In Murray's Hymnal, 1852, it was repeated with "Dimly here," &c., for "Darkling here," &c., in st. iv., 1. 2. This text was given in H. A. & M., 1861, with the additional change of "Shed a vesper calm," "to shed a holy calm." Other, but slight, alterations have been introduced in modern hymn-books, inclading :--

1. Ever blessed Trinity. In the 1880 Appendix to 1. Ever blassed Trinity. In the 1990 Appendix to the Bop. Ps. 6 Hys. 2. Esty Godkood, One in Three. In the Roman Catholic Hys. for the Year 1887.

3. Lord of level as deep and free. In J. Hunter's Hys. of Fault and Life, Glasgow, 1869.

It must be noted that most editors of hymnels have misquoted st. ii, by printing the compound substantive "morning-shine two words, followed by a semicolon, an oversight which destroys the whole point and meaning of the stanza, and goes for towards spoiling the entire hymn. The text, usually as in H. A. & M., is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. The H. A. & M. text is also tr. into Latin by G. S. Hodges, and is given in his County Palatine, 1876, as, "Una Trina Deitas." [J. J.]

Threlfall, Jeannette. This sweet singer of hymns and other sacred poems, was born the Weston H. Bk., compiled by the Misses in the town of Blackburn, Lancashire, on Harrison of Sheffield, 1834, No. 198. It was 24th March, 1821. She was the daughter republished in Montgomery's Poet's Port of Henry Threlfall, wine merchant, and Catherine Eccles, the latter a somewhat noticeable local family, who disapproved of the marriage. She was early left an orphan, and became the "beloved inmate" (as a memorial-card bears) of the households successively of her uncle and aunt Bannister and Mary Jane Eccles, at Park Place, Blackburn, and Golden Hill, Leyland; and later of their daughter, the late Sarah Alice Acton, and her husband, of Dean's Yard, Westminster. Latterly she met with a sad accident that lamed and mutilated her for life, and a second rendered her a helpless invalid. She bore her long alow sufferings brightly, and to the end retained a gentle, loving, sympathetic heart, and always a pleasant word and smile, forgetful of herself. Throughout she was a great reader, and at "idle moments" threw off with ease her secred poems and hymns. These were sent anonymously to various periodicals. They were first collected and issued in a small volume, entitled Woodcorret; or, Leaves from a Retired Home. By J. T., Lond.: J. Nisbet, 1856.* There are thirty-five poems in all. They do not appear to have won any notice except among friends. Years later she selected 15 pieces from Woodsorrel and added 55 others, and pub, them as Surchine and Shadow. Poems by Jeannette Threlfall. With Introduction by the Lord Bishop of Lincoln [Wordsworth]. Lond.: (Hunt), 1873. A 3rd ed. (1880) is entitled New Edition. With In Memoriam from the Sermons of the Dean of Westminster and Canon Farrar. The two memorial tributes are very tender and sweet. A few words from each will be acceptable. Dean Stanley, amongst other things finely put, 8&Y9 :---

HI I may speak of one who has been taken from these precincts within the last week: when a life, bright and lovely in itself, is suddenly darkened by some terrible accident; when it has been changed from the enjoyment of everything to the enjoyment of nothing; when year by year, and week by week, the suffering, the weaknese, have increased; and when yet, in spite of this, the patient aufferer has become the centre of the bousehold, the adviser and counsellor of each; when there has been a constant stream of cheerfulness under the severest bain; when there has been a flow of gratitarge and need a constant stream of oncertuness under the severest pair; when there has been a flow of grati-tude for any act of kindness, however slight; when we recall the eager hope of such an one, that progress and improvement, not stagnation or repose, will be the destiny of the newly-awakened soul; then, when the end has come, we sel more than ever that the future is greater than the present."

So Canon Farrar :-

"A few days ago there passed away a resident of this parish, a member of this congregation, whose name many of the poor well know; who was their friend and their benefactor; who had the liberal hand and the large heart; who belped the charlites of this parish with a sponthaneous generosity which is extremely rare; whose purse was ever open, unasked, to every good work of which she heard; whose deticate mind was alive with Christian sympathy; who had pre-eminently "The faith, through constant watching wise, And the heart at lesture from itself."

And the heart at leisure from itself, To soothe and sympathics."

Bp. Wordsworth praises her poems, and observes :

"It is an occasion for great thankfulness to be able to point to poems, such as many of those in the present volume, in which considerable mental powers and graces of composition are blanded with pure religious feeling, and hallowed by sound doctrine and ferrent devotion."

The sacred poems are not very well wrought, nor at all noticeable in thought or sentiment. But all through one feels that a sweet spirit utters itself. She d. on 30th November, 1880, and was interred at Highgate Cemetery, 4th Dec., 1880. [A. B. G.]

Of Miss Threlfall's hymns those in C. U. include :-

- 1. Hosanna! loud hosanna, The little children sang.
- came numacy.
 2. I think of Thee, O Saviour. Good Friday.
 2. Lo, to us a child is born. Christmas.
 4. Thou bidd'st us seek Thee early. Early Picty.
 6. We praise Thes in the mothing. Morning.
 8. When from Egypt's house of bondage. Children as Pilarims.

These hymns are all taken from Miss Threlfall's Sunshine and Shadow, 1873. No. 2 was written during a dangerous illness, at her dictation, by a friend. No. 1 is the most widely used of her compositions. [J. J.]

Thresher, Mrs. J. B., a som de plume of Mrs. Van Alstyne, q. v.

Thrice happy saints who dwell above. S. Browns. [Sunday.] Appeared in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1720, No. 122, in 10 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Lord's Day." In its full form it is not in C. U. In Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, st. iv., v., vii., viii. were given as No. 283 as "Frequent the day of God returns." This cento has been repeated in a large number of hymnals in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Thrice happy souls, who born from P. Doddridge. [Walking with heaven. God.] This is No. 87 in the D. MSS. in 8 st. of 4 l., headed, "Of spending the day with God," from Prov. xxiii. 17, and dated " March 27, 1787." In J. Orton's postlumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 79, it was given with several changes in the text, and with the heading altered to "Walking with God; or, being in His fear all the day long." Proverbs xxiii. 17; and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 93. This text again differs from both the above. That however in C. U. is from Orton. In the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, No. 445, st. v., vi., iv. and iii., are given as, "Lord, we must labour, we must care." Both this and the text as in Orton are in several collections.

Thring, Edward, w.A., brother of Godfrey Thring, was b. at Alford, Somerset, on Nov. 29 1821, and educated at King's College, Cambridge; B.A. 1844. He won the Porson Prize in 1848, and was elected a Fellow of King's College in 1844. He became Head Master of Uppingham School in 1858, and retained the same to his death on October 22, 1887. He was the author of several important works for schools and colleges, of a volume of Sermons pub, in 1858, and two other vols. in 1896, and of Borth Lyrics, 1881. He was joint editor with Herr David of the Hymn Book for the use of Uppingham and Sherborne Schools, 1874, and to it he contributed some tra from the German (see Index of Authors and Translators). Two of his original hymns are in Thring's Coll. (1) "A day of work is done" (For the Sick), and (2) " Death shut the gates of Paradiso" (Death). His great success as the Head Master of a Public School has become a matter of history. [J. J.]

^{*} The title Woodsorrel was chosen from its name in Italian "Allsinia," and because Fra Angelico puts it, with datales, at foot of the Cross in one of bls most lovely paintings.

Thring, Godfrey, B.A., a of the Rev. J. G. D. Thring, of Alford, Somerest, and brother of the Rev. E. Thring (see above). was b, at Alford, March 25, 1828, and educated at Shrewsbury School, and at Ballioi College, Oxford, B.A. in 1845. On taking Holy Orders he was curate of Stratfield-Turgis, 1846–50; of Strathfieldsaye, 1850–53; and of other parishes to 1858, when he became rector of Alford-with-Hornblotton, Somerset. R.D. 1867-76. In 1876 he was preferred as prebend of East Harptree in Wells cathedral. Prebendary Thring's poetical works are :- Hymns Congregational and Others, 1866; Hymns and Verses, 1866; and Hymns and Sacred Lyrics, 1874. In 1880 he pub. A Church of England Hymn-book Adapted to the Daily Services of the Church throughout the Year; and in 1882, a revised and much improved edition of the same as The Church of England Hymn Book, &c. (for details concerning which see England, Hymney, Church of, p. 351, § vi.). A great many of Prebendary Thring's hymne are annotated under their respective first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators); the rest in Cl. U. include :--

hymre-book

In addition to the above, and those annotated under their respective first lines, Prebendary Thring wrote in 1868 a series of "Hymns on the Creation," as set forth in the first chapter of Genesis, and pub. the same in his Hys. & Sac. Lyrics, 1874, and in his Coll., 1880 and 1882. These hynns have also passed into other collections. They are all in the same metre (8.8.8.8.6), and are certainly the same metre (c.o.o.c.o.o.), and are certainly very fine. The first lines are:

47. When o'er the water's misty deep. Stonday.

48. The earth in robes of light arrayed. Monday.

49. With arms gindle circled round. Treasury.

50. So grass, and berb, and fruitful tree. Wednesday.

51. Four days had come and gone to rest. Trividay.

52. The last great day of work had come. Friday.

53. And now, 'mid myriad worldsenthroned. Foruriary.

A lithough one is natural. Produced my Thring's.

Although, as is natural, Prebendary Thring's hymns are more fully represented in his own Coll. than elsowhere, yet a fair proportion are found in a large number of hymn-books in Great Britain and America. His hymns are mainly objective, and are all of them of a strong and decided character. The poetical, several modern collections.

as distinct from the sermonizing style of hymn-writing on the one hand, and the grand use of Holy Scripture (as by Bishop C. Wordsworth) on the other, is very prominent, with a tendency to diffuseness and over-elaboration, His descriptive and narrative hymns are very few, and Passiontide and the two Sacraments of the Church are almost untouched. In some of his finer hymns his tone is high and his structure massive, in several others bis plaintiveness is very tonder, whilst very varied, and his rhythm is almost always perfect. The prominent features throughout are a clear vision, a firm faith, a positive reality, and an exulting hopefulness. His hymn-book possesses the same features of strength, beauty, and excellence. [J. Through all the changing scenes of life. Tate & Brady. [Ps. zaxiv.] 1st appeared in the New Version, 1696, in 18 st. of 4 l., divided into two parts. As a c.m. rendering it is regarded as one of the most successful in the New Version, and has been a perfect mine of wealth for cento makers. Its use as a whole in modern hymn-books is unknown, but centes of varying length and arrangements are in most extensive use. Of these the following are the most popular:

i. St. 1, 11, 111., vil., vili. This was given with slight siterations in Cotterill's Set., 1810; and repeated with further alterations in 1819. From Cotterits, 1819, it averavone in Cotterii's Set., 1810; and repeated with further alterations : In 1819. From Cotterist, 1819, it passed into Stowell's Coll., 1831; Ekckensteth's Christian Pazimody, 1833; Stowell's Pr. & Hys., 1876, and others in the Ch. of England. The Cong. H. Hk., 1836; Leeds H. Felt. numerous contections of various denominations both in Great Britain and America. In some instances Cot-terill's alteration of st. ii. 1. 4, "And charm their griefs," to "And southe their griefs," is reproduced; but in most cases the original text is retained. This is the most popular extract form of the hymn.

Although other centos can be pointed out both in the older and modern collections, sufficient evidence is supplied in the above to show the great hold this version of Ps. xxxiv. has upon the public mind. The collections quoted are but a small part of those in which some portion of this version is found. Its use in various forms is universal. [See New Version, and Paulters, English, § 13 y.] [J. J.]

T. Kelly. [Morning.] . 1st pub. in the 1st ed. of his Hymns on Various Passages of Soripture, 1804, in 5 st. of 4 l., and based upon the words in Job vii. 20, "O Thou Preserver of men" (ed. 1853, No. 497). It is found in [J. J.]

Through endless years Thou art the same. [Ps. ci.] This cento is found in several English and American bymu-books; sometimes in four and at other times in five stanzas; and in most cases differing somewhat in the text. The earliest date to which we have traced it is the English Bap. New Sel. of Hys., 1828, No. 17, in 5 st., the first of which is taken from Watters version of Ps. cii., and the rest from the New Version, 1696, and in both instances with alterations. Thie text, with alterations and the emission of st. v., was given in the American Congregational Church Pralmody, by Mason and Greene, Boston, 1831, No. 102. In some later American hymn-books, st. v., as in the English Bap. New Sel., 1828, or altered, is restored. The text of the 1880 Suppl. to the English Bap. Ps. & Hys., is from the New Bel., slightly altered. [J. J.]

Through the day Thy love has spared us. T. Kelly. [Evening.] Pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Herms, de., 1808, in 2 st. of 61, (ed. 1853, No. 500). It has come into extensive use in all English speaking countries, and has been tr. into several languages. R. Bingham's tr. into Latin in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, begins:—"Per hunc diem tre-[J. J.] pidum.

Throw away Thy rod. G. Herbert. [Discipline.] 1st pub. in his posthumous work The Temple, 1633, under the title "Discipline," thus:---

" Throw away Thy rod, Throw away Thy wrath :
O my God,
Take the gentle path. " For my beart's desire Unto Thine is bent; I aspire
To a full consent. " Not a word or look I affect to own,
But by book,
And Thy book alone. "Though I fall, I weep; Thou I halt in pace, Yet I creep

To the throne of grace.

"Then let wrath remove; Love will do the deed; For with love Stony hearts will bleed. Love is swift of foot; Love's a man of war, And can shoot, And can hit from far. Who can 'scape his bow? That which wrought on Thee, Brought Thee low, Needs must work on me. Throw away Thy rod; Though man frailties hath, Thou art God; Throw away Thy wrath."

The explicat attempt known to us to adapt this poem for congregational use was made by John Wesley. In his Coll. of Ps. & Hys., printed at Charlestown, America, 1736-7, it was altered from its 5.5.8.5 metre to s.w. and given as No. vii. of the "Ps. & Hys. for Wednesday and Friday." The first stanza begins:

"O throw away Thy rod!
O throw away Thy wrath!
My gracious Savious and my God,
O take the gentle path."

The original poem, usually in an abbreviated form, is found in several modern bymubooks, including the People's H., 1867; the Cong. Ch. Hymnal, 1887, and others. [J. J.]

Thrupp, Dorothy Ann, daughter of Joseph Thrupp, of Paddington Green, was b. base on the standard of the st Visitor and his Children's Friend, under the change of title to A Sel. . . . of Infant and Juvenile Schools and Families), in which her signature is "D. A. T."; and also to the Hys. for the Young, which she herself edited for the R. T. S. circa 1830, 4th ed., 1836. In 1836 and 1837 she also pub. Thoughts for the Day (2nd series), in which she embodied many hymns which previously appeared in the Friendly Visitor. In addition to her hymne, which are annotated under their respective first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators), there are also in C. U. :--

1. Come, Holy Spirit, come, O bear an infant's presser. Child's Prayer. Appeared in Mrs. Mayo's Sel. of Hys. and Postry, 1838, No. 14, and signed "D. A. T."

2. God loves the little child that prays. God's love for Children. Given in Miss Thrupp's Hys. for the Fossog, ath ed., 1836; and again in Mrs. Mayo's Sel. of Hys., &c., 2nd ed., 1840, and signed "D. A. T." it is sometimes given as "God loves the child that kumbly sometimes given as "God loves the child that kumbly prays."

2. Have you read the wandrous story? Life and Beath of Jenus. This appeared anonymously in Miss Thrupp's Hys. for the Foung, R. T. S., 1830, No. 12, in 5 st. of 4 l. In Miss Thrupp's later publications this hymn is conlited, a fact which suggests that it was not her composition, but possibly that of a friend, It is in the Leeds S. S. Union H. Bis., 1833-18.

4. Let us sing with one second. Proise of Jenus. This hymn is usually associated with Miss Thrupp's name, but on insufficient evidence. We find it in the 4th ed. of her Hys. for the Foung, 1836, and again in the srd ed. of Min. H. Mayo's Sci. of Hys. and Poetry for the Use of Kafoni and Jumentic Schools, he., 1846, and in both Instances without signature. We know of no evidence which justifies us in ascribing the authorship with certainty to Miss Thrupp. The hymn is in the Leeds S. S. Union H. Be., 1833-78, and several others.

5. Poer and needy though I be. Divine Providence.

Leeds S. S. Owich H. Br., 1833-78, and several others.

6. Poor and needy though I be. Divise Providence.
Appeared in Miss Thrupp's Hys. for the Young, 6th ed.,
1836, No. 22; and again in Mrs. Mayo's Set. of Hys.,
&c., 2nd ed., 1840, and signed "D. A. T."

6. See, my child, the mighty ocean. Love of God compared to the Sea. Given in the R. T. S.'s Hys., for the Young, 4th ed., 1838, No. 26, and in Mrs. Mayo's Set. of Hys., &c., 1st ed., 1838, and signed "D. A. T." In Kennedy, 1863, it ibegins "Have you seen the mighty ocean." ocean.

7. Thou Guardian of my excitest days. Jesus the thidren's Friend. This hymn we have traced to her Bys. for the Foreng, 4th ed., 1836. It is sometimes given as "Then Guardian of our sarilest days."
3. What a strange and wondrous stary. Life and Death of Jesus. This hymn is found without signature in her Bys. for the Foung, 4th ed., 1839, and again is lim. H. Mayor Sci., 1838, No. 173, in 4 st. of 4 l. We have found no authority for secribing it to Miss Thrupp. In the Ch. S. S. H. Bk., N.D., 3 lines have been added as a concluding stanza by an unknown hand.

8. What led the Bon of God! Love of God in Christ. This appeared anonymously in her Hys. for the Young, 1830, and again in the Leeds S. S. Union H. Bk., 1832. In modern collections it is attributed to Miss Thrupp, on 1930, and again in the Leeder N. N. Paton H. Br., 1832.

In modern collections it is stributed to Miss Thrups, on the ground that it is found in the Hys. for the Young, which she edited.

10. Who are they in heaven who stand? All Saints.
Pub. in Mrs. Mayo's Sci., 3rd ed., 1846, No. 64, in 6 st. of 4 1, and signed "A. D. T." It is in the Prins.
Methodist S. S. U. H. Sk., 1879, and chars.

Several additional hymns to those named above have also been attributed to Miss Thrupp on thenfficient authority. This has probably arisen out of the fact that all the hymns in the Hys. for the Young, including her own, were given anonymously. [J. J.]

Thrupp, Joseph Francis, M.A., s. of a solicitor, was b. May 20, 1827, and educated at Winchester School and Trinity College, Cambridge. At Winchester he gained the Heathcote and Duncan prizes, and the Queen's gold medal for an English poem, and was Head Prefect during his last year. He graduated in 1849 as 7th Wrangler, and 11th in the 1st nom de plume af Iota; to Mrs. Herbort Mayo's
Sel. of Hys. and Postry for the use of Infant in 1849 as 7th Wrangler, and 11th in the 1st

Orders in 1852, he was appointed Vicar of Barrington, Cambridge, in 1852, and Select Preacher before the University in 1865. He was also for some time a member of the Board of Theological Studies, and was associated with the S. P. C. K. some 20 years. He d. at Surbiton, Sept. 24, 1867. His published works include An Introduction to the Study and the Use of the Psalms; A Revised Translation of the Song of Songs; Ancient Jerusalem; and Psalms and Hymns (Cambridge, Macmillan), 1853. This last contains prefaces, indices, with authors' names, 93 psalms, 236 hymns, 16 doxologies. Of these 28 psalms and 18 hymns are by Mr. Thrupp. The best known of his hymns are, "Awhile in spirit, Lord, to Thee" (p. 104, ii.); "Hail, that head, all torn and wounded"; "O Son of Man, Thyself once crossed." Mr. Thrupp's versions of individual psalms have not come into common use beyond his own collection. They are therein signed with his initials, "J. F. T.," but are not separately annotated in this Dictionary. His hymns are mainly on the special Festivals of the Church, and, in addition to those annotated elsewhere are:-

> Thy throne, O God, in righteous-ness. J. Montgomery. [For Schools.] The earliest work in which this lymn has been found is Select Portions of Po. from the New Version, Hys. and Anthems, &c., compiled by the Rev. Dr. Sutton, Vicar of Sheffield, for use in that Parish Church, circa 1815, 2nd ed. 1816, No. 103. From thence it passed into Cotterill's Sel., 1819; Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 542; and his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 343. Among modern collections it is found in the Meth. S. S. H. Bk., 1879; Major's Bk. of Praise, &c. [J. J.]

> Thy way, not mine [ours] O Lord. H. Bonar. [Besignation.] Appeared in his Hys. of Faith and Hope, 1st Series, 1857, in 7 st. of 4 l. It is sometimes given as, "Thy way, not ours, O Lord"; and as "Father, Thy way, not mine." There is also an adaptation in three stanzas, beginning, "My portion, Thou! my cup," in the American Church Pastorals, 1864. The original is in extensive use in most English-speaking countries. [J. > Τί σοι θέλεις γενέσθαι. St. Gregory Nationzen. [Private Use.] This hymn "To His own Soul," is given in his Opera, Paris, 1611: Dan. Thes. Hymn. iil. 13; and in the Anth. Grace. p. 26. Mr. Chatfield's tr. in his Songs and Hymns, &c., 1876, in 52 st. of 4 l. is from the latter, which contains 181 lines. He says of this poem, "The original is one of the most spirited pieces anywhere to be found, truly foreible and racy," p. 106. His tr., "O soul of mine, repining," is pleasing and vigorous, but not adapted to congregational use. [See Oreak Hymnody, § iv.] [J. J.]

Tibi Christe, splendor Patris. Rabanus Maurus (?). [St. Michael and all Angels.] Daniel, i. No. 189, gives the text of this hymn, and at jv. p. 165 cites it as in a Rheimau Ms. of the 11th cent. It is not however included by E. Dümmler in his ed. of the Carmina of Rabanus. Among the British Museum wss. it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. the memoir of M. Bruce (p. 118, il.). [J. J.]

It is in a ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 266); in the Bern Ms. 455, of the 10th cent.; and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from a Ms. of the 11th cent. at Durhem (B. iii. 32, f. 34). Also in Mone, No. 307; and in G. M. Drevee's Hymnarius Moissiacensis, 1888, p. 64, from a 10th cent. Ms. It is included in the older Roman (Venice, 1478), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries. In the Roman Breviary, 1632, it is recast greatly for the worse, and begins To splender at virtus Patria; and this recast is repeated in later eds. of that Breviary, in Daniel i. No. 189, and others. In some of the more recent eds. of the Roman Breviury (e.g. Kempten, 1746, and Lyons, 1852), the original form is repeated, with slight alterations to suit the festival of St. Raphael (Oct. 24); and this text is in Königefeld ii. p. 136. The author says that it is given in his Hymnal Comp. as presenting "one aspect of the Lord's Supper which is passed over in many hymnals, 'Ye do show forth the Lord's death till He come'; and also our communion with those of whem we say 'We bless Thy holy Name for all Thy servants departed this life in Thy faith and fear.' " (Note in the annotated ed. of Hy. Comp.) It is in several hymn-books. [J. J.]

Time is earnest, passing by. and New Year.] This popular Sunday School hymn appeared in three publications in the same year, and in each case anonymously. (1) It is found in Sidney Dyer's American South-western Psalmist, 1851 (p. 817, H.), and signed "Anon."; (2) again in an American paper called Independent, 1851; (3) and again, in England, in The Bible Class Magazine, 1851, with the signature "Independent," the name of the American paper from which it was taken. It was in 4 st. of 4 l. Subsequently it was reprinted in The Bible Class Magazine, with music by Mr. Joseph Dyer, the School-master of the Wesleyan School, Pocklington. Miller says (Singers & Songs, &c., 1869, p. 551) that "it also appeared in Select Music for the Young (Sunday School Union), where it is headed, 'All Things Earnest; composed by Joseph Dyer.'" This curious association of two men of the name of Dyer with the hymn, the first in America, and the second in England, has led to its authorship being stiributed at one time to Sidney Dyer, and at another to Joseph Dyer, and in each case without authority of any weight. Usually the hymn is given in an abbreviated form of 5 st. as in the Universal H. Bk., 1885, the Cong. Church Hyl., 1887, and others. [J. J.] and others.

Time is winging us away. J. Burton, sen. [New Year.] Pub. in Hys. for the Use of Sunday Schools selected from Various Authors, Nottingham, J. Dunn, 1812, No. 305, in 2 st. of 8 l., and entitled "Brevity of Life."
It has passed into a very large number of hymn-books in G. Britain and America. Of Burton's hymns it ranks next to his "Holy Bible, book divine," in popularity. [J. J.]

Tie a point I long to know. J. Newton. [In Doubt and Fear.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 119, in 9 st. of 4 l. It is in C. U. in an abbreviated form, and opening with the first line as above. In some collections it begins, "Lord, my God, I long to know"; and in others, "Could my heart so hard remain" (st. iii.). These altered forms of the text are in use principally in

"Tis enough, the hour is come. J. Merrick. [Nunc Dimittis.] This paraphrase of the Nunc Dimittis was pub. in his Peeme on Sacred Subjects, 1763, p. 13, in 22 lines. As given in Kennedy, 1863, No. 185, some of the lines are transposed, and the whole are expanded into 3 st. of 8 l.

Tis finished, the Messias dies, Cut day.] In 1762 this hymn, in 2 st. of 8 l., appeared in C. Wesley's Short Hymns, vol. ii. p. 234. These stanzes are:—

These scanness are ...

'The finished! the Messias dies,
Cut off for sins, but not His own!
Accomplished is the sacrifice,
The great redeeming work is done;
Finished the first transgression is,
And purged the guilt of actual sin,
And eventualing righteousness
Is now to all the world brought in. "Tis finish'd, all my gulit and pain, I want no accrifice beside, For me, for me, the Lamb is slain, And I am more than justified; Sin, death, and hell are now subdued, All grace is now to sinners given, And, lo, I plead th' stoning blood, For pardon, boliness, and heaven."

It is from the first four lines of this hymn that Blair formed st. iv. of his cento, "Behold the Saviour on the cross," p. 180, i. The original, as above, was given in A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, No. 223, and thus came into use in the Church of England. Charles Wesley, however, was not satisfied with these stanzas, and at his death he left in Ms. another hymn on the same text, "It is finished," in 8 st. of 4 l., of which st. i. and viii. are st. i. 11. 1-4, and st. ii. 11. 5-8 (slightly altered) respectively of the 1762 text, and st. ii.-vii. are new. This text was given in the 1830 Suppl. to the Wes. H. Bk., and again in the P. Works, 1868-72, vol. xii. p. 99.

'Tis gone, that bright and orbed blaze. J. Keble. [Evening.] Dated Nov. 25, 1820, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 14 st of 4 l, and headed with the text "Abide with us, for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. St. Luke xxiv. 29. The centes from this poem in C. U. are:-

The centes from this poem in C. U. are;—

1. Sun of my soul, Thou Baviour dear. This cento was given in three stanzas in Elicite? Ps. & Hys., 1836. This was repeated in numerous hymnals, sometimes in the same form, but usually with additional stanzas, matil it has become one of the foremost hymns in the English language. It has been ir. into several languages. Those in Latin include, "Sol animae vitaequas meas, pracinicle Sair" (4 st.), by R. Hingham, in his Hymns. Christ. Latina, 1871; and "Sol mens! O mi Sairutor! (4 st.), by H. M. Macgill, in his Songs of the Christian Greed and Life, 1876.

3. The Rulers of this Christian land. This cento, For those in authority, is in limited use.

3. Thou Frames of the light and dark. This cento for the High Court of Parliament" is in the 1863 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Ps. & Hys.; the Hy. Comp., and others, and is admirably suited for the purpose.

4. When the self down of kindly alsay. This cento for Evening was given in the Sainsbury H. Bk., 1837; the Survey heavy incore healour.

5. This year, heavy incore healour.

lis my happiness below. W. Comper. [In Affliction.] Appeared in Lady Hunting-don's Coll., 1774, No 143, in 3 st. of 8 l., and in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iit., No. 16. In the Lady Huntingdon Coll. it precedes, and in the Olney Hymns it follows Cowper's "God moves in a mysterious way" [see p. 433, i.], and seems to have been written at, or about the same time, and under the same circumstances. Its modern use is mainly confined to America where, in its full, or in an abridged form, it is somewhat popular. {J. J.}

Tis pure delight without alloy. L Watts. [Divine Love Desired.] Pub. in his Horse Lyrics, 1706, Bk. i., in 6 st. of 4 l. and headed, " Ascending to Him in Heaven." the American Meth. Episco. Hymns, 1849, and in their Hymnal, 1878, it is given with the omission of st. iv. as, "O 'tis delight without alloy." It is from the original, as above, that Watta took a portion for his hymn, "Happy the heart where graces reign."

Tis seldom we can trace the way. Sir J. Bowring. [The love of God.] This hymn is in the Plymouth Brethren Hys. for the Poor of the Flock, 1838, No. 250, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is best known as "We cannot always trace the way." In this form it was given in Dr. Walker's Cheltenham Ps. & Hys., 1855, No. 383, and signed "Bowring" in the Index. Some later collections attribute it to "Elliot;" but Millor says (Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 422) that Sir John Bowring assured him personally that it was his own composition. It is in several collections of a recent data, including Dr. Allon's Cong. Psalmist Hyl., 1886. Another form of the text in use in America is "I cannot always trace the way." It is in H. W. Beccher's Physical Coll. 1855, and some later hymn-books. [J. J.]

"It's sweet to wake at early morn. T. Davis. [Morning. Heaven anticipated.] Pub. in his Devotional Verse for a Month, 1855, p. 23, in 4 st. of 6 l. In the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, it was given as "Tis sweet on earth at early morn." In the author's Hys. Old and New, 1864, No. 5; and his Annus Sanctus, 1877, p. 194, it was given as "Tis sweet on earth to wake at morn," and this is the authorised form of the hymn.

Titius, Christoph, s. of Christoph Titius or Tietze, pastor at Wilkau, near Ramslau, in Silesia, was b. at Wilkau, May 24, 1641. He entered the St. Mary Magdalene Gymnasium, nt Breslau, in 1654, and the Aegidien (St. Giles) Gymnasium at Nürnberg, in 1660. He matriculated as a student of Theology at the University of Altdorf, in 1662. After com-pleting his studies at the University of Jens, in 1664, he acted for two years as a family tutor. On Aug. 24, 1686, he was ordained as pastor of Laubenzedel, near Gunzenhausen, in Franconia : and then became, in 1671, pastor at Henfenfeld, near Nürnberg. In 1685 he was appointed disconus at Hersbruck, near Nürnberg, became archidiaconus in June, 1701, and in Nov., 1701, was appointed chief pastor and inspector of schools. He d. at Hersbruck, Feb. 21, 1708 (Kooh, iii., 523; Wetzel, iii., 296; G. A. Will's Nürnbergisches Gelehrten-Lexicon, pt. iv. p. 34; K. Goedeke's Grandriss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 287, &c. Koch says he was b. Jan. 10, 1641, and d. Sept. 7, 1703, but gives no authority for these dates).

Titius had begun to white hymns while at the Numberg Gynnasium, and his best known hymns originated either then or during his University course. They appeared in his Sünden-Schnertzen, Trott im Hertsen, Toden-Kortsen, erwecket, enidecket, amgestocket con Christophoro Title Siletie, Theol. St., at Numberg, 1683 [Library of the Prodiger-Sominar at Hannover, with 15 hymns; in the 2nd enlarged ed. pub. as Kionnel-Reise, Secien-Specie, Rogel-Weise, de., Nürnberg, 1707 [Berlin Library], with 45 hymns; and in the 3rd further enlarged ed. pub. as Vorige until nesse Morgan-smod Abend-Catechianus . . . Leder, de., Nürnberg, 1701 [Göttingen Library] with 55 hymns. The most popular were those of the 1st ed., many of which passed into the German hymn-books of the 17th zent, and various of which are still found in recent collections. The best of them are hearty and popular in style, earnest and of them are hearty and popular in style, carnest and scriptural in tone, and sententions.

Two of Titius's hymns have passed into English, viz. :-

1. O da Behöpfer aller Diage. Holy Communion. This is a hymn of penitence before Holy Communion, and was 1st pub. in 1663, as above, as No. il., in 9 st. of 8 l. Repeated in Crüger's Pranis, Frankfurt, 1676, No. 153; but recently in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, and erroneously ascribed to Johann Heinrich Keulisch or Calisius b. 1633, at Wohlau, in Silesia; d. March 30, 1696, as chief pastor and superintendent at Galldorf, in Württemberg]. This possibly arose from the fact that in Calisius's Hausskirche, Nürnberg, 1676, p. 388, there is a hymn beginning "Odu Schüpfer aller Dinge, Dem bei dieser Morgen-Zelt," in 7 st., but it is entirely different from this hymn. Tr. as "Bow Thine ear, I now implore Thee." By Dr. H. Mills, 1845, p. 38.

il. Bolls on gleich biswellen scheinen. Cross and Consolution. His most popular hymn, 1st pub. in 1663, as No. vi., in 10 st. of 4 l., entitled "Hymn of Consolution." Included in Crüger's Praxis, 1675, the Nürnberg G. B., 1676, Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, the Berlin G. L. S., 1863, No. 856, and many others, sometimes printed as 5 st. of 8 l.

Louvenasse relates (Koch, vill. 488) that C. A. Dann, chief paster of St. Leonard's Church, at Stuttgert, having spoken somewhat freely at the funeral of one of the courtplayers, had been relegated in 1812 to the village of Oleschingen in the Swatslan Alb [in 1819 to the neighbouring village of Missingen]. The king at less gramed the earnest desire of the Stuttgart people for his return, and on Feb. 5, 1824, recalled him to Stuttgart. That night four friends walked over to Missingen, and in the safe meaning convent the news to Denni by simple. early morning conveyed the news to Danu by singing this hymn at the door of his room.

The tr. in C. U. is:-

Beems it in my anguish lone. This is a good tr., mitting st. vi., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 201; repeated in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 146. Included in full in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, and abridged in the St. Aidan's College H. Bk., 1864.

Other tra. are:—
(i) "Yea should it ev'n to man appear," This is a fr. of st. i., as st. v. of No. 1982, in the Suppl. of 1808 to the Moravian H. Bk., 1801 (1986, No. 505). (2) "Deem we sometimes, spirit-shaken." In L. Rehfuess's "Land at Ser. 1868, p. 44, only st. i., vi. being from this Τῷ Βασιλεῖ καὶ Δεσποτη. 🖇 Αναtolius. [St. Stephen.] These stichers are appointed in the Greek Service Books in the Office for St. Stephen's Day, to be sung at Vespers. The probable date is the latter part of the 8th or the beginning of the 9th cent.

[8t. Anstalius, p. 43, i.] The hymn is found in the Mensea, and the Anth. Gracea Carm.

Christ., p. 117. The tr. by J. M. Neale, "The Lord and King of all things," appeared in The Ecclesiastic and Theologian, 1853, vol. xv. p. 233, and again in a revised form in Dr. Neale's Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1862, p. 7, in 3 st. of 8 l. These texts are:—

Ecclesiastic: "The Lord and King of all things 1955, Hys. of the E. C., "The Lord and King of all things 1862." "The Lord and King of all things But yesterday was born."

Mr. Hatherly, in the 4th ed. of the Hys. of the Eastern Church, notes that "the Vespers of Dec. 27 occurring on the evening of the 26th, permits of the word 'yesterday' being used with reference to Christmas Day." [J. J.]

To Christ the Son Almighty. R. F.
Littledale. [Adult Boptism.] This is a tr. by in 4 st. of 4 l., and from thence passed, withDr. Littledale of a Syriac hymn given, together; out alteration, into the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, with a tr. into Latin, in Daniel, iii. p. 235. It appeared in the People's H., 1867, with the signature "F."

To day we're bidden to a feast. J. Cennick. [Holy Communion.] Pub. in his Socred Hys. for the Children of God, &c., 1741, No. vi., in 8 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "Before the Secrement." In a few hymn-books a cento therefrom is given as "Together with these symbols, Lord" (st. vi.). [J. J.]

To God belongs the eternal sway. J. Mer.ick. [Ps. novii.] 1st pub. in his Psalms Translated or Paraphrased in English Verse, 1765, p. 239, in 48 lines. In 1797 Merrick's Pealms were republished by W. D. Tattersali "divided into stanzus for Parochial Use," and this version was given therein in 18 st. of 4 l., two lines being added to st. vil., and two lines to st. x. to make up the required number of stanzos. In this form it is unknown to modern hymn-books. In Cotterill's Sel., 1819, Ps. 97, it is given in an abbreviated and rewritten form as, "The Lord is Kiugl let earth obey." This is given in some modern hymnals, including Kennedy, 1868, with alterations and the omission of st. ü, ш

To God most awful and most high, J. Montgomery. [In time of Scarcity.] Written for the laying of the foundation stone of a Corn Mill at Sheffleid, on Nov. 5, 1795. which was "built for the common use and benefit of the people." It was printed in Montgomery's Sheffleld Iris newspaper the same day, and signed "Paul Positive," a now de plame of the author. It subsequently appeared in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 260; Montgomory's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 532; and his Original Hymne, 1858, No. 276. In the last two it is headed, "The poor praying for bread in the time of scarcity." It is found in a few modern hymn-books. [J. J.]

To God the only wise, Our Saviour and our King. I. Waits. [Preserving Grace.] 1st pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1707 (2nd ed. 1709, Bk. i., No. 51), in 5 st, of 4 l. 1t is found in most of the early hymn-books, especially those of a Calvinistic type, as the collections of G. Whitefield, M. Madan, and others, but to modern hymnals, except in America, it is not so well known, although still found in several books. [J. J.]

To God the only wise, Who keeps us by His word. [Dozology.] This doxology, which is in somewhat extensive use in America, is usually ascribed to L Watts. One stanza only the second, "Hosannah to the Word"—is from his works, and this is altered from his o. M. doxology in Hys. and S. Songs, 1707. Stanzas i. and iil. we have not traced. The latter is 2 Cor. xiii. 14 turned into metre. (J. J.)

To God with mournful voice. Tate & Brady. [Psalm celii.] In the New Version, 1696, in 7 st. of 4 l. In 1836 it was re-written by J. Hall or E. Osler, probably the latter, and included in the Mitre H. Bk., as,

" In deep distress to God

No. 684. The version of Ps. czz. in the Mitre | H. Bk., in 3 st. of 4 l., beginning,

" In deep distress to God I cried And He aveng'd my wrongs," was by E. Osler, and is also found in his Churck and King, 1886-37, p. 137, for the 2nd Sun, after Trinity. [J. J.]

To Him that loved us for Himself. J. Mason. [Praise.] This is No. xxxiii. of his Songs of Praise, 1683, in 4 st. of 8 l. and entitled, "A Song of Praise collected from the Dexologies in the Revelation of St. John." It is very unequal in merit, some lines being very fine, whilst others are of little worth. It has, however, the elements of a splendid hymn of Praise. In modern hymnody it is known as the hymn to which Watts is supposed to have been indebted for his "Now to the Lord that makes us know" (q.v.), a sup-position which cannot be maintained. Orig. text in D. Sedgwick's reprint of Mason's Songs, 1859, p. 65.

To keep the lamp slive. W. Cooper. [In Trial and Despondency.] Pub. in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 74, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Dependence." In its original form it is in limited use. The extract from it beginning with st. iii., "Beware of Peter's word," is much more popular, and especially in America, where it appeared in Nettleton's Village Hymns, 1824.

To me a sinner, chief of all. H. Alford. [Lent.] Written for and pub. in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 191, in 4 st. of 4 l., and ogain in his Poetical Works, 5th ed., It has passed into Dale's English H. Bk., 1874; Thring's Coll., 1882, &c. [J. J.]

To me to live, let it be Christ. J. Mont-mers. [The Image of Christ.] This is gomery. [The Image of Christ.] This is dated in the M. MSS. "Aug. 30, 1835." We have not traced it in print earlier than his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 122, where it is given in 8 at. of 4 1.; but probably it was published before that date. [J, J.]

Τὸ μέγα μυστήριου. St. Andrew of Crets. [Passiontide.] This is the 3rd Ode of a Canon, containing 3 odes, found in the Compline for Great Thursday (the Thursday of Holy Week) in the Triodion, and is in 8 stauzas. It dates about 700, and was first rendered into English by Dr. Neale, and pub. in The Ecclesiastic and Theologian, 1854, p. 44, and again in his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 6 st. of 6 l. as, "O the mystery, passing wonder." In this tr, st iv. is omitted, and st. vi. and vii. are fused together. In 1863 it was included in Lyra gether. In 1800 is were miss H. Bk., and Eucharistica, and the Parish H. Bk., and subsequently in numerous collections. [J. J.]

of use. The following arrangements of the text are in several modern hymn-books :-

I. To the hills I lift my eyes. This, with the omission of st. v., was given in the Wes. H. Sh., 1800, as one of the additional hymns. It is in the revised ed., 1876, and other collections.

S. See the Lord, thy Keeper, stand. This in Martineau's Hymna, &c., 1813, is composed of si. iv., vi. ll. 1-4; ili. il. 5-5, attered.

S. God shall bless thy going out. In the American Unitarian Hys., for the Charch of Christ, 1853, No. 74, and later American collections. It is composed of st. vi. il. 1-4, and st. li. il. 5-8, attered.

This version ranks with the best of C. Wesley's renderings of the Psalms. [See G. J. Stevenson's Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883; and Paultors, English, § XVI.] [J. J.]

To the Source of every blessing. W. H. Bathurst. [Holy Trinity.] 1st pub. in his Psalms & Hymns, 1831, No. 2, in 5 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Praise to God." In 1853 it was included in the Leeds H. Bk., No. 443, and later in one or two collections. It is better known with the omission of st. i., as "Glory to the Almighty Father," as in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, No. 156, and others. [J. J.]

To Thee, O dear, dear Saviour. J. S. B. Monsell. [Rest and Peace in Jesus.] Pub. in his Hymns of Love and Praise, 1863, p. 172, in 5 st. of 8 l. In a few collections it begins "To Thee, O blessed Saviour": whilst a cento, opening with line 5 of at. ii., "O Thou Whose mercy found me" is also in C. U. as in the Scottish Presbylerian Hymnal, 1876. [J. J.]

To Thee, O God, we homage pay. P. Doddridge. [Christ, the Sun of Righteousness.] This hymn is No. viii. in the D. Mes., where it is entitled "The Sun of Righteous-bess. From Matt, iv. 2." It is in 6 st. of 4 l. Although undated, its position in the D. 1188. shows it to be circa 1734. In Job Orton's ed. of Doddridge's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 173, the text differs somewhat from the Ms. Orton's text is repeated in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the Hymns, &c., 1839, No. 194. It is in a few collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

To Thee, O Lord, our hearts we raise. W. C. Diz. [Harcest.] This hymn was given with five others at the end of the St. Raphael's (Bristol) Hys. for the Service of the Church, 1864, No. 202, in 4 st. of 8 l. By a printer's error it is accompanied by a note which really belonged to the next hymn, No. 203, "The Church of God lifts up her voice" (p. 1146, i.). In 1867 "To Thee, O Lord, &c." was given in the People's H., and since then it has passed into numerous collections, including H. A. & M., the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., Thring's Coll., and others. The fourth stanza is also given as a concluding chorus to Dr. Stainer's harvest anthem, "Ye shall dwell in the land." [J. J.]

To Thy temple I repair. J. Montgomery. [Divine Worthip.] Pub. in Collyer's Coll., 1812, No. 916, in 7 st. of 4 l., and entitled "A Salbath Hymn." It was repeated in Catally 24 1810. in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 286; in Montgomery's Christian Psolmist, 1825, No. 468; and in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 115. It ty. [Ps. exxt.] Pub. in Ps. & Hys., 1748, in 6 st. of 8 l. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. viii., and in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 115. It p. 235). In A. M. Toplady's Ps. & Hys., 1776, st. i., ii. and iv. were given with alterations, as No. 227. This cento has gone out

English H. Bk., 1874. In R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, the original, with the omission of st. v., is rendered into Latin as, "Sacratam Domini domum." [J. J.]

To us the voice of wisdom cries. J. Montgomery. [Invitation of Windom.] Appeared in Cotterill's Selection, 1819, No. 147, in 3 st. of 8 l., and entitled "The voice of Wiedom." In 1825, on its republication in Montgomery's Christian Pealmist, No. 501, it was partly rewritten, and given in 7 st. of 4 L, the title being also changed to "The Invita-tion of Wisdom." This latter text and title were repeated in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 29. It is the text in C. U. [J. J.]

To Whom but Thee, O God of grace. W. J. Irons. [Seven Words from the Cross.] In his Hys. for Use in Church, 1866, Dr. Irone included seven hymns on the words on the Cross, and repeated them in his Ps. & Hys., 1878-75, as follows :-

1. To whom but Thee, O God of grace. St. Luke gantis. 34.

2. Thy presence, Lord, is heaven to those. St. Matt. sanai. 46.

Jesu! Who for us didst bear. St. John win. 28.
 O Thou, Our God, Who bearest prayer. St. Lakes

5. Son of God in glory reigning. St. John wir. 16.
6. It is not finished! Lord of grace (1866). Lord, is it finished? God of grace (1873). St. John wir. So.
7. Faithful Creator, Lord divine. St. Luke zwii. 40.

Most of these hymns have passed into other collections, but their use is limited. [J. J.]

To whom, my Saviour, shall I go? [Clinging to Christ.] This hymn is found in the Panoplist, 1815, where it is signed "Carue." It was repeated in Nettleton's Village Hymne, &c., 1824, No. 408, in 4 st. of $1., and without signature. Subsequently peared in several collections, and amongst modern hymnels it is found in Hatfield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, and several others.

To-day the Lord our Shepherd leads, J. Montgomery. [The Good Shepherd.] Printed on a broadsheet for the use of Sheffleld Sunday School Whit-Monday gathering, June 11, 1821, in 6 st. of 4 l., and signed "J. M." There is also a copy in the m. Mes. in Montgomery's handwriting, dated "Sep. 14, 1838." The text in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 161, is slightly altered from the broadsheet of 1821. In a few collections it begins "Now may the Lord our Shepherd load.

To-day Thy mercy calls me [us]. Allen. [Invitation.] Appeared in his Hys. of the Christian Life. 1862, p. 102, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed "To-day." It is found in several collections in Great Britain and America, and sometimes altered to "To-day Thy mercy calls us," as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871. It is the most widely used of the author's hymns. [J. J.]

Toke, Emma, née Leslie, daughter of John Leelie, D.D., Bishop of Kilmore, was b. to the Rev. Nicholas Toke, Godington Park, found in the Mense. The fr. "The first of Ashford, Kent, in 1837; and d. in 1872. Mrs.

Toke's early hymna were written in 1851, "at the request of a friend who was collecting for 1867, signed "L.," and appointed for the

the Committee of the S. P. C. K." (Miller, p. 573), and they appeared in the S. P. C. R. Hymns for Pub. Worship, 1852, as follows:—

1. Glory to Thee, O Lord (see p. 429, ii.).
2. Lord, of Thy mercy, hear our cry. National Thanksgiving.

3. O Lord, in all our triels bore. Saints' Days, Conc-

5. O Lord, Thou knowest all the mares. Lent.
5. O Thou, to Whose all seeing eye. Answeriation.
6. O Thou, Who didst with love untold. St. Thomas.

7. Then art gone up on high. Accession.

The most popular of these hymns ere, "Glory to Thee, O Lord"; "O Lord, Thou knowest all the mares"; and "Thou ert gone up on high." These hymns as a whole are simple and pleasing. They seldom rise into passionate fervour, and are weakened in several instances by faulty construction. They have been widely adopted in G. Britain and Americs. Another series of hymne by Mrs. Toke was contributed to the Sunday School Liturgy . . . and Hymn Book, arranged by the Rev. B. Judd, B.A., Incumbent of St. Mary's, Halifax. Halifax, F. King, 1870. These hymns have failed to attract attention, although in literary merit they fall little short of her earlier efforts. They are :-

Jesu! by Whose Almighty Grace. St. Andrew.
 Lord God, the strength and stay of all. General.
 Lord of all power and might General.
 Lord of light and life. St. Mark.
 O Father, Whom in truth to know. SS. Philip and Jones.

12. O God of comfort, Thou alone. St. Barnabar.

14. O God of mercy, chill and dark. St. John Evang.

15. O God, the strength and stay of all. General.

16. O God, upon this solamm day. St. Mathies.

version St. Paul,

In addition to these hymns Mrs. Toke rewrote and expanded some of her earlier compositions. In their new form, however, they are almost unknown. [J. J.]

Τῶν άμαρτιῶν μου τὴν πληθὺν. St. Joseph the Hymnographer. [Lent.] This is the opening line of a cento taken from a long Canon for the Monday of the First Tone in the Paracletics. It is virtually, as compiled by Dr. Neale, a new poem, representing neither the form nor the idea of the original. Dr. Neale's tr., beginning, "And wilt Thou pardon, Lord?" was pub. in his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 5 st. of 4 1. In a slightly altered form on, "O wilt Thou pardon, Lord?" it was also given in the Parish H. Bk., 1863, and repeated subsequently in various collections. The Hymnery text opens, "And wilt Thou hear O Lord?" The original dates from the middle of the ninth cent.

[J. J.]

Τὸν ἐν προφήταις. St. Andrew of Crete. [St. John Baptist.] Three Idiomela from the Vespers of the Nativity of St. John Baptist, by St. Andrew of Crete (q. v.). The poems are in the form of an address to St. John, Festival of St. John Baptist. St. i.-v. repre-sent the 1st idiomelon, st. 6 the 2nd, and verses 7, 8 the 3rd. The doxology added by [H. L. B.] translator.

Tŵν ἰερῶν ἀθλοφόρων. St. Joseph the Hymnographer. [Martyre.] The original from which this cento is taken is the Canon (see Greek Hymnody) for the Deacon St. Timethy and his wife St. Maura, whose martyrdom is commemorated by the Church of Constanti-nople on May 3. The Office for that day is included in the service-books of the Greek Church. The tr. of this cente was made by J. M. Neslo, and first pub in his Hymns of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 4 st. of 8 l., and beginning, "Let our Choir new authems raise." As a hymn for congregational use it was included in the People's H., 1867, the 1868 Appendix to H. A. & M., and many others, and usually with the omission of st. iii., and sometimes altered, as, "Let the Church now anthems raise," and "Let the Church new anthems sing." The martyrdom of SS. Timothy and Maura has been popularized for the English reader by Canon Kingsley, in his poem "Santa Maura," and Dr. Nealo's tr. of the cento from the Canon ranks with the most popular and widely used of his trs. from the Greek. Stanzas i., ii. represent Ode i.; the remaining stanzas give rather the spirit than the letter of the original. [J. J.]

Τὸν πρὸ ἡλίου ἥλιον δύναντα ποτὲ ểν τάφφ. [Easter.] This is an Olkos, or short hymn, in honour of the holy women who brought spices to anoint the body of Jesus, and follows in the Greek Office for Easter Day, a corractor (another short hymn), by St. Romanus (q.v.), to whom, possibly because of this close association, it is sometimes ascribed. It dates probably about 500, and is found inserted between Odes vi. and vil. of the Golden Canon of St. John of Damascene in the Pentecostarion. The original text, together with a blank verse ir., are given in Dr. Littledale's Offices, &c., of the Holy Eastern Church, 1863, p. 92 and p. 216, and the same tr. rendered into 8. 7s. measure by W. Chatterton Dix, in Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 292. The two translations begin:-

Seeking as these who seek the day. R. F. Littledate. As those who seek the break of day. W. C. Dia. [J. J.]

Tonns, Charlotte Elizabeth, née Browne, commonly known as "Charlotte Elizabeth," was the only daughter of Michael Browne, Rector of St. Giles, Norwich, and was b. in Norwich, Oct. 1, 1790. She was first married to Captain George Phelan, of the 60th Rifles (who d. in 1837), and secondly to the Rev. Lewis H. Tonna. Her death took place at Ramsgate, July 12, 1846. Under the name of "Charlotte Elizabeth" she pub. several works, including Chapters on Flowers, Derry, a Tale of the Revolution, Personal Recollections, &c. Her hymns in C. U. include:--

Of these hymns Nos. 3, 4 appeared in W. Urwick's Dublin Coll, of Hys., 1829. [J. J.]

Toplady, Augustus Montague, M.A. The life of Toplady has been repeatedly and fully written, the last, a somewhat discursive and slackly put together book, yet matterful, by W. Winters (1872). Summarily, these data may be here given: he was born at Farcham, in Surrey, on November 4, 1740. His father, Richard Toplady, was a Major in the British army, and was killed at the siege of Carthagens (1741) soon after the birth of his son. His widowed mother placed him at the renowned Westminster school, London. By-andby circumstances led her to Ireland, and young Augustus was entered at Trinity College, Dublin, where he completed his academical training, ultimately graduating w.a. He also received his "now birth" in Ireland under remarkable conditions, as he himself tells us with oddly mixed humility and lofty self-estimate, as "a favourite of heaven," common to his echool :---

"Strange that I who had so long ast under the means of grace in England should be brought right unto God in an obscure part of Ircland, midst a handful of people met together in a barn, and by the ministry of one who could hardly spall his own name. Surely it was the Lord's doing and is marvollous. The excellency of such power must be of God and cannot be of man. The regenerating spirit breathes not only on whom but likewise when and where and as He listeth."

To be read own grano salis; for the present writer bappens to know that the lay preacher, a Weeleyan Methodiet, was James Morris, and his text Ephesians vi. 13; and that he was not the illiterate man Toplady's words would have us believe. Likewise he had far more brain nower than his convert, and was a born orator, though reticent and lowly-minded. Toplady received orders in the Church of England on June 6, 1762, and after some time was appointed to Broadhembury. His Psalms and Hymns of 1776 bears that he was then "B.A." and Vicar of Broadhembury. Shortly thereafter he is found in London as minister of the Chapel of the French Calvinists in Leicester Fields. He was a strong and partizan Calvinist, and not well-informed theologically outside of Calvinism. We willingly and with sense of relief leave unstirred the small thick dust of oblivion that has gathered on his controversial writings, especially his scurrilous language to John Wesley because of his Arminianism, as we do John Wesley's deplorable misunderstanding and misrepresentation of Calvinism. Throughout Toplady lacked the breadth of the divine Master's watchword "Forbid him not, for he that is not against us is for us" (St. Luke iz. 50). He was impulsive, resh-spoken, reckless in misjudgment; but a flame of gonnine devoutness burned in the fragile lamp of his over-tasked and wasted body. He d.on August 11, 1778. The last edition of his works is in 6 vols., 8vo., 1825. An accurate reproduction of most of hie genuine hymns was one of the reprints of Daniel Sedgwick 1860. His name occurs and recurs in contemporary memoirs and ecclesiastical histories, e.g., in Tyerman's Life of John Wesley. The reader will find in their places annotations on the several hymne of Toplady, and specially on his "Bock of Ages,"

Holy Father, heavenly King (1832). God Man't only Refuge.
 O God of Israel, deign to smile. For Hesignation.
 O Thou Who didst prepare. For Use at Rea.

a song of grace that has given him a deeper and more inward place in millions of human bearts from generation to generation than almost any other hymnologist of our country, not excepting Charles Wesley. Besides the "Rock of Ages" must be named for power, intensity, and higher affatus and nicer workmanship, "Object of my first desire," and "Deathless principle arise." It is to be regretted that the latter has not been more widely accepted. It is strong, firm, stirring, and masteriul. Regarded critically, it must be stated that the affectionateness with which Toplady is named, and the glow and passion of his faith and life, and yearning after holiness, have led to an over-exaltation of him as a hymn-writer. Many of his hymns have been widely used, and especially in America, and in the Evangelical hymn-books of the Church of England. Year by year, however, the number in use is becoming less. The reason is soon found. He is no poet or inspired singer. He climbs no heights. He sounds no depths. He has more vanishing gleams of imaginative light. His greatness is the greatness of good-ness. He is a fervent preacher, not a bard. [A. B. G.]

All these hymns, together with "O precious blood, O glorious death" (Death of Christ), are in D. Sedgwick's reprint of Toplady's Hymns, &c., 1860. We have met with several other hymns to which Toplady's name is appended, but for this we can find no authority [J. J.]

Toss'd with rough winds, and faint with fear. Elizabeth Charles, nee Bundle. [Consolation in Affliction.] Appeared in her Three Wakings, &c., 1859, p. 190. It was given in an abbreviated form of 6 st. of 8 l., and the refrain, "'Tis I, be not afraid," in the Hy. Comp., 1870, and again in other collections. The slight change in the text of st. iii. was made by Mrs. Charles.

Tourneux, Nicolas le, was bern of poor parents at Rouen, April 30, 1640. The un-common ability he displayed at an early age attracted the notice of M. du Fosset, Maitre des Comptes at Rouen, who sent him to the Jesuits' college at Paris, where he made remarkable progress in his studies. He then retired to Toursine, where he passed some time with a pious coclesiastic in the practice of prayer and penitential exercises. His friend, observing that he had a gift for preaching, advised him to return to Rouen. This he did, and adopted the clerical profession, and was in 1662 admitted to priests' orders by special dispensation, though still under canonical age. He subsequently removed to Paris, where he employed his time in study, and in 1675 obtained the prize given by the French Academy for press composition. He was appointed to a canonry at the Sainte-Chapelle, and later became prior of Villiers sur Fere in the diocese of Soissons, and d. suddenly on the 28th Nov., 1686. He was the author of several theological and religious works, and wrote some hymns [see Index of Authors and Translators], which were inserted in the Clusiae Breviary of 1686, and the Paris Breviary of 1680. In the Clumiae Brev., 1686, his signature is "N.T.P.B." [G. A. C.]

Tract. Verses of Holy Scripture, originally always of the Psalma, sung after the Gradual instead of the Allebria, in all masses from Septuagesima till Easter Eve in the Roman liturgy. The Tract was so called either be-cause it was sung "tractim" by the cantor or cantors, without the interruption of other voices or because, according to Durandus, it was sung in a slow, sad voice. In some of the later English Missals the Tract assumed a metrical form, as e.g. the following :-

" Duke nomen Jesu Christi, Fellx omen ferens tristi Joeundana menteem jubilo : Tollit luctum, affect fructum, Et obductum et seductum Purget cor a nubilo. Tam peccatum quam reatum Condonatum, expurgatum, Reddit mulcons leniter Hostes ferit, mores serit, Mula terit, graves gerit, Plenum est pracidium ; Nos defendit, nos accendit, Nos intendit, et extendit Roc nomen in gaudium. Nominatum, invocatium, Honoratum, praedicatum Semper sonat dulciter."

This Tract in the Masses of the Name of Jesus is found in three Ms. Missals now in the Bodleian, viz., a Sarum (Barlow 5), a York (Univ. Coll.), and a Hereford (Univ. Coll.), each dating about the end of the 14th cent. [F. E. W.]

Tregelles, Samuel Prideaux, LL.D., 8. of a Quaker, was b. at Wodehouse Place, Falmouth, Cornwall, Jan. 20 (sometimes dated Jan. 30), 1813, and educated at the Falmouth Grammar School. From 1838 to 1844, he was employed in the Neath Abbey Iron Works. In 1836 he became a private tutor in Falmouth. His deep interest in biblical studies developed in an earnest desire to produce the most perfect edition of the Greek Testament it was possible to publish. The first specimens of his work were pub. in 1838, and the first instalments of his task for public use, in 1844. His Greek Testament thus begun was pub. in parts, Pt. vi. appearing in 1872. The work was hindered by his two attacks of paralysis (1861 and 1870); and the Prolegomena had to be added by Dr. Hort and A. W. Strenne in 1879. Dr. Tregelles received a Civil List Penaion for some years. He was one of the Revisers of the New Testament, but ill-health prevented him from taking an active part in the work. He d. at Plymouth April 24, 1875. His bymu-writing began, so far as we can gather, before 1837, and extended to 1861 or later. The earliest were pub. in the Plymouth Brethren's Hymns for the Poor of the Flock, 1838; their Pealms, Hymns, and Spiritual Songs, 1842; and their Few Hymns and some Spiritual Songs, selected, 1856. Some also were contributed to Dr. P. Maurice's Ch. of England Choral Hymn-Book, 1861, in which they are marked as having been supplied in "ma." Some of those so marked were, however, in print before. His hymns now in C. U. include the following, the date of each as given being that of the collection named in which it appeared :-

1. Father, we Thy children bless Thee, Thanks-giving for Divine Mercies; and the Second Advent (1835). In the Few Hymns of 1866, at. tv., v. were given as No. 310, "Father, O how vant the blessing."

The use of Dr. Tregelles's hymns is mainly confined to the Plymouth Brethren; and taken as a whole they are marked by no etcking features of excellence. [J, J.]

Trench, Richard Chenevix, p.p., was b. in North Frederick Street, Dublin, on Sept. 9th, 1807, during a visit of his parents of some months to Ireland. His father was Richard Trench, 6th son of Frederick Trench, of Woodlands, co. Galway; his mother Melesina, only grandchild and heiress of Richard Chenevix. Bishop of Waterford, and widow of Colonel St. George. On his mother's side he was almost purely French, the grandfather of Bishop Chenevix of Waterford, Philip Chenevix of d'Eply of Lorsine having only taken refuge in England on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. The Huguenot refuges families married for a long time within themcelves, and in Mrs. Richard Trench, four distinet foreign strains were blended. Her sons (the Archbishop and his brothers, besides his two sisters) were the only descendants of the Refugee Philip, either in the male or female line, all the other branches having come to an end. Trench's home in childhood was Elm Lodge, close to the village of Bursledon, not far from Southampton. In February, 1816 he proceeded to Twyford School, and in 1819 to Harrow, where he won great distinction. In October 1825 he was entered at Trinity College, Cambridge. His mother's correspondence is full of references to a little periodical called The Translator, begun in 1825, or immediately on his becoming an under-graduate. She was his ardent co-worker both as contributor and critic. In 1826 he had acquired Spanish, and in that year applied himself to preparing and publishing a volume of Miscellanies, of which the "profits were to be sent to the committee formed for the relief of the exiled Spaniards." On May 27th, 1827, his mother died at Malvern. The Letters and Memorials (1888) give vivid and exciting details of his continuous interest and daring personal service and sacrifices on behalf of Spain. It was during the winter days of 1829-30 that the consultations and schemes respecting Spain were discussed in John Sterling's aportment. Robert Boyd, Trench's cousin, threw himself and his entire fortune into the plot by purchasing a small ship in the Themes and storing it with arms, in which General Torrijos and fifty picked Spaniards were to sail for the new adventure of the Golden Fleece. The enterprise ended tragically. Boyd and others perished by the inevitable vengeance of the Spanish covereign when captured. By the hand of God, Treuch was safe in Gibraltar. Till far up in young manhood he was undecided as to his calling, Law rather than Divi- ! nity colouring his thoughts and plans. He left Cambridge on February 1st, 1829, and rejoined his widowed father at Elm Lodge, near Southampton. He married, at the Abbey Church, Bath, on May 31st, 1832, his own cousin, Frances Mary Trench, daughter of his uncle, Francis Trench (2nd son of Frederick Trench, of Woodlawn, co. Galway, Iroland, and next brother to the 1st Lord Ashtown). On October 7th, 1892, he received Dencon's Orders in Norwich Cathedral at the hands of the aged Bishop Bathurst of Norwich. His first curacy was at Hadleigh, Norfolk, with H. J. Rose. He was ordained priest early in July, 1835, by Bishop Sumner, of Winchester. He pub. in 1835 The Story of Justin Martyr, and other Poems (Moxon). This was (practically) his first book. In 1838 followed Sabbation, Honor Neale, and other Poems, with Notes. In 1840 appeared his first prose work, Notes on the Parables of our Lord, subsequently companioned with Notes on the Miracles of our Lord (1846). In 1841 "the loving discipline of pain" visited his heart and hearth by the death of his eldest born, a deep sorrow which gave its subtlest and finest inspiration to his Elegiae Poems. A third volume of poetry, Poems from Eastern Sources, the Steadfast Prince, and other Poems, was pub. early in 1842; and a fourth, Genoveva, later in the same year. Early in 1843 he delivered his Five Sermons before the University of Cambridge, pub. in 1844. In 1844 also was pub. Exposition of the Sermon on the Mount, drawn from the Writings of St. Augustine, with Observalions. In this same year he became Vicar of Itchen Stoke. In 1845 he delivered a lecture "On Language as an instrument of Knowledge," which expanded into his famous and suggestive Study of Words. In 1846 he was appointed Professor of Divinity at King's College, London, later changed into "Professor of the Exegesis of the New Testament," which he held until 1858. The friendship between Trench and Maurice here was very beautiful. In 1846 also came the Hulsean Lectures, their subject being Christ "the Desire of all Nations." In 1849 appeared his Secred Latin Poetry. This is an inestimable book. In 1852, Lessons on Proverbs and Study of Words, and in 1855 English Past and Present appeared. His Synonyms of the New Testaappeared. Its Synonyms of the New Yesta-ment (1854) was a permanent contribution and inspiration to Philology and Theology. Life's Dream: the Great Theatre of the World, from the Spanish of Calderon, with an Essay on his Life and Genius, was pub. in 1856; 2nd ed. in 1880. The Crimean war drew from him his finest verse, Poems written during the Russian War (1854-55). In 1856 he was appointed Dean of Westminster. In 1861 was pub. his Commentary on the Epistles to the Seven Churches in Asia. On New Year's Day, 1864, he was consecrated Archbishop of Dublin in Christ Church Cathedral. He instantly took a foremost place in the regard of the entire community. His pub. Sermons, including his Studies on the Gospels (1867), are amongst the most thoughtful and quietly elequent in our language; as are his Lectures on Plutarch (1873), and others. Timolem (1881) was his last poem. His final confirmation was in trophenes of Smyrns, p. 732, L]

Troparia. [Tpondp:ov.] [Greek Hymnody, § xvi. 10.]

Troparium. The Tropary was a mediaeval service-book, of which specimens exist from the 9th century onwards. It contained the Tropitage or farses profixed to or inserted into the Introit, Kyries and other choral parts of the service. It also contained the Sequences or Prosue ad Sequentiam, an extension of the last syllable of the Allcluia preceding the Gospel. These non-scriptural and complicated additions to the Ordinary and Canon of the Mass mostly fell out of use in the thirteenth century. These which survived became incorporated in the Gradual or Missal. But the word Troparium still appears from the 13-16th century, with an aftered meaning, as a book merely containing the Sequences. A 15th cent.

c. 90), imperfect at the commencement. contains 101 Sequences, and snother Bodleian Ms. of the same date (Laud, Misc. 524) contains 65. See also Brit. Mus. Ms. Add. 8902, 15th cent., and article on Sequences. [F. E. W.]

Trope. Tropes were short verses prefixed. or added to, or introduced into the middle of the Introit, Gloria in Excelsis, and other choral parts of High Mass, and added much to the intricacy of the service. They were certainly in use in the tenth century, perhaps earlier, but they were entirely excised from the Roman Missal in the revision under Pius V. They seem occasionally to have taken a metrical shape. The following, given as among the Tropes in an ancient English Troparium for the recently baptized, at Easter or Pentecost, is an instance.

" Audite vocem hymni Qui estis vere digni In hac beuta nocte Conscendita ad fontem," etc. Pamelius Liturgiem, il. 816. [F. E. W.]

Tu Trinitatis Unitas. St. Gregory the Great? [Friday. Morning.] (St. ii. is "Jam [Nam] lectule consurginus.") Mone, No. 279, and i. p. 372, gives this as probably by St. Gregory (it is not assigned to him by the Benodictine editors), and cites it as in a ms. of the 8th cent. at Trier, one of the 9th cent., also at Trier, &c. By Hinomar in his De und et non trina Deltate, 857, it is ascribed to St. Ambroso; but it is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors nor by Biraghi in his Inni sinceri e Carmi de Sant Ambrogio, 1862. Daniel gives the text at i. No. 25, and at iv. p. 38 cites it as in a Rheinau Ms. of the 10th cent. ranking it as one of the hymns of the 7th or 8th cent. Among the British Museum ass, it is found in three 11th cent, Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 22; Jul. A. vi. f. 28 ; Horl. 2961 f. 224); in an 11th cent. Mozarabic Hymnarium (Add. 30851 f. 174 b), an 11th cent. Mozarabic Breviary (Add. 30848 f. 78 b), &c. It is in a ma of the 11th cent, at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, page 236); in two mas. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall, Nos. 387, 413; and in the Latin Hyp. of the Anglo-Soxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent, ma, at Durham (B. iii. 32 f. 8 b). It is included in the Roman (Venice, 1478, and the revision of 1682), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1648, and other Breviaries, as a hymn on Friday at Matins and Nocturns. The text is also in Wackernagel i., No. 6, Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 54; in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Moissiacensis, 1888, from a 10th cent. Tuba Domini, Paule, maxima. Peter Abelard. [Conversion of St. Paul.] Cousin in his ed. of Abelard's Opera, Paris, 1849, vol. i. p. 320, gives this from a Ms. in the Royal Library at Brussels. This us. is of the 12th cent and is probably the collection of hymns which Abelard prepared for the use of the Abbey of the Paraclete, of which Heloise was abbess. The text is given with full notes in Trench, ed. 1864, p. 207. Also in Neale's Sequentiae, 1852, p. 98, Daniel v. p. 234, and Kehrein, No. 385. It is tr. as "Mightiest of our militant Lord," in the Monthly Packet, 1869. The tr. which in some copies of the Hy. Noted is marked as from this hymn, is really from the "Paule doctor egregie": (J. M.) D. 897. 1.

Turner, Daniel, M.A., was b. at Blackwater Park, near St. Albans, March 1, 1710. Having received a good classical education, he for some years kept a boarding-school at Hernel Hempstead, but in 1741 he became postor of the Baptist church, Reading. Thence he removed, in 1748, to Abingdon, and continued pastor of the Baptist church there until his death on Sept. 5, 1798. He was much respected throughout his denomination, and was the friend and correspondent of Robert Robinson, Dr. Rippon, and other eminent men of that day. He probably received the honorary degree of M.A. from the Baptist College, Providence, Rhode Island. Turner was the author of works on Open Communion and Social Religion; also of Short Meditations on Select Portions of Scripture. His Divine Songs, Hymns and other Poems were pub. in 1747, and bis work, Poems Devotional and Moral, was printed for private circulation in 1794. Four of his hymns are in the Bristol Bap. Coll. of Ash & Evans (1769), and eight (including the four already named) in Rippon's Bap. Sel. 1787). Only the following are now in C. U.;—

1. Faith adds new charms to earthly bliss (1789). Excellence of Faith.
2. Jeens, fall of all compassion (1769). Sinner's appeal to Carlst.
3. Lord of hosts, how lovely fair (1787). Divina Worship. Altered in Raptist Ps. and Hymns, 1868, to "Lord of hosts, how bright, how fair!"

The well-known hymn "Beyond the glittering starry skies," in its enlarged form of 28 stanzas, was the joint production of Turner and his brother-in-law, the Rev. J. Fanch, for details of which see p. 189, ii. [W. R. S.]

Turney, Edward, p.p., an American Baptist minister, was b at Easton (then Weston), Connecticut, May 6, 1816, and graduated at Madison University, New York He was successively paster at Hartford and at Granville, Ohio (1842-47); Professor of Biblical Criticism, Madison University, 1850, and also of Biblical Literature at Fairmount Theological Seminary, Cincinnati (1853-58). Subsequently he taught in Washington, District of Columbia. He d. at Washington, Sept. 28, 1872. He pub. Baptismal Hymns, 1862, and Memorial Poems and Hymns, 1864. Of these hymns the following ere in C. U.:—

1. Blessed Jesus, blessed Jesus. Peace and Rest in Jesus.

 Come to Jesus, little one (1989). Invitation.

Tuttiett, Lawrence, s. of John Tuttiett, surgeon in the R.N., was b. at Cleyton, Devenshire, in 1825, and educated at Christ's Hospital, and King's College, London. was originally purposed that he should follow the medical profession, but, abandoning it for the ministry, he took Holy Orders in 1848. In 1854 he became vicar of Lea Marston, Warwickshire; and in 1870 incumbent of the Episcopal Church of St. Andrews, Scotland. He was also preferred to a prebendaryship in St. Ninian's Cathedral, Perth, in 1880. He is the author of several manuals of prayers, pubby the S. P. C. K., and other prose works, and also of:⊢

(1) Hymns for Churchmen, 1854; (2) Counsels of a Godfather, 1861; (3) Hymns for the Children of the Church, 1862; (4) Germs of Thought on the Sunday Services, 1864; (8) Through the Clouds; Thoughts in Plain Verse, 1866.

From those works and other sources the following hymne have come into C. U.:-

12. When the world is brightest. Liteny to the Saviour. Pub. in his Through the Clouds, &c., 1866, in 10 st. of 6 1., with the note:—"Those words were written for the music of a Roman Liteny' Ave Stella Maris."

This Liteny is in extensive use. This Litany is in extensive use.

13. Who is this? the long expected. Advent.

In addition to these, several of Mr. Tuttiett's hymns are annotated under their respective first lines (see Intex of Authors and Translators), the most popular of which are, "Father, let me dedicate"; "Go forward, Christian soldier"; and "O quickly come, dread Judge of all." Mr. Tuttiett's hymns are characterised by smoothness of rhythm, directness of aim, simplicity of language, and deep sermestness. Those for special services and seasons are of great merit. He d. Twas on that night when doomed to know. John Morison. [Holy Communion.] First appeared as No. 35 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, in 6 st. of 4 L, as a version of Matt. xxvi. 26-29. Here et. iv. II. 1, 2, read : -

"Then taking in his hands the cup, To Heav'n again be thanks sent up."

The rewriting of these lines was the only change made in the public worship ed. issued in that year to the Church of Scotland, and still in use. The hymn bears a close resemblance to a Latin hymn, beginning, "Nocte qua Christus rabidis Apellia" (Private Prayers, p. 405, Parker Society, 1851, quoted in full in the notes to the larger ed. of the Free Church H. Bk., 1882), by Andrew El-linger, who was b. 1526 at Orlamunde, on the Saale, a little above Jens, and d. March 12, 1582, at Jena, where he had become Professor of Medicine in 1569. Mr. William Bonar, of London, considered it a tr. from Ellinger by William Archibald (ordained parish minister of Unst, Shetland, in 1735, d. there March 7, 1785), and that Archibald's text was altered by Morison for the Translations and Paraphrases. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.), it is ascribed to Morison. It is very generally used in Scotland as a Communion hymn. Included in Burgess & Money's Ps. & Hys., 1857; Common Praise, 1879; Church Praise, 1883, and other collections; and in full and unaltered, as No. 35 in the Free Church H. Bk., 1862. The resemblance to Watts's "Twas on that dark and deleful night," in his Hymns, 1709, Bk. iii., No. 1, often referred to, is but slight. (J. M.)

*Twas silence in Thy temple, Lord. J. Keble. [Ordination.] Dated March 28, 1828, and pub. in the 4th ed. of his Christian Year, 1828, in 13 st. of 4 l. The following ceutes therefrom are in C. U.:-

I. Spirit of Christ, Thine carnest given (st. viil.). In Horder's Cong. Hysics, 1884.

5. Spirit of Ubrist, be earmost given (st. vill.). In the Cong. Church Hysics, 1887.

8. Spirit of Light and Truth, to Theo (st. x.). In the Bapt. Ft. & Hys., 1858; the New Cong. H. Sk., 1859, and others.

It is somewhat curious to note that whilst this poem has been thus made use of by Nonconformists, the Church of England, upon whose Office for Ordination it is based, has utterly ignored it in her hymnody for public

Twells, Henry, M.A., was b. in 1823, and educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge. S.A. 1848, M.A. 1851. Taking Holy Orders in 1849, he was successively Curate of Great Berkhamsted, 1849-51; Sub-Vicar of Strat-ford-on-Avon, 1851-54; Master of St. Andrew's House School, Mells, Somerset, 1854-56; and | longer in use. He was also the author of a Head Master of Godolphin School, Hammersmith, 1856-70. In 1870 he was preferred to the Rectory of Baldock, Herts, and in 1871 to that of Waitham-on-the Wolds. He was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1873-74, and became an Honorary Canon of Peterborough Cathedral in 1884. Canon Twells is best known by his beautiful evening hymn, "At even ere the sun was set" (p. 84, ii.). Heake contributed the following hymns to the 1889 Suppl. Hys. to H. A. & M.

1. Glorious is Thy Name, O Lord. The Name of God.

2. Know ye the Lord bath borne away? Ascension.
3. Not for our sine alone. Plea for Divine Mercy.
4. The voice of God's Creation found me. The Word. of God a Light.

