FROM FRANCE.

We find the following in the Journal du Havre of the 24th ultimo:

We were right yesterday in saying that gratitude had resumed all its rights. Never had grief more national, more profound, more deeply felt, accompanied a citizen to his last abode. This day of mourning and of tears will remain in our annals as the most holy, the greatest of testaments raised to the most virtuous of men.

Yesterday evening numerous groups of the common people were standing melancholy and silent around the house of mourning, repeating in a low voice the thousand acts of his kindness of him they loved so well, and reliously complaining of not being able to contemplate, a last time, his venerable features. Ah! how sweet this simple and magnificent panegyric would have been to that heart which, in his life, always thrilled at the voice of the people!

This morning before 7 o'clock, a squadron of Chasseurs was placed in front of the Church de la Madeleine, several battalions of infantry of the line were stationed in the rue St Honore and Faubourg St Honora to the height of the rue d'Anjou; a squadron of lancers was ranged in order of battle before the hotel of the deceased; several groups and a pretty large number of isolated individuals silently covered the rue d'Anjou throughout its whole extent; every countenance, even those of the soldiers, expressed deep sorrow. The exterior of the house of death, as well as its entrance, were dressed in black; a large funeral ball, on the front door, decked with funeral drapery, had rolling the badge of the illustrious deceased; the officers of the army, of the staff, and of the national guard, as they successively arrived, cast sorrowful looks on these distinguished remains; the thoughts of each seemed to seek in the future whose name has occupied the world for more than a century.

The apartments of the General presented a spectacle not less solemn; there the eye rested with tenderness on a family broken by grief—on that so unhappy son, whose filial love was not a sentiment, but a deep and ardent religion. Thence the visitors passed silently into the chamber which had received the last sigh of the great citizen. Most diversified emotions at the sight of that bed, still made, where so noble a life was extinguished. They spoke with respect the last words which his last breath had fallen. They paused before the desk, on which his venerable hand had traced so many generous thoughts;—they perused that famous act of the Congress of the United States, which united him to the great American family, and which he considered as the sweet st recompense for his long services; then they cast their eyes upon that other monument of the gratitude of a great and unfortunate nation; the declaration by which the national guard of Warsaw named him its first grenadier. In this chamber of death, the inhabitants of La Grange, of whose farmers he was always the father and friend, mingled their grief with that of the officers of the line, who in their turn came to contemplate the ruins of this great existence. Every thing seemed overwhelmed by affliction. I am mistaken if the whose heart was the most cruelly torn, M George de Lafayette; conceived a thought worthy of his father, as he wrote to the Polish General Ostrowski.

Paris, May 22.

"My dear General—Yet a few hours, and so impassable a space will separate me and my family from him whom I hold most dear in the world—from him whom we have revered and cherished ever since we have seen the light. In this grave and solemn circumstance, the children and grandchildren of General Lafayette could not forget the gratefulness to the Polish cause; his admiration for that nation.

It seemed to them that General Ostrowski, the personal friend of their father, commander of that fine national guard of Warsaw which had honored him with the brevet of first grenadier, a warm lover of his country, was naturally called upon to represent the Polish patriots near the tomb of a citizen adopted by them.

"General, we ask you to hold one of the corners of the pall which will cover our father.

"Accept, General, the homage of the sentiments with which you have inspired me.

"GEORGE W. LAFAYETTE."

Gen Ostrowski had preceded this letter; he had hastened with all his compatriots to render a last homage to him who had loved Poland so well, who had done so much to her liberty, and lamented so much over its disasters and its sorrows.

At eight o'clock the saloons of the house of death were already filled. Marshal Grouchy, Gen Darriute and his son, Gen Dupont, Messrs Dupin, Remusat, Comte, Salverte, Teste, Grammont, Excelmans, the Duke de Bassano, Mathieu-Dumas, de Corcelles, Tracy, Anguis, Mauguin, Arazo, Cousinann, de Laborde and others, successively arrived.

At 9 o'clock, the squadron of cavalry which faced the house of death, gave place to a battalion of the municipal guard; the street was evacuated and the procession moved.

The Courier Francais add the following reflections to the above details given by the Messager:

Numerous corps were stationed on the route of the procession, in the place Vendome, at the place de la Bastille. This funeral pomp did not constitute funeral rites such as Lafayette ought to have had, especially when it is considered that there was more of menace than of exhibition in the vast display of forces. To understand the impression that the population received from it, it was sufficient to see with what ease they took fright. The police having made two or three attempts to seize a tri-colored flag which some young men were carrying, the crowd immediately took to flight in all directions, as if death was behind them.

