A DICTIONARY OF HYMNOLOGY

Dr. Littledale. " Priest, Church of England."

P. P. Bk., i.e. Pricets' Prayer Book.

Pabet, Julius, s. of Karl Leopold Pabet sometime Inspector of the Royal Normal School at Erfort, was b. at Wilhelmsrube, near Eitorf on the Sieg (Rhenish Prussia), Oct. 18, 1917. From 1838 to 1842 he studied theology and philosophy at the Universities of Breslau and Halle; from 1842 to 1852 he acted as private tutor in Berlin, in the Neumark, and in Dresden; and from 1852 to the end of 1855, was engaged in literary pursuits at Berlin. After New Year's Day, 1856, he resided at Dreaden as secretary and teacher of the dramatic art on the staff of the general direction of the Court Theatre and the Royal Orchestra, receiving, in 1860, the honorary title of Hofrath. He d. Oct. 22, 1881 (F. Brümmer's Deutsche Dichter-lexicon, 1877, pt. ii. p. 129; ms. from his family, &c.).

His hymnus appeared principally in his (1) Bie Farcht des Herra ist der Weisheit Anjang, Berlin, 1946, and his (2) Christicher Schattkästlein, Hamburg, 1848. The only one in English C. U. is:—

O Gelat des Lichtes, komm hernieder. Whitrentide. Schattkästlein, p. 227, in 7 st. of 3 i., entitled "Festival

Schatzkesteins, p. 227, in 1 st. of a l., entried "Februal Hymn." Tr. 48:—

Spirit of Light, come down, we pray. In full, by Dr. R. Maguire, in his Milotice of the Fatherland, 1883, p. 273, repeated in R. Gault's Hymn Bk., 1886, No. 252, omitting st. v., vi.

[J. M.]

Pain and toil are over now. Cecil F. Alexander, nés Humphreys. [Easter Eve.] Pub. in her Verses for Holy Seasons, &c., 1846, p. 59, in 6 st. of 6 l., and headed "Easter Even. 'And laid it in his own new tomb.' St. Matt. xxvii. 60." In C. U. it is commonly abbreviated, one form being that in the American Protestant Episco. Church Hymnol, 1871, where st. i., ii. and iv., are altered, and the two closing lines of each stanza are omitted. These atterations and omissions have gone far towards utterly spoiling the hymn. [J. J.]

Palgrave, Francis Turner, E.A., eldest a. of Sir Francis Palgrave, the Historian, was b. at Great Yarmouth, Sept. 28, 1824, and educated at the Charterhouse (1838-1843) and at Oxford, where he graduated in first class Classical Honours. He was scholar of Balliol (1842) and Fellow of Exeter (1846). He was engaged in the Education Department of the Privy Council till 1884, being also Private Secretary to Lord Granville (then Lord President). In 1885 he was elected Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Professor Palgrave's publications include:-

(1) Idylis and Songs, 1854; (2) Art Catalogue of the Great Exhibition, 1882; (3) Busys (1994), 1886; (4)

P. C. E., in the People's Hymnal, 1867, i.e. Littledale, "Priest, Church of England."

P. D. Bk., i.e. Priest, Prayer Book.

P. P. Bk., i.e. Priest, Prayer Book. from Herrick, 1877.

A large proportion of Professor Palgrave's hymns are in C.U., the greatest number being in the Marlborough College Hymns, 1869 (5); Thring's Coll., 1882 (4); Horder's Congregational Hys., 1884 (11); and the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883 (12). These include:—

i. From his Hymne, 1867–70 :

1. High in heaven the sun. (1867.) Morning.
2. Hope of those who have none other. (1862.) Constation in Affician.
3. Lord God of morning and of night. (q.v.) Morning

4. O Light of Life, O Saviour dear. (1885.) Econing. 5. O Thou not made with hands. (1887.) Ayagdon of God within.

of God witers,

5. Once Man with man, now God with God above us.

(1868.) Holy Communion.

7. Thou sayes: "Take up thy cross." (1868.) Taking Ge Cross of Christ. In Harmillon's Magnesine.

8. Thou that once, on mother's knee. (1863-7.) The Child Jesus.

9. Though we long, in sin-wrought bilindness. (1868.)
Lest and Found.

10. We name Thy Name, O God. (1868.) Lent.

ii. From Other Sources :-

11. Christ, Who art above the sky. Christ, the Con-

12. Lord, how fast the minutes fly. The New Year.
13. O God, Who when the night was deep. Morning.
14. O God [Lord] Who when Thy cross was nigh, Brening.

16. Thrice-boly Name that sweeter sounds. Litary of the Name of Jesus. From the School Guardian, 1883.

These hymns, in common with others by Professor Palgrave, noted in this Dictionary under their respective first lines, are marked by much originality of thought and beauty of diction, as well as great tenderness. His object was "to try and write hymns which should have more distinct matter for thought and feeling than many in our collections offer, and so, perhapa, be of little use and comfort to readers," and he has admirably succeeded in his object. He d. Oct. 24, 1897. [W. G. H.]

Πάλι φέγγος, πάλιν ἀώς. Εμπεείνε, Bp. of Ptolemais. [Morning.] This is hymn No. ii. of his ten hymns. It is a morning hymn of some beauty. It is rendered into English as: "Again we had the opening morn." This tr. is by Mr. Chatfield, and appeared in his Songs & Hymne, &c., 1876, p. 14, in 96 lines. Another fr. by A. Stevenson, in his Ten Hys. of Syncetus, &c., 1865, is, "After the gloom of night is passed away." The original is found in the Anth. Graeca. Carm. Christ., 1871. [Greek Hymnody, § v.] [J. J.]

Πάλιν προσήλθεν ο δράκων. Gregory of Nazianzus. [To Christ.] This is composed of 11. 16-22 of his "Hymn to Christ," the full text of which is in Daniel, iii, p. 13. It is "imitated" by Dr. Bonar in his Hye, of Fath and Hope, 2nd series, 1861, in 4 st. of 31 as, "Again the tempter comes! to Thee I oling."

[J. J.]

Palmer, Horatio Richmond, Mus. Doc., was b. April 26, 1834. He is the author of several works on the theory of music; and the editor of some musical editions of hymn-books. To the latter he contributed numerous tunes, some of which have attained to great popularity, and 5 of which are in I. D. Sankey's Sucred Songe and Solve, Lond., 1881. His publications include Songs of Love for the Bible School; and Book of Anthems, the com-bined sale of which has exceeded one million copies. As a hymn-writer he is known by his "Yield not to temptation," which was written in 1868, and pub. in the National Sunday S. Teachers' Magazine, from which it passed, with music by the author, into his Songe of Love, &c., 1874, and other collections. In America its use is extensive. Dr. Palmer's degree was conferred by the University of Chicago in 1880.

Palmer, Ray, D.D., s. of the Hon. Thomas Pulmer, a Judge in Rhode Island, was b. at Little Compton, Rhode Island, Nov. 12, 1808. His carly life was spent at Boston, where he was for some time cierk in a dry-goods store. At Boston he joined the Park Street Congregational Church, then under the pastoral care of Dr. S. E. Dwight. After spending three years at Phillips Academy, Andover, he en-tered Yale College, New Haven, where he graduated in 1830. In 1885 he became paster of the Central Congregational Church, Bath, Maine. During his pastorate there he visited Europe in 1847. In 1850 he was appointed to the First Congregational Church, at Albany, New York, and in 1865 Corresponding Scoretary to the American Congregational Union, New York. He resigned in 1878, and retired to Newark, New Jersey. He d. at Newark, Mar. 29, 1887. Dr. Palmer's published works in prose and verse include :-

(1) Memoirs and Select Remains of Charles Pond, 1839; (2) The Spirit's Life, a Poem, 1831; (3) How to Live, or Memoirs of Hrs. C. L. Watson, 1839; (4) Destrinal Test Book, 1839; (6) Spiritual Improvement, 1839, republished as Closet Hours in 1851; (6) What is 1938, republished as Closec Routs' in 1891; (5) Was is Fruith for Hints on the Formation of Religious Opinions, 1980; (7) Remember Me, or The Holy Communion, 1985; (8) Hymns and Sucred Picces, with Miccelleness Forma, 1865; (9) Hymns of my Holy Hours, and Other Picces, 1988; (10) Rome, or the Unlest Paradise, 1873; and (11) Voices of Hope and Oladnass, 1981.

Most of Dr. Palmer's hymns have passed into congregational use, and have won great acceptance. The best of them by their combination of thought, poetry, and devotion, are superior to almost all others of American origin. The first which he wrote has become the most widely known of all. It is:-

1. By faith leaks up to Thee. Faith in Caritt. This hymn was written by the author when fresh from College, and during an engagement in teaching in New York. This was in 1838. The author says concerning its composition, "I gave form to what I felt, by writing, with little effort, the stanzas. I recollect I wrote them with wary tender emotion, and eiged the last line with tears." A short time afterwards the hymn was given to Its Lovell Means. with vary ecces emotion, and ended the tast line with tasts." A short time afterwards the hymn was given to Dr. Lowell Mason for use, if thought good, in a work then being compiled by him said Dr. T. Hastings. In 1831 that work was pub. as Spiritual Song for Social Worship: adapted to the use of Pamilies, dr. Words and Masic arranged by Thomas Hastings, of New York, and Lincell Mason of Bostan. It is No. 141 in 6 at, of 8 l., entitled "Self Consecration," and accompossive with the two by Dr. I. Mason, there given as "My faith looks up to Thee," but subsequently known as Oliset. (Orig. text of hymn in Theing's Coll., 1882.) It has passed into meat modern collections in all English-speaking countries, and has been rendered into numerous languages. That is Latin, by H. M. Macgill (p. 708, il.), begins "Fides Te met spectat."

3. Fount of everlasting love. I rate for rescued Spiritual Life. This also appeared in the Spiritual Songa, Eo., 1831, No. 192, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed "Praise for a Revival."

The hymns which are given below are all in Dr. Palmer's Postical Works, N. Y., 1876, and the dates appended in brackets are those given by him in that work.

8. Then who roll'st the year around. (1832.) Close of the Year. In several American collections.
4. Away from earth my spirit turns. (1833.) Holy Communion. Appeared in Lowell Manon's Union Hymns, in 4 st. of 4 l. In the Charch Praise Bk., N. Y. 1882, it begins with st. ii., "Thou, Saviour, art the Living Bread."
5. Refore Thy throng with tearful even. (1832.)

in Berning Breau.

5. Before Thy throne with tearful eyes. (1884.)

Liberty of Faith.

4. Stealing from the world away. (1834.) Evening.

Written at New Haven in 1834, and is very popular in America. 7. Thins (Thy) holy day's returning. (1834.) Sunday

3. Wake thee, O Zion. (1862.) Zion Exultant.

9. We stand in deep repentance. (1834.) Lent.

This last, No. 9, in common with Nos. 10, 11, 12, is marked "original," in the Presbyterian Parish Hymns, 1848. Probably they were given to the editors of that book in MS., and had not previously appeared.

10. And is there, Lord, a rest! (1843.) Rest in Hencen. Written at Bath, Maine, in 1843.

11. 0 sweetly breathe the lyres above. Consecration to Christ. This was accidentally emitted from Dr. Palmer's Poetical Works, 1876. S. W. Duffield says.—"It was written in the winter of 1842-43, at a time of revival. At the previous Communion several had been received under circumstances that made Doddridge's hymn, 'O happy day that fixed my choice's a most appropriate selection. Not caring to repeat it, and neeting semething similar, Dr. Palmer composed the present hymn." English Hymns, N. Y., 1885, p. 432.

13. Wass downward to the darksome tomb. (1842.) Death Contemplated. Written at Bath, Maine, 1842.

From 1843 there comes a long break, and Dr. Palmer seems to have done no more hymnwriting until called upon by Professors Park and Phelps, of Andover, for contributions to their Fabbath Hymn-Book, 1858. His hymns written for that important collection rank amongst the best that America has produced. This is specially true of the first four (Nos. 13-16) from the Latin.

13-16) from the Latin.

18. Jesus, Thou jey of loving haurta. (1-58.) Tr. of a cento from "Jesu dutics memoria" (p. $89, ii.).

14. O Bread to Pilgrims given. (1808.) Tr. of "O exac vistoroun" (q.v.).

18. O Ohrist our King, Greater Lord. (1858.) Pr. of "Rax Christe, factor omnium"

16. Comes Hely Obset,—in love. (1858.) Tr. of "Veni Sancte Spiritus" (q.v.)

17. Jesus, these eyes have never seen. (1858.) Christe loved, though unsaces. This hymn is accounted by many as next in merit and beauty to "My fath looks up to Thee."

14. Leed, my weak thought in vain would climb, (1858.) God Descarciable. This hymn deals with the mysteries of Predestination in a reverent and devous menure.

19. Thy Fether's house! thine ewn bright hame, (1958.) Heaven.

The next group, Nos. 20-27, appeared in Dr. Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865. 20. Lurd, Thou wilt bring the joyful day. (1964.) outemplation of Houses. Written in New York city. 21. Eternal Father, Thou hast mid. (1989.) Missions. 22. Josus, Lamb of God, for ms. (1863.) Jesus, the Way of Salvatton. Withen in Albany, New York. 23. Take ms, O my Father, take ms. (1864.) Lont. 34. Wouldst thou ctarnal life obtain. (1864.) Good Priday.

28. Come Jesus, Redeemer, shide Thou with me.
(1864.) Roly Communion.
26. Lord, Thou on earth didst love Thine own.
(1864.) Pollouship with Christ.
(1864.) Pollouship with Christ.

Praver.

The next four (Nos. 28-31) present another group. They appeared in D. E. Jones's Songs for the New Life, 1869, and the Reformed Dutch Hys. of the Church, N. Y., 1869. The dates of composition are from Dr. Palmer's Poeme, 1876.

28. Lord, Thou hast taught our hearts to glow.
(1855.) Ordination, or Meeting of Ministers.
28. When inward turns my searching game. (1888.)

Exeming.

30. 0 Jesus, sweet the bears I shed. (1867.) Good

Priday.

31. Jeens, this (my! keert within me burns. (1968.)

The hymns which follow are from various SOUTCES.

32. O Christ, the Lard of heaven, to Thee. (1887.)
53. O Christ, the Lard of heaven, to Thee. (1887.)
53. O Christ, the Lard of heaven, to Thee. (1887.)
54. Of my Holy Hours, 1867. It is a hymn of great merit, and is widely used.
55. Behold the shads of night is new receding. (1869.) A tr. of "Ecce Jam mottle." (p. 380, i., and Various.)
34. Mid evening shadows let us all be waking. (1869.) A tr. of "Note surgentes" (p. 809, i.)
35. I give my heart to Thee. (Aug. 20, 1868.) A tr. of "Cor meum Tibl dedo," p. 383, ii.
36. Roly Ghost, that promised came. (1872.) Whitesuskide, From the author's Poems, 1876.
37. O Koly Comforter, I hear. The Comforter. Appeared in the Botton Congressionalist, September 7th, 1867.
38. Lord, when my soul her secrets doth reveal.

33. Lord, when my sout her secrets doth reveal. (1865.) Holy Communion,

Most of the foregoing hymne are in C. U. in G. Britain, and all are found in one or more American hymn-books of importance

Palmer, William. (Various.)

Palms of glory, raiment bright. J. Montgomery. [Heaven in Prospect.] Written for the Sheffield Sunday School Union, and first printed on a broadsheet for use at the Anniversary in June 1829, in 6 st. of 4 l. It then appeared in T. Russell's Sel. of Hys. . . . An Appendix to Dr. Watte's Ps. & Hys., N. D. [circa 1888, see p. 866, 4.]; again in Montgomery's Poet's Portfolio, 1895, p. 240; and again in his Original Hys., 1853, p. 160, where it is hended "Heaven in prospect." It is of more than usual merit, and is widely used.

Pange lingua gloriosi corporis mysterium. St. Thomas of Aquino. [Holy Communion.] One of the finest of the mediaeval Latin hymns; a wonderful union of sweetness of melody with clear-cut dogmatic teaching. It was written for the office of the Festival of Corpus Christi, which St. Thomas drew up in 1263, at the request of Pope Urban IV. The metre and the opening line are imitated from Fortunatus. It is found in the Roman (Venice, 1478; and again, untouched, in 1632); Mozarabic of 1502, Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1736, and many other Breviaties. Whereover employed it was always primarily for use on Corpus Christi, either at Matins (Sarum), or at Vespers (Roman). It has also been used as a processional on Corpus Christi, in the Votive Office of the Blessed Sacrament, at the Forty Hours, and otherwise. Stanza v., "Tentum ergo secrementum," with the magnificent doxology, is sung as a separate hymn in the office of the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, or during Mass at the Elevation of the Host. The text, in 5 st. and a dexology, will be found in Daniel, i., No. 289, the Hymn. Serieb., 1851, p. 121, and others. [W. A. S.]

The hymn is found in a ws. of the 13th cent. in the Bodleim (Ashmole 1525, f. 175); in a set of the end of the 13th cent. (Add. 23935 f. 3), and a 14th cent. Straws Brewinzy (Reg. 2, A. xiv. f. 94), both now in the British Museum; in the St. Gall ws. 503 l. of the 13th cent. Also in Wackerwagel, l., No. 233; Blatter, No. 29; Königgield, i. p. 148; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesias, 1833 and 1865, and others.

Translations in C. U.:-

1. Speak, O tongue, the Body broken. By I. Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Porisian Breviary, 1839, p. 169. In Stretton's Church Hys., 1850, st. i.-iii. of this tr. and st. iv.-vi. from another were given as one hymn. This arrangement, with the opening line changed to "Sing we that blest Body broken," was repeated in Dr. Oldknow's Hymns, &c., 1850.

1. Sing, my tongue, the Saviour's glory, Of His desh the mystery sing. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 111, and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 63. It is given unultered in several Roman Catholic hymn-books, and a few other collections. In the Irvingitu Hys. for the Use of the Churches, 1871, it begins with the same first line, but is considerably altered, especially in st. iv. The alterations in the New Cong., 1859, No. 878, are also considerable, but in another direction, whilst the opening line remains unchanged. In Skinner's Dody Service Hyl., 1864, it is altered to "Of Christ's Body, ever glorious."

3. Hail the Body bright and glorious. By R. Campbell, in his Hys. and Anthons, 1850, p. 69. This is repeated in Hys. used in the Church of St. Thomas the Martyr, Oxford, 1861, and the St. Margaret's Hymnal (East Grinstead), 1875. In the St. Margaret's H. it is attributed to

" Fortescue" in error.

4. Of the glorisus Body telling. By J. M. Neale, in his Medianat Hys., 1851, p. 126 (ed. 1863, p. 178, with a valuable note). It was re-1863, p. 178, with a valuable note). It was repeated in the 1860 Appendix to the Hymnal N.; the People's H., 1867; the Hymnary, 1872, and others, in most instances with slight variations from the original translation. In Dr. Schaff's Christ in Sing, N. Y., 1869, it begins "Sing, my tongue, the mystery telling." The alterations are by Dr. Schaff.

5. Sing the glorious Body broken, Ransom of the world to be. By J. A. Johnston, in his English Hyl., 1852, No. 99. In the 2nd ed., 1856, he rewrote it as "Speak, my tongue, the Body glorious," and in the 3rd ed., 1861, as "Speak, my tongue, a mystery glorious."

8. Sing the glorious Body broken, Sing the precious Blood, do. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. & Tune Bk., 1852-5, and again in Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

7. Hall, each tongue, with adoration. By W. J. Irons. Contributed to the Rev. R. T. Lowe's Hys. for the Christian Seasons, Gainsburgh, 1854, and repeated in Dr. Irons's Hymns, &c., 1866, and his Ps. & Hys., 1875.

8. Now, my tongue, the mystery telling. No.

203 in H. A. & M., 1861, and No. 309, revised ed., 1875, is said in the Index to be by the Compilers, "based on tr. from Latin by E. Caswall," This is, however, not strictly correct. An examination of the text shows that st. i., ii., and vi. are Dr. Neale's fr. rewritten; st. v. Dr. Neale's tr. very slightly altered; st. iii. Caswall's tr. rewritten; and st. iv. a tr. by the Compilers. This tr. is repeated in the Lyra Eucharistica, 1863, without alteration : and with a nearer approach to the original in the Altar Hymnal, 1884.

9. Of that glorieus Body broken. This tr. in the Sarum, 1868, No. 123, is Caswall's altered (except in st. ii. and iii.) almost beyond recognition. It is repeated in Thring's Coll., 1882, with slight changes, except in the crucial st. iv. This is materially changed in the wording, although it remains the same in doctrinal teaching,

10. Wake, my tongue, the mystery telling. R. C. Singleton, in his Anglican H. Bk., 1868 and 1871, Translations not in G. U. :-

Of Christe his body glorious. Primer, 1604.
 Sing thou my tongue with accent clear. Primer,

 Sing, O my tongue, devoutly sing. Primer, 1888.
 Sing, O my tongue, adors and praise. Primer, 1706.

5. Resound, my tongue, the mystery resound. D.

6. Tell, my tongue, the wondrous story. Bp. Coxe in his Christian Ballads, 1840 and 1849.
7. Of the glorious Body bleeding. A. D. Wackerbarth.

 Of the Body bright and gracious. In Dr. Pusey's tr. of Horn's Paradiae of the Caristian Soul, 1847.
 Loudly sing my tongue! proclaiming. J. R. Berle. 1849

19. Speak, my tongue, the mystic glory. J. D. Cham-1852 and 1857.

11. Sing, O [my] tongue, the Body glorious. H. N. Ovenham. In The Ecolesiastic, Jan., 1853; his Manual commans. In 226 Ecolesiastic, Jan., 1853; his Manual of Devotions, 1854; and his Sentence of Kaires, 1854.
12. Break we forth in high thanksgiving. W. Bright in his Athanasius and other Frome, 1859.
13. My tongue, the mystic doctrine sing. J. W. Hewett. 1859.

14. Sing, and the mystery declare. Ray Paimer, in Schaff's Cartist in Song, 1869.

15. Let my tongue the mystery sing. J. Wallace.

16. Now, my tongue, the mystery singing. W. T. Brooke, in his Churchman's Munual of Private and Brooks, in the characters of the posterior of the following Beotions, 1881.

17. Sing, my tongue, the joyful mystery. J. D. Aylendri, in O. Shipley's Assus Societa, 1884.

Tantum ergo sacramentum. This portion of the "Pange lingua," consisting of st. v. and vi., and sung in the office of the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, &c., as noted above, has been tr. by all the above-named translators, and each tr. is given as the conclusion of the original hymn. In a few instances the stanzas (v.-vi.) are given as a separate hymn in English, os in Latin. These include (1) Caswall's "Down in adoration falling," which appears in some Roman Catholic hymn-books for missions and schools; (2) a cente in the Altar Hyl., 1884, in 2 st., the first being Caswall altered, and the second the doxology from H. A. & M., as " Down in lowly worship bending;" and (3) Neale's tr., altered to "Bow we then in veneration," in the 1863 Appendix to the Hymnal N.

Dr. Neale's estimate of this hymn is well known. His words are so few and to the point that we may quote them here:-

"This hymn contests the second place among those of the Western Church with the Vesilia Regis, the Statest Muter, the Jesu duicis Memoria, the Ad Regiss Agni Depen, the Ad Supernous, and one or two others, leaving the Dies Irus in its unapproachable glory." (Med. Hys. 3rd ed., 1867, p. 179.)

Concerning translations, and of his own in particular, he eays :-

"It (the bymn) has been a bow of Ulysses to translators. The translation above given [his own] claims no other merit than an attempt to unite the best portions of the four best translations with which I am acquainted—Mr. Wackerbarth's, Dr. Pusey's, that of the Leeds book, and Mr. Cawall's.... The great crux of the translator is the fourth verse."

Before continuing Dr. Neale's remarks it will be well to give the original Latin of st. iv., which reads:-

* Verbum caro, panem verum verbo carnem efficit, Fitque canguis Christi merum, etal sensus deficit Ad firmandum cor sincerum sola fides sufficit."

Dr. Neale continues. "I give all the translations:--

(1) 'God the Word by one word maketh Very Bread His Flesh to be: And whose that Cup partaketh, Tastes the Fount of Calvary: While the carnal mind forseketh, Faith receives the Mystery.' [Leeds H. Bk.]

"Here the incurnation of the Word, so necessary to the antithesis, is omitted: and so exact a writer as S. Thomas would never have used the expression by usu [Wackerburth, Mr. Wackerburth's I. 2 reads, "Bread to very flesh," &c.]

"Here the antithesis is utterly lost, by the substi-tution of incarnate for made flesh, and bidding for word, to say nothing of Blood-shedding, for Blood.

(3) Word made Flash! The Bread of nature, Then by word to Flash dost turn; Wine, to Blood of our Creator: If no sense the work discern,

"Here the antithesis is preserved, though at the "Here the argument is preserved, though at the expense of the vocative case. And surely S. Thomas, in an exact dogmatical poem, would not have spoken of the Blood of our Crostor. Mr. Caswall, following up the hint given by the last version, and substituting the apposite pronoun for the vocative, has given, as from his freedom of thyme might be expected, the best version.

(4) "Word made Flesh, the Bread of nature By a word to Flesh He turns : e into His Blood He changes What though sense no change discerns, Only be the heart in earnest, Faith the lesson quickly learns.'

Faith the leason quickly learns."

"In both these last translations [Fusey and Caswell], however, the panem nerues of S. Thomas is not given; and Mr. Caswell brings in the worse than unnecessary article—"By a word." [It must be noted that Dr. Neale must have quoted Caswell from memory or from some other source than Caswell's Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 112, where 1. 2 reads, "By his word to Flesh He turns;" and 1. 6, "Faith her lesson quickly learns." These readings of 1848 are repeated in Caswell's Lyra Catholica; Bys. & Poeza, 1813, p. 63. Did Dr. Neale misrcad Caswell's Catholica; Cathol his Lyra Catholica f

"Since the first edition of my book [1851], Hymns Ascient and Modern have produced a translation put together from former ones,—but nearer my own version than to any other. Their fourth verse is their weakest:—

' Word made Flesh, True Bread He maketh By His word His Flesh to be: Wine His blood; which whose taketh Must from carnal thoughts be free: Faith alone, though eight foreaketh, Shows true hearts the Mystery.

"It is needless to observe that the italicised line and a half is not in the original. 'Physoketh,' too, is scarcely English. I have substituted an alteration of Hyperse Asscient and Modern for my original 5th verse, ['There-fore we, before it bending.']"

After this exhaustive criticism by Dr. Neale we must give his rendering of the same passage. It reads :-

"Word made Flesh, by Word He maketh Very Bread His Flesh to be; Man in wine Christ's Blood partaketh, And if senses fail to see, Faith alone the true beart waketh, To behold the Mystery."

These examples of translations could be increased to the total number known. The result, however, would be to add materially to the length of this article without increasing its historical value.

Pange lingua gloriosi proelium certaminis. V. H. C. Fortunatus. [Passiontide.] This is one of the finest of the Latin Mediseval Hymns, and perhaps the best of its author. It has been sometimes, apparently without reason, ascribed to Claudianus Ma-mertus, who d. c. 474. In its full form it consists of 10 stanzas of unrhymed trochaic tetrameter verse. In some of the MSS, there is added a dexology, but in very various forms. F. Leo in his ed. of Fortunatus's Opera poetica, Berlin, 1881, p. 27, gives it from a St. Petersburg as, of the 8th or 9th cent, two Mss. of the 9th cent in the Bibl. Nat. Puris (No. 1158, and Lat 9347), &c. Mone, No. 101, priots it from a Ms. of the 8th cent. now at Trier; a Ms. at Trier of about the end of the 8th cent. or beginning of the 9th; a ms. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, &c. It is found in a 10th cent. Mozarabic service book in the British Museum (Add. 30846 f. 70); in four Mss. of the 11th cent. there, viz two English Hymnarles (Harl, 2961 f. 240; Vesp. D. xii. f. 120 b); a Spanish Breviary (Add. 30848 f. 109), and a Sequentiary written at St. Gall (Add. 19768, f. 51 b), &c. Also in Daniel, i., No. 140, and iv. pp. 67, 358, from a Bern Ma. of the 10th cent., and other sources. In his notes Daniel quotes the following stanza:-

" Quando judez orbis alto vectus axe veneria. Et crucis tuae tropaeum inter astra fulesrit, O sis anxies asylum et salutis aurora."

Dr. Neale in translating this verse says it "seems ancient," but the only source quoted "seems ancient," but the only source quotes by Daniel is the Corolla Hymnorum, Cologne, 1806. (The text of 1806, I. 3. reads, "Salutis anchora.") From the Trier Ms. of about the end of the 8th cent. Mone prints four additional stanzes, which are not by Fortunatus, but are probably of the 7th cent., and never seems that the really came into use,

The bytun very early came into extensive use, and is found in most Mediaeval Brentaries and Missale. In the older Roman (Venice, 1478), Paris of 1843, Sarum, 1978, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries, it is appointed or use from Passion Sunday to Maunday Thursday; estants i.-v. being used at Matine; and vi.-x. beginning "Lustra sex qui jam peracta," at Lawde. In the Roman, Straum, and other Missale, it is appointed to be used on Good Priday at the Improperia (see "Populomeus"), stants viii., "Crux fidells inter omnes," being first sums by the elercy, or as as also, then et. i.-vii. l.x. x. meus", stanze viii., "Crux facilis inter omnes," being first sung by the clergy, or as a solo, then et. i.-vii., Ix., x. by the people; each stanze being followed by either the first, or second ("Duke lignum, duke claves" part of st. viii. The fittens, Fork, Aberdsen, and other Breviaries also appointed st. viii.-x. ("Crux fidelis") for the Sestival of the Invention of the Cross (May 3). In the Rossan Free. of 1821 it was altered, the first part beginning "Pange lingua gloriosi faureuse certaminis" (an unfortunate change: for, se Dr. Neale points out, it is not to the glory of the termination of our Lords conflict with the Devil that the poet would have us look, but to the glory of the struggle itself); and the second part beginning "Lustra sex qui jam peregit" (in the Rossan Bres., Antwerp, 1624, pt. lb. begins "Lustris sex qui jam peractis"). The text of 1632 is in the later eds. of that revision, in Baniel, i., No. 140, and Card, Newman's Hymni Botleriae, 1838 and 1865. The ori-Newman's Appent Societies, 1938 and 1866. The original is also in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Szrom Church, 1881, p. 183 (from Veep. D. nil.); the Hymnarium Sarieto, 1851, p. 84; Bässler, No. 85; Wackernagel, I., Nos. 78, 79; Königyfeld, il. pp. 78-86; F. A. March's Lat. Hys., 1876, p. 64; G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Motstaccessite, 1888, p. 44 (from a 10th cent. ws.); H. Macgill's Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, and others.

We may add that stanza 🖫 is perhaps a reference to the ancient belief that the cross of Christ was made from a part of a tree which sprang from a seed or bough of the Tree of Life; this seed or bough having been according to one version given to Adam before his expulsion from Paradise, or according to another version, given to Seth by the angel who guarded the Garden of Eden (see the Mediaeval forms of this legend in S. Baring-Gould's Curious Myths of the Middle Ages, No. xv., "The Legend of the Cross"). It is said that among the relics procured by Rhadegunds for the Church at Poictiers was a particle of the (so-called) True Cross (see further under Vexilla Rogis). In stanza x. the cross seems to be regarded, by a change of figure, as the ship in which the faithful safely ride over the waves of this troublesome world, after those waves have been smoothed for them by the ancinting oil that flowed from the wounds of the Lamb of God. [J. M.]

The older text as above, and the Roman Breviary text have both been rendered into English as follows:-

i. The Original text :

(i.) Pange lingua glorical proclium certaminis. The first part of the hymn, st. i.-iv., has been &. thus :-

1. Sing, my tongue, the glorious battle. By J. M. Neale, in his Mediaval Hymns, 1851, p. 1, in full. In the Hymnal N., 1852, it was slightly altered, and divided into the two usual parts Nos. 23, 24 (see ii.), the second being "Thirty years among us dwelling." These two parts were given in H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, with alterations as, "Sing, my tongue, the glorious battle," and "Now the thirty years accom-plished." This form together with Neale's tr, are both in other collections. In Kable's Miscellaneous Poems, 1869, it is given as altered by Keble, "Sing, my tongue, of glorious warfare. 2. Sing the conflict great and glorious. By W.

J. Blew, in his Church Hy. & Tune Bk., 1852-55, and in Rice's Sci. from the same, 1870.

3. Spread, my tengue, the wondreus stery. By Mrs. Charles, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 138. Included in the People's H.. 1867.

Other translations are:

1. Sing, my tongue, the glorious strite. Anon. in Bys. for Occasional Use in the Parish Church of St. Peter, in Nottinghous, 1819.

2. Behearse, my tongue, the glorious war. J. D.

3. O my tongue! reheatse the glory. J. D. Chambers, 1867.

4. Sing, my tengue, the war of glory. J. W. Hewelt.

5. Sing the Cross) the conflict telling. H. M. Macgill, in The Juvenile Hist. Mag. of the U. P. C. in Scatland, May, 1883, and his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876.

(ii.) Lustra sez qui jam peracta. In some cases this is not headed as a separate hymn by translators, but in the hymn-books it is usually given as such :--

- 1. Thirty years among us dwelling. By J. M. Neale, as above.
- 3. Bix lustres past; Ris life in feeh. By J. Chambers, in his Psalter, 1852.

3. Years thrice ten had He, completing. By W. J. Blew, as above, and Rice's Sel. therefrom, 1870.

4. Till the thirty years were intahed. By Mrs. Charles, as above, and in the People's H., 1867, as "When the thirty years were finished."

Other translations are:-1. Now are thrice ten years completed. J. D. Chambers, 1857.

- Thirty years e'en now fulfilling. J.W. Henett, 1859.
 Thirty winters has He numbered. H. R. Mosqiil, same as Pt. 1. above.
 - ii. Roman Breviary Text:—
- (L) Pange lingua gloriesi lauream certaminis. Of this text Pt. i. has been ir. thus :--

Sing, my tengue, the Saviour's glary. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholics, 1849, p. 91, and his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 51. Found in a few collections in from 4 to 6 stanzas. In Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, the opening line reads, "Sing, my tongue, the Saviour's battle," and several other changes by the editor are made in the text.

Other translations are :-

I. Sing, O my tongue, the glorious frown. Primer, 1706.

- 1. Sing, O my tongue, devoutly sing. Divine Office, 1763.
 - 3. O sing, my tongue, God's glory sing. C. Kent.
 4. Sing lead the conflict, O my tongue. J. D. Aylward.
 5. Sing, my tongue, with glowing accents. T. J. Polter.
 - s. Sing, my tongue, the glorious combat. J. R. Bette,
- 1849. 7. Sing, my tongue, the contest glorious. H. N. Oxen-ham, in his Sentence of Kaires, 1854. 8. Sing, my tongue, the glorious laurel. J. Wallace,
- 1874.
- Nos. 2-5 are in O. Shipley's Annue Sanetus, 1884.

(ii.) Lustra sex, qui jam paregit, tempus implens serperis. This part has been tr. as:-

Thus did Christ to perfect manhood. Canwail, as above. In a few hymn-books.

Other translations are:-

- 1. Six Lusters past, the Sabbath came. Primer, 1706.
 2. Full thirty years were freely epent. Divine Office,
- 1763.

 2. The thirty years have all been passed. Bp. J. Wil-
- Itame, 1845.
 Scarce six lusters are completed. J. R. Besie, 1842.
 Soon the sweetest blossom wasting. R. Cumpbell,
- 1850.
- Now full thirty years are past. J. Wallace, 1814.
 Afready thirty years have shed. C. Kens.
 Now, when full thirty annual suns. J. D. Aglecard, Of these for. Nos. 2, 6, 7, 8, are in O. Shipley's Annua.
- Sanctus, 1884.

iii. Centos.

Several centos are in C. U. and are formed either from the two parts, or from two or more translations. These are:-

- 1. See the dectia'd day arise. By Bp. R. Mant. This is a paraphrase or free tr. of portions of both parts. It appeared in his Ancient Hymns, &c., 1837, p. 52, in 7 st. of 4 l. (ed. 1871, p. 94). In its full or in an abbreviated form its use is extensive.
- 2. Bing, 0 my tongue, devently sing. In Murray's Hymnal, 1852, No. 43.
- 3. Sing, my tengue, the Saviour's glory. in Pott's Hymns fitted to the O. of C. Prayer, 1861, is compiled almost word for word from the fr. of both parts by E. Caswall, st. i.-iii. being from Pt. i. and iv.-vi. from Pt. ii. Its right designation is " A Cento from E, Caswall's

- tr." It is given, with slight alterations, in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871.
- 4. All within a lonely manger. In Kennedy. 1863, No. 577, Pt. fl., is st. I. from Caswall, and st. ii.-iv. from Neale.
- 5. Sing, my tongue, the Savieur's triumph. This in the Sarum, 1868, No. 106, is st. i.-v. from Caswall, and st. vi.-viii. from Neale,
- 6. Now the thirty years accomplished. In the Hymnary, 1872, No. 230. In this cente st. i., iti, and v. are from Neale, and st. ii., iv. and vi. from Caswall.

7. O the Cross, above all other. In Johnson's English Hyl., 1861, No. 267.

5. Faithful Cross! above all other. This in the Altar Hyl., 1884, is Dr. Neale's tr. as above, with st. viii. as the opening of the hymn, and also as a chorus at the end of each of the other stanzas, and the addition of the stanza noted above as in the Corolla Hymnorum, 1808, which Dr. Neale gave in his Notes as "When, O Judge of this world, coming."

When these various translations and centes are all taken into account it is found that the use of this hymn in modern hymn-books is extensive.

Paracletice, The. [Greak Hymnody, § xiv.]

Parent of good, Thy works of might, J. Faucett. [Delight in God.] Appeared in his Hymns, &c., 1782, p. 81, in 9 st. of 6 1., and entitled "Delight in God." It is used in an handle of the control of the abbreviated form, from 6 st. in Dr. Alexander's Augustine H. Bk., 1849, to 3 st. in the American Unitarian Hymn [and Tune] Book, Boston, 1868. [J. J.]

Park, Roswell, D.D., of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was b. at Lebanon, Connecticut, Oct. 1, 1807, and educated at Union College and West Point. Previous to receiving Holy Orders he was in the army, and also held the appointment of Professor of Chemistry in the University of Pennsylvania. He was ordained in 1843, was President of Racine College, Wieconsin (1952-59), Chancellor of the same College (1858-63); and Principal of a school in Chicago from 1863 to his death. He d. at Chicago, July 16, 1869. He pub. Sketch of West Point, 1840: Pantology, 1841; Handbook for European Travel, 1853; and Poems, 1836. His best known hynn is for Holy Communion. It begins "Josus spreads His banner o'er us," and was pub. in his Poems, 1836. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. [F, M, B.]

Park, Thomas, r.s.a., was b. in 1760 and d. in 1835. He was an engraver, but found more congenial work in literary pursuits. In addition to publishing Nugs Moderne, an original work of prose and poetry, in 1818, he also edited several works, including the Works of J. Hammond, 1805; Works of John Dryden, 1806; the Works of the British Poets, in 42 small volumes, 1808; Poetical Works of Isaac Watts, 1807, and others. His hymn :-

My soul, praise the Lord, speak good of His Mame, His marcles record, &c., Pt. civ., or Universal Praise, appeared in Pt. & Hys. Selected from Various Authors with Occasional Alterations, for Use of a Parachies Church. By a Country Chergyman. Lord. Bullet 1807, p. 656, in 5 st. of 8 l. There is appended thereto the following note:—

"At the moment of election that history with the country of the country Chergyman.

" At the moment of closing this little collection I am favoured with the above hymn from my obliging friend. This almost extemporaneous effusion of his peculiarly nest and poetic pen was excited by my expressing (in a letter soliciting some psalmodic information) regret that I had only one set of words for Handel's simple, sublime tune for the 104th Psalm."

For these details we are indebted to Miller's Singers and Songs of the Church, 1869, p. 329. The opening line of this hymn is composed of the first two lines of W. Kethe's version of Ps. civ. in the Old Version, 1561. [J. J.]

Parker, Matthew, n.D., was b. at Norwich in 1504, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1523. His appointments were many and influential, including that of Dean of Stoke, Chaplain to Queen Anne Boleyn and Henry VIII., Prebendary of Ely, Master of his College, Vice Chancellor of his University, and Dean of Lincoln. On the accession of Mary he was deprived of everything, and lived in obscurity till Elizaboth ascended the throne. In 1559 he was raised to the Sec of Canterbury. He d. in 1575, and was buried in his own chapel at Lambeth. His munificence is well known, as also his connection with the "Bishop's Bible." He was well versed in Saxon literature and Early English history: published several important works; and left his large collection of ancient MSS. to his College. His Psalter, written in 1555 (see Psalters, Eng., § VII.), was printed without date (about 1560) and anonymously. This led Wood in his Athense Oxonienses to attribute the Pselter to John Keeper, of Wells Cathedral. This question of authorship is further discussed in ГJ. J.1 Psalters, English, § 1X.

Parker, Theodore, M.A., was b. at Lexington, Massachusetts, Aug. 24, 1810; laboured with his father as a farmer and mechanic; entered Harvard College in 1830, but continued his work at home and attended the College for examinations; attended the Divinity School from 1894 to 1896, and became pastor of the Unitarian congregation in West Roxbury, June 21, 1837. He received the degree of M.A. from his College in 1840. Changes in his theological views led him to undertake the pastorate of a congregation in Boston, in January 1846. He continued his writing, preaching, and lecturing till 1839, when bleeding at the lungs compelled him to seek relief in Europe. He d. at Florence, May 10, 1860. His publications were numerous, and have been republished in G. Britain. An extended list is given, together with 12 poetic pieces, in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, Boston, U.S.A., 1875. His life has been published by Weiss, and by Frothingham. A few of his poetical pieces are given in American Unitarian hymn-books. These include :-

1. In darker days and nights of storm, Almighty Love. "Introduced in a sermon which Mr. Parker preached, entitled "The Practical Effects of the Ecclesiastical Conception of God." In Putnam as above.

astical Conception of God." In Putnam as above, 3. 0 Thou great Friend of all the sone of men. Jests the Way, the Truth, and the Life. This in the original is a sounce (see Putnam, as above). Altered for use as a hyg, it is widely used by American Unitarisms; and is also given in some English hymn-books. [J. J.]

Parr, Harriet, was b. at York in 1828, and has published several works under the nomde plume of " Holme Lee," including Maude Talbot, 1854 : Sylvan Hold's Daughter, 1858; Warp and Woof, 1861; Mr. Wyngard's Ward, 1867; and several other works of fiction. Miss Parr is known to hymnology by one hymn onły, viz. :-

Olly, Viz. —

Hear my (our) prayer, O heavenly Father. Evening. This beautiful and pathetic hymn appeared in her story The Wreck of the Golden Mary, which was the Christmas number of Charles Dickens's Household Word, 1856. The way in which the hymn is introduced into the story has been often told, and is worth repeasing. The story sets forth how the ship Golden Mary, on her voyage to California, struck on an iceberg, and the passengers, taking to the boats, suffered privations for several days. To hegulic the time they repeated stories. One of them, Dick Tarrant, a wild youth, relates some of his experiences, in which he says:—

"What can it be that brings all these old things over my mind? There's a child's hymn I and Tom used to say at my mother's knee, when we were little ones, keeps tranning through my thoughts. It's the stars, may be; there was a little window by my bed that I used to be ; there was a little window by my bed that I used to watch them at, a window in my room at home in Cheshire; and is I were ever alraid, as hope will be after reading a good ghost story, I would keep on maying it till I fell seleep."

"That was a good mother of yours, Dick; could you say that hymn now, do you think? Some of us might like to hear it."

"It is as clear in my mind at this minute as if my mother was here listening to me," said Dick. And he repeated

"'Hear my prayer, O Heavenly Father, Ere we lay us down to sleep,'" &c.

Through the instrumentality of Dr. Allon it was included in the New Congregational H. Bk., 1859, No. 945, in 5 st. of 4 l. Since then it has reappeared in numerous collections in G. Britsin and America. In some hymn-books, as in Thring's Coll., 1882, it begins, "Hear our prayer, O heavenly Father," and a doxclogy is added. Instead of the doxology, the Rev. W. J. Hall added the following lines (written in 1878).

"Home of rest and peace unending, Whither turns my longing heart, Home from whence thro all the ages Never more shall I depart."

This addition was given in the New Mitre Hymnal, 1875. In the Parish Hymn Book, 1863 and 1875, it is a Morning hymn, and begins :—

" Praise to Thee, Whose hosts have watched us Through the helpless hours of sleep," &c.

Parson, Elizabeth, née Rooker, dau. of the Roy. W. Rooker (for nearly fifty years Congregational Minister at Tavistock), was b. at Tavistock, June 5, 1812, and married in 1844 to Mr. T. Edgecombe Parson. She d. at Plymouth in 1873. Previous to her marriage (from 1840 to 1844) Mrs. Parson conducted a class for young men and women in the vestry of her father's chapel on Sunday evenings, and to which was given the name of the "Willing Class," because those who came, came "willingly." For this class she wrote from 1840 to 1844 several hymns, some of which came into use through various collections including the Baptist Ps. & Hys., 1858, and others at a later date. A few years ago 18 of these hymns were collected, and printed for private circulation by one of her old scholars as Willing Class Hymns. The greater part of these hymns have found a place in children's hymn-books, some fifteen collections having one or more therein. For tenderness, "Saviour, round Thy footstool bending," the most pathetic; and for praise, "Angels round the throne are praising," and "What shall we render?" the most joyous. Mrs. Parson also wrote a few hymns for adults, which have been printed for private use only. In addition to those hymns separately annotated (see Index) there are also the following in C. Ù.:-

1. Far above the lofty sky. Praise.

- 2. Father of spirite, we entreat. New Four, 3. Hark | a distant voice is calling. Afterious. 4. Hark | 'tis the Saviour calls. The Implication
- 5. Is there one heart, dear Saviour here? Passiontide.
- 6. Jesus, we love to meet. Sunday.
 7. Lord, we bend before Thee now. Home Histions, or Prayer Beetings.
- 8. Lord, we stand before Thy throne. This is an altered form of No. ?.
 8. Our Savious's voice is soft and sweet. Assertors.
- This is God's most boly day. Sunday.
 Youthful, weak, and unprotected. Self Bedication to Christ. [J. J.]

Part in peace! Christ's life was peace. Sarah Adams, nee Flower. [Close of Service.] 1st pub. in her Vivia Perpetua, 1841, a dramatic poem, in five Acts, where it is given as the close of Act iii. The persecuted Christions are represented as meeting in " A cave of sepulchre, dimly lighted," where they learn that the edict is gone forth that they must perish. Before parting, possibly never to meet again, "they all sing":--

"Part in peace! Christ's life was peace Let us breathe our breath in Him! Part in peace! Christ's death was peace,-Let us die our death in Him | Part in peace | Christ promise gave Of a life beyond the grave, Where all mortal partings cease. Part in peace!
(Etho.) 'Peace.'"

In Act v. it is sung again after Vivia's condemnation, with 1. 2 changed to "Let us live our life in Him." This form is sometimes used as in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, where 8 is lengthened as "Holy brothren, part in peace." This last line is again altered in some collections to "Brethren, sisters, part in peace." The hymn is widely used. [J. J.]

Part in peace! is day before us? Sarah Adams, née Flower. [Close of Service.] This is altogether a different hymn from the above. It was contributed to W. J. Fex's Hys. and Anthems, 1841, No. 82, in 3 st. of 4 l. It is in several Unitarian collections. In the American Unitarian Hymn [and Tune] Book, 1868, it begins with at ii., "Part in peace! with deep thanksgiving." [J. J.]

Παρθένε, νύμφη Χριστοῦ. St. Gre-gory of Nazianzus. [The Church of Christ.] "An Admonitory Address to a Virgin." pub. in various editions of his Works, and also found in the Anth. Grane Comments From the latter Mr. Chatfield made his tr., "O bride of Christ on high," publishing the same in his Songs & Hymns, &c., 1876, p. 125, in 250 lines. The original dates 924-989. [Greek Hymaedy, § iv.]

Parvum quando cerno Deum. [Christmas.] This hymn is found in the Sirence Symphoniacas, Cologne, 1678, p. 41, the Psalteriolum cantionum catholicurum, Cologne, 1722, p. 50; and in the Hymnodia Sacra, Münster, 1753, p. 53. Also in Daniel, ii. p. 342, headed "The Mother with the Son." It is a Christmas Hymn of the Blessed Virgin and her Child.

It may be remarked that it ends with a versified aspiration for the personal fulfilment (in a spiritual and mystical sense) of Ps. cxxvii. 3-5-arrows, or even one of them, desired to be discharged at one's own heart, such as the young child could discharge at the heart of His mother. 2'r. as :--

Past is her day of grace. J. Keble. [Christ Weeping over Jerusalem.] The poem from which this is taken is dated 1819, and was given in Keble's Christian Year, 1827, in bymn, No. 195, in Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836, is composed of st. i., based upon the first part of Keble's poem, and st. il.-iv. from the two concluding stanzes of the poem.

Pastore percusso, minas. Guillaume de la Brunelière. [Conversion of St. Paul.] This hymn was given in the Clunian Breviary, 1686, p. 914, and in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn at 1st and 2nd Vespers on the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul. It is also in several later French Breviaries; J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 85, with omission of st. iii., iv.; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, in full. Tr. as:—

1. The Shepherd slain, the wolf returns. By J. Chandler, from his Latin text as above, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 93. It was included in Oldknow's Hymns, 1850, and others.

9. The Shepherd smitten is, and, lo. By I. Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 176. It is used in an ab-breviated form. In Johnson's English Hyl., 1861, No. 210, it begins, "The Shepherd smitten and laid low." The rendering in W. J. Blew's Church Hy. and Tune Ba., 1852-55, "The spoller sierce is lying low," is mainly from this tr., beginning with st. v.

3. The Shepherd now was smitten. By F. Pott, in his Hys. fitted to the Order of Common Prayer, 1861, the People's H., 1867, and others. In one or two American books at. vi.-vill. are given as "Christ's foe becomes His soldier." The alterations in H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875 were by the Compilers.

4. C Lord, Thy voice the mountain shakes. This, in the Hymnary, 1872, is adapted from I. Willlams's tr. as above, with a change in the order of stanzas, and several alterations.

Translations not in C. U.:—

Patrick, St., the 2nd Bishop and Patron Saint of Ireland, was s. of Calpurnius, a deacon, and grandson of Potitus, a presbyter, and great grandson of Odiasus, a deacon, was b. most probably near Dumbarton, in North Britain, in 372. According to his epistle to Coroticus, his father was also a decurio, a member of the local town council, and a Roman by descent. Hence probably the name Patricius. St. Patrick alludes in Coroticus, § 5, to his having been originally a freeman, and of noble birth. His birthplace is termed in his Confession, § 1, Bannavem Tabernias. Some bave identified that place with Boulogue - aur - Mer, in France, mother's name was Concessa, said to have been sister of St. Martin of Tours. According to Tirechan's Collections (circa a.D. 690), Patrick had four names—(1) Magonus, which Tirechan explains by clarus, illustrious; (2) Sucat (Succetus), god of war, or brave in war, said to have been his baptismal name; (3)
Patricius; and (4) Cothraige (Cothrighe), given because he had been a slave to four masters. At the age of 16 he was carried off with many others to Ireland, and sold as a slave. There he remained six years with Milcho, or Miltuc. He was engaged in feeding cattle (pecora), though the later writers say that he fed swine. In his captivity he became acquainted with the Irish language. His misfortunes were the means of leading him to Christ, and he devoted himself to prayer, and often frequented, for that pur-pose, the woods on Mount Slemish. Having escaped after six years, he spent some years with his parents, and then was stirred up, when still a youth (puer), to devote himself to the evangelisation of Ireland. According to Secundinus's Hymn (St. Sechnall), which is probably not much later than the age of St. Patrick himself, the saint received his apostleship "from God," like St. Paul. No reference is made in that hymn, or in the later so-called Hymn of St. Fiace, to any commission received from Pope Celestine, as is asserted by later writers. St Patrick does not in his own writings allude to the external source whence he obtained ordination, and, as he speaks of his Roman descent, it would be strange for him not to have mentioned his | ing to encounter the druidical fire-worshippers,

Roman consecration, if it had been a fact. From some "suyings" of his, preserved on a separate page of the Book of Armagh, it is probable that he travelled through Gaul and Italy, and that he was ordained in Gaul as deacon, priest, and, afterwards, as bishop. He was probably a bishop when he commenced his missionary labours in Ireland. There were, however, Christians in Ireland before that period. Palledius, the senior Patrick, who preceded our saint by a few years, was, according to the chronicle of Prosper (the secretary of Pope Celestine), "ordsined and sent to the Scots (the Irish) believing in Christ, by Pope Celestine, as their first bishop," Palladius's mission was a failure, while that of the second Patrick, which was quite independent of the former, was succentul in a high degree. Its success, however, has been greatly exaggerated; for St. Patrick, in the close of his Confession, or autobiography, written in old age, speaks of the high probability of his having to lay down his life as a martyr for Christ. The date of St. Patrick's mission is not certain, but the internal evidence of his writings indicate that it was most probably about A.D. 425. The day and month of his death (March 17), but not the year [466] is mentioned in the Book of Armagh.

St. Patrick's claim to a record in this Dictionary is associated with the celebrated hymn or "Breastplate," a history of which we now ուհյտր.

1. St. Patrick's Irish Hymn is referred to in Tirechan's Collections (A.D. 690). It was directed to be sung in "all monasteries and churches through the whole of Ireland," "canticum ejus scotticum semper canere," which is a proof that it was at that time universally acknowledged to be his composition. That regulation was very naturally lost sight of when the old Celtic Church lapsed into the Roman.
(a) The expressions used in the hymn correapond entirely with the circumstances under which St. Patrick visited Tare. (b) Moreover, nithough all the ancient biographies of St. Patrick (with the exception of his own Confession, and of Secundinus's Hymn) speak of him as a worker of miracles, and as having performed miracles at Tara, there is no trace of such a fact in St. Patrick's Hymn. (c) Further, the phrase, "creator of doom," which twice occurs in it, according to the most approved translation, curiously corresponds with another fact that, "my God's doom," or "the doom," or " judgment of my God," was, seconding to the ancient biographies, one of St. Patrick's favourite expressions.

2. The first notice of the existence at the present time of an ancient ms. copy of St. Patrick's "Hymn or Breastplate," was made known by the late Dr. Petrie in his Memoir of Toru, pub. in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, 1839, vol. zviii. Dr. Petrie gave the original in Irish characters, an interlineary Latin version and an English tr. by himself, together with copious notes. Dr. Petrie found the original in the Liber Hymnorum, in the Library of Trinity College, Dublin (fv. E. 4, 2, fol. 19 b). "The tradition respecting its primary use by the saint is that he recited it on Easter Sunday, when proceed-

"I bind to myself to-day,
The strong power of an invocation of the Trinity,
The faith of the Trinity in Unity,
The Creator of the elements."

The tr, which extends to 78 lines, was mainly the work of Dr. Whitley Stokes. A more correct version by the same scholar is given in the Rolls's edition of the Tripartite Life, 1887; and that revised version, with a few modifications, accompanied with critical notes, explanatory of the alterations made on the former version, is given in the 2nd and 3rd editions of the Writings of St. Patrick, by Dr. C. H. H. Wright. Dr. Whitley Stokes, therefore, is to be regarded us the real translator from the original Irish. Dr. Petrie's translation, though highly meritorious as a first attempt, has been proved in many par-ticulars to be erroneous. There is no mention of Tara in the hymn. An uncertainty yet exists as to the meaning of a few words.

4. Iu Dr. W. MacIlwaine's Lyra Hibernica Sacra, 1878, Dr. Todd's tr. was repeated (with notes), together with a second tr. by James Clarence Mangan, the opening lines of which

- "At Tare to-day, in this awful hour,
 I call on the Holy Trinity!
 Glory to Hum Who reigneth in power,
 The God of the elements, Father, and Son,
 And Paramiete Spirit, which Three are the One,
 The evertusting Divinity."
- 5. A popular version of the hymn for congregational use was written by Mrs. Cecil F. Alexander, for St. Patrick's Day, 1889, and sung generally throughout Ireland on that day. The opening lines are: day.

" I bind unto myself to-day
The strong Name of the Triulty,
By invocation of the same.
The Three in One and One in Three.

"I bind this day to me for swet.

By power of faith, Christ's Incarnation;
His baptism in Jordan river;
His death on Cross for my salvation;
His bursting from the spleed tomb;
His riding up the heavinly way;
His coming at the day of doom;
I bind unto myself to-day."

A harmanada westion the circum

Mrs. Alexander's version is given, along with that of James Clarence Mangan, in the Appendix to the Writings of St. Patrick, edited by Dr. C. H. H. Wright (R. T. S.), 1889.

6. Another metrical version of this hymn was given in the Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette for April 5, 1889. It is by Joseph John Murphy, and the opening lines are:—

"I bind as armour on my breast The Threefold Name whereon I call, Of Father, Son, and Spirit blest, The Maker and the Judge of all."

7. The tr. in Stokes and Wright's edition of St. Patrick's writings was set to music as a cantata by Sir R. Stewart, and was per-formed for the first time in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, on St. Patrick's Day, 1888.

8. Mr. Thomas French, Assistant Librarian of Trinity College, Dubliu, writes as follows respecting this hymn :-

"The us, called the 'Liber Hymnorum' belonged to Arby. Ussher, and forms one of the volumes of the with their pagan king, Laoghaire, and his count, at Tara, the royal residence." (Lyra Hiberaica Sacra, 1878, p. 2.)

3. Dr. Todd in his work S. Patrick, Apostle of Ireland, 1864, gives a metrical rendering of the "Breastplate," which begins:—

"I lind to myself to-day, The strong power of an invocation of the Trinity, The faith of the Trinity in Unity.

The Creator of the elements."

We was all the control of the trinity in Unity.

The Creator of the elements."

We was all the cent, Whitley Stokes 11th or 12th."

We was all the Cell Bettief. I was the men and the St. Patrick was the set of the set.

We may add that St. Patrick's Latin works were pub. by Sir James Ware, 1656, in the Acta Sanctorum of the Bollandist Fathers, 1668, by Villanueva, 1835, and by others, as R. S. Nickelson, 1868, Miss Cusack, 1871, and, above all, by Dr. Whitley Stokes, in the Rolls' Edition of the Tripartite Life, 1887. The latter three works contain also translations. Tre. of the whole, or a portion of St. Patrick's writings, have been pub. by Rev. T. Odes, 1876; Sir S. Ferguson, LL.D. Transactions of Royal Irish Academy, 1885, and more completely in the Writings of St. Patrick, edited by Prof. G. T. Stukes and Dr. C. H. H. Wright, 1st ed. 1887, 2nd ed. 1888, 8rd ed., edited, with notes critical and historical, and an introduction by Dr. C. H. H. Wright revised and enlarged. London; Religious Tract [C. H. H. W.] Soc., 1889.

Patris asterni Sobolez coasva. Charles Guiet. [Dedication of a Church.] This hymn is appointed for use at Lauds on the Feast of the Dedication of a Church, in the Sens Breviary, 1702; the Paris Breviary, 1680; and later French Breviaries. It is based on the "Christe cunctorum" (p. 228, il.). The text is also in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:-

1. O Word of God above. By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, July, 1837, vol. xii, p. 83, and again in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviery, 1839. This tr. is rarely found in its original form. In 1852 it was given, much altered, in Murray's Hymnal as No. 89. This was the received text until 1861, when the Compilers of H. A. & M. produced another text, which superseded both it and the original. This text is thus composed: st. i., Williams; ii. Murray, altered by the Compilers; iii., iv., Compilers; v., vi., Murray; vii., Murray and the Compilers. This cento is the most popular form of the text, but the wording of st. ii. has undergone several changes.

2. Jesu, most loving God. This rendering is in the Hymnary, 1872, and is attributed in the Index to "1. Williams." Of I. Williams's #r. three lines only are found in the hymn, and these are in the doxology. The rest of the hymn is the text of I. Williams rewritten.

To translators the creex of this hymn has been st. ii., which reads:

" Hie seer! fontle latices ab ortu Inditi purgant maculam reatus: Hic et infusum nova membra Christo Chrisma coaptat.

I. Williams translated this:-

" There dwells in this deep fount Anomating souls to lave.

And from beneath this holy mount Goes forth the healing wave."

In Murray's Hymnal, 1852, it reeds:-" Grace in this Font is stored To cleanse each guilty child; The Spirit's blest anointing poured Brightens the once defiled."

This is changed in H. A. & M, to :--" Here from the Font is poured Grace on each sinful child; The plent Anothting of the Lord Brightens the once defiled."

The rendering in the Hymnary is:— " Here In the Font are streams To cleanse the sin-defiled; Here God the Spirit with His strength Endows the new-born child."

In addition to this stanza Williams's tr. of st. v. and vi. have been either subjected to great changes, or superseded altogether. They have not however the same doctrinal importance as st. iv.

Patris Sapientia, veritas [bonitas] divina. [Passiontide.] This is the best and most popular of the metrical Hours of the Passion of our Lord, which were commonly used in mediaeval times. It is probably of the 14th cent., and consists of 8 stanzas, viz. one each for Matins, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, Vespers, and Compline, with the concluding stanza-

" Has horas canonicas cum devotione Tibi Jesu recolo pia ratione, Ut sicut tu passus es poenas in agone, Sic labore consunans consurs sim corunae."

Mone, No. 82, gives it from a Reichenau Ms. of the 14th cent. (where it is ascribed to Pope Benedict XIL, who d. 1342); a Ms. of the 14th cent. at Coblenz (where it is ascribed to Pope John XXII., who d. 1334); a ms. of the 14th cent. at Lichtenthal (where it is ascribed to Aegidius, Abp. of Bourges, who d. 1316), and other sources. It is in a sis. of the 15th cent. in the British Museum (Harl. 2951, f. 132), a ss. c. 1400, in the Bodleian (Bodl. 118, f, 40 b, &c.), a Ms. of the 14th cent. in the Bodleian (Litturg, Misc., 251, f. 151 b), and others. The text will also be found in Daniel, i., No. 483; Wackernagel, i., No. 267; Nesle's Hy. Eccl., 1851, p. 137; Bässler, No. 115; Königsfeld, ii. p. 318. Tr. 118:—

Circled by His enemies. By J. M. Neale, in his Medieval Hys., 1851, p. 65 (with a note), and in the People's H., 1867. Of this tr. st. i,-iii. and part of vii. were given in J. D. Chambers's Landa Syon, 1857, pp. 168-170, the rest of the tr. therein being by Mr. Chambers.

Patake, Johann Samuel, was b. Oct. 24, 1727, at Frankfort s. Oder, in the house of his grandfather, his father being an excise officer at Seelow, near Frankfurt. He entered the University of Frankfurt in 1748, and in 1751 went to Halle. After completing his studies he returned to Frankfurt as a candidate of Theology. In 1755, by the recommendation of the chief court preacher, F. S. G. Sack, of Berlin, he was appointed by the Margrave Heinrich von Schwedt, as pastor at Wormefelde and Stolzenburg, near Landsberg on the Warthe. In 1758 he had to flee before the invasion of the Russian troops under General Fermer, and on his return found everything in desolution. In the beginning of 1759 he became pastor at Lietzen, near Frankfurt. Finally, by the recommendation of the Margrave, he was appointed, in 1762, preacher at the Church of the Holy Spirit, in Magdeburg, where he became, in 1769, pastor and sculor of the Altstadt clergy. He d. at Magdeburg, Dec. 14, 1787 (Koch, vi. 293; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxv. 238, &c.).

Patzke was a man of considerable talents and of a lovable nature. He was also very popular as a prenchor. His poetical work began very early, his first volume of Gedichte appearing at Halle in 1750. His hymns appeared mostly in his weekly paper (the first of the kind in Magdeburg) coulded Der Greis, pub. from 1763 to 1769, and in his Musik-alische Gedichte, Magdeburg and Leipzig, 1780. The latter contains a series of cantatas which had been set to music by Johann Heinrich Rolle, music director at Magdeburg, and performed during various seasons of winter concerts there. The only one of his hymns (over 20 in all) which has possed into

Lott den Herrn! die Morgensonne. Morning. Pub. in 1780, as above, p. 73, ln 3 st. of 4 l., as the opening hymn of his cantata, entitled Abal's Tod. Included, as No. 1075, in the Statiberg bei Acates C. B., 1802.
This cantata is in 1780 dated 1789. It appeared, set to music by Rolle, as her Tod Abels, ein musicalisches braws, at Lelpsig, 1771; the hymn above being at p.; entitled, "Hymn of Praise of the children of Adam (1780 ed. of Abal) in their bower." The cantata is itself counded on Der Tod Abels, by Salomon Gessuer [b, at Zürich, April 1, 1730; d. at Zürich, March 2, 1787], which first appeared at Zürich in 1763, became exceedingly popular, and was tr. into various languages, one which three appeared as Lurian in 1785, became exceedingly popular, and was tr. into various languages, one of the English versions passing through more than 20 editions. The pussage used by Patzke for his hymn is a portion of Book L. viz. a part of Abel's Soing of Praise, sung when he was in his bower with his wife Thirza, and which begins. "Welche du Schlaf von jedem Aug." The trs. in C. U. from Patzke are:—

I. Preise the Lord, when blushing morning. This appears, without name of author, in the American Unitarian Cheabire Assoc. Coll. 1844, as No. 522; and the Hz. of Hys., 1849, and in England in E. Courtauld's Coll., 1860. It is in a st., st. i, if, being fairly close roots, of st. I., ii., of the German, while st. iii., iv., are presented.

of st. I., ii., of the German, wants we titally original English stanzas.

2. Praise the Lord: the sun of morning. This is a full but free version by Dr. J. A. Selas, as No. 43 in the Sunday School H. Bk., Philadelphia, 1873, of the Gen, Cannell of the Lutheran Ch. in America.

Peabody, Oliver William Bourne, twin-brother of W. B. O. Peabody (see below), was b. at Exeter, New Hampshire, July 9, 1799; educated at Harvard College; followed the legal profession for a time; wrote for the press; was Professor of English Literature in Jefferson College, Louisiana (1842); and finally Unitarian Minister at Burlington, Vermont, where he d. July 5, 1847. [J. J.]

Peabody, William Bourne Oliver, b.b., twin-brother of the above, was b. at Exeter, New Hampshire, July 9, 1799, and educated in his native town and at Harvard College. Leaving Harvard in 1817, he taught for a year at an academy in Exeter, and then proceeded to study theology at the Cambridge Divinity School. He began to preach in 1819, and became the Pastor of the Unitarian Congregation at Springfield, Massachusetts, in October, 1820. This charge he held to his death on May 28, 1847. His Memois (written by his brother) was pub, with the 2nd ed. of his Sermons, 1849; and his Literary Remains followed in 1850. "He was a man of rure accomplishments, and consummate virtue." whose leveliness of character impressed many outside his own sect. In 1823 he published a Poetical Catechism for the Young to which were appointed some original hymns. He also edited The Springfield Collection of Hys. for Sacred Worship, Springfield, 1835. A few of his hymns also appeared in that collection. His hymns in C. U. are:—-

His hymns in C. U. are;—

1. Behold the western evening light. Death of the Righteons, or Justiens Evening. Pub. in his Catochies, 1823, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in his Springfield Coll., 1835, No. 444. It is in C. U. in itse original form; also as altered by George Rawson in the Bap. Pr. & Hye., 1853, where it reads "How softly on the western hills."

2. God of the earth's extended plains. Hymn of Nature. This is in Grisvold's Poets and Poetry of America., in 6 st. of 8 l. This is thought by some to be the production of his brother Oliver (see above): but Pastama assigne to william. It is given abbreviated in a few collections. The hymn "God of the rolling orbs above," in the Beston Unitarian Hy. [and Tane) Hk., 1858, and others, begins with st. v.

3. D when the hours of life are past. The Hercafter. This hymn, in 6 st. of 4 l., was given in the Catechism. 1823, as the Answer to "Question xiv. What do you have of the Future State of Happiness." It is in use in its original form, and also altered as "When all the hours of life are past."

6. The moon is up; how calm and slow. Evening. A poem rather than a hymn, in 6 st. of 4 L, appended to his Catechius, 1823.

6. When brighter suns and militer skies. Spring. Appended to his Catechius, 1823, in 6 st. of 4 L

The full texts of all these hymns are in Patasm's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, Boston, U.S. A., 1875. [F. M. B.]

Peace be on this house bestowed. C. Wesley. [Household Peace desired.] This hymn, although beginning in a similar manner and on the same subject as the next below by Wesley, is altogether a different hymn. It was pub. in the Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1742, p. 157, in 3 st. of 8 l., and entitled "The Salutation." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 219.) It was included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 467, and has since passed into several Methodist collections. [J. J.]

Peace be to this habitation. C. Wesley. [Household Peace desired.] This is No. 35 of his "Hys. for Believers," which appeared in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. ii., in 6 st. of 8 h., and headed "On entering an House." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 53.) It is not in C. U. in its full form, but as follows:-

1. Peace be to this kabitation. This, as given in Cotterill's &c., 1812, No. 336, was composed of at. 1., il. from this hymn (st. i. and vl.) altered, and st. iil. from J. Newton ("May the grace of Christ our Saviour"). This text, with slight changes, and the omission of the stanza from J. Newton, was handed down to modern hymn-books through Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1826; Conder's Cong. H. Bk., 1826; the Bapt. Pa. & Hys., 1836, and others. The doxology in W. F. Skevenson's Hys. for Church and Home, 1873, is Conder's "Praise the God of all creation," which appeared in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 552. It gives a stately finish to the hymn.

2. Peace be to this eacred dwelling. This, in the American Sabbath H. Bh., 1853, and others, is Cottertill's et. i., it., as altered in Montgomery's Christian Prainsist, 1825, again elliphtly altered to adapt it the better for Public Worship.
3. Peace be to this coagregation. This is No. 2 with further changes. It is No. 25 in the American Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, 1864. The alteration of the first line is found in some of the carliest editions of the Year Marketine of the Carliest editions of the Lady Huntington Collection.

As these forms of the text are in extensive use, and as they differ somewhat widely from Wasley, we append

ets. I. and vi. of his original:—
"Peace be to this habitation! Peace to every soul berein! Peace, the foretaste of salvation, Peace, the seal of cancell'd sin, Peace that speaks its heavenly Giver, Peace to earthly minds unknown, Peace Divine, that lusts for ever. Here erect its glorious throne Prince of peace, if Thou art near us, Fix in all our hearts Thy home, By Thy Last appearing theer us, Quickly let Thy kingdom come: Answer all our expectation, Give our raptured souls to prove Glorioua, uttermost salvation Heavenly, everlatting love!"

4. Visit, Lord, this habitation. In the Philadelphia Set of Hyman, 1861, this is composed of Wesley's st. 1., 11, 1-4; st. ill. 1-4; and st. 71. slightly attered. [J. J.]

Peace, doubting heart, my God's I am. C. Wesley. [Peace with God.] 1st pub. in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1739, p. 153, in 7 st. of 6 l., and based upon Isaiah kliii. I-3. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 135.) It was given in full in the Wes. H. Bh., 1780, No. 261, and subsequently in other Methodist collections. In addition it is found in some Church of England hymn-books in 5 sts., a form given to it in Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776. From it also the following hymns are derived :-

1. For over nigh me, Father, stand. This in Martineau's Hymne, 1840 and 1873, is composed of st. iv., if. and vi. slightly altered.

3. Still nigh ms. 0 my Savisur, stand. This, in the Bap. Sci. of Hymns, 1833, No. 321, and the Bap. Ft. & Hye., 1838, No. 427, is a cento, st. t. being st. iv. of this hymn, while st. ii. is st. zvi. of J. Wesley's tr. from the German "Jesu, Thy boundless love to me."

G. J. Stevenson's note on Wesley's hymn in his Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 209, is of more than usual interest. [J. J.]

Peace, perfect peace, in this dark world of sin. Bp. E. H. Bickerstett. [Peace.] Written in 1875, and first printed In a small tract of five hymns (all by Bp. Bickersteth), entitled Songs in the House of Pilgrimage (Hampstead, J. Hewetson, N.D.), in 7 st. of 2 l. It is based upon the text, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee. Isaiah xxvi. 3. It was given, without alteration, in the H. Comp., 1876; and has been repeated in numerous collections. It is also in the author's From Year to Year, 1883. In 1884 Bp. Bickersteth issued it, together with a companion hymn in the same metre on Prayer, printed on cardboard, as Prayer and Peace (Lond. Sampson Low). The hymn on Prayer begins "Pray, always pray, the Holy Spirit pleads." This was given in the author's Octave of Hymns, 1880, No. 1. [J. J.]

Peace that passeth understanding.

J. Mostgomery. [For Peace.] This hymn is dated on the original Ms. ("M. MSS.") " Sept. 20, 1837," and is indexed as having been copied and sent to many persons. The earliest printed form with which we have met is in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 245, in 3 st. of 8 l., and entitled "Invocation to Peace." It is in Kennedy, 1863, and other collections.

Pearce, Samuel, s. of a silversmith at Plymonth, was b. in that town, July 20, 1766. Early in life he joined the Baptist Church in Plymouth, and, showing gifts for the ministry, was invited to preach. After a course of study at the Baptist College, Bristol, he became, in 1790, paster of the Baptist congregation in There his Cannon Street, Birmingham. ministry was remarkably successful; but after a brief and bright course he d. on Oct. 10, 1799. He was strongly disposed to foreign mission work, and was one of the founders of the Baptist Missionary Society, in 1792. His Memoirs, by A. Fuller, was pub. in 1800. Embodied in the Memoirs were eleven poetical pieces. In the 2nd ed., 1801, these pieces were grouped together at the end of the Memoirs. He is known to hymnology through the following hymns:-

given in another form of 6 st, of 6 L. This form has come down to modern bymnals.

4. Let ocean's waves tumultsons rise. Contentment. Not in the Memoirs; but in Rippon's Sci., 1800, in 6 st. of 6 l.

Not to the sea of 61.

5. Whene'er I look into Thy word. Sunday Horning. In the Atmorits, 1800, in 8 st. of 61. In the 27th ed. of Rippon's Sci., 1827, st. iv.,-vit., elightly alternative were given as "Our precious Lord, on duty bent."

Pearse, Mark Guy, s. of Mark Guy Pearse, of Camborne, Cornwall, was b. at Camborne, Jan. 3, 1842, and educated for the Wesleyan ministry, which he entered in 1863. Mr. Pearse has held important and responsible appointments at Leeds, London, and Bristol, and is at present (1889) associated with the London West Central Wesleyan Mission. His publications number over twenty, in addition to numerous tracts on practical religious subjects, and have attained in several instances to great popularity, Daniel Quorm, and his Religious Notions, and John Tregenoweth being apecially well known. His hymns were mostly written in London in 1875, and were pub. in his little book The Child Jeeus, 1875, each hymn having been suggested by one of a series of cartoons illustrative of the life of our Blessed Lord, pub. by the Wesleyan-Methodist Sunday S. Union. Of these hymns the following were included in The Methodist Sunday S. H. Bh., 1879:—

1. Hushed is the raging winter wild. Simeon in the Temple.

2. O'er Bethlehem's hill, in time of old. Roichang.
3. Saviour, for Thy love we praise Thee. Roichang.
4. The fletce wind howls about the hills. Flight into Egypt.

These hymns for children are of exceptional merit, and are worthy of attention. [J. J.]

Pearson, Charles Buchanan, M.A. was b. about the year 1805, and was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, B.A. in honours 1828. Taking Holy Orders in 1830, he became Prebendary of Fordington in Salisbury Cathedral, 1832, and was Rector of Knebworth from 1838 to 1875. He d. Jan 7, 1881. He was the author of Plain Sermons to a Country Congregation, 1838; Church Expansion, 1853, &c. His Latin Translations of English Hus. appeared in 1862. He contributed versions of the Sarum Sequences to the tr. made by his son (Albert Harford Pearson), of the Earnen Missal, which is entitled, The Sarum Missal in English, 1868. A number of these versions he afterwards revised and pub. in a separate volume (along with the original Latin), as Sequences from the Sarum Missal, 1871. Several of his versions passed into the Hymnary, 1871-72. [J. J.]

Pennefather, Catherine, née King, daughter of Admiral King, of Angley, was married Sept. 16, 1847, to the Rev. W. Pennefather (see below). Two of Mrs. Pennethe following hymns:—
1. Author of life, with grateful heart. Evening.
This in the Meth. Prec Church S. S. H. Bk., 1880, is the original with the amissions of st. iii.; that noted on p. 98, i. is a cente for "Morning." Both are from the Memoirs, 1800.
2. God of our lives, our morning song. Morning. Morning. The Church H. Bk., 1873.

2. God of our lives, our morning song. Morning. "Not now, my child; a little more rough the Memoirs, 1800, into the Meth. Prec Church H. Bk., 1860, with the omission of st. II.

Court of Exchequer, was b. in Merrion Square, Dublin, Feb. 5, 1816. He resided for a time for educational purposes at Wesbery College, near Bristol, and then at Levans Parsonage, near Kenda), Westmoreland. He entered Trinity College, Dublin, in Feb. 1832, and graduated B.A. in 1840. Taking Holy Orders in 1841, he became curate of Ballymacugh, diocese of Kilmore. In July, 1844, he was preferred to the Vicarage of Mellifont, near Drogheda. In 1848 he removed to England, where he held successively the Incumbency of Trinity Church, Walton, Aylesbury, 1848; of Christ Church, Barnet, 1852; and of St. Jude's, Mildmay Park, 1864. He d. April 30, 1873. His great work at Barnet and at Mild-may—the Conferences began at the former and continued at the latter place—the large religious and charitable organizations which he instituted and superintended, are matters of history. Full details are given of the rise and progress of these and his other works in his Life and Letters, 1878. His hymns were written mainly for the Barnet and Mildmey "Conferences," and were pub. sometimes as leaflets, and again, as for the Conference of 1872, as Hymns Original and Selected, By W. P. In this pemphlet there are 25 of his compositions. In the latter part of 1878 his Original Hymns and Thoughts in Verse were pub. posthumously. This work contains 71 pieces, but few of which are dated. Of these the following are given in a few hymnbooks:-

- And may I really tread. Divine Worship.
 Help us, O Lord, to praise! Praise.
 How shall we praise Thy name. Christian Communion. From this "O for ten thousand harps," is taken.
- Josus, in Thy blest name. Church Conferences.
 Jesus, stand among us. Divine Worthep.
 My blessed Jesus, Thou hast taught. Self Conseeration.

15. You shining shore is nearer. Beaven Anticipated. Mr. Pennefather's hymns possess much beauty and carnest simplicity; are rich in evangelical sentiment and doctrine; and are much more musical than is usual with lyrics of their class. They deserve greater attention than they have hitherto received.

Pentecostarion Charmosynon, The. [Greek Hymnody, § ziv.]

People of the living God. J. Montgomery. [On Turning to God.] In Hatfield's Poets of the Church, N.Y., 1884, p. 440, the author says, "At the close of 1814, he [Montcomery] was publicly recognised, at Fulneck, as a brother in the Lord, and a member of the [Moravian] Society. It was in all probability on this occasion that he wrote his beautiful and popular hymn beginning with 'People of the living God.'" This uncertainty in Hatfield's work becomes certainty in S. W. Duffield's English Hymns, N. Y., 1886, p. 455, where he says, "This hymn describes Montgomery's feelings at the prospect of being readmitted to the Moravian communion at Fulneck, November 4th, 1814." In Holland's Memoirs of Montgomery, pub. in 1854, the full details of Montgemery's application to the Moravian commu-nity at Fulneck, the consent of the authorities there, and his admission in Dec., 1814, are given, but neither there nor elsewhere in the Memoir is any reference made to this hymn. The original us. is not amongst the M. Mas., nor is there anything at our command which can fix the date of its appearance until 1819, when it was included in Cotterill's Sel. as No. 160, in 3 st. of 8 l., and headed, "Choosing the portion of God's heritage." Although therefore we cannot say positively, with Duffield, that it was written at the period when Montgomery joined the Moravians at Fulneck, in Dec., 1814, yet we are prepared to admit with Hatfield that it was in all probability written at that time. The text was repeated from Cotterill's Sel. in Montgomery's Christian Pealmist, 1825, No. 466, and in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 51. The use of this hymn is extensive.

Perpetual Source of Light and Grace. P. Doddridge. [Inconstancy in Religion lamented.] This hymn is No. 74 in the D. MSS., and undated, but is found between other hymns dated respectively, "Jan. 15, 1731," and "Jan. 1, 1731," thus fixing the date as 1788. It was given, without alteration, in Job Orton's postbumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, as No. 151, in 6 st. of 4 l., with the heading "Inconstancy in Religion. Hosen vi. 4," and again, with slight changes, in J. D. Humphreys's edition of the same, 1839, No. 170. It is in a few modern collections, including Martinean's Hymns, &c., 1840 and 1873. In a few collections it begins " Elernal Source of Light and Grace." [J. J.]

Perronet, Edward. The Perronets of England, grandfather, father, and sen, were French émigrés. David Perronet came to England about 1680. He was son of the refugee Posteur Perronet, who had chosen Switzerland as his adopted country, where ha ministered to a Protestant congregation at Chateau D'Oex. His son, Vincent Perronet, M.A., was a graduate of Queen's College, Oxford, though his name is not found in either Authory Woods's Athenne Oxonienses nor his Fasti, nor in Bliss's apparatus of additional notes. He became, in 1728, Vicar of Shoreham, Kent. He is imperishedly sesociated with the Evangelical Revival under the Wesleys and Whitefield. He cordially cooperated with the movement, and many are the notices of him scattered up and down the biographies and Journals of John Wesley and of Belina, Countres of Huntingdon. lived to the venerable age of ninety-one; and pathetic and beautiful is the account of John Wesley's later visits to the white-haired saint (b. 1693, d. May 9, 1785).* His son Edward was b. in 1726. He was first educated at home under a tutor, but whether he proceeded to the Born, University (Oxford) is uncertain.

baptized, and brought up in the Church of England, he had originally no other thought than to be one of her clergy. But, though strongly evangelical, he had a keen and searching eye for defects. A characteristic note to The Dissenting Gentleman's answer to the Rev. Mr. White, thus runs:—"I was born, and am like to die, in the tottering communion of the Church of England; but I despise her nonsense; and thank God that I have once read a book that no fool can answer, and that no honest man will" (p. 235). The publication of The Milre is really the first prominent event in his life. A copy is preserved in the British Museum (993a, 21), with title in the author's holograph, and us. notes; and on the fly-leaf this: - "Capt. Boisragon, from his oblig'd and most respectful humbleservt. The Author. London, March 29th, 1757." The title is as follows:—The Mitre; a Sacred Poem (1 Samuel ii. 80). London: printed in the year 1757. This strangely overlooked satire is priceless as a reflex of contemporary ecclesiastical opinion and sentiment. It is pungent, salted with wit, gleams with humour, hits off vividly the well-known celebrities in Church and State, and is well wrought in picked and packed words. But it is a curious produc-tion to have come from a " true son " of the Church of England. It roused John Wesley's hottest anger. He demanded its instant sup-pression; and it was suppressed (Atmore's Methodist Memorial, p. 300, and Tyerman, ii. 240-44, 264, 265); and yet it was at this period the author threw himself into the Wesleys' great work. But evidences abound in the letters and journals of John Wesley that he was intermittently rebellious and vehement to even his revered leader's authority. Earlier, Edward Perronet dared all obloquy as a Methodist. In 1749 Wesley enters in his diary:

"From Rochdale went to Bolton, and soon found that the Rochdale Itons were lambs in comparison with those of Botton. Edward Perronet was thrown down and rolled in mud and mire. Stones were hurled and windows broken." (Tyerman's Life and Times of the Rev. John Wesley, M.A., 3 vols., 1870; vol. il. 57).

In 1750 John Wesley writes:

"Charles and you [Edward Perronet] behave as I want you to do; but you cannot, or will not, preach where I desire. Others can and will preach where I desire, but they do not behave as I want them to do. I have a fine time between the one and the other. I think Charles and you have in the general a right senso of what it is to serve as sons in the gospel; and if all our helpers had had the same, the work of God would have prospered bother both in England and Ireland. I have not one preacher with me, and not six in England, whose wills are broken to serve me" (ibid. ii. 86, and Whitehead's Life of Wesley, ii. 259).

In 1755 arrangements to meet the emergency created by its own success had to be made for Methodism. As one result, both Edward and Charles Perronet broke loose from John Wesley's law that none of his preachers or "helpers" were to dispense the Sacraments, but were still with their flocks to attend the parish churches. Edward Perronet asserted his right to administer the Sacraments as a divinely-called preacher (thid. ii. 200). At that time he was resident at Canterbury, "in a part of the archbishop's old palace" (thid. ii. 230). In season and out of season he "evangelized," Onward, he became one of the Counters of Huntingdon's "ministers" in a chapel in Watling Street, Canterbury. Throughout he was passionate, impulsive, strong-willed; but always lived near his di-vine Master. The student-reader of Lives of the Wesleys will be "taken captive" by those passages that ever and anon introduce him. He bursts in full of fire and enthusiasm, yet ebullient and volatile. In the close of his life he is found as an Independent or Congregational paster of a small church in Canterbury. He must have been in easy worldly circumstances, as his will shows. He d. Jan. 2, 1792, and was buried in the cloisters of the great cathedral, Jan. 8. His Hymns were published anonymously in successive small volumes. First of all came Select Passager of the Old and New Testament versified; London: Printed by H. Cock, EDCCLVI. The British Museum copy of this extremely rare little book has the Ms. inscription on verso of title, "Cant' E. Perronet return'd after a Detention of 16 y" with several o" from A. J. A. on Sat. Ap [rest turned in by the binder] 1774." A second similar volume is entitled A Small Collection of Hymns, &c., Canterbury: printed in the year DCCLXXXII. His most important volume was the following: Occasional Verses, moral and sacred. Published for the instruction and amusement of the Candidly Serious and Religious. London, printed for the Editor: And Sold by J. Buckland in Paternoster Row; and T. Scollick, in the City Road, Moorfields, MDCCLXXXV.; pp. 216 (12°). [The Brit. Mus. copy has the two earlier volumes bound up with this.] The third hymn in this scarce book is headed, "On the Resurrection," and is, "All hail the power of Josus' name" p. 41; i. But there are others of almost equal power and of more thorough workmanship. In my judgment, "The Lord is King" (Pealm zeri. 16) is a great and noble hymn. It commences:—

"Hall, boly, hely, hely Loud 1 Let Pow're immortal sing; Adore the co-eternal Word, And shout, the Lord is King."

Very fine also is "The Master's Yoke—the Scholar's Lesson," Matthew xt. 29, which thus opens:—

"O Grant me, Lord, that sweet content That sweetens every state; Which to internal fears can rent, Nor outward foes abate."

A sacred poem is named "The Waylaring Man: a Parody" (pp. 26, 27): and another, "The Goldfish: a Parody." The latter has one splendid line on the Cross, "I long to share the glorious shame." "The Tempost" is striking, and ought to be introduced into our hymnals; and also "The Conflict or Conquest over the Conqueror, Genesis xxxii. 21" (pp. 30, 31). Still finer is "Thoughts on Hebrews xii.," opening:—

"Awake my soul—arise:
And run the heavenly race:
Look up to Him who holds the prize,
And offers thee His grace."

"A Frayer for Mercy on Psalm exix. 94," is very striking. On Isaiah ixv. 19 (pp. 45, 46), is strong and unmistabable. "The Siner's Resolution," and "Thoughts on Matthew viii, 2," and on Mark x. 51, more than worthy of being reclaimed for use. Perronet is a poet as well as a pre-eminently successful hymn-writer. He always sings as well as prays. It may be added that the brief paraphrase after Ovid, p. 62, given below, seems to echo the well-known lines in Gray's immortal elegy :--

" How many a gem unseen of human eyes Entomb'd in earth, a spatkling embryo lies; How many a rose, neglected as the gem, Scatters its sweets and rots upon its stem: So many a mind, that might a meteor abone, Had or its genius or its friend been known; Whose want of aid from some maternal hand, Still haunts the shade, or quite its native land." [A. B. G.]

Peter of St. Maurice (Petrus Mauritius), also called Peter of Cluny (Petrus Clunicasis), or Peter the Venerable (Petrus Venerabilis), Abbot, was b. 1092 or 1094 (Tronch, Sac. Lat. Poetry, 1874, p. 101) of a noble family (the Counts of St. Maurice) in Auvergue ("Nobili genere natus fuit noster in Arverdia": Leyser, Hist. Poem. Med. Avi, p. 425). Beginning life as a soldier, he afterwards became a Benedictine monk, and on the death of Hugh, Prior of Mareiguy, who had but three months before been elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the better known Pontius, Peter was elected Abbot of the celebrated monastery of his order at Cluny, in 1122. From this time much of his life was spent in controversy, a summary of which is an interesting piece of Ecclesiastical history.

Pontius, by his arrogance, in claiming, as Abbot of Chung, the title of "Abbot of Abbot," had raised up a cloud of opponents to his pretensions, and the matter had ended for the moment in his resignation of his office. But Peter had scarcely been three years installed as Abbot, when Pontius established himself as head of an-Abitot, when routed established minest as hear or sin-other religious community at Treviso, in Italy, whence he started with a train of monks, and, taking advantage of the temporary absence of Peter, again go prosessing of his old position at Ciuny, and drove out the friends of Peter, with the Prior St. Bernard at their head. After great excesses had been committed by the usurper and great encesses had been committed by the usurper and his followers, and the villages and estates of the Abbey had been given up to fire and the sword, Tupe Honorius II. summoned all parties to Rome, and, having heard both sides, decided in favour of Peter, excommunicated Pontius and imprisoned him in a dungrou, where he died a few months afterwards.

When this question had been settled, another dispute arose, in which the monks of Citeaux or Clairvaux accused those of Cluny of an undue relaxation of the rule of their order. Robert, a consin of St. Bernard, had become a monk at Chairvaux, but, fluding the rule there too gallia monk at Chairvanx, but, finding the rule there too galling, had migrated to Chuny, and, on an appeal to Rome, the Pope directed him to remain at Chuny, much to the chagrin of St. Bernard, who, as the Cheterlan head of Chairvanx, vehemently attacked the midder discipline of the Henedictine Chuny. Robert, in consequence of his consin's objections, was seet back by Peter to Clairvanx, but his monks, resenting such a tame entrender, got William, the Abbot of St. Thierry, near Rhelms, to write a sharp letter of remonstrance to St. Bernard. The reply of the latter accusing the Chunkos of all sorts of declensions from the needful strictness of monastic life, drew forth a the latter accusing the trumines of all sorts of dectenating from the needful strictness of monastic life, drew forth a rejoinder from Feter as characteristic of "that gentle forbeatance and love of peace" of the latter, "which made him stand out conspicuous in his generation, when each man sought his own, or the things of file order, not the things of Jesus Christ" (S. Baring-Gould's Lives of the Savints, December, p. 284), as the attack on St. Bernard's part was of his fiery, yet not altogether unfriendly, vehe-mence of invective.

In a subsequent controversy between St. Bernard and In a subsequent controversy between St. Bernard and Peter the former was more successful. He opposed the wish of Hugh, son of the Duke of Burgundy, to secure the see of Langres, when vacant in 1138, for a Clunian monk. The Archibleny of Lyons consecrated Hugh's nomines in the teeth of St. Bernard's opposition, but notwithstanding all defence of the appointment of the new Lishop which Peter could make, the Poye, who was wholly under the influence of St. Bernard, pronounced the consecration of the Cluniac monk void, and the Prior of Clairvaux, a consin of St. Bernard's, was consecrated in

Once more the gentle Peter came into collision with the fiery, domineering St. Bernard in the matter of Abe-lard. The latter had been condemned, if not altogether unbeard, at any rate inbunderstood, by the Council of unbeard, at any rate inhunderstood, by the Council of Sens upon charges of hetesy brought against him by St. Bernard, and the sentence upon him had been confirmed, upon appeal, by Pope Innocent II.—a nuere coho of the prosecutor. Abelard, silenced and broken down, took radiugs at Cluny on his way to Rome, and remained there for some two years, during which Peter so far won upon the victorious Bernard as to bring about a reconciliation between him and Abelard, if such can be called a reconciliation which allowed Bernard will be do be a reconciliation, which allowed Bernard still to do his titipost to set the minds of men against his old adver-sary. The penceful death of Abelard at Cluny in 1142 finally terminated this controversy,

The year 1143 was a renewal of the correspondence between St. Bernard and Peter on the subject of the two reforms, in which the latter takes credit for a warm love for the Cletercians, and reminds his correspondent of the shocks that love had withstood in the question of the payment of three by a Cretercian monastery in the neighbourhood of Cluny to the Cluthac monks, which and the lower terminate recovery more consists. which had led to a keen controversy and many appeals; as well as in the contest about the Bishop of Langres, It was at this time that 1'vier sent to St. Bernard a copy of the translation of the Koran, which Peter had caused to be made in Spain by Robert, an Englishman, but Archideren of Namenland. denous of Pampelona.

dences of Pampelana. Peter was in high favour with Popes Celestine II. and Lucius III., and in 1146, in common with St. Remard, took an active part in discountenancing the slamplate of the Jews in France and Germany, which had resulted from the preaching of St. Bernard against the infidels. But though Peter appealed to Louis VII. to say the wassacre, it must be said that he made no effort to present the charder of the Love.

managere, it must be said that he made no effort to prevent the plunder of the Jews.

Another matter in which Peter was interested and engaged was that of Peter of Brueys, who founded a seet bolding tenets strongly tinged with Manchasian, and was burnt alive by a realous Cutholic mob early in the twalfth century. A letter strongly condemning the heretic, his followers, and his opinious is still extant. Peter went to Rome for five months in 1150, when Eugenius III., a nominee of St. Bernard, was Pope, and gave an account of Eugenius to St. Bernard by letter.

The rest of Peter's life was spent at Clumy, where he d. early in 1156 or 1157, leaving the impression behind him of "one of the most impression behind him of "one of the most attractive figures which monastic and mediaval history presents to us" (S. Baring-Gould's Lives of the Saints, Dec., p. 281). Lacking the fire and power of his great antagonist and correspondent, he succeeded by the gentleness and imperturbability of his disposition in gaining and retaining an influence in the religious world second only to that of St. Bernard. His writings were chiefly controversial, and the poetry which he wrote was great neither in quantity nor quality. Amongst his latter were (1) Some Rhythms, Proces, Verses, and Hymns contained in the Bibliotheca Cluniacensis, 1614; (2) A Hynm on the "Translation censts, 1614; (2) A Mynin on the "Translation of St. Benedict"—"Claris conjubila Gallia cantibus," in the Bibliotheca Floriacensis, 1605; and (3) An "Epitaph on Peter Abelard." From the first collection, Archbishop Trench gives two specimens: (a) On Christ's Notivity "Column coulds have "him"." Nativity, "Colum gaude, terra plaude," and (b) one on the Resurrection of our Lord. "Mortis portis fractis fortis" (Sec. Lat. Poetry, 1874, p. 102), both of which have been translated. See Latin, Tra, from the, p. 665, ii.

Peters, Mary, nee Bowly, daughter of Richard Bowly, of Cirencester, was b. in 1818, and subsequently married to the Rev. John McWilliam Peters, sometime Rector of Quennington, Gloucestershire, and d. at Clifton, July 29, 1856. Her prose work, The World's History from the Creation to the Accession of Queen Victoria, was pub. in seven volumes. Several of her hymna were contributed to the Plymouth Brethren's Ps., Hys., and Spiritual Songs, Lond., D. Walther, 1842. These with others, 58 in all, were pub. by Niabet & Co., London, 1847, as Hys. intended to help the Communion of Saints. Dr. Walker introduced several from these collections into his Cheltenham Ps. & Hys., 1855. Many of these have been repeated in Spepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, and other Church of England hymnbooks. These include, besides those annotated under their respective first lines :--

Petersen, Johann Wilhelm, was b. June 1, 1649, at Osnabrück: his father Georg Petersen, Kanzlei-beamter at Lübeck, having gone to reside at Osnabräck as representing Liibeck in the negotiations which ended in the Peace of Westphalia. Petersen matrithe Peace of Westphalia. Petersen matri-culated at the University of Giessen, in 1669; went in 1671 to Rostock, and was then for short periods at Leipzig, Wiltenberg, and Jena; the degree of M.A. being conferred on him by Giessen in absentia. He returned to Giessen in 1673, and began to lecture on philosophy and rhetoric as a privat docent. About 1675 he visited Spener, at Frankfurt. This proved an important turning-point in his life. In 1677 he began to lecture at Rostock, as Professor of Poetry (D.D. from Restock 1686), but in the same year accepted the pastorate of the St. Aegidien church at Hannover. He was then, in May, 1678, appointed by Duke August Friedrich of Holstein, as Court preacher at Eutin, and general superintendent of the diocese of Lübeck. In Advent, 1688, he became pastor of St. John's church and superintendent at Lüneburg. Here he made himself obnoxious to his fellow clergy by refusing to take fees for hearing confessions; received into his house Fraulein Rosamunde Juliane von Asseburg, and began publicly to teach her ideas of the Millennial Kingdom. Being accused of Chillasm and having his opinions condemned by the theological faculty of Helmstädt, he was removed from his office in the end of January, 1692. Thereafter he resided at various places, made tours over Germany, during which he propagated his views, and expounded his peculiar doctrines by books and pamphlets. He finally bought a small estate at Thymer, near Zerbst, and d. there, Jan. 31, 1727 (Kock vi. 121; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxv. 508, &c.).

Apart from his importance as a theological writer, Petersen deserves attention as the author of several hymns. A considerable number of them are in Latin, his ws. being entitled Chihara sacra. Of these he contributed 7 to Freylinghausen's Celts cicks G. B., 1704. Two of these have passed into Ringlish, viz.: "Cerne lapsum servelum" (g. 216, 1.), and "Salve crux bests, salve" (g. v.). His German hymns were pub. as (1) Stissaten aus Zion; in two parts, Halle, 1898 and 1701 (Weeniggrode Library). These are hymns in prose and not versions of the Pasiter; and 8 passed into Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704. (2) cot. Stissaten aus Zion, n. v. 1721 [Brit. Mus. and Wernigerode]. These are obscure, mysdical, said diffuses, and do not appear to have come at all into use. (3) Others of his hymns appeared in the Pictistic hymn-books of the period, 1692-1704. One of this last class is tr, into English, vist.

In the Paris Brev. it is the hymn at Lauds on the Feast of St. Peter's Chains, Aug. 1st. In later French Breviaries it is also given for the same feast. The text is in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

Pfefferkorn, Georg Michael, was b March 16, 1645, at Ifta, near Creuzburg on the Werra, where his father, G. M. Pfefferkorn (a native of Creuzburg, but never pastor there), had become pastor in 1619, held the living for 58 years, but finally retired and d. | at Crouzburg. After studying at the Universities of Jens (M.A. 1666) and Leipzig, Pfefferkorn was for a short time private tutor at Altenburg, and then in 1668, became moster of the two highest forms in the Gymnasium at Altenburg. In 1673, he was appointed by Duke Ernst the Pious, of Gotha (who d. March 26, 1675), as a tutor to his three sons. In 1676 Duke Friedrich I. appointed him pastor of Friemar, near Gotha, and in 1682 made him a member of the consistory and superintendent at Grafen-Tonns, near Gotha. He d. at Gräfen-Tonna, March 8, 1732 (Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxv. 619; MB. from Pastor H. Henning, Superintendent at Creuzburg, &c.).

Pfefferhora's hymns appeared in the hymn-books of the period, and in his Pretinck-Philologinghe Fest- and Wockens Last darinness allerhand Arica Boutscher Golickée, &c., Alterburg, 1887 [Berlin Library], and the second enlarged ed., Altenburg, 1869 [Gütingen Li-brary]. The most important hymn associated with his name is "Wer weiss wie nahe mit mein Ende" (see p. 330, i.). Another hymn ascribed to him is:

Was frug ich nach der Welt. Und allen ihren Schiften. Remenciation of the World. According to J. Avenarius, in his Modercatechistus. Leipzig. 1714, p. 56, this hymn was written in 1857, and sung from broadsheets at Altanburg. It is not however in his coldente, as above, either in 1867 or 1869. It is included, without his name, in the Statinistehes Following with his name, in the Naumburg G. B., 1715, ed. by J. M. Schamelius. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 595. Pfeil, Christoph Carl Ludwig, Baron von, was b. January 20, 1712, at Grünstadt, near Worms, where his father, Quirin Heinrich v. Pfeil, was then in the service of the Count of Leiningen. He matri-culated at the University of Halle in 1728, as a student of law. After completing his course a student of law. After completing his course at the University of Tübingen, he was ap-pointed, in 1732, Wütttemberg secretary of legation at Regensburg; then, in 1737, Justiz-und-Regierungsrath at Stuttgart; in 1745 Tutelar-raths-President; in 1755 Kreisdirectorialgesandter to the Swabian Diet; in 1758 Geheim Legationsrath; and in 1759 Geheimrath. He found himself however at last no longer able to co-operate in carrying out the absolution of the Witttemberg prime minister Count Montmartin. When his resignation was accepted, April 13, 1768, he retired to the estate of Deufstetten, near Crailsheim, which he had purchased in 1761. In Sept., 1763, he was appointed by Frederick the Great as Gehelmrath, and accredited Prussian minister or ambassador to the Diets of Swabia and Franconia. He was thereafter created Baron by the Emperor Joseph II., and in 1765 received the cross of the Red Eagle Order from Frederick the Great. An intermittent fever which developed itself in August, 1783, confined him to bed, where he remained till his death, at Denistetten. Feb. 14, 1784 (Koch v. 176; Allg. Deutsche Biog. XXV. 646).

v. Pfeil was a man of deep and genuine piety. His hymn-writing began immediately after the solitinal change which he experienced on the 10th S. after Trinity, 1730; and it continued to be a favourite occupation, es-1730; and a continued to ea a rayoute occupation, as-pecially in his later years at Deußstetten. He was one of the most productive of German hymn-writers, his printed hymna being about 958, besides many in as. His Pasim versions of 1747 are upded under Pasibers,

German. The other hymne printed in his lifetime appeared in his (1) Lieder von der offenbartes Herrickhold and Zukunft det Herric Essingen, 1741, 2nd ed. Memmingen, 1749, as Apocatyptische Lieder von der, het. (2) Evangstisches Gesangbuch, Memmingen, 1782, with 261 hymns dating from 1730 to 1761, edited by J. G. Schellhorn. (3) Bangselische Glaubent-wad Hersengesänge, Dinkelsbühl, 1783, with 340 hymns dating from 1763 to 1768. In recent times a number of his hymns have rome into German use (they originally appeared, it must be remembered, during the Rationalistic Feriod), and Kanpp includes 26 of them in his Ec. L. S., 1861. Two have passed into English, via.:—

The author of this hymn, which is found in the Service Book of the Greek Church as a Vesper Hymn, is unknown. It was quoted by St. Basil in the 4th century as of unknown authorship and date (De Sp. Sancto ad Amphilochium, c. Its carliest printed form is in Archbishop Usher's De Symbolis, 1647, his text being taken from two Greek uss., one supposed to be of the 12th, and the second of the 14th century. Routh also gives it in his Reliqu. Sacr. iii. 299, and Daniel in his Thes. Hymn. iii. p. 5. The form in which the original is printed varies in different works, as in the Lyra Apostolica, 1836, p. 74 (ed. 1879, p. 78); Little-dale's Offices, &c., of the Holy Eastern Church, 1863, p. 277, but the text is the same. It is as follows, from Daniel:-

> Φῶς Ιλαρον Δηίας δόξης, Αθανάτου Πατρός ούρανίου, 'Aylan, uduapos, 'Ιησού Χριστέ, 'Ελθόντες έπὶ τὴν ήλίου δύσεν, 'Ιδόντει φώς έσπερινόν, Υμνούμεν Πατέρα, και Υίον, Καὶ Αγιον Πρεθμα θεόν. Abiov or ev mage Καίροις δμνεισθαι φωναίς Orlais, bie beou. Ζωήν ο διδούς διδ 'Ο κόσμυς σε δοξάζει.

This bymn was sung in the ancient Church at the Lighting of the Lamps, and hence is known as "The Candlelight Hymn," Its modern use as a translated hymn is at Evensong. It may be added that in modern Greek liturgical books it is attributed to Sophronius (see Greek Hymnedy, & vi.), thirteen of whose compositions are given in Daniel iii. pp. 20-46.

Pierpoint, Folliott Bandford, N.A., 5. of William Horne Pierpoint of Bath, was b. at Spa Villa, Bath, Oct. 7, 1835, and educated at Queen's College, Cambridge, graduating in classical honours in 1871. He has pub. The Chalice of Nature and Other Poems, Bath, N.D. This was republished in 1878 as Songs of Love, The Chalice of Nature, and Lyra Jesu. He has also contributed hymns to the Churchman's Companion (Lond. Masters), the Lyra Euclid-ristica, &c. His hymn on the Cross, "O Cross, O Cross of shame," appeared in both these works. He is most widely known through :-

For the beauty of the earth. Holy Communion, or lower Services. This was contributed to the 2nd ed. of For one community of the war contributed to the 2nd oil of Orby Shipley's Lyra Eucharistica, 1864, in 8 at. of 4 L, as a hymn to be sung at the celebration of Holy Communion. In this form it is not asually found, but in 4, or sometimes in 6, stanzas, it is extensively used for Flower Services and as a Children's hymn.

Pierpont, John, s. of James Pierpont, of Litchfield, Connecticut, was b. at Litchfield, April 6, 1785, and educated at Yale College, where he graduated in 1804. After fulfilling engagements as a Tutor in New Haven, and in Charlestown, South Carolina, he was admitted to the Bar in 1812. Shortly after he retired and went into business, only to leave it also, and to pass on to Harvard College as a student in theology. In 1819 he succeeded Dr. Holley as the paster of the Unitarian congregation in Hollis Street, Boston. At length his zeal against intemperance and slavery caused him to resign his charge in 1840 (see Lothrop's Proceedings of an Eocl. Council in the case of the Hollis Street Meeting and the Rev. J. Pierpont). At this date he pub. his Poems & Hymns, including his anti-clavery and temperance poems and songs. In 1845 he became the paster of an Unitarian congregation at Troy, New York. This he vacated for mother at Mcdford, Massachusetts, in 1849. That he resigned in 1859. When over 70 years of ago he became Chaplain in the United States Army (1862), and was finally a Government clerk in the Treasury Department at Washington. He d. suddenly at Medford, Aug. 27, 1866. Pierpont's publications include Airs of Palestine, 1816, some school books, and his Poems & Hymns, 1840 and 1854. His hymns in C. U. include :-

Pierpont's talents as a hymn-writer, as in Pierpont's talents as a hymn-writer, as in other fields, were respectable rather than commanding, but so energetically employed as to make their mark. Thus, although he never wrote a single hymn that can be called a great lyric, yet he has attained to a prominent position in American hymnody. [F. M. B.]

Pierson, Arthur Tappan, p.p., was b. in New York city, March 6, 1887, and educated at Hamilton College. He entered the Presbyterian ministry in 1860, and was poster successively in Binghampton and in Waterford, New York, and Fort Street, Detroit: his last charge being the Bethany Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia. (Duffield's English Hymns, 1886, p. 576.) Dr. Pierson's hymns include :-

Once I was dead in sin. Fraise for Salvation.
 The Gospel of Thy grace. The Love of God in

3. To Thee, O God [Lord], we raise. Divine Bene-4. With harps and with viols there stand a great throng. The New Song.

Of these hymns, No. 3 is in Hys. and Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874, and the Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884; and Nos. 1, 2, 4, are in I. D. Sankey's Sacred S. and Solos. [J. J.]

Pilgrim, burdened with thy sin. G. [The Christian Pilgrim.] In the preface to the 1807 ed. of his work, The Village,

Crabbe says concerning Sir Eustone Grey:—
"In the story of Sir Eustone Grey an attempt is made to describe the wanderings of a mind first irritated by the consequences of error and misfortune, and afterwards soothed by a species of enthusiastic conversion, still keeping him insane; a task very difficult; and, if the presumption of the attempt may find perdon, it will not be refused to the failure of the poet."

The scene of this story is a madhouse, and the persons are a visitor, the physician, and the patient. Sir Eustace, the patient, gives his history in detail. He was the lord of the manor, had a wife, two children, and a friend; the wife is seduced by the friend; a duel in which the friend is killed; wife pines nway; both children die; is himself distracted; plagued by two friends; found peace at last in the Sun of Mercy; and gives a specimen of the preaching through which he was saved. This specimen is:—

"Pigrim! burdened with thy sin,
Come the way to Zlon's gate;
There, (Ill mercy speaks within,
Knock.—He knows the sinner's cry;
Weep.—He loves the mourner's tesu;
Watch—for saving gause is high;
Watch—for saving gause is high;
Watch—til heavenly light appears.

"Hark! it is the Bridegroom's voice,
'Welcome, riligtim! to thy rest."
Now within the gate rejuice,
Safe, and sealed, and bought, and blest:
Safe—form all the lures of vice;
Stated—by signs the chosen know;
Bought—by love and life the price;
Blest—the mighty debt to owe.

"Hely pilgrim! what for thee,
In a world like this remains!
From thy guarded breast shall flee
Fear and shame, and doubt, and pain:
Fear—the hope of heaven shall fly;
Shame—from glory's view retire;
Doubt—in certain rapture dis;
Pain—th endiess bliss expire."

These stanzas, when detached from their melancholy surroundings, form a somewhat spirited hymn, and as such they are in use in Great Britain and America.

Pirie, Alexander, was for some time a minister in connection with the Antiburgher Synod of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland. He was appointed in 1760 a teacher of the Philosophical Class in the Theological Seminary, New York city, but was suspended shortly after and expelled from the body. On joining the Burghers he returned to Scotland and became the minister of a congregation in Abernethy. In 1769 he joined the Independents, and was minister of a congregation at Newburgh, Fifeshire. He d. in 1804. In 1777 he pub. Psalms, or Hymns founded on some important Passages of Scripture, From this work two well-known hymns have come down to modern collections through the Sac. Songs and Hys. on V. Passages of Scripture for the New Relief Church, Campbell St., Glasgow, 1794. These are :-

Come, let us join in [our] songs of praise, To our succeeded Priest. Accession.

2. With Mary's love without her fear. Easter.

Pistor, Henricus. Little or nothing is known of the life of this author, to whom is attributed the grand hymn on St. John the Baptist, "Precursoris et Baptiste," which is given by Clichtoveus (Elecidat. 1516, f. 192b), and Trench in his Sac. Lat. Poetry, ed. 1874, p. 94, as well as by Daniel and others. Clichtoveus describes him as a Doctor of Theology in the University of Paris, and a Monk of the Abbey of St. Victor, and states that he took part in the Council of Constance (1414-1418), which would fix the time he lived to the end of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th centuries. Archbishop Trench says of him "that the writer" (of the poem mentioned above) "was an accomplished theologian is plain; and no less so that he was trained in the school, and formed upon the model, of Adem of St. Victor." In the Missol of St. Victor, pub. at Paris in 1529, a sequence on St. Sebastian, beginning "Athleta Sebastianus," is also ascribed to Pistor. [D. S. W.]

Plasmator hominis Deus. [Friday. Evening.] This hymn is probably of the 7th cent. Mone, No. 280, gives the text from a Ms. of the 9th cent. at Darmstadt, &c., and at i. p. 372, cites it as in an 8th cent. Ms. at Trier; giving it as his opinion that it is later than St. Gregory the Great. Daniel has the text at i., No. 54, with the title, "On the work of the Sixth Day [of the Creation]"; and in his notes at iv. p. 52, ranks it among hymns composed in the 7th or 8th cent., and cites it as in a 10th cent. Rheinau Ms. Among the British Museum MSS. it is found in three 11th cent. Hymneries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 24; Jul. A. vi. f. 30; Harl. 2961, f. 224b), an 11th cent. Breviary of the Spanish Church (Add. 30848, f. 78 b), &c. It is in a ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 237); in two Mss. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, Nos. 387, 414; and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Church (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at 1)urham (B. iii. 32, f. 9). Its universal use in mediaeval times was at Vespers on Friday. In the Roman Breviary of 1632 it is recust, and begins Heminis Superne Conditor. The original form is in the older Roman (Venice, 1478), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1643, and other Brevieries. Also in Wackernagel, i., No. 119; Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 56, and in G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Mois-siacensis, 1888, p. 33, from a 10th cent. ms. Plume, Mrs. N. D., a nom de plume of Mrs. Van Alstyne.

Plumptre, Edward Hayes, p.p., s. of Mr. E. H. Plumptre, was b. in London, Aug. 6, 1821, and educated at King's College, London, and University College, Oxford, graduating as a double first in 1844. He was for some time Fellow of Brasenese. On taking Holy Orders in 1846 he rapidly attained to a foremost position as a Theologian and Preacher. His appointments have been important and influential, and include that of Assistant Preacher at Lincoln's Inn; Select Preacher at Oxford; Professor of Pastoral Theology at King's College, London; Dean of Queen's, Oxford; Prebendary in St. Paul's Cathedral, London; Professor of Exegens of the New Testament in King's College, London; Boyle Lecturer: Grinfield Lecturer on the Septuagint, Oxford; Examiner in the Theological schools at Oxford; Member of the Old Testament Company for the Revision of the A. V. of the Holy Scriptures; Rector of Pluckley, 1869; Vicar of Bickley, Kent, 1873; and Dean of Wells, 1881. Dean Plumptre's literary productions have been very numerous and important, and embrace the classics, history, divinity, biblical criticism, biography, and poetry. The list as set forth in Crockford's Clerical Directory is very extensive. His poetical works include Lazarus, and Other Poems, 1864; Master and Scholar, 1866; Things New and Old, 1884; and translations of Sophocles, Æschylus, and Dante. As a writer of sacred poetry he ranks very high. His hymns are elegant in style, fervent in spirit, and broad in treatment. The subjects chosen are mainly those associated with the revived Church life of the present day, from the Processional at a Choral Festival to hospital work and the spiritual life in schools and colleges. The rhythm of his verse has a special attraction for musicians, its poetry for the cultured, and its stately simplicity for the devont and carnest-minded. The two which have attained to the most extensive use in G. Britain and America are "Rejoice, ye pure in heart," and "Thine arm, O Lord, in days of old." His tre. from the Latin (see Index), many of which were made for the Hymnary, 1871 and 1872, are very good and musical, but they have not been used in any way in proportion to their merits. His original proportion to their merits. hymns in C. U. include:—

1. Behold they gain the lenely height. The Transformation. Written for and first pub. in the S. P. C. K. Charck Hyz., 1871.

3. Far all Thy countiess bounties. National Hymn.

Written for the Jubilee of Queen Victoria, 1887, and set to music by C. W. Lavington. It was printed, together with the National Authem adapted for the Jubilee, in Good Words, 1887.

5. Lo, summer comes again! Harvest. Written in 1871 for use at the Harvest Festival in Pluckley Church, Kent, of which the author was then rector, and pub. In the same year in the Hymnary, No. 456.

4. March, march, enward soldiers true, Processional at Choral Festivals. Written in 1881 for the time of Costa's March of the Iracelities in the Oratorio of Ed., at the request of the Rev. Henry White, Chaplain of the of Costa's March of the Israelites in the Oratorio of Et., at the request of the Rev. Henry White, Chaplain of the Savoy, and first used in that Chapel. It was subsequently pub. in the Savoy Hymnary, N.D. [1870], in 4 st. of 4 l.; in a Choral Festival book at Peterborough, and in the S. P. C. K. Cherch Hym., 1871.

5. O Light, Whose beams illumine all. The Way, the Truth, and the Life. Written in May 1884, and pub. in his Lazarus, and Other Poens, 1884, as one of five Hymns for School and College. It passed into the 1888 Appendix to H. A. & M., and again into other collections.

6. O Lard of hasts, all heaven possessing. For Ethool College. Written in May, 1884, and pub. in his Lazarus and other Poens, 1884, in 5 st. of 6 l.

7. O praise the Lord our God. Processional Thankegiving Hymn. Written May 1864, and pub. in his Lazarus, and other Poens, 1884, in 4t. of 8 l. It is not most suitable hymn for Sunday school gatherings.

3. Rejodes, re pure in heart. Processional Thankegiving Hymn. Written May 1865, for the Peterborough Choral Festival of that year, and first used in Peterborough Choral Festival of that year, and first used in Peterborough Choral Festival of that year, and first used in Peterborough Cathedral. In the same year it was pub. with special music by Novello & Co; and again (without music) in the 2nd ed. of Lazarus, and Other Poens, 1865. It was included in the 1868 Appendix to H. & M. With the change in et. 1, 1, 3, of "Your orient banner wave on high." to "Your jestal banner wave on high." to "Your jestal banner wave on high." to "Your festal banner wave on high." It was included in the 2nd et. of Lazarus, and Other Po

10. Thy hand, O God, has guided. Church Defence. Included in the 1889 Supplemental Hysins to H. A. & M. The closing line of each stanza, "One Church, one Faith, one Lord," comes in with fine effect.

Dean Plumptre's Life of Bp. Ken, 1888, is an exhaustive and excellent work. The chapter on the bishop's three bymns is well written, but should be read with the article on the same subject in this Dictionary, p. 617, i. [J. J.]

Plunged in a gulph of dark despair. I. Watts. [Praise to Jesus, the Redeemer.] 1st pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1707, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "Praise to the Redecmer." In G. Whitefield's Hys. for Social Worship, &c., 1753, st. i.-iii., vi., viii., were given as No. 104. This form of the text was repeated by M. Madan in his Ps. & Hys., 1760, with the change in st. ii., l. 4, of "He ran" to "He came to our relief." Through frequent repetition this became the recognised form of the hymn in Church of England hymn-books. Other forms of the text, all beginning with the first stanze, are also in C. U. in G. Britain and America.

Plunket, William Conyngham, p.p. 4th Baron Plunket, eldest a, of John, 3rd Baron, was b. in Dublin, 26 August, 1828; educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1853; and took Holy Orders in 1857. He was Precentor of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, from 1860 to 1876, when he was elected Bishop of Meath. In 1884 he was translated to the Archdicesse of Dublin... His bymn "Our Lord Christ-halb rised" - - (Easter), was first pub. in the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873, in 4 st. of 7 l. It was written for that collection in 1873, to suit the tune "O Ursprung des Lebens," by T. Selle. So far as we are aware this is Lord Plunket's only contribution to hymnody. [G. A. C.]

Plymouth Brethren Hymnody. The sect popularly known as the Plymouth Brethren was in its earliest stage called The Brethren, because its members professed to meet solely on the ground that they were brethren in Christ. Eventually, however, the branch of it which met at Plymouth, Devon, chiefly from the position, learning, and labours of its members, acquired so great influence in the society as to give its name to the whole body, and it was thenceforth known as The Plymouth Brethren. In giving an account of the hymns and hymn-books of The Brethren, it is necessary to refer somewhat to the history of the sect. For the purpose of our article it will be convenient to divide thus :-Period I. From the commencement of the sent to the year 1848. Period II. From the year 1848 to 1889.

Period I.—Between the years 1828-33 a custom arose in Dublin, Bristol, Plymouth, and elsewhere for certain persons, irrespective of creed, to meet together for prayer, the joint study of the Scriptures, and mutual aid in spiritual matters generally. The principle on which they acted is thus put forth by one of their early associates, "the possession of the common life" (in Jesus Christ) and "that disciples should bear as Christ does with many errors of their brethren." At first the assemblies so formed did not in any way interfere with the worship of the members in the various churches and chapels to which they belonged; indeed their meetings were held at an early hour on Sunday morning so that they should not do so. But soon the separatist principle began to make itself manifest. With many, separation from religious communities was held to be the only means of promoting unity among Christians, and flushy Mr. Darby, an author of some repute, who at one time held an Irish curacy, gained so much ascendency as to bring the desired separation about, and their meetings have ever since been held as distinct from other religious denominations. They were united as a body and known under one name, The Plymouth Brethren, till the year 1848.

This period produced many hymn-writers who put forth a great number of hymns, some of which are very beautiful, and all of which, without doubt, helped either to form or to strengthen the Society. The principal hymn-writers during this period were the following:—Chapman, R. C.; Darby, J. N.; Deck, J. G.; Denny, Sir Edward, Bart.; Kelly, Thomas(?); Tregelles, S. Prideoux, LLD.; and Wigram, G. V.

The hymn-books put forward and used by

The hymu-books put forward and used by the Plymouth Brethren during this period were many. They include:—

(1) Hysper for the use of the Church of Christ, by R. C. Chapman, Minister of the Gospel, Barnstople. A New Edition, to which is added an Appendix selected from various sources by John Chapman. (First edition, 1937.) Reprinted 1852. London. The number of dymns written by R.-C. Chapman are in all 58. Those collected number 187, and use, as the title sets firth, by various authors, some of whom were Brethren, and some of other denominations. Amongst the Brethren, Darby, Deck, Denny, and Kelly are found.

(2) A Selection of Hypsus by Sir Edward Denny, Bart. London and Dublin. 1st ed. 1839. This book contains many hymns by the editor, at least 36 being written by himself. Chapman, Barby, Deck, Kelly, Tregelles, Wigram amongst the Brethren are also repre-

(3) Hymer for the Poor of the Flock. 1838, London.
Edited by G. V. Wigram. When compared with the foregoing this selection contains a special feature, namely, "Hymns arranged for Special Occasions," e.g. for "Baptism," "Christian Sabbath," "Evening," "Graces," "Introductory to Prayer," "Lord's Day," "Lord's Dayper," "Morning," "Lord's Supper," "Morning," "Parting," "For Trial and Solitude." The hymns in the body of this work are gathered from a variety of sources. Of Brethren hymn-witten, Deck and Kelly are strongly represented. Darby and Chapman also contribute. The editor wrote one. The Appendix contains 40 hymns, and of these Denny wrote over 20.

(4) Prolins and Hymen and Spiritual Songs. In Two Parts. Part I. "Intended specially for the united worship of the Children of God." Part ii. "Chieffy for Private Meditation." London, 1842. This compilation is the work of J. (i. Deck. Many writers contributed. From their own body Denny, Kelly, and Tregelles. Part i. has Hymns on Burial, Resurrection, and the Lord's Supper. Part ii. contains manylymus common to most hymn-books. Denny contributed. 15. Darby and the Editor are also represented.

Period II.—In 1845 a controversy began which ended in a division of the Plymouth Brethren. The Lord's Advent was ever a favourite theme with them, and it was a difference of opinion on this subject between two of their leaders which was the primary cause of the rupture. Mr. Darby promulgated the theory that our Lord's coming for His saints would be a secret coming, while His coming to judgment would be open and seen by all. Mr. Newton, a man of high attain-ments and who had taken Holy Orders, protested against these statements. Mr. Darby retaliated by accusing Mr. Newton (about two years later) with teaching heresy concerning the Humanity of our Lord in a pamphlet which the Brethren had circulated for ten years. Mr. Newton withdrew the pamphlet; but this did not satisfy Mr. Darby and his followers. They seeded from those who held with Mr. Newton, excommunicated them, and called upon the Brethren elsewhere to do the same. Mr. Darby, in this matter, met with the greatest opposition in Bristol, and from Mr. Müller (the founder of the Orphanage on Ashley Down), and those who met with him. They resolved not to judge Mr. Newton. On this the Darby party excommunicated the Müller party, and all those who held with them. This they did in 1848, and from that time the I'lymouth Brethren have been divided into two main sections: (1) The Plymouth or Exclusive Brethren. This section allows other Christians to meet with them on certain conditions, unless they belong to the Open Bretbren; these they rigidly exclude. (2) The Open or Bristol Bretbren, which admits to fellowship, as from the first, all who profess to be Christians.

This period has not been fruitful in the production of hymns. Neither section has brought forth any new hymn-writer of note, and but few hymn-books have been compiled, Besides those collections in use before the division of the Society the Plymouth or Exclusive section has put forth but one which is at all generally used, namely:—

A New Hymns and some Spiritual Songs, Selected, for the Little Mock, 1866. Revised 1881. London. This book was compiled by J. N. Parby. Previous to 1881 it contained 341 bymns, but at its revision an Appendiz was added containing 85 more. Many of the hymns in this book are Darby's own. There are also selections from Chapman, Deck, Kelly, Tregelies, and Wigram.

Besides the foregoing work the following books of poetry, which, though they exanot be called hymn-books pure and simple, yet contain many hymns, have been written by members of the Plymouth Brethren.

(1) Hymns and Poems by Sir Bloord Denny, Bart., 1848. It contains "Millennial Hymns," with an "Introduction"; "Miscellaneous Hymns"; "Miscellaneous Poems." 3rd ed. London: 1870. (2) Spiritual Sings by J. N. Barby. Dublin. Entered at Stationers' Hall. London. 1883.

The Open Brethren have put forth two hymn-books:-

(1) Hymns and Spiritual Songs for the Children of God. Alphabetically arranged. 8th ed. Stereotyped. London. 1871. This selection contains more than 400, which are far more general in character than those of the Exclusive section. They are gathered from all sources, Exclusive section. They are gathered from all sources, the Brethern being represented by Chapman, Barby, Deck, Kally, Tregelles, and Wignam. In the Index the names of the writers of the hymns are given, a peculiarity worthy of notice, as it is found in no other hymn-book of either section. The hymns are arranged under the following beads: "Hymns for Worship," "Scripture." "Reading and Prayer," "Private Use," "Masks," "Marriage," "Burinl," "Missions," "The Gospel." This book is used by the Open Pretrieve agentally.

(2) Hymns and Spirited Songs compiled in Bristol. Loudon and Bristol. 1870. This collection is the work of Messra, Miller and Craik, of Bristol, two of the London and Bristol. 1870. This collection is the work of Messra. Müller and Craik, of Bristol, two of the icaders amongst the Open Brethren. It is the most eathelle of all the books put forth by either section. It contains more than 600 hymns, which are arranged under the following heads:—"God," "The Lord Jesus Christ," "The Holy Spirit," "The Christian Life," "The Second Coming of Christ," "Christian Ordinances," "Special Occasions," "Gospel," Amongst the Brethren no new hymn-writers appear. Chapman, Deck, Denny, Kelly, and Tregelles are represented. This work is used chiefy in Bristol and its neighbourhood.

The hymn-books put forth by the Plymouth Brethren up to the year of the rupture contain hymns for "the Assembly of the Saints," i.e. the Brethren themselves met in worship. But the books put forth since the rupture in 1848 contain also a selection, though a smaller one, for the "unconverted," i.e. those who are not in full communion with themselves. In the books of the Exclusive Section these hymns are placed in an Appendix, as seen in Hymns for the Little Flock, 1881, whilst in those of the Open Section, where fuller arrangement is found, they are placed under the heading "Gospel," with its subdivisions "Prayer for Bleering," "Testimony," "Invitation," as in the Hymns and Spiritual Songs compiled in Bristol.

The principle on which this division is made will be seen from the following extracts from the Preface of the first of the Books just mentioned, which, as it is fairly applicable to all, we quote somewhat fully:

"Three things are needed for a hymn-book. A basis of truth and sound destrine; something at least of the Spirit of Poetry, though not poetry itself, which is objectionable as merely the spirit and imagination of man; and thirdly, the most difficult to find at all, that experimental acquaintance with truth in the affections which stables a person to make his hymn (if led of God to compose one) the vehicle in sustained thought and lan-guage of practical grace and truth which sets the soul in communion with Christ and rises even to the Father, and yet this in such nort that it is not mere individual experience which for assembly worship is out of place....
"Many authors may be comforted by knowing their hymns were constimes very nice, but not suited to an 'Assembly of Soints'; several have gone into the Appendix, not necessarily as interior but of a different character . . . Many hymns have been corrected on the principles referred to."

Few hymns placed in these sections of their books for general use are written by the Brethren themselves, whilst many by them are found amongst those for the use of "the Assembly of the Saints." In this latter class hymns containing Confession of Sin and Prayer for Pardon are conspicuous by their absence. The doctrine such hymns teach is held to be unnecessary for the children of God, consequently they are deemed unsuitable for Assembly Worship. Hymns to be used at the Lord's Supper, and at Holy Baptism are found in some numbers, as are also hymns concerning the coming of Christ to raise His saints, and the millennium. Hymns teaching the dreariness of this world and all belonging to it, the full assurance of faith, and the completeness of the Christian in Christ, are strongly represented. The efficacy alone of the Blood of Jesus for Salvation is the theme of many of their best hymns. [W. 8.]

Ποία τοῦ βίου τρυφή. St. John of Damascus. [Burial.] From the Greek Burial Office of Priests, in the Euckologion. Stichers Idiomela of great beauty, in which some of the stropbes are supposed to be spoken by the dead. It is given in Daniel, iii. p. 96. only tr. into English is Dr. Littledale's " With pain earth's joys are mingled," made for the People's H., 1867, No. 381, and transferred from thence to the Priest's Prayer Book, 1870. This is one of Dr. Littledale's best tre. from the Greek. He omits certain strophes of similar meaning, and the Theotokia (addresses to the B. V. M.). The original is also given in Bässler, 1858, No. 17, with a tr. in German. [Greek Hymnody, § xvii. 2.]

Pollio, Symphorianus, originally called Althiesser or Althiesser, was a native of Strassburg, and was for some time in clerical work at Rosheim, near Strassburg. In 1507 we find him as one of the priests attached to St. Stephen's church at Strassburg. He was thereafter at St. Martin's in Strassburg, and being very popular as a preacher was ap-pointed, in 1522, by the Chapter as interim preacher at the Cathedral. The Chapter hoped he would counteract the influence of Matthins Zell, but as he preached quite as evangelically as Zeil, he was soon sent back to St. Martin's. When, in 1524, he married his housekeeper, the Chapter tried to deprive him of his living, but by the help of the burgesses he continued in St. Martin's till the church had to be taken down in 1529. Thereafter he officiated as pastor of the church "Zu den guten Louten," cutside the city walls, and was still there at the Visitation of 1533. The date of his death is unknown (G. H. A. Bittelmeyer's Die evangelischen Kirchenliederdichter des Elsasses, Jena, 1855, p. 17; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxvi. 395, &c.). In the early Strassburg hymn-books there are paraphrases of the Lord's Prayer and of the Magnificat by Pollic. The latter is:-- in 4 et, of 10 l. The trs. are: (1) "My soul doth magnific the Lorde," by Bp. Coverdale, 1839 (Remains, 1846, p. 555). (2) "My saule dois magnific the Lord." In the Cute and Godite Ballates, ed. 1868, f. 12 [ed. 1868, гЈ. М.Т

Pollock, Thomas Benson, M.A., was b. in 1836, and graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, B.A. 1859, M.A. 1863, where he also gained the Vice-Chancellor's Prize for English Verse in 1855. Taking Hely Orders in 1861, he was Curate of St. Luke's, Leek, Staffordshire; St. Thomas's, Stamford Hill, London; and St. Alban's, Birmingham. Mr. Pollock is a most successful writer of metrical Litanies. His Metrical Litanies for Special Services and General Use, Mowbray, Oxford, 1870, and other compositions of the same kind contributed subsequently to various collections. have greatly enriched modern hymn-books. These are specially noticed under Litanies, Metrical, p. 677, i. To the 1889 Supplemental Hys. to H. A. & M. Mr. Pollock contributed two hymns, "We are soldiers of Christ, Who is mighty to save" (Soldiers of Christ), and "We have not known Thos as we ought" (Seeking God), but they are by no means equal to his Litanies in beauty and finish. $\{J, J, \}$

Πολυήρατε, κύδιμε. Synerius, Bp. of Ptolemats. [To Christ.] A hymn to Christ, being No. ix. of his ten hymns. The full Grock text is found to the Anth. Graeca Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 22, in 70 lines. From this Mr. Chatfield's tr., "To Thee, much loved, be honour paid," was made, and pub. in his Songs & Hymns, &c., 1876, p. 84, in 66 lines. A. Stevenson's tr. "Thee, desire of all the nations," was pub. in his Ten Hys. of Syncsius, &c., 1865. [Greek Hymnody, § v.] [J. J.]

Pont, Robert, son-in-law of John Knox, was the s. of John Pont, Culross, Perthshire. He was b. at Culross in 1524, entered the University of St. Andrew's in 1543, became, in 1562, minister of Dunblane; in 1563, Commissioner of Moray; in 1571, Provost of Trinity College, Edinburgh; and, in 1574, Joint Minister of St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh. He was one of the three who publicly protested at the Cross of Edinburgh against the Proelamation, on May 25, 1584, of the Acts of the Scottish Parliament against Presbyterianism. For this offence he was forced to flee the kingdom. After his return to St. Cuthbert's he was offered, in 1587, but refused, the Bishopric of Caithness. He d. May 8, 1606, and was buried in St. Cuthbert's Churchyard. Six Pealm Versions in the Scottish Pealter of 1564-65 are by him, viz., Pa. 57, 59, 76, Co, 81, 83. Their first lines are given under scottish Hymnody II., § 2. Being mostly in peculiar metros none were transferred to the Scottish Punter of 1650. In 1601 Pont was requested by the General Assembly to revise the Psalter of 1564-65, but never accomplished the work. It is probable he was also one of its original compilers. [J. M.]

Poor wanderer, return to the home of thy bliss. Margaret, Lady Cockburn-Campbell. [Institution.] Written at Exeter, Aug. 27, 1839, in 3 st. of 6 l., and entitled "To a Friend." It was subsequently pub. in Aug. 27, 1839, in 3 st. of 6 l., and entitled "To a Friend." It was subsequently pub. in lithograph from the author's ass. was included in Pt. ii. of J. G. Deck's Ps., Hys., & Spiritual Songs, with alterations, and thence into Walker's Cheltenham Ps. & Hys., 1855, and others. [J. J.]

Pope, Alexander, the poet, s. of a wholesale linen merchant in Lombard Street, London, was b. in Plough Court, Louibard Street, May 21, 1688. His father being a Roman Catholic, he was first placed under the charge of Father Taverner, who taught him the rudiments of Greek and Latin. Later he attended a school at Winchester, and then at Hyde Park Corner. When about twelve he retired with his parents to Binfield, in Windsor Forest, and from thenceforth his education was mainly in his own hands. His subsequent success as a writer and poet is a matter of history, and has been dealt with in detail by Dr. Johnson, in his Lives of the Poets, and by others. He d. May 30, 1744, and was buried in a vault in Twickenham Church, For distinct public use, so far as we are aware, Pope wrote no hymns. His "Messiah"; his "Universal Prayer"; and his "Vital Spork" (q.v.), have been made use of for congregational purposes, but as a Roman Catholic he had no object in writing a hymn in a language which, at that time, his Church would refuse to use. In modern hymn-books his name is identified with the following pieces:-

1. Father of all, in every age. Universal Prayer. The Lord's Prayer, This Prayer was pub. in 1738, as a conclusion to his Essay on Man, in 13 at. of 4 l. Warburton in his Advertisement of the 1748 ed. of the Essay, says :-

" Concerning the Universal Prayer which concludes the Kessy, it may be proper to observe that some pas-sages in the Essay having been unjustly suspected of a tendency towards Fate and Naturalism, the author comtendency towards fate and Naturalizm, the author com-posed that Frayer as the sum of all, to show that his system was founded in Free-will, and terminated in Piety: that the First Cause was as well the Lord and Governor as the Creator of the Universe; and that by submission to His will (the great principle enforced throughout the Esray) was not meant the suffering our-selves to be carried along with a blind determination; but a blinding scanning and confidence full of how serves to be carried along with a bind determination; but a religious sequiscence, and conditions full of hope and immortality. To give all this the greater weight and reality, the Poet chose for bia model The Lord's Prayer, which of all others best deserves the title prefixed to his Paraphrase."

The title here referred to is "The Universal Prayer, Dec Opt. Max," The hymn is found in C. U. in the following forms:—

(1.) Father of all in every age. This is an abbreviated form, and has been in use, especially in Unitarian hymn-books, from an sarry date.

(3.) Father of all, [and] Thou God of love. This centowas given in 6 st. of 4 l. in the 1815 ed. of Cotterill's Sci., No. 247, again in the 1815 ed., 141; in Stowell's Fr. & Hys., 1831, No. 172; and again in later collections.

(3.) Hot to this earth's centracted span. In Collyer's [All 1812, No. 232, the et of 41, and ethers.

(3.) Not to this earth's contracted span. In Collyer's Coll., 1812, No. 629, in 4 st. of 4 l., and others.

(3.) Teach me to feel another's woe. Also in Collyer's Coll., 1812, No. 630, in 4 st. of 4 l., and others.

(5.) Thou Great First Gause, least understood. Also in Collyer's Coll., 1812, No. 628, in 4 st. of 4 l., and later bymnals.

Kennedy, 1863, No. 1168.

2. Ye nymphs of Solyma! begin the song. Messiah. In No. 378 of the Spectator for Wednesday, May 14, 1712, Addison gave this poem with the introduction :-

Then follows the poem with the heading, "Messiah. A Sacred Eulogue, composed of several passages of Isaiah the Prophet. Written in imitation of Virgil's Poliso." It consists of 107 lines. When republished by Pope this heading was expanded into a paragraph as an "Advertisement." As a poem it is unknown to the hymn-books; but from it the following centos have passed into C. U.:-

(1.) As the Good Shephard bads his floory care. This was given in Collyer's Coll., 1812, No. 626, in 6 st. of 6 l., and has been repeated in later bymnals, but usually in an abridged form.

(3.) From Jesse's root, behald a branch arise. No. 624 in Collyer's Coll., 1812, in 5 st. of 4 l.; and again in on conyer a cost, 1012, in a st. or e 1; and again in instee hymnais.

(3.) Hark! a glad voice the lonely descrit cheers. No. 635 in Collect's Coll., 1812, in 4st. of 4 l.; in Bp. Reber's posthumous Hymna, dc., 1827, p. 108; and again'in later collections.

(5.) The Saviour comes! by ancient seem forestald. In Mercer's Ch. Ps. & H. Bk., 1864, and others.

It may be noted that 1.46 of The Messiah reads in the original "He wipes the teers for ever from our eyes." This was altered by Pope at the suggestion of Steele, made to Pope in a letter dated June 1, 1712, to "From every face He wipes off every tear." This latter is the poet's authorized reading, is given in his Works, and is found also in the book form reprints of the Spectator. [J. J.]

Pope, Richard Thomas Pembroke, M.A., cldest s. of Mr. Thomas Pope, of Cork, was b. at Cork, March 13, 1799, educated at Hyde Abbey, Winchester, and at Trinity Col-lege, Dublin (s.a. 1822); took Holy Orders in 1822; and d. at Kingstown, near Dublic, Feb. 7. 1859. His hymn "In trouble and in grief, O God [Lord]" (Peace in Affiction) was given anonymously in Carus Wilson's Friendly Visitor, June 1824, p. 72, in 4 st. of 41., and headed "A Hymn." This text is repeated in the Irish Church Hymnal, 1873, with st. ii. l. 4, "Spread fragrance when they're bruised," altered to "Perfuse the air when bruised;" and st. iv. l. 2, "In other times," do., altered to "At other times," do. This hymn is in several collections in G. Britain and America.

Popule meus quid feci tibi. [Good Friday. The Reproaches.] The Improperts or Representes, based on Jeremiah ii. and Micah vi. are in almost all Mediaeval Graduals and Missals. They are found in two MSS, of the 11th cent, in the British Museum (Add. 19768 f. 51 b; Harl. 4951 f. 207 b); an 11th cent. Ms. in the Bodleian (Liturg. Misc. 866 f. 20); and still survive in the modern Roman Missal (e.g. Mechlin, 1874, p. 165). In the Sorum use they found a place in the services on Good Friday, and were appointed to be sung during the prostrations (made before a veiled cross held by two of the higher clergy in front of the high altar), known by the name of " creeping to the cross." The elaborate rubrics and the text will be found in the Burntisland reprint of the Sarum Missal, cols. 827-330.

The text is partly in Latin and partly in Greek. In The text is party in Latin and party in Greek. In sender language it ests forth the retronstrances of our Blamed Lord with His ungrateful people, to whom He came, and they "received him not." The ramembrance of Egypt, the death of the first-hom, the over-throw in the Red Sea, the leading and protecting presence of the alliar of fire, the gift of manna, the living water that followed them, the expedicion of the Canasante, the mightleness of His love—these facts, with others, in their past history, are plaintively and sorrowfully applied to Himself, and their cruel gulls in refusing Him brought home to them. When sung in the Sistine Chapel, at Rome, to music adapted thereto by Palestrina, in 1860, the effect is deeply solamn. [See Grove's Dict. of Music, art. Improversa.]

the Church Monitor, Bristol, 1866, p. 56. 0 my people, tell to me. By G. Moultrie, in Recast as "O my people, O mine own," in Moultrie's Hy. and Lyrics, 1867, p. 81, and this was included, with alterations, in the People's H., 1867; the Hymnary, 1872; and Thring's Coll., 1882. Of the alterations made in the text the greatest are in at. iil. This reads:-

- In the Hymns and Lyrics:— " Holy, holy, boly God, Holy, Almighty, whem we land, Holy and Immortal King, Hear in mercy as we sing."
- (2) In the People's Hymnal:-" Holy God! O Holy Might!
 Holy, immortal, infinite!
 Victor o'er the Cross and grave,
 Save us, Lord, in mercy save."
- (3) In the Hymnary and Thring's Coll.:— "God of holiness and might! God Immortal, Infinite! Holy and Immortal King, Hear in mercy as we sing." A prose tr. of the Reproaches was given in the 1860 Appendix to the H. Noted, p. 137. In the 1863 and later eds., No. 151, an antiphon is added beginning with "We venerate Thy Cross." From this text a shortened form is included in the Altar Hymnal, 1884, p. 60. Canon Oakeley has tr. it in metre in his Lyra Liturgica, 1865, as "What, O my people, have I done to thee?" [J. M.]

Πόθεν ἄρξομαι θρηνείν. [Βοηθός καὶ σκεπαστής.]

Pott, Francis, M.A., was b. Dec. 29, 1832, and educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, B.A. 1854; M.A. 1857. Taking Holy Orders in 1856 he was curate of Bishopsworth, Gloucestershire, 1856-8; Ardingly, Berks, 1858-61; Ticehurst, Sussex, 1861-66; and Rector of Norhill, Ely, 1866. His

Hys. filled to the Order of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonics of the Church, According to the Vice of the Church of England, To which are added Hymns for Certain Local Festivals, was pub, in 1861, and reprinted from time to time with a few additions. Mr. Pott contributed trs. from the Latin and Syriac, and original hymns, including "Angel voices ever singing" (p. 68, ii.), and "Lift up your heads, eternal gates" (Ascension). These original hymns, together with his trs., have been received with much favour and are widely used. In several instances in the preceding pages of this Dictionary (and elsewhere in other works), several tra from the Latin, and other hymnological work, are attributed to Archdeacon Alfred Pott. We are authorized to state that this ascription of authorship is an error. [See Index of Authors and Translators.] [J. J.]

took Holy Orders. For many years he filled the Chair of Pulpit Eloquence and English Literature in the Foreign Missionary College of All Hallows, Dublin. He pub. The Spoken Word; or, The Art of Extemporary Preaching; Sacred Eloquence, or, The Theory and Practice of Preaching; and The Pastor and his People; together with several tales. He tr. the Vesper hymns in the Catholic Psalmist: contributed to the Holy Family Hymns, 1860; and pub. Legends, Lyrics, and Hymns, 1862. His most widely-known bymn is "Brightly gleams our banner" (q.v.). Several of his hymns and trs. are in use in Roman Catholic hymn-books for Missions and Schools. He d. at Dublin in 1873. [J. J.]

Pour out Thy spirit from on high. J. Montgomery. [For a Meeting of Clergy.] There are two copies of this hymn in the author's handwriting amongst the x. xss. On one it is stated that it was written on Janmary 23, 1833, for the Rev. J. Birchell, Rector of Newbury, Berks, who pub. a Sel. of Hys. in 1833. It was repeated in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 429, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 306. The most popular form of the hymn is " Lord, pour Thy Spirit from on high," This is in very ex-[J. J.] tensive use.

Powell, Thomas Edward, M.A., s. of David Powell, of Loughton, Essex, was b. at Hampstead, Middlesex, Aug. 22, 1823, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1845). Ordained in 1846, he was Curate of Cookham-Dean, near Maidenhead; and then Vicar of Bisham, 1848. He pub., in 1868, The Holy Feast, and subsequently his Hys., Anthems, &c., for Public Worship. To this collection he contributed the following hymns:—

1. Again upon the gladdened earth. Harvest.

2. Almighty Fount of love. (1864.) Confermation, 3. Around Thy throne, O God. All Saints. 4. Bow down Thine ear, Almighty Lord. (1864.)

19. Until Thou comest, Saviour, in Thy might. (1874.) Holy Communion.

Mr. Powell's Hymns, Anthems, &c., been privately printed as an Appendix H. Bk. for use in his parish of Bisham, Berks. The compilation was begun in 1855, and has gradually grown to 97 hymns, of which the above 19 are by the compiler. The dates given above are those of the composition of the respective hymns, D. Feb. 8, 1901. [J. J.]

Praecursor altus luminis. Venerable Beds. [St. John the Baptist.] The full text of this bymn is found in the collections of Cascander (Cologue, 1556; and Paris, 1616, p. 263); of Ellinger (Frankfurt-am-Main, 1578, p. 275); and of Thomasius (Rome, 1747, ii. p. 387). Also in the works of the Venerable Bede (Migne's Patrol., vol. 94). G. M. Dreves prints it in his Hymnarius Motsuacensis, 1888, p. 52, from a 10th cent. HS. Daniel, i., No. 180, gives only the first four lines. Tr. as:— 1. The great forevenmer of the morn. By J. M. Neale in the Hymnal N., 1864; and in M. A. & M., 1861 and 1875.

3. Hall, harbinger of morn. By C. S. Calverley in the Hymnary, 1872.

Praise God, Who in the holiest dwells, Miles Smyth and E. Churton. [Ps. ct.] This is the second version of Ps. cl. in Smyth's The Pealms of King David Para-phrased, &c., London, Garthweit, 1668. It is in 2 st. of 6 i. In Churton's Cleveland Psattor, 1854, on altered version of this was given and headed "Chiefly from Miles Smyth." passed thence into Kennedy, 1863, and other collections. [W. T. B.]

Praise Jehovah, bow before Him. W. Bartholomew. [Ps. zcviii.] Written in 1847, at Mendelssohn's request, for a sacred contata adapted to Mendelssohn's music to Lauda Syon, composed for a church festival at Liège, May, 1846. It is set for Solo, Quartet, and Chorus as follows; i., ii. C.; iii. S. with C.; iv., v. Q. with C.; vi. C.; vii., viii., ix. S.; then a C. followed by a final Q. and C. The popular form when in use as a hymn is st. i., ii., iv., v., vi., as in the New Cong., 1859, and several others. [G. A. C.] several others.

Praise, my soul, the King of heaven. H. F. Lyie. [Ps. clil.] This is one of his most successful paraphrases of the Psalms, and is more jubilant than is usually the case with his renderings. It was pub. in his Spirit of the Pealme, 1834, in 5 st. of 6 l., with st. iv. bracketed for omission if so desired. It has passed into numerous collections in most English-speaking countries. Usually st. iv. is omitted, and sometimes minor alterations are introduced. The principal change is that of the fifth line in each stanza from "Praise Him, Praise Him," to "Alleluia, Alleluia, as in H. A. & M. and several others; and the addition of a doxology, "Alleluis to the Father," as in Harland's Church Ps. and Hymnal, 1876. [J. J.]

Praise, O praise our God and King. Sir H. W. Baker. [Harvest.] This hymn is based upon Milton's version of Ps. exxxvi. ("Let us with a gladsome mind"), and was written for the lat ed. of H. A. & M., 1861. From H. A. & M. it has passed into numerous collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Praise the Lord, His glories show. H. F. Lyte. [Ps. cl.] Lyte's original version of Ps. cl., appeared in his Spirit of the Psalms, 1834, in 2 st. of 8 l., and his revised version in the enlarged ed. of the same work in 1886. The two texts may be distinguished by st. ii. 14. 1. 2 thus :-

1834, " Earth to beaven, and heaven to carth Tell his wonders, sing His worth, 1836. "Rarth, to heaven exalt the strain, Send it, heaven, to earth again."

Both texts are in C. U., but the first, as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; the H. Comp., 1876, and many others, is the more widely used of the two.

Praise the Lord Who reigns above. C. Wesley. [Ps. et.] Pub. in Ps. & Hys., 1743, in 4 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. viii. p. 262.) In 1760 M. Madan gave st. i., il. and iv. in his Pa. & Hys., as No. 83. This arrangement was repeated by A. M. Top-lady in his Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 307. From Toplady it passed into several collections with the name of Toplady as the author, as in Hat-field's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, No. 180. The form in 2 st. in the Islington Ps. & Hys. (ed. 1862, p. 95), which begins with the first line of the original, is considerably altered throughout. The full original text was given in the revised Wes. H. Bk., 1875, for the first

Praise the Lord, Whose mighty wonders. [Fs. czlviii.] This appeared in The Parent's Poetical Anthology, being a Selection of English Poems primarily designed to assist in forming the tastes and the sentiments of Young Readers, London, F. C. & J. Rivington, 1814. There is no editor's name on the title-page, nor appended to the Preface. On the title-page of the Brit. Mus. copy is written "Mrs. Richard Mant," i.e. the wife of Bp. Meat. On p. 27 there is :-

" Praise the Lord, &c. Ps. exiviit.

"Praise the Lord, Whose mighty wonders Earth, and air, and seas display; Him, Who high in tempests thousers, Him, Whom countless worlds obey; All ye works of God, adore Him, Him, Who made you by His word; Heaven, exalting about boffers Him; Earth, he concert, praise the Lord.

"In the reserve ables according."

Marin, in concert, praise the Lord.

"In the eastern skies ascending,
Praise Him, glorious orb of day;
Ocean, round the globe extending,
Praise Him o'er thy boundless way.
Pines, that crown the lofty mountains,
Bow, in sign of worship, bow;
All ye secret springs and fountains
Warble praises, as ye flow.

Bearts thro nature's drear domintons, Praise Him, where the wilds extend: Praise Him, birds, whose searing pinions Up to heaven's gate ascend. Man below, the lord of nature, Angel outres in realism shovs. Angel quires in realms above. Hymning, praise the great Creator, Praise the sternal Fount of Love."

In the S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1852, No. 64, the above text was given with the emission of 11. 4-8 of st. i., and the addition of four lines from C. Wesley's "Love divine, all love excelling," slightly altered as the conclusion of st, iii., thus making 3 st. of 8 l. This text has come down to modern hymnals, and is the one in C. U. The author of the original hymn has not been traced. [3, 3,]

Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore Him. [Ps. calvid.] This hymn is given in a four-paged tract which is found pasted at the end of some copies of the 1796 musical ed. of the Psalms, Hymns, and Anthens of the Foundling Hospital, London [see Kampthens, J.], and again also at the end of the edition of words only, pub. in 1801. When this sheet was printed, and when it was added to the musical ed. of 1796, and then to the copy of words only, 1801, is unknown. As the 1801 cd. is only a reprint of the words of the 1798 ed., it suggests that the sheet was added to copies of both editions at the same time, and that after the printing of the 1801 ed. The that after the printing of the 1801 ed. sheet has this title:-

"Hymns of Praise. For Foundling Apprentices Attending Divine Service to return Thanks."

and the contents are :-

"Father of mercles! deign to bear." By the Rev.
 Mr. Hewlett. Music by "Shield."
 "Again the day returns of holy rest." By J. Mason. Music by "Ebden."

Mason. Music by "Ebden."

3. "Soon will the evening star with silver ray." By J. Mason. Music by "Ebden."

Mason. Wisic by "Ebden."

"Praise the Lord, ye heav'ns adore Him." Music

To these are added the words of a Sanctus to be sung "Before the Communion Service."
The special hymn now in consideration is printed thus:—

HYDN FROM PRAIM CREVILL. HAYDN.

"Praise the Lord, ye heav'ns adore him; Praise him angels in the height: Sun and moon rejoice before him, Praise blm all ye sters and light.

"Praise the Lord, for he hath spoken; Worlds his mighty volce obey'd: Laws, which never shall be broken, For their guidance hath he made.

"Praise the Lord, for he is glorious; Never shall his promise fall; God half made his saints victorious; Sin and death shall not prevail.

" Praise the God of our salvation;
Hosts on high his power proclaim:
Heaven, and earth, and all creation,
Land and magnify his name."

The same text is again found in Ps. & Hynns for Magdalen Chapel, 1804; in the Foundling Coll. of 1809, and then in J. Kempthorne's Select Portions of Ps. & Hys., 1819. In the last ones slight changes are introduced, e.g. st. i. l. 7, "Laws which" to "Laws that"; and st. i. l. 8, "hath He," to "He has." This form of the text was repeated very extensively to 1853, when it appeared in the Cooke and Denton Church Hymnal, with the well-known stanza by E. Osler, from Hall's Mitre H. Bk., 1836:-

"Worship, bonor, glory, blessing,
Lord we offer unto Thee;
Young and old Thy praise expressing,
In glad homage bend the knee.
All the raints in neaven adore Thee,
We would bow before Thy throne;
As Thine angels serve before Thee,
So on earth Thy will be done."

The use of this hymn in all English-speaking countries, sometimes with the addition of Osler's stanza, and at other times without, is very extensive.

The question of the authorship of this hymn has been a matter of serious inquiry for some years, with the result that on the one hand it is attributed to John Kempthorns, and on the other to Bishop Mant, and both in error. The claim for John Kempthorne was made by D. Sedgwick; and this claim, we find from his MSS., was a pure guess on his part. Mr. Kempthorne's son (the Rev. R. Kempthorne, of Elton Rectory) said in the Guardian (Dec. 10, 1879) that it was not written by his father, and he has repeated the same to the writer of this article during the progress of this work. Kempthorne, in the Preface of the 2nd ed. of his Sel. Portions of Ps. & Hys., 1813, omits it from his list [see Esmptherns, J.]. It is clear therefore that it was not written by John Kempthorne. The ascription of authorship to Bp. Mant occurred through confounding the hymn "Praise the Lord Whose mighty wonders" (q.v.), which appeared in Mrs. Mant's Parent's Poetical [J. J.] Anthology, 1814, with this hymn.

Praise to God, immortal praise. Anna L. Barbauld, née Alkin. [Harvest.] This, the most popular and widely used both in Great Britain and America of Mrs. Barbauld's Hymns, first appeared in Dr. W. Enfield's Hys. for Public Worship, &c., Warrington, 1772, No. 38, in 9 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Praise to God in Prosperity and Adversity." In the following year it was repeated in Mrs. Berbauld's (then Miss Aikin) Poems, Lond., J. Johnson, 1778, p. 115, without title, but with Habakkuk iii. 17, 18, "Although the fig-tree shall not blossom," &c., quoted as a note. It is not found in many collections until 1812, when it was included by Dr. Collyer in his Coll., No. 689. From that date it gradually increased in use, sometimes in its complete form, but more frequently with abbreviations, extending to the omission of various stanzas, until in one or two cases it has been reduced to twelve lines only. The various centos, all beginning with the same first line, are too numerous to analyse, save the more important and such as have additions mode important and such as nave additions made thereto by others. These are:—

1. In S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1862, No. 172, this cento is in 4 st. of 6 l., the first three of which are compiled, with alterations, from the original text, and the last "Peace, prosperity and health," from another source.

2. In Morrell and How's Ps. & Hys., 1854: the same three stanzas as above, and a new fourth stanza by Bishop How of S !. This text is repeated in Church Hymns, 1871, No. 280, with the last stanza by Bishop How 1871. No. 280, with the last stanza by Bishop How reduced to 6 lines.

3. In the New Mitre Hypered, 1875, from the original Mitre H. Bk. of 1836, with a doxology.

4. In Thring's Coll., 1882, No. 408, the cento is composed of 4 st. of 5, 1, of which stanzas I., it. are from the S. P. C. K. Hymne, 1852, altered; st. lli. is the new stanza first given in the S. P. C. K. as above, and st. Iv. a doxology.

Other centos may be traced out by consulting the original text in Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 33, or Lord Solborne's Book of Praise, 1862 and 1867, pp. 289-290. In addition to these centos, beginning with the original first line, there are also the following in C. U.:-

5. Fraise to God, unceasing praise. This, in Francis Pott's Hysnas, &c., 1861, is the S. P. C. K. Hysnat text as above, with an attention of the opening line. d. Fraise to God, exceeding praise. This, in T. Darling's Hys., &c., 1887, is from the original with attentions by Mr. Darling.
7. Lord, should rising whirlwinds tear. This, in the Preeb. Ps. & Hys. for the Worship of God, Richmond, U.S.A., 1367, No. 431, is composed of st. lit.—vi. elightly shored.

Most of the foregoing arrangements of this hymn are repeated in other collections than those named, and their use, taken together, is extensive. The text rendered into Latin by R. Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, and beginning "Laus sit Domino sine fine," is a cento of 3 st. of 8 l., compiled from the original.

Praise to God, who reigns above. R. M. Benson. [8t. Michael and All Angels.] Contributed to H. A. & M., and after curtailment and alterations, was pub. therein in 1861. In the revised ed., 1875, the original text (still abbreviated) was restored, with the exception of two minor changes. These facts account for the two texts in H. A. & M. of 1861 and 1875. The line in st. vi., "Thrilling through those Orders nine," refers to the (1) Seraphim; (2) Cherubim; (3) Thrones; (4) Dominions; (5) Princes; (6) Powers; (7) Might; (8) Archangel; and (9) Angel hosts, named in st. ii. and iii. In the American Church Pastorals, Boston, 1864, st. ii., iv., vii. of the 1861 text are given as:—"Scraphim His preises sing."

Praise to the Holiest in the height, Card. J. H. Nowman. [Praise.] Written in 1865, and first published in the author's Verses on Various Occasions, in 1868. It forms part of a poem of some length, entitled The Dream of Gerontius. This Dream describes the journey of a disembodied soul from the body to its reception in Purgatory. Various hymns are introduced throughout the poem, and this is given as being sung by the "Fifth Choir of Angelicals" as the disembodied soul is conducted into the presence chamber of Emmanuel previous to passing forward into Purgatory. In 1868 it was transferred to the Appendix to H. A. & M., the only change being the repetition of the first stanza at the close. From H. A. & M., it has passed into a large number of hymn-books. [J, J]

Praise to Thee, Thou Great Creator. [Praise.] This hymn is commonly ascribed to J. Fawcett, but was only in part composed by him. In 1782 he pub. his Hys. adapted to the circumstances of Public Wornhip, &c. In this vol. No. 56 is "Lo! the bright the rosy morning," in 6 st. of 8 l., on Spring, the last stanza of which begins, "Praise to Thee, Thou great Creator." In the Lewin's Mead Bristol book (Unitarian) of 1806 this stanza was given as a separate hymn. Then, in the Excter Unitarian Coll. of Ps. & Hys. for Social and Private Worship, 1812, appeared the hymn as found in modern collections, as follows :-

Praise to Thee, Thou great Creator, Praise be Thine from every tonguo; Join, my soul, with every creature, Join the universal song. Father, Source of all compass Pure, unbounded grace is Thine, Hail the God of our Salvation, Praise Him for His love divine. " For ten thousand blessings given, For the house of fixture foy.
Sound His praise through earth and beaven,
Sound Jebovah's praise on high:
Jogfully on earth addre Min.
Till in heaven our song we raise;
There, enraptured, fall before Him.
Lost in wonder, love, and praise."

The portions of these stanzas which are printed in ordinary type are the concluding stanza of J. Fawcett's hymn divided into two | parts: whilst the lines in italics are mainly from C. Wesley's well-known hymn, "Love divine, all loves excelling" (q. v.), 1747, as the following comparison will show:—

C. Wesley, 1747. Exeter Coll, 1812. " Jesu, Thou art all com- " Father, Source of all compassion, Pure, unbounded love passion, Pare, unbounded grace Thou art ; is Thine Visit us with Thy sal-Hall the God of our Salvation. vation, Enter every trambling Praise Him for His love beart. divine.

"Changed from glory into "Joyfully on earth adore Him, Till in heaven our glory, Tili in beaven we take our place, Till we cast our crowns before Thee, song we raise; There, enraptured, fall before Him, Loss in wonder, love, and praise." Lost in wonder, love, and praise."

The cento in the above form of 4 st. is in numerous hymn-books in G. Britain, and in a few also elsewhere. In America it is sometimes found with an additional stanza;—

" Praise to God, the great Creator, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, Praise Him, every living creature, Earth and heaven's united bost."

In the Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884, this dexology is devetailed between at. iii. and v. whilst in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, it is given its legitimate position as the close of the hymn. Taken as a whole the cento is of more than average merit. [W. R. S.]

Praise waits for Thee in Zion, Lord. [Ps. lxv.] This is the version of the 65th Pa. in the Scottish Pealter, 1650. It is in C. U. in its full form, in an abbreviated form, and re-written as "Before Thee, Lord, a people waits," as in the Presb. Hymnal, Philodelphia, Praise ye Jehovah, praise the Lord most holy. Lady Cockburn-Campbell. [Ps. exlix.] Written at Exeter, Dec. 24, 25, and 27, 1838, and subsequently printed in lithograph from the writer's MSS., together with 31 additional hymns. It was first pub. in J. G. Deck's Ps., Hys., and Spiritual Songs, 1842, Pt. i., No. 191, in 4 st. of 4 l. This was repeated in Dr. Walker's Ps. & Hys., 1855, with the signature "M. C. C.," and subsequently in a large number of hymn-books. Orig. text in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872.

[Ps. czluiii.] Written for the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 200, in 9 st. of 4 l. In the author's Hymes, Verses, and Chants, 1876, it is revised and extended to 10 st. Mr. Rawson was somewhat indebted to Watts's paraphrase of the same Paslm, "Praise ye the Lord with toyful togget of the control of the same Paslm," I want to the control of the joyful tongue" (q.v.), as seen in Watts's st. ii. and Rawson's st. i. :—

Watte, " Gabriel, and all th' immortal choir That fill the realms above, Sing; for He formed you of His fire, And feeds you with His love."

"Praise ye the Lord, immortal chair In heavenly heights above, With herp and voice and souls of fire, Burning with perfect love." Rawson, 1653.

the lines which we have quoted. The 1858 text is in extensive use. [J. J.]

Praise ye the Lord; 'tis good to raise.

I. Watts. [Ps. calvii.] 1st pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, p. 385, in 8 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Divine Nature, Providence, and Grace." It was included by J. Wesley in the let ed of his Ps. 4. Hus wildlighted in Charles. 1st ed. of his Ps. & Hys., published in Charlestown, 1786-37, p. 10, with slight variations, the omission of st. ii., and the addition of Ken's doxology, "Praise God," &c. Further alterations were made by Wesley on adapting it for the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 216, and these latter readings are still retained in all collections of the Methodist bodies. The hymn in its original and altered forms is in extensive use. Orig. text in Watts's Psalms, late editions; Wesley's 1st reading in the reprint of 1736-37 Coll., Lond., 1882; and Wesley's 1st reading in the reprint of 1736-37 Coll., Lond., 1882; and Wesley's 1st reading in the reprint of 1736-37 Coll., Lond., 1882; and Wesley 1st reading in the results of the results ley's final reading in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875. [J. J.]

Praise ye the Lord with joyful tongue. I. Watte. [Ps. exlviti.] Pub. in his Hore Lyrice, 1706, in 14 st. of 4 l., and headed "The Universal Hallelujah." In Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872, st. il.-iv., vii., vili., and xiii. are given as :-

" Praise ye the Lord | immortal choirs, That fill the realms above;" these lines being altered from Watta's --

" Gabriel and all th' immortal choir That fill the realms above."

Praises to Him Who built the hills. H. Bonar. [Praise of the Trinity.] Pub. in his Hye. of Faith and Hope, 1861, in 7 st of 41., and entitled "Praise." It had previously appeared in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, No. 469. It is also in the American Bapt. Service of Song, Boston, 1871, in 5 st., beginning with st. iii., "Praises to Him Whose love has given." In the Hymnary, 1872, it is again altered as "All praise to Him Who built the hills," and ia appointed for Septuagesima. [J. J.]

Prätorius, Benjamin, s. of Andress Prätorius, pastor of Obergreisslau near Weissenfels in Saxony, was b. at Obergreisslau, January 1, 1636. In 1637 his father was ap-pointed postor at Gross-Lissa near Delitzsch, in Saxony. Benjamin became a student of theology, and graduated M.A., probably at Leipzig. In the entry of his marriage in the registers of Gross-Lissa, for 1657, he is described as "regularly ordained substitute and future successor of this parish"; and he is never described in the registers except as Pastor-substitute. His ninth child was b. in 1671, and on Jan. 8, 1675, his son Andreas Beujamin, on acting as godfather, is described as "surviving son" of M. Benjamin Pritorius. It is probable that he d. some time in 1674, but as the register of deaths of this period is lost, we are unable to fix the exact date (K. Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, р. 178; мя. from Pastor Mochius of Gross-Liesa, &c.).

1853. In heavenly heights above,
With harp and voice and souls of fire,
Borning with perfect love."

The resemblance throughout the rest of the hymn is still slight; but not so marked as in

"poëta Caes. laur. coronatus." His hymns appeared in his (1) Jaschizendes Libanon, Leipzig, 1659, and (2) Spiciends Myrten-Aus, Leipzig, 1654. In the preface to the latter he signs himself as "C. P. Caes, and Diener am "Gross-Lissa, Dec. 24, 1663." The only hymn by him tr. into English is:—

(r. into English is:—Sei gotwu his an das Ende. The Researd of the Rudhysi. In 1659, as above, No. 64, p. 157, in 9 st. of 8 i., and founded on Rev. ii. 10. In full in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 339. It is also often found as "Sei getreu deinent Leiden," as in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 149. This is from Lupplus's G. B., Wesel, 1692, p. 22, where it is in 7 st. (iv., ii., iii., v., ix., i. and a new st. which begins, "So wiohlen, so will ich leiden"), and is erroneously secribed to J. C. Schade. The original form

Pratorius, Johann, was b. at Copenhagen, Oct. 20, 1738. He was educated in the training schools of the Moraviaus, and after 1761 held various positions in their schools and communities. In 1772 he was appointed preacher to the new community at Christiansfeld, in the north of Schleswig, and d. there, Dec. 12, 1782 (Hist. Nachricht to the Brilder G. B., 1778, ed. 1851, p. 224). In the Brilder G. B., 1778, two hymne and part of a third are ascribed to him. The last is noted under 0 susses Sectenweids, p. 487, ii. [J. M.]

Pray, Lewis Glover, was b. at Quincy, Massachusetts, Aug. 15, 1793. Removing to Boston in 1808, he entered into business there in 1815, and retired therefrom in 1838. He was for some time a member of the City Government of Boston, of the Board of Education, and of the State Legislature. From an early date he was associated with Sunday schools, and was for 34 years superintendent of the S. School of the Twelfth Congregational Society, Boston. In 1833 he pub. a Sunday School H. Bk., the first with music ever compiled for American Unitarian S. schools. This was enlarged in 1814 as the Sunday School Hymn and Service Book. He also pub. a History of Sunday Schools, 1847; a Christian Catechism, 1829; and other works. His hymns and poems were collected and pub. in 1862, as The Sylphides School, and a second volume of a like kind appeared in 1873, as Autumn Leaves. Most of his hymns appeared in his collections of 1893 and 1844. Putnam (to whom we are indebted for these details) gives in his Singers and Songs, &c., 1874, p. 81, four pieces from his volume of 1862, and two from that of 1873. One of these, "When God upheaved the pillared earth" (Silent Work) was repeated in the American Hymns of the Ages, 3rd series, 1864. [J, J]

Prayer Book. Hymns based on various portions of the Book of Common Prayer, and metrical paraphrases of other portions of the same book are somewhat numerous. In this article we purpose pointing out those portions of the Prayer Book which have been treated in this manner, and to indicate where these metrical versions may be found. Observing the order of the Services we have the following results :—

ntiv. Collects. Callects in verse have been on the whole failures. The attempts which have been on the whole failures. The attempts which have been made are of two kinds: the first, versification of the Collects as they stund, and the second, an elaboration of the leading thought therein contained. The metrical renderings of Josiah Conder (q.v.), a Nonconformist, are a good instance of the former; and those by Samuel Rickards (q.v.) of the latter. In addition to those renderings which are specially annotated in this Dicsionary, and are to be found through the Index of contain versions of varying merit:—

The whole Prayer Book was rendered into Latin Verse by Randolph Gilpin, as :-

Liturgica Sacra; curru Theabitus, Zeil inculpabilis vehiculo deportata et vid devotionis Regid deducia a Hand. Gilpin Sacerd. vel, Opsonia Spiritualibus omnibus verè Christianis citam pueris degustanda. Anno Dom. 1657.

Another work which deals with every portion of the Prayer Book from the "Sentences" to "The Fifth of November," is :-

A Companion to the Book of Common Prayer, Being a Compilation of Paulous and Hymne on the Collects, Rottler, Cospet; and on the Fasts, Pestivals, and Rites of the United Church of England and Ireland, London: Smith, Elder & Co. 1832.

This work was compiled by a lady, and contains about 400 hymns. [J, J,]

Prayer is the breath of God in man. B. Beddome. [Prayer.] This appeared in Robert Hall's posthumous ed. of Beddome's Hymns, &c., 1817, No. 405, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Importance of Prayer." It was added to the 27th ed. of Rippon's Sel., 1827, No. 353 (Pt. i.), and from thence has passed into several collections, sometimes dated 1787 (Rippon's 1st ed.) in error, and at other times with the opening line changed to "Prayer is the Spirit of our God." The hymn "When God inclines the heart to pray," in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, is composed of st. iv., v. [J. J.] of the original.

Prayer is the soul's sincere desire. J. Montgomery. [Prayer.] This hymn was written in 1818, at the request of the Rev. E. Bickersteth, for his Treatise on Prayer. It was first printed in 1818, together with three other hymns by Montgomery on Prayer ("Thou, God, art a consuming fire," "Lord, teach us how to pray aright," and "What shall we ask of God in prayer?"), on a broadsheet, for use in the Sunday Schools of Sheffield (Wincobank Hall Library). In 1819 it was published simultaneously in Bickersteth's Treatise on Prayer and the 8th ed. of Cotterill's Sel., No. 278. Cotterill's text is that of the broadsheet, whilst Bickerstoth's is slightly different, as in et. v. l. 4, "Andery 'Behold," &c., changed to "And say 'Behold," &c., and st. vi., which reads in each : -

Cotterill, "In prayer on earth the saints are one, In word, and deed, and mind; When with the Father and His Son Sweet fellowship they find," Bickersteth. "The sainte in prayer appear at one, In word, and deed, and mind, WЬ en, with the Father, and the Sou. Their fellowship they find."