Two brothers freely cast their lot. Card. Neuman. [SS. James and John.] Written at sea, June 22, 1833, and printed anonymously in the British Magazine, 1835, vol. vii. p. 661, in 4 st. of 4 l. It was repeated in Lyra Apostolica, 1836, p. 31, and again in Card. Newman's Verses on Various Occasions, 1868. Usually in modern collections it is appropriated to St. James, and a doxology is usually added, as in the Wellington College H. Bk., 1860, or as in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymne, 1871. [J. J.]

Two clouds before the summer gale. J. Keble. [St. Luke.] Written April 6, 1822, and 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 20 st. of 41. It is also given in all subsequent editions of the same work. In 1854 a centofrom this poom, consisting of st. fx.-xii., xix. and xx. were given with slight alterations, in Hys. for the Christian Seasons, pub. at Gainsburgh, No. 148, as, "Behold and see Christ's chosen saint." This cento is also given in the same form in Chope's Hymnal, 1862. [J. J.]

Tye, Christopher, Mus. n., b. at Westminster in the reign of Henry VIII. He was celebrated as a musician, and was granted the degree of mus. D. at Cambridge in 1545. He was musical tutor to King Edward vi., and organist of the Chapel Royal under Queen Elizabeth. Besides composing numerous authems, he rendered the first fourteen chapters of the Acts of the Apostles into metre, which were set to music by him and sung in Edward 6th's Chapel, and pub. in 1553. Tyers, John, was b. at Wymeswold, in Leicestershire, Oct. 14, 1788. For a number of years in the earlier part of his life he lived at Loughborough, where he was in business as a lace manufacturer. In 1885 he removed to Lelcester, where he d. Sept. 11, 1848. Mr. Tyers was a General Baptist, widely known and much respected, and though never the paster of a church, was often engaged in preaching. Seven of his hymns are in the 1830 Appendix to the General Baptist Hymnbook, and two as below in the Baptist Hymnal, 1879 :-

1. Come, Holy Spirit, from the throne. The Holy Spirit.

2. Great God, avow this house Thine own. Opening a Place of Worship.

Besides these Mr. Tyers wrote a number of hymns for Sunday Schools, which appeared in the school hymn books of his day, but are no

Tymms, Thomas Vincent, was b. in Westminster, Jan. 5, 1842. After being educated for the Baptist ministry in Regent's Park College, London, he became, in 1865, paster at Berwick-upon-Tweed. Thence, in 1868, he removed to Accrington, and in 1869 to Lendon, where he now ministers to an influential congregation in the Downs Chapel, Clapton. In 1885 Mr. Tymms published an able book entitled The Mystery of God; a con-sideration of some intellectual hindrances to Faith (2nd ed. 1886; a 3rd ed. 1887). Mr. Tymms has written several hymns, which have been printed in the 1880 Supplement to the Bap. Psalms and Hymns, and in the Bap. Ps. and Hys. for School and Home, 1882:--

Another Sabbath ended (1866). Sunday Evening.
 In Shiloh, where Thine ark was stored (1881).
 Prayer to the God of Samuel.
 O Lord of glory, he my light (1882). Incocation.
 Lord, I read of tender mercy (1882). Tenderness

Of these hymns, No. 4, originally in 7 st. of 4 L, was altered and abridged to 5 st. in the Bap. Ps. and Hys. for School and Home. The original st. v.-vii. are:—

5. "But I've waited for some clearer Token from Thy throne,
Some permission whispered unto Me alone. 7. " Lord, receive me to Thy Klugdom Nor, my gift decline;

Let Thy Spirit softly whisper
Thou art mine." [W. R. S.]

Ultricibus nos undique. C. Coffin, Offrictous nos unchque. C. Cogm. [Friday.] Appeared in the Paris Breviary, 1736, and again in Coffin's Hymni Sacrt, of the same year, p. 27. In the Paris and other French Brevs, it is the hymn for Fridays at Lauds from Trinity to Advent. The text is in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1827. No. 20, and Card Newman's Hymni 1827. 1837, No. 80, and Card. Newman's Hymri Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as:--

1. While Thine avenging arrows fall. By I. Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Breviary, 1839, p. 35, and again with alterations as "Lord, while Thy chastening arrows fall," in the Hypenary, 1872.

2. Lord, when Thine averaging dart. By G. Rorison, in his Hys. and Anthems, 1851, No. 58. In the 1869 Appendix to the same No. 307, the last 4 st. are given as "Lord, Thy chastoning hand we fear."

Other tre. ere :-

'Υμνώμεν κούρον νύμφας, Symmius. Bp. of Ptolemais. [Christmas.] This is hymn v. of the ten hymns which he wrote at various periods of his life, and dates 375-430. It opens as a hymn for the Nativity, but expands into a prayer to Christ in the fulness of His glory. The Greek text is found in the Anth. Greece Corm. Christ., 1871. From this Mr. Chatfield's tr.:- "Awake, our lute, the child to sing" was made, and first pub. in his Bongs and Hymns, &c., 1876, in 18 st. of 4 l. [See Greek Hymnody, § v.]

'Υμνουμέν σου Χριστὲ, τὸ σωτήριον $\Pi d\theta o \varsigma$. [Easter.] The author of these "four Resurrection Stichers of the Octoechus" is unknown. They are found in the Office for the "Sunday of Easter," as reprinted by Dr. Littledale in his Offices of the Holy Eastern Church, 1863, p. 95, together with a blank verse tr. at p. 220. This latter has been re-written by W. Chatterion Dix, and included in the Lyra Messianica, 1864, p. 277: "Christ, we sing Thy saving pession." This was repeated in the People's H., 1867. [J. J.]

Uncta Crux Dei cruore. Jean Baptiste de Santeiil. [Holy Cross.] This is a cento from three of his hymns, viz. (1) "Luce quanta ee sub una;" (2) "Publici fontens salutis;" and (3) "Totins fons sanctiatis"—all given in his Hymns Sacri et Novi, 1638, pp. 98-96. It was appointed in the revised Paris Brev., 1736, as the hymn at Laude at the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. Tr. as "With the precious blood anointed" by "Sister M." for the Lyra Eucharistica, 1863, p. 46. Repeated in the People's H., 1867, and marked as from "Uncta Dei Crux cruore."

Under Thy wings, my God, I rest. Anna L. Waring. [Trust in God.] 1st pub. in her Hys. and Meditations, 1850, No. xv., in 5 st. of 4 L, and based upon the words "I will trust in the covert of Thy wings," Ps. lxi. 4. In the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, it is given as, "Beneath Thy wings, O God, I rest." [J. J.]

Ungrateful sinners, whence this scorn? P. Doddridge. [Despising Divine Mercy.] This hymn is No. 72 in the D. MSS., headed, "Of despising Divine Mercy, and treasuring up Wrath. From Rom. ii. 4, 5." In Job Ordon's posthumous edition of Doddridge Humas to 1755 the property and dridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, the same text and heading were given as No. 258; and in J. D. Humphreys's cd. of the same, 1839, No. 288. This hymn was given, with slight changes, in the 1745 Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, from a ms. described under Dodardge, P., in Various. In the authorized issue of the Tre. and Paraphs., 1781, the 1745 text was recast, viz., st. i. from 1745; st. ii. from 1745, with scorn for "spurn"; st. iii. from the 1751 Draft; st. iv. new; st. v. Dod-dridge rewritten; st. vi. new. According to the marked list by the eldest daughter of Cameron (p. 200, il.) this final form of the hymn was by Comeron. [J. J.]

Unheard the dews around me fall. [Peace amid silence.] This hymn appeared anonymously in Dr. G. W. Brigge's (Unitarian) Hys. for Pub. Worship, Boston, 1845, in 4 st. of 4 l. It was repeated in Hedge and Huntington's Hys. for the Church of Christ, 1853, and later American collections; and in Martineau's Hymne, &c., 1873. In Stopford A. Brocke's Christian Hys., 1881, No. 177, it is alightly altered, and another stanza (iv.) is added. This text is repeated in Horder's Cong. Hye., 1884, No. 438. [J. J.]

Unitarian Hymnody, Scottish. Scottish Hymnody, p. 1033, i.

Unitarian Hymnody, Welsh. (Welsh Hymnody.]

Unitarian Hymnody.—For the right understanding of English Unitarian Hymnody a few words of historical introduction are needed.

1. The Euglish Presbyterians, after close fellowship with the Independents during the early decades of last century, gradually moved into a separate position. Through force of circumstances they had become as much congregational in their system of church government as their neighbours, but after the Salters' Half controversy of 1719 they were more and more confirmed in the principle of non-sub-scription to any formulated statement of belief, the Bible only being their standard of authority in matters of doctrine. The consequence was that while the Independents at the close of the century occupied much the same dectrinal position as at the beginning, the Presbyterians had passed through various Their original Calvinism had been changes. abandoned for a form of Arminian doctrine, and then, through the influence of such men as Locke and Dr. Samuel Clarke (their teachers, though not of their fellowship), they gradually adopted the scheme of Arianism. This was held in various degrees of precision, until it passed into Unitarianism, as in the person of Dr. Priestley and those who thought with him, towards the close of the century. A similar change had taken place in a portion of the General Baptist churches, especially in the south of England, and those two groups of non-subscribing congregations were naturally drawn together by their common sympathies. Then there was the congregation of Unitarious organised in Essex Street Chapel, London, by Theophilus Lindsoy, on his leaving the Church of England, as early as 1774; and to these have been added during the present century other congregations, either through doctrinal development (as with cartain Methodist Societies under Joseph Cooke, early in the century, or later through the influence of Joseph Barker), or through freeli missionary effort on the part of established societies of Unitarians. (Cf. Rev. J. J. Tayler's Retro-spect of the Religious Life of England, chap. 5 and 5, and Rev. Brooke Heriord's Story of effort on the part of established societies of Unitarians. (Cf. Rev. J. J. Tayler's Retropect of the Religious Life of England, chap. 3 and 5, and Rev. Brooke Herford's Story of Religion in England, chap. 30, 82 and 33.) In Wales and Iroland there are also similar groups of non-subscribing churches, in which Unitarianism is now the prevailing doctrine. Taken together, all these are popularly known as the Unitarian body of this country, but it is a body which has not always been Unitarian, and is in fact a group of Free Churches which hold to the fundamental principle of the liberty of prophesying, and impose no restraint of formulated creed on further doc-trinal development. It is of the hymn-books and hymn-writers of this group of churches, various in their origin, but united in their broad principles, that the present article is to speak. [See also references to special articles on p. 1191, i.]

2. The marked individualism which from early times has characterised the members of these churches appears also in their hymnbooks. From the time when the various departures from the use of Dr. Watts began, about the middle of the last century, to our own day, there has been a long succession of books, often two or three appearing in a single year; and although occasionally a book has made its way into very general use, there has never been any one recognised hymnal of the whole body of churches. The Psalms and Hymns of Dr. Watts were as popular for some time with the Presbyterians as with the Independents. The Psalms on their anpearance, quickly superseded the books previously used, and in many congregations remained in use even to the close of last century. when various other books had already been provided. These others had their origin at first in the needs of special congregations. As the doctrinal movement into Arianism became more decided, and as Watts himself had not lived to make that revision of his work, which his own reported change of opinions would have required, ministers of Presbyterian congregations in various parts of the country took in hand to supply the want. They either made a selection from Watts, with the necessary alterations, or compiled a supplement to the Psalms from his hymns and other sources, or made an entirely new collection, in which, while Watts remained predominant, his pealms and hymns were mingled with those of other writers. This last was the course most froquently adopted.

3. Thus in 1757 there appeared

A Collection of Praims and Hymns for Divine Worthip, London, Printed and sold by J. Koon, at the White Hart, in Cheapside, near the Positry; James Waugh, at the Turk's feed, Lomburd Breet; and Aaron Tuur, in at the Turk's ikead, Lomburd Sirect; and Across Turer, in States. This was a collection of 218 psalms and hydros, the authors in addition to Watts being Addison, Tase & Brady, Browne & Doddridge. It is said to have been edited by Rev. Micasia Torogood, Arian Minister of James's Meeting. Exeter, and was certainly used by his congregation. A second ed., enlarged to 346 psalms and hymnos, was printed in 1779, by W. Grigg, at Exeter. In the year following the first appearance of this book, it was reprinted with alterations and additions for the Presbyterian congregation of Lowin's Mean, Bristot.

In 1760 the Rev. Michael Pope, minister of the Leather Lane Meeting, in London, followed the same example, though in more independent fashion. His book is outitled alterations and omissions from the pealms and hymns of Watte and others, due to the editor's Arianism, or to his poetical taste, are considerable.

A similar, though smaller collection, appeared in Liverpool in 1764, edited by Revs. John Breckell and W. Enfield, ministers of the Key Street and Benu's Garden chapels respectively:-

A New Collection of Psalms proper for Christian Worship, in Three Parts. I. Psalms of David, &c. II. Psalms of Praise to God. III. Psalms on Various Sub-jects. Liverpool. Printed in the Year 1844. There are 242 pealms, more than half by Wotts, and in addition to 243 pasima, more than half by Wotts, and in addition to rameg mentioned above, Gibbona, Carter, Rows, Cotton, Ogitvis, Heginbotham, and Steele, are represented. There were later editions in 1767 and 1770; in 1787 a new edition was printed (for 5. Gore), with 80 pasims added to the third part, including some by Mrs. Barbauld and T. Scott. This edition, entitled merely A Collection of Panins, &c., was reprinted in 1788 and 1806. A few years after it was superseded by new collections separately made for each of the two congregations.

Hymns for Public Worship, selected from Various Authors, and intended as a supplement to Dr. Watts's Proline. Warrington. Printed for the Editor, 1772. Later editions 1781 and 1789. Its character is indicated by the title. There are 160 hymns, more than a third being selected from Watts's hymns, while after Doddridge, Mrs. Barbauld and Thomas Scott hold the chief e. Some of their hymne appeared for the first time puce. some o. .. In this collection.

5. Different again was a book issued without date, but probably in 1780, by two Presbyterian ministers, Revs. W. Wood and Benj. Carcenter:-

An Abridgment of Dr. Watte's Psalms and Hymns, with some alterations. To which is added an appendix containing some hymns, relected from other authors. Birmingham, Printed by Piercy and Jones, and told by them and by the editors at Dudley and Stourbridge. This collection is notable for the very slight alterations of Watts, when compared with what he has undergone of Watts, when compared with what he has undergone at other hands. It contains 163 positios and then 110 hymns. Only the last 14 hymns form the appendix, by Addison, Reddridge, Klypis, and T. Scott. A Third edition considerably enlarged, with an entirely new titlepage, was issued in 1802 as A Scientins of Sacred Poetry, adapted to Public and Private Worship. In Three Parls, Stowbridge. Printed and told by J. Heming. The former appendix of 14 hymns is enlarged to 4 third part, and includes hymns by Wesley, Cowper, Beddoms, Steels, Three Fo.

6. These are examples of various departures from the exclusive use of Dr. Watts in the old Presbyterian congregations. The collection of Theophilus Lindsey was of other origin, To the second edition of his prepared in 1774 for use in Essex Street Chapel, he appended—

A Collection of Hymns and Psalms for Public Worship, London. Printed for J. Johnson, No. 22, St. Paul's Church Yard, 1974. It contains only 127 hymns and pealms, of which more than half are by Watts. In sub-sequent editions, 1784, 1793, 1895, 1822 (the last two by Rev. T. Belsham), it was gradually enlarged. In the editions of 1835 and 1849, by the Rev. T. Madge, it became practically a new collection.

7. The method of appending hymns to the forms of liturgical service had already been adopted in Liverpool in 1763 by the congregation which met for a few years in the Octogon Chapel.* To their "Form of Prayer" was added A New Collection of Pealms, for the use of a Congregation of Protestant Dissenters in Liverpool. It contains only 150 psalms, and is quite distinct from the larger Liverpool Coll. of 1764. Other examples of the same practice are found in the Mansfield Liturgy of 1797, and the Sherborne Devotional Services for the Public Worship of the One True God, issued in 1812 by Rev. W. Blake (the second), of Crewkerno. The title-page of the Salisbury Forms of Prayer for Public Worship, 1776, also promises a collection of hymns, but apparently it was not issued until two years later, na

A Collection of Hymns for Public Worship: on the general Principles of Natural and Revealed Religion, Salisbury: Printed in the year 1779,

There is more originality shown in this collection than in the other books of the same period. Watts and Doddridge are not so strikingly predominant, there is greater variety of authorship, several hymns by John and Charles Wesley (greatly altered in some cases) being introduced; and "of the originals contained in this collection the greater part con-sist of peculiar metres, which have been but lately introduced into psalmody." One of the editors, Rev. Benj. Williams, the last minister of the old Presbyterian congregation in Solisbury, was a man of considerable poetical power. He contributed hymns of his own, including, "Holy, holy, holy Lord"; and the adaptations of Methodist hymns, of which in more than one instance only the first line and the metre are adopted, and a quite new hymn written, are full of genuine music. Tho collection contains 310 hymns, without names of authors.

8. There were other notable collections made by Presbyterian ministers about this The Rev. Newcome Cappe, minister at St. Saviour-gate, York, a Biblical critic of clear Unitarian convictions, was the editor of A Selection of Psalms for Social Worship. York: Printed by A. Ward, 1786. On the title-page are printed extracts from Watte's prefaces to his Psalms and Hymns, and a posinge from a sermon of Lardner's, expressing the view that in worship only language should be used in which all devout Christians of whatever party could join without offence. The preface elaborates the same position, and contains an "explication of terms and phrases," to aid in the right understanding of the chief theological ideas which are found in the book. There are 279 psalms, arranged in four books, according to metre, long, common, short and particular. Similar collections were that of Rev. George Walker of Nottingham :-

(1) A Collection of Pealing and Hymne for Public Worship, unmixed with the disputed decirines of any sect. Warrington. Printed by W. Eyres. . . 1788,

(2) Pealms and Hymne for the use of the New Most-ing in Birmingham. Birmingham: Printed by J. Thomason, 1790.

This latter collection was edited by Rev. William Hawkes and Dr. Joseph Priestley, ministers of the congregation. In the preface they say:-

even to the ear, and much more to the understanding.

The alterations are very freely made in | accordance with Priestley's theological views, but often apparently only from difference of taste, not always to the advantage of the

In 1791 the larger number of the new books perished in the fire by which the mob destroyed not only Priestley's books, but both the Old and the New Meetings. Part of the issue had been provided for the congregation of Cross Street Chapel, Manchester, and remained in use there until the introduction of Kippis; but the Extendingham congregation, joining for a time in common worship with their triends of the Old Meeting, returned to the use of Wester's Praisms and Bysma, which the latter congregation had not yet relinquished. Afterwards a fresh collection was made for the New Meeting, issued in three books successively in 1798, 1806, and 1834. The Old Meeting adopted Kippis.

9. Among the Presbyterians in the North of Ireland the Scottish Peakes and Paraphrases occupied the same place as Watts's Pealms and Hymns with their brethren in England. The first book of their own seems to have been the Hymns for the use of the Presbyterian Congregation in Lisburn. Belfast, 1787,—a collection of 100 hymns taken from much the same sources as the English books, altered in the same way. A somewhat larger collection, but of similar character, was A Collection of Psalms and Hymns proper for Christian Worship. In two parts. I. Psaims of David. II. Sacred Hymns. London-Derry, 1788. Second ed. 1794. This book was afterwards discarded by the congregation as not sufficiently orthodox

10. The collection known variously as Kippis or Rees, from two of its editors, was the first of the Unitarian books to attain to any very extended circulation. It went through many editions, and has remained in use in some outof the way places until quite recently. It may be taken as typical of the kind of Unitarianism most prevalent in England at the beginning of the present century, before the deeper epiritual influence of Channing made itself felt on this side of the Atlantic. The title of the book is:-

A Collection of Hyenns and Psaless for Public and Private Worship; selected and prepared by Andrew Rippin, D.D., P.R.S., & P.S.A.; Abraham Rees, D.D., P.R.S., F.L.S.; The Rev. Thomas grain, and the Rev. Thomas Morgan, L.L.D. London, 1795. The editors were all Presbyterian ministers resident at that time in London. The preface states that hitherto the Presbyterian soleties in the Metropolis and its vicinity have been contented with Dr. Weite's Praims, with the expition of one congregation, which has a book of to own (Pope's Coll., 1760, at the Leather Lane Meeting). To remedy this defect the present complistion is made on the same principles as the sartier Presbyterian collections. Alteration and adaptation are freely resorted to, in order to avoid whetever might "clash with the sentiments, or but the fiellings of any sincere Christian." There are 650 hymns by more than 50 anthors, toloiding Watts, Mrs. Steele, Doddridge, Merrick, Jervis, Mrs. Barbaild, Thomas Scott. Other weil-known names are miltion, Dryden, Addison, Pope, Cowper, Burns, besides many less remarkable, common to the early Presbyterian books. In 1893 a Supplement of 94 hymns was added, and 1a 1853 a much enlarged Supplement, edited by Rev. Ritsund Hell. Edmund Kell.

The general impression made by Kippis is of a somewhat cold and external piety. Though very excellent in moral tone and exhortation, too much of its celebration of the attributes of God and the greatness of His works touches no spring of living emotion, and the redemptive work of Christ seems to be viewed rather from outside than expressed in the kindling words of actual experience. It must be added however that the hymns of Cowper, J. Wesley's "Commit thou all thy grisss," and others which spring from the deeper sources of inspiration, are included in the volume.

11. In spite of the considerable popularity attained by Kippis, it is not too much to say that during the 45 years between its appearance and the publication of Martineau's Hymns for the Christian Church and Home, on an average one Unitarian hymn-book, large or small, was issued every year. It was a period of considerable activity in Unitarian propagandism, and several of the books are of importance. Only a few can be so much as named here, e.g. :-

Dr. Enfield's Norwick Coll. of 1795; the Exster Coll., 1901; Dr. Estin's (Bristol), 1802; Rev. W. Turner's (Newcastle), 1806; Norwick, 1814; Liverpool, Paradise Street, 1816; Sammel Dobell's, 1816; Liverpool, Reseabaw Street, 1818, and again 1836; Warrington, 1816 (the carlous book in which the editors object to "the introduction ons book in which the editors object to "the introduction of the term soul, in connections where it necessarily implies an immeterial and separable principle in man"); Dukinfield, 1922 (still in use); B. Wallace's, 1922; Rev. J. J. Tayler's (Moslay Street, Manchester), 1929; Dr. Carpenter's (Ristol), 1931; Rev. Benj. Carpenter's (Notlingham), 1838.

In Ireland appeared the Psalms, Hymns and Spiritual Songs; selected for the First Congra-gation of Presbyterians in Bolfast, 1801, which in that congregation superseded the use of the Psalms and Paraphrases, and was itself superseded by A Selection of Psalms and Hymns for the use of the Presbytery of Antrim and the Congregation of Strand Street, Dublin. Belfast, 1818, really a new ed. of the earlier book, There was also Rev. A. G. Malcom's Neury Coll., 1811.

12. In 1810 Rev. Robert Aspland of Hackney published A Selection of Pealme and Hymns for Unitarian Worship, which passed through several editions, and to which in 1824 a supplement was added. This is said to be the first instance of the term Unitarian appearing on the title-page of a hymn-book. To hold such doctrine was still a penal offence. This collection contains 500 hymns for private and domestic as well as public worship, by more than 60 authors. There is greater variety and freehness of devotional expression than in Kippie.

18. The two books between Kippis and Martineau which had the widest circulation were those known as the Exeter Coll. and House's Coll. The former was A Collection of Paulms and Hypans for Social and Private Worship, Exeter, 1812, edited chiefly by Dr. Laut Carpenter, at that time minister of the George's Meeting. Manyeditions were printed, not only at Exeter, but also at Glasgow and Loudon, the 12th ed. being London, 1835. It is a collection of 313 hymns, and while strictly Unitarian in doctrine, it aimed "to increase the number of suitable hymne especially referring to Christian privileges and requisitions." The same may be said of A Selection of Hymnu and Pealms for Christian Worship. By H. E. House, jun. Bath, 1830. Of this nine editions were printed, and it was extensively used by the congregations of Gen. Baptists who had become Unitarisos, as well as by others, in some cases until quite recently. There are 528 hymns by about 80 authors.

14. One other book of this period must be named ;-

thip. Compiled by John R. Heard. London: John Green. Manchester: Forrest & Fogg, 1937.

The peculiarity of this collection was that mly hymns by Unitarian writers were admitted. The result was a collection of 560 hymns by 55 authors, the chief contributors being: John Bowring, William Gaskell, J. C. Wallace, J. R. Wreford, John Johns, S. G. Bulfinch, J. Brettell, and Mrs. Barbauld. Only a few of these hymns have passed into general use in G. Britain, and the principle of selection has not found favour among the Unitarians of the English non-subscribing churches. Many of these hymns have however passed into American Unitarian collections.

15. In 1840 appeared the book which has made the most striking epoch in the history of Unitarian hymnody. As Kiopis fairly represents the condition of English Unitarious at the end of last century, so the Hymns for the Christian Church and Home, Collected and edited by James Martineau, London, 1840, may be taken as the best expression of the new spirit of devotion which, largely through the influence of Channing, bad for some time been making its way in their societies. When the new hymn-book appeared Dr. Martineau was minister at Paradise Street Chapel, Liverpool. It was to some extent only a prophecy of what was to be, for the book was received at first with objection in some quarters; but quickly made its way, and, far more generally than Kippis at the beginning of the century, superseded all earlier collections. It is now the book most widely used among Unitarians in England. It was a collection of 650 hymns, Mrs. Adams's "Nearer, my God, to Thee" being added as hymn 651 to the 10th ed. of 1853. The preface develops the thought of worship as being the natural expression of emotion, awakened in the mind "possessed with the religious or mysterious conception of God, of life and death, of duty, of inturity," and shows how the substance of the devotion of the various writers, whose hymns are adopted, is preserved, while the special dialoct of their dogmatic theology is changed into a more universal language.

of the 181 authors from whom selection is made not a third could be rightly classed as Unitarians; the chief of these being Adams, Bartanda, Bowring, Bryant, Butcher, Enfield, Estille, Furness, Gaskell, Johns, Norton, Pierpoint, the Roscoss, J. E. Smith, John and Emlly Taylor, Ware and Wreford. But the chief contributors are members of other Churches, Catholic, Lutheran, Anglican, Wesleyan, Baptist, Independent, and others; Dr. Watts standing first with 77 hymns, and after in Montgomery with 57, Doddridge 53, Charles Weeley 43, Reber 28, Cowper 14, Newton 14, Conder 12, Hemnars 11, Steele 10, Milman 10. The hymns are divided into six books according to their subjects.

16. From 1840 until the appearance of Dr. Martineau's last collection in 1878, was a period not so prolific as the preceding in Unitarian hymn-books. This was natural, since the need of the churches had been so well supplied. Various books for individual congregations were however issued. Among these may be named:—

(1) W. J. Fox's Hymn: and Anthems, London, 1861, to which were first contributed the hymns of Sarah Adams; (2) the Plymouth Hymns for Public and Private Worship, 1855; (3) the Liverpool Renshaw Street Hymns. Chants, and Anthems; selected and arranged by John Homstiton Thom, 1898; (4) a new Exeter Oblection, 1863, edited by Bev. T. W. Chignell; (6) the Rev. Charles Clarko's Book of Prayer and Praise, Birmingham. 1871; (6) the Rev. J. P. Hopps's Hymns for Public Worship, Clasgow, 1873. In Ireland appeared the (7) Padms, Paraphrases and Hymns for Christian Worship, Belfast, 1841, and in 1856 what was really a new edition of the above, also at Belfast, (8) Hymns for Christian Worship; catited by members of the Nonsubscribing Presbyterian Church of Ireland. Further editions in 1867 and 1886.

17. This period however not only added greatly to the treasures of Christian hymnody, but witnessed marked further changes in the religious attitude of the free churches, for which particularly Dr. Martineau produced his carlier hymn-book. To meet the fresh need he published:—

Hymns of Praise and Prayer, collected and edited by James Martineau, LL.D., B.D., " Vatum suspiria solutium Ecclesiae." London, Longmans, 1873.

There had come to be less importance attached to the external historical records, Biblical incidents were less dwelt upon than formerly, and greater stress was laid on the inwardness of the religious life, identifying Christianity with the religion of Christ in its pure and personal essence. And so in this collection the new hymns admitted belong "chiefly to the poetry of the inner life; while the old hymns excluded mainly deal with objective incidents either in Biblical history or in the apocalyptic representation of the future." But besides the change in character of the collection there were large additions to be made from new writers. There are 797 hymns, 417 being also in the former collection and 380 added. Of hymns where names are given there are 255 authors, those not included in the former collection being gathered from every quarter of the Church, from the Roman Catholic to the Unitarian. Among them are Newman, Faber, Caswall, Prooter, Lyte, Neale, Trench, Bonar, Gill, Ellerton, Lynch, Waring, Whittier, Parker, Emerson, Holmos, the Longfellows, Jones Very, Johnson, Clarke. In amount of contribution Watts loses his pre-eminence, Montgomery standing first with 67 hymns, then Charles Wesley with 58, Watts 49, Doddridge 34, Heber 17, Faber 16, Cowper 15, Barbauld 15, Lyte 15, Conder 13, Hemans 11, Gill 11. The same principle of alteration is adhered to as in the earlier collection, "for grave reasons of religious veracity. growing acceptance of this collection in the "Nonconformist Broad Church," for which it was designed, shows that it has rightly gauged the condition of the religious life of English Unitarians. After Hymns for the Christian Church and Home it is now used in their societies more than any other book,

18. Of subsequent collections the most notable are the Hynns of Experience and Hope, Manchester, 1874, a small but choice selection edited by Revs. F. E. Milleon and S. Farrington; Hymns, Chants and Anthems for Public Worship, edited by John Page Hopps, Letester, 1877, now used in several congregations; and the Bedford Chapel Christian Hynns, London, 1881, edited for his congregation by Rev. Stopford A. Brocke, on his leaving the Church of England.

19. From the above account of Unitarian hymn-books it will be seen that with one exception their material has been largely drawn from writers belonging to other branches of the Christian Church, and that the work of the editors has been more that of selection and adaptation from common sources than a collecting of new material. There are however a considerable number of original writers Emerg Unitarians in England as well as America, some of whom are well known beyond the borders of their own immediate circle.

20. In the old Arian days there were several liberal ministers whose hymns occur repeatedly in the earlier collections and less uniformly in the modern books, who stand naturally in the line of development which has resulted in modern Unitarianism. Such were Henry Grove, Thomas Scott, Roger Flexman, John Breckell, and somewhat later, Benj. Williams, Henry Moore, and the editors Kippis, Jervis, Walker and Enfield. Among Unitarian hymn-writers in the latter part of last century the first place must be given to Mrs. Barbauld, with whom are naturally associated the Norwich group of the Taylors and Sir J. E. Smith, William Roscoe of Liverpool, and his gifted children. Other contemporaries, passing gradually on to a new generation, were Dr. Estlin, Pendlebury Houghton, Edmund Butcher, William Lamport, John Rowe, George Dyer, Helen Marie Williams, and in Ireland Dr. Drennan and William H. Drummond. Of those born later in the last century were John G. Robberds, Sir John Bowring, W. J. Fox, J. C. Wallace, Jacob Brettell, Hugh Hutton, and in Ireland David Whyte and A. G. Malcom. Belonging entirely to the present century are the Martineaus, Sarah Adams, John Johns, Dr. Wreford, William Gaskell, Samuel Greg. Thomas Hincks, John Page Hopps, and others.

Of the chief of these further notice will be found elsewhere in this Dictionary. In the alphabetical list given below brief notes are added concerning the rest.

Unus bonorum fons, Deus, omnium, C. Coffin. [B. V. M.] Appeared in the Paris Brev., 1736, and in Coffin's Hymni Sacri of the same year, p. 64. In the Paris and later French Brevs, it is the hymn at 2nd Vespers on the Fenst of the Nativity and Conception of the B. V. M. Tr. as:-

O Thou sole Fountain, of all good. By I. Williams, in his Hys. ir. from the Partition Brev., 1839, p. 174. Also in the 1860 Appendix to the H. Noted, and others. [J. J.]

Unvail thy bosom, faithful tomb. I. Watts. [Burial.] This is the last of five odes which are appended to a letter "To Lucius, on the death of Serrns," pub. in his Reliquize Juveniles, &c., 1734. It is in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Ode v. A Funeral Ode at the Interment of the Body, supposed to be sung by the Mourners." It has passed into several hymn-books in Great Britain and [J. J.] America.

'Υπακοή. [Greek Hymnody, § xvi, 8.]

Upham, Thomas Cogswell, D.D., was b. at Durfield, New Haven, Jan. 30, 1799, and educated at Dartmouth College (1818), and at Andover (1821). Having entered the Congregational Ministry he became Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy at Bowdon Collego, in 1825, and retained the same to 1867. He d. at New York, April 2, 1872. His publications were numerous and included Mental Philosophy (which was long and widely used); American Cottage Life; a volume of Poems, 1852, &c. Five of his hymns are given, with accompanying dates, in Hymne and Songe of Praise, &c., N. Y., 1874, as follows:—

Fear not, poor weary one. Help in Sorrow (1872).
 Happy the man who knows. Obedience (1873).
 O Thou great Ruler of the sky. Morning (1872).
 O Thou great Teacher from the skies. Pollowing

5. 'Tie thus in solitude I roam. Ommipresence (1853). These hymns are limited in their use. In 1847 Upham pub. the Life and Religious Opinions and Experiences of Madam de la Mothe Guyon . . Two vols., N. Y. In this work the anonymous trs. from Madam Guyon's bymne given at p. 478, il., are found., viz., (1) "By sufferings only can we know";
(2) "I would love Thee, God and Father";
(3) "Tis not [by] the skill of human art."
There are also additional trs. of two of her hymns in the same work. [J, J,] Τπὸ δώριον άρμογάν. Εγπεκία, Βρ. of Ptolemais. [For the Family.] A sweetly beautiful and tender prayer to Christ on behalf of his wife and children. It is No. viii. of his ten hymns written at various periods of his life, and dates 375-430. The full Greek text is found in the Anth. Gracoa Carm. Christ., 1871. From this Mr. Chatfield's tr. "O! 'tis no theme of common things," was made. It is in 56 l. and was first published in his Songs and Hymns, &c., 1876, p. 81. Also tr. by I. Williams, in his Thoughts in Past Years, 1852, p. 368, as "To the harmonious Dorian sound." Sec Greek Hymnody, § v.]

Upon the Gospel's sacred page. Sir J. Bouring. [Progress of the Gospel.] Contributed to Beard's Unitarian Coll. of Hys., 1837, No. 206, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Progress of Gospel truth." It was included in the 3rd ed. of the author's Matina and Vespera, 1841, p. 240, and subsequently in several hymn-books, especially in America. In the American Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, 1864, No. 698, "On mightier wing, in loftier flight," is composed of st. ii., iv., v. (slightly altered) of this hymn. [J. J.]

Urbem Romuleam quis furor incitat. Jean Baptiste de Santeiist. [St. John at the Latin Gate.] Pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Hymni Sacri et Novi, 1638, p. 32. In 1736 it was included in the revised Paris Brev for the Feast of St. John at the Latin Gate. It was repeated in later French Brovs., and also in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesius, 1888 and 1865. Tr. as:

Urbs beata Hierusalem, dieta pacis visio. [The Dedication of a Church.] This "rugged but fine old hymn," as Archbishop Tronch calls it, is probably of the 6th or 7th cent., and is based on 1 Peter ii. 5, Rev. xxi., and Eph. ii. 20. It is found in three was, of the 11th cent. in the British Museum, viz.; in one of the Early English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 119), and in two of the Early Spanish Church (Add. 30848, f. 46b; Add. 30851, f. 155b). Also in the St. Gall ms., No. 387, of the 11th cent. In the Lat. Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Church (Surfees Society), 1851, p. 157, it is printed from the Vesp. D. xii. G. M. Dreves, in his Hymnarius Moissiacensis, 1888. p. 73, prints it from a MB. of the 10th cent. It is also in Danisl, i. No. 219; Mone, No. 251; Wackernagel, i. No. 124; F. A. Marca's Lat. Hys., 1875, p. 208, &c. As it has generally been printed from comparatively recent was. it is here given from the three lith cent. Mss. noted above, viz. (a) Vesp. D. xii., (b) Add. 30848, (c) Add. 30851.

(1) "Urbs beats Hieraralem, dieta pacis visio, Quae construitor in coelo vivis ex lapidilms, Et angelis cornata ut sponsata comite,

(2) " Nova veniena e coelo nuntiali thalamo. Praeparata ut sponsata copulatur domino, Piateas et muri ejus ex auro purissimo.

(3) " Porteo niterat margaritis adytis patentibus, Et virtute meritorum illuc introducitur Omnia qui pro Catisti nomine hoc in mundo premitur.

(4) "Tonsionibus, pressuris expoliti lapides, Suisque apiantur locis per manus artificis, Disponuntur permansuri sacris aedificiis.

(5) " Angularis fundamentum lapis Ohristus missus Qui compage parietis in utroque nectitur, Quem Sion sancta suscepit, in quo credens permanet.

(6) " Omnis Illa Deo sacra et dilecta civitar Plena modulis in lande et canore Jubilo, Trinum Deum unicumque cum favore praedicat.

(7) "Hoe in temple, summe Dous, exerctus adveni, Et elementi benitate precum vota suscipe, Largam benedictionem hie infunde jugiter.

(8) " Hic promercantur omnes petita accipere, Et salepia possidere cum sanctia personiter, Paradisum introire, translati in requiem.

(9) " Gloria et honor Deo usquequo altiesimo, Una Pairi, Filioque, inclyto Paraclito, Cui laus est et potestas, per seterna saccula."

The principal variations in these three was,

In and c. st. vil. precedes st. v. In c. there is no doxology. In the Mostanc MS there is an additional st. inserted before st. vil. and mother inserted after st. vili. These are not found elsewhere, and clearly form no part of the original hymn. Otherwise the Mostanc text is practically the same as the above, except in the doxology. tically the same as the above, except in the dexclogy.

A discussion has arisen as to the antiquity of sta. vii., viii., the sum of which is this :-

Daniel, No. 219, suggests that st. vii., viii. are a later addition meant to adapt a hymn on the Heavenly Jerusalem for use on a Dedication Festival. But there does not seem to be any foundation for this idea, since these stansas are found in the cluest see,; and according to his own showing there are hymns for the dedication of a Church probably as old as this (see Christic canotorum, p. 283, ii.). He adds the statement that Martens (de Metiq. Eccles. Disciplina, p. 431), says that in a Pointifical of the 10th cent. of the diocese of Poictier this hymn is directed to be sung at the Renediction of the hymn is directed to be sung at the Benediction of the Font on Holy Saturday. For this purpose Dentel suggests that st. vii., viii. are inappropriate: but how any one examining these stances can say so is pursues us to see. Trench (Sacred Latin Foetry, ed. 1864, p. 312), says: "The hymn coheres intimately in all its parta, and in ceasing to be a hymn. Postcatione Ecoleriae it would loss its chiefest beauty. It is most truly a hymn 'of degrees' ascending from things earthly to things heavenly, and making the first to be interpretare of the last. The prevailing intention in the building and the dedication of a church, with the rites thereto appertaining, was to carry up mon's thoughts from that Temple built with hands, which thay saw, to that other built of living stones in heaven, of which this was but a weak shadow (Durandus, Hattonale, i. 1)... This proved the source of manifold inspiration in circles beyond its own true laspication, in the fact that it has proved the source of manifold inspiration in circles beyond its own."

circles beyond its own."

Dr. Neate's opinion on this matter is set forth in his Modificated Hys., 1851, p. 28.

"Daniel imagines those stanzas to be a later addition, when the hymn, originally general, was adapted to the Dedication of a Church. Mr. Trench, on the contrary, will have the whole poem to be of one date: and alleges, very truly, that this mixture of the earthly and heavenly temple is usual in hymns and sequences on a similar subject. Nevertheless, I think that Daniel is right.

Because there is a clear difference in the style and language of the two last and seven first stanzas. 2. Because the trunsition from one part to the other is gauge to the two last aim seven into seathers. Encourage the transition from one part to the other is so unusually strupt. S. Because, at the end of the sixth stanss, there is a quasi-dexology as if to point out that the hymn originally concluded there."

This hymn possed into many mediaeval Breviaries, always for the Dedication of a Church, and sometimes given as a whole, but often divided into two parts, with sta. v.-viii., as a separate hymn, beginning Angularis tunds-mentum. So in the older Roman (Venico, 1478), Paris of 1643 and 1786 (in both cases beginning Urbs Jerssalem bests), Sarum, York, Aber-deen, and others. Occasionally st. vii., viii. are given esparately as Hos in templo, summe

- 2. In the revised Roman Brev., 1632, it is recast, very much to its disadvantage, as follows :-
- "Conlectie urba Jerusalem, Beata pacis vialo, Quas celsa de viventibus Saxis ad astra tolleris, Sponsacque ritu cingeris Mille angelorum millibus.
- (2) "O corte nupta prospera, Dotata Patris gioria, Respersa Sponei gratia, Regina formosissima Christo Jugata principi Coell corusca civitas.
- (3) "Hic margaritis emicant, Patentque cunctis ortis: Virtute namque praevia Mortalis Illue ducitur, A more Christi percitus Tormenta quisquis sustinet.
- (4) "Scalpri salubris ictibus, Et tunsione plurima, Fabri polita malleo Hanc saxa molem construunt, Aptisque juncta nexibus Locantur la fastigio.
- (6) "Albo er Olympi vertice Summi Parantis Filius, Cen monte desectus lapis Terras in imas decidens, Domus superuse, et infimes Utrumque junxit angulum.
- (6) " Sed illa sedes cocilium Semper resultat laudibus, Deumqua trinum et unicum Jugi canore praedicat: Illi canentes jungimur Almae Sionia aemuli.
- (1) "Haec templa, Rex contestium, Imple benigno lumine; Huc o rogatus adveni, Piebisque vota suscipe Et nostra corda jugiter Perfunde coeli gratia.
- (8) "Hie impetrent fidelium Vocas precasque supplicum Domus bestas munera, Partisque donis gandaant : Donec soluti corpore Sades bestas impleant.
- (9) "Deces Parenti debitum Sit usquequaque altissimo, Natoque Patris unico, Et inclyto Paracito, Cui laus, potestas, gioria, Asterna sit per aaccula."

This form is in Daniel, i. No. 219, Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865, &c. Both in the Hymni Breviarii Romani, Rome, 1629 (p. 87), and in the Breviary of 1632 the doxology is printed at the end of each part.

3. The Paris Breviary text of 1643 and 1736 differs but slightly from the original as above. The 1736 text begins thus :-

" Urbs Jerusalem benta Dicta pacis visio, Quae construitur in coelis Vivis ex lapidibus, Et ovantum coronata Angelorum agmine!"

This text is given in full in J. Chandler's Hye, of the Primitive Church, 1837, Nos. 105. 106.

- 4. Another form of the text is given in the Breviarium Metropolitanae ae primatialis ecclesiae Senonensia . . . Senonis MOCCANVI. Pars Hiemalis, p. lazaviii. as follows :---
- Urbs beats, vera pacis Visio, Jerusalem, Quanta surgit i celsa saxis Conditur viventibus: Quee polivit, base coaptat Sedibus suis Deus.
- Singulis ex margaritis Singulas portae nitent : Murus counts fulget auro, Fulget unionibus : Angularis petra Christus Fundat urbis mosnia.
- Ejus est sol caesus Agnus, Ejus est templum Deus: Aemulantes hie Beatl, Puriores Spiritus, Laude jugi numen unum Terque sanctum concinunt,
- Undequagne sunt aperta Civitatis ostia : Quisquis ambit huc venire, Inscrique mognibus, Ante duris hic probari Debuit laboribus.
- Sit perennis laus Parenti, Sit perconis Fliio : Laus tibi, qui nectis ambos, Sit percennis, Spiritus : Chrisma cujus nes inungens, Viva templa consecrat,"

This is the text to which Dr. Neale refers in his Mediaeval Hys., 1851 and 1867, as:

"There is in the Paris Braviary, a rifacimento of this hymn; very inferior, it is true, to the original, but much superior to the Roman reform."

It is however on error to call this the Paris Brev. text, as it is neither in the Paris Brev. of 1643, 1736, nor 1778. This form has been ascribed to Sebastian Beanault (p. 138, ii.), many of whose hymns are included in the Sens Brev. of 1726.

The translations of the various forms of this hymu are:-

- i. Original Text: (i.) Urbs beata Hierusalem ; (ii.) Angularis fundamentum.
 - L. (a.) Blessed city, heavenly Salem, Vision dear of peace and love, &c. Pt. i.
- (b.) Christ is made the sure Foundation. Pt. ii. By J. M. Neals. This was given as one hymne in Mediacoal Hys., 1851, but in the H. Noted, 1852, it was revised and divided into two parts was given in the Salisbury H. Bh., 1857, and in H. A. & M., 1861, with alterations in each case. Dr. Neale's comment on some of these alterations in the 3rd ed. of his Mediacral Hys., 1867. p. 22, is :-

"This hymn, divided as in the Breviary, after the fourth verse, was inserted, with some corrections, in the Hymnol Noted. Thence, with a good many alterations, it was copied in the Servin Hymnol [Salirbery H. He. 1857]; one of these changes seems true and happy: v.

Who, the two walls underlying, Bound in each, binds both in one.

In Hymns Ancient and Modern it is very slightly attend: and some of the changes can bardly be thought improvements, e.g., 'Thither faithful souls do soar.' [Neale 'Thither faithful souls may soar']. It is curious to observe how both one and the other soften the second line of the second verse: [Neale 'Ready for the nuptial bed] the Surum has:-

bed ' the caram has ' Grace and glory round her shed.'

Hymna Ancient and Modern (much better)—

' Bridal glory round her shed.'

The second part of the translation, 'Christ is made the sure Foundation,' has been adopted as a dedication hymn with so much general twour, that it would be untimakful not to mention the fact.''

Amongst those collections which include both parts of this tr. as in the H. Noted, but giving in almost every instance variations, chiefly from H. A. & M., are Pott's Hymns, &c., 1861; Kennetly, 1863; People's H., 1867; Surum, 1868;

the Hymnary, 1872; Thring's Coll., 1882, and several others in G. Britain and America. There are also a few collections which take only Pt. i., and others, greater in number, Pt. ii. There are centes also from both parts in C. U., beginning with the opening line of Pt. i., as in the Parish H. Bk., 1863-75; the Hy. Comp., and others. The position taken by Dr. Nesle's fr. of this hymn is thus prominent and important. In popularity and extensiveness of use it is unapproached by any other.

Ut jucundas cervus undas, aestuans desiderat. Bernard of Cluny (?). [B. V. M.] This is the opening of a poem, or rather cycle of poems or hymns, known as the Marials. Up to 1600 it generally passed under the name of Bernard or of St. Bernard, though it was also ascribed to St. Thomas of Aquino (d. 1274); to Hildebert, archbishop of Tours (d. 1134), and to others. After 1600 it (or rather a cento from it beginning "Omni die die Marine") passed current under the name of St. Casimir of Poland (d. 1484). It has recently been ascribed to St. Anselm of Aosta. who, in 1063, was appointed Prior, and, in (b.) From highest heaven, the Father's Son. 1078, Abbot of Bec in Normandy; became Pt. ii.
Archbishop of Canterbury in 1093; and d.
By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, April 12, 1109. The ascription to St. Auselm has been upheld by Father Ragey of the Marist Order, who in 1884 pub. an ed. of the full text es Sancti Anselmi Cantuariensis Archiepiscopi Mariale, &c. (London, Burns & Oates), with a preface and introduction dated April 21, 1888. This ed. is out of print, but Father Ragey kindly presented the present writer with a copy, and also with copies of his articles on the Marials in the Annales de Philosophie Chritienne (Paris), May and June 1883, and in the Controverse et Contemporain (Lyons), Nov. 1887. There, in the Revue des Questions historiques (Paris), Oct. 1886 and July 1887, and in the works referred to in these articles, the subject may be studied in detail. Here we can give only a brief outline of the subject, dealing (i.) with the MSS., (ii.) with the Asthornhip, and (iil.) with the Conton and Translations.

(i.) MSS. The Mariale exists in at least five ass. not later than 1200. Two of these are in the British Museum, viz., the Add. 21927, and the Harl. 2882.

The former of these (a Paulice apparently written for a Benedictina monastery in the province of York) contains only a portion of the text, beginning at f. 405 with the words "Omni die die Marise," and is entitled "Laus et oratio de sea Maris." This ass, has sometimes been assigned to the end of the 11th cent., but the British Museum authorities, on being requested by the present writer to re-examina it, agree in considering that it is not earlier than 1175. The Barleisen MS. (a complete and excellent one, apparently written in England), is dated in the Catalogue as of the 12th cent., but the similarly elicited opinion of the British Museum authorities is that it to not earlier than 1200. it is not earlier than 1200.

The other three Mss. are in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, viz., Lat. 2445 A., Lat. 10522, and Lat. 16565.

M. Leopold Delisle, the Principal Librarian, has kindly re-examined these, and has come to the conclusion that none of them is se early se 1148. The 2445 A. is the carilest, and may possibly date soon after 1180.

The Marials is also found in a considerable variety of mes. of later date, in the Brit. Mus. and in various French and German libraries, but these need not here be mentioned in detail. The verse form a variety of the trochaic catalectic tetrameter, is not earlier than about 1050.

(ii.) Authorship.—These facts, and the other evidence adduced in the works noted above. clearly point to the conclusion that the poem was written, either in France or in England, not earlier than 1050 and not later than 1150. The possible authors are thus reduced to four, viz.: St. Anselm of Canterbury, St. Bernard of Clairvaux, Bernard of Cluny, and Hildebort of Tours. St. Thomas of Aquino (to whom it is ascribed in a 14th cent. Hs., cited by Mone, il. p. 258) was only born in 1225.

p. 256) was only forn in 1223.

(a) Hildsbert. For Hildsbert there is only the secription in a miscellaneous as, volume of the 13th or 14th tent., formerly belonging to the monastery of St. James at Liege, and now in the Darmetadt Library (No. 2777. The text of this as,, which contains nearly the whole of the Mariate, is privated by F. W. E. Roth, in his Lat. Hymen, 1837, No. 203). The Mariate is not contained in the Benedictine ed. of Hildsbert's Opera (Paris, 1708), and M. Haurfan, who has recomity interested inturell in the study of Hildsbert, secribes it not to him, but to Bernard of Cluny.

(b) 8th Bernard of Cluny.

to Bernard of Cluny.

(b) 8h Bernard at Clairvaux. The ascription to St. Bernard also cests on a very slight foundation. The Bernard to whom the early mas, ascribed the Muricule was clearly not the abbot of Cairvaux, but the monk of Cairvaux, Case M. Hauréauis articles in the Journal des Savents for 1882, reprinted as the Podwas Lotins attribute à Saint Bernard, Paris, 1890.)

(c) St. Annelm of Cantarbury. The principal specific reasons (beyond the general contention that it harmonises in sentiment and expression with St. Auseim's character, and with his works), which led Ragey to think that it was by bim are :---

(1) The fact of its being in very early ass. But, as shown above, no ms. of it is as early as 1149, and consequently it cannot be adjudged from Bernard of Cluny sequently it cannot be adjudged from Bernard of Cleny on that ground. (2) The fervour of its devotion to the B, V, M. But St. Anselm was not alone in his devotion to her. (3) The frequent resemblances to passages in the works undoubtedly by St. Anselm. In the first ed, of the Marfale these parallel passages are printed at the foot of the pages containing the corresponding portions of the text. But the parallels are not very close, and even if they were closer they might be accounted for otherwise, or it is closely by certain that. Bernard had access, in the for it is tolerably certain that Bernard had access, in the library at Cluny, to at least a fairly complete set of the works of so well-known an ecclesiastic and theologian as St. Anselm. (4) The fact that in the Hart. MS. 2822 it cours in a section which otherwise omtains nothing but pieces which are undoubtedly by St. Anselm. This is places which are undoubtedly by St. Amelm. This is not a very conclusive argument, especially as the other places are all in prose. (a) Certain allusions which Ragey thinks were meant to refer to contemporary events in England, under the rule of William Engls (1079-1109). The allusions are however not distinct enough to found an argument upon.

To the present writer the great difficulties in the way of ascribing the Mariale to St. Anselm are firstly that 8. Bagey relies too much on subjective evidence, and secondly that the other poems ascribed to him are of such annul importance, and nowhere show any evidence of poetical talent or of the power to compose such a long poem in so difficult a metre.

The Muricio had indeed been ascribed to St. Anselm The Marries had indeed been accided to St. Anselm much earlier than by Father Ragoy, vis., in a ms. of about the end of the 13th cent., now in the Bibl. Nat. at Paris (Lat. 1843), f. 343), where it is entitled "Meditationes Anselmi de besta Virgine." But the mere factor its appearance with that title in this solitary, and not very ancient, Ms., has not convinced M. Huurban (1850, 87) that it is really by St. Anselm, nor is the present writer inclined to regard it as conclusive evidence of his authorship.

(d) Bernard of Cluny. The earliest ws. of the poem now known is the Lot. 3445 A. at Paris, written circu 1150. Here it is suitided "Invocatio divinas Sapienties. 1100. Here it is entitled "Invocatio divinas Sapentias facts a Bernardo in landem monacho perpetuas Virginis." The epithet "monachus" is eridently meant to point to Bernard of Cluny, for long before 1130 St. Bernard, from a simple monk, had become Abbot of Clairwaux. The secreption to Bernard is found in various other of the early was. As time went on and the fame of St. Bernard of Clairvaux increased, while the name of Bernard of Cluny was forgotten, we find the mes. ascribe the Mariale distinctly to St. Bernard. So in two mas, of the 14th cent., written in France, and now in the 18th, Mus. (Reg. 7 A. vi., and Reg. 8 B. 1), the author is styled "Bernardus doctor," and in a Ms. of the 15th cent., sayis "Dernarous decay," and in a sa, of the took care, how also in the Brit. Mus. (Add., 3938, f. 3639), the posms are styled "Orationes saucil Bernardi devoki doctoris," and sppcinted for the Orave of the Assump-tion of the B. V. M.

To show the structure of the poem we print here the opening of its best-known part:

"Omul die, die Marias, mes, laudes, anima; Ejus festa, ejus gesta cole eplendidissima. Contemplare, et mirare ejus calsitudiness ; Die felicem Geultricess, die Beatam Virginess."

Die felieres Genitrieres, die Beatam Virginess."
On comparing his with the De contempts mundi (pp. 137, ii. and 533, ii.), which is the undoubsed work of Bernard of Cluny, we see in both an equal mastery of a difficult and somewhat similar metre. The poet who could write the one was certainly capable of writing the other. Whatever may be the thoological proposessions of the critic it is altogether unfair to deny that the Decontempts and the Mariate are both the work of a first-rate not a and it is did to depreciate the the contempts. contempts and the Harraite are both the work of a first-nate post, and it is tille to depreciate the He contempts in order to exait the Mariate. The he contempts indeed contains much that might well have been spired, but the first part, for hundreds of lines, has in its way nothing to equal it in beauty in the whole range of Latin sacred poetry. If the He contempts may be accused of want of progress and of eddying round its subject, then this is precisely what may justly be said of the Mariate.

Therefore, on the grounds of the early ascription to Bernard of Cluny, of the fact that no to a can be found which are sufficiently early to disprove the ascription to him, and of his talents as a post and master of Latin verse, we incline to regard the Muriole as his. St. Anselm was indeed a distinguished theologian and ecclesisatic, but we have really no reason to regard him as a poet of any merit.

(iii.) Centos and Translations. The complete text of the poem is, in Ragey's edition, arranged in 15 parts, viz. a Processium, a Pracvia Meditatio, and 13 Hymns. It is not necessary however to print the first lines of these as Ragey's 2nd ed. (Tournsy: Deselée, Lefebvre & Co., 1885) is easily accessible, as well as cheap, and very prettily printed. Here we give only the beginnings of the different forms or centes which we have noticed, adding the page references to Ragey's 1885 ed. These forms and centos are:—

i. Jesse proles, pelle moles, p. 104.
ii. Jesu Cariste, per quem iste, p. 123.
iii. Jesu Verbum, qui superbum, p. 170.
iv. Lingua mea, dic trophaea, p. 14
v. Lux sanctorum, spes lapsorum, p. 71.
vi. O felicem ganitricem, p. 83.
vii. O Maria, vitae via, p. 107.
viii. O maria, vitae via, p. 107.
viii. O maria, vitae nota, p. 28.
x. Splendor Patris, factor Matris, p. 44.
xi. Ut jucundas cervus undes, p. 3.

Of these Nos. i., ii., v., vii., x. are given by Mone (Nos. 566-571) from various mes. of the 14th and 15th cent., and seem to have been meant for use at private devotions. The other forms may be here noted somewhat more fully, viz.:—

iv. Lingua mea, die trophaea virginia puerperae. A cento beginning thue was ir. as:—

0 my tongue, the praise and honours. By T. I. Ball for the 1863 Appx. to the H. Noted, No. 205. This is repeated in the Office H. Bk., 1889. In the St. Margaret's Hyl. (East Grinstead), 1875, it is in two parts, the second beginning "O thou ever pure, yet fruitful."

vi. O felicem genitricem, oujus sacra viscera. This is the only portion of the poem which seems to have come into public use in Pre-Reformation times. It is included in various Missals of the 15th and 16th cent., such as the Lübeck, o. 1480; the Trier, c. 1490; the Prag of 1507; the Naumburg of 1517, and others. Also in Wackernagel, i. p. 192; Daniel, ii., p. 205; Kehrein, No. 315, &c. It is tr. as:—

viii. Omni die, die Mariae, mes, laudes, anima. The popular form of this is the cente made from the poem by St. Casimir of Poland (b. 1458, d. 1484). A Ms. copy of this arrangement is said to have been found in his grave when that was opened in 1604; and in the 17th cent., and indeed till recently, he was generally thought to be its author. It is given in his life in the Bollandist Acta Sanctorum (1668), for March 4; in the Parnassus Marianus, Douay, 1624, p. 364; in J. M. Horst's Paradisus animae Christianae, Cologne, 1630, p. 500 (1644, p. 462); in Daniel, ii. p. 372, &c. Various tre. of it are included in German Roman Catholic hymn-books from 1613 on, it was tr. into French at least as early as 1630, and there are also trs. in Italian, Spanish, Polish, Hungarian, &c. It has also been to. into English as ;—

- 1. Each day, my soul, Tell Mary's preise. By Canon F. Oakeley, in his fr. of Horst's Paradisus, 1850, p. 593, and divided, as in Horst, into six decades.
- 2, Daily, daily, sing to Kary, Sing, my soul, her praises due. This is in the Oratory Hys., 1854, and the Catholic Psaimist, 1858, p. 141. It is Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865.

repeated in the Catholic Hyl., 1860, as the first part of No. 63; and, in almost the same text, in the Crown of Jesus H. Bk., 1862, &c.

 Sing, aing each day, A tuneful lay. By Cardinal Wiseman, in his Hymn of St. Casimir, London, 1859.

ix. Pulchra tota, sine note onjuneumque maculae. This is really part of the cento made by St. Casimir. It is ir. as:—

Holy Queen! we bend before thee, Queen of purity divine. By E. Caswall, in his Masque of Mary, 1858, p. 312, and Hys. & Pooms, 1873, p. 176; repeated in the Hys. for the Year, 1867, and the Parochial H. Bh., 1880. In the Catholic Hyl., 1860, No. 63, pt. il., it begins "Holy Mary, we implore thee By thy purity divine," and this form is repeated in the Crown of Jesus H. Bh., 1862.

zi. Ut juoundas cervus undas, sestuans desiderat. This is found also in Danici, v. p. 409, and in Trench's Sac. Latin Poetry, ed. 1864, p. 237. It is trace:

The thirsty hart peats with desire. By D. T. Morgan, in his Hys. of the Latin Church, 1871, p. 94.

These various forms and centes testify to the popularity which the poem has enjoyed in Roman Catholic circles. It is in parts very beautiful; but is, as a whole, too intensely Marian to lond itself for use in the Churches of the Reformation, unless with such adaptation as would almost destroy its identity.

Ut queant laxis resonare fibris.

Paul the Deacon. [St. John the Baptist's Day.] This hymn by Paul the Deccon, son of Warnfried, is found in three MSS. of the 11th cent. in the British Muscum (Jul. A. vi. f. 54; Vesp. D. xii. f. 81 5; Add. 30848 f. 165); and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch., 1851, p. 102, is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at Durham (B. iil. 82 f. 30b). Also in the St. Gall Ms. No. 887, of the 11th cent.; in a Ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 260), &c. Among the Bern uss. it is found in No. 363 of the 8th cent.; No. 303 circa 900; and No. 455 of the 10th cent. Ernest Dilmmler, in the Poctas Latini aevi Carolini, Berlin, 1881, vol. i. p. 83, gives it in the Appendix "Carminum Dubiorum" of Paul the Deacon, citing it as in a Vatican Ms. of the 10th cent., and many others. It is in the Roman, Scrum, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries. In the Sarum use part i. was assigned to Lauds, pt. ii. Antra deserti teneria sub unais to Matina, pt. iii., O nimis felix, meritique celal to Lande. Stanza i. has often been quoted by writers on music (from Guido of Arezzo in the 11th cept, onwards) as indicating the names of the musical notes:-

"Ut queant laxis Resonare fibris Mira gestorum Famuli tuorum Solve polinti Labli reatum, Sancte Johannes."

The printed text is also in Daniel i. No. 183, with readings at iv. pp. 163, 376, citing the Bern Ms. No. 455, &c.; in Wacker-nagel, i. No. 127; Bässler, No. 64; G. M. Dreves's Hymnarius Moismacensis, 1888 p. 50, from a 10th cent. Ms.; and in Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. [J. M.]

V. In the New Golden Shower, N. Y., 1870, i.e. Mrs. Van Alstyne.

Vain are the hopes the sons of men. I. Watts. [Justification by Faith.] Pub. in his Hys. and S. Sonys, 1709, Bk. i., No. 94, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed "Justification by Faith, not by Works; or, The Law condenues. Grace justifies, Rom. iii. 19-22." In the Druft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, it was given unaltered; in that of 1751 it was slightly changed; and in the authorised issue of the Tre. and Paraphe., 1781, No. xli., st. i., ii. were rewritten, but began with the original first line as above; at. iii. was taken from the Draft of 1751; and st. iv. unaltered from Watts. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 100, ii.) these alterations are attributed to him. The use of the 1781 form of the text is far more extensive than that of the original. [J. J.]

Van Alstyne, Frances Jane, Crosby, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was b. at South East, Putnam County, New York, March 24, 1823. When six weeks old she lost her sight. About 1885 she entered the New York City Institution for the Blind. On completing her training she became a teacher therein from 1847 to 1858. In 1858 she was married to Alexander Van Alstyne, a musician, who was also blind. Her first poem was pub. in 1831; and her first volumes of verse as A Blind Girl, and Other Poems, 1844; Monteresy, and Other Poems, 1849; and A Wreath of Columbia's Flowers, 1858. Her first bymn was "We are going we are going" (Death and Burial), which was written for Mr. Bradbury and pub. in the Golden Censer, 1864. From 1853 to 1858 she wrote 20 songs, which were set to must by G. F. Root. Her songs and hymns number some 2,000 or more, and have been published mainly in several of the popular American Sunday school collections, and often under a About 60 have come into nom de plume. Praver. In addition to these hymns, all of which are in C. U. in G. Britain (mainly through I. D. Sankey's Sacred Songs and Solos, the Metho-dist S. S. H. Bk., the Silver Street Sunday Scholar's Companion, and other collections for Sunday schools), there are also "A blessing for you, will you take it?" (Pardon through Jesus); "My song shall be of Jesus (Praise of Jesus); "Now, just a word for Jesus" (Home Missions); "Onward, upward, Christian soldier" (Pressing Heavenward); "Sinner, how thy heart is troubled" (Invita-tion): "Tisa goodly, pleasant land" (Hearen anticipated): and "When the dewy light was fading" (Death anticipated). All of these are in I. D. Sunkoy's Sac. Songs & Solos. Mrs. Van Alstyne's most popular composition is "Safe in the arms of Jesus" (Safety in Jesus). This was written in 1868, at the request of Mr. W. H. Doane, to his well-known melody with which it is inseparably associated, and pub. in Bright Jewels, 1869. Mrs. Van Alstyne's hymns have sometimes been published anonymously; but the greater part are signed by a bewildering number of initials, and nome de plume, including :-

A.; C.; D. H. W.; F.; F. A. N.; F. C.; F. J. C.; A.; C.; D. H. W.; F.; Y. A.; Ella Dale; P. Crosby;
F. J. Crosby; Funnie; Fannie Orosby; Funny; Fanny
Crosby; Funny Van Aistyne; Jenny V.; Mrs. Jenie
Glenn; Mrs. Este Grinley; Miss V.; Miss Viola V. A.; Mrs. V.; Vola. (List kindly supplied by Mr. H. P.
Main, of New York.)

The combined sales of the volumes of songs and hymne named above have amounted in English epeaking countries to millions of copies. Notwithstanding the immense circulation thus given to Mrs. Van Alstyne's bymns, they are, with few exceptions, very weak and poor, their simplicity and cornectness being their redeeming features. Their popularity is largely due to the melodice to which they are wedded.

Since the above was in type we have found that the following are also in C. U. in G. Britain :-

51. Suppose the little cowellp. Value of Little Things.

52. Sweet hour of prayer. The Hour of Prayer.

Of these hymns Nos. 58-62 we have not been able to trace. [J, J,]

Various. It was originally intended that additions to and corrections of articles in this Dictionary should come under this heading. The expension of the work far beyond its original limits, the accumulation of hymns and hymnological works of great value, the discovery of Mes. and books heretofore unknown to the hymnologist, the passing away of a large number of hymnwriters since the printing of this Dictionary was begun in 1880, and the late arrival of some important articles, have however necessitated an Appendix, which will be found at p. 1807. In every case where the reader is referred to Various in this Dictionary the information will be found in that Appendiz. [J. J.]

Vater unser, der du bist. [Lord's Prayer.] In an Erfurt G. B. of 1527, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 545, in 9 st. of 4 l., and Kirioleyson. Tr. as "O cure Father celestiall," by Bp. Coverdale, 1539 (Bemains, 1846, p. 549). TJ. M.1

Vater unser im Himmelreich. [M. Luther. The Lord's Prayer.] This was included in V. Schumann's Geistliche Lieder, Leipzig, 1539, in 9 st. of 6 1, entitled "The Lord's Prayer briefly expounded and turned into metre " (apparently first as a broadsheet with the same title, in 1539; see Wackernagel's Bibliographia, 1835, p. 136); and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 24. Also in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geistliche Lieder, 1854, p. 52; and in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 572. It is a beautiful rendering, and has been by some regarded as Luther's finest hymn. Each of the first eight stanzas amplifies one of the clauses of the Lord's Prayer (omitting the doxology), and the ninth is on the Amen. C. von Winterfeld, in his ed. of Luther's Deutsche Geistlicke Lieder, Leipzig, 1840, gives a facsimile of what he believed to be the autograph original draft of this hymn. Tr. as :-

Vaughan, Charles John, p.p., s. of Mr. Vaughan, Vicar of St. Martin's, Leicester, was b. in 1817, and educated at Rugby, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1838 as Senior Classic. He was for sometime Fellow of his College, and sucoessively Vicar of St. Martin's, Leicester; Head Master of Harrow; Vicar of Doucaster; Master of the Temple; and Desn of Llandaff (1879). He has also been Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, and Chancellor of York Cathedral. In 1882 he was appointed Deputy Clerk of the Closet. Although so widely known as a Scholar, Theologian, and Preacher, his hymn-writing is very limited. Practically he is known by one hymn only: "Lord, Whose temple once did glisten" (Laying Foundation Stone of a Church), which was written at Cambridge about 1887, to the tune "The German Emperor" (H. A. & M., 1875, No. 292, 1st tune), and was used at the laying of the Foundation stone of Trinity Church, Chesterfield. It was pub. in Alford's Ps. & Hye., 1844, No. 115, in 4 st. of 8 l., and was given for "The Consecration of a Church." It is in several modern collections.

Vaughan, Henry, w.D., commonly called "The Silurist," was one of twin-brothers born of a titled family at Newton, Llansaintfliad, in 1621. After studying under the Rev. Matthew Herbert, Rector of Llangattock, he proceeded to Jesus College, Oxford, in 1638; but through the national troubles of those days, his studies, in common with those of his brother, were interrupted, and they had to leave the University. Subsequently he en-tered the medical profession, and practised at Brecon and at Newton. He d. April 23, 1695. His published works include, Poems with the Tenth Satire of Juvenal Englished, 1646; Olor Iscanus, 1651; The Mount of Olives, 1652, &c. As a religious poet he followed very closely the peculiarities of George Herbert, of whose writings he was a great admirer. His bost and most devotional poems were written during a severe affliction, and were pub. in his Silex Scintillars. After being almost forgotten for more than 200 years, his quaint, thoughtful, devotional, and, in many instances, beautiful poems, are receiving attention at the hands of hymnal compilers and others. The title of the work in which these pieces appeared is :-

peared is:—

Vaughan, Rowland, was a member of en ancient Welsh family in Merionethshire. He received his University education at Jesus College, Oxford. His name stands pre-eminent among the contemporary gentry of Wales, for devoting his telents to the improvement of his poorer countrymen. He translated several excellent works; and besides being a good prose writer, he was also a good poet. His tr. of the Veni Creator Spiritus, "Tyr'd Yebryd Glan," and his Galarnad Pechadus are still in great favour in Wales. His mansion at Caergai was burnt to the ground by the Republican forces from Montgomeryshire, and part of his estates confiscated. His attachment to the King's cause brought upon him [W. G. T.] great sufferings.

Venez Jésus, mon salutaire. *Antoin*nette Bourignon. [Renouncing all for Christ.] This hymn was written, circa 1640, and expressed her determination to live for Christ alone, a resolution which she came to whilst suffering from her father's anger because she refused to marry a man whom he had chosen for her. It is given in her Works, Amsterdam, 1686, in 5 st. of 8 l. Tr. as:—

Come Baviour, Jesus, from above. Dr. Osborn, in The Postical Works of John and Charles Wes-ley, 1808-72, vol. i. p. 110, says in a note to this tr., which is given there from the Wesley Hys. and Sac. Poems, 1739, p. 123, in 10 st. of 4 l.

and Sac. Poems, 1739, p. 123, in 10 at. of 4 l.

"This, and the 'Farawell to the World,' p. 17, were probably furnished to the compliers by Mr. Byrom, of Manchester (see 'Byrom and the Wesleys,' by the Rev. Dr. Hoole [1364], pp. 17, 27), and translated by him from the French of Maiatan de Bourlagnon. The copy of 'A Hymn to Jeans,' which is found in his 'Miscellansous Poems' (Manchester, 1773), vol. il. p. 211, differs from that given above only in the title ('Renouncing all for Christ'), and in each verbal alterations as the superior teste and Judgment of the Wesleys would dictate. The 2th and 16th verses, in both Byrom's and Wesley's copies are tinged with that mysticism to which the preface [to the Hyu, and Sac. Poems, 1732] refers; and Wesley has improved on himself as well as an Byrom in the last addition of v. 9 (that in the Large Hymn-Dock, 1780), where, instead of 'Nor heaven nor earth,' we read 'Nothing on earth.'"

The references to Byrom and the Wesleys are these:-

(1) p. 17. Under date, "Manchester, March 3rd, 1738," Byrom writes to C. Wesley, and in his letter says:—"As your brother (J. Wesley) has brought so many hymns translated from the French, you will have a sufficient mumber, and no occasion to increase them by the small addition of Mademoiselle Bourignon's two little pieces. I desire you to favour my present weakness, if I judge wrong, and not to publish them."

(2) p. 27. Under date of "April 26th, 1728," Byrom writes to his son:—"They [J. & C. Wesley] have both together printed a book of byrons [the Hys. & Stc. Poent, 1739], almongst which they have inserted two of Maden Bourignon's, the of which they call "A Farewell to the World, translated from the French; and the other, 'Re-nouncing all for Christ,' translated from the French, nouncing all for Christ, translated from the French, They have introduced them by a preface against what they call Mystic writers (not naming any particular author), for whom they say that they had once a great veneration, but think themselves obliged very solemnly to acknowledge their error, and to gnard others against the like, which they do by certain reasons that I do not say the reserve. see the reason of."

We regard these facts and quotations as good evidence in support of Byrom's authorship, notwithstanding that his Poems were pub. not by himself but by another ten years after his death.

In 1780 J. Wesley included his amended version in 8 st, of 4 l. in the Wes, H, Bk, No. 276. Since then it has passed into numerous collections in G. Britain and America in various forms varying from 4 to 8 stanzas, and all from J. Wesley's text.

Veni Creator Spiritus, Mentes tuorum visits. [Whitsuntide.] In annotating this great hymn we shall deal (i.) with the MSS, and the various forms of the Text; (ii.) with its Authorship and Date; and lastly (iii.) with the differences found in its Use.

i. MSS. and Text. From the 12th cent. opwards uss. of this hymn are innumerable, as it is commonly found in the Hymnols, Breviaries, &c., of almost all churches of the West. Beforce the 12th cent. copies are much less plentiful. In order to determine the text, seven mas, all assigned to the 11th cont. have been collated as follows:-

Three now in the British Museum, vis., Jel. A., vi. f. 53 (Hymnal), Vep. D., zil. f. 77 (Hymnal), Add: 30548, f. 159 (Mozarabic Breviary); one at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, No. 391, page 251 (Faster with hymna); one in the Bodlelan, Littery, Mic. 320, f. 32 (Hymnal); one at Burham, S. ill. 33, L 27 (Hymnal); and one in the Vatican at Rome, Paint, 30, (Paster with hymne).

Among other ancient mss. it is found

In two Rheiman mes., now in the Kantonal-Hibliothek at Zürich, viz. No. 111, f. 1725, of the 10th cent., and No. 91, f. 149, of the 11th cent., in the latter assigned to Vespers; in a ms. of the 11th cent. at St. Gall. No. 387, page 215 (the earliest St. Gali Ms. in which the Librarian, Herr littenson, has been able to find it); in a Ms. of the 12th cent, in the Bril. Mas., Arundel, 1557, 1575 (Pasiter with Hymne), &c.

In other early was, its existence and use are recognised, but only the first words of the hymn are given. Four such uss., all of the 11th cent., may be mentioned, viz. :-

Three in the British Museum, Harl. 2961, f. 1025 (Collectarium and Hymnal), Nitus D. xxvil. f. 78 (Book of Offices, &c., circa 1018), Add, 30850, f. 137b (Mozarabio Autlphonary); and one in the Bodielan, Letting, Misc., 369, f. (Ponifical).

From these sources the text is derived thna:-

(a) The Original Text and the Dozologies. The text of the eaven MRS. cited above is as follows:

Veni Creator Spiritus. Mentes tuerum visita,

Imple superna gratia Quae Tu creasti pectora. Ħ.

" Qui Paraelitus dicerie, Donum Dei altiesimi, Fons vivus, ignie, chari-

Et apiritalle unctio.

" Tu septiformis munere, Dextrae Del Tu diglina, Tu rite promisso Patris, Sermonê ditas guttura.

" Accepde lumen sensibus, Infunde amoram cordiնա, Infirma nostri corporis Virtute firmans perpeti.

" Hostem repelles longins, Pacemque dones proti-995, Ductore sic Te praevio Vitemus omne noxium.

" Per Te sciemus, da, Patrem, Patrem,
Noscamus atque Fillum,
Te atriusque Spiritum
Credamus cumi tempore."

These six stanzas clearly form the original text, and in some of the MSS. cited (e.g. Add. 30848, and Palat. 30), in the Add. 18801, f. 128b (a Collectarium and Hymnal of the 12th cent.), and in some of the early printed Breviaries, e.g. the Augsburg Brev. of 1493, Basel Brev. of 1498, &c., &c., nothing more is added. Many MSS. indeed contain a doxology, the most usual being :-

> " Sit hans Patri cum Filio, Sancto simul Paraelito, Nobisque mittat Filius Charlema Sancti Spiritus."

The extraneous character of the doxology is however betrayed by the quantity of the penultimate of Paraclilus, and by the great variety of such doxologies, almost every church having its own special one. The doxology in the Durham Hymnal is:—

" Sit lans Patri com Genito. Amborum et Peraclito, Profes at home promiserat, Nobis modoque tribuat."

In the Roman Brew, of 1570 and 1632 the doxology reads:---

" Deo Patri cit gloria, Et Fillo, Qui a suortula Surrexit, ac Paraclito, In semplierna (sacculorum) saccula."