We do not live at a time when the memory of Lafayette can be officially honored; there were mingled with the honors that was addressed to him too many hypocritical demonstrations of those to whom his presence was a reproach. Posterity, we doubt not, will surpass us in testimonials of love, affection and gratitude for a man whose name is so dear to liberty, so many accounts. This comparison will be a consolation; but we are condemned to submit to many of humiliation! We are at one of those sad periods of indifference and desolation which render a people so changed as to be known again! happily this slumber of the generous sentiments does not last long with us; the admiration, the attitude towards Lafayette will no more be extinguished in the hearts attached to his name; that name will increase in proportion as it shall be removed from us, and the day it comes when France will render him honors worthy of him and of herself.

The Editor of the Germantown Telegraph received orders heretofore issued to strike off the name of one of his subscribers from his books, because his bill was not presented for payment in every six months.

SENTENCES FROM HORACE.

No one is born without vices, and he is the best man who is encumbered with the least.

It is but fair that he who entreats a pardon for his faults, should be ready to grant one in his turn.

COMMERCIAL.

From Leby's Prices Current of July 19.

COTTON—Arrived since the 11th instant of Louisiana 3933 bales; Tennessee and North Alabama, 727 bales. Cleared, in the same time, for Liverpool, 1822 bales, Nantz, 961; Hamburg, 352; New York and Philadelphia, 309—together, 6514 bales;—making a total stock of 5737 bales, and leaving on hand, including what was on board not cleared on the 17th instant, a total of 9615 bales. The sales of the week amount to between 1500 and 1600 bales, of which we notice the particulars of the following, viz: 200 at 12 1-2, 100 at 12 1-2 of Louisiana and Mississippi—of Tennessee and North Alabama, 120 at 12 1-2, 80 at 12, 150 at 11 7-8, and 200 at 12 1-4. The market for the week has been quite limited, particularly Tennessee and Alabama Cottons; the stock of every description is now small, and the purchases made are SUGAR—We continue to quote former prices, on Plantation, 5 a 6; in the City, 5 a 6 1-2 cents. The demand continues very limited. Cleared this week, for New York, 255 hhds; Baltimore, 136; Mobile, 16—together, 407 hhds.

TOBACCO—Our quotations are about the market value of the article, but there has been less inquiry for it this week; with the exception of 18 hhds—a crop—of fine Missouri, which brought 7 1-2 cents, we have heard of no sales from first hands. The stock, as will be seen by a reference to our Tables, has now become quite inconsiderable. Arrived this week, 91 hhds. Cleared for Liverpool, 363 hhds; London, 329; Hamburg, 46; Port au Prince, 12; New York, 252; Philadelphia, 13—together, 1101 hhds.

FLOUR—The supplies coming in, though not large, are more than equal to the present small demand, and we quote it dull at 86 a 86 50 per bbl. Arrived this week, 2361 bbls.

PORK—We remark no change in the price of Pork, but the demand, as well as the supply, is limited.

BEEF—Prime Beef would meet with a fair demand, but there is none in market. Mess and Cargo are scarce, and the demand, though small, is steady. Arrived this week, 17 barrels.

BACON—There is a fair supply of every description in market, and quotations may be considered nominal. Arrived this week, 78 hhds. Assorted, 52820 lbs. in bulk.

LARD—Good lard continues very scarce, but the demand, nevertheless, is not great. Arrived this week, 1239 kegs.

BUTTER is plenty and dull at quotations. Arrived this week, 425 kegs.

WHISKEY remains without change in price; the market has a fair supply and sales are but to a limited extent. Arrived this week, 659 bbls.

BAGGING and BALE ROPE—There is considerable inquiry for both of these articles, Bagging, in particular, which is very scarce; Rope is more abundant. Quotations are, for Bagging, 26 cents; Rope, 7 1-2, a 8 1-2 cents. Arrived this week, 944 pieces Bagging, 773 coils Rope.

LEAD—The price of Lead has improved a shade since our last report; the arrivals amount to 9063 pigs, a portion only of which has been offered for sale, and brought 34 12 1-2 per 100 lbs.

SALT—The quantity of Salt in store, as we have previously remarked, is considerable, and there is very little inquiry for it just now. Former quotations are continued.

COFFEE—Prices continue steady, but there is but little activity in the market.

CORN—Shelled in sacks is selling for 75 cents per bushel, in the Ear, for $1 25 per bbl. There is a good deal in market, and sales rather dull.

HAY can be purchased by the cargo for $1, at retail, for $1 12 1-2 per 100 lbs.

FREIGHTS We continue to quote former rates, as we have not heard of any to authorize a change; there is nothing of any consequence offering, either foreign or coastwise.