In his Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 480, Montgomery repeated the text as in Bickersteth, with the change in st. vii. 1. 4 of "For sinners intercedes," into "For mourners intercedes." In his private copy of the Christian Psalmiet Montgomery marked st. iv. and v. to be transposed in case of a reprint, and this was carried into effect in his Original Hus., 1853, No. 62. The altered line, st. vii. l. 4, is also restored to read " For sinners intercedes." In addition to the extensive use of the hymn in its full form, it is also abbreviated. Sometimes the abbreviated texts begin with the first stanza, and at other times with " Prayer is the Christian's vital breath," or with "Prayer is the contrite sinner's voice."

Precious Bible! what a treasure. J. Neucton. [Holy Scriptures.] Pub. in his Twenty Six Letters, &c. By Omicron, 1774, in 6 st. of 6 l., and headed, "The Word of God more precious than Gold." It was repeated in B. Congarda, C.P. peated in R. Conyers's Coll., 1774, No. 276, and again in the Olney Hymne, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 63. It is found in a few modern hymn-

Precious promise God hath given. N. Niles. [The Divine Guide.] Concerning this hymn and its writer, S. W. Duffield says in his English Hymns, 1886, p. 461 :-

"This well-known 'Moody and Sankey' hymn was written by Mr. Nathaniel Niles, a resident of Morristown, New Jersey, and, at that time, a lawyer in New York City. Mr. Niles was born at South Mingston, Rhode Island, September 15th, 1835. He composed these verses on the margin of a newspaper in the railway car while on his way to business."

The hymn was pub in The Episcopalian; and again in P. Bliss's Gospel Songs, 1874, with music by Bliss. The text and music in L D. Sankey's Sacred S. and Soloe, are from the Gospel Songs.

Preis, Lob, Ehr, Ruhm, Dank, Kraft und Macht. [Glory to the Lamb.] In the Getstreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 591. in 7 st. of 6 l., repeated in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1868, No. 1928. It is tr. as, "Thankagiving, honour, praise and might," as No. 628 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, and No. 653 in the ed. of 1886, [J. M.]

Preiswerk, Samuel, s. of Alexander Preiswerk, pestor at Rümlingen, in the canton of Resci, was b. at Rümlingen, Sept. 19, 1799. After studying at the Universities of Basel, Tübingen, and Erlangen, he was for some time curate in charge at Benken, in the canton of Basel. In 1824 he was appointed preacher at the Basel Orphanage, and in 1829 tutor of Hobrew at the Basel mission house. In 1830 he was chosen as pastor of Muttenz, near Basel, but on the outbreak of the Revolution of 1882 had to leave. After being from 1834 to 1837 professor of Old Testament Exegesis and Oriental languages in the Evangelical Theological Institution at Geneva, he returned to Basel, where he was instituted, in 1848, as paster of St. Leonard's church, and in 1859 as antistes, or highest dignitary in the Cathedral. He d. at Basel, Jan. 13, 1871 (O. Kraus, 1879, p. 400; Allg. Deutsche Biog. xxvi, 552, &c.).

Prejawerk was a distinguished preacher. He was one of the editors of the Basel G. B., 1864. His hymne were written at various times, generally to be used at Misslor and other meetings in which he was to take part. Sixteen were included in a collection cdited by two of his friends and pub. at Basel, 1844, as the Evangelistic Lieder Eraus (211 hymne old and new). Nine of his hymne are in Knapp's En. L. S., ed. 1860. The only one ir. into English is:—

Bas int der Gemeine Stärkes. Missions. In 1844, as above, No. 98, p. 124, in 5 st. of 4 l. Included in Knapp's Rv. L. S., 1856, No. 1160 (1855, No. 1200). Prentiss, Elizabeth, née Payson, youngest daughter of Dr. Edward Payson, was b. at Portland, Maine, Oct. 26, 1818; married to George Lewis Prentiss, D.D., then at Bedford, Massachusetts, April, 1845; and d. at Dorset, Vermont, Aug. 13, 1878. Her Life and Letters by her husband appeared some time after. Dr. Prentiss removed from Bedford to New York in 1857, and was appointed Professor of Pastoral Theology at Union Seminary, New York, 1873. Mrs. Prentiss's works include The Flower of the Family; Stepping Heavenward, 1869; and Religious Poems, 1873. Of her hymns the two following are most widely known:-

1. As on a vast eternal shore. Incompared tributed to Schaff's Carist in Song, 1869.

3. More laws to Thee, O Christ. Bore Love to Christ desired. Written in 1869, and first printed on a fly-sheet; then in Hatfield's Church H. Rk., N. Y., 1872.

Presbyterian Hymnody, English. Presbyterianism in England presents in its history four distinct and sharply defined periods, and in all of these it has been directly associated with English hymnody.

i. It was the form of religion "as by law established" in England from 1647 to 1652, a period of five years. It was originally intended to institute a Synod in each county, and a General Assembly for the whole king-dom. The usurpation of Cromwell, however, and the interference of the army in ecclesiestical as well as in civil affairs, prevented the execution of this design, and it was only in London and Loncashire that Synods were formed. In Lancashire there were nine Presbyteries, and several must have been formed in the neighbouring counties. Presbyteries of Manchester and Newcastle-on-Type were established in 1646 and 1648, under the ordinance of Parliament; and the first meeting of the Synod of Lancashire was held in 1649.

The Metrical Psalme, which were in use in the Presbyterian Churches during this period were those of Francis Rous (q.v.), Speaker of the House of Commons, and one of the lay deputies to the Westminster Assembly. [See Pealtors, English, & XI.]

ii. The overthrow of Presbyterianism was followed by a general decline. Having ceased to meet in Presbytery, many of the ministers, in the face of the Calvinism of the Westminster standards, became tinged with Arianism which ultimately developed into Sociaianism. A considerable number of congregations in various parts of the country, especially in the north, adhered to the doctrine formulated in those documents; others became Congregationalists; but a considerable number also were influenced by their Arian pastors. Thus in the course of 150 years the once rigidly orthodex Church became openly Unitarian.

During this period, the Scottish Psalter of 1650 was in use amongst the congregations

iii. In 1836 a new era dawned. A convention of ministers and elders of the remaining orthodox Presbyterians was held at Manchester, when they agreed to form themselves into a Synod, in accordance with the recommendation of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and styled the same "The Presbyterian Church in England." For forty years its progress was rapid and encouraging. The Home Mission Committee succeeded in establishing preaching stations in many of the leading towns and cities, especially in Liverpool, Newcastle, Manchester, and London, which became self-supporting. Great activity was also shown in Poreign Mission work, especially in China and India.

For a few years the reconstructed body used the Paulter of 1650 as before; but in 1847 a committee was appointed to prepare a hymn-book for its use, which was pub as Paraphrases & Hya., &c., 1857. In 1867 the late Rev. Dr. Hamilton, of Regent Square Church, Loudon, laid upon the table of the Synod Psalms and Hymns for Divine Worship. This book consisted of 521 hymns and versions of Psalms, together with paraphrases of Scripture. It was carefully edited, and set to music of a high order, the latter being edited by Dr. Rimbault. It was accompanied by a Freface setting forth its scope and design, and embodying an explanation of its contents. As a hymnal it soon took a foremost position, and was almost universally adopted by the congregations of the body in England, and also by many congregations of Presbyterians in the British Colonies, especially in Australia, New Zealand, and at the Cape.

iv. In 1876 a great impotus was given to Presbyterianism in England by the union which then took place between the Presbyterian Church in England, and nearly 100 congregations belonging to the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland, located throughout England, and many of which date their origin from the 18th century. This united body is now known as the "Presbyterian Church of England."

At the Union in 1876 the United Presbyterian section continued to use the hymnal which had been recently introduced by the Mother Church in Scotland-The Presbyterian Hymnal. [See Scottish Hymnoly], and the Presbyterian Church in England congregations, mainly, the Pealms and Hymns for Divine Worship of 1867. A feeling, however, arose that the time had come when a new hymnal, enriched with the fruits of more recent hymnody, should be prepared. A committee was accordingly appointed by the Synod of 1980, with instructions to consider what should be done with a view not only to enrich the materials for the service of song in the sanctuary, but to bring the congregations of the Church, as far as possible, into unison in | the matter. Under the convenership of the Rev. W. Rigby Murray, Brunswick Street Church, Manchester, that committee produced in 1982 the present hymnal of the "Presbyterian Church of England," Church Praise. (Lond., Nisbet & Co.). It contains 535 hymns and 19 dexelogies, arranged in 15 sections, as i. "The Holy Trinity"; ii. "The Lord Jesus Christ"; iii. "The Holy Spirit"; iv. "The Gospel," &c. In the text of the hymns the originals have been followed in every instance except where a divergence seemed to exist in doctrine from that of the Presbyterian Church. The section for the young forms a prominent feature, 63 hymns being supplied for the purpose of adapting the collection for Sunday Schools and Children's Services. The music has been revised by Dr. E. J. Hopkins, and is of a high order. The expression marks throughout the collection are by the Rev. W. Rigby Murray.

v. Great progress has been made in Pestmody in the Presbyterian Church of England within the past twenty years. The use of instrumental music, strictly forbidden till 1870, has become general. The practice of chanting and the use of anthems in public worship, are also spreading rapidly. Sir Herbert Oakeley's Bible Pealter is in use in a considerable number of congregations; and the Rev. W. Rigby Murray (Editor of Church Praise, and School Praise,) has published (1886) The Revised Psalier, being the first attempt to adapt the Revised Version of the Holy Sariptures to chaut music.

vi. The only hymn-writer of note belonging to the Presbyterian Church of England is the late J. D. Burus, M.A., sometime minister at Hampetead, who died in 1864. [See Buras, [W. R. M.] J. d. í Prichard, Vicard, M.A., younger brother of Rhys Prichard, was an eminent Welsh poet and the author of the well-known book called Cansoyll y Cymry. He was b. at Llanymddyfri, Carmurthenshire, about 1579. His father was the owner of large property in the neighbourhood. He was educated at Jesus College, Oxford, where he took his degree in June, 1602, having been previously ordained Priest on the 25th of April in that year by John, Suffragan Bishop of Colchester. In the same year he was presented to the Vicarage of Liandingat, his native parish, in which the town of Llandovery is situated, and whence he was called Vicar of Llandovery. As a preacher he was one of the first of his day, and such was his popularity that when he came to keep residence at St. David's, of which Cathedral he was a Prebendary, he was obliged to keep a moveable pulpit, which was placed in the churchyard, the Cathedral being too small for his congregations. Perceiving the people to be very ignorant, and also much addicted to singing, he turned the substance of his sermons into verse which be gave to his parishioners, and thus originated most of those hymns which had so great an influence over his countrymen. He d. at Llandovery in 1644. When the pious Bishop Bul), who was so charmed with Prichard's character and the unspeakable good done in Wales by his in a rude fashion; more, apparently, as an

Primers and Offices for the Laity. i. Introduction. - 1. The term Primer, in its ritual sense, designates a series of devo-tional books for the laity, marked by certain general characteristics. The word is found thus as early as Piers Plongamen (before 1960). The earliest known copy is a Ms. of the end of the 14th cent. The earliest printed Primer, according to the Sarum Use, is of the vear 1494. Its contents are :--

(1) The Kalendar. (2) Sundry Frayers. (3) Matyns of our lady, with payme and the boures, the hourse of the passyon of our lords, and of the compassyon of our lady. (4) De Profundis for all Crysten soules. (5) Sundry prayers. (6) The fifteen hourse of the passyon. (7) Frayers to the Saints. (8) The seven pealmen, fifteen paalmes with the lettange and suffrages. (9) Placatio, dirige and commendacyon. (10) Psalmes of the passyon. (11) The fifteen Oos in Englysche. (12) Sundry prayers. prayere.

From this period to 1545 a number of editions of the Sarum Primer are extant. Additions are made to the contents of the volume, which attains its greatest development in the editions of Regnault at Paris, 1526-34 (Rev. Ed. Hoskins). From 1545 there is a break in the Sarum series, but it is resumed in 1551, and in Mary's reign (1554-8). These Sarum Primers are of great interest in regard. to the provision of vernacular devotions for the laity in the Roman Church.

2. The Reformation produced another series, which may be divided into three stages; (1) The illicit Primers of the Gospellers, commencing as early as 1530. The carliest extant edition is that known as Marshall's Primer (1594-5). The basis of these is still the Sarum book, but with alterations, omissions (e.g. in some editions, of the Litany and Dirige or Office for the Dead), and explanations in the Reformed sense. (2) The Primers of Henry VIII. and Edward VI. (3) The Revised editions of these, with the Orarium, of Elizabeth.

3. Finally, The 17th cent. (1599-1706) produced a series founded no longer on the Sarum but on the Roman Breviary, for the use of English Roman Catholics.

4. For the purposes of this Dictionary, these groups, with their numerous members, can only be considered with reference to the trs. of the Latin hymns, which they exhibit. As they extend over a lengthened period, they present a variety of renderings, changing with the change of poetical fashion, and are thus well worth attentive study with a view to securing the best representation of the Latin hymns for purposes of worship. They seem, except in a few cases, of which an echo remains in the tra of this contury, to have passed almost into oblivion, even among Roman Catholics.

ii. Sarum Primers.-1. The Ms. Primer of Sarum (c. 1400), printed in Mr. Maskell's Monumenta Bitualia (vol. iii.), has prose ren-derings of the hymns. A Ms. at Cambridge (c. 1430) has the memories of the hours in metre. In the Sarum Primers, 1538-44, and 1555-8, not only the hymna for the hours and the memories, but portions of the Dirige (the Office for the Dead), are versified indication of metro in the original than for singing. Such a verse as this could never have been sung to the tune of "Veni Creator":

"Come hely Goost o Creatour eternal! In our mindes to make visitation: And fulfy! Thou with grace supernal! Our hartes that be of thy creation."

iil. Unauthorized Primers of the Reformation.-Of the early and illicit primers of the Reformation, the primer known as Marshall's, 1535 (reprinted in Three Primers set forth in the reign of Henry VIII., Clarendon Press), is a good type. The hymns for the hours are versified. In metre they are more regular than those of the Sarum series, and more conformed to Latin types. The Latin originals of the Sarum series are rejected; and all hymns to the B. V. M. are omitted. "Veni Creator" is translated in part, and probably many of the hymns have some Latin source of inspiration, but the feeling and the doctrinal east is that of Coverdale's Goostly Psalmes and the Gospellers. Bp. Hilsey's Primer (1589), which was drawn up at Thos. Cromwell's command, is based for more on the Sarum series, is similar to it in irregularity of metre, and retains with little modification the addresses to the B. V. M.

iv. Authorized Primers, 1545-1559.--1. The Primer of Henry VIII. (1545), which was reprinted frequently, with increasing modification of the worship of the B. V. M. up to 1553, and then revised under Elizabeth, in 1559. chooses from the Sarum Breviary an entirely new set of hymns, "Jam lucis"; "Ales diei nuntius"; "Consors paterni luminis"; "Re-rum Creator"; "Aeterna coeli gloria"; "Sal-valor mundi"; and in two cases, apparently, joins centos from two Latin hymns so as to form a new piece. They are chosen partly for allusions to the hours for which they are fixed, and partly as expressions of sober piety. The tra are evidently intended to reproduce Latin measures, and are either trochaic or t.m. (The secred use of L.M. for our hymns springs from the Reformation Primer, as a representative of the lambic Latin.) The versification is a great advance on the Sarum Primers, and the tre contain some good verses. The following may serve as a specimen of the sort of verse which might be still enshrined in the Prayer Book if the Latin hymns had then been made part of Matins and Evensong.

"Quench the flames of our debate; Foul and unisoms heat abate; Grant unto our body health, To our bearts true peace and wealth."

In the sanction if not the production of this book, Craumer must have had a hand, and a letter of his (Oot, 7, 1544, Works, p. 412, Parker Society) shows that he had it in his mind to translate the Latin hymns. But the Prayer Book of 1549 has no hymns, except the "Voni Creator" (C.M.), in the Ordinal; nor has that of 1552. And as if the omission in both cases was the result of some change of view, perhaps connected with Calvin's restriction of praise to the Metrical Psalter, the Primer of 1553, which has very little of the distinctive features of the other primers, and is based on the Book of Common Prayer, has no hymns whatever.

2. In connexion with the Primer of Elization, "Holy Spirit, Lord of Light," and the beth, or more accurately with the Orarium H. A. & M. translation, "Come, Thou Holy (1560), should be mentioned a book called The Hours of Prayer, &c., 1627, by Bp. Cosin; and John Austin's Devotions in the Antient Way of Offices, 1668 [Austin, I.]. Both are framed on the model of the Primers, and have some Latin translations, but most of the pieces are original English hymns [English Hymns English Hymns [English Hym Hymnody, Early, § 111. 10].

v. Roman Primers, 1599-1706. It is probable that some Primer was issued by the Church of Rome in the earlier part of Elizabeth's reign; but for the present an edition of 1599 (Lambeth Lib.) published at Antwery, with a preface signed R. V. (probably Robert Verstegan) must be considered the first of a new series, founded no longer on the Sarum but on the Roman Breviary. The members of it are the Primer of 1599, reprinted 1604, 1650 and 1658, all at Antwerp; the Primer of 1615, Mechlin (Brit. Mus.), reprinted at St. Omer, 1619, and again (place not given) 1632 (Brit. Mus.); that of 1634, Rouen; 1685, Antwerp; 1687, printed by Henry Hills, London; 1706, no place of publication or name of printer; reprinted in 1717 and 1732.

So far as the general contents of these editions are concerned, it must suffice to say, that they add to the Hours of z. v. n. and the general outline of the Suruss books the Hours of the Cross, and the office of the Holy Ghoet. The Antwerp editions are allke in general arrangement; but the 1685 edition and with other pieces the Rosary "as said in Her Majestry Chapel at St. James," and the Library of Our Lady of Loretto. The Rouen book has a different arrangement and six offices, as well as other new matter, not found in the Antwerp editions. The London edition (1687, Suroy Chapel and Brill. Missous) is of great interest as having been published, by the "printer to the King's Most Excellent Majestry for his Household and Chapel," at the zenith of James's power. It adds to the contents of the Antwerp books, the Vespers on Sundays and Holydays, the Ordinary of The Mass, and several other devotions. The 1706 edition is similar in contents and arrangement to the Antwerp, 1685.

2. The hymns in this series have laidly attracted well-deserved attention. One of the new features of these primers is a selection of "Hymns throughout the year." The Latin originals chosen for translation remain constant in all the cdd. (speaking generally), and are, until 1706, Vesper hymns; in 1706, the whole of the Breviary hymns are translated. In the case of the Vesper hymns and those that are incorporated in the offices (say 40) there are consequently four sets of translations from the same originals, changing by easy steps from the Elizabethan freshness of 1599 to the Drydenesque thetoric of 1706. (The change is the more gradual from the fact, that with some exceptions, especially in 1706, the metres remain the same. In the preface to the reprint of 1604 it is said that "the hymnes are so turned into English meeter that they may be soong unto the tunes in Latin;" and these metres, with the exception of the Sapphics, approved themselves in later editions.) A good selection from these trs., printed side by side in pairs, for comparison, in Mr. Orby Shipley's Annus Sanctus, 1884, has made some of these hymns easy of access. One other hymn of 1604 should have been added, the beautiful translation of "Veni Saucte Spiritus" ("Come unto us Holy Ghost"), of which Mr. Shipley has published the revision of 1685. It is singularly like Caswall's transla-tion, "Holy Spirit, Lord of Light," and the Spirit, come," in treatment, and here and there ! in actual lines.

3. The Primer of 1615 is examined under Drummond, 18 of its hymns being included in the 1711 ed. of Drummond's poetical works.

Mr. Orby Shipley, in the Annus Sunctus, strongly disputes Drummond's claim. (See also Saturday Review, Aug. 23, 1884.) Mr. W. T. Brooke, however, still up-holds Drummond's anthornip. In the preface to the last ed., 1815, the fra, are said to have been the work of "one most skilful in English poetrie."

4. The next known Primer is that of 1684. But in a little book, examined by Mr. W. T. Brooke, entitled Prison Pietie, by Samuel Speed, 1677, there are renderings of "Christe sanctorum decus," in c.m., and the "Dies Irae," and 7 trs. which reappear in the Primer of 1685, relies apparently of some lost Primer. The Primer of 1684 (Rosen) is independent in arrangement of the 1615 (Mechlis) and 1599 (Autwerp), and has additional devotions. The hymns are generally the same as in 1615. But in the additional offices of "The Name of Jesus," and "The Immaculate Conception," there are new hymns. The hymns in the office of the "Blessed Trinity," and of "The Holy Glost," are also new. In the first of these offices is a good tr. of "Jesu dulcis memoria" (part), in L. M. couplets (Jesu, the very thought of Thee), which is repeated and furnished with additional stanzas, so as to represent the entire hymn, in 1685. The Primer of 1685 has, as has been said, 7 pieces (frs. of "Te Deum"; "Veni Sancte Spiritus"; "Memento salutis Auctor"; "Jesu dulcis memoria"; "Salutis humanae Sator"; "Creator sime siderum"; "Salvete Floros"), found in Speed's Prison Pietis, 1677. As Speed's book is quite as much a compilation as an original (e.g. containing pieces from Austin, Quarles, and a variation of Cosin's "Veni Creator"), these pieces are probably copied from some earlier Primer now lost. The "To Deum" is in the Primer for the first time in metre. The hymns for the office of "The Holy Ghest" are identical with those of 1684. The "Veni Suncte Spiritus." which had come down from 1599, is revised (see Annus Sanctus, Appendix, p. 33," Come unto us, Holy Ghost"). A few hymns for Holy Days (Martina, St. Joseph, Hermenc-gild, Venantius, Teresa) are added. The Latin originals are throughout those of the Reformed Roman Breviary of 1632, and the trs. are new. In this Primer the new manner of the Restoration poetry makes itself distinctly felt. The trs. are sometimes unequal, but there are stanzas and some whole pieces of great nervousness and stantage and its restrictions. Reformed Roman Breviary of 1632, and the trs. are new. In this Primer the new manner of the Restoration poetry makes itself distinctly felt. The trs. are sometimes unequal, but there are stanzas and some whole pieces of great norvousness and vigour, and its excellence is attested by the large use unade of its trs. in the English offices of the 18th cont. The tr. of "Coelestis trbs" ("Jerusalem, eclestial place") is a fine one. The Primer of 1687 (London) is, so far as its laymas are concerned, a revision of 1685, with the addition of a few new hymns. The revision extends to the substitution of new stanzas in some cases. Among the new tanzas in some tanzas in tanzas tanzas cases of tanzas tanzas tanzas tanzas tanzas tanzas earlier source. The new tr. of "Stabat Mater" ("Under the world-redeeming rood"), is notable as occurring again in the succeeding Primer of 1706, and later Office Books.

5. The Primer of 1706 demands somewhat closer attention. Its place of publication is not stated. In arrangement and contents it recalls the Antwerp series, not the London Primer of 1687. The number of translations it coulains is a great advance on preceding Primers. Not the Vesper hymns only but those for Matins and Lauds are translated in the series of hymns for the year; the Breviary hymns are translated entire, together with the hymns are translated entire, together with one "Dies Irac," and "Jesu duleis memoria; "in all 120 pieces. Of these, the tr. of "Stabat Mater" is from 1687. The "Dies Irac" ("The day of wrath, that dreadful day") was first published in a text that varies from this, in "fate's Miscellanea Sacra (1696, 2nd distributed to Lord distributed to Lord was there askethed to Lord distributed to Lord was there askethed to Lord edition, 1698), and was there ascribed to Lord The tr. of "Veni Crestor" Roscommon. ("Creator Spirit, by whose aid") is Dryden's. So also is the tr. of "Ut queant laxis" ("O sylvan Prophet"), the hymn for evensor on St. John Baptist's Day; and the tr. of the "Te Deum" ("Thee, Soveraign God, our graleful accents praise"); both of which were printed by Scott in his Life of Dryden, 1808. These two latter translations are in metres that had not occurred in previous Primers. The tr. "O sylvan Prophet," is one of 11 pieces, chiefly representing the Sapphie originals, which preceding Primers had always dealt with awkwardly, from an attempt to produce some syllabic equivalent of the Latin. The tr. of the "Te Deum" is one of a series of 8 pieces in heroic metre. A third new metre (c.m.) occurs in the lr. of "Ave maris stella," and "Jesu dulcis memoria," which is not found in any known Primer pre-viously, though there are two c.m. tre. in Speed's Prison Pietic, which may belong to some lost edition. A very full selection from this Primer is given in Mr. Orby Shipley's Annus Sanctus, 1884; and it demands closer analysis than the rest, because both Mr. W. T. Brooke and Mr. Shipley claim a very large proportion of these translations as the work of Dryden. 'The special question of Dryden's authorship is dealt with under Dryden, Jahn, but one or two general remarks may be best given here.

have an identical Glorio: and this identity is faithfully reproduced in the English Gloriar. The Latin Gloriar have affinites with each other, and these affinities are constantly maintained in English by reproductions of the same phrases. The English Glorias have also the finites of their own, not found in the Latin. In style they are very like one another; they are quite in keeping in their grandlose phrases with the hymns they close; and certain mannerisms recur (e.g. the use of "equal"). The repetition of common lines, the slight variations of phrase accompanying large repetition, and other economies, are such as a man would naturally practise in the use of his own material, and point very strongly to a common author. The number of pieces, which the Gloriar that bear clear family likeness touch, comprises the great balk of the book; and links, of varying strength, counset most of the remainder with them.

the style of the Primer of 1703 is by no means always superior to that of 1685. It is often less nervous, too restorical and too fiorid. The translations of 1685-7 have consequently remained in at least equal circulation with those during the 18th cent. But as pieces of devottonal poetry, the translations of 1705 are often of great merit; and the bold handling, the brilliance of single lines, and the frequent beauty of cadence, look far more like the work of a poet coming fresh to the tank, than of

vi. Manual of Prayers, and The Garden of the Soul. Two other devotional books for the laity, which passed through many editions, contain translations of the Latin hymns, viz.; the Manual of Prayers, and The Garden of the Soul; but perhaps in no instance are they independent trs., but transcripts from the Primers or English Offices current at the time of publication. An edition of The Manual, circa 1596, has no hymns: perhaps the Primer of 1599 was the first to introduce translations of the Latin bymns. An edition of 1613 reprints 22 of the translations of the Primer of 1599. Another of 1688 by Henry Hills reprints from the Primer of 1687. Another of 1699 reprints, sometimes revising, from Primers of 1685-7. That of 1733 retains the same Latin originals (28) as 1699, but adopts the translations of the 1706 Primer. The same thing occurs in the ed, of 1750 (Bhipley).

The hymns in the various editions of the Garden of the Soul apparently follow the same law, taking their Latin translations from the current edition of the Primer, or in the latter part of the 18th cent. from the editions of Vespers or The Divine Office. This fact is important in its bearing on the question of Dryden's authorship of the 1706 Primer. Under the impression that Bp. Challener (who improved both the Manual and The Garden of the Soul) selected hymns by Dryden for the editions of 1737 (Garden) and 1750 (Manual). Mr. Shipley has adduced these editions as proofs of Dryden's authorship. But all that Bp. Challoner did, supposing there are editions which he superintended, was to substitute the newest trs. for the previous ones. This, in the case of the Manual, had been done as early as 1733. Dryden's authorship did not determine the choice, and is not attested by it.

vii. Conclusion. The needs of the laity, which were supplied in the 17th cent. by the Primers and The Manual, produced in the 18th translations of the Vesper Office, of the entire Breviary, and of the Missal. But they do not supply many fresh translations of the Latin hymns. The eds of the Primers of 1685, 1687, and 1706, are drawn on in equal proportions. Sometimes the 1706 in one edition of the Evening Office will make way for the 16%? translations in the next. Sometimes stanzas from 1706 are mixed with stanzas of 1685 (Exx. will be found in the pieces from the Evening Office of 1710 in the Annus Sanctus). Sometimes lines and phrases are freely used up in re-manufactured translations (see Evening Office of 1760); prose translations are substituted for metre; and the old pieces are revised. A few new translations are found (e. g. in the Evening Office of 1748, and in the Divine Office, 4 vols., 1763, which requires translations of the entire Breviary). The Missals do not supply much material; the Latin hymns are sometimes only printed in the original (e. g. in Missal for the Latity, 1808).

Primitive Methodist Hymnody. [Methodist Hymnody, § iv.]

Primo Daus coeli globum. The Venerable Bede. [The Creation.] A poem of 112 lines, given by Mone, No. 1, from a ms. of the beginning of the 9th cent., now at Darmstadt, and written in an Irish hand. The titte in Mone is "A hymn of the blessed Bede the priest on the work of the six days at the beginning, and on the six ages of the world." Also in Thomastius, ii. p. 429; Migne, vol. 94, p. 621, &c. So far as we can ascertain the full hymn has not been tr. into English; but a cento therefrom, beginning with line 65, "Post facts celsa conditor," was tr. as "God ended all the world's array," by J. M. Neale, and given in the Hymnal N., 1854. This was repeated, abridged, and beginning, "Christ's servants while they dwell below," in Skinner's Daily Service Hyl., 1864. [W. A. S.]

Primo dierum omnium. St. Gregory the Great. [Sanday. Morning.] This is one of the eight hymns which the Benedictine editors assign to St. Gregory (Opera, Paris, 1705, iii. col. 878). More gives it as No. 271, in 8 st. of 4 l., and at i. p. 372, cites it as in a MS. of the 8th cont. at Trier. Daniel gives the text in 8 st. of 4 l., at i., No. 145, and at iv. p. 35, cites it as in a 10th cent. Rheinau MS. Among the British Museum MSS. it is found in three 11th cont. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. £ 3; Jul. A. vi. £ 19; Harl. 2961, f. 218), in an 11th cent. Mozarabic Hymnarium (Add. 30851, f. 172 b.), an 11th cent. Mozarabic Breviary (Add. 30848, f. 67), &c. It is in a MS. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 227); in three mss. of the 11th cent. at St. Gail, Nos. 387, 413, 414; and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. MS. at Durham (B. iii. 32, 2. b.) In the Roman Breviary, 1632, it was recast, beginning, "Primo die quo Trinitae."

The original form is included in the older Roman (Venice, 1478) Arrive, Aberdeen, Paris of 1843, and other Brestavies. In the York Brev., 1493, it is in two parts, part it, beginning with st. v., "John nume Paterna clastes." He universal use was on Sondeys at Nectures or Matins; cometimes throughout the year or clos from the Octave of the Epiphany to Lenk, and also from the Sonday nearest to the Kalends of October up to Advent. The original text is also found in Wackers, angel, i., No. 89, the Hymantum Sarisin, 1851, p. 33. The text of the Roman Bres, 1633, is in recont cits, of that Brev., and also in Banici, i., No. 145, Königrield, L. p. 73, and Card, Newman's Hyman Epicetice, 1833 and 1865.

Both texts of this bymn have been tr. into ! English as follows:--

i. Prime dierum emnium. The trs. of this text are:-

1. On this the day that saw the carth. By J. M. Neale, in the Hymnal N., 1852. In Murray's Hymnal, 1852, it was altered to "On this blest day when first the light." This form of the tr. passed into other collections, as also has the original translation.

2. On this the day when days began. By J. Ellerton, made for and 1st pub, in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871.

Other tre. are :-

1. This is the day when first of all. Hymnarium 1844 ngucanom. 1814. 2. Haili primal day, of days the first. W. J. Blew.

1852-85.

3. First day of days! wherein were made. J. D. Chambers, 1852 4. First day of days wherein arrayed. J. D. Chambers.

5. On this first day, when earth stands forth. J. W.

6. This glorious morn, time's eldest born, Wherein was, &c. J. Ardie. 1869. Based on Copeland's tr. from the Ross. Brac. (See below.)
7. Welcome! thou chisfest of all days. D. T. Morgan.

it. Prime die que Trinites. The tre. of this text are:-

1. This day the glorious Trinity. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1813, p. 3, and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 3. In a few collections it is given without any change in the text, but in the Hymnary, 1872, where it begins, "This day the Blessed Trinity," the alterations are very numerous.

Other tra. are :-

 The happy day will soon disclose. Primer, 1706.
 On this first day when heaven and earth. Bp. R. 1837.

Rink J. Copeland. 1848. (See also J. Keble, above.)

Procter, Adelaide Anne, daughter of Bryan Waller Procter (Barry Cormeall), was b. in Bedford Square, London, Oct. 30, 1825. In 1851 she entered the Roman communion, and d. in London, Feb. 2, 1864. Miss Procter displayed more than usual intellectual powers at an early age. In later years she was skilled in music and languages. Her poetical gifts have been widely appreciated. Her Legends and Lyrics, A Book of Verse, was pub. in 1858. Of this an enlarged edition was pub. in 1862. Her hymns in C. U. from these two editions are :- two editions are:—

1. I do not sak, O Lord, that life may be. Resignation. In her Legende, &c., 1882. It is one of the most widely used of Miss Procter's hymna.

2. I thank Thee, O my God, Who made. Thankfulness. In her Legende, &c., 1888, p. 207, in 5 st. of 6 l. In several collections, including the H. Cropp., it begins in an altered form. "My God, I thank Thee, Who hast made;" and in others. "Our God, we thank Thee, Who hast made." Bp. Bickersteth in his note on this hymn in the H. Cropp., 1876, says, "This most beautiful hymn by A. A. Procter (1868), lonches the chord of thankfulness in trial, as perhaps no other hymn does, and is thus most useful for the visitation of the sick."

8. One by one the sands are going (deering). The

of 41.

$. Riso, for the day is passing. Redeem the Time. In her Legends, &c., 1858. Sometimes given as "Ariac, for the day is passing," as in Holy Song, 1869.

$. Strive; yet I do not promise. Strive, Watt, Pray. In her Legends, &c., 1858, p. 103, in 3st. of 31.

6. The way is long and dreary. Life a Pilgrisage. In her Legends, &c., 1858, p. 136, in 3st. of 81, and a relatio.

7. The shadows of the evening hours. Evening. In her Legends, &c., 1862.

3. We ask for peace, O Lord. Peace with God. In her Legends, &c., 1853, p. 214, in 4 st of 9 l. [J. J.]

Prome vocem, mens, canoram. Claude de Santevil. [The Five Wounds of Christ, or, Passiontide.] This hymn appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1680; Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. 414, and again in the Paris Breviary, 1786, and later French Brevisries, and is given in the Office of the Five Wounds of Christ. The text is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 67, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:-

1. Now, my soul, thy voice upraising, Sing aloud, &c. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 75, and again in his Hys. of the Church, 1841, No. 41, in 8.7.8.7.4.7. It is found unaltered in a few collections, and also altered as: (1) "Now, my soul, thy voice upraising, Sing the Cross," &c., in 8.7.8.7.4.7. in Murray's Hymnal, 1852. This was repeated in other collections. In the Serum, 1868, it was altered to 5 st. of 6 l. in 8.7 metre, (2) "Sing we now, our voice upraising," in Kennedy, 1863, is the same text as Sarum with slight variations.

2. Slow and mouroful be our tone. By R. Campbell, in his Hys. and Anthons, 1850, and a few collections of a later date.

3. Now, my soul, thy voice upraising, Tell in sweet, &c. By Sir H. W. Baker. This tr. is based upon the above by J. Chandler, more specially in the first and last stenzas. It is in 6 sts. of 8.7. Its first appearance was in the trial copy of H. A. & M., 1859, and then in the 1st ed., 1861. It is in several hymn-books, and sometimes with slight alterations.

Oxford ed., 1864, No. 180, and is probably by the Editor.

5. Now, my soul, thy voice upraising, Sing in aweet, &c. This cento in the Hymnary, 1872, No. 243, in 6 sts. of 8.7. metre, is somewhat peculiarly constructed. St. i. is by Chandler and the Editors; ii. is by Sir H. W. Baker and the Editors; iii. is by Chandler and the Editors; iv. is by Sir H. W. Baker and the Editors; and v. is by the Editors alone. The result is not good,

Other tre. are :-

1. Draw out, and heart, thy melody. I. Williams.

2. Soul, draw forth thy voice, deep-sounding. W. J. Blew. 1852-55.
3. O my soul! thy lamentation. J. B. Chambers. [J. J.]

Promittle, et servas datam. C. Coffin. [Wednesday.] This is the hymn on Wednesday at Lands in the Paris Breviary, 1736. It is also in C. Coffin's Hymni Sacci, 1736, p. 20; J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 24; and Cerd. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1888 and 1865. Tr. as:-

1. A faithful promise Thon hast made. J. Chandler. |

2. Thy promise, Lord, is our sure stay. I. Williams.

2. Thy promise, Pord, is our after say. I. We death.
1859.
3. Thon, Lord, dost promise; firm and sure. J. D.
Chambert. 1857.
4. Thy truth, O God, stands firm in heaven. D. T.
Morgan. 1830.

A synonym for Sequence (q.v.), roferring to the character of the composition, while 'sequence' refers to the position in the service. A Prose was originally in prose of a rhythmical character, but not in strict metre, while the word Sequence was used when the Prose assumed the form of a metrical Hymn. But a single quotation from a medizoval writer will suffice to show that the two words were used indifferently, and at the same time tells us on what festal days Proses or Sequences were appointed to be sung in the Missal of the Clumine Order.

" Prosa, vel quod nili sequentiam vocant, non cantatur nisi in quaturo festie principalibus, in Epiphenia, in Ascrisione Domini, in translatione S. lenedicti, et in Nativitate S. Mauriti."—Chiebricus de antiq. Consust. Monast. Chimiae. Lib. 1, cap. xi.

The Sequences or Hymns sung in procession before High Mass and at other times were usually tormed Proses in the mediaval Office Books of the English Church. (Sarum Processional, ed. by Dr. W. G. Henderson, 1882, pp. 13, 20, 93, 124, 184. York Processional, also cd. by Dr. Henderson, Surtees Soc., vol. 63, 1875.) [F. E. W.]

Πρόσεχε ούρανὲ καὶ λαλήσω. St. Andrew of Crete. [Midnight.] St. Andrew's Midnight hymn commonly known as to desi-Bestvoy, from his works, and given in Daniel, iii. p. 48, in 4 st. of 4 1. It is tr. by Dr. Bonar in his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 2nd series, 1861, as, "Attend, ye heavens," in 4 st of 6 l. [See p. 67, i., and 463, ii.] [J. J.]

Πρώτος νόμον εύρόμαν. Syncsins, Bp. of Ptolemais. [Christmas: Epiphany.]
A Christmas and Epiphany hymn, being No. vii. of the ten hymns which he wrote during various periods of his life. The full Greek text, dating 375-430, is given in the Anth. Gracea Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 20, in 42 lines. From this Mr. Chatfield made his tr., "I first invented in Thy praise," and pub. the same in his Songs and Hymns, &c., 1876, p. 78, in 50 lines. A. Stevenson's tr. in his Ten Hys. of Synesius, &c., 1865, is "Jeans of Solymn! God's Son." [Greek Hymnody, § v.] [J. J.]

Prudentius, Aurelius Clemens, with the occasional prefix of Marcus (cf. Migne, vol. lix. p. 593, and Dressel, p. ii. n), is the name of the most prominent and most prolific author of sacred Latin poetry in its carliest days. Of the writer himself we know nothing, or next to nothing, beyond what he has himself told us in a short introduction in verse to his works. From that source we learn that he was a Spaniard, of good family evidently, and that he was b. a.b. 348 somewhere in the north of Spain, either at Saragossa, Tarragona, or Calaiorra, but at which is left uncertain, by his applying the same expression to all, which if applied only to one would have fixed his place of birth. After receiving a good education befitting his social status he applied himself for some years to practising as a pleader in the local courts of law, until he received promotion to a judgeship in two cities suceessively:-

" Bis legum moderamine Frence nobilium reximus urbium Jus civile bonis reddictimus, termimus reost" and afterwards to a post of still higher autho-

> " Tandem militiæ gradu Evection pietas principls extulit."

Archbp. Trench considers this last to have been "a high military appointment at court," and such the poet's own words would seem to describe; but it may well be doubted whether a civilian and a lawyer would be eligible for such employment; in which case we may adopt the solution of the difficulty offered in the Prolegomena to our author's works (Migne, vol. lix. p. 601):-

"Evectus inde est al superiorem militise gradum, nimi-rum militise civitis, paintines, aut præsidialis, non bellices, castronair, aut cohorfalis; nam il qui officile jure con-sulturum præsidum, rectorum et smillium fungantur, valgo in cod. Theod. militiare et ad superiores militias ascendere dienutur."

It was after this lengthened experience at a comparatively early age of positions of trust and power that Prudentius, conscience-smitten on account of the follies and worldliness that had marked his youth and earlier manhood, determined to throw up all his secular employments, and devote the remainder of his life to advancing the interests of Christ's Church by the power of his pen rather than that of his purse and personal position. Accordingly we find that he retired in his 57th year into poverty and private life, and began that remarkable succession of sacred poems upon which his fame now entirely rests. We have no reason however to regard him as another St. Augustine, rescued from the "wretchedness of most unclean living" by this flight from the temptations and engrossing cares of official life into the calm seclusion of a wholly devotional leisure. He had probably rather learnt from sad experience the emptiness and vanity for an immortal soul of the surroundings of even the high places of this world. As he himself expresses it :-

" Numquid talis proderunt Carols post obttum vet bong, vet male, Cum jam, quicquid id est, quod fueram, more aboleverit?" and sought, at the cost of all that the world holds dear, those good things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. Beyond the fact of his retirement from the world in this way, and the fruits which it produced in the shape of his voluminous contributions to sacred poetry, we have no further information about our author. To judge from the amount he wrote, his life must have been extended many years after he began his new career, but how long his life was or where he d. we are not told. Probably he d. circa 413. His works are :—

(1) Liber Cathemerinon. "Christian Day, as we may call it." (IV. S. Liley, "Chapters in European History," vol. i. p. 208).

(2) Liber Peristephanon. "Martyrs' Garlands" (id.), (3) Apotheosis. A work on the Divine Nature, or the Defication of Human Nature in Christ. A treatise on the Origin of Sin,

(4) Hamartigenia. A treati directed against the Marcionites.

(8) Psychomackia = Ψυχομαχία, or "The Spiritual Cambet"—an allegorical work.
 (6) J.iirri contra Symmachum, A controversial work

(6) Libri contra Symmachum, A controversial work against the restoration in the Senate House at Rome of the alter of Victory which Gratian had removed. Symmachum had petitioned Valentinian II. for its restoration in 384, but the influence of 8t, Ambrose had prevailed against him at that time. In 392 the alter was restored, but removed again by Theodosins in 394. After the death of the latter the attempt to restore it was removed by Arcadius and Houorius, and it was at that time that Prudentius wrote his first book. The second (for there are two) was written in 405. Fuguré considers that the first may date in 356.

(7) The Dittochnon = the double food or double Testament, is a wordy collection of 40 sets of four verses each, on Old and New Testament scenes.

Of these different works the most important are the first two, and it is from them that the Liturgical hymns enumerated below have been chiefly compiled. The general character of Prudentius's writings it is not easy fairly to estimate, and to judge by the wholesale laudation he obtains from some of his critics, and the equally unsparing censure of others, his judges have so found it. In venturing upon any opinion upon such a subject, the reader must bear in mind the peculiar position in which the period at which he was writing found the poet. The poetry of classical Rome in all its exact beauty of form had long passed its meridian, and was being replaced by a style which was yet in its infancy, but which burst forth into new life and beauty in the hands of the Mediaeval hymnologists. Prudentius wrote before rhyming Latin verse was thought of, but after attention had ceased to be given to quantities. Under such circumstances it were vain to look for very finished work from him, and such certainly we do not find. But amidst a good deal of what one must confess is tasteless verbiage or clumsy rhetorical ornament-however varied the metres be employs, numbering some 17-there are also passeges to be found, not unfrequently, of dramatic vigour and noble expression, which may well hold their own with the more musical utterances of a later date. He writes as a man intensely in carnest, and we may gather much from his writings concerning the points of conduct which were deemed the most important in Christian living at a time when a great portion of mankind were still the victims or slaves of a morality which, heathen at the best, was lowered and corrupted the more as the universality of its influence was more and more successfully challenged by the spread of the Gospel of Christ. If, therefore, we can scarcely go as far in our author's praise as Barth-much given to lavish commendation - who describes him as "Poeta eximius eruditissimus et sanctissimus scriptor; nemo divinius de rebus Christianis unquam scripsit"; or as Bentley--not given to praisewho calls him the "Horace and Virgil of the Christians," we shall be as loath, considering under what circumstances he wrote, to carp at his style as not being formed on the best ancient models but as confessedly impure; feeling with Archbishop Trench that it is his merit that "whether consciously or unconsciously, he seted on the principle that the

that it should be the vehicle of truths which were altogether novel to it." (Sac. Lat. Poetry, 1874, p. 121.)

The reader will find so exhaustive an account of the various writings of Prudentius in the account given of him and them in Smith and Wace's Diet. of Christian Biography, and Smith's Diet. of Greek and Roman Biography, that it is only necessary in this work to refer very briefly to them as above, The poems have been constantly reprinted and re-chited, till the editor who produced the best edition we have of them, Albert Dressel (Leipsic, 1860), is able to say that his is the sixtythird.

The use made of Prudentius's poems in the ancient Breviaries and Hymnaties was very extensive. In the form of centos stanzas and lines were compiled and used as hymus; and it is mainly from these centes, and not from the original poems, that the translations into English were made. Daniel, i., Nos. 103-115, gives 13 genuino hymns as having been in uso for "Morning," "Christmas," "Epi-I hany," "Lont," "Easter," "Transfiguration," "Burial," &c., in the older Breviaties. A reference to the article Latin, Tra. from the, p. 655, i., will show that almost as many more which were used in like manner have been translated into English. When to these are added the hymns which are annotated in this Dictionary under their respective first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators), and those which lave not been translated into English, we realise the position and power of Prudentius in the hymnody of the Church. Edmund, Prys or Price, a learned Welsh divine and eminent poet, was b. about 1541 in the parish of Llandeewyn, Merionethshire, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of M.A. He was appointed Archdescon of Merioneth in 1576, and Canon of St. Asaph in 1602. He was one of the best Welsh poets of his time, and a great many of his compositions are preserved, mostly in manuscript. Psalters, American. [American Hymnody.]

Paalters, English. I. Introduction. A glance at the long list appended to this article will apprize many for the first time of the the Pasims. Among the authors will be found Queen Elizabeth, Lord Bacon, Fairfax, and theologians. The many of our poots and theologians. Psalter has been subjected to a great variety of experiments. Literal translation, paraphrase, evangelical expansion, the development of portions as themes, have been successively attempted. The change of metrical and poetical expression is reflected in the history. In the Puritan period the versification of the Psalms even touches the history of the nation. But notwithstanding all this, partly from extreme reverence for the letter of Holy Writ, partly from the fact that the bulk of the translators were hampered by the secondary object of turning the Psalter into a hymnal, and most of all from the impossibility of representing Hebrew parallelism in English metres, no version approaches in merit such translations as Lord Derby's Homer or Conington's Virgit. With but few exceptions the succeeding pages are a comparison of medicerities.

II. Curious examples.

Some experiments are very eccentric, such as Abraham Fraunce's hexameters (1581), Pike's lyrics without rhyme (1751), Wheatland and Sylvester's heroics (1754), Dennis's blank verse (1808). The strangest is Psatterium Americanum by Cotton Mather (1718), printed like prose, but in reality simply the Authorized Version thrown into uurhymed c.n. for singing.

III. Pre-Reformation Psalters.

Metrical Pealters existed in England at a very early date. Bp. Aldhelm of Sherborne (died) a.D. 709) is said to have composed one (Bede); and Archdeacon Churton (see Preface to the Cleveland Pealter) ascribes to him the Anglo-Saxon Version edited by Thorpe (1835). Thorpe himself, however, assigns it to a later date. A Latin Psalter, with interlinear Anglo-Saxon gloss, and a translation into Middle English has been published by the Surtees Society. T. Brampton's Seven Pealtential Psalms (1414) have been printed by the Percy Society; and Holland (Psalmiets of Britain, 1842) mentions a translation of St. Jerome's Gallican Psalter into English of the date of Henry II. or Richard I.

IV. Importance of Psalm-singing at the Reformation.

The practice of versifying the Psalms assumed a larger significance among the Reformers. The Psalm Versions of Luther and Justus Jonas, combined with their translations of the Latin Hymns and their original compositions, attred the heart of Germany: the Psalms of Marot became the badge of the Freuch Huguenot in court and camp; and, completed by Beza, became the sole hymnal of Geneva: white in England and Scotland, following the Genevan precedent, the metrical Pasins alone were long exclusively used in public worship. Consecrated by the long tradition of the Church in their Latin form, set at first to ballad tunes and then to special music of their own by the leaders of the Reformation, the Psalms became endeared to the people, not merely by their sublimity, their Messianic import, and their wide interpreta-tion of human emotions, but specially by their living trust in God as a hiding place in peril, and even by their terrible denunciations of His onemics. They seemed, in the wonder aroused by a new-found Bible, the supreme, divinely ordained vehicle of human praise; and the metrical form was at the same time a necessity for singing, and, according to the ideas of that day concerning the structure of Hebrew poetry, was accounted a truer representative of the original than prose. This last point is argued, with references to Hebrew treatises of that day, in the Preface to the English Psalter, published at Geneva in 1556 (see p. $57, ii.), a revised cd. of Sternhold's 37 Psalms, and 7 by Hopkins, to which 7 fresh ones are added by Whittingham.

V. German influence on Gospellers.

The introduction of Pralm-singing into England probably aprang from the intercourse of the Gospellers with Luther and Melanchthon, and their familiarity with their writings. Three of these fathers of the Reformation, Wiedom, Becon, and Coverdale, have left us Pealm versions bearing a strong family likeness. Those of Wisdom and Becon were incorporated in Sternhold and Hopkins [see Old Versica] and may possibly be the oldest pieces in that book, though not found in the earliest editions. The Goostly Psalmes by Miles Coverdale contains fifteen pealms, besides hymns and paraphrases (see English Hyzgardy, Early, III., IV.). The German originals of this book have been carefully traced out by Mr. Mearns, All the Psalm versions, except Pss. 2, 132, 146, and all the paraphrases and hymns, except two, have been identified as German. The metre of the unidentified Psalms, except the 132ud, is also German, and Coverdale's 46th is in the same metre as Luther's "Ein Feste Burg." [For details see Goostly Pasimes, The.]

VI. Bullad Metres of Edward VI.'s reign.

In the Act, which authorized the First Prayer Book of Edward vi. (1519), there was a proviso

"That it be lawful...in churches... chapels or oratories or other places to use openly any Psalme or prayer taken out of the Bible... not letting or omitting thereby the service or any part thereof mentioned in the said book."

It has been generally held, by Strype, Burnet and others, that this provice covered the legality of Psalm-singing (see § VIII., where Psalms and godly prayers are synonymous); and some have thought that the partiality of the king for Sternhold's essays then published (see Old Version, § II.) dictated it. It is at least certain that several smiall attempts at versification of the Psalms appear at this period, among which may be mentioned Sir

Thos. Wyatt's Seven Penitential Pealms (1549). The whole Psalter was also now versified by Robert Crowley, sometime Vicar of St. Gilee's, Cripplegate, in c.w., and set to a harmonized chant (1549). The German influence now ceases, and the irregular metres of Wisdom and Becon, which are akin to some in the early English Primers, give way to the bellad measure of Chevy Chace, which from this time receives its consecration. Steruhold's aim was to supplant the "amorous and obscene songs" (Wood) of the court and people; and he probably sang his psalms to well-known ballad tunes. A discussion of the nature and character of his work and that of his coadjutors, as represented in the Old Version of Sternhold and Hopkins, is, however, too elaborate for this section of our work. It is fully treated elsewhere. [Old Version.]

VII. Genevan Influence on the Marian Exiles. The public singing of psalms ceased of course under Mary. But the movement gained new force and new ideas among the exiles. Parker solaced himself by versifying the entire Psalter (Absolvi Psalterium versum metrice lingua sulgari, Parker's Diary, 1557). At Geneva the psalms of Marot were part of the authorized service; and it is from this period that the metres, the tones, and the atructural features of the Genevan Psalter begin to affect that of England, and more largely, of Scotland. [For details see Oid Varnian, § 111.]

VIII. Psalm-singing at the accession of Elizabeth.

On the accession of Elizabeth nothing so roused the enthusiasm of the people as the practice "brought from abroad by the exiles" of singing Psalms (Strape). They were sing at St. Paul's Cross after the sermons of bishops; Jewel speaks of six thousand people as present on one occasion. Psalms were introduced at St. Antholin's and spread to other churches in London. The authorities not merely "connived" (Heylin) at the fushion, but encouraged it.

Jewel, for instance, who was one of the Visitors for the execution of the Queen's Injunctions, favoured it. The attitude of Parker is shewn by a curious set of documents in Wilkins's Concilia, Dec. 1859. Certain men and women from London had song psalms in the Cathedral at Excter at 6 a.m., disturbing matins. On being prohibited by the Dean and Chapter, they appealed to the Queen's Visitors, Jewel and others, who thereon reprimanded the Dean and Chapter. Upon this the take was carried to Abp. Parker, who ratified the sentence of the Visitors, and buds the Cathedral authorities "permit and suffer" congregations to "sing or say the postly prayers set forth and permitted in this Church of England." The use of the word "godly prayers," as equivalent to psalms, is curious. See above, § Vi.

Permission to use psalms bublicly in wor-

Permission to use psalms publicly in worship was implicitly granted by the 49th injunction of Elizabeth (June 1559), which is wider and yet more defined than the provise of 1549; guarding more carefully the Morning and Evening Prayer from interference, and yet at the same time withdrawing the stipulation that the composition was to be taken out of Holy Scripture:—

"For the comforting of such as delight in music, it may be permitted that in the beginning or end of Common Prayer either at Morning or Evening, there may be sung an hymn or such like song to the praise of Almighty God in the best melody and music that may be devised, having respect that the sentence of the bymn may be understood and perceived."

IX. Renderings by Abp. Parker, Sir Philip Sidney, the Davisons, and Spenser.

Partial translations of Psalms at this period are very numerous. The two most notable complete versions are dealt with elsewhere. (See Old Version and Souttlah Hymnody.) A third, entitled The whole Psalter, translated into English metre, with an argument and collect to each Penim: John Daye, London, N.D., is only to be found in the great libraries [there is a perfect copy also at Lincoln Cathedral]. It is the work of Abp. Parker, alluded to above, written in exite: but the marked similarity of the book, in its intro-ductions, extracts from the Fathers, and apparatus of appended Canticles, to the work of Sternhold and Hopkins makes it probable that these, and perhaps the metrical arguments at the head of each praim and the appended collects were added after 1562. It is composed with scholarly care, and, not only as a metrical version, but for the value of the collects, should be reprinted. Besides the three usual metres (c.n., L.n., s.n.) he makes use of stanzas of 8's, and one or two curious measures; and he supplies a devology in each metre. The metrical Introduction "Ad Lectorem," is a quaint apology for offering a new version. There are eight tunes to it by Tallis; one being Tallis's "Canon." His c.n. has often a double rhyme in the third line; and, even where this is not the case, the rhythm and stresses of the measure are entirely distinct from that of Sternhold, and the feet strictly regular, so as to facilitate singing. An example of his currymed c.n. may be seen in his tr. of "Veni Creator" (q.v.), which is apparently simply the text of the first Prayer Book of Edw. vith, 1549, regulated into uniform feet. The authorship of this book is given in Bp. Barlow's copy to John Keeper of the Cathedral of Wells. But Parker's authorship is established by external and internal evidence. In Bp. Kennet's copy it is said that the Archbishop permitted Margaret, his wife, to present his Psalter to some of the nobility; and the copy at Lambeth has in a hand of that time, "To the vertuous and honorable Lady the Countesse of Shrewsbury from your lovinge friende, Margaret Parker." Apart from the presumption raised by this coincidence in favour of Parker, it makes Keeper's authorship unlikely, as he would only have been twenty-four at Mrs. Parker's death (1570) (Dibdin's Ames). But the conclusive evidence is the acrostick "Mattheus Parkerus" on which the metrical argument to Ps. 119 is formed.

Of a different order from these is the Version commenced by Sir Philip Sidney (Pss. 1-43) and completed by his sister, the Countess of Pembroke (pub. 1823). The metres are "more rare and excellent for method and varietic,"—the fantastic and capricious measures of the lighter Elizabethan style; not intended probably for congregational use. They have requent freshness and spirit; and now that a higher music no longer chains us wholly to routine metres, a composer fond of the Elizabethan poetry would find the 84th, 92nd, and the more regular 96th full of grace and charm. The same description may be given of Divers Selected Psalms of David in verse, of a different composure from those used in the claurch! the work of Francis and Christopher Davison and others, found in a Harleian Ms. of the British Museum. Full selections from both these versions may be seen in Farr's Select Poetry (Purker Society). To these may be added a lost version of the Seven Penitential Psalms by Edmund Spenser.

X. Partial translations, Bacon, Herbert, &c. Versions by Dod, Wither, Sandys.

Among the versifiers of "Selected Psalms" are found the eminent names of Donne, Dean of St. Paul's (1633), Phineas Fletcher (1633), George Herbert (1632), and R. Crashaw (1648). The first ten Psalms were rendered clearly and naturally by Bishop Hall (1607), and a few by Lord Bacon (1625), (see Fuller Worthies Library by Grosart), dedicated to George Herbert. The complete version of Henry Dod (1603-20) is utterly valueless, and according to Wither was burnt by the hangman; the preface however shews the early disentisfaction felt with Sternhold and Hopkins, and there is appended to it a ludiorous versification, intended apparently to be sung, of the Act of Parliament passed after the Gunpowder Plot! The so-called Version of King James (1631) is described elsewhere. (See Scottish Hymnody, L § 3.) The version by George Wither (1619-32) was a far more serious rival of the Old Version. He obtained a privilege from the King, which ordered it to be bound up with every copy of the Bible. and authorized Wither to seize every Bible in which it was not found. But it met with the same fate as a similar privilege of Wither's for his Hymne and Spiritual Songs of the Church, (See English Hymnedy, Early, § VIII.) The resistance to the privilege on the part of the Stationers' Company, who owned the Old Version, ended in the withdrawal of this monopoly by the Privy Council (1633). (See Preface to Wither's Hymns and Spiritual Songs, by E. Farr in Library of Old Authors.) The metres of this book are more varied than those of the Old Version, and yet more regular and even than those of Sidney, and tunes are set to them by Orlando Gibbons. The author of Anthología Davidica, a compilation of Psalms from many sources (1846), considers this the best version he knew for fidelity, harmony, and simplicity of expression. Judged, however, by his copious extracts (the book itself is rare) there is a want of force and spirit. The 137th, "As nigh Babel's streams we sat," is gracufully rendered; the best is the 150th, "Come praise the Lord, come praise the Lim" (S. P. C. K. Ps. and Hys., Ps. cl.). The varsion by George Sandys (1636), son of the Abp. of York, is of far greater literary marit. Though set to music by Henry Lawes, it was intended only for private devotion, and perhaps never used otherwise. Baxter laments that Sandys's "scraphic strain" was useless to the vulgar because not composed in the ordimany metres; but its poetical grace exercised a considerable influence on translators. The longer Psalms are often in L. M. couplets; some of his most graceful pieces are in couplets of Ts, as Ps. 150, "Praise the Lord enthroned on high" (S. P. C. K. Ps. and H., Ps. cl.), and Ps. 148, "You who dwell above the skies" (Wes. H. Bk, 689). The book is prefaced by an eulogy by his friend Lord Falkland. In the opinion of Burney, Montgomery, Conder, and Holland, it is the best metrical version. See, however, Keble, below, § xvm.

XI. Puritan Versions; Rous, Barton, Milton.

To the psalm-loving Puritan the perfection of the metrical version was a matter of supreme moment. The first book pub. in America (Cambridge, N.E., 1640) was The New England Pealter, often called The Bay Pealter (p. 119, i.), the editors of which bound themselves by the most rigorous literalism. In the same year in England the Committee of Peers, lay and spiritual, recommended in their Report on Religion that "The meeter in the Paalma should be corrected and allowed of publicly." The first ed. (1641) of Francis Bous, afterwards Provest of Eton under the Commonwealth, was an attempt to satisfy this recommendation by amendment of the old version. Further changes were made in his second ed. (1643), which was ordered to be printed by the House of Commons. The establishment of the Directory (1645), in which "every one that can read" was ordered to "have a psalm book," made revision more urgent.
Bous's third edition (1646), was ordered to be printed on the recommendation of the Assembly of Divines; and later in the year this Version "and none other" was ordered by the House of Commons "to be sung in all churches and chapels within the kingdom." There was an earnest desire at this time on both sides of the border to agree on a version which might be a bond of uniformity in religion. But it was frustrated by two causes. The House of Lords inclined to a rival versifier, William Barton, minister of St. Martin's, Loicester (1st ed., 1644; 2nd, 1645); and they submitted his 3rd ed. (1646) to the Assembly of Divines, who, however, declined to authorise it. When Rous's version came up from the Commons, they referred it to a Committee, but never apparently sanctioned it. The Scots also were discontented with Rons, whom they suspected of heterod xy, us an adherent of Cromwell, and introduced considerable variations, derived from other versions, in their new Scottish Fralter (1650). [See Scottish Hymnody.] Confidence in Rous was short-lived in England. It may have been dissatisfaction with it which made Milton in 1648 attempt Pa. 80-8, which had a special significance to him at that crisis of the war (Masson). His versions are translated direct from the Hebrew. Hebrew words are printed in the margin : and every word not in the original is printed in italies. No better illustration of the literal principle of the Puritan translations can be given; and no one can say it was successful. He made another ossay in 1653, without this assertion of exceeding literalism, and in various metres, not easy to be sung; but the result is no better. Portions of Pss. 82, 85, 86, formed into a cento, "The Lord will come and not be slow," and part of Ps. 84, " How lovely are Thy dwellings fair," are found in some of our hymn-books; but the only one of real note is the 136th, "Let us with a gladsome mind," which he wrote at the age of fifteen. In 1651 Bp. King of Chichester, in the preface to his version, sneers, from the churchman's stand-point, at the failure of one of our "prætended Reformers" (probably Rous). And in 1654 appeared a new edition of Barton, which bore on its title-page a license for publication from Cromwell. A version by Thomas Lord Fairfax is mentioned in the preface to Cotton's Editions of the Bible; he quotes the 137th Psalm in stanzas of four long lines. It was never published.

XII. Bazter, Miles Smyth, Denham, Patrick.

From Sternhold to Rous the prevailing principle of translation was literal exactness; but the dreariness of all these efforts, and in some measure the grace of Sandys, now produced a demand for some literary excellence. In the preface to his version (written probably about this time, though not published till 1692), Richard Baxter says, after reviewing preceding versions, "The ear desireth greater melody, than strict versions will allow. in their measure the versions that followed the Restoration were an attempt in this direction. Examples may be seen in S. Woodford's verbose and pompons Pealter (1667); in Miles Smyth's, which is often smooth and melodious (1668); in Luke Milbourne (1698), who tried to adapt his metres to the music of Playford, who had recently edited Sternhold and Hopkins, and to that of Henry Lawes, found in Sandys's Pealter; and in the stately though monotonous L.M. of Sir John Denham (written at this time, though only published in 1715). But the difficulty lay in the decay of music, by which metres were more than ever restricted. Baxter adopted a plan of bracketed words, by which L.M. could be sung as c.M., or c.m. as s.m., for the use of ignorant congregations, but scarcely in the interest of literary success. A Century of Psalms was published by John Patrick, Preacher to the Charterhouse, brother of the Bishop, in 1679; and a complete version in 1691-2, which attained considerable success for its fidelity. It was not however exactly a literal version. It adopted a mode of evangelical interpretation, of which the germ exists in Parker, and which will be discussed at large under Watts. See § xv.

XIII. The New Version.

(1.) History.—The first instalment of Tate and Brady's Psalter is a sheet and a half, without date (Bodleian); the next is "The first XX. Psalms by N. Brady and N. Tate" (Bodleian) published as a specimen (1695). The complete version followed (1696), cutitled A New Version of the Pealms of David, Filted to the Tanes Used in Churches, By N. Tate and N. Brady (Brit. Mus.), and dedicated to William III. This edition was apparently subjected to criticism and revised; and in its settled form, which differs from each of the preceding essays in some of the metres and expressions, it was "sllowed" by the King in Conneil, and "permitted to be used in all churches, &c., as shall think fit to receive them," Dec. 3, 1696. This second edition was not published till 1698 (Brit. Mus.). [See Maw Version.] The Supplement thereto was authorised, in the same terms as the Pealter, by the Queen in Council, July 30, 1703.

(2) Value of Authorisation. - So far as liceuse to print was concerned, the royal "allowance" was not strictly necessary, as the Licensing Act had recently expired; but it was extremely politic. (See it again under § xvi.) The "permission" to use it in churches, &c., which is a distinct matter from the "allowance," whether actually necessary or not in order to legalise its adoption, was of great value. Under the sanction of the sovereign, and recommended by the Abp, of Canterbury and Compton, Bishop of London, The New Version presented itself as a settlement of the long dissatisfaction with Sternhold and Hopkins. Its success was not however universal. Beveridge (1710) wrote a vigorone protest against it, and in favour of the Old Version. He calls it a "New Version in deed," "fine and modish," "flourished with wit and faney," "gay and fashionable." He dilates on the inconvenience of two versions; calls it a breach of uniformity; " in time we might have one secundum usum London, another secundum usum Richmond (see Brady below), another secondum usum Sarum." He records the protests of congregations; one vestry had cast it out, after its introduction by the cleryman. It was then only used in a few churches in London. (3.) Character and Merits,-The material of the New Version may be thrown into three groups: 1. Psalms of an ornate character, with occasional vigour of rhythm, written mostly in L.M. and P.M. The best is 139th, "Thou, Lord, by strictest search host known." 2. A large quantity of very spiritless c.m., as poor in language as the literal versions. 3. A. fow examples of sweet and simple verse, such as the 34th, "Through all the changing scenes of life;" 42nd, "As pants the hart;" 51st, "Have mercy, Lord, on me;" and 84th, "Oh, God of hosts, the mighty Lord," which retain their hold on our hymn-books. There is nothing to shew cartainly how the work was divided between Tate and Brady: both were poets; it is plausible to attribute the ornate work, in which some have even suggested an occasional aid from his patron Dryden, to Tate. Another theory makes Brady the theological, Tate the poetical workman throughout. Boveridge's epithets suggest the general impression of the book. The artificial style of that period is applied to the Psalms: and in the hands of men of genius—far less in those of more versifiers—so alich a form could not have succeeded. "Tate's poor page" (Pope) has been abused as roundly as The Old Version. And yet one condemned to tread the waste of metrical Psalters will consider it an advanco on its predecessors, suffering more from its own success than comparison with them. And this merit is fairly theirs: they asserted successfully, and with an emphasis scarcely known before, literary and poetical excel-lence (according to their light) as a prin-ciple of translation, and the precedent thus set was seldom ignored afterwards. It has been gravely consured for want of fidelity by Keble and others. Traces of political allusion have also been pointed out. The curious reader may like to trace them in Pa 18, 37-43, in the courily complexion given to Ps. 101, 2-7, in a possible allusion to the queen, Ps.

45, 16, and in Ps. 107, 40 ("The prince, who alights what God commands, exposed to scorn must quit his throne")

(4.) Authors. - The New Version was the work of two Irishmen. Nahum Tate was the son of Faithful Teste, an Irish clergyman, author of some religious verses. He was b. in Dublin (1652), and educated at Trinity College. He wrote, under Dryden's superintendence, the second part of Absalom and Achitophel with the exception of about two hundred lines. He succeeded Shadwell as Poet Laureste. Among his works are Characters of Virtue and Vice (1691), Miscellanea Sacra, a selection from various writers (1696-8), and Panacea, a Poem on Tea. He is said to have been a man of intemperate and improvident life. He wrote a reply to Beveridge, defending the style of the version on literary grounds. (Essay on Pealmody, 1710.) He d. in London in 1715. Nicholas Brady was born at Bandon (1659). He was educated at Westminster, and went afterwards to Christ Church, Oxford, and to Trinity College, Dublin. From the latter he received the degree of D.D. for services to the Protestant cause. He was a Prebendary of Cork. In the Irish war he was an active adherent of William; and three times saved his native town from burning. Coming from Bandon with a petition to William, he remained in London, and was appointed Chaplain to the King; and afterwards (1702-5) He had Incumbent of Stratford on Avon. previously been minister of St. Catherine Cree's, and Lecturer of St. Michael's, Wood Street; probably holding some or all of these appointments in plurality. Notwithstanding the income derived from his appointments, his extravagance obliged him to keep a school, while incumbent of Richmond (1710). He died in 1726. Besides several volumes of ser-mons, he published a tragedy called The Rape, or the Innocent Impostors, and a poetical translation of the Encid of Virgil in four

XIV. J. Addison.

In the Spectator of 1712, were published the well-known paraphrases of the 19th Ps., "The spacious firmament on high," and the 23rd Ps., "The Lord my pasture shall prepare." They have been attributed to Marvell, but (see Addison, J., p. 18, ii.) are Addison's. They are found in many collections, and have been admired by good judges. The style is more florid than the New Version. The fault in both is, that the sense of God's Presence, which is so vivid in the original, is subordinated to the somewhat unreal description of landscape.

XV. Watte's Version.

The versification of the Psalms engaged the attention of Isaac Watts in his early days; a translation of Ps. 137, not included in his complete Psalter, is found in Reliquiz Juveniles. Paraphrases on Ps. 148 were published in the Horz Lyricz (1705); and at least half of the Psalms had been versified at the date of the publication of his Hymns (1707-9). Ps. 114 was published in The Spectator (1712); and the complete version (so far as his theory of completeness extended) in 1719; entitled, The Psalms of version (so far as his theory of completeness and cultivated language which was habitual extended) in 1719; entitled, The Psalms of to C. Wesley, but they are not of high poetical David imitated in the language of the New excellence. The best are Ps. 22, "Josus The Testament, &c. Taken as a whole it is not better than Tute and Brady. There is a want of restraining reverence about it; and the turgid epithets and gaudy ornament dishonour the simple grandeur of the original. Yet it contains some of his choicest pieces, such as Ps. 84, "Lord of the worlds above;" the noble Ps. 90, " Our God, our help in ages past;" Ps. 136, "Give to our God-immortal praise;" and one or two more. The Psalter is not really complete. Watts saw and was bold enough to say, that there were parts of the Psalter which could never be sung, and which were therefore useless as hymns. His renderings are paraphrases rather than translations. He breaks up the Pealme into different portions; sometimes, especially in Ps. 119, he selects and groups verses so as to produce a new hymn, and adds little prefatory stanzas. He utilized lines from his predecessors; some from Tate and Brady, more from Denham, most of all from Patrick. From Patrick also be borrowed the new principle, used long before by Luther, and by Parker, which he worked out elaborately—evangelical interprotation of the Psalms. To this, which is the really notable characteristic of the book, he devoted great pains, embodying in his verse the New Testament expositions of our Lord and the Apostles, exhibiting the Messianic Psalms in the light of the life of Christ, and expanding adumbration, type and prophecy, into their fulfilments. Such a mode of treatment was of course a new divergence from literalism, but a legitimate and fruitful one. No principle has such promise of future usefulness in the adaptation of the Psalter to the purposes of hymnology. The tender modern hymn by Sir H. W. Baker, "The King of Love my Shepberd is" (H. A. & M., 197) is an illustration; and Watts's version of Ps. 72, "Jesus shall reign where'er the sun," is a beautiful example of the principle and of his best style. At the same time it requires extreme caution and reverence, if it is to be kept from error. When he tried to push it beyond the guidance of Scripture, Watts was betrayed into such vulgarity as the substitution of Britain for Lorael, &c. A full exhibition of Watte's Israel, &c. Psalter will be found in the New Cong. H. Bk.

XVI. Blackmore, Wesley. Smart, Merrick, Basil Woodd, Dwight.

In 1721 appeared a Version by Sir Richard Blackmore, which was dedicated to George I., and on the recommendation of both the archbishops and fifteen bishops "allowed and permitted to be used in all churches, &c.," by order in Council, in precisely the same terms as The New Version. It is rather a reaction in the direction of naked literalism, and it made no way, notwithstanding its lofty patrons. In Anne Steele's Poems (1760) there are forty-seven renderings of Psalms. C. Wesley at one time or other translated nearly the whole Psalter. Some were published in 1738 and 1743; again in the Arminian Magazine, 1798-1801; and the whole are included in the Poetical Works of J. & C. Wesley, 1868-72. They are naturally expressed in the refined Good Shepherd is"; Ps. 121, "To the hills I lift mine eyes"; and especially Ps. 131, "Lord, if Thou Thy grace impart." Charles Wesley adopts freely Watta's system of evangelical interpretation. Christopher Smart published a version (1765), in which the introduction of New Testament matter is so great, that the characteristics of the Psalms are erased. In this book there is also a great variety of new metres, and among the rest that of Cowper's Alexander Schirk, found in Charles Wesley, and in Shenstone. James Merrick published a Psalter (1765) which attracted attention from the known learning of the author. It bears signs of the influence of Bp. Lowth's theories of Hebrew poetry, and was also approved by Secker. written in continuous lines, but was divided into stanzas for congregational use by Tattershall (1797), who added a prose paraphrase. It is weak and full of spithets. Montgomery calls it "immeasurable verbiage." Basil Woodd published a few psalms in 1794; other editions followed. The final one (1821) contained his own, with alternative renderings selected from Watts and Tate and Brady, &c. Timothy Dwight, the American theologian, published a revised edition of Watts (1800). A Version of s few Psalms by William Mason oppeared in 1797, and with additions in 1811: and another in the same year (1811) by William Goods.

A partial Version by Richard Cumberland (1801) may be mentioned for the sake of the author, not of the book.

XVII. Montgomery, Mant, Harriet Auber, Lyte,

James Montgomery's Songs of Zion (1822) contain nearly half of the Psalter. The sombre and plaintive verse of Ps. 39, "Lord, let me know mine end"; and Ps. 63, "Oh God, Thou art my God alone"; are fine examples of lonely and sorrowful trust. The 131st, "Lord, for ever at Thy side," is of a tenderer character. Ps. 91, "Call Jehovah thy Salvation"; and Ps. 103, "Oh my soul, with all thy powers," are soft and musical. Far the finest is the rich and splendid Messianic hymn which few perhaps recognise as a Paraphrase of Ps. 72, "Hail to the Lord's Anointed." Bishop Mant published a version (1824) composed with great care, and founded much on Lowth's Lectures. But the language is cold, and the Psalms assume the form of stiff and stately odes. Harriet Auber's Spirit of the Psalms was published anonymously (1829), edited by a clergyman. She mously (1829), edited by a clergyman. She uses evangelical interpretation freely. Several renderings are full of gentle melody, such as Ps. 45, "With hearts in love abounding"; Ps. 78, "Whom have we, Lord, in heaven but Thee"; and Ps. 78, "Oh praise our great and gracious Lord." A book with the seme title, The Spirit of the Psalms, was published (1834) by H. F. Lyte. Though it touches nearly the whole Psalter, and though there are a few among the heat that have a joyous tone such among the best that have a joyous tone, such as the sunny rendering of Ps. 84, "Pleasant are Thy courls above;" still it is with the tenderness and tearfulness of the Psalms that he is most deeply penetrated. His renderings are seldom close translations; they are either free paraphrases, or the expansion of a few verses, as a theme, with free interweaving of his own thoughts and metaphors, and perhaps for this reason they are less known than they deserve. Ps. 55, "Oh had I, my Saviour, the wings of a dove," a successful treatment of an undignified metre, illustrates his habit of isolating the sad part of a psalm. Ps. 91, "There is a safe and secret place," is good; and "Far from my heavenly home," exactly represents his method and his tenderness. Few probably are aware that it is founded on Ps. 187, "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down; yee, we wept, when we remembered Zion."

XVIII, John Keble.

The Pealter or Pealme of David in English verse, by a member of the University of Oxford (1889) is the work of the revered John Keble. That he should have deemed such a thing worth doing, is, in some sort, a measure of the advance of the last forty years in the matter of church music. There was "small hope," he thought, that the custom of chanting the psalme would come in; and therefore, despite his conviction that the Hebrew was intended for chanting, not singing, and that success was "impossible," because the form and tone of English metro and Hebrew parallelism were irreconcilable, he set him-self to improve the Metrical Version, "adhering reverentially to the meaning of the original." He submitted the work to Dr. Pusey. The adverse criticism which has been given had been anticipated by Keble himself. The close adherence to the terseness and the images of the Hebrew has produced some constraint and obscurity. But in the judgment of the present writer no other version has such refinement of diction, sustained merit, lyric force and fire, and flashes of imaginative energy. There are occasional traces of the influence of Scott's chivalrous phrases. Ps. 93, "God the Lord a king remaineth," is one of the finest. Ps. 46, "God our Hope and Strength abiding," is of the same order, but less chestened; chaic, Ps. 96, "Sing the song unheard before," is good; as also Ps. 135, "Sound high Jehovah's Name"; Ps. 136, "Praise the Lord, for He is Love;" and Ps. 148, "Praise ye the Lord from heaven."

XIX. Churton, Sir R. Grant, Conder, Hookham Frere, Trower, &c.

The Cleveland Psalter, by Archdeacon Churton (1854), is one of the best versions. It is written in firm, equal, and melodious verse, and though inferior to Keble in spirit and freshness, and high imagination, avoids his abraptness and compression by a slightly looser texture, and greater liberty of translation. Though thoroughly an original work, it adopts ideas and lines from the ancient Anglo-Saxon Version which Churton attributes to Aldhelm (see § 111), from Wyatt, Sidney, Sandys, Miles Smyth and Keble. Portions of Ps. 16, "Lord keep me, for I trust in Thee"; Ps. 57, "Vex not thy soul for men of pride," are in S. P. C. K. Ps. and Hys.: Ps. 67, "God of grace, oh let Thy light," is in H. A. & M. (364). Ps. 64, "Lord, to my and voice attending"; and Ps. 131, "Lord, my heart is with the lowly," are like Herbert.

The best is Ps. 96, "Raise the psalm; let earth adoring" in Kennedy, 1863, and the Wes. H. Bl. (604), 1875. A smooth, fairly-sustained Version, but deficient in spirit, had been published (1831) by Bp. Trower (revised in 1875). Sir Robert Grant had published some renderings early in the century, among which is the fine ornamentation of the old 104th, "Oh worship the King." J. Conder's Ps. 113, "Hallelujah, raise oh raise," is a lyric of great brightness and jubilance. A Selection of Psalms by Hookham Frers was privately printed, see his Poetical Works (1872). The Symmetrical Psalter by W. Vernon Harcourt appeared in 1856, and The Cambridge Psalter by Dr. Kennedy in 1860 (revised 1876).

XX. Recent Versions,

The reader of this sketch will have observed that in one aspect it is the history of the long tonacious struggle of the Metrical Paulter against the growing power of original conflict has been now long ended, and the task of versifying the Pealms greatly simplifled by enfranchisement from the routine metres. But fresh efforts are still made under these freer conditions. A version of considerable freshness, freedom, and spirit appeared in 1863, with an irregular structure of verse, by Mr. A. Malet. The Companion Psatter, by Rev. T. R. Birks (1874), is a valuable compilation of the choicest pieces of preceding versions, and contains several of his own developments of the meditative psalms. His lyric measures are often soft and melodious; he introduces freely Evangelical ideas; but they are not always the legitimate unfolding of the psulm, and sometimes the groundwork is scarcely perceptible. Ps. 19, "The heavens declare Thy glory": Ps. 20, "O Christ, whose intercession": Ps. 80, "Oh King of Mercy"; and Ps. 89, "O comfort of the weary"; are good specimens. The Marquess of Lorne published alternate renderings of the Scottish Version (1877). The late Dr. Irons promised a complete version, written with special attention to Hebrew parallelisms; an instalment of it appeared in 1875. The latest versions are by Digby Seymour (1882), and Digby S. Wrangham (1885).

Among the efforts to make the Psalter compete with original hymns may be noted Matthew Henry's Family Hymns (really selected Fadms, 1695); Dorrington's Devotions in Fadms and Hymns and Spiritual Songs, arranged as a hymnbook for Sundays, &c.; Select Fadms and Hymns for the use of St. James's Westminster (1697). The most interesting is an arrangement by Romains (1775), to which is prefixed an essay in defence of the Old Version, a stremous protest against the growing power of Wesley's hymns.

XXI. Conclusion.

The quotations in the foregoing sketch shew that metrical psalms still contribute largely to our hymnals. The least successful renderings have been those of the Messianic psalms. Nor have the penitential psalms yielded much for Lenten use. In one or two lustances the dauntless trust of the Psalmists has been nobly reproduced. And for the worship of the messes certain grand and simple psalms are unequalled. The indirect in-fluence of the long tutelage of the Psalter must not be lost sight of. It gave to our carlier bymns a severity, a breadth, an objective tone, and a wide and deep base in nutural religion. Nowhere is the glory of God in his works to magnificently exhibited os in the Psalms, and the strength of the presentation is grounded on the whole power of the works in themselves, not on some single and perhaps sentimental aspect of the works. Nowhere is the jubilance of praise, unchecked by the chilling and irrelevant thought-true and sad as it is -of the sinfulness and inadequacy of our utterance, so majestic. These characteristics are impressed deeply on Watts; and they are of abiding value, as a counterpoise to the morbid emotion, effeminacy, self-consciousness, and anatomy of motives, which make some modern hymns so sickly. The influence of the Psalter on English hymns is by no means worked out. It may take new forms, select and develop more freely from the ideas, but it is impossible that the Psalms can cease to inspire many of the deepest, tenderest, most intense utterances in future hymns. [H. L. B.]

Psalters, English. Minor Versiflers, Biographical articles of the greater versifiers of the Psalms named in the foregoing catalogue, are given under their respective names in this Dictionary. In the notes given below the writers of less importance, either in themselves or in the work which they have done in paraphrasing the Psalms in metre, are grouped together in alphabetical order; and a reference number is added to aid in tracing out each person's work in the article on Psalters, Versions in English, p. 936.

Bartholomew, Alfred. From his Sucred Lyrics, 1821, we gather that he was an architect. B. 1801, d. 1845. [No. 227.]

Beamant, John. From his Original Psalats, 1834, the following have been transferred to Spurgeon's O. O. H. His., 1866:—(1) "I'll bless my Saviour, tod.," Ps. exile. (2) "Lord, I daily call on Thee." Ps. call. (3) "Many times since days of youth." Ps. caxis. (4) "Praise ye Jehovah, shout and sing." Ps. excisit. [No. 243.]

Psalters, French. The French Psalters, in common with the English, the German, and others, require a distinct history from the hymnody of the same nation.

Clément Marot.

1. Very few trs. of the Pealms have been found prior to the great Psalter of Maret and Beza. The germ of this work was Ps. 6, attached to the Miroir de tres chrestienne Princesse Marguerite de la France Royne de for his present of 30 Psalms, and asked him to versify for him "Confitemini Domino" (prob. Рв. 18).

2. The earliest printed psalms by Marot emanated from the Protestant party of the Reformation, and it is not clear from what source Calvin obtained them. The text also of these early psalms differs from the first edition afterwards pub. by Marot himself. In an unique book in the library at Munich, entitled Aulouns Pseaumes et Cantiques mys en chant, Strasbourg, 1539-the earliest effort of Calvin to introduce singing into public worship at Strasburg—there are 18 pealms, together with the Song of Simeon, the Creed, and Ten Commandmenta. There are melodies to each piece.

Of these pasims 13 are, in a form varied from his own Of these pasins 13 are, in a form varied from his own subsequent ed. of 14x, by Marot, (Fes. 1, 2, 3, 15, 19, 32, 51, 103, 114, 115, 130, 137, 143.) Of the other pieces, two (Fes. 113 and the Creed) are in proce. The other pieces (Fes. 25, 36, 4e, 91, 138, The Song of Simeon, and The Tea Commandments) are strongly marked off from Marot's pieces by their inversions, want of feminine rhymes, and German melodies. They are probably by Calvin https://

3. In 1541 appeared Pealmes de David. translatez de plusieurs autheurs, et principalle-ment de Cle. Murol, veu, recongneu et corrigé par les theologiens, nommeement par M. F. Pierre Alexandre, concionateur ordinaire de la Royne de Hongrie. Anvers. (An unique copy is in the possession of M. Henri Lutteroth.) The contents of this volume are 30 pealms by Marot, and 15 by ten or eleven different authors. Some of these latter are alternative versions of the same pealm. Tunes of the day are named for one of Marot's pealms and nine of the others. The text of the 30 pealms of Marot, though, in the 13 Pss. named above, identical with that found in the Strasburg edition, differs from that of Marot's own edi-tion (1512) of these same 30 psalms. Pierre Alexandro may have received Marot's psalms from the Queen of Hungary, who may herself have obtained them from her brother Charles V. Alexandre was inclined to the Huguenot doctrinea, and at a later period (1555) became pastor of the Reformed congregation at Strasburg.

4. A very curious Liturgy (of which there is an unique copy in M. Gaiffe's possession) appeared in 1542.

La manyere de faire prieres aux eglises francoytes ... ensemble pistulines et canticques francoys quom chante aux dictés eglises ... (the title is of great length). At the end of the pealing there is the following the control of the pealing there is the following the control of the pealing there is the following the control of the pealing there is the following the control of the pealing there is the following the control of the pealing there is the following the control of the pealing there is the following the pealing the pealing the control of the pealing the p ing note: "Imprime & Rome par le commandement du Pape, par Théodore Bruss Allemant, son imprimeur ordinaire." The Pasims in this edition comprise all the ordinarje." The Faalms in this edition comprise all the pealms by Marot and others in the Strasburg ed. (1889); the other 17 pealms of Marot contained in the Antwerp ed., and 4 others from the same book (487d signed "C. D.," 120th anon, 130th signed "A.," 142nd signed "D."). To these are added the Song of Simeon, Creed, and Ten Commandments of the Sitasburg book, and Bexa. The germ of this work was Ps. 6, attached to the Miroir de tres chrestienne Priacesse Marguerite de la France Royne de Navarre, Duchesse d'Alençon (1583). At least 13 others must have been fr. by 1539 (§ 2). In 1540 the psalms which Marot had then written and circulated in ms., were in the highest favour with Francis I., Catherine de Medicia, the Dauphin, and the court. They were sung to ballad tunes. Charles V. rewarded Marot with 200 golden doubloons privileges du Pape." The internal evidence afforded by a comparison of the liturgical portions with subsequent liturgies at Geneva (1542) and Strasburg (1545) is consistent with this assumption. The printer was very probably Johan Knobloch. Pierre Brully, the pastor, was perhaps the editor.

 In the library at Stattgart there is an unique copy of Calvin's first Liturgy pub. at Geneva, entitled

"La forma det prieres et chants ecclisiastiques aucc la maniere d'administrer les Sacrement, et consacrer le mariage, seton la constume de l'Eglise Ancienne, 1842."

There is no name of place or printer; but the device of an clive branch, ending in an ornamental "G.," is known to be the mark of Jean Gérard or Girard, a Genevan printer. The liturgical contents of this volume are of great interest; but the only portion of them that concerns our subject is the preface, which exhibits Calvin's sentiments on the use of music in public worship.

The Psalms are a reprint of those in the last-mentioned ed., known as the Pseudo-Roman, with the comission of the prose 118th Ps., and the 4 by various authors (43, 116, 136, 142). The other pleces of the Pseudo-Roman are also reprinted, with the exception of the prose Creed, which is exchanged for Matol's Creed, pub. in the Mirrir. Some slight alterations are made in the text of the Psalms. But considerable alteration is made in the melodies. Only 17 are common to this and the Pseudo-Roman ed., and modifications which lessen their German character are made in these. There are 22 new melodies, 14 as substitutes for rejected tunes of the sailor edition, 8 substitutes for rejected tunes of the sailor edition, 8 substitutes for rejected tunes of the sailor edition, 8 substitutes for rejected tunes of the sailor edition, 8 substitutes for rejected tunes of the sailor edition, 8 substitutes for rejected tunes of the sailor edition, 8 to the total possible to them. This musical contribution is probably the work of Louis Bourgeois.

A second ed. of this bock, probably only a reprint with no material alteration, is known to have been pub later in the year. These several editions show plainly that for nearly three years the psalms of Marot were in favour alike in the Cathelic court and the Hugmenot worship.

In 1542, Marot himself pub. his 30 Psalms.
 The title of the book is—

Trente Pregulmes de David, mis en francoys par Clement Marot, valet de chambré du Roy, aute privilege. Imprimé a Paris, n. p. (An unique copy is in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris.)

It contains the privilege from the King, dated Nov. 80th, 1541; an epistle dedicatory to Francis 1, not without evidences of real religious feeling, in which Marot contrasts the true inspiration of David with the fabled muse of Greece and Rome; and the 30 Pss. of the other editions (1-15, 19, 22, 24, 82, 37, 38, 51, 103, 104, 113, 114, 115, 130, 137, 149). At the head of some of the Psalms are short indications of the nature of the metre, but no suggestions of melodies, and no music. The text of this ed varies, as has been said, greatly from that in the editions noticed in the last section. Whether both texts are by Marot himself, or whether the sditions of 1539 and 1541 represent a text revised by other hands than his, it is difficult to decide.

M. Donen has printed the principal variations in the first 3 Paslum, and pronounces that the Paris text is infinitely superior in elegance and rhyme; that in only 4 places (of these 3 Pas.) are the variations in the other ditions more literal than in Marct's: and that of these 4 Marct bimself adopted 3 in his ed. of 1843. On the ground of its superiority, and of the phrases on the Antwerp title-page ("reconguenetcorrige"), which indicate revision in that ad., he decides that the Paris ed. for the first time prints Marct's genuine text, and that the others whibit a text that has been sitered by Pierre Alexandre and the Theologians. To this verdict however the 13 Pec, in the Strasburg ed. (1639) which are identical in text with those of Pierre Alexandre's book (1541) are a considerable objection. The imprimator of Pierre Alexandre also in the Autwerp ed., does not seem necessarily to indicate extensive alteration, for be says, "nec in Ipso reperi quod poests plus aures offendere:" and the other 14 pealms by various authors would share the revision with the 30 of Marct.

7. The publication of the 30 Psalms drove Marct from France to Geneva. Though the privilege for it had been signed by three doctors of theology, the book was condemned by the Sorbonne, and Marct was only saved from arrest by flight. In August, 1543, he pub., evidently at Geneva, Cinquante Pseaumes en francois par Clement Marot. Hem une Epistre par luy naqueres envoyée aux dames de France.

The contents of this book are :-

An Episile to the Ladies of France; an Episile to the King; the 30 paslms already pub., revised and corrected; 20 fresh pealins (the Song of Elmeon counting as one); the Commandments, the Articles of the Faith (the Creed); the Lord's Prayer; the Angelic Salutation; and two prayers, one before, one after meals. The Episile to the King is very betef. It contains an allusion to the fact that France had commanded hip to continue the work of translation. The Episile to the Ladles of France is in the courtier vein. He bids them quit their love songs to Cupid to sing Him, Who is love indeed, "O bien heureux qui voir pomra, Fleurir le temps que l'on ofra Le laboureur à sa charue, Le chartetler parmi la rue, Et l'artisan en as boutique aveques un Pseaume ou Cantique En son labeur es soulager." The new pealms are Pss. 19, 23, 25, 33, 38, 43, 46, 46, 58, 72, 79, 86, 91, 101, 107, 110, 113, 128, 128. There is no music to this ed. A few months later however an ed. (now lost) of these Fifty Pealms, with mostic, was pub. along with the liturgy and Catechism by Calvin. The 5 psalms, generally assigned to Calvin, which had hitherto comé down from the Stransburg ed. (1539) were in this ed. replaced by Manu's.

8. Marot's death (1544) arrested the progress of the Genevan Pealter. But his pealme were utilised in other quarters. Editions of them appeared in Paris, Lyons, Strasburg, and Geneva; 16 of which are extant. The Strasburg ed. of 1545, printed 10 of the new psalms, together with the psalms and pieces of Marot and others in the Pseudo-Roman ed., the Commandments by Marot, and a hymn, "Salutation à Jésus-Christ," beginning "Jo Te salue, mon certain Rédempteur" (p. 579 i.) Louis Bourgeois pub. a harmonised ed. of the Cinquante Pseaumes in 1547. A compilation of Marot's psalms, 29 by Gilles d'Aurigny, 42 by Robert Brincel, 31 by "C. R." and "Cl. B," forming an entire Psalter, was pub. in Paris (1550). And Poitsvin's 100 pealms (Poictiers 1550) were bound up, in later editions, with Marct's 50 as a complete Psalter.

ii. Completion of the Pealter by Beza.

I. The Genevan Psalter was completed by Théodore de Beze, at the request of Calvin, who had found on his table a tr. of Pa. 16. The first instalment of them was principally written at Lausanne. On March 24, 1551, he requested from the Council of Geneva permission to print "the rest (le reste) of the Psalms of David," which he "has had set to music," and asked for a privilege of exclusive sale. They were however very far from being completed at that date; and on June 24 Calvin wrote to Viret asking Beza to send what psalms he had, without waiting for the versification of their companions. Accordingly before the year closed there appeared:—

Trente quatre pseumnes de David muneltement mis en rime françoise au plus pres de l'Hebreu, par Th. de Besse de Vezelay, en Bourpogne. Geneue. 1651.

This volume contains a dedicatory epistle, "A l'Eglise de nostre Seigneur," and the new pealms by Beza.

psalms by Beza.

The Psalms are: 18, 17, 20, 21, 28, 27, 28, 29, 36, 31, 43, 35, 38, 46, 21, 42, 44, 47, 73, 90, 116, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 129, 131, 132, 133, 134. The dedicatory epistic is justly culogised by MM. Deuer and kemper between the two poets. In place of the lighter grace, the classical and mythological allusions, and the courtier vein of Marut's addresses to the King and the Ladles of France, we have the strong firm tone, the contempt of worldly postry, the sense of endurance, hardness, even scorn, left by persecution, which marks the Huggenot theologian. The Church to which he dedicates his work is the "petts troupean," which, despite its lowliness is the treasure of the earth, the kings he honours are not Francis the king of flatterers, but the champions of the Reformation in Germany and Edward VI. of England. There is however a high culogium of Marot, "Las! to es mort sans anot succeed the against laisse au monde, Beete poète homme, qui te seconde Volta, pour quot quand la mort te rault, Auecques toy se tent auest Dauld."

2. In 1554, 6 new psalms (52, 57, 63, 64, 65,

2. In 1554, 6 new psalms (52, 57, 63, 64, 65, 111), 4 of them without melodies, the other 2 set to previous tunes, were added as an appendix to the combined ed of Marot and Beza which had been pub. under the title of Pseannes Octante trois in 1552. In an ed. without date, Ps. 67, the Song of Moses, the Song of Simeon, and the Ten Commandments are added.

3. The various volumes extant show no further increase of pieces until 1562, when the complete Psalter appeared, entitled

Les Pseaumes mis en rime françoise par Clément Marot et Throdore de Heze,

The privilege for this ed., obtained from Charles IX. (!), is dated Dec. 25, 1561. It was printed for Antoine Vincent at Geneva, Paris, Lyous, Caen, and other places, in 24 editions at least of that year. There are 60 new psalms, and 40 new melodies; the total of melodies is raised to 125. The Pater Noster and the Creed are no longer included; the Song of Simeon and the Ton Commandments are alone appended.

4. The music of the Psalter is beyond our scope. It is treated fully in M. Douen's work, in a series of articles in The Musical Times (1881), and in several articles of The Dietionary of Music. The melodies in the Strasburg ed. (1539) are of Gorman descent. The editor of the Genevan psaltors (1542-5 probably, 1545-57 certainly) was Louis Bourgeois. Only 11 of the Strasburg melodies are retained in the complete Psalter, most of them in a modified form; 74, the finest in the Pselter, are by Bourgeois; the 40 of 1562 are by an unknown hand. Side by side with the work of Bourgeois, Guillaume Franc, cantor at Lausanne, wrote in 1551 melodics for the pealine then recently translated by Beza, and obtained a licence to print them at Geneva, together with the original melodics to Mayot's pealms. Nothing further however, as for as is known, was done until 1565, when a psalter was printed at Geneva for use at Lausanne. The bulk of the tunes in this psalter were derived from that of Geneva, 4 melodies by Bourgeois, and 15 by the unknown editor of 1562. The new tunes introduced by Franc were 46 in numher, of which 26 were by himself, one from the mian, Polish, Latin, and even Hebrew. In first Genevan pealter of 1542, and afterwards omitted, with 19 from other sources. Harmonised editions, though never admitted for public worship, were printed from the first. Among these may be maned 50 Pealms by Bourgeois in 5 parts (1545); 3I Pealms by Pierre Certon (1546) for the Sainte Chapelle, at Paris (!); Goudinel's three celebrated editions (1564, 1565, 1566), the latest of great elaboration; Claude Le Jenne's (pub. posthumously in 1601). The immense popularity of the music contributed largely to the wide spread of the Pealter in translations, the melodies necessitating the adoption of the French metree.

5. The fortunes of the Genevan Psalter, thus completed, were brilliant and singular. Its use even among Catholics did not cease for awhile. It was among the books which Francis I. cherished on his deathbod. Henry II. used one of Beza's psalms as a hunting song (!). Among the Huguenots, psalm-singing became universal. Catholic troops, wishing to disguise their identity, would raise a psalm. Crowds sang psalms in the streets. At the Pré aux Clercs, multitudes, among whom were the King and Queen of Navarre, sang them enthusiastically. In Poitou the Catholic curé mixed pealms with the Latin hymns. Florimond de Rémond, a contemporary author, dates the foundation of the Huguenot Church by the practice of psalmsinging. The necessity of conciliating the Huguenot power accounts for the singular fact that Charles IX., and Charles V. (probably really the Duchess of Parma, acting as his Vicegerent) in the Low Countries, granted a privilege for the sale of the book. MM. Douen and Bovet have collected together the glorious and touching records of its use on the battle-field and at the stake in the days of Coligny, and in the dragonnades after, the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. The 65th was the psalm of buttles. The 51st, the Song of Simeon and others, were sung in the flames. The number of editions of the book is enormous. The splendid bibliography of M. Douen gives 1400 editions of French metrical psalters, far the largest share of which is composed of Marot and Beza's psalms. The influence of this book extended far beyond France. In German, 50 of these psalms were translated by Melissus of Heidelberg, at the command of the Elector Palatine Frederick II, (1572). A complete version, following the text, metres, and melodies of the French, presented (1565) to Albert of Brandenburg, was pub. by Ambrosius Lobwasser, a Lutheran (1573), with Goudinel's harmonies. Though never accepted by the Lutherans, it became the recognised Pealter of Germany and German Switzerland, and was frequently revised in the 17th and 18th cents. Serving as an original, it was re-translated in several dialects of the Grisons (among others in Italian) and in Danish. The Dutch version of Dathenus (1566) became the universal Dutch Psalter of the Low Countries: 30 revisions of it, all preserving the French metres and melodies, were made before its displacement by a new version (1773). To these may be added tre. from the French into Italian, Spanish, BoheEngland a volume entitled All the French Palls Tunes with English Words (1632) is in the British Museum, Lambeth and Lincoin Cathedral libraries. At the end of a French tr. of the Liturgy of the Church of England, dedicated to George I. (1719, London), perhaps for the Savoy Church, the psalms of Marct and Beza are printed. In England's Hallelyith, by John Vicars (1631), are Divers of David's Psalmes according to the French forms and metre. The influence of the French on the O. V. of England and Scotland is only perceptible in a few French tunes and metres; 30 of the Scottish, and a smaller number of the English melodies are French. Pss. 50, 104, 120, 121, 124, 127, 129, in the English, and Pss. 102, 107, 110, 118 in the Scottish version are identical in melody with the corresponding French Psalms.

6. The general verdict of critics from the time of Voltaire to that of Sainte-Beuve has been severe. MM. Bovet and Douen are more kindly. Yet the former speaks strongly of the wearisomeness, diffuseness, inversions, obscurity, and vulgar, even gross, expressions in the work of Beza, and the prosy commonplace, inversion and coarseness in the far better verso of Marot. The judgment of the 16th and 17th cents, when the antiquated language was current, and the coarseness less perceptible, was full of eulogy. Out of the wide variety of subject matter, emotions and poetical style which the Pselter exhibits, the simplicity, plaintiveness, lyric grace, and subjective meditation are those bost reproduced in Marot's choicest pieces, descending through him into the body of French hymns. The striking variety of metre evidently impressed Kethe and Whittingham, and an imitation of it was ineffectually attempted by them, as a relief to the humdrum monotony of the English and Scottish versions. The solidity, the breadth, the celebration of God in nature, on the other hand, which passed from our Old Version into the work of Watts, has no counterpart in the French Pealter, or the hymns that succeeded it. The contrast is due doubtless to deeper differences in the genius of the nations. The merit of fidelity has been generally conceded. The work of Marot was based on the direct translation from the Hebrew by Vatable, and perhaps other Hebrew studies. Beza was a deep student of the Psalms, as well as a theologian.

The Revised Psalters of the Reformed Church and Independent Versions.

1. The version of Marot and Beza was the psalm-book of the Reformed Church. The French Lutheran Church, which from the first used hymns in worship, felt less the necessity of a complete Psalter. The Frankfurt Pseaumes, Hymnes, et Cantiques (1612) contains 35 psalms by Matthieu Barthol. M. Donen also mentions in his bibliography Les Pseaumes de Danid, auec les hymnes de D. M. Luther et autres docteurs de l'Eglise mis en vers françois selon la rime et composition allemande. Montbeliard, 1618. More than 50 versions were pub, in the interval that proceded the revision of Marot and Beza. Two—a poor one by the Abbe Philippe Des Portes (1591), and that by Godeau, bishop of Grasse (1644), to which Louis XIII. contributed four tones, and which was interdicted, because the Huguenots, forbidden for the time to sing their own psalms, adopted it—were efforts within the Roman Church. Those of Baif (1587), J. B. Chassignet (1613), Bacan (1631), Desmarets do Saint-Sorlin (1680), were not intended for music. Louis des Manures (1557), Cardinal du Perron (1589), Malherbe (1630), Corneille, Racine, and his son Louis, have left partial translations. In the Reformed Church Charles de Navières, of the suite of the Prince of Orango, pub. (1580) a version, as an improvement in versification on Marot and Beza. Diodatis Psalter (1646) testifies to the growing unpopularity ("atticdissemens et desgontemens") of the French old version, but was not designed for public use.

2. The great change in the French language towards the close of the 16th cent made the old version grotesque and antiquated. "Feople feared," says M. Bovet, "that the passage of time would gradually make the Psalms unintelligible, and that the reproach of being written in a dead language would be as true of them as of the Latin." The general decision of the synods was for a revision, preserving the metres, and departing as little as possible from the old version. The author of it was Valentine Contart, the eminent founder of the French Academy. The first ed. is entitled—

Le Livre des Psaumes en vers françois. Par Cl. Harot et Th. de Bere. Rétouchet par feu Monsieur Conrart, l'onseiller Secretaire du Roy... Fremière partie, 1677.

It contained only 51 psalms, which are admitted to be the work of Conrart alone. The complete version—was to some extent perfected by La Bastide. to whom Conrart had entrusted his uss. Gilbert's Psalter asserts in the proface that La Bustide had made such large changes in Courant's text, that the 99 new psalms are only nominally his. But M. Bovet's examination of the evidence decides—on the ground of the expressions in the preface to the ed. of 1677, and the universal ascription of the version to Conrart alone, without mention of La Bastide, in letters and acts of synods of the timethat La Bastide's alterations were probably triffing. Conrart's Psalter, though called a revision, and preserving here and there some phrases, and throughout the metres of the old version, is in reality The French New Version. When allowance is made for the difficult couditions of production, M. Bovet pronounces it, though unequal and sometimes deficient in spirit, a remarkable work; recalling in parts the naive simplicity and lyric movement of Marot, in others the noble solemnity of the classic language of the 17th cent.

3. The distressed condition of the French Hugnenots under Louis XIV. preventing the authorization of this book in France, the French exiles at Zurich appealed to the Church of Geneva as the chief of the French Reformed Churches, to take up the matter. In reply the Venerable Company of Pastors appointed three of their body, Benedict Picici, De la Rive, and Calandrin to review the version, adding as a special instruction, that they should remove all phrases that savoured of Jewish imprecations against their enomies. The work was principally done by Pictet. Saurin, an avocat of Nismea, also assisted the editors. Completed in 1693, pub. in 1695, the title of this edition seems to have been:

Les Ptannes de Bavid mis en Vers françois. Revis de nouvan sur les précédents etitions, et approuvés par les Pasteurs et Projecteurs de l'Église et de l'Academie de Genève. (Title of 3th ed. 1701. The 1st ed. la loct.)

The text of Conrart is for the most part retained, with occasional reversions to the language of the Old Version, and occasional excision of phrases of it, which Conrart had spared. First used in public worship at Geneva in 1698, it was sent (1699) by the Venerable Company to the other Reformed Churches, and generally adopted by the French refugees in Switzerland, and the national Churches of Erguel and Neuchâtel. The Church of Berlin reserved to itself the right to make a few alterations, which were carried out by Beausobre, whom Frederick the Great called "the best pen in Berlin," and his subsequent colleague in the translation of the New Testament, Leufant. The title of this version is Les Pseaumes de Bavid en vers. Nouv. Ed. retouchée une derniere fois sur toules celles qui ont précédé, 1702.

The Church of the United Provinces, under the leadership of Jurieu, resenting the assumption of primacy by Geneva, made a longer resistance. Bitter recriminations passed, and the adoption of the new version was stigmatized as an act of schism. An unsuccessful attempt was made to produce a version of their own, and they fell back on the old version. After Jurieu's death, Conrart's version was made the base of a new revision, which is entitled:—

Les Pecaumes de David mis en vers françois et revis par ordre du Synode Walon det Provinces-Unies. 1720.

It was authorized by the States General in 1727.

4. The era of Courart and Pictet marks the beginning of decline. The new versions never attained the popularity of the old. The unguitability for singing, not only of the impreca-tions, but of other portions more plainly showed itself. They ceased to be sung as a whole; and the selection in actual use continually narrowed. Voltaire expended his ridicule on them. Even the music began to give way to new melodies. (The carliest substitution is by De Camus (1760), who abuses the old music roundly.) Hymns pushed out the Psalms more and more at the close of the 18th century. The collections of St. Gall (1771) and Berlin (1791) have only from 50 to 60 Psalms. The Walloon Collection retained the whole Psalter, with a Supplement of hymns (1802). The ed. of Bourrit, resulting from several commissions of the Churches of France and Geneva (1828). contained the whole Psalter in an abbreviated form, with several new melodies and alterations of the old ones. That of Gallot of Neuchâtel (1830) was made on the same principle. Wilhem (1840) pub. a complete Psalter, with changes in the music, alteration of antiquated expressions and softening of the imprecations. The Recueil des Peaulmes et Cantiques, Paris, 1859, has only 70 psalms; some of these fragments.

5. A few among the 130 names in M. Douen's list of persons in the 18th and 19th centuries. who have dealt with the peniter, must be added. Lefranc de Pompignan, Père Manuel, and the Abbe Pellegrin are known also as writers of hymns. Gabriel Gilbert, Resklent of Queen Christina of Sweden at Paris, wrote a version (1680). Several versions by Pierre Symond, Jennet, Rivasson, and Joneourt appeared in the United Provinces during Jurieu's opposition to the Genevese revision. The seventeen odes of J. B. Rousseau, founded on the Psalms (1721), have been greatly admired. That on Ps. 18, "Les cieux instruisent" is in C.U. The Psautier Evangelique of Daniel Zacharie Chatelain (1781) is an exam-ple of that treatment of the Paslma, which was common among the followers of Luther, and which Watta claborated-expansion of the Fealms, in the light of their evangelical ful-filment. César Malan (q.v.) pub. Les Chants de Sion (50 psalms) in 1824, and a completo psalter, Les Chants d'Israel, in 1885. The version and the music are new. Among recent editions may be named a Roman Catholic version, approved by Morlot, Abp. of Tours, Les Psaumes mis en Quatrains par un ancien Magistrat (Fey), 1814; that by Hector de St. Maur (1866), commended by M. Bovet : and that of Do la Jugie (1863), esteemed by M. Douen the best of modern versions.

Public School Hymn-Books, Engligh. Introduction. - One or two relies of the use of the Latin Hymns in our Public and Grammar Schools have been discovered and preserved in a small volume, edited by Rev. W. Hewett, and entitled Sacra Academica. A Collection of Latin Prayers now or lately used in certain Colleges and Schools in England, 1865. At Winchester a metrical Latin rendering of Psalm 130, "To de profundis, Summe Ber," was sometimes sung after grace. The hymn "Jam lucis orto sidere," used to be sung on certain days, while the boys walked in procession round Chamber Court. In The Psalms, Hymns, Prayers, Graces and Dules Domum used by the Scholars of Winchester College, 1845, it is described as "Hymnus Matutinus die Recessionis ante Festum Peute-The use of this hymn may have been the germ from which Ken's "Awake, my soul" originally sprung. It is still occessionally originally sprung. of Dr. Kente's Headmastership, 1830-3, the hymn "Salvator mundi, Domine" formed part "Jesu Redemptor of the Evening Office. omnium" was used in 1575 at the Thame Grammar School among the prayers before leaving school. These are in all probability survivals of a very general if not universal use of the Latin hymns at our old founda-

The hymn-books of the English Public Schools are part of the modern hymn movement, and scarcely connected with this use of Latin hymns. Taking the hymn-books in chronological order, the Schools represented

i. Rugby. - The earliest of our modern Public School Hymn-Books is Psalms and Hymns for the Use of Rugby School Chapel. It was in use in 1837. There were perhaps two editions during Arnold's lifetime; the text in this book of the hymn by J. H. Gurney, "We saw Thee not when Thou didst tread" (q.v.), is said to be a revision of Gurney's original by Buckoll. The earliest accessible edition (1850) of this book contains a hymn, which could not have been added until after Arneld's death. Small as it is (18 Pss. 68 Hys.), and merely providing hymns for such Christian seasons as occur during the school period, this little book contained very few pieces that are devoid of merit. The Psalms are the best specimens of the Old and New Versions, with some from Watts, Montgomery, and Henry Vaughan: the bymns are for the most part standard hymns at the present day, drawn from the Latin and German, from the Wesleys, Ken, Keble, Heber, and others. The hymns that are peculiar to it are those, parily original, partly tre. from German and Latin, by Rev. H. J. Buckell, who is believed to have by Rev. H. J. Buckoli, who is believed to have edited the book. Two hymns of his—" for the first Sunday of the half year" ("Lord, behold us with Thy blessing"), and "for the last Sunday of the half year" ("Lord, dismiss us with Thy blessing")—are found in every Public School hymnal. Shortly after Dr. Goulburn's entrance on the Headmastership, he issued (1857), with Mr. Buckoll's assistance, the Pealms and Hymns for the Use of the Congretation of Rushy School Chavel. All the vieces gation of Rugby School Chapel. All the pieces of the original book, except 4, are retained; 10 new Psalm versions-from Milton, Keble, Trower and others; 33 hymne-from Isaac Williams, Neale, Caswall, Trouch, and older sources; and an Appendiz, containing a Latin Version of Ps. 117, "O omnes gentes undi-que" (taken from the Communion Office in the Liber precum, Ch. Ch., Oxford, 1726), with a tr. "O all ye nations, praise the Lord," and a Selection of Pealms (Latin titles only) for chanting between the Litany and the Communion Service (really the Introits from the 1st Prayer Book of Edw. VI.) are added: the object being to increase the hymns for the Festivals and give a more decided Church tone to the hymnel.

In 1876, Hymns for the Use of Rughy School were published, edited by Dr. Jex-Blake, the Head Master, assisted by a Committee of Musters. The division of the book into Psalms and Hymns was discarded, 14 pieces from the previous edition were emitted, and the total of pealms and hymne together raised to 339. The names of the authors were given in the index of first lines. The new pieces are chiefly from modern sources, and most of them the accepted hymna of our general collections. Some of the pieces are more of the class of devotional poetry than of hymns; two or three of the Latin hymns are given in the original. The tone of the book is pure and high: the hymns of praise full; but there is a dejection in some of those on Prayer, Faith, and Hope, which seems more adapted absence of morbid longings for death, in that of the boy.

ii. Harrow.—The next Public School to compile a Hymn-book for its own use was Harrow. Hymns for the Chapel of Harrow School were 1st pub. in 1855, edited by Dr. Vaughen (then Head Master). It is a far larger collection than either of the two prior Rugby hymn-books (240 hymns). The sources from which it is drawn are chiefly Watts and Doddridge, Cowper and Newton, the Wesleys, Heber and Milman, Ken, Keble, and the Metrical Psalms. It belongs to the older type of Church hymn-books; full of simple plety, with no great effort at relation with the Prayer Book; often losing its directness of address to God in reflection. number of hymns on death seems out of proportion in a school collection. A few hymns (e.g. Buckell's hymns for the opening and ending of the Half-year) are apparently taken from the Rugby Collection. The 3rd ed, of this book (1866), edited by Dr. Butler (then Head Master), retained all the hymns of Dr. Vaughan's book, and mised the number to 351. Several of the new pieces are common to the newer series of hymnois, of which H. A. & M. is the type; others are from less obvious sources. The hook in its present shape might be considerably reduced without the loss of really good hymns; a pure ideal, an ordent thirst for holiness, and a vivid faith in the Unseen God are its leading ideas. Some of the pieces are too reflective to be suitable for direct worship, though useful for private meditation.

iii. Marlborough.-The Marlborough Series of hymn-books commenced in 1856, with Psalms and Hymns for Use in the Chapel of Marlborough College. About half of its 100 hymns are from the Rugby prior editions; of the other hymns three demand special notice, as having rightly been included in most subsequent Public School Collections; a hymn of Bp. Cotton's (apparently, from the description of scenery, written at Marlborough), deeply imbued with the sense of the beauty of creation, "We thank Thee, Lord, for this fair earth"; a beautiful hymn by Dr. Jex-Blake (then Assistant Master at Marlborough), on the gladness, fulness, buoyancy of human life, which is so vivid to the boy, "Lord, we thank Thee for the pleasure that our happy lifetime gives"; and one for the Anniversary of the Consecration of The Chapel (St. Michael and All Angels) by Archdencon Farrar, "Fother, before Thy throne of light, the guardian angels bend." These three hymns are an excellent illustration of a principle that runs through the numerous editions that followed under the successive Head Masters of Mariborough (see below)—the production of a book, not only good in itself, and reproducing the hymns endeared by the associations of home, but specially meeting the needs and aspirations of a Public School community. On the side of boyhood, this aim reaches its fullest achievement in the edition of 1869; it may be traced in the simplicity and clear reality, with which the Christian ideas of faith, penitence, frailty, dependence, and the stainlessness of heaven are presented, in the hymns of fortitude and endeavour, in jubilance and thanksgiving, and in celebration of God's glory in nature. The edition of 1869, and still more that of 1878 (which adds several rarer pieces, especially from the German, and has greatly enhanced the effect of the general hymns by massing them more broadly, under the headings of Praise, Prayer, Faith, and Hope), recognize the further fact, that the atmosphere of culture at a Public School permits and demands a higher literary and postical standard, careful editing, and such full indication of sources and authors, as may encourage and suggest study of the history of hymns. Among the more choice pieces are some by Dean Stanley and F. T. Palgrave. The names of authors are given at the foot of each hymn, as well as in an index. The edition of 1869 has in an Appendix some beautiful selections of devotional poetry, from the Christian Year and other sources. Very little use is made of translations from the Latin.

iv. Cheltscham. See § Alii. Bibliography.
v. Repton.—The Repton Series of hymn-books began in 1859. The 103 hymns of the 1st ed. were reprinted in the 2nd ed., 1864 (141 pieces), and in the 3rd ed., 1869 (154 pieces). These three editions were compiled in Dr. Pears's Headmastership. The 4th ed., 1874 (211 pieces), and the 5th ed., 1881 (246 pieces), were compiled under Dr. Huckin's Headmastership. All but 20 from the original editions are retained in that of 1881; several of them are of no particular merit, and might well be omitted in any new edition; and the alphabetical arrangement, nowhere so ineffective as in a Church hymn-book, should be abandoued. This series shows no special connection with other Public School hymnbooks, and has no very salient features.

vi. Wallington.—The 1st ed. of The Hynn-book for the Use of Wellington College, ap-peared in 1860. The three editions published during Dr. Benson's Headmastership only add about 20 pieces to those of the 1st edition (162 pieces), which is always substantially retained. In the psalm versions by Montgomery and Keble, and other pieces, and in the re-production of the Psalms (quoted by their Latin headings only) from the 1st Prayer Book of Edw. VI., the book has affinities with the Rugby edition of 1850. But the sources from which the hymns are drawn are far wider. The hymns and tre, from the Latin, by L. Williams, Chandler, Cuswall, and others, which reproduce the spirit of the Breviary, are largely used. Pieces by our older poets, by the Wesleys, Cowper and Newton, Heber and Milman, Keble and Newman, Professor Bright and Bp. Wordsworth, are combined with the familiar hymns of our general books. The principal pieces that are peculiar to the volume are the hymns and tre from the Latin by Archbishop Benson himself. The special characteristic of the book is however by no means indicated by the range and judicious-ness of selection. The order in which the hymns are to be used is fixed beforehand with elaborate care; so that morning, and night, each day of the week, each season of the year, each Holy Day, each Festival, each Sunday, by its own never varied cycle of hymns | Book Offices or the changes of nature, may bave its distinctive familiar illustration. The idea at the root of this arrangement is evidently that prescription of hymns, as an integral part of the offices and an illustration of them, which the Breviary exhibits, and which our Prayer Book would have retnined, if the Latin hymns, as well as the other parts of the offices, had been translated by the Reformers. The book is intended to reproduce this harmonious impression of hymn and office, and this power of association through stated repetition, while pressing into service the accumulated wealth of our subsequent English hymns, and the best attainable representations of the great Latin hymns themselves. It has thus a value beyond that of a Public School hymn book; and it illustrates the gains, as well as the losses, of the emission at the Reformation. Under the present Head Master (Rev. E. C. Wickham) an Appendix, which in the 5th edition of the book contains 74 hymns, and lutroits, has been added. It is a great enrichment to the book, and composed of hymns, which are in general use, with the addition of 4 Latin hymns in the original. Many of them are allosted to special Seasons and Festivals; and the book could easily be re-cast on its original principle, admitting the new hymns as alternatives: or the appendix might be classified.

vii. Olifton. The Clifton Series began in 1863, with Psalms and Hymns for the Use of Clifton College (23 Ps., 145 Hys). It is evidently in very largo measure a reproduction of the Marlborough edition of 1862, and has few hymns from any other source. The 2nd (1872) and 3rd (1885) editions have very little in common with the 1st, except pieces which are in universal use. The total in the 3rd ed. only reaches 114 pieces (68 of the lat ed., 46 new ones). The 100 pieces that have been rejected were for the most part inferior ones: of the few good ones, Bp. Cotton's hymn, "We thank Thee, Lord, for this fair earth," and Dr. Jex-Blake's "Lord, we thank Thee for the pleasure," are the most surprising ex-clusions. In its present shape, the Clifton book is a small collection of good hymns, of pure and healthy tone, drawn chiefly from modern sources, the more special hymns being trs, by T. E. Brown from the German; it has no very salient features as a Public School hymnal. The names of the authors and composers are given at the foot of each piece, as well as in a separate index. The music of this book has been prepared with great care.

viii. Sherborne and Uppingham.—The Sherborne Pealme and Hymns, 1867, are of the Rugby and Marlborough type, and apparently borrow greatly from those hymn-books. The Hymn-book for the Use of Uppingham and Sherborne Schools, 1874, reprints the bulk of the Sherborne book, omitting the Anthems. It is enlarged to 254 pieces by the addition of good general hymns, in common use, and a number of original pieces by the Rev. E. Thring, the Head Master, and the Rev. Godfrey Thring, and translations from the German. The latter are characterised by a higher standard of metrical and poetical expression, for which German music is largely used, enforcing the great teaching of the Prayer | This appeal to a more cultured taste is further encouraged by an appendix of devotional poetry, containing some poems of singular beauty. The whole book is set to music, and contains music for the Canticles and Responses. Some of the tunes are by Mr. P. David. In 1888 the Head Master of Sherborne, the Rev. E. M. Young, pub. Hymns for the Use of Sherborns School. It is a choice selection, is well edited, and has been brought down to the latest date.

iz. Bossell .- Hymne for Use in the Chapel of Rossall School, 1880, is one of the best Public School hymn-books. It is mainly founded on the Marlborough edition of 1878, Watts and Doddridge, the Wesleys, Montgomery, Heber, Keble, Mrs. Alexander, Dr. Bonar, and Miss Winkworth. Among the rarer pieces are some by Professor Bright, Bp. Walsham How, Mr. F. T. Palgrave, Dean Stanley, Dean Plumptre, Miss Procter, the Rev. John Ellerton and the Rev. J. A. Rev. John Ellerton, and the Rev. H. A. Martin. The book is designed to express "the hopes and fears, the difficulties, trials and temptations of school-boys," and it largely achieves its object by the full and buoyant praise, the sense of the gladness of life, and the glory of nature, and the bright Christianity it presents. Some of the pieces are more of the order of devotional poetry than hymns; but good pieces of this kind have more justification in a school hymn-book than elsewhere. Hymns "of which the burden is the weariness of earth and the longing for death," have been specially excluded. The book is carefully edited, as regards text, indices, and indication of the authors at the foot of each hymn.

z. New Hymn-Books.-New hymnals are in course of preparation at Westminster and Merchant Taylors' Schools. The first, following the lead of the Abbey hymnal, will enshrine hymns of old Westminsters as one of its distinotive characters. The latter will pay some attention to Latin bymns.

xi. Appendices.—It may be noted that an analogy exists between the various Appendices in these books for private use, and the often forgotten catena of hymns for private devotion, of which the Sorum and Reformation Primers exhibit early examples, and the Primers of the 17th cent. Besides these there are Ken's great hymns for the use of the Winchester scholars; a book dedicated to Etonians by Randolph Gilpin, Liturgiu sacra curru Thesbitico ... vel opsonia spiritualia ... etiam pueris degustanda, 1657; and the Latin hymns attached to the edition of Herbert's Church Porch with Notes, by Canon Lowe, and others. (Parkers, 1867.)

xii. Conclusion.—Some of the sims and difficulties of the task of compiling a School hymnbook can be easily gathered from this review of the books. It should have some relation to childhood, so far as the child's devotion remains true and touching to the boy and even the man. It should express as fully as possible those spiritual moods—such as, on the one hand, the sense of dependence and frailty, young sorrow and penitonee for falls, purity and the high vision of heaven, and on the other, stediastness, resolve, the facing of odds, the warrior and chivalrous aspect of the cross, the thrilling memory of prophet and apostle, i saint, here and martyr-which vibrate in the boy's soul and conscience. It should be rich in praise and jubilance, penetrated with the majesty of God's creation, and the God-given beauty of human life. Its two greatest dangers are pucrility and unreality. To the first, boys, especially in the higher forms, are intensely opposed; the second, by placing in their mouths expressions that are notrue to their nature (such as a longing for death), turns worship into something little removed from acting. As designed for a community, drawn from the higher ranks, and through its masters and older boys, full of culture, it should not only be thoroughly edited, in the matter of purity of text, exact indication of the source and authorship of each piece, effective grouping of the general hymns under declared headings and full indices, but it should aim at a higher mark of imagination and poetical form; and in schools of the Church of England, the hymn-book should be in the fullest sense the hand-maid of the Prayer Book, enhancing, not crossing her utterance of doctrine, illuminating her festivals, and through the Latin hymns (sometimes even in the original) attesting her deep root in the Catholic past.

TH. L. B.?

Puchta, Christian Rudolph Hein-rich, a of W. H. Puchta, then residing as Justizrath at Kadolzburg, near Nürnberg, was b. at Kadolzburg, Aug. 19, 1808. He matri-culated at the University of Erlangen, in 1826, and completed his theological course at Berlin. In 1832 he was appointed Stadtvicar (general assistant preacher) at Munich, where he became acquainted with many men of light and leading; and in 1837 became repetent in theology at Erlangen. In 1839 he was appointed professor of Philosophy and Religion in the newly organised Lyceum at Speyer (Spires), but his nervous system broke down in 1841, and he had to be confined in the lunatio asylum of Winneuthal, Württemberg. After a year he was able to take charge of the perish of Eyb, near Ansbach, and then became, in 1852, second pastor, and in 1856, first pastor of St. James's Church, in Augsburg. He d. at Augsburg. Sept. 12, 1858 (Koch, vii. 277; Allq. Deutsche Biog. xxvi. 687, &c.).

Puchta had a genuine poetic faculty, and a mastery of style. His early poems were secular; his later were mostly hymns. His hymns were mainly meant for private use, and appeared principally in his Morgon and Abeta Analechter an Cartificates Hausaldar in Geränges, tellangen, 1843 (2nd ed. 1857, 3rd 1868). Besides there, 38—including II tra. from the Latin—were given in Knapp's Caristoterpe, 1837–1852. A few others, with a selection of his poems, edited by Knapp, appeared in his poethernous Gedicate, Santigart, 1860. Knapp in his Be. L. S., 1850, included 30 hymns by Pucha, and in his edition of 1865 no less than 42. Puchta was also one of the editors of the Bavarian G. B., 1854. Those of his hymns which have passed into knyllah (all from his Hausaldar, 1843) are:—

1. His agues Jahr int angulangen. New Year's Morning." In Knapp's Ec. L. S., 1850, No. 2104. 7r. es., "Another year we now have enterd," by Miss Burlingham, in the British Herald, January, 1866, p. 200, and Reid's Praise Bk., 1872.

ii. Harr des Kinmels, Gott der Guade. Sanday. In Knapp, 1850, No. 1171. 7r. as, "God of grace and Lord of beaven," in L. Ratiness's Charch at San 1862, p. 95.

iii. Herr ein ganser Leidenstag. For the Sick. In 1843, p. 277, as above, in 6 st., entitled, "In sidness San 1862, p. 95.

iii. Herr ein ganser Leidenstag. For the Sick. In 1843, p. 277, as above, in 6 st., entitled, "In sidness First evening." In Knapp, 1850, No. 2899. 7r. sa, "Lord, a whole long day of pain," by Miss Winkworth, 1866, p. 91. Her st. i.-iv. are No. 263 in Bp. Ryle Coll., 1860.

Puer matus in Bethlehem. [Christstyle. His early poems were secular; his later were mostly hymns. His hymns were mainly meant for pri-

Puer natus in Bethlehem. [Christmas.] A besutiful and simple Christmas carol on the adoration of the Chi'd by the ox and ass, and the visit to Him by the Magi-so equally appropriate for the Epiphany. It became a great favourite in Germany, and is found in many varying forms. The oldest a great variety of forms, but all, or almost all, text known is given by G. M. Dreves, in his beginning "Ein Kind geborn zu Bethlehem."

Cuntiones Bohemione, 1886, No. 178, from a Benedictine Processional of the beginning of the 14th cent., formerly belonging to the monastery of St. Georg at Hradisch, near Olmütz, and now in the University Library at Prag. Here it has 9 st., viz. :-

ii. Assumpeit carnem filius; ili. Per Gabrielem nunin. Assumpsic carried natus; in. Fer Gabrielen nun-tium; iv. Tanquam sponsus de thalazzo; v. Ponitur in praesepio; vi. Cognovit bos et asimus; vil. Reges de Saba venium; vill. Intrantee domom invicam; ix. Trino uni sempiterno. From the Cantional of Jistebokx, c. 1420, he adds, x. Sit benedicta Trinitus.

This text, in 10 st., is also found in the Hereford Brev. of 1505, where it is appointed for the Epiphany. Wackernagel, 1., Nos. 309-318, gives 10 forms of varying length, the oldest being from a Munich as, of the 15th cent. This has 6 stanzas, viz., 1, 5 (reading "Hie jacet"), 6, 7, 8 of the above text, and a 6th st., " Ergo nostra concio."

The text, which passed into the German Lutheran hymn-books and survives, e.g. in Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, No. 393 (each st. being followed by a German tr.), appeared in V. Babet's G. B., Leipzig, 1545, and is Wackernagel's No. 310. It has 10 st., viz. 1, 5 (reading "Hic jacet"), 6, 7, 10 (reading "Loudetur sancta"), and

v. De matre natus virgine; vi. Sine serpentis vuinere; vii. In carne nobis similis; viii. Ut redderet nos homines; ix. In hoc natali gaudio.

These intercalated stanzas seem to be of later origin (if not Post-Reformation), and to have been added to give the hymn a more theo-logical ring. The text of 1545 is in Daniel, i., No. 480; and also in Trench ed, 1864, with the stanza "Intrantes domum invicem "added. Tr. 83:-

1. The Child is born in Bethlehem. By Elizabeth Charles, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 173, in 11 st. of 2 l. When repeated in the People's H., 1867, it was slightly altered, and the refrain "Alleluia" was added to each stanza.

2. Infant born in Bethlehem, Born to save Jerusalem. Anonymous in Mrs. Carey Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881.

Other tre. are :-

1. A Babe in Bethlehem if born. W. J. Blew. 1852-55.
2. A Child is born in Bethlehem, Rejoice, rejoice, Jerusalem. J. W. Hessett. 1853.
3. A Child is born in Bethlehem, And Joyful is Jerusalem. R. F. Littledale, in Lyra Messianics, 1884 p. 80.

Jerusalem. R. F. Adtitionie, in Lyre account 1884, p. 69.

4. A Child is born in Bethlehem, Rejoice and sing, &c. P. Schaff, in his Christ in Song, R. Y. 1869.

5. A Child is born in Bethlehem; Exult for Joy, &c. (together with the Lettin). H. M. Macgill. 1876.

6. A Boy is born in Bethlehem. H. J. D. Hyder, in O. Shiploy's drama Sanctus. 1884.

7. A Child is born in Bethlehem, And Joy is in Jerusalem. P. S. Worsley, in his Poems, &c. 1875.

This hymn has been very frequently fr. into German, the versions ranging from that by Heinrich of Laufenberg in 1489 down to recent times. The version in German Protestant hymn-books is generally that in V. Babst's G. B., 1545, which begins, "Ein Kind geborn zu Bethlehem," and is in 10 st. of Latin, with interlaced German versions of all save ii. (thence in Wackernagel, ii. p. 701). In later books, e.g. Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, tre. of st. ii., x., are added, from the text of V. Schumann's G. B., Leipzig, 1539. In the Roman Catholic hymn-books it is found in a great variety of forms, but all, or almost all, The text used by Miss Huppus is that in the St. Gall Katholisches G. B., 1863. The tre. from the German are (1) "A Child is born in Bethlehem, There's joy in all Jerusalem." By Dr. H. Harbaugh in the German Reformed Guardian, Dec. 1866, p. 810. (2) "A Child is born in Bethlehem, Therefore is glad Jerusalem." By Miss Huppus, as No. 304 in E. Parton Hood's Children's Choir, 1870. [J. M.]

Pugnate, Christi milites. [All Saints.] This hymn, in common with "Coelestis O Jerusalem" (p. 240, ii.), is usually given as being in the Paris Bieviary of 1736. This is however not the case. It is found in the Brev. of Chalons-sur-Marne, 1736 (Hiemslis, p. 148), appointed for Saturday; in the Amiens Brev. of 1746; the Paris Brev. of 1822, and other French Brevs. Also in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

- 1, Soldiers who to Christ belong. By I. Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 256, in 5 st. of unequal lines. This was rewritten for the Hymnary, 1872, and re-peated from the Hymnary in Thring's Coll., 1892.
- 2. Boldiers who are Christ's below. By J. H. Clark, written at Marston, Montgomery, on Palm Sunday, 1865, and pub. in the 1868 Appendix to H. A. & M. Also in the revised edition, 1875.

Another tr. is :--Soldiers of Christ, fight manfulty. A. J. B. Hope. [J. J.]

Pulsum supernis sedibus. Jean Batists de Santeiil. [Annunciation of B. V. M.] Appeared in the Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. 949 : in Santeüil's Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1689, p. 3 (ed. 1698, p. 88), and in the Paris Breviary, 1736, where it is appointed for the Feast of the Annunciation at Lauds. The text is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 und 1865; and H. M. Maegill's Songs of the Christian Creed & Life, 1876. Tr. as:—

Long time the falles human race. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 100. This is given in several collections, and sometimes with alterations. In the Hynnary, 1873, it begins "Far from their home, our fal-fen race." The alterations in this case are somewhat numerous.

Other trs. are:

Driven from their home, their pathway lost. L. Williams. 'illiams. 1839. 2. Exil'd from Paradise and Heaven. W. Palmer.

2. EXII'd from Paracise and Henren. 17. Factors. 1845, p. 50.
3. Poor wanderers, banished from their home. R. Campbell. 1850.
4. Cast out from Eden's happy home. In the Scottlah Episcopal Coll. of Hyants, &c. 1888.
5. Rown from the realms of glory driven. H. M. Mitegill. 1878. [J. J.]

Punshon, William Morley, LLD. This greatly and justly benoured name of recent Wesleyan Methodism finds a tiny niche in this work from a thin poetic vein, which gave him much enjoyment, if its working out must be confessed to have yielded nothing of permanent value for hymnody, or at all comparable with his aplendid service to the Christian Church as preacher and lecturer. His contributions to J. Lyth's Wild Flowers, or, a Selection of Original Poetry (1843) [see Lyth, J., p. 707 i.], though reprinted in 1846, speedily withered as "flowers" in a hortus siccus. His Lays of Hope (1853) was no advance on the Wild Flowers. His Sabbath Chimes, or, Meditations in Verse for the Sundays of a Year (1867), suggested inevitable comparisons with Keble's classic of the Christion Year. Throughout, the thinking is bewilderingly meagre, the sentiment commonplace, the workmanship clumsy and poor. Esse and inspiration are absent. His Life has been amply and lovingly written by F. W. Macdonald and A. H. Reynar (1887); and it is a noble and beautiful story. He was b. at Doncaster on 29th May, 1824, only child of John Punshon and Elizabeth Morley. The latter was of a good family. He lost his parents in boyhood. Through maternal relationship, young Punshou was introduced to commercial life in Yorkshire, Hull, &c. He marked 29th November, 1838, as the day of his spiritual birth. In 1842 he began to be heard of locally as a preacher, being still in business. In 1844 he proceeded to the Methodist Theological Institute at Richmond; but remained there only a few months. He preferred evangelizing to stated preaching. He leapt into popularity at a bound, probably not to his gain, either intellectually or morally, though his diary breathes an admirable humility. In 1854 he made his advent as a lecturer by his Prophet of Horeb. The impression made by it was amazing. Then followed others, with ever deepening and widening impression. Contemporaneous with his abundant, over-abundant preaching and platform speaking, was such quantity and quality of effective work and service in raising large sums of money for Christian and other missionary and educational work as astounds a reader of his Life. He was five times President of the Canadian Methodist Conference (1868-72), and once of the English Conference (1875). His degree of LLD was conferred upon him by the Victoria University, Cobourg, Canada, in 1878. Throughout, in private and public, he was a large-souled, whole-hearted, true man of God. "Weakened by the way" on the continent, he slowly worked his way home, and after a brief final illness, fell gently and softly asleep on April 14, 1881. His hymns in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, and the Mcth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879, are :-

1. Listen! the Master beseecheth. Go, work in the Vineyard.

2. Sweet is the sunlight after rain. Sunday Morning.

Sweet is the sunlight after rain. Sunday Morning. 3. We woke to-day with anthems sweet. Sunday

Pure spirit, O where art thou now? Anna L. Barbauld, nee Aikin. [Death and Burial.] Pub. in The Works of Anna Lutitia Barbauld, with a Memoir, 1825, vol. i. p. 224, in 9 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Dirge. Written November 1808." From the Memoir we gather (p. xiiv.) that the occasion was the death of her husband, "whose latter days were oppressed by a morbid affection of his spirits, in a great degree hereditary, which came gradually upon him, and closed the scene of his earthly usefulness" (p. xlix.). The "Dirge" was repeated in Martinesu's Hymns, 1840, No. 623. In the same Hymns, 1840, No. 404, is arranged from this poem, and begins with st. ii., altered to "Not for the pious dead we weep," sometimes given elsewhere as "Not for the dead in Christ we weep." The original poem only is repeated in Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873.

Pusey, Edward Bouverie, D.D., s. of Mr. Philip Pusey, was b. Aug. 22, 1800, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated in 6rst class honours in 1822. Subsequently he became a Fellow of Oricl, a Canon of Christ Church, and Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. He d. Sept. 16, 1882. Dr. Pusey's prose writings and trs. are very numerous. Amongst the latter was his tr. of a part of Horst's Paradisus Anime Christiane, pub. in 1847 as The Paradise of the Christian Soul. In this work there are several metrical trs. of hymns which in the early pages of this Dictionary we have attributed to Dr. Pusey. We have Dr. Liddon's authority for stating that the hymns were not translated by Dr. Pusey. Some were tr. by W. J. Copeland, and others probably by J. Keble. [J. J.]

Pusey, Philip, eldest s. of Mr. Philip Pusey, and brother of Dr. Pusey, was b. June 25, 1799, and d. July 9, 1855. His father, a son of the first Viscount Folkestone, had as sumed the name of Pusey instead of that of Bouverie. [G. A. C.1

Pye, Henry John, M.A., s. of H. J. Pye, of Clifton Hall, Staffordshire, was b. circa 1825, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. (B.A. 1848, M.A. 1852.) Taking Holy Orders in 1850, he was presented by his father in 1851 to the Rectory of Clifton-Campville, Staffordshire. In 1868 he, together with his wife (only daughter of Bishop S. Wilberforce), joined the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Pye pub. Two Lectures on the Church, 1852; Short Ecclesiastical History, 1854; and various Sermons. He also compiled a book of Hymns for use at Clifton-Campville in 1851. To that collection he contributed a few hymns, including:-

1. In His temple now behold Him. Purification of B. V. M. This bynn was repeated, in a sightly altered form and an additional stanza (iv.) by Canon W. Cooke in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853; the Satisbury in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853; the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857; and many inter collections. It is comechines given with the fourth stanza as in the Sarwan, 1868; Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, &c. The full Pyc-Cooke text of 1853 is in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Thring's Coll., 1832 (slightly altered); and others. This hymn is sometimes given as a tr. from Angelus Silestius (Scheffler), but in error.

2. O praise ye the Lord, Ye nations rejoice. Annunciation. This hymn was also repeated in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, No. 169.

It passed into Murray's Hymnal, 1852, and the Scottish Episco. Hymns, 1858, each with alterations peculiar to itself. In H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, st. v. is omitted; st. ii. and vi. are rewritten, and st. iii. is altered. This text, again slightly altered, is in Kennedy, 1863, and the Hymnery, 1872. In Rorison's Hys. & Anthons, 1851, it begins, "Three holy Gospels tell

It is also in several modern French Breviaries as the hymn at first Ves-pers at the feast of the Epiphany; in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1887, No. 53 ; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecolesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as :-

1. What star is this with beams so bright, Which shames the sun, &c. By J. Chandler in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 59. It passed into Murray's Hymnal, 1852; The English Hyl., 1856; Salisbury H. Bh., 1857; H. A. & M., 1861; Kennedy, 1863, and several others. In each hymn-book the text is altered, and no two books agree upon the same alterations. II. A. ϕ M, is the worst. In the whole hymn four lines only remain unaltered. In some of these collections, including Kennedy, 1863, it begins, "What star is this so strangely bright?"

2. How lovely in the seatorn aky. Bv J. Chandler, another tr. in his Hys. of the Church, mostly Primitive, &c., 1841, No. 31. It was given in Stretton's Church Hys., 1850, and again in Alford's Year of Praise, as " Behold the long predicted sign."

3. Hail the day when in the sky. Anon. in the Cooke and Donton Hymnal, 1853, and Alford's Year of Praise, 1867, No. 46.

4. What star is this that beams so bright, The sun selipsing, &s. By R. C. Singleton, in his Anglican H. Bk., 1868. In the revised ed. of 1871 it reads, " What star is this that beams so bright, And dims the sun," &c.

5. What ster is this -more glorious far. Edward Thring. Appeared in G. Thring's Coll., 1880, and again in 1882. The 4th st. is from J. Chandler and others.

Other tes, are : 1. What is that which shines afar? I. Williams, in the British Magazine, 1835, p. 35; and his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839.

Quarles, Francis. The life of this "fine old English gentleman" and charming essayist and quaint singer, will be found in full in the present writer's collective and complete edition of his works in verse and prose (3 vols. 4*, 1880-81, Chertsey Worthies' Library). His fitther was James Quarles, of Stewards, Esq., and his mother Joan Dalton. He was their 3rd son and child. In the registers of Romford, Essex, is this entry, "1592, May 8. Baptizatus fuit Franciscus filius magistri Jacobi Quarrilus." He lost his father in 1599. His first school was Romford and his first tutor William Tichbourne, chaplain of Romford. He lost his mother in 1606. He proceeded to Christ's College, Cambridge, and later was of Excer College, Oxford. It is to be regretted that the College registers furnish no exact data. He passed from the University to Lincolu's Inn, where his widow-biographer tells us—

"He studied the laws of England; not so much out of desire to benefit himself thereby, as his friends and neighbours (showing therein his continual inclination to peace) by composing suits and differences amongst them."

Some years advance us from 1608 (at Lincoln's Ion) to probably 1612-13, or his 21st year. His widow continues,

"After be came to maturity he was not desirous to put blunelf into the world, otherwise he might have had greater preferments than he had. He was neither so unit for Court preferment, or so Ill-beloved there, but that he might have raised his fortunes thereby if he had had any inclination that way. But his mind was chiefly set upon his devotion and study; yet not altogether so much but that he faithfully discharged the place of cuphearer to the Queen of Boltemia" (p. 2).

How long Quarles continued with the Queen is unknown. He accompanied Frederick and Elizabeth to Germany. He married Ursely [= Ursula] Woodgate, of St. Andrew's, Holborn, on May 28, 1618. In 1620 appeared. the first and most characteristic of his poems, entitled, after the odd phrasing of the period, A Feast for Worms. In the epistle ho saye, "Wonder not at the title, for it is a Song of Mercy: what greater Feast than Mercy? and what are mon but worms" (vol. ii. p. 5). Kindred with the Feast followed Hadassa, or the History of Queene Ether. In 1621 he was in Dublin. He dated his Argalus and Parthenia, "Dublin, 4th March, 1621." He filled the office of Secretary to the illustrious Ussher, on whose death John Quarles composed a memorable elegy. Usaher wrote to Vossius highly laudatory of our Quarles. His successive books are practically the only landmarks of his remaining years. (The reader is referred to our Life and the Works, ut supra.) The Emblems appeared in 1634-35, and his Hieroglyphics in 1697. In 1639 he was appointed "Chronologer" of the City of Loudon, an office which he held till his death. From 1639 his various proce books were written, and became as popular as his poems. They are all in fine English. He was an out and out loyalist, and was with the king at Oxford. He had a numerous family. He d. Sept. 8, 1644, and was buried in St. Olave's, Silver Street, London, "11 Sop. 1644." His title to a place in this work rests mainly on his versified Psalms. These appear in the famous Bay Psalter. [See Bay Pealter, p. 119, i.] Quarles's are Psalms xvi., xxv., li., lxxviii., cxiii., cxxxvii. They were reclaimed by us for Quarles on the authority of John Josselyn's Account of Two Voyages to New England (1674). In the year 1638 he says, on his arrival in Massachusetts Bay,

"Having refreshed myself for a day or two at Noodlea Island, I crossed the bay in a small beat to Boston, which then was rather a village than a town, there not being above twenty or thirty houses, and presented myself to Mr. Wintherpe, the Governor, and to Mr. Cotton, the teacher of Boston Church, to whom I delivered from Mr. Francis Quarles, the poet, the translations of Nos. 16, 25, 51, 88, 112 and 137 Pealms into English metre for his approbation," &c.

These "Psalma" are more curious than successful. But besides them the poetry of Francis Quarles is a virgin field for the apsale hymnologist. It is a mystery and a sorrow that few only have been adapted and adopted. There are many of his verse-Emblems that fittingly married to music would be solernn and searching, and nobly displace accepted pious inanities. No. xii. of Book iii. of Emblems (vol. iii. pp. 75, 76), "Oh that Thou wouldst hide me in the grave," deserves a supreme effort of highest genius to mate it worthily. In delightful contrast in its vividness and sweetness is his "Like to the damask rose you see "(vol. iii. p. 283). Equally noticeable are his "Backsliding" (ibid. p. 66, xiv.), "Vain Physicians" (ibid. p. 189, iv.), "Waste not Life" (ibid. p. 194, xi.), "A Little While" (ibid. p. 196, xiv.). (See Critical Essay in Works as above.)

Quarles, John, e. of the above, was b. in Essex in 1624, and was educated at Exeter College, Oxford. He bore arms within the garrison at Oxford on behalf of Charles L. and subsequently (it is said) he was raised to tho rank of captain in the King's service. On the downfall of the King, Quarles retired to London, and devoted himself to literature for a livelihood. He d. there during the great Plague, 1665. He pub several works including (1) Jeromiah's Lamentations Para-phrased, with Divine Meditations, 1648; and (2) Divine Meditations upon Several Subjects whereunto is annexed God's Love to Man's Unworthiness, with several Divine Ejaculations. Lond. 1655 (Wood's Athense Oxon.). From the Ejaculations, Mr. Darling adapted two hymns for his Hys. for the Church of England. In the 1889 ed. these are :- "O King of kings, before Whose Throne" (Holy Trinity); and "O Thou Who sitt'et in heaven and seest" (Visitation of Sick). [J, J]

Quem misit in terras Deus. Jean Baptiste de Santeiiil. [Commemoration of Apostles.] Appeared in the Cluniac Breviary, 1686, p. vi.: Santeiiil's Hymni Sacri et Nori, 1689, p. 191 (ed. 1698, p. 237); the Paris Brev., 1736; J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 88; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as :--

- 1. He whom the Father seat to die. By J. Williams, in the British Magazine, June, 1836; and his Hys. tr. from the Purisian Breviary, 1839, p. 275.
- 2. He whom the Father sout to earth. By T. I. Ball, in the 5th ed., 1873, of the Appendix to the Hymnal N., No. 361.

Another tr. is :-His only Son the Father gave. J. Chandler, 1837. [J, J]

Quem terra, pontus, aethera [sidera]. [Purification of the B. V. M.] This has been frequently ascribed to V. H. C. Fortunatus, and is included by F. Leo in his ed. of Fortunatus's Opera Poetica, Berlin, 1881, p. 385, but among the hymns falsely attributed to him. It is found in four MSS. of the 11th cent., in the British Museum (Jul. A. vi. f. 38 b; Vesp. D. xii. f. 61 b; Harl. 2961 f. 231; Add. 30818 f. 55 b); and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Church, 1851, p. 74, is printed from an 11th cent. us. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 22). It is also in the St. Gall ms., No. 387, of the 11th cent. Mone, No. 419, cites it as in a MS. of the 9th cent. at Admont. The second portion, "O gloriosa femina, Excelsa super sidera," is often given as a separate hymn, sometimes beginning "O gloriosa Domina," as in a 12th cent. Ms. in the British Museum (Harl. 2928 f. 120b); in Mone, No. 420, and in G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Moissiacensis, 1888, p. 38, from a 10th cent. Ms. In the Roman Breviary, 1632, the first part begins Quem terra, postus, siders, and the second part 0 gloriosa virginum. The original, and the Roman Breviary texts, will be found in Daniel, i., No. 144, with readings at il. p. 382, iv. p. 135, from a Munich ms. of the 9th or 10th cent., a Rheinau Ms. of the 10th cent., &c. The hymn, in whole or in part, has been used in various Breviaries (Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Roman, &c.) for almost all the Festivals of the B. V. M., including the Conception, Nativity, Annunciation, Visitation, and the Assumption. [J. M.]

The full original form of this hymn has not been translated. We have the following forms in English.

i. Quem terra, pontus, aethers. This, the oldest form of the text, in the Sarum and other Breviaries in 4 st. and a doxology, has been

The God, Whom earth, and sea, and sky Adore and laud, &c. J. M. Neale, in the Hymnud N., 1854; H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875; the Propie's H., 1867; the Hymnary, 1872, and others, and sometimes with alternitions. It is more extensively used than any other tr. of this hymn.

from the above in several instances. It is tr.

O Queen of all the virgin choir. By E. Caewall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 200; and his Hys. 4 Poems, 1873, p. 106. In the 1863 ed. of the Appendix to the Hymnal N., it is altered to "Most glorious of the virgin choirs."

Other tra. are:-

1. O Glorieus Virgin, throu'd on high. Printer, 1685. O Mary! whilst thy Maker blest. Primer, 1706.
 Eternal glory of the skies. Bp. Mant. 1837.

4. O Mary, how great is thy glory. J. Wallace, 1874.

v. O glorinas domina, De cujus virgo genere. This is a recast of the third form above, adapted to St. Anne. It is given by G. M. Dreves in his Liturgische Hymnen, 1888, p. 79, from a Ms. Antiphonary of the 16th cent. This text is tr. by E. Caswall in his Masque of Mary, 1858, p. 327, and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 189, as "O Lady, high in glory, Whose daughter ever blest." [J. J.]

Qui procedis ab utroque. Adam of St. Victor. [Whiteuntide.] A fine sequence, expanding the thoughts of the "Veni Sancte Spiritus" (q.v.). Gautier in his ed. of Adam's Eurres poetiques, 1881, p. 56, gives it from the Limoges Sequestiary of the 12th cent. (Bibl. Nat. Paris, No. 1139), a Gradual of St. Victor before 1239 (B. N., No. 14452), a Paris Gradual of the 13th cent. (B. N., No. 15615), and other sources. It is in an early 14th cent. Paris Missal in the British Museum (Add. 16905, f. 178). The use of St. Victor was for the Tuesday, of Paris for the Friday, in Whit-sun week. The printed text is also in sun week. The printed text is also in Trench, ed. 1864, p. 187; Daniel, ii. p. 73; Kehrein, No. 130; Wrangham, 1881, i. p. 100.

Translation in C. U.:Spirit of grace and union. By E. Caswall, in Masque of Mary, 1858, p. 283; and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 136, in 13 st. of 6 l., and headed, "Praises of the Paraclete." It is in C. II. 48 :-

1. O Holy Chost, Who with the Son. This is No. 418 in the Hymnary, 1872, and is composed of st.i. by the Editors, and the rest from Caswall.

2. O Holy Chest, Who ever One. No. 575 in the Hymnary, 1872, is compiled with alterations from st. i., vi., ix., x. of Caswall's tr.

Qui regis sceptra forti dextra solus cuncte. [Advent.] This sequence is found in a ms. in the Bodleian (Bodl. 775 f. 168 b), written c. 1000; and a ms. of the 11th cent. (Douce, 222 f. 82 b.); in a Winchester book of the 11th cent, now in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (No. 473); in a 12th cent. Gradual (Reg. 2 B. iv. f. 62b), and a Ms. circa 1199 (Calig. A. ziv. f. 43b), in the Brit. Mus., &c. Among Missals it is in an early 14th cent. Paris, and a 14th cent. Sens. in the British Museum; in a Sarum, c. 1370; a Hereford, c. 1870; and a Fork, c. 1390,--all now in the Bodleian; in the St. Andrews, and various French Missals. In the English Missals it is the Sequence for the third S. in Advent. The printed text is also in Neale's Sequentiae, 1852, p. 7; Daniel, v. p. 178; and Kehrein, No. 4.

Translation in C. U.:-

Thou God, 'mid Chernbirn on high. By E. A. Dayman, made for and included in the Humnary, 1872. Mr. Dayman, in rendering the Sequence for the 3rd S. in Advent, prefaced it with a stanza taken from the Gradual "Oui sedes Domine super Cherubim, excita potentiam tuam et veni," &c. The hymn is a very free paraphrase, rather than a translation; and Mr. Dayman has drawn out at some length the allusions which the Sequence seems to make to certain passages and personages of Holy Scripture.

Who now in helpless Infancy. This ir, was given in I. Williame's Hys. tr. From the Partition Breviary, 1839, p. 185, as "by a Friend" (see Preface thereto). It was repeated unaltered in some collections, and then as "Jesus, in helpless infancy," in the Hymrary, 1872.

Quicunque certum quaeritis. [Lent. The Sacred Heart of Jesus.] This hymn is probably of the 18th cent. It is the hymn at Vespers in the Office of the "Most Sacred Heart of our Lord Jesus Christ," which in the Roman Breviary, Lisbon, 1786, pars Estiv. p. 447, is marked as a festival of the Second Class, and appointed for the Sixth Day after the Octave of Corpus Christi. It is repeated in some more recent eds. of the Breviary, ag. Bologna, 1827; but in other eds. the alternative Office for the same festival (a greater double by decree "Urbis et orbis," 23 Aug. 1856), with the hymns "Auctor beate sacculi," and "Cor, area legem continens," is preferred. Text in Biggs's Amount of Hand Hand 1887 p. 198 toted H. A. & M., 1867, p. 198. [J, M,] Christum quaeritis. Quicumque Prudentius. [Epiphany.] This is the 12th and last poem in his Cathemerinon, and in its full form consists of 208 lines. It is found in a ns. of the 5th cent. in the Bibliotheque Nationale, Paris (8048, f. 39b), and is in-cluded in all eds. of his Opera; e.g. Halle, 1703, p. 75; and Aurelii Privlentii Clementis V. C. Opera Omnia. . . . (Delphin and Vorlorum Classics), London, 1824, voi. i. pp. 150-163. Though one of the finest peems of Prudentius, it was comparatively little used in the services of the Church until the revision of the Roman Breviary after the Council of Trent. In the ed. of that Breviary pub. at Rome, 1570, there are the following centes:-

- i. Quicumque Christam quaeritis. Transfiguration.
 - O sola magnarum urbium. Epiphany.
- iff. Audit tyrangus agrius. Holy Innocents, at Matins.
- iv. Salvete flores martyrum. Holy Innocente, at Lands.

Those centes are repeated in later eds, of the Roman Braziary, and also in Daniel, i., Nos. 107, 108, 112, and iv. p. 121. The earliest and most beautiful cento is the Salvete force martyrum, which is found in the St. Gall ms., No. 413, of the 11th cent., in a 12th cent. us. in the British Museum (Add. 18301, f. 113), &c. [J. M.]

These centes have been translated lote English as follows:-

- i, Quicumque Christum quaeritis. The Transfiguration. This begins with the first line of the poom. The Roman Brev. text is in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. T_{Y} , as: —
- 1. All ye who seek in hope and love. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 167; and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 90. This is repeated in several collections, and is usually given in an unaltered form. In J. A. Johnston's English Hyl., 1852, it begins, "Ye who for Christ are seeking, raise."
- 2. 0 ye, who Christ are seeking, raise. In J. A. Johnston's English Hyl., 1856, based upon Cas-Met/I

Other tra. are:-

- Whose you be that Christs do seek. Primer, 1604.
 All you that seeke Christ, let your sight. Primer,

- O ye the truly wise. R. Campbell, 1850.
 Who seek the Christ must look above. W. Siew, 1852-65.
 O ye who seek the Christ. H. Eynaston, 1862.

13. All ye who seek the Lord of love, Lift up, &c., H. H. Macgill, 1876. This is a different cento, although beginning with the same stanza.

14. All ye who seek the Lord of love. T. J. Potter, in the Catholic Product.

- 15. All ye who seek our Lord to know. J. Wallace,
- 16. O ye, who search for Jesus, raise. W. C. Dix, in Church Times, Jan. 7, 1887.
- ii. O sola magnaram urbium. Epiphony. This cento begins with line 77 of the poem. The Roman Brev. text is in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:-
- 1. Bethlehem! of poblest cities. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 55; and with slight alterations in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 30. This tr. is not only in C. U. in its criginal form, but also sometimes slightly, and at other times greatly, altered. In addition to altered texts which begin with the original first line, there are also:-

(1) Earth has many a noble city. This is the H. A. & H. text, 1861 and 1875, and is repeated in a few collections.

(2) Bethleham! earth's neblest cities. In the Parish Hymnal, 1863 and 1875.

(3) Bethl'hom, not the least of cities. In the Bymwary, 1872.

In these various forms Caswall's tr. is more extensively used than all other firs, put together, 2. Than mightiest cities mightier far. By W. J.

Copeland, in his Hys. for the Week, &c., 1848, p. 71. In Murray's Hymnal, 1852, it was given as, "Thou Bethlehem, with thy crowning star."

3. Fair queen of cities, star of earth. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. and Time Bk, 1852-55, and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

4. Of noblest cities thou art queen. By R. C. Singleton, in his Anglican H. Ek., 1868; and again, after revision, in the 2nd ed., 1872.

8. Earth hath many a mighty city. By C. E. Malden and W. Quennell, in the Church of England S. S. H. Bk., revised ed., 1879.

Other tre, are :

- 1. Let other clies strive, which most. Printer, 1708, 2. Than greatest cities greater fat. A.J.B. Hope, 1844, 3. Chief 'mongst the cities of the plain. Hp. J. Wil-
- 4. O Bethlehem, of cities blost. In Stretton's Charch Hys., 1850. 5. Small amongst cities, Bethlehem. Mrs. Charles,
- 6. The noblest cities upon earth. H. Trend, in Lyra
- Messianica, 1864. 7. O Bethichem i thou dost surpass. J. Wallace,
- 8. Of all the cities of renown. H. H. Macgill, 1876. This is a different cento from the Latin, although it begins with the same stanza.

Raffles, Thomas, D.D., LL.D., s. of Mr. W. Raffles, solicitor, was b. in Princes Street, Spitalfields, London, May 17, 1788. In 1803 he became a clerk in Doctors' Commons, but shortly after retired, and through the influence of Dr. Collyer (p. 242, H.), of whose church at Peckham he was for some time a member, he entered Homerton College in 1805. His stated ministry began at Hammersmith, where he was ordained as a Congregational minister on June 22, 1809. In 1812 he removed to Liverpool, where he succeeded the Rev. T. Spencer, and remained for 49 years the honoured pastor of the Great George Street Congregational Church. He d. at Liverpool, Aug. 18, 1863. For upwards of fifty years Dr. Ruffles was one of the most prominent ministers of the Congregational body, His labours outside of his own congregation were very great, his aid as a preacher on behalf of missions and other religious works, being eagerly sought after. The Lancashire Independent College owes its existence mainly to him; and to many religious works in Liverpool he gave great personal attention. His degree of LLD, was conferred by the University of Aberdeen in Dec. 1820, and that of n.p. by Union College, Connecticut, in July 1830. His works include Memoirs of the Life and Ministry of the Rev. Thomas Spencer, 1813; A Tour on the Continent, 1817; and several Sermons, &c. He also edited the 1815 ed. of Brown's Self-Interpreting Bible; was joint author with J. B. Brown and J. H. Wiffen, of Poems by Three Friends; and joint editor with Dr. Collyer and Dr. J. B. Brown, of the Investigator, a London quarterly. As early as March 8, 1813, he says, in a letter to his friend, Mr. Brown, "I am about to put to press a collection of hymns for the use of my chapel:" but this intention was not carried out until 1858, when he pub. his Supplement to Dr. Watte's Ps. & Hys. His son's history of this Supplement is:--

"Early in January, 1853, he published his long-expected Supplement to Dr. Watte's Psalms and Hymns, which he had in hand for many years. He would never have published it at all, but, in common with other Independent Ministers, would have used the Congregational Hymn-book [J. Conder's 1836 and 1842] had that book contained a fair share of his own hymns. In its original form, however, it did not contain one [yes, one, but given as Ason.]; and Dr. Raffles might, without vanity—seeing that numerous hymn-books of modern date contained one or most of his bymne—have expected that they would not have been wholly modern date contained one or more of his bymne—bave expected that they would not have been wholly omitted from the hymne-book emphatically of his own denomination. But so it was, and he never would introduce it, though, with the greatest readlness, when the improved edition was contemplated (the New Cong. H. Bh., 1859), under the editorship of the Rev. Dr. G. Smith, Dr. Raffen contributed some of his hymne to its pages. His own collection is very good, but limited in extent; the hymne are selected with considerable interment, and the true type selected with considerable interment, and the true type selected with considerable interment, and the true type selected with considerable interment. ne of the signatures of Bp. Heber.

R. A. B., in The Cavendish H. Bk., 1864 | source could be reached."—Memoirs, 1864, p. 419.

Dr. Raffles contributed, in 1812, 8 hymns under the signature "T. R." to the Coll. of his old friend and former pastor, Dr. Collyer. Gradually other hymns came into notice. These, with others to the number of 46, were included in his Supplement, 1853. His bythns at present in C. U. include:—

1. Blest hour, when mestal man retires. Prayer. In the "a. ms." this is besided "The Hour of Prayer."

14. The cup which my Fether hath gives. In Affection. In the "s. sts." in 2 st. of 8 l., but without date. In the Associal 1864, p. 272, the history of the hymn from Dr. Raffles's Diary is this —

"Ashby-de-la-Zouch, 16th [Det., 1823.] I preached to an immones congregation last night at Nottingham, and slept at Mr. Gilbert's. Mr. Rawson [of Nottingham, and Castiel, a fine young man, and but recently married. Castle), a fine young man, and but recently married, has broken a blood-vessel, and with his wife and mother, mas broken a blood-vasset, and with his wire and motor, and father and sister, set out yeskerday for Devonshire, to pass the winter. Mrs. Rawson sent me her album, and begged me to insert something appropriate. As I dressed in the morning I composed the following lines, which I sent her just before they sectont: 'The cup, &c.'' Mrs. Rawson, soon left a widow, resided at Winco-bank Hall, near Sheffield, nearly 60 years, and died there in 1882.

there in 1887,

there in 1887.

15. Thou art my Riding-place, O Lord. The Hiding-place. In the "h. ms." in 4 st. of S 1., and dated "Burnley, June 13rd, 1833."

16. What is life! A rapid stream. Life. In the "a, ms." in 6 st. of 4 1., and dated in pencil 1838. At the foot is written by Dr. Raffies "Originally published in the Investigator, and, anonymously, in Affection's 65ft, a position selection published by Simpkin and Biarshell, Hamilton, &c., London."

The "Raffles Ms.," from which we have annotated these hymns, was kindly lent by Mr. T. S. Rafiles, B.A., Stipendiary Magistrate of Liverpool. Mr. Rafiles is the author of his father's Memoirs, 1864, and of hymn 25 in his father's Supplement. Dr. klaffles's original Hymne were pub. in 1868, with a Preface by J. Baldwin Brown.

Raise the pealm, let Earth adoring. E. Churton. [Ps. zevi.] 1st pub. in his Cleveland Pealter, 1854, in 13 st. of $1., with the refrain, "Hallelujah, Amen." In 1863 Dr. Kennedy embodied in his Hymn. Christ. at. L, ii., viii.-xiii., as a hymn, of 2 st. of 16 l., each st. ending with "Hollelujuh, Amen." This successful arrangement was repeated in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, No. 604, but divided into 4 st. of 8 l., and with the omission of the refrain. This rendering is one of the author's best and most vigorous versions of the Pralms. and is worthy of more extended use than is accorded to it. [Pealters, English, § XIX.] [J. J.]

Raise thee, my soul, fly up and run. I. Watts. [Heavenly Joys.] Appeared in his Hys. and Sac. Songs, 1707 (ed. 1709, Bk. ii., No. 33), in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "The blessed Society in Heaven." It is in C. U. in its full, and also in an abridged form. some American collections, including The Baptist Praise Bk., N. Y., 1871, it begins "Arise, my soul, fly up and run," and st. ii. and vi. are also omitted. [J. J.]

Raise your triumphant songs. I. Watts. [The Love and Work of Christ.] 1st pub. in his Hys. and S. Songs, 1707. Bk. ii., No. 104, in 6 st. of 4 l., as the second of two hymns on "Christ's Commission. John iii. 16, 17." It was extensively adopted by the older compilers, including G. Whitefield, M. Madan, A. M. Toplady, and others. Bickersieth (1833), Elifott (1835), the Leeds H. Bk. (1853), &c., followed; and modern editors in G. Britain and America have, in very many instances, also included it in their collections. Notwithstanding this popularity it does not rank with the best of Watts's hymns. [J. J.]

Rambach, August Jakob, s. of Johann Jakob Rambach (then pastor of St. Nicholas's Church, at Quedlinburg, and, after 1780, chief pastor of St. Michael's Church, at Hamburg), was b. at Quedlinburg, May 28, 1777. He entered the University of Halle in 1796, passed his final theological examination in Nov. 1799, was appointed diaconus of St. James's Church at Hamburg, in May 1802, and on March 16, 1819, preached his first sermon as chief pastor of St. Michael's, in succession to his father. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Marburg, on the occasion of its tercentenary, Nov. 12, 1827; and became senior of the Hamburg clergy in 1834. After 1844 the burden of infirmities made him resign his public offices one after another. He finally resigned his pastorate in the beginning of 1851, and retired to Ottensen, near Hamburg, where he d. Sept. 7, 1851. (Die Fumilie Rambach. By Dr. T. Hansen, Goths, 1875, p. 287; Allg. Deutsche Biog., xxvii. 198, &c.)

A. J. Rambach is better known as a hymnologist than as a hymn-writer. His sarilest work, cuttled, Geber D. Murtin Luthers Verdienst som den Kirchmagesung, Hamburg, 1818, is an essay on Luther as a hymn-writer

His greatest work is his Anthologie christlicher Gesänge aus allen Jahrhunderten der Kirche, cal notes on many of the more obscure writers, and for the exceptional accuracy of the references to the sources from which the hymns are taken. (It is occasionally referred to in this Dictionary as Ramback's Anthologie.) referred to in this Dictionary as Ramodous antihological. During its compilation he gradually gathered together an extensive and valuable hymnological library, over 2000 volumes of which are now a part of the Hamburg Town Library. He was also the principal editor of the Hamburg G. B. of 1842, and in 1843 pub. a small volume of biographical notices thereto (Rurnepfante Nachricht von den Verfassern der Lieder im Hamburgischen Gesangten).

Rambach does not seem to have pub. any original hymns. His trs. are given in vol. i. of his Anthologic, as above, and five are included in the Hamburg G. B., 1842. The only one which has passed into English C. U. is noted at p. 227, L [J. M.]

Rambach, Johann Jakob, D.D., s. of Hans Jakob Rambach, cabinet maker at Halle on the Saale, was b. at Halle, Feb. 24, 1693. In 1706 he left school and entered his father's workshop, but, in the autumn of 1707, he dislocated his ankle. During his illness he turned again to his schoolbooks; the desire for learning reawoke; and on his recovery, early in 1708, he entered the Latin school of the Orphanage at Halle (Glaucha). On Oct. 27, 1712, he matriculated at the University of Halle as a student of medicine, but soon turned his attention to theology. He became specially interested in the study of the Old Testament under J. H. Michaelis. In May 1715 he became one of Michaelis's assistants in preparing his ed. of the Hebrew Bible, for which he wrote the commentary on Buth, Esther, Nebemiah, &c. Ilis health began to suffer in the spring of 1719, and he gladly accepted the invitation of Count von Heakel to stay at Pölzig, near Ronneburg, where he spent several months. By August he had quite recovered, and went to pay a visit to Jena, where a number of the students asked him to lecture to them. For this purpose he settled at Jena in Oct., 1719, and lived in the house of Professor Buddens (J. F. Budde). He graduated M.A. in March 1720. In 1723 he was appointed adjunct of the Theological Faculty at Halle, as also inspector of the Orphanage; in 1726 extraordinary professor of theology; and in 1727, after A. H. Francke's death, ordinary professor as well as preacher at the Schulkirche. Here he was very popular, both as preacher and professor, but the jealousy of his colleagues induced him to accept an offer from the Landgrave Ernst Ludwig of Hesse, who, in 1731, invited him to Giessen as superintendent and first professor of theology (before leaving Halle be graduated D.D., June 28, 1731), and in Aug., 1732, appointed him also director of the Paedagogium at Giessen. In 1734 he was, for various reasons, greatly inclined to accept the offer of the first professorship of theology in the newly-founded University of Göttingen, but eventually, at the earnest request of the Landgrave, remained in Giessen, where he d. of fever, April 19, 1735 (Die Familie Rambach. By Dr. T. Hausen, Gotha, 1875: Allg. Deutsche Brog., xxvil. 196; Blütter für Hymnologie, 1883, pp. 113, 129, 145, 163, 186; 1884, p. 20; 1885, p. 13, &c.)

Rambach was a voluminous author in various departments of practical theology, e.g. his Institutiones kermenseuticae tacrae, Jenn, 1734, which passed through 4 eds. in his lifetime; his Erbasiiches Handbücklein für Kinder, 1734 (see below), which reached an sth ed in 1736, and a 14th in 1766; his various volumes of sermons, &c. He justly carned his popularity by the thoroughness of his researches, and the clear and concise way in which he set forth the results of his investigations. It is however as a hymn-wider that his nextgations. It is however as a hymn-writer that his name is likely to be best known. While not entitled to rank with the best hymn-writers of the 16th and 17th cenwith the best hymn-writers of the 16th and 17th cen-turies, he yet takes a high place among his contem-poraries, and deserves to be remembered as much as almost any of the 16th cent, hymn-writers. His style is good and diguified; his thought is profound yet clearly expressed. While his hymns are often suf-ficiently didactic, they are generally scriptural and churchly in tone, and are characterised by lytic force, lively imagination, and carnest, soher piety. Of hymns, in the stylet sense, he wrote yet 18th a large number of churchly in tone, and are characterised by lytic force, lively imagination, and earnest, sober plety. Of hymna, in the sittic sense, he wrote over 180, a large number of which passed into the German lymn-hooks of the 18th cent. (c.g. the likamors G. B., 1740, and Limeburg G. B., 1767, contains 52 by him), and a good many are still found in modern hymn-books. Of these Dr. J. L. Pasig gives 165 in his ed. of Rambach's Geistliche Licher, Leipzig, 1844, and the rest are printed by Hansen as above, while the first lines of the whole are given in the Stäter as above. Four are recasts (practically originals), masis for the 17th ed., 1719, of Freyling-hausen's G. B., to raplace similar hymns in the cd. of 1703. The rest principally appeared in the following works by Rambuch, viz.: (1) Geistliche Poezics, Halle. 1720 [Brit. Mus.] The first part contains 72 cantats on the Gospels for Sundays and fastivals; the record part includes 20 hymns, mostly written at Pübig in 1719. (2) Poeticake Aest-Gedancken. Jens and Leipzig, 1723 [Royal Lib., Berlio]. Included are 15 pieces which may be called hymns. The 2nd ad. of 1727 [Brit. Mus.] has 22 more. (3) Erbaultickes Randouchlein für Kinder, Giessen, 1724 (Hamburg Library). The 3rd part contains 8 new hymns. (4) Geistreiches Haus-Gesong-Buck, Frankfurt and Leipzig, 1735 [Hamburg Library]. The 3rd part contains 5 Rewhymns. (4) Geistreiches Haus-Gesong-Buck, Frankfurt and Leipzig, 1735 [Hamburg Library], with a preface dated April 10, 1735. This contains 112 hymns by Rambach, of which 58 are practically new, 11 of those, however, bufing recents of his own earlier hymns. (5) Wunder der bit sum Tole des Eventes entedrigten Lebes, Giessen, 1750 [Berlin Library]. This includes 27 new hymns.