But whatever the form was it was, as a rule, mercly a general develogy common to all the Pentecostal hymns, as indeed is often indicated by a rubric such as "Sic terminantur Hymni usque ad Vesperas Sabbati sequentis" (Brev. Rom.). In the Arundel MS. 155, only the words "Sit lans Patri," are added; and in the Vesp. D., xil., "Deo Patri sit gloria."

The variations in the six stanzas of the lext proper are few and of small importance, viz. in st. iii. 11. 3, 4, some MSS. give "promissum" and "ditans," and in st. iv. 1. 4, some MSS. read "perpetim." In the Roman Brev. of 1632 the variations introduced are :-

ii. l. l. Qui diceris Paraciilus. ii. l. 2. Altissimi donum Bei. iii. l. 2. Digitus Paternae desterae, vl. i. 3. Tegas utrinsque Spiritum.

These variations however rest on no Ma. authority, but are merely due to the tasteless revision of the Breviory hymns made in 1628-81, under Urban vitt., and are simply somewhat clumsy attempts to improve the rhythm and scansion. That in st. ii. l. l, is specially to be regretted, as it destroys one of the most characteristic features of the hymn, viz. the way in which it preserves the correct quantity of the penultimate of Paraclitus, contrary to the general practice in Latin.

(8) Additions to the Original Text. In some mes, an additional stanza is given between st. v. and vi. as follows:-

" Da gaudiorum praemia, Da gratiarum munera, Dissolve litis vincula, Astringe pacis feeders."

This is contained e.g. in two was, in the Bodleian (Land Misc., 468 f. 4, of the 12th cent., and Liturg. Misc., 370, f. 117, oirca 1840), and in some of the early printed books, e.g. I may well have taken place econ after. That the hymn was the Basel Brev. of 1493. But it is wanting in the earliest mes. (e.g. it is not in the Durham Hymnol; Verp. D., xii.; Jul. A., vi.; Liturg. Misc., 320; Palat. 80; C. C. C., 391), and the true ending of the hymn is st. vi., which forms the real doxology, no other being needed.

Another extremeous stanza is sometimes inserted after st. vi., viz. :-

" Dodum merata pestera, Tua replesti gratia, Dimitte nunc petcamina, Et da quieta tempora."

This is found in the Durham Hymnal, but it has no business in the text, and really belongs to the "Beata nobis gaudia" (p. 190, i.). In the Sarum Brev. it is attached, along with the doxology, "Sit laus Patri cum Filio," to other Pentecostal hymns.

There is thus no doubt that the hymn should really consist of the 24 lines printed together as above, ending with the sianza "Per Te scianus, da, Patrem." We may add that in a ms. circa 1100, in the Brit, Mus. (Add, 18302, f. 24), a rubric regarding the "Veni Creator Spiritus" is followed by a hymn in four st., viz. :-

I. Te nunc Deue piissime. II. Dudum sacrata pectora. III. Hie, Christe, nunc Paraciltus, iv. Sit laus Patri cum Filio.

Of these at il., iv. are noted above, at i. in from the "Beata nobis gaudia," and at iii. is given in the Durkom Hymnol as part of the "Jam Christus astra accorderat" (p. 576, i.).

ii. Authorship and Date. It is curious how very little is known of the authorship of this hymn, which has taken deeper hold of the Western Church than any other mediaeval hymn, the Te Deum alone excepted. The real author is as yet unknown, but it has been ascribed (a) to the Emperor Charles the Great (Charlemagns), (8) to St. Ambrose, (7) to Gregory the Great, and to (8) Ehabasus Maurus. We may discuss these in this order.

Mastrus. We may discuss these in this order.

(a) Charlemagns. The best known and most widely accepted opinion is that which sacribes it to the Emperor Charles the Great. Even Dom Gneranger (Frastinsions Leistrytiques, 2nd ed., vol. i. p. 119, Paria, 1878) repeats it without qualification. This is however a legend, and talk to pieces at once when traced to its source. The original authority is Ekkebard v., Monk of St. Gall, in his Vite Sancti Notheri, written circa 1920. There, in chapter xviii., Ekkehard says:—

"It is told of the blessed man [Nother] that one day when he went through the dormitory be listened, for there was hard by a mill, whose wheel was revolving slowly for lack of water, and, groening, gave out sounds something like words. And the man of God, hearing this, straightway was in the spirit, and produced that most beautiful hymn, and gave utterance to the honey-sweet melody from the same kind Spirit which possessed thir: I mean the Sequence on the Holy Spirit Sancti Spiritus adelt nobis gratis' [p. 968, I.]. And when he had completed it be sent it as a present to the Emperor Charles the Great, who was then probably staying at Acaben. And the same Christian Emperor cent back to blin by the measunger that with which the same Spirithed Inspired him, viz., the hymn 'Veni, Creator Spiritus." Spiritue.

Spiritue."
Here we have the original story which has spread so widely, and has been so generally accepted. The words in italics above are really found in Ekkehard's autograph me, at St. Gall (No. 556, p. 342), but are a manifest blunder, for Charles the Great (Charlemagne) died in 614, and Notker was born about it years after, circueto. The Charles to whom the St. Gall tradition really referred was probably Charles the Fat, and such an interchange of courteries is not at all unlikely to have taken place between Notker and that Emperor. Charles the Fat paid Notker special attention during his visit to St. Gall in 833, and the incident which Ekkehard relates gary well have taken place soon after. That the hymn was actually composed by Charles the Fat does not seem probable. If however this tradition has any foundation of fact it implies that the hymn was at that time newly composed, or at least had lately come into the Emperor's hand. This suggests that it was written in the last quarter of the 5th cent., and by a person who was in some way connected with the court of the Emparer of

(β) St. Ambroso. Like most other important Latin hymnethis also has been ascribed to St. Ambrose, e.g. by Garquit. It appears as his in some early printed books. e.g. in the Brestorium Christianum, Leipzig, 1975, and is included in some of the earlier editions of his works, e.g. Paris, 1814. It is not however claimed for him by the Benedictine editors of his works, nor by Biraghi in his Inni sinceri e Carmi di Sant' Ambrogio, 1862, and there is really no evidence whatever of his authorship. It is true that it bears traces of his influence. The

" Accende lamen sensibus.

"Accende tamers sensions," Infunds amorem cordibus," recall the words "Infunds lumen cordibus" of the very sacient bymn "0 lux beats Triottes" (p. 645, ii.), which is probably his work; while Il. 3, 4 of st. iv. are borrowed directly from the "Veri Redemptor gentium" (p. 1211, Il.), which is certainly his. But the mere fact that the broader than Hose from a wall-house home. the first increase when the strom a well-known hymn of his is no evidence whatever that as a whole it is his work. The hymns of St. Ambrose soon became the common property of the Church, and later writers had no scruples about making free use of them in their own compositions. The "Yen! Creator" is secribed to St. Ambrose by no ancient writer, and the ascription to him may be set aside without hesitation.

(y) Gregory the Great. More, i. p. 242 (followed by Kock, i. p. 14), ascribes it to Gregory the Great, on the following grounds:—(1) Its correspondence with his known bymns and his other works. (2) Its classical metre, with occasional rhymns. (3) The correct quantity of the penuitimate of Paraclitat, as showing a knowledge of Greek. These arguments have a certain value, and Gregory is in himself not an unlikely person to have written the hymn. But had it been the work of a writer such repute as Gregory in the 6th cent. we might fairly have expected to come across some early notices of it. It is however attributed to him by no early writer, and is not alloued to by Bede (d. 738) in his "De arts mentica," where many early hymns are mentioned. It is quite precarious to sesign it, on purely subsective metrics," where many early hymns are mentioned. It is quite precarious to sesign it, on purely subjective grounds, and in the absence of any external testimony, to grounds, and in the ansence of any external sesumony, so early and so celebrated a writer as Gregory.

(5) Rhabanus Maurus, sometime Archbishop of Mains (b. circa 776, d. 885). Christopher Brower, a learned Jesuit, included the "Veni Creator" in his edition of Nhabanus's Poesseta, Mains, 1817, p. 74. But he was evidently not at all certain that it was really by Rhabanus, and does not print the text in full. He gives no definite information regarding the Ms. which he used, and it does not seem to have been or any green summany. Some of the hymns in this MR. are certainly not by Rhabanus, and his claim to the rest is very shadowy. The MR. contained 29 hymns, but of these Professor E. L. Dürmuler, in his critical edition of the Carpaina of Rhabanus (Pociae Latina acet Carolinia, vol. II., Berlin, 1884), has only seen reason enough to scrept two, both of and it does not seem to have been of any great antiquity. Rhebanus (Poetae Latini acut Carotini, vol. it., Berlin, 1884), has only seen reason enough to accept two, both which he gives among the pieces "incertae originia," and he did not find sufficient ground to include the "Veni Creator" even among the poems doubtfully ascribed to Rhabanua. It is indeed true that in Rhabanus's prose work De Universe, Br. 1, chapter iii. (Migne's PP. Lat. cxi. cols. 23-28) there are some phrases which resemble portions of this byran; but Mone, i. p. 251, and Abp. Trench, in his Sac. Lat. Poetry (ed. 1864, pp. 175, 185) give quife as close parallels from the writings of Si. Augustine and others. Augustine and others.

Here we are compelled to leave the question. The evidence is too scanty to draw a positive conclusion. The hymn is clearly not the work of St. Ambrose nor of Charles the Great. Nor is there sufficient evidence to allow us to secribe it either to Gregory the Great, to Rhabanus Maurus, or to any of the ecclesiastics connected with the court of Charles the Fat. The references to the hymn do not help us much in determining the authorship, as the following facts will show. The earliest definite allusion to it (apart from the statement of Ekkehard), is that it was need at a Synod at Ebelina in 1949 (see C. J. Hefsle's Conciliongerchichte, vol. iv. 2nd ed., 1879, p. 729). Daniel, i. p. 213 (ed. 1855, p. 209) indeed says that it had been used at the "Delation of St. Marculfus" in 898, and to prove this gives a quotation which he professes to derive from the Annales Ord, S. Benedicis, ed. Mathlion, com. vi. p. 532. But his date and his reference are equally at fault. The quotation is really from the Acta Sunctions Ordinis S. Benedicis, ed. D'Achery and Mabilian, Saco. iv. pt. li. (vol. vt.) p. 543. Faris, 1680, and forms port of the secount of the reception of the relics of St. Marculius (Marcul) at Paruma (Perume on the Somme), not in 1833, but in 1102. Nor has the hymn yet been found in any Mas. earlier than the latter part of the 10th cent. Mose, i. p. 242, indeed apsaks of it as being found in Mas. earlier than Charles (who d. 814), but the earliest Ms. which he used is of the 14th cent., and his statement is probably the result of a mistaken inference from Annales Ord, S. Benedicti, ed. Mabillon, tom, vi. p. 532. is probably the result of a mistaken inference from Thomasius. It is true that Thomasius frequently cites Vetican ass, of the 5th cent, and it is also true that beincludes the "Veni Creator" in bis Hymnarium. Sut in this case it is not allowable to put two and two together, for Thomseins, is 375, does not cits any of these early Mas. as giving the text of the "Veni Creator." The closing lines:-

have been thought to imply that the hymn was written after the Council of Aschen (Aquisgramum or Air-la-Chapelle) in 893, when the doctrine of the Double Pro-cession was definitely promigated. The hymn however, does not emphasize the doctrine in any way, and similar language was used in the Western Church from a very early period,

iii. Use. In mediaeval times the singing of this hymn was generally marked with special dignity, by the ringing of bells, the use of incense, of lights, of the best vestments, &c. Its use in the Hour Services at Pentecost can be traced back, with tolerable certainty, to the 10th cent.* The earlier Mss. for the most part allot it only to Vespers (so Jul. A., vi.; Vesp. D., xii.; the Durham Hymnal; Liturg. Misc., 320), and so late as the 14th cent. Radulf, Dean of Tongres, giving the "Veni Creator" for Vespers, says that at the lesser hours "more Romano" the hymn was never changed (Hittorp, Cologne, 1568, col. 1126). But some time before this date it had certainly been adopted in some churches at Tierce, for a St. Alban's Breviary of the 12th cent. (Brit. Mus. Reg. 2 A. xx.) gives it for this service and not for Vespers; and this was also tho Surum use. Its use at Tierce (in accordance with Acts ii. 15) is said to have originated in the monastery of Cluny, being traced to St. Hugh, Abbot of Cluny (b. 1024, d. 1169) by an anonymous writer cited in the Bollandist Acta Sanctorum, for April 29 (see Annales Ordinis S. Benedicti, vol. v. p. 530). In two Mozambic service-books of the 11th cent., now in the British Museum, viz. a Breviary (Add. 30848), and an Antiphonary (Add. 30850), it is seeigned to Lauds. It is also ordered for use at Lauds, as well as Vespers, in a German Breviary, circa 1100, now in the British Mu-seum (Add. 18302); but otherwise its use at Laude seems to be quite exceptional.

In the Ordination Service its use has not been traced earlier than the 11th cent. It is not found in the Postifical of Egbert (circa 950, printed by the Surtees Society, vol. xxvii.,

A clear indication that the hymn was only beginning "A clear indication that the hymn was only beginning to be known in the 10th cent. Is furnished by G. M. Dreves in his Hymnarius Moistacenets, 1883, p. 93. He prints the text from a we of the 16th rent, but there it does not occur in the regular series of hymna, and had evidently only recently come into use at the Abbey (Benedictine) of Moissac (department of Turn et Garonne). This was, seems to present several textual variations peculiar to itself.

1858), nor in numerous ancient services given by Martene and by Morinus; while in some was the reference to it is added, by a later hand, in the margin. It is however in at least three Postificals of the 11th cent., viz. one of Soissons given by Martene (Ordo vil., vol. ii. p. 896); that in the Bodleian as. Litting. Mrsc. 359; and Samson's Postifical C. C. C., 146, f. 119, perhaps the earliest instance of its occurrence in a Pontifical. In the Sens Missal of 1529, £ clvii., it is given as part of the pricet's preparation for celebrating Mass; and so in the Sorum Missal of 1497 (Burntisland reprint, 1861, ff. col. 577); while in the York and Hereford Missals it is ordered to be sung after the Lavabo (see W. Maskell's Ancient Liturgy, pp. 4, 92, 93). In modern Roman Service-books it is given in the Breviary, for Verpers and Tierce at Pentecost; and in the Pontifical for the Ordination of Priests. Consecration of Bishops, Laying the foundation stone of a Church, the Consecration of a Church, the "Ordo ad Synodum," and various other services.

It may be added that a full commentary on the theological bearings, and ritual uses of this hymn, will be found in the Abbé S. G. Pimont's Hymnes du Bréviaire Romain, vol. it., pt. ii., Paris, 1884, pp. 125-143. [E. C. S. G.]

The "Veni Creator Spiritus, Mentes" has frequently been tr. into German. Through two of these versions it has passed into English as follows:-

i. Kemm, Gatt Schöpfor, heiliger Geist. This is a full and faithful version by M. Luther, 1st pub. in Eyn Enchiridion, Erfurt, 1524. Thence in Wackernagel, iii, p. 14; also in Schircke's ed. of Luther's Geistl. Lieder, 1854, p. 25, and in the Unn. L. S. 1851, No. 172. Tr. as:-

1. Come, Thou Creator God. As an ode of 68 lines by Miss Fry, in her Hys. of the Reforma-tion, 1845, p. 26. From this a cento, in 5 st. of 8.M., beginning "O Holy Spirit now," was included in Whittemore's Suppl. to All H. Ble., 1860, and the Meth. N. Conn. H. Bk., 1863.

2. Greater Spirit, Holy Devs. In full by R. Massie in his Martin Luther's Spir. Songs, 1854, p. 35. Repeated in Reid's Praise Bh., 1872, and the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

il. Zu dir, Geist Schöpfer, fiehen wir. This is a free version, in 8 st. of 4 l., by J. A. Schlegel, 1st pub. in the 2nd ed., 1772, of his Sammlung geistlicher Gesänge (1st ed. 1766), p. 99, entitled "On the Names and Gifts of the Holy Ghost. The old Ambrosian hymn, 'Venl Creator Spiritus,' newly translated. A Whitsunfide hymn." The form tr. is that in the Berlin G. B., 1827, No. 287, which is considerably altered and reduced to 5 st. The fr. is:-

To Thee, Greater Spirit, now we fee. By J. Saliebury, to in 1877, and 1st pub. as No. 246 in the Bapt. Hyl., 1879. [J. M.]

The tra, of the Veni Creator Spiritus direct from the Latin into English have been numerous and important. They include the following :--

I. Come Hely Chest, eternal God. This tr. in C.M. in the Ordering of Priests in The Book of Common Prayer, was apparently printed in the Ordinal of 1549, and certainly in the 2nd book of Edward 6th, where it is given in 7 st. of 8 l. (Brit. Mus.). As it is too long to reproduce in full, we give the first and last stanzas only :-

(1) "Come buly ghost eternall god Proceeding from Bothe fro the father and the some, the God of peace and lone. Visite our myndes, and into ve thy heavenly grace inspire, That in all truths and Godlinesse, we Mais have troe desire.

(7) "Lande and praise be to the father, and to the sonne equal), holy Spirite also, one God creternall,
And to the holy Spirite also, one God creternall,
And prate we that the onely Sonne, voucheste his Spirite to sende,
To al that do professe his name unto the worldes

A tr. which seems to be a variation of this text (but regarded by some as an older fr.) is found in The whole Pealter, translated into English metre, &c., John Daye, Loudon, N.D. (Brit, Mus., Lincoln Cathedral Library, &c.).

[Pasiters, English, p. 917, § ix.] This is known as Archibishop Parker's Pasiter, and was written by him whilst in exile, 1558-1558 (Absolvi Psalterium versum metrico lingua vulgari, Parker's Diary, 1557). The tr. seems to be the preceding rendered into more even feet. It is in 16 st. of 4 l., of which st. i., ii., and zv. and zvi. are as follows:

- (1) "Come bely Ghost: eternali God, Which doost from God proceeds. The father fyrit: and ske the soune, One God as we do reads.
- (2) "Oh visite thou: our minds and harts, Thy heavenly grace inspire: That we in truth: and godlinelle, May (et our whole desire." . • .
- (15) "Be laude to God: the father bye, And God his fonne prayle ye: Be prayfe to God: the holy fpirite, One God in Trinity,
- (16) "Pray we that Carlin: the faviour, Vouchafe his parita to fend:
 To all which tree: professe his name,
 Till all the world doth ende."

The next form of this er. is that in "The Ordering of Priests" in The Book of Common Prayer, and given therein in 1662. This is also in 16 st. of 4 l., of which st. i., ii., and zv. and zvi. read as in modern copies of the Prayer Book :-

- (1) "Come, Holy Ghost, eternal God, Proceeding from above, Both from the Father and the Son, The God of peace and love;
- (2) "Visit our minds, into our hearts Thy beavenly grace impire; That truth and godfiness we may Pursue with full desire."
- ٠ (15) "To God the Father land and praise, And to His blessed Son, And to the Holy Spirit of grace, Co-equal Three in One.
- (16) "And pray we, that our only Lord Would please His Spirit to send Ou all that shall profess His Name From issue to the world's and."

From this text two or three contos, all | beginning with st. i., have been adopted by a few hymnal compilers.

In Mercer's Ch. Psalter & H. Bk., 1854 and later eds. this tr. is divided into three parts, Pt. ii. beginning with st. vii., "O Holy Ghost, into our minds Send down Thy heavenly light," and Pt. iii. with st. xii., "Of strife and of dissension." Pt. ii. is sometimes used as a separate hymn, W. J. Blew reads. "O Holy Ghost, into our souls."

3. Come, Holy Chost, our souls inspire. By Bp. John Cosin. This is in his Collection of Private Devotions in the Practice of the Ancient Church, called the Hours of Frager, &c., 1627. This book was modelled on the Primers which were extensively used during the reigns of Henry VII. and Elizabeth. It contains devotions and a hymn for each of the Canonical Hours, together with other devotions, hymns, and prayers (see Reprint by J. G. & F. Rivington, London, 1838). This tr. is appointed for the "Third Hour," and is given in 18 lines. It was also given in an unaltered form in "The Ordering of Priests" and "The Consecration of Bishops" in The Book of Common Prayer, 1662. This and the C. M. fr. above are the only metrical hymne which have been legally sanctioned in the Church of England by both Church and State. In the hymn books of the last century Bp. Cosin's tr. is rarely found; but in modern collections it is largely used, and in almost every instance in an unaltered form. In the Gospel Magazine for 1774, p. 449, it is given as a "Hyinn to the Holy Spirit, modernized from the Office for Ordination." The opening lines are :-

"Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire, And warm with uncreated fire."

The signature "Minimus" is that of A. M. Toplady. This "modernized" form of the text has never come into use, and was excluded, even by Toplady himself, from his Ps. & Hys., 1776.

3. Creater Spirit, by Whose aid. By J. Dryden. This appeared in his Miscellancous Poems, pt. fil., 1693, and the Primer of 1706 and 1732, in 7 st. of unequal length, numbering 39 lines in all. It is found in numerous collections, both of the past and the present centuries, but always in an altered and abbreviated form. One of the first to adapt it for congregational purposes was J. Wesley, who included it in his Ps. & Hys., 1741, in an abbreviated form. He was followed by G. Whitefield, 1753, A. M. Toplady, 1776, and others, until the adoption of the hymn became general. The variations which have been introduced into the text are so many and various that it is almost impossible to set them forth in an intelligible manner. The text of given hymnal which may be consulted should be compared with the original in the Lyra Brit., 1867, p. 209. In some American collec-tions it begins "O Source of uncreated light."

4. Come, Holy Chast, Crester come, And visit all the souls of Thine. By Tate and Brady in the Supplement to the New Version of the Psalms, &c., circa 1700 (3rd ed., 1702). See p. 801, i. This is in LM. in 28 l. It is given in the Scottish Hyl., 1870, as a tr. by Miss Winkworth, in error. It is also in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Church, mostly Primitive, 1841, No. 50.

5. Come, Holy Chest, Creator, come, Inspire the [these] seeds of Thine. Tate and Brady. This is the C.M. version in the Supplement as above, circa 1700 (3rd ed., 1702). It also appears in J.

Chandler's Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 91, with alterations in the last stauza only; and again in his Hys. of the Church, mostly Primitive, 1841, No. 50, and in each instance without any judication of its source. Hence it is usually attributed to Chandler, but in error.

6. Roly Spirit, gently come. By W. Hammond, in his Ps., Hys., and Spiritual Songs, &c., 1745, p. 205, in 5 st. of 8 l. This was given in an unaltered form in the 1864 ed. of Mercer's Ch.

Psatter & H. Bk., No. 234.

7. Come, Hely Chest, Creater bleat, Come, visit Thou each willing broast. By Bp. R. Mant in his Ancient Hys., 1837, p. 62, in 7 st. of 4 l. (ed. 1871, p. 110). Its use is limited.

8. Come, Hely Ghost, Creator, come. The 2nd stanza of this tr. in the Irvingite Hys. for the Charches, 1864 and 1871, given as "Tr. by C., 1845," begins: "Thou, Who art named the Paraclete, The heavenly gift, &c." We have not found it elsewhere.

9. Come, Hely Chest, Creater, come! The dark-ness of our minds illume. By F. W. Faber, in his Jesus and Mary, 1849, in 7 st. of 4 l., and again in his Hymns, 1862. In the New Mitre Hymnal, 1875, it is given as "O come, Creator Spirit, come," from the 1871 ed. of Faber's Hymne, No. 40, and ahridged to 5 st. of 4 l.

10. Come, O Creator Spirit blest! And in our souls take up Thy rest. By E. Caswall in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 103, in 7 st. of 4 t., and in his Hymns, 1873, p. 58. It is given in several modern hymnals.

11. Come, O Creator Spirit! Visit this [these] soul of Thine. By E. Caswall. This tr. of a slightly different text from the above, which is from the Rom. Brev., also appeared in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 291, and in his Hymns, 1873, p. 133.

12. Greator, Spirit, Lord of grace. By R. Campbell, in his Hys. and Authens, &c., 1850, p. 78, in 7 st. of 4 l. with ll. 1, 2, of st. v. from Dryden. This is found, slightly altered, in a few modern hymnals. It is also in O. Shipley's Annus Sanctus, 1884, p. 170.

13. Come, Holy Ghost, Creator blest, And visit every faithful breast. By June E. Leeson in her Paraphrases & Hys., 1853, p. 81, in two parts. Pt. ii. beginning: "Come, Holy Ghost, with sacred fire.

14. Come, Holy Ghost, Creator, come, Down from Thy beavenly throne. This is given in the Irringite Hys. for the Churches, 1864 and 1876, as a "Tr. by J. E. L., 1852," i.e. Jane E. Leeson, as above, No. 13.

15. Come, Holy Chost, Creator blest, And in our souls serenely rest. In the Catholic Psaimist, 1858, p. 65, and probably by T. J. Potter.

16. Come, Holy Ghost, Creator blast, Vouchsafe within our souls to reat. This is given in H. A. & M., 1861, and again in 1875. In the index to the latter edition it is said to be by the "Rev. E. Caswall and the Compilers." The Compilers, however, were indebted to Bp. Mant and R. Campbell for one fourth of their cents.

17. Come, Holy Spirit, come, Inspire the souls of Thine. This tr. was given anonymously in the Parish H. Bk., 1863, No. 69. It is apparently Caswall's tr. in 7 st. (No. 11 above) rewritten in S.M. It is the only S.M. tr. of the Vent Creator with which we are acquainted. It was repeated in the Parish H. Bk., 1875.

18. Come, Roly Chost, Creator, come, From Thy bright heaving throne. This appeared anonymously in the Hys. for the Year, 1867, and several later Roman Catholic collections.

We have also seen two or three additional references to American tra., but have been unable to verify them.

The great similarity which is found in the majority of these trs. suggests that many of the later translators were very much indebted to their predecessors for the tersoness and vigour of their renderings. This enggestiveness is most apparent in the more striking passages of the hymn. [J. J.]

Veni, jam veni, benignissime. (Wkitsuntida] Mone. No. 188, gives this, in 26 lines, from a 12th cent. Ms. at Mainz. It is almost identical with a portion of the Oratio

Augustine (Venice, 1553, f. 11). The passage in St. Aneelm is :-

"Veni jam, veni, benignissime delentis animae consolator in opportunitatinus, et in tribuiationibus adjutor.
Veni, mundator scelerum, thrator vulnerum. Veni, fortitudo fragilium, relevator labentium; veni, humiium doctor, superborum destructor. Veni, orphanorum nus pater, viduarum duleis judex. Veni, spes panporum, refocillator deficientium. Veni, navigantium sidus, naufragantium portus. Veni, onnium vivenidum singilare decus, morientium unics salus. Veni Sanctissime Spiritus, veni et miserere mei," &c.

It is tr. as:-

1. Come Thou, C come, Bweetest and Kindliest. By G. Monlitrie, in his Hys. and Lyrics, 1867, p. 143; the Propiets H., 1867, No. 187; and the Hysmary, 1872. 2. Come, yes and quickly come. By S. W. Duffield, in his Latin Hysma Writers, &c., 1869. [J. M.]

Veni Redemptor gentium [omnium], St. Ambrose. [Christmas.] This is one of the twelve hymns assigned to St. Ambrose by the Benedictine editors. It is plainly referred to as the work of St. Ambrose by St. Augustino (Sermo 372), and is definitely cited as his by Pope Celestine, at a Council held at Rome, 430: by Faustus, who in 455 became Bp. of Rhegium (Riez in France), in his Epistola ad Gratum diaconum; by M. A. Cassiodorus (d. 575), in his commentary on the Psalms; and by other early writers. The text in 7 st. is in Daniel, i. No. 10, with further notes at iv. pp. 4, 353 (quoting at length the references by St. Augustine, Pope Celestine, Faustus and Cassiodorus, and citing it as in a 9th cent. Ms. at Bern); in Mone, No. 30, and others. Sometimes a stanza is prefixed, as follows:-

"Intende qui regie Israel, Super cherubin qui sedes, Appare Ephraem, coram excita Potentiam tuam, et veni."

Celetime and Cassiodorus however cite the bymn as beginning " Veni Redemptor gentium"; and this stanza does not appear to be found in any ass. earlier than the does not appear to be found in any size. Earter than the 14th cent, and has obtained no currency save in the Cistercian Breviaries. In any case these lines are not by St. Ambrose, for they are simply the Vulgate of Ps. IXXX., which begins: "Qui regit Bread intende; qui deducis velut ovem, Joseph. Qui sedes super cherubius, manifestare corons. Epivarius, Benjamin at Manuscercita potentiam them, et veni, ut salvos facias nos."

The hymn is found in the Sarum, York, Aberdeen, Mozarabic of 1502, and other Breviaries; generally assigned to Christmas Eve or Christmas Day. But it is not in the Roman Breviary, and can hardly be said to be in use at the present day, a somewhat upfortunate ecclesiastical prudery having set aside this noble composition. It must however be confessed that a strictly literal English version is hardly desirable for modern congregational use. The imagery is partly borrowed from Ps. zix. [W. A. S.]

Mons, No. 30, gives the "Veni Redemptor" text from a Reichenau Ms. of the 9th cent., a Tries of the 8th or 9th, a Munich of the 10th cent., &c. (prefixing the st. "Intende qui regia" from MSS. of the 14th cent, at Karlsruhe and Lichtenthal). Thomasius, ii. p. 371, cites it as in two Vatioan was, of the 8th cent. It is in five mes, of the 11th cent, in the British Museum, viz. in three of the early English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 32 b.; Jul. A. vi. f. 33, and Harl. 2961, f. 226), and two of the early Spanish Church (Add. 30848, f. 24; Add. 30851, f. 120). Also in the Born Me., No. also found as No. ix. in the Mediaeval compilation known as the Mediations of St. cent. at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, p.

In the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Saxon Ch. (Surtees Society), 1851, p. 48, it is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. at Durham (B. iii. 32, 7.18. The text is also in Bossier, No. 26; Wackernagel, 1, No. 12; Hymn. Sarisb., 1851, p. 71; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 87; Migne's PP. Lat. lxxvi., col. 114; G. M. Drevee's Hym. Moissiacensis, 1888, from a 10th cent. Ms.; Card. Newman's Hymni Eccleriae, 1838 and 1865, and others.

This hymn has been rendered through the German into English, as follows :---

The "Intende qui regis Israel" form of the text has also been tr. by W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. and Tune Bk., 1852-55, as "Shepherd of Israel, Hear Thou our hymn." [J. J.]

Veni Saucte Spiritus, Et emitte coelitus. Immoent III. (?). [Whitsuntide.] In annotating this beautiful Sequence we shall deal i. with its Merits, ii. with the MSS. in which it is contained, iti. with its Authorthip, and iv. with the Variations in its Use.

i. Morits. The opinion of critics is unanimous in regarding this Sequence as one of the masterpieces of Latin sacred poetry. We need only quote two notices of it. Clichto-vacus (Eucodatorium, Paris, 1516, f. 171), eays of it :-

eays of it;—

"Nor indeed, in my opinion, can this piece be sufficiently praised; for it is above all praise, whether by reason of its wonderful sweetness along with a most clear and flowing style, or by reason of its agreeable invity along with wealth and profusion of ideas, especially as almost every line expresses one likes, or shally by reason of the elegant grace of its structure, in which things contrasted are set over against each other, and most apply linked together. And I well believe that the author (whoever he was), when he composed this piece, had his soul transfused by a certain heavenly sweetness, by which, the Holy Spirit being its author, he intered so much sweetness in so few words."

And Archibialon. Trench in his Sec. Los.

And Archbishop Trench, in his Sac. Lat. Poetry (ed. 1864, p. 195) speaks of it as :-

"The loreliest... of all the hymne in the whole circle of Latin sacred poetry," adding that it "could only have been composed by one who had been sequeinted with many sorrows, and also with many consolations."

In Mediaeval times it was often called the Golden Sequence. It is not indeed distinguished by great and absolute originality of idea, for in its leading thoughts it was clearly influenced by earlier pieces, such as the "Sancti Spiritus adait" (p. 993, 1.), the "Qui procedis" (p. 945, 1.), the "O ignis Spiritus Paracliti" (p. 837, ii.), the "Veni Creator" (p. 1306, ii.), and the "Veni Sancte Spiritus: Reple" (pp. 631, ii., and 1315, ii.). But it combines a stately grace, a perfect rhythmic melody, and a faculty of saying just the right thing in just the fitting words in such a measure as to disarm criticism, and at once to defy comparison with any other hymn in any other language, and to make it almost impossible to present an adequate translation. It is in five stantas, each consisting of six lines of seven-syllable trochate verse (trochate dimeter catalectic). The first stanza may be quoted to show its structure:-

" Veni Sancte Spiritus, Et emitte coelitus, Lucis tuse radium.
Veni, Pater pauperum,
Veni, dator munerum,
Veni, iumen cordium."

This verse form has not yet been traced earlier than about 1150; and is never found in the earlier, or Notkerian, type of Sequence, but is always associated with the Sequences of the second period (See e.g. p. 647, ii., and K.

Bartsch's Lat. Sequences, 1868, pp. 213, 285). Every third line, we may add, ends in ium, and rhymes with every other third line throughout the Sequence. In the hands of any but a first-rate writer such a verse-scheme would certainly have produced a sense of coldness and artificiality, but here "art conceals art," and the glow of devotion so transferses and transfigures all that one is content to admire the beauty and hardly thinks of the skill.

ii. MSS. The man also show that this Sequence does not date from the earliest period of Sequence-writing. It is indeed found in four MS. at St. Gall, which, for the most part, date from the 11th cent. (Nos. 376, p. 434; 378, p. 232; 380, p. 28; 382, p. 250); but Herr Idtensohn, the librarian, having kindly examined these was, informs me that in no case is this Sequence in a hand earlier than the 13th cent. He adds that it is "everywhere a piece inserted by another, later, hand than that of the Ms. volume in general." agrees with what we have otherwise observed. Up to the present time this sequence has not been found in any Ms. earlier than 1200.

For example, it is not in any of the early was, indexed under the article Sequences (p. 1048), nor is it included in any of the 14 Troparies of Limoges, written prior to 1200, the sequences of which are printed by G. M. Dreves, in his Prospriess Lessonionse, 1698. It is found 1200, the sequences of which are printed by G. M. Dreves, in his Programius Lessoniceste, 1898. It is found in two Mas. of the 13th cent, now in the Brit. Mus., one written in Germany about the beginning of the century (Add. 2890, 189), the other written in France about the end of the century (Add. 23935, I. 4360). It is also in two early 14th cent. Peris Missal, now in the Brit. Mus. (Add. 1890, I. 1812; Mort. 2891, I. 3460); in a Margiord Missal, circa 1390, and a Fork Missal, circa 1390, and a Fork Missal, circa 1390, but how in the Boddelan (Sc. II is not in the fine Sarsus Missal of circa 1400, now in the Boddelan (Barlow 5); but it is in the London ed. of 1698, I. 241. In the Lincoln Missal of circa 1400, now in the Hrit. Mus. (Add. 11414, I. 3030) it is not found in the offices for Whitzuntide, but is in an appendix of Sequences, the use of which was permitted, but not of obligation ("ad placitum"). Also in an early Ms. in the University Library at Cambridge (Lt. t. 10), but in a section of that ms., which was written about the beginning of the 18th cent. The printed text is given in Mose, No. 186, from the St. Gall Ms., No. 378, and later sources; Daniel, it. pp. 35, 384, lil. p. 281, v. p. 69, from a Baleinau Ms. of the 18th cent., Sc.; Wackernagel, L. No. 180; Baleiar, No. 90; Rehrein, No. 123; Card. Newman's Hymnic Reckeries, 1838 and 1865; F. A. March's Let. Hyt., N. Y., 1878, p. 29, &c. In regard to the statement of Mr. Duffield (see below) that it is contained in the oldest Reichennau and Einstedelu Mss. we may remark that Mose foce not seem to bave found it in any of the Reichersan mss. now at Karlstruke, and that the earlies that some does not seem to have found it in any of the Bescherau was, now at Karlsruhe, and that the earliest Rindsdein as, which Morel (1868, p. 52), who was libra-rian there, clies as containing it, is one of the 18th cent.

iii. Authorship. Here critics are very for from being at one. The French tradition as a rule has not attempted to affix any author's name to the sequence, and so e.g. M. Leon Gautier, in his Les Tropes, 1886, pp. 7, 130, and his Postic Religiouse, 1887, pp. 17, 18, 46, speaks of it as an anonymous sequence of the second period, written not earlier than the beginning of the 18th cent. It has, however, by others been secribed to a variety of authors, e. g. (1) to Robert II. of France, (2) to Her-mannus Contractus, (3) to Archbishop Stephen Langton, and (4) to Pope Innocent III.

(1) Robert II. of France. During the last fifty years the sacription to King Robert has been the usual one. It resis however on no foundation whatever save the statement of Durandus in his Rationale, Sk. iv., in the section "De processes sequents" (see p. 867, ii.). That section contains less than a dozen lines, but in these surveying the section of ceads in conveying a surprising amount of dubious in-formation. Thus to Robert it accribes not only the "Yeni Sancts Spiritus," but also the "Chorus novae Hiernsalem" (p. 234, 1.), which is much more likely to be by Fulbert of Chartres. Them by a strange perversity it adjudges the "Salve regine" from Hermannus Contractus, and in compensation ascribes to him the "Sancti Spiritus skelt," which is certainly not his. As will be seen by referring to p. 987, il., Durandus is the only anciont authority who ascribes the "Veni Sancta Spiritus" to King Robert. Neither of the two ancient chronicles chief there do so, nor does the Chronicos Faroscuse (to 1226, see Robert II. in Various); and while William of Malmesbury (d. circe 1143) ascribes the Robert the "Sancti Spiritus adsit," he does not mention the "Veni Sancta Spiritus adsit," he does not mention the "Veni Sancta Spiritus" (ed. Bp. Stubbs in the Rolls Series, 1887, p. 189.) And, as noted above, the veneform is much later than Robert's time. It is possible that Durandus, when he said that Robert composed that Durandus, when he said that Robert composed to the "Veni Sancta Spiritus"; Reple" (q.v.). Whether or not there can be no doubt that the scription of the "Veni Sancta Spiritus; Reple" (q.v.). Whether or not there can be no doubt that the scription of the "Veni Sancta Spiritus, Et units coellisms" to Robert is without any smile last reason.

(2) Hermannus Gentractus (b. 1912, d. 1964).

(2) Hermanaus Contractus (b. 1013, d. 1064). Equally litting or even less, reason exists for ascribing this sequence to Hermannus Contractos. Cardinal Bons, in his Harren Libergeouver, Rome, 1871, p. 338, eage that it "has been by some attributed to Hermannus Contractos." This attribution has recently been variety expoused by 8. W. Duffield, in the New Englander, vol. esponsed by S. W. Duffield, in the New Englander, vol.

nlw., 1885, pp. 613-632, and in his Let. Hyr. 1885, pp.
149-168. Mr. Duffield took great pains to make out a good case, but he altogether fails to produce anything that can be called proof in support of his assertions and conjectures. The sequence is ascribed to Harmanya's Contractus by no ancient writer, nor by Anselm Schubiger (Singerechale St. Golfens, 1886), who has in recent times devoted most attention to him. It is moreover emirely different in style from any of the please which have with some show of reason been ascribed to him (see K. Bartsch's Let. Segmensen, 1888, pp. 41, 90, 106; also the note on "Vent Sancte Spiritan: Reple"); and these are all composed in the verse-form of the first him (see K. Bartsch's Lett. Segmensen, 1888, pp. 41, 80, 180; also the note on "Venl Sancte Spiritan: Repis"); and these are all composed in the verse-form of the first period of sequence-writing, while, as stated above, this sequence is in the verse-form of the accord period.

(3) Stephen Langton (consecrated Archbishop of Canterbury by Innocent III. on June 17, 1807; performed his first episcopal act in England at Winchester on Julyo 18, 1215; d. July 4, 1228). The sacription to Langton is found in a commentary on the Clausis de Somissibus of Melito of Sardis (d. circa 170), pub. by Cardinal J. B. 180, where it is easid, "Nevertheless let it suffice to adduce as testimony, what Minguiser Sephensus de Longueron, a man venerable in life and doctrine, by the grace of God Archbishop of Canterbury, says in the praise of the Holy Spirit, in that excellent sequence which he composed concerning the Holy Spirit, thus "(than are quoted lines "-12, 19-24, beginning "Consolator optime"). Pitra regards this commentary as the work of an English Chisterian who flourished about 1216, and says that this statement "of a contemporary and a of an English Casterdan who hourshed about 1716, and says that this statement "of a contemporary and a fellow-countryman," who was clearly a careful writer, and skilled in literary matters, ought to carry great weight. It is to the present writer certainly worth recording, but hardly conclusive in the absence of further evidence.

recording, but hardly conclusive in the absence of further evidence.

(4) Paps Innocent III. The ascription to innocent III., is found in chapter xviii. of the Pito search Not-kert, by Ekkehard v., of St. Gall, as follows:—"Thurs may fitly be added here a convenantee which, in our times, took place with the Roman See ("sedem Roman") concerning the bleesed man [Nother]. The venerable Abbot of St. Gall, Ulrich, of plous memory, the sixth of this name (Dirtch v. d. 1188, and Ulrich v. d. 1218], came to Rome to Pope Innocent III., having been sent on an embessy by King Frederick the Second, afterwards Emperor [crowned as King at Mainz, Dec. 9, 1212; crowned as Emperor at Aachen on July 28, 1215]. After they had talked together of many things, and conferred in turn on various matters, it happened that Nass, concerning the Holy Spirit, with the Sequence Sancti Spiritus addit nothin gratis," was celebrated before the Pope (Apostolicum), the abbot also being present. That Pope inmedif had size composed a Sequence on the Holy Spirit, viz.: Yewi Sancte Spiritus. When the Mass and the prayers were over, they mis again for conversation, and among other things the Pope asked the abbot, saying "Who was your Nother, and in what way do you keep his amiversary?" For there were at Rome certain timing written of him in the books of Sequences, which the Pope himself had read. The abbot replied that he was a sumple monk... though certainly learned and indy. To whom the Pope rejoined, '10 you not keep his festival, &z..'."
[Notker was not however beatified till 1513, See a

$22, i.] This passage, with the words in italics, is contained in Erkebard's autograph copy, written about 1212, and now at St. Gall (MS. No. 558, p. 342). From other sources we know that Ulrich vr. was sent to Rome by the Emperor Frederick to attend the Lateran Council (1215), and the conversation recorded above probably took place either then or at Whitsunitids, 1216, for Innocent nt. d. July 16, 1216 (see the Mittheilunger xurvateridudischen Geschichte, St. Gall, vols. xi. p. 130, and xvii. (1879), p. 114). Doubt has been cast on Erkshard's statement on the ground that he blundered in secribing the "Veni Greator" to Charlemagne. But in the present case it must be ramembered that he was a monk at St. Gall at the time of which he speaks, and there is every reason to believe that he heard the story a monk at St. Gall at the time of which he speaks, and there is every reason to believe that he heard the story from the lips of Ulrich himself on his return from Rome. The facts above stated concerning the St. Gall assa. afford a strong presumption that the "Yen! Saucce Spiritus" was unknown at St. Gall till Ulrich brought it back with him from Bome, and that it was at his instigation that it was inserted in the early sequentiaties at St. Gall. And finally innocent in, was undoubtedly and much more competent to a man of great ability, and much more competent to have written such a poem than any of the others to whom it has been ascribed (see also pp. 1061-1082).

The whole evidence as to authorship may be summed up thus. The Sequence is clearly not earlier than about the beginning of the 18th cent. It is certainly neither by Robert 11. nor by Hermannus Contractus. The most probable author is Innocent III.

iv. Use. As already stated the "Veni Sancte Spiritue" is not found in any of the very early Missals or Sequentiaries. When it began to come into use it did not at once displace the older Whitsuntide sequence, i.e. the "Saucti Spiritus adsit," for that continued, as a rule, to be used on Whitsunday up till the revision of the Roman Missal in 1568-70. Consequently the "Veni Saucte," though occasionally used on Whitsunday (as in the Breslau Missal of 1488), was almost universally appointed for use on one or more of the immediately succeeding week days.

So a.g. the Langres Missol, circo 1401, assigns it to the Monday; the Angers of 1489 to Tuesday; the Minuter of 1485 to Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday; the Liege circa 1485 to Tuesday and Saturday; the flower of 1499 to Wednesday; the Augusturg of 1499 to Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday; the Chalons sur
Marne of 1489, and the Henglord of 1502 to Thursday; and the Paris of 1481 to Saturday. In other Missal; it is given only in the Votive Mass of the Holy Spirit, e.g. in the Magdebury of 1480, the Brizen of 1493, the Sarams of 1496, &c. The Langres, circa 1491, gives it also in a Mass in time of pestilence. Martens (de antiqua eclectate disciplism) says that in some places such as Limoges and Chalons our Saons, it was sung as a carol in the Cathedral closs after Vespers or Compline on Ascension Day. Ascension Day.

Flushy it had the benour of being chosen as one of the four (see p. 1042, i.) sequences which were alone retained in the Roman Missal of 1570, and is there appointed for use on Whitsunday and also throughout the week. the text happily being left unaltered both at that time and at the subsequent revision under Urban viii. (1634). We may add that the text, with a full historical and theological commentary, is given in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der ältesten Kirchenhymnen, vol. ii., 1886, pp. 61-76.

The Vent Sancte Spiritus, Et, has frequently been tr. into German. Through two of these versions it has passed into English as follows:→

L Hellger Geist, du Tröster main. This is a full and good tr. by Martin Moller, in his Meditationes sanctorum patrum, Görlitz, 1584, where it is entitled "A very beautiful prayer to God the Holy Chost;" and thence in Wackernagel, v.

p. 55. Included in Crüger's Praxis, 1648, Freylinghausen's News geistroiches G. B., 1714 (omitting st. iv.; so in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 171), and others. Bunsen, in his Versuch, 1833, No. 210, follows Freylinghausen, and supplies a new tr. (by himself?) of st. iv. Tr. as:

1. Holy Chost! my Comforter. This is a ful! and very good tr. from Bunsen by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Gar., 1st Ser., 2nd ed., 1856, p. 103, and her C. B. for England, 1863 (with st. v. rewritten). Included in full in the Wes. H. Bk., 1875; and, abridged, in Alford's Year of Praise, 1867, Scepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872, &c. In T. W. Chignell's Exeter Coll., 1863, it begins "God, our Light and Comforter!" and in Dale's Eng. H. Bk., 1874, and some others, "Holy Ghost! the Comforter."

2. Holy Comforter Divise. By Miss Borthwick,

Another tr. is: "O Holy Ghost! Thou fire Divine." By Miss Winksorth, 1855, p. 103.

ii. Komm, o bell'ger Gelet, and webe. By Cardinal Melchior von Diepenbrock [b. Jan. 6, 1798, at Bochold in Westphalis; became Prince Bishop of Breslau in 1845, and Cardinal in 1850; d. Jan. 20, 1853], in his Gesammette Fredigien, Regensburg, 1841, p. 109. Tr. as "Come, O Holy Ghost, and breathe." By J. Kelly, in his Hys. of the Present Century from the German, 1885, p. 69. [J. M.]

The Veni Sancte Spiritus Et has also been tr. direct from the Latin into English as follows:-

1. Come, Holy Spirit, send down those beams Which gently flow in ellent streams. By J. Austin, in his Depotions in the Antient Way of Offices, &c., 1668, p. 410. It is given in several modern Roman Catholic hymnals, including Hys. for the Year, 1867, the Parochial H. Bk., 1880, and others. In these collections it begins "Come, Holy Ghost, send down those beams, Which succeeds flow in silent streams," as in The Evening Office of 1748. It is a most spirited rendering, and is worthy of wider adoption.

2. Holy Spirit, from on high, Come, and from the opening sky. By W. J. Copeland, in his Hys. for the Week, &c., 1848, p. 105. It was repeated in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, and others.

8. Ceme, O promised Comforter. By A. T. Russell, in the Dalston German Hospital H. Bk., 1848, and his Ps. & Hys., 1851, No. 126, in 3 st. of 6 l. In Kennedy, 1863, st. i. is given as "Shed, O promised Comforter" (No. 1034). In the Hys. and Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874, the full text is given in an unaltered form.

6. Hely Spirit, Lord of Light. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 234, and his Hymns and Poems, 1873, p. 123. It is found in several hymn-books in its full and unaltered form, and also altered and abridged as :-

(1) Come, Thou Holy Spirit, come. This arrangement was given in the trial ed. of H. A. 6 M., 1859, and again in the 1st ed., 1861. The numerous alterations therein are added to in the revised ed. of 1875. The test of the Saruss Hys., 1868, is the 1861 H. A. & M. text altered, with a return in some instances to the original tr.

altered, with a return in some instances to the original re-(2) Hely Spirit, Lard of Life. This, in the Partial H. BE., 1863 and 1876, is also an altered form of Caswall's tr. (3) Holy Spirit, come in might. This is given in the S. P. C. K. Uhurch Hys., 1871, with the omission of Caswall's St. iii. Iv., to the great highly of the hymn. There are also several uncalled for alterations.

(4) Come, Then Spirit of all light. This, in Thring's

Coll., 1882, is partly (et. i., il., iil., l. 6) a recest of Caswall's tr. by Prebendary Thring, but would have been better in Caswall's own words.

In its various forms Caswall's fr. is the most widely used of the numerous renderings of the Veni Sancte Spiritus.

5. Come, Holy Spirit, from the height. By F. W. Faber, in his Josus and Mary, 1849, and his Hymns, 1862. It is given in a few Roman Catholic hymnals for Missions and Schools.

6. Come, O Spirit, Lord of grace. By R. Campbell, in his Hys. and Anthons, 1850, p. 80, in 7 st. of 3 l. This is in one or two hymnals only, In Orby Shipley's Annus Sinctus, 1884, it is expanded into 10 st., the additional stanzas ii., iv., and vi. being by J. C. Earle.

7. Holy Spirit, from an high, On our deep obscurity. By G. Rorison in his Hys. and Anthems, 1851, No. 95, in 5 st. of 6 I.

- 9. Come, Then Hely Paraelets. By J. M. Neale, in the Hyl. Noted, 2nd ed., 1854, in 10 st. of 8 l. This tr. has passed into a large number of hymnals, and ranks next in popularity to that by E. Caswell noted above,
- 9. Come, Holy Ghost! in love, Shed en us from shove. By Ray Palmer. First pub. in The Subbath H. Bh., Andover, 1858, No. 451, in 5 st. of 7 l. It is given in several collections in G. Britain and America, including Allon's Cong. Pealmist Hyl., 1886; Martineau's Hymns, &c.,

1875, in 4 st.; Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884.

10. Holy Spirit, come, we pray. By W. Mercer, in the 1864 ed. of his Church Ps. and H. Bk.,

No. 222, in 10 st. of 3 l.

11. Come, Then Hely Spirit, nigh; Leave Thy blissful throne on high. By R. C. Singleton, in his Anglican H. Bk., 1868, in 5 at. of 6 l.

12. Holy Spirit, God of light ! Come, and on our inner sight. By H. M. Macgill, in The Juvenile Miss. Magazine of the United Presb. Ch., Jan., 1868; the United Presh. Hyl., 1876; and his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876.

13, Holy Spirit, Fire divine. By F. H. Hedge, in the Unitarian Hymn [and Tune] Bk., Boston, 1868, in 5 st. of 6 l.

14. Come, Holy Spirit, from above, And from the realms of light and love. By A. P. Stanley, in Macmillan's Magazine, June, 1873, and Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883, in 5 st. of 6 l.

Although these trs. do not equal those of the Veni Creator Spiritus in number, yet they indicate a long and profound interest in this magnificent hymn.

Veni Sancte Spiritus : Reple. [Whitsuntide). The text of this antiphon is printed at p. 621, ii. It is found in a ws. of the 11th cent., now in the Brit. Mus. (Harl. 2961, f. 102), appointed for use at Vespers on the Vigil of Pentecost, and reading "in unitatem." Also in another Brit. Mus. Ms. of circa 1100 (Add. 18302, f. 14, and f. 25). In many mss. only the first part ("Voui . . . accende") is given, as in a ms. of the 11th cent., now in the Brit. Mus. (Hart. 4951, f. 246), and this form is found in the Sarum Missal of 1498, appointed for the Tuesday and Saturday after Whitsunday, and in the present Rosan Missal for Whitsunday and also throughout that week. When Durandus and the carlier writers on Hermannus Contractus ascribed the "Veni Sancte Spiritus" respectively to Robert II, and to Hermannus Contractus, it is not unlikely that they really meant to refer to this antiphon and not to the " Veni Sancto Spiritus, Et emitte"; and the Add. 18802, which was apparently written in Swabia, is also one of the earliest sources of the "Salve regina" (p. 231, ii.) which is most probably by Hermannus Contractus. But there is not sufficient evidence to allow us to assign the antiphon definitely to either of these authors.

This antiphon has passed into English through the German (see p. 631, ii.), and also directly. Among the versions directly from the Latin may be mentioned :-

1. Come, O Hely Spirit! fulfil the hearts of Thy faithful ones. By J. D. Chumbers, in his Psaller, &c., 1852, p. 180.

2. Come, Holy Ghost, fill the hearts of Thy faithful.
In the Roman Hyl., ed. J. B. Young, N. Y., 1884, p. 41.

Veni, superne Spiritus: Purgata Christi sanguine. C. Coffin, [Whiteun tide.] Appeared in the Paris Brev., 1736 and in Coffin's Hymni Sacri the same year, p. 55. In the Paris and later French Brevs. it is the hymn for the 1st Vespers of Whitsunday. Text in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, and Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865. Tr. as :-

- 1. Come. Heavenly Spirit, come. By W. J. Blew, in his Church Hy. & Tune Bk., 1852-55, Ember, 9, and Rice's &d. from the same, 1870.
- 2. Come, O Spirit, from on high. By C. S. Calverley, in the Hymnary, 1872.

Other tra. are:—
1. Come, Spirit from above. I. Williams, in the British Mag., May, 1834; and his Hys. tr. from the Particles Bres., 1839.
2. Come, Holy Ghost, Then Source of good. J.

Chandler. 1837 3. Descend, Celestial Spirit blest. J. D. Chambers.

1867. 4. Spirit Saperne, come down again. "J. M. H." in Lyra Messanico, 1864. [J. J.]

Veni, veni, Rex glories. [Advent.] Mr. Crippen says he tr. this "from a Ms. of the 15th century (with mose) at Karlsruhe." This text is in Mone, No. 35. Mr. Crippen's tr. appeared in his Ancient Hys. and Poems, &c., 1888, in 23 st. of 41. as "O come, O come, Thou glorious King." In Martineau's Hymne, &a., 1873, st. zii., ziii., zvii., zviii., and ziz., as given as "Give us, O Fount of Purity." These stansas form a most acceptable hymn on Desiring Holiness. Also tr. by Dr. H. Bonar as "Come, O come, Thou King of glory," 1866. [J. J.]

Venit e coelo Mediator alto. [Passiontide.] This is the hymn at Lands in the office of the Prayer of our Lord Jesus Christ on the Mount of Olives. See a note on this office under Aspice at Verbum Patris (p. 07, ii.). This office appears to be of very recent date, viz. since 1830. It is found in the eds. of the Roman Breviary, pub. at Lyons, 1852, and Tournay, 1879, but not among the offices for universal use. Tr. as:—

- 1. Daughter of Bion, seaso thy hitter tears. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 61, and his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 84. It passed, with slight alterations, into the Hymnary, 1872, and others.
- 2. Sinn's daughter, weep no mere. By Sir H. W. Baker, in the trial copy of H. A. & M., 1859, and the ed. of 1861. It was revised for the ed. of 1875. Also in Kennedy, 1863, &c.
- 3. Come from the beavealy thrence above. In the 1860 ed. of the Hy. Noted, No. 152.

From high heaven, the Mediator. J. Wallace. 1874. [W. A. S.]

Verborgne Gottesliebe du. G. Tersteegen. [The Love of God.] 1st pub. in his Gefalliches Blumengärtlein, 1729, Bk. iii., No. 26, in 10 et. of 7 l., entitled, "The longing of the soul quietly to maintain the secret draw-ings of the Love of God." Although a fine hymn and much used in English, its German use has been almost confined to the early Moravian collections. Included in full in the 3rd ed., 1731, of the Sammlung geist- und lieblicher Lieder, and omitting et. iv., v., as No. 542, in the Herrnhut G. B., 1735; but not repeated in the Brüder G. B., 1778, or the Kleine Brüder G. B., 1870. Tr. 68:-

1. There hidden leve of God, whose height. A spirited tr. by J. Wesley, omitting at. iv., v. [trs. of these ats. by S. Jackson were incorporated when he reprinted Wesley's tr. in his Life of Toratogen, 1832 (1837, p. 409)], in Ps. & Hys., 1738, and Hys. & Sacred Posms, 1739 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 71). Written while at Savannah, and in 6-line st. Included, somewhat altered, as No. 3 in the Wesley Hys. & Spir. Songs, 1753; as No. 335 in the Wes. F. Spir. Songs, 1753; as No. 335 in the Wes. versity Library. The first, written H. Bk., 1780 (1875, No. 344); and in the Meth. stansas 1, 3, 7, 18, 14, 19, 8, and also

New Conn. H. Bk., 1863. It is however generally abridged. At least fourteen centos have been included in various hymnals, but as they are taken from the text of the Wes. H. Bk. it is not necessary here to note them in detail. In one form or other the hymn is found under the original first line in collections since 1866, in Thring's Coll., 1880-82, Snepp's S. of G. & G., 1 72, Hyl. Comp., 1878, Bapt. Hyl., 1879, Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884, &c., and in America in the Unitarian H. Bk., 1869, Hatfield's Ch. H. Bk., 1872, Epis. Hyl., 1871, &c. Altered forms include :-

1. 0 God! whose leve immease in height (st. i. alt.), in the Moravian H. Bks., 1789-1886.
2. Thou wendrous love of God, whose height (st. i. alt.), New Zealand Hyl., 1872.
3. In mercy, Josua, Thou hast brought (st. ill.) in J. Bickersteth's Ps. de Hys., 1832.
4. Take, Lerd, all self from me, that I (st. vil.) in the Moravian H. Bks., 1789-1888.

In the P. Works, 1868, p. 71, Dz. Osborn

"The translation [in 1736] agrees with this, except in st. iv., where we read:

" " Ah tear it thence, that Thou alone May'st reign unrivall'd Monarch there : From earthly loves I must be free Ere I can find repose in Thee.'

But after the ever-memorable 24th of May, 1738, Wesley knew 'the way of God more perfectly;' and wrote as in the text :-

"Is there a thing beneath the sun
That strives with Thee my heart to chare?
Ah, tear it thence, and reign alone,
The Lord of every motion there;
Then shall my heart from earth be free,
When it has found repose in Thee."

"In a final revision for the Large Hymn-book, 1780, he changed 'Be' in v. 2, 1. 4, into 'feetn,' and made the closing couplet of v. 6 precatory, in accordance with the two preceding, by changing 'la' in the last line into 'be." [J. ML]

Verbum care factum est, Ex virgine Maria. [Christmas.] This hymn exists in a great variety of texts. Leaving out of account the varieties of reading, which are very considerable, we may reakon at least five different forms. The two lines above are used in some cases as the introduction, and line 2 as the refrain.

- f. The earliest form known is in a ms. in the Bibl. Nat-Paris (Lot., 1189, f. 48, in a hand of the 12th cent.), and thence in E. du Méril's Perise endites du Moyar Apa, Paris, 1854, p. 337. This form is parily in Latin and partly in Provençal French. The Latin stances are:—

- In hoc anni circulo.
 Fons de suo rivulo.
 Quod vetustas suffecat.
 Sine viri copula
- 5. Summi patris filio.
 6. Animal impositum.
 7. O beats femina.
 8. Illi laus et gloris.
- if. Mons. No. 50, prints it from a us. of the 15th cent. in the town library at Trier. The stanzas there are 1, 3, 7, 8, and the following:—
 - 9. Stella solem protulit.
- 14. Reges tres de genti-

- 10. Virgins de regts.
 11. In praesepe ponitur.
 12. O pastores currite.
 13. Puer circumciditur.
- bus. 15. Die bac senctissima. 16. Ex divino fiamine.
- iii. Hogimana non Fullersleben, 1981, No. 189, gives a German Ir. (beginning "In des jares strollkeit") from a Munich as. of 1421. Tals has 18 stantas, and repre-sents 1, 2, 3, 9, 4, 7, 11, 12, 13, 14, 8, of the Latin, and
- also
 17. Joseph nato fruitur.
 18. Ab angelis concini-
- 19. Anrum regt regnaturo. 20. O Jesu dolclasime.
- iv. G. M. Drevez, in his Continues Bohamions, 1886, p. 43, cites it as in two was, how at Prag; the first being in the Bohamian Museum, and the second in the University Library. The first, written about 1448, has 21, Adam pomo vesci-23. Serpens ille callidus. 24. O prompts humilitas. 25. Ergo nostra concle. tur. 22. Nos pre diluvio.

22. Nos pre diluvio.

The second, written about 1510, has 1, 3, 21, 22, 23, 9, 13, 14, 19, 25, 8.

v. Morse, No. 387, has a form in 29 stanzas from mas, of the 16th cent, at Veuice, and the same form is in a Ms. in the Bibl. Nat., Paris (Fonds Fadicus, No. 559, 5, 107), also written in Italy in the 16th cent. In the Paris Ms. it is given as by Jacobus de Benedictis. The text, on Morse prints it, has stanzas 1, 3, 2, 4, 7, 11, 17, 18, 14, 19, 12, 13, 24, 10, 20, 8, as above. The remaining 12 st. of this text need not here be noted, vi. Mückernsgot, 1841. No. 54, gives it from Leisenville. vi. Wackernagel, 1841, No. 54, gives it from Leisen-trice's G. B. (R. C.), 1567. There it is in 14 st., viz. 1, 3, 21, 22, 23, 9, 4, 13, 7, 10, 11, 18, 17, 25.

From this summary it is pretty clear that No. i. is the original, and that Nos. ii. and iii. are forms which were current in Germany in the 14th cent. Stanzas 21-23 seem also to belong to the 14th cent. Stanza 25 might be attached to any hymn of the same metre, and is found in some forms of the "Puer natus" (p. 940, i.). The remaining 12 stanzas of No. v. were probably written in Italy. It may be added that ii, is also in Daniel, iv. p. 157; and vi. in Daniel, i. No. 477, and Neale's Hy. Eccl., 1851, p. 74. See also Wackernagel, i., Nos. 264-266. The text as in Daniel, i. No. 477, beginning In hee anni circule, was tr., omitting at. vii., x., xi., by Dr. Neale, in his Med. Hys. 1851, p. 106, as "In the ending of the Year. This was repeated in the 1867 ed. of the Hy. Noted, and in The Office H. Bk., 1889. [J. M.]

Verbum Dei, Deo natum. [St. John the Evangelist.] Archbishop Trench remarks justly, "This sublime hymn, though not Adam of St. Victor's, . . . is altogether worthy of him." It is found in a Ms. of the end It is found in a Ms. of the end of the 12th cent, in the Bodleian (Litury. Miso. 341. f. 42), and another circa 1200 (Liturg. Misc., 340, f. 141); also in a ms. of the 13th cent, in the British Museum (Arundel, 156, f. 95). Among the St. Gall was, it is found in Nos. 376, 381 of the 11th cent., No. 66 of the 12th cent., and others. It is included in the Magdeburg Missal, 1480, and many later German Missuls, generally assigned to the festival of St. John at the Latin Gate. Pt. ii. begins with at. ix. Volat avia sine meta. The printed text is also in Mone, No. 709; Daniel, ii. p. 166; Trench, ed. 1864, p. 75; and Kehrein, No. 408. Tr. as:-

Verbum quod ante saecula. [Epiphany.] Given in the Sens Brev., 1726, and the Paris Brev., 1736, as the hymn for 1st Vespers for the Sundays after the Epiphany. The text is in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and L. C. Bigga's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as:— Chambers, 1852 and 1857.

1. The Word, Who dwelt above the akies. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Prim. Church, 1837, p. 56. In the 1st ed. of H. A. & M., 1861, it was extensively altered by the Compilers, and was included as "The Word, with God the Father One." This was omitted from the revised ed. of 1875. The original tr., with slight alterations, is in the Hymnary, 1872, &c.

2. Word of Life, the Eternel Bon. By I. Williams, in his Hys. tr. from the Parisian Brev., 1839, p. 94. In J. A. Johnston's English Hyl., 1861, it begins, "Word of God, Eternal Son, Ers the march, &c."

3. Word of God, Eternal Son, From Thy throne, By R. Campbell, in his Hys. and Anthons, 1850, p. 57. This is based upon the tr. by I. Williams as above, and several lines are taken from that tr. It is in O. Shipley's Annus Sanctus, 1884.

Other tre. are :-

I, Word that, ere creation's morn. W. J. Blew.

2. Word! from the Father's bosom born. Chambers, 1867.

Verbum Supernum prodiens, A Patre clim exiens. [Advent.] This bymn, a short and good summary of the leading ideas of Advent, is given as No. 33 in Mone, with the remark that it is probably of the second half of the 5th cent. Daniel gives the text at 1, No. 74, and at iv. p. 144 cites it as in a Rheinau ms. of the 11th cent., ranking it as a hymn of the 11th cent. Among the British Museum Mss, it is found in three 11th cent. Hymnaries of the English Church (Vesp. D. xii. f. 29; Jul. A. vi. f. 31 b; Harl. 2961, f. 225b); in an 11th cent. Mozarabic Hymnarium (Add. 30851, f. 112); on 11th cent. Mozarabio Breviary (Add. 30848, f. 3), &c. It is in G. M. Dreves's Hymn. Moissiacensis, 1888, from a 10th cent, Ms.; in a Ms. of the 11th cent, at Corpus Christi, Cambridge (391, p. 239); in a Ms. of the 11th cent, at St. Gall, No. 413; and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo-Sazon Ch. (Surfees Society), 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. ws. at Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 11). It is included in the older Roman (Venice, 1478), Sarum, York, Aberdeen, and other Breviaries, the Sarum use being at Matine on the 1st S. in Advent, and daily up to Christ-mas Eve. The text is also in Wackernagel, i. No. 55; the Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 4; L. C. Biggs's annotated H. A. & M., 1867, &c. In the Roman Brev., 1632, it is considerably altered, and begins, Verbam Superaum prediens, E Patris asterno sinu. This text is in recent eds. of that Breviory; in Daniel, i. No. 74; J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, No. 39; and Card. Newman's Hymni Eccleriac. 1838 and 1865.

Both forms of this hymn have been tr. as follows : —

i. The Original Text.

1. To surth descending, Word roblime. By J. M. Neale, in the H. Noted, 1852, No. 11, the Hymner, 1882, &c.

Verbum Supernum prodiens, Nec Patris linguens dexteram. St. Thomas of Aquino. [Holy Communion.] Written about 1263 for the office for use on Corpus Christi (see Pange Hagua gioriesi Corporis). It is found in the Roman (Venice, 1478, and, unchanged, in 1632), Mozarabic of 1502, Surum, York, Aberdeen, Paris of 1786, and other Breviaries, its primary use being at Lauds on Corpus Obristi.

"Most appropriately, says Daniel (I. No. 241), has St. Thomas made his hymn like the well-known hymn for the Nativity of the Lord ['Verbum Supernum prodiens, A Patre olim extens', for as to the Festival of the Eucharist, by which the Word made Flesh will dwell with us for ever, what need is there to explain at length the relationship that exists between it and the Nativity of the Lord?"

The text, in 5 st. and a doxology, is in Daniel, i. No. 241; Hymnarium Sarisb., 1851, p. 123, and others. St. iv. is a fine instance of perfect form and condensed meaning :-

" Se macens dedit socium, Convescens in edulium. Se moriens in pretion, Se regnans dat in praemiom."

The last stanza, o salutaris hostis, has often been used along with the doxology as a separate hymn, e.g., at the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. The hymn is found in a us. of the 13th cent. in the Bodician (Ashmole, 1525, f. 175); in a Ms. of the end of the 13th cent. (Add. 23935, f. 4 b), and a 14th cent. Sarum Brev. (Reg. A. xiv. f. 95), both in the British Museum; in a 13th cent. Ms. at St. Gall, 503, i., and others. Also in Wackernagel, i. No. 232; Königsfeld, ii. p. 214; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesias, 1838 and 1865, and others. [J. M.]

The trs. of this hymn are as follows:-

i. Verbum supernum prodiens Mec. &c.

- 1. The Word, descending from above. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 114, and his Hys. & Poems, 1873, p. 65. It is in the People's H., 1867. In the Hymner, 1882, it is rewritten as, "The Word proceeding from above,"
- 2. The Word of God proceeding furth. By J. M. Neale, in the enlarged ed. of the H. Noted, 1854. From the H. Noted it has passed into several collections, and in almost every instance with alterations. In the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, it begins, "The Word from His eternal home." Another altered form of the text is "The Heavenly Word proceeding forth," in H. A. & M., 1861 and 1875. In the Hymnary, 1872, Neale's tr. is given with st. v., as in H. A. & M. Other trs. are :-

ii. O saluturia Hostia,

The special use of this portion of the hymn is thus set forth in the Dict. of Christian Antiquities:-

"A hymn sung during the Office called Benediction, at the moment when the Tabernsole is opened, in order that the Consecrated Host may be removed and placed that the Consecrated Host may be removed and placed in the Monstrance prepared for its solemn Exposition.

"Sometimes also, though less frequently, "O salutaris Hostla" is sung at High Mass, immediately after the Besechicut; not Indeed as an Integral part of the Mass itself, to which it does not properly belong, but in order to prevent the long and distracting pause which would otherwise ensue, when, as is frequently the case in Plain Channt Masses, the Benedictus is too short to fill up the time which must necessarily clame between the Elementer of the Channel Masses. time which must necessarily clapse between the Ele-vation of the Host and the Pater Norter."

This portion of the hymn is not usually tr. distinct from the preceding verses, although in some books it is marked off from the rest by the introduction into the tr. of the Latin line. The tra. are:

1. O saving Host, that heaven's high gate. Printer.

Vere, Thomas Aubrey de, third a of the late Sir Anbrey de Vere, Bart., was b. in 1814, and educated at Trinity College, Dub-Whilst Dr. Newman was Rector of the Roman Catholic University, Dublin, he was one of the Professors there. His first volume of Poems appeared in 1842, and since then he has also pub. more than thirty distinct works, many of which are in verse, including Poems, 1855; May Carots, 1857; Postical Works, 1884; and others. A few pieces from his poetical works are given in Roman Catholic collections. [J. J.]

Very, Jones, was b. at Salem, Massachusetis, Aug. 28, 1813, his father, Jones Very, being a shipmaster. He graduated at Harvard College in 1836. He remained at his College, as tutor in Greek, for two years, and then entered the Unitarian Ministry (1843). He has been engaged in the work of a preacher without a pastorate from the first, a great part of his time being devoted to literary pursuits. In 1839 he pub. a volume of Essays and Poems, from which several pieces have been taken as hymns, including :-

1. Father! I wait Thy word. The sun doth stand,

1. Father! I want they work, the sun coun mains, Waiting upon God.
2. Father, there is no change to live with Thes. Peace in the Father's Cure.
3. Father! Thy wonders do not singly stand. The Spirit-Land.
4. Will Then not visit was? The Divine Presence. 4. Wilt Thou not visit me? The Divine Presence desired. These hymns were included in Longfellow and Johnson's Unitarian Book of Hymns, 1846. In the same collection also appeared:-

 I saw on earth another light. The Light Within.
 The bud will soon become a flower. Sowing and Reoping.

7. Turn not from him who asks of thee. Kind Words. In addition the following hymns appeared in Longfellow and Johnson's Hymns of the Spirit, 1864 :--

One saint to another I heard say, "How long?"
The Future ordicipated.

9. There is a world eye hath not seen. The Spirit

Americana, 1868; and in Putnam's Singers and Songe of the Liberal Faith, 1874. [F. M. B.]

Very, Washington, brother of Jones Very, was b. at Salem, Massachusetts, Nov. 12, 1815. After following mercantile pursuits for some time, he entered Harvard College, and graduated there in 1843. Subsequently he conducted a private school in Salem, where he d. April 28, 1853. Putnam gives three of Very's poetical pieces in his Singers and Songs, &c., 1874, one of which, "There cometh o'er the spirit" (Spring), appeared in Longfellow and Johnson's Book of Hymne, 1816. [J. J.]

Versage nicht, o frommer Christ. [Trust in God.] Included as one of Drey schöne geistliche Lieder, Constanz, 1607, in 22 st. of 5 1., and thence in Mitzell, No. 584; Wackernagel, v. p. 427; and the Une. L. S., 1851, No. 581. Sometimes erroneously ascribed to Nicolaus Herman. Tr. as:—

Te who the name of Jeans bear, Tield not yourselves &c. A good fr. of st. i., iv., v., vii., xvii., by A. T. Bussell, as No. 228 in his Pt. & Hyt., 1851. [J. M.]

Vexilla Regis prodeunt. V. H. C. Fortunatus. [Passiontide.] This "world-famous hymn," as Dr. Neale calls it, has been ascribed to Theodulph of Orleans, to Sedulius, &c. But it is found in all the uss, of the works of Fortunatus, as well as in all the printed editions, and there is no ground whatever for questioning his authorship. In further annotation it will be most convenient to treat
(1) of its Text, then (2) of its Origin and some of the altusions contained in it, and lastly (3) of the variations in its Use.

i. Text, MSS., &c. We print first the full original text from Professor F. Leo's ed. of Fortunatus's Opera poetica, Berlin, 1881, p. 34, where it is given as No. 6 in Bk. ii., entitled "Hymn in honour of the Hely Cross," and in

8 st. as follows :-

Vexilla regis prodeunt, Fulget crucis mysterium, Quo carne carnis conditor Buspensus est patibulo.

" Confixa ciavis viscera Tendene manna, vestigia Redemptionis grafia Hic immolata est hostia.

Que vulneratus insuper Mucrone dire iancese, Ut nos lavaret crimine. Manavit unda et sangnine.

" Impleta sunt quas conchit David fideli carmine. Diceado nationibus: Regnavit a ligno Deus.

" Benta enjus brachtie Pretium pependit meculi, Sintera facia est corporie Praedam tulitque farteri.

vii. Fundis aroma cortice, Vincis sapore nectars, Jocumia fractu fertili Plaudis triumpho poblii.

viii. Salve ara, salve victima De passionis gloria Qua vita mortem pertulit Et moste vitem reddidit."

This text Lee prints from a St. Petersburg MS. of the 8th cent., a Laudun MS. of the 8th or 9th cent., a Vatican Ms. of the 9th cent. (Regioe, 329), and others. It agrees with the original readings of a 9th cent. Ms. of Fortunatus, now in the Brit, Mus. (Add. 24193, f. 18). In the earliest Hymnaries, &c., it is found in much the same text, e.g. :--

9. There is a world sys hath not seen. The Spirit In the so-called Durkom Ritual, an ancient ms, in the fords.

Most of these hymns are in the Lyra Sac. England in a hand of the 10th cent.), in two Hymnarias, written in England in the 11th cent., and now in the Brit. Mos. (Fep. D., xii. f. 64. and Rowt., 2861, f. 238b), &c. During the 11th cent. it began to be englowed to omit at. ii., vii., viii., and so in the Fep. D., xii. at. ii. was subsequently stratched through, at. vii., viii. began to be contourned to make ground the first p. D., xii., the Latin text of almost all the hymns is repeated along with an Anglo-Saxon interinear gloss, the Latin being arranged to suit the order of the gloss. In this form, at f. 65b, the original at. ii., vii., viii. are still found, and there is neither original at. ii., vii., viii. are still found, and there is neither original proposed of at. ix., x.), and the two following stauzas, not by Fortonatus, inserted in their place:—

" O crux ave, spes unica,
Hoe passionis tempore,
Auge pils justitiam,
Relaque dona veniam.

"Te summa Peus Trinitas, Collandat omnis spiritus, Quos per crucis mysterium Salvas, rege per saecula."

Relaque done venium.

