FOR PRESIDENT. MARTIN VAN BUREN FOR VICE PRESIDENT. R. M. JOHNSON.

The adjourned meeting to confirm the above nominaens will be held on Saturday evening 8 o'clock at Da-VIS' ball room. The books of the Carrolton railroad banking company are still continued open at the Gice of the Atlantic insurance company, Cana I atreet, for the reception of subscriptions to the stock. It is understood that a company will in all probability be formed to take up the whole of the stock.

We are pleased with the tenor of Mr Caldwell's resolution (as reported yesterday) to advertise for paving 100,000 square vards of the streets; but we are not so pleased with its ent is to be published daily for 6 months in journal in New Orleans, of New York, Boston and Philadelphia: an advertisement for 6 months in 4 newspapers must be very expensive; and one for that period is not necessary Proposals for contract might be made in one week or ou month.

The materials are to be furnished by the contractors; this juright & reasonable; but Mr Caldwell wishes them to procure 'oblong equare stones,' which is what is vulgarly term ed a bull or blunder: for etones that are oblear easest be square. Yet it was not necessary to state that they should egher be oblong or equare, when the dimensions are speci-of the Gaelight hank, because forseoth we laughed to seem its fulsome adulation of that institution. Before the passent of the charter, we were sufficiently apprized of its advantages—which we then specified so so to have modified: but inutility of offering any opposition to the company, and cor tainly we would not be so experiously should as to attack the capital or credit of any company chartered or otherwise, is any institution of the kind is of little evail in most instances and we are of those who are solicitous to support rather than oppose any company calculated to benefit the public To do this effectually individual interests may be more im Mr Caldwell in obtaining the charter for the gaulight com pany, did so evidently and immediately for his own bone fit and had that company been properly supported, it would welfare than we may expect from the present banking com pany, whose wave and means are more various and extenniv . and though much more able to advantage our cirizens parhaps less willing: for the terms of the charter leave the on of the company for lighting the city completely a Yet even up, we are not very rejuctant to rely on the oction, when we know that Mr Baldwin and other epirited individuals are among the directors of the company. Were mend Mr Caldwell, he might deem our praise bu rony, as he must the servile and fulsoms adulation paid him by some of the ed to ial corps. If this gentleman has bona more from a desire to aid the public than benefit himself he has now an excellent opportunity of palpably evincing it, by using that influence which he is known or believed to possess in the management of the Gaslight banking company, by two methods; let, by inducing that comny to take shares of the stock of the Orleans Braining company; and 2d, by prevailing on it not merely to continue his contract for lighting a portion of the city, but to continue the terms of that contract for lighting the whole city for any erm of years considered advisable. For instance 5 years: for after if not before that period, the materials of every kind now used must be considerably cheaper, and of course the terms of the contract be reduced.

But to think of a contract for 40 years on the terms pro pesed a couple months ago by the city council, is out of the question: it would be a direct imposition on the public and the Gaslight banking company must know that in Ph ladelphia and other Atlantic cities, the lamppoots are fas nished gratis in the streets by the gas companies; and the ges"ghts are afforded to the corporation at about half ar two thirds the price demanded from individuals. But if they do not know it; we must occasionally 'jog their memories !'

LEGENDS AND STORIES OF IRELAND. By Samuel Lover. 2 vols. Philadelphia, Carey and Hart; New Orleans. Hotchkins & Co.

In these days of novels and romances illustrating the an cient and modern history of different countries, Ireland has t been wholly neglected. The tales of Miss Edgeworth originated the modern school of novelists, who have imi originated the modern school of novelists, whe have imitated Scott in his Scotch novels, avowedly a superstructure on the foundation faid by Miss E. But Sir Walter has embodied not only the existing romances and modern stores of his native land, but illustrated also her ancient history which has not in any instance been done for Ireland, all the was not in any instance been done for Ireland, all the was not to be approached with any hope of success the publishers and in the residual properties of the representations. though there is no history more fruitful in interesting