One of Rambach's hymns is noted at p. 660, i. The others which have passed into English are :—

1. Anf! Seele, schicke dich. Holy Communion. Written, by request for the 11th ed., 1719, of Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, as No. 229, in 16 st. of 6 L, in order to replace the hymn "Auf, Seele, sey gerüst."

This hymn, by Geruse Heine, was included in the Scistreiches G. B., Halle, 1897, p. 433. In the 2nd ed., 171, of the complete book formed by the fusion of pt. i., 1704, and its ampl. of 1705 with pt. fig. 1714, of Freylinghausen's G. B., both hymna are given, Heine's as No. 524, and Rambach's as No. 522, both marked as being No. 229 in pt. 1., 1704.

Rambach's hymn is in his Haus G. B., 1735, No. 369; the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 471, &c. In Pasig's ed. of his Gristl. Lieder, 1844, p. 112, entitled "Before the reception of Holy Communion." It has been fr. as :-

Randall, Thomas, M.A., was b, in 1711, and studied at the University of Edinburgh, where he graduated M.A. in 1730. In 1739 he became parish minister of Inchture, Perthshire, and in 1770 minister of the East Church, Stirling, He d, at Stirling, July 21, 1789. He was one of those added in 1744 to the Committee of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland which compiled the Translations and Paraphrases of 1745. To him is ascribed No. 11 in the collection of 1745, No. 49 in that of 1781. See Scottish Translations and Paraphrases.

Randolph, Anson Davis Fete, was b. at Woodbridge, New Jersey, Oct. 18, 1820, and subsequently became a publisher and bookseller in New York. His Hopefull: Waiting and other Verses were pub. in 186 , His hymn "Weary, Lord, of struggling here" (Desiring to Depart), was written in 1849, and first printed in the New York Independent. It was repeated in his Hopefully Waiting, &c., 1867, and is in a few collections. [F. M. B.]

Rands, William Brighty, was b. in Chelsea in 1826 and d. at Dulwich on April 23rd, 1882. He was a considerable contri-butor to literature, but published his works under various names—e.g. "Matthew Browne,"
"Henry Holbeach," "Lilliput Levee," &c. One hymn by him of great force and originality has found its way into recent hymnals, "One Lord there is all Lords above" (God aconsuming fire to sin). It appeared originally in his "Lilliput Lectures," 1872. It has been included in Horder's Congregational Hymns, 1884, and in the Congregational Church Hymnal, 1887. [W. G. H.]

Rankin, Jeremiah Eames, p.p., was b. at Thernton, New Haven, Jan. 2, 1828, and educated at Middleburg College, Vermont, and at Andover. For two years he resided at Potsdam, U.S. Subsequently he held pastoral charges as a Congregational Minister at Now York, St. Albans, Churlestown, Washington (District of Columbia), &c. In 1878 he edited the Gospel Temperance Hymnal, and later the Gospel Bells. His hymne appeared in these collections, and in D. E. Jones's Songs of the New Life, 1869. His best known hymn is "Labouring and heavy laden" (Seeking Christ). This was "written [in 1855] for a sister who was an inquirer," was first printed in the Boston Recorder, and then included in Nason's Cong. H. Bk., 1857. Another of his hymns is "Rest, rest, rest, brother rest." [F. M. B.] He d. in 1904.

RAWSON, GRORGE

Rawson, George, was b. June 5, 1907, at Leeds, in which town he practised for many years as a solicitor. In 1853 he assisted the Congregational ministers of Leeds in the compilation of Psalms, Hymne, and Passages of Scripture for Christian Worship, a vol. commonly known as the Leeds Hymn-book. Mr. Rawson was a member of the Congregational body. In 1858 he also assisted Rev. Dr. Green and other Baptist ministers in the preparation of Pealms and Hymns for the use of the Baptist Denomination. A number of Mr. Rawson's own compositions first appeared in this and in the Leeds H. Bk. In 1876 he pub. his Hymne, Verses and Chants (Hodder and Stoughton, London), including his previously published hymns, and containing (exclusive of chants) 80 original pieces. In 1885 most of these, with several additional hymns, were pub. by the R. T. S. under the title Songs of Spiritual Thought. Mr. Rawson d. March 25, 1889. His hymns are distinguished by refinement of thought, and delicacy and propriety of language; and if they do not attain the first rank among the songs of the Christian Church, many are of great excellence. The most widely known are, "By Christ redeemed, in Christ restored;" "Come to our poor nature's night;" "Father in high heaven dwelling;" "In the dark and cloudy day;" and "Reaper, behold the fields are white." In the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, and the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, there are also several recasts of and additions to the hymns of other writers. These are noted in this Dictionary, and may be gathered from the Index of Authors and Translators. In addition to Mr. Rawson's hymns which are annotated under their respective first lines, the following are also in Č. U.:-

- From the Leeds H. Bk., 1853.

When to these 34 hymns are added those which are annotated under their respective first lines, and the recests which are mainly Mr. Rawson's own composition, he is represented by about 50 hymns in the collections of the present day. It must be noted that in the Hymns, &c., 1876, and in the Songs, &c., 1885, the texts of the hymns have been revised by the author, and in several instances been weakened thereby. [W. R. S.)

Raymond, William Sterne, M.A., was b. in 1832, and educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge, B.A. 1854. Taking holy orders, he was for sometime Curate of Tedstone-Delamere, Herefordshire. St. Bona-Recordare sanctae crucis. ventura. [Passiontide. Hely Cross.] Included as his "Laudismus de sancta cruce," in a collection of his tractates pub. at Paris c. 1510 (Brit. Mus. 3558 a). The text, in 90 lines, is also in his Opera, Mainz, 1609, vol. vi. p. 423. F. W. E. Roth, in his Lat. Hymnen, 1887, gives a long form in 77 st. of 3 l. from a Ms. of the 15th cent. at Darmstadt. A selection of stanzas beginning with the first, is given by Ramback, i. p. 315; Daniel, ii. p. 101; Kehrein, No. 62, and others. Trench, ed. 1864, p. 143, gives a selection of stauzas from the second part of the poem beginning, " Quam J. M.1 despectue, quam dejectus."

Both of these selections from the original have been ir. either in full or in part, thus :--

iti. Qui hase andis, ingemisce. This from the remaining sta. of Trench, is tr. as:-

Thou that hearest, with His greaning, also by H. Kynnston, in his Occasional H., No. 43, Pt. ii.

From these two parts in Kynaston, No. 36, in the Hymnary, 1872, is compiled. [J. J.]

Rector potens, verax Deus. St. Ambrose? [Noon.] This hymn has been ascribed to St. Ambrose, and is certainly ancient, but is not assigned to him by the Benedictine edi-tors. Daniel, 1., No. 41, gives the original (and the text of the Roman Brev., 1032), in 2 at. of 4 l., and at iv. p. 44, cites it as in a Rheinau Ms. of the 10th cent.: while at iv. p. 43 he expresses the opinion that the hymn "Bis terms horas" (q. v.), is more probably that written by St. Ambrose for the Sixth Hour. In all the ancient Breviaries it is the hymn at Sext, as in the Ambrosian of 1539, the Roman (Venice, 1478 and the revision of 1632), Mozarabic of 1502, Sarum, York, &c. It is suggested by Hosen vii. 4, Ps. xci. 6, and James iv. 1. As the sixth hour was the time for the mid-day meal (Acts z. 9), it may have been meant for use as a prayer against the temptations of the flesh. [W. A. 8.]

Mone, i. p. 372, cites it as in two MSS. of the 6th cent. at Darmstadt and at Trier, both assigning it to Sext. It is also in three MSS. of the 11th cent, in the British Museum (Verp. D. Nif. f. 8 of . Jul. A. 6. 22; Harl. 2961 f. 230); in a MS. of the lith cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (381, p. 238); in the St. Gall. MS., No. 413, of the 11th cent., &c. In the Latin Hyz, of the Anglo-Smoon Charge (Society), 1851, it is printed from an 11th cent. MS. at Durham (B. ill. 32 f. 4). [J. M.]

"The Asylum for Fatherless Children," "The Asylum for Idiots," "The Infant Orphan Asylum," and "The Hospital for Lucurables," Dr. Reed is more fully known, and will be longer remembered than by his literary publications. His Hymu Book was the growth of years. The proparation began in 1817, when he pub. a Supplement to Watts, in which were a few originals. This was enlarged in 1825; and entirely superscaled by his collection The Hymn Book, prepared from Dr. Watts's Ps. & Hys. and Other Authors, with some Originals, in 1842 (Preface). His hymns, mostly of a plain and practical character, numbering 21, were contributed to these various editions, and were republished with those of his wife (see below) in the Wucliffe Supplement, 1872. The below) in the Wycliffe Supplement, 1872. best known are "Ah Jesus, let me hear Thy voice," and "Spirit Divine, attend our prayer." All Dr. and Mrs. Reed's hymns are anonymous in The Hymn Book, 1842, but are given with their names in the Wycliffe Suppl., 1872. 'His hymns now in C. Reed, Eliza, née Holmes, was b. in London, March 4, 1794; married to the Rev. Andrew Reed (see above) in 1816; and d. July 4, 1867. Mrs. Reed entered fully and earnestly into her husband's extensive charitable works. Her publications include Original Tules for Children; and The Mother's Manual for the Training of her Children, 1865. Her hymns, 20 in all, were contributed to her husband's collection, and were republished with his in the Wycliffe Chapel Supplement, 1872. They are only of average merit, and have not attained to a marked position. They include:—

Gracious Lord, as Thou hast bidden. Holy Raptism.
 I would be Thine, O take my heart. Dedication of Self to Christ.

3. O do not let the word depart. The Accepted Time.

4. O that I could for ever dwell. Communion with God Desired.

Reinmar, sometimes called Reinmar der Alte, or Reinmar von Hagenau, seems to have been b. at Strassburg, about 1160. He lived principally at the court of Duke Leopold VI. of Austria, seems to have taken part with him in the Crusade of 1100, and wrote one of his finest pieces as an elegy on his death in 1194. Reinmar d. about 1207 (K. Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. i., 1884, p. 52, &c.). He was one of the most important of the Minnesingers, and is said to have been the inventor of most of the forms of lyric used by the later Minnesingers. This is strengthened by the fact that their pieces are in great measure variations on themes which were first employed by him. His pieces are principally love songs, and songs of the Crusades. only one tr. into English is :-

Des Tapes de loh das Krime nam. Crusader's Song. On Unruly Thoughts. F. H. v. der Hagen, in his Minseinger, vol. i., 1833. p. 187, gives this from the Maness Me, (14th cent.) of the Minnersger, now in the Bibliotheque Nationale, at Paris. Also in Wackernagti, ii., p. 59, in 4 st. of 10 l. Tr. na :—" E'er since the day this Cross was mine." By Miss Winkworth, 1869, p. 44.

Reissner, Adam, was b. in 1496 at Mündelsheim (now Mindelheim) in Swabism Bavaria, He first studied at Wittenberg, and then, about 1521, he learned Hebrew and Greek under Johann Reuchlin. then became private secretary to Georg von Freundsberg (who d. Aug. 20, 1528), and accompanied him during the campaign in Italy, 1526-27. After the capture of Rome in 1527 he went back to Germany, and spent some time at Strassburg, where he became a friend and adherent of Caspar Schwenkfeldt. He seems to have been living at Frankfurt-am-Main in 1568, but thereafter returned to Mindelheim, where he was still living in 1572. He appears to have d. there about 1575. (Koch, ii. 156; Preface to his Historia Herry Georgen unnd Herrn Casparn von Fründsberg's [d. Aug. 31,1536] Vatters und Sons Kriegesthaten, Frankfurt-am-Main, 1568. The Brit, Museum copy is unmistakably dated on title 1568, but the preface is dated Jan. 31, 1572.)

Three of Reissner's earlier hymne are in Zwick's G. B., 1858-66. His later hymne, including a tr. of the hymne of Prudentius, are collected in two ass., both dated 1856 (see Wackersaget, b. pp. 580, 594). That now at Wolferbüttel is entitled Teglich's Gesangiach... durch kidan Resumer, and contains over 40 hymne which may be regarded as by Reissner, the rest being by other writers of the school of Schwenckfeldt. Wackersagel, vol. iii., eview Nos. 124,184 under his median. gives Nos. 170-194 under his name.

The only hymn by Reissner &. into English

In dich hab ich gehoffet, Herr. Ps. xxxi. 1st pub. in the Form und ordnung Gaystlicher Geung und Fradmen, Augeburg, 1533, and thence in Wickernagel, ill. p. 183, in 7 st. of 61. It was included in V. Babst's G. B., 1545, and repeated in almost all the German hymn-books up to the period of Rationalism. It is one of the best Psain-versions of the Reformation period. Included in the Une. L. S., 1951, No. 629. The tr. in C. U. is:-

In Thes. Lord, have I put my trust. A good tr., omitting st. vii., by Miss Winkworth, in her C. R. for England, 1863, No. 120.

250 Aug. 1905, 1806.

Other trs. are: —

(1) "Lord, let me never be confoundit." In the Gude and Godly Bullates, ed. 1568, f. 22; ed. 1569, p. 141.
(2) "Great God! in Theo I put my Trust." By J. C. Jacobi, 1725, p. 33 (1732, p. 116). Repeated in the Moravian H. Br., 1754, pt. i., No. 118. (3) "Lord, I have trusted in Thy mane." By Dr. H. Bille, 1850, p. 171. (4) "On Thee, O Lord, my hopes I lean." By N. L. Frothingkan, 1870, p. 263. [J. M.]

Rejoice and be glad, the Redeemer has come. H. Bonar. [Praise of Jesus.] Written for I. D. Sankey's Sucred Songs and Solos, eirea 1875. From that collection it has pussed into a large number of Sunday School hymn-books, and others. [J. J.]

Rejoice, rejoice, ye fallen race. C. Wesley. [Whitsuntide.] Pub. in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1742, p. 165, in 12 st. of 4 l., and headed "Hymn for the Day of Pentecost." (P. Works, ii. p. 227.) The following centes are in part, or in full from this hymn:—

1. Guy Jesus is gone up on high. Composed of st. ii.-ix. in the recised ed. of the Wes. H. Rk., 1875.

2. Lord, we believe to us and ours. Composed of st. v., vii.-ix., xi., and given as a Hymn for Ember Days in Mercer's Ch. Peolier & H. Bk., Oxford ed., 1864.

3. Comp. Holy Spirit, raise our songs. This cento is composed of st. i.-ill. from R. C. Brackenbury's Sec.

Passas & Hys., 1792; and the rest from this hymn by G. Wesley. It was given in this form in the Wes. H. Bk., 1836, but omitted in 1875.

[J. J.] [J. J.]

Rejoice, the Lord is King. C. Wesley. [Easter or Ascension.] This is No. viii. of 16 hymns printed in 1746 as Hys. for Our Lord's Resurrection. It is in 6 st. of 6 l. It had previously appeared in J. Wesley's Morel and Sacred Poems, 1744. (P. Works, iv. p. 140.) It has been included, either in full or in part, in most hymn-books of any moment from Whitefield's, in 1753, to Thring's, in 1882, with the result that it is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries. Curiously enough, however, it was not given in the Wes. H. Bk. until the revised ed. of 1875. A cento for harvest beginning with the first stanza is found in some Unitarian hymu-books both old and new, including Ellen Courtuild's Ps., Hys. and Anthens, 1860. It is in 5 st., the first stanza and ll. 5, 6, of each of the others being from this hymn, whilst the rest are by John Taylor in Enfield's Norwich Sci. of Hys., 1795. [See Taylor, John.] In R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, st. i., ii., iv., vi., slightly altered, are rendered into Latin as, "Rex est Dominus! Latantes." (J, J_i)

Rejoice to-day with one accord. Eir II. W. Baker. [General Thanksgiving.] Contributed to the 1st ed. of II. A. & M., 1861, and continued in the revised ed. of 1875. It is also repeated in a large number of hymn-books both at home and abroad. It is justly regarded as a good example of the author's jubilant style.

Religion is the chief concern. J. Fawcett. [Pure Religion desired.] Pub. in his Hynnes, &c., 1782, No. 68, in 8 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Nuture and Necessity of inward Religion." It is in C. U. in an abbreviated form, under the original opening line, and also as, "O may my heart, by grace renew'd." [J. J.]

Remark, my soul, the narrow bounds. P. Doddridge. [New Year.] 1st pub. in J. Orton's posthumous ed. of his Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 52, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 65. In each case it is headed "Reflections on our weste of years, Psel. rc. 9. For New Year's Day." It is in C. U. in the following forms:-

Remark, my soul, the narrow bounds. The original form in several collections both old and new.
 Remark with awe then arrow bounds. In Stowell's

Manchester 1's. & Hys., 1kH and 1877, &c.

Rerum Deus tenax vigor. St. Ambrose? [The Ninth Hour.] This hymn is given by Biraghi as one of the Inni sinceri e Carmi di Sant' Ambrogio, 1862; but it is not one of the twelve received as genuine by the Benedictine editors of St. Ambrose. Daniel gives the text at i., No. 42, and at iv. p. 45, cites it as in a Rheinau Ms, of the 10th cent. and ranks it as a hymn of the 7th or 8th cent, Mone, i. p. 372, cites it as in mes. of the 8th cent. at Darmstadt and Trier; and Thomasius, ii. 418, as in a Vatican Ms. of the 8th cent. It is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church now in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xil. f. 9; Jul. A. vi. f. 22; Harl. 2961 f. 220); in an 11th cent. us. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 230); in the St. Gall Ms. No. 413, of the 11th cent; and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon

4. O Thou, true Life of all that live. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 12: and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 8. It was re-peated, with alterations, in Murray's Hymnol, 1853; and, again, in later collections, usually without any change.

5. 0 God, orestien's secret Force. By J. M. Neals, in the Hymnal N., 1852, No. 7, and later editions of the same.

8. O God, of all the Strength and Stay. By J. D. Chambers, in his Psalter, &c., 1852, p. 144, and his Lauda Syon, 1857, p. 39. This is the most popular of the trs. of this hymn, and is found in several hymn-books, including the Parish H. Bk., 1863; People's H., 1867; Sarum, 1868; Thring's Coll., 1882, &c.

7. 0 God, of all the Strength and Power. This tr. was given in H. A. & M., 1861. In the Index of the revised ed. 1875, it is said to be by "Rev. J. M. Neale, D.D., and compilers: from the Latin." The rendering, however, is much nearer those of Caswall and Chambers than that of Noule. It is in a limited number of hymn-books.

8. O Strength and Stay, uphoiding all creation. This popular tr. appeared in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, and is by J. Ellerton and F. J. A. It is repeated in several collections. In H. A. & M., 1875, and Thring's Coll., 1882, it is given with the addition of a doxology, by Mr. Ellerton. This tr. bids fair to supersede that by Mr. Chambers in popularity. Its metre is greatly in its favour. It is in Mr. Ellerton's Hymns, 1888.

This cente, 9. 0 God, the Light of all that live. in J. A. Johnston's English Hyl., 1856, and the American Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, is thus composed: sts. i., ii., Caswall; st. iii., Card. Newman.

Rest from thy labour, rest. J. Mont-gomery. [Death and Burial of a Minister.] Montgomery was received into the Moravian communion as a member of that Society by the Rev. Christian Ramftler. Mr. Ramftler died at Bristol on Oct. 25, 1882. In the letter which conveyed to him the sad intelligence, Montgomery was requested to write a suitable hymn for the approaching Lovefeast at Bristol. The response was this hymn, which was first sung in public at Bristol (Memoirs, v. 66). It was included in Montgomery's Original Hys., 1853, No. 307, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "On the death of a Minister." On Jan. 22, 1851, Montgomery wrote a hymn on the death of the Rev. Dr. Sutton, Vicar of Sheffield, which began with the same opening stanza. This hymn is not in the Original Hys., nor in C. U. The original is in a large number of hymn-books. In 1849 st. ili.-v. were given in Dr. Alexender's Augustine H. Bh., No. 494, and have been repeated in several later collections as "Lord Christ, into Thy hands." The early date of this cento suggests that the hymn was published before it appeared in the Original Hys., 1853, and possibly in a magazine, but it has not been traced to any work of the kind.

Rest in the Lord ; from harps above. Bp. E. H. Biokersteth. [Hely Matrimony.] Bp. Bickersteth says in his Notes to his H. Comp., 1870, that "This hymn was written by the Editor for this hymnal, and is especially designed to follow the air from Mendelssohn's Elijah, 'Rest in the Lord,' which is so often played at the solemnization of holy matrimony." In addition to the H. Comp. this hymn appeared in Bp. Bickersteth's The Two Brothers, &c., 1871, p. 242, and in several hymn-books. [J. J.]

Rest, weary heart [soul]: The penalty is borne, the ransom paid. Jane Borthwick. [Passiontide.] Pub. in her Thoughts for Thoughtful Hours, 1859, p. 93, in 4 st. of 7 l. It has passed into several collections. tions, and sometimes us "Rest weary soul: The ponalty," &c. It is a beautiful hymn, but better adapted for private devotion than for public worship.

Restore, O Father, to our times restore. Maria Popple. [Christian Unity desired.] Contributed to Beard's Unitarian Coll. of Hys., 1837, No. 304, in 8 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Christian Unity." It is signed "Miriam." It has passed into a few collections in G. Britain and America. $\{J, J, J\}$

Retire, vain world, awhile retire. [Home Missions.] This is found in the 1828-1829 ed. of the American (Old Presbyte-rian) Ps. & Hys. . . of the Presb. Church, in 7 st. of 4 l., and again in later collections. In most cases it is attributed to I. Watts, but we have failed to trace it to any of his works. Two centos therefrom are also in C. U., both beginning with st. ii., "Blest Jesu, come Thou gently down." The first is in the Presby. Ps. & Hys. for the Worship of God, Richmond, U. S. A., 1887, composed of st. ii., iv.-vi.; and the second, in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, composed of st. ii., iii., vi., vii. It is usually given for Revival Services and Prayer Meetings, [J, J.]

Return, O wanderer, return. W. B. Collyer. [Call to Repentance.] Appeared in the Evangelical Magazine, May 1806, and in his Hymne, &c., 1812, No. 928, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "The Backslider." It is in use in its original form; as " Beturn, my wandering soul, return And seek an injured," &c., in the Philadelphia Bap. H. & Tune Bk., 1871; and as "Wanderer from God, return, return," in a few of the American collections. [J. J.]

Reusner, Adam. [Reisser, A.]

Reusmer, Christoph, was a bookseller and bookbinder in Stockholm, and was probably born there, but date of birth is unknown. In 1675 he printed, and seems also to have edited, a collection of hymns for the German congregation at Stockholm, entitled Gottselige Haus- und Kirchen-Andacht, zu Dienst der Gemeine der Teutschen Kirche in Stockholm. This work contains a number of hymns signed "R," which have been ascribed to Renguer. By others this "R" has been taken to mean Regins, i.e. the Queen of Sweden [Ulrike Eleonore, dau. of King Frederick III. of Denmark, b. at Copenhagen, Sept. 11, 1656; became Queen of Swoden by her marriage with Charles xt. in 1680; d. at Carlberg, July 26, 1693], but this ascription seems quite improbable. One of these hymns has passed into English, viz. :-

Revive Thy work, O Lord, Thy mighty arm make bare, A. Midland. [Home Missions.] 1st pub, in the British Messenger, Oct. 1858, again in the Evangelical H. Bk., 1860, and again in a large number of hymnals in G. Britsin and America. The original text is usually given with the change of st. v. l. 2, "Give pentecostal showers," to "And give refreshing showers," as in the H. Comp., No. 150. It is one of the most popular of Mr. Midlane's hymns. [J. J.]

Rex actorne Domine. [Kastertide.] This hymn is certainly ancient, being mentioned in the Rule of Aurelianus of Arles (d. 535), and by the Venerable Bede (d. 735) in his De arte metrica. It is found in a Ms. c. 700, in the British Museum (Veep. A. i. f. 153); in a Ms. c. 890, in the Bodleian (Junius 25 f. 116 b); in an 11th cent. Mozarabic Breviary, in the British Museum (Add. 30848 f. 131 b); in a ms. of the 8th cent at St. Gall, No. 2; and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Church (Surtees Society), 1851 is printed from an 11th cent. us. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 9 b).

(B. iii. 32 f. 9 b).

The original text has 16 stanzas and adoxology. This form is in Daniel, i., No. 30 (for instrical reasons but without any authority Bensiel reads, O Rex setserne); Wackernogel, i., No. 64; the Hymnarian Sarieb., 1851, p. 95; and in G. M. Drevee's Hymnarian Sarieb., 1851, p. 95; and in G. M. Drevee's Hymnarian Sarieb., 1851, p. 96; and in G. M. Drevee's Hymnarian Sarieb and 1888, from a 10th cent. Ms. In the older Roman Brewiary (e.g. Venice, 1479), at i.—vii, were given as a hymn for Mathus on Low Sunday. At the revision of 1568 it was altered to Rex sempiterne Bomine, and at the revision of 1632 (appointed for Sunday Matins, "Tempure Paschali," i.e. during Easterticle, is in recent etc. of the revised Roman Brev. in Baniel, in No. 80; and Card. Nawman's Hymni Eccletics, 1839 and 1865. [J. M.]

In the Parish H. Bk., 1863 and 1875, and in Chope's Hymnal, 1864, it is given, with alterntions and the omission of st. il., as, "O King of angels, Lord of grace." $[J, \mathbf{M}]$

Rex Christe, factor omnium. 8t. Gregory the Great. [Passiontide.] This is one of the eight hymns accepted in the Bencdictine ed. of Gregory's Opera (Paris, 1705, vol. iii, col. 879), as his genuine productions. It is found in a MS of the 11th cent in the British Museum (Harl. 2061 f. 240); in a Ms. of the 12th cent in the Bodleian (Liturg. Misc. 297 f. 309); in three Mss. of the 11th cent. at St. Gell (Nos. 287, 818, 814), and others. In mediaeval times it was often used at the Tenebrae service on Good Friday, but does not seem to have been received into the more important Breviaries. It long survived in its original form in the Lutheran Church, and is e.g. in the Dresden G. B., 1748, p. 991, as one of "Certain Latin hymns as they are sung from time to time at week-day sermons in the Holy Cross Church, at the beginning of Divine service." The text is found in Daniel, L., No. 151; Bässler, No. 58; Königsfeld, i. p. 72, and others. Tr. us:—

A Coll. of Hys., hymns. In 1801 he pub. A Cott. of 1190, Dover, New Hampshire, which contained 6 additional hymns by himself, and in 1806, also at Dover, a second ed. of the same, greatly enlarged, with another 26 hymns. Of these the following are in C. U. at the present time :--

Message. This hymn appeared in the Boston Coll., 1792, and is the best of the early Universalist hymns. In the Andover Sabbath II. Bk., 1858, it is given as "Saviour, what gracious words." In this form and also in the original, it is found in several collections.

3. Long as the darkening eleud abode. Easter. This hymn in modern collections, as the Songs of the Sanctuary, 1865, No. 687, is composed thus: st. i. and ii., ll. 1-4, are from Richards, and the rest of the hymn, 3 st. of 8 l. in all, is anony mous.

Additional hymns by Richards, from both the Boston and the Dover collections, are in modern Universalist hymn-books. [F. M. B.]

Richardson, James, s. of the Hon. James Richardson, of Dedham, Massachusetts, was b. in that town May 25, 1817, and graduated at Harvard College, 1837. After being engaged, first as a clerk of the county courts, and then in teaching, he entered the Divinity School at Cambridge, where he graduated in theology in 1845. Subsequently he was Unitarian Pastor at Southington, Connecticut, and then of the Unitarian Society in Haverhill, Massachusetts. Ill-health compelled him to retire from his pastoral work to Dedham. During the war he joined himself to the hospitals at Washington, where he d. Nov. 10, 1863. Mr. Richardson was well known as an Essayist, Poet, and Preacher. Two of his hymns, from Longfellow and Johnson's Book of Hys., 1848, are still in C. U.: "From Ziou's holy hill there rose" (One in Christ), and "How glad the tone when summer's sun" (Summer). We are indebted to Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, Boston, U. S. A., 1875, for these details. $\{J, J_i\}$

Richter, Anne, née Rigby, was the third daughter of the Rev. Robert Rigby, Vicar of St. Mary's, Beverley, Yorkshire, from 1791 to 1823, and married the Rov. W. H. Richter, sometime Chaplain of the County Gael at Kirton Lindsey, Lincoln-shire, and then Rector of St. Paul's, Lincoln. Mrs. Richter d. at 23 Minster Yard, Lincoln, in 1857. She contributed to various magazines, and pub. The Nun and Other Poems, Hull, 1841. Her intimate literary acquaintances included Mrs. Hemans. Mrs. Richter was descended from the celebrated John Bradshaw, whose name is the first in the list of the signatures on the death warrant of Charles t. Her hymn, "We have not seen Thy footsteps tread," in its altered form as " We saw Thos not when Thou didst come," is widely used in G. Britain and America. լյ. յ.յ

Richter, Christian Friedrich, s. of Sigismund Richter, Rath and Chancellor to Count von Promnitz at Sorau, in Brandenburg, was born at Sorau, Oct. 5, 1676. At the University of Halle he was first a student of medicine and then of theology. In 1698, A. H. Francke appointed him Inspector of the Paedagogium, and then made him, in 1699, physician in general to all his Institutions. In company with his younger brother, Dr. Christian Sigismund Richter, he made many chemical experiments, for which he prepared himself by special prayer; and invented many 1. O Christ, what gracious words. The Gospel | compounds which came into extensive use under the name of the "Halle Medicines." the most famous being the Essentia dulcis, which was a preparation of gold. He d. at Halle, Oct. 5, 1711 (Kock, iv. 354, &c.).

Richter was one of the most important hymn-writers among the Pictists of the earlier Halle school; and his hymns possess the defects as well as the excellences of his school. They are emotional, and develop the idea of the spiritual union with thrist as the Bridegroun of the soul, with a minuteness that is hardly reverent (e.g. No. xi, below). They are also frequently not clearly thought out, and consequently comewhat obscure, Various of them are in unusual metres, and were wedded to tunes not very devotional in character. Apart from these defects there are various of his hymns worthy from these defects there are various of his hymne worthy of note for their gennins, fervent piety, their childlike spirit of love to God, and the depth of Christian experience embedded in them. They appeared principally in the various Pietistic hymn-books of the period, especially in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704 and 1714, and were collected and appended (as his Gaitticke Lieder) to an essay edited by his brother (named above) and pub, at Halle, in 1718, as Erbauliche Betrachtungen von Urterent and Advider Sufer. sprung und Adel der Seelen.

Two of Richter's hymns are noted separately see p. 854, i. and p. 521, l. The others which have passed into English are :-

I. Gott den ich als Liebe kenne. For the Sick. Included in Freylinghausen's Noues geistreiches G. B., 1714, No. 647, in 7 st. of 8 l., repeated, 1718, as above, p. 420, entitled, "Hymn in Sickness." According to Ehmann, in his ed. of Gottfried Arnold, 1856, p. xii. (see p. 81, ii.), it had previously appeared in Arnold's Heilsamer Bath and Unterricht für Kranke und Sterbende, 2nd ed., 1709. It is in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 603. Tr. as :-

xi. O wis salig aind die Beelen. Love to Christ. Founded on Hoses ii. 19, 20, and Eph. v. 25. In Freylinghauser's G. B., 1704, No. 512, in 10 st.: and in 1716, as above, p. 395, entitled, "On the high dignity of believers." In Poral's G. B., ed. 1855, No. 412. It was (says Moch, viii. 287) originated by a dream Richter had about 1700, that in the ho-pilal at Halle he would find a truly Christ-like soul. After searching all the warfs he found an old neglected patient in a garret, with whom he conversed, and whom he found to be the person he was seeking. Inspired by her relations of her inner experience, he embodied her thoughts in this fine hymn. P. as:—"O what joy for them is stored." By Mrs. Beran, 1858, p. 68. Beran, 1858, p. 68. ſJ. M.J

Richter, Gregorius, s. of Gregorius Richter, then disconus at Gorlitz, was b. at Görlitz, March 4, 1598. He studied at the University of Leipzig, became in 1619 fourth maeter in the gymnasium at Görlitz, was ordained as diaconus there in 1624, and d. at Görlitz, Sept. 5, 1638 (K. G. Dielmann's Priesterschaft in den . . . Oberlausitz, 1777, p. 261; Blätter für Hymnologie, 1887, p. 71, &c.; the latter dating his death Sept. 4). Two hymns have been ascribed to him, one of which has passed into English, viz. :-

Steh dock, Seels, steh doch stills. Confirmation. This is a hymn on self examination and renunciation of the world, and is founded on 1 John il. 15-17. It appeared in D. Wulffer's 2001ff Andachten, Nürmberg, 1848, p. 549, in 16 st., entitled "To the soul that longs after the world," and is signed Gregorius Richter. It has sometimes been ascribed to the father [b. 44 Görlitz, Feb. 1, 1569, pastor primarius-there, 1606, and d. there Aug. 14, 1624. See also Distincture, p. 174, and G. F. Otto's Lexicon... oberfeassiciacker Schriftzfeller iii. p. 60], but is more probably by the son. In many hymnobolts, as in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 343, st. iv. in omitted. The ir. in C. U. is :—

How from earth retire, my heart. A good tr. of st. L. ix.-xii. by A. T. Russell, as No. 180 in his Ps. & Hyt. JJ. M.Ĩ

Rickards, Samuel, a of Thomas Rickards, was b. in 1796, and educated at Oriel College, Oxford, B.A. 1817, M.A. 1820. He was the Newdigate Prizemen in 1815, and took second class Classical Honours in 1817. From 1819 to 1823 he was a Fellow of his College, and contemporary with Keble, Newman, and other men of note. He was Curate of Ulcombe in 1825, and became Rector of Stowlangtoft, Ely, in 1832, and d. Aug. 24, 1865. His published works included The Christian Householder, or Book of Family Prayers; A Parish Prayer-Book; Short Sermons, &c. His Hys. for Private Devotion for the Sundays and Sainte Days throughout the Year, were pub. in 1825 (Lond. Hatchards). Very few of these hymns have come into C.U. That for Christmas Day, "Though rude winds usher thee, sweet day," has supplied two centoe, one beginning with st. i. and the second with et ii., "Bright is the day when Christ was born." Another hymn, For Holiness, "O God, from Whom alone proceeds," is No. 1175 in Kennedy, 1863.

Ride on, ride on in majesty. H. H. Milman. [Palm Sunday.] Pulb in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 58, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in Milman's Sel. of Ps. & Hys., 1837, No. i., for Palm Sunday. The opening stanza, which reads:---

"Ride on! ride on in majesty! Hark ! all the tribes Hosanna cry ! Thine humble beast pursues his road, With palms and scatter'd garments strew'd," has failed to be acceptable to most editors. Murray, in his Hymnal, 1852, endeavoured to soften down the third line by making it read:-

" O Saviour meek, pursue Thy road." This was adopted by H. A. & M., and others. In 1855 Mercer tried another change:-

" With Joyous throngs purene Thy road," but this has received but little attention. Several hymnals follow the example of Elliott's Ps. & Bys., 1835, and omit st. i. These include the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871. Original text in Book of Praise, 1862-67. This hymn ranks with the best of the author's lyrics, and is the most popular hymn for Palm Sunday in the English language. [J, J.]

Ringwaldt, Bartholomaus (Ringwalt, Ringwald), was b. Nov. 28, 1532, at Frankfurt a. Oder. He was ordained in 1557, and was paster of two parishes before he settled in 1566 as pastor of Langfeld (or Langenfeld), near Sonnenburg, Brandenburg. He was still there in 1597, but seems to have d. there in 1599, or at least not later than 1600. (Koch, ii. 182; Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. ii. 1886, p. 512; Blätter für Hymnologie, 1885, p. 109, &c.)

Ringwaldt exercised a considerable influence on his contemporarice as a poet of the people, as well as by his byuns properly so called. He was a true German patriot, a stained Lutheran, and a man who was quite ready to face the consequences of his plain speaking. His style is as a rule clear and good, though his rhymne are often enough halting; and he possessed considerable powers of observation and description. After 1677 he powers of observation and description. After 1877 to pub. various didactic poems, the most important being, (1) Neuescittung: So Hassis Fromman mit sich ause der Hellen unnd dem Himel bracht, Amberg, 1862, and the later eds. enlarged and rewritten as Christiliche Warning des Treson Bekartz, &c., Frankfurt a. Oder, 1888. In various forms and abridgments it passed Oder, 1898. It warious forms and abridgments it passed through at least 34 editions up to 1700. This work is a mirror of the times and of the morals of the people.

(2) Die Lauter Warheit, dariumen angeseiget, wie sich ein Weltlicher und Geistlicher Kriegeman in seizen Beruff vorhalten soll, de., Erfurt, 1898. Of this again at least 18 eds. appeared up to 1700. In the given lively pictures of the life of the various ranks and orders of his time, and above the temperations and faithers of morals. time, and shows the temptations and failings of each, not by any means sparing his own class, i.e. the Lutheran clergy.

As a hymn-writer Ringwaldt was also of considerable importance. He was one of the most prolific hymn-writers of the 16th cent. Wackernagel, iv. pp. 906-1065, gives 208 pieces under his name, about 165 of which may be called hymns. A selection of 59 as his Geistliche Lieder, with a memoir by H. Wende-bourg, was pub. at Halle in 1858. A number appeared in the various eds. of his Trower Eckart and Lauter Warheit as above. The rest appeared principally in his Darked as a 2nd ed., and has a preface dated Nov. 28, 1881. It contains hymne founded on the Gospels for Sundays and Festivals, &c. (3) Bandbücklin: geistlicks Jieder und Gebeilein, Auff der Reist, de., Frankfurt z. Oder, 1686 (preface, Feb. 21, 1682). A good many of his hymne passed into German collections of the 18th and 17th centa. and a number are still in German C. U. and 17th cents., and a number are still in German C. U.

Those of Ringwaldt's hymna which have passed into English are :-

i. Es ist gewisslich an der Zeit. Second Advent. The anonymous original of this hymn is one of Zuesy schöne Lieder, printed separately circa 1565, and thence in Wackernagel, iv. p. 344. W. von Maltzahn, in his Bücherschatz, 1875, No. 616, p. 93, cites it as in an undated Nürnberg broadsheet, circa 1556. Wackernagel also gives along with the original the revised form in Ringwaldt's Handbüchlin, 1586. Both forms are nlso in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 746, in 7 st. of 7 l. It is based on the "Dies Irae," but can hardly be called a version of it. The original has a picturesqueness and force which are greatly lost in Ringwaldt's revision. It was much used in Germany during the Thirty Years' War, when fu these distressful times men often thought the Last Day was at hand. The free are all, except No. 2, from Ringwaldt's text. They are:

1. Tis sure that awful time will come. In full, by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psal. Germanica, 1722, p. 95 (1732, p. 202). Repeated, altered and abridged, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754 to 1886.

It is also found in two centos.

The waking trumpers all shall hear (st. ii.), in Montgomery's Christian Psatistist, 1825.
 When all with awe shall stand around (st. v.), from the Morganian H. Bk., 1801, in the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868.

2. Most surely at th' appointed time. By A. T. Russell, as No. 38 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851, repeated in the College Hys., N. Y., 1876. It is marked as tr. from the "Dies Irae," but is really a good tr. of st. i., ii., v. of the German of 1565.

3. Behold that awful day draws nigh. A tr. of st. i., ii., v., by W. Sugden, as No. 129 in the Methodist Scholars' H. Bk., 1870.

4. The day is surely drawing near. In full by P. A. Peter as No. 457 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

5. Surely at the appointed time. By H. L. Hastings, made in 1878, and included as No. 722 in his Songs of Pilgrimage, 1886. It condenses iii., iv. as ill.

6. The time draws near with quickoning pace. By Miss Fry, in her Hys. of the Reformation, 1845, p. 56.

A hymn which has been frequently but erroneously called a tr. from Ringwaldt's text, is noted as "Great God, what do I see and henr " (p. 454, i.).

In many of the older Gorman hymn-books this is ascribed to Ringwaldt, but it is not found in any of his secribed to Ringwaldt, but it is not found in any of his works now extant. Wackernagel, v. p. 327, gives it as anonymous from the Greifward G. B., 1997, where it is entitled "The golden A. B. C. wherein is very ingeniously comprised what a man needs to know in order to lead an homographs and godly life." It is in 24 st., of 41, each stanza beginning with successive latters of the alphabet. Also in Porat's G. There it is in Low German, and begins "Allene up godl hope und truwe," Riussker thinks Ringwaldt may possibly be the person who made the High German version. Rinkart, Martin, s. of Georg Binkart or Rinckart, cooper at Eilenburg on the Mulde, Saxony, was b. at Eilenburg, April 23, 1586.* After passing through the Latin school at Eilenburg, he became, in Nov., 1601, a foundation scholar and chorister of the St. Thomas's School at Leipzig. This scholarship also allowed him to proceed to the University of Leipzig, where he matriculated for the summer session of 1602, as a student of Theology; and after the completion of his course he re-mained for some time in Leipzig (he did not tako his M.A. till 1616). In March 1610 he offered himself as a candidate for the post of diaconus at Eilenburg, and was presented by the Town Council, but the Superintendent re-

* His own statement was that he "was born Anno 1886. Jubilate Sanday, on St. George's day, which was the 23rd of April, between 6 and 7 A.M." In 1886 how-ever Jubilate S. (2rd S. after Easter) fell on April 24, white St. George's day is April 23. The entry in the Registers at Ellenburg says that he was baptised "Morday after Jubilate, the 25th of April," which is fused to sanction this arrangement, nominally on the ground that Rinkart was a better musician than theologian, but really because he was unwilling to have a colleague who was a native of Eilenburg, and who appeared to have a will of his own. Rinkart, not wishing to contest the matter, applied for a vacant mestership in the gymnasium at Eisleben, and entered on his duties there in the beginning of June, 1610, as sixth master, and also cantor of the St. Nicholas Church. After holding this appointment for a few months, he became diaconus of St. Anne's Church, in the Neustadt of Eisleben, and began his work there May 28, 1611; and then became pastor at Erdeborn and Lyttichendorf (Lütjendorf), near Eislehen, entering on his duties there on Dec. 5, 1613. Finally he was invited by the Town Council of Eilenburg to become archidiaconus there, and in Nov. 1017 came into residence at Eilenburg. He d. at Eilenburg, Dec. 8, 1649. A memorial tablet to his memory, affixed to the house where he lived, was unveiled at Eilenburg on Easter Monday, April 26, 1886. (Martin Rinkart's Geistliche Lieder, ed., with a biographical introduction, and an extensive bibliography, by Homrich Remoe and Johannes Linke, D.D., Gotha, F. A. Porthes, 1886; K. Goedeko's Grundrias, vol.

Porthes, 1886; K. Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, pp. 169, 211, &c.)

The greater part of Rinkart's professional life was passed amid the horrors of the Thirty Years War. Eleuburg being a walled town became a refuge for lugitives from all around, and being so overcrowded, not unnaturally suffered from pestilence and famine. During the great pestilence of 1837 the Superintendent went away for change of air, and good not be persuaded to return; and on Aug. 7 Rinkart had to officiate at the funerals of two of the town clergy and two who had had to leave their livings in the country. Rinkart thus for some time was the only clergyman in the piace, and often read the service over some 40 to 16 persons a day, and in all over about 4,480. At last the refugees had to be buried in trenches without service, and during the whole epidemic some 8,000 persons died, including Rinkart's first wife, who d. May 8, 1637. The next year he had an epidemic of marriages to encounter, and himself fell a victim on June 24. Immediately thereafter came a most severe famine, during which Rinkart's resources were strained to the uttermost to help his people. Twice also be saved Willar heart from the Charlest from the Charl to the uttermost to help his people. Twice also he saved Ellenburg from the Swedes, once in the beginning of 1637, and again in 1638 (see p. 819, i.). Unfortunately the services he rendered to the place seemed to have suc services he tendered to the place scenned to have made those in authority the more ungrateful, and in his latter years he was much harassed by them in financial and other motters, and by the time that the long-tooked-for peace came (Oct. 24, 1840) he was a worn-out and prematurely aged man.

Rinkart was a voluminous writer and a good musician, but a considerable number of his books seem to have perished, and others survive only in single copies. He early began to write poetry, and was crowned as a poet apparently in 1614. Among other things he wrote a cycle of seven so-called "Comedies," or rather dramas, on the Reformation Period, suggested by the centenary of the Reformation in 1617. Three of these were printed respectively in 1613, 1618, and 1625, and two of smem were belieu in public. Kinkart's hymns appeared principally in the following works:—
(1) Jeru Hertz-Bieklein. This was completed in 1630, and first pub. at Lelpzig In 1636. No copy is new known. The 2nd ed., pub. at Leipzig, 1663, is in the Royal Litarry at Hannover. (3) Der Meissneische Fröners Soat, Leipzig, 1637. In the Royal Library at Berlin. (3) ziv. Epitholomi Solomoneo—Sulamitica cantica continuous. Leithiche Geiethiche und Himmiliant. Denniforming. Leithiche Geiethiche und Himmiliant. Denniforming. them were seted in public. Rinkart's hymns blowwn . . . Leibliche Geistliche und Himplische Braut Meser, Leipzig, 1642. In Wolfenbüttel Library. (4 Catechismus-withaten, und Catechismus-Lieder, Leipzig, 1645. In the Berlin Library.

Dr. Linke, 1886, as above, gives a list of the l first lines of all the hymns in the works of Rinkart which have come under his notice, and prints a selection from them, including 66 in all. The best of them are characterised by a true patriotism, a childlike devotion to God. and a firm confidence in God's mercy, and His promised help and grace. A few passed into the German hymn-books. Those which have been tr. into English are :-

L Alleluja, Lob, Preis und Ehr. This hymn, noted at p. 153, seems to be based on two hymns, beginning with the same first line, and both found in Rinkart's Braut Messe, 1642. Dr. Linke does not print the full text, (See Blätter für Hymnologie, 1886, p. 91.) B. Wun danket alle Gett. Thanksgiving. The oldest text now accessible is in J. Crüger's Prazis. 1648, No. 183, in 3 st. of 8 l.; also in the Crager-Runge G. B., 1653, No. 187. It is also in Rinkart's Jesu Hertz-Büchlein, 1663, where the text slightly varies, and is entitled "Grace" ("Tisch-Gebetlein," i.e. a short prayer at table). There does not seem any good reason for supposing that it did not appear in the 1st ed., 1636, of the Hertz-Büchlein, and in any case it has no connection with the Peace of Westphalia. (A good specimen of the way in which stories of hymns are manufactured is in the Bunday of Home, Aug., 1888, p. 539, where a full and particular account is given of its legendary origin in Nov. 1646.) It is founded on Ecclesiasticus l. 22-24; aud st. i., ii. are indeed little more than a paraphrase of these verses, st. iii. being a version of the Gloria Patri. The fact that the regimental chaptains, when holding the special service of thankegiving for the conclusion of the peace, were commanded to preach from this peasage, may have suggested the theory that Rinkart's hymn was written for the same occasion. It gradually came into general use, successfully survived the period of Rationalism, and is now to be found in every German hymnbook, e.g. in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1022. It may be called the German Te Deum, and as such is used at all national festivals or special occasions of thanksgiving. It was recently used at the festal celebration of the completion of Cologne Cathedral, on Aug. 14, 1880, at the laying of the foundation stone of the new Reichstage building in Berlin, by the Emperor William, June 9, 1984, &c.

The fine melody (set to the hymn in II. A. & M. and most recent English collections) appears in the Praxis, 1648 (Crüger's Kirchenmelodien, 1649, No. 94), and in the Cruger-Runge G. B., 1653, is marked with Crüger's initials. It has been described as adapted from a melody by Lucas Marenzo (choirmaster at Rome, who d. 1598), or as adapted from a motet by Rinkart; but to prove either statement, very little evidence is forthcoming.

The trs. of the hymn into English are:-▶ 1. Let all men praise the Lord. This is a tr. of st. i., iii., by Alfred Novello, as part of his version of the word-book to Mendelssohn's Lobgesang, or Hymn of Praise, 1848, p. 89. This form has passed into a number of hymnals, including the N. Cong., 1859; Dale's Eng. H. Bk., 1874, and others. In the Baptist Hyl., 1879, a tr. of st. ii. 's added, of which Il. 1-4 are from Miss Winkworth's tr.

2. Now praise the Lord on high. In full as No.

53 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848. appears to be the version which Kübler, in his Hist, Notes to the Lyra Germanica, 1865, p. 247, says was made by Baron C. K. J. von Bunsen, for the opening of the German Hospital at Dalston. on Oct. 15, 1845.

3. Now let us all to God. In full, by A. T. Russell, as No. 201, in his Ps. & Hys., 1851.

4. 0 let us praise the Lord, From hearts by true love guided. This is No. 240 in the Winchester Ch. H. Bk., 1857, and seems to be intended as a paraphrase of the German.

5. New thank we all our God. A full and very good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 145, repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 11, and her Christian Singers, 1869, p. 181. It has been included in many recent English and American hymnals, e. g. H. A. & M., 1861; People's Hyl., 1867; Cong. Hyl., 1887, &c., and in America in the Epis. Hyl., 1871; Presb. Hyl., 1874, and many others, generally in full and unaltered.

6. Now all give thanks to God. In full as No. 264 in the Anglican H. Bk., 1868 (1871, No. 807), marked as a versification by R. C. Singleton. Repeated in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876.

7. Now all men thank ye God. In full by T. E. Brown, as No. 37 in the Clifton College H. Bk., 1872.

Other tra. are:—

(1) "Now let us praise the Lord." In full by J. C. Jacobi, 1722, p. 36 (1732, p. 144), repeated, altered, in the Moravian H. Etc., 1764 to 1898. (2) "Now all, to God give thanks." By Dr. H. Mills, in the Evang. Review, Gettysburg, 1851, p. 293, and his Boras Ger., 1856, p. 14. (3) "Lift heart, and hands, and voice." By Miss Cox, 1864, p. 239. (4) "Now all give thanks to God." By J. D. Burns, 1889, p. 252. (5) "All hearts and tongues and hands." By K. L. Frothingkam, 1870, p. 212.

III. Be fahr ich hin mit Freuden. For the Dying. In his Meissnische Thränen-Saat, 1637, No. 24, p. 19, in 5 st. of 8 l., entitled "Even the same, and her soul-rejoicing Farewell Hymn. On May St. i. is.

> "So fahr ich bin mit Frewden Aus diesem Jammerthal, Aus Angst, Gefähr und Leiden In Himmels-Frewden Saal, Da wir und alle Frommen Durch Gottes Wundermacht Zusammen wiederkommen: In des su guter Nacht."

The title refers to the preceding hymn, which is in 19 st., the initials of the sts. forming the acrostic Christina Rinckardin. Dr. Linke abridges it and misprints the title, which is:-

"Die Teutsche Job-Schwester (Christina M. Rinchart's Hertagetrewe Ehe- und Creut-genostin und ihr Tagliches und behägliches Trost Lied. Aus ihrem längsterwählten und am 10. [not 30] Tage des Trostkühlen Meyen dietet 1631. Jahres zum letzten Ehrengedächtniss abgehandelten Leich-Text: des 77. Psalms."

From this it is clear that both hymns are in memory of his wife, that she died on May 8, 1637, and that her funeral sermon was preached by her husband on May 10, 1637. The form tr. into English is the greatly altered, or rather practically new text which is noted under Storm, Leonhard (q.v.).

A version of the "Jesu dulcis memoria." made by Rinkert, is noted at p. 589. i. [J. M.]

Rippon, John, p.p., was b. at Tiverton, Devon, April 29, 1751, and was educated for the ministry at the Baptist College, Bristol. In 1773 he became Paster of the Baptist church in Carter Lane, Tooley Street (afterwards removed to New Park Street), London, and over this church he continued to preside until his death, on Dec. 17, 1836. The degree of p.p. was conferred on him in 1792 by the Baptist College, Providence, Rhode Island. Dr. Rippon was one of the most popular and influential Dissenting ministers of his time. From 1790 to 1802 he issued the Baptist Annual Register, a periodical containing an account of the most important events in the history of the Baptist Denomination in Great Britain and America during that period, and very valuable now as a book of reference. But his most famous work is his Selection of hymns for public worship, which appeared in 1787. The full title of the 1st ed. is A selection of Hymne from the best authors, intended as an Appendix to Dr. Watte's Psalms and Hymns. In 1791 he pub. a Selection of Psalm and Hymn Tunes from the Best Authors, adapted to Dr. Watte's Psalms and Hymns, and to his own Selection, and from that time the names of tunes were prefixed to the hymns in the successive editions of his hymn-book. In 1800 he pub the 10th ed. of his Sel., containing more than sixty additional hymne. In 1827 it was still further enlarged, and in 1844, after his death, appeared The Comprehensive Edition, commonly known as The Comprehensive Rippon, containing most of the additional hymns, with about 400 then first added. making in all upwards of 1170, in 100 metres. A rival to the Comprehensive was also afterwards published under the old title, somewhat onlarged. In the preparation of the original book, and its subsequent improvement, Dr. Rippon performed an important service to Baptist Hymnody, and also, it is said, gained for himself "an estate" through its immense cale. In the preface to the 10th ed. he claims for himself the authorship of some of the hymns, but as he retrained from affixing his name to any of the hymns it is impossible now to say with certainfy which ought to be ascribed to him. There can, however, be no reasonable doubt that hymn 535, 3rd part, "The day has dawned, Jehovah comes" (q.v.), is one of his compositions. Other hymns, probably by him, are, "Amid the splendours of Thy state" (Love of God), 1800; and "There is joy in heaven, and joy on earth" (Joy over the Repenting Sinner), 1787. He also altered the texts of and made additions to several of the older hymns. Some of these altered texts (see Index of Anthors and Translators) are still in C. U. In 1830 the additions given in the 27th ed., 1827, of Rippon's Sel. were reprinted, with notes by Dr. Slater, as :-

Hymns Original and Selected; interspersed in the Frenty-seventh edition of the Selection, with Numerous Devologies, in the Ursal, the Peculiar, and in the less Common metres. By John Rippon, D.D.

A 2nd ed. of this pamphlet of 82 hymns and (W. R. S.) doxologies appeared in 1832.

Rise, heart; thy Lord is risen. Sing His praise Without delayes. G. Her-bert. [Easter.] This is Herbert's quaint and beautiful hymn for Easter, pub. in The Temple, 1633, in 3 st. of 6 l. and 3 st. of 4 l. (see reprints of The Temple). The hymn in the Bap. Pa. & Hys., 1858 :-

"Rise heart | thy Lord crose With the first morning ray,"

by G. Rawson (see his Hymns, 1876, p. 190), was suggested by this lyric by G. Herbert, From Herbert's hymn st. iv.-vi. have also been used as a separate piece as, "I got me flowers to straw Thy way." This form is in Martinean's Hymns, 1840, &c.

Rise, my soul, adore thy Maker. J. Cennick. [Morning.] Pub. in his Sacred Hys. for the Children of God, 1741, No. 12, in 7 st. of 4 l., thus:-

" Rise, my soul, adore thy Maker, Angels praise, Join thy lays,
With them be partaker."

It was repeated in several of the older hymnbooks, as Whitefield's, Madan's, Conyers's, Toplady's, and others. In modern collections it is not so widely used, although still given in several collections, including the Cong. Church Hyl., 1887, &c. [J. J.]

Rise, my soul, and stretch thy ings. R. Seagrace. [Heaven desired.] Appeared in his Hys. for Christian Worship, &c., 1742, in 4 st. of 8 l., and entitled "The Pilgrim's Song"; and again in D. Sedgwick's reprint of Sasgrave's Hymns, 1860. In 1758 Seagrave's intimate friend, G. Whitefield, included it, with the omission of st. iii., na No. 2 of Pt. ii. of his Hys. for Social Worship, This was repeated in most of the older collections, and is the form of the hymn usually given in modern hymnals. The use of this hymn is extensive in G. Britain and America. Original text in Lyra Brit., 1867.

Rise, my soul, with ardour rise. Wesley. [Looking to, and Confidence in, God the Father.] Pub. in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1739, p. 219, in 12 st. of 6 l., and headed "John xvi. 24. Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 192.) It was also added to J. Wesley's Sermon, No. 40, on "Christian Perfection." Although not in C. U. in its original form, the following centos are in several collections:--

 Since the Son bath made me free. This is composed of st. vi., viii., tx., xi., xii., and is given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, as No. 379. It is in several collection. Lione.

S. Heavenly Father, Lord of all. This cento in the American Reformed Dutch Hys. of the Church, N. Y. 1889, is composed of at it., iv. and viii.

J. Abba, Father, hear Thy shild. In a few American collections, incitnling Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872, where st. viii., ix., xii. are given as No. 919.

When these centoe are taken into account, the use of the hymn in varying forms is not (J. J.) inconsiderable.

Rist, Johann, s. of Kaspar Rist, pastor at Ottensen, near Hamburg, was b. at Ottensen, March 8, 1607, and from his birth was dedicated to the ministry. After passing through the Johanneum at Hamburg and the Gympasium Illustre at Bremen, he matriculated, in his 21st year, at the University of Riuteln, and there, under Josua Stegmann (q. v.), he received an impulse to hymn-writing. On leaving Rintein he acted as tutor to the sons of a Hamburg merchant, accompanying them to the University of Rostock, where he himself studied Hebrew, Mathematics and also Medicine. During his residence at Rostock the terrors of the Thirty Years War almost emptied the University, and Rist himself also lay there for weeks ill of the pertilence. After his recovery he seems to have spent some time at Hamburg, and then, about Michaelmas, 1633, became tutor in the house of the lawyer (Landschreiber) Heinrich Sager, at Heide, in Holstein. There he be-trothed himself to Elizabeth, sister of the Judge Franz Stapfel, whose influence seems to have had a good deal to do with Rist's ap-pointment as pastor at Wedel. In the spring of 1635 he married and settled at Wedel (on the Elbe, a few miles below Hamburg), where, spite of various offers of preferment, he remained till his death, on Aug. 81, 1667. (Johann Rist and seine Zeit, by Dr. T. Hansen, Halle, 1872; K. Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 79; Koch, iii., 212; Bode, p. 185, &c. The statements of the various authorities regarding the period 1624–1635 vary greatly and irreconcilably.)

During the Thirty Years War Rist had much to endure from famine, plundering, and pestitance. Otherwise he led a patriarchal and happy life at Wedel, close to the congenial society of Hamburg, and as years went on more and more esteemed and bonoured by his contemporaries. The Emperor Ferdinand III. crowned him as a poet in 1844, and in 1853 raised him to the nobility, while nearer home Duke Christian of Mecklenburg appointed him Kirchenrath and Consistorialrath. Among ather literary homosure has we accepted in 1845 and mem. other literary bonours he was received in 1645 as a mem-ber of the Pegnitz Order (see p. 143, under Birksz), and in 1647 as a member of the Fraitbearing Society, the great German literary union of the 17th cent,; white in 1640 be binnelf became the founder and head of the Elbe Swan Order, which however did not survive his Ribe Swan Order, which however did not survive his death.

Risk was an earnest pastor and a true patriot. He of course took the side, and that with all his might, of the Protestants, but he longed as few did for the union of the scattered elements of the body politic in Germany. He was a voluminous and many-sided writer (see the full bibliographics in Honsen and Goodste as above). His secular works are of great interest to the student of the history of the times, and his consistent poems on marriages, &c., to the generalogist and local historian. Perhaps the most interesting to the general reader are the Friedejauckrende Tautschland, 1953, two plays in which there are vivid pictures of the times, especially of the condition of the lower classes during the Thirty Years War. These plays, with selections from his other secular poems and from his hymns, are included in his Dichtungen, Leipzig, 1885, ed. by Goodske and E. becatar poems and toon, an dynam, are included in ma blockingen, Leipzig, 1885, ed. by Goedeke and R. Goetze, Hanses gives analyses of the secular works, with a few extracts from them; and in his second part gives a full selection from the hymns, often however greatly abridged.

As a hymn-writer Rist takes high rank. He wrote some 680 hymns, intended to cover the whole ground of Theology, and to be used by all ranks and classes, and on all the occasions of life. Naturally enough they are not of equal merit, and many are poor and hombastic. Rist meant them rather for private use than for public worship, and during his lifetime they were never used in the church at Wedel. But they were eagerly caught up, set to melodies by the best musicians of the day, and speedily passed into congregational use all over Germany, while even the Roman Catholics read them with delight. Over 200 may be said to have been in C. U. in Germany, and a large number still hold their place. Unfortunately many are very long. But speaking of Rist's better productions, we may say that their noble and classical style, their objective Christian faith, their scripturalness, their power to console, to encourage, and to strengthen in trust upon God's Fatherly love, and their fer-vent love to the Saviour (especially seen in the in 13 st. of 7 l., entitled "A joyful hymn of best of his hymns for Advent, and for the Holy Communion), sufficiently justify the esteem in which they were, and are, held in Germany. The best known of Bist's hymns appeared in the following collections:-

appeared in the following collections:—

(1) Hindische Lieder. This contains 55 hymns. The Britz Zehen is dated Lineburg, 1841, the 2-2 Zehen are dated 1842 [Royal Library, Berlin]. Ritter. Jakob, a. of Samuel Ritter, as-

Ritter, Jakob, a of Samuel Ritter, assessor of the Court of Appeal and Syndic o the Magdeburg administration at Halle, was b. at Halle, May 29, 1627. After the completion of his university course at Wittenberg, he was appointed secretary of the Magdeburg sdministration, and Justiciary at Langendorf, near Weissenfels. He d. at Halle, Aug. 14, 1669. (Koch, iii. 352; Blätter für Hymnologie, 1886, p. 2. In the latter his volume of 1666, see below, is spoken of as "not apparently bitherto inspected by any hymnologist." The present writer had however discovered and examined it at Wernigerode some six months earlier.)

Ritter's hymns appeared in his tr. of a work by Ir, Daniel Sennart (b. at Brestan, Nov. 25, 1672; d. at Wittenberg, July 25, 1631, as Professor of Medicine). The fr, by Ritter is entitled, Nutritions and heliams to-bereitund Dhung eines christilichen Lebens und rectigen Sterbens, and was pub. at Leipzig, 1866, with a dedica-tion, dated Halls, 1868. The work contains 18 chapters, to each of which Ritter added a hymn. A number of these hymns are worthy of note, being distinguished by conciseness and by living faith. Two came into extended use in Germany, and one has been tr. into English.

VIS.:—
The, die ihr ench von Christs neunt. True Christianity. In 1668, as above p. 150, at the end of chapter 10, which is entitled, "On the calling and office of a true Christian." The hymn is in 6 st. of 6 1., and is a masterly and concise dalineation of true as opposed to nominal Christianity. Included in the Numberg G. B., 1678, the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 610, &c. 17. as:—
O ye your Saviour's name who hear. A good and full fr. by Miss Cox, in her Sac. Hys. from the Germ. 1841, p. 121. Her ast. 1—ii., vl., were included in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1844, his Year of Praise, 1867, and others. The same cento, altered, and beginning, "O ye who hear your Eaviour's name." Is in Kannety, 1863.
Another tr. is: "O ye who hear your Saviour's name." By Lady E. Portessue, 1843, p. 53. [J. M.]

Robarts, Frederick Hall, was b. in London in March 1835; studied at University College, London, and at the University of Edinburgh, and commenced his ministry in 1859 in Liverpool, when he became the Pastor of the Richmond Baptist Chapel in that city, and in 1883 of the Hillhead Baptist Church, Glasgow, a position he still occupies. Mr. Robarts has written some hymns for children, three of which have appeared in Psalms and Hymns for School and Home, 1882. The first lines and respective dates are :-

1. In the name of Jesus. Doing all in the Name of 1. In the passes of the Lord, and praise. Remembrance of 2. 0 bless the Lord, and praise. Remembrance of God's goodness. (1881.)
3. 0 Lord, our Strength and Refuge. [W. R. S.]

Robbins, Chandler, D.D., was b. in Lynn, Massachusetts, Feb. 14, 1810, and educated at Harvard College (1829), and the Cambridge Divinity School (1833). In 1833

he became Pastor of the Second [Unitarian] Church, Boston, succeeding Dr. H. Ware, jun., and Ralph Waldo Emerson. He received his n.p. degree from Harvard in 1855, and d. at Westport, Massachusetts, Sept. 12, 1882. Dr. Robbins pub. several prose works. He also edited The Social Hymn Book in 1843, and Hymne for Christian Worship, 1854. His two hymne, "Lo, the day of rest declineth" (Evening), and "While thus [now] Thy throne of grace we seek" (The Voice of God), appeared in Dr. G. E. Ellies Pa. & Hys. for the Sanctuary, 1645. L. B. Barnes's tune, "Bedford Street," was written for the former. FF. M. B.1

Robbins, Samuel Dowse, M.A., brother of Dr. Chandler Robbins, was b. in Lynn, Massachusetts, March 7, 1812, and was edu-cated for the ministry at the Cambridge Divinity School. In 1833 he became Pastor of the Unitarian congregation in his nativo town, and subsequently held pastorates at Chelsea (1840), Farmingham (1859), and Wayland (1867), and retired from the last in 1873. Four of his hymns are given in the Boston Unitarian Hymn [and Tune] Book, 1868 :---

- Down towards the twilight drifting. Sunset.
 Saviour, when Thy bread we break. Holy Com-
- 3. Thou art, O God! my East. In Thee I dawned. God, All in All.
 4. Thou art my morning, God of Light. Daily Hyssu.
 5. Thou art our Master, Thou of God the Son. Christ

These, together with other hymns and poetical pieces, are in Putnam's Singers and Songs, &c., 1875, and the text of No. 3 is revised therein. We are indebted to Putnam for these details. [J. J.]

Robert the Second, King of France, surnamed "Le Page" and "Le Devot," b. carca 970, was the s. of Hugh Capet, the first of the line of kings that succeeded the Carlovingian monarche on the French throne. After having been associated with his father in the government of the kingdom, in 988 he became king in his own right. The story of his life, rather than of his reign, is a sad one; troubles both in his family and without so multiplying upon him that it needed all the consolation that he sought and found in religion to enable him to bear up against them. Having in 995 or 996 espoused Bertha, the widow of Eades, Count of Chartres, and daughter of Course the Pacific, his cousin in the fourth degree (a marriage at that time strictly ferbidden by the Roman Catholic Church), he was com-manded by a decree of Pope Gregory V. to put her away. He was tenderly attached to her, and refused, whereupon he was excommunicated. This sentence caused the unhappy couple to be abandoned by all their courtiers, and even their servants, with the exception of two of the latter. After living together for a while in a state of sore privation, nay, almost absolute destitution, Bertha was delivered of a still-born infant, which was represented to Robert to have been a monster with "a head and neck like a goose." On hearing this (for the fond husband was but a weak and credulous man), Robert repudiated the married Constance, a daughter of the Count of Arles, by whom he had four sons and two daughters. Much of the misery of his later life resulted from this marriage; for in addition to the antagonism which existed in their tastes and pursuits, Constance en-deavoured to secure the kingdom for her youngest son Robert, to the exclusion of the third son Henry (Hugh, the eldest, having died, and Eudes, the second, being an idiot), and this led to constant domestic broils which embittered the gentle king's existence. In 1024 he refused (and wisely) the Imperial Crown of the House of Saxony, when the Italians offered it to him on the death of Henry II., the last of the Saxon Emperors. Robert spent much of his time in the society of monks, assisting in the services of the Church, and engaging on pious pilgrimages. It was upon his return from one of the latter to some of the pripripal sauctuaries of France that he was attacked by a fever, to which he succumbed at Thelun in 1031, in the 60th year of his age and the 34th of his reign-more deeply lamented by his people, to whom he had attached himself by the sweetness and simplicity of his character, than any other king, probably, who ever reigned in France. Robert had a great love for, and skill in, church music, and it is not improbable that compositions of his are even at this day in use in (D. S. W.) the services of his Church.

It has been the custom to speak of King Robert as a hymn-writer. But when the different authorities come to specify the pieces which he is said to have composed, their statements are hopelessly at variance. For the purposes of this article we shall take four ancient authorities :---

(a) and (b) In the Recuell der Historiens des Gaules et de la France, vol. x., Paris, 1760, pp. 297-300, there are extracta "ex chronico Sithlens!" (a); and also "ex are extracts "ex chronico Sithienai" (a); and also "ex chronico Alberici ad annum 997" (b).

(c) In the Junius MN, 121, in the Bodielan there is a list of authors of sequences, written about 1390. This list is given in the article Sequences (q.v.).

(d) William Durandus (d. 1296) in bis Rationaig. (Bk. iv., has a section "De prosa seu sequentia." This occurs in two ass. of the 14th cant. in the British biuseum [Add. 18304, f. 20 b; Reg. 7 E., t. 153. An earlier and finer Ms. than either (Add. 31023) has unfortunately lost the leaf containing this section).

By these four authorities the following hymns and sequences are ascribed to King Robert :-

1. Chorus novae Hierusalem.

Rex omnipotens die hodierna.
 Sancti Spiritus adsit nobis gratia.
 Veni Sancte Spiritus.
 Victimae Paschall.

But of these a only ascribes to him No. 3, and does not mention Nos. 1, 2, 4 or 5, while b ascribes to him Nos. 2 and 3, and does not mention Nos. 1, 4 or 5. On the other hand casoribes to him No. 5, while No. 3 it ascribes to Hermannus Contractus, and Nos. 1, 2, 4 it doce not mention at all. Lastly describes to him Nos. 1 and 4, but ascribes Nos. 2 and 8 to Hermannus Contractus, and does not mention No. 5. Taking those in detail, we find No. 1 is only ascribed to King Robert by d, and seems more probably to be by Fulbert of Chartres (see p. 894, i.). No. 3. seems without doubt to be by Notker Relbulus (see note on his wife, who thereupon retired into a nunnery. Subsequently, probably about 1002, on "Victimae Paschali." No. 2 is noted at

p. 958, ii., and, according to the common opinion, is there ascribed to Hermannus Contractus; but this ascription is very doubtful, seeing that he d. in 1054, and was only b. in 1013, while the Bodleian Ms. 775 was written in England about 1000, so that the ascription of b deserves attention. As to No. 4 the subject of authorship is treated more fully under "Veni Sancte Spiritus," but here it may be said that Durandus and those who followed him are alone in ascribing it to King Robert, for the French tradition was clearly against this, e.g. neither a nor b escribe it to him, and Clichtovneus in his Elucidatorium, Paris, 1516, and the Augustinian Missal, printed at Paris, 1529 (see Sequences, Part II.), which may be taken to represent the later French tradition, while agreeing in ascribing No. 3 to King Robert, agree also in treating No. 4 as of unknown authorship. To sum up then it seems to us that No. 2 is possibly by King Robert; that Nos. 8 and 4 are clearly not by him; and that his claim to Nos. 1 and 5 is exceedingly doubtful,

The French chronicles a and b as above also ascribe to King Robert other liturgical pieces, viz.:—(1) "O Constantia martyrum," (2) "Judaes (O Juda) et Hierusalem," (3) "Eripe me," (4) "Cunctipotens genitor" (5) "Cornelius centurio," (6) "Pro fidei meritis," (7) "Concede nobis quaesumus." These appear to be Responsories and Antiphons, but whether rightly or wrongly ascribed to Robert the present writer cannot say. No. 7 is also ascribed to him by c as above. [J. M.]

Roberthin, Robert, s. of Gerhard Roberthin or Robertin, pastor at Saalfeld, in East Prussia, was b. at Saalfeld, March 3, 1600. He entered the University of Königsberg in 1617, went to Leipzig in 1619, and then to Strassburg in 1620, where he became acquainted with Martin Opitz. After 1621 he travelled, employed himself as a private tutor, &c. In 1637 he was appointed secretary to the Prussian Court of Appeal at Königsberg, and in 1645 also Chief Secretary and Rath to the Prussian Administration at Königsberg. After a stroke of paralysis on April 5, he d. on April 7, 1648 (K. Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 128; Valentin Thilo's Orationes Academicae, Königsberg, 1653, p. 349, &c.).

Roberthin was an influential, cultured, and lovable man. He had a great liking for poetry, was a liberal patron of telented youths (e.g. Simou Dach, see p. 277, i., and was one of the founders of the Kanigsberg Poetical union (see p. 28, i.). His hymns and poems appeared principally in H. Alberti's Arien. The only one tr. into English is noted at p. 202, ii. [J. M.]

Roberts, Martha Susan, née Blake-ney, daughter of the Rev. J. E. Blakeney, D.D., Archdescon of Sheffield, was b. at Sheffield, Dec. 25, 1862; and married to Samuel Roberts, r.r., Queen's Tower, Sheffield, Dec. 21, 1880. Mrs. Roberts's hymu-writing has been confined to local events. Her hymn on the Laying of the Foundation Stone of a Church, "Be present, Holy Father, To bless our work to-day," was written, in the first instance, for use at the laying of the foundation-stone of the North Transcpt of the Parish Church of Sheffield, July 12, 1880. It was subsequently revised by Mrs. Roberts, and is in frequent

Another hymn, written for the laying of the foundation stone of St. Ann's, Sheffield, June 12, 1882, begins, "O Saviour Christ, Who art Thyself." Her hymn for the Queen's Jubilee service at the Parish Church of Sheffield was "Rise, O British Nation, Hasten now to pay. Mrs. Roberts's ballad writing is very sweet [J. J.] and tender.

Robertson, William, was the a of David Robertson of Brunton in Fife. After fluishing his University course he was licensed to preach in 1711. He is said to have been assistant to the minister of the Presbyterian Church of London Wall, London, before his settlement, in 1714, as parish minister of Borthwick, Midlothian. In 1733 he was appointed minister of Lady Yesters, Edinburgh, and in 1736 of Old Greyfriars, and died at Edinburgh, Nov. 16, 1745. He was in 1742 appointed a member of the Committee of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, which compiled the Translations and Paraphrases of 1745, and is said to have contributed 3 paraphrases which, in the 1781 collection, are numbered 25, "How few receive with cordial faith" (p. 586, ii.), 42, "Let not your hearts with anxious thoughts" (p. 672, 1.), and 43 "You now must hear my voice no more." See Soottish Translations and [J. M.] Paraphrases.

Robertson, William, M.A., eldest s. of the Rev. John Robertson, D.D., of Cambuslang, Lanarkshire, was b. at Cambuslang, July 15, 1820. He studied and graduated M.A. at the University of Glasgow. In 1843 he became parish minister of Monzievaird, Perthebire, where he died June 9, 1864. He was appointed a member of the Hymnal Committee of the Established Church in 1852, 1853, and 1857, and contributed 2 hymns to their Hys. for Public Worship, 1861, since included in their Scottish Hymnal, 1869, which have attained considerable popularity, viz., "A little child the Saviour came" (Christmas), and a version of the Te Deum, which begins, "Thee God we praise, Thee Lord confess." [J. M.]

Robertson, William Bruce, p.p., youngest s. of John Robertson, Greenbilt, William Bruce, D.D., near Stirling, was b. at Greenhill, May 24, 1820. After studying at the University of Glasgow (which conferred upon him the degree of D.D. in 1869), he became, in 1843, minister o Trinity U. P. Church, Irvine, Ayrabire, retir-ing from the active duties of his charge in 1879. He d. at Bridge of Allan, June 27, 1886. In 1870 he was appointed a member of the Hymnal Committee of the U. P. Church, and contributed a translation of the Dies Irae (see p. 200, 1. 12), as No. 356, to their Presbyterian Hymnal, 1876. It had previously appeared as No. 87 in his Hosanna: or chaunts and hymns for Children and Teachers, Glasgow, M. Ogle & Son, N. D. (Preface dated Irvine, August, 1854. Contains 102 for children and 9 for teachers.) He also contributed poems to the Juvenile Missionary Magazine of the U. P. Church fsuch as "The Departed nigh" (Nov. 1861), "The Child's Angel" (May 1856), "Our Lord's Three Weepings" (June 1857)], and other periodicals. But he was best known as use in Sheffield and the neighbourhood, one of the most eloquent Scottish preachers of his time. A considerable number of his hymns and poems are embodied in the interesting Life of William B. Robertson, D.D., Irvine, by James Brown, D.D., Glasgow, 1988.

Robinson, Charles Seymour, D.D., was b. at Bennington, Vermont, March 31, 1829, and educated at William College, 1849, and in theology, at Union Seminary, New York (1852-53), and Princeton (1853-55). He became Presbyterian Pastor at Troy, 1855; at Brooklyn, 1860; of the American chapel in Paris (France), 1868; and of the Memorial Presbyterian Church, New York, 1870. During 1876-77 he was editor of the Hustrated Christian Weekly. As an editor of hymnhooks he has been most successful. His Songs of the Church were pub. in 1862; Songs for the Banctuary, 1865; Spiritual Songs, 1876; and Laudes Domini, A Selection of Spiritual Songs, Ancient and Modern, 1884. His Songs for the Sanctuary has probably had a wider saie than any other unofficial American collection of any denomination, and the Laudes Domini is a book of great excellence. Dr. Robinson has composed a few hymns, including, "Saviour, I follow on "(Following Christ), in his Songs of the Church, 1862, and "Isles of the South, your redemption is hearing" (Missions), in his Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865. The latter is given in Dr. Hatfield's Church H. Bh., 1872, as "Lands long benighted." [F. M. B.]

Robinson, George Wade, b. at Cork in 1838, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and New College, St. John's Wood, London. He entered the Congregational Ministry, and was co-pastor at York Street Chapel, Dublin, with Dr. Urwick; then pastor at St. John's Wood, at Dudley, and at Union Street, Brighton. He d. at Southampton, Jan. 28, 1877. He pub. two vols. of poems. (1) Songs in God's World; (2) Loveland. His hymn, "Strangers and pilgrims here below" (Jesus Only), from his Songs in God's World, is in Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884, in an abridged form; and "Weary with my load of sin" (Contrillon), is in the 1874 Suppl. to the New Cong. [W. G. H.]

Robinson, Richard Hayes, was h in 1842, and educated at King's College, London. Taking Holy Orders in 1866, he became curste of St. Paul's, Penge. He subsequently held various charges, including the Octagon Chapel, Bath. He became Incumbent of St. Germans, Blackheath, in 1884. His prose works include Sermons on Faith and Duty, 2nd ed., 1873, and The Creed and the Age, 1884. His hymn "Holy Father, cheer our way" (Evening), was contributed to the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871. It was written in 1869 for the congregation of St. Paul's, Upper Norwood, and was designed to be sung after the 3rd Collect at Evening Prayer. It has passed into several collections (sometimes in an altered form), including H. A. & M., 1875, and Thring's Coll., 1882. See the latter for the authorized text. He d. Nov. 5, 1892.

Robinson, Robert, the anthor of "Come, Income of the Principles of the Late Peti-Swaffham, in Norfolk, on Sept. 27, 1785 tioners to Parliament for Relief in the matter

(usually misgiven, spite of his own authority, as Jan. 8), of lowly parentage. Whilst in his eighth year the family migrated to Scarn. ing, in the same county. He lost his father a few years after this removal. His widowed mother was left in sore straits. The universal testimony is that she was a godly woman, and far above her circumstances. Her ambition was to see her son a clergyman of the Church of England, but poverty forbade, and the boy (in his 15th year) was indentured in 1749 to a barber and bairdresser in London. It was an uncongenial position for a bookish and thoughtful lad. His master found him more given to reading than to his profession. Still he appears to have nearly completed his apprenticeship when he was released from his indentures. In 1752 came an epoch-marking event. Out on a frolic one Sunday with like-minded companions, he joined with them in sportively rendering a fortune-telling old woman drunk and incapable, that they might hear and laugh at her predictions concerning them. The poor creature told Robinson that he would live to see his children and grand-children. This set him a-thinking, and he resolved more than ever to "give himself to reading." Coinci-dently he went to hear George Whitefield. The text was St. Matthew iii. 7, and the great evangelist's searching sermon on "the wrath to come " haunted him blessedly. He wrote to the preacher six years later penitently and pathetically. For well nigh three years he walked in darkness and fear, but in his 20th year found "peace by believing." Hidden away on a blank leaf of one of his books is the following record of his spiritual experience, the Latin doubtless having been used to hold it modestly private:-

"Robertus, Michaslis Marisque Robinson fillus. Natus Swaffhami, comitatu Norfolele, Saturni die Sept. 27, 1736. Renatus Sabbati die, Mati 24, 1752, per predicationem potentem Georgii Whitefield. Et gustatis doloribus renovationis duos annosque septem absolutionem plenam gratuitamque, per sangvinem preitosum Jean Christi, inveni (Tnesday, December 18, 1766) cui sit bonor et gloria in secula seculorum. Annen."

Robinson remained in London until 1758. attending assiduously on the ministry of Gill, Wesley, and other evangelical preachers. Early in this year he was invited as a Calvinistic Methodist to the oversight of a chapel at Mildenhall, Norfolk. Thence he removed within the year to Norwich, where he was settled over an Independent congregation. In 1759, having been invited by a Baptist Church at Cambridge (afterwards made historically famous by Robert Hall, John Foster, and others) he accepted the call, and preached his first sermon there on Jan. 8, 1759, having been previously captized by immersion. The "call" was simply "to supply the pulpit," but he soon won such regard and popularity that the congregation again and again requested him to accept the full pastoral charge. This he acceded to in 1761, after persuading the people to "open communion." In 1770 he commenced his abundant authorship by publishing a translation from Saurin's sermons, afterwards completed. In 1774 ap-of Subscription. In 1776 was published A Plea for the Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ in a Pastoral Letter to a Congregation of Protestant Dissenters at Cambridge. Dignitaries and divines of the Church of England united with Nonconformists in lauding this exceptionally able, scholarly, and pungently written book. In 1777 followed his History and Mystery of Good Friday. The former work brought him urgent invitations to enter the ministry of the Church of England, but he never faltered in his Nonconformity. In 1781 he was asked by the Baptists of London to prepare a history of their branch of the Christian Church. This resulted, in 1790, in his History of Baptism and Baptists, and in 1792, in his Ecclesiastical Researches. Other theological works are included in the several collective editions of his writings. He was prematurely worn out. He retired in 1790 to Birmingham, where he was somehow brought into contact with Dr. Priestley, and Unitarians have made much of this, on exceedingly stender grounds. He d. June 9, 1790. His Life has been fully written by Dyer and by William Robinson respectively, both with a bias against orthodoxy. His three changes of ecclesisatical relationship show that he was somewhat unstable and impulsive. His hymns are terse yet melodious, evangelical but not sentimental, and on the whole well wrought. His prose has all, more or less of the σφόδρον ral erbousiderskov, that vehement and enthusiastic glow of passion that belongs to the orator. (Cf. Dyer and Robinson as above, and Gadaby's Memoirs of Hymn-Writers (3rd ed., 1861); Beloher's Historical Sketches of Hymns; Miller's Singers and Songs of the Church; Flower's Robinson's Miscel. Works; Annual Review, 1805, p. 464; Eclectic Review, Sept. [A. B. G.]

Robinson, Robert, was b. in London in 1814, and educated for the Congregational ministry at Highbury College, London. He was pastor successively at Chatteris, Luton, and York Road Chapel, Lambeth, London. From 1865 to 1884 he was Home Secretary of the London Missionary Society. He d. at New Cross, Jan. 10, 1887. His hymns were mainly composed for Sunday School Anni-versaries at Luten and York Road Chapel. They include the following, which have passed into C. U.:-

I. Beauteous scenes on earth appear. Written for the Sunday S. Augiversary at Luton, in 1850.

2. Hear, Gracions God, and from Thy Throne.
Written for the S. S. A. at Luton, 1851.

Written for the S. S. A. at Lutton, 1851.

8. I love Thy house, my Lord, my King. Written for the S. S. A., Luton, 1853.

4. I've been in chase of pleasure. Written for the S. S. A. is the my heart rejeices. Written in 1869. Major's Book of Praise, 1871.

8. Once more with joyous greeting. Written in 1869. In Major's Bit. of Praise, 1871.

7. The chearing chims of Subbath bells. Written for the S. S. A. at Luton, 1849.

3. Thus is hely convocation. Written in 1869. In Major's Bit. of Praise, 1871.

9. While we en earth are raising. Written in 1869. Major's Bit. of Praise, 1871.

10. Years are rolling, life is wasting. Written for the S. S. A., at Luton, 1849.

All these hymness.

All these hymns are for children, and are specially adapted to anniversary services. Most of them are in Major's Bk. of Praise for

Home and School, 1871; and the Silver Street Sunday Scholar's Companion, 1880. [W. G. H.]

Rock of ages, cleft for me. A. M. Toplady. [Passiontide.] In the October number of the Gospel Magazine, 1775, in an article on "Life a Journey," and signed Minimus (one of Toplady's signatures), the following occurs at p. 474:--

"Yet, if you fall, be humbled; but do not despair. Pray afresh to God, who is able to raise you up, and to set you on your feet again. Look to the blood of the covenant and say to the Lord, from the depth of your Rock of Ages, cleft for me, let me hide myself in thes! Houl, I to the fountain fly! wath me, Saviour, or I die.

Make those words of the apostle, your motto: 'Per-plexed, but not in deepsir; cast down, but not de-stroyed.'"

2. In the Gospel Magazine for March, 1776 (of which Toplady was then the editor), there appeared a peculiar article entitled, A remarkable Calculation: Introduced here, for the sake of the spiritual Improvement subjoined. Questions and Answers, relative to the National Debt. The object and end of this "Calculation" will be gathered from the closing questions and answers :-

Q. 8. How doth the government raise this interest yearly? A. By taxing those who lent the principal, and others.

Q. 9. When will the government be able to pay the

y. 5. The principal?

A. When there is more money in England's transury slone, than there is at present in all Europe.

Q. 10. And when will that be?

A. Never.

This article is signed "J. F." Immediately underneath, the subject is continued as a Spiritual Improvement of the foregoing: By another Hand. The aim of this "Improvement" is to ascertain how many sins "each of the human race" is guilty of "supposing a person was to break the law (1) but once in 24 hours"; (2) twice in the same time; (3) once in every hour; (4) once in every minute; (5) once in every second. As this last is the climax, we will give the question and the answer.

Q. May we not proceed abundantly further yet? Sixty seconds go to a minute. Now, as we herer, in the present life, rise to the mark of legal sanctity, is thout sairly infertible, that our Sixs multiply with every second of our sublunary durations?
A. The too true. And in this view of the matter, our dreadfull account stands as follows.—At ten years of the seconds with 315 multiples and 31 the seconds.

our dreadfull account stands as follows.—At ten years old, each of us is chargable with 315 millions, and 35 thousand sine.—At theority, with 630 millions, and 720 thousand.—At fairty, with 936 millions, and 800 thousand.—At fairty, with 1812 millions, and 800 thousand.—At fifty, with 1872 millions, and 800 thousand.—At sinty, with 1892 millions, and 800 thousand.—At scorety, with 1892 millions, and 820 thousand.—At scorety, with 2007 millions, and 820 thousand.—At scorety, with 2007 millions, and 820 thousand.—At scorety, with 2007 millions, 830 thousand.

Q. When shall we be able to pay off this immense debt?

A. Never....

Q. Will not divine goodness compound for the debt, by accepting test than we owe?

A. Impossible....

A. Impossible....

Notwithstanding this frightful helplessness, there is hope, as the answer, a little further on, makes clear :--

A. "Christ bath redeemed us from the curse of the Law; being made a curse for us." Gel. III. 13.—This, This, will not only counter-balance, but infinitely overbalance, ALL the sins of the WHOLE believing world.

Questions and Answers follow, all of which are framed to support Toplady's Calvinistic creed. The last answer is :-

A. "We can only admire and bless the Farrer, for electing us in Christ, and for laying on Him the iniquities of ur all:—the Sox, for taking our nature and our debts upon Himself, and for that complete righteovamess and sacrifice, whereby he redeemed his mystical Israel from all their sins:—and the co-sequal Spirit, for carsell from all their sins:—and the co-sequal Spirit, for carsell us (in conversion) to feel our need of Christ, for Inspiring us with failth to embrace him, for visiting us with his sweet consolations by shedding abroad his love in our hearts, for sealing us to the day of Christ, and for making us to walk in the path of his commandments.

"A leving and dying Farrer for the Hollier Believez is the World.

- ¹¹ Rook of Agea, cleft for me, Let me bide myself in Thee i Let the Water and the Blood, From thy riven Side which flow'd, Be of Sin the double Cure, Cleanse me from its Guilt and Pow'r.
- " Not the labors of my hands Can faifill thy Law's demands: Could my seal no respite know, Could my tears forever flow, All for Sin could not atoms: Thou must save, and Thou alone !
- "Nothing in my hand I bring; Simply to thy Cross I cling; Naked, come to Thee for Dress; Helpless, look to Thee for grace; Foul, I to the fountain fiy; Wash me, Saviour, or I die!
- " Whilst I draw this fleeting breath— When my eye-strings break in death-When I sear through tracts unknown— See Thee on thy Judgment-Throne— Rook of ages, cleft for me, Let me hide myself in Thee !—A. T."
- In his Pe. & Hye., 1776, No. 337, this text was repeated as "A Prayer, living and dying," with the changes given in italics in st. iv.
 - " While I draw this fleeting breath, When my eye strings break in death, When I sour to world; unknown, See Thee on Toy judgment thrane; Rock of Ages, cleft for me, Let me hide myself in Thee."

In tracing out the subsequent history of this hymn we shall deal with its Tezt, its Usc,

- its Translations, and its Merits and Usefulness.
 4. The Text. In the above quotations we have Toplady's original, and his revised text. Of these we must take the latter as that which he regarded as authorised, and indicate subsequent changes by that standard alone. These changes include:-
- (1.) The change of st. iii. 1.2 from "Simply to Thy Cross, &c." to "Simple to Thy Cross, &c.," first appeared in Walter Rows ed. of Toplady's Ps. and Hys., 1787.

(2.) "Book of ages shelter me." This was given in Rippon's Bap. Selection, 1787, and others

(3.) In the 1810 ed. of Rowland Hill's Coll. of Ps. and Hys., No. 111, st. i.-iii. are given as "Smitten on th' accursed tree."

- (4.) The most important rearrangement of the text, and that which has gained as great if not a greater hold upon the public mind than the original, is that made by T. Cotterill, and included in his Sel, of Ps. & Hys., 1815. This reads (the italies indicate the elterations made by Cotterili) :-
 - "Book of ages! cieft for me: Let me hide myself in Thee: Let the water and the blood, From Thy wounded side which flow'd, Be of sin the double cure: Save from wrath, and make me pure.

- 2. " Should my tears for ever flow, Should my real no languor know, This for sin could not atone; Thou must save, and Thou slone; In my head no price I bring, Simply to Thy cross I cling.
- 3. "While I draw this fleeting breath, When mine eyelfds close in death, When I rise to worlds unknown, And behold Thee on Thy throne, Rock of agest cleft for me!

 Let me hide myself in Thea."
- (5.) In the 8th ed. of his Sol. of Ps. & Hys., 1819, Cotterill repeated this text with the change in st. i.l. 4, from "From Thy wounded side which flow'd," to "From Thy side, a healing flood." This text was repeated in J. Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, and is found in a large number of hymn-books both old and new.

(6.) The next important change was that made in the 1830 Supplement to the Wes. H. This text is:-

St. i. Cotterill's of 1815, as above.
St. it. Cotterill's, 1815, with 1. 1, "Could my lears," &c. (Toplady); 1. 2, "Could my zeal," &c. (Toplady); 1. 3, "There for sin," &c. St. iii. Cotterill's, 1815, with 1. 2, "When my eyes shall close in death."

This is the recognised Methodist version of the hymn in most English-speaking countries.

(7.) In 1836 another version was given by W. J. Hall in the Mitre H. Bk., No. 99, as followe:~

Cotterill, of 1816.

"Herit I have none to bring,
Only to Thy cross I cling;
Should my tears for over fibr St. H. Should my real no languer know,

All for ain could not atone;

Thou must save, and Thou alone."

St. iii. Catteria, 1816, with 1. 4, " See Thee on Thy fudgment throne" (Toplady).

This text is repeated in The New Mitre

- Hymnal, 1875. (8.) The crucial line of the original, "When my eye-strings break in death," has been altered as :-
- 1. "When mine cyclids close in death." Cotterill, 1815, as above.

 2. "When my eyes shall close in death," Wes. H.

- 2. "When my eyer enas cope in usada, cons. Rk., 1830, as above.

 8. "When my heart-strings break in death." Williams's and Bodon's Coll., 1801.

 4. "When my cyclicis stak in death." J. Kempthorne's Fr. & Hyt., 1810.
- (9.) Other changes in the text of the hymn might be indicated; but being of minor importance nothing will be gained by their enumeration.
- 5. Its Use. From 1776 to 1810 this hymu is found in a very limited number of hymnbooks. After that date the interest therein grew rapidly until at the present time it is omitted from no hymn-book of merit in the English language. Until Sir R. Palmer's (Lord Selborne) vigorous protest at the Church Congress at York in 1868, most of the altered texts as given above were in common use. Since ther in most new bymp-books Toplady's authorised text from his Ps. & Hys., 1776, has been adopted.
- 6. Translations. In translating this hyun into other languages (and these translations are very numerous and in many languages), the text used has varied with the materials in the hands of the translator, some taking the text direct from Toplady, some from Cotterill, and others from the Wes. H. Bk., or other

7. Merits and Usefulness. The merits of this hymn are of a very high order whether regarded as a sacred lyric, or as a metrical epitome of certain well-known passages of Holy Scripture. The influence which it has had upon the minds of men, especially amongst the more learned, has been very considerable. The fact that it was quoted by and gave great consolation to the late Prince Consort in his last illness is well known. This is one, however, of numerous instances of more than ordinary importance, where it has been a stay and comfort in days of peril, and in the hour of death. No other English hymn can be named which has laid so broad and firm a grasp upon the English-speaking world.

Rodigast, Samuel, a. of Johann Rodigast, pastor at Gröben near Jena, was b. at Gröben Oct. 19, 1649. He entered the University of Jena in 1668 (M.A. 1671), and was in 1676 appointed adjunct of the philosophical faculty. In 1680 he became conrector of the Greyfriars Gymnasium at Berlin. While in this position he refused the offers of a professorship at Jena and the Rectorships of the Schools at Stade and Stralaund. Finally, in 1698, he became rector of the Greyfrians Gymnasium, and held this post till his death. His tombstone in the Kloster-Kirche in Berlin says he d. "die xxix. Mart. a. MDCOVIII ... actatis cuno lix." (Koch, iii. 420; Goedeke's Grundriss, iii. 1887, p. 291; Ms. from Dr. Nohl of the Greyfrians Gymnasium, &c.). Two hymns have been ascribed to him, one of which has passed into English, viz.:-

Was Gott thut das ist wohlgethan, Es bleibt gereaht sein Wille. Cross and Consolation, hymn is one of the first rank. It is founded on Deut. xxxii. 4, and has reminiscences of an older hymn by Altenburg (p. 84, i.) beginning with the same first line, Wetzel, ii. 396, says it was written in 1675, while Rodigast was at Jens, for his sick friend Severus Gastorius, precentor (cantor) there, and set to music by Gastorius. It appears in the Hannoversche G. B., Göttingen, 1676, as No. 13 in the Appendix, and is in 6 st. of 8 L. Included in the Schleusingen G. B., 1681, and most recent collections, e.g., as No. 902 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. It was, says Koch, viii. 494, the favourite hymn of Friedrich Wilhelm III. of Prussia, and by his command was performed at his funeral on June 11, 1840.

The beautiful melody, given in the C. B. for Empland, appears in the Nibroberg G. B., 1680 (not in the ed. of Roh, Johann, was a native of Domaschitz near Leitmeritz, in Bohemia. Roh was his name in Bohemian, but when he wrote in Latin he styled himself Cornu, and in German Horn. In 1518 he was ordained priest and appointed preacher to the Bohemian Brethren's community at Jungbunzlau, in Bohemia. At the Synod of Brandels, in Sep. 1529, he was chosen as one of the three Seniors of the Unity, Finally, at the Synod of Brandeis, in April 1532, he was appointed Bishop, and held this post till his death, at Jungbunzlau, Feb. 11, 1547. (Koch, ii. 114; Wackernagel, i. p. 727, årc.)

Rob was the editor of the Bokemian H. Bk. of 1541, and is said to have written a number of hymns in the Bohemian language, but the ed. of 1561 only gives one with his name. He also edited the second German Bohemian language, but the ed. of 1591 only gives one with his name. He also edited the second German hymn-book of the Brethren, viz., Eva Gerangbuch der Brüder inn Behemen und Merkerra, Nürnberg, 1544 and seems to have been author or translator of all, or nearly all, of the 33 hymns there added. Another hymn ("O heiliger Vater, gittiger Herr") is also given with his name in the Kirchengereng, 1566. (See further under Bohemian Hymnody, gp. 158-169, and Weisse, M.) A considerable number of Roh's hymns passed into the Lutheran hymn-books of the 18th and 17th centuries, and into the Moravian H. Birs, of the 18th cent. Rather curiously in the last Moravian H. Bir. (the Kleiner Gesangbach, Gradau, 1872), his name is not found in the

Those of Roh's hymns which have been tr. into English are:-

The heading "Ave Hierarchia" refers to the melody, for it is not a tr. from the Latin. Included in V. Babet's G. B., Leipzig, 1553, and recently in the Uno. L. S., 1851, No. 6. Strangely enough this fine hymn was emitted from the Kirchengeseng of 1566 and later eds.; and though it was included in the Herrnhut G. B., 1735, and the Brüder G. B., 1778, it has again bean omitted from the Kleines G. B., 1870. The tra. are:-

Roman Catholic Hymnody, English. 1. It is only during the last thirty or forty years that the attention of Roman Catholics in Great Britain has become widely awakened to the subject of congregational singing, and the treasures of hymnody in their own Office Books. There is even now room for much further diffusion of knowledge on the matter. Considering how many are the hymns of singular power and beauty, venerable, also, through their long use, which are contained in the Roman Missel, Offices, and Breviary, it is surprising that Roman Catholic poets did not, long before the present century, render them more frequently into English verse.

2. The history of Roman Catholic Hymnody in Great Britain is beset with difficulties, arising from the rarity of the earlier books in which the little that was done at the first is found, and from the unsystematic use of the facts that are known. In the stormy days of Elizabeth and Jumes I., when the celebration of Divine Service according to the Roman Use exposed both pricat and worshipper ic the severest pomilties, it was not to be expected that Roman Catholic Hymnody could possibly flourish. Something, however, was done. "Jerusalem, my happy home" (p. 580, i.), and some noteworthy hymns and carols found amongst the poems of Robert Southwell, date from that period. Southwell, an English Jesuit, was born in Norfolk in 1560, and was honged, drawn and quartered under a charge of constructive treason against Queen Elizabeth in 1595. He was the author of numerous sententious poems, an edition of which was published in London in 1856; and more recently a critical and more complete edition has been privately printed by Dr. Grosart. His "New Prince, new Pomp," is a good specimen of his verse (p. 210, ti.). It begins :

"Behold a silly, tender Babe In freezing winter night,"

It is fit to be sung as a Christmas hymn, and is far beyond much of the sacred poetry of Elizabeth's time. His translation of the "Lauda Sion" is good, and the earliest translation of that hymn into English yet known.

3. On the dispersion of the English Roman Catholics, and their settlement at Antwerp and Brussels, at Paris and Rheims, and at St. Omer's and Rome, they began to issue books of devotion, and tre. from the Latin with versions of the Old Church hymns. These tra. of the Primer were frequently reprinted. That at Antwerp, for instance, was issued in 1599. 1604, 1650, and 1658, with the Preface signed "R. V." These initials are probably those of Robert Verstegan, a well-known printer then at work at Antwerp, and the author of The Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, and a metrical version of the Seven Penitential Psalms. 1601. A Mechlin ed. of 1615, reprinted at St. Omer, 1619, and, again (place not given), in 1632, contained versions possibly by William Drummond. William Habington wrote nothing that can be called a hymn. Two ancoymous tra., however, of Cardinal Damiani's Ad perennis vitae fontem, one issued in Paris in 1631 in a tr. of St. Augustine's Manual, and the second in a tr. of the Confessions, 1679, show that there was no lack of power or poetic genius amongst the Roman Catholics of that period. The following are specimens from each :-

"The Fleids are green, the Plants do thrive, The streams with Honey flow; From Spices, Odoors, and from Gums Most precious Liquors grow: Fruits hang upon whole Woods of Trees: And they shall still do so.

The Season is not chang'd for still Both Sun and Moon are bright, The Lamb of this fair City is That clear, Immortal Light, Whose Presence makes eternal Day Which never ends in Night."

"Here Unguents, Spices, Liquors offer Scents aromatical; Skill-bearing trees such apples profice
As know nor cause no fall.
Here Cornfields seen, there mendows green,
Housy streams gilde between.

ROMAN CATHOLIC HYMNODY

44 No varying Moon, nor starty frame Diversifies the Year; Nor Sun, but the all-giorious Lambe Brings light to that blest sphere: Unsating light, for ever bright, Makes day without a night.

The passionate and melodious hymns of Richard Crashaw (q.v.) are hardly fitted for congregational use. He translated, amid a variety of other pieces, the "Landa Sion" of St. Thomas Aquinas; and imitated, with some auccess, the mellifluous versification of the original. Austin's hymns [see English Hymnody, Early, § x.] were published in his Devotions, in 1668, and in 1672, 1684, and two editions in 1685. Although these hymns are of some merit, they are used chiefly cutside of Austin's own communion, and in the form handed down by Dorrington and Hickes.

4. John Dryden, who in common with Crashaw and Austin, was originally a member of the Church of England, was the most noted of a group of translators who in the Primers of the seventeenth century made translations of the Latin hymns from the Beformed Roman Breviary form of 1632. Some of these translations are still found in a few Roman Catholic manuals and hymnals. Dryden's translation of the "Veni Creator Spiritua":—

"Creator Spirit, by Whose aid The world's foundations first were laid":

published as early as 1693, is the best known example. Two other translations by him are given in Scott's Dryden, and repeated in the recent editions of Dryden's Poems. There is strong internal evidence and some traditional grounds for believing that these are but specimens of his efforts in this direction [see Dryden]. The 1685 ed. of the Primer is of this class, although Dryden can scarcely be said to have had any share in the production of the work. A Roman Primer of 1687 contains these translations of the 1685 Primer, and a few which were new.

5. During the eighteenth century very little was done. Alexander Pope held fast to his religion in the midst of nuch of the false philosophy of his day. He composed in the spirit of a true Christian the exquisite Ode which was suggested by the Emperor Adrian's:

" Animula, vagula, blandula, Hospes comesque corporia,"

It is the well-known "Vital spark of heavenly flame." His Messich and his Universal Prayer have given several centos to modern hymn-books. [See Pope A.] Amongst translations not generally known is one by "T. P.," published about 1740, of St. Thomas Aquinas's "Lauda Sion." Although departing from the original metre, it is fairly meritorious. The last stanza reads:

"Gracious Jesus, Food divine,
Preserve us, feed us, lest we stray;
And through the lonely Vale of Time
Conduct us to the Realms of Day.
Source of uncreated Light!
Matchless goodness boundless Might!
Fed by Thy Care, thy Bounty bleet,
Hereafter give thy Flock a place
Amongst thy Guests, a chosen Race,
The Heirs of everlasting Rest."

In 1763 a complete translation of the Roman Breviary was pub. in 4 vols., with new translations of the hymns: but it was late in the century before anything approaching to the style and manner of the modern hymn-book appeared, with the exception of an isolated translation of a popular hymn or two as the "Adeste Fidelos." In 1731 a most extraordinary Collection of Spiritual Songe was issued by Bishop John Geddes, in connection with Bishop John Hay, for the use of the Scottish Northern Roman Catholics. This was reprinted in 1802, and again in 1823, with additions and alterations. The hymns are written to familiar Scottish airs, the result being a hymnal which ranks amongst the most curious in the whole range of English hymnody.

 In the present century one of the first, if not the first, collection of hymns for the use of English Roman Catholics was published by the Rov. George L. Haydock, as A Collection of Catholic Hymns, or Religious Songs, York, 1823. From the Preface it appears that two editions, previously issued in 1805 and 1807, were edited by the Rev. Nicholas Alain Gilbert, and that this York edition is that of 1807 reprinted in full. It contains hymns by Austin; Dryden's "Youi Crentor"; some from the 17th century Manual of Prayers and Litanies; a fine piece by Nicholas Poskett, 1660, which is alluded to in the Preface; translations from St. Francis Xavier and St. Bernard; a ballad of John Tauler and the Beggar, which, in its prose form, is frequently appended to the early translations of St. Francis de Sales's Introduction to a Deveut Life; and some of the earliest, if not the earliest, translations from the Paris Breviary. Another collection by Haydock, published at Whitby, 1823, is a clear and distinct departure from these old lines. It is A Collection of Catholic Psalms, Hymns, Motettos, Authems, and Doxologies: is appended to the former collection, and adds 39 hymns thereto, in addition to the Motetts and Authems, and 18 Doxologies. Many of the hymns are altered from J. Fanch and D. Turner, L. Watts, B. Bhodes, J. Montgomery, and C. Wesley. Daniel French; J. R. Beste in his Catholic Hours, a family prayer-book with hymns, 1839; and Dr. Husenbeth in his Roman Missal for the Use of the Latty, 1840, and his Vespers Book of 1841 bring us down to the works and the labourers of the peat forty years.
7. In many of the books of devotion in use

7. In many of the books of devotion in use among the Roman Catholics of Great Britain, there are English versions of the Latin hymns occurring in the Mass, Vespers, and Benediction, which compose the ordinary public services on Sundays: and these versions are not bound to be strictly uniform. An exceedingly popular Manual is The Garden of the Soul, and it contains a version by the Rev. E. Caswall, of the "Hymn to our Saviour Jesus, abridged from St. Bernard." The frequent hearing, singing, and repeatingthese affecting words :--

"Jesus, the very thought of Thee, With sweetness fills my breast; But sweeter far Thy face to see, And in Thy presence rest!"

with the remainder, have treasured it in the memory of multitudes of the faithful; and is a fair specimen of the translated Latin Hymns and Sequences which are found in a large number of modern Roman Catholic prayer-books. They do not always show translations of the first order, but they are sufficiently good for practical purposes, and may be supplemented by those of the Rev. E. Caswall; of Cardinal Newman; and The Roman Brevlary in English, by the Marquess of Bute, 1879. In this last are given versions of the hymns, antiphons, &c., by various hands.

8. The leading translators are Cardinal Newman, and the Rev. E. Caswall. Others might be named, but their productions are either limited in number, or inferior in quality. The art of translation is a very rare and difficult one. Many compositions which might pass if accepted as originals, would fail altogether if presented to critical eyes as versious of old and approved hymns of the Church. It is the brightness and delicacy of touch which distinguish the work of a master in translation from the failures of an apprentice. The Verees on Various Occasions, 1868, by Cardinal Newman, contain a priceless collection of hymns for Matins, Lauds, Prime, Tierce, Sext, None, and Vespers, on the different days of the week respectively; for Compline, Matins and Lauds of Advent, and the Transfiguration, for a Martyr, and for a Confessor Bishop. These are full of music and sweetness, of energy and light, which could spring from nothing but cenius and long practice in the art. Cardinal Newman is one of the great restorers of Roman Catholic Hymnody, not, indeed, through publishing a complete hymnbook, but by being, one might almost say, in himself a type of rhythmical utterance, and the author of several hymns and translations of supreme excellence. The Rev. E. Caswall (q.v.) more than any other, has enriched English Roman Catholic hymnody with a large number of beautiful translations from the See, for example, his version of the hymn of Prudentius, "Bethlehem of noblest cities." How elegant is both the language and rhythm. How excellently, also, he has translated that sweetest of mediaeval hymns, the hymn of St. Bernard, "Jesu dulcis memoria" ("Jesu, the very thought of Thee"), noted above.

9. Amongst the original hymn-writers Dr. Faber takes the highest rank. His hymns, sung at the Oratory, are often remarkable for true poetry. Among these may be mentioned "Jesus is Risen," "The Immaculate Conception," "To our Blessed Lady," "The Will of God," and the "Evening Hymn." Faber has done more than any other Englishman to promote congregational singing amongst the Roman Catholics in Great Britain. The congregation to which he was attached entered into his hymns fervently, and from them they spread to others. He certainly perceived and appreciated, as a scholar, and from his standpoint as a Roman Cotholic, the double advantage possessed by a Church which sings both in an ancient and modern tengue, making two-fold melody continually unto God. He did not prize the less the magnificent hymns of Christian antiquity in Latin, because he taught congregations to sing in the English of to-day. His indebtedness to the Olusy Hymns, and to the Wesleys, he freely acknow ledges in his Preface to Jesus and Mary, 1849. To these three-Cardinal Newman, Caswall, and Faber—the Roman Catholic Hymnody in England principally owes its revival.

10. Other names of less importance from a hymnological point of view remain to be noted. It Themas Moore could be regarded as a Roman Catholic, as he is reckoned by his friend and biographer, Lord John Russell, we should not be able to pass over some Sacred Melodies of his which are well-known, and of extreme beauty. But the work published under the title of Sacred Songs, in 1816, has become so popular, and they are so constantly claimed as the productions of one who attended babitually the Anglican services, that we are unwilling to advance a disputable protonsion. Besides, exquisite as they are, they have nothing in them that stamps them with any certain mark of the religion in which Moore was brought up in child-hood. "Thou art, O God, the Life and Light"; "O Thou Who dry'st the mourner's tear"; "The turf shall be my fragrant shrine"; "Sound the loud timbrel," and many others, are all of them steeped in that tenderness which touches deeply our human nature, when under the influence of Divine Miss Adelaide Anno Procter had passed a considerable portion of her life before she entered the Roman Catholic Church. She was born in 1835, but did not join the Roman communion until 1851. Sometimes she is truly lyrical, and her verses, Confido et Conquiedo, would be suitable for congregational singing. The same may be said of Our Daily Bread. She does not write in the more routine of pious verse. Her Sent to Hearen is lovely of its kind. She is a thinker, but her poetry is more adapted to rending than to practical psalmody. Religion had taken deep root in her mind, and her days were passed in acts of self-denying charity. Other translators and original writers include the Rev. T. J. Potter, who translated afresh nearly all the Vesper hymns in the Catholic Psalmist, 1858; Aylward, Porter, Rawes, Waliace, Coffin, Russell; H. N. Oxenham, a writer of known ability in ecclesisstical subjects in the Saturday Review; Canon F. Cakeley, a scholar of classical tastes; Aubrey de Vere, a true poet, author of Antar and Zara, and many other volumes; Charles Kent, and Robert Campbell. Matthew Bridges has also struck nobly many a note of adoration in his Hymns of the Heart for the Use of Catholics, 1828, of which, "Rise, glorious Conqueror, arise," and The Scraph's Song, "Crown Him with many crowne," may be taken as samples.

11. In addition to the Oratory Hymns of the Rev. F. W. Faber, a cheap and popular Roman Catholic hymn-book, pub. by Burns and Oates, has come into very extensive use. It is entitled, Hymne for the Year, a complete Collection for Schools, Missions, and General Use, 1867. It contains 288 of the best-known and most frequently used Roman Catholic hymns; and is found, together with the Cratery Hymns of Dr. Faber, to be an invaluable treasure to Roman Catholics. Some of the "Sacred Songs" touching the Communion of Saints are peculiar to Roman Catholic worship. Nothing, however, can exceed the fervour and depth of devotion and adoration to be found in the hymns addressed to the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit; the Secred Trinity, and our Lord in his Human and Divine nature. Such, to name a few only, are, "My God, how wonderful Thou art"; "It is my sweetest comfort, Lord"; "O brightness of Eternal Light"; "I met the Good Shepherd"; and "Lead me to Thy peacoful manger."

12. The latest addition to Roman Catholic Hymnody, is the Annus Sanctus, 1884, of Mr. Orby Shipley. It is a work of great value, and the Appendix, containing earlier versions of Latin hymns, is the result of much diligent research on Mr. Shipley's part. In this Appendix will be found the heads of families of versions of Vesper hymns taken from the Primers of 1604, 1615, 1685, and 1706. These versions of some of the best-known Latin hymns have a religious, a poetic, an historic, and an ecclesiastical value. They will be a real boon to literature in a branch that has been little cultivated, and, to say the truth, undeservedly neglected.

of Greek hymn-writers. He was a native of Emesa, deacon of Berytus, and became attached to the church of Blacherne at Constantinople. In that church he had a vision of the Mother of God, who gave him a piece of a roll (sorros) to eat. He did so, and found himself endowed with the power of making Contakia (Neale, Hist. East. Church, quoting Menso). He is said to have written a thousand of these poems, but whether this means a thousand of the long strophes, which are intercalated among the Odes in the present Greek office books, or a thousand of the long poems, which Cardinal Pitra has discovered under the name of Contakia, cannot be determined. The date of his pieces must be found either as 491-518 or 713-719, the reigns of Ausstasius the 1st or the 2nd, as he is said to have come to Constantinople in the reign of Anastasius. The desuctude into which his bymns had fallen in the 8th century is perhaps in favour of the earlier date, and the long hymn of Methodius at such an early period as 311 (see Greek Hymnoly, §. x. 2) allows the possibility of such long productions at the close of the 5th century (see Greak Hymnedy, § xii. 1). Of his hymns, one only has been rendered into English. It is a Contakton, or short hymn, found in the office for Christmas Day :- Tay 'Eden Badheen fronts, debre Tomer. and republished by Dr. Littledale in his Offices, &c., of the H. E. Church, 1863, p. 76. Dr. Littledale's tr. in blank verse is, "Bath-

Ichem hath opened Eden," same work, p. 197, This has been turned into 8.6.8.6.7.7 measure by W. Chatterton Dix, and was pub. in Lyra

Rooks, Thomas, M.A., was educated at | Trinity College, Dublin, B.A. 1848, M.A. 1851. Taking holy orders in 1848, he held several curacies and chaplaincies in Ireland till 1881, when he was preferred to the Vicerage of Feckenham, Redditch, diocese of Worcester. Three of his hymns appeared in A. J. Soden's Universal H. Ek., 1885 :—

1. Come to Thy Church, O Lord our God. Consecration of a Church.
2. Father of Mercies! Who of old. For use in

3. O God the Holy Ghost, from Father and from Son. For use in Hospitals. [J. J.]

Rocker, Elizabeth. [Parson, E.]

Rorison, Gilbert, LLD., s. of John Rorison, a merchant of Glasgow, was b. in Renfield Street, Glasgow, Feb. 7, 1821. He was educated at Glasgow University, and at that time he was a member of the United Presbyterian Church. Subsequently he joined the Scottish Episcopal Church, and, after studying for the ministry at Edinburgh under Bishops Terrot and Russell, was ordsined by the latter in 1843. He was for some time curate of St. James's, Leith, and of the Episcopai Church, Heleusburgh, and then Incumbent of St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Peter-head. He d. at Bridge of Allan, Oct. 11, 1869. In 1851 he edited Hys. and Anthems adjusted to the Church Services throughout the Christian Year, Lond., Hope & Co. (Revised, 1860; Appz. 1869. See Scottish Hymnody, § vii. 2). This contains several of his trs. from the Latin. He is widely known through his "Three in One, and One in Three" (q. v.).

Roscoe Family. In English Unitarian hymnody William Roscoe and three of his children hold honourable positions and are widely known. Taking the father and the children in chronological order we have:—

Resoce, William, the father, was b. March 8. 1753, in Liverpool, of humble origin. After very meagre schooling, and three years of work in his father's market garden, he was articled to an attorney, and subsequently practised in Liverpool till 1796, when he with-drew from the profession. From the first literature was his chief delight, and throughout a long career of public usefulness he united its pursuit with the efforts of enlightened patriotism and the advocacy of higher education and reform. Liverpool was a centre of the old slave-trade, and Roscoc was one of the first to raise his voice against the iniquity. At the age of 20 he had already uttered a protest in his descriptive poem Mount Pleasant, and in 1787 he pub. a longer poem, The Wrongs of Africa (Pt. ii. 1788), devoted to the subject. During his brief parliamentary experience as member for Liverpool, in 1807, he had further opportunity of advocating the cause of liberty and humanity. His first great historical work, the Life of Lorenzo de Medici, was pub. in 1796, and the Life and Pontificate of Leo the Tenth, in 1805. After withdrawing from his local practice, Roscoe had hoped to be able to devote himself entirely to letters, but the claims of friendship induced him in 1800 to enter into a banking business, which involved him in commercial troubles, ending in 1820 in his bankruntey. His library had to be sold. but part of it was bought by friends, and presented to the Liverpool Athenæum, which in 1789 Roscoe had been instrumental in founding. In 1822 he pub. Illustrations of the Life of Lorenzo de Medici, defending the views adopted in his former history, and two years later edited a new edition of Pope's works, with a life of the poet. He died June 30, 1831. (Cf. The Life of William Roscoe, by his son, Henry Roscoe, in 2 vols, London, T. Cadell, 1883.) As a member of the congregation of Unitarians meeting in Renshaw Street Chapet. Liverpool, Roscoe took part in preparing A Selection of Pealms and Hymne for Public and Private Worship, printed for their use in 1818. He contributed eight hymns and the concluding authem. Of these hymns the following are in C. U. at the present time :-

Let our loud song of praise arise. Praise.
 Go, suffering habitant of earth. Life, a Warfare.
 Great God, beneath Whose piercing eye. Divine

4. Thus said Jesna, Go and do. Love to our Neighboar.

5. What is the first and great command? The Commandments.

These hymns are in several Unitarian collections, including Martineau's Hymns, 1840. No. 3 was written in 1788, as a "secular hymn" of ten stanzas, to be sung at the Benn's Garden Chapel on the Centenary of the Revolution.

Ecocce, William Stanley, the son, was b. in 1782, and d. in 1843. He was educated by Dr. Shepherd, of Gateacre, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge. He was in his father's bank till the failure in 1820, after which he held an office in the Liverpool Court of Passage. His Poems were pub, in 1834. His hymn "Almighty God, in prayer to Thee" (Death anticipated) appeared in the Liverpool Renshaw Street Coll., 1818. It is also in Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840, and later collections.

Bosco, Mary Ann, a daughter, was b. in 1795, married to Thomas Jevons, 1825, and d. in 1845. She edited Poems for Youth, by a Family Circle, Lond., 1820, to which her brothers and sister contributed. From 1831 she also edited The Sacred Offering, an Annual of original and selected poetry (Liverpool, D. Marple & Co.). Her 7 hymns were pub. in her Sonnets and other Poems, chiefly Devotional, in 1845. Of her hymns three are still in C. U.:-

1. [Now] O let your mingling voices rise. Christman, 2. Thou must go forth alone, my soul. Death Anticipated.

3. When human hopes and joys depart. In Trouble and Affliction. Of these No. 3 was first pub. in her Poems for Youth, &c., 1820.

Boscoe, Jane, a second daughter, was b. in 1797, married to Francis Hornblower in 1838, and d. in 1853. Her Poems by one of the Authors of Poems for Youth by a Family Circle. were pub. in 1820, and her Poems in 1848. Her bymns in C. U. are:--

1. How rich the blessings, O my God. Gratitude,
In the Liverpool Renshaw Street Coli. 1818.
2. My Father, when around me spread. Peace in Afficition. Appeared in the Monthly Repository, Dec.
1828; and the Sacred Offering, 1832.
3. O God, to Thee, Who arest base given. Self-Consecvation. In Peace for Fould, 1820.
4. Thy will be done, I will not fear. Resignation.

(V. D. D.]

Rossetti, Christina Georgina, daughter of Gabriel, and sistor of Dante Gabriel and William Michael Rossetti, was b. in London, Dec. 5, 1880, and received her educa-tion at home. Her published works include:—

(1) Goldin Market, and Other Poems, 1862; (2) The Prince's Progress, and Other Poems, 1866; (3) Poems, mainly a reprint of Nos. 1 and 2, 1875; (4) A Pageant, and Other Poems, 1891, &c.

In addition, Miss Bossetti has published several prose works, as :- Annus Domini (a book of prayers for every day in the year), 1874; Letter and Spirit of the Decalogue, 1883, and others. She has written very few hymns avowedly for church worship, but several centes have been compiled from her poems, and have passed into several hymn-books. These include:—

1. Dead is thy daughter, trouble not the Master.
The Raising of Jairus's daughter. From her Goblin
Market, &c., 1862, into Lyra Mystica, 1865.
2. God the Father, give us grace. Invocation of the Holy Trinity. From Lyra Mystica into the Saway Hymnary, for use in the Chapel Royal, Savoy (see No. 8 below).

3. I bore with thee long weary days and nights.
The Love of Christ. From her Goldin Market, &c., 1882, into Lyra Messianica, 1884.

4. I would have gone, God bade me stay. Resignation. From her Froms, 1875, into Horder's Cong.
Hymns, 1884, &c.

5. Once I thought to alt so high. A Body hast Thou prepared Mc, or Passiontide. Contributed to Lyra Recharistic, 1823.

prepared Mc, or Passiontide. Eucharistica, 1863.

Encharistica, 1863.
6. The Advent moon shines cold and clear. Advent. From her Gobita Market, &c., 1862.
7. The flowers that bloom in sun and shade. The Eternity of God. In Mrs. C. Brock's Children's H. Ek., 1881.
8. What are these that glow from afar? Markyr's. Part of the poem. We meet in Joy though we part in sorrow," which appeared in Lyra Mynton, 1865, and then in Miss Rossettic Princes, Progress, &c., 1866. It is the most widely used of her hynns. No. 2 above is also from the same poem.

also from the same poem.

Miss Rossettl's verses are profoundly suggestive and lyrical, and deserve a larger place than they occupy in the hymnody of the church. Her connets are amongst the finest in the English language. řw. G. H.1

Rothe, Johann Andreas, s. of Aegidius Rothe, pastor at Lissa, near Görlitz, in Silesia, was b. at Lissa, May 12, 1688. He entered the University of Lepzig in 1708, as a student of Theology, graduated M.A., and was then, in 1712, licensed at Görlitz as a general preacher. In 1718 he became tutor in the family of Herr von Schweinitz at Leube, a few miles south of Görlitz, and while there frequently preached in neighbouring churches. During 1722 Count N. L. von Zinzendorf, happening to hear him preach at Gross-Hennersdorf, was greatly pleased with him, and when the pastorate at Berthelsdorf became vacant shortly thereafter, gave him the presentation. He entered on his duties at Berthelsdorf Aug. 30, 1722. There he took a great interest in the Moravian community at Herrnhut, which formed part of his parish. But when, in 1787, he had to report to the higher ecclesiastical authorities regarding the doctrinal views of the Moravians, Zinzendorf showed his resentment in various ways, so that Bothe was glad to accept a call to Hermsdorf, near Görlitz. Finally, in 1739, Count von Promnitz appointed him assistant paster at Thommendorf, near Bunzlau, where he became chief pastor in 1742, and d. there July 6, 1758. (Koch, v. 240; Wetzel's A. H., ii. 756, &c.)

Rothe was a man of considerable gifts and of unbending Roths was a man of considerable gifts and of unbenning integrity, a good theologian, and an earnest, fearless, and impressive preacher. His hydnes, about 40 in number, though they can hardly be said to rank high as poetry, are yet often characterised by glow and tenderness of feeling, and by depth of Christian arperience. They are somewhat akin to Zinzendorf's better productions, but this reasonableman was write from the alterations. are somewhat akin to Zinzendorf's better predoctions, but this resemblance may arise from the alterations, which Zinzendorf seems to have made in them. The best known of them first appeared in Zinzendorf's hymnbooks, and were for a time looked upon with suspicion, because as Zinzendorf did not affix authors' names, the new hymns were at first all ascribed to himself.

Those of Rothe's hymns which have passed into English are:-

i. Ich habe nun den Grund gefunden. Joy in Believing. 1st pub. in Zinzendorf's Christ-Catholisches Singe- und Bet-Büchlein, 1727, p. 98, and in the 2nd ed. (N.D., but probably in the end of 1727 or beginning of 1728) of his Sammhang g. m. l. Lieder (1st ed., 1725), as No. 934, in 10 st. of 8 l.; and repeated in the later Moravian H. Bks., e.g. the Herrnhut G. B., 1735, No. 255, Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 368, &c. At first the Lutherans suspected it, thinking that it was by Zinzendorf, but on discovering that it was by Rothe, soon adopted it. It is a powerful and beautiful hymn, is found in many recent German collections (e.g. the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 78), and in its English forme has found a very wide acceptance, and proved a comfort and blessing to many. It was doubtless suggested by Heb. vi. 19.

suggested by 11cb. Vt. 12.
In the Historicake Nackricht (to the Brider G. B., 1778), ed. 1835, p. 176, it is said to have been written for Zinzenderf's brinday, May 26, 1728. This is probably a misprint for 1735, and the hymn, as will be seen above, was in print in 1727. Koch, it. 241, suggests that it was written in return for the hymn, "Christum Glor alies lieben," which Zinzenderf had sent to Rothe in 1222 (in the Strathers 1725, No. 855, and in the British lieben," which Zinzendorf land sent to Rothe in 1222 (in the Samerlung, 1725, No. 652, and in the Beutsche Gedichte, 1735, p. 38, marked as "on a friend's birthday." and dated May 12, 1122). This, if correct, would rather suggest 1723 as the date of Rothe's bymn, only in that case Zinzendorf would aimost certainly have included it in the Samalung of 1725. Zinzendorf, it may be added, gives in his Deutsche Gedichte two other pieces written for Bothe's birthdays, one dated 1724, for his 36th birthday (beginning "Wer von der Erde ist"), the other dated 1728, for his 40th birthday (beginning "Der in der Heren Könie biet.")

Du der Herzen König bist.")

Rothe's hymn under consideration (" Ich habe nun") has been tr. as :--

1. Now I have found the ground wherein. fine but somewhat free tr. of st. i., ii., iv., v., vi., x., by J. Wesley. Mr. J. G. Stevenson, in his Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 46, speaks thus regarding it:-

regarding it:—
"When the translation of this hymn was finished John Wesley sent a copy of it to P. H. Moither, one of the German Moravians in London, and under date of 25 January, 1740, M. Moither returns the translation with his approval of all but one versa, which Mr. Wesley sitered as suggested." The altered stanza begins "O Love, thou bottenices abyse." Mr. Stevenson adds that portions of this version were among the last words of J.W. Fletcher, vicas of Madeley (d. 1785), and of Edward Bickersteth, rector of Watton (d. 1850).

In 1740 the tr. as thus revised was included in the Wesley Hos. S. Ster. Poems (P. Woods.)

in the Wesley Hys. & Sac. Poems (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. 1, p. 279). It was thence transferred to the Moravian H. Bk., 1742, a tr. of st. iii. of the German, made by P. H. Molther, being added in the 1789 and later eds. It was also included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 182 (1875, No. 189), and has been repeated in very many English and American collections, but as a rule abridged; the full form being however in Mercer's C. P. & M. Bh.; the Cong. Hyl., 1887; and Boardman's Scl., Philadelphia, U. S., 1861. It has also appeared in full, or abridged, under the following first lines :--

(1) Now I have found the blessed ground (st. i). ! (a) O'Lord! Thy everlasting grace (st. ii.). Hotder's

Cong. Hys., 1884.

(4) Father, Thine everlasting grace (st. li.). J. Bickersteth's Pt. & Hys., 1832.

(5) O Love, thou bottomiess abyss (st. lil.), Eugng.

Dulon Hyt., 1878.
(6) Jenus, I know hath died for ms (st. iv.). Pennsylvanian Luth. Church Bk., 1868.

(7) Though waves and storms go o'er my head (st. v.). Andover Sabbath H. Uk., 1858.

Round the Sacred City gather. S.J. Stone. [Church Defence.] Written in 1874 for the Church Defence Institution, and issued as a leaflet with music for use at Church Defence Meetings. Several hundreds of thousands have been used in this form. It was given in the author's Knight of Interession, 3rd ed., 1874, in 7 st. of 8 l., with the heading "Battle Hymn of Church Defence," and "Dedicated to the 'Church Society' of St. Paul's Haggerston." In 1884 it was enlarged to 12 st. of 8 l. for processional use at a grand Choral Festival in Salisbury Cathedral, and began "Sacred city by the river." In this form it was given in the Monthly Packet, 1884. In its original form it is in several hymnals. Mr. Stone also adapted it for use in the 1889 Suppl. Hymns to H. A. & M. [J. J.]

Rous, Francis (Rouse), was b. at tered the Wesleyan Ministry in 1853, and has Halton, Cornwell, in 1579, and educated at since held important appointments at Ipswich,

Oxford. He adopted the legal profession, and was M.P. for Truro during the reigns of James and of Charles I. He also represented Trure in the Long Parliament, and took part against the King and the Bishops. He was appointed a member of the Westminster Assembly; of the High Commission; and of the Triers for examining and licensing candidates for the ministry. He also held other appoint-ments under Cromwell, including that of Provest of Eton College. He d. at Acton, Jan. 7, 1659, and was buried in the Chapel of Eton College. Wood, in his Athenne Ozoni-enses, gives a list of his numerous works. The history of his version of the Psalms is given under Psalters, English, § x1., respecting its treatment in England, and under Scottick Rymnody, § 111., with regard to its reception and use in Scotland. [J, J.]

Row, Thomas, b. in 1786, was for many years a Baptist minister at Hadleigh, in Suffolk, and Little Gransden, Cambs., and was well known to most of the Calvinistic congregations in the Eastern Counties. Ho was very singular and methodical in his habits, and for 30 years was a frequent contributor of hymns and other compositions to the Gospel Herald. He d. Jan. 3, 1868. Mr. Row pub. two vols. of hymns. The first was entitled, Concise Spiritual Poems, or Evan-gelical Hymns on Various Subjects, for the private use of Christians, and also adapted for Public Worship, London, 1817. This was called Rock I and assumined 800 hours called Book I., and comprised 529 hymns. Book IL, including 543 hymns, was pub. in 1822, as Original and Evangelical Hymns on a great variety of subjects, for Private and Public Worship, by Thomas Row, Minister of the Gospel, Hadleigh, Suffolk. Many of these hymns are to be found in Parrott's Scl. From a Calvinistic point of view they are sound in sentiment, but possess little poetic merit.

From his Concise Spiritual Poems, 1817, the following hymns have passed into Snepp's Songs of Grace and Glory, 1872:—

1. Awake, my warmest powers. Jesus the Distinct Aŭvocate.

- Awake, O heavenly Wind. To the Holy Spirit.
 God knows our secret thoughts and words. Oznatactionee

 16. Thou great, mysterious Lord. Holy Trinity.
 17. To God, the Holy Ghost. Personality of the Holy
- 18. You have not chosen me. Election. [J. J.]

Rowe, George Stringer, was b. at Margate in 1830, and educated for the Wes-leyan Ministry at Didsbury College. He enHull, Southport, Leeds, Edinburgh, London, 1 &c. In 1888 he was appointed to the chair of Pastoral Theology in Headingley College, Leeds. He is the author of "Life of John Hunt, &c."; "At His Feet"; "On His Day";
"The Paalms in Private Devotion"; and
"Alone with the Word." His hymns inolude:--

Behold Thy youthful army.
 Come, children all and praise.
 Cradled in a manger meanly.
 When they brought little children.

These bymns were written for Sunday School Anniversaries, and were included in the Methodist S. School H. Bk., 1879. [J. J.]

Rube, Johann Christoph, was b. Nov. 20, 1665, his fother being then paster at Hohen-und Thal-Ebra, near Sondershausen. After completing his etudies in law, and becoming a licentiate, he was appointed judge (Amtmann) at Burggemunden neur Alsfeld, and then, about 1704, at Battenberg (both in Hesse-Darmstadt). He d. at Battenberg, May 80, 1746. (Bode, p. 187; F. W. Strieder's Hessische Gelehrten- und Schriftsteller Geschichte, vol. xvi. p. 456. The latter dates his birth Nov. 19. On writing to Ebra, Paster Weise has kindly informed me that no 17th cent. registers are extant either for Hohen-Ebra, or for Thal-Ebra.)

Ebra, or for Thal-Ebra.)
Rube was a most profife writer of hymns. In the Universal G. B. pub. at Homburg in 5 vols., 1738-44, there are, according to the markings by Count Christian Ernst of Wernigerode in his private copy, no less than 536 by Rube. The zarliest appeared in Luppine's Andächlig Singeoder Christen-Mund, Wessl, 1682, and the Gristreicher G. B., Darmstadt, 1698. In 1712 he published a number (without place of pub.) as Frühlings-Blumen aus der geistlichen Erde (Hamburg Library); and Rambach in his Anthologie, v. p. zi., say, his son-in-law edited another collection in 1737 as Posticia-christliche Kinder-gedanken (evidently meant for Lieder-gedanken) ous der Sans-mad Festings-Evangeien. Freylinghausen in his Neues geistreicher books, 1714, included 7, most of which passed into other books. Many of his hymns are excellent, thoughtful, good in style, and warm in feeling. Of Rube's hymns those which have passed into English are:—

1. Der am Kreux int was ich meine, Und sonst

i. Der am Kreux ist was ich meine, Und sonst nichts in aller Welt. Passiontide. In his Frühlings-Blumen, 1712, p. 63, in 5 st. of 8 l. When repeated in the Annuthiger Blumen-Krantz, 1712, No. 92, it was altered to "Der am Krenz ist meine Liebe," and this form was included in the Wilritemberg G. B., 1741, No. 51 (1842, No. 152), and other collections, and is a great fevourite in South Germany. It is sometimes erroneously secribed to J. E. Greding (b. 1676, d. 1748). The older hymn beginning "Der am Kreuz ist meine Liebe, Meine Lieb ist Jesus Christ" is first found in Ahasnerus Fritsch's Jesus-Lieder, 1668, No. 21, and is probably by Fritsch. It is quite different from Rube's hymn and has not been to into English. The tra. from Rube are (1) "Him on yonder cross I love," by Miss Winkworth, 1858, p. 53, repeated in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1868, p. 189. (2) "More than all the world beside," by R. Massie in his Lyra Domestica, 1864, p. 122, and thence in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872.

ii. Der Herr bricht ein zu Mitternneht. Second Advent. In his Frühlings-Blumen, 1712, p. 68, in 15 st. of 4 l. In Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 796 (1865, No. 772). Sometimes erroneously ascribed to N. L. von Zinzendorf. Tr. as:-

tr. of st. i., iii., v., vii., z., zv. by Mrs. Findlater in H. L. L., 3rd ser., 1858, p. 50 (1884, p. 180). Included in Kennedy, 1863, and abridged, in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864, and E. Paxton Hood's Our H. Bk., 1868.

iil. Behlaf sanft und wohl! sohlaf liebes Kind, Cradle Hymn, In his Frühlings-Blumen, 1712. p. 29, in 15 st. of 4 l., as the first of the "Cradle Hymns." It is worthy of attention as being one of the finest hymns of its class, Included as No. 751 in Freylinghausen's News geistreiches G. B., 1714, and repeated as No. 1416 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. Tr. as:-

Sleep well, my Dear! sleep safe and free! good tr., omitting st. viii., xiii., xiv., by J. C. Jacobi in his Psal. Germanica, 1722, p. 142 (ed. 1732, p. 190, altered). Included as No. 328 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, with tre. of st. ziii., xiv. added; and repeated, altered and sbridged, in later eds. (1886, No. 1193, in 5 st.). In 1873 Dr. Martineau, in his Hys. of Proise and Prayer, No. 746, adopted the trs. of st. i., iv., v., xv., from Jacobi's 1732 text. In the Schaff-Gilman Lib. of Rel. Poetry, 1881 (1883, p. 434), there are 6 st. [J. M.]

Ruben, Johann Christoph. Rabe. J. C.)

Rückert, Friedrich, s. of Johann Michael Rückert, advocate at Schweinfurt, in Bavaria, was b. at Schweinfurt, May 16, 1788. He matriculated at the University of Würzburg Nov. 9, 1805 (where he became a great friend of Baron von Stockmar of Coburg), and finished his course there in the spring of 1809. He graduated PH. D. at Göttingen in 1810, and on March 30, 1811, began to lecture at Jena as a privatelocent in philology, but left April 16, 1812. On Nov. 2, 1812, he was appointed Professor of the Gymnasium at Hanau, but resigned before entering on his duties, and left Hanau Jan. 21, 1813. He was then for some time living at Würzburg as a man of letters, thereafter at Bettenburg near Hassfurt, &c. In Dec. 1815 he began work at Stuttgart as joint editor of the Morgenblatt, retiring from it Jan. 6, 1817. For some time he travelled in Italy, &c., and then in the end of 1820 settled at Coburg as a man of letters. On his appointment as Professor of Oriental Languages at Erlangen he went there in Nov. 1826; and then, in 1841, was appointed Professor of Oriental Languages at Berlin. During the Revolutionary period of March, 1848, he left Berlin and never returned, but received a pension in 1849. He retired to his estate of Neuscas, near Coburg, and resided there till his death on Jan. 81, 1866 (Friedrich Rückert. Ein biographisches Denkmahl. Dr. C. Beyer, Frankfurt am Main, 1868; Neus Mittheilungen, by Beyer, 1873; Rückert's Nachgelassene Gedichte, Vienus, 1877, &c.).

Rücker's was one of the greatest Lyrle writers, and one of the most thoughtful and samest poets that Germany has produced. From the time that, unable to take part in the wars against Napoleon, he issued his Bestrehe Gedichie (at Heidelberg) in 1814, containing his famous "Geharnischts Sonnette," he published himself or contributed to the publications of others, a most columness was of pretry circulal and translated (see voluminous mass of poetry original and translated (see the full bibliography in the works noted above); a complete sd. of his poems appearing finally at Frankfurt am Main, 1868-69, in 12 vols. as his Gerammelte poetische The Lord shall come in dead of night. This is a Chinese. Throughout his poems are from and sleptations from the Persian, Arabid, Sancerit and Chinese. Throughout his poems he preserves a high level of purity of thought and expression; and displays a wonderful mastery of form and power of handling the German language. He was of deeply religious spirit, and wrote various spic poems on Efficial history, e.g. Leben Jesu, 1839; Sani und Bavid, 1843; and Herodes der Grosse, 1844. He can hardly however be called a hymn-writer; the second of the poems not believe being almost the only piece by him which has passed into the German hymn-books. A large number of his poems have been tr. into English by Abp. Tranck, Dr. John Hant, Dr. N. L. Frothingham, Dr. C. T. Brooks, and various others.

Of Rückert's pieces we need here only note four, namely :-

i. Das Paradies muss schöner sein. Eternal Life.

1st pub. as one of his Neue östliche Roses in the Agioja for 1823. Included in his Gesammelie Gediche, hr.
langen, 1824, vol. 1. p. 83, in 14 st., entitled "Paradise."
The trr. are (1) "Oh! Paradise must show more fair," by Abp. Trench in his Poesa from Entern Survey. 182,
p. 199. (2) "Oh. Paradise must fairer be." Given, without hams of translator, in Dr. H. Bonar's New Jerusoles, 1852, p. 84, and in Schaffs Christ in Song, 1869, p. 657.

1. Dein While termet in mislers Hillen.

Jerusolesi, 1852, p. 84, and in Schal's Carial in Mong. 1863, p. 657.

ii. Dein König kammt in nisdern Hillen. Advent. This seems first to have appeared in his Gerammetic Gesickie, Erlangen, 1834, vol. 1, p. 95, in 6 st. of 6 i. (certainly did not sppear atong with No. III. in 1834), and entitled "Advent Hymn." It is based on St. Mait. xxl. ?-11, the Gospel for the 1st S. in Advent. It is included in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1845, and in various other recent German hymn-books. The 5rs. are: (1) "He comes, no royal vesture wearing." By T. C. Porter. Written April 5, 1828, for Hours at Home. N. Y., June, 1868. (2) "In lowly guise thy King appeareth." By Dr. J. Troutbeck, as Schumann's devent Hymn, Novello, R. D., 1876.

Bethlehem and Calegry. 1st pub. as No. 8 of a series of "Hymns for Festivals by Friedrich Rickert," in the Taschenbuck sum geselligen Vergräßen auf das Jahr 1844, Leipzig, 1824, p. 276, in 10 st. of 8 l. Repeated in H. Rurte's atthologie geteilicher Lyrik, 1878, No. 44. The tra. are (1) "In Bethlehem He first arose." By N. L. Frothingsom, 1865, p. 188. (2) "In Bethlehem the Lord was born." By Mits Winkworth, 1869, p. 338. (3) "In Bethlehem, the Lord of glory." By T. C. Porter for Hours at Home, N. Y., March, 1868.

iv. Um Mittermecht hab ich gewacht. Midnight. 1st pub. in Nicolaus Lenan's Fraklingsalmanack, Stuttlat pub. in Nicolaus Lenan's Fréshingstellududed, Stitiser, 1836. Included in his Raus- and Jahrikeder, vol. i., Erlangen, 1838 (vol. v. of his Gesammelic Gedichle), p. 313, in 5 st. of § 1., as one of the poems written at Neuseus in the autumn of 1833. Repeated by Ruete, No. 56. The 1rt. are (1) "At still undnight I raise my sight." By N. L. Frothingham, 1855, p. 175. (2) "At dead of night Sleep took her flight." By Miss Winkworth, in Lyra Mystica, 1885, p. 266, and repeated in her Christian Singers, 1869, p. 337. [J. M.]

Rulers of Sodom! hear the voice. W. Cameron. [True Penitence.] 1st appeared as No. 17 in the Draft Scotlish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, as a version of Isaiab i. 10-19, in 7 st. of 4 l. Thence, with st. vii. 1. 1 altered, in the public worship ed. issued in that year by the Church of Scotland, and still in use. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (q.v.), it is ascribed to Cameron. Included in the Relief H. Bk., 1833, and again in others. [J. M.]

Russell, Arthur Tozer, N.A. He was the son of the Rev. Thomas Clout, who later changed his surname for Russell (Gent. Mag., 1848, p. 209; Cong. Hy., p. 259, i. § 6), an Independent or Congregational minister who won for himself a good reputation by editing the works of Tyndale, Frith, Barnes, and Dr. John Owen, &c. He was b. at Northampton, March 20, 1806; educated at St. Saviour's School, Southwark, and at the Merchant Taylors students). In 1825 he entered St. John's College, Cambridge, as a sizer, and in his freshman year gained the Hulsean Prize, its subject being, "In what respects the Law is a Schoolmaster to bring men to Christ." In 1829 he was ordsined by the Bishop of Lincoln (Kaye), and licensed to the Curacy of Great Gransden, Hunts, and in 1830 was preferred to the Vicarage of Caxton, which he held till 1852. During his ministry here he published the following works: The Claims of the Church of England upon the Affections of the People (1832); Sermons for Fasts and Festivals; A Critique upon Kelle's Sermon on resteats; A Critique upon Action Sermon on Tradition, in opposition. About 1840 speared his Apology of the Church of England and an Epitile to Seignor Sapto concerning the Council of Trent, translated from the original Latin of Bp. Jewell. About the same time appeared Hymn Tunes, Original and Selected, from Ravenscroft and other old Musicians. In 1841 was published A Manual of Daily Prayer. In 1844 Memorials of the Works and Life of Dr. Thomas Fuller. This Life has not been superseded by Bailey's later and over-bulky Life. It has fine things in it. It is severe on Tract XC. In 1848 various of his own bymns, original and tr. from the German, appeared in Hymns for Pub. Wor-ship, &c., Dalston Hospital, London. His first ship, &c., Palston Hospital, London. His first appearance as a hymn-writer was in the 3rd edition of the hymn-book published by his father (1st cd. 1813), and known amongst Congregationalisis as Russell's Appendix [see Cong. Hymnody, p. 250, i. § 67]. In 1847 followed The Christian Life. In 1851 Psalms and Hymns, parily original, partly selected, for the use of the Church of England. This most product collection, has not received the most modest collection has not received the recognition that it indisputably merits. His original hymns and translations have found original hymns and translations have found their way into many hymnals, e.g., Dr. Peter Maurice's Choral H. Bk. 1861, where several appeared for the first time; Dr. Maurice's Choral Harmony, 1854, contains two of his tunes; Dr. B. H. Kennedy's Hymnologia Christiana, 1863; Lord Schorne's Book of Praise, &c. (1862). In 1852 he was presented to the Vicespers of Wheddon Combridgeships to the Vicarage of Whaddon, Cambridgeshire. This, in 1866, he exchanged for St. Thomas's, Toxteth Park, Liverpool. While at Whaddon he published Advent and other Sermons. In 1859 appeared his best prose book, Memorials of the Life and Works of Bishop Andrewes. With every deduction it is a living biography. In Liverpool he republished his Hymn-book. In 1863 he addressed a "weighty and powerful" Letter to the Bishop of Oxford on Dr. Stanley—virtually a trenchant review of the once notorious Essays and Reviews. In 1867 he removed to Wrockwardine Wood, Shropshire, where he remained until 1874, when he was presented to the Rectory of Southwick, near Brighton. Here he d., after a long and distressing illness, on the 18th of November, 1874. In his earlier years he was an extreme High Churchman, but by the study of St. Augustine his views were changed and he became, and continued to the end, a moderate Calvinist. His original School, London (cf. Robinson's Register hymns are gracious and tender, thoughtful M. T. S., ii., 217). In 1822-24 he was at Manchester College, York (see Roll of the M. C. are vigorous and strong, but somewhat ultra-faithful to the original metres, &c. He left behind him a History of the Bishops of England and Wales in Ms., sufficient to form three or four goodly octaves, and numerous as. Notes on the Text of the Greek Testament; and also a large number of original chants and hymn-tanea ir Ms. Surely the last ought to be utilized; and the former deposited in his College of St. John's. [A. B. G.]

Of Russell's hymns a large number are included in Kennedy, 1863, and several also are in a few of the lesser known collections. The trs. are noted elsewhere in this Dictionary, and may be found through the Index of Authors and Translators. Of his original hymns, about 140 in all, including those in Dr. Maurice's Choral H. Unless otherwise stated, all the above appeared in Russell's Ps. & Hys., 1851. The total number of original hymns contributed by him to Maurice's Choral H. Bk. was 21.

Russell, William, was b. in Glasgow in 1798, and educated at the University of Glasgow. Removing from Scotland to America, he was at Savannah in 1817, and subsequently at other places in the United States. He was an active promoter of education, teachers' associations, and kindred objects, and did much to further the cause of education in the States. He was originally a Baptist, but did not hold to close communion. He d. at Lancaster, Massachusetts, Aug. 16, 1873. His hymn, "O'er the dark wave of Galilee" (Christ in Solitude), begins with at iii. of a poem written by him at the request of Dr. Ware, editor of the Unitarian Christian Examiner, and printed [F. M. B.] therein in 1826.

Russell, William, contributed a few hymns to William Carter's Hymn Book, 1861, and to some minor collections. The best known is " More marr'd than any man's," 1861 (Passiontide). He must be distinguished from W. Russell, the American hymnist. [J. J.]

Rutilius, Martin, a. of Gregorius Rüdel or Rutilius (who in 1548 was diaconus at Salza, near Magdeburg, and in 1551 became postor at Düben on the Mülde, in Saxony), was b. Jan. 21, 1550. After studying at the Universities of Wittenberg and Jena, he was appointed, in 1575, paster at Teutleben, near Gotha. In 1586 he became discouss at Weimar, where, after being for some time archidiaconus, he d. Jan. 18, 1618. (K. Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 153; articles by Dr. Linke in the Blätter für Hymnologie, 1887, pp. 82, 99, &c.) Rutilius's name has been associated with the well-known German hymn which begins:-

i. Ash Gots und Herr, who gross and solwer. Lent. The first printed form of any part of this hymn is in a sermon preached by Dr. Johann Major or Gross (see Major in Various) in the Town Chatch at Jene, on June 2, 1613. It was occasioned by the great storm which burst over Weinar on May 29, 1613, and caused devastation for miles around. The sermon ends thus:— "O bone Deus, hic ure, hic sees, hic pange, hic tundo, modo in alternum parce ;

"Solls is seyn,

Dass Straff und Pain,

Auft Sunde folgen müssen ; So fahr ble furt Und schone dort, Und lass mich ja wol büssen.

Benommen, der Henr hats gegeben, der Herr hats genommen, der Kuno des Herrn sey gelobt, heut und in alle Ewigkeit. Amen. Amen. Ende." As Dr. Linke suggests the stanza here given lookes much more like a rbymed version of the Latin quotation made by higher for the purposes of his sermon, than a verse quoted from a hyran already known. The ist ed. of the sermon was printed at Jena, and the 2nd ed. at Eisleben, also in 1613. The title beginn, Gedenck und Eritusrungs Prodigl. You dem graussanen Geotities unnd schrocklichen Gewässer damit Thirringen heingesuchet worden am Somnabend vor Trinitatis in der Nacht, war den 29.

Moj dieser instehenden 1813. Jahrs. In the 2nd ed.
there is printed at the end, by itself, a lymn in 6 st. of $1, nomely, 1. Ach tott tund Herr. 2. Lieff ich gleich weit. 3. Zu dir filche ich. 4. Solla ja seyn. 5. Gib Herr Gedult. 5. Handel mit mir. That these stanzas are all by Major seems at least highly probable. They passed into Melchior Franck's Getatische grunthatische Lustgorten, Nürnberg, 1616, as No. xvi. As No. xvi. Franck gives the following: 1. Gleich wie sich fein. Also Herr Christ. Both xvi. and xvii. are given without name of author. In J. Glaunder's Pacinosian acous, Altenburg, 1627, No. 67 is Franck's No. 16, but with four at anded, viz., 3. Melur Händ Arbeit. 4. Die Seite mein. 5, Darinn ich bielb. 6. Ebre sey nun. The form now in use is found in B. Derschau's Assesser seistresiche Lieder, Königsberg, 1639, p. 79, where Selte mein. 5. Darinn Ich blelb. 8. Zhre sey vunn. The form now in use is found in B. Deresbau's Assertance geistreiche Lieder, Königsberg, 1639, p. 79. where it is in 19 st., viz. st. i.—vi. as in 1613, and et vii.—x. from Clauder's I., ii., v., vi. This form passed into most later books, and is No. 350 in the Univ. L. S., 1351.

At first the bymn seems to have passed into the collections either as annhymous or signed "J. G.," Le. Johann Gross. Then in Clauder's 2nd ed., 1630, the first part was signed "J. Gi.," which was forthwith taken to mean Johann Goldel, who was b. at Alidorfaig. 31, 1565, became pastor at Dienstedt, near Kraulchfeid, in 1583, and d. at Dienstedt in 1604. So it went on till 1736, when Caspar Binder, pastor at Mattietedt, pub. at Jens his Historischer Evuscus for the purpose of showing that the bymn was by Rutilius. In this book Binder declared that he had in his possession an autograph album which formerly belonged to Melchier Francks, sometime burgomaster at Welmar; and that in this sibura he had found the hymn "Ach Gott und Herr" (in the 6 st. form of 1613), entitled, "A Frayer for the gregiveness of sins, for pattence under the cross, and for deliverance from everlasting punishment." He adds that it was subscribed:—"M. Martinus Rutilius, Discooms Ecclesias Vinariensis feoit et propria manu seripatt.

"Hear du Schn Davids arbarn dich treir.

Jesu, du Sohn Davids, erbarm dich mein, Lass mein Sünd zugedecket seyn, Im Sterben wölist mein Beystand bleiben

Im Sterben wollst mein Beystand bleiben
Yom Todt sam Leben bringn mit Freuden.
Den 29. May 1604."

The date here is almost certainly a misteading or a misprint, i.e. instead of 1604 it should be 1614. If then on May 29, 1614, Rutllius was asked to write semething in this album, what more natural than that on the anniversary of May 29, 1613, he should transcribe semething related to that calamity. If the "fecit et propris manu scripait" means more than "I certify that this is my autograph," it can hardly refer to anything but the four lines quoted above. Rutllius was by no means of a poetic nature, and these four very halting lines are much more likely to be his composition than are the six stanzas of the original.

of the original.

On the whole then there seems no good reason to ascribe any part of the hymn to Rutilius. The six stansa form is almost certainly by Major. Wherever a name has been attached to st. vii.—x. they too have been ascribed to Major. So that there appears at least a high probability that the 10 stanza form is by Major.

The translations in C. U. are:

1. O God my Lord! How great's the Heard. In full by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psal. Germanica, 1722, p. 56. In his ed. 1732, p. 89, it was greatly altered, and st. i.-iii., viii., x. of this form were included in the Evang. Union H. Bk.,

3. When rising winds, and rain descending. This is a free tr. in 8 1., of st. vii.-x. by T. Dutton, as No. 250 in the Moravian II. Bt., 1789 (1886, No. 314). Included in Dr. Martineau's Hys. of Praise and Prayer, 1873.

3. Alas! my God! My sins are great. A good tr. of st. i .- vi., by Miss Winkworth, as No. 107 in her C. B. for England, 1863. Repeated, omitting st. iv., in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

Ryland, John, D.D., s. of Rev. John Collett Ryland, was b. at Warwick, Jan. 29, 1753. At that time his father was Baptist minister at Warwick, but in 1759 removed to Northampton. "J. Ryland, junior," as for many years he was accustomed to subscribe himself, was in 1781 ordained co-pastor with | his father at Northampton. In 1794 he accepted the presidency of the Baptist College and the pastorate of the church in Broadmend, Bristol, and these offices he retained until his death on June 25, 1825. Dr. Ryland was a man of considerable literary culture, and received the degree of D.D. from Brown University, Bhode Island. He was one of the founders of the Baptist Missionary Society, and for the three years following the death of Rev. A. Fuller, in 1815, acted as its secretary. His proce works were Memoirs of Rev. R. Hall, Arnsby (2nd ed., 1852); A candid statement of the reasons which induce Baptists to differ from their Christian brethren; and many Bermone and Charges. After his death appeared 2 vols. of Discourses, selected from his was,, and entitled Pastoral Memorials. To these discourses are appended many of his hymns, with their Dr. Ryland's hymns were composed at different times, from his sixteenth year to the year of his death. The earliest were pub. when he was 16, in his Serious Essays, 1771. These 36 hymns were never republished, Several appeared in the Gospel Magazine from 1771 to 1782, and the Protestant Magazine, 1782-83; others in Rippon's Bapt. Selection, 1787; 2 in the Collection for the Monthly Prayer Meeting at Bristol, 1797 : 2 in Andrew Fuller's Memoirs, 1881; and 25 in the Pastoral Memorials, 1825. His Hymns and Verses on Sacred Subjects, to the number of 99, were reprinted from his Mss. by D. Sedgwick. and were pub., with a Memoir, in 1862. The hymns are dated therein from the use.

[W. B. S.] Those of Dr. Ryland's hymns now in C. U.

1. For Zion's sake I'll not restrain. Hissions. Dated 1798, and printed by D. Sedgwick from Ryland's 888., 1862.

2. Had not the Lord, my soul may say [cry]. Pr. carsiv. From his Scrious Esrays, 1771. It is No. 124 in Sputgeon's O. O. H. Ek., 1866. Not in Sedgwick's in Sourgeon's O. O. H. Bl., 1866. Not in Sedgwick's reprint.

3. Hely, hely, hely Lord, self-existent Delty. Hely Trivilly. Dated 1794. It was given in the 10th ed. of Rippon's Bap. 82., 1800. Pt. 2, No. 22; in the Patteral Memorials, 1825; and Sedgwick's reprint, 1882, in 5 st. of 8 l. It is in C. U. in G. Britain and America.

4. Lock down, myscul, on hell's damain. Gracitude for escape. This is No. 881 in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bl. 1888, and dated 1777. We cannot trace it in any of Ryland's works or amongst his hymns.

5. Lard, teach a little child to pray. A Child's Prayer. Dated 1786. The note to this hymn by Dr. Ryland's son, in Sedgwick's reprint, 1862, p. 15, is:—"This and the following hymn in God is vary good to me"] was composed at the request of Mrs. Fuller, wife of the Rev. Andrew Fuller, of Kettering, for the use of Miss Barsh Fuller, who died May 30th, 1789, aged six years and six months." It was pub. in Andrew Fuller's Memoirs, 1831, p. 442, and in Sedgwick's reprint, 1862.

6. Now let the almobering church awake. Activity in the Pastoral Memorials, 1825, and in Sedgwick's reprint, 1802. In Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bl., 1988.

7. O Lard, I would delight in Thee. Betight in Carist. Dated "Dec. 3, 1777." Dr. Ryland added this note to the 18.—"I recollect deeper feelings of mind in composing this byton, than perhaps I ever felt in making any other," It was pub. in Rippon's Sci., 1788, No. 248; in the Pastoral Memorials, 1826; and in Sedgwick's reprint, 1862, in 7 st. of 41. It is in extensive use in its original, or an abbreviated form; or as "O Lord tre would delight in Thee." In the American Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1849; and their Hymnal, 1878, tt., it, vi., vi. are rewritten in s. v. as "Lord, I delight in Thee."

8. Out of the depths of doubt and fear. Ps. carz. From the Serious Escays, 1771 (misdated in Spurgeon's

8. Out of the depths of doubt and fear. Pr. cxxx.
From the Serious Excays, 1771 (misdated in Spurgeon's
O. O. H. Hk., 1775). It is not in the Pastoral Memortally, 1825, nor in Sedgwick's vaprimt, 1862.

9. Rejoice, the Saviour reigns. Missions. Dated "Jan. 19, 1793." In the 10th ed. of Rippon's $2., 1800, 422 (2nd pt.) it is given in 6st of 8 L, as in the Ryland Ms. and then after the word "Pause" two stances are added on, which are not in the Ms. The 6 sts. were repeated in the Pastoral Memorials, 1825; in Sedgwick's reprint, 1862; and in Spurgeon's 6. O. H. & Ms. 1866 (abbreviated), and other modern hymnals.

seaming are secured in the Pastoral Memorials, 1826; in Sedgwick's reprint, 1862; and in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bh., 1866 (abbreviated), and other modern hymnals. 10, Sowereign Ruler of the skies. Guidance, Peace, and Security in God. Dated "Aug. 1, 1777." Included in Rippon's Set., 1787, No. 546; the Pastoral Memorials, 1825; and Sedwyck's reprint, 1862, in 9 st. of 41.

1825; and Sedgwick's reprint, 1862, in a st. of 41.

11. Thou Son of God, and Son of Man. Praise to God, the Son. This is undated. It was given in the Pattoral Memorials, 1825; and Sedgwick's reprint, 1862.

12. When Abraham's servant to procure. Onward. Hewerneard. Dr. Ryland's son, under the date of Nov. 4, 1861, informed D. Sedgwick that this hymn was written with a slate pencil on a rusty from blower by moonlight, past twelve o'clock, Dec. 36, 1773," and the gives these words as a quotation from his father's xs. It is almost needless to add that this account does not agree with the generally received history of the hymn, as set forth in Miller's Singers and Songs, 1868, p. 313. In the May number of the Gospel Magazine, 1775, 255, the hymn was given in 9 st. of 4 1, with the heading "Hinder me not—Gen. xxiv. 56," and signed "Elachistoters." It was repeated in Rippon's Set., 1787, No. 447; and Sedgwick's reprint, 1862. In Rippon a note is added, "This hymn may begin with the verse." This direction has been followed in some modern collections, the result being the hymn comply known as "In all my Lord's ampointed ways."

monly known as "In all my Lord's appointed ways,"

13. When the Saviour dwelt below. Compassion of Christ. Dated 1806. Included in the Pastoral Memorials, 1822, and Sedgwick's reprint, 1822.

Dr. Ryland's hymns are plain and simple, but they lack poetry and passion, and are not likely to be largely drawn upon for future hymnals.

Sabbath of the saints of old. T. Whyte-head. [Sunday.] 1st pub. in his Poems, 1842, p. 108, as one of his "Hymns towards a Holy Week." in 9 st. of 6 1., and appointed for the "Seventh Day." In no instance is it used in its full and complete form. The fullest text is that in the Hymnary, 1872, No. 50, in 6 st., but usually it is given in a more abbreviated form, one of the shortest being the S. P. C. K. Charoh Hymns, 1871, No. 60. One of the most popular forms of the hymn is a cento which is assually appropriated to "Easter Eve." It opens: "Resting from His work to-day." One of the earliest, if not the earliest, collection in which it appeared was Dr. Hook's Charch Sunday School H. Bh., 1850, Appendix, No. 232. This is composed of st. iii, iv., vi., vii., of the original. This cento was repeated. with alterations, in Murrays Hymnal, 1852, and has been adopted by various collections, including, with very slight alterations, H. A. & M., 1861, Sarum, 1868, and others. In Biggs's Annotated H. A. & M. (Preface), the editor has omitted st. v. and (Preface).

viii. from what he has given as the original poem. {J. J.]

Sacer, Gottfried Wilhelm, s. of Andreas Sacer, senior burgomaster of Naumburg, in Saxony, was b. at Naumburg, July 11, 1635. He entered the University of Jena in 1653, and remained there for four years as a student He was thereafter for two years of law. secretary to Geheimrath von Platen, in Berlin; and then tutor, first to a son of the Swedish Regierungsrath von Pohlen, and then to the sons of the Saxon Landhaupt-mann von Bünau. In 1665 he entered the military service under Herr von Mollison, commandant at Lüueberg, at first as regimental secretary, and afterwards as ensign. Soon tiring of this he went to Kiel in 1667, in order to graduate LLD, but before doing so undertook a tour in Holland and Denmark with some young noblemen from Holstein. In 1670 he settled down as advocate at the appeal and chancery courts in Brunswick (graduating LLD. at Kiel in 1671), and in 1683 removed to Wolfenbüttel as Kammer-und Amts-advocat, receiving the title of Kammer-Consulent in 1690. He d. at Wolfenbüttel, Sept. 8 [18], 1699. (Wetzel, iii. p. i.; Koch, iii. 398, iv. 562, &c.)

iii. 398, iv. 562, &c.)
Sacer began early to write poetry, was admitted by Rist, in 1860, as one of his poetical order of Elbe Swans, and in his Natisticke Erinnerunges usegen der teutschen Poeterey. Altenstettin, 1861 [Wolfenbüttel Library], alrendy described himself as "Kayserilcher Poet," i.e. as having been crowned as a poet by the Emperor of Austria. His hymns are among the best of the period immediately succeeding Gerhardt. They have a considerable measure of poetic glow, and sometimes of dramatic force, and are Scriptural and good in style. His sarliest hymns seem to have appeared in his Blactingfrends, siegendie und triumphirende Jesus, 1661, hut no copy of this work is now known. Manyare included in pt. ii. 1685, of the Straisund G. B. (Ander Theil des erneuerten Geuong-Bucht), and in the other hymn-books of the period. They were collected and pub. by his son-law as his Geitzliche, liebteche Lieder, at Gotha, 1714.

Those of Secer's hymns which have passed into English are:—

i. Durch Trauern and durch Plagen. New Year. Included in 1665 as above, pt. ii. p. 25, in 7 st. of 8 l.; repeated 1714, p. 3, entitled "On the New Year." It is also in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 191. The tr. in C. U. is:_____

Through many changeful morrows. This is a good tr. by Dr. F. W. Gotch, in the Baptist Magazine, Jan. 1857, p. 19, repeated in the 1880 Suppl. to the Baptist Ps. & Hys.

ii. Gott fibret auf gan Himmel. Ascension. Founded on Ps. xlvii. 6-7. Included in 1665, as above, pt. ii. p. 147, in 7 at. of 8 l., and repeated 1714, p. 27, entitled "On the Ascension of Christ." It is also in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 336. In the Württemberg G. B., 1842, it begins, "Der Herr fährt auf." The trs. in C. U. are:—

1. Lo! God to heaven ascendeth. This is a good tr., omitting st. vi., by Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 39 (Hys. from the German, 1864, p. 63). Repeated, abridged, in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1844, and his Year of Praise, 1867; in Dale's Eng. H. Bk., 1874, &c.

2. While up to Heaven God goeth. A spirited version, omitting st. vi., by W. J. Blew, printed as a leaflet for choir use in 1846, and included in his Ch. Hy. & Tune Bh., 1852; in Rice's Selection from Blew, 1870, No. 07, and in Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 362.

Other hymns by Secer are :

iii. Gott, der du alier Himmal Hour. For those at Sea. Included in J. Crüger's Erneuerte Gesangbücklein... von Peter Sohren, Frankfurt am Main, 1870, No. 878. in 10 et., and repeated, 1714, p. 75, in 11 et., entitled "Hymn for Seafarers." Recently in Knapp's Es. L. E., 1837 and 1865. Tr. as, "Thou who hast stretched the heaven's blue sky." In L. Rehfuess's Charck at Set.

B., 1823, st. xiv.-xvl. altered and beginning, "Mein Herr and Helland, lass mire gehn 21 Hersen," are included as No. 189. This form is tr. as, "Lord, touch my beart with that great Consummation," by N. L. Frothingham, 1870, p. 143.

"Lord, touch my heart with that great Consummation," by N. L. Prothingham, 1870, p. 143.

vi. So hab' ich ebeninget. Funcrul of a Child. Incinded in 1865 as above, pt. it. p. 665, in 13 st. of 8 l., st. L. xii. being given as spoken by the child it. Paradise, and xiii. as the answer of the bereved parents. Repeated in 1714, p. 81, entitled "Comfort from the departed to those left behind," the 13th st. being entitled "Farewell of the sorrowing ones." Recently as No. 855 in the Unit. L. S. 1851. Tr. as (1) "Lo I now the victory's gain'd me," by Miss Cos. 1841, p. 77. In har ed. of 1864, p. 87, it is abrered and begins, "My race is now completed." (2) "Then I have conquer'd; then at last," by Miss Winknorth, 1855, p. 243. (3) "My course is run; in glory," by Dr. J. Guthrie, 1869, p. 105.

Sachse, Christian Friedrich Heinrich, D.D., was b. July 2, 1785, at Eisenberg, Sachse-Altenburg, where his father was cantor, and also master in the town school. In the years 1804-1807 he was a student at the University of Jens (D.D. from Jens 1841), and was, thereafter, for some time, a private tutor at Kleinlauchstedt, near Merseburg. In 1812 he became disconus at Meuselwitz, near Altenburg. He was appointed, in 1823, Court preacher at Altenburg; and also, in 1831, Consistorial rath. After 1849 he had many trials to endure, for seven children and his wife predeceased him, leaving him only one daughter; while his bodily infirmities compelled him, in 1859, to give up his duties in the consistory, and, in Feb. 1860, to resign even his work as Court preacher. He d. at Altenburg, Oct. 9, 1860 (Koch, vii. 22; O. Kraus, ed. 1879, p. 418, &c.).

Krous, ed. 1879, p. 418, &c.).

By his earlier hymns, pub. in 1817, in connection with the Tercentenary of the Reformation, Sachee had a share in the ranwheening of Churchly life among the Lutherane. The more important of his other hymns appeared in his festificite Gesänge and Gebracch bei Reardiguagen and bei der Födtenfeier. Altenburg, 1822 [Hamburg Library]; and were written, to be used at funersia, during his residence at Mangelwitz; or for use at the special service introduced there in 1819, and held in memory of the departed, on the evening of the leaf day of the year, A number of his later hymns, together with selections from his secular poems, were pub. posthumously, as his fedicate, Altenburg, 1861. A considerable number of his hymns passed into the Hamburg G. B., 1842, Leipzig G. B., 1844, and other German hymn-books, prior to 1870.

Those of Sachee's hyrons which have been tr. into English are:-

i. Weblan! die Erde wartet dein. Burial. 1st pub., 1822, as above, No. 2, p. 5, in 8 st. of 4 l., entitled, "At the Grave." Included in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 3375 (1865, No. 2947), altered, and beginning, "Lebwohl! die Erde wartet dein." The tr. in C. U. is:-

L., 3rd Ser., 1858, p. 56 (1884, p. 176). It was repeated, in full, in Prust's Suppl. Hys., 1869, and the 1869 Appz. to the S. P. C. K. Ps. $ Hys.; and, omitting st. ii., in Holy Song, 1869, and J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876.

ii. Wohlant, wohlant sum letzten Geng. Burial. 1st pnb., 1822, as above, No. i., p. 3, in 17 st. of 5 l., entitled "Hymn during the funeral procession." Stanzas i.-v. seem to have been meant to be sung at the house of mourning; st. vi.siv., on the way to the churchyard; and st. zv.xvii., at the entrance to the "place of peace."
It was sung at his own funeral in 1860. It was included, omitting st. iii., as No. 3404, in Knapp's Ev. L. &, 1837 (1865, No. 2937), with the altered first line (as in Claus Harms's Geoinge, 1828, Nos. 288-290), "Wohlauf, wohlan zum letzten Gang;" and the same form is in the Württemberg G. B., 1842, No. 617. Of this hymn, the late Dr. James Hamilton, in an article in the Family Treasury, 1860, pt. i., p. 116), wrote thus:-

"On behalf of England, we have sometimes envied the brighter hope—the look of Easter Morning—which seems to linger still in Luther's land. With its emblems, sugto linger still in Luther's land. With its smblems, suggestive of resurrection and heaven, its churchyard is not a Pagan burial ground, but the place where believers sleep,—a true cemetary, to which friendship can find it pleasant to repair and meditats. At the obsequies of Christian brethren, it is not a funeral knell which strikes slowly and sternly; but from the village steeple thers sheds a soft and slmost cheerful requiem; and though there may be many wet eyes in the procession, there are not many of the artificial insignies of wee, as the whole parish conveys the departed to his bed of peacethi rest. Once, in the Black Forest, we accompanied to the 'place of peace' an old man's fumeral, and there still dwells on of peace,' an old man's funeral, and there still dwells on our ear the quaint sad kindly melody which the parish-loners sang along the road; and we have sometimes wished that we could hear the like in our own land [Scotland], with its combre and silent obsequies."