Among other mes. which omit et. vii., viii. and give ix., x., are the Add. 30848, f. 109, a Riveriary written in Spath in the 11th cent., and now in the Brit. Mus.; the Arundel, 155, f. 1545, a Hymmarium written in England in the 12th cent., and now in the Brit. Mus.; the Arundel, 155, f. 1545, a Hymmarium written in England in the 12th cent., and now in the Brit. Mus., &c., 1889, p. 45. In the Hart. 2961, as above, the hymn is divided into two parts, pt. l. being st. i.-iv., viii., and pt. ii. beginning "Arbon decora et Juigida." being st. v., vi., viii. In a us. of the 11th cent. now at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (391, p. 246), st. iv. also immediately precedes st. viii. Other early was, which contain this bymn, include one of the 11th cent. now in the Brit. Mus. (3sl. A. vi. f. 469); one of the 11th cent. at Durhum (B., Iii., 32, f. 23); one of the 18th cent. at St. Gall, No. 196, &c. The variations in the text are somewhat numerous, but we need only mention two, vis. st. vii., l. 3, where the Add. 34193, reads "Focunda," and t. x., l. 2, where the Add. 34193, reads "Focunda," and t. x., l. 2, where the Add. 34193, reads "Focunda," and t. x., l. 2, where the Add. 34193, reads "Focunda," and t. x., l. 2, where the Add. 34193, reads "Collaudet." Dantel, l., No. 139, ii. p. 362, iii. p. 284, iv. p. 70, prints the text with readings from a Fleury Ms. of circa 800, a Rheinan Ms. of the 11th cent., &c. The printed text is also in Wackermapel, i., No. 80; the Hymn. Scritzler's Scritzler, 1851, p. 19; F. A. March's Lat. Hys., 1816, p. 95; Card. Newman's Hymn: Beclasiae, 1838 and 1855, &c. In the revised Romen Bren. of 1622 the text is of et. l., iii.-vi., ix., x., slightly altered.

ii. Origin and Allusions. To appreciate this hymn we must bear in mind the circumstances under which it was written. The details are of more than usual interest, as a short summary will show:—

Forquatus was then living at Poictiers, where his friend, Queen Rhadegund, founded a numery. Before the connecration of the numery church she desired to present certain relies to it, and among these she obtained from the Emperor Justin II. a fragment of the so-called True Cross, from which olivourstance the numery received its name of the Holy Cross. This relic was sent in the first instance to Tours, and was left in charge of the Bishop, in order that he might convey it to Potctiers. See the Bistoria Francowse, by Gregory of Tours [d. 584]. Bk. ix., Chapter 40.) In the Abbé E. Briand's Satint Radegonde, Potctiers, 1881, pp. 128-120, its journey to Potctiers is thus described. "Escorted by a numerous body of clergy and of the faithful holding lighted torches, the Bishop started in the midst of llurgical chants, which ceased not to resonni in bonour of the hallowed wood of the Redemption. A tesque from Potctiers the pous cortige found the delegates of Ehndegund, Fortunatus at their head, rejoicing in the bonour which had fallen to them; some currying censers with perfumati meense, others torches of white wax. The meeting took place at Migné, at the place where, twelve centuries and a had is later, the cross appeared in the air. It was on this occasion that the hymn "Vestills Regis" was heard for the first time, the chant of thimph composed by Fortunatus to salme the artival of the True Cross. ... It was the 19th November, 689."

The hymn was thus primarily a Processional hymn, written for use at the solemn reception of a relie of the Holy Cross. Inspired by the occasion the poet composed this poem of the Crucified King, one of the grandest hymns of the Latin church, in which in glowing accents he invites us to contemplate the mystery of love accomplished on the Cross. The occasion thus gives the key to his choice of subject, and to most of the allusions throughout the hymn. Fortunatus evidently had in his mind, especially in at. v., the old legends of the Tree of the Cross (see nuder "Pange lingua gloriosi Proclium," p. 860, i.), and designedly used in i. l. 4, the word "patibulum," which means properly a cross, formed thus Y or thus Y; the latter form representing the stem of the tree, with the branches on which, as on a balance, the ransom of the world was weighed (st. vi.). The most interesting of the other allusions is the use made in the 4th stanza of Ps. xcvi. 10, Neither in the Hebrew, the present Septusgint, the present Vulgate, nor in the English versions, do we find anything answering to Fortunatus's statement that David spoke of God as reigning "from the tree," i.e. from the Cross

Justin Martyr however cited the paisage as Messianic, and regarded the words and ray follow, as part of the original (Dialogue with Trypho, sect. 73; see Migne's PP. Grace, vi., 648); and Tertinlian (Against Marcion, Bt. ili., c. 18; see Migne's PP. Lat., ii., 347), quotes the words "a ligno" as part of the text of Ps. xcvl. 10. These words are also found in many use, of the so-called Italic version of the Pasims, so e.g. in a Fraiter of the 1thic cent. now in the Brit. Mus. (Reg. 2 N. V., f. 112), where the verse reads "Dicite in pationibus dominus regnavit a ligno, et enim correxit obem," and so in mother Profiler of circa 700 (Vep. A., i. f. 92). [in the Add. 10846 of circa 850 it reads "Dicite in gentibus quia dominus regnavit, et enim correxit orbem," and so in the Vitellius E., xvill., f. 93, of the 11th cent.] They also survived in the printed Sarum Massats as a versicle for use on Friday in Easter week and for the Festival of the Invention of the Cross, thus "Dicits in gentibus quia Dominus regnavit a ligno," and this form is also in the present Roman Massat, for the Invention of the Roman Massat, for the Invention of the Roman Massat, is a Lauds in the commemoration of the Holy Gross in the ferlal office at Easteride, thus "V. Dicits in notionibus, alleluis, R. Quia Dominus regnavit a ligno," (see the Marquess of Bute's Roman Bree, into English, vol. i., 1878, p. 152). M. Leon Gaudler, in his Les Troper, 1889, p. 183, quotes a Limoges Ms. of the 11th cent. (Bib. Nat., Paris, Lat. 1333), as appointing it for the 3rd S. after Raster, and as paraphrasing it thus : "Dicite, concunctl at peallier gestifins quits magna Domini elemental, suis respictens ovibus, regnavit omnia et imperavit a ligno, proprio Filio suo cruciliao qui surrant et sedet in trono decommicato Zabub."

iii. Use. As already stated the first use was as a processional hymn in honour of the Holy Cross. Its subsequent uses include the following:—

The Sarson use was at Vespers on Passion Sunday, and daily up to Maunday Thursday. In the Paris Breuof 1736 is was assigned to Vespers from Monday in Passion Wesk up to Maunday Thursday. In the present
Rowan Bren, it is used at Vespers on the Saturday before Passion Sunday, and up to Maunday Thursday, and also on the Festival of the Invention of the Cross (May 3); and in the present Rowan Missai it is appointed to be sume on the morning of Good Friday, after the ceremony of the Adoration of the Cross, and during the time that the acciptos are censing the re-erved sarsonent (kept since Maunday Thursday in a side chapel, in the socalled Holy Grave), previous to its being solemnly placed on the High Altar.

Of the imitations and parodies of this hymn we need only mention two.

The first of these is a sequence beginning "Vexilla Regis, prodeunt et fulget," printed by G. M. Dreves in his Prospriess Lemonéears, 1830, p. 105, from three Limogea axis, now in the Bibl. Nat., Paris (Lat. 1116, circa 390; Lat. 773 of the 12th cent.; Lat. 1137 of the 11th cent.); being an unbappy combination of Fortunatus with the versicle and antiplou used in the present flowan Bree. at the First Vespers of the Invention of the Cross. The second, printed by Thomas Wright in his Political Super of England, London, 1839, p. 135, begins "Vexilla regul prodeunt, Fulget comets combum," and is a parody describing the death (1313) of

Peter de Gaveston, the favourite of Edward II. of England. (Wright, at p. 269, pub. a second song on the same occasion, beginning "Pange, lingua, necem Petri qui turbayit Angilam" which is a parody on the "Pange lingua gioriosi Proelium.")

We may add that the text of Fortunatus, with a full critical and theological commentary, will be found in the Abbé S. G. Pimont's Hymnes du Bréviaire Romain, vol. ii., pt. ii., p. 30, Paris, 1884; and in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der ältesten Kirchenhymnen, vol. 1, Paderborn, 1881, pp. 395-411.

The tre. into English of the Vexilla Regis include :--

1. A Broad the Regal Banners die. This fine rendering is in The Office of the Blessed Virgin Mary in English, &c., 1687 (Brit. Mus.) an account of which is given in the Churchman's Skilling Mag. for July, 1876. Hymn No. 189 in Thring's Coll., 1882, is taken from this tr., the text being slightly altered. It is based on the tr. of 1585 noted below, and is by far the best rendering of the Vexilla Regis in C. U.

2. The royal banner is unfuried. By J. Chandler, in his Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1837, p. 74, in 5 st. of 4 l., and again in his Hys. of the Church, mostly Primitive, 1841, No. 42. It is given in a limited number of hymnals only.

3. Now onward move the standards of our King. By W. J. Copeland, in his Hys. for the Week, &c., 1848, p. 79, in 7 st. of 4 l. Its use is limited.

- 4. Forth flames the standard of our King. By Bp. J. Williams, in his Ancient Hys., 1845, p. 61. This is repeated in a limited number of collections, including Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, and others.
- 5. Forth comes the standard of the King : All hall, Thou Mystery ader'd. By E. Caswall, in his Lyra Catholica, 1849, p. 89, and his Hys. & Pasms, 1878, p. 50, in 7 st. of 4!. It is given in several Roman Catholic hymn-books for schools and missions.
- 6. Forth goes the standard of the King, The sign of signs, the radiant Cross. This tr. appeared as No. 36 in Stretton's Church Hys., 1850, in 6 st. of 4 l. In the Index it is said to be by Chandler, but its similarity to Chandler's tr. is so faint that the most which can be said of it is that it is Chandler's tr. re-written. It is a most successful rendering of the hymn. In its full, or in an abridged form it is found in later collections, as Murray's Hymnal, 1852, Lowe's Gainsburgh Coll., 1854, and several others.
- 7. The King of Kings His banner rears. By R. Campbell, in his Hys. and Anthems, 1850, p. 65, in 6 st. of 4 l.
- 5. See the reyal beaner streeming. By G. Rorison, in his Hys. and Anthons, 1851, No. 59, in 8 st, of 4 1,
- 9. The royal banacre forward go. By J. M. Neale, in his Mediaval Hys., 1851, p. 6, in 7 st. of 4 l., and again in the Hy. Noted, 1852, with the omission of st. vi. It is in C. U. both in Its full and in several altered forms. Amongst the latter are (1) H. A. & M., altered by the Compilers, 1861, and repeated in other collections; (2) F. Pott's Hymas, 4c., altered by the Editor, 1861; (3) Nicholson's Appendix Hyl., 1866, beginning with st. iii., "Fulfill'd is all that David told": (4) The Humanus all that David gaming with a st. fit., "Futfit a is all that Pavid told"; (4) The Hymnary, altered by the Editors, 1872, and others. When these various forms of Dr. Neale's tr. are taken into account, it is found to the second to the second that his rendering of the Vexilla Regis is more widely used than all others put together.

10. The royal banner forward goes, The Gross's mystery shines to view. By J. A. Johnston in his English Hyl., 1852. In the 1856 ed. he altered it to "See forward the King's banners go," and in the 1861 ed. to "Before us our King's banner goes."

11. The royal banner is unfuried. This, in the Cooke and Denton Hymnal, 1853, is a cento of which st. i. is from J. Chandler as above, and st. ii.-v. are from Stretton's Church Hus., 1850, somewhat altered.

12. Forth goes the standard of our King, The sacred banner gleams on high. This rendering, which appeared in Chope's Hymnal, 1857, and again in other collections, is an arrangement trade from older collections, the principal source being Stretton's Church Hys., 1850, as above.

13. The King's bright benners forward go. This in Kennedy, 1863, No. 601, is J. A. Johnston's 1856 text as above, in a slightly altered form.

14. The royal banner is unfurled, And Io! the Cross is reared on high. This rendering in Morrell and How's Ps. & Hys., 1864, in 4 st. of 4 l., is an altered and abbreviated form of the text in Stretton's Church Hys., 1850, as above, with a slight resemblance to Chope's text of 1857. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, No. 118 is a cento beginning with st. i. of this text, and con-cerning which Mr. Ellerton says in his Notes to the Church Hys., 1881, p. xl,:-

"Hymn 118.... Free imitation, written for Church Hymns in 1871 by Bishop William Walsham How, of the Latin hymn Feetlin Regit product, by Venantius Fortunatus. In the present imitation, little except the first two verses of Fortunatus's hymn remain. The original contains eight verses, the last four being an impossioned spectrophs to the material cross, an alleged fragment of which was amongst the relics for the reception of which the hymn was written. These verses being considered by the Editors of Church Hymns wholly unsuitable for the use of the congregations for which their book was prepared, have been replaced by others."

The text of this Church Hymna cento is thus composed : et. i. from Morrell & How, 1864, unaltered; st. ii. from Stretton's Church Hys., unaltered; st. iii., Morrell & How, 1864, st. iii. rewritten; st. iv., v. new by Bp. How.

16. The Kingly banners onward stream. By R. C. Singleton, written in 1867, and pub. in his Anglican II. Bh., 1868.

16. The King's bright banners forward go. E. A. Dayman, in the Sarum Hyl., 1868. The opening lines (1 and 2) are from Kennedy's 1863 text, hence the first line of st. ii., " With outstretched hands, transfixed and torn," must be noted.

This extensive list of trs. marks in a striking manner the strong hold this hymn has upon many men. In translating the stanza which has called forth the greatest diversity and skill is the fourth as above.

The finest rendering of these lines which we have seen is that in the Service Book of 1687 (see above), which reads:-

" That which the Prophet-King of old Hath in mysterious Verse forestid, Is now accomplisht, whilst we see God Enling Nations from a Tree,"

The nearest approach to this in dignity and force is Dr. Neale's tr. of 1851. [J. J.]

Victimae Paschall. Wipo(?). [Easter.] This Sequence is an excellent example of the transition from the rhythmical, irregular, unrhymed Notkerian sequences to the regular rhyming sequences of Adam of St. Victor and later writers. It presents several points of interest, and demands a somewhat detailed examination. We shall treat (1) of the Text and MSS., (2) of the Authorship, and (3) of the Uses made of this Sequence,

i. Test and MSS. To show its structure we print the full text, which reads :--

ii. Authorship. As a rule this Sequence has been regarded as of unknown authorship. Of the guesses at its authorship the following may be mentioned:-

(1) Cardinal Bena (Reruss Liceng., Rome, 1671, p. 336) says that it had been ascribed to Notker. This ascription, however, is quite without ground (see p.

ph. 850) Saya and a secretary from the secretary of the secretary however, is quite without ground (see p. 815).

(2) Rebert II. of France. In a list of authors of sequences, written circus 1302 (see p. 1043), it is ascribed to Robert II. of France. This ascription also lacks confirmation (see p. 967, ii.).

(3) Harmannus Contractus. The attribution to Hermannus Contractus, which is mentioned in the Abbb Migne's Encyclopedic Théologique, vol. viii (Lébrayie), Paris, 1844, col. 850, seems also entirely conjectural.

(4) Adam of St. Victor, Dat it is found in mass, written before be was burn (see above and p. 15, ii.).

(5) Italian Origin. In the Enclesiologist for October, 1864, it is said to be "probably of Italian origin." This appears simply to be a conjecture, and we have been unable to discover anything which can be called evidence in support of it.

unable to discover anything which can be called evidence in support of it.

(6) Wipe. Lastly P. Anselm Schublger, in his Singerschule St. Galless, 1958, ascribes it to Wipe, on the ground that it is marked with his name in an Elmiedelm 28. of the end of the 11th cent., and gives a facelmite (Appn., No. 35) of the part of the Ms. which contains this sequence. Since Schublger's discovery the sequence has generally been ascribed to Wipe (otherwise Wigno or Wighert), who was a native of Burgundy, and a secutar priest. He was for some time chaplan to the Emperors Courad II. (d. June 4, 1039), and Heinrich III., and presented a collection of poems to the former in 1025, and another collection to the latter in 1041; his latest work being a proce history of the former in 1925, and another collection to the latter in 1941; his latest work being a proce history of the Emperor Contad, finished about 1948. His claim to this sequence (marked as his, so far as we can discover, only in this solitary Emissided in ms.) can hardly be regarded as definitely established. Neither of the two earliest St. Gail ms. give his name, and the copy in one of these ms. (No. 340) dates circa 1940 (so also the Echternach Gradual noted above), i.e. more than 20 years earlier than we otherwise hear of Wipo. And there is nothing in the other pieces known as his which would lead us to connect the "Viotimas Paschail" with his name.

li. Uses. This fine Sequence is simple, scriptural, good in rhythm, and embraces in itself various elements which account for its popularity and long extended use. Luther held it in high esteem, especially admiring the terse and vivid picture of the conflict between Death and Life in st. iii., and practically in-corporated this stanza in his "Christ lag in Todesbanden" (see > 384, 1). Its brevity and picturesqueness led to its speedy adoption in the Missals of various countries for use at the

and c to Truraday in Easter week; while a, b, and c do not indicate its use.

Neither the Sorace, Fork, nor Rereford Missails used to a Easter Sunday or on Low Sunday; the Survey appointing it for Friday in Easter week, and for the 2nd and later Sundays up to the Ascendion, and the Hersford and Fork for Wednesday in Easter week, as also on the 2nd and later Sundays. In the Angers Missail of 1495 it is however appointed for Easter Hunday and for Low Sunday, as well as for Theeday and Wednesday in Easter week; in the Hamburg Missail of 1509 for Easter week; in the Unce Missail of 1495 for the B, V. M. at Eastertweek; in the Unce Missail of 1495 for the B, V. M. at Eastertweek; in the Unce Missail of 1495 for the B, V. M. at Eastertweek; in the Unce Missail of 1495 for the B, V. M. at Eastertweek; in the Unce Missail of 1495 for the B, V. M. at Eastertweek; in the Unce Missail of 1495 for the B, V. M. at Eastertweek; in the Unce Missail of 1495 for the B, V. M. at Eastertweek; in the Funct Missail of 1576 it is one of the four sequences which were alone retained in that revision, and is appointed for use on taster Sunday and daily up to Low Sunday inclusive, but not for the later Sundays. In the Puris Evec. of 1680 it forms part of the service for Verpers on Easter Sunday. Sunday.

The dramatic possibilities of this Sequence also early attracted attention. It formed a striking feature in many of the Easter Miracle or Mystery Plays, but these we have not space to describe in detail.

(For its use there see s.g. F. J. Moun's Schauspiele des Mittelalters, Karlarube, 1848, pp. 17-37, 128, Sc.; Ro-légaise Authouse, ed. T. Wright and J. O. Hallwell, vol. II., 1843, p. 188; E. de Coussemaker's Drames Litur-giques du Moyes Apr., Rennes, 1860; G. Milchauck's Orier- und Passionaspiele, Wolfenbüttel, 1880, &c.)

It was also frequently employed at Matina on Easter Sunday, in the ceremony of the Easter Sepulchre, which was intercalated in the service between the Third Lesson and the "Te Deum." Various forms of this function are found both in England, and on the continent. Dr. Carl Lange, in his Die Lateisischen Osterfelern, Munich, 1887, gives the results of his examination of 224 ms, and printed service books (Brevieries, Antiphonories, Processionals, Tropories, &c.), ranging from the 10th to the 18th cent., and used in France, Holland, Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, and England, all of which contain longer or shorter forms of this function, and 68 of which em-body the "Viotimae Paschali," either in full or beginning with "Die nobis, Maria." The earliest forms in which he has found the "Victimse Paschali" included date from the 18th

At p. 62 Lange prints from a 13th cent. Ritual for use at Chalcus-sur-Marne. There, after the Third Hespensory, two bors vested in whits took their places one on the right and the other on the left of the high alter, to represent the angels at the Holy Seputcher; followed by three descens in white dalmatics, coming from the right side and standing before the alter, to represent the Three Marys. The Angels sak the Three Marys "Whom seek ys in the seputchre?" and they answer "Jesus of Nazareth," The Angels sak the Three Marys "Whom seek ys in the seputchre?" and they answer "Jesus of Nazareth," The Angels, taking off the white altar-cloth, as representing the grave clothes, reply "He is not here." The Marys, tarning to the choir, sing "Alleinis. The Lord has risen." Then, passing down towards the choir, the Flust Mary sings "Victimas" (st. 1), the Second sings "Agnua redemite" (st. 1), and the Third sings "Moss et vita" (st. ill.). Then the succentor, coming to the first step of the sitar, sake the Flust Mary "Ho nobis" (st. 1v., 1l. 1, 2), to which she replies "Angelleos testes" (st. 1v., 1l. 5, 6), and the Third "Surrezite" (st. 1v., 1l. 7, 8). Then the succentor, turning to the choir, and pointing to the First Mary, sings "Credendam" (st. v., 1l. 1-3), and the whole choir sing "Scimms" (st. v., 1l. 4-6). In the meanting the Marys have returned to the vestry, and the ceremony ends by the bishop or the succentor beginning the "To Deum."

ordinary church services during the period of Easter.

Description of the instance of the inst Magdalene sings at i.-iii., then Peter and John ask her "Die nobls" (st. iv., il. 1, 2), to which she replies "Sepuichrum" (st. iv., il. 3-8). Then the choir sing "Gredendum" (st. v. il. 1-3), Mary sione the "Scimus" (st. v., il. 4, 5), and the choir "Tu nobls" (st. v., i. 8). In the later service books the more dramatic portion of the sequence beginning with the "Die nobls" is alone retained (sp. in the Heraford Heraford 1605). Se in the Preg Breviary of 1512 (Lange, p. 122) the rubrics provide for a proper Easter sepuichre and for two Marya. There the Bishop asks Mary Magdalene "Oic nobls, Maria?" the choir singing "Quid vidisti in via?" and Mary replying "Sepuichrem" (st. iv., il. 3-8), and the choir then singing "Credendum" (st. v., il. 1-8). As Dr. Lange requires 171 large octave pages to print and describe the variations of these service-books, we must beg our readers who wish for further information to refer to his interesting work.

As a final proof of the popularity of the "Victimae Paschali," we may mention some of the numerous imitations of it.

Thus M. Leon Gautler, in his 1888 ed. of Adam of St. Victor, prints two esquences, one on St. Victor ("Martyris Victoris landes resonent Christiani Mortem el") at it. p. 24, and the other for the B. V. M. at Easter ("Virgini Marise laudes indoern Christiani Eva tristia") at if. p. 248. Book of these are servile Imitations of, and Indeed borrow a good deal directly from the "Victimas Paschall." and in his 1881 ed. of Adam of St. Victor (pp. 236, 245) Gautier says that in both cases the ascription to Adam is a mistake. Other indications may be consulted in Rebrein, e.g. his Nos. 152, 177, 215, 227, 233, 525, 565. Thus M. Leon Gautler, in his 1858 ed. of Adam of 233, 525, 565,

The varying forms of the text, together with a full critical and theological commentary, will be found in Dr. J. Kayser's Beiträge zur Geschichte und Erklärung der ältesten Kirchenkympen, vol. ii., 1886, pp. 87–60.

Victorinus, Santolius. (Santeiil, Joan-Reptiste de.]

Vinet, Alexandre Rodolphe, b. June 19th, 1799, at Guchy, near Lausanne. His father, a man of somewhat stern religion, was schoolmaster of the village, and held a small appointment in the Canton du Vaud. Alexandre was appointed Professor of the French language at the gymnasium of Basle, at the age of 20, and occupied this office, with some work for the University, for twenty years.

In 1819 he was called to the ministry, and married. At first opposed to the movement of the Reveil, a deeper knowledge of its principles and deep sympathy with the persecu-tion of its leaders, drew him heartily to its side. His pen was fearlessly used in defence of toleration (Du respect des opinions, 1824), freedom of worship (Mémoire en faveur de la liberté des cultes, 1826), and the separation of Church and State (Essai sur la manifestation des convictions religieuses, et sur la separation de l'Église et de l'État, 1542). No work is more permanently valuable on the subject than the Essai, from the logical sequence of its conclusions from the premises laid down. In 1837 he had been recalled to Lausanne, to occupy the "chaire de théologie pratique," in the Academy. In the end of 1840, however, he resigned the chair, withdrawing at the same time from the national church. He took a prominent part in the preliminary commit-tees for the formation of the "Eglise libre du Canton de Vand"; but his proposals were largely modified in the final constitution of it, to his deep regret. He had been compelled to withdraw from the discussions by his failing health. His constitution, always delicate, gave way comparatively early, and he d. May 10, 1847. His name is tenderly chorished, not only for his efforts in the cause of religious freedom, but as an Evangelical Divine (Discours our quelques sujets religieux, 1881–41, and Etudes Evangeliques, pub. after his death), and as a distinguished man of letters (see the portrait of him by Sainte Beuve). His articles in the Semeur touched wide and varied subjects of literature with rare delicacy, acuteness, and truth. The most celebrated of his literary works are: Etudes sur Blaise Pascal, and Études sur la littérature Française au dixneuvième Siècle, pub. posthumonaly. The hymns pub. in the Chants Chretiens are only a few out of the number he wrote. reveal the inner depth of a nature that should from outward demonstration of religious emotion, and are valuable on this account, as well as for that refinement of meditation which places them so high among the Protestant hymns of France. (See p. 309, ii.) [H. L. B.]

Vintimille, Charles Gaspar Guillaume de Vintimille du Luc, was b. Nov. 15, 1655. He was designated Bishop of Marseilles in 1684, but was not consecrated as such till 1692. In 1710 he was translated to the see of Aix (Bouches du Rhône), and in 1729 to that of Paris. He d. March 13, 1746. Under his auspices appeared the new Paris Breviary of 1736 (in which the ancient hymns of the Church were in great measure replaced by those of the Santettils, Coffin, and other recent French writers); the new Paris Missal of 1738; and the new Paris Processional of 1740; all of which were speedily adopted in many other French dioceses. That Vintimille was himself a hymnwriter seems decidedly doubtful. The hymn "O Christe qui noster poli" (p. 825, i.) leas sometimes been ascribed to him, but neither in the Cluniae Brev. of 1686 nor in the Paris Brev. of 1736 is it in any way [J. M.] marked as his.

Virgin born, we bow before Thes.

Bp. R. Heber. [Lent.] Appeared in his post-humous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 54, in 4 st. of 41, and appointed for the 3rd S. in Lent. As given in the People's H., 1867, No. 373, the ines "Mary, Mother meek and mild"; are altered to "Mary, Maid and Mother mild." It is otherwise unchanged. [J. J.]

Virginis castae virginis summae decus praecinentes. [Common of Virgins.] Morel, in his Lat. Hymnen, 1868, p. 180, gives a part of this sequence with the note, "This is only the beginning of a rambling and somewhat berberous sequence in the Ms. collection of P. Brander [St. Gall Ms., No. 546, written in 1507], where it bears the title 'a prolix sequence of some monk of St. Gall." Nesle, in his Sequentiae, 1852, p. 237, ascribes it to Godescaleus or Gottschalck (d. 1050); but the earliest source he quotes is the Tournay Missai of 1540, and there does not seem to be any reason for accepting this ascription, which is reason for accepting this ascription, which is evidently a conjecture. The earliest text known is in the St. Gall Ms., No. 383, of the 13th or 14th cent. The printed text is also in Daniel, v. p. 314, and Kebreia, No. 475. Tr. as "To-day let Christian maidens." In the People's H., 1867, No. 221, and signed "S. M." [i.e. Sister Marion]. [J. M.]

D. xii. f. 110; Harl. 2961, f. 249 b; Add. 30851, f. 155); and in the Latin Hys. of the Anglo Sazon Ch., 1851, is printed from an 11th cent. Ms. of Durham (B. iii. 32, f. 40b); and in a Ms. of the 11th cent. at Corpus Christi Coll., Cambridge (391, p. 274), and the Bern Es. 455 of the 10th cent. The foregoing test are of the text for a "Virgin and Martyr." There are also test, of an arrangement of the text for a "Virgin, but not a Martyr." These include one in the Primer, 1706, and a second by J. Wallace, 1874, each beginning with the same first line as above. In the Rom. Brev., st. viii., of the Latin text, Hujus cratus Done almo nobie, is given, together with a doxology, for "Holy Women." This is tr.: (1) "O God of bountie, at thy saints intreating," in the Primer, 1599; (2) "Permit, great God, this Saint with Pray'rs may free," in the Primer, 1706; and (3) "O God, for this Thy servant's sake, we humbly Thee implore," by J. Wallace, 1874. In the Marquese of Bute's Roman Breviary into English, 1879, Wallace's tr. is given as "When she pleads for us at her sweet peti-tion," &c. [J. J.]

Vischer, Christoph, a of Jakob Vischer or Fischer, burgess at Joschimsthal, in Bohemia, was b. at Joachimsthul in 1520. He matriculated at the University of Wittenberg in Nov. 1540 (m.a. 1544), and was ordained at Wittenberg on Feb. 10, 1544, as pastor and probst at Jüterbogk, near Wittenberg. He was then appointed (in 1552) cathedral preacher and superintendent at Schmalkalden; in 1571 pastor and general superintendent at Meiningen; in 1574 court preacher and assistant superintendent at Celle (Zelle); and in 1577 chief pastor of St. Martin's Church at Halberstadt. He rematrin's Curion at haloerstadt. He re-turned to Celle in 1583, as general superin-tendent of Lüneburg, and d. at Celle in October, 1597 (Koch, ii., 265; Wettel, i. p. 235, and A. H., i., pt. v. p. 38; Rotermund's Gelebrite Hannover, vol. ii., 1823, pp. 39, 40; vs. from Dr. Ebeling Celle &c. 402; MS. from Dr. Ebeling, Celle, &c.)

Vischer was a somewhat voluminous writer. Rotermund gives the titles of 29 works by him. Only one hymn is known as his, viz. :-

him. Only one hymn is known as his, viz.;—
Wir danken dir, Herr Jesu Carist, Dass du für uns in Sermo x. of those on the Resurrection (Auferstehung) as fallows: as follows :-

"Solche Beufftner erwecket der beilige Geist, stönet in une das wir beten.

"Ach Herr Christe, war Mensch und Gott, Durch dein heilig Fünff Wunden rot, Erlös nich von dem ewigen Tod, Und tröst mich in meiner ietzten Not."

The same stanza is found in the ed. Schmalkalden, 1888 [Berlin Library]. The sermons on the Auferstehung seem to have appeared at Frankfurt am Main in 1884 (preface 1882, title 1863, colophon 1862. So the copy in the Vatican Library at Roine). Witterli, No. 344, prints the four stanza form from the text given by J. C. Clearius, Jens, 1710, as a reprint of the original, and as entisled "A children's hymn composed by M. Christoph Vischer for the Christian community at Schmalkaldan upon the strengthening uses of the bitter sufferings and death of Christ Jenus our Saviour." It is also in the Eure. E. S., 1861, No. 122. The trs. are:

Vital Spark of heavenly flame. A. Pope. [The Soul Immortal.] In the Spectator for Nov. 10, 1712, Steele gives a letter sent to him by Pope on the words spoken by Hadrian on his death-bed. This letter, in The Works of Alexander Pope, Esq. . . Printed verbatim from the Octavo edition of Mr. Warburton. London, C. Bathurst, 1788. Vol. v.. p. 185, is dated Nov. 7, 1712, and begins:-

"I was the other day in company with five or six men of some learning; where chancing to mention the famous verses which the Emperor Adrian spoke on his death-bet, they were all agreed that 'twas a piece of gatety unworthy of that prince in those circumstances. I could not but differ from this opinion; methinks it was a piece of the country o was by no means gar, but a very serious soliloquy to his soul at the point of his departure; in which sense I naturally took the verses at my first reading them, when I was very young, and before I knew what inter-pretation the world generally put upon them.

" Animula vaguia, blandula, Hospes comesque corporis, Que nunc ablois in loca? Pallidula, rigida, nudula, Nec (ut soles) dabis joca?"

The letter then proceeds with a prose translation of these lines, and a vindication of the same. At the foot of the letter, and after his signature. Pope added the following metrical rendering :-

" Appraxi morientis ad Aximax TRANSLATED.

"Ab fleeting Spirit! wand ring fire,
That long last warm'd my tender breast,
Must thou no more this frame !nspire? No more a pleasing cheerful goest? " Whither, sh whither art thou flying?

To what dark, undiscover'd shore? Then seem'st all trembling, shiv'ring, dying, And Wit and Humour are no more,"

In the Spectator, Nov. 10, 1712, Steele gives this letter verbatim, with the exception of the metrical version at the end. On Nov. 29, 1712, Pope wrote to Steele expressing regret that as this letter was given in his name he had not an opportunity of setting forth his ideas more fully and accurately. This letter ideas more fully and accurately. did not appear in the Speciator. On Dec. 4, 1712, Steele wrote to Pope :-

"This is to desire of you that you would please to make an ode as of a cherrial dying spirit, that is to say, the Emperor Adriau's 'Animula vagula' put into two or three stantas for music. If you comply with this, and send me word so, you will very particularly oblige. Yours, &c." (Works, v. p. 188.)

two after the receipt of Steele's communica-

"I do not send you word I will do, but have already done the thing you desire of me. You have it (as Cowley calls ic) just warm from the brain. It cams to me that moment I waked this morning; yet, you'll see, it was not so absolutely inspiration, but that I had in my head not only the verses of Adrian, but the fine fragment of Sappho, &c.

" The dying Christian to his Sout. "ODE.

"Vital apark of heavily flame!
Quit, oh quit this mortal frame:
Trembling, hoping, ling/ring, flying,
Oh the pain, the bliss of dying!
Cease, fond nature, cease thy strife,
And let me languish into life.

Hark! they whisper; angels say, Sister spirit, come away! What is this absorbs me quite, Steals my senses, shuts my sight, Drowns my spirits, draws my breath? Tell me, my soul, can this be death?

Ш. " The world recedes; it disappears! The worst recees; it classpears;
Heav'n opens on my eyes; my ears
With sounds scraphic ring;
Lend, lend your wings; I mount; I fly?
O Grave; where is thy victor;
O Death; where is thy sting?"
(Works, v. p. 190.)

What Steele did with this ode we cannot say. It was certainly not inserted in the Speciator, as is generally supposed. It was included in various editions of Pope's Works, and was taken from thence for use in the hymnals. Collyer included it in his Coll., 1812, No. 627, and since then it has been repeated in numerous hymn-books. In the Cong. H. Bk., 1886, J. Conder gave Pope's original text as No. 612, and a rewritten form of the same, beginning with the same first line, as No. 618. This rewritten form was repeated in his Choir and Oratory, 1837, p. 246, and in his posthumous Hymns of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, p. 169.

The "fine fragment of Sappho" referred to in Pope's letter, formed the subject of Addison's article in the Speciator of Thursday, Nov. 22, 1711. Addison gives in his article a translation in Latin by Catallus, another in French by Botleau, and a third in English by Ambrose Phillips. It was doubtless to the original, and to these translations that Pope referred in his letter to Steele quoted above. As pointed out by R. Carruthers in his edition of Pope's Poetical Works, 1853, vol. il., p. 178; and by Miller in his Singers and Songe of the Church, 1869, p. 149, Thomas Flatman's translation of the "Animula vagula, blandula, may have influenced Pope in his "Vital spark," but we are inclined to think that Addison's article in the Spectator, already referred to, had very much more to do with it than anything that Flatman had done.

Vokes, Mrs. A long correspondence has failed to elicit any information concerning this hymn-writer beyond the facts that the earliest work in which her hymne are found is a Scl. of Missionary and Devotional Hys., edited by the Rev. J. Griffin, a Congregational minister at Portsea, and pub. in 1797, Several of these were repeated in J. Dobell's letter, which is undated in his Works, vol. v. p. New Sel. of Seven Hundred Evangelical Hys., 190, but was probably sent within a post or de., 1806. There are also 7 of her hymns, all Vom Himmel hoch da komm ich her. M. Luther. [Christmas.] This beautiful Christmas hymn first appeared in the Geistliche Lieder, Wittenberg, 1835, in 15 st. of 41; and thence in Wackersagel, iii. p. 23. Also in Schircke's ed. of Luther's Geistliche Lieder, 1854, p. 12, in the Unv. L.S., 1851, No. 55, &c. In Klug's G. B., 1543, it is entitled " A Children's Hymn for Christmas Eve on the child Jesus, taken from the Second Chapter of the Gospel of St. Luke." It has cometimes been said to be derived, at least in part, from the Latin. To the "Parvulus nobis nescitur" its resemblance is very slight; and this Latin bymn has not been traced earlier than the 1579 ed. of Lucas Lossius's Psalmodia (1st ed. 1553). To the "Nuntium vobis fero de supermis" (Brit. Mus. MS. of the 12th cent., Hart. 2928 f. 114], it has no relationship whatever, Of the origin of the German hymn, Laux-mann, in Koch, viii. 21, thus speaks :--

"Lather was accustomed every year to prepare for its family a happy Christmas Eve's entertainment... and for this factival of his children he wrote this Christmas hymn. Its opening lines are modelled on a song. 'Aus irransten Landan komm ich her;' and throughout he successfully catches the ring of the popular secred song. It is said that Lather celebrated the festival in his own homes in this crimial fashion. By his orders the first bones in this original fashion. By his orders the first seven verses of this hymn were song by a man dressed as an angel, whom the children greeted with the eighth and following verses."

We may said that Lather took the first stanza almost entirely from the song, which begins:

"Ich komm ans fremden Landen her,

"Act avoid and remove Laboret net,"

Und bring cook viel der neuen Mälur,

Der neuen Mähr bring leh so viel,

Mehr dann ich coch bler segen will."

From the rest of the song Luther did not borrow anything. In King's G, B, 1535, it is set to the melody of "Aus fremden Landen," or rather, as F. M. Böhme, in his Altdeutsches Liederbuch, 1871, No. 271, gives it "Ich komm aus fremden Landen her." In the Gelstliche Lieder, Leipzig, V. Schumann, 1539, this was superseded by the beautiful melody still in use, which is sometimes ascribed to Luther, and is set to this bymn in the C. B. for England, 1863 (set also to No. 57 in H. A. & M., 1875). Tr. as:—

Vom Himmel kam der Engel Schaar. M. Luther. [Christman.] This is founded on St. Luke ii. 10, 11, and St. Matt. ii. 6; and was apparently written in 1543, and meant for use when his other Christmas hymn ("You Himmel boch") was thought to be too long. It was let pub, in the Geistliche Lieder, Wittenberg, 1543, in 6 st. of 4 l., and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 25. Also in Schirck's ed. of Luther's Geistliche Lieder, 1854, p. 15, and in the Unv. Vom Himmel kommt der starke Held. [Christmas.] This hymn appears in the Neues Hildburghdusisches G. B., 1807 (ed. 1808, No. 170), in 10 st. of 4 l. The two opening lines, but not much more, are taken from a hymn by Dr. Johann Christoph Stockhausen [b. October 20, 1725, at Gladenbach, Hesse; became in 1769 Lutheran auperintendent at Hanau; d. at Hanan, Sept. 4, 1784], found in the Neue Hanau Münzerbergsche G. B., 1779, and included in the Württemberg G. B., 1791, in 6 st. The rest is a paraphrase, apparently by J. C. Wagner (q.v.), of the same passage of Holy Scripture as that used by Luther in his "Vom Himmel kam der Engel Schaar," but it has very little resemblance to Luther. The trs. from the text of Bunsen's Versuch, 1833, No. 118, in 9 st., are: --(1) "The mighty Saviour comes from heaven." By Miss Cox. 1841, p. 13. (2) "From Heaven comes the mighty Lord." By Lady E. The text is given in J. Chandler's Hys. of the Primitive Church, 1887, No. 58; Card. Newman's Hymni Ecclesiae, 1838 and 1865; and in L. C. Bigge's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867. Tr. as:-

In 1852 it was given in an altered form (but opening with Chandler's first line) in Murray's Hymnal, No. 32. Micray's alterations were repeated in great part in the trial copy of H. A. 4 M., 1859, and in the 1st ed., 1861, where the tr. began :-
- How blest were they who walked in love. In this rendering additional changes were made by the Compilers of H. A. & M., thus rendering it a cento by Chandler, Murray, and the Compilers of H. A. & M. This was repeated in a few collections, but omitted from the 1875 ed. of H. A. & M. In Mercer's Ch. Psalter & H. Bh., Oxford ed., 1864, No. 430, the opening line is "O ye who follow Christ in love," but the hymn as a whole is from Murray and H. A. & M. The Hymnary, 1872, is the H. A. & M. text with additional alterations.

Vox clara ecce intonat_ [Advent.] This hymn has been ascribed to St. Ambrose, but is not assigned to him by the Benedictine editors. It is certainly ancient, possibly even of the 5th cent. It is suggested by Rom. xiii. 11 (the Epistic for the 1st S. in Advent), and St. Luke xxi. 25 (the Gospel for the 2nd S. in Advent in Anglican use, for the 1st S, in modern Roman use). It is an excellent summary of the leading ideas of Advent, and well fitted for use throughout the season. Daniel, i. No. 73, gives the ancient text, in 4 st. of 41. (together with the recast of the Roman Breviary of 1632, which begins En clare vox redarguit), and at iv. p. 143 cites it as in a Rheinau Ms. of the 11th cent. It is also in G. M. Dreves's Hymn. Moissiacensis, 1888, from a 10th cent. Ms. In the use of Sarum it was assigned to Lands on the 1st S. in Advent, and daily up to Christmas Eve. Also in the York, Aberdeen, ancient Roman (Venice, 1478), and other Breviaries. In the Mazarabic Breviary of 1502 it is the hymn at Vespers on Wednesday and Friday in the first and third weeks in Advent (see Migne's PP. Lat., lxxxvi. cols. [W. A. S.] 65, 85, 888).

It is found in five was, of the 11th cent, in the British It is found in five Mrs. of the 11th cent. in the British Museum, viz. three of the Ancient English Church (Vesp. D. xii. £ 28 5; Jul. (Surtees Society), 1851, p. 37, it is printed from an 11th cent. Mrs. at Ducham (B. iii. 32, f. 11). The ancient text is also in Wackernagel i., No. 56; Hymn. Sarieb, 1831, p. 6; and Büttler, No. 33; the text of the Roman Brariary of 1832 in Carl. Newman's Hymni Excision. 1839 and 1863, and Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & H., 1667.

Vox sonors nostri chorl. Adam of St. Victor? [St. Catherine.] A graceful sequence relating the history of St. Catherine of Alexandria, to be used on her festival, Nov. 25. Gautier, in his 1858 ed. of Adam's Ocueres Politiques, vol. ii., p. 320, gives it among the genuine proses of Adam, but in his ed. 1881. p. 245, he ranks it as doubtful for rhythmical reasons, and so does not print the text, but cites it as in a Gradual of St. Victor before 1239 (Bibl. Nat., Paris, No. 14452), a Paris Gradual of the 13th cent. (B. N. No. 15615), and other sources. Among Missals it is found Museum (Add. 16905, f. 309), the Saintes 1491; the Sens 1529, and others. The printed text is also in Neale's Sequentiae, 1852, p. 205; Daniel, v. p. 324; Kehrein, No. 812; and D. S. Wrangham's Liturgical Poetry of Adam of St. Victor, 1881. Tr. as:

Thence in Wackernagel's ed. of his Geistliche Leider, No. 99, and Bachmann's ed., No. 1. Repeated in the Cräger-Runge G. B., 1653, No. 1, and recently in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1132. It is one of the finest and most popular of German morning hymns, and soon passed into universal use, st. viii. being a special favourite. 🛮 Tr. as :--

My Soul, awake and tender. In full, by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psalmodia Germanica, 1720, p. 33 (1722, p. 104), repeated as No. 477 in pt. L of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754. In the Moravian H. Bk., 1789, No. 744 (1886, Nos. 1158, 1159), begins "My soul awake and render," st. i., il., iv., v. being from i.; v. ll. 3, 4; vi. ll. 1, 2; x.; vili.; while st. iii. ("Bless me this day, Lord Jesus," 1886, No. 1159), is st. iil. of No. 189, in pt. i. of the 1756 (a tr. by J. Gambold from the early Greek hymn, καθ' ἐκάστην ἡμέραν εὐλογήσω σε, p. 1135, i.). From this 1789 text st. i., iii., ll. 1, 2; iv. ll. 3, 4, were given in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833.

Other tre. arc: (1) "Thy Thanks, my Soul, be reising," by H. J. Buckell, 1842, p. 28. (2) "Wake, my heart, and sing His praises," by E. Rossie, 1867. (3) "Awake, my heart, be singing," by J. Kelly, 1887. (4) "Wake up, my heart, elater," by N. L. Frolkingham, [J. M.]

Wach' auf, wach' auf, du sich're Welt. J. Rist. [Second Advent.] 1st pub. in his Neuer Himlischer Lieder sonderbahres in on early 14th cent, Paris in the British | Buch, Lüneburg, 1651, p. 248, in 18 st. of 8 le entitled, "True hearted Exhortation and Warning to the careless world that with genuine repentance she may prepare and secure herself against the near approaching Last Day." Founded on the Gospel for the 2nd S. in Advent (St. Luke xxi. 25-86), and is one of the fluest of Riet's hymns. Repeated in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1704, No. 14 (8 st.); and in Bunsen's Versuch, 1838, No. 493 (Allg. G. B., 1846, No. 426), omitting st. ii.-v. Tr. as:—

1. Awake, then caralam world, awake! The day shall, &c. By A. T. Russell, in 3 st. The tr. of st. i. appeared as No. 108 in the Daleton Hospita! H. Bk., 1848; the tre, of st. vii., xiii., were added in his Ps. & Hys., 1851, No. 39.

2. Awake, then careless world, awake? The final day, &s. A good ir. of st. i., vii., xii., vi., ix., xi., xiii., by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., let Ser., 1855, p. 4.

From this the trs. of st. vi., lx., xiii., altered and beginning. "The Lord in love dalayeth long," were included as No. 113 in the freingible Hys. for the Use of the Casroles, 1886. A cento in 5 st. of the, from the trs. of vil., lx., xiii., beginning, "Lo, He, on whom all power is laid," is in H. L. Hastinge's Hyanad, 1880.

Wackernagel, Carl Eduard Philipp, n.n., was b at Berlin, June 28, 1800. He studied and graduated Ph. D. at the University of Berlin. In 1829 he became a master in the technical school (Gewerbeschule) at Berlin, and in 1839 master in a private school at Stetten in Württemberg. He was then (1845) appointed professor in the Realgymnasium at Wiesbeden, and in 1849 director of the Bealschule at Elberfold. He received the degree of n.n. from the University of Breslau in 1861, and in the same year retired to Dresden, where he d. June 20, 1877 (Henzog's Real Encyldopädie, xvi. 588; Dr. Ludwig Schulze's Philipp Wackernagel, Leipzig, 1879, &c.).

Englicipation, XVI. 1905; Dr. Lieuwig Schulers of Philipp Wackernagel, Leipzig, 1879, &c.).

Wackernagel was an enthusiastic and successful teacher, and the author of various works on mathematics, on orystallography, on German literature, &c. His claim to notice here is through his editions of German hymn-writers (P. Gerhardt, 1818; M. Luther, 1818; J. Haersmann, 1886): his work on Dutch Hymnody (Beifrigs sur stelleridholischen Hymnodynic Frankfurt, 1867), but more especially through his works on German hymnody up to 1800. His leutiche Krohestleid finst appeared as Stuttgart in 1841, and was supplemented by his Bibliographic sur Geschichte des des techen Kircken-Kotes (m. XvI. Jahrhunderte, Frankfurt am Main, 1856, in which the original works were described. The permanent edition appeared in 5 volus, at Leipzig, 1844-77, as Anglang des XVII. Jahrhunderte, the preface to the last volume being all that be did not live to complete. Yolume i. contains 656 Latin bymns, and a Steptement to the Bibliographic of 1855; il. (1867) has 1449 pieces which are (14 axcepted) by German writers prior to the Reformation; ili. (1870) has 1457 pieces of the Reformation period; iv. (1614) has 1559 pieces, all (2 excepted) by German writers from 1534 to 1564; and v. has 1605 pieces by German writers from 1578 to 1803. This work is a mouument of care and research, and is indispensable to the student of early German hymnody. The present writer has gladly availed himself of it, and it is only in a very few cases that he has been able to supplement or correct its results.

Wackernaget had a share in editing the Elberfeld G. B. of 1857. He was also one of the original commission appointed to prepare the so-called Eisensch Conference G. B. (see Koch, vii. 112. It was meant to be a general hymn-book for use by the Lutherans over all Germany), but disagreeing with the critical canons of his colleagues, soon left. He afterwards pub. a small collection of standard German hymns, entitled Kleines Gesangbuch geistlicher Lieder für Kirche, Schule und Hans, Stuttgart, 1860, the greatest merit of which was the beauty of its type. [J. M.]

Wake the song, O Zion's daughter. [Palm Sunday.] This hymn appeared in E. W. Eddis's frying to Hymns for the Use of the Churches, in 1864, and is therein accredited to "J. E. L.," i.e. Jane E. Lesson. It is however a curious cento and is thus composed:—

St. i. Original, by Miss Leeson, based on Dr. Neale's tr. of "Gloris, laus, et honor," in the Hymnal Noted.
St. ii. Composed of st. iv. v. of the same tr. by Dr. Neale with two or throw yether alternation.

Neale, with two or three verbal atterations. St. Iii. Il. 1-4. Altered from a doxology in the Countess of Huntingdon's Coll., 1780, No. 294; Il. 5, 6 from Dr. Neale, as above; and Il. 7-9 added by Miss Leeson.

This cento is of more than usual excellence, and might be used with advantage. [J. J.]

Walker, George, F.B.S., b. 1735, at Newesetle-on-Type, educated by his uncle. Thomas Walker, dissenting minister at Durham, whom, after further study at Dr. Rotherham's scademy at Kendal, and at Edinburgh and Glasgow, he succeeded in the pulpit there. From Durham Walker removed to Great Yarmouth, and thence in 1772 to the Warrington Academy. While there he pub. The Doctrine of the Sphere. This and his Treatise on Conto Sections are the chief of his mathematical works. From 1774 to 1798 he was minister at the High Psyement Chapel, Nottingham, and took a prominent part in the public life of the town. His sermons on political events of the time attracted widespread attention, as did his tract The Dissenters' Plea; or, an appeal of the Dissenders to the Justice, Honour, and Religion of the Kingdom against the Test Laws. This and other essays on religious and philosophical questions were republished after his death in two volumes of Essays on Various Subjects, with a Memoir, 1809. Four volumes of Sermons on Various Subjects were also published (1808), the first two volumes having first appeared in 1760, during his Nottingham ministry. In 1798 he removed to Manchester, as Professor of Theology in the recently founded Manchester Academy and also became president of the Philosophical and Literary Society. His health giving way he spent the last months of his life in the neighbourhood of Liverpool, and d. in 1807, while on a visit to London. He was buried in Bunhili-fields. For his Nottingham congregation Walker pub.

A Collection of Proline and Hymns for Public Worship, unmixed with the disputed doctrines of any sect. Warrington, Printed by W. Eyres, for the Editor. 1789.

This is one of the chief of the collections made for congregations of Presbyterians in the period of their transition towards Unitarianism. Of the 387 pealms and hymns 141 (are taken from Watts, and of the rest the names of 24 authors are given, including T. Scott, Barbauld and Kippis. Walker himself, holding a "tempered Arianism," freely altered the hymns adopted, both for dectrinal reasons, and "to improve the style" of the compositions. He also contributed hymns of his own. Of these the best known are :-

1. Enough of life's vain scope I've trod.

2. Though many faults do me reprove.
Part of "How feelish to oppose to God."

8. The earth proclaims its Lord. [V, I [V. D. D.]

Walker, George, D.D., a of Arthur Walker, a farmer at Hillton of Pitbladde, near Cupar, Fife, was b. at Hillton, Jan. 6, 1783. He studied at the Universities of St. Andrews and Edinburgh; and after being licensed by the Presbytery of Cupar, in 1806, was ap-pointed in 1813 parish minister of Kinnell, near Arbroath. In 1867 he received the degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He d. at Kinnell on Sept. 11, 1868. He was a scholarly and devout man, with great taste and modest and retiring manners. He pub. :--

(1) Hysens translated or instanted from the German:
Lond., Partridge & Co., 1885. This contains 88 hymns from the German, with a fr. of the "Dies Irae," in all 90.
Many are given in strikged form, and Dr. Walker did not bind himself to reproduce the metre, or even uniformly the ideas, of his originals. By the kindness of his representatives his us. copy has been used to identify his fra, most of which are indexed throughout this Dictionary, though none are in G. II. (2) Prosess and his tre., near of which are indexed throughout this Dictionary, though none are in G. U. (2) Prayers and Hymne: Edin., W. P. Nimmo, 1866. Besides 73 Prayers, &c., this contains $2 original hymne and 14 versions of the "Gloris Patri." A number of the prayers and 42 of the hymne had appeared in his Prayers and Hymne for the Mornings and Evenings of a Week, 1862. [J. M.]

Walker, John, s.p., s. of Matthias Walker, was b. at Silvermines, county Tip-perary, in 1769, and educated at Trinity Col-lege, Dublin. He graduated in 1790, and was elected a Fellow on taking Holy Orders in 1791. Secoding from the Church of Eng-land he resigned his Fellowship in 1804, and founded the sect called "Walkeritee." He d. Oct. 23, 1883. He was the author of several mathematical, classical, and other works. His Essays and Correspondence were pub. in 1838. Of two hymns written by him for the opening of the Bethesda Chapel, Dorset Street, Dublin, on June 22, 1794, and which appeared in the Sel. of Hys. for use there, 1814, one, "Thou God of Power and God of Love" (Opening of a Place of Worship), has passed into several collections, including the Irish Church Hyl., 1873; the American Meth. Episco. Hymnol. 1878, and others. [G. A. C.]

Walker, Mary Jane, née Deck, daughter of Mr. John Deck, and sister of J. G. Deck (p. 185, ii.), was married in 1848 to Dr. Walker, for sometime Rector of Cheltenham, and editor of Ps. & Hys. for Public and Social Worship, 1855. Several of her hymns appeared as leaflets; others in her husband's Ps. & Hys., 1855. In that Coll. 9 bear hor signature "M. J. W." These are :—

- 1. He came, Whose embassy was peace. Paysiontide, 2. I journey through a desert drear and wild, The Journey of Life.

 3. Jesus, I will trust Thee, trust Thee with my soul.
- Frutt in Jesus. 4. Lord, Thou didst love Jerusalem. Mission to the
- 5. O God, our Saviour, from Thy birth. Passiontide.

$. O joyful tidings let us sing. Sunday School Annireveary.

7. O spotless Lamb of God, in Thee. Passiontide.
8. The wanderer no more will roam. Reconciliation with God.
9. We are not left to walk alone. The Holy Spirit as the Divine Guide.

Of these hymns Nos. 3 and 5 appeared in the 1864 Appendix to Dr. Walker's Coll., and Nos. 2 and 8 are the most popular. [J. J.]

Wallace, James Cowden, was b. at Dudley, circa 1793. He was brother of the Rev. Robert Wallace (1791-1880), Professor of Theology in Manchester New College, and anthor of Antitrinitarian Biography. J. C. Wallace was Unitarian minister at Totnes, 1824, and afterwards at Brighton and Wareham. He d. at Wareham in 1841. He was a prolific hymn-writer, and contributed various other poetical pieces to the Monthly Repository. In a 8cl. of Hys. for Unitarian Worship, by R. Walkoo, Chesterfield, 1822, there are 13 of his hymns, and in the 2nd ed. of the same, 1826, there are 29 more. There are also 10 of his hymns in the Dukintield Sel. of Ps. & Hys. for Christian Worship, 1822 (still in use), and 64 in Beard's Coll. of Hys., 1837. Of these hymns the following are still in C. U.:—

1. Is there no balm to soften grief? The Efficacy of Prayer (1837).
2. It is not rank, or power, or state. The Universality of the Gospel. 3. There's not a place in earth's vast round. God teen in Everything.

4. Through every clime God's care extends. Divine

Cure of All.

5. There is an eye that never sleeps. n. The Divine Helper in Need.

Wallin, Benjamin, s. of Edward Wallin, pastor of the Baptist Church, Maze Pond, Southwark, was b. in London in 1711. He received a good education under the care of the Rev. John Needham, of Hitchin (father of the hymn-writer of that name), and was for a time engaged in business. But in 1740 he responded to an earnest request to become pastor of the church over which his father had presided, and this position he retained until his death on Feb. 19, 1762. Mr. B. Wallin published nearly forty sermons, charges, and other small religious books and pamphlets. In 1750 he pub. a volume entitled, Rosspecial Hymns and Songs, in Two Parts: Published for the Charlettes and Entertainment of true Christians; with authorities at large from the Scripture. The hymns in this vol. are 100 in number, and the tents of scripture illustrated in each stants are quoted in full in the lower part of the page. The versification is homely and the rhymns are often faulty.

Two hymns from the work are in C. U. :-1. Hall, mighty Jesus [Saviour] how divine. Divine 2. When I the holy grave survey. Faster.

These, with others, appeared in A. M. Top-lady's Ps. & Hys., 1776. They are usually given with alterations, chiefly introduced by Toplady. [W. R. S.]

Walther, Johann, was b. in 1496 at a village near Cola (perhaps Kahla, or clso Cölleda, near Sachsenburg) in Thuringia. In 1524 we find him at Torgan, as bassist at the court of Friedrich the Wise, Elector of Saxony. The Elector Johann of Saxony made him "Sengermeister" (choirmaster) in 1526. When the Electoral orchestra (Kapelle) at Torgau was disbanded in 1530, it was reconstituted by the town, and in 1534 Walther was also appointed cantor (singing-master) to the school at Torgan. On the accession of the Elector Moritz of Saxony, in 1548, Walther went with him to Dresden as his Kapellmeister. He was pensioned by decree of Aug. 7, 1554, and soon after returned to Torgau, still retaining the title of "Sengermeister." He d. at Torgau, perhaps on March 25, or at least before April 24, 1570. (Monatshofte für Musikgeschichte, 1871, p. 8, and 1878, p. 85; Archiv für Litteraturgeschichte, vol. xii., 1884, p. 185; Dr. Otto Taubort's Pflege der Musik in Torgan, 1868, and his Gymnasial Singe-Chor zu Torgan, N.D., 1870, &c.)

Single-Chor 22 Torgots, N.D., 1519, &c...)
Walther was more distinguished as a musician than as a hymn-writer. In 1524 he spent three weeks in Luther's house at Wittenberg, helping to adapt the old church music to the Luthertan services, and harmonising the tunes in five parts for the Geyttlichs gesangk Buchleyn, pub, at Wittenberg in 1524 (p. 703, il.). He was also present in the Stadkirche at Wittenberg, when, an Cas 28 1525 the service for the Holy Communion. also present in the Stadtkirche at Wittenberg, when, on Oct. 29, 1525, the service for the Holy Communion, as rearranged by Luther and blunedl, was first used in German. His hymns appeared mostly in his Das christliche Kindertied: D. Martini Lutheri, Erhalt uns Herrica, aufir new in seehs Stimmen gesetst, und mit ellichen schönen Christitichen Testen, Lateinsichen und Testschen Gesengen genehrt, &c., Wittenberg, 1566 (prühre dated Torgau, St. Michael's Day, 1565). They are collected by Wackernagel in his D. Kirchentied, iii. pp. 187-205 (Nos. 219-229).

Those of Walther's hymns which have passed into English are:

1. Bernich Lieb hab ich dich, mein Gott. Trinity Sunday. 1st pub. in 1566 as above, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 204, in 4 st, of 8 l. In the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 190, Tr. as:

O God, my Book! my heart on Thee, This is a good fr. of st. i., ifi., iv., by A. T. Russell, as No. 133 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851, ii. Rerzlich that mich erfreuen. Eternal Life. Ist pub. separately, in 33 st., at Wittenberg, in 1552, entitled "A beautiful spiritual and Christian new miner's song, of the Last Day and Eternal Life" [Königsberg Library]. Thence in Wuckernagel, iii. p. 187, in 34 st., st. 33 being added from the Dresden reprint of 1557. It is set to the melody of a popular song on the Joys of Summer. It is a fresh and beautiful hymn, but is only partially available on account of its length. Wackernagel, in his Kleines G. B., 1860, selects 21 st. as No. 219. The most popular form is that in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1530, beginning "Der Bräutgam wird bald rufen." This form has in order st. 31, 8, 9, 16, 18, 17, 13, and appeared in Melchior Franck's Rosetulum musicum, 1628; in Freylinghausen's G. B., 1705, No. 749, &c. Tr. as:—

1. Now fain my joyous heart would sing. is a tr. of st. 1, 4, 5, 17, 33, 34, by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1858, p. 228. Her trs. of st. 1, 4, 5, were included in the Eng.

Preso. Ps. & Hys , 1867, No. 325.

2. Soon will the heavenly Bridegroom come. This is by Dr. Kennedy, in his Hymn. Christ., 1863, No. 1009, and follows the text of the G. L. S., omitting st. 16, 18, 13. It is repeated in the Laudes Domini, N. Y., 1884, &c.

 The Bridegroom soan will call us. By Dr.
 Loy, from the G. L. S. text, but confitting st. 18, 13, as No. 24 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

Another tr. from the G. L. S. text, is "Soon shall that voice resound," by Miss Fry in her Hys. of the Reformation, 1845, p. 36. Her second part, altered and beginning, "Rejoice, the Lord doth guide us," is in J. Whittemore's Suppl. to all H. Bks., 1860. [J. M.]

Wär Gott nicht mit uns diese Zeit-M. Luther. [Ps. ozziv.] This version of Ps. exxiv, was 1st pub. in the Geystliche gesangk Buchleyn, Wittenberg, 1524, in 3 st. of 7 l., and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 17. Also in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geistliche Lieder, 1854, p. 79, in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No.250, &c.

Lanxmans, in Mock, viii. 115, relates that the Elector Johann Friedrich of Saxony, having been comforted by the Superintendent Aquila with this hymn during his captivity after the battle of Mühlberg, 1547, on his release on May 12, 1552, sang the whole of it with grateful heart, as a thankoffering to God.

The tr. in C. U. is:-

Had God not come, may Israel say. In full by R. Massle, in his Martin Luther's Spir. Songs, 1854, p. 35. Repeated in Reid's Praise Bh., 1872, the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, and by Dr. Bacon, in his Hys. of Martin Luther, 1884, p. 49.

Wardlaw, Ralph, p.p. This venemble and (in his generation) influential Scottish divine contributed twelve hymns to the praise of the Church Universal that are likely to live in a humble and useful way. As having so done, and besides edited several collections of hymns, he claims a place of honour in this work. Critically, and regarded as literature, his hymns have little of poetry in them; no "winged words" to lift the soul heavenward. They reflect simply and plainly the lights and shadows of every-day experiences of the spiritual life, rather than its etherialities and subtleties. His "Lift up to God the voice of praise" is the most widely known; and there is a certain inspiriting clangour about it when well sung; yet it is commonplace. His "Hail morning, known among the blest," is narrative and prosaic, though it filled a gap at the time in Sabbath morning worship. "At the time by God. appointed," "Remember Thee! remember Christ!" and "Contemplate, saints, the source divine," have vanishing gleams of imaginative light and fine and tender emotion. "O how good the hallowed union," "Where the counds of plaintive wailing," and "See the Sun of truth arise," are melodious and singuble, and pleasant but shallow. "Christ of all my hopes the ground," (Pt. ii.) "When with westing sickness worn," is much too long, but is a fairly good song of Zion. Wardlaw pub. in 1803 a Selection of Hymns, to displace what was called The Tabernacle Coll., 1800, that had been used by the Congregationalists of Scotland [see Scottish Hymnody], and to which be contributed a few hymns. He was assisted in the preparation of this compilation by Dr. Charles Stuart, of Duncarn. The 1st ed. contained 322 hymns, In 1817 a Supplement was added of 171, bringing up the number to 493. Of these eleven (or twelve strictly) were by Wardlaw. Two of these had previously appeared in the Scottish Missionary Magazine (vol. viii. 48). His hymns bear so very alight a proportion to Dr. Wardlaw's writings as a profound theologian and expositor and thoroughly-equipped controversialist on the chief problems of the period, as to make it necessary to refer the reader to his remarkable Life, by the Rev. Dr. W. L. Alexander, entitled, Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Ralph Wardlaw, D.D. (2nd ed., 1856). Wardlaw was b. at Dalkeith on December 22, 1779, where he received his early education, later attending Glasgow University. His only church was in Glasgow. He d. at Easterhouse near Glasgow on Dec. 17, 1853, and his public funeral is still remembered for the representative character of the vast multitude who attended it. [A. B. G.]

Of Dr. Wardlaw's hymns the following are etll! in C. U.:-

Glad when they saw the Lord. Easter.
 Hall, morning known amongst the blest [saints].
 Sunday Morning.

3. Lift up to God the voice of praise. Praise to the stater. 4. O Lord our God, arise, Misrions. 8. Remember Thee, remember Christ, H. Com-

6. See the Sun of Truth arise. Christ the Light.

Of these Nos. 8-5 appeared in the Tabernacle Coll. (noted above), 1800.

Ware, Henry, D.D., s. of Dr. H. Ware, pastor of the Unitarian congregation at Hingham, Massachusetts, and afterward Hollis Professor of Divinity at Cumbridge, U.S.A., was b. at Hingham, April 21, 1794. Before going to Harvard College, in 1808, he was under the care of Dr. Allyn, at Duxbury, and then of Judge Ware, at Cambridge. He graduated at Harvard in high honours, in 1812; and was then for two years an assistant teacher in Exeter Academy. He was licensed to preach by the Boston Unitarian Association. July 81, 1815; and ordained paster of the Second Church of that city, Jan. 1, 1817. In 1829, in consequence of his ill bealth, he received the assistance of a co-pastor in the person of Ralph Waldo Emerson. In the same year Ware was appointed Professor of Pulpit Eloquence and Pastoral Care in the Cambridge Theological School. He entered upon his duties in 1880, and resigned in 1842. He removed to Framingham, and d. there, Sept. 25, 1843. His p.p. degree was conferred upon him by Harvard College in 1834. Dr. Ware's publications as set forth in his Momote, pub. by his brother John Ware, M.D., were numerous and on a variety of topics. He edited the Christian Disciple, which was established in 1813, and altered in title to the Christian Examiner in 1824, for some years before the change of title, and gave it his assistance subsequently. The Rev. Chandler Robbins collected his works and pub them in four volumes, in 1847. His hymns, many of which are of more than usual excellence, are given in vol. i. Of these the following are in C. U.;

1. All nature's works His praise declare. Opening of an Organ. Jated Nov. 9, 1822. It is in Horder's English Cong. Byann. 1884.

2. Around the throne of God The host angelle throngs. Universal Praise. Dated 1823, and printed in the Christian Disciple, vol. v., and in Patson, 1874. A fine hymn of praise.

3. Father of earth and housen, Whose arm upholds creation. Thanksgiving for Divine Mercias. Appeared in Cheever's American Common Place Rook, 1831, and in Lyra St. Americana, 1868.

Dated Marth, 1886; and in Lyra Sta. Americana, 1888.

5. Great God, the followers of Thy Son. Ordination. Written for the Ordination of Jared Sparks, the historian, as pastor of the Unitarian Church, Baltimore, 1819. Given in Lyra Sac. Americana, 1868, and Putnates, 1874.

8. In this glad hour when children meet. Fumily otherings. Dated Ang. 26, 1835. In Lyra Sac. Americana, 1868, and Putnam, 1874.

7. Lift your glad voices in triamph on high. Easter. Dated 1817, and was pub. in the Cartistian Disciple of that year, in 2 st. of 8 l. It is in Lyra Sac. Americana, 1865; Pulnam, 1874, and numerous hymn-books. Semetimes at it. is given separately as, "Glory to God, in full anthems of Joy."

8. Like Israel's heats to exile driven. American National Hymn. Written for the Centennial Celebration of the Boston Thursday Lecture, Oct. 17, 1833, and given in Lyra Sac. Americana 1868, and Painam, 1874. It is a quair American National Hymn in praise of the Pilgrim Fathers.

9. O Then in Whom alsaes it found. Laying Joungalion Stone of a Place of Worship. In Lyra Sac.

9. O Then in Whom alone is found. Laying Joun-dation Stone of a Pidace of Worthip. In Jaria Sac-Americana, 1858, and Thring's English Coll., 1882. In. O. Than Who on Tay chosen Son. Ordination, Written for an Ordination, March, 1829. In Painasa, 1874, and Bairé Kingkith H. Bk., 1874. 11. Oppression shall not always reign. Against Slavery. "This was Mr. Ware's last composition in verse. It bears date March 16, 1843. In its original form it is longer than as presented here [in 3 st. of 8 l.], and is unsuited to a church-book. The following stanzas, taken from one of the Collections [st. 1. il. are in Long-and is unsuited to a church-book. The following stanzas, taken from one of the Collections [x.i., il. are in Long-chiow and Johnson's Rook of Hyz., 1848] are a part of the original, altered and transposed, and thus adopted to sacred worship." (Putnam, 1874, p. 113.)

18. To parawr, to prayer; for the morning breaks.

Prayer. This poem of 10 st. of 6 l. is dated 1828, and is given in Lyra Sac. Americans, 1866, and Putnam, 1874. Two centes therefrom are in C. U. The first begins with st. 1., adapting it for Morning, and the second with st. ii., "To prayer, for the glorious sum is gone," for Evening.

for Evening.

13. We rear not a temple, like Judah of old. Dedication of a Place of Worskip. This is dated 1838, and is given in Putnam, 1874.

14. With praise and prayer our gifts we bring. Opining of a Place of Worskip. In Date's English Hymn Sk. 1874.

With American Unitariens Dr. Ware ranks very high, and by them his hymns are widely [F. M. B.] used.

Waring, Anna Lestitia, daughter of Elijah Waring, and niece of Samuel Miller Waring, was b. at Neath, Glamorganshire, in 1820. In 1850 she pub. her Hymns and Meditations, by A. L. W., a small book of 19 hymns. The 4th ed. was pub. in 1854. The 10th ed., 1863, is enlarged to 38 hymns. She also pub. Additional Hymns, 1858, and contributed some pieces to the Sunday Magazine, "Father, I know that all my life," p. 457, ii.; "Go not far from me, O my Strength," p. 450, ii.; and "My heart is resting, O my God," p. 751, i. The rest in C. U. include:—

1. Dear Savjour of a dying world. Resurrection,

(1856.)
2. In heavenly love abiding. Safety in God. (1850.)
3. Jesus, Lord of heaven above. Love to Jesus desired.

4. Lord, a happy child of Thine, Eccaring, (1860.)
5. My Saviour, on the [Thy] words of truth. Hops is the Word of God. (1860.) Sometimes at iv., "It is not as Thou will with me," is given separately.
6. O this is blessing, this is rest. Reat in the Lore of

Jesus. (1854.)
7. O Thou Lord of beaven above. The Resurrection.
8. Source of my life's refreshing springs. Rest in

God. (1850.)

9. Sunlight of the beavenly day. New Year (1854.)

10. Sweet in the soluce of Thy love, Safety and Comfort in God. (1850.)

11. Tender mercles on my way. Praise of Dicine

Mercies. (1850.) 12. Thanksgiving and the voice of melody. New Year (1864).

13. Though some good things of lower worth. Lots of God in Christ. (1880.)

These hymns are marked by great simplicity, concentration of thought, and elegance of diction. They are popular, and deserve to fG. A. C.1

Waring, Samuel Miller, s. of Jeremiah Waring, of Alton, Hampshire, and uncle of Anna L. Waring, was b. at Alton, in March, 1792, and d. at Bath, Sept. 19, 1827. His hymns appeared in his Sacred Melodies, 1826; and from that work the following, which are in C. U., were taken :—

1. Now to Him Who loved us, gave us. Protect to Jesus. Sometimes, "Unto Him Who loved us." 2. Plead Thou, O plead my cause. Jesus, the Advocate Implored. [G. A. C.]

Warner, Anna, daughter of Henry W. Warner, and sister of Sarah Warner, author of Quecchy, and other novels, was b. near New York city about 1822. She is the author of the novel, Say and Seal, 1859, and others of a like kind. She also edited Hys. of the Church Militant, 1858; and pub. Wayfaring Hymns, Original and Translated, 1869. Her original hymns in C. U. include:—

- 1. Jeans loves me, this I know. The love of Jesus. In Say and Seal, 1852.
- 2. 0 little child, lie still and sleep. A Mother's Evening Hymn. In Temple Choir. 1867.
- One more day's work for Jesus. Evening. From Wayfaring Hymns. 1869.
- 4. The world looks very beautiful. A Child Pilarim. circa 1850.

Warren, William Fairfield, D.D., was at Williamsburg, Massachusetts, in 1833, and graduated at the Wealeyan University in 1853. After spending some time in Germany, he was appointed Professor of Systematic Theology in the Methodist Episcopal Mission Instituto at Bromen, in 1861. Returning to America in 1866, he held some important appointments there, ultimately becoming President of Boston University, in 1873. His hynn, "I worship Thee, O Holy Ghost" (Whitsuntide), was contributed to the American Meth. Episco. Hymnal, at the request of the editorial committee, in 1877, and was pub. therein in 1878 (Nutter's Hymn Studies, 1884, p. 111). has passed into other collections. [J. J. [J, J,] Warum betriibst du dich, mein Herz. [Cross and Consolation.] Wackernagel, iv. pp. 128-130, gives three forms of the text of this anonymous hymn: No. 190 as the first of Zwey schöne news geistliche Lieder, Nürnberg, N. D., c. 1560; No. 191, from an Enchiridion printed at Hamburg, 1565; No. 192, from the Psalmen und Leder, Lübeck, 1567. In his Bibliographie, 1855, p. 279, he had cited it as in Neun schöne geistliche Lieder, Nürnberg, N.D., which he then dated 1556-probably too early. According to Koch, v., 653, it had already appeared as "Czemu sie trosezyss," in a Polish hymn-book ed. by Pastor Schlueyan, and pub. at Königsberg in 1559.

This hymn has often been ascribed to Hans Sachs. So Ambresius Hannemann in his Fredremus Hymnologias, Wittenberg, 1623, Second 10, No. 8, entitles it "Consolation against Tearbiness, Hans Sachs"; and in Jeremias Weber's G. H., Leipzig, 1623, p. 518, it is entitled, "On Familie. A good family hymn. Written for the use of heads of households and their families, by Hans!

Sachs, of Nürnberg, the well-known German poot."
The hymn has not however been traced in any of the works of Sachs, and the ascription to him seems to be without foundation.

In the 1560 Zwey schöne the hymn has 12 st.; in the 1565 Encharidion there are 14 (Nos. viii., ix. not in 1560). The 1565 is the usual text as in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 701; but st. v.-ix., in which the Old Testament examples of Elijah, Daniel, Joseph, and the Three Holy Children are cited, are omitted in some collections. It is one of the best Germen hymns of Cross and Consolation, and is in almost universal German use. Tr. as :-

Warum sollt ich mich denn grämen. P. Gerhardt. [Cross and Consolation.] Founded on Ps. lxxiii. 23. Appeared in the Crüger-Rungo G. B., 1659, No. 240, in 12 st. of 8 L. Thouse in Wackernagel's ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 64, and Bachmann's ed., No. 29. In Crüger's Fraxis, 1656, No. 320, and the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 784. It is a beautiful hymn, but, like many of Gerhardt'e, difficult to translate. It comforted the Salzburg emigrants on their way through Swabia in 1782; it soothed the dying bed of Friedrich Wilhelm I. of Prussia, May 31, 1740; and st. viii. was the last utterance of its author on June 7, 1676. See further, Koch, viii., 471-479. Tr. as:—

1. Why, my soul, thus trembling ever. A good tr. of st. i., iv., vii., viii., xi., xii., as No. 233 in the Anglican H. Bh., 1868, marked as tr. by the Rev. Angelo A. Benson, 1862.

2. Why should sorrow ever grieve me. In full by J. Kelly, in his P. Gerhardt's Spir. Songs, 1867, p. 214. His tre. of st. i., v., x.-xii., are repeated in the Ohio Luth. Hymnal, 1880, No. 420.

