.

Evermore] Let this be thy chief business. In and above all thy seeking, seek this.

Verse 5. Remember his marvellous works] Keep up communion with thy Maker, that thou mayest neither forget him nor his works.

18 ²³ Whose feet they hurt with fetters: ²⁴ he was laid in iron:

19 Until the time that his word came: ²⁵ the word of the LORD tried him.

20 ²⁶ The king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people, and let him go free.

21 ²⁷ He made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his ²⁸ substance:

22 To bind his princes at his pleasure; and teach his senators wisdom.

23 ²⁹ Israel also came into Egypt; and Jacob sojourn'd ³⁰ in the land of Ham.

24 And ³¹ he increased his people greatly; and made them stronger than their enemies.

25 ³² He turned their heart to hate his people, to deal subtilly with his servants.

26 ³³ He sent Moses his servant; and Aaron ³⁴ whom he had chosen.

27 ³⁵ They shewed ³⁶ his signs among them, ³⁷ and wonders in the land of Ham.

28 ³⁸ He sent darkness, and made it dark; and ³⁹ they rebelled not against his word.

29 ⁴⁰ He turned their waters into blood, and slew their fish.

30 ⁴¹ Their land brought forth frogs in abundance, in the chambers of their kings.

31 ⁴² He spake, and there came divers sorts of flies, and lice in all their coasts.

32 ⁴³ He ⁴⁴ gave them hail for rain, and flaming fire in their land.

33 ⁴⁵ He smote their vines also and their fig-trees; and brake the trees of their coasts.

34 ⁴⁶ He spake, and the locusts came, and caterpillars, and that without number, 35 And did eat up all the herbs in their land, and devoured the fruit of their ground.

Verse 6. O ye seed of Abraham] Ye Jews especially, who have been the peculiar objects of the divine favour.

Verse 7. He is the Lord our God] He is Jehovah, the self-existent and eternal God. He is our God, he is our portion; has taken us for his people, and makes us happy in his love.

Verse 12. But a few men] When all appearances were against them, and nothing but the arm of God could have brought them through their difficulties, and given them a settlement in the promised land.

Verse 13. When they went from one nation to another] From several circumstances in the history of the travels of the ancient Hebrews, we find that the wilderness through which they then passed was well peopled.

Verse 15. Touch not mine anointed] It is supposed that the patriarchs are here intended; but the whole people of Israel may be meant. They were a kingdom of priests and kings unto God; and prophets, priests, and kings were always anointed.

Verse 19. Until the time that his word came] This appears to refer to the completion of Joseph's interpretation of the dreams of the chief butler and baker.

The word of the Lord tried him.] This seems to refer to the interpretation of Pharaoh's dreams, called "the oracle of the Lord," because sent by him to Pharaoh.

Verse 25. He turned their heart] "Their heart was turned."

Verse 27. They shewed his signs] Here is a reference to the plagues with which God afflicted the Egyptians.

Or the words may be spoken of Moses and Aaron; they received the commandment of God, and they did not rebel against it. They believed what he had spoken, and acted according to his orders. It could not be spoken of the Egyptians; for they rebelled against his words through the whole course of the transactions.

Verse 33. He smote their vines also, and their fig-trees]

41 ^h He opened the rock, and the waters gushed out; they ran in the dry places like a river.

42 For he remembered ⁱ his holy promise, and Abraham his servant.

PSALM CVI.

God is praised for his manifold mercies, 1-3. The prophet prays for himself, 4, 5. A recapitulation of the history of the Hebrew people: of God's mercies towards them, and their rebellions, 6-39. The judgment and afflictions which their transgressions brought upon them, 40-42. God's mercy to them notwithstanding their transgressions, 43-46. He prays for their restoration, 47, 48.

PRAISE ^a ye the LORD. ^b O ^c give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

This psalm is supposed by eminent commentators to be a prayer of the captives in Babylon, who acknowledge the mercies of God, confess their own sins and those of their forefathers, and implore the Lord to gather them from among the heathen, and restore them to their own country.

Verse 1. O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good] Ye who live by his bounty should praise his mercy. God is the good Being, and of all kinds of good he is the Author and Dispenser.

Verse 2. Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord?] His acts are all acts of might; and particularly those in behalf of his followers.

Verse 3. Blessed are they that keep judgment, and he that doeth righteousness at all times.] Those are truly blessed, or happy, whose hearts are devoted to God, and who live in the habit of obedience.

Verse 4. Remember me] This and the following clauses are read in the plural by several MSS.: Remember us—that we may rejoice,—that we may glory, &c.: and thus all the Versions except the Chaldee; and this is more agreeable to the context.

Verse 5. That I may see the good of thy chosen] That I thou bearest unto thy people: O visit me with thy salvation;

5 That I may see the good of thy chosen, that I may rejoice in the gladness of thy nation, that I may glory with thine inheritance.

may enjoy the good, for so the word see is understood among the Hebrews.

Verse 6. We have sinned] Here the confession begins: Our forefathers sinned, and suffered; we, like them, have sinned, and do suffer.

Verse 7. Our fathers understood not] They did not regard the operation of God's hands; and therefore they understood neither his designs nor their own interest.

At the sea, even at the Red Sea.] The word seems to be added by way of explanation; they provoked at yam, "at the sea;" beyam suph, "in the sea suph," or Red Sea. They provoked him at it and in it.

Verse 8. He saved them for his name's sake] There was nothing which he could draw from them as a reason why he should save them; therefore he drew the reason from himself.

Verse 9. He rebuked the Red Sea.] In the descriptions of the Psalmist every thing has life. The sea is an animated being, behages itself proudly, is rebuked, and retires in confusion.

Verse 10. The hand of him that hated them] Pharaoh.

Verse 12. Then believed they] Just while the miracle was before their eyes.

Egypt; they remembered not the multitude of thy mercies; * but provoked him at the sea, even at the Red Sea.

8 Nevertheless he saved them ^b for his name's sake, * that he might make his mighty power to be known.

9 ^a He rebuked the Red Sea also, and it was dried up: so * he led them through the depths, as through the wilderness.

10 And he ^c saved them from the hand of him that hated them, and redeemed them from the hand of the enemy.

11 ^e And the waters covered their enemies: there was not one of them left.

12 ^b Then believed they his words; they sang his praise.

13 ⁱ They ^j soon forgot his works; they waited not for his counsel:

14 ^k But ^l lusted exceedingly in the wilderness, and tempted God in the desert.

15 ^m And he gave them their request; but ⁿ sent leanness into their soul.

16 ^o They envied Moses also in the camp, and Aaron the saint of the LORD.

17 ^p The earth opened and swallowed up Dathan, and covered the company of Abiram.

18 ^q And a fire was kindled in their company; the flame burned up the wicked.

19 ^r They made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten image.

20 Thus ^s they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass.

21 They ^t forgot God their Saviour, which had done great things in Egypt;

22 Wondrous works in ^u the land of Ham, and terrible things by the Red Sea.

23 ^v Therefore he said that he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen ^w stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them.

24 Yea, they despised ^x the ^y pleasant land, they ^z believed not his word:

Verse 13. They soon forgot his works] Three days afterwards, at the waters of Marah, Exod. xv. 24.

Verse 15. Sent leanness] God gave flesh as they desired, but gave no blessing with it; and in consequence, they did not fatten, but grew lean upon it.

Verse 16. They envied Moses] A reference to the case of Korah and his company.

Aaron the saint] The anointed, the high-priest of the Lord.

Verse 20. Thus they changed their glory] That is, their God, who was their glory; and they worshipped an ox in his stead.

Verse 22. Wondrous works in the land of Ham] The plagues inflicted on the Egyptians.

Verse 23. Moses his chosen] Or elect; the person that he had appointed for this work.

Verse 25. At the sacrifices of the dead.] Most of the heathen idols were men, who had been deified after their death; many of whom had been executed during their life.

Verse 28. They provoked his spirit] Himru, from marah, 25 ^{aa} But murmured in their tents, and hearkened not unto the voice of the LORD.

26 ^{bb} Therefore he ^{cc} lifted up his hand against them, to overthrow them in the wilderness:

27 ^{dd} To ^{ee} overthrow their seed also among the nations, and to scatter them in the lands.

28 ^{ff} They joined themselves also unto Baal-peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead.

29 Thus they provoked him to anger with their inventions: and the plague brake in upon them.

30 ^{gg} Then stood up Phinehas, and executed judgment: and so the plague was stayed.

31 And that was counted unto him ^{hh} for righteousness unto all generations for evermore.

32 ⁱⁱ They angered him also at the waters of strife, ^{jj} so that it went ill with Moses for their sakes:

33 ^{kk} Because they provoked his spirit, so that he spake unadvisedly with his lips.

34 ^{ll} They did not destroy the nations, ^{mm} concerning whom the LORD commanded them:

35 ⁿⁿ But were mingled among the heathen, and learned their works, 36 And ^{oo} they served their idols: ^{pp} which were a snare unto them.

37 Yea, ^{qq} they sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto ^{rr} devils.

38 And shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan: and ^{ss} the land was polluted with blood.

39 Thus were they ^{tt} defiled with their own works, and ^{uu} went a whoring with their own inventions.

40 Therefore ^{vv} was the wrath of the LORD kindled against his people, insomuch that he abhorred ^{ww} his own inheritance.

41 And ^{xx} he gave them into the hand of the heathen; and they that hated them ruled over them.

42 Their enemies also oppressed them, and they were brought into subjection under their hand.

43 ^{yy} Many times did he deliver them; but they provoked him with their counsel, and were ^{zz} brought low for their iniquity.

to rebel: they brought it into a rebellious state; he was soured and irritated, and was off his guard.

So that he spake unadvisedly with his lips.] For this sentence we have only these two words in the Hebrew, vayebatte bisephatav, he stammered or stammered with his lips, indicating that he was transported with anger.

Verse 36. They served their idols] Their labours or griefs—idols, so called because of the pains taken in forming them, the labour in worshipping them, and the grief occasioned by the divine judgments against the people for their idolatry.

Verse 37. They sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils.] That causing their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire to Moloch did not always mean they burnt them to death in the flames, of very probable. But all the heathen had human sacrifices; of this their history is full. Unto Devils, lashshedim, to demons. Devil is never in scripture used in the plural; there is but ONE devil, though there are MANY demons.

and idolatrous acts. Besides, the worship of idols was frequently accompanied with various acts of impurity.

Verse 40. Therefore was the wrath of the Lord kindled] God kindled a fire in his judgments for those who by their flagitious conduct had inflamed themselves with their idols, and the impure rites with which they were worshipped.

Verse 43. Many times did he deliver them] See the Book of Judges; it is a history of the rebellions and deliverances of the Israelites.

Verse 46. He made them also to be pitied] This was particularly true as to the Babylonish captivity; for Cyrus gave them their liberty; Darius favoured them, and granted them several privileges; and Artaxerxes sent back Nehemiah, and helped him to rebuild Jerusalem and the temple.

Verse 47. Save us, O Lord—and gather us] The author of the psalm begs the Lord to gather the Israelites who were dispersed through different countries; for at the dedication of the second temple, under Nehemiah (where it is probable this psalm, with the cvth and the cviith, was sung), there were very few Jews who had as yet returned from the captivity.

47 'Save us, O LORD our God, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name, and to triumph in thy praise.

Verse 48. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel] Here both gratitude and confidence are expressed; gratitude for what God had already wrought, and confidence that he would finish the great work of their restoration.

From everlasting to everlasting] "From the hidden term to the hidden term," from the beginning of time to the end of time, from eternity and on to eternity.

And let all the people say, Amen.] Let the people join in the prayer and in the thanksgiving, that God may hear and answer.

PSALM CVII.

A thanksgiving of the people for deliverance from difficulties and danger; their state compared to a journey through a frightful wilderness, 1-9; to confinement in a dreary dungeon, 10-16; to a dangerous malady, 17-22; to a tempest at sea, 23-32. The Psalmist calls on men to praise God for the merciful dispensations of his providence, in giving rain and fruitful seasons, after affliction by drought and famine, 33-38; for supporting the poor in affliction, and bringing down the oppressors, 39-41. The use which the righteous should make of these providences, 42; and the advantage to be derived from a due consideration of God's merciful providence, 43.

O ^a GIVE thanks unto the LORD, for ^b he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

2 Let the redeemed of the LORD say so, ^c whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy;

3 And ^d gathered them out of the lands, from the east, and from the west, from the north, and ^e from the south.

The author of this psalm is unknown; but it was probably, like Psalms cv. and cvi., made and sung at the dedication of the second temple. The three psalms seem to be on the same subject.

Verse 1. O give thanks] Here is a duty prescribed; and the reasons of it are immediately laid down. 1. He is good. This is his nature. 2. His mercy endureth for ever. This is the stream that flows from the fountain of his goodness.

Verse 2. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so] For they have had the fullest proof of this goodness, in being saved by the continuing stream of his mercy.

Verse 3. And gathered them out of the lands] Though many Jews returned into Jerusalem from various parts of the world under the reigns of Darius Hystaspes, Artaxerxes, and Alexander the Great; yet this prophecy has its completion only under the Gospel, when all the ends of the earth hear the salvation of God.

Verse 4. They wandered in the wilderness] Here begins the first comparison: the Israelites in captivity are compared to a traveller in a dreary, uninhabited, and barren desert, spent with hunger and thirst, as well as by the fatigues of the journey, ver. 5.

Verse 6. Then they cried unto the Lord] When the Israelites began to pray heartily, and the eyes of all the tribes were as the eyes of one man turned unto the Lord, then he delivered them out of their distresses.

Verse 7. That they might go to a city of habitation.] God stirred up the heart of Cyrus to give them liberty to return to their own land: and Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Nehemiah, at different times, brought many of them back to Judea.

Verse 8. O that men would praise the Lord] God is infinitely excellent, and should be celebrated for his perfections. But he does wonders for the children of men; and, therefore, men should praise the Lord. And he is the more to be praised, because these wonders, niphlaoth, miracles of mercy and grace, are done for the undeserving. They are done Udney Adam, for the children of Adam, the corrupt descendants of a rebel father.

goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

10 Such as sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, being bound in affliction and iron;

11 Because they rebelled against the words of God, and contemned the counsel of the Most High:

12 Therefore he brought down their heart with labour; they fell down, and there was none to help.

13 Then they cried unto the LORD in their trouble, and he saved them out of their distresses.

14 He brought them out of darkness and the shadow of death, and brake their bands in sunder.

15 Oh that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

16 For he hath broken the gates of brass, and cut the bars of iron in sunder.

17 Fools because of their transgression, and because of their iniquities, are afflicted.

18 Their soul abhorreth all manner of meat; and they draw near unto the gates of death.

19 Then they cry unto the LORD in their trouble, and he saveth them out of their distresses.

20 He sent his word, and healed them, and delivered them from their destructions.

Verse 9. For he satisfieth the longing soul] The longing soul, nephesh shokekah, the soul that pushes forward in eager desire after salvation.

Verse 10. Such as sit in darkness] Here begins the SECOND similitude, which he uses to illustrate the state of the captives in Babylon, viz., that of a prisoner in a dreary dungeon. 1. They sit in or inhabit darkness. They have no light, no peace, no prosperity. 2. "In the shadow of death." The place where death reigns, over which he has projected his shadow; those against whom the sentence of death has been pronounced. 3. They are bound in this darkness, have no liberty to revisit the light, and cannot escape from their executioners. 4. They are afflicted, not only by want and privation in general, but they are tortured in the prison, and, afflicted, humbled, distressed. 5. Their fetters are such as they cannot break; they are iron.

Verse 11. Because they rebelled against the words of God] He counselled and exhorted them to return to him: but they contemned his advice, and turned his counsel into ridicule.

Verse 12. He brought down their heart with labour] He delivered them into the hands of their enemies: God had forsaken them because they had forsaken him.

Verse 13. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble] This was the salutary effect which their afflictions produced.

Verse 14. He brought them out of darkness] 1. Gave them again peace and prosperity. 2. Repealed the sentence of death. 3. Unbound the poor prisoners. 4. Broke their iron bonds in sunder.

Verse 16. For he hath broken] It was not a simple deliverance; it was done so as to manifest the irresistible power of God.

Verse 17. Fools because of their transgression] This is the THIRD comparison; the captivity being compared to a person in a dangerous malady. Our Version does not express this clause well: Fools because of the way of their transgressions, are afflicted. Most human maladies are the fruits of sin; misery and sin are married together in bonds that can never be broken.

Verse 18. Their soul abhorreth all manner of meat] A natural description of a sick man: appetite is gone, and all

21 Oh that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

22 And let them sacrifice the sacrifices of thanksgiving, and declare his works with rejoicing.

23 They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters;

24 These see the works of the LORD, and his wonders in the deep.

25 For he commandeth, and raiseth the stormy wind, which lifteth up the waves thereof.

26 They mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths: their soul is melted because of trouble.

27 They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wit's end.

28 Then they cry unto the LORD in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their distresses.

29 He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still.

30 Then are they glad because they be quiet; so he bringeth them unto their desired haven.

31 Oh that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

32 Let them exalt him also in the congregation of the people, and praise him in the assembly of the elders.

desire for food fails; nutriment is no longer necessary, for death has seized upon the whole frame.

Verse 20. He sent his word and healed them] He spoke: "Be thou clean, be thou whole;" and immediately the disease departed; and thus they were delivered from the destructions that awaited them.

Verse 22. And let them sacrifice] For their healing they should bring a sacrifice; and they should offer the life of the innocent animal unto God, as he has spared their lives; and let them thus confess that God has spared them when they deserved to die; and let them declare also "his works with rejoicing;" for who will not rejoice when he is delivered from death?

Verse 23. They that go down to the sea in ships] This is the FOURTH comparison. Their captivity was as dangerous and alarming as a dreadful tempest at sea to a weather-beaten mariner.

Verse 24. These see the works of the Lord] Splendid, divinely impressive, and glorious in fine weather.

His wonders in the deep. Awfully terrible in a tempest. Verse 25. For he commandeth] And what less than the command of God can raise up such winds as seem to heave old Ocean from his bed?

Verse 26. They mount up to the heaven] This is a most natural and striking description of the state of a ship at sea in a storm: when the sea appears to run mountains high, and the vessel seems for a moment to stand on the sharp ridge of one most stupendous, with a valley of a frightful depth between it and a similar mountain, which appears to be flying in the midst of heaven, that it may submerge the hapless bark, when she descends into the valley of death below.

Their soul is melted because of trouble.] This is not less expressive than it is descriptive. The action of raising the vessel to the clouds, and precipitating her into the abyss, seems to dissolve the very soul; the whole mind seems to melt away, so that neither feeling, reflection, nor impression remains, nothing but the apprehension of inevitable destruction! Then indeed, can the hand of God alone "bring them out of their distresses." Then, a cry to the Almighty is the only means that can be used to save the perishing wreck!

Verse 29. He maketh the storm a calm] He causes the storm to stand dumb, and hushes the waves. In the original sense and sound emphatically meet.

Verse 30. Then are they glad because they be quiet] They rejoice to see an end to the tempest; and thus, having fine weather, a smooth sea, and fair wind, they are speedily brought to the desired haven.

Verse 32. Let them exult him also in the congregation] Their deliverance from such imminent danger, and in a way which clearly showed the divine interposition, demands, not only gratitude of heart and the song of praise at the end of the storm, but when they come to shore that they publicly acknowledge it in the congregation of God's people.

Verse 33. He turneth rivers into a wilderness] On account of the wickedness of men, he sometimes changes a fruitful land into a desert. See the general state of Egypt in the present time: once a fertile land; now an arid, sandy wilderness. Again, by his blessing on honest industry, he has changed deserts into highly fertile ground.

Verse 36. And there he maketh the hungry to dwell] All this seems to apply admirably to the first colonists of any place. They flee from a land of want, that did not repay their toil, and they seek the wilderness where the land wants only cultivation to make it produce all the necessaries of life. He, by his providence, so guides their steps as to lead them to rivers which they can navigate, and from which they can procure plenty of fish, and shows them wells or springs which they have not digged. The hungry dwell there; and jointly agree for convenience and defence, to build them a city for habitation. They sow the fields which they have cleared; and plant vineyards, and orchards which yield them increasing fruits, ver. 37, and he multiplies their cattle greatly, and does not suffer them to decrease, ver. 38.

Verse 39. Again, they are minished] Sometimes by war, or pestilence, or famine.

Verse 40. He poureth contempt upon princes] How many 39 Again, they are ^a minished and brought low through oppression, affliction, and sorrow.

have been raised from nothing, and set upon thrones! And how many have been cast down from thrones, and reduced to nothing!

Where there is no way.] Who can consider the fate of the late emperor of the French, Napoleon, without seeing the hand of God in his downfall!

The dreary rock of St. Helena, where there was no way, saw a period to the mighty conqueror, who had strode over all the countries of Europe!

Verse 41. Yet setteth he the poor on high] This probably refers to the case of the Israelites and their restoration from captivity. But these are incidents which frequently occur, and mark the superintendence of a benign Providence, and the hand of a just God; and are applicable to a multitude of cases.

Verse 42. The righteous shall see it] The wicked are as inconsiderate as they are obstinate and headstrong.

And rejoice] To have such ample proofs that God ruleth in the earth, and that none that trust in him shall be desolate.

All iniquity shall stop her mouth.] God's judgments and mercies are so evident, and so distinctly marked, that atheism, infidelity, and irreligion are confounded, and the cause of error and falsehood has become hopeless.

Verse 43. Whoso is wise] He that is wise, he that fears God, and regards the operation of his hand, will observe—lay up and keep, these things. He will encourage himself in the Lord, because he finds that he is a never-failing spring of goodness to the righteous.

They shall understand the lovingkindness of the Lord.] The exuberant goodness of Jehovah. This is his peculiar and most prominent characteristic among men; for judgment is his strange work.²⁷ What a wonderful discourse on Divine Providence, and God's management of the world, does this inimitable psalm contain! The ignorant cannot read it without profit; and by the study of it, the wise man will become yet wiser.

PSALM CVIII.

The Psalmist encourages himself to praise the Lord for mercies he had received, 1-5. He prays for the divine succour, 6; and encourages the people to expect their restoration, and the enjoyment of all their former privileges and possessions, 7-13.

A Song or Psalm of David.

O GOD, my heart is fixed; I will sing and give praise, even with my glory.
 2 ^b Awake, psaltery and harp: I myself will awake early.

3 I will praise thee, O LORD, among the people: and I will sing praises unto thee among the nations.

4 For thy mercy is great above the heavens: and thy truth reacheth unto the clouds.

5 ^d Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens: and thy glory above all the earth;

6 ^e That thy beloved may be delivered: save with thy right hand, and answer me.

7 God hath spoken in his holiness; I will rejoice;

* Ps. lvii. 7.—^b Ps. lvii. 8, 11.—^c Or, skies.—^d Ps. lvii. 5, 11.

This psalm is compounded of two psalms which we have had already under review. The 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th verses are the same with the 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th verses of Psalm lvii. And the 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th are the same with the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th of Psalm lx. The variations are few, and of little moment, and the explanation may be seen in the notes on the preceding psalms, which need not be repeated here.

Verse 1. Even with my glory.] My greatest glory shall be in publishing thy praise. Some make the glory here to mean the LORD himself: some, the ARK of the covenant; some, the SOUL of the Psalmist; others, his TONGUE; some, the GIFT of PROPHECY; and some, the Psalmist's SPIRIT or VEIN of poetry.

I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth.

8 Gilead is mine; Manasseh is mine; Ephraim also is the strength of mine head; 'Judah is my lawgiver;

9 Moab is my washpot; over Edom will I cast out my shoe; over Philistia will I triumph.

10 ^e Who will bring me into the strong city? who will lead me into Edom?

11 Wilt not thou, O God, who hast cast us off? and wilt not thou, O God, go forth with our hosts?

12 Give us help from trouble: for vain is the help of man.

13 ^h Through God we shall do valiantly: for he it is that shall tread down our enemies.

* Ps. lx. 5, &c.—^f Gen. xlii. 10.—^g Ps. lx. 9.—^h Ps. lx. 12.

Verse 8. Among the people] The Jews. Among the nations.] The Gentiles. Wherever this psalm is sung or read, either among Jews or Gentiles, David may be said to sing praise to God.

Verse 7. God hath spoken in his holiness] Some think this means in his Holy One, referring to the prophet Jeremiah, who predicted the captivity, its duration of seventy years, and the deliverance from it.

Verse 10. The strong city] The possession of the metropolis is a sure proof of the subjugation of the country.

Verse 13. Through God we shall do valiantly] From him we derive our courage, from him our strength, and by him our success.

PSALM CIX.

The Psalmist speaks against his inveterate enemies, 1-5. He prays against them, and denounces God's judgments, 6-15. The reason on which this is grounded, 16-20. He prays for his own safety and salvation, using many arguments to induce God to have mercy upon him, 21-31

Probably, in its primary meaning, this psalm may refer to Ahiathophel. The execrations in it should be rendered in the future tense, as they are mere prophetic denunciations of God's displeasure against sinners. But perhaps the whole may be the execrations of David's enemies against himself.