The translation in C. U. is:-

Come farth! come on, with solemn song. good tr. of st. i.-iii., v., xv.-xvii., by Miss Botthwick, in H. L. L., 2nd Ser., 1855, p. 68 (1884, p. 126). This version was included, in full, in J. H. Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865, No. 309, set to the melody to which it is sung in South Germany (Choral melodicen, Stuttgart, 1844, No. 103). in Dr. W. F. Stevenson's Hys. for Ch. & Home, 1873, the tr. of st. v. was omitted. A greatly altered form, beginning, "Come, tread once more the path with song," appeared in R. Brown-Borthwick's Select Hys., 1871, No. 71; and in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, No. 242. Instead of adopting the melody of 1844, or the tune "Ich hab' mein Sach' Gott heimgestellt" (p. 671, i.), for which Sachse wrote this hymn; the editors reduced the hymn to L. M., aftered it, and omitted the trs. of st. iii., lf. 3-5, xv., 11. 3-5, xvi. This cento was repeated, omitting the tr. of st. xvii., in Dr. Martineau's Hys. of Praise & Prayer, 1873.

Of Prince y 1 regy,

Other trs. are:—

(1) "Happy the man who seeks the prize" (st. vi.).

Another hymn, partly by Sachse, is:

III. Der Herr der Krnte winket. Burial. 1st pub. Beloved and hansared, fare thee well! This is a full and good to, by Miss Borthwick, in H. L., "Here, un Research the founded on a piece beginning, "Here, un Research in Frieden fathers," by Christian Ludwig Neuffer (b. at Stuttgart, Jan. 24,1769; pastor of the Cathedral Church, Ulm; d. at Ulm, July 29, 1839), in his Cartetlische Urania, Leipzig, 1820, p. 220, where it is No. it. of the "Hymns for the dying under special circumstances," and ls in 11 st. of 41. Sachse's version is tr. as "The respect now is walting." By Dr. H. Mills, 1846 (1868, p. 261).

Sacris sollemniis juneta sint gaudia. St. Thomas of Aquino. [Hely Communion.] Written about 1263 for the office for use on Corpus Christi (see "Pange lingus gloriosi corporls"). It is found in the Roman (Venice, 1478; and again, untouched, in 1632): Mo-sarabic of 1502; Sarum; York; Aberdeen; Paris of 1736, and other Breviaries. It is generally appointed for Matins on Cospus Christi, but in the Sarum for let Vespers. The text in 6 st. and a doxology will be found in Daniel i., No. 240, in the Hymn. Sarisb., 1851, p. 119, and others. It is also found in a Ms. circa 1330 (Liturg. Misc., 370, f. 133), and another of the beginning of the 14th cent. (Liturg. Misc., 339, f. 65) in the Bodleian; in a Ms. of the end of the 13th cent. (Add. 23,935, f. 3), and a Sarum Brev. of the 14th cent. (Reg. 2 A. xiv., f. 98b) in the Brit. Mus., &c. It is also in Waskernogel i., No. 281; Bässler, No. 101; Card. Newmon's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, &c. [J. M.] Translations in C. U .:-

Sacrosancta hodiernae festivitatis praeconia. [St. Andrew.] This is found in a Gradual written apparently in England in the 12th cent. (Reg. 2 B. iv., f. 138); in a MS. containing a collection of Sequences written c. 1199 (Calig. A. xiv., f. 88), both new in the British Museum, &c. Among Missals it is found in a Sarum, circa 1370, a Hereford circa 1370, and a York circa 1390, all now in the Bodleian; in the St. Andrews, the Magdeburg of 1480, the Angers of 1489, and other Missals, uniformly assigned to St. Andrew's day. The printed text is also in Mone, No. 695, and Kehrein, No. 401. It was ir. by the editors of the Hymnery as "King of Saints, O Lord Incarnate," and appeared therein in 1872. Another tr. is "The sacred honours of this festival," by C. B. Pearson in the Sarum Missal in English. 1868. [J. M.]

A. Elliott, [Sunday Evening.] This cento is composed of Mrs. Elliott's " Hail, thou bright and sacred morn " (see p. 479, i.), and her hymn, "Soon, too soon the awest repose," which appeared in her husband's Ps. & Hys., 1835, in 2 st. of 6 l. The cento, in this form of 3 st., is in the Oberlin (Ohio) Manual of Praise, 1880.

Saevo dolorum turbine. [Passiontide.] This is the hymn at Lauda in the Office of the Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ (see "Macrentes oculi"). Safe home, safe home in port. St. Joseph the Hymnographer. [Rest in Jesus.] This hymn was given in Dr. Neale's Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 6 st. of 6 l., as "The Return Home. A cento from the Canon of S. John Climacos." In the Preface to the 1866 ed. of the Hys. of the E. Ch., he said, concerning it, "Art thou weary," and "O happy band of pilgrims," that they contained so little that is from the Greek that they ought not to have been included in that collection, and that in any future edition they would appear as an "Appendix." Dr. Neale did not live to carry out his intention: but the Very Rev. S. G. Hatherly has done so in the 4th ed. of that work. The most that can be said of the hymn, then, is that it is by J. M. Neale, based on the Greek of St. Joseph the Hymnographer. grapher. In St. Joseph's known works no Greek lines can be found which correspond with those in the English hymn. Dr. Nealo's text is found in a large number of hymnals in Great Britain and America. [See Greek Hymnody, §§ xviii. 3, and xx.] [J, J,] Safely through another week. J. Newton. [Saturday Evening.] Appeared in R. Conyers's Ps. & Hys., 1774, No. 355, in 5 st. of 6 l.: and again in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 40. It is found in a few modern collections; and sometimes in an abbreviated and altered form, as in Kennedy, 1863, &c.

Saffery, Maria Grace, née Horsey, b. in 1773, and d. March, 1858, was daughter of the Rev. J. Horsey, of Portsea, and wife of Sad and weary were our way. Julia | the Rev. Mr. Saffery, pastor of the Baptist Church at Salisbury. Early in life she pub.) a short poem and a remance, and in 1834, a volume entitled Poems on Sacred Subjects (Lond., Hamilton, Adams & Co.). Mrs. Saffery was a gifted and accomplished woman. At the suggestion of her husband, and of her son, the Rev. P. J. Saffery, she wrote many hymns for special occasions. She contributed ten to Dr. Leifchild's collection, and others to the Baptist Magazine and other periodicals. Some time before 1818 she wrote a hymn on Holy Baptism, "Tie the Great Father we adore," which was printed in the Baptist New Selection, 1828, has since appeared in most Baptist hymn-books, and is now in C. U.; and sometimes as, "'Tis God the Father we adore." Her bymn of a Mother for her Child, "Fain, O my babe, I'd have thee know," is in the Comprehensive Rivpon, 1844. Her Evening hymn, "God of the sunlight hours, how rad," from her Poems, &c., 1884, p. 188, and her Good Shepherd, "There is a little lonely fold," from the same, p. 172, are also in Baget mir von keinem Lieben [Love to Christ.] Included as No. 2057 in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837 (1865, No. 1829), in 9 st. of 4 l. Tr. as "Tell me not of earthly love," by Miss Borthwick in H. L. L., 1882, p. 70 (1884, p. 232), repeated in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1870.

Saints, exalted high in glory. J. Gabb. [Heaven.] First pub. in his Hys. & Songs of the Pilgrim Life, No. xxxix, in 5 st. of 6 L, in 1871; and from thence, with slight altera-tions and the omission of st. v., into Snepp, Songs of G. & G., 1872, No. 1014. Orig. text as above. In 1875 it was rewritten by the author for his Welburn Appendix, and given therein with his spirited tune "Selborne," No. 67, as "Saints, in highest realms of glory," In this form it is far superior to the original in construction, execution, and power. It forms, with the omission of st. ii., a good hymn for "All Saints Day." [J. J.]

Salisbury, James, M.A., was b. at Ashbyde-la-Zouch, May 15, 1821. He studied at the University of St. Andrews and completed his course for the Baptist ministry at Horton College. He has been successively pastor tongford in Warwickshire, Barrowden in Rutland, Hugglescote and Hinekley in Leicestershire. To the Baptist Hyl., 1879, he contributed a tr. from the German, which is noted under Veni Creator Spiritus.

Salvation, O the joyful sound. I. Watts. [Fraise for Salvation.] The hymn which passes under this first line is found in so many forms that it will be necessary to indicate not only the sources from whence its varying stanzas have been taken, but also to give the original text itself.

i. The original hymn appeared in Watts's Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1707, Bk. ii., No. 88, in 3 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Balvation" :-

A cordial for our fears.

 "Bury'd in sorrow and in sin, At hell's dark door we lay; But we arise by grace divine To see a heavinly day.

3. " Salvation! let the echo fly The spacious earth around, While all the armies of the sky Conspire to raise the sound."

Amongst the collections which are in common use at the present day the following contain this text: the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns; Bk. of Praise Hymnol; Bap, Ps, & Hys.; New Cong.; Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk.; Stevenson's Hys. for Ch. and Home; and others, which can be readily ascertained by reference to the text as above. It is also found in numerous American collections.

ii. About the year 1772 a cento appeared in the Countess of Huntingdon's Coll. as follows:-

St. i Watte's st. i, as above, with "What" for "'Tis."
St. il. Watte's st. iii. as above.
St. iii. "Salvation! O Thou bleeding Lamb,
To Thes the praise belongs;
Salvation shall inspire our hearts.

And dwell upon our tongues. To these were added the following at. :-

" Blessing, honour, praise and power Be unto the Lamb for aver:
Jesus Christ is our Redeemer, Hallelujah! Praise the Lord."

This arrangement is probably due to the Hon. Walter Shirley, who revised the Lady Huntingdon Coll. about 1774. It was exceedingly popular with the older compilers, and is found in many of their collections. In modern hymn-books it is found, amongst others, both in Great Britain and America, in:—the Wes. H. Bk.; Meth. N. Con. H. Bk.; Meth. S. S. H. Bk., &c., with the "Blessing" of the chorus changed to "Glory."

In addition, the following centes are in common use:-

(a) St. i. "Salvation, O," &c. St. ii. "Burled," &c. St. iii. "Salvation let," &c. St. iv. "Salvation, O Thou." Charms.

Missals it is appointed for the first S. in Advent. The printed text is also in Neale's Gdi. and Stowell's Ps. & Hys., &c.

(b) St. 1. "Salvation! O," &c. St. il. "Salvation! let," &c. St. iii. "Salvation: O Thou," &c. Chorus. Given in the Irish Church Hymnal, &c. (c) St. 1. "Salvation! O," &c. St. ii. "Suried," &c. St. iii. "Salvation! let," &c., and Chorus after each stanza. In Hy. Comp. Scottish Hymny. Union Hyl., &c. (d) St. i. "Salvation! O," &c. St. ii. "Buried," &c. St. ii. "Salvation, O Thou," &c. St. iv. "Salvation let." Chorus. Given in Kemble's New Ch. H. Bk., 1873.

ül. In Dr. Kennedy's Hymno. Christ., 1863, No. 624, is a cento thus composed :-

St. i. "Salvation! O." &c. Dr. Watts. St. il. "Outworn with sorrow," &c. Dr. Kennedy. St. iil. "Salvation! let," &c. Dr. Watts. St. iv. "Salvation! O'Thou," &c. Lady Huntingdon's Coll. St. v. "Rejoice, rejoice," &c. Dr. Kennedy.

iv. Some curious and somewhat interesting centos are also found in the older cellections: ne Ash & Evane's Bap. Coll. (Brietol), 1769; Urwick's Coll. (Dublin), 1829; Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833; and others. In one form or snother, as an original hymn or as a cento, "Salvation! O the joyful sound," has had and still has a most extensive use. It has also been translated into several languages. sometimes one form of the text being used and then another. B. Bingham's tr. into Latin, "Salus, Salus, O vox lacta," in his Hymno Christ. Lat., 1871, is a rendering of (a) as above. [J. J.]

Salvator mundi Domine. [Advent. Evening.] This is found in a Ms. of the 12th cent. in the British Museum (Harl. 2928 f. 110 b); in a Sarum Hynnary, circa 1300 (Laud, Lat. 95, f. 134 b); and a York Hynnary of the 13th cent. (Laud, Lat. 5, f. 165), both now in the Bodleian; in the Sarum, York, Hereford and Aberdeen Breviaries, &c. Also in Daniel, iv. p. 209, Mone, No. 32, and Card. Newman's Hy. Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Mone thinks it is of the 6th or 7th cent. It was appointed as a hymn at compline; but the seasons during which it was used vary considerably in the various Breviaries, ranging from Saturdays in Advent to the First S. in Lent; and again from Trinity to Christmas. The original was used at Eton, at the 8 P.M. daily service, until about 1830. [J. M.]

3. O Gross, we hall thy bitter reign. A good tr. from Bunsen, by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Scr., 1855, p. 154. Two centes are in Kennedy, 1868, viz. No. 602 of st. i., ii., xi.,

Salve festa dies toto venerabilis aevo. This line is taken from a poem by Fortunatus, which begins "Tempora flori-gero." Two centos, mainly from Fortunatus, are noted under Tempora farigero. The cento for Easter, which was that most widely used. begins "Salve . . . Qua Deus infernum violt et astra tenet." In the Sarum Processional another cento was given for the Ascension, beginning "Salve...Qua Deus in coelum scandit et astra tenet." The Fork Processional has for the Ascension "Salve...Qua Deus in coelum scandit et astra tenet." (see Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, and Daniel, if. p. 181), but this takes nothing from Fortunatus save the opening stanza. Both in England and on the Continent the various Processionals contain a number of hymna which take the opening line from Fortunatus, but are otherwise quite different. Of these we note here :---

1. Saire . . . Qua Dons de ceals gratia fuint hume. Whitsunitée. This is found in the York Processional of 1632 and is also in Card. Newman's Byonic Exclesion, 1838 and 1665; in Panich, ii, p. 162; and in Kakrein, No. 184. The strike hand of the Saire and Saire and Salve mi angelice, spiritus beats. Konrad of Gaming. [Angels.] A hymn of 64 lines given by Mone, No. 312, from a Munich Ms. of the 15th cent., and entitled "A prayer concerning one's own (i.e. guardian) angel." Tr. by J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Syon, Pt. ii., 1866, p. 101, as, "Hail, mine angel, pure and bright," and included in the Prople's H., 1867. [W. A. S.]

Salve mundi Domina. [B. V. M.] This is found in the Parnaesus Marianus, Douni, 1624, p. 38, and there marked se taken from a Spanish book of Hours ("ex horis quibus-dam valde autiquis in Hispania"). The same text is found in the Path to Heaven (ed. London, 1877, pp. 429-435), in recent eds. of Nakatenne's Coeleste palmetum (e.g. Mechlin, 1859, p. 236), and other modern Roman Catholic manuals of devotion. A portion beginning "Salve area foederis" is in Daniel, iv. p. 342. F. W. E. Roth, in his Lat. Hymnen, 1887, Nos. 191-97, prints it from a Prayer Book written for the use of the Empress Maria Theresa of Austria, about 1760 (now in Dermstadt), where it occurs in the course of an office for the Immaculate Conception of the B. V. M. It has been to by E. Caswall in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 255, and in his Hys. & Posus, 1873, p. 165, in 16 st. of 8 l, and thus divided for Divine Service:—

- 1. Mating. "Hall, Queen of the heavens."
 2. Prime. "Hall, Virgin most wise."
 3. Terce. "Hall, Solomon's throne."
- 3. Terce. "Hall, Solomon's arroue."
 4. Sext. "Hall, virginal mother."
 5. None. "Hall, city of refuge."
 6. Fagers. "Hall, dist of Achas."
 7. Complian. "Hall, mother most pure."
 8. Commendation. "These praises and prayers."

These parts are repeated in the Crown of Jesus H. Bk., 1862, as separate hymns.

Other tra. are :-

1. Hail, Lady o' th' world Of heaven bright Queen. 2. Hail, Virgin, o'er all virgins bright. [J. M.]

Salve mundi salutare. St. Bernard of Clairvant? [Passiontide.] The text of this it impossible to come to any definite conclusions sweet and beautiful poem, which has been mainly used by translators into English and German, is that found in St. Bernard's Opera Omnia, Paris, 1609, cols. 1655-56. Here it is entitled "A rhythmical prayer to any one [unum quodlibet] of the members of Christ, suffering and hanging on the Cross," and is divided into seven parts, viz. :--

i. Salve mundi salutare.
ii, Salve Jesu, Raz sanetarum.
iii. Salve Jesu, paster bone.
iv. Salve Jesu, punme bonus. To the Feet. " Entet. " Hands. " Side. v. Salve calus mos. Deus. vi. Summi Regis cor aveto. vil. Salve caput gruentatum. Breast. , Face.

Going a little further back, a somewhat similar text is in St. Bernard's Opuscula, Venice, 1495, where it is entitled "A divine and most devout prayer of the Abbot St. Bernard, which he made when an image of the Saviour, with outstretched arms, embraced him from the Cross." Here the last section is entitled "To the whole body," and begins, "Balve Jean reverence." In a sa. of 1454, now in the Town Library at Nürnberg, there is a tr. into German entitled "St. Beroard's Lamentation," and beginning "Der welt heilant, nim min grilezen," which is from the same text as that in the Opuscula; and here, after the third last stanza, is the note "As now St. Bernard had spoken these words with great earnestness of desire, the image [Marterbild on the cross bowed itself, and embraced him with its wounded arms, as a sure token that to it this prayer was most pleasing." The same German tr. is also in a 15th cent. Ms. at Donaueschingen, with the title "This is the noble prayer of the devout doctor St. Bernard," &c. (see Wackernagel, ii., No. 454, and p. 1198).

Clearly, then, there is tradition at least as far back as 1450 (the tradition indeed seems to have come from Clairvaux), that the poem, as a whole, is by one author, and that this was St. Bernard. St. Bernard, however, d. in 1153, and no mee of the poem have yet been found of earlier date than the 14th cent. The MSS., moreover, present the greatest varieties of text and arrangement, so that it is exceedingly difficult to say whether any part of the poem is really by St. Bernard, or to discriminate what is his and what is not his. Doubtless the remark which Archbishop Trench made regarding other poems ascribed to St. Bernard, is true of this poem, viz., that the internal evidence is in favour of him as its author; and that if he did not write it, it is not easy to guess who could have written it. But in the present state of the evidence we cannot say much more. The conclusions of Mone and Daniel may be thus summed up :-

Mone, Nos. 123-126, gives parts 1-4, from 188. of the 14th and 15th cent. Into the veriety of texts and forms shown in his notes we have not here space to enter. In these notes he gives a mass of various readings, and mentions that at least two of the 15th cent. MSS. which he used had also parts 5-7. He also says, that in a 15th cent. MS. at American, the complete poem is entitled, "Prayer of Bonaventura, on saluting the Five Wounds of Christ." In his judgment, the bewildering variety of forms and texts makes as to authorship; but he thinks that the original poem was probably by a French writer.

Daniel, i., No. 207; ii., p. 359; and iv., pp.
224-231, gives the text of all the parts. In his notes in vol. iv. he expresses the opinion that only two of the parts, those to the Feet and to the Knees (1 and 2), are by St. Bernard. His principal reason for so thinking is, because the Lichtenthal MS. of the 14th cent., quoted by Mone, has only these two, with the title "Lamentation on the Passion of the Lord." As Lichtenthal was a Cistercian foundation, he holds that the Brethren there would be most likely to give the complete and correct text of a poem by the founder of their Order. He adds:-

"Whoever reads the first part attentively cannot help seeing that it refers to the whole frame of the suffering Christ; and that special mention is made of the Feet only for this reason,—that the poet places himself procrate on his knees, at the foot of the cross, and embraces the Savtour's Feet. And as far as regards the Knees, they are only touched upon once in the second part, and that incidentally: the poem, as a whole, is clearly concerned with the Passion as a whole. Such a norm was compared by St. Bernard: the titles of the poem was composed by St. Bernard: the titles of the members are the work of a later age."

Daniel holds that the address to the Hands is later than St. Bernard; that next was added, probably in the 14th cent., the address to the Side; and that those to the Breast, to the Heart, and to the Face, were first added in the 15th cent.

Mone and Daniel thus agree in thinking that parts 5-7 are not by St. Bernard, but are of much later date, probably of the 15th cent, And, apparently, they would have agreed in saying that these additions were made in Germany. If their conclusions be correct, then the finest part of all, the "Salve caput cruentatum." must be by some one other than St. Bernard.

Other texts may be briefly noted. (1) The poem is found in five MSS. of the 15th cent., at St. Gall (Nos. 473, 482, 485, 619, 521). (2) F. W. E. Rott, in his Lat. Hymnes, 1887, No. 141, gives the skelston of a form in parts (beginning, "Salve mean salutare"), the parts 7 parts (beginning, "Saive meum salutare"), the parts being respectively sasigned to Mating, Prime, Terce, Sext, None, Vetpers, and Compline. He cites it as in a 15th cent. ws. manual of devotions, now at Darmstodt. 15th cent. Ms. manual of devotions, now at Darmstadt. (3) G. Milchsack, in his Hymni et Sequentiae, 1886, No. 170, gives a curious form of parts 5-7, from a 15th cent, broadshest in the Wolfenbüttel Library. (4) Wackernagel, i., Nos. 188-182, gives the text, in 7 parts, from Moss, and the Paris ed., 1719, of St. Bernard's Opera. (5) Archbishop Trench, in his Sucred Latin Poetry, edited barts 1 and 3 from the Carred Latin Poetry. (v) arenoushop Trench, in his Sucreil Latin Poetry, gives parts 1 and 7 from the Opera, 1719. (6) F. A. March gives, in his Lat. Hys., 1825, parts 1, 6, and 7. (7) The texts in Königsfeld, his, p. 180; (8) Hamback, i., p. 215; and (9), Meale's Hymni Exclasing, 1851, p. 182, are centes.

In J. M. Horst's Paradisus animae Christianae, 1644, the text is given in 7 parts, but very greatly altered, thus ;

- 1. Jesu summas Res virtulis.
- 1. Christe Jesu fons bonorson, fil. Christe Jesu Pastor bone. iv. O Salvator summe bonus. v. O Lux Mundi Christe Deus.

- vi. O divinum Cor ando.
- vii. Caput spinis coronatum.

It may be added that the use of this noble poem seems to have been almost entirely conflued to books of private devotion, and collecspear to have pessed into Mediaeval Brest-aries, Missals, Graduals, or Processionals; and the daly portion we have been able to trace in similar modern books, is the greatly mutilated cente, "Jesu duicis amor mens"

(p. 585, i.), included in recent editions of the Roman Breviary.

The whole poem has frequently been tr. into German; and various German versions have also been made from portions of it. The best known set of tra into German are those by Paulus Gerhardt, which are free versions of all the seven parts, from the Latin text of 1609, thus :-

1. Sei mir tausendmal gegrüsset.

- il. Gegrüsset zeist du meine Krm. ill. Sei wohl gegrüsset, guter Hirt. iv. Ech grüsse dich, du frömmster Mann.
- v. Gegrützet seist du, Gott mein Heit. vl. O Hers des Königs aller Weit. vli. O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden.

Of these Nos, 1, 5, 6, 7, have passed into English, as follows:-

i. Sel mir tausondmal gegrüsset. This fine but free appeared in the 5th ed., Berlin, 1653, No. 498, and the tr. appeared in the 5th ed., Berlin, 1853, No. 498, and the Frankfurt ed., 1855, No. 180, of Cringer's Pruzis pictatis metica, in 68 to 781. Included in Wackernagel's ed. of Gerhardt's Geistl. Lieder, No. 16. in Backmann's ed., No. 48, and in the Uno. L. S., 1851, No. 116. The train C. U. are:—

5. Head, all hail, with gore drops scattered. By H. Kynaston, in his Occasional Hys., 1862, p. 85.

In addition to these, two hymns by H. Alford, which were based on St. Bernard, ap-The father's face," and "Thou Saviour who Thyself didst give." The text, in 10 sts., as given in Daniel, ii., p. 359, has also been tr. by D. T. Morgan, in his Hys. of the Latin Church, 1871, p. 76; and the 1880 ed., p. 97, as, "Saviour of the world, to Thee, Blessed One [Jesu, low] I bow the knee."

The Poem, as arranged in Horst's Paradisus animae Christianae, 1644, as above, has been tr., probably by W. J. Copeland (see p. 942, L), in Dr. Pusey's tr. of Horst; and, again, by Canon Oakeley, in his tr. of the same, 1850, as follows:--

1. Jens summae Res virtutie.

 All hail, divinest heart, to Thee. Pusey. Oakeley.

vil. Capat spinis coronatum.

1. Ab, that Head with sharp theras crowned.

2. All bleeding with the tangled thorn. Oakdey. Although, taken as a whole, considerable attention has been given to this poem in its various forms, yet some of the Parts have suffered from neglect. This should be remedied by an able translator.

Salve, O sanctissime. [St. John Baptist.] A hymn of 40 lines given by Mone, No. 650, from a Ms. of 1439, at Karlsruhe, and a 15th cent. Ms. at Mainz. It has been tr. by G, Moultrie in his Hys. and Lyrics, &c., 1867, p. 215, as "Hail, O thou of women born." Also in the People's H., 1867, and signed "M." [W. A. S.]

Balve regims. Hermannus Contractus (?).
[B. V. M.] This famous antiphon has been attributed to a great variety of authors. The opinion of Durandus (d. 1296), in his Rationale. was, that it was by Petrus of Monsoro (Petrus Martinez de Mesoncio), Bp. of Compostella, who d. circa 1000. It has also been ascribed to Adhemar, Bp. of Podium (Le Puy), who d. 1098; to Bernard, Archbishop of Toledo, who d. 1124; to Ansolm, Bp. of Lucca, who d. 1086; to St. Bernard, of Clairvaux, who d. 1153, &c. Tritheim (d. 1516) and others think that it was by Hermannue Contractus (d. 1054); and this seems, on the whole, the most pro-bable opinion. In any case it must have been known by 1100, for there are sermons on the first part of it (down to salle), by Bernard of Toledo (see Migne's P. P. Lat., vol. 184, col. 1059). There is also a Meditatio upon it, which Migne, vol. 184, col. 1078, gives as by Auselm of Lucca; and at vol. 149, col. 583, among the Opusoula spuria ascribed to St. Anselm of Lucca. The text of the antiphon, which is embodied in the Meditatio, is probably the original form, and reads thus:

"Salve, regina misericordise, vita dulcedo, et spes nostra, salve. Ad te clamamus exules filii Evac. Ad te enspiramus, gementes et fientes in hac lachrymarum valle. Es ergo, advocata nostra, illos tuos misericordes oculos ad nos converte, et Jesum, benedictum fructum ventris tul, post boc extilium ostende. O clemens, C pia, O dulcis Maria."

Almost the same text is given by Daniel, ii., p. 321, from a Munich Ms. of the 13th cent., &c.; and by Schubiger, in his Sängerschule St. Gallens, 1858, p. 85, from the Einsiedeln MS., No. 33, written about 1300. So in a Horae, in the Bodleiau (Liturg. Misc. 104, f. 122), written in England about 1310, where, however, it begins, "Salve regins, mater misericordiae": and cods, "O duleis Viryo Maria." This last text is that found in the Roman Breviary (e.g. Modens, 1480, f. 512, and later eds.), where it is appointed for use at Compline, from the First Vespers of Trinity Sunday, up to None on the Saturday before Advent Sunday. According to tradition, the concluding part of the antiphon, "O clemens, O pia, O dulcis Maria," was first added from an ejaculation by St. Bernard of Clairvaux, in the cathedral at Speyer (Spires); but, as will be seen above, these words are in the earliest forms of the text. [See Various.]

In mediacval times, this antiphon became a great favourite, and in many churches money was left to provide for having it regularly sung. It was much used in Italy by the fishermen and sailors, when at sea, in stormy weather. One result of its popularity was, that a large number of hymns were written upon it, embodying the words of the antiphon in their various stanzas. Mone, Nos. 487-495, gives nine examples, more or less complete, from mss. of the 14th and 15th cents.; and a tenth is in Daniel, ii., p. 323. The fine plain song melody (given by Schubiger as above), has also been ascribed to Hermannus Contractus; and the antiphon has been set to music by very many composers since his day. Luther spoke very sharply of the veneration of the B. V. M. in this astiphon, and of the honour paid to it by the ringing of the church bells while it was being sung. A Protestant version, beginning "Salve Rex actornae misericordiae," was in use at Erfurt in 1525. In the Appx. to the Roman Catholic Hymnarius, pub. at Sigismundlust, in 1524, there is an evangelical version which reads, e.g. :-

"Salve Jesu Christe, misericordia, vita . . . Advocate noster at telppum benedictum filium Det Patris nobls . . . O clemens, O pie, O ducis Jesu fili Marise." (See Bäussker, 1., p. 63, and ii., p. 70.)

been tr. as:—

 Mother of mercy, hail, 0 gracious [gentle]
 Queen. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 40; and his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 23. This is in use in a few Roman Catholic collections for missions and schools.

Other tra, are :-

Sancte Dei pretiose, protomartyr Stephane. [St. Stephen.] The original form of this hymn is in 3 st. of 3 lines (ii. "Funde preces," iii. "Gloria et honor"). This form is in two Mes. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii., f. 36; Harl. 2961, f. 229); and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Sazon Ch., 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. MS. at Durham. (B. iii. 32, f. 14.) Also in the Sarum. Hereford, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries. Sometimes used for the Invention of St. Stephen. The original form is also printed by Mone, No. 1158, from an 11th cent. Ms. at Stuttgart, &c. The text in Daniel, i., No. 221, contains six additional stanzas, probably of North German origin, and of much later date. [J. M.]

Paris, and a 14th cent. Sens in the British Museum; in a Sarum circa 1370, a Hereford circa 1370, and a York circa 1390, all now in the Bodleian; in the St. Andrews, the Magdeburg of 1480, and many other Missals, even in Italy and Spain. Sancti venite, corpus Christi sumite. [Holy Communion.] This is found in the Antiphenarium Bencherense, an antiphenary written 680-691 at the Monastery of Bangor, County Down, Ireland, and now in the Ambrosian Library at Milan. The Ms. has been printed in L. A. Muratori's Opera, vol. xi., pt. iii. Arezzo, 1770, and the hymn in question is there at p. 228 as "a hymn when the priests communicate." This title explains st. i., ll. 3, 4, "Sanctum bibentes, Quo redempti, sanguinem." "It has," says Neale, "a certain pious simplicity about it which renders it well worthy of preservation." Its original use was probably to be sung as a Communio in the Mass (see Communio, p. 255, The printed text is also in Rambach, i. p. 132; Daniel, i. No. 160, and iv. p. 109; J. M. and Bäselor, No. 61.

Translation in C. U.:-

Draw nigh, and take the Body of the Lord. By J. M. Neale, pub. in his Medizoul Hymns, 1851, p. 13, in 10 st. of 2 l. It passed into the People's H., 1867 (7 st.); H. A. & M., 1868 and 1875 (in full); the S. P. C. K. Churck Hys., 1871 (in full); in others in 6 st. only, and in most cases with very slight alterations. In the Hy. Comp. it is altered as "Come, take by faith the Body of your Lord." In his annotated ed. of the Hy. Comp. Bp. Bickersteth has this note on his amended text :-

"The Editor has ventured to modify his [Neale's] first line 'Draw nigh and take the Body of the Lord, which contains no thought answering to Saneti, by introducing the words by faith'; and while thus admirroqueing this words by faith ; and while thus adhering more closely to the original Latin, he has expressed the teaching of our Church, 'The Body and Blood of Christ are verily and Indeed taken and received by the faithful in the Lord's Supper '(Gatechtem). And again, 'The means whereby the body of Christ is received and eaten in the Supper is faith (Articla excits.)'"

In addition to this alteration Bp. Bickersteth has several others, all of which, with one exception, deal more with the rhythm of the lines than with doctrine. The exception is st. x., which reads in the Latin :-

"Alpha et Omega Ipsa Christos dominus, Venit venturus Judicare homines."

In Neale:-

" Alpha and Omega, to whom shall how All nations at the Poom, is with us now." In the Hy. Comp. :-

" O Judge of all, our only Saviour Thou, In this Thy Feast of love be with us now.

Sanctorum meritis inclita gaudia. [Common of Martyrs.] This hymn is frequently referred to by Hincmar in his "De una et non trina Deitate," 857; but he distiuetly says he could not discover its author. It is found in four mes, of the 11th cent, in the British Museum (Jul. A. vi., f. 63b; Vesp. D. zii., f. 104; Harl. 2961 f. 2475; Add. 30,851 f. 152 b); and in the Latin Hyp. of the Analo Saxon Ch., 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at Durham (B. iii, 32, f. 89). Also in a ms. of the 10th cent. at Bern, No. 455; in a us. of the 11th cent at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (No. 391, p. 272); in the St. Gall Mss., 413 and 414, of the 11th cent. It is in the Roman, Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1643, and other Breviaries—the Sarum use being at 1st Vespers and at Matins in the common of many martyrs. The printed text is also in Daniel i. No. 170, and iv. p. 139, giving also the text of the Roman Breviary, 1632; Wackernagel i. No. 125; G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Moissiacensis, 1888, from a 10th cent. Ms.; and Card. The variations in the Roman Brev. text. from the older form are very slight. The trs. by Neale, Blew, Chambers, and Hewett, are from the older form; the rest follow the Roman Brev. form. There is an anonymous imitation rather than a tr. of the Latin text in Follow's Hys. for Pub. and Private Worship, 1847; and again, with the addition of a dexelogy, in Johnston's English Hyml., 1852, beginning "Blest Lord, the crown of groat reward." Sandys, George, a of Dr. Edwin Sandys, Archbishop of York, was b. at Bishopthorpe Palace, York, in 1577, and educated at St. Mary Hall and Corpus Christi College, Ox-ford. For some years he devoted himself to travelling in Europe and Asia, and pub. in 1615 a curious account of his experiences. After visiting America, where he was for a time the Treasurer of the British Colony of Virginia, he became, on his return, a Gentleman of the Privy Chamber of Charles L. He d. at Bexley Abbey, Kent, March 1648. His publications included his Traveller's Thanksgiving; the prose work on his travels, A Relation of a journey begun in 1610, &c., 1615; a tr. of the Metamorphoses of Ovid; and Grotius's tragedy of Christ's Passion. His productions which most nearly concern hymnology were:-

(1) A Paraphrase upon the Psalmes of David, and upon the ligmus dispersed throughout the Old and New Testaments. London: at the Bell in St. Paul's Church-

M.DCXXXVI.

(2) A Paraphrase upon the Divine Poems by George Sandys. London: at the Hell in St. Paul's Churchyard. SAMON. LORDON: As the erec to at the control of the Paraphrase of the Paalma, paraphrases upon Job, Ecclesinates, the Lamentathons of Jeremiah, and the Songs collected out of the Old and New Testaments.

(3) His paraphrase of The Song of Sciences was public 1642. The most available form of these works is the Rev. B. Hooper's reprint of Sandys's Poems, in Smith's Library of Old Authors.

A few only of Sandys's versions of the Psalms are found in modern hymn-books, although they were set to music by Honry Lawes. His influence, however, upon later paraphrasers was considerable. [See Pasters, English, § x.] The following, together with a few others annotated under their respective first lines, are in C. U.:-

1. How are the Gentiles all on fire. Ps. ii,

2. Lord, for Thee I dally cry. Fs. taxrie.

3. My God, Thy suppliant hear. Ps. taxrie.

4. Praise the Lord entironed on high. Fs. ct.

5. Sing the Great Jebovah's praise. Fs. taxi.

6. Thou. Lord, my witness art. Ps. caxxi.

7. Thou who art [dwellest] enthroned above. Ps.

8. You, who dwell above the skies. Ps. cziniii. These paraphrases as in C. U. are in the form of centos. [J, J,] Sankey, Ira David, was b. in Edinburgh, Pennsylvania, in 1840, of Methodist paronts. About 1856 he removed with his parents to Nowcastle, Pennsylvania, where he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Four years afterwards he became the Superintendent of a large Sunday School in which he commenced his career of singing sacred songs and solos. Mr. Moody met with him and heard him sing at the Inter-national Convention of the Young Men's through Mr. Moody's persuasion he joined him in his work at Chicago. After some two or three years' work in Chicago, they sailed for England on June 7, 1872, and held their first meeting at York a short time afterwards, only eight persons being present. Their sub-sequent work in Great Britain and America is well known. Mr. Sankey's special duty was the singing of secred songs and solos at religious gatherings, a practice which was in use in America for some time before he adopted it. His volume of Sacred Songs and Solos is a compilation from various sources, mainly American and mostly in use before. Although known as Saukey and Moody's Songs, only one song, "Homo at last, thy labour done" (see Yarious), is by Mr. Sankey, and not one is by Mr. Moody. Mr. Sankey supplied several of the melodies. The English edition of the Sacred S. & S. has had un enormous sale; and the work as a whole is very popular for Home Mission services. The Songs have been translated into several languages." [J, J]

Banteiiil, Baptiste de, a younger brother of Claude, and J. B. do Santeliil, was the author of two hymns in the Paris Brev. of 1680 :- "O vos unanimes Christiadum chori." and "Adeste sanoti coelites." These were repeated in his brother's Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1689, and the 2nd ed. of the same, 1698. fG. A. C.1

Santeiiil, Claude de, elder brother of Jean-Baptiste de Santeüil (see below), was b. in Paris, Feb. 3, 1628. He became a secular ecclesiastic of the Seminary of St. Magloire, Paris, whence he was also known under the Latinized form of his name as Santolius Mayloria-nus. He d. Sept. 29, 1684. Like his brother, he was a good writer of Latin poetry, and some hymns by him were included in the Cluniae Brev., 1686, and the Paris Breviaries of 1680 and 1736. Some of these hymns have been translated into English, and are in C. U. [See Index of Authors and in G. Britain. Translators.] fG. A. C.1

Santeiil, Jean-Baptiste de, was b. in Paris of a good family on May 12, 1630. He was one of the regular Canons of St. Victor, at Paris, and, under the name of Santolius Victorinus, was distinguished as a writer of Latin poetry. Many of his hymns appeared in the Cluniae Brev. 1686, and the Paris Brevs. 1680 and 1736, and soveral have been translated into English, and are in C. U. in G. Britain and America. (See Index of Authors and Translators.] He was very jocose in disposition and singular in his habits. When on a journey he d. at Dijon, Aug. 5, 1697. His Hymni Sacri et Novi were pub. at Paris in 1689, and again, onlarged, in 1698. [G. A. C.]

Sass, George Herbert, b. in Charleston, South Carolina, Dec. 24, 1845, where he has resided most of his life. He has contributed to the press a number of religious poems under the nom de plume of " Burlon Grey." These Christian Association, at Indianapolis, and have not come into use as hymns for congregational purposes. The following are given in the Schaif & Gilman Library of Religious Poetry, 1881.

1. Comes it again, the sweet and solemn hour? Christmas Carol

2. Once more through storm and calm the changeful hours.

3. Out of dust and darkness, comes. Easter.

4. Soul, o'er life's sad ocean faring. Follow Me. [J. J.]

Sat Paule, sat terris datum. Guillaume de la Brunetière. [Conversion of St. Paul.] Appeared in the Sens Brev., 1726, and the Paris Bresiary, 1680, as the hymn at Malins and second Vespers on the 30th June. It is also in other French Brevieries and in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecolesiae, 1888 and 1865. It has been tr. os:—

1. Enough, O Paul, enough, and now. I. Williams.

bers. 1866.

I. Williams's tr. has been in C. U., but that by Chambers has not passed into the hymnbooks.

Baturatus ferculis. [Holy Communion.] A hymn in 15 st., and entitled "A giving of thanks after Holy Communion," is quoted by Mone, No. 232, from a Reichenau Ms. of the 14th cent, a Reichenau ws. of the 15th cent, and a Munich Ms. of the 15th cent. It is also contained in the St. Gall Ms., No. 309, of the 15th cent. The Munich Ms. contains the hymns of the Carthusian prior Konrad, of Gaming, in Lower Austria. As the Reichenau MSS. agree in differing from the text of the Munich it is probable that Konrad only made a few alterations on an older bymn. Tr. as:-

Fed with dainties from above. By J. D. Chambers, in his Landa Syon, 1857, p. 233; and the Attar Hymnol, 1884.
 With choicest dainties neurished. By R. F. Little-dale, in the Altar Manual, 1863; and signin in the People's H., 1867, No. 182, and signed "D. L.," Le. Dr. Littledale. [W. A. S.] [W. A. S.]

Saviour, again to Thy dear Name we raise. J. Ellerion. [Evening.] Written in 1866, in 5 st. of 4 L, for the festival of the Malpas, Middlewich, and Nantwich Choral Association of that year, and adapted to the tune "St. Agnes," in Thorne's Coll. Of this hymn there are the following texts:--

1. The original in 5 st. of 4 i. See No. 4.
2. Mr. Ellerton's revised and abridged text for the App. to H. A. & M., 1868, in 4 st. This is the most popular form of the hymn, and is in extensive use.
3. The same text, with st. ii. and iii. transposed, and st. iii., 1. i., changed from :-"Grant us Thy peace, Lord, thre' the coming night,"

"Grant us Thy peace, Lord, thre' the coming night," to,
"Grant us Thy peace through the approaching night," and included in Church Hymns, 1811. The use of this form of the hymn is limited.
4. The form given in Thring's Coll., 1882, in 6 st., the most deficiente, beautiful, and tender of all. It is the original text, with the exceptions that st. ili. was originally st. il., and st. il. originally st. ili., neats, "Grant us Thy peace, Lord, through the coming night."

(The wassess which has attended this hymne

The success which has attended this hymn is very great. No composition of Mr. Ellerton's has attained to anything approaching it in extensiveness of use in Great Britain and America. In Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873, it begins, "Again to Thee, our guardian God, we raise." [J. J.]

Saviour, bless the word to all. T.

Kelly. [For a blessing on the Word.] Appeared in the 2nd cd. of his Hymns, &c., 1806, in 3 st. of 4 l. (ed. 1853, No. 434). It is in C. U. in this form. In the American Unibirian Hys. for the Church of Christ, 1853, it is altered to "Father, bless Thy word to all." This text is repeated in a few collections; and, sometimes, as in the Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, with C. Wesley's stanza, "Sing we to our God above," as a doxology. [J. J.]

Saviour, blessed Saviour. G. Thring. [Pressing Onwards.] Written in 1862, and 1st pub. in his Hymns, Congregational and Others, 1866, p. 36, in 8 st. of 8 l. In 1868 it was repeated in the Appendix to H. A. & M., with alterations by the author and the compilers of H. A. & M., in st. v., vii., and viii. When included in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, Prebendary Thring added the stanza "Farther, ever farther. This full form of the text was repeated in his Hys. and Sac. Lyrics, 1874; and in his Coll., 1882. It has been specially set to music by Sir H. S. Oakeley, the Rev. J. Francis, J. D. Farrer, and others. In several American hymn-books it is broken up as :--

1. Brighter still, and brighter. In the Presbyterian

Bymmal, Philadelphia, 1874, and others.

2. Clearer yet, and clearer. In the Songs of Christian Praise, N. Y., 1890.

8. Nearer, ever nearer. In Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1994

Through these various forms the use of this hymn is extensive. It is well suited for a processional. $\{J, J,\}$

Saviour, breathe an evening blessing. J. Edmeston. [Evening.] Appeared in his Sacred Lyrics, 1st set, 1820, p. 4, in 2 st, of 8 L, and thus introduced "At night their short evening hymn, 'Jesu Mahaxaroo' = 'Jesus forgive us,' stole through the camp,.... Salte's Travels in Abyssinia." One of the One of the earliest to adopt it for congregational use was Bickersteth, who included it in his Christian Pealmody, 1833. It was repeated in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, and others, until it has taken rank with the first Evening Hynns in the English language. It is found in the Lymnals of all English speaking countries, and usually in its correct and complete form. In the Hy. Comp., revised ed., 1876, Bp. Bickersteth has added a third stanza of 8 L, beginning "Father, to Thy holy keeping," and in Thring's Coll., 1882, the editor has re-arranged the hymn, emitted the lines concerning sudden death, and added a fourth stanza in 4 l., beginning "Be Thou nigh, should death o'ertake us," in which the same thought is contained in a milder form. It has been tr. into several languages. The Latin rendering by R. Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Lat., 1871, is "Vespere, Salvator, spires benedicts, priusquam." In Martineau's Hys., 1840 and 1873, the opening line is changed to "Holicet, breathe an evening blessing. Orig. text in the H. Comp., st. i., ii. [J. J.]

Saviour, by Thy sweet compassion. Ada Cambridge. [In Affliction.] Pub. in her Hymns on the Litany, 1865, No. 17, in 7 et. of 8 l., and based upon the words "In all time of our tribulation . . . Good Lord, deliver us." It is given in its full and unaltered form in the Lyra Britannica, 1867, p. 120. When used in public worship it is usually abbreviated. [J. J.]

Saviour divine, we know Thy name. P. Doddridge. [Justification.] 1st pub. in Job Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymne, &c., 1755, No. 132, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Christ, the Lord our Righteoneness." Also in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 150. It is in C. U. sometimes in an abridged form, and also forms part of a cento in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, No. 417, where st. i. is the first stanza of this hymn, and st. ii.—v. are st. iii.—vi. of I. Watts's "Lord, we confess our numerous faults," from his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1709, Bk. i., No. 111.

Saviour, I lift my trembling eyes, [Jesus, the Guide and Advocate.] Lord Selborne's note on this cento in his Book of Praise, 1862, No. lvii., is:--

"Triss, 1862, No. 1711., 18: -
"This hymn as here given [in 3 st. of 4 l.] was introduced into the Marylebone Collection (1851). [Guensy, J. H.] from a poem of some length, published in 1831, in Ric 1745, a volume edited by the Rev. Thomas Dale, and signed 'M. G. T.']. The text (which will be found at page 189 of that volume) is unattered, except that the first word. 'Saviour,' has been brought down from a preceding line, in substitution for the words, 'And then,' so as to give to these stanzas an independent beginning."

These stanzas have passed into several collections, and are worthy of greater notice than they have received. We have seen the signature "M. G. T." written out as "M. G. Thompson," but we have not authority to say that this is correct. Another cento from the same poem appeared in the 3rd ed. of The Spirit of the Pealms, by H. F. Lyte, 1858, in 5 st. of 4 l., beginning "Saviour, I think upon that hour." This, reduced to 4 st., is in the Baptist Praise Bk., N. Y., 1871, and other American collections.

Saviour, I Thy word believe. A. M. Toplady. [Christ dwelling in Man.] Appeared in his Poems on Sacred Subjects, 1759, No. 8, in 6 st. of 8 l., and based upon the words "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." John xiv. 17. It is also in D. Sedgwick's reprint of Toplady's Hymns, &c., 1860. In some American collections, including the Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, st. lii., iv., are given as "Blessed Comforter, come down," as a hymn for Whitsuntide. [J. J.]

Saviour, like a Shepherd, lead us. [The Good Shepherd.] The authorship of this hymn is a matter of some doubt. The arthorship is a matter of some doubt. The carliest source to which we have traced it is Miss D. A. Thrupp's Hymns for the Young, 4th ed. 1836, in 4 st. of 6 l., where it is unsigned. We next find it in the Rev. W. Carus Wilson's Children's Friend for June, 1839 (p. 144), again in 4 st. of 6 l., and signed "Lyte." In the January number of the same magazine there is a National Hymn in the metre of "God save tho Queen" ("Lord, Thy best blessing shed"), which is signed "H. Lyte," and dated from "Brixham" (see Lyte, I. F. p. 705, i.). "Saviour, like a Shepherd, load us" appears again in 1838, in Mrs. Herbort Mayo's Scl. of Hys. and Poetry for the use of Infant and Juvenile Schools, No. 171; and again in the edition of 1816, but without signature. As in that collection several hymns and poems are signed "D. A. T.," it is clear that Mrs. Mayo did not regard the hymn as Miss Thrupp's production. The most that we can say is that the evidence is decidedly against Miss Thrupp, and eomewhat uncertain with regard to Lyte as the writer of the hymn. Its use is extensive both in G. Britain and America.

4. O what a mighty change. In 3 st. of 8 l. in the American Meth. Episcopal Hymns, 1849.

Concerning the Wes. H. Bk. arrangement of the hymn Mr. G. J. Stevenson has some pleasing reminiscences in his Meth. H. Bk. Notes. 1883, p. 304. The centos in Marineau's Hymns are specially adapted for Death and Burial. [J. J.]

Saviour of the nations, come. B. H. Kemedy. [Advent.] 1st pub. in his Hymnología Christiana, 1863, No. 26, in 11 st. of 1., divided into two parts, Pt. ii. beginning, "Zion, at thy shining gates." In 1867 Dean Alford gave st. iii., v., viii.,-x., as "Come, Lord Jesus, take Thy rest," in his Year of Praise, No. 26. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, No. 73 is Pt. ii. from the Hymno. Christ. as above.

Saviour, round Thy footstool bending. Elizabeth Parson, net Rocker. [Lent.] This is the most beautiful and pathetic of Mrs. Parson's hymns. It was written for her class for young people at Tavistock, and supplied to J. Curwen in Ms. It was included in Curwen's Child's H. Bk., 1840, and subsequently printed in Mrs. Parson's Willing-Class Hymns, No. 3, in 3 st. of 6 i. In the Child's H. Bk. it is in 4 st. There are the following forms of the text in C. U.:—(1) that in the Child's H. Bk., in 4 st.; (2) the Willing-Class Hys., in 3 st.; (3) the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879, No. 262, where st. i., iii. and v. are the original slightly sitered, and st. ii, and iv. are from Hodder's S. S. H. Bk.; and (4) that in the Silver Street (London) S. S. Companion, 1880, which is No. 2 with alterations. Through these various forms this hymn is in extensive SI. J. 1

Baviour, Bource of every blessing. [Jews the Source of all Good.] This hymn appeared in the American Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, in 4 st. of 4 l., and has been repeated in several collections, including the Protestant Episcopal Hymnol, 1871. It is a part of the well-known "Come, Thou Fount of every blessing," p. 284, i., rewritten for the Prayer Bk. Coll. of 1826. [J. J.]

Saviour, to Thee we humbly ory. C. Wesley. [Intercession.] 1st pub. with five others in 1745, at the end of a tract, entitled, A Short View of the Differences between the Moravian Brethren lately in England, and the Rev. Mr. John and Charles Wesley, in 6 st. of 6 L, and again in Hymns & Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. ii., No. 72. In 1780 it was included in the Wes. H. Bk., No. 449, and retained in later editions. It is also found in other collections. It is on record that the special members of the Moravians against whom Wesley wrote, taught that if a person pro-fessed faith in Christ, there was no necessity that he should manifest any corrow on account of sins past or present, but for him there was simply the acknowledgment that he was a "happy sinner," a doctrine which could have but one logical outcome. Hence the satire of at. iii. :--

"In vain, till Thou the power bestow,
The double power of quickening grace,
And make the happy sinners know
The tempter with his angel face,
Who leads them captive at his will, Captive-but happy sinners still."

Orig. text, P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. pp. 244 - 5.

Saviour, we seek Thy high abode. I. Watts and G. Rausson. [Life a Pilgrimage.] The original of this hymn is L Watts's " Lord. what a wretched land is this" (p. 696, i.), the rewritten form being by G. Bawson, who re-wrote it for the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, No. 573. It has passed into other collections in G. Britain and America.

Saviour, when in dust to Thee. Sir B. Grant. [Lent.] 1st printed in the Christian Observer, 1815, p. 785, in 5 st. of 8 l., and entitled "Litany." In 1885 it was included in Elliott's Ps. & Hye., No. 105, with a protest in the Preface against its mutilation, as found in some collections then in circulation, and the declaration that the text in that collection was pure. This protest was pro-bably levelled at T. Cotterili, who gave 4 st., yery much altered, as "By Thy birth and carly years," in his Sel. in 1819. The only change in Elliott's Ps. & Hys. from the Christian Observer, 1815, was in st. iii. I. 5., where "anguish'd sigh" was altered to "trusbled sigh." Grant's hymns were republished by Lord Glenelg in 1839 as Sacred Poems. This hymn is at p. 6. This text differs from the preceding, but is claimed by Lord Glenelg to be "a more correct and authentic version." (Preface.) It is this text which is reprinted in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Praise, 1862; and in the Lyra Brit., 1867, as the original. In addition to its use in the Christian Observer, Elliott's Ps. & Hys., and the Sacred Poems, forms of the text, it is also in many hymnals as:-

1. By Thy birth and early years. In Cotterill's Sci., 1818, and others, as above.

2. By Thy birth, and by Thy tears. In several hymr-books.

S. Pather, when in dust to Thee. In a few American collections.

4, Joans, when in prayer to Thee. In Skinner's Daily Service Hymnat. 1864.

In addition to its very extensive use in these varying forms, it has also been to into several languages. That in Latin, by R. Bingham, in his Hymno. Christ. Lat., 1871, begins "Quando genua flectentes." [J. J.]

Saviour, Who exalted high. Bp. R.Mant. [88. James and Jude, or Lent.] Appeared in his Holydays of the Church ; or Scripture in her Dore on the Cross, 1849. No. 2 appeared Narratives of Our Blessed Lord's Life and Ministry, &c., 1828, vol. i. p. 586, in 10 st. of irregular lines, and appropriated to SS. James and Jude. The original text is not in C. U. From it, however, the following centos have been compiled:-

1. Saviour, Who exalted high. In the 1864 Suppl. to the Pr. & Hyr. &c., Bedford, this cento is taken from 5t. i., ii., vii. and x. It is also in other collections.

2. Ban of Man, to Thee we ory. This cento in 4 st. of 6 l., beginning with the first l. of st. iii., was given in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1863; and is also in averaged leader collections.

the Cooke and Benton Hymnat, 1853; and is also in several later collections.

8. Ben of God, to Thee I cry. This cento, beginning with et. ii., appeared in the 1863 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Pt. & Hyu., No. 80, in 6 st. of 6 l. This, with the exception of the opening line, is from the Cooke and Denton Hymnat with a return, in several instances, to the original text. It is repeated in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymna, 1871, as "Son of Man, to Thee I cry."

4. Jeaus Christ exalted high. This, in T. Darling's Hymna, &c., 1887, is in 4 st. of 12 l. In the earlier editions of Darling's Hymna, &c., it began "Jesus, now exalted high."

exulted high."

The popular form of this hymn is the third cento as above.

Saviour, Who ready art to hear, C. Wesley. [The Divine Presence desired.] Appeared in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1740, in 6 st. of 4 L, and headed "On a Journey," Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 304.) With slight alterations, and the omission of st. i., it was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, as No. 205, and has passed into numerous collections as "Talk with us, Lord, Thyself reveal," and in some as "Speak with us, Lord, Thyself re-veal." The stanza which has attained to the greatest repute is:---

"With Thee conversing, I forget All time, and toil, and care; Labour is rest and pain is swe-If Thou, my God, art there.'

Possibly the ideas embodied in these lines had their brigin in Milton's Par. Loct, bk. iv., il. 639, 640 :-

"With thee conversing, I forget all time,
All seasons and their change; all please alike."

The hymn, as a whole, is very popular with the various Methodist bodies. See G. J. Stevenson's Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1888. [J. J.]

Saxby, Jane Euphemia, nee Browne, daughter of William Browne of Tallantire Hall, Cumberland, and sister of Lady Teignmouth, was b. Jan. 27, 1811, and married, in 1862, to the Rev. S. H. Saxby, Vicar of East Clevedon, Somersetshire. Her work, The Dove on the Cross, was pub. In 1849. It has passed into numerous editions, and from it several hymna have come into C. U. This was followed by The Voice of the Bird, in 1875; and Aunt Effic Gift to the Nursery, 1876. Sometimes Mrs. Saxby's Dove on the Cross is dated 1819, but in error. The compilation known as Hys. and Thoughts for the Sick and Lonely, by a Lady, Lond., J Nisbet & Co., 1848, although it contains several of her hymns in an altered form, is ascribed to her in error. Mrs. Saxby's hymns in C. U. include:

- 1. Father, into Thy loving hands. Resignation.
 2. O Jesus Christ, the holy One. Holy Communica.
 3. O Holy Ghost, the Comforter. Whitmstide.
 4. Shew me the way, O Lovil. Guidance desired.
 5. Thou art with me, O my Father. God everywhere.
 5. Thou God of love, beneath Thy sheltering wings.

Of these hymns, Nos. 1, 3, 4, and 6, appeared in the English Presbyterian Ps. & Hys. for Divine Worship, 1867, No. 340, in 5 st of 4 l. It was supplied to Dr. W. F. Stevenson in Ms. in 6 st for his Hys. for the Church and Home, 1873. The additional stanza (the 4th) given in his Notes is:—

"As Thou hast placed beyond my reach Thy richest means of grace, Teach me without them, Saviour, teach My soul to see Thy face."

The point and meaning of this stanza is explained by the fact that this hymn "was written for one who by illness was prevented joining in the Communion." The hymn was included in The Voice of the Bird, 1875. Mrs. Saxby's hymns are very plaintive and tender. This is explained by her thus:—"I wrote most of my published hymns during a very long and distressing illness, which lasted many years. I thought probably that I was then in the 'Bordor Land,' and wrote accordingly." D. Mar. 25, 1898. [J. J.]

Bay, grows the rush without the mire. [Fute of the Wicked. Job viii. 11-22.] Although sometimes attributed to Watts, to the present this hymn has not been traced to his works, and the earliest date at which it is found is in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases of 1745, No. xxiv.. Therein it is given as a Paraphrase of Job viii. 11-22, in 7 st. of 4! Copies of this draft being very rare, we subjoin the text:—

- Say, grows the Rush without the Mire? the Flag without the Stream? Green and uncut, it quickly fades; the Wicken's Fate's the same.
- "Slight is his Hope, out off and broke: or if entire it rise, Yet, as the Spider's Web, when try'd, it yieldeth, breaks and fice.
- Fixt on his House to leans, his House and all its Props decay; He holds it fast, but faster still the tott'ring Frame gives way.
- "The" in his Garden to the Sun his Boughs with vardage smile; And, to the Center struck, his Roots unshaken stand a while;
- Yet, when from Heav'n his Sentence flies, be's burried from his Place: It then denies bim for its Loyd, nor owns it knew his Face.
- "Lo, this the Joy of wicked Men, who Heav'm just Laws despise; They quickly fall, and in their room as quickly others rise.
- "But Gon his Pow'r will for the Just with tender Cars employ: He'll fill their Mouths with Songs of Praise, and fill their Hearts with Joy."

The recast of this hymn, beginning:—
"The rush may rise where waters flow, and flags beside the stream;"

which was publin the authorized Trans. and Paraphs. of 1781, No. vi., in 7 st. of 4 l., is claimed for W. Cameron (p. 200, 1.) by his eldest daughter, in her list of authors and revisors.

Say, why should friendship grieve for those P [Death and Burial.] This hymn appeared in the Exangelical Magazine in 1820, in 6 st. of 4 l., headed "On seeing a mourning rence Petersen (Laurentius Petri Gothus), ring inscribed with the words 'Not lost, but gone before,'" and is signed "B. C.," the signature, it is said, of Benjamin Clark. In the enlarged ed. of Ps. & Hys., 1864, by Morrell and How it was given in a re-written form in 4 st. of 4 l. as "Why mourn the dead with hopeless team?" This in a slightly different form was in Kennedy, 1863. The 1820 text is in P. Maurice's Choral H. Bk., 1861. [J. J.]

Scales, Thomas, was b. at Leeds, Dec. 16, 1786, and educated at the Moravian School at Fulneck, and at the Leeds Grammar School. He received his training for the Congregational ministry at Hoxton College, where he entered in 1806, and of which he was for a short time Classical Tutor. He was successively Congregational minister at Wolverhampton (1810) and Leeds (1819). He remained at Leeds thirty years, and was then appointed (1849) Secretary of the Northern Congregational School at Silcoats. He afterwards became the Secretary of the "Balme Charity." He d. at Cleck-heaton, June 24, 1860. (Miller's Singers and Songs of the Church, 1869, p. 398.) Mr. Scales is known as a contributor to, and one of the Editors of, A Sel. of Hys. for the Use of the Protestant Dissenting Congregations of the Independent Order, in Leeds, 1822, known as the Leeds H. Bk., 1822. [See Congregational Ryanody, p. 289, i.] His hynn on Missions, "Amazing was the grace," contributed thereto, is still in C. U.

Scandinavian Hymnody. Up to the period of the Reformation the churches of Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Iceland, like the rest of the churches of Europe, were furnished with Latin hymns only. Of these (many of them peculiar to Sweden) a collection has been published by G. E. Klemming under the title Latinska Sånger fordom undada i Scendia Kyrlor, Kloster, och Skolor, 4 vols. (Stockholm, 1885-7). The Reformation gave throughout the North, as elsewhere, the signal for the production of the vernacular hymn. There, as elsewhere, the Church's Deborah, when she repeated and obeyed the cry "awake," also began to "utter a song." It may not be amiss to preface the history of that song with a short sketch of the events of her awakening.

her awakening. I. The Reformation.—I. The dissolution of the union of Calmar, which from 1397 to 1523 linked together Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Iceland under one menarch, placed Gustavus Vasa on the throne of Sweden. He at once declared for the Reformed dectrines, as preached by Luther and Melanchthon. With the help of Lawrence Petersen, the Arch-bishop of Upsala, and Lawrence Anderson, the Chancellor, he ultimately persuaded the majority of his people, in spite of the sturdy opposition of Bishop Brask of Linköping, to accept a reformation on Lutheran lines. son and successor Erik xiv., a weak and unfortunate mouarch, adopted the gloomier views of Calvin; and his deposition in 1569, and the death of Archbishop Petersen in 1578, rendered it easy for King John 111. (second sou of Gustavus) to arrange a reactionary movement, in which he was aided by another Law-who followed the first Lawrence at Upsala. The reaction was short-lived, and the Lutheran reformation was finally established in Sweden at the synod of Upsala, held in 1598, during the reign of Sigismund (son of John), but under the auspices of Charles Duke of Södermanland, the third son of Gustavus, afterwards king under the title of Charles IX. At this synod the Confession of Augsburg was formally adopted by the Church of Sweden.

In Denmark also, under Frederik L, the Lutheran reformation was adopted, after considerable opposition; and Christiera III., son of Frederik, completed the task his father had begun. Not being able to persuade the Danish prelates to officiate at his consceration, or not wishing to avail himself of their services, he was crowned, with a ceremonial adapted from the Roman Pontifical, by John Bugenhagen, a preacher from Wittenberg. Bugenhagen was certainly not a bishop, and there is considerable doubt whether he had oven received pricat's orders: he took upon himself, however—as Wesley did more than two contaries after—to perform the office of episcopal consecration (1537), and set apart bishops or "superintendents" to fill the an-cient sees. A Diet at Odense, in 1539, finally bound Denmark to the principles and practice of the Reformed, or, more correctly speaking, Protestant followers of Luther.

8. The year 1587 witnessed the final union of Norway with Denmark, begun in 1523.* The Norwegians had shown no great readiness to accept the Reformation as offered them by King Frederik. Christiern, however, took summary measures. The Archbishop of Trondhjem and his followers made some re-sistance, but the king carried his point, and Lutheranism was established in Norway as it had been in Denmark.

4. In Iceland the work was carried on by Einarsen, who in 1540 was elevated, at the age of 25, to the office of bishop, or superintendent, of Skalholt. Jon Arasen, Bishop of Holar (or Holum), headed the opposition, and endeavoured to excite a rebellion, but was arrested and put to death in 1850.

II. Hymn-writers and Hymns.—Sweden. The first hymn-writers of reformed Sweden were the two renowned brothers, condjutors of Gustavus in the work of reformation, Olaf and Lawrence (or Lars) Peterson, better known by the Latinized names of Claus and Laurentius Petri.

1. Olaf Petersen was b. in 1497. He was early predisposed in favour of the Reformed doctrines, and in 1517, instead of resorting to the Swedish university of Upsala, preferred to study at Wittenberg, where he heard Melanchthen and Luther. Returning in 1520, full of referming zeal, he received hely orders, and in 1524 was made rector of the church of S. Nicholas in Stockholm. In 1540 he was convicted of a guilty knowledge of a conspiracy against King Gustavus, and condemued to death. He was pardoned, though the king never forgave him; and in 1543 he was appointed to another care in Stockholm. He died in 1552.

Lawrence Petersen was b. in 1499, and studied at Upsala, where he became professor in or about 1524. He was a man of more gentleness and discretion than his Impetuous brother Olaf: and this, combined with his high reputation for theological learning, and his known inclination towards a quiet and conservative reformation, induced the clergy to elect him, and the king to appoint him, in 1581, Archbishop of Upsala, and Primete of Sweden. It is not our business to enter into the vexed question of his consecration. That he took a journey to Rome on his appointment seems tolerably clear; but the registers of the period have unhappily been burnt; and whether he really received the laying on of hands there, or, like Bugouhagen, laid hands on others without having received the commission himself, is still a matter of doubt. He is certainly the father of Swedish hymnology. Besides his original compositions he made many translations from Latin and German; and his hymns have been largely borrowed in Denmark. The similarity of the two languages, Danish and Swedish, especially in their older forms, renders transference from the one to the other particularly easy. The Archbishop d., universally beloved and regretted, in 1573.

3. The two Andersens, Lawrence Archdoncon of Upsala, and Peter Bishop of Westerds, seconded the Petersons in their poetical work as Suemake tempor eller witter me på nytt prentade, forökade, och under en annan skick än tilförenna utsatte. ("Swedish Songs of Hymne, now newly printed, enlarged, and published in a different form from the preceding one.")

The first of the two, Laurence or Lars (Laurentius Andress), was b. at Strengnis in 1180. He became in 1523 Chancellor of the Diocese of Upsala, and shortly afterwards Chancellor, or Chief Secretary, to King Guslavus. It was owing in a great measure to his influence that the Diet of the kingdom adopted the Reformed doctrines in 1527. In 1526 he brought out, with the help of Olaf Peterson, a Swedish version of the New Testament, based mainly upon Luther's German translation, and in 15±1 a version of the whole Bible. He was accused in 15±0 of complicity in the plot in which Olaf Petersen was involved; and, like him, was condemned to death, but pardoned. He retired to Strengnas, where he d. in 1552. Peter Andersen, nicknamed Swart (Petrus Andrew Niger), was b. about the end of the 15th cent. He became court chaplain to King Guslavus in 1549, Bishop of Westeras in 1556, and d. in 1562, leaving behind him the reputation of an able and high-principled man. We may note also that the ill-fated king Erik (b. 1593, d. by poison 1577) has also left a couple of hymns, both of which seem to echo his unhappy state of mind. One is a paraphrase of the 51st Psalm:—

(Bowail with all my mind must I my soul's distress.) Beklaga af allt Sinne mā jag min Sjāla vod. the other is not much unlike it:-

O Gud, levem skall jag kisga den Sorg jag mäste druga, så arm och syndefull? (O God, how shall I lament the sorrow I must bear so poor and sinful?)

^{*} The two kingdoms were newly adjusted in 1811, when Norway was taken from Denmark, and united with Sweden, Denmark retaining Iceland. This arrangement still subsists.

Erik's is, however, not the only royal name that appears in the Swedish hymnary. The great Gestavus Adolphus (b. 1591, d. 1632), s. of Charles IX., is the author of the "Battle Hymn," his "swan-song," as it was called, written just before, and published shortly after, his death at Lützen, in 1632 (see pp. 54, ii.; 54, i.). It begins thus:—

Förfaras ej, du illia Hop, fast Flendernas Larm och Rop från alts Sidor akalis.

Fear not, little troop, though the foes' shout and cry resounds from every side.

4. The succession of hymn-writers, begun by Archbishop Petersen, was kept up in Sweden during the succeeding century. Olaf Martinsen (b. 1577, appointed Archbishop of Upsala in 1601, d. 1609) heads the list. He was followed by Jonas Petersen (b. 1587, d. 1644), Bishop of Linköping in 1637; Count Lindsigöld (1634-1690), a distinguished professor in the university of Upsala, and chancellor of that of Lund, which was founded in 1668; Count de la Gardis (1622-1686), Swedish Ambassador at the French court, to whom the University of Upsala owes the priceless Codex Argentous of the Gothic geospels; to whom we may add Peter Brask (d. 1690), son of a rector of St. Clara's in Stockholm, and a collateral descendant of the Bishop Brask who was so stout an antagonist of Gustavus Vass.

5. In the 18th cent, we find the hymnary enriched by a third Archbishop of Upsala, Dr. Haquin Spegel (1645-1714). He was a great traveller, having visited Denmark, Germany, Holland, and England; and was bishop of Skara, and afterwards of Linköping, before he was elevated to the Primacy. Jacob Arrhenius (d. 1725), secretary of and professor in the University of Upsala, was another sacred poet; so was the renowned Olaf Rudbeck (1660-1740), professor of botany at Upsala. A yet more eminent name is that of fasper Swedberg. He was b. at Fahlun, in 1658, and studied at Upsals. After travelling, like Spegel, and serving as pastor of a parish, he was appointed (1092) professor of divinity at Upsala, and in 1702 became bishop of Skara, a post he held for 83 years. His name is especially interesting to us as being one of the earliest on the list of our Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. Later on we find S. L. Odmann, professor of pastoral theology at Upsala, in 1806; S. J. Hedborn (1783-1849), pastor of Askeryd: J. Astrom (1767-1814), pastor of Tuna; and a lady, Fra Lenagren, wife of the Secretary of the Board of Trade (1754-1817), whose hymn begins with the sad words :-

Smart Döden skall det Oja sluta som lange Sorgens Tärar gik.

6. The last and greatest name in the Swedish hymnody, however, is that of Jokan Olaf Wallin. He was b. at Stora Tuna, in 1779, and early displayed his poetical powers. In 1805, and again in 1809, he gained the chief prize for poetry at Upsala. In the latter year he became pastor at Solna; here his ability as a preacher was so striking that he was transferred to Stockholm, in 1815, as "pastor primarius," a title for which we have no exact equivalent. In 1818 he was made Dean of Westerås, and set about the task of editing a revised hymn-book for the whole of Sweden. This task he completed in 1819, and pub. it as, Den Swenska Psalmboken, af Konungen gillad och stadfästad ("The Swedish hymn-book, approved and confirmed by the King"). To it he contributed some 150 hymns of his own, besides translations and recastings; and the book remains now in the form in which he brought it out. It is highly prized by the Swedes, and is in use everywhere. Those who desire to know more of Swedish hymnology, and can read Swedish, will find a full and exhaustive review of the book, with a history of and critique on every hymn in it, in J. W. Beckmann's Föresk til Svensk Psalmhistoria (Stockholm, 1845).

ii. 1. The earliest hymnary of Denmark and Norway, and perhaps the earliest complete one of the whole North, was brought out at Malmö in 1528, by Claus Martenson Tondebinder (1500-1576), who deserves the name not only of the first evangelical preacher in Malmö, but also of the Father of Danish hymnology. The book contained a number of translations from the original Latin, from German (Luther's), and from Swedish (Petersen's), as well as some originals. Martenson subsequently recast it, with the aid of his friends Arvid Petersen and Hans Spendemager; and the book was printed and published at Restock, by L. Dietz, in 1529; just 10 years before that diet of Odense at which Denmark (as has been said before) accepted the principles of the Reformation. The book contains a set of prayers, pealms, hymns, and canticles, and is entitled,

Hen my Handbog, med Praimer or acmdelige Lafsange, vodragme off then heltige Schrift, som may then Christone Porazming (Gud itil Laf or Mennisken till Salighed) riunges ("A new hand-book, with psaime and spiritual songs of praise, derived from Holy Writ, which now are song in the Christian assembly to God's praise and men's salvation")."

This book was reproduced, with some changes and additions, by Hans Jansen, Bishop of Ribe, in 1544, and in 1569 by Hans Thomisson, rector of Vor Frue (Our Lady) in Copenhagen.

2. This book, or rather these hooks, continued to be the hymnary of the Danish and Norwegian Lutherans for more than a century. The poet who had the honour of beginning to re-edit it was Thomas Kingo. He was b. at Slangerup in 1634, and, after completing his theological studies, became in 1668 pastor of his native place. Here he brought out, in 1674, his Aandelige Sjunge-chor ("Spiritual Choral-songe"). The book attracted attention: and in 1677 its author, who had published meanwhile other poetical effusions, was made Bishop of Fyen (Funen). In 1683 he was desired to prepare a new hymn-book, to be authorized for Denmark and Norway. The first part of it appeared in 1689, as Danmarks og Norges Kirkers forordnede Salmebog ("The authorized Hymn-book of the Churches of Denmark and Norway"), and was received with a storm of disapprobation. There were many who admired the work, but an almost equal number exclaimed against it. There were, they said, too many of his own compositions in it; the hymns were too high flown, above the heads of the common people. The criticism was unfairly severe. No doubt nome of Kingo's hymns are cold; and some, perhaps, evince what the Pietists of the next century professed to find in them, a little tendency to what they called Rationalism, and we might term undue breadth. But a rationalizer could scarcely merit the name given to Kingo, the poet of Easter-tide.

In 1690 a committee was appointed to supercede Kingo, and finish the hynn-book. They worked on Kingo's lines, and put in many of his compositions, and the book finally

("The sutborized new Church hymn-book, mitably

("The authorized new Church hymn-book, suitably shapted from old spiritual europe and carefully ravised, and curiched with many new hymns, according to his Majesty's most gracious command, by the principal terry in Copenhagen, for the service of God on Sundays, festivals, prayer-days, and for other godly uses in the Church in Denmark and Norway, and in like manner according to the rayal command prepared for the press by Thomas Kingo, Bishop in the Diocese of Funen.")

Kinyo falt heavyle the alkaha matumen him.

Kingo felt keenly the slight put upon him. He survived it, however, some 12 years or more, dying in 1703. Whatever may be said of him as a hymn-writer and compiler, there is no doubt he was a true poet, and superior to all who preceded him.

 His book, or rather the book of 1699, continued in use throughout Denmark; not, however, without attempts being made to reform it. The first effort was made by Hans Adolf Brosson. He was b. in 1694, at Randrup, where his father was pastor. He entered the University of Copenhagen in 1712. After finishing his theological course he first acted as his father's assistant, and then (1729) as preacher at Tönder in Slesvig. Here he began to display his powers and tastes by publishing a collection of religious poems entitled Troess rare Klenodie, 1739 ("The Faith's rare Jewel.") His opinions were of the Pietist school, opposed to the dry "orthodoxy" (so-called) of the day, which was said to prevail in Kingo's hymns. A few years after this he was made Dean of Ribe; and in 1741 King Christiern VI. (who inclined in the Pietist direction), being charmed with his hymn "Op, al den Ting som Gud har gjört" ("Up, everything that God has made"), appointed him Bishop of Ribe, where he d. in 1764. Brorson's contributions to Danish hymnody are not all original; three-fourths are translations or paraphrases of German Lutheran hymns. His Christmas lyrics are most approved; and he is called par excellence the poet of Christmas. Brorson, however, was poet rather than editor. The hymn-book which he projected, and to which he largely contributed, was brought out in 1740, under the title Den ny Salmebog "The new hymn-book"), by Erik Postoppidan, a relative of the well-known Bishop of Trondhjem, who d. in 1678. Erik was b. in d, in 1764, leaving, like his renowned relative, a number of works on natural history and autiquities. Another effort in the direction of a new hymn-book was made by O. H. Gukiberg, secretary to Prince Frederick, who, sided by Bishop L. Harboc, Fru Brigitta Boys (b. 1742, d. 1824), and others, produced in 1778 a hymn-book under the title :--

Salmebog, eller en Samling of gamle og ny Salmer, til Guds Ære og Hans Menigheds Opbyggelss. ("A bymn-book, or a collection of old and new hymns, the honour of God, and the edification of His Church.")

5. Towards the end of the 18th century a further attempt to effect a revision of Kingo's book was made by N. H. Balle, Bishop of Seeland; who wished, like Brorson, to see more unction and less stiffness in Danish psalmody. The book appeared in 1797 as Evangelisk-Kristelig Salmebog, til Brug ved Kirke- og Hus-Andagt. ("Evangelical Christian Hymn-book for use in Church and Home Worship.") But the attempt was not successful. Balle's hymn-book, though well-meant, was poor and unpoetical. The book of Kingo remained in use till an impetus was given to the tendency to revision by the great reformer of Danish hymnology and theology, the well known Pastor Grundtvig, an admirer of Balle and of Kingo too. Nicolai Frederik Severin Grundtrig was the son of a pastor, and was b. at Udby, in Seeland, in 1783. He studied in the University of Copenhagen from 1600-1805; and, like some other eminent men, did not greatly distinguish himself; his mind was too active and his imagination too versatile to bear the restraint of the scademic course. After leaving the university he took to teaching; first in Langeland, then (1808) in Copenhagen. Here ho devoted his ettention to poetry, literature, and Northern antiquities. In 1810 he became asristant to his father in a parish in Juliand. The sermon he preached at his ordination, on the subject "Why has the Lord's word disappeared from His house," attracted much attention, which is rarely the case with "probationers" sermons. On his father's death, in 1813, he returned to Copenhagen, and for eight years devoted himself mainly to litera-ture. The poetry, both secular and religious, that he produced, drew from a friend the remark that "Kingo's harp had been strang afresh." In 1821 King Frederik v. appointed him pastor of Prasice, a parish in Secland, from which he was the next year removed to Copenhagen, and made chaplain of St. Saviour's church in Christianshayn. From the time of his ordination he had been deeply impressed with Evangelical church sentiments, in opposition to the fashionable Rationalism and Erastianism of the day; and adhered to the antirationalist teaching of Hauge, whose death at this time (1824) seemed to be a call to Grundtvig to lift up his voice. An opportunity soon presented itself; Professor Chansen brought out a book entitled Katholicismens og Profestantismens Forfatning, Läre, og Ritus ("The condition, teaching, and ritual of Catholicism and Protestantism"). This book was replete with the Ernstinn Rationalism which was so especially distast-ful to Grundtvig, who forthwith, in his Kirkens Gjenmæle ("The Church's 1698, became Bishop of Bergen in 1748, and Reply," 1825), strongly opposed its teaching, and laid down truer principles of Christian belief, and sounder views of the nature of the Church. This caused a sensation; Grundtvig (who had not spared his opponent) was fined 100 rix-dollars, and the songs and hymns which he had written for the coming celebration of the tenth centenary of Northern Christianity were forbidden to be used. On this he resigned his post at St. Saviour's, or rather was forced to quit it by a sentence of suspension which was pronounced in 1826, and under which he was kept for 13 years. He took the opportunity of visiting England in 1829, 30, and 31, and consulting its libraries, mainly with a view to a further insight into Northern antiquities, and to help his studies in the early English tongue. His edition of Cynewulf's beautiful poem of the Phenix from the Codex Exoniensis,—the Anglo-Saxon (secalled) text, with a preface in Danish, and a fri Fordanskning (free rendering in Danish), published in 1840,—is a result of this journey Tired of his long and enforced loisure. silence, his numerous friends and admirers proposed to erect a church for him, and form themselves into an independent congregation, but this was not permitted. He was allowed, however, to hold an afternoon service in the German church at Christianshavn. There he preached for eight years, and compiled and wrote his hymn-book, Sang-Värk til den Danske Kirke ("Song-work for the Danish Church"). He still worked on towards his object of raising the Christian body to which he belonged from the condition of a mere state establishment to the dignity of a gospel-teaching national church. In 1839 (the year of the death of King Frederik vi., and the accession of his cousin Christiern VIII.) the suspension was removed, and he was appointed chaplain of the hospital Varton, a position which he held till his death. In 1863 the king (Frederik vil.) conferred on him the honorary title of bishop. The good old man died suddenly, in his 89th year, on Sopt. 2, 1872, having officiated the day before. Kingo is the poet of Easter, and Brorson of Christmas, so Grundtvig is spoken of as the poet of Whitsuntide.

6. With Grundtvig we cannot but join the prose writer and poet Bernhard Severin Ingemann. He was b., he tells us in his Leonetshog (an autobiography of his first seventeen years), at the parsonage of Torkildskrup in Falster, in 1789, the youngest of five sons, The death of his father in 1800 compelled the family to leave the parsonage for Slagelse, where he was sent to school. This he left in 1806 to enter at Copenhagen. A second autoblography, Tilbageblik paa mit Liv og min Forfatter-Periode fra 1811-1837 ("A retrospect of my life and my time of authorship from 1811 to 1837"), gives us an account of twenty-five years more. It was intended as a preface to an edition of his works which was soon forthcoming. It describes a quiet gentle life of continued literary occupation, begun by an interesting tour in 1818-19 through France, Germany, Switzerland and Italy. Twenty-five years more passed, and the good man went to his rest in 1862 by a calm and painless decease, smidst the deepest regrets of all who knew him.

7. The impulse given by Grundtvig could not be resisted. In 1855 a clerical synod at Roeskilde (the Canterbury of Denmark) drew up and brought out a new Salmebog, which has been sanctioned for general use. It appeared as Salmebogen til Kirke-og Hus-Andagt. ("Hymnbook for Church and Hone Worship"). The revision was intrusted to Ingernann. It is founded upon the old book of Kingo, but contains many new hymne, chiefly by Brorson, Grundtvig, Ingernann, and C.F. Boye; and has already reached the dignity of an Appendix, to which those authors contribute about four-fifths.

iii. The Norwegians have in the main followed the lead of Denmark in their hymns. Kingo's book has been the authorized hymnary, or the basis at least of those in use. But they have allowed themselves considerable freedom, and Pontoppidan's, Guldberg's, and still later on, Hauge's revisions of it have been used largely in Norway. To give an instance, one of these popular hymn-books (Christiania, 1844) is Kingo's, or rather Guldberg's, book in the main, but the language is modernized. It is called, like Balle's, Evangelisk-christelig Prolinebog ("Evangelical Christian Hymnbook"), and has bound up with it, as is the case with most of the Swedish and Danish hymn-books, the Collects, Epistics, and Gospels, a series of prayers for various occasions, and the history of the Passion, as given in the official prayer-book, or Alter-Bog. A note on the title-page declares it to be "aftrykt efter original-Udgavon og udgivet efter Foranstaltning at det Kongelige Departement for Kirke-og Undervissings-Væsenet" ("printed according to the original edition...and published according to direction of the royal department for the conduct of the Church and education").

2. The book now most generally used throughout Norway was authorized in 1869 under the title of Kirke-Salme-Bogen ("The Clurch Hymn-book"). It was edited, on the basis of existing books, by Magnus B. Land stad, a clergyman b. in 1802 and still surviving. He served in several different cures, and always had a deep interest in church psalmody. One of the most popular home hymn-books is that pub. in 1851 by Johan Nicolai Frantzen, a clergyman of Christiania (1808–68), and called Christelige Padmer til Husandagt og Skolebrug ("Christian hymns for domestic worship and the use of Schools"). But there is still a great desire in Norway for a general Salmebog for Kirke og Iljem ("Hymn-book for Church and Home").

iv. Isoland followed, but slowly, in the track of Doumark. For a long time the hymn-book consisted of translations of a few of the earlier hymns of Martensön's collection: it was published under the name of Graduale, which was explained to mean Messu-saungs bitk ("The Mass-song book"). The last edition of the Graduale appeared with the name of Bishop Magnusseu, in 1773. Since that time the Danish books have been used, in the Icelandic longuage. One of the last, if not the last, of the attempts to follow the lead of 1855, is the hymn-book of Thordersen (Repkjavik, 1861), entitled Kyr videstir vid kina evangelisku sälmabök ("New contributions to the evangelical psalm-book").

v. Conclusion. The hymnody of the Scandipaylan North is decidedly subjective in its character, rather than objective. The earlier hymns, certainly, were doctrinal and invocative, but the later are, to a great extent, expressive of religious sentiments, hopes, and fears, rather than of definite objective faith and worship. That we might borrow with advantage from our kinsfolk is not to be doubted. Mr. G. Tait's Hymns of Denmark, (1868) especially, supplies a store from which to cull flowers for transplantation into our own "spiritual rose-garden." The similarity of the Northern Lutheran ritual and Church constitution to ours,-the fact, in short, that so much that is Catholic has survived the Reformation among them, - makes religious thought in the North to run, to some extent, on the same lines with our own. On the other hand, they are theroughly Erastian and Lutheran. Beligion is a State department, and Luther is the guide rather than primitive Catholicity. Un-der these circumstances we find, unavoidably, a want of backbone in their Church songs now and then. But there is much affinity between Swedish and English devotion, as will be seen in the few translations which are available for English use in Gilbert Tait's Hymns of Denmark, 1868, already mentioned, and his Hymns of Sweden rendered into English; three renderings of Swedish hymns by Mrs. Charles, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858; Baring-Gould's "Through the night of doubt and sorrow," and a few others. The following is a specimen, from the Danish poet Brorson, of the style of hymn which largely prevails in the North :-

"Den Grund hvorpaa jeg bygge Er Christus og Kans Ded; I Josu Pines Skygge Er Sjælens Hvile sid: Der har jeg fundet IAvet; Selv er jeg intet værd; Hvad Jesus mig har givet Gjör mig for God saa kjær. * Ei Annders Kraft og Even, Ei Fyrstendömmers Magt, Ei hvad man veed at nævne Af Haanhed og Foragt, Ei Stort og ei det Ringe,
Ei Sortig eller Savn,
Ei Döden selv skal tvinge
Mig udaf Jeau Favn!"

This may be rendered:—

"I build on one foundation, On Cirist Who died for me; Sheltered by Jesu's passion My soul at rest shall be: "Its there the life of heaven Poor worthless I obtain; Through what my Lord has given The Father's love I gain. " No craft or deep invention, No princely power or might. Nor aught that man can mention Of mocking or despite. Nor weak, nor strong endeavour, Nor want's or sorrow's smart, Nor death itself, shall sever My soul from Jesu's Heart."

The plaintiveness of a large proportion of these Northern hymns is very marked, whilst the strength of their writers' personal faith is undeniable. The blending of the two, as in the above illustration, often produces a most [R. T.] pleasing result.

Schade, Johann Caspar, s. of Jakob Schad or Schade, pastor and decan at Kühn-dorf, near Suhl, in Thuringia, was b. at Kühndorf, Jan. 18, 1666. He entered the University of Leipzig in 1685 (where he became a great friend of A. H. Francke), and then went to Wittenberg, where he graduated w.a. in 1687. On his return to Leipzig he began to hold Bible readings for the students. This soon raised ill-will against him among the Leipzig professors, and when, in 1690, he was invited to become discouns at Würzen, near Leipzig, they interfered and prevented his settlement. In 1691 he was invited to become diaconus of St. Nicholas's church, at Berlin (where P. J. Spener had just become probst. or chief pastor), and entered on his work there on the 2nd S. in Advent. In his later years he raised a storm of feeling against himself by refusing to hear private confessions. The Elector of Brandenburg, in order to end the strife, appointed him, in June 1698, paster at Dorenburg, near Helberstadt. Meantime he was seized with a fever, which ended fatally at Berlin, July 25, 1098 (Koch, iv. 222, 468; Wetzel, iii, p. 23, &c.).

Wetzel, iii. p. 23, &c.).

Schade was a most carnest and faithful pastor and preacher, and specially interested himself in the children of his flock. As a hymn-writer be was not particularly prolific, but of his 45 hymns a good meny passed into the German hymn-books of the period. His hymns are clear and simple in style, are composed in a considerable variety of metres, and are full of fervent love to the Lord Jesus, and of seal for a living and practical Christianity; but they are frequently spun out, or are too subjective. A number appeared in A. Lapping's Andichtig singender Christiansungle, Wosel, 1692-94, and in the Geistreicher G. B., Halle, 1687. They were collected and postbumously pub. as Fasciculus Limitonum, Bastit susammen getragene geistliche Lieder, &c., Cüstin, s. D. [1699]. Ctistrin, 3. p. [1699].

Those of Schade's hymns which have passed into English are:

- i. Auf! hinauf! zu deiner Freude. Fuith. pub. in the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 402, in 6 st. of 8 l.; repeated in 1699, as above, p. 83. Recently, as No. 403, in the Unc. L. S., 1851. The trs. in C. U. are:—
- 1. Up! yes upward to thy gladness Rise, my heart. This is a good and full tr., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 171, repeated in full in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872, and, omitting st. v., in Kennedy, 1863. In her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 157, it is slightly altered, and st. iii. is omitted.
- 2. Rise, my soul! with joy and gladness, A tr. of at. i., ii., vi., by F. C. C., as No. 233 in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864.

Other tre. are:-

(1) "Look up, my soul, to Christ thy joy," by J. B. Holmes, as No. 1069 in the Supp. of 1808 to the Moravian H. Bk., 1801 (1896, No. 600), repeated in Ep. Lyle's Call., 1860. (2) "Upwards, upwards to thy gladness," by Miss Dans, 1867, p. 13. (3) "Up yes upward to thy gladness, Rise, my soul," by W. Reid in bis Praise Bk., 1812.

ii. Maine Seel ermuntre dieb. Passiontide. In the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 215, in 15 st. of 6 l., repeated in 1699, as above, p. 9, entitled "Contemplation of the suffering of Christ and surrender of His will." In the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 106. Tr. as, "Rouse thyself, my Soul, and dwell." In the Suppl. to Gor. Psalmody, ed. 1765, p. 20, and in Scleet Hys. from Ger. Psalmody, Tranquebar, 1754, p. 31.

iii. Meine Seele willt du ruhn. This hymn, frequently ascribed to Schade, is noted under Schoffler, J., p. 1007, ii. [J. M.]

Schaff, Philip, D.D., LL.D., was b. at Chur, Switzerland, Jan. 1, 1819. He studied at the Universities of Tübingen, Halle, and Berlin. In 1843 he was appointed a Professor in the German Reformed Theological Seminary at Mcrcersburg, Pennsylvania, U.S.A., and in 1870 Professor of Sacred Literature in the Union Seminary, New York. As translator, author, and editor, Dr. Schaff holds high rank, both in Great Britain and America. The various Histories and Eccyclopedias which he has edited are standard works. His knowledge of hymnology is extensive, and embraces hymns in many languages and of all ages, his speciality being German hymnody. The hymnological works which he has edited alone, or jointly with others, are:—

(1) Deutsches Gesangbuch, 1860; (2) Christ in Song, a most valuable collection of original English and American hymns, and translated hymns, N.Y. 1868, Lond. 1870; (3) Hys. and Songs of Praise for Public and Social Worzhy, 1874, in which he was assisted by Bowwell D. Hitchcuck, and Zachary Eddy, (4) Library of Religious Poetry, 1881, of which A. Gilman was joint editor.

Dr. Schaff has not composed any original hymns. His irs, from the Latin are meritorious, and may be found through the Index of Authors, &c. He d. Oct. 20, 1893. [J. J.]

Schalling, Martin, a of Martin Schalling, sometime pastor at Strassburg (after 1543, pastor at Weitersweiler, near Saarbrücken), was b. at Strassburg, April 21, 1532. He matriculated, in 1550, at the University of Wittenberg, where he became a favourite pupil of Melanchthon, and a great friend of Nicolaus Seinceker (p. 1058, il.). After taking his n.a., he continued, for a short time, at Wittenberg as lecturer; and then became, in 1554, diaconus at Regensburg. The Superintendent at Regensburg, at that time, was Nicolaus Gallus, a strong partisan of Matthias Flach; and as Schalling thought it his duty to preach against Flacianism he had to give up his post in 1558; but soon after was appointed disconus at Amberg, in Bavaria (Oberpfalz). When, in 1568, after the Elector Friedrich III., of the Palatinate, had adopted Calvinistic opinions as to order of service, &c., all the Lutheran clergy who would not con-form were expetled. Schalling had to leave Amberg. But as Duke Ludwig, the son of the Elector, continued a Lutheran, he allowed Schelling to minister to the Lutherans at Vilseck, near Amberg. After Ludwig became Regent of the Oberpfalz he recalled Schalling to Amberg, in 1576, as court preacher and superintendent; and when, after his father's death, on Oct. 24, 1576, he became Elector of the Pfalz, he appointed Schalling as General-Superintendent of the Oberpfalz, and also court preacher at Heidelberg. But when the clergy of the Oberpfalz were pressed to sign the Formula of Concord, Schalling hesitated to subscribe, holding that it dealt too barshly with the followers of Melanchthon. For this action he was banished from the court at Heidelberg; and after being confined to his house at Amberg, from 1580 to March 1583, he was finally deprived of his offices. Thereafter he stayed for some time at Altdorf, but was appointed, 1585, pastor of St. Mary's church in Nürnberg, where he remained until blindness compelled him to retire. He d. at Nürnberg, Dec. 19 (29), 1608 (Koch, ii. 282, &c.)

Though the above notice might seem to indicate that Schalling was an ardent polemic, yet this was not so. He was naturally a moderate man, and a man of peace; but during the period of 1550 to 1600, Protestant Germany was rent asunder by all manner of controversies, in which hardly any one with a conscience or an opinion could avoid being involved. Only one hymn by him is known, but that justly ranks among the classic hymns of Germany. It is;—

Herzlich Lieb hab ich dich, O Herr. For the Dying. This was, apparently, written about 1567, and was 1st pub. in Kurtze und sonderliche Newe Symbola etlicher Fürsten, &c. Nürnberg, 1571; and thence in Wackernagel, iv., p. 788, in 3 st. of 12 l. It is also in the Uno. L. S., 1851, No. 561. Lauxmann, in Moch, viii., p. 265, says of it: "This hymn, 'a prayer to Christ, the consolation of the soul in life and in death,' after Psalms xviii. and lxxiii., is a treasure bequeathed to the church from the heart of Schalling;" and adds, that it was a favourite hymn of P. J. Spener, who sung it every Sunday evening; of Duke Ernst IIL of Sachse-Gotha; of C. F. Gellert, and of many others. The fine melody generally set to it, is from Bernhard Schmidt's Zwey Bücher einer neuen Künstlichen Tabulatur auff Orgel und Instrument, Strassburg, 1577; was embodied by J. S. Bach, in his Passion music according to St. John; and is in the C. B. for England, 1863 (see below). The trs. in C. U. are :-

1. Thes, Lord, I love with sacred Aws. In full, by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psalmodia Garmanica, pt. ii., 1725, p. 51 (1732, p. 124); repeated in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 312. In the 1801, and later eds. of the Moravian H. Bk. (1886, No. 448), trs. of st. iii., vi., of E. Neumeister's "Herr Jesu Christ, mein hüchstes Gut" (p. 798, 1.), were substituted for Schalling's Ii., iii. The 3rd st. of Jacobi's version, beginning, "Lord, let Thy blest angelic bands," was also given, as a separate hymn, in the 1754 and later Moravian H. Bks. (1886, No. 1248).

2. My heart, C Lord, its love on Thee. A good and full tr., by A. T. Russell, as No. 185, in his Ps. 5 Hys. 1851.

8. With all my heart I leve Thee, Lord, A good and full tr., by H. G. de Bunsen, for Mercer's C. P. and H. Bk., ed. 1857, No. 105. In Mercer's Oxford ed., 1864, No. 198, st. i. was omitted; and it thus began, "My body, soul, and all I have,"

4. Lord, all my heart is fixed on Thee. A good and full tr., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger. 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 164. Altered to the original metre in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 119.

Other tra. are:-

(1) "I love Thee, Lord, with love sincere." By Dr. H. Mills, 1846, p. 80 (1856, p. 112). (2) "O Lord: I love Thee from my heart." In Schaffs Christ in Song, 1869, 609. (3) "Lord, Thee I love with all my heart." By R. Massie, in the Day of Rest, 1877. [J. M.]

Scheffler, Johann (Angelus Silesius), was b. in 1624 at Breslau in Silesia. His father, Stanislaus Scheffler, was a member of the Polish nobility, but had been forced to have his fatherland on account of his adherence to Lutherunism, and had then settled in Breslau. The son was thus educated as a strict Lutheran. After passing through the St. Elisabeth's Gymnasium at Breslau, he matriculated at the University of Strassburg, on May 4, 1643, as a student of medicine. In the next year he went to Leyden, and in 1647 to Padua, where he graduated PH. D. and M.D. on July 9, 1648. Thereafter he returned to Silesia, and, on Nov. 3, 1649, was appointed private physician, at Oela, to Duke Sylvius Nimrod of Württemberg-Oels. The Duke was a staunch Lutheran, and his court preacher, Christoph Freitag, administered the ceclesiastical affairs of the district according to the strictest Lutheran churchly orthodoxy. Schoffler, who in Holland had become acquainted with the writings of Jakob Böhme, and had become a personal friend of Abraham von Frankenberg, the editor of Böhme's works, soon found that the spiritual atmosphere of Oels did not suit him. His own leanings at this time were distinctly to Mysticism and Separatism. He was at no pains to conceal his sentiments, and withdrew himself from public worship, from confession, and from the Holy Communion. When he wished to pub-lish his poems, and submitted them for this purpose to Freitag, he was refused permission to print them on the ground of their mystical tendencies. He resigned his post in the end of 1652, and went to Breslau. Here he became acquainted with the Jesuits, who in that place were carnect students of the mystical works of Tauler (q.v.), and through them was introduced to the study of the medieval mystics of the Roman Catholic Church. On June 12, 1653, he was formally received into the Roman Catholic communion, and at his confirmation on that day at St. Matthias's Church in Breslau, he took the name of Angelus, probably after a Spanish mystic of the 16th cent named John ab Angelia. On March 24, 1654, the Emperor Ferdinand III, conferred on him the title of Imperial Court Physician, but this title was purely honorary, and Scheffler remained still at Breslau. On Feb. 27, 1661, he entered the order of St. Francis; on May 21, 1661, was ordained priest at Neisse in Silesia, and in 1664 was appointed Rath and Hofmarschall to his friend Sebastian von Rostock, the newly created Prince Bishop of Breslau. After the Bishop's death in 1671 Scheffler rotired to the monastery of St. Matthias in Breslau, where he d. July 9, 1677, from a wasting sickness, during which he used this charac-teristic prayer, "Jesus and Christ, God and Man, Bridegroom and Brother, Peace and Joy, Sweetness and Pleasure, Refuge and Redemption, Heaven and Earth, Eternity and Time, Love and All, receive my soul." (Koch, iv. 3; Goedeke's Grundrias, vol. iii., 1887, p. 197; Memoir in Dr. D. A. Rosenthal's ed. of Schoffler's Sämmtliche Poetische Werke, 2 vols., Regensburg, 1862, &c.)

Of Scheffler, as a Convert and as a Controversialist, not much need be said. He certainly became more Roman than the Romans; and in his more than 50 controversial tractates, shows little of the sweetness and repose for which some have thought that he left the Lutheran church. In his Reclesiologia, pub. at Glatz in 1877 [Brit. Mus. has the 2nd ed., pub. at Oberammergan and Kampten in 1735], he collected 29 of these treatises, of which e.g. No. 34 is entitled, "The Lutheran and Calvinistic Idol of the Understanding exhibited, isid bare, as well as the Likeness of the True God. In which also, at the same time, the attacks and objections of adversaries are repelled. I over viii. 4, Idolum pihil est, an idol is nothing."

At an early age Scheffler had begun to write poems, and some of these occasional pieces were printed in 1641 and 1642. His most famous non-hymnological work is his Getstreiche Sinn- und Schlussreime, &c., pub. at Vienna in 1657, but better known by the title prefixed in the 2nd ed. pub. at Glatz in 1675, viz. the Cherubinischer Wandersmann. [Both eds. in the Brit. Mus.]

The let ed. contains five books, and a supplement of 10 sonnete; and in the 2nd ed. a sixth book is added, which includes these 10 sonnets. The work concists of Aphorisms, the majority being in two Alexandrian rhyming lines, often of considerable beauty and depth; throughout breaking the sprint of Mysticlam, and no seldom verging very nearly on Panthelson. A few of those aphorisms have been in by Miss Wintworth, in her Christian Singers, 1869, pp. 262-251; and by E. Vitalia Scherb, in the Schaff-Gilman Library of Ret. Poetry, 1881.

Scheffler's latest poetical work was the Sinnliche Beschreibung der vier letzten Dinge, zu heilsamen Schröhen und Auffmunterung aller Menschen inn Druck gegeben. Mit der himmlischen Procession vermehrt, &c. Schweidnitz, 1675. [Brit. Mus.]

This is a 2nd ed., but no copy of the 1st ed. seems to have survived. It consists of poems, written in a somewhat converly realistic style, on Death (20 st.), Last Judgment (60 st.), Hell (73 st.), and Heaven (157 st.), Then follows, at the back of p. 119, the hymn, Mehr als die Augen lieb ich dich, with the note that it ought to have been added to the 1668 ed. of the Beilige Secientate.

Scheffler's most important hymnological work is his Heilige Seelenlust, oder gesitliche Hirten-Lieder, der in ihren Jesum verliebten Psyche, gesungen von Johann Angelo Silosio, und von Herrn Georgio Josepho mit aussbündig schönen Melodeyen geziert, &c.

schönen Melodegen gestert, &c.,
Of this the let ed. appeared at Brealau, apparently in 1681, in three books, with Hymns 1-123, and a fourthesparately paged—book, with Hymns 1-123, and a fourthesparately paged—book, with 32 hymns, apparently also at Breelau, 1687. In the 3nd ed., pub. at Brealau in 1686, the paging and numbering are consecutive; and a fifth book is added, with Hymns 168-205. [Both eds. in Royal Library, Breelau; 2nd ed. in Bris. Mus.] The first three books form a cycle of hymns, principally on the person and work of Our Lord, arranged according to the Christian Year, from Advent to Whitemutida, and seem mostly to have been written before Scheffler left the Lutheran 1683 to 1636, and those of the fifth book between 1636 and 1568. In the first three books he is most clearly under the influence of his predecessors. That is, so far as the style and form are concerned, he was greatly influenced by the Pasiorals of the Nürnberg Pegnits Shepherda, and of Friedrich von Spec (q.w.); and in the substance of his poems—their longings for mystical union with Christ, and their clinging love to the Savieur—he was influenced on the one side by Böhme, and on the other by the carnest inner religions life which he had found in Holland. In his later hymns the tone is more manly, and the defects and excesses of his earlier style have, in great measure, disappeared.

have, in great measure, disappeared.

Scheffler's hymna were gladly received by the Lutheran Church as a welcome addition to the store of "Jesus Hymns," but many long passed current as annonymous; the L.A., for Johann-Aspeita, being often interpreted as Incerti Autoria, and vice versa. Through the Nurnberg G. B., 1046; Freylinghaumen's G. B., 1704 and 1114; Poret's G. B., 1713; and Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, a large number came into use among the Lutherans, more indeed than among the Roman Catholics. They were great favourities among the Moravians, after Zinzendorf had included 79 of them in his Christ-Catholiacher Singe-und Bot-Bücklein, 1727; and, unfortunately, precisely the worst were selected for imitation, so that Scheffler has the doubtful honour of being the model of the spiritual-fieshly productions which disfigured the Moravian hymn-books between 1740 and 1755.

Judging Scheffler's hymns as a whole one must give them a very high place in German hymnody. Only a small proportion of the hymns bear a distinctively Roman Catholic character. Of the rost, after setting on one side those in which Christ is set forth as the Bridegroom of the soul, with an excessive use of the imagery of Canticles; and those disfigured by the mannerisms of the Pastoral School, there remain a large number which are hymns of the first rank. These finer hymns are the work of a true post, almost perfect in style and in beauty of rhythm, concise and profound; the fruits indeed it may be said of Mysticism, but of Mysticism chastened and kept in bounds by deep reverence and by a true and fervent love to the Saviour. Scheffler holds a high place in the first rank of German sacred poets, and is much the finest of the Post-Reformation Roman Catholic hymn-writers. A complete ed. of his poetical works appeared, in two vola., at Rogensburg, 1862 (see above).

A number of Scheffler's hymns are noted under their own first lines (880 Index of Authors and Translators). Two, which are trs. from the Latin, are noted at p. 70, ii., and p. 826, ii. The rest, which have passed into English, are as foliows.

î. Ach Gott, was hat vor Herrlichkeit. God's Majesty. 1st pub as No. 110 in Bk. iii., 1657, of his Heiling Sceleniust (Works, 1862, L. p. 185), in 0 st. of 8 l., entitled, "She [the soul] rejoices herself on the glory of Jesus." In the Herrnhut G. B., 1735, No. 67. The tr. in C. U. is:—

of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754

It may be added that in some English books Schoffler appears as a composer of hymn-tunes. This is however a mistake, for the inclodies in the Heilige Seelenlust are, as the title distinctly says, by Georg Joseph, a musician living at that time in Breslau.

Schein, Johann Hermann, s. of Hieronymus Schein, pastor at Grünhain, near Annaberg, in Saxony, was b. at Grünbein, Jan. 20, 1586. He matriculated at the University of Leipzig in 1607, and studied there for four years. Thereafter he acted for some time as a private tutor, including two years with a family at Weissenfels. On May 21, 1615, he was appointed Capellmeister, at the court of Duke Johann Ernst, of Sachse-Weimar; and in 1616 he became canter of St. Thomas's Church, and music director at Leipzig, in succession to Seth Calvisius (d. Nov. 24, 1615). This post he held till his death, at Leipzig.

Nov. 19, 1630. (Bode, p. 411; Monatchefte. für Musikgeschichte, 1871, p. 26, &c.)

Schein was one of the most distinguished musicians of his time, both as an original composer, and as a harmoniser of the works of others. As a hymn-writer he was not so prolife, or so noteworthy. Most of his hymns were written on the deaths of his children or friends, e.g. on seven of his children, and on his first wife. They appeared mostly in broadcheet form, and were included, along with his original melodies, in his Cantional oder Getang-Buch Augustyliacker Confession, Leipzig, 1627; 2nd ed., 1645. [Both in Wernigerode Library.]

Those of Schein's hymns which have passed into English are:-

i. Macha mit mir, Gott, nach deiner Gut. For the Dying. 1st pub., as a broadsheet, at Leipzig, 1628. as a Trost-Liedlein à 5 (i.e. for 5 voices), [Berlin Library.] The words, the melody, and the five-part setting, are all by Schein. was written for, and first used at, the funeral, on Dec. 15, 1628, of Margarita, wife of Caspar Werner, a builder and town councillor at Leipzig, and a churchwarden of St. Thomas's. It is in 6 st. of 6 l.; the initial letters of il. 1, 3, in st. i.-iv., forming the name Margarita; and the W of st. v. l. I standing for Werner. In Schein's Cantional, 1645, No. 303 (marked as Trost-Liedlein, Joh. Herm. Scheins, & 5), and later hymn-books, as e.g. the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 830, st. vi. was omitted. It is Schein's finest production, and one of the best German hymns for the sick and dying. Tr. as:-

Deal with me, God, in mercy now. This is a good and full tr., by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 191, set to Schein's molody of 1628.

if. Hein Gott und Herr, ach sei nicht fern. For the Dying. 1st pub., with his name, in his Cantional, 1627, No. 262, in 9 st. of 6 l. The initial letters of the stanzas give the name Margarita, probably one of the daughters who predeceased him. It is included, in 5 st., in the 1648, and later eds., of Crüger's Praxis; and recently, in full, in von Tucher's Schatz des evang. Kirchengesangs, 1848, No. 555; and reduced to 6 st. in Layriz's Kern des deutschen Kirchenlieds, 1844, No. 421. The tr. in C. U. is:-

My Lord and God, go not away, A good tr. of st. i., ii., iv., v., vii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 254, in his Ps. & Hys., 1851. [J. M.]

Schenk, Heinrich Theobald, s. of Simon Schenk, pastor at Heidelbach, on the Schwalm, near Alsfeld, Hesse, was b. at Heidelbach, April 10, 1656. He entered the Padegogium at Giessen, in 1670, and then pursued his studies at the University (M.A. 1676). In 1676 he returned to the Padagogium, as one of the masters; and was, from 1677 to 1689, "preceptor classicus." On Dec. 27, 1689, he was ordained as Town preacher and "definitor," at the Stadtkirche in Glessen. He d. at Giessen, April 11, and was buried there April 15, 1727. (F. W. Strieder's Hessische Gelehrten und Schriftsteller Geschichte, vol. x., Cassel, 1795, p. 10; MS. from Dr. Naumann, pastor primarius; and from Dr. Schiller, Gymnasial-director at Giessen. The registers at Giessen give the date of his funeral, but not of his death; but say, that at his death he was aged 71 years less 10 days, which would rather suggest April 21 as the date of his birth.) Only one hyma is known by him, but it is a hymn which is found in almost all recent German hymn-books; and, through tre., in many recent English collections. It is:-

Wer sind die vor Gottes Throne. Eternal Life. This is found in the Neu-vermehrtes Gesangbüchlein, Frankfurt-am-Main, 1719, No. 362, p. 341, in the "Anhang einiger Gesänge"; and is repeated in the Newest-und collständigste Frankfurter G. B., 1729, No. 568, in 20 st. of 6 l. In the Hesse-Darmstadt Kirchen G. B., 1733, No. 497, it is given, with a reference to Schenk as its author, and entitled, "On Rev. vii. 13-17." It is included in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1617, omitting st. vii., viii. It is a beautiful hymn on the Church Triumphant (i.-xiii.), and on the aspirations of the Church Militant to attain the same victorious glory. Tr. as :-

1. Who are these like stars appearing. By Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 89, being a very good tr. of st. i.-vi., ix.-xi... ziv,-xvil., xz. This has come into extensive use in the ceuto adopted in Alford's Ps. & Hys., 1844; and repeated in H. A. & M., 1861; being the trs. of st. i., iii.-v., ix. Other centos are found in Rorison's Hys. & Anthone, 1851, &c. Other forms may also be noted:-

(1) Let a multitude appearing. This, in T. Darling's Hys. for Ch. of England, 1874, is based on Miss Cox's st. i., iv., v., with two additional stanzes.

(2) Who are these in desailing brightness, (Bearing the victorious palm. This form, found, as Mo. 630, in the Baptist Ps. & Hys., 1858, is by George Rawson, with st. i., ill., based on Miss Cox's str. of st. iii., iv., In Mc. Rawson's Hys., Verses, & Chants, 1878, No. 56, it is rewritten, so as to tank as an original bymn: and there is written, so as to rank as an original hymn; and there it begins, "Who are these salvation singing."

In 1864 Miss Cox printed a revised text in her Hys. from the German, p. 91. This is found in a considerable variety of centos, in many English and American hymn-books; some following the text of 1864 throughout, and some partly reverting to the text of 1841. It is included, e.g. in the People's Hyl., 1867, Church Hys., 1871, Hyl. Comp., 1876, Bapt. Hyl., 1879, Thring's Coll., 1880 and 1882; and in America, in the Hys. & Songs of Praise, 1974, Laudes Domini, 1884, and others. In H. L. Hastings's Songs of Pilgrimage, 1886, it begins with st. iii., "Who are these in dazzling brightness, These in God's own truth arrayed.

2. Who are these in light adoring. By A. T. Russell, as No. 145 in his Ps. of Hys., 1851; being a tr. of st. i., iv., xi., xv.

3. Who are those before God's throne, What the crowned host I see. This is a good tr. of st. i.-vi., ix., x., xiv., xvii., xx., by Miss Wink-worth in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 207. Repeated, abridged, in Boardman's Sel., Philadelphia, 1861; Kennody, 1863; and the Sarum Hyl., 1868. In her C. B. for England, 1868, No. 77, Mise Winkworth repeated the trs. of st. i., ili., v., ix., x., xiv., xvii., altered, and beginning, "Who are those that, far before me."

Other tra are:

(1) "Who are those before God's throne, What the countless." By J. D. Burns, in the Family Treasury, 1859, pt. i., p. 307; and his Memoir & Remoiss, 1869, p. 267. (2) "Who are those round God's throne standard." By Miss Manington, 1863, p. 90. (3) "What is this heat that round the throne." By Miss Wayner, 1869, and p. 20. [J. M.]

Schirmer, Michael, s. of Michael Schirmer, inspector of wine casks at Leipzig, was b. at Leipzig, apparently, in July, 1606, his baptism being entered as on July 18, in the registers of St. Thomas's Church there. He matriculated at the University of Leipzig, at Easter, 1619, and graduated M.A. in 1680. In 1636 he was appointed subrector, and in 1651 conrector of the Greyfrians Gymnasium at Berlin. During his conrectorship the rectorship fell vacant several times, and each time, after he had officiated as prorector during the vacancy, a younger man than he was set over him (probably on account of Schirmer's feeble beaith) till, last of all, in May, 1668, the subrector was promoted over his head. In the same year Schirmer retired from office. The remainder of his life he spent in Berliu, where he pub., in the end of 1668, a version of the Aeneid in German Alexandrine verse, wrote various occasional poems, &c. He d. at Berlin, apparently on May 4, and was certainly buried there, in the churchyard of the Kloster Kirche, on May 8, 1673 (M. Michael Schirmer, &c., by Dr. J. F. Bachmann, Berlin, 1859; K. Goedeko's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 180; Koch, iii. 833, &c. Koch speaks of Schirmer as having been rector of the school at Freiberg in Saxony, and then pastor at Striegnitz on the Mulde, both between 1630 and 1686; and of his having been finally, just before his death, appointed archidiaconus at Freiberg. But for these statements there appears to be no evidence whatever. The Michael Schirmer who was rector at Freiberg, and on Feb. 7, 1672, was appointed archi-diaconus there, but d. at Freiberg on Oct. 25, 1672, was only b. on March 26, 1635. The rectorate at Freiberg was held by Johann Schellenberg from 1603 to 1642; and the pastorate at Striegnitz was held by Friedrich Hilner from 1623 to 1656).

Schirmer had many domestic and personal affictious to bear. His wife and his two children predeceased bim. The early part of his life in Bettin was spent and the distress caused by the Thirty Years War, during which Brandenburg, and Berlin itself, suffered greatly from pesitience and poverty. In 1644 a deep melancholy fell upon him, which lasted for five years; and something of the same kind seems to have returned to him for a time, after his wife's death, in Fab. 1667. Schirmer was crowned as a noce in 1637. His earlier productions was crowned as a poet in 1637. His earlier productions were mostly occasional pieces in German and Latin. In were mostly occasional pieces in German and Latin. In 1855 he pub., at Berlin. a metrical various of Ecclesionaticus as, Das Buck Jenus Strack, &c.; and in 1869, also as Berlin, a Scriptural play, which was acted by the echolars of the Gymnasium, and was entitled Der verfolgte Depoid, &c. He also pub., at Berlin, in 1689, versions of the Songa of the Old and New Instanant as, Militiche Lieder and Lehrppriche. The only compositions by him which have come into use as hymns, are those which he contributed to J. Crüger's Nesses solitions by him which have come into use as hymns, are those which he contributed to J. Crüger's Nesses solitions by pietatis meléca, Berlin, 1840; and to Crüger's Practic pietatis meléca, Berlin, 1840; and to Crüger's Practic pietatis meléca, Berlin, 1840; and co Crüger's Practic pietatis meléca, berlin, 1840; and co Crüger's Practic pietatis meléca, berlin, 1840; and to Crüger's Practic pietatis meléca, berlin, 1840; and post of them are still in use. They were reprinted by Dr. Bachmann, as above, nymn-cooks of the 17th cent., and most of them are still in use. They were reprinted by Dr. Bachmann, as above, pp. 71-81, together with various selections from his other poetical compositions. They are practical, clear, objective, churchly hymns, somewhat related to those of Gerhardt; and still more closely to those of Johann Hermann, from whom indeed Schirmer borrows a few

The only hymn by Schirmer which has passed into English is:-

O hellger Geist, kehr bei uns ein. Whitsuntide. 1st pub., 1640, as above, No. 75, in 7 st. of 10 l., entitled, "Another short hymn for Whitsuntide, M. Michael Schirmers." Repeated in the Crüger-Runge G. B., 1653, No. 162; and, recently, in the Uno. L. S., 1851, No. 179. It is a beautiful New Testament paraphrase of is. xi. 2. The third

1. O Rely Chest, descend, we pray. This is a somewhat free tr. of st. i., v., ii., iil., by W. M. Reynolds, as No. 794, in the Amer. Luth. Gen. Synod's Coll., 1850; and is repeated, with trs. of st. iv., vi., vii., added, as No. 103, in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880. The Ohio Hyl. also gives, as st. ii., a tr. of the recast of st. v., which was interpolated between st. i., ii. when the hymn was included in the Hannover G. B., 1657.

2. O Roly Spirit, enter in. This is a good tr.,

omitting st. ii., iv., by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 70. It was repeated, as No. 249, in the Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bk., 1868. In Dr. Thomas's Augustine H. Bk., 1866, it is Nos. 480, 481; No. 481 beginning, "O mighty Rock, O source of Life," which is the ir. of st. v. [J. M.] [J. M.]

Schlegel, Catharina Amalia Doro-thea you. Little is known of this lady. According to Koch, iv., p. 442, she was b. Oct. 22, 1697, and was "Stiftsfraulein" in the Evangelical Lutheran Stift (i.e. Protestant nunnery) at Cöthen. On applying to Cöthen, however, the present writer was assured that her name did not occur in the books of the Stift; and from the correspondence which she carried on in 1750-52, with Heinrich Ernst, Count Stolberg (p. 608, il.), it would rather seem that she was a lady attached to the little ducal court at Cöthen. (as. from Dr. Eduard Jacoba, Wernigerode, &c.) Further details of her life it has been impossible to obtain.

In the complete ed., 1744, of the Cothnische Lieder (see p. 50, il.), Nos. 30 and 13 in pt. 1.; and Nos. 3, 20, 26, 33, 43, 50, 84, in pt. il., are by her. In the marked copies, at Wernigerode, of the New Superstang prist-Scher Lieder, Wernigerode, 1782, the following hymna in that collection are ascribed to her, viz. —Nos. 13, 60, 90, 148, 208, 279, 329, 357, 373, 296, 448, 478, 520, 548, 651, 640, 683, 698, 739, 761.

The only one of her hymne which has passed into English is:-

stills, main Wills, dein Jesus hilft siegen. Cross and Consolation. A fine hymn on waiting for God. It appeared in 1732, as above, No. 689, in 6 st. of 6 l.; and is included in Knapp's Sr. L. S., 1837, No. 2249 (1865, No. 2017). The fr, in C. U. is :—

Be still, my soul !—the Lard is en thy sids. This is a good tr., omitting st. iii., by Miss Boethvick, in S. L. L., 2nd Ser., 1855, p. 37 (1884, p. 100). It has been included in Bp. Ryle's Cold., 1800; Southick Hyl., 1889; Consolien Proch. S. Rk., 1860; Charch Proiss. 1833, and others.

Prest. H. Bk., 1980; Church Praise, 1883, and others. [J. M.]

Schlegel, Johann Adolf, D.D., s. of Dr. Johann Friedrich Schlegel, Appellationsrath at Meissen, in Saxony, was b. at Meissen, Sept. 17, 1721. After passing through the famous school at Pforta (Schulpforta), near Naumburg, he studied, from 1741 to 1746, at the University of Leipzig, where he became acquainted with Cramer, Gellert, and Klopstgock, and was one of the principal contributom to the Bremer Beitrage (Neue Beyträge rum Vergnügen des Verstandes und Witzes). In 1746 he became a private tutor at Strehla, in Saxony, and then returned to Leipzig, where he occupied himself in literary work, until he went, in 1748, to live with his friend Cramer at Creliwitz, near Lutzen. He remained at Crellwitz till 1751, when he was appointed a master in his old-school at Pforta, and also diaconus of the church there. 1754 he became chief pastor of the Holy stanza is partly based on st. vii. of J. Heermann's Trinity church at Zorbst, and also professor "Wir wissen nicht, Herr Zebaoth." Tr., as: — of Theology and Metaphysics in the Academia

Gymnasium in that town. He removed to l Hannover in 1759, as pastor of the Markt Kirche. In 1775 he was removed to the Neustadt Church there, as chief pastor, and also as Consistorial rath and Superintendent. While retaining his pastorate at Hannover, he was also appointed, in 1782, as General Superintendent of the district of Hoya. In 1787 he exchanged this for the General Superintendentship of the Principality of Kalenberg. The same year he received the degree of n.n. at the Jubice Festival of the University of Göttingen. He d., of fever, at Hannover, Sept. 16, 1793 (Heerwagen, i., p. 214 ; Jördens's Lexikon, iv., p. 521 ; Koch, vi., 217; MB. from Pastor A. Kranold, Hannover).

Schlegel was a most prolific writer, though to the literary world at large the names of his sons, August Wilhelm and Friedrich von Schlegel, are better known. He was one of the most celebrated preachers of his time, and the author of many volumes of sermons. His hymns and the author of many volumes of sermons, ris symms suited the tasts of the Rationalistic period, and were exceedingly popular in the end of the 18th cent., but have now, in great measure, passed out of use. Many of them were merely polished and weakened versions of, or were founded upon, earlier hymns. In his strictly original hymns, he does not at all equal either feller or Klopstock. His hymns appeared in the following collections. collections:-

collections:—
(1) Sammlung geistlicher Gesänge zur Beförderung fer Erbauung, Leipzig, 1766; 2nd ed., revised and enlarged, Leipzig, 1772. (2) Zueite Sammiung, Leipzig, 1772. (4) Fernischte Gedichte, 2 vois., Hannover, 1787 and 1789 [1, 2, 4, in Brill, Mus.; 3 and 2nd ed. of 1 in Hamburg Library.] He edited, and contributed to, the 1792 Appx. to the Hannover G. E., 1740.

One of Schlegel's hymns is a tr. of, and is noted under "Veni Creator Spiritus." Another is noted under Gellert, C. F., No. ix. (p. 407, ii.). The others which have passed into English are:-

i. Wie herrlich strahlt der Morgenstern. Love to Christ. 1st pub. in 1766, as above, p. 112, in 7 st. of 11 l., and entitled, "Longing after union with Jesus, on the model of the old hymn, Wie schön leuchtet der Morgensteru." It is a recast of Nicolai's hymn (see p. 808, ii.), but so thorough as to be almost independent of it. It was included in Zollikofer's G. B., Leipzig, 1766, No. 404; in the Hamburg G. B., 1842, No. 450, &c. The tra. in C. U. are :-

1. How brightly beams the Morning Star! This is a good tr., omitting st. iv., vii., by Miss Wink-worth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 36.

2. How brightly shines the Morning Star ! What eye desories it from afar. A good tr., omitting st. vii., contributed by J. M. Sloan to J. H. Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865, No. 282, and repeated, omitting st. iii., iv., in Wilson's Songs of Zion, 1878. Mr. Sloan recast the trs. of st. i., ii., v., vi., for the Free Church H. Bk., 1882; and this form is repeated in Church Praise, 1883. In Laudes Domini, N.Y., 1884, the text of 1882 is given with the added st., "Rejoice ye heavens," from Mercer's variation of Jacobi's tr. from Nicolai (see p. 807, 1.).

Schmidt, Johann Eusebius, s. of Johann Jakob Schmidt, postor at Hohenfelden, near Erfurt, was b. at Hohenfelden, Jan. 12, 1670. He matriculated at the University of Jens in the autumn of 1688, and in 1691 went to Erfurt to attend lectures by Breitlaupt and Francke. Part of 1692 he spent in travelling in North Germany, and during the years 1693-96 he was mostly employed in private tuition at Gotha. On the 12th S. ofter Trinity, 1697, he began work at Siebleben, near Gotha, as substitute (curate in charge), and on the 4th S. in Advent, 1698, as pastor there. He d. at Siebleben, Dec. 25, 1745, with the character of "An edifying teacher in his parish, a good example to his flock, and a methodical man in his office." (G. G. Brückner's Kirchen und Schulenstaat, vol. ili. pt. iv. p. 59, Gotha, 1761, &c.).

p. 59, trottes, 1761, &C.).

Schmidt's hymns were contributed to Freylinghausen's Gestreiches G. B., 1704, and Neues Geistreiches G. B., 1714. In the latter Freylinghausen prints as a supplement (Zugabe) 17 so-called "Pasims for Festivals," being compositions in Ode or Fasim form and unrhymed, remarking in his preface that the author of these (i.a. Schmidt), had written similar compositions for all the Sundays in the year. Of his hymns in rhyme (4, let pub. 1704; 21, 1st pub. 1714), some have attained considerable popularity, being of moderate length, good in style, thoughtful and interesting.

Schmolck, Benjamin, s. of Martin Schmolek, or Schmoleke, Lutheran pastor at Brauchitzehdorf, near Liegnitz in Silesia, was b. at Brauchitzehdorf, Dec. 21, 1672. He entered the Gymnasium at Lauban in 1688, and spent five years there. After his return home he preached for his father a sermon which so struck the patron of the living that he made Benjamin an allowance for three years to enable him to study theology. He matriculated, at Michaelmas, 1698, at the University of Leipzig, where he came under the influence of J. Olearius, J. B. Carpzov, and others, and throughout his life retained the character of their teaching, viz. a warm and living practi-cal Christianity, but Churchly in tone and not Pietistic. In the autumn of 1697, after completing his studies at Leipzig (during his last year there he supported himself mainly by the proceeds of occasional poems written for wealthy citizens, for which he was also crowned as a poet), he returned to Branchitzchdorf to help his fisther, and, in 1701, was ordained as his assistant. On Feb. 12, 1702, he married Anna Rosina, dan. of Christoph Rehwald, merchant in Lauban (see No. zvii. below); and in the end of the same year was appointed disconus of the Friedenskirche at Schweidnitz in Silesia. As the result of the Counter-Reformation in Silesia, the churches in the principality of Schweidnitz had been taken from the Lu-therans, and for the whole district the Peace of Westphalia (1648) allowed only one church (and that only of timber and clay, without tower or bells), which the Lutherans had to build at Schweidnitz, outside the walls of the town; and the three clergy attached to this church had to minister to a population scattered over some thirty-six villages, and were moreover hampered by many restrictions, e.g. being unable to communicate a sick person without a permit from the local Roman Catholic priest. Here Schmolck remained till the close of his life, becoming in 1708 archidiaconus, in 1712 senior, and in 1714 paster primarius and inspector. Probably as the result of his exhausting labours he had a stroke of paralysis on Lactare (Mid-Lent) Sunday, 1730, which for a time laid him aside altogether, and after which he never recovered the use of his right hand. For five years more he was still able to officiate, preaching for the last time on a Fastday in 1735. But two more strokes of paralysis followed, and then cataract came on, relieved for a time by a successful operation, but returning again incurably. For the last months of his life he was confined to bed, till the message of release came to him, on the amniversary of his wedding, Feb. 12, 1737. (Koch, v. 463; Bode, p. 144; Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 306; sketch prefixed to Ledderhose's ed. of Schmolck's Geistliche Lieder, Halle, 1857, &c.)

Schmolck was well known in his own district as a popular and useful preacher, a dili- the Hannover G. B., 1740, and the Lüneburg

gent pastor, and a man of wonderful tact and discretion. It was however his devotional books, and the original hymns therein contained, that brought him into wider popularity, and carried his name and fame all over Germany. Long lists of his works and of the various editions through which many of them passed are given by Koch, Bode and Goedeke. It is rather difficult to trace the hymns, as they are copied from one book of his into another, &c. The most important books which are the first sources of his hymns are the following :-

(1) Hellige Flammen der himmilieh-gerinnten Seele, &c. Of this the 1st ed. seems to have appeared at Striegat, in 1704, with 50 hymnes the 2nd, in 1705, with 100; the 3rd, in 1705, with 140. The earliest we have been albe to find are a picated ed. of 1707, and the 4th ed., at Görlitz and Laubau, 1703. [Both in Royal Library, Berlin.] This was his most popular book, and passed through 13 eds. in his lifetime. (2) Der instige Sabbath, in der Stille as Zine mit heligen Liedern aufment. Berlin.] This was his most popular book, and passed through 13 eds. in his lifetime. (2) Der tastige subbath, is der Stille zu Zion, mit heitigen Ledern priegert, ke, Jauer and Schweidnitz, 1712 [Berlin Library]. (3) Dar in gebrackenn Senfern weit food verbundene Anddehtige Hertze, &c., Breslau and Liegnitz, 1714 [Berlin Library]. 2nd ed., emlarged, 1715. (4) Eines anddehtiges Hertzens Schmeck und Asthe, ist ed., apparently 1716; 2nd ed., Breslau and Liegnitz, 1717, is in Berlin. (5) Seistlicher Wander-Stab des Sientlichen Pilgrine, &c., Schweidnitz and Jauer, 1717 [Berlin Library]. (6) Preudes-Oci is Transfikeit, &c., Breslau and Liegnitz, 1720 [Berlin Library]. (7) Schweidnitz and Liegnitz, 1722 [Berlin Library]. (8) Mara und Marsa, &c., Breslau and Liegnitz, 1736 [Berlin Library]. (9) Bochim und Eties, &c., Breslau and Liegnitz, 1731 [Berlin Library] and Bilk. Mus, 1(10) Der geitliche Kirchen-Geffährte, &c., Schweidnitz, 1732 [Brit. Mus, and Göttingen Library]. (11) Klage und Reigen, &c., Breslau and Liegnitz, M. D., 1734 [Berlin Library]. The contents of these and of his numerous other works, are collected in his Santiiche Trost- und Geiteriche Schröffens, &c., 2 vols., Thüngen, 1733 and 1740 [later ed. dated 1740 and 1761). Selections have been recently ed. by Ludwig Grute (Leipzig, 1866) and by K. F. Ledderhose, as above.

Schmolck was the most popular hymn-writer of his time, and was hailed as the "Silesian Rist," as the "second Gerhardt," &c. Nor was he altogether unworthy of such praise. It is true that he did not possess the searing genius of Gerhardt. Nor had he even Gerhardt's concisc, simple style, but instead was too fond. of high-counding expressions, of plays upon words, of far-fetched but often recurring contrasts, and in general of straining after effect, especially in the pieces written in his later years. In fact he wrote a great deal too much, and latterly without proper attention to con-centration or to proportion. Besides Cantatas, occasional pieces for weddings, funerals, &c., he is the author of some 900 hymns, properly so called. These were written for all sorts of occasions, and range over the whole field of churchly, family, and individual life. Naturally they are not all alike good; and those in his first three collections are decidedly the best. A deep and genuine personal religion, and a fervent love to the Saviour, inspire his best hymns; and as they are not simply thought out but felt, they come from the heart to the heart. The best of them are also written in a clear, flowing, forcible, natural, popular style, and abound in sententious sayings, easily to be remembered. Even of these many are, however, more suited for family use than for public worship. Nevertheless they very soon came into extensive use, not only in Silesia, but all over Germany. Thus, for example, in

G. B., 1767, there are 73 by Schmolck. In the Andere Theil, 1725, of the Gotha G. B., there are 256, and the New Anhang, circa 1732, has 45 more; so that in the complete book, no less than 301, out of 1360, are by him. In the recent German hymn-books many still remain; and the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, so often referred to in this Dictionary, has in all 114 of his hymns.

A number of Schmolck's hymns are annotated under their original first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators). The others which have nessed into English are:—

1. Der beste Freund ist in dem Himmel. Love of Jesus. 1st pub. in his Heilige Flammen (ed. 1709, p. 100), in 6 st. of 6 l., entitled "The best Friend." In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 788, The tr. in C. U. is:—

A faithful friend is walting yonder. This is a good fr., omitting st. v., as No. 293, in Konnedy, 1863.

ii. Die Woche gaht sum Ende. Saturday Erening. In his Andichtige Hertze, 1714, p. 116, in 10 st. of 8 1., entitled "Evening Hymn," and appointed for Evening Prayer on Saturday. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1158. Tr. as:—

The week draws near its ending. This is a good tr. of st. i., vi., vii., x., marked as by "A. G.," as No. 81 in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848.

Other tra. are: (1) "Though now the week is ending," by H. J. Buckell, 1842, p. 167. (2) "The week at length is over," by Hiss Edmington, 1863, p. 137.

iii. Gott du bist selbst die Liebe. Holy Matrimony. In his Schmuch und Asche, 1717, p. 288, in 6 st, of 8 l., entitled "Marriage Hynn";

Schmücke dich, o liebe Seele. J. Franck. [Holy Communion.] Of this st. i. first appeared in J. Crüger's Geietliche Kirchen Melodien, 1649, No. 103, set to the beautiful melody by Crüger given in the C. B. for England (see below). The full form, in 9 st. of 81., is in the Criger-Rungo G. B., 1653, No. 199, entitled "Preparation for Holy Communion." Included in Criger's Praxis, 1656, No. 267, and most succeeding hymn-books, as recently in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 490. In Franck's Geistliches Sion, 1674, No. 22 (1846, p. 55).

This hymn is perhaps the finest of all German hymns for the Holy Communion. It is an exhortation to the soul to arise and daw near to partake of the Heavenly Food and to meditate on the wonders of Heavenly Love; roots and to meantate on the wonders of Interventy flove; colding with a prayer for final reception at the Eternal Feast. It soon attained, and still retains, popularity in Germany (in many German churches it is still the envarying hymn at the calebration), was one of the first hymns tr. into Malabar, and passed into English in 1754.

It has been (r. into English as:-

1. Some, seal, threelf aderaing. A free tr. by Chiomusus or Chyomusu, was a native

E. Jackson of st. i., vil., viil., as No. 199 in Dr. Hook's Church School H. Bk., 1850.

2. Deck thyself, my soul, with gladness. A good tr., amitting st. iii., vi., viii., by Miss Wink-worth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser. 1858, p. 94. Included in full in Cantate Domino, Boston, U. S., 1859, the Ohio Luth. Hymnal, 1880, &c., and, omitting st. vi., in Snepp's Songs of G. and G., 1876. In Kennedy, 1863, st. iv.-vi. beginning "Here I sink before Thee lowly," were given as No. 660, and the same in the Christian II. Bk., Cincinnati, 1865.

3. Deck thyself, my soul, with gladness. By Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 93. This is her Lyra Ger. version rewritten to the original metre. This form is found in the Clifton College H. Bk., 1872, and the Ecangelical Hyl., N. Y., 1880.

4. Soul, arise, dispel Thy sadness. A tr. of st., iv., ix. by Miss Borthwick as No. 259 in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864, repeated in H. L. L., 1884, p. 263.

C., 1898, p. 203.

Other tra. are: (1) "Trim thy Lamp, O Soul betrothed," as No. 468 in pt. 1, of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, (2) "Soul, at this most awful season," rewritten from the 1764 as No. 558 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1849, No. 564). (3) "Leave, my Soul, the shades of darkness," in Lyra Eucharistics, 1863, p. 88, signed "Sister B."

Schneegass, Cyriacus, was b. Oct. 5 1546, at Buffleben, near Gotha. He studied and graduated M.A. at the University of Jena. In 1578 he became 'pastor of the St. Blasius church at Friedrichroda, near Gotha. Ho was also adjunct to the Superindendent of Weimar, and in this capacity signed the For-mula of Concord in 1579. He d. at Friedrichroda, Oct. 23, 1597 (Kach, ii. 252, &c.).

Schneegass was a dlligent pastor, a man mighty in the Scriptures, and firm and rejoicing in his faith. He was also an excellent musician and fostered the love of music also an excellent musician and fostered the love of music among his people. His hymns reflect his character, and are good and simple, setting forth in clear and intelligible style the leading ideas of the festivals of the Christian year, &c.; and his Pasim versions are also of considerable merit. They appeared principally in his (1) xv. Pasine graduum, &c., Erfort, 1895 [Jotha Library]. This contains the Pasims of Degrees (120-134) also Ps. 82 and 85, and three hymns. (2) Weihendeht and New Jakers-Geiling, Erfurt, 1895. Kock speaks of this as containing 9 hymns. Errurt, 1999. Moca appears of this as containing a hymnis. The present writer has been unable to trace a copy of the book. (3) Geistliche Lieder und Ptalmen. Für Binfeltige frome Hersen rugerichtet, Erfurt, 1997 [Berlin Library]. This is the complete edition of his psalms and hymne, containing 72 in all.

Of his hymns those which have passed into English are:--

i. Das neugeborne Kindelein. Christmas. Probably first pub. in No. 2 above. Included in 1597 as above, No. 1, in 4 st. of 4 l., chilided "A beautiful little Christmas bymn on the dear little Jesus." Repeated in Wackernagel v. p. 133, and as No. 65 in the Unv. L. S., 1851. The trs. in C. U. sre:—

Schneesing, Johannes, sometimes called of Frankfurt-am-Main. He was appointed, sometime before 1524, assistant to Johann Langenhayn, pastor of St. Margaret's church, in Goths, who had begun, in 1522, to preach the doctrines of the Reformation. Subsequently he became pastor at Friemar, near Gotha; and in the records of the Visitation in 1534, he is described as a "learned, diligent, pious, and godly man.' He d. at Friemar, in 1567. (Koch, i. 376, &c.)

During Schneesing's early years at Friemar, his energies were greatly exercised in combating the Anabaptist doctrines promulgated in the neighbourhood by Nicolaus Storch, of Zwickan. Throughout his incumbency, he greatly interested himself in the chikiren of his flock, for whom he prepared a Chachsim, taught them is school, catechised them in church, and, as his pupil, Marx Wagner declares, taught them to sing many hymns and tunes which he had them to sing many hymns and tunes which he had thuself composed. He also possessed some skill as a painter.

The only hymn which has been ascribed to Schneesing, with any certainty, is-Allein we dir, Herr Jesu Christ. Penitence. The earliest hymn-book to which this has yet been traced, is the (Low German) Magdeburg G. B., 1542, where it begins, "Alleyn the dy, and is entitled, "A Hymn of Penitence." Wackernagel, iii., pp. 174-177, gives this, and three other forms (the oldest being from an undated Nürnberg broadsheet, circa 1540), and ascribes it to Schneesing. It was included by Luther in V. Babst's G. B., 1545; and this text, in 4 st. of 9 1., is repeated in many later collections, as in the Unt. L. S., 1851, No. 861. Bunsen, in his Versuch, 1833, p. 85, calls it "an immortal hymn of prayer of a confident faith."

Its rhymes show that it was evidently written in High German, and, therefore, apparently, earlier than 1542. In the earliest broadsheets and hymn-books, it appears without name. Schnessing's pupil, Marx Wagner (b. at Friemar, 1528), in his Einfültiger Bericht, wie durch Nic. Storken, der Aufruhr in Thüringen sey ange-fangen worden, Erfurt, 1597, distinctly says that it was composed by Schneesing, and inserted by him in the Ms. Kirchenordnung (i.e. Liturgy), which he composed, in 1542, for the church at Friemar. Conrad Huober [b. 1507, at Berg-zabern; studied theology at the University of Basel; 1531, diaconus, and 1545, Canon of St. Thomas's church at Strassburg; d. at Strassburg, April 23, 1577], to whom it is ascribed in the Gros Kirchen G. B., Strassburg, 1560, does not seem to have had more share in it than a few alterations in the text; and the earliest Strass-burg H. Bh. in which it appears, is the New cuserlesen Gesangbüchlein, 1545, where it is marked "N. N." and not with Huober's name.

The melody generally set to it is first found in an undeted broadsheet, which Wacksrungel, in his Bibbiographie, 1855, p. 172, No. CEXXVIII dates as probably at Wittenberg, 1541, and is repeated in V. Rahst's G. B., 1845, and many later books, including the C. B. for England, 1868 (see below). It has been also ascribed to Schneening, but this ascription seems decidedly doubtful. doubtful.

The tra. of Schneesing's hymn are:-

1. In Thee alone, O Christ, my Lord. A good tr. of et. i.-ili., by A. T. Russell, as No. 194, in his Ps. & Hys., 1851.

2. Zord Jesus Christ, in Thee alone. A good and full tr., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 129. Repeated, slightly varied in metre in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 112.

Schnesing, Johannes. [Schnessing, J.]

Scholefield, James, M.A., s. of the Rev. Nathaniel Scholefield, Congregational Minister at Henley-on-Thames, was b. Nov. 15, 1789, and educated at Christ's Hospital, and at Cambridge, B.A. 1812. Taking Holy Orders, he was Curate to the Rev. Charles Simcon, 1813; Fellow of Trinity, Cambridge, 1815; and In-cumbent of St. Michael's, Cambridge, 1823. He was also Regius Professor of Greek at Cambridge, 1825, and Canon of Ely, 1849. He d. at Hastings, April 4, 1853. In addition to various learned works he pub. A Sel. of Pealms and Hymns, 1823 (11th ed., 1855), and Passion Week, a small devotional work including hymns, 1828. His Memoir was pub. by his widow in 1855. His hymns now in C. U., all from Passion Week, 1828, are:-

 Draw me, O draw me, gracious Lord. Passiontide.
 I looked, and to my raptured eyes. Christ in Glory.

3. Once did the Cintment's rich perfume. Anotheting

the Feet of Jesus. [J. J.]

Schöner, Johann Gottfried, s. of J. G. Schöner, pastor at Rügheim, near Hassfurt, Bavaria, was b. at Rügheim, April 15, 1749. He studied at the universities of Leipzig and Erlangen. In 1772 he became tutor in the family of Herr von Winkler at Nürnberg, by whose influence he was appointed, in Sopt. 1773, preacher at St. Margaret's chapel, in the Kaiserburg, at Nürnberg. He was then appointed, in 1783, diaconus of St. Mary's church, and in 1783 discours of St. Lawrence's church, where, in 1809, he became chief paster (Stadtpfarrer). After 1799 he suffered greatly from nervous effections, and in October 1817, he had to resign his offices. He d. at Nürnberg, June 28, 1818. (Koch vi. 399; Heerwagen II, pp. 32, 262, &c.) ows; meericagen 11, pp. 52, 202, &cc.)

Schöner was a popular preacher, and was specially successful with children. He took a great interest in the circulation of the Bible, and founded the Nürnberg Bible Society in 1805. His hymns are the fruit of genuine and earnest piety, and attained considerable popularity. A number were printed separately, or in magazines. The more important of the collected editions are (1) Kinigs Lieder sur Erbanung, Nürnberg, 1777 [Berlin Library]. (2) Vermischte gesütliche Lieder und Gedichte, Nürnberg, 1790. (3) Voltatändige Samulung der geistlichen Lieder und Gedichte von Johann Gotf-fried Schöner. Nürnberg. 1810. fried Schöner, Nürnberg, 1810,

Those of Schöner's hymns which have passed into English are:-

 Brhebt euch, frohe Lobgesänge. Holy Matrimony. Included 1790, as above, p. 51, in 7 st. of 6 L, entitled "After a Marriage." It is one of the best hymns on the subject. It was included, but greatly altered, and in 12 st. (st. iii.-v., vii., ix., being added), as No. 490 in J. E. Gossner's Sammlung, 3rd ad. 1825, beginning "Erhebt euch, frohe Juhellieder." This text is repeated in full in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 2978; and, omitting the added sts., as No. 622 in Bunsen's Vermich, 1833. The tr. in C. U. is:-

Raise high the notes of exultation. A good tr., from Bunsen, by Miss Cox, in her Sacred Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 71. Included in full, but altered in metre, in Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk., 1857 and 1864, beginning "Now let your notes of praise arise." Miss Cox recast her tr. for her Hys. from Garman, 1864, p. 79, where it begins "Rise high, ye notes, a glad ovation." The form in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, is mainly from the 1864 text, but begins with the original first line, and omits st. iv. The form in Thring's Coll., 1882, is also mainly from the 1864 text; but it omits st. iii., and begins "Raise high in joyful acclamation."

Another tr. is: "Lift up yourselves, ye loyous strains." In the British Mag., Nov. 1887, p. 51?. ii. Rimmel an, nur Kimmel an. Longing for Heaven. Included 1810, as above, p. 198, in 10 st. of 8 l., entitled "Our Conversation is in Heaven, Phil. iii. 20. A call to all Christians." It had previously appeared in the Sammlungen für Liebhaber christlicher Wahrheit und Gottseligteit, Basel, 1806, p. 222. It has been a special favourite in Württemberg, and is No. 421 in the Württemberg G. B., 1842. The tr. in C. U. is:-- Heavenward, still beavenward. In full, by Dr. H. Mills, in his Horas Ger., 1845, p. 163 (1856, p. 251), included, abridged, in M. W. Stryker's Christian Chorals, 1885.

Other hymns by Schöner are:-

lii. Der Glande fehlt, und darum fehlen. Faith.

tii. Der Glande fehlt, und darum fehlen. Faith. On the erits of feble faith. In 1790 as above, p. 116, in st. of 8 1., entitled "Feetle Faith." In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 552. Tr. as, "Faith falls; Then in the dust," by Miss Warner, 1858, p. 427.

Schönster Herr Jesu. [Love to Christ.] In Heart Melodies, No. 51, Lond., Morgan & Chase, N. D. this is marked as "Crusader's Hymn of the 12th cent. This air and hymn used to be sung by the German pilgrims on their way to Jerusalem." For these statements there does not seem to be the chadow of foundation, for the air referred to has not been traced earlier than 1842, nor the words than 1677. In the Münster G. B., 1677, p. 576, it appears as the first of "Three beautiful selected new Hymns" in 5 st., viz.:-

1. Schönster Herr Jesu; II. Alle die Schönheit; III. Schame dich Sonne; iv. Schön seindt die Blumen; v. Er ist wahrhaftig.

In the Schlesische Volkelieder, Leipzig, 1842, p. 389, it is given with greatly altered forms of st. i., iii., ii., v., with a second st. ("Schön sind die Walder") practically new. The text and melody (the melody that in C. U.) are both marked as taken down from oral recitathe $Unv.\ L.\ S.$, 1851, is st. i., iii., and the new st., all nearly from the text of 1842; and this is the text which has been translated. Tr. as:-

Pairest Lord Jesu. Mr. Richard Storrs Willisof Detroit (U. S. A.) informs me that this ir. appears in his Church Chorals, 1850, but that he does not know the name of the translator. It has passed into various American collections as the Plymouth Coll., 1855; Dutch Ref. 1869, Robinson's Songe for the Sanctuary, 1865, &c., and in England into Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865; Allon's Children's Worship, 1878, &c.

Other tra. are: (1) "Sweetest Lord Jesu, Lord," by E. Matrie, 1867, p. 203. (2) "Beautiful Saviour! King of Creation," by Dr. J. A. Seiss, in the Sanday School Bk., Philad., 1813, of the Amer. Luth. Gen. Council. [J. M.]

Schröder, Johann Heinrich, was b. Oct. 4, 1667, at Springe (Hallerspringe) near Hannover. He studied at the University of Leipzig, where he experienced the awakening effects of A. H. Francke's lectures. In 1696 he was appointed paster at Meseberg, near Neuhaldensleben; and in the registers there records of himself (writing in the third person), "1696, on the 17th S. after Trinity, viz. on Cet. 4, on which day he was born, with the beginning of his 30th year, he entered on the pastorate of this parish." He d. at Meseberg, June 30, 1699 (Koch, iv., 381; Bistler für Hymnologie, 1883, p. 192, &c.).

Schröder is best known by the four hymns which he contributed to the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1897; and which are repeated in the Goidreiches G. B., Darmstadt, 1658; and in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1744. They are revo; and in reynagmannen's G. B., 1704. They are very good examples of the early hymns of the Pictista, being genuins and sarnest outpourings of Love to Carist, not annixed with Chillantic hopes for the victory of Zlou and the overthrow of Habylun. In the same books are two hymns by his wife (Presquille Sophia see Wolf), who d. at Meseberg, April 29, 1697.

Two of Schröder's hymns have passed into English, viz. :

i. Ring let noth, son Herr, dies eize. Christ. This is included in the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, p. 505, in 10 st. of 8 l., entitled, "One thing is needful. Luke r. 42. Jesus, Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.

1 Cor. i. 30." It is also in Wagner's G. B., Leipzig, 1697, vol. iii., p. 437. It is repeated in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 325, and in many later collections, e.g. the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 686, &c.

Its popularity has been due, not only to its own beauty Its popularity has been due, not only to its own heavity and power, but also to the taking character of the melody to which it is set. This is by J. Neander, in his Bundes Liester, Bremen, 1880, as the melody of Grosser Prophetic 19, 798, 1,; and was altered in Freylinghausen to sait Schröder's hymn. The full form from Freylinghausen is in Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk., and there called Landaberg. The second part is given in the Bristol Tune Book as Buss. A greatly altered form, as Ratishon, has pussed through W. H. Havergal's Old Church Paalmody into the Irish Church Hyk., the Scottish Presb. Hyk., and others. others

The tr. in C. U. from Schröder is:-

One thing's needful, then, Lord Jesus. This is a good and full tr., by Miss Cox, in her Socred Hys. from the German, 1841, p. 137 (Hys. from the German, 1864, p. 217), repeated in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869 and 1870. In 1857, Mercer adopted the trs. of st. v.-viii., x., as No. 411 in his C. P. & H. Bk., altered, and beginning, "Wisdom's highest, noblest treasure." In his 1859 ed., he omitted the tr. of st. x. and altered tion in the district (Grafechaft) of Glaz. In the others, now beginning, "Wisdom's highest, holiest, treasure; " and this form is repeated, reading "Wisdom's unexhausted treasure," in his Oxford ed., 1864.

Other translations are :-

(1) "One thing is needful! Let me deem." By Miss Winkworth, 1855, p. 183. (2) "One thing's needful:—this rich treasure." By Dr. H. Milis, 1856, p. 92, it. Josu, hilf siegen, du Firsto des Lobens. Christian Warfare. In the Gaistroiches G. E., Halle, 1697, p. 509, in 14 st., of 6 l., entitled, "Tearful sigh for the help of Jesus." Also in Also in Wagner's G B., Leipzig, 1697, vol. vi., p. 711, in 14 st., entitled, "For God's succour in order to overcome spiritual enemies," In the Guistreiches G. B., Darmstadt, 1698, p. 216, st. xv., xvi., are added, and this form is in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 667. It is said to have been written, in 1696, as a companion to his wife's hymn, "Trantster Jesu, Ehrenkönig" (Halle, 1697, as above, p. 801, and the G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 771). It was accused of Chiliasm, by the Theological Faculty of Wittenberg, but still holds an honoured place in German collections. The tra, are :-(1) " Jesus, help conquer! Thou Prince ever-living." By Dr. H. Mills, 1856, p. 126. (2) "Jesus, help conquer, Thou Prince of my being." By Miss Manington, 1863, թ. 2.

The hymn beginning, "Jesus, help con-quer! my spirit is sinking," by Miss Warner, in 6 st., in her Hys. of the Church Militani, N. Y., 1858, p. 161, borrows little more than the first line from the German. It is repeated in Boardman's Selection, Philadelphia, 1861. [J. M.] No. 468.

Christian Friedrich Schubart, Daniel, s. of Johann Jakob Schubart, schoolmaster and assistant clergyman at Obersontheim near Hall, in Württemberg (after 1740, at Aslen), was b. at Obersontheim, March 26, 1739, and in 1758 entered the University of Erlangen as a student of theology. Thereafter he was for some time a private tutor at Königsbronn. In 1764 he was appointed organist and schoolmaster at Geisslingen, near Ulm. In 1768 he became organist and music-director at Ludwigsburg; but, in 1772, en account of misconduct, he was deprived of his office. After that, he led for some time a wandering life, and then settled down in Ulm, where he edited a political newspaper, entitled the Deutsche Chronik, with success. By his sourrilous attacks on the clergy, especially on the Roman Catholice, and in particular upon the Jesuits, and by a satirical peem on the Duke of Warttemberg, he made himself obnoxious. Unsuspectingly accepting an invitation to Blaubeuren, he was handed over to the Duke's adjutant, and, on Jan. 23, 1777, was imprisoned in the castle of Hohenasperg, where he remained, without even the shadow of a trial, till May 11, 1787. As a recompense for his long imprisonment, the Duke made him Court and theatre poet at Stuttgart, where he d. of fever, Oct. 10, 1791 (Koch, vi. 876; K. H. Jördens's Lexicon deutscher Dichter und Prosaisten, vol. iv. 1809, p. 639).

Schubart was a man of versatile genius, who might have attained distinction in half a dozen lines of life, had be only stuck to any of them. He was a man who could make himself most popular, spite of the fact that he pos-ment hardly any tast. His moral principles were anything but strong; and the Ten Commandments (especially the seventh) seemed to have little restraining influance over bim. As a writer of eccuiar poems, especially of lyrics, he displayed vigour and spirit; but hie literary workmanship was often very careless. His hymns, over workmanship was often very careless. His hymna, ovar 130 in all, were written during the two periods when he led an orderly and Christian life, vis., in the years 1784-66, immediately after his marriage, and in the years 1719-87, during his enforced abeence from tempstation. His captive state, his reading of the devotional books in the commandant's library, and the visits which he then received from P. M. Hahn, pastor at Kornwesthelm, awakened in him a repentance, sincers if not altogether lifelong; one of the principal results being the series of hymns included in his so-called Gedichts and dess Kerker (Edrich, 1765). These were commoned at a time when nymns necuded in his so-called describe cus dess Kerker (Curleh, 1785). These were composed at a time when he was deprived of writing materials, and were dictated through a wall to a fallow prisoner in the next cell. They were pub. without his knowledge or supervision. In self defence he saked the Duke's permission to pub. an authorised ed. of his poems; and this appeared at Stategart, in 2 vols., 1785-86, as his Sömentliche Gedichte cantagars, in voss., 1785-28, see his Sammittone Grainage (a number of copies, printed beyond the subscription, bear the date 1787, and the name of a Frankfurt pub-lisher, e.g. the copy in the Brit, Mus.); and this also included most of those in his Todegograms, originally pub. at Ulm in 1787. Being printed at the Ducal printing office at Stategart the poems were subjected to an official revision. Schubart meant to issue a genuine author's edition, but did not live to do so; and that pubby his son, as his father's fedicate, in two parts, at Frankfurt, 1802, is really a selection, and contains only about half of his hymns.

The best of Schubert's hymns are those first pub. in 1785, which are more genuine and spiritual than his earlier productions. A considerable number became earlier productions. extuer promexima. A consucrator number became popular, and passed into the Wittemberg G. B., 1791, and other collections, up to 1850; and a few still continue in C. U. They are, however, too personal and subjective, and not sufficiently natural in style for general use.

Of Schubart's hymns the following have been tr. into English, viz.:-

i. Urqueil aller Beligkeiten. Supplication for Spiritual Blessings. This fine hymn was written about 1780, and 1st pub. in his Gedichte aus dem Kerher, Zürich, 1785, p. 102, in 16 st. of 4 l., entitled, "Supplication." The full text is in Koch, 2nd ed., vol. iv., p. 740. In the Würt-temberg G. B., 1791, No. 404, it is reduced to 12 st.; and the same in the ed. of 1842. No. 21. In Dr. Schaff's Doutsches G. B., Philadelphia,

U. S., 1860, No. 274, it has only ten. Tr. as :--Though by sources evertaken. This can hardly be called a tr., but is rather a hymn suggested by the German, and is in 6 st. of 4 l. It appeared in A. R. Reinagle's Coll. of Ps. and Hy. Tunes as sung in the Parish Church of St. Peter in the East, Oxford, pub. at Oxford in 1840, p. 138. It is one of four hymns [for the others, see pp. 899, [.; 808, 1.; 1081 i.], regarding which the Rev. Walter Kerr Hamilton (then Rector of St. Peter's, afterwards Bishop of Salisbury), says, in the preface, "Philip Pusey, Esq., has allowed me to add to this collection some hymns which are partly translations and partly original." From Reinagle this hymn passed, with alterations, into the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, the Sarum Hyl., 1868, and various other collections. In Lord Selborne's Bh. of Proise, 1862, it is No. 363, and is marked as by "Algernon Herbert," who was Pussy's brotherin-law; and in the Sarum Hyl., as "German tr. by Algernon Herbert." The ascription to Pusey seems the more probable,

Other hymns by Schubert are :--

ii. Alles int ener! O Warts des ewigen Lebens. Thunkespiving. Written about 1784, and 1st pub. at Zürich, 1785, as above, p. 117, in 6 st. of 6 l.; founded on 1 Cor. iii. 21-22. in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1883, No. 1250. Tr. as, "All things are yours! O awest message of mercy divine." By Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 1855, p. 5 (1884, p. 73).

iii. Der Tranning Last liegt schwer auf mich. Reunion in Manen. On the sorrow of parting with friends whom one hopes to meet in heaven. 1at pub. at Zürich, 1785, as above, p. 1as, in 14 st. of 7 l., entitled, "The meeting again of the righteous." In the Wirttemberg G. B., 1842, No. 548, in 9 st. 77. as, "I die and grieve from those to go." By Dr. G. Walker, 1880, p. 68. iv. Hier stand ein Menach! Hier fiel er nieder. Sudden death of a Simer. 1st pub. at Ulm, 1767, as above, p. 199, in 12 st. of 8 L, entitled, "A sudden death." In the American Ev. Luth. G. B., 1786, No. 569). Fr. as, "Now one in health Death, instant, crushes." By Dr. H. Mille, 1845 (1856, p. 32). v. Kommt heut an eurem Stabe. For the Aged. On the Preservation in the Temple; and founded on St. union in Meaven. On the sorrow of parting with friends the Preservation in the Temple; and founded on St. Luke ii. 22 - 32. 1st pub. at Ulm, 1787, as above, p. 282, in 12 st. of 41., entitled, "Sincon." In the Württemberg G. B., 1781, No. 101. 27. as, "Ye who with years are sinking." By Dr. H. Mült, 1845 (1856, p. 275).

Schütz, Johann Jakob, was b. Sept. 7, 1640, at Frankfurt am Main. After studying at Tübingen (where he became a licentiate in civil and canon law), he began to practice as an advocate in Frankfurt, and in later years with the title of Rath. He seems to have been a man of considerable legal learning as well as of deep piety. He was an intimate friend of P.J. Spener; and it was, in great measure, at his suggestion, that Spener began his famous Collegia Pictatis (see Spener, p. 1071, ii.). After Spener left Frankfurt, in 1686, Schütz came under the influence of J. W. Petersen (p. 802, i.); and carrying out Petersen's principles to their logical conclusion, he became a Separatist, and ceased to attend the Lutheran services or to communicate. He d, at Frankfurt, May 22, 1690 (Koch, iv. 220; Blütter für Hymnologie, Feb. 1883). See also Various.

Schütz is known as an author by two tractates; one being his Christiche Lebenergein, Frankfurt, 1677; the other, that which contains his hymns, Christiches Gedenckbüchlein, au Beförderung eines anfangenden neuen Lebens, Mc., Frankfurt ein Main, 1875 [Library of the Predigerministerium at Frankfurt]. This work or the Arrengermansterium at Frankfurt]. This work includes 5 hymns, in a separate section, which is beaded, "Hieranf fulgen etitche Gestinge." These hymns are:

1. Die Wollust dieser Welt.

1i. Was mich auf dieser Welt behrübt.

1ii. So komm, geliebte Todes Stund.

1ii. So komm, geliebte Todes Stund.

iv, Scheuet ihr, ihr matten Glieder.
v. Sei Lob und Ehr dem höchsten Gut.
Of these No. v. is undoubtedly by Schütz, and the other four exhibit much the same style of thought as, and frequent parallels to, the prose portions of the work. None of these have been traced earlier than 1675; and until this has been done, it is pretty safe to ascribe them all to Schutz.

Three of these hymns have passed into English, viz.:-

i. Sei Lob und Ehr dem höchsten Gut. Praise and Thanksgizing. 1st pub. in 1675, as above, No. v. It is founded on Dout. xxxii. 3; entitled, "Hymn of Thanksgiving;" and is in 9 st. of 6 l., and the refrain, "Gebt unserm Gott die Ehre." It passed into the Minden G. B., 1689; Luppius's G. B., 1692, p. 48; the Geistreiches G. B., Halle, 1697, pp. 570 and 656; and is now found in almost all German collections, as in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 721.

Koch, iv. 226, speaks of this hymn as "outwelghing many hundred others; and a classical hymn, which, from its first appearance, attracted unusual attention." And Laurmann, in Koch, viii. 234-239, relates how delighted J. J. Moser was, when, on entering church the lirst Sunday after his captivity at Hohentwiel, he heard this hymn, and how heartily he joined in it; how it consorted the dying G. C. Rieger, of Stuttgart, on Tuesday, in Easter Week, 1143, and many other incledents.

Translations in C. U. :-

1. All Glory to the Sov'reign Good. This is a

Germanica, 2nd ed., 1732, p. 151, where it is entitled, "The Malabarian Hymn." Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 136, it is entitled, "Summary of the Book of Psalms" (1886, No. 646). Montgomery, in his Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 215, adopted st. i.-iv., nearly from the 1754; and from this, the trs. of st. i., ii., iv., were repeated in Guruey's Marylebone Coll., 1851; Windle's Coll., &c. The form in the 1873 Appx. to Mercer's C. P. & H. Bt., No. 514, consists of st. i.-iv., viii., recast mainly from the 1801 Moracian, but partly from Miss Cox. In J. A. Latrobe's Ps. & Hys., 1841, No. 5, st. i., ii., v., viii., ix., were adapted for use on Trinity Sunday.

2. All glory he to God most high. A good tr., by A. T. Russell, of st. i., iv., viii., for the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848, No. 59.

3. All praise and thanks to God most high. This is a good tr., omitting st. ix., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 146. Repeated, in varying centos, in Ps. & Hys., Bedford, 1859; Harrow School H. Bk., 1866; Holy Song, 1869; Irish Church Hyl., 1878, and others. In her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 2, Miss Winkworth altered the metre and omitted st.vi; and this form was repeated in full in the Evang. Hyl., N. Y., 1880, and abridged (i.-iv.) in the Hymnary, 1871.

4. Sing praise to God Who reigns above. good tr., omitting st. ix., contributed by Miss Cor to Lyra Eucharistica, 1864, p. 33, and included in her Hys. from the German, 1864, p. 235. This tr. is given in full in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876. It is also found, in varying centos, in many English and American hymn-books, ineluding H. A. & M., 1868 and 1875; Bapt. Hyl., 1879; Thring's Coll., 1882; and in America, in the Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bk., 1868; College Hyl., N. Y., 1876; Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, &c.

To God a joyful anthem raise. A good tr. of st. i., ii., iv., v., viii., by J. M. Sloan, as No. 314, in J. H. Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865.

The following are also tr, into English:- li. So komm, geliebte Todes-Stund. For the Dying-lat pub. in 1878, as above, No. iii., in 11 st. of 3 i., en-titled, "The thoughts on Death of a Royal Princess, after the usual interpretation of Job xix. 28." This Princess was Sophie Elisabethe, daughter of Duke Philipp Ludwig, of Holstein-Sonderburg (b. at Homburg vor der Höhe, May 4, 1863; married, in 1676, to Duke Morits, of Sachse-Zoits; d. at Schlemsingen, Aug. 19, 1684), who had been a regular attender at Spener's conferences at Frankfurt, and time searchated with Schitz. This hymn Frankfurt, and thus associated with Schütz. This hymn (as also No. iv. in the 1675 work) has often been ascribed (as also No. iv. in the 1675 work) has often been ascribed to her; and she had already chosen Job Xz. 25, as the text of her funeral sermon. But it is more probable that both byzman were written by Schutz for her use, or in her honour. The taxt of No. Ill., in 1875, is repeated in the Getstitche Lieder und Pasimen, Frankfurt. 1676, p. 149, in Freylinghausen's G. R., 1704; Port's G. B., ed. 1895. No. 882, &c. The trs. are:—(1) "Come, happy bour of death, and close." By Dr. G. Walker, 1890, p. 56. (2) "O come, delightful hour of death." By Dr. G. Walker, 1880, p. 160.

"O come, delightful hour of death." By Dr. G. Watter, 1860, p. 106.

iii. Was mich auf dieser Welt betrübt. Earthly Vantice. This bymn, on Renunciation of the World, let appeared in 1675, as above, No. ii., in 4 st. of 12 1, and entitled "From the World to God." Repeated in the Geistlicke Lieder und Fraimen, Frankfurt, 1676, p. 180; Forst's G. E., ed. 1855, No. 768, &c. It has sometimes been erroneously ascribed to Michael Franck (p. 296, i.). It is tr. as "The woes that weigh my body down." By Miss Mariendows. 1855, p. 32. Miss Manington, 1863, p. 32. [J. M.]

Schwedler, Johann Christoph, s. of Anton Schwedler, farmer and rural magistrate full and good tr., by J. C. Jacobi, in his Pad. | at Krobsdorf, near Löwenberg, in Silesia, was

b. at Krobsdorf, Dec. 21, 1672, and matriculated at the University of Leipzig, in 1695 (M.A. 1697). In 1698 he was appointed assistant minister at Niederwiese, near Greiffenberg, and began his duties there on the 18th S. after Trinity. On the death of the discours, Christoph Adolph, he succeeded him as diaconus, in December, 1698; and, finally, in 1701, he became pastor there. He d. at Niederwicze, suddenly, during the night of Jan. 12, 1730. (S. J. Ehrhardt's Presbyterologie Schlesiens, 1780-89, vol. iii., pt. ii., p. 254; Koch, v. 225, &c.)

p. 254; Koch, v. 225, &c.)
Schwedler was a powerful and popular preacher, and pecullarly gifted in prayer. It is said that sometimes, beginning service at 5 or 6 A.M., he would continue the service to relays who in succession filled the church, till 2 or 3 r.M. He also founded an orphanage at Niederwiese. He was a near neighbour and great friend of Johann Mentzer (p. 724, h), and N. L. von Zinzendorf. As a hymn-writer he was useful and popular. The principal theme of his hymns was the lieace of God through Christ, and the joyful confidence imparted to the soul that experienced it. Of his hymns, 482 appeared in his Bic hieder Rose und des Lapmes, oder seu congerichtetes Gesang-Buch, Budissin, 1720, Nos. 345-805. Others are in his Wockentlicke Hasse-Andock, 1714, in his various devotional works, and in the hymn-books of his various devotional works, and in the hymn-books of

The only hymn by Schwedler tr. into Eng-

Wollt the wissen was mein Preis! Jesus the Crucified, or Love to Christ. Founded on 1 Cor. ii. 2, and Gal. vi. 14. Included in the Hirschberg G. B., 1741, No. 233, in 6 st. of 4 l., and the refrain, "Jesus, der Gekreuzigte." This form is repeated, with his name, in Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, No. 327; and is in many recent collections, as the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 282. It was long the usual funeral hymn in Silesia. The tra. in C. U. are :-

1. Ask ye what great thing I know. By Dr. Kennedy, in his Hymn. Christ., 1863, No. 620, being a good fr. of st. i .- v., with a sixth st. suggested by st. vi. of the German. It is repeated, in full, in Thring's Coll., 1882; and in Schaft's Christ in Song, 1869 and 1870. Abridged forms are in Morell and How's Ps. & Hys., 1864; J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876; and in America, in the Dutch Ref. Hys. of the Church, 1869; Bapt. Praise Bk., 1871; Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884, and others.

2. Do you ask what most I prize ? This is a fairly close version, omitting st. vi., as No. 98, in the Moravian H. Bk., 1886. [J. M.]

Schweinitz, Hans Christoph von, of Friedrichsdorf and Niederleube, s. of Baron Hans Christoph von Schweinitz, of Crane and Hähnichen, in Silesia, was b. at Crane, Feb. 1, 1645. After studying at Breslau, Strassburg, Leyden, and Paris, and taking a prolonged tour in Italy and elsewhere, he returned to Silesia in 1668, where he was appointed Landesältester for the district of Görlitz, and afterwards Rath and Kammerherr, by August II., in his capacity of King of Poland and Elector of Saxony. He resigned his post as Landesältester, in 1708, and retired to Leube, where he d. Nov. 10, 1722 (G. F. Otto's Lexicon . . . Oberlausiz-ischer Schriftsteller, iii., p. 257, &c.). Only two hymns are known by him. One of these Festenberg). It was first printed, as a broadsheet, at Lauban, in 1831, with music, in 5 parts, by Christoph Adolph, discounts at Niederwisse, who d. in 1838 (melody from this broadsheet in Dr. J. Zahn's Paulter und Harfe, 1886, No. 522). The broadsheet, of which there is a copy in the Town Library at Breslau, is entitled Ben lettics Liebesdienst, &c., and has the note:—"The follettics Liebestiens, &c., and has the note:—"The following hymn was composed from the late Frau von Schweinits' own words, and from a conversation she hald, shortly before her happy end, and was sung after the end of the [funeral] sermon." The hymn was included in J. C. Schwedler's Lieder Mose, 1720, No. 296 (marked as "On the death of a little child. J. D., Christ. von Schweinitz"), and in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1839. It is in 5 st. of 61. The tr. in C. U. is:—

Will that not joyful be ? This is a full and very good tr., by Mrs. Findlater, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1884, p. 7 (1984, p. 13); repeated, in full, in Br. hyle's Coll., 1860, and, omitting st. ill., in the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1868. Stanzas i.—iv., altered, and beginning, "Ob, that will Joyhu be," are in W. B. Bradbury's Golden Chain, N. Y., 1861 (ed. 1870, p. 48). Another tr. is, "Will it not pleasure be." By Dr. H. Mills, 1845 (1866, p. 259).

Scott, Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. Thomas Scott, Independent Minister at Norwich, and sister of Thomas Scott, noted below, was b. at Norwich about 1708. In 1751 sho was married to Elisha Williams, who had been from 1726 to 1739 Rector of Yale College, U.S.A., and with him she proceeded to Con-necticut. On the death of Mr. Williams she was married to the Hon. William Smith, of New York, who also predeceased her. She died at Wethersfield, Connecticut, June 13th, 1776. In connection with Miss Scott's hymns we are acquainted directly and indirectly with four MSS., each of which is interesting in itself. These are as follows:--

These are as follows:—

1. The first Ms. is in the library of Yale College, New Haven, Connecticut. Mr. Franklin Bowditch Dexter, M.A., Assistant Librarian, has tabulated the hymne in this Ms. for this Beleimary. He saye (Jan. 29, 1889): "The label on the back of this volume is 'Hymns & Poems by Elis. Scott." There is no title to the Ms. gages. Prefixed to the Hymns and Poems there is, however, a long and very tenderly written dedication in prose; 'To my much Rever'd, much Lov'd, Father,' this signed 'E. S.' and dated 1740. Then follows (without numbers) the Hymns with titles and first lines and the titles of 80 hymns.

