FATHER BALLOU AND THE WOMAN WHO HAD NOTHING FIT TO EAT.

A writer in the New York Ledger tells the following anecdote of Father Ballou:

Many of our readers remember Rev. John Ballou of Boston, better known as Father Ballou. One of those men who, though kind and humane to a fault, apt to rebuke evil, at all times.

THE GAY OF DUNLOK.

just at the point for a grand echo from a cannon, and a couple of men who have been waiting an hour or more, give two shots for which you pay a shilling by your guide also brings out a musical instrument and plays several tunes which round again and again among the hills with a peculiar effect.

THE GAY OF DUNLOK.

twelve miles back home. After passing down the upper lake, you enter a secluded spot in a narrow stream where there are many apparent outlets. Here the boatman will lay a wager that you cannot tell the way out. You "guess" it to be in one direction, but it proves to be in another, and you are obliged to pay a shilling for a bottle of Irish whiskey which will cost four shillings; but when you see the word with you. Soon you come to a place for an echo on the lake. The boatman gives an exhibition in slow, stonemason tones, telling faintly among the hills, that he had a wager with the "music" he was carrying on his back.

LAZER BEER.

I have finally come to the conclusion that lager beer is not intoxicating. I have been told so by a German, who said he had drunk it and ate long, just as he did the extract, and was obliged to go home entirely sober in the morning. I have seen the same man drink sixteen glasses, and it had no effect on him. I was drinking it in Germany, and now I am in this country, and I find it is a healthy, invigorating beverage, and I find it is a healthy, invigorating beverage, and I find it is a healthy, invigorating beverage.

WALKS ABOUT NASHVILLE.

From the library window of the Baptist Normal and Theological College, I have a fine view of Nashville, and a portion of its suburbs. Just opposite me is a very large colored man's house (as a young lady called it) I find a sign, which makes me grin at man's ignorance, and mourn that his opportunities for self-improvement have been so few. The sign reads, "FAMILY GROCERIE."

COURTSHIP AND MARRIAGE.

Reader, have you ever been courted? If not there is one bliss of earth which you have never tasted, — one sweet dream too long unrealized. Oh, it is delightful. "When the candle is in the parlor..."

THE PROSPERITY OF AMERICA.

The country is beginning to recover from the waste of the war, and is rapidly growing rich. In the South especially, as the region which suffered most from the war, in 1867 seemed almost totally desolated — the woodwork of industry and wealth is developed. "Throughout the State of South Carolina," says the Charleston News, "the people are confident and cheerful. We have more hard money than we had in 1867, and in our view of the world's progress, Carolina has made as much progress since 1865 as has been by any one of her sister States."

(Correspondence.) ADIRONDACK MOUNTAINS. NORTH WESTERN NEW YORK. Sept. 22, 1869.

Mr. Editor:—I write you this letter seated on one of the highest peaks of the Adirondack Mountains in New York. This elevated position is five thousand feet above the level of your home and mine, and about four hundred and fifty miles distant.

The view from this spot is beautiful beyond description, and surpasses any mountain views I have seen in the United States, Cuba or Canada. I would that I could find appropriate language to describe the wonderful works of nature, as seen from this very high mountain, but I must confine myself with the reflection that no one of my illustrious predecessors have been able to do the subject justice.

Words should have life in them to depict the scene. The whole range of mountains are covered with native forests of living green, and as I look down on the lower ones from this great height they appear like green fields of tall grass glistening in the sun.

The great valleys and vast plains which spread out in every direction are thickly covered with beautiful lakes and numerous rivers, around which are clustered a few small villages, and perhaps one eighth of the land is cleared and devoted to farming.

I am surprised at the great distance one can see objects from this height. Lake Ontario is more than one hundred miles distant, but is often seen here with the naked eye in a clear day.

The journey up this mountain was the hardest day's work of my life. I left the hotel early in the morning, seated on a black mountain pony, with the assurance of his owner that he would carry me safely one-half the way to the top of the mountain, but beyond that it was too steep for him to go in safety.