Verse 1. Hold not thy peace] Be not silent; arise and defend my cause.

Verse 2. The mouth of the wicked] Many persons are continually uttering calumnies against me. Thou knowest my heart and its innocence; vindicate my uprightness against these calumniators.

Verse 4. For my love they are my adversaries] In their behalf I have performed many acts of kindness, and they are my adversaries notwithstanding; this shows principles the most vicious, and hearts the most corrupt.

Verse 6. Let Satan stand at his right hand.] As the word satan means an adversary simply, though sometimes it is used to express the evil spirit Satan, I think it best to preserve here its grammatical meaning: "Let an adversary stand at his right hand;" i. e., Let him be opposed and thwarted in all his purposes. All the Versions have devil, or some equivalent word.

Verse 7. Let him be condemned] "Let him come out a wicked man;" that is, let his wickedness be made manifest.

Verse 8. Let another take his office.] The original is pekuddatho, which the margin translates charge, and which literally means superintendence, oversight, inspection from actual visitations. The translation in our common Version is too technical. The original word is applied to the patriarch Joseph, Gen. xxxix. 4.

Verse 9. Let his children be fatherless, &c.] It is said that Judas was a married man, against whom this verse, as well as the preceding, is supposed to be spoken; and that it was to support them he stole from the bag in which the property of the apostles was put, and of which he was the treasurer.

Verse 10. Let his children—beg] The father having lost his office, the children must necessarily be destitute; and 10 Let his children be continually vagabonds, and beg: let them seek their bread also out of their desolate places.

11 * Let the extortioner catch all that he hath: and let the strangers spoil his labour.

12 Let there be none to extend mercy unto him: neither let there be any to favour his fatherless children.

13 ^b Let his posterity be cut off; and in the generation following let their name be blotted out.

14 ^c Let the iniquity of his fathers be remembered with the LORD; and let not the sin of his mother ^e be blotted out.

15 Let them be before the LORD continually, that he may ^f cut off the memory of them from the earth.

16 Because that he remembered not to shew mercy, but persecuted the poor and needy man; that he might even slay the ^g broken in heart.

17 ^b As he loved cursing, so let it come unto him: as he delighted not in blessing, so let it be far from him.

18 As he clothed himself with cursing like as with his garment, so let it ^h come into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones.

19 Let it be unto him as the garment which covereth him, and for a girdle wherewith he is girded continually.

this is the hardest lot to which any can become subject, after having been born to the expectation of an ample fortune.

Verse 11. Let the strangers spoil his labour.] Many of these execrations were literally fulfilled in the case of the miserable Jews, after the death of our Lord. They were not only expelled from their own country, after the destruction of Jerusalem, but they were prohibited from returning; and so taxed by the Roman government, that they were reduced to the lowest degree of poverty.

Verse 13. Let his posterity be cut off.] It is a fact that the distinction among the Jewish tribes is entirely lost. Not a Jew in the world knows from what tribe he is sprung; and as to the royal family, it remains nowhere but in the person of Jesus the Messiah. He alone is the Lion of the tribe of Judah. Except as it exists in him, the name is blotted out.

Verse 16. Persecuted the poor and needy man.] In the case of Jesus Christ all the dictates of justice and mercy were destroyed, and they persecuted this poor man unto death.

Verse 17. As he loved cursing, so let it come unto him.] The Jews said, when crucifying our Lord, His blood be upon us and our children! Never was an imprecation more dreadfully fulfilled.

Verse 18. Let it come into his bowels like water.] An allusion to the waters of jealousy;—the bitter waters that produce the curse. See Numb. v. 18.

Verse 19. And for a girdle.] Let the curse cleave to him throughout life: as the girdle binds all the clothes to the body, let the curse of God bind all mischiefs and maladies to his body and soul.

Verse 20. Let this be the reward of mine adversaries from the Lord, and of them that speak evil against my soul.] Following the mode of interpretation already adopted, this may mean: All these maledictions shall be fulfilled on my enemies; they shall have them for their reward.

But is not this verse a key to all that preceded it? The original, fairly interpreted, will lead us to a somewhat different meaning: "This is the work of my adversaries before the Lord, and of those who speak evil against my 21 But do thou for me, O GOD the LORD, for thy name's sake: because thy mercy is good, deliver thou me.

23 I am gone ^a like the shadow when it declineth: I am tossed up and down as the locust.

soul," or life. That is, all that is said from the sixth to the twentieth verse consists of the evil words and imprecations of my enemies against my soul, labouring to set the Lord, by imprecations, against me, that their curses may take effect. This, which is a reasonable interpretation, frees the whole psalm from every difficulty.

Verse 21: But do thou for me.] While they use horrible imprecations against me, and load me with their curses, act thou for me, and deliver me from their maledictions. While they curse; do thou bless.

Verse 22. I am poor and needy.] I am afflicted and impoverished; and my heart is wounded—my very life is sinking through distress.

Verse 23. I am gone like the shadow.] "I have walked like the declining shadow,"—I have passed my meridian of health and life; and as the sun is going below the horizon, so am I about to go under the earth.

I am tossed up and down as the locust.] When swarms of locusts take wing, and infest the countries in the East, if the wind happen to blow briskly, the swarms are agitated and driven upon each other, so as to appear to be heaved to and fro, or tossed up and down.

Verse 24. My knees are weak through fasting.] That hunger is as soon felt in weakening the knees, as in producing an uneasy sensation in the stomach, is known by all who have ever felt it.

Verse 25. When they looked upon me they shook their heads.] Thus was David treated by Shimei; 2 Sam. xvi. 5, 6, and our blessed Lord by the Jews, Matt. xxvii. 39.

Verse 27. That they may know that this is thy hand.] Let thy help be so manifest in my behalf, that they may see it is thy hand, and that thou hast undertaken for me. Or, if the words refer to the passion of our Lord, Let them see that I suffer not on my own account; ^l for the transgression of my people am I smitten.

Verse 31. He shall stand at the right hand of the poor.] Even if Satan himself be the accuser, God will vindicate the innocence of his servant. Pilate and the Jews condemned our Lord to death as a malefactor; God showed his immaculate innocence by his resurrection from the dead.

PSALM CX.

The Messiah sits in his kingdom at the right hand of God, his enemies being subdued under him, 1, 2. The nature and extent of his government, 3. His everlasting priesthood, 4. His execution of justice and judgment, 5, 6. The reason on which all this is founded, his passion and exaltation, 7.

A Psalm of David.

THE LORD said unto my LORD, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool.

2 The LORD shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies.

3 Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning: thou hast the dew of thy youth.

The Hebrew, and all the Versions, except the Arabic, attribute this psalm to David: nor can this be doubted, as it is thus attributed in the New Testament; see the places in the margin.

The Jews, aware of the advantage which the Christian religion must derive from this psalm, have laboured hard and in vain to give it a contrary sense. Some have attributed it to Eliezer, the servant or steward of Abraham; and state that he composed it on the occasion of his master's victory over the four kings at the valley of Shaveh, Gen. xiv. Others say it was done by David, in commemoration of his victory over the Philistines. Others make Solomon the author. Some refer it to Hezekiah, and others to Zerubabel, &c.: but the bare reading of the psalm will show the vanity of these pretensions. A King is described here who is David's Lord, and sits at the right hand of God; a conqueror, reigning at Jerusalem, King from all eternity—having an everlasting priesthood, Judge of all nations, triumphing over all potentates, indefatigable in all his operations, and successful in all his enterprises. Where has there ever appeared a prince in whom all these characters met? There never was one, nor is it possible that there ever can be one such, the Person excepted to whom the psalm is applied by the authority of the Holy Spirit himself. That the Jews who lived in the time of our Lord believed this psalm to have been written by David, and that it spoke of the Messiah alone, is evident from this, that when our Lord quoted it, and drew arguments from it in favour of his mission, Matt. xxii. 42, they did not attempt to gainsay it. St. Peter, Acts ii. 34, and St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 25; Heb. i. 13. v. 6, 10, vii. 17, x. 12, 13, apply it to show that Jesus is the Messiah. Nor was there any attempt to contradict them; not even an intimation that they had misapplied it, or mistaken its meaning. Many of the later Jews also have granted that it applied to the Messiah, though they dispute its application to Jesus of Nazareth. All the critics and commentators whom I have consulted apply it to our Lord; nor does it appear to me to be capable of interpretation on any other ground.

Verse 1. The Lord said unto my Lord.] Jehovah said unto my Adoni. That David's Lord is the Messiah, is confirmed by our Lord himself and by the apostles Peter and Paul, as we have already seen.

Sit thou at my right hand.] This implies the possession of the utmost confidence, power, and pre-eminence.

Until I make thine enemies.] Jesus shall reign till all his enemies are subdued under him. Jesus Christ, as God, ever dwelt in the fulness of the Godhead; but it was as God-man that, after his resurrection, he was raised to the right hand of the Majesty on high, ever to appear in the presence of God for us.

Verse 2. The rod of thy strength.] The gospel—the doctrine of Christ crucified; which is the powerful sceptre of the Lord that bought us; is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword; and is the power of God to salvation to all them that believe.

Verse 3. Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power.] This verse has been wofully perverted. It has been supposed to point out the irresistible operation of the grace

4 The LORD hath sworn, and will not repent, 'Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

5 The LORD at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath.

6 He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads over many countries.

7 He shall drink of the brook in the way: therefore shall he lift up the head.

of God on the souls of the elect, thereby making them willing to receive Christ as their Saviour. Now, whether this doctrine be true or false, it is not in this text, nor can it receive the smallest countenance from it. The Hebrew words literally translated are, Thy princely people, or free people, in the day of thy power.

None of the ancient Versions, nor of our modern translations, give any sense to the words that countenances the doctrine above referred to; it merely expresses the character of the people who shall constitute the kingdom of Christ. Nadab signifies to be free, liberal, willing, noble; and especially liberality in bringing offerings to the Lord, Exod. xxv. 2, xxxv. 21, 29. And nadib signifies a nobleman, a prince, Job xxi. 8; and also liberality. Nedabah signifies a freewill-offering—an offering made by superabundant gratitude; one not commanded: see Exod. xxxvi. 3; Lev. vii. 16, and elsewhere. Now the am nedaboth is the people of liberality—the princely, noble, and generous people; Christ's real subjects; his own children, who form his church, and are the salt of the world; the bountiful people, who live only to get good from God that they may do good to man.

The day of Christ's power is the time of the gospel, the reign of the Holy Spirit in the souls of his people. Whenever and wherever the gospel is preached in sincerity and purity, then and there is the day or time of Christ's power. It is the time of his exaltation. The days of his flesh were the days of his weakness; the time of his exaltation is the day of his power.

In the beauties of holiness.] "In the splendid garments of holiness." An allusion to the beautiful garments of the high-priest.

From the womb of the morning.] As the dew flows from the womb of the morning, so shall all the godly from thee. They are the dew of thy youth; they are the offspring of thy own nativity. As the human nature of our Lord was begotten by the creative energy of God in the womb of the Virgin; so the followers of God are born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, but by the Divine Spirit.

Youth may be put here, not only for young men, but for soldiers; and for persons courageous, heroic, strong, active, and vigorous. Such were the apostles and first preachers of the gospel; and, indeed, all genuine Christians.

Verse 4. The Lord hath sworn.] Has most firmly purposed, and will most certainly perform it, feeling himself bound by his purpose, as an honest man would by his oath.

And will not repent.] Will never change this purpose: it is perfectly without condition, and without contingency. Nothing is left here to the will of man or angel. Christ shall be incarnated, and the gospel of his salvation shall be preached over the whole earth. This is an irresistible decree of that God who loves mankind.

Thou art a priest for ever.] The word cohen signifies, not only a priest, but also a prince; as, in patriarchal times, most heads of families had and exercised both political and sacerdotal authority over all their descendants. Every priest had a threefold office: 1. He was an instructor of the family or tribe over which he presided. 2. He offered sacrifices for the sins of the people, to reconcile them to God, and give them access to his presence. 3. He was their mediator, and interposed for them. So is Christ, the grand, the universal Instructor, by his word and Spirit; the Lamb of God, who, by his sacrificial offering of himself, takes away the sin of the world, and still continues to exhibit himself before the throne in his sacrificial character; and also the great Mediator between God and man; and in these characters he is a Priest for ever. He will instruct, apply the sacrificial offering, and intercede for man, till time shall be no more.

After the order of Melchizedek.] For the elucidation of this point the reader is requested to refer to the notes on Gen. xiv. 18, 19.

Melchizedek was king of Salem, that is, king of Jerusalem; for Salem was its ancient name; but salem signifies peace, and tzedek, righteousness. Christ is styled the Prince of peace; and he is the king that rules in the empire of righteousness; and all peace and righteousness proceed from him, Heb. vii. 2.

He is priest after the order of Melchizedek—after his pattern; in the same kind or manner of way in which this ancient king was priest.

Verse 5. The Lord at thy right hand] Here Venema thinks the psalm speaks of David. As Jesus is at the right hand of God, so he will be at thy hand, giving thee all the support and comfort requisite.

Shall strike through kings] As he did in the case of Abraham, Gen. xiv. 1-16 (for to this there seems to be an allusion), where he smote four kings and filled the pits with the dead bodies of their troops.

Verse 6. He shall judge among the heathen] David shall greatly extend his dominion, and rule over the Idumeans, Moabites, Philistines, &c.

He shall fill—with the dead bodies] He shall fill pits—make heaps of slain; there shall be an immense slaughter among his enemies.

He shall wound the heads] He shall so bring down the power of all the neighbouring kings, as to cause them to acknowledge him as their lord, and pay him tribute.

Verse 7. He shall drink of the brook in the way] He shall have sore travail, and but little ease and refreshment; but he shall still go on from conquering to conquer.

Therefore he shall lift up the head.] Or, his head. He shall succeed in all his enterprises, and at last be peaceably settled in his ample dominions. [our Lord.

But these verses, as well as the former, may be applied to He shall judge, give laws, among the heathen—send his gospel to the whole Gentile world. He shall fill the field of battle with the dead bodies of the slain, who had resisted his empire, and would not have him to reign over them. He shall wound the heads over many countries.—This must be spoken against some person possessing a very extensive sway. Perhaps Antichrist is meant; he who has so many countries under his spiritual domination. He shall drink of the brook—he shall suffer sorely, and even die in the struggle; but in that death his enemies shall all perish; and he shall lift up the head—he shall rise again from the dead, possessing all power in heaven and earth, ascend to the throne of glory, and reign till time shall be no more. He must suffer and die, in order to have the triumphs already mentioned.

PSALM CXI.

The Psalmist praises the Lord, and extols his works as great, honourable, glorious, and magnificent, 1-4; his providence and kindness to his followers, 5-8; the redemption he has granted to his people, 9. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, 10.

PRAISE ^a ye the LORD. ^b I will praise the LORD with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation.

² The works of the LORD are great, ^d sought out of all them that have pleasure therein.

³ His work is ^e honourable and glorious: and his righteousness endureth for ever.

^a Heb. Hallelujah.—^b Ps. xxxv. 18. lxxxix. 5. cvii. 32. cix. 30. cxlix. 1.—^c Job xxxviii. xxxix. xl. xli. Ps. xcii. 5. cxxxix. 14.

This is one of the alphabetical or acrostic psalms: but it is rather different from those we have already seen. The psalm has no title in the Hebrew, unless the word Hallelujah be considered as such; and the thanksgivings which it contains were probably composed for the benefit of the Jews after their return from captivity.

Verse 1. I will praise the Lord with my whole heart] If we profess to “sing to the praise and glory of God,” the heart, and the whole heart, without division and distraction, must be employed in the work.

In the assembly] Besod, in the secret assembly—the private religious meetings for the communion of saints. And in the congregation,edah, the general assembly—the public congregation. There were such meetings as the former ever since God had a church on the earth; and to convey general information, there must be public assemblies.

Verse 2. The works of the Lord are great] Gedolim, vast in magnitude; as rabbim signifies their multitude and variety.

Sought out] Investigated, carefully examined.

⁴ He hath made his wonderful works to be remembered: the LORD is gracious and full of compassion.

⁵ He hath given ^e meat ^b unto them that fear him: he will ever be mindful of his covenant.

⁶ He hath shewed his people the power of his works, that he may give them the heritage of the heathen.

Of all them that have pleasure therein.] By all that delight in them: by every genuine philosopher; every lover of nature; he who traces out the great First Cause by means of his works.

Verse 3. His work is honourable, &c.] He has done nothing in nature or grace that does not redound to his own honour and glory; and because all is done in righteousness, it endureth for ever.

Verse 4. He hath made his wonderful works] The Psalmist may here intend principally the works of God in behalf of the Jewish people; and particularly in their deliverance from the Babylonish captivity, which this psalm is supposed to celebrate.

Verse 5. He hath given meat] PREY. This may allude to the quails in the wilderness. The word signifies what is taken in hunting—wild beasts, venison, or fowls of any kind; particularly such as were proper for food. It also signifies spoil taken from enemies.

Verse 6. The power of his works] They have seen that these things did not arrive in the common course of nature;

7 The works of his hands are ^a verity and judgment; ^b all his commandments are sure.

8 ^c They ^d stand fast for ever and ever, and are ^e done in truth and uprightness.

9 ^f He sent redemption unto his people: he hath it was not by might nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts they were done.

Verse 7. Verity and judgment] His works are verity or truth, because they were wrought for the fulfilment of the promises he made to their fathers. And they were just; for their punishment was in consequence of their infidelities.

Verse 8. They stand fast for ever] They are propped up, buttressed, for ever. They can never fail; for God's power supports his works, and his providence preserves the record of what he has done.

Verse 9. He sent redemption] He sent Moses to redeem them out of Egypt; various judges to deliver them out of the hands of their oppressors; Ezra, Nehemiah, and Zerubbabel, to deliver them from Babylon: and the Lord Jesus to redeem a whole lost world from sin, misery, and death.

Holy and reverend is his name.] The word reverend comes to us from the Latins, reverendus, and is compounded of re, intensive, and vereor, to be feared; and most or right reverend, reverendissimus, signifies to be greatly feared. These terms are now only titles of ecclesiastical respect, especially in the Protestant ministry; but there was a time in which these were no empty titles. Such was the power commanded his covenant for ever: ^a holy and reverend is his name.

10 ^b The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: ^c a good understanding have all they that ^d do his commandments: his praise endureth for ever.

of the clergy, that, when they walked not in the fear of the Lord, they caused the people to fear, and they themselves were to be feared; but, when the secular power was added to the spiritual, they were then truly to be feared and greatly to be feared. But reverend is not applied to God in this way; nor does the word nora bear this signification; it rather means terrible: Holy and terrible, or holy and tremendous, is his name. This title belongs not to man; nor does any minister, in assuming the title reverend, assume this.

Verse 10. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom] The beginning of wisdom is the fear of Jehovah. Wisdom itself begins with this fear; true wisdom has this for its commencement. It is the first ingredient in it, and is an essential part of it.

A good understanding have all they that do his commandments] "The beginning of wisdom is the fear of Jehovah; good discernment to the doers." That is, They who not according to the dictates of wisdom, the commencement of which is the fear of Jehovah, have a sound understanding, discern their duty and their interest, and live to secure their own peace, their neighbour's good, and God's glory.

PSALM CXII.

The blessedness of the man that fears the Lord, both as it regards himself and his family, 1-3; his conduct to his family, his neighbours, and the poor, 4-9; the envy of the wicked at his prosperity, 10.

PRAISE ^a ye the LORD. ^b Blessed is the man that feareth the LORD, that ^c delighteth greatly in his commandments.

2 ^d His seed shall be mighty upon earth: the generation of the upright shall be blessed.

3 ^e Wealth and riches shall be in his house: and his righteousness endureth for ever.

4 ^f Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness: ^g he is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous.

5 ^h A good man sheweth favour, and lendeth: he will guide his affairs ⁱ with ^j discretion.

This is another of the acrostic or alphabetical psalms, under the title Hallelujah. It is formed exactly as the preceding in the division of its verses. It is understood to have been written after the captivity, and probably by Zechariah and Haggai: to them it is ascribed by the Vulgate.

Verse 1. Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord] In the preceding psalm it was asserted that the beginning of wisdom was the fear of the Lord; here the blessedness of the man who thus fears is stated.

That delighteth greatly] It is not enough to fear God, we must also love him: fear will deter us from evil; love will lead us to obedience. And the more a man fears and loves God, the more obedient will he be; till at last he will delight greatly in the commandments of his Maker.

Verse 2. His seed shall be mighty] Zoro, his posterity. So the word should always be understood in this connexion.

Verse 3. Wealth and riches shall be in his house] This is often the case: a godly man must save both time and money. Before he was converted he lost much time, and squandered his money. All this he now saves, and therefore 6 Surely ^a he shall not be moved for ever: ^b the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.

7 ^c He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his ^d heart is fixed, ^e trusting in the LORD.

8 His heart is established, ^f he shall not be afraid until he ^g see his desire upon his enemies.

9 ^h He hath dispersed, he hath given to the poor; ⁱ his righteousness endureth for ever; his ^j horn shall be exalted with honour.

10 ^k The wicked shall see it, and be grieved, ^l he shall gnash with his teeth, and ^m melt away: ⁿ the desire of the wicked shall perish.

wealth and riches must be in his house; and if he do not distribute to the necessities of the poor, they will continue to accumulate till they be his curse; or God will, by his providence, sweep them away. Tzedakah is often used to signify, not only justice and righteousness, but also beneficence and almsgiving; and this is most probably the meaning here. See ver. 9.

Verse 4. There ariseth light in the darkness] The upright are always happy; and when tribulations come, God lifts up the light of his countenance upon him, and causes all occurrences to work together for his good.

He is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous.] He enjoys the favour of God; that grace makes him compassionate; and in the general tenor of his conduct he is righteous.

Verse 7. He shall not be afraid of evil tidings] He knows that God governs the world, therefore he fears not for futurity.

Verse 8. His heart is established] "His heart is propped up," he is buttressed up by the strength of his Maker.

Verse 9. He hath dispersed] He has scattered abroad his munificence; he has given particularly to the poor; his righteousness—his almsgiving, his charity, remaineth for ever.

His horn] His power and authority shall be exalted with honour. He shall rise to influence only through his own worth, and not by extortion or flattery.

Verse 10. The wicked shall see it] Rasha, the wicked one.

Some think Satan is meant. It is distinguished from reshaim, wicked men, in the conclusion of the verse.

Shall gnash with his teeth] Through spite and ill will. And melt away] Through envy and hopeless expectation of similar good; for his desire in reference to himself, and in reference to him who is the object of his envy, shall perish—shall come to nothing.

PSALM CXIII.

An exhortation to bless God for his own excellencies, 1-6; and for his great mercy to the poor and necessitous, 7-9.

PRAISE ye the LORD. ^b Praise, O ye servants of the LORD, praise the name of the LORD.

² Blessed be the name of the LORD from this time forth and for evermore.

³ From the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same the LORD's name is to be praised.

Psalms cxiii., cxiv., cxv., cxvi., cxvii., and cxviii., form the great Hallel, and were sung by the Jews on their most solemn festivals, and particularly at the passover; Matt. xvi. 30, and Mark xiv. 26.

Verse 1. Praise, O ye servants] Probably an address to the Levites.

Verse 3. From the rising of the sun] From morning to evening be always employed in the work. Or it may be a call on all mankind to praise God for his innumerable mercies to the human race. Praise him from one end of the world unto the other.

Verse 4. The Lord is high above all nations] He governs all, he provides for all; therefore let all give him praise.

Verse 5. Who is like unto the Lord] Those who are highly exalted are generally unapproachable; but God, though infinitely exalted, humbleth himself to behold even heaven itself, and much more does he humble himself when he condescends to behold earth and her inhabitants (ver. 6).

Verse 7. He raiseth up the poor] The poorest man, in the meanest and most abject circumstances, is an object of his merciful regards.

Verse 8. With the princes] Nedebim, the most respectable of his people.

Verse 9. He maketh the barren woman to keep house] This is a figure to point out the desolate, decreasing state of the captives in Babylon, and the happy change which took place on their return to their own land. These are nearly the words of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 5.

PSALM CXIV.

Miracles wrought at the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt, at the Red Sea, and at Jordan, 1-6; and at the rock of Horeb, 7, 8.

WHEN Israel went out of Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange language;

² Judah was his sanctuary, and Israel his dominion.

^a Exod. xiii. 3.—^b Ps. lxxxv. 5.—^c Exod. vi. 7. xix. 6. xxv. 8. xxix. 45, 46. Deut. xxvii. 9.