Was Gott thut das ist wohlgethan, So denken Gottes Kinder. B. Schmolck. Harvest.] 1st pub. in his Freuden-Oct in Transigheit, Breslau, 1720, No. 59, p. 98, in 6 st. of 8 l., entitled, "The contented heart in a scanty Harvest." In his Klage and Reigen, Breslau, N.D. [1734], No. 77, p. 96, he gave it in 9 st. (st. iv., v., ix., being new), and entitled it "The contented heart in a scanty harvest, 1781." The text of 1784 is No. 1203 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The German has undergone various recensions, and so e.g. Miss Cox follows that in Bunsen's Versuck, 1833; Miss Warner that in the Berlin G. B., 1829. The text followed in H. A. & M. and the Hymnory is that in Bigge's annotated H. A. & M., 1867, which is based on st. i., iii., vii., viii. of the 1734. Tr. as :-

Washburn, Edward Abiel, D.D., was b. April 16, 1819; graduated at Harvard, 1838 : studied theology at Andover and New Haven, and entered the Congregational ministry. In 1844, having been ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church, he became Rector of St. Paul's, Newburyport, Mass., where he remained till 1851. Spending 1851-52 in Europe, on his return he became Rector of St. John's, Hartford, 1853-62, and Professor of Church Polity in Berkeley Divinity School, Middletown, Connecticut: also Rector of St. Mark's, Philadelphia, 1862-65; and Calvary, New York, 1865-81. He d. Feb. 2, 1881. His works include Social Law of God, 1874, and trs. of Lutin hymns. A selection from his poems was published in New York in 1881. Some of his trs. are given in Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, and other collections. For these trs. see Index of Authors (F. M. B.) and Translators.

Washburn, Henry S., was b. at Providence, Rhode Island, June 10, 1813; spent his boyhood at Kingston, Massachusetts, and was educated at Worcester and Brown University. Subsequently he was a manufacturer at Worcester and Boston. Since 1875 he has been the President of the Union Mutual Life Insurance Co. Mr. Washburn has held some prominent posts, and has been active in public matters. He has written various hymne and songs, the best known of which is:-

Let every heart rejoice and sing. National Hymn. his "was written for a celebration in Fansuil Hall, Let every heart rejone and sing, Augeoral symm-This "was written for a celebration in Financii Hall, Boston, July 4, 1842, and sung by the Sanday School Children of the city." It was set to music by Garcia, and often subsequently used at home and abroad. The author attered it for The Pasimiri, 1843, No. 1005; and in that form it has been generally known. [F. M. B.]

Waterbury, Jared Bell, p.p., was h in New York city, Aug. 11, 1799, and graduated at Yale College, 1822. He was for some time pastor of a Congregational church at Hudson, N. York, and then of Bowdoln Street Congre-

Christian; The Officer on Duty, and other works. To the Rev. J. Leavitt's Christian Lyre, vol. i., 1830, he contributed the following hymns, each of which was headed, "Written for the Lyre," and signed "J. B. W." :-

- 1. My Jesus, Thou hast taught. The Love of Jesus.
 2. Met, O God, to sak Thy presence. Repeatance.
 3. O fly, mourning sinner, asith Jesus to me.
 Promise of Pardon.
 4. Nes Sodom wrapt in fire. Warning.
 5. Sinner, is thy heart at rest? The Voice of Con-
- Soldiers of the Cross, arise! Lo! your Leader from the skies. Soldiers of the Cross.
 When, O my Saviour, shall this heart? Desiring

Jesus.

In vol. ii. of the same work, 1830, also:-

I have fought the good fight; I have finished my race. Martyr's Death Song.

Another of his hymns is given in the Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, as:-

Infinite love, what precious stores, Richel of Divine Grace. Sometimes dated 1862.

Of these hymns, Nos. 5, 6, and 9 are the best known. [F. M. B.]

Waterston, Robert Cassle, M.A., S. of Robert Waterston, was b. at Kennebunk, in 1812, but has resided from his infancy at Boston, Massachusetts. He studied Theology at Cambridge; had for five years the charge of a Sunday school for the children of seamen; was associated for several years with the Pitts Street Unitarian Chapel, Boston; and then pastor for seven years of the Unitarian Church of the Saviour in the same city. Much of his time has been given to literature, and a long list of his papers of various kinds is given in Putnam's Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faili, 1874. He also interested himself largely in educational matters. He contributed one hymn to the American Unitarian Cheshire Pastoral Association Christian Hymns, 1844; 8 to his own popular Eupplement to Greenwood's Psalms and Hymns, 1845, and others to various works. Putnam gives 20 poetical pieces in his Singers and Songs, &c., 1874, amongst which are the following, which are in C. U. at the present time:-

nre in U. U. at the present time:—

1. In darkest hours I hear a voice. Looking unto terms. Contributed to Putnam's Singers and Songs, &c., 1874, and found in a few collections.

2. In each brease that wanders free. Nature and the Sout. Pub. before 1863, and again in Putnam, 1874. The hymn "Nature, with eternal youth," in Hedge and Huntington's Hys. for the Ch. of Christ, 1863. No. 195, is composed of at. iv-vit. of this piece.

2. One sweet (bright) flower has drooped and faded. Peath of a Child. Appeared in the American Unitarian Cheshire Pas. Association Christians Hys. 1844, No. 663, and again in Putnam, 1874, as "One bright flower, &c." It is in several collections. In the Christian Hys. the heading is "Death of a Pupil;" and Putnam, "On the Death of a Child. Sung by her classimates."

In Putnam there are other pieces by him which are worthy of attention. [F. M. B.]

2. With the sweet word of peace. Parting. Written in 1867 to be sung at a meeting held in Brighton to asy Farewell to the Rev. Paxton Hood on his leaving his church for a considerable time for change and year. On his return Mr. Hood included it in his Our H. Bk. 1868, No. 572, in 6 et. of 4!. It was given with considerable alterations in the S. P. C. K. Charch Hyz. 1871. This text was repeated in the Scottish Exampelical Union Hymnal, 1878, and Is the usually accepted form of the hymn. It has much tenderness and beauty, and is worthy of wide circulation. worthy of wide circulation.

Watts, Alaric Alexander, was born in London, Mar. 19, 1797, and educated at the collegiate school of Wye, Kent. After a short engagement as a private tutor, he devoted himself to literary pursuits. He was for some time editor of the Leeds Intelligencer, and then of the Manchester Courier. Subsequently returning to London, he edited 10 vols of The Literary Souvenir, and 3 vols of The Cabinet of Modern Art. He was also engaged for some time as editor of the United Service Gazette, and contributed to the Stan-In 1853 he dard, and other newspapers. received a royal pension of £100 a year, and an appointment in Somerset House. Watts, Isaac, D.D. The father of Dr. Watts was a respected Nonconformist, and at the birth of the child, and during its infancy, twice suffered imprisonment for his religious convictions. In his later years he kept a flourishing boarding school at Southampton. Isaac, the eldest of his nine children, was h. in that town July 17, 1674. His taste for verse showed itself in early childhood. He was taught Greek, Latin, and Hebrew by Mr. Pinhorn, rector of All Saints, and headmaster of the Grammar School, in Southampton. The splendid promise of the boy induced a physician of the town and other friends to offer him an education at one of the Universities for eventual ordination in the Church of England: but this he refused; and entered a Nonconformist Academy at Stoke Newington in 1690, under the care of Mr. Thomas Rowe, the pastor of the Independent congregation at Girdlers' Hall. Of this congregation he became a member in 1693, Leaving the Academy at the age of twenty, he spent two years at home; and it was then that the bulk of the Hymns and Spiritual Songs (pub. 1707-9) were written, and sung from MSS in the Southampton Chapel. hymn "Behold the glories of the Lamb" is said to have been the first he composed, and written as an attempt to raise the standard of praise. In answer to requests, others succeeded. The hymn "There is a land of pure delight" is said to have been suggested by the view scross Southampton Water. The next six years of Watts's life were again spent at Stoke Newington, in the post of tutor to the son of an eminent Puritan, Sir John Hartopp; and to the intense study of these years must be traced the accumulation of the theological and philosophical materials which he published subsequently, and also the life-long enfeeblement of his constitution. Watts preached his first sermon when he was twenty-four years old. In the next three years he preached frequently; and in 1702 was ordained pastor of the eminent Independeut congregation in Mark Lane, over which Caryl and Dr. John Owen had presided, and which numbered Mrs. Bendish, Cromwell's granddaughter, Charles Fleetwood, Charles Desborough, Sir John Hartopp, Lady Haver-sham, and other distinguished Independents among its members. In this year he removed to the house of Mr. Hollis in the Minories, His bealth began to fail in the following year, and Mr. Samuel Price was appointed as his assistant in the ministry. In 1712 a fever shattered his constitution, and Mr. Price was then appointed co-paster of the congregation which had in the meantime removed to a new chapel in Bury Street. It was at this period that he became the guest of Sir Thomas Abney, under whose roof, and after his death (1722) that of his widow, he remained for the rest of his suffering life; residing for the longer portion of these thirty-six years principally at the beautiful country seat of Theobalds in Herts, and for the last thirteen years at Stoke Newington. His degree of D.D. was bestowed on him in 1728, unsolicited, by the University of Edinburgh. His infirmities increased on him up to the peaceful close of his suffer-ings, Nov. 25, 1748. He was buried in the Puritan resting-place at Bunhill Fields, but a monument was erected to him in Westminster Abbey. His learning and piety, gentleness and largeness of heart have earned him the title of the Melanchthon of his day. Among his friends, churchmen like Bishop Gibson are ranked with Nonconformists such as Doddridge. His theological as well as philosophical fame was considerable. His Speculations on the Human Nature of the Logos, as a contribution to the great controversy on the Holy Trinity, brought on him a charge of Arian opinions. His work on The Improvement of the Mind, pub. in 1741, is culogised by Johnson. His Logic was still a valued text-book at Oxford within living memory. The World to Come, pub. in 1745, was once a favourite devotional work, parts of it being translated into several languages. His Catechisms, Scripture History (1732), as well as The Divine and Moral Songs (1715), were the most popular text-books for religious education fifty years ago. The Hymns and Spiritual Songe were pub. in 1707-9, though written earlier. The Horas Lyricas, which contains hymps interspersed among the poems, appeared in 1706-9. Some hymns were also appended at the close of the several Sermons preached in London, pub. in 1721-24. The Psalms were pub. in 1719. The earliest life of Watts is that by his friend Dr. Gibbons. Johnson has included him in his Lives of the Poets; and Southey has echoed Johnson's warm eulogy. most interesting modern life is Isaac Watte: kie Life and Writings, by E. Paxton Hood. (For criticism of his work as a hymn-writer, see Hymnody, Early English, § Xi., and Psalters, English, § Xv.). fH. L. B.1

These 454 Hymns and Versions of the Pasima, in addition to the centes which are indicated by the sublines, are all in C. U. at the present time. The more important and best known of Dr. Watts's Hymns and versions of the Psalms have separate annotations under their respective first lines. [See Index of Authors and Translaters. [J. J.]

Waugh, Benjamin, was b. at Settle, in Yorkshire, Feb. 20, 1839, and educated for the Congregational Ministry at Airedale College, Bradford. He has held pastorates at Newbury, Berkshire, Greenwich, and New South-gate. He has been for several years editor of The Sunday Magazine, and a large contributor to its pages. He has pub. (1) The Goal Cradle, Who rocks it; (2) Sunday Evenings with my Children; (3) The Children's Sunday Hour; (4) The Child of the English Sanage; (5) Impertal Legislation and Street Children. Mr. Waugh's hymns have appeared from time to time in The Sunday Magazine, and have not been separately published. Those which have come into C. U. include:—

1. Jesus, the Friend of friendless men. Jesus the Sinner's Friend. 1874.

2. O happy pair of Nazareth. The Child Jesus. 3. O let me see Thy beauty, Lord. The Beauty of the Lord. This is given in a revised form as "Now let us see Thy beauty, Lord," in Horder's Cong. Hymns, 1884.

Mr. Wangh's hymns are for children's use, and are exceedingly fresh and unconventional. Several others of merit might be selected from the Sunday Magazine with advantage [W. G. H.] to children's hymnody.

We all had sinned and gone astray. G. Thring. [The Good Shepherd.] This was the author's first hymn, and was written to the tune "Cambridge New," at his mother's request, in 1861. It was pub. in Morrell & How's Po. & Hys., 1864; and in his own Hys. Cong. and Others, 1866, p. 11, in 4 st. of 6 l., and entitled, "The Love of Christ." Also given in his Hys. & Suc. Lyrics, 1874, p. 86, and in his Coll., 1882.

We all, O Lord, have gone astray. [The Shepkerd and His wandering Sheep.] This is based upon J. Merrick's version of the last part (Tau) of Ps. exix., pub in his Ps. of David, &c., 1765. It was given in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, p. 64, and has been repeated in a few. collections in G. Britain and America. It was arranged from Merrick by Cotterill. [J. J.]

We are but little children poor weak]. Cecil F. Alexander, nee Humphreys. [Holy Baptism.] Pub. in Dr. Hook's Leeds Church S. S. H. Bk., 1850, in 9 st. of 4 l. It is in use, sometimes abbreviated, in its original form ; as " We are but little children weak," the 1868 Appendix to H. A. & M., and numerous other collections; and as, "O Lord, the Holy Innocenta" (st. ii.), in the American Protestant Episcopal Hymnol, 1871. In these various forms it is in extensive use. [J, J]

We bid Thee welcome in the Name. J. Montgomery. [Induction of a Minister.] This hymn is in the m. mas., but is undated. It was pub. in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 585, and again in his Original Hymns, 1858, No. 805, in 6 st. of 4 L, and headed, "On the Appointment of a Minister." It is found in many collections, but usually in an abbreviated form.

[J. J.]

We bow before Thy gracious Throne. This, in the American Unitarian Hys. for the Church of Christ, 1858, No. 518, is a cento from two hymns by C. Wesley, st. i., iv. being from "Thou Son of God, Whose flaming eye"; and st. ii., iii. from "Come, O Thou all-victorious Lord (p. 948, ii.), as in the Wes. H. Bk. 1780.

We come, Lord, to Thy feet. [Opening of Sunday School.] This hymn, together with the companion hymn for the Closing of a Sunday School, "O Lord, our hearts would give Thee praise," appeared on a card printed for Sunday-school use by Bp. Pelham, when Incumbent of Christ Church, Hampstead Both hymns were adapted by him from mother and now unknown source. The Rev. E. H. Bickersteth included both hymns, with slight alterations, in his Ps. & Hys., &c., 1858, from theuce they have passed into several collections. W. F. Stevenson attributes the former in his Hys. for Church and Home, 1878, to Lady Lucy Whitmore, 1824, but we have failed to find it in her Family Prayers, &c., 1824 (see p. 1085, ii.), and know of no authority for the ascription.

We give Thee but Thine own. Bp. W. W. How. [Offertory.] Written about 1858, and 1st pub. in the enlarged ed. of Morrell & How's Psalms & Hymas, 1864, No. 197, in 6 st. of 41. From thence it has passed into numerous collections, and now ranks in popularity with some of the best of modern hymns. Of the author's compositions in extensiveness of use it is exceeded only by his "For all Thy Saints who from their Inbour rest." Orig. text, Church Hymns, 1871. The doxology in H. A. & M. and others is an addition. [J. J.]

We have not seen Thy footsteps tread. Anne Richter, nee Rigby. [Faith.] The complicated nature of the various forms of this hymn in C. U. requires the reproduction of the original poem, and the texts of some of the hymns adapted therefrom.

1. The earliest date to which we have traced the original poem is 1834. In that year it appeared anonymously in Songs from the Valley: A Collection of Sacred Poetry. Kirkby Lonsdale, 18mo. This volume was compiled by the elder daughters of the Rev. W. Carus Wilson. [E. MSS.] At page 130 it reads:—

"Fatre.

" Blessed are they who have not seen, and yet have believed."

- "We have not seen Thy footsteps trend
 This wild and sinful carth of ours,
 Nor heard Thy voice restore the deal
 Again to life's reviving powers:
 But we believe—for all things are
 The gifts of Thine Almighty care.
- "We have not seen the billowy sea. Grow calm and still at Thy command, Nor the dim orbs again to see, Beneath the healing of Thine hand; But we believe the Fount of Light, Again could give those eyeballs sight.
- We did not see Thee tread the wave; We did not hear the voice from heaven, Which once with awful warning gave That God's own Son for us was given. But we believe—ob! strengthen Thou The faith which to Thy Name we owe.

WE HAVE NOT SEEN THY

- "We did not see the armed throng
 Steal to the 'garden's 'midnight shade,
 And watch the paim-tree's boughe among.
 Then quail beneath Thy glance afraid:
 But we believe—Aimighty love Alone could such dark moments prove.
- "We did not see the darkness veil
 With sudden gloom the noon-day skies;
 Nor the fierce soldier's cheek grow pale,
 And priestly mockers veil their ayes;
 When the proud Roman owned the power
 Of heaven, 'twee in that awful hour.
- "We did not hear the footsteps fall Within that lonely garden ground, of the all-wateful sentinel, Slow tracing there his watchful round; But we beliave—the Holy One Bursting that tomb, in glory shone.
- We were not with the chosen few Who saw Thee through the clouds ascend, Who gazed, and wished to follow too, Then on the sarth all prestrate bend; But we believe that mortal eyes Behold the journey to the skies,
- "Chase every shade of doubt away;
 "Light of the World!" in mercy chine;
 Illuma with faith our erring way,
 We would no worship own but Thine,
 Bring us to heaven's peaceful shore,
 And make us Thine for evermore!"

This tent was republished in the April number of The Friendly Visitor, 1836, also printed at Kirkby Lousdale, and edited by the Rev. W. Carus Wilson. It is signed "Anne R. Kirton-Liudsey." It is also found in Original and Select Hymns; A Companion to Select Poetry. Lond. John Van Voorst, 1837, No. 143 (2nd ed. enlarged 1838). The editor of this work was a Miss Little, of Bedford.

- 2. The first adaptation of this poem for congregational use appeared in J. H. Gurney's Lutterworth Coll. of Hys. for Public Worship, 1838, No. 264. It is signed "*American," i.e. from an American source with alterations and additions. From the MSS. of H. J. Buckoll (p. 181, i.) we gather that it was the joint production of Gurney and himself. This text is:—
 - We saw Thee not when Thon didst tread, In mortal guise, this sufful earth, Nor heard Thy voice restore the dead, And wake them to a second birth: But we BELLEVE that Thou didst come, And leave for us Thy glorious home.
 - "We were not with Thee on the wave, When Thou the stormy sea couldst bind: Nor say the health Thy blessing gave To lame and sick, to deaf and blind: But we setters the Fount of light Could give the darkened eye-ball sight,
 - "We did not mark the chosen few, When Thou didst through the clouds ascend, First lift to heaven their wondering view, Then to the certical prostrate bend:
 But we believe that mortal eyes beheld that journey to the skies.
 - "And now that Thou dost reign on high, And thence Thy faithful people bless, No ray of glory from the sky Doth shine upon our wilderness: Yet WE BELIEVE that Thou art there; And sing Thy praise, and lift our prayer."
- 3. The next recast was apparently by H. J. Buckoll, alone (see § 5). It appeared in Ps. & Hys. for use in the Rugby School Chapel (of which he was joint editor with Dr. Goulburn), 1843, No. 53, as follows:—
 - "We saw Thee not when Thou didst tread, O Saviour, this our simil earth; Nor heard Thy voice restore the dead, And wake them to a second blyth; But use believe that Thou didst come, And guit for us Thy glorious hosse.

"We were not with the faithful few, Who stood Thy bitter cross around, Nor heard the prayer for those who slew, Nor felt that carthquake rock the ground; We saw no spear-wound pierce Thy side; Yet we believe that Thou hast died.

No angels' message met our ear, On that first glorious Easter-day, 'The Lord is risen, He is not here, Come see the place where Jeens lay! But see believe that Thou didst quell The bunded powers of Death and Hell.

" We saw Thee not return on high And now our longing sight to bless,
No ray of giory from the sky
Shines down upon our widerness:
Yet we believe that Thou art there,
And seek Thee, Lord, in praise and prayer.

- 4. The next form of the text appeared in J. H. Gurney's Ps. & Hys. for Public Worship, Selected for some of the Churches in Marylebons, Lond. 1851, No. 269, and reads:—
 - 1. " We my Thee not when Thou didst come To this poor world of sin and death, Nor e'er beheld Thy cottage-home In that despised Nazareth; But we estateve. Thy footsteps trod Its streets and plains, Thou Son of God.
 - 2. "We did not see Thee lifted high Amid that wild and savage crew, Nor heard Tay meek, implicing cry, 'Forgive, they know not what they do't Yet we serieve the deed was done, Which shook the earth, and velled the sun.
 - We stood not by the empty tomb
 Where late Thy sacred body lay,
 Nor ant within that upper room,
 Nor met Thee in the open way; But We RELIEVE that angels sai Why seek the living with the dead?
 - 4. " We did not mark the chosen few, When Thou didet thro' the clouds ascend, First lift to heaven their wondering vie Then to the carth all prostrate bend; Yet we believe that mortal eyes Baheld that journey to the akies.
 - 5. "And now that Thou does reign on high, And thence Thy walling people bless, No ray of glory from the sky ploth shine upon our widderness; But WE RELIEVE Thy faithful word, And trust in our Redeeming Lord."

It will be noted that st. iv., v. are from the Lutterworth Coll., 1888. In a note to this hymn in the "Table of first lines" to the Marylebone Ps. & Hys., Gurney says concerning it :--

"This hymn, and the last hymn in the book, 'Yes God is good,' were suggested by two poems in a small American volume, which were well conceived, but very imperfectly executed. Successive attentions have left nothing of the original compositions remaining but the first four words, and the repeated words, in each hymn. With this acknowledgment, the writer has not scrupted to put his name to them—J. H. G."

The "small American volume" here referred to has not been identified. In the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, No. 361 begins with st. ii. of this text, "We did not see Thee lifted high."

5. On the death of Buckell in 1871, a MS. in his handwriting, but undated, was found which contained the Lutterworth text of 1838 expanded into 14 stanzas. With the aid of this ms, we are enabled to say with tolerable certainty that of the Lutterworth text at. i., ii. were by Buckoll, and at iii., iv. were by Gurney; the Rugby text, 1843, was by Buckoll; and the Marylebone text, 1851, by Gurney.

6. After the publication of Gurney's text in the Marylebone Ps. & Hys., 1851, complications soon arose mainly in the form of centes. Some of these are :--

(1) In the Hys. for the Chapel of Harrow School, 1255, No. 32 is thus composed, et. I., il. Buckell from the Lutterworth Coll.; st. iii., iv., Buckell, from the Engby Hymn: st. v., vi., Gurney, from the Lutterworth Cwl.
(2) In the American Sabbath H. Bk., 1858, and others,

(2) In the American Subbath H. Bl., 1888, and others, is composed of st. i.-v. of Gerney's 1881 (ext. and begins "We did not see Thee lifted high."
(3) In Pott's Hys. Fitted to the train of Common Prayer, Sc., 1861, No. 182, we have Pt. i. st. i., Gurney, from the Marylebone; st. ii., iii., Buckull from the Latterworld Coll.; Pt. iii. "We did not see Thee lifted high," Gurney, from the Marylebone text.
(4) The text of the S. P. C. K. Church Hysser, 1871.

(4) The text of the S. F. C. R. Caura Rysser, 1871.

Ko. 541, is: st. i., ii, Buckoll, from the Lutterworth

v., Gurney, from the Lutterworth Coll.

(5) In the American Unitarian Hy. [sad Tune] Bk.,

1869, No. 423, is composed of st. ii.-iv. of Buckoll's

Rugby text alone, and begins "We were not with the faithful faw."

The text by Gurney, as in the Marylebone Ps. & Hys., 1851, is the most popular form of the hymn. It is found in H. A. & M., 1875; the Hy. Comp., 1876; Thring's Coll., 1882, and many others. [J. J.] and many others.

We in the lower parts. [Holy Communion.] This cento appeared in the 1874 Suppl. to the New Cong. H. Bk., No. 1242. It is thus composed: et. i. and iii. are from No. 97 of C. Wesley's Hys. on the Lord's Supper, 1745; st. ii. from No. 81 of the same; and at. iv. and v. from another source. [J. J.]

We limit not the truth of God. G. Bauson. [Profound Depth of Holy Scripture.] This hymn was given in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 409, in 5 st. of 8 l., and headed with the following extract upon which it was based :-

"He charged us before God, and His blessed angels, if God should reveal anything to us by any other instrument of His, to be as ready to receive it as any truth by his ministry; for he was very confident the Lord had more light and truth yet to break forth out of His holy word." Narrative of Paster Robinson's Address to the

This note, together with the hymn, also appeared in Mr. Bawson's Hys., Verses, and Chasts, 1876. [J. J.]

We love the place, O Lord [God]. W. Bullock and Sir H. W. Baker. [The House of God.] In its original form this hyrm appeared in Dean Bullock's Songs of the Church, Halifax, N. Scotia, 1854, pp. 37, 38, as follows: "THIRD SUNDAY AFTER EPIPHARY.

" Lard, I have loved the habitation of Thy house."
Paulm xxvi. 8.

"We love the place, O Lord,
Wherein Thine bonour dwells;
The joy of Thy abode
All other joy excels.

"We love the house of prayer,
Wherein Thy servants meet;
For Thou, O Lord, art there,
Thy chosen ones to great.

" We love the secred funt Wherein the Holy Dove Pours out, as He is wont, The effluence from above.

"We love our Father's board, Its altar steps are dear; For there in faith adored, We find Thy Presence near.

" We love Thy saints who come Thy mercy to proclaim, To call the wanderers home, And magnify Thy name.

" Our first and latest love To Zion shall be given-The House of God above. On earth the Gate of Heav'n."

2. This text, which has many features of excellence, underwent the following changes at the hands of Sir H. W. Baker, in 1860, and was pub. in H. A. & M., 1861, as follows, the italies being Sir H. W. Baker's alterations and additions:—

"We love the place, O God,
Wherein Thine honour dwells;
The joy of Thine abode
All caritaly joy excels.
"It is the House of prayer,
Wherein Thy servants meet;
And Thon, O Lord, art there
Thy chosen flock to greet.

"We love the sacred Font;
For there the Holy Dove
To powr is ever wont
His blessing from above.

"We love Thine Altar, Lord;
Oh what on earth so dear?
For there, in falth adored,
We find Thy Presence near.

"We love the Word of Life,
The Word that tells of peace,
Of confront in the strife,
And joys that never cease.

"We love to sing below
For mercies freely gives;
But Oh! we long to know
The triumph-song of kedven.
"Lord Jesus, give us grace
On earth to love The more,
In keaven to see Thy Pace,
And with Thy saints adore."

This form of the hymn has passed into most extensive use in all English-speaking countries, and has been translated into several languages

3. A third form appeared in Harland's Church Psalter and Hyl., enlarged ed. 1867, the opening stanza of which begins:—

"O Lord, we love the place Wherein Thine honour dwells; The sweetness of Thy grace All other joy excels."

This is based upon the H. A. & M. text; but is very inferior as a piece of literary workmanship.

4. A fourth form is given in Thring's Coll., 1882. Of this st. i., ii. are by Bullock, with "God" for "Lord," in st. i. l. 1; st. iii. ll. 1, 2, Bullock, 1, 3, Bullock altered by Thring, l. 4, Bullock altered by Baker; st. v. by Thring; st. vi. ll. 1-3, by Thring, l. 4, Bullock altered by Baker. This is a good cento and worthy of more extensive use.

[J. J.]

We love Thee, Lord! yet not alone. Julia A. Elliott, nee Marshall. [Love for Christ.] This appeared in her husband's Ps. d. Hys., 1835, in 6 st. of 4 double lines. Although not separately numbered as such, it is really a hymn in two parts, Pt. ii. beginning with st. iv., "We love Thee, Lord! because when we, &c." It has passed into a few collections. [J. J.]

We plan foundations for the dead. J. Montgomery. [Foundation Stone of a Cometery Chapel.] The ms. of this hymn is dated "May 5, 1848." The hymn was written for the laying of the foundation-stone of the chapel for the Church of England portion of the Sheffield General Cemetery. Montgomery's hymn, "Father of glory, God of grace," was written for the Opening of the same, and is dated "June 27, 1850." Montgomery d. on April 30, 1854, and was buried under the shadow of the spire of this chapel.

[J. J.]

We sing the praise of Him Who died. T. Kelly. [Passiontide.] Appeared in Hymns by Thomas Kelly, not before Published, Dublin, 1815, No. 52, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross: Gal. vi. 14," Here st. v. reads:—

"The balm of life; the cure of woe;
The measure and the pledge of love;
"Its all that ginners want below;
"Tis all that angels know above."

In later editions of Kelly's Hymns this stanza is altered by Kelly to:—

"The balm of life, the cure of woe,
The measure and the pledge of love;
The simme" refuge kere below,
The angel's theme in heaven above."

This authorised text is that usually found in modern collections. In H. A. & M., 1861, an additional stanza was given by the Compilers. The use of this hymn in all Englishspeaking countries is extensive. It has also been tr, into several languages. The Rev. L. C. Biggs's rendering into Letin of the H. A. & M. text in his annotated edition of H. A. & M., 1867, begins "Laudes canamus mortui." Lord Selborne [Sir R. Palmer] said at the York Church Congress, 1866 [Report, Hymnody] that this hymn "is distinguished by a calm aubdued power, rising gradually from a rather low to a very high key [quotes, and continues], I doubt whether Montgomery ever wrote any-thing quite equal to this." In several collections this hymn begins with st. ii., "Inscribed upon the Cross we see." An adaptation of the original text for use at Holy Communion is given in the Memoir of S. Medley, by his daughter, pub. in Liverpool in 1883. It begins with the same first line, and was probably made by Medley.

We sing to Thee Whose wisdom formed. [Divine Use of Music.] This appeared in The Whole Book of Psalms: with the Usual Hymns and Spiritual Songs. Together with all the Ancient and Proper Tunes sung in Churches, with some of Later Use. Composed in Three Parts. . . . By John Playford, London, 1677, p. 293, in 7 st. of 4 l. and a doxology. It was included in the 6th ed. of the Supplement to the New Version, 1708, but has fallen out of use. Its original title is, "On the Divine use of Musick." [J. J.]

We thank, Thee, Lord, for this fair earth. Bp. G. E. L. Cotton. [Flower Services.] Pub in Hys. for use in the Chapel of Mariborough College, 1858, No. 94, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in the enlarged edition of 1869. It has passed into numerous collections, and usually with the change of two or three words in the whole hymn. [J. J.]

We walk by faith and not by sight. H. Alford. [St. Thomas.] Appeared in his Ps. & Hys., &c., 1844, p. 108, in 4 st. of 4 l., and again in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 249. It is also given in the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883, and others. [J. J.]

Wearied in the strife of sin. Bp. E. H. Bickerstell. [Ascension.] This bynn was pub. as a leaflet, with music by Dr. Charles Vincent, in 1887. It is in 7 st. of 4 l., headed "Crucified and Crowned," and dated "Ascension Day, 1887." It is No. 236 in the 1890 ed. of the H. Comp. [J. J.]

Weary of earth, and laden with my sin. S. J. Stone. [Lent.] Written in 1868, and 1st pub. in the same year in his Lyra Fidelium, p. 44, in 8 st. of 4 l. It is based on Art. 10 of the Apostles' Creed, "The Forgiveness of Sins," and was written, originally, for a parochial mission. In 1868 Mr. Stone revised it for the Appendix to H. A. & M. it has passed into numerous collections in G. Britain and America. It is one of the most tender and plaintive of Mr. Stone's hymns. In the American Laudes Domini, 1884, it is divided into two parts, pt. i. being st. i.-v.; and pt. ii. st. vi.-viii., altered to "O Jesus Christ the righteous! live in me."

Weary of this wordy strife. C. Wesley. [For Unity.] 1st pub. in 7 st. of 61. at the end of J. Wesley's Sermon on 2 Kinga x. 15, in 1755. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. vi. 71.) Two centos are in C. U. (1) "Weary of this wordy strife," in the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883; and (2) "My brethren, friends, and kinsmen these," in the American Church Prates Book, N. Y., 1882. [J. J.]

Webb, Benjamin, M.A., was b. in London in 1820, and was educated in St. Paul's School; whence he passed to Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1838, B.A. 1842, M.A. 1845. Ordained by the Bishop [Monk] of Gloucester and Bristol he was Assistant Curate of Kemeston in Gloucestershire, 1843-44; of Christ Church, St. Pancras, 1847-49; and of Brasted, Kent, 1849-51; at which date he was presented to the P. C. of Sheen in Staffordshire, which he held until 1882, when he became Vicar of St. Andrews, Wells Street, London, In 1881 the Bishop [Jackson] of London collated him to the Prebend of Portpool in St. Paul's Cathedral. Mr. Webb was one of the Founders of the Cambridge Camden, afterwards the Ecclesiological Society; and the Editor of the Ecclesiologist from 1842 to 1868, as well as the General Editor of the Society's publications. His first appearance in print was as joint editor of Bp. Montague's Articles of Inquiry in 1841; in 1848 he was joined with Mr. J. M. Neale in An Escay on Symbolism, and A Translation of Durandas; in 1847 he put forth his valuable work on Continental Ecclesiology; in 1848 he was joint editor with Dr. Mill of Frank's Sermons, for the Anglo-Catholic Library, and with the Rev. J. Fuller-Russeli of Hierurgia Anglicana. After the decease of his father-in-law (Dr. Mill), he edited Dr. Mill's Catechetical Lectures, 1856; a second edition of Dr. Mill's Christian Advocates Publications on the Mythical Interpretation of the Gospels, 1861; and of Dr. Mill's Sermons on our Lord's Temptation, 1873. He was also one of the editors of the Burntisland reprint of the Saram Missal. One of his most valuable works is Instructions and Prayers for Candidates for Confir-mation, of which the third edition was pub. in 1882. Mr. Webb was one of the original editors of the Hymnal Noted, and of the sub-Committee of the Ecclesiological Society, appointed to arrange the words and the music some of the hymns. In conjunction with the Rev. Canon W. Cooke he was editor of the Hymnary, 1872, for which office his habitual reconstruction and composition of the words of the authems used at St. Andrew's, Wells Street, as well as his connection with the Hymnal Noted, eminently qualified him. His original hymns contributed to the Hymnary, 1871 and 1872, were:—

1. Assessor to thy King. St. Bartholomew. In the Hymnary, 1872.

9. Behold He comes, thy King most hely. Advert. Originally written to be sung in St. Andrew's Church, Wells Street, as an anthem to the music of Schumann's Advent-Ried, and afterwards pub. in the Hymnary, 1872.
3. Praise God, the Holy Trinity. Hymn of Patts. Originally written for use in St. Andrews. Wells Street.

3. Praise God, the Holy Trinity. Hymn of Patth. Originally written for use in St. Andrews, Wells Street, and subsequently in the Hymnary, 1872.

4. Praise the Book of our salvation. Bedication of a Church. Pub. in the Hymnary, 1879. Mr. Webb's authorised text is in the Westminster Abbey H. Bk., 1883.

5. Ye angel hosts above. Universal Praise to God. In the Hymnary, 1872.

Mr. Webb's tra are annotated elsewhere (See Lader of Authors and Translators.) He d. in London, Nov. 27, 1885. [Wm. C.]

Wedderburn, James, John and Robert, were the three sons of James Wedderburn, a Dundee merchant. James, the eldest, entered the University of St. Andrews in 1514. He afterwards went to France, and on his return produced tragedies and comedies in Bootch which roused the rage of the ecolesiastics, who forced him to flee, in 1540, to France, where he d., probably at Dieppe, about 1550. John, the second son, graduated M.A. at St. Andrews in 1528. Having entered the priesthood and officiated at Dundee, he fell under suspicion of heresy, and fled in 1539 to Wittenberg, where he associated with Luther, Melanchthon, and other Reformers. There in his exile, doubtless under Luther's influence, he wrote and translated many of the psalms, hymns and ballads commonly known as The Guds and Godlie Ballates. After the death of James v. (Dec. 13, 1542), he returned to Scotland, but was forced in 1546 again to flee. He d. in England in 1556. Robert, the youngest son, graduated M.A. at St. Andrews in 1530. He entered the priesthood, and was Vicar of Dundee in 1553. He seems to have written a number of the "Ballates" proper. To him Dr. Laing would ascribe the remarkable Complayed of Scotland, a sattrical poem first pub. at St. Andrews in 1549. (See Scotlish Hymnely, § 3; and the works by Dr. Laing and Dr. Mitchell mentioned in the Appendix to that article.) IJ. M.I

Weep, mourner, for the joys that fade. W. Knoz. [Heaven.] 1st pub in his Harp of Zion, 1825, in 2 st of 11 h, and entitled "Heaven." It is based on Job xix. 26. It was also included in his Poens, &c., 1847, p. 181, but is unknown to the hymnels in that form. As early as 1844 it was given in an altered form as: "O weep not for the joys that fade," in the American Unitarian Christian Hymne, of the Cheshire Pastoral Association, and, later, in other American collections, in most of which it is ascribed to Knowles, in error. [J. J.]

appointed to arrange the words and the music of that book; and was also the translator of Wegelin, or Wegelein, then superintendent (Ephorus) of the Evangelical college at Augsburg, was b. at Augsburg Jan. 11, 1604. After studying at the University of Tübingen (st. a. 1626), he was for a short time paster at Budweiler, and was appointed in 1627 fourth disconus of the Franciscan (Barfüsser) church at Augsburg. In 1629, along with 13 other Evangelical pastors, he was com-pelled to leave Augsburg by the decree of Restitution (see p. 1690, ii.) enacted by the Emperor Ferdinand III. After Gustavus Adolphus had become master of the city, in 1632, Wegelin was recalled to the Barfüsser Kirche as archidiaconus. In 1633 he was appointed preacher at the Hospital Church of the Holy Ghost, but in 1635, as a result of the battle of Nördlingen (Sept., 1634), he was again forced to flee from Augsburg. He found refuge at Pressburg, in Hungary, where he became pastor, and afterwards Senior, Inspector, and Doctor of Theology. Ho d. at Pressburg, Sept. 14, 1640 (Koch, iii. 169; Goedeke's Grundriss, vol. iii. 1887, p 161, &c.).

Wegelin's hymns are simple and natural, and are the productions of an earnest, true-hearted and good pastor rather than of a skilful poet. Goodeke, as above, gives lists of their first lines from his (1) Augspurger Bet Bitchlein, Nürnberg, 1636 [copy in possession of Pastor E. Krauss of Oreliswald. There are also eds. which have the engraved title dated 1635, and the printed title dated 1648, a copy of the two ed. being in the Gittingen Library, and a copy of the 12m in the Library of the Prediger Sominar at Hannovar], and from his (2) Hand-Land-aw Stand-Bitchlein. Nürnberg, 1637 Richtlingen Library). Some 20 of his hymns were included in J. M. Billherr's G. R., Nürnberg, 1664 (p. 801, ii.), and other collections of the 17th cent.

The only hymn by Wegelin which has passed into English is:—

Allein and Christi Himmelfahrt. Ascension. This is his most popular byrnh. 1st pub. 1876, as above, p. 609 (Göttingen copy p. 662, Hannover copy p. 581), in 3st of 7 1. entitled, "iv. Short Paelm of Praise on the Ascension of Christ;" repeated in Dilhert's G. B., 1654, p. 594. In the Lüneburg G. H., 1661, No. 112, it is reast and begins, "And Christi Himmel-Fart allein"; this recast being probably made by the compiler Ernst Semmemann (1658 convector of the Lath school at Celle, 1661 pastor of St. Alexander's Church at Rinbeck or Einbeck, in Hannover; d. at Embeck, Nov. 17, 1670). Both forms are given in the Leipzig Forzath, 1673, Nos. 38s and 389, and in the Unn. L. N., 1851. Tr. 83:—

38s and 389, and in the Uno, L. N., 1851. Tr. as:—

1. Raise your Devotion, mortal Tengues. By J. C. Jacobi, in his Paul. Ger., 1722, p. 24; repeated, altered, in his 2nd ed., 1732, p. 41. In 1722 it is marked as tr. from the second form of Wegelin's hytnn; in 1732 as from J. Zwick's Auf diesen Try bedenken soir. It may be regarded as a very free tr. from Wegelin; with the first stanza taken from st. v., vi. of Isanc Watts's "the sannah to the Prince of Light." The 1732 text was included as No. 443 in pt. 1. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, with a new fr. of st. iii. added. This fr. of st. iii. was omitted in the 1738 and later eds. In the edition of 1836, No. 170, only st. 1, ii. of Jacobi are retained.

2. Since Christ in gone to beaven. His home. This

9. Since Christ is gone to beaven, His home. This is a good to from the second form, by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd set., 1858, p. 47; and in Schaffe Christ in Song, 1869, p. 314. In her C. B. for Regional, 1863, No. 54, it is attered in metre.

Wegleiter, Christoph, s. of Leonhardt Wegleiter, book-keeper at Nürnberg, was b. at Nürnberg, April 22, 1659. In 1676 he matriculated at the University of Altdorf, and so distinguished himself by his poetic gifts that he was, in 1679, received by S. von Birken as a member of the Pegnitz Shepherd and Flower order, and in 1680 was at once capped M.A. and laurented as a poet. After studying at other German universities, and making a lengthened tour (1683-88) in Germany, Holland, and England, he was appointed, in 1688, Professor of Theology at the University of Altdorf, and also discouns of the Town Church there; receiving from the University the degree of D.D. in 1697. He d. at Altdorf Aug. 16 (18?), 1706 (Kneh, iii., 502; Blätter für Hymnologie, 1885, p. 178; 1886, p. 157; 1887, pp. 30, 31; Will's Nürnbergisches Gelehrten Lexicon, pt. iv. p. 187, &c.).

Wegletter was a successful professor, and an edifying preacher of the school of Spener and Francke. His hymns, some 25 in all, are thoughtful original, and devout, but somewhat artificial in style. Six were constituted to the 2nd ed., 1621, of the Pegnitz Society's Professor. Andockstolary (p. 858, i.), and the rest spenered in various hymn-books of the period.

The only hymn by Wegleiter which has passed into English is:—

Beachwestes Hers, leg ab die Bergen. Sunday Norwing. 1st pub. in the Geistliche Hertrens-Marie, Schleusingen, 1701, No. 497, in 8 st. of 8 l., entitled "Sunday Hymn," and marked as by "B. Christ. Wegleiter." Included in the Unw. L. S., 1851. Sometimes erroneously ascribed to B. W. Marperger. Tr. 48:—

Encomposed beatto by the wife strong with sorrow. This is a good fr., omitting at. vi., vil., by Miss Cox, in her Szered Hymns from German, 1841, p. 59. Her sra, of st. Hi, fv., ll. 1-4; vill., ll. 1-4, beginning, "My God, I now appear before Thre," are included in the Hedge & Huntington Hyst. for the Ch. of Christ, Boston, U.S., 1853, No. 9.

Other trs. are:—
() "O'orborden'd Heart, thy Labour bauleh," by H.
J. Buckell, 1842, p. 1. (2) "Now weary heart! thy cares dismiss," by Lady E. Fortescue, 1843, p. 15. (3)
"Now, heavy heart, away with sorrow," by Miss Monington, 1863, p. 147. (4) "My burdened heart, throw off thy cares," by Br. J. Guthrie, 1869, p. 114. (5) "O burden'd heart, cast off thy sorrow." This is No. 1021 Roid's Praise Bk., 1872.

Weingäxtner, Sigismund. Very little is known of this author. His name appears as "Sigismund Weingart" in the Index of Authors prefixed to the 766 Geistlicke Psalmen, &c., pub. at Nürnberg in 1607, but no biographical particulars are there given. He is generally said to have been a preacher in or near Heilbronn. But Koch, ii. 300, says that no preacher of that name ever held office in or near Heilbronn on the Neckar; and conjectures that he may have been of Heilsbronn in Bavaria. As to Heilsbronn, Dr. Zahn, now of Neuendettelsau in Bavaria, informs me that there was no preacher of that name near Heilsbronn, and that he has been unable anywhere to trace this writer. Goedeke, in his Grandris, vol. ii., 1884, p. 198, saya, "he seems to have been of Basel," but for this also there is no clear evidence.

"S, W. Anfi Jesum Christum stebt all melu Thun, 765." " Auff melnen lieben Gott, traw ich, 836."

The latter has been tr. into English, viz.:—Anf meines lieben Gott. Trust in God. Included, 1601, as above, p. 336, in 5 st. of $1. entitled, "Another benutiful hymn"; but, as will be seen above, no initials are attached to it in the 1607 index of First Lines. Later compilers, however (usch as Jeremiss Weber in his G. B., Leipzig, 1638, p. 167; marked as "Another. Siglemund! Weingärtners"), transferred the initials given in the 1601 index, and so secribed "Ant meinen lieben Gott," to Weingärtner. This ascription is probably a misrake. L. Curtze in his D. Philipp Nichai's Liben and Lieder, 1859, p. 10, ascribes the hymn to Friedrich Beurhaus, since 1857 provector of the school at Detrimund (d. 1609), but this also lacks confirmation. Wackersagel, v. p. 433, gives it as snooymons, printing it from M. Yulpius's G. B., 1609, with a second form from J. Aldenberger's Gebethicklein, Nürnberg, 1611. Whoever was the author the hymn is certainly a good one, and has been a great favourite in Germany. In the Un.

L. S., 1851, No. 694, st. 1.-iv., vi. are as in 1607, and st. v. is one of the st. added in C. Demantins's Threnodiae, Freiberg, 1620. The trt. in C. U. are:—

1. On God in all my wres. This is a good tr, of st,
-iv. of the 1607, by A. T. Russell, as No. 231 in his I's. & Hye., 1861.

2. In God my faithful God. This is a good and full tr. from the 1607, by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 147, slightly altered in her Christian Singers, 1869, p. 186. Repeated, omitting st. iv., in the Ohlo Luth. Hyl., 1880.

Other tre, are:-

(1) "In God the Lord most just," by J. C. Jacobi, 1722, p. 62; rejected in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, pt. i., No. 474. (2) "I trust my blessed God," by N. L. Prothingham, 1870, p. 219. [J. M.]

Weisse, Michael (Weiss, Wiss, Wegs, Weys, Weyss), was b. circa 1480, in Neisse, Silesia, took priest's orders, and was for some time a monk at Breslau. When the early writings of Luther came into his hands, Weisse, with two other monks, abandoned the convent, and sought refuge in the Bohemian Brethren's House at Leutomischl in Bohemia. He became German preacher (and apparently founder of the German communities) to the Bohemian Brethren at Landskron in Bohemia, and Fulnok in Moravia, and d. at Landskron in 1534 (Koch, ii. 115–120; Wackernagel's D. Kirchenlied, i. p. 727; Fontes rerum Austricarum, Scriptores, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 227, Vienna, 1863, &c.).

Welsas was admitted as a priest among the Brethren at the Synod of Brandels, in 1531, and in 1532 was appointed a member of their Select Council, but he h previously performed important missions for the Breth-rez. He was, e.g., sent by Bisbop Lucas, in 1522, along with J. Roh or Horn, to explain the views of the Bohemian Section to Lather; and again, in 1524, when they were appointed more especially to report on the practices and boliness of life of the followers of the German Rewere appointed more especially to report on the practices and holimess of life of the followers of the German Reformers. He was also entrasted with the editing of the first German hymn-hook of the Bohemian Brethren, which appeared as Fin New Geneghenken at Jungen Bunzel (Jung Banzlau) in Bohemia in 1531 (see pp. 158, i., and 157). This contained 156 hymns, all apparently either translations or else originals by himself. The proportion of trs. is not very clear. In the preface to the 1531, Weisse addressing the German Communities to the 1531, Weisse addressing the German Communities to the 1531, Weisse addressing the German Communities to the 154 years, put forth all my ability, your old hymn-book as well as the Bohemian hymn-book (Camtional) being before me, and have brought the same sense, in accordance with Holy Scripture, into German Hymne." So Johann Rob in the preface to the 1544 ed. speaks of himself as correcting "hymns which he (i.e. Weisse) transferred from Bohemian into German." and the 1539 ed. speaks of Weisse as having "begon to trouslate the (Bohemian) Cantional, and rendered 143 hymns into German." Mr. Müller, however (see p. 157), has only been able to identify 12 as trs. from the Bohemian.

Luther called Weisse "a good poet, with somewhat stroneous views on the Sacramental hymns had been revised by Roh (1544), included 12 of his hymns in V. Babt's G. B., 1545. Many of his hymns passes considerable merit. The style is flowing and nusical, the religious tone is carneat and many, but yet tender and truly devont, and the best of them are distinguished by a certain charming simplicity of thought and expression.

At least 119 passed hint the German Lutheran hymn-

Truly devous, and the uses to them are the interpretation of a certain charming simplicity of thought and expression. At least 119 passed into the German Lutheran hymnoboles of the 18th and 17th centuries, and thany are still in use. There are amounted in this Divisionary at pp. in use. Three are annotate 385, ii.; $23, i.; and 886, i.

The following hymns by Weisse have also passed into English :-

i. Christus ist erstanden, Von des Todes Banden. Easter. 1st pub. 1531 as above, and thence in Wackernagel, iii. p. 273, in 7 st. of 4 l. It is suggested by the older hymn, "Christ ist erstanden" (p. 216, t.). In the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 129. The fr. in C. U. is:--- Weissel, Georg, s. of Johann Weissel, judge and afterwards burgomaster at Domnan, near Königsberg, was b. at Domnau in 1590. He studied at the University of Königaberg, from 1608 to 1611, and thereafter, for short periods, at Wittenberg, Leipzig, Jena, Strassburg, Basel and Marburg. In 1614 he was appointed rector of the school at Friedland near Domnau, but resigned this cest after three years, and returned to Königsberg to resume his studies in theology. Finally, in 1623, he became paster of the newly erected Altrossgart church at Königsberg, where he remained till his death, on August I, 1635 (Koch, iii. 180; Allpreussische Monatsschrift, 1867, p. 430; Goedake's Grun-driss, vol. iii., 1887, p. 122, &c.).

Weissel was one of the most important of the earlier hymn-writers of Prussia. His hymns, about 20 in all, are good in style, moderate in length, and varied in metre. The earliest seem to have been written for use at the consecration of the Altrosegar church on the 2nd 8. in Advent, 1623. The majority are for the greater festivals of the Christian year. The best are No. ii, below, and those for the dring. They appeared mostly in the Königoberg hymn-books, 1893-1889, and in the pilation, Preussische Fest-Lieder, pt. I., Elbing, 2642; pt. II., Königeberg, 1644 (Berlin Library).

Those of Weissel's hymns which have passed into English are:-

i. Im finstern Stall, o Wunder gross. Christmas. 1st nub. in B. Derschau's Ausseriesene geistliche Lieder, Königsberg, 1639, p. 7, in 5 st. of 5 l. In the Preussische Fest-Lieder, pt. i., 1642, No. 14. it is entitled "On the Birth of Christ, Lux in tenebris lucet," and in the Index is marked as by Georg Weisselius. Repeated in the Königsberg G. B., 1650, p. 66, and as No. 168 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. The tr. in C. U. is:—

O miracle of love and might! This is a somewhat free tr., omitting at, v., by Dr. Kennedy, as No. 104 in his Hymno. Christ., 1863.

il. Macht hook die Thür, das Thor macht weit. Advent. This is a Hymn of Triumph for the Entry of the King of Glory, founded on Ps. xxiv.; and is one of the finest German Advent hymns, 1st pub. in the Preussische Fest-Lieder, pt. 1., 1642, No. 2, in 5 st. of 8 l., marked as "On the 1st S. of Advent," and in the Index marked as by Georgius Weisselins. Included in Crüger's Praxis, Frankfurt-am-Main, 1662, and most later books, as e.g. the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1599. The trs. in C. U. are:—

1. Lift up your heads, ye mighty gates. This is a good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 10, and her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 25. In the Cong. Church Hyl., 1887, the Evany. Hyl., N. Y., 1880, and others, the original form is followed. In the Bapt. Ps. 4 Hys., 1858; Hapt. Hyl., 1879; Horder's Cong. Hys., 1884, and others, II. 7, 8 of each stanza are omitted. In Schaff's Christ in Song, 1869, p. 17, ll. 1-4 of each stanza are given, and then ll. 6, 7 of st. iv., v. are added as a sixth st,-this form being followed in the Hys. & Songs of Praise, N. Y., 1874; Meth. Epis. Hyl., 1878, and other American Colls. Other forms are:

(1) Behold One cometh from afar (1, alt.). This (partly from Mercer) is in the 1874 Suppl., to the New Cong. H. Bk., and the 1874 Appx. to the Lecte H. Bk., (2) Behold He cometh from afar. In J. L. Porter's Coll., 1876, altered from No. 1.

(5) Oh! hallowed is the land and blest (iii. l. 1, alt.). In the American Subout H. Bk., 1888, &c.

(4) O blest the scale, for ever blest (lii. l. 1, alt.). In Byt. of the Spirit, Beston, U.S., 1864.

(5) Fing wide the partals of your heart (Iv.). In the American Unitarian H. Bk., 1868.

2. The mighty gates of earth unber. This is by W. Mercer, based on Miss Winkworth's tr., in his Church P. & H. Bk., 1857, No. 14 (Ox. ed., 1864, No. 71), repeated in Kennedy, 1863.

Another tr. is: "Lift up, lift up your heads, ye gates," by G. Moultrie, in his Espousals of S. Dorothea, 1870. iii. We ist dein Stachel nun, e Ted? Easter. Founded on 1 Cor. xv., 55-58. 1st pub. as No. 3 in pt. ii., 1644, of the Preussische Fest-Lieder, in 5 st. of 8 l., entitled "For the Easter festival," and in the index marked as by Georgius Weisselius. Thence in the Königsberg G. B., 1650, p. 193, and others. The form which has passed into English is that in the Hannover $G.\,B.,\,1657$, No. 74, in 10 st., repeated as No. 315 in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863. This, beginning "O Tod, we ist deln Stachel nun," is entirely re-Weissensee, Philipp Heinrich, was b. Feb. 6, 1673, at Vichberg, near Gaildorf, Wiiritemberg, where his father was pastor and consistorial rath. He studied at the University of Tübingen, and, after acting as assistant to several clergymen, became, in 1697, a tutor to the court pages at Stuttgart. In 1703 he was appointed a tutor in the clergy training school at Maulbronn, and in 1708 in that at Blaubeuren. He was then appointed, in 1722, prelate at Blaubeuren, and in 1727 took up residence at Stuttgart as prelate of Hirseu and member of the Württemberg consistory. For political reasons he was removed, in 1740, to Denkendorf near Esslingen, as Probet and General Superintendent. He d. at Denkendorf, Jan 6, 1767, being then the Father and Senior of the Lutheran Church in Württemberg (Koch, v. 79; B. Haug's Liederdichter des wirtenbergischen Landgesung-buchs, 1780, p. 42, and Appz. ii., &c.).

Weissenses was one of the earliest friends of Foreign Wessennes was one of the cartiest Figures of Soveign Miscions, being specially interested in that to Malabar. He was a good poet, and in 1718 pub. a German metrical version of Thomas & Kempic's Initiation. The most important of bils hymns were contributed to the 2nd ed. of J. A. Grammilich's Viertsig Hetrachtungen von Christi Leiden und Fod, and die Vierteig Tugen in den Pasten, Stuttgart, 1727 (Berlin Library. The 1st ed., 1722, has no hymne).

Those of Weissensee's hymns which have passed into English are:-

i. Der Tod kemmt an : da sell ich ringen. For the h. Der Iod, genner an 'ca son tragen. For dec pring. let pub. 1727, as above, p. 144, in 4 st. of 6 l., as the companion to Meditation on St. Luke xxii. 44. Included in Knapp's So. L. X., 1837 and 1965. In Bun-sen's Versuck, 1833, No. 888, it begins "Kommt an der Tod, da ich soll ringen." The tr. in C. U. is:

Welsh Hymnody. No reasonable doubt can exist as to hymns being sung in the early British Church, People whose muse always sang the praises of men, whether kings, warriors, or patriots, would searcely fall to pour forth their feelings of devotion, and to give the highest scope possible to their muse in the form of hymns or secred lyrics. In the works of Taliesia, who is supposed to be a bard of the sixth century, reference is made to the hymnology of that period, "Nid cerddor cel-fydd ni molwy Ddafydd; nid cywir ceiniad ni molwy y Tad"; that is, "No musician is shilful unless he extole the Lord, and no singer is correct unless he praises the Father."

In the works of Llawdden, a bard who took a prominent part in the reformation of Welsh poetry in the year 1451, some reference is also made to the hymnology of the mediaeval period :-

" Mi a lunial fon lanwaith, Gywyddau a Salmau caith; A naw emvn o newydd A phawh gair I Fair fydd."

Tudur Aled, also, says that in heaven it will be a part of the saints' supremest joy to sing the Virgin's praises :-

"Cawn wynfyd, cawn y Wenfair, Cawn y nef oll, canwn i Fair,"

In the year 1340, Davydd Ddu o Hiraddug Vicar of Tremeirchion, and Canon of St. Asaph, composed some hymns, perhaps the first Wolsh hymns, since the early Church hymns were lost. He also translated the Te Deum, in the Weish metre known as Hypynt or His sacred poem, Am Vaulted Strain. Ddiwedd Dyn a'i Gorph, is printed in the Myvyrian Archaeology of Wales. Also a very poetical translation of the Officium B. Mariae from Latin into Welsh by him, fills thirty columns of the first volume of the Myvyrian Archaeology.

At the time of the Protestant Reformation the Welsh appeared to have lost the spirit of sacred song. On the Continent the Reforma-tion was the signal for an outburst of vernacular hymnology. Luther's hymne and psalms fired the hearts of his followers, so that his opponents feared his hymns more than his sermons and England and Wales caught the i, Established Church.—In the years 1549-62, Sternhold and Hopkins gave to the English people the Metrical Psalms; but Walcz had to wait many years for the appearance of a poet whose name is now familiar to all Welshmen, as well as the task he so admirably performed—Salmau Edmund Prys.

- 1. Vicar Prichard, commonly known as Vicar Rees Prichard (p. 809, i.), did good service as a hymnologist. It appears that his book called Canwyll y Cymry; or, the Welshman's Candle, was at one time much used, and some of its quaint verses sung as hymus, probably for the want of something better, for in his days the voice of sacred song and praise was scarcely heard in Wales. His compositions were in use before Archdescon Prys's Psalms were published. On the decay of religion in Wales, according to one author, when the re-cognised teachers of the people neglected their duty, The Welshman's Candle appeared and was extensively circulated. Much of it was sung, for it served as a kind of Welsh hymnbook. It was the beginning of a new era. The following is one of his hymns, that was much used before and after Archdescon Prys's Pealms appeared. The title is:—Mawlgan am gariad Crist at y byd (or, Praise for Christ's love for the world):
 - Rhyfedd fawr gariad Mab Duw at y byd, Pan ôdaoth ef o'r Nefoedd i'n prynu mor dôrnd; Myfyriwn i gofio am garlad Mab Duw, A'i foli'n wastadol tra byddom ni byw, Cyflawnodd y Gyfraith, boddlonodd el Dad, Fe brynodd ein pardwn, fe'i sellodd a'i waed; Fe'n dygodd ni ellwaith i heddwch a Duw, Mollanwn yr Iesu tra byddom ni byw. Fe ddug ar y Croesbren ein pechod bob un, Fe'n golchodd o'n belau a'i wir waed ai bun; Fe'n gwnaeth yn frenhinol offeriadd i Dduw, Molianwn yr lewn tra byddom oi byw. Gogoniant e gallu a diolch bob pryd, A fo i'r Glân Drindod o'n prynn mor ddrud; A mawr-glod a moliant i'n I'rynwr a'n Pen, A d'weded pob Cristion yn wastad, Amen."

This may be taken as a specimen of his style, and of the early hymns that were heard from every mouth in the Principality before the time of Archdoacon Prys.

"It is scarcely credible," says Canon Wil-liams, "with what avidity and pleasure the work was received, read, repeated, and it may be said, sung by the people."

2. Archdeacon Trys (p. 916, ii.), however, is the connecting link between our Hymnology and the Reformation period. It was in the year 1621 that he turned the Psalms into a metrical shape, in order, as he quaintly puts it, "that the Weish people might be enabled to praise God from their hearts," It was a glorious task, His version of the Psalms is still used. Some have thought it dry and stiff, but on the whole the task was admirably performed. The Vcn. Archdeacon Prys was a man of deep learning and piety. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his degree. He assisted Dr. Morgan in the translation of the Welsh Bible; and from his Metrical Psalms, Englynion, Cywyddau, and other things composed by him, we have abundant evidence that he was a man of culture, taste and capacity, and that he possessed the religious spirit that could enter into sympathetic relations with the authors of the Psalms, and interpret them from his inmost soul. In some cases, indeed, his rendering of the Psalms, and his recreting them as it were in his own mould, sheds a flood of light on their meaning. His version of the latter part of the 110th Psalm has been pointed out as an illustration of this: "He shall drink of the brook in the way, therefore shall be lift up the head."

> "O wir frys i'r gyflafan hon, Fe pf o'r afon ness. A gaffo, ar ei ffordd yn rhwydd Yr Arglwydd a'i dyrchafa."

That of itself is a sufficient commentary on the Psalm, and its reference to the sufferings and exaltation of the Messiah. It has been said that the Archdescon's translation of the Psalms is dry and rugged, and that in several places he is guilty of breaking the fixed rules of poetry, and of frequently ignoring the principle of metres so thoroughly developed in Welsh poetry. This, I believe, is a mistake. The old poet, if fairly dealt with, shows that he understood and recognised the principles of rhyme and metre, and the various ways of measuring and adorning Welsh poetry, and their development into a system and rules of art. I do not say that his metrical Padms are faultiess, but I hold that he is not so guilty of the fault called canacentad, as some have accused him of being. I believe he has respected the rules of rhyme and rhythm, and where he is thought guilty of trampling on those of metre, he is skilfully avoiding doing so by changing the metrical feet and autometers [cyhydeddau a'r corfannau]. Tho ninety-second Psalm, in which occurs the famous stanza .~

Next to the Archdescon's comes the name of Rowland Vaughan (p. 1206, L), a gentleman, a scholar, and an excellent poet, although his chief mark was made as a translator of hymns, &c. His translation of that beautiful hymn, "Veni Creator Spiritus," is well-known. Whether he translated the original Latin or the English of Bishop Cosin we are not able however, differ, the Welsh being a little shorter than the English, but in sweetness, vividness and strength the Welsh far surpasses the English. We quote the opening stanza of each, together with the original:—

" Veni Creator Spiritus Mentes tuorum visita, Imple superna gratia, Quae to creasti pectora." "Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire, And lighten with celestial fire: Thou the anointing spirit art Who dost thy seven-fold gifts impart." "Tyr'd Yabryd Glân I'n c'lonau ni, A dod d'oleuni nefot; Tydi wyt Yabryd Crist, dy ddawn Sydd fawr lawn a rhagorol."

Rowland Vaughan's tr. of the Veni Creator Spiritus, and Galarnad Pechadur, ought to be remembered, for we have nothing more beautiful in the whole range of Welsh Hymnology,

4. Elis Wyn o Lasynys (p. 1995, ii.), (or Bardd Crosg) should be mentioned in connection with this period. One of the best Welsh hyrons we have was composed by him. and was as much admired then as it is now, It is a funeral hymn, or, as the Welsh people call it, "Emyn Cynhebrwng, neu Wylnos." It always appeared in Welsh editions of the Prayer-book after 1710 :-

"Myñ yw'r Adgyfodiad mawr, Myñ yw gwawt y Dywyd; Caiff pawb a'm cred, medd f'Arglwydd Dduw, Er treugu, fyw mewn eifyd.

A'r sawi sy'n byw mewn ufudd gred Imi, caiff drwydded nefol, Na allo'r Angau brenhin braw, Ddrwg iddaw yn drag 'wyddol. Yn wir, yn wir, medd Gwir ei Hun, Pob cyfryw ddyn sy'n gwrando Fy nghair, gan gredu'r Tad a'm rinces, Mae didranc emioes ganddo. A wnel ei oreu'n nfukihan, Tewy ffydd i'm geiriau byfryd; Ni ddaw i farn, ond trwedd aeth, O angau caeth, i fywyd."

Some of his works are mentioned in his biographical notice, q.v.

5. The Rev. Griffith Jones (p. 605, ii.), of Llanddowror, published a hymn-book under the title of Caspliad o Hymnan, gan y Parch. Griffith Jones. (A Collection of Hymns by the Her. Griffith Jones.) We have not been able to find any hymns composed by this celebrated clergyman. The hymns in his collection were selections from the works of different authors, The Rev. Griffith Jones has been called the morning star of the Reformation in Wales. His voice had been heard speaking against corruption and sins rempant in Wales more than twenty years before Rowland and Harris began to rouse the country. Williams of began to rouse the country. Pautycelyn refers to this in his elegy to the Rev. Griffith Jones :-

"Dyma'r gŵr a dorrodd allan, Ronyn bath cyn torri'r wawr; Had fe hatiodd, fe eginedd, Fe ddaeth yn gynbauaf mawr."

His collection of Hymns is not in use now, though some of the hymns it contained are still sung by Welsh congregations.

6. The Rev. Evan Evane (Glangeirionydd), is the chief hymnologist of this century. He published two books of hymns and tanes between the years 1829 and 1841. He was Vicer of Rhyl, and died in the year 1850. "Ar lan Iorddonen ddofn," and "O Dduw, to decide. The English and Welsh metres, the i'm dy hedd," are two of his hymns that have been sung, and are still sung with unction by many Welsh congregations. Most of his hymns are tender and plaintive. His collections of hymns and tunes are not in use in the Welsh Church now, but in every edition of hymns published in Wales by Churchmen and Dissenters, since his time, his hymns always appear among the choicest.

Several hymn-books have appeared for use in the Established Church in Wales, from time to time, since the days of the Rev. Griffith Jones. Often clergymen composed and collected a number of hymns for one or two or more parishes. This scems to have been the state of things during the greater part of the seventeenth century. After that larger collections were published, but with no efforts to secure for the Welsh Church one general hymn-book. The hymns sung by the Church were much the same as those sung by Nonconformists throughout Wales.

7. The Rev. Robert Davies, M.A., published a collection of hymns which proved useful in parts of North Wales. It was called:—

Hymnan or Whitan as Propridical Spleon Logg, sould be caught alian a waith graduand andways, you ngited an array or it newpotition; that is, "Hymna on the Feneta and Faste of the Church of England, collected from the works of different authors, with several New Hymns, by the Rev. Robert Davies, n.a., of Cambridge, and Curate of Bhuddlan, in Flintshire."

Singularly the book has no date. It was published at Denbigh. Several of its hymns are found in the collections of the present day.

Another hymn-book which was in use in many churches, was called Daniel Jones's Book. The Rev. Daniel Jones was a celebrated clergyman in South Wales. He was Vicar of St. Dogmell's in Pembrokeshire. His book is still used in some parts of Wales. Another collection was called The Bishops' Hymn-book. This was collected and published under the direction of the four Bishops, and was an attempt to provide a book for the general use of the Church in Wales. The attempt was not successful; for some reason or other the work failed to commend itself to the universal favour of the Welsh Church.

8. There are three collections which have had a large circulation, and are now used throughout the Principality. (1) Hymnus His a Newydd, or "Hymns Ancient and Modern," London, Haddon, 1868, 555 H.; enlarged in 1875 to 596 H., not to be confounded with the English hymn-book of the some name, though the Introits are added, and it is of a similar school. (2) The Rev. Canon Daniel Evans's book, Hymnan a Thonau, Lendon, Novelle, 1865, 504 H.; and the (3) Emynydd by the late Rev. T. Williams, Rector of St. George, dedicated to the Lord Bishop of St. Asaph.

These three books contain many of the some hymns, being selections from the works of Williams of Pantycelyn, Morgan Rhys, Anu Griffithe, Rev. E. Evans, and translations from English collections. These hymns as yet be-long to no party in the Church, but are hymns that may be sung by all. Complaints are made by some clergymen that many of the hymns are of too subjective a cast, and that they should be replaced by hymns more objective in character, and there is also a demand for more Sacramental Hymns. There is now [1886] in course of preparation, by the Rev. Elis Roberts, Vicar of Llangwn; and the Rev. W. G. Thomas, Vicar of St. Assph, a new hymnal which is intended, in accordance with the Bishop of St. Asaph's desire, to be a good and acceptable hymnal for the use of the Church in Wales.

ii. Calvinistic Methodists.

1. During the latter part of the eighteenth century a complete change came over the country. The cold negligent spirit which had characterised the first half, disappeared, the people were shaken from a long deep sleep, and with the revival came a love for hymns and spiritual songs. The Methodist revival is a starting point from which has been unfolded a rich and pure literature that will bear comparison with anything of the same nature produced by the most cultured nations. Foremost in the rank of religious poets stands the Rev. W. Williams (b. 1717, d. 1791) of Pantycelyn. He was a most prolific writer. It is a matter of history that his sacred songs and hymns did more than anything else to arouse the people and create a taste for reading in all parts of Wales. The extensive circulation and the universal reception given to his hymns published at different times between the years 1744 and 1758, must lead us to believe that they carried a mighty influence, and were a great factor in the education of the people of Wales. People who could not themselves read soon learnt the hymns, and thousands of people knew a great many of them by heart. All his works appeared in one volume in 1758, and contained upwards of 800 hymns. They are still in general use in the Established Church, and among the different denominations.

 Morgan Rhys, of Llanfynydd (d. 1776), worked well to build up Welsh hymnody. There are about two hundred of his hymns now extant. Many of them are the favourite hymns of Welsh congregations. The follow-

"O agor fy llygaid i weled"
"Dyna (feldwad i'r colledig"
"O garlad, o garlad, unfeldrol ei fraint," &c., have found their way into every collection of hymns by Churchmen and Nonconformists. He was a contemporary of Williams of Pantycelyn, and belonged to the same religious body.

3. The Rev. David Morris, David Charles, and Thomas Charles, have confributed to the hymnology of Wales. The well-known hymn, "O fryniau Caersalem ceir gweled," by the Rev. D. Charles, of Caermarthen, is to be found in all Welsh hymnals. The Rev. Thomas Charles, of Bala, the eminent divine, and one of the founders of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and organizer of the Sunday School as it now exists in Wales, has left behind him only one hymn, but of such a beautiful character as to make Welsh people wish he had done more in that direction. This hymn is in the Calvinistic Hymn-book, now in use among that body throughout the country. It begins, "Dyfais fawr trag wyddol guriad." In that book it is divided into two parts with five verses in each part. The Rev. D. Charles, jun., is the translator of "Jerusalem, my happy home," as "O Salem, fy anwyl gartrefle."

4. The Calvinistic Hymn-book that we have just referred to, was published by the authority of the General Assembly of the Calvinistic Methodists, and is perhaps the most perfect hymnal in Wales. It is the only hymn-book used among the congregations of that body throughout the Principality. A list of the authors from whose works the hymns are selected is given in the beginning of the book, and the number of authors is over fifty, but by far the greatest number of hymns is taken from W. Williams of Pantycelyn. The book was prepared by a committee appointed by the General Assembly, and bears the date of 1869.

iii. Congregational.

1. One of the first editions of hymns, if not the first ever published, for the Congregationalists in Wales, was by the Rev. T. Baddy, in 1703, about 14 years before Williams of Pantycelyn was born, and about 32 years after the appearance of Archdescon Prys's Psalms. Baddy published an edition of hymns under the title of Sucramental Hymns, and also a translation of Thomas Doolitle's Christian's Passover, to which were added six hymns to be sung after receiving Holy Communion.

2. In the year 1714, the Rev. D. Lewis, Newport, published Heavenly Songs and Spiritual Hymns. Nothing is known of him beyond the fact that he was a minister of the gospel in Bouth Wales.

3. In 1742, the Rev. Herbert Jenkins issued his Hymnau Duwiol. Mr. Jenkins was a minister at Maidstone, where he d in 1772, after a ministry of more than 24 years.

4. David Jones, of Caio, is known as the translator of Dr. Watts's works. He published his translation of Watts's Psalms in 1753, and soon afterwards a translation of Watts's Divine Songe.

5. The Rev. Ioan Thomas, of Rhniadr, published many editions of hymns between the years 1776 and 1786, under the titles of Caniadau Sion, and Hymnau yn perthyn i'r Drysorfa Euraidd (cr. "Hymns relating to the Golden Treasury" [a Magazine]). There are extant about 187 of his hymns, many of which are still used in many congregations.

are still used in many congregations.

6. The Rev. Thomas Williams (q.v.), of Bethesda'r Frô, was a prolific hymn-writer. He published his first collection of hymns in 1812. They became very popular among the Independents, and other denominations in Wales.

- 7. The Congregationalists have had several collections of hymns since the publication of Watts's Hymns, &c. In 1840, Mr. Even Edwards, of Mold, brought out a collection, and Dr. Rees published the Perganiedydd (or, "The Sweet Singer") in 1847. Another collection by the Rev. E. Griffiths, of Swanses, appeared in 1857; and Caledfryn's Collection, in 1861. Their best collection is Aberth Moliant, pub. in Liverpool (?), chief ed. Dr. W. Rees.
- The collection known as S. R., published in 1841, is still used by some congregations.
 The collection of hymns and tupes in of Pantycelyn; D. Jones, of Caio, D. Williams, Ann Griffiths, Edward Jones, B. Francis, and others.

iv. Baptiets.

1. The first collection of hymns belonging to the Baptist denomination in Wales, was by the Bev. Joseph Harris [Goner], 1821, and this was their only book for many years. The hymns it contained were principally selections, but it contained also many new hymns by "Gomer" himself and his talented son, Ienan Ddu, also by the Rev. Benjamin Francis, Titus Lewis, and D. Saundera. It contained about 300 hymns.

2. Later the Rev. Daniel Jones, of Liverpool, made a large collection which was adopted by several congregations, but although in contained many excellent hymns, new and old, it never reached a second edition. After that, the Rev. Robert Jones, Llanllyfni, issued a collection containing new hymns by himself and others. This obtained considerable patronage among the churches in North Wales, and is still in use in some congregations.

3. In the year 1867 another collection made its appearance, compiled by the late Rev. Lewis Jones, of Pwilheli, containing about 1200 hymns. This is extensively used in both

South and North Wales.

4. There are also several local hymn-books in use in a few churches in South Wales. In some cases a collection is confined to one congregation.

- 5. Lately, however, another candidate has made its appearance, and has secured a very large circulation. It is called Llawlyfr Moliculat (or, "The Hand-book of Praise"), and was prepared by a committee appointed by the Carnarwon Association, and first published in 1881. It contains 422 hymns and 125 tunes. Between 30,000 and 40,000 copies of this book have been sold.
- 6. A new edition of J. Harris's (Gomer's) book was published, but arranged differently from the first. "Gomer's" arrangement was topical or doctrinal, but the arrangement of this edition is metrical.

v. Wesleyan Methodists.

1. The Wesleyan Body has a large collection of hymns from different sources which was pub at Llanidioes in 1846. It contains 1840 hymns. This hymnal was prepared by persons appointed by the Synod. The work is also recommended by two Chief Ministers from North Wales, and two from South Wales. Some of the hymns are very good, Several of the hymns are by Williams, of Pantycelyn (with alterations), and other Welsh hymn-writers. Many of the Wesleys' hymns are translated in this hymnal, and with other translations from the English have become favourite hymns among the congregations of the Welsh Wesleyans.

vi. Unitariane.

The Welsh Unitarians, like their brethren in England, developed in the 18th cent. chiefly out of the old Presbyterian congregations; passing through the same stages of Arminian and Arian doctrine. [Cf. Unit. Kymaody.]

1. The first book to be used in their conregations appears to have been the translation of Watts's Psolms, by David Jones, of Caio, 1758.

2. In 1796 Rev. Josiah Rees, of Gellionen, pub. a collection of bymns, and the year following a selection from Watts's Pacims. The bulk of these are D. Jones's translations, but hymns are added from other authors, the editor himself, his father, Owen Rees, Sol. Harria, of Swansea, who contributed a trans-lation of Addison's "Spacious firmament," Jenkin Jones, D. Lloyd, David Davis, &c. A new ed. was pub, in 1834 with considerable

3. The great hymn-writer of the Unitarians is Edward Williams (Iolo Morgamog), (1745-1826). He pub in 1812 a collection of 204 original Paalms, and in 1834 his son brought out a further collection, 211 in number. There was a new ed. 1857. Iolo has also left a collection of about 2000 hymns in Ms.,

besides those published.
4. In 1857, Rev. John Jones, of Aberdare, brought out a collection of hymns, 208 being by Edward Williams, 68 by Thomas Evans, and some by the editor and his brother Rees

Jones.

5. But this and other earlier collections are now superseded in congregational use by the collection of his son, Rev. B. J. Jones, minister at Aberdare.

"Engnan o Fuel a Gueddi; or, Hymns of Prates and Prayer," collected by R. J. Jones, Aberdir. Jen-kin Hawell, Printer, 1878. Seconded, 1883.