Iron ore here is found intermingled with the grains of a soft ledge deep in the earth, which resembles the granite ledges of New England, only they are black instead of gray, and are nearly all some places quite as hard as flint and blue. They are blasted and thrown into as small pieces as possible with powder, after which the larger pieces are broken up so that none shall weigh more than a dozen pounds.

The broken rocks are then conveyed in a small iron car, hoisted by steam power, to the mouth of the pit or mine, which is eight hundred feet deep. They are then carted down the hill to level land, where they are thrown on the top of immense piles of dry wood and burned about four days. This process drives out the gas and drives the iron into the rock, so that they can be crushed. They are next thrown into strong iron troughs, with open grate bottoms, and crushed to atoms by a dozen trip hammers, driven by water power.

The crushed Ore is then placed in the "Sopranor," which is a large square iron sink, with a grate of a greater number of small holes in the bottom. This is then immersed in water, and shaken violently with a crank driven by water power, a few moments, when the grains of iron, being the heaviest, settle to the bottom, leaving the granite sand and dirt on top. These are removed and the water is run off, the remaining Ore is washed clean with water. Only about one third of the stone is found to be iron, and the rest is granite, sand, dirt &c.

The pure Ore now looks like coarse black sand, and the next thing is to concentrate it. This is done by a process entirely of its own kind. A large fire is made in a large oven, with an open top, over which is a big chimney with a strong draft, and mammoth bellows blow the big fire by water power. When the charcoal gets to burning freely, and is all red hot, the ore is spread over the top of the furnace, and as evenly as possible, when it melts immediately, and runs down through the hot fire and settles on the bottom of the oven in a large, half round ball, weighing about three hundred pounds. The fire is then reduced a little by water, so that the iron can be removed from the oven, and while it is yet white hot it is placed under a very powerful trip hammer, and hammered until it is solid and fine grained, into any shape desired. The best of this iron is sold to steel manufacturers, and the balance is made into plate, hoop, and bar iron of all dimensions and shapes, as wanted by the trade.

The journey up this mountain was the hardest day's work of my life. I left the hotel early in the morning, seated on a black mountain pony, with the assurance of his owner that he would carry me safely one-half the way to the top of the mountain, but beyond that it was too steep for him to go in safety.

MARK TWAIN ON BEECHER'S FARM. The author of the "Innocent Abroad," a book which we have read with unalloyed interest, is now collector-in-chief of the "Daily Express," and among his latest "flights of fancy" we find a description of Henry Ward Beecher's farming operations, which would apply to many of our fancy farmers.

Mr. Beecher's farm consists of thirty-six acres, and is carried on on strict scientific principles. He never puts in any part of a crop without sowing his book. He plows and reaps and digs and sows according to the best authorities—and the authorities cost more than the other farming implements do. As soon as the library is complete, the farm will begin to be a profitable investment. But look at the expense of the other sciences! How over, do not seem to be of this opinion Southern takes a pinch of snuff and drinks cold lemonade. OPINION OF A RECENT DIET. A Vienna paper of a diet gives an amusing account of the refreshments which the operatic singers are in the habit of taking between acts to keep their voices in good order.

Each singer, it appears, has his or her own peculiar specific. The Swedish tenor Laban takes two sated cucumbers for a dose, and declares that this vegetable is the best thing in the world for strengthening the voice and giving it the true metallic ring. The other singers, however, do not seem to be of this opinion Southern takes a pinch of snuff and drinks cold lemonade.

BRICK POMEROY ON TEMPERANCE. The habit of liquor drinking is, to our mind the most foolish, inexorable piece of destructive nonsense in the world. And nowhere is it more prevalent than in cities. The money poured down the throats of men each year is greater than the amount spent for improvements. Whiskey-shops, saloons, gin-mills, beer-cellars, wine-rooms, and all sorts of irrational devices and places to fool away money are found by the hundreds and thousands in cities and towns.