This psalm seems like a fragment, or a part of another psalm. In many MSS. it is only the beginning of the following; both making but one psalm in all the Versions, except the Chaldaee. It is elegantly and energetically composed: but begins and ends very abruptly, if we separate it from the following. As to the author of this psalm, there ³ The sea saw it, and fled: Jordan was driven back.

⁴ The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs.

⁵ What ailed thee, O thou sea, that thou fledst—have been various opinions; some have given the honour of it to Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego; others to Esther; and others to Mordecai.

Verse 1. A people of strange language] This may mean no more than a barbarous people; a people whom they did not know, and who did not worship their God. But it is a fact that the language of the Egyptians in the time of Joseph was so different from that of the Hebrews that they could not understand each other. See Ps. lxxxi. 5; Gen. xlii. 23.

Verse 2. Judah was his sanctuary] He set up his true worship among the Jews, and took them for his peculiar people.

And Israel his dominion.] These words are a proof, were there none other, that this psalm was composed after the days of David, and after the division of the tribes, for then the distinction of Israel and Judah took place.

Verse 5. What ailed thee, O thou sea] The original is very abrupt; and the prosopopœia, or personification, very fine and expressive:—

What to thee, O sea, that thou fleddest away!
 O Jordan, that thou didst roll back!

LORD, at the presence of the God of Jacob;
 8 Which turned the rock into a standing water, the flint into a fountain of waters.

Ps. cvii. 35.

Ye mountains, that ye leaped like rams!
 And ye hills, like the young of the fold!

After these very sublime interrogations, God appears; and the Psalmist proceeds as if answering his own questions:—

At the appearance of the Lord, O earth, thou didst tremble;
 At the appearance of the strong God of Jacob.

Converting the rock into a pool of waters;
 The granite into water springs.

I know the present Hebrew text reads chuli, "tremble thou," in the imperative; but almost all the Versions understood the word in the past tense, and read as if the Psalmist was answering his own questions, as stated in the translation above.

Verse 8. The flint] I have translated challamish, GRANITE; for such is the rock of Horeb.

PSALM CXV.

God alone is to be glorified, 1-3. The vanity of idols, 4-8. Israel, the house of Aaron, and all that fear God are exhorted to trust in the Lord, 9-11. The Lord's goodness to his people, and his gracious promises, 12-16. As the dead cannot praise him, the living should, 17, 18.

NOT unto us, O LORD, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake.

2 Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is now their God?

3 But our God is in the heavens: he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased.

4 Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands.

5 They have mouths, but they speak not: eyes have they, but they see not:

6 They have ears, but they hear not: noses have they, but they smell not:

7 They have hands, but they handle not: feet have they, but they walk not: neither speak they through their throat.

8 They that make them are like unto them; so is every one that trusteth in them.

9 O Israel, trust thou in the LORD: for he is their help and their shield.

* See Isa. xiviii. 11. Ezek. xxxvi. 32.—^b Ps. xlii. 3, 10. lxxix. 10. Joel ii. 17.—^c 1 Chron. xvi. 26. Ps. cxxxv. 6. Dan. iv. 35.—^d Deut. iv. 26. Ps. cxxxv. 15, 16, 17. Jer. x. 3, &c.—^e Ps. cxxxv. 18. Isa. xlv. 9, 10, 11. Jonah ii. 8. Hab. ii. 18, 19.—^f See Ps. cxviii. 2, 3.

Who the author of this psalm was, we know not, nor on what occasion it was written. It seems to be a triumphal song, in which the victory gained is entirely ascribed to Jehovah.

Verse 1. Not unto us, O Lord] We take no merit to ourselves; as thine is the kingdom, and the power in that kingdom, so is the glory.

For thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake.] Thy mercy gave the promise, thy truth fulfilled it.

Verse 2. Wherefore should the heathen say] This appears to refer to a time in which the Israelites had suffered some sad reverses, so as to be brought very low, and to be mocked by the heathen.

Verse 3. He hath done whatsoever he hath pleased.] There was too much cause for his abandoning us to our enemies; yet he still lives and rules in heaven and in earth.

Verse 4. Their idols are silver, &c.] So obviously vain was the whole system of idolatry, that the more serious heathens ridiculed it, and it was a butt for the jests of their freethinkers and buffoons.

10 O house of Aaron, trust in the LORD; he is their help and their shield.

11 Ye that fear the LORD, trust in the LORD: he is their help and their shield.

12 The LORD hath been mindful of us: he will bless us; he will bless the house of Israel; he will bless the house of Aaron.

13 He will bless them that fear the LORD, both small and great.

14 The LORD shall increase you more and more, you and your children.

15 Ye are blessed of the LORD which made heaven and earth.

16 The heaven, even the heavens are the LORD's: but the earth hath he given to the children of men.

17 The dead praise not the LORD, neither any that go down into silence.

18 But we will bless the LORD from this time forth and for evermore. Praise the LORD.

Verse 9. O Israel] The body of the Jewish people.

Verse 10. O house of Aaron] All the different classes of the priesthood.

Verse 11. Ye that fear the Lord] All real penitents, and sincere believers, trust in the Lord, in the Almighty, omniscient, and infinitely good Jehovah.

He is their help and their shield.] He is the succour, support, guardian, and defence of all who put their confidence in him.

Verse 12. The Lord hath been mindful] He has never yet wholly abandoned us to our enemies.

He will bless the house of Israel.] He will bless the people as a nation; he will bless the priesthood and Levites; he will bless all them who fear him, great and small, in whatsoever station or circumstances found. There is a great deal of emphasis in this verse: several words are redoubled to make the subject the more affecting.

Verse 17. The dead praise not the Lord] Hammethim, those dead men who worshipped as gods dumb idols, dying in their sins, worship not Jehovah; nor can any of those who go down into silence praise thee: earth is the place in which to praise the Lord for his mercies, and get a preparation for his glory.

Verse 18. But we will bless the Lord] Our fathers, who received so much from thy bounty, are dead; their tongues are silent in the grave; we are in their place, and wish to magnify thy name, for thou hast dealt bountifully with us.

PSALM CXVI.

The Psalmist praises God for his deliverance from thralldom, which he compares to death and the grave, 1-9. Exercises through which he had passed, 10, 11. His gratitude for these mercies, and resolution to live to God's glory, 12-19.

I LOVE the LORD, because he hath heard my voice and my supplications.

2 Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live.

3 The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell gat hold upon me: I found trouble and sorrow.

4 Then called I upon the name of the LORD; O LORD, I beseech thee, deliver my soul.

5 Gracious is the LORD, and righteous; yea, our God is merciful.

6 The LORD preserveth the simple: I was brought low, and he helped me.

7 Return unto thy rest, O my soul: for the LORD hath dealt bountifully with thee.

8 For thou hast delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling.

9 I will walk before the LORD in the land of the living.

10 I believed, therefore have I spoken: I was greatly afflicted:

11 I said in my haste, All men are liars.

12 What shall I render unto the LORD for all his benefits toward me?

13 I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the LORD.

14 I will pay my vows unto the LORD now in the presence of all his people.

15 Precious in the sight of the LORD is the death of his saints.

16 O LORD, truly I am thy servant; I am thy servant, and the son of thine handmaid: thou hast loosed my bonds.

17 I will offer to thee the sacrifice of thanksgiving, and will call upon the name of the LORD.

18 I will pay my vows unto the LORD now in the presence of all his people, 19 In the courts of the LORD's house, in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem. Praise ye the LORD.

This psalm appears to have been written after the captivity, and to be a thanksgiving to God for that glorious event. The Psalmist compares this captivity to death and the grave; and shows the happy return to the promised land, called here The land of the living.

Verse 1. I love the Lord, because he hath heard] How vain and foolish is the talk, "To love God for his benefits to us is mercenary, and cannot be pure love!" Whether pure or impure, there is no other love that can flow from the heart of the creature to its Creator. We love him, said the holiest of Christ's disciples, because he first loved us; and the increase of our love and filial obedience is in proportion to the increased sense we have of our obligation to him.

Verse 2. Because he hath inclined his ear] The Psalmist represents himself to be so sick and weak, that he could scarcely speak. The Lord, in condescension to this weakness, is here considered as bowing down his ear to the mouth of the feeble suppliant, that he may receive every word of his prayer.

Therefore will I call upon him] He that prays much will be emboldened to pray more, because none can supplicate the throne of grace in vain.

Verse 3. The sorrows of death] The cables or cords of death; alluding to their bonds and fetters during their captivity; or to the cords by which a criminal is bound, who is about to be led out to execution; or to the bandages in which the dead were enveloped, when head, arms, body, and limbs were all laced down together.

The pains of hell] The straitnesses of the grave. So little expectation was there of life, that he speaks as if he were condemned, executed, and closed up in the tomb. Or, he may refer here to the small niches in cemeteries, where the coffins of the dead were placed.

Verse 5. Gracious is the Lord] In his own nature.

And righteous] In all his dealings with men.

Our God is merciful.] Of tender compassion to all penitents.

Verse 6. The Lord preserveth the simple] The little ones. Those who are meek and lowly of heart, who feel the spirit of little children, these he preserves, as he does little children; and he mentions this circumstance, because the Lord has a peculiar regard for these young ones, and gives his angels charge concerning them.

Verse 7. Return unto thy rest, O my soul] God is the centre to which all immortal spirits tend, and in connexion with which alone they can find rest. Every thing separated from its centre is in a state of violence; and, if intelligent, cannot be happy. Probably, the rest spoken of here meant the promised land, into which they were now returning.

Verse 8. Thou hast delivered my soul from death] Thou hast rescued my life from the destruction to which it was exposed.

Mine eyes from tears] Thou hast turned my sorrow into joy.

My feet from falling.] Thou hast taken me out of the land of snares and pitfalls, and brought me into a plain path.

Verse 9. I will walk before the Lord] I will set myself to walk. I am determined to walk; my eyes are now brightened, so that I can see; my feet are strengthened, so that I can walk; and my soul is alive, so that I can walk with the living.

Verse 10. I believed, therefore have I spoken] Distressed and afflicted as I was, I ever believed thy promises to be true; but I had great struggles to maintain my confidence; for my afflictions were great, oppressive, and of long standing.

Verse 11. I said in my haste] When passion got the better of my reason, when I looked not at God, but at my afflictions, and the impossibility of human relief.

All men are liars.] "The whole of man is a lie." Falsity is diffused through his nature; deception proceeds from his tongue; his actions are often counterfeited. He is imposed on by others, and imposes in his turn; and on none is there any dependence till God converts their hearts.

Verse 12. For all his benefits] "His retributions," the returns he had made to my prayers and faith.

Verse 13. I will take the cup of salvation] Literally, The cup of salvation, or deliverance, will I lift up. Alluding to the action in taking the cup of blessing among the Jews, which, when the person or master of the family lifted up, he said these words, "Blessed be the Lord, the Maker of the world, who has created the fruit of the vine?"

But it may probably allude to the libation-offering, Numb. xxviii. 7. Cup is often used by the Hebrews to denote plenty or abundance. So, the cup of trembling, an abundance of misery; the cup of salvation, an abundance of happiness.

And call upon the name of the Lord.] One reason why we should never more come to a fellow-mortals for a favour is, we have received so many already. A strong reason why we should claim the utmost salvation of God is, because we are already so much in debt to his mercy. Now this is the only way we have of discharging our debts to God; and yet, strange to tell, every such attempt to discharge the debt only serves to increase it!

Verse 14. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people.] He was probably now bringing his offering to the temple.

Verse 15. Precious in the sight of the Lord] Many have understood this verse as meaning, "the saints are too precious in the Lord's sight, lightly to give them over to death."

Vers 16. I am thy servant] I am thy willing domestic, the son of thine handmaid—like one born in thy house of a woman already thy property. He alludes here to the case of the servant who, in the year of jubilee being entitled to his liberty, refused to leave his master's house; and suffered his ear to be bored to the door-post, as a proof that by his own consent he agreed to continue in his master's house for ever.

Verse 17. I will offer to thee] As it is most probable that this psalm celebrates the deliverance from Babylon, it is no wonder that we find the Psalmist so intent on performing the rites of his religion in the temple at Jerusalem, which had been burnt with fire, and was now reviving out of its ruins, the temple service having been wholly interrupted for nearly fourscore years.

Verse 19. In the midst of thee, O Jerusalem.] He speaks as if present in the city, offering his vowed sacrifices in the temple to the Lord.

Most of this psalm has been applied to our Lord and his church; and in this way it has been considered as prophetic; and, taken thus, it is innocently accommodated, and is very edifying.

PSALM CXVII.

The Psalmist calls upon the nations of the world to praise the Lord for his mercy and kindness, and for the fulfilment of his promises, 1, 2.

O PRAISE the LORD, all ye nations: praise him, all ye people.
2 For his merciful kindness is great toward us: and the ^b truth of the LORD endureth for ever. Praise ye the LORD.

^a Rom. xv. 11.

^b Ps. c. 5.

This is the shortest psalm in the whole collection. It celebrates the redemption from the Babylonish captivity, the grand type of the redemption of the world by our Lord Jesus.

Verse 1. O praise the Lord, all ye nations] Let all the Gentiles praise him, for he provides for their eternal salvation.

Praise him, all ye people.] All ye Jews, praise him; for ye have long been his peculiar people.

Verse 2. For his merciful kindness is great] Gabar, is strong: it is not only great in bulk or number, but it is powerful; it prevails over sin, Satan, death, and hell.

And the truth of the Lord endureth for ever.] Whatsoever he has promised, that he will most infallibly fulfil.

PSALM CXVIII.

general exhortation to praise God for his mercy, 1-4. The Psalmist, by his own experience, encourages the people to trust in God, and shows them the advantage of it, 5-9; then describes his enemies, and shows how God enabled him to destroy them, 10-14. The people rejoice on the account, 15, 16. He speaks again of the help he received from the Lord; and desires admission into the temple, that he may enter and praise the Lord, 17-19. The gate is opened, 20. He offers praise. The priests, &c. acknowledge the hand of the Lord in the deliverance wrought, 21-24. The Psalmist prays for prosperity, 25. The priest performs his office, blesses the people, and all join in praise, 26, 27. The Psalmist expresses his confidence, 28. The general doxology, or chorus, 29.

O ^a GIVE thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: because his mercy endureth for ever.

Most probably David was the author of this psalm, though many think it was written after the captivity. It partakes of David's spirit, and everywhere shows the hand of a master. The style is grand and noble; the subject, majestic. It is the last of those psalms which form the great hallel, which the Jews sung at the end of the passover.

Verse 2. Let Israel now say] Seeing the hand of the Lord so visibly, and the deliverance gained, that God's mercy endureth for ever.

Verse 3. The house of Aaron] The priesthood is still preserved, and the temple worship restored.

Verse 4. That fear the Lord] All sincere penitents and genuine believers.

Verse 5. I called upon the Lord] I am a standing proof and living witness of God's mercy. Take encouragement from me.

Verse 7. The Lord taketh my part with them that help me] Literally, The Lord is to me among my helpers. And I shall look among them that hate me. As God is on my side, I fear not to look the whole of them in the face. I shall see them defeated.

Verse 8. Better to trust in the Lord] Man is feeble, ignorant, fickle, and capricious; it is better to trust in Jehovah than in such.

Verse 9. In princes.] Men of high estate are generally proud, vain-glorious, self-confident, and rash: it is better to trust in God than in them. Often they cannot deliver, and often they will not when they can.

Verse 10. All nations compassed me about] This is by some supposed to relate to David, at the commencement of his reign, when all the neighbouring Philistine nations endeavoured to prevent him from establishing himself in the kingdom. Others suppose it may refer to the Samaritans, Idumeans, Ammonites, and others, who endeavoured to prevent the Jews from rebuilding their city and their temple after their return from captivity in Babylon.

Verse 13. Thou hast thrust sore at me] In pushing thou hast pushed me that I might fall.

But the Lord helped me.] Though he possessed skill, courage, and strength, yet these could not have prevailed had not God been his helper; and to him he gives the glory of the victory.

Verse 15. The voice of rejoicing.] Formerly there was nothing but wailings; but now there is universal joy because of the salvation—the deliverance, which God has wrought for us.

Verse 16. The right hand of the Lord is exalted.] Jehovah lifted up his right hand, and with it performed prodigies of power.

Verse 17. I shall not die.] I was nigh unto death; but I am preserved,—preserved to publish the wondrous works of the Lord.

Verse 19. Open to me the gates.] Throw open the doors of the temple, that I may enter and perform my vows unto the Lord.

Verse 20. This gate of the Lord.] Supposed to be the answer of the Levites to the request of the king.

Verse 21. I will praise thee.] He is now got within the gates, and breaks out into thanksgivings for the mercies he had received. He is become my salvation—he himself hath saved me from all mine enemies.

Verse 22, 23. The stone which the builders refused.] See a full elucidation of these two verses in the notes on Matt. xxi. 42.

Verse 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made.] As the Lord hath called me to triumph, this is the day which he hath appointed for that purpose. This is a gracious opportunity; I will improve it to his glory.

Verse 25. Save now, I beseech thee.] These words were sung by the Jews on the feast of tabernacles, when carrying green branches in their hands; and from the hosannah now, we have the word hosanna. This was sung by the Jewish children when Christ made his public entry into Jerusalem.

Verse 26. We have blessed you] The answer of the Levites to the king.

Verse 27. God is the Lord] Rather El Yehovah, the strong God Jehovah.

Which hath shewed us light] "And he will illuminate us." Perhaps at this time a divine splendour shone upon the whole procession; a proof of God's approbation.

Bind the sacrifice with cords] It is supposed that the words refer to the feast of tabernacles, and drag here means the festival victim. Several translate the original "keep the festival with thick boughs of the horns of the altar." In this sense the Vulgate and Septuagint understood this passage. David in this entry into the temple was a type of our blessed Lord, who made a similar entry, as related Matt. xxi. 8-10.

Verse 29. O give thanks unto the Lord] This is the general doxology or chorus. All join in thanksgiving, and they end as they began: "His mercy endureth for ever." It began at the creation of man; it will continue till the earth is burnt up.

PSALM CXIX.

The various excellencies and important uses of the law or revelation of God.

ALEPH.

BLESSED are the ^aundefiled in the way, ^bwho walk in the law of the Lord.

2 Blessed are they that keep his testimonies and that seek him with the whole heart.

3 They also do no iniquity: they walk in his ways.

4 Thou hast commanded us to ^dkeep thy precepts diligently.

5 O that my ways were directed to ^ekeep thy statutes!

6 Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all thy commandments.

7 I will praise thee with uprightness of heart, when I shall have learned ^hthy righteous judgments.

8 I will keep thy statutes: O forsake me not utterly.

BETH.

9 Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word.

10 With my whole heart have I ⁱsought thee: O let me not ^jwander from thy commandments.

11 Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee.

This is another of the alphabetical or acrostic psalms. It is divided into twenty-two parts, answering to the number of letters in the Hebrew alphabet. Every part is divided into eight verses; and each verse begins with that letter of the alphabet which forms the title of the part. All connection, as might be naturally expected, is sacrificed to this artificial and methodical arrangement.

The words which express that revelation which God had then given to men, or some particular characteristic of it, are generally reckoned to be the ten following:

I. THE LAW, TORAH, from ayah, to direct, guide, teach, make straight or even, point forward, because it guides, directs, and instructs in the way of righteousness; makes our path straight, shows what is even and right, and points us onward to peace, truth, and happiness.

II. STATUTES, CHUKKIM, from chak, to mark, trace out, describe, and ordain; because they mark out our way, describe the line of conduct we are to pursue, and order or ordain what we are to observe.

III. PRECEPTS, PIKKUDIM, from pakad, to take notice or care of a thing, to attend, have respect to, to appoint, to visit; because they take notice of our way, have respect to the whole of our life and conversation, superintend, overlook, and visit us in all the concerns and duties of life.

IV. COMMANDMENTS, MITSVOT, from tsavah, to command, order, ordain; because they show us what we should do, 12 Blessed art thou, O LORD: ¹teach me thy statutes.

13 With my lips have I ^mdeclared all the judgments of thy mouth.

14 I have rejoiced in the way of thy testimonies, as much as in all riches.

15 I will ⁿmeditate in thy precepts, and have respect unto thy ways.

16 I will ^odelight myself in thy statutes: I will not forget thy word.

GIMEL.

17 Deal bountifully with thy servant, that I may live, and keep thy word.

18 Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.

19 I am a stranger in the earth: hide not thy commandments from me.

20 My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times.

21 Thou hast rebuked the proud that are cursed, which do ^rerr from thy commandments.

22 Remove from me reproach and contempt; for I have kept thy testimonies.

23 Princes also did sit and speak against me: but thy servant did ^smeditate in thy statutes.

and what we should leave undone, and exact our obedience. V. TESTIMONIES, EDOT, from ad, denoting beyond, further, all along, to bear witness or testimony. The rites and ceremonies of the law; because they point out matters beyond themselves, being types and representations of the good things that were to come.

VI. JUDGMENTS, MISHPATIM, from shaphat, to judge, determine, regulate, order, and discern: because they judge concerning our words and works; show the rules by which they should be regulated; and cause us to discern what is right and wrong, and decide accordingly.

VII. TRUTH, EMUNAH, from aman, to make steady, constant, to settle, trust, believe. The law that is established, steady, confirmed, and ordered in all things, and sure; which should be believed on the authority of God, and trusted to as an infallible testimony from Him who cannot lie nor deceive.

VIII. WORD, DABAR, from the same root, to discourse, utter one's sentiments, speak consecutively and intelligibly; in which it appears to differ from malah, to utter articulate sounds. Any prophecy or immediate communication from heaven, as well as the whole body of divine revelation, is emphatically called dabar Yehovah, the word of Jehovah.

IX. WAY, DEREC, from the same root, to proceed, go on, walk, tread. The way in which God goes in order to instruct and save man; the way in which man must tread in 24 Thy testimonies also are my delight and my counsellors.

DALETH.

25 My soul cleaveth unto the dust: quicken thou me according to thy word.

26 I have declared my ways, and thou heardest me: * teach me thy statutes.

27 Make me to understand the way of thy precepts: so shall I talk of thy wondrous works.

28 My soul melteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me according unto thy word.

29 Remove from me the way of lying: and grant me thy law graciously.

30 I have chosen the way of truth: thy judgments have I laid before me.

order to be safe, holy, and happy. God's manner of acting or proceeding in providence and grace; and the way that man should take in order to answer the end of his creation and redemption.

X. RIGHTEOUSNESS, TSEDAKAH, from tsadak, to do justice, to give full weight. That which teaches a man to give to all their due; to give GOD his due, MAN his due, and HIMSELF, his due; for every man has duties to God, his neighbour, and himself, to perform. This word is applied to God's judgments, testimonies, and commandments: they are all righteous, give to all their due, and require what is due from every one.

The three words, which some add here, are, 1. FAITHFULNESS, EMUNAH: but see this under No. VII.; nor does it appear in ver. 90, where it occurs, to be used as a characteristic of God's law, but rather his exact fulfilment of his promises to man.

The second is JUDGMENT mishpat. See this under No. VI.: it occurs in ver. 84 and 121: "When wilt thou execute judgment," &c.; but is not used in those places as one of the ten words.

The third is NAME, shem, see ver. 132: but this is no characteristic of God's law; it refers here simply to himself. Those that love thy NAME is the same as those that love THEE.

We might, and with much more propriety, add a fourth, IMRAH, from amar, to branch out, spread, or diffuse itself, as the branches of a tree; and which is often used for a word spoken, a speech. This often occurs in the Psalm; and we regularly translate it word, and put no difference or distinction between it and dabar, No. VIII.: but it is not exactly the same; dabar may apply more properly to history, relation, description, and such like; while imra-thecha, thy word, may mean an immediate oracle, delivered solemnly from God to his prophet for the instruction of men. But the two words appear often indifferently used; and it would not be easy to ascertain the different shades of meaning between these two roots.

Though the most judicious interpreters assign this Psalm to the times of the Babylonish captivity; yet there are so many things in it descriptive of David's state, experience, and affairs, that I am led to think it might have come from his pen; or if composed at or under the captivity, was formed out of his notes and memoranda.

LETTER ALEPH.—First Division.

Verse 1. Blessed are the undefiled in the way] "O the blessedness of the perfect ones in the way." By the perfect, we are to understand those who sincerely believe what God has spoken, observe all the rules and ceremonies of his religion, and have their lives and hearts regulated by the spirit of love, fear, and obedience.

Verse 8. They also do no iniquity] They avoid all idolatry, injustice, and wrong; and they walk in God's ways, not in those ways to which an evil heart might entice them, nor those in which the thoughtless and the profligate tread.

Verse 4. Thy precepts diligently.] Meod, "superlatively, to the uttermost." God has never given a commandment, the observance of which he knew to be impossible. And to whatsoever he has commanded he requires obedience; and his grace is sufficient for us.

31 I have stuck unto thy testimonies: O LORD put me not to shame.

32 I will run the way of thy commandments when thou shalt enlarge my heart.

HE.