This collection of 379 hymns is excellent, and is modelled on the plan of Dr. Martineau's Hymns of Proise and Prayer. It contains hymne from many sources, including translations of several in C. U. 'The translations of Dr. Newman's hymn, "Lead, kindly light"; "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and of "For ever with the Lord," are specially good. The names of the 64 authors from whom the hymns are taken, and a very useful glossary, form a part of the book. The bulk of the hymns are by Edward Williams. Other authors of original hymns are Thomas Evons, Owen Rees, Josiah Rees, Jenkin Jones, David Davis, Rees Jones (Amnon), William Thomas, the Editor, &c. In style, order and perspicuity, it is second to no book of the kind ever published in Wales.

vil. General Survey.—Passing from the Collections to the Hymns, we find that Welsh hymnody is, to a great extent, a home production, and is almost, but not entirely, confined to home use. There are a dozen or two of Welsh hymns which have become the favourite hymns of English congregations, most of which are by Williams of Pantycelyn. We give the first lines in Welsh and English. Some were composed in English, and have not been translated into Welsh, such as:

(I) "Hark! the voice of my beloved."
(2) "Jesus, lasd us with Thy power."
(3) "O for a strong foundation" (Author unknown).
(e) "Jesus in all my hope."

The last is one of Williams's English hymns. The following Welsh and English hymns are also by Williams:-

(5) "Inso, Iesu, 'rwyt ti'n ddigon." "Jenus, Thou art all-sufferent."

- (4) " Arglwydd, arwein trwy'r anialwoh." " Guide me, O Thou Great Jekowak."
- (7) "O lachawdwr pechaduriaid."
 " Great Redeemer, friend of sinners."
- (8) "Good babell yn ngwlad Gosen."
 "Fix, G Lord, a tent in Goshen."
- (*) " Pa'm y caiff bwystilled rheibus."
 " Why should cruel beasts be suffered."
- (10) " Dros y bryniau tywyll niwilog."
 " O'er the gloomy hells of darkness."

This last hymn is famous in the Missionary fields, and has been translated into many languages. In the Cashmere districts, in India, most successful Mission work is carried on under the care of Wetsh Calvinistic Methodist Missionaries. The Khassi Hymnal, 1877, consists of 242 hymns, some original, but mostly translations from the latest collection of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, is the official hymn-book of the Mission.

Ewald says that Hebrew poetry has a simplicity and transparency that can scarcely be found anywhere else, and a natural sublimity that knows but little of fixed forms of art: that even when art comes into play, it ever remains unconscious and careless of it. Compared with the poetry of other pations and ancient peoples, it appears to belong to a simple and child-like age of mankind, overflowing with an internal fulness and grace that troubles itself but little with external ornament and nice artistic law. Much of this is applicable to Welsh religious poetry. In spirit, character, figures of speech, and emotional language, it may be aptly compared with the Hebrew. Williams of Pantycelyn, Morgan Rhys, D. Williams, and Glangeirionydd, and Islwyn, especially turned to the world of nature, at-tentively regarded it and used it; and entered into deep fellowship with it in its various phases, not for itself alone, but (like the Hebrew prophet), on account of its relation to their own souls. Nature to them spoke the language of heaven; all forces—animal, vegetable, and physical, attracted them to God. Williams of Pantycelyn, in some of his hymns, makes the most beautiful use of the floral world, as well as of the physical. Nothing could excel the faithfulness to nature, the vividness and the graphic powers of these hymna :-

"Planna'r egwyddorion hyny, Yn fy nghalon bob yr un, Ag sydd megle peraroglau Yn dy natur di hun, Biodan hyfryd, sto. Fo'n disgleirio dae'r a nan. Rwyf yn card'r peretinion 'Nwyt yn caru r perennou Ar y creigiau eerth y sy, Ar eu traed ac ar au dwylaw 'N celsio dringo i fyny fry, Ar fy neulin, Minau ddof i ben y bryn."

Williams's true and intense admiration of the beauties of nature, and his reverence for its sublimities, may be seen in the use he made of it to express his own experience, which indeed has been the experience of humanity in all ages of the world.

Next to Williams of Pantycelyn comes another Williams, almost his equal as a poet-David Williams, of Llanbedr-y-Fro. of his hymns are popular, and some of them are very beautiful. Morgan Rhys, as a hymnwriter, stands almost abreast with those we have named. Several of his hymns have a sacred interest for thousands of Welshmen; and many have a grand martial sound which is most inspiriting. T. Williams, Betheads'r-Frô, is another writer of great merit; often in his hymns we have the utterances of penitence and prayer, the breathings of a weary pligrim, and the "yearning plaintive music of earth's sadder minstrelsy," followed by inbilant strains and peals of victory, as in:—

" Mas pren wedi 'i gael Mewn dyrys abial dir, Yn plygu 'i frig, yn cymheli pawb I fwyta 'i ffrwythau pur,"

Welsh hymn-writers, in common with others, differ in style, but meet on the wide field of subjects suggested by the Gospel. Their works are rich in narrative and scriptural allusion, in praises for redemption, in utterances of penitence and self-abasement, and in vivid description of the Christian warfare. Williams of Pantycelyn surpasses all in the expression of the yearnings of the heavenly home-sickness; in devout tenderness, often rising into rapture, wherewith his faith clasps the crucified Saviour, when wrapt in contemplation of the glory of Jesus as the Head of the Church militant and triumphant; and also in the doubt and maturity of his theological thoughts. [See Various.]

Wenn mein Stündlein fürhanden ist. N. Herman. [For the Dying.] This beautiful hymn, probably the finest of its author, appeared in his Historien von der Sindfludt, &c., Wittenberg, 1562, in 4 st. of 7 l., entitled, "A spiritual song, in which supplication is made for a happy final hour, on the saying of Augustine:—

'Turbabor, sed non perturbabor, Quia valnerum Christi recordabor.' "

Thence in Wacheragel, iii. p. 1211, and in Ledderhose's ed. of Herman, p. 104. Wackerwagel also gives the hymn se lengthened in the Bonn G. B., 1575, to 11 st., being the above 4, the 5 st. of Herman's hymn, "Da nun Elies seinen Lauff," and 2 st. not by Herman, as v. and x. This st. v. (which Mützell, No. 247, quetes from Drei schüse geistliche Lieder, Cöin, 1574), as altered in the Leipzig G. B., 1582, is generally attached to Herman's original 4 st., as in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 848, in 5 st. Tr. as:—

1. When Thou shalt close my firsting day. A good tr. of st. i.—iti., by A. T. Russell, as No. 247 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851. In Konnedy, 1863, it begins, "When death shall close our fleeting day," and this form is in Dr. Thomas's Augustine H. Bk., 1866, and the Ibrax Hyl., 1871.

2. Mus hour appointed is at hand. A full and very good tr. by R. Massle, contributed as No. 482 to the 1857 ed. of Mercer's C. P. § H. Bk. (Ox. ed., 1864, No. 385), and thence in his Lyra Domestica, 1864, p. 134. Repeated in the Wos. H. Bk., 1875, and the Moravian H. Bk., 1886.

3. When my last hour is close at hand, My last sad, &c. A full and very good fr. by Edgar Alfred Bowring, made at request of the Queen for use at the funeral of the Prince Consort in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, Dec. 23, 1861, and printed as the first of the Two Charales then sung. St. iv., v., beginning "I shall not in the grave remain," are set to music and were sung. The full tr. is printed, without music, between the two chorales. The second charale is, "To Thee, O Lord, I yield my spirit" (p. 301, il.) In full in the H. Bk. for St. Aidan's College, 18:14, and omitting st. fil., in Adam's Ch. Pustorals, 1864, the Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868, and others. St. iv., v. beginning "I shall not in the grave remain," are given as a separate hymn in Kennedy, 1863.

4. When my appointed hour is come To pass from earth, &c. A good and full tr. in the Eng. Presh. Ps. & Hys., 1867, No. 67; and repented in Dale's Eng. H. Bh., 1874, and C. N. Hall's Christ Ch. Hyd., 1876. St. iv., v. are from the Bowring version, No. 3.

5. When my last hour is close at hand, And I must, &c. A good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 193, rewritten and improved in her Christian Singers, 1869, p. 143. In the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

Other tre. are: (1) "Jesus, by Thy Almighty pow'r," as No. 532 in the Moravian H. Bh., 1789 (1849, No. 1201). (2) "When now the soleran hour is nigh," by Dr. H. Mills, 1855, p. 343. (3) "When death arrives, and I must go," by Dr. G. Walker, 1860, p. 104. [J. M.]

Werde munter, mein Gemiithe, Und ihr Sinnen geht herfür. J. Rist. [Evening.] Probably Bist's finest hynn. 1st pub. in the "Dritte Zehen" of his Himlische Lieder, Lüneburg, 1642, p. 45, in 12 st. of 8 l., entitled, "A Christian Evening Hymn, with which to commit onceeff to the protection of the Most High." Wesley Family, Tho.—This very remarkable family is almost as interesting from the hymnologist's as from the Church historian's point of view. The father and his three sons all wrote hymns which are suited for public worship, while one of the daughters, Mehetabel, though not strictly speaking a hymn-writer, wrote poetry of a religious tendency, which sometimes rises to a higher level than that which her father or any of her brothers with the possible exception of Charles—ever reached. The well-known history of the Wesleys at Epworth gives us a vivid picture of the good side of the life of a clergyman's family in the early part of the eighteenth century. Though the admirable wife and mother was unquestionably the central figure of the group, and perhaps the ruling spirit in the household, yet from the stand-point of this work, the father holds the more prominent place, because it was be and not Mrs. Wesley who both set the example of writing poetry himself, and transmitted the taste to his children. To him also, no less than to Mrs. Wesley, may be traced some of the characteristics which are more or less common to all the family. The chief of these characteristics were clear, vigorous, common-sense, a high standard of faith and morals, an acuteness of intellect sharpened to the finest possible point by education, a certain manliness and robustness of character, which is as conspicuous in the females as in the males, and an outspokenness and even brusqueness of manner which, did we not know the affectionate relationship which always subsisted between all the members, we might have expected to have led to ruptures between them. Owing to the great reputation which John Wesley has attained, and the vast numbers of those who revere him as their spiritual leader, the history of the Wesley family is tolerably familiar to most people, and it will therefore be sufficient in this article to touch briefly upon the leading events in the lives of those members of it who were writers of sacred poetry.

i. Samuel Wesley, M.A., the elder, was h in 1662 at Whitchurch in Dorsetshire, of which parish his father, John Wesley, was Vicar until the Act of Uniformity caused him to resign his living. He was educated at a Dis-senting academy by a Mr. Morton, and was designed for the Nonconformist Ministry. But having been, on account of his talents, selected as a champion to defend the dissenters against some severe invectives, and having commenced a course of controversial reading for this purpose, he was led by his studies to embrace the opposite views, and became, and continued through life, a pronounced churchman. With the impetuosity which was a family trait, he set forth on foot to Oxford, and entered him-self at Exeter College, In spite of his straitened means, he managed to keep his

He then received Holy Orders and took a curacy of £28 a year. Having held this curacy for a year, he obtained a naval chaplainey, and then took another cursey in London. About the year 1690 he married Susanna, daughter of Dr. Annesiey, a famous Nonconformist minister, and a scion of the noble house of Anglesey. The wife, like the husband, had been brought up as a dissenter, but at the early age of 13 she had come over to the Church of England, and was afterwards a Jacobite in politice. In 1693 Mr. Wesley was presented to the living of South Ormsby in Lincolnshire. He was also chaplain to the Marquis of Normenby, afterwords Duke of Buckingham. In 1697 he was appointed by the Crown to the Rectory of Epworth, and there he spent the remainder of his life, nearly forty years. The first part of his residence at Epworth was marked by a series of troubles arising partly from his pecuniary embarrassments, which increased with his increasing family, partly from the animosity of his parishioners, who resented the part which he felt it his duty to take, as a staunch churchman, in politics, and partly from unfortunate accidents. These troubles reached their climax in 1705, when he was thrown into Lincoln gaol for debt. They are graphically described by his own pen.

"I have been thrown behind," to writes to his good friends at Oxford, "by a series of misfortunes. My Parsonage Barn was blown down ers I had recovered the Taking my Living; My House great part of it burnt down about 2 years since. My Flax, great part of my Income now in my own Hands, I doubt wilfully fird and burnt in ye night, whilst I was hat in London. My Income sunk about one half by the tow price of Grain and my credit lost by the taking away my Regiment. I was brought to Lincoin Castle June 23rd last past. About 3 weeks since my very makind Reople, hinking they had not yet done enough, have in yenight stabbed my 3 cows, we were a great part of my poor Numerous Family's Subsistence,—For we's God forgive them."

Some points in this letter require explana-tion. When he speaks of being in London, he means on Convocation business; for he was elected Proctor for the Diocese, and in one of his absences Mrs. Wesley instituted those religious meetings at the Rectory which are thought by some to have been the pre-cursors of the Wesleyan Society Meetings, "His Regiment" was a Chaplaincy in the army which had been given him in reward for a poem in praise of the Duke of Marlborough. The last and worst of the many fires through which he suffered was in 1709, when the rectory was entirely burnt down, and the present house erected in its place, The latter part of his time at Epworth was more free from troubles. He met with many generous friends who enabled him to emerge from his pecuniary difficulties, the firmest and most constant of these friends being the admirable Archbishop of York, Dr. John Sharp; his sons grew up to be a comfort and a credit to him; his income was slightly increased by the addition of the neighbouring living of Wroot; and his parishioners gradually became more tractable. The annoyance caused by the famous Epworth Ghost can scarcely be reckoned among his serious troubles. In 1731 he met with an accident which probably hastened his end, and in 1785 he passed away and was buried in Epworth terms and take his degrees at the University. | churchyard, leaving behind him the character of an excellent parish priest, a good husband in the Duncind. But all that he wrote was in and father, and a man of very considerable the service of virtue and religion; to use the abilities and attainments.

Mr. Wesley was a somewhat voluminous writer. his first publication was a volume of poems bearing the impromising, not to say repulsive, ritle of Maggott. It appeared in 1885. In 1991 he became the clerical correspondent to the Attesians Garetic (afterwards Mercury) pub. by his brother-in-law, John Dunton. In 1893 appeared an Heroic Poem on the Life of Our Blessed Lord and Savdour Jenus Christ. This was dedicated to Queen Mary, and led to his appointment to the living of Epwarth. In 1895 be pub. Elegies on Queen Mary and Archbishop Tillotson; and in 1898 A Sermon prembed before the Saciety for the Reformation of Manners. The Elegies are rather fulsome and in bad tasts according to the standard of the present day; but is should be remembered that high-flown panegyrics were the fashiou of the age. The Sermon is a spirited and energetic defence of the "Societies," which were regarded with some suspicion by many high-churchnen, but of which Mr. Wesley, like his friend ktobert Nelson, was a warm striporter. In 1700 be published The Pions Communicant rightly prepared; or a Discourse concerning the Blessed Savanaent, de., With Prayers and Hymns twited to the steeral parts of that holy office. To which is added A short Discourse of Baptism. In this work appeared his version of the "Great Hallel" or "Pluchal Hymm." In 1704 he pub. The Bistory of the Old and New Tataments in Verse, in three volumes, which he dedicated to Queen Anne. This, Blue his Life of Christ, was Husstrated with numerous and coetty engravings. In 1705 be pub a poem of nearly 500 lines on the "Battle of Blenheim," entitled Mariborough, or The Pate of Europe. For this he was rewarded with the Chaplaincy of Colonel Lepell's regiment; but his political evenies at Epwarth soon aucceeded in getting him deprived of this office. In 1707 appeared A Reply to Mr. Palmer. Statication of the Learning, Loyalty, Morals, and most Christian Behaviour of the Dissenters towards the Church of England. This originated in the publication, without his consent or knowledge,

Thus Samuel Wesley had the honour of dedicating works to three Queens. There is yet one more poem attributed to Mr. Wesley, but it seems very doubtful whether he was the real, or at any rate, the sole author. It is entitled Eupolis' Hymn to the Creator, and is a sort of Christian Pindaric Ode of considerable length, written in the classical style affected in the 18th century. Dr. Adam Clarke tells us that the 118, is partly in the hand-writing of Mehetabel Wosley; and internal evidence certainly points to her as the chief author; for it bears traces of a far more delicate and elogant touch than Mr. Wesley ever showed that he possessed; while Mehetabel's other writings are fully equal, if not superior, to it. In fact, it must be confessed that the bulk of Mr. Wesley's poetical writings are tedious and presaic. He had the disadvantage of being over-praised at the outset, and of winning a reputation which he was unable to sustain. Nahum Tate, the Laureate, and others lauded his Heroic Foem in absurdly extravagant terms; Ralph Thoresby refers to him as "that noted poet Mr. Wesley, and Thomas Hearne alludes to him in similar terms. The reaction was sure to come, and his poetry began to be laughed at. Swift and Pope thought very slightly of it, and he appears to have narrowly escaped being pilloried in the Danciad. But all that he wrote was in the service of virtue and religion; to use the words of his relative, Thomas Fuller, * he "had drunk more of Jordan than of Helicon." Perhaps if he had written less, and spent more time in elaborating what he did write, he might have been more successful; but, after all, the "Divine afflatus" must have been wanting; and the best service which he rendered to sacred poetry was in being father of his children.

ii. Samuel Wesley, M.A., the younger, was the eldest child of Samuel and Susanna Wesley, and was born in or near London in 1691. He received his early education from his mother, who always took a special interest in him as her first-born. In 1704 he went to West-minster School, where he was elected King's Scholar in 1707. Westminster had, under the mastership of Dr. Busby for 55 years, attained the highest reputation for scholarship, and Samuel Wesley, as a classical scholar, was not unworthy of his school. In 1709, Dr. Spratt, Bishop of Rochester, patronised the young scholar, and frequently invited him to Bromley. In 1711 he went with a Westminster studentship to Christ Church, Oxford, and having taken his degree, returned to Westminster as an Usber. He then received Holy Orders and became an intimate friend of Bishop Atterbury, who was then Dean of Westminster. His intimacy with this prelate was a bar to his advancement, and he was bitterly disappointed at not being appointed under-master at Westminster when that post was vacant, But he was faithful to his friend in his adversity, and the banished preinte warmly appreciated his attachment. In 1782 he was invited, without solicitation, to accept the head-moster-ship of the Free School at Tiverton, and here he spent the remainder of his life. He strongly disapproved of John and Charles Wesley's proceedings; but though the brothers ex-pressed their opinions to one another with characteristic frankness, the disagreement did not cause any interruption in the friendly relations between them. Samuel Wesley was universally acknowledged to be an honest, conscientious and deeply religious man. Ho was a most uncompromising High Churchman both in the political and the theological sense of that term; and there is no doubt that he was the mainstay of the Wealey family at Epworth. His kindness to his father and mother was unbounded, and he acted like a father to his younger brothers and sisters. He also took a great interest in works of charity, and was one of the first promoters of the Westminster Infirmary. He died at Tiverton in the 49th year of his age, Nov. 6, 1739. His epitaph in Tiverton Churchyard does not exaggerate his merits, when it describes him as"a man for his uncommon wit and learning. For the benevolence of hie temper, and simplicity of manner, Deservedly loved and esteemed by all: An excellent Pracher; But whose best sermon Was the constant example of an edifying life: So continually and scalously employed in arts of beneficence and churity, That he truly followed His blessed Master's example in going about doing good; of such scruptions integrity, That he declined occasions of advancement in the world,

Samuel Wesley pub. in 1736 A Collection of Poens on several occasions, some of which are full of a rather coarse humour, but all of This a good moral and religious tendency. work was reprinted in 1743, and again by W. Nichols in 1862. Dr. Adam Clarke specifies eight hymns of S. Wesley's composition which were in use among the Methodists of that time (1823). The Wesleyan Hymn-book of the present day contains five, the best-known of which is "The Lord of Sabbath let us His other writings are scarcely of sufficient importance to claim a notice in this brief sketch.

iii. Jehn Wealey, M.A. The life of the next brother is, or easily might be, so familiar to every one in its every detail that it will suffice to give the barest outline of his career. John Wesley was b. at Epworth Rectory in 1703, and, like the rest of the family, received his early education from his mother. He narrowly escaped perishing in the fire which destroyed the rectory house in 1709, and his deliverance made a life-long impression upon him. In 1714 he was nominated on the foundation of Charterhouse by his father's patron, the Duke of Buckingham, and remained at that school until 1720, when he went up, with a scholarship, from Charterhouse to Christ Church, Oxford. Having taken his degree, he received Holy Orders from the Bishop of Oxford (Dr. Potter) in 1725. In 1726 he was elected Fellow of Lincoln College, and remained at Oxford until 1727, when he returned into Lincolnshire to assist his father as curate at Epworth and Wroot. In 1729 he was summoned back to Oxford by his firm friend, Dr. Morley, Rector of Lincoln, to assist in the College tuition. There he found already established the little band of "Oxford Methodists" who immediately placed themselves under his direction. In 1735 he went, as a Missionary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, to Georgia, where a new colony had been founded under the governorship of General Oglethorpe. On his voyage out he was deeply impressed with the piety and Christian courage of some German fellow-travellers, Moravians. During his short mi-nistry in Georgia he met with many dis-couragements, and returned home suddened and dissatisfied both with himself and his work; but in London he again fell in with the Moravians, especially with Peter Böhler: and one memorable night (May 24, 1738) he went to a meeting in Aldersgate Street, where some one was reading Luther's preface to the Epistle to the Romans. There, "About a quarter before nine, while he was describing the change which God works in the heart through faith in Christ, I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for salvation; and an assurance was given me, that He had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death." From that moment his future course was sealed; and for more than half a century he laboured, through evil report and good report, to spread what he believed to be the everlasting Gospel, travelling more miles, preaching | ceived a letter from a wealthy Irishman, ask-more sermons, publishing more books of a practical sort, and making more converts than any man of his day, or perhaps of any day, and dying at last, March 2, 1791, in harness,

In this sketch we are only concerned with one of the many phases of his infinitely varied life; but that, by no means the least impor-tant phase. The popular conception of the division of labour between the two brothers in the Revival, is that John was the preacher, and Charles the hymn-writer. But this is not strictly accurate. On the one hand Charles was also a great preacher, second only to his brother and George Whitefield in the effects which he produced. On the other hand, John by no means relegated to Charles the exclusive task of supplying the people with their hymns. When he speaks of the Evangeliatic work, his general expression is, "My brother and I;" and when he speaks of the hymns, it is still, "My brother and I." John Wesley was not the sort of man to depute any part of his work entirely to another; and this part was, in his opinion, one of vital importance. With that wonderful instinct for gauging the popular mind, which was one element in his success, he saw at once that hymns might be utilized, not only for raising the devotion, but also for instructing, and establishing the foith of his disciples. He intended the hymns to be not merely a constituent part of public worship. but also a kind of creed in verse. They were to be "a body of experimental and practical divinity." "In what other publication," ho saks in his Preface to the Wes. H. Bk., 1780 (Preface, Oct. 20, 1779), "have you so distinct and full an account of Scriptural Christianity; such a declaration of the heights and depths of religion, speculative and practical; so strong cautions against the most plausible errors, particularly those now most prevalent; and so clear directions for making your calling and election sure; for perfecting holiness in the fear of God?" The part which he actually took in writing the hymns, it is not easy to ascertain; but it is certain that more than thirty translations from the German, French and Sponish (chiefly from the German) were exclusively his; and there are some original hymns, admittedly his composition, which are not unworthy to stand by the side of his brother's. His translations from the German capecially have had a wide circulation. Although somewhat free as translations they embody the fire and energy of the originals. (For further information see the article on Rethodiet Hymaody.)

iv. Charles Wesley, M.A. But, after all, it was Charles Wesley who was the great hymnwriter of the Wealey family, -- perhaps, taking quantity and quality into consideration, the great byrnn-writer of all ages. Charles Wes-ley was the youngest son and 18th child of Samuel and Susanna Wesley, and was b. at Epworth Rectory, Der. 18, 1707. In 1716 he went to Westminster School, being provided with a home and board by his elder brother Samuel, then usher at the school, until 1721, when he was elected King's Scholar, and as such received his board and education free. While he was at Westminster, his father re-ing him if he had a son named Charles, and if so offering to adopt him and make him his heir. The acceptance of the offer was left to Charles himself, who declined it. In 1726 Charles Wesley was elected to a Westminster studentship at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degree in 1729, and became a college tutor. In the early part of the same year his religious impressions were much deepened, and he became one of the first band of "Oxford Methodists." In 1735 he went with his brother John to Georgia, as secretary to General Ogiethorpe, having before he set out received Descon's and Priest's Orders on two successive Sundays. His stay in Georgia was very short; he returned to England in 1736, and in 1737 came under the influence of Count Zinzendorf and the Moraviana, especially of that remarkable man who had so large a share in moulding John Wesley's career, Peter Böhler, and also of a Mr. Bray, a brazier in Little Britain. On Whitsunday, 1737, he "found rest to his soul," and in 1738 he became curate to his friend, Mr. Stonehouse, Vicar of Islington, but the opposition of the churchwardens was so great that the Vicar consented that he "should preach in his church no more." Henceforth his work was identified with that of his brother John, and he became an indefatigable itinerant and flekt preacher. On April 8, 1749, he married Miss Sarah Gwynne. His marringe, unlike that of his brother John, was a most happy one; his wife was accustomed to accompany him on his evangelistic journeys, which were as frequent as ever until the year 1756, when he ceased to itinerate, and mainly devoted himself to the care of the Societies in London and Bristol. Bristol was his head-quarters until 1771, when he removed with his family to London, and, besides attending to the Societies, devoted himself much, as he had done in his youth, to the spiritual care of prisoners in Newgate. He had long been troubled about the relations of Methodism to the Church of England, and strongly dis-approved of his brother John's "ordinations." Wesley-like, he expressed his disapproval in the most outspoken fashion, but, as in the case of Samuel at an earlier period, the differences between the brothers never led to a breach of friendship. He d. in London, March 29, 1788, and was buried in Marylebone churchyard. His brother John was deeply grieved because he would not consent to be interred in the buris. ground of the City Boad Chapel, where he had prepared a grave for himself, but Charles said, "I have lived, and I die, in the Communion of the Church of England, and I will be buried in the yard of my parish church." Eight elergy-men of the Church of England bore his pall. He had a large family, four of whom survived him; three sons, who all became distinguished in the musical world, and one daughter, who inherited some of her father's poetical genius. The widow and orphans were treated with the greatest kindress and generosity by John Wesley.

As a hymn-writer Charles Wesley was unique. He is said to have written no less than 6500 hymns, and though, of course, in so vast a number some are of unequal merit, it is perfectly marvellous how many there are which rise to the highest degree of excellence. His feelings on every occasion of importance, whether private or public, found their best expression in a hymn. His own conversion, his own marriage, the earthquake panic, the rumours of an invasion from France, the defeat of Prince Charles Edward at Culloden, the Gordon riots, every Festival of the Christian Church, every dectrine of the Christian Faith, striking scenes in Scripture history, striking scenes which came within his own view, the deaths of friends as they passed away, one by one, before him, all furnished occasions for the exercise of his divine gift. Nor must we forget his hymns for little children, a branch of escred poetry in which the mantle of Dr. Watts seems to have fallen upon him. It would be simply impossible within our space. to enumerate even those of the hymns which have become really classical. The saying that a really good hymn is as rare an appearance as that of a comet is falsified by the work of Charles Wesley; for hymns, which are really good in every respect, flowed from his pen in quick succession, and death alone stopped the course of the perennial stream.

v. Mehetabel Wosley. Here, strictly speaking, the list of hymn-writers in the Wesley family ends; but the sketches would scarcely be complete without some mention of one who, if she did not write hymns, showed plainly that she could have done so with a success which might have rivalled Charles's own. Mehetabel Wealey had an exquisite poetic genius, which was cultivated by a careful study of the best models—Latin and Greek, as well as English, for she was an accomplished scholar. all the Wesleys, except Samuel and Charles, she was most unfortunate in her marriage; her husband, Mr. Wright, a plumber and glazier, was quite incapable of appreciating her refined mind, and, being a man of no principle, sought relief from society in which he must have felt uncomfortable in low company and pursuits. The neglected Hetty was most unhappy, but her very unhappiness lent a pathetic tenderness to her poetry, which is one of its chief charms. As her name is unknown among hymn-writers, one or two extracts from her poetry seem necessary to justify the mention of her in this connection at all. What glorious hymns might have been written by the author of the following exquisite lines!

A Mother's Address to her Dying Infant.

"Tender softman! infant mild!
Perfect, parent, brightest child!
Perfect, parent, brightest child!
Transient mater! beauteous clay!
Smiling wonder of a day!
Ere the last convulsive start
Rends thy unreasting heart,
Ere the long enduring swoon
Weigh thy precious eyelfed down;
Ah regard a mother's moon,
Anguish deeper than thy own.
Fairest eyes, whose dawning light
Late with rapture blest my sight,
Ere your orbs extinguish'd b.
Bend their trembling beams on me!
Drooping sweetness! verdant flower!
Blooming, withering in an hour!
Ere thy gantle breast sustains
Latest, fleresst, mortal pains,
Hear a suppliant! let we be Partner in thy destiny!
That whene er the latel cloud
Must thy radiant temples shroud;
Must thy radiant temples shroud;

When deadly damps, impending now, Shall hover round thy deathed brow, Diffusive may their influence be, And with the blossom biast the tree!

And with the blossom biast the tree!"

It is a great temptation to go on quoting this exquisite writer. Her "Lines written when in deep anguish of spirit"; her "Epitaph on herself"; "The Resignation; a penitent heart hoping in God" (which really might be used as a hymn); her "Farewell to the world"; her "Address to a Husband"—all maintain the same high level. But it must be remembered that Mehetabel Wesley was a hymn-writer only "in posse," not "in esse," and can therefore only claim a passing notice.

The hymns by the Wesley family are naturally most extensively used in the Methodiat Societies throughout the world. Usually they are given in the hymn-books with little or no alteration. The American Methodist Episcopalian Hymns of 1849 is an exception. The texts in that collection are more mutifated than in all other Methodist hymn-books put together. A large number of the Wesley hymns are annotated under their respective first lines. (See Index of Authors and Translators.) The following lists will complete the number in C. U.:—

It must be noted that the Wesleyan authorities, in the revised edition of their Coll. of Hys. for the Use of the People called Methodists, 1875, decline to distinguish the hymns which appeared in the joint works of the two brothers. They say :-

"The letter W. Is affixed to those hymns which first appeared in publications for which the Wesleys were jointly responsible; in this case it cannot be determined with certainty to which of the two brothers a hymn should be ascribed." (Preface to the "Index to the Hymns.")

It has been the common practice, however for a hundred years or more to ascribe all translations from the German to John Wesley, as he only of the two brothers knew that language; and to assign to Charles Wesley all the original hymns except such as are traceable to John Wesley through his Journals and other works. In this Dictionary this course has been adopted throughout.

Two works remain to be noted: (1) Collection of Psalms and Hymns, Charles Town. Printed by Lewis Timothy, 1737; and (2) The Poetical Works of John and Charles Wesley: Reprinted from the Originals, with the last Poems of Charles Wesley not before Published.
Collected and Arranged by G. Osborn, D.D.
Lond.: Wesleyan-Methodist Conference Office,
1868-72. In 13 vols, The first of these works has been reprinted in facsimile from the only known copy now existing, together with a Preface by Dr. Osborn. Lond.: T.
Woolmer, 1882. The second contains facsimile reprints of the titles of the above Table of Titles; Introductions and notes by Dr. Osborn; the usual Index of first lines to vols. i.-viii.; and an Index to the first line of every verse (except the first in vols, i.-viii.), extending to 239 pages, the joint work of the Rev. Julius Brigg, then of Hawes, Yorkshire, and Mr. William Sugden, B.A., Head Master of the Wesleysn Normal Training Institution, Westminster. The accuracy and completeness of the latter Index merit the highest praise.

In addition to a large number of hymna from the above works which are annotated elsewhere in this Dictionary (see Index of Authors and Translators) the following are also in C. U. The sublines indicate altered texts of or centes from the hymns:-

The translations by John Wesley from the German are given in vols, i. ii, of the Poetical Works, and number 32. They can be easily identified and their history, together with the history of the originals, traced through the Index of Authors and Translators.

The foregoing list of original hymne, in addition to those by the Wesleys annotated clowhere, all of which are in O. U. at the present time, and most of which have formed an important part of Methodist hymnody for more than a hundred years, shows the enormous influence of the Wesleys on the English hymnody of the nineteenth century. West, Robert Athow, an editor and author, was b, in England in 1802. In 1843 he went to America, and was the official re-porter of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1844. He was also one of the committee appointed by that Conference to prepare a Standard edition of the Methodist Hymn Book. That collection appeared as Hymne for the Use of The Methodist Episoopal Church, in 1849. To it West con-tributed two hymns—(1) "Come, let us tune our lottiest song" (Praise of Jesus), and (2) "Now, Lord, fulfil Thy faithful word" (On behalf of Ministers). (Nutter's Hymn Studies, 1884, p. 82.) [J. J.]

Wetzel, Johann Caspar, s. of Johann Michael Wetzel, shoemaker at Meiningen, was b. at Meiningen, Feb. 22, 1691. He matriculated, at Easter, 1711, as a student of theology at the University of Jena, and after-wards went to Halle. After varied tutorial work, &c., he was appointed, in 1727, disconus at Römbild, where he eventually became archidiaconus. While returning from a visit to the Bad Liebenstein he was unable to procced further than Meiningen, where he d. Aug. 6, 1755 (Koch, v. 507, &c.).

Wetzel claims notice here as the best of the earlier German hymnelogists. His two most important works, in which he gives notices of more than 1100 hymneriters; are (1) Hymnepocographic, pub. at Hermitods, pt. i, 1719, ii. 1721, iii. 1724, iv. 1725; and (2) Analesta Hymnico, pub. let Goths, vol. i, pts. 1-3 in 1761, pts. 4-6 in 1752; vol. ii, pt. 1 in 1753, pts. 3-4 in 1751, pts. 4-6 in 1752; vol. ii, pt. 1 in 1753, pts. 3-4 in 1754, pts. 5, of in 1755. The style of these works is executable, but they contain much useful matter, and still rank as standard authorities.

Of Wetzel's original hymns, 62 in all, the most im-of Wetsel's original hymns, 62 lu all, the most important appeared as his Heiligs and dem Herra geneid mete Andackts-Frieckte, in 5 pts., each with 10 hymns, pub. at Caburg 1 i., ii. in 1713; iii., iv, in 1721; v. in 1722. One of these hymns has been tr., viz.:—

B. Schmolck, Tr. as "God cares for me; why need I sorrow," by Hies Manington, 1863, p. 20. [J. M.]

"When we cannot sleep at seasonable times, vain inusings and want of right meditating on God, is fre-quently chief cause of unrest. Therefore this meditation directed to the remedy of such untimely watchfulness,"

The hymn is included in Farr's reprint of the Hallelujah in 1857, and thence it passed, with slight alterations, into Kennedy, 1863, No. 845. [W. T. B.]

What are these in bright array? J. Montgomery. [All Saints.] Pub. in his Greenland and other Poems, 1819, p. 185, in 8 st. of 8 l., and headed "Saints in heaven." It was repeated in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, No. 204; in Montgomery's Christian Pealmist, 1825, No. 559; and in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 237. It is given in several collections in G. Britain and America, and some-times as, "Who are these in bright array?" In R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, it is rendered into Latin as "Quid sint cohortes lucidæ." [J. J.]

What care the saints of God, if they. G. Moultrie. [Confessors.] Pub. in his Hymns and Lyrics, 1867, p. 150, in 9 st. of 6 l., and headed "Hymn for Festival of Confessors." In an abbreviated form it is found in the 1869 Appendix to the S. P. C. K. Pe. & Hys.; Thring's Coll., 1882, and others. [J. J.]

What countless crowd on Zion stands. J. Anstice. [All Saints.] 1st pub. in his posthumous Hymns, 1836, p. 37, in 6 st. of 4 h., and again in The Child's Christian Year, 1841. In the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, st. i.-iii., vi., iv. are re-written (from 8.8.8.6.) [J. J.] in o. H.

What grace, O Lord, and beauty shone. Sir E. Denny. [The love of Jesus.] Appeared in his Sch. of Hys., 1839, No. 32, in 5 st. of 4 l.; and sgain in his Hys. and Poems, 1848, p. 71, and later editions. It has passed into most of the hymn-books of the Plymouth Brethren, and also into several [J. J.] other collections,

What is earth with all its treasures?

[Missions.] Appeared anonymously in W. Urwick's Coll. of Hys. adapted to Cong. Worship, Dublin, 1829, No. 843, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "The dark world enlightened by the Saviour's glory." In addition to an abbreviated form b ginning with st. i. there are also "Earth is but the land of shadowa" (st. ii.), and "O Thou Sun of glorious splendour" (st. iii.) in C. U.

What is the thing of highest [greatest] price? J. Montgomery. [The Soul.] Pub. in his Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 504, in 6 st. of 4 L.; and again in his Original Hymns, 1853. It is found in a few modern books in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

What is the world? a wildering mass. J. Montgomery. [Holy Scripture a Light.] In his Poetical Works, 1851, p. 304, Montgomery dates this hymn "1815"; but in his newspaper, the Sheffield Iris, of 1817, he printed it in 3 st. of 6 1, and dated it "February, 1817." Under these circumstances it is difficult to say which of these dates is correct. The hymn was repeated in Montgomery's Greenland and Other Poems, 1819, p. 187; his Christian Psolmist, 1825, No. 548; his Poetical Works, 1828, and his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 26. It is also found in Cotterill's Sch., 1819, and in several of the older and modern hymn-books. It is not, however, a good example of Montgomery's powers as a writer of hymns. [J. J.]

What liberty so glad and gay? J. Keble. [Forgiveness of Enemies.] Written Feb. 7, 1826, on the words "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him?" St. Matt. xviii. 21, and pub. in his Caristian Year, 1827, in 12 st. of 4 l. as the poem for the 22nd S. after Trinity. In Elliott's Ps. & Hys., 1835, st. x.-xii. were given as "Thou ransomed sinner, wouldst thou know!" This has been repeated in later collections, but is not in extensive use. [J. J.]

What! never speak one evil word? C. Wesley. [Holiness desired.] This cento is thus composed: St. I., ii. are from Wesley's Short Hyssus, 1762, vol. ii., No. 753, on James iii. 2; and st. iii., iv. from the same, vol. i., No. 854, on Ps. ciii. 8. In this form it appeared in the Wes. H. Bk., 1789, No. 353, and has been repeated in several collections. Original texts in P. Works, 1868-72, vols. xiii. and ix. [J. J.]

What shall we ask of God in prayer? J. Montgomery. [Prayer.] Written in 1818, and first printed on a broadsheet with Montgomery's "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire," Lord, teach us how to pray," and "Thou, God, art a consuming fire," for use in the Nonconformist Sunday schools in Sheffleld and the neighbourhood. It was included in Cotteril's Sci., 1819, No. 281, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed, "Ask and ye shall receive that your joy may be full." In Montgomery's Christian Psalmiet, 1825, No. 483, and in his Original Hymus, 1853, No. 64, it was given with the change, in st. tr., l. 1 of "with" to by, and in 8 st. of 4 l. It is usually given in an abbreviated form. In some American hymn-books a cento from this hymn is given in $2. Exther of all our mercies Thou." [J. J.]

What shall we render. E. Parson, née Rooker. [Praise.] 1st pub. in J. Curwen's Child's Own H. Bh., 1840; and subsequently in Mrs. Parson's Willing-Class Hymns. It was composed for the Air by Mozart, commonly known as "Life let us cherlsh," and is given in several collections.

[J. J.]

What sudden blaze of song. J. Keble. [Christmas.] Pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 11 st. of 6 l., as the poem for Christmas Day. In the American Chusch Pastorals. Boston, 1864, st. i., v., ix. are given in an altered form, but beginning with the same first line.

What the my frail eyelids refuse.

A. M. Toplady. [At Night.] Pub. in the Gospel Magazine, Dec. 1774, in 6 at. of 8 l., entitled "A. Chamber Hymn," and signed "Minimus." Also in Sedgwick's reprint of Toplady's Hymns, &c., 1860. It was given in its original form in several of the older hymnobobs, but in Collyer's Coll., 1812, it was divided into two parts, Pt. i. being composed of st. i.-iii., and Pt. ii., beginning, "Inspirer and Heurer of preyer," of st. iv.-vi. From that date the first part fell gradually out of use, whilst the second part rose to great popularity, and has been rendered into several languages. The tr. into Latin by R. Bingham in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, begins, "O Tu precum inspirator."

What various hindrances we meet. W. Couper. [Exhortation to Prayer.] Appeared in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. fi., No. 60, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Exhortation to Prayer." It has passed into numerous collections, and sometimes in an abbreviated form. Dr. Hatfield, in his Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, dates it 1772. By this he probably means the date of its composition. We cannot, however, find any authority for that date. In R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, 5 stanzas are rendered into Latinas "Si precibus solium Genitoris adire velimus."

Whate'er to Thee, our Lord, belongs. [Hely Baptism.] This is the first of 13 "Single Verses on Baptism" given in Rippon's Bap. Sel., 1787, Nos. 455-476. The authors of these stanzas are; st. i., iii.-v., B. Beddome; ii. xi., J. Stennett; vii.-ix., H. F.; x., H.; xii., G.; and vi. and xiii. anonymous, but possibly by Rippon. The object of this arrangement of these stanzas is thus stated by Rippon In a note:—

"As it is now pretty common to sing by the water side, and as some of our brethren in the country give out a versect way, while they are administering the ordinance, it is hoped these single verses will be acceptable."

In the American Bap. Hymn [and Tane] Bk., Philadelphia, 1871, st. iii., iv. and vi. are given as "Behold the grave where Jesus lay," The same arrangement with the addition of tt. vit. had previously appeared in the Baptist edition of the Sabbath H. Bk., 1858. [J. J.]

Original Hymns, 1833, No. 64, it was given with the change, in st. iv., l. 1 of "with" to trace. P. Doddridge. [Transfiguration.] by, and in 8 st. of 4 l. It is usually given in an abbreviated form. In some American hymn-books a cento from this hymn is given as "Father of all our mercies, Thou." [J. J.] Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 183, in 6 st. of 4 l.; and again, but with alterations, in J. D. Humphreys's edition of the same, 1839, No. 204. The original text is that in C. U. [J. J.]

When bending o'er [on] the brink of life. W. B. Collyer. [Death anticipated.] Pub. in his Coll., &c., 1812, No. 827, in 6 st. of 4 l. It is found in several modern hymnals, but usually in an abbreviated form. It presents death in its saddest form, and embodies a prayer for divine assistance. In several American collections, including the Mcth. Episc. Hymns, 1849; their new Meth. Hymnal, 1878; and others, it is rewritten in s. m. as, "When on the brink of death." [J. J.]

When blooming youth is snatched away. Anne Steele. [Death and Burial of a Young Person.] Ist pub. in her Poems on Subjects Chiefly Desotional, &c., 1760, vol. i. p. 106, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "At the Funeral of a Young Person." Also given in the 1780 ed. of the Poems, and in D. Sodgwick's reprint of her Hymns, &c., 1863, p. 66. The form of the text usually found in American hymn-books is "When those we love are snatched away." This was given in the Prayer Bk. Coll., 1826, in 5 st., and is found in later hymnals. Another arrangement in 3 st. is in use in G. Britain. It appeared in Bickersteth's Christian Psalmody, 1833, as "When youth or age is snatched away." The text in Common Praise, 1879, is in 5 st., the last of the original being omitted, and the rest somewhat altered.

When brothers part for manhood's race. J. Keble. [St. Andrew.] Written Jan. 27, 1822, and included in his Christian Year, 1827, in 11 st. of 4 l. Two centos from it are in C. U.; the first beginning with the opening stanza, and the second with st. vi., "First seek thy [the] Saviour out, and dwell." Their use is limited. [J. J.]

When came in flesh the Incarnate Word. J. Anstice. [Christmas.] Pub. in his postitumous Hymns, 1836, p. 17, in 6 st. of 4 1. It is given in Hys. for the Use of the University of Oxford in St. Mary's Church, 1872, and several other modern collections in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

When Christ His body up had borne. H. More. [Whitsuntide.] This is the opening line of a hymn in 14 st. of 4 l, entitled "An Hymn upon the Descent of the Holy Ghost at the Day of Pentecoet," which appeared in More's Divine Hymns appended to his Divine Dialogues, &c., Lond. 1668. This hymn was rewritten in 15 st. by J. Wesley, and included in the Wesley Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1739, beginning "When Christ had left his flock below." From this revision, st. vi.-xv., slightly altered, were given in the Wes. H. Bh., 1730, as, "Father, if justly still we claim" (No. 444); and "On all the earth Thy Spirit shower" (No. 445). These hymns have been repeated in many collections in G. Britain and America. Wesley's full revised text is in the P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 165. The first stanza of "Father, if justly still we claim" is by J. Wesley (1739). Dr. More's original text of the remaining stanzas of the two hymns is;—

WHEN GATHERING CLOUDS

- vi. "The Spirit of hoty Zeal and Love And of Differning give us, Lord; The Spirit of Power from above, Of Unity and good Accord;
- vii. "The Spirit of convincing Speach, Such as will every Confeience finite, And to the heart of each man reach, And sin and Errour put to Right:
- viil. " The Spirit of refining Fire. Searching the immoit of the mind, To purge all foul and fell desire. And kindle Life more pure and kindle.
 - ix. "The Spirit of Faith in this thy Day Of Power against the force of Sin, That through this Faith we ever may Against our Lusta the Comquests win.
 - r. " Pour down thy Spirit of inward Life, Which in our hearts thy laws may write, That without any pain or furife We naturally may doe what's right.
 - xi. " On all the Earth thy Spirit pour, In righteousness it to renew: That Satan's Kingdome 'i may o'repow'r, And to Cantar's Sceptre all februe.
 - xil. "Like mighty Winds of Torrent flerco Let it Withflanders all o'rerun, And every wicked law reverle, That Faith and Love may make all one.
- xill. "Let Peace and Joy in each place foring, And Righteoursers, the Spirits fruits, With Mecknels, Friendfur, and each thing That with the Christian fpicit fults.
- ziv. "Grant this, O holy God and true, Who th' ancient Prophets didt infpire: Hafte to perform thy Promife due, As all thy Servanta thes defire,"

A comparison of Wesley's version with this original shows most forcibly how a well conceived but indifferently executed composition may be turned to good account by an experienced hand. The rest of More's hynns, aix in all, are worthy of attention. [J. J.]

When Christ the Lord would [shall] come on earth. H. Alford. [St. John Baptist.] In the Author's Hys. for the Sundays and Festivals throughout the Year, 1836, this hymn was appointed for St. John Baptist's Day: but on its transference to his Ps. & Hys., 1844, it was given for the 3rd S. in Advent, No. vi., and marked in error as having been pub. in that collection for the first time. It is found in his Year of Praise, 1867, and Poetical Works, in the 8th ed. of which it is dated 1885. Orig. text, in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871. It is in somewhat extensive use, and sometimes in an altered form, as in the Murray's Hymnal, 1852, with the some first line, but much altered and with the addition of a new stanza. [J. J.]

When darkness long has veiled my mind. W. Covers. [Peace.] Ist pub. in R. Cover's Coll., 1772, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed "Trials overcome by Hope." When included in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 29, it was expanded into 6 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Peace after a Storm." In its full, or in an abbreviated form, it is found in several hymn-books in G. Britain and America, both old and new. Although not referred to, so far as we can find, in Cowper's Memoirs, it was evidently written at or about the same time as his "God moves in a mysterious way" (p. 438, 1.).

When gathering clouds around I view. Sir R. Grant. [In Trial and Temptation.] Appeared first in the Christian Observer, Feb. 1806, in 6 st. of 6 l., and signed "E. Y. D. R."; and again in the same magazine in Feb. 1812, accompanied with a letter explaining that it had been sent in an altered form, and signed as before. In 1835, Elliott included it in his Ps. and Hys., No. 342, with a note in the Preface to the effect that it had been revised by the Author for that Collection. It was also given in the Author's Sacred Poems (pub. by his brother) in 1839, p. 3, the text being that of 1812. Three texts of this hymn thus exist, and all by the author; (1) the first in the Christian Observer, 1806; (2) the second in the same, 1812, and in the Sacred Poems, 1939; (3) and the third in Elliott's Ps. and Hys., 1835. Of these the second text is that usually received as authorized, and is given as such in Lyra Britannica, 1867, and in Lord Selborne's Book of Praise, 1862. The hymn is based on Heb. iv. 15, "For we have not a High Priest," &c., and is often given in an abbreviated form. In R. Bingham's Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, 4 stauzas are rendered into Latin as: "Quum circumcirca glomerantia nubila cornam." [J. J.]

When God of old came down from heaven. J. Keble. [Whitsuntide.] 1st pub. in his Christian Year, 1827, in 11 st. of 4 l., as the poem for Whitsunday. In an abbrevisted form it is in extensive use. A cento therefrom is given in a few American hymnbooks as "Lo, when the Spirit of our God." In Bp. Wordsworth's (St. Andrews) Series Collecturum, dtc., 1890, sts. j., iii., iv., vi., vii., ix., and xi. are rendered into Latin on "Olim cum Dominus supera descendit ab arce." (J. J.)

When His lost sheep the Shepherd finds. [The Lost Sheep.] This appeared in the Uttoxeter Sel. of Ps. & Hys., 1805 (p. 1084, il.), and is also in Cotterill's Sel., 1819, and later hymnals, and is sometimes given (but in error) as an altered form of J. Needham's "When some kind shepherd from his fold " (p. 798, ii.).

When I can read my title clear.

I. Watts. [Assertance of Faith and Hope.]
Appeared in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs,
1707, in 4 st. of 4 l. It is headed "The Hopes of Heaven our Support under Trials on Earth." Its use in G. Britain and America is very extensive. The text has undergone several alterations at the hands of Bickersteth in his Ps. & Hys., 1883; Elliott in his Ps. & Hys., 1885, and others. The most important is Bickersteth's rendering of st. iv. :-

"There, enchor'd safe, my weary soul Shall find eternal rest, Nor storms shall beat, nor billows roll, Nor fears assall my breast."

It is hard to see that this is an improvement upon Watte's original :-

"There shall I hathe my weary soul In seas of beavenly rest, And not a wave of trouble roll Across my peaceful breast."

The original text of the whole hymn, as in the Hy. Comp., is that most commonly used. Miller (Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 140) points out that the opening lines of the hymn,-

"When I can read my title clear To manaions in the skies," are used by Cowper in his poem on Truth (pub. in 1782), in his comparison of the lot of Voltaire and that of the poor and believing cotteger, who

' Just knows, and knows no more, her Bible true A truth the brilliant Frenchman never know: And in that charter reads with sparking of Her title to a treasure in the skies."

When I can trust my all with God. J. Conder. [Resignation.] Written on the death of one of his children, Jan. 1818, and included in his Star in the East, &c., 1824, p. 113, in 5 st. of 6 L, headed "On the death of an Infant Son," and accompanied with the footnote "C. J. C. ob. Jan. 1818." In Conder's Cong. H. Bk., 1836, 3 st. were given as No. 311; and these were repeated in his posthumous Hys. of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856. This form of the hymn is that in C. U. in [J. J.] G. Britain and America.

When I resolved to watch my thoughts. Anne Steele. [Ps. xxxix.] Pub. in her Poems on Subjects chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. ii., p. 168, in 13 st. of 4 l.; in the 2nd ed. of the Poems, 1780; and in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1863, p. 171. It is not in C. U. in its original form; but from it the following are taken:

1. Almighty Maker of my four! frams. This cente, composed of st. iv.-vii. was given in Rippon's Bep. Sci., 1787, as a byrnn on "The Shortness of Life." It is found in many hymnals in G. Britain and America.

2. O God, to Whom my life I awe. This, in the Primitive Methodist Hymnal, 1837, is the above cente with the opening stance rewritten.

[J. J.]

When I survey life's varied scene. Anne Steele. [Resignation.] 1st pub. in her Poems on Eubjects chiefly Depotional, 1760, vol. i., p. 134, in 10 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Desiring Resignation and Thankfulness," It was repeated in the new ed. of her Poems, &c., 1780; and again in Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, 1869. As a whole it is not in C. U. From it, however, the following centos are found in modern hymn-books :-

1. When I survey life's varied some, in the Irish Church Hymnol, 1873, is composed of st. i., ii., viii. and Church Hyunal, 1873, is composed of st. i., il., viit. and ix., slightly attered.

2. Father, whate'er of earthly bliss. This was given in Toplady's Ps. 4 Hyr., 1776, No. 214, and thus came into use in the Church of England. From Toplady it passed into Rippon's Bap. Sci., 1787, and thence into modern Nonconformist collections. Its use is extensive. It is composed of st. viit., ix., slightly attered. A Latin rendering, "Quidquid optatum famulo precant," by the Rev. R. Bingham, was pub. in his Hymno. Cartet. Latina, 1871.

3. Lord, teach me to adore Thy hand. No. 178, in the Scottleb Pres. Hymnol. 1826, is composed of st. ii., viii. ix. and x. unalivered.

4. My God, whate'er of earthly bliss. In T. Darling's Hys. for the Ch. of England, 1887. It is composed of st. viii.-x., and a developy not in the original.

Taking these cembes together this hymn

Taking these centos together this hymn has a wider circulation than any other of Miss Steele's compositions.

When I survey the wondrous Cross. I. Watts. [Good Friday.] This, the most popular and widely used of Watts's hymns, appeared in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1707, and in the enlarged ed. 1709, as:—

" Crucifizion to the World, by the Cross of CHRIST.

"Oracyrane.

1. "When I survey the wond'rous Crofs
On which the Prince of Glory dy'd,
My richest gain I count but Lofe,
And pour Contempt on all my Pride.

2. " Forbid it, Lord, that I fhould boaft Save in the Beath of Carter my God; All the vain Things that charm me most, I factifice them to his Blood. See from his Head, his Hands, his Feet, Sorrow and Love flow mingled down!
 Did e'er fuch Love and Sorrow meet, Or Thorns compose to rich a Crown!

4. " [His dying Crimion, like a Robe, Spreads o'er his Body on the Tree; Then am I dead to all the Globe, And all the Globe is dead to me.]

5. " Were the whole Realm of Nature mine, That were a Prefent far too (mail; Love fo amazing, fo divine, Demands my Soul, my Life, my All."

The first to popularize the four-stanza form of the hymn (st. iv. being omitted) was G. Whitefield in the 1757 Suppl. to his Coll. of Hys. It came rapidly into general use. In common with most of the older hymns a few alterations have crept into the text, and in some instances have been received with favour by modern compilers. These include:

St. it. l. 2. "Save in the Cross." Madas, 1760.
St. itl. l. 2. "Love flow mingling." Salisbury, 1857.
St. iv. l. 2. "That were a tribute," Cotterill, 1819.
" "That were an offering." Stocotl., 1821.

The most extensive mutilations of the text were made by T. Cotterill in his Sel., 1819; E. Bickersteth in his Christian Psalmody, 1833; W. J. Hall in his Mitre II. Bk. 1836; J. Keble in the Salisbury H. Bk. 1857; and T. Darling in his Hys. for the Church of England, 1857. Although Mr. Darling's text was the only one condemned by Lord Selborne in his English Church Hymnody at the York Church Congress in 1866, the mutilations by others were equally bad, and would have justified him in saying of them all, as he did of Mr. Darling's text in particular:-

"Turns is just enough of Watts left here to remind one of Horace's saying, that you may know the remains of a post even when he is torn to piecea."

In the 1857 Appendix to Murray's Hymnal; in the Salisbury H. Bk. 1857; in H. A. & M. 1861 and 1875; in the Hymnary, 1872; and in one or two others a doxology has been added, but this practice has not been received with general favour. One of the most curious examples of a hymn turned upside down, and mutilated in addition, is Basil Woodd's version of this hymn beginning "Arise, my soul, with wonder see," in his undated Ps. of David, &c. (circa 1810), No. 198.

The four-stanza form of this hymn has been translated into numerous languages and dialects. The renderings into Latin include: "Quando admirandam Crucem," by R. Bingham in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871; and "Mirabilem videns Crucem," by H. M. Macgill in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life. 1876. The five-stanza form of the text as in H. A. & M. (st. v. being by the compilers) is tr. in Bp. Wordsworth's (St. Andrews) Series Collecterum, 1890, as "Cum miram intueor, de qua Prastantior omni." In popularity and use in all English speaking countries, in its original or in a slightly altered form, this hymn is one of the four which stand at the head of all hymns in the English language. The remaining three are, "Awake, my soul, and with the sun;" "Hark! the herald angels sing;" and "Rock of Ages, eleft for me." (See English Hymnody, Early, §§ XII. XIII., and the New Supplement.) [J. When Israel freed from Pharach's hand. I. Watts. [Ps. cxiv.] Written in lections the opening 1712, and sent by Watts, with a letter, to the His heavenly home.

Spectator, in which it appeared on "Tuesday, August 19, 1712," No. 461, in 6 st. of 4 l. as a rendering of Ps. oxiv. In the letter Watts explained the origin of his rendering, it being to show the force and wisdom of retaining the Name of God to the end of the paraphrase as in the Pealm, and not to introduce it at the beginning as had been previously done by others. The paraphrase was given in Watts's Ps. of David, 1719, with the alteration of st. ii. Il. 3, 4 from—

" The streams of Jordan saw, and fled With backward correct to their head,"

" Jordan beheld their march, and fled With backward current to his head."

The New Cong., 1859, and others give the xt of 1719. [J. J.] text of 1719.

When Israel, of the Lord beloved. Sir W. Scott. [Omnipresence.] This hymn This hymn appeared in Scott's Ivanhos, 1817, Chap. 40. It is thus introduced :-

"It was in the twilight of the day when her trial, if it could be called such, had taken place, that a low knock was heard at Rebecca's prison-chamber. It distribed not the inmate, who was then engaged in the evening prayer recommended by her religion, and which concluded with a hymn we have ventured thus to translate into English.

"When Israel, of the Lord beloved,
Out of the land of bondage came," to.

The hymn extended to 4 st. of 8 1. imaginary trial referred to was that of Rebecca the Jewess by a court of the Order of the Templars for sorcery, the charge being that she had bewitched one Brian de Bois-Guilbert, one of the Knights, into breaking several of the rules of the Order. When stripped of these romantic surroundings, it yet remains a striking hymn. It is based on Pa ev. It is found in several modern collections; and has been rendered into Latin by H. M. Macgill in his Songs of the Christian Creed and Life, 1876, as "Execute Israele Servitute de cru-deli." In the American Unitarian Hys. of the Spirit, pt. iii., is given as, "O present still, though still unsecu."

When Israel press'd by Pharach, stood. J. Montgomery. [Thanksgiving on being rescued from Drowning.] Pub in his Christian Padmist, 1825, No. 529, in 6 st. of 4 h., and headed, "For a Sermon before a Society for the Recovery of persons apparently Drowned," It was repeated in his Orig. Hys. 1853, p. 308. J, J,

When Jesus left His Father's throne. J. Montgomery. [Child's Hymn.] From a flyleaf preserved with the "M. MSS." we find this hymn was written for the Hallam Sunday School, near Sheffield, and is dated as having been used there on Oct. 26, 1816. In 1819 it was given in Cotterill's Sel., No. 258, in 5 at. of 4 l., and entitled "Children Praising Christ." In 1825 it was republished in a re-written and extended form of 8 st. in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, No. 597, with the new title, "Children recalling Christ's Example and His Love." This text and title were repeated in his Original Hymns, 1853, No. 326, the added stanzas being iii., iv., and v. In Cotterill's Set the opening line is "When Jesus left the throne of God." In some collections the opening line is "When Jesus left

When languor and disease invade. A. M. Toplady. [Affiction and Death.] In the Lady Huntingdon Coll. of Hys., 1780, there is as No. 288, "When languor and disease invade," in 8 st. of 4 L, and headed "Meditation on God's Love," and as No. 263 "Sweet to rejoice in lively hope," in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "Funeral," the two hymns thus making 14 st. of 4 l. These two hymns, with au additional stanza (x.), were given in the Gospel Magazine, Oct. 1796, as a single poem, with this note appended thereto :-

"This hymn was written for the late Countese of Huntingdon, at her request, when in illness, by the Rev. Mr. Toplady, and kindly given to the publisher as it originally stood, by the Right Hon. Lady Ann Erskine."

From the poem as thus printed we find that No. 288 above was composed of st. i.-vii. and xiv., and No. 269 of st. viii., ix., xi-xiii. and xv. Stanza x. was not used. The centos from this poem now in C. U. are:-

How blest to rest in lively hope (st. viii.). In Windle's Mct. Psalter and Hyl.
 Sweet to reflect how grace divine (st. iv.). In some American collection Sweet to rejoice in lively hope (st. viii.). In a few American collections.

'Tin sweet to rest in lively hope (st. viti.). In

6. "In sweet to test in lively hope (a. v.c.). In C. U., in G. Britath and America.

5. When languor and disease invade (at. t.). In extensive use in most English-speaking contaries.

The full text of the poem is in D. Sedgwick's reprint of Toplady's Hys. and Sucred Poems, 1880.

When like a stranger on our sphere. J. Montgomery. [Public Hospitals.] Of this hymn there are two texts, details of which are as follows:-(1) It was written for the opening of the Sheffleid Infirmary, October, 1797, and printed in Montgomery's Iris newspaper, Oct. 6, 1797. In 1819 it was included in Cotterill's Sel., No. 246, in 4 st. of 8 l., and entitled "At a Sermon for an Infirmary." In 1825 this text was repeated, with slight alterstions, in Montgomery's Christian Pauluist, No. 531, broken into 8 st. of 41, entitled "For a Public Hospital." (2) Amongst the M. MSS. there is a MS. of this hymn in 10 st., and thus dated: "Revised, June 2, 1844." It is this revised text which was given by Montgomery in his Original Hymne, 1859, No. 286, under the heading "Hymn for the Opening of the Sheffield Infirmary, October, 1797," and from which Dr. Kennedy, in his Hymso. Christ., 1863, and other modern editors have taken their text. The older hymn-books have the text as in Cotterill's Sci., whilst most of the modern collections follow that of [J. J.] the Original Hymns, 1853.

When marshall'd on the nightly plain. H. K. White. [The Star of Bethlehem.] Appeared in Collyer's Sel., 1812, No. 862, in 6 st. of 4 l., and headed "The Star of Bethlehem." It has much biographical interest, in that it gives a poetical version of the author's change of mind from a species of scepticism to the faith of Christ. The special personal interest is introduced with st. iii., "Once on the raging seas I rode." This also forms the beginning of a cento from this hymn given in one or two American hymn-

4 L, and headed "Christ's Agony and Crucifixion." In the American Unitarian Bk. of Hys. 1848, No. 144, it was given in a re-written form of 5 st. The alterations were made by S. Lougfellow, one of the editors. This text has passed into several hymn-books in G. Britain, as in Thring's Coll., 1882; with a doxology. Horder's Cong. Hys. 1884, &c.; and as "When my love to God grows weak," in Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873.

When on her Maker's bosom. $B_{\mathcal{P}_{\bullet}}$ R. Heber. [Epiphang.] Appeared in his posthumous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 33, in 6 st. of 4 l, and appointed for the 2nd S. after It is found in a few modern Epiphany. hymn-books only. [J, J,]

When on the glddy cliff I stand. T. Haweis. [The Sea in the hands of God.] Pub. in his Carmina Christo, 1792, in 6 st. of 4 L, and based on Jeremiah v. 22. It passed into Collyer's Coll., 1812; H. W. Beecher's Plymouth Coll., 1855; and a few bymnels in G. Britain of a later date. [J. J.]

When our heads are bowed with WOO. H. H. Milmon. [Litany in Lent. Burial.] Appeared in Bp. Heber's positivunous Hymns, &c., 1827, p. 114, in 6 st. of $ l., and the refrain, "Gracious Son of Mary, hear." It was appointed for the 16th S. after Trinity, and is based on the Gospel of that day, the raising of the widow's son at Nain, but deals only with the sad side of that event. Although it has become one of the most popular and widely used of Milman's hymns, yet it was not included by him in his Ps. and Hys., 1837, nor in any subsequent edition. In Biokersteth's Christian Pealmody, enlarged ed., 1841, No. 122, the hymn begins with st. v., "When the heart is sad within," and the text is re-arranged thus, at. v., vi., i., ii., iii., and a new stanza. This last stanza is repeated in Bp. Bickersteth's H. Comp., 1870. The refrain "Gracious Son of Mary, hear," has exercised the ingenuity of many editors of hymn-books. The following list of changes in that one line, although not complete, is yet sufficiently long to illustrate the difficulty of maintaining unity in these matters.

1. "Gracione Son of David, hear." Elliott. 1835.
2. "Jerus, Son of David, hear." Biokersteth. 1841.
3. "Son of Man, O Jesu, hear." English Hyl. 1853.
4. "Jesu, Son of Mary, hear." Merray's Hyl. 1862.
5. "Gracious Lord of Mercy, hear." I. Lowe's Hys.

1854, 6. "Jesu, born of Woman, hear," S. P. C. K. ed., 1803.

7. "Jeen, Man of Sorrows, hear." Afford. 1857.
8. "Jeen, Loving Saviour, bear." Windle. 1854.
8. "Gracious Saviour, hear." Soutich U.P. C. 1852.
10. "Gracious Son of David, hear." Horder. 1884.

The text of this hymn as in H. A. & M_{-1} 1861, has been tr. into Latin by the Rev. C. B. Pearson in Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M. 1867, as "Tristes, orbos lacrymantes." [J. J.]

When spring unlocks the flowers. Bp. R. Heber. [Spring.] 1st pub. in the Christian Observer, 1816, p. 27, in 4 st. of 8 l., headed "Spring," and signed "R." In Heber's books.

[J. J.]

When my love to Christ [God] grows cold [weak]. J. R. Wreford. [Passiontide.] Contributed to J. R. Beard's Unitarian Coll. of Hys. 1837, No. 140, in 6 st. of The text in C. U. is that of 1827. [J. J.]

When the Architect Almighty fashioned had the heaven and earth. Bp. C. Wordsnorth of Lincoln. [Consecration of a Church.] Appeared in his Holy Year, 1862, p. 221, in 10 double st. of 41, and headed "Consecration of Churches, or Laying the First Stone." In the 3rd ed. of the Holy Year it was repeated in two parts, Pt. ii. beginning "O'er the Font's baptismal waters may the Holy Spirit move." Usually this hymn is given in an abbreviated form, that adopted by the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, being the most popular. For its special purpose, for use at the Consecration of a Church, it is one of the finest hymns in C. U. [J. J.]

When the earth was full of darkness. J. M. Neale. [St. Margaret.] Written for the use of the Sisters of St. Margaret's, East Grinstead, as a hymn for St. Margaret's Day, at Lauds, probably for the Festival of July 20, 1865, and first printed in the Church Times, July 15, 1865, where it is signed "J. M. N." In 1866 it was included, with slight alterations, in Dr. Neele's Original Sequences, Hymns, and Other Ecclesiastical Verses. With further alterations and the omission of st. v. it was also given in the People's H., 1867, No. 263. [J. J.]

When the Lord of Hosts ascended. Bp. C. Wordscorth. [Whitsunday.] ist pub. in his Holy Year, 1862, p. 103, in 9 st. of 8 l. In the 3rd ed. of the Holy Year, 1863, it was given in two parts, Pt. ii. being "Not in fire from heaven descending," the text throughout being revised by the author. Three centos therefrom are in C. U.: (I) Opening with st. i.; (2) "Guide of sinners, go before us;" (8) "Holy Ghost, Divine Creator." [J. J.]

When the wild [dark] waves round us roll. Bp. W. W. How. [St. Peter.] Pub. in the enlarged ed. of Morrell and How's Ps. and Hys., 1864, in 6 st. of 4 l. In the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871, Thring's Coll., 1882, and others, it reads, "When the dark waves round us roll." It is a very popular hymn and is found in many collections. [J. J.]

When this passing world is done. R. M. McCheyne. [Debtor to Christ.] Printed in the Scottish Christian Herald, May 20, 1837; and repeated, in his Songs of Zion appended to his Momoir and Remains, 1844, in 9 st. of 6 l., and headed "I am Debtor." As a whole it is not in C. U.; but the following centos therefrom are in C. U.:--

When this pessing world is done. Various centes of unequal length, with this as the opening stanza are of unequal rengant and America.

3. When I stand before the threne. This cente, in Remedy, 1803, and others begins with st. iii.

3. Chosen not for good in ms. This cente is in extensive use. It begins with st. vi.

4. Oft I walk beneath the cloud. In use in G. Britain and America. It opens with st. vi.

When these centos are taken into account it is found that this is the best known and most widely used of the author's hymns. Original text in Lyra Brit., 1867. [J. J.]

When thy faith is sorely tried. J. Conder. [Divine Footprints] This hymn appeared in his posthumous Hys. of Praise, Prayer, &c., 1856, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed "Divine Footprints." The Idea is to devote a stanza to events which took place at "Jehovah-jireh," "Bethel," "Mahanaim," "Peniel," "Jehovah-nissi," &c. Each stanza is headed with the name of the place, and a reference to the passage in Holy Scripture which is dwelt upon by the writer. The cento, "God is in the loneliest spot," in the American Church Pastorals, 1864, is from this hymn. [J. J.]

When waves of trouble [sorrow] round me swell. Charlotte Elliott. [In Affliction.] This hymn, based upon St. Matt. xiv. 27, appeared in the 1834 Appendix to the Invalid's H. Bh., No. v., in 4 st. of 4 l. Sub-sequently it was given in the body of that collection; and is also found, unaltered, in Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872. [J. J.]

When, within sight of danger's hour. H. Alford. [St. Peter.] 1st pub. in his Ps. & Hys., 1844, No. 85, in 3 st. of 4 l., and appointed for St. Peter's Day. It was repeated in his Year of Praise, 1867, No. 257, and is also found in other collections. [J. J.]

When wounded sore the stricken soul. Ceou F. Alexander. [Passiontide.] Appeared in her Hys. Descriptive and Devotional, &c., 1858, No. 12, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Passion Week." It was repeated without alteration in her Legend of the Golden Prayers and Other Poems, 1859, p. 141, with the new heading "Touched with the feeling of our infirmities." It is found in many hymnbooks in G. Britain and America, and neually in an unaltered form.

Whence do our mournful thoughts arise P. I. Waits. [Consolation.] 1st pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1707, in 5 st. of 4 l., and based upon Is. xl. 27-30 (ed. 1709, Bk. i. No. 32). Another form of this hymn was given in the 1745 Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, No. 1vi., in 7 st. of 41. as "Why pour'st thou forth thine anxious plaint?" In the Drafts of 1751 and 1781 further alterations were introduced until it assumed the authorized form as in the Trs. and Paraphs. of 1781. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.) the alterations of 1781 are said to be by him. The designation of the hymn is I. Watts, 1707; Trs. & Paraphs., 1745; W. Cameron, 1781. In the American Prayer Book Coll., 1826, and several later hymnals it begins "Why mournest thou, my anxious soul?" Sometimes st. iv.-viii are found as a separate hymn, beginning, "Supreme in wisdom as in power," as in W. F. Stevenson's Hys. for the Church and Home, 1873. In one or two American Unitarian hymnals a cento therefrom is also given as "Mere human power shall fast decay." In Jane E. Leeson's Poraphrases and Hys., 1853, the 1781 text is rewritten in three parts as:—(1) "Thus saith the Holy One, to Whom"; (2) "O Jacob and O Israel"; (3) "God giveth power unto the faint."

Where God doth dwell, sure heaven is there. J. Mason. [Praise to, and Joy in God.] This cento in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, and Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, is compiled from Mason's Spiritual Songs, or Songs of Praise, 1683, thus:—st. i., ii. from Song 23, st. v.; st. iii.-v. from Song 24, st. i. ii.; st. v. from Song 27, st. iv., 11. 5-8 rewritten. The result is a pleasing hymn of Praise and Joy. [J. J.]

Where high the heavenly temple stands. M. Bruce, [The Divine Mediator.] This hymn, which we have sacribed to M. Bruce on evidence given in his Memoir in this work (p. 187. i.) was written probably about 1764-65, for a singing class in Kinnesswood, Scotland, and was first published by J. Logan in his Poeme, 1781, p. 117. No. 9, as his own. In the same year (1781) it was given, with slight alterations, in the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, No. 58, as a second rendering of "Heb. iv. 14 to the following:—

St. 1., 1. 4, "The Guardian," for "The Patron."
St. 11., 1. 1, "their mrety," for "in mercy stood; " 1. 3,
"his mighty plan," for "his plan of grace;" 1. 4,
"The Savieur and the friend of man," for "The Guardian God of Lunan race."

In the markings of the Trs. and Paraphs by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, il.), the text of 1781 is ascribed to J. Logan. The hymn is found in numerous collections in G. Britain and America, and is of great merit. The hymn "He, Who for men their Surety stood," in Kennedy, 1863, No. 953, is st. ii., iv.—vi., in a re-written form. [J. J.]

Where shall my wondering soul begin? C. Westey. [Praise for Pardon and Peace.] Written in May, 1788, together with the hymn, "And can it be that I should gain?" (p. 64, i.), on the occasion of the great spiritual change which the author then underwent. Minute details of the event are given in the author's Diary, May 21-23, 1738. Its biographical interests, together with that of "And can it be," &c., are not inconsiderable, showing as they do the struggles and triumphs of a sincere and cultured man. This hymn was 1st pub. in the Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1789, in 8 st. of 6 l., and again, with the omission of st. vi., in the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 29, from whence it has passed into other collections. Original text P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 91. Dr. Osborn's note on this hymn, vol. i. p. 91, is:—

"Probably the hymn written on his conversion by Charles Wesley. Compare his Journel, under date May 3, 1738: 'Least of all would he file enemy] have us tell what things God has done for our souls.... In His name, therefore, and through His strength, I will perform my yows unto the Lord, of not hiding His rightsousness within my heart, if it should ever please Him to plant it there' (vol. i. p. 34). The same hymn was probably sung unxt day, when his brother John was able to declare, 'I believe' (lb. p. 35)."

Further extracts from the Journal are given in G. J. Stevenson's Meth. H. Bk. Notes, 1883, p. 40, together with other comments which are worthy of attention, but are too lengthy to transcribe.

[J. J.]

Where'er have trod Thy sacred feet. [Lent.] In the "Notes and Illustrations" to Church Hys., 1881, Mr. Ellerton says of this hynn, "It is hynn 205 in the enlarged edition of Morrell & How's Psalms and Hynna, 1861. Bishop How found it in a small hymnal compiled for All Saints' Church, Blackheath, where it is attributed to 'Neala.' But it is not in any publication of Dr. Neale's."

Beyond this we have no information, and the hymn must remain "Anon." [J. J.]

Where'er the Patriarch pitch'd his tent. J. Montgomery. [Abraham, the Father of the Faithful.] Written "Jan. 5, 1854" [M. MSS.], and pub. in Leichild's Original Hymns, 1843, No. 25, in 6 st. of 41; and again in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, No. 38. It is given in a few modern hymnbooks only.

Wherefore so heavy, O my soul? E. Casvall. [Resignation.] Pub. in his Masque of Mary, &c., 1858, p. 226, and again in his Hys. and Poems, 1873, p. 255, in 4 st. of 4 l., and entitled "Resignation." In some hymn-books it is given as, "O why so heavy, O my soul?" Its use is limited. [J. J.]

Wherefore, we sinners mindful of the love. W. Bright. [Holy Communion.] This hymn was pub. in The Monthly Packet for October 1873, in 6 st. of 6 l. without signature, and entitled "The Eucharistic Presentation." In the following year Canon Bright included it in his Hymns and Poems, 2nd ed., 1874. From thence st. iii.-vi. passed as, "And now, O Father, mindful of the love," into the revised ed. of H. A. & M. in 1875. Full original text as above. [W. T. B.]

Wherewith, O God, shall I draw near? C. Wesley. [Lent.] 1st pub. in the Hys. & Sacred Poems, 1739, p. 88, in 13 st. of 4 l., and based on Micah vi. 6, &c. (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 276). It is given in centos in the hymn-books as follows:—

 Wherewith, O God, shall I draw user! In the Wes. H. Rk., 1789, No. 123, and several modern collections. It is composed of 18 stanza, st. iv., vii. and zi. being omitted.

2. Wherewith, C Lord, shall I draw near? In A. M. Toplady's Pt. d. Rys., 1776, No. 47, and later hymnbooks in the Church of England. It embodies at. 1-iii., viil.-xiii, slightly altered.

will...xiii, slightly altered.

3. Jesus, the Lamb of God, hath bled. In several modern collections. It begins with st. x.; but the choice of stanzas varies.

4. See, where before the throne He stands. Usually composed of et. xii., xiii.

[J. J.]