How can any dealer retail such a vile concern to his customer and have a conscience pained by the thought of it? How can any consumer expect to purchase Confectionery at twenty-five and thirty cents a pound, when a pure article cannot be manufactured less than the ten to forty cents per pound, consisting of cassia buds, burnt almonds, and such other goods? Within a few days we have been offered cassia buds, etc., for fifteen cents per pound, and Chocolate Creams and other confections at a price so low that they were adulterated ten per cent with Terra Alga, and it is a fact that some of the cheap confectioners are made and sold in this country every year and the consumers are the only persons injured by it. Now, for the benefit of those who wish a Pure article of Confectionery, we will warrant every article of our manufacture Strictly Pure and free from every ingredient deleterious to health. Southmayd & Co., COR. THE LATEST NOVELTY.
MENTAL PHOTOGRAPHS.

I have received from the publishers, Loydell & Hoyt, New York, a newly printed page of questions with blanks for answers, and am requested to fill those blanks. These questions are so arranged as to ferret out the most secret points of a man's nature without his ever noticing what the idea is until the thing is done and his "character" gone forever.
A number of these sheets are bound together and called a Mental Photograph.
Albino. Nothing could induce me to fill those blanks but the assurance of these gentlemen that it will benefit my race by enabling young people to see what I am and giving them an opportunity to be more like somebody else. This cannot overcome my scruples. I have but little character, but what I have I am willing to part with for the public good. I would have been a better man if I had had a chance, but things have always been against me. I never had any parents—only just a father and a mother—and so I have had to struggle along the best way I could. I do not boast of this character, further than that I built it up by myself, at odd hours, during the last thirty years, and without other educational aid than I was able to pick up in the ordinary schools and colleges. I have filled the blanks as follows:

WHAT IS YOUR FAVORITE
Color: Anything but blue.
Flower? The night-blooming Stripes, Tree? Any that bears forbidden fruit.
Object of Nature? A dumb belle.
Hour in the day? The leisure hour.
Season of the Year? The lecture season.

Perfume? Cent, per cent.
Gem? The Jack of Diamonds, when it is a trump.
Style of beauty? The Subscriber's.
Names, Male and Female? Minnie (Minnie) for a female, and Tacus and Marlus for males.

Painters? Sign-painters, Musicians? Larp & Bros.
Poet of Scintipie? The Greek Slave, with his city.

Book to take up for an hour? Vanderbilt's pocket-book.
What book (not religious) would you part with last? The one I might happen to be reading on a railroad during the disaster season.

What epoch would you choose to have lived in? Before the present Erie—it was safer.
Where would you like to live? In the moon, because there is no water there.
Favorite Amusement? Hunting the "tiger" or some kindred game.
Favorite Occupation? "Like dew on the gown—lying."

What trait of Character do you most admire in man? The noblest form of cannibalism—love for his fellow-men.
In Woman? Love for her fellow-men.
What trait do you most detest in each That "trait" which you put "on" to describe its possessor.

If not yourself, who would you rather be? The Wandering Jew, with a nice annuity.
What is your idea of Happiness? Finding the buttons all on.

Your idea of Misery? Breaking an egg in your pocket.
What is your best sport? (What is my which?)
What is your Dream? Nightmare, as a general thing.

What do you most dread? Exposure.
What do you believe to be your Distinguishing Characteristic? Hunger.
What is the Sublimest Passion of which human nature is capable? Loving your sweetheart's enemies.

What are the Sweetest Words in the world? "Not Guilty." What are the Saddest? "Dust unto dust."

What is your Aim in Life? To endeavor to be absent when my time comes.
What is your Motto? Be virtuous and you will be eccentric.
But, jesting aside, the Mental Photograph Album is a novel and ingenious idea. It will take the trouble to fill answers to those questions seriously and conscientiously, he will discover when he is done, that he has made a record whereby a stranger may gather a pretty fair estimate of his real nature and the peculiar bent of his character.
A well-filled Album of this kind ought to make an entertaining "book" to take up for an hour." MARK TWAIN.

I grant you this is a little obscure—in explaining to the unfortunate that this is

THE LAST DAY OF THE CON-FEDERACY IN RICHMOND.
At 11 o'clock in the morning Gen Lee wrote a despatch to President Gen-Davis at Richmond, advising him that the army could no longer hold its position, and that preparations should be made to evacuate the capital that night. He might have added in the despatch what he remarked to one of his staff officers, as with embellished but lofty face, he saw his army breaking up in the broad sunshine: "It has happened as I told them in Richmond: the line has been stretched until it has broken."