11. The second Ms. is in our possession. It is headed titles of 90 hymns.

ii. The second as, is in our possession. It is headed

"Foems on Several Occasions by Miss Scott of Norwich, who married to Mr. Williams of New England, January 1750/1." Then follow 25 hymns in full. At the cut this is written, "These transcribed from Mrs. Williams' Manuscript, Feb. 27, 1751, the week before she left Norwich to go to New England." The whole of these 26 hymns are in the Yale College Ms.

iii. The third ws. we have consulted contains a

28 hymns are in the Yale College Ms.

iii. The third Ms. we have consulted contains a hymns which are prefaced with these words, "Copies from a book of Mrs. Bury's, written by her Aunt Miss Elizabeth Scott, afterwards Mrs. Williamson." Of these hymns 6 are in the Yale College Ms. and 2 not therein, viz.:—(1) "Arlse and hall the happy [sacred] day" (p. 73, 4), and "Hall, King supreme, all wise and good," both of which are given anonymously in the Unitarian Neso tol. of Ps. for the Use of a Cong. of Protestant Pissenters in Liverpool, commonly known as The Liverpool Liturgy, pub. in 1763. Concerning the authorship of these two hymns there is great doubt, iv. In Dr. Dodd's Christian's Magazine for Dec. 1763

iv. In Dr. Bodd's Christian's Magazine for Dec. 1763 we find a writer who signs himself "CL-T." He had at that time a Ms. of Miss Scott's hymns with a Dedicaat that time a set, of Miss Scott's hymns with a Dedica-tion to her father prefixed thereto and signed "Eliz Sc-tt." From this ms. he sent "Why droops my soul with guilt oppressed "Christ, the Great Physician) to the Dee, number of the magazine; "Evil and few our mortal days" (Vanity of human Life), to the Feb. number, 1764, and "What finite power with ceaseless toil" (Praise for Temporal Bassings), to the April number of the same year. At the close of the last hymn-he says in a note:—"N.B. "As some of your Corre-spondents have sent you some pleces out of the same collection, from which these are transcribed, that I have undertaken to send you (e.g. that on Gen, xvii. 1) it Wird das night Freude sein! Eternal Life. This undertaken to send you (e.g. that on Gen. xvii. 1) it beautiful hymn, on the Joys of Heaven, was written on the death of his first wife, Theodora von Schweinitz (nee! they would signify whose they are."

The hymn referred to in this note is, "Great God, Thy penetrating eye" (Und perceding all things), which appeared in the January number of the Christian Mag., 1764, without signature or acknowledgment of any kind. All these hymns are in the Yale College Ma.

From these facts it is clear that before departing for America Miss Scott allowed copies of her hymns to be made from her MS., and it was mainly from these copies that those of her hymns composed before her marriage were printed in the English hymn-books. None of those hymns date later than 1750. The collections in which they appeared, and through which they came into C. U., were the Bristol Bap. Coll. of Ash and Evans, 1769, and the New Sel., &c., by J. Dobell, 1806. In Ash and Evans there are 19 hymns, signed "S.," all of which are in the Yale College was under the same first lines except "Wes it for pean aposteta were?" lines except " Was it for man, apostate man?" but this also may possibly be there under another first line. In Dobell there are 20 hymns signed " Scott," of which 17 are in the Yale College Ms., 2 are parts of hymns from Ash and Evans, also in that Ms., and "Sole Sovereign of the earth and akies," also probubly in the Ms. under another first line. Of the 90 hymns in the Yale Ms., in addition to those annotated elsewhere in this Dictionary (see Index of Authors and Translators), there are also in C. U. :-

- i. From Ash and Evane's Coll. of Hymns, 1769. 1. God of my life, to Thee belongs. On Recousty
- 2. My God, shall I for ever mourn? Covenant-keap-ing God. From this "Shall e'er the shadow of a change?" is taken (st. iii.).
- 3. When Abram full of sacred awe. For a Fast Day. Sometimes, "Thus Abram, full of sacred awe."
 4. Why. O my beart, these anxious cares? Submis-

- Éternal Spirit, 'twas Thy breath. Whittuntide.
 For ever shall my fainting soul. Against grieving the Holy Spirit. Sometimes "O Lord, and shall our

Scott, Jacob Richardson, was b. in Boston, Massachusetts, March 1, 1815, and graduated in Arts at Brown University 1836, and in Theology at Newton Theological College, 1842. He entered the Baptist ministry in 1842, and was successively located at Petersburg, Virginia; Portland, Maine; at Fall River, Massachusetts; and Yorkers, New York. He d. Dec. 10, 1861. His hynn "To Thee this temple we devote" (Dedication of a Place of Worship) was contributed to The Pealmist, 1848. It is found in several American hymn-books. [F. M. B.]

Scott, Thomas, s. of Thomas Scott, Independent Minister at Norwich, brother of Elizabeth Scott (see above), and nephew of Dr. Daniel Scott, was b. at Norwich, 1705. As a young man be kept a school at Wortwell, and preached once a month at Harleston, Norfolk. Then, after a short ministry at Lowestoft, he removed in 1734 to Ipswich as congregation meeting in St. Nicholas Street Chapel. On the death of his senior in 1740 he became sole pastor. In 1774 he retired to Hapton, and d. there in 1775. He was the author of various poetical works, including : $lue{}$

(1) The Table of Cebes; or, the Picture of Human Life, in English Verse, with Notes, 1764; (2) The Rook of Job, in English Verse; translated from the original Hebrew, with Remarks, Historical, Critical, and Explanatory, 1771; 2nd ed. 1773; (3) Lyric Poems, the votional and Koral. By Thomas Scott, Lond., James Published 1222 Buckland, 1773.

To Dr. Enfield's Hymns for Public Worship, Warrington, 1772, he contributed "All-knowing God, 'tis Thine to know (p. 43, ii.); "Angels! roll the rock sway" (p. 69, i.); "As various as the moon" (p. 85, ii.); and the following:—

- 1. Abourd and vain attempt to bind, Persecution.
- 1. Rebord and varia attempt to onin. Personal Research.
 2. Behold a wretch in wee. Mercy.
 3. Imposture shrinks from light. Private Judgment, its Rights and Daties.
 4. Mark, when tempestuous winds arise. Mecknest.
 5. O come all ye sons of Adam and raise. Universal Process of Cod. Praise to God.
- Th' uplifted eye and bended knee. Detotion vain without Virtue.
- Was pride, alas, e'er made for man? Humility.
 Why do I thus perplex? Worldly Anxiety reproced.

In his Preface to his Lyric Poems, 1773, he said that the object of his work was :-

"To form a kind of little poetical system of piety and morals. The work opens with natural religion. Thence it proceeds to the mission of Jeaus Christ, his aufferings, his exaltation, and the propagation of his doctrine, Next is the call to repentance, the nature and blessedness of a christian life, and the entrance into it. These topics are succeeded by the various branches of devotion; after which are ranked the moral duties, personal and social, the happy end of a sincere christian, and the coming of Jesus Christian bis mediatorial kingdom by the general Judgment. The whole is closed with a description of the illustrious times, when by means of the everlasting gospei, the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

Of Scott's better known hymns this volume contained most of those named above, and ;-

- 9. Hasten, sinuer, to be wise. p. 495, it.
 10. Who, gracious Father, can complain? The Divine
- In the Coll. of Hys. and Ps., &c., 1795, by Kippis, Rees, and others, several of the above were repeated, and the following were new :-
 - If high or low our station be. Justice.
 Happy the meak whose gentle breast. Mechanic.

Doctrinally Scott might be described as an evangelical Arian. Hymns of his appear in most of the old Presbyterian collections at the close of the last century, and in the early Unitarian collections. Several are still in C. U. in G. Britain and America. [V. D. D.]

Scott, Sir Walter, Bart., was b. in Edinburgh, Aug. 15, 1771, and d. at Abbotsford, Sept. 21, 1832. Although so successful and widely known as a poet, he made no direct contributions to hymnody whatever. His condensed randering of the "Dies Irac" (p. 297, il.), and his hymn of Rebecca in Ivanhoe, "When Israel of the Lord beloved" (q.v.) were utilized as hymna for congregations) use by others, but were never intended for such a purpose by himself. His work and rank as poet, novelist, and historian are fully set forth in his Life by J. G. Lockhart, [J. J.]

Scottish Hymnody. After the Reformation in Scotland, the revulsion from the Roman Church and its services led at once to the establishment of services in the vernacular. eo-pastor with Mr. Baxter of the Presbyterian | As on the Continent recourse was naturally had to the Pealier, and, as easiest for popular use and also as reckoned nearer to the Hebrew structure, the metrical Psalm instead of the prose Psalm chanted. Metrical Psalmody was the only part of Divine worship in which the congregations in the Scottish Churchea vocally joined till at least 1749, and in the three principal sections of Presbyterianism the singing of hymns, other than the Paraphrases of 1741-81, did not become at all general till after 1852 in the United Presbyterian Church, after 1870 in the Established Church, and after 1873 in the Free Church. Consequently the use of the Hebrew Psalter has had a mighty influence upon the Scottish mind and heart.

In tracing the history of Scottish Metrical Psalmody and Hymnody we find six stages:—
I. The Preparatory; II. The Psatter of 1564-5; III. The Psatter of 1650; IV. Scripture Songs. 1564-1708; V. The Translations and Paraphrases, 1741-81; VI. The Hymnols.

The Preparatory Stage.

The early congregational psalmody of Scotland found its example, and much of its materials in the work begun on the Continent by Marct, and in England by Sternhold.

I. Clement Marot had begun translating the Psalms about 1533, and seems to have completed his first 30 versions in 1589, but did not himself publish them till 1542, at Paris, as Trente Pseaulmes de David. Meantime John Calvin, then in exile at Strassburg, had included in his Aulouns Peccumes et Cantiques, 1539, 12 of the Marot versions, but in the form given to them by Pierre Alexandre, who having obtained Ms. copies of Marot's Psalms made considerable alterations in the text, and published the whole 30 along with 15 by various authors as Psalmes de David translatez de plusieurs autheurs, &c., Antwerp, 1541. Marot, having fled to Geneva, was induced by Calvin to revise his first 80 versions and add 19, pub. in 1543 as Cinquante Psaumes (including the Song of Simeon). After Marot's death Theodore de Beza at Calvin's request continued the work, publishing in 1551 Trentequatre Psaumes de David, reissued in 1552 with Marot's, as Pseaumes octante trois de David, to which he added 6 in 1554 and 1 in 1555, finishing the work after his return from Lausanne in 1558, the completed Psalter appearing as Les Pseaumes mis en rime francoise par Clement Marot et Theodore de Beze, Geneue, pour Antoine Vincent, 1562-49 versions being by Marot and the rest by Beza. (See Paaltors, Franch, p. 983, i., and an interesting series of articles on Clement Marot and the Huguenot Pealter, by Major G. A. Crawford in the Musical Times, June to Nov., 1881.) In regard to the Scottish Partter the influence is seen in the force of example, in the inclusion of French tunes and in the composition of versions in French metres, rather than in any versions directly translated from those by

Marot and Beza. [Fasters, French, § I.]

2. Meantime in England Thomas Sternhold had issued 19 Paslm versions in an undated edition not earlier than 1547, increased to 37 in 1549, and to 44 by the addition of 7 by John Hopkins in 1551. These were carried by the English exiles to Geneva and there included, with 7 versions by William Whittingham, in the One and Fiftie Praimes of Danid, published in 1556 along with The forms of prayers, &c., used at Geneva (Advo-cates Library, Edinburgh). The Rev. William Dunlop, in the Contents to his Collection of Confessions of Faith, &c., vol. ii., Edinburgh, 1722, says that his reprint of The forme of prayers follows the Genevan edition of 1558. This edition, which is now lost, probably contained the Psalter enlarged by the 9 versions by Whittingham and 2 by Pullain contained in the Pealter of 1560, now in Christ Church Library, Oxford. The next Anglo-Genevan edition now extant (St. Paul's Cathedral Library) is the Foure Score and Seven Psalmes of David, Geneva, 1561, which adds to the 51 of 1556 the 9 by Whittingham, and 2 by Pullain. mentioned above, with 25 new ones, (including Ps. c.) by Kethe. Of this a revised edition was issued in the same year, probably printed in England (Britwell Library), which formed the basis of the Scottish Pealter of 1564-65, [For full details, see Old Varsion, p. 857, L.

§§ II., III.]
3. The earliest Paslm versions used in Scotland were those included in the collection sometimes called the Dundie Psalmes, better known as the Gude and Godlie Ballates, entitled, in the edition of 1578, Ans Copendious bulk of godlie Psalmes and spirituall Sangis. This collection seems, from the notice of David Calderwood, the Church historian, to have been published, at least in a rudimentary form, before 1546, but the earliest edition now extant is represented by a copy in the posses-sion of Patrick Anderson, Esq., Blackness House, Dundee, who has kindly given a col-lation of it. The copy wants titlepage, and begins with folio 5 at the words "sall be condempnit" in the article "of our Baptisme," but is otherwise perfect. From the fact of its containing an advertisement titlepage of a Scottish Psalter of 1568, and also a cong pro-hibited by the General Assembly of 1568, it may be dated 1568. It does not contain the last 5 ballads of the 1378 ed.; ending instead with the prohibited song, Welcum Fortown. From the copy in the Britwell Library of the earliest perfect edition, that of 1578, a careful reprint was edited in 1868 by the late Dr. Laing (see Appendix to this article).

Laing (see Appendix to this article).

The ed. of 1678 is in four parts:-i. The Catchisme. This includes a prologue, versions of the Ten Commandments, Creed, and Lord's Frayer, with a byzm on Beptism and another on the Lord's Supper, concluding with 6 Graces—in all 12 pleces, 60 which are from the German. it. Spirituali Sungis, 16 in number, of which it are from the German and 1 from the Latin, iii. Ballatis of the Scripture, 20 in number, 1 being from the Oerman. Iv. Fishnes of Basid with other new pleasand Ballatis Translatis out of Enchristion Protomerum to be sung. These include 22 Fraim versions—of which 13 are from the German—3 hymns from the German and 1 from the German. The collection as a whole thus includes 117 pieces, of which 34 at least are from the German gone being very close and others very free versions), and 2 from the Latin. Some of the pieces, though rude, have a wonderful pathos, and even the successition. Four pleces very closely reaemble four of Bishop Coverdale's Goostly Padisses, c. 1539, and were probably derived from it. The book as a whole must be regarded as a poetical miscaliany. Dr. Laing would assign the translations and Psalm versions to John Wodderburn (written probably 1639—46), and a number of the ballads to his brother Robert (see Wedderburn). if the collection was printed in book form before 1559, we may conjecture that it would not contain more than to p. 151 of the edition of 1578. The "augmentation" in 1563 and 1578 seems to have been by various hands.

4. From these beginnings, Scottish, Euglish and Continental, arose the Psalmody and subsequently the Hymnody, which have formed the sole part of Divine worship in the Churches of Scotland in which the congregations have joined for more than 300 years. The first result of importance was the Psalter of 1564-65.

II. The Psalter of 1564-65.

1. The Anglo - Genevan Psalters having been imported into Scotland, the General Assembly of 1561 ordered the completion of the Peaker. The Committee appointed, unlike the editors of the English Psalter of 1562, took the whole of the 87 versions of the Anglo-Genevan of 1561, as these were given in the revised edition printed in England in the same year. These versions were :-

year. These versions were:— 37 by Sternhold, 1849 (Ps. 1-17, 18, 20, 21, 25, 28, 29, 22, 34, 41, 43, 44, 49, 53, 68, 73, 78, 103, 120, 123, 128), and 7 by Hopkins, 1851 (Ps. 30, 33, 42, 52, 76, 83, 146), to which were added at Geneva 16 by Whittingham (Ps. 23, 51, 114, 116, 130, 133, 137, in 1556; Ps. 37, 60, 67, 71, 119, 121, 124, 127, 129, pribably in 1558); 2 by Fullain (Ps. 148, 149, probably in 1558), and 25 by Kethe (Ps. 71, 114, 114, 113, 122; 125, 126, 134, 138, 142). They then added the 15 by Craig and 6 by Pont, noted below. The remaining 42 versions were taken from the English Pselter of 1562, as follows:—2 by Sternhold (Ps. 18, 22), 30 by Hopkins (Ps. 28, 31, 35, 38-40, 45, 46, 49, 56, 60, 61, 64-66, 68, 72, 74, 77, 68, 96, 87, 39, 22, 23, 85-99); 8 by Norton (Ps. 53, 106, 109, 116, 139, 144, 147, 150), and 2 by Marckant (Ps. 131, 135).

The complete version appeared as :-

The Forme of Prayers and Ministration of the Sacranne rome y Proper and structuration of the Sacra-ment, Ac., used in the English Churche of Scalland, approved and received by the Churche of Scalland, whereunto besydes that was in the former bokes, are also added sondrie other prayers, with the whole Prainces of David in English meter. Printed at Edinburgh by Robert Lekprevik, Mouxill.

Of this there is a copy in the Corpus Christi Library, Oxford, and another identical, but dated 1565, in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh. The Advocates' Library, it may also be noted, possesses a copy of the Forme of Prayers printed by Lekprevik in 1562, but this does not contain the Psalter

2. This constituted the first Scottish Psatter properly so called. Regarding it the General Assembly on Dec. 26, 1564, ordained that every minister, mader, and exhorter should have and use a copy. The most important reprints of it are those of 1596, 1611, 1615, 1633, 1634, and 1635.

The Paslms are all initiated with the names of their authors. The numbers are as follows:—To Sternhold are ascribed 40 (including the 23rd), to Hopkins 35, to Kethe 26 (including the 48th), to Whittingham 15, to Graig 16, to Norton 8, to Pont 6, to Marckant 2, and to Pullain 2, the 38th being unscribed. But of these Ps. 28 and 46 are by Hopkins, and Ps. 23 by Whittingham, thus leaving Sternhold 39, Hopkins 37, Whittingham, thus leaving Sternhold 39, Hopkins 37, Whittingham, thus leaving Sternhold 39, Hopkins arraying from these in time leaving Sternbold 39, Hopkins 37, Whittingham 16, and Kethe 25. The versions varying from those in the English Featter of 1562 are in all 44, but of these Whittingham's 23rd and 56th, and Kethe's 166th, were added as alternative renderings to the 1565, and Ornig's 136th, to the 1581 and later editions of the English Featter. The first lines of the remaining 40 are here given, those of the 1561 Anglo-Genevan from the Britwell Library copy, and those of the 1564-65 Scottish Featter from the edition of 1565.

Versions from the Fours wore and town Pealmes, 1661, not included in the English Pealter:—

Of those authors Craig, Kethe, and Pont were Scotsmen.
Until 1635 the melodies only of the proper times were given, but in that year Andro Hart published an edition with the tunes harmonized in four parts. Besides the proper tunes printed with the text of the Paslms, the edition of 1602 contained 3 Common Tunes Patins, the action of 1602 contained 3 Common Tunes (i.e. tunes which could be sung to any Paulm of like metre), to which 9 were added in 1615, 2 in 1633, 3 in 1634, and 14 in 1635, making in all 31. Of the 118 Proper tunes 51 are Genevan, 32 French, 4 German, 21 English, and 10 Scottish; while of the 31 Common tunes 7 are English and 24 Scottish, the 3 tunes in Reports being also Scottish. See the Dissertations and notes in the complete reprint of the Psalter of 1635, edited in 1864 by the Rev. Nell Livingston, D.D., olted in the Appendix to this article. Appendix to this article

Although this Psalter continued in use till the present version was issued in 1650, yet in the meantime an attempt was made to impose upon the Scottish Church the version published at Oxford in 1631 as The Psalmes f King David, translated by King James. This version was in great measure the work of William Alexander, Earl of Stirling [see p. 39, i.]. Under the authority of Charles I. an injunction was published by the Scottish Privy Council in December 1634 that no other Psalms should be printed or imported, Alexander having been on Dec. 26, 1627, granted the exclusive right of publishing it for S1 years. On account of the opposition it created he in great measure rewrote the version. As thus reprinted at London by Thomas Harper in 1636 it was bound up and issued with Laud's Service Book of 1637, the foreible introduction of which caused an uprising of popular feeling over the whole of Scotland. which at once overturned all the ceclesiastical schemes of Charles, and led to the restored

General Assembly at Glasgow, 1638. monopoly of course simultaneously ceased. This version, while possessing felicities, is often harsh and stilted, and the circumstances of its introduction made it altogether upacceptable. We would add that Harper also reprinted the 1636 text in 12mo in 1637, and that in the British Museum (MSS. Reg., 18 B. xvi.), there are preserved as motrical versions in Scotch by King James of 30 Psalms, Ecclesiastes xil., the Lord's Prayer, and the Song of Moses.

III. The Pealter of 1650.

- 1. The desire for Uniformity of Worship between England and Scotland having led to the calling of the Westminster Assembly in 1643, one part of the work recommended to it by Parliament was the preparation of a Psalter for use in both kingdoms. The Lords recom-mended the 3rd ed. 1646, of the version of William Barton, published in 1644 as The Book of Paulms in Metre, and finally revised in 1654; and the Commons the version of Francis Rous, originally published in 1641 and reissued in 1643 as The Psalmes of David in English Meeter set forth by Francis Rous. The latter being preferred by the Assembly was revised by it and published by authority of the House of Commons as The Psalms of David in English Meeter, London, printed by Miles Flesher, for the Company of Stationers, 1646.
- 2. The General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, not being satisfied with the Westminster revision, in 1647 appointed 4 persons to further revise it, viz., John Adamson to revise Ps. 1-40; Thomas Craufurd, 41-80; John Row, 81-120; and John Nevey, 121-150. In revising they were enjoined to use the versions of Zachary Boyd and Sir William Mure of Rowalian, as well as the Psalter of 1564-65. In 1648 their amended version was sent to Presbyteries to examine and report, and in 1649 a final Committee was appointed, consisting of James Hamilton, John Smith, Hugh MacKail, Bobert Traill, George Hutcheson, and Robert Lowrie to examine these reports and the corrections sent in, and to report to the Commission, which was authorised " to conclude and establish the Paraphrase, and to publish and emit the same for publick use." The Commission accordingly thereafter issued :-

Commission accordingly increater issued:— 1650. The Pealms of David in Meater. Sooly translated and diligeably compared with the Original Text and former Translations; More plain, tsmoth, and agreeable to the Text than any herelefore. Allowed by the Authority of the General Astembly of the Kirk of Scotland, and appointed to be surg in Congregations and Families. Edinburgh. Printed by Evan Tyler, Printer to the King's Most Excellent Majesty, 1650, authorising it as the only version to be used after May 1, 1650. And, it may be added, it has survived all proposals to modernise it, eave in orthography, and remains to this day the only version of the Pselms used by Pros-byterian Scotland.

3. Though based on Rous not much remains as first versified by him. Even of the edition of 1646 hardly a version is retained without considerable alteration. In several

The lines and phrases from Sir William Mure and ased. from the Earl of Stirling. William Barton's complaint that much of the version was stolen from him seems quite groundless.

As issued in 1650 the version may be called rude, but its associations have endeared it to the Scottish heart, and its faithfulness, vigour and terseness cannot be denied. These qualities become manifest when it is compared with other versions which, when faithful, have been failures, and when successful have been so expanded and adapted as to have ceased to be faithful. Under "The Lord's my Shepherd, I'll not want," will be found a note on a typical

4. Although the Gaelic Psalms have a limited interest, a few details are necessary to the completeness of our work :-

The first complete version of the Psalms in Gaelic was that by the Rev. Robert Kirk, of Edguhidder, pub. In 1884. In 1889 the first 50 Psalms and been published was taled by the Rev. Robert Rifes, or Radgamaner, published by ministers appointed by the Synod of Argyle, and in 1894. In 1899 the first 50 Pealins had been published by ministers appointed by the Synod of Argyle, and in 1890 those appointed to prepare a complete version of the Pealins in Gaelic were instructed to have their version revised by that Synod and forthwith printed. In 1894 the General Assembly recommended that in Gaelic apeaking congregations this version, printed in 1894, should be used as being in the version of 1694 was revised by the Rev. Alexander MacKarlane, and not the Psalter of 1650. In 1753 the version of 1694 was revised by the Rev. Alexander MacKarlane, of Melfort, and published at Glasgow, along with the Gaelic version of the 45 Paraphrases of 1751, by authority of the Synod of Argyle. His revision was elightly altered by the Bev. Thomas Ross, and reissued in 1607. The Rev. Dr. John Smith, of Campbelton, rewrite MacCarlane's version, and published it at Edinburgh in 1787, adding to it versions of the 37 Paraphrases of 1781. He also published a new version in 1801. From these versions a revised edition was prepared by the Committee of the General Assembly, and published in 1826 at Edinburgh—including the 67 Paraphrases of 1781—as the only version to be used in public worship.

IV. Scripture Songs, 1564-1708.

 The Scottish Pealter of 1564-65 did not contain any Spiritual Songs, but in 1575 5 were given, 10 in 1595, and 14 in 1634. They do not seem to have received direct coclesiestical sanction, and none of them were transferred to the Pealter of 1650 or to the Translations and Paraphrases, 1741-81.

2. By the same Act of General Assembly, 1647, which appointed John Adamson and others to revise Rous's version of the Psalms, it was recommended

"that Mr. Zachary Boyd be at the paines to translate the other Scriptural Songs in meeter, and to report his travels also to the Commission of the Assembly, that, after their examination therof, they may send the same to Presbyteries, to be there considered till the next General Assembly."

Again, in 1648, the General Assembly recommended-

"to Master John Adamson and Mr. Thomas Cranfurd, to revise the labours of Mr. Zachary Boyd, upon the other Scripturall Songs, and to prepare a report therof," to be given in to the Commission, and by them to be examined and transmitted to the Assembly of 1649. But on account probably of the troublons times nothing further was then done.

3. The question, however, came up again in 1696, when the General Assembly enjoined their Commission to revise the Spiritual Songs of Patrick Simson (p. 1058, ii.). Accordingly, after revision, the Commission recommended instances the compilers adopted recasts from them for private use. In 1704 the Assembly the 1564, while in many cases they have incorporated stanzas and couplets from Zachary Boyd's version, and occasionally have taken public use. The Commission accordingly appointed two Committees, at Ediuburgh and I Glasgow, who united in advising -

"That only such of the said printed copie as are purely Scriptural Songs should be recommended for publick use.

The Glasgow Committee (of which Simson was a member) proposed the addition of some of his Ms. versions, and suggested that in all there should be given complete versions of Canticles and Lamentations, with 15 Old Testament and 10 New Testament Songs. In 1706 the Assembly recommended-"to the several Presbyteries of the Church to endoayour to promote the use of these Songs in privat famiand recommended Presbyteries to buy copies of the edition of 1686 to compare with the amendments to be sent to them by the Committee of revision appointed by the Com-mission. In 1707 the Assembly sent the Songs again to the Committee for further revision, and enjoined Presbyteries which had not yet reported to report to the General Assembly of 1708. The Assembly of 1708 accordingly appointed

"their Commission, maturely to consider the printed version of the Scripture Songs, with the remarks of the Presbyteries thereupon,"

and authorized them

"to publish and smit it for the publick use of the Church," as in the case of the Pealter of 1650. And further

"seeing there are many copies of the said version lying on the author's hand, It is recommended to ministers and others to buy the same for private use in the meantime.

By the time that the stock of the 1686 edition was exhausted all idea of issuing the selection authorised for public worship seems to have been abandoned, and no trace of such an issue can be discovered.

V. The Translations and Paraphrases. 1741-1781.

1. These efforts to provide a wider range of subjects in Praise having failed to attain the object sought, the matter was again brought up by an overture to the General Assembly of 1741, which referred it to the Commission. In 1742 the Assembly appointed a Committee to make a collection of Translations into English Verse or Metra, of passages of the Holy Scriptures, or receive in Performances of that kind from any that shall trans-and desired the Presbytery of Dundee or Synod of Angus (whence the overture seems to have come) to transmit to this Committee "what Collections they have made or shall make."

This Committee having made no report the Assembly of 1744 renewed their appointment and added some others to their number. They having appealed for help to the Presbyteries of the Church, received materials "partly for-nished by ministers of this Church," and embodied these in a Draft entitled Translations and Paraphrases of several Passages of Sacred Scripture, which the Assembly of 1745 ordered to be printed and sent to Presbyteries that they might report. Presbyteries being ougreased with the Jacobite movement had to be again enjoined to report by the Assemblies of 1746, 1747, and 1748.

Thus the Metropolitan Presbytery of Edinburgh after revising Nos. 1-9, on March 27 and April S, 1746, did not resume their revision till 1748, when on Jan. 27, March 36, and April 27 they went over the remainder.

The Assembly of 1749 authorised the Committee to print the Paraphrases as amended and send copies to Presbyteries that they might report. None having done so the Assembly of 1750 transmitted the amended Paraphrases to them. The Assembly of 1751 again transmitted them to Presbyteries which had not reported: adding-

"In the meantime, the Assembly recommends the said Psalmody to be used in private families."

After this Presbyteries were again and again enjoined to report, but no further Act was passed.

- 2. The collection of 1745, though thus reprinted with verbal alterntions, was not enlarged in 1749. It consists of 45 Para-phrases (but no Hymns), all of which were afterwards included in the collection of 1781, 23 being by Isaac Watte, 5 by Philip Doddridge, and 2 by N. Tate; while 3 have been attri-buted to Hugh Blair, 3 to William Robertson, and 1 to Thomas Randell - leaving 8 unascribed.
- 3. Though never authorised for use in public worship the 1745-51 collection had been introduced into some congregations, and in 1775 the Synod of Glasgow and Ayr overtured the Assembly to sanction it for public use. Instead of simply granting this, the Assembly appointed a Committee to revise and add to it. The Committee not having made any report the Assembly of 1780 added some new members to their number. length in 1781 they presented a Draft, the Advertisement to which thus describes their work :--

"All the Translations and Paraphrases which had appeared in the former Collection are here, in substance, preserved. But they have been revised with one. Many attentions, and, it is boped, improvements, are made upon them. A considerable number of new Paraphrases, furnished either by members of the Committee, or Ministers with whom they corresponded, are added. The whole is now arranged according to the order in which the several poems its in the books of Scripture. A few Hymns are also subjoined, of such a nature as is supposed will be generally acceptable."

On May 26, 1781, the report of the Committee was given in and read to the Assembly. The Committee were then renewed, and some members added and appointed to report their opinion of the printed Draft, at a future diet of Assembly. Accordingly, on June 1, 1781, the Assembly appointed

"these Translations and Paraphrases to be transmitted to the several Presbyteries of this Church, in order that they may report their opinion concerning them to the anguing General Assembly; and, in the meantime, allows this Collection of secret Poems to be meantime, allows this Collection of sacred Poems to be used in public worship in congregations, where the similater finds it for edification. The General Assembly renews the appointment of their Committee; with powers to judge of any corrections or alterations of these Poems that may be suggested previous to the transmission of the same; and with directions to cause a proper number of copies, with such corrections as they approve, to be printed, for the consideration of Presbyteries, and for public use."

The Assembly further appointed John Dickson, the printer to the Church, to print and publish it, and gave him the sole right of doing so for 5 years; his right being renewed in 1786 for 9 years, and in 1795 for 14 years. The Committee accordingly, after introducing a very considerable number of verbal alterations, published the collection in the same year for public use. After this the Paraphrases were brought before the Assembly in 1786, 1795 and 1803, but only for the purpose of confirming the right of printing.

4. Thus, unlike the Psalters, the Paraphrases of 1781 have never received the formal sanction of the Church. They however still continue to be used in the various sections of Scottish Presbyterianism, and some of them far beyond its bounds.

It may be noted that while in England their use in hymnals other than Presbyterian has been comparatively limited (save Nos. 18, 19, 30, 56, and the recoast 66), in America they have been extensively used by all denominations, the five above, with Nos. 4, 11, 16, being special favourities. As they have come into use in many varied forms, they are all annotated throughout this Dictionary.

The estimates taken of these Paraphrases have varied according to the ecolosisstical and spiritual standpoint of their critics. A common opinion has been that the collection of 1745 was too evangelical for the dominant Moderate party in 1781, and that while gaining in smoothness the Paraphrases lost in vigour and spirituality. As a rule, however, the amendments of 1781 have been improvements. Of the Scottish contributions some are exceedingly good, others possess the merit of being faithful to the text, while some are poor both in thought and expression. Upon the whole the collection is hardly what might have been expected from the gifts and graces of the ministers of the Church of Scotland from 1741 to 1781. For details of the authorship of the Paraphrases, the names of the Committees who compiled them, &c., see the article Scottish Translations and Paraphrases.

VI. The Hymnals.

In Sections following, i.-iv., are given the authorised hymnals of the Established, Free, United Presbyterian, and Evangelical Union Churches. In Sections v.-vii. are given the principal collections of Sectish origin used in the Baptist, Congregational and Scottish Episcopal Churches. Section viii. contains lists of the Private Collections used in the first four Churches; the less important Baptist, Congregational and Episcopal Collections; and hymnals outside these seven denominations.

i. The Established Church of Scotland.—After the publication of the Translations and Paraphrases of 1781, nothing further was done till 1807, when the General Assembly being overtured anent "the improvement of the Psalmody" appointed a Committee to consider "the need of additional Psalm Versions and Paraphrases." In 1811 they were authorised to print their Draft which contained 17 entire Psalms and 21 Psalm portions and Paraphrases. In 1814 they were authorised to reprint their amended draft, containing 16 entire Psalms and 24 Psalm portions and Paraphrases, for transmission to Prosbyteries. In 1820 the Committee were authorised to reprint 19 of the 1814 collection together with 20 or 30 others, and in 1821 Presbyteries were enjoined to report on this new collection, which contained 32 Psalm versions, 17 Paraphrases and 2 Doxologies. In 1822 a Committee was appointed to examine these reports, but no hymnal was authorised or issued. Again, in 1827, a Committee was appointed "for cularging the collection of Translations and Paraphrases from Sacred Scripture, and otherwise improving the Psalmody," but the matter dropped without result. The Assembly The Assembly having been overtured in 1845, appointed a Committee on Psalmody, and in 1847 a second on Paraphrases. These Committees, with additional members, were united in 1850. In 1852 the Assembly having been overtured anent "an authorised collection of sacred hymns" referred the matter to the Committee. They presented a draft of 128 hymns in 1854 which was not canctioned, though 25 of them, with Bp. Ken's morning and evening hymns, were reissued in 1855. A new Committee was appointed in 1855 (enlarged in 1857), who presented in 1856 a draft of 22, in 1859 of 33, and in 1860 of 85 hymus. A special committee was then appointed to revise it, and the draft in 1861 became 97, but as allowed in 1861 as Hymns for Public Worship selected by the Committee of the General Assembly on Psalmody, it contained 89 hymns, 22 doxologies, 3 thanksgivings, 2 dismissions, Hosanus, and 4 sanctuses. After a revision in 1864, in which 22 hymns were omitted and 53 added, the need. of a better selection with less altered texts was made evident, and accordingly what was practically a new Committee was appointed in 1866. They presented successive drafts to the Assembly in 1868, 1869 and 1870, retaining finally from the 1864 revision only 64 hymns, and these practically restored to their original forms. In 1870 the Committee was authorised "to revise the Hymnal and thereafter to publish an edition for the use of such congregations as may wish to avail themselves of it." It was accordingly published in Sept. 1870 as The Scottisk Hymnal, containing 200 bymns, selected with much judgment and taste. Having come into very general use, it was after a time felt that an enlargement was needed. The Committee accordingly in 1882 suggested the preparation of an Appendiz, and in May 1883 presented a draft to the Assembly. This after being sent to all the ministers of the Church for revision during 1883 was sanctioned by the Assembly in 1684 with hymns 201-858, and an Appendix of 86 hymns for children. Editions of the Hymnal have also been published with these additional bymns incorporated in their proper places, in all 442.

In 1862 the Assembly's Committee on Psalmody issued a Hymn Tune Book, which was enlarged in 1865 and incorporated in 1868 in The Church of Scotland Psalm and Hymn Tune Book. This was, as the Committee mention, the first authorised collection of tunes issued since 1650. In 1872 it was reissued, revised and enlarged by the Committee under the musical editorship of William Henry Monk. The Scottish Hymnal has been issued with fixed tunes as a cut book, and also with fixed tunes, the complete tunes being issued in a cut form to the Psalms, Paraphrases and Scottish Hymnal in one volume. The enlarged Scottish Hymnal in one volume. The enlarged Scottish Hymnal of 1884 has also been issued (in 1885) with music ed. by Albert Lister Peace.

ii. The Free Church,-After the formation of the Free Church by the Disruption of 1843 no steps were taken to provide a hymnal till 1866, when, after considerable discussion, the General Assembly appointed a Committee to consider the subject. In 1869 the Assembly authorised its Committee to select from and add to the Translations and Paraphrases of 1781. In 1870 they presented a Draft to the Assembly which was sent for further revision to Prosbyteries in 1871, sanctioned by the Assembly in 1872, and issued in 1873 as Psalm-Versions, Paraphrases, and Hymns. It contains 21 pealm-versions and 123 hymns, including 40 selections from the Translations and Paraphrases of 1781. For this a tune book was published by the Psalmody Committee as The Scottish Psalmody in 1873. This collection being found rather meagre, a Committee of enquiry was appointed in 1877 on whose report a Committee was appointed in 1878 to revise and enlarge it. This Committee presented a Draft to the Assombly of 1880 which, after being revised by the Presbyteries of the Church, was sanctioned by the Assembly of 1881 and issued in 1882 as the Free Church Hymnbook. It contains 387 hymns (including 23 selections from the Paraphrases of 1781) and 30 scripture sentences. The indices in the larger edition without music are by the Rev. James Bouar, M.A., of Greenock, and are among the most accurate and useful yet issued. The Committee having been authorised to set tunes to the hymns, engaged Edward John Hopkins as musical editor, and under his revision the complete book appeared in 1882 as The Free Church Hymnbook with Tunes. One of the best recent hymnals, it owes much of its completeness and excellence as to hymns and music to the energy, good taste, and musical knowledge of the Rov. Professor A. B. Bruce of Glasgow, the Convener of the Committee. Under the revision of Mr. Hopkins the Psalmody Committee then proceeded to set tunes to the Pealter of 1650, the Paraphrases of 1781 and portions of the prose Psalter, and their work was sanctioned by the Assembly of 1888, and published as The Souttish Pealter. Being the Psalms in Metre, with the Paraphrases, and a Selection of the Prose Psalms. With appropriate Tunes and Chants, 1883.

iii. The United Presbyterian Church.—The United Presbyterian Church was formed in 1847 by the union of the United Associate (Secession) and the Relief Churches.

1. As early as 1748 the Associate Synod had requested Ralph Erskine to versify the Songs of Scripture. In 1752 a Committee was appointed to revise his work, but it never met, and his death taking place shortly afterwards the Committee was dissolved in 1753. In May 1811 the session of Well Street Church, London (Dr. Alex. Waugh) asked leave to compile and use a collection, and in Soptember the Synod appointed a Committee to consider the question. In 1812, on the recommendation of this Committee, the Synod formally permitted the use of the Translations and Paraphrases of 1781, and appointed a small committee to compile a new collection. No collection was however thereafter issued. Again in 1842 a Committee was appointed to prepare a collection of Paraphrases and Hymns. They presented a Draft in 1844, and the same, further revised, in 1846, but in the prospect of the Union of 1847 nothing more weather.

2. In 1793 the Synod of the Relief Church was overtured to enlarge the Psalmody, and on May 20, 1794, a Committee of eight was appointed which recommended the selection compiled in 1786 by the Rev. James Steuart, of Auderston, Glasgow, with the additional selections made by the Rev. Patrick Hutcheson of Paisley, as united by the Rev. James Dun of Glasgow, all members of the Committee. This collection was sanctioned by the Synod on the 22nd, and forthwith published as Sacred Songs and Hymns on various Passages of Scripture approved by the Synod of Retief (Glasgow: J. Mennons, 1794). It contains 231 bymus and paraphrases, and is Dun's Collection (Dun having taken Nos. 1-180 from Stewart, and 181-231 with the preface from Hutcheson) with a new titlepage. In 1825 a Committee was appointed to prepare a new selection, who were authorized to print their work in 1831. It was finally sanctioned in 1833, and issued as Hymns adapted for the Worship of God. Selected and sanctioned by the Synod of Relief (Glas.: Blackie & Son, 1833). It was an excellent collection for the time at which it was compiled.

Such was the position of their Hymnody at the Union of 1847.

3. In 1847 the Synod of the United Presbyterian Church appointed a Hymnal Committee, and in 1848 authorised them to prepare a hymnal on the basis of the Relief Hymobook of 1833 and the United Associate Draft Hymnbook of 1848. They presented their first draft in 1848. In 1851 their final draft was approved, and they were empowered, after considering suggestions, to publish it in time for the next Synod. The Synod of 1852 accordingly sanctioned it as the Hymnbook of the United Presbyterian Church (Edin.: W. Oliphant & Co.), with 468 hymns and 23 doxologica. As it contained many hymns which never became popular, and had introduced many alterations into the text of the hymns, a Committee was appointed in 1870 to revise it. In 1873 they were authorised to send their Draft to Presbyteries, and in 1874 to Sessions, and in 1875 were empowered to publish their final draft. The Synod of 1876 accordingly sauctioned it as The Presbyterian Hymnal. In 1874 the Pailmody Committee were authorised to set tunes to the hymns, and in 1875 engaged Henry Smart as musical editor, the completed work, with fixed tunes, being issued in 1877 as The Presbyterian Hymnal with Accompanying Tunes, and containing 366 hymns, 18 dexologies, and 24 scripture sentences. Considering its size it is one of the best modern Hymnals, both as regards bymns and tunes, and their union. Under the same editor the Committee then propaged tunes for the Psalter of 1650, and Paraphrases of 1781, and issued their work in 1878 as The Presbyterian Psalter with Accompanying Tunes. In 1887 Notes on the individual hymns, by Mr. James Thin of Edinburgh, were added to the large type ed. of the words, together with additional scripture | sentences numbered 25 to 133.

IV. The Evangelical Union.

The Evangelical Union was formed at Kilmarnock in 1843 by James Morison of Kilmarneck, Robert Morison of Bathgate, A. C. Rutherford of Falkirk, and John Guthrie of Kendal, who had all been ministers of the United Associate Church in these places, but had been deposed by the Syand for the views they held on the extent of the Atonement of Christ. In doctrine they are closely allied to the Wesleyans, and in polity to the Congregationalists. Their first Hymnal was prepared by a Com-mittee appointed in 1852, and was issued in 1856 as The Evangelical Union Hymnbook. A desire having arisen for a more select and accurate collection, a committee was appointed in 1874 to prepare a new hymnal, and their work was issued in 1878, as The Evangelical Union Hymnal. This consists of 420 hymns, with names of authors and dates of publication affixed, 15 doxologies and 40 chants. It also contains on Index of Authors, and, what is almost a unique feature, a list of original readings where the author's text has been departed from. These were prepared by the Rev. William Dunlop, of Glasgow, the editor, the selection of hymns being made by the Committee as a whole. It is altogether a well selected and well edited collection.

V. Baptist.

The earliest Baptist Church in Scotland now existing is that of Keiss, founded in 1750. No. I was composed for it: Nos. 2 and 3 are the most important of the other Baptist Hymnals.

- 1. A Collection of Hymns and Spiritual Songs. By Sir William Sinclair, Minister of the Gospel of God, and Servant of Jesus Christ (1751). Coutains 60 hymns by Sir William Sincleir, Bert., of Dunbeath, who while residing in his castle of Keiss in Caithness, formed a church there, of which he was pastor from 1750 to 1763, at which date ho left Keiss and went to Edinburgh. It is still occasionally used in Keiss Baptist Church, and was reprinted, unaltered, by Peter Reid, Wick, in 1870.
- 2. A Collection of Christian Songs and Hymns in Three Books (Glas.: D. Niven, 1786), containing in all 275 lymns. It took its final shape in the second ed., pub. by Niveu in 1792 as Pealme, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs, in Three Books, with 330 hymns and an appendix of 28. To the ed. of 1813 (Edin.: J. Hay & Co.) a supplement of 33 hymns was added. The lust form was Pealme, Hymne, and Spiritual Songs in Three Books, Selected for use in the Scoich Baptist Churches. A new impression, with enlarged Supplement (Glas.: A. Liddell & Co., 1841). This contains the 330 hymns and appendix of 28 from the cd. of 1792, a supplement, numbered 331-363, from the ed. of 1813, and a second supplement numbered 364-449 from the ed. of 1830; and gives names of authors of hymns.

3. The Christian Hymnal. A Collection of Hymns for Divine Worship. Selected and arranged by Rev. Oliver Flett. 1871. Contains 437 bymns and 9 scripture selections for chanting, with authors' names and dates, dutes of publication, &c. The compiler of this excellent collection is minister of Storie Street Baptist Church, Paisley.

VI. Congregationalist.

Congregationalism of the English type was introduced into Scotland in 1798. Its principal collections of Scottish origin are-

1. A Collection of Hymns for the use of the Tabernacles in Scotland (Edin.: J. Ritchie, 1800), with 320 hymns. Probably compiled by the Rev. John Aikman of Edinburgh, and Rev. George Cowie, of Montroso. In the 1807 and later eds. (13th ed. 1844), entitled A Collection of Hymns for the use of Christian Churches, and enlarged to 326 hymns. This collection is not of great value.

2. A Selection of Hymns for Public Worship: Intended primarily for the Church in Albion Street Chapel, Glasgow (Glas.: R. Williamson, 1803). Compiled by Dr. Wardlaw, with 822 hymns. In the third, 1811, and later ods. it was entitled, A Selection of Hymne for Public Worship, by Ralph Wardlaw. A supplement was ailded in 1817, making the number in all 493 (13th ed. 1860). Of these 11 are by Dr. Wardiaw. The book seems to have attained its popularity by the influence of its compiler's reputation rather than by its own merits.

3. A Collection of Hymne from the Best Authors, adapted both for Public and Family Worship. Selected and arranged by Greville Eving and George Payne (Glas.: A. Duncan and M. Ogle, 1814, 11th ed., 1848). Ewing was minister of West Nile Street Congregational Church, Glasgow, had been originally a minister in the Established Church, and was one of the founders of Congregationalism in Scotland; while Payne was then minister of the Congregational Church meeting in Bernard's Rooms, Edinburgh. It contains 647 hymns and doxologies. It is not a collection of great

 A Selection of Hymns for Public Worship in Christian Churches. By William Lindsay Alexander, D.D. (Edin.: H. Paton, 1849). This hymn-book (commonly called The Augusline Hymn Book, from the name of Dr. Alexander's church) as first pub., contained 553 hymns and doxologies. Various changes were made in the 2nd, 1858, and subsequent eds., the 5th ed. of 1872 containing 616 hymns, doxologies, and anthems. Of these 7 are original hyums and 5 translations by Dr. Alexander. While his contributions are excellent and useful, the collection as a whole is dis-

5. Hymns of Faith and Life, collected and edited by the Rev. John Hunter, Trinity Continued. Glasgow. 1889. This contains 695 hymns, Nos. 696-865 being words of psalms, canticles and authems.

This is a book of very different type from any of the preceding, being pronouncedly modern, meant as the exposition in song of a "progressive and Catholic Christianity," and having a closer affinity to the collection of Mr. Page Hopps (viii. Sect. xiv., No. 2) than to any other Scottish collection. A considerable proportion of the pieces are really undograatic religious verse, often of considerable beauty and significance, and gathered from a wide circle of Envilish and American authors, but even less suited for public worship than the doctrinal hymne in the earlier Congregational knows.

VII. Scottish Episcopal.

1. General.—No attempt was made to provide an authorised Hymnal for general use till 1856, when, upon representations from the Diocese of Edinburgh, a committee was appointed by the Episcopal Synod consisting of 2 elergymen and 1 layman from each of the 7 dioceses. Of this committee the late Dean E. B. Ramsay was chairman, and the late Archdeacon Philip Freeman, Professor William Bright, Canon Henry Humble of St. Ninian's Cathedrai, Perth, and the Hon. G. F. Boyle, afterwards Earl of Glasgow (who kindly lent a copy of the draft), were leading members. By them was prepared and printed, in 1857, a draft Hymnal for the Scottisk Church, containing 289 hymns, 69 psalms and paraphrases, 42 doxologies, and words of 29 authems. As more than 150 were from the Latin, the Episcopal Synod, instead of sanctioning this form, appointed Dr. Charles Wordsworth, Bishop of St. Andrews, to revise it, and his revision was sanctioned by them and published as A Collection of Hymns to be sung in Churches. Approved and sanctioned by the Episcopal Synod of the Church in Scotland, 1858 (Edin.: R. Grant & Son), with 119 pealms and bymns, all taken from the draft of 1857. Being so small, a supplement was at once compiled by the Edinburgh elergy, and issued in 1858 as Additional Psalms and Hymns selected by several clergymen for the use of their own congregations (Edin.: R. Grant & Son). This brought the number up to 217, increased in the 4th ed. of 1866 to 236, with 20 dexelogies in pt. i. and 16 in pt. ii. Of these Supplemental Hymns, 75 are from the draft of 1857. The book being as a whole meagre, and weak in design, has long since given way to Hymns Ancient and Modern, which though never formally authorised by the Episcopal Synod, is now in almost exclusive use in the Scottish Episcopal Church.

2. Diocesan.

1. A selection of Psalms and Hymns adapted to the use of Protestant Episcopal Congregations (Edin.: R. Grant & Son). This collection, which is of little value, was licensed by its principal compiler, Dr. James Walker, Bishop of Edinburgh, in 1830, and reached its 8th ed. in 1856. It contains 137 pertions of psalm versions, 74 hymns and 12 doxologies.

2. Hymns and Anthems for use in the Holy Services of the Church, within the United Diocess of St. Andrews, Dunkeld, and Dunblane. (Edin.: R. Lendrum). This collection, licensed by Bishop Patrick Torry in 1850, contains 128 hymns, the greater number of which are translations and original hymns by the compiler, Robert Campboll (p. 302, 1.), and a selection of prose Anthems. This is the collection called S. Ninian's Hymns [as being used in St. Ninian's Cathedral, Perth] in the preface to The Hymnagry.

to The Hymnary.

3. Metrical Psalmody, consisting of portions of the several Psalms; and also a collection of Hymns, recommended for use in Public Worship in the Diocese of Glasgow and Galloway (Edin.; R. Grant & Son, 1853). Licensed Jane, 1853, by its compiler, Bishop W. J. Trower, D.D. Contains 272 portions of Psalm-versions, 15 paraphrases of the Psalma, 150 hymns, and 8 doxologies. It is of moderate value.

4. Hymnal for use in the Services of the Church (Aberdeen: D. Wyllie & Son). This collection, known as the Aberdeen Hymnal, was compiled by Norval Clyne (p. 239, i.), and sanctioned by T. G. Suther, Bishop of Aberdeen, in 1857, and reached its 4th 1000 in 1866. It contains 154 hymns and 24 psalm-versions—all, save 8, taken from the draft Hymnal of 1857 (see above).

3. Congregational,

The more important collections, issued mainly for individual congregations, are:—

namily for individual congregations, are:—

1. The Church of England Hymn Book: containing a Selection of Psalms and Hymns for Public and Private Use. By the Rev. D. T. K. Drusmond, B. A., Ozon, and Robert Kaye Greeffle, L.L. D. (Edin. W. Oliphant & Son, 1838). To this collection Mr. Drummond contributed to and Dr. Greville 8 hymns, It was compiled for the use of that Evangelical section of Scottish Episcopalianism which seconds in 1843, and which recently put itself under the care of Bislop Beckles. It contains $25 hymns and is a good hymn-book of the Evangelical school.

contains 625 hymns and is a good hymn-book of the Evangelical school.

2. Hymns and Anthems adjusted to the Church Services throughout the Christian Fear (Lon.: Hope & Co., 1851). Contains 162 hymns, 30 Fealm-versions, and words of 18 Anthems. Compiled by Rev. Gilbert Rorison, LL.D., incombent of St. Peter's, Paterhead, and includes 24 translations by himself, and his well-known hymn, "Three in One, and One in Three," In 1860 he entirely recast it, omitted the anthems, 10 Fealus, and 78 hymns, and re-issued it as Hymns, adapted to the Church Services throughout the Christian Year: with a Steetion of Hetrical Pealus (Peterhead: W. L. Taylor). This form contains 250 pealus and hymns, enlarged by an Appendix, 1869, to 310. It is upon the whole the best Scottish Episcopal Collection.

3. Hymns, Intivitis and Fasims for the use of St. John

3. Hymns, Initialis and Pasims for the use of St. John the Evangelist's, Aberdeen (Aberdeen: A. Brown & Co.). Contains 10th hymns and was edited in 1815 by the Rev. Patrick Cheyne, the incumbent. Reissued, 1865, as Hymnol for the use of S. John the Evangelist's, Sierleen, and Introtts throughout the Year. The first part there contains 111 hymns—not including the introits. This is followed by an Appendix, dated 1853, with hymns 112-262. In the ed. of 1870, the second part (compiled by the Rev. John Comper, incumbent of St. Margaret's) brings up the total to 255. The first part consists unsinty of translations from the Latin, while the second contains a number of translations from the Greek and German, and a good selection of modern English hymns. Mr. Comper also pub. in 1870 Mission Hymns for S. Margaret's Chapel, Aberdeen, With 324 hymns.

contains a number of translations from the Greek and German, and a good selection of modern English hymns. Mr. Comper also pub. in 1879 Mission Hymns for S. Margaret's Chapel, Aberdeen, With 394 hymns.

4. Introduct and Hymns, with some Anthens, compiled for the use of the Collegiate Church, Isle of Cumbrae (Lon. J. Masters & Co., N.E.). This consists of 3 parts. Part I. was pub. in 1852 as Introduc and Hymns, with some Anthens adopted to the Sossons of the Christian Near (Lon.: J. Masters & Co.), and edited by the Rev. George Cosby White, M.A., then Provest of the College at Cumbrae, now of Great Malvern, and was also used in Margaret Street Chapel, London, and elsewhere, Pt. ii. IX. APPENDIX.

1. Scottish Hymn Writers.

Scotland has produced a long series of Burns's connection with the Paraphraiss, the writer minor poets. It would be both difficult and having in his hands a xx, copy of the Paraphraiss pre-useless to enumerate even those of them who have attempted to write sacred pootry. Notices will be found in this Dictionary under their respective names of a very large number of these authors, including the following, who by birth or residence are connected with Scotland, viz. :-

land, viz.:—

10. The Scottish Paraphrases. . . An account of their history, authors, and nonress; together with the winutes of the General Assembly and extracts from winning of the General Assembly and extracts from Presbytery records relative thereto; reprints of the actitions of tras, 1781, and 1781; information regarding hymns contemporary with the Paraphranes; and none account of the Scripture Songs of 1766. By Douglas J. Maclagan. Edinburgh, Andrew Ethot, 1889. This work justifies its title, is well and carefully done, and gathers together almost all the available information. It is especially valuable as reprinting the full text of the very rare edition of 1745.

In appending these authorities it may be stated that the article throughout is based upon independent research, and that in almost every case (save Rous, 1641 and 1643, and the French Psalters) the works mentioned have been examined by myself, or by others on my behalf. To Mr. Clark and the librarians of the Advocates Library, Edinburgh, and to Dr. Dickson, Mr. Lymburn, and the librarians of the Glasgow University Library, I am specially indebted for the full facilities and courteous attention afforded in my researches; to Mr. William Bonar of London I was indebted for the loan of early editions of the Paraphrases, &c.; to Mr. James Thin of Edinburgh, and Mr. W. T. Brooke of London, I am indebted for kind help in completing the lists of Hymnals; and to correspondents, of various denominations, too numerous to mention I am indebted for prompt answers embodying the information they had to give on the points submitted to them. Scottish Psalter. [Scottish Hymnody.]

Scottish Translations and Paraphrases. These Translations and Paraphrases were originally prepared by a Committee appointed by the General Assembly of 1742. They were presented in draft in 1745, and in 1751 were authorised for private use. In 1775 a Committee was appointed to revise and enlarge them for public use, by which a draft collection was prepared and printed in 1781, and after many verbal changes published as Translations and Paraphrases, in Verse, of several Passages of Sacred Scripture. Collected and prepared by a Committee of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, in order to be sung in Churches. Edinburgh: Printed and sold by J. Dickson, Printer to the Church of Scotland MDCCLXXXI [see Scottish Hymnody, v. 1-4].

The Paraphrases of 1781 are made up of 45, taken-some with great alterations-from the collection of 1745; and of 22 added in 1781.

From the 1745 are the following, the numbers being given as in 1781. 23 (Nos. 1, 3, 7, 13, 20, 22, 24, 40, 41, 46, 47, 50 (partly), 51, 54-57, 51, 63-67) by Watts, 8 (Nos. 2, 23, 39, 45, 60) by Doddridge, 2 (Nos. 36, 37) by Tate, 3 (Nos. 4, 33, 34) ascribed to Blair, 3 (Nos. 25, 42, 43) ascribed to Robertson, and 1 (No. 49) ascribed to Randall, leaving 6 (Nos. 5, 18, 23, 26, 38, 48, 52, 58) to which no probable ascriptions have been assigned. been assigned.

Of the 22 added in 1781, 2 (Nos. 6, 15) are by Watts, while 7 (Nos. 8-11, 31, 63, 68) are assigned to Bruce or Logan; 2 (Nos. 27, 28) are said to be joint productions of Logan and Morison; 5 (Nos. 19, 21, 28, 30, 35) are ascribed to Morison; 2 (Nos. 14, 17) to Cameron, 1 (No. 12) to Martin, 1 (No. 16) to Blacklock, 1 (No. 44, really a cento) to Blair, and 1 (No. 62) to Oglivie.
Deducting those by Watts, Hoddridge and Tate, we find of the 67 in 1781 there are 35 of presumably Scottish origin, 8 of which are still shonymous. The subtors of the remarking 22 are noted under Blacklesk.

authors of the remaining 27 are noted under Blacklock, Blair, Bruce, Cameron, Martin, Morison, Ogilvie, Bandall, and Robertson.

Of the Hymns appended in 1781, 3 (Nos. 1-3) are by Addison, 1 (No. 4) by Watts, and 1 (No. 5) by Bruce or Logan [see Bruce].

The Committees who compiled the Paraphrases were thus made up :-

SCRIVER, CHRISTIAN

The Paraphrases of 1751 had been printed at the end of some editions of the Psalter of 1650 (e.g. by Colin Macfarquhar, Edinburgh, 1771), and though the right of printing the Paraphrases of 1781 was assigned to the Church printer up to 1809, yet before the end of the century the King's printer had begun to add them to the Praiter, and they are still almost universally so printed.

Scriver, Christian, a of Christian Scriver (Schriver, Schreiber), merchant at Rendsburg in Holstein, was b. at Rendsburg, Jan. 2, 1629; and was from his birth destined for the ministry. His father d., of the plague, in 1629, but by the help of a rich great-uncle, he was able eventually to matriculate at the University of Rostock in Oct., 1647 (M.A., 1649). In 1650 he became tutor to a family at Segeberg, near Lübeck. While visiting a married half-sister at Stendal, he preached there with much acceptance, and was appointed, in 1653, archidiaconus of St. James's Church there. He then became, in 1667, pastor of St. James's Church at Magdeburg, where he was also appointed, in 1674, assessor at the consistory, in 1676 as Scholarch, in 1679 as Senior; and in 1685 had also the parishes and schools of the so-called Holzkreis placed under his inspection. At length he found his work too heavy, and, in 1650, accepted an invitation to Quedlinburg as consistorial rath and chief court preacher at the church of St. Servatius, and also as private chaplain to Anna Dorothea, Duchess of Saxony, and Abbess of the Lutheran Stift at Quedlinburg. After a series of strokes of paralysis, he d., at Quedlinburg, April 5, 1693 (Koch, iv. 78; Herzog's Real-Encyklopädic, xiv. p. 1, &c.).

Seriver was a most popular, useful, and influential preacher; his earnestness being deepened by the memory of his many wonderful escapes from accident and pestiof his many wonderful escapes from accident and pesti-lenes. He was also the author of various devotional works, which found much acceptance, e.g. his Gottholds 300 Zafallige Andachten, Magdeburg, 1663 (1671, and later eds., have 400 Andachten: English version, as Gott-hold's Emblems, by R. Mennies, D.D., Edinburgh, 1857); his Seelen-Schatt, in 5 parts 1675-92; and his Gotthold's nie Seeten-Senate, in a parts 1610-92; and his tottand a Steeth-und Steeth-Bette, in 2 pate, 1681-94.

It is difficult to say how many hymns Scriver wrote, apparently about ten. He refers to one or two in his Scilenachatts and bis Andachten, but does not give the full texts. A number are included, as by him, in C. Weise's abridgment of the Seetenschatt, which was pub. Welse's abridgment of the Seelenschatt, which was pub-at Wittenberg, in 1704, as the Seelenschates Kraff; and Saft; and C. O. Weinschenk, pastor of St. Ulrich's in Magdeburg, in his Evicutioks Lebra of Scriver (Magde-burg and Leipzig, 1729), gives a list of those he considers genulue.

Those of Scriver's hymns which have passed into English are:-

i. Auf, Beel, und danke deinem Herrn. Morning. Included, 1704, as above, and in 1729, also marked as by Scriver. But Scriver's con-in-law, Johann Heinrich Hilvecker (b., 1640, at Kalbe, near Magdeburg, became diaconus, and, in 1693, pastor at Kalbe; latterly, also, Inspector of the Holzkreis; and d. at Kalbe, in 1722], in his Dreyfach schallend und nachhallend Kirchen-Echa, Leipzig, 1695, p. 3, claims it as his own. It is in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1078. Tr. as, "To God, my Soul, Thank-offerings pay." By H. J. Buckell, 1842, p. 30.

ii. Der lieben Bonne Licht und Pracht. Evening. This is Scriver's best hymn. It seems to be carlier than 1671, as in that year Scriver quotes st. viii., in his Andachten, as above. According to tradition it was written one evening when Seriver was disturbed by hearing outside a profane song sung to a beautiful melody; whereupon he, grieved that the melody should be so misapplied, composed this hymn for it. Rambach, in his Anthologie, iii. p. 205, prints the hymn from the Vollständiges G. B., Hamburg and Ratzeburg, 1684, in 9 st. of 7 l. In the Lüneburg Stadt G. B., 1686, No. 1907, it is marked as "M. C. S.;" and in Hävecker's Kirchen-Echo, 1695, p. 30, as M. C. Scrivers. It is also in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1153. Regarding it Lauxmann, in Koch, viii. 201, speaks thus:-"Of the beautiful hymn of this true Teacher, the Chrysostom of our Lutheran church, in which the thoughts of Gerhardt's evening hymn [p. 622, i.] ring and are powerfully recchoed; st. vi.-viii., are of the greatest force, and of these especially st. viii." He also gives a portion of a sermon on Rogation Sunday, 1671, in which Scriver quotes st. viii. as expressing the deepest sentlments of his heart. Tr. as:-

1. With Thee I lay me down to aleep. This is a tr. of st. v., vii., viii., as No. 481, in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bh., 1754. It is also found in the following forms:-

i. In peace I'll now lie down to sleep. In the Moravian H. lik., 1782.

il. I lay me down with Thee to sleep. In Maurice's Choral H. Bk., 1861. iii. In peace will I lie down to sleep. In the Moravian H. Bk., 1886.

2. My praise again I offer Thee. A tr. of st. iv., v., by A. T. Russell, as No. 6, in his Ps. & Hys., 1851.

3. The lovely Bun has now folfilled. This is & tr. of st. i., iv., v., ix., dated 1882, by M. W. Stryker, in his Hys. & Verses, 1883, p. 28, repented in his Christian Chorals, 1885, No. 16. in his Song of Miriam, 1888, p. 26, it begins "The golden Sun has now fulfilled."

iii. Hier lieg ich zun mein Gott zu deinen Füssen. Repentance. Lent. Included in Hävecker's Kirchen-Echo, 1695, p. 351, in 28 st. of 4 l.; re-peated in Burg's G. B., Breslau, 1746, No. 1582, &c. It is included as Scriver's, in 1704, as above; and so in Burg, and by Koch; but Weinschenk

Here, 0 my 6 ed, I cast me at Thy feet. This is a tr. of st. i., iii., v., vi., z., xi., zxi., xxiii., xxiii., xxvii., xxviii., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger. 1st Scr., 1855, p. 63. In her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 45, it begins, "Here, O my God, low at Thy feet I bend me;" is altered in metre; and omits the fr. of st. iii., Il. 3, 4; v.; vi., Il. 1, 2; and xxiv. IJ. M.)

Scudder, Eliza, niece of Dr. E. H. Sears, (q.v.), was b. in Boston, U.S.A., Nov. 14, 1821, and now (1888) lives in Salem, Massachusetts. Formerly an Unitarian, she some time ago joined the Protestant Episcopal Church. Her hymne in C. U. are :—

1. From past regret and present [faithlessness] seebleness. Repentance. In the Quiet Hours, Boston, 1875.

2. I cannot find Thee! Still on restless pinion, Sekking offer God. Appeared in Longfallow and Johnson's United an Hyr. of the Spirit, 1864.

3. In Thes my powers and treasures live. Faith and My. In the Hys. of the Spirit, 1864. It is from a hymn of 10 st. beginning. "Let whosoever will enquire," entitled, "The New Heaven," and dated 1855.

4. Life of our life, and light of all our seeing! Prayer. In the Boston Quiet Hours, 1875.

5. The day is done; the weary day of thought and tail is past. Evening. In Sermons and Songs of the Christian Life, by E. H. Sears, Boston, and ed., 1878, p. 256, entitled "Vesper Hymn," and dated "October, 1874." This is possibly her finest byun.

1874." This is possibly her finest hymn.

6. Thou grace divine, sucircling all. Divine Grace. Appeared in Dr. E. H. Sear's Fictures of the Olden Time, as thouse in the Fortunes of a Family of Pilgrens, 1851. It was written in 1852, and included in the Boston Mys. of the Spirit, 1864. It has sometimes been taken as "An Ancient Catholic Hymn" (Universalist's Ps. 46 Hys. 1895), but in error.

7. Thou long discounced, reviled, oppress. The Spirit of Truth. In the Boston Hys. of the Spirit, 1864.

Of these hymns, Nos. 2, 6, and 7 are in Dr. Martineau's Hymns, 1873. Some of Miss Scudder's poetical pieces appeared in Dr. Sears's Monthly Heligious Magazine. Her Hymns and Sonnets, by E. S., were pub. by Lockwood, Brocks & Co., Boston, 1880. From this her hymn "Thou hast gone up egain" (Accension), la taken. [F. M. B.]

Σὲ καὶ νῦν εὐλογοῦμεν. Gregory of Nazianzus. [Evening.] This hymn is given in his Works, Paris, 1611, i.; in Daniel iii. 13; and in the Antho. Graca Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 29. It is tr. as "And now again at night" by A. W. Chatfield in his Songs and Hys. of Earliest Greek Christian Poets, 1876, p. 122, iu 8 st. of 4 l. (See Greek Hymnody, § iv.) dates 324-389, and contains 28 lines. [J. J.]

 Σ è μ èv lpha $ho\chi$ o μ évaarphi. Synesius, Bp. of Ptolemais. [Morning or Evening.] Hymn iv. of ten hymns composed by him at various periods of his life, 375-430. The full Greek text is found in the Antho. Graca Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 15 in 299 lines. It is tr. as "To Thee at evening grey," by A. W. Chatfield in his Songs and Hys. of Eurliest Greek Christian Poets, 1876, p. 56, in 27 st. of 8 l. (See Greek Hymnody, § v.) It is an Evening Hymn, and contains several passages of great beauty which might be utilized in the form of a cento for congregational use. Another tr. is "Thee at the break of sacred day," by Alan Stevenson in his The Ten Hymns of Synesius, &c., 1865. [J. J.]

Σε του ἄφθιτου μονάρχην. gory of Nazianzus. [Praise to Christ.] This hymn to Christ is given in his Works, Paris, 1611, i.; in Daniel iii. 5; and in the Antho. Græca Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 23, in 51 lines. It is tr. as "O Thou the One supreme," by A. W. Chatfield in his Songe and Hys. of Earliest Greek Christian Poets, 1876, p. 93, in 13 st. of 6 l. It is a flue hymn gracefully translated. (See Greek Hymnody, § iv.) It dates 324-389. (J. J.)

Seagrave, Robert, M.A., a. of Robert Seagrave, Vicar of Twyford, Leicestershire, was b. at Twyford, Nov. 22, 1693, and educated at Clare College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1714. Taking Holy Orders he entered most earnestly into the movement then being carried forward by the Wesleys and Whitefield; and between 1731 and 1746 he issued numerous letters and pamphlets, &c., designed to awaken in the clergy a deeper earnestness in their work. In 1739 he was appointed Sunday Evening Lecturer at Loripers' Hall, London, where he continued to preach till 1750. He also occupied Whitefield's Tabernacle from time to time. His hymns, which were better known and more highly appreciated by the older compilers than those in modern days, and will still repay perusal, were included in his collection, pubby him for use at the Loriner's Hall, as Hymns for Christian Worship, partly composed, and partly collected from Various Authors, 1742. The 4th ed. was pub in 1748, and the originals were reprinted by D. Sedgwick as Seagrave's Hymns, in 1860. Two of these bymns are still in C. U.:—

1. Now may the Spirit's holy fire. Opening of a Place of Workip. This, from Hys. for Christian Worship, &c., 1743, was given by G. Whitefield as the opening hymn of his Hys. for Social Worship, &c., 1753. It was repeated in Topiady's Fr. & Hys., 1775; and again in later collections to modern hymn-books.

S. Rise, my soul, and stretch thy wings. Filgrin's Song. Also from bls Hymns, &c., 1742, into G. Whitefield's Hymns, &c., 1753; and again in others to modern hymn books.

[J. J.]

Searcher of hearts, before Thy face. P. Doddridge. [Lent.] Pub. by Job Orton, in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 250, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Peter's Admonition to Simon Magus, Acts viii. 21–24." It was repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839. [J. J.]

Sears, Edmund Hamilton, D.D., a of Joseph Sears, was b. at Sandisfield, Berkshire County, Massachusetts, April 6, 1810, and educated at Union College, Schenectady, N.Y., where he graduated in 1834; and at the Theological School at Cambridge. In 1838 he became paster of the First Church (Unitarian) at Wayland, Massachusetts; then at Lancaster in the same State, in 1840; again at Wayland, in 1847; and finally at Weston, Massachusetts, in 1865. He d. at Weston, Jan. 14, 1876. He pub.:—

(1) Regeneration, 1854; (2) Pictures of the Olden Time, 1857; (3) Athanasia, or Foregleaus of Immortaitiy, 1858, enlarged ed., 1872; (4) The Fourth Gospel theart of Christ; (5) Sermons and Songs of the Christian Life, 1876, in which his hymna are collected. Also co-editor of the Monthly Religious Magasine.

Of his hymns the following are in C. U.:-

1. Calm on the listening ear of night. Carisinas. This hymn "was first published in its original form, in the Botton Obstror, 1894; afterwards, in the Carisidan Register, in 1895; subsequently it was emended by the author, and as thus emended, was reprinted entire in the Monthly Magazine, vol. xxxv." (Putnam, 1874, p. 306.) This emended text is given in Putnam's Singers and Sings of the Liberal Faith, p. 306, in 5 st. of 8]. Usually, both in G. Hritain and America, the text is abbreviated. Its use is extensive.

2. It came upon the midnight clear. Christmas. The "Rev. Dr. Morison writes to us, 'Sears's second Christmas hymn was sent to me se editor of the Christmas hymn was sent to me se editor of the Christmas hymn was sent to me se editor of the Christmas Register, Itbink, in December, 1849. I was very much delighted with it, and before it came out in the Register, read it at a Christmas celebration of Dr. Lunt's Sanday School in Quincy. I always feel that, however poor my Curistmas sermon may be, the reading and singing of this bymn are enough to make up for all deficiences." (Paisaus, p. 30c.) It appeared in the Christma Register, Bec., 1850, in 6 st. of 8 L, and is now in extensive use in G. Britain and America.

3. Ho, ye that rest beneath the rock. Charitable Meetings on behalf of Children. Appeared in Long-fellow and Johnson's Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, 1804, in 2 st. of 3 l.

Dr. Sears's two Christmas hymns rank with the best on that holy season in the English language. Although a member of the Unitarian body, his views were rather Swedenborgian than Unitarian. He held always to the absolute Divinity of Christ. [F. M. B.]

Sedgwick, Daniel, was b. in Leadenhall Street, London, Nov. 26, 1814, of poor parents. His education was of the scantisst. Although apprenticed to a shoemaker at an early age, the elements of the trade were not taught him, and through ill health and neglect, at the completion of his apprenticeship, he was unable entirely to earn his own living. During his rambles, he occasionally soluced himself with the purchase of old hymnbooks, and in the study and comparison of these he began to find his chief delight. He joined himself to the strict Baptist congregation, worshipping in Providence Chapel, Greevenor Street, Commercial Road, in 1839, having previously married a wife of his own humble station and education. At the age of 23 he began to dabble in the secondhand book trade, and gradually worked up a con-nection. About 1840 he taught biuself writing by copying printed letters, and acquired a singularly neat and clear hand. Hymnbooks then were a drug in the market, and he gradually acquired a noble collection. About 1852 he began the issue of reprints of the rarer hymn-writers of the 17th and 18th cents., and in his Library of Spiritual Song he republished the hymns of William Wil-liams, John Mason, Thomas Shepherd, Robert Seagrave, Joseph Grigg, Anne Steele, John Ryland, John Stocker, James Grant, Thomas Olivers, Bishop Ken, and others. This scries brought him into communication with many clergy, and with ministers of all denominations, and the humble bookseller of 81 Sun Street, Bishopegate, would there receive men of high station and culture and teach them the rudiments of the then infant science of English Hymnology. It was, however, on the publication of Sir Roundell Palmer's, (Lord Selborne's) Book of Praise, in 1862, that Sedgwick first took his place as the foremost living English hymnologist. With all his dogmatic ignorance and want of power to balance evidence, his industry and perseverance in fol-lowing up clues in every direction, led to the formation of an invaluable library, and to a unique correspondence. In the purchase, sale, and exportation of duplicates, and in assisting hymn-compilers in tracing dates, authors, and copyrights, he passed, from 1862 till his death in 1879, the happiest years of his life. He was consulted by men of all shades and opinious, and Hymns Ancient and Modern owed, from its carliest days, something to his assistance. He was consulted at every step by the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon for his Our Own Hymnbook (1866); and in Josiah Millor's Singers and Songs of the Church every article had the benefit of his knowledge and revision; in fact the practised expert can detect in that work baseless suggestions and erroneous conclusions, which arose out of Mr. Miller's too close adherence to his guide. Sedgwick's health began to fail rapidly in 1879, and exhausting and severe spasms of heart disease followed to his death. On Sunday, March 9th, he taked in the afternoon for Cennick's "Thou dear Redeemer, dying Lamb," to be sung to him, the last verse,

"When we appear in youder cloud With all the ransomed throng, Then will we stog more sweet, more loud, And Christ shall be our song," being specially dwelt on by him. It was in the very early hours of the following morning that, with the words, "Hallelujah, Praise the Lord," on his lips, he fell saleep; and on the 15th March, 1879, he was buried at Abney Park cemetery. He may well be called the father of English Hymnology; and it is to be specially remembered, to his bonour, that, with ali drawbacks of education, temperament, and narrow theological prepossessions, he, by the collection and comparison of hymne and hymnological literature, and by careful annotation, made it possible for others to reap a rich harvest, by bringing their education, critical acumen, wide sympathies, and accurate know-ledge of Biblical, classical, coclesiastical, and historical subjects to bear upon the stores of hymnological wealth which he had accumulated, but which, to a very great extent, he [W. T. B.] could not use.

Sedgwick, John, D.D., was b. at Wimble-don, April 24, 1823, and educated at Christ Church and Magdalen College, Oxford; B.A. 1846, D.D. 1859. He was a Fellow of Magdalen College 1855-63; Bursar, 1859-60; and Vice-President 1860-61. He was also successively Curate of Greinton, Somerset, 1854; Chaplain of High Legh, Cheshire, 1858; Rector of Great Houghton, Northants, 1862; of Stoke-Climsland, Cornwall, 1872; and of Birdbrook, Essex, 1876. He has pub. History of France, 1849; History of Europe, 1850; Hints of the Establishment of Public Industrial Schools, 1853; and Oremus: Short Prayers in Verse for Sundays and Holy Days, suggested by the Services of the Church of England, 1852. From the last work his Quinquagesima hymn, "Lord of love, Whose words have taught us," in Kennedy, is taken, and many more of equal merit remain.

Sedulius, Coelius. The known facts concerning this poet, as contained in his two letters to Macedonius, are, that in early life, he devoted himself to heathen literature; that comparatively late in life he was converted to Ohristianity; and that amongst his friends were Gallieanus and Perpetus. The place of his birth is generally believed to have been Rome; and the date when he flourished 450. For this date the evidence is, that he referred to the Commentaries of Jerome, who d. 420; is praised by Cassiodorus, who d. 575, and by Gelasius, who was pope from 492 to 496. His works were collected, after his death, by Asterius, who was consul in 494. They are (1) Carmen Paschale, a poem which treats of the whole Gospel story; (2) Opus Paschale, a prose rendering of the former; (3) Elegia, a poem, of 110 lines, on the same subject as the Carmen; (4) Veteris et Navi Teslamenti Collatio; and (5) the hymn, "A solis ortus cardine" (s. 4, i.). Areval (1794) quotes 16 mss. of Sedulius's work, ranging in date from the 7th to the 16th cent. The best ed. of his Opera is that by Dr. J. Huemer, pub. at Vienna in 1885. Areval's text is printed in Migne's PP. Lat. vol. wix. This Sedulius must not be confounded with the Irish, or with the Scottish Sedulius, as is sometimes [J. J.] done.

See amid the winter's snow. E. Carspall. [Christmas.] Pub, in his Masque of Subject. By a Lady [Rebecca Wilkinson].

Mary, &c., 1858, p. 259, in 7 st. of 4 l., and a chorus. It was repeated in his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 280. It is given, in an abbreviated form, in several hymn-books. It sometimes begins with an altered form of st. ii. as, "See in yonder manger low."

See, gracious God, before Thy throne. Anne Steele. [Public Humiliation.] Written for the Public Fast, Feb. 6, 1756, in 7 st. of 4 l., and published in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. i. pp. 248-9; in the new ed. of same, 1780, vol. i. pp. 248-9; and in D. Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, &c., 1863, p. 115. In its full form it is not in common use. From it, however, the following centos are taken:

centos are taken:—

1. Almighty God, before Thy thrane. This, as given in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, No. 274, and some of the older collections, is the above slightly altered, together with the outselon of st. v. The same first line begins a cento in 4 st. is usually found in modern hymnals. It is composed of st. i., ii., vi. and vii., also altered, sometimes as in Stevenson's Hys. for Charch & Home, No. 5, and again as in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., No. 869.

2. Almighty Lord, before Thy throne, is the same cento with further alterations; S. P. C. K. Pt. & Hys., No. 138; and in a fuller form of 3 st. of 8 l., being st. i., ii., v.-vii. (again altered), and a doxology.

No. 135; and in a fuller form of 3 st. of 3 l., being st. i., ii., v. wii. (again altered), and a doxology.

3. Behold, O Lard, before Thy Thruns. This cento in the New Cong., 1353, No. 934, is composed of st. i., iii., vi., and a concluding stanza, "Hear Thou our prayer," which we have not traced. The second stanza of the original "Tremendous judgments from Thins hand," sometimes given as "Dark judgments," kc., and again as "Dark judgments," kc., has, according to a note to the original a world reference to the Libon earthto the original, a special reference to the Lisbon earth-quake of 1755.

See, gracious God, before Thy thrune. An abbreviated form of the original in a few modern collections.

See how great a flame aspires. CWesley. [Praise for the Success of the Gospel.] In Jackson's Memoirs of the Rev. Charles Wesley, small ed., 1848, p. 191, this hymn is referred to under the date of Nov. 1746, as follows :-

"The very animated and emphatic hymn beginning—
'See how great a flame aspires,
'Kindled by a spark of grace,' was also written by Mr. Charles Wesley on the joyful occasion of his ministerial success, and that of his fellow labourers, in Newcastle and its vicinity. Perhaps the imagery was suggested by the large fires connected with the collieries, which illuminate the whole of that part of the country in the darkest nights."

The hymn was pub in Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1746, vol. i., No. 4, of 4 hymns, written "After Preaching to the Newcastle Colliers," in 4 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 120). It was given in the Wes. H. Blc., 1780, No. 209, and is found in numerous collections.

See how the rising sun. Elizabeth Scott. [Morning.] Appeared in J. Dobell's New Selection, &c., 1806, No. 440, in 7 st. of 4 l., and headed "Morning Hymn." It is given as "See how the mounting sun" in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Colt., 1855, and as "See how the morning sun," in the Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1849, and the Hymnal, 1878. There is also a cento in C. U. beginning with st. iii. "Serene I lay me down." [J. J.]

See in the vineyard of the Lord. [The barren Fig-tree; or, Close of the Year.] This hymn is given in 6 st. of 4 l. at the close of Sermon xvil. of Short Sermons to Children, to which are added Short Hymns suited to the London: Printed and Sold by the Philanthropic Society, St. George's Fields, N.D., [circa 1795]. It appeared in an improved form in the 1815 Appendix to T. Cotterill's Sel., No. 208, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in the 1819 ed. of the same, No. 205. It is in several collections in G. Britain and America, and is sometimes said to be by "Cotterili, based upon Doddridge;" and again by "Cotterili, based upon Harbottle." It has, however, little or nothing in common with any hymn by Doddridge; nor with Harbottle's, "See how the fruitless figtree stands," which appeared in The Comprehensive Rippon, 1844, though probably written sometime before that date. [See Harbattle, J., p. 464, i.]

See Israel's gentle Shepherd stand. P. Doddridge. [The Good Shepherd.] 1st pub. by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, 1755, No. 198, in 5 st. of 4 l., and 'headed "Christ's condescending Regard to little Children;" and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 221. In addition to its use in its original form it is found as follows:--

1. Lo! Israel's gracions Shepherd stands. This was given in Bickerstath's Caristian Psalmody, 1833.

2. The gentle Saviour cells. This altered form, in 3 st. of 4 L. was made by Bp. Onderdonk for the American Prayer Sk. Coll., 1826, No. 87. It is in reversi modern collections, and is suitable for Holy Baptism.

J. The Savieur's gentle voice. This is in Kennedy, 1-43, No. 231. It is the American text rewritten by Dr. Kennedy.

In these various forms this hymn has a wide circulation. [J. J.]

See, sinners, in the gospel glass. C. Wesley. [Invitation.] Pub. in Hys. on God's Everlasting Love, 1741, No. 10, in 18 st. of 6 l., and again in the P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iii. p. 20. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, it was broken up thus:-

- See, sinners, in the gospel glass, at i.-iv.
 Sinners, believe the gospel word, at, vi,-ix.
 Would Jesus have the sinner die? at, xii., xiv.,

These hyuns have been repeated in several collections. The centos, "Behold the Lamb of God, Who bears The sins of all," &c., in Mercer's Church Pealter & H. Bk., 1855; and "See where the lame, the halt, the blind," in Dr. Alexander's Augustine H. Bk., 1849 and 1865, are also from the original hymn. [J. J.]

See the Conqueror mounts in triumph. Bp. C. Wordsworth, of Lincoln. [Ascension.] 1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1862, p. 99, in 10 st. of 4 double lines. In the latest editions of the Holy Year it has been divided into two parts, Pt. ii. beginning with st. vi. "Holy Ghost, Illuminator." Usually these two parts are given as separate hymns for con-gregational use. In addition a cente, begin-ning with st. ii., "Who is this that comes in glory?" is given as a hymn. The original is one of Bishop Wordsworth's finest compositions, and is the nearest approach in style and treatment to a Greek Ode known to us in the English language. The amount of Holy Scripture compressed into these 40 lines is wonderful, Prophecy, Types, Historical Facts, Doctrinal Teaching, Extatic Praise, all are here; and the result is one grand rush of hely [J. J.] aong.

See the [good] kind Shepherd, Jesus, stands. [The Good Shepherd.] This bywn is found in [Rebecca Wilkinson's] Short Sermons to Children, To which are added Short Hymns suited to the Subject [circa 1795]; later ed. pub. at Bath 1798, No. I, in 4 st. of 4 L In J. Benson's Hys. for Children, selected chiefly from the publications of the Rev. John and Charles Wesley and Dr. Watts, &c., 1814, it was given anonymously as No. 15. From that collection it has passed into a large number of hymn-books for children. In the Short Sermons there is nothing to show by whom the hymn was composed. It is sometimes given as "See the good Shepherd, Jesus, stands."

See where the Lord His glory spreads. T. Kelly. [Ascension.] Appeared in his Hymns, &c., 2nd ed., 1806, in 6 st. of 4 l., and again in later editions of the same (ed. 1853, No. 46). In Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, and other American collections, it begins with st. ii., altered to "Around the Saviour's lofty throne." In this form it is a good hymn on "Christ as King." [J. J.]

Seelenbräutigam, O du Gotteslamm! N. L. von Zinzendorf. [Follow Christ.] Written in Sept., 1721. 1st pub. as No. 434 in the Sammlung g. und l. Lieder, Leipzig & Görlitz, 1725, in 11 st. of 6 l.; repeated in the Herrnhut G. B., 1735, and in Knapp's ed. of Zinzendori's Geistl. Lieder, 1845, p. 22. The form which has attained the greatest popularity in German is a cento beginning "Jesu, geh' voran " (p. 589, il.). The only tr. in C. U. from the full form is:--

O Thou to whose all-searching sight. A free tr. by J. Wesley, in the Wesley Ps. & Hys., 1738, and H. and Sucred Poems, 1739 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i., p. 137), in 6 st. of 4 l. St. i.-iii. are based on st. i., ii. ; st. v.-vi. on x., xi ; while st. iv. is from st. xii. of the hymn "Wer ist wohl wie du," by J. A. Freylinghausen (p. 298, ii.). This tr. was included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 330 (1875, No. 339), and has since appeared in many collections, e.g. recently in Churck Hys. 1871, Hyl. Comp. 1876, Allon's Cong. Psaimist Hyl., 1886, &c.; and in America in the Episcopal Hymnal, 1871; Pres. Hymnal, 1874; Evangetical Hyl., N. Y., 1880, &c. The hymn "As through this wilderness we stray," in the Marylebone Ps. & Hys., 1851, Irish Church Hyl. 1869 and 1873, Universal H. Bk., 1885, &c., consists of st. iii.vi. of Wesley altered. Wesley's tr. in whole or in part is in extensive use. [J, M.]

Selnecker, Nicolaus, D.D., s. of Georg Selnecker (Selnecour, Schellenecker, who was protonotarius to the Nürnberg magistracy, but lived at Hersbruck near Nürnberg) was b. at Hersbruck Dec. 5, 1532. In 1536 he was removed to Nirnberg, and became during his school time, when only twelve years old, organist at the chapel in the Kaiserburg there. He went to the university of Wittenberg in 1550 (where he became a favourite pupil of Melanchthon), graduated M.A. on July 31, 1554, and subsequently lectured as a privat-decent, sometimes to 200 students. In the end of 1557 he was appointed second court preacher at Dresden, and tutor to the heir app rent Prince Alexander, having also to aupervise the education of the choirboys of 1 the royal chapel. He was orduined at Wittenberg Jan. 6, 1558. The principal theologians at the Saxon court at that time were inclined to follow Melanchthon's lead and to approximate to Calvin's teachings regarding Consubstantiation. When therefore Selnecker thought it his duty openly to declare his adhesion to strict Lutheranism, he found his position almost untenable. When Martin Hoffmann of the Neustadt church in Dresden preached against the Elector August's passion for game preserving, Schnecker took Hoffmann's part. His enemics took advantage of this, and managed so that after Hoffmann had been expelled from Dresden, in August, 1564, Schnocker was requested to seek work elsewhere (see No. iii. below. The hymn more probably refers to Schoeker's own troubles at this period). Ho preached his farcwell ser-mon at Dresden on March 15, 1565, and on the 26th he entered on his new office of Professor of Theology at Jena. After the siego of Gotha, Duke Johann Wilhelm of Saxony recalled Wigand and other professors of Theology who had been expelled from Jena, in 1561, as adherents of Flacius; and Selnecker, not being so extreme a Lutheran as they, had to leave Jena. Thereupon the Elector August again received him into favour, appointed him professor of Theology at Leipzig, and also paster of St. Thomas's church and Superintendent of Leipzig. He entered on his duties at Leipzig in August 1568, and for some time worked quietly and successfully. In July 1570 the Elector acceded to the request of Duke Julius of Brunswick for Selnecker's services, and gave Selnecker leave of absence to go to Wolfenbüttel as court preacher and general superintendent. Here he succeeded in inducing the clergy to receive the so-called Saxon Confession, and persevered in zealous visitations of churches, schools, &c. After 1572 he resided at Gandersheim, took an interest in the Gymnasium there, &c. In 1573 he also visited, and drew up a book of Church Order and Discipline for the district of Oldenburg-Jever. But in Brunswick, what with Martin Chemnitz the Superintendent of Brunswick, who was a High Lutheran, the Duke who wished for peace, and the other General Superintendent at Wolfenbüttel, Selnecker found it a difficult matter to work comfortably, and was himself accused of Crypt)-Calvinism. He therefore gladly accepted the Elector August's recall to Leipzig, and began to lecture there again in Feb. 1574. In 1576 he was once more appointed paster of St. Thomas's Church, and Superintendent. At Leipzig the sacremental controversy broke out afresh, and Seinecker became deeply involved therein. He was then engaged in drawing up the Formula of Concord (meant to unite the Lutherans, but to exclude the Romanists on one hand, and the Calvinists on the other), which was finally revised on May 29, and pub. on July 22, 1577. The Formula of Concord was so far a success that it was very largely subscribed, but at the same time its authors, and specially Selnecker, were subjected to the most violent abuse both from the High Lutherans and from the Calvinists, so much so that be called 1579 his "year of patience and silence." For a few years immediately thereafter his life was a more peaceful one, and he found time to devote to poetry and music. At this time he assisted greatly in the building up of the famous Motett Choir of St. Thomas's Church, which J. S. Bach afterwards condonted. But on the death of the Elector August in 1586 the real direction of affairs passed into the hands of Dr. Nicolaus Crell, Chancellor to the Elector Christian I., and under his rule the Lutheran clergy were gradually displaced by Melanchthonians and Crypto-Calvinists. When the new court When the new court preacher Salmuth began to issue a German Bible with notes in which he clearly taught Calvinism and impugned the Formula of Concord, Selnecker published a pamphlet in opposition, and was in consequence deprived of his offices on May 17, 1589. For a time he stayed on in his own house in Leipzig, and used his pen in controversy. But after having received, on Oct. 22, notice to cease writing, he thought it prudent to leave Leipzig, He found many sympathisers, and after a short time spent in Halle and then in Magdeburg, he accepted the appointment of Super-intendent at Hildesheim. Here he had many anxious and weighty matters to settle, and was finally called on, in 1591, to arbitrate in matters of dispute at Augsburg. Returning from Augsburg in stormy December weather, and being worn out and seriously ill, he reached Hildesheim half dead, and was conflued to his room till April. Meantime the Elector Christian I. had suddenly died, and his widow, after deposing the Chancellor Crell, proceeded to recall those whom Crell had banished. Selnecker, spite of his weakness, welcomed the idea of returning to Leipzig, left Hildesheim on May 9, and reached Leipzig on May 19; but only to die. He d. at Leipzig, May 24, 1592 (Koch, ii. 1917, v. 656; Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie, xiv. 76; G. A. Will's Nürnbergisches Gelekrien Lezicon, pt. iii. 1757, p. 670, and Supplement, pt. viii. 1808, p. 198, &c.). Koch dates his birth 1530, but Will quotes an apparently genuine auto-biographical sketch in which Schnecker gives the date 1532; and the reference which Kook, ii. 191, makes to Selnecker's Paraphrasis Paulterii is full of misprints, for that work was pub. in 1573 (not 1583), and the dato after Ps. cl. is "Absolutum Gandesine [i.e. Gandersheim], Anno 1573, die Mali 25, qui est dies Urbani, Anno actatis 42 (not 45)."

Schnecker, as we have seen, was a prominent figure in the ecclesisatical history of Germany in the latter half of the streenth contury, and a good fillustration of the extremes to which theological controversies were then carried. He was the author of some 173 theological and controversial works, in German and Latin, perhaps the most important being his Institutio Religionic Christianae, Frankfurt. 1672-73 (see lists in Will's Caristianae, Frankfurt. 1672-73 (see lists in Will's feet of the period. Amid the manifold changes and chances of his life be found inspiration and consolation in the study of and recourse to the Pasiter, and in his love of music. In Latin verse he pub a Scriptural play on the Fall of our First Parents, entitled Theophostic, &c., Wittenberg, 1860 [Brit. Mus.], and a version of the Pasims as Paraphrasis Pasitorii, Heifrichstade, 1873 [University Idbrary at Paderborn in Westphalit. Reference as above kindly verified by Gymnasiallebrer litcher of P. derborn). His German hymns partake for the most part of the objective churchly chance partacer of the hymns of the Reformation period, and indeed contain many reminiscences of them. Of the rest, many only too faithfully mirror the misfortunes and changes and conflicts of his life, and are full of personal matter and careless in style. Still there remain not a few worthy of note, in which a genuine piety, a deep and fervent love to the Saviour, and a zeal for the best interests of His Church on earth, are expressed to clear, flowing and musical style. A large number first appeared appended to or interspersed in his prose works, e.g. his exposition of the Praims (Ps. i.-l., let ed. 1563; il.-c., let ed. 1564; ct.-cl., tat ed. 1566; complete ed. 1571); and the popular ed. (Her Prailter mit kurizen Emmanzien, &c.) let pub. ed. (Her Psaller wil kurtsen Summarien, &c.) let pub. in 1872, and of which six eds. appeared in his iffetime; in his exposition of the Prophets (pt. 1, lat ed. 1879; pt. ii. lat ed. 1879). Also in his Sieben Russ-Psalmen, in his exposition of the Propheta (pt. 1, 1st ed. 1579; t., ii. 1st ed. 1579). Also in his Steben Rusz-Paulmen, Leipzig, 1535; in the Drey Predigien, Heinrichstadt, 1572 (contains three sermons preached by Sciencker, by Martin Chemnitz, and by Christoph Vischer at the baptism of Anna Ursula, Duchess of Brunswick-Lüneburg. Appended to Scienceker's sermon are 6 hymns on Luther's Catechism), &c. They were collected, together with other pieces by various authors, in his Christikle, 1987, where 130 German hymns are marked with his little and where various of the melodies and of the initials, and where various of the melodies and of the four-part settings seem also to be by him. A selection from his hymns, with a biographical sketch by Heinrich Thiele, appeared at Halle in 1835. The most complete collection is that in Wackernagel's Bestsche Kirchenised, vol. Iv. Nos. 303-475, and in the bibliographical societies in that work the particulars of the original works in which they are found are given at length.

The hymns by Selnecker which have passed into English are ;-

- i. Ach bleib bei uns, Herr Jesu Christ. Peace and Orthodoxy. It has sometimes been said of this hymn that st. i., ii. are by Selnecker, and that the rest are a later addition. The opposite however is the case. The full form appeared in the Geistliche Psalmen, &c., Nürnberg, 1611, p. 597, in 9 st., viz.:--
 - Ach bleib bey uns, Herr Jean Christ.
 - In diser schweren betrübten Zeit.
 Herr Jesu, hilff, dein Kirch erhalt.
 - 4. Erhalt unns nun bey deinem Wort.
 - Ach Gott es geht gar fibel zu.
 Den stoltzen Geistern wehre doch.

 - 7. Die Sach und Ehr, Herr Jesu Christ.
 - Dein Wort ist unsers Hertzens Trutz,
 Gib dass wir leben in deim Wort,
- Of this arrangement st. I, according to Mätsell, No. 237, first appeared in 1579, on a broadsheet, along with N. Himmen's hymn, Danket den Berren hell und alleseit. It is a tr. of Melanchthon's "Vespera jam venit, nobiscum Christe maneto Exclingui lucem nec patiare tuam." (Corpus Reformatorum, vol. x., col. 602, Halle, 1842), and is founded on St. Luke xxiv. 29. 88, 2, asy Mittell, first appeared in Christiche Gebet und Paalmen, welchedie Kinder in der Jungfrau Schulen re Freyborgh ru belen und su singen prices. Freiberg. 1802. It resembles the rhymed prayer given at the end of Pa xxix., in Selnecker's Der Psatter, 1572.

St. 5 is st. 2 of the hymn "Wir danken dir, Herr Jesu Christ, Dass du unser König worden bist," which is the rhymed prayer to Ps. cxlin., in Selnecker's Der Psalter, St. 3, 4, 6-9, form the hymn, "Herr Jesu, hilff, dein Kirch erhalt," which is the rhymed prayer to Ps. axxii., in Selnecker's Der Psalter, 1672. See also Wackernagel, iv., p. 286.

The text of 1611 is in R. Thiele's ed. of Selnecker's Geistl. Licder, 1855, p. 31, and in the Berlin G. L. S. ed. 1863, No. 408. The trs. in C. U. are from this text :-

- 1. Lord Jesus with Thy children stay. This is a tr. of st. 1, 2, 8, 6, 9, 3 by J. Swertner in the Moravian H. Bk. 1789, No. 6 (1886, No. 6).
- $. Ah Josu Christ, with us abide. This is a good tr. of st. 1-5, 9, by Dr. Kennedy as No. 41 in his Hymn. Christ. 1863, repeated in Holy Song, 1869.
- 3. Lord Josu Christ, with us abide, For round us fall, &c. By Miss Winkworth, of st. 1, 2, in in Bosworth's Bk. of Church Hys., 1865. It is slightly altered in Miss Winkworth's Christian Singers, 1869, p. 152.

- 4. Forsake us not, 0 Lord be near. By L. Heyl, in full, as No. 181 in the Ohio Luth. Hyt. 1880.
- Other tru. are-(1) " Abide with us, O Jesu dear," as No. 336, in pt. 1. of the Morneton H. Bh., 1754. (2) "Lord Jean Christ, with us abide, 'Tis now.' By H. J. Buckolf, 1842, p. 89, (3) "With us, Lord Jeans Christ, abide." By Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 61.
- ii. Christus der wahre Gottes Bohn. Holy Baptism. This is No. 4 of the 6 hymns by Selnecker, on Luther's Catachism, appended to one of Drey Predigten, 1572, and thence in Wackernagel, iv. p. 255, in 8 st. of 4 l. In the Ohio G. B. 1870, No. 239. Tr. as:—

Now Christ, the very Bon of God. By C. H. L. Schnette as No. 221 in the Ohio Lath. Hyt. 1880, st. i.-iii. are literal, iv.-vi. are based on iv.-viii. of the German.

ili. Hilf, Herr. mein Gott, in dieser Noth Cross and Consolation. In his Christliche Psalmen, 1587, in 15 lines entitled "Anno 1565. God knows why." Thence in Wackernagel, iv. pp. 242-243 (with two other forms), and H. Thiele's ed. 1855, p. 45. It was probably written during his last months at Dresden. It has indeed been said to have been written to comfort Martin Hoffmann, diaconus of the Holy Cross Church at Dresden, on his expulsion after preaching about the Elector August's passion for hunting and game preserving; but the hymn is dated 1565, and Hoffmann left Dresden in August, 1564. The form tr. into English is:—

Hilf, Helffer, hilf in Augst und Noth. This is found in M. Moller's Manuale de prasparatione ad mortem, Görlitz, 1593, f. 114, in 3 st. of 4 l., among the hymns "composed by other spiritual persona." This is Wackernagel's second form. and is also in the Unn. L. S. 1851, No. 624. The reason why Moller did not claim it as his own was, most likely, because it was based on Selnecker. The trs. are:-

1. My Helper, aid: Thy mercy show. By A. T. Russell, in full, as No. 223 in his Ps. and Hys. 1851.

3. Help, Saviour! help, in fear and need. By E. Cronenwett, in full, as No. 410 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl. 1880.

3. Help, Jesus, help! in woe, in need. By Miss Manington in her Footprints of the Holy Dead, фс., 1863, р. 8.

iv. Laga migh daju sein und bleiben. Close of Service. This is a beautiful st. of 8 l. which is very frequently used in Germany at the close of Divine service. It was written as his daily prayer and 1st pub, in his Passio, 1572, and thence in Wacksmagel, iv. p. 251, and also in Thiele's ed. 1855, p. 59. In the Unv. L. S. 1851, No. 231, with two additional st. which Wetzel. ili, 213, says appeared in the Rudolstadt G. B. 1688. The tre. are:—

1. Let me be Thine for ever, My gracious. This is a tr. of st. i.-iii. by Dr. M. Loy as No. 230 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl. 1880.

- 2. Make me Thine own and keep me Thine. By Miss Winkworth in her Christian Singers of Germany, 1869, p. 152.
- v. O Herre Gott, in meiner Neth. For the Dying. Founded on Ps. cxvi. 9. 1st pub. in his Der Psalter, 1572. Wackernagel iv. p. 290, her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 19, repeated quotes it from the ed. of 1578, in 3 st. of 6 l.

It is also in Thiele's ed. 1855, p. 58, and in the Berlin G. L. S. ed. 1863, No. 969. Tr. as:--

O Lord and God, I cry to Thee. This is a good and full tr. by A. T. Russell as No. 253 in his Ps. & Hys. 1851.

In Bunsen's Versuck, 1833, No. 885 (Allg. G. B., 1846, No. 388) there is a version of this hymn entirely re-written, and beginning O Herre Gett, ich raf zu dir. The tr. in C. U. from this form is:-

O Lord my God, I cry to Thee. This is a good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger. 2nd Ser. 1858, p. 212, and her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 192. Repeated in the Irish Church Hyl. 1873, Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bh. 1868 and others,

vi. Wir danken dir. Harr Josu Christ, Dass du gen Himmel gefahren bist. Ascension. A hymn beginning thus, and in 4 st. of 4 l. appeared at the end of Ps. laviii. in Selnacker's Der Psalter, 1572. Wackernayel, Iv. p. 278, quotes it from the ed. of 1578. It is also in Thicle, 1855, p. 15. Mitzell, No. 277, gives this text, and also a form in 13 st. of 4 l. from the Geistliche Psalmen, &c., Nürnberg, 1611, where it is ascribed to Schnecker. The 13 st. form is also in M. Pratorius's Musas Sionias, pt. v. 1607, No. 140; and in the Berlin G. L. S. ed. 1863, No. 340. The to. in C. U. is:--

We thank Thee, Jesus! dearest Friend, that Theu tidet. By Dr. M. Loy, in full, from the G. L. S. text, as No. 96 in the Ohio Luth, Hyl. 1880.

Other tra. are—(1) "Lord Jeeus Christ: we thank Thee now." This is No. 334, in pt. 1., of the Avravian H. Bk., 1754. (3) "To Thee, our Lord, all praise be given." This is a lymn, in 6 st. of 4 i., by J. Swertner, as No. 136 in the Koravian H. Bk., 1739 (1842, No. 178, beginning, "To Thee, Lord Christ); based on this hymn, and on Ernst Lange's "Herr Jesu Christ zieh uns dir nach." Lange's hymn is in Freylinghausen's Neuer Gestereiches G. B., 1714, No. 117.

vii. Wir danken die, e treuer Gott. Absolution. This is No. 6 of the 6 hymns by Selnecker, on Luther's Catechism, appended to one of Drey Predigten, 1572. It is in 3 st. of 4 l, and a fourth st. of 2 1, and is entitled "How one should comfort himself in Holy Absolution." The complete form in 4 st. of 4 l., is in his Christliche Psalmen, 1587. Both forms are in Wackernagel, iv. p. 257; and in Mützell, Nos. 285, 286. The second form is also No. 274 in the Ohio Luth. G. B., 1870. Tr. as:-

O Faithful God, thanks be to Thee. By C. H. L. Schnette, in full, as No. 246 in the [J. M.] Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

Send out Thy light and truth, O God! J. Montgomery. [Missions.] This well-known hymn was first printed in a religious annual, The Christian Keepsake, in 1836; again in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1859, No. 253; and again in Moreer's Ch. Psalter & H. Bk., 1854, No. 381, in 4 st. of 8 l., the only change from the 1836 text being st. iii. 1 9, "Then spring" to "Then be new born," &c. From Mercer's Preface it would seem that he was under the impression that it was written specially for his collection. Montgomery says in a note in his Original Hys., p. 256, that it was written "in the metre and to suit the tune of the hymn said to have been composed and his friends as they entered the city of Worms to appear before the Diet there." The German hymn referred to is Ein' feete Burg (p. 332, ii.). Montgomery's hymn, however, has nothing in common with Luther's save the metre. It has attained to somewhat extensive use in Great Britain and America. [J. J.]

Sensus quis horror percutit. Jean Baptiste de Santeüil. [Ascension.] In the Cluniao Brev., 1686, p. 497, this hymn be-gins "Quid obstupendum cernimus," but in Santstill's Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1689, p. 22, and ed. 1698, p. 105, it is given as above. It is also in the Paris Breviary, 1736, as the hymn at Matins on the octave of the Ascension. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, and Card. Newman's Humni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as: -

1. What is this horror? The sky is rended By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, Dec. 1834 (vol. vi. p. 620, together with the Latin), and his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839.

9. What terrors shake my trembling soul! By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 85, and again in his Hys. of the Church, &c., 1841, No. 49. It is No. 120 in the 1863 Appendix to the H. Noted.

3. Awfal thought of endless doom. By R. Campbell, in his St. Andrews Hys. and Authors, 1850, p. 78, and, with slight alterations, in the Hymnary, 1872. Some portions of this tr. are by Miss Jane Campbell, of Ravensdale, Scotland. It is given in O. Shipley's Annua Senctus, 1884, as "Fearful thought of endless doom."

4. What terror every bosom shakes. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Syon, 1857, p. 201.

Another tr. is :-

Great God, what terror fills the eye. By W Palmer, in his Short Poems &c., 1845, p. 50.

Sequences. The origin and structure of Sequences or Proses (p. $15, i.) have been referred to under Latin Hymnody (see pp. $48-550). The Gradual or Antiphon sung between the Epistle and Gospel in the Liturgy ended on festal days with the word Alleluin. The last syllable of this word was prolouged to a number of musical notes (called neumes), which were entitled the Sequentia, as following the Alleluia. In the ninth century the custom began of adapting words to suit these notes; and these words came in their turn to be called Sequences. The first author of this kind of Sequences was Nutler Bulletins (p. $13, ii.), a monk of St. Gall, who d. 912. He had many successors, one of the most voluminous and finished writers of Sequences being Adam of St. Victor, who d. 1177.

One of the earliest MSS, containing Sequences is an Anglo-Saxon Tropary written in the reign of Ethelred (979-1016), and now in the Bodleian (see a below). In the Leofric Miseal, an English service book in use at Exeter half a century later, and now in the Bodleisa (Bodl., No. 579. Printed at the Clarendon Press, Oxford, in 1883) only six Sequences are indicated for use by their catchwords (the "Coelica resonent": "Mater Sequences being
"Coelica resonent": "Mater Sequences being
"Lyra pulchra": "Omnes sancti" and "Scalam ad cooles." The use of Sequences seen and set to music by Luther, and sung by him | became very general. In most mediaeval Missals there are proper Sequences appointed [for nearly every Sunday and Holy Day except from Septuagesima to Easter, when verses of Holy Scripture known as the Tract were substituted for the Alleluia and the Scanence. Sequences or Proses are also found in Processionals and Breviaries, where they were intro-duced in lieu of the Versus after the Responsory attached to one of the Lections, generally the last (York Brev., 1883, ii. 106), or in lieu of the Hymn at Vespers or Compline, or in connection with Processions on cortain festivals. In the revised Roman Missal of 1570 all Sequences were abolished save four, viz. (1) "Victimae paschali," for Easter; (2) "Veni Sanete Spiritus," for Pentecost; (3) "Lauda Sion Salvatorem," for Corpus Christi; (4) " Dies irae, dies illa," for Masses for the Dead. In comparatively recent times, about 1727, there was added (5) "Stabat mater delorosa, for Friday after Passion Sunday.

A large number of Sequences are included in the collections of Mone, Daniel, Morel, Wachernagel, and others. In 1852 Dr. Neale published 125 under the title Sequentiae ex Missalibus germanicis, auglieis, gallieis, altis-que medii acri collectae. The most complete collection of Sequences is Dr. Joseph Kehrein's Lateinische Sequenzen des Mittelalters, pub. at Mainz in 1873, with 895, including almost the whole of those previously edited by Mone, Daniel, Morel, Wackernagel and Neale; and many others, principally from Missals of the 16th cent. Of these many are only printed in part, and the number (895), large as it is, does not nearly exhaust the list of such compositions; for even on comparing with the lists below, a large proportion will be found not included by Kehrein.

An interesting collection of Sequences has just been pub. under the title Prosarium Lemovicense (Leipzig, Fues's Verlag, 1890). This is edited by G. M. Dreves, as pt. vii. of his Analecta Hymnica Medii Aeri, and contains 265 Sequences, taken from 16 Troparies of the 10th, 11th, and 12th cent., which formerly belonged to the Abbey of St. Martial at Limoges, and are now in the Bibliotheque Nationale at Paris.

In Part i. we append a list of first lines of Sequences and Proses contained in the Arbuthnott, Hereford, Sarum and York Missals, and a few important early us. Service Books, mostly of English, French and German origin. In Part ii. are given the first lines of additional Sequences in later English Service Books, in a few representative French and German diocesan Missals not later than 1490, and in two Monastic Missals. In many cases there are slight variations of the text. We have given the various forms where the varieties of reading affect the alphabetical order.

Part i. In compiling the first list of first lines of Sequences an exhaustive use has been made of the following MSS, and printed Service

(a) The Arbuthnett Missal. This was is in the possession of the Arbuthnett family. It was written about the end of the 15th cent. for the use of St. Ternan's Church, Arbuthnett, Kincardineshire, by Sybbald, parson of Arbuthnett what in 15th It is a Surgery Missal of Arbuthants, who d. in 1507. It is a Surum Minal with variations, and probably represents the use of the diocess of St. Andrews. The copy used is the ed. printed at Jamtieland, 1884.

(b) Reg. 2 B. iv. This is a Ms. Gradual in the British. Museum, written in England amout 1140,

(c) Reg. 8 C. ziii. Also in the British Museum, containing a collection of Sequences written about 1700, aming a consection of Septences where aron, and is apparently in England.

(d) Add. 11688. Also in the British Museum, and is a Gradual written in Germany about 1999.

(e) The Tropary of Ethelred. A Ms. in the Hodleian (Bodl. 775) written at Winchester shortly after 989, and Arothus the raises of Whalcod (291,1016). It is described. (1904). 175) written at Winchester shortly after 960, and during the reign of Ethelred (279-1016). It is described in the Academy for Oct. 23, 1886, p. 280. The Sequences of this as, have been printed in vol. 2 of the Surtees Society's ed. of the Fork Affestal (see y below); those which are not included in the Fork Missal being printed in full, and the rest having their tiles and first lines given with references to the full text where they occur in the Fork Missal.

(f) Add. 23985. A beautiful Service Book written in France in the end of the 13th cent., and now in the British Museum.

(y) Add. 1976s. A Tropary with a collection of Sequences, &c., written at St. Gall in the 11th cent., and now in the British Museum. The hymns of this Ms. are not indexed.

(h) The Hereford Missal. Of this use only one us. is known. This was written about 1990, belones to Hniversity College, Oxford, but is kept in the Bodleion. The Ms. is very imperfect, and consequently the references are made to the ed. printed at Rouen in 1802 (Missale... ecclesic Helfordensis). It may be suited however that all the Sequences of the printed ed. which are not contained in the Sarums 1370 and Fork 1390 Mss. are not command in the six except two ("Gaude prole," and "Missus est"), and the Ms. has the Mass which contains them but without the Somerces. The Heaford Missai was reprinted under the editorship of lr. W. G. Handerson, at Leeis, 1871. (5) Hart. 2561. This us. is of the 11th cent and is in the British Museum. It is described under Hymns-rium, page 546, il.

(k) Unlig. A. ziv. This Ms. is ju the British Museum, and contains a collection of Sequences written in England about 1199.

(a) The Sens Missal. Of this there is a ms. in the British Museum written in the 14th cent. (Add. 30058), British Museum written in the 14th cent. (Add. 30058), but unfortunately imperfect In various places. The Sequences marked n° are found in the Missate Senonents, printed at Paris in 1829 by Nicolas Pravosi, of which there is a copy in Durham University Library.

(P) The Paris Missat. Of this there is a use in the British Museum written early in the 14th cent. (Add. 18905). The Sequences marked p° are found in the Missate..., ecclesie Paristensis printed at Paris in 1891 by Joannes de Prato and Desiderius Huyan, those marked p° in the edition printed at Paris in 1801, by Thielman Kerver, and those marked p° in the ceities and these marked p° in the ceities. marked p⁵ in the edition printed at Paris in 1501, by Thielman Kerver, and those marked p⁴ in the edition printed at Paris by Desideritis Maheu, and pub. in 1543. In the 1543 ed. the word Prota is always used instead of Sequentia. The Protes are given in full in the Masces to which they respectively belong, and not grouped together at the end of the Missal as in some other cases.

(2) The Barum Missal, The Saram Missal seems to have been edited in 1985 by St. Osmund, Bishop of Salisbury. The earliest complete copy we have been able to examine is a fine example in the Botleian (Barlows 6) written about 1370. The use of Saram became almost a national one. Mr. W. H. James Weale in his Calatogus Missalium, London, 1885, entmerates 53 editions from 1487 to 1857, and in the bibliography of the Burntisland reptint several others are mentioned. he Burntisland reprint several others are mentioned. but duriusiana reprint several conces are incurrence. Many of those printed abroad were apparently booksellers' epeculations, and differ considerably in their contents. The Sequences morked s' are found in the Missale, ... ecclaric Sarum printed at London in 1998 for Winkin de Worde. Those marked s' are found in the maintent of the Carena Many of Burnisland, 1861 ff. Winkin de Worde. Those marked s' are found in the reprint of the Sarum Missai at Burntisland. 1851 ff, which is made up from a great variety of editions, supplemented by portions taken from the Sarum Gradual and the Sarum Processional. The index to the Burntisland ed. contains references to various compositions which in the text are marked as Graduale, Versicaling, Tractice, Offertorium or Communio: and base have all been omitted from the list below save the "Doler nomer" (q.v.), there marked as a Tractice, but by Rehvein ranked as a Sequence.

(n) C. O. C. 478. A Tropary with a collection of Squence, apparently written at Winchester in the 11th cent., and now in the Isbrary of Corpus Christi College, cent., and now in the Library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, (x) Donoe 223. A Tropary with a collection of Sequences, written about the end of the 11th cent., apparently in France, and now in the Bodlefan. (y) The York Missal. This represents the use of the North of England. The us. collated was written about 1320, and belongs to University College, Oxford, but is kept in the Bolleian. The Asquences are mostly found collected together near the end of the volume, and a few others are given in the text of the more recent Masses. The Sequences marked y are included in the reprint of the Fork Missal (Missale exclusion Eboracentis) by the Surices Society, 1974, which is made up from the printed eds. (Bonen c. 1509, and again in 1515, 1517 and 1530; Cits. (Rottest C. 1995, and other sources.

() Arundel 156. This was, in the British Museum, contains a collection of Seguences apparently written in Germany in the 13th cent. Those marked 2° are written in the margins in a hand of the early 15th cent.

A number of other MSS, of interest have been collated throughout. References are made to them for all the additional Sequences which they contain, but they are not, as a rule, referred to in the case of Sequences already found in the uss. b, o, d, e, g, w, or x. They are as follows:-

- (a*) Liturg, Miso. 341. A Gradual, written about the end of the 12th cent., apparently in Germany, and pow in the Bodleian.
- (b*) Littarg. Misc. 340. A Gradual, written about 1200, apparently in Germany, and now in the Bodlelan.
- (c*) Add. 12184. A Gradual, written about 1278, apparently in England, and now in the British Museum.
- (d*) Liturg. Miss. 27. A collection of Sequences, apparently written in France in the end of the 14th cent., and now in the Bodleian.

In only a very few instances are the names of the authors of Sequences attached to them in the early MSS. It may therefore be of interest to give here a list of authors of Sequences which is found in a ms. in the Bodloian (Junius 121, f. 1), and was written apparently about 1300. The ascriptions (which it must be added are indefinite, and apparently oftener wrong than right) are as follows:—

- (1) Robert, King of France. Victimae paschali.
 (2) Hermannus Contractus. Sancti Spiritus adsit nobis gratia, and Ave praeclara.
- (3) Gervasius Cestrensis (i.e. of Chichester, f. 1160).
 Laus devota mente, and Estulienus in Ant die.
 (4) Richard the Monk, Archbishop (Richard, App. of Canterbury, 1171-1184). Plausa chorus Idetabundo. and Gaude Roma caput.
- (5) Gervasius, archideacon of Gloncester (in 1143).
- (5) Gerranias, sichideacon of Gloncester (in 1143). Stola jucunditatis, and Jubilemus ownes.

 (6) Prior Montae. [Montacute, a Cluniae foundation in Somersetshire, dating from shortly after 1190.] Hodiernae lex diei, and Niesus Gabriel de coelis.

 (7) Adam of St. Victor (see p. 14). Sake mater Saltatoris, and Ave virgo singularis, and Zyma velus, and Lux juesuda, and Profitenter Trisitatem.

 (8) Robert of Winchester, see note below (? Robert, prior of Winchester in 1173). Potestate non natura, and Diri vatris.

- and hiri patris.

 (3) Fulbert of Chartres (see p. 401). Stirps Jesse, and dutum Domini, and Solem Justifice.

 (10) Robert of York (d. about 1253). Extultenue in had die festiva.

It seems not improbable that Robert of York and Robert of Winchester are identical. At least in Archbishop Gray's Registers (printed by the Revietes Society), Robert, caron and sometime precenter of York, who dabout 1263, is always designated Robert of Winchester, and in one case as Archdeacon of Winchester (Surfees ed., p. 232).

In his Histoire de la Poésie Liturgique au Moyen Age. Les Tropes. Paris, 1886, pp. 111-136, M. Leon Gautier describes (with many facsimiles) 40 important MSS. containing Sequences, which are now found at Paris, St. Gall, Berlin, Vienna, Munich, and Rome: also the uss. e, g, k, x noted above. In the Verzeichniss der Handschriften der Stiftsbibliothek von St. Gallen, Halle, 1875, the St. Gall was, are shortly described; and at pp. 509-590 there is an index which professes to include the first lines of all the Sequences, with references to the MSS. in which they are contained.

The occasional references by numbers are to the printed Missals in Part ii. of this article.

Part ii. In this second part are given the first lines of Sequences which are not included in the first part of this article. These are principally taken from certain representative Franch and German diocesan Missals printed not later than 1490; and from two monnetic Missals, viz. an Augustinian and a Benedictine. A few more are taken from English service books other than Missals, the editions used being the following:-

being the following:—

Jarum Processional, In s. Ms. Written about the end of the 14th cent., and now in the British Museum (Hark. 2942), compared with the Antwerp ed. of 1523.

Sarum Everiany, in the Paris ed. of 1516 (Byrckman). The Paris ed. of 1631 was reprinted at the Cambridge University Press, 1879-1888.

York Processional, in the Rouen ed. of 1630 (reprinted in vol. 63, 1875, of the Surtees Society's publications).

York Breviary, in the Venice ed. of 1693 (reprinted by the Surtees Society, 1880-83, vols. 71, 76).

Hareford Breviary, in the Rouen ed. of 1608. Of this the Paris Hierackis is in the Worcenter Cathedral Library, and the Paris Asstactis in the Bodlelan. . and the Para Actionlis in the Bodielan.

The Missuls collated are the following:-

(1) Angers. The ed. used is the Missale Andega-rense, printed at Paris in 1460 by Joannes de Prato.

(3) Augustinian. Many of the Sequences in the English Missais are only to be found in these Missals. Of the remaining Sequences in both of the above lists a considerable proportion have not yet (Feb. 1888) been edited in any way. Mr. W. H. James Weale, in his Analeota Liturgica, is beginning the publication of all known Sequences which are not given, or only given in part, in Kehrein's Latefnische Sequenzen, and hopes in about five years to complete the [F. Sergius. [Greek Hymnody, § zii. 2.]

Servant of God, well done! Rest from thy loved employ. J. Montgomery.

[Death and Burial of a Minister.] This poem was pub. in Montgomery's Greenland and Other Paems, 1819, p. 191, in 6 st. of 8 l., with the following heading:—

"The Christian Soldier. Occasioned by the endden death of the Rev. Thomas Taylor; After having declared in his last Sermon, on a preceding evening, that he hoped to die as an old soldier of Jesus Christ, with his sword in his hand."

Mr. Taylor, who was a Methodist preacher, was found dead in his bed on the morning of Oct. 15, 1816. The poem is given as a hymn in the 8th ed. of Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 366; in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 534; and in his Original Hys., 1853, No. 311. In addition to the use of this hymn in its original, and in an abbreviated form, of Christ, well done," which begins with I, 5 of the last stanzs;" (2) "The pains of death are past," beginning with I, i, of the same stanzs; and (3) "The voice at midnight came," st. i. i. 5. three contos are also in C. U.:-(1) "Soldier Servant of God, well done! Thy glorious warfare's past. C. Wedey. [Death and Burial of a Minister.] This hynn, in 4 st. of 8 l., was printed at the end of the Funeral Sermon by John Wesley, on the death of G. Whitefield. (P. Werkt, 1868-72, vol. vi. 316.) Whitefield died on Sept. 30, 1770, and J. Wesley preached the Funeral Sermon at the Tabernacle, Tottenham Court Road, and again at Moorfields on Nov. 18, 1770. He also preached on the same subject at Greenwich and at Deptford. His remark in his Journal is, "In every place I wish to show all possible respect to the memory of that great and good man." It must be noted that this hymn is a distinct piece from C. Wesley's Elegy on the Death of the Rev. George White-[J. J.]

Bervants of God, awake, arise. Arritation.] This is an altered form of P. Doddridge's "Awake, ye saints, and raise your eyes," p. 103, it. It was included in the 1815 Appendix to Cotterill's Scl., No. 219, and is found in a few modern collections, including Windle's Ch. & Home Met. Ps. and Hymnal, and others. In the 1819 ed. of his Sel. Cotterill again altered the text, and gave it as "Servants of God! lift up your heads," p. 214. This form of the text is seldom found in modern hymn-books.

Servants of God, His praise pro-claim. J. Montgomery. [Ps. exiii.] Hol-land, in his Memoirs of Montgomery, says that school at Fulueck, he lived from 1788 to June 19, 1789, with one Lockwood, at Mirfield, near Leeds. This person was a Morsvion, He kept a small retail shop, and went by the name of the "Fine Bread Baker." Holland says:—

"Of the conduct of Montgomery behind the counter we never heard much; he did not remain there more than a year and a half; he had little to do, and still less inclination for the employment, such as it was. While there he compased the largest part of the poem of affred, and amongst his smaller pieces a metrical version of the 113th Psalm, which, many years afterwards, was published, with some verbal alterations, in the collection fonterill's Set., 1819] now in use under the auspices of Cotterill's Sci., 1819] now in use under the auspices of the Archbishop of York in various churches in his diocese and elsewhere."—Monotra, i. p. 73.

This version of Ps. 113 is on p. 57 of Cotterill's Sel., 1819, in 5 st. of 4 l. It was republished in Montgomery's Songs of Zion, 1822, and is found in several modern hymnbooks. It very frequently begins "Servants of God! in joyful laye." This is the first line of the last stanza, and is substituted for the original opening of the hymn. This is the earliest of Montgomery's hymns to which a date can be given. He was about 17 when it was written.

Set thine house in order. H. Alford. [Sunday after Christmas.] 1st pub. in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 27, in 4 st. of 81., and repeated in the Universal H. Bk., 1885. It is based on the first lesson at Evening Prayer on the lat S. after Christmas, Isaiah xxxviii. 1. [J, J,] Seymour, Asron Crossley Hobart, s. of John Crossley Seymour, M.A., Vicar of Cahirelly, Diocese of Cashel (and elder brother of the Rev. Michael Hobert Seymonr, author of several works on the Roman controversy), was b. in the county of Limerick, Dec. 19, 1789. From an early age he gave much attention to literary pursuits, and at the age of 21 he pub. his Vital Christianity exhibited in a Series of Letters on the most Important Subjects of Religion, addressed to Young Per-sons, 1810. This work, written during an illness, contains several of his hymne and other poetical pieces. He also edited a new edition of Dr. Gillies's Life of Whitefield, and wrote a "Memoir," which was prefixed to the Reliques of Ancient Irish Poetry, by Miss Charlotte Brooke, 1816. His most important work was his Life and Times of Selina, Countess of Huntingdon, 2 vols., 1839. He resided for some time in Naples (circa 1339-1347), and then at Bristol. He d. Oct., 1870. A few of his hymns are still in C. U., including "Jesus, Immortal King, arise," p. 540, i., and others. For these King, arise," p. 550, i., and others. details we ere indebted to Miller's Singers and [J. J.] Songs, 1869, pp. 410-12.

Shall heavenly wisdom cry aloud? [Christ, the Wisdom of God.] This hymn appeared in the Scottish Draft Translations and Paraphroses, 1745, No. 86, in 10 st. of 4 l., and based on Prov. viii., 22, &c. It was composed of I. Watts's "Shall wisdom cry alond?" (s. m.) from his Hys. and Spiritual Songe, 1709, Bk. i., No. 92; and et. ii., iii. of his "Thus saith the wisdom of the Lord" (L. M.) from the same work, Bk. i., No. 94; rewritten in c. w. In the authorized issue of the Trs. and Paraphs., 1781, No. 18, this arrangeafter Montgomery ran away from the Moravian | ment is given with alterations as "Keep of the Trs. and Paraphs. by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, II.) this form of the text is attributed to him,

Shall we go on to sin? I. Watts. [Rom. vi. 1-6.] 1st pub. in his Hymns, &c., 1709, Bk. i., No. 106, in 2 st. of 4 L, and ontitled "Death to sin by the Cross of Christ." Its use is limited. Orig. text in modern editions of Watts. In the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, it was given as "And shall we then go on to sin?" the alterations being confined to the change of metre. In adopting the hymn for the authorized issue of the Trans. in 1781, No. xlvii. (Rom. vi. 1-7), the first line only of the 1745 alterations was retained, the whole hymn being rewritten in 4 st. of 4 l. This recent has very little indeed of Watts, being to a great extent new. This form, according to the markings of the cldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.), was by Cameron. It is given in several modern collections. [J. J.]

Shall we not love thee, Mother dear-Sir H. W. Baker. [B. V. M.] Written for and first appeared in the 1868 Appendix to H. A. & M., and again, after revision, in the revised edition, 1875.

Shelly, Martha Evans, née Jackson, daughter of John Jackson, of Manchester, b. at Stockport, Cheshire, and married in 1846 to J. W. Shelly, of Great Yarmouth. Her hymns appeared in Curwen's Child's Own Hymn Book, 1844-1874, and include :-

Father, let Thy henediction. On behalf of Children. Appeared in Curwen's Child's Own H. Bk., 1844, and is found in a few modern collections.

 Lord, a little hand and lowly. (Alldren's Prayer.
Mrs. Shelly's account of this hymn is:—" At a Sunday School meeting in Manchester, the Rev. John Curwen, occool messang in mannesser, the new John Curwen, one avening, gave a lecture on singing. He sang a very prestry and simple time, to which be said he had no suitable words, and wished that some one would write a hymn to it. I wrote these verses and gave them to him after the close of the meeting. "(Gurwen's Hiog. Notes, p. 15.) The tune which Mr. Gurwen sang was a force, p. 15.) The tune which Mr. Green ang was a ferruan one, and was given in his Child's Our Mire Book under the name of Glover. The hymn was pub, in its Child's Own M. Ek., 1344, and has passed into a large number of collections for children.

S. Lerd, help na, as we sing. Sincerity. Pub, in The IDice of Praise, 1886.

Shepherd, Anne, née Houlditch, daughter of the Rev. E. H. Houlditch, sometime Rector of Speen, Berkshire, was b. at Cowes, Isle of Wight, Sept. 11, 1809: married to Mr. S. Saville Shepherd in 1843; and d. at Blackheath, Kent, Jan. 7, 1857. Her Hymns adapted to the Comprehension of Young Minds were pub. (3rd ed. 1847 5th ed. 1855), and contained 64 hymns. Of these the following have come into C. U :-

1. Around the throne of God in heaven. (See p. 82, ii.)

2. Glory to Jesus, glory. Praise.
3. Hards a message of love. Invitation.
4. I have read of the Saviour's love. The Love of Christ.

See where the gentle Jesus reigns. Jerus, the Children's Priend.

Of these hymns the first has by for the widest acceptance, and is found in a large number of children's hymn-books. Her religious novels, Ellen Seymour, 1848; and Rea-Kty, 1852, attracted some attention. [J. J.]

silence, all ye sons of mon." In the markings | P. Doddridge. [During a Ministerial Vacancy.] In the D. MSS, this is No. 63, in 5 st. of 4 L, and is headed, " Of seeking a right way from God, from Ezra viii. 21. At a way from God, from Lara vill. 21. At a meeting of ministers at Bedworth, during their long vacancy;" and is dated "April 10, 1735." It was pub. by Job Orton in his posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 870, in a slightly eltered form; and the same text was repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839. It is usually given in modern hymn-books in a slightly altered form from that of 1755. In the Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, st. ii.-iv. are given as "O Lord, Thy pitying eye вигусув." [J. J.]

Shepherd of the rame Dorothy A. The Good Shepherd.] In Miss Dorothy A. the Itau, 1887, 1st Thrupp's Thoughts for the Day, 1837, 1st series, p. 8, are the following lines, sometimes given as a hymn in 2 st. of 4 l. :--

* Shepherd of the little flock, Lead no by the shadowing rock; Where the richest pasture grows; Where the living water flows; By that pure and ellent stream, Sheltered from the scorching bes Shepherd, Saviour, Guardian, Guide, Keep me ever near Thy side."

In the Rev. T. Darling's Hys. for the Church of England, 1855, lines 1-4 of the above were given with alterations as the opening of the hymn "Shepherd of the ransomed flock," the remaining four stanzas being by Mr Darling. This form of the hymn was repeated, with the addition of a doxology, in the 1863 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., and again in other collections. In Mr. Darling's Hymns, &c., 1887, it is condensed to 4 st. It is specially adapted to the 2nd S. (W. T. B.) after Easter.

Shepherd of Thine Israel, lead us. J. Conder. [The Good Shepherd.] In Conder's Hys. of Praise, Prayer, and Devout Meditation, 1856, p. 201, this hymn is given in 3 st. of 6 l., together with the following note by the author's son, the Rev. E. R. Conder :-

"It is not quite certain whether the Author designed this Hymn to be included. It originated in an attempt to render a well-known imitation from the Weish ['Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah,' p. 77, 1.], the popularity of which for exceeds its poetical metri, more worthy of the place it has now in our pastmody. But so little is borrowed, beyond the form and leading thought, that the foregoing seems fairly to rank as an original composition.—E. R. C."

This has failed to receive the attention of hymnal compilers. [J. J.]

Shepherd, Thomas, s. of William Shepherd, sometime Vicar of Tilbrook, Bedfordshire, and subsequently a Nonconformist Minister at Oundle, and at Kettering, was b. in 1665. Taking Holy Orders he held for some time preferment in Huntingdonshire, and in Buckinghamshire. Secoding from the Church of England, he became, in 1694, pastor of the Castle Hill Meeting House (Independent), Nottingham, of which Dr. Doddridge was subsequently pastor. In 1700 he removed to Booking, near Braintree, Essex, where he began his work in a barn. A chapel was erected for his congregation in 1707. He d. Jan. 29, 1739. His publications consisted chiefly of Sermons. His Pentlential Cries. Shepherd of Israel, bend Thine ear. were a continuance of those by John Mason

(p. 716, ii.), who wrote the first six and the version of Ps. 86, and were pub, with Mason's Songs of Praise in 1693. It must be noted that in D. Sedgwick's reprint of the Songs, and the Penitential Cries, in 1859, Mason's Cries are under the head of Songs, &c., pp. 49-61, and those under Penitential Cries, are all by Shepherd. Some of these Cries are still in C. U., including, "My God, my God, my Light, my Love" (Language for God); and "When wilt Thou come unto me, Lord" (Communion with God desired). Sherwin, William Fisk, an American Baptist, was b. at Buckland, Massachusetts, March 14, 1826. His educational opportunities, so far as schools were concerned, were few, but he made excellent use of his time and surroundings. At fifteen he went to Boston and studied music under Dr. Mason: In duc course he became a teacher of vocal music, and held several important appointments in Massachusetts; in Hudson and Albany, New York County, and then in New York City. Taking special interest in Sunday Schools, he composed carels and hymn-tunes largely for their use, and was associated with the Rev. R. Lowry and others in preparing Bright Jewels, and other popular Sunday School byun and tune books. A few of his melodies are known in Great Britain through I. D. Saukey's Socred Songs and Solos, where they are given with his signature. His hymn-writing was limited, The following pieces are in C. U.;-

Shew pity, Lord; O Lord, forgive. I. Watts. [Ps. It.] Pub. in his Psalms of David, &c., 1719, p. 141, in three parts:—

- 1. "Shew pity, Lord; O Lord, forgive." Pt. 1. 2. "Lord, I am vile, conceived in sin." Pt. 1. 3. "O Thou that hear'st when sinners cry." Pt. iil.

Each of these parts is in C. U. In addition in the Wes. II. Bk., revised ed., 1875, the first part of No. 574 beginning, "Shew pity, Lord," &c., is a cento from these three parts in 6 st. of 4 l. The second part of the same version (Wes. H. Bh., No. 574), "O'Thou that hearest," &c., is Pt. iii. of Watts, as above, with the omission of at. v. This last arrangement was included by J. Wesley in his Ps. & Hys., pub. nt Charlestown, America, 1736-37, and was repeated in the 1830 Suppl. to the Wes. H. Bk. In 1722 J. C. Jacobi gave II, 1-3 of st. i. of Pt. i. by Watts as above, with Il. 2, 3, transposed, as the opening of his tr. of "Erbarm dich mein, O Herre Gott" (p. 506, L), in his Psalmodia Germanica, p. 59. [J. Shindler, Mary Stanley Bunce, née Palmer, better known as Mrs. Dans. was b. in Beaufort, South Carolina, Feb. 15, 1810. In 1835 she was married to Charles E. Dana, Bloomington, now Muscatine, Lowe, in 1838. Mr. Dana d. in 1839, and Mrs. Dana returned to South Carolina. Subsequently she was married to the Rev. Robert D. Shindler, who was Professor in Shelby College, Kentucky, in 1851, and afterwards in Texas. Mrs. Shindler, originally a Presbyterian, was for some time an Unitarian; but of late years she has been a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. As Mary S. B. Dana she pub. the Southern Harp, 1840, and the Northern Harp, 1841. From these works her hymns have been taken, 8 of which are in T. O. Summers's Songs of Zion, 1851. The best known are:—

1. Fiercely came the tempest sweeping. Christ still-in the torm. (1841.)

2. I'm a pilgrim, and I'm a stranger. A Christian Pilgrim. (1841.)

3. 0 sing to me of heaven. Heaven contemplated. (1840.) Sometimes given as "Come, sing to me of heaven."

Shirley, Hon. Walter, M.A., fourth a of the Hon. Laurence Shirley (s. of the 1st Earl Ferrers, and cousin of the Countess of Huntingdon), was b. in 1725. He was a friend of Whitefield and the Wesleys, and often preached in their chapels. He was for sometime Rector of Loughrea, county of Galway. Ho d. April of New York, and removed with him to 7, 1786. A selection of his sermons was pub-

Hahed; also two poems in 1761—Liberty, an Ode, and The Judgment. In 1774 he assisted the Countees of Huntingdon in revising the collection of bymns used in her chapels, and therein a few of his productions are found. In the Life of Selina, Countess of Huntingdon, 1839, vol. ii., p. 291, the following note is given on Shirley's hymn-writing:—

"Mr. Shirley was the author of several well-known bymns in Lady Huntington's collection, particularly:—
From heaven the loud angelic song began.

Hark! In the wilderness a cry.'
Flow fast my tears, the cause is great.'
Sweet as the sleepherd's tuneful reed.'

"Sweet as the slephen's tuneful reed."

Source of light and power divine."

"There are also some in other collections; and a few little poems scattered in various periodical publications. The lines on the departure of the Missionaries from Lady funtingion's College for America, in 1772, under the direction of Mr. Piercy, have been much admired; they were re-published in the Beangelical Magazine, in 1796, on the departure of the ship Maff, for the South Sea islands.... He likewise assisted Lady Huntingdon in the Selection of hymns now in use in the congregations in her Countrien." in her Connexion.

The Missionary hymn here referred to is :-"Go, destined vessel, heavenly-freighted, go!" His hymns now in C. U. include:

1. Flow fast, my tears, the cause is great. Good Friday. Pub. In the Counters of Huntingdon's Coll., circa 1773, p. 294, in 3 st. of 8 l. It is in several modern hymn-books; and especially in America, including Hat-hymn-books; and especially in America, including Hat-field's Church H. Bk., 1872.

8. From beaven the loud angelic song began. Ascen-sion. Also in the C. of Handingdon's Coll., circa 1773, p. 312, in 7 st. of 41. The hymn, "Worthy the Lamb of boundless sway," in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872, and others, is composed of st. ii. and vii.

8. Hark, in the wilderness a cry. St. John Baptist. Also in the C. of Huntingdon's Coll., circa 1773, p. 245, in 7 st. of 4.1

in 7 st. of 4 l.

4. Bearce of light and power divine. Before Sermon.
Also in the C. of Huntingdou's Coll., circa 1773, p. 231, in 4 st. of 6 l. In Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, No. 812, st j. and iv. are given in an altered form; and the first two lines of the hymn are added as a refrain.

5. Bweet as the shepherd's tuneful read. Paace. Also in the above Coll., circu 1773, p. 125, in 4 et. of 5 l. The hymn. "Peace, troubled soul, whose plaintive mean," in Landez Demani, N. Y., 1884, and others, is composed of st. ii. and iil.

For Shirley's popular recast, "Sweet the moments, rich in blessing," see "While my Jesus I'm possessing." [J. J.]

Shrinking from the cold hand of death. C. Wesley. [Death and Burial.] This cento was given in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 43, in 3 st. of 4 l. Of these st. l., ii., are No. 102, and st. iii. is No. 244, in vol. i. of his Short Hymas on Select Passages of H. Scripture, 1762 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ix, pp. 33 and 80). This text is repeated in the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, and is in large number of collections in most Englishspeaking countries. The spiritual uses of this hymn have been great. Several instances are given in G. J. Stevenson's Methodist H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 56. [J, J,] Shrubsole, William, eldest s. of William Shrubsole, a master mastmaker in the dockyard at Sheerness, Kent, and a Lay Preacher, was b. at Sheerness, Nov. 21, 1759. In his earlier years he was engaged as a shipwright in the dockyard, and then as a clerk. In 1785 he removed to London, and entered the Bank of England as a clerk. He subsequently became the Secretary to the Committee of the Treasury. He d. at Highbury, Aug. 23, 1829. Mr. Shrubsole was for some time a communicant at St. Anne's, Blackfriars, during the incumbency of the Rev. W. Goode; but during the last twenty years of his life he was a member with the Congregationalists, and attended the Hoxton Academy Chapel. He interested himself in religious societies, and especially the London Missionary Society (of which he became a director and one of the secretaries), the Bible Society, and the Religious Truck Society. He contributed hymns to the Evongelical Magazine, the Christian Magazine, the Theological Miscellany, the Christian Observer and the Youths' Magazine, at various dates, from 1775 to 1813. To these works we have traced nearly twenty of his hymns. A Memoir of Shrubsole was contributed by his daughter to Dr. Morison's Fathers and Founders of the London Missionary Society, 2 vols., Lond., Fisher, Sons & Co., 1844. Seven of his hymns are also given, together with a portrait, in the same work. His hymns in C. U. include :-

1, Arm of the Lord, awake, awake. Put on Thy strength, the nations shake. Missions. This appeared in Histonary Hymns, 1795; and in Morison's Fathers and Pounders, &c., 1844, vol. 1. p. 451, in 6 st. of 4 l, Dr. Rogers in his Lyra Britannica, 1887, stiributes this hymn to Shrubsole's father, and dates it 1780. Against this statement we can only put the fact that it is claimed in Mortson for the son. Orig. text, Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 502,

p. 502,
2. Bright as the sun's meridian blass. Missions. Written Aug. 10, 1795, for the first meeting of the London Missionary Society. It was printed in the London Missionary Society. It was printed in the London Mission," and signed "Junior." It is also in Morison, 1844, i. p. 449, together with the note that the hymn was duly acknowledged by Mr. Shrubsole in his lifetime, and the original ms., with numerous corrections, is in possession of his family, in his own autograph," and that it bears date "August 10, 1795." Orig. text Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 504.

3. In all the paths my feet pursue. Looking auto Jesus. Appeared in the Evangelical Magazine, 1794; in Morison, i., 1844, p. 464; and Lyra Brit., 1857, p. 505.

4. Shall science distant lands explore? Missions. Pub. in the Evangelical Magazine, 1795; and again in Morison, 1844, i. p. 452.

Pub. in the Everychical Engarine, 1796; and again in Morison, 1844, i. p. 452.

5. When streaming from the Eastern akies. Daily Daties; or, Morning. Pub. in the Christian Observer, Aug., 1813, in 8 t. of 8 i., headed "Daily Daties, Dependence and Enjoyment," and signed Probus. Also in Morison, 1844, i. p. 453; and Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 505. The well-known cento, "An every day Thy mercy spares," is from this hymn, and begins with st. iii.

8. Te saints, your greateful praises bring. Praise. In the Beaugebical Magazine, 1784; and Morison, 1844, i. p. 450, in 5 et. of 41.

7. Eion awake, Thy strength renew. The Glory of the Church. Appeared in the Evengebical Magazine, 1795; and in Morison, 1844, i. p. 450. It is sometimes given as, "Zion, awake, behold the day."

Of these hymns the most widely used are Nos. 1, 2, 5, and 7. [J, J]

Sic ter quaternis trahitur. [Lent. Evening.] This is found in a ms. circa 890 in the Bodician (Junius 25, f. 128); in two mss. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum (Vesp. D. xii., f. 50 b; Harl. 2961, f. 236 b); and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo Sazon Ch., 1851, p. 61, is printed from an 11th cent. us. at Dorham (B. iii. 32, f. 18). In the York Breviary of 1493 (where it begins "Jam ter quaternis trainitur") it is appointed for Vespers on the Saturday before the 3rd S. in Lent. The text is also in Daniel i., No. 77, Tr. as:

Sidney, Sir Philip (b. 29th Nov., 1554; d. 17th October, 1586) and Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke (b. 1550(?); d. 25th September, 1621). This illustrious pair claim notice in this work from their versification of the Psalms. These are frequently noticed by contemporaries, memorably by Dean Donne (Poems, vol. ii., pp. 313-15 in Fuller Worthies' Library); but they were not printed until 1823, as follows:---

The Praimes of David, Translated into Divers and Sundry Rinds of Verse, More vare and Excellent Ror the Method and Varietie Than any yet hath been done in English. Begun by The noble and tearned gent, Sir PHILIP SIDNET, Kat., and Antibad by The Right Honoroble The Countries of PRESERGER, his Sister. Now Arel printed from A Copy of the Original Manuscript, Transcribed by John Davies, of Hereford, in the reign of James the First.

This as of John Davies, the renowned caligraphist, passed from the Bright Sale to Penshurst. Its exquisite penmenship is its chief value. It has many bad readings and gratuitous obscurities. A more accurate text is preserved in the Bodleian (Rawlinson, Post. 25), written by Dr. Samuel Woodford, having been made from the us. of a scribe who copied under the enperintendence of Sir Philip Sidney himself, who in certain places has written "Leave a space here" for a variant stanza. There are also occasional alterations in Sidney's own autograph. This us. is the text of the present writer's reproduction in both of his editions of the complete Poems of Sir Philip Sidney in the Fuller Worthies Library (2 vols.) and in Early English Poets (3 vols.). The critical reader is referred to the "Various Readings" from both the above uss., and from a third in Trinity College, Cambridge, and two in the British Museum (Add. MSS, 12,048 and 12,047), and many notes and illustrations. It was for long doubted which portions belonged to Sir Philip and which to his sister (e.g. Dr. Macdonald in his Antiphon). But the evidence is multiplied that to Sidney belong only the first fortythree; e.g. Lord Brooke's Letter, which is reprinted in our Essay (as above), names "about forty psalms," and Dr. Woodford, nt end of Psalm xliii, notes, from the sutograph-corrected Sidney ws., "Thus far sutograph-corrected Sidney ws., "Thus far Sir Philip Sidney," and the British Museum Ms. (12,048) writes there " Hactenus Sir Philip Sidney: " and so elsewhere. Most will agree that the Countess excels her brother, and that, of its kind, the best poetry is found in her Psalmes. John Ruskin, in his Fors Clavigera, has dedicated a whole part to a brilliant eulogy of the Psalms of both. Some of Sir Philip Sidney's Songs and Sonnets deserve introduction into the Church's Praise. Many are melodious and thought-laden, and some seem to set themselves to music. S., 1837, No. 2060 (1865, No. 1682), omitting st. iv. St. v. of this version is not by Neander, and had appeared in the Württemberg G. B., 1791, No. 464, thus:-

"Tief in Nöthen Lass mich beten, Kindlich beten, Herr, vor dir! Ach, erscheine, Wenn ich weine, Bald mit deiner Hülfe mir! Lass dich finden! Lass dich finden! Denn mein Herz verlangt nach dir!"

Included in full in Cantate Domino, Boston, U. S., 1859, and omitting Mrs. Findlater's st. iv. in the Meth. N. Connexion H. Bk., 1863.

2. Kere behold me, as I cast me. A very good tr., omitting st. iv., v., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd. Ser., 1858, p. 170; repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 122. Included in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864; Christian H. Book, Cincinnati, 1865; Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bh., 1868, &c. In 1876 it was included in the Scottish Press. Hymnai, with a tr. of the stauza quoted above made by Miss Winkworth at the request of the committee of publication. This form is repeated in Newman Hall's Christ Church Hyl., 1876. The form in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Ba., 1866, beginning "Look upon me, Lord, I pray Thee," consists of st. ii. and iil.

Other tra. are: (1) "King of glory, see before Thee," from Frapp, by R. Massis in the British Heroid, May, 1865, p. 68, repeated in Reid's Fraise Hk, 1872. (2) "Now behold me, King of glory," in the derman Reformed Guardions, June 1865, p. 173, signed "S. T." [J. M.]

Σιγησάτω πᾶσα σὰρξ βροτεία. [Holy Communion.] This is the "Prayer of the Cherubic Hymn," from the Liturgy of St. James, as given in Neale and Littledale's Translations of the Primitive Liturgies, 1868-9, but rendered into metre as "Let all mortal flesh keep ellence," by G. Moultrie, in the 2nd ed. of the Lyra Euckaristica, 1864, in 4 st. of 3 double lines. In 1867 it was transferred to the People's H., for use "Before Consecration."

Sigourney, Lydis, née Huntley. This distinguished name stood at the head of the female poets of America a generation ago, and is still well remembered. Born in Norwich, in the same town from 1809 to 1814, when she removed to Hartford, where she was married to Charles Sigourney in 1819. Most of her subsequent life was spent at Hartford, and she d. there, June 10, 1865. Her first publi-cation was Moral Pieces in Prose and Verse, This was followed by 58 additional A thorough exploration of these, or works. of such of them as are poetical, would be necessary to trace her hymns with accuracy. They, however, are more numerous than important. Many have been used in the older collections; some are still in use, but few are extensively and none are universally so. Tho principal hymn-books in which they appeared were the Congregational Village Hys., 1824; Ripley's Sci., 1829; and the Connecticut Ps. & Hys., 1845; the Baptist Additional Hys. by Winchell, 1832; and Linsley and Davis's Select Hys., 1836; and the Universalist's Hya. for Christian Devotion, by Adams & Chapin, 1846. Her best known hymns chronologically arranged are:-

1. When adverse winds and waves arise. In Affliction. A graceful lyric, possibly inspired by Sir R. Grant's "When gathering clouds around I view." It appeared with four others of less importance by Mrs. Sigourney, in Dr. L. Bacon's (p. 105, ii.) Hyz. and Sac. Sungs for the Monthly Concert, Andover, Sept. 1823. It Is widely known.

2. Blest Comforter diving. Whitsuntide, This is one of four hymns by Mrs. Sigourney, which appeared in Nettleton's Village Hymns, 1824, under the signature of "H." It is sometimes altered to "Thou Comforter divine." Her best hymn.

divine." Her best hymn.

3. We mourn for those who tall. Death and Buriat.
This poem on "Mistaken Grief" appeared in Chesver's
Common Place Book, 1831. It is in a few English collections, including the Leads H. Bk., 1833.

4. Chosee we His Gross to bear. Holy Baptism.
This was given in Ripley's Sel., 1829-31.

5. Saviour, Thy law we leve. Holy Baptisms. In Winchell's Additional Hys., 1832.

6. Onward, on ward, men of heaven. Hissions. This

6. Onward, onward, men of heaven, Missions, This b. Unward, onward, men of beaven. Hissions. This missionary hymn appeared in three different books in 1833, including the Christian Lyre Supp., &c. It is in C. U. in Great Britain (Kennedy, 1833, &c.).
7. Labourers of Christ, arise. Home Missions. This was contributed, with nine others, by Mrs. Sigourney, to Linsley & Davis's Select Hymns, 1826. This is one of the post widely made of her hymns.

the most widely used of her hymns.

8. Pastor, thou art from us taken. Burtal of a Minister. Sung at the funeral of the Rev. G. F. Davis, D.D., circa 1836. 9. Go to thy rest, my [fair] child. Death of a Child. From a Selection from her poems pub, in London in 1641.

10. Not for the summer hour slone. Holy Matrimony. In the same Selection as No. 9.

11. Where wilt then put thy frust! Leaning upon God. In the Connecticut Cong. Ps. & Hys., 1845.

13. Lord, may the spirit of this feast. Holy Con-munion. In the same as No. 11.

13. We praise Thee if one resource soul. Temperance Anniversary. In Adams and Chapin's Hys. for Christian Devotion, 1846.

In addition to these hymns there are several others in the collections named above. As, however, they are not repeated in modern hymn-books they are omitted from this list. We would add that two hymns, not noted above, "Little raindrops feed the rill" (Power of little things), and "There was a noble ark, are in C. U. in G. Britain; and that a selection of her pieces is given in the Lyra Sac. Amer., Lond., 1868. [F. M. B.]

2. Star of peace to wanderers weary. For those at Sea. Written in 1930, and given in the Scottish Evang. Union Hyl., 1878.

Simson, Patrick, b. Oct. 2, 1628, at New-Abbey, near Dumfries, studied at the University of Edinburgh, and was ordained Parish Minister of Renfrew in 1658. He was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1695-96, and d. at Renfrew, Oct. 24, 1715. His poetical pieces were pub. as Spiritual Sanga; or, Holy Poems. A Garden of true Delight. Edin-burgh, A. Anderson, for J. Gibson, Glasgow, 1685-86. These poems are divided into six books. A selection from this work, after revision, was formally sanctioned by the General Assembly of 1708 for use in public worship, but seems never to have been issued. [See Scottish Hymnody, 1v. § 3.] The Aberdeen reprint (1757) of the Spiritual Songs contains a second part given as a Supplement, entitled Some Scriptural Hymns, selected from sundry Passages of Holy Writ, 61 of which are from the O. T. and 48 from the N. T. Those hymns are by the Rev. John Forbes, who in 1717 was ordained minister of the parish of Pitaligo, Aberdeenshire, became minister of Old Deer in 1718, and d. April 29, 1769. [J. M.]

Binae sub alto vertice. Jean Baptiste de Santeid. [For Evangelists.] Appeared in the Chanica Brev., 1686, p. viii.; in his Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1689, p. 198 (ed. 1698, p. 241); and the Paris Brev., 1736, as the hymn at Lands for the Feasts of St. Mark and St. Luke. The text is also in J. Chandler's H_{76} . of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 91; and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:-

From Sinai's trembling peak. By E. Caswall, in his Masque of Mary, 1858, p. 321, and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 183. It is repeated in the 1863 Appendix to the H. Noted, the Hymnary, 1872, &c.

Since Jesus freely did appear. J.

Berridge. (Holy Matrimony.) Appeared in the Gospel Magazine for Aug. 1775, p. 380, in 6 st. of 4 L, headed with the text St. John ii. 1, 2, followed by the words "A Wodding Hymn," and signed "Old Everton." It was afterwards included in his Zion's Songs, 1785, as "Our Jesus freely did appear." It is given in modern hymn-books generally in an altered form, with varying number of stanzas. [J. J.]

Since the dear hour that brought me to Thy foot. [Faith in Christ.] The closing lines of W. Cowper's poem, entitled Truth, which was pub, in his Poems, 1782, read as follows:—

" All joy to the believer! He can speak— Trembling yet happy, confident yet meek. Since the dear hour that brought me to Thy foot, And cut off all my follies by the root, I pover trusted in an arm but Thine, Nor hoped, but in Thy righteonsuese divine : My prayers and alms, imperfect and defiled, Were but the feeble efforts of a child; Howe'er perform'd, it was their brightest part, That they proceeded from a grateful heart; Cleansed in Thine own all-purifying blood, Forgive their evil, and accept their good; I cast them at Thy feet-my only plea Is what it was, dependence upon Thee White struggling in the vale of tears below, 'That never fail'd, nor shall it fall me now.' Angelic gratulations rend the skies, Pride falls unpitied, never more to rise, Humility is crown'd and Faith receives the prize."

On these lines the Bev. J. G. Pike, Baptist minister at Derby, based a cento in 5 st. of 6 1., the first of which reads:—

 "Jess, if Thos hast brought me to Thy foot, And cut up all my follies by the root, Mer may I frust in any arm but Thiue, Nor hope but in Thy rightecumess divine: It if it, is death, be this my only plea, That Thos on Calvary didst die for me!"

The italics show the changes made by Mr. Pike in adapting these opening lines for public worship. The remaining lines are similarly treated, and the result is a most pleasing and

3 st. of 6 l. St. ii, and iii. are almost entirely new. This text, with slight alterations, was repeated in Kennedy, 1863. [J. J.]
Sing to the Lord a joyful song. J. S.

B. Mousell. (Morning.) This hymn, based on Ps. cxlv. 1, 2, appeared in his Hys. of Love and Praise, 1863, p. i. in 5 st. of 81. It was repeated with slight variations in his Spiritual Songs, 1869, and again in his Parish Hymnal, 1873, No. 13. The text in C. U., as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Thring's Coll., 1882, and others, is that of 1863. [J. J.]

Sing to the Lord a new-made song, Great miracles to Him, &c. B. H. Kennedy. (Ps. xcviii.) Appeared in his Positer, or Ps. of David, &c., 1860, p. 155, in 7 st. of 31., and again, with a doxology, in his Hyano. Christ., 1863, in 4 st. of 6 l. [J. J.]

Sing to the Lord a new-made song; Let all in one, &c. H. F. Lyte. [Ps. zcvi.] Pub in his Spirit of the Pealms, 1884, as the 2nd version of the 96th Ps., in 3 st. of 8 l., and again in other bymn-books. [J. J.]

Sing to the Lord a new-made song, Who wondrous things, &c. Tate & Brady. [Ps. xcrist.] This N. V. (1696) paraphrase of Ps. 98 is not in C. U. The cento given in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, as No. 98, is composed of st. i.-iv. from this paraphrase, and st. v., vi., of Bp. Mant's version of the same psalm, 1824. [J. J.]

Sing to the Lord of harvest. J. S. B. Monsell. [Harvest.] Pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Hys. of Love and Praise, 1866, in 4 st. of 8 l. and, again, altered to "Sing to the Lord of bounty," in his Parish Hymnal, 1873. Both forms of the text are in C. U. in G. Britain and America. In his Parish Hymnal, Dr. Monsell appointed this hymn for Rogation Days. [J. J.]

Sing to the Lord with joyful voice. I. Watts. [Ps. c.] Ist pub. in his Pealers of David, &c., 1719, p. 256, in 6 st. of 4 l. In this form its use in modern collections is limited; that which has attained to the greatest popularity being—"Before Jehovah's awful throne." This arrangement is by J. Wesley, and was 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hys., at Charlestown, U.S.A., in 1786-7, p. 5, and

Sing we the song of those who stand. J. Montgomery. [Communion of Sainte.] Written for the Whitsuntble guthering of the Sheffield Sunday School Union, 1824, and first printed for that occasion. It was included in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 560 : and, again, in his Original Hye., 1853, No. 200, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, in both instances, "The Church Militant learning the Church Triumphant's Song." It is in somewhat extensive use. See also, Worthy the Lamb for sinners slain. [J, J.]

SING WE THE SONG

Sing, ye faithful, sing with gladness. J. Ellerton. [Christmas.] let pub. in the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick's Sixteen Hys. for Church and Home, 1870, in 8 st. of 6 l., with the refrain, "Evermore and evermore." It is repeated, unaltered, in the Brown-Borthwick Select Hys. for Church and Home, 1871. This form of the hymn is the authorized text. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, it was given, with slight alterations, and the omission of et. ii.-iv., and the refrain. This hymn is partly an imitation of Prudentius's "Da puer pleotrum" (p. 276, 1.) [J. J.]

Singen wir aus Hersensgrund. [Grace after Meat.] Wackernagel, i., p. 776, citus this as No. 6 of Schöuer geistlicher Lieder achte, printed at Erfurt, 1563; but at iv., p. 579, he prints the text from the Hundert Christenliche Haussgesang, Nürnberg, 1569: and from J. Eichorn's Geistliche Lieder, Frankfurt a. O., 1569, in 6 st. of 7 l. The broadsheet, Nürnberg, eds., which, in his Bibliographie, 1855, pp. 279, 308, he had dated 1556 and 1560, he afterwards said were of later date. Mützell, No. 559, prints it from a 1568 ed. of Eichorn's G. B. It is found in Porst's G. B., ed. 1855, No. 681. It has sometimes been erroneously ascribed to E. Alber, to B. Ringwaldt, or to N. Selnecker. Tr. as:-

(1) "Now give thanks ye old and young." By J. C. Jacobi, 1725, p. 62 (1732, p. 181). Included in the Mercutan H. Bit., 1754, pk. 1, No. 316; but only partly repeated in later cas., e.g. 1886, No. 1297, where only the st. beginning, "Praise our God, it is but just." is from this brown. from this hymn. [J. M.]

Sinner, O why so thoughtless grown. I. Watte and J. Rippon. [Expostulation.] In I. Watte's Hore Lyrica, 1706, Bk. ii., there is a poem, "To the Right Honourable John Cuts, at the Siege of Namur:" and entitled, "The Hardy Soldier." It begins, "O why is man so thoughtless grown," and extends to 6 st. of 4 l. Dr. Rippon, in his Sel., 1787, No. 581, gave st. i., iv., v., in a very much altered form, and succeeded in producing a hymn which has been somewhat popular, as follows:-

I. Watte, 1706. "O why is man so thoughtless grown!

Why, guilty souls, in haste to die? Vent'ring the leap t' worlds

Unknows, Heedless to arms and blood they dy. "But fremey dares eternal

And spurr'd with ho-nour's siry dreams, Flies to attack th' infernal gate, And force a passage to the flames.

Thus hovering o'er Namuria's plains, Song beavinty love in Gabriel's form:

morning strains, And vow'd to pray before the storm."

J. Rippon, 1787. " Sinner, O wky so thoughtless grown? Why in such dreadful baste to die? During to leap to worlds meknown Heedless against thy God to fly? Will thou despite eternal fate, Urg'd on by sin's fan-(artic drams) Nadly allowed the informal gate, And force thy passage to the flames?

"May, sinner; on the gos-psi plains
Bihold the God of love unfold
The glories of His dying pains.

For ever leiling, yet un-told."

Dr. Rippon's form of the text was repeated in some of the older collections, and is still found in a few modern hymn-books in G. [J. J.] Britain and America.

Sinners, obey the gospel word. C. Wesley. [Invitation.] Pub in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. i., No. 155, in 10 st. of 4 l., and based upon St. Luke xiv. 17. (P. Works, 1988, Parks). 1868-72, vol. v. p. 63.) In his note on this hymn, Mr. G. J. Stevenson says:—

"In John Wesley's 'Plain Account of Christian Perfection,' the author makes the following statement: 'It the year 1749, my brother printed two volumes of Hysina and Sacrat Poema. As I did not see them before they were published, there were some things in them which I did not approve of. But I quite approved of the main of the byman on this head—Present Salvation and Perfect Love. This byman is the first extracted for the West. H. Bir., 1380] from those volumes. The work was published by subscription in order to raise money for the author's marriage, and to snable him so commence housekeeping. He had the names of 1145 subscription, at twelve shillings sach; the preachers acted as agents to collect the money and distribute the books."—Meth. H. Bir. Notes, 1883, p. 30.

In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, the text of this hymn was given in full, and without altera-tion, as No. 9. It was repeated in later editions, and also passed, in the same form, into several collections in G. Britain and America. In addition the following abbreviations and centos are in C. U.:~-

I. Maners, obey the geopel word. This abbreviation in het. (st. 1,-iv., vt.) was given in G. Whitefield's Hya. for Social Worship, 1783, No. 5; M. Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760; Bickersisth's Christian Pealsmody, 1883, and others, to modern books.

3. Come, now, ye wanteress, to your Ged. This begins with at. vi. with atterations, and is given in several American collections, including the Physical Cold., 1985, and chees.

3. Come, 0 ye sinners, to the Lord. This also begins with st. vl., altered, and is in several American collec-

4. Come, weary sculs, in Christ your Lord. This, to Rp. Bickersteth's H. Comp., is composed of st. iv., vi., ix., x., slightly sitered.

Mys. and Songs of Praise, R. Y., 1874, No. 483, in composed of as, vi.-x. slightly altered.

5. To sinsers, beer the gospel word. This, in Menmaily, 1863, is from the former part of the hymn, with

5. His. H. B. -B., added by Dr. Kennedy. This canto is adapted for Holy Communion.

This hymn has a wide acceptance (in its full form, and in these its several parts) both [J. J.] in G. Britain and America.

Sinners, the call obey, The latest call of grace. C. Wesley. [In Time of National Danger.] This bymn was written under the same circumstances as " Sovereign of all. Whose will ordains" (p. 1988, it.), and was pub. in the same tract, Hymns for Times of Trouble and Persecution, 1st et., 1744, in 8 st. of 81. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 12). In the Wes. H. Hk., 1780, st. v.-vii. from this hymn, and st. v., vi. from C. Wesley's "Tremendous Lord of earth and sky," pub. in Hys. Occasioned by the Earthquake, March 8, 1750: Lond., 1750, were given as No. 441, as a hymn "For England," beginning, "Terrible God and true." In the 2nd ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1781, this cente was replaced by et. i., if., vi.-viii., as "Sinners, the call obey," and this was retained until the revised ed. of 1875, when it was replaced by "Jesus, the word bestow" (Home Missions), which had been previously pub. from the Wesley MSS. in the 1830 Supplement to the Wes. H. Bk., No. 706 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. xiii., p. 22). [J. J.]

Sinners, turn; why will ye die? C. Wesley. [Exposulation.] Appeared in Hye. on God's Everlasting Love, 1721, in 16 st. of 8 1., and based upon Ezekiel xviii. 31. (P. Works, 1864-72, vol. iii. p. 84.) In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, 12 st. were given as three separate hymns:—

Sinners, turn; why will ye die? No. 6.
 Let the beaute their breath resign. No. 3. What could your Redsemer do. No. 8.

And these have been repented in numerous collections in G. Britain and America. In the American Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1849, there is also a cento, "Sinners, turn while God is near," beginning with st. xv. [J. J.]

Skinner, James, M.A., son of the Very Rev. John Skinner, Dean of Dunkeld and Dumblane, and grandson of Bishop Skinner of Aberdeen, was b. June 28, 1818, and educated at the University of Durham, B.A. 1887, M.A. 1840, and subsequently a Fellow of his University. Taking boly orders in 1841, he became a Chaplain to Her Majesty's forces in 1844. He was subsequently Curate of St. Barnabas, Pimlico, Vicar of Newland, and Warden of the Beauchamp Charity. Through ill-health he retired from parochial work in 1877, and d. in Dec. 1881. His pub. works include (1) A Guide to Advent; (2) A Guide to Lent; (3) Warnings and Consolations; (4) an Office of Spiritual Communion; and (5) Colestia. This last is a versified tr. of the so-called Manual of St. Augustine in 36 odes. Mr. Skinner's Daily Service Hymnal, was pub. in 1863. To this collection he contributed several frs. from the Latin, and two or three original hymns, including "The Seven Canonical Hours of the Passion," adapted from other sources :--

Matina, Jean, Lord, at dead of night.
Frime. Jean, Lord, at hour of Frime.
Fierce Jean, Lord, for star of mine.
Sect. Jean, Lord, for star of mine.
Nones, Jean, Lord, Who three iong hours.
Nones, Jean, Lard, with blending brow.
Fespera, Jean, at the Vesper hour.
Chaptine. Jean, whose pure limbs for me.

These hymns were subsequently transferred to the Appx of the Hymnol N. Usually Skinner's tra. are not found beyond the Daily Service Hymnal. [J. J.]

Slain for my soul, for all my sins defamed. H. Kynaston. [Good Friday.] Pub. in his Occasional Hymns, 2nd Series. Pt. il. Chiefly on the Miracles: 1866, p. 11, in 6 st. of 4 L, and headed "Lord, remember me." In 1872 it was repeated in the Hymnery, with the emission of St. iv. The same text is in the American Church Praiss Bk., 1882. [J.J.]

Slatter, James, was b. at Oxford in 1790, and spent his life in that city. He was a layman, in business, and a member of the Baptist church in the New Road. He d. May 22, 1862. Mr. Slatter wrote a book entitled "Rural Pictures," which however was only circulated privately. He also wrote many hymns, which were never published, and two, which appeared in the Bap. New Selection, 1828: (1) "Great God, to thee, a lowly band" (Sunday Scholars' Hyma). (2)
"Through Nature's temple, large and wide" (Divine Worship). [W. R. S.]

Slavery and death the cup contains. L. M. Sargent. [Temperance.] Mr. Nutter says in his Hymn Studies, &c., N. Y., 1884, p. 847, "This hymn was written during the Washingtonian Temperance Revival." It appeared in Adams and Chapin's Unitarian Hys. for Christian Devotion, Boston, U.S.A., 1846, No. 793, in 4 st. of 4 l. In the American Meth. Episco. Hymnal, 1878, it begins "Bondage and death the cup contains." The author, Lucius Maulius Sergent (b. 1788, d. 1867) was an earnest advocate of Temperance, and the author of Temperance Tales, and other [J. J.] WORKS.

Slinn, Sarah. In the Gospel Magazine for July 1779 a hymn in 9 st. of 4 1, was given beginning "God with us! O glorious Name;" headed "Emanuel; or, God with us. By a Lody," and signed "S. S.—N." In Rippou's Bap. Sel. 1787, st. i. ii. vi. jii. iv. with alterations, and in the order named, were given as No. 174, but without signature. In J. Dobell's New Sci., 1806, the same text is repeated as from Wood's Col. The same text was again repeated to modern hymn-books, and is that now in C. U. From D. Sedgwick's uss. we find the signature "S. S.—N." was filled in as Sarah Slinn by him, but his papers do not furnish any authority for the name, nor for the date of 1777 which he has attached thereto in his ms, note to Dohell's New Sel. [J. J.]

Sloan, John Morrison, M.A., eldest s. of John Sloan, farmer of Stairaird, near Mauchline, Ayrshire was b. at Stairaird, May 19, 1835. Smith, Joseph Denham, was b. at Romsey, Hants, circa 1816. After studying for some time in the Dublin Theological Institute, he entered the Congregational Ministry in 1840. In 1849 he became Pastor of the Congregational Church at Kingstown, near Dublin, and in 1863 began a series of services at Merrion Hall, Dublin, and subsequently at other places. His Evangeliatio work in England and Ireland is well known. In connection therewith he has published a large number of tracts, pamphlets, and small books. One of these, Times of Refreshing illustrated in the Present Revival of Religion, 1860, included several of his hymns which were sung during that time at his special services at Kingstown. He also pub. Seven Hymne for the Present Time, circa 1870-6; and The New Times of Refreshing. Hys. for General and Special Use. Compiled by J. Denham Smith. Lond.: J. E. Hawkins, N.D. In this collection his signed hymns are 36 in all, and deal with the subjects usually associated with what are known as "Gospel Hymna." There are several also in The Entarged London H. Bk., 1878. His hymn "Just as Thou art—how wondrous fair" (1866) is in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, and "Yes, we part, but not for ever" (Pasting), in several minor collections. Mr. Smith's hymns have not been incorporated into the leading hymnals of G. Britain or America.

Smith, Samuel Francis, p.p., was b. in Boston, U.S.A., Oct. 21, 1808, and graduated in arts at Harvard, and in theology at Andover. He entered the Baptist ministry in 1832, and became the same year editor of the Baptist Missionary Magazine. He also contributed to the Encyclopædia Americana. From 1834 to 1842 he was pastor at Waterville, Maine, and Professor of Modern Lanwille, Maine, and Professor of Modern Lan20. Spirit of holiness, despend. Whitsuntide. Apguages in Waterville College. Smith, Samuel J., b. in the autumn of 1771, and d. Nov. 14, 1835. He was a wealthy Quaker, resided at Burlington, New Jersey; but followed no profession. His Miscellaneous Writings with a short Memoir, were pub. posthumously in 1836. He is known to hymnnology through his hymn-nology through his hymn—

Arise, my soul, with rapture rise. Morning. The earliest date to which we have traced this hymn is Priscilla Gurney's Hymne, Lond., 1818. It was included in the American Prayer Hook Collection, 1825, No. 165, and thence has passed into several collections. It is also in the Misc. Writings, 1804; but there are slight differences in the text. It is included, together with a second piece, on Christ stilling the Tempest. "When on His mission from His throne in heaven," in Lyra Sac. Americano, 1869.