Which of the [mighty] petty kings of earth? C. Wesley. [Guardian Angels.] Given from the Wesley MSS. in Dr. Leifchild's Original Hys., 1842, and again in the Wesley P. Works, 1868-72, vol. xiii., in 6 st. of 81. It is based on Heb, i. 14. A cente therefrom is sometimes found beginning with st. iii., "Angels, where'er we go, attend." [J. J.]

While carnal men, with all their might. B. Beddome. [Zeal and Diligence.] This hymn appeared in Rippon's Baptist Sel., 1787, in two parts as follows: Pt. i. consisted 6 8 st. of 4 l.: Pt. ii., beginning "If duty calls and suffering too," in 7 st. of 4 l. From Pt. ii. the hymn "Alike in happiness and woe," in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, is taken, the stanzas having been re-written throughout. In Beddome's posthumous Hymns, &c., 1817, portions of the hymn as in Rippon are given as Nos. 161 and 216.

While conscious sinners tremble. W. Jowett. [The Judgment.] This is in Verses written on Various Occasions for Friends. London, 1843. Printed for Private Distribution, p. 4, in 2 st. of 4 l. In a note to four hymns, of which this is the last, reads:—

"The four preceding hymns were written (by William Jowett) at the request of the late Dr. Jowett, to accompany some selections made by his dear and intimate friend, the Rev. C. J. Latrobe, from compositions of Michael Haydn."

This hymn has appeared in a few collections, as Kemble's Ps. & Hys., 1853, and others. The Verses, &c., 1843, also include "Thoughts suggested by the Collects." [J. J.]

While for Thy saints who poured abroact. Bp. R. Mant. [Thanksgiving for the Church Reformers.] Appeared in his Apoeter Ilymne, &c., 1837, p. 138, in 4 st. of 8 l., and headed "Hymn of Thanksgiving for the Church's Reformers" (ed. 1871, p. 233). In Common Praise, 1879, No. 364, "Lord, in Thy truth Thy church delights," is a cent from this hymn. [J. J.]

While health and youth and strength remain. [Early Piety.] This hymn appeared with three others including "Praise the Lord, ye heav'ns adore Him," on a supplementary sheet appended to the musical ed. of the Foundling Coll., 1796, and to the book of words issued in 1801. In the 1809 ed. of that Coll. it was included in the body of the work, and thence passed, in 1810, into J. Kempthorne's Ps. & Hys., No. exeviii, in 4 st of 4 l., and somewhat considerably altered. Although still retained in the Foundling Coll., it has almost altogether fallen out of common use. On the authority of D. Sedgwick this hymn is usually ascribed to J. Kempthorne, but there is no evidence whatever in his favour. Its ascription is Anon. Foundling Coll., 1796.

While in sweet communion feeding. Sir E. Densy. [Holy Communion.] Ist public his Sci. of Hys., 1839, No. 292, in 2 st. of 81. It was repeated in his Hys. and Poems, 1848, and 1870, and has also passed into several collections in G. Britain and America, including Snepp's Songs of G. & G., 1872; Hattield's Church H. Bk., N. Y., 1872, and others. [J. J.]

While justice waves her vengeful hand. Anne Steele. [National Humiliation.] This hymn was written for the National Fast of Feb. 11, 1757, and pub. in her Poems on Subjects Chiefly Devotional, 1760, vol. i. p. 250, in 9 st. of 4 l., and leaded "National Judgments deprecated. On the Fast. Feb. 11, 1757." It was also given in D. Sedgwick's ed. of her Hymns, &c., 1863, p. 116. This hymn is usually given in an abbreviated form as in the American Presby. Sel. of Hymns, Philadelphia, 1861.

While midnight shades the earth o'erspread. C. Wesley. [Midnight.] Pub. in the Hys. and Socred Poems, 1739, p. 35, in 6 st. of 6 l. (P. Works, 1863-72, vol. i. p. 49), and entitled "A Hymn for Midnight." In the P. Works, Dr. Osborn adds this note on the title:—

"In some editions this title was changed to 'A Midnight Hymn for one under the Law." Westey saw how this phrase had been misapprehended; and in a copy of the 6th edition now before me, it is corrected with his own hand to 'A. Midnight Hymn for one convinced of Sin."

The hymn was written about 1787, and sets forth the unsettled state of his mind at that time. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, No. 148,

J. Wesley gave it with the omission of sts. I., ii., and a few verbal changes. T. Jackson in his Memoirs of C. Wesley (small ed. 1848, p. 51)

says:—
"On the 18th December, 1736, be [Wesley] says, 'I began my twenty-seventh year in a murmaring, discontented spirit; reading over and over the third of Job. While in this state of mind, he wrote the 'Hymn for Mkinight,' which is strikingly descriptive of his defective creed and gloomy feelings. He had no hope of permanent happiness, but by the dissolution of his arthly frame. [St. i. and iii, quoted: then he proceeds.] To this fine composition his brother afterwards gave an evengelical character [in the Wes. H. Bk. as above] by substituting the word 'faith' for 'death' in the line 'Since death alone confirms me His ']. Thus altered, it no longer appears as the desponding language of a Christian, expecting to be made free from sin and its attendant misery only by the body's dissolution; but as the prayer of a weeping pentitent, who is convinced of his guilt and corruption, and is looking for a present deliverance from them through faith in the blood of the atonement."

The Wes. H. Bk. form of the hymn begins with st iii., "Fain would I leave the world below," and is that which is in C. U. in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

While my Jesus I'm possessing. [Good Friday.] This hymn appeared in The Kendal H. Ek., edited by J. Allen (p. 50, 1.), 1757, No. 54, in 6 st. of 81. In its original form it less almost entirely passed out of C. U. From this hymn 24 lines were re-written by W. Shirley, and included in the 1770 ed. of the Countess of Huntingdon's Coll. of Hymns, as:—" Sweet the moments rich in blessing," in 3 st. of 81. The original lines are:—

St. il. "O how happy are the moments
Which I here in transport spend!
Life deriving from His torments
Who remains the sinner's Friend.
Here I'll sit, for ever viewing
How the blood flows from each vein;
Every stream, my soul bedewing
Mortifies the carnel fiame.

St. Iil. "Really blessed is the portion Destined me by sovereign grace;
Still to view divine compaction
In the Saviour's bruised face.
"Its my fixed resolution,
Jasus Christ, my Lord, to love;
At His feet to fix my station,
Nor from thence a hair's breadth move.

St. iv. "Filled with sinner-like contrition,
With my tears His feet I'll baths;
Happy in the sweet fruition
Of my Saviour's painful death.

St. v. "May I still enjoy this feeling, In all need to Jesus go; Prove His wounds each day more healing, And from hence salvation draw."

These lines were manipulated by W. Shirley into the following hymn:—

"Sweet the moments, rich in bleasing Which before the Cross I spend: Life, and health, and peace possessing From the super's dying Friend. Here I'll alt for ever viewing Merey's streams in streams of blood; Precious drops my soul belowing Plead and claim my peace with God.

"Truly blessed is this station
Low before the Crous to its;
While I see driven compassion
Floating in His languid spe;
Here it is I find my hausen,
While upon the Lamb I gate;
Low I much? I've much forgiven,
I'm a swiracle of grace.

"Love and grief my heart dividing, With my tears His feet I'll bathe; Constant still in faith abiding, Life deriving from His death, May I will enjoy this feeling, In all need to Jesus go: Prove His wounds each day more healing, And Hisardy more depthy know!"

In Cooke and Denton's Church Hymnal, 1853, No. 72, Shirley's st. i. and ii., Il. 1-4 were given, with slight alteration, and the following lines were added to complete the hymn in 3 st. of 8 l.:-

"Lord, in ceaseless contemplation
Fix our bearts and eyes on Thos,
Till we taste Thy whole salvation,
And unveil'd Thy glories see.  For Thy sorrows we adore Thee,
For the griefs that wrought our peace;
Gracious Baviour I we implore Thee,
In our hearts Thy love increase.
Unto Thee, the world's Salvation, Eather Solvie unto Thue Father, Spirit, unto Thee, Low we bow in adoration, Ever-blassed One and Three."

This text, with one or two slight alterations, was repeated in the Hymnary, 1872. The alterations and additions in 1853, and the changes in 1872, were by Canon William Cooke and Mr. Webb. In H. A. & M., 1861, Canon Cooke's arrangement, reduced to 4 st. of 4 l., was given as No. 95, st. i.-ili. being from Shirley, and st. iv. part of the additions by Canon Cooke as above. This text was repeated, with slight changes and the addition of st. iii., ll. 1-4, from Shirley as above, in the Hy. Comp., 1870; in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymne, 1871; Thring's Coll., 1882, and many others. Other errangements from Shirley's text are in C. U. in G. Britain and America, and can be tested by Shirley as above. The H. A. & M. text has been rendered into Latin by the Rev. R. Thornton, D.D., in Gittley and Thornton's Fasciculus, 1866, and L. C. Biggs's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, as "Sauve tempus et serenum;" and by Hodges in his The County Palatine, &c., 1876, as " For beatse dulces hore;" and the Hy. Comp. text, with the omission of st. iii., by the Rev. R. Bingham in his Hypno. Christ. Latina, 1871, as, "O quam dulce at beatum." Both these forms have also been rendered into other languages. The full original text by J. Allen of "While my Jesus I'm possessing," is in Lyra Britannica, 1867. [J. J.]

While saints and angels, glorious King. J. Montgomery. [Charitable Objects.] Pub in Dr. Sutton's Ps. d. Hys., Sung at the Parish Church, Sheffield, 2nd ed., enlarged, 1816, No. 102, in 6 st. of 4 l. It was repeated in Cotterill's Sci., 1819, No. 255; in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, No. 540, and in his Original Hymne, 1858, No. 345. In the last two works it is headed "For the Children in a Charity School." It was probably written to be sung at an anniversary of one of the Sheffield Charity Schools Sometimes it begins with st. iv. as "Father Thy heavenly gitts afford." [J. J.]

While shepherds watched their flocks by night. N. Tate. [Christmas.] Appeared in the Supplement to the New Version (p. 801, i.), in 1702, in 6 st. of 4 l., and in all later editions of the same. In full, or in an abbreviated form, it is found in most hymn-books in English-speaking countries. Original text in the Hy. Comp. In addition to the original, two additional versions are in

While humble Shepherds watched their facks, This was given in the 1745 Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, the opening stanss reading:—

" While humble Shepherds watch'd their Flocks in Bethleh'ms Plains by Night, An Angel sent from Heav'n appear'd and fill'd the Plains with Light."

The alterations were confined to this stanta. On its adoption in the revised Braft of 1761, and again in the apthorized issue of the Trs. and Parapht., 1761, the concluding lines of the last stanza read:—

"Good-will is shown by Reav'n to man, and never more shall cases."

This arrangement of the text has been in C. U. for more than 100 years.

2. On Judah's plains as Shepherds kept. This is found in one or two American collections only.

The original has been to into several languages. Those in Latin include; (1) "Pastorum in pecudes noctu vigilante caterva," by Lord Lyttelton, 1866; and (2) "Noctivagos, acclinis humo, pastoria pubes," by C. S. Calverley, both in L. C. Bigga's annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867; (3) "Oves dum custodientes," by R. Bingham, in his Hymno-Christ. Latina, 1871; and (4) "Pro grego Pastores vigilabant nocte silenti," by Bp Wordsworth (St. Andrews) in his Series Collectarum, dc., 1890.

While with ceaseless course the sun. J. Newton. [New Year.] Pub. in his Twenty Six Letters on Religious Subjects, do., by Omicron, 1774, in 3 st. of 8 l., and headed, "For the New Year." It was repeated in R. Conyer's Ps. & Hys. the same year, and again to the Olney Hymne, 1779, Bk. ii., No. 1. It is in extensive use in G. Britain and America. In some collections st. ii., iii. are given as, "As the winged arrow flies," but this is not so popular as the full text. [J. J.]

White, Henry Kirke, remarkable both for the early development of his genius and for the untimely termination of his brief life of splendid promise, was b. at Nottingham, March 21, 1785. His father was a butcher, but his mother must have been a superior woman, since for a number of years she successfully conducted a boarding-school for girls. The writing-master in her establishment was for some time Henry's teacher, and under his instruction he made remarkable progress in Latin and other subjects. At the age of 13 he composed the lines "To an early Primrose," which were subsequently printed with his poems. At 14 he left school, and was put to the stocking-frame in order to learn practically the business of a hosier; but, disliking the employment, he was removed to an attorncy's office in Nottingham, with a view to the legal profession. All his spare time was now devoted to literary pursuits, the acquisition of languages, and the composition of poetical and other contributions for the periodicals of the day. At the age of 15 he obtained from the Monthly Preceptor a silver medal for a translation from Horace, and a pair of globes for the best description of an imaginary tour from London to Edinburgh. When only 17 he was encouraged to publish his Clifton Grove and other Poems, which were certainly excellent as the compositions of a mere boy. About this time he was inclined to acepticism, but through the perusal of Scott's Force of Truth and the arguments and appeals of a young triend, R. W. Almond (afterwards Rector of St. Peter's, Nottingham), he was led to earnest faith in Christianity. His wellknown hymn "When marshall'd on the nightly plain" is understood to be a figura-tive description of his spiritual experience at this period. He now desired to become a Christian minister, and through the generosity of his employers he was released from his articles in 1804. With the help of the Rev. C. Simeon and other friends, he became a student of St. John's College, Cambridge. There he speedily distinguished himself, and the highest honours seemed within his grasp; but over application to study destroyed his health, and he fell ill and d. Oct. 19, 1806, in the 22nd year of his age. Universal regret was expressed at his untimely end. Southey published his Remains, accompanied by a short memoir. Lord Byron composed some beautiful lines on the sad event. Josiah Conder and others wrote commemorative verses. The entire literary young manhood of England and America second moved with sympathy. A monumental tablet, with a medallion by Chantrey, was creeted in All Suints Church, Cambridge, at the expense of a citizen of Boston, in the United States. Ten hymns are ascribed to H. K. White, which were printed by the Rev. Dr. W. B. Collyer in his Suppl. to Dr. Watte's Psalme & Hymns Lond. 1812. Of these four of the most popular are annotated as follows: "Awake, sweet harp of Judah, wake," p. 103, ii.; "Christians, brethren, ere we part," p. 221, ii.; "Much in aorrow, oft in woe," p. 773, ii.; "When marshalled on the nightly plain," p. 1371, i. These are all in extensive use. The rest, all in C. U. at the present time, are:-

1. O Lord, another day has flown. Evening. From this the hymn "O let Thy grace perform its part" is taken.

2. O Lord, my God, in mercy turn. Penitence and

5. Through sorrow's night and danger's path. The Reservention. Sometimes given as "When sorrow's path and danger's road."

6. What is this passing scene? Homan Frailty. This hymn consists of selected stanzas from his "Ode on Disappointment."

Whitfield, Frederick, B.A., S. of H. Whitfield, was b. at Threapwood, Shropshire, Jan. 7, 1829, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his B.A. in 1859. On taking Holy Orders, he was successively curate of Otley, vicar of Kirby-Bavensworth, senior ourate of Greenwich, and Vicar of St. John's, Bexley. In 1875 he was preferred to St. Mary's, Hastings. Mr. Whitfield's works in prose and verse number upwards of thirty, including Spiritual unfolding from the Word of Life; Voices from the Valley Testifying of Jesus; The Word Unveiled; Gleanings from Scripture, &c. Several of his hymns appeared in his Sacred Poems and Prose, 1861, 2nd Series, 1864; The Casket, and Quiet Hours in the Sanctuary. The hymn by which he is most widely known is "I need Thee, precious Jesu" (p. $57, 1). Other hymns by him in C. U. include :-

1. I have a Great High Priest above. Christ the High

Prist,

2. I saw the Cross of Jesus. The Cross.

3. In spirit. Lord, we meet Thee now. Missions.
This was written at the request of the Committee of the Irish Church Missions for one of their annual meetings in London.

6. There is a day I long to see. Heaven Anticipated.
7. There is a Name I love to hear. The Name of Joses. Pub. In 1855 in hymn-sheets and leaflets in various languages. From this the hymn "Jesus, the Name I love so well" is taken.

8. There's naught on earth to rest upon, God Unchangeable.

9. When dead in sin and far from God. Redemption.

All these hymns, with the exception of No. 3, are in his Sacred Poems and Prose. 1861, and several of them have been printed as leaflets, and set to special music. The Sucred Poeme, &c., contains 26 hymne, some of which are of considerable merit. [J. J.]

Whiting, John Bradford, M.A., s. of the Rev. James Whiting, M.A., Chaplain under the Hon. E. I. C., was b. at Campore, India, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge, where he held a Scholarship and an Exhibition, and graduated B.A. 1850, and M.A. 1853. On taking Holy Orders he became Curate of Saffron Walden, 1851: Vicar of Bloomfield, 1861; and Vicar of St. Luke's, Ramsgate, 1875. He was also Chaplain to Bp. Wigram (Rochester), 1864-67, and Commissary to the Bishop of Niger, 1881. His Hymna for the Catholic Church was pub. in 1882. It contains 510 hymns, a few of which are new, but none are of his composing. (See England, Hymnody, Church of.)

Whiting, Mary Bradford, was b. at Bloomfield, Essex. She is daughter of the Rev. J. B. Whiting, Vicar of St. Luke's, Ramsgate. To her father's Hys. for the Church Catholic, 1882, she contributed:-

1. Come ye yourselves apart and rest awhile. The way is weary, &c. Holy Communion.
2. O Sun of truth and glory. Morning.
3. O wond of love! O word of life, Roly Scripture.

Whitmore, Lady Lucy E. G. [Btaffordshire Hyma-becks, § v.]

Whittier, John Greenleaf, the American Quaker poet, was b. et Haverbill, Massa-chusetts, Dec. 17, 1807. He began life as a farm-boy and shoomaker, and subsequently became a successful journalist, editor and poet. In 1828 he became editor of the American Manufacturer (Boston), in 1830 of the New England Review, and in 1836 (on becoming Secretary to the American Anti-Slavery Society) of the Pennsylvania Freeman. He was also for some time, beginning with 1847, the corresponding editor of the National Era. In 1840 he removed to Amesbury, Massachusetts, where most of his later works have been written. At the present time [1890] he lives alternately at Amesbury and Boston. His first poetical piece was printed in the Newburyport Free Press in 1824. Since then his publications have been numerous, including :-

Voices of Freedom, 1883: Songs of Labour, and other Poens, 1850; Ballada and other Poens, Lond., 1844: The Pasarama, and other Poens, 1865; In War Time, 1883; Occasional Poens, 1865; Ivetical Works, 1869; Complete Poetical Works, 1866; The Bay of the Seven Islands, and other Poems, 1893, &c.

Notwithstanding this extensive use of por-tions of Mr. Whittier's poems as hymns for congregational use, he modestly says concerncongregational use, he motiestly says concern-ing himself: "I am really not a hymn-writer, for the good reason that I know nothing of music. Only a very few of my pieces were written for singing. A good hymn is the best use to which poetry can be devoted, but I do not claim that I have succeeded in composing one." (Author's ME.) We must add, howevez, that these pieces are characterized by rich poetic beauty, sweet tenderness, and deep sympathy with human kind. (See also Index of Authors and Translators.) [J. J.]

He was for some time Rector of St. Mark's, Orange, New Jersey; then of St. Luke's, New York; and afterwards Professor | of Ecclesiastical History in the General Seminary, N. Y., 1835. In 1840 he was couserated Bishop of Maryland, and d. in 1879. For talent, learning, and character, Bishop Whittingham is allowed to be one of the great American Bishops, if not the greatest, His contributions to hymnology were Specimens of a Church Hymnal, Baltimore, Dec. 1865, and two tra from the German, which appeared in Hys. for Church and Home, 1859. (See Index [F. M. B.] of Authors and Translators.)

Who are these that come from far? T. Kelly. [Triumphs of the Gospel.] This hymn in Hatfield's Church Hymns, N. Y., 1872, and others, is composed of st. iii., iv. (rearranged) v., vi. of Kelly's "Hark! what sounds salute our ears," which appeared in the 1806 ed. of his Hymns, in 6 st. of 4 l. (ed. 1853, No. 6).

Who but Thou, Almighty Spirit? Resions.] This hymn appeared in The [Missions.] This bymn appeared in The Evangelical Magasine, 1821, in 5 st. of 6 l., and signed Eriphus. It was repeated in Nettleton's American Village Hymns, 1825, and subsequently in numerous collections in that country and elsewhere, as in Hatfield's Church H. Bh., N. Y., 1872; Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, årc.

Who can resist the Almighty arm?

J. Logan [God Omnipotent.] Pub. in the Scottish Translations and Paraph., 1781, as a paraphrase of Job xxvi. 6, &c., in 9 st. of 4 l. It is rarely found outside of the Trs. and Paraphs. We have ascribed it to J. Logan on evidence given under Bruce, M., p. 188, ii.

Who is this so weak and helpless? Bp. W. W. How. [Life and Death of Jesus.] This very beautiful hymn in the form of question and answer, on the Life and Death of our Blessed Lord, was pub. in the 1867 Supplement to Morrell and How's Ps. & Hys., in 4 st. of 81. It was revised by Bp. How for the S. P. C. K. Church Hymne, 1871. It is found in a large number of modern hymnals. [J. J.]

Who says, the wan autumnal sun? J. Keble. [Burial. The Widow at Nain.] Dated Sep. 27, 1822, and pub. in the 4th ed. of the Christian Year, 1828, in 13 et. of 5 l., and based upon St. Luke vii. 13, 14, "And when the Lord saw her, He had compassion on her," &c. In R. T. Lowe's Hys. for Christian Seasons, Gainsburgh, 1854, st. iv.-vi., ix. and x., were given as "Who says the widow's heart must break?" In Kennedy, 1863, No. 1328, there is another hymn from this poem and beginning with the same opening line. It is composed of st. iv.-viii. Each of these arrangements forms a good hymn, [J. J.]

Why dost thou beat so quick, my heart. F. W. Faber. [Prayer.] Pub. in his Jesus and Mary, &c., 1849, in 12 st. of 4 b. and headed, "Sweetness in Prayer." It was also given in his Hymns, 1862. In Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1873, the cento, "Thy home is with the humble, Lord," is composed of st. viii., ix., and xii. Sometimes it is given as "Thy home is with the humble soul." [J. J.]

Why march ye forth with hymn and chant? J. M. Neale. [Burial—and Burial at Sea.] This appeared in his posthumous Origiand Sequences, Hymns, and other Ecclesiastical Verses, 1866, p. 75, in 4 st. of 9 l., and headed, "At a Funeral." The hymn for Burial at Sea, "We give his body to the surge," No. 516, in the Hymnary, 1872, is based thereupon. It is one of a very limited number of hymns adapted to that occasion. [J. J.]

Why should I fear the darkest hour? J. Newton. [Jesus All and in All.] Printed in the Gospel Magazine, Jone, 1771 in 8 st. of 8 l., headed "In uno Jesu omnie," and signed "Omieron." It was included in the Olmey Hymns, 1779, Bk. iii., No. 46, with the heading "Jesus my All." It has passed into a large number of hymn-books both old and new. It is usually abbreviated. [J. J.]

Why should I sorrow more? [Confidence in the Promises.] This hymn in Spurgeon's O. O. H. Bk., 1866, is W. Williams's hymn "My God, my Life, my All," rewritten for that collection by Mr. Spurgeon. Williams's original appeared in bis Gloria in Excelsie, or Hys. of Praise to God and the Lamb, Carmarthen, 1772, No. 67, in 4 st. of 81. [J. J.]

Why should our tears in sorrow flow? [Death of a Minister.] Appeared in the Missionary Minstel, Lond., 1826. It was by "O. P.," the anonymous compiler of that collection of missionary hymns. It was reprinted in Pratia's Ps. & Hys., 1829, No. 569, in 6 st. of 41. From that collection it passed into many hymn-books, especially in America, and is in somewhat extensive use. [W. T. B.]

Why should the children of a [the] King. I. Watta. [Assurance through Faith.] Pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs. 1709. Bk. i., No. 144, in 4 st. of 4 l., and headed. "The Witnessing and Scaling Spirit." It was adopted by G. Whitefield in his Coll. of Hys., &c., 1753; A. M. Toplady in his Ps. & Hys., 1776, and others amongst the elder compilers. It is also widely used in G. Briannd America. [J. J.]

Why will ye lavish out your years. P. Doddridge. [Care of the Soul.] In the D. ms. this hymn is undated, but is placed between two hymns which are dated respectively Oct. 29, 1735, and November 16, 1735. It was pub in Job Orton's poethumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 206, in 5 st. of 4 L, and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 229. It is given in most American hymn-books as "Why will ye waste in trifling cares?" [J. J.]

Whytehead, Thomas, M.A., s. of H. R. Whytehead, Rectorof Crayke, and Prebendary of Lincoln, was h. at Thormanby, Nov. 30, 1815. He was educated at Beverley Grammar School, and St. John's College, Cambridge. He was Bell University Scholar; he also won the Chancellor's medal for English Verse twice; the Hulsean prize of 1885; and other distinctions. He was also twenty-second senior optime in the Mathematical Tripos, and second in the first class in the Classical Tripos; B.A. in 1837, and Foundation Fellow of his college the same year. In 1838 he was classical lecturer at Clare College, but left the University for the Cursey of Freshwater, Isle of Wight on taking Holy Orders in 1839.

In 1841 he was appointed Chaplain to Dr. Selwyn, Bishop elect of New Zealand, and sailed for that country in 1842. He was appointed the first Principal of the Collego which the Bishop established in New Zealand; but owing to the rupture of a blood vessel shortly after landing in New South Wales, he never took any duty in New Zealand. The little time and strength which remained to him he spent in correcting the Maori translation of the Bible and Prayer Book. The ond came, however, only too soon, and he d. at Waimate, N. Zealand, March 19, 1849. The esteem in which he was held is emphasised by the fact that "When the new chapel of his college [St. John's Cambridge] was erected and the vaulted roof was enriched with a series of figures, bantifully executed, according to the several successive centuries of the Christian era, the five which received the distinguished bosour of being selected to represent the nineteenth bosour of being selected to represent the nineteenth bosour of being selected to represent the nineteenth bosour of being selected to represent the distinguished bosour of being selected to represent the distinguished bosour of being selected to represent the distinguished bosour of being selected. The college were Henry Mattyn, William Wilberforce, William Wordsworth, James Wood, and Thomas Whytehead."—(Mission Life, July 1873, p. 390.)

Whytehead's Poems were pub. by Rivingtons in 1842, and his College Life, posthumously in 1845. In the former there are seven "Hymns towards a Holy Week." Of these "Last of creation's days" (Sixth day) and the widely known "Sabbath of the saints of cid" (q.v.). Five days before he died he wrote to a friend!—

friend:—
"I took up the translation of the Evening Hymu (four verses for service) into Maori rhyming verse, the first of the kind of the same metre and rhythm as the English. Two hundred and fifty copies have been printed, and sung in church and school by the natives, and several of them came and sang under my window. They call it the 'new bymn of the sick minister.' Bishop Ken's lines ['Glory to Thee, my God, this night'] it is very hard for one to compress within the same bounds in a rude language. However it is done, and people seem pleased with ft; and it is a comfort to think one has introduced Bishop Ken's beautiful hymn into the Maori's evening worship, and left them this legacy when I could do no more for them."

A life so shout and hay could have had no

A life so short and hely could have had no more beautiful ending. [J. J.]

Wie ein Vogel lieblich singet. [Morning.] This hymn, which Miss Winkworth appropriately entitles "A Morning Song of Gladnoss," is included as No. 207 in the Geistreiche Pealmen und Gesänge, Marburg, 1722, in 6 st. of 8 l. It had previously appeared in the ed. of 1690 [Marburg University Library]. In J. Köbner's Christliche, Harfentöne, Hamburg, 1840, p. 239, st. i., iv., vi. are given, marked as "from the year 1580"; and this text is in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1850, No. 2265 (1865, No. 2823). We have failed to trace the hymn carlier than 1630. The tr. in C. U. is:—

As a bird in measlows fair. A good ir. from Knagp, by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 2nd Ser., 1668, p. 73; repeated in Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881, p. 85; repeated in Mrs. Brock's Children's H. Bk., 1881, p. 87; Fagland, 1863, No. 161, Miss Winkworth rewrote it to the original metro, and there it begins, "As a bird at dawning singeth."

Wie soll ich dich empfangen? P. Gerhardt. [Advent.] 1st pub. in the Crager-Runge G. B., 1653, No. 77, in 10 st. of 8 l., reprinted in Wackernagel's ed. of Gerhardt's Geistl. Lieder, No. 3, Bachmann's ed., No. 22, and the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 21. It is founded on St. Matt. xxi. 1-9, the Gospel for the first S. in Advent. The allusions in st. vi.-ix. in Advent. would suggest that it was written during the Thirty Years' War. It is one of Gerhardt's finest productions, and is probably the best German Advent hymn. Tr. as:-

1. How shall I meet my Saviour. In full, by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psalmodia Germanica, 1722, p. 8 (1782, p. 3, slightly altered). Included in the Moravian H. Bk., 1754, and repeated, altered, in later eds. (1886, No. 33). Varying centos under the original first line, but from the Moravian text, are found in Montgomery's Christian Psalmist, 1825, Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864, Latrobe's Ps. & Hys., 1841, and Bp. Ryle's Coll., 1860. Other forms are (see also No. 5):-

Wigner, John Murch, second a of J. T. Wigner (see below), was b. at Lynn, June 19, 1844. He was educated at the Grammar School of Lynn, and afterwards graduated

J. M. Wigner now resides near London, and has been for many years in the India Home Civil Service. He is connected with his father's church, and has done much to promote the spiritual welfare of the young. He is the author of several hymns, three of which are in the Baptist Ps. and Hys. for School and Home, 1882:—

1. "Come to the Saviour now!" Invitation. 2. "Lost one! wandering on in sadness," Return to God.

3. "Lo, a loving Friend is waiting." The Call of The first of these is in the Bap. Ps. and Hye., 1880, and is:dated 1871. [W. R. S.]

Wigner, John Thomas, was b. at Harwich, in or about the year 1815. When a youth he removed to Burnham, in Essex, where he became a member of a Baptist church. In 1836 he entered Stepney College as a student for the ministry, and in 1840 became pastor at Lynn, in Norfolk. From Lynn he removed in 1866 to Brockley, near London, where very shortly a new chapel was built for him, in which he continues to minister. Mr. Wigner was one of the committee which brought out, in 1858, the wellknown Baptist Hymn-book Ps. & Hys. He was the editor of the Supplement to that book, which appeared in 1880, and was also editor which appeared in 1000, and was more than of the Baptist Ps. and Hys. for School and Home, 1882. In these books two of his hymns were included: (1) "Hark! 'tis the song of heaven" (The Angels' Song at the Birth of Christ), and (2) "O Lord, revive Thy work" (Prayer for a Revival). A third, which appears in the above-named School H. Bk. is an adaptation by Mr. Wigner of a well-known bymn by Mrs. Reed, "O do not let the word depart" (Expostulation with the Awakened). [W. R. S.]

Wilhelm (II. or IV.), Duke of Sachse-Weimar, a of Duke Johann of Sachse-Weimar, was b in the castle of Altenburg, April 11, 1598. He studied for some time at the University of Jena, devoting himself especially to music and mathematics. On the outbreak of the Thirty Years' War he espoused the cause of Friedrich v. of the Palatinate. At the battle of the Weisse Berg, mear Prague (see p. 165, 1.), he was severely wounded, and at the bettle fought near Stadtlohn, in Westphalia (Aug., 1623), he was at first left for dead, and then taken prisoner by Tilly. In 1625 the Emperor allowed him to go free, and he assumed the government of Weimar. When Gustavus Adelphus came to Germany (1630), Wilhelm did not join him till after the battle of Breitenfeld (Sept., 1631), and in July, 1635, he was one of the consenting parties to the Peace of Prague, between Saxony and the Emperor, in consequence of which the Swedish troops made various inroads on his territory. When the final partition took place, in 1644, between himself and his surviving brother (Sachse-Weimar fell to Wilholm, and Gotha to Ernst) he set himself earnestly to restore prosperity and godliness in the regions under his rule. He also found more time (especially after the peace of Westphalia, 1648), to devote to his studies in poetry and music, and B.A. and B.SC. in the London University. Mr. to the adornment of Weimar. He d. at Weimar, May 17, 1662 (Koch, iii. 110; Wetzel, iii. 426; Bode, p. 172, &c.).

Wilhelm joined, in 1817, in founding the Fruitbearing Society, the grant German Literary and Patriotic Union of the 17th cent.; and, after the death (1850) of Ludwig, Prince of Athalt-Cotten, became its need. Weimar thus became the centre of its operations, in the direction of which the Duke was assisted by Georg Neumark (p. 796, i.). Neumark, in his Palmones, 1680, p. 449, speaks of the Duke as having "composed several hymna, as well-known in this place, especially the short Hymn of Peace "Gott der Friede hat gegeben."

Besides this hymn on Peace only one other is known as Wilhelm's, viz. :-

Herr Jesu Christ, dich zu uns wend. Public Worship. This was included as No. 124 in the 2nd ed., 1651, of pt. i. of the Cantionale Sacrum, Gotha (1st ed. 1646), in 4 st. of 4 L, entitled "To be sung before the Sermon." As no author's name is there given, and as it did not appear in any of the three parts of the original ed. of 1646-48, the Duke's authorship is deci-dedly doubtful. So far as yet traced the Duke's name was not attached to it until in the Altdorf Lieder frend of 1676 (Fischer's Supplement, p. 71). In J. Niedling's Handbitchlein, 4th ed., 1655, p. 746, it appears without author's name (Niedling, be it observed, was living at Altenburg), and entitled "A heartfelt petition of pions Christians for grace and the help of the Holy Spirit, during Divine Service, before the Ser-mon." Koch says it was in the 1st ed., 1638, of Niedling, but this appears to be merely a guess, for the earliest ed. of Niedling which he describes at iii., 109, is that of 1655; and if it were in Niedling's 1638 ed., this circumstance would make the Duke's authorship still more unlikely. Whosver the author was the hymn soon became justly popular, and in 1678 was formally directed to be sung in all the churches in Sazony on all Sundays and festivals. It is a sample and forcible hymn, which survived the Rationalistic period, and is found in all recent German hymn books, e.g. in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 356. Tr. as:-

I. Lord Christ, reveal Thy hely Pace. In full by J. C. Jacobi, in his Psal. Ger., 1722, p. 42 (1782, p. 69). Repeated as No. 322 in pt. i. of the Moravian H. Bk., 1754 (1886, No. 724), and as No. 54 in J. F. Thrupp's Ps. & Hys., 1853.

2. Lord Jesu, to our peayer attend. This is a good and full fr. by A. T. Russell, as No. 12 in his Ps. & Hys., 1851,

3. Lord Jesus Christ, be present now! This is a good and full fr. by Mies Winkworth, as No. 13 in her C. B. for England, 1863; repeated in the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bk., 1868, No. 49,

4. Christ Jesus Lord, to us attend. In full by L. Heyl, as No. 3 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, Other tre. are:-

(1) "Lord Jesus, turn to us, and down," by Dr. G. Walker, 1888, p. 48. (2) "Lord Jesus Christ, in mercy bend," by Miss Manington, 1863, p. 19. (3) "Lord Jesus Christ, now towards us bend," by N. L. Frothing-kam, 1870, p. 221. [J. M.]

Willard, Emms C. [sée Hart] teacher and educational writer, b. at Berlin, Connecticut, 1787; resided in 1838 and sometime after at Hartford, and for many years conducted a well-known school at Troy, New York. She d. at Troy, 1870. Her hymn-

Rocked in the craftle of the deep (Suller's Hymn), is constimes said to have been pub. in 1830. It is found in Beecher's Figuroush Coll., 1855, No. 1286. Its earlier appearance has not been verified. It is a successful salar's hymn. It is included in several modern collections.

Williams, David, a contemporary of William Williams (1717-1791) and author of numerous Welsh hymns. He also wrote English hymns, some of which were pub. in a small tract of 24 pp., entitled, Joy in the Tents of Zion, or a Few Gospel Hymna, Brecknock, 1779. These hymna are rough, and in the style of W. Williams. There is a wild Welsh beauty about them which makes itself felt under the restraints of a gloomy Calvinism and a half foreign language. The original [W. T. B.] tract is very rare.

Williams, David, of Bethesda'r Fro, was a minister with the Independents in South Wales. He was b. at a farm-house, called Trehedyn, near Cowbridge, Glamorganshire. In 1812 he published a collection of hymns, which he called Llais y Durtur, or The Voice of the Turtle Dove. In 1824 he published a new edition under the title of Dyfroedd Bethesda, containing 148 hymns and 10 songs. Many of his hymns are still used by all denominations in Wales. [W. G. T.]

Williams, Edward, or Iole Merganug, the greatest Welsh scholar of his time, published two vols. of hymns under the title Saiman yr Eglwys yn yr Anialwch, "The Pealms of the Church in the Wilderness." He is the chief author of the Myvyrian Archaeology of Wales. His hymns were chiefly used by the Unitarians. [W. G. T.]

Williams, Helen Maria, daughter of Charles Williams, an officer in the Army, was b. in the North of England in 1762. Through the influence of Dr. A. Kippis (p. 625, L) whose help she sought in London, her first poem, Educin and Eltruda, a legendary tale, was pub. in 1782. This was followed by An Ods on the Peace, 1783, and Porn, a Poem. These were all included in her Poems, 2 vols., 1786, 2nd ed. 1791. Being connected by her sister's marriage with a French Protestant family, she resided in Paris during the period of the Revolution and the reign of Terror. There she became well known as a political writer of strong republican sympa-thies, but her too independent expressions of opinion led to her temporary imprisonment by Bobespierre. Her Letters from France, 1790, were pub. in England and America, and in a French translation, in France. She also pub. French translation, in France. She also not. Letters containing a Sketch of the Politics of France from the 31st May, 1793, till the 28th of July, 1794, 2 vols., 1795, and other works of a like kind; some additional Poems, and a tr. of Humboldt's Personal Narratives of his Travels, 1815. The closing years of her life were spent at Amsterdam, in the house of her nephew. Athanase Coquerel, a pastor of the Reformed Church there. Miss Williams d. in 1827. From her Poess, 1786, the following hymns have come into C. Ú.:-

1. Hy food, all asture owns Thy away. Nature speaks of God. In Martineau's Hymns, 1840.

3. While Thee I seek, protesting Power. Safety in God. This hymn was in Dr. Priestley's Eirmingham Coll., 1790; in Kippie's Coll., 1795; the Exeter Coll., 1891; and atmost every other Unitarian collection to the present time. In the New Cong. H. Bl., 1839; it begins "While Thee I seek, Almighty Power;" and in several collections a cento beginning "Father, in all our [my] comforts here," is given as in Stowell's Pt. & Hys., 1831 and 1877, and several others.

[V. D. D.]

Williams, Isaac, B.D., was b. at Cwmcynfelin in Cardiganshire, Dec. 12, 1802, where his mother happened to be staying at her father's house at the time of his birth. But his parents' house was in Bloomsbury, London, his father being a Chancery barrister at Lincoln's Inn. He received his early education from a clerzyman named Polehampton. with whom he was at first a day pupil in London, but whom he afterwards accompanied to a curacy at Worplesdon, near Guildford. All Mr. Polehampton's pupils (15), with the exception of Isaac Williams and his two older brothers, were being prepared for Eton, where great stress was laid upon Latin versification; and it was in these early years that Isaac Williams acquired his fondness for, and proficiency in, this species of composition. In 1814 he was removed to Harrow, where Mr. Drury was his private tutor. He gained several school prizes, and became so used, not only to write, but to think, in Latin, that when he had to write an English theme he was obliged to translate his ideas, which were in Latin, into English. In 1821 he procoeded to Trinity College, Oxford, that college being chosen on the advice of Mr. Drury; and in his second term he was elected scholar of Trinity. In 1823 he won the University Prize for Latin Verse, the subject being Ars Geologica. The gaining of this prize was indirectly the turning point of his life, for it brought him into close relationship with John Keble, who may be termed his spiritual father. He had been previously introduced to Mr. Keblo by the Vicar of Aberystwith, Mr. Richards, whom he had mot at his grandfather's house. But there was no intimacy between them until he had won the Latin Verse Prize, when Mr. Keble came to his rooms and offered to look over the poem with him before it was recited and printed. This led to an intimate acquaintance which ripened into a warm friendship of infinite benefit to Isaac Williams's spiritual life. Mr. Keble offered to take him with him into the country and read with him during the Long Vacation, without any payment. Robert Wilberforce, then an undergraduate of Oriel, was also to be of the party. They settled at Southrop, near Fairford, a name familiar to the readers of Keble's Life. Here Issac Williams made the acquaintance of Kurrell Froude, who was also reading with Mr. Keble, and this acquaintance also ripened into a friendship which was terminated only by death. Kebla was like a boy with his pupils, entering with zest into all their amusements, but he also exercised a deep influence over their religious characters, especially that of Isaac Williams. Williams spent this and all his subsequent Long Vacations at Southrop, and became more and more influenced for good by Mr. Keble. He also became a great friend of Sir George Prevost, then an undergraduate of Oriel, who afterwards married his only sister. During one of these sojourns at Southrop, Keble showed Williams and Fronde a Ms. copy of the Christian Year, but, strange to say, the young men did not appreciate its beautics. Williams's intimacy with Keble caused alarm to Mr. Hughes, the successor of the Vicar of Aberystwith who had first brought the two together; Mr. Hughes was greatly shocked to hear that he was a friend of Mr. Keble of Oriel, and mid he would introduce him to a most excellent and promising person there, a Mr. Newman, whom the evangelical vicar knew in connexion with the Church Missionary Society, and who would, he doubtless thought, supply an antidote to Keble's High Church opinions. While Williams was an undergraduate at Oxford, though he was a member of Trinity College, he spent much of his time at Oriel, attracted thither, not only because it was Keble's college, but also because he had many friends there, the chief of whom were the Wilber-forces, Ryder, Anderson (now Sir C. Anderson), Hurrell Fronde, and Sir G. Prevost. As an accomplished echolar who had the benefit of Keble's tuition, it was naturally expected that he would take a high degree; and so, no doubt, he would have done, had he not attempted too much. In spite of the warnings of friends, he resolved to aim at a "double first," and, as mathematical studies were not to his taste, the labour over this uncongenial work in addition to the necessary preparation for the classical school was too severe for him; his health broke down, and he was obliged to be content with a pass In 1829 he was ordained to the degree. curacy of Windrush, about twelve miles from Fairford where Keble then lived, and about twenty from Bisley, where his brother in-law, Sir George Prevest, who was now married, was curate. But he did not stay long at Windrush. Passman though he was, he competed successfully for a Trinity Followship, and had to return to Oxford the same year as college tutor. He lived on terms of great intimacy with Hurrell Fronde, then Fellow of Oriel, and was introduced by him to J. H. Newman, to whom he was much attracted, like almost all who were brought into contact with that remarkable man. The attraction appears to have been mutual, and Williams became Newman's curate at S. Mary's, Oxford, which then included the village or rather hamlet of Littlemore. In 1842 he married Caroline, the third daughter of Arthur Champernown, of Dartington Hall, Devon, left Oxford, and went to Bisley as curate to Mr. T. Keble. So far as his outer life went, little more need be said. Nothing seems to have occurred to ruffle its placid course, except one episode which occurred in 1841-2. When John Keble resigned the Poetry Professorship at Oxford, he was naturally auxious that his friend Williams should be his successor. Not only was there a warm personal friendship and an entire sympathy of opinion on the most important of all matters between the two men, but on the score of poetical merit, Williams seemed to him obviously the proper person. He had already published several of his poetical works, and his reputation as a sacred poet was second only to that of Keble himself. But he was also identified in a peculiar way with the Tract writers. He had actually written that Tract which, next to the memorable Tract 90, had given the greatest offence of all, viz.: Tract 80, on Reserve in the Communication of Religious Knowledge, and he was also known as the especial friend and late coadjutor of Nowman. It is not, therefore, surprising that vehement opposition was raised against his election. A rival candidate was found in the person of Mr. Edward Garbett, of Brasenose, a First Classman, but quite unknown in the domain of poetry. There was really no comparison whatever between the fitness of the two candidates, but that counted for little when men's minds were heated by the "odium theologicum." It became simply a party question; but a public contest was happily averted by a private comparison of votes, when it was found that there was a large majority of votes in favour of Mr. Garbett. Mr. Williams was much hurt-not by the opposition of the Low Churchmen, for he expected that,-but by the desertion of several whom he counted upon as friends. He withdrew from Oxford and from public life (which had never possessed much attraction to a man of his retiring and studious habits) altogether. He remained at Bisley until 1848, when he removed to Stinchcombo; and there he lived until his death. From time to time some cultured and thoughtful work from his pen was given to the world, but that was all; and when the announcement that he had quietly passed away on SS. Philip and James' Day, May 1, 1865, appeared, the outer world had almost forgotten that he was still living, though it had not forgotten, and will not, it is hoped, while the English language lasts, ever lorget his writings. He died of a decline, the seeds of which had long been sown.

As a devotional writer both in prose and verse the name of Isaac Williams stands deservedly high, but as a writer of hymns for congregational use, he does not, either for quentity or quality, at all reach the first rank. Indeed, it would have been very distressing to him if he had done so, for he shared the distasts which most of the early leaders of the Oxford movement felt for the congregational use of any metrical hymns apart from the Psatter, and it is said that he purposely made his translations of the Hymns from the Parisian Breviary rough, in order to prevent them from being so used. His poetical

(1) The Cathedral, his first publication in verse, issued in the early part of 1838. It was written about the same time as the famous Fract on Reserve, and "in pursuance of the same great object we had undertaken" (in the Thats for the Times). What that object was is intimated in the alternative title, The Cathedral, or the Cathedral and Apottokic Charech in England. It followed very much the same lines as George Herbert's Respit, only it worked out the ideas for more in detail, connecting each part of the edites with some portion of church doctrine or discipline. The whole volume is written in the true spirit of poetry, and some of the someten in it are good specimens of that difficult form of composition; but it contains scarcely any verses out of which even centes of hymns can be formed.

(2.) Later on in the same year (1838) he published a volume, entitled Thoughts is Past Years, though, as the little implies, many of its contents were written at an artise date. In fact the composition ranged over a period of at least twelve years. In the writer's own opinion there was more true, poetry in this volume than in The Cuthedral, but the later had the advantage of being written on one systematic plan, while the Thoughts was a collection of detached poems. The connexion between the four divisions of the volume was, that they were all suggested by the writer's surroundings. Thus the "Golden Valley" was the beautiful district in the neighbourhood of Stroud known by that name; "The Mountain Hone" was the writer's own birthplace, Cwmeynfeiin in Cawligansbirs; "The River's Fank" was the River Windrush, on the banks of which was the writer's first curacy; "The Sacred City" is Oxford. In a later edition (1822) there is an additional division entitled "The side of the Hill," that is, Stinchcombe Hill, Gloucestershire. Like The Cathadral, this is rather a volume of somets and sacred poems for private use, than of hymns in the popular sense of the term. This same volume consists his Religious Latina; or Harrote School Exercises, and his Oxford Prize Poem, Ara Coologica. The Latinity of these poems fully hears not the writer's own remark, that in his early years he was more at home in Latin than he was in his own language. It also contained a translation of the "Dies Ire, Dies Illa," to which, in the revised and enlarged chitten of 1846, were added, under the title of Lyra Ecclerisation, a number of translations from other Latin and Greek flynnes. These translations are for the most and Greek Hymns. These translations are for the most part very free, and are not adapted, as they were certainly not intended, for congregational use, part very lies, and not rengregational use,

(3.) His next publication was Hyperst translated from the Parisian Breviary, 1839. He thought that "the ancient Latin hymns were the best source from which our acknowledged deficiency in metrical paslmody should be supplied, as being much more congenist to the splitt of our own liturgy than those hymns which are too often made to take part in our ancient services;" and he had already published many of the translations which appear in this volume, at intervals from 1833 to 1837, in the British Hagarise, the church organ which was edited by Hugh James Rose. A few hymns from this volume, e.g. "O Reaventy Jerusalem," "Disposer Supreme," "O Word of God above," have been adopted for congregational use, but most of these are, perhaps purposely, done into such irregular metras, that they are not available for the purpose. Indirectly, however, they have been highly serviceable to the cause of congregational palmody, for Mr. Chandler tells us in the Freface to his Hymns of the Privative Charch that Mr. Williams's translations in the British Hagarine led him to produce that work.

Preface to his Hymns of the Prinstites Charch that Mr. Williams's translations in the British Engurine led him to produce that work.

(4.) The next little volume, Hymns on the Catchism, was written at Blakey and published in 1842. Its object was strictly practical; it was intended as "an aid towards following out that catechetical instruction which is so easential a part of the church system." It cannot be said that these hymns are likely to be so attractive to children, as, for example, those of Mrs. Alexander, but they are suitable for congregational, or at any rate, for Sunday school use, and one of them, "Be Thon my Guardian and my Guide," has found its way deservedly into most collections.

(5.) In the same year (1842) a much more ambitious work, The Baptistery, also saw the light. One seems to recognize in this work the pupil of John Keble, for its leading idea is very much the same as that of Tract 89, viz.: thus earthly things are a shadow of heavenly. It is divided into thirty-two "Images," as the author terms them; it is not easy reading, but it well repays the careful attention which it requires, for both in form and matter it is the product of a true poet. One of the "Images," the 20th, "The Day of Days, or the Great Manifestation," has supplied our well-known hymn, "Lord, in this, Thy mercy's day," but the general tenour of the work is quite apart from hymnody.

(5.) The same may be said of The Altar, published tenour of the work is quite apart from hymnody.

(5.) The same may be said of The Allar, published in 1847, which takes the second great Sacrament of the Gospel, as The Bentistory took the first, for the basis of a series of devous meditations, 34 in number. The 1st d. was illustrated by 34 pictures, one to each meditation, after the fashion of a foreign book which the writer had seen; but the filustrations were thought unworthy of the subject, and the later editions appeared without them. The object of the work was to connect the various events which occurred at the time of our Blessed Lord's Passion with the Eucharistic Service. It consists exclusively of a series of souncis, and supplies no hymns for congregational use. no hymns for congregational use.

(7.) In the same year (1849) appeared another work of a very different type. It is entitled The Christian Scholar, and its object is "to render the study of the classics subservient to a higher wisdom." It incidentally gives us an interesting insight into the author's own training under Mr. Keble, for he tells us in the Preface that he himself "destived, not merely moral banefit, but actual religious training from this indirect mode of instruction in another to whom he owes everything that renders life valuable." The plan of the book is, in a word, to take passages from all the chief classical authors, and to give Christian comments on each, (8) His only other poetical work was Ancient Hymns for Children, 1982, which consisted of a reprint, with slight alterations, of 30 of his trs. from the Latin, previously published in 1838 and 1839 as above.

Although Isaac Williams's prose writings are as valuable, and perhaps more popular than his verse, yet from the point of view of this article it will suffice to enumerate the principal of them. They include-

Several reviews for The British Critic at various Several teviews for The British Critic at various dates; Thoughts on the Study of the Gospels, 1842; Sermons on the Characters of the Old Testament, 1856; The Beginning of the Book of Generis, with Notes and Reflections, 1861; The Padins interpreted of Christ, vol. i., 1864 (no other volumes were published); A Memoir of the Rec. R. A. Suckting, late Perpetual Curate of Busings, 1852; A Harmony of the Pour Gospels, 1803; Sermons on the Emile Characters of Holm vola., 1853; Sermons on the Female Characters of Holy Scripture, 1859; The Apocalypse, 1851, and many other minor works.

Besides these, he edited a large number of Plain Sermons at different dates by various writers, and he also wrote some of the Tracts for the Times, notably Tract 80 (1838), and 87 (1840), on Reserve in Communicating Religious Knowledge. It is difficult to see why these should have given so much offence. The principles on which the conclusion is based are obviously correct. Perhaps the title Reserve was alarming whon men's minds were excited by the fear that they were being led by the new Oxford school they knew not whither. These two Tracts, with Tract 86, also by Isaac Williams, would fill an octavo volume of more than 200 pages. Both the volume of more summer and Isaac Williams are singularly attractive. They both present are singularly attractive. They both present a striking combination of qualities which are not often found in union. He was as firm as a rock in the maintenance and expression of his principles, but so quiet and retiring that his personality came far less before the public than that of any of the other leaders of the Oxford movement. His writings are so Christian and unaggressive in their tone that we are won over to his side almost without knowing it. He was a most valuable ally on this very account to his party, and the hymnologist may well regret that he did not devote his exquisite poetical teste, his refined culture, and his poetical teste, his rounce control than he ardent piety more to hymn-writing than he [J. H. O.]

Issae Williams's position in hymnody does not lie so much in the actual work which he did, as in the influence he had over others. His tra. from the Latin, mainly through the metres which he deliberately adopted, have not had a wide acceptance in the hymnody of the Church. J. Chandler, however, has left it on record that Williams's tre in the British Magnaine led him to undertake kindred work, and Chandler's trs. are amongst the most popular in the English language. Williams's Hymns on the Catechism, 1842, were with Dr. Neale's Hymns for Children of the eame year the forerunners of the more popular productions on the same lines by later writers. Williams's tra together with the more important of his original hymne may be traced through the Index of Authors and Translators. Of his original hymns the following are also in C. U.:-

1. How solemn, silent, and how still. Obsdience

1. How workers (1842)
2. Jesus, most loving Lord. Hymn to Christ. (1844.)
3. Lord Thou dost about the proud. Humility.
4. Members of Christ are we. Hembers of Christ.
5. The child leans on its parent's breast. Trust is God. (1842.)

6. The High Priest once a year. Ascension. (1842.)

The dates here given indicate the works in which these hymns appeared.

Williams, John, D.D., LL.D., was b. at Deerfield, Massachusetts, Aug. 30, 1817; graduated at Trinity College, 1835, and was ordained in 1838. From 1842 to 1848 be was Rector at Scheuectady, New York, and President of Trinity College, Hartford, Connectiont, from 1848 to 1853. In 1861 he was consecrated Assistant Bishop of Connecticut, taking, in 1865, the full charge of that diocese. Bishop Williams is an eminent scholar. His contributions to hymnology were Ancient Hymns of Holy Church. Hartford, 1845, being tre. from sine Land; too "Additional Hymns," pp. 81-127, were selected from the trs. from the Latin by Land Wells. Latin by Isaac Williams. A few of Bp. Williame's trs. have come into C. U. (See Index of Authors and Translators.)

Williams, William, of Pantycelyn, was the Sweet Singer of Wales. He was b. at Cefn-y-Coed, in the Parish of Llanfair-y-bryn, near Llandovery, in 1717. He was ordained a descen of the Established Church in 1740, by Dr. Claget, Bishop of St. Davids, and for three years he served the Curacies of Llauwrtyd and Llanddewi-Abergwesyn. He never received Priest's Orders. He became early acquainted with the revivalist Daniel Bowlands, and for thirty-five years he presched once a month at Liaullian and Caio and Liansawel, besides the preaching journeys he took in North and South Wales. He was held in great esteem as a preacher. In 1744 his first book of hymns appeared under the title of Halleluiah, and soon ran through three editions. In 1762, he published another book under the title of Y Mor o Wydr, which soon went through five editions. His son John pub. an excellent edition of his hymns in the year 1811. In addition to his Welsh hymns Williams also pub. several in English as:-

(1.) Notennah to the Son of David; or, Hymnt of Praise to God, For our glorious Redeseption by Christ. Some few translated from the Welsh Hymn-Book, but mostly composed on new Subjects. By William Williams. Bristol: Printed by John Grabham, in Narrow-Wine Street, 1749. This contains 51 hymns of which it are fr. from his Welsh bymns. This little book was reprinted by D. Sedgwick in 1859.

(2.) Gloria in Species: or, Hymns of Praise to God and the Lamb. By W. Williams. ... Carmarthes. Printed for the Author by John Rost, removed to Priory Street new the Church. M.DV. LAZI. This contains Street, near the Church, H.DCC.LXII. This contains 70 hymns, not including parts.

From these volumes the following hymns are in C. U.:-

i. From the Bosannah, 1759:-

- 1. Jesus, my Saviour is enough. Jesus, All in All. My God, my God, Who art my all. Communion with God desired.
- 3. The enormous load of human guilt. God's love unepeakable.
 - ii. From the Gloria in Excelsis, 1772.

 - 4. Awaks, my soul, and rise. Passiontide.
 5. Reneath Thy Cross I lay me down. Passiontide.

- 7. Jesus, lead us with Thy power. Divine Oridance Desired. Sametimes given as "Father, lead us with Thy power."
- 8. Jesus, Whose Aimighty sceptre. Jesus at King. 9. Saviour, look on Thy beloved. The Hely of Jesus desired
- 18. White and roddy is my Beloved. Beauties of Jerus.

Williams is most widely known through his two hymns, "Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah," and "O'er those gloomy hills of darkness." Williams d. at Pantycelyn, Jan. 11, 1791. [See Welsh Hymnedy.] [W. G. T.]

Willis, Nathaniel Parker, was b. at Portland, Maine, Jan. 20, 1807, and educated at Yale College, graduating in 1826. After writing for a time for the American Monthly Magazine, which he established, and the New York Mirror, into which the former was merged, he was attached to the American Legation at the French Court. His stay in Europe extended from 1831 to 1837. On his return he became in 1839 one of the editors of The Corsair. His works are numerous, and include Sacred Poems, 1843. He d. Jan. 29, 1367. His sister, Mrs. Parton, is the well-known "Fanny Fern." His hymn—"The perfect world by Adam trod" (Dedication of a Place of Worship), was "Written to be sung at the Consecration of Hanover Street [Unitarian] Church, Boston," in 1826, and aince then has been widely used, although of no exceeding merit. [F. M. B.] no exceeding merit.

Willkommen unter deiner Schaar. N. L. von Zingendorf. [Christian Church.] The origin of this hymu was somewhat remarkable. On May 10, 1737, Zinzendorf had been consecrated, at Berlin, by Daniel Ernst Jablonsky (see p. 784, ii.), as Bishop and Ordinary of the Moravian Brethren's Unity. In 1741 J. L. Dober, who had officiated as General-Elder (General-Aelteste) of the entire Moravian connexion, resigned his office. Zinzendorf then held (from Sept. 11 to Sept. 23, 1741) a note-worthy synodical conference at London at which the assembled brethren agreed that no suitable successor to Dober could be found in their midst. On Sept. 16, 1741, they therefore resolved to beseech the Lord Jesus Christ Himself to take the office of General-Elder of the entire Unity, and, as on casting lots the result was favourable to their wishes, they took for granted that He had assumed this position, and appointed 12 Assistant-Elders (Vice-Aelteste) to form the directing General Conference of the Unity, Zinzendorf's power of general superintendence being abolished (see Kock, v. 264). It was on this occasion that Zinzendorf wrote this hymn. Albert Knapp in his ed. of Zinzendorf's Geistliche Gedichte (1845, p. 288), entitles it "When Jesus assumed the position of General-Elder," and dates it Sept. 16, 1741. It was included in Appx. 11., circa 1748, to the Herrnhut G. B., as No. 1778, and in 14 st. of 8 l. In the Bridder G. B., 1778, No. 1099, st. vi.-wiii. were omitted, and in the Hist. Nachricht thereto (ed. 1851, p. 188) it is dated "In London, 16 Sept., 1741." Tr. as:—

1. Welcome among thy flock of grace. This is a somewhat free ir. of at. i., ii., iv., v., ix.-xiii., as No. 539 in the disraction H. Bl., 1789 (1885, No. 834). It was adopted, slightly altered and beginning, "We hall Thee, Lord, thy Church's Bock," as No. 278 in the 1857 ed. of Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk. (Ox. ed., 1864, No. 423, in 6 et.). From Mercer et. i., v., viii, peased into the Pennsylvania Luth. Church Bk., 1868, No. 272.

9. Welcome among thy chosen Flack. This is No. 234 in the Apps. of 1743 to the Moravian H. Bk., 1742 (ed. 1754, pt. 11., No. 222).

Wilt Thou forgive that sin when I began. John Donne. [Lent.] Concerning this hymn, to which special reference is made in the article on Early English Hymnody, Izaak Walton says, in his Life of Donne, after quoting the hymn in detail :-

"I have the rather mentioned this hymn for that he caused it to be set to a most grave and solemn true, and to be often sung to the organ by the Choristers of St. Paul's [Cathedrai] Church in his own hearing, especially at the evening service, and at his return from his customary devotions in that place, did occasionally say to a friend, "the words of this hymn have restored to me the same thoughts of joy that possessed my soul in my sickness, when I composed it. And, O the power of Church-maniel that harmony added to this hymn has raised the affections of my heart, and quickened my grace of seal and gratitude; and I observe that I always return from paying this public duty of prayer and praise with an unexpressible tranquillity of mind, and a willingness to leave the world." — Walton's Lécer, 1670. " I have the rather mentioned this hymn for that he

The special sickness during which this hymn was composed fell upon the author during the earlier part of his life. It was sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, at intervals from 1621 to 1631, when Donne died. It was published subsequently in Donne's Poems in 1683; again in 1635, and in later editions, and is again in 1635, and in later equations, and a usually entitled, "A Hymn to God the Father." Orig. text in Walton's Lives, 1670 (1850, pp. 53-4). [English Hymnely, Easly, "....." [J. J.]

Winchester, Caleb Thomas, x.A., was b. in 1847. He is Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut. His hymu, "The Lord our God alone is strong" (Dedication of a Science Hall), was written for the opening of the Orange Judd Hall of Natural Science, Wesleyan University, Middletown. It was included in the Meth. Episco. Hymnal, 1878 (Nutter's Hymn Studies, 1884). [J. J.]

Winckler, Johann Joseph, s. of Gottfried Winckler, town clerk of Lucka, Sachse-Altenburg, was b. at Lucka, Dec. 23, 1670. He became a student of Theology at the Univorsity of Leipzig, during the time when A. H. Francke and J. C. Schade were holding their Bible readings, and his sympathics henceforth were with the Pietistic movement. In 1692 he was appointed preacher to the St. George's Hospital at Magdeburg, and afternoon preacher at St. Peter's Church there. He became chaplain to the Prince Christian Ludwig regiment in 1695, and went with it to Holland and Italy. After the Peace of Ryswijk (Oct. 80, 1697) he made a tour in Holland and England. Returning to Magde-burg, he was appointed, in 1698, diaconus of the Cathedral, and in 1703 also inspector of the so-called Holzkreis. Finally, in 1714, he became chief preacher at the Cathedral, and in 1716, also Consistorial rath. He d. at Magdeburg, Aug. 11, 1722 (Weizel, iii. 437; Grischow-Kirchner Nachricht to Freylinghausen, p. 53; Koch, iv. 983; Blötter für Hymnologic, 1888, p. 170, &c.).

Winckler was a man who had the corruge of his opinions, and his hymn No. iv. below is a picture of the stand he was willing to make when conscience bare hm. Not that he was foud of controversy, but rather the reverse. Twice however he raised considerable feeling against himself in Magdeburg, first by the position he against himself in Magueburg, first by the position he took up against theatry going, and afterwards by his well-mant attempts to bring about a closer union between the Lutheran and Reformed churches in Prussia. But the opposition he encountered he bore patiently, and in the appretion he encountered he bore patiently, and in the spirit of his hymn No. 1. below. His hymns, some 21 in all, appeared mostly in the Appr. to the 2nd ed., 1703. Of H. G. Neuss's Hob-Opfer (p. 1994, ii.), in Pores's G. B., Berlin, 1708, and in Freylinghausen's Neuss getstreiches G. B., 1714. They rank among the better productions of the earlier Pledstic writers, and are distinguished by firm faith, earnestness, and picturesqueness; but are somewhat lengthy and frequently in unusual interes.

Those of Winckler's hymns which have passed into English are :-

i. Meine Seele senket sich. Resignation. 1st pub. in the 1703 ed. of Neuss's Heb-Opfer, p. 248, in 6 st. of 6 L, entitled "Ps. 62 v. 1. My soul is still towards God." Repeated in Freylinghausen, 1714, No. 511, and in the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 714. It is a fine hymn on patient waiting upon God's will. Tr. as :-

Yes, my spirit fain would sink, In full, by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 198. In her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 138, it is greatly altered, beginning "In Thy heart and hands, my God"; and this form is No. 419 in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880.

Another tr. is : "Wearily my spirit sinketh," by Mrs. Bevan, 1858, p. 65.

ii. O sitter Stand, o telig Leben. Christian Simplicity. In Porst's G. B., 1708, p. 519 (1711, No. 642), in 8 st. of 8 l., repeated in Freylinghousen, 1714, No. 822, and in the Unv. L. S. 1851, No. 331. The trs. are >

1. O sweet condition, happy Living. This, omitting st, iii., is No. 658 in pt, i. of the Moravier, II. Bk., 1754.

2. O blest condition, happy living. This is a tr. of st. i., ii., vi., viii., based on the 1754 version, as No. 441 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1886, No. 584), lil. Ringe rooht, wenn Gottee Gnade. Christian Warfare. A thoughtful and powerful hymn, included as No. 359 in Freylinghausen, 1714, in 23 st. of 4 L, and thence in the Unc. L. S., 1851, No. 336. Wetzel, iii. 437, says it was written as a hymn on the three favourite Scripture passages of Ursula Maria Zorn, of Berlin, and was 1st pub. at the end of her funeral sermon by Johann Lysius, pastor of St. George's Church, Berlin. Thus st. i.-v. are founded on St. Luke xiii. 24; vi.-xv. on Philipp. li. 12; and xvi.xxiii. on Gen. xix. 15-22. The trs. in C. U. are:

1. Strive, when thou art call'd of God. 'This is a good tr. of st. i., iii.-vii., xii., xiii., xv., xvi. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 46. Repeated, abridged, in Kennedy, 1863; the Harrow School H. Bk., 1866, and Rugby School H. Bk., 1876.

2. Strive eright when God doth call thee. This is a tr. of st. i., iil., iv., xii., xiii., xv., xvi., by Miss Winkworth, founded on her Lyra Ger. version, as No. 128 in her C. B. for England, 1863. Repeated in the Marlborough College II. Bà., 1869.

3. Thou must wrestle, when God's mercy. is a fr. of st. i., ii., r., xxii., signed E. T. L., as No. 230, in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864.

Another tr. is: "Wrestle on! for God is pleading," by Miss Burlingbam in the Britten Herald, Sept., 1985, p. 137.

iv. Bollt loh aus Furcht vor Menschenkindern. Adherence to Christ. A hymn on Constancy, and against cowardice and time-serving. In Porst's G. B., 1708, p. 1135 (1711, No. 701), in 17 st. of 4 l. Repeated in Freylinghausen, 1714, No. 541 (entitled "For a Preacher"), in the Unv.

L. S. 1851, No. 658, &c. The fr. in C. U. is: -Shall I for fear of feeble man. This is a vigorous tr. in 10 st. (representing st. i.-lil., zll.-xv., zvil.; st. iv. being freely from vl., vii., and st. v. from viii., xi.), by J. Wesley in the Hys. & Sac. Poems, 1739 (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. i. p. 177). Included in full in the Moravian H. Bh., 1754 (1849, No. 875 abridged). In the Wes. H. Bh., 1780, st. i .- vii. were included as No. 270; st. viii.-x. being added in the ed. of 1800 (1875, No. 279). The full form is in the Meth. N. Conn. H. Bk., 1863, and in Mercer's C. P. & H.

Dr. J. F. Bachmann in his Zur Geschichte der Ber-"In. J. R. Bachmann in his zer uccentents are ner-tiver Grannpütcher, 1866, was only able to describe the 3rd ed. of 1713. The present writer has examined the 2nd ed. of 1711 (New-vermakries printreiches G. B.). The references to the 1st ed. of 1708 are from the mark-ings by Professor Mützell, in a copy of the 1856 pre-sented to him by Dr. Bachmann, and now in the possession of the present writer.

Winkler, Edwin Theodore, p.D., was b. in Savannah, Nov. 13, 1823, and educated at Brown University. He entered the Baptist ministry in 1846, and subsequently filled several important literary and other appoint-ments in addition to his pastorates. He d. at Marion, Alabama, Nov. 16, 1888. He compiled The Sacred Late, a Collection of popular Hymns, 1855 (enlarged ed., 1860), to which he contributed 8 hymns, the first lines of which are given in Burrage. (Burrage's Baptist H. Writers, 1888, p. 416.) Some of these have passed into other American collections, including "Our land with mercies crowned." (National Hymn.)

Winkworth, Catherine, daughter of Henry Winkworth, of Alderley Edge, Cheshire, was b. in London, Sep. 13, 1829. Most of her early life was spent in the neighbourhood of Manchester. Subsequently she removed with the family to Clifton, near Bristol. She d. suddenly of heart disease, at Monnetier, in Savoy, in July, 1878. Miss Winkworth pub.:—

True from the German of the Life of Patter Fliedner, the Founder of the Sisterhood of Protestant Desconesses at Katserworth, 1861; and of the Lafe of Amelia Sieve-king, 1863.

Her sympathy with practical efforts for the benefit of women, and with a pure devotional life, as seen in these tra, received from her the most practical illustration possible in the deep and setive interest which she took in educational work in connection with the Clifton Association for the Higher Education of Women, and kindred societies there and elsewhere. Our interest, however, is mainly centred in her hymnological work as embodied

(1) Lyra Germanica, let Ser., 1865. (2) Lyra Germanica, 2nd Ser., 1858. (3) The Chorale Book for England (containing trs. from the German, together with match), 1865; and (4) her tharming biographical work, the Christian Singers of Germany, 1869.

In a sympathetic article on Miss Winkworth in the Inquirer of July 20, 1878, Dr. Martineau says:

"The translations contained in these volumes are invariably faithful, and for the most part both terse and delicate; and an admirable art is applied to the manage-ment of complex and difficult versification. They have ment of complex and difficult verafication. They have not quite the fire of John Wesley's versions of Moration hymns, or the wonderful fusion and reproduction of thought which may be found in Coleridge. But if less flowing they are more conscientions than either, and attain a result as poetical as severe exactitude admits, being only a little short of 'native music.'"

Dr. Percival, then Principal of Clifton College, also wrote concerning her (in the Bristol Times and Mirror), in July, 1878:—

"She was a person of remarkable intellectual and social gifts, and very unusual attainments; but what specially distinguished her was her combination of rare ability and great innovidege with a certain tender and sympathetic refinement which constitutes the special cherm of the true womanly character."

Dr. Mardinean (as above) says her religious life afforded "a happy example of the plety which the Church of hardt. [Christmas.] Included in the Berlin.

Ringland discipline may implant The fast hold she retained of her discipleship of Christ was no example of 'faminine simplicity,' carrying on the childish mind into maturer years, but the clear silegisnes of a first mind, familiar with the pretentions of non-Christian materia. The sile she is true there and undirected by siles. schools, well able to test them, and undiverted by them from her first love."

Miss Winkworth, although not the earliest of modern translators from the German into English, is certainly the foremost in rank and popularity. Her translations are the most widely used of any from that language, and have had more to do with the modern revival of the English use of German hymns than the versions of any other writer. [J, J,]

Winter reigneth o'er the land. Bp. W. W. How. [Winter.] Written for and first pub. in the S. P. C. K. Church Hymns, 1871, No. 64, and from thence has passed into numerous collections. In a few hymn-books, including Sir Josiah Mason's Birmingham Orphanage Hymnal, et. iii.-vi. are given as a hymn, "Sanny days are past and gone," but this mutilated text is not popular. [J. J.]

[Nicese Creed.] This very free setting of the Nicene Creed was 1st pub in the Geyelliche gesangh Buchleyn, Wittenberg, 1524, in 8 st. of 10 l., and thence in Wacker-ragel, iii. p. 16. Also in Schircks's ed. of Luther's Geietliche Lieder, 1854, p. 55; the Unv. L. S., 1851, No. 253, &c. During the Reformation period it was generally sung after the Sermon. Luther included it among the Christliche Geseng . . . zum Begrebnis, 1542. It had been used at the funeral of the Elector Friedrich the Wise of Saxony, on May 9, 1525, and was often in later times sung before funeral sermons. Tr. as :-

With heart, and soul, with mind, and might. J. Montgomery. [Sunday Schools.] Printed on a broadsheet for use at a gathering of Sunday schools on Whit Monday, 1851, and included in Montgomery's Original Hymns, 1853, in 6 st. of 4 l. [J. J.]

With joy we meditate the grace.

I. Watts. [Our High Priest.] Pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1709, Bk. 1. No. 125, in 6 st. of 2 l. J. Wesley included it with the amission of st. iii. in his Charlestown Po. & Hys., 1786-7, and again in the Ps. & Hys., 1748. From the latter it passed into G. Whitefield's Coll. of Hys., 1759; M. Madan's Ps. & Hys., 1760, and others. This text, with slight attentions, was given in the Wes. H. Dk., 1875. Another text, found mostly in the Church of England collections, is from Top-lady's Ps. and Hys., 1776, with additional alterations of a later date, the principal sources of which are Stowell, 1881; Bicker-steth, 1888, and Elliott, 1885. In common with many of Wattr's longer hymns, most forms of the text are abbreviated, and the n mber and arrangement of stanzas vary considerably. These can be tested by any modern edition of the Hys. & Spiritual Songs. In Harland's Ch. Pealter & Hyl., 1876, it begins, "With joy we celebrate the grace"; and in the Down and Connor H. Bk., 1863, "With joy we contemplate the grace."

Another form of this hymn was given in the 1745 Draft of the Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, No. 8. This began, "Jesus, the Lord, Who once on earth," and was composed of st. 1, ii., new, and the rest from Watts, st. i.-iv. and vi., with st. i. ll. 1, 2, altered. In the 1751 revised ed of the Draft it was slightly altered, and there began, "Jesus, the Son of God, Who once." Stanza vii. was also rewritten as st. vii., viii. These alterations have been ascribed to Hugh Blair. The 1751 text was given in the authorized issue of the Trs. and Paraphrases, 1781, with st. v., vii., viii. rewritten. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W Cameron (p. 200, i.), the 1781 alterations are ascribed to him. In Miss Jano E. Lesson's Paraphs. & Hys., 1858, the text is reduced to 4 st., and begins with at iii., "To human weakness not severe." [J. M.]

With praise to Thee my strain began. I. Williams. [Charity. Lore.] This is the concluding piece of his Hys. on the Catechism, 1842, in 14 st. of 4 l. and is based on the concluding words of the Catechism, "And be in charity with all men." Two centos therefrom are in C. U.:—(1) "All that we know of saints above" (Quinquagesimas, and (2) "How shall we shew our love to Thee?" (Brotherly Love). These centes are of merit and will bear wider adaption than is now accorded to them. [J, J]

With sin I would not make abode. T. H. Gill. [Early Piety.] Written in 1855, and first pub. in his Golden Ohain of Praise, 1869, p. 154, in 8 st. of 4 l., and headed, "Early Love. "How good it is to close with Christ betimes!" Oliver Cromwell." In Dale's English H. Bk., 1874, six stanzes are given as No. 1184, beginning with st. vi., "Lord! in the fulness of my might." This text is also given in other collections. [J. J.]

With solemn thanksgiving our Lord. H. Blair (?). [Christ's Invitation.] 1stappeared as No. 26 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, as a version of Matt. xi. 25-30, in 8 st. of 4 l. In the Draft of 1781 included, considerably altered, as No. 34, and beginning, "Thus spoke the Saviour of the world," and with st. ii., iii., condensed as ii. Thence with 10 lines altered in the public worship ed. of the Trs. and Paraphs, issued in that year by the Church of Scotland and still in use. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, ii.) the original is ascribed to Blair, and the alterations in 1781 to Cameron. The revised text of 1781, omitting et. fii., was included as No. 93 in the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hys., 1887, and slightly altered, and emitting st. iii., iv., vii., in Miss Jane E. Leeson's Paraphs. & Hys. for Congregational Singing, 1858, as pt. i. of No. 64. In the American Subbath H. Bk., 1858, No. 506, and Martinesu's Hymns, 1873, No. 122, beginning with st. v. altered, "Come unto me, all ye who mourn."

With thankful hearts our songs we raise. [Holy Baptism.] This hymn is No. 278, in the 4th ed., 1832, of J. Bickersteh's Ps. & Hymns, in 4 st. of 4]. In common with all the hymns in the collection, it is unsigned, and there is nothing to determine its authorship. It is sometimes attributed to "Bickersteth," but for this ascription we know of no authority whatever. It is in somewhat extensive use in America. [J. J.]