No sound of the battle—not an echo, not a breath—had yet reached the dusty city. It was a lovely Sabbath day, and Richmond basked in its beauty and enjoyed more than usual remission from the cares of the week. There were no suns in the vexed thoroughfare; the long streets laid open, not a vehicle appear on them; the murmur of the river gave tones only to soothe the ear, and the pulsed of the sun-shine beat slowly in the misty warm air that laid on the landscape. It was a day of careless thought. The great army of rebels bounced near the post-office, exchanging rumors of the war, or the latest deprecated gossip of Richmond society. Hundreds wended their way to the churches, while not a few of their country's hopefuls trod the paths beaten as sheep-walks to the back entrance of the whisky store on Main street, and sought consolation in the shades of "the Chickahominy," "the Rebel," "the Wilderness," La-diess dressed in old fashions, in the fashions of many years were mingled, were satisfied to make a display at St.

David's about quarter past ten, in their robes in better days of the negro at the African church. At the former church Mr. Davis worshipped.

He now sat still and alone in the "Presidential pew," where no one outside his family had ever dared to intrude.
After Mrs. Davis had ordered the carriage to be sent for, he had ventured there, and was, on turning their faces to face the admittance to leave, delivered before the whole congregation, had proved, to the dismay and well-deserved mortification of the President's wife, to the dismay of Gen. Lee. Mr. Davis was necessitated to go on the duty, and before this memorable day, Gen. Lee and Secretary Tremblin had gone together to the communion table, and many eyes in the congregation had been wis-domed to see these three men, on whom depended so many rebel hopes, kneeling side by side in partake of the sacrament. The scene was a striking one, and a very different scene was to be witnessed.

In the middle of the services, a man walked into the church and handed the President a slip of paper. Mr.
Davis read the paper, rose, and walked toward the altar, with an agonized and a man evidently constrained, an uneasy whisper ran through the crowd of worshippers, and many hastened to the street. The congregation was soon dismissed. The rumor had already gained the street that Richmond was to be evacuated; it was confirmed to a few of the most prominent citizens of the War Department, or made persistent inquiries at the telegraph office; but, although the government had no motive now to suppress the sad truth, but, on the contrary, was in duty bound to inform the people and prepare them for the contingency, it is remarkable that there was no authentic announcement of the intended evacuation, no published order on the subject, no official notification of any sort; and that news in which every man's household was involved was left to wander all day as a vague rumor in the streets, only to be confirmed by the actual visit of the authorities leaving the city.

A little past noon some regiments of Longstreet's command, on the north of James river, were seen marching through the city, on their way to reinforce Gen.
Lee in the battle he was then supposed to be making to save or recover his line of battle.

The soldiers moved with a stonching step, and once on their disordered march, it said, and were called for Jefferson Davis. Formerly, when Confederate soldiers had passed through Richmond, there had been music, cheers, crowds of shouting spectators, throngs of profusion of men marching, the sundries of the city, waving their adieu, encouraged to scatter flowers on them, at least to bestow upon them sweet and inspiring countenances. Now, as they passed through the thoroughfare, only a few spectators looked on sadly or cyni-cally; no note of music cheered the sadly and wearily to death; a blank face appeared at the windows, and on the balconies of the American Hotel only two or three ladies stood. It was melancholy to see one of them simply wave a single handkerchief in a hesitating way, and then stop, pale and agonized, as not a single soldier cheered or recognized the compliment.

As the day wore on it was noticed that wagons were driven to the doors of the departments, and to the public stor-ehouses—many of them branded as Government wagons, many nondescript—and all moving off toward the Danville Depot. The accumulation of stores there, and of ticketed boxes, left no doubt that the city was to be evacuated.
Signs of hurry increased; wagons, no longer driven in order, tore through the streets; men seemed suddenly possessed with a mania to run to their homes, to snatch from them some last memento, and to hurry to the west, out of the city. In less than an hour from the first appearance of the wagon trains on the streets, the whole population of Richmond was involved in a panic.