But Miss Eigeworth, with Mesers Croker and Banim, and the authors of Traits & stories of the Irish pessantry; the ' Two Collegians;' ' Tales of the west,' etc. have smply depicted the manners and modes of the modern Irish, with ieir characteristic traits of conduct and creed. Mrs Hall has also given some excellent sketches, vividly and minutely denicted; but those of Lady Blessington are things of a moment. Not so however the Wild Irish girl' of Lady Morgan, formerly Miss Owenson, which possesses fare morat-particularly considering a was written in her

And here we have before us another graphic delineater of H bernian humor, superstitions, follies and hospitalities; and a cordial Lover of the outre characteristics of his countryme i. He embodies folly and fun with freedom and franknot seen so serve as those or the minutes and northern ness; and enters into a row, a rumbus and a rioting in all their minutiss. But he chiefly restricts his portraitures (for he is a painter also) to days gone by; to the 'Legends and the wor'd. stories" he gleaned in his varied sambles in search of the picturesque.

There are 26 of those legends and stories, which can be separately read and laughed at.

A gentleman who has long been convergent with Mexican customs and manners; and by whose information to Mr Canning, that statesman was induced so promptly to favor the independence of the Mexican states, is decidedly of opinion that a republic cannot long exist in Mexico; and that it is morally certain that ere long Santa Anna will assume the reme of government, or be invested with the title or antherity of emperor. The aristocracy of Mexico are still powerful; and do not like to dwindle into nonentities as sumple citizens: nor do the clergy desire to be divested of their privileges. Aided therefore by his own ambition and abilities; and favored by the wealth of the arietocracy who righ after their lost titles and distinctions, by the influence of the clergy who feel that republicanism would despoil them of their privileges and passessions, by the prejudices of the people themselves who admire and adore a warrior and think independence less acceptable than grandeur, and by the reiterated disturbances consequent on republican inptitutions acting on a people not sufficiently intelligent to a perceiate their value nor medus operandi, and therefore not capable of maintaining them in their integrity—there seems little doubt that SANTA ANNAWIL shortly be proclaim.

eystem of government. The aristocracy of the house of lords presents indeed ormidable obstacle to the immediate success of this preva ence-form dable, because the lords have so long had the domination and possess so much still of the wealth and influence of that country; but even that influence must yield to increasing intelligence and determination of the people nided by the wealth of the other classes of the community who are fortified in their projects by the noble examples afforded them in this country of a government conducted by the democracy or the will of a majority. With us our administration must command a majority o the house of representatives, which is simply effected; be cause the majority of the people who elected the head of the zecutive government, pessess the same means of electing a majority in the house, though not to the same extent of securing a majority in the senate-most of the members of which may have been chosen to sesist a former administration. The majority of the senate eanast therefore be supposed to represent the will of the people or democracy, a does that of the house of representatives ; for the frequent election by the people themselves to the lower house of Con gress is certain to effect more immediately the indication of hair will, than the election of U.S. senators every 6 years by the state legislatures. But this disparity is greater in England, as the senat there consists of hereditary poors, not elected by the people; nor responsible except to public opinion operating through the examons and the press. This irresponsibility is already felt sensibly by the democracy of England; and although the commons have a check on the king and lords at any time by withholding the supplies from the national treasury, and of embarrassing the ministers by their opposition, there are tantamount in effect only to negation. But it is now a ettled determination on the part of the English to have more peers or none-none at least as hereditary legislators: for even in the house of fords the members will be made elective; not as in our senate for 6 years, but for life.

COLONEL JOHNSON-U. S. BANK. It is now proved beyond a doubt that Colonel Johnson Kentucky did not deserve the imputation of having advocated the charter of the present bank of the United States, at any tege or period—as asserted or insinuated by the Virginia delegation to the general convention; but lest the assertion should now be restricted to the occurrences resulting from having removed the government deposits in October '33 from that bank, we thought it well to be armed at all points in order to remove every vestige of the accusation. We there fore applied for authentic information on the subject to an ntimate friend of Colonel Johnson, who readily entirfied our nquiry by the following letter-which certainly should remove all doubts from every candid mind; and doubts being removed, the projudice of the Virginia delegation may be nal. nore easily and promptly studicated; and support he must willingly and generously and prudently be given to the cane didate of the republican party out of that state.