33 Teach me, O LORD, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keep it unto the end.

34 Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law; yea, I shall observe it with my whole heart.

35 Make me to go in the path of thy commandments; for therein do I delight.

36 Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to covetousness.

37 Turn away mine eyes from beholding

ii. 26.—^a Ver. 73. Prov. ii. 6. James i. 5.—^b Ver. 16.—^c Ezek. xxxii. 31. Mark vii. 21, 22. Luke xii. 15. 1 Tim. vi. 10. Heb. xiii. 5.—^d Isa. xxxiii. 15.—^e Heb. make to pass.—^f Prov. xxiii. 5.

Verse 5. O that my ways were directed] Without thee I can do nothing; my soul is unstable and fickle; and it will continue weak and uncertain till thou strengthen and establish it.

Verse 6. Then shall I not be ashamed] If a man who fears God is so unhappy as to fall into sin, his conscience reproaches him, and he is ashamed before God and man. This is a full proof that God's Spirit has not utterly departed from him, and that he may repent, believe, and be healed.

Unto all thy commandments.] Allow that any of God's commandments may be transgressed, and we shall soon have the whole decalogue set aside.

Verse 8. O forsake me not utterly.] Ad meod, "to utter dereliction;" never leave me to my own strength, nor to my own heart!

LETTER BETH.—Second Division.

Verse 9. A young man cleanse his way?] Orach, which we translate way here, signifies a track, a rut, such as is made by the wheel of a cart or chariot. A young sinner has no broad beaten path; he has his private ways of offence; and how shall he be cleansed from these? how can he be saved from what will destroy mind, body, and soul?

1. He is to consider that his way is impure; and how abominable this must make him appear in the sight of God.

2. He must examine it according to God's word, and carefully hear what God has said concerning him and it.

3. He must take heed to it, to keep, guard, and preserve his way—his general course of life, from all defilement.

Verse 10. With my whole heart have I sought thee] 4. He must seek God; make earnest prayer and supplication to him for divine light, for a tender conscience, and for strength to walk uprightly. 5. His whole heart; all his affections must be engaged here, or he cannot succeed. 6. He must take care to keep in the path of duty, of abstinence and self-denial; not permitting either his eye, his hand, or his heart to wander from the commandments of his Maker.

Verse 11. Thy word have I hid in mine heart] 7. He must treasure up those portions of God's word in his mind and heart which speak against uncleanness of every kind; and that recommend purity, chastity, and holiness. The word of Christ should dwell richly in him. If God's word be only in his Bible, and not also in his heart, he may soon and easily be surprised into his besetting sin.

Verse 12. Blessed art thou] 8. He must acknowledge the mercy of God, in so far preserving him from all the consequences of his sin. 9. He should beg of him to become his teacher, that his heart and conscience might be instructed in the spirituality of his statutes.

Verse 18. With my lips have I declared] 10. He should declare to his own heart, and to all his companions in iniquity, God's judgments against himself and them; that if his long-suffering mercy have not made a proper impression on their hearts, they may tremble at his approaching judgments.

Verse 14. I have rejoiced] 11. He must consider it his chief happiness to be found in the path of obedience, giving his whole heart and strength to God; and when enabled to do it, he should rejoice more in it than if he had gained thousands of gold and silver. O how great is the treasure of a tender and approving conscience!

Verse 15. I will meditate] 12. He should encourage self-vanity; and quicken thou me in thy way.

 38 Establish thy word unto thy servant, who is devoted to thy fear.
 39 Turn away my reproach, which I fear: for thy judgments are good.
 40 Behold, I have longed after thy precepts: quicken me in thy righteousness.

* Ver. 40.—2 Sam. vii. 25.—Ver. 20.—4 Ver. 23, 37, 88, 107, 149, 158, 159.—Pa. evi. 4. Ver. 77.

examination and reflection; and meditate frequently on God's words, works, and ways; and especially on his gracious dealings towards him. 13. He should keep his eye upon God's steps; setting the example of his Saviour before his eyes, going where he would go, and nowhere else; doing what he would do, and nothing else; keeping the company that he would keep, and none else; and doing every thing in reference to the final judgment.

Verse 18. I will delight myself] The word is very emphatical: eshtaasha, I will skip about and jump for joy. 14. He must exult in God's word as his treasure, live in the spirit of obedience as his work, and ever glory in God, who has called him to such a state of salvation. 15. He must never forget what God has done for him, done in him, and promised farther to do; and he must not forget the promises he has made, and the vows of the Lord that are upon him. Any young man who attends to these fifteen particulars will get his way cleansed; victory over his sin; and, if he abide faithful to the Lord that brought him, an eternal heaven at last among them that are sanctified.

LETTER GIMEL.—Third Division.

Verse 17. Deal bountifully] Gemol, reward thy servant. Let him have the return of his faith and prayers, that the divine life may be preserved in his soul! Then he will keep thy word.

Verse 18. Open thou mine eyes] The Holy Scriptures are plain enough; but the heart of man is darkened by sin. The Bible does not so much need a comment, as the soul does the light of the Holy Spirit.

Verse 19. I am a stranger in the earth] In the land. Being obliged to wander about from place to place, I am like a stranger even in my own country.

Verse 20. My soul breaketh] It expresses excessive longing, grievous disappointment, hopeless love, accumulated sorrow. By this we may see the hungering and thirsting which the Psalmist had after righteousness, often mingled with much despondency.

Verse 21. Thou hast rebuked the proud] This was done often in the case of David; and was true also in reference to the Babylonians, who held the Israelites in subjection, and whose kings were among the proudest of human beings.

Verse 22. Remove from me reproach and contempt] Of these the captives in Babylon had a more than ordinary load.

Verse 23. Princes also did sit] It is very likely that the nobles of Babylon did often, by wicked misrepresentations, render the minds of the kings of the empire evil affected towards the Jews.

Verse 24. Thy testimonies also are—my counsellors.] "The men of my counsel." I sit with them; and I consider every testimony thou hast given as a particular counsellor; one whose advice I especially need.

LETTER DALETH.—Fourth Division.

Verse 25. My soul cleaveth unto the dust] It would be best to translate naphshi, my life; and then cleaving to the dust may imply an apprehension of approaching death; and this agrees best with the petition.

Quicken thou me] "Take me alive." Keep me from going down into the dust.

Verse 26. I have declared my ways] "I have numbered my ways;" I have searched them out; I have investigated them. And that he had earnestly prayed for pardon of what was wrong in them, is evident; for he adds, "Thou heardest me."

Verse 28. My soul melteth] As my distresses cause the tears to distil from my eyes, so the overwhelming load of my afflictions causes my life to ebb and leak out.

Verse 29. The way of lying] The propensity to falsity and perjurication; whatsoever is contrary to truth. Re-

VAU.

41 Let thy mercies come also unto me, O LORD, even thy salvation, according to thy word.

42 So shall I have wherewith to answer him that reproacheth me: for I trust in thy word.

43 And take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth; for I have hoped in thy judgments.

*Or, So shall I answer him that reproacheth me in a thing.

move me from its solicitations, and remove it from me. Verse 31. I have stuck] I have cleaved to, been glued to them: the same word as in ver. 25.

O Lord, put me not to shame.] Let my sins and follies be blotted out by thy mercy; and so hide and cover them that they shall never appear, either in this or the coming world, to my shame and confusion!

Verse 32. I will run] The particle which we translate when, should be translated because: Because thou shalt enlarge, or dilate, my heart; make plain my path by cleansing me from my impurity, and taking the hindrances out of my way. I will then run without dread of stumbling, and every day make sensible progress.

LETTER HE.—Fifth Division.

Verse 33. Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes] To understand the spiritual reference of all the statutes, &c., under the law, required a teaching which could only come from God.

I shall keep it unto the end.] He wishes for heavenly teaching; not to make a parade of it, but to enable him to discern his duty, that he might act accordingly.

Verse 34. With my whole heart.] I will not trifle with my God, I will not divide my affections with the world; God shall have all.

Verse 36. Not to covetousness.] Let me have no inordinate love for gain of any kind, nor for anything that may grieve thy-Spirit, or induce me to seek my happiness here below.

Verse 37. From beholding vanity] An idol, worldly pleasure, beauty, finery; anything that is vain, empty, or transitory. Let me not behold it; let me not dwell upon it.

Verse 38. Stablish thy word] Fulfil the promises thou hast made to me.

Verse 39. Turn away my reproach, which I fear] This may be understood of the reproach which a man may meet with in consequence of living a godly life, for such a life was never fashionable in any time or country.

Verse 40. Behold, I have longed] Thou knowest that I have long desired thy salvation; thou seest that this desire still remains.

Quicken me] I am dying; O give me the spirit of life in Christ Jesus!

* LETTER VAU.—Sixth Division.

Verse 41. Let thy mercies come] Let me speedily see the accomplishment of all my prayers!

Verse 42. So shall I have wherewith to answer] Men say, "My hope in thy mercy is vain."

Verse 43. Take not the word of truth] Grant that the assurances which thy prophets have given to the people of approaching deliverance may not fall to the ground.

Verse 45. I will walk at liberty] When freed from the present bondage, we shall rejoice in obedience to thy testimonies; we shall delight to keep all thy ordinances.

Verse 46. I will speak—before kings] These words may with propriety be referred to the case of Daniel, and other bold and faithful Israelites, who spoke courageously before Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, and Darius.

Verse 47. Thy commandments, which I have loved.] O shame to Christians who feel so little affection to the gospel of Christ, when we see such cordial, conscientious, and inviolate attachment in a Jew to the laws and ordinances of Moses, that did not afford a thousandth part of the privileges!

Verse 48. My hands also will I lift up] I will make prayer and supplication before thee, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting.

LETTER ZAIN.—Seventh Division.

Verse 49. Remember the word] Thou hast promised to 44 So shall I keep thy law continually for ever and ever.

45 And I will walk ^aat liberty: for I seek thy precepts.

46 ^bI will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed.

47 And I will ^cdelight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved.

48 My hands also will I lift up unto thy commandments, which I have loved; and I will ^dmeditate in thy statutes.

ZAIN.

49 Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to ^ehope.

50 This is my ^fcomfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me.

51 The proud have had me greatly ^gin derision: yet have I not ^hdeclined from thy law.

52 I remembered thy judgments of old, O LORD; and have comforted myself.

53 ⁱHorror hath taken hold upon me, because of the wicked that forsake thy law.

redeem us from our captivity; on that word we have built our hope.

Verse 50. This is my comfort] While enduring our harsh captivity, we anticipated our enlargement; and thy word of promise was the means of keeping our souls alive.

Verse 51. The proud have had me] We have been treated not only with oppressive cruelty, but also with contempt, because we still professed to trust in thee; yet we have not declined from thy law.

Verse 52. I remembered thy judgments of old] The word judgments is here taken for providential dealing; and indeed kind treatment; that which God showed to the Hebrews in bearing with and blessing them.

Verse 53. Horror hath taken hold upon me] The word zilaphah is thought to signify the pestilential burning wind called by the Arabs simoom. Here it strongly marks the idea that the Psalmist had of the destructive nature of sin; it is pestilential; it is corrupting, mortal.

Verse 54. Thy statutes have been my songs] During our captivity all our consolation was derived from singing thy praises, and chanting among our fellow-captives portions of thy law, and the precepts it contains.

Verse 55. I have remembered thy name] In the deepest night of our affliction this has consoled me.

Verse 56. This I had, because I kept thy precepts.] Though thou didst leave us under the power of our enemies yet thou hast not left us without the consolations of thy Spirit.

LETTER CHETH.—Eighth Division.

Verse 57. Thou art my portion, O Lord] From the fifty-seventh to the sixtieth verse may be seen the progress of the work of grace on the human heart, from the first dawn of heavenly light till the soul is filled with the fulness of God. But as I consider this psalm as notes selected from diaries of past experience, formed at different times; and that the author has been obliged, for the support of his acrostic plan, to interchange circumstances, putting that sometimes behind which in the order of grace comes before; because to put it in its right place, the letters would not accord with the alphabetical arrangement; I shall therefore follow what I conceive to be its order in the connexion of grace, and not in the order in which the words are here laid down.

Verse 59. First.—I thought on my ways] I viewed my conduct on all sides. The word, as usual here, is a metaphor taken from embroidering, where the figure must appear the same on the one side as it does on the other; therefore, the cloth must be turned on each side every time the needle is put in, to see that the stitch be fairly set.

Secondly.—And turned my feet unto thy testimonies.] Having made the above discovery, and finding himself under 56 This I had, because I kept thy precepts.

CHETH.

57 ^kThou art my portion, O LORD: I have said that I would keep thy words.

58 I entreated thy ^lfavour with my whole heart: be merciful unto me ^maccording to thy word.

59 I ⁿthought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies.

60 I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.

61 The ^obands of the wicked have robbed me: but I have not forgotten thy law.

62 ^pAt midnight I will rise to give thanks unto thee because of thy righteous judgments.

63 I am a companion of all them that fear thee, and of them that keep thy precepts.

64 ^qThe earth, O LORD, is full of thy mercy: ^rteach me thy statutes.

TETH.

65 Thou hast dealt well with thy servant, O LORD, according unto thy word.

the displeasure of God, he abandoned every evil way, took God's word for his directory, and set out fairly in the way of life and salvation.

Verse 60. THIRDLY.—I made haste, and delayed not] He did this with the utmost speed; and did not trifle with his convictions, nor seek to drown the voice of conscience.

The original word, which we translate delayed not, is amazingly emphatical: I did not stand what-what-what; or, as we use to express the same sentiment, shilly-shally with myself: I was determined, and so set out. The Hebrew word, as well as the English, strongly marks indecision of mind, positive action being suspended, because the mind is so unfixed as not to be able to make a choice.

Verse 58. FOURTHLY.—He found he had sinned; that he needed mercy; that he had no time to lose; that he must be importunate; and therefore he sought that mercy with all his soul.

FIFTHLY.—Feeling that he deserved nothing but wrath, that he had no right to any good, he cries for mercy in the way that God had promised to convey it: "Be merciful unto me!" And to this he is encouraged only by the promise of God; and therefore prays, "Be merciful unto me according to thy word."

Verse 57. SIXTHLY.—To keep himself firm in his present resolutions, he binds himself unto the Lord. "I have said that I would keep thy words." Thy vows are upon me, and I must not add to my guilt by breaking them.

SEVENTHLY.—He did not seek in vain; God reveals himself in the fulness of blessedness to him, so that he is enabled to exclaim, Thou art my portion, O Lord!

Verse 61. The bands of the wicked have robbed me] The cables, cords, or snares of the wicked. They have hunted us like wild beasts; many they have taken for prey, and many they have destroyed.

Verse 62. At midnight I will rise] We are so overpowered with a sense of thy goodness, that in season and out of season we will return thee thanks.

Verse 63. I am a companion] This was the natural consequence of his own conversion; he abandoned the workers of iniquity, and associated with them that feared the Lord.

Verse 64. The earth—is full of thy mercy] When Christ dwells in the heart by faith, we have nothing but goodness around us. Others may complain; but to us even the earth appears full of the mercy of the Lord.

Verse 65. Thou hast dealt well with thy servant] Whatever thy word has promised, thou hast fulfilled.

Verse 66. Teach me good judgment and knowledge] Teach me (to have) a good taste and discernment. Let me see and 69 The proud have ^d forged a lie against me: but I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart.

know the importance of divine things, and give me a relish for them.

Verse 67. Before I was afflicted I went astray] Affliction sanctified is a great blessing; un sanctified, it is an additional curse.

Verse 68. Thou art good] And because thou art good, thou doest good; and because thou delightest to do good, teach me thy statutes.

Verse 69. The proud have forged a lie] The poor captives in Babylon had their conduct and motives continually misrepresented, and themselves belied and calumniated.

Verse 70. Their heart is as fat as grease] They are egregiously stupid; they have fed themselves without fear; they are become flesh-brutalized, and given over to vile affections, and have no kind of spiritual relish: but I delight in thy law—I have, through thy goodness, a spiritual feeling and a spiritual appetite.

Verse 72. The law of thy mouth is better] Who can say this? Who prefers the law of his God, the Christ that bought him, and the heaven to which he hopes to go, when he can live no longer upon earth, to thousands of gold and silver? Yea, how many are there who, like Judas, sell their Saviour even for thirty pieces of silver?

As the letter teth begins but few words, not forty, in the Hebrew language, there is less variety under this division than under any of the preceding.

LETTER YOD.—Tenth Division.

Verse 73. Thy hands have made me] Thou hast formed the mass out of which I was made; and hast given me that particular form that distinguishes me from all thy other creatures.

Give me understanding] As thou hast raised me above the beasts that perish, teach me that I may live for a higher and nobler end, in loving, serving, and enjoying thee for ever. Show me that I was made for heaven, not for earth.

Verse 74. They that fear thee] They who are truly religious will be glad—will rejoice, at this farther proof of the saving power of God.

Verse 75. I know—that thy judgments are right] All the dispensations of thy providence are laid in wisdom, and executed in mercy: let me see that it is through this wisdom and mercy that I have been afflicted.

Verse 76. Thy merciful kindness] Let me derive my comfort and happiness from a diffusion of thy love and mercy, chasdecha, thy exuberant goodness, through my soul.

Verse 77. Let thy tender mercies] Rachameycha, thy fatherly and affectionate feelings.

Verse 78. Let the proud be ashamed] To reduce a proud man to shame, is to humble him indeed. Let them be confounded. Without cause—without any colourable pretext, have they persecuted me.

Verse 79. Let those that fear thee] The truly pious. Turn unto me] Seeing thy work upon me, they shall acknowledge me as a ^b, and plucked from the burning.

Verse 80. Let my heart be sound in thy statutes] Let it 74 ^k They that fear thee will be glad when they see me; because ^l I have hoped in thy word.

75 I know, O LORD, that thy judgments are ^m right, and ⁿ that thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me.

76 Let, I pray thee, thy merciful kindness be ^o for my comfort, according to thy word unto thy servant.

77 ^p Let thy tender mercies come unto me, that I may live: for ^q thy law is my delight.

78 Let the proud ^r be ashamed; ^s for they dealt perversely with me without a cause: but I will ^t meditate in thy precepts.

79 Let those that fear thee turn unto me, and those that have known thy testimonies.

Verse 82. Mine eyes fail] With looking up for the fulfilment of thy promise, as my heart fails in longing after thy presence.

Verse 83. Like a bottle in the smoke] In the eastern countries their bottles are made of skins; one of these hung in the smoke must soon be parched and shrivelled up.

Verse 84. How many are the days of thy servant?] Dost thou not know that I have few to live, and they are full of trouble?

When wilt thou execute judgment on them that persecute me?] Shall not the pride of the Chaldeans be brought down, the arm of their strength be broken, and thy people delivered?

Verse 85. The proud have digged pits] The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic translate this verse thus: "They have recited to me unholy fables, which are not according to thy law."

Verse 87. They had almost consumed me] Had it not been for thy mercy, we had all been destroyed under this oppressive captivity.

Verse 88. Quicken me] Make and keep me alive. So shall I keep] Without the spiritual life there is no obedience; we must therefore rise from the dead, and be quickened by the Spirit of Christ.

LETTER LAMED.—Twelfth Division.

Verse 89. For ever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven.] Thy purposes are all settled above, and they shall all be fulfilled below.

Verse 90. Thy faithfulness] That which binds thee to accomplish the promise made.

Thou hast established the earth] Thou hast given it its appointed place in the system, and there it abideth.

Verse 91. They continue this day] "All the celestial bodies are governed by thy power. Thou hast given an ordinance or appointment to each, and each fulfils thy will in the place thou hast assigned it."

Verse 92. Unless thy law had been my delights] Had we not had the consolations of religion, we should long ago have died of a broken heart.

Verse 93. I will never forget thy precepts] How can I? It is by them I live.

Verse 94. I am thine, save me] He who can say this need fear no evil. In all trials, temptations, dangers, afflictions, persecutions, I am thine. O how sovereign is such a word against all the evils of life! I am THINE! therefore save thine OWN!

should say, Every thing of human origin has its limits and end, howsoever extensive, noble, and excellent. This has been explained as if it meant: All the real or pretended perfection that men can arrive at in this life is nothing when compared with what the law of God requires. This saying is false in itself, and is no meaning of the text.

LETTER MEM.—Thirteenth Division.

Verse 97. O how love I thy law] This is one of the strongest marks of a gracious and pious heart, cast in the mould of obedience.

Verse 98. Wiser than mine enemies] Some have thought that this psalm was composed by Daniel, and that he speaks of himself in these verses.

Verse 99. I have more understanding than all my teachers] As he had entered into the spiritual nature of the law of God, and saw into the exceeding breadth of the commandment, he soon became wiser than any of the priests or even prophets who instructed him.

Verse 100. I understand more than the ancients] God had revealed to him more of that hidden wisdom which was in his law than he had done to any of his predecessors. And this was most literally true of David, who spoke more fully about Christ than any who had gone before him; or, indeed followed after him.

Verse 101. I have refrained my feet] By avoiding all sin, the spirit of wisdom still continues to rest upon me.

Verse 102. Sweeter than honey to my mouth] What 99 I have more understanding than all my teachers: * for thy testimonies are my meditation.

100 ^l I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts.

101 I have ^m refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word.

102 I have not departed from thy judgments: for thou hast taught me.

103 * How sweet are thy words unto my ⁿ taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!

104 Through thy precepts I get understanding: therefore ^o I hate every false way.

NUN.

107 I am afflicted very much: ^s quicken me, O LORD, according unto thy word.

108 Accept, I beseech thee, ^t the freewill-offerings of my mouth, O LORD, ^u and teach me thy judgments.

deep communion must this man have had with his Maker! These expressions show a soul filled with God. O Christians, how vastly superior are our privileges! and, alas! how vastly inferior, in general, are our consolations, our communion with God, and our heavenly-mindedness!

Verse 104. Through thy precepts I get understanding] Spiritual knowledge increases while we tread in the path of obedience. Obedience is the grand means of growth and instruction. Obedience trades with the talent of grace, and thus grace becomes multiplied.

LETTER NUN.—Fourteenth Division.

Verse 105. Thy word is a lamp] God's word is a candle which may be held in the hand to give us light in every dark place and chamber; and it is a general light shining upon all his works, and upon all his ways.

Verse 106. I have sworn] Perhaps this means no more than that he had renewed his covenant with God; he had bound himself to love and serve him only.

Verse 107. I am afflicted very much] "To extremity, excessively." We are in the most oppressive captivity. Quicken me] Deliver us from our bondage.

Verse 108. The freewill-offerings of my mouth] The voluntary offerings which I have promised. Or, As we are in captivity, and cannot sacrifice to thee, but would if we could; accept the praises of our mouth, and the purposes of our hearts, instead of the sacrifices and offerings which we would bring to thy altar, but cannot.

117 Hold thou me up, and I shall be safe: and I will have respect unto thy statutes continually.

Verse 109. My soul is continually in my hand] My life; that is, it is in constant danger; every hour I am on the confines of death. The expression signifies to be in continual danger.

Verse 110. The wicked have laid a snare] Thus their lives were continually exposed to danger.

Verse 111. As an heritage] To these he was heir; he had inherited them from his fathers, and he was determined to leave them to his family for ever. If a man can leave nothing to his child but a Bible, in that he bequeaths him the greatest treasure in the universe.

Verse 112. I have inclined mine heart] I used the power God gave me, and turned to his testimonies with all mine heart. When we work with God, we can do all things.

LETTER SAMECH.—Fifteenth Division.

Verse 113. I hate vain thoughts] I have hated "tumultuous, violent men." I abominate all mobs and insurrections, and troublers of the public peace.

Verse 114. My hiding place] My asylum. And my shield] There is a time in which I may be called to suffer in secret; then thou hidest me. There may be a time in which thou callest me to fight; then thou art my Shield and Protector.

Verse 115. Depart from me] I abominate the profane, and will have no communion with them. I drive them away from my presence.

Verse 116. Uphold me] Prop me up; give me thyself to lean upon.

Verse 117. Hold thou me up] I shall grow weary and faint in the way, if not strengthened and supported by thee. And I shall be safe] No soul can be safe, unless upheld by thee.

Verse 118. Thou hast trodden down] All thy enemies will be finally trodden down under thy feet.

Their deceit is falsehood.] Their elevation is a lie. The wicked often become rich and great, and affect to be happy but it is all false; they have neither a clean nor approving conscience. Nor can they have thy approbation; and, consequently, no true blessedness.

Verse 119. Thou puttest away all the wicked of the earth like dross] There is no true metal in them: when they are tried by the refining fire, they are burnt up; they fly off in fumes, and come to no amount.

Therefore I love thy testimonies.] Thy testimonies will stand; and thy people will stand; because thou who didst give the one, and who upholds the other, art pure, immutable and eternal.