What ensued it is impossible to describe. What a change fell upon this city, which was so recently so full of imbued revelry, and spread terror through its quiet streets, like a thunderbolt from the unclouded expanse of Heaven, can only be imagined, as the comparison indicated in the light of some sudden wrath visited from the skies. For four years Richmond had lived in the easy flow of judgment had been called upon it. Now the panic-stricken city broke up, as if riven by lightning, into black, torn clouds of maddened men, conscience-stricken fugitives, solitary revellers, blanched women and children, fleeing wildly through the streets, victims of escape from the terrible day of judgment—the chariot of fire and wrath that next day they were doomed to see. It was a scene never to be forgotten in the memories of Richmond. The night was hoarse with the roar of the great light.

very interesting contents, is received.

THE HAUNTED HOUSE.
The regiment with which I was formerly connected, as you all are well known, was ordered to the 3d Army Corps, and accompanied Sherman in the great march from Atlanta to the sea—the march which proved the hollowness of the Confederacy, and showed to the world the days of its existence were numbered.

From Atlanta to the vicinity of Sanderville, nothing worthy of narration occurred in my experience, but when we were a few miles southeast from that place, I had an adventure that I do not think I shall forget to my dying day.
It happened on this wise:

Our Division commander had learned from a scout that a party of rebel cavalry, some 500 strong, were in the vicinity of a noted Georgia secessionist; but a few miles from our line of march, and he was also taking that he was at home. Desiring of taking him prisoner, the General ordered a company sent out to the spot, and it fell to the lot of my company to go on the duty.

A rapid march of five or six miles brought us to the place we sought, but a hasty examination of the house and grounds, disclosed to the fact there were no human beings anywhere about the premises—the bird had flown.

We had had death on the field of battle—at Stone River, at Chickamauga, and above the clouds at Lookout Mountain—and we had faced him with our bayonets, but this—his unrelenting horror, unmatchable, yet palpable—used our teeth to chatter as though an eagle fit had seized us, caused us to shrink and cover all our limbs, while every hair on our heads stood up like quills upon the fretful porcupine.

And while we quailed there in one corner like the veriest cowards, we heard another sound that struck a still deeper chill to our veins—what seemed to cease the very marrow in our bones to congeal —we heard the door of our room which we had carefully bolted and barred on the inside floor and ground the door.
It creaked, damp air rushed in, while again that awful cry of hell-reading anguish rang out seemingly at our very side.

We were paralyzed by our great fear and for a few minutes for an age it seemed to us, we were with bated breath waiting for the fatal blow. At last, however, we were released, and we were at last with our companion's eyes, his pale countenance, and his awful silence.

"Let us close the door," he said, and still clapping hands with limbs that could scarcely sustain us, we moved to the door and opened the door.
But as we did so, ere we could close it we beheld a sight which held us spellbound—a bright light suddenly illuminated the room through the open door, and gazing beyond we beheld scenes enacted that neither of us ever can forget.

But as I gazed at the wall my eyes wandered to a closet at the right, and emerging from it I beheld a young man whose face seemed working with suppressed and awful passion. In his hand he carried a long and gleaming dagger.
He had advanced half-way across the room, when he turned, behold!
aim and uttered a wild, despairing cry.
"Where are their shadows?"

I glanced at the long line of wax lights arranged in front of the mirror, then at the blank wall behind them, but there were no shadows.

The first teacher in our new upper school, and whose name occupies a larger place, probably, in the memory of that generation than any other, was his name reads this paper. With unexcelled abilities, large experience and attainments, and reputation, seemed to no one in his profession for success, he came to us with all the promise of a brilliant career. With a fine intellectual presence, winning manner, and the most enthusiastic love for his profession, he soon won the hearts of scholars and parents alike, and the school rose, with unexampled rapidity, to a point of excellence which it has never since surpassed, if it has ever equalled. A most indefatigable worker, and devoting his whole time and energy to the well-being of the school, he succeeded in inducing, in his pupils, at least of his own enthusiasm into the minds of even the duller of his pupils, compelling them, whether they would or not, to make commendable progress.