On the 10th Mey 1835, Co'onel Johnson in answer to a letter I wrote him on the subject of the reports then in circulation, that he was about to come out with some project or measure in favor of the United States bank writes thus—'The removal back of the deposits without renewing the charter of the present bank, would have been source than a faither in me to have changed my whole course on the subject. in me to have changed my whole course on the subjec-

RED RIVER BAFT .- On the 26th ult Captain Shreve cease operations on this raft for the season, as his men were sickly and the river had become too low. He has cleared upwards of 200 miles; and has left about 40. The raft has usually extended 3 miles on the upper side every year; but Shreve thinks that in 6 or 7 weeks of the ensuing year, he shall have removed all obstructions from the Red river. He has been useful also in closing some bayous and deepening the channel of the river. He has now gone to Louisville.

A nart of them came within his observation, and the others he derived them came within his observation, and the others he derived from the parties with whom they occurred. seems little doubt that SANTA ANNAWIII shortly be proclaimed either dictator or emperor, with the consent of the Mexican people: seed such a change appears absolutely easential to tranquilize the Jeouatry, now too much divided, and subject to the tyranny or caprices of petty chiefs. If a constitutional or limited monarchy existed in Mexico, its internal resources would be two developed; and its commerce be catablished on a better basis.

Before the passage of the reform measure, the landed aristocracy could command a majority in the house, on account of their numerous nominees for close boroughs where the peop'e had no freedom of voting; but since that the suffrage is extended, the voting is more independent, and the representatives must submit to give pledges to, or be instructed by, their constituents: so that absolutely democracy is now the prominent feature of the constitution—for the people can control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives, and these can coerce the whole control their representatives. The surgeon and captain, then Lieutenant Sturt, visited this convent, and both being thoughtless young men, and fond of adventures; they contrived to propose to two of the young nums an elopement. Having no interpreter, and being unable to speak each other's language, it was no easy matter to sett e the preliminaries of the affair. It was, however, hastify agreed, that if the officers would return at a certain hour of the night the young vestals would stop with the same vestals. repreliminaries of the allair. It was, however, hastily agreed, that if the officers would return at a certain hour of the night, the young vestals would clope with them, and take shelter in the vessel. Full of their somantic enterprise, our two knights were under the wails of the convent at the appointed hour. The measurer equally punctual. In jumping from the window of the building; the lady who was pladged to Lieutenant Start unfurtunately fell and bruke her arm. He, therefore, promptly and hausanely bequeathed his interest in the wounded guit to the surgeon, and serzing upon the intended partner of his medical friend, hurried with her to the boat—being closely pursued by the watch of the tows—and placed her is affecty on board the vessel. No soon-r was the captains apprised of this adventure with his lieutenant and surgeon than, prompted by that seems of propriety which constitutes, the chivalry of malitary life, he summoned them into his presence.

Early next morning, the magistrates of Punta del Gada visited the versel, and demanded, by her maiden name, the restoration of the lost nun. The captain gave them is word of honor that he had no female by that name on hoard his vessel. Surprised and disappointed at this declaration, they returned to the shore, and the captain unfurling his sails, the white walls of the convent were soon lost to the view of

From the statement of our informant it appears that this young lady had been placed in the convent by her father, contrary to her wakes and earnest entreaties. Her determination to leave it was, therefore, not the freak of the moment. She had long before avowed her unalterable resolution of escaping on the first opportunity. She felt, nevertheless, upon reaching London, where she was at once introduced to a highly respectable circle, much uncassness in regard to the wows which she had taken while in the convent. Her father, who was a resident of St Michael's, where informed of her elopement and marriage, had his compunctions visitings, in consequence of the disagreesble situation in which his caprichal placed his daughter. He, therefore, made an urgent acreal to the pope, and at last succeeded in obtaining his daughter's absolution from her wows, and a confirmation of her marriage.

When the Phaeton reached London, our informant was introduced by Captain Start to his wife and daughter, the latter a beautiful and highly accomplished girl of eighteen. They were much amused at the description of the recent access in the convent of Punta del Gada, and suring the conversation upon the subject, the mother tacity corroborated the statements of her husband, in tegard to her escape from the numery and romantic marriage.—Semered Whig.