Verse 120. My flesh trembleth for fear of thee] It is only an assurance of my interest in thy mercy that can save me from distressing fears and harassing doubts. It is our privilege to know we are in God's favour; and it is not less so 127 Therefore I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold.

Verse 121. I have done judgment and justice] I have given the best decision possible on every case that came before me; and I have endeavoured to render to all their due.

Verse 122. Be surety for thy servant] Or, Be bail for thy servant. What a word is this! Pledge thyself for me, that thou wilt produce me safely at the judgment of the great day. Then sustain and keep me blameless till the coming of Christ.

Verse 126. It is time for thee, Lord, to work] The time is fulfilled in which thou hast promised deliverance to thy people. They—the Babylonians,

Have made void thy law.] They have filled up the measure of their iniquities.

Verse 127. Therefore I love thy commandments] I see thou wilt do all things well. I will trust in thee.

Above gold] More than resplendent gold; gold without any stain or rust.

Yea, above fine gold.] Above solid gold; gold separated from the dross, perfectly refined.

Verse 128. All thy precepts concerning all things to be right] All the ancient Versions, except the Chaldee, seem to have omitted the second col, ALL, and read the text thus: "Therefore I have walked straight in all thy precepts." I go straight on in all thy precepts, hating every false way. I am going to heaven, and that way lies straight before me. To walk in the way of falsity I cannot, because I hate it; and I hate such ways, because God hates them.

LETTER PE.—Seventeenth Division.

Verse 129. Thy testimonies are wonderful] There is a height, length, depth, and breadth in thy word and testimonies that are truly astonishing; and on this account my soul loves them, and I deeply study them.

Verse 130. The entrance of thy words giveth light] The opening of it: when I open my Bible to read, light springs up in my mind. Every sermon, every prayer, every act of faith, is an opening by which light is let into the seeking soul.

Verse 131. I opened my mouth, and panted] A metaphor taken from an animal exhausted in the chase. The Psalmist sought for salvation, as he would run from a ferocious beast for his life.

Verse 132. As thou usest to do] Treat me as thy mercy has induced thee to treat others in my circumstances. Deal with me as thou dealest with thy friends.

Verse 135. Make thy face to shine] Give me a sense of thy approbation. Let me know, by the testimony of thy Spirit in my conscience, that thou art reconciled to me. The witness of God's spirit in the souls of believers was an essential principle in religion from the foundation of the world.

Verse 136. Rivers of waters run down mine eyes] How much had this blessed man the honour of God and the salvation of souls at heart! O for more of that spirit which mourns for the transgressions of the land! But we are not properly convinced of the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

LETTER TZADDI.—Eighteenth Division.

Verse 137. Righteous art thou] Thou art infinitely holy in thy nature; and therefore thou art upright in thy judgments—all thy dispensations to men.

Verse 138. Thy testimonies] Every thing that proceeds from these partakes of the perfections of thy nature.

Verse 139. My zeal hath consumed me] My earnest desire to promote thy glory, and the pain I feel at seeing transgressions multiplied, have worn down both my flesh and spirits.

Verse 140. Thy word is very pure] It is purification. It is a purified thing, but a thing that purifies, God's word is a fire to purify as well as a hammer to break.

Verse 141. I am small and despised] Being small, I can not resist; being despised, I am in danger; but even all this does not induce me to start aside, or through the fear of man to be unfaithful to thee.

Verse 142. Thy righteousness is an everlasting righteousness] The word tsedek is a word of very extensive meaning in the Bible. It signifies, not only God's inherent righteousness and perfection of nature, but also his method of treating others; his plan of redemption; his method of saving others. Thy merciful method of dealing with sinners and justifying the ungodly will last as long as the earth lasts; and thy law that witnesses this, in all its pages, is the truth.

RESH.

153 Consider mine affliction, and deliver me: for I do not forget thy law.

154 Plead my cause, and deliver me: quicken me according to thy word.

155 Salvation is far from the wicked: for they seek not thy statutes.

156 Great are thy tender mercies, O LORD; quicken me according to thy judgments.

157 Many are my persecutors and mine enemies; yet do I not decline from thy testimonies.

158 I beheld the transgressors, and was grieved; because they kept not thy word.

159 Consider how I love thy precepts: quicken me, O LORD, according to thy loving-kindness.

160 Thy word is true from the beginning: and every one of thy righteous judgments endureth for ever.

lasting] Thy moral law was not made for one people, or for one particular time; it is as imperishable as thy nature, and of endless obligation. It is that law by which all the children of Adam shall be judged.

Give me understanding] To know and practise it. And I shall live] Shall glorify thee, and live eternally; not for the merit of having done it, but because thou didst fulfil the work of the law in my heart, having saved me from condemnation by it.

LETTER KOPH.—Nineteenth Division.

Verse 145. I cried with my whole heart] He whose whole heart cries to God will never rise from the throne of grace without a blessing.

Verse 147. I prevented the dawning] "I went before the dawn or twilight."

Verse 148. Mine eyes prevent] "Go before the watches." Before the watchman proclaims the hour, I am awake, meditating on thy words. At the proclaiming of each watch the Psalmist appears to have risen and performed some act of devotion.

Verse 150. They draw nigh] They are just at hand who seek to destroy me.

They are far from thy law] They are near to all evil, but far from thee.

Verse 151. Thou art near] As they are near to destroy, so art thou near to save. When the enemy comes in as a flood, the Spirit of the Lord lifts up a standard against him.

Verse 152. Concerning thy testimonies, I have known of old] "Long ago I have known concerning thy testimonies." Thou hast designed that thy testimonies should bear reference to, and evidence of, those glorious things which thou hast provided for the salvation of men; and that this should be an everlasting testimony. They continue, and Christ is come.

LETTER RESH.—Twentieth Division.

Verse 153. Consider mine affliction] See mine affliction or humiliation; but the eye of the Lord affects his heart; and therefore he never sees the distresses of his followers without considering their situation, and affording them help.

Verse 154. Plead my cause] "Be my Advocate in my suit." Contend for us against the Babylonians, and bring us out of our bondage.

SCHIN.

161 Princes have persecuted me without a cause: but my heart standeth in awe of thy word.

162 I rejoice at thy word, as one that findeth great spoil.

163 I hate and abhor lying: but thy law do I love.

164 Seven times a day do I praise thee, because of thy righteous judgments.

165 Great peace have they which love thy law: and nothing shall offend them.

166 Lord, I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments.

167 My soul hath kept thy testimonies; and I love them exceedingly.

168 I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies: for all my ways are before thee.

^a Sam. xxiv. 11, 14. xxvi. 18. Ver. 23.—^b Prov. iii. 2. Isa. xxxiii. 17.—^c Heb. they shall have no stumbling-block.—^d Gen. xlix. 18. Ver. 174.—^e Prov. v. 21.—^f Ver. 144.—^g Ver. 7.—^h Josh. xxiv.

[Verse 155. Salvation is far from the wicked] There is no hope of their conversion.

[For they seek not thy statutes.] And they who do not seek, shall not find.

[Verse 156. Great are thy tender mercies] They are rabbim, multitudes. They extend to all the wretchedness of all men.

[Verse 158. I beheld the transgressors, and was grieved] Literally, I was affected with anguish.

[Verse 160. Thy word is true from the beginning] Rosh, the head or beginning of thy word, is true.

LETTER SCHIN.—Twenty-first Division.

[Verse 161. Princes have persecuted me] This may refer to what was done by prime ministers and the rulers of provinces, to scour the king against the unfortunate Jews in order still to detain them in bondage. In reference to David, the plotting against him in Saul's court, and the dangers he ran in consequence of the jealousies of the Philistine lords while he sojourned among them, are well known.

[My heart standeth in awe] They had probably offers made them of enlargement or melioration of condition, providing they submitted to some idolatrous conditions; but they knew they had to do with a jealous God; their hearts stood in awe, and they were thereby kept from sin.

[Verse 162. As one that findeth great spoil] As God opened his eyes he beheld wonders in his law; and each discovery of this kind was like finding a prize.

[Verse 163. I—abhor lying] Perhaps they might have made the confessions which the Chaldeans required, and by mental reservation have kept an inward firm adherence to their creed; but this, in the sight of the God of truth, must have been lying; and at such a sacrifice they would not purchase their enlargement, even from their captivity.

[Verse 164. Seven times a day do I praise thee] Seven was a number expressing perfection, completion, &c., among the Hebrews; and it is often used to signify many or an infinite number, see Prov. xxiv. 16; Lev. xxvi. 28. And here it may mean no more than that his soul was filled with the spirit of gratitude and praise, and that he very frequently expressed his joyous and grateful feelings in this way.

TAU.

169 Let my cry come near before thee, O Lord: give me understanding according to thy word.

170 Let my supplication come before thee: deliver me according to thy word.

171 My lips shall utter praise, when thou hast taught me thy statutes.

172 My tongue shall speak of thy word: for all thy commandments are righteousness.

173 Let thine hand help me; for I have chosen thy precepts.

174 I have longed for thy salvation, O Lord; and thy law is my delight.

175 Let my soul live, and it shall praise thee; and let thy judgments help me.

176 I have gone astray like a lost sheep: seek thy servant; for I do not forget thy commandments.

22. Prov. i. 29. Luke x. 42.—^a Ver. 166.—^b Ver. 16, 24, 47, 77, 111.—^c Isa. liii. 6. Luke xv. 4, &c. 1 Pet. ii. 25.—^d Ver. 16, 83, 93, 109, 141, 153.

[Verse 165. Great peace have they] They have peace in their conscience, and joy in the Holy Spirit; and [Nothing shall offend] Stumble, or put them out of the way.

[Verse 166. Lord, I have hoped] Thou hast promised deliverance, and I have expected it on the ground of that promise.

[Verse 167. My soul hath kept] I have not attended to the letter merely, but my spirit has entered into the spirit and design of thy testimonies.

[Verse 168. For all my ways are before thee] Thou knowest that I have endeavoured to walk before thee with a perfect heart.

LETTER TAU.—Twenty-second Division.

[Verse 169. Let my cry come near before thee] Here the Psalmist's cry for deliverance is personified; made an intelligent being, and sent up to the throne of grace to negotiate in his behalf.

[Verse 172. My tongue shall speak of thy word] He first utters sounds connected with words expressive of his grateful feelings; in the second he speaks words, principally those which God himself had spoken, containing promises of support, purposes relative to the redemption of his people, and denunciations against their enemies.

[Verse 176. I have gone astray like a lost sheep] A sheep, when it has once lost the flock, strays in such a manner as to render the prospect of its own return utterly hopeless.

[Seek thy servant] I shall never find thee; come to the wilderness, take me up, and carry me to the flock.

There is one extraordinary perfection in this psalm: begin where you will, you seem to be at the commencement of the piece; end where you will, you seem to close with a complete sense. It is constructed with admirable art, and every where breathes the justest and highest encomiums on the revelation of God; shows the glories of the God who gave it, the necessities and dependence of his intelligent creatures, the bounty of the Creator, and the praise and obedience which are his due. To no psalm can its own words be better applied, ver. 18: "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law."

PSALM CXX.

The Psalmist, in great distress, calls on the Lord for deliverance from calumny and defamation, 1, 2; shows the punishment that awaits his persecutor, 3, 4; deplors the necessity of his residence with the ungodly, 5-7.

PSALM CXXI.

A Song of Degrees.

In my distress I cried unto the LORD, and he heard me.

2 Deliver my soul, O LORD, from lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue.

3 What shall be given unto thee? or what shall be done unto thee, thou false tongue?

* Ps. cxviii. 5. Jonah iv. 2.—^b Or, What shall the deceitful tongue give unto thee? or, What shall it profit thee?—^c Heb. added.—^d Or, It is as the sharp arrows of the mighty man with coals of juniper.

This psalm, and all the rest that follow it, to the end of Psalm cxxxiv., fifteen in number, are called Psalms of Degrees; for thus the Hebrew title hammaaloth is generally translated, as coming from the root alah, to ascend or mount upwards. Hence maaloth, steps or stairs for ascending, 1 Kings x. 19, 20, 2 Kings ix. 18. But as the word may be applied to elevation in general, hence some have thought that it may here signify the elevation of voice; "these psalms being sung with the highest elevations of voice and music." Others have thought the word expresses rather the matter of these psalms, as being of peculiar excellence.

Verse 1. In my distress] Through the cause afterwards mentioned.

I cried unto the Lord] Made strong supplication for help.

And he heard me.] Answered my prayer by comforting my soul.

It appears to be a prayer of the captives in Babylon for complete liberty; or perhaps he recites the prayer the Israelites had made previously to their restoration.

Verse 2. Lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue.] From a people without faith, without truth, without religion; who sought by lies and calumnies to destroy them.

Verse 3. What shall be given unto thee?] Thou art worthy of the heaviest punishments.

4 Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper.

5 Woe is me that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar!

6 My soul hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace.

7 I am for peace: but when I speak, they are for war.

—^a Gen. x. 2. Ezek. xxvii. 13.—^b Gen. xxv. 18. 1 Sam. xxv. 1. Jer. xlix. 28, 29.—^c Or, a man of peace.

Verse 4. Sharp arrows] On the juniper, see the note on Job xxx. 4, where this passage is explained. Fiery arrows, or arrows wrapped about with inflamed combustibles, were formerly used in sieges to set the places on fire.

Verse 5. That I sojourn in Mesech] Meshec was apparently the father of the Mosquians, who dwelt in the mountains that separate Iberia from Armenia, and both from Colchis. These provinces were subjugated by Nebuchadnezzar; and it is evident from 2 Kings xvii. 28, 29, xviii. 11, xix. 12, 13, that many of the Jews were held in captivity in those countries. As to Kedar, it extended into Arabia Petraea, and towards the Euphrates; and is the country afterwards known as the country of the Saracens.

Verse 6. My soul hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace.] A restless, barbarous, warlike, and marauding people.

Verse 7. I am for peace] We love to be quiet and peaceable; but they are continually engaged in excursions of rapine and plunder. It is evident that the Psalmist refers to a people like the wandering Arabs, who live constantly in tents, and subsist by robbery; plundering and carrying away all that they can seize. The poor captives wished them to cultivate the arts of peace and live quietly, but they would hear of nothing but their old manner of life.

PSALM CXXI.

The resolution of a godly man, 1, 2. The safety and prosperity of such, as they and theirs shall be under the continual protection of God, 3-8.

A Song of Degrees.

I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help.

2 My help cometh from the LORD, which made heaven and earth.

3 He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: he that keepeth thee will not slumber.

4 Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.

* Or, Shall I lift up mine eyes to the hills? whence should my help come? See Jer. iii. 23.—^b Ps. cxvii. 8.—^c 1 Sam. ii. 9. Prov. iii. 23, 24.—^d Ps. cxviii. 1. Isa. xxvii. 3.—^e Isa. xxv. 4.—^f Ps. xvi. 8.

This appears to be a prayer of the Jews in their captivity, who are solicitous for their restoration. It is in the form of a dialogue.

Verse 1. Unto the hills] Jerusalem was built upon a mountain; and Judea was a mountainous country; and the Jews, in their several dispersions, turned towards Jerusalem when they offered up their prayers to God.

Verse 2. My help cometh from the Lord] There is no help for me but in my God; and I expect it from no other quarter.

Verse 3. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved] The foundation, God's infinite power and goodness, on which thou standest, cannot be moved; and whilst thou standest on this basis, thy foot cannot be moved.

5 The LORD is thy keeper: the LORD is thy shade upon thy right hand.

6 The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night.

7 The LORD shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul.

8 The LORD shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore.

oix. 31.—^a Ps. xci. 5. Isa. xlix. 10. Rev. vii. 16.—^b Ps. xli. 3. xvii. 10. cxlv. 20.—^c Deut. xxviii. 6. Prov. ii. 8. iii. 6.

Verse 4. He that keepeth Israel] The Divine Being represents himself as a watchman, who takes care of the city and its inhabitants during the night-watches; and who is never overtaken with slumbering or sleepiness.

Verse 6. The sun shall not smite thee by day] I believe the Psalmist simply means, they shall not be injured by heat nor cold; by a sun-stroke by day, nor a frost-bite by night.

Verse 7. The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil] Spiritual and corporeal, natural and moral.

He shall preserve thy soul.] Take care of thy life, and take care of thy soul.

Verse 8. Thy going out and thy coming in] Night and day—in all thy business and undertakings; and this through the whole course of thy life: for evermore.

PSALM CXXII.

The satisfaction of a gracious soul in the use of God's ordinances, 1, 2. Description of the internal government of Jerusalem, 3-5. Prayers for its peace and prosperity, 6-9.

A Song of Degrees of David.

I WAS glad when they said unto me, *Let us go into the house of the LORD.

2 Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem.

3 Jerusalem is builded as a city that is ^b compact together.

4 ° Whither the tribes go up, the tribes of the LORD, unto ^d the testimony of Israel, to give thanks unto the name of the LORD.

* Isa. ii. 8. Zech. viii. 21.—^b See 2 Sam. v. 9.—
° Exod. xxiii. 17. Deut. xvi. 16.

In the preceding psalms we find the poor captives crying to God for deliverance; here they are returning thanks that they find they are permitted to return to their own land and to the ordinances of their God.

Verse 1. I was glad when they said] When Cyrus published an edict for their return, the very first object of their thanksgiving was the kindness of God in permitting them to return to his ordinances.

Verse 2. Our feet shall stand] For seventy years we have been exiled from our own land; our heart was in Jerusalem, but our feet were in Chaldea. Now God has turned our captivity, and our feet shall shortly stand within the gates of Jerusalem. What a transition from misery to happiness! and what a subject for rejoicing!

Verse 3. Jerusalem—compact together.] It is now well rebuilt, every part contributing to the strength of the whole. It is also a state of great political and spiritual union.

Verse 4. The testimony of Israel] He no doubt alludes to the assembling of the tribes annually at each of the three grand national festivals.

Verse 5. There are set thrones of judgment] There were the public courts, and thither the people went to obtain justice; and while the thrones of the house of David were there, they had justice.

Verse 6. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem] Let her unani-

6 ¶ Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee.

7 Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces.

8 For my brethren and companions' sakes, I will now say, Peace be within thee.

9 Because of the house of the LORD our God, I will ^h seek thy good.

mity never be disturbed; let her prosperity ever be on the increase.

They shall prosper that love thee.] In the peace and prosperity of the city, they shall find their peace and their prosperity; and even on this ground they should love the city, and labour to promote its best interests.

Verse 7. Peace be within thy walls] This is the form of prayer that they are to use.

Verse 8. For my brethren and companions' sakes] Because this city is the abode of my kinsfolk and countrymen, I will wish it prosperity.

Verse 9. Because of the house of the Lord our God] Particularly will I wish thee well, because thou art the seat of religion, the place where our merciful God has condescended to dwell.

There is a fine picture given us here of the state of Jerusalem after the restoration of the Jews. The walls were finished, the city rebuilt, beautiful, strong, and regular; the temple and its worship were restored, the courts of justice were re-established, the constituted authorities in church and state were doing their duty; and God was pouring out his blessing upon all. Who could see this without praying, May God increase thy peace, and establish thy prosperity for ever!

PSALM CXXIII.

The prayer and faith of the godly, 1, 2. They desire to be delivered from contempt, 3, 4.

A Song of Degrees.

UNTO thee. * lift I up mine eyes, O thou ^b that dwellest in the heavens.

2 Behold, as the eyes of servants look unto the hand of their masters, and as the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress; so our

* Ps. cxxi. 1. cxli. 8.

This psalm is probably a complaint of the captives in Babylon relative to the contempt and cruel usage they received. The author is uncertain.

Verse 1. Unto thee lift I up mine eyes] We have no hope but in thee; our eyes look upward; we have expectation from thy mercy alone.

Verse 2. As the eyes of servants] We now wait for thy commands, feeling the utmost readiness to obey them when made known to us. The words may be understood as the language of dependence also. As slaves expect their support from their masters and mistresses; so do we ours from thee, O Lord! Or, As servants look to their master and mistresses, to see how they do their work, that they may do it in the eyes wait upon the LORD our God, until that he have mercy upon us.

3 Have mercy upon us, O LORD, have mercy upon us: for we are exceedingly filled with contempt.

4 Our soul is exceedingly filled with the scorning of those that are at ease, and with the contempt of the proud.

^b Ps. ii. 4. xi. 4. cxv. 8.

same way; so do we, O Lord, that we may learn of thee, and do thy work in thy own Spirit, and after thy own method.

Verse 3. Have mercy upon us, O Lord] Chastise us no more; we will no more revolt against thee.

We are exceedingly filled with contempt.] We not only suffer grievously from our captivity, but are treated in the most contemptuous manner by our masters.

Verse 4. Those that are at ease] The Babylonians, who, having subdued all the people of the neighbouring nations, lived at ease, had none to contend with them, and now became luxurious, indolent, and insolent; they were contemptuous and proud.

PSALM CXXIV.

A thanksgiving of the godly for extraordinary deliverances, 1-6. The great danger they were in, 7. Their confidence in God, 8.

A Song of Degrees of David.

IF it had not been the LORD who was on our side,
 * now may Israel say;
 2 If it had not been the LORD who was on our side, when men rose up against us:
 3 Then they had ^bswallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled against us:
 4 Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul:

* Ps. cxxix. 1.—^b Ps. lvi. 1, 2. lvii. 8. Prov. i. 12.

This Psalm, though attributed to David was composed long after David's days; and appears to be either a thanksgiving for deliverance from the Babylonish captivity, or for a remarkable deliverance from some potent and insidious enemy after their return to Judea. Or, it is a thanksgiving of the Jews for their escape from the general massacre intended by Haman, prime minister of Ahasuerus, king of Persia.

Verse 1. If it had not been the Lord] If God had not, in a very especial manner, supported and defended us, we had all been swallowed up alive, and destroyed by a sudden destruction, so that not one would have been left.

5 Then the proud waters had gone over our soul.
 6 Blessed be the LORD, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth.
 7 Our soul is escaped * as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped.
 8 ^dOur help is in the name of the LORD, * who made heaven and earth.

* Ps. xci. 8. Prov. vi. 5.—^d Ps. cxli. 2.—^e Gen. i. 1. Ps. cxxiv. 8.

Verse 5. Then the proud waters] The proud Haman had nearly brought the flood of desolation over our lives.

Verse 7. Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare] This is a fine image; and at once shows the weakness of the Jews, and the cunning of their adversaries. See the Book of Esther, which is probably the best comment on this psalm.

Verse 8. Our help is in the name of the Lord] This deliverance of the Jews appears to me the most natural interpretation of this psalm: and probably Mordecai was the author.

PSALM CXXV.

The safety of those who trust in God, 1-2. God's protecting providence in behalf of his followers, 3. A prayer for the godly, 4. The evil lot of the wicked, 5.

A Song of Degrees.

THEY that trust in the LORD shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever.
 2 As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the LORD is round about his people from henceforth even for ever.
 3 For * the rod of ^b the wicked shall not rest

* Prov. xxii. 8. Isa. xiv. 5.—^b Heb. wickedness.

This psalm belongs most probably to the times after the captivity; and has been applied, with apparent propriety, to the opposition which Sanballat the Horonite, Geshem the Arabian, and Tobiah the Ammonite, gave to the Jews while employed in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem, and restoring the temple.

Verse 1. They that trust in the Lord] Every faithful Jew who confides in Jehovah shall stand, in those open and secret attacks of the enemies of God and truth, as unshaken as Mount Zion; and shall not be moved by the power of any adversary.

Verse 2. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem] Jerusalem is surrounded with mountains, at no great distance, as if placed in the midst of an amphitheatre; for on the east is Mount Olivet, separated from the city by the valley of Jehoshaphat, which also encompasses a part of the north; on the south, the mountain of Offiner interposed with the valley of Gehinnom; and on the west it was formerly fenced with the valley of Gihon, and the mountains adjoining. The situation was such as to be easily rendered impregnable.

upon the lot of the righteous; lest the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity.

4 Do good, O LORD, unto those that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts.

5 As for such as turn aside unto their ^c crooked ways, the LORD shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity: but ^d peace shall be upon Israel.

* Prov. ii. 15.—^d Ps. cxxviii. 6. Gal. vi. 16.

The Lord is round about his people] He is above, beneath, around them; and while they keep within it, their fortress is impregnable, and they can suffer no evil.

Verse 3. For the rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous] Rod, here, may be taken for persecution, or for rule; and then it may be thus interpreted: "The wicked shall not be permitted to persecute always, nor to have a permanent rule."

Lest the righteous put forth] Were the wicked to bear rule in the Lord's vineyard, religion would soon become extinct; for the great mass of the people would conform to their rulers.

Verse 4. Do good, O Lord, unto those that be good] Let the upright ever find thee his sure defence!

Verse 5. As for such as turn aside] Who are not faithful; who give way to sin; who backside, and walk in a crooked way, widely different from the straight way of the upright, the straight in heart; they shall be led forth to punishment with the common workers of iniquity. Thus thy church will be purified, and thy peace rest upon thy true Israel.

