MY PRESENTATION GOAL

To encourage the group to share a variety of tools to evaluate programs.

TO THAT END

I will give a brief overview of 2 or 3 tools for 3 program outcomes and open the discussion for tools you find useful or things you want to track.

Tracking participant contribution

WHY:

- See how successful an event was at content generation
- See how participants contribute
- See program contributions in real time.

YOU NEED:

- List of usernames
- Context of your program

Tracking participant contribution

Global Metrics Magic Button: measures of participant by type and how much content was created during a program.

Paste User Names

The usernames should be separated, one per line, like

```
Username 1
Username 2
Username 3
```

ORES: Automated revision scoring can classify articles as they are being edited.

Research:Revision scoring as a service

This page documents a research project in progress.
Information may be incomplete and change as the project progresses.

Many of Wikipedia's most powerful tools rely on machine classification of edit quality. Regrettably, few of these tools publish a public API for consuming the scores they generate – and those are only available for English Wikipedia. In this project, we'll construct a public queryable API of machine classified scores for revisions. It's our belief that by providing such a service, we would make it much easier to build new powerful wiki tools and extend current tools to new wikis.