Smith, Walter Chalmers, D.D., was b. at Aberdeen Dec. 5, 1824, and educated at the Grammar School and University of that City. He pursued his Theological studies at Edinburgh, and was ordained Paster of the Scottish Church in Chadwell Street, Islington, London, Dec. 25, 1850. After holding several pastorates he became, in 1876, Minister of the Free High Church, Edinburgh. His contributions to poetical literature have been many and of great merit. His principal works are:-

(1) The Bishop's Walk, 1860; (2) Girig Grange, 1872; (3) Borland Halt, 1874; (4) Hilda among the Broken Gods, 1878; (6) North Country Folk, 1833; (6) Kildrostan, 1884; (7) Hymns of Christ and Christian Life, 1876.

From his Hys. of Christ, &c., 1876, the following, after revision, were included in Horder's Cong. Hymns, 1884 :-

1. Immortal, Invisible, God only wise. God, All in All.

 Lord, God, Omnipotent. Omnipotence.
 Our portion is not here. Treasure in Housen.
 There is no wrath to be appeared. God is . In Horder's Cong. Hypers a new opening stance was added to this byum by Dr. Smith at the request of the ciltor, and in that collection the hymn begins "I vexed me with a troubled thought."

Dr. Smith's hymns are rich in thought and vigorous in expression. They deserve and probably will receive greater notice than hitherto at the hands of hymnal compilers. [W. G. H.]

Smith. Wharton Buchanan, M.A., WHE b. March 15, 1848, and educated at King's College, London (where he was McCaul and Trench prizemen in 1870), and Trinity College, Dublin, B.A., 1878; M.A. 1883. Taking Holy Orders in 1871 he was from 1871-73 Curate of St. Mark's, Surbiton; and from 1873-83 of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, London. In 1883 he became Chaplain to the Bishop of Grahamstown. He is the author of two hymns in Thring's Coll., 1882: "My God, I praise Thee for the light returning" (Morning), which appeared in the Parish Magazine of St. Peter's, Eaton Square; and "Raised between the earth and heaven" (Dedication of Church [J. J.] Bells).

Smyttan, George Hunt, B.A., s. of Dr. Smyttan, of the Bombay Medical Board, was b, circa 1825, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, B.A. 1845. He took holy orders in 1848, and in 1850 was preferred to the Rectory of Hawksworth, Notts, where he d. in 1870. He pub. Thoughts in Verse for the Afflicted, 1849; Mission Songs and Bullads, 1860; and Florum Sacra, N. D. He was the author of the well-known hymn, "Forty days, and forty nights" (p. 884, i.), and of a second which is found in several collections, "Jesu, ever present with Thy Church below" (Holy Communion), which appeared in the 2nd ed. of Lyra Eucharistica, 1864. [J. J.]

So did the Hebrew prophet raise. I Watts. [Passiontide.] Pub. in his Hymns and S. Songs, 1709, Bk. i., No. 112, in 4 st. of 4 l. In the same work, Bk. i., No. 100, is the L. M. hymn, " Not to condemn the sons of men," in 4 st. of 4 l. These hymns are in C. U. in their original forms, but their principal interest arises out of their connection with the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases. In 1745, st. i.-iii. of "So did the Hebrew prophet raise," were adopted as st. i.-iii. of the Draft Trs. and Paraphs. "Of old the Hebrew prophet rais'd," and "Not to condemn the sons of men," was rewritten in c. M., and given as st. iv.-vii. of the same hymn. In the Droft of 1751 this arrangement was altered to "As when the Hebrew prophet rais'd," the alteration being confined to st. i. The Draft of 1781 contained further alterations, and finally the hymn came forth in the official Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, as a paraphrase (No. xli.) of St. John iii. 14-19, "As when the Hebrew prophet rais'd," st. i. being from the Draft of 1751, as above; st. ii., iii., iv., new, but based upon the Draft of 1745; st. v. from the Draft of 1745; st. v. new; st. vi. from the Draft of 1745. This form of the bymn has been authorized for use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years, and is also found in several modern hymu-books. In a list of authors and revisers of the Scotlish Trs. and Paraphs., 1781, made by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.), the 1781 revision is attributed to W. Cameron. The designation of this hymn is I. Watts, 1709; Scottish Trs. and Paraphs., 1745-51; and W. Cameron, 1781. [J. J.]

So firm the saint's foundations stand. P. Doddridge. [Joy in Affliction.] This hymn is No. 3 of the D. ses., in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The impoverished saint rejoicing in God, from Habak. iii. 17." It is undated, but is found between two hymns dated respectively "Oct. 29, 1735," and "Nov. 16, 1785." This associates it with the year 1785. In 1755 it was pub. in Job Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, No. 161, and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1739, No. 182. Its use is limited.

About 1741 (see Doddridge, P. : also Boddridge, P., in Various), a copy of the above-named Ms. was given by Lady Frances Gardiner to Robert Blair (p. 145, 1), of Athelstaneford, Scotland, who, in 1742, became one of the Committee by whom the Droft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases of 1745 was compiled. In that Draft this hymn appeared as, "Secure the saint's foundation stands." In 1748 the Presbytery of Edinburgh proposed to add an alternative version of the same passage (Habak. 17), in 4 st., and probably made by Dr. Hugh Blair. The Assembly's Committee, however, not seeing the need for two versions of the same passage of Holy Scripture, adopted st. i.-iii. of Blair's version, and st. iii. from Doddridge's hymn as at. iv., and gave the cento as "What the no flowers the fig-tree clothe," in their Draft Trs. and Paraphs. of 1751. In the Draft of 1781 it was repeated, with slight alterations, and a new stanza, beginning, "He to my tardy feet shall lend." In the authorized issue of the Tre. and Paraphs. of 1781 it finally appeared as No. xxxii., the only alteration from the Draft of the same year being in Il. 3 and 4 of the new stanza. This hast alteration is attributed by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.) to John Logan. The correct designation therefore of the authorized text is P. Doddridge, 1735: Scattish Trs. & Parophe., 1745; Dr. H. Blair, 1748 and 1751; and J. Logan, 1781. Miss J. E. Leeson rewrote this hymn as "Although the fig-free blackwards." blossom not," for her Paraphrases and Hymns, 1853. There is also a cento in T. Darling's Hys. for the Ch. of England, ed., 1889, in 3 st, of 6 l., beginning, "What though the fig-tree's strength decay." This is by Mr. Darling based upon the 1781 text as above. [J. J.]

of God from several Scripturea." In C. U. it is usually abridged. Modern hymn-books also contain the following centos therefrom:—

1. As new-bern babes desire the broast. In a few collections.

s, Boat thru the high and heavenly Que? This, in the American Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, Roston, 1864, No. 427, is composed of st. ix., vi.-viii, with slight alterations.

 Father, I wait before Thy throne. An altered form of st. ix., x., in the Math. Episco. Hysins, 1849, and other American collections.

and other American collections.

4. Grace, like an uncorrupted seed. This begins with st. v. and is found in a few American hymnels.

5. Immertal principles forbid. This, in the New Corg., 1859, is composed of st. v.-x., with alterations.

6. Lord, I address Tay beavenly throns. This, in the Bap. Ft. & Hys., 1858, is composed of st. ix., vi., v., vii., viii., in the order named.

This hymn in these various forms is in extensive use. [J. J.]

So wahr ich lebe, spricht dein Gott. J. Heermann. [Lent.] On Ezekiel xxxiii. 11. 1st pub. in his Devoti musica cordis, Breslau, 1630, p. 1, in 7 st. of 6 l., entitled, "A true admonition from St. Augustine that one should not put off repentance." It seems to be suggested by chap. 2 in the mediaeval compilation known as the Mediationes of St. Augustine. It is in Mützell, 1858, No. 13, in Wackernagel's od. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 1, and the Uno. L. S., 1851. Tr. as:—

As sure I live, thy Maker saith. In full by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psal. Ger., pt. ii., 1725, p. 21. In his ed. 1732, p. 93, altered and beginning "Sure as I live;" and from this st. i., ii., v., II. 1-4, and vi., II. 1-2 were included in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 470; and st. i., iv., v. in the Evang. Union H. Bk., 1856.

Other tre. are:—(1) "Sinners, your Maker is your Friend," a tr. of st. 1 as No. 225 in the Horavios H. Bk., 1789. (2) "As truly as I live, God saith," by Miss Burlingham, in the British Heraid, Aug. 1865. (3) "Yea, as I live, Jehovah saith," by E. Massie, 1807.

Soden, Alfred James, s. of Thomas Soden, J.r. of Coventry, was b. at Coventry, Jan. 9, 1839, and educated for the legal profession, in which he practised as a soluctor, at Coventry, for three years. With a presperous career before him, yet the profession was distasteful to him, and in 1864 he took Holy Orders; was successively Curate of King's Norton, 1864; and of Blockley, 1866. In 1878 he was preferred to the Vicarage of Aston Magna in the Diocesse of Worcester, which he lass since exchanged for Hogsthorpe, Alford, Lincolnshire. Mr. Soden pub. in 1875 The History of Blockley. He also edited:—

The Universal Hymn Book, specially adapted for Sundays and Holy Pays, and for General Use in the Church, Lond. Hiffe & Son, 1983. It contains 620 hymns, which are arranged mainly in the order of the Book of Common Prayer, special attention being given to supply hymns based on the Collecta, Epistles and Cospels throughout. This is a distinctive feature, and worthy of noise. There is also a large percentage of hymns not found in other collections. The work is comprehensive and well edited.

To this collection Mr. Soden contributed the following hymne:-

A quiet eve at Bethany. The Barren Fig Tree.
 A Spirlt, Mighty God, Thou art. God a Spirit.
 Almighty God, this truth we own. Collect for 12th S. after Trimity.

5. Almighty God, to Whom we owe. Plower Services.
5. Citizens of heaven, Soldiers of the Cross. Epistic.

 Hark now, thou sinner, Jesus calls. Invitation.
 Hark to the words of Him like Whom. Gospel. 4th Sunday after Trinity.

Bol pracceps rapitur, proxima nox adest. [Evening.] This line is given in E. Coswall's Masque of Mary, &c., 1858, p. 881; and his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 237 as the opening of a Latin hymn, the tr. of which by Caswall (as above) began :-

" The sun to sinking fast The daylight dies; Let love awake and pay Her evening sacrifice."

The Rev. L. C. Biggs, who corresponded with the translator on the subject, says in a note to the tr. in his Annotated ed. of H. A. & M.:-

"Every effort has been made to discover the original of this hymn, but in vain. It was, the translator believes, in the passession of one of the former members of the Edgbarton Oratory; contained in a small book of devotions. It can scarcely have been older than the eighteenth century."

The search has been continued to our going to press; but still in vain. In Bigge's annotated H. A. & M. a rendering of Caswall's tr. into Latin by the Rev. C. B. Pearson is substituted for the original. The tr. "The sun is sinking fast," is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. [J, J]

Soldiers of Christ, arise, And put your armour on. C. Wesley. [The whole Armour of God, or Confirmation.] Appeared in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1749, in 16 st. of 8 l., being No. 28 of "Hymns for Believers." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v. p. 40.) In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, 12 of the 16 stanges were given as three separate hymna thus:-

"Soldiers of Christ, arise." No. 258.
 "Rut, above all, lay hold." No. 259.
 "In fellowship atone." No. 280.

All of those hymns have passed into other collections in G. Britain and America. The most popular arrangement, however, is a cento (beginning with the original first line), ranging from 4 st. to 6 st. of 4 l., which is found in numerous modern hymn-books. It is descended from A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hymns, 1776, where No. 16 is composed of 16 st. of 4 h., compiled from C. Wesley's 16 st. of 8 h. The dexology in H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, in Thring's Coll., 1882, and others, is not in the original. Alterations are also sometimes made in the test, as in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, which considerably weaken the hymn. The hymns: (1) "Followers of Christ, arise"; (2) "Rise, Christian soldiers, rise"; (3) "Soldiers of Christ, lay hold"; and (4) "Pray without ceasing, pray." given in some American collections, are centes from the original, with alterations. [J. J.]

Boldiers of the Cross, arise. Bp. W.W. How. [Home Missions.] 1st pub. in Morrell and How's Ps. & Hys., 1854, in 7 st. of 4 l. When included in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, slight changes were made by Bp. How, in the text of st. vi. and vii. This form of the hymn is authorized. [J. J.]

Solemne nos jejunii. [Lent.] Appeared in the Paris Brev., 1736, where it is appointed for Vespers on Sundays and Ferial days in Lent to the Saturday before Passion Sunday exclusively. The text is in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1887, No. 61, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:-

1. The soleren seeson cells us now. J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 68, and again in his Hys. of the Church, 1841, No. 38. It is in C. U. in its original form, and also as:-

(1) Again the solemn season calls. This is in Rarry's Pt. & Hyr., 1862, &c.
(2) Once more the solemn season calls. An altered version of Chandler's tr. with this opening stanza was given in Murray's Hymnal, 1852. This stanza and portions of the rest of Murray's text have been repeated in later collections but without uniformity, the intrincinal paristics the before. principal variations being:

principal variations being:—
(a) In H. A. & H., and Sarum, by Chandler, Murray, and the compilers of H. A. & M.
(b) In Mercer, by Chandler, Murray, and Mercer, (c) In Kenneity, by Chandler, Murray, and Kenneity.
(d) In Morrell & Hose, by Chandler, Murray and compliers of H. A. & M.

In addition to these collections there are others of less importance, in which variations are introduced.

(8) The seared season now dath null. This appeared in the Bagitish Hyl., 1852-61. This opening line, but not the rest of the English Hyl. alterations was repeated in the 1863 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., No. 217.

(4) 0 minus, bring not tears alone. This, in Martinean's Hypnus, &c., 1840 and 1873, and in a few American collections, is composed of st. il.-v. of Chandler's text

When these various forms of the text are taken into account, Chandler's tr. is found to be in extensive use,

2. Weeping on God we wait. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy, and Tune Bh., 1852-55, Lent, No. 12, and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870.

3. The selemn time of holy fast. By R. C. Singleton, in his Anglican H. Bk., 1868 and 1871.

Translations not in C. U. :- And now the scason grave and deep. I. Williams. 1839.

2. Again the time appointed see. R. Campbell, 1850, This owes a little to Chandler, and st. il. il. 3, 4, and st. iv. il. 3, 4, are by Dr. Neale, and were supplied to Campbell in ws. This tr. is repeated with slight variations in O. Shipley's Annus Sanctus, 1884.

3. The solemn fast of Lent is here. J. D. Chambers. 1867.

It must be noted also that although No. 208 in the Hymnary begins with the same line as Chandler's tr., yet the hymn as a whole is a tr. by the editors of the Hymnary, based upon $[\mathbf{J},\ \mathbf{J},]$ Chandler.

Sollt ich meinem Gott nicht singen. P. Gerhardt. [Thankegiving.] One of Gerhardt's finest hymns, setting forth the eternal love of God in His creation, redemption, and sanctification of us, His kind preservation in all our troubles and crosses, even in our forgetfulness of Him; ending with a prayer thus rendered by Mr. Massie:-

" Grant me grace, O God, I pray Thee, That I may with all my might Love, and trust Thee, and obey Thee, All the day and all the night; And when this brief life is o'er, Love and praise Thee evermore."

It is included in the 5th ed. Berlin, 1653, and in the Frankfurt ed., 1656, of Crüger's Praxis, No. 230; reprinted in Wackernagel's ed. of Gerhardt's Getsil. Lieder, No. 81, Bachmann's ed., No. 60, and the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 722. It is in 12 st. of 10 l., ll. 9, 10 in each at except xii, being

" Alles Ding währt seine Zeit, Gottes Lieb in Ewigkeit."

Of it Lauxmann in Kock viii, 333 relates the following:-

"At one of the Pastoral conferences, which the vene-able Father of the Faith, Karl Helfferich, of Döffingen rable father of the Fatth, Karl Heliterich, of Domingen in Wentemberg, conducted from 1736 to 1785, a great many little complaints were made at table about deficiency of tithes and such like matters. For a while he interest in patience. At length, while still sitting at table, he suddenly began to sing with cheerful voice the last stanza of this hymn. At this those present felt ashamed of their petty complaints, and henceforth the conversation was of more editying matters."

It is tr. into English as :-

 Shall I not his preise be singing. By Dr. Mills in his Horas Germanicae, 1845, p. 141 (1856, p. 195). It is a poor version, altogether missing-the characteristic points of the German. His st. ii., iv.-vii. beginning "As the eagle fondly hovers," were included in the Amer. Luth. Gen. Synod's Coll., 1850-52, No. 85.

2. Shall I not sing praise to Thee. A full and good tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., lst Ser., 1855, p. 200; repeated omitting st. iii.-vi., viii., as No. 10 in her C. B. for England, 1863. Included in full in Cantate Domino, Boston, U. S., 1859; and, abridged, in Kennedy, 1863; Meth. N. Connex. H. Bh., 1863, and Flett's Coll., Paisley, 1871.

3. I will sing my Maker's praises. A good tr. omitting st, vi., vili. contributed by R. Massie to the 1857 ed. of Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk., No. 185 (Ox. ed. 1864, No. 286, omitting trs. of st. ii., iv.), reprinted in his own Lyra Domestica, 1864. In full in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872, and abridged in the Moth. N. Connex. H. Bk., 1863. . 4. Can I fail my God to praise. A fr. of st. i., iii., iv. by F. C. C., as No. 218 in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864.

Sometimes a light surprises. Cowper. [Joy and Peace in Believing.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii. No. 48, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed "Joy and Peace in Believing." It is in C. U. in its full and in an abbreviated form. There are also two centes therefrom in modern collections:—(1) "In holy contemplation, we sweetly then pur-sue," in the American Sobbath H. Bk., 1858, and later editions; and (2) "Thy children, Lond, lack nothing," in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1870.

Bomno refectis artubus. St. Ambrose ? [Monday Morning.] This hymn is ascribed to St. Ambrose by Hinemar in his "De una et non tring Deitate," 857; and is one of the twelve hymns received as genuine by the Benedictine editors of St. Ambrose. Daniel, i., No. 18, gives the text, and at iv. p. 36 cites it as in a Rheinau Ms. of the 10th cent. He ranks it, however, among the hymns of the 7th or 8th cent.; and Biraghi does not include it in his Inni sinceri e Carmi de Sant' Ambrogio, 1862. Mone i. p. 372, cites it as a Ms. of the 8th cent. at Trier. Among the British Museum was, it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 12; Jul. A. vi., f. 23b; Harl 2961. f. 221); in an 11th cent. Mozarabic Hymnarium (Add. 30,851, f. 176 b), an 11th cent. Mozarabie Breviary (Add. 30,848, f. 74), &c. It is in a Ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, page 232); in two Mes. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, Nos. 387, 413; and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo Saxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. MS. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 5). It is included in the Roman (Venice, 1478, and the revision of 1632), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1643, and other Breviories; the universal use being at Matins on Monday. The text is also found in the Hymnorium Sarisb., 1851, p. 42; Königsfeld ii. p. 30, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

Son of God, Eternal Word. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [Morning.] This, together with Bp. Wordsworth's Evening Hyms, "The day is gently sinking to a close," were printed separately from his Holy Year, and were pasted into unsold copies of the 3rd ed. of that work, in 1863. In 1864 they were given as the opening hymns of the Holy Year, and have since come into somewhat coneral use in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Son of the carpenter, receive. C. Wesley. [To be Sung at Work.] Pub. in Hys. and Poens, 1739, in 5 st. of 41., and entitled "To be sung at work." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 172.) Two centos from this hymn, and both beginning with at. ii., "Servant of all, to toil for man," are in C. U. The first, composed of st. ii.—iv. appeared in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 318, and the second, st. ii.—iv. and i. in the New Cong., 1859. [J. J.]

Sonent Regi nato nova cantica. [Christmas.] This is found in a ms. in the Bodleian (Bodl. 775, f. 129 b), written circa 1000; in a Winchester ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, No. 473; in a Sarum Missal, circa 1370, in the Bodleian (Barlow 5, f. 18 b); in the St. Andrew's, Angers of 1489, Sens of 1529, and other Missals. In the Sarum use it was the sequence in the Mass at Daybreak ("in aurora") on Christmas Day. The printed text is also in Noalo's Sequentiae, 1852, p. 9, Daniel v. p. 175, and Kehrein, No. 17. The trs. are:

1. 0 come. new anthems let us sing. By E. K. Plumptre, made for and pub. in the Hymnary, 1872.

2. Now to the new-born King. By J. W. Hewett, b. Lyra Messicanica, 1864.

3. Unto the King new-born, new praises sing. By C. B. Pearson, in the Surum Mittal in English, 1868.

Songs of praise the angels sang [sing]. J. Montgomery. [Universal Praise.] Pub. in Cutterill's Sel., 1819, No. 168, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "God worthy of all Praise." It was repeated in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 562; and in his Original Hymns. 1853, No. 90. The heading in 1825 and 1853 was changed to "Glory to God in the highest." The opening line is sometimes changed to "Songs of praise the angels sing." The use of this hymn is extensive. [J. J.]

Songs of thankfulness and praise. Bp. C. Wordsworth, of Lincoln. [Epiphany.] 1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1862, No. 23, in 5 st. of 8 l., with the heading:—

"Sixth Sunday after the Epiphany.—Recapitulation of the Subjects presented in the Services of former weeks throughout the essent of Epiphany; and Anticipation of the litture great and glorious Epiphany, a which Christ will appear again, to judge the World."

In Bp. Wordsworth's revised and enlarged edition of the Holy Year, 1868, st. v., l. 2, was changed from "Mirror'd in Thy holy word." to "Present in Thy holy word;" and the heading expanded to the following:—

"Sixth Sunday after the Epiphany.—A Recapitulation of the successive Epiphanies or Manifestations of Christ, which have been already presented in the Services of the former weeks throughout the season of Epiphany; and which are preparatory to that future great and glorious Epiphany at which Christ will be manifested to all, when He will appear again to judge the World. See Chilect, Epistle, and Gospet for this week."

This hymn is one of the most popular of Bp. Wordsworth's hymns, and is in extensive use in most English-speaking countries.

[J. J.]
Sons of God, triumphant rise. C.
Wesley. [Spiritual Exultation; or, Holy Communion.] Pub. in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1739, Pt. ii., in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Hymn after the Sacrament." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 170.) This hymn is known in three forms in addition to the original:—

The first was given to it by A. M. Toplady, in his Pt. & Hys., 1775, No. 225, where it is composed of st. i.-iv. of the original, and st. ii., iii., of C. Wesley's "Lord and God of heavenly powers" (q.v.). In this form it is a born to Trains.

"Loft and God of heavenly powers" (q.v.). In this form it is a hymn of Praise.

2. The second is in Mercer, 1855-1864 (Oxford ed., No. 187). This is from Toplady's cento; st. i. being from "Sons of God, triumphant dee"; and st. ii., iii. from "Lord and God of heavenly powers." The refrain "Hallefujah" is added to each line, and it is appointed for Easter.

3. In the Altar Hymnal, 1884, No. 171, et. !.-iii., vii., viii., are given for Holy Communion. [J. J.]

Sone of men, behold from far. C. Wesley. [Epiphany.] Pub. in Hys. and Soc. Poems, 1739, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Hymn for the Epiphany." (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 184.) In M. Madan's Ps. & Hymns, 1760, it was given as No. 23, and was thus brought into use in the Church of England. It is seldom given in modern hymn books in its full form; and slight alterations are nearly always found in the text. It is in extensive use in most English-speaking countries. Notwithstanding this popularity it was excluded from the Wes. H. Bk. of 1780 and 1875. In the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, st. iv., v., vi., of this hymn, rewritten, tegether with an opening stanza and a doxology from sucher source, were given as, "Lo, the Gentiles bend the knee." This cento was repeated in the Solisbury H. Bk., 1857, and other collections. Sometimes it reads, "Lo, the Gentiles bend the knee."

Sons we are through God's election. [Election.] This hymn was given in the Gospel Magazine, April, 1777, in 8 st. of 6 l., based on the words, "'The godly consideration of Presdestination and Election in Christ, is full of sweet, pleasant, and unspeakable comfort to godly persons.'—Church of England, Article XVII;" and signed "S. P. R." In J. Dobell's New Sel., 1806, it was repeated, with slight alterations, and the omission of st. iii., and given as by "R.—..." From the New Sel. it has passed into other hymn-books in the same form. In the s. mss., the Rev. S. Adams (see p. 599, ii., "Jesus is our great salvation") says he believes this hymn to be his father's (see Adams, J., p. 18, ii.), but gives no proof, as he has done with others of his father's hymns. The hymn certainly reads like one of Adams's compositions; but his authorship is open to doubt. His usual signature in the Gospel Magazine was "J. A."

Soon shall this earthly frame, dissolv'd. [The Resurrection.] This paraphrase of 2 Cor. v. 1-11 first appeared in the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, in 1745, and was repeated in the Draft of 1751. In the authorized issue of the Trs. and Paraphs. of 1781, No. 51, several alterations were introduced into the text by W. Cameron. (See p. 100, ii.) Of this paraphrase, sts. v.-vii., are from I. Wattis's "There is a house not made with hands" (Hys. & S. Songs, 1709, iii.-v.), somewhat altered. Possibly some of the remaining stanzas may have been suggested by other hymne by Watts on kindred subjects, as, for example, Bk. i. No. 100; and Bk. ii., No. 61, in the Hys. & S. Songs, 1709; but the similarity between these hymns and this paraphrase is very slight.

Souls in heathen darkness lying. Cecil F. Alexander, née Humphreys. [Missions.] This hymn is known in four forms, each by Mrs. Alexander, and beginning with the same first line, as follows:---

1. In E. Hawkins's Verses in Commemoration of the Third Jubiles of the S. P. G., 1851-62, p. 55, in 9 st. of

2. In the S. P. C. K. Hys. for Pub. Worship, 1852, No. 184, in 4 st. of 6 1., of which st. i.-iil. are from No. 1 and st. iv. is new. This is the form in which it is usually given in modern bymn-books.

3. In Mrs. Alexander's Legend of the Golden Prayers and Other Poems, 1859, p. 167, in 8 st. of 61. This is the text of the Verses, &c., 1851-52, with the omission of el. ĺv

4. In Mrs. Carey Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881. No. 316 is composed of st. i., ii., vi., viii., from The Legend of the Golden Frayers, &c., as above. [J. J.]

Souls of men, why will ye scatter? F. W. Faber. [Invitation: The Divine Call.] This is given at p. 362, i. 21, as from his Hymns, 1862. It really appeared in his Oratory Hys., 1854, in 8 st. of 4 L, with the heading "Come to Jesus." It is found in its full form in some to Jesus. It is bound in the following centes therefrom are also in C. U.:—(1) "There's a wideness in God's mercy;" and (2) "Was there ever kindest Shepherd?" These are in several collections. [J. J.]

Southey, Caroline Ann, née Bowles, daughter of Charles Bowles, of Buckland, near Lymington, was b. in 1786; married, in 1889, to Robert Southey, the poet; and d. in 1854. Her publications include Solitary Hours, 1826; The Birth-day, a Poem, 1836; and some prose works. Her Poetical Works were pub. in 1867; and her correspondence with Southey in 1882. A few pieces from her works are in C. U. as hymns:-

1. In the Solitary Hours, 1825; and, again, in her Poetical Works, 1861, p. 285, in 6 st. of 6 l. It is given, in full, in the Bap. Pr. & Hys., 1865. To the line, "The Althul few made perfect there" (st. v., 1, 5), the fol lowing note is appended in the Poetical Works:—"The word 'few' is used here in no presumptuously exclusive sense of the Author's, but simply as being the scrip fural phrase, 'Many are called, but few are chosen.'

The word having been altered, lettly, in two religious publications, where the poem was inserted unknown to the Author, it is thought proper to annex this note."

Sovereign of all the worlds on high. P. Doddridge. [Adoption.] This is No. 78 in the p. mes., in 5 st. of 4 l., is headed, "Adoption argued from a filial temper, on Gal. iv. 6," and is dated "June 17, 1739." It was repeated, without alteration, in Job Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 281, but with the title changed to "A filial Temper the Work of the Spirit, and a proof of Adoption. Galat. iv. 6." In J. D. Hamphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 307, the 1755 heading is repeated, but the text is changed in st. iv. l. 3, from "Thou know'st, I Abba, Father, cry," to " And thus, I Abba, Father, cry." It is in C. U. in its original form, and us, " My Father God ! how sweet the sound" (st. ii.). [J, J.]

Sovereign of all, Whose will ordains. C. Wesley. [In Time of National Trouble.] This is from the tract of Hymns for Times of Trouble and Persecution, 1st cd., 1744, No. 10, in 9 st. of 4 l., and headed, "A Prayer for His Majesty King George, 'Fear God and honour the King.'" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 21.) Jackson, in his Memoir of C. Weslay (ed. 1848, pp. 149-51), says that the dread of invasion by France on behalf of the Pretender, and the fear that Popery would be re-cetablished, drove the people to many excesses, not the least marked of which was a common crusade against the Wesleys and their followers on the alleged ground (amongst other things) that they were secretly furthering the Pretender's views, and were receiving money for their labours. It was under these circumstances that the Hys. for Times of Trouble and Persecution were written and published, the finest being "Sayiour of all, Whose will ordains," and "Lord, Thou hast bid Thy people pray," the latter being entitled "For the King and the Royal Family." The former of these hymne was given in the 1st ed, of the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 453, and the latter in the 1830 Supp. thereto, an abbreviated form as No. 755.

Sow in the morn thy seed. J. Montgomery. [Missions.] Under the date of June 16, 1832, Montgomery, in a letter to his friend George Bennett, gives the history of this hymn in the following words :-

hymn in the following words:—

"In the month of February last, on our return from Bath, as my friend Mr. Rowland Hodgson and myself were travelling between Gloucester and Tewkesbury, I observed from my side of the carriage, a field which had been recently ploughed, and apparently harrowed, for the surface lay not in furrows; but upon it were several women and girls in rows, one behind another, laterally, as though they were engaged in parallel lines, but did not keep pace with each other in their work. What the work was I could not guess; it was evidently not weeding, for the ground was perfectly clear and fresh turned up. It seemed to be planting, all stooping down and appearing to put something into the earth, but they were too far of for me to distinguish what. I therefore described the scene and their mode of action to my friend, who, being blind, could not belp on the imperfection of my eyes by the aid of bis. He Immediately replied, "I dare say it is diobling, a mode of husbandry by which two-thirds of the grain necessary in the ordinary way of sowing an acre is saved; holes are picked in lines along the field, and into each of these two or three grains are dropped." "I have often beard of drilling or dibbling, but I never saw it before," I exclaimed; "and I must say if this be the latter, dibbling is quite in character with everything else in an age of political economy. A second of the send on the right hand and on the left, in liberal handfuls; this dibbling is very unpostical and unpleturesque; there is neither grace of motion nor attitude in it." A second in the send of the women and the planting out that each was excellent in its way, and best in its place.

* * * By degrees my thoughts subsided into verse, and I found them running lines, like furrows, along the field of my imagination: and in the course of the two following stanzae, which I wrote as soon as we reached formerous. next stages they had already assumed the form of the following stanzas, which I wrote as soon as we reached Bromsgrove. This is the whole history and mystery of which I fear you have heard so romantic an account, 'Sow in the morn thy seed.' Memoirs, by Holland, vol. v. p. 34.

The hymn written under these circumstances, in February 1832, was printed for the use of the Sheffield Sunday School Union, at their Whitsuntide gathering of the same year, it is in 7 st. of 4 l. It was pub. in Montgomery's Poet's Portfolio, 1835, p. 248, and headed, "The Field of the World," and again, with the same heading, in his Original Hye., 1853, p. 258. It is given in many modern hymn-books.

Sowers went throughout the land, Emily E. S. Elliott. [Harvest.] 1st pub. in the Church Missionary Juvenile Instructor, 1872, p. 124, in 4 st. of 8 l., and then in her Chimes of Consecration, 1873, p. 126. It was included, as No. 362, in the Church S. S. H. Bk., 1879, as a hymn for teachers as workers in the spiritual barvest. [J. M.]

Bpake the glorious Lord in heaven. Archbishop E. W. Benson. [Ps. cz.] Written for and first pub, in the Wellington Coll. H. Rk., 1860, and repeated in Kennedy, 1863, and others. [J. J.]

Spangenberg, August Gottlieb, s. of Georg Spangenberg, Lutheran pastor at Klettenberg near Nordhausen, was b. at Klettenberg, July 15, 1704. He entered the University of Jena in 1722, as a student of law, but soon abandoned law for the study of theology. He lived in the house of Professor Buddeus, graduated M.A. in 1726, and for some time lectured there. In Sept. 1732 he went to Halle as adjunct of the Theological faculty and superintendent of the Orphanage schools. Here he associated himself with the Separatists, and by an edict from Berlin was deprived of his offices, and, on April 8, 1738, was expelled from Halle. He at once proceeded to Herrnbut, and was received into the Moravian Community, with which he had become acquainted as early as 1727. In 1735 he accompanied the Moravian colony which settled in Georgia, and served also in Pennsylvania and in the Island of St. Thomas. He returned to Germany in 1739, and was for some time at Marienborn in Hesse. In Sept. 1741 he was present at an important Moravian Conference in London, and was there ap-pointed a member of the Unity's Direction, and also director of their financial affairs. While in England he founded, in 1742, the first English Moravian settlement, at Smith House in Yorkshire. He was then, on June 15, 1744, consecrated at Herrenheag as Moravian Bishop for North America, and from that time till 1762 was for the most part in America, working principally in Penosylvania, and among the Indians, and paying two visits to Europe. In 1762 he became the senior member of the Unity's Direction as successor to Zinzendorf, and thereafter resided for the most part either at Herrnhut or at Barby. The last years of his life were spent at Berthelsdorf near Horrobut, where he resigned his offices in Sept. 1791, and d. Sept. 18, 1792. (Koch, v. 837; G. F. Otto's Lexicon Oberlausizischer Schriftsteller, iii. 306; Herzog's Beal-Encyklopādie, xiv., 460, &c.)

Spangenberg was an earnest and able man, was much beloved and respected, and was entrusted by the Breshren with many important missions, being e.g. the principal agent in the negotiations between the Muravians and the British Government (see p. 787, i.). He did good service both in consolidating the Moravian organization and by untiring labours in America. His Autobiography appeared in 1784. He also wrote a life of Zinzendorf, in 8 vols., pub. at Barby 1772-76. His other chief work is his Idea fides fratrum, &c., Barby, 1779 (English tr. as An Exposition of Christian Doctrine, as taught in the Irrotestant Church of the United Brethren, de., London, 1784), which is accepted as an autitorised exposition of the Moravian theology. He only wrote a few hymns, which are of fervent but rational piety, but do not entitle him to high rank as a hymnwriter. They were mostly written before 1748.

Ten of them are included in the British G. B. of 1718.

Of these ten hymns the following may be noted here:—

i. Der König ruht, und sehauet doch. Christian Work. 1st pub. as No. 1004 in Appx., i., 1737, to the Herrnhut G. B., 1735, and is in 8 st. of 10 l. Repeated in the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 1385, and in the Hist. Nachricht thereto, marked as "On Zinzendorf, May 26, 1734," i.e. as written for Zinzendorf's birthday. Included in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1865, No. 1126. Tr. as:—

High on His averlasting Threne. This is a spirited but free tr. by J. Wesley, in Hys. & Suc. Pooms, 1742 (P. Works, 1868-72, ii. p. 61), in 13 st. of 8 l. St. i.-vi. are from st. i.-iii, of the German; vii. from iv.; viii. from v.; ix., x. from vi.; and xi.-xiii. from vii., viii. This tr. was included in full in the Moranian H. Bh., 1742, No. 37, and repeated abridged in later eds. (1886, No. 888, in 9 st.). Centos under the original first line are given in Montgomery's Christian Psahniat, 1825, the Amer. Meth. Bpis. Hymns, 1849, &c. Wesley's st. xi.-xiii., sitered and beginning, "What shall we offer our good Lord," were included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 479 (1875, No. 492), and repeated in the Meth. N. Conn. H. Bh., 1863, and others.

ii. Bie Kirche Christi ist hin und her. Unity of the Christian Church. Included as No. 2210 in the 2nd Suppl., circa 1746, after the 12 Appendices to the Herrnhut G. B., 1735; and is in 12 st. of 5 l. In the Brisler G. B., 1778, No. 959, st. ii., v.-vii., xii. are omitted, and it is altered to "Die Kirche Christi, die er geweiht." In the Hist. Nachricht to the 1778 it is marked as composed in North America in 1745 [at a Union Synod at Lancaster, Pennsylvania]. The text of 1778 is in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1362. In the Württemberg G. B., 1842, st. i.-iii. are as i.-iii. in 1778; v. are based on v., vi. in 1778; while st. vi. is not even suggested by Spangenberg. St. vi. reads:—

"O Geist des Натта, der das Leben schafft, Walt in der Kirche mit deiner Kraft, Dass die Gotteskinder Geboren werden Gleich wie der Morgentiau schon auf Erden Zu Christi Preis, "

The hymn has been tr. as :--

The Church of Christ that He hath ballow'd hers. This is a good tr. of st. i.-ili. of the 1778, and of the st. printed above, by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyru Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 58; repeated in Ps. & Ilys., Bedford, 1859, No. 169.

iii. Heilige Einfalt, Graderwunder. Christian Simplicity. This is an excellent picture of his own Christian character. It was 1st pub. as No. 1589 in Appx. x., circa 1741, to the Hernhut G. B., 1735, and is in 19 st. of 4 l. In the Brüder G. B., 1778, No. 835, reduced to 11 st. (st. iv. is by Zinzendorf), and this form is in Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 823 (ed. 1881, No. 441), and in some recent German collections, eg. the Pfalz G. B., 1860. According to Bunsen, 1838, p. 904, it was written as a birthday hymn for his sister. The date which Banson gives for its composition (1744) is probably a misprint for Tr. as :-

1. When simplicity we cherish. This is given in 14 st. as No. 387 in pt. ii., 1746, of the Moravian H. Bk. In the 1789 and later eds, (1849, No. 603) it is reduced to 6 st., and is entirely rewritten, save the opening line. [See [J. M.] Various.

Spee, Friedrich von, a. of Peter Spee (of the family of Spee, of Langenfeld), judge at Kaiserawörth, was b. at Kaiserawörth, Feb. 25, 1591. He was educated in the Jesuit gymnasium at Cologne, entered the order of the Jesuits there on Sept. 22, 1610, and was ordained priest about 1621. From 1613 to 1624 he was one of the tutors in the Jesuit college at Cologne, and was then sent to Paderborn to assist in the Counter Reformstion. In 1627 he was summoned by the Bishop of Wirzburg to act as confessor to persons scoused of witchcraft, and, within two years, had to accompany to the stake some 200 persons, of all ranks and ages, in whose innocence he himself firmly believed (His Cautio criminalie, seu de processibus contra sagas liber, Rinteln, 1631, was the means of almost putting a stop to such cruelties). He was then sent to further the Counter Reformation at Peine near Hildesheim, but on April 29, 1629, he was nearly murdered by some persons from Hildesheim. In 1631 he became professor of Motal Theology at Cologne. The last years of his life were spent at Trier, where, after the city had been stormed by the Spanish troops on May 6, 1635, he contracted a fever from some of the hospital patients to whom he was ministering, and d. there Aug. 7, 1695. (Koca, iv. 185; Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 193, &c.)

Spee was the first important writer of sacred poetry that had appeared in the Gorman Roman Catablic Church since the Reformation. Among his contemporaries he was noteworthy for the beauty of his style, porarree ne was notewornly for the beauty of his style, and his mastery of rhythm and metre. He seems to have come independently to much the same conclusions regarding measure and accent, and the reform of German prosody as did Opliz (see p. 371, il.). He was however of a much deeper and purer nature than Opliz; and far surpasses him in originality, in imagination, and in poetic inspiration. His poems are characterised by a very keen love for the works of God in the natural world, and a delight in all the sights and sounds of the country, especially in spring and summer; and at the same sime by a deep and fervent love to God, to Christ, and to his fellow-men. On the other hand his manerisms are very pronounced; the pastoral imagery and dialogue which he is fond of using far upon modern care when used on such sections subjects as the Agony in Gethsemane. In the hymne to Jesus he is too subjective and sentimental, and works out the lides of Christ as the Bridgeroom of the soul with unsecessary detail. His poems are often full of beauty, of pathoe, and of genuine raligious warmth, but they cannot be considered as smitable for public worship, and hardly any really came into use except as processionals sung by the people at the great fectivals or at out-door gatherings. A number passed into the Roman Catholic hymnoboks of the 17th cent, and one or two still survive. Recently Knepp, la his Be. L. S., 1880 and 1868, has included a few. Spee's influence on the hymnody of the Church was not so much direct as strongly the impulse his work gave to Scheffler (p. 1004, ii.). His earlier poems are included in his 1,1 Trist Nachigal, oder Getebicka-Postisck Lust-Waldtein, &c., Cologne, 1849. [Brit. Mus., Berlin Library, &c. The me, of this work completed in 1834, is in the Town Library of Triet.] This is Spee's most important book; reached a 5th ed, in 1633, and has been several times reprinted in this century. and his mastery of rhythm and metre. 1845 (2nd ed., Bonu, 1849); by Karl Simrock, at Heilbronn, 1876; by Oustav Balke, at Leipzig, 1877, &c. A few of the hymns had appeared in the Seraphicol Autigart, Cologne, 1636; the Geitlicher Psaller, Cologne, 1638, and other Jeault books. (2) Gildenes Tugend-Buck, &c., Cologne, 1649 [Güttingen Library]. This is a proce work on the Christian Graces of Faith, Hope, and Love, and has a few byznes interspersed.

The hymns by Spee which have pessed into English appear to be only two, viz.:---

i. Bei stiller Wacht, zur errien Wacht. Parziontide. In the Trutz Machtigal, 1642, p. 225, in 15 st. of 4 l., entitled "A mournful song on the agony of Christ on the Mount of Olives in the Carden." Previously in the the Mount of Olives in the Garden." Previously in the Straphisch Lustgart, Cologne, 1835, p. 180, in 17 st., beginning. "Bet finster Nuchi," and this text is followed in H. Bope's Cautete, 1847, No. 83, where it begins "Bet finster Nacht, vom Garten her," and is reduced to 8 st. The form which has passed into English is that in the Trier G. B. (B. C.), 1846, p. 56, in 13 st., entirely rewritten, hardly anything save the first two lines being the same as in 1849. The tr. in C. U. is:—Within a Garden's bound. In full from the text of 1846, by Miss Cox for Lyra Mystica, 1864, p. 119, and in her Hys. from the German, 1864, p. 45. Her tr. of st. L, it., x.-xiil, are included in J. L. Porter's Coll., 1878.

ii. Der trübe Winter ist vorbei. Summer. In his Truts Nachtigal, 1649, p. 35, in 12 st. of 10 l., entitled "Love Song of the Bride of Jesus in the beginning of summer time." It is a beautiful poem rather than a hymn. Included in Knapp' 27. L. S., 1850 and 1865, after the text of W. Smets. Tr. 86:—

The gloemy winter now is o'er. By Miss Winkworth, Spener, Philipp Jakob, D.D., a of Johann Philipp Spener, keeper of the archives of Count von Rappoltstein, at Rappoltsweiler, near Colmar, in Alsace, was b. at Rappoltsweiler, Jan. 13 (25), 1635. He matriculated at the University of Strassburg, in 1651, and graduated m.s. in 1658. From 1654 to 1656 he had the oversight of the studies of two sons of the Pfalzgraf Christian 1. In 1659 he went to Basel, and then spent a year at Geneva. He left Geneva in 1661, and accompanied the young Count von Rappoltstein to Württemberg, stayiog principally at Stuttgart and Tübingen. During 1662 he gave some University lectures at Tübingen. He was then appointed, in 1668, as general preacher at Strassburg (p.p. from the University in 1664), and gave also University lectures there; presching his farewell sermon in the Cathedrai on July 3, 1666. He then became chief pastor of the Franciscan church (Barfüsserkirche, now St. Paul's), and Senior of the Lutheran clergy at Frankfurt am Main. Here, in Aug. 1670, he began to hold the Collegia pietatis or prayer meetings which are regarded as the beginnings of Pietiem. During this period he pub. his famous Pia desideria. 1686 he was called to become senior count preacher at Dreeden, then regarded as the most important post in the German Luthernu church. Here, however, he found much in the court life which needed reformation; and finally, on the general Fast day, Feb. 23, 1639, he addressed to the Elector Johann Georg III., a respectful, but perfectly definite, remonstrance regarding his drinking habits. From this time forth the Elector planned his removal, and with his knowledge and consent Spener at last received from the Elector Friedrich Wilhelm III. of Brandenburg, an invitation to become Probat of the St. Nicholas church, Consistorialrath, and Inspector of Schools and Churches at Berlin. He preached his first sermon in Berlin on June 21, 1691, and his last on July 1, 1704. In the last months of his life he was unable to undertake any duty. Spener was a man of high personal character, and of unquestionable sincerity. By means of his official posi-tions, of his intercourse with men of light and leading all over Germany, and through the extensive correspon-dence on epiritual matters by which he became the confessor of hundreds of all ranks and classes of the German people, he greatly moulded the religions life of his times. He came into fame and influence at the religions life of his times. religious movement. During his latter years at Berlin he had the pleasure of seeing the University of Halle founded (formally opened in 1694), and of finding his friends and (formally opened in 1694), and of finding his triends and pupils, like A. H. Francka (see p. 385, ii.) and P. Anton, appointed professors, and propagating his teachings there, and bringing on the triumph of the Pietistic movament. To Hymnology Spener did not make important contributions. Though he wrote a great deal of verse, hardly any of it could be called postry. His hymno derive their interest from the fact of their authorality rather than from their intrinsic value. In them we find the their interest from the fact of their authoramp ramer than from their intrinsic value. In them we find the characteristic points of view of the Pietistic school, and they give the keynote to many of the later Pietistic hymns. They are only nine in all, and appeared in the Frankfurt ed., 1674, of Crüger's Practic jeee p. 278, f. Those of Spener's hymns which have passed into English are :--

i. Nan lat anferstanden. Easter. 1st pub. 1674, as above, No. 264, in 10 st. of 10 l., marked as by "P. J. S. D." In the Berlin G. L. S. ed., 1863, No. 313. The tr, is from the text of the Württemberg G. S., 1842, No. 165, which begins, "Aus dea Todesbanden." The tr. is "Lo! death's bands are riven." In the British Herald, July 1866, p. 296, eigned "W. T. H." Repeated in Reid's Praise Bk., 1872. ., 1872.

Spengler, Lazarus, was the 9th of the 21 children of Georg Spengler and Agnes his wife, and was b., March 13, 1479, at Nürnberg, where his father was clerk of the Imperial court of Justice (Landgerichtschreiber). He entered the University of Leipzig in 1494; but on the death of his father on Dec. 27, 1496, he returned to Nürnberg, obtained a position in the town clerk's office, in 1507 became himself town clerk (Raths Syndikus), and in 1516 also Rathsherr. When Luther was passing through Nürnberg, in 1518, on his way to Augsburg, Spengler made his acquaintance. He warmly espoused the Reformation doctrines. pub. in 1519 his Schutzred in Luther's favour, and himself became one of the leaders in the Reformation work at Nürnberg. He was one of those condemned by name in the Bull of Excommunication launched by Pope Leo the his friends. Dr. Eck sent the Bull to the Town Council of Nürnberg, and urged them to proceed against Spengler, but they ignored it, and then sent him as one of their representatives to the Diet of Worms, in April 1521. In 1525 Spengler went to Wittenberg to consult with Luther and Melanchthon as to turning the Benedictine Accidenstift (Schottenkloster) into an Evangelical Gymnasium, and this was opened as such by Melanchthon on May 23, 1526. Spengler was also the prime mover to the Visitation of 1528, and upheld strict Lutheranism in the negotiations at the Diet of Augsburg in 1530. He d. at Nürnberg, Sept. 7, 1534 (Koch, i., 308; Will's Nürnbergisches Gelehrten-Lexikon, iii., p. 731; Herzog's Real-Encyklopādie, xiv., 516).

Spengler was a trusty friend and valued counsellor of Luther and the principal Reformers of Germany. He also interested himself in the improvement of the church services, and in 1532 was able to have an authorised church services, and in 1832 was able to have anautorised Litungy (Aircheorodius) printed. He wrote a considerable quantity of verse, seered and secular; but only two hymns are seeribed to him. The one is an indifferent version of Ps. carvin, beginning "Vergebens ist all Milh and Kost." The other is:—

Durch Adams Fall int galat verderbt, Fall and Redemption. Let pub. in the Geyelliche Gesangk Suchlets. Wittenphore 1824, and there in Wedelwarden!

leys, Wittenberg, 1524, and thence in Wackernagel, ht, p. 48 in 9 st. of 10 l. Also in the Uns. L. S., 1551, No. 108. During the Reformation period it attacks. 109. During the Reformation period it attained a wide popularity as a didactic and confessional hymn of the Evangelical faith. It is one of the most characteristic bymns of the time, conceived in the spirit of deep and bymps of the time, conceived in the spirit of deep and earnest plety, eminently Scriptural, and setting forth the Reformation teachings in concise and antithetical form, but is however too much like a system of theology in rhyme. The frs. are:—1. By Adam fell our total form, 1866, p. 556. 2. When Adam fell our total Frame.By J. C. Jacobi in his *Pranncia Germanica, pt. ii., 1726, p. 17. In his ed. 1732, p. 36, is begins "When Adam fell, the Frauce entire:" and this form was repeated in the Asympton R. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 304, and later eds. (1869, No. 18). (2) "Our nature fell in Adam's fall." This is a paraphrase, in 5 st. of L.M., by Dr. M. Loy, in the Ohio Lath. Hyd., 1880, No. 247. [J. M.]

Spenser, Edmund (b. 1552; d. 1599), has a right to his place in this work extrinsically and intrinsically. Extrinsically his odes, entitled by himself Fours Hymnes, give us a connecting link with Chaucer; and intrinsically they are of "the brave translunary things" that ought long since to have introduced much in them to the Church's Hymnology. Spenser in the outset acknowledged Chancer for his "dere maister;" and throughout there are echoes and re-echoes of him. Specifically in relation to the Foure Hymns, the Compleyat of Pits must have been carried by the youthful Spenser to Hurstwood and the Pendle district, or was found in one or other of the contemporary oultured Spenser households there. The Complayat is of "Love, as is Spensor's first of the immortal four "in honour of Love." Like Chancer's, the metre of the new Hymnes is rhymc-royal; and the meditative reader of the elder and later poets will catch notes and images common to both, e.g., in the "Hymne to Beautie" (1, 257) we

" Doe seeme like twinckling starres in frostie night." So in the "Prologue" (1, 269):-

> " His eyghen twinkled in his bede aright As don the sterres to the frestle pight,"

Nor is it mere verbal resemblances that we Tenth, on June 15, 1520, against Luther and come upon. The thought and emotion flow in the same channels. It were easy to multiply | proofs of the truth of Spenser's own grateful acknowledgment in Colin Clout:-

The shephcard's boy (best knowen by that name)
That after Tityrus first sung his lay," in imitation of, or as disciple of Chaucer, as we use the phrase of a painter "after Raphael." Intrinsically the Fours Hymnes have the additional interest of having been (in "Two Hymnes of Love and of Beautie" at least) among the earliest of the "newe poet's" verseattempts, though delayed in publication until 1596. There is a brilliancy, a charm, an exquisiteness of phrasing, a delicacy and daintiness of wording, and a pervading inclodious-ness in them that should simply have rendered anything of their kind meagre between Chaucar's Compleyet of Pite and them. His "Rosalind" was their inspiring motif; but his " high mood" lifted him to Incarnate Love and Pity and Beauty. All the more noticeable is it, therefore, that in the epistle-dedicatory of the Foure Hymnes to the "Ladie Margaret, Counteres of Cumberland, and the Ladie Marie, Counters of Warwicke," the poet distinctly assigns the two of Love and Beauty to "the greener times" of his "youth." Turning to the Hymnes themselves, the student-reader will be rewarded if he consult Professor F, T. Palgrave's inestimable Eassy (Grosart's Spenser, vol. iv., pp. xevii.-c.) on the "Minor Poems of Spenser." I can only cull two bits on the two greatest of the Hymnes. Of " Love" :-

"The love painted here is at once so idealized and so "The love painted here is at once so intented and so general—the human and the personal ampet of passion so faintly present—that we feel as though this were some splendid procession nu winding itself before us in progress to the Capitol, rather than a hymn sung in the inmost shrine of Eros. What we hear is far less the music of Love, than Love set to lovely music: a stream of gorgoous beauty, in which the chivalry of the Middle Ages blends audibly with the mythology of the Renals-space."

Then of "Heavenly Love;"-

"Nowhere, I think, has Spenser written, in his larger pleces at least, with more uniformly equable dignity, nuited with more series melody, than here; and great is the galn in reasonableness and charm to the celestial vision and the pictures from the Gospel skory which he presents, from the absence of that Platonic colouring resents, from the assected of the Fracture Coording -so far as Platonism it is — which tinges the earlier companion Ode. Spenser, in fact, now writes from the fulness of his faith; and the poem has bence a reality which the most skilful art alone, in the most skilful hands, its the artist strive as he will, must ever fail to compast."

Speratus, Paulus, D.D., was b. in Swabia, Dec. 18, 1484. In a poem, written circa 1516, on Dr. J. Eck, he calls himself Elephangius, i.e. of Eliwangen; and in his correspondence, preserved at Königsberg, he often styles him-self "a Rutilis" or "von Rötlen." These facts would seem to indicate that he was b. at the castle of Röthlen, near Ellwangen. This property belonged to the Probat of the ecclesiastical corporation at Eliwangen, and Speratus's father was probably their bailiff or agent. The family name seems to have been Hoffer or Offer, and to have been in later years, following a practice common in the 10th cent., Latinized by himself into Speratus. He is probably the "Paul Offer de Ellwangen," who matriculated at the University of Freiburg (Baden)

Paris, and at some of the Italian universities. In 1518 we find him settled as a preacher at Dinkelsbühl, in Bavaria. In the end of that year he was invited to become preacher in the cathedral at Würzburg. He went to Würzburg in Feb. 1519, but his preaching was much too evangelical for the new bishop, and he had to leave, apparently in the beginning of 1520. Proceeding to Salzburg he preached for some time in the cathedral, until the archbishop there also would not tolerate his pronounced opinions. He left Salzburg in the automu of 1520, and went to Vienna, where he appears to have graduated p.p. at the University. He was already married (probably as early as 1519), and was one of the first pricets who had dared to take this step. After a violent sermon against marriage, delivered by a monk in St. Peter's church, at Vienna, the governor of Lower Austria (Count Leonhard von Zech) asked Speratus to make a reply. With the consent of the bishop he did so, and preached, on Jan. 12, 1522, a sermon in the cathedral (St. Stephen's), founded on the Epistle for the lst S. after the Epiphany, in which he expressed his opinious very freely regarding the monastic life and enforced celibacy, and also clearly set forth the doctrine of Justification. by Faith. This sermon (pub. at Königsberg in 1524) made a great impression, and was condemned by the Theological Faculty at Vienna, who also prevented Speratus from accepting an invitation to become preacher at Ofen, near Vienna. On his way from Vienna to the north he slayed at Iglau in Moravia, where the abbot of the Dominican monastery anpointed him as preacher. Here the people became greatly chamoured of him and of the Reformation doctrines, and stood firmly by him. notwithstanding the remonstrances and threats of the king, and of the bishop of Olmütz. In the summer of 1523 king Ludwig came to Olmütz and summoned Speratus to him. Without even the form of a trial he put him in prison, but after three months he released him, probably through the influence of his queen (Maria of Hungary, see p. 710, i.), and of his cousin, the Margiave Albrecht of Brandenburg, but on the condition of his leaving Iglau and Moravia. In the end of 1523 Speratus came to Wittenberg, where he worked with Luther, and assisted him in the preparation of the first Lutheran hymn book (the Edich cristlich lider. See p. 703, ii. It contained 4 German hymns by Luther, 3 by Speratus, and 1 auonymous German hymn). Luther then recommended him to the Margrave Albrecht, and about May 1524 the Margiave appointed him as court preacher at Königsberg. Here he had also charge of the Altstadt church till Graumann came into residence, in Oct. 1525 (see p. 451, i.). He seems to have had the principal share in drawing up the Liturgy and Canons (Kirchenordnung or "Book of Church Order") for the Prussian church, which was presented to the Diet in December 1525, and printed in 1526. On March 31, 1526, he was chosen as the clerical commissioner to visit the parishes of Prussia and see that the new arrangements were carried out; and in the end of 1529 he was appointed Lutheran bishop of Pomesania, with his residence at Marienwerder. Here he in 1$03. He is also said to have studied at | remained till his death on Aug. 12, 1551

Speratus was the author of various works, but was best known as the Reference of Prussia. Feeling that for the working of ordinary parishes it was necessary to have pastors who had been brought up in Prussia, and could preach, if need be, in Follsh or Lettish, he gladly welcomed the foundation at Königsberg (1644) of the first Prussian university. Among other important events affecting his administration may be mentioned the Vistations of 1528, of 1538, and especially that which lasted from Dec. 15, 1542, to the middle of February 1543; the Synods of 1539, the Synodical Constitutions were pub, in 1539), of 1539, and of 1531; the new Kirchenordnung of 1544; and the welcome he extended, in 1648, to the exited Bohemian Brethren who actited in Prussia.

As a hymn writer Speratus is principally known by the three hymns pub. in the Etlick eristlich lider, 1524. He also pub. (no place or date but Königsberg, 1527), in 1527, a version of Ps. zwii., beginning, "Erzurn dich nicht, sei nicht neidisch:" and a Hymn of Thanksgiving, to be used after the sermon, beginning, "Gelobet sei Gott, unser Gott." These five are all that can be confidently ascribed to him. The two collections which Cosack attributes to him do not bear any indication of his authorship; and Wackernagel, i., pp. xix., 386, 387, 388; iii. pp. 618-643, denies that they are his, and thinks that they are, much more probably, by Casper Löhner or Löner, who in 1524 became Lutheran pastor at Hof, in Bavaria; and in 1542, at Nord-lingen in Bavaria. The Low German hymnbooks which he was for some time supposed to have edited (1525 and 1526), were really edited by Joachim Slüter, the Rostock Reformer. (See Dr. J. Bachmann's Gesch. des evang. Kirchengesanges in Mecklenburg, Ros-tock, 1881, p. 28, &c.) Of the five hymns mentioned above two have passed into English, viz. :---

i. Es ist das Heil uns kommen her. Law and Gospel. This, his most famous hymn, is founded on Rom. iii. 28. It was probably written in the autumn of 1523, either during his imprisonment at Olmütz, or else during his stay at Wittenberg. Included as one of the 8 hymns in the Etlich cristlich lider, 1524, dated 1523, and entitled, "A hymn of Law and Faith, powerfully furnished with God's Word. Doctor Paul Speratus." In some eds. it has two pages of references to texts of Holy Scripture printed with it (Wittenberg, 1524), and signed "Paulus Speratus." It was repeated in the Erfurt Enchvidion, 1524, and thence in Wackernagel, fii. p. 31, in 14 st. of 7 l. In the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 411.

Lauxmann, in Each, vill, 236, calls it "the true confessional hymn of the Reformation, or, as Albert Knapp puts it, 'the postical counterpart of Luther's preface to the Epistic to the Romans," He relates many instances of the effects it produced. It is a Scriptural ballad, setting forth, in what was, for the time, excellent verset, the characteristic teachings of the German Reformers, and is indeed of considerable historical importance. But for present day use it is too long, somewhat harsh in atyle, and too much a compend of doctrinal theology.

The only version we have found in English C. U. is:—

To us salvation now is come. In full by Dr. H. Mills, in his Horas Germanicae, 1845, p. 44 (1856, p. 60). His trs. of st. i., ii., v., xiii., were repeated, with alterations, in the Amer. Luth.

Gen. Synod's Coll., 1850, No. 842, and the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

Other trs. are:—
(1) "Now is our health come from above." By Bp. Coverdale, 1839 (Resnains, 1846, p. 562). (2) "Our whole Salvation doth depend." By J. C. Jacobi, 1725, p. 33 (1732, p. 101). Repeated in the Barcoina H. Be, 1756 (1842, No. 18). (3) "Now comes salvation from above." By Dr. C. Walker, 1850, p. 79, (4) "Salvation hath come down to us." By Miss Winkworth, 1846.

D. 123.

ii. In Gatt gelaub ich, dans er hat aus nicht. The Apostles' Greed. This is a free version, in 9 st. of 19 l. 1st pub. in the Ettich cristlich lider, 1524. Repeated in the Erfart Enchiridion, 1524; and thence in Wachsmagel, iii. p. 33. It was included in V. Babat's G. B., 1545, and many others, but on account of its length and its unusual metre it has not found a place in recent hymnals. It is tr. as "In God I trust, for so I must." By Bp. Coverdale, 1539, (Remains, 1846, p. 547.)

Spirit Divine, attend our prayer. A. Reed. [Whitsuntide.] This hymn appeared, unsigned, in 7 st. of 4 l., in the Evangelical Magazine for June 1829, with the heading, "Hymn to the Spirit. Sung on the late Day appointed for solemn Prayer and Humiliation in the Eastern District of the Metropolis" From the April number of the same magazine we find that the "Day appointed for Solemn Prayer," &c., was the Good Friday of that year, and that it was "cordially recommended "as a day of humiliation and prayer, with a view to promote, by the divine blessing, a revival of religion in the British churches," by the Board of Congregational Ministers, resident in and about London, whose recommendation is dated "Tuesday, Feb. 10, 1820." The hymn was republished in Dr. Reed's Hymn Book, 1842; and again, in the Wycliffe Chapel Suppl., 1872. It is the most widely known of Dr. Reed's hymns, and is in extensive use. It is one of his best productions. [J. J.]

Spirit, leave thine house of clay. J. Montgomery. [Death and Burial.] This, in its original form, is a poem in 14 st. of 41. It was printed in Montgomery's Iris newspaper, July 14, 1803, and repeated in his Wanderer of Emitzerland, and other Poems, in 1806, and again in his P. Works in 1828 and 1841. Its origin is explained in its title, which reads:—
"Verses to the Memory of the late Joseph Browne, of Lethersdaid, one of the People called Quakers, Wice suffered a long Confinement in the Castle of York, and Loss of all his worldly Property, for Canscience Sake."

To adapt the poem for congregational use st. i.-iv., xiii., and xiv., were slightly altered, and given in Collyer's Coll., 1812. This form was repeated in J. Conder's Cong. H. Bh., 1836; the Leeds H. Bh., 1833, and others, as "Spirit, leave fly bouse of clay." [J. J.]

Spirit of God, that moved of old. Cecil F. Alexander, née Humpkreys. [Whitsustide.] Appeared in the S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1852, No. 70, in 4 st. of 4 l. In Mrs. Alexander's Hys. Descriptive and Devotional, 1858, No. 15, it was republished in 5 st. of 4 l., the new stanza, the third, being "Unscal the well within our hearts." The 1852 text is that usually given in modern hymn-books. In Dr. Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873, No. 95 is an altered form of st. il.-iv. of the 1852 text, and begins, "Thou Power and Peace! in Whom we find." [J. J.]

Spirit of holiness, look down. W. H. Bathurst. [Divine Grace desired.] 1st publin his Ps. & Hys., 1831, No. 59, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "For healing and strengthening Grace." The hymn, "Lord, lot Thy saving mercy heal," in the American Church Praise Bk., N. Y., 1882, is a cento from this hymn (st. iii., ii., iv.). [J. J.]

Spirit of life, Thine influence shed. W. H. Bathurst. [Whitsuntide.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hys., 1831, No. 56, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Spiritual Strength and Wisdom desired." In modern hymnels st. v. is usually omitted, as in the New Cong., 1859. [J. J.]

Spirit of mercy, truth, and love. [Whiteuntide.] The earliest date to which this hymn has been traced is 1774, when it appeared in the Collection published for use in the Foundling Hospital, Loudon, where it is given as follows:—

- Spirit of mercy, truth, and love! Shed Thy sweet influence from above, And still from age to age convey The wonders of this sacred day.
- "In ev'ry clime, by ev'ry tangue, Be God's amazing glory sung; Through all the list'ning earth be taught The acts our rish Redeemer wrought.
- "Unfulling Comfort! Heav'nly Guide!
 Still o'er Thy favour'd church proside;
 Still may mankind Thy blessings prove,
 Spirit of mercy, truth, and love."

From the Foundling Collection it passed into those of Cotterill, Bickersteth, Elliott, Hall, and other compilers, both old and new. Several, who copied from B. W. Kyle's Collection, 1846, have attributed it to him. It was in print, however, before Kyle was born. Some of the slight changes in the text found in modern hymnals are from Cotterill's Sel. 1819. In the Anglican H. Bk., 1868, it is altered to "Blest Source of mercy, truth, and love."

[J. J.]

Spirit of Truth! on this Thy day. Bp. R. Heber. [Whitsuntide.] Appeared in bis posthumous Hymne, &c., 1827, p. 82, in 6 at. of 41. It is in several modern hymn-books in G. Britain and America, and usually in an abbreviated form. For the date 1812, sometimes assigned to it, we have no evidence.

[J. J.]

Spirit of Truth, Thy grace impart. [Whitsuntide.] This cento was given in the 1868 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys., No. 296, as follows:—

 "Spirit of Truth, Thy grace import, To guide our doubtful way; Thy beams shall scatter every cloud, And make a glorious day."

This is an altered form of st. v. of J. Need-ham's "Thy influence, mighty God, impart," from his Hymns, &c., 1768, p. 163.

 " Light in Thy light, O may we see, Thy grace and mercy power, Revived and cheered and blest by Thea Spirit of peace and love."

This is 11. 5-8 of C. Wesley's "Eternal Sun of Righteousness," from his Short Hys., &c., 1762, No. 201.

 "The Thine to soothe the sorrowing mind, With guilt and fear oppress'd; Thine to bid the dying live, And give the weary rest."

This is an altered form of st. ii. of J. Hant's "Bless'd Spirit of truth, eternal God," from his Hys., &c., 1759, No. 5, slightly varied from T. Cotterill's Sci., 1810, No. 66, "Eternal Spirit, Source of Truth."

 "Subdue the power of every sin, Whate'er that sin may be, That we, in singleness of heart, May worship only Thee."

Also from T. Cotterill's Sel., 1810, No. 66, as above.

In Thring's Coll., 1882, this text is repeated, together with a doxology from Tate & Brady with 1. 2 borrowed from C. Wesley. [J. J.]

Spitta, Carl Johann Philipp, D.D., was b. Aug. 1, 1801, at Hannover, where his father, Lebrecht Wilhelm Gottfried Spitta,* was then living, as bookkeeper and teacher of the French language. In his eleventh year Spitta fell into a severe illness, which lasted for four years, and so threw him back that his mother (the father d. in 1805) abandoned the idea of a professional career, and apprenticed him to a watchmaker. This occupation did not prove at all congenial to him, but he would not confess his dislike, and his family were ignorant of it till an old friend, who was trying to comfort him after the death of a younger brother, discovered his true feelings. The younger brother had been preparing for ordination, and so Carl was now invited by the family to adopt this career. He joyfully accepted the offer, left the workshop in the autumn of 1818, and succeeded, by dint of hard study during the winter, in gaining admission to the highest class in the Gymnasium (Lyceum) at Hannover, which he entered at Easter, 1819. He was thus able, at Easter, 1821, to proceed to the University of Göttingen, where he completed his theological course, under professors of pronounced Rationalistic opinions, at Easter, 1824 (D.D. from Göttingen, 1855). He then became, in the beginning of May, a tutor in the family of Judge (Oberamimanu) Jochmus, at Lüne, near Lüneburg. Here he remained till his ordination on Dec. 10, 1828, as assistant pastor at Sudwalde, near Hoya. In Nov., 1830, he became assistant chaplain to the garrison and to the prison at Haineln on the Weser, and would have succeeded as permanent chaplain there, in the beginning of 1837, had not the military authorities, alarmed by reports which described him as a Pietlet and a Mystic, refused to sanction the As a compensation, he was arrangement. appointed paster at Wechold, near Hoys, in Oct., 1837, and married just before settling there. On his birthday, Aug. 1, 1847, he was instituted as Lutheran superintendent at Wittinged; in Oct., 1853, at Peine; and in July, 1859, at Burgdorf—all his appointments having been in the kingdom of Hannover. A few weeks after removing to Burgdorf her was seized with gastric fever, but had apparently recovered, when, on Sept. 28, 1859, while sitting at his writing table, he was seized with cramp of the heart, and died in a quarter of an hour. Spitta had begun to write in verse when he was sight years old, slong with his brother Heinrich (see No. xiiv, below). During his university course he continued to write songs and secular poems, and put a collection of songs and secular poems, and put he formed a life-long friendship with Adolf Peters, afterwards professor in the St. Afra Gymnasium (Fürstenschule) at Meisson, in Saxony. He was also on intimate terms with Helmich Heine, who was a fellow member with them of the Burschenschaft, or student's patriotte union (see K. Goedeke's Grundries, vol. lii., 1841, p. 259); and this friendship continued till Helne, while visiting him at Line, so jested at things sacred, even in the presence of Spitta's puyils, that their friendship came to an end. After the spiritual change, which began about the end of his university course, Spitta cassed to write secular pieces. Ilis hymn-writing proper seems to have begun in 1821. In writing to a cased to write secular paces. His hymn-writing proper seems to have begun in 1821. In writing to a friend on May 5, 1828, he says, "In the manner in which I formerly sang I sing no more. To the Lord I consecrate my life and my love, and likewise my song. His love is the one great theme of all my songs; to praise and exalt it working is the desire of the Christian praise and exait it worthing is the desire of the Christian singer. He gave to me soing and neledy; I give it back to Him." The most fruitful period of his bymn-writing was at Lüne, where many of his most popular hymnes were composed in the quiet evenings, in his own room, often after fasting, and when, sitting at the piane or at his larp, he had tend his spirit to song. Many others were inspired by the beautiful scenery of the walley of the Weser, and by the intercourse with friends during his residence at Hameln. In his later years his codesisation duties absorbed his attention, and hardly any of his hymns were written after 1841. A number of them were first printed in the Cartalliche Monatsechrift sur Admissions Friedung für alle Stände, which appeared were first printed in the Cariattiche Monatschrift sur Adustichen Rebauung für alle Stände, which appeared from Jan. to Jone, 1826, and was edited by Spitta and by Pastor Deichmann, of Lüneburg. Seminarlehrer W. Bode of Lüneburg has recently found a copy of the Christliche Monatsmärift in the Town Library at Lüneburg. This contains ten hymns, viz.: 1. "Wir leiden Angst wir leiden Noth." 2. "Ja, er hat dich stetz geliebet." 3. "Wie selig ist ein Hers das Jesum funden." 4. "Wir irrien wie zerstreut und ohne Leiter." 5. "Wort des Lebens, lautre Quelle." 6. "Sa hät die Hand Jetzt fest am Pflug." 7. "Salig, wer ins Reich der Gnade." 8. "Hinzu. Ochrist, zur offene Ouelle." 9. "In 5. "Wort des Lebens, lautre Quelle." 6. "Se bält die Hand Jetzt fest am Pfing." 7. "Selig, wer ins Reich der Gnade." 8. "Hinzu, O'Christ, zur offnen Quelle." 9. "In der Angst der Weit will ich nicht klagen." 10. "O'Jesn meine Wonne, Die alle Noth." O'T these Nos. 1, 2 appeared in January; No. 3 in March; Nos. 5, 6 in April; Nos. 7, 8, 8 in May; and No. 10 in June. They are probably all by Spitta (p. 358, ii.), but only Nos. 5, 9, 10 are included in the Pratter und Harfe. No. 10 being given as "O Jesu meine Sonne."

A native of Brunswick, and descended from a Huguenot family named de l'Hôpital, who had settled in Brunswick after the Revocation of the Edict of Names. The French name was exchanged for the German equivalent, i.e. Spital or Spittel, and this was modifical into Spittel.

The first separate collection was the result of a selection and arrangement made by himself and Adolf Peters, and appeared at Pirns, in 1833, with the title, Psulter and Harfe. Eine Sammlung christlicher Lieder zur häus-Harfs. Kine Kasamiung christicher Lieder zur häuslichen Erbassung. This contained 61 hygnus. In the 2nd
pub. ed., at Leipzig in 1834, five were added, vig.:—(1)
"Per Mensch hat bange Standen." (2) "Ein Heblich Loos ist mes gefallen." (3) "O dass mein Leben deine Bechte."
(4) "Was macht ihr, dass ihr weinet." (6) "Wuhl uus, der Vater hat uns lich." This work attained an unexampted populatity, and, year after year, editions followed (all reprints of the 2nd ed.), the 55th ed. being pub. at Bermen in 1985. The success of this first series led Splits to pub. a second series, consisting of 40 hymns, and entitled: 'Fakter und Harfe. Zweite Samiung, and entitled: 'Takter und Harfe. Zweite Samiung, and a 42nd at Bremen in 1987. After Spitzig in 1943, and a 42nd at Bremen in 1987. After Spitzig in death, his widow handed over to Professor Peters (see above) a considerable number of pieces from her husband's unpublished papers, to which Peters added others in his own possession, and pub. them as Spitza's Mackin bis own possession, and pub. them as Spitta's Nach-gelassens geitlicks Lieder, &c., at Leipzig, 1881. One of these pleeces, hardly to be called a lynn, dates from 1822, the rest of the 112 were written in the years of Spitta's early manhood (from 1825 on), a fact which rather suggests that neither Peters in 1833, nor Spitta rather suggests that neither Peters in 1833, nor Spitta himself in 1843, ranked them among his happiest efforts. The circulation of this work has been comparatively limited (5th ed., Brewen, 1863), and hardly any of the hymne it contains have passed into the Church hymnbooks in Germany, or even into collections of German scarced poetry. It is by his "safter unit Harfe that Spitta is known and loved.

Spitta is known and loved.

Various causes doubtless contributed to the popularity of Spitta's Pratter and Marfe. The hymns therein are, as a rule, of moderate length, are clear and simple in style, refined in diction, sweet, flowing and melodious.
Their quiet beauty, their tone of earnest, sincere, and childlike piety, of glowing devotion to the Saviour, and of calm resting on, what to Spitta were, the eternal vertiles, endeared them to all ranks and classes. They form a faithful mirror of his inner life and Christian experience. They at unon met and mirrial control is experience. They at once met and ministered to the re-vival of Evangelical religion in Germany, and thus en-joyed somewhat of the same good fortune and popularity which the renewed churchly life in England brought to which the renewed churchly life in England brought to K-ble's Christian Faur. As the title adopted shows Spitta meant them for family and private use, and for this they are best fitted, being, for the most part, suljective and individual. They speedily, however, passed into the German hymnbooks for church use, both at home and abroad, and translations of them are found in almost all recent English and American collections. An excellent version of both parts has been made by Mr. Richard Massie, and pub. as Lyra Domestica, list ser., London, 1860; 2nd ser., London, 1864. A gistice at the lists below will show their populaticly with translators. If (as already said at p. 827, ii.) Albert Knappranks higher than Spitta, both as a poet and as a writer of hymns for church use, yet Spitts at least caught the of hymns for church use, yet Spitts at least caught the popular ear as Knapp never did, and is much more fully represented in the English and American hymnals.

fully represented in the English and American nymnals. Another element of Spittas's popularity in Germany has been contributed by the very numerous musical settings which have appeared to his hymns. Moch. vii., 246, gives a list of the more important of the collective editions, but, besides these, many of the separate pieces have been set to music by various composers, the "Angel of Patience" (see p. 255, i.) being one of the greatest favourities (see also Dr. J. K. Schauer's Geschickle der biblischkirchlichen Dicht und Tonkunst, 1850, p. 149).

Splendor paternae gloriae. St, Am. broce. [Morning.] A beautiful morning bymn, to the Holy Trinity, but especially to Christ as the Light of the World, and a prayer for help and guidance throughout the day. It is the companion and sequel to the "Aeterne rerum Conditor ' (p. 28, i.), and, like it, is almost indisputably by St. Ambrose. It has been ascribed to him by Fulgentius, Bp. of Ruspe, in North Africa (d. 533); by Bede (d. 735), in his De arte metrica; and by Hinemar, in his De una et non trina Deitate, 857. It is one of the twelve hymns which the Benedictine editors of St. Ambrose receive as genuine; and is included by Birnghi as one of the Inni sinceri e Carmi di Sant' Ambrogio. Milan, 1862. It is mentioned in the Rule of Aurelianus, Bp. of Arles (d. 555).

It is found in a MS., circa 700, in the Brit. Mus. (Vesp. A., l., f. 162); in a MS., circa 890, in the Boddedan (Junius 25, f. 123b); in four MSs. of the 11th cent., in the British Museum (Vesp. D., xil., f. 12b; Jul. A., vi., f. 24; Harl., 2861, f. 221b; Add. 30, 485, f. 75); in a MS. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (39), p. 232), in the St. Gali MSs., 387, 412, of the 11th cent.; and in the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Charch, 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at Durham (B., ii., 32, f. 5b). Most of the mediaeval Breviaries include it, e.g., the Ambrosian of 1539, Mostrable of 1502, Mostrable of 1502, Mostrable of 1502, Mostrable of Most It is found in a Ms., core 700, in the Brit. Mus. (Vesp-Betteride, 1886 and 1890; and others. The text, with a full commentary, will also be found in the Abbé S. G. Pimont's Hymner du Breviere Romain, vol. 1, 1874, p. 138; and in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der ällesten Kirchenbynnen, 1881, [J. M.]

Spurgeon, Charles Haddon, the worldfamous preacher, was b. June 19, 1834, at Kelvedon, in Essex, where his father was Congregational minister. He was educated at Colchester, and at an Agricultural College at Maidstone, after which he was for a few cree of Pope Benedict xiii., in 1727; but long years usher in schools at Newmarket and Cambridge. In 1851 he became minister of a small Baptist church at Waterbeach, near Cambridge, and soon attained great popularity. In 1854 he removed to New Park Street, London, the place where Drs. Gill and Rippon had formerly ministered, and ere long the thronging of people to hear him led, first, to the temporary occupation of Exeter Hall, and of the Surrey Music Hall, and then to the erection of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle, where he still ministers. Mr. Spurgeon is chiefly known as a preacher and as the author of many vols. of sermons, expositions, and other homiletical literature; but he is also a hymn writer, and the compiler of a well-known hymn book. This book was prepared, in 1868, primarily for the use of the congregation at the Tabernacle. Hence its title Our Own Hymnbook, a collection of Ps. & Hys. for public, social, and private worship. It contains 220 versions of the Psalms, and 910 hymns, Of Mr. Spurgeon's contributions noted below, only one, "Sweetly the holy hymn," can be regarded as possessing any particular merit. The others do not rise above respectable mediocrity. His psalm-versions and hymns, all dated 1866, are :-

- Amidst us our Beloved stands. Holy Communion.
- Rehold, O Lord, my days are made. Ps. x Blessed is the man that feareth. Ps. cxii.
- 5. Here, 0 ye faithful, see. Hoty Espatim.

Stabat mater dolorosa. Pope Inno-cent III. ? [Passiontide.] This noble poem (used both as a sequence and as a hymn) has been, not unjustly, styled the most pathetic hymn of the Middle Ages. The vividness with which it pictures the weeping Mother at the Cross, its tenderness, its beauty of rhythm, its melodious double rhymes almost defying reproduction in another language, and its impressiveness when sung either to the fine plainsong melody or in the nuble compositions which many of the great masters of music have set to it, go far to justify the place it holds, and has long hold, in the Roman Catholic Church. It was not indeed officially sanctioned for general use, or regularly incorporated in the Roman Breviary or Missal, till by debefore that date it was in popular use, especially after the Flagellants in the 14th cent. had brought it into notice by singing it on their way from town to town. The passages of Holy Scripture on which it is based are St. John xix. 25; St. Luke ii. 35; Zech. xiii. 6; 2 Cor. iv. 10: and Gal. vi. 17.

Concerning the authorship of this poem there has been, and still is, a great amount of uncertainty. It has been ascribed to Pope Gregory the Great (d. 604), to St. Bernard of Clairvaux (d. 1153), to Pope Innocent III. (d. 1216), to St. Honaventura (d. 1274), to Jacobus de Benedictis (d. 1306), to Pope John XXII. (d. 1834), to Pope Gregory xt. (d. 1378), &c. The verse-form is, however, not earlier than about 1150, while Daniel, ii. p. 140, cites it as in a ms. not later than 1360. The only ascriptions which bear any impress of probability are those to Pone Innocent III, and to Jacobus de Benedictis.

For Pope Innocent III. there is, it must be confessed, little positive evidence. Pope Benedict XIV. (d. 1758), who had made Hymnology a special study, in his Defect Domini nostri Jesu Christi, Padus, 1758, sacribes it to Pope Innocent III. So does F. E. von Hutter, in his Geschichte Popul Innocens des driften, Hamburg, 1834-42. So also does More in the notes to bis No. 446. Centrally Popul Innocens ter base and Hamburg, 1834-12. So also does Mone in the notes to his No. 446. Certainly Pope Innocent 111, had quite sufficient ability to have written such a masterpiece, and the ascription is strengthened by the fact that to him has been attributed, with great probability, another masterpiece of Latin sacred poetry, vis. the "Veni Sancie Spiritus Et emitte" (q. v.).

For Jacobus de Benedictis (Jacopone) the evidence at first sight seems more probable. In the Bibliotheque Nationale at Paris there is a Ms. of the beginning of the 15th cent., which formerly was catalogued as No. 7783, but now bears the prese-mark "Fouds italien, No. 1859." From a collision kindly, sent by M. Leopold Delisle, the Principal Librarian, it appears that the title of this Ms. is "Incipium Ladoes quas fect sanctus fruite Jacobus de Tuderto, ordinis fratrum minorum." &c. Bestdes poems in Italian this Ms. has the following in Latin: Latin:

Ì j.	Jesus dulcis memoria.	f. 106.
1,	Verbum caro factum est.	f. 107,
111.	Crux de te volo conqueri.	f. 106.
ív.	Car mundue militat.	f. 108 d.
٧.	Ave regis angelorum.	f. 109.
	Stabat mater specioes.	f. 109 b.
vii.	Stabat mater delerosa.	£ 111.

The whole of these, save No. 1, are also included in the Laude of Jacopone, pub. at Breeds in 1495. But No. 1, is certainly not by Jacopone (see p. 835, ii.) No. 1, is claim to No. Iv. 18 also exceedingly doubtful (see e.g. the Eccleriologist, July 1888, p. 17). It may be added that no Latin poems are found in the ed. of Jacopone's Laude, pub. at Florence in 1490, nor in the ed. of his Cantici, nub. at Rome in 1596. In the com-Jacopone's Jacob, pub. at Florence in 1896, nor in the ed. of his Cartici, pub. at Rome in 1866. In the completest edition of his poems, that by the Franciscan, Giovanni Tressail (Venice, 1817), the "Subst mater diolorosa," is not included. The present writer, in view of all the evidence at his command, has come to the of all the evidence at his command, has come to the conclusion that it is exceedingly doubtful if Jacopone wrote any Latin hymne; or alternatively that he was merely an alterer or imitator of earlier compositions. It is almost impossible to believe that the person who wrote the "Subat mater dolorosa" could also have written the "Subat mater specieus." This difficulty being fait, it has been sought to meet it by asserting that the dolorosa is by Jacopone, and that the speciesa is by some initiator of his style. To the present writer the contrary supposition is much more probable, vic. that. some imitator of the style. To the present writer the contrary supposition is much more probable, viz., that the species is by Jacopone and that the defersat is by an earlier writer. Indeed Jacopone does not seem to have earlier writer. Indeed Jacopone does not seem to have been capable of writing such a poem as the "Sabat nator downer." Certain of the expressions in st. vi.-ix. of the dolorous have been thought to refer to the Stignatisation of St. Francis of Assissi, the inference drawn being that the hymn was by a Franciscan, This, if true, would make it impossible that at least the current form should be by Pope Innocent in., for he d. in 1216, and the date commonly assigned to the conference of the Missing of person could be supposed truly to pray to be allowed to pass through such an ordeal (see the Rossan Breviary under Sept. 15). And in the Visigate there are various close persitely, e.g. Zech. xiii. 6 ("Et dictur et, Quid sunt plagistate in medio mannum tusrum? It dicet, His plagstas sum in dome corum qui diligebant me"), which the mediarral writers referred to the Passion of Our Lord Col. 11, 14 (1) Exempts. Evicent Passion of which the mediacyal writers referred to the Passion of Our Lord; Gal. vi. 16 ("Ego enim stigmata Domini Jesu in corpore meo porto"), &c. As to the account of Jacopone given by Luke Wadding in his Scriptores ordiniz Minorusas, Rome, 1850, one must bear in mind that Wadding was an Iriah Franciscan, and not unwill-ing to claim for his Order at least all that was its due. And in fact Wadding's account is much more of the nature of a series of pious imaginations than of a soler record of stems feet. record of actual facts.

Prom of actual sees.

From the other was, containing the poem one does not get very much help, for none of those yet described are earlier than the 14th cent. In a Ms. circa 1380, or slightly later, and now in the Bedleian (Literg. Mics., 251, f. 242b), it occurs with the note, "Bonifacius Papa, concessit cui libet dictuit hune planetum beatag Marine. concessit cull libet discuti hune planetum heatan Marike septem annos et quadraginta quatnor dies indulgentiarum." This almost certainly refers to Boniface var., Pope from 1294 to 1303, for Boniface vx. did not become Pope till 1398. But if the accounts of the relations between Pope Boniface vx. and Jacopone are at all trustworthy, it is most improbable that this Pope (who is said to have shut Jacopone up in prison, from which he was only released after the Pope's death in 1303) would have thus honoured the poem had he known that is was by Jacopone; though if he knew that it was by Pope Innocent 111, his action would be intelligible enough, In a Ms. of the 14th cent, in the Brit. Ms. (Arundel, 214, f. 111) it is headed, "Quitunque recitaverit hune planetum beatac virginis Mariae devoto corde consequator septem annos et xi. karenas indulgentiarum a puna Bontseptem annos et xi. karenas indulgentiarum a puna Bontsett. planetum neases virginis marine devoto corce consequants espitem amons et xi. karenas indulgentiarum a pupa Bontfaclo." The puemis also in a 15th cent. as. In the Bodleian (Askmole 1201, f. 140); in a Horae, circa 1440, in the British Museum (Add. 18192, f. 228 b); in three uss. of the 15th cent. at St. Gall (Nos. 209, 449, 513); in three uss. of the 15th cent. at Einstedini, Nos. 98, 764, 765), &c. More, No. 445, prints it from a Lichtentbul, a Belaboura a Meira and a Schwarze and 1816 fibral 146. MAS. of the 16th ceut. at Einsiedein (Nos. 28; 764, 763), Ac. Most. No. 46, prints it from a Lichtenthul, a Reichenau, a Mainz, and a Salzburg MS., all of the 14th cent., and from other sources. Mone thinks that the criginal form was by Pope Innocent in., and that Jacopone may have made alterations and additions. He says that the text of the Noman Missal, with st. vi.—viit. omitted, would represent a form soited to the Seven Dolours of the B. V. M., and that this form is found in some has. But the original form would, he thinks, be represented by six stanzes of the text of the Roman Missal, with slight alterations, and arranged in the order 1, 4, 3, 5, 9, 10. This proposed text is actually printed by Wackernaget, i. No. 214, under the name of Innocent In. (as No. 262 Wackernagel prints the 10 stanza form under the name of Jacopone); but it is purely conjectural, and is not found in any Ms. yet described, Damiel, ii. pp. 131, 285, iii. p. 291, v. p. 59, prints the text from a Ms. at Munich of circa 1350, and from other sources. Damiel also prints the text given by Georgius Stella (d. 1420) in his Annales Genacuses, where Stella speaks of it as being sung by the Fiagellants in 1388 (in the chronicle compiled for the magistrates of Lilbeck (Detmursehe Chronic) it is also mendoned, under date of 1399, as in use by the Flagellants, and also the text given by Bernardinus de Bustis (d. 1600) in the Romanium Sermonum. It may be noted in and also the text given by Bernardinus de Bustis (d. 1500) in his Eccurium Sermonum. It may be noted in passing that though Bernardinus was a Franciscan, be passing that though bernanthing was a Franciscan, the evidently had no idea that the "Stabut mater dolorora" was by Jacopone. The text is also in Kehrein, No. 220; in Bünler, No. 105; in Königsfeld, i. p. 180; in F. A. March's Lat. Hys., 1875, p. 171; in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1805, &c.

Although, as stated above, this Sequence was brought into notice by the Flagellanis, and was well known at least as early as 1390, yet it only very gradually came into use in the services of the Church. It seems to have been added to the Breslau diocesan Missal shortly after 1414, and is found in the printed Breslau Missal of 1483. It is also in the aris Missal of 1481, and various other Missals of the 15th cent., but was not included in any of the English Missals. (The York Missal has a sequence somewhat resembling it, beginning "Stabat juxta Christi crucem," and this is found in the Ms. York Missal, circa 1890, now ring of the Stigmas on St. Francis is Sept. 16, 1224. 14 found in the Ms. York Missul, circa 1890, now is however a little difficult to see how any ordinary | in the Bolleian, as well as in the printed eds.; the text being also in Wackernagel, i., No. 263, and in Kayser as below.) It was not received into the Roman Missal or Breviary till after 1727, and is there appointed for use in the office of the Seven Dolours of the B. V. M., held on the Friday after Passion Sunday (the office of the Seven Dolours appointed in the Breviary for the 3rd S. in September uses other hymns). In the Roman Breviary it is divided into three parts, viz. st. i .- v. at Vespera; vi., vii. ("Sancta mater, istud agas"), at Matine; and viii.-x. ("Virgo virginum praeclara"), at Laude.

There is quite a literature on the subject of the "Stabat mater delorosa." The best and most complete summary of it is that by Dr. J. Kayser, in his Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der ältesten Kirchenhymnen, vol. ii., Pederborn, 1886, pp. 110-192, where the different forms of the text are printed in full, with an elaborate commentary and a full ap-paratus of various readings. See also Dr. P. Schaff, in Hours at Home, for May 1867.

The "Stabat mater dolorosa" is also worthy of note by reason of the frequency with which it has been set to music by the great composers, such as Palestrine, Pergolesi, Haydn, Rossini, and, more recently, Dvorak, The particulars regarding their printed settings are given at length by C. H. Bitter, in his Studie zum Stabat mater, Leipzig, 1883. See also the Caccilien Kalender (Regensburg, Pustet), 1883, p. 59; 1886, p. 79; 1888, p. 97.

It is also noteworthy on account of the very numerous translations in which it has passed into various European languages. Dr. F. G. Lisco, in his Stabat Mater, Berlin, 1843, prints 78 versions in German, to which list a good many more might now be added. The list of English trs., as will be seen below, is also large. The fact that so much of the hymn is directly addressed to the B. V. M. has limited its use in hymn-books outside those of the Roman Catholic Church. Perhaps the most skilful attempt to bring the hymn into greater harmony with 1 Tim. ii. 5, is by J. S. B. Monsell, in his Parish Hyl., 1873 (see below). [J. M.]

The trs. of this poem into English are (1) of the full text, as in the Roman Missal and Breviary; and (2) of the stanzas as appointed for Vespere, and are :-

i. Roman Missal and Breviary text. This text is thus divided :-

Vespers. Stabat Mater deloresa. Matine. Sancta Mater istud ages. Lauds. Virgo virginum pracolara.

and is tr. sometimes with these divisions, and again as one hymn, viz. :-

1. At the Cross her station keeping. Holy Mother, plerce me through. Matins. Virgin of all virgina best. Lauds.

By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 138; and in his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 76. Some three or four lines are from Bp. Mant's tr. as below. In these divisions, or as one hymn, this tr. is extensively used in Roman Catholic hymn-books for Missions and Schools.

2. Lol her heart with anguish rending. Vespers. -This, O Holy Jesu, grant me. Matins. King of saints, all saints out-shining. Lauds. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hymn & Tune Bh., 1852-55. The tr. of the Vespers text in also in Rice's Sel. from Blew, 1870, No. 39, altered to-" Stood the wee-worn Mother weeping.'

3. At the Cross her station keeping. This, in the Roman Catholic Hys. for the Year, N.D. [1867], is composed of two parts: Pt. i. being E. Caswall's tr. of the Vespers text, as above; and Pt. ii., "Fount of Love and holy sorrow," a tr., probably by Dr. Rawes (the editor), of the rest of the hymn. This combined tr. is also in the Catholic Hyt., N.D. [1860].

ii. The Vespers text. Stabat Mater.

1. By the Cross and vigil keeping, Stand the Mother, doleful, weeping. By Bp. R. Mont, in the British Magazine, Oct. 1833, p. 397, in 5 st. of 6 l., and signed "A." It was repeated in Bp. Mant's Ancient Hys., 1837, p. 54, and 1871, p. 96. The original tr. was given in the People's $H_{\rm eff}$ 1867; and, again, with slight alterations, in the Hymnary, 1872, and other collections.

2. By the Cross, and vigil keeping, Stood the ourning [mournful] Mother weeping. This cento mourning [mournful] Mother weeping. This cento appeared in Murray's Hymnul, 1852, No. 50, in 5 st. of 6 l. Of these 30 lines, 15 are from Mant, 1 from Caswall, and 14 altered from Mant, by the Editors.

3. By the Cross her station keeping. This, in the Sarum Hymnal, 1868; the Parish H. Bk., 1863 and 1875; and Thring's Cott., 1882, is Murray's text; in each case with slightly differing alterations.

4. At the Cross her station keeping. This cento, as given in H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875, is composed of 2 lines directly from Castoall, 21 lines directly or indirectly from Mont, through Murray, as above, and 7 lines by the compilers. Its proper designation, therefore, is "A cento, based upon Bp. Mant and K. Caswall, from Murray's Hymnol, 1852, somewhat altered." As Caswall's tr. begins with the same opening lines as this cento, it should be noted, to distinguish the two, that at. 5 begins in each thus:

Carpail: - "O thou Mother | fount of love! Touch my spirit from above."

H. A. & M.:— Jesu, may her deep devotion,
Stir in me the same smotion."

The H. A. & M. cento is found in a few collections; but outside of that work it is not so extensively used as the Murray cento, as above.

- 5. By the Cross, in anguish sighing. This tr. appeared in the Rugby School Ps. & Hys., 1850 (probably before), No. 62, in 4 st. of 5 l. (ed. 1876, No. 105). It was possibly made by J. H. Buckell, than Assistant Master in the School, and co-editor of the collection.
- 4. Mear the Gross was Mary, weeping. J. W. Alexander, in his work, The Breaking Crucible, and Other Translations, 1861; and in Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884.
- 7. By the Cross her sad watch keeping. cento, in Skinner's Daily Service Hyl., 1864, is composed of st. i .- v., from Bp. Mant, and st. vi., vii., by the Editor.
- 9. By the Cross and vigil keeping. This tr., in the Anglican H. Bk., 2nd ed., 1871, is by R. C. Singleton, the Editor, based upon Bp. Mant; and can be distinguished by st. v., which begins, "Fountain of divine affection."

Other tra, are :-

Forth pouring many a bitter tear. By "0," in the British Magazine, July 1833.
 By the Cross in angulah weeping. By G. Rurisoh.

in his Hys. & Anthons, 1851.

In addition to these metrical renderings of the Roman Missal and Breviary text, .Ira. Charles has, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 208, a prose tr. beginning, "The mournful mother stood tearful beside the Cross." There are also two or three metrical renderings by American writers, which we have been unable to verify. [J. J.]

Stabat mater speciosa. Jacobus de Benedictie.? [Christmas.] As mentioned in the note above, this sequence is found in a 15th cent. us. in the Bibliotheque Nationale at Paris (formerly No. 7783, now Fonds italien, 559 f. 109 b), and in 13 stanzas. From this MS, it was printed by O. F. Ozmam, in his Poëtes Franciscains en Italie au treizième Siècle, 1852 (Œuvres Complètes, Paris, 1855-1865, vol. v. p. 170), and his text is repeated in Königsfeld, ii. p. 242; F. A. March's Lat. Hys., 1875, p. 173; and in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der ällesten Kirchenhynnen, vol. it., Paderborn, 1886, p. 185. Ozanam thought it had never been printed, but it had appeared in Jacopone's Laude, Brescia, 1495. It has not been found in any other sources earlier than 1500, and for this cause, and for reasons mentioned in the preceding note, the present writer is inclined to think that it may possibly be by Jacopone. It has a certain beauty if looked at by itself. But on comparison with the "Stabat mater dolorosa" it is seen to be a servile and rather tame imitation of that poem, giving, on parallel lines, a picture of the B. V. M., as she may be supposed to have stood joyfully watching beside our Lord's cradle at Bethlehem. It never came into liturgical use. The tra, into English include:-

- 1. Full of beauty stood the Mether. By J. M. Neals (with the Latin text), in his Statest mater speciess, London, N.D. 1868, p. P. His tr. has been repeated in the &x. Marganet's Hymenol (Bast Grinstead), 1876, in three parts, Pt. 1. beginning "Mother, fount of love spill flowing," and Pt. iii., "Virgin, peerless of condition."
- 3. Stands that Mother more than beauteous. An anonymous tr. in the Roman Catholic Parachial H. Bk., N.D. [1880]. [J. M.]

A Selection of Prolins and Hymns for Public and Private Use. Ultozeter, Richards, 1806.

This Sel. contains 27 pealms (to which the Old 100th was added in later editions) and 128 hymns, many of which are from Watts, Cowper, and Newton. It was edited by the Rev. Jonathan Stubbs, M.A., sometime Fellow of New College, Oxford, and Curate-in-charge of Uttoxeter from 1804 until his death in 1810. He was assisted in compiling the Coll. by the Rev. T. Cotterill (q.v.), the Rev. Thomas Gisborne, and the Rev. Edward Cooper. Of Gisborne and Cooper we append the following biographical delails ;-

Gisborne, Thomas, M.A., sof Mr. John Gisborne, of Yoxall, was b, circe 1750, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was 5th Wrangler of his year, and Chancelibr's Medalist, graduating B.A. in 1780, and M.A. in 1783. Subsequently he became a Probendary of Durham. He was the author of Sermons; the Duties of Men; the Duties of Women; Poems Stored and Mored, 1799 (to the later editions of which his hymns were added), 3rd, ed. 1803; and of another volume of poetry entitled, Walks is a Forest, 1736. The following hymns by him are found in the Uttorster Sci. — Uttoweter Sel .:-

1. A soldier's course from battles won. Soldiers of Christ. No. 72, in 6 st. of 4 l., and in several hymn-books.

2. Hark! 'tis the bell with solemn toll. Death. No. 14, in 6 st. of 4 l.

5. When groves by mocalight silence keep. The hour of Peace. No. 116, in 4 st. of 4 l.

All the above hymns, except No. 2, are in Gisborne's

Poems, 3rd ed., 1803.

Poems, 3rd ed., 1993.

Cooper, Edward, s.a., of Queen's College, and sometime Petice of Al Souls' College, Oxford, was Rector of Hamstall-Ridware from 1799 to 1833, and of Yoxull, Staffordshire, from 1809 to 1833. He positished everal volumes of Sermons, and edited a small roll of Hymns (see No. 4 below). b, 1770, d, 1833. He contributed to the Utoxets' Sci.:

1. Father of heaven, whose love profound. No. 67. (See p. 369, i.)

2. This is the day the Lord bath blest. Sanday. No. 69, in 4 st. of 41.

The hymne in the Uttoxeter Sel. which Cotterill is believed to have written or recast are:---

1. Almighty Father, God of grace. For Pardon. No. 64, in 4 st. of 4 l. See p. 53, ii.

2. Bless'd with the presence of their God. See

 Not unto us, but to Thy name. See p. 811, il.
 When the archangel's trump shall sound.

2. Next in order of time we have the following collection :-

Portions of the Psalms, chiefly selected from the Versions of Merrick & Watts, with Occasional Hymns, adopted to the Service of the Church, for every Sunday in the Year. Uttazeter, Hichards, 1908.

This Coll. contains 174 Portions of Paalms (to which may be added 8 second and third parts not separately indexed), 12 Doxologies, and 33 Hymns (with 9 second or third parts). It repeats E. Cooper's hymn "Father of heaven;" but with the exception of this and a few pealm versions found in all collections, it is wholly different, both as regards con-tents and plan, from the Uttoxeter Coll. of 1805, with which Mr. Ellerton in his Notes to the fol. ed. of Church Hymns has confounded it, also erroneously assigning the editorship of the latter to E. Cooper, whose own Coll. was not published until 1811 (see iv.). A reference in the Coll. of 1808 to Ashbourne (a parish in Derbyshire on the borders of Staffordshire), and the statement that the music to which five of the hymns were sung was adapted or composed by Edward Simms, then organist of Ashbourne church, indicate that in all probability the Coll. was intended for use in that parish, and it is not unlikely that it was compiled by the Rev. Samuel Shipley, who became Vicar in 1806.

3. The third Sel. in this section is :-

A Selection of Pealms and Hymns for Public and Private Use. Newcastle, Staffordshire, 1810.

This Sel. was compiled by the Rev. T. Cotterill, and went through 8 editions. [See Cotterill, T., p. 263, Li.]

4. The fourth Sel. is :-

A Selection of Praims and Hymns. Lichfield, Lonax, 1811.

This Sel. was made by the Rev. Edward Cooper for use in his churches of Hamstall-Ridwore and Yoxall. A 2nd edition appeared in 1823. It is a small book, containing only Ken's Morning Hymn, 26 Pealins, and 19 Hymns. Of the latter, "Father of heaven, whose love profound" and "This is the day the Lord hath blest" are respectively Nos. 3 and 4.

5. The fifth Sel, is :-

A Selection of Pealms and Hymns for public wor-ship. Uttaxeter, Norris & Son, 1843.

6. The Utloxeter Sel. of 1805 remained in use for many years, and passed through several editions (4th ed. 1814) unaltered, until 1843, when a revised ed. was pub. This contains 49 Pealma, 1 Gloria Patri, 94 Hymns, and an Introductory Anthem, 145 pieces in all, of which 106 were taken from the older Eel. About 1854 this revised to an arrangement of the replaced at Uttoxeter by A Church Hymnbook replaced at Uttoxeter by A Church Hymnbook and Holydoy. London, for every Sunday and Holydoy. London, Masters. One of the hymne (No. 126) in the Uttoxeter Sci. of 1805, "When heaves with sighs my anxious breast," in 5 st. of 4 l., is by the Rev. Humphrey Price, Curate and afterwards (1819-58) Incumbent of Christ Church, Needwood, but it does not appear that he had any further part in compiling the Sel. This hymn was included afterwards in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist.

7. As connected with Staffordshire, though hymn-writers may be named here, the Rev. John Wakefield and Lady Lucy Whitmore.

John Wakeheld and Lady Lucy Whitmore.

Wakeheld, Jshn, M.A., a. of Mr. Thomas Wakeheld, was b. at Uttoxeter, Jan. 17, 1798; educated at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. 1824, M.A. 1827. Took Holy Orders in 1824, and after holding curactes at St. Alkmund's and All Saints, Derby, became Rector of Hughley, Shropshire, in 1851. His compiled A Collection of Fradme and Hymns, chiefly designed for Public Worship. Belger, J. Mason, 1828, containing 100 Fesims and 210 Hymns; and in 1831 printed privately a small vol. of 24 original hymns entitled Hymns and Spiritual Songs, recreations in age and seclusion of a Rural Pastor. W. Lawley, printer, Mich Wenlock; and in 1888, an Appendix thereto of 8 hymns.

Whitmere, Lady Lusy Elizabeth Georgians, was the only dau, of Orlande, 2nd Baron and let Earl of Bradford, b. Jam. 22, 1797, married in 1816 to Mr. William Wolryche Whitmore, of Dudmaston, Shropahire, and d. Mar. 17, 1840. She published, "Family Prayers for Every Day in the Week," dec. 1824, containing 14 ori-ginal Hymne; 2nd edit. 1827. No. viii, of these hymne, "Father, again in Jesus' name we meet." (p. 388, il.) has passed into many collections.

To information furnished by the Rev. J. Wakefield we are indebted for much of the materials employed in this article. [G. A. C.]

Stallybrass, James Steven, fourth s. of the Rev. Edward Stallybrass, of the London Missionary Society, was b. Oct. 3, 1826, at Sclenginsk, in the province of Irkutsk, Siberia, where his father was then stationed. He resided for many years in Stoke Newington, London, and d. there Dec. 2, 1888. He was a well known educationist, and tr. from the German a number of scientific and other works. He contributed a large number of tre. from German hymns and poems to the various publications of Mr. Curwen, e. g. to the Songs and Tunes for Education, 1861; the Tonic Sol fa Reporter, &co. In 1859 he contributed tra of 4 German hymna to Mr. Curwen's Sublath H. Bk. (Nos. 234, 417, 418, 420). To Mr. Cur-wen's Child's Own H. Bk., 1862, he also contributed :-

1. Who through Heaven is guiding. God the Child's Guide. This was originally pub. in 5 et. of 5 l., as No. 117 in Songs and Tunes, 1881, and marked as a tr., but Mr. Stallybras in 1881 could not remember from what. It has since been included in the Congregational

What. It has since over inclined in the Congregations Bk. of Praise for Children, 1881.

2. High heaven! my home and fatherland. Heaven anticipated. 1st pub. in 4 st. of 4 l., as No. 195, in Sings and Tunes, 1861, and marked as a tr., but Mr. Stallybrass in 1881 regarded it as an original composition.

For Mr. Stallybrass's tra, from the German noted in this Dictionary see Index of Authors [J. M.] and Translaters.

Stammers, Joseph, was b. at Bury St. Edmunds in 1801, and educated for the legal profession. After practising in London as a solicitor for some time he was called to the Bar in 1833, and joined the Northern Circuit. (Lyra Brit., 1868.) He d. in London, May 18, 1885. His popular hymn—

Breast the wave, Christian (Perseverance) was contributed to the Cottage Magarine (a small serial edited by the Rev. John Suckworth, Lite Vicar of Dowbury) in 1830. It has passed into several collections, including the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858; the People's Hyl., 1887 (altered), and others.

Mr. Stammers also contributed 4 hymns to Dr. Rogers's Lyra Brit., 1868, but these have not come into C. U.

Stand, soldier of the Cross. $B_{\mathcal{V}}$, E, H. Bickersteth. [Adult Baptism.] Written for the 1st ed. of his Hymnal Comp. 1870, No. 291, not as compilers of Hymnals for local use, two | in 6 st. of 4 l. It was also given in his Two Brothers, &c., 1871, p. 238. On its adoption by the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, st. fi., iii., were slightly altered by the author. [J. J.]

Stand the omnipotent decree. C. Weeley. [Trust and Confidence in God.] This is No. 16 of 17 hymns pub. in 1756, as Hys. for the Year, 1756, Particularly for the Fast-day, Feb. 6, in 4 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. vi. p. 94). This Fast was held as a day of humiliation arising mainly out of a dread of an invasion by the French. Miss Steele's hymn "See gracious God, before Thy throne" (p. 1027, il.), was also written for the same occasion. C. Wesley's hynn was republished, without alteration, in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 60, and has since passed into a large number of collections in most English-speaking countries. It has received great praise at the hands of many writers. J. Montgomery in the preface to his Christian Psalmist, 1825, p. xxiv. says:—

"The bymn on the Day of Judgment, Stand the Omnipotent decree" begins with a note, abrupt and awakening like the sound of the last trampet. This is altogether one of the most darling and victorious filights of our author. Such pieces prove that if Charles Westey's hymns are less wireled than might have been desired for general purposes, it was from choice and predilection to certain views of the Ganet in its effects upon human minds, and not from want of diversity of gifts."

This was written by Montgomery in ignorance of the fact that the hymn was directly associated with Young's Night Thoughts. In his private copy of his Christian Psalmist, 1825 (in our possession) he has written in pencil on the margin opposite the above quotation "a paraphrase from Dr. Young's Night Thoughts." Juckson in his concluding chapter of the Memoirs of C. Wesley quotes this hymn as one of "two examples of the mumer in which C. Wesley occasionally availed himself of the writings of other men." He says (small ed., 1848, p. 498):—

"The just and striking sentiments contained in the Night Thoughts, often proposed with great abruptness and force, were exactly suffed to Mr. Charles Westey's peculiar temper and mental habits. He therefore esteemed this book next to the holy Schlutes. Yet could be when occasion served surpase Young himself in living energy both of thought and expression, as the following example demonstrates. The author of the Night Thoughts [Night vi. The Infidel Beclaimed, pt. i.] exclaims.—

'O man imprortal! Hear the lofty style.
If so decreed, th' Aimighty Will be done.
Let earth dissolve, you pend'rous orbs descend,
And grind us into dust! The soul is safe;
The man emerges; mounts above the wreck,
As tow'ring fiame from Naturo's funcial pyre;
O'er devastation, as a gainer, smiles;
His charter, his invisible rights,
Weth pleas do learn from Thunders impotence,
Death's pointless daris, and Hell's defeated storms,'
"Mr. Charles Wesley, taking up the theme, thus sings in still lofter strains, and with a greater power of ex-

'Stand th' Omnipotent decree l
Jehovah's Will be done!

Nature's end we wait to see,
And hear her final groam:
Let earth dissolve, and blend
In death the wicked and the just,
Let those pond rous orbs descend,
And grind us into dost!

'Reats secure the righteous man!
At his Redeemer's beck
Sure to emerge, and rise again,
And mount above the wreck.
Lo! the heavenly spirit towers,
Like flames o'er nature's funeral pyre,
Triumphs in immortal powets,
And claps his wings o'f fire!'

Jackson quotes the remaining two verses of Wesley's hymn (see Wes. H. Bk., No. 61), but omits to point out that there is nothing corresponding thereto in the Night Thoughts, and that they are strictly Wesley's original composition. Young began his Night Thoughts after the death of his wife and daughter in 1744, and the Preface to pt. ii. of "The Infidel Reclaimed," which begins a few lines after those quoted above, is dated "July 7, 1744." This would give the date of his lines as quoted, circa 1744, C. Wesley's date is 1756. We may add that line 4 in st. iv:—

"Yield we now our bodies up To earthquake, plague, and sword," refers in the carthquake to the great earthquake which demolished the city of Lisbon on Nov. 1, 1755; the plague to the terrible mortality among the cattle which had been prevailing in various parts of England; and the sword to the invasion which was feared from France. These things made the strongest men in the land tremble.

[J. J.]

Stand up and bless the Lord. J. Montgomery. [Praise and Thanksgiviny.] Written for the Sheffield Red Hill Wesleyan Sunday School Auniversary, held on Mar. 15, 1824; and also used at the Whitsuntide gathering of the Sheffield Wesleyan Sunday School Union, on the Whit-Monday of that year. The opening lines of the original read:—

"Stand up and bless the Lord, Ye children of His choice."

When Montgomery included it in his Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 558, in 6 st. of 4 l, he altered this opening to:—

"Stand up and bless the Lord, Ye people of His choice:"

and this was repeated in his Original Hys., 1853, No. 86. In J. H. Thom's Hymns, &c., 1858, it begins, "Arise, and bless the Lord:" and in the American Songs for the Sanctuary, N. Y., 1865, "O Thou above all praise" (st. it. altered). It is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries, and usually the 1825 text is followed.

[J. J.]

Stanley, Arthur Penrhyn, p.D., was b. at Alderley, in Cheshire, Dec. 13, 1815. His father, Edward Stanley, was the s. of Sir Edward Stanley of Alderley, and younger brother of the first Lord Stanley of Alderley, and was rector of the parish until 1837, when he become Bishop of Norwich. His mother, Catherine Stanley, was daughter of the Rev. Oswald Leycester, Rector of Stoke-upon-Tern, Shropshire. Arthur Stanley received his early education under the superintendence of his father; but in 1829 he was sent to Rugby to be under the direct charge of Dr. Arnold, who had been appointed to the head-mastership the year before, and of whom Mr. Stanley had been an early friend and admirer. Arthur Stanley bore the stamp of Rugby and of its great headmaster to the end of his life. In 1834 he went up to Oxford, having won a Balliol scholarship, the "blue ribbon of undergraduate life," and commenced a career of unusual brilliancy at the University. He gained the Newdi-gate prize for English Verse (the subject being The Gypeies); the Ireland scholarship (the highest test of Greek scholarship), and a First Class in Classical Honoura, all in 1837. He won the Prize for the Latin Essay in 1839, the Prize for the English Essay, and the Ellerton Prize for the Theological Essay in 1840, and was in the same year elected to a Fellowship at University College. He was then appointed College Tutor, and held that office for twelve years. In 1845-6 he was Select Preacher for the University. From 1850 to 1852 he was Secretary to the Oxford University Commissioners. In 1851 he was appointed Canon of Canterbury, and held that post until 1855, when he was elected Regius Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Oxford, to which a Canonry at Christ Church was attached. He was also chosen in 1858 Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of London, his fellow Rugbeian, Dr. Tait. These offices he held until 1869, when, on the elevation of Dean Trench to the Archbishopric of Dublin, he was appointed to the Deancry of Westminster. In the same year he married Lady Augusta Bruce, a sister of the Earl of Elgiu, and a personal friend and attendant of Queen Victoria. This marriage brought him into still closer relation with the Court, at which he had before been so highly valued, that he had been twice chosen to accompany the Prince of Wales in his travels in the East. He was singularly happy in his married life, and felt the death of Lady Augusta, which occurred in 1876, as an irreparable loss. In 1872, he took part in the Old Catholic Congress at Cologno; and at the close of the same year he was again appointed Select Preacher, not, however, without considerable opposition being made to the appointment on account of the Dean's theological views; the vote, however, was carried by 349 against 287. In 1875 he was installed Lord Rector of the University of St. Andrews, having received the degree of LL.D. from that University four years previously. He died at the Deanery, Westminster, on July 18, 1881, after a short illness.

Dr. Stanley was a voluminous and very popular writer, his pure and picturesque style being singularly faccinating. The first work by which he became known to the literary world was the Life and Correspondence of Dr. Arnold, pub, in 1844. This is an almost perfect model of biography. Though the writer is distinctly a hero-worshipper, he never allows his worship to violate the rules of good taste, while he brings out all the points in his hero's character most vividly, and exercises a most wise discretion in permitting him, as far as possible, to tell his own tale. This was followed in 1850 by Mostoirs of Edscard Stanley, Mishop of Norwick, and Edstards Stanley, which is very interesting both for its intrinsic merits, and also as a plous tribute of filled affection; but it does not reach the level of the Life of Arnold. In 1854 appeared the Epistles to the Corinitations, the value of which will be variously estimated according to the theological standpoint of the reader. But his next two works will command the admiration of all persons who are competent to judge. In his Historical Memorials of Canterbury, pub. in 1854, and Sinet and Palestine in connectors with their History, pub. in 1855, Dr. Stanley was again on his own proper ground where his almost unique powers of description had their full scope. The former was a very popular work, reaching a 6th ed. in 1872; but Sinai and Palestine in the Letters on the History of the Eststein Charch, pub. in 1861; this also was very popular, reaching a 6th ed. in 1862; that sales was very popular, reaching a 6th ed. in 1862; that sales was very popular, reaching a 6th ed. in 1862; that sales was very popular, reaching a 6th ed. in 1862; that sales was very popular, reaching a 6th ed. in 1862; that sales was very popular, reaching a 6th ed. in 1861; this also was very popular, reaching a 6th ed. in 1862; that sales was very popular, reaching a 6th ed. in 1862; that sales was very popular, reaching a 6th ed. in 1862; the sales was very popular, reaching a 6th ed. in 1862; t decessor. It is a fortunate circumstance that two of the most interesting places in England should have had for their historian one who, both from his position and his powers, was, of all men, the most fitted to do justice to his subject. Of the rest of Dr. Stanley's prose works it does not seem necessary to do more than specify the titles. They include Lectures on the History of the Charch of Scotland, 1868; Energy on Questions connected with Church and State, 1870; a great number of single Addresses, ke., on various subjects, and Christian Institutions, Ensays on Ecclesiastical Subjects, pub. not long before his death,

Dr. Stanley attained great eminence and a necessary

Dr. Stanley attained great eminence as a preacher, especially in his own Abbey. His manner was most solemn and impressive, and his style of composition was exactly mitted for a sermon. It is fair to add that sermons would also, of course, be the species of composition in which what many considered the most unsatisfactory features of Dr. Stanley's intellectual character, his vagueness of doctrine and extreme breadth of statement, were most conspicuous. He pub. several volumes of sermons and single sermons. The chief are: Sermons and Essays on the Apottolical Ape (1846). Sermons on the Unity of Evangetical and Apottolical Teaching (1859), Sermons in the East preached before the Prince of Wales (1863), Address and Sermons at St. Andrews, 1871.

The point of view from which this sketch naturally regards Dean Stanley as a writer is that from which he appears at the least advantage. Thirteen of his hymns which had been published singly have been incorporated in the Westminster Abbey Hymn Book, but none of them have attained any extensive popularity; and, to tell the truth, they do not deserve it. That exquisite tasts and felicity of diction which distinguish more or less all his prose writings seem to desert him when he is writing verse. This is all the more strange because one would have said that he regarded outward nature, as well as the works and history of man, with a poet's eye. Like another great writer, Jeremy Taylor, his prose is poetical, but his poetry is prosaic. The divine afflatus is wanting. Of course he divine afflatus is wanting. Of course he always writes as a scholar; hence his translations are more successful than his original hymns; but in neither department has he produced anything that can at all be termed classical; and it is from his general eminence rather than from his contributions to hymnology that he requires even the small space which has been devoted to him in this article. [J. H. O.]

In addition to Dean Stanley's trs. from the Latin, and his popular hymns, "He is gone! beyond the skies," and "Master, it is good to be," which are annotated elsewhere in this Dictionary, the following are also in C. U.:—

1. Let us with a gladsome mind. National Hymn. The Accession. This bywn is called "Hymn for the

1. Let us with a gladsome mind. National Hymn. The Accession. This bymn is called "Hymn for the Accession (June 20). An Accommodation of Milton's Version of the 136th Psalm," and was pub. in Macmillan's Magazine, June 1873, in 11 st. of 81. Lines 3, 4, of st. 1.:—

" Long our island throne has stood, Planted on the ocean flood;"

will distinguish it from Mitton's bymn.

2. 0 frail spirit, vital spark. Easter. Given in Mitton's hymn.

2. 0 frail spirit, vital spark. Easter. Given in Mittonia's Magazine, May 1878, and headed "Our Puture Hope." An Easter Hymn. It has been thought that there may be a place for some expressions such as the following hymn or hymns endeavour to embody, of the prospect of another world, move hopeful than the touching address of the Emperor Hadrian to his soul, less vague and material than Pope's graceful version of it in his well-known lines, "Vital spark of beavenly flame." The hymn following this introduction is in two parts:—Part 1. "O frail spirit, vital spark," in 6 st. of 2 l., and 1t. ii., "Riese, my soul, and stretch thy wings." also in 8 st. of 8 l. Of Pt. II., st. i., II. 1-4, are from Robert Seagrave's hymn, noted on p. 364, ii.

3. Spirit unseen, our spirits' house. Whitsantide.

This hymn was pub. in Mocmillan's Magasine, May, 1878, in 7 st. of 8 L, and 1 st. of 9 L, with the following note: —"Manzanis Hymn for Whitsuntide. Of all the Sacred Hymns of Manzani this is the one which breathes the most comprehensive spirit. The first part runs on the more mystical embleme of the Church. But the latter part, which alone is cupable of general use, enters into the very beart of the doctines of the spiritual nature of Christianity, and contains a meaning beyond the original force of the words, which was intended to be contined to the limits of the Roman Church. It is in this wider sense that the following paraphrase has been attempted." Manzoni's poem on Postcood was pub. ofreu 1826. (See Italian Hymnody, § 11.)

4. The Lord is come! On Syrian soll. Advent. This hymn appeared in Magasilan's Magasire, Dec. 1872, in 8 st. of 8 L, with the following introduction;— "Hymn for Advent. The accompanying hymn is offered as a sequel to the two which have already appeared in this Magasilan's Magasilan, Dec. 1872, in 6 st. of 8 L, with the following introduction;— "Hymn for Advent. The accompanying hymn is offered as a sequel to the two which have already appeared in this Magasilan, April 1870, [No. Jone 1862, see p. 600, ii.], on the Ascension, and the Transfiguration (April 1879, see p. 718, i.]. The first four standars run parallel to the Gospets of the four Sandays in Advent, and the two last on the Gospets and Episties for Christmas."

5. When the Paschal systems fell. Holy Compatition.

for Christmax."

5. When the Paschal evening fell, Holy Communion.
This appeared in Micantilan's Magazine, Nov. 1874, in 5 st of 8 L, 1 st. of 12 L, and 1 st. of 8 L, with this introduction:—"This do in Remembrance of Me. It is intended in the following lines to furnish a sacred hymn founded on the one common idea of commemoration which lies at the basis of all views of the Eucharist, whether material or spiritual, and to express this un-doubted intention of the original institution apart from the metaphorical language by which the ordinance is the metaphorical language by which the ordinance is often described."

6. Where is the Christian's Fatherland? The Christian's Fatherland. This poem (it cannot be called a hymn) was given in Macmilian's Magazine, Nov. 1872, in 7 st. of 8 L, with the following introduction:—"The Traveller's Hymn for All Saints Day. Being an adaptation of Arndt's Poem, 'Was ist des Deutschen Vaterland."

7. Where shall we find the Lord 5 Epophany. Given in Macmilian's Magazine, March 1880, in 7 st. of 8 l., and introduced thus:—" The Divine Life. "Who lived and introduced thus:—"The Divine Life. "Who lived amongst men." (In the original draft of the Niceas Creed) from the Greed of the Church of Palestine."

8. Where shall we learn to die! Good Priday. This was pub. in Macsaillan's Magazine, March 1880, in 7 st. of 8 l., with the simple heading, "The Perfect Death. Dinc mort."

9. Why shall be the last great Beer? St. John Appeirst. Appeared in Mocsaillan's Magazine, July 1879, in 4 st. of 8 l., as a "Hymn for St. John the Baptist Day, June 24."

All these hymns were given in full, and without alteration, in the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883. Their use is mainly confined to that collection. [J, J]

Star of morn and even. F. T. Palgrave. [Morning or Evening.] Written in 1862, and given to Sir R. Palmer (Lord Selborne) in Ms., and included by him in his Bk. of Praise, 1862, in 4 st. of 6 l. It is also given in the author's Hymns, 1867, p. 7, where it is entitled "The Day Star"; in the Sazon Hymnary, 1882; Thring's Coll., 1882, and others. It has been set to special music by Tilleard, Lond., Novello, 1868.

Stars of the morning, so gloriously bright. St. Joseph the Hymnographer. [St. Michael & All Angels.] In the Paracletice there are several Canons of the Bodiless Ones, and all are of an ornate character. In Dr. Neale's Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, these stanzas appeared with the following title and note: —" Stars of the Morning. A cento from the Canon of the 'Bodiless Ones." Thesfrom the Canon of the 'Bodiless Ones.' Tuesday in the Week of the Fourth Tone." In omitting the opening line of the Greek, Dr. Meale, doubtless, intended it to be understood, that he had followed the spirit rather than the letter of the original. In fact, there is no attempt to reproduce the sequence of thought as set forth in the Canon, although the ornate character of the original is imitated. Since the adoption of Dr. Neale's translation for congregational use, in H. J. Palmer's Suppl. Hymnal, 1866, the People's, 1867, H. A. & M., 1868, and others, it has become most popular, and is found in a large number of hymn-books. The texts in use, however, vary considerably. Dr. Neale's authorized text is in the 3rd ed. of the H. of the E. Church, 1866. The original Greck Canon is found in modern editions of the Octoechus.

Statuta decreto Dei. C. Coffin. [Advent. Pub. in his Hymni Sacri, 1736, p. 35, and also in the Paris Breviary the same year, where it is appointed as the Ferial hymn at Vespers in Advent. - The ralling years at length fulfil. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 42. Generally given in an abbreviated and altered form.
- 2. Deep hidden by divine decree. By I. Willlams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839. p. 46. The tr. in the Hymnary, 1872, No. 104, "O Lord, the rolling years fulfil," is by the editors based on I. Williams's tr.
- 3. And now, by God's sure word decreed. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. and Tune Bk., 1852-55, Advent, No. 7. This is a tr. of st. i., v., The Advent hymn, No. 8, in Blew, is a to. of the remaining stanzas of this hymn, beginning with st. ii., "Patris nefando crimine," which is rendered as, "While Adam's race sore wounded lay." This is in Lyra Messianica, 1864.
- 4. The falness of the time ordained. By J. A. Johnston, in his English Hyl., 1856. Based on J. Chandler, as above.

Stay, Thou insulted Spirit, stay. Wesley, [Lent.] Pub. in Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1749, vol. i., No. 41, in 7 st. of 4 L (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv., p. 370.) It was included in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 153, with the omission of st. vi., and the change of st. ii., l. 4, from, "For forty long rebellious years" (the forty referred to his own age at the time), to "For many long," &c. The Wes. H. Bk. form of the text is in most of the Methodist collections, and a few others. Other forms of the text are:—(1) "Slay, injured, grieved, Spirit, stay," in Biokersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, and later collections; and (2) "Stay, Thou long-suffering Spirit, stay," in the American Meth. Episco. Hymnal, 1878. [J. J.]

Steame, Edward, D.D., was b. at Oxford, Mar. 23, 1798, studied at the Baptist College, Bristol, and at Edinburgh University. 1823 he became pastor of a Baptist church at Camberwell, London, where he laboured with success until his death on May 8, 1882. Dr.

Steams was for many years one of the most | eminent ministers of the Baptist denomination. He was one of the founders of the Baptist Union; the Bible Translation Society: and the Evangelical Allianco. He edited Evangelical Christendom; and pub. The Doctrine of Christ developed by the Aposties, in 1872. He was one of the Committee which prepared the Baptist New Selection in 1828. The only hymn known to have been composed by him appeared in that book:—
"Prophetic era! blissful day!" (The Triumphs of Christ anticipated). It reappeared in the Selection Enlarged in 1838. [W. R. S.]

Steele, Anne, b. in 1716, was the daughter of Mr. Wm. Steele, a timber merchant, and pastor, without salary, of the Baptist Church at Broughton, in Hampshire. At an early age she showed a taste for literature, and would often entertain her friends by her poetical compositions. But it was not until 1760 that she could be prevailed upon to publish. In that year two vols. appeared under the title of Posms on Subjects chiefly Devotional, by Theodosia. After her death, which occurred in November, 1778, a new edition was published with an additional volume and a Preface by the Rev. Dr. Caleb Evans, of Bristol (Bristol, 1780). In the three vols. are 144 hymns, 34 Psalms in verse, and about 30 short poems. They have been reprinted in one vol. by D. Sedgwick, 1868. Miss Steele's hymns were first made available for congregational use in 1769, 62 of them being then introduced into the Bristol Bap. Coll. of Ash & Evans, the letter T for "Theodosia" being affixed; 47 were also given in Dr. Rippon's Sel., 1787, and 26 in Dr. W. B. Collyer's Coll., 1812. Among Baptist hymn-writers Miss Steele stands at the head, if we regard either the number of her hymne which have found a place in the hymnals of the last 120 years, or the frequency with which they have been sung. Although few of them can be placed in the first rank of lyrical compositions, they are almost uniformly simple in language, natural and pleasing in imagery, and full of genuine Christian feeling. Miss Steele may not inappropriately be compared with Miss F. R. Havergal, our "Theodosia" of the 19th century. In both there is the same evangelic ferrour, in both the same intense personal devotion to the Lord Jesus. But whilst Miss Steele seems to think of Him more frequently as her "bleeding, dying Lord"—dwelling on His sufferings in their physical aspect—Miss Havergal oftener refers to His living help and sympathy, recognizes with gladness His present claims as "Master "and "King," and anticipates almost with ecstasy His second coming. Looking at the whole of Miss Steele's bymns, we find in them a wider range of thought than in Miss Havergal's compositions. She treats of a greater variety of subjects. On the other hand, Miss Havergal, living in this age of missions and general philanthropy, has much more to say concerning Christian work and personal service for Christ and for humanity. Miss Steele suffered from delicacy of health and from a great sorrow, which befell her in the death of her betrethed under peculiarly painful circum-stances. In other respects her life was un-Goodness.

eventful, and occupied chiefly in the discharge of such domestic and social duties as usually fall to the lot of the chiest daughter of a village pastor. She was buried in Broughton [W, R, S.] churchyard.

A large number of Miss Steele's hymns are in C. U., the larger proportion being in American hymn-books. In addition to "Almighty Maker of my frame," "Far from these narrow scenes of night," "Father of mercies in Thy word," and others annotated under their respective first lines, there are also :

Stegmann, Josua, n.n., a of Ambrosius Stegmann, Lutheran pastor at Sülzfeld, near Meiningen, and finally, in 1593, superintendent at Eckartsberga, near Merseburg, was b. at Sülzfeld, Sept. 14, 1588. He entered the University of Lelpzig in 1608, M.A. in 1611, and was for sometime adjunct of the Philosophical Faculty. In 1617 he was appointed Superintendent of the district (Grafschaft) of Schaumburg, and also paster at Stadthagen, and first professor of the Gymmasium there; and before entering on his duties graduated D.D. at Wittenberg, on Oct. 24, 1617. When the Gymnasium was crected into a university, and transferred (1621) to Rinteln, he became ordinary professor of Theology there. By the outbreak of war he was forced to flee from Rinteln, in 1623. After his return be was appointed, in 1625, Ephorus of the Lutheran clergy of Hesse-Schaumburg. By the Edict of Restitution, promulgated by the emperor on March 6, 1629, he was greatly harassed: for the Benedictine monks, after they had settled in Rinteln, in 1630, claimed to be the rightful professors, and demanded the restoration of the old church lands, and especially the property formerly belonging to the numery at Rinteln, but which had been devoted to the payment of the stipends of the Lutheran professors. They sent soldiers into Stegmann's house to demand that he should refund his salary, and on July 13, 1632, compelled him to hold a disputation, at which they annoyed him in every possible way. Soon after he was seized with feyer, and d. Aug. 3, 1632. (Koch, iii., 128; Wetzel, iii., 251; Einladungsschrift des Gymnasium Bernhardinum, Meiningen, 1888; Ms. from Pastor A. Bicker. Rinteln : Dr. Förstemann, Leipzig), &c.

Stegmann was known as a writer of Latin verse while yet a student at Leipzig, and by his contemporaries was reckoned as a hymn writer. It is, however, very difficult to discriminate his productions. The hymna interspersed in his devotional works are given without any indications of authorship, and many of them are certainly by earlier writers, or recasts founded on earlier hymna.
They appeared principally in his (1) Suspiria Tamporam.
They appeared principally in his (1) Suspiria Tamporam.
Of this the 3rd ed., Rinteln. 1628, is in the Karisruhe
Library. (2) Ernemeric Hertzen-Susfizer, Lituaburg, NOCKEX (colophon gives the correct date, viz., "Im Jahr 1830"). Of this there is a copy in the University Library at Breslau. In the Blütter für Hymnologie, 1888, p. 162, a list is given of the more important hymna in No. 2, tracing as far as possible those which had previously appeared elaswhere. Two hymns, which are usually ascribed to Stegmann, and are not found earlier than in his works, have passed into English as follows:

i. Ach bleib mit deiner Gnade. Supplication. Included in 1628, as above, p. 462. In 1630 it is given, at p. 347, in 6 st. of 4 l., as a "Closing Hymn," after the "Prayer for the Preservation. of the Doctrine, and of the Church of God." Thence in Mützell, 1858, No. 337a. In J. Clauder's Psalmodia nova, pt. it., 1631, p. 266, it is ascribed to Stegmann, and so in later collections. It is a simple and beautiful hymn, and is found in most recent German hymnals, e.g. as No. 208 in the Unv. L. S., 1851. Lauxmann, in Koch, viii., 146, relates various incidents regarding its use (it was, e.g., a favourite hymn of king Friedrich Wilhelm IV. of Prussia), and thus analyses it:-

"it has as its keynote the saying of the two disciples at Emmans, 'Abide with us.' St. i. nuts this prayer simply before the Lord Jesus; st. il...vi, develop it un detail! Abide with us with Thy Word as our Saviour (il.); with the illumination of Thy Spirit as our everguiding Truth (iit.); with Thy blessing as the God rich in power (iv.); with Thy protection as the Conqueror in battle (v.); and with Thy Faithfulness as our Rock in the time of need (vi.).

The Translations are: --

1. Abide with us, our Bevlour. This is a free +. of st. i.-iii., as No. 51, in the Dalston Hospital H. Bk., 1848; and repeated in the Pennsylvania Luth. Church Ba, 1868. In Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864, fr. of st. iv., vi., were added.

2. O Seriour, go beside us. This is a free fr.

of st. L, iv., v., with an original "Shepherd" st., as st. ii., by J. S. Stallybrass, in the Tonio Soifa Reporter, July 1857; and in Curwen's Subbath H. Bk., 1859, No. 420. Thence in Dr. Pagenstacher's Coll., 1864, No. 116.

$. Abide among us with Thy grace. good and full tr., in C.M., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Gor., 2nd ser., 1858, p. 84; and her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 14. Included in Allon's Suppl. Hys., 1868, Irish Church Hyl., 1869 and 1873, and others; and in America, in the Cantate Domino, 1859, Boardman's Sel., 1861.

4. Abide with us, Lord Jesus! Thy grace. This is a complete tr., as No. 8 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, and marked as a compilation.

5. Come, shide with Thy grace, in our hearts, 0 Lord. By Dr. R. Maguire, 1872, p. 197.

il. Wie sehön leuchtet der Mergenstern, Vom Firmament des Himmels forn. Morning. Included in 1630, as above, p. 10, in 8 st. of 10 l., entitled, "Morning Hymn." (The text printed by Fischer, "Morning Hymn." (The text printed by Fischer, i., p. 385, as that of 1630, is really the greatly altered form in the ed. of 1638); and repeated in the Leipzig Vorrath, 1673, No. 838, and others. St. viii. is altered from st. ix. of "O Lebensbriumlein, tief und gross" (see p. 775, ii.). It is an imitation, but not a recast, of the hymn by P. Nicolai, noted at p. 606, ii. The form in C. U. was given to it by Burchard Wiesenmeyer, in Crüger's Newes collismentiches G. B., 1640, No. 111, and further recast in Crüger's Praxis, 1648, No. 3, which begins, "Wie schön leucht uns der Morgenstern." This form is No. 477, in the Unv. L. S., 1851. The tr. in C. U. is-

How beautiful the Morning Star shines from the firmament afar. This was contributed by Philip Pusey to A. R. Reinagle's Ps. & Hy. Tunes, Oxford, 1840, p. 130 (see p. 1017, ii.). St. i. is a fairly close version of st. i., while st. ii., iii., are very free tr. of st. vi., vii. Included, slightly varied, in the Salisbury H. Ba., 1857, and thence, with st. i., ll. 5, 6, altered in Kennedy, 1863. It was considerably altered in the Surum Hyl., 1868; and this form is repeated in R. Minton Taylor's Coll., 1872, and J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876.

Other tra. are: —(1) "How fair shines forth the Morning-star." By H. J. Buckell, 1842, p. 24. (2) "How lovely now the morning-star." By Miss Caz, 1854, p. 3. (3) "How beautiful the morning star, Shines in." By R. Massle, in the Day of Rest, 1816, p. 472. [J. M.]

Stennett, Joseph, the carliest English Baptist hymn-writer whose hymns are now in C. U., was b. at Abingdon, Berks, in 1663. He received a superior education at the Grammar-School of Wallingford, and at the age of 22 removed to London, where for several years he engaged in tuition. In 1688 he married a daughter of George Guill, a French Protestant refugee, another of whose daughters was the wife of the celebrated Presbyterian minister, Dr. Daniel Williams, who became a generous friend to Stennett. In the following year he was called to preach by the Bapilst Sabbatarian congregation then meeting in Devonshire Square, London, afterwards in Pinners' Hall; and in 1690 became its pastor, a position he retained to his death, July 4, 1713. Since the meetings of this congregation for worship were on the seventh day of the week, he was free to preach to other congregations on the Sunday, which he did very frequently, especially to the General Baptist Church in the Barbican. Such was Stennett's repute for piety, learning and practical wisdom that his advice was very much sought by his Obristian friends, and by the "great Whig Lords" of that day he was occasionally consulted as to the feeling of the Dissenters concerning pational affairs. His published works include:—

(1) Hymns in communication of the Sufferings of our Messed Sautour Jesus Christ, compar'd for the Cele-bration of his Body Supper, 1697; 2nd ed. 1703 (This is entitled in Stennett's Works, 1792, Hymns for the Lord's entitled in Stennett's Works, 1722, Hymns for the Lord's Supper). These were 37 in number, increased to 50 in the 3rd ad., 1708. (2) In 1700 he published a postical Version of Solomon's Song of Songs, together with the XLVIN Praim. A 2nd ed., corrected, appeared in 1708. (3) In 1712 he pub, twelve Hymns composed for the Celebration of the Holy Ordinance of Baptism; and ed.

Stenuett also translated Dacier's Plato and other works from the French, and published several sermons preached on days of National Thanksgiving and other public occasions. His Works were collected after his death and pub. in 1732, in 4 vols. 8vo. They contain a Memoir, Sermons and Letters, the Hymns and Poems mentioned above, and a few other poetical pieces. A controversial work, An Answer to Mr. Russen's Book on Baptism, 1702, may be reckoned as a 5th vol. Of his hymns, that which, in the form of varying centes, is most widely known is, "Another six days' work is done" (p. 71, E.). Others in C. U. include:—

C. U. include:—

1. Granleus Redeemar, haw divins. Holy Commission. Appeared in his Hys. for the Lord's Supper, 1st dec. 1691. (Works, 1732, li. p. 98.) Usually abbreviated, 2. Innortal graiss be given. Holy Communion, Pub. in his Hys. for The Lord's Supper, 1st ed., 1697. (Works, 1732, li. p. 97.) From this "We'll praise our risen Lord," is taken.

3. Jenus, O word divinally sweet. Redemption through Jesus. Pub. in Hys. for the Lord's Supper, 3rd ed. 1709, No. 41. (Works, 1732, li. p. 147.) In tail in Spurgeou's O. O. H. Bk., 1665, and others.

4. Lord, et Thy Table I behold. Holy Communion. This hymn is not in Stennett's Works. It appeared in Rippon's Bap. Sci., 1767, with his name profined, and was probably supplied to Dr. Rippon by Dr. S. Stennett, J. Stennett's grandson. From it "With humble faith and trembling heart," is taken.

5. My bleased Saviaum, is Thy lave? Self-Consecration to God. Appeared in his Hys. for the Lord's Supper, 1697, No. 22. (Works, 1732, ii. p. 181.) Usually abbreviated.

6. The great Rodeemer we adore. Pub. in his Hys. for Supplier, 1712. (Works, 1732, ii. p. 168.) 7. Whene'er one sinner turns to God. Holy Baptism. Pub. in his Hys. for Supplier, 1712. (Works, 1732, ii. p. 168.)

Pub. in his Hys. for Suptiem, 1712, No. 12. (Works, 1732, ii. p. 168.) From this "See how the willing converts trace" is taken. It begins with st. iil.

Several of his hymns additional to these are given in the older collections, but have passed out of use. We may add that the Joseph Stennett, the subject of this article, had a son, Joseph Stennett, D.D., who also became an eminent Baptist minister, and was the father of Samuel Stennett, p.o. noticed [W. R. S.]

Stennett, Samuel, D.D., grendson of Joseph Stennett, named above, and s, of the Rev. Joseph Stennett, D.D., was b., most probably in 1727, at Exeter, where his father waat that time a Baptist minister. When quite young he removed to London, his father knying become pastor of the Baptist Church in Little Wild Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields. In 1748, Samuel Stennett became assistant to his father in the ministry, and in 1758 succeeded bim in the pastoral office at Little Wild Street. From that time until his death, on Aug. 24, 1795, he held a very prominent position among the Dissenting ministers of London. He was much respected by some of the statesmen of the time, and used his influence with them in support of the principles of religious freedom. The celebrated John Howard was a member of his congregation and an attached friend. In 1763, the University of Aberdeen conferred on him the degree of p.p. Dr. S. Stennett's prose publications consist of volumes of sermons, and pamphlets on Raptism and on Nonconformist Disabilities. He wrote one or two short poems, and contributed 38 hymns to the collection of his friend, Dr. Rippon (1787), His poetical genius was not of the highest order, and his best hymns have neither the originality nor the vigour of some of his grandfather's. The following, however, are pleasing in sentiment and expression, and are in C. U., more especially in Baptist congregations:-

1, And have I, Christ, no love for Thea? Love for Christ desired.

2, And will the offended God again? The Body the Temple of the H. Ghost.

As on the Cross the Saviour hung. The Thief on the Cross

4. Behold the leprous Jew. The healing of the Leper.

rom this, "Lord, see what floods of sorrow rise," st. From this, lji., is takén.

With tears of anguish I lament. Lent.
 Yonder amazing sight I see. Good Friday.

All these hymns, with others by Stennett, were given in Rippon's Bapt. Sel., 1787, a few having previously appeared in A Coll. o Hys. for the use of Christians of all Denominations, London. Printed for the Booksellers, 1782; and No. 16, in the 1778 Supplement to the 3rd ed. of the Bristol Bap. Sel. of Ash and Evans. The whole of Stennett's poctical pieces and hymns were included in vol. ii. of his Works, together with a Memoir, by W. J. [W, K, S.] Jones. 4 vols., 1824.

Stephano primo martyri. [St. Stephen.] This hymn is found in various forms. Mone, No. 1156, gives first what he professes to consider to be the original text, and which he says is very probably by St. Ambrose himself. But for this text (which begins "Stephano coronac martyrum") he gives no source, and seems to derive it from his own imagination. His second form begins "Stephani corova martyria." from this second form are rejected the additions (including st. i., which is not found in other uss.), from a Benedictine us. cited through Cassander, then we have what is probably the original text, beginning "Stephano primo martyri." This last form is found in two MSS., circa 1150, in the Bodleian (Liturg. Misc., 202, f. 144; Liturg. Misc., 297, f. 306); in a Ma of the 12th cent. in the British Museum (Add. 18301, f. 112); in the St. Gali Ms., No. 413, of the 11th cent.; in a Ms. of the 10th cent. at Munich, &c. Also in the Ambrosian Breviary, 1539. In the Ambrosian Breviary, 1880, there is a recast beginning "Duci cruento martyrum"; and this text is in Dr. Neale's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1851, p. 79. All these forms and variations are given by Daniel, i., No. 82, and iv. pp. 89, 90, 854-857.

Of these forms of the text two have been rendered into English, viz.:--

i. Stephano primo martyri.

1. To Stephen, first of martyrs, raise. By J. D. Chambers, in his Lauda Syon, 1857, p. 87.

2. Blood is on the martyr's palm. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy, and Tune Bk., 1852-55. This was altered by Canon W. Cooke, and given in the Cooke and Denton Hymnul, 1853, No. 30, as, "Jesu, Lord, Thy praise we sing."

li. Duci cruento martyrum.

To Thee, O Christ, our hymn we raise. By E. A. Dayman, in the Sarum Hymned, 1868, No. 46. This is rather a paraphrase than a tr. of the [J. J.] hyma.

Stephenson, Thomas Bowman, D.D., LL.D., s. of the Rev. John Stephenson, was b. at Newcastle on Dec. 22, 1839, and educated at Woolcy College, Sheffield, subsequently graduating at the University of London. In 1860 he entered the Wesleyan Ministry, and has since laboured in Norwich, Manchester, Bolton, and London. The great work of his life has been the establishment and maintenance of The Children's Home at Victoria Park, London, and its branches at Bolton, Birmingham, and the Isle of Man, and in Canada. Dr. Stephenson has written for Magazines and Reviews, and pub. a small work on Sisterhoods, and a Memorial Sketch of the late James Barlow. He has written several hymns, of which the following are most widely known :--- Fading like a lifetime ends another day. Evening. Written circa 1873, and pab. in The Helh. S. S. H. Bh., 1879, No. 487, in 2 st. of 8 l.

Steuerlein, Johannes, s. of Caspar Steuerlein, or Steurlein, first Lutheran pastor at Schmalkalden, was b. at Schmalkalden on July 5, 1546. After completing his course as a student of law, he was, about 1580, appointed Town-clerk of Wasungen (between Schmalkaiden and Meiningen), and then, in 1589, secretary in chancery (Kanzlei-Secretar), at Meiningen, to the Henneberg administration. He was also Notery Public, and, about 1604, Mayor at Meiningen. He d. at Meiningen, May 5, 1613. (Kock, ii. 248, 267, 353; C. von Winterfeld's Evang. Kirchengesang, 1843, i. p. 413; K. Goedeke's Grundries, vol. ii., 1886, pp. 51, 171, 208, 573; preface to his Gründliche und warhaftige Beschreibung, Jena, 1611, &c.)

Steuerlein was growned as a poet by the Emperor Rudolph II., and was the author of a metrical version of Jeans Strach (Ecclesiasticus), pub. at Frankfurt am Main in 1881. He was an excellent musician, and pub. Main in 1881. He was an excellent musician, and pub, various works containing melodies and four-part settings by blusself. His most important work is his Sieben and Zucanzigh news getalliche Cesenge, mit wer Stimmen componieret, Arc., Erfurt, 1888 [Göttingen Library and Library of the Institut für Kirchenmusik at Broslau]. Of these 27 hymnes 3 are marked as by Steueriein, 4 as by Cyrtacus Schneegaes, 2 as by Ersamus Alber, and 1 as by Martin Luther. The other 17 have no names of anthors affixed.

One of these 17 hymns is:

One of these 1/ hymns 18:

Bas alto Jahr vergangen ist, Wir danken dir, Harr Jean Christ, New Year. In 1888 as above, No. 1, in 6 st. of 4 l., reprinted in full in the Blätter für Hymnelogie, 1883, p. 185. This is the earliest appearance after as is yet known, of the hymn in this six stanza form. A shorter form, in 8 lines (st. 1, il. of the 1888), is in Clemen Stephani's Schöner dauserlesser deutscher Paalm, und anderer künstlicher Moteten und geittlichen Lieder XX., Ro., Nürnberg, 1883, p. 142. It is thus very doubtful if Sleavelein is the original author this hymn, and, as already pointed out, be did not Library), and reprinted in the Matter, 1837, p. 142. It is thus very doubtful if Steasviein is the original author of this hymn, and, as already pointed out, he did not claim it as his own in 1838. It is quite possible that at. Iti.—vi. may be by Steasviein, though they have been frequently ascribed to Jakob Tapp (q.v.), and indeed in M. Prätorius's Meste Stonce, pt. vi., Wolfenbuttel, 1809, No. I fin Index marked as "Autor Textus Jacobi Tappi", the whole hymn is ascribed to Tapp. Wacker-nagel, v. p. 135, not having seen the 1899, gives the six stanza form as an anonymous hymn, quoting it from the Eigleben G. B., 1888. The text in the Uns. L. S., 1851, No. 63, is nearly that of 1898. Steuerlein is probably the author of the melody sometimes set to this hymn, but which, in 1888, was set to N. Herman's hymn. "Gott Vater der du deine Sonn" (see Dr. J. Zam's Praiser und Harfe, 1886, No. 44). Tr. as:

1. With this New Year we raise new Bongs. In Inll by J. C. Jacobi, in his Praisodia Germanica, 1722, p. 10 (1732, p. 9, sitered). Included in Hawker's Coll., 1827, No. 62, stridged, and beginning, "With this New Year we raise our songs."

2. The old year new hath passed away. This is a good and full it. by Miss Winkworth, as No. 171 in her C. B. for England. 1853, repeated in the Ohio Luka. Byl., 1880.

Myl., 1890.
3. The old year new is past and gene. In full by

J. M. Sloan, as No. 187 in Wilson's Service of Proise, Another tr. is: "Another year is gone, and now."
By Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 54. [J. M.]

[J. M.] Stevens, John, was b. at Aldwinkle, in Northamptonshire, June 8th, 1776. About the age of sixteen he went to London, where he joined the Baptist church in Grafton Street, whose paster was at that time R. Burnham (p. 196, il.). He began to preach, and in 1797 became minister at Oundle, soon afterwards at St. Neots, and then at Boston. In 1811, after the death of Burnham, be was invited to succeed him at Grafton Street. Stevens had popular gifts as a preacher: the place became too small, and ultimately a new chapel was built in Meard's Court, Soho, where he continued to minister until be d., Oct. 6, 1847. Stevens was a High Calvinist in theology, and an ardent polemic. He wrote several controversial works, the most famous of which was entitled, A Scriptural Display of the Triune God & the early existence of Jenu' human soul, Lond. 1812. From the theory advocated in this book he was called a Preexisterian. In 1809 he pub. A New Sol. of Hymns, including also several Original hymns never before offered to the Public. This, and the 2nd ed., 1812, contained 465 hymns. The 5th ed., 1825, had an Appendix of 102 hymns, and the 12th, 1868, one of 365 hymns. The ed. of Stevens's hymnsch new in C. I. was added in 1821. book now in C. U. was edited, in 1881, by J. S. Anderson. It is described on the titlepage as "enlarged and improved," and contains 970 hymns. Of these a few are by Mr. Anderson, and 34 by Stevens. Many of the hymna of Stevens embody High Calvinistic views, strongly expressed; some, however, on the Lord's Supper would be accepted by most Christians. Of his hymns the following are in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872.

1. Christ has a chosen Church (1809). Election.
2. Eternal election preserves me secure (1809). Elec-

3. Grace is Jebovah's sovereign will (1808). Election.
4. Long as I live I'll sing the Lamb (1808). Proise of Lette.

Stevenson, George John, M.A., was b. at Chesterfield, Derbyshire, July 7, 1818. In early life he was connected with the printing and bookselling business, and continued therein until 1844, when he entered St. John's College, Battersea, where he was trained for an organizing Mustership under the National Society. In 1846 a Reformatory School was established in the Philanthropic Institute, Southwark, for the benefit of the better conducted criminals from the convict prisons, and Mr. Stevenson was the first Master. This school is now represented by the Farm School at Red Hill, Reignte. In 1848, he was appointed Head Master of the endowed parochial school at Lambeth, but resigned in 1855, and established himself in Paternoster Row us a bookseller and publisher, where he continued the business until a few years before his death, on Aug. 16, 1888. His interest in education was shown in his publication of the periodicals, School and Teacher, The Pupil Teacher, and The English Journal of Education. In 1861 he purchased the Wesleyan Times newspaper, and for six years he bore the editorial and financial responsibility. Mr. Stevenson's literary work began with contributions to the Sheffield Patriot, in 1889, and the Norfolk News, 1841. Having joined the Methodist Society in 1831, his interest in Methodism, and specially in Methodist history and literature, became very keen, and has had much to do with his literary life. His publications outside of hymnology are numerous, and in-clude biographical works mainly on the Wesley Family, and Methodist Worthies; historical works on City Road Chapel; the Young Men's Christian Association; Methodism in Chesterfield; Methodism in Hackney; and historical articles on Methodism in several Eucyclopedias, &c.; Essays on Education; and smaller works on other subjects. His hymnological work began with his biographical sketches of hymn-writers and notices of hymns in the Wesleyan Times, which were subsequently largely used by Dr. Rogers in his Lyra Britannica, and Miller in his Singers and Songs of the Church. His Methodist Hymn Book and its Associations was pub. in 1869; and in an enlarged form as The Methodist Hymn Book Rhustrated with Biography, Incident, and Anecdote, in 1883. The first of these dealt with the writers and hymns of the Wes. H. Bk. of 1780-1831; and the second with the The latter revised ed. of the same, 1875. is the most complete account of Methodist hymnody extant, and is indispensable to every lover of the Wesleyan Hymn-book. Outside of Methodist hymnody, Mr. Stevenson's acquaintance with English and American hymnology was very superficial; and of the vast stores of Greek, Latin, German, French, Italian. Scandinavian, and other treasures he knew almost nothing. His reputation entirely rests upon his researches as a student of and authority upon Methodist Hymnody. In that [J. J.] department he had no equal.

Still with Thee, O my God. J. D. Burns. [Evening.] Included in his little work, The Evening Hymn, 1857, No. 23, in 6 st. of 4 l. It passed into the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858; and, subsequently, into other collections. In the Cong. Hyl., 1887, it begins "With Thee, my Lord, my God." Although mainly included, because of its beautiful simplicity, in children's hymn books, it is yet better adapted for congregational use. [J, J,]

Some of Mr. Stone's finer hymns, including "Round the Sacred City gather;" "The Church's One Foundation;" "Weary of earth and laden with my sin," and others, are annotated under their respective first lines. These, together with the 48 above, are given in his Hymns, 1886, some of the trs. being recast. Additional tre, from Thomas a Kempis are also noted under his name.

Another hymn, inseparably associated with Mr. Stone's name is:-

49. Lord of our Soul's salvation. National Thanksgicing. This was ordered by command of Her Majesty the Queen to be stug at the Thanksgiving for the Recovery of H. R. H. The Prince of Wales, on Feb. 27, 1872. In its original form it was in 7 st. of 8 l., and was thus sung throughout the country. Owing however "to the necessary restrictions as to time in the Catherita service, a selection of four verses only—the 1st, a combination of the 2nd and 4th, the 4th, and the 7th—was adapted by the author for use in St. Paul's." The full text was included in The Knight of Intercession, 1872.

Mr. Stone's hymns vary considerably in metre and subject, and thus present a pleasing variety not always found in the compositions of popular hymn-writers. His best hymns are well designed and clearly expressed. tone is essentially dogmetic and hopeful. The absence of rich poetic thought and graceful fancy is more than atound for by a masterly condensation of Scripture facts and of Church teaching given tersely and with great vigour. His changes and antitheses are frequently abrupt, in many instances too much so for congregational purposes, and his vocabulary is somewhat limited. His rhythm, except where broken either by long or by compound words, is rarely at fault, and his rhyme is usually perfect. A few of his hymns are plaintive and pathetic, as the tender "Weary of earth and laden with my sin"; others are richly musical, as "Lord of the harvest! it is right and meet": but the greater part are strongly outspoken utterances of a manly faith, where dogma, prayer, and praise are interwoven with much skill. Usually the key-note of his song is Hope. He d. Nov. 19, 1900.

Stowe, Harriet, née Beecher, daughter of the Rev. Lyman Beecher, D.D., was born at Litchfield, Connecticut, June 15, 1812. In 1932, her father having been appointed President of Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, Ohio, she removed there with the family; and in 1833 was married to the Rev. Calvin E. Stowe, D.D., Professor of Languages and Biblical Literature in the same Institution. Her high reputation as an author is well known; and the immense success of Uncle Tom's Cabin, which first appeared in The National Era, in 1852, ensures her a lasting reputation. She has also written other well-known works. Three of her hymns appeared in the Plymouth Collection, edited by her brother, H. W. Beecher, in 1855;-1. Still, still with Thee, when purple morning breaketh.

Restling in God.

2. That mystic word of Thine, O sovereign Lord.

Abiding in Jesus.

3. When winds are raging o'er the upper ocean. Peace.

Another Lymn by Mrs. Stowe, "How beautiful, said he of old " (The Gospel Ministy), is No. 291 in the Boston Hys. of the Spirit, 1864. Her poetical pieces were pub in her Religious Poems, 1867; and from a poem therein the hymn, "Knocking, knocking, who is there?" (Christ knocking), in Sankey's Sac. Songs and Solos is adapted. [F. Of Canon Stowell's hymns the most popular are Nos. 2, 3, 20 and 44. As a writer for children he was very successful. All the foregoing hymns are in the 15th ed, of his Sel. edited by his son, Manchester, 1877; and in Hymns. By the late Rev. Canon Stowell, M.A. Manchester, 1868. [J. J.]

Stowell, Thomas Alfred, M.A., 8 Canon H. Stowell, was b. at Salford, July 15, 1837. He was Bridgmen Exhibitioner at Queen's College, Oxford, 1853, and n.s. in 1857, he became Curate of Bolton, Diocese of Ripon, 1857-60; Incumbent of St. Stephen's, Bowling, Bradford, 1860-65; and then Rector of Christ Church, Salford, in succession to his father, 1865. He was also appointed Rural Dean of Salford in 1876, and Hop. Canon in Manchester Cathedral in 1879. Canon T. A. Stowell has pub. The Church Catechism simply and clearly explained, 1882, various Sermons, papers on Education, &c. Most of his hymns were written for the Anniversary Sermons of Christ Church S. Schools, Salford (nearly 2000 children), and include :-

1. Blessed Saviour, hear us when we cry. 1872.

2. Happy were those mothers. 1863.
3. In God's boly dwelling. 1873.
4. Lord, on Thy day, within Thy boly dwelling. 1871.
5. Lord, Thy children lowly bending. 1875.
6. My Saviour, be thou near me, When I lie down, &c.

7. O Jesus (Savious) we have promised Henceforth to be Thine Own. Confirmation, 1877. 8. Sweet day of rest which God has given. Sanday.

While the sun is shining. Work. 1865.

These 9 hymns are in Canon T. A. Stowell's 1877 ed. of his father's Sel., and of these Nos. 3 and 9 are the most popular. He is also the author of :-- Strauss, Victor Friedrich von, was b. at Bückeburg, Schaumburg-Lippe, Sept. 18, 1809. He became a student of law at the Universities of Erlangen, Bonn, and Göttingen. In 1832 he married Albertine von Torney, daughter of a Hannoverian landed proprietor; and, in 1872, at the request of her relations, added her name to his own (Stranse und Torney), having been previously, in 1851, raised to the Austrian nobility. Having entered the diplomatic service of Schaumburg-Lippe, in 1832, he was appointed, in 1840, Archivrath at Bückeburg; and attended the Frankfurt Diet as Geheimrath, in 1850, as the accredited representative of Schaumburg-Lippe. He was also, from 1853 to 1866, the regular representative of Schaumburg-Lippe, at the North German Diet. Thereafter he retired on a pension, and went at Easter, 1869, to Erlangen, where he wrote a tr. of the works of the Chinese philosopher Lad-tec, with a commentary (pub. 1870). In honours in 1855. Taking Holy Orders in 1872 he removed to Dresden, where he still [1889] resides. In 1889 he pub. the 1st vol. 1 of a work on Altagyptische Götterglaube (Koch vii. 270; O. Kraus, 1879, p. 525, &c.).

Both as a secular and as a secred poet, Strauss holds Both as a secular and as a sacred poet, Strauss holds high rank among his contemporaries in Germany; not so much for popularity, as for wenith of ideas, breadth of culture, beauty of form, and clear, simple expression. The impulse which he received to the study of theology and to hymn-writing, was mainly through the impression of manifest matirness left upon him by reading D. F. Strause's Lebes-Jesu, 1835. This led him to study the New Testament for himself; and to find, in the old fospel, the satisfaction of the needs of his spirit. His hymns, while, like most modern hymns, in the main sublective, often catch the rior and noble simplicity of subjective, often catch the ring and noble simplicity of the older objective classical hymns, but are more finished in form. Many have passed into recent German hymnbooks. They appeared principally in Knapp's Caristoterpe, 1844-49; and in like own—(1) Gatichte, Bleiched, 1841; (2) Lieder aux der Gemeine für das Caristiches in 64; the hymns in No. 3 are in the second part, which is separately paged, and entitled Gaistliches in Gatichten und Liedern. The work entitled Bat Kirchenjahr im Russe, Heidelberg, 1849, in a series of postical meditations, and not of hymns properly so called. subjective, often catch the ring and noble simplicity of Mrs. Streatfeild has also a "Litany for a Children's Service," in A Little Garland of the Saints, 1877. Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5 and 7 of the above hymns are in Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bh., 1881, and they all rank with the sweetest and most tender of modern verses for children. Some have been arranged as songs, and have been set to music by M. S. Skeffington. Mrs. Streatfeild's prose works include Meditations on the Seven Last Words, 1874; and Words of [J, J,]Comfort, 1875.

Strong, Nathan, D.D., a leading Congregational divine of his day, was b. at Coventry, Connecticut, Oct. 16, 1748, and educated at Yale College, where he graduated in 1769, He first studied law, but soon turned his attention to the ministry. In January 1774 he became the Pastor of the First Congregational Church at Hartford, and remained there to his death in 1816. In 1796 he won much repute through his essay on The Doctrine of Eternal Misery consistent with the Infinite Benevalence of God. He founded The Connecticut Evangelical Magazine, in 1800, and also took a prominent part in establishing the Connecticut Home Mission Society in 1801. His degree of D.D. was conferred by the University of Princeton. His services to American hymnology, as the principal editor of the Hartford Sel. [American Hymnody, p. 67, ii.], 1799, have been very great. As in that Sel. the author's names were not given, most of his numerous contributions thereto cannot be identified. Six of these hymns, however, are reproduced in Nettleton's Village Hymns, 1824, with his name attached thereto. These are:-

1. Alas, alas, how blind I've been. The Sinner awakened. 2. Blest Lord, behold the guilty acorn. Prayer for opposers to Revicals.

3. Long have I walked this dreary road. The Sinner's Complaint. 4. Sinner, behold, I've heard thy grouns. The Payadoning God.

5. Smote by the law, I'm justly slain. The Law, and the Gorpei.

6. The summer harvest spreads the fields. The Great

In addition to these the following are from the Hartford Set., 1799 (but not in the Village Hys.) They are the best known and most widely used of Strong's hymns:-

In addition to these original bymns Dr. Stryker has several translations from the German which are in C. U., and are noted in this Dictionary (see Index of Authors and Translators), One of his hymns, No. 513, "Now I lay me down to sloop" (Child's Evening hymn), in Church Song, 1889 (dated 1884), begins with a down to sloop " (Child's Evening hymn), in Church Song, 1889 (dated 1884), begins with a stanza by another hand. In the same work there are also several of his tunes. Dr. Stryker's hymns are massive and rugged, full of dogmatism and fire, but they lack unity and purity of rhythm. In some instances words stand for thoughts, and exchanations for ideas.

Nevertheless a few will live. (See also American Hymnody in Various.) [J, J,]

Sturm, Christoph Christian, s. of Johann Jakob Sturm, lawyer (Imperial notary) at Augsburg, was b. at Augsburg, Jan. 25. 1740. He studied at the universities of Jens. (M.A. 1761) and Halle. He was then appointed, in 1762, as one of the masters in the Pacdagogium at Halle, and in 1765 became Conrector of the school at Sorau, in Brandenburg. In 1767 he returned to Halle as fourth pastor of the Market Church, and became third paster in the same year. He left Halle in 1769, to become second paster of the church of the Holy Spirit at Magdeburg, where he passed the happicst part of his professional life, and where he wrote most of his devotional works. Finally, in 1778, he was appointed chief paster of St. Peter's Church at Hamburg. Here he at first lived happily, beloved and respected as a preacher and author, until, in 1782, his views on the Salvation of the Heathen led J. M. Goetze, chief pastor of St. Katherine's Church in Hamburg, to accuse him of Rationalism, &c. The resulting controversy embittered and shortened Sturm's life. In his latter years he suffered from a weak chest; and in the night of Aug. 10-11, 1786, he was seized with an attack of spitting of blood, from which he never recovered. He d. at Hamburg, on Aug. 26, 1786 (Koch, vi., 357; Bode, p. 158, &c.).

Sturm is best known to English readers by his devotional works, which were for some time very popular, viz., his "Conferences with God in the Morning Hours" (Unterhaltsmapes wit God! in der Morgentinsten, &c., Halle, 1768), and his "Reflections on the Wocks of God" Halls, 1763, and his "Reflections on the Works of God".

Betrachtenges über die Werks Guttes, &c., Halls, 1772—
76). He was one of the most prolific hymn-writers of the Rationalistic period, being the author of more than 400 hymns. His productions are less dreary than most of the time, and are not without expressures, devoutness, and lyrk power; but they are often too rhetorical, and not sufficiently simple. They found great favour with the compilers of hymn-books from 1762 to 1845, but not many compilers of hymn-books from 1763 to 1845, but not many of them are retained in later collections. His specialities were hymns on the Works of God in Nature, and hymns for Children. Long lists of bis works are given by Koch and Bode. We need only note the following —(1) Ber Christ an Sonntage, Haile & Leipzig, 1784-85 [Hamburg Library]. This was a weekly paper, which contained 93 hynns by Sturm. (2) Samptany gentiticher Cessings silver die Werke Gottes in der Natur, Halle, 1775 [Brit. Mas. and Wernlgerode Library]. Over 40 of the bynns are originals by Sturm. (3) Vollständiges Gesangbuch für Kinder, Halle, 1777 [Hamburg Library]. More than 30 hynns evem to have been written by Sturm for this work. (4) Preligitationité, Hamburg, 1779-88 [Brit. Mus.]. An eight years course of sermon outlines on the Gospels for Studays and Festivale; with over 30 bynns by Sturm, some being recasts from other authors. (5) y Sturm, some being recests from other authors, to teder und Kirckengenunge, Hamburg, 1980 (Royal ibrary, Hannover). With 5d hymns, numy being re-Library, Hannover]. With 6d lymns, many belog re-casts of his earlier lymns, made by himself or by J. S. Diterich. (6) lecangbuch für Gartenfreunde und Lieb-haber der Natur. Hamburg, 1781 [Hamburg Library]. More than 60 of the hymns seem to have been written by Sturm for this work.

The hymns by Sturm which have passed into English are:-

Sturm, Julius Carl Reinhold, was b. July 21; 1816, at Köstritz, in the principality of Reuss (younger line). After being a student of theology at Jena, from 1837 to 1841, he was for two years a private tutor at Heilbronn on the Neckar, and then, for a year, at Friesen, in Saxony. In 1845 he became tutor to Prince Heinrich xiv. of Reuss; and after the Prince's confirmation, in 1848, acted as tutor to him for three years more at the Gymnasium in Meiningen. He was then appointed pastor at Güschitz, near Schleiz, in the end of 1850; and pastor at Küstritz, in 1858, where he still (1889) lives as Kirchenrath and Court preacher (Koch, vii. 284; ms. from the author, &c.). Sturm is one of the most important of modern German sacred poets. Among his works of this nature may be mentioned:—

(1) Gedichte, Leipzig, 1850; 3rd ed., 1862. (2) Fromme Lieder, Leipzig, 1862; ith ed., 1867. (3) Zwoi Rosen, oder das hohe Lied der Liebe, Leipzig, 1854; a version of Canticles. (4) New Fromme Lieder was Gedichte, Leipzig, 1868; 2nd ed., 1870. (5) Israel's Weg sur Herrlichkeit, Briangen, 1856; 2nd ed., as Israelitische Lieder, Halle, 1867. (6) Ion der Pilperfahrt, Halle, 1868. (7) Gott grünse dich. Religiois Gedichte, Leipzig, 1878. (8) Aufwärtz, Leipzig, 1881. (9) Ich bas auf Gott. Newsreigibte Gedichte, Bremen, 1883. (10) Palme und Krone, Bremen, 1888.

From these works a large number of pieces have passed into recent collections of German sacred poetry, and a few into recent German official hymn-books. A considerable number have been tr. by Lady John Manners, the Rev. J. Kelly, and others, but none have passed into English hymn-books. [J. M.]

Sturm, Leonhard, became Master in the Latin School, and Cantor (preceptor) in St.

George's Church, at Nördlingen, Bavaria, in 1635. In the church registers at Nördlingen he is described as "of Fehlburg in the Pfalz" (? Pfalzburg in Alsace). He d. at Nördlingen, Sept. 11, 1682, aged 74 (Blätter für Hymnologie, 1886, p. 62; 1888, pp. 17-19, 178, &c.).

Eight hymns, by Sturm, are included in the Appen to the New-vermehrte christiche Seele harpf, Onolishach (Ansbach), 1664-65 [Heidsberg University Library]; and eleven in the Nordlingucher Kirchen-Schall, off Geistliche Seelen-Lust, Nürdlingen, 1676 [Wernigerods and eleven in the Nordingricker Kirchen-Schall, oder Geistlicke Schelen-List, Nürdlingen, 1676 [Wernigerode Library]. Only one of these has passed into English, vir., Ich fahr dahin mit Freuten. For the Dying. The first stanza is taken almost verbatim from a piece by Martin Rinkart (see p. 963, il.). Shurm added to this seven stanzas, which carry out Rinkart's idea without borrowing almost anything more from blus. The initial letters of Sturm's eight stanzas form the acrostic Jucobina; this being the name of his second wife, Maria Jacobina, to whom he was married in 1648, and who d. 1657. Possibly the hymn was written at some period when she was dangerously ill. Sturm's hymn appeared in the Nordingen G. B., 1674, as above (it is not in the Ausbach G. B., 1664-55); and in the Risitor, 1898, p. 18, is reprinted, in full, from the Nordingen G. B. of 1658. It is also in the Leich-Geong-Sücklein, Rothenburg on the Taubet, 1679, p. 108, in the Wirtsunberg C. B., 1741, No. 231, and others. Tr. 88:

when she was dangerously III. Sturm's hymn appeared in the Nordingen G. B., 1676, as above (it is not in the Anabach G. H., 1664-55); and in the Bistler, 1898, p. 18, is reprinted, in full, from the Nordingen G. B. of 1684. It is also in the Leich-Geomy-Böchlein, Rothenburg on the Tauber, 1679, p. 108, in the Würtsunberg G. B., 1741, No. 321, and others. Pr. 39:—
I journey farth rejoining. This is a somewhat free varion of st. 1.-iii., vi., vii., by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 71 (1884, p. 71). Repeated, in full, in Bp. Ryle's Coli., 1860; the Christian H. Bk., Cheinneti, 1865, &c.; and, omitting st. iii., in Kennedy, 1865. The trs. of st. iii., vi., vii., beginning, "Why thus so andly weeping," are No. 63, in J. H. Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865.

Sublime numen, ter potens, ter maximum. [Holy Trinity.] Appeared in the Sens Brev., 1726, and the Paris Brev., 1736, as the hymn at Matins for Trinity Sunday. Text in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

1. God most high, thrice mighty God. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. and Tune Bh., 1852-55, Trinity, No. 8; and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870, No. 90.

Other trs. are:—
1. All-good, all-great, all-mighty, Three in One.
2. Williams, in the British May. Sep. 1839, and his Mys.
2. Godbead sublimest. Thrice great, &c. J. D.