PSALM CXXVI

*The joy of the Israelites on their return from captivity, and the effect their deliverance had upon the heathen, 1-3†
The prayer which they had offered up, 4. The inference they draw from the whole, 5, 6.*

A Song of Degrees.

WHEN the LORD ^a turned again the captivity of Zion, ^b we were like them that dream.

2 Then ^c was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing: then said they among the heathen, The LORD ^d hath done great things for them.

This psalm is not of David, has no title in the Hebrew or any of the versions, and certainly belongs to the close of the captivity. It might have been composed by Haggai and Zechariah, as the Syriac supposes; or by Ezra, according to others. It is beautiful, and highly descriptive of the circumstances which it represents.

Verse 1. When the Lord turned again the captivity] When Cyrus published his decree in favour of the Jews, giving them liberty to return to their own land, and rebuild their city and temple.

We were like them that dream.] The news was so unexpected that we doubted for a time the truth of it. We believed it was too good news to be true, and thought ourselves in a dream or illusion.

Verse 2. Then said they among the heathen.] The liberty now granted was brought about in so extraordinary a way, that the very heathens saw that the hand of the great Jehovah must have been in it.

Verse 3. The Lord hath done great things for us] We acknowledge the hand of our God. "God alone has given us this enlargement."

We are glad.] This is a mere burst of ecstatic joy. O how happy are we.

Verse 4. Turn again our captivity] This is either a recital of the prayer they had used before their deliverance; or it is a prayer for those who still remained in the provinces beyond the Euphrates.

As the streams in the south.] Probably the Nile is meant. It is possible, however, that they might have had some rapid rivers that either rose in the south, or had a southern direc-fed to do with them.—See Jer. xxxi. 9, &c.—Or, singing.—Or, seed basket.

tion; and they desired that their return might be as rapid and as abundant as the waters of those rivers. But we know that the Nile proceeds from the south, divides itself into several streams as it passes through Egypt, and falls by seven mouths into the Mediterranean.

Verse 5. They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.] This is either a maxim which they gather from their own history, or it is a fact which they are now witnessing. Or, We have sown in tears; now we reap in joy. We are restored after a long and afflicting captivity to our own country, to peace, and to happiness.

Verse 6. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed] The metaphor seems to be this: A poor farmer has had a very bad harvest. The seed time is now come, and is very unpromising. Out of the famine a little seed has been saved to be sown, in hopes of another crop; but the badness of the present season almost precludes the entertainment of hope. He carries his all, his precious seed, with him in his seed basket; and with a sorrowful heart commits it to the furrow, watering it in effect with his tears, and earnestly imploring the blessing of God upon it. God hears; the season becomes mild; he beholds successively the blade, the ear, and the full corn in the ear. The appointed weeks of harvest come, and the grain is very productive. He fills his arms with the sheaves and shocks; and returns to his expecting family in triumph, praising God for the wonders he has wrought. So shall it be with this handful of returning Israelites. They also are to be sown—scattered all over the land; the blessing of God shall be upon them, and their faith and numbers shall be abundantly increased.

PSALM CXXVII

The necessity of God's blessing on every undertaking, without which no prosperity can be expected, 1, 2. Children are an heritage from the Lord, 3, 4. A fruitful wife is a blessing to her husband, 5.

A Song of Degrees ^a for Solomon.

EXCEPT the LORD build the house, they labour in vain ^b that build it: except ^c the LORD keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.

2 It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows: for so he giveth his beloved sleep.

This psalm was most likely composed for the building of the second temple, under Nehemiah, and by some prophet of that time.

Verse 1. Except the Lord build the house] To build a house is taken in three different senses in the sacred writings; 1. To build the temple of the Lord, which was called, the house, by way of eminence. 2. To build any ordinary them.—See Job. v. 4. Prov. xxvii. 11.—Or, shall subside, as Ps. xviii. 47; or, destroy.

3 Lo, children are an heritage of the LORD: and the fruit of the womb is his reward.

house, or place of dwelling. 3. To have a numerous offspring. Now it is true that unless the good hand of God be upon us we cannot prosperously build a place of worship for his name. Unless we have his blessing, a dwelling-house cannot be comfortably erected. And if his blessing be not on our children, the house (the family) may be built up, but instead of its being the house of God, it will be the synagogue of Satan. All marriages that are not under God's blessing will be a private and public curse.

Except the Lord keep the city] The Psalmist alludes to the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem under Nehemiah; and in effect says, Though you should watch constantly, guard every place, and keep on your armour ready to repel every attack, yet remember the success of all depends upon the presence and blessing of God.

Verse 2. It is vain for you to rise up early] There seems to be here an allusion to the daily and nightly watches which Nehemiah instituted. The people were worn out with constant labour and watching; he therefore divided them in such a manner, that they who had worked in the day should rest by night, that they who worked by night should rest in the day; and thus his beloved, a title of the Jews, the beloved of God, got sleep, due refreshment, and rest. As for Nehemiah and his servants, they never put off their clothes day or night but for washing.

Verse 3. Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord] That is, To many God gives children in place of temporal good. To many others he gives houses, lands, and thousands of gold and silver, and with them the womb that beareth not; and these are their inheritance. Where is the poor man who would give up his six children, with the prospect of having more, for the thousands or millions of him who is the centre of his own existence, and has neither root nor branch but his forlorn solitary self upon the face of the earth?

Verse 4. As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man] Each child will, in the process of time, be a defence and support to the family, as arrows in the quiver of a skilful and strong archer: the more he has the more enemies he may slay, and consequently the more redoubted shall he be.

Children of the youth] The children of young people are always more strong and vigorous, more healthy, and generally longer lived than those of elderly, or comparatively elderly persons.

Verse 5. Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them] This is generally supposed to mean his house full of children, as his quiver is full of arrows; but I submit whether it be not more congenial to the metaphors in the text to consider it as applying to the wife: "Happy is the man who has a breeding or fruitful wife."

With the enemies in the gate] The reference is either to courts of justice, which were held at the gates of cities, or to robbers who endeavour to force their way into a house to spoil the inhabitants of their goods. In the first case a man falsely accused, who has a numerous family, has as many witnesses in his behalf as he has children. And in the second case he is not afraid of marauders, because his house is well defended by his active and vigorous sons. It is, I believe, to this last that the Psalmist refers.

PSALM CXXVIII.

The blessedness of the man that fears the Lord, 1. He is blessed in his labour, 2; in his wife and children, 3; in the ordinances of God, 5; and in a long life and numerous posterity, 6.

A Song of Degrees.

BLESSED * is every one that feareth the LORD: that walketh in his ways.

2 ^b For thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.

3 Thy wife shall be ^c as a fruitful vine by the sides

* Ps. cxli. 1. cxv. 13. cxix. 1.—^b Isa. lli. 10.—^c Ezek. xix. 10.
—^d Ps. lli. 8. cxliv. 12.

This psalm seems to be a continuation of the preceding psalm, or rather the second part of it. The man who is stated to have a numerous offspring, in the preceding psalm, is here represented as sitting at table with his large family. A person in the meanwhile coming in, sees his happy state, speaks of his comforts, and predicts to him and his all possible future good. And why? Because the man and his family "fear God, and walk in his ways."

Verse 2. Thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands] Thou shalt not be exempted from labour. Thou shalt work: but God will bless and prosper that work, and thou and thy family shall eat of it. Ye shall all live on the produce of your own labour, and the hand of violence shall not be permitted to deprive you of it.

Verse 3. Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine] Thy children, in every corner and apartment of thy house, shall be the evidences of the fruitfulness of thy wife, as bunches of grapes on every bough of the vine are of thine house: thy children ^a like olive plants round about thy table.

4 Behold, that thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the LORD.

5 ^c The LORD shall bless thee out of Zion: and thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life.

6 Yea, thou shalt ^e see thy children's children, and ^f peace upon Israel.

the proofs of its being in a healthy thriving state. Verse 4. Thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the Lord] A great price for a small consideration. Fear God, and thou shalt have as much domestic good as may be useful to thee.

Verse 5. The Lord shall bless thee out of Zion] In all thy approaches to him in his house by prayer, by sacrifice, and by offering, thou shalt have his especial blessing. Thou shalt thrive every where, and in all things.

And thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem] Thou shalt see the cause of God flourish in thy lifetime, and his church in great prosperity.

Verse 6. Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children] Thou shalt not die till thou have seen thy family all settled in the world, and those of them who may be married blessed with children.

And peace upon Israel] This should be translated, Peace be upon Israel!

PSALM CXXIX.

 4 The LORD is righteous : he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked.

^a Or, Much.—^b See Ezek. xxiii. 8. Hos. ii. 15. xi. 1.

This psalm was written after the captivity ; and contains a reference to the many tribulations which the Jews passed through from their youth, i. e., the earliest part of their history, their bondage in Egypt. The author is uncertain.

Verse 1. Many a time have they afflicted me] The Israelites had been generally in affliction or captivity from the earliest part of their history, here called their youth.

Verse 2. Yet they have not prevailed] They endeavoured to annihilate us as a people ; but God still preserves us as his own nation.

Verse 3. The plowers plowed upon my back] It is possible that this mode of expression may signify that the people, during their captivity, were cruelly used by scourging, &c. ; or it may be a sort of proverbial mode of expression for the most cruel usage. There really appears here to be a reference to a yoke, as if they had actually been yoked to the plough, or to some kind of carriages, and been obliged to draw like beasts of burden.

Verse 4. The Lord—hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked.] The words have been applied to the sufferings of Christ ; but I know not on what authority.

Verse 5. Let them all be confounded] They shall be con-

5 Let them all be confounded and turned back that hate Zion.

6 Let them be as ^d the grass upon the house-tops, which withereth afore it groweth up :

founded. They who hate Zion, the church of God, hate God himself ; and all such must be dealt with as enemies, and be utterly confounded.

Verse 6. As the grass upon the housetops] As in the East the roofs of the houses were flat, seeds of various kinds falling upon them would naturally vegetate, though in an imperfect way ; and, because of the want of proper nourishment, would necessarily dry and wither away. If grass, the mower cannot make hay of it ; if corn, the reaper cannot make a sheaf of it. Let the Babylonians be like such herbage—good for nothing, and come to nothing.

Withereth afore it groweth up] Before it is unsheathed ; i. e., before it ears, or comes to seed.

Verse 8. Neither do they which go by say] There is a reference here to the salutations which were given and returned by the reapers in the time of the harvest. Ruth ii. 4. Let their land become desolate, so that no harvest shall ever more appear in it. No interchange of benedictions between owners and reapers. This has literally taken place ; Babylon is utterly destroyed ; no harvests grow near the place where it stood.

PSALM CXXX.

The prayer of a penitent to God, with confession of sin, 1-3. Confidence in God's mercy, and waiting upon him, 4-6. Israel is encouraged to hope in the Lord, because of his willingness to save, 7, 8.

A Song of degrees.

OUT ^a of the depths have I cried unto thee, O
 LORD.
 2 LORD, hear my voice ; let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplications.
 3 ^b If thou, LORD, shouldst mark iniquities, O
 LORD, who shall stand ?

^a Lam. iii. 55. Jonah ii. 2.—^b Ps. cxliii. 3. Rom. iii. 20, 23, 24.—^c Exod. xxxiv. 7.—^d 1 Kings viii. 40. Ps. ii. 11. Jer. xxxiii. 8, 9.—^e Ps. xxvii. 14. xxxiii. 20. xl. 1. Isa. viii. 17. xvi. 8. xxx. 18.—

This psalm was most probably composed during the captivity ; and contains the complaint of the afflicted Jews, with their hopes of the remission of those sins which were the cause of their sufferings, and their restoration from captivity to their own land. This is one of those called penitential psalms.

Verse 1. Out of the depths] The captives in Babylon represent their condition like those who are in a prison—an abyss or deep ditch, ready to be swallowed up.

Verse 2. Lord, hear my voice] They could have no helper but God, and to him they earnestly seek for relief.

Verse 3. If thou—shouldst mark iniquities] If thou shouldst set down every deviation in thought, word, and deed from thy holy law.

Verse 4. But there is forgiveness with thee] Thou canst

4 But there is ^a forgiveness with thee, that ^d thou mayest be feared.

5 ^e I wait for the LORD, my soul doth wait, and ^f in his word do I hope.

6 ^g My soul waiteth for the LORD more than they that watch for the morning : ^h I say, more than they that watch for the morning.

forgive ; mercy belongs to thee, as well as judgment. The doctrine here is the doctrine of St. John. 1 John ii. 1.

Verse 5. I wait for the Lord] The word kanah, which we translate to wait, properly signifies the extension of a cord from one point to another. This is a fine metaphor : God is one point, the human heart is the other ; and the extended cord between both is the earnest believing desire of the soul. This desire, strongly extended from the heart to God, in every means of grace, and when there is none, is the active energetic waiting which God requires, and which will be successful.

Verse 6. More than they that watch for the morning.] The Chaldee has, "More than they who observe the morning watches, that they may offer the morning oblation." This gives a good sense, and is, perhaps, the true meaning.

PSALM CXXXI.

7 * Let Israel hope in the LORD: for ^b with the LORD there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption.

* Ps. cxxx. 1.—^b Ps. lxxxvi. 5, 15. Isa. lv. 7.

Verse 7. Let Israel hope in the Lord] This, to hope for salvation, is their duty and their interest. But what reason is there for this hope? A twofold reason:—

1. With the Lord there is mercy] THAT mercy, the fund, the essence of mercy.

2. And with him is plenteous redemption.] That abundant redemption, that to which there is none like, the Fountain of redemption, the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. The article is very emphatic.

Verse 8. He shall redeem Israel] He will provide a great price for Israel, and by it will take away all his iniquities. I would not restrict this to Israel in Babylon. Every believer may take it to himself. God perfectly justifies and perfectly sanctifies all that come unto him through the Son of his love.

PSALM CXXXI.

The Psalmist professes his humility, and the peaceableness of his disposition and conduct, 1, 2. Exhorts Israel to hope in God, 3.

A Song of degrees of David.

* Rom. xii. 16.—^b Heb. walk.—^c Heb. wonderful. Job xlii. 3. Ps. cxxxix. 6.

Some think that David composed this psalm as a vindication of himself, when accused by Saul's courtiers that he affected the crown, and was laying schemes and plots to possess himself of it. Others think the psalm was made during the captivity, and that it contains a fair account of the manner in which the captives behaved themselves, under the domination of their oppressors.

Verse 1. Lord, my heart is not haughty] The principle of pride has no place in my heart; and consequently the high, lofty, and supercilious look does not appear in my eyes. I have not exercised myself—walked, in high matters, nor associated myself with the higher ranks of the community, nor in great matters, wonderful or sublime things; too high for me, minnens, alien from me, and that do not belong to a person in my sphere and situation in life.

Verse 2. I have behaved and quieted myself, as a child] On the contrary, I have been under the rod of others, and when chastised have not complained; and my silence under my affliction was the fullest proof that I neither murmured nor repined. But received all as coming from the hands of a just God.

My soul is even as a weaned child.] I felt I must forego many conveniences and comforts which I once enjoyed; and these I gave up without repining or demurring.

Verse 3. Let Israel hope in the Lord] Act all as I have done; trust in him who is the God of justice and compassion; and, after you have suffered awhile, he will make bare his arm and deliver you.

PSALM CXXXII.

The Psalmist prays that God would remember his promises to David, 1. His purpose to bring the ark of the Lord into a place of rest, 2-5. Where it was found, and the prayer in removing it, 6-9. The promises made to David and his posterity, 10-12. God's choice of Zion for a habitation, and his promises to the people, 13-17. All their enemies shall be confounded, 18.

A Song of degrees.

LORD, remember David, and all his afflictions:

2 How he sware unto the LORD, ^a and vowed unto ^b the mighty God of Jacob;

3 Surely I will not come into the tabernacle of my house, nor go up into my bed;

* Ps. lxxv. 1.—^b Gen. xlix. 24.—^c Prov. vi. 4.—^d Acts vii. 48.—^e Heb. habitations.

Some attribute this psalm to David, but without sufficient ground; others, to Solomon, with more likelihood; and others, to some inspired author at the conclusion of the captivity, which is, perhaps, the most probable. It refers to the building of the second temple, and placing the ark of the covenant in it.

Verse 1. Lord, remember David] Consider the promises

4 I will ^c not give sleep to mine eyes, or slumber to mine eyelids, thou hast made to this thy eminent servant, that had respect, not only to him and to his family, but to all the Israelitish people.

Verse 2. How he sware unto the Lord] It is only in this place that we are informed of David's vow to the Lord, relative to the building of the temple; but we find he had fully purposed the thing.

8 * Arise, O LORD, into thy rest; thou, and ^b the ark of thy strength.

9 Let thy priests ^c be clothed with righteousness; and let thy saints shout for joy.

10 For thy servant David's sake turn not away the face of thine anointed.

11 ^d The LORD hath sworn ^e truth unto David; he will not turn from it; * Of the fruit of ^f thy body will I set upon thy throne.

12 If thy children will keep my covenant and my testimonies that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for evermore.

Verse 8. Surely I will not come] He would not pass another day till he had found out the ground on which to build the temple, and projected the plan, and devised ways and means to execute it.

Verse 5. The mighty God of Jacob.] Mighty One of Jacob. We have this epithet of God for the first time, Gen. xlix. 24.

Verse 6. Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah.] As I had determined to build a temple for the ark, and heard that it was at Ephratah, I went and found it in the fields of Jaar; not the wood, but Kirjath Jaar or Jearim, where the ark was then lodged.

Verse 8. Arise, O Lord, into thy rest; thou and the ark of thy strength.] There are several difficulties in these passages, Ephratah may mean the tribe of Ephraim; and then we may understand the place thus: "I have learned that the ark had been in the tribe of Ephraim, and I have seen it at Kirjath-jearim, or Field of the woods; but this is not a proper place for it, for the Lord hath chosen Jerusalem." It is true that the ark did remain in that tribe from the days of Joshua to Samuel, during three hundred and twenty-eight years; and thence it was brought to Kirjath-jearim, where it continued seventy years, till the commencement of the reign of David over all Israel.

But if we take verses 6, 7, and 8, not as the continuation of David's vow, but as the words of the captives in Babylon, the explanation will be more plain and easy: "We have heard, O Lord, from our fathers, that thy tabernacle was formerly a long time at Shiloh, in the tribe of Ephraim. And our history informs us that it has been also at Kirjath-jearim, the fields of the wood; and afterwards it was brought to Jerusalem, and there established; but Jerusalem is now ruined, the temple destroyed, and thy people in captivity. Arise, O Lord, and re-establish thy dwelling-place in thy holy city!"

Verse 9. Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness] Let them be as remarkable for inward holiness as they are for the splendour of their holy vestments.

Verse 10. The face of thine anointed.] David. Remember

13 * For the LORD hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation.

14 ^b This is my rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it.

15 ⁱ I will abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread.

16 ^k I will also clothe her priests with salvation: ^l and her saints shall shout aloud for joy.

17 ^m There will I make the horn of David to bud: ⁿ I have ordained a ^o lamp for mine anointed.

18 His enemies will I ^p clothe with shame: but upon himself shall his crown flourish.

thy promises to him, that he may be restored to thee and to thy worship.

Verse 11. The Lord hath sworn.] As David swore to the Lord, so the Lord swears to David, that he will establish his throne, and place his posterity on it: and that he had respect to David's Antitype, we learn from St. Peter, Acts ii. 30. This verse, with the following, refers to the spiritual David and the Christian church.

Verse 12. If thy children will keep my covenant] This was conditional with respect to the posterity of David. They have been driven from the throne, because they did not keep the Lord's covenant; but the true David is on the throne, and his posterity forms the genuine Israelites.

Verse 13. The Lord hath chosen Zion] Therefore neither Shiloh nor Kirjath-jearim is the place of his rest.

Verse 14. This is my rest for ever] Here the Christian church is most indubitably meant. This is God's place for ever. After this there never will be another dispensation; Christianity closes and completes all communications from heaven to earth.

Verse 15. I will abundantly bless her provision] There shall be an abundant provision of salvation made for mankind in the Christian Church.

Verse 16. I will also clothe her priests] All Christian ministers, with salvation; this shall appear in all their conduct. Salvation—redemption from all sin through the blood of the Lamb, shall be their great and universal message.

Verse 17. There will I make the horn of David to bud] There, in the Christian church, the power and authority of the spiritual David shall appear.

I have ordained a lamp] I have taken care to secure a posterity, to which the promises shall be expressly fulfilled.

Verse 18. His enemies will I clothe with shame] Every opponent of the Christian cause shall be confounded.

But upon himself shall his crown flourish.] There shall be no end of the government of Christ's kingdom. From verse 11 to the end, the spiritual David and his posterity are the subjects of which the psalm treats.

* Gen. xlii. 8. Heb. xlii. 1.—Heb. even together.—Exod. xxx.

There are different opinions concerning this psalm; the most probable is that it represents the priests and Levites returned from captivity, and united in the service of God in the sanctuary.

Verse 1. Behold, how good and how pleasant] Unity is, according to this scripture, a good thing and a pleasant; and especially among brethren—members of the same family, of the same Christian community, and of the same nation.

PSALM CXXXIV.

An Exhortation to praise God in his sanctuary, 1-8.

A Song of degrees.

BEHOLD, bless ye the LORD, * all ye servants of the LORD, ^b which by night stand in the house of the LORD.

* Ps. cxxxiv. 1, 2.—^b 1 Chron. ix. 33.—^c 1 Tim. ii. 8.

This is the last of the fifteen psalms called Psalms of degrees. Who was the author is uncertain; it is attributed to David only by the Syriac; it is intimately connected with the two preceding psalms, and is an exhortation to the priests and Levites who kept nightly watch in the temple, to be assiduous in praising the Lord.

Verse 1. Behold, bless ye the Lord] I believe hinneh should be taken here in the sense of take heed! Be upon your guard; you serve a jealous God; provoke him not.

Which by night stand] Who minister during the night. Verse 2. Lift up your hands in the sanctuary] "In holiness." The expression seems very similar to that of St.

2 Lift up your hands ^d in the sanctuary, and bless the LORD.

Verse 3. The Lord that made heaven and earth] Who governs and possesses all things; and who can give you every spiritual and earthly blessing.

Bless thee out of Zion.] As if they had said, "We will attend to your orders; go in peace, and may God shower down his blessings upon you!"

PSALM CXXXV.

An exhortation to praise God for his goodness and greatness, 1-5; for his wonders in nature, 6, 7; his wonders done in Egypt, 8, 9; in the wilderness, 10-12; for his goodness to his people, 13, 14. The vanity of idols, 15-18. Israel, with its priests and Levites, exhorted to praise the Lord, 19-21.

PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise ye the name of the LORD; * praise him, O ye servants of the LORD.

2 Ye that stand in the house of the LORD, in the courts of the house of our God,

3 Praise the LORD; for ^d the LORD is good: sing praises unto his name; * for it is pleasant.

4 For the LORD hath chosen Jacob unto himself, and Israel for his peculiar treasure.

5 For I know that the LORD is great, and that our LORD is above all gods.

* Ps. cxlii. 1. cxxxiv. 1.—^b Luke ii. 37.—^c Ps. xcii. 13. xovi. 8. cxvi. 19.—^d Ps. cxix. 68.—^e Ps. cxlvii. 1.—^f Exod. xix. 5. Deut. vii. 6, 7. x. 15.—^g Ps. xcv. 8. xovii. 9.—^h Ps. cxv. 8.—ⁱ Jer. x. 13. li. 16.

This psalm is intimately connected with the preceding. It is an exhortation addressed to the priests and Levites, and to all Israel, to publish the praises of the Lord.

Verse 1. Praise ye the Lord.] This may be considered as the title, for it has none other.

Praise ye the name of the Lord] Praise ye the name Jehovah; that is, praise God in his infinite essence of being, holiness, goodness, and truth.

Verse 2. Ye that stand] Priests and Levites.

Verse 3. For it is pleasant.] It is becoming to acknowledge this infinite Being, and our dependence on him; and it is truly comfortable to an upright mind to be thus employed.

PSALM CXXXVI.

An exhortation to give thanks to God for various mercies granted to all men, 1-9; particularly to the Israelites in Egypt, 10-12; at the Red Sea, 13-15; in the wilderness, 16-20; and in the promised land, 21, 22; for the redemption of the captives from Babylon, 23, 24; and for his providential mercies to all, 25, 26.

O * GIVE thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: ^b for his mercy endureth for ever.

This psalm is little else than a repetition of the preceding, with the burden, "because his mercy endureth for ever," at the end of every verse. It seems to have been a responsive song: the first part of the verse sung by the Levites, the burden by the people. It has no title in the Hebrew, nor in any of the Versions. It was doubtless written after the captivity. The author is unknown.