With Thee, Lord, will I walk by day. T. Davis. [Morning.] 1st pub in his Devotional Verse for a Month, 1855, in 4 st. of 4 l., and based upon the words "When I awake I am still with Thee," Ps. exxxix. 18. In 1858 it was included, unaltered, in the Bap. Ps. & Hys., No. 911, and continued in later editions. When given in the author's Foundly Hymnol, 1860, and Hymns Old and New, 1861, st. iv. 1. 3, "give" was changed to grant. This rendering was repeated in his denue Sanctus, 1877, p. 246, as the authoritext. [J. J.]

With years oppressed, with sorrow worn. Sir R. Grant. [Ps. kezi.] Pub. in his posthumous Scored Poesus, 1889, p. 31, in 5 st. of 61. It is in C. U. in its full or abbreviated form, and also as "Thy mercy heard my infant prayer" (st. ii.).

Wither, George, or Wyther—spelled in both ways by himself, the first usually, the second occasionally, e.g. in Prince Henries Obsequies (1612), and erroneously Withers, was b. on June 11th, 1588, at Bentworth, near Alton, Hampshire. He was the only son of George Wither, of Bentworth. His early education was at the Grammar School of Colemore or Colemore, under its celebrated mester; John Greaves. After thorough training and discipline here he was entered in 1604 at Magdalen College, Oxford. His tutor was John Warner, subsequently D.D. and Bishop of Rochester. He had only been three years at the University when malicious and ignorant persons persuaded his father that more learning was not required. And so, as he modestly tells us in his Abuses Stript and Whipt (1613), he was withdrawn "without taking any degree," being now destined, as he moderately puts it, "for the plough," that is, for rustic employment on the paternal estate. This proved utterly uncongenial. He is found next at one of the Inns of Chancery, afterwards at Lincoln's Inn. and intimate with William Browne, the poet, of Britannia's Pasterals. His title-pages from 1617 to 1620 self-describe him as "Gentleman," and as "of the Societie of Lincoln's Inne" (Fidelia (1617), and 1st Pealme (1620), and Workes (1620)). But Anthony a-Wood informs us:-

be became shortly after a public author and most admired by some in that age for his quick advancement in that faculty " (Athenst. Oxon. s. n.).

How uncritical was this miserable criticism, will be understood when it is recalled that amongst these "certain specimens" was the Shepherds Hunting under the first form of "A new song of a young man's opinion of the difference between good and bad women" (Peppeian, ad Peroy MS.), Prince Henrie's Obsequies (1612), Epithalamia (1612), and his stinging and patriotically outspoken Abuses Stript and Whipt. The last drew down upon him the wrath of the monarch (James I.) and pobles, and cast him prisoner into the Marshalses. Four large editions within a year, and numerous others up to 1622 and continuously onward (exclusive of the reproductions in his Worker) was the answer of the People to the Upper Ten. While in prison he wrote some of the most delicious of his verse. He likewise composed A Satyre to the King (1615). The wisest fool in Christendom was shrewd enough to perceive that it would be eafer to make such a subject a friend than an enemy. He had deftly signed the dedication to the king "his Majesty's most loyall Subject, and yet Prisoner in the Marshalsey." It procured him his release. From this time onward he was perpetually printing something, now in verse and now in prose, until the aggregate exceeded a hundred of books and pamphlets. There are several fairly accurate enumerations of them, e.g. British Bibliographer, i, 174-205, 305-32, 417-40; ii, 17-32, 378-91; Sir Egerton Brydges' Consuria and Restituta; Hazlitt's Bibliography (1867). The Spenser Society reprinted a large portion of the Works in prose and verse; but there was really no editing and no annotation. His successive books are the main facts of Wither's life; yet was he an active member of the nation. Spite of his hard usage and imprisonments, he was loyal as any cavalier. When Charles L proceeded to declare and carry war into his native Scotland against the Covenanters in 1639, George Wither served his Majesty as a captain of horse and quarter-master of his regiment under the Earl of Arundel. How serrowful the wrong-headedness of the king who compelled such a true man as Wither to forsake him and prefer the kingdom to the king, as many others who with pathetic reluctance became Roundheads! In 1641-2 he sold his hereditary estates and raised a troop of horse for the Parliament, in whose army ho was promoted to be major. On his colours he carried this motto, Pro Rege, Lege, Grege. Having been taken prisoner by the Royalists, a good-humoured jest of Sir John Denham it is alleged saved his life, to wit, that "his Majesty really must not hang George Wither, for so long as he lives no one will socount him [Sir John] the worst poet in England." He was set free. Not long after he was constituted by the Long Parliament a Justice of Peace in quorum for Hampshire, Surrey and Essex. This he held for six years, and afterwards was made by Cromwell Major-General of all the horse and foot in the County of Surrey. On the title-page of his Boni Ominie Votum (1656) in the British Museum there is a contemporary us. note,

"lately made Master of the Statute Office." At the Restoration be was shamefully dealt with, and by a vote of the Convention Parliament, was committed to Newgate because of his Von Vulgi-a noble piece of flery and idiomatic English, and manly pleading for respect to popular rights and liberties. For his Prisoner's Plea humbly offered (1861) he was again imprisoned, this time in the Tower. He married (Aubrey informs us) Elizabeth, eldest daughter of H. Emerson of South Lanuk, who, he says, was "a great wit and could write in verse too," and was of the same English Emersons from whom the great American Ralph Waldo Emerson descended. He had issue. He was at liberty when he died on 2nd May, 1667. Aubrey states that he was baried within the east doorway of Savoy Church in the Strand, having apparently lived near it and oither died in the church or in his own house (the phresing being

and them:-

"There are scattered throughout his multifarloss and very unequal productions, many passages of great beauty and excellences. He was cowedly a Christian poet, though he frequently test his Christian meckness in the heat of polemics; but his seal carried with it every evidence of honesty; and he was a sufferer atmost to martyrdom, both for his koyatiy and his orthodoxy, in the troublous times in which he lived. That he was a poet can never be questioned by any reader who has sate and sembility enough to understand and anloy the exquisitely affecting confusion of his obligations to the Muse. That he was a Christian will be as little questioned by those who are most extensively acquainted with the character of his religious compositions" (e. n.). "There are scattered throughout his multifurious and

Archbishop Trench, in annotating a charming sacred song entitled Vanished Blessings ("No voice which I did more esteem, Than music in her sweetest key," &c.), thus annotates :--

"I have detached these two stauras front a longer poem of which they constitute the only valuable portion [7]. George Wither ('a most profuse pourer forth a English rhyme,' Pullips calls him) was indeed so intolerable a power in warse, so overlaid his good with indifferent or bad, that one may easily forget how real a gift he possessed, and sometimes showed that he possessed "(Household Book of English Poetry, 1886).

Mrs. Masson says of him-- he is remembered now-a-days as pre-eminently the Puritan poet, whose irrepressible Muse made herself heard even amid the din of civil war" (Three Centuries of English Poetry, p. 375). She quotes his delightful "Christmas" ("So now is come our joyfullest part"), and "Of Poesy" (which Milton did not discissin to utilize), and his "Shall I, wasting in despair." With reference to the "irrepressible Muse" of Wither, it is a felicitous characterisation however regarded, insamuch as so "irrepressible" was he that he actually set up the types and printed off at least one of his bulkier books. Wither's contributions to hymnology are to be found chiefly in the following :-

It is discreditable to the Church of England, of whom he was a devoted son to the close of his life, and to Nonconformity alike, that many, very many more of his Hymnes and Spiritual Songs have not found their way into their hymnals. A critical yet sympathetic reader would easily find a golden sheaf of musical, and well-wrought sacred song. (See Willmott's Lives of Sacred Posts; Gutch's Collection of Works in 3 vols. (1820); also Sir Egerton Brydges' reprints; Ellis; Holland's Psalmists; Campbell; Allibone, s. v.; and several of his Hymnes elsewhere noticed, s. v.

Withington, Leonard, p.b., was b. at Dorchester, Massachusetts, in 1789, and graduated at Yale 1814. He was paster of the First Congregational Church, Newburyport, Massachusetts, from 1816, and d. there, April 22, 1885. His hymn, "O Saviour of a world undone" (Passiontide), appeared in E. Nason's Cong. H. Bk. 1857. [F. M. B.]

Witter, Will Ellsworth, was b. Dec. 9, 1854, near La Grange, New York, and educated at the Genessee State Normal School, New York, and the University of Rochester. From the latter he passed in 1880 to the Rochester Baptist Theological Seminary, and in 1884 he entered the Baptist Ministry. He has written several songs and poems, one of which :-

While Josus whispers to you (The Divine Call) has come into somewhat prominent use. It was written in Joly 1879, and originated mainly in the great anxiety of the author respecting two of his pupils. In 1878 it was set to music by H. R. Palmer, and included in his Book of Authorse, 1878; from whence it passed into Food as Gold, and i. D. Sankey's Sacred S. and Solos, Lond. 1881.

Wolcott, Samuel, p.p., was h at South Windsor, Connecticut, July 2, 1813, and educated at Yale College, 1833, and Andover Theological Seminary, 1837. From 1840 to 1842 he was a missionary in Syria. On his return to America he was successively pastor of several Congregational congregations, including Belchestown, Massachusetts; Providence, Bhode Island; Chicago, &c. He was also for some time Secretary of the Ohio Home Missionary Society. He d. at Longmeadow, Mossachusetts, Feb. 24, 1886. His hymn-writing began late in life, but has extended to more than 200 hymns, many of Those of his hymns which are still in Ms. which have come into C. U. include:-

Its origin is thus recorded by the author: "The Young Men's Christian Associations of Onio met in one of our Churches, with their motto, in evergreen letters over the pulpit, 'Christ for the World, and the World for Christ.' This suggested the hymn 'Christ for the world we sing.'" It was when on his way home from that service that he composed the hymn. It is in several American collections, including Liudes Domini, 1884, &c.

Wolfe, Aaron Robarts, was b. at Mendham, New Jersey, Sep. 6, 1821, and educated at Williams College, 1844; and the Union Theological Seminary, New York, 1851. On April 9, 1851, he was licensed by the Third Presbytery of New York. For some time he had charge of a school for young ladies at Tallahassee, Florida; and in 1859 he established "The Hillside Seminary for Young Ladies" at Montclair, New Jersey. In 1858 he contributed 7 hymns under the signature "A. R. W." to Hastings's Church Melodies. These are :-

Wolff, Jakob Gabriel, LL.D., s. of Jakob Wolff, sometime conrector at Greifswald, was b. at Greifswald in 1684. He matriculated, in 1702, at the University of Greifswald, as a student of law. In 1705 went to Halle, where he graduated LL.D. In 1716 he was appointed extraordinary, and in 1724, ordinary professor of law at Halle, and afterwards received the title of Hofrath. He resigned his professorship in 1744, and d. at Halle, Aug. 6, 1754 (Keck, iv. 875; Bude, p. 174; the Grischow-Kirchner Kurzgefasste Nachricht, Halle, 1771, p. 54, &c.).

Wolff's hymne were mostly written early in life, principally during his student years at Halle. He was in thorough sympathy with the characteristic teachings of the Halle Pictists, and his hymne share in their exocleaces and defects. Some of them are of considerable merit, elegant in style, earnest and glowing in devotion, and have attained considerable popularity in Germany. Nincteen were contributed to Fraylinghausen's News printricides G. B., 1714; and these, with nine others, were included in his autograph Ms. (see No. iv. below).

Those of Wolff's hymns which have passed into English are:

i. Es ist gowiss sin höstlich Ding. Patience. 1st pub. 1714 ns above. No. 481, in 6 st. of 7 l. In the Hannover G. B., 1740, No. 683, with a new st. as st. vii. 77. as "It is, indeed, a precious thing," by Miss Man-

(2) "O those souls are highly blest." As No. 294 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789. In the 1901 and later eds. (1896, No. 390) it begins "Blest are they, supremely blest."

iv. Wohl dem der sieh mit Fleise bemilhet. Christian Varfare. On True and False Christianity. This hymn iv. Woll sem der sich mit Fleise bemilhet. Christian Warfare. On True and False Christianity. This hymn is ascribed to Wolf, by Count Christian Ernst of Stoberg Warnigerode (d. 1771, see p. 566, il.), and by Koch, iv., 270. In the Nachricht as above, p. 54, it is given under Wolff's name; but Kirchner adds that it was not to be found in the autograph me. of Wolff's hymns which head bought at Wolff's sale in 1755. It appears in the Berlin G. B., 1711, No. 525, in 11 st. of 6 1., and was repeated (reading "mit Ernst") as No. 236 in Prepliesghausen, 1714 as above. In the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 545. The tr. in C. U. is: "O well for him who all things braves." This is a good and full tr. by Miss Winkworth, in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser. 1855, p. 167. Herst, in-Ju, x., x., il., beginning, "Who follows Christ, whate'er betide," are included in the Bugby School H. Bk., 1836, No. 309.

Woodd, Basil, M.A., was born at Richmond in Surrey, Aug. 5, 1760. The influences of his home and of his widowed mother were most salutary, and produced the best results. As a boy he studied under the Rev. T. Clarke, of Chesham Bois, and at seventeen he entered Trinity College, Oxford. Taking Holy Orders in 1783, he was chosen lecturer of St. Peter's Cornhill, in 1784; morning preacher at Bentinck Chapel, Marylebone in 1785, and Rector of Drayton Beauchamp, Buckinghamshire, in 1808. Bentinck Chapel being a proprietary chapel, he purchased the lease in 1793, and held the incumbency, together with the Rectory of Drayton, from 1808 to his death on April 12, 1831. He took a deep interest in the great religious societies, and in the anti-slavery movement. His prose works were not numerous or important. He is associated with hymnody through the publication of the following:-- following:

(1.) The Parims of Bavid. Adapted to the Services of the Church of England, do., 1764. 2nd ed. 1800. (2.) The Pulms of David and other portions of the Sacred Scriptures arranged according to the Order the Sacred Scriptures arranged according to the Order of the Church of England, for every Sunday in the Year, de., Loudon: Frinted and sold by Watts and Bridgewater, No. etres. 1810-20. The Preface is signed "B. W." (3.) A New Metrical Version of the Psalms of Bavid; with an Appendix of select Pealms and Fymns, adapted to the service of the United Church of England and Ireland. . . . By the Rev. Basi Woodd. N.A., &c., London: Printed and sold by B. Bridgwater, 1821. Dedicated to the Bp. of Durham. A portion of the preface of No. 2 was repeated; but the preface as a whole, was more historical than the preceding. With the exception of 4 bymns, and 4 doxologies at the end, this collection is a reprint of No. 2, with a new titlepage, a dedication, and an enlarged preface.

Very few of Basil Woodd's hymns and paraphrases of the psalms are now in C. U. The best known is "Hail, Thou Source of every blessing" (p. 480, 1). The rest inelude :--

1. Blest be Jehovah, mighty Lord. Ps. calie. 1794.
2. Holy Ghoet inspire our praises. Whitsustide. circa 1810-20.
3. In Thee, O Lord, I trust, My hope is in Thy Name.
Ps. 2224. 1794.

4. Lord of glory and solvation. Praise, circa 1810-20.

Woodhouse, Charles Goddard, B.A., son of George Windus Woodhouse, born Aug. 16, 1835, and educated at Albrighton and Christ Church, Oxford, graduating S.A. in 1860. He was for some time Vicar of Minsterloy, Diocese of Hereford. Hed. Aug. 20th, 1876. He was the author of a very tender hymn for "Institution to a Parish," begin-ning "By the Cross upon thy brow," and con-sisting of 3 st. of 8 l. It was printed on a fly-leaf. In 1881, Prebendary G, Thring reeast the hymn, added a dexology, and gave it as "Heavenly Shepherd, Thee we pray," in his Church of England Hymn Book, 1882. [J. J.]

Woodhull, Alfred Alexander, M.D., grandson of John Woodhull, D.D., of Freehold, New Jersey; was b. March 25, 1810, educated for the medical profession, and practiced at Princeton, where he d. Oct. 5, 1936. His hymn, "God of the passing year to Thee," appeared as No. 406 in the official edition of Presbyterian Paulms & Hymns, Princeton, in 1829. It has attained to extensive use in the altered form as " Great God of nations, now to Thee." Its authorship was determined by Dr. Hatfield, in his Church Hymn Book, 1872, No. 1295. It is an American National Thanksgiving hymn. [F. M. B.]

Word supreme, before creation. J. Keble. [St. John Evangelist.] This hymn is dated "Hursley, April 19, 1856," and was first pub. in the Salisbury H. Bk., 1857, No. 43, in 7 st. of 6 l. It was repeated in Keble's posthumous Miscellaneous Poems, 1869, p. 111, and his annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, has drawn attention to the similarity between this hymn and a Sequence of the 11th cent., "Verbum Dei, Deo natum," which, according to Mr. Keble, "probably suggested some of his ideas." It has also a trace of Adam of St. Victor's "Verbi vere substantivi." In his annotated ed. of H. A. & M., 1867, Mr. Biggs has rendered Keble's hymn into Latin as, "Verbum Dei, Increatum."

Wordsworth, Christopher, D.D., was b. at Lambeth (of which parish his father was then the rector), Oct. 30, 1807, and was the youngest son of Christopher Wordsworth, afterwards Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Priscilla (nee Lloyd) his wife. He was educated at Winchester, where he distinguished himself both as a scholar and as an athlete. In 1826 he matriculated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where his career was an extraordinarily brilliant one. He swept off an unprecedented number of College and University prizes, and in 1830 graduated as Senior Classic in the Classical Tripos, and 14th Senior Optime in the Mathematical, won the First Chancellor's Medal for classical studies, and was elected Fellow of Trinity. He was engaged as classical lecturer in college for some time, and in 1836 was chosen Public Orator for the University. In the same year he was elected Head Master of Harrow School, and in 1838 he married Susan Hatley Freere. During his head-mastership the numbers at Harrow fell off, but he began a great moral reform in the school, and many of his pupils regarded him with enthusiastic admiration. In 1844 he was appointed by Sir Robert Peel to a Canonry at Westminster; and in 1848-49 he was Hulsean lecturer at Cambridge. In 1850 he took the small chapter living of Stanford-in-the-Vale cum Goosey, in Betkshire, and for the next nineteen years he passed his time as an exemplary parish priest in this retired spot, with the exception of his four months' statutable residence each year at Westminster. In 1869 he was elevated to the bishopric of Lincoln, which he held for more than fifteen years, resigning it a few months before his death, which took place on March 20th, 1885. As bearing upon his poetical character, it may be noted that he was the bephew of the poet-laureate, William Wordsworth, whom he constantly visited at Rydal up to the time of the poet's death in 1850, and with whom he kept up a regular and lengthy correspondence. Christopher Wordsworth was a very voluminous writer, his principal works being :-

Deling:—
(1) Athens and Attica, 1836; (2) Postpeian Inscriptions, 1837; (3) Greece Pictorial and Descriptive, 1839; (4) King Bispard VIR's Latin Grammar, 1841; (5) Bentley's Correspondence, 1842; (6) Theophilus Anglicanus, 1843; (7) Memoirs of William Wordsworth, 1851; (8) S. Hippolytus, 1863; (9) Notes of Paris, 1884; (10) A Commentary on the whole Bills, 1866-1870; (11) The Holy Icar, 1863; (12) Church Bistory, 1881-1883; many volumes of Sermons, and an enormous amount of Panghlets, Addresses, Letters, Speeches, on almost every subject in which the interests of the church were concerned, and also on subjects connected with classical literature.

Of his many works, however, the only one which claims notice from the hymnologist's point of view is The Holy Year, which contains hymns, not only for every season of the Church's year, but also for every phase of that season, as indicated in the Book of Common Prayer. Dr. Wordsworth, like the Wesleys, looked upon hymns as a valuable means of stamping permanently upon the memory the great doctrines of the Christian Church. He held it to be "the first duty of a hymn-writer to teach sound doctrine, and thus to save souls." He thought that the materials for English Church hymns should be sought (1) in the Holy Scriptures, (2) in the writings of Christian Antiquity, and (3) in the Poetry of the Ancient Church. Hence he imposed upon himself the strictest limitations in his own compositions. He did not select a subject which seemed to him most adapted for poetical treatment, but felt himself bound to treat impartially every subject, and branch of a sub-ject, that is brought before us in the Church's services, whether of a poetical nature or not. The natural result is that his hymns are of very unequal merit; whether his subject inspired him with poetical thoughts or not, he was bound to deal with it; hence while some of his hymns (such as " Hark! the sound of holy voices," &c., "See the Conqueror mounts in triumph," &c., "O, day of rest and gladness") ere of a high order of excellence, others are presaic. He was particularly anxious to avoid obscurity, and thus many of his hymns are simple to the verge of baldness. But this extreme simplicity was always intentional, and to those who can read between the lines there are many traces of the "ars celans artem." It is somewhat remarkable that though in citing examples of early hymn-writers he almost always refers to those of the Western Church, his own hymns more nearly resemble those of the Eastern, as may be seen by comparing The Holy Year with Dr. Mason Neale's Hymns of the Eastern Church translated, with Notes, &c. The reason of this perhaps helf-unconscions resemblance is not far to seek. Christopher Wordsworth, like the Greek hymnwriters, drew his inspiration from Holy Scripture, and he loved, as they did, to interpret Hely Scripture mystically. He thought that "the dangers to which the Faith of England (especially in regard to the Old Testament) was exposed, arose from the abandonment of the ancient Christian, Apostolic and Patristic system of interpretation of the Old Testament for the frigid and servile modern exegesis of the literalists, who see nothing in the Old Testament but a common history, and who read it (as St. Paul says the Jews do) ' with a veil on their heart, which veil' (he adds) 'is done away in Christ." In the same spirit, he sought and found Christ everywhere in the New Testament. The Gospel History was only the history of what "Jesus began to do and to teach" on earth; the Acts of the Apostles and all the Epistles were the history of what he continued to do and to teach from Heaven; and the Apocalypee (perhaps his favourite book) was "the seal and colophon of all." Naturally he presents this theory, a theory most susceptible of poetical treatment, in his hymns even more pro-minently than in his other writings. The Greek writers took, more or less, the same view; hence the resemblance between his hymne and those of the Eastern Church.

During the time that Bp. Wordsworth was Canon of Westminster, and Vicar of Stanfordin-the-Vale cum Goosey, he published his collection of hymns as:-

The Holy Year; or Hymns for Sundays and Holy-days, And other Occasions. Lond. Rivingtons, 1862.

This work contained an extended Preface; a Calendar of Hymns; 117 Original Compositions; and a Supplement of 82 hymns from other sources. In the 3rd ed., 1863, the Supplement was omitted, and the Original hymns were increased to 127. Several of these hymns are annotated under their respective first lines, the rest in C. U. are:-

In addition to many of the hymns in the 1863 ed. of The Holy Year being divided into parts, the texts of most of them were revised by the author, and are authorized.

Wordsworth, William, the poet, the s. of an attorney, was b. at Cockermouth in 1770, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1791. Devoting himself to literature, and especially to poetry, he gradually rose into the front rank of English poets. His works include Lyrical Ballads, 1798; Poems; The Prelude; The Excursion, 1814, &c. All his poetical productions were collected and republished under his own supervision in 7 vols., in 1842. He d. at Rydal Mount, near Greemere, in 1850. Notwithstanding his rank and reputation as a poet, his pieces used as hymns are limited to the following extracts from his poems :-

 Not seldom elad in radiant vost. Christ, the neckangeside. This is No. v. of five "Inscription. Uncaungenois. This is No. v. of five "Inscriptions supposed to be found in and near a Hermit's cell, 1818." It is in 6 st. of 4 i., and is given in his Postical Works, 1887, vol. iii., p. 200. It is in Stowell's Sel. of Hyt., 1831-77; the American Physical Coll., 1835, &c.

2. Up to the throne of God is horns. Noorday. This is entitled "The Labourer's Noon-Day Hymn," is dated 2834, and is in 6 st. of 4 l. (P. Works, 1871, vol. v. p. 122.) It is in C. U. In an abridged form, beginning with st. i., and the latter part is also given in Martingard France, 1860 and "Look part is beginning. in Martineso's Howard, 1840, as "Look up to beaven, the industrious sun," as No. 535. Worship, and thanks, and blessing. C. Wesley. [Confidence in Jesus.] This hymn "Written after a Deliveranco in a Tumult," first appeared in Hymns for those that Seck. and those that have Redemption, &c., 1747, in 6 st. of 10 l. Of these st. i.-iv. and vi. were given in the Wes. H. Bk. in 1800. In an edition subsequent to that of 1809, et. iv. was also omitted, and in the revised ed., 1875, this form in 4 st. is retained. Orlg. text P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. pp. 237-9. It has been suggested that the "turnult" referred to was that which took place at Wednesbury, October 26, 1748. Although this is quite probable it yet lacks certain proof. See G. J. Stevenson's Meth. H. Bk., Notes, 1888, p. 211.

Worthy the Lamb for sinners slain. [Praise to Jesus.] This cento appeared in the General Baptist New Hymn Book, edited by the brothers J. B. and J. C. Pike Baptist Hymnody, p. 115, L.], in 1851; and was repeated in the Bapt. Hymnal, 1879, in 5 st. of 4 l. Of the cento at i., ii. are from J. Montgomery's "Sing we the song of those who stand" (p. 1060, 1), and the rest (iii.-v.) are anonymous, The Rev. W. R. Stevenson, editor of the Bapt. Hymnal, is strongly inclined to think that these stanzas were by the Rev. J. G. Pike, of Derby (with whom he was co-pastor for some time), who was the father of the brothers Pike named above: but he was not quite estisfied with his authority.

Wreford, John Reynell, p.n., b. Dec. 12, 1800, educated at Manchester College, York, and in 1826 succeeded the Rev. James Yates as co-poster to the Rev. John Kentish at the Now Meeting, Birmingham. In 1830 he pub. a tr. of Cellerier's Discourse on the Authenticity and Divine Origin of the Old Testament. In the following year, in consequence of failure of voice, he withdrew from the Ministry, and in conjunction with the Roy. Hugh Hutten, Minister of the Old Meeting, opened a school at Edgbaston. In 1832 he pub. a Sketch of the History of Presbyterian Nonconformity in Birmingham; and in 1837, Lays of Loyalty, in celebration of the Queen's accession. He also contributed, in 1837, to the Rev. J. R. Beard's Coll. of Hys. for Public and Private Worship 55 hymns, of which the following are still in C. U.:-

2. Lord. while for all manifold we pray. Rational Hymn. This is in a large number of collections of various denominations, and in by far the most popular of his hymns. Sometimes it begins with et. ill., "O! guard our shores from every foe."

4. When my leve to Unrist [God] grows weak. Patrioxitide. In Longfellow and Johnson's Unitarian Hys. of the Sports, Boston, U. S. A., 1864, "When my love to God grows weak." This is repested in Martinean's Hymns, &c., 1873 (p. 1871, i.).

Wretched, helpless, and distressed. C. Wesley. [Lent.] 1st pub. in Hys. & Sacred Poems, 1742, p. 43, in 8 st. of 8 l., as a second hymn on Rev. iii. 17. In 1780, st. ii. was emitted when the hymn was given in the Wes. H. Bk., No. 105, and in the same form it is still retained. Orig. text P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. pp. 92-94. The somewhat peculiar linea:-

" My whole heart is aick of alu, And my whole head is faint "

is furnished with this note by Dr. Osborn (P. Works as above).

"This eingular transposition of the Prophet's words (Isatah I. 5) though found in all the editions, must still be regarded as an oversight."

No evidence, however, of its being such is forthcoming, and the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, retains the old reading. [J. J.]

Wright, Philip James, was b. in London, May 1, 1810. His parents belonged to the old section of the Methodists, but not agreeing with the form of government he found. there, he withdrew, and became a member, and subsequently a minister, with the New Connexion Methodists. After labouring most successfully for several years in various circuits, he d. in 1863. His pub. works include:—The Study of Creation, 1848; The Way of Salvation, 1848; the Gathered Rose, 1858. Pariotal Hay and Salvation, 1848; Care 1868. 1858; Revival Hys. and Spiritual Songs, 1860, &c. The Revival Hys., &c., is composed of 91 of his original compositions. Of these a few were included in the Meth. New Con. Hys. for Divine Worship, 1863. "The Lord of glory left His throne" (Redemption), and "Soldiers of the Cross, Servants of the Lord" (Young Men's Societies), are still in C. U.

Wyatt, Henry Herbert, M.A., was educated at Queen's College, Oxford (n.s. 1844, n.s. 1847), and took Holy Orders in 1845. He was travelling secretary for the S. P. G., 1852-56; incumbent of Holy Trinity Chapel, Brighton, 1856-66; principal of the Brighton Training College, 1863-86; and vicar of Bolney, Sussex, 1872-86. In 1886 he became rector of Conington, Ely. Mr. Wyatt has pub. Principal Heresies relating to our Lord's Incarnation, 1881; The Gospel according to St. Matthew, with Explanatory Notes for the Use of Teachers in Schools, 1884; and Ps. and Hys. for Public Worship, 1859 (4th ed., 1868). To this Coll. he contributed in 1859 his well known hymn for National Thanksgiving, "God the Lord has flath! heard our prayer," It is the Lord has [hath] heard our prayer. It is given in several collections, including the S. P. C. K. Church Hys., 1871; Thring's Coll., 1882, and others.

Wyn, Elis, the Author of Bardd Cwag, was b. near Harlech, Merionethshire, in the year 1670. He stands unrivalled as a Welsh prose writer. He was induced by Bishop Humphreys to enter Holy Orders, and was ordained descon and priest on the same day, and on the next presented to the Rectory of Lianuair. He held at the same time other In 1708 appeared his admired work, Gweledigaethau y Bardd Crosg, or the "Visions of the Sleeping Bard," which in whiten in the Welsh language. In 1710 he was charged by the Eishops of Wales to superintend a new edition of the Book of Common Prayer. His "Emyn Cynhebrwng" or Funcrat Hymn is found in all Welsh hymnels. He d. in July, 1734, and was buried under the communion table in Llanfair Church.

Xavier, St. Francis, the great missionary saint of the Roman Catholic Church, was the s. of Don John Giasso and Donna Maria d'Azpilquota y Xavier; he was b. at the cestle Xavier, near Pampeluna, Spain, on April 7, 1506, and is known to history by his mother's name. At the age of eighteen he entered the University of Paris, where in due course he graduated, and then devoted himself to teaching. It was here that he became acquainted with Ignatius Loyels the founder of the Jesuits, who was then planning the colossat work which he afterwards accomplished. Xavier became one of the first nine of Loyola's converts, and the most enthusiastic of the little band. The date of the formation of the Order of the Jesuits is given as Aug. 15, 1534, and the place as Moutmartre near Paris. Wo find Xavier at Venice with Loyola in 1587, where the visitation of a hospital for in-curables was assigned to him. Here in the discharge of his duties he gave early evidence of his enthusiasm and self-devotion. He subsequently visited Rome, where with Loyola and others of the Order he was brought, through the influence of the Rector of the University of Paris, who was then at Rome. to the notice of John III. of Portugal, who desired some of them for mission work in India. Circumstances led to the selection of Xavier for the work. He left Rome in March 1540, and set sail on April 7, 1541, for Goa, the chief city of the Portuguese possessions, where he arrived on May 6, 1542. From that time to the day of his death at Sancian, near Canton, on Dec. 22, 1552, he devoted himself to his work in a most heroic and devoted manner, visiting Travancore, Ceylon, Malacca, Japan, and other heathen lands with Cross in hand, and a burning zeal in his heart. Xavior's life has been written by many hands. The roll of deeds which he is said to have done, and the miracles he is said to have wrought, even to the raising of the dead, is long, but many of the alleged facts are open to the gravest doubt, and others are beyond belief. The hymns which are associated with Xavier's name are, "O Deus ego amo Te, Nam prior Tu amasti me "(p. 596, 1.), and "O Deus ego amo Te, Ncc amo Te ut salves me " (p. 696, ii.). That the first was written by him is most improbable, the evidence in his favour being absolutely nil. The second may possibly be his (see as above), it breathes his abnegation of self in every word, his spirit in every line. See Murray's Mag. for Oct. 1890, for an interesting account of Gos, and its Cathedral, where Xavier lies buried. [J. J.]

Ye boundless realms of joy. Tate & Brady. [Ps. calviii.] Appeared in the New Version, 1696, in 8 st. of 8.1. It is seldom if ever found in its full form in modern collections, but usually as a cento. The metre. which is now somewhat common, is an imitation of John Pullain's version of the same pasim in the Anglo-Generan Pealter, 1561. Pullain's use of this metre is the first instance known in English Psalmody. [Old Version, § ix.] [J. J.]

Ye Christian heroes [heralds], go, proclaim. Draper, B. H. [Farewell to Missionaries.] This is one of two hymns compiled from a poem which first appeared in a newspaper as "Ruler of worlds, display Thy power;" then in Hys. Orig. & Scient., de., Portland, Maine, 1805, divided as two hymns; and again, as a complete poem, in the Baptist Magazine, vol. viii. 1816, p. 88, where it is given in 28 lines, and begins: "Sovereign of worlds, display Thy power." The hymns compiled therefrom are:— complied therefrom are:—

1. Sovereign of worlds, diaplay Thy power. This cento in 4 st. of 4 l. was given in Frati's Ft. & Hys., 1829. No. 467, as a "Frayer for the Conversion of the World," and is composed of [l. 1-12, 12-20, slightly altered.

2. Ye Christian heroes! go, proclaim. This hymn is composed of [l. 17-28 slightly altered. It is found in several collections, including the Physical Coll., 1855; the Bap. Praint Bk., 1871, and others. In the Explosion H. Bk., 1883; the Songs for the Sunctuary, 1885; Hys. and Songs of Praise, 1874, &c., it begins "Ye Christian heraids, go, proclaim."

The modern use of these hymns is mainly confined to America. [J. J.]

Ye indolent and slothful! rise. S. Martin. [Industry.] First appeared as No. 12 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1781, as a version of Proverbe vi. 6-12, in 4 st. of 4 lines. In the public worship ed. of the Trs. and Paraphs, issued in that year by the Church of Scotland, and still in use, Il. 1, 3, 4, of st. iii. were altered. The markings of the Trs. and Paraphs. by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200, il.) ascribe the original to I. Watts (in whose works we have falled to find it), and the alterations of 1781, to Cameron. In the Free Church Magazine, for 1847, p. 271, it is pretty clearly shown to be by Martin. Martin is there said to have sent in to the Committee versions of other portions of Holy Scripture, which, though not inserted by them, in the Trs. and Paraphs., he probably justly enough regarded as superior to this. [J. M.]

Ye nations exult; Salvation is nigh. [Epiphany.] This hymn appeared in the British Magazine, May, 1832, p. 283, in 6 st. of 41, and signed "B. J. W." It has been of the state and the several collections, including Kennedy, 1863, &c. In Mercer's Ch. Pa. and H. Bk., Oxford ed., 1864, it begins "Ye nations rejoice, Salvation is nigh." [J. J.]

Ye neighbours and friends Of Jesus, draw near. C. Wesley. [Thanksgiving for Success of the Gospel.] This is No. 4 of four hymns written after preaching to the New-castle colliers, and was pub. in the Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1749, vol. i., and again in the P. Works, 1868-72, vol. v., p. 115. Under the date of Nov. 30, 1746, Jackson in his Memoir of the Rev. Charles Wesley, says;

"The very spirited hymn beginning 'Ye neighbours, and friends of Jesus, draw near,' was written by Mr. Charles Wesley 'after preaching to the Newcastic colliers,' and most probably during his present visit to that town. Under the date of Sunday, Nov. 36, he uses in his Journal the phraseology upon which the hymn is founded. On that day he preached in one of the stress of Newcastle to listening crowds, who forgot the sharpness of the frost while engaged in the worship of Gcd.

and in bearing the word of life and mercy." (Small ed., 1848, p. 191.)

The hymn is in 12 st. of 4 double lines. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, sts. i., ii., viii,-xii. were given as No. 38, and this has become its recognized form in later collections. [J. J.]

Ye principalities and powers. Ramon. [Burial.] 1st pub. in the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 858, in 5 st. of 4 L, and again in the author's Hymns, Verses, &c., 1876, p. 114. In the Bap. Ps. & Hys., 1858, No. 616, it was given with the emission of st. i., and began "Though tears will fall and hearts are stirred," This form of the text is repeated in later collections.

Ye royal priests of Jesus, rise. C. Wesley. [Holy Communion.] 1st pub in his Hye. on the Lord's Supper, 1745, No. 187, in 7 st. of 4 l.; again in later editions of the same; and in P. Works of J. & C. Wesley, 1868-70, vol. iii. pp. 819-320. Its use is not extensive. This hymn is one of the most pronounced of C. Wesley's hymns on "The Lord's Supper." It is based on a portion of Dr. Brevint's work on The Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice, sect. vi. 2. "Concerning the Secrement, as it is a Secrifice. And first, of the Commemorative Sacrifice":-

the Commemorative Secrifice, which by a read oblaing was not to be offered more than once, is by a devout and thankful commemoration to be offered up every day. This is what the apostle calls, to sat forth the death of the Lord; to sat is forth as well before the eyes of God His Father as before the eyes of men; and what St. Austin explained, when he said the holy fiesh of Jesna was offered in three manners: by prefiguring sacrifices under the law before His coming into the world, in read dead upon His cross, and by a commemorative Szcrament after He sacended into beaven. All comes to this: (1) That the socrifice in itself can never be repeated; (2) That nevertheless this Sacrament, by our remembrance, becomes a kind of sacrifice, whereby we present before God the Father that practious oblation of His Son once offered. And thus do we every day offer unto God the mentiorious unferings of our Lord; as the only sure ground whereon God may give, and we the only sure ground whereon God may give, and we obtain, the blessings we pray for," &c. P. Works, 1968-70, vol. ill. p. 243.

It is curious to note how faithfully C. Wesley reproduces Dr. Brevint's views not only of this aspect of the Holy Communion, but also of its daily administration. It is desirable that all C. Wesley's Hys. on the Lord's Supper be read with the extracts from Dr. Brevint's work, upon which they are based, and with which they are published in the P. Works, as [J. J.]

Ye saints! in blest communion. J. S. B. Monsell. [Saints Days, Special and General.] Pub in his Hys. of Love and Praise, 1863, p. 186, and composed of 5 opening stanzas of 8 l.: 19 st. for special days, as 8t. Andrew, 8t. Thomas, and others; and a concluding doxology. In this form it was repeated in his Parish Hymnal, 1873, and in both instances directions were given in a note as to the use which might be made of these 28 st. for special festivals. This hymn suggested to Earl Nelson his well-known "From all Thy saints in warfare, for all Thy saints at rest," p. 898, ii. [J. J.]

Ye servants of God, Your Master proclaim. C. Wesley. [Missions.] Pub. in Hys. for Times of Trouble and Persecution, be sung in Tumult" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 51). It is given in its full, or in an abbreviated form in several of the older collections, and especially those of the Church of England. In 1830 a cento was included in the Supplement of the Wes. H. Bk., No. 557, st. i.-v. being from this hymn, and st. vi. from C. Wosley's Funeral Hys., 1746, No. 6, st. v. In the revised ed. of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, this last stanza was omitted, [J. J.]

Ye servants of the Lord, Each in his office wait. P. Doddridge. [Christian Activity and Zeal.] Appeared in J. Orton's posthumous ed. of Doddridge's Hymns, &c., 1755, No. 210, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed, "The active Christian"; and again in J. D. Humphreys's ed. of the same, 1839, No. 234. It is in extensive use, and usually in its original form. Sometimes, however, st. v. I. 3, And raise that favourite Servant's head," is altered to "And raise that faithful servant's

Ye simple souls that stray. C. Wesley (?). [Exhortation.] 1st pub. in Hys. for those that Seek and those that Have Redemption, 1747, in 7 st. of 8 l. In 1780 it was given in the Wes. H. Bk., No. 21, with considerable alterations, and the emission of st. iii. The authorship of this hymn has been a matter of dispute for many years, some claiming it for John Wesley on the authority of Mr. Henry Moore, and others for Charles on the word of Dr. Whitehead. The work in which it appeared is known to have been pub. by the two brothers, and the contents were unsigned. Under these circumstances the difficulty of determining the authorship is great. There is some probability in the suggestion that it was written by Charles, and that the extensivo alterations made therein for the Wes. H. Bk., in 1780, were the work of his brother. Original taxt, P. Works, 1868-72, vol. iv. p. 230. [J. J.]

Ye sons of earth, prepare the plough. W. Comper. [The Source.] Pub. in the Oney Hymns, 1779, Bk. i., No. 85, in 6 st. of 4 l., and entitled, "The Sower." It is in several modern collections, but it does not rank in popularity with many of Cowper's hymns. [J. J.]

Ye that pass by, behold the man. C. Wesley. [Good Friday.] 1st pub. in Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1742, in 18 at. of 4 1. and entitled, "A Passion Hymn" (P. Works, 1868-72, vol. ii. p. 70). In the Wes. H. Bk., 1780, 15 at. were given as No. 24, the omitted st being it., iv., and vii. In the 1809 cd. of that collection the hymn is divided into two parts, pt. ii. beginning with "O Thou dear suffering Son of God." Many expressions in the hymn, such as "Give me to feel Thy agonies," and others, have been much criticised from time to time, and this may possibly account for the emission of the hymn from the revised edition of the Wes. H. Bk., 1875. Both parts, however, are still in use in G. Britain and America. [J. J.]

Xe that put on the heavenly crown. G. Rawson [Burial. Easter.] Contributed to the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, in 6 st. of 4 1, 1744, in 6 st. of 4 l., as No. 1 of "Hymns to No. 856. In 1858 st. iii. vi. were given as.

"Glory to Him Who tasted death," in the Bap. Fs. & Hys., No. 273; and have been continued in later editions. The reason of this curtailment of the hymn probably arose from objections to the opening stanzas, and especially to the lines:-

" Brethren in glory, bend ye down, And aid our faitering hymn."

The abbreviation has however changed a funeral hymn into one for Easter. In 1876 Mr. Rawson republished the full text in his Hymns, with the simple change in st. ii. l. 4, of "beside" to "so near the grave."

Ye whose hearts are beating high. [Palm Sunday.] Given in his Christian Year, 1827, as the Poem for Palm Sunday, in 6 st. of 8 l., and based on St. Luke xix. 40. In the Leeds H. Bk., 1853, No. 206, it is given in an altered form as "Come, all grateful human hearts." [J. J.]

Ye wretched, hungry, starving poor. Anne Steele. [The Gospel Feast.] 1st pub. in her Poems Chiefly Devotional, &c., 1760, vol. i., p. 17, in 7 st. of 41., and headed "Longing Souls invited to the Gospel-Feast, Luke xiv. 22;" also in the ed. of 1780, and D. Sedgwick's reprint of her Hymns, &c., 1863, p. 10. From this hymn the following abbreviated texts and centos have come into C.U.:-

I, Ye wretched, hungry, starving poor. In Ash and Evens's Bristol Bap. Coll., 1769, No. 144, and later hymnbooks. Usually st. vil. is omitted.

2. Xs wretched, starving poor. This in the American Church Pasterals, Boston, 1864, is composed of st. L.-iv. rewritten from c.w. into s.w.

8. See, Jesus stands with open arms. In the American Bap. Service of Song, 1871, beginning with st. il. In the N. Y. Church Praise EL., 1882, st. iv. is also

4. Lo, Jesus stands with open arms. This in the American Prots, Episco. Additional and Selected Hys. Jross H. A. & M., Sto., N.Y., 1869 is composed of st. ii., v.-vii. slightly altered.

Through these various forms this hymn is somewhat widely used.

Yea, thou hast drained thy Master's eup. [Conversion of St. Paul.] This cento is in W. J. Blew's Church Hy. and Tune Bk., This cento 1852-55; and Rice's Sel. from the same, 1870, No. 120, in 7 st. of 4 l. St. i.-iii. are a tr. from "Sudore sat tuo fides"; and iv.-viii.

"Sat Paule sat terris datum." Both from "Sat Paule sat terris datum." Both hymns are by G. de la Brunetiere, in the Paris Brev. of 1680. The frs. are by Mr. Blow. [J. J.]

Yes, God is good! in earth and sky. [Goodness of God in nature; or, Flower Services.] The history of this popular hymn is somewhat curious and intricate. It is of American origin and came into modern hymnbooks in the following manner:-

 The original hymn appeared in Hys. for Children, Boston, U.S.A., 1825, in 6 st. of 4 l., the opening stanza reading :--

"God is good! each perfumed flower,
The smiling fields, the dark green wood,
The insect fluttering for an hour;
All things proclaim that God is good!"

The editor of this collection is not named. Possibly it may have been Mrs. Follen, the writer of the lymn. The false motre of the opening line (7's instead of 8's) was probably a misprint. In several instances this line has been republished, notwithstanding the clearness of the error. (See p. 880, i. 4.)

2. In Emily Taylor's Sabbath Recreations, Wellington, Salop, 1826, p. 203, this text was given as an original piece never before published, and signed "E. L. C.," the initials of Mrs. Follen's maiden name. Possibly it was sent in Ms. to Miss Taylor, before it was printed in the Boston Hys. for CMldren.
3. In J. R. Beard's English Unitarian Coll.

of Hys., 1837, it is included as "Yes, God is good! each perfumed flower."

4. The Boston Hys. for Children, or more probably a little undated work called Geme of American Postry, fell into the hands of J. H. Gurney whilst engaged in compiling his Lutterworth Coll. of Hys. for Public Worship. In that Coll., in 1838, No. 299, appeared Gurney's version of the hymn as follows:—st. i., Mrs. Follen, "Yes, God is good! each perfumed flower;" st. ii., iii., new; st. iv., il. 1, 2, Mrs. Follen, Il. 3, 4, new; st. v., new.

5. The Ps. & Hys. for Pub. Worship, Sel. for some of the Churches in Marylebone, was pub. by Guruey and others, in 1851. No. 300 is Gurnoy's final revision of the hymn. Of this text st. i., by Gurney, reade:-

" Yea, Gon is Goon,-in earth and sky, From ocean-depths and spreading wood, Ten thousand voices seem to cry, 'God made us all, and God is 6000.'"

The remaining stanzas are:-st. ii.-v., repeated from the Lutterworth Coll. as above, and st. vi. is new. To this hymn and another "We saw Thee not when Thou didst come") (p. 1248, i.) Gurney added the following note in the Index of first lines:-

"This hymn ['We saw Thee not,' &c.], and the last hymn in the book, 'Yee, God is good,' were suggested by two posms in a small American volume, which were well conceived, but very imperfectly executed. Successive alterations have left nothing of the original compositions remaining but the first four words, and the repeated words in each hymn. With this acknowledgment, the writer has not scrupled to put his name to them—J. H. G."

In this note Gurney has overlooked the fact that, in "Yes, God is good," st. iv., ll. 1, 2 are direct from Mrs. Follen. This form of the hymn, in full or in an abbreviated form, is in extensive use.

6. In the Methodist S. S. H. Bk., 1879, No. 73, beginning "Almighty God, Thy works abound" is thus composed: st. i., ii., Anon.; st. iii., viii., from Gurney, 1851, as above.

7. Mrs. Folion's hymn was pub. in a revised form in her Poems, Boston, W. Crosby & Co., 1839, p. 119, as "God, Thou art good, each perfumed flower." It was also repeated in the English ed. of her Poems, pub. as The Lark and The Linnet, Hys., Songs, and Fobles, London, Addey & Co., 1854, p. 12, where it begins:—"Thou art good! Each perfumed flower." Putnam, in his Singers and Songs of the Liberal Faith, Boston, 1875, gives the text from the Poems of 1839. [J. J.]

Yes, Lord, my joyful thanks to Thee. S. Browne. [Giving Thanks.] Pub. in his Hys. and Spiritual Songs, &c., 1720, Bk. i., No. 151, in 5 st. of 4 l., and headed "Giving thanks to God always in all things." In Martineau's Hymns, &c., 1840, and again in his Hymns, &c., 1873, it is given as "Great God, my joyful thanks to Thee." [J. J.]

Yes, there are little once in Heaven. T. R. Taylor. [Infants' Hymn.] This hymn appeared in the Protestant Dissenters Juvenile Magazine, 1833, and again in T. R. Taylor's Memoirs and Select Remains, 1836, p. 245, in 5 st. of 6 l. It is found in C. U. in its original form; and also rewritten as "Children's voices high in heaven," in the Bapt. Ps. & Hys., 1858, No. 959, and later collections. The rewritten form of the text is by Mr. George Rawson, and was made for the Bapt. Ps. & Hys., 1858. ՐJ. J.)

Yet a little while: the Lord Gave His saints this precious word. Lady Campbell, née Malcolm. [Second Advent.] The first stanza was written early in Nov., and the remaining two on Dec. 26, 1830, and subsequently pub. in lithograph from the author's ass. It was included in J. G. Deck's Ps. and Hys., Lond., D. Welther, 1842. Pt. i., No. 169; in Walker's Cheltenham Ps. & Hys., 1855; in Harland's Ch. Pealter & Hyl., and others. (J. J.j

Yet there is room! The Lamb's bright hall of song. H. Benar. [Parable of the Marriage Supper.] This most appropriste hymn for Home Missions appeared in 1878. It has been somewhat widely adopted, and is given in the collections of Snepp, Sankey, Thring, and others, and is worthy of [J, J.] this attention.

Yonge, Charlotte Mary, dan. of William Crawley Yougo of the 52nd Regiment, was b. at Otterbourne, Hants, in 1823. Mies Yongo is widely known as the author of The Heir of Redeluffe, The Daisy Chain, and other popular novels; of a series of historical works for the young, including Stories of English History, 1874, Stories of Greek History, 1876, &c.; of the Life of Bishop Patteson; and as the Editor of the Monthly Packet. In 1841 Miss Yonge contributed two hymns to The Child's Christian Year, which was edited by her mother (see below). The hymns are:—
(1) "Into Christ's flock we are received" (Hoty Baptism); (2) "Why lived I not in those blest days?" (St Thomas). [J. J.]

Yonge, Frances Mary, née Bargus, was b. Jan. 13, 1795, was married to William Conwiey Yonge of the 52nd Regiment, and d. Sep. 28, 1868. Mrs. Yonge pub. in 1841, The Child's Christian Year, with a Preface by John Keble. The contents are mainly by J. Anstice, J. H. Newman, I. Williams, and Mrs. Yonge, with a few hymns by Miss Yonge, Mrs. Mczley, T. Whytehead, J. Keble, and others. Mrs. Yonge's hymns are:—

1. Behold a Prophet,-yea, and more. St. John

A. Petrona.

2. His are the cattle on the bill. All things for God.

3. Not only as a sacrifice. Jerus the Reample.

4. Put far from us, O Lord, we pray. Advent.

5. The Assyrian King in splendour came. Defeat of the securious.

The use of these hymns is limited. [J. J.]

You now must hear my voice no more. W. Robertson. [Ascensiontide.] First appeared as No. 13 in the Draft Scottlish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, as a version of John xiv., 25-29, in 6 st. of 4 l. and slightly altered in the revised ed. issued in 1751. In the Draft of 1781 it was included as No. 43, considerably altered, and with the Trs. & Paraphs, issued in that year by the Church of Scotland and still in use, st. ii. was re-written, and st. i., l. 8, st. iii., l. 1. were altered from the Draft. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron (p. 200. ii.) the original is ascribed to Robertson, and the alterations in 1781 to Cameron. revised text of 1781 is included in the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hys., 1867, and a few other modern hymnals. (Compare the version of the same passage of Holy Scripture "Peace it was our Saviour's blessing," No. 73, in Miss Lecson's Paraphs. & Hys. for Cong. Singing, 1853.) [J. M.]

You who dwell above the skies. GSandys. [Ps. czlviii.] This fine rendering of Ps. exlviii. appeared in his Paraphrase of the Pealmes, 1636, in 40 l. It was republished in his Paraphrases upon the Divine Poems, 1638, and in later editions. Also in the Library of Old Authors. In the Wes. H. Bk., 1875, No. 689, it is given in 9 st. of 4 l. as "Ye, who dwoll above the skies," where the text is but slightly altered. It is worthy of more extended use than is accorded to it in modern hymnals. [See Paalters, English, § x.] [J. J.]

You who the Name of Jesus bear. [Humiliation and Exaltation of Christ.] First appeared as No. 7 in the Draft Scottish Translations and Paraphrases, 1745, as a version of Phil. ii., 6-12, in 7 st. of 4 l. Tho author is unknown. In the revised edition, issued in 1751, st. iii. vii. were altered, and this form was included, slightly altered, as No. 52 in the Draft of 1781 beginning "Ye who the Name of Jesus bear." In the public worship ed. of the Trs. and Paraphs. Issued in that year by the Church of Scotland, and still in use, st. v. was re-written, and st. ii., Il. 2-4, st. vi. l. 1 attered. In the markings by the eldest daughter of W. Cameron. (p. 200, ii.) the original is ascribed to Isase Wetts (in whose works it is not to be found) and the alterations of 1781 to Cameron. The revised text of 1781 is included in Pratt's Coll., 1829, the Eng. Presb. Ps. & Hys., 1867, and a few other modern hymnels. St. v.-vii, beginning "Hence God this generous love to men," were included, with an added doxology, in the Twickenham Chapel Coll., 1845, p. 58. In Miss Leeson's Paraphs, and Hys. for Cong. Singing, 1853, it is slightly altered as pt. 1. of No. 81; her pt. ii., beginning "Hail, name of Jesus! glorious name," being partly from "All hail the power of Jesna' name." [J. M.]

Young, Andrew, second s. of David Young, for more than fifty years a most efficient teacher in Edinburgh, was b. at Edinburgh, April 28, 1807. After passing through a distinguished eight years' literary and theological course at the University of Edinburgh, he was appointed in 1830, by the Town Council, Head Master of Niddry Street School, Edinburgh, where he began with 80 pupils, and left with the total at 600. In 1840 he became Head English Master of Madras College, St. Andrews, where he was equally successful. He retired from St. Andrews in 1853, and lived in Edinburgh, where he was for some time the Superintendent of the Greenside Parish Sabbath School. He st, v., vi. omitted. In the public worship ed. of | d. Nov. 80, 1889. Many of Mr Young's hymns and poems were contributed to periodicals. A collected edition of these was pub. in 1876, as The Scottish Highlands and Other Poems. His poems entitle him to rank in the first order of Scottish minor poets. Some of his hymns are very sweet. His "There is a happy land" (q. v.) has attained great popularity. He d. July 18, 1891. [J. M.]

Young children once to Jesus came. Jane Taylor. [Christ receiving little children.] This hynn was given in the 1st ed. of Hys. for Infant Minds, 1810, as "As infants once to Christ were brought." In the 4th ed., 1812, the opening line was altered to "Young children once to Jesus came," and this is repeated in the revised ed. of 1886. It is in 6 st. of 41. and based upon the words "Suffer little children to come unto me." It is given in several modern collections for children.

Your harps, ye trembling saints. A. M. Toplady. [Encouragement to Believers.] Printed in the Gospel Magazine, Feb. 1772. In 8 st. of 8 l., and headed "Weak Believers Encouraged." It was included in his Hys. on Sacred Subjects, &c., London, W. H. Collingridge, 1856; and in D. Sedgwick's ed of his Hys. and Sacred Poems, 1860. Several abbreviated forms of the text, all beginning with the original first line, are in C. U. in G. Britain and America. There is also in American use a cento beginning "If through unruffled seas," in 4 st. of 4 l., of which st. ii.-lv. sre from this lymn, and stanza i. is by another hand. It is given in the Songs for the Sanctuary, 1865, the Laudes Domini, 1884, and others.

Z

Zage nicht wenn sich der Himmel. [Cross and Consolation.] Included in J. Köbner's Christliche Harfentöne, Hamburg, 1840, p. 150, in 6 st. of 4 l., entitled "Guidance." No author's name is given. The tr. in C. U. is "Tremble not, though darkly gather." A good tr. expanding st. ii. as fi., iii., by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 1st ser., iii., by Miss Borthwick, in H. L. L., 1st ser., last, p. 19 (1884, p. 24). Included in Giifillan's Sci., Dandee, 1875, No. 51. [J. M.]

Zeller, Christian Heinrich, s. of Christian David Zeller, Hofrath at Hohenentringen, near Tübingen, was b. at Hohenentringen, March 29, 1779. He matriculated at the University of Tübingen in 1797, as a student of law. After completing his studies he chose, however, the profession of teaching. He became director of the Latin School at Zoffingen, Switzerland, in 1809, and finally removed in April, 1820, to Beuggen on the Rhine (Baden), near Basel, as director of the newly founded Institution there, meant for the education of poor children and for the training of teachers for poor children. He d. at Beuggen, May 18, 1860 (Koch, vii. 188, &c.).

Zeller was best known as an educationist, and in connection with the working of the Institution at Beuggen. Itis hymns, which are simple, Scriptoral and sarrest, were written primarily for use at Beuggen, and mostly appeared in the Bonateblatt (begun in 1928), and other publications of the Institution. They came into notice through their reception into Kospp's Ev. L. S., 1837. They were collected by Zeller's son, and pub. in 1871, as Lieder der Armenschuliehrer-Anstalt Bengen, 58 being original. Two of these hymne have passed into English, viz.:—

i. Gott bei mir an jedem Orte. Omnipresence. On the joy of God's Presence with us. This appeared in the Monateblatt in 1828, and was included in the 1871 as above, p. 88. In Knapp's Es. L. S., 1837, No. 32 (1865, No. 32), in 6 st. of 6 l.; in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 1554, &c. The tr. in C. U. is:—

My God with me in every place. This is a good tr., omitting st. v., by Mrs. Findlater in H. L. L., 1st Ser., 1854, p. 30 (1884, p. 33); repeated, omitting st. iv., in Holy Song, 1869, No. 588. In Miss Warner's Hys. of the Ch. Militant, 1858, it begins, "My God is with me every place."

Another tr. is: "God in every place is near me." By R. Massie, in the British Heraid, May, 1865, p. 70, and In Reld's Praise Bk., 1872, No. 438.

ii. Trener Reiland, wir sind hier. Public Worship. This is in the 1871 as above, p. 84. Included in Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837, No. 857 (1865, No. 1256), in 5 st. of 7 l.; and repeated in the Württemberg G. B., 1842, No. 235. For this hymn Conrad Kocher wrote the well-known melody which in H. A. & M. is called Diz, and which 1st appeared, set to Zeller's hymn, in Kocher's Stimmen aus dem Reiche Gottes, Stuttgart, 1838, No. 201. Tr. as:—

Saviour, here to Thee we come. This is a free tr. of st. i., ii., v., marked as by "F. C. C.," as No. 155 in Dr. Pagenstecher's Coll., 1864. [J. M.]

Zeuch ein zu deinen Thoren. P. Gerhardt. [Whiteuntide.] Appeared as No. 157 in the Crüger-Runge G. B., 1653, in 12 st. of 8 l., viz. st. i.-viii., xii., xii., xiv., xvi. of the full form. St. xv. was added in J. G. Ebeling's ed. of Gerhardt, 1666-67, No. 1xxx., and st. ix.-xi. in J. H. Feustking's edition of the same, 1707. The full form in 16 st. is in Wackernagel's ed. of his Geistliche Lieder, No. 32, in Bachmann's ed., No. 25, and the Unn. L. S., 1851, No. 184. It was probably written during the Thirty Years' War. The tre. in C. U. are:—

1. Retake thy own Possessian. A free tr., omitting st. x.-xii., in pt. ii., 1725, of J. C. Jacobi's Psalmodia Germanica, p. 9. In his ed. of 1732, p. 46, it is greatly altered, and begins, "In me resume thy dwelling." From this form the trs. of st. i., vl., xvi. were included unaltered in the Scottish Evang. Union H. Bk., 1856.

2. Come to Thy temple here on earth. A good tr. emitting st. lv. by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Germanica, lat Ser., 1855, p. 113. From this the trs. of st. i., ii., viii., xii., were repeated in the Pennaylvania Luth H. Rh. 1865 in the Pennsylvania Luth. H. Bh., 1865.

8. 0 enter, Lord, Thy temple, A good tr. of st. i., ii., v.-viii., xiv., xvi. based on her L. G. version by Miss Winkworth in her C. B. for England, 1863, No. 71. Included in full and unaltered as Nos. 482, 483 in Dr. Thomas's Augustine H. Bh., 1866; No. 483, beginning "All love is thine, O Spirit" (st. vii.). In the Pennsylvania Luth. Ch. Bh., 1868, No. 250 is st. i.—ii., vi., viii., and in the Ohio Luth. Hyl., 1880, No. 106 is st. i., ii., v., xiv., xvi.

Other trs. are: (1) "Retake thy own possession. Thou glorious Guest of Hearts," in Scient H. from Ger. Prof. Tranquebar, 1764, p. 43, and the Suppl. to Ger. Prof. ed., 1765, p. 26. (2) "Come, O Thou Holy Dove," by Miss Duan, 1864, p. 104. (3) "Come, enter Thing own portal," by Miss Our, 1864, p. 117. [J. M.]

Zihn, Johann Friedrich, was b. Sept. 7, 1650, at Suhl, in Thuringis. After studying for some time at the University of Leipzig, he went to Wittenberg, where he graduated m.a. in 1675; and in 1679 was appointed rector of the school at Suhl. In 1690 he became diaconus, and in 1708 archidaconus at Suhl, and d. there, Jan. 16, 1719 (Wetzel, iii. 470; Koch, v. 419, &c.). Zihn contributed five hymns (Nos. 526-580) to the Schleusingen G. B., 1688, the title of which begins, Der himmlischer Freude zeitlicher Vorschmack. One has been tr., viz.:—

Gott lebet zoch. Scele was verzagst du dech. Cross and Consolation. 1688 as above, No. 529, in 8 st. of 10 l., marked as by M. J. F. Z. In each stanza II. I., 2 are as quoted above, and II. 9, 10 are the refrain,

"Seele I so gedenke doch; Lebt doch unser Herr Gott noch."

It is a fine hymn, founded on Jer. z. 10. Koch says it was written in 1682. Included in Freylinghausen's Neuses geistroiches G. B., 1714, and recently in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1863, No. 844. The fr. in C. U. in:—

God liveth ever! This is a good and full version, by Miss Winkworth in her Lyra Ger., 1st Ser., 1855, p. 33. Repeated in full in Miss Warner's Hys. of the Church Militant, 1858, and in Bp. Ryle's Coll., 1860. Varying centos are included in the Cumbrae H. Bh.; Flett's Coll., Paisley, 1871, and the Brow Hyd., 1871. The form heginning "Our God is good; in every place," in the Hys. of the Spirit, Boston, U. S., 1864, is from 11. 3-6 of st. i., iii., vi., viii.

Other tra. and:—
(1) "God liveth still! Trust," &c. By Miss Cox, 1804, p. 129; repeated in the Gilman-Schaff Lib. of Rel.
Poetry, 1881. (2) "God liveth still! Wherefore," &c.
By R. Massle, in the Day of Rest, 1877, vol. vi. p. 326, Zinzendorf, Christian Renatus, Count von, second s. of Nicolans Ludwig von Zinzendorf, was b. Sept. 19, 1727, at Herrnhut, in Saxony. He received his education from his parents, and from Johann Langguth and others of the Brethren. He was the only son that survived his boyhood, early accompanied his father on his journeys, and was, e.g., in 1743, for sixteen days imprisoned with him at Riga. From 1744 to 1750 he lived mostly at Herrenbaag in Wetteravia, ministering specially to the single Brethren. When the community at Herrenbaag was dissolved in 1750, his father summoned him to London. He brought with him the seeds of consumption, which developed in England. He d. in London, May 28, 1752 (Koch, v., 312; Hist. Nachricht (to the Brüder G. B., 1778), 1835, p. 192, &c.).

Brider G. B., 1778), 1835, p. 192, &c.).
C. R. von Zinzendorf's hymns were principally written during his residence in London. They are by no means free from the faults and mannerisms of that sentimental and fantastic period of Moravian hymn-writing; and their range of subjects is very limited. Their burden is a deep and intense personal devotion to the crucified Savlour; the spirit being that of his favourite saying, "I have but one passion, and that is He, only He." They were collected by his father, and pub. (with a preface dated March 18, 1785), as the lat Appendix to the London G. S. of 1754, with 63 (54) pieces, 9 of which consist of only one sistana, 2nd ed. 1749 (See p. 765, ii.). Most of them passed into the Brider G. B. of 1778. Few have passed into English use in non-Moravian hymn-books.

Three of these hymns may here be referred to:—

Ach lass and allen Tritten. Sanctification,
 Written in 1751. Included in the Aleine Brüder
 G. B., London, 1754. It is No. 64 in the 2nd ed., 1760, of the Appx. of 1755, and repeated as st. ii. of No. 380, in the Brüder G. B., 1778.
 The tr. in C. U. is:—

Lord Jesus, Thy atenement. This is No. 427 in the Moravian H. Bk., 1789 (1849, No. 588), repeated in Bickersteth's Christ. Psalmody, 1833.

ii. Für uns ging mein Herr in Todesmöthen. Passiontide. This is included as No. 166 in the Brüder G. B., 1778, in 10 st. of 8 l. It is a cento from three hymns in the Appx. of 1755, as above, viz. st. 1-5, 8, 9 are st. 12-15, 17, 11, 18, of No. 28 (this hymn begins "Ach du unaussprechlich nahes Herze"); st. 6, 7 are st. 2, 3, of No. 10; while st. 10 is No. 17. The text of 1778 is in the Berlin G. L. S., ed. 1833, No. 280. The tr. in C. U. is:—

By Bedeemer, everwhelm'd with anguish. By J. Swertner, in full, from the 1778 text, as No. 78 in the Maranian H. Bk., 1789 (1849, No. 93). The trs. of st. 1, 2, 6-8, were included in Walker's Coll., Cheltenham, 1855. In the Maranian H. Bk., 1886, No. 82, it begins with st. vi. "Our enraptured hearts shall ne'er be weary."

iii. O susse Beelenweite. This is noted at p. 467, ii.

Not including the above the English Moravian H. Bk., 1886, gives seven bymns with his name, and ascribes portions of four others to him.

Einzendorf, Nicolaus Lurlwig, Count von, was b. at Dresden, May 26, 1700; was educated at the Paedegogium at Halle (1710-1716), and at the University of Wittenberg (1716-1719); became Hof- und Justizrath at the Saxon court at Dresden in the autumn of 1721; received a license to preach from the Theological Faculty of the University of Tübingen in 1734; was consecrated Bishop of the Moravian Brethren's Unity at Berlin, May 10, 1737; and d. at Herrnhut, May 9, 1760.

An adequate skotch of the life and labours of this remarkable man would far exceed the limits of our space. The details of his life are fully given in his Leben, by A. G. Spangenberg, 8 vols., Barby, 1772-75 (English version, abridged, by Samuel Jackson, London, 1838); and good sketches, with references to the fuller biographies, will be found in Koch, v. 248, Herzog's Real-Encyklopätie, xvii. 513, &c. The English reader may also consult T. Kübler's Hist. Notes to the Lyra Germanica, 1865, p. 107; Josiah Miller's Singers and Songs, 1869, p. 160; Miss Winkworth's Christian Singers of Germany, 1869, p. 305, &c. It is impossible to speak of Zinzendorf aport from the religious Communion of which he was the Second Founder; and accordingly an account of his life and labours is given in this Dictionary in the saticle Moravian Hymnody (see pp. 765-769).

Zinzendorf's first hymn was written at Halle in 1712, and his last at Hernhut, May 4, 1760. Between these dates he wrote more than 2000 hymns. He himself pub an edition of his poems as his Teutsche Gedichte at Herrnhut, 1785 (2nd ed., Barby, 1766), but this only contains 128 hymns. The fullest representation of them is in Albert Knapp's Geistliche Gedichte des Grafen von Zinsendorf, pub. at Stuttgart in 1845 (hereafter, in this article, referred to as Knapp, 1845). This contains 770 pieces, arranged in three books, with an introduction and a biographical sketch by Knapp.

In preparing this edition Knapp had access to much unpublished material in the archives at Herrnhut, and found there many of the hymns in Zinzendorf's auto-graph. But too much of the labour be bestowed thereon graph. But too much of the labour he bestowed thereon was spent in endeavouring, not so much to reconstruct the text from the original sources, as to moderate it. In various instances the hymns are altogether rewritten, so that the form in which they appear is not that in which, as a matter of fact, Zinzendorf did write them, but that in which he might have written them had he been Albert Knapp, and lived in the year of grace 1846. So much is this the case, that comparatively few of the hymns are given in Knapp's ed. in their original form. If not altered they are often either abridged or clise combined with others.

The keynote of Zinzendorf's hymns, and of his religious character, was a deep and earnest personal devotion to and fellowably with the crucified Saviour. devoltion to and fellowable with the crucified Saviour. This is seen even in his worst pieces, where it is his perverted fervour that leads him into objectionable familiarity with sacred things both in thought and in expression. If his self-restraint had been equal to his imaginative and productive powers, he would have ranked as one of the greatest German hymmwriters. As it is, most even of his best pieces err in some way or other, for if they are reverent and in good tasts, they are apt to luck concentration and to be far too diffuse. His best bymns, and those which have been most popular in German and English beyond the Moravian connection, are those of the period prior to 1734. Among the characteristically Moravian hymns of the period 1734 to that 1741 there are also yvarious noble pieces. The later 1742 there are also various noble pieces. The later productions, especially from 1743 to 1750, are as a rule productions, especially from 1743 to 1746, are as a rule sus-sided, unreal, and exaggerated in sentiment, and debased in style; exemplifying a tendency inherited from Scheffler (see p. 1006, i.), and suffered to runto riot, Without doubt he wrote too much (especially considering the limited range of subjects treated of in his hymne), and gave too little care to revision and condensation. Yet many of his hymne are worthy of note, agreement. The many of the hymne are worthy of note, and are distinguished by a certain noble simplicity, true sweetness, lyric grace, unshaken fulls in the reconciling grace of Christ, entire self-consentation, willingness to spend and be spent in the Master's service, and fervent brotherly love.

The hymnbooks in which Zinzendorf's productions mainly appeared, or with which they have been associated, are described at length at pp. 787, 768. The more important may for convenience be briefly noted here, as follows:-

Zinzendorf's hymns passed into German

Zinzendorf's hymns passed into German non-Moravian use mainly through the Ebersdorf G. B., 1742 (Evangelisches Gesangbuch in einen binlänglichen Auszug der Alten, Neuern und Neuesten Lieder, &c.), and in recent times through Knapp's Ev. L. S., 1837-1865. Comparatively few are found in non-Moravian English hymnbooks prior to 1840, save in the versions made by John Wesley. The translations made by the English Moraexcept by those who were connected by birth with the Moravians, such as James Montgomery (through whose influence several were included in Mercer's C. P. & H. Bk., 1855 and 1857), J. A. Latrobe and C. H. Bateman. The versions made by English non-Moravians since 1840 have been mostly of hymns which the Moravians themselves had not thought good to translate.

A number of Zinzendorf's hymns are noted in this Dictionary under their German first lines (see Index of Authors and Translators). the larger ed. of the English Moravian H. Bk. of 1886 those which are by Zinzendorf may easily be traced, his name being added to them, and the first line of the original German prefixed. The others which have passed into use outside the Moravian connection, or have been tr. by non-Moravians, are here noted as follows:-

Zion stands by hills surrounded. T. Kelly. [The Security of the Church.] 1st pub. in the 2nd ed. of his Hymn, &c., 1806, in 5 st. of 6 l. (ed. 1853, No. 136). It is in C. U. in its full form, and also in centos, as:—

1. Every human tie may parish. This cento, be-ginning with at it., is given in a few American collecthoma.

2. On the Rock of Ages founded. In the 1874 Supplement to the New Cong., No. 1215, is at. i., ii., iv., Y. Yawritten.

3. Sion stands with hills surrounded. This slightly altered text is in a few American hymn-books.

Taking the original text and these centos together, it is found that the use of this hymn is somewhat extensive. It is based on Pa. cxxv., 2, and is a vigorous hymn on the Security of the Church of Christ.

Ζοφεράς τρικυμίας. St. Anatolius [Christ Stilling the Tempest.] The Very Rev. S. G. Hatherly, in his ed. of Dr. Neale's Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1882 (4th ed.) says:-

"These Stichers are not in use in the Church Service.
They are probably taken by Dr. Neale from the work of some German antiquarian. Sundays of the First Tone are the 1st after Easter, and the 2nd, 10th, 18th and every eighth following Sunday after Pentecost until the Sunday next before Easter."

It is more probable, however, that Dr. Neale got his text from the "dateless Constantinopolitan book" from whence he said he got his "Art then weary" (see p. 631, ii.) than that he secured it "from the work of some German antiquarian." Dr. Neale's tr., "Ficree was the wild billow," was pub. in his Hys. of the Eastern Church, 1862, in 8 st. of 8 l., and headed "Stichers for a Sunday of the First Tone." It was included in the Parish H. Bk., 1863; and subsequently in numerous collections in G. Britain and America. In some hymnals it reads, "Fierce the wild billow was," and in others " Fierce was the Galilee: but Neale's text is that which is most extensively known. [J. J.]

Zwick, Johann, s. of Conrad Zwick, Rathsherr at Constanz, was b. at Constanz, circa 1496. He studied law at the Universities of Basel, Freiburg, Paris, and Padus (where he graduated LL.D.), and was for some time a tutor in law at Freiburg and at Basel. In 1518 he entered the priesthood, and in 1522 was appointed parish priest of Riedlingon on the Upper Danube. Being accused of Lutheran tendencies, he was forbidden in 1523 to officiate, and in 1525 his living was formally taken from him. He returned to Constanz, and was appointed by the Council in 1527 as one of the town preachers. Here he laboured unweariedly, caring specially for the children, the poor, and the refugees, till 1542. In Aug., 1542, the people of Bischofszell, in Thurgau, having lost their pastor by the pestilence, besought Constanz to send them a preacher; and Zwick, proceeding there, preached and visited the sick till he himself fell a victim to the pestilence, and d. there Oct. 23, 1542 (Koch, ii., 76; Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie, xvii. 578, &c.).

Zwick was one of the leaders of the Swiss Reforma-tion. He ranks next to Blaurer as the most important of the early hymn-writers of the Reformed Church. His hymns are collected in Wackersagel, iti., Nos. 872-696. The best appeared in the Nits groupbackt com-sis schown Paslmon and getitichen iteders, pub. at Zurich, 1536 (2nd ed. 1848 is the earliest now extant), of which he was the chief editor, and which was the first hymn-book of the Reformed Church.

The only hymn by Zwick which has passed into English is:

And Alesan Tag as dankan wir. Ascension. This probably appeared in the Nius granghichte, Zhrish, 1638; and is certainly in the 2nd ed. of 1640, from which it is quoted in Wackernagel, iii. p. 668, in 5 st. of 7 l., with "Alleinia." It is also in (2) the Strassburg Praimen und geystiche Lieder, 1537, f. 990, and in (3) 8. Salminger's (J. Aberlin's?) Der gants Praiter, ic. (Zitrich'), 1637, f. 145 [Brit. Mur.]. In each case it is entitled "Another hymn on the Ascension of Christ," while in 1540 the fire. Its is given as "III" dien ter. while in 1540 the first line is given as "Uff disen tag so denckend wir," in 1537 (2) as "Uff disen tag so dencken wir," and in 1537 (3) as "Auff disen tag so dencke wir," It is the finest of Zwick's hymne, and its spirit of loyful falth, its conciseness, and its beauty of form, have kept it in use among the Lutherans as well as among the Reformed. It is No. 153 in the Unu. L. S., 1551. The fre. are:—

Zyma vetus expurgetur. St. Victor. [Easter.] Gantler, in his ed. of Adam's Ocurres poetiques, 1881, p. 42, gives this from a Gradual of St. Victor before 1239 (Bibl. Nat. Paris, No. 14452), a Paris Gradual of the 13th cent. (B. N. No. 15615), and a Missal of St. Genevieve, c. 1239. It is also found in an early 14th cent. Paris Missal in the British Museum (Add. 16905, f. 146 b); in a Sarum Missal, c. 1370, and a York Missal c. 1390, both in the Bodleian; in a St. Gall Ms. No. 383, of the 13th or 14th cent., &c. The printed text is given with full notes in Trench, ed. 1864, p. 165; also in Daniel ii., p. 69; Kehrein, No. 91; D. S. Wrangham's The Liturgical Poetry of Adam of St. Victor, 1881, i. p. 80, and others. Of this grand sequence Clichtovaeus says with accuracy :-

"The wonderful mysteries of the Resurrection of our Lord are here set forth, as freehadowed in the Old Testament by many types, and through the goodness of God explained more clearly to us in the New. And of a truth this prass is almost divine, embracing much in few words, and all distinctly taken from the Secred Scriptures."

In this eulogy Abp. Trench agrees. The ex-