Summae Deus elementiae. St. ii., Da dexteram surgentibus. [Trinity Sunday.] This cento was added to the Roman Breviary at the revision of 1568, and is found at p. 433 of the ed. pub. at Rome in 1570, as the hymn at Matins on Trinity Sunday. It consists of st. i. of the hymn noted below, and of st. ii. of the hymn, "Aeterna coeli glorin," with an added doxology. At the revision of 1028-32 st. i. was rewritten, beginning, "Summae Parens elementiae" (st. ii. "Da dexteram surgentibus"), and this form is repeated in the editions of this revision, and in Newman's Hymni Eccleriae, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

Summae Deus clementiae Mundique factor machinae. [Saturday.] Morning.] This has been ascribed to St. Ambrose, as by Hincmar, in his " De una et non triua Deitate, 857, but it is not one of the twelve hymns received as genuine by the Benedictine editors of St. Ambrose, nor is it included by Biraghi as one of the Inni sinceri e Carmi di Sant' Ambrogio, 1862. Daniel, i. No. 24, gives both this text and that of the Boman Brev., 1632 (see below), and at iv. p. 38, cites it as in a Rheinau ms. of the 10th cent., ranking it among the hymns of the 7th or 8th cent. Mone, i. p. 372, cites it as in a ms. of the 8th cent. at Trior. Among the British Museum MBS. it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 24b; Jul. A. vi. f. 30; Harl. 2961, f. 224b): in a Mozarabio Hymnarium of the 11th cent. (Add. 30851, f. 175); a Mozarabic Breviary of the 11th cent. (Add. 30848, f. 80), &c. It is in a ms. of the 11th cent, at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 237); in three was of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, Nos. 887, 413, 414; and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Sur-tees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. us. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 9). In the Roman Breviary, 1632, it begins "Summae Parens clementise, Mundi regis qui machi-nam." The original form is included in the older Roman (Venice, 1478), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries, for Saturday at Matins. This text is also to be found in Mackernagel, i. No. 5; Hymnarium Sarisb. 1851, p. 57; G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Moissiacensis, 1888, from a Ms. of the 10th cent., &c. The revised text of the Roman Breviary, 1632, is given in the recent eds. of that revision, in Daniel, i. No. 24, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865.

See also note on the previous hymn. [J. M.] Both forms of this hymn have been rendered. into English, viz. :-

There is also a cento from Faber:—"O Lord along Thy chosen read." J. Austin gives, in his Devotions in the Antient Way of Offices, 1668, two centes from this poem:—"Jesu, Who from Thy Father's throne:" and (2)
"Jest, Whose grace inspires Thy priests."
These, sr. by Austin, are reprinted in Griffith, Farran, & Co.'s Ancient and Modern Library (Giles Fletcher's Christ's Victory and Tri-umph), 1898. From the cente "Jesu, Whose grace inspires Thy priests," as given in Hickes's reprint of Austin's Devotions, 1687 (see p. 97, i.), J. Wesley took st. ii.-vii., and gave them, with slight alterations, in his Charles-Town Ps. and Hys., 1736-37, and again in the Wesley Hys. & Suc. Poems, 1739, as:—"Jeau, behold the wise from far" (Wesley, P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i., p. 116). This is repeated in Lord Selborne's Bk. of Praise, 1862. [J. J.]

Summer ended, harvest o'er. G. Phillimore. [Harvest.] Contributed to the Parish H. Bk., 1863, No. 180, in 8 st. of 4 l.; of which lines 3, 4, of st. i., and the whole of st. iii., were by the late Bp. Woodford, of Ely. The hymn was repeated in the Sarum Hyl., 1868, the Hymnary, 1872, the 1875 ed. of the Parish H. Bk., and others.

Summers, Thomas Osmond, D.D., LL.D., son of James Summers, was b. near Corfe Castle, Dorsetshire, England, Oct. 11, 1812. Proceeding to the United States in after years, he was admitted to the Baltimore Conference in 1835. From 1840 to 1843 he was a missionary in Texas; removing to Tuscaloosa, Alabama, 1844, and Charleston, South Carolina, 1848. From 1845 he acted as Secretary of the Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was also Book Editor. Subsequently he was Professor of Theology and Pastor of Vanderbilt University. He was Chairman of the Hymn Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and edited the Songe of Zion, 1851, and the Wesleyan Peatter, 1855. He d. in May 1882. Dr. Summers is the author of several original works, and of the following hymns:-

 The morning bright, With rosy light. Morning.
 The daylight faces, The evening shades. Evening. Concerning these Morning and Evening hymns Dr. Summers says :-

"My first child was born in January, 1845. When she was about a year old, as I was descending the Tombighee River in a little steamer, I wrote a morning Hymn for her on the back of a letter, transcribed it when I reached Mobile, and sent it to her at Tuscaicosa. That was the origin of 'The morning bright.' When editing the Southern Christian Adoccate, I put it without name in the Child's Department. It was copied into the raligious papers generally, and into books. My second child was born in 1847, and for her I wrote 'The daylight fades,' as far as I can recollect, about 1849. . . . Both of these children for whom they were written are now singing ballelujahs with the angels," (Stevenson's Hys. for Ch. & Home, Biog. Index, 1873.)

These hymns have attained to great popularity as children's hymns, and are found in numerous collections both at home and in Great Britain. The 3rd I. of st. i. of the Morning Hymn should read: "Has waked me up from sleep," and not as found in many collections. [F. M. B.]

Summi Parentis Filio. [Lent. Sacred Heart of Jesus.] Probably of the 18th cent. In the Roman Breviary, Lisbon, 1786, pars estiv. p. 461, it is the hymn at Lauds in the office of the Most Sacred Heart of our Lord Jesus Christ. Text also in Biggs's annotated H. A. & M., 1867. (See note on Quicunque cartum quaeritis.) Tr. as :-

To Christ, the Prince of Peace. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholics, 1849, p. 123, and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 69. It is in a great many modern hymn-books, usually unaltered, but sometimes with the changes in the text made in H. A. & M.

Another tr. ls :-

To Jesus, Son of God most high. J. Wallacs. [J. M.] Summi pusillus grex Patris. Guillaume de la Brunetiere [Common of a Just Man. Saints' Days.] Appeared in the Paris Brev., 1890 and 1786. Also in the Norbonne Brev., 1709, as the hymn for first and second Vespers, in the Common of Just Persons. It is also in later French Breviaries; in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Printtive Church, 1837, No. 99: and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:—

Be not aired, ye little fook. I. Williams, as the first of a series of tro. from the Paris Brev., contributed by him to the British Magazine. This appeared in Dec. 1833. It was republished in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 314, and in the 1863 ed. of the Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 201.

Other tra. are :-

1. Thou little flock whose Shepherd is above. J. Chandler. 1837.

2. To God, your mightlest Father, dear. J. D. Chambers. 1866.

3. Little flock, be not atraid. D. T. Morgan. 1890.

Summi Regis potentia. [St. Andrew.] This is found in a ms. of the early part of the 14th cent. in the Bodieian (Ashmele, 1528, 1236b), as a hymn in 6 st. and a dexelogy for the "Translation of St. Andrew." Mr. Chambers erroneously quotes the first line as "Rex Jesu potentissime." Mr. Chambers's tr. "O King Suprenne, of boundless might," appeared in the 1863 Appendix to the H. Noted, No. 168, and again in his Landa Syon, Pt. ii. 1866.

Supernae matris gaudia. Adam of St. Victor. [All Scients.] This sequence is, as Dr. Neale justly remarks, "one of the loveliest that Adam ever wrote." In it, contrary to the usual practice, the church triumphant is spoken of as the mother, the church militant as the daughter. Gautier, in bis ed. 1881 of Adam's Ocurres postiques, gives it at p. 200 from a Gradual of St. Victor before 1239 (Bibl. Nat., Paris, No. 14452), a Paris Gradual of the 13th cent, (B. N. No. 15615), and says it is also in a 12th cent. Antiphonary now in the Library at Chaumont, and formerly of the monastery of Montierender. It is also in a collection of sequences written circa 1199 (Calig. A. xiv. f. 85), and a French Missai of the end of the 13th cent. (Add. 23985, f. 489 b), both in the British Museum; and in a Ms. of the latter half of the 13th cent. in the Bodleian (Rawlinson, C., 510, f. 25 b). Among Missals it is found in an early 14th cent. Paris in the British Museum (Add. 16905, f. 232 b), the Saintee of 1491, and others. The printed text is also in Mone, No. 623; Daniel, v. p. 109; Kehrein, No. 338; and D.S. Wrangham's Lit. Poetry of Adam of St. Victor, 1881, vol. iii. p. 170. [J. M.]

Supreme quales, Arbiter. Jean Baptists & Santeill [Festival of an Apostle]. This is given in the Oluniae Brev., 1686, p. ii.; his Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1689, p. 190 (ed. 1698, p. 236); the Paris Brev., 1736; and later French Breve. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 80, with the omission of a stanza; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and L. C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as:—

- 1. Diapeser Suprems, And Judge of the earth. I. Williams, pub., together with the Latin, in the British Magazine, June 1836 (vol. iz. p. 627), and again in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Broviary, 1839, p. 271. It has passed, either in its full form or abbreviated, into a large number of hymn-books. Of the altered texts the most popular is that in H. A. & M., 1861-75. For congregational purposes this is one of the most successful of the translator's efforts.
 - 2. What feeble instruments, C Lord. B. J.

 2. Celestial Monarch, strong to quell. J. D. Cham-
- bers. 1857. [J. J.]

Surrexit Christus hodie. [Easter.] This hymn, or rather Easter Carol, exists in a great variety of forms. For the determination of the original text we have three ass. of the 14th cent., viz., a Munich Ms. of the 14th cent., cited by Mone, No. 148; a Prag ms. of the 14th cent. cited by G. M. Dreves in his Cantiones Bohemicae, No. 183, and an Engelberg Ms. of 1372 cited by Bäumker, i. p. 517. From these we obtain the following :-

- " Surrexit Christes hodia Humano pre solamine.
- " Mulleres o tremule In Galllacam pergite.
- "Mortem qui passus corpore Miserrimo pro homine.
- " Discipulis hoc dicite, Quod surrexit rex glorine.
- " Mulleres at tumpium Dona ferunt aromatum.
- Paschali pieno gaudio Benedicarius Domino.
- " Album videntes angelum Annunciantem gaudlum.
- "Laudetur sancta Trinitas. Deo dicamus gratias."

Of these eight stanzas I-4 and 6 are found in all three MSS. 5 in the Engelberg and Prag MSS., 7 in the Engelberg and Munich, 8 in the Engelberg and Prag. The text above is from the Munich MS.; the only variations of im-portance in the Prag MS. being ii. I. i, passus pridie and vii. l. i., Ergo cam dulci melodo.

Dreves gives two additional at. which are probably of Bohemian origin, and are not found in the later printed books, viz. ;-

"Ubique praecedet suce. Quos dilexit, discipulos. " Sit benedictus bodie, Qui nos redemit san-guine."

viz. a Hohenfurt Ms. circa 1410 (st. i.-x.); and the Gradual of Jistebnicz circa 1420 (st. i.-iii. v.-vii., ix., x.). The later stanzas are apparently all interpolations. Those given by Daniel i., No. 890, are :-

"Quarentes Jesum Domi- "Petro debine et eseteris Apparoit apostolis. Out est Salvator homihubb.

"Gioria tibi Domine Qui surrexisti a morte." Of these st. 12 is found in the second part of Leisentritt's G. B. (R. C.), 1567; st. 11 in the Dilingen G. B. (R. C.), 1589; and st. 13 in the Speier G. B. (R. C.) printed at Cologne, 1599. The order of stanzas in Daniel's text is 1-3, 11, 4-6, 12, 7, 13, 8; and he gives st. 7, 1, 1, as "In hoc paschali gaudio." The Dilingen G. B., 1589, gives four additional st., which need not here be printed. Wackernagel, i., Nos. 276-280, gives various forms of the text. See also Hoffmann von Fallersleben ed., 1861, Nos. 201-204. Also see under Jesus Christ is risen to-day, p. 696, ii. The trs. from the Latin include:

1. To-day the Viotor o'er His focs. By J. M. Nesle, in his Mediseval Hys., 1851.
2. Le? Obrist is risen this day, and brings. J. W. Hewett, in his Ferses by a Country Curate, 1859; and Lyra Messianica, 1884.

It has also often been translated into Ger-One of these tra has passed into English, viz. :-

Erstanden ist der heilige Christ. This is found in a great variety of forms. That which is 5r. is given by Wackernagel, ii. p. 737, from a broadsheet printed at Nirmberg, 1544, and is No. 135 in the Une. L. S., 1851. Normberg, 1846, and is No. 188 in the Cas. L. It is based on at. i-vili., xi. of the Latin. This form probably originally formed part of an Easter play. Tr. as: "Christ our Lord is risen to-day," in Lyra Pavidica, 1708, p. 12, [J. M.]

Sutton, Amos, D.D., was b. at Sevencaks, Kent, on Jan. 2I, 1802. Though educated with a view to secular business, when about the age of 21 he felt constrained to offer himself for service in connection with the General Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, He was sent to India; and in the year 1825 was stationed at Cuttack, in the province of Orissa, where, with intervals during which he visited England and America, he laboured most usefully until his death on Aug. 17, 1854. He was gifted as a translator; and compiled an Uriya Dictionary, besides translating a number of English books into that language. He also prepared the first Uriya Hymn Book, 179 of the hymns being of his own composition. [Missions, Foreign.] The degree of D.D. was conferred on him by the College of Waterville, U.S.A. On his visit to England in 1833 he composed a farewell hymn to the tune of "Auld lang syne"—
"Hall sweetest, dearest tie that binds." (Parting.) It soon became very popular, and is still in C. U. Another hymn written about the same time, entitled "The Macedonian Cry," [W. R. 8.] is now almost forgotten.

Sutton, Henry Septimus, b. at Nottingham, 1825, the son of a bookseller and newspaper proprietor. He was articled to a surgeon, but abandoned medicine for literature. Mr. He quotes them from two Mss. now at Prag. | Sutton's connection with newspaper work has been life-long, and for upwards of thirty years he has been editor of the Alliance News. His first volume of Poems was issued from the Review office, Nottingham, 1848. This included Clifton Grove Garland, a long descriptive and parrative poem. In 1854 appeared Quinquinergia, a prose work of mystical religion, the author being a member of the New Church. To this was appended a series of poems, entitled Rose's Diary, written in memory of an early friend of the author's, who died in 1850. In successive cantos the changing moods and aspirations of personal religion are depicted, with occasionally a touch of quaintness in the language and imagery which reminds one of the best of the devout poets of the seventeenth century. An enlarged and revised edition of the Poems was published by David M. Main, Glasgow, 1886. In Martineau's Hymns, 1873, appear the following five pieces, selected from Rose's Diary:—

1. I have a little trembling light, which still. The favord light. Canto I. and the last two stauzas of Canto III.

Cante III.

3. O Father! I have sinned: I have done. Under the assess of sin. Canto XI.

3. Put not on me, O Lord, this work divine. Self-eitstruct and self-energeder. Canto VIII.

4. The day with light its genial self engine. The outer and sinner sunskine. Canto VI.

6. What mean these slow returns of love; these days. The sleep that longs for waking. Canto X. [V. D. D.]

Swain, Joseph, was b. at Birmingham in 1761, and after being apprenticed to an engraver, removed to London. After a time he became a decided Christian, and being of an emotional poetic temperament, began to give expression to his new thoughts and feelings in hymns. In 1783 he was baptized by the Rev. Dr. Rippou, and in 1791 became minister of a Baptist congregation in East Street, Walworth. After a short but popular and very useful ministry, he d. April 16, 1796. Swain pub. the following:-

(1) A Collection of Poems on Several Occasions, Lon. 1781; (2) Referration, a Foem in fice Books, Lon. 1781; (3) Reperimental Resays on Divine Subjects, Lon. 1791; (4) Walworth Hymns, by J. Swain, Paster of the Raphit Church Resting there, Lon. 1792, 129 hymns; with a Supplement, 1794, 192 hymns; (5) A Pocket Companion and Directory, Lon. 1794.

In addition to a limited number of Swain's hymns, annotated under their respective first lines, the following, from his Walsoorth Hys., 1792, and the 2nd ed., 1796, are also in C. U.

From his Redemption, a Poem in Five Books, 1791, the following hymns are also in 28. O Thou in whose presence my soul takes delight. In Affliction.

Ye daughters of Zion, declare, have you seen ! Comfort in Aftiction.

Of these hymns the most widely known are Nos. 1, 5, 6, and 20. We may add that several of Swain's hymne appeared in The Theological Miscellany, 1784-1789. [W. B. S.]

Swain, Leonard, p.p., was b. at Concord, New Haven, Feb. 26, 1821, and educated at Dartmouth College and Andover. In 1847 he became a Congregational minister at Nashua, New Haven; and in 1852 of Central Church, Providence, Ricole Island. He d. July 14. 1869. His hymns, "My soul, it is thy God" (The Christian Race), and "My soul, weigh not thy life" (The Good Fight of Faith), appeared anonymously in The Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, and their authorship has only recently been determined. The second hymn is the more widely used of the two. [F. M. B.]

Swaine, Edward, b. at London, Sep. 21. 1795. He was for about 40 years a deacon of Craven Chapel (Congregational) under the pastorate of Dr. Leifchild and others; one of the directors of the London Missionary Society, and founder and chairman of the Pastors' Insurance Aid Society. He d. April 22, 1862. (Miller's Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 441.) Mr. Swaine wrote several tructs, and also printed for private circulation The Hand of God, A Fragment, with Poems, Hymne, and Versions of Psalms, 1839. His hymne, "Hail! blessed communion of love" (Holy Communion), and "Lord Jesus, let Thy watchful care" (For Emigrants), were written in 1855 for the New Cong. H. Bis., and given therein, 1859. See also, "O how the thought that we shall know" (p. 887, L). [J, J.]

Swedenborgian Hymnody. The hymnody of the religious body known as The New Church signified by the Jerusalem in the Reve-lation, or briefly, The New Church, commenced with the Rev. Joseph Prond. Proud was the son of a General Baptist minister, and was b. at Beaconsfield, March 22, 1745. Entering the Baptist ministry, he became pastor successively at Knipton, Fleet, and Norwich. In 1788 his religious views underwent a change, and the following year he openly adopted those of Emanuel Swedenborg. He at once broke out into song; and it is told us by his biographer, the Rev. E. Madeley, that his first volume of more than 300 original hymns occupied him only some three months in its production. This volume appeared in 1790; again, with additions, in 1791; and, again in 1798. The title of the 3rd ed. is:-

Hypnus and Spiritual Songs for the Use of the Lord's New Church, signified by the New Jeruzalem in the Revolution, by Joseph Proud, N. H. E. London, Printed by E. Hodeon, and sold at the New Jeruzalem Temple in Grass Street, Batton Gardes, 1793.

This volume contained 359 original hymns of decided merit. After leaving Norwich Proud went to Birmingham, where he suffered great misfortunes. He passed on to Manchester, but in a few mouths again returned to Birmingham. Subsequently Lendon was the scene of his labours for a time. During his residence there he printed a small book of Hymns and Songs for Children in 1810. Three years later he returned to Birmingham, where he d. on Aug. 3, 1826. The esteem in which his hymns are held by The New Church is seen in their authorised hymn-book of 1830, in which of a total of 750 hymns, 164 are by him.

2. The next hymn-writer of note in The New Church was the Rev. Manoah Sibly (b. 1737), whose Hymns and Spiritual Songs appeared, in 1802, from the press of the same printer as Proud's book; but also "sold by the Author, No. 35, Goswell Street." It contained 222 original hymns and 14 doxologies. The literary merits of this volume are below that of Proud's work. The hymns are solid and practical, and are more akin to those by Beddome and Doddridge than to those either by Wesley or Watts. Sibly died in 1840.

3. The first Swedenborgian minister in

3. The first Swedenborgian minister in Manchester was the Rev. William Cowherd, a man of high scientific attainments, who had been for some time a clergyman in the Church of England. Shortly after joining the Swedenborgian body he established a cause in Manchester, which he called "The Bible Christian Church." The members of this society held the doctrine of Swedenborg in a modified form, with the additional obligations of total abstinence from animal food and intoxicating liquors. (See Various.) For their use Cowherd compiled Select Hymns for Christian Worship. By the Rev. V. Cowherd, Manchester. Printed by Sowler & Russell, 1800. The 3rd ed., pub. at Stourport in 1810, contained 218 hymns; the 5th ed., printed at Salford in 1813, was increased to 221 hymns, a few of which were by Cowherd, but the greater part were taken from Proud, Sibly, Watts, Wesley, and others.

4. In 1813, the Rev. Robert Hindmarsh, then minister of the Swedenborgian course-

4. In 1813, the Rev. Robert Hindmarsh, then minister of the Swedenborgian congregation in Salford, compiled a small volume of hymns, chiefly selected from Proud and Sibly, which he published as :—

Hymns for the Use of the New Church, signified by The New Jerusalem in the Apocalopse. Curriully corrected, and arranged under proper heads. Kanchester. F. Davig, 1813. It contained life bymns and 8 doxologies.

5. Next, in order of date, came a small

Original Hymns, for Family and Congregational Worship, chicky designed for the uso of those who acknowledge the Supreme Divinity of the Great Redeemer. By F. M. Modson. Manchester, J. Gleave, 1819.

This volume contains only 45 hymns and 2 doxologies. Whilst some of these hymns do not rise above mediocrity, others have certainly higher literary and poetic merit than those of either Proud or Sibly, and one or two are not unworthy of C. Wesley. Of his hymns 6 are in the authorised hymn-hook of 1880. Of his life little is known. He was at one time with the Rev. Richard Jones, as joint minister of the Manchester and Radcliffe Swedenborgian Societies. Afterwards he preached in St. George's Chapel, near Oldham Road, Manchester; and, at a later period, he settled in Hutl.

6. In 1822 a new departure was made. The General Conference of The New Church, in session, respectively, at Manchester and London, authorised a Committee to prepare a hymnal for general use, "adapted not only for public devotion, but also for private meditation and instruction, and which should form a useful and agreeable companion on every day of the week, at home as well as in the public assemblies of the Church." The outcome of this was the first authorised hymnbook of the Swedenborgians. It was pub. as:—

Hymnsfor the Use of the Church signified by the New Jerusalem in the Revolution, Ch. azi. 1, 2. Compiled by order of the General Conference. London, T. Goyder & H. C. Bodson, 1824.

This collection contains 600 hymns and 7 doxologies. While borrowing largely from Proud and Sibly, it is at ones catholic and collectic. The alterations made in the texts of the hymns of Watts, Wesley, and others, to adapt them to the creed of The New Church are less frequent and distasteful than in many similar cases. A singular feature in this collection is the large number of Unitarian hymns found therein, when doctrinal differences would have suggested the necessity for their exclusion. This hymn-book was mainly compiled by the Rev. William Mason (b. 1790, d. 1863) of whose original hymns about 60 are included therein. Mason subsequently published a separate collection as:—

Hymns of Spiritual Experience, eminently calculated to promote the growth of individual piety. Chiefly selected, with a few originals. Lendon, 1840.

This volume contains 166 hymns, of which 23 are by Mason. We may add that Mason possessed musical gifts of no mean order, and that he composed a number of hymn tunes.

7. In 1872 an authorised Supplement to the 1824 collection was published as:—

Supplement of Hymns for the New Church, Compiled by Order of the General Conference. London, James Speirs, 1872.

In this Supplement translations of Latin and German hymns are found for the first time in Swedenborgian hymnody. This blending of the old and the new was hardly successful, and the hymns were more didactic than lyrical. The general result was felt to be most unsatisfactory, and led to the appointment of a Committee, to whom was entrusted the compilation of a new hymnal. Of this committee the Rev. Jonathan Bayley, D.D., was the chairman, and the Rev. John Presland, the secretary. The result of their labours was published in 1880, as:—

Hymns for the Use of The New Church signified by the New Ierusalem in the Revolution. Compiled by Order of the General Conference of The New Church in Great Britain. London: James Speirs, 1880.

This collection contains 750 hymns, and deserves the attention of compilers of hymnals. To it Dr. Bayley contributed 5 hymns, the Rev. Joseph Deans 9, and "J. C." 3. From this collection a selection for mission services was published in 1883.

was published in 1883.

8. The Swedenborgians have been amongst the foremost in recognizing the value of hymns and music in Sunday schools. As already noted, Proud's Hymns and Songs for Children (1810) were published contemporaneously with the early efforts in the same direction by Anne and Jane Taylor. In 1835, an excellent little collection was published by the Rev. E.

Madeley, which went through several editions. In 1868 it was greatly enlarged and revised from a poetical and musical point of view, by Mr. John Bragg, of Birmingham. To this revised edition, 78 modern hymns were added, in 1887, by "The New Church Sunday School Union." In its complete form it contains 336 hymns. [See Various.]

Sweet as the Shepherd's tuneful reed. W. Shirley. [Spring.] Pub. in The Coll. of Hys. sung in the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapels, Bath, W. Gye, N. D. (circa 1778). No. 36, in 4 st. of 6 l. In common with all the hymns in that Coll. it is anonymous; but in the Life of the Countess, 1832, vol. ii. p. 291, it is definitely stated to be by W. Shirloy. The most widely known form of this hymn begins with st. ii., "Peace, troubled sonl, whose plaintive moan." It is composed of st. ii., iii., and appeared in the American Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, No. 130. It is repeated in saveral American hymn-books. [J. J.]

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright. G. Herbert, [Virtue. Spring.] Appeared in his posthumous work, The Temple, 1633, in 4 st. of 4 l., as a poem on "Virtue." (The Chandos Classics, ed. 1887, p. 140.) It is a beautiful poen, but is unsulted as a hymn for congregational use, although found in a few collections for that purpose. I. Walton's reference to it in his Compleat Angler, 1653, is very tender and just:—""PISCATOR.—And now, scholar! my direction for thy fishing is ended with this shower, for it has done raining. And now look about you, and see how pleasantly that meadow looks; nay, and the earth smells as sweetly too. Come, let me tell you what holy Herbert says of such days and showers as these; and then we will thank God that we enjoy them. "Sweet day, so cool," J. J.]

Sweet feast of love divine. Sir E. Denny. [Holy Communion.] Pub. in his Sci. of Hymns, 1839, No. 295; and again in his Hys. & Poems, 1848, p. 96 (3rd ed., 1870, p. 66), in 6 st. of 41. It is in C. U. in its original form; but much more extensively as "Blest feast of love divine." In America especially, this is the popular form of the hymn. [J. J.]

Sweet is the last, the parting ray. [Saturday Evening.] This hymn is usually attributed to Charles Jenkins, for some years a Congregational Minister in Portland, Maine, but upon insufficient evidence. D. C. Colsworthy (p. 142, ii.) says that it was repeated by Mr. Jenkins in a sermon, and the congregation supposed it to have been his own. No other claimant having appeared it is often attributed to him on this uncertain ground. J. Curtiz, in his Union Coll., Lond., 1827, No. 519, gives it as from the "American Monthly Mag." [F. M. B.]

Sweet is the scene when virtue dies. Anna L. Barbauld, nee Aikin. [Death and Barial.] Appeared in the Leisure Hour Improved, pub. at Ironbridge, 1809, in 5 st. of 41, and again in The Works of Anna Lactitic Barbauld, with Memoir, 1825, p. 315, with the heading "The Death of the Virtuous."

In the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, it begins, "Sweet is the scene when Christians die." On the death of Mr. Barbauld, Nov. 11, 1808, Mrs. Barbauld wrote the "Dirge," beginning "Pure Spirit! O where art thou now" (p. 941, ii.). From the date of the publication of "Sweet is the scene when virtue dies" (1809), it is probable that it was the outcome of the same sad event. The popular form of this hymn is, " How blest the righteous when he dies," which appeared in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 190. In the Sheffield Iris for January 13, 1824, James Montgomery gave an account of the Rev. T. Cotterill's funcral, in which he says concerning "How blest the righteous when he dies," which was sung on that occasion :-

"This hymn was not the composition of the deceased, as has been mistakently reported. It was extracted with some modifications from a longer copy of verses which speared in the Iris many years ago, the author of which we understood to be Mr. Robert Barnard, formerly of this town, and one of the Society of Friends. The opening of the original lines being 'Sweet is the scene when virtue diss,' was altered [to 'How blest, &c.,''] for an obvious reason when the stanzas were adopted for Mr. Cotterill's hymn-book. We can further eay that he was pecultarly delighted with them. The following exquisite postical stanza follows the first as they stand in the hymn-book:—

"'So fades a surumer cloud analy."

" So fades a summer cloud away.
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er,
So gently shuts the eya of day,
So dies a wave along the shore."

From this extract it is evident that the alterations in the text of the poem to adapt it for congregational purposes were made by Montgomery for Cotterill. Montgomery's guess as to the authorship of the original was disproved by the publication of Mrs. Barbauid's Works in 1825 with the poem therein. This form of the hymn is in C. U. in all English-speaking countries. [J. J.]

Sweet is the work, my God, my [snd] King. I. Watts. [Ps. zeii. or Sunday.] 1st pub. in his Ps. of David, &c., 1719, p. 237, in 7 st. of ± 1., and headed, "A Psalm for the Lord's Day." In G. Whitefield's Hys. for Social Worship, &c., 1753, No. 20, st. i., ii., iii., vii. were given as "Sweet is the work, O God, our King." This was repeated in M. Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760, No. 105. A. M. Toplady gave the same stanzas in his Ps. & Hys., 1776, as No. 34, but with other changes in some stanzas, and the opening line as "Sweet is the work, my God and King." This reading is found in some modern collections in the Church of England. Other arrangements of the text are given in hymn-books in G. Britain and America. It is a good and popular hymn.

Sweet Saviour, bless us ere we go. F. W. Faber. [Evening.] 1st pub. in his Josus and Mary, first edition, 1849; and again in his Hymns, 1862, p. 251, in 7 st. of 6 l. It was written in 1849 for use as an Evening Hymn at the London Roman Catholic Oratory, of which Dr. Faber was then the Superior. In most hymnals the last stanga is usually omitted, or if retained, the second line, "Mary and Philip, near us be," is altered. In some collections it opens with "Dear Saviour, bless us ere we go," or "O Saviour, bless," &o.; and in others, "O Father, bless us ere we go." In the Wellinton College H. Bk., 1860-80, it begins with et. ii., "The day is done; its honra have run." and the text is somewhat altered. The use of this hymn in its various forms is extensive.

Sweet the time, exceeding sweet. G. Burder. [Christian Fellowship.] Pub. in the Gospel Magazine, April, 1779, p. 220, in 5 st, of 4 l., headed "An Hymn for Christian Company," and signed "A. R." In 1784 it was given, unaltered, in G. Burder's Coll. of Hys., as No. 66, and in the Index it is signed "G. Burder." In Cotterill's Set., 1810, No. 46, it is altered to "Great the joy, the union sweet." This form is in extensive use. In the 8th ed. of his Sel. Cotterill altered it again to "Great the joy when Christians meet." This, also, is well known. In one or two collections it is also altered to "Gladsome 'tis when Christians meet.'

Sweetest Saviour, if my soul. Herbert. [Redeemed in Christ.] First pub. in his Temple, &c., 1633, in 4 st. of 8 l., as a "Dialogue" between the Soul and the Saviour. (Works in the Chandos Classics, 1887, p. 168.) In 1739, it was rewritten by J. Wesley, and pub. in Hys. & Sac. Poems, as "Saviour, if Thy precious love," in 4 st. of 8 l., and again in P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 107. In 1875, st. i.-iii, were given in the revised edition of the Wes. H. Bl., No. 21*, where it replaced "Ye that pass by behold the Man." In this form it is suited for private reading, or as the words of an anthem, but does not make a good hymn for congregational use. [J. J.] hymn for congregational use.

Sweetly sangthe angels, In the clear. calm night. J. Julian. [Christmas.] Written Nov. 7, 1873, and first printed in the Preston Herald [Lancashire], Nov. 11th, 1873, in an article entitled "Table Talk." It was in 5 st. of 8 l., with a refrain of 4 l. In 1874 it was included in the Hymn Book pub. for the use of St. Mary's Church Sunday School, Preston; in Dec. 1874, in an article on "Christmas Hymns" in the Churchman's Shilling Magazine; again in Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884, and other collections. It is also set as a part song by A. J. Caldicett, Mus. B., No. 147 of The Choral Handbook, Lond., J. Curwen. [J. J.]

Swift, James Frederick, s. of Joseph Swift, was b. at Manchester, Dec. 28, 1847. In 1851 he removed with his parents to Liverpool, where he was educated at the Commercial School of Liverpool College. At an early age he displayed a talent for music, and performed in public as a pinnist as carly as 1859. In 1863 he was appointed organist at the Cranmer Wesleyan Chapel. Subsequently he was organist at St. Andrew's Church, Liverpool, for 10 years, and then, from 1886 to the present, at St. Bride's, in the same city. He has composed a large number of songs and instrumental pieces under the nom-de-plume of "Godfrey Marks." He has also written a number of hymns and sacred odes, for which he has composed music. From these eight were pub. with the music, in 1875, as Hys. for Home and Sacred Festivals (London, Novello). From this small collection the following hymns have come into O, U, :-

1. When evening shadows gather, Scening, Written in 1873, and first sung in public at the Wesleyan Choral Festival in St. George's Hall, Liverpool, in 1874. It was included in his Hys. for Hone, &c., No. 8, in 5 at. of 31. It then passed into Thing's Coll., 1882, the Prim. Meth. Hymnos. 1887, and others. It is a very beautiful Evening Hymn,

2. Have you heard the sweet, sweet story ! Life of Jesus. Written in 1874, and pub. in his Hys. for Home, &c., 1872, No. 4, in 5 st. of 8 l., with a chorns of

2. Whan life is gay with sunshine. Refuge in Trouble. Written in 1874, and pub. in his Hys. for Home, do., 1875, No. 7, in 3 st. of 8 l.

Of these hymns Nos. 2, 3 have been largely used at Sunday School Anniversaries and similar gathorings.

Sylvestris, in the Gospel Magazine, 1776, &c., i.e. Jehoida Brewer.

Symington, Andrew James, s. of R. B. Symington, of Paisley, Scotland, was b. there on July 27, 1825. After receiving his education at the Grammar School of his native town he entered into business with his father and brother. During the intervals of business he has devoted himself to literature, His publications include Harebell Chimes, 1848; Genevieve, and Other Poems, 1851; The Beautiful in Nature, Art, and Life, 1857; Pen and Pencil Sketches of Farie and Iceland, 1862; The Reasonableness of Faith; with Appendix containing Hys. and Verses of Consolation and Hope, 1870; Hints to our Boys, 1884; Poems, and other works. He also edited Blackie's series of Men of Light and Lear sing, and has contributed to a large number of magazines in Great Britain and the United States. Several of his hymns have been pub. by J. and R. Parlane, Paialey, as leaflets, and include:-

Hear Jesus say to Thee. Jesus the Way, the Truth, and the Life. (1869.)
 Hennmed in, armed hosts behind, on either side, forced at the Red Sea.

3. How much ow'st thou? Debtors to Hercy. (Sep.

1870.)
6. Hong for rest. Rest derived. (1869.)
6. Lord in love and mercy save us. Horning or

Resuling. (1869.)

5. Near Jordan's ford. Christ's Invitation.

7. Tossing through the starless night. Rest. (1869.)

8. When angulah overwhelms the heart. Comfort.

Of these hymns No. 5 is the best known and most widely used. Taken as a whole Mr. Symington's hymns are better suited for private devotion than for public worship.

Bynesius, a native of Cyrene, b. circa 375. His descent was illustrious. His pedigree extended through seventeen centuries, and in the words of Gibbon, "could not be equalted in the history of mankind." He became distinguished for his elequence and philosophy, and as a statesman and patriot he took a noble stand. When the Goths were threatening his country he went to the court of Arcadius, and for three years tried to rouse it to the dangers that were coming on the empire. But Gibbon says, "The court of Arcadina indulged the real, applauded the eloquence, and neglected the advice of Synesius." In 410 he was made Bishop of Ptolemais, but much against his will. Hed. in 430. Synesius's opinions have been variously estimated. That he was imbued with the Neo-Platonic philosophy there is no doubt [see Greek Mymnedy, v. and viii.], but that he was a semi-Christian, as alleged by Mosheim [see Eccl. History, Loud., ed. 1845, vol. i., pp. 310, 439 and Notes], or that he denied the dectrine of the Resurrection as stated directly by Gibbon [see Decline and Fall, vol. ii.], and indirectly by Bingham [see Christian Antiq., Lond., 1843, i. pp. 464-5] is very doubtful. Mr. Chatfield, who has translated his Odes in his Songe and Hymns of the Greek Christian Poets, 1876, contends that his tenth Ode "Lord Jesus, think on me," proves that he was not a semi-Christian, and that he held the doctrine of the Resurrection. The first is clear: but the second is open to doubt. He certainly prays to the Redeemer: but there is nothing in the hymn to show that he looked upon the Rodcemer as being clothed in His risen body. This tenth ode is the only Ods of Synesius, which has come into C. U. The original Odes are found in the Anth. Graeca Carm. Christ., 1871, p. 2 seq., and Mr. Chat-field's trs. in his Songs, &c., 1876. [Greek Hymnody, § v. and Mrsso Xprovit.] Synesius's Odes have also been tr. by Alan Stevenson, and included in his The Ten Hymns of Synesius, Bishop of Tyreore, A.D. 410 in English Veres. And some Occasional Pieces by Alan Stevenson, LL.B. Printed for Private Circulation, 1865. [See Various.] [J, J.]

Syriac Hymnody. No history of Christian hymnody cau be deemed complete which fails to give some account of the hymns and other metrical compositions of the ancient churches of Syria, Upper Mesopotamia, and Western Persia. At an early period in Christian history a fountain of sacred poetry and song burst forth in that region, from which for a time there flowed a stream of marvellous fulness; but soon the stream dwindled, and its flow became intermittent, until, by the middle of the 14th century, like a river lost in desert sands, it had almost, if not entirely, disappeared.

Syriac, the language of these ancient hymns and poems, is akin to the Hebrew, and resembles, if it is not identical with, the language spoken by the common people of Palestine in the time of our Lord. It is still used in religious services, like Latin in the Church of Bome; but, as a vernacular in Syria proper, it has long been supplanted by the Arabic; whilst, in Mesopotamia and Persia, the Christian inhabitants, though they call themselves Suräye, or Syriaus, speak a dialect termed Sartih, which differs almost as much from the old Syriac as Italian from Latin.

i. History of Syriac Hymnody.

Concerning the hymns sung in Syria in the first century after Christ we have no certain information, although tradition connects the origin of responsive singing in Christian worship with Ignatius, the martyred bishop of Anticch. But the commencement of Syrine hymnody, so far as known to us, was on this wise.

1, Bar-Deisan, or Bardesaues, b. A.D. 154, at Edessa, now called Urfah, in Upper Mesopotamin, was a religious teacher, who sought to combine with the truths of Christianity certain speculations of the Gnostics. Being a man of poetic genius, he was led to compose hymns or songs, which, set to music and sung by his disciples, became very popular. His son, Harmonius, followed in his steps, composing additional hymns and introducing new metres. But of their compositions only a few fragments have been preserved.

2. Simeon har Sabbas. The next Syrian hymnwriter of whom we have any mention was of the orthodox school, Simeos bar Subbaz, bishop of Seleucia, who suffered martyrdom A.D. 296. Two hymns composed by him are said to be found in the sacred offices of the Chaldeaus.

3. Ephraem Syras. But about A.D. 307 there was born at Nisibis, in northern Mesopotamia, Ephraem or Ephraim Syrus, the most celebrated father of the Syrian church, and famous not only as a theologian, but also as a poet and hymn-writer. Historians differ as to the details of his life; but it is known that having first been a pupil of James, bishop of Nisibis, he finished his education at Edessa, where for the rest of his days he chiefly resided. He visited Basil at Caesarea, in Cappadocis, and by him he was ordsined to the office of deacon. He d. at Edessa in June, 373. Ephraim was a most voluminous writer of commentaries, expository sermons, hymna, and metrical homilies. Metrical Homilies, first mentioned in connection with him, are a peculiar kind of composition, to which we know of nothing in other literature exactly similar. The tracts in verse explanatory of the Christian religion, circulated by mis-sionaries in some parts of India, and which the people like to read aloud in a kind of chant, seem most nearly to resemble them. The Homilies are in metre, i.e. in lines containing a fixed number of syllables, e.g. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, or 12, as the case may be, and are divided into strophes, but differ from hymns proper in their greater length and more decidedly didactic character. We might have supposed them to be poems intended to be simply read, but from notes found on Mss. giving directions as to the singing, it appears as though, at least in some cases, they were actually sung or chanted in connection with religious services. In neither the hymns nor the homilies is any regard paid to accent or quantity, and only occasionally does there seem to have been an attempt at rhyme or assonance. The main characteristics of Syriac poetry are (1) a certain elevation of style, (2) division of the verses into strophes, and (3) the use of lines or verses with a fixed number of syllables. The following are illustrations of some of the metres, taken from the writings of Ephraim, the translations being those of Dr. H. Burgess, in his Select Metrical Hymns and Homilies of Ephraem Syrus, translated, with Notes, &c., London, 1853, a work to which reference may be made for further examples.

a. Tetrasyllabic Metrz. Two verses from an "Evening Hymn."

" In all evenings
To Thee let there be praise."

 Pentasyllabic Metre. Two verses from the 11th Homily concerning the "Paradise of Eden."

كَنْ وَالْمُوْمِ Mhiynéy'd bûsêmê

" The air of Paradise Is a fountain of sweetness."

c. Heptasyllabic Metre, which has traditionally borne the name of Ephraim, as being his favourite metre. Two verses from a hymn on "Death."

مَا خَلَ الْمُعَمِّنُهُ عَمَّا حَمَّا صَعَالًا مُعَالِمُ مَنْ أَوْرًا صَّعَالًا

Môr lố th kimnáy hám bishê Daudith bốk Mốt áudó bíy.

"Lord! appoint me not a place with the wicked: Do Thou, Lord, confess me, who have confessed Thee."

The poetical compositions of Ephraim, so far as printed, are as follows, beginning with his works edited by J. S. Assemani and P. Benedict at Rome, in 1732-46.

(1) Eleven metrical expositions, in heptasyllabic and pentasyllabic metre, of portions of Scripture treating of the Creation, the Temptation of Eve, the Mission of Jonah, and the Repentance of the Ninevites. The last-named is the most striking and the longest, extending to between 500 and 600 strophes of four lines each. Of the use made of it by the Nestorian Christians of the present day we shall seated in the second part of this article.

to between 500 and 500 strophes of four limes each. Of the use made of it by the Nestorian Christians of the present day we shall speak in the second part of this article.

(2) Thirteen discourses on Christ's Nativity. These are of various lengths and metres. The last is tetra-syllabic, in strophes of 16 lines, every tenth line being a doxology. The life of Christ is supposed by the author to have extended to thirty years, and to every one of these years is assigned an act of praise from some created beings, beginning with the cheruban in the first year, and ending with the dead who have lived again, the living who have repented, and heaven and earth, which through Christ have been reconciled, in the thirtieth. Dr. Burgess says that this is "a very beautiful production, tastefully conceived, and carried out in a masterly manule."

(3) Next come 56 homilies in various metres against "False Doctrines," especially those of Bardeaues, Marcion, and the Manichaeana. In the first bomily of this collection Ephraim pays the following compliment to the skill and influence of Bardesaues, whilst he condemns his use of them:—

"In the resorts of Bardssanes There are songs and melodies, For seeing that young persons Loved sweet music, By the harmony of his songs He corrupted their minds."

Elsewhere we are told that it was Ephraim's desire to counteract the influence of these heretical songs, as well as to provide a substitute for profane games and noisy dances, which prompted him to compose hymns and train choirs. "in the midst of whom he stood, a splittual harper, and arranged for them different kinds of songs, and taught them the variation of chants, until the whole city was gathered to him and the party of the adversary was put to shame."

was put to ename."

(4) Then follow 87 homilies against Rationalists or Free Thinkers, in which occur many enrious and highly artificial arrangements of metres. These are succeeded by a collection of seven homilies, forming a separate work, entitled "The Pearl, concerning Fatth." This poem is tetrasyllabic, in strophes of 10 lines each, and highly fanciful in conception, though not without parages of beauty. A pearl is treated as suggestive of truths connected with Christ and His Church.

(5) Four other controversit homilies follow, after

(5) Four other controversial homilies follow, after which come the pieces which may be more properly called Hymns, Of these perhaps the most interesting are at relating to "Death," apparently intended to be used in funeral services. One of these we may cite, up. Dr. Burgess's translation, both as short and as a good experiment of Enhancing style.

specimen of Ephraim's style.
On the Death of Children.

"How bitter is the grief
For the death of childhood;
How grievous the separation
Of the infant from its mother:
Train it up, Lord, in Thy dwelling!

"This day afflicts
The fathers through their sons;
And death now breaks
The staff of their old age:—
Lord! may they lean on Thee!

"This day removes
The beloved one from its mother,
And cuts off the arm
Which would have been her stay:—
In Thee, Lord, may she trust!

"This day separates
The little one from its parent,
And leaves her in the wilderness
Of suffering and grief:
Do Thou, Lord, comfort her i

"This day divides
The sucking-child from the breast;
And the mother walls and grieves
Because her intercourse with it bath periahed:
May she see it in the Kingdom!

"O happy infancy
Which hath gained Paradise!
Alas: for old age
Which still remains in sorrow!—
Lord! be Thou its helper!"

(6) This collection of Funeral Hymns is followed by four short pieces on the "Freedom of the Will," the strophes of which have an alphabetical arrangement, like the Hebrew of the 119th Featin. The succeeding 16 homilies have the general title "Exhortations to Peniteence," but among them are found morning and evening hymns, and a byum for the Lord's day.

(7) Next come twelve homilies on the "Paradles of Eden," and finally, in the Roman edition of Elphralm's works. It discourses on various subjects in pentasyllable.

(?) Next come twelve homilies on the "Paradise of Rien," and finally, in the Roman edition of Ephralm's works, 18 discourses on various subjects in pentasyllable and hexasyllable metres. But in 1856, Bick-B pub. "Carmina Nisbena," 21 in number, the subject of most of them being the struggle between the Persian monarch, Sapor, and the Romans. The rest are on the "Overthrow of Satan," the "Resurrection of the Body," and kindred topics.

In 1882 and 1886 Lamy pub. 2 vols., entitled S. Ephraemi Syri Hymni et Sermones, containing hitherto unpublished metrical homilies and hymns, on the Epiphany, the Nativity, the Blessed Virgin, the Passover, the Crucifixion, the Resurrection, &c. [For translations see end of this article.]

4. Various. Ephraim was followed by a succession of authors of metrical homilies, hymns and anthems, most of whom our limited space forbids us to do more than mention. Among these were Balai or Balaeus; Cyrillönö, who, about the year 396, wrote a poem on the Invasion of the Huns; 'Absamya, son of Ephrum's sister; Rabbula, bishop of Edessa, a.b. 411, some of whose hymns have been printed by Overbeck; Ihilha, or Ibas, who succeeded Rabbülā in the see of Edessa; Marūthā, bishop of Maiperhat, a learned physician, who wrote hymns in honour of the martyrs; and Isaac of Antioch, commonly called the Great, and styled by Dr. Wm. Wright (Encyclop. Britan., vol. xxii, p. 8296)
"one of the stars of Syrian literature." He was abbot of a convent near Antioch, and died about A.D. 460. His works were almost as voluminous and varied as those of Ephraim. One of his metrical homilies may be mentioned as a literary curiosity, a poem of 2137 lines, on a parrot which proclaimed ayear δ θεος in the streets of Antioch. Isaac was followed by Barsauma, bishop of Nisibis (484-496), author of compositions of the class called Turgame, hymns calling on the faithful to give ear to the words of the New Testament. In the Nestorian worship of the present day the Turgame are chanted responsively by the officiating descons around the altar, at that part in the service when the Epistle and Gospel are about to be read.

5. Namel. A fellow-worker with Barsauma, 1 both at Edessa and Nisibis, was Nursui, or Narses, called by his co-religionists the " Harp of the Holy Spirit." He was especially famous for his metrical bomilies, 360 in number, and his hymns, two of which are now in the Nestorian psatter.

6. Jacob of Sarugh. We come next to Jacob of Serugh, one of the most celebrated writers of the Syrian Church (b. 451, d. 521), styled by his contemporaries "the Flute of the Holy Spirit and the Harp of the believing Church," Besides commentaries, he wrote odes, hymns, and metrical homilies, 760 in number, mostly in dodeca-syllabic verse, i.e., the four-syllable line thrice repeated. Bar Hebraeus says that he had 70 amanueness to copy out his homilies. More than half of his homilies have perished, but nearly 300 are preserved in European collections. A liturgy in use among the Maronites is ascribed to him.

- 7, Simeon Kukeys. The deacon Simeon Kūkūyā was a potter by trade, as his name denotes. Whilst working at his wheel, he composed hymns, which he wrote down on a tablet or scroll by his side. Bishop Jacob of Serugh visited him, admired his compositions, and encouraged him to continue his labours. Nine of his hymns, on the "Nativity of our Lord," are now in the British Museum. In the same treasury of antiquities are to be found a few hymns out of a rather large number composed by the abbot John bar Aphtonya, who d. A.D. 528, at Kenneshrë, on the Euphrates. Also a few hymns are extant of Mārabhā the Elder, Catholicus of Seleucia, from 536 to 552, one of which commences "Glory to Thee, Lord, how good Thou art!"
- 8. Seventh Century. With the seventh century began the slow decay of the native literature of the Syrians, one cause being the dreadful sufferings of the people during the great war with the Persians, and another the conquest of Syria by the Muhammadans in 633-636, from which time the Arabic language began to supplant the Syriac. Nevertheless, Professor W. Wright, LL.D., in his admirable and exhaustive article on "Syriac Literature," in the Encyclopaedia Britannica, vol. xxii,an article to which in this paper we are ourselves greatly indebted-gives the names of seventeen writers between the beginning of the 7th century and the end of the 12th, who were authors of either hymns, or metrical homilies, or both. In most cases some of their writings are extant in the libraries of the British Museum, the Vatican, or Berlin, and not unfrequently their hymns are found in Nestorian Psalters.
- 9. Bar Rebraeus. The thirteenth century was an age of literary revival with the Nestorians. Bar Hebraeus or Abul Faraj Gregory, "one of the most learned and versatile men Syria ever produced," lived at this time. He was almost equally eminent as philosopher, historian, theologian and poet, and to him we are indebted for much of the information we possess in regard to Syriac hymn-writers.

10. George Wards. In this century too lived George Wards (the Rose) of Arböl, whose hymns and other poems have entered so largely into the use of the Nestorian Church | that one of their service books is to this day called the Warda.

11. Mus'ud, a Syrian, who was physician to the Caliph al Musta'sim in the years 1242-1258, wrote hymns for the Feast of the Epiphany, one of which is in the Vatican

12. Khanis bar Rardahe, of Arbel, is smother favourite hymn-writer of this period, whom we shall have occasion to mention again when speaking of the service-books of the Nestorians. But besides the hymns of this anthor, to which we may then make reference, others are found in the great libraries of Europe.

- 13. Abbd-ishe bar Berikha. Lastly, there was Abhd-isho bar Berikha, or, as he is called by some, Mar Abd Yeshua, Metropolitan of Nimbis and Armenia, A.D. 1298-1318, who has rendered valuable service to literature by a catalogue of nearly 150 Syrian authors and their works, beginning with Simeon bar Sabbae, in the 3rd century, and ending with one, whom in his humility he calls his "vile self." This last he describes as the author of a commentary on the Bible, Consolations, Antiphons and Anthems for various occasions, and a number of other works. Turgame, written by him, are in Ms. in the library of Berlin.
- 14. Dr. Wright says that after Abhd-īslio there are "hardly any names worthy of a place in the literary history of the Syrian nation." The fount of sacred song no more poured forth sweet waters. It remained for the men of succeeding ages to make use of the compositions of their predecessors.

ii. The present use of Eyriac hymns.

In order to a clear understanding of this part of our subject it will be needful to explain the various sections into which the Syrian branch of the Christian church is divided, a division which in at least three instances is of ancient date.

(1) Mestorian. —One section, once very numerous, and sending its missionaries even to Tartary and China, but whose members, now few in number, are at present fund chiefly in Kirdistan and Western Persis, is known by the name of Nestorias. It is so called from Nestorius, who was condemned by the Council of Epheens, A.D. 431, because, as it was alleged, he held that in the one Christ there were two Persons, Divine and humes and with this doctina these Sevies Chile.

that in the one Christ there were two Persons, Divine and human, and with this doctrine these Syrian Christians are supposed to sympathine.

(2) Jacobices.—Another section, called Jacobics, imbabiling both Syria and Mesopotamia, received their name from a certain Jacob Bardešak, Metop of Edecas in the middle of the 6th century, who was the chief agent in organising them into a distinct community. Their peculiar belief is that in Christ the human nature was absorbed into the Divine. Hence they are called Monophysics.

(3) Maconites.—The date and occasion of their origin as a sect are disputed, but most probably they received their name from a certain abbot of a monastery near the Orontes, called John Maroun, who lived in the 7th century, and favoured the doctrine of Christ's person century, and favoured the doctrins of Christ's person known as Monothelite. However, this may have been, the Maronites in 1189 acknowledged the authority of the Roman Pontiff, and are at the present time in nominal communion with Rome. In the district of Mount Lebanon they have now 82 convents, containing 2000 monks and nums.

(4) Chaldaeaus. — In Mesopotanila and Persia are Syrian Christians, who were originally Nestorian, but about the year 1680 made their submission to Rome and about the year 1650 made their submission to kome and have since been known by the name of Choldedess.

(5) Christians of St. Thomas.—In South India, both on the Malabar coast and in the neighbourhood of Madras, are the so-called Christians of St. Thomas, speaking Malayslam or Tamil as their vernacular, but using in their worship Syriac hymns and prayers. They are probably descendants of Syrians, who centuries ago came from Western Asia by way of the Perstan Gulf and settled in these parts. Some are Nestorian in their creed, others Jacobite, and yet others, through the influences brought to bear upon them by the Portuguese at Gos, have adopted the faith of Bome.

Now all these differing sections of Syrian Christians have their respective service books and liturgies, and all use hymns. The following are the facts we have been able to ascertain with respect to their use of hymns:

- (a) The Nestorians. In 1852, an Auglican clergyman, the Rev. G. P. Badger, n.n., published two volumes (London, J. Masters) containing a narrative of visits paid by him to the Syrian Churches of Kürdistan and Mesopotamia, with an account of his researches into the condition of the Nestorians, Syrian Jacobites, Papal Syrians, and Chaldseans. The work is entitled The Nestorians and their Rituals, and is full of information concerning the Nestorian service books.
- (1) First, he mentions a book called Turgama, or Instruction, containing hymne chanted before the reading of the Epletic and Gospel. To this we have referred when speaking of Barsaums, of Nisibla. (2) Another book is the Ahadra, or Cycle of Services for all the Sandays in the year and for certain fast days. Dr. Bedger describes this as a collection of authors, responsories, hymns and collects, comprised in a large follo volume of more than 800 pp.

folio volume of more than 800 pp.

(3) The Gessa, or Treasury, contains the services for all the festivale throughout the year, Sundays excepted. It also comprises antiens, hymns and collects, and is a volume equal in size to the Khudra.

(4) The hacotha d' Ninodys, or Prayer of the Minsultes, is described as "a collection of hymns in error as acribed to St. Ephraim Syrus," and from the account given of its contents is evidently the metrical homily mentioned in our notice of the writings of Ephraim. The Nestorians use it in connection with an annual commemorative service, having reference to the Ninevites, lasting for three days and accompanied with fasting.

fasting.

(5) The Khamis is a collection of byrms chiefly in exposition of the Life, Parables and Miracles of the Saviour and on the duty of Repentance. It has its name from its author, Khamis bar Kardahé, whom we have mentioned as a writer of the 13th century. A long hymn from this collection, which has been translated by

Dr. Badger, is appointed in the Gezza to be used on the feast of the Holy Nativity.

(6) The Wardt is a collection of hymna written and compiled by George Wards, already mentioned. They were apparently prepared for use at church festivals, the particular occasions for which they are fitted being noted at the head of each. Dr. Badger has translated a hymn from the Wards, five pages in length, in praise of the Virgin Mary, and intended to be used on any of the festivals commemorative of her.

In the services for Marriages and Burials, anthems and hymns are introduced. following is a translation by Dr. Badger of a short and rather beautiful hymn sometimes sung in the part of the marriage service called "The Setting up of the Bridal Chamber." It seems intended to be sung responsively.

"Rlessed is He who hath built for His Church a house not made with hands, and hall raised and set her up on high according to His promise,

"The elect Church saith to Christ in her supplications: 'Show me from the Scriptures what dowry Thou wilt give unto me."
"O lovely Spouse, Incline thine ear and hearken to my voice; leave thy father and thy mother, and come, foillow me, for I am thy Bridegroom.

"Behold, I flee to Thy love, and contemn all the idols of the heathen, and leave off worshipping them, and fiee to Thy cross.

" I have espoused thee through water and the Spirit, "I have esponsed thee through water and the opinio, and have saved thee from Satan and from death; beware that thou become not another's, for there is none other that can help thee as I can.
"If thou art faithful unto Me, O thou daughter of the poor, I will make ready for thee a bridal chamber above, and will call prophets, apostles, and martyre to thy

"Thy commandments are dearer unto me than gold or pearls; and the words of Thy month are sweeter unto me than honey and the honey-comb."

From all this it will be seen that hymns are largely used by the Nestorians, besides which they chant Psalms from the Daweedha. or David, in connection with nearly every service. But it must be added that only the clergy and a few of the more educated laymen fully understand the meaning of the words read or sung. Indeed, says Dr. Badger, "many even of the clergy have no certain knowledge of what they read in the churches;' so great is the difference between the modern Surith and the ancient Syriac, and such the present backward state of education,

 (β) The Chaldrean services appear to resemble those of the Nestorians, excepting that a few expressions have been modified in accordance with the Roman doctrines they have embraced.

(γ) The Jacobites and Maronites. J. W. Etheridge states, in his book on the Syrian Churches (Lond., 1846), that, among the liturgles in use among the Jacobites and Maronites, the favourite one is that escribed to St. James, the brother of our Lord. Now in the public or preparatory part of this service a hymn is appointed to be sung after the prayer for all believers, and this hymn is said to be frequently a composition of Mar Ephraim, as he is termed—Mar signifying Master or Lord. A letter, also, with which we have been favoured from the Rev. Dr. Carslaw, missionary of the Free Church of Scotland at Shweir, on Mount Lebanon, informs us that the hymns of Ephraim are now used in that region by both Jacobites and Maronites, though not to any great extent. But they are simply read by the priest, not sung either by priests or people. Dr. Carslaw adds that most of the service of the Maronites is in the accient Syriac, but as a rule neither priest nor people understand it. The priests learn to read it, and that is all that is considered necessary.

The Rev. Dr. Daniel Bliss, President of the Protestant College at Beyrout, has also obtained for us the following list of first lines of hymns now used in the Maronite churches of Mount Lebanon, with the names of their reputed authors. All are in the ancient Syriac language,

J. By St. Peter the Apostle :--

"O Lord God of Peace and Master of Safety."

2. By the Twelve Apostles :-

"O Lord, merciful God, who hast prepared for us this spiritual table."

3. By St. James, Brother of our Lord :-

- "O Lord, our God and our Master, Lover of mankind."
- 4. By St. John, the Apostle and Evangelist :-"O Lord, mighty God, Thou art the true Love."
- 5. By St. Mark, the Evangelist :-
 - "C Lord God Almighty, Thou art the Holy One, who hast true love."

6. By Pope Sixtus of Rome:-

- O Lord, grant Thy church, and the sheep of Thy pasture, safety, peace and everlasting love."
- 7. Prepared by order of the Holy Roman Catholic Church, Mother of all churches:—
 - O our Lord Jeaus Christ, who hast said to Thina Apostles 'Peace, I leave with you, my peace I give unto you.'?

- By St. John Marcon, Patriarch of Antioch:
 — O Lord God, merciful and holy God, who hast through Thine only Son, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, " &c.
- (8) Christians of St. Thomas. With regard to the use of Syriac hymns by the so-called Christians of St. Thomas, on the Malaber coast of India, we have been kindly furnished with information from agents of the Church Missionary Society, whose head-quarters are at Cottayam, in Travancore, which is also the centre of the district inhabited by the Syrian Christians. One of our correspondents is the Rev. J. H. Bishop, B.A., the other the Ven. Archdeacon Kóshi Kóshi, who is himself of Syrian parentage.

 Mr. Bishop informs us that

Mr. Hishop informs us that "The Syrian Christians of Travancore have no choral or congregational singing, or musical instrument in their worship. The ancient litergies of St. James and others are monotoned by the Cottanars or Priests, and the people standing in the nave repeat the responses from mismory. In many Syrian churches the services are conducted in the Malayalam language" [the vernacular of the country], "though formerly they were always performed in the Syriac toughe, which is still used more or less, especially in the celebration of the Mass."

Archdencon Kóshi states that

"The hymns used in the Syrian church are too many to be numbered. They are so scattered throughout their service books that it is impossible even to form a guess respecting their number. The Syrians have neparate collection of hymne such as we have. They separate collection of hymne such as we have. They have more than 500 tunes, and everyone of their hymns is so made that it can be sung to eight different tones. All the great poets of old, such as Mar Rephrain, had each his own eight tunes distinct from the eight belonging to every other, and on hearing any hymn sung, the priests instructed in these matters could tell who the author of it was. Hymns composed by poets of inferior grade, who were unable to invent new tanes, are never credited to their real authors, but go under the names of those to whose tunes they were adapted."

The Archdescon then proceeds to give a list of hymn-writers, a number of his names coinciding with those we have given in the former part of this article. If at first view there seems to be some disagreement between the accounts of our two correspondents, the explanation is doubtless to be found in the fact already stated, that the Syrian Christians of India are divided among themselves, and consequently, in all probability vary in their usage as regards singing.

We have seen the past and present of Syriae Hymnody; one word may be permitted with respect to its future. It is then, we think, morally certain that Syrian Christians, in whatever country living, will, with the progress of enlightenment, come to realise the fact that acceptable worship must be intelligent and spiritual, and will therefore cease to employ in their religious services a dead language. Nevertheless the large-minded student of Christian history will always feel an interest in the great collection of oldworld metrical compositions, lyrical and hortatory, noticed in this article, remembering that for a thousand years or more they were the medium of prayer and praise, consolation and admonition, to successive generations, confessing the One Saviour, and having hopes and fears, joys and sorrows, duties and temptations common to man. [W. R. S.] common to man.

Several of the Syriac hymns of Ephraem Syrus have been translated into English as follows:-

Of his hymne 35, and of his metrical homilles 9, have been rendered into prose, printed as blank varse, by Dr. Henry Burgass, in his Select Metrical Ryman and Romeites of Ephrains Syrus (Lond., 1953), and from these versions the Rev. T. G. Crippen rendered 6 into English metre in his Ameient Hymns and Poema (Lond., 1862), Mrs. Charles, in her Voice of Christian Life in Song (Lond., 1968), gives 6 versions from the brz. into German in Daniel, iil. (1846), where are given 10 of Ms hymns in the Syrisc, with German fro. taken from Plus Zingerle's Heilige Muse der Syrer. The Rev. J. Morris, in his Select Works of S. Ephraens the Syrian (Oxford, 1847). There is also 1 ir. in the Rev. J. W. Hewett's Ferres by a Country Durate, 1852. Of his hymne 35, and of his metrical bomilles 9, have Hewett's Verses by a Country Curate, 1869.

As for the majority of our readers it would be useless to give the tra, under the first lines of the Syriac, they are here given together.

Take comfort, Christians, when your friends. J. Lagan. [Sorrow, but not without Hope.] 1st pub. in the Scattish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, No. liii., in 8 st. of 4 L, and based on 1 Thess. iv. 13–18. In many American collections a cento beginning with st. iii., "As Jesus died and rose again," is given for Easter, and is most suitable for that purpose. It is given in Hat-field's Church Hys., N. Y., 1872, &c. We have ascribed this paniphrase to John Logan, and not to Michael Bruce, on evidence set forth on p. 188, ii.

Take my heart, O Father, take it. [Holiness Desired.] This hymn was given anonymously in Dr. C. A. Bartol's Hys. for the Sanctuary, commonly known as the West Boston Unitarian Coll., 1849. No. 290, in 5 st. of 4 l. This was repeated in the Sabbath H. Bh., 1858; the Laudes Domini, 1884, and other American hymn-books. Another form of the text is, "Take my heart, O Father, mould it," in 3 st. It appeared in the Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, 1864. This is altered from the former. fF. M. B.)

Take my life, and let it be. Frances R. Havergal. [Self-Consecration to Christ.] This lymn was written at Arcley House, Feb. 4, 1874, in 11 st. of 2 l., and pub. in her Loyal Responses, 1878; the musical ed. of the same, 1881; and in Life Chords, 1880. It has also been printed as a leaflet, in various forms for Confirmation, Self-Consecration, and for enclosing in letters, some being accompanied by her father's tune Patmos. It has been tr. into French, German, Swedish, Russian, and other European languages, and into several of those of Africa and Asia. The history of its origin is thus given in the HAV. Mes, :-

"Perhaps you will be interested to know the origin of the consecration bymn 'Take my life.' I went for a little visit of five days [to Areley House]. There were ten persons in the house, some unconverted and long prayed for, some converted, but not rejoicing Christians. He gave me the prayer 'Lord, give me all in this house I' And He just did! Before I left the house every one had got a blessing. The last night of my visit after I had retired, the governess saked me to go to the two daughters. They were crying, to.; then and there both of them trusted and rejoiced; it was nearly midnight. I was too happy to sleep, and passed most of the night in prates and renewal of my own consecration; and these little couplets formed themselves, and chimed in my heart one after another till they finished with my heart one after another till they finished with 'Ecer, Ostr, ALL for Thee !'"

The music to which Miss Havergal invariably sang this hymn, and with which it was always associated in the publications over which she had any influence, was her father's tune Patmos, and the family's desire is that this course may be followed by others. [J, J]

The assumed name of Thomas Mackellar, in Neal's (American) Gazette, 1845.

Tandem audite me. [Love to Christ.] Probably of the 17th cent., and founded on Canticles ii. 5. It is found in the Mainz G. B. (R. C.) 1661, p. 434, in 6 st. entitled "Bymn on the love of the Mother of God in her dying hour." It is also in Wagner's G. B., Leipzig, 1697, vol. iii. p. 745; the Hymnodia Sacra, Mainz, 1671, p. 121: Daniel, iv. p. 344; and Trenoli's Sacred Latin Petry, ed. 1864, p. 249. In R. Campbell's St. Andrew's Hyl., 1850, the hymn "Mary mourner, sad, forlorn," for St. Mary Magdalen, is partly derived from this hymn.

Tandem peractis O Deus. C. Coffin. Appeared in the Paris Brev., [Saturday.]1736, and in his Hymni Sacri, p. 29, of the same year. In the Paris and later French Brown it is the hymn at Matins for Saturdays from Trinity to Advent. The text is in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 32; Card. Newman's Hymnt Ecolesiae, 1838 and 1865; and L. C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M. 1867. Tr. as:-

I. At length creation's days are past. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 29, and again in his Hys. of the Church, &c., 1841, No. 16. In the Hymnol for St. John the Evangelist, Aberdeen, 1870, it begins, "And now the six-days' work is done." In one or two others it is given without alteration.

3. And now Thy labours, Lord, ere done. By I. Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 38. In the Hymnary, 1872, No. 49, this tr. is rewritten as "At length six days their course have run."

8. Six days of labour now are past. This tr. was given in H. A. & M., 1861. It was based on J. Chandler's tr. as above. In the 1875 ed. ot H. A. & M. it begins with the same first line, but several other lines have been rewritten and much improved thereby.

Other tre. are :-

 4. There is an hour of peaceful rest. Heaven a Place of Rect. The author's account of this hymn in his Gents of Sacred Poetry, 1880, is that it "was written by me, in Philadelphia, in the summer of 1818, for the Franklin Grazette, edited by Richard Bache, Esq., and was introduced by him to the public in terms sufficiently flattering to a young man who then certainly lacked confidence in himself. The place was republished in England and on the Continent, in various newspapers and magasines, and was also extensively circulated in my own native innd, where it has found a place in zeveral hymn and music-books. It was pub. in my first volume of Freent, at Philadelphia, in 1819, and soon after was set to music by A. P. Hainrich, Esq., in the same city." It is in Lyra Sac. Americana, 1888, p. 285.

Tauler, Johannes, was b. at Strassburg about 1300, and seems to have been the son of Nikolus Tauler or Taweler, of Finkweiler, who in 1304 was a member of the Strassburg Town Council (Mitglied des Baths). About the year 1318 he entered the Dominican convent at Strassburg. He studied for eight years at Strassburg, where the famous Meister Eckhart (d. 1327) was Dominican Professor of Theology from 1312 to 1320. He then went to Cologue to undergo a further training, in theory and practical work, extending over four | these have passed into English, viz.:-

years. Thereafter he returned to Strassburg where he soon came into note as an eloquent and practical preacher. When much of Germany was laid under interdict by Pope John xxu., because of resenting his interference with the election of the German Emperor in 1324, the Dominicans at Strassburg still continued to preach, to celebrate mass, and to administer to the people the consolations of the Church, even though Strassburg was under the Papal bann. After the Diet of Frankfurt in 1328 the strife between Emperor and Pope (now Benedict xII., Pope since 1334) became more pronounced. Up to 1339 the Dominicans at Strassburg still continued to sing mass, but were then compelled to cease doing so by command of the superiors of their Order. As the Strassburg magistracy still remained faithful to the Emperor, they resented this submission, and accordingly closed the Dominican convent in 1339, and it stood empty for three years and a half. About the beginning of 1339 we find Tauler in Basel. where he remained for some years, in close connection with Heinrich of Nördlingen and others of the so-called "Friends of God" in that city and neighbourhood. About 1346 he was again in Strassburg, and he spent most of the remainder of his life there and at Cologne. He d. at Strassburg on June 16, 1361. (Her-20g's Real-Encyklopädie, xv. 251; Gocdeke's Grundriss, vol. i., 1884, p. 210; Tauler's Rekchrisig, by P. H. S. Denifle, Strassburg, 1879; Zeitschrift für deutsches ARefihum, 1880, p. 200, &c.)

The above notice embraces what seem to be the best authenticated details of Tauler's life. It differs greatly from the account which till recently was regarded as historical, and which has been made accessible to English readers by Miss Susanna Winkworth (see below), and by Miss Frances Bavan, in her Three Friends of God, London, 1887. The basis of the common account was a work by Ruimann Merawin, which Dentile's in-vestigations have shown to partake much more of the nature of a novel with a purpose than of authentic his-nature of a novel with a purpose than of authentic history (see siso the Allg. Insulsche Biog., xxi., 452).

Tauler was one of the most celebrated of the Mediseval Mystics, and one of the most famous of all German preachers. Posch uncertainty still exists however, not only as to mystically still exists however, not only as to mystically be searched to him. The best authenticated are his Sermons, which were first printed at Leipzig in 1493 (good recent ed. by Julius Hamberger, Frankfurt, 1664, and Prag. 1872. English version of 25, with an account of his life, tr. and ed. by Miss Susanna Winkworth, London, 1857. The well-known Monthfalge de trainer. Lebeus Christi has generally been ascribed to Tauler, but Donlife, who edited the most recent critical ed. (Munch, 1877), is of opinion that it is not by him (a recent English version by J. R. Morell, as The Following of Christ, London, 1842). The famous Theologis Germanica (good English version by Susanna Wilskworth, London, 1854, with an interesting introduction on the "Friends of God") has also often been ascribed to him, but on ne good grounds; though in its reaches out of the lifes that a work to be the state resources. introduction on the "Freends or too" has also often been seerlied to him, but on no good grounds; through in its working out of the idea that a godly life is the remundation of self-will, and complete devotion to the will of God, and that in this inner union with God we again become God's children, as at the first, the Tacologia Germanica has much affinity with Tauler's teachings.

The hymns attributed to Tauler were printed in his Werke, Cologne, 1543, and by Daniel Sudermann, in his Schöne ausserlesene sinn-reiche Figuren, Strassburg, 1620, and his Etliche hohe geietliche Gesänge, Strassburg, 1626. Sudermann seems to have rewritten them, or at least considerably altered them. Wackernagel, ii. pp. 802-307, gives 11 (really 9) pieces under Tauler's name. Three of L Es kemmt die Schiff geladen. The trs. follow the second version, in 8 st., taken from Sodermann's tie-Kinge, 1626; and this text is in 14 Bone's Chwiste, 1847, No. 34 (1878, No. 26). See also Hallmann von Fallershen's Getchichte der deutschen Aircheniedet, 1861, pp. 107-109. In the text of 1826, st. i, il., nearly agree with st. i., ir. of the kas, while st. ili.-vi. borrow nothing from the older text, but are closely allied to the text of 1828. The tr. in C. U. is:—

Taylor, Ann and Jane. These names are associated together here for convenience of reference, and because many of their hymns were published under their joint names.

Gilbert, Ann, nee Taylor, the elder of the two risters, and daughter of Isaac Taylor, was b. at London, Jan. 30, 1782, her father at that time being engaged in London as an engraver. Subsequently her father became a Congregational Minister, and resided, first at Colchester and then at Ongar. In 1813 she was married to the Rev. Joseph Gilbert, Classical and Mathematical Tutor at the Congrerational College, Masborough, near Rother-nam, Yorkshire. From Masborough they ham, Yorkshire. passed to Hull, and then to Nottingham, where Mr. Gilbert d. in 1852. Mrs. Gilbert remained at Nottingham, and d. there Dec. 20, 1866. In addition to contributing hymns to the joint works of herself and her sister, a few were given in Collyer's Coll., 1812, signed "A." or "A.T.," and about 100 of her hymns appeared in Dr. Leifenild's Original Hymns, 1842, and a few in the Noticingham H. Bk. (1812, 20th ed. 1861). Shepub independently, Hymne for Sunday School Anniversaries, 1827;

Hymns for Infant Schools, 1827; and The Wodding among the Flowers. Her Memoirs, by her son, Josiah Gilbert, were pub, in 1874.

Taylor, Jane, the younger of the two sisters. was also b. at London, Sept. 23, 1783. Her gift in writing verse displayed itself at an early ege. Her first piece was printed in the Minor's Pocket Book for 1804. Her publications included Display, a tale, 1815; Essays in Rhymes, 1816; and the posthumous work edited by her brother, entitled The Contributions of Q. Q., 1824, being pieces in prese and verse from the Youth's Magazine, to which she had contributed under the signature of "Q. Q." She d. at Ongar, Essex, April 13, 1824. Her Memoir and Poetical Remains, were pub. by her father in 1825.

The joint productions of the two sisters

(1) Original Poens, 1805; (2) Hymns for the Nursery, 1806; (3) Hymns for Infant Hinds, 1808; 2nd ed. 1810; 52nd ed. 1817. To the 3th ed., 1844, Mrs. Gilbert interspersed 23 additional hymns by berzelf, thereby raising the total to 35. In 1888 Josiah Gilbert revised these hymns, added thereto from the works named above, supplied the initials "A" and "J." respectively and the same made the original title original title and the same made the original title of the same made the original title original title. spectively, and pub. the same under the original title as the "Authorized Edition." (4) Original Hymns for Sunday Schools, 1812.

In addition to the hymns which are noted under their respective first lines, Mrs. Gilbert and Miss Taylor are the anthors of the following (the date in brackets indicates the book in which each hymn appeared) :-

Mr. Gilbert's ed. of the Hys. for Infant Minds, 1886, together with us. notes, are our authorities for the foregoing ascriptions of authorship. Mr. Gilbert cannot distinguish the authorship of the following hymns by one or both eisters :

1. Good David, whose Psaims have so often been sing (1812). Concerning David.

2. If Jesus Christ was sent (1812). Repentance.

3. King Solomon of old (1812). Concerning Science.

In literary excellence Mrs. Gilbert's hymns surpass those of her sister. They are more elevated in style, ornate in character, broader in grasp, and better adapted for adults. The best are "Great God, and wilt Thou condescend?" (p. 45% ii.), "Jesus, Who lived above the sky," and "Lo! at noon 'tis sudden night." Miss Taylor's hymns are marked by great simplicity and directness. The most popular and one of the best is, "There is a path that leads to God." Taken as a whole, the hymns of both sisters are somewhat de-pressing in tone. They lack brightness and [J. J.] wermth.

Taylor, Dan, was b. of humble parentage, at Northowram, near Halifax, Dec. 21, 1738. Early in life he came under the influence of the Methodist movement, and in 1761 began to preach. Presently he became a Baptist, and for 20 years ministered to a congregation gathered by himself at Bircheliff, near Heptonstall, Yorkshire. Thence in 1783 he removed to Halifax, and in 1785 to Church Lane, Whitechapel, London, and of this congregation he continued postor until his death in Dec. 1816.

Mr. Taylor was the leader of the movement among the General Baptista, which, in 1778, resulted in the formation of the New Connexion, and for many years committon of the New Connexion, and for many years he was the guiding spirit in the new body, his remarkable countinees of judgment causing him to be regarded stroots as an oracle. For their use in 1772, he compiled a hymn-book, having the title Hymne & Spiritual Songe, mostly collected from Various Authors; with a few that have not been published before. Halitax, Printed by B. Jacob, 1772. Among "the few" hymns here referred to are three by Taylor himself, of which the following are the first lines:—

1. Behold, to what a wratched caus. Desided here

1. Behold, to what a wretched case. Justified by

2. Condemned are all the sons of men. Jesus the

3. Jenus Redeemer, Saviour, Lord. Peace by Jesus

This book contains 293 hymns, with a few dexologies. In 1781, J. Deacon, having been requested by the G. B. Association to prepare a new collection, his work was submitted to a committee, of which D. Taylor was the chairman, and the new book appears to have been edited, and probably was greatly modified by Taylor, since a copy now before us has on its back the title ban Taylor's copy now before us has on its back the title has Taylor's Expens. The title-page runs Hymrs & Spiritual Songs, selected from Yarious Authors. London; printed for the Editors and sold by B. Taylor, Union Street, Bishops, all Street, 1793. This book contains 622 hymns, and includes the three by D. Taylor cited above. Since J. Descon, in 1800, pub. a hymn-book bearing his own name, it is probable that he disapproved of the treatment his work had received, and regarded the book of 1733 as the production of D. Taylor rather than his own, [W. R. S.]

Taylor, Emily, b. 1795, was the daughter of Samuel Taylor, of New Buckenham, Norfolk, niece of John Taylor, of Norwich, the hymnwriter, and great grand-daughter of Dr. John Taylor, the Hebraist. Miss Taylor was the writer of numerous tales for children, chiefly historical, and of various books of instruction, and of descriptive natural history. Amongst her publications are :--

(1) Letters to a Child on Marttime Discovery, 1820; (2) Virion of Las Casas, and other Poems, 1825; (3) Poetical Illustrations of Passages of Scripture, 1828; Poctical Mustration of Pattages of Erripture, 1828; (4) Tales of the English, 1831; (5) Tales of the English, 1833; (6) Memoir of Sir T. More, 1834; (7) The Boy and the Birds, 1835. She also edited Sabbath Hecreations, 1826; and Plowers and Pruit in Old English Gardens, 1838; and contributed to the Magnet Stories, 1860, &c.; and the Rainbow Stories, 1870, &c.

Miss Taylor wrote several hymns, which appeared as follows :- To the Unitarian Collection of Ps. & Hus., printed for the Renshaw Street Chapel, Liverpool, 1818, she contributed anonymously:-

1. Come to the house of prayer. Invitation to Public Worskip. Sometimes given as "O come to the house of Prayer."

2. God of the changing year Whose arm of power.

Lettern of the Changing Year.

3. O Father, though the anxious fear. Sanday.

4. O bere, if ever, God of love. Holy Communion. These, and the following 6 hymns, were given anonymously in the 2nd ed, of the Norwich Unitarian Hymn Book, 1826 :-

Self-consecration to God.

9. Who shall behold the King of kings? Purity.

10. Who that o'er many a barren part. Missions. Sometimes it begins with st. il., "Thy kingdom come! The heathen lands."

Of the above No. 6 is part of a longer poem which was given in her Poetical Illustrations of Passages of Scripture, 1826. This work : Raintago onla

In the Rev. J. R. Beard's Coll. of Hys. for Pub. and Private Worship, 1837, several of the above are repeated, and also:-

14. If love, the noblest, purest, best. Communion with Jesus.

Of these 14 hymns 10 are in Dr. Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840, and 9 in his Hymns, &c., 1873. Several are also found in other collections, as Horder's Cong. Hymns, 1884, and some American and other hymn-books. Although for the greater part of her life Miss Tsylor was a Unitarian, latterly, under the influence of F. D. Maurice, she joined the Church of England She d. in 1872.

Taylor, Helen, daughter of Martin Taylor, was the author of The Child's Book of Homilies, N. D.; Sabbath Bells, A Series of Simple Lays for Christian Children, N. Taylor, Jeremy, D.D. This post of preachers was born of very humble parentage on both sides, at Cambridge, in August, 1813. His father was a barber. He must have had a good school as a boy. He entered Caius College, of his native city, as a "sizar" in 1626. His career at the university was a brilliant one. He was made fellow of All Souls College, Oxford, in 1632; and rector of Uppingham, Rutlandshire, in 1638, as is still proudly remembered there. He was in-evitably "sequestered" by Parliament in 1642. Inexorable necessities of circumstance put him in prison. During the opening of the great Protectorate he kept a school in Wales along with William Nicholson, and acted as chaplain to the Earl of Carberry at Golden Grove. Carmarthenshire, one of the pilgrim spots of our country, because of this and of his imperishable book named after it. In 1658 he is found in Ireland. He preached at Lisburn and Portmore. He returned to London early in 1660, and signed the loyalist or royalist Declaration of the Nobility and Gentry, on April 24th, thirty-five days before the "Restoration." He was not overlooked, as so many faithful royalists were. He was consecrated bishop of Down and Councr in January, 1661; made a member of the Irish Privy Council in February; entrusted with the diocese of Dromore in March; and in the same year was chosen Vice-chancellor of the University of Dublin. He d. at Lisburn, August 13th, 1667, and was interred in the choir of the cathedral of Dromore. Bishop Taylor's complete works have been repeatedly edited, e.g. by Henry Rogers, Pitman, Bp. Heber, Eden; and manifold Selections and books, as his Holy Living and Holy Dying. Notwithstanding his rich and imperial intellect, and enthralling eloquence, and absolute command of words, Bishop Taylor than the state of the st lor holds only a very small place in the Anti-phon of England. It has been admirably said by Dr. Rowland Williams, " Poetry differs from eloquence, as love differs from friendship" (Stray Thoughts, 1878). His attempts at verse are eloquence, not poetry, and even the eloquence hampered and shallowed. The present writer collected his entire poems and verse-translations in the Miscellanies of the Fuller Worthies' Library (1870). In the "Introduction" the reader will find a critical account of the various hymns; and also therein an account is furnished of a flagrant misap-propriation of Bp. Taylor's Hymns by Samuel Speed in his Prison Piety, or Meditations divine and moral. Digested into poetical Norwich, 1795 (see p. 331, ii.):—

From Bp. Taylor's Golden Grove, 1655, the following bymus are in C. U. :-

1. Full of mercy, full of love. Prayer for Charity. From the G. Grove, p. 116, where it is given in 20 lines, and headed, "A Prayer for Charity." It was given in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymra, &c., 1827, p. 109, and thus came into later hymn-books.

His Christmas Carol," Where is this blessed Babe," and his Prayer, "My soul doth pant towards Thee," are also from the Golden Grove. [See English Hymnody, Rarly, § 9.] [J. J.]

Taylor, John, b. July 30, 1750, was the s. of Richard Taylor, of Norwich, and grandson of Dr. John Taylor (1694-1761, the eminent Hebrew scholar, who was for many years minister of the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, and afterwards Divinity tutor at the Warrington Academy. Dr. Taylor published A Coll. of Tunes in Various Airs, one of the first collections of its kind, and his grandeon was one of the most musical of Unitarian hymnwriters). Young Taylor, after serving his apprenticeship in his native place, was for two years in a banking house in London, at which time he was an occasional poetical contributor to the Morning Chronicle. In 1778 be returned to Norwich, where he spent the rest of his life, first as a manufacturer, and afterwards as a wool and yarn factor. For nearly fifty years he was a deacon at the Octagon Chapel. At the time of the French Revolution he joined in the support of The Cabinet, a periodical brought out by the Liberals of Norwich, in conjunction with Dr. Ebfield, William Taylor, Miss Alderson (Mrs. Opic), and others, and, as a "poet of the olden time," he contributed five poems thereto. These, and other political songs and poems relating to family events, &c., together with 50 hymns, were collected in Hymns and Miscellaneous Poems, Reprinted for Private Distribution, 1863, with a Memoir taken from the Monthly Repository of Sept. 1826, by his son, Edward Taylor, then Gresham Professor of Music. An earlier and less complete edition, containing 43 hymns, he had himself caused to be printed by his sons, Richard and Arthur Taylor, London, 1818. He d. June 28, 1826. Of his hymns the following 9 were contributed to Dr. Enfield's Sel. of Hymns for Social Worskip,

- Far from mortal cares retreating. Divine Worthip.
 Father divine, before Thy view. Divine Provi- dence.
 S. Father of our feeble race. Christian Love. This begins in Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884, and others, with at. ii., "Lord, what offering shall we bring?"

 4. Glory be to God on high. Divine glories estebrated.

 R. Raise your voice and loyful sing. Praise.

 R. Roise, the Lord is King. Providence acknowledged in the Searons. The first stanza and it. 5 and 6 of all are by C. Wesley (955, ii.), and the rest are by Taylor.
- J. Taylor edited Hymns intended to be used at the Commencement of Social Worship, London, 1802. To that collection he contributed 10 hymns, including:—
 10. At the portale of Thy house.

Divine Worship. At the portage of Hy house. Devine worsays.
 a few American collections a cents from this hymn is given as, "Lord, before Thy presence come."
 Blessed Sabbath of our [the] Lord. Sanday.
 O how delightful is the road. Divine Worship.

13. Supreme o'er all Jebovah reigns. Divine Worskip. All the foregoing, except No. 8, were republished in the Norwich Coll. of 1814. That edition contained 33 of Taylor's hymns. To the 2nd ed., 1826, he added 9 more. To R. Aspland's Sel. of Po. and Hys. for Unitarian Worship, Hackney, 1810, he contributed 26 hymns, old and new, including :

14. Like shadows gliding o'er the plain. Time and Sternity.

15. The Mighty God who rolls [rules] the spheres.

God the Preserver of Man.

These 15 are the best known of Taylor's hymns, and are largely found in Unitarian collections. See especially Dr. Martineau's Hymns, &c., of 1840, and of 1878. [V. D. D.]

Taylor, Thomas Rawson, s. of the Rev. Thomas Taylor, some time Congregational Minister at Bradford, Yorkshire, was b. at Ossett, near Wakefield, May 9, 1807, and educated at the Free School, Bradford, and the Leaf Square Academy, Manchester. From the age of 15 to 18 he was engaged, first in a merchant's, and then in a printer's office. Influenced by strong religious desires, he entered the Aircdale Independent College at 18, to prepare for the Congregational ministry. His first and only charge was Howard Street Chapel, Sheffleld. This he retained about six months, entering upon the charge in July 1880, and leaving it in the January following. For a short time he soted as classical tutor at Airedale College, but the failure of health which compelled him to leave Sheffleld also necessitated his resigning his tutorship. He d. March 7, 1835. Te Deum laudamus, the most famous non-biblical hymn of the Western Church, intended originally (as it appears) for daily use as a morning hymn. It is not now known to the Eastern Church in a Greek form, though the first ten verses exist in Greek. In the West it is known to have been in use from the beginning of the 6th cent. as a hymn for the Sunday service for mattins before the lesson from the Gospel.

The subject will be treated under the following heads: i. Authorities; ii. Text; iii. Title; iv. Date and Authorship; v. Origin and Intention; vi. Versions; vil. Liturgical use; viii. Musical Settings.

i. Authorities. Of the Authorities the most important are :-

I. For the earlier literature it is sufficient to refer to I. For the earlier literature it is sufficient to refer to Bart, Gavantus's Thesaurus Sucrorum rifumm as edited by C. M. Meratt in 2 vuls. fol. Venice, 1744 (vol. 2, pp. 147-153), and to Cardinal J. M. Thomasius' Opera, ed. Vezzosi, Rome, 1747, vol. 2, p. 345 foll. and vol. 3, p. 614 foll. In the former the question of the Ambirotic-Augustician authorably is carefully discussed by Merati; in the latter several M3, texts are given with various readings. The discertation of W. E. 2. Till recently the best modern authority was Daniel's Thesaurus Hymnoloyicus, vol. 2, Halle, 1812, pp. 276–299, but considerable advance has been made on this by Prebendary Edgar C. S. Gibson, of Weils, in his able and learned article on the Te Beam in the Church Quarterly Review, of April, 1884 (vol. 18, pp. 1-27); supplemented by one on the Gloria in Exclusi, lind., Oct., 1885 (vol. 21, pp. 19, 20), which have been of the greatest service to the writer of the article. iii. Title (cp. esp. Thomasius, 1. c. 3, p. 614 foll. note, C. Q. R. pp. 5-7, 11). The hymn is found in many MSS, without any title and so in some printed books. In earlier literature it is generally cited by its first three words. Later it is simply, as with ourselves, the Te Deum, and sometimes, though less commonly, the Hymnus Ambrosianus. The titles found in Psalters and early printed books may be divided into three classes: (1) those which define or describe its ritual use; (2) those which refer to its character or contents;
(8) those which assign it to a particular author or authors. Sometimes 2 and 3 may be combined. The first class appears to be the earliest, which would harmonize with the carly method of citation and with the uncertainty as to its authorship.

1. Titles denoting its ritual use are, Ymnus matutinalis (Bamberg Quadruple Psaiter, copied from one dated A.D. 909, A. I. 14), Humnus ad matutina dicendus die dominico (Queen Christina's Psalter in the Vatican, equeen Caristina's Fisher in the Valuent, ascribed to the 7th cent., Cod. Vat. Alex. xi., cf. Thomas. 2, p. 345, and 3, p. 614 n.) and many similar titles, e.g. Lambeth 427; Hymnum dominicals (Aleuin, ufficia per ferias, tom. 2, p. 116 = Migne's PP. Lat. 101, p. 597), Ymnum in die dominica (Bangor Antiphomary, Lat. 7th cent. pow et Milan Bib Archeos C.5. late 7th ceut., new at Milan, Bib. Ambros. C. 5 infra, rather incorrectly printed in P. P. Lat. 72, p. 587), Hymnus dominicalis pro nocturnis hoc est ante lectionem evangelii (S. Gall. 20, 9th cent.), Hymnus dom(ini)e(a) noclurna lande can(endus) (B. M. Arundel 155, 11th

2. Titles descriptive of contents are, Laudatio dei (Book of Cerne, 8th or 9th cent., Camb. Univ. Li. 1, 10), Hymnus et oratio in laude domini (Corbie Psalter, 11th cent., Paris Bib. Nat. Lat. 11550), Hymnus SS. Patrum in honorem sanctae Trinitatis and Hymnus in honorem sanctae Trinitatis (Thomas. 2, p. 345, and 3, p. 614). More colourless titles are, Hymnus optimus (Bacon's Psalter, Camb. Univ., quoted by Swainson, I. c.); Oratio pura cum laudatione (B. M. Reg. 2 B. v.); Laus angelica (Camb. S. John's, C. 15), and simply Ymnus (Bodl. Douce 127, prob. 11th cent., a Lombard Pselter).

Titles indicating authorship are numerous but inconsistent. Indeed they may not all have been intended at first positively to assert the authorship of the person named, but perhaps to ascribe the introduction of the hymn to him, or possibly its musical setting, or it may be even to refer to his frequent use of it as a favourite hymn. Some however distinctly assert composition.

(a) The oldest of these titles, as far as MSS, are con-(a) The oldest of these titles, as far as MSS, are conserned, would appear to be Hymnus queen S. Hilbertus primus composuit (Cod. S. Emmerami, 8th or 9th cent., C. kwii., now at Munich, Daniel's M. 1). Op. the Quotestions Grammat, of Abbo Floriocensis (A. 9. 985), P. Lat. 139, p. 522 § 18, "In Del palinodia quam composuit Hilarius Pictaviensis episcopus non inxta quoramdam imperitorum errorem suscepisti, sed potus suscepturus legendam est."

legendam est."

(3) Next would seem to be those which incorporate the tradition with regard to S. Ambrose and S. Augustine. Hymnus quem S. Ambrosius et S. Augustines invicem condiderant (S. Gall. 23 and 27, 9th quat.; Vienna Pratter, No. 1861, said to have been sent by Charles the Great to Pope Hadrian, but perhaps in this part in a later hand; B. M. Cotton Vitellius, E. xviii.; Bodl. Land, 96, 11th cent., preceded by the older title, Landes post noctures; Douce 286, circa s.D. 1050), Hymnus

s(an)e(f)oru(m) doctoru(m) Ambrosii & Augustini Rois-coporum (Tournai Psalter, Paris, Lat. nouvelles acquisi-tions 2195, with Greek version of verses 1-11); Hose ast coporais (Tournal Psalter, Paris, Lat. nouvelles acquinitions 2195, with Greek version of verses 1-11); Hase as laws sancte trimitatis quam Augustians sanctus et Ambrosius composuri (Irish Book of Ryman, 10th cent., Tr. Coll. Dublin, E. A. 2); Hymans Augustians sanctus et Ambrosius composuri (Irish Book of Ryman, 10th cent., Tr. Coll. Dublin, E. A. 2); Hymans Augustian (Salzburg Pauter, A. V. 31, quoted by Swalmson).

(y) Several MSS. refer to S. Nicetus or Nicetius, but whether the Bp. of Vienne or Treven or some other is meant is not clear. Such are the Florence Laurentian Plat. XVII. iti. and vili. of 11th cent. Brit. Mus. Harl. 863, 16th or 11th, and a Cotton MS, cited by Abp. Ussher, but not now identified, In the 11th century Arundel M3, No. 60 of the same library, with a Saxon gloss, is the title (fol. 127) Yamaus sancti Viccti epiroph dichus dominicit ad matultisis, which is probably meant for the same person. In the very scarce Psatterium Ravidicum ad utum cocletic Spriburicusis, printed by Kyngston and Sutton, Lond. 1555, is the rubine "Canticum beat! Niceti," and a note stating that the traditional account respecting S. Augustine's baptism is untrue: "Quod non est verum sed decantaverunt usum prins compositum per beatum Nicetum episcopum Vicn(n)ensem quod inmit casciodorus de institutione sanctarum scriptorarum," on which see below. This name is closely connected with that in the Irlah MS. I, Neceta, carh. of St. Peter. The connection with Rome is prob. one to the misrateding Romana for Remailans or Remislans. the set of Niceta to whom Morin attributes the T.D.; see iv. 2. misreading Romana for Romatiana or Remisiana, the see of Niceta, to whom Morin attributes the T.D.; see iv. 2.

of Niceta, to whom Morin attributes the T.D.; see i.v. 2.

(3) The titles Hymnus S. Abundit (Breviarium Monaticum, Vat. 4928, circa 1166; cf. Merati in Gavanius, p. 152, No. iii. and Thomanius, 3, p. 615 n.), and Hymnus S. Sitchuti or Sitchuti monachi, Re. (Breviary of Monte Cassino, circa A.D. 1035, sp. Merati, i.c., cod. Basilicae Vatic. No. xi. ap Thomas, i.c.) are puzzling. Abundius, Sp. of Como, who d, in 459 A.D., is probably meant. "Sischutus monachus" would be so called to distinguigh him from the well-known Spatish king, the contamporaty of Isidera in the 7th cent. The monk contemporary of Jeldore in the 7th cent. The monk may have belonged to Monte Cassino, or have been the Bepedictine Abbot of Cardenas, who d. in 1982.

In the printed Breviaries the reference to S. Ambrose and S. Augustine is general in some form or other, though the hymn sometîmes has no title.

iv. Date and authorship. The consideration of these titles naturally leads us to the question of authorship. The traditional attribution to S. Ambrose and S. Augustine has been traced up as far as the year 859, when Hinemar of Rheims published his second dissertation On Prodestination, in which he refers to it (c. 29 = PP, Lat. 125, p. 290):

"Et quomodo intelligi debest quod sanctus dixit Ambrosius, To ad liberandum surcepturus hominen (quis nt a maloribus nostris audivimus tempore baptismatis sancti Augustini hunc hymnum beatus Ambrosius fecit et idem Augustinus cum eo confecit) in capite libri De bono contagui exponit dicens," etc.

The tradition however took fuller shape in a Milanese chronicle, now ascribed to Landulphus senior, who wrote in the 11th cent. (Hist. Mediclanensis, i. 9 = PP. Lat. 147, p. 893). After mentioning the place of Augustine's baptism, the Church of S. John (now destroyed), he goes on:

"In quibus fontibus prout Spiritus sanctus Cabst eloqui eis Tr descri laudamus decantantes, canctis qui aderant audientibus et videntibus simulque mirantibus, in postaris ediderunt quod ab universa ecclesis Catholica usque hodis tenetur et religiose decantatur.'

The attribution of this part of the chronicle to Datius, Bp. of Milan (who d. A.D. 552 or 553), by a large number of writers, apparently copying from one another, naturally gave great credit to this tradition; but it is now destitute of any other authority than that which may be given it by the reference of Hincmar above quoted.

2. The absolute disproof of such a tradition is not easy nor perhaps possible, especially as internal evidence tends to fix the composition to a period very near the time suggested. But the comparative lateness of its appearance, the variety of other claims to authorship at about the same date, and the apparent use of S. Jerome's revision of the Psalter in the Isst 8 verses, pointed out by Mr. Gibson (p. 22 foll.) pointed out by Mr. Gibson (p. 22 foll.) combine to deprive this tradition of any real probability. The coincidences are rather with S. Jerome's second revision, the so-called Gallican Psatter, dated 388 A.D., than with the Roman Psatter, his first revision of 382. As S. Augustine was baptized in 385 the conclusion is fairly strong as regards the hymn in its present form, although the verses in question, as we shall see presently, do not belong to the body of the hymn. The disproof of the claims of S. Ambrose will carry with it those of S. Hilary of Poitiers (d. A.D. 368), and probably also of Nicetius of Vienne (circa A.D. 379). Nicetius Abp. of Treves A.D. 527-568 is certainly too late. But Gennadius († 496) in his de viris ill. mentions "Niccas (or Nicetas) Romacianae civitatis episcopus" as writing 6 books civitatis episcopus" as writing 6 books of instruction to candidates for baptism and ad Virginem lapsam. Paulinus of and ad virginem topsam. Familias of Nola had a great friend, Nicetes or Niceta, a Dacian Bishop, who visited him in 398 and 402, whose learning and poetry he praised highly: Ep. 29, Carm. 17 and 27 passim. He is prob. the same person, and also = the Nicetus or Nicetus praised by Cassiodorus (de instit. div. lit. 16). Under these circumstances from G. Morin's corp. these circumstances Dom G. Moria's conjecture (above, iii. γ) that Niceta of Remesiana, Bp. 392-414, is the author of the T. D. is very plausible. It is accepted by Zahn, Kattenbusch, W. H. Frere and A. E. Burn, who has published his works, 1905. But see

7 end.

8. If therefore we take the date of the Gallican Psalter as a probable terminus a quo for the origin of the hymn in its present form, we have next to ask what is the superjor limit of date which can be fixed for it? The first actual reference to the hymn is in the rule of S. Caesarius of Arles, drawn up, it is said, before his elevation to the episcopate in 502 A.D. It is here ordered as part of the Sunday morning service (Regula ad Manachas, xxi. = PP. Lat. 67, p. 1102). It is ordered also by S. Aurelian of Arles to be said "omni Sabbato ad matutinos" (PP. Lat. 68, p. 396), and by S. Benedict to be said on Sunday "and vigilias," when it is to precede the Gospel which is to be followed by the little hymn Te deest laus (Regula, cap. xi. = PP. Lat. 66, p. 436). All these cite the hymn simply by its first three words.

f. These indications point to the 5th century as the date of the hymn, and to its first rather than to its second half, since by the end of the century it had gained a recognized position almost equal to that of the ancient Psaims. Fifty years is not too long to allow for the growth of this popular acceptance, and allowing some time for the popular acceptance of S. Jerome's Gallican Psailer at Te deum as it now appears in our prayerbooks about 400-450 A.D.

5. An attempt has been made to define the date more precisely by an ingenious comment on the 16th verse. Dr. Swamson wrote (Dict. Car. Ant. II. p. 1950 B.), "The phrase suscepit hominem was current in the time of S. Augustine, but went out of favour after the Nestorian controversy; it gave place to the phrase adsumpsit humanitatem or humanam naturam." Mr. Gibson accepts this dictum (C. Q. R. 18, p. 10) as a second proof of the date already suggested, and possibly as throwing the date further back in the 5th century.

It is certainly à priori not unnatural to

suppose that hominem suscipere would be a phrase viewed with suspicion, since the Council of Ephesus in 431 condemned a creed. attributed by the presbyter Charisius to Theodore of Mopsuestia, in which the crucial phrase descriptive of the Incarnation is & δεσπότης Θεός λόγος άνθρωνον είληφε τέλειον, έκ οπέρματος ύντα Αβραάμ καὶ Δαυίδ, κ.τ.λ. (ap. Labbe, Concil. iii. pp. 677 and 689). The words avenuever examps could only be rendered hominem suscepit or adsumpsit. The text also of the different forms of the Te Deum shows more variation in this 16th verse than in any other, and that of a kind which suggests that a difficulty was felt as to the propriety of the lauguage. The original reading appears to have been that preserved in the Irish text (as Bp. Lightfoot is said to have been the first to suggest, C. Q. R., vol. 18, p. 10, note 2) which runs as follows: "Tu ad liberandum mundum suscepisti hominem." There is a Johannine and Pauline fulness about this (reminding us of John iii, 16, 17, iv. 42; 1 John iv. 14; Rom, viii. 21; Epb. i. 10, &c.), and it is also so clearly intelligible, that it is difficult not to believe it the true reading. The other readings are easily explicable as derived from it, possibly through the loss of "mundum" on account of similarity of ending with "liberandum," possibly from a wish not to lay so much stress on the phrase "suscipere hominem." which might be misinterpreted in a Nestorian sense. In the Milan text and in one of the early English versions the verb "suscepisti" is omitted altogether, and the two parallel clauses are united into one sentence, "Tu ad liberandum hominem non horruisti virginis uterum." In the common text of the old Mss. the parallelism is preserved, "Tu ad liberan-dum suscepisti hominem; Non horruisti virginis uterum," but the ambiguity is intro-duced as to whether "suscepisti" is to be rendered "thou tookest man upon thee to deliver (him)," which is a harsh ellipse; or "thou tookest upon thee to deliver man" as we render it (since the last Primer of Hen. viii., 1546) - which is scarcely good Latin. The modern printed text again, which was used by Hinemar in the 9th, and insisted upon by Abbe of Fleury in the 10th century, reads in one sentence, to avoid the susco-luthon, "Tu ad liberandum susceptures hominem non horruisti virginis uterum?—but this, though as old as Cyprian of Toulon, c. 524, appears to be a mere correction for the sake of supposed elegance or orthodoxy, such as the beginning of the period, we may date the is often made nowedays by editors of hymns.

6. What then are the facts as to the use of the phrases "suscipere" or "assumere hominem" by the Fathers? This question has been discussed by Gerhard, Loci theologici IV., vi. § 96, in opposition to Bellarmine who accused Brentius of Nestorianism for having said, "Filius dei assumpsit filium hominis." Though it is not easy to verify Gerhard's quotations, it is possible to add many to them.

S. Cyprian does not seem to use either purase exactly, though he twice employs the idlom, "hominem induit," though he twice employs the idlom, "hominem induit," dynod feich die nor sunt, 11 and 14). Otters however do not shrink from it, having on their side Biblical authority in two striking phrases: (1) the old version of Hebrewe it. 10 (Sabatier), "nee enim statim angeles adsangest sed semen Abrahae suscepti" (enhangiaeraa); and (2) the frequent use in the Psalter of "susceptomeus" = arribinaryophou, answering to various Hebrew words, which was sometimes taken literally as "he who takes me up" or "upon himseli." Much stress cannot be laid upon the use of the Latin version of S. Irensens, though it was probably made early and widely read. Here we find "facero ut at Deus assumers hominem," &c. = rai dec net mapacrificat vio subparavi, x. x. lift is, 7. S. Hillary of Potters comes very near the usage of the Te Deuss in his note on "susceptor mans." Pe. ixi. (Heb. Ixii.) § 2, 3, and he schully nees "assumere" (though not "suscipere") "hominem," de Trin. lix, 3e. Ambrone too goes closely up to it, but scarcely workes it, so far as has been as yet observed. In de Fide, vi. § 60, he has the remarkable phrase "quanvis experience homines incarnati susceptione loqueretur" (or, as variously read, expersona hominis in carnotis susceptione). but in his treatise de Incarnatione, while he constantly uses the verb "susceptione loqueretur" (or, as variously read, expersona hominis in carnotis ensemblem, "ensemmer." it is always apparently with "carnem." "expuss," "anilmam," "expuss," an manum, "en sum," "nostran asturam, "nostran asturam, "nostran asturam, "nostran asturam as mounted hand her bleum.

On the edder hand, the nitras apparat to be videly

On the other hand, the phrase appears to be widely used by S. Augustine and with great obdiness, repeatedly for instance in his de Pracestinations Sunctorum, where he does not shrink from asking the question, "life homo, ut a verbo Patri conterno, in unitatem personne assumptus, Filius hei unignoitus esset, unde hoe mernit?" (see cap. xv. § 30, 31). Taken alone, it is obvious how open such a speculation is to a Nestorian misconstruction, Other instances are Ecron al Catech, 8, de Fide et Symbols 8 ("ut totum hominem used pare dignaretur in utero virginia") and 18, Enchiribion 26, ep. de Trise, I. vii. 14, "propter acceptum hominem," and de Civitate Dei xi. 2, "assumpto homine." Probably S. Augustine's use is the strongest instance, but we also find the phrase used by writters in the midst of the Nestorian controversy and later. Such are Leporius, in his recantation made about a.D. 420, quoted by John Cassian, and Cassian himself (de Inc. contro Nestorium, i. 6 and il. 3, where he also uses the phrase "homo unitus Deo") and S. Leo, p. 183, ed. 2). It may be that, as Mr. Gibson suggests, both Cassian and Leo are more cautious in their later hooks, but they are not the latest writers who use the phrase. Vigilius Tapaensis (circa a.D. 480 writes: "Ingressus set virginis nterum del fillus, ... et succept totum hominem qui tam habebat a patre plenissimam deltatem" (de Unitate Trinitatis xiv. = I'P. Lat. 62, p. 343). Another sofferer from Vandal persecution in Africa, Fulgentius of Ruspe, use the phrase requently, both with "hominem" alone and qualification io, 7, 8, 27, parallel naturally with a similar use of humanitas" and "care"). Florus Lugdunensis de Ecpositione Missae in the 8th cent. § 5 (PP. Lat., 112, p. 91 c) list he last author that neade quoted for "suscipere" with "tetum hominem" and "mortalem." The use of massumers hominem" by Boethes, de Persona et duadus Naturis, cap. 7, and by Ratrammus, de Corpore et Sanguines Domini 28, is of course closely perallel. Thomas Aquinas in the Sessma, pars ili, qu. 4, a

It seems, then, that Dr. Swainson's assertion is much too sweeping, and that though some authors may have grown shy of the phrase "succipere hominem," during or soon after the Nestorian controversy, others did not feel scrupulous about it. The names of Augustine, Leporius (and with him Cassian), Vigilius, and Fulgentius suggest that the African school especially accepted the phrase as a convenient and telling one and without any fear of being misunderstood. The use of the double phrase "totum hominem suscipere in utero virginis" by S. Augustine, and of "ingressus est virginis uterum . . . et suscepit," by Vigilius, is also a point of contact with the hymn. How far does this fall in with other probable evidence?

7. Merati long ago suggested that the Te Deum originated in Southern Gaul and particularly in the school of Lerins, though his further conjecture that S. Hilary of Arles was the author does not seem a happy one. This auggestion is adopted by Daniel in general terms (p. 288) and is also considered probable by Mr. Gibson, as far as Gaul and Lerins are concerned. The evidence in favour of Gaul drawn by the last writer from the Contestationes or prefaces of the Gallican Sacramentaries is certainly very striking, and is important even if we conclude that the hymn is older than the Liturgies. Such are particularly: " Dignum et instum est . . . ut te dominum ac deum totis visceribus humana conditio veneretur" (Missale Gothicum, p. 604, and Gallicanum, p. 753); "Omnis terra adorat to et confiletur tibi; sed et caell caelorum et angelicae potestates non cessant laudare, dicentes Sanctus," &c. (Miss. Goth., p. 518); "Quem angeli et archangeli quem throni et dominationes quem Cherubin et Seraphin incessabili voce proclamant, dicentes Sanctus," &c. (Mone's Missa, ii.); and others in the later verses which deserve to be read, though none of them touch verse 16. Tho early adoption of S. Jerome's revision of the Pealter by Gallican writers points also in the same direction; and the fact that Caesarius of Arles, who was a disciple of the famous school of Lerins (in the little island of St. Honoratus between Antibes and Fréjus), is the first person known to have used the hymn, gives a certain plausibility to the conjecture of Merati with regard to the specific locality of its origin. But verse 16 is a difficulty, since the phoase "suscipere hominem" appears to be African rather than Gallican. It is natural then to think of Cassian, whose monastery at Marseilles was probably the model for that of Lerins, and whose intercourse with S. Honoratus is well known, as the intermediary link in this as he was in some other greater matters. It is not suggested that Cassian himself was the nuthor or compiler, but that he brought the hymn to Lerins. It is noticeable that "suscipere hominem" does not appear in the prose works attributed to Niceta. but "carnem suscepit humanam," de symbolo 10. v. Origin and Intention.—If therefore it is

v. Origin and Intention.—If therefore it is impossible to fix the authorship of the To Deum, can we go any further in the enquiry as to its origin?

I. A careful comparison of the four parallel columns given under the head of Text (§ ii.) will suggest at any rate some interesting conclusions. In the first column we have placed the Irish text, mainly from the Bangor Anti-phonory, which is by internal evidence dated between A.D. 680-691 (Warren's Liturgy and Bitual of the Celtic Church, p. xiii.). This text appears to be the most primitive. In the second we have a version which is that of a Breviary of Milan Cathedrai (kindly collated for this article by Dr. Ceriani) and of an early Psalter in the Vatican library described by Thomasius. In the third is the ordinary version found in mess; and in the fourth a Greek version extending to the first eleven or twelve verses found in four or five mess, three from the school of S. Gall (at S. Gall, Bamberg and Cologne) and one from Tournai (at Paris). The version of the Mozarabic Breviary is interesting, but seems to require more careful editing.

2. Most students of the hymn now recognise the triple division of its 29 verses: (I) The "Te Denm" proper (1-11), preceded in the Irish text by the antiphon "Laudate paerl," &c.; (2) the hymn "Tu rex glorine" (12-21); (3) the antiphons "Salvum fac" and "Per singules dies"—in inverse order in the Milan text-followed in the common use by certain Preces, or versicles and responses, of which there are four sets in the current text (22-29). Of these 8 parts (1) consists of hymn to the blessed Triuity in two parallel divisions, (A) verses 1-6 being the Praise of Earth and Heaven, particularly of the Angels, ending with the Augelic Tersanetus in the western or Latin form, and (B) verses 7-11 being the "Confession" of the Church on Earth, based on the language of S. Cyprian, and ending with a Trinitarian Gloria. This is a sort of Christian counterpart to Psalm 148. Each verse (except the Glorias) begins with "Te" or "Tibi." Part (2) is a continuous hymn to Christ, proclaiming the mysterics of His divine worship, incarnation, atoning death, and opening of heaven, session and future coming to judge, ending with a prayer for those whom He has redeemed and for their future glory. Every verse begins with "Tu" or "Te," except 19, "Index crederis," which in the Irish version (reading " sedens") is not a separate verse but a part of 18. There is thus a contrast between (1) and (2), but also a continuity of structure; and it can hardly be doubted that (2) was written as a continuation of (1), even if (1) existed by itself first. The rhythm (sometimes called "Cursus Leoninus") is the same also throughout, every line ending with two feet which, when scanned accentually, may be roughly described as equivalent to the end of a hexameter vorse. Seven have the exact hexameter ending (* | '-'), viz., vice proclément, deus sabáoth, glóriae túae, glóriae Christe, regna caelórum, glória pátris, ésse ventúrus. Seven end with two dactyls: landábilis númerus, laudat exércitus, confitétur ecclésia, unigenitum (or unicum) filium, peráclitum spiritum (acc. to Greek accent often accepted in Latin verses), sempitérnus es fílius, vírginis uterum. One ends with two sponders: apostolorum chorus. The other six have a less regular ending in which final quadrisyllables, accented on the penultimate, take the place of spondece, viz., dóminum confitémor, térra veneratur, universue potestates, imménsae moiestátis, sanguine redemisti, glória mu-

Similar rhythmical endings are found in the first half of lines 16, 17, 20. See more on this rhythm in Burn, Int. to Creeds, &c., 248-252, and Niceta, cix.-exii.

3. Mr. Gibson's suggestion that these antiphons were transferred from the Greek morning hymn Gloria in excelsis to the Latin morning hymn, when it took its place in the daily service, is very plausible (C, Q, R, 21, p, 20)This accounts for the variety of the three endings, since these antiphons did not belong to the original hymn and were felt to be public property to be used as liturgists thought most fitting. It is also noticeable that a similar antiphon, "Laudate pueri dominum : laudate nomen domini," precedes the hymn in the Irish version in the Bangor Antiphonary and in the Dublin Book of Hymns, being the antiphon to the short Greek evening hymn at the end of the viith book of the Apostolic Constitutions, which hymn closes with the gol where alres, &c. Hence we conclude that the Te Deum as first used as a whole in the Latin Church consisted of verses 1-2t, ending with the words "aeterna fac cum sauctis [+ tuis?] gloria munerari "= "make them to be gifted in company with the saints with eternal giory." The musical evidence given below strongly confirms this.

4. Can we analyse any further? Not with any certainty; but the Greek version of the first part, existing in four use, suggests prima facie that verses 1-10 down to "sancta confitctur exclesia" were originally a separate Greek hymn and were an address to Christ as God; that the Trinitarian passage (11-13) is an insertion, a sort of doxology added at the end like that in the Te decet laws; and that 14-21 is an exclusively Latin composition ("Tu rex gloriae Christe..... gloria munerari").

rex glories Christe... gloria munerari").

5. That hymns were addressed to Christ as God as early as the 1st and 2nd centuries is not only suggested by the well-known passage of Pliny's letter to Trajan (x. 96), but asserted apparently by S. Hippolytus (ap. Euseb. Hist. Eccl. v. 28) who speaks of Psalms and Odes of the brethren "written by faithful men from the beginning, which hymn Christ the Word of God calling him God" (*vòν λόγον τοῦ θαοῦ τὸν Χριστὸν ὁμισοῦσι θαολογοῦντες). There would be nothing historically improbable in the supposition that verses 1–10 were a Greek hymn dating back to the 2nd cent. and known in a Latin form to S. Cyprian in the 3rd cent. The passage of his de Mortalitats (ch. 26, written circa a.D. 252) seems, as Abp. Benson remarks, something more then a coincidence. He is speaking of course of the joys of heaven:

"Hile apostolerum gloriosus chorus, lille prophetarum exultantium numerus, illic martyrum innumerabita populus ob certaminis et passionis glorium et victorium coronatus, triumpliantes virgines . . . remunerati misericordes," &c.

It is not however close enough to suggest that the first part of the hymn, as we have it, was known to him by frequent usage, else we should expect some other opithet than "exultantium," and some reference to the white robes of the martyrs. On the whole it seems safest to conclude that verses 7-9 are a reminiscence of S. Cyprian, not vice versa; and that the Greek form of verses 1-10 is a translation from the Latin, not an original composition. Yet this is to be observed (1) that the Te decet laws and the Gloria in sxeels is are both from a Greek original; (2) that the other canticles in the Quadruple Psalters have their | Greek originals, in parallel columns, in just the same writing and style as the To Deum; and (8) that there is nothing in verses 1-10 which reads like a translation except the form of the Tersanctus and a phrase which we shall discuss below, verse 8. It is only necessary to read them in a form which is more easy for curselves than the Latin characters into which the Greek of the Psalter is (as usual) transliterated, to be convinced of their genuine ring of strength and simplicity.*

- 1. 2 θεδο (θεδο Β.) αίνοθμεν · σε κύριον έξομολογούμεν 1
- 2. Ζὲ αἰώνιον πατέρα πᾶσα ἡ γῆ [σέβεται]. 3. Σοί τάντες άγγελοι, σοί οδρανοί και πάσαι Clovelai,
- 4. Σολ χερουβίμ καλ σεραφίμ άκαταπαύστφ pari arakoa avotr .
- 5. "Αγιος άγιος άγιος κύριος ὁ θεὸς σαβαώθ . 6. Πλήρεις οδρανοί και ή γη της μεγαλωσύνης της δάξης σού.
- 7. Σε δεδοξασμένος ἀποστόλων χορός ·
- 8. Σὲ προφητών αίνετὸς ἀριθμὸς
- 9. Σὲ μαρτύρων ἔκλαμπρος αίνεῖ στρατός •
- 10. Σὲ κατά πάσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην ἡ δγία έξομολογεί έκκλησία.

In verse 2 we notice the absence of a verb after γη, such as σέβεται. This is an argument, it may be, for the mutilation of the Greek copy from which the scribe wrote, but does not suggest (as verses 11 and 12 do) an attempt at translation by an ignorant person. For any one who could (ex hypothesi) translate so freely, using for instance the compound words which this writer does, would have been able to find an equivalent for "veneratur." Its absence might indeed be explained as an omission from carelessness on the part of a scribe who was making an interlinear gloss, such as seems occasionally to be met with in the versions about to be examined. But such omissions of words may equally be set down to carelessness of transcription, e.g. the Murbach O.G. Ms. omits to gloss "redemisti" in verse 20; which is probably merely an accident in copying. The only other verse which calls for remark in point of style is the 8th, where the use of documes is rather peculiar. The verses after the Trisagion rise to a gradual climax in point of extent. First comes the small and well-defined band of Apostles (ep. χορός προφητών, 1 Sam. x. 5, 10, and χορός εἰρήνης at the close of the hymn of Clement of Alexandria), then the well-disciplined and therefore praiseworthy regiment (numerus) of prophets, then the bright-clad army of martyrs, then the universal Church. Now there is no doubt that "numerus" constantly means a regiment, from the time of Tacitus onwards, but this use of aposude is not so common. It is found indeed in the LXX in Isa. xxxiv. 24=tsaba, in 1 Macc. ix. 65, and in later writers as noticed by Sophocles, Lexicon, s. v., and it may be remarked that belocaquevos and alverby occur together in the Greek Song of the Three Children and in the Antiphons to the Gloria in excelsis. We are however bound to notice that the Tersancius follows the wording of the Latin Mass (God of hosts and heavers instead of heaven), and not that of the Greek Liturgies. This is an almost conclusive argument against the originality of the Greek poem, at any rate as it has come down to us.

6. But this version, if not original, is the work of one to whom Greek was thoroughly familiar, and implies that verses 1-10 are a separate hymn. For the peculiar form of verse 11 in all three mss., and of verse 12 in the S. Gall. Ms., and the absence of verse 18 (see Text, § ii. p. 1120) betray an incompetent and bungling hand attempting to translate at a later date and dropping the attempt. The barbarous word "enmeso" or "emmeso" can sourcely be anything else than a puerile transliteration or vague representation of "inmense," remembering the length of s in Latin before as and the forms Κάστας, Kρήσκης, &c., for "Constant," "Croscent. which show how easily the n was dropped in such a position. No true Greek word can be thought of (such as autroov) of which "enmeso" could be a corruption.

The next verse in the S. Gall as,, on the other hand, might be a bad copy of a correct but mutilated or blotted line, but on the whole it is most probable that the "ali th eikon" represents a barbarous ἀληθικόν, not a blurred anglevov, formed on the analogy of such words as anglevents, singleting, &c. The absence of the last line would then be due to the interpreter's consciousness of failure, or at any rate to his self-distrust, unless the theory of an incomplete doxology be resorted to, as in the grace after meat at the close of the Apostolic Constitutions.

7. The arguments in favour of the theory that this early part of the hymn is in intention an address to Christ are chiefly based on the first verse and on the use of the accusative case in it, "We praise thee who art God; we acknowledge thee who art the Lord." parallel of the Gaillian Contestatio quoted above, which is addressed distinctly to our Lord, is very striking, and we are also necessarily reminded of the confession of S. Thomas, "My Lord and my God." The application of the Trivacion to the second person of the Trinity is also justified by the quotation from Issiah, chap. vi. 10, made by S. John, and by his description of the scene from which it is taken, "These things said Essias when he saw his glory and spake of him" (John xii. 41). The only real difficulty is in the alwnow πατέρε or "acternum patrem," which we should expect to find as an equivalent to abi-ad in the versions of Isaiah ix. 6, but do

^{*} They differ very much from the Greek translation in the Ambrosian MS, of the 15th cent. (C. 13, inf.) which Mr. Gibson has kindly transcribed for this article, which appears to be simply a very rough and un-acholatry attempt at rendering into Greek from the Latin, and which is only a fragment. It runs as follows literatin.

Τέ δευν αινούμεν σε κύριον όμωλογούμεν. Σα του άιδιον ποτερα πασα ή γη στόνται. Σοῦ πάντε άγγελοι στο ούρανου καὶ πάσαι έξουσιαι. Σε τόν μαρτύρων ἡ ἐκλεμπρος ἐπειὰ στρατιά. Τό rendering of the Greek Prayer-book printed by Field, Cambridge, 1656, is naturally better than this Milan text, but is not so good as that of our form MSS. The article is less exactly used. In verse ὁ ἐκβοῶστο πος so good an ἀνακράζουσεν, and in verse ὁ μεγαλειότης is not so good as μεγαλωσύνη. Σλ θεὰν αἰνούμεν σε κύριον ὁμολογούμεν.

not exactly find, the nearest being Symmachus's wardp aleros.

8. On the whole the parallel of the angelic

Tersanctus, after the angelic praise, to the Trinitarian dexology, after the Church's praise, pointed out by Dr. Gibson, strongly reinforces the arguments in favour of the originality of the Latin text as we have it. and emphasises the Trinitarian intention of the whole first part.

vi. Versions. 1. Old German. The old-German version is possibly the earliest that has come down to us, unless the Anglo-Saxon may be considered earlier. It is contained in a Ms. essigned to the earlier part of the 9th century, where it formed the last of a series of twenty-seven hymns. The first twenty-five are metrical Latin hymns (all in Daniel), with an interlinear old German or Theotise gloss. No. 26 is the "Te deect laus" to which reference has been frequently made in this article, which was wrongly attached by Grimm, following Junius and Price, to No. 25. No. 27 (Grimm, 26) is the Te Deum which, like all the rest, is in the form of an interlineur gloss.

The volume in which this important collection is bound up is No. 25 in the library of F. Junius, since A.b. 1638 in the Bodietan library. From a note on fel. 1638. (p. 33 of the Giossary) it is known to have belonged to the Abbey of Murbach (M. Morbacense, Munsterthal), in southern Alsaca, in the middle of the 15th century (A.D. 1461). Whether it was written there or at the mother house of Reichemau (M. Augiense) is, of course, matter of conjecture; but there are reasons for inclining to the latter opinion. Through the temporary disappearance of this volume, or through the carelessness with which its contents were investigated—for hymnis 22-27, in a different but hardly later hand, have long been which its contents were investigated—for hymns 22-27, in a different but hardly later hand, have long been bound before hymns 1-21—this collection has been chiefly known from a transcript made by Junius (No. 24). Another transcript (No. 110) is said to have been tolen when Dr. Owen was librarian (a.D. 1747-1768). Four of the hymns, including the R. Beaus, were printed by Dr. Geo. Hickes in his Grasswattes frameo-theotica, Orf. 1703; the Person was printed alone by J. G. Eccard at Heimstädt in 1713, and the others in his Francia or lendairs at Wilrahmy in 1729. The first complete edition of the 26 (121) hymns was published by Jakob Grimm at Göttingen in 1830, but based, as he tells us in his preface, upon a copy made for him by Jacob Origina Lecturinger in 1839, but once, as he tells us in his preface, upon a copy made for him by Dr. Price, Bodley's librarian, who died in 1813. This copy was unfortunately not from the Morbach MS., but from Junius's transcript, No. 74. From this edition of Grimm's others have reprinted, such as K. E. P. Wackernagel (Das dealsche Kirchenbied von Mertin Luther bis taget Dat acatisate Association of Metrics Latter stail Nicolaus Herman, Sc., No. 70, p. 40, Statigart, 1841), who is followed by Daniel II. 277; and instity Thomson Wackermagel has a few useful notes, 1841, pp. 864. It did not reprint these old German hytims it his great collection Dan deutsche Kirckenfied von der Sitzelen Zeit bis zu Anfang der zwit. Jakrinniderit, vols. 1-v., Lelpa.

1864-1877. In 1874, however, Prof. Ed. Slevers edited the whole from the original MS. (Die Murbacher Hymnen such der Handachrift herungegeben at Halle), printing, like frimm, the Latin and German in parallel columns, which a useful introduction and glossary. He, like others, assigns the MS, to the early part of the 9th century, but the interlinear gloss is very probably older, inasmuch as over some words there are two glosses standing side by side, showing that the MS, was based upon a doubte tradition of the Garman version. It is also remarkable that in many cases only the termination is written, while the steam of the word is left to be supplied by the reader—which implies a rather unusual condition of knowledge of languages. These stems are supplied by the editors in which implies a rather unusual condition of knowledge of languages. These stems are supplied by the editors in square brackets; the contractions are indicated by italics. The following are the double giosses in the #P Dense. Verse 2 uneratur=unirdit eret; verse 17 deutcto=kerihieme, but uberummonno is also written in the margin; verse 32 populus=foth lint.

The following are the most important verses:-

In verse 8 the word "kasconnet" for "candidatus" appears to mean "adurned" or "spleudid." The same word is found as a translation of "ornavit" in st. iii, in No. xi. in this ws.

Thomson prints a High German Te Deam from a Pealter printed at Basel (1502) beginning: 1 "Wir hoben dich dot: wir bekennen dich Her. 2 "Alle erd eret dich ewigen Vater." Verse 15 runs "Du zu erlöung an dich senemen den menschen, hast nit versetimecht den leib der junkfrawen," and 21 "Haisz ay begabet werden, mit den halligen, mit der ewigen era." Other notices of German verkons may be found in Daniel (II. pp. 292, 3). Lother loved the bymu and strongty recommended its use; and his translution (made in 1529) "Rerr Gott dich lohen wir" (n. 1134. 1.) is still in use. Another version nsa; and his translution (made in 1889) "Herr Gott dich loben wir" (p. 1134, i.) is still in use. Another version by H. von Meyer, beginning like Luther's, is much praised by Daniel and printed by him at ii, pp. 278-9. The following lines show its character: "Uns at eres a hast! Du dich in's Fletsch gesenkt, Uns durch dein Todespein [Himmilsche Freud geschenkt," and "Lass six nach dieser Noth | Haben in Friede Theil] Mit deinen Heilgen all'n] Dort an dem ewgen Heil."

2. Old-French. Three versions are printed by Thomson, pp. 45-52, one from MS. Harl. 1770 and two from Harl. 273, in verse and prose. Both ass. appear to be of the 14th century, and the latter to come from Ludlow. Prof. Samuel Berger, of the Protestant Theological Faculty at Paris, bas kindly supplied other copies; (1.) from the Psalter of Eadwin (Tr. Coll. Camb. R. 17.1, copied at Canterbury circa A.D. 1120); (2.) from the so-called "Psalter of Corbie" (Paris B. Nat. Lat. 768); (3.) from the Angie-Norman Bible copied for John de Wellea, d. 1361 (Paris B. Nat. Franç. 1, cp. Berger, La Bible Francaise au Moyen Age, p. 324, 1881). He has also made notes on a number of others, from which it is clear that there was a very large variety of French versions of this hymn current in England and France in the middle ages. We give select verses from those not readily accessible.

Mr. Berger remarks on the whole question, "Cette multiplicité des traductions du distance..." (21. "Est des pous observors nour le whole question, "Cette multiplicité des traductions de 17 deux, contraira à ce que nous observous pour le Peautier, me paraît assez facile à expliquer. D'abord c'était un texte ilturgique que chacun avait en memoire et d'après lequel le copiste retouchait et rajeunissalt presque inschiectment son texte; en outre, tous les Psautiers ne contenzient pas cet appendice, en sorte que le copiste ne trouvait pentèrre pas la traduction française du Te deux dans son original et il y supplicat comme il potraib."

In the French Protestant churches there are in use two versions, one in prose and the other in verse. The prose version is the older being found in the Liturgie de Montbeliard, Strasbourg, 1844. It is reprinted in the Liturgic dans l'Eglise de la Confession d'Augsbourg, Nancy, 1887, p. 20. Its first words are

" Nous célébrons tes louanges, ô Dieu, et nous recommissons que tu es le Seigneur." It is not very exact (e.g. " La glorieuse assemblée des apôtres, des prophêtes et des martyrs célèbre tes louanges") or spirited, and it is, says M. Berger, rarely used. On the other hand the hymn in verse "Grand Dien nous te bénissons, Nous célébrons tes louanges. which is by the famous Genevan pictist, H. L. Empeytuz (d. 1853), is sung at all national festivals and thanksgiving services in all the churches in which the French language is used. It may be found in Recueit de Cantiques à l'usagn des églises évangéliques de France, Paris, Rue Chauchat, 1876, &c. It is not however so much a translation as a partial adaptation. It is curious that it wholly omits the central doxology (verses 11-13) and therefore, perhaps by accident, reproduces what we have supposed to be the original intention of the hymn. Verse 16 is also wholly omitted. The last three stanzas, 8-10, have a very faint resemblance to the original. The last is a doxology often used at the end of the ordinary service :--

"Gloire soit an Saint-Esprit! Gloire soit à Dieu le Père ! Gloire soit à Jésus-Christ, Notre époux et notre frère ! Son immense charità Dure à perpétuité."

Another metrical rendering is given, together with that of Empeytez, but anonymously, in Recuell de Psaumes et Cantiques à Pusage des Églises Réformées, Paris and Strasburg, 1859, in 14 sts., beginning:—

"Grand Dieu, nous te louone, nous t'adorone, Seigneur, Et nous voulons chanter un hymne en ton homeur."

3. Anglo-Saxon and English. (1.) Thomson prints two Anglo-Saxon versions, one from B. M. Ms. Arundel, No. 60, of the 11th century, the other from the Brit. Mus. Ms. Vesp. A. I., ascribed in the catalogue to the 5th century. There is also a tenth century MS. Psatter (Lambeth, No. 227), which contains it. They vary considerably from one another, but in such a way us to suggest a common origin.

The version of the Lambeth as., Fol. 195, is here given as it appears never to have been printed. Some words are unglessed, and the gloss is supplied from the context or the margin or from the Arundel as. [in square brackets].

Hymnum trium puerorum, etc.

(2.) The latter part of the 14th and the beginning of the 15th century saw a considerable spread of English prayers and devotions, as well as of versions of the Scripture. Mr. Maskell has printed three of these in his Monumenta Ritualia Eccl. Anglic. 1846, viz. in vol. ii. pp. 12-14, from a us. of about 1410 in his own possession, ib. pp. 229, 230, from the Bodleian House MS. 275, and pp. 231, 232, from the Douce MS. 246, both probably a few years later than 1410. The British Museum also contains two in Add. MSS. 10046 and 31044, and others are mentioned by Maskell in his preface, pp. xxxiii. xxxiv. The relation of these versions to the Wyclifflite movement is too difficult a question to be discussed here, as it belongs to the general history of the Primer in English. A few readings from these three ms. however will be of interest.

MS. I reads in verse 1, 2. "We berien thee God, we knowleehyn thee lord. Thee, everlastynge fadir: al the erite worchipith." 16. "Thou wert not skoymus of the maidens wombe to delyner mankynde" [= the Milan version oss. susceptsti). 21. "Make hem to be rewardki with thi seyntem: in blisse with euclastinge glorie" [perhaps a conflation of two versions].

(perhaps a conflation of two versions).
Other remarkable phrases in it are: 5. "Lord god of vertues;" 13. "Ours comfortour" (and so MS. 2, MS. 3); 14. "Thou, crist, kyng of glorle" (similarly MS. 2 and MS. 3); 17. "For thou ouercament the sharpnesse of death"; 18. "Ou goddis rist syde" [so MS. 2 and MS. 3); 19. "Thou art bihaved to be jugo to come"; 29. "be I not schent withouten ende" [similarly MS. 2, MS. 3).

29. "be I not schent withouten ende" [similarly MS. 2, MS. 3].

MS. 2 and MS. 3 agree much together and with the British Museum MSS. MS. 2 begins, "Thee, God, we preisen: thee, Lord, we knowlechin" [similar MS. 3]. Verse 16" Thou wert not skoymes to take the maidenes wombe: to deliners mankynde" [nearly= DS. 3 and B. M. MSS.]; 21. "Make hem to be rewarded with the sayntes in endeles blisse" [so MS. 3 and B. M. MSS.]; 25. "And we preisen thi name into the world: and into the world of world" [so MS. 3. The B. M. MSS. read, "And we preisen thi name into the world of world."]

The two Brit, Mus. Add. MSS. 10046 and 31044 agree

The two Brit. Mus. Add. MSS. 10046 and 31044 agree closely with one another as well as with MS. 2 and MS. 3. The most remarkable phrases in those not already noticed are; verse 2, "every erthe worshipith;" 13, "and the holy goost counfortour;" 14, "Thou art kyng of glorie" [Oss "Christ," but 31044 reads "Thou Christ kyng of glorie," one "art"].

(3.) Another interesting text is that of The Myzoure of oure Ladye, a devotional treatise in English written for the use of the nuns of Sion (a bouse founded in the reign of Henry v.). It is in the form of a commentary on the services to be said by the muos, and is apparently quite independent of the preceding versions. The modern editor, Rev. J. H. Blunt (Early English Text Society, extra series, No. xix., 1873, p. ix.) inclines to the belief that the author was Dr. Thos. Gascoign, Warden of Merton, &c., in the middle of the 15th century. There is a certain beauty and freedom about the version of the Te Deum, e.g. "We praise thee, God, we knowledge the Lord. And all the earth worshippeth thee: endless Father. All angels ning to thee: beavens and all powers sing to thee. Discrubing and Scraphing sing to thee with one voice that never ceaseth."... 9. "The fair host of Martyra that are weaked white and fair in their own blood praise thee."... 16. "When thou abouldest take upon thee manking for the deliverance of man, thou hoydest not the Virgin's womb."... 21. "Make thy servants to be rewarded in endless biles with thy saints."... 23, 21. "Govern them here by grace and enhances them into biles without end. And we praise thy Name from time to time, unto the end of the world, and after without end."

(4.) The next text that has come to our notice is from the Prymer in Englyshe and in Latin sette out alonge; after the use of Sarum, Robert Valentin, 1504, where it is headed "The Songe of Austyn and Ambrose." This curious version is the first to read "We prayse the (ch God)," &c., as well as "Sabaothe" in v. 5, and "O Lord in the have I trusted." But its chief characteristic is peraphrase,

y. 5, and "O Lord in the have I trusted."

But its chief characteristic is paraphrase, e.g. verses in, 11 rm, "The boly congregacyon of faythfull throughe all the world magnyfy the. They knowladge the to be the father an infinite malestye. They knowledge thy honorable and very onely some. And the Holye Ghoste also to be a comforter." Verse 16, "Thou (when thon shouldest take upon the our nature to delyver man) dydest not abhorre a virgynes wombe."
Verse 21 has the modern mistake, for the first time.
"Make them to be numbered with thy saints in jog everlasting." Then follows the Pryster of 1535 (Three
"Make them to be numbered with thy saints in jog everlasting." Then follows the Pryster of 1535 (Three Pristers of Henry VIII., Oxford, 1834, p. 82) which sgress generally with the preceding, but has some curious peculiarities of its own; e.g. verses 5, 6. Holy art thou. Holy art thou. Holy art thou. Thou art the Lord God of houts. Heaven and earth are fulfilled with the glory of thy majesty; " v. 9, "The fair followship of martyrs praise thee." In v. 16 it agreengenerally with the preceding, but reads "the virgins," and proceda, "Thou hast opened the kingdom of heaven to the believers, death's dart overcome . . . Thou art believed to come our judge." This version is probably presupposed in the two other Primers (of 1838 and 1643), printed by Dr. Burton in the same volume, pp. 337 and 466, where the first words only are given—in the first case with the title, The Song of Angustin and Ambrotz.
The praise of God, the Futher the Son used the Holy Obest.

(5.) The version of the last Primer of (6.) The version of the last Primer of Henry viii. 1546 (reprinted in faceimile at the end of the 17th or beginning of the 18th century), and of the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. (1549) is practically the same as that in our Prayer-books. We have seen that the later versions gradually approach to the present, which is not a new one but merely a revision, based apparently upon a collation or reminiscence of several existing forms, which may plausibly be ascribed to Cranmer. It cannot be said to be successful in point of accuracy, though it is beautiful in its smoothness and rhythm. It appears to be the first to introduce the inaccurate renderings "when thou didst open the kingdom of heaven to all believers," the last evidently merely for the sake of caphony; and it stereotypes the misrcuderings "We praise thee, O God," and "make them to be numbered with thy saints to glory everlasting," the later, however, being a misreading, as we have seen, of somewhat earlier date. (See Notes on the Metrical Versions at the close of this article.)

5. Thomson prints a modern Swedish version beginning "O Gud! wi lofwe dig: O Herre! wi tacke dig." Verse 16 runs "Till människones forlosning togst du i Jungfru lifwe mandom," and v. 21 "Och gifwer dem den ewiga hälligheten med din Helgom." Quotations from the Kelandic version are given below.

6. Russian. The To Deum, though unknown in the Greek-speaking churches (which use the "Great Doxology," or Gloria in Ex-celsis in some form or other) is very popular in Russia. It is not sung at Mattine, but at what are called "molebni," which are short thanksgiving services connected with anniversaries, birthdays, &c. The "Great Doxology" is in these cases allowed as an alternative. It is always called the "Song of St. Ambrose," and appears to be translated almost word for word from the Latin, very much in the manner of an interlinear gloss. As the MSS, in which it occurs (according to the testimony of Prof. Pokroffski, of the Academy of S. Alexander Nevski at St. Petersburg) appear not to be older than the 17th century, it is not unlikely that it is of comparatively modern introduction. Mr. W. J. Birkbeck, to whom this in formation is due, suggests that it was intro-duced by Peter Mogila, who was at first a uniat, and was educated at Rome and Paris, and who, as Metropolitan of Kieff (circa 1630) introduced many useful reforms and practices from the West, while he guarded against certain Roman errors in doctrine. The Te Deum may be found on p. 220 of the Molitrostoff, or popular book of prayer for the City of St. Petersburg, Press of the holy Synod, 1886, and is headed, "A song of praise of St. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan." In verse 1 the accusative Bogs ("God") answers to Deum. In the Tersancius the fuller Latin form is used instead of that of the Liturgies and the copula (suti) = sunt would have been omitted in Slavonic except in a literal tr. In verse 16 the words mean "Thou for deliverance about to take upon Thee man didst not, &c." In verse 21 the words seem to represent "Dignare (ecs) cum sanctis tuis in seterna gloria tua regnare," which is the only serious departure from the original. The last verse runs "O Lord in thee have we trusted let us never be ashamed (postydizasja)."

vii. Liturgical Use. 1. The ancient Liturgical use has been touched upon in passing in noticing the earliest references to the hymn, in the monastic rules of Csesarius, Aurelian and Benedict. Palmer remarks that the usage prescribed by the first and second, who both appoint the hymn to be sung in the morning, is a kind of argument for their better acquaintance with the author's design than the rule of Benedict who ordered it to be sung at the nocturnal office on Sundays, i.e. on Saturday night (Orig. Lit. p. 228). From Sundays its use seems gradually to have extended to Saints' Days, and from the regular to the secular clergy.

Daniel, ii. p. 291, quotes Amalarius to shew that in Rome, in 631, it was not yet sung even on Sundays, "In terrogavist cancrent per Dominicas noctes To Detras : Hesponsum est: Tantum in Natalitiis pontificum Te Deues canimus." On the other hand, the old Benedictine use made no exception to the singing of the hymn on all festivals throughout the year. Benedictines were accused in the kith century of reciting the hymn even in Advent or Lent, when the rast of the Church usually dropped it (Daniel, p. 291). Technically speaking, its ordinary use is as a responsory to the ninth (or third) lesson at the end of Matins and just before Lands, but in the Benediction use the responsory is said as well. "In the ancient English offices," says Palmer (Or. Lit. p. 31), "the matins (nocturns) terminated with the Te Beuss, and were immediately followed by Lands (ancient and were immediately followed by Lauds (ancient matins)." As a general rule, it was said on all Sundays and Festivals; but in the Surum Brentary it is noted that it is not to be said in Advent or Lent (from Septuagesima to Easter), or on vigils, or generally in the Ember seasons. The Advent rubric is an follows: "Non dicatur Te Deuse per lutum Adventum, de quocumque fit servitium; sed minum Responsorium reincipiatur; et hoc flat in Dominicia et in testia ix, lectionum tantum, Non dicatur etiam per totum annum Te Beum landamus in vigilits, nec in Quatuor temporibus nisi in Vigilia Epiphaniae quando in Dominica contigerit et præterquam in qualuor temporibus ebdomade Penthecostes (Procter and Wordsworth's Surusa Brev. fasc. I., p. 30). The Septnagesima rubric runs, "Ab hac die usque ad Pascha non dicatur Te Deum, sive de Tempotali, sive de Festis Sanctorum fit servitium: sed semper nonum Responsorium reincipletur: et boe in Festis ix. Lectionum tantum. Non caim repetatur Responsorium in Commemorations Beats: Mariss, use de Festo loci." In agreement with this, there are special notes for S. Andrew's Day (Nov. 30), and the Conception of B. V. M. (Dec. 3) that it is not to be said. For the Purification (Feb. 3), the note is "Si Dominica Septuagesima has die contigerit, totum servitium fat de Festo; sed sine Alleluye et Te Deum.

The order as to saying the Te Down in the Roman Breviary (Rubrice generales, xxxi.) is very similar

- 2. As to the method of recitation we have the following statements and directions:--
- (1) Daniel Says (p. 294, b) "Si recitatur officium divinum in choro inchoatur canticom a Celebrante vel a præside chori : prosequentur reliqui stando in plurimis ecclesits alternatim canentes. Ad primum versiculum denudantur capita, el verba Sancias etc. et: Non horruitti virginii uterum profunde inclinatur. Quum per-ventum sit ad ululmam cantiel partem: Te ergo quatti-

(2) The rubric of the first Proper-book of Edward VI.
(1649) is as follows, at morang prayer: "After the first Lesson shall follow Te Deum laudamus, in English, daily throughout the year, except in Lent, all the which time, in the place of To Down shall be used Benedicits omnia Opera Domini Bontino in English as followeth." Later prayer-books order the Te Deum daily, but permit the Benedicite as an alternative.

(3) The following is from Wetzer and Holte s. v.:
"The To Deum is sung exceptionally to thank God for any great blessing. In such a case the To Deum conany great occasion. In such a case the 72 Dean con-stitutes by itself a religious solemnity, or it is attached to a solemn celebration of the mass, and is sung at the 1 end of the office. The Roman Fontifical enumerates several occasions on which the 72 Deam ought to be sung, for example at the consecration of a bishop, the coronation of a king, the consecration of a ringin. The Roman Carimonials adds the election of a Pope, the canonization of a saint, the publication of a treaty of peace, the conclusion of a treaty of alliance in favour of the Church. In Bayaria it is sung on the festival of the king and of the queen. In France is is used also on the festival of a sovereign, after confirmation, first Communion," &c. "The officiant vested in a cope and wearing a stole stands before the altar on which not less than four wax lights burn, surrounded by his assistants. When they sing the verse Te orgo questiones all kneel, except when the holy savrament is exposed. The colour usually white, except when it follows a mass, when it is that of the day."

is that of the day."

(4) "After the conclusion of an alliance in favour of the Church the Roman Curisionials gives the following:
"a Pater Noater then V. Salvos fac servos two domine B Dens mens sperantes in the V. Disalpa gentes que bella volunt. H Ul-berentur dilectiful et confitantur pominituo. V. Concede domine populo tuo ut elt el cor unum

(5) In the old English services the Te Deum was similarly used. It is a well-known feature in the Coronation Service of our kings and queens, though it does not appear in the oldest furms that have come down coes not appear to the chees luttus that have come gown to us, the Hisse pro regions in the Pontifical of Abp. Eghert (8th cent.) and the similar form in the Leafric Missel (Haskell iii. pp. 14-41, Warren Leafric Missel, 230-232). In the service for the consecration of King Ethelred A.D. 978 (B. M. Cotton MS. Claud. A. iii.), it forms the first act after the procession enters the Church "Perveniens rex ad ecclesiam prosternal se coram altare et hymnizetur. It Deum landamus: to dominum Then follows the triple oath to keep the confitemur." congressor." Inch mices the triple outs to keep the Church in peace; to suppress robbery and iniquity; to command equity and mercy in all judgments. Some time or other after the Norman Conquest the place of the Te Deam was changed from the beginning to the latter part of the service. It is mentioned in this place in the account of the coronation of King Richard II. 22 Jan. 1377, f.s. after the coronation itself, followed by the investiture with globe and sceptre, the benediction and the kiss, and before the mass (Maskell, iii. p. xxxiii.). This is practically where it is found at present, though the arrangement of the paris has been somewhat altered (cf. T. Silver, The Coronation Service, &c. Oxford, 1831, p. 74; J. F. Russell, The Coronation Service, &c. op. 18, 20). It is referred to by Shakspeare at the coronation of Anne Boleyn (Hen. vut. act tv. 8c. 1). It is possible that the use at the coronation of Khelred may have been in imitation of a continental custom. may have been in innection of a continental custom, aince the T Deten is said to have been sung at the coronation of Louis 1, (the Plous) by Pope Stephen IV. In 816 at Rheims, on his entry into the Church, and again at that of Charles the Bald in 869 at Mers. Louis also concluded the assembly of bishops at Tribur in 522 with a Te Deum. It is noticeable that Amularius, who is quoted above, was sent by the same Emperor on a in England it was regularly sung immediately after the election of a bishop. In the office for the employment of recursor or a usuop. In the omee for the enthrolization of a bishop it accompanies the central act (Aukel, ill. p. 283). It is also appointed at the reception of an archbishop's pail (6, p. 294) and before he is actually vested in it (6, p. 299).

(6) Other early instances of such occasional use are the translation of August 1.

(0) Other early unstances or such occasional use are the translation of S. Germanos (740), the restoration of Pope Leo III. to his See by Charles the Great, and the restoration of Ebbo, Abp. of Rheims (Daniel, p. 291). (7) The use of the hymn as a song of victory is referred to by Shakspeare, Hen. V. act iv. sc. 3 (taken from Holinabed):-

"Do we all boly rites; Let there be sung Non notes, and Te Deum. Handel's Dettingen To Down will also occur to every one.

Lastly the more than hazardons act of S. Bonaventura in travestying the Te Deum into a conticum Marianum may just be mentioned ("Te matrem Dei laudamus, te omnis terra veneratur, seterni patris sponsam"). It is, however, satisfactory to be informed that this had never been admitted into any public devotion, to the best of Daniel's knowledge (p. 293). [JOHN SARUM]

viii, Musical Settings.—One musical setting only of the Te Deum is to be found in the chore-liturgical books of the Western Church. Although slight differences appear in various dioceses, these are never more than mere local embellishments or variations, such as are constantly to be met with in local versions of the melody of the Preface, Pater Noster, and other invariable portions of the Latin services. Indeed, as Dom Pothier has pointed out in his Mélodies Gregoriennes (p. 238), there is a close connection between these melodies and that of the Te Deum, as may be seen by comparing take a postion of another melody belonging to the same class:

quotation from Te Deum has been purposely taken from another version of the melody to show the nature of the variations between different dioceses. The former is undoubtedly the older of the two, but the latter (Sorum) is a natural development of the original melody, with the addition of an intonation after the pause in the middle of the verse, analogous to that which appears above on the words Per omnia or Te Deum. This melody is used, with only such variations as the changes in the number of syllables or in the position of the accents necessitate, till the end of the 18th verse: and its obvious connection with the Preface music would seem to indicate its very early appearance in the Western offices: for apart from the early date which the absence of a fixed dominant suggests, the melody appears in portions of the Ambrostan and Monarabic uses, and is therefore clearly Pre-Gregorian. At verse 14 Tu rex glorie, Christe a fresh melody is introduced, which closely resembles the ordinary Psalm tone of the fourth Gregorian mode in a somewhat ornate form, of which the following verse containing a full complement of syllables is a specimen:

nant, is certainly Gregorian rather than Ambrosian in character, and would seem to belong to a distinctly later period than the first. It is continued down to the end of verse 20: but for verse 21 we have the following setting:

the music of which is in the form of an antiphon of the fourth mode, and stands in the same relation to the previous seven verses as an ordinary antiphon might to its Psalm, bringing it to a complete close with a regular cadence ending upon the final of the mode. After this, although no fresh melody is introduced, the music fully bears out the conclusion to which a comparison of the various texts leads. First come two verses (22 and 23) set to the autiphon melody, and then five verses (24-28) to the Psalm tone, when the whole is brought to a fit close once more by the antiphon form:

The placing together of the three antiphon forms (verses 21–23) is musically as well as liturgically extremely unnatural, and points to some different earlier arrangement in which these verses were either used separately, or else divided by some verses of the Paulm melody, as indeed No. 2 of the Latin versions suggests, where verses 24 and 25 come between 21 and 22. At the end of the last verse there appears in almost all copies, both ancient and modern, a long string of notes to be sung upon the last syllable, known as the pneuma;

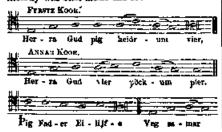

This is not part of the original melody, but is one of a set of eight similar passages composed by Guido of Arezzo, one for each mode, and which were much used during the middle ages at the end of the principal antiphons, in order to give greater dignity to the services on festivals, much in the same way as a short voluntary is sometimes played at the present day on the organ between (e.g.) the Te Deam and the second Lesson. Their use has now almost entirely ceased, except in the case of the Te Deum, which being used on Festivals alone, and therefore always with the pneuma, was never written without it, and so has retained it in nearly every diocese of the Roman Church.

The above examples have been taken (with one exception) from the Sarum version, not only because it represents an extremely pure form of the melody, but also for the sake of comparing it with its adaptation by Merbucks This melody, with its clearly defined domi- to the English text. Merbecke's setting of the First English Prayer Book was drawn up under the direction of Crammer, and published in 1550. In it the Archbishop's sim (as stated in his well-known letter to Henry viti, quoted by Strype), to avoid the use of more than one note to each syllable in the adaptation of the ancient melodies to English words, is fully carried out; and in some instances it will be seen from the following examples, that he was thus unconsciously going back to earlier forms. The following passages give Merbecke's version of the verses aiready quoted:

It seems that the ancient melody was known to the musicians of some of the Lutheran Churches down to at least the middle of the 18th century. We come across fragments of it amongst Burtehude's Forspiele, and also in those of Isach. In Iceland a remarkable metrical version was retained down to the beginning of this century; it disappeared when (A.D. 1801) the independent Icelandic service books were modified in order to assimilate them to the more modern Danish forms. The following extracts from the 19th edition of the Icelandic Graduals, printed at Holar in A.D. 1779, will show how the ancient melody was still made use of:

This version was sung by the sides of the choir alternately, each side taking half a verse. In the pneuma, here set to the word Amen, both choirs united.

The metricul trs. of the Ts Deum into English are in almost every instance the prose tr. in the Book of Common Prayer turned into metre. That tr. beginning "We praise Thee, O God" was given in the Book of Common Prayer in 1549. (See § vi. 3. (4)). The translator is unknown. The metrical renderings therefrom in English include:—

1. O God, we praise Thee, and we own. Dr. J. Paterick. This was given in his Ps. of Bavid in Metre, &c. 1679, in 12 st. of 4), and began :--

"O God, we praise Thee, and we own, Three to be Lord and King alone,"

This version of the Te Deum has had a somewhat strange and eventful history, as the following facts will show:—

(1.) In Tate & Brady's Supplement to the New Version, circa 1700 (2nd ed. 1702), it was given in a rewritten form as:—

"O God, we praise Thee, and confess That Thou the only Lord," and this remained in C. U. in the Church of England until the New Version was supersaded by the modern hymn books. In an abbreviated form it is still in use amongst Nonconformists in G. Britain and America, as in the New Cong. 1859, the Hys. & Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874, and others.

(2.) In the English Moravian II. Bk. pub. in London in 1754, No. 209, Dr. Paterick's tr. was given in an expanded form, the additions being trs. of portions of Luther's German rendering "Horr Gott, dich loben wir!" as below. It begins:—

"O God, we praise Thee, and we own Thee, the Almighty Lord slone."

This was in 5 st. of 12 l. and chorus of 4 l. In the 1789 and later eds. (1849, No. 668) it begins "Lord God, Thy praise we sing, To Thee." From this the following hymns have been manipulated:—

(a.) In the American Reformed Dutch Church H. Bk. 1789, is a hymn beginning:—

"O Christ, Thou giorious King t we own Thee to be Gud's eternal Son," which is taken from the Moravian H. Bk. 1754. with several lines rewritten. This is No. 193 in the American Reformed Dutch Hys. of the Church, N. Y. 1869.

(b.) In the American Ref. Dutch Ch. H. Bk. of 1792, there is another hymn from the same source which begins:-

"Almighty God, we praise and own Thee our Creator King alone."

Several of the lines are altered, the whole being from the first part of the Te Deum. This in No. 47 of the American Ref. Dutch Hys. of the Church, N. Y. 1869.

(c.) In the 1815 Appendix to T. Cotterill's Sel. of Ps. & Hys. pub. in Staffordshire, No. 214 begins:-

"Thee we adore, eternal Lord! We praise Thy name with one accord."

This has no connection with the version in the Moravian H. Bk. of 1754. It embraces at. i.-ix. of the Prayer Book version of the To Deum, and was probably by Cotterill. When Cotterill issued the 8th ed. of his Sci. in 1819 he was Incumbent of St. Paul's, Sheffield. In the preparation of this edition he was assisted by the Moravian poet, James Montgomery, at whose press it was printed. In this edition "Thee we adore, eternal Lord" is given as No. 25. This was followed by two hymns based on the remaining stanzas of the To Deum as follows:-

No. 26. "Thee, King of glory, Christ we own The Father's everlasting Son."

No. 27. "The Church on earth confesseth Thee, The Father, throned in majesty."

These two hymns are adapted from the tr. in the Moravian H. Bk. 1754, and were probably moulded into their present form by Montgomery.

- (d.) In the American Hys. & Songs of Proise, N. Y. 1874, No. 5, beginning "Thee we adore, cternal Lord," is a cente from the above three hymns in Cotterill's Sel. st. i.-ili. being from No. 25; st. iv. from No. 26; and st. v. from No. 27.
- (c.) In the Leeds H. Bk. 1853, No. 207, and some other collections, a cento in 5 st. of 4 l. is taken direct from the Moravian H. Bk. 1754, and, with slight alterations, is given as :-"Both heaven and earth do worship Thee." It forms a most successful hymn.
- (f.) In James Montgomery's Original Hys. 1853, No. 13, there is a rendering of the Te Down in 50 lines. Of these 11 are word for word from the Moracian H. Bk. 1754; 9 are partly therefrom; and the rest are only the Moravian tr. rewritten. From this Moravian-Montgomery text (which begins as in the Mora-tion H. Bh.) the cento in C. U. in America:— "Hail King of Glory! Christ the Lord," is
- 3. We sing to Thee, Then Bon of God. J. Connick. Pub. in his Sacred Hys. for the Use of Religious Societies, &c. Pt. i. 1743, No. 2. This has been abbreviated and altered by various hands, beginning with Whitefield's Coll. 1753; then Toplady, in his Ps. & Hys. 1776; J. Conder, in the Congregational H. Bk. 1836; and others. The text now commonly in use is that of the Cong. H. Bh. 1836. It is in the Leeds H. Bk. 1853, &c.
- 3. Infinite God, to Thee we raise. C. Wasley. Appeared in Hys. for those that seek and those that have Redemption, 1747, No. xili. in 14 st. of

- 6 1. In the 1830 Supplement to the Wes. H. Bk. it was broken up into three hymns, and given as Nos. 564-5-6, as follows:—1. "Infinite God, to Thee we raise" (sts. i.-v.). 2. "Messiah, joy of every heart" (sta. vi.-xi.). 3. * Saviour, we now rejoice in hope" (sts. xli.-xiv.). The first line of No. 3 is altered from the original to adapt it as the opening of a separate hymn. There are also other alterations in this and No. 2 as above. (Orig. text in P. Works, 1869-72, vol. iv. pp. 224-27.) The hymn in some American collections "To Thee to land in songs of praise," is a cento from this version of the Te Deum,
- 4. How can we adore, Or worthily praise! W. Hammond. Pub. in his Ps. & Hys. &c. 1745, p. 193, in 17 st. of 8 l. An abbreviated form of this rendering of the To Down is in Hatfield's Church H. Ba, N. Y. 1872.
- 5. We praise, we worship Thee, O God. This anonymous version of the first part of the Te Deum is traced to P. Gell's Ps. & Hys. 1815. It is also in W. Urwick's Coll. of Hymns, Dublin, 1829; the Leeds H. Bk. 1853, the New Cong. 1859, the Prim. Meth. Hymnal, 1887, and others. In some books it is given in 5 sts. and in others in 6 sts. The doxology is later than Gell's Coll.
- 6. God eternal, Lord of all. J. E. Millard. Written for and first pub. in the Rev. T. F. Smith's Devout Charister, 1848, p. 106, in 8 st. of 4 l. and entitled "Hymn for Charisters." It was subsequently republished in Hys. and Introits, Lond. Masters, 1852; Lord Selborne's Bk. of Praise (original text), 1862, and others. An abbreviated and altered form of the text was given in H. A. & M. 1861, as:—"God eternal, Mighty King," and this has been repeated in several collections in G. Britain and America.
- 7. Haly God, we praise Thy Mame, Lord of all, &c. C. A. Walworth. This is dated 1853 in the American Evangelical Hymmal (Hall and Lasar), Barnes & Co., N. Y. 1880.
- 3. Then ext the everlasting Son. This anony mous rendering of the latter part of the Te Deum appeared in the American Sabbuth H. Bt. 1858, No. 335, in 3 st. of 6 L and has been repeated in a few American collections.
- 2. Thee God we praise, Thee Lord confess, Robertson. This rendering of the first part of the Te Deum was given in the Hys. for Public Worship, 1861, and the Scottish Hymnal, 1870.
- 10. Thee, Thee, we praise, 0 God, and own. E. F. Hatfield. Written in 1871 for, and pub. in 1872 in his Church H. Bk. in 6 st. of 4 !.

The above four renderings of the Te Deum by W. Barton were written at the request of Richard Baxter (see p. 118, E.). J. H. Beste has a kind of blank verse rendering in his Church Hys. 1849, as:—"Thee we praise, O God: we own Thee our Lord Almighty." W.H. Jewitt (p. 403, E.) pub. in 1874, twenty-three hymns on the various clauses of the Te Deum of which four have come into C. U. [J. J.]

Many German versions of the Te Deum have been made at various periods. Of these one is noted on p. $15, i., "Herr grosser Gott." Another is:—

Herr Gott, dich lohen wir! Herr Gott, wir danken dir. This is a free version, by Martin Luther, in 52 lines arranged for antiphonal singing. It apparently was first pub. in Klug's G. B. Wittenberg, 1520, and from this passed into the Rostock G. B. (Low German) of 1531. Wackernagel, iii. p. 19, prints it from the Gesitliohe Lieder, Wittenberg, 1531. It is also in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Gesitliche Lieder, 1854, p. 1, and in the Une. L. S. 1851, No. 189. The tr. in C. U. is:—

Thee Lord, our God, we praise. This is No. 356 in the Ohio Lath. Hyl. 1880, marked as a cento.

Te Deum Patrem colimus. [Grace after Meat.] The earliest text known is in a folio volume of 17th cent. 118. music in the Library of Christ Church, Oxford (H. i. 21). It is given there with the following note (kindly communicated by the Rev. T. Vere Bayne, the librarian):—

"This bymn is song every day, in Magdaien College Hell, Oxon, Dinner and Supper; throught the years for the after Grace, by the Chaplains, Clarks, and Choristers there. Composed by Brijamin Rogers, Doctor of Musique of the University of Oxon, 1665."

The as, is in the autograph of Dr. Regers, but whether he was the author of words as well as music does not clearly appear. The hymn is still sung every year on the first of May by the choristers from the top of Magdalen College Tower, and is annually sung as the after grace in Magdalen College Hall on Gaudy Day, viz. St. Mary Magdalen's Day. The text is:—

"Te Deum Patrem collmus, Te laudibus prosequimur: Qui corpus cibo reficis, Coelesti mentem gratia.

Te adoramus, o Jesu, Te fill unigenite, Te qui non dedignatus es Subire claustra virginis.

"Actus in crucem, factus es Irate Deo Victima: Per te, Salvator unics, Vitae spes nobis redilt. "Tibi, Æterne Spiritus, Cujus afflatu peperit Infantem Feum Maria, Acternum benedicimus." Triune Peus hominum Salutis auctor optime, Imneusaup hoc mysterium Ovante lingué canhous."

Dr. Rogers's music is given in the Sarum Hymnal, 1868, No. 181 (a tr. of the Latin as above), and is dated in the Index, 1860. Tr.

1. Father of all! To Thee we raise. By W. Palmer, in his Short Poems & Hys., the latter mostly Translations, 1845, p. 21, and headed "Hymn of Thanksgiving after Dinner. Sung in Latin in the Refectory of St. Mary Magdalene College, in the University of Oxford." In 1850 it was included in Dr. Oldknow's Hys. for the Service of the Church, and later in several other collections, as the Sarum (where it is attributed to J. Chaudler in error), and others. In the Hymnary, 1872, it is altered to "To Thee, O Father, here we raise."

Te lasta mundi Conditor. C. Coffin. [Septuagesima.] Appeared in the Paris Brev., 1786, and in Coffin's Hymni Sacri, p. 44, the same year. It is also in later French Breve. It is the hymn at Vespers on the Saturdays before Septuagesima, Sexagesima, and Quadragesima. The text is in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. '56; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and L. C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as:—

4. Maker of earth, to Thee alone. By J. M. Neale, in an article in the Christian Remembrancer. It was repeated in Murray's Hymnal, 1852, the Pcople's H., 1867, and other collections.

5. Creator of the world, to Thee. This tr. was given in H. A. & M., 1861, and repeated in 1875. In the Index to the latter ed. it is stated to be by the "Compilers; based upon older translations" were specially the two by Chandler and Neale noted above. This text was repeated in Pott's Hymns, &c., 1861, the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, &c., sometimes with, and at other times without the doxology. In the Hymnary, 1872, the text, slightly changed, begins, "Creator of the earth to Thee."

Te lucis ante terminum. [Evening.] This has sometimes been ascribed to St. Ambrose; but it is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors, by Eiraghi, or even by Thomasius. Mone, i. p. 372, cites it as in a Ms. of the 8th cent. at Darmstadt. Among the British Museum ness it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii, f. 10 b; Jul. A. vi. f. 23; Harl. 2961 f. 220 b); in an 11th cent. Mozarabio Breviary (Add. 30848 f. 66 b), &c. It is in a Ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 231); in a ms. of the lith cent. at St. Gall, No. 387; and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surfees Society), 1851, it is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 4 b). It is included in the Roman (Venice, 1478, and, with slight differences in the text, in the revision of 1632), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1643, and other Breviaries, generally as a hymn at Compline. The text is also in Daniel i. No. 43 (the older, and the Rom. Brev. texts), Wackernagel, i. No. 9, the Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 8; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, and L. C. Te matrem Dei laudamus, te omnis terra veneratur. St. Bonaventura (?).
[B. V. M.] This travesty of the "Te Deum laudamus," referred to in the previous article thereon as the production of St. Bonaventum. (which is open to question), is known to us in two forms. The first form is in Daniel, it. p. 293; and the second in Mone, ii. p. 229, where it is given from two MSS. of the 14th century, and begins, "To matrem laudamus, te virginem confitemur." Mone's text is tr. by Mrs. Charles in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, &c., 1858, p. 210, as, "We praise thee, O Mother, we acknowledge thee to be the Virgin."

The two texts are :-By J. Wesley, 1738.

" Teach me, my God and King. In all things Thee to see; And what I do in may-

To do it as for Thee. " To scorn the sense's sway, While still to Thee I temil : In all I do be Thou the

In all be Thou the End. "A man that looks on glass, On that may for his eye; mnopposed may through it pass and heave-And heaven behind descry.

"All may of Thee partake; Nothing so mean can be, (b)

But draws, when acted for Thy sake, Greatness and worth from Thee.

" If done to obey Thy laws, Even servile labour thines; Hallov'd all toil, if this the cause (c)
The meanest work divine.

"This is the long-sought stone (d) That all converts to gold; For that which God for His doth own Cannot for less be told."

In modern hymn-books, as in Mercer and others, J. Wesley's text, with the omission of the last stanza, is usually followed. We must note that in Herbert's text the line (a) reads in the 7th ed. "Which with this tincture for Thy sake," and that in later editions of J. Wesley's Cotl. of Ps. & Hys. the following changes are also made :-

(b) "Nothing so small can be."
(c) "Hallow'd is toll, if this the cause."
(d) "The clinic this the stone."

This rugged, but beautiful hymn is well adapted in its original form for private use. [J. J.]

C. Wesley. [Ordination.] Printed from the Wesley MSS. in the P. Works, 1868-72, vol. xii. p. 140, in 2 st. of 8 l. The opening stanza reads:-

" Teacher of hearts, 'tis Thine alone Thine officers to ordain, Point out Thy instruments, unknown To undiscerning men; Our apostolic guides apprize Of Thine unseen decree, And stir them up to recognize The men design'd by Thee."

In the 1875 ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., No. 871, II. 5, 6, read :-

"The partors of Thy Church apprize Of Thine unseen decree;"

and this reading was repeated in the Primitive Methodist Hymnal, 1887. By this change Charles Wesley's well-known convictions respecting Holy Orders are completely suppressed. [J, J]

Telluris ingens Conditor. St. Gregory the Great ? [Tuesday. Evening.] Mone, No. 274 and i. p. 372, gives this as probably by St. Gregory (it is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors), and cites it as in a ms. of the 8th cent. at Trier, one of the 9th cent. also at Trier, &c. Daniel, i. No. 51, gives it as a hymn On the Work of the Third Day [of the Croation); and at iv. p. 50, cites it as in a Rheinau as of the 10th cent., and ranks it as a hymn of the 7th or 8th cent. Among the British Museum MSS, it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii, f. 16 b; Jul. A. vi. f. 26; Harl. 2961 f. 222 b), in an 11th cent. Mozarabic Breviary (Add. 30848 f. 73), &c. It is in a Ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Camms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Curist, Cambridge (391, page 234); in a ms. of the 9th cent. (No. 20), and three mss. of the 11th cent. (Nos. 387, 413, 414), at 8t. Gall; and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 6 b). In the revised Roman Brev. 1632 it begins in Tallwin the Conditor. The maintain of the conditor. "Telluris almo Conditor." The original form is included in the older Homan (Venice, 1478), Sarum, York, Aberdeen and other Breviaries, as a hymn at Vespers on Tuesday. Also in Wackernagel, i. No. 91, the Hymnarium Sarish, 1851, and G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Teacher of hearts, 'tis Thine alone, | Mousigcensis, 1888, from a 10th cent. Ms. The

Roman Breviary text is in recent eds. of that | Breviary, in Daniel i. No. 51, and Card. Newman's Hymni Eccles., 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

Both forms of this hymn have been tr. into English and are in C. U. The variations in the Latin text are very elight, and are:-

St. j. ii. "Telluris ingene conditor, 1, 2. Mundi solum qui srusna." St. lv. l. 4. "Et mortie actum nesciat." " Telluris alms conditor, Mundi solum qui separana." St. iv. 1.4. "Et mortis éctues nescial."