Who among that crowded school does not remember the walls, covered with maps and diagrams, closets full of mathematical, philosophical, and astronomical apparatus, all the available part of the school room, occupied, and all of his own providing, for the town then thought liberal in providing house, fuel, and teacher, thinking nothing of these other, and so necessary wants. With what patience did he explain, and illustrate the uses of them all to some times restless and heedless school, and return again and again to the task, until he at last succeeded in kindling a little spark of interest; and how small a return of this nature seemed to repay him for his much labor.

Who does not remember the hours upon hours beyond the required limits, that he gave to his duties, seldom finishing the day long enough for his specified task. The amount of work accomplished, as I look back upon it, seems almost incredible; from sixty to eighty scholars, and a range of study covering the whole ground occupied by our High Grammar, and Intermediate Schools, a simple enumeration of the different branches taught would appal our best modern teachers. For example, he had classes in Latin and Greek, the whole range of mathematical studies from mental arithmetic up through higher Algebra, Geometry, Trigonometry, Surveying, and Astronomy, National, Mental, and Moral Philosophy, Geology, Chemistry, Botany, Book-keeping, Logic, Rhetoric, and Drawing, besides the usual classes in Grammar, Geography, Reading, Spelling and Writing. To which he added the practical study of Surveying, as well as the practical studies of Geology and Botany in the fields, and Geography of the heavens in the sky.

If it is asked how he accomplished all this without a larger corps of assistants, I can only refer to the fact, that he did it, and with a remarkable degree of success; and I can present, in substance, to a great extent to his own entire devotion to his work, and the enthusiasm he was consequently enabled to infuse into the minds of his scholars, an element which seems to be too often lacking in our teachers of the present day.

Without this element, his days of seven or eight hours would have been simply unendurable, and the school, instead of prospering under this heavy and continual pressure, would have broken down. Good discipline was another necessary element, without which such a school must have been an absolute failure, and this was obtained more by moral power, than by physical force, although, upon occasion, he could use the latter unparagonably. He knew and dared to use, when the case seemed to demand it, the full power that the law gave him, as a circumstance, remembered probably by many, will prove. At one time three of our largest boys were missing, and the parents came that they were playing truant, and after stealing some of the necessary articles for the purpose, had gone to encamp in the pastures half a mile from the school house, and had, in fact, become a kind of outlaws. With a promptness that characterized the man of his hour, he dispatched a guard of school boys of sufficient force to surround the object, and the delinquents were brought into the school-room, where, upon the fullest evidence of their guilt, they were most soundly flogged. They probably remember the circumstance to this day, for the act was not done as a mere matter of form, but with a purpose and aim sufficient to prevent any future developments of this kind.

Pleasant and useful were the months spent under his instruction, and but for one weakness, which has proved the ruin of thousands of our otherwise best minds, he might have been hailed as the benefactor of the district, have been invited for years to preside over the destinies of our new school; but it is past, and we linger with regret upon the disappointment his lapse caused us, while we remember with affection and gratitude, his many high and noble qualities of heart and mind. From time to time, his recollection in our district received an impetus which it has never lost, and which has been felt for good even down to the present time, and will undoubtedly continue, as long as the cause of sound learning shall be taught and valued. With all his many great faults there were for his equals.

THE WAILINGS OF THE JEWS IN JERUSALEM.—The Jews in Jerusalem have purchased the right of Turkish Government to assemble every Friday afternoon near the Mosque of Omar, against a supposed portion of their ancient temple, and their City and fabled glories.

Men, women and children then assemble, all coming Bible in hand and dressed in their best suit. The men wear a broad long dressing-gown, made of broadcloth or merino or calico, of various colors, having the edges trimmed with fur. The hair is cut short behind the ears, but hangs in long curls in front. The better class of women are clothed in a white lace dress and light shawl, wearing selected from the prophet in the most trailing toilet.