Verse 1. O give thanks unto the Lord: for he is good] This sentiment often occurs: the goodness of the divine nature, both as a ground of confidence and of thanksgiving.

For his mercy endureth for ever.] These words, which are the burden of every verse, might be translated: "For his tender mercy is to the coming age:" meaning, probably, if the psalm be prophetic, that peculiar display of his compassion, the redemption of the world by the Lord Jesus.

Verse 2. The God of gods] As adonai signifies director, &c., it may apply here, not to idols, for God is not their god; but to the priests and spiritual rulers; as Lord of lords may apply to kings and magistrates, &c. He is God and ruler over all the rulers of the earth, whether in things sacred or civil.

Verse 4. Who alone doeth great wonders] MIRACLES. No power but that which is almighty can work miracles, the inversion, or suspension or destruction of the laws of nature.

Verse 5. By wisdom made the heavens] In the contrivance of the celestial bodies, in their relations, connexions, influences on each other, revolutions, &c., the wisdom of God particularly appears.

Verse 6. Stretched out the earth above the waters] Or, upon the waters. This seems to refer to a central abyss of waters, the existence of which has not been yet disproved.

Verse 10. Smote Egypt in their first-born] This was one of the heaviest of strokes: a great part of the rising generation was cut off; few but old persons and children left remaining.

Verse 18. Divided the Red Sea into parts] Some of the Jews have imagined that God made twelve paths through the Red Sea, that each tribe might have a distinct passage. Many of the Fathers were of the same opinion; but is this very likely?

Verse 16. Which led his people through the wilderness] It was an astonishing miracle of God to support so many

The desolate and afflicted state of the captives in Babylon, 1, 2. How they were insulted by their enemies, 3, 4. Their attachment to their country, 5, 6. Judgments denounced against their enemies, 7-9.

BY the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion.
 2 We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof.
 3 For there they that carried us away captive required of us ^a a song ; and they that ^b wasted ^c us required of us mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion.
 4 How shall we sing the LORD'S song in a ^d strange land ?

 forget her cunning.

 &c. 1 Esdr. iv. 45.—^h Heb. Makes bare.—ⁱ Isa. xlii. 1, 6, &c. xlvii. 1.

This psalm was evidently composed during, or at the close of the captivity.

Verse 1. By the rivers of Babylon] These might have been the Tigris and Euphrates, or their branches, or streams that flowed into them. In their captivity and dispersion it was customary for the Jews to hold their religious meetings on the banks of rivers : Acts xvi. 13. And sometimes they built their synagogues here, when they were expelled from the cities.

Verse 2. We hanged our harps upon the willows] The willows were very plentiful in Babylon. The great quantity of them that were on the banks of the Euphrates caused Isaiah, chap. xv. 7, to call it the brook or river of willows.

Verse 3. They that carried us away captive required of us a song] This was as unreasonable as it was insulting. How could they who had reduced us to slavery, and dragged us in chains from our own beautiful land and privileges, expect us to sing a sacred ode to please them, who were enemies both to us and to our God ?

Verse 4. How shall we sing the Lord's song] Each ! woe ! oh, we sing ! Who does not hear the deep sigh in the strongly guttural sound of the original sich ! wrung, as it were, from the bottom of the heart ?

6 If I do not remember thee, let my ^a tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth ; if I prefer not Jerusalem above ^b my chief joy.
 7 Remember, O LORD, ^c the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem ; who said, ^d Rase it, rase it, even to the foundation thereof.
 8 O daughter of Babylon, ^e who art to be ^f destroyed ; happy shall he be, ^g that ^h rewardeth thee as thou hast served us.
 9 Happy shall he be that taketh and ⁱ dasheth thy little ones against ^j the stones.

 thy deed which thou didst to us*.—^k Jer. l. 15, 29. Rev. xviii. 6.—
^l Isa. xlii. 6.—^m Heb. the rock.

Verse 5. If I forget thee, O Jerusalem] Such conduct would be, in effect, a renunciation of our land ; a tacit acknowledgment that we were reconciled to our bondage ; a concession that we were pleased with our captivity and could profane holy ordinances by using them as means of sport or pastime to the heathen. No : Jerusalem ! we remember thee and thy divine ordinances ; and especially thy King and our God, whose indignation we must bear, because we have sinned against him.

Verse 6. Let my tongue cleave] Let me lose my skill, and all its powers of melody ; my tongue, and all its faculty of speech ; my ear, and its discernment of sounds ; if I do not prefer my country, my people, and the ordinances of my God beyond all these, and whatever may constitute the chiefest joy I can possess in aught else beside. This is truly patriotic, truly noble and dignified.

Verse 7. Remember—the children of Edom] It appears from Jer. xii. 6 ; xxv. 14 ; Lam. iv. 21, 22 ; Ezek. xxv. 12 ; Obad. 11-14 ; that the Idumeans joined the army of Nebu-hadnessar against their brethren the Jews; and that they were the main instruments in raising the walls of Jerusalem even to the ground.

Verse 8. O daughter of Babylon, who art to be destroyed] Or, O thou daughter of Babylon the destroyer, or, who art to be ruined. In being reduced under the empire of the Persians, Babylon was already greatly humbled and brought low from what it was in the days of Nebuchadnezzar; but it was afterwards so totally ruined that not a vestige of it remains.

Rewardeth thee as thou hast served us.] This was Cyrus, who was chosen of God to do this work, and is therefore called happy, as being God's agent in its destruction.

Verse 9. Happy—that taketh and dasheth thy little ones] These prophetic declarations contain no excitement to any person or persons to commit acts of cruelty and barbarity; but are simply declarative of what would take place in the order of the retributive providence and justice of God, and the general opinion that should in consequence be expressed on the subject; therefore praying for the destruction of our enemies is totally out of the question.

PSALM CXXXVIII.

The Psalmist praises the Lord for his mercies to himself, 1-3. He foretels that the kings of the earth shall worship him, 4, 5. God's condescension to the humble, 6. The Psalmist's confidence, 7, 8.

A Psalm of David.

I WILL praise thee with my whole heart:
before the gods will I sing praise unto thee.

2 I will worship toward thy holy temple, and praise thy name for thy loving-kindness and for thy truth: for thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name.

3 In the day when I cried thou answeredst me, and strengthenedst me with strength in my soul.

4 All the kings of the earth shall praise thee, O LORD, when they hear the words of thy mouth.

* Ps. cxix. 46.—Ps. xxviii. 2.—1 Kings viii. 29, 30. Ps. v. 7.—4 Isa. xlii. 21.—Ps. cii. 15, 24.—Ps. cxiii. 5, 6. Isa. lvii. 15.—

The Hebrew and all the Versions attribute this psalm to David, and it is supposed to have been made by him when, delivered from all his enemies, he was firmly seated on the throne of Israel.

Verse 1. I will praise thee with my whole heart] I have received the highest favours from thee, and my whole soul should acknowledge my obligation to thy mercy.

Before the gods will I sing] "In the presence of Elohim;" most probably meaning before the ark, where were the sacred symbols of the Supreme Being. This place has been alleged by the Roman Catholics as a proof that the holy angels, who are present in the assemblies of God's people, take their prayers and praises, and present them before God. There is nothing like this in the text; for supposing, which is not granted, that the word elohim here signifies angels, the praises are not presented to them, nor are they requested to present them before God; it is simply said, Before elohim will I sing praise unto thee.

Verse 2. For thy loving-kindness] Thy tender mercy shown to me; and for the fulfilment of thy truth—the promises thou hast made.

Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name.] The original might be thus translated: "For thou hast magnified thy name and thy word over all," or, "on every occasion." There may be some corruption in this clause.

Verse 3. With strength in my soul.] Thou hast endured

5 Yea, they shall sing in the ways of the LORD: for great is the glory of the LORD.

6 Though the LORD be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off.

7 Though I walk in the midst of trouble, thou wilt revive me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hand against the wrath of mine enemies, and thy right hand shall save me.

8 The LORD will perfect that which concerneth me: thy mercy, O LORD, endureth for ever: forsake not the works of thine own hands.

my soul with many graces, blessings, and heavenly qualities.

Verse 4. All the kings of the earth] Of the land: all the neighbouring nations, seeing what is done for us, and looking in vain to find that any human agency was employed in the work, will immediately see that it was thy hand; and consequently, by confessing that it was thou, will give praise to thy name.

Verse 5. They shall sing in the ways of the Lord] They shall admire thy conduct, and the wondrous workings of thy providence; if they should not even unite with thy people.

Verse 6. Though the Lord be high] Infinitely great as God is, he regards even the lowest and most inconsiderable part of his creation; but the humble and afflicted man attracts his notice particularly.

But the proud he knoweth afar off.] He beholds them at a distance, and has them in utter derision.

Verse 7. Though I walk in the midst of trouble] I have had such experience of thy mercy, that let me fall into whatsoever trouble I may, yet I will trust in thee.

Verse 8. The Lord will perfect] Whatever is farther necessary to be done, he will do it.

Forsake not the works of thine own hands.] My body—my soul; thy work begun in my soul; thy work in behalf of Israel; thy work in the evangelisation of the world; thy work in the salvation of mankind. Thou wilt not forsake these.

PSALM CXXXIX.

A fine account of the omniscience of God, 1-6; of his omnipresence, 7-12; of his power and providence, 13-16. The excellence of his purpose, 17, 18. His opposition to the wicked, 19, 20; with whom the godly can have no fellowship, 21, 22.

The author of this Psalm is unknown; for it does not appear to have been the work of David. The composition is worthy of him, but the language appears to be lower than his time.

It is most probable that it was written on no particular occasion, but is a moral lesson on the wisdom, presence, providence, and justice of God, without any reference to any circumstance in the life of David, or in the history of the Jews.

The psalm is very sublime; the sentiments are grand, the style in general highly elevated, and the images various and impressive. The first part especially, that contains so fine a description of the wisdom and knowledge of God, is inimitable.

Verse 1. O Lord, thou hast searched me] Thou hast investigated me; thou hast thoroughly acquainted thyself with my whole soul and conduct.

Verse 2. My down-sitting and mine uprising] Even these inconsiderable and casual things are under thy continual notice.

Thou understandest my thought] "My cogitation." The original is Chaldee.

Afar off] While the figment is forming that shall produce them.

Verse 3. Thou compassest my path] Thou dost winnow, ventilate, or sift my path; and my lying down, with, my law, my bed.

And art acquainted] Thou treasurest up. Thou hast the whole number of my ways, and the steps I took in them.

Verse 4. There is not a word in my tongue] Although there be not a word in my tongue, behold, O Jehovah, thou knowest the whole of it, that is, thou knowest all my words before they are uttered, as thou knowest all my thoughts while as yet they are unformed.

Verse 5. Thou hast beset me behind and before] Bishop Horsley's emendation here is just, uniting the two verses together. "Behold thou, O Jehovah, knowest the whole, the hereafter, and the past. Thou hast formed me, and laid thy hand upon me."

Verse 6. Such knowledge is too wonderful] This kind of knowledge, that takes in all things, and their reasons, essences, tendencies, and issues, is far beyond me.

Verse 7. Whither shall I go from thy spirit?] Surely ruach in this sense must be taken personally, it certainly cannot mean either breath or wind; to render it so would make the passage ridiculous.

10 Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

11 If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me.

12 Yea, ^lthe darkness ^mhideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: ⁿthe darkness and the light are both alike to thee.

13 For thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb.

14 I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth ^oright well.

15 ^pMy ^qsubstance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth.

16 Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book ^rall my members were written, ^swhich in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them.

From thy presence?] "From thy faces." Why do we meet with this word so frequently in the plural number, when applied to God? And why have we his Spirit, and his appearances or faces, both here? A Trinitarian would at once say, "The plurality of persons in the Godhead is intended;" and who can prove that he is mistaken?

Verse 8. If I ascend] Thou art in heaven, in thy glory; in hell, in thy vindictive justice; and in all parts of earth, water, space, place, or vacuity, by thy omnipresence. Wherever I am, there art thou; and where I cannot be, thou art there. Thou fillest the heavens and the earth.

Verse 11. Surely the darkness shall cover me] Should I suppose that this would serve to screen me, immediately this darkness is turned into light.

Verse 12. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee] Darkness and light, ignorance and knowledge, are things that stand in relation to us; God sees equally in darkness as in light; and knows as perfectly, however man is enveloped in ignorance, as if all were intellectual brightness.

Verse 13. Thou hast possessed my reins] As the Hebrews believed that the reins were the first part of the human fœtus that is formed, it may here mean, thou hast laid the foundation of my being.

Verse 14. I am fearfully and wonderfully made] The texture of the human body is the most complicated and curious that can be conceived. It is, indeed, wonderfully made; and it is withal so exquisitely nice and delicate, that the slightest accident may impair or destroy in a moment some of those parts essentially necessary to the continuance of life; therefore, we are fearfully made.

Verse 15. My substance was not hid from thee] My bones or skeleton.

Curiously wrought] Rukkamti, embroidered, made of needle-work. These two words describe the two principal parts of which the human body is composed; the bony skeleton, the foundation of the whole; and the external covering of muscular flesh, tendons, veins, arteries, nerves, and skin; a curious web of fibres.

In the lowest parts of the earth] The womb of the mother, thus expressed by way of delicacy.

Verse 16. Thine eyes did see my substance] Golmi, my embryo state—my yet indistinct mass, when all was wrapped up together, before it was gradually unfolded into the lineaments of man.

me, O God! how great is the sum of them.

18 If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: when I awake, I am still with thee.

19 Surely thou wilt ^aslay the wicked, O God: ^bdepart from me, therefore, ye bloody men.

20 For they ^cspeak against thee wickedly, and thine enemies take thy name in vain.

Verse 17. How great is the sum of them!] How strongly rational are the heads or principal subjects of them! But the word may apply to the bones, atsamoth, the structure and uses of which are most curious and important.

Verse 18. If I should count them] I should be glad to enumerate so many interesting particulars: but they are beyond calculation.

When I awake] Thou art my Governor and Protector night and day.

I am still with thee.] All my steps in life are ordered by thee: I cannot go out of thy presence; I am ever under the influence of thy Spirit.

Verse 19. Surely thou wilt slay the wicked] The remaining part of this psalm has no visible connexion with the preceding. I rather think it a fragment, or a part of some other psalm.

Ye bloody men.] Men of blood, men guilty of death.

Verse 20. Thine enemies take thy name in vain.] The Verse 21. Do not I hate them] I hold their conduct in abomination.

Verse 22. With perfect hatred] Their conduct, their motives, their opposition to thee, their perfidy and idolatrous purposes, I perfectly abhor. With them I have neither part, interest, nor affection.

Verse 23. Search me, O God] Investigate my conduct, examine my heart, put me to the test, and examine my thoughts.

Verse 24. If there be any wicked way] A way of idolatry, or of error. Any thing false in religious principles; any thing contrary to piety, to thyself, and love and benevolence to man. And he needed to offer such a prayer as this, while filled with indignation against the ways of the workers of iniquities; for he who hates, utterly hates, the practices of any man, is not far from hating the man himself.

Lead me in the way everlasting.] In the old way—the way in which our fathers walked, who worshipped thee, the infinitely pure Spirit, in spirit and in truth. Lead me, guide me, as thou didst them.

PSALM CXL,

The Psalmist prays against his enemies, 1-6; returns thanks for help, 7; describes his enemies, and prays further against them, 8-11. His confidence in God, 12, 13.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

DELIVER me, O LORD, from the evil man: ^apreserve me from the ^bviolent man;

2 Which imagine mischiefs in their heart; ^ccontinually are they gathered together for war.

3 They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent; ^dadders' poison is under their lips. Selah.

4 ^eKeep me, O LORD, from the hands of the wicked; ^fpreserve me from the violent man; who have purposed to overthrow my goings.

^a Ver. 4.—^b Heb. man of violences.—^c Ps. lvi. 6.—^d Ps. lviii. 4. Rom. iii. 13.—^e Ps. lxxi. 4.—^f Ver. 1.—^g Ps. xxxv. 7. lvii. 6. cxix.

The Hebrew, and all the Versions, attribute this psalm to David; and it is supposed to contain his complaint when persecuted by Saul.

Verse 1. From the evil man] Saul, who was full of envy, jealousy, and cruelty against David, to whom both himself and his kingdom were under the highest obligations, endeavoured by every means to destroy him.

Verse 2. They gathered together] He and his courtiers form plots and cabals against my life.

Verse 3. They have sharpened their tongues] They employ their time in forging lies and calumnies against me; and those of the most virulent nature.

5 ^gThe proud have hid a snare for me, and cords; they have spread a net by the wayside; they have set gins for me. Selah.

6 I said unto the LORD, Thou art my God: hear the voice of my supplications, O LORD.

7 O God the LORD, the strength of my salvation, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle.

8 Grant not, O LORD, the desires of the wicked: further not his wicked device; ^hlest they exalt themselves. Selah.

Verse 4. Preserve me from the violent man] Saul again.

Verse 5. Have hid a snare for me] They hunted David as they would a dangerous wild beast: one while striving to pierce him with the spear; another to entangle him in their snares, so as to take and sacrifice him before the people, on pretence of his being an enemy to the state.

Verse 7. Thou hast covered my head] Not only when I fought with the proud blaspheming Philistine; but in the various attempts made against my life by my sworn enemies.

Verse 8. Further not his wicked device] He knew his enemies still desired his death, and were plotting to ac-accomplish it; and here he prays that God may disappoint and confound them.

Verse 11. Let not an evil speaker be established] "A man of tongue." There is much force in the rendering of this clause in the Chaldee, "The man of detraction, or inflammation, with the three-forked tongue." He whose tongue is set on fire from hell; the talebearer, slanderer, and dealer in scandal; wounding three at once; his neighbour whom he slanders; the person who receives the slander; and himself who deals in it. What a just description of a character which God, angels, and good men must detest!

12 I know that the LORD will ^e maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor.

13 Surely the righteous shall give thanks unto thy name: the ^f upright shall dwell in thy presence.

—¹ Kings viii. 45. Ps. ix. 4.—² Job i. 1. Ps. lxxviii. 10. Prov. ii. 21. xi. 20. xiv. 11.

Verse 12. The cause of the afflicted] Every person who is persecuted for righteousness' sake has God for his peculiar help and refuge, and the persecutor has the same God for his especial enemy.

Verse 13. The righteous shall give thanks] For thou wilt support and deliver him,

The upright shall dwell in thy presence.] Shall be admitted to the most intimate intercourse with God.

The persecuted have ever been dear to God Almighty; and the martyrs were, in an especial manner, his delight; and in proportion as he loved those, so must he hate and detest these.

PSALM CCLI.

The Psalmist prays that his devotions may be accepted, 1, 2. That he may be enabled so to watch that he do not offend with his tongue; and that he may be preserved from wickedness, 3, 4. His willingness to receive reproof, 5. He complains of disasters, 6, 7. His trust in God, and prayer against his enemies, 8-10.

This Psalm is generally attributed to David, and considered to have been composed during his persecution by Saul. Some suppose that he made it at the time that he formed the resolution to go to Achish, king of Gath; see 1 Sam. xxvi. It is generally thought to be an evening prayer, and has long been used as such in the service of the Greek church. It is in several places very obscure.

Verse 1. Lord, I cry unto thee] Many of David's psalms begin with complaints; but they are not those of habitual plaint and peevishness. He was in frequent troubles and difficulties, and he always sought help in God.

Verse 2. As incense] Incense was offered every morning and evening before the Lord, on the golden altar, before the veil of the sanctuary; Exod. xxix. 39, and Numb. xxviii. 4.

As the evening sacrifice.] This was a burnt-offering, accompanied with flour and salt. But it does not appear that David refers to any sacrifice, for he uses not sebach, which is almost universally used for a slaughtered animal; but minchah, which is generally taken for a gratitude-offering or unbloody sacrifice. The literal translation of the passage is, "Let my prayer be established for incense before thy faces; and the lifting up of my hands for the evening oblation."

Verse 3. Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth] Some think the prayer is against impatience; but if he were now excellent oil, which shall not break my head; yet yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities.

6 When their judges are overthrown in stony places, they shall hear my words; for they are sweet.

7 Our bones are scattered ¹ at the grave's mouth, as when one cutteth and cleaveth wood upon the earth.

8 But ² mine eyes are unto thee, O God the LORD: in thee is my trust; ³ leave not my soul destitute.

9 Keep me from ⁴ the snares which they have laid for me, and the gins of the workers of iniquity.

10 ⁵ Let the wicked fall into their own nets, whilst that I withal ⁶ escape.

going to Gath, it is more natural to suppose that he was praying to be preserved from dishonouring the truth, and from making sinful concessions in a heathen land; and at a court where, from his circumstances, it was natural to suppose he might be tempted to apostasy by the heathen party.

Verse 4. Let me not eat of their dainties.] This may refer either to eating things forbidden by the law; or to the partaking in banquets or feasts in honour of idols.

Verse 5. Let the righteous smite me] This verse is extremely difficult in the original. The following translation appears to me to be the best: "Let the righteous chastise me in mercy and instruct me: but let not the oil of the wicked anoint my head. It shall not adorn my head; for still my prayer shall be against their wicked works."

The oil of the wicked may here mean his smooth flattering speeches; and the Psalmist intimates that he would rather suffer the cutting reproof of the righteous than the oily talk of the flatterer. If this were the case, how few are there now a-days of his mind!

Verse 6. When their judges are overthrown in stony places] "In the hands of the rock." Does this rock signify a strong or fortified place; and its hands the garrison which have occupied it, by whom these judges were overthrown?

They shall hear my words; for they are sweet.] Some think there is here an allusion to David's generous treatment of Saul in the cave of En-gedi, and afterwards at the hill of Hachilah : or perhaps there may be reference to the death of Saul and his sons, and the very disastrous defeat of the Israelites at Gilboa. If so, the seventh verse will lose its chief difficulty, Our bones are scattered at the grave's mouth; but if we take them as referring to the slaughter of the priests at Nob, then, instead of translating lephi sheol, at the grave's mouth, we may translate at the command of Saul; and then the verse will point out the manner in which those servants of the Lord were massacred; Doeg cut them in pieces; hewed them down as one cleaveth wood. Some understand all this of the cruel usage of the captives in Babylon.

Verse 8. But mine eyes are unto thee] In all times, in all places, on all occasions, I will cleave unto the Lord, and put my whole confidence in him.

Verse 10. Let the wicked fall into their own nets] This is generally the case; those who lay snares for others fall into them themselves.

Whilst—I withal escape.] They alone are guilty; they alone spread the nets and gins; I am innocent, and God will cause me to escape.

PSALM CXLII.

The Psalmist, in great distress and difficulty, calls upon God, 1-7.

The title says, 'An Instruction of David,' or a Psalm of David, giving instruction; "A Prayer when he was in the cave."

David was twice in great peril in caves; At the cave of Adullam, 1 Sam. xxii.; and at En-gedi, 1 Sam. xxiv. If the inscription can be depended on, the cave of En-gedi is the most likely of the two, for the scene laid here.

Verse 3. Then thou knewest my path.] When Saul and his army were about the cave in which I was hidden, thou knewest my path—that I had then no way of escape but by miracle: but thou didst not permit them to know that I was wholly in their power.

Verse 4. There was no man that would know me] This has been applied to the time in which our Lord was deserted by his disciples.

Verse 5. Thou art my refuge] Even in these most disastrous circumstances, I will put my trust in thee.

Verse 6. I am brought very low] Never was I so near total ruin before.

Deliver me from my persecutors] They are now in full possession of the only means of my escape.

They are stronger than I.] What am I and my men against this well-appointed armed multitude, with their king at their head?

Verse 7. Bring my soul out of prison] Bring my life out of this cave in which it is now imprisoned; Saul and his men being in possession of the entrance.

The righteous shall compass me about] They shall crown me; perhaps meaning that the pious Jews, on the death of Saul, would cheerfully join together to make him king, being convinced that God, by his bountiful dealings with him, intended that it should be so.

PSALM CXLIII.

The Psalmist prays for mercy, and deprecates judgment, 1, 2. His persecutions, 3. His earnest prayer for deliverance, 4-9. Prays for God's quickening Spirit, 10, 11. And for the total discomfiture of his adversaries, 12.

A Psalm of David.

HEAR my prayer, O LORD, give ear to my supplications: ^a in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness.

2 And ^b enter not into judgment with thy servant: for ^c in thy sight shall no man living be justified.

3 For the enemy hath persecuted my soul; he hath smitten my life down to the ground: he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

4 ^d Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate.

5 ^e I remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands.

6 ^f I stretch forth my hands unto thee: ^g my soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. Selah.

7 Hear me speedily, O LORD: my spirit faileth:

The Hebrew and all the Versions attribute this psalm to David; nor is there any thing in it that positively disagrees with this inscription. This is the last of the seven psalms styled penitential.

Verse 1. In thy faithfulness answer me] Thou hast promised to support me in my difficulties, and, though my children should forsake me, never to withdraw thy loving-kindness from me.