The Tem-Temperance Hymnody. perance movement has produced abundant stores of verse, consisting of hymns, odes, ballada, and compositions descriptive, imaginative, humorous, pathetic, satirical, and elegise. America has furnished much of this material, but its principal sources have been Scotch and English. The department here treated, Hymnody, may be considered as to its rise and progress, with brief notices of some of its chief contributions and contributors. The Temperance Reform, which began in America early in 1826, took root in Ireland and Scotland in the autumn of 1829, and in England carly in 1830. The first societies, founded on the basis of abstinence from distilled spirits only, do not appear to have made use of any special hymns bearing upon the Temperance question. In a few years they took the position of abstinence from all intoxicating liquors; and in 1836 a collection of Temperance Humns and Songs was issued from the office of the Temperance Advocate at Preston, a town which had been for some years the chief centre of total abstinence propagandism. Before the middle of 1887, the Rev. F. Beardeall, of Manchester, brought out the first general Temperance Hymn Book, containing nearly 200 hymns, which the editor had culled from temperance periodicals. American and British. In a second edition the number of hymns was increesed to 226, and afterwards to 255. Subsequently appeared the Hymn Book of the New British and Foreign Temperance Society, N. D.; Temperance Hymns and Songa, edited by J. W. Green, N. D. (enlarged in 1853); and the Scottish Temperance League Hymn Book, N. D. (edited by the Rev. F. C. Wilson). Collections were also issued by Rev. R. G. Mason, and by others under the names of Gwyther Kendal, Not-tingham, Leicester, and Bristol. The demands of the Juvenile Temperance movement, especially in the Band of Hope form, stimulated the publication of poetical pieces with music attached; but hymns, strictly so called, did not multiply in the same proportion. Among works, largely but not exclusively used in meetings of young persons, may be named, The Crystal Fount, M. D.; The Crystal Spring, M. D.; The Brilish Band of Hope Melodist, N. D.; The National Temperance Hymn Book, N. D., compiled by the Rev. H. A. Hammond : Hymns and Melodies of the Band of Hope, N. D.; The New Penny Temperance Hymn Book, N. D., by J. W. Kirton; The Book of Song of Bands of Hope, N. D.; and Odes for Good Templars, N. D.; and W. Hoyle's Hymns and Songs, N. D. The Committee of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union have published a handsome volume of 176 Hymns and Songs for Bands of

In connection with the Church Hope, N. D. In connection with the Church of England Temperance Society a book of 254 Hymns and Songs has been published, but only a small number are on temperance topics. In 1864, Mr. G. H. Graham, of Maidstone, published the National Band of Hope and Temperance Melodist, comprising 250 pieces, the production of above 70 writers. In succession to this, and as the result of much labour, Rev. John Compston edited for Mr. Graham the National Temperance Harmonist, 1870, containing 550 hymns and songs. The musical edition contained 311 tunes. In 1878 this work was reissued in an improved form, under the name of the National Temperance Hymnal, the editor as before being the Rev. John Competon. The hymns in this collection are 490. In 1878 also appeared the Standard Book of Song for Temperance Meetings and Home Use, edited by Mr. T. Bowick; followed in 1881 by an elegant volume containing these hymns with music, by Mr. A. J. Burch. All the more recent works can be obtained from the National Temperance Publication Depot, 33, Paternoster Row. It may be observed that all these collections abound in songs as well as hymns, and it is difficult to judge of the numerical proportion they bear to each other in the whole body of metrical compositions. Perhaps it will be an approach to accuracy to estimate the number of distinct hymns at about 300, and of hymn-writers at from 60 to 70. In the earliest collections many hymns by the same writer are printed; but in the later compilations no writer, with rare exceptions, is represented by more than a few specimens of his poetic powers.

7. Tunnicliff, Jabes, a Minister of the Baptist denomi-nation, was b. Feb. 7, 1809, and was the paster of a Baptist congregation in Leeds, where he founded the first Band of Hope, in 1847, the outcome of a visit to Leeds of Mrs. Carlife of Dublin. He wrobe many songs and hymns for children. He d. June 15, 1865.

iv. When it is remembered that Temperance hymns have been necessarily restricted to one topic, the variety of expression found therein may be justly regarded as being somewhat remarkable. And although not one hymn can be named which ranks with the highest productions of sacred song, yet the literary and devotional merits of not a few are conspicuous. Several of those named above would make no unworthy addition to modern hymn-books designed for special use in divine worship. They might be embodied in a separated section on Temperance. (D. B.)

Tempora florigero rutilant distincta sereno. V. H. C. Fortunatus. [Easter.] This is No. 9 in Bk. iii. of his Poems. It is a poem on the Resurrection, addressed "ad Felicem Episcopum" [Folix, Bp. of Nantes, d. 582], and is in 110 lines. The full text is in F. Leo's ed. of Fortunatua's Opera poettea, Berlin, 1881, p. 59; from a St. Peters-burg ms. of the 8th or 9th cent., a Paris Ms. of the 9th cent. (Lat. 9347), &c. Also in a Ms. of the 9th cent. in the Brit. Mus. (Add. 24193, f. 35. "In this aweet poem," says Dr. Schaff (Christ in Song, ed. 1870, p. 185), "the whole Nature, born anew in the Spring, and arrayed in the bridal garment of hope and promise, welcomes the risen Saviour, the Prince of spiritual and eternal life." In the Middle Ages varying centes beginning with 11. 39, 40: Salve festa dies toto venerabilia acve, Qua Deus infernum vieit et astra tenet came into extensive use as Processionals from Easter to the Ascension. Thus the form given by Daniel, i. No. 143, in 14 couplets, is found in an Echternach Gradual of the end of the 10th or beginning of the 11th cent. now in the Bibl. Nat., Paris (Lat. 10510; printed by A. Beiners in his Tropen- Procen- und Prafations-Gestinge, Luxemburg, 1884, p. 73) and Daniel, at ii. p. 382, cites it as in a Munich Ms. of the 11th cent. Other early forms, beginning with !. 39, are in a ws. circa 1200, in the Bodleian (Loud Misc. 4, f. 140), in a ms. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, No. 381, &c. In the Sarum and York Processionals it appears in various forms, and several hymns in imitation are also included in them, all beginning "Salve festa dies." (See Bequences, pt. il.) Other centos from Fortunatus are in Wackernagel, i. No. 83; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 152 (10 lines); Böseler, No. 57 (10 lines), and others. It would appear that Cranmer had made an English tr. in 1544 (see p. 544, L). There are versions from the "Salve festa dies" in German as early as the 14th cent., one of which has passed into English as follows:—

Also halls int der Tag. Wackernagel, in bis D. Kirckerlied, il. p. 742, gives three, really four, forms of tills, 1-til. in 1 st. of 8 l.; iv. in 3 st. of 8 l. The tre. follow the test given by Wackernagel in 8 lines from the Psailes Ecclesiasticus, Mainz, 1880, where it is emittled Geneleum Munt Progresspacing. It seems to have been used in Pre-Reformation times at processions and phyrimages. The text in the Vao. L. S., 1851, No. 123, is nearly that of 1550 (see also Mittell, No. 534, and Boffmans, Nos. 114, 115). It is fr. as (1) "Hallow we with praise the day." A free tr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 106 in bis Pa. & Hyman, 1851; and as (2) "So holy is this day of days," by Mits Winkeroris, 1868, p. 38. 1868, p. 88.

The renderings into English from this poem have been confined to the extract given in Daniel, i. No. 143, or to selected portions of the same as follows:-

Sulve, fosta dise, toto venerabilis sevo.

- 1. Rail, festal day, for evermore adored. By J. M. Neale, in the enlarged ed. of the H. Noted, 1854. It is a tr. of a selection from Daniel, Its use is limited.
- 2. Hall, festal day, ever exalted high. By Elizabeth Charles, in her Voice of Christian Lifs in Song, &c., 1858, p. 135. This is a literal tr. of the text, as in Daniel.
- 3. Hall, Day of days, in peals of praise. By W. J. Copeland, in Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 287; the People's H., 1867, and Schaff's Christ in Song, 1870.
- 4. Welcome, happy morning, ago to age shall say. By J. Ellerton, contributed to R. Brown-Borthwick's Suppl. By. and Tune Bk., 1868. It was republished in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; the Hymnary, 1872; Thring's Coll., 1882, and several other hymn-books in G. Britain and America, sometimes in an abbreviated form. It is a vigorous and popular paraphrase rather than a direct translation. Full text in Mr. Ellerton's Hymns, &c., 1888.
- 5. Rail! festal day, to endless ages known. By T. A. Lacey. In the Altar Hymnal, 1884, there are two paraphrases by this translator, one for Easter day and one for the Ascension, and both beginning with the same first line. [J. J.]

Tempted oft to go astray. J. S. B. Monsell. [SS. Philip and James.] The first stanza of this hymn was given in the 1st ed. of his Parish Musings, 1850. In his Spiritual Songs, 1857, three st. were added, thus forming a hymn of 4 st. of 8 l. In the revised and enlarged ed. of the Hy. Comp., 1876, st. i., ii. and iv. were given as No. 355. [J. J.]

Tην ημέραν διελθών. [Evening.] The usually accepted history of this hymnis that given by Dr. Neals in his Hymnis of Την ημέραν διέλθων. the Eastern Church, 1862, as follows :

"The tittle bym, which, I believe, is not used in the public service of the Church, is a great favourite in the Greek Isles. Its peculiar style and evident antiquity may well lead to the belief that it is the work of our present author [St. Anatolius]. It is, to the scattered hamlets of Chica and Mitylene, what Bishop Ken's Evening Hymn is to the villages of our own land; and its melody is singularly plaintive and soothing."

In 1874, under date of May let (18th), The Very Rev. S. G. Hatherly, then Priest of the Greek Church, Wolverhampton, and subsequently of that at Bristel, pub. Dr. Neale's ir. "The day is past and over," with slight alterations; a tr., by a friend, of the original Theotokion, in the same metre; an original tune by himself, and a note in which he pointed out that the hymn was taken from the Great After-Supper service (in Slavonic "Great After-Vespers"), and was a cento from two parts of that service. Dr. Neale took his cento from Daniel iii. p. 127, where it is given not in the original rhythmical prose but in a metrical form; and in his original fr. of 1853, as given below, he closely followed that form. The original Greek is in the Horologion (δρολόγιον το μέγα, Venice ed. 1851, pp. 186, 137; ed. 1870, pp. 157, 159). The Greek text occurs in the Great After-Supper service as follows :-

It is introduced by the Stichoi, "Ore mes" ημών δ θεός (" For God is with us"), and then proceeds :-

"Την ήμέραν διελθών Εύχαριστώ σου, κύρι: "Την ίσ-πέραν αιτούμαι Σύν τβ νυκτί ἀναμάρτητων, Παράσχου μαι, σωτήρ, καὶ σώσάν με.

It must be noted that these stanzas are not signed. (See below concerning authorship.) It will possibly be of interest to the English reader to have a literal translation of these stanzas together with the Theolokion omitted by Daniel and the translators who have followed his text. It is as follows, with the portions known as the hymn "The day is past and over," in italies :-

"God is with us, let the nations know and be discomfitted: for God is with us.

On turning to the hymn as known to the English reader through Dr. Neale's tr., and comparing it with the above, it is clear that it is not a complete hymp in itself, but a cento composed of three stanzas from one part of the Greek Great After-Supper service, and two stanzas from another part of the same service with the omission of the Theotokion. (This cento form of the text is taken from C. Pelargue's Enchirolion, Frankfurt, 1594.) Another point which is equally clear is that the whole of the stanzas are anonymous in the Greek service-book. Dr. Neale attributes them to St. Anatolius, who died in 458. The Anatolius, however, of the Greek servicebooks, has his name appended to hymns in commemoration of martyrs of the latter part of the sixth and the early part of the seventh centuries. (See Anatolius, p. 62, i.) There must have been therefore two hymn-writers of the same name (Anatolius), one as stated by Dr. Neale, and another, who wrote in the 7th cent. In the Greek service-books the subject matter or nature of a hymn is often indicated by a kind of heading or preface to the hymn, as for instance Στιχησά άνατολικά; Στιχηρά αναστάσιμα; and so on. In the case of the first three stanzas of this cento there is no such heading, nor is there any author's name given in any Greek service-book with which we are sequeinted. In fact, no heading including the words Στιχηρά ένατολικά (the natural title of a Morning hymn) could have been attached to an Evening hymn. Whilst therefore we cannot determine the authorship of these Stichers, we regard them as very ancient, and possibly of the sixth or seventh centuries.

2. The first tr. of this hymn into English was by Dr. Neale, and was evidently taken from the text as given in Daniel. This tr. was first pub. in The Eccleriastic and Theologian, 1853, p. 161. As both in this instance and in the 1st ed. of his Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1862, the tr. is more faithful to the original than his revised fr. in the 2nd ed. of that work in the same year, we subjoin the text as given in The Ecclesiastic :-

> "The day is past and over!
> All thanks, O Lord, to Thee!
> I pray Thee now that sinless
> The eve and night may be: Grant that I crave, O God, and cave! "The day hath parted from us!
> All giory, Lord, to Thes!
> I pray Thes that offenceless
> The ere and night may be;
> Grant that I crave, O God, and save! The toils of day are over,
>
> I raise the hymn to Thee;
> And pray that eve and night-time
> Without attack may be;
> Grant that I crave, O God, and save ! " Lighten mine eyes, O Saviouri Or sleep in death shall I; And he, mine adversary, Triumphantly shall cry I have assailed and have prevailed, "Be Thou my soul's preserver!
> O God! for Thou dost know,
> The snares and sine are many
> Through which I have to go:
> Lover of men, oh hear my call,
> And guard and save me from them-sil!"

When this tr. is compared with the revised text by Dr. Neale in his 2nd ed. of the Hys. of the E. Church, 1862, and which is followed in the hymn-books, it will be seen that the latter is much more smooth, and musical, then the former (although less literal), and on that account is better suited for public worship. Amongst the earliest hymnals in which it found a place was T. Darling's Hys. for the Church of England, 1862; the Parish H. Bh., 1863, and others, in some cases st. iv. being omitted. At the present time it is found in almost every hymnel of note in all Englishapeaking countries.

In addition, Mrs. Charles has a tr. (from Daniel) in her Voice of Christian Life in Song, 1858, p. 25, the first of which reads:-

> The day is passing on,
> I thank Thee, O Lord.
> I beseech Thee this evening and this night Keep me without sin, Seviour, and save me!"

Dr. H. Bonar has also rendered it into English (from Daniel), and included it in his Hymns of Faith and Hope, 2nd series, 1864. The opening stanza is:-

"The day is done!
I thank Thee, Lord, akme.
"Tis evening, and I cry,
O Saviour, be Thou nigh,
This night from sin me keep,
Preserve me while I sleep."

8. Some twenty-five years ago Mr. Hatherly wrote a tune in double counterpoint which was published in Our Own Fireside in Nov. 1865, to a "Fountainside Hymn," but was incorporated with the 6th ed. of the Rev. W. H. Havergal's Old Church Psalmody in 1867, in alliance with Dr. Neale's tr. of the present hymn. It subsequently became popular in the To adapt the original Greek to the tune it has been rewritten in the following form by an unknown hand, and is one of the very few current instances of a rendering altered in Lyra Estrication, 1864; the Byoncary.

"This commemoration the most Divine Fathers act after the two parables" [i.e. the Gospels of the two precoding Sundays, The Pharisee and Publican, and the Prodigal Son], "lest any one, learning from them the mercy of God, should live curlessly, and say, "God is merciful, and whenever I wish to relinquish sin, it will be in my power to accomplish my purpose." They therefore here commensorated that featful day, that, by the consideration of death, and the expectation of the dread-out things that shall hereafter be, they might terrify men of negligent lile, and bring them back again to virtue, and might teach them not simply to put confidence in God's mercy, considered by itself, but to remember also that the Jodge is just, and will render to every man according to his works." Dr. Nesle adds to the above tr.: "As the Eastern Church has no such seesen as Advent, this commemoration becomes more peculiarly appropriate." Hymns of the E.C., 2nd ed. 1862, pp. 101, 102.

This Canon is found in the Triodion, and dates from the beginning of the ninth century. As a Judgment hymn, for majesty and power, it has been regarded by Dr. Neale and other competent judges as second only to the Dies Irs, which it anticipates some four hundred years. Four Odes only have been tr. into English. These are by Dr. Neule, and were pub. with notes (from which we have quoted) In his Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1862. variation of metre in the tr. follows that of the original; but Dr. Neale omits the Georgesov oddiese to the B. V. M.) which closes each Ode. The contrast in Ode iv. with human courts of justice, is much more vivid in the courts of justice, is much more vivid in the original. ["Orator persuasion" = karavava andavárns.] In the first three eds., Ode ix., st. 3, 1. 1, Dr. Neale has the curious misprint of "David" for "Daniel." This has been corrected in the 4th ed. He also emits st. v. of that Ode. The untranslated Odes repeat the same ideas as those translated, which are as followe:---

Ode iii. 'O régues épherat.
God comes, and who shall stand before Hie fear. Republished in Schaffe Carist is Song, 1870.
Ode iv. 'Epictrases à haipa.
The day is near, the Judgment is at hand. Repeated in Schaff a Carist in Song, 1870.

Ten thousand times ten thousand. H. Alford. [Processional for Saints' Days.] Appeared 1st in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 229, in 3 st of 8 l. In 1870 it formed part of the poetical setting of F. R. Pickersgill's illustration of the Lord's Prayer, which was pub. as The Lord's Prayer Illustrated by F. R. Pickersgill, R.A., and Henry Alford, D.D., p. 16. On Jan. 17, 1871, it was sung at the author's funeral, with the additional stanza, "Bring near Thy great Salvation." In this full form it was printed in the author's Life, &c., 1872, p. 483; in H. A. & M., 1875, and aguin in other collections.

Ter sancte, ter potens Deus. Claud de Santelil. [Holy Trinity.] Appeared in the Clunica Brev., 1686, p. 517. In the Paris Brev., 1680, and later French Brevs. it is the hymn for the 1st and 2nd Vespers on Trinity Sunday. The Paris text is in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 82; and Card. Nowman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:-

1. Thrice holy, thrise Almighty Three. By I. Williams, in the British Magazine, Sep., 1837 (vol. xil., p. 267), and again in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839, p. 160.

2. Thrice hely God, of wondreus might. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 92, and again in his Hys. of the Church, &c., 1841, No. 53. It is in several collections. The form in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, and Thring's Coll., 1882, is a cento in which st. i., ii., and Il. 1, 2 of st. iil. are by J. Chandler, slightly altered, and the rest of the hymn is by J. Ellerton.

2. Lord, thrice holy, and supreme. By E. Caswall, in his Masque of Mary, &c., 1858, p. 279, and altered in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 130, to "Lord, thrice holy! Lord of might!" Given, with slight alterations, in the Hymnary, 1872, as "Lord, thrice holy, God of might."

4. Thrice holy and thrice potent God. L. Alexander, in his Augustine H. Bk., 1849, No. 198 (ed. 1865, No. 205),

5. God thrice hely, God of might. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. and Tune Bk., 1852-55; Trinity, 7; and Rice's Scl. from the same, 1870, No. 89.

6. Thrice hely God, of severeign might. By R. C. Singleton, in his Anglican H. Bk., 1868.

Tereteegen, Gerhard, s. of Heinrich Tersteegen (otherwise ter Stegen or sur Stiege), merchant at Mörs (Meurs), in Rhenlah Prussia, was b. at Mörs, Nov. 25, 1697. His parents intended that he should become a minister of the Reformed Church in Germany. His father however d. in 1703, and his mother found that after giving him a thorough classical training in the Latin school at Mörs she was unable to afford the cost of his University course. He was accordingly apprenticed, in 1713, to his brother-in-law, a merchant at Mühlheim on the Buhr, and in 1717 started in business on his own account, at Mühlheim. As he found his time much broken up, and his opportunities of meditation few, he gave up his business in 1719; and, after a short trial of linen weaving, took up the easier and much more lucrative occupation of weaving silk ribbons. During the years 1719-24 he passed through a period of spiritual depression, at the end of which his faith in the reconciling grace of Christ became assured (see No. xxxiv. below), and on Maundy Thursday, 1724, he wrote out a solemn covenant with God which he signed with his own blood. Previous to this, even before 1719, he had ceased to attend the ordinary services of the Reformed Church; and also absented himself from Holy Communion on the ground that he could not in conscience communicate along with open sinners. About the beginning of 1725 he begun to speak at the prayer meetings (styled "Uebungen") which had been held at Mühlheim, since 1710, by Wilhelm Hoffmann, who was a candidate of theology (licensed preacher) of the Reformed Church. Tersteegen soon became known as a religious teacher among the "Stillen im Lande," as the attenders on these meetings were called, and in 1728 gave up his handicraft in order to devote himself entirely to the tr. of works by medigeval and recent Mystics and Quietists, including Madame Guyon and others, and the composition of devotional books, to correspondence on religious subjects, and to the work of a spiritual director of the "awakened souls." From this date to his death he was supported by a small regular income which was subscribed by his admirers and friends. About 1727 a house at Otterbeck, between Mühlheim and Elberfeld, was set apart as a "Pilgerhütte," where the "awakened souls" could go into a spiritual retreat, under the direction of Tersteegen. This house, with accommodation for eight persons, was retained until about 1800. Tersteegen, however, did not confine himself to Mühlheim, but travelled over the district, addressing gatherings of like-minded Christians, giving special attention to Elberfeld, Barmen, Solingen, and Crefeld. From 1782 to 1755 he also went regularly every year to Holland, to vigit his spiritual kinstolk at Amsterdam and elsewhere. From 1780 to 1750 a law against conventicles was strictly enforced, and Tersteegen could not hold meetings except on his visits to Holland. During this period he removed to a bouse which had been Wilhelm Hoffmann's, where he preached, and provided food and simple medicines for the poor. After 1750 he resumed his public speaking until 1756, when he overstrained himself, and had to confine himself to the smallest gatherings absolutely. In 1769, dropsy set in, and after patient endurance for a season he d. on April 3, 1769, at Mühlheim (Koch, vi. 46; Herzog's Real-Ency-klopadie, xv. 334; Max Goebel's Gesch. des christl. Lebens in der Rheinisch-Westphälischen Evang. Kirche, vol. iii., 1860, p. 289, &c.). Up to the end of his life Tersteegen remained outside the Reformed Church, but never set up a sect of his own. After his death his followers as a rule reunited themselves with it especially when a less formal type of religion began to prevail therein.

Of Tersteegen's public addresses given he-tween 1753 and 1756, reports were taken of the more important, and in 1769-73, thirtythree of these were pub. as Geistliche Brosamen von des Herrn Tisch gefallen, &c. Seven of them have been tr. by S. Jackson as Spiritual Crumbs from the Master's Table, 1837. In addition he pub, in 1750 a collection of tracts as Weg der Wahrheit. A large number of his gen; and of his Dutch letters, at Hoorn, in 1772.

Tersteegen's most important hymnological work was his Geistliches Blumen-Gärtlein, of which many editions were published, details of the more important of which we subjoin.

of the more important of which we subjoin.

The lat ed was pub. In 1729; 2nd, 1735; 3rd, 1738; 4th, 1745; 3th, 1761; 5th, 1767; 7th, 1768; and the 8th in 1778. [Eds. L.-4, 4, pub. by Böttiger, at Frankfurt and Laipsig; 5, 7, 3, by Schmitz, at Solingen.] Of these eds. the Royal Library at Berlin has the 2nd and 4th, and the Wernigerode Library has the less and 3rd. The 5th is in the Hibrary of the Preciger-Sawinar at Hannover. The 5th is in the possession of Professor Dr. Kleinert, in Berlin. No copy of the 4th ed. has been accessible to the present writer, but he possessars acopy of the 8th ed., 1778, which professes to be a reprint of the 7th ed. So far as the hymna proper are concerned the fatter at which they appeared in the successive editions (the numbers in each case being as in Bk. iii. of the ed. of 1786), are as follows: The 1739 has Nos. 1-28, 187-111; the 1735, 1-26, 107-111; the 1731, 1-23, 106-111; the 1751, 1-31, 106-111; the 1751, 1-32, 106-111; the 1758, 1-111. In Dr. Kleinert's copy of the 1768, 1-111. In Dr. Kleinert's copy of the 1758 of the case of several separately printed supplements, but 111; the 1768, 1-111. In Dr. Kleineri's copy of the 1767 ed, the additional hymn of the 1768 ed. are appended in the shape of several separately printed supplements, but none of these seem surlier than 1760. So far as the shorter pieces of the Bismert-Gürtleis are concerned, the 1729 has 230 pieces in Bk. i., 220 in Bk. ii., and 60 in Bk. ii., and the bymns proper in Bk. iv. In the later eds. Bks. i. ii., are united and enlarged; and so e.g. the 1738 ed. has 513 in Bk. i., and 120 in Bk. ii., while the 1738 ed. has 584 in Bk. i. and 120 with an Appx of 15 in Bk. ii. The 1739 ed. does not contain the Promosen Cotterie. This was let pub. separately at Elberfield, in 1732, with 235 "Lots," and added to the later eds. of the Bismess-Görtleie, the 1738 ed., e.g. containing 284 apondament or "Lots," and the 1768 ed. containing 284 apondament or "Lots," and the 1768 ed. containing 381. In the most accessible recent ed. of the Bismess-Görtleies, viz., the streetype ed. pub. by J. F. Steinkopf, of Stuttgart (6th ed., 1879), neither Nos. 583-605 in Bk. ii, the Stomaticke Verse der Maddame Gason, appended to Bk. ii., nor Nos. 582-612 in the Frommer Lotterie, are in any of the first eight editions; and some of these pieces are certainly neither originals nor tra by Tensteegen.

The hymn-book used at the meetings of Hoffmann and Tersteegen has often been regarded as Terstaegen's. The test and ancerned it Elberfeld in 1212 as Societies.

The hymn-book used at the meetings of richmann and Tersteegen has often been regarded as Tersteegen's. The lat ed. appeared at Elberfeld, in 1721, as Joachimi Negadri vermehrie Gundens und Lieber-Brung. Nandri vermehrie Glaubean- und Lieber-Ubung weber einem Andang, dez, and was ed. by Adolph Weber of Hann, near Elberfeld. The 2nd (Dulsburg, 1736), 3rd (Dulsburg, 1747), 4th (Solingen, 1750), and 5th (Solingen, 1768) eda, were edited by Terricegen, the title being enlarged in 1760 as Gott-pekeligter Harfen-Spiel der Kinder Zion, &c. These later eds. contain many hymns by Terricegen, but none of the hymns of the Bismen-Gäritein seem to have been first pub. therein.

Tersteegen ranks as one of the three most important hymnwriters associated with the Reformed Church in Germany, the other two being F. A. Lampe (p. 636, ii.), and Josehim Neander (p. 790, i.).

He is however more closely aliled, both as a Mystic and as a Poet, with Johann Scheffler (p. 1004, ii.), than with either of his co-religiousis. He almost equals Scheffler in power of expression and beauty of form, and if Schaffler has more pictorial grace, and a more vivid imagination, Tentesgen has more definiteness of teaching, a frore grasp of the Christian vertites, and a greater clearness in exposition. Inner union of the soul with God and Christ, the childlike simplicity and trust which this brings, renunciation of the world and of self, and daily endeavour to live as in the presence of God and in preparation for the vision of God, are the keynotes of his hymns. To his intense power of realizing the un-seen, his clear and simple diction, and the syldent sin-certty with which he sate forth his own Christian expecerty with which he said forth of their ettractiveness and influences. During his lifetime they did not come much into use except through the Haryfesspiel, as above, and they did not meet the taste of compilers during the Rationalistic period. But since Bunsen in his Versuck, 1833, and Knapp in his Ev. L. S., 1837, brought his hymins cace more into notice they have been received in greater or less measure into almost all the German hymni-books, among the Lutherans, as well as among the Re-formed, the most popular of all being his "Gott ist gegenwiring" (p. 455, ii.).

A number of Terateegen's hymne are noted under their own first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators). They appeared, almost all for the first time, in the successive editions of his Geletliches Blumen-Gärtlein, viz., in the Ist ed., 1729: 2nd ed., 1735; 3rd ed., 1738; 4th ed., 1745; 5th ed., 1751; 6th ed., 1757; 7th ed., 1768; and in each case (after 1729. See above) in the Third Book of that work. Those which have passed into English and are not noted elsewhere, are as follows:-

i. Preus dieb, du Kinder-Orden. Christmas. In the 5th ed., 1751, as above, Bk. iii., No. 57, in 6 st. of 6 k., entitled "Christmas Day's swaking for the Children." Repeated in Bunsen's Allg. G. B., 1846, No. 47, omitting st. ii. Tr. as :-

The first Book of the Blumen-Gartlein contains short poems, more of the nature of aphorisms than of hymns. In the ed. of 1768 there are in all 568 pieces in Bk. i., and of these Miss Winkworth has tr. Nos. 429, 474, 565. 578, 575, 577 in her Christian Singers, 1869. Others are tr. by Lady Durand, in her Tersteegen, 1873, as above, and by S. Jackson, in his Life of Tersteegen, 1832.

To the 2nd and later eds. of the Blumen-

Gartlein a collection of aphorisms, entitled Der Frommen Lotterie, was appended. This was enlarged in the successive eds. till the ed. of 1768 contained 381 in all. Of these 200 were selected and tr. by Lady E. A. Durand, and pub. in 1874, as The Spiritual Lettery. A selection translated from Gerhard Tersteegen's [J. M.] Frommen Lotterie.

Thank and praise Jehovah's Name. J. Montgomery. [Ps. cvii.] This version of Ps. 107 was given in his Songs of Zion, 1822, in five numbers as follows :-

- 1. Thank and praise Jehovah's name.
- They that mourn in dangeon-gloon.

 Fools, for their transgreeden, see.

 They that toll upon the deep.

 Let the elders praise the Lord.

In his Original Hys., 1853, numbers 1-4 were given as one hymn in four parts, with No. 3 altered to "Sinners, for transgression, see," and making 24 st. of 4 l. in all. The most widely used part is No. 1. It is come-times altered to "Magnify Jehovah's Name," se in the American Baptist Praise Bk., 1871, and other collections. [J. J.]

Θαύματος ύπερφυούς. [Χριστό: γωvârac.]

That holy rite, that solemn vow. E. Osler. [Holy Baptism.] 1st pub. in Hall's Mitre H. Bh., 1836, No. 107, in 2 st of 6 l., and again in Osler's Church and King, March, 1897, as the conclusion of an article on "Easter Even." In 1858 it was adopted by the Bap. Pt. & Hymns, No. 711, but the stanzas were transposed, st. ii. being placed first, and thus opening, "Baptized into the Saviour's death." In this form it is found in a few collections. [J. J.]

That we might walk with God. B. Beddome. [Leadings of the Holy Spirit.] This is No. 138 of Beddome's posthumous Hymne Adapted to Public Worship, &c., 1817, in 4 st. of 4 lines, and headed "Leadings of the Spirit." In its original form it is not in C. U.; but it has supplied the following to a large number of American hymn-books:-

1. Heirs of uneading life. This appeared in the American Prayer Bk. Coll. 1825, No. 210, in 3 et. of 4 l. Of these st. ifi. is from Beddome (st. lv.); st. ii. Beddome (st. lv.); st. iii. Beddome (st. lv.); st. iii. Dedome (st. lv.); st. iii. Dedome (st. lv.) aitered; and st. l. new. American anthorities say that this cento was arranged by Bp. Onderdomk, who also wrote st. l. It is in several collections.

3. "The God the Spirit leads. This is composed of st. ii.-iv. from Beddome, with the alteration of the first line only. It appeared in this form, anonymously, in Bickerstein's Christian Pasienody, 1833, and is in extensive me in America.

use in America.

Sometimes Beddome's hymn is dated 1795, the year of his death.

The angel comes; he comes to resp. H. H. Milman. [Second Advent.] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 40, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in Dean Milman's Sel. of Pe. & Hys., 1837. It is given in several modern hymn-books, including Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, and others.

The apostle slept, a light shone in the prison. [Burlat of the Dead.] J. D. Imitations from the German of Spitta and Burns. Appeared in his Vision of Prophecy, do., 1858, as a paraphrase of the account contained in Acts xit. of the deliverance of St. Peter from prison. It was repeated in his Poems, 1865, p. 248, in 9 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The death of a Believer." As a whole this hymn is not in O. U., but the cente for the Burial of the Dead, "A voice is beard on earth of kinsfolk weeping," in the Hy. Comp., 1876, is composed of st. vii.—ix. [J. J.]

The ark of God in safety rode. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [For use at Sea.] Appeared in The Holy Year, 1862, p. 216, in 20 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Prayers at Sea.—The Sailors' Hymn." In later editions it is divided into four parts thus.—

Pt. 1. "The ark of God in safety rode."
Pt. 31. "O Thou Whose way is on the waves."
Pt. 31. "Our bodies are with earthly food."
Pt. 1v. "The stars will fall, the sun be dark."

These parts are in the 1869 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Pa. & Hys., st. vi. of the original being omitted. This revision was made by the author. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, is a cento composed of st. i., i., v., xi., xv.-xx. [J. J.]

The billows swell, the winds are high. W. Couper. (Temptation.) Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 18, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Temptation." It was extensively adopted by the older collection, but is somewhat restricted in its modern use.

[J. J.]

The bird that scare on highest wing. J. Montgomery. [Humility.] This poem appeared in his Poet's Portfolio, 1835, p. 179, in 3 st. of 6 l., and headed "Humility." It is given as a hymn in several collections, including Martineau's Hymns, do., 1840; the Prim. Meth. S. School Union H. Bk., 1879, and others in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

The chariot! the chariot! its wheels roll on fire. H. H. Milman. [Advent.] 1st pub. in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 7, in 5 st. of 4 l., but not included by the author in his Sel. of Ps. & Hys., 1837. It is in several modern hymn-books, including Kennedy, 1863; Snepp's Songs of G. & G.. 1872, &c. [J. J.]

The Church has waited long. H. Bosar. [Advent.] Pub. in the Bible H. Bk., 1845, No. 299, in 5 st. of 8 l., with the refrain "Come then, Lord Jesus, come." It was repeated in the 3rd cd. of the author's Songs for the Wilderness, Kelso, 1850, p. 39, and again in his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 1857, p. 31. It is in extensive use in G. Britaiu and America, sometimes without the refrain. [J. J.]

The Church of God lifts up her voice. W. C. Dix. [Easter.] This hymn is based upon a tr. in blank verse by Dr. Littledale of a short hymn near the end of his tr. of the office of the Greek Church for Easter Sunday, as pub. in his Offices from the Service Books of the Holy Eastern Church, &c., 1863, p. 222, and begins in the original Hisoxa và repardu. Mr. Dix's rendering was made in 1864, and pub. in 6 st. of 5 l., in the St. Haphael (Bristol) Hys. for Public Worship, No. 203, as one of six additional hymns given at the end of the collections, and headed, "Founded on translation from the Greek. Written by W.

C. D. for St. Raphaels. Easter, 1864." It must be observed that by an error of the printer this note reads as though it referred to No. 202 (another hymn by Mr. Dix), instead to No. 203, the present hymn. [J. J.]

The Church's one Foundation. S.J. Stone. [Processional for Featleals.] The impression made upon the author's mind by Bishop Gray's (Capetown) noble defence of the Catholic Faith against the teachings of Bishop Colenso, was in chief the origin of this magnificent hymn. It has thus associations of historical value, to which special reference is made in the stanza:—

"Though with a scornful wonder Men see her sore oppress,
By schisms rent asunder,
By heresies distrest;
Yet saints their watch are keeping
Their cry goes up, 'How long I'
And soon the night of weeping
Shall be the morn of song."

The hymn was written in 1866, and is based on the ninth article of the Apostles' Creed. It is known in three forms, (1) the original, which was pub. in the author's Lyra Fidelium, 1866, in 7 st. of 8 l., and headed "The Holy Cathodic Church: The Communion of Saints. 'He is the Head of the Body, the Church'"; (2) the revised form in 5 st. of 8 l., made in 1868 for, and pub. in the Appendix to H. A. & M., No. 820 (the form in universal use); and (3) the expanded text in 10 st. of 8 l., made in 1885 for Processional use in Salisbury Cathedral. We give here the full form of 1885, with notes in the margin which explain the position of each slanza in 1866 and 1868;—

St. 1. in 1856, and 1858.

Learn Christ her Lord:
She is His new creation
By water and the word:
From heaven He came and sought her
To be His Holy Brids
With His own blood He bought her
And for her life He dled.

St. ii. in 2. "Elect from every nation,
1968, and
1968. Yet one o'er all the earth,
Her charter of salvation,
One Lord, one Faith, one Birth;
One Holy Name she blesses,
Partakes one holy Food,
And to one hope she presses
With every grace andued.

St. iii. in 1860; omitted,
In 1868.

1868.

To guide, sustain, and cherink,
Is with her to the end;
Though there be those that hate her,
And false sons in her pale,
Against or fee or traitor
She ever shall prevail.

St. iv. in 1866; and
st. iii. in 1866.

By beresten distrect;
Yet saints their watch are keeping.
Their cry goes up, ' How long !'
And soon the night of weeping
Shall be the morn of song.

St. v. in 1863, and
st. iv. in 1863.

She waits the consummation
Of peace for everioure;
Till with the vision glorious
Her longing eyes are bleat,
And the great Church victorious
Shall be the Church at rest.

New in 6. "So, Lord, she stands before Thee, 1886. For evermore thine own;
No merit is her glory,
Her boasting this alone;

That she who did not choose Thee Came, chosen, at Thy call, Never to leave or lose Thee Or from Thy favour fall.

New in 1885.

7. " For Thy true word remaineth; No creature far or nigh, No fiend of ill who reigneth In bell or haunted sky; No doubting world's derision That holds her in despite, Shall bide her from Thy vision, Shall lure her from Thy light.

New in 1885.

a. " Thine. Thins: in bliss or sorrow. As well in shade as shine: Of old, to-day, to-morrow, To all the ages, Thine!
Thine in her great commission,
Baptized into Thy Name,
And In her last fruition Of all her hope and aim.

St. vl. in 1866 ; st. v., ll. 1-4, in 1868 ; omitted la 1868.

9. " As she on earth bath union With God, the Three in One, So hath she sweet communion With those whose rest is won;
With all her sone and daughters,
Who by the Master's hand
Led through the deathly waters, Repose in Eden-land.

10. "O happy ones and boly!

Lord, give us grace that we

Like them, the meek and lowly,

On high may dwell with Thee;

There past the border mogulains,

Where, in sweet vales, the Bride
With Thee, by living founcains,

For ever shall abide. Amen." St. vil. m 1866; 11, 1-4 in 1868.

A collation of the above text of 1885, with those of 1866 and 1868, gives the following results:

St. I. The same in all.

75. 1. xne same in Mi.
St. ii. In 1866, line 1 reads "She is from every," &c.
St. iii. The same in 1866 and 1885.
St. iv., v. The same in all.
St. vi., vii., viii. New in 1886.
St. iv. iv. 1886 and 1885.

St. iz. in 1888 and 1888, ll. 1-4 read:

'Fet she on earth bath union

With God the Three in One,

And mystic sweet communion

With those whose rest is won."

St. ix., il. 5-8, same in 1886, not in 1888, St. x., il. 1-4, same in all; il. 6-8, same in 1866 and 1885, not in 1888.

This collation and further reference to the full text shew that the 1868 version of the hymn is the finest of the three, and that which will live in the hymn-books of the future. The use of this form of the text is most extenzive in all English-speaking countries. It has also been translated into several European and other languages. The versions in Latin include " Nobis unum est fundamen," by the Rev. E. Marshall, 1882 (and circulated as a card); and "Qui Ecclesiam instauravit," by the late T. G. Godfrey-Faussett, in Memorials, 1878.

In reference to the fact that this hymn was chosen as the Processional at each of the three great services at Canterbury Cathedral, at Westminster Abbey, and St. Paul's Cathedral, when all the Bishops of the Lambeth Conference of 1888 assembled, the following lines were written by Bishop Nelson, of New Zea-land. They appeared in Church Bells of Nov. 30, 1888.

"Bard of the Church, in these divided days
For words of harmony to thee be praise:
Of love and oneness thou didst strike the chords, And set our thoughts and prayers to inneful words. The Church's one Foundation thou didst sing. Beauty and Bands to Her thy numbers bring. Through church and chancel, siele, and transept deep, In fullest melody thy watch-notes sweep;

The city paved with Gold. Bp. W. W. How. [The New Jerusalem.] "Written for Church Hymns, 1871. Designed specially as a counteractive to the merely materialist and futurist tone of many of the ordinary 'Jerusalem' hymns" (Notes on Ch. Hymns, p. lxxxiii.). This is attempted to be accomplished by giving a spiritual meaning to the "gold" and "gates of pearl," &c., of the New Jerusalem, as for instance :-

"The gates of pearl are there
In penitential tears,
Bright as a level rare
Each saintly grace appears:
We track the path saints trod of old,
And lo I the pavement is of gold!"

is said of the "true kingdom" within the man. Although well conceived, and executed in good style, it has failed to gain attention, and is very limited in its use.

The day is past and gone, Great God, we bow to Thee. W. J. Blew and J. Ellerton. [Evening.] This is a cento from Mr. Blew's tr. of "Grates, peracto jam die". (p. 451, 1.), with original additions by Mr. Ellerton. Mr. Blow's tr. appeared in his Church Hy and Tune Bk., 1852-55, in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1868 Mr. Ellerton compiled the cento for the Nantwich Festival of Choirs. It was composed of 4 st. from Mr. Blew's tr., 3 original st. by Mr. Ellerton, and a doxology,

i. The day is past and gone. Blew.
ii. O when shall that day come. Blew.
iii. Where all things shall be peace. Blew.

13. Where all dulings and to peace. Meet. It. Faint are our voices here. Ellerton. Y. Yet, Lord, to Thy dear will. Ellerton. vi. This Thine each soul to calm. Ellerton, vii. Until at rest beneath. Elev. viii. One God, the Father, Son. Devology.

In 1869 this cento was rewritten in 6 at. as "The day of praise is done," and pub. in the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick's Supplemental Hy. & Tune Bk., and again in his Select Hymns, 1871. This text was revised by Mr. Ellerton for the S. P. C. K. Church Hye., where it was given in 1871 as "Our day of praise is done." In this form it has nothing of Blew's hymn except that the line of thought is the same. It is a hymn of great merit, and in popularity and extensiveness of use it is unequalled by any of Mr. Ellerton's original hymns except his "Saviour, again to Thy dear name we raise," which was also written for a Nantwich Choral Festival. [J. J.]

The day, O Lord, is spent. Neale. [Evening.] 1st pub. in his Hymns for Children, 1st series, 1842, No. xviii., in 4 st. of 4 L, and given as a daily hymn for use at 6 P.M. It is in a large number of hymnbooks, and usually unaltered, as in Thring's Cell., 1882. In the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, No. 199, in 4 st. of 4 l., beginning, "Saviour, abide with us," is a cento, of which st. i. and iv. are by Canon W. Cooke, and at ii. and iii., the corresponding stanzas of this hymn, by Dr. Neale. This cento is re-peated in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymna, 1871, with the omission of the doxology. [J, J]

The days of old were days of might. Jane E. Leeson. [The Days of Old.] Pub. in her Songs of Christian Chivalry, 1848, No. 22, in 4 st. of 6 l., and entitled, "The Days of Bard of the Church, thy blast inspires the bost." [J.J.] departed greatness. It is answered by No. 22, "Yes, watch and wait a little while," which is entitled "Rejoinder," and is a poem of faith in and hope for the future. [J. J.]

The deluge, at the Almighty's call. P. Doddridge. [Safety in Christ.] Pub. in Job Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 336, in 7 st. of 4 l., and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 862, and in each case with the heading, "Noah preserved in the Ark, and the Believer in Christ." In H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, st. ii., ill. are omitted, whilst in the Presby, Ps. & Hys. for the Worskip of God, 1867, st. vi., vii. are given as "Enter the ark, while patience waits." [J. J.]

The eternal gates lift up their heads. Cocil F. Alexander, née Humphreya. [Ascension.] Contributed to the S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1852, No. 62, in 5 st. of 41. In 1858 it was published in a revised form in Mrs. Alexander's Hys. Descriptive and Denotional, No. 14, as "The Golden gates are lifted up." It is in C. U. in both forms : but the earlier is the more widely used of the two. In addition at, iii., iv. are given in the American Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, 1864, as "O, ever on our earthly path."

The fabric of nature is fair. S. Pearce. [During Sickness.] This poem, for it cannot be called a hymn, unless taken as such for private devotion appeared in A. Fuller's Memoir of Samuel Pearce, 1800, and again in the 2nd ed., 1801, at the end of the Memoir. It is in 15 st. of 4 l., and entitled "On being prevented by sickness from attending on Public Worship." It was added to Rippon's Sci. in 1800, No. 540, Pt. ii., through which it passed into other collections.

The faithful men of every land. Cecil F. Alexander, nee Humphreys. [Holy Catholic Church.] 1st pub. in her Hys. for Little Children, 1848, No. 16, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed with the words from the Apostles' Creed, "The Holy Catholic Church." In many instances where the hymn is in C. U. the following stanzas are omilted (iv., v.):-

"All members of one body vast
With Jesus for their Head,
And Sacraments whereby their souls Are born again and fed; " And Bishops good to order them, And Priests to train and teach,-This is the Holy Church, wherein We have our places each."

The hymn in full or in part is in several collections. [J, J]

The festal morn, my [O] God is some. J. Merrick. [Ps. exxii. Sunday Morning.] Pub. in his Poems, 1768; and again in his Psalms Translated or Paraphrased in English Verse, 1765, p. 827, in 7 et. of 61. It was given in several of the older, and is still retained in a few modern collections, but usually in an abbreviated and slightly altered form, as in Hatfield's Church altered to "The ancient days were days of peated in several American collections, includ-might." It is a plaintive poem mourning ing The Church Hymnol, Philadelphia, 1869; ing The Church Hymnal, Philadelphia, 1869; and in 4 st. in the Protestant Episco. Church Hymnol, 1871. [J, J,]

The first sad hours of shame. H. Alford. [Annunciation of B. V. M.] 1st pub. in his Re. & Hys., 1844, No. 82, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 258. Its use is limited. [J. J.]

The foe behind, the deep before. J. M. Neale. [Easter Carol.] This carol for Easter was pub. in his Carols for Easter-tide, 1854, p. 55, in 12 at. It is found in several modern hymn-books, but usually in an abbreviated form. It reads like an Ode from a Greek Canon, and is sometimes taken for one. As Dr. Neale tr. the Canon for Easter by St. John of Damascus, "Tis the day of resurrection" in 1853, and this Carol for Easter was pub. in 1854, it is not improbable that the direct source of inspiration was the Greek of St. John, although many of Neale's carols for Easter-tide are "free imitations" of Latin Sequences (see Preface). [J. J.]

The gath'ring clouds with aspect dark. J. Newton. [In Time of War.] In the Rev. Josiah Bull's John Newton of Olney and St. Mary Woolnoth, 1868, p. 210, there is the following entry from Newton's Diary:-

"31st [May 31st, 1775.] The paper this evening brought an account of the commencement of hestilities in New England, and many killed on both sides. These thinus, I fear, are the beginning of sorrows. O that I could be suitably affected with what I see and hear."

Mr. Bull adds to this extract :-

"A few days afterwards Mr. Newton says that baving proposed an extraordinary meeting for prayer weekly on account of the times, we began this morning; and, though we met at five o'clock, more people were present than we usually have in the avening."

Following this is a further extract from Newton's Diary :-

"Sunday, June 11th [1776]. In the evening I gave a brief sketch of the past and present state of the nation, with a view to engage the people to attendance on our Tuesday moraing meetings by apprising them of the importance of the present crisis. Hymn 20? was composed for this service."

The hymn thus referred to was that now under notice. In the July number of the Gospel Magazine it was given in 9 st. of 4 l., headed "On the Times," and signed "Vigil." It appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, as No. 64 of Bk. if , and with the heading, "On the Commencement of Hostilities in America. Beyond these historical and biographical associations the hymn has little value, and could not be used except under very excep-(J. J.) tional circumstances.

The glorious myriads round the throne. A. Rutherford. [Saints in Glory; or All Saints Day.] This hymn is found in the 5th ed. of the Glassite or Sandemanian Christian, Songs, &c., Dundee, L. Chalmers, &c., 1775, No. 69 [see Scottish Rymnsdy, § x. 8]; and again in later editions of the same. In its rewritten form as, "The countless multitude on high," it is found in the 1830 Appendix to the Scottish Bapt. Ps., Hys. & Spiritual Songs, No. 448. It has passed into several H. Bk., N. Y., 1872; E. Pront's Psalmist, modern hymn-books, including Flett's Coll., 1878, and others. In the American Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, st. i.—v. were given as "With loy shall I behold the day." This form is re-buted to Robert Sandeman but in error. [J. M.]

The glorious universe around. Montgomery. [Communion of Saints.] This hymn appeared in the Leeds Sci. of Hys., Compiled and Original, &c., by E. Parsons and others, 1822, No. 829, in 5 st. of 4 l. In Montgomers. Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 476, it was given with a slight revision and the addition of the stanza. The earth, the ocean, and the sky "as st. ii, in its revised form of 6 st. The same text was repeated in his Original Hys., 1858. In Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, st. iv.-vi. of the 1825 text are given as "In one fraternal bond of love." [J. J.]

The glory of the Spring, how sweet. T. H. Gill. [Spring.] "Composed at Whitsuntide, 1867, and let printed in the Golden Chain, &c., 1869," No. 112, in 9 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Divine Renewer. 'Thou renewest the face of the earth.' Be renewed in the spirit of your mind." It is an exquisite lyric, and has been somewhat widely used, but usually with the omission of one or more stanzas. In G. Britsin it is in Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, No. 1143; the Bapt. Hymnal, 1879, No. 816; Horder's Cong. Hymns, 1884, No. 622, and others, and in America in the Songe of the Spirit, N. Y., 1871, &c. [J. J.]

The God of Abraham preise. T. Olivers. [Praise to and Trust in the God of Abraham.] Concerning the origin and first publication of this hymn somewhat conflicting accounts are in circulation. The most circumstantial is that quoted by Miller from an unauthenticated source. (Singers & Songs, 1869, p. 245) :

The son of a Wesleyan Minister said a few years ago, "I remember my father telling me that he was once standing in the sisle of City Road Chapel, during a by Dr. Adler conference in Wesley's time. Thomas Olivers, one of the preachers, came down to him and said, 'Look at this; I have rendered it from the Hebrew, giving it, as far as I Synagogues.

could, a Christian character, and I have called on Leoni, the Jew, who has given me a synagogue melody to suit it; here is the tune, and it is to be called Leont."

On communicating with the late Rev. Dr. Adler, the Chief Rabbi of the British Empire, we find that this account of the origin of this hymn is as near the actual facts as possible. The hymn is a free rendering, with, as Olivers puts it, as decided "a Christian character" as he could give to it, of the Hebrew Yigdal or Doxology, which rehearses in metrical form the thirteen articles of the Hebrew Creed. The Yigdal is supposed to have been composed by Daniel ben Judah, a Mediaval writer, the date of whose birth and death is unknown. The thirteen articles were drawn up by Moses Maimonides (1130-1205), the first who formulated the Dogmas of Judaism. [See article on the Dogmas of Judaism in the Jewish Quarterly Review, October, 1888.] The Yigdal is contained in the Hebrew daily Prayer Books, and is sung at the conclusion of divine service on the eve of Sabbaths and Festivals. Leoni, or rather Meyer Lyon, was chorister at the Great Synagogue, Duke's Place, Aldgate, London, at the end of the last century. Leoni sang the Hebrew Yigdal to the melody now known as Leoni. It is still chanted on Friday evening in every Synagogue of the British Empire, and at the family worship in Jewish homes (Dr. Adler's MS.)

As this hymn, both in its Hebrew form, and as a paraphrase by Olivers, is of world-wide interest, we append (1) The Hebrow Text, as used in the Jewish Synagogues, supplied by Dr. Adler, (2) A literal translation, as appended to the Hebrew text in the printed form as used in some of the Synagogues, supplied by Dr. Adler, (3) the Paraphrase by Olivers, and (4) The Melody, as sung in the Jewish

ii. A literal Translation of the same.

Extolice and preised be the living God, who exists unbounded by time. Account and passed of the Iving doc, who exists dimended by times.

He is one of unparalleled unity, invisible and stringl.

Without form or figure,—incorpored,—boly beyond conception.

Prior to all created things,—the first, without date or beginning.

Lo! He is Lord of the world and all creation, which sylice His greatness and dominionThe flow of His prophetic spirit has He imparted to men selected for His glory.

No one has appeared in Israel line unto Moses; a prophet, beholding His glorious semblance.
God has given the true law to His people, by the hands of his trusty prophet.

This law, God will never alter nor change for any other.

He perceives and is acquainted with our secrets,—acce the end of all things at their very beginning.

He rewards man with kindness according to his work; dispenses punishment to the wicked, according to his indepens. At the end of days by Him appointed, will He send our Messiah, to redrem those who hope for final salvation. God, in His great mercy, will recall the dead to life. Praised be His glorious name for evermore, iil. The Paraphrase by T. Olivers.

" PART THE FIRST.

"The God of Abrah'm praise, Who reigns enthroned above; Antiept of everlasting days, And God of Love: JEHOVAH GREAT I AW! By earth and beav'n confest; I bow and bless the sacred Name, For ever bless'd.

'The God of Abrah'm praise, At whose supreme command,
From earth I rise—and seek the joys
At his right band;
I all on earth foreske,
Its wisdom, fame, and power;
And him my only Portion make,
My Shield and Tower.

"The God of Abrah'm praise, Whose all-sufficient grace Shall guide me all my happy days, In all my ways; He calls a worm his friend! He calls himself my God: And he shall save me to the end. Thro' Jesu's blood.

"He by Himself bath sworn,
I on his oath depend,
I shall, on eagle's wings up-borne,
To heaven ascend;
I shall his power adore,
I shall his power adore,
And sing the worders of his graces And sing the wonders of his grace For evermore.

" PART THE SECOND.

"The nature's strength decay,
And earth and hell withstand,
To Canaan's bounds I urge my way, At his command: The wai'ry deep I pass, With Jesus in my view; And thro' the howling wilderness My way pursue.

"The goodly land I see, With peace and plenty bless'd; A land of sacred liberty, And endless rest.
There milk and honey flow;
And oll and who abound,
And trees of life for ever grow,
With Mercy crown'd.

"There dwells the Lord our King, Tag Logo our Eightgouskess (Triumphant o'er the world and sin), The Prince of Prace; On Siou's sacred height, His Kingdom still maintains; And glorious with his saints in light,

For ever reigne.

"He keeps his own secure.
He guards them by hie elde.
Arrays in garments, white and pure.
His spotless bride:
With streams of sucret biles,
With groves of living joys—
With all the fruits of Faradise
He will supplies

He still supplies. " PART THE THIRD.

"Before the great THREE-ONE They all exulting stand; And tell the wonders he hath done Thro' all their land;

The list'ning spheres attend, And swell the growing fame; And sing the songs which never end, The wond'rous NAME.

" The God who reigns on high, "The God who reigns on ligh,
The great archangels sing.
And 'Holy, holy, holy, 'cry,
'Almerty Kirne':
'Who Was, and Is, the same;
'And evermore shall be;
'Jenovar - Father-Great I And
'We worship Thee.'

"Before the Savioun's face
The raneom'd nations bow;
O'erwhelm'd at his Almighty grace, For ever new:
He shows his prints of Love—
They kindle—to a fiame!
And sound thre' all the worlds above, The slaughter'd LAKE.

XII. "The whole triumphant host, Give thanks to God on high; 'Hisi', FATHER, SOY, and HOLY-GHOST,' They ever cry: Hall, Abrah'm's GOD—and wine! (I join the heav'nly lays,)
All Might and Majesty are Thine
And endless Praise."

The title of the tract, from which this text is reprinted, is:-

A Hymn to the Gol of Abraham. In Three Parts: Adapted To a celebrated Air, sung by the Priest, Signior Leoni, 40., at the Fend Synagogue, in London: By Thomas Olivers. [Quotations of H. Scripture.] Not-lingham, Printed by S. Orenvell, Bookseller, &c.

Tradition says that Olivers wrote the hypin at the house of John Bakewell (p. 108, 1), at Westminster, in 1770. The copy from which we print is undated; the 4th ed. is 1772; 5th, 1772; 6th (London and Philadelphia) and 7th, 1778; 8th, Pine, Bristol, 1773. In addition to its use in an abbreviated form in varying lengths, all beginning with the first stanza, there are also the following centos:-

1. By faith we, day to say. This, in T. Darling's Bys. for the Church of England, 1887, is a cento in 3 st. from T. Olivers and T. Darling.

2. The God whe regims on high. This is the most popular cento of any, and is in numerous hymnals in 6. Britain and America. It begins with st. x.

3. The goodly land I see. This, opening with st. vi., is in several collections in G. Britain and America.

4. Though murtal strength be weak. This cente, in the People's H., 1867, in 5 st. of 41. is in a. m., and is a portion of Olivers's hymu, beginning with st. v., re-portion to Outer's frymn, beginning with st. v., re-written by Dr. Littledale.

5. Though nature's strength decay. This cento, be-ginning with st. v., is in a few collections only, including Econoly, 1863.

6. Where dwells the glorious King t This, in Darling's Hys. for the Church of England, 1989, is based on this hymn.

Christophers in his Epworth Singers, Stevenson in his Methodiet H. Bk. Notes, 1883, and Duffield in his English Hymne, 1886, enter largely upon the spiritual use of striking partions of this hymn to many individuals. Stevenson's account is specially worthy of attention. Under date of July 29, 1805. Henry Martyn, then on the eve of his voyage to India, wrote :--

"I was much engaged at intervals in learning the bymn, 'The God of Abraham praise'; as often as I could use the language of it with any truth, my heart was a little at ease. There was comething peculiarly solemn and affecting to me in this bymn, and particularly at this time. The truth of the sentiments I knew well enough. But, alas! I felt that the state of mind expressed in it was above mine at the time, and I felt loat to forsake all on carth."

The opinion of James Montgomery as expressed in the "Introductory Essay" to his Christian Psalmist, 1825, is just and discriminating. Had I a known, however, that this "noble ode" by "an unlettered man" had its inspiration in, and was built up from, the netrical form of the Hebrew creed, his astonishment at the result would have been somewhat modified. His note is:—

"That noble ode, page 365, "The God of Abraham praise," Ro., though the essay of an unlettered man, claims especial bonour. There is not in our language a lyric of more majestic style, more elevated thought, or more glorious imagery; its structure, indeed, is unsattractive; and, on account of the short lines, occasionally uncount; but, like a stately pile of architecture, severe and simple in design, it strikes less on the first view than after deliberate examination, when its proportions become more graceful, its dimensions expand, and the mind itself grows greater in contemplating it."

Preface, p. xxviii.

iv. The Melody.

The following melody has been supplied by the Rev. Francis L. Cohen, Minister of the Borough New Synagogue, London.—

YIGDAL "LEONL"

Mr. Cohen accompanies the melody with the following note:-

"In Leon's time it is most unlikely that its [The Melody's] Synagogue version was written in score at all, for our knowledge of the condition of Synagogue music in those days leads us to believe it was then amp in mison, with no doubt an engrowted accompaniment by the 'bass,' and 'singer' (i.e. soprano), who as 'meshorrerim' (i.e. scompanying singer) sustained the Haran, (precenter). I give you, however, the most correct form of the melody at present in use."

In compaction with this harm and the

In connection with this hymn and the above Melody, it may be of interest to note a few facts concerning Leoni himself. Leoni is sometimes said to have been the uncle of the celebrated Braham, but for this statement there is no evidence. Both were choristers at the same time in the Great Synagogue, Duke's Place, London. Braham left the synagogue for the stage. Leoni was also a public singer either at Drury Lane, or Covent Garden. It is said that his voice surpassed that of Braham in sweetness and melody. In every other respect he was unsuited for the stage, and his appearance was a failure. Subsequently he became the first qualified chazan of the English and German Synagogue in Jamaica. - Leoni died in Jamaica. (See Jewish Chronicle, Dec. 26, 1873.) [J. J.]

The God of glory walks His round. Bp. R. Heber. [Septuagesima.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 44, in 6 st. of 4 l., and is based on the Parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard. It is in C. U. in its original form; as "The God of mercy warns us all," in Kennedy, 1863; and as "The God of Glory looks around" in others. [J. J.]

The God of harvest praise. J. Montgomery. [Harvest.] The original Ms. of this hymn is dated 1840. From Holland's Memoirs of Montgomery we find that in August.

1840, the poet visited the widow of R. C. Brackenbury (p. 168, i.), of Raithby Hall, Spilbby, Lincolushire, and that on his return journey he wrote this hymn. On reaching Sheffield he gave the stanzas to Holland, saying, "You may do what you like with them." Holland adds, "The hint was well understood, and the author's townsmen had the pleasure of reading his beautiful harvest hymn the next day in the Sheffield Mercury" (Memoire, vol. v. p. 407). It was also printed in the Evangelical Magazine of Nov. 1840, as "A Harvest Hymn for 1840," and dated "The Mount, Sheffield, Sept. 1840." Montgomery included it in his Original Hys., 1853, No. 279, in 7 st. of 7 L. It is a spirited hymn, and in an abbreviated form would be of rome value.

The God of love my Shepherd is. [Ps. zziii.] Various versions of Ps. 23, each beginning with the same first line are in C. U. These are:—

1- George Herbert's version, pub. posthumously in his Temple, 1633, in 6 st. of 4 l, and repeated in all subsequent editions of the same. The first stanza is:—

"The God of love my Shepherd is, "
And He that doth me feed;
White He is mine and I am His,
What can I want or need?"

2. George Rawson's rendering in the Leeds H. Bk., 1858, No. 26, is based upon the above by Herbert, and the first stanza is:---

"The God of love my Shepherd is, To watch me and to feed; Since He is mine and I am His, What can I ever need?"

This text was slightly altered by Mr. Rawson for the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, and again | for his Hymns, Verses and Chants, 1876.

8. G. Rawson has a second version of Ps. 23 in his Hymns, &c., 1876, the opening stanza of which is:—

"My Shepherd is the Living Lord, So I can never need; In pastures green Still streams between I lay me down to feed."

4. G. Rawson's third version in his Hymns, &c., 1876, in 6 st. of 4 l., begins :--

"The God of leve my Shapherd is, My gracious constant Guide; I shall not want, for I am His: In all supplied."

This was given in Thring's Coll., 1882, with a new verse by Prebendary Thring in the place of Mr. Rawson's st. v. The latter reads:—

"Thy grace autounds my demon foce;
True oli of joy is mine;
My cup of mercy overflows
With care divine,"

Prebendary Thring's substitute is:

"Thou spreadst my table 'mid my foce,
The oil of grace is mine,
My cup with mercy overflows
And love divine."

5. Mr. Rawson, not content with his original version, supplied us with the following in Ms. :—

" God is my host, His welcome glows;
The fastal oil is mine;
My board is spread, my cup o'erflows,
By care divine."

To our mind Probendary Thring's version is the most acceptable of the three renderings of the lifth stanza. [J. J.]

The God of nature and of grace. J. Montgomery. [Glory of God in Creation.] Pub. in his Greenland and other Poems, 1819, p. 174, in 10 st. of 4 1., and headed, "The Visible Crention." It was repeated the same year in Cotterill's Sel., No. 331, in 8 st. of 4 1.; again in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 520, also in 8 st. of 4 1. (alightly altered); and again, in the same form, in his Original Hymns, 1833. In Kanedy, 1863, No. 338, st. i., and st. ii. li. 1-4, are from this hymn—the rest of the cento being by Dr. Kennedy. The cento begins with the same first line as above. In addition there are in C. U. two centos from the original: (1) "Behold this fair and fertile globe" (st. ii.), and (2) "How excellent, O Lord, Thy Name." [J. J.]

The golden gates are lifted up. Cecil F. Alexander, nee Humphreys. [Ascension.] Pub. in her Hymns Descriptive and Devotional, &c., 1858, No. 14, in 5 st. of 4 l., and repeated in later editions. It is in C. U. in its full form, and also as "Thou art gone up before us, Lord," beginning with st. ii. [J. J.]

The great Apostle called by grace. H. Alford. [Conversion of St. Paul.] let publin his Ps. & Hys., &c., 1844, No. 79, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in his Yeur of Praise, 1867, No. 250. It is given in several hymnals in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

The ground on which this day we stand. J. Montgomery. [Laying the Foundation Stone of a Church.] Written for the laying of the foundation stone of Holy Trinity Church, The Wicker, Sheffield, erected by the Misses Harrison (compilers of the Weston H.

Bh.), which took place on June 30th, 1847. It was written at the earnest request of the Incumbent, though much against Montgomery's own wish, as he judged that on that subject he had written enough, and had "nothing more to say" (Memoirs, vol. vii. p. 78). The hymn was included in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 294, in 6 st. of 4 l. [J. J.]

The head that once was crowned with thorns. T. Kelly. [Christ Perfect through Sufferings.] This hymn is sometimes given as from the 1804 ed. of his Hymns, &c. This is not so. It appeared in the ed. of 1820, in 6 st. of 4 l., and is No. 53 in the edition of 1853. It is based on Heb. ii. 10, "For it became Him, for Whom are all things, and by Whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." It has pessed into numerous collections in G. Britain and America, and has been tr. into Latin by H. M. Maegill, in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, as, "Spinis caput coronatum."

The heart of childhood is all mirth. J. Keble. [2nd Sun. after Epiphany.] Ist pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 17 st. of 4 l., and based upon "The Marriage in Cana of Galileo, the Gospel of the Day." Two centos therefrom have come into C. U. (1) "The silent joy, that sinks so deep," and (2) "Fathers may hate us or forsake." Beyond these no other use bas been made of the poem for congregational purposes. [J. J.]

The heathen perish: day by day. J. Montgomery. [Missions.] 1st printed in the Sheffield Iris newspaper, of which Montgomery was the proprietor and editor, on the 20th April, 1824, in 3 st. of 4 l. It was repeated in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 551, and again in his Original Hymns, 1833, No. 256. It is given in comparatively few modern hymn-books. [J. J.]

The highest and the holiest place. H. Alford [St. Matthias.] 1st pub. in his Pa. & Hy &c., 1844, No. 81, in 5 st. of 4 1., and again in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 252. It is also in Kennedy, 1863, and other collections.

[J. J.]

The hour of my departure's come. J. Logan. [Death anticipated.] This is hymn No. 5, in 6 st. of 4 l., of the "Hymns" appended to the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781. We have most reluctantly assigned this sweetly plaintive hymn to J. Logan rather than to M. Bruce, for reasons which are given on p. 188, ii. of this Dictionary. The hymn is in several modern hymn-books in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

The hours of [day] school are over. J. Ellerton. [Evening.] Written in 1858 as a companion hymn to "Day by day we magnify Thee" (p. 282, i.), and pub. in the author's Hys. for Schools and Bible Classes (Brighton), 1858. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, Mr. Ellerton changes the opening line to "The hours of day are over." It is in C. U. both in this form and in the original [J. J.]

The King of love my Shepherd in. Sir H. W. Baker. [Po. zpiii.] 1st pub. in the 1868 App. to H. A. & M., in 6 st. of 4 l., and from thence has passed into numerous collections, and usually in an unaltered form. Mr. Elierton, in his annotation thereon in Notes to the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, says truly and sympathetically, "It may interest many to know that the third verse [Perverse and foolish oft I strayed'] of this lovely hymn, perhaps the most beautiful of all the countiess versions of Psalm xxiii., was the last audible sentence upon the dying lips of the lamented author. February 12, 1877" (p. 107, ii.) A tr. of this paraphrase into Latin, by J. P. M., appeared in Blackwood's Magazine, Feb., 1887, as "Rex, Rex amoris, ut Pastoris."

The last and greatest herald of heaven's King. W. Drammond. [St. John the Baptist.] This in 14 lines is No. 9 of his Flowers of Zion; or, Spiritual Poems, 1623. Also in The Works of William Drummond of Hauthornden, &c., Edinburgh, James Watson, 1711. It was repeated in Bp. Heber's post-humons Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 131, in 2 st. of 6 L, and again in later collections. [J. J.]

The Lord ascendeth up on high. A. T. Russell. [Ascension.] Pub. in the Hys. for Pub. Worship and Private Decotion, pub. for the benefit of the London German Hospital, Dalston, 1848, in 4 st. of 6 l. In 1854 st. i., ii., and a third stanza by Bp. How, were given in Morrell and How's Ps. & Hys., No. 51, each stanza being in 7 l. This text was repeated in the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871. See folio ed. of the same, 1881, for note thereon, and for the original text.

The Lord forgets His wonted grace. Anne Steele. [Divine Compassion.] 1st pub. in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. i. p. 80, in 7 st. of 4 l., and again in D. Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymne, 1863. In some American hymn-books a part of this hymn beginning with st. iv. is given as "A mother may forgetful be," and again in others, "Forgetful, can a mother be?" [J. J.]

The Lord is King; He wrought His will. J. Keble. [Christ the King.] "Composed on the occasion of the Visit of the British Association for the Promotion of Science, to be sung in the Parish Church of St. Nicholas, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 1868," and pub. in the author's posthumous Missellansous Poems, 1869, in 6 st. of 4 l. In [J. J.] Thring's Coll., 1882, and others.

The Lord is King! lift up thy [your] voice. J. Conder. [Christ the King.] Pub. in his Star in the East, &a., 1824, p. 50, in 8 et. of 41., and based upon the words "Alleluis! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." It was repeated in the Cong. H. Bk., 1836, No. 461; in Conder's posthumous Hys. of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 196. It is sometimes given as "The Lord is King! lift up your voice." In addition there are also center in C. U. beginning (1) "The Lord is King! Child of the dust" (st. iii.), and "He reigns! ye saints, exalt your strains." Through these various forms this hymn is in extensive use. [J. J.]

The Lord is my Shepherd, He makes me repose. W. Knox. [Ps. zziii.] Appeared in his Songs of Israel, &c., 1824, and | coxcludes this hymn.

again in his posthumous Poems, 1847, p. 107, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is in a few modern hymnbooks only, including the Songs for the Sans-tuary, N. Y., 1865.

The Lord is risen indeed. T. Kelly.[Easter.] 1st pub. in his Coll. of Ps. & Hys., &c., Dublin, 1802, No. 263, in 7 st. of 4 1., and then in his Hymns, &c., 1804, and later eds. In the latest eds. It was expanded to 8 st. as in that of 1853, the addition there being st. vi. It is found in full or in an abridged form in a large number of hymn-books. [J. J.]

The Lord Jehovah calls. dridge. [Warning to Sinners.] This hymn is No. 64, in the D. MSS. It is in 4 st. of 4 L, and headed, "On hearing God's Voice immediately; from Heb. iii. 13." It has no date: but being found between one hymn dated "April 10, 1785," and another "Jan. 1, 173]," we may date it circa 1736 with tolerable certainty. In Job Orton's posthumous edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, it was given in a slightly different form as No. 300, and with the heading changed to "An immediate Attention to God's Voice required," Heb. iii. 15. The same text and heading were repeated in J. D. Humphreys's edition of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1839, No. 335. [J. J.]

The Lord Jehovah reigns, His throne is built on high. I. Watts. [Ps]cristii.] Aithough given in his Hys. and S. Songs, 1709, Bk. ii., No. 169, as a version of Ps. 148, in 4 st. of 8 l., it did not appear in his Psalms of David, 1719, nor in any subsequent edition of the same. It is in somewhat extensive use. $[\mathbf{J}, \mathbf{J},]$

The Lord, my Saviour, is my Light. Anne Steele. [Ps. xxvii.] Appeared in her Poems on Subjects Chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. ii. p. 150, in 15 st. of 4 l., and again in D. Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymne, 1863. In Cotterill's Sel., 1810, Ps. 27, st. i., iv., v., IV. were given in an altered form as "Thou Lord, our Guide, our Light, our Way." This was repeated in the 1819 ed. of the same, p. 16. In Kennedy, 1863, No. 260, Cotteril's form of the text is altered to "O Lord, our Guide, our Light, our Way." [J. J.]

The Lord of might from Sinai's brow. Bp. R. Heber. [Passiontide.] Pub. in his poethumous Hymrs, &c., 1827, p. 60, in 6 at. of 7 i. as the second hymn for the 6th Sunday in Lent. It has passed into numerous or lections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.] It has passed into numerous col-

The Lord of Sabbath let us praise. S. Wesley, junz. [Sunday.] Appeared in his Poems on Several Occasions, 1736, in 4 st. of 4 l.; again in J. Wesley's Coll. of Ps. & Hys., 1741; and again in Nichell's reprint of the Poems, &c., 1862, p. 864. It was included in the Church of England collections at su early date; and is found in its original form in several modern collections, including the 1875 ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., No. 950. In some hymn-books, as Mercer and others, it is given as "Lord of the Sabbath, Thee we praise." The woll-known couplet:—

"'Two great to speak a world from nought;
"Two greater to redeem:"

[J. J.]

The Lord shall come! the earth shall quake. Bp. R. Heber. [Second Advent.] Of this hymn there are three forms in C. U. as follows:-

1. The Lord shall come! the earth shall quake. This, the original form of the hymn, was given in 5 st. of 4 l. in the Oct. number of the Christian Observer, 1811, as a hymn for the 4th S. in Advent. In its original form it is not in C. U. In the 1815 Appendix to Cotterill's $\sigma_{b}$, st. i.—iii. and v. were given in an altered form as $No. 240. In the 8th ed. of his $\sigma_{b}$, st. i.—iii. and v. were given in an altered form as $No. 240. In the 8th ed. of his $\sigma_{b}$, $1819, $No. 186, $Cotteril restored st. iv. in an altered form. This form of the text was repeated in J. Montgomery's Christian Packasist, 1828, $No. 310, and is given in several modern by meals including the $Leck H. Bk. 1853; the Bapt. $Ps. & $Hys., 1883; the $Popple's H., 1867, and others.

2. The Lord will come, the sarth shall quake. This revised form of the hymn appeared in Bp. Helec's post-humous $Hymns, $\sigma_{a}$, $\text{less}_{a}$, $\text{less}_{b}$, $\text{less}_{b}$ far the most English-speaking countries, and is by far the most English-speaking countries, and is by far the most English-speaking countries, and is by far the unaltered as in the $Hy$. Cosp., 1876.

3. The Lord will come; the sarth shall quake. In Murray's $Hymnal, 1852, the 1827 text was given with slight alternations, and the addition of a doxology. In Chope's $Hymnal, 1852 and 1884, st. 1.-iii, of Bp. Hober's 1827 text, slightly altered, were given with a new stames. a hymn for the 4th S. in Advent. In its original f beginning, "O King of Mercy, grant us power," and the doxology as in Murray's Hymnol, 1852. This arrangement of the text, with elight variations, is No. 111 in Thring's Coll., 1862.

In other hymn-books there are variations from the above forms of this hymn. These variations can be tested by the works already named. Of Bp. Hober's 1827 text a rendering into Latin is given in R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Lutina, 1871, as "Advoniet Dominus! Tollus tremefacta labascot;" and another of the same text in H. M. Maegill's Songe of the Christian Creed & Life, 1876: as "Deus veniet; trementes." [J. J.]

The Lord will happiness divine. W. Comper. [Lent.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 64, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The contrite heart." It is in a large number of hymnals in G. Britain and America, and is specially suited for private use. [J. J.]

The Lord's my Shepherd, I'll not want. Scottish Psalter, 1650. [Ps. zziii.]. We have selected this for treatment as a specimen of the so-called Scotch Version, seeing that it is the most familiar of all in Scotland; and is also included in many Euglish and American hymnals of the present day. It is founded on the version by Francis Rous. His 1st ed. of 1641 has not been accessible, but the text of his 1643 ed. is here quoted from Dr. Laing's Letters and Journals rf Robert Baillie, vol. iii., 1842.

- "My Shepheard is the living Lord, and he that doth me feed; How can I then lack anything whereof I stand in need.
- " In pastures green and flourishing he makes me down to lye: And after drives me to the streames which run most pleasantly.
- ' And when I feele my selfe neere lost, then home he me doth take; Conducting me in his right paths, even for his owne Names sake.
- " And though I were even at death's doors, yet would I feare none ill;
 Thy rod, thy staff do comfort me, and thou art with me still.
- " Thou hast my table richly stor'd in presence of my foe; My head with oile thou dost amoint, my cap doth overflow.

THE MORNING DAWNS

"Thy grace and mercy all my daies shall surely follow me; And ever in the house of God, my dwelling place shall be."

In great measure this text is taken from Whittingham's "The Lord is on ly my support," 1st pub. in the One and Fiftie Psalmes of David, Geneva, 1550. After being revised by the Divines of the Westminster Assembly, it appeared in 1646 as:-

"The Lord my shepheard is, I shall not want; he makes me ly In pastures green, me leads by streams that do run quietly.

" My soule he doth restore again, and me to walk doth make On in the paths of righteonsness ev'n for his own names sake.

" Yes the' I walk in deaths dark vale I'te fear no evill thing, Thou art with me, thy rod, thy staffe, to me do comfort bring.

" Before me thou a table fit'st In presence of my foes;
My head thou does with oile anoint, my cap it overflowes.

" Goodnesse and mercy all my life thall surely follow me; And in God's house for evermore my dwelling place shall be."

The version pub. in 1650 is a revised form of this, the variations being in st. i., st. iii. II. 2-4, and st. iv. II. 1, 4.

11. 2-4, and set iv. ii. 1, 2, or on analysing it we thus find: Of Whiltinghaw's original version only two lines survive (il. l. 4, iii. 1, 2); of Roses, 1643, only seven lines (i. l. 2, iii. 1, 4, iii. 1, 2); v. ii. 2, 3, and v. l. 2, 4); and of the 1646 st. ii. l. 1, 2, 4; iii., l. 1; iv. ll. 2, 3; and st. v. exactly, and st. li, l. 3, and lv. l. 4 nearly. Zachawy Boyds's various editions only furnish one line (st. i. l. 1 from his 3rd ed. 1646). The version by Sir William Mure, 1639 (in the Historic and Descent of the House of Rescallen, Glasgow, 1825, p. 188) affords the following belief of the Monte of Rose of Rescallen, iii. 3, "For thow art with me, Lord the rode

til. 3. " For thow art with me, Lord, thy rods and staffe me comfort still."

iv. 1. " For me a table thow dost spread, in presence of my foce; With oyle thow dost anoint mine head by thee my cup overflowes."

Thus the only lines of the 1850 not given exactly, or nearly, in any of the above are:—

" He leadeth me The quiet waters by." iv. I. " My table then hast furnished."

The first religious verse learnt at a mother's knee, and often the last repeated before entering "the valley of the shadow of death," its place in the Pealter makes it needless to include it in Scottish hymnals. collections of the present time it is found in England in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, Barry's Hymnal, 1867, the Canterbury Hymnal; and in America in the Andover Sabbath H. Bk., 1858; Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, Dutch Reformed H. Bk., 1869. It is also in full, and unaltered from the 1650 Pealter in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875. [J. M.]

The morning dawns upon the place. J. Montgomery. [Passiontide.] Pub. in his Greenland and Other Poems, 1819, p. 181, in 4 st. of 8 l. and headed "Christ's Passion." In Cotterill's Sci., 1819, No. 223, it is headed "For Good Friday." In his Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 492, Montgomery gave it in a revised form in 7 st. of 4 L, the omitted lines being st. iv. ll. 1-4,

"He dies:—tho vell is rent in twain: Darkness o'er all the land is spread; High without tempest rolls the main: Earth quakes: the graves give up their dead."

variations in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 61, and is that usually given in the hymn-books both in G. Britain and America. Sometimes the text is abbreviated. [J. J.]

The morning flowers display their sweets. S. Wesley, jun. [Death.] Appeared in David Lewis's collection of Miscellaneous Poems, 1726; in Wesley's Poems on Several Occasions, 1736; and in the 1862 reprint of the same, 1862, p. 81, in 6 st. of 4 l. In the Poems it is headed "Verses on Isaiah xi. 6, 8. Occasioned by the death of a Young Lady." It was also given in the Wesley Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1748, and in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 44 (ed. 1875, No. 46). It is in extensive use in G. Britain and America [J, J.]

The morning stars in concert sang. J. Montgomery. [Praise.] Written for the Sheffield Sunday School Union Whit Monday gathering of 1849, and printed on a bread sheet for use on that occasion. In Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1858, in 6 st. of 41. it is given "For the Opening of an Organ," for which it is well adapted. [J, J]

The night is come; like to the day. Sir T. Browne. [Evening.] 1st pub. in the 1642 ed. of his Religio Medici, Pt. ii., § 12, and is thus introduced in speaking of aleep:-

"It [sleep] is that death which we may be literally said to die daily; a death which Adam died before his mortality; a death whereby we live a middle and moderating point between life and death. In fine so like death I dare not trust it without my prayers and an half adject unto the world, and take my farewell in a colloguy with God :-

"The night is come; like to the day," &c. [extending to 30 lines]. "This is the formitive I take to bedward; I need no other Laudanum than this to make me sleep; after which I close mine eyes in security, content to take my leave of the sun, and sleep unto the recoveriety." the resurrection."

From the above-named 30 lines, the cento in common use has been compiled. It is also sometimes given in an altered form as "The sun is gone: like to the day," as in Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858. Original text in The Camelot Classics, Lond., W. Scott, 1886. [J. J.]

The night is wearing fast away. [Second Advent.] This appeared anonymously in the Plymouth Brethren's Hys. for the Poor of the Flock, 1838, No. 86, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in several later collections. In The Christian Hyl. (N.D.) it is attributed to Sir E. Denny, but it is not in his Hys. and Poems, 1848 or 1870. In J. Denham Smith's New Times of Refreshing, 1888, the author's name is given as "Hoare." [J. J.]

The poorest of the poor are we. J. Montgomery. [Ragged Schools.] Under the date of 1849, Holland says in his Memoirs of Montgomery, vol. vii. p. 216:-

"We [Mr, J. Everett and himself] found that our entrance had arrested his pan in the midst of transcribing a hymn which he had been requested to compose for the use of Ragged Schools. On being requested to favour us with a hearing of the verees, he read what he had written, but with such an involuntary accompaniment of deep feeling that we felt more pain than pleasure in the affecting incident."

This hymn is in 9 st. of 4 L in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853. In its full form it is not in C. U., but st. ix. vi.-viii, are given in

The 1825 text was repeated with slight | Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873, No. 378, as "O God, most merciful and just."

> The race that long in darkness pined. J. Morison. [Epiphany.] This fine hymn appeared as No. 18 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, as a version of Isaiah ix. 2-8 thus:—

- * The race that long in darkness pin'd have seen a glorious light; The people dwell in day who dwelt in Death's surrounding night,
- "To hall thy rise, thou better Sun t the gath'ring nations come, Joyous, as when the reapers boar the harvest-treasures home.
- " For thou our burden hast remov'd. or thou but control make the saw ; and quell'd th' oppressor's sway; butck as the shaught'red squadrons fell in Midlan's evil day.
- "Through shricks of woe, and scenes of blood, the warrior urges on;
 The light'ning's speed, great Savienri marks the conquest thou hast wen.
- " To us a Child of hope is born; to us a Son is giv a; Him shall the tribes of carth obey, him, all the hosts of heav'n.
- "His name shall be The Prince of Peace; the Wise, the Mighty One; With justice shall be rule the earth from his eternal throne."

In the public worship ed. issued in that year by the Ch. of Scotland, and still in use st. iv. was omitted and st. vi. rewritten thus:-

- " His name shall be the Prince of Peace, for evermore ador'd, The Wonderful, the Counsellor, the great and mighty Lord.
- "His pow'r increasing etill shall spread; his reign no end shall know; Justice shall guard his throne above, and peace abound below,"

In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron [p. 200, il.], ascribed to Morison. The revised text of 1781 is included in full and unaltered as No. 35 in Lord Selberne's Bk. of Praise Hymnal, 1868, and slightly altered as No. 47 in the American Episcopal Coll., 1826, and as No. 80 in the Anglican H. Bk., 1871. Omitting st, iii. it has been included in the American Baptist Psalmid, 1848, Kennedy, 1868, the Baptist Hymnal, 1879, and other collections. It is also found in the following forms:-

in the following forms:—

1. The race which long in darkness pined. Prait's Coil., 1829; Liverpool Coil., 1841.

3. The race that long in darkness walk'd. S. P. C. K.

18. The race that long in darkness walk'd. S. P. C. K.

18. The race that long in darkness walk'd. S. P. C. K.

18. The people that in darkness walk'd. S. P. C. K.

18. The people that in darkness sat. A greatly altered version by the compilers of H. A. & M., 1861.

(No. 61, with an added doxology). This has been involuded in Harry's Hymnad, 1867, and in the Hymnad ed., 1869. No. 52, is st. i., ii, iv, v. of H. A. & M., and vl. of the 1783—the 1873 cd. (No. 102) giving st. v. nearly as in the 1781. In America it has appeared in the Evang. Hymnad, New York, 1880.

5. The race that long in darkness sat. Thring's Coil., 1882. No. 146, the revised text of 1781 slightly sligned and a doxology by Mr. Thring added; with st. ii. l., 3, st. iii., and st. vl. l. as in H. A. & M.

7. Taus a Child of hope is born. St. iv.-vi. included in England in Curwen's and various other children's hymo-looks, and in America in the Andover Subbath H. Bk., 1858; Robinson's Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865; Butch Reformed H. Bk., 1869; Baptist Praise Bk.

Lo! unto us a child is born. St. iv., v. sitered in Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk., Ox. ed., 1864, No. 417.

The text should also be compared with Watts's Hymns, 1709, Bk. i., No. 13, "The lands that long in darkness lay;" and "The people that in darkness walk'd," in Miss Leeson's Paraphrases & Hymns for Congregational Singing, 1853, No. 45. [J. M.]

The radiant morn hath passed away.

Thring. [Afternoon.] Written in 1864, G. Thring. [Afternoon.] Written in 1864, and 1st pub. in his Hys. Congregational and Others, 1866, p. 66: and again in his Hys. & Lyrics, 1874, p. 137, in 5 at. of 4 l. It was adopted as the opening hymn of the 1868 Appendix to H. A. & M., and has since then been included in numerous collections in G. Britain and America. In H. A. & M. it is set to special music by Sir F. A. G. Ouseley, Bart. This tune is known as "St. Gabriel." [J. J.]

The reseate hues of early dawn. Cecil F. Alexander, nee Humphreys, [Ecen-ing.] Mrs. Alexander has published this hymn in two forms as follows:—

1. The first form appeared in the S. P. C. K. Hymns, 1852, No. 155, 48:--

" The reseate bucs of early dawn, The brightness of the day,
The crimson of the sunset sky,
How fast they fade away!
Oh! for the pearly gates of neaven,
Oh! for the golden floor,
Oh! for the Sun of Rightsousness, That setteth nevermore

" The highest hopes we cherish hero, How fast they tire and faint! How many a spot defiles the robe That wraps an earthly saint! Oh! for a beart that never sine, Oh! for a coul washed white Oh! for a voice to praise our King, Nor weary day or night.

" Here faith is ours, and beavenly hope, And grace to lead us higher;
But there are perfectness and peace,
Beyond our best desire.
Oh; by thy love, and anguish, Lord;
Oh; by thy live, and anguish, Lord;
Oh; by thy life laid down;
Oh; that we fall not from thy grace,
Nor cast away our crown."

This text was repeated in Mrs. Alexander's Legend of the Golden Prayers, &c., 1859, p. 139; and is also found in a large number of hymnand is also found in a large number of hymn-books in G. Britain and America, including H. A. & M., the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., Thring's Coll., the Hy. Comp., and others. Sometimes st. ii., l. 8, reads "Nor weary day nor night," as in H. A. & M. In some collec-tions the hymn opens with st. i. 1. 5, "O! for the pearly gates of heaven," and in others with st. ii., "The highest hones we cherish here" st ii., "The highest hopes we cherish here." In Bigge's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, the full text is rendered into Latin by Lord Lyttelton (1866), us, "Aurorae reseus primigenae color.

2. Mrs. Alexander's recast of this hymn appeared in her Hys. Descriptive and Devotional. For the Use of Schools, 1858, No. iv.,

> "The crimson of the runnet sky, The last gold lines of day Along the mountain's rosy verge How fast they fade away!

THE SAVIOUR, WHAT

O for the pearly gates of Heaven, O for the galden floor; O for the Sun of Highteouvness That setteth nevermore.

" The lark that soard so high at dawn On weary wing ites low.

The flowers so fragrant all day long

Are dead or folded now.

O for the sough that never cease
Where saints to angels call,
O for the tree of life that stands By the pure river's fall,

"O'er the dull ocean broods the night And all the strand is dark Save where a line of broken foam. Lies at low water mark.

O for the land that needs no light,
Where never night shall be;

O for the quiet home in Heaven, Where there is no more sea.

"The highest hopes we cherish here, How fast they tire and faint, How many a spot defice the robe That wraps an earthly saint! O for a heart that never sine,

O for a soul wash'd while:
O for a solo to praise our King,
Nor weary day or night."

In this recast it will be noticed that the portions in italice are from the original text, Taken as a whole the recast is more poetical but less adapted for public worship than the original. Ità use is limited.

The Sabbath day has reached its close. Charlotte Elliott. [Sunday Evening.] 1st pub. in Elliott's Ps. and Hymns, 1835, in 5 st. of 3 l., with the refrain, "Smile on my evening hour." In 1839 it was enlarged to 7 st., the 3rd and 4th sts., as in modern collections, being added, and republished in her Hymns for a Week. This latter text is found in Sucpp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, with the refrain lengthened to form a L. M. hymn, "Oh, smile upon my evening hour."

It is given in a large number of modern hymn-books.

The Baylour stood on Olivet. [Accession.] This hymn appeared in the British Magazine for July, 1832, p. 460, in 6 st. of 4 l., and signed "B. J. W." It was reprinted in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, No. 110, with the addition of a dexology; and again in Kennedy, 1863, in 3 st. of 8 l. We have failed to ascertain the author's name.

The Saviour, what a noble flame. W. Couper. [Passiontide.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 55, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Jesus hasting to suffer." In its original form it is seldom used. In Cotterill's Sel., 1810, hymn No. 4, begins, "See! what unbounded zeal and love." This is composed as follows:--

St. 1. "See what unbounded zeal," &c. Cotteriil.
St. 11. "Good-will to man, and zeal," &c. Cooper
St. iil. "With all His sofferings," &c. Cooper.
St. iv. "By His obedience," &c. Cotteriil.
St. v. "Lord, fill our bearts," &c. Couper.
St. vi. "With love like Thine," &c. Cotteriil.

On the withdrawal of the 8th ed. of Cotterill's Sel., 1819 [see Cotterill, J., p. 262, ii.] at. v. and vi. were rewritten, and the cento in this revised form was given in the 9th ed., 1820, and is that which is in C. U. (as in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872) at the present time. It is sometimes given as "How won-drons was the burning zeal." Another cento in C. U. is "With all His sufferings full original.

The scene around me disappears. J. Montgomery. [Christmas.] Fub. in his Christian Padmist, 1825, No. 488, in 4 st. of 7 l., and headed, "A visit to Bethlehem in Spirit"; and repeated, without alteration, in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 52. In Holy Song for All Seasons (Bell & Daldy), 1869, it begins "Fair Bethlehem's star again appeara." It is limited in use.

The secret of the Lord, From sinners, &c. [Covenant of Free Grace.] This hymn appeared in the Gospel Mag. for March, 1778, p. 151, '7 st. of 4 1, headed "Psalm xxv. 14," and signed "Ingenuus." In Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, st. v.-vii. are given as "The covenant of free grace." We have not found this extract elsewhere. [J. J.]

The shadow of th' Almighty's cloud. J. Keble. [Confirmation.] Writton on Feb. 21, 1827, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 10 st. of 41. The cento, "Spirit of might and sweetness too," in Kennedy, 1863, begins with st. vi. of this poem, the doxology being an addition by Dr. Kennedy. In most other collections, as the Wellington College Chapel Hymns, 1860 and 1880, the doxology is omitted.

The sick man in his chamber. Cecil F. Alexander, nee Humphreys. [During Sickness.] This poem in 14 st. of 4 l., was contribated to Rutherford's Lays of the Sanctuary and other Poems, 1859, p. 89, under the title "The Sun of Righteosenese." It appeared also in the same year in Mrs. Alexander's Legend of the Golden Prayers, 1858, p. 151. From it the cento "The sick man lieth weary," in Kennedy, 1863, No. 15, is taken. It is composed of st, vil., viil., xi.-xiv.

The Son of David bowed to die. J. Anstice. [Easter.] Appeared in his post-humous Hymns, pub. by his widow in 1836, No. 15, in 4 st. of 6 l. It is competimes given in its full form, and at others abbreviated to 8 st. as in Thring's Coll., 1882. It is a spirited hymn and worthy of more attention than it has received. [J. J.]

The Son of God goes forth to war. Bp. R. Heber. [St. Stephen.] Pub. in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 17, in 8 et. of 41. It is usually given in an unaltered form as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, and is often accompanied by a fine musical setting as in the same hymnal.

The Son of God in mighty love. H. Bonas. [Christmas.] This hymn is given on p. 181, ii., as first appearing in Bonar's Hys. of Faith and Hope, 1857, in error. It was pub. in his Songs for the Wilderness, 1st ed., 1843, in 8 st. of 4 l., with the heading "The Word made Flesh." It was repeated in his Hys. of Fuith and Hope, 1857, in the same form. In addition to being in C. U. in its original form, it is abbreviated as "In love, the Father's sin-less Child" (st. ii.); and "Jesus, Whom angel-hosts adore." [J. J.]

The Spirit breathes upon the word. W. Comper. [Holy Scripture.] Included in the Olacy Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 62, in 5 st. Bp. C. Wordsworth of Lincoln. [St. Mark.]

in view." This begins with st. iii. of the of it., and entitled "The Light and Glory of original.

[J. J.] the Word." It is in use in its original form. and also as " A glory gilds the sacred page" (at. ii.). In the latter form it is found in a large number of hymn-books, especially in America. It is also often found as "What glory gilds the sacred page I" [J. J.]

> The starry firmament on high. Sir. R. Grant. [Ps. xix.] This was given in Lord Glenelg's posthumous edition of Grant's Sacred Poems, 1839, p. 28, in 4 st, of 8 1, and headed with the following words:-

> "This is intended as a sequel or counterpart to Addison's hymn, 'The spacious firmament.' It corresponds to the latter portion of the 19th Fasim, as Addison's does to the former." does to the former.

> The use of this paraphrase in its full form is confined to a few American collections. The last stanzs, "Almighty Lord, the sun shall fail," is given in Landes Domini, N. Y., 1884, as No. 233.
>
> [J. J.]

> The sun is set, the twilight's o'er. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Hely Communion.] Written in 1869 for the author's Hy, Companion, in which it was pub. in 1870 in 5 st. of 4 l. It was also included in his Two Brothere and Other Poems, 1871. Outside of the Hy. Comp. its use is limited. [J. J.]

> The Sun of Righteousness appears, S. Weeley, Jun. [Easter Day.] 1st pub. in his Poems on Several Occasions, 1736, in 4 st. of 41, and again in Nicholl's reprint of the same, 1862. At an early date it appeared in the Ps. & Hys. of J. & C. Wesley, and other collections. It has pessed into a limited number of modern hymn-books. The fourth stanza is noteworthy as being that upon which C. Wesley based his st. iii. in "Christ the Lord is risen to-day." The two stanzas are es follows :---

> S. Wesley, just. " In vain the stone, the watch, the seal Forbid an early rise To Him Who breaks the gates of bell, And opens paradise.

"Vain the stone, the watch, the seal; Christ has burst the gates of hell! Death in vain forbids His rise; Christ has open'd paradise." C. Wesley.

S. Wesley's hymn was given in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 69, as Anon. In a few collections st. iii., iv. are given as "Alone the dreadful race He ran." [J. J.]

The thing my God doth hate. C. Wesley. [Holiness Desired.] This cento was given in the Wes. H. Bh., 1780, No. 331, in 3 et of 8 1., and is composed of No. 1240 as et. i., and 1232 as st. ii., iii. of his Short Hymns on Sel. Passages of Holy Scripture, 1762, vol. ii. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. x., Nos. 1862, and 1354). Several times it has been pointed out that the line (st. iii., I. 5) "Soul of my soul, remain!" is evidently taken from Sir Richard Blackmore's "Ode to the Divine Being." where we have the same expression thus:—

" Blest object of my love Intense, I Thee my Joy, my Treasure call, My Portion, my Reward immense, Soul of my soul, my Life, my All."

One can hardly think that this is accidental. This hymn is in several collections in G. Britain and America.

The virtues of Thy saints, O Lord.

1st pub. in his Holy Year, 1862, p. 168, in 14 st. of 4 l. In the 1863 ed. of the Holy Year, it was divided into two parts, pt. ii. beginning with st. ix., " Taught by St. Mark, the Morians land," To this line the following note is appended in both editions:

St. Mark was Bishop of Alexandria in Egypt, and died there as a martyr, and the celebrated Catechetical School which produced Clement, Origen, and other famous ancient Teachers of Christianity, bore his name.

In the Hymnary, 1872, No. 357 is composed of st. viii. of pt. i., and the whole of pt. ii. It begins "Jesu, we praise Thee for his work." The text is altered.

The voice of one that cries. H. Alford. [Advent.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hys., 1844, No. 1, in 4 st. of 4 l., for the 1st Sunday in Advent; and again in his Year of Praise, 1867, for the same Sunday. As a s. n. hymn it is an acceptable change of metre in the Advent hymns.

The voice that breathed o'er Eden. J. Keble. [Holy Matrimony.] Written for and first pub. in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, where it was given as No. 187, in 8 st. of 4 l. In the author's posthumous Missellaneous Poems, 1869, it is headed "Holy Matrimony. To be sung at the Commencement of the Service," and is dated "July 12, 1857." In Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, it is rendered into Latin by Lord Lyttelton (1866) 28 " Ille Edenneas qui Patris Deus." original is in extensive use, and is one of the most beautiful of modern hymns for Holy (J, J.) Matrimony.

The winds of God have changed their note. [Easter.] In a volume of verse consisting of English poems by H. Vaughan and some Latin verses by his brother Thomas, put forth by one "J. W." in 1678 as Thaira Rediviva; the Pastimes and Diversions of a Country Muse, a short poem in 14 l. was given under the motto, "The Revival." In Bell & Daldy's ed. of H. Vaughan's Sacred Posms, &c., 1858, it was repeated at p. 226. From it the following lines were taken by the Rev. T. Darling, and, after being elaborated into the hymn, "The winds of God have changed their note," were given in the 1st cd. of his Hys. for the Church of England, 1855, and continued in later editions :-

> " Hark! how the winds have changed their note, Harr! how the winds have changed used And with warm whispers call thee out. The frosts are past, the storms are gone, And backward life at lest comes on. The lofty groves in express Joyce Reply unto the turtle's voice; And bere in dues and dirt, O here The lilies of His love appear."

The winds [are] were howling o'er the deep. Bp. R. Heber. [Epiphany, 4 8.] This hymn in 10 st. of 4 l. was given in the 1828 ed. of Heber's posthumous Hymns, &c., as the 5th hymn for the 4th Sunday after the Epiphany, and is based on the stilling of the tempost, the Gospel for that day (8t. Matt. viii, 23). The conto "How long the time since Christ began," in the Leeds H. Bk. 1853, and several others in G. Britain and America is from this hymn. The original in an abbreviated form is in several American hymnals, including the Plymouth Coll., 1855, and others. [W. T. B.]

The wise men to Thy cradle throne. Cevil F. Alexander, née Humphreys. [Epi-phany.] Pub. in her Hys. Descriptive and Devotional, &c., 1858, No. 8, in 5 st, of 4 L Although seldom found in modern collections it is in Mrs. Alexander's best style. Possibly her interpretation of the gold, frankincense, and myth, as symbolizing love, prayer, and reportance, has made against the general adoption of the hymn. [J. J.]

The Word of God, Who hid in flesh.
Archbishop Benson. [Passiontide.] This hymn for the Thursday before Easter, and dealing with the Institution of the Holy Communion, was contributed to the Wellington College H. Bk., 1863, in 6 st. of 4 l., and ap-pointed for the morning of that day. A slight alteration in 11. 3, 4 of st. i. would make it a most acceptable hymn for Holy Communion for use at any season.

The world can neither give nor take. [The Love of God.] This is a cento compiled from John Mason's Songs of Praise, pub. in 1689. It is thus composed:

St. i., il. From " Song of Praise," No. 23, for Peace of Conscience st. ii., iv.

St. iii. From "Song of praise," No. 28, st. iv.
St. iv., v., vi. From the same st. iv., v., and vi. altered.

In this form it is found in the Countess of Huntingdon's Collection, 1780, and Inter editions. Orig. text in D. Sedgwick's reprint of Mason's Songs of Praise, 1863. The 1780 text of the cento is in Lyra Brit., p. 655, where its compilation and alterations are ascribed to Lady Huntingdon. This ascription, however, is open to doubt. The cento ia still in C. U. [J, J,]

The world to-day divides its year. J. S. B. Monsell. [Annunciation B. V. M.] This poem of 14 st. of 6 l. appeared in his Spiritual Songs, 1857, with the hending " Lady Day. The Incarnation of Christ, Commonly called The Amunciation of the Blessed Vircalled 'The Aubuntament of the Discount view in Mary." In his Hys. of Love and Praise, &c., 1863, the hymn for "The Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary" is "O Saviour! Thou this day didst make." This hymn begins with st. vii. of this poem; and of its at of 4.1 there are 18 lines from the inter-8 st. of 4 l. there are 18 lines from the latter part of the poem (some of them somewhat freely altered), and the rest are new. In the revised ed. of the Hy. Comp., 1876, the cente "O Saviour, Who in love didst take," is from the original (st. vii.) poem with an alteration of the opening line. It makes a much better hymn than Dr. Monsell's arrangement in his Hys. of Love and Praise as above. [J. J.]

The year begins with Thee. J. Keble. [Circumcision.] Written June 20, 1824, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 17 st. of 4 L, and headed with the text "In Whom. also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands." In its full form it is not in C. U. It has, however, supplied the following contos to modern hymn-books:-(1) "The year begins [began] with Theo," In several collections; (2) " Art Thou a child of teers?" and "Is there a mourner true?" In a few collections only. The poem as a whole is better adapted for private devotion than for public worship.

Thebesius, Adam, s. of Peter Thebes or Thebesius, pastor at Sciffersdorf near Liegaitz in Silesia, was b. at Sciffersdorf, Dec. 5, 1596. After studying at the University of Wittenberg (M.A. 1617) he was instituted, on Nov. 24, 1619, as pastor at Mondechütz, near Weblau, and in 1627 became pastor at Weblau. Finally, in 1639, he was appointed pastor of SS. Peter and Paul, the principal church in Liegnitz, and in 1642 he also became assessor of the consistory. He d. at Liegnitz suddenly, after a double stroke of paralysis, on the evening of Dec. 12, 1652. (Kook, lii. 64; S. J. Ehrhardt's Presbyterologis Schlesiens, 1780-89, vol. iv. p. 265, &c.)

Thebesius was a diligent, faltiful and popular preacher. He was much tried by family afflictions this wife and four children predecessed him), and by the mistoremee of these times of war and pestilence. He was crowned as a poet in 1638. Mattell, 1688, prints two pieces as his. One of these, which, according to Koo, outwelghs all his other poetical productions is:—

outweight all his other poetical productions; is:—
Du grosser Schinerammenan, Patsionatide. This appears in Martin Janue's Passionals medicum, Göriliz, 1663 [Wernigerode Library], No. 239, in 7 st. of 8 1, marked as by "H. Adam Thebesius." Included in Mittell, 1898, No. 313, and in the Berlin G. E. S., ed. 1863, No. 224. Tr. as "Thou Man of Sorrowa, hail!"
This is a good by of st. f., iv., vii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 98 in his Ps. d Hys., 1851. [J. M.]

Thee in the loving bloom of morn. H. Bonar. [God in all, and all in God.] Pub. in his Hys. of Fuith and Hope, 3rd Series, 1866, in 12 st. of 4 1. Repeated in full in the Westminuter Abbey H. Bk., 1883. [J.J.]

Thee we adore, sternal Name. I. Watts. [Life frail, Eternity unending, or New Year.] 1st pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1707 (2nd ed. 1709, Bk. ii., No. 55), in 1st. of 4 l. It is found in a large number of hymn-books in all English-speaking countries. The form of the text which is in the most extensive use is that given in the Ps. & Hymns of J. and C. Wesley in 1738, and continued in the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, in which there are four slight changes from the original. The original came into use in the Church of England through M. Madan's Ps. Hys., 1760. In Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, it begins with st. it., "Our wasting lives grow shorter still."

Their hearts shall not be moved. Jane E. Leeson. [Ps exxv.] Pub. in her Hys. and Scenes of Childhood, 1842, No. 57, in 6 st. of 6 l. In the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 174, st. i.-iii. are given in an altered form, and opening with the same first line. These alterations were made by G. Rawson. This text was repeated in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, and other collections in G. Britain and America, and is that in C. U.

Theoctistus of the Studium. A monk of the great monastery of the Studium at Constantinople, circa A.D. 890. Neale calls him a friend of St. Joseph. [See Greek Eyazody, § xvii. 1.] His only work known to the Church is his "Suppliant Canon to Jesus," which is found at the end of the Paracletics or Great Octochus, a volume in eight parts, containing the Ferial Office for eight weeks. From that canon Dr. Neale compiled a cento beginning, "Ingoo" γλυκότατε, and pub. its translation, "Jesu, Name all names above," in his Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 6 st.

of S l. In 1867 it was included in an unaltered form in the People's H., and subsequently repeated in the Hymnary, the Parisk H. Bk., and other collections. In the 1889 Esppl. Hys. to H. A. & M. there is another tr., "Sweet Saviour, in Thy pitying grace" (Lent). This was contributed thereto by the Rev. R. M. Moorsom.

[J. J.]

Theodore, St., of the Studium. One of the Greek hymn-writers. He was b. at Constantinople, circa 759, and educated by his nucle, St. Plate. He was banished by Constantine, for his resolute refusal to acknowledge the Emperor's illicit marriage with Theodora, in 797. On the accession of Irene (798), he was recalled, and enjoyed the favour of the Empress. In 809 he was again banished, for the cld cause, refusal to acknowledge the legitimacy of Constantine's marriage. Recalled once more in 811, he was imprisoned and again banished for his defence of the feoms, under Leo the Armenian. He was re-called a third time at the death of Leo, and d. Nov. 11, 826 (Dr. Neale adds, "in banishment"). He succeeded his uncle, St. Plato, as Hegumen of the Monastery of The Studium. See further Greek Hymnody, § XVIII. I, and Ceillier's Auteurs sacrés. (H. L. B.)

Theodosia, the nom de plume of Anna Steele.

Theophanes, St. The third in rank among the Greek ecclesiastical poets called Melodists, circa 800-850. He was a ron of pions parents, and a native of Jerusalem. He may have been educated, as his elder brother Theodore was, in the Laura of St. Sabas, and thence have imbibed his taste for the composition of hymns. He was sent, with his brother, by the Patriarch of Jerusalem, to Constantinople, to remonstrate with the Emperor Leo the Armenian (reg. 818-820), against iconoclasm. They were scourged and banished from Constantinople. After the murder of Leo they were allowed to return, but were again banished. In the reign of Theophilus (reg. 829-842) they were again at Constantinople, and were then branded on their faces with some opprobrious lambic verses (from which they were afterwards known as "Grapti"), and a third time banished. After 842 Theophanes was recalled, on the triumph of the defenders of the Icons at the accession of Theodora, and was made Archbishop of Mide, where he died. The brothers are commemorated in the Greek calendar on Dec. 27. The sketch here given will be found quite different from that prefixed to the translations from Theophanes in Neale's Hymns of the Eastern Church. Dr. Neale mistock the poet for an earlier saint, Theophaues of Syngriana, who continued the Chronicon of George Syncollus. The identification of the poet with Theophanes Graptus is however universally attested by the Greek writers, and the Canon of Theophanes of Syngriaus is written by Theophanes Graptus on the accrostial, Ocoφάνης μέλπει τε τὸν Θεοφάνην. Θεός ὢν εἰρήνης, [Χριστός γεννάται.] Θεοτόκιον. [Greek Hymnody, § xvii. 2.]

There came a little Child to earth. Emily E. S. Elliott. [Christmas.] 1st pub. in 1856 in Matty's Missionary Box (Lond.: T. Nelson & Son), and since included in Miss Elliott's Chimes for Daily Service, 1880, p. 97, In 4 st, of 8 lines. It has appeared in the Church S. S. H. Bk., IS6S, Scottish Presbyterian Hymnal, 1876; Allon's Children's Worterlander of the Children' skip, 1878, &c.; and is included in full and unaltered (save st. ii. l. 8) as No. 378 in the Scottish Free Church H. Bk., 1882. Its use is [J. M.] extensivo

There is a blessed home. Sir H. W.Baker, Bart. [Heaven anticipated.] Written in 1861, and pub. in H. A. & M. the same year as No. 182, in 4 st. of 8 l. It has passed into several collections, and is a beautiful and touching hymn. It was sung over the author's grave. In Bigge's Annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, there is a rendering in Latin by Lord Lyttelton (1866) beginning "Est beatorum Domus incolarum."

There is a book, who runs may read. J. Keble. [Septuagesima.] Written in 1819, and pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, as the poem for Septuagesima Sunday, in 12 st. of 4 l. It is in several collections in G. Britain and America, but usually in an abbreviated form. In a few collections it begins with st ix., "One Name above all glorious names." The original, which is very beautiful, is based upon the words, "The invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made:" Rom. i. 20, with a distinct reference to Gen. i., which is the first Lesson for Septuagesima Sunday Morning. In R. Bingham's Hymno Cariet. Latina, 1871, st. i.-v., xii., as in H. A. & M., are rendered into Latin as "Est liber, atque illum qui currit perlegat, omnem."

There is a calm for those who weep. J. Montgomery. [Death and Burial.] This is the opening of Montgomery's poem "The Grave," which first appeared in his Sheffield Newspaper, the Iris, June 20, 1905, in 30 st. of 4 i., and signed "Alexus:" again in his Wanderer of Switzerland and Other Poems, 1806; and again in various editions of his Postical Works In the 1854 ed of his P. Poetical Works. In the 1854 ed. of his P. Works Montgomery has dated it 1804. Vari-ous centes from this poem are in C. U. as hymns, and all but one begin with st. i. In Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840, No. 365 is composed of st. i., ii., xvi., xix., xxv., xxvii. elightly altered; and No. 366 of st. xxviii. xxx. It must be noted that st. xxviii. is a repetition of st. i. with the third line rewritten. The centes in American hymn-books differ from these, and from each other. [J. J.]

There is a Fountain filled with blood. W. Couper. [Passiontide.] This hymn was probably written in 1771, as it is in Conyera's Coll. of Ps. and Hys., 1772, in 7 st. of 4 l. It was republished in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 79, with the beading "Praise for the Fountain opened." It is based on Zech. ziii. 1, "In that day there shall be a Fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and for uncleanness." This hymn in full or abbreviated is in extensive use in all English-speaking countries.

A well known form of this hymn is "From Calvary's Cross a Fountain flows." This appeared in Cotterill's Scl., 8th ed., 1819, No. 43, in 5 st. of 4 l., and consists of st. i.-v. very much altered. In Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1883, No. 49, the same opening stanza is given, with a return, in most of the remaining six stanzas, to the original text. The question as to by whom these alterations were made, first in Cotterill's Sci., 1819, and then in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, is answered by R. W. Dibdin, in the Christian Annotator, vol. iii., No. 76, for July 5, 1856, p. 278, where he writes concerning "About 16 years ago, I was regretting to the late James Montgomety, the poet, of Sheffield, that hymns were so frequently printed differently from the originals as written by their authors. I pointed out the very hymn mentioned by 0.0 ft.e. 'There is a Fountain,' &c.] in the Rev. Edward Bickersteth's Coll. as an example. He smilled, and said, 'I altered it as you see it there; Bickersteth aaked me to alter it.'"

We know from Montgomery's Nemoirs that he altered hymna for Cotterill's 1819 ed. of his Sel. and here by his own confession we have one of those siterations. Previously to this, however, he had saknowledged having rewritten the 1819 text as in Cotterill's Sel. in these words:-

"I entirely rewrote the first verse of that favourite bymn, commencing 'There is a Fountain filled with blood.' The words are objectionable as representing a fountain being filled, instead of springing up; I think my version is meaceptional."

The two versions are:-

this bymn :--

"There is a Fountain filled with blood, Drawn from Emmanuel's value; W. Comper, 1771-2, And sinners plung'd beneath that flood,

Lose all their guilty stains."
"From Calvary's cross, a Fountain J. Montgomery, 1819. flows Of water and of blood. More healing than Bethesda's pool, Or famed Siloam's flood."

It should be noted also that Montgomery's alteration of st. ii., ll. 3, 4, has changed the whole meaning and character of the hymn, so far as Cowper was concerned. Cowper's original stanza reads-"The dying thief rejoic'd to see That Fountain in his day; And there have I, as vile as he, Wash'd all my sine away."

In Cotterill's Sel., 1819, Montgomery altered this to:-

"The dying thief rejoiced to see That Fountain in his day; And there may sinners, vile as he, Wash all their guilt away."

In Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, Montgomery rewrote it thus:

" The dying thief rejoic'd to see This Fountain in his day; And there would I though vile as he, Wash all my sine away."

In later collections Il. 3, 4 have again been altered to,
"And there may I, though vile as he,
Wash all my sins away."

In these alterations of the text the sustained confidence and rapture of Cowper are entirely lost. This may suit public taste, but it gives an entirely false view of the state of Cowper's mind when he wrote this hymn. Our positive knowledge of the poet's frequent depression of spirits and despair is painful enough with-out this gratuitous and false addition thereto.

Five stanzas of this hymn, taken from the commonly received text, are rendered into Latin in R. Bingham's Hymna. Christ. Latina, 1871, as: "Fons est sanguine redundans." Dr. H. M. Macgill has however taken the original text for his rendering into Latin in his Bongs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, where it reads:-- Sanguis en Emmanuclis." In addition to Latin, various forms of the text have been translated into many other languages.

There is a God, all nature cries. J. Montgomery. [Nature's witness to the Existence of God.] The us, of this hymn is dated "January 8, 1838." It was included in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 6, in 7 st. of 4 l., and headed "The Guilt and Folly of denying God." It must be distinguished from Miss Steele's "There is a God, all nature speaks," which is also in C. U.

There is a green hill far away. Cecil F. Alexander, nee Humphreys. [Good Friday.] 1st published in her Hys. for Little Children, 1848, p. 31, in 5 st. of 4 1, and based upon the words "Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was Crucified, Dead, and Buried," of the Apostles' Creed. It is an exceedingly popular children's hymn, and is in extensive use. [J, J]

There is a happy land. A. Young. [Heaven.] In 1838 Mr. Young was spending an evening in the house of Mrs. Marshall, the mother of some of his pupils. Among other pieces she played one air which caught his attention. On inquiry he found it was an Indian air called "Happy Land." With the air ringing in his ears he composed this hymn to it. It was sung in his classes at Niddry Street School, Edinburgh, and there heard by the Rev. James Gall, who included it in the first series of the Sacred Song Book, 1843 [see Beteman, C. H., p. 116, ii.], from whence it has passed into many hymn-books. It has been tr. into Chinese, many Iudian and African dialects, &c., and in these and its original form is now to be heard in Sunday Schools all over the world. In 1876 Mr. Young included it in bis The Scottish Highlands and other Poems, p. 117, in 3 st. of 8 lines. Originally st. iii. 1.8 began "We reign," but subsequently, and in his volume of 1876, Mr. Young altered it to "Reign, reigo." The text of 1876 is included unaltered in the Hy. Comp., 1876, the Scottish Free Church H. Bk., 1882, and others. In the Cottage Melodies, N. Y., 1859, an imitation beginning "O send the word divloe" as a hymn on Sending the Bible to the Heathen is included as No. 545. It may be noted that the Rev. John Inglis, D.D., Presbyterian missionary in the New Hebrides tr. it in 1854 (as his first attempt), into the Ancityumese language, beginning "Et eteue incediaig." This version was a great success and continues to be a favourite. Dr. Geddie and Dr. Inglis, assisted to some extent by others, tr. 51 Pealms and Hymns (of which this is No. 23) into Aneityumese, included as part of the Nohratited Itap, pub. by the Religious Tract | Orig. text in the Hy. Comp.

Society of London in 1880. [Kissions Pereign, p. 741, it., § ii., iii., 2.] [J. M.)

There is a holy sacrifice. Charlotte Elliott. [The Contrite Heart.] This bymn is usually attributed to J. Montgomery on the grounds that its first appearance as far as yet traced was in the 1819 ed. of Cotterill's Sel., to which Montgomery largely contri-buted; and that in the 2nd series of W. Oliphant & Son's Sacred Poetry, N.D. [circa 1839], pp. 291-2, it is attributed to Mont-gomery. In 1836 Miss Elliett pub. her Hours of Sorrow, with an Introduction "To the Reader" which begins:-

" Not for the gay and thoughtless do I weave These plaintive strains;"

These words to our mind clearly intimate to the Reader that the entire contents of the book were by Miss Elliott. At p. 10 this bynn is given in 5 st. of 3 l., with the refrain "The contrite heart!" as in Cotterill's Sel., 1819. No. 841. Seeing that in 1819 Mise Elliott was 80 years of age, that it is in her Hours of Sorrow as above, and that in style and metre it is the same as a large number of her hymns, and that it is not in any known work by Montgomery, we have no hesitation in ascribing it to her. It is a sweet hymn for private use, and is found in several collections. [J. J.]

Thère is a land of pure delight, I. Watte. [Heaven anticipated.] 1st pub. in his Hys. and S. Songs, 1707, and again in the 2nd ed., 1709, Bk. ii., as No. 66, in 6 st. of 4 l., with the heading "A prospect of Heaven makes Death easy." In the older collections very many variations in the text were introduced, but most of these have gone out of use. Of those which remain the following appeared in Hall's Mare H. Bk., 1836, No. 182:—

St. L. "Infinite day" to "Eternal day."

St. IL. "Never with ring" to "Never yading."

This heavenly "to "That heavenly."

St. v. "Could we make "to "could we all."

St. vi. "We but climb" to "we but stand."

The last alteration was made by Bp. Blomfield, to whom the "proofs" of the Mitre H. Bk. were submitted. Other variations are found in the text in some hymn-books: but latterly a strong reaction has taken place in favour of the original as given in Lord Sel-borne's Bk. of Praise, 1862-7. The use of this hymn has extended to all Englishspeaking countries, and it has been translated into many languages. In his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, B. Bingham has rendered four stauzas into Latin as, "Extat terra procul sanctis habitata bestis." This hymn is one of the earliest of Watte's compositions. A tradition exists in Southampton that it was suggested by the view of the Isle of Wight as seen from that town. [J. J.]

There is a path that leads to God. Jane Taylor. [A Child Pilgrim.] 1st pub. in the Hymns for Infant Minds, by A. and J. Taylor, 1810, in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Little Pilgrim." It is one of the best examples of the writer's clear, simple, nervous etyle, and exceeds in popular use all of her other compositions. It is found in numerous collections for children in Great Britain and America, but often in an abbreviated form.

There is a safe and secret place. H. F. Lyte. [Ps. xci.] Appeared in his Spirit of the Psalms, 1834, as his c. m. version of Ps. 91, in 5 st. of 4 L It is very simple and tender, and is in somewhat extensive use in G. Britain and America. In the enlarged ed. of the Spirit of the Pealms, 1836, st. ii. li. 1, 2, are altered from :-

> " The least, the feeblest there may hids Uninjured and unawed:

"The least, the feeblest there may bide Uninjured and unawed.

The change of thought from hiding in terror, to abiding in calm repose is a decided poetic improvement; and is certainly more in accord with the Paalmist's declaration "Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day; nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday" (vers. Paulters, 5, 6), than the original reading. Buglish, & rvii.]. [J. J.]

There is an everlasting home. M. Bridges. [Christ, the Rock of Ages.] Pub. in his Hys. of the Heart. For the use of Catho-ics, 1848, in 6 st. of 4 L, and entitled "Latus Salvatoris." In its full or abbreviated form it is in several collections, including the People's H., 1867, &c. The tune Mitford, by T. Woolsey White, was specially composed for this hymn.

There is no night in heaven. F. M. Knollis. [Heaven.] Contributed to the Lays of the Sanctuary, &c., 1859, in 10 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The One Family. Thoughts for the Feast of St. Michael and All Augels." In the edition of 1861 it is given in 5 st. of In this form it was included in Kennedy. 1863, No. 1104. Its well-known and popular form appeared in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, where to sts. i., ill, vil., ix. of the original of 1859 are given with alterations, and an additional stanzs was added by the Rev. J. Effection. In Thring's Coll. the orig. text of these stanzas is restored. [J. J.]

There is no sorrow, Lord, too light Sympathy.] Given in her A Little White and Other Poems, Manchester, N.D. (circa 1860), p. 19. In Kennedy, 1868, it begins, "There is no grief, however light," and in one or two others the words "too light" are changed to "too slight," in the opening line. It is sometimes also given as "There's not a grief however light."

There were ninety and nine that safely lay. Elizabeth C. Clephane. [The Lost Elezp.] This beautiful poem was probably written in 1868 at Melrose, where the authoress then resided, and first pub. in 1868, in a small magazine for the young, entitled, The Children's Hour, pt. ii. p. 15, in 5 et. of 61. Subsequently it appeared as No. 8 of the series of her hymns entitled Breathings on the Border, in the Family Treasury, 1874, p. 595. Thence it was copied into the Christian Age, May 13, 1874, where it was seen by Mr. I. D. Sankey, who set it to music and sang it with great effect at his gospel meetings. He included it in 1875 in his Sacred Songs and Solos. It has since appeared in England, in the Hy. Comp., 1876; Thring's Coll., 1882; Bapt. Ps. & Hys. Supp., 1880, &c., and in America in the Evang. Association H. Bk., Cleveland, 1882, and other collections. It is rapidly attaining a foremost position among modern hymns. J. M.

There's a friend for little children. A. Midlane. [Jesus, the Children's Friend.] Written Feb. 27, 1859, and first pub. in Good Nows for the Little Ones, Dec., 1859. The stanzas, however, were not in the order in which they are usually found, but as follows :--i. "There's a rest," &c.; il. "There's a home," &c.; ill. "There's a Friend," &c.; iv. "There's a crown," &c.; v. "There's a robe,"

The rearrangement produces a better sequence in the order of the stanzas, and gives greater unity to the hymn. Soon after its appearance in 1859 it was adopted by various bymn-books, and at the present time it is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. has been set to music several times, and is the most popular of Mr. Midlane's hymns. [J. J.]

There's not a bird with lonely nest. W. B. Noel. [God the Divine Father of All.] This hymn was given anonymously in common with the rest of the hymns, in W. B. Noel's Sel. of Ps. and Hys., 1832 (ed. 1853, No. 561), in 7 st. of 4 l. It is commonly stributed to W. B. Noel, and we see no reason to doubt the authorship. It is in several collections, but usually in an abbreviated form. In Bickersteth's Christian Pealmody, 1833, No. 37, it is given in its full form. In R. No. 37, it is given in its full form. Bingham's Hymno. Christi. Latina, 1871, st. i., iii.-v., are rendered into Latin as, "Non avis est, nidum quae sola ponit eremo." [J. J.]

There's not a star whose twinkling light, J. C. Wallace. [God seen in Nature.] This hymn appeared in A Supplement to the 4th ed. of Robert Aspland's Selection of Pealms and Hymns for Unitarian Worship, London: Rowland Hunter, 1825, No. 48, in 8 st. of 4 L, and entitled "The Creator seen in his Works. As it has undergone rearrangement and en-largement, we give the opening line of each stauza:-

St. I. "There's not a star whose twinkling light."

St. ii. "There's not a cloud whose dewn distli."

St. iii. "There's not a place in earth's vast round."

St. iv. "Around, beneath, below, above."

St. v. "Then vise, my soul! and sing His name."

In J. R. Reard's Uniterian Collection of Hymns, &c., Lond.: J. Green, 1837, to which Mr. Welface contributed more than sixty hymns, this hymn was given in 6 st., and is rearranged thus:-

i. "There's not a place." ii. "There's not of grass." iii. "There's not a tempest." iv. "There's not a star." v. "Around, beneath." vi. "Then rise, my soul."

In the new ed. of Mr. Beard's Collection, 1860, another arrangement with changes is introduced, which leaves the hymn thus:-

1. "There's not a tint that points the rose." il. "At early dawn." ili. "There's not of grass." iv. "There's not a tempest." v. "There's not a star." vl. "There's not a cloud." vli. "There's not a place." vlii. "Around, beneath." ix. "Then rise, my soul."

From these outlines the construction of the hymns, "There's not a place," &c., and "There's not a tint," &c., as in Curwen's Child's Own H. Bk., Major's Book of Praise, the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., and many others, including American collections, may easily be traced, and a reference to Aspland's and Beard's works, as above, will correct the text. In Major's Bk. of Praise for Home & School the author is said to be John Aikman Wallace, and in the Prim. Meth. S. School H. Bk., 1879, Heber, but both are in error.

[J. J.]

These glorious minds, how bright they shine. I. Watts. [Martyrs.] 1st publin his Hymns, &c., 1707, Bk. i., No. 41, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled "The Martyrs glorified. Rev. vii., 18, &c." In this form it is rarely used.

In the Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases of 1745, it is given as No. xhii. As from this recast the modern form of Watts's hymn has mainly come, we give it in full, indicating the alterations in italies:—

"These glorious Minds how bright they ahine I whence all their white Array! How came they to the happy Seats of evertasting Day.

"Lo! these are they, to endless Joy, from Suffrings great, who came; and wash'd their Raiment in the Blood of CREST, the dying Laws.

With Heart approach a holy God, and how before his Throne;
With Hearts enlarged to serve him still, and make his Glory known.

" His Presence fills each Heart with Joy; times to ry Mouth to sing; By Day, by Night, the blest Abodes with glad Hosanuas ring.

⁴ Hunger and Thirst are felt no more, nor Suns with scoreling Ray: Got is their Sun, whose chearing Beams diffuse sternal Day.

"The Lamb shall lead his heav'nly Flock where living Fountains rise; And Love divine shall wipe away the Sorrows of their Eyes."

The author of this recast is unknown. This text was repeated, with slight changes, in the Draft of 1751, but in the authorized issue of the Trans., &c., of 1781, it underwent considerable changes. It opens, as No. lxvi., as:—

"How bright these glorious spirite shine!"

and is derived thus:—

St. i. Watts sitered in 1781 Praft; st. ii. from 1745 altered; st. iii. new in 1781; st. iv. from 1748, with secret courfe, for a blest abodes;" st. v. from 1746 unaltered; rt. vi. new in 1781, based on Watts's st. vi.; st. vii. new in 1781, based on Watts's st. vi.; st. vii. new in 1781.

This text has been in authorized use in the Church of Scotland for more than 100 years. It is also in extensive use in all English-speaking countries, and sometimes with a doxology added thereto, as in H. A. & M. It has been tr. into several languages, e.g. into Latin, by H. M. Macgill, in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, as:—"Animae clare lucentes." The 1781 version is claimed by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.), as his. His indebtedness, however, to the recast of 1745 was very great. Its right designation is I. Watts, 1709; Scottish Draft Tra. and Paraphs., 1745; and W. Cameron, 1781. From the 1781 text we also have:—

1. A numbered company behold. By Jane R. Lecson, in her Paraphrates and Hys., 1855. This is a recast.
2. How bright these saints in glory ablas. In T. Darling's Hys. for the Church of England. 1857-88.
3. How bright those saints in glory shins. In J. B. Whiting's Hys. for the Church Caldolic. 1882.

These altered versions of the text are not in extensive use. [J. J.]

They are all gone into the world of light. H. Vaughan. [Death and Burtal.] Pub. in his Silex Scinitillans, 2nd ed. 1655; in H. F. Lyte's reprint of the same, 1858; and in Grosart's Fuller Worthies, 1868. In some collections, as in Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873, it begins as above; but in the American Unitarian Hys. for the Church of Christ, Boston, 1853, it opens, "Dear, benuteous Death ! the jowel of the just."

'They come, God's messengers of love. R. Campbell. [St. Michael and All Angels.] Written for, and 1st pub, in his Hys. and Astheme, 1850, p. 94, in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1852 it was republished, with alterations, in Murray's Hymnal, No. 79. This was repeated in several collections, including H. A. & M., 1861, and has become the accepted form of the hymn. Sometimes it is abridged to four stanzas. It is the most widely adopted hymn for 8t. Michael and All Angels of any in the English language.

They whom the Father giveth. J. Conder. [Perseverance.] 1st pub in his Star in the East, 1824, p. 54, in 8 st. of 6 l., and based upon John x. 27, 28, "My sheep hear My voice... and I give unto them cternal life, and they shall never perish." In 1856 it was repeated in his Hys. of Fraise, Prayer and Devent Meditation, pp. 155-57. In its original form it is not in common use, but st. v., vi., vii. and viii, beginning, "Christ watches o'er the embers," were given in Kennedy, 1863. This arrangement is adapted to "Burial," or a service associated therewith. [J. J.]

They whose course on earth is o'er. J. M. Neale. [Communion of Saints.] Ist pub. in his Hymns for the Young, 1844, No. v., in 9 st. of 4 l., and based on the article of the Creed "The Communion of Saints." In 1866, Dr. Neale revised the text on his death-bed, and made alterations in st. iv., v. and ix. This text was pub. in his posthumous original Sequences, Hymns, and other Ecolesicatical Verses, 1866, p. 64, and given there for All Sculs at Vespers. The same text was repeated in the People's H., 1867; and, with the omission of st. ii., in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871. [J. J.]

Thilo, Valentin, s. of Valentin Thiel or Thilo [b. Jan. 2, 1579, at Zinten, became discouns of the Altstadt Church in 1693, and d. of the pestilence at Königsberg in 1620], diaconus of the Altstadt Church in Königsberg, was b. at Königsberg, April 19, 1607. He matriculated in 1624 at the University of Königsberg as a student of theology, but devoted himself more especially to the study of rhotoric. When the Professor of Rhetoric, Samuel Fuchs, retired in 1632, he recommended Thilo as his successor. The post was, at Thilo's desire, kept open for two years, during which he pursued his studies at the University of Leyden. On returning to Königsberg, he graduated M.A. there on April 20, 1634, and was thereafter installed as Professor of Rhetoric. During his 28 years' tenure of office he was five times elected as dean of the Philosophical Faculty, and twice as Rector of the University. He d. at Königsberg,

July 27, 1662. (Koch, iti 202 ; K. Goedeke's ¡ Grundriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 185, &c.)

Grundrise, vol. iii., 1887, p. 185, &c.)

Thilo was a great friend of Helurich Albert (p. 25, i.) and of Simon Duch (p. 376, ii.), and was with them a member of the Konigaberg Poetical Union. He was the suther of two text books on Rhetoric, pub. in 1835 and 1847. Some of his asparately printed occasional poems are noted by Goodeke as above. His hymns were almost all written for various Festivale of the Christian Near.
They are as a rule short and vigorous, and are somewhat akin to those of Duch. They appeared principally in the Pressessie Fest-Lieder, Elbing, 1842-44 [Berlin
Library], and in the New Pressessies volkthindiges G.
B. Königsberg, 1850 [Hamburg Library]. A list of their first lines is printed in the Alignessische Konadeachrift. Königsberg, 1892, p. 398, where evidence is given to show that they are by the younger Thilo, and not, as has sometimes been said, by the father.

The only hymn by Thilo & into English

The only hymn by Thile tr. into English í8:-

Mit Ernet, o Menschenkinder. Advent. This is a fine hymn founded on St. Luke iii. 4, 5, and was 1st pub. in pt. i., Elbing, 1642, of the Preussische Fest-Lieder, as No. 8, in 4 st. of 8 l., entitled "On the Fourth Sunday of Advent. Parate vism Domino," and marked as by "Valentious Thile." Thence in the Königsberg G. B., 1650, as above, p. 27, also marked as by " Valentinua Thile." In the Hannover G. B., 1657, at. iv. was re-written, and this form, passing through Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, is found in most recent German hymn-books. In the Uns. L. S., 1851, No. 15, both forms of st. iv. are given. Lauxmann, in Koch, viii. 8, considers st. iii. the finest, and thinks that it may have been suggested by the remembrance of his beloved sister wife of Pastor Kuhn, of the Rossgart Church in Königsberg), who d. of the pestilence on Aug. 16, 1639, and as a picture of her character. Tr.

1. O some of man, your spirite. This is a good tr. of st. i.-iii., by A. T. Russell, as No. 35 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851.

2. Ye some of men, in earnest. This is a good fr. of the original form, by Miss Winkworth, as No. 84 in her C. B. for England, 1863. It is repeated, omitting st. iii., in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, No. 121. (J. M.)

Thine for ever! thine for ever! C. Wordsworth, Bp. of Lincoln. [Confirmation.] Contributed to the 1869 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns. It was originally in 4 st. of 8 l., but in later editions of the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hymns it is given in 6 st. of 4 l. In 1871 it reappeared in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymne, in 8 st. of 4 L, this last being the authorized text.

Thine, Jesus, Thine. A. Midlane. [Self Dedication to Jenus.] A birthday hymn written on the author's 36th birthday, Jan. 23, 1861, and pub. in the Things Old and New magazine, in May the same year. It has passed into a large number of what are commonly known as "Gospel hymn-books," in-cluding The Enlarged London H. Bk., 1878; The Little Flock, 1880, and others.

Thine, O Lord, our quiet trust. B. H. Kennedy. [Ps. lzv. Harvest.] This version of Ps. 65 appeared in Dr. Kennedy's Psalter in 1860, p. 95, in 10 st. of 41. From this Dr. Kennedy compiled the bynn, "Thou Who hearest human prayer," and included it in his Hymno. Christ. 1863, No. 1290. The same text was again altered for the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, No. 579, where it is given as "O Thou God, Who hearest prayer, All shall come to Thee, that live." This opening line is borrowed from J. Conder (p. 258, il.). [J. J.]

Thine, Thine for ever, blessed bond. Bp. E. H. Bickersteth. [Confirmation.] Written in 1970 for the 1st ed. of the Hymnal Companion, and included therein in 1870. Also in his work The Two Brothers, 1871, p. 240, in 6 et. of 4 l. It is designed "To be sung after the benedictory prayer, 'Defend, O Lord, this Thy servant with Thy heavenly grace, that he may continue Thine for ever,' " &c. It is a hymn of much beauty, and is very popular for Confirmations. {J. J.}

Think gently, and as gently speak. J. S. B. Monsell. [Gentleness.] Appeared in his Spiritual Songs, 1857 (ed. 1875, p. 31), in 10 st. of 4 l., and based on the Gospel for the 5th S. after Epiphany. In Dale's English II. Bk., 1874, No. 760, st. i., ii., viii.-x. are rewritten, and given as "Gently think, and gently speak." In this form it is a serviceäble hymn for congregational use. [J. J.]

Think gently of the erring [one]. [Gentleness.] This hymn is given in the American Universalist's Hys. for Christian Devotion, by Adams and Chapin, Boston, 1846, No. 813, in 2 st. of 8 l., and headed "Com-passion for the Sinning." It is there given as by "Miss Fletcher," a writer to us otherwise unknown. It is in the awkward metre of 7.6.8.6.8.6.8.6. As usually found in modern American hymn-books it is in c.m. as given in H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855, No. 1062, in 4 st. of $1.; but sometimes with the omission of st. iii. [J. J.]

Think, O ye who fondly languish. W. B. Collyer. [Death Asticipated.] Given in his Coll., 1812, No. 839, in 4 st. of 8 l., and entitled "Consolstion." In modern hymnals st. I., iii. are usually given as in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872. [J. J.]

Think on the mercy of our God. Emily Garnier. [Christman.] This was given in The Child's Christian Year, 1841, in 3 st. of 6 l., and is found in several hymn-books, From the Sedgwick MSS, we find that it was written in 1885 by Emily Garnier, daughter of the Dean of Winchester, who died at the nge of 14, and that it was printed in The Child's Christian Year from MB. [J, J,]

This day and at this very hour. E. Caswall. [Birthday.] Pub. in his Masque of Mary, &c., 1868, p. 245, in 18 st. of 4. l., and headed "Prayer written on my Thirtieth Birthday" (i.e. July 15, 1844), and again, after revision, in his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 268. A cento compiled from this peem was given in the Hymnary, 1872, No. 227, "Thee, Jesu, suffering, crucified," as a hymn for Lent, for which it is specially suitable.

This day the Light of heavenly birth. Bp. W. W. How. [Sunday.] Contributed by Bp. How to the 1st ed. of Morell & How's Ps. & Hys., 1854, in 4 st. of 4 l., and armin in the sulescaded. 1864, in 4 st. of White department of the contributed on the contributed of the contributed on again in the enlarged ed., 1864, as "This day by Thy creating word." Of this hymn we have the following forms :--

The original as above.
 The 1864 revised text as above.

3. No. 136 in Chape's Hymnel, 1854, with the 1st st. of the original, and the remaining stanzes with many alterations. This version is repeated in Thring's Coll. 1862, No. 69. It has not the author's authority.

4. "This day by Thy creative word." In addition to slight alterations this text has by. Ken's dox. added thereto. It was given in the Hymnery, 1878, No. 14. 5. "This day at Thy creating word." The Charch Hymne text by Bp. How, 1871, No. 6, with the dexology from M. A. & M., 1881, No. 3. This is the authorized text of the hymn.

When these various forms of the text are taken together, it is found that the hymn is in extensive use.

This is the day of Light. J. Ellerion. [Sunday.] Written in 1867, and 1st pub. in Hymne for Special Services and Festivals in Chester Cathedral, a collection of 100 hymns, chester Cathedral, a contection of 190 hymns, compiled by Dean Howson, 1867 (Chester: Phillipson & Golder), No. 51, in 5 st. of 4 l. From thence it passed into the 1868 Appendix to H. A. & M.; the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871; Thring's Coll., 1882, and several other hymnals both in G. Britain and America. It is a good hymn, and ranks in popularity with some of the best of Mr. Ellerton's compoeitions. [J. J.]

This is the day the Lord hath made, He calls the hours His Own. I. Watts. [Easter-day, or Sunday.] First pub. in his Pacims of David, 1719, p. 309, as a paraphrase of a portion of the 118th Psalm, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Hosanna; the Lord's Day; or, Christ's Resurrection, and our Salvation." It is in several collections and usually unaltered and unabbreviated. In the Hymnary, 1872, the cento "Behold the tomb its prey restores, is composed of st. i. new, ii.-iv. from this by Watts, slightly altered, and v. new. It is a successful hymn for Sunday. [J. J.]

This is the day the Lord hath made, Let young and old rejoice. J. Mont-gomery. (Sunday.) Written for the Sheffield Red Hill Sunday School Anniversary, held on March 26, 1820, and printed on a fly sheet for that occasion. It was repeated in Montgomery's Christian Psolmist, 1825, No. 467; and again in his Original Hys., 1853, No. 95, in 5 st. of 4 l. Its use is limited. [J. J.]

This is the feast of heavenly wine. W. Comper. [Holy Communion.] 1st pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 53, in 5 et. of 4 l., and headed "Welcome to the Table." Sometimes it begins with st. ii., "O bless the Saviour, ye that eat." See also "Blees'd with the presence of their God."

This is the month, and this the happy morn. J. Milton. [Christmas.] This is the opening of Milton's great ode On the Morning of Christ's 'Nativity, written in his 21st year (1629), and found in all editions of his Works. It has an introduction of 4 st. of 7 l., and then follows the hymn proper in 27 st. of 8 l. beginning, "It was the winter wild." From this the following centos have come into C. U. :—

I. It was the winter wild (st. l.). This is in a few collections.

S. No war or battle's saund (st. iv.). This is in H. W. Beacher's Physicisth Coll., 1858, and other American hymn-books. 3. Ring out ye crystal spheres (et. xiii.) In Hys.

for the Use of the University of Oxford in St. Mary's Church, 137, and others.

4. This is the mouth, and this the bappy morn. From the Introduction to the hymn.

[J. J.]

This livelong night we've toiled in ain. J. Keble. [Obedience.] This poem is dated 1821. It appeared in the Christian Year, 1827, for the 5th Sun. after Trinity, and based upon a portion of the Gospel of the day, St. Luke v. 1, &c. In its original form it is unknown to modern hymnals, but a cento compiled from its 15 st. is given in the New Cong., 1859, beginning with st. i.

This night I lift my heart to Thee. W. Bartholomess. [Evening.] Written in 1854 for Costa's oratorio Eli, and 1st pub. therein, 1854, as one of the songs appropriated to the Prophet Samuel. It is in 3 at of 4 l., and was repeated in the New Cong. H. Bk., 1859, and subsequently in other collections. [J. J.]

This place is holy ground. J. Montgomery. [Death and Buriat.] This is the opening line of Verses to the Memory of the late Richard Reynolds, of Bristol. London: Longmans, 1816. The Verses were given in three parts: i. "The death of the Righteons"; ii. "The Memory of the Just"; iii. "A Good Man's Monument." Mr. Reynolds was an eminent Quaker philanthropist; and the "Monument" referred to was the Society for the relief of persons in necessitous circumstances which was founded in Bristol in his memory. The Veress were repeated in all the complete editions of Montgomery's Works. The cento given in several American hymn-books, in-cluding Hatfield's Church H. Bk., 1872, is composed of st. i., ii., vil.—ix. of pt. i. on "The death of the Righteous." The original is in 9 st. of 6 l. [J. J.]

This stone to Thee in faith we lay. J. Montgomery. [Laying Foundation-stone of a Church.] Written in 1822, for the laying of the Foundation-stone of Christ Church, Attercliffs, Sheffield, and sung at that ceremony on Oct. 30, 1822. It was printed in Montgomery's newspaper, the Sheffield Iris, Nov. 5, 1822, together with a full account of the whole ceremony. Subsequently it was pub. in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 474, his Poetical Works of various dates, and his Original Hymns, 1858, No. 300, in 6 st. of 41. It is in extensive use in its full or in an abbreviated form, and also as :-

1. Here, in Thy Mame, starnal God. This form is given in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, and

2. When in these courts we seek Thy face. In the American Sabbath H. Bk., Andover, 1858, it begins with an altered form of the Management an eltered form of st. il.

an astered form of st. il.

3. Within these walls let heavenly peace. In the American Church Profits BL. N. Y., 1892. Of this text in 3 st., at. i. is from J. Newton's "O Lord, our languid sonis impire." Okey Byt., 1779, Bk. il., No. 43, st. v., and et. ii. and iii. are from this hymn by Montgonery.

4. When here, O Lori, we seek Thy face. This form of the text, beginning with st. ii., is in the Plymouth Coll., U.S.A., 1885.

Tholuck, Friedrich August Gotttreu, D.D., was b. at Breslau, March 30, 1799. He studied at the Universities of Brealan and Berlin. He became a University lecturer (Privatdocent) at Berlin, in Dec. 1820, and extraordinary professor of Theology there in April, 1823 (p.p. from Berlin in 1826). In Nov., 1825, he was appointed ordinary profossor of Theology at Halle, and entered on his duties at Easter, 1826. He was also appointed as University preacher, in 1839, and a member of the Magdeburg consistory in 1829. From Michaelmas, 1828, to Easter, 1829, he officiated as chaplain to the German Embassy at Rome, having gone there on sick leave. Otherwise, after 1826, his life was spent almost entirely at Halle. He d. at Halle, June 10, 1877 (Koch, vii. 26; Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie, xv., 560, &c.).

Tholuck was a celebrated preacher, and a great linguist. He is perhaps best known to English readers by his Commentaries, as e.g., on Romans, 1824 (5th ed., 1856; Eng. tr. 1833) and 1830; on St. John's Goopel, 1827 (7th ed., 1857; Eng. tr. 1859); on the Sermon on the Mount, 1833 (5th ed., 1873; Eng. tr. 1834 and 1837, improved in 1869); on Hebrews, 1836 (3rd ed., 1855; Eng. tr. 1842); on the Patins, 1643 (2nd ed., 1873; Eng. tr. 1834), bc.; and by his Die Lohre woo der Sünde und den Versöhner, oder die wahre Weibe der Zweifers, 1829 (enlarged ed., 1825; 9th ed., 1871), a sort of religious novel which has powerfully influenced many, e.g. C. J. P. Spitta (see p. 1075, il.), and has been tr. into English (two versions as Gwido and Julius, &c., by J. E. Kykand, 1836, and by J. Martin, 1865), French, Datish and Swedish. He was a many sided man, who exercised a great and far-reaching influence over his contemporaries, and who, by the charm of his personal character as well she by his learning, drew crowds of students to Halle, not only from all parts of Germany, but also from Great hitain and America. His hymne appeared in his Standen christiticher Andothi, ilamburg, 1839-40. This is a volume of Meditations which has passed through many eds. in German (8th ed., 1870), and of which at least two versions have appeared in Regish (as Hours of Christion Devotion), a partial one by the Misses Ann and Catherine H. Dunn, pub. at London in 1831; and character and series of the Sanden, Tholuck mentions that he had intended to introduce many quotations from German hymns and sacred poems, but could find few that enited his purpose. So he adds "I therefore myself spoke in the language of poetry; only a very few of the verses here interspersed are by other authors." He does not however lanicate in any more dafinite way which are his own compositions. A few pieces from this work have however lanicate in any more dafinite way which are his own compositions.

By Miss Burlingham in the Bristol Berold, Sept., 1885, p. 143, repeated in Reid's Prostse Bk., 1872. (3) "Bonosth Thy gentle care, O Shepherd thear." By Br. R. Mensies, 1870, as above, p. 178.

Thomas, Joan, of Rhaiadar, was b. 1780, in the parish of Myddfai, Caermarthenshire. One of the first books ho ever read was the Welshman's Candle. He published several books of hymns. The first appeared in 1771, The Golden Treasury, a translation of C. H. von Bogatzky, with some of Dr. Watte's hymns. In the same year appeared Flowyrchiadan Grás, and in 1788, Canadan Sion. His bymns in all number about 200. He was a minister with the Independents in Radnorshire, but d. at Cormerthen in 1804. [W. G. T.]

Thomas, Joan Elizabeth. [Gonder, Joan E.]

Thomas of Aquino, confessor and doctor, commonly called The Angelical Doctor, "on account of," says Dom Gueranger, "the extraordinary gift of understanding wherewith God had blessed him," was born of noble parents, his father being Landulph, Count of Aquino, and his mother a rich Nespolitan lody, named Theodora. The exact date of his birth is not known, but most trustworthy authorities give it as 1227. At the age of five he was sent to the Benedictine measurery at Monte Cassine to receive his first training, which in the hands of a large-hearted and God-fearing man, resulted in so filling his mind with knowledge and his soul with God, that it is said the monks themselves would often approach by stealth to hear the words of piety and wisdom that fell from the lips of the precocious child when conversing with his companions. After remaining at Monte Cassino for seven years, engaged in study, St. Thomas, "the most saintly of the learned, and the most learned of the saints," returned to his family, in consequence of the sack of the abbey by the Imperial soldiers. From thence he was sent by his parents to the University of Naples then at the height of its prosperity, where, becoming intimate with the Fathers of the Dominican Order, and being struck, probably, by the devotedness and ability of the Dominican Professors in the University, he was induced to petition for admission into that order, though he was at that time not more than seventeen years of age. This step gave such umbrage to his mother that she caused him to be waylaid on the road to Paris (whither he was being hurried to escape from her), and to be kept for more than two years in prison, during which time his brothers, prompted by their mother, used all means, even the most infamous, to seduce him from religion.

At last the Dominicans' influence with the Pope induced the latter to move the Emperor Frederick to order his release, when St. Thomas was at once hurried back to Naples by the delighted members of his order. was afterwards sent to Bome, then to Paris, and thence to Cologne. At Cologne his studies were continued under the celebrated Albertus Magnus, with whom, in 1245, he was sent by the Dominican Chapter once more to Paris for study, under his direction, at the University. In 1248, when he had completed his three years' curriculum at Paris, St. Thomas was appointed, before he was twentythree years of age, second professor and "ma-gister studentium," under Albertus, as regent, at the new Dominican school (on the model of that at Paris), which was established by the Dominicans in that year at Cologue. There he achieved in the schools a great reputation as a teacher, though he by no means confined himself to such work. He preached and wrote; his writings, even at that early age, were remarkable productions and gave promise of the depth and ability which mark his later productions. His sermons also at p that time enabled him to attract large congregations into the Dominican church. In 1248 he was directed to take his degree at Paris; and though his modesty and dislike of honour and distinction made the proposal distasteful to him, he set out and begged his way thither; but it was not until October 23rd, 1257, that he took his degree. The interval was filled by such labours in writing, lecturing, and preaching, as to enable him by the time he became a doctor to exercise an influence over the men and ideas of his time which we at this time can scarcely realise. So much was this the case that Louis IX. insisted upon St. Thomas becoming a member of his Council of State, and referred every question that came up for deliberation to him the night before, that he might reflect on it in solitude. At this time he was only thirty-two years of age. In 1259 he was appointed, by the Dominican Chapter at Valonciennes, a member of a Commission, in company with Albertus Magnus and Pierre de Tarentaise, to establish order and uniformity in all schools of the Dominicans. In 1261 the Pope, Urban IV., immediately upon his election to the Pontifical throne, sent for St. Thomas to aid him in his project for uniting into one the Eastern and Western Churches. St. Thomas in that same year came to Rome, and was at once appointed. by the General of his Order to a chair of theology in the Dominican College in that city, where he obtained a like reputation to that which he had secured already at Paris and Cologno. Pope Urban being anxious to re-ward his services offered him, first the Patriarchate of Jerusalem, and then a Cordinal's list, but he refused both. After lecturing, at the request of the Pope, with great success at Vitervo, Orvieto, Perugis, and Fondi, he was sent, in 1263, as "Definitor," in the name of the Roman Province, to the Dominican Chapter held in London. Two years later Clement IV., who succeeded Urban as Pope, appointed him, by bull, to the archbishopric of Naples, conferring on him at the same time the revenues of the convent of St. Peter ad Aram. But this appointment he also declined. In 1269 he was summoned to Paris-his last visitto set as "Definitor" of the Roman Province at the General Chapter of his Order, and he remained there until 1271, when his superiors recalled him to Bologus. In 1272, after visiting Rome on the way, he went to Naples to lecture at the University. His reception in that city was an ovation. All classes came out to welcome him, while the King, Charles I., as a mark of royel favour bestowed on him a pension. He remained at Naples until he was summoned, in 1274, by Pope Gregory X., by special bull, to attend the Second Council of Lyons, but whilst on the journey thither he was called to his rest. His death took place in the Benedictine Abbey of Fosan Nuova in the diocess of Terracina, on the 7th of March 1274, being barely forty-eight years of age.

St. Thomas was a most voluminous writer, his principal work being the celebrated Summa Theologies, which, although never completed, was accepted as such an authority as to be placed on a table in the council-chamber at the Council of Trent alongside of the Holy Scriptures and the Decrees of the Popes. But it is outside the province of this work to enlarge on his prose works. Though not a prolific writer of bymns, St. Thomas has contributed to the long list of Latin hymns some which have been in use in the services of the Church of Rome from his day to this. They are upon the subject of the Lord's Supper. The best known are:—

Pange lingua gloriori Corporis Mysterium; Adora le devole latens Beilas; Sacris sollemniti juncta sint gaudia; Lauda Sion Balvatorem; and Verbum supernum prodiens. The 1st, 3rd, and 8th of these are found in the Rom. Bren., the 2md, 4th, and 8th in Newman's Hymni Beclesiae; the 4th in the Rom. Missal; all of them appear in Densel; the 2nd and 4th in Mone; and the 2nd, 4th, and 8th in Noningfeld. Various other bymos have been stributed to 8t. Thomas, but in error, 48:—O exa violorum, (p. 339, 1.); and the Ut jucundas corvex under (q.v.). See also Mone, No. 129, and ii. p. 257.

Of these hymns numerous translations have been made from time to time, and amongst the translators are found Caswall, Neale, Woodford, Morgan, and others. Each of these hymns is annotated in this work under its original first line.

Thomas of Kempen, commonly known as Thomas à Kempis, was b. at Kempen, about fifteen miles north-west of Düsseldorf, in 1379 or 1380. His family name was Hammerken, His father was a peasant, whilst his mother kept a dame's school for the younger children of Kempen. When about twelve years old he became an inmate of the poor-scholars' house which was connected with a "Brother-House" of the Brethren of the Common Life at Deventer, where he was known as Thomas from Kempen, and hence his well-known name. There he remained for six years, and then, in 1898, he was received into the Brotherhood. A year later he entered the new religious house at Mount St. Agnes, near Zwelle. After due preparation he took the vows in 1407, was priested in 1413, became Subprior in 1425, and d. secording to some authorities on July 26 and others on Aug. 8, 1471. Much of his time was occupied in copying Miscals, Breviaries, and other devotional and religious works. His original writings included a chronicle of the monastery of St. Agnes, several biographies, tracts and hymns, and, but not without some doubt as to his authorship (for a resume of the controversy see Enc. Brit., 9th ed.) the immortal Imitatio Christi, which has been translated into more languages than any other book, the Bible alone excepted. His collected works have been repeatedly published, the best editions being Nürnberg, 1494, Antwerp in 1607 (Thomas Malleoli & Kempis ... Opera omnia), and Paris in 1649. An exhaustive work on St. Thomas is Thomas à Kempis and the Brothers of the Common Life, by S. W. Kettlewell, in 2 vols., Lond., 1882. In this work the following of his hymns are tr. by the Rev. S. J. Stone:-

i. From his Vita Honi Monachi, ii.:— 1. Vitam Jem Christi. Anitation of Christ. De the life of Christ thy Savioat.

2. Apprehends arms. Caristian Armour. Take thy waspons, take thy shield.

3. Sustans dolores. Resignation. Bear thy sorrows with Laurentius.

ji, From his Cantien Spiritualia:—
 O duktesime Jesa. Jenus the most Bear. O [Child]
 Christ Jesa, closest, descent.

O Vers summs Trinitas. Holy Trinity. Most true, most High, O Trinity.
 Adversa mundl tolers. Resignation. Bear the troubles of thy life (p. 23, 1.).

7. O qualis quantaque lastitia (p. 945, il.). Aternal Life. O joy the purest, noblest.

Of these trs. Mr. Stone has repeated Nos. 5, 6, and 7 in his Hymns, 1886, and No. 4 in a rewritten form as "Jesus, to my heart most precious," in the same. [See also Index of Authors and Translators.] Pastor O. A Spitzen has recently published from a MS circo 1480, ten additional hymns by Thomas, in his "Nalezing op mijn Thomas à Kempis," Utrecht, 1881. Six of these had previously been printed anonymously by Mone. The best known are "Jerusalem gloriosa" (p. 578, il.), and "Nec quisquam oculis vidit" (p. 795, l.). We may add that Thomas's hymn-writing is not regarded as being of the highest standard, and that the modern use of his hymne in any form is very limited.

Thompson, Alexander Ramsay, p.p., a minister of the American Reformed Dutch Church, was b. at New York, Oct. 22, 1812, and graduated at the New York University, 1842, and the Princeton Seminary, 1845. He was Reformed Dutch Pastor at various places, including East Brooklyp, St. Paul's (R. P. D.), New York City, North Reformed Church, Brooklyn (1874), and others. Dr. Thompson was joint editor of the Reformed Dutch Hys. of the Church, N. Y., 1869, and the Hys. of Prayer and Praise, 1871. He has contributed original hymns and tre. from the Latin to these collections, to Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, and to the Sunday School Times, Philadelphia, 1883, &c. His tre, will be found in the Index of Authors and Translators. In addition two original hymns:-

1. O Thou Whose filmed and fading eye. Good Friday.

2. Wayfarers in the wilderness. Life a Pilgrimage.

are in the Hys. of the Church, 1869, with the signature "A. R. T." [F. M. B.]

Thompson, Henry John, M.A., s. of John Northon Thompson, was b. at Kings-clere, Hants, 1830; was Tylney Exhibitioner Queen's College, Oxford, 1850; and graduated and the control of the c sted B.A. in 1858, M.A. in 1856. On taking Holy Orders, he became curate of St. Mary's, Warwick. In 1859 he was instituted to the vicarage of Dodford, near Weedon, Northants. In 1878 he became chaplain to the R.A. garrison at Weedon, and in 1879 was appointed rural dean of Weedon. Mr. Thompson has written, "Christ, we come before Thee" (Holy Matrimony), to be sung at the commencement of the office of Holy Matrimony. It was 1st printed, with music by the Rev. T. R. Matthews, by Novello & Co.; and again, together with the same music, in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, No. 238, in 4 double st. of 8 L Mr. Thompson has also written a few hymns for "Harvest," "Confirmation," and other occasions, and some carols. These, with other poetical pieces, were pub. in his Hymne and other Verses, and form a pleasing volume, He d. Dec. 12, 1887. [J. J.]

Thompson, Jemima. [Luke, Jemima.]

Thou art coming, O my Saviour. Frances R. Havergal. [Advent.] Written at biddest, Lord, Thy sons be bold."

Winterdyne, Nov. 16, 1873. 1st printed in the Rock newspaper, 1873, and then as one of Parlane's leaflets, 1874; her Under the Surface, 1874; and Life Mosaic, 1879. It is one of the most popular of Miss Havergal's hymns. Sometimes it is divided, when Pt. ii. begins with "Thou art coming; at Thy Table." Miss Havergal's tune St. Paul was written to this hymn; but she preferred to hear it sung to Dr. Monk's tune Advent, as in H. A. & M. [HAV. MOB.]

Thou art gone to the grave! but we will not deplore thee. Bp. R. Heber. [Death and Burial.] Was written in December, 1818, on the death of his daughter, aged six months. (Memoirs, vol. i. p. 501.) So far as is at present known its earliest publication was in the Rev. Carus Wilson's Friendly Visitor, for August, 1824. It is also found, with variations, in st. iii. in a vol. of Sacred Poetry, Edin.: W. Oliphant, N.D. In 1827, the text, as in the Friendly Visitor, was included in Bp. Heber's posthumous Hymru, p. 150. It is rendered into Latin by R. Bingham in his Hymn. Christ. Latina, 1871, as "Mortuos inter resides, et absens."

Thou art [hast] gone up on high, To ansions, &c. Emma Toke, nee Leslie. mansions, &c. Emma Toke, nee Leslie. [Ascension.] Written in 1851, and contributed anonymously to the S. P. C. K. Hymne for Public Worship, 1852, No. 61, in 3 st. of 4 l.; and again in later editions of the same collection. Its use is very extensive in most English-speaking countries. The text is seldom altered, a marked instance to the contrary, however, being the Hymnary, 1872. In H. A. & M., 1861, st. i., L. 2, reeds "To realme"; but in the 1875 ed. the original reading "To mansions" is restored.

In 1871, Mrs. Toke slightly sitered the text for the Rev. R. Judd's S. S. Liturgy & H. Bh., No. 62 (Halifax), and wrote at the same time the following additional verse, which is given in Judd's collection as the first:-

> " Thou bast gone up on high! Triumphant o'er the grave, And captive led captivity, And captive ted captivity, > Thy ransomed ones to save.
> Thou hast gone up on high!
> Oh! help us to escend,
> And there with The continually,
> In heart and spirit blend."

This stanza is practically unknown to compilers, and is not in general use. [J. J.]

Thou biddest, Lord, Thy sons be bold. T. H. Gill. [Liberty of the Children of God.] The second hymn written by the author, composed in 1845, and 1st pub. in G. Dawson's Ps. & Hys., 1846, No. 115, in 9 et. of 4 l. In 1859 it was included in Hedge & Huntington's Hys. for the Ch. of Christ, Boston, U.S.A., No. 507, with the emission of st. ii., viii., and was thus introduced to the author's Golden Chain, &c., 1869, and included as No. 132 in 4 st. of 8 l., with the heading "The glorious Liberty of the Children of God." In Dale's English H. Rh. 1874 American collections. It was revised for the God." In Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, No. 633, st. ii. of the 1863 text is omitted. The American Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, 1864, contains two centes from this hymn, (1) "We stand unto our God, how near!" and (2)" Thou [J. J.]

Thou boundless Source of every good. [Divine Guidance desired.] This hymn is a cento, and as such it appeared in T. Cotterill's Sel. of Ps. & Hys. 1st ed. 1810, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "For the right improvement of the dispensations of Providenoe." It was repeated in Cotterill's Sel., 1819 and 1820; Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833; and again in a great many modern hymn-books, including the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys. &c. It is sometimes abbreviated to 4 st. Of the original cento st. ii., iii., iv., vi. are from O. Heginbothom's (p. 506, i.)
"Father of mercies, God of love," which was No. 9 of his Hymns, &c., Sudbury, 1794, but in an altered form; and et. i, and v, are probably by T. Cotterill.

Thou child of man, fall down. H. Alford. [Adult Baptism.] 1st pub. in G. Stevenson de M. Rutherford's Lays of the Sanctuary, and Other Poems, 1859, p. 7, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "Liues for an Adult Baptism." In 1868 it was included by the author in the revised ed. of his Poetical Works, p. 256, with the simple heading "1846," the date of its composition, and probably of a special Baptism for which it seems to have been composed. In Kennedy 1863, No. 771, "Servant of God, go forth," is composed of st. iv.-viii. It is a hymn of some merit, and might be divided with case into two parts; the first to be sung before, and the second after, the administration of the Hely Bite. [J. J.]

Thou dear [great] Redeemer, dying Lamb. J. Cennick. [The Holy Name Jesus.] Pub. in his Sacred Hymns, do., Pt. iii., 1743-44, p. 148. It was included in the 1875 ed. of the Wes. H. Bk. as "Thou great Redeemer, dying Lamb." In the English Moravian H. Bk., 1886, it is given in 3 st., and begins with the original first line. [J. J.]

Thou didst leave Thy throne and Thy Kingly crown. Emily E. S. Elliott. [Christmas.] 1st privately printed, 1864, for the use of the choir and schools of St. Mark's Church, Brighton, and first pub. by the Church, Brighton, and first pub. by the authorests in the Church Missionary Juvenile Instructor, 1870, p. 188; and again in her Chimes for Daily Service, 1880, p. 99, in 5 st. of 6 l. It was repeated in Wilson's Service of Praise, 1865; Allon's Children's Worship, 1878; Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bh., 1881; Church Praise, 1883, ke. and is given in city. Church Profes, 1883, &c., and is given in full, and almost in the 1880 text as No. 874 in the Scottish Free Church H. Bk., 1882. [J. M.]

Thou glorious Sun of Righteousness. Charlotte Eliat. [Sunday Morning.] This hymn is in C. U. in two forms, and both are by Miss Elliott. The first form is in 3 at. are by saiss EHEGE. The first form is in 3 at. of 4 1., beginning as above, and appeared in the "Third Thousand" of H. V. Elliott's Ps. & Hys., 1839, No. 291. This text is repeated in the Lesels H. Bk., 1858, and others. The second form is that given in Miss Elliott's Morning and Evening Hys. for a Week, 1839, p. 3, in 11 st. of 4 1. Of this form of the text is if and via not the preceding hymnithms. Grace and Glory, 1872; Thring's Coll., 1882, [J. J.] and others,

Thou God art a consuming fire. J. Montgomery. [Prayer.] Written in 1818, and first printed on a broadsheet with Montgomery's "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire," and "What shall we sak of God in prayer?" for use in the Nonconformist Sunday schools in Sheffleld. It was included in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 279, in 4 st. of 8 l.; in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 481, with alterations, and in 8 at. of 4 l.; and again in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 68, without further alteration. This last is the text usually given in the hymnals. [J. J.]

Thou God of glorious majesty. C. Wesley. [Death and Judgment.] 1st pub. in Hymne and Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. i., in 6 at. of 6 l., and entitled "An Hymn for Seriousness" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 316). In 1780 it was included in the Wes. H. Bk., as No. 58, and from thence has passed into many collections. The hymnals of the Church of England however received their text from M. Medan, who included the hymn in his Ps. & Hymns, 1760, and appended to the lines:—

"Give me to feel their solemn weight,
And tremble on the brisk of fake
And wake to Righteonenes."

and a long note, thus introduced:-

"I am glad of an Opportunity to rescue this signifi-cant Word [Fats] out of the Hands of the Infidels, who use it together with Inck, Fortune, Chance, Destiny, to promote their favourite Scheme, of axcluding the parti-cular Providence of the Wise Disposer of all Events from the Government of the Affairs of Man."

He then proceeds to justify the use of the word by first giving its derivation from the Latin, Fatum, and then quoting classical authorities for its use in the same sense as that in which it is used by Wesley. Fate is that which God has spoken concerning man, In this verse of the hymn that word is, " Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Hence its truth.

Concerning the second stanze, "Lo! on a narrow neck of land," much controversy has arisen as to whether or not it was written "on a narrow neck of laud" at the Laud's End, Cornwall. Mr. T. Jackson, in his Life of C. Wesley, asserts that there is no proof of its having been written under these circumstances; and Dr. Caborn, the learned editor of the Poetical Works of J. & C. Wesley, is silent on the subject. Failing to find elsewhere any evidence of value in favour of the common belief, we must join the above authorities in pronouncing against it.

The literary merits of this hymn won the praise of Montgomery :-

"Theu God of glorious majesty! is a sublime con-templation in another veln; solemn, collected, ma-impassioned thought, but thought occupied with that which is of everlasting import to a dying man, stand-ing on the lapse of a moment between 'two eternities.'" Cariation Pealmist. Introductory Essay.

An abbreviated form of this hymn is found in a few collections including Major's Book of st. i., ii. and xi. are the preceding hymn, the remaining stanzas being new. This form is remaining stanzas being new. This form is repeated, sometimes abbreviated, in Brown-Borthwick's Select Hys., &c., 1871; the S. P. altered, are given as "O God, Thy saving C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Snepp's Songs of grace impart," is in Kennedy, 1863. [J. J.] Thou knowest, Lord, that they. J. Anstice. [In Temptotion.] First privately printed in Hys. by the Rev. Joseph Anstice, M.A., Lond.: 1836, and ofterwards pub. in The Child's Christian Year, 1841, in 5 st. of 6 l., and appointed for the 19th 8. after Trinity. In 1863 Dr. Kennedy gave in his Hymno. Christ., an altered version, beginning "Help, Lord, Thou know'st that they," in 4 st., the fourth stanza being omitted. ſJ. Ĵ.]

Thou, Lord, delights Thy saints to own. J. Allen. [Holy Baptism.] This imperfect line is the opening of a hymn out of which a fairly good lyric has been made. The original, by J. Allen, appeared in A Collection of Hymne for the use of those that seek, and those that have Redemption in the Blood of Christ. Kendal: Printed by Thomas Ashburner, MDCCLVII, No. 114, as follows:-

"1. Thou, Lond, delights Thy saints to own In Thy appointed ways;
This ordinance with bleedings crown, And tokuns of Thy grace

"2. Jointly we raise our hearts to Thee, Thy powerful Spirit breathe; And let this little lufant be Saptiz'd into Thy death.

"3. O let Thy unotion on him rest, With grace his heart bedow; And write within his tender breast Thy name and nature too.

"4. If Thou shouldst quickly end his race His place with Thee prepare; Or if Thou longthen out his days, Continue still Thy care.

"6. Thy faithful soldler may be prove,
Begirt with truth divine;
A sharer of Thy dying love,
A follower of Thine."

In 1782 Thomas Beck included it in an altered form in his Hymns Calculated for the Purposes of Public, Social, and Private Worship, &c., Rochester, 1782, as No. 105, thus:-" Dedicating the Child to God in Baptism.

"1. Thou, Lord, art pleased Thy spints to own, And will their children bless; This ord names now with mercy crown, And lokens of Thy grace.

" 2. Jesus, we raise our rouls to Thee [And, as in orig. above.]

"3. O let Thy unction on Aim rest, Thy grace his soul bedew; [And, as in orig. above.]

"4. [As above with I. 1 "race" to "days;" and I. 3. "days" to "race."]
"5. [As above with I. 2 " Begirt," to "Gérded;" and I. 3 "sharer of" to "sharer is."]

"6. A new stanza, being:

"Plant us into His death,
That we His life may prove;

from Bys. on The Lord's Supper, by J. and G. Wesley, 1745, No. extrin. 4, rewritten in c.u., as:—

"Lord, plant us all into Thy death, That we Thy life may prove; Purtakers of Thy cross beneath, And of Thy grown above.

In 1833, this cento took the form in which it is known in modern hymn-books, appearing in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, No. 351, as "Jesus, we lift our souls to Thee," in 5 st., beginning with the second stanza altered, by Alien, and concluding with the stanza, also altered as above, by Wesley. In the Irish Church Hymnal, st. 4, as in Bickersteth, is omitted. The cento should therefore be subscribed "J. Allen, C. Wesley, T. Beck, and E. Bickersteth," [W. T. B.]

Thou, Lord, through every changing scene. P. Doddridge. [God, the Duelling-place of His People.] This is No. 21 in the p. 1888., in 6 st. of 41.: is headed "God the Dwelling-place of His people thro' all generations," from Ps. xc. 1, and dated May 30, 1736. It was given in J. Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 51; and again with elight differences in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839. It has passed into several modern hymnals. [J. J.]

Thou that art the Father's Word.

H. Alford. | Christmas, or the Epiphany.]
This is No. 18 in Dean Alford's Pealms and Hymns, 1844; and No. 32 in his Year of Praise, 1867, in 4 st. of 6 l. and the refrain, "Hail, Lord Jesus." In the Irvingite Hys. for the use of the Churches, 1864, No. 21, begins "Songs of glory fill the sky," and is signed in the Index "J. E. L." (i.e. Jane E. Leeson). In the 1871 cd. of that collection it is repeated as No. 121, and in the Index is set forth as by "Dean Alford (altered)." It is really a cento in 8 st. of 8 l. and a refrain, of which ll. 3 and 7 of st. i., the whole of st. li. and the refrain, are from Dean Alford's hymn.

Thou thrice denied, yet thrice be-ved. J. Keble. [8t. Peter.] Written May 15, 1825, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 18 st. of 4 l. A cento beginning with an alteration of st. i. to "Lord, thrice denied yet thrice beloved," is sometimes found in modern hymn-books. [J. J.]

Thou Who art enthroned above. G. Sandye [Pa xcii.] Pub. in his Paraphrace upon the Pealmes of David, 1636; again in his Paraphrases upon the Divine Poems (with which the Psalmes were incorporated), 1638; and again in later eds. of the same. It is in 46 lines. In Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, 24 lines, beginning with the first, were given as No. 237. This cento was repeated in the Leeds H. Blt., 1853; the New Cong. H. Bk., 1859, and others. Another cento is in the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875. It consists of 18 lines from the original paraphrase, and begins with the first line. [J. J.]

Three in One, and One in three. G. Rorison. [Holy Trinity.] The MS. of this hymn was sent in 1849, with seven others, to R. Campbell for insertion in his St. Andrews Hymnal, but they were not included therein, although the Mss. were retained and now form part of the c. Mss. The heading of this special Ms. is "Trinity Sunday, An imitation and combination from the Roman Breviary 'Tu Trinitatis Unitas,' and 'Jam sol recedit igneus.'" The hymn was first pub. in Dr. Rorison's Hys. and Anthems, 1851 (Preface dated "All Saints Day, 1850"), p. 97, as follows:-

"Three in One and One in Three i Ruler of the earth and sea! Hear us while we lift to Thee Holy chant and pealm.

" Light of lights; with morning-shine Lift on us Thy light divine; And let charity benign Breathe on us her balm.

"Light of lights! when falls the even Let it sink on ain forgiven: Fold us in the peace of heaven; Shed a vesper raim,

" Three in One, and One in Three! Darkling hers we worship Thee: With the Soluts hereafter we Hope to bear the palm."