At certain periods all voices join in the cry, tears run down their faces, and they seem to be moved by the most agonizing sorrow. Old men and women were there with whitened locks and feeble steps, and they bowed and wept in the agony of grief. It was a sight to weep at, their eyes unshed and voices trembling as they joined in the heart-touching lamentations.

No looker-on can doubt but there is sincerity in this service. The Jews feel that Jehovah hears their cries and prayers, and that he will reward them, after long seasons of bitter waiting, their lost glories; gathering together all the scattered children of Israel, and henceforth permit them to live and die in the holy city, and be buried among the graves of their fathers.

This practice has continued from the twelfth century, and perhaps from an earlier period. By the Emperor Ahran the Jews were driven from the city. During the reign of Constantine they were allowed to approach only near enough to see it; but at length they succeeded in purchasing the privilege of entering it, and were permitted to stand at present they are allowed this privilege every Friday.

MISS MITCHELL ON THE ECLIPSE.

At length all was ready. The observers were seated in their places, regular count about of the half seconds began. Every observer tried to do the impossible. He tried to notice what is technically called "the first contact." He tried to note the exact instant when an unseen spherical body appears to touch a sphere of light, that he tries to see a point infinitesimally small, to meet a division of time which the eye cannot measure. At a certain second and part of a second, the moon, all unseen, was expected to make itself visible. But the moon was not up to time. There were some seconds of breathless suspense, and then, suddenly, the moon appeared, the burning orb of the sun. All honor to my assistant, whose uniform count on and on, with unwavering voice, steadied my nerves. That for which we had traveled fifteen hundred miles had really come.

We watched the movement of the moon's shadow across the less blue spots on the sun's disc, and the local and the general rarities which other observers of partial eclipses had known. The colored glasses of our telescope were several, arranged on a circular plate, so that we could slip a green one before the eye, change it for a red one or a yellow one, or, if we wished to look through the sun, a single green glass could be found in the circumference. In the course of the hour, from the beginning of the eclipse to total phase, this was readily done. I fancied that an orange has suited my eye best, and kept that in place, intending to slip it aside and receive the full light when the darkness came on. As the moon moved on, the green glass became a narrower and narrower curve of light, and as it seemed to break up into brilliant lines and points, we knew that the total phase was only a few seconds off.

Light clouds had for some time seemed to drift towards the sun; the Mississippi had not been heard for a week, and the spread over the landscape. Venus shone brightly on one side of the sun, Mercury on the other; Arcturus was gleaming overhead, Saturn was rising in the east; the neighboring constellations began to loom; the birds uttered a painful cry; fire, a twinkling in the foliage, and when the last ray of light was extinguished, a wave of light came up from the villages below, the mingling of the subdued voices of the multitude.

pumpkin, and I have come to you to have a long chat, and try to drive the blues. "Oh, Annie darling!" she continued, with a ludicrously solemn air, never go to housekeeping, or, if you do, don't hire an Irish girl, who has to learn."

"Why, Lizzie," said I, "what is the matter?" "Is the girl stupid?" "I'll tell you what she did to-day, and leave you to judge of her talents. Last evening, I made up a quantity of breakfast cakes for this morning. They were the kind mother taught me to make, and she told me they required a long baking; so I said to Billy: 'The sure you put this on the fire, in the morning.' 'Oh, yes, ma'am; it's understandin' taking I am; the first thing.' Happy in the delusion that for once she understood me, I left the cakes in her care. This morning, when we came to breakfast, Frank said, 'Lizzie, who could have made these cakes?' 'Did she?' 'An't they good?' 'They are!' 'I'm sorry to say, but, holding one up; and so they were. So I rang for Billy and asked her why she had not baked the cakes. 'I dare say,' said my bright pupil, 'I did not put the cakes in the oven just as soon as I got in the kitchen, but I was waiting for the oven to get as hot as the fire began to burn, for fear they'd be after scorchin'.'

