friend for your two brief notes containing in those short sentences all that is most valuable to me how kind it was of you to write in all the business which surrounded you, but it was like you so thoughtful and so sweet.

I send you for them the reward you desire in telling you that I am not pained at our separation beyond that sense of sorrow that all must feel who truly love, at being severed from the being who has become a portion of their existence far deeper than their own - do not think that I am raising or sentimental I only wish you to know how entirely I love you and how completely you have because a part of my future life. When recalling how shall a period, may have known each other, and, for ^{hours} ~~months~~ you are removed from me in moral and intellectual attainments I am lost in a state of astonishment at the result which has followed our meeting, but it is a blessed one to me, and gratefully do I thank God for the rich gift of your affection. Knowing it to be mine, I am at rest. I want to clasp my arms round heaven it is true, but divine love are we very near to each other though that cold water which I so much dread does roll between us.

In reality I have not the sense of separation beyond the touch and look of sympathy, for my thoughts never quit you but I do feel sad to remember that I, we we have lost three years of happiness we could not well afford to spare; this conviction presses so heavily on me that it would be sin to waste an unnecessary moment of other time which yet remains Therefore as soon as possible I shall be with you, that is a strong reason for present emigration, a joy which I treasure in my heart to and aim at peace except sudden when one dark shadow will gather over me, a little cloud now not bigger than a man's hand but I see on the horizon the wide Atlantic and sigh at the circumstances that it is now to divide us by hundreds like nature clings so closely to the form of those I love that the untracing of the fibres is a thing of importance of my life. Bridgewater Dec 2nd

I have been so grieved since I did not have been able to finish my letter and dispatch it to you, but every moment has been engaged I worked at the book and copying resolutions until the last minutes of remaining in Bristol and left the last day unfinished work but the said resolutions were prospering under Mary's able guidance. She had drawn up two one to draw the tie between the British and British W.S. Socy in which the season, a goodly setting forth of sins were heaped heavily on the heads of the parent Socy and the other a vote of thanks and sympathy they with you and your sisters. The Com. meeting came to meet this morning which I am glad of as Mary felt the responsibility considerable and was very anxious that all should do well - she told me that she should write a noon as possible to you after the meeting to give the result, and if the resolutions pass she was in hopes of getting them into the Whitell Pamphlet on Saturday next, when a letter will appear of Mr. Lathrop in reply to ^{my} ~~Mr. Lathrop~~ ^{Mr. Chaillor} ~~Mr. Lathrop~~, it is a capital one and you will be delighted with it. He intends to have some slips taken of it and to have Mary of the resolutions as they think they will be desirable documents to distribute for need will it is too true that Mr. Lathrop's own has nothing more to do with the Examiners to there is a tower of strength taken from us. I am very sorry because he seemed to be sincerely and to have to what he said, it was also he a help to himself, we have not seen him since that dear Interim day. The week before last Mr. James stayed after a committee to hear the resolutions and the letter to Mr. Chaillor and he said Mr. Lathrop worked themselves up into something not resembling a Christian frame of mind much at all but they fairly came under the charge of using harsh language. Mr.

I am assuming that Mr. Howland was a candidate as well, and ~~was~~ an other edifying remnant of that kind, responded to say Mr. I at length they parted good bye Miss P. then said Mr. I. with a melancholy sigh you will see we have so often as you have done before late, but do let me know if I can do any thing for the cause and when he has really gone Mr. I. remarked elegantly "his hair after here still does he not" and begged that Miss Weston might be informed of this peculiar state of mind. The box is finished and a committee of gentlemen meet into captives over it pronouncing it perfect. This is as it should be, the offering ought to be without blemish which is laid on so holy a shrine. Mr. Lyner who made it brought a beautifully bound walnut unbound which is to be his gift and for which his daughter a girl of twelve years old begged to be permitted to work the cover. Her man-nely love of the cause is perfectly refreshing.
I have been this morning to look at the display of things which Miss Brown has collected for F. Douglass - it is not large but many of them are pretty and worthy a rather object. I could get help ^{perhaps} moving though contrary to the ~~gentle~~ ^{gentle} saying a beautiful case of English, Swiss, and Spanish steel flowers worth they said 5 guineas, which were ~~more~~ fits for Boston than Rochester. Altogether there will be a good sized box of goods and Miss B. hopes to collect ~~up~~ in donations her side - she clings to her old home spite of the unhappiness she has had. You can not imagine what a city of mourning has you felt since your departure from Boston that dear Mrs. Fiske I love her with all my heart cannot speak of you all without tears in her eyes, and the regret is universal - as universal the desire that you should come again, and so you will, will you not? I told Mrs. Fiske that I hoped to follow you soon how I enjoy you was her reply, and I enjoy myself as much as she can do so. It is just a week today that we parted - how long it seems tho' every moment has had as much as could be crowded into it. A great part of it I spent in your room, my chosen resting place or rather working place, in no other would the box have reached its perfect climax. I was sorrowful to quit it and St. Stephen which looked of lovely, as I grasped it, so did our own dear Decidua with. She afterwards shut her eyes on the sunny grass, it was the last bodily grasp I had of you and I grasped it tight ly whilst the last vestige remained, but steam and iron our little for human hearts and so they bore me away from my sweet heavens with unnumbered hearts.

Tomorrow I accompany Mrs. Heywells to my brother, if you can write to me three direct to the letter to J. W. Bagel's Leg. Middlesex Langport, Somerset. I shall remain there a fortnight, and feel as if I could not wait so long without a line. Still I must love I will not be waiting. I can rest in perfect faith if any thing of your soul's gone writing to me this and for just a while don't let me know how you get on anything in the shape of an old man of the sea about your work I've struggled for at once. I have then that we have sent Walter (my nephew) your sub. address knowing it would give him the pleasure to call upon you, if after knowing a little of him, you think him worthy of an introduction to any of your literary friends it would gratify him extremely. Between good, all your love if you can afford distinction that of an anti-slavery heart. It is mercifully benighted now. Thank my sweet Peggy for her kind note which shall be answered very soon - my dear love to her, Annie, and Miss Weston - poor Anne she is plunged into the sloughs of Despair for some weeks to come if she comes to the surface I will try to console her. You said write but did you expect anything so fearfully long? I did not mean it to be so - but - as Carlyle says - and I would fain not say your last dear word to me "farewell" even now, with my sin staining me in the face - but the time is come it did this day weeks and it must be done - so farewell my now beloved friend God bless you and keep you - how I thank him for this new tie to life - life for everlasting well for true that it is so since this earthly scene is fast fading away. I was ashamed to send you such a small but have written like the world yours ever most fondly and truly Edw. P.