Verse 2. Enter not into judgment] Do not come into court, either as a Witness against me, or as a Judge, else I am ruined; for thou hast seen all my ways that they are evil, and thy justice requires thee to punish me. Nor can any soul that has ever lived be justified in the sight of thy justice and righteousness. O what a relief is Jesus crucified to a soul in such circumstances!

Verse 3. He hath made me to dwell in darkness] Literally, in dark places. This may be understood of David's taking refuge in caves and dens of the earth, to escape from his persecuting son; yea, even to take refuge in the tombs or repositories of the dead.

Verse 4. Therefore is my spirit] I am deeply depressed in spirit, and greatly afflicted in body.

My heart within me is desolate.] It has no companion of its sorrows, no sympathetic friend. I am utterly destitute of comfort.

Verse 5. I remember the days of old] Thou hast often helped me, often delivered me.

Verse 6. I stretch forth my hands] This is a natural action. All in distress, or under the influence of eager desire, naturally extend their hands and arms, as if to catch at help and obtain succour.

hide not thy face from me, ^a lest ^b I be like unto them that go down into the pit.

8 Cause me to hear thy loving-kindness ^c in the morning; for in these do I trust: ^d cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for ^e I lift up my soul unto thee.

9 Deliver me, O LORD, from mine enemies: I ^f flee unto thee to hide me.

10 ^g Teach me to do thy will; for thou art my God: ^h thy Spirit is good; lead me into ⁱ the land of uprightness.

11 ^j Quicken me, O LORD, for thy name's sake: for thy righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble.

As a thirsty land.] Parched and burned by the sun, longs for rain; so does my thirsty soul for the living God.

Verse 7. Hear me speedily] A few hours, and my state may be irretrievable. In a short time my unnatural son may put an end to my life.

Verse 8. Cause me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning] This petition was probably offered in the night-season.

Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk] Point out by thy especial providence the path I should take.

Verse 9. I flee unto thee to hide me.] That I may not be found by my enemies, who seek my life to destroy it.

Verse 10. Teach me to do thy will] To be found doing the will of God is the only safe state for man.

Thy Spirit is good] The author of every good desire and holy purpose.

Lead me] Let it lead me by its continued inspirations and counsels.

Into the land of uprightness.] "Into a right land." Verse 11. Quicken me] I am as a dead man, and my hopes are almost dead within me.

Verse 12. And of thy mercy] To me and the kingdom.

Cut off my enemies] Who, if they succeed, will destroy the very form of godliness. The steps he has already taken show that even morality shall have no countenance, if Absalom reign.

I am thy servant.] Whoever is disloyal to me, I will love and serve thee.

The Psalmist praises God for his goodness, 1, 2. Exclamations relative to the vanity of human life, 3, 4. He prays against his enemies, 5-8; and extols God's mercy for the temporal blessings enjoyed by his people, 9-15.

3 ^a LORD, what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! or the son of man, that thou makest account of him!

4 ^a Man is like to vanity: ^b his days are as a shadow that passeth away.

Calmet thinks, and with much probability, that this Psalm was composed by David after the death of Absalom, and the restoration of the kingdom to peace and tranquillity.

Verse 1. Teacheth my hands to war] To use sword, battle-axe, or spear.

And my fingers to fight] To use the bow and arrows, and the sling.

Verse 2. Who subdueth my people] Who has once more reduced the nation to a state of loyal obedience. This may refer to the peace after the rebellion of Absalom.

Verse 3. Lord, what is man] What is Adam, that thou approvest of him? Can he do any thing worthy of thy notice? Or the son of feeble perishing man, that thou shouldst hold him in repute? What care, love, and attention dost thou lavish upon him!

Verse 4. Man is like to vanity] Literally, Adam is like to Abel, exposed to the same miseries, accidents, and murders; for in millions of cases the hands of brothers are lifted up to shed the blood of brothers. What are wars but fratricide in the great human family?

His days are as a shadow] The life of Abel was promissory of much blessedness; but it afforded merely the shadow of happiness. He was pure and holy, beloved of his parents, and beloved of God; but, becoming the object of his brother's envy, his life became a sacrifice to his piety.

Verse 9. I will sing a new song] A song of peculiar excellence. I will pour forth all my gratitude, and all my skill, on its composition.

Verse 10. He that giveth salvation unto kings] Monarchy, in the principle, is from God: it is that form of government which, in the course of the divine providence, has principally prevailed: and that which, on the whole, has been most 12 That our sons may be ^a as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner stones, ^b polished after the similitude of a palace:

13 That our garners may be full, affording ^a all manner of store; that our sheep may bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets:

14 That our oxen may be ^a strong to labour: that there be no breaking in, nor going out; that there be no complaining in our streets.

15 ^a Happy is that people, that is in such a case: yea, happy is that people, whose God is the LORD.

beneficial to mankind. God, therefore, has it under his peculiar protection. It is by him that kings reign; and by his special providence they are protected.

Verse 12. That our sons may be as plants] God had promised to his people, being faithful, THREE descriptions of BLESSINGS, Deut. xxviii. 4. 1. The fruit of the body—sons and daughters. 2. The fruits of the ground—grass and corn in sufficient plenty. 3. Fruit of the cattle—"the increase of kine, and flocks of sheep." These are the blessings to which the Psalmist refers here, as those in which he might at present exult and triumph: blessings actually enjoyed by his people at large; proofs of his mild and paternal government, and of the especial blessing of the Almighty.

Verse 13. That our garners, &c.] Our garners are full. These are not prayers put up by David for such blessings: but assertions, that such blessings were actually in possession. All these expressions should be understood in the present tense.

Ten thousands in our streets] Bechulsatheymu should be translated in our pens or sheep-walks; for sheep bringing forth in the streets of cities or towns is absurd.

Verse 14. Our oxen may be strong to labour] We have not only an abundance of cattle: but they are of the most strong and vigorous breed.

No breaking in] My enemies are either become friends, and are united with me in political interests: or are, through fear, obliged to stand aloof.

Verse 15. Happy is that people] "O how happy are the people!" Such were his people; and they had not only all this secular happiness, but they had Jehovah for their God; and in him had a ceaseless fountain of strength, protection, earthly blessings, and eternal mercies!

PSALM CXLV.

God is praised for his unsearchable greatness, 1, 2; for his majesty and terrible acts, 3-6; for his goodness and tender mercies to all, 7-9; for his power and kingdom, 10-13; for his kindness to the distressed, 14; for his providence, 15-17. He hears and answers prayer, 18-20. All should praise him, 21.

This psalm is attributed to David by the Hebrew and all the Versions. It is the last of the acrostic psalms; and should contain twenty-two verses, as answering to the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet; but the verse between the thirteenth and fourteenth is lost out of the present Hebrew copies; but a translation of it is found in the Syriac, Septuagint, Vulgate, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. It does not appear on what particular occasion it was composed; or, indeed, whether there was any occasion but gratitude to God for his ineffable favours to mankind.

Verse 1. I will extol thee] I will raise thee on high, I will lift thee up.

I will bless thy name] For ever and onward, in this and the coming world.

Verse 3. His greatness is unsearchable.] Literally, To his mightiness there is no investigation. All in God is unlimited and eternal.

Verse 4. One generation] Thy creating and redeeming acts are recorded in thy word; but thy wondrous providential dealings with mankind must be handed down by tradition, from generation to generation; for they are in continual occurrence, and consequently innumerable.

Verse 8. The Lord is gracious] His holy nature is ever disposed to show favour.

Full of compassion] Wherever he sees misery, his eye affects his heart.

Slow to anger] When there is even the greatest provocation.

Of great mercy.] Great in his abundant mercy. These four things give us a wonderful display of the goodness of the divine nature.

Verse 9. The Lord is good to all] There is not a soul out of hell that is not continually under his most merciful regards; so far is he from willing or decreeing before their creation the damnation of any man.

His tender mercies] His bowels of compassion are over all his works; he feels for his intelligent offspring, as the most affectionate mother does for the child of her own bosom.

Verse 10. All thy works shall praise thee] Whom? The God who is good to all.

11 They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power;

12 To make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom.

13 ⁱ Thy kingdom is ⁿ an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations.

14 ^o The LORD upholdeth all that fall, and ^p raiseth up all those that be bowed down.

15 ^q The eyes of all ^r wait upon thee; and ^s thou givest them their meat in due season.

16 Thou openest thine hand, ^t and satisfiest the desire of every living thing.

17 The LORD is righteous in all his ways, and ^u holy in all his works.

18 ^v The LORD is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him ^w in truth.

19 He will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear their cry, and will save them.

20 ^x The LORD preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy.

21 My mouth shall speak the praise of the LORD: and let all flesh bless his holy name for ever and ever.

Verse 12. To make known] They delight to recommend their God and Father to others.

Verse 13. Thy dominion endureth] There is neither age nor people in and over which God does not manifest his benignly ruling power.

Verse 14. The Lord upholdeth all that fall] The falling, or those who are not able to keep their feet; the weak. He shores them up; he is their prop. No man falls through his own weakness merely; if he rely on God, the strongest foe cannot shake him.

Verse 15. The eyes of all wait upon thee] What a fine figure! The young of all animals look up to their parents for food. God is here represented as the universal Father, providing food for every living creature.

In due season.] The kind of food that is suited to every animal, and to all the stages of life in each animal. This is a wonderful mystery. It is a fact that all are thus provided for; but how is it done? All expect it from God, and not one is disappointed.

Verse 16. Thou openest thine hand] What a hand is this that holds in it all the food that meets the desires and necessities of the universe of creatures!

Verse 17. The Lord is righteous] It was the similarity of this to the omitted verse, which should have been the fourteenth, that caused it to be omitted.

Verse 18. The Lord is nigh] Whoever calls upon God in truth, with a sincere and upright heart, one that truly desires his salvation, to that person God is nigh.

Verse 20. The Lord preserveth] He is the keeper of all them that love him.

But all the wicked will he destroy.] They call not upon him; they fight against him, and he will confound and destroy them.

Verse 21. Let all flesh bless his holy name] He is good to all, wants to save all, actually feeds and preserves all.

PSALM CXLVI.

The Psalmist, full of gratitude, purposes to praise God for ever, 1, 2; and exhorts not to trust in man, not even the most powerful; for which he gives his reasons, 3, 4. The great advantage of trusting in God, 5. The mercies which they who trust in God may expect, 6-9. The divine government is everlasting, 10.

This is the first of the Psalms called Hallelujah psalms, of which there are five, and which conclude the book. It was probably written after the captivity, and may refer to the time when Cyrus, prejudiced by the enemies of the Jews, withdrew his order for the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem, to which revocation of the royal edict the third verse may refer: Put not your trust in princes, &c.

Verse 2. While I live will I praise.] The true feeling of a heart overpowered with a sense of God's goodness.

While I have any being.] Beadi, in my continuance, in my progression, my eternal existence. This is very expressive.

Verse 3. Put not your trust in princes.] This may refer, as has been stated above, to Cyrus, who had revoked his edict for the rebuilding of Jerusalem. Perhaps they had begun to suppose that they were about to owe their deliverance to the Persian king. God permitted this change in the disposition of the king, to teach them the vanity of confidence in men, and the necessity of trusting in himself.

Verse 4. His breath goeth forth.] When he ceases to respire he ceases to live; his body from that moment begins to claim its affinity to the earth; and all his thoughts, purposes, and projects, whether good or evil, come to nought and perish.

Verse 5. Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help.] In the son of man there is no help, teshuah, no saving principle. Every son of Adam naturally comes into the world without this, and must continue so till the Lord open the eyes of the blind, ver. 8; but a measure of light is given from that true Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. This son of Adam returns to his earth, to the ground, from which he was taken; this refers directly to Gen. ii. 7, iii. 19. But he that has the God for his help who helped Jacob in his distress, can never be destitute; for this God changes not; he lives for ever, and his projects cannot Verse 7. Which executeth judgment for the oppressed.] For those who suffer by violence or calumny. This may refer to the Israelites, who suffered much by oppression from the Babylonians, and by calumny from the Samaritans, &c., who had prejudiced the king of Persia against them.

Giveth food to the hungry.] No doubt he fed the poor captives by many displays of his peculiar providence.

The Lord looseth the prisoners.] And as he has sustained you so long under your captivity, so will he bring you out of it.

Verse 8. Openeth the eyes of the blind.] He brings us out of our prison-house, from the shadow of death, and opens our eyes that we may behold the free light of the day.

Raiseth them that are bowed down.] Through a sense of their guilt and sinfulness.

The Lord loveth the righteous.] These he makes partakers of a divine nature; and he loves those who bear his own image.

Verse 9. Preserveth the strangers.] He has preserved you strangers in a strange land, where you have been in captivity for seventy years; and though in an enemy's country, he has provided for the widows and orphans as amply as if he had been in the promised land.

The way of the wicked he turneth upside down.] He subverts, turns aside. In their career he will either stop them, turn them aside, or overturn them.

Verse 10. The Lord shall reign for ever.] Therefore he can never fail; and he is thy God, O Zion. Hitherto he has helped you and your fathers; and has extended that help from generation to generation. Therefore trust in him and bless the Lord.

PSALM CXLVII.

The Psalmist praises God for his goodness to Jerusalem, 1-3; shows his great mercy to them that trust in him 4-6; he extols him for his mercies, and providential kindness, 7-11; for his defence of Jerusalem, 12-15; for his wonders in the seasons, 16-18; and his word unto Jacob, 19, 20.

PRAISE ye the LORD: for it is good to sing praises unto our God; ^b for it is pleasant; and ^c praise is comely.

2 The LORD doth ^a build up Jerusalem: ^e he gathereth together the outcasts of Israel.

3 ^f He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their ^g wounds.

4 ^h He telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names.

5 ⁱ Great is our LORD, and of ^j great power: ^k his understanding is infinite.

6 ^l The LORD lifteth up the meek: he casteth the wicked down to the ground.

7 Sing unto the LORD with thanksgiving: sing praise upon the harp unto our God:

8 ^m Who covereth the heaven with clouds, who prepareth rain for the earth, who maketh grass to grow upon the mountains.

9 ⁿ He giveth to the beast his food, and ^o to the young ravens which cry.

10 ^p He delighteth not in the strength of the horse: he taketh not pleasure in the legs of a man.

This Psalm was probably penned after the captivity, when the Jews were busily employed in rebuilding Jerusalem, as may be gathered from the second and thirteenth verses.

Verse 1. Praise is comely.] It is decent, befitting, and proper that every intelligent creature should acknowledge the Supreme Being; and speak good of his name.

Verse 2. The Lord doth build up.] The Psalmist appears to see the walls rising under his eye, because the outcast of Israel, those who had been in captivity, are now gathered together to do the work.

Verse 3. He healeth the broken in heart.] From the root shabar, to break in pieces, we have our word shiver, to break into splinters, into shivers. The heart broken in pieces by a sense of God's displeasure.

Verse 4. He telleth the number of the stars.] He whose knowledge is so exact as to tell every star in heaven, can be under no difficulty to find out and collect all the scattered exiles of Israel.

Verse 5. His understanding is infinite.] Therefore, he can know, as he can do, all things.

Verse 6. The Lord lifteth up the meek.] The humbled, the afflicted.

Verse 7. Sing unto the Lord.] Enu, sing a responsive song, sing in parts, answer one another.

Verse 8. Who covereth the heaven with clouds.] Collects the vapours together, in order to cause it to rain upon the earth. These things form a part of his providential management of the world.

Verse 10. He delighteth not.] The horse, among all animals, is most delighted in by man for beauty, strength, and fleetness. And a man's legs, if well proportioned, are more admired than even the finest features of his face. Though God has made these yet they are not his peculiar delight.

Verse 11. The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him.] That are truly religious.

11 The LORD taketh pleasure in them that fear him, in those that hope in his mercy.

12 Praise the LORD, O Jerusalem; praise thy God, O Zion.

13 For he hath strengthened the bars of thy gates; he hath blessed thy children within thee.

14 ^a He ^b maketh peace in thy borders, and ^c filleth thee with the ^d finest of the wheat.

15 ^e He sendeth forth his commandment upon earth: his word runneth very swiftly.

16 ^f He giveth snow like wool: he scattereth the hoar frost like ashes.

17 He casteth forth his ice like morsels: who can stand before his cold?

18 ^g He sendeth out his word, and melteth them: he causeth his wind to blow, and the waters flow.

19 ^h He sheweth ⁱ his word unto Jacob, ^j his statutes and his judgments unto Israel.

20 ^k He hath not dealt so with any nation: and as for his judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the LORD.

Rom. iii. 1, 2.

In those that hope in his mercy.] Who are just beginning to seek the salvation of their souls. Even the cry of the penitent is pleasing in the ear of the Lord.

Verse 13. He hath strengthened the bars of thy gates.] He has enabled thee to complete the walls of Jerusalem. From the former part of the psalm it appears the walls were then in progress; from this part, they appear to be completed, and provisions to be brought into the city, to support its inhabitants. The gates were set up and well secured by bars, so that the grain, &c., was in safety.

Verse 14. He maketh peace.] They were now no longer troubled with the Samaritans, Moabites, &c.

Verse 15. He sendeth forth his commandment.] His substantial word. It is here personified, and appears to be a very active agent running every where, and performing the purposes of his will.

Verse 16. He giveth snow like wool.] Falling down in large flakes; and in this state nothing in nature has a nearer resemblance to fine white wool.

Scattereth the hoar frost like ashes.] Spreading it over the whole face of nature.

Verse 17. He casteth forth his ice.] Korcho (probably hailstones), like crumbs.

Who can stand before his cold?] At particular times the cold in the east is so very intense as to kill man and beast.

Verse 18. He sendeth out his word.] He gives a command: the south wind blows; the thaw takes place; and the ice and snow being liquefied, the waters flow, where before they were bound up by the ice.

Verse 19. He sheweth his word unto Jacob.] To no nation of the world beside had God given a revelation of his will.

Verse 20. And as for his judgments.] The wondrous ordinances of his law, no nation had known them; and consequently, did not know the glorious things in futurity to which they referred.

The Psalmist calls on all the creation to praise the Lord. The angels and visible heavens, 1-6; the earth and the sea, 7; the meteors, 8; mountains, hills, and trees, 9; beasts, reptiles, and fowls, 10; kings, princes, and mighty men, 11; men, women, and children, 12, 13; and especially all the people of Israel, 14.

PRAISE ^a ye the LORD. Praise ye the LORD from the heavens: praise him in the heights.

² Praise ye him, all his angels: praise ye him, all his hosts.

³ Praise ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light.

⁴ Praise him, ^c ye heavens of heavens, and ^d ye waters that be above the heavens.

⁵ Let them praise the name of the LORD: for ^e he commanded, and they were created.

⁶ He hath also stablished them for ever and ever: he hath made a decree which shall not pass.

⁷ Praise the LORD from the earth, ^f ye dragons, and all deeps:

This psalm has no title; but by the Syriac it is attributed to Haggai and Zechariah; and the Septuagint and the Æthiopic follow it. As a hymn of praise, this is the most sublime in the whole book.

Verse 1. Praise ye the Lord from the heavens] Min hashshamayim signifies whatever belongs to the heavens, all their inhabitants; as min haarets, ver. 7, signifies all that belong to the earth, all its inhabitants and productions.

Verse 3. Praise ye him, sun and moon] Every work of God's hand partakes so much of his perfections, that it requires only to be studied and known, in order to show forth the manifold wisdom, power, and goodness of the Creator.

Stars of light] The brightest and most luminous stars; probably the planets may be especially intended.

Verse 4. Heavens of heavens] Heavens exceeding heavens. Systems of systems extending as far beyond the solar system, as it does beyond the lowest deeps.

Ye waters that be above the heavens] Clouds, vapours, air, exhalations, rain, snow, and meteors of every kind.

Verse 5. He commanded, and they were created] He spake the word expressive of the idea in his infinite mind; and they sprang into being according to that idea.

Verse 6. He hath also stablished them] He has determined their respective revolutions, and the times in which they are performed.

Verse 7. Praise the Lord from the earth] As, in the first address, he calls upon the heavens, and all that belong to them; so here, in this second part, he calls upon the earth, and all that belong to it.

Ye dragons] Tanninim, whales, porpoises, sharks, and sea-monsters of all kinds.

And all deeps] Whatever is contained in the sea, whirlpools, eddies, ground tides, with the astonishing flux and reflux of the ocean.

Verse 8. Fire, and hail; snow, and vapours] All kinds of meteors, water, and fire, in all their forms and combinations. And air, whether in the gentle breeze, the gale, the whirlwind, the tempest, or the tornado; each accomplishing an especial purpose, and fulfilling a particular will of the Most High.

Verse 9. Mountains, and all hills] Whether primitive, secondary, or alluvial; of ancient or recent formation, with all their contents quarries, mines, and minerals. But what a profusion of wisdom and skill is lavished on these!

And all cedars] Every kind of forest trees. The forma-

Verse 10. Beasts] Wild beasts of every kind. All cattle] Domestic animals; those used for the service of the house, and those for agricultural purposes.

Creeping things] All the classes of reptiles, from the boa constrictor, to the animals that are found in water, and require the power of the microscope to bring them to view.

Verse 11. Kings of the earth] As being representatives of the Most High; and all people—the nations governed by them. Princes, as governors of provinces, and all judges executing those laws that bind man to man, and regulate and preserve civil society; praise God, from whom ye have derived your power and influence: for by him kings reign. And let the people magnify God for civil and social institutions, and for the laws by which, under him, their lives and properties are preserved.

Verse 12. Both young men, and maidens] Who are in the bloom of youth, and in the height of health and vigour; know that God is your Father; and let the morning and energy of your days be devoted to him.

Old men, and children] Very appropriately united here, as the beginning and conclusion of life present nearly the same passions, appetites, caprices, and infirmities; yet in both the beneficence, all-sustaining power, and goodness of God are seen.

Verse 13. Let them] All already specified, praise the name of Jehovah, because he excels all beings: and his glory, as seen in creating, preserving, and governing all things, is at, upon or over, the earth and heaven.

Verse 14. He also exalteth the horn] Raises to power and authority his people.

The praise] Jehovah is the subject of the praise of all his saints.

A people near unto him] The only people who know him, and make their approaches unto him with the sacrifices and offerings which he has himself prescribed. Praise ye the Lord!

Let the lip of the infant, the shout of the adult, and the sigh of the aged, ascend to the universal parent, as a gratitude-offering. He guards those who hang upon the breast; controls and directs the headstrong and giddy, and sustains old age in its infirmities; and sanctifies to it the sufferings that bring on the termination of life.

PSALM CXLIX.

All the congregation are invited to praise God for his mercies, 1-8. Their great privileges, 4, 5. Their victories, 6, 9.

PRAISE ye the LORD. ^b Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise in the congregation of saints.

2 Let Israel rejoice in ^c him that made him : let the children of Zion be joyful in their ^d King.

3 * Let them praise his name ' in the dance : let them sing praises unto him with the timbrel and harp.

4 For ^e the LORD taketh pleasure in his people : ^f he will beautify the meek with salvation.

* Heb. Hallelujah.—^b Ps. xxxiii. 8. Isa. xlii. 19.—^c See Job xxxv. 10. Ps. c. 8. Isa. liv. 6.—^d Zech. ix. 9. Matt. xxi. 5.—^e Ps. lxxxi. 2: cl. 4.—^f Or, with the pipe.—^g Ps. xxxv. 27.—^h Ps. cxvii. 18.—

This seems to be a song of triumph, after some glorious victory; probably in the time of the Maccabees. It has been also understood as predicting the success of the gospel in the nations of the earth. It has no title in the Hebrew, nor in any of the Versions, and no author's name.

Verse 1. Sing unto the Lord a new song] That is, as we have often had occasion to remark, an excellent song, the best we can possibly pronounce.

Congregation of saints.] The Israelites, who were by profession and by injunction, a holy people.

Verse 2. In him that made him] Let them remember in their exultations to give all glory to the Lord; for he is the Author of their being and their blessings. And let them know that he is their King also; that they should submit to his authority, and be guided and regulated in their hearts and conduct by his laws.

Verse 3. Let them praise his name in the dance] Bemachol, with the pipe, or some kind of wind music, classed here with toph, the tabor or drum, and kinnor, the harp. I know no place in the Bible where machol and machalath mean dance of any kind; they constantly signify some kind of pipe.

Verse 4. The Lord taketh pleasure in his people] The pleasure or good will of God is in his people: he loves them ardently, and will load them with his benefits, while they are humble and thankful; for, He will beautify] He will make fair, the meek, the lowly, the humble with salvation.

Verse 5. Let the saints be joyful in glory] Let them be gloriously joyful: seeing themselves so honoured and so successful, let them be joyful. God has put glory or honour upon them; let them give him the thanks due to his name.

Sing aloud upon their couches.] While they are reclining on their couches. At their festal banquets, let them shout the praises of the Lord.