"A bright pupil indeed!" said I, laughing. "You will have to teach her better." "Everything?" That puts me in mind of another thing. When she came, it was understood that I was to instruct her in all the service I should need of her. The morning after she came, I left her safe in the kitchen, and went in to the parlor to practise. A noise behind me attracted my attention, and turning, I saw Billy sitting on the sofa, apparently very much and much more helpless than man, a large per centage of them never survived the rigors of the season. Many of the farmers opened communication with their barns under instead of above the snow. They gradually worked a channel through, which served them as such for several weeks, while the animals that were securely under shelter, with abundance of fodder, grew sleeker and fatter; they had ever done before.

The snow, however, was not so kind, perished in drows, and all through the snow-covered summer their putrid carcasses tainted the air of the woods. HANNAH MORE.

The subject of the sketch calls to mind one of the most distinguished female writers of the most distinguished one of the last century. The career of this illustrious lady is replete with many excellent deeds, which the rising generation would do well to copy.

Hannah More was the youngest of five daughters of a clergyman, and was born at Stapleton, Gloucestershire, in 1717. Her father at the time was master of a foundation school, she therefore, with her sisters received a very good education.

My financial thermometer went down to thirty-two degrees Fahrenheit, and I was almost frozen solid. I took up extensions on the main lead—extensions that reached to British America in one direction and to the Islands of Panama in the other—and I verily believe I would have been a rich man if I had ever found those infernal extensions.

I have been through the Californian mill, with all its "dips, spurs, and angles, variations and similitudes." I have worked there at all the different trades and professions known to the catalogue.

But you perceive that although I am not a pioneer, I have had a sufficiently prominent part to play in the history of the West. I am a native, and feel like a Forty-Niner.

A MOVING SERMON.—We have the subject of the discourse delivered by a Southern divine, who had removed to a new field of labor. To his new flock, on the first day of his ministrations, he gave some words of exhortation, and said as follows: "My beloved brethren, before I take my text, I must tell you of my parting with my old congregation."

MARK TWAIN. HIS GREETING TO THE CALIFORNIA PIONEERS OF 1849. The California Pioneers of 1849, who are now on a grand railway excursion to the East, were entertained at a Delmonico banquet in New York Wednesday evening.

EMERSON, October 11, 1869. To the California Pioneers. GENTLEMEN: Circumstances render it out of my power to take advantage of the invitation extended to me through Mr. Simonton, and be present in uniform dinner in New York.

WYOMING, FRIDAY, OCT. 29, 1869. And even the little fishes, as their bright fins glistened in the sunlight, I thought, gathered around to say, "but they could—fare ye well, Brother Watkins—ah! I was slowly passing up the hill, meditating upon the sad vicissitudes and mutations of life, when suddenly out of a big log from a fence corner, with a loud and hoarse voice, I heard a voice that I never heard before."

CAUSE OF THE WAR IN CUBA. One of the principal objects of the present administration, established by the Spaniards, indeed, a large majority of them believe it to be the best the world ever saw.

Some ten million dollars in gold has been wasted by our government in building and supporting the magnificent fort on the Island of Tortugas, because it was supposed by Gen. Jackson and others to be the key to the Gulf of Mexico.

Now having stated the numerous sins of the Spaniards, I am in duty bound to tell of their virtues, for they have very many. No nation excels them in good manners, and they are a very good people.

When this fertile Island was discovered by the Spaniards it was inhabited by a number of peaceful Indians, who were in the habit of trading with the white men.

REMINISCENCES OF THE OLD 4TH DISTRICT, WEYMOUTH.

There are localities which interest the whole locality, and there are individuals who are in them every day, and yet interest in a degree the whole. The matter which has for a name the subject of this paper, was in its day one which created no small excitement, and was of very general interest, if the crowded audiences that assembled to witness its exhibitions were necessarily far in number, and crowded by a small part of the community.

The number of the Class consisted of about a dozen through the whole course of its existence, more or less, and when, from natural causes, the number of members increased, it became dissolved, not selected on account of any particular fitness for the objects proposed, nor from any particular class of the community, but such as naturally drew together from a similarity of taste and feeling.

More ought to be done than has ever yet been attempted to save wayward youth from the temptations and invitations of the street. Bad boys are never wholly bad. They are often bright, capable, full of life, activity and impulse, which only need proper direction to lead to the best thing.
